Thomas Hamilton of Preston, and his son Walter (later Earl of Tarras) succeeded to Harden. His other children were: William, who married Jean, daughter of James Kirkaldy of Grange; Agnes, who married Sir John Riddell (younger) of that Ilk; Margaret, who married James Corbet of Tollcross, but appears to have later lived in Hawick; another Agnes, who married Sir James Grant of Dalvey and later William Rutherford of Barnhills; Thomas, who became a merchant’s apprentice in Rouen in 1671 and a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh (as a merchant) in right of his father in 1677; Gideon, who became an apothecary’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1676; Francis, who became a Captain; and Mary (b.1658), who was baptised in Edinburgh. William, Thomas and Gideon all died without heirs before 1710. Gideon (17th/18th C.) brother of Walter of Woll and 5th son of John of Woll and Agnes Scott. He was ‘son to John Scott of Wool’ in 1695 and 5th son of John of Woll and Agnes Scott. (17th/18th C.) brother of Walter of Woll and Gideon all died without heirs before 1710. Gideon was baptised in Edinburgh. William, Thomas and Gideon all died without heirs before 1710. Gideon (17th/18th C.) brother of Walter of Woll and 5th son of John of Woll and Agnes Scott. He was ‘son to John Scott of Wool’ in 1695 when he contributed £100 to the Darien Scheme (along with his brother Walter). He may have been known as ‘of Newhouse’ (although it is unclear where this was). In 1704 he married Jean (b.1688), daughter of William Elliot of Bewlie and Borthwickbrae and Isobel Scott of Synton; she was sister of William, who was 2nd (but sometimes stated to be 1st) Elliot Laird of Borthwickbrae. It is said that they eloped together, and found themselves unsupported by their families. The Duke of Buccleuch took pity on them and settled them on the farm of Ladhope in Yarrow. Their children were: John (b.1706), who died on the coast of Guinea; William (b.1709), tenant in Kirkhope; Walter (b.1712), who died young; Walter (b.1722), who married 3 times, to a Mowbray, a Napier and a Williamson; Gideon (b.1724); Thomas (1727–96), who settled in Morpeth and married Ann Douglas, who died at the age of 106; Alexander (b.1729), who succeeded to the tenancy of Ladhope; Isobel, who married James Curle of Moodlaw; Agnes; Betsy; Mary, who married John Mair; Anne Jean, who married James Pott of Dod, farmer at Penchrisie; and Christian. One of his descendants (from the Morpeth line) was Keith Stanley Malcolm Scott, who wrote the Scott family history in 1923. Gideon (17th C.) merchant of Glasgow. In 1674 he was made Burgess and Guild Brother of Glasgow ‘gratis, for causes known to the magistrates and council and to the Dean of Guild and his brethren’. Given his unusual forename, he may have been related to local Scotts. Gideon (17th/18th C.) younger son of Sir Gideon of Highchester. In 1676 he became an apprentice to surgeon-apothecary George Stirling in Edinburgh. He died before 1710, without an heir. Gideon of Outerside (17th/18th C.) see Gideon of Falnash. Gideon of Highchester (1678–1707) eldest son of Walter of Highchester and Harden, Earl of Tarras. He had a charter of Harden in 1694 and also succeeded to the lands of Minto, Roberton, Howcleuch, Borthwickshiel Mains, Alemoor, etc. In 1695/6 he gave the income from Highchesters and other farms to his mother Helen, Countess of Tarras, for supporting his brothers and sisters Helen, Walter, Elizabeth, Agnes, Thomas, Anne and Margaret. In 1695 he had a charter for the Barony of Minto, including the lands of Craigend and Deanfoot, as well as Minto, which was erected into a Barony. However, he sold the lands and Barony of Minto to Sir Gilbert Elliot in 1703. He was made a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh, gratis, in 1701. In 1704 he was listed among the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire and for Selkirkshire. In 1705 it is recorded that he owed money to the Duchess of Buccleuch for the rent of Todshawhaugh and Whames. In 1697 he married Anne, daughter of Sir Francis Kinloch of Gilmerton and secondly married Mary Drummond, daughter of John, Earl of Melfort in 1700 (and after his death she remarried Sir James Sharp of Scotscaig). With his second wife he had 2 sons, Walter and John, who both succeeded to Harden, but had no male heirs. They also had a daughter, Mary. A horn powder flask belonging to him still exists at Mertoun House. Gideon of Falnash (1651–c.1727) 5th son of Robert of Harwood and brother of Walter of Harwood. Note that one of the witnesses at his baptism was Gideon, presumably of Highchester, indicating that this is where his forename came from. He farmed at Fenwick, Goldielands and Alton Croft and lived at Broadhaugh (and although he was ‘of Falnash’, he appears not to have lived there). He was probably the ‘Falnash’ who was Bailie-Depute of the Regality of Hawick in 1677 when he ‘confessed the striking of Walter Hardie, and came in the bailies’ will’. He was Chamberlain to the Duchess of Buccleuch in the period 1678–1727, and in later years was referred to as ‘Auld Falnash’. In the period 1678–94 he was Chamberlain for Hawick, Wilton, Cavers and Hassendean parishes, later referred to as Teviotdalehead. He was still ‘of Outerside’ in 1692 when he served as a Commissioner for assessing the rentals for the Duchess of Buccleuch, but was ‘of Falnash’ when he served the same role in 1694 and 1698. He was Gideon of ‘Uttersyderig’ (i.e. Outerside) in a deed of 1682 and when he witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1687. It is possible he was the Gideon who was imprisoned in 1683 along with other local lairds for being supporters of Covenanters. He was ‘of Uttersyde’ in 1688 when he witnessed a baptism for John Elliot in Harwood. He was the same Gideon ‘of Outtersyde’ who obtained the lands of Fenwick, Easter Highchesters half of ‘Ladyurd’ in Kirkurd and Nether Glack in Manor (both in Peebleshire) from Robert Scott of Glack (who appeared to have no heir, and was probably his brother) in 1689. He was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1690. He is probably the Gideon who was listed at Broadhaugh in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. He was still referred to as ‘of Outtersyde’ in the early 1690s, but by at least 1694 was ‘of Falnash’. In 1694 he acted as cautioner for Francis, who rented the farm of Whithope from the Duchess of Buccleuch; this suggests a family relationship perhaps. He contributed £200 to the Darien Scheme in 1695. He is probably the Gideon who was served heir to his brother, William, apothecary in Hawick in 1696. In 1699 he gave up the lands of Ladyurd to James Geddes of Kirkurd, although there is a related court case against him by James Geddes’ son James in 1707. In 1700 he was one of the Roxburghshire heritors who petitioned Parliament. He was also referred to as ‘Regal Bailie’ of Hawick, i.e. the Duchess’s representative in the affairs of the town. In 1700 £100 was given by him (in name of the Duchess) for the poor of Hawick Parish. Also in 1700 he witnessed the baptism for Gideon, son of Hawick merchant Walter Elliot (suggesting that the child was named after him). In about 1705 he was part of a group of men who perambulated the boundaries of Wilton Common, presumably to settle some dispute. He gave a bond of 5,000 merks to Alexander Orrock in 1703 (presumably on behalf of the Duchess of Buccleuch), which formed the majority of the Orrock Bequest for the Grammar School. In 1704 he was again on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire. Also in 1704, the Council resolve to talk with him regarding help with fixing the ‘dam brigs’, the port at Horsleyhill’s Wynd, thatching the Tolbooth, oil for the clock, rope for the bell and shoes for the piper. He had another child named after him in 1704, this time when he witnessed a baptism for his gardener at Fenwick, Walter Paterson. In 1705 he witnessed baptisms for Bailie Robert Ruecastle and for Southfield shoemaker John Elliot, in 1706 others for workman John Shiel and for apothecary Walter (who named his son Gideon, probably after him), in 1707 for Adam Elliot of Arkleton, again for gardener Walter Paterson, for wright John Pringle and for wright John Dalgleish, in 1708 for Bailie George Martin and for glover John Scott, in 1709 for John Scott ‘Whitegale’ and for James Grieve, tenant in Teindside, in 1711 for Walter Stoddart (herd in Harwood) and in 1712 for Robert Scoon in Branxholme Town. In a Hawick Parish valuation of 1710, he was the second largest landowner, behind the Duchess of Buccleuch. His daughter (and so presumably he) was in Broadhaugh in 1716 when she married Walter of Crumhaugh. He witnessed further baptisms in Hawick in 1717 for John Watson, Clerk to the Regality (along with Walter of Crumhaugh), in 1719 for Walter Scott of Crumhaugh, in 1720 in Hawick for Francis Scott from Harwood (who may have been related to him), and in 1721 in Wilton for Robert of Burnhead and Agnes Scott (his daughter). It was described in 1767 (in depositions given regarding the former use of the Common) that he had warned the tenants of the Duchess of Buccleuch from encroaching on Hawick’s Common. He appears to have first married Jeanette (or Janet), eldest daughter of Walter Elliot of Arkleton, with the marriage contract being in 1677 (when she was probably quite young); at that time he was recorded as brother-german to Walter of Harwood. Her will is recorded in the Commissariot of Dumfries in 1679; he is there described as ‘Jeidian Scott, writer in Edinburgh, now in Bridhaughe’. He secondly married Mary (b.1660), daughter of James Scott of Thirlestane; she probably died in 1729, when payment was received for ringing the funeral bells ‘to the Lede Fenshe’s’. His children included: Robert, who succeeded to Falnash; Agnes, who married Robert Scott of Burnhead; Beatrice (or Beatrix, probably the ‘Beatricks’ baptised in Cavers Parish in 1696), who married Walter Scott of Crumhaugh; James (b.1698), baptised in Hawick; Christian, who married a Mr. Johnstone (but this could be confusion with Mary); Gideon, who became an apothecary’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1720; and Mary, the youngest child, who married James Johnson of Park Tower in Canonbie Parish in 1727. Isabella Scott (who married William Elliot in Braidlie and Whithaugh in about 1700), said to be a daughter of Scott of Falnash, may have also been his daughter (although perhaps she was too old for this generation). He may also have been father of ‘John Scott younger in Falnash’, whose widow Janet Aitchison remarried in 1711. The witnesses to the 1698 baptism were Adam Elliot of Arkleton and ‘Mr’ Archibald Gledstains in Northhouse. A ‘Graham’ of Falnash was recorded as Bailie of the Regality of Hawick in 1721, although this may have been an error. His son Robert is mentioned in connection with the Hawick Parish Session from 1722; so he either started performing the duties of his elderly father before his death, or his death was earlier than 1727. He was already deceased at the end of 1727 when his daughter Mary’s marriage was proclaimed in Hawick. He may be the ‘Bailie Gideon Scott’ who bequeathed £20 to the poor of Hawick Parish when he died. He is buried in Ewes Kirkyard along with his first wife Jeanette Elliot. Gideon of Falnash (d.1759) eldest son of Robert of Falnash, who he succeeded in 1734. He also served as Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch for local estates, referred to as ‘Teviotdale-head’ in the period 1747–57, being replaced by Robert of Orchard. He leased the farm of Wester Groundistone from the Buccleuch Estates in 1744. Dying without issue, he was succeeded by his brother Thomas, who sold off the Falnash estate. The 1761 list of Commissioners for Roxburghshire contains a blank for the forename of Scott of Falnash (presumably because it was unclear who his successor was at that time). Gideon (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Christian Scott in 1719, the marriage being at Wilton (but also proclaimed in Roberton). He was at Alemoor in 1721, 1726, 1728 and 1736, Wester Alemoor in 1729 and Borthwickbrae in 1733 and 1736. His children, baptised in Roberton Parish, included: Helen (b.1721); Margaret (b.1726); Mungo (b.1728); Gideon (b.1729), perhaps father of Gideon the millwright; Ann (b.1729); Alexander (b.1733); twins Jean and Ann (again, b.1733); and Gilbert (b.1736). In the 1733 Roberton baptism he was recorded being in Cavers Parish, suggesting that Christine (b.1735) and Alison (b.1737), baptised in Cavers, were also his children; in 1735 he is recorded being ‘in Cavers’ itself and in 1737 at Whitriggs. Gideon (18th C.) son of Gideon of Falnash. In 1720 he became an apprentice surgeon-apothecary to George Cunningham in Edinburgh. Gideon (18th C.) workman in the Hawick area. He is recorded as a thatcher in Hawick in 1740. He married Margaret (or Marion) Hislop, their marriage being recorded in Ashkirk and Cavers Parishes in 1727 (he was from Ashkirk Parish and his wife from Cavers). He was recorded at Shielswoodhaugh in 1727 when his first child was baptised in Ashkirk Parish. Their children (mostly baptised in Hawick) included: William (b.1727); Gideon (b.1740); Marion (b.1742); and Thomas (b.1745). The witnesses in 1740 were ex-Bailie Walter Graham and merchant John Cavers. In 1742 the witnesses were the same as those for shoemaker William’s child baptised the same day, namely baker Robert (who may have been related to one of them) and mason Andrew Turnbull, elder. Gideon (d.bef. 1763) druggist in Hawick, perhaps the son of Walter, apothecary in Hawick, born in 1706. He was recorded as ‘Druggist’ in 1742 when he witnessed a baptism for merchant James Douglas. He was recorded as a merchant in Hawick in 1746 in a baptism for one of his children and also when he witnessed baptisms for merchant Francis Gledstains in 1746 and 1747. He married Susanna Scott and their children, baptised in Hawick, included: Gilbert (b.1741); Catherine (b.1743); and Elizabeth (b.1746). The baptismal witnesses in 1741 were merchants Francis Gledstains and Charles Tudhope, in 1743 were Alexander of Synton and ex-Bailie William Tudhope and in 1746 were John at Winnington Rig and ex-Bailie Robert Howison. He is also mentioned as a Hawick druggist in a marriage record of 1763, when his daughter Elizabeth married Robert Burnett in Edinburgh. It was probably also his daughter Margaret who married Andrew Porteous there in 1768. He is probably the Gideon who was a Hawick Bailie in the 1740s and 50s. Gideon (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded living at Midshiels in 1747. He married Rachel Scott and their children included Jean (b.1747). The witnesses in 1747 were Charles of Crumhaugh and Robert of Fenwick; given these witnesses it seems likely that he is the same man as Gideon in Priesthaugh, brother of Charles of Crumhaugh, with his first wife Rachel Scott perhaps being daughter of Robert of Fenwick. Gideon (d.1806) tenant farmer at Priesthaugh, probably son of Walter of Crumhaugh and Howpasley and brother of Charles of Crumhaugh. Some accounts say he was ‘in Priesthope’, but that is probably a transcription error. He was at Priesthaugh in 1753, he and his wife were ‘Mr. Gideon Scot and Mrs. Elliot’ in 1755 and he was ‘Mr.’ again at Priesthaugh in 1757. He is recorded in Priesthaugh several times in the Peebles Commissary Court documents in the period 1758–60. In 1783 he took out a bond for £700 with Sir Alexander Don of Newton, John Ker of Cavers and William Riddell of Camieston, which they owed after his death.
He is probably the Gideon recorded at Penchrise on the 1785 Horse Tax Rolls. His daughter Beatrice was the second wife of Walter Scott, 2nd Laird of Wauchope, marrying him in 1789. His descendants were the Scotts in Priesthaugh, which eventually failed in the male line. Walter, farmer at Priesthaugh in 1797 was probably his son. He married Rachel Elliot, and their children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included Walter (b.1753), Robert (b.1755) and Charles (b.1757). His testament after he died lists his living children and executors as Charles and Jean in Priesthaugh and Margaret, widow of Charles Aitchison at Unthank. Gideon (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, possibly at Stobicote. It is possible that he is the Gideon, son of Gideon, baptised in Roberton in 1729. In 1762 he married Mary Scott, from Canonbie Parish, and she died in 1776. Their children included: Gideon (b.1765), who was probably the Hawick millwright; and Elizabeth, who married millwright James. The witnesses in 1765 were wright Gideon Easton and tailor James Dickson. It seems likely that he is the same Gideon who was resident at Borthwickbrae Parkhead when his children William (b.1772) and James (b.1774) were baptised in Roberton Parish. He may be the Gideon whose unnamed child died in Hawick in 1787. Gideon (18th C.) carrier in Hawick. In 1777 he married Agnes Tudhope; she was also from Hawick Parish and died in 1781. Their son James was baptised in 1779, perhaps the Hawick man of that name who worked on the Liverpool-Manchester railway. The witnesses in 1779 were workman James Hogg and Church Officer Walter Scott. It is possible he is the same man as the Gideon who married Mary Scott, if this was his second wife. Gideon (1762–1841) son of William, who was descended from the Scotts of Woll, his mother being Margaret, daughter of Robert Scott of Singlie. He was farmer at Kirkhope and later Laird of Overwells. He was farmer at Kirkhope (in Yarrow Parish) according to the 1785 Horse Tax Rolls. He had a daughter Christian, who died young. Gideon (18th/19th C.) resident of Teindside. He was listed in 1797 among Hawick men balloted to serve in the Militia. In 1799 he was selected by ballot to serve on the local Militia to replace John Pringle, who was judged unfit; however, he failed to appear and was declared a deserter, with a reward of 1 guinea offered for his apprehension. Weaver Adam Scott was balloted in his place, but then produced a document from the Earl of Dalkeith showing that he had in fact joined the Regiment; in the amended list of 1799 he is recorded among those who were serving in the Militia. Probably the same Gideon was recorded at Southdeanrig when his son William was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1785. It is possible he is the same man who married Agnes Tudhope (and perhaps earlier married Mary Scott). It is unclear if he returned after his years of military service. Gideon (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick and Wilton Parishes. He married Mary Stewart in Cavers in 1788 and their children included: Margaret (b.1789); Helen (b.1791); Jane (b.1792); and John (b.1794). His wife is recorded as ‘Isabel Stuart’ in 1791. The witnesses in 1792 were the ‘whole Congregation’. Gideon (1765–1833) born at Stobicote, possibly son of Gideon and Mary Scott. His family were supposed to be descended from the Scotts of Davington. He received only 4 months of schooling and became a herdsman as a boy, later serving as an apprentice in Hawick with Walter Turnbull, carpenter, wheelwright and agricultural implement maker. Thereafter he started his own business as a millwright, this later becoming Gideon Scott & Sons, based on the Cross Wynd. As well as building machinery, he was hired as a surveyor and was well known locally as an inventor and amateur astronomer. He suggested the suitability of the Teviot by the Little Haugh for water power, and subsequently William Laidlaw built Teviot Crescent Mills there. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He was listed as a millwright on the Cross Wynd in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He helped convert many of the Hawick mills to water power, for example his firm supplying the new water wheel for Wilton Mills in 1829. He also fitted out mills in Wigan and at Chillingham. He erected windmills at Adderstoneshiel and Penielheugh. In about 1802 he invented an early reaping machine, which was unpopular among the local workers, since it reduced manual labour so much; so after testing it successfully in the dead of night he smashed it up himself. He was also known for launching balloons at local celebratory events, e.g. to mark the end of the Friday Sports of 1826. Entirely self-taught, he was regarded as a prodigy by the townsfolk, and was a great believer in and advocate for education, starting the Trades’ Library in a room of his own house. He was also a leader in the running of the Hawick School of Arts, and gave a lecture there himself, being the first ‘layman’ to do so (in an age when public lectures were formal and intense affairs), illustrating an astronomy talk with an orrery of his own design. He was also an early influence on the career of John Pringle Nichol (later Professor of Astronomy at Glasgow University), who came to Hawick as a school teacher. The pair would walk up to Hillesland to watch the heavens, or spend the night talking in his astronomical study. For the solar eclipse of 1820 he blocked off a window in his observing room, and set up a screen, so that the many people he invited there could watch without staring directly at the Sun. He also described the aurora borealis seen over Hawick in 1826. Nichol returned to Hawick to watch the 1832 transit of Mercury with him, from a garden in Allars Bank (part of his property there being sold as the site for Allars Kirk in 1811). He was also a close friend of James Veitch of Inchbonny, a fellow self-taught inventor and scientist. He promoted the idea of connecting Hawick to the south by railroad (although his idea involved a route up the Allan Water). He is probably the Gideon who in 1795, 1797, 1798 and 1801 witnessed baptisms for millwright James and Elizabeth Scott (who was probably his sister). A few years before his death there was a great reunion of the families of his 7 sons and 2 daughters, all of them attending the Common Riding festivities that year. There is no known portrait of him, although there are images of his sons Gideon and James (his 5th son), who were also millwrights. Another of his children was Susan, who married James Cranston (and whose daughter Mary married William, son of blacksmith Gavin Pow). His wife may have been Margaret Leithead (b.1772), daughter of Walter and Marjory Thomson, with the marriage taking place in Hawick in 1790. They had children baptised in Hawick, including: Gideon (b.1792); Walter (b.1794); and Marjory (b.1796). Other children were: James (b.c.1805); Andrew (b.c.1810); Gilbert (b.c.1815); Mary (b.c.1815); and Isabella (b.c.1818). The witnesses in 1792 were the Burgher Congregation and in 1794 and 1796 were the ‘Associate Congregation’; the family were thus presumably members of the East Bank Kirk. There must have been 2 additional sons born around 1800. He died at his house on the Cross Wynd. ‘Gideon Scott & Sons’, machine-makers, engineers and millwrights, is listed on Back Damgate in Pigot’s 1837 directory (even although this was after his death); the company wrapped up in 1841. In 1841 Margaret was living on the Cross Wynd with sons James, Gilbert and Andrew, and daughter May (probably the same as Marjory). Gideon (18th/19th C.) from Cavers Parish. He married Mary Bell and their daughter Elizabeth was baptised in Robertson Parish in 1794. In the baptismal record he was ‘at Northhouse in the Parish of Cavers – at present in Whithope’. The same couple are recorded having a daughter Joan baptised in Canonbie in 1798. Gideon (18th/19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Nellie Leyden in Wilton in 1793 and their children included Thomas (b.1799) and Walter (b.1801). Gideon (18th/19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His wife was Janet Brydon and their children included Christian (b.1813). Gideon (b.c.1770) recorded as an ostler at Wilton Damhead in 1841. He was living there with Helen, probably his wife. He was listed at Damhead (with no occupation given) among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1840 and 1841. He could be the millwright of that name recorded at Roadhead in 1835, among heads of households in Wilton Parish. Gideon (b.c.1770s) servant at Skelfhill, recorded on the ballot list for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799. Archibald was also a servant on the same list and so perhaps related. He could be the Gideon, son of James in Skelfhill, baptised in 1778. Gideon (b.c.1778) grocer and spirit dealer in Newcastle, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 he was at about 28 Langholm Street and living with Agnes, probably his wife. It is possible he is the Gideon recorded as a shepherd at Millburnholm on the 1801 ballot for the Militia. Gideon (18th/19th C.) tailor in the Selkirk area. He was the one member of the Selkirk volunteers who failed to muster at the False Alarm of 1804. It is said that on hearing that there was no real invasion, he got the coach ‘the Fly’ to take him to join his comrades at Dalkeith. However, back in Selkirk, he was disgraced, had his buttons ripped off and was expelled from the company, with the Duke of Buccleuch remarking that he was sorry a man of this surname from Ettrick Forest should have behaved so ungallantly. He was on the Militia list for Selkirk in 1810. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. Gideon (1785–1839) 6th son of William, tenant farmer at Singlie. He took over the lease from his father. He married Elizabeth Ballantyne, and she died in 1878, aged 70. Their children included: Gideon, who farmed Singlie and Hyndhope; and Katherine, who married Alexander Gibson. Gideon (18th/19th C.) resident of Liverpool in 1825 when he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’. He probably had a direct connection to Hawick and was distinct from the Gideon living in London who also subscribed. Gideon (19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Barbara Armstrong in 1828. Gideon (19th C.), C.E., recorded donating several items to the Museum in 1863. Since he was an engineer and living in London, he may well be the son of millwright Gideon born in 1792. He could be the ‘Gideon Scott, London’ who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. Gideon (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Eliza Smith and their children included Walter (b.1860). Gideon (19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Ellen Burnet in 1861. Gideon (b.1839) probably the only son of Gideon, farmer at Singlie (who seems to have died the year he was born). He gave up Singlie and farmed instead at Hyndhope. In about 1879 he emigrated to New Zealand. He had 4 sons (including James and William) and 2 daughters. Gideon (b.1829/30) son of James. He was a frame-worker living at 6 Round Close in 1861. His wife was Jane and their children included Margaret and Isabella. Gideon (19th C.) worked as a blacksmith. He married Margaret, daughter of Tom Rutherford, blacksmith at Bonchester. They had 1 son and 4 daughters, including Agnes (b.1881), who was born in Melrose Parish. His wife later lived in Hawick. Gilbert (12th C.) recorded as ‘Gilbertus Scotti’ between about 1165 and 1177, when he was asked to perambulate the lands for a charter between Eschina de Molle (wife of Walter, the Steward) and the monks of Paisley Abbey. It is unclear if he was related to other Scotts. Gilbert (13th C.) listed as ‘le Escot’ when he was on an assize for the Lovels in Sussex in 1264. Gilbert (13th C.) recorded in the 1279 assize roll of Northumberland. He was involved in a fight with Richard ‘de Suarland’, and was described as at that time servant in ‘Swarland’. Gilbert (14th/15th C.) Scotsman who was given a grant of safe conduct through England in 1413. The group included William Douglas of Drumlanrig and several others, but it is unclear where he was from. Gilbert (15th C.) Burgess of Edinburgh recorded in a charter of 1498/9. Probably the same Gilbert was deceased in 1502 when his son and heir James (and James’ wife Janet) inherited his lands in the Cowgate in Edinburgh. Gilbert (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 when Adam ‘in aldinershope’ had remission for several crimes at the Justice-aire in Selkirk, including resetting him. His crimes including stealing a horse from James Turnbull and another horse from David Dalgleish. It is not clear what branch of the Scotts he may have come from. Gilbert (16th C.) recorded as ‘bailie in that part’ in Galashiels in 1535 when the lands there were given to Henry, Lord Methven. Gilbert (16th C.) recorded in 1545 as ‘indweller of Deip...’ when he and his associates were said to have taken a French ship. Gilbert of Bonnington (d.1675) probably the eldest son of James of Bonnington and his 2nd wife Margaret, daughter of William Elliott of Stobs. He died shortly after succeeding his brother Robert. He is buried at Greyfriars in Edinburgh. He was succeeded his younger brother Charles. Note, this is Bonnington in Lothian (distinct from the earlier Scotts of Bonnington family). He is buried in Greyfriars in Edinburgh. Gilbert (18th C.) son of Alexander of Synton. In 1733 he became an apprentice surgeon-apothecary to Gilbert Laurie in Edinburgh. Gilbert (18th/19th C.) youngest son of Charles of Woll. He was Captain in the local (Dumfries) Militia 1811–12. Gilbert (b.1814/5) born in Hawick Parish, he was a joiner at Bonchester Cottages. In 1841 he was living at ‘Pirnie-hall’ in Hobbirk and in 1851 at Gatehousecote Cottages. He married Helen Aitchison in Maxton Parish in 1838. Their children included: David (b.1838); Andrew (b.1840); Margaret (b.1843); Christian (b.1845); Janet B. (or Jessie, b.1847); Helen (b.1851); Gilbert (b.1854); and John (b.1856/7). Some of his earlier children were baptised in Ancrum, Maxton and Roxburgh Parishes. Gilbert (b.c.1815) son of Gideon the millwright. In 1841 he was living on the Cross Wynd with his mother and siblings May, Andrew and James. When Gideon Scott & Sons was wound up in 1842 he was one of the partners. In 1831 there was a paternity case against him by Helen, daughter of Hawick spinner George Cunningham. Gilbert McKenzie (b.1826/7) listed as baker and shopkeeper on Wilton Place in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 he was on Wilton Kirkstyle as a grocer and baker, employing 3 men. He lived with his siblings Helen, Andrew and Adam, and nephew Walter. Gladstones (b.1813/4) born in Teviothead Parish, he was a labourer living at Unthank Cottage in Ewesdale in 1841. In 1851 he was a shepherd at Sykefoot in Ewes. It is unclear where his first name came from. He married Isabell Wilson from Langholm and their children included Adam (b.1836), Janet (b.1838), Helen (b.1841), Ann (b.1843), John (b.1845), William (b.1847), Margaret (b.1849), Wilhelmina (or ‘Mina’, b.1850) and James (b.1854). He may have been a son of shepherd (and later travelling grocer) Adam and Janet Leithead. Graham of Fahnash (17th/18th C.) recorded in 1721 as Bailie of the Regality of Hawick. This seems likely to be a transcription error for Gideon of Falthash. The record of 1721 concerns the trial of Walter Dean for stealing a grey mare from John Currie from Northumberland. Grizel see Grizel Borthwick Grizel (16th C.) recorded in 1580/1 as widow of John Marshal in Dayzneltoun (i.e. Dingleton) near Melrose. She married a second time to Thomas ‘Freir’, and had relatives Adam Marshal in Dingleton and his son James Marshal, to whom she sold her lands. She may be related to other branches of the Scotts where the same forename occurs. Harry (17th C.) son of Walter of Headshaw and brother of Robert of Headshaw. In 1621 he was ‘son natural to Walter Scott, brother-german to Robert Scott of Hirdschaw’ when he became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh, with Alexander Harrower. He is probably the merchant ‘Harie’ who was deceased in 1667 when his son Walter became a writer Burgess of Edinburgh. Helen (16th C.) listed among people who were owed money by William Scott, younger of Branxholme, when he died in 1552. She is listed between 2 unnamed ‘nutrici’ (nurses), suggesting this was also her occupation. It is possible she was the same Helen listed among the tenants of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch when he complained against the actions of Walter Ker of Cessford and others in 1549. Helen (d.c.1576) ‘sometime spouse’ to William Lawson in Roslin. Her will is recorded in Edinburgh in 1576/7. Helen (d.c.1584) ‘sometime spouse’ to Thomas Younger in Linton, Tweeddale. Her will is recorded in Edinburgh in 1584. Helen ‘Nelly’ (18th C.) resident of Hawick. She was on the subscription list for Caw’s ‘Poetical Musum’ in 1784 (one of only 9 women listed). Helen ‘Nelly’ (1789/90–1861) daughter of carrier William and Margaret Gray. She also had a brother William. She was a shopkeeper at Stobs Woodfoot. She died unmarried. Henry (12th/13th C.) witness to 2 grants to Lindores Abbey by Earl David, brother of the Scottish King, in the late 1190s. He also witnessed a ‘quitclaim’ in the Lidores Chartulary in about 1210. Henry (13th C.) recorded on the 1256 assize rolls for Northumberland. He was ‘Henricus Scot’ from ‘Edelingham’. ‘Henricus Scotus’ is listed in a separate case, and probably a different man. Henry (13th C.) listed on the 1279 assize rolls for Northumberland. He was a burgess of Newcastle on Tyne at that time. His name is written ‘le Scot’ and ‘le Schot’. There are also pledge made by ‘Henrici Scot’ and ‘Henrico le Scot’ in the same year. He could be the ‘Henry le Escot’ who was a pledge for Nicholas in Newcastle in 1266, and the Henry ‘le Escot’ who was among men sued by the Prior of Tynemouth in 1269 (with John and Nicholas also listed). Henry (13th C.) recorded in a document from King Edward I to the Sheriff of Cumberland in 1280. He bought a mare at Carlisle Fair, and stated that ‘John de Wynecheles’ claimed it was his and furtively stole it from him. This case appears to have been used as a precedent to clarify the March laws to deal with such cross-Border incidents. It seems clear that he was from the Scottish side, although how he was related to other Scotts is unknown. Henry (13th C.) man from Edinburgh who paid homage to Edward I in 1296, where he is recorded as ‘Henry le Scot’. He may also be the ‘Henricus Scottus’ who is listed in 1296 among Scotsmen renouncing their treaty with France, in order to reconcile with England. His lands in Edinburgh were also restored to him in that year. It is possible he is the same man as Sir Henry of Balwearie. Sir Henry of Balwearie (13th/14th C.) son of Sir Michael. He was described as ‘Henricus Scott de Fife, miles’ when he swore fealty to Edward I in 1304. He was succeeded by his son Sir Andrew. Janet, who married John Melville of Carnbee, may have been his daughter. Henry (13th/14th C.) among the men on the inquest at Roxburgh for the inheritance of William de Charteris for the half barony of Wilton in 1303/4. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts, but he is the first known Henry with a local connection. However, it is possible that he is the Burgess of Edinburgh of that name who swore fealty to Edward I in 1296 and had his lands restored. Henry (14th C.) recorded in the English garrison at Edinburgh in 1335/6. Henry (14th C.) recorded in 1364 in an indenture by Henry Strother, Sheriff of Northumberland, where he is charged to pay money to vintners in Newcastle. It is unclear if he was related to the local Scotts. Henry (15th C.) mentioned in the Exchequer Rolls in 1457 in relation to a loan in Flanders. Henry (15th C.) recorded in 1456/7 as witness to the sasine for Ewesdale passing from Robert of Ewesdale to George Douglas, 4th Earl of Angus. He may have been from Ewesdale, along with Wat, Sim, John and Nichol, who are also listed. Henry (15th C.) recorded as ‘Henricus Scot filius Roberti Scot’ in 1461 when he graduated from Glasgow University. His father was Robert, but it is unclear what branch of the Scotts they came from. Henry (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 when he was fined for non-appearance at the Justice- aire held in Selkirk. His son John was separately fined for not appearing. He was listed as ‘in conwale riggis’, but it is unclear where this was. Henry (15th C.) recorded in Haddington in 1495 when the customs from his sheep skins. It is unclear to which branch of the Scotts he belonged. Perhaps the same Henry, owner of a ship, was recorded in Ross in 1509 and 1513. Henry (16th C.) witness in 1549 to a charter in which Robert Scott of Howpasley granted Appletreehall to Hector, brother of David Turnbull of Wauchope. It is unclear how he might have been related to other local Scotts. Perhaps the same Henry is recorded in the Exchequer Rolls in 1538. Henry (16th C.) became a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh in 1531. Henry (16th C.) recorded as Reader of Hawick Parish in 1574/5, while William Auchmowtie was Minister for Hawick and several neighbouring parishes (i.e. he was the actual minister, obtaining most of the stipend). John Sandilands was Parson about the same time. He was also recorded as Reader in Hawick in 1576, 1578 and 1579, with the position being vacant in 1580. His stipend was £10 8s. 10d. There is no evidence regarding which branch of the family he came from. Henry (17th C.) witness, along with Robert, to the baptism of a son of Thomas Scott in Hawick in 1687. These other Scotts may have been closely related to him. Note that the forename ‘Henry’ was not common among Scotts of the time. Henry (1676–1730) 2nd surviving son of Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch. He was made Earl of Deloraine, Viscount Hermitage and Baron Goldielands in 1706, just in time to vote for the Treaty of Union. He was chosen as one of the Scottish representative peers in Parliament 1713–30, and also served in the army. His mother complained about how much money she had lavished on him and stated in one letter of 1719/20 than ‘he is now acting the old Scots proverb – ‘en wod an’ ey the war’ [i.e. ‘daft once, daft always’]. He married Anne, daughter of William Duncombe of Battlesden, and she died in 1720. Their children were: Francis, 2nd Earl of Deloraine, who married Mary Lister and Mary Scrope; Henry, 3rd Earl of Deloraine, who married Elizabeth Fenwick; and Anne, who died in infancy. He secondly married Mary, daughter of Charles Howard and their children were: Georgina Caroline (1727–1809), who married James Peachey; and Henrietta (b.1728), who married Nicholas Boyce. He himself died before his mother. Henry (1712–39/40) 3rd Earl of Deloraine, 2nd son of Henry, 1st Earl. He held the rank of Captain in the Royal Navy. He married Elizabeth, daughter of John Fenwick. Their children were: Henry (1737–1807), 4th Earl; and John (1738–88). After the death of his brother Francis in 1739 he gained the Earldom of Deloraine, as well as the titles of Viscount Hermitage and Lord Goldielands. However, he lived for only another half year, dying of consumption. Henry ‘the Hero of Quebec’ (c.1730–c.60) from the old Hawick family called the ‘Milnport Scotts’, he was son of George, a merchant. He became a Burgess in 1752 and married Jean Sanderson, who by all accounts drove him into the army. The local tradition of his story is as follows (related in the 1863 Transactions by William Norman Kennedy, and mentioned briefly by James Wilson in 1850 and again in 1858). He distinguished himself in military service in Canada, being promoted through the ranks and achieving a commission without purchase as a Major. He led a decisive attack on an island rock at Cape Breton in 1758, permitting Louisbourg to be taken. His main moment of fame came in 1759 on the Heights of Abram near Quebec City, where he was reportedly first to enter the gate of the city. There he planted the Union Jack on the walls, apparently uncontrollably exclaiming ‘Hawick for ever’. In this seminal moment in Canadian history Gen. Wolfe’s forces were victorious over the French, although both leaders were slain. Wolfe was nicknamed ‘the Hero of Quebec’ throughout Britain, but in Hawick that epithet was reserved for Henry Scott. Afterwards he was once more promoted, but apparently died aboard ship on the way home before he received the promotion, with relatives and townspeople suspecting he was murdered by jealous fellow officers. This Hawick version bears some similarity to the documented life of a Maj. George Scott, although with several important differences, hence it is difficult to separate fact from fancy here (perhaps the Hawick man was at Quebec, but the connection with Louisbourg may have come from the story of ‘Maj’ Scott in Percy’s ‘Anecdotes of Enterprise’, popular in the early 19th century; Maj. George Scott was already in the army in 1750 and eventually became Lieutenant-Governor of Dominica, dying in a duel in 1767, his will mentioning his wife Abigail and 3 brothers, at least one of whom was in Halifax, and hence he seems unlikely to be the Hawick man). Nevertheless, it is undoubtedly the case that a man from the Mill Port Scotts played some part in the events in Que- bec, even if they were not quite as dramatic as recalled later (presumably Wilson and Kennedy obtained their information from people who were only about a generation removed from the historical events). A verse of James Hogg’s ‘Teribus’ commemorated Scott in the early 19th century – ‘Long this boast on truth’s been founded – Hawick for ever, and independent!’ [JH]. His wife survived him by about 50 years and lived for a while at the cottage called ‘the Saaverin’ near Stobs, living on a government pension. It is said that he had no children. Henry (1737–1807) 4th Earl of Deloraine, elder son of Henry, 3rd Earl. On the death of his father, when he was only 2 years old, he succeeded to the Earldom of Deloraine, as well as the titles of Viscount Hermitage and Lord Goldielands. In 1763 he married Frances, daughter of Thomas Heath, but they separated before 1780. He died in London without issue and his titles became extinct. Henry (1741–1817) 2nd son of Robert, farmer at Singlie, and grandson of William in Milsington. He farmed at Over Deloraine in the Ettrick valley from 1770. He paid the horse taxes there in the period 1785–97 and the dog taxes in 1797. He married a daughter of Anderson of Rashiegrain, with whom he had a daughter Alison. He secondly married Agnes, daughter of John Sibbald. Their children were: John, also tenant at Over Deloraine; Henry, farmer at Over Kirkhope; James (1792–1864); William, who became a doctor with the East India Company; Margaret, who married Dr. Thomas Anderson of Selkirk in 1808; and Eliza, who married Rev. W.B. Shaw, minister of Robertson and later Ewes. Eliza and Margaret were said to have been the prototypes for the characters of ‘Minna’ and ‘Brenda’ in Sir Walter Scott’s ‘The Pirate’, and Eliza was also celebrated as ‘The Bonnie Lass o’ Deloraine’ in the Ettrick Shepherd’s poem (note that Keith Scott mixes the 2 daughter’s husbands). Henry (1746–1812) 3rd Duke of Buccleuch, son of Francis Scott, Earl of Dalkeith, and grandson of the 2nd Duke. He succeeded as a child, was educated at Eton, and when young spent nearly 3 years travelling in Europe with Dr. Adam Smith. His ‘curator’ during his minority was Charles Townshend, his step-father. He had a charter for many lands in Roxburghshire in 1751. He gained the Crumhauth estates in about 1760, as well as many other local lands (including Harwood and Teindside) about the same time. He settled in Dalkeith, and spent much of his time in Scotland. It is said that he would sometimes visit his tenants in disguise. He made his first visit to Hawick in 1764, when he was welcomed by the Bailies. He (or his tutors) was one of the landowners involved in the court case over the division of Wilton Common in 1765. In 1767 (while he was still a minor) his agents started proceedings against the Town of Hawick, claiming rights of pasturage on the Common; when the final decision was made in 1777 he gained 330 Scots acres of what had been Hawick Common. Additionally in about 1769 he (or his Commissioners) brought a case against some inhabitants of Hawick for not paying multures on ‘his Grace’s mill of Hawick’. In Selkirk in 1778 a bill is recorded ‘for drink to the men who carried the colours before his Grace the Duke of Buccleuch’. He was taxed for having either 1 or 2 gamekeepers at Bowhill in the period 1778–90 and was taxed for having 4 dogs at Bowhill and 15 in Langholm in 1797. He was responsible for making Sir Walter Scott Sheriff in Selkirkshire and was the first President of the Royal Society of Edinburgh in 1783. He published a paper called ‘Abstract of a Register of the Weather kept at Brauxholme, for ten years, ending December 31, 1783’. On the outbreak of war with France in 1778 he raised a regiment of fencibles, mainly from his own estates. In 1785 he paid for half the costs to have the main streets of Hawick properly paved and gave £100 for the new Town Hall in 1786. He is also credited with support for the Scots Dyke to Haremoss Turnpike. In 1785 he paid the land tax for lands in Selkirk Parish. In 1788 his lands in Roxburghshire included large parts of Castleton, Cavers, Hawick, Melrose, Roberton and Wilton Parishes, as well as Hassendean, the Baronies of Eckford and Lempitlaw, the teinds of Maxton, the customs of St. Boswell’s Fair and part of Lanton. In 1794 he succeeded to Caroline Park and other estates that were held by his mother. In 1798 he became Colonel of the militia in Edinburgh, assuming control again in 1803 after the truce broke down. He gained the Queensberry and other titles of the Douglasses of Drumlanrig in 1810. He was also Lord Lieutenant of Roxburghshire 1804–12. He became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1810. Known as ‘Duke Henry’ or ‘the Good Duke’, he had a reputation for being generous and was said to be highly popular among the locals. However, in 1767 he (or presumably his advisors) raised an action in the Court of Session against Hawick, concerning ownership of the Common, which ultimately led to the Division of 1777, ‘Midlothian Fencibles’. He also established Newcastleton in 1793 and was known as an agricultural improver. In 1767 he married Lady Elizabeth Montagu, only surviving daughter of George, Duke of Montagu; she became a patron of many charities in Edinburgh and died in 1827, aged 84. The Buccleuch family gained vast estates in England through this marriage. He was succeeded by his son Charles William Henry (1772–1819), who adopted the surname Montagu-Scott. His other children were: George (b.1768), Earl of Dalkeith, who died in infancy; Mary (1769–1823), who married James George, Viscount Stopford and later Earl of Courtown; Elizabeth (1770–1837), who married Alexander, 10th Lord Home; Caroline (1774–1854), who married Sir Charles Douglas of Kelhead, who was later 6th Marquess of Queensberry; Henry James (1776–1845), Baron Montagu of Boughton; and Harriet (1780–1833), who married William, Earl of Ancram, who was later 6th Marquess of Lothian. He died at Dalkeith and is buried there – ‘Contented, therefore, we maun be, E’en wi’ the hut we sit in – They say o’ landlords east and west, Oor ain Duk Henry is the best O’ a’ the Lairds o’ Britain’ [HSR]. Henry (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret (or ‘Peggy’) Grieve and their children included Walter (b.1772) and Michael (b.1774). The witnesses in 1772 were Walter and John Grieve (who were surely related to his wife). He may be the shoemaker Henry who (along with ex-Bailie Andrew) witnessed baptisms in 1776, 1778 and 1791 for merchant William. Henry (18th/19th C.) wright at Milsington. His wife died in Hawick Parish in 1809. A daughter married John Murray, from Borthwickbrae Burnfoot. Henry of Horsleyhill and Belford (18th/19th C.) son of Francis James, he was the last Laird of Horsleyhill. In 1811 he was recorded as owner of the lands in Belford in Morebattle Parish. In 1792 he married Catherine, daughter of John Hay of Newhall. His only child was Hannah Charlotte, who married Sir John James Douglas (whose son became Sir George Henry Scott-Douglas on inheriting the lands) and secondly married William Scott-Kerr of Chatto and Sunlaws. Henry James Montagu (1776–1845) Baron Montagu of Boughton, younger brother of the 4th Duke of Buccleuch. He acted as guardian to his nephew Walter, the 5th Duke, during his minority. The pair were made Honorary Burgesses when they passed through Hawick in 1821. He succeeded to the Montagu Baronetcy on the death of his grandfather, George Duke of Montagu, and adopted Montagu as his surname. He was Captain in the local (Dumfries) Militia from 1798 and Lieutenant-Colonel 1802–09. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. In 1804 he married his cousin Jane Margaret Douglas (d.1859), who was eldest daughter of Archibald, Lord Douglas of Douglas and his aunt Frances. They had 4 daughters: Lucy Elizabeth (d.1877), who married Cospatrick Alexander, Earl of Home; Mary Margaret, who married Lieut.-Col. Frederick Clinton; Jane Caroline (d.1846), who died unmarried; and Caroline Georgina, who married George William Hope of Luffness. He was born and died in London. Henry (b.1790–1873) 2nd son of Henry, tenant at Over Deloraine and Agnes Sibbald. He became Laird of Over Kirkhope and tenant in Crosslie, as well as being a hatter in Edinburgh. He was also in partnership with his cousin, Henry Scott, 5th son of William, tenant in Singlie. His company ‘Messrs. H. Scott & Co. hat manufacturers Edinburgh’ subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. In 1820 he married Isabella Martin. Their children were: Henry (b.1830), probably died young; John, tenant in Crosslie; William Henry (b.1836), who emigrated to Canada; Elizabeth, who married James Alexander; Agnes, who married Matthew Whiting; Isabella, who married Mr. Mein, dentist in Edinburgh; Janet; and Margaret. Henry Erskine (d.1847) son of William and descendent of the Scotts of Clarilaw, he was born at Brighton. He succeeded to the lands of Ashieburn when his father died in 1807, but he sold them before his own death. Henry (1796/7–1866) farm-worker and farmer. He began as a ploughman and was also a shepherd, later becoming a farm steward, managing Stelshaw (near Bewcastle) for William Aitchison of Linhope. In 1841 he was an agricultural labourer living at Penchrise Cottage. In 1820 in Cavers Parish he married Mina, daughter of James Lunn; she died at Milsington in 1888, aged 89. Their children included: Beatrice, who married Walter Thomson, and may also have had a son John with William Aitchison of Linhope in 1843, who was raised by his grandparents; Thomas (b.1825), born at Crailing; Marion (1828–1909), who married Thomas Scott, farmer at Milsington; William (b.1831); James (1836–1921); and Henry (b.1844), who married Janet Ewart. He was grandfather of Henry Anderson, long time resident of Rulewater. He died at Stelshaw and is buried in Ettleton Cemetery. Henry (b.1801/2) from Yarrow, he was an agricultural labourer. In 1841 he was at Milsington Shankfoot, in 1851 he was at Deephope in Ettrick Parish and in 1861 he was a boarder at Tweed Bridge End. He married Mary Scott in Yarrow Parish in 1826 and their children included: Thomas (b.1829); James (b.1831); Mary (b.1833); William (b.1836/7); Henry (b.1808/9); John (b.1845/6). Henry (b.1808/9) born in Ashkirk Parish, he was farmer at Eilrig. He was unmarried and living with servants and lodgers in 1841 and 1851. By 1861 he was farmer of 1100 acres, employing 4 people. In 1854 he married Mary Moffat (from Canonbie) and their children included: Janet (b.1854/5); Mary (b.1856); James (b.1857); William (b.1859); Thomas (b.1860); Robert (b.1862); George (b.1863); and Henry (b.1866). Henry Francis of Harden, 7th Lord Polwarth, see Henry Francis Hepburn-Scott. Henry Ale (1828–81) eldest son of John Sibbald in Over Deoraine and descended from the Scotts of Singlie. He married Jane Mills of Horsburgh Castle. Their children were: John (b.1863), who emigrated to Iowa, U.S.A.; Jane Purves, who married Alexander Scott, tenant in Ladhope; Christina, who married Robert M. Mills from Melbourne; Lizzie Mills, who married Archibald C. Morrison from Edinburgh; Georgina Henrietta; and Arbuthnot. Henry John Alexander Makdougall of Gala (1901–40) son of Hugh James Elibank Scott-Makdougall of Makertoun and grandson of Maj. Hugh, 9th of Gala. He succeeded his uncle John as 11th Laird. He was educated at Eton and Sandhurst. He became Captain in the 60th Rifles, King’s Royal Rifle Corps. In 1935 he matriculated arms and had his surname legally changed from Scott-Makdougall to Scott, but retaining Makdougall as a middle name. He was Deputy Lieutenant for Selkirkshire. He was killed in action in Calais, France. He was succeeded by Christopher Bartle Hugh, son of his sister Jean Winifred Mary Scott Makdougall. Henry Lucas (1932/3–76) self-employed steeplejack. He died on Christmas Eve after falling 80 feet from a mill chimney he was demolishing on Commercial Road. Herbert (12th C.) Clerk of the Diocese of St. Andrews. He served several Bishops between about 1150 and the 1170s. For example, in the early 1160s he was ‘master’ and ‘clerk’ when he witnessed a gift to St. Andrews Cathedral Priory. Hercules of Brotherton (1659–1725), W.S., son of Hercules of Brotherton in Kincardineshire. He was a writer in Edinburgh who became a Writer to the Signet in 1719. He was made a Burgess and Guild Brother of Glasgow in 1718. He married Helen, eldest daughter of Sir Charles Ramsay of Balmain and was succeeded by his son James. Hugh (13th C.) witness in about the 1140s to a charter for the lands of Conveth in Kincardineshire and also a gift of Balcorno in Fife at about the same time. Hugh (13th C.) recorded as ‘Hugo Scot de Nesseybk’ and ‘Hugone Scot de Nesebick’ in the 1279 assize roll of Northumberland. His wife Marjorie is also mentioned. He may be the same man as ‘Hugo le Scot de Kantuar’ who is recorded in 2 separate cases involving lands in Corebridge. Hugh of Scotsloch (d.c.1618) from a branch of the Scotts that settled near Irvine in Ayrshire in the 1500s. His name is usually written ‘Hew’. He was Customar in Irvine in 1589, Bailie in 1609 and Provost in 1615. An earlier Hugh, who was Provost of Irvine in 1571, may have been an ancestor. He married Margaret Wallace and their children included: Lawrence, an advocate in Edinburgh; James of Scotsloch, J.P., who married Agnes Blair and secondly married Lillias Scott; Margaret, who died unmarried; Janet, who married John Blair, Provost of Irvine; and Susanne, who married James Blair, her brother-in-law. Hugh (17th C.) recorded in 1626 as servitor to William Douglas of Drumlanrig when he became a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh. Hugh of Greenhead and Gala (d.c.1645) 2nd surviving son of ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden. He was also earlier referred to as ‘of Deuchar’, but became the first Scott of Gala. In 1610 he was named along with his father and brothers when Gilbert Elliott of Horsleyhill (later of Stobs) was cautioned for them not to harm Walter Scott in Hawick, called Todshawhill, and his associates. In 1617 he was recorded among supporters of the Scotts of Harden who Lady Bonnington complained had attacked her family (as part of a feud between the Harden and Bonnington Scotts). In 1619 he was among the people ordered to attend the court personally in the case regarding the murder of his brother Walter. In 1622 he was mentioned in a rental document in Melrose. He is also mentioned in the 1623 Circuit Court records as caution for John Watson of Boldside and John White of Greenhead. In 1633 he was appointed one of
of the ‘Tutors Testamentary’ to oversee the Earl of Buccleuch’s will. He was ‘Hew Scott, sone to Walter Scott of Harden’ in 1644 in a registration of rental for Regality of Melrose lands, and further mentioned in bonds in Melrose in the 1640s, when he was Bailie of the Regality. In 1621 he married Jean Pringle of Galashiels, daughter and heiress of Sir James Pringle of Galashiels and Smallholm. Their children were: Anne; James, who succeeded and married Janet, daughter of Sir James Murray of Philiphaugh; Walter, a Major in the Army; George, progenitor of the Scotts of Auchty-Donald in Aberdeenshire; John, who became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1648 and settled in Italy; David, who was an apothecary’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1652; Gideon, who became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1654; Francis, who was referred to as ‘brother-german’ of James in 1664 and 1665; and William, still alive in 1652, who was probably the Capt. William ‘brother to Galloschells’ in 1658. Hugh of Gala (d.c.1697) son of James. He was recorded as ‘far’ in 1673, in a deed along with his father. He was probably the Laird of Gala whose lands in Selkirkshire were valued about £3600 in 1678. He was M.P. for Selkirkshire 1681–82 and on the Commission of Supply for Selkirkshire in 1685. However, he was apprehended in 1684 (along with Walter, Earl of Tarraes and other Border Lairds) for refusing to support Episcopaliam; his name was given as a conspirator by a tortured minister.

He married Isabella, daughter of Sir Thomas Ker of Cavers. His children included: Sir James, who succeeded; Thomas, who became a Burgess of Edinburgh in 1708 and married Elizabeth Borthwick; Hugh: Patrick, who died young; John, who became a surgeon-apothecary’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1699 and was later a Colonel in the Guards; Grizel, who married John Pringle of Torsonce; Margaret, who died young; and Anna, who married Walter of Raeburn, then Henry McDougall of Makerstoun and finally a Home of Eccles. His son James was served as his heir in 1697 and his will was recorded in 1698. Rev. Hugh (1630/1–91) recorded as ‘Hew’, he graduated from Edinburgh University in 1649. He was called to Bedrule in late 1657 and ordained there in 1658. However, he was deprived in 1662 for being a Covenanter and forced to leave the Presbytery, being later replaced by James Adamson. He was ‘indulged’ (i.e. allowed to resume his duties again) in 1672 and became minister at Oxnam, moving to Galashiels later the same year. He continued there until 1678 and by 1688 (the dates may be confused here) was minister at Stow. He was a member of the Assembly of 1690. He was described as ‘faithfull and painfull in his calling’ and ‘singularly pious’. In 1659 he married Jean, only daughter of Lancelot Pringle of Leys and she died in 1709. Their other children were David, Helen (who married Thomas Waldie in Edinburgh, and was allowed a guinea by the Presbytery in 1725) and David (again, or another error). Hugh of Gala (d.1771) 5th Laird of Gala, son of Sir James. He was made a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh in 1742. He was recorded as a Commissioner for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1761. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Col. John Stewart of Stewartfield. Their children were: James (b.1730), who died young; John (b.1732), who succeeded; Elizabeth, who married Archibald Douglas of Cavers; Euphemia, who died young; Magdalene, who also died young; Anne, Catherine, who married Capt. John Douglas of Ederton, a brother of the Laird of Cavers, who later became Laird himself; Christian (b.1737); Isobel, who died young; and Stewart (b.1741). Hugh of Harden (1758–1841) son of Walter and Diana Home Campbell (daughter of the last Earl of Marchmont). There are documents of 1767, 1774 and 1779 confirming him as the heir to Harden. He was ‘younger of Harden’ when admitted to the Roxburghshire voters’ roll in 1780. He became 11th (or 12th) Baron of Harden in 1795 and then 4th (later corrected to 6th) Lord Polwarth in 1835, the title being claimed through his mother. He also inherited Mabonlaw and Highchesters in 1796. He was listed among the voters in Selkirkshire in 1788. He was M.P. for Berwickshire 1780–84 and in 1812 was appointed Deputy-Lieutenant of Roxburghshire. He was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1788 and listed as a Commissioner for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1805 and 1819. In the Land Tax Rolls of 1802 he is recorded paying tax for ‘The two Oakwoods & Mill’, as well as ‘Whithillbrae, Hitlarburn’ and Inner Huntly in Yarrow Parish. In 1808 he was on the subscription list for Jamieson’s Scots dictionary. He is probably the Scott of Harden who amazed the residents of the Yarrow valley by driving his carriage and 2 ponies round the narrow road that skirted St. Mary’s Loch. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. In 1820 he assumed the additional surname of Hepburne, the estates of the Hepburnes of Humbie descending.
to him through his great-great-grandmother, Helen Hepburne, Countess of Tarras. He subscribed to Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. In 1795 he married Harriet Brühl, daughter of Hans Maurice, Count de Brühl of Martinskirk, Saxon Ambassador at the Court of St. James’s. This Lady Polwarth was a patron of Sir Walter Scott (and also something of an artist, with sketches of her young sons Henry Francis and Francis surviving); she died in 1853. His children were: Charles Walter (b.1796), who died young; Henry Francis, who succeeded; Rev. William Hugh (1801–68), Rector of Maiden Newton, Dorset; Rev. George William (1804–30), Rector of Kentsibear, Devon, who was given the lands of Bewlie in 1825, and died without issue; Francis (1806–84), who gained the lands of Bewlie in 1831; Harriet Diana; Maria Amabel, who married Maj.-Gen. George C.D. Lewis; Elizabeth Anne, who married Col. Charles Wyndham of Rogate, Sussex, M.P.; and Anne, who married Charles Baillie, Lord Jerviswood. He had his portrait painted in 1787. Hugh (d.1818) recorded at Eweslees on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1788–97. He had 2 farm horses, as well as a saddle horse, along with David, who was presumably his brother or son. He also paid the dog and clock taxes in 1797. Col. Hugh of Gala (1764–95) son of John, he was 7th Laird. He became Colonel in the 26th (Cameronian) Regiment and died during an insurrection in Grenada. He paid the land tax for Galashiels and Blindlee in 1785. In 1788 he was listed among the voters of Selkirkshire, but said to be ‘an officer in the Army, now in Canada’ who would vote with the interests of the Duke of Buccleuch. In 1787 he married Isabella, daughter of Prof. Alexander Monro of Craiglockart and Auchenbowie. They had an only child, John, who succeeded. Maj. Hugh of Gala (1822–77) son of John, he was 9th Laird. He held the rank of Major in the Dumfries, Roxburgh and Selkirk Militia 1855–59. He was also Deputy Lieutenant of Selkirkshire and a Justice of the Peace in that county. In 1857 he married Elizabeth Isabella, daughter and heiress of Capt. Charles Kinnaird Johnstone-Gordon. Their children were: John Henry Francis Kinnaird, who succeeded; Hugh James Elibank (b.1861), who adopted the surname Scott-Makdougall when he succeeded to Makerstoun from his first cousin twice-removed, and his son Henry John became 11th Laird of Gala; Magdalen Augusta Lavinia, who married Lieut.-Gen. Sir Francis John Davies, Commander-in-Chief Scottish Command; and Maj. Charles Archibald Ramsay (1863–1920) of the South Wales Borderers. He died in France. Hugh (18th/19th C.) gardener at Wells. His wife Agnes Veitch died in 1821, aged 45, and is buried in Bedrule kirkyard, along with a daughter, Agnes. Humphrey (15th/16th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire in Lauder in 1493 as ‘umfridis scot’. Thomas Brown was fined for not presenting him to answer for the death of John Atkinson. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts. Iain Hunter (1968– ) son of Frank T. and Janet Hunter. He worked for joinery firm Brydons and attended Borders College, eventually joining the technical staff and later the teaching staff. He was a founder member of the band Scocha with David Chapman. Even although he spent most of his working life in Gala, he has been heavily involved in promoting Hawick’s culture and history. In 2004 he played the part of James Knox at the bicentenary re-enactment of the ‘False Alairm’. He sings ‘The Bonnie Banner Blue’ on the 2006 CD ‘Hawick and Teviotdale in Song and Poetry’ for which he produced all the recordings. He has been involved in many local projects, including being the driving force behind the James Thomson memorial statue and the Archæological Society Transactions archive. Ingram (d.1616) one of the men who, in 1615, slew the sheep belonging to Sir James Douglas at Howpasley, at the instigation of Lady Scott, widow of Howpasley. He fled to the ‘Northe’, where he was later apprehended along with ‘Wattie’ Scott (possibly a near relative) and was hanged in Edinburgh. He may have been related to some of the others, who were Jock ‘the Suckler’, ‘Marion’s Geordie’ and William ‘in Satchells’. He met them at Birny Cleuch, between Eilrig and Howpasley before they ‘ran through the haill flok of scheip, slew, lamet, and menzet to the number of threscoir’. Isaac (12th/13th C.) probably from Brechin, he was a Clerk of St. Andrews Diocese. His surname was sometimes ‘Fortieviot’, referring to a benefice he held in Perthshire. This suggests he was not related to other Scotts. He witnessed several charters in the 1190s. He witnessed a notification by the Bishop of St. Andrews in 1204, and is not recorded after 1213. He had a son, Nazar. Isabel (15th/16th C.) daughter of Robert of Aikwood and sister of Michael. She married James Murray, who owned the lands of Bowhill. In 1529 she was already a widow when her daughter Isabella Murray resigned the southern half of Bowhill to Michael and Michael’s son William (her nephew). She is recorded in 1533 as wife of Alexander ‘Elwand’ who she assigned her lands in...
Kershop (in Ettrick Forest) to her ‘brother german’ Michael. In 1539 she was ‘Esebell Scott’ when she discharged a loan from Michael. Isabel (17th C.) recorded in 1658 when Margaret Oliver was fined by the Magistrates for calling her ‘witchesgait’, and saying that she devoored her awine child’. Isabel (18th/19th C.) recorded as a witness in 1802 and 1804 to baptisms in Hawick. The other witness was Mrs. Arkle, probably mother of the Hawick minister. The next baptisms recorded were for George Nicholson and Isabel Scott in 1804 and for James Sanderson and Isabel Scott in 1811, both of which could also be her. One of the witnesses in 1811 was Agnes, who may have been related to her. Isabella (1694–1748) daughter of Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch, with her 2nd husband, Charles Cornwallis. She was known as Lady Isabella Scott and was the only one of the Duchess’ children to outlive her. In 1731 she was infested by her mother in the lordship of Melrose. She was named the Duchesses’ sole executrix in England in her will of 1722/3. According to her mother’s last will, she was also given the personal estate of the Duchess in England in 1732. She died unmarried and Melrose was inherited by Francis, Duke of Buccleuch. Isabella née Hogg (b.1793/4) married Walter Scott, grocer and spirit dealer. She was listed as a grocer on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory and on Buccleuch Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 she was a widow at about 8 Buccleuch Street, living with her children Agnes, Walter, Robert, Mary Ann and Andrew. Isobel (13th C.) recorded in 1296 when she paid homage to Edward I. She was from Fife and was one of only a small number of women on the list. Her name is recorded as ‘Isabele Scot’. She was presumably a widow or heiress. Isobel (16th C.) elder daughter of George. A memorandum in Perthshire in 1551 has her agreeing to give up her claims to inherit from Sir John Lam in favour of her sister Isobella (who had essentially the same name). Another document states that her husband was John Hutchinson and describes more details of the land agreement in Abernethy; one of the procurators was ‘Mr. William’, who may have been a relative. Isobel (d.c.1581) ‘sometime spouse’ to John Ferne in Strone in the Parish of Tnamadice, Angus. Her will is recorded in Edinburgh in 1581. Isobel (d.c.1583) ‘sometime spouse’ to John Allan in Kenmure, Renfrewshire. Her will is recorded in Edinburgh in 1583. Isobel (d.c.1587) ‘sometime spouse’ to Andrew Malcolm, baxter, Burgess of Perth. Her will is recorded in Edinburgh in 1587. Isobel (d.c.1591) lawful daughter of the deceased Andrew Scott, Burgess of Inverkeithing. Her will is recorded in Edinburgh in 1591. Her father may be the Andrew, Bailie of Inverkeithing recorded in 1541, and her mother may have been Andrew’s wife Elizabeth Brown, who had her will registered in Edinburgh in 1577. Isobel (d.c.1600) ‘sometime spouse’ to John Govan of ‘Foullertoun’ in the Parish of Monkland, Lanarkshire. Her will is recorded in Edinburgh in 1600. Isobel ‘Lady Synton’ née Douglas (16th/17th C.) wife of the last Walter of Synton, who died in 1608. She was daughter of William Douglas of Whittinghame and probably the aunt of Ann Douglas, who married Sir William Douglas of Cavers. She appears to have thereafter lived at South Synton. In 1615 she is described as ‘the guidwyffe of South Sinton’ when she was summoned to the Presbytery for publicly abusimg the minister of Ashkirk, Alexander Hogg, between the Sunday sermons. In the next year she was charged with not attending her own church, saying ‘She wald not repare to her kirk all the dayes of her lyf, nouter wald she gif ane reason therefor’. This presumably stemmed from a disagreement with the minister’s new ways. It is stated that she preferred to take communion at Lilliesleaf and Hassendean, and was rebuked by the ministers there for doing so. She apparently eventually reconciled with the minister and was readmitted to the Ashkirk communion. Her children were George of Synton (who sold the estate), Anne, Archibald, Elspeth and Christian. Isobel (17th C.) recorded in the Ashkirk Session records of 1635 as ‘Isabel Scott in Synton Mill’. She complained that Margaret Tullie had called her a witch and a thief. Tullie denied calling her a witch, but claimed she could prove that she was a thief, and called several witnesses to support the claim that she had robbed the purse of Andrew Nichol in Synton Mill. However, the outcome was ‘that they ken her to be ane honest woman, and free of any thyft so far as they ken or know’. Her accusser was made to sit at ‘ye place of repentence’. Isobel (17th C.) resident of Raperlaw. In about 1684 she was on a list of Covenantant fugitives. Isobel (17th/18th C.) recorded receiving money from Ashkirk Parish in 1727. Isobel of Whitehaugh (c.1675–1759) daughter of Walter and sister of Rev. Robert of Roberton. She succeeded to the (liferent of) Whitehaugh estates on the death of her brother William in 1750. In 1753 she married Rev. William Somerville, minister of Hawick (and was said to be in her 70s at that point). She died without any children and her second cousin John succeeded her to Whitehaugh. In 1761 her step-children Thomas and Agnes Somerville brought an action against John, but lost the case. J. of Grahamswood (17th C.) signatory of the Covenant in Hawick in 1638. His name is given as ‘J. Scott of Grahamswood’, but it is unclear where this might have been. James (13th C.) recorded as James ‘le Scot’ in 1256 when he was arrested in the town of ‘Roubiry’ (probably Rothbury) along with Robert of Crailing, on suspicion of larceny. James (14th C.) listed in the English garrison at Roxburgh in 1311/2. Perhaps the same James had his horse appraised in Berwick in the same year. James (15th C.) servant of the King recorded in 1454 when he received his fee. It is unclear to which branch of the family he belonged. James (15th C.) recorded as witness to the 1464/5 sasine granting the Barony of Cavers and Seriffdom of Roxburghshire to Archibald Douglas. He appears as ‘Jacobo Scot’. He may be the same as James of Kirkurd. James (15th C.) witness to a sasine for the lands of Boonraw in 1487. Other witnesses included Adam Scott and local landowners. It is unclear to which branch of the Scotts he belonged, but it is possible he was the same as James of Kirkurd and Hassendean. James of Kirkurd (d.c.1501) later referred to as ‘of Over and Nether Newhall and Hassendean’. He was the 3rd (or perhaps 2nd) son of the 1st Sir Walter of Branxholme and Buccleuch, his mother being Margaret Cockburn of Henderland; hence he was brother of David of Branxholme and Buccleuch and Alexander of Abington and Howpasley. However, the fact that his name does not appear in an entail of Branxholme made by David in 1488 (while those of Alexander and other more distant Scotts appear) suggests that he may not have been a full brother of David. He was witness to a ‘letter of revision’ in 1482 between Robert Scott of Haining and David Scott of Branxholme. In 1484 he was granted Over and Nether Newhall (later called Burnhead and Burnfoot) from their superior, David Lindsay of the Byres. He appears to have resigned Kirkurd at the same time. He also acquired the lands of Hassendean from the Cunninghams of Glencairn. He was probably the ‘Jacobi Scot’ who leased the lands of Falside in Ettrick Forest from 1473 and in 1490 granted the lands of Middlestead of Falside by James II for helping to expel rebels. Also in 1477 his fine for retaining a cottage in Falside was remitted. He was on the panel for Walter Scott inheriting the Branxholme and Buccleuch titles and lands in 1492; he is there ‘Jacobum Scot de Hasinden’. He may have been the ‘James Scot of Kirkvold’ transcribed as witness to a document in 1494 relating to lands in Hassendean, and he was ‘of Hassendean’ when he was on the panel for the inheritance of Synton by Alexander Erskine. Also in 1494 he gave a charter of the lands of Galalaw and the Nether Mains of Newhall to his son David, reserving the liferent to himself. Among the witnesses were his son John, as well as Robert of ‘Achinstanceleicht’, and 3 other Scotts, William, Walter and Robert, who may have been related. His wife Margaret was also mentioned in this charter, but her surname is not recorded. He is probably the James who had 16 sheep stolen from him at ‘fawysd’ according to a case brought against John in Tushielaw in 1494/5. Also in 1494/5 he was ‘in hassinden’ when his son David had remission for stealing livestock from farms of the Earl of Bothwell. He is probably the ‘Jacobo Scot’ who was granted income from the land of Falside in 1499; in 1501 the rental was assigned to his wife Margaret and son John. Also in 1501 he was recorded in the Exchequer Rolls as ‘Jacobi Scot in Hassindane’ in relation to remittance of a fine on John Hay of Yester. In 1503 he is still recorded having the lease of Falside (although he may have been deceased by this time). His sons were: John Scott of Over Newhall (later Burnhead) and of Hassendean, his heir; David of Hassendean; William of Hassendean; Robert of Nether Newhall (later Burnfoot); and Adam of Clarilaw. One of his daughters may have married George Gledstains (who is listed as ‘brother’ of Adam in Clarilaw and William in 1526). He was probably also the James whose wife Margaret received the lands of Falside (in Ettrick) ‘in liferent’ in 1510, with the heirs of the deceased John (possibly his son) being granted heredity of Falside (which was later in the hands of the Scotts of Hassendean). He is probably also the James of Hassendean whose son Walter was witness to a document for the Scotts of Branxholme in 1500. James (15th/16th C.) recorded in the Exchequer Rolls several times in the period 1494–1513. He was somehow associated with the King’s stable. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. Perhaps the same James ‘once in the King’s avery’ (i.e. where oats and other food for horses was kept) was given a payment in 1538. James (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as ‘in Askirk’ (i.e. Asikirk) when he served as surety for Walter, son of Walter of Headshaw, who had stolen sheep from several farms.
Robert of Stirches was also surety. This suggests that he was related to the Scotts of Headshaw and of Stirches. Also in 1502 he had remission for stealing cattle from the farm of Cauldshiel (along with Edmond Taylor), belonging to Ralph Ker, with his surety being John in Hassendean. Additionally in 1502 he was surety for Hector Lauder in Clerklands, for stealing horses from Lauder. In 1526 he was listed as being ‘of Askirk’ among the many Borderers who were pardoned for supporting the Homes against the Earl of Arran (perhaps a couple of years earlier); his son Walter was also listed. John of Askirk, killed in 1526 and Walter in Ashkirk, recorded in 1533, were possibly descendants. James of Broadmeadows (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 being ‘de braimadois’ when his son William had remission for stealing cattle from John Romanno of that Ilk. The surety was John Scott in Hassendean, who may have been related. He was also ‘de braimadois’ in 1502 when his son John had remission for stealing 2 horses from Yair, with David of Galalaw as surety. This suggests that there were Scotts who owned land at Broadmeadows much earlier than the branch that would be there in the 17th century. It is unclear how he might have been connected to other branches of the Scotts, but he may have been related to the Scotts of Hassendean or Galalaw. Walter in Broadmeadows, brother of John in Hassendean, was also recorded at the same Justice- aire in 1502 and may have been related. Given the similarity of names, it is possible he is the same man as James of Kirkurd. James (15th/16th C.) son and heir of the deceased Gilbert, recorded in 1502 when he and his wife Janet inherited his lands in the Cowgate in Edinburgh. His father may have been the Burgess of Edinburgh recorded in a charter of 1498/9. James (d.1563) 3rd son of Robert of Allanhaugh and Whitchester. He was educated for the church. During the reign of James V he was Clerk to the Treasury, and was recorded being paid as such in 1533. He is probably the James, writer in the Exchequer, who is recorded in 1538 and 1540. In 1543 he succeeded Alexander Scott (of unknown connection) as Provost of the Collegiate Church of Corstorphine. Like his predecessor he was also one of the Auditors of the Treasurer’s Accounts (1544–62) and is recorded several times in this period as Provost of Corstorphine. In 1554 he was appointed as an Ordinary Lord of Session. He had a manse built at Corstorphine, which contained his coat of arms. In 1560 he was granted the parsonage of Kirkurd (in Peebleshire) by Trinity Colle- giate Church (in Edinburgh) along with William, Burgess of Edinburgh (and presumably a near relative). The man of the same name who was ‘servi- tor to the Treasurer’ in 1597/8 may have been related. James (15th/16th C.) recorded as being ‘in Holfurd’ (probably Howford) on the 1526 list of Borders men pardoned for their support of the Homes in attacking the Earl of Arran. James ‘Beld Jamie’ (15th/16th C.) recorded among the many Borders men who had remission in 1526 for their earlier attack on the Earl of Arran. He is listed as being ‘callit Beld Jame’, with James ‘in Holfurd’ and James ‘of Inglend’ listed right before and after him, respectively. He was presumably baid. James (15th/16th C.) listed among the Borderers given remission in 1526 for their earlier attack on the Earl of Arran. He is recorded as being ‘of Inglend’, but it is unclear what this means. James (16th C.) tenant in the lands of ‘Kenna’ in Aberdeenshire. He is thus recorded in a dispute with their superior Archibald Douglas of Glenbervie in 1535. James (16th C.) recorded as Bailie of Selkirk in 1528, 1530, 1531, 1534 and 1541. In 1534 he was procurator for his cousin Peter Porteous. In 1541 one of the witnesses was John, who may have been related. Probably the same James was Bailie there according to the Exchequer Rolls for 1541. James of Flex (16th C.) witness to a 1556 document relating to the transfer of Nether Harden between Simon Scott of Fenwick and William Scott of Harden. James (16th C.) resident of ‘Qulithoip’ who was listed in 1549 among those whose lands had been attacked by Walter Ker of Cessford and others, in a complaint by Sir Walter of Bucleuch. His lands were probably Whitehope in Yarrow (rather than Whithope in the Borthwick valley). Adam in Whitehope was also listed and Helen was listed right after him and so was probably a relative. He is probably related to the James, recorded in Whitehope around 1580. James (16th C.) listed among people who were owed money by William Scott, younger of Branxholme, when he died in 1552. He is listed as ‘Jacobo Scott eius seruo’, presumably meaning he was a servant of William. James ‘Bailzie’ (16th C.) mentioned in Hawick’s first existing sasine (of any detail), dating from 1558, when he was sold a piece of land (perhaps corresponding to what was later called ‘Wylie’s Dub’) by Alexander Scott. He is referred to as ‘alias Bailzie’, suggesting that this was a nickname, and that he was not in fact a Bailie of the Town (or had previously been a Bailie). James (d.c.1564) son of Walter ‘in Hassindene’. He was listed among the men tried in 1564 for the murder of David of Hassendean (who may have been a relative of some sort). Other men involved included Elliots of Horsleyhill. It appears that he was one of the men who were executed for the crime. His relationship to the other Scotts is unclear, however, it may be that he was a nephew of the David who was murdered. These events may have been the catalyst for the deadly feud between the Scotts and the Elliots that lasted for several years. James of Alton Croft (16th C.) illegitimate son of John Scott, who was Vicar of Hawick in the 1530s. He appears to have been legitimised in 1538, the document given by John of Burnhead. In 1556 he had a precept of sasine, also from John of Burnhead. This was probably for the lands his father had held at Wester and Easter Muremaw (later called ‘Lees’). James of Alton Croft (16th C.) listed by Scott of Satchells as ‘of Alton-Crofts’ among the 24 ‘Pensioners’ of the house of Buccleuch. He was said to have been descended from the Scotts of Allanhaugh. He must have been related to the later Walter of Alton Croft. James (16th C.) described as ‘in Bradisholme, par. of Monkland’ when his will was registered in Hamilton Commissariot in 1564. James (16th C.) listed in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch as the man who collected the teinds for Hassendean and Cavers. He was presumably an agent of some sort for the Scotts of Buccleuch. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Jameses. James of Roberton (16th C.) recorded as witness to a sasine of 1559 involving Harden and as witness in 1579 to the payment of Ker of Cessford’s fine for the failure of young Ker of Faldonside to marry Janet, sister of Buccleuch. In 1590 he was listed on the roll of ‘Landit Men’ of Scotland. He may be the James ‘of Robertoun’ who was listed among Scotts and others charged to find sureties for ‘observing the King’s peace’ in 1599. It is unclear how he was related to the Johns of Roberton recorded earlier and later. It is possible he was a brother of the former John (and hence younger son of Stephen) and uncle of the John who was supposedly present at the rescue of Kinmont Willie. James (d.bef. 1580) probably son of John, who was younger of Synton. He was described as ‘in Quhittisland’ (i.e. Whitslade) in 1574 when he and William Scott ‘in Harden’ paid back Sir Walter Scott of Birkenside (later Howpasley) for a loan on the mill of Easter Burnfoot. They also had a ‘letter of reversion’ for a loan on the lands of ‘Auldrroues’ in Ettrick Forest as well as Easter Craik in the same year. In 1580 he was the deceased James ‘in Quhittisland’ when there was a marriage contract between his son Robert and Elizabeth, sister of Robert of Aikwood; his brothers George in Synton and William in Huntly are also mentioned. His son Robert witnessed a transaction in 1580 for Robert of Aikwood. James (16th C.) recorded as ‘elder’ in Selkirk in 1579. This was in regard to lands pertaining to John Keane (son of William Keane) and Janet Scott, with James younger also mentioned. He also witnessed another transaction in the same year and may be the Burgess of Selkirk who represented the Laird of Bucceleuch’s tenants in Huntly in another case in Selkirk in 1579. Additionally he sold lands in Selkirk to John Govenlock. In 1579/80 he was ‘elder burgess in Selkirk’ when his son Robert witnessed a transaction. He is probably the James recorded as a deceased Burgess of Selkirk in 1580 in instruments relating to his son and heir Robert. In 1581 he was recorded as occupier of lands in Selkirk that had previously belonged to the Earl of Angus; James, younger was also mentioned. James (16th C.) Reader of Ashkirk Parish in 1575 (not to be confused with John, who was minister here at the same time). In 1579 he was listed as ‘reder’ among people who owed money to Isabel Donald, widow of Robert of Palace. A record in the Selkirk Protocol Books for 1579/80 states that he was to take Thomas Cranston to ‘the parish kirk of Askirk’ and ‘thair to place him in the pulpat and deliver the buk of god in his hands’, giving Cranston possession of the parsonage and vicarage, as well as the ‘manss gleib and kirkland’. He was also described as Vicar in 1586. However, in 1582 he was one of 6 preachers (including readers from Hassendean, Lilliesleaf and Southdean), who were deprived for ‘abusing the sacraments’, and then excommunicated in 1588 for continuing in the offence. In 1590 he was ‘in Syntounmynle’ on a long list of offenders who ordered to appear to answer for their religious offences. In 1590 he was one of 3 men (the others being Thomas Ker, vicar of Old Roxburgh and Thomas Newbie, vicar at Hassendean) who agreed never to abuse the sacraments nor function in the kirks after being threatened with death, and it was decided that ‘they sould be tane to the mercat-croce of Edinbughe, and stand twa houris, with paiparis on thair heidis, contening the cryme’. It may be that he had been a Catholic priest before the Reformation, and had not abandoned his ways. He was also the described as ‘at South Synton Mill’ and ‘in Sintonmynle’ and was a close associate of Thomas...
Ker, vicar of Old Roxburgh. James (16th C.) webster in Edinburgh, eldest son of webster John. His father was already deceased when he became a Burgess in Edinburgh in 1579. James (16th C.) merchant in Edinburgh, eldest son of smith William. His father was already deceased when he became a Burgess in Edinburgh in 1583. James (16th C.) painter in Glasgow. He was recorded in 1574 as heir to ‘payntoure’ Patrick Scott and was thereby made a Burgess of Glasgow. His eldest lawful son George, also a painter, was made a Burgess in 1623 (by which time he was deceased). It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts. James (16th C.) baxter in Glasgow, 2nd son of baxter Thomas. He was made a Burgess of Glasgow in 1577. The baxter Thomas, son and heir of John, who was made a Burgess in 1611 (as well as tailor James, 2nd son of baxter John, made a Burgess in 1613). He may be the deceased baxter whose daughter Katherine married maltman Gilbert Hall, who became a Burgess there in 1620. Sir James of the Hillhead of Covington (d.c.1577) registered his will in Edinburgh in 1577. His lands were in South Lanarkshire, but it is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. James (d.c.1581) tenant in ‘Lynrig’ in Lanarkshire. His will was recorded in Edinburgh in 1581. James (d.c.1582) mariner who lived in Leith. His will was recorded in Edinburgh in 1582. James of ‘Wester-Sawling’ (d.c.1583) Burgess of Inverkeithing. His will was recorded in Edinburgh in 1583. James (d.c.1583) tenant in ‘Eister-Casche’, Strathmiglo Parish, Fife. His will was recorded in Edinburgh in 1583/4. He was surely related to David from the same place, whose wife’s will was recorded in 1591. James (16th C.) cordiner in Hawick recorded in 1581, brother of George and Robert (who was a Burgess). In 1581 he and his brother Robert wrote a ‘letter of slains’ in Hawick, forgiving the murderers of his brother, who were the Scotts from Allanhaugh, Over Southfield and others. He signed the document ‘with my hand twicheand the pen led by the notar vunderwrittin’ (suggesting that, unlike his brother Robert, he was not able to write). It is unclear how this family might be related to other Scotts. James (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1581 as ‘younger’ in Selkirk, along with John ‘elder’. Also in 1581 he refused to purchase 2 horses from Borthwickbrae as part of an assessment of taxes there and was selected as an arbitrator in another case. It is possible he is the ‘James Scott, called Litle James’ who was a Burgess in Selkirk in 1590 when there was a band for not harming Patrick Murray of Falkhill; ‘Litle William’ is also listed and so may have been a relative. He could be the Burgess of Selkirk whose will was recorded in Edinburgh in 1596. If not, then he could be the James who represented Selkirk in a dispute with John Murray of Philiphaugh in about 1600. James (16th C.) resident of ‘Quhithoip’, which was probably Whitehope in Yarrow. He was surely related to (or perhaps the same man) as the James in the same place in 1549. In 1580 Alexander Gledstains, Burgess of Selkirk, transferred an annual rent for a tenement in Selkirk to him. In 1581 he was recorded in ‘Quhithoip’ and ‘collector of the maills of Ettrick Forest’ when Patrick Murray of Falahill offered to pay him for taxes due on Lewnshope, Hangingshaw and Harehead and Adam Hislop in Tinnis claimed he had already paid him for the same lands. Perhaps the same James ‘in Quhithoip’ was recorded in 1592 when Thomas Ker of Cavers gave caution for him. It is possible he is the same James ‘in Quhithoip clerk in this detail’ who acted as clerk for an indenture between the March Wardens in 1594/5. He may also be the James ‘in Quhithoip’, Chamberlain-Depute of Ettrick Forest, recorded in 1603 when he requested money from Stewart of Traquair. He was deceased in 1629 when recorded being ‘in Quheithope’ (i.e. Whitehope in Yarrow) when his former lands in Selkirk are mentioned. James of Whithope (16th C.) perhaps related to earlier Scotts of Whithope. He was ‘in Quhithoip’ in 1580 when he received 200 merks from Robert Scott of Haining for the lands of ‘Maining Mot’. He could be the same man as James in Whitehope in Yarrow; despite William, son of John in Whames, being one of the witnesses, it is still likely that his lands were those in Yarrow rather than the Borthwick. In 1592 his cautioner was Thomer Ker of Cavers Carre, for his good behaviour and loyalty to the King. In 1602 he was ‘of Quhithoip’ and described as a ‘man’ of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, when Sir William Stewart of Traquair complained that he had stolen from his farms and then obtained a suspension of the letters against him, later stealing 50 sheep from his tenants at Blackhouse; not appearing he was denounced as a rebel. Also in 1602 he was denounced again for not paying £424 for his part of the taxes of Ettrick Forest. Robert of Haining was his surety in 1602 that he would pay what he owed. In 1603 he was referred to as ‘chamberlain depute of Ettick Forrest’ in a dispute with Sie William Stewart of James of Gilmanscleuch (16th C.) eldest son of John of Thirlestane with his 2nd wife Marian Douglas (this was the claim of Scott of Satchells, refuted by John Scott of Rodono, but confirmed by Keith Scott). In 1580 he witnessed a marriage contract in Selkirk between James in Whitslade and Elizabeth, sister of Robert in Aikwood. In 1581, along with several other Scotts (from Hartwoodmyres, Gamescleuch, Chamberlain Newton, Edinburgh, North Bowhill, Dryhope, Catslack and Howpasley), he supported William of Tushielaw and Robert of Aikwood in representing Adam in Bonnington in a dispute with Robert of Haining. In 1585 he witnessed a bond (signed at Selkirk and Hawick) settling a feud between the Scotts of Branxholme and the Scotts of Allanhaugh. He signed a bond along with other Scotts in 1589. In 1593 he was ‘of Gilmanscleuch’ in dispute with William Cranston (fiar of that Ilk) over possession of ‘Fawodscheill’; his son Robert, as well as Arthur of Gamescleuch were also involved and all 3 were declared as rebels. He is listed among those implicated in the slaughter of the Warden, Lord Maxwell, and his men in 1593 at Dryfe Sands; his brother Robert was also listed. He is probably the man transcribed being ‘of Gemmylliscleuch’ (although that seems like Gamescleuch) in 1599 when charged to find caution to ‘observe the King’s peace’. In 1602 he signed a bond among Border Lairds for keeping the peace. His ‘oy’ (i.e. grandson) ‘Alie Batie’ is mentioned in a bond of 1609, involving Scotts of Thirlestane, Headshaw and Tushielaw. He is ‘James of Gilmanscleuch’ when he witnessed the 1612 bond for keeping peace on the Border. He could have been one of the Scotts of Gilmanscleuch who was said to be responsible for the death of a son of Walter Scott of Harden. He was succeeded by his son Robert. He also had 3 other sons: William; Andrew; and Adam. William and Adam, brothers of Robert of Gilmanscleuch, were recorded in 1631. James (16th C.) tenant in Crailing of Katherine Ker, Lady Ferniehirst. In 1586 his mistress complained to the Privy Council that he had been attacked by Mungo Kirkton of Fainington and his brothers John, George and William, as well as John Kirkton in Denesyde. James (16th C.) tenant in ‘Clainrestoune’ in Cramond Parish. The will of his wife Barbara Crawford was registered in Edinburgh in 1582. James (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 as ‘Jame Scott in Beschawhill’, among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. It is unclear where he lived. James (d.c.1598) ‘indweller in Leith’ whose will was recorded in Edinburgh in 1598. James (d.c.1599) referred to as ‘elder, in Easter-Lumbaney’ in Abernethy Parish, Fife, when his will was registered in Edinburgh in 1599. James (16th C.) 4th son of John, younger of Synton. He had a ‘tack’ of the lands of Dodbank. He was probably the great-grandfather of Captain Walter of Satchells. His eldest son was Robert, who had several charters connected with Dodbank and Satchells in 1607–09. James of Kirkhouses (16th C.) possibly 4th son of George of Synton. Capt. Scott of Satchells says that he went on the mission to rescue Kinmont Willie in place of Scott of Synton in 1596. He was father of John of Kirkhouses, who inherited in 1609. However, it seems likely there were multiple generations confused here. James, son of John in Kirkhouses was recorded, along with his father, as witness to the making of the inventory of Isabel Donald, widow of Robert of Palace, in 1579. In 1581/2 he was recorded as first-born son to John in Kirkhouses when he took out a tack on lands in Ashkirk from Walter in Ashkirk. James (16th C.) recorded in 1579 among men who witnessed a transaction involving Walter of Goldielands and Robert of Haining, with the Walters of Stirches, Harden and Headshaw also acting as witnesses. He is listed being once of South Bowhill. In 1580 he owned money to John Dawson in Selkirk and in 1580/1 he witnessed a couple of transactions in Selkirk. His lands in Selkirk were mentioned in 1582 and he was also then warned to appear in Selkirk to accept redemption money. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts of Bowhill. James (16th C.) tenant in Borthaugh in 1579 when it is recorded that James Burne, indweller in Selkirk, owed him £3 10s. He may have been related to the earlier Scotts in Borthaugh. James (16th C.) son of John of Drinkstone. In 1581 he and his father witnessed an arrangement where Katherine Scott, widow of Robert of Colifort, resigned her lands of Hundleshope to her son Thomas; Scotts of Raesknowe and Allanhaugh were also witnesses. James of Hundleshope (16th/17th C.) son of William of Tushielaw and brother of Sir Walter of Tushielaw. He held the lands of ‘Hundilshope’ in Peebleshire. In 1578/9 he was one of the men accused of accompanying his brother Walter to attack the farm of Gattonside, and denounced as a rebel for failing to appear to answer the charge. In 1583/4 he was involved in a caution for James Gledstains of Cocklaw and his tenants to be harmless in ‘his three husband lands lying in Hundishoip’. He is probably the James, brother of Sir Walter of Tushielaw who signed the Scott clan bond in 1589. In 1594/5 William Cranston, younger of that Ilk was surety for him. He is recorded in a charter of 1596 and was cautioner in a bond involving Peebles in 1599. In 1602 he and others were removed from the lands of Sir William Stewart of Traquair by Gideon Murray of Elibank. His sons were probably: John; James; Robert in Holly Arch; and Thomas in Hundlehope. James (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘Mekle Jame Eister’ in 1590, along with Robert Scott of Haining, when a group of Murrays were put under caution not to harm them. In turn, James Donaldson of Broadmeadows was caution for him not harming Patrick Murray of Falahill. It is unclear how he might have been connected with other Scotts. James (16th/17th C.) resident of Hawick. In 1595 his son William became a skin-ner’s apprentice in Edinburgh. It is not known how he was related to other Scotts. James of Scotsloch (d.1636), J.P., son of Hugh of Scotsloch and brother of Lawrence of Harperrigg. Like his father, he was Customar, Bailie and Provost of Irvine in the 1630s. In 1617 he purchased his brother’s interest in Scotsloch. In 1633 he purchased Clonbeith and Darrure near Kilwinning. He firstly married Agnes Blair and secondly mar-ried Lillias, daughter of Rev. Robert Scott, who was Rector of the University of Glasgow. He had 4 daughters: one who married Thomas Cunnin-gham; Agnes, who married Capt. Brice Blair of ‘Boigsyd’; Margaret, who married advocate John ‘Elesi’; and Lillias, who married merchant Hugh Boyd. In 1645 his daughters Margaret, Agnes and Lillias were served as his heirs. James of Bowhill (16th/17th C.) son of Robert of Aikwood and brother of Robert, William and Walter. He was recorded in 1599 when he was caution-er for William in Glack, that he would not harm the community of Peebles. He is recorded in 1601 when he and his brothers Robert, William and Walter, together with John ‘in Qhuolplaw’ were tried for the murder of Archibald Napier of ‘Wownet’ (Woolmot, near Edinburgh). In 1608 he was part of the gang of Scotts who forcibly freed 2 of their kin from the Bailies of Selkirk; his brother William was also there. He could be the James in Bowhill recorded as witness to a document in Selkirk in 1610. Sir James of Balwearie (d.1606) son of Sir William of Balwearie in Fife and distant descendent of the Scotts of Brans-holme. He was knighted in 1590, at the corona-tion of Queen Anne of Denmark. His younger brother Robert was a servant of the rebel Earl of Bothwell. He took part in the Falkland Raid in 1592 and was involved with Catholic-leaning leaders of Scotland to depose James VI. After being imprisoned, Sir Walter ‘the Bold’ of Buccleuch pleaded with Queen Anne to spare his life. He was fined and eventually released. Afterwards he served as cau-sioner for Sir Walter of Buccleuch several times. In particular, in 1596 he was cau-sioner for £10,000 that those for whom Sir Walter were responsible would obey the law. In 1599 he was absorbed from liability for Walter (‘Auld Wat’) of Harden. In 1600 his procurator in court was Robert of Haining, and they denied that sev-eral Armstrongs, Elliots and Scotts were Sir Wal-ter’s ‘men’. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir Andrew Wardlaw of Torrie. He was succeeded by his son William, but little remained of the family estates by then. He had a daughter Janet, who married Sir John Boswell of Balmuto and may also have had a son James (ancestor of the Scotts of Logie). James (16th/17th C.) malt-man in Glasgow. He was made a Burgess there in 1596. This was ‘the second of the burgesses granted to the provost this year’. His eldest law-ful son James, a merchant, was made a Burgess in 1626. Their connection to other Scotts is unclear. James of Foulshiels (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1600 and in 1617 was among the supporters of the Scotts of Harden mentioned in a complaint against them heard at the Privy Council. He suc-cceeded John, who must have been either his father or brother. He was succeeded by his sons Andrew and then Walter. James of Newark (16th/17th C.) from an unknown branch of the Scotts. How-ever, later cautioners for the family were Scotts of Castleside and Hartwoodmyres, suggesting they were closely related. He is probably the James, listed as tenant in Newark in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1574. He was ‘in Newerkmyn’ in 1581 when he resigned his ten-ment in Selkirk in liferent to his wife Marion Stod-dart. Also in 1581 he and his wife owed money to Thomas Cruickshank. In 1582 his first-born son John resigned to him his lands in Selkirk. In 1585 he was ‘in Newerkmyn’ when he wit-nessed a bond (signed at Selkirk and Hawick) settling a feud between the Scotts of Brauxholme and the Scotts of Allanhaugh. In 1590 Gideon Murray of Elibank was surety for him ‘that the vassals, tenants and servants of William, Earl of Angus shall be harmless’ of him. In 1592 he was recorded as Chamberlain for Margaret Douglas, wife of the Earl of Bothwell, for the lands in Ettrick Forest that she was given in liferent by her first husband, Sir Walter Scott of Bransholme. Sometime around 1603–7 he left Newark to his son John, and became a Magistrate in Selkirk. James (16th/17th C.) perhaps tenant at Nether Bonchester. Walter Deans (writing in 1887) claims his name is recorded on a deed of 1600, and that he was succeeded by Thomas (although Thomas actually succeeded Walter). James ‘Afhand’ (16th/17th C.) among the group of Scotts who attacked Adam Veitch’s lands in ‘Fechane’ in 1602. His nickname was transcribed as ‘Afhand’ and ‘Of Hand’. Others were Scotts of Hundleshope, Thirlestane, Gamescleuch, Bonnington and Bowhill. James of Glenrath (d.1619) 2nd son of Sir Walter of Tushielaw. He was also referred to as ‘of Boyken’ (in Westerkirk). The lands of Glenrath are probably those south of Peebles. Scott of Satchells lists him among the clansmen who were at the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. In 1599 his father Walter was surety for himself, as well as him and his brothers Robert and, to ‘observe the King’s peace’. His children were all minors when he died: Walter, who succeeded to Glenrath in 1628; William in Linton, whose son John succeeded his uncle; James; Marion; Elizabeth; and Margaret. His brother John of Mackersway was served as tutor to his children William, Marion, James, Elizabeth and Margaret in 1620. James (16th/17th C.) recorded being ‘of the mylne’ in 1605. He was among the inhabitants of Selkirk who had a dispute with Sir James Murray of Falahill. James (16th/17th C.) listed as ‘of Newholme’ in 1611 when he was part of the assize at the Justice Court on Jedburgh. He was brother of William of Montbenger and had a son John, who was a surgeon in Edinburgh. In 1645, his nephew Robert, son of William of Montbenger, was served as tutor to John’s sons (and therefore his grandsons) James and John. Probably the same John of Newholm is recorded in 1630 when his son John became a surgeon’s apprentice in Edinburgh (with Andrew Scott, who may have been related). James (16th/17th C.) brother of Sir Walter of Whitlsade, so probably son of the previous Sir Walter. In 1620 he had a marriage contract with Agnes Scott, widow of Rev. Alexander Hogg, involving lands at Eildon. In 1631 these lands were granted to Walter Chisholme in Darnick, and it was restated that he was brother of the deceased Sir Walter of Whitlsade. He could be the James of Whitlsade who in 1663 was jointly responsible (along with widow Margaret Turnbull) for land taxes in Hassendean Parish. James of Huntly (16th/17th C.) probably younger brother of Walter and son of Robert, who was on the raid to rescue Kinmont Willie in 1596. He was on an inquest in 1616, and probably had recently succeeded his brother (since Walter was recorded as Laird in 1612). In 1619 he complained to the Privy Council that his mother-in-law, Helen Grahamslaw, Lady Newton, had failed to pay him ‘a certane sowme of money for his tochergood’, but instead assigned to him a contact she had with Walter Turnbull of Rawflat; however, she apparently visited his house and stole the relevant paperwork and when he caught up with her at the Laird of Synton’s house she tore it up and threw it at him. His mother-in-law was daughter of the last Grahamslaw of Newton, who married Robert Ker, hence his wife was a Ker. He is probably the James ‘called of Huntlie’ whose son John was served heir to his lands of Langhope in Ettrick Forest in 1639. James (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1617 as brother of Philip of Dryhope. He was listed (along with Philip’s son William and Walter, son of Robert, heir apparent of Tushielaw) among men who had freed Patrick Porteous of Hawkshaw and attacked his captors. James of Newark (16th/17th C.) eldest son of John of Newark, who he succeeded in 1626. In 1618 Walter Scott of Bucleuch was instructed to apprehend him and his brother William for the murder of Adam Dalgleish in Deuchar. In about 1618 he was listed among men who had illegally used hagbuts and pistols in Ettrick Forest. He apparently sold Newark to the Scotts of Bucleuch and subsequently became a merchant and burgess in Selkirk. He is recorded recorded being ‘in Neworkemyne’ (i.e. Newark Mill) in 1629 when his former lands in Selkirk are mentioned in a land transaction; he may have been deceased by then. He was listed in the last testament of Walter Earl of Bucleuch in 1633, when he owed more than £14,000. In 1605 he married Grisel, daughter of James Murray of Philipehaugh. James (16th/17th C.) recorded being in ‘Aitschaw’ (possibly Headshaw) in 1619 when he was among a group of more than 100 men under John Ker of Langnewton who Sir Andrew Ker of Oxnam complained had broken up and stolen turfs cut for his use on Oxnam Moor. Probably the same James was a servant of Ker of Langnewton in 1621 when he was accused of being among the associates of Ker of Langnewton who attacked John Haliburton of Muirhouselaw, along with his son and the miller of Belses Mill. Along with some of his associates he was declared a rebel in 1621. James (16th/17th C.) listed as tenant in Newbigging in 1627 when he was one of 9 men responsible for making a valuation of the lands of Hawick Parish. He could be the James in Newbigging whose son witnessed a letter of inhibition in Selkirk in 1628. Rev. James (1578/9–1634) appointed to the vicarage of St. Mary of the Lowes by Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1608. It seems likely that he was some kind of relative. In the same year he was accused by the Presbytery of being our guid companion in drinking and beir company both in Edinburgh and at home’. He was also accused of being a card-player and being negligent in his duties. By 1618 he was non-resident and urged to find a house nearer to his congregation. However, he appears to have remained as the minister until his death. In about 1618 he was listed among men who might act as witnesses to the illegal use of hagbuts and pistols. In 1628 he was ‘minister at Sant Marrie Kirk’ when his son William witnessed a letter of inhibition in Selkirk. He was listed in 1633 as ‘minister at Yaro kirk’ when he was owed his annual stipend from the deceased Walter, Earl of Buccleuch. James (16th/17th C.) son of Adam in Hawick (although it is not clear which Adam, perhaps the Bailie). In 1615 he became a skinner’s apprentice with Matthew Aytoun in Edinburgh. James (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1628 as tenant in ‘Holcaldrumhill’, among a list of men accused by the Earl of Buccleuch of cutting down trees on his lands near Hawick. He is listed along with Andrew in the Heap, who may therefore have been a relative. It is unclear where his farm might have been. James (17th C.) son of George, resident of Leith, who was already deceased when he purchased Hassendean from William Cunningham in 1622. He was at that time a resident of Bruntsiland. James of Robertson (16th/17th C.) son of William of Robertson. He was the last of the Lairds of Robertson. In 1627 he was served heir to his father’s lands of Robertson and Howcleuch, with the mill, valued at £6 13s 4d. However, later in 1627 he sold the lands to Sir William Scott of Harden. It is not known what happened to him after that. James of Hagbrae (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1633 when he gave his consent to a contract over the lands of ‘Evillane’, involving Robert of Dryhope (presumably a near relative). His lands were in Midlothian. In 1639 his son James became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh. In 1642 his daughter Martha married Rev. Gideon Penman, ministed of Crichton, who was later ‘of Hagbrae’, was deposed for adultery and was imprisoned for witchcraft. James (17th C.) listed in the inventory of the deceased Earl of Buccleuch in 1633 as a ‘servant’. He was owed money for keeping the ‘teynd yaird’ in Hawick, as well as for building the walls and ‘heiding the stakes’ (i.e. putting heads on the stakes). It is unclear where this yard was located. James (17th C.) described as ‘portnr. of burn fitt’ when he signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. It is unclear which Burnfoot he occupied (but probably not the one on Ale, since Walter there signed separately), and how he was related to other Scotts. James (17th C.) possibly minister or assistant at Abbotrule about 1638. In that year he signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick, his name recorded as ‘Mr. James Scott, Abbatroull’. The minister at that time was James Ker, so it is possible this is a transcription error. James of Woll (d.bef. 1670) 2nd son of Robert. He succeeded his brother Francis by 1643. He is presumably the same James, son of Robert ‘of the Woll’ who became a saddler’s apprentice with David Brown in Edinburgh in 1641. In 1643 he was recorded as ‘lawful son to Robert Scott of Woll’ (and separately as ‘Well’) when he complained about being imprisoned in Edinburgh Tolbooth at the insistence of saddler David Brown; he complained that Brown ‘causelessly conceived a deadly hatred against him ... while ... alone and engaged upon his lawful business, caused apprehend him and warded him in the tolbooth, and that without any conviction or lawful warrant’, after which he was also warded by William Duff, servitor to Lord Saltoun, who claimed he was a debtor. He complained to the Privy Council after 20 days in prison, and was freed. He had 3 daughters in the period 1642–45, but had no male heirs. He sold the lands of Woll to Sir William Scott of Harden in about 1660. His brother George was returned heir to their father in 1670. James (17th C.) eldest son of William of Salenside, and brother of Thomas. In the period 1633–53 he pursued an action against his step-sisters Jean and Margaret, presumably over the lands of Essenside, which had belonged to their father, Walter of Essenside. James (17th C.) described as possessors of ‘Parke callit Copshaholme’ in 1632. James of Crookston (17th C.) younger son of Sir Robert of Thirlestane and Katherine Jardine. He is recorded in a letter of inhibition in 1630. In 1641 he is referred to as ‘of Cruixtoun’ when he witnessed (in Hawick) a document for his brother Sir John of Thirlestane, dealing with succession to the Thirlestane estate. James (17th C.) married Janet Duncan and had a daughter Janet baptised in Hawick in 1635. James (17th C.) son of John ‘in Borthauch’. In 1630 he became an apprentice merchant in Edinburgh with Adam Scott (who may have been a relative). Rev. James (d.1679) son of Walter ‘in Catslak’. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1615, was presented to Kirkton at the end of that year, and became minister there, probably sometime in 1616. He was translated to Tongland in 1619. He was a member of the Commission for the Maintenance of Church Discipline in 1634 and contributed to the building of Glasgow University in 1636. However, he refused to subscribe to the Covenant and was deposed in 1639 for ‘absence from his flocke eight Sabbaths together, sacrilege, intromitting with penalties and contributions, disobedience to the Presbytery, tabling (playing at draughts), conversing with excommunicated Papists, and declining the General Assembly’. He was attached to the Rectory of Ford in Northumberland in 1660 and had a stipend allowed by Parliament in 1661, which was increased in 1663 ‘because he hath been an extraordinary sufferer these twenty-four years by-gane’, and his disposition annulled in 1664. He returned to Tongland in 1663. However, in 1665 he was translated to Ancrum, as replacement to the formerly popular John Livingstone, who was exiled as a Covenanter. His appointment came amid huge disturbance, when a woman grabbed his cloak and he used his staff on her, with her brothers jumping into the fray and some boys throwing stones at him (although they missed). In the ensuing trial the 2 brothers (Turnbulls from Ashieburn) were transported to Virginia, their sister being whipped through Jedburgh (although rather leniently, according to the feelings of the populace) and 4 boys were ‘whipped through Edinburgh, branded in the face, and sold as slaves to Barbados’. He remained at Ancrum until his death about 14 years later. He married Margaret, daughter of Gavin Maxwell (minister of Borgue) and has a son James. This James was ‘son to Mr. James Scott, sometime minister at Tungland’ in 1648 when he became an apprentice merchant with ‘John Scott, elder’ (who may have been related) in Edinburgh. Bailie James (17th C.) Hawick Magistrate in the 1640s at the time of the Covenanters. He was Bailie in early 1641. In 1643 he was ‘late bailie’ when he ‘made count and reckoning of his intromissions with the contributions that were gathered for the soldiers at Newcastle in 1641’. He may have been the James ‘callit of Newton’ who was on the ‘leet’ for the Bailies in 1638 and the James who signed the 1640 ‘Act of Bailies and Council’. James of Hundleshope (17th C.) perhaps son of John of Hundleshope. He was recorded as laird in 1648 and also in a deed in 1673. His children included: John, who died without heirs; and David, who succeeded. James (17th C.) married Agnes Stevenson and had a son John baptised in Hawick in 1644. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Miller and their children included Janet (b.1646), George (b.1648) and Walter (b.1648). James (17th C.) described as a ‘lorimer’ (i.e. saddler) in a Hawick Magistrates case of 1642, when Thomas Oliver was ordered to pay him for the oats his livestock had eaten. In 1645 the Town Clerk Gilbert Watt complained that he had called him several names, against the town’s laws. The same ‘lorimer’ was elected to the Council in 1648. James (17th C.) described as a ‘cadger’ (i.e. carrier) when he acted as appraiser in a Hawick Magistrates Court case of 1642 involving another James, ‘lorimer’. James of Park, in Wilton (17th C.) recorded as a landowner in a valuation of Wilton Parish of 1643. This describes ‘Scott of Park’s Lands, being Easter Whitehaugh, or Wester Heap’, and valued at £200. He may also be the James whose lands in Hawick were valued at £10. He also signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. He is probably the James ‘of Heap’ described as a local landowner of the mid-to-late 1600s, by James Wilson. He is probably also the James of Whitehaugh recorded in 1648 when he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire. Probably the same James of Whitehaugh paid the land tax on £200 for Whitehaugh in 1663 and was recorded in a deed in 1663. It is unclear how he was related to the other Scotts of Whitehaugh or elsewhere. One possibility is that ‘Park’ is a transcription error for ‘Glack’ or ‘Clack’. James (17th C.) proprietor of Wiltsburn in a record of 1650 relating to the Borthwick valley. His wife may have been Margaret Scott and their children John, Robert and Margaret. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Isobel Ruecastle. Their children included: Robert (b.1638); Adam (b.1640); Bessie (b.1641); Walter (b.1642); Malie (b.1644); and Adam (again, b.1646). James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Davidson and their children included: William (b.1639); John (b.1641); Walter (b.1643); Francis (b.1645);
Scott

Robert (b.1648); and Helen (b.1651). The witnesses in 1639 were Robert and Adam, who may have been related. James (17th C.) married Margaret Stewart and had a daughter Bessie baptised in Hawick in 1650. James (17th C.) married Janet ‘Inglish’ and had a daughter Isobel baptised in Hawick in 1650. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Mary Davidson. His daughter Helen was baptised in 1651, with witnesses in 1651 were Robert Scott and Adam Govenlock. James (17th C.) married Margaret Nichol and had a son John baptised in Hawick in 1652. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Agnes Scott. Their children included William (b.1648) and Bessie (b.1652). The witnesses in 1652 were William and John. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Douglas and their children included: George (b.1647); Jean (b.1650); John (b.1653); and William (b.1655). James (17th C.) herd at Branxholme recorded in 1655 and 1656. It is possible he is the James ‘elder’ who rented part of Branxholme Mains and Branxholme Park, along with another James (perhaps his son) in 1671. He could be the tenant of the west end of Branxholme Muir recorded in 1677; he may have been a servant of the Scotts of Bucleuch (but the document is hard to read). James (17th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Margaret Rodger and their children included Marion (b.1672), Margaret (b.1684) and John (b.1686) James (17th C.) Hawick merchant. In 1684 his son John was witness to the financial document for erecting the ‘Steeple Loft’ in St. Mary’s. He may one of the 2 Jameses who were on the Council in 1668. James of Bonnington (d.bef. 1668) one of the ordinary Clerks of Session. This is Bonnington in West Lothian, unrelated to the place of the same name near Peebles that was a Lairship of a separate branch of the Scotts. He was 2nd son of Lawrence of Harperrig, and was the ‘Maistir James Scott’ who had a charter of the lands of ‘Boningtoune’ in 1629, with ratification in 1641. He first married Violet, daughter of Robert Pringle, W.S. He secondly married Margaret, eldest daughter of William Elliott of Stobs, and widow of William Bennet, minister of Ancrum (and she may have been the sister of his son William’s wife). He was appointed Clerk of Session in 1649 when his elder brother Sir William of Clerkington was appointed Lord of Session. In 1662 he is listed among those excluded from the King’s pardon until they paid a fine. He was recorded in a deed in 1663. His children were: William, who married Elizabeth Elliot and died without a male heir; Robert, who succeeded, but only had a daughter; Violet, who married James Douglas of Cliftonhall; Elizabeth, who married John Maitland; Marion, who married Rev. John Lumsden; and Jean, who was married to James Park, writer, who was entered as a Burgess and Guild brother of Edinburgh in his right in 1678; Gilbert, eldest son by his 2nd wife, who succeeded his half-brother Robert; Charles, who later succeeded; James, last male of this family, who became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1672; Catherine; and Barbara, who was buried in Greyfriars in Edinburgh in 1668. In 1680 his son Charles of Bonnington and other children James and Catherine, were served as his heirs. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Agnes Stewart and their children included Mungo (b.1658) and William (b.1661). The witnesses in 1661 were John and William Stewart, who were surely related to his wife. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret ‘Chisim’ (i.e. Chisholme) and their son Walter was baptised in 1660, with witnesses John of Langhope and Thomas Nichol. Bailie James of Ormiston (b.c.1640) Magistrate of Hawick in the 1670s and 1680s, distinct from the ‘litster’ who was a contemporary Bailie. He was ‘called Ormeston’ in 1673 when he was named in the trial following the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. He witnessed a baptism for Thomas Nichol in 1680 and another for James Chisholme in 1688. In 1682 he was ‘called Ormiston, Bailie of Hawick, aged forty years, married’ when he gave evidence at the trial of Alexander Home for leading the Covenanters who attacked Drumlanrig’s Tower. He is probably the Bailie Scott of Ormiston whose servant Elspeth Scott was struck by stones in 1683 when watching linens that were being bleached by the side of Teviot. He may be descended from the Ormiston Scotts recorded in 1589 and 1592. He was ‘late baylyea’ on the list of subscribers for the Kirk bell drawn up in 1693/4. He is probably the ‘Bailyea Scott ornston’ who paid tax on 2 hearths on the east side of Hawick in 1694. He may be the James recorded in 1697 when, along with 3 others, he was forbidden from holding public office in Hawick on account of being ‘abettors and hounders out of the last illegal election in October 23 last’. He witnessed a baptism (for Robert Scott, ‘wyndhead’) in 1701 and another in 1702 for Gideon Gardner (when he was ‘called ornston’). He may be the James who was deceased in 1708 when his son Robert caused a commotion in St. Mary’s by trying to take his former seat in the ‘Steeple Loft’ after the Council had passed a statute stating that these seats were reserved for the present Bailies. He was therefore surely the same as the James who was Bailie in 1685 when the finances for the new balcony were being sorted out, and may have been related to the Bailie Walter who had helped finance the balcony in 1684 and subsequently died. He may be the Bailie James who was insulted by Adam Young in 1685, along with his son John; the claim was that they had reset peas taken by some of the Royalist men. Either he or the other Bailie James had a bond with (i.e. loaned money to) Gilbert Elliot of Stonedge in 1691. James (d.bef. 1689) recorded in Aikwood in 1671, 1674, 1676, 1679, 1680, 1681, 1683 and 1684 when he had discharges with the treasurer of Selkirk for annual rent. In 1689 William McGie, ‘chirurgeon barber in Glasgow’ was the assignee for the annual rent of him fore surely the same as the James who was Bailie in 1683 were William and Robert Rodger (who were surely related to his wife). Bailie James (17th C.) dyer (or ‘litster’) in Hawick, who lived at ‘Casaend’. He was recorded as a ‘litster’ in 1665 when he gave evidence that Bessie Douglas had indeed insulted the Bailie. His is probably one of the 2 Jameses who was on the Council in 1668. He was a Bailie during the 1670s. He was recorded as a ‘litster’ on the list of Hawick men named in the 1673 trial following the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. He is recorded in 1686 as ‘Jas. Scott, litster, lat baylYea in Hawick’, and is distinct from the James of Ormiston who was a contemporary Bailie. He was also recorded as a lister in Hawick in a bond of 1682. He may be the James who was Bailie in late 1685 (but only if the Bailieship changed between November and March). He may also be the former Bailie recorded in a sasine of 1687 as having a garden in the West End, south of the King’s Highway. He may be the Bailie John who (along with James) witnessed a baptism in 1689 for miller James Paterson. He was ‘litster, late baylyea’ on the list of subscribers for the Kirk bell in in 1693/4. He is probably the James ‘laitie Bailyee’ who was listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He was recorded as a ‘litster’ in 1702 when he witnessed a baptism for Bailie Robert Wright. He is probably the James who declared in 1703 that on the last night of the previous year there were only 2 people to be found drinking after the ringing of the 10 o’clock bell. He may be the Bailie James who witnessed a baptism for Patrick Angus in 1704. He may have been related to tailor John ‘Casae end’, who witnessed a baptism in 1712. James (17th C.) described as servitor to Robert of Horsleyhill when he witnessed a Hawick sasine of 1688. James (d.c.1688) servitor to Sir William Elliot of Stobs. His will was recorded in 1688. He may be the same as one of the other Jameses. James of Shaws and Shielwood (17th C.) eldest son of Adam of Shaws. He paid the land tax in 1678. In 1692 he paid the teind duty to the Commissioners of the Duchess of Buccleuch for the lands of Outerside. He was ‘of Sheill-wood’ in 1695 when he contributed £200 to the Darien Scheme. He must have fallen on hard times, since in 1712 he sold Shielwood to Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto (and his son Gilbert), in agreement with his eldest son Walter; this means he was the last Scott of Shielwood. In 1670 he married Marian Scott, heiress of Shielwood (probably daughter of Walter). He was one of the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1690. His eldest son was Walter. James of Brieryyards (17th C.) eldest son and successor of John of Brieryyards. He is mentioned as a landowner in a record of 1666 relating to Hassendean parish, and hence probably succeeded before that. He may be the person who paid the land tax on Brieryyards and Hornshole in 1678 (with no name recorded). He had a sasine of Brieryyards in 1682, and was listed that year among the heritors of the Regality of Melrose. He also had a confirming charter of the lands of Hornshole in 1683, these having been passed to him by his brother John in 1667 (as part of a ‘wadset’ with the Turnbulls) and gained from the Turnbulls in 1671. Probably the same James ‘of Brieryairdis’ was one of the heritors accused of inciting the riot at the de-roofing of Hassendean Kirk in 1690. It is stated there that his eldest son was John and that John of Cockerheugh was his brother. He married Margaret Hay and their children (baptised in Robertson Parish) included: david (b.1680); Francis (b.1681); Elspeth (b.1683); Helen (b.1687); and Marie (b.1689). He is clearly ‘of Brieryyards’ in 1681 when the witnesses were Walter and John Scott (presumably relatives, perhaps his brothers). The witnesses in 1687 were again Walter and John Scott. James of Gala (d.bef. 1672) son of Hugh, 1st Laird of Gala. He was recorded in a deed of 1663. He married Janet, daughter of Sir James Murray of Philiphaugh. Their children were probably: Walter; George; Donald; John; David; Francis; William; and Hugh, who succeeded. He was recorded in a deed of 1673, along with his son Hugh. James (17th C.) schoolmaster in Selkirk, recorded in 1659 and 1673. He is probably also the ‘Doctor’ of that name recorded in discharges in Selkirk in 1657–65. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts. James nee Crofts (1649–85) illegitimate son of Charles II and Lucy Walters (who was also known as ‘Mrs. Barlow’). He was created Baron Scott of Tindale (in Northumberland), Earl of Doncaster (in Yorkshire) and Duke of Monmouth (in Wales) by the King, shortly before his marriage to the young Anne, Countess of Buccleuch in 1663. He assumed the title of first Duke of Buccleuch when he married the Countess of Buccleuch in 1663. However, the marriage was arranged when they were very young (he was 14), and it is said that his real partner was Lady Henrietta Wentworth. In 1666 he and his wife resigned their titles to the crown to be regranted with separate honours. In 1669 he was appointed Colonel of a Regiment of Foot Militia in Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire by Charles II. He was confirmed as Lord Dalkeith in 1672. He was appointed High Chamberlain of Scotland in 1673. He received the Barony of Hawick (including the patronage of St. Mary’s Kirk) from the Crown in 1675. He was listed in the 1678 Land Tax Rolls, holding land valued at about £9000 in Castleton Parish, £6000 in Cavers Parish, £2000 in Hassendean Parish, £9000 in Hawick Parish and £2500 in Wilton Parish (among others). Additionally his lands in Selkirkshire were valued at almost £20,000. In Hawick Parish his possessions included Alton Croft and Alton Town, Whames, Wester Weens and ‘Husband-lands in Hawick, with mill and customs’. He became Captain-general of the Forces and was sent to quell the insurrection in Scotland in 1679, being commander at Bothwell Brig. He then engaged in intrigues against his uncle the Duke of York and moved to Holland in 1684. Belief (probably unfounded) that his father married his mother in Rotterdam before his birth helped encourage him to seek the Crown. In 1685, following the death of Charles II, he landed at Lynne Regis, claiming to be the protector of the Protestant faith and proclaiming himself King. He marched to Taunton with about 6,000 followers, but was defeated by King James’ army at Sedgemoor and fled. Disguised in shepherd’s clothing, he hid out for 2 days, but was taken prisoner. He was executed at Tower Hill in London, having the same morning said his final goodbye to his wife and children; it was described how the executioner took 5 strokes in attempted to sever the head from the body, to the great displeasure of the crowd. He forfeited all his titles, but his wife Anna would remain as Duchess of Buccleuch. His children with her were: Charles, Earl of Doncaster, who died in infancy; James, Earl of Dalkeith, whose son Francis succeeded to the Buccleuch titles; Henry, Earl of Deloraine; Francis, who died in infancy; Charlotte, also died young; and Anne, who died in the Tower of London in 1685. He also had illegitimate children with Elinor, daughter of Sir Robert Needham of Lambeth: Maj.-Gen. James Crofts; Henry Crofts, Commander of H.M.S. Gosport; Isabella Crofts, who died young; and Henrietta Crofts, who married Charles Poulett, 2nd Duke of Bolton — ‘A Rebel he was in his time, And did the Nation much perplex; At his Invasion he was tane,

James of Thirlestane (17th C.) 4th son of Sir William of Harden, his brothers were Sir William of Harden, Sir Gideon of Highchester, Walter of Raeburn and John of Woll. In 1661 he purchased Thirlestane (near Yetholm, not the one in the Ettrick valley), as well as Heiton Mains and Mill from Sir Andrew Ker of Greenhead. He was Chamberlain to the Buccleuch estates for Liddesdale in 1659–60. In 1661 he was listed as owing about £2500 to the Duchess of Buccleuch for rentals in Liddesdale and the Debatable Lands. He was recorded in a deed of 1663. In 1668 he exchanged some lands with his nephew Sir Andrew Ker of Greenhead. He may be the James of Thirlestane who was fined in 1680 for being a Covenanter. He is probably the James ‘of thirlestoun’ who paid the land tax in Roxburgh and Yetholm Parishes in 1678. He is probably the ‘James Scott off Thirlestoune’ listed among the heritors of the Regality of Melrose in 1682 (with Sir Francis of Thirlestane also listed). He was mentioned in 1684 when arrested and brought to Edinburgh along with Sir William, younger of Harden (his nephew); he was released, but William was put in irons. He may be the Scott of Thirlestane who was cautioner for Neil, brother of the Earl of Argyll, in 1685. He married Agnes, daughter of Sir Walter Riddell of that Ilk in 1659. His children included: Mary (b.1660), who married Gideon Scott of Falnash; William, who succeeded; Walter; John; Gideon (b.1671); and 2 sisters. The witnesses in 1671 were Robert Pringle of Clifton, James Don and James Robertson. James (17th C.) wright in Hawick. His wife was Janet Scott and their son Andrew was baptised in 1678, with witnesses William Douglas and Simon Aitchison. Perhaps the same James and his wife Janet Scott had a daughter Janet baptised in 1671, with witnesses George and Robert, who were presumably related to either him or his wife. James ‘Cookie’ (17th C.) married to Bessie Douglas, and father to William. He is recorded in a case in 1674 when his wife was found guilty of striking and biting her son. His children with Bessie, included: George (b.1647); Jean (b.1650); John (b.1653); and William (b.1655). James (17th C.) recorded as a Bailie in 1673 and 1682. He is possibly the same as ‘Cookie’ and it is unclear if he was the same as James the Bailie who was a ‘listser’ at about the same time. James ‘Laird’ (17th C.) recorded in 1676 among a number of local people fined for using weights that were lighter than the standards. Specifically his ‘quarter of ane pound wanted ane drop, his twa unce wanted half a drop and more’. It seems likely that he was related to the later James, ‘Laird’, the first recorded Cornet, perhaps his grandfather. James of Bowhill (17th C.) younger son of Robert of Bowhill. In 1642 he was listed as son of Robert of Bowhill when he became a merchant’s apprentice with John Moffat in Edinburgh. Probably the same James, son of Robert of Bowhill was listed in 1648 as a merchant in Edinburgh when he acted as ‘bailie in that part’ for a sasine for Broadmeadows being transferred from Andrew of Broadmeadows to William of Tushielaw. He held lands at Mertoun from 1657. He succeeded his brother Andrew in 1668; however, it is possible that he purchased Bowhill (or part of it) during the lifetime of his father and brother. He served as some kind of agent for the Scotts of Buccleuch according to a 1660 document. In 1661 he was listed as son of Robert of Bowhill when he owed rent for the Barony of ‘Thickfoord’ to the Duchess of Buccleuch. He was Chamberlain to the Scotts of Buccleuch for the Parishes of Castle-ton and Canonbie in at least the years 1671–89. He was recorded in a deed of 1682 and was a Commissioner of Supply for Selkirkshire in 1685. He could be the Chamberlain of Scott of Buccleuch who was based in Edinburgh in the 1670s, with several letters to him (from George Scott of Pittloch) surviving. He may have been ‘grieve’ to Sir William Scott of Harden, who had discharges with the Burgh of Selkirk for annual rents in 1665 and 1667. The same James may have been Chamberlain to Sir William Scott of Harden in 1668 when he leased Sandieknowes from Lady Smail-holm. He was recorded as tenant in Roan (in Castleton Parish) in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, when he paid tax for 3 hearths. He had a court case against Andrew Ker of Littledean in 1694 and 1695, regarding rents; he was said to then be residing in Kelso with his family. He probably married Elizabeth, daughter and heiress of Walter Scott of Foulishiel. However, he may be the James ‘of bowgill’ who married Elizabeth Ker (perhaps daughter of Ker of Linton) in Peeceaitland Parish in 1672. He appears to have been deceased by 1714. This branch of the family held lands at Bowhill from at least the mid-16th century, and these would eventually pass to the Scotts of Buccleuch. He was succeeded by John, probably his son, who would be the last male of this family line. James (17th C.) recorded in 1679 as ‘Clerk of the Chamber acconpts of Duke of Buccleuch and Monmouth’ when he was made a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh, gratis. James (17th C.) recorded in 1679 as ‘cellar keeper to Duke of Buccleuch and Monmouth’ when he was made a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh, gratis. James of Phaup (17th C.) recorded in 1682 on a list of the heritors of the Regality of Melrose. He may have been son of Francis. James (17th C.) tenant in Hummelknowe Mill in 1684 when he was part of a long list of men declared as fugitives for refusing to take ‘the test’. James (17th C.) recorded as being ‘in Laics’ among Roxburghshire men declared fugitives for religious non-conformity in 1684. This could be a transcription error for ‘Lairs’ perhaps. James (17th C.) recorded in 1688 as servitor to Sir William Scott of Harden. He became a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh in 1688 following the desire of his master. James (17th C.) carrier in Hawick. He married Marion Young and their son William was baptised in 1688. The witnesses were James Gledstains and Robert Langlands. James (17th C.) listed as being ‘of Bristo’ in 1691 and 1697 when he leased the west end of Branhxolme Muir from the Scotts of Buccleuch. It is unclear who he was. James (17th C.) resident in Ashkirk listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. James (17th C.) resident at Easter Essenside on the Hearth Tax roll in 1694. He was separate from James in Ashkirk. James (17th C.) resident of Headshaw in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll there. Andrew and John were also listed at the same place, and so probably related. James (17th C.) miller at Spittal-on-Rule listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. James (17th C.) resident at Winningtonrig in Cavers Parish in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to the John and Thomas who are also listed there. James (17th C.) recorded on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls as shepherd at Borthaugh. He could be the James who rented quarter of the farm of Borthaugh from the Duchess of Buccleuch in at least the period 1690-94; his cautioner in 1692 and 1694 was ‘young goldiland’ (probably Charles), suggesting he was related to the Scotts of Goldielands and Crumhaugh. In 1696 and 1698 his widow Margaret was renting 1/4 of Borthaugh, with Adam and Walter (farmers at Overhall) as her cautioners. It is possible he was the James, married to Margaret Scott, whose children, baptised in Wilton Parish, included James (b.1694) and Bessie (b.1695). James (17th C.) listed in 1690 as ‘Ja Scott Scrivener’ (the last word is hard to make out) when he rented 1/8 of the farm of Borthaugh. He is listed separately from another James Scott, who rented 1/4. He is surely related to Robert Scott Scrivener, who was renting Borthaugh in 1694. It is possible he is the James ‘in Borturk’ in 1684 when his wife Bessie Scott’s will is recorded; he was probably related to George ‘in Bortch’, whose will is recorded in 1686, as well as Walter ‘in Burtch’. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His wife was a Johnstone and their son James was baptised in 1691. The witnesses were James Pringle and Andrew Scott. James (17th C.) resident of Yarrow Parish. He married Bessie Murray and their son Robert was baptised in Ashkirk in 1691, with witnesses John Gray and John Helm. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret ‘Curray’ (presumably Currie) and their children included Margaret (b.1687) and Janet (b.1694). The witnesses in 1694 were James and Andrew Scott, who were probably relatives of some sort. James (17th C.) listed as resident at Overhall on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Adam, who was listed there, was surely related. The pair were each renting half of Overhall from the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1690 and 1692. James (17th C.) tenant in Gillfoot in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. James (17th/18th C.) blacksmith in Hawick. He was listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was on the east-side of Hawick according to the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694 when he paid tax on 2 hearths. In 1700 and 1704 he was ‘smith in Hawick’ when his children were baptised. Probably the same smith James witnessed a baptism for smith George in Hawick in 1701. He is probably distinct from the smith at Branhxolme at the same time. His children included: James (b.1700) and Walter (b.1704). The witnesses in 1700 were merchant Robert Robson and Henry Orrock and in 1704 were merchant Robert Robson and glover John Scott. He may be the smith James who witnessed a baptism in 1723 for Walter ‘Wyndhead’ and Anne Scott. James (17th/18th C.) younger son of Thomas of Whitslade. His father was already deceased in 1709 when he became an apprentice goldsmith to James Michelson in Edinburgh. James (17th/18th C.) shepherd at Falnash. In 1713 his daughter Helen married Walter Hogg, who was from Canombie, and in 1716 his daughter Blench married John Nichol, who lived at Eilrig. James ‘Scottie’ (17th/18th C.) blacksmith in Hawick. In 1708 he is described as ‘smith distinctionis causa called Scottie’. He married Agnes Purdon in 1707 and their children included Robert James recorded at Easter Essenside in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. It is possible he is the Scott (perhaps a relative) and John Minto (who was later tenants at Ha-wick Shiel). He was explicitly referred to as being ‘called Pedee’ (i.e. footman), but it is unclear what this nickname meant exactly. He was also listed as ‘pedee’ in Hawick, among the subscribers for the new Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was resident of the Hawick ‘eist the water’ according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, with ‘Pedie’ recorded after his name. This presumably distinguished him from the blacksmith and others of the same name. James (17th C.) carter in Hawick listed as ‘Colifert’ among those contributing to funds for the new Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was also recorded as ‘James Scott colifert’ among residents of the east-side of Hawick on the 1694 Heath Tax rolls. He was presumably owner or otherwise associated with Colifort. He was again ‘Colifert’ when his daughter Margaret married William Scott (from Cavers Parish) in 1703, when his son James was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1704, when he witnessed a baptism for gardener Thomas Boyd in 1705, when he witnessed a baptism for workman William Gledstains in 1712, and when his daughter Helen married Andrew Waugh in 1713. It seems that he married Marion Young and their children included: William (b.1688); and James (b.1704). James (17th C.) resident at Todshawhill according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th C.) resident at Hawick Shiel in 1694, according to the Hearth Tax rolls. He is probably related to Walter and another James, who were later tenants at Hawick Shiel. James (17th C.) recorded at Raperlaw in Lilliesleaf Parish on the 1694 Heath Tax rolls. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Scott and their children included Helen (b.1694), James (b.1696) and John (b.1696). The witnesses in 1694 were John Scott (perhaps a relative) and John Minto (who lived at Easter Essenside). It is possible he is the James recorded at Easter Essenside in the Hearth Tax Rolls of 1694. James (d.bef. 1710) recorded as Sheriff-Clerk in Edinburgh in at least the period 1669-93. In 1669 he was made a Burgess of Caongate, gratis. In 1670 he became a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh, in right of his wife, Elizabeth, daughter of James Boyd of Temple. It is unclear how he may have been related to other Scotts; however, in 1672 he was involved in a process of scandal with Edinburgh surgeon George (who may have been kin). His son James became a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edin-burgh in his right in 1710, by which time he was deceased. James (1674–1705) Earl of Dalkeith, eldest surviving son of Anna, Duchess of Buccleuch and James, Duke of Monmouth and Buccleuch. He was titled Earl of Doncaster until the death of his father. In 1692 he was proclaimed King by a group of ‘thirty or forty wyld peo-ple’ at Sanquhar Cross, but nothing came of it. He received the lands of Chisholme and Woodburn from the estate of his deceased father in 1696. He served with the army in Flanders, returning to Britain in 1702. In 1694 he married Henrietta, daughter of Lawrence Hyde, Earl of Rochester and she died in 1730. Predeceasing his mother, the Dukeom was inherited by his eldest son Francis (1695–1751). His other children were: Charles (b.1700), who died young; James (1702–19), who died aged 17; Henry (b.1704), who also died young; Anne (1696–1714), who died aged 18; and Charlotte (1697–1747), who died unmarried at the age of 50, the only other to survive her grandmother, Anne. He himself died in London and was buried in Westminster Abbey. James ‘Drover’ (17th/18th C.) tenant in Stobicote. Either he or James from an earlier generation is recorded there in 1700 when he was fined ‘for for-stalling of the public market’ by buying a lamb from a servant of James Ogilvie in Braxholme and then selling it to a Jedburgh butcher for a higher price. Probably the same James is listed at Stobicote on the 1694 Hearth Tax records; he appears right after John, to whom he was likely related (perhaps John was his father). He was ‘tenant in Stobbitcoat’ in 1712 when he married Anne Scott (daughter of William Scott and Margaret Falsyde), step-daughter of Robert Thomson in Newmill, the marriage taking place at Newmill. He was recorded as ‘Drover’ in 1712 when his son William was baptised in Hawick Parish and was also ‘drover’ in 1713 when he witnessed a bap-tism in Hawick for a weaver called Douglas. He was ‘distinctionis causa called Drover tenant in Stobbitcoat’ in 1718 when his son John was bap-tised; this makes it clear that ‘Drover’ was a nickname, that he was distinct from the other contemporary Jameses with different nicknames, and that the tenant in Stobicote was the same man as ‘Drover’. In 1720 he was ‘in Stobbitcoat in Cavers parish’. Also in 1720 he witnessed (along with John Elliot in Stobicote) a baptism for William Telfer, servant in Stobicote. His children with Anne (or Anna) Scott, mostly baptised in Hawick, included: William (b.1712); Margaret (b.1714); Beatrice (b.1716); John (b.1718); James (b.1720); Ann (b.1724), baptised in Cavers; Walter (b.1727); and Janet (b.1729). The witnesses in 1712 were Robert Thomson in Newmill (his wife’s step-father) and Thomas Shiel in Todshawhill, in 1716 and 1718 were William Thomson, both older and younger in Newmill, and in 1720 were John Elliot in Stobicote and Robert Nixon. He was still at Stobicote in 1729. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Kirkton. In 1704 his son Robert was baptised in Cavers. There were several other children baptised around the same time who could also be his. James (17th/18th C.) recorded at Wiltonburn in 1705 when his son Robert was baptised. The witnesses were Adam and Robert Scott, who were probably related. He was probably related to other Scotts who lived at Wiltonburn. James (17th/18th C.) tailor in Hawick. In 1706 he was listed among the men who were fined for involvement in the disturbances at the Common Riding that year. He is listed separately from James ‘of Westport’, and was presumably also different from James ‘the Laird’, who was Cornet in 1703. He is probably the tailor who married Janet Falsyde and whose children included: Mary (b.1717); Helen (b.1719); James (b.1721); Thomas (b.1724); and James (again, b.1724). The witnesses in 1719 were James Craw and William Falseide (who was surely related to his wife). James (17th/18th C.) 2nd son of Walter, 3rd Laird of Nether Bunchester. He was a writer in Jedburgh and died unmarried. His sister Janet married Adam, tenant in Wauchope. James (17th/18th C.) joint tenant in Nether Southfield along with Walter in about 1710, as attested in evidence given regarding the state of Hawick’s Common in 1767. He was recorded at Nether Southfield in 1711 when he witnessed a baptism for Adam Laidlaw in Southfield and in 1713 and 1718 when his children were baptised. He is probably the James who (along with Walter) witnessed a baptism in 1726 for John Elliot, cooper in Nether Southfield. He married Margaret Young and their children included: William (b.1709); and James (again, b.1711); Robert (b.1713); and Bessie (b.1718). The witnesses in 1709 were Robert Thomson in Newmill and Andrew Riddell in Goldielands, in 1713 were Walter and (another) James Scott, both also in Nether Southfield, and in 1718 were tailor Gideon Chisholme and Walter (also tenant in Nether Southfield). James (17th/18th C.) resident in Mains (presumably Borthwick Mains) when several of his children were baptised in Robertson Parish. This includes: twins George and John (b.1703); Margaret (b.1710); Agnes (b.1712); and Helen (b.1717). James (17th/18th C.) recorded at Harden Burn in 1710 when his daughter Janet was baptised in Robertson Parish. He is hard to separate from other local men of the same name. James (17th/18th C.) tenant in Hawick Shiel, as recorded in 1718. He was probably related to Walter, who was also tenant there. He married Jean Beattie and their children included: William (b.1704); Marion (b.1706); Margaret (b.1708); Adam (b.1711); John (b.1713); Robert (b.1716); Euphan (b.1718); Margaret (again, b.1721); Bessie (b.1724); and an unnamed child (b.1726). Perhaps the same James, tenant in Hawick Shiel, married Margaret Stevenson (also from Hawick Shiel) in 1709. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Whithope. He is recorded there in 1710, 1715, 1716 and 1726. His children include Margaret (b.1710), Adam (b.1715), Robert (again, b.1716) and Robert (b.1726). There are several other children of James Scotts in Robertson at a similar time who could be his. He may be related to the James recorded in Whithope in 1742. James (17th/18th C.) married Margaret ‘Plenderghast’ in Hawick in 1717. James of Calfield (17th/18th C.) from a prominent Dumfriesshire farming family. He may have been descended from Francis Scott of Davington’s sister Katherine (although one genealogy has him as a son of Francis of Davington). He was later described as being ‘of Beltenmont’. He was probably the James in Calfield who married Agnes Scott, sister to the Laird of Burnhead (William Scott) in Hawick in 1721. His children included: Katherine, who married William, 3rd son of Robert Scott of Davington; Isabel, who married John, brother of her brother-in-law William Scott; Margaret, who married Gilbert Elliot, descendant of the Lairds of Redheugh and Larriston; and William, who was a vintner in Dumfries. Jean may have been another daughter, who married David Muir, Provost of Annan. Sir James of Gala (d.aft. 1721) son of Hugh and Isobel Ker, he was the 4th Scott of Gala. He was a Commissioner of Supply for Selkirkshire in 1695 and for Roxburghshire in 1696. He contributed £600 to the Darien Company in 1695. He was served heir to his father Hugh in 1697. His brother John became a surgeon’s apprentice in Edinburgh in of the Commission for appointing the new minister that year. It seems likely he is also the Bailie of the same name in 1727 (and referred to as John Scott, Senior). He may be the Bailie James who witnessed a baptism for miller John Henderson in 1729. He married Beatrix Laing and their children included: Joan (or perhaps ‘Jean’, b.1700); Marie (b.1702); James (b.1705); Margaret (b.1707); Anne (b.1709); William (b.1711); and Walter (b.1714). His wife may be the Beatrix born to James Laing and Helen Elliot in Hawick in 1670. The witnesses in 1700 were William Laing and ‘Mr’ James Laing, in 1702 were glover James Burn and gardener James Falsyde, in 1705 were fellow glovers James Burn and William Bruntfield, in 1707 were glover James Burn and Walter Scott in Crumhaugh, in 1709 were Bailie James Burn and William Laing, and in 1714 were Bailies James Burn and Robert Ruecastle. James (17th/18th C.) blacksmith at Branzholmie Town. In 1708 he witnessed a baptism for Thomas Turnbull, herd in Nether Southfield. In 1714 he (and carrier Robert Scott, possibly a relative) witnessed a birth for Walter Scoon in Commonside; he and Robert also witnessed another baptism for Walter Scoon in 1714. It seems likely he was related to the other Scotts who were joint tenants in Branzholmie Town in the early 18th century, namely John, Robert and William. He is probably distinct (but related to) the James, tenant in Branzholmie Town who married Helen Wilson in 1724. James ‘Laird’ (17th/18th C.) first recorded name of a Cornet, in 1703. He was a weaver (as recorded in a baptismal record of 1712) and probably from the west side of the Slitrig, since the Cornet 2 years later was also from that side. He witnessed baptisms in 1700 for weaver ‘Black’ John Swan (along with weaver John Lunn), in 1701 for weaver John Lunn (along with weaver Mungo Swan) and in 1708 for weaver Mungo Swan (along with Michael Briggs) and for weaver Thomas Turnbull (also with Michael Briggs). He is probably the same ‘James the Laird’ who is one of the members of Hawick Kirk who objected in 1711 to the appointment of Robert Cunningham as the new minister, on the grounds that he could not be heard in the west-end of the Kirk. He is probably the James ‘called Laird’ who in 1712 witnessed a baptism for another James ‘called Laird’, the son of John ‘Laird’. In the 1713 baptismal record he is ‘distinctis causa called James the Laird on the west side of Hawick’. A baptismal record in 1714 refers to the separate James, son of John ‘Laird’, who may have been a cousin. He married Helen Lunn in June 1703; this would have been immediately after his Common Riding was over, suggesting that he did not serve as Right- and Left-Hand Man (or, if they had such supporting roles in those days, he did not have to remain unmarried). Their children included: Thomas (b.1704); John (b.1706); James (b.1708); Walter (b.1710); and Andrew (b.1713). His wife’s name is given clearly in most of the baptismal records; she is likely to be related (perhaps sister) to weaver John Lunn for whom he served as baptismal witness. In 1704 the witnesses were James Scott, ‘westport’ (presumably the Cornet of 1705) and John Clerk ‘at ye westport’ (who could possibly be the name of an unknown early Cornet and perhaps related to Janet Clerk, wife of Thomas ‘Laird’). The witnesses in 1706 were the same John Clerk at Westport and James ‘Doctor’, in 1708 were Francis Scott in Hawick and Andrew Ogilvie of Newlands, in 1710 were Bailies William Laing and Walter Elliot, and in 1713 were Bailie William Laing and John Laing (William’s son). Based on the children’s names, one might guess that he was son of Thomas, who was recorded with the nickname ‘Laird’ in 1693; he may be the James, son of Thomas, who was baptised in Hawick in 1674. He was probably also related to Robert, a shoemaker with the nickname ‘Laird’ in the 1670s to 1690s (possibly an uncle), as well as James ‘Laird’ recorded in 1676 (perhaps his grandfather) and Walter ‘Laird’ who witnessed a baptism for weaver Adam in 1707 (perhaps his brother). James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Janet Irvine and their unnamed children was were baptised in 1720. He may also be the James married to an Irvine whose unnamed child was baptised in 1706 and the James married to Margaret Irvine whose child Thomas was baptised in 1717. Bailie James (17th/18th C.) of Westport, merchant, son of Walter (possibly the same ‘Westport’ recorded in a ‘letter of horn- ing’ in 1676). He was Cornet in 1705, and one of the main leaders of the rebel group in 1706, being fined and briefly imprisoned for his actions against the Bailies. It is probably only a coincidence that the first two known Cornets have the same name! However, he served as a witness for the first child of James ‘Laird’, in 1704. The mention of his name in the Town Book of 1705 contains the first recorded use of the word ‘Cornet’. He was surely related to other Westport Scotts. His father Walter was already deceased in 1706. In 1705 he witnessed (along with John Swan) a baptism for weaver John Lunn. He was recorded as ‘present Bailie’ in 1723. He is recorded as James, son to the deceased Walter ‘Westport’, when in 1719 he married Sarah, daughter of tailor William Gledstains. Their children included: William (b.1720); Jean (b.1721); Walter (b.1723); John (b.1724); Robert (b.1726); Sarah (b.1727); and William (b.1730). The witnesses in 1720 were Archibald of Boonraw and John ‘Whitegates’, in 1723 were William Gledstains (presumably his father-in-law) and Robert Elliot, and in 1726 were Robert and William Elliot. In the 1726 baptismal record he was ‘Bil- lia James Scott’, and in 1730 ‘Bailie’, making him easy to confuse with contemporary Bailies of the same name. The witnesses in 1730 were William Gledstains (probably his father-in-law) and wright Walter Scott (who may have been related to him). James (17th/18th C.) married Bessie Leyden in Cavers Parish in 1708. James (17th/18th C.) 4th son of William, who settled at Milsington. In 1717 he married Margaret Rea (probably daughter of Thomas) in Hawick, and they had a daughter Isobel; this could be the Isobel baptised in Robertson in 1733, daughter of James ‘son of Wm in milsinton’ (but hard to read). In 1726 he was recorded as a notary in Hawick. James ‘Doctor’ (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick, probably a weaver. He is recorded with his nickname when he witnessed baptisms in 1704 for ‘Black’ John Swan, in 1705 for weaver John Lunn, in 1706 for James ‘Laird’, in 1709 for weaver Archibald Douglas, in 1710 for weaver Michael Briggs, in 1711 for wright John Pringle, in 1712 for weaver George Wight and for merchant Michael Briggs, in 1713 for John ‘White- gates’ and in 1715 for weaver Jasper Richardson. He was ‘called doctor’, so that this was clearly meant as a nickname, and he is definitely not the same man as the slightly later surgeon of the same name. He is recorded as ‘distinctionæ causa called Doctor’ when rebuked in 1716 for being at the drunken brawl at Thomas Huggan’s house; he was stepson to Francis Elliot ‘in Hawick’. It is unclear if he is the same as James, son of John ‘Laird’. James ‘Laird’ (17th/18th C.) weaver who was son of John ‘Laird’ and one of many contemporary Jameses. In 1712 he is ‘distinctionis causa called Laird’, miking it easy to confuse him with Hawick’s first known Cornet, of the same name and nickname! In 1714 he is ‘distinctionis causa called John the Laird son, weaver in Hawick’. This distinguishes him from James ‘Laird’ (Hawick’s first known Cornet), although they were probably related, perhaps as cousins. He may be the weaver who witnessed a baptism in 1720 for weaver John Stevenson. He married Janet Bryson; she may have been the daughter of William Bryson and Janet Scott who was baptised in Hawick in 1686. Their children included Malie (b.1712), John (b.1714), William (b.1717), Janet (b.1720), James (b.1722) and Walter (b.1724). The witnesses in 1712 were weaver Thomas Briggs and James ‘called Laird’ in Hawick (his namesake, who was Corner in 1702 and married Helen Lunn). The witnesses in 1714 were shoemaker John Scott and weaver John Stevenson, and in 1720 were weaver Thomas Greenshields and merchant Walter Bryson (who was surely related to his wife, perhaps her brother). James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1715 he was at Ormiston when his son Thomas was baptised. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1715 he was living in Cavers itself when he married Margaret Dryden. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1717 he was living in Denholm when he married Margaret Plendergast. He was also living in Denholm when his children George (b.1720), James (b.1722), Isabel (b.1725), Helen (b.1726), Robert (b.1727), Elspeth (b.1729) and Robert (b.1730) were baptised. He may be the James in ‘Denholm eastend’ when his daughter Janet (b.1732) was baptised. James (18th C.) son of John of Gorrenberry. In 1718 he became an apprentice surgeon-apothecary to John Lauder in Edinburgh. James (18th C.) recorded ‘in Cowdhouse’ (i.e. Coldhouse) in 1765 when listed among the men selected to perambulate the boundaries of Wilton Common. He may be the same as one of the other Jameses. James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living in in Denholm when his sons John (b.1737) and William (b.1742) were baptised. He was ‘Tenant in Denholm’ in 1745 when his daughter Jane was baptised. He may be the same man as the earlier resident of Denholm, or else related to him. James (17th/18th C.) ‘chirurgeon in this town’ (i.e. surgeon in Hawick) who married Margaret Scott in 1724 at Cornhill in Northumberland. Margaret had previously been married to Patrick Scott (also in an irregular marriage), and was sister of the Laird of Burnhead. The minister was Rev. Thomas Blair, former episcopal incumbent of Lennel (Coldstream) who had been ejected in 1689 (suggesting that at least one of the families were adherents of Episcopalianism). The couple were rebuked by the Hawick Session in 1724 for ‘the trespass of their irregular marriage’. It seems likely he was not the same man as the ‘Doctor’ James, recorded earlier; however, it is less clear if he is the ‘James Scott, called Westport, Doctor’, who was a Bailie in the 1720s. He was ‘Chirurgeon’ in 1723 when he witnessed a baptism for merchant William Tudhope. In 1725 he was ‘surgen Apoticyary’ in Hawick when he witnessed a baptism for Robert Scott of Burnhead (his brother-in-law). In 1729 he was ‘Chyr:’ when he witnessed a baptism for writer Thomas Watson. In 1737 he witnessed the baptisms of a child of Walter Tinlin (actually ‘Rob the Naig’) and a child of William Oliver (possibly ‘Auld Cash’). On his death his wife gave £25 4s to the Town for the use of the poor. It is not known how he might have been related to other local Scotts (e.g. Walter, who was a surgeon in Hawick at the same time). James (18th C.) younger of ‘Whitefield’, recorded in 1735 (according to James Wilson). He could have been a son of Walter of Whitefield and Harden. He may also be the James of Whitlefield who witnessed a baptism in 1733 for Robert of Fahnash. In 1736 money was paid to the Wilton Session with his name attached, perhaps for his funeral. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Wiltonburn in 1724. He married Margaret Thomson and their children included: Bessie (b.1718); Janet (b.1720); Bessie (again, b.1722); an unnamed child (b.1724); and Charles (b.1727). James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Whitehaugh in 1721 and 1724 and Borthaugh in 1727. He married Janet Scott in 1720 and their children included: Anna (b.1721); William (b.1722); Robert (b.1724); and Janet (b.1727). The witnesses in 1721 and 1722 were the same, namely William of Whitehaugh and Rev. Robert (brother to William of Whitehaugh); this suggests that either he or his wife came from the Whitehaugh branch. The 1724 baptism in Wilton was performed by Rev. Robert, with witnesses William of Whitehaugh, along with James (‘grandfather to ye child’), Walter of Cockerheugh and John (‘uncle to the sd Child’). It is hence possible he was the cousin of William of Whitehaugh (and also Robert and John), with the 1724 witness James being his wife’s father; this would make him the same man as James, wright in Hawick and father of John, who succeeded to Whitehaugh. He could be the James who (along with Walter) witnessed a baptism for John Kersel at Borthaugh in 1727. He may be the James who (along with Walter) witnessed a baptism for Robert Scott of Burnhead in the same year. William (b.1740) and Robert (b.1740), baptised in Hawick born to parents of the same name may also be in this family. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at Borthaugh in 1724, 1727, 1729 and 1735, but Netherhall in 1732. He is easy to confuse with the other James who was also at Borthaugh at the same time. He married Janet Wright in 1723 and their children included: Janet (b.1724); Robert (b.1727); Mary (b.1729); Margaret (b.1732); and James (b.1735). The witnesses in 1724 were William Turnbull and Robert Cowan, in 1727 were John (perhaps a relative) and John Dryden, in 1729 were Thomas Wilson and George Bell, in 1732 were John Lamb and James Ormiston and in 1735 were John Scott and James Dryden. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at Timbersidemill in 1721 and 1727 and Scawmill (probably the same place) in 1724. He married Mary Scott and their children included: Janet (b.1718); Thomas (b.1720); Margaret (b.1721); Anna (b.1724); Robert (b.1727); James (b.1728); and William (b.1730). The witnesses in 1721 were Robert Scott and Robert Storie and in 1724 and 1727 were Robert and William Scott (who were probably related to him or his wife). James (18th C.) tenant in Branxholme Town. He is probably related to the other Scotts who were tenants there, and the slightly earlier smith of the same name. He is recorded as tenant in Over Southfield in 1725. He is ‘tenent in Branxholntoun’ when he married Helen Wilson (from the same place) in 1724. Their children included: Anne (b.1725); Walter (b.1727); David (b.1729); Margaret (b.1732); John (b.1739); and Betty (b.1741). The witnesses in 1725 were cottar William Hobkirk and John Wilson, tenant in Branxholme Town (who was probably his father-in-law or brother-in-law). James (18th C.) miller at Burnfoot Mill and Crawhill Mill in Wilton Parish from the 1720s until about 1750, being tenant for the Duke of Buccleuch. In 1722 he is recorded being at ‘w: burnfoot mnl’ (i.e. West Burnfoot Mill), in 1724 at ‘Wester burnfoot mnl’, in 1727 and 1729 at ‘W. Miln’ (i.e. Wester Mill), at ‘E: Burnfoot’ in 1733 and at Crawhill in 1738. He may be the James who witnessed a baptism for Walter Lorraine at Stiches in 1727 and witnessed a baptism for James Liddell, resident of Burnfoot, in 1736. After being at Burnfoot Mill he moved to Hawick Mill, where he was miller in the 1750s. He married his first wife, Margaret Huntly, in 1719 in Wilton and they had at least 9 children, all baptised in Wilton: Jean (b.1721); Margaret (b.1722); Francis (b.1724); James (b.1727); Adam (b.1729); Helen (b.1731); Susanna (b.1733); Robina (b.1735), who may have married Walter Purdom; and Thomas (b.1738). He later had 2 children by his second wife, Margaret Ligerwood (also written ‘Lizarhide’), including Isobel (b.1745). The witnesses in 1722 were William and John Scott, in 1724 were John Scott and John Huntlie, in 1727 were ‘James W. Jo. & Fran. Scotts’ (perhaps several relatives), in 1729 and 1733 were John Scott and John Dryden, in 1735 were James and John Dryden, in 1738 were James Simpson (the new minister of Wilton) and Walter of Cockerheugh, and in 1745 were shoemaker John Brown and merchant Robert Scott. His sons and sons-in-law held several other local mills. He is probably the miller recorded in 1759 and 1760 as witness to baptisms for Walter Purdom and Robina Scott (perhaps his daughter), and also for miller Adam (perhaps a relative) in 1762. He is probably the miller whose son Joseph, a wright, had his house at the bottom of the Mill Port carried away in the 1767 flood. It is likely that the 1762 record ‘New Mort:James Scott Crawhill’ was for his funeral. James (18th C.) son of John. In 1726 in Minto Parish he married Jean, daughter of Robert Kersel. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Appletreehall in 1729. In 1728 he married Jean Scott and their children included Rachel (b.1729), with witnesses Adam and William (who were probably related to him or his wife). Note than another James married another Jean Scott in Wilton in 1731. Other children of these 2 couples include: Agnes (b.1731); Margaret (b.1734); Helen (b.1736); Isobel (b.1737); and Ann (b.1739). James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Overhall in 1732, 1739 and 1741. He married Jean Scott and their children included: Agnes (b.1732); Jean (b.1739); and Gavin (b.1741). The witnesses in 1732 were John Scott and John Dryden, in 1739 were John and James Dryden and in 1741 were Adam Scott and William Marshall. He is hard to separate from the other James who also married a Jean Scott. James (18th C.) smith in Hawick Parish. He married Mary Smail and their children included Mary (b.1730). The witnesses were Rev. Crawford (of Wilton) and another James. James (18th C.) resident of Parkhead or Parkhill (this is hard to read) in 1732 when his son William was baptised in Robertson in 1732. He may be the James who was in Wester Parkhill in 1733 when his son William was baptised in Robertson. Perhaps the same James was recorded as ‘Servt. to Borthwickbrea at . . . ’ in 1743 when his daughter Janet was baptised in Robertson. James (18th C.) recorded at Weensland Mill in 1729 when he married Margaret Cavers in Cavers Parish. It is possible there may be an error for James ‘Stot’, who was miller in Weensland at about that time. James (18th C.) recorded at Trowmill in 1724, 1729 and 1737. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included: John (b.1724); Elizabeth (b.1729); and Thomas (b.1737). There are several other children baptised in Cavers around the same time who could be his. James (1701/2–43) tenant in Doveshauall Mill (in Bedrule Parish), i.e. presumably the miller. He may therefore have been an ancestor of the family that supplied many millers around Hawick. He married Margaret Borthwick (who may have been related). Their children included: Isobel (b.1740); Margaret (b.1742); and John (b.1745). James (1709) son of Robert of Coldhouse and Jean Cunningham. He was his father’s tenant in the farm of Tandlaw in about 1744–47. James (d.1770) eldest son of Robert of Davington, and direct descendant of the Scotts of Thirlestane. He was a surgeon in Carlisle and then Langholm. He married Mary Rae in 1728; her will is recorded in the Commissariat of Dumfries in 1784. He had a son James, who died without issue. He also had daughters Elizabeth, Mary, Susanna, Charlotte, Anna and Margaret. His brother John did have children, but this branch also failed in the male line (although there is some dispute over details of these generations). James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Teindside in 1731 when his daughter Isabel was baptised. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1742 he married Margaret Legerwood (who may have previously been married to Thomas Elliot). This was probably his second marriage. Their children included: Elizabeth (b.1743), baptised in Wilton; Isobel (b.1745), baptised in Hawick; and John (b.c.1749), tacksman at Roughheugh. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Silverbuthall in 1743 and 1748. He married Helen Irvine and their children included: Thomas (b.1743); Margaret (b.1746); Jean (b.1748); Anne (b.1750); George (b.1751); Allison (b.1752); Helen (b.1754); and George (again, b.1756). The witnesses in 1743 were Walter Scott and James Dryden and in 1748 were George and John Scott (who may have been related). James (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included: an unnamed son (b.1739); Margaret (b.1746); John (b.1746); Gilbert (b.1747); and Marion (b.1753). James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Margaret Hardie. Their children included: Isobel (b.1740); Margaret (b.1742); and John (b.1745). Ballie James (18th C.) Magistrate in Hawick in 1739 and 1740. In 1739 he was one of those appointed to oversee construction of a new Parish School. He may be the Ballie recorded in 1732 when masons were paid in his place (presumably an inn) after putting up the dial of the Kirk clock. He may be the ‘late Ballie’ who witnessed baptisms in 1741 for weaver James White. and in 1742 for gardener Robert Ker. He was Ballie along with John Scott in about 1743 when they gave orders to the Burgh Officers to find the animals of the neighbouring tenants pasturing on the common and drive them into the Town. He paid tax on 12 windows in Hawick in 1748. He may be the ‘Ballie James’ (no surname given) recorded in 1752 paying in money for ‘stones of the well’, perhaps related to fixing the Teviot Brig. He may be the Ballie of that name who witnessed baptisms for writer Thomas Winthrope in 1757 and for shoemaker John Oliver in 1761. He is probably one of the skinners James, John and Walter Scott, recorded as Bailies in the 1740s. He was probably also the James who was a Bailie in the 1750s and 1760s. He is probably the ‘Cuddyfit’ who lived at the bottom of the Howegate and was elected Bailie many times, lastly in 1765. Rev. James (1717–1773) son of William of Africa and Ashieburn and grandson of Walter of Clarilaw. He succeeded to his father’s estate in 1733. He was licensed as a preacher in 1740 and became minister of the Associate Presbytery Church at Gateshaw (near Morebattle) in 1742. He preached in the open air for 7 years, until a church was built on the Kale. In 1758 and 1759 he paid the window tax in Morebattle Parish. In 1745 he married Alice (‘Allie’), youngest daughter of Ebenezer Erskine, and she died in 1814, at the age of 94; a sketch of her exists. In 1747 he sided with the Anti-Burghers, while his wife’s family sided with the Burghers, and she would thereafter attend the Burgher Kirk in Jedburgh. He was said to be infailingly regular in his habits, so that people set their watches by him. He had 3 sons: Ebenezer (d.1756), who died young; William (d.1807), who succeeded to Ashieburn; and Ebenezer (again, d.1828), a doctor in Dalkeith. Manuscript sermons of his survive, some published in a volume in 1774. James (18th C.) resident of Whithope in 1742 when his son Walter was baptised in Roberton Parish. He may have been related to the earlier James in Whithope. James (18th C.) resident of Craikhope in 1742 when his son Robert was baptised in Roberton Parish. James (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1751 he married Agnes Scott, who was from Wilton Parish. He may be the same as one of the other Jameses. James (18th C.) resident of Borthwick Mains in 1752 when his daughter Helen was baptised in Roberton Parish. James (18th C.) cooper recorded at Meadshaw in 1753 when his son John was baptised in Roberton Parish. Perhaps the same cooper James was recorded witnessing a baptism in 1743 in Hawick for workman Thomas Oliver. He may be related to the cooper James who was recorded at Broadlee Burnfoot in a baptismal record of 1781. James (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Howcleuch in 1756 when his son Francis was baptised. James (18th C.) resident of Appletreehall in Wilton Parish. He married Helen Scott in 1756 and their children included: James (b.1758); Adam (b.1760); Andrew (b.1764); Francis (b.1767); and Margaret (b.1770). The witnesses in 1770 were Thomas Reid and Thomas Scott. James (18th C.) from Wilton Parish, in 1763 he married Helen (or ‘Nelly’) Elliot, who was from Hawick Parish. Their children included: Robert (b.1765), baptised in Hawick; and John (b.1775) and William (b.1778), baptised in Wilton. James (18th C.) cooper, who lived on Damside. He married Agnes Allan in Wilton Parish in 1761 and their children included: Robert (b.1764) and William (b.1765), baptised in Hawick; and Helen (b.1767), James (b.1770), Jean (b.1772), Robert (again, b.1774) and Ketty (b.1778), baptised in Wilton. The witnesses in 1765 were the whole congregation and in 1770 were Andrew Turner and Thomas Reid. James (18th C.) carrier in Hawick. In 1759 he and blacksmith Robert Young witnessed a baptism for carrier William Richardson and in 1760 he witnessed a baptism for blacksmith Robert Young (suggesting some family connection). He could also be the James who witnessed a baptism for carrier John Richardson in 1764. James (18th C.) resident of Whithope in 1763 and 1766 when children of his were baptised in Roberton Parish. His children included: Walter (b.1763); and Helen (b.1766). He may be related to the earlier Scotts who lived at Whithope. James (18th C.)wright in Hawick who was witness to a sasine in 1764. Probably the same wright witnessed a baptism for Walter Purdom in 1765; it is possible he was the same man as the miller James who witnessed earlier baptisms for Walter Purdom. He also witnessed a baptism for Walter (probably a relative) in 1767. He may be the James, wright in Hawick, who was father of the John who inherited Whitehaugh in 1759, and who acted for his minor son’s interests in the court proceedings for the division of Wilton Common in 1765; this John was said to be 2nd cousin of Isobel, last child of Walter of Whitehaugh, although the precise family connection is unclear. It is also possible he is the same man as James in Borthaugh. James (18th C.) from Yarrow Parish, in 1762 he married Jane Dunlop in Ashkirk. Their son James was baptised in Yarrow in 1766. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Janet Buckham and their children included: Isabel (b.1761); Robert (b.1763); and John (b.1765). James (18th C.) gardener in Hawick. He married Margaret Cockburn in 1762, the marriage being recorded in Hawick and Ashkirk Parishes. Their children included: Agnes (b.1765); and Janet (b.1768). The 1768 baptism was witnessed by William Scott and William Bower. In 1764 he witnessed a baptism for George Gray and Helen Scott (perhaps his sister), with Walter Scott as the other witness. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jane Scott and their children included: Betty and Margaret (b.1767); Betty (again, b.1768); James (b.1770); and Jane (b.1773). James (18th C.) tenant in Todshawhill. His daughter Isobel was born in 1765 and his daughter Christian in 1771. He may be the same as one of the other Jameses. James (18th C.) married Isabel Shortreed in Ashkirk Parish in 1771. James (1738–1807) tenant farmer of Skelfhill, son of Robert who had farmed there before him. He previously farmed at Gorrenberry, where most of his children were born. He is recorded at Skelfhill on the 1785–97 Horse Tax Rolls. He was additionally taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. He married Jean Pott (or Potts), their children baptised in Castleton Parish including Jean (b.1766), Jenny (b.1772), Margaret (b.1773), James (b.1775), William (b.1776) and Gideon (b.1778). One of his children was Betty, born in 1769, who married Adam Turnbull. His son Robert later farmed at Skelfhill. He may be the same James whose son James became a baker’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1770. His son William, of Huddersfield, is recorded dying at Falnash in 1800. The labourers Gideon and Archibald, recorded there on the ballot for the Militia in 1799, may have been his sons. He himself died at Skelfhill. James (d.c.1772) only son of James of Davington and descendant of the Scotts of Thirlestane. He farmed at Holm, near Eskdalemuir. He married Christina Stewart. Their only son was Robert, who farmed at Holm and then at Binks. After his death there was extensive litigation over the succession to the estate and it was eventually sold. James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded in Dykes in 1770 when his son Thomas was baptised. James (18th C.) of Boonraw and Sillerbithall. He farmed at Boonraw and was also Laird of Silverbuthall. He has sasine for the lands of Easter Heap in 1733. As James ‘of Easter Heap’ he was one of the instigators (along with Robert Langlands of that Ilk and William Scott of Brieryhill) for the division of Wilton Common in 1765. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. It is possible he is the same as the James, resident of Silverbuthall in at least 1743 and 1748, who was married to Helen Irvine and had children Thomas (b.1743), Margaret (b.1746), Jean (b.1748), Anne (b.1750), George (b.1751), Allison (b.1752), Helen (b.1754) and George (again, b.1756) baptised in Wilton Parish. The witnesses in 1743 were Walter Scott and James Dryden and in 1748 were George and John Scott (who may have been related). His lands of ‘Silverbuthall or Easter Heip’ were valued at £80 in 1764, ‘rated in the name of George Scott’ (presumably his son). He was an elder of Wilton Kirk. His wife began attending the Anti-Burgher church in Midlem, and it is said that they went to different churches each Sunday, with no disagreements in the family; but when their child was baptised in Wilton, and the minister (Rev. Simpson) used the opportunity to rebuke dissenters, he resolved to leave the established church. A meeting followed with other, like-minded people in 1763, which led to the establishment of the Green Kirk in Hawick in 1766. He was probably the James who witnessed a baptism for fellow Anti-Burgher Robert Smith in 1770 and another for William Cook in 1772 (as well as several other baptisms). As owner of Silverbuthall he got part of the former Wilton Common when it was divided, and this land was later sold to William Oliver by Thomas Scott (who must have been his heir). He was probably also the James, tenant of Wollrig, who sold part of Silverbuthall to William Robertson (of the carpet factory) and James and Walter Knox (in Damside). In 1788 he is recorded as owner of ‘Easterheap or Silverbuthall’, valued at £80. He was probably unrelated to the later James of Silverbuthall. James (18th C.) tobacconist of Hawick. In 1762 he (along with shoemaker John) witnessed a baptism for weaver Robert Stevenson. In 1758 he married Margaret, daughter of John Pringle. Their children included: Thomas (b.1759), John (b.1760), Mary (b.1762) and Agnes (b.1765). He may have been related to the later tobacconist. James (18th C.) tenant in Denholm in 1776. His wife was Elizabeth Scott and their children included George (b.1776). Capt. James of Forge, J.P. (d.1799) only son of William of Meikledale. He was a direct descendant of the Scotts of Thirlestane and known as the ‘Laird of Canonbie’. He spent 16 years in the East India Company, where he was in the Bombay Marines. He was J.P. and Deputy-Lieutenant for Dumfriesshire. He married Mrs. Mary Coode in 1764, and she died childless. He secondly married Phoebe, who was daughter and co-heiress of James Dixon of Bath and sister-in-law of George Harris, Lord of Scringapatam and Mysore. Their children were: William (b.1774), who died at Burtpore; Charles (1776–1822), Aide-de-camp to Lord Harris; Catherine Eliza (1777–1853), who married her cousin Capt. Gilbert Richardson and was a poet and novelist; Phoebe Christian (1779–1804) died while visiting her uncle in Madras; Jemimah (b.1781), who married Maj.-Gen. Robert Bell; Sybella Frances (d.1820), who married Adm. Charles James Johnston; and George Fraser (1784–1848), who succeeded to Larriston and took the additional surname Elliot. Rev. James (1733–1818) 3rd surviving, and probably youngest son of Robert of Falnesh. He was born at Crawhill in Wilton Parish and was educated in Edinburgh. He was probably brother of Rev. Thomas of Auchtermuchty, although in some accounts he seems to have been confounded with the contemporary Rev. James, minister of the Relief Kirk in Jedburgh. He was educated in Edinburgh, licensed by Jedburgh Presbytery in 1758, ordained at Kinfauns in 1759 and translated to Perth, Second Charge, in 1762, becoming the main minister there in 1771. He gave up because of age and infirmity in 1807. He had a great love of literature and the fine arts and was well known in his day as an antiquarian. In 1784 he founded the Literary and Antiquarian Society of Perth and spent time translating and transcribing old documents. His collection was purchased for the Advocates’ Library, which now forms part of the National Library of Scotland. In 1760 he married Beatrice, daughter of Thomas Mercer of Pinhill. Their children were: Robert (b.1762), who died young; Thomas (1763–1814), who lived in Jamaica; Elizabeth (b.1765); Violet (b.1766), also died young; Susan (1767–1854); and James (b.1769), merchant in Glasgow. All of his children died unmarried. He wrote ‘Sermon occasioned by the Death of the Rev. David Black’ (1771), ‘Lives of the Protestant Reformers in Scotland’ (1817), ‘History of the Life and Death of John, Earl of Gowrie’ (1818), ‘Essays on Evangelical Subjects’ (1824), and an account of the Parish. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Anna Irvine and their children included Andrew (b.1768). James (18th C.) resident of Whitlaw. He married Mary (or Marjory) Irvine in Hawick in 1765 and their children included: Walter (b.1766); Andrew (b.1768), with the baptism appearing to be recorded twice: Mary (b.1769); Elizabeth (b.1772); James (b.1773); and Margaret (b.1775). The witnesses in 1766 were William Scott and Abel Armstrong, in 1768 were Abel Armstrong and William Miller plus William Leith and in 1772 were Abel Armstrong and James Dunlop. James ‘the Chief’ (c.1700–78) son of the tenant of Overhall, he was a thatcher in Hawick. He was one of the witnesses in 1764 in the court case for the division of Wilton Common and who perambulated the Common; there he was described as ‘commonly called Chief’. He recalled the perambulation of the common by the Lairds of Falnash, Langlands, Whitehaugh and others when he was 12 or 13 years old. He was mentioned in an Edinburgh marriage record of 1766, when his daughter Helen married John Allan. Probably the same thatcher in Hawick was among those selected to perambulate the boundaries of Wilton Common in 1765. He is also recorded when he died in Hawick Parish. His nickname suggests he may be a descendant of Walter who was also called ‘Chief’, perhaps they were father and son. In 1764 he describes how his father was tenant at Overhall from the time of his birth until 1741 and he worked on the farm from an early age. Rev. James (1738/39–1823) said to have been born in Wilton Parish, he was a member of the Established Church, and was ordained as minister of the Presbyterian congregation in Branton, Northumberland in 1774. He was inducted as 4th minister of the Relief Kirk in Jedburgh in 1783. He served as Moderator of the Relief Synod. He was described as ‘a tall, rather primitive-looking old gentleman’, with a black suit that he used for 40 years. His will mentions his ‘only son Revd James Scott’, minister at Dalkeith and then Cowgate in Edinburgh (and said to be the prototype for ‘Mr. Wiggie’ in Dr. Moir’s ‘The Life of Mansie Waugh’), and daughters Agnes (married to a Laidlaw) and Christian (the youngest). He is said to have been a younger brother of Rev. Thomas of Auchtermuchty, who appears to have been a son of Robert of Falnash; however, there is clearly some confusion with the contemporary Rev. James, minister at Perth and it is unclear which of the 2 men was brother of Rev. Thomas. He paid tax for having a female servant in the 1780s. In 1815 he was becoming old enough that he was supplied with an assistant, who was the next minister, James Porteous. James (1743/4–89) buried in Bedrule kirkyard, adjacent to the Scotts from Lantonhill. He died at Howden in Ancrum Parish. He married Janet Bell, who died at Ruecastle in 1809, aged 67. He secondly married Alison Rae, who died at Marefield in 1823, aged 48. He had a son, Francis, who died in Edinburgh in 1806, aged 35. James (b.c.1745) from Hawick, he emigrated to America in 1775 and lived in Pennsylvania. He married his second wife Margaret Tully in Hawick in 1770. His children were: John; James; Robert; Joseph; Margaret; Isabella, who married William Davis; William; Agnes; Maria; and Thomas. His will and some personal letters survive. James (18th C.) recorded at Woodburn in 1773 when his daughter Janet was baptised in Robertson Parish. He may have been related to Archibald who was at Woodburn slightly earlier. James (18th C.) married Esther ‘Lennicj’ in Ashkirk Parish in 1777. James (18th C.) recorded as possessor of a ‘House and yard’ in Minto Parish in 1780. The rental value was 10s. James (b.c.1750) herd in Wauchope. He may have been related to former tenants of Wauchope. He is probably the shepherd at Wauchope recorded on the 1797 Dog Tax Rolls. He may have married Nelly Irvine in Robertson Parish in 1780. He had at least one son, Adam (b.1796), who emigrated to the U.S.A. and settled in Ontario. Other children, baptised in Hobkirk Parish, who may have been his include John (b.1781), Walter (b.1784), Nelly (b.1786, to James in Hillshaugh), Isabel (b.1788), Beatrice (b.1790), James (b.1792) and Robert (b.1800). James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded in Bowanhill in 1792 when his sons William and John were baptised and in 1797 when his daughter Rachel was baptised. He may be the same as one of the other Jameses. James (18th C.) resident of Bowknowe, recorded in a letter to a Selkirk lawyer in 1792. James (18th C.) skinner in Hawick. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He may be related to other Scotts who were skinners. James (18th C.) cooper in Robertson Parish. He was at Broadlee Burnfoot in 1781 when his daughter Margaret was baptised. He is surely related to John, who was also recorded at Broadlee Burnfoot in 1781, and probably Robert, who was there slightly earlier. It is also possible he was related to the cooper of the same name who was at Meadshaw in 1753. James (18th C.) listed as coachman at Stobs in 1785, when he was working for Sir Francis Elliott. In 1786 he was a ‘House Servt.’ and was coachman in 1788 and 1791. James (18th C.) coachman at Cavers in 1785, when he was working for Capt. John Douglas. Perhaps he could be the James whose son Robert was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1785. He could also be the labourer in Orchard in 1789 when his son James was baptised in Cavers. James (d.1795) from Kirkton, his death is recorded in Hawick. James (18th/19th C.) married Janet Scoon in Hawick in 1791. He was living at Greenbank in 1798 when his son James was baptised in Robertson Parish, with his wife acting as sponsor (suggesting that she attend the church there, but he did not). James (d.bef. 1806) tailor in Hawick. The death of his wife Janet Nichol is recorded in 1806. He was probably related to other tailors called Scott. James (18th C.) recorded at ‘Newmills’ in 1791, when he paid the cart tax in Hawick Parish. He was probably based at Newmill on Teviot. James (18th/19th C.) millwright in Hawick. He was probably son of Thomas and Christian Weir. A family tradition says they were descended from Auld Wat of Harden. In 1792 he married Elizabeth (‘Betty’) Scott, who was from Ashkirk. Their children were: Thomas (b.1795), who married Janet Notman; Mary (b.1796); Gideon (b.1798); and David (1801–73), who married Janet Wilson. The 1795 baptism was recorded in 1812, by solemn declaration to Bailie Peter Wilson of the father and ‘nurse Agnes . . .’ [perhaps ‘hume’], with the 1797, 1798 and 1801 baptisms also recorded then. The witnesses were Gideon (probably his wife’s brother) and Robert Weir (perhaps his uncle). James (18th/19th C.) workman in Hawick Parish. He married Mary Turnbull in 1781 and their children included: Thomas (1783); Jane (b.1786); Robert (b.1789); and Robert (again, b.1793). The witnesses in 1789 were the whole congregation and in 1793 were Robert Renwick and Walter of Whitehaugh (who may have been a relative). James (18th/19th C.) farmer at Brieryshaw in Ewesdale in the period 1787–1797 according to the Horse Tax Rolls. He also paid the dog and clock taxes in 1797. He married Jean Ogilvie and their children included: Janet (b.1777); Jean (b.1779); Mary (b.1785); Thomas (b.1787); Robert (b.1789); unnamed female (b.1791); and James (b.1793). James (18th C.) married Nelly Hobkirk in Wilton Parish in 1786. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Isabel Hogg. Their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1794, with witnesses Andrew Scott and George Ogilvie. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at New Appletreehall, according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 2 work horses. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Jameses. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living in Denholm in 1795 when his son Anthony was baptised. Perhaps the same James was in Denholm when his daughter Euphan (b.1789) was baptised in Cavers Parish. He could be the same as one of the other Jameses. James (18th C.) married Margaret Rae in 1793, the marriage recorded in both Wilton and Minto Parishes. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at Denholmhill, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 4 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He was probably father of John, who was also tenant at Denholmhill, as well as George, who was living there in 1797. His sons James and John were on the ballot list for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799. James (1746/7–1817) tenant at Upper Raw in Castleton Parish. He is recorded there on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls along with William; they owned 3 horses. His wife was Margaret Graham, who died in 1831, aged 68. Their children included Margaret (1783/4–1803), Janet (1791/2–1804), Elizabeth (1798/9–1804), Robert (d.1804) and Janet (d.1808). James (18th/19th C.) tenant farmer at Todlaw in 1801. His sons James and Thomas were listed on the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish. James of Silverbuthall (c.1765–c.1841) teacher at the school in Yarrow, his mother was Agnes (‘Nans’) Noble. He was appointed in 1784, taking over from Alexander Wilson (with George Scott being there briefly). He dramatically increased the reputation of the school, so that it attracted boarders from as far away as Hawick. He focussed particularly on handwriting, English grammar and geography. He is recorded in a letter of 1813 preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. In about 1816 a cousin of his came to help teach languages and he retired as schoolmaster in 1818. He was said to be of slight physique, even although his mother claimed he was as ‘buirdly’ as the minister; he wore a small yellow wig, as was the custom of the time. He kept bees and also gathered meteorological data, his records of 1837 being used by the minister in the New Statistical Account to describe Hawick’s weather. He was engaged to be married to Miss Anderson from Netherbarns (who had been born in the West Indies), but she was one of 4 young ladies who drowned in the Ettrick in 1800. He came to live at Silverbuthall in about 1822, having bought it after ‘Auld Cash’ died. He was probably unrelated to the James who had lived at Silverbuthall a few decades earlier. He was listed as ‘James, Esq. Silverbuthall’ when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821 and was there in 1825 when he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’. He was also examiner at Wilton School. Former pupils from Yarrow were regular guests of his. He was listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835. He is probably the James at Silverbuthall described as ‘Ind.’ on the 1841 census. He died at Silverbuthall and his fortune was split among distant relatives. James (18th/19th C.) merchant in Hawick. In 1790 he married Isabel Robson. Their children included: Margaret (b.1795); Helen (b.1796); John (b.1797); Betty (b.1800); William (b.1801); and James (b.1806). The witnesses in 1796 were Bailie Irvine and Andrew (who was probably related) and in 1797 were Bailie Irvine and James Richardson. Probably the same merchant James paid the dog tax in Hawick in 1797. James (18th/19th C.) recorded as coachman at Branxholme in 1797, when he was working for Adam Ogilvie. James (18th/19th C.) joiner in Belses, recorded in the Lieutenancy Book in 1797. James (18th/19th C.) apprentice under the care of James Hogg. He sang Hogg’s ‘Address to the Inhabitants of Hawick’ at the ‘rebé’ Common Riding of 1809. He was also the first official singer of ‘Teribus’ in 1819, i.e. the first Common Riding ‘Sang Singer’. He may be the same James who was imprisoned along with James Hogg in 1817 for illegally organising against the stocking-maker employers. He was still alive in 1863 when his recollections provided information for Robert Murray’s article on Hogg. He could be the James (b.c.1794) from Cavers Parish, living on the Loan in 1841, in Orrock Place in 1851 and at 9 Howegate in 1861, whose wife was Isabella and children included Walter (or Peter), Thomas, Benjamin, Gideon, Catherine and Helen. James (18th/19th C.) married Margaret Kersel in Wilton in 1794. James (b.c.1770s) recorded as a labourer in Hawick on the ballot for the Militia in 1799 and again in 1801. He is probably the same as one of the other Jameses. James (b.c.1770s) servant at Deanbrae according to the ballot list for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799. Adam was also listed and hence perhaps his brother. James (b.c.1770s) son to James in Denholmhill, according to the ballot list for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799. His brother John was also listed. He could be the son of James baptised in Cavers in 1776. Perhaps the same James was a labourer in Denholm on the 1801 Militia ballot. James (b.c.1770s) servant at Lymiecleuch, according to the ballot list for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799. Robert was tenant there at the same time and perhaps related. James (b.c.1770s) weaver living at Lockieshedge according to the ballot for the Militia in Wilton Parish in 1799. James (b.c.1770s) farmer at Woll Rig according to the ballots for the Militia in Wilton Parish in 1799 and 1801. He may have been related to the earlier James, tenant in Woll Rig, who also owned Silverbuthall. James (b.c.1770s) labourer at Synton North Mains according to the ballot for the Militia in Wilton Parish in 1799. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1797 he married Agnes Renwick, who was also from Hawick. Their children included: Elizabeth (b.1798); Francis (b.1808); and Margaret (b.1811). James (b.1775/6) High Street tobacconist. He was probably the son of tobacconist William (and Margaret Scott) baptised in Hawick in 1773. He was listed as a tobacconist in Hawick on the ballot list for the Militia in 1799; he may also be the ‘Son of William’ listed on the ballot in 1801. He served as Town Treasurer, and also helped compile a ‘New Valuation of Houses and Gardens in the Town of Hawick’ in 1814. He was one of the founders members of Hawick Curling Club. He was listed as a tobacconist in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories; he may also be the same as the general shopkeeper listed in 1837. His shop was at No. 40 High Street and is marked on Wood’s 1824 map; he may also have been part owner of the premises on the Sandbed marked...
Scott

‘Tudhope & Scott’. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825 and was probably the ‘Scott of Burnhead’ who provided the version of the Hornshole story, which was included in Wilson’s book; this was the first published account of the origin of the Burgh Standard. In 1809 he married Elizabeth, daughter of deceased Hawick draper George Turnbull. His premises (at 40 High Street) are marked on Wood’s 1824 map; he may also have been part owner of the business on the Sandbed marked ‘Tudhope & Scott’. According to the 1841 census he was a ‘Tobacco Manuf.’ living with his children William and Elizabeth, along with Margaret (either a second wife, or a sister or other relative) and a female servant. His children included: William (1809–77), Cornet, who helped with the business, and was later a farmer at Burnhead; George (b.1811); Elizabeth (b.1812); and Margaret (b.1815). The witnesses in 1811 were tobacconist Francis (probably a relative, perhaps his brother) and merchant Thomas Turnbull (his wife’s brother) and in 1812 were hosier William Beck and wright Walter Wilson. A portrait of him exists. James of Whitehaugh (1775–1852) 3rd son of John. In 1797 he was recorded as son of John of Whitehaugh when listed among men in Wilton Parish balloted to serve in the Militia; he paid £10 to avoid serving, this being made explicit in the 1798 list. However, he was again on the ballot in 1799 as ‘son of John Scott Whitehaugh’. He succeeded to the Lairdship on the death of his brother Walter in 1841. He was the last of the Scott Lairds. He was a member of the Jedforest Club. His residence for many years was at Whitlsade. In 1841 he is recorded at Whitehaugh with his elder brother Walter and in 1851 he is at ‘Whitehaughplace’ with his sister Agnes Stavert, niece Margaret Stavert and 4 servants. He died unmarried. His nephew Capt. John Chisholme inherited the estates (after adding ‘Scott’ to his name). He is buried in Whitehaugh Aisle, along with his brother Walter. James (b.c.1770s) brewer in Hawick, recorded on the 1799 ballot for the Militia. He is probably the same as one of the other Jameses. James (18th/19th C.) probably son of Gideon and Agnes Tudhope baptised in Hawick Parish in 1779. He may have been half-brother of millwright Gideon. He worked on the Liverpool-Manchester railway in the 1820s, along with his brother William. James (b.c.1770s) mason at Leaheads according to the ballot for the Militia in Wilton Parish in 1799. James Boswell (d.1799) recorded in 1798 as substitute in the Militia for David Scott in Merrylaw. It is unclear where he came from. He died before serving in the Militia, with George Oliver, wright in Denholm, drawn in his place. James (b.c.1775) member of the East Bank Kirk, he was a carter in Hawick. It could be his property marked ‘Jas. Scott’ near the top of the Howegate on Wood’s 1824 map. In 1841 he was living on the Back Row with his children James, Ninian and Christian. He married Janet Scott and their children included Thomas (b.1805), James (b.1807), Robert (b.1810), Ninian (b.1815) and Christian (b.1818). James (b.c.1780) joiner in Denholm according to the ballot for the Militia in 1801. James (b.c.1780) son of James, farmer at Todlaw. He was listed on the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish, along with his brother Thomas. James (b.c.1780) weaver at ‘Deanbraebarr’ in Cavers Parish on the 1801 Militia ballot. ‘Denholm braeheds’ is crossed out and hence perhaps essentially the same place. James (b.c.1780) servant at Bewlie in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. James (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Margaret Riddell and their children included Margaret (b.1805), James (b.1807) and Margaret (b.1809). James (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Frances Graham and their children included Ann (b.1819), William (b.1821) and John (b.1723). James (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Jean Anderson and their children included Isobel (b.1814) and Thomas (b.1818). James (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Nelly Oliver and their children included Isabel (b.1807) and Christian (b.1810). James (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Jean Weir and their children included Robert (b.1820). James (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Betty Hogg and their children included Beatrix (b.1820). James of Ellem (d.bef. 1854) 2nd son of John of Midgehope, who was a younger son of William of Woll. His wife was Agnes, and in 1854, when she was his widow, she purchased Teviot Bank from his nephew John Scott, W.S. They had a son, William John, who married Terese N. Harris. James (c.1780–1820) eldest son of Robert. He farmed at Skelfhill like his father before him. He passed on the lease to William Turnbull of Hassendeanbank. James (b.c.1785) farmer in Hawick, who may have been the older brother of ‘Robbie the Cow’. He could be the ‘Jas. Scott’ shown at 43 High Steet on Wood’s 1824 map. In 1841 he appears to be living with Robert, who was an accountant. James (b.c.1780s) overseer at Chisholme, recorded on the ballot for the Militia in Roberton Parish in 1812. James (b.1787/8) farm worker who lived at Wiltonburn Cottages. He was listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1840 and 1841, when he was hind at Wiltonburn. In 1851 he was a ‘hind or ploughman’ at Wiltonburn. His wife was Margaret (from Kirkton) and they had a daughter Christian. James (1788–1855) son of William and Janet Jack. He was a ploughman, working nearly all his life in Hobkirk Parish. In 1851 he was listed in Craeling. He firstly married Ann Dryden and had children: Rachel (b.1819/20); William (b.1820/1); and George (b.1822/3). He secondly married Margaret Byers (from Kirkton Parish), who died in 1880, aged 85, and their children were: Janet (b.1826/7); Walter (b.1826/7); Robert (b.1830/1); Jane (b.1832/3); Andrew (b.1835/6); and Richard (b.1839/40). He died at Ulston and was buried in Hobkirk Cemetery. James (1789–1810) 5th son of Charles, 3rd Laird of Wauchope and Howcleuch. He was born in Hawick Parish. He worked with the East India Company, travelling to India in 1806 and serving in a Madras native infantry regiment. He died unmarried. James ‘Blind Jam’ (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick in the early 1800s. In 1822 the deaths are recorded of 2 of his infant sons. He may have run a boarding house or inn of some kind, since in 1822 it is recorded that ‘A Poor Woman’s Daughter Died at Blind Jamies’. James (b.1790/1) from Ancrum, he was a joiner on Bourtree Place in the 1841 and 1851 censuses. In 1851 he was living in ‘Mr McKie’s house oppos. Bourtree place’. Like his elder brother he was a Director at Pesco’s, taking on this role in 1925 and being the driving force behind the company until his death. In 1918 he married Violet Irene, daughter of John Noble Pillans. Their children were: Peter Brydon (1920–43), who lived in Teddington and died in Burma; and Christine Mary (1925–2001), who lived in Denholm, married Donald Robert McCormick and died in Red Deer. He decided not to live on Sunnyhill along with other family members, but instead moved to Denholm Lodge. He donated a baptismal font to Denholm Kirk in memory of his son Peter. He died in Milan, Italy. Maj. James Kenny Courtney of Burnhead (b.1928) succeeded from his uncle, Lt.-Col. William Scott-Watson. Educated at Marlborough and Sandhurst, he served in the Hussars and was Assistant Division Commander in Western Australia, Tasmania and Hong Kong. He matriculated in 1977 and has no direct ties to the Hawick area. Jane (d.c.1581) described as ‘sometime spouse’ to William in Kirkhope when her will was registered in Edinburgh in 1581/2. Jane (18th C.) daughter of Margaret Dodds from Denholm. In 1795 she had ‘natural child born and baptised’ called Alexander. Jane ‘Janie’ (1788/9–1837) wife of Adam Turnbull, bookseller of Jedburgh.
She is one of the few people recorded on a tombstone in Abbotrule Kirkyard. She must have had a connection with the Rulewater area. Jane nee Veitch (b.1800/1) from Langholm, she is recorded as an ironmonger in Slater’s 1852 directory. Her husband was gun-maker and ironmonger Joseph. In the 1851 census she is a widow living at about 21 High Street, employing 4 men in the ironmonger’s and tinsmith’s business. She is also listed as a tin-plate worker on the High Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. Jane (b.1783/4) resident of Brieryshaw in Ewesdale in 1841. She is listed as ‘Ind.’, suggesting that she was a widow with some means. Presumably the same woman is recorded as ‘Jessie’ at Brieryshaw Cottage in Ewesdale on the 1851 census; she is described as an unmarried ‘Annuitant’. In 1861 she was ‘Fund Holder’ living alone at Brieryshaw Cottage. Jane (b.c.1805) recorded as ‘Dealer in Bread &c.’ on Wilton Damside on the 1841 census. She was living with Agnes, possibly a sister, and children William Whitson and James Hardie. Jane (b.1833/4) grocer in Newcastleton. She was on Douglas Square in 1861, living with her brother James (a mason), sister Mary Ann Scott and niece Margaret. Janet (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Jonete Scot’ in 1487 in a charter for lands in Glasgow. Probably the same ‘Jonete’ is also listed in another charter in 1497, along with Alexander. It is possible that the same Janet leased the lands of ‘Newtoun of Reras’in Largs in 1481. It is unclear how she might be related to other Scotts. Janet (15th/16th C.) married Robert Dickson. She was recorded as a widow in a land transaction in Edinburgh in 1502. Janet (16th C.) daughter and heir of Walter of Howpasley, who died at Flodden. She must have been quite young when he died, since she did not succeed to his lands until 1530, before which she was under the guardianship of her uncle Robert. Her brother Robert succeeded to the main lands of Howpasley, while she inherited Appletreehall and Midshields. A marriage contract of 1526 (in the Selkirk Protocol Books) clearly records her as daughter of the deceased Walter, ‘lord of Howpaslot’; this was for marriage with John Baird, Lord of Posso, and contained the names of priests ‘to act jointly on their behalf and to receive the said dispensation on their behalf to prove the legitimacy of their descendants’. This suggests that the couple may already have had children, including Sir Gilbert Baird, Elizabeth Baird (who married Sir Michael Naysmith) and Janet (who married William Geddes) who died in 1527. She married (or secondly married) Thomas MacDowell (or McDougall) of Makerstoun. With his consent in 1532/3 she transferred the lands of Appletreehall and Midshields to her uncle Robert Scott, this being confirmed by King James V in 1536. Also in 1532 (with another Walter serving as her Bailie), she sold her lands of Birkenside in Berwickshire to Robert Scott; she and her husband both signed ‘with my hand at the pen’. She was still alive in 1540, when Sir Walter of Branxholme (then in ward) was given permission to pursue legal proceedings against her. Her seal of 1532 shows a ‘bend sinister’ (i.e. the wrong way, probably in error) bearing 3 stars, with a bird and a crescent on the shield. Janet (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1530/1 as widow of George when she was given as owner of a rig of land in Selkirk. In 1534 she and her son James leased a mill in Selkirk from Andrew Ker of Primside. Janet (16th C.) recorded in 1535 as widow of Walter. She had sasine for her husband’s 3 husbandlands in Denholm, inhabited by William Davidson, Archibald Turnbull and James Hobbirk. Janet (16th C.) listed in 1539/40 as widow of Robert ‘Elwand of [Toungtis?]’ when she purchased the lands of ‘le cot rig’ in the Mains of Appletreehall from Robert of Howpasley. She paid 120 pounds Scots for the farm and Robert promised to guarantee her and her heirs peaceful possession of the lands until he paid them the same. It is unclear if it is just a coincidence that the former heiress of the lands of Appletreehall was also called Janet Scott (or if perhaps there is confusion over the two nearly contemporary Roberts of Howpasley). Janet (16th C.) heir of John, recorded in 1543 when her lands in East Haining were mentioned in a Selkirk document. The lands of Walter were adjacent, and hence he may also have been a relative. Janet nee Beaton (1519–1569) daughter of Sir John Beaton of Creich and Janet Hay. She was the third wife of Sir Walter of Buccleuch and survived her husband by 16 years. She is supposed to have ridden in full armour at the head of 200 Scots in order to seize the Laird of Cranston at the Kirk of St. Mary of the Lowes in 1559; it may be that he was suspected of being involved in the murder of her husband in 1552. She was also implicated in intrigues involving Bothwell and Queen Mary, and was popularly believed to employ witchcraft. She had married Sir James Crichton of Cranston Riddell, then Simon Preston of Craigmillar and thirdly Sir Walter. She apparently divorced her 2nd husband (the Provost of Edinburgh) and Walter divorced his 2nd wife, so that the two could marry. The inter-relationships of their children are extremely convoluted. For example, her sister Grizel married Sir William Scott of Kirkurd, her step-son! She may also have been the mother of Walter of Goldielands, as well as David of Stobicote. In 1542 there was a discharge for her rights to the land of Cranston Riddell and Muirhouse in Edinburgh, and Blackgrain, Catslack and Montbenger in Selkirkshire. In 1550 her son James Crichton leased to her for 19 years the lands of Cranston Riddell, together with Catslack, Montbenger and Blackgrain. In 1552/3 she and her daughters, Grizel, Dorothy, Janet and Margaret were granted the teinds of Lessuden for 19 years. She held the superiority of the lands of Wilton Green, Wiltonburn and Overhall until her death. In 1564 she had an order from Mary, Queen of Scots, recalling the bond made in 1552 between the Scotts and the Kers, which was broken by the Kers murdering her husband, and instructing her to pursue justice for the breaking of the bond (and not formally for the murder!). In 1567 she was instructed to present her ‘householdman and sevant’, Dand Ker ‘in Scheilstokbrayis’, who was among men accused of raiding into England. She is fictionally represented by ‘the Lady’ in Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Lay of the Last Minstrel’ – ‘Of noble race the represented by ‘the Lady’ in Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Lay of the Last Minstrel’ – ‘Of noble race the Janet (d.c.1590) wife of John Brydon in Fas-theuch, Selkirkshire. Her will was registered in Edinburgh in 1590. Janet (d.c.1592) described as ‘sometime spouse’ to William Simpson, merchant Burgess of Glasgow when her will was registered in Edinburgh in 1592. Janet (d.c.1596) described as ‘sometime spouse’ to Patrick Aitken, Burgess of Dumfries, when her will was registered in Edinburgh in 1596. Janet (d.c.1597) widow of Thomas Lauder in ‘Wormistoun, par. of Ettlits-toun’, Peeblesshire when her will was registered in Edinburgh in 1597. Janet (17th C.) daughter of George of Castleton. In 1632, along with her sisters Bessie and Margaret, she was served ‘heir portioner’ to her father. Janet (d.c.1661) daughter of Sir William of Harden and grand-daughter of ‘Auld Wat’. In 1639 she may have married John, son of Sir John Murray of Philiphaugh (although some histories say he married Janet, daughter of Sir William Scott of Ardross). In 1661 her brother Walter of Raeburn was served as her heir. Janet (17th C.) recorded on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls at Borthaugh. Janet ‘Jean’ (1750–1824) eldest surviving daughter of William Scott of Woll and Jean Balfour. She is said to have been one of 5 (or perhaps 6) daughters who were over 6 feet tall. In 1771 she married James Grieve, younger brother of the tenant of Branxholme Park, but he died 2 years later. In 1792 she secondly married Rev. Benjamin Dickison, minister of Kirkton and later Hobkirk. She is buried in Hobkirk kirkyard. Janet ‘Jenny Rat-tles’ (d.1801) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1767 she married Archibald Paterson, who was also from Hawick. Her death is recorded in 1801, along with her nickname, whose interpretation is unknown. Janet ‘Cauld Pottage’ (18th/19th C.) Hawick resident, recorded in 1808 when her unnamed child died. Janet (b.c.1785) grocer at Whiteknoe in Castleton Parish. She is recorded there in 1841, as a widow, with her son James and also Jane Webb. She married James Kitchen (also written ‘Ketchin’ and variants), who lived at Roughley. Jasper (17th C.) listed on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls somewhere near Mangerton in Castleton Parish. His forename is not common in the family. Jean (16th C.) sister of Scott of Buc-leuch (although it is not clear which one).

married Gavin Eliott of Stobs, who was a descendant of the Ellums of Redheugh; it has been suggested that her marriage was an attempt to end the feud between the 2 families in the 1560s. The couple owned the ‘sex merkland of Chalmerland Newtown’ in 1573, when they complained that Walter and John Scott, possessors of the other half of Chamberlain Newton, attacked her and her husband’s servant James Storie. Jean (16th C.) daughter of Sir William Scott of Kirkurd, and sister of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Bucleuch. In 1569 she married Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst and Oxnam, this being part of a bond between the Scotts and the Kers. In 1573/4 she was granted lands in Oxnam and Ashiestiel (while her husband was in exile), but there were complaints that Dame Catherine Ker, Lady Ferniehirst (her mother-in-law) and Andrew Kerr (her brother-in-law) were harassing her farms. Her children included: Sir James Kerr of Crailing; Thomas Kerr of Oxnam; Ann Kerr, who married John Elphinstone, 2nd Lord Balmerinoch; and Robert Kerr, 1st (and last) Earl of Somerset, who took the surname ‘Carr’. In 1590 she and her son were charged with not repaying a debt that he had incurred while in England. In 1592/3 she was ‘Lady Pharnyhirst’ when she was in dispute with Sir Robert Ker of Cessford over crops from Redden. Jean of Satchells (16th/17th C.). She helped Lady Scott of Howpaseley organise a band of fellow Scotts to slaughter 60 sheep of Sir James Douglas in 1615. Most of the perpetrators were brought to court by Sir William Douglas, and eventually hanged, although the two ladies were spared, along with William Scott ‘callet of Satchellis’ who was presumably her son. She may have been the widow of Robert of Satchells and mother of Captain Walter, in which case she was daughter of Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane. Jean ‘Holland’s Jean’ (16th/17th C.) natural daughter of Walter, 1st Earl of Bucleuch, her mother probably being Delia, daughter of Captain Thomas Butler in Holland. Her name suggests that she was born when the Earl was fighting in the Dutch Wars, 1604-9. She married Robert Scott of Whitslade, but they appear to have had no surviving male heirs. Jean (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eisst the water’ in 1694. She was probably a shopkeeper or lodging house keeper. Jean (17th C.) recorded as a householder at Branxholme on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. She was taxed for 2 hearths, suggesting that she had a larger house or perhaps an inn. It is possible she was the same woman known as ‘Jean the Ranter’ in the poem ‘The Bonnie Lass o Branxholme’. Jean (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. She was living at Broonraw in 1729, when her death is recorded. John (d.1203) referred to by English historians around 1200 as ‘Joannes Scotus’. He may have been from Cheshire, but of Scottish parentage, with his mother being sister of Matthew Kynynmound, Bishop of Aberdeen. He was appointed Bishop of St. Andrews in 1178, but this was against the wishes of King William, who wanted the position for his chaplain, Hugh. He appealed to the Pope, and was successful, but William nevertheless banished him from the kingdom. This led to Hugh being excommunicated, followed by the King himself, with the whole of Scotland placed under interdict. After the Pope died, and a new one was installed, an agreement was reached in which Hugh became Bishop of St. Andrews and he became Bishop of Dunkeld in 1182/3. It seems unlikely he was related to anyone else of the surname Scott. John (12th/13th C.) clerk, recorded as ‘Master John ‘le Scot’ in Reading in 1226/7. Alicia of Oxford appealed that he should be tried before the Bishop of Lincoln, for an unspecified crime. John (13th C.) recorded as ‘Scotus’ in 1228 when an assize was appointed by the Sheriff of York, for men whom he accused of larceny and felony. He was stated to be in the King’s prison at Appleby. John (13th C.) listed as ‘John the Scot’ in 1231 in London, when he was found guilty of masquerading as a clergyman and stealing money from merchants. Presumably a different ‘John the Scot’ was recorded in 1225/6 in relation to a boat from Scotland that had been arrested at Lynn. Sir John (d.1249) son of David, Earl of Huntingdon, who was brother of King William the Lion. He as known as ‘John Scot’, but it is unclear if he was related to anyone else with this appellation. He was knighted at Roxburgh Castle in 1223. He also became Earl of Huntingdon and of Chester. He is probably the ‘John le Scot’ recorded in 1227, when the Sheriff of Huntingdon made a demand on the men in his bailiary. He married a daughter of Llewellyn, King of Wales. John (13th C.) recorded in 1256 as being ‘of Schele’ in a set of pleas at Newcastle. He was exonerated from murdering Jordan of Clydesdale, but fined for being present. John (13th C.) son of William ‘le Scot’, he was recorded in 1266 in a court case in York. ‘Alesia de Lacy’ was his heir and had a case against Peter, sacrist of the chapel of York. John of Reston (13th C.) son of Patrick. He held the lands of Great Reston, which had previously belonged to his father. The land appears to have been gifted to Coldingham Priory and then purchased by him. He is also recorded in another document of Coldingham in 1261/2. He was succeeded by his brother Patrick, some time in the 1270s. John (13th C.) mentioned in 1261 as son and heir of William ‘le Escot’ in a document relating to Trent in Northumberland. Johannem Scot’ is listed in 1279 in a list of men sued by the Prior of Tynemouth in 1269 (along with Nicholas and Henry). ‘Johannem Scot’ is listed in 1279 in a list of those involved in a case of trespass in Coquetdale. Possibly the same John listed in a separate case. He could also be the John ‘le Escot’ who was among men sued by the English King commanded the bailiffs of Scarborough to pay his expenses as one of the Scottish prisoners. His surname was written ‘Scotte’. John (13th/14th C.) recorded in a document relating to lands in Westmorland. John (13th C.) listed as ‘Johannem Scot’, foreseter of ‘Beleassis’ in the 1279 assize roll of Northumberland. Possibly the same John listed in a separate case in Coquetdale. Probably a different man of the same name was accused of many robberies, fined and declared a fugitive. John (13th C.) resident of Glasgow. In 1283 he was ‘Johanne Scot’ when he witnessed the sale of a plot of land in Rotten-row. John (13th C.) recorded in 1285 as ‘Master Johannis Scoti de Monedy’, rector of schools of St. Andrews. He was tenant of the lands of Monethy (in Fife) in 1293 and 1294, and probably belonged to the Balwearie branch. He may be the Master John who received the benefice of Brechin in 1274, also holding the church of Cortachy (in Angus). John (13th C.) recorded as ‘Johanni le Scot, majori Novi Castri super Tynam’ in 1290 in a list of provisions made at Berwick for the English King. He was thus presumably a resident of the Newcastle area. He could be the same ‘Johannes Scot, ballivus’ in Tynedale who was listed in another document for Edward in 1292. John (13th/14th C.) Templar, who was recorded as ‘dictus de Soton Anglicus’, suggesting he may have been English. He joined the order in Ponthieu in about 1296. John (13th/14th C.) resident of Linlithgow who was involved in a case of trespass in 1299. He was also in another such case in 1302, and was also accused of stealing someone else’s cattle in the same year. His name is given as ‘Johanne Scotte’. John (13th/14th C.) listed among the men of Edinburgh as ‘John le Scot’ when they paid homage to Edward I in 1296. In 1296 he is listed among Edinburgh men in the roll of Scotsmen who renounced their treaty with France in order to reconcile with King Edward. He is probably the same man as the burgess of Haddington who was on an inquest in 1296 and was on a jury in 1312. It is possible he was the same John who was on an inquest in 1296 regarding the lands of Ballencrieff in East Lothian. John (13th/14th C.) recorded in an English document appraising horses in Dundee in 1311/2. His name is given as ‘Johannes Skot’. John (13th/14th C.) recorded in 1319 as son of Richard when he was pardoned by Edward II for joining the Scots. This was on account of bringing back the Bishop of Ely’s servant, who had been imprisoned after a skirmish in Yorkshire. John (13th/14th C.) recorded in the Exchequer Rolls for 1329. He was ‘Johanni Scot’, a clerk in Rutherglen. He was also recorded in 1330 receiving his fee from the King. He may have been related to Andrew, who was also recorded in relation to Rutherglen in 1329. John (13th/14th C.) Provost in Montrose recorded in 1329 and 1330 and Customar in Montrose in 1332. He may have been related to other Scotts in Montrose, e.g. David who was also recorded in 1329. John ‘the Lameter’ (14th C.) second son of Sir Michael of Rankilburn (or possibly of Sir Richard). However, information about these generations is quite uncertain. He was said in some early family histories to be the ancestor of the Scotts of Syn- ton and Harden, among other branches. Walter, 1st Laird of Synton was his son. It is said that he attended school at St. Mingo’s in Glasgow and married in a way that may have been disagreeable to his father. His grandson is supposed to have been Walter ‘the Ratton’, who was 1st Laird of Synton. However, most of the claimed details of his life have no documentary support.
John (14th C.) man at arms in Roxburgh in 1337 and listed at the English garrison at Roxburgh in 1342. John (14th C.) recorded resigning the lands of ‘Gillastoun’ in Fife sometime during the reign of David II. He appears to have lost the lands through forfeiture. It is unclear how he was related to other Fifeshire Scotts. John (14th C.) resident of Haddington recorded in the Exchequer Rolls in the 1360s. He received an annuity from the mills of Haddington in the period 1361–1373. In 1375 the annuity was paid to his heirs and he was presumably deceased by then. It seems likely he was a descendant of the earlier Bailie of Haddington of the same name and probably father of the Bailie John recorded in the following decades. John (14th C.) Bailie of Linlithgow mentioned in the Exchequer Rolls of 1364. He was probably related to other early Scotts with a Linlithgow connection. John (14th C.) Scottish merchant. In 1369/70 and 1370 he was among a group of merchants who complained to English authorities that 2 Flemish vessels loaded with their freight wrecked off Suffolk and although some of the sailors escaped and claimed the goods, they were plundered, in violation of the rules of the truce between the 2 countries. John (14th C.) Bailie of Haddington recorded in the Exchequer Rolls in the period 1379–99. He rendered the accounts of North in 1389–92. He was surely a descendant of the John from a few decades earlier. John (14th C.) custom’s officer in Inverness in the period 1365–69 according to the Exchequer Rolls. His ship was hired for building operations at St. Monands in 1366 and 1369. He was further recorded as a Burgess of Inverness during the reign of David II, giving a donation to the Lady Chapel. He was Bailie of Inverness according to the Exchequer Rolls of 1389. John of Headshaw (14th/15th C.) probably son of Walter of Synton (although there generations are very uncertain). He may have been father of Walter of Headshaw. It is possible he was brother of Robert of Stiches, as well as possibly James in Ashkirk. John (14th/15th C.) Prior of Fyvie in Aberdeenshire, recorded in 1395. John (14th/15th C.) monk of the monastery of Dunfermline. In 1415 he was granted a pension from the monastery for 3 years so that he could study at St. Andrews University. John (14th/15th C.) from somewhere in Glasgow Diocese. In 1423 he had a marriage contract with ‘Hawvis Turnbule’ and sought Papal permission to marry, despite being ‘related in the double third degree of consanguinity’. He is probably the same as one of the other Johns. John (15th C.) witnessed the charter passing the Barony of Hawick to William Douglas, 2nd of Drumlanrig in 1428/9. His designation is not given, so it is unclear how he was related to the other Scotts. It seems likely he was the Rector of Hawick Parish whose death ‘out with the Roman Court’ is recorded having happened before 1432. John (15th C.) recorded in 1456/7 as witness to the sasine for Ewesdale passing from Robert of Ewesdale to George Douglas, 4th Earl of Angus. He may have been from Ewesdale, along with Wat, Sim, John and Nichol, who are also listed. John (15th C.) served as the King’s Ranger in the 1440s and 50s, when his name occurs many times in the Exchequer Rolls. In 1440 he was given his fee for the previous 2 years, for the audit associated with Crown lands in Arran and Bute. He was granted the lease of the lands of ‘Barrone’ (probably on Bute) for his fee throughout the 1440s and his name occurs associated with audits in Glasgow in 1453 and 1454. He was recorded as a courier in the Exchequer Rolls through the 1450s and 60s (although he is listed as ‘quondam’ in 1455, suggesting he may have died and that there are thus 2 generations of John here). He was paid his fee relating to Bute and Arran in 1455 and 1462 and in 1468 relating to Ayr. Perhaps the same John is recorded as a servant of the Queen in 1458. His son Ewen also acted as Ranger until the early 1450s, but then his name disappears. He may be the same as one of the other Johns. John (d.bef. 1472) owner of the lands of Sturminster Marshall and Winborne Minster in Dorset. These lands were inherited by his cousin John, who then sold them. It is possible he was originally from Scotland. John (15th C.) cousin and heir of John of ‘Sturmyster-Marchall’ in Dorset. He was recorded in 1472 appointing men to deliver sasine to John Wyke of Byndon in Devon for the late John’s lands in Sturminster Marshall and Winborne Minster. John of Burnhead (15th C.) probably 2nd son of James of Kirkurd, who was a younger son of Sir Walter of Kirkurd and Bucleuch. He received a charter for the lands of Over Newhall from his father in 1492 (it has also been suggested that he could have been a younger son of Sir Walter, but that seems unlikely). ‘Over Newhall’ was later known as Burnhead; he was thus the 2nd Laird of Burnhead. He witnessed the charter in 1494 in which his father granted Galalaw and the Nether Mains of Newhall to his brother David; there he is stated to be his father James’ heir apparent. He is probably the John, son of James of Falside (as well as Kirkurd and Hassendean), who in 1501 had a lease of Falside along with his mother Margaret, on the renunciation of the lands by his father. Also in 1501 he acted as pledge for Robert of Stirkshaws. He was additionally designated ‘of Crowhill’ and may have had a son William, although these generations seem confused. John of Burnhead may have been his successor, although other accounts suggest he died without a male heir. John 4th Laird of Sython (15th C.) probably son of Walter, his mother being a Scott of Hassendean. He married a daughter of Quentin Riddell of that Ilk, but died without issue and was succeeded by his brother Walter. John (15th C.) arrested in 1452 as a rebel, with John Tweeddale being paid a fee for his capture. This is listed under business at Linlithgow in the Exchequer Rolls, but it is unclear to which branch of the Scotts he belonged. John (15th C.) owner of a ‘tenement’ on the south side of Hawick, described in Hawick’s earliest known sasine of 1453. His piece of land was to the west of the property passing from John Turnbull to Robert White. John (15th C.) Bailie of Montrose. He was recorded several times in the Exchequer Rolls of 1450s and 60s as customs officer in Montrose. Probably the same John was also recorded in association with the customs in Arbroath in 1445. John (15th C.) resident of Surrey, son of William. In 1459 there was a command from King Henry VI for him to get sasine of his father William’s lands, since he had proved his age. The document also says ‘respite his homage till Easter next, but taking his fealty’, perhaps suggesting that the family came from Scotland and settled in England. John (15th C.) named first on the 1463/4 list of local men rewarded by the King for the capture of John Douglas of Balveny. He was surely related to some of the other Scotts listed, e.g. Robert of Todshaw, who came after him. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John (15th C.) held a sasine for the lands of ‘Symontoun and Wester Lynmeris’ in Lanarkshire in 1466. He may have been the same as one of the other Johns. John (15th C.) rendered the accounts for Sir David, as Ranger of Ettrick Ward in 1473. He may have been a relative of Sir David. John (15th C.) witness in 1475/6 to a document relating to Kirkurd and David Scott of Buccleuch. He is listed as ‘Johanne Scot’ along with William; they may both have been closely related to the Scotts of Buccleuch. John (15th C.) recorder in 1476 making a supplication to the Pope to give him the benefices of Bothwell and Hawick that James Lindsay was proposing to resign. It seems that this did not come to pass. He is probably from a local branch of the Scotts. John (15th C.) held a sasine for Fingask and part of ‘Rate’ in Perthshire in 1476. It is unclear how he was related to other Johns. John (15th C.) customs officer in Inverkeithing in at least the period 1475–85. He also served as Bailie of Inverkeithing in 1482. He was surely related to David (perhaps his father), who served in the same role in Inverkeithing at about the same time. Either he or a later John was Bailie of Inverkeithing in 1511. Perhaps the same John was customs officer at Montrose in 1471. John (15th C.) recorded as tenant in ‘Ogingstoun’ in Bothwell in 1480. His name was listed first, with other Scotts there being William, junior, Katherine and Robert. They were surely all related. John (15th C.) appointed one of the procurators for Thomas Armstrong of Mangerton in 1482 when he resigned Mangerton to his superior in order for the lands to pass to David Scott of Braxholm. His name is recorded as ‘Johannem Scot’. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John (15th C.) recorded as witness to a sasine of 1483 given by William Douglas, Laird of Cavers, relating to lands in Hassendean. probably the same John is recorded in a ‘letter of reversion’ for the lands of Clarilaw in the Barony of Hassendean, which passed from the old Baron to the new Baron in 1493/4. It is possible he is the same as John of Burnhead or John of Thirlestane. John of Thirlestane (15th C.) recorded in a charter of 1483, when he gained the (western) half barony of Wilton from Henry Wardlaw. He may thus be the first Scott to hold the half barony, although it is unclear exactly who he was. He is also referred to as ‘of Huntlee, in the forest of Ettrick’. He may have been connected with the Howpasley and Tushielaw branch, since Alexander Scott (Clerk of the Rolls for Scotland) was one of the witnesses of the 1483 confirmation (however, it seems too early for him to be the John of Thirlestane, who was probably the grandson of Alexander of Howpasley). It also seems likely he was related to Robert of Muirhouse and Whames, who received the lands of Underchesters from Henry Wardlaw a year earlier. One possibility is that he was another son of the first Walter of Buccleuch, hence brother of David of Buccleuch, Alexander of Howpasley and James of Kirkurd and Hassendean. He was still Baron of Wilton in 1491, when he was asked by the King to receive Alexander, Lord Home as tenant in his lands of Harden. He had a confirming charter for the barony in 1494/5, and was there referred to as ‘Johannis Scot de Weltoun’ in Roxburgshire. He was probably not closely related to Stephen ‘of Weltoun’ (which were other lands, near the modern Cumbernauld) or Stephen’s son John ‘of Weltoun’. It is possible he is the same man as John of Deloraine, who is recorded holding lands in Wilton in 1493. By 1506 the half Barony of Wilton was held by the Earl of Bothwell, and so he must have lost the lands by then (or died) He may be the John who acted as Deputy Warden for Ettrick (for Walter Scott) in 1494/5. It is not known if he had any children and it is unclear who succeeded him as Laird of Thirlestane, but there was a William of Thirlestane mentioned in 1502, probably son of David of Tushielaw. John (15th/16th C.) Englishman who was imprisoned as a spy in Newgate under the name ‘John Mchlelessone’. In 1493/4 he was released on the King’s command after ‘taking security for his good carriage’. John (15th/16th C.) record becoming a Burgess of Edinburgh in the period 1494–99. John (d.bef. 1502) notary in 1484/5 for the charter in which Sir David of Branxholme gave Whitchesters to his son Robert (of Allanhaugh). Since all the signatories are relatively local he was probably a local cleric. However, this is likely to have been too early for him to be the notary John who is recorded in the period 1527 to 1540. Probably the same ‘Magistro Johanne Scote’ was Rector of Rankleburn in 1491/2 when he witnessed the last will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme (and was bequeathed 40 Jonlings). He was probably related to Sir David, as well as to the primary witness, William, Rector of Southdean. In 1502/3 he was the deceased ‘Magistri Johanni Scoti rectoris de Rankilburne’ when his heirs Helen (his sister), Janet Scott and John ‘Haw’ had sasine for his tenement in the Vennel of Kirk of Field in Edinburgh. John (15th C.) recorded among debtors in the last will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme. He owed 15 nobles and is listed as ‘Johannes Scote eius filius’, suggesting that he was a son of Sir David. He is probably the same as one of the other contemporary Johns, e.g. John of Thirlestane and Wilton. John (15th C.) listed as ‘Johanni Scote, pincerne’ (i.e. cup-bearer or butler) in 1491/2 when he was bequeathed 10 sheep in the will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme. John of Todshawhaugh (15th C.) leased the east steading of Langhope in the period 1486–1492. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. John (15th C.) recorded in 1493 as surety for John of Whithaugh, who was fined for his non-appearance. He was ‘in braidlee’, which may have been Broadlee in Ashkirk Parish. He was fined again in 1494/5, along with John, son of Alexander in Broadlee. John (15th C.) brother of William ‘Gyde’. He is recorded in 1493 at the Justice- aire in Jedburgh when Walter of Howpasley was allowed toCompound for bringing in him and his brother, as well as other ‘traitors of Levin’, to raid the farm of Harehead. John (15th C.) recorded in the Justice- aire of 1493 as son of Alexander in Broadlee. He was recorded right after John in Broadlee, and hence may have been a different man. He was surety for himself and fined for non-appearance. He was fined for a second time in 1494/5. John of Deloraine (15th C.) recorded in 1493 when he was fined for non-appearance at the Justice- aire in Jedburgh, being called because of his lands in ‘wiltoun’. It is unclear what lands in Wilton these were (but it is not impossible that he held the half Barony and was hence the same man as John of Thirlestane). He could be the John who obtained remission along with William Inglis at the Justice-aire in Selkirk in 1494/5, recorded in the King’s Treasurer’s accounts. He was also recorded in 1494/5 when he had remission for several crimes, this included resetting ‘John Rede and John Scot-Stow in Tuschelaw’, resetting Hector Armstrong, stealing horses and goods, abetting the English, comming with Robert, Philip and Andrew Scott when they were at the horn, helping John son of Andrew Turnbull of Dryden to steal sheep from the Murrays in Sundhope, killing a man called ‘Colthride’ and resetting thieves of Liddesdale, Eskdale and Ewesdale. Robert of Whitchesters was surety for him. Also in 1494/5 his eldest son Robert was surety for John Reid in Single; perhaps the same Robert of Deloraine was allowed to ‘compone’ for crimes in 1494/5. His son Robert, called ‘Bellit Robin’ was recorded in 1502. He was probably also related to the Scotts of Buccleuch, but the connections of this branch of the family are unknown. John (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 as ‘John Scott-Stow in Tuschelaw’, meant, or how he might have been related to other Scotts of Tushielaw. Along with ‘John Rede’, John of Deloraine had remission for resetting him; his crimes included stealing sheep from ‘Thomas Johnsone, furth of Quhithop’. He was also listed as ‘Johannes scot- stow in tuschelaw’ when he was allowed to ‘compone’ for the crimes of: stealing 26 sheep and a horse from William Wood in Williamshope; stealing 16 sheep from James Scott in Falside; stealing a horse from Broadmeadows; stealing 3 oxen... and 60 sheep from William Ker in Yair; for common theft and delivery of stolen goods before his previous compounding; and for stealing 4 head of cattle and 20 sheep from the tenants of Yair. His surety was John Murray of Hangingshaw. He was presumably tenant in Tushielaw, but it is unclear what the ‘stow’ John (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 as ‘gener’ (i.e. son-in-law) to William Little in Thornycleuch. He was found to be in infirm at the Justice-aire held in Selkirk, but fined £10.

John (15th C.) son of Henry in ‘conwale riggis’. He was recorded in 1494/5 when he was surety for himself and was fined for non-appearance in Selkirk. John (15th C.) tenant in ‘emneuch’ (i.e. Erncleuch) in 1494/5. He was allowed to ‘compone’ at the Justice-aire held in Selkirk, his crimes including: stealing 2 cows from Harthern; bringing in thieves ‘de leyvn’ to raid Thomas Middlemas in Ploro; the slaughter of Middlemas’ wife and 2 sons; stealing a black horse from Jedburgh; stealing 16 sheep; stealing 5 head of cattle at different times from Harthern, as well as goods; and for common theft before the date of his previous compounding. His sureties were Robert of Allanhaugh and Adam in Annelshope. He may also be the John who was allowed to ‘compone’ along with Adam in Annelshope in 1494/5, for a set of rieving crimes. He is recorded in 1494/5 having received remission from the King. John ‘Little’ (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 as ‘parvo Johanne scot’. He had sheep stolen from him at Howford by David Lauder and others, for which Lauder was allowed to ‘compone’. It is unclear if he was related to later Scotts of Howford. John (15th C.) son of William, lord of the manor of Stapleford Tawney in Essex. In 1485, along with his father, he was named in an indenture regarding their lands. His name was written ‘Scotte’ and he was ‘senior’, suggesting that he had a son who was also John. John (15th/16th C.) husband of Margaret and father of Alexander. He was already deceased in 1499 when his widow and son were granted the East stead of Langhope and in 1501 when they were granted the Middle stead. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘in Northhous’ in the Register of the Privy Seal of 1498 when he and John Turnbull (from Dryden) received a pardon for their crimes of assisting the English ‘of Levin’ (presumably relating to a particular raid). He is ‘Johanne Scot de Northous’ in 1500 when he witnessed a sasine for Scott of Branxholme. In 1501 he was pledge for David Elphinstone when he was assigned the farm of Glensax in Ettrick (he may thus be the John who had 7 stirks stolen from Glensax by Sir Thomas Turnbull in Phaup according to the Justice-aire of 1494/5). In 1502 he was surety for Roland Renwick, who was accused of stealing sheep from Ettrickhouse. He may be the same John in ‘Northhous’ who had 20 oxen and cows stolen from him by John Dalgleish and others in about 1510, which, together with other crimes, led to Dalgleish’s execution.

John (15th/16th C.) one of two men of the same name recorded in a document relating to Uddingston, in the Glasgow chartulary, listed as ‘Johannem Scot’. 2 Roberts are also listed, as well as the widow of another John. They were all residents of Uddingston, and were presumably related. John (15th/16th C.) described in the Register of the Privy Seal of 1499/1500 as ‘in Wiltoun’ when he received remission for helping the rebels ‘of Levin’ in murder, pillage etc. John of Whitehaugh (15th/16th C.) recorded in the 1493 Justice-aire in Jedburgh when he was fined for the non-appearance of John in Broadlee. His name is recorded as ‘Johannis scot de quhithalch’. Perhaps the same man is listed in the Exchequer Rolls of 1501 among mostly local men who had been fined; he appears there as ‘Johannis Scot in Quhithauch’. In 1502 he was ‘in quhithalch’ when he had remission for stealing 23 sheep and a horse from Adam Scott out of Kershope, and separately for stealing cattle from John Romanno of Romanno, with Robert in Synton as his surety. He was probably related to the slightly earlier Walter of Whitehaugh, as well as later Scotts of Whitehaugh. John (15th/16th C.) resident of Hermiston recorded in 1502 at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. He had remission for stealing 40 sheep from Philiphaugh, with his surety being Robert in Synton. John (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 when Hector Lauder in Clerklands had remission for stealing livestock and goods from him out of Whitslade, in the company of a gang of Armstrongs. It is possible he is the same man who also tenanted Hoddom House at the same time (where the same people also raided). It is unclear how he might have been related to the Scotts of Whitslade. John (15th/16th C.) notary recorded in a sasine in Edinburgh in 1502. John (15th/16th C.) recorded in the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1502. Hector Lauder in Clerklands had remission for several crimes, including stealing 40 cows from him out of ‘hodum hous’ (possibly Hoddom House), in the company of the Armstrongs. John (15th/16th C.) resident of Spittal. In 1502, along with Thomas in Branxholme, he was convicted for the felony done to Thomas Story, when they came across him in Spittal. He was fined, while Thomas was allowed to compound. John (15th/16th C.) tenant in Hassendean, recorded at the Justice- aire in Selkirk in 1502. He had remission for the theft of 5 cows and an ox from James Arrous at Philiphaugh, with Robert Scott of Stirches serving as his surety. He may thus have been connected with either the Scotts of Hassendean or Stirches. At the same court sitting in 1502 he acted as surety for William, son of James of Broadmeadows, as well as Walter in Broadmeadows. John (15th/16th C.) stabler who became a Burgess of Edinburgh in 1517. Another stabler of the same name who became a Burgess in 1580 may have been a descendant. John (15th/16th C.) recorded in the Exchequer Rolls as Bailie of Irvine and custom's officer there in the period 1508–13. Perhaps the same John was Bailie of Irvine recorded in 1538 and 1546. He was probably related to Robert, who was also in Irvine around 1540. He may have been ancestor of Hugh of Scotsloch. John of Haining (d.1513) son of Robert of Haining. He was recorded as son of Robert of Haining in 1482, with his son Robert mentioned in 1488. In 1494/5 he was recorded as son of Robert when he had some of his sheep stolen from Haining. In about 1499 he had the lease of the Crown lands of Haining (along with his son John) with the permission of John Murray of Falahill. In 1502 Walter, son of Walter of Headshaw had remission for stealing a heifer from him. In 1507 he had a charter for the lands of Haining. He was surety for Thomas, brother of Philip of Headshaw in 1510, when Thomas was convicted of being part of the killing of John Murray of Falahill. He was killed at Flodden and his son Robert was served heir in 1514. He had another son, Walter, who served as ‘tutor’ for his nephew Thomas during his minority. It seems that he also had another son, John, who leased Haining along with him in about 1499. John of Borthwick (15th/16th C.) possibly father of John ‘the faster’, as well as another son, who was father of Walter of Whitehaugh. He was surely related to the Scotts of Buccleuch, and may have been the same as one of the other contemporary Johns, e.g. John of Roberton. John (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘in Orchart’ (i.e. Orchard) when he witnessed a document for the Routledges of Crook in 1529/30. His son was also John. He was surely related to other contemporary Scotts, but the precise relationship is unknown. John of Borthaugh (15th/16th C.) eldest son of George of Borthaugh, by his first wife (who was his cousin). In 1526 he is recorded (as ‘of Burnthauch’) in a protest by Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig, who was superior over some of his lands. Also in 1526 he is probably the John ‘in Borthauch’ listed among the Borders men given remission for their earlier attack on the Earl of Arran; the brothers Walter, Philip and George are listed after him. In 1526/7 he had a charter ratified for the lands of Muirhouse in Edinburghshire. In 1527 he is among the local lairds, led by Walter of Branxholme, who had remission for their part in the Battle of Skirmish Field. He is recorded in the Register of the Privy Seal for 1527. There was dispute over succession to the lands of Borthaugh, Commonside and Dryden and ‘the Wallis in Drynisdaile’ (probably Dryfesdale near Lockerbie), because his father had sworn on his deathbed that his 1st marriage had not been fully legal and hence inheritance should go to the eldest son of his 2nd marriage, Walter. A set of arbitrators (all Scotts) in 1528 found that he should inherit, since he had never been declared illegitimate, but that ‘Quhomnis’ and ‘Woltoun Greyne’ should go to his brother. He is recorded in a ‘discharge’ of 1528/9 relating to lands of several local Scotts, e.g. he is there recorded as holding ‘lands of Drivisdall and 40s, land in Woltoun’ (probably Dryfesdale near Lockerbie and some lands in Wilton): it is therefore possible that he is the same man as John in Walls. In 1530 he was listed among the Lairds who submitted themselves to the King’s will in order to better keep order on the Border. He sold the lands of Borthaugh to Roger Langlands of that Ilk sometime before 1531. This may have been to settle debts with Lawson of Highriggs in Edinburgh. John (15th/16th C.) recorded in ‘Myrris or Vest Manes’ in Lilliesleaf in 1528, as preserved in the ‘Selkirk Protocol Books’. He received payment from John in Bewlie for 3 pieces of land in the east half of the Mains of Lilliesleaf. In 1531 John ‘of Myrris’ assigned his lands of Myres in Lilliesleaf to his cousin Walter, tutor of Haining, which he rented from the Archbishop of Glasgow. This was further confirmed in 1531/2. John (15th/16th C.) recorded in Bewlie in 1528 when he paid John in the West Mains of Lilliesleaf for 3 pieces of land in the east half of the West Mains. John (d.bef. 1532) from the Selkirk area. In 1532/3 his widow Elizabeth Chapman abdicated herself from debts and other responsibilities connected with him. This was done in the house of John Chapman, who may have been related.
John of Roberton and Walls (d.bef. 1533) probably son of Stephen of ‘Weltoun’, who was also of Muirhouse and of Castlelaw (or Castlecary). He was probably also closely related to John of Thirlestane who held the half-barony of Wilton from 1483 until at least 1491. He is recorded as ‘Johannes Scot in Wallis’ in the Exchequer Rolls of 1501; most of the other 15 men listed along with him were from the area immediately around Hawick. Around 1501 he had disposed of ‘Welton’ (probably the name of lands near Cumbernauld associated with Castlecary and not the western half-barony of Wilton), and was now ‘of Valis’ (probably ‘Walls’ or ‘St. Michael’s Walls’ in Dryfesdale, north of Lockerbie and not the more local ‘Woll’ or ‘Wells’; however, it is not impossible that the earlier designation gave its name to the lands of Woll later). In 1502 he is recorded as being of ‘Valis’ when he acted as surety for Walter Scott of Headshaw, ‘in Walis’ when he was surety for Hector Lauder in Clerklands and ‘de Walis’ when he was surety for Adam Turnbull in Galashields and for Walter, son of Walter of Headshaw. Also in 1502 he was ‘in le walis’ when he had remission for stealing a horse from Adam Murray at Muselee and 3 horses from Lord Cranston at Kirkhope; his sureties were Robert in Synton and Walter of Headshaw. Additionally in 1502 he served as surety for Hector Lauder in Clerklands and was recorded being in ‘Valis’ when Alexander, brother of Walter of Howpasley, had remission for stealing a horse from him. In 1502 he acquired the lands of Roberton (which had belonged to a branch of the Scotts more than a century earlier). He is probably the ‘Dominus de Robertoun’ recorded in the Justice-aire held in Selkirk 1502, when he was fined for failing to give suit for his lands of Roberton. He also held a sasine for the lands of Howcleuch in 1520. In 1526 he is recorded in Ashkirk in 1502 and Walter there in 1533. John of Hassendean (d.c.1530) brother of David of Hassendean, from whom he succeeded. He is recorded in 1528/9 for ‘non-entry’ of his lands at Galalaw. He married Agnes Scott and died without a son. His heir was his brother’s son (some accounts say his brother) William of Hassendean, who received the lands of Falside in Selkirkshire in 1539. It is possible he is the John in Hassendean who was surety in 1502 for James in Ashkirk. John (15th/16th C.) recorded being ‘in Aikwood’ in 1530. He who part of a list of men from the Selkirk area who acknowledged that they had taken prisoners, horses, meal and other goods from men they thought were traitors of Annandale, but understanding they were legitimate travellers from Moffat had returned everything; Thomas, ‘younger there’, is also mentioned. He may also be the John in ‘Aikvood called Dustyba’ listed along with William in Hartwoodburn and others in 1544 when John Dunlop accused them of stealing his butter. It is unclear how he might have been related to Michael of Aikwood. John (16th C.) local clergyman. It is possible there was more than one man of this name, but it seems reasonable to assume that the notary of the 1520s was the same as the Vicar of Hawick Kirk in the 1530s and 40s. He was notary in 1527 to the agreement ending the feud between Sir Walter Brauxholme and James Murray of Falahill; he is recorded there as ‘Schir Johne Scot, notar public’. He was ‘Sir John’ when he served as notary for a document of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme (witnessed at Branxholme) relating to the Barony of Kirkurd in 1527. And he was notary for the document giving the decision on the disputed succession to Borthaugh in 1528. In 1528/9 he was ‘Sir John’ when acting as notary for the discharge by Patrick, Earl of Bothwell to Walter Scott of Branxholme. He is surely the ‘Schir John Scot, vicar of Hawik’ who witnessed an agreement between James Murray of Falahill and Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1528. In 1530 he was Vicar of Hawick when he was recorded as a procator for several men in Selkirk for an action brought against Patrick Murray, Sheriff of Selkirk; he also brought an action in Selkirk ‘in name of his brothers and others’ against Alexander Tait ‘lord of Pirne’. In 1530/1 he was ‘vicar of Hawick’ when he witnessed the marriage contract between Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Janet Kerr. Perhaps the same ‘Sir John’ was in 1530/1 witness to Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme being granted the hereditary office of Bailie of Melrose Abbey. He was ‘vicar of Hawyk’ in 1534 when he was a witness at Hassendean Kirk for the sealing of a letter of reversion when Gavin Elliot sold the lands of Nether Galalaw to William Scott. Also recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books for 1534, he relieved Thomas Johnstone as Vicar of Bransholm. In 1531 he delivered a royal decree relating to the Barony of Chamberlain Newton) in 1606, thus establishing a connection between him and the Scotts of Catslack. Perhaps the same ‘Sir John Scot, notar public’ drew up the bond of 1548 when the Elliots entered Robert Crozier as a prisoner with the Laird of Ferniehirst. In 1538 there is a ‘Preceptum Legitimationis’ for James, natural son of John Scott, Vicar of Hawick; thus he had at least one son. The fact that he witnessed or notarised several documents for the Scotts of Branxholme suggests that he may have been related to the Laird in some way. John (d.bef. 1537) member of the Knights Templar. He was recorded in 1537 when there was a dispute between English and French branches over his estate. John (16th C.) recorded being ‘in Hawik’ in the Selkirk Protocol Books for 1534, when he relieved Thomas Johnstone from all promises made to him. The witnesses included another John (probably the Vicar), as well as Thomas (perhaps a relative). Vicar James Young, William Brydon, John Hall and Robert Chapman. Specifically, he agreed to pay a dowry to Thomas Johnstone in a marriage contract with his daughter Janet. It seems clear he was not the same man as the Vicar of Hawick of the same name, since the Vicar (along with Bailie Thomas) represented him in witnessing the contract in the chamber of William Brydon in Selkirk. He also agreed to vest the couple in his house in Hawick after a year, while his daughter Janet received ‘in conjunct fee’ Johnstone’s tene-ment in Selkirk. He is probably one of the Johns who held particates of land on the south side of the main street in the 1537 Charter. John (16th C.) recorded as ‘serjeant and sheriff in that part’ in Selkirk. In 1531 he delivered a royal decree releasing Adam Scott of Synton from being at the horn. Probably the same John was ‘interlocutor’ in Selkirk for Robert Turnbull in 1526/7 and the John who witnessed other documents in Selkirk around this time. John (16th C.) recorded being ‘in Haining’ in about 1534. He had previously granted half a tement in East Haining to another John. He may be related to William, who was in Haining in 1535. He may be the John whose heir Janet is recorded holding lands in East Haining in 1543. John (16th C.) recorded as a Burgess of Selkirk in 1532/3 when he gave sasine of a quarter of East Haining to his son Walter, reserving a redemption to his wife Margaret Scott. This was half of the quarter of East Haining, namely the 20 shillingland that he had in redemption from Robert Todrig, with Bailie James acting as the ‘ballie in that part’ (and possibly a relative). He was also recorded as a Burgess ‘in Peilgait’ in about 1534 when he had half a tenement of ‘Le Est Hanying’ in heritable fee from John in Haining and gave sasine of it to his wife Margaret Scott (for her lifetime). Bailie James of Selkirk was a witness to the second transaction and possibly a relative. John of Borthwick (16th C.) celebrated faster, part of a local branch of the Scotts. He was possibly son of John of Borthwick and descended from the Scotts of Buccleuch. Scott of Satchells says he was ‘cousin-german’ to Walter of Whitehaugh. He came to notoriety about 1531 and was written about by Archbishop Spottiswood. He is supposed to have been unable to pay the costs following a legal case and sought sanctuary near Holyrood, where he abstained from food and drink for 40 or 50 days. This drew the attention of the King, who shut him up in a room for some of this period (however, it may be that the period was more like 32 days). He claimed he received sustenance from the Virgin Mary and when done ‘came into thee street, half naked, and made a speech to the people which did flock aboute hum’. He then went to Rome with a certificate from the King, was examined there by the Pope, and given a priests habit and certificate that he had lived ‘sine cibo et potu per centum et sex dies’. In 1532 his fasting abilities were tested by Signor Albergati of Bononia, who locked him in a room of his house for 11 days. After that he travelled to Jerusalem, apparently stocking up on palm leaves and stones from the pillar on which Christ was scourged before returning to England. There he cursed the behaviour of King Henry VIII, was arrested, and spent 50 days in prison, again apparently without food. He was sent packing to Scotland, and the last mention of him is in 1541 when 22 shillings were paid to ‘John Scott, callit the Sanct, at the King’s command’ – ‘To John of Borthwick, who fasted so long, Three sundry times he did perform’ [CWS], ‘Bare-bread and water the king allowed for his meat, But John Scott refused, and would not eat; When the forty days were come and gone, He was a great deal luster than when he began’ [CWS]. John (16th C.) recorded in Todrig in 1533. Along with William in Todrig and others, he witnessed a document in Selkirk. John (16th C.) son of John. He and his father were described as being ‘elder and younger’ tenants of Orchard when they witnessed a 1529/30 instrument of resignation for the Routledges of the nearby lands of Crook. John (16th C.) owner of 2 participates of land on the south side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. He could be the same as one of the other contemporary Johns (but not ‘Sir’ John the priest, who is listed separately). Another John was also listed as holding 2½ participates on the same side of the street. A piece of land lying between one of these John’s lands and that of John Short to the west was reserved for Sir James Douglas according to the 1537 Charter. John (16th C.) recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books in 1540/1 when it was agreed by a list of men that he was responsible for the death of Walter Down. Attonement had 5 parts: come to the kirk without armour, presenting his sword to the family of Down and ask for forgiveness; go to the 4 main pilgrimage sites in Scotland; pay a priest to pray for the deceased for a year; and pay 20 merks to the family on the next 4 quarter days; and bind himself to act faithfully in future towards Down’s family. It is unclear to which branch of the Scotts he belonged, but among his supporters were: his brother William; Michael Scott of Aikwood and his sons William, Robert and Walter; Gilbert; and Thomas. John (16th C.) youngest son of George of Blindhaugh and Margaret Turnbull. In 1544 his father assigned him the lands of Castleisde. It is unclear if he was the same as another John, e.g. John of Blindhaugh who died in about 1580. John (d.bef. 1545) recorded in Selkirk in 1545 when his heir Thomas was in possession of his tenement. John (16th C.) resident of Whames, recorded in 1549 when tenants and servants of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme complained about their farms being burned by a group of Englishmen and Kers in the previous year. He may be related to William, who was tenant of Whames at that time. Probably the same John in ‘Quhomes’ is mentioned in 1580 when his son William witnessed a transaction in Selkirk between John Scott in Whithope and Robert Scott of Haining. John of Robertson (d.c.1566) probably son of Stephen ‘in Valis’, who purchased Robertson and Howcleuch from his brother Walter of Robertson in 1535. In the 1540s he acted as surety for James White, tenant of Borthwickshiels. He is recorded as deceased in 1566 when the rights to his son and heir John’s ward and marriage fees were given to Robert Scott. He was probably father of the later John of Robertson. \textit{John ‘the Clerk’} (d.1564) recorded in 1562 along with his brother Robert ‘of Collefur’d’ and Hob ‘Wait Aboot Um’. The 3 men were excepted from the bond between the Scotts and the Kers, and were instead to be pursued for their crimes. He was convicted for sheep-stealing and related crimes and hanged, along with Hob ‘callit of Colyfurd’, Mark Elliot ‘callit of the Hill’ and John Henderson ‘the Falsier’. It is unclear where exactly he came from, but perhaps the Slitrig valley. \textit{John} of Synton (d.bef. 1557) probably son of Walter 9th Laird of Synton (although these generations are very confused), whom he predeceased. His mother was probably Walter’s first wife, who was a daughter of Cockburn of Ormiston. In 1530/1 he was recorded as son and heir of Walter of Synton when he was entered in ward at Borthwick Castle, along with William, son of Robert in Allanhaugh. Sureties for them were Robert, Lord Maxwell and John Johnstone of that Ilk. His sons were probably: Walter of Synton, who succeeded his grandfather Walter; George of Synton, who succeeded his older brother; William, tenant in Langhope, ancestor of the Scotts of Huntly; James, tenant in Dodbank as well as in Whitslade, ancestor of the Scotts of Satchells; and Robert of Shielswood. 4 of them were mentioned as present in the attack by the Scotts on the church of Shielswood. 4 of them were mentioned as present in the attack by the Scotts on the church of Shielswood. 4 of them were mentioned as present in the attack by the Scotts on the church of Shielswood. 4 of them were mentioned as present in the attack by the Scotts on the church of Shielswood. 4 of them were mentioned as present in the attack by the Scotts on the church of Shielswood. 4 of them were mentioned as present in the attack by the Scotts on the church of Shielswood. 4 of them were mentioned as present in the attack by the Scotts on the church of Shielswood. 4 of them were mentioned as present in the attack by the Scotts on the church of Shielswood. 4 of them were mentioned as present in the attack by the Scotts on the church of Shielswood.

Scott of Branxholme’s agent John Watson. Perhaps the same John of ‘Dringistoun’ was recorded in 1581 when he witnessed an arrangement where Katherine Scott, widow of Robert of Colifort, resigned her lands of Hundleshope to her son Thomas; his son James was also a witness. He may also be the John ‘in Drinkston’ who was listed by Scott of Satchells as being among the 24 ‘Pensioners’ of Buccleuch and descended from the Scotts of Robertson. And he is probably the John ‘in Dringstone’ who signed the Scott clan bond in 1589. \textit{Sir John} of Thirlestane (d.1549) probably son of David of Tushielaw, grandson of Sir Alexander of Howpasley and brother of Adam of Tushielaw, ‘King of Thieves’. Along with Robert of Howpasley he entered a ‘bond of manrent’ with Malcolm, Lord Fleming (Chamberlain of Scotland) in 1535. He is probably the John ‘in Thirlestane’ who in 1535 was said to be involved with contracts for Melrose Abbey made with Mark Ker in Kippielaw. In 1539 he paid the ‘ferris’ to the King’s Chamberlain for a thir of Cacrabank in the name of his mother, who was a Gledstanes. In 1540 he paid Simon Glendinning of Megdale and Dalgleish as tenant of his lands of Dalgleish (then in the Barony of Synton through annexation). In 1541 he is recorded as tenant in Gilmancleuch and is probably the John ‘in Thirlestane’ who occupied Altrieve and Crosscleuch. Also in 1541 he witnessed a document in Selkirk for Patrick Murray of Falahill. Additionally in 1541 he witnessed an infeftment of lands to William, son of Robert of Allanhaugh, as part of the marriage contract with his daughter Margaret. He was said to be the only Baron to declare his support for James V at Fala Moor in 1542, coming ‘into the King’s host at Souray Edge with three score and ten lancers on horseback of his friends and followers’. As a result the family were given arms with the royal fleur-de-lis and motto ‘Ready, aye ready’ (however, the veracity of this story is challenged in some accounts, and the relevant warrant is considered by some to be a forgery). He is probably the John ‘in Thirlestane’ who along with his son Robert witnessed a bond signed in Hawick in 1543, between Nichol Graham and Sir John Johnstone of that Ilk. In 1549 the Commendator of Melrose granted a discharge of all duties etc. on his lands of ‘thirlestane, ramseclewis, scadcleuch, craig and kirkhop’ now that he was deceased. Satchells (probably his great-grandson) says he married a daughter of Scott of Allanhaugh (possibly Robert, who owned land in Hawick and lived about the right time). His children included: Robert, who succeeded; Philip of Kirkhope, who was 1st husband of the youngest daughter of Walter Scott of Synton and Whitslade; Andrew, who died without issue; Simon of Newburgh; William, who witnessed a contract for the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1567; and Margaret, who married William, son of Robert of Allanhaugh. He secondly married Marion Douglas and had another son, James, of Gilmascleuch. John (16th C.) tenant in Strathmiglo in Perthshire. He acted as surety in a land transfer in Abernethy Parish in 1552. John (16th C.) tenant in ‘Balharam’ in Perthshire. He witnessed a land transfer in Abernethy Parish in 1554. John (d.c.1574) tenant in Mertoun whose will was registered in Edinburgh in 1574. His lands were presumably those in Berwickshire. John (16th C.) son of Robert of Wamphray, Rysholm and Bonnington and younger brother of Adam of Bonnington. He was described being ‘of Waikfield’ (Probably Wakefield in Peeblesshire). There appears to have been a separate John, who was a natural son of Robert, recorded in 1594. In 1563 he infested his brother Adam in the lands of Waikfield in return for the Kirkstead and Kirkland of St. Mary, Kirk of the Lowes. John (16th C.) recorded as ‘Bailzie’ as witness to a sasine of 1558. The purchaser of the land in the sasine was James Scott, alias ‘Bailzie’. Perhaps the same John was Bailie in 1579 when David, brother of Walter in Chamberlain Newton, purchased a tenement in Hawick. John (16th C.) recorded as ‘Johne’ along with Simon in about 1557. They were sons of the ‘guidman of Alanehaugh’, who was probably either William or Robert (or possibly Adam), when they rented Stobicote from Melrose Abbey. John (16th C.) son and heir of William in Hartwoodmyres. In 1562 his father assigned to him his steading in Gamescleuch ‘callit Eittriksyde’, with the condition that he follow the agreements already made with Simon in Thirlstane. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Johns. John (16th C.) tenant in Catslack. In 1563 he was involved in a dispute over land with William Elliot, 5th Laird of Horsleyhill. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts associated with Catslack. John (17th C.) recorded in 1564 when the will of his wife Margaret Nasmyth was registered in Edinburgh. John ‘Jock’ (16th C.) one of the tenants of Sir Walter Scott of Howpsley in the lands of Outersiderig in 1560. Sir Walter acted as cautioner for them in Hawick, that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. John ‘the Braid’ (16th C.) recorded in 1569 along with Airchie of the Bush and Tom of Blackhall, as those men for whom Tom ‘callit the Stowir’ was held as pledge in Ravensheugh Castle. He was thus one of the Scotts of Ewesdale at that time. John (d.bef. 1578) Burgess of Edinburgh. He was already deceased in 1578/9 when his eldest son Alexander became a merchant Burgess in Edinburgh. John (16th C.) recorded being ‘of Elestoun’ in a transaction in Selkirk in 1579. He gave his annual-rent of a boll of beir to pay off a debt. This place may be Ulston near Jedburgh. Later in 1579 Walter of Goldielands entered Robert of Haining into these same lands, with Scott of Haining promising these half lands of ‘Ilistoun’ to Janet, daughter of Sir Walter of Branxholme as part of a marriage contract; he is then described as ‘now in Darnik’. He is therefore presumably the same man as John, tenant in Darnick, who is recorded in a land transaction in Selkirk in 1579, witnessed other transactions in Selkirk around the same time and in 1580 was involved with several deals for lands in Darnick, some involving the superior of the lands, Andrew Ker of Faldonside. These lands included part of ‘ryndaill’ and Broadmeadows. He may be the ‘Master John’ in Darnick who witnessed a transaction for lands in Darnick in 1579/80 and another in 1580. It was further recorded in 1580 that he was owed money by a Burgess of Selkirk and was wadset a rig of land, and had further rigs of land resigned to him in 1580/1. In 1581 he was ‘Mr. John Scot in Darnick’ when, along with his wife Euphemia McDowell, gave sasine of lands in ‘ryndaill’, Broadmeadows and Darnick to William Young, who had loaned him money. Also in 1581 he sold some land lying in Philiphaugh, resigned 2 rigs in Selkirk, sold 2 acres in Darnick and paid the redemption money for an annual rent. John of Blindhaugh (d.bef. 1580) recorded being deceased in 1580 when his widow Isabella Turnbull leased her lands of ‘Wollhaucht’ to Walter, brother of George of Synton. Also in 1580 David Fairlie agreed to act as cautioner for William Scott in Huntly, who was to pay £9 3s 4d to each of his children, Margaret, Elizabeth, Isabel and John, as well as £38 13s 4d to his son Walter for his ‘heirship horse’ and ‘two heirship oxen’. In 1580/1 his widow Isabella Turnbull and William Allan assigned their lands in Blindhaugh to Thomas Shortreed in Whitehillbrae; his brother Walter was one of the witnesses. In 1581 his widow resigned her lifierent of 2 husbandlands in Blindhaugh (occupied by Thomas Shortreed and James Vogan) to their son and heir Walter. She was instead granted the lifierent of CASTLESIDE, while their daughter Marion (or Marie) would be taken into the household of William in Huntly (suggesting that he was related). This arrangement was made at Palace and witnessed by Walter of Stirches, Walter of Ashkirk, William in Burnfoot, John in Aikwood, William in Haining and William Middlemas in Lilliesleaf. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts of Blindhaugh. John of Dryhope (16th C.) 2nd Laird, succeeding Simon. He witnessed a transaction in Selkirk in 1579/80 and also served as an arbitrator on behalf of Thomas Dalgleish of Deuchar and Simon Scott of Gamescleuch in a case against Robert of Burnfoot and Robert of Burnhead. In 1580 he was one of 2 judges appointed to decide on George of Synton's claim on lands in 'Ilistoun'. He was listed among many Scotts and their allies in a 1581 summons to appear before the Privy Council regarding the feud with the Elliots and Armstrongs. He was among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. He was father of Mary 'the Flower of Yarrow'. He signed the marriage contract for his daughter with Walter Scott of Harden in 1576/7 (despite the fact that Sir Walter Scott of Abbotsford said that her father was Philip, and many others followed this version of history). He may also have had a daughter Christian, who married James Tweedie of Fruid. The testament of his wife Margaret Scott was registered in Edinburgh in 1581/2. He is listed in 1586 among leaders in upper Teviotdale in a document by King James VI instructing his Lieutenant on the Border. He signed the clan bond in 1589. It is unclear how he was related to the 1st Laird, Simon. He was probably father of the next Laird, Philip, as well as Philip's brothers: Simon of Montbenger; Andrew; Adam; and Walter. John (d.bef. 1591) tenant in Little Dunkeld. He is recorded in 1592 when the will of his wife Janet McClelland was registered in Edinburgh. John (16th C.) tenant in 'Deinshouses', Peebleshire. He is recorded in 1596 when the will of his wife Christian Brydon was registered in Edinburgh. John (16th C.) recorded in Aikwood in 1579/80 when he witnessed a transaction involving land in Lilliesleaf and another in Selkirk. In 1580 he witnessed a transaction for Robert of Haining and another involving a dispute over sheep at the Carterhaugh and another agreement involving the Scotts of Blindhaugh and Huntly. Also in 1580 he received £182 13s 4d Scots from Robert of Haining in redemption for the lands of Haining Rig and 'Louchtknow'. John 'Easter' was one of the witnesses. In 1580/1 he paid Walter Scott of Ashkirk to have the 'knaifschip and bannock' of Ashkirk Mill for 5 years. This meant he had the right to appoint the millers there. The agreement also assigned to him the 'teind sheaves' from the lands he occupied called 'baik thyne'. He may be the same as one of the other Scotts. In 1581 his wife was listed in Selkirk among people who owed money to Thomas Cruickshank. Also in 1581 he witnessed an agreement involving the liferent of Blindhaugh and Castleside with the Scotts in Blindhaugh. He witnessed a further transaction in Selkirk in 1581, involving the tenants of Robert of Aikwood and others. In 1581/2 he witnessed a marriage contract between George Brig in Langnewton and John Melrose. John of Burnhead (d.1582) probably son of John and great-grandson of Sir Walter of Kirkurd and Buccleuch. He granted a charter to John Scott, Vicar of Hawick, for Easter and Wester Moormaw (later called 'Lees', near Appletreehall) in 1535 and 1539. He also granted a precept of legitimation to John's son James (suggesting they were related perhaps). John, the Vicar, resigned his lands of Easter Moormaw in 1544, and he further granted a precept of sasine to John's son James in 1556. He is said to have lived to an advanced age. He was probably succeeded by his son Robert. He could be the John 'in Bynhous' whose will was registered in Edinburgh in 1582. John 'Johnnie', 'Philip's Jock' (16th C.) resident of Hawick who was named in a court case at Leith in 1571, along with Allan Deans, George Maxwell and Robert Scott. This was in connection with the on-going efforts of the Warden and the people of Jedburgh to quell the activities of the Kerrs of Ferniehirst. His name is recorded there as 'Philpis Jok' and the cautioner was Sir William Ker of Caverton (the younger of Cessford). In 1572/3 the same men swore allegiance to the Crown and gave assurance that they would not help or reset Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst and others, with Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig as their cautioner. His son ‘Johne’ was involved in another case in 1574, along with Allan Deans and John Cavers. His father was presumably Philip, but it is unclear if he is the same as one of the known men of that name; it is possible he was the Philip recorded in 1549 at Wiltonburn complaining about Walter Ker of Cessford. John (d.bef. 1582) tenant in Montbenger. In 1582 his widow, Margaret Lowes, complained that a gang of Armstrongs and others raided the farm of 'Eister Montbernegier', stealing about 360 sheep and all the goods from there, and then attacking Deuchar. His sons William and Adam were also mentioned, with Adam being...

kidnapped by the rievers. John (16th/17th C.) brother of Walter of Chamberlain Newton and son of Margaret Turnbull. In 1573 he was declared a fugitive for non-appearance when he, his brother Walter and mother Margaret, were charged with attacking the half of the farm of Chamberlain Newton occupied by a servant of Gavin Elliot of Stobs. He and his brother David were witnesses in 1588 to an instrument of sasine for Walter Scott of Howpasley as heir to his father Sir Walter of Birkenside in the lands of Appletreehall and Midshiels. John (16th C.) recorded in Selkirk in 1580 when he owed money to John Dawson. John ‘younger’ (perhaps his son) was also mentioned as a debtor. John (16th C.) recorded in 1581 as ‘alias Johne of Fif’ when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk. John (16th C.) recorded in 1581 being in Alton when he witnessed a dispute over the ‘maills’ of lands in Hundleshope between Thomas, son of Robert of Howford and John, parson in Hundleshope. He may be the same as one of the other Johns. John (16th C.) son of William in Broadlee. In 1581/2 he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk, relating to the lands of Sunderland. John (16th C.) recorded in 1582 as witness to a sasine in Hawick, involving James Jack. His nickname is given as ‘Jok Jo’. John (d.c.1582) tenant in Carpow (probably in Perthshire). His will was registered in Edinburgh in 1582/3. He was probably related to Robert and Thomas, portioners in Carpow, whose wills were recorded in 1575/6. John (d.c.1583) baxter in ‘Strameglo’ (i.e. Strathmiglo) whose will was registered in Edinburgh in 1583. He was probably related to otherScotts from that area. John (d.bef. 1594) illegitimate son of Robert of Wamphray, Rysholm and Bonnington and younger half-brother of Adam of Bonnington. He was probably distinct from John of Wakefield. His brother Adam wadset to him the lands of ‘Espehope’ in Selkirkshire. In 1594 he was deceased when his son John secured a feu from the Crown for the church lands of St. Mary, Kirk of the Lowes. John of Middlestead (16th/17th C.) listed by Scott of Satchells among the men who were on the raid to rescue Kinmont Willie in 1596. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. John of Robertson (d.1606) mentioned in 1566 as son and heir to John of Roberton, when his wardship was given to Robert Scott (it is unclear which Robert this was). Perhaps the same John signed the Scott bond of clanship in 1589. He must have been related in some way to James of Roberton, recorded in 1578. In 1581 he witnessed an agreement for a dispute between Adam of Bonnington and Robert of Haining, witnessed at Todrig Shank, along with Walter of Goldielands, William Chisholme of that Ilk and William Dalgleish in Crookston. Also in 1581 he probably (it is hard to read) witnessed a marriage contract between William in Burnfoot (on Ale) and Janet, daughter of William in Huntly. In 1587 he acted as surety for James White in Borthwickshiels. Scott of Satchells says that John Scott of Roberton was among the 33 chosen to accompany Buccleuch to rescue Kinmont Willie in 1596; this was probably him. He was succeeded by his son William of Roberton in 1610. John (16th C.) recorded being ‘in Fawdomnside’ (i.e. Falkdonside) in 1581 when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk. He may be the same as one of the other Johns. John (16th/17th C.) listed as being ‘in Stowslie’ (i.e. Stouslie) by Scott of Satchells when he listed the 24 ‘Pensioners’ of Buccleuch, probably relevant to the period around 1600. It is unclear how he might have been related to other branches of the Scotts. John (16th C.) recorded as Reader of Hassendean in 1575. He may be the ‘Sir John’ who was in dispute over the Vicarage of Hassendean with Ninian Westmin in 1550. Presumably the same man was the Reader of Southdean 1579–82. It is not impossible that he is also the same as the minister of Ashkirk etc. In 1582 he was one of 6 preachers (including readers from Hassendean, Lilliesleaf and Ashkirk) who were deprived for ‘abusing the sacraments’. They were excommunicated in 1588 for continuing in the offence, but yielded when threatened with death in 1590. The precise basis of the theological disagreement is unclear, but it may suggest that he had been a Catholic priest before the Reformation. John of Foulshiels (16th C.) probably either the son or grandson of William, the first Scott of Foulshiels. In 1592 Walter Scott was surety for him and also Walter Cairncross in Lugat that he would be loyal to the King (signed by Robert of Aikwood and Walter in Bowhill). He subscribed to a deed of loyalty in 1593 and in that same year Robert Porteous in Dalkeith was surety for him to answer the Privy Council for associating with Hercules Stewart and other traitors. He was probably succeeded by James. Rev. John (16th C.) became ‘exhorter’ at Selkirk and St. Mary’s of the Lowes in 1568. He was minister at Selkirk according to financial records for ‘thirds of benefices’ in 1569. Probably the same John is recorded as schoolmaster in Selkirk in 1571. He is recorded as Minister of Ashkirk in late 1573. By 1575 he was Minister at Ashkirk, with Selkirk, Kirk... of the Lowes, Ettrick and Rankilburn also in his charge. However, James (not John) Scott was also recorded as Reader in 1575, becoming Vicar in 1586. In 1576 he complained to the Privy Council that he had been dispossessed of the ‘half toun and landis of Elistoun’ in the Lordship of Melrose by Thomas and then Robert of Haining. He had titles showing that his predecessors had been in possession of these lands as kindly tenants. John (16th C.) tenant of Newark, as described in Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch’s last testament of 1574. He could be related to the later Chamberlain of the same name and location, who was son of James of Newark. Hence he could have been father of James of Newark, and presumably descended from one of the other family branches.

John (16th C.) Burgess of Selkirk who was recorded as ‘eister’ when he witnessed a couple of transactions in Selkirk in 1580. One of these was between John in Aikwood and Robert of Haining. In 1580/1 he witnessed a marriage contract for Simon in Philiphaugh. In 1581 he witnessed an agreement in Selkirk where James Langlands of that Ilk resigned his lands to his son Robert Langlands. He witnessed further transactions in Selkirk in 1581.

John (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. He is listed as ‘Jock’, ‘As-it-looks’ (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties.

He is recorded as ‘Johne Scot, callit Tynclair, whose will was recorded in Edinburgh in 1578. He may have been related to other Scotts in Strathamigo Parish. John (16th C.) webster in Edinburgh, who became a Burgess there in 1561. Probably the same ‘wobstar’ was already deceased in 1579 when his eldest son James became a Burgess in Edinburgh. John (15th/16th C.) stabler who became a Burgess of Edinburgh in 1580. Another stabler of the same name who became a Burgess in 1517 may have been an ancestor. John (16th C.) made a Burgess of Glasgow in 1583, as an heir. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts. John, 2nd son of John, who was made a Burgess in 1608, may have been his son. John (16th C.) recorded in 1585 among a long list of men under the superiority of Lord Maxwell, receiving remission for any past crimes (perhaps associated with the raid at Stirling). He is listed as a tenant farmer at Arkleton. John ‘the Tinkler’ (16th C.) tenant in Harwood. In 1585 he was one of the witnesses to the bond in which Sir Walter of Braxholme and Robert of Allanhaugh resolved a family feud. He is recorded as ‘Johne Scot, callit Tynclair, in Harret’, and he signed by ‘twychand the pen’ (meaning that he was unable to write). He was also ‘the Tinckler’ when among men complained about by the English Warden for a raid into England in 1587; his son Andrew ‘the Braidie’ was also listed, as well as Adam ‘little Peck’. His name occurred first on the list of Scotts, Laidlaws, Olivers and others, and they were accused by Percival ‘Clennell’ of leading about 500 men on a day-long foray in which they took 80 cows, 7 horses, goods worth £20 and ransomed 8 prisoners. Additionally, in 1586/7 he is ‘callit the Tinklare, in Harwode’, among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties; his unnamed son is also listed (presumably Andrew). He could be the same as one of the contemporary Johns. John (16th C.) recorded as ‘Johnne Scott in Teuidside’ in the 1594 ‘respite’ by King James VI for the murder of Lord Maxwell and others at Dryfe Sands. His name occurs near several other local Scots, but it is unclear where he was tenant. John (16th C.) recorded as ‘in Orniston’ when he signed the Scott clan bond in 1589. It is unclear how he was related to other contemporary Scots. However, Adam in Orniston, recorded in 1592, seems likely to be related. John (d.c.1590) baxter and Burgess of Dysart in Fife. His will was registered in Edinburgh in 1590. John (d.c.1605) Burgess of Dysart. He was brother of the deceased Walter, who was also Burgess of Dysart. His wills were registered in Edinburgh in 1594 and 1605. John (16th C.) listed as ‘Johnne Scot in Delloiren’ (i.e. Dellorain) among those implicated in the 1593 slaughter of Lord Maxwell and his men at Dryfe Sands. John (d.c.1595) mealman who became a Burgess of Edinburgh in 1580. His will was registered in Edinburgh in 1595/6. It is possible that he was the maltman, Burgess of Edinburgh, whose wife Margaret Murray’s will was registered in Edinburgh in 1592. John (16th C.) recorded as ‘in Commonside when he signed the Scott clan bond in 1589. It is unclear how he may have been related to other Scots. He may also be the Scott of Commonside said to have been involved in the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. John (d.c.1600) described as ‘elder, in Nether-toun of Hamilton’ when his will was registered in Edinburgh in 1600. John (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘servant to Sir Walter Scotte of Brankxhame’ in 1597 when he and Simon Armstrong of Mangerkiel were delivered to Lord Scrope to be prisoners within Carlisle. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John of Kirkstead (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1603 among subordinates of Sir Walter of Buccleuch who ‘had been put to the horn’ for not paying feu mails for their lands to the Queen’s Chamberlain, with Robert of Haining being denounced for not entering them in court. He could be the same as one of the other Johns. John of the Toor (d.bef. 1609) succeeded by his son John in his lands in Hawick. He is referred to as being ‘called of the Tour in Hawick’ later in 1609 when his son David brought an action against the Turnbuls of Barnhills. He may be related to the earlier Robert and later William, who are also ‘of the Tour’. It is possible he is the John ‘in Hawik’ whose son John in 1579/80 purchased rigs in Selkirk previously belonging to Nicholas Chapman. John (16th C.) tenant in Montbenger. He is recorded as signatory to a bond at Cadrono in 1595. He may be related to the earlier tenant of the same name. John ‘Jock’, ‘the Stour’ (16th/17th C.) mentioned in 1598 in complaints from Sir James Sandilands that he was among a group of Armstrongs, Elliots and Scotts who stole from his lands and ‘slew and dismembered divers good subjects who rais to the fray’. He is recorded being called ‘Stowre of Quyn clocks’ (perhaps Whinney Cleuch) and he is listed after Adie ‘the Peck’ and hence perhaps related. He may be the ‘Johne Scott, callit the Stowr’ who had been warded with Henry Lord Sinclair, but released by 1573. Probably the same John was brother to Thomas ‘callit Thome of the Stoir’ in 1586/7 when listed among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. He could be the ‘Johne Scot of Deir of the Scoir’ recorded in 1600, when along with ‘Dandie’ Armstrong, called ‘Braid Sword’ and John Armstrong, called ‘Sandy’s Johnnie’, he was accused of stealing 3 horses and 3 webs of cloth from John Simpson in Gilmerton. Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch denied that he was responsible for him when the case came before the Privy Council. In another case in 1600 he was recorded as ‘Jok Scott, called the Stowre of Quyne cleuch’, accused of raiding the farms of Sir James Sandilands; this makes it clear that he was from Whinney Cleuch. John (16th/17th C.) described as ‘of Monks-tower’ by Scott of Satchells, among the 24 ‘pensioners’ of Buccleuch. He was said to be ‘brother to old William Scott of Altoun’, but his connection to other Scotts is unclear. John the Clerk’ (16th/17th C.) resident of ‘Elrig’ recorded in 1612, which could be Elrig in the Borthwick valley. James Noble in East Burn of Stobo complained to the Privy Council that he had not found caution for killing his father. He could have been related to the earlier John called ‘the Clerk’. John (16th/17th C.) baxter in Glasgow. In 1611 his son and heir Thomas, also a baxter, was made a Burgess and Guild Brother of Glasgow. In 1613 his second son James (a tailor) was also made a Burgess there. John (d.c.1619) probably the eldest son of James of Hundlehope. He may be the John ‘parson in Hundellishop’ who in 1581 had a dispute with Thomas, son of Robert of Howford regarding the ‘maills’ of lands in Hundlehope. He was possibly the ‘Johne Scot in Hundennshop’ recorded in 1583/4 when there was caution made that James Gledstains of Cocklaw and his tenant Thomas Burnet and other tenants would not harm him; Robert of Thirlestane and Sim of Winterburgh received the cautions. He is referred to in 1596/7 as ‘sometime in Hundilshoip’, when he was part of a group of Scotts, under Robert of Thirlestane, who attacked lands owned by the citizens of Peebles. He is probably also the John, ‘in Jedwartsfeld’, brother of William in Glack, who in 1597/8 was accused (along with his brother William and Arthur in Gamescleuch) of attacking and capturing Ralph Ker, servant of Mark Kerr, Commendator of Newbattle. His brother Thomas was also in the armed group. He is also named as ‘portioner’ of Hundleshope in several documents in the period 1607–17, and is listed among supporters of Scott of Thirlestane in their feud with the Scotts of Tushielaw. In 1612 he was ‘of Hundilshoip’ on the ‘retour’ panel for Tweedie of Drumelzier. Also in 1612 he was listed among Scotts and others accused of overcharging interest on loans. In 1618 he was ‘portioner of Hundlshoip’ when he had a charter of the lands of Hundleshope and others within Peeblesshire that had previously belonged to the Gledstains of Cocklaw. Probably the same John ‘of Hundilshoip’ was recorded in 1618 when his brother William of Glack served as his cautioner not to harm the Moffats of Granton (which may be a clue to connect this family with the Scotts of Glack); similarly there was a caution for the Moffats not to harm him. He was succeeded by his son John in 1619, with the rules over being a minor waived in 1621; his son also gained his lands of ‘Alcolmefeld, Wodgrevington’ and pasturage of Cademuir in Peeblesshire in 1625 and was recorded as a creditor of Sir John of Newburgh in 1631. John of Bonnington (16th/17th C.) son of Adam and brother of Simon of Bonnington. He was probably present at the Carlisle raid in 1596 in which Kinmont Willie was freed. In 1599 Lord Salton was his surety that he would ‘keep the King’s peace’. He was tried in 1601 for the murder of Archibald Napier of ‘the Wommet’ (Woolmot, near Edinburgh); along with 3 other Scotts, Walter, James and William ‘in Schostanis’ (all brothers of Robert of Bowhill and sons of Robert of Aikwood), he was convicted and ‘put to the horne’. He was referred to as being ‘in Quholplaw’ (probably Whelplaw in Lauderdale) and ‘alias callit John of Bonytoune’. It is unclear why this group of Scotts attacked Napier. He was recorded as brother of Simon of Bonnington among a group of Scotts who attacked Adam Veitch’s lands at ‘Fechane’ in 1602; he was denounced as a rebel for not appearing. He may have been involved in the murder of Walter Scott in 1616. He appears to have succeeded his brother Simon to the lands of Bonnington in about 1622, but died a few years later. He succeeded his brother Simon and deceased nephew Robert to the lands of ‘Ernesheugh’ and Singlie in 1624. He is probably the same John who was accused of murdering Walter ‘in Essenside’, son of ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden in about 1616, abetted by his brothers Simon and Adam and ‘Will’s Sym’ of Thirlestane. Since the murderer was said to be a Scott of Newhouse, then perhaps they were related to the Bonnington Scotts. If this was the same man, then he must have been acquitted. He succeeded his brother Simon in the lands of Bonnington, but these went to Andrew (surgeon in Edinburgh) in 1624, and later to William Burnet, his grand-nephew. He was in succeeded in his other lands by his son Robert. John (16th/17th C.) brother of Walter of Woll. Scott of Satchells lists him among those involved in the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596, and refers to him as being ‘of Ashkirk’. He is recorded in 1608 among a party accused of attacking and maltreating some residents of Selkirk. His half-brother John Turnbull (apparent of Harden) was his accomplice, and they attacked the ‘knokkeiper’ John Jackson, apparently after they were ‘hounded out’ by Robert Scott of Haining. After the pair were apprehended by the Bailies of Selkirk a group of Scotts and their followers (from Thirlestane, Bowhill, Synton and elsewhere) freed them. Along with his half-brother John Turnbull he was ordered to be imprisoned in Edinburgh or declared rebels. He could be the John in Ashkirk recorded in Selkirk in 1580 in a transaction involving Helen Scott, widow of Mungo Donaldson. John (16th/17th C.) tenant in Ettrickhouse, recorded in 1609 among the supporters of Scott of Thirlestane in their feud with the Scotts of Tushielaw. He may be the ‘Jocky ill-to-haud’ who was a natural brother of Sir Robert of Thirlestane, mentioned by Scott of Satchells. Sir John of Newburgh (16th/17th C.) son of Arthur of Newburgh. Scott of Satchells describes him as ‘that Prince of Poets than whom Chaucer, Glovet, Sir Thomas More and Sir Philip Sydney never had a more Poetic Vein’. He was served heir to his father in 1610, in the lands of Winterburgh and ‘Fawodgrange alias Craighill’ in Ettrick Forest. He was bonded in 1610, along with his brother Arthur and John of Hundleshope, for not harming Walter of Tushielaw and his sons. In addition there was a complaint in 1617 against his brother Arthur by James Mitchellhill, burgess of Selkirk. In 1621 he was appointed to a commission to apprehend the men who killed Robert of Gilmancleuch. Along with John of Gilmancleuch and Sir Robert of Thirlestane he promised in 1621 not to molest the Elphinstones. In 1622 he was appointed as one of 10 men to assist Walter of Buccleuch in administering justice on the Border. In 1626 he is listed as owner of a ‘£4 land’ in the Barony of Belses, part of the temporal lands of Jedburgh Abbey. In 1631 he complained against Andrew Scott, surgeon in Edinburgh. He was listed on the last testament of Water, Earl of Buccleuch in 1633. He was probably succeeded by his son John. His natural son David is recorded in 1640 in a document relating to the Scotts of Thirlestane. He also had a daughter who married Sir Walter Scott of Whitlade. John, son of Andrew (surgeon in Edinburgh), who inherited Winterburgh in 1636, was surely related. John of Drinkstone (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1603 on a list of land-owners in Hassendean Parish whom the Baron, James Cunningham, tried to oust. He was presumably a direct descendant of the earlier John ‘in Drinkstone’ and related to the George ‘callit of Deringstoun’ recorded in 1616. John ‘Wat’s Jock’ (d.bef. 1610). In 1610 his son Bailie Robert and his wife Helen Turnbull had a sasine for a tenement off the Kirkwynd in Hawick. His father was presumably Walter. One of the witnesses was ‘Jock’s Wattie’, who could have been another son. He may be the same man as ‘Jok Scot, duelland in Hawik, callit Wattis Jok’ named in 1581, along with Scotts from Allanhaugh and Over Southfield, when they were forgiven for the murder of George Scott (resident of Hawick) 3 years earlier. And also the ‘Johne Scot, alias Wattis Jok, burges of Hawik’ who was one of the witnesses to the bond in which Sir Walter of Branholme and Robert of Allanhaugh resolved a family feud; his brother Thomas (also a Burgess) was also a witness. John ‘Jean’s John’ (16th/17th C.) son of the deceased ‘Symme Scot in Southfield’, recorded in 1609 when he was among several men fined for harassing Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane. The other men included 2 sons of Kinmont Willie, suggesting he was part of a gang of would-be rievers from Liddesdale. It is unclear if this Southfield is the one near Hawick. John (16th/17th C.) served heir in 1609 to his father John, who was ‘called o the Toor’ in Hawick. He also had a brother Dacid, who is also recorded in 1609. It seems likely this was a property-owning family of Scotts who lived at the Tower Knowe in the 16th and 17th centuries. Their relationship with other branches is unknown. It is possible he is the John son of John ‘in Hawik’ whose in 1579/80 purchased 3 rigs of land in Selkirk previously belonging to Nicholas Chapman. John (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘younger’ in Selkirk in 1580, along with ‘elder’ John, who was presumably his father. He is also recorded in Selkirk in 1581 when his cautioners were Gavin Murray and John Young. Additionally in 1581 he made an agreement with William Keen in Lindean. John (16th/17th C.) son of the Laird of Howpasley (probably William). In 1599 he was a tenant of his father, who was surety for him, as well as Walter of Ladhope (who may have been related). He may be the same as one of the other Johns. John ‘Jock’ (16th/17th C.) bellman of Hawick who is mentioned in a murder trial of 1612, the events taking place in 1610 (and described in Pitcairn’s ‘Criminal Trials’). He was presumably a Burgh Officer, one of the earliest on record. John ‘Bonnie Johnnie’ (16th/17th C.) nickname for a Hawick resident, recorded in a 1612 document along with a number of people accused of over-charging interest on loans. He is there listed as ‘Bony Johne Scot’ and he appeared in court to answer the charge. Presumably the same man is recorded as ‘Johne Scott callit Bony Jony’ in the 1616 trial of the men accused of salughtering the Laird of Drumlanrig’s sheep at Howpasley. Along with James Wemys and James Lethen, he helped take the pistol from ‘Marion’s Geordie’ Scott before he could shoot James Douglas. It is unclear to which branch of the Scotts he belonged. John of Newark (d.1622) eldest son of James. His father left him Newark (although it is unclear whether this was ownership or tenancy) in the early years of the 17th century. He is probably the John recorded in 1581 being ‘in Newerkynynhe’ when he gained crofts in Selkirk. Either he or another John is the ‘bretheris sone’ of James in Newark listed among people owing money to Thomas Cruickshank in 1581. In 1582 he resigned his lands in Selkirk to his father James in Newark Mill; Selkirk Bailie William was one of the witnesses and hence perhaps related. He is described as ‘in Newark’ when he served as Chamberlain to the Scotts of Buccleuch for ‘the Forest’ in the period 1609–15. In 1608 his son James was among a group of Scotts and others who were accused of attacking Selkirk Mill. He may be the John ‘in Newark’ listed among local men accused of overcharging on interest by the Privy Council in 1612 (but omitted from the list of those found guilty). In 1618 his son Walter Scott was convicted of mutilating 3 fingers of Adam, son of John Dalgliesh of Deuchar; Walter Scott of Buccleuch was instructed to apprehend him, as well as his son James, and William and William in Fasthengh for the murder of Adam Dalgliesh in Deuchar. Also in 1618 he complained about a group of Elliot's attacking his tenants and servants at Foulishiel in Liddesdale. His house in Selkirk is mentioned in a document in 1619. He married Agnes Simpson and their children included: James, who succeeded; Robert, who became an apprentice merchant in Edinburgh in 1607 and was later a Burgess of Selkirk; and Walter in Braidaugh and Arkleton, who was a factor for Scott of Buccleuch. His son Walter had cautioners George of Castleside and Robert of Hartwoodmyres, suggesting they were close relatives. John (16th/17th C.) brother of Walter, Laird of Tushielaw, and younger son of William of Tushielaw. Along with his son William (a minor at the time) he was accused in 1607 of killing John, father of John Govane of Cardrona (a family that would later connect with the Scotts of Tushielaw through marriage). He was the uncle of the John Scott who killed Walter of Thirlestane in a duel. John of Kirkhouses (16th/17th C.) from a branch of the family near Ashkirk, he was son of James. His grandfather was George Scott of Synton. He inherited the lands from his father in 1609. He was probably the John 'in Kirkhouss' who witnessed to the making of the inventory of Isabel Donald, widow of Robert of Palace, in 1579 (with his son James also a witness). In 1579/80 he was a witness in Kirkhouses for a case between Dalglieshes and Scotts. In 1580 he received redemption money from Walter of Ashkirk for the lands of 'Ediehauoch', 'Ediebray', 2 husbandlands and a croft, plus the lands of Salenside. Also in 1580 he borrowed £21 Scots from John Mitchelhill, Burgess of Selkirk and was recorded in an arrangement involving bolls of bere with Elizabeth Elliot, widow of Robert Waugh in Ashkirk. His 'onset and croft' in Selkirk is mentioned in 1581. Additionally in 1581 he resigned his possessions in Ashkirk that had been wadset to him by Walter of Ashkirk and under the reversion Walter assigned to him part of Salenside Croft and 'Skakriggis'. In 1581/2 he received money from the Mitchelhill family for lands within Selkirk. In 1581/2 his first-born son James took out a tack on lands in Ashkirk from Walter in Ashkirk. He was probably the John 'in Kirkhouse' who signed the Scott clan bond in 1589. In 1614 he was summoned (along with his kinsman Robert Scott of Salenside) to appear before the Presbytery to answer to charges of murder. He is probably the John of Kirkhouses who was part of band of Scotts that forcibly took the farm of Hartwoodburn from its tenant in 1627. John of Hundleshope (16th/17th C.) son of John. He was served heir to his father in 1619 and in 1621 the Privy Council ruled that he could become portioner of Hundleshope, even although still a minor. He succeeded to his father's lands in Peeblesshire in 1625. In 1629 he and his wife Helen Geddes had a charter for the lands of Hundleshope and others. He was recorded as a creditor of Sir John of Newburgh in 1631. John 'Jock' or 'the Suckler' (d.1616) son of Thomas of Nether Braedlie. He was one of the men involved in the slaughter of Sir James Douglas' sheep at the instigation of Lady Scott of Howspalay in 1615, apparently in revenge for Douglas taking lands at Howspalay. He was the first to be sent for by Lady Howspalay, and at the Market Cross of Hawick he met with Jean Scott of Satchells and 'Marion's Geordie'. After the plan was hatched, he met some of the others at the foot of the Eilrig Burn in the Borthwick valley. The other men involved were George, Walter and Ingram Scott, and William Scott of Satchells, the first 3 all being caught and hung at Edinburgh Cross after Jock had turned informer. His diposition claimed that George had threatened him when he had second thoughts about going through with the crime; when faced with this George asked him to repeat the statements to his face, which he did. For thus turning informant he was declared to be of lesser guilt and left in prison after the 1616 trial. However, later that same year he himself (mis-transcribed as 'Jok the Suttler') was hanged at the same place for sheep stealing; the specific charge was for taking 4 sheep from 'Adam Almouse', tenant at Museslee, as well as 'ane zow and ane hog, pertening to George Scott, callit of Deringstoun' from his lands at Castlehill, 'ane blak zow, pertening to Rowie Scott, called Rowie of Huttkill, furth of the Lyn besyde Eilrig' and 7 ewes from James Rowie in Raeburn. These crimes took place 1612–14. Sir John of Scotstarvit (1585–1670) descended from Robert of Allanhaugh, son of Sir David of Buccleuch. He succeeded his grandfather in 1592, at the age of 7. He had the tower of Scotstarvit rebuilt near Cupar in Fife, which still survives. He was a Judge, Directory of the Chancery, Lord of Session and Privy Councillor, but lost his positions when Cromwell occupied Scotland. He was made a Burgess of Canongate in about 1622 and in 1630 his servant Robert Scott was made a Burgess of Glasgow (gratis). He assisted Walter, 1st Earl of Buccleuch to run his estates while he was fighting in Holland, and carried the coronet at the Earl’s funeral. Along with Sir William of Harden he went to court to hear the King’s ruling on the land dispute between Francis Stewart and the Earl of Buccleuch in 1634. He was appointed as one of the ‘tutors’ for the children of the Earl of Buccleuch and served as one of the trustees for Mary, when she succeeded to the Buccleuch estates. He was the last of the original tutors named as ‘sine quibus non’ by Francis Earl of Buccleuch, but lost control to Gideon of Highchester and the Borders tutors. He was instrumental in having Pont’s maps of Scotland published by Blaeu in 1654, and contributed to the accompanying text. He also wrote ‘The staggering state of the Scots statesmen’, containing satirical sketches of prominent Scotsmen of his age (and back to 1550), published eventually in 1754. He married Anna, daughter of Sir John Drummond of Hawthornden. Their children were: Robert, who died young; Sir James, who succeeded; Sir John; William; Alexander; Robert; Ludovic; Margaret; Jean; Helen; Euphama; Anna; Eliza; Rebecca; Elizabeth; Margaret; and Janet. His 2nd wife was Margaret Melville, with whom he had a son George (who married Mary Margaret Rigg, sister of Lady Douglas of Cavers, and was in charge of a ship that transported Covenanters to the plantations, but died on the voyage in 1685). He thirdly married Eupham Moneypenny and had sons Cecil and Walter (who was served as his heir in certain lands in 1672). It seems that in 1651, when the Scotts of Buccleuch failed to have a male heir, he was the most senior representative with an unbroken male succession. His descendant, David, was an M.P. in the mid-18th century, but the branch failed in the male line in the early 1800s. John (16th/17th C.) ‘brother-german’ to Walter in Allamouth in 1606 when he purchased the lands of Hobsburn Weens from Thomas Turnbull. He was thus the first of the Scotts of Weens. In 1610 he is recorded as ‘of Weenis’ when he was part of an inquest. In 1612 he was ‘in Weenis’ when he was Bailie to Sir Andrew Ker of Oxnam for a sasine in Rulewater. He is referred to as ‘called of Allanemouth, now in Weymes’ in a sasine of 1617 when he gained a bakehouse in Jedburgh from baker Henry Cunningham. He may have been a son of the William of Allamouth who is recorded in the late 16th century. He seems likely to have been father or grandfather of the later Andrew of Weens. John of Mackersway (16th/17th C.) younger son of Sir Walter of Tushielaw. Note that another John, accused in 1607 of killing the father of John Govane of Cardrona, was his uncle. According to Satchells he was one of the men who took part in the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. In 1599 his father Walter was surety for himself, as well as him and his brothers Robert and James, to ‘observe the King’s peace’. He was listed as ‘Jhone Scot, his sone lawfull’ after Walter of Tushielaw, when they were witnesses to a report of the bailie court of the Regality of Melrose in 1607. He was described as ‘John Scott, called of Tuscelaw’ in a charter of 1618. His natural son Francis was also witness to the charter, as were Robert, ‘fiar of Tuscelaw’ (his older brother) and Sir Walter ‘of Tuscelaw’ (his father). He was the John, who killed Walter of Gamelech (or Thirlestane), recorded in the Selkirk Presbytery records of 1609 and possibly the inspiration for ‘The Dowie Dens o’ Yarrow’. He was excommunicated after this, but his pardon by James VI for the slaughter of Walter Scott, brother of Sir Robert of Thirlestane, is recorded in 1614 and after due repentance his status with the church was reinstated in 1615. He is probably the John, brother of Robert of Tushielaw who witnessed a bond for Thomas Turnbull in Spittal-on-Rule in 1619 and who witnessed a bond in 1620 between Thomas Turnbull, tenant at Spittal-on-Rule and Robert Pringle, servitor to Sir Gideon Murray of Elibank. In 1620 he was served as tutor to William, Marion, James, Elizabeth and Margaret, children of his brother James of Glenrath. He married Jeanne, daughter of Patrick Murray of Falahill. He had at least one legitimate son, Walter. John (16th/17th C.) tenant in Whithope. He was listed in 1627 as one of 9 men charged with performing a valuation of the lands in the Parish of Hawick. John (17th C.) recorded in 1632 as possessor of the Liddesdale farms of ‘Rouraltonholme’ (probably at Ralton) and Auldhies. John (17th C.) recorded in 1632 as joint tenant, along with Gavin Elliot, of the lands of Over and Nether ‘Closse alias Welshaw’ in Liddesdale. John (17th C.) recorded in 1632 as ‘bailie in Liddisdaill’ in a document listing the possessors of the lands that made up the Lorship of Liddesdale. He possessed the lands of ‘Flocksteid alias Flaske’. He may have been bailie to the Lord of Liddesdale. John (d.bef. 1634) described as ‘burgess of Hawick’ in 1634 when his son William became a wright’s apprentice in Edinburgh. He may be the John who acted as witness for the Hawick Parish valuation in 1627. John (d. bef. 1629) recorded being ‘in Hawick’ in 1629 when his former lands in Selkirk are mentioned in a land transaction. John (17th C.) son of Andrew, who was a surgeon and Burgess of Edinburgh. In 1636 he was served heir to his father’s lands of Winterburgh with mill in Ettrick Forest, as well as ‘Fawoodgrain aliases Craighill’. It is unclear how he was related to earlier Scotts of Winterburgh. John (17th C.) tenant in Howpsalys. In 1635 he was served heir to his grandfather Alexander, ‘commonly called ‘Land Sandie’ in Hawick. John (17th C.) married Janet Routledge. Their children, baptised in Hawick, included James (b.1635) and Catherine (b.1642). John of Huntly (17th C.) son of James ‘called of Huntly’. He was served heir to his father in 1639 in the lands of Langhope in Ettrick Forest, as well as ‘Fawoodgrain aliases Craighill’. He is one of the last recorded Lairds of Huntly. However, Walter of Huntly is recorded just a few years later, in 1644, so possibly his brother. John of Catslacknowe (17th C.) descended from the Scotts of Montbenger, and before that the Scotts of Dryhope. He may have been son of Walter of Montbenger and father of Rev. James of Kirkton and Ancrum. However, Rev. James’ father may instead have been Walter of Catslacknowe. It is unclear if he was related to the John in Catslack recorded in 1563. He may be the John ‘of Catslak’ whose daughter Helen had a sasine for lands in Deuchar in 1580, from Thomas Dalgleish in Deuchar; he was witness to the sasine. He is probably also the John ‘in Catslak’ in 1580 when he witnessed a sasine for the daughters of his sister and her husband John Turnbull of Philiphaugh. He is probably the John ‘in Catslak’ in 1581 when, along with several other Scotts (from Hartwoodmyres, Gamescleuch, Gilmanscleuch, Chamberlain Newton, Edinburgh, North Bowhill, Dryhope and Howpsalys), he supported William of Tushielaw and Robert of Aikwood in representing Adam in Bonnington in a dispute with Robert of Haining. Additionally in 1581 he witnessed an agreement in Selkirk for Andrew ‘Dandie’ and witnessed James Ker in Yair receiving sasine for Catslack and Mountbenger. John (17th C.) recorded as being from Borthaugh in 1642 when he acted as an appraiser in a Magistrates Court case involving someone’s livestock eating someone else’s oats. He could be related to the John who previously owned Borthaugh. Probably the same John ‘in Borthauch’ is recorded in 1630 when his son James became an apprentice merchant in Edinburgh with Adam Scott (who may have been related). John (d.1646) possibly an illegitimate son of Sir Walter ‘the Bold Bucleuch’. He was Provost of Crichton. In 1632 he was recorded as ‘brother natural’ to Sir Gideon Murray of Elibank, who was given the rentals from Crichton; this suggests he was a son of Sir William of Kirkurd and Grizel Beaton (who secondly married Andrew Murray of Blackbarony), however, it seems more likely he was from the next generation. He bore the arms of Montgomery in the funeral procession of the Earl of Bucleuch in Hawick in 1634. In 1643 he received a gift of 400 merks from Francis Stewart, Earl of Bothwell ‘for advancing his fortoun’. Also in 1643 he was made a Burgess and Guild Brother of Glasgow (gratis), along with Earl Francis and several other Scotts. John (17th C.) described being ‘callit of Borthwick’ in the 1643 valuation of Roxburghshire, when his lands in Hawick were valued at £10. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Johns. He may have been related to earlier Scotts of Borthwick. Mary Scott, listed right after him in 1643, had land in Hawick valued at £3. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Scott and their children included: James (b.1634); Margaret (b.1634); John (b.1635); James (again, b.1636); Margaret (b.1639); John (b.1643); Christian (b.1645); Marion (b.1647); and Janet (b.1649). There is probably more than one family here. The witnesses in 1639 were William Scott (perhaps a relative) and James Burn. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their children included: James (b.1635); Adam (b.1636); John (b.1639); Walter (b.1641); Isobel (b.1643); and John (again, b.1648). John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married ‘Margerie’ Scott and their children included: Janet (b.1640); Adam (again, b.1643); William (b.1650); and Margaret (b.1653). John of Gilmanscleuch (17th C.) probably eldest son of Robert. In 1621, along with Sir John of Newburgh and Sir Robert of Thirlestane, he promised in 1621 not to molest the Elphinstones (who were responsible for the death of his father). He is recorded owning the lands of Gilmanscleuch in 1628 and was made an Honorary Burgess of Selkirk in 1643. In 1643, 1644, 1648 and 1649 he was on the Committee of War for Selkirkshire. He is recorded writing to Sir William Scott of Harden in 1656, regarding the valuation of his lands. He was fined in 1662, after the Restoration, presumably for being a Covenanter supporter. He was probably the Scott of Gilmanscleuch who entered into a teind agreement with the curators of the Duke of Buccleuch in the late 1660s. He was probably father of Francis. His son may have been John of Rennaldburn (although this may be confused). John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Nichol and their children included: Walter (b.1642); and Robert (b.1644). John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Langlands and their children included: John (b.1647); Janet (b.1651); and Walter (b.1655). John of Rennaldburn and Newburgh (d.c.1672) grandson of Arthur of Newburgh, and son of Sir John. He may also have been knighted himself. He held the lands of 'Rennalburn' (or 'Rennaldburn') near Eskdalemuir (the later farmhouse there said to have been the first house built by Thomas Telford when he was an apprentice). He inherited Newburgh in 1654, being served heir to his grandfather Arthur. In 1656 he witnessed a charter (for lands in Dalkeith) for the Duchess of Buccleuch. In 1661 he is described as 'callit of Newbrugh, lait bailzie of Esdaill' when listed owing more than £2500 to the Duchess of Buccleuch. Also in 1661 he was a Commissioner of Supply for Dumfriesshire. He was recorded in the Land Tax Rolls for Ancrum Parish in about 1663. He was Chamberlain and Bailie of Eskdale in a deed of 1663. From 1666 he was 'tutor and curator' for Francis of Davington (to whom he was distantly related), son of Sir John of Thirlestane. In 1670 he infefted Sir James Johnstone of Westerhall in the Barony of Westerhall. He was Chamberlain for the Duke of Buccleuch for Eskdale Parishes from the mid-1650s until the early 1670s. About this time other people stood in for him, suggesting either he was dead or incapacitated. However, John of 'Rnaldburne' and 'Rennelburn' is recorded in deeds of 1673 and 1682, and may have been his son. He married Margaret Canide. His 2nd daughter Janet married Adam Elliot of Meikledale. His son John was also Chamberlain for the Duke of Buccleuch. Other children included: James (b.1623), whose wills are recorded in the Commissariot of Dumfries in 1684 and 1695; and Marie. His will is recorded in the Commissariot of Dumfries in 1673. John of Gorrenberry (d.1668) natural son of Walter, the 1st Earl Buccleuch, by Annas (or Agnes) Drummond. In 1629 he was given the lands of Gorrenberry as well as others. He acted as Chamberlain to the Buccleuch estates for Eckford, Langholm, Lempitlaw and Liddesdale from the 1640s to the late 1650s. He was also Chamberlain for Teviotdalehead in the 1680s. His lands in Castleton Parish were valued at £1600 in 1643. In 1643 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire and in 1643, 1644, 1648 and 1649 he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire. In 1648 there was a letter to him from Earl Francis, discussing the teinds of Eckford and the Mains. In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves on the Border. He is probably the 'John Scott, bailiff and B. brother to the Lord of Buccleuch' to whom a complaint was made in 1650 about some of Cromwell's soldiers having their horses stolen in the Borders by tenants of the Earl of Buccleuch. He served as one of the 'tutors testamentars' for the will of Francis, Earl of Buccleuch and was probably also the John, youngest natural brother of Earl Francis, who was given a sum of £100 annually in his brother's will. In 1654 he witnessed a contract of wadset for the Lorraines of Appotside (and may be the John who witnessed Lorraine baptisms in Hawick in 1655 and 1657). He was legitimated by Cromwell in 1656. In 1650 he was named as one of the 'tutors' for the children of Francis Earl of Buccleuch in his will and served as one of the tutors of Countess Mary during her minority, signing a letter protesting against her 'pretendit marriage in about 1659. He also was involved in a law suit with some of her other guardians in 1659 over breaking the locks on her charter chests. In 1661 he was listed as still owing about £9000 to the Duchess of Buccleuch for rentals in Liddesdale, where he had been Chamberlain. He was recorded paying the land tax (of £1600) in 1663. He was recorded in a deed of 1663. Also in 1663 his wife Elizabeth Hamilton, Lady 'Carberrie', was recorded in a discharge. He was probably the first Scott of Gorrenberry, and may also have married a Riddell. His children included: Francis, who succeeded; David, who was living in 1670; John, who became a merchant's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1663; and Robert, who became a merchant's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1666 and was still living in 1668. It is also possible that Walter of Alton was another son. His sons and grandsons and those of Walter of Alton Croft were mentioned in 1681 as among the potential heirs of Francis, Earl of Buccleuch. John (17th C.) recorded as Bailie of Hawick in 1648/9. He may have been the same John who was described as 'mailtman' in the 1638 'leet' for Bailies, and in the following year in reference to money gathered relating to soldiers in the Town. He was probably also one of the 2 councillors of the same name (one of whom is described as a merchant) who signed the 1640 Act of Bailies and Council. He is also recorded as appraiser (for eaten oats) in a Magistrate’s Court case in 1642. He served as Bailie in the 1650s and may be the John who was Procurator Fiscal of Hawick during some of the 1660s. John (17th C.) recorded as ‘John Scott Alton’ in 1644 when he was among Hawick men mentioned in relation to raising money and supplies for the Covenanting army. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts. Sir John (c.1615–66) 2nd son of Sir Robert of Thirlestane, with his 2nd wife Katherine Jardine. He was younger brother of Sir Robert, who died without children. He was served heir to his brother Sir Robert of Crookston in 1621. In 1632 he is described as son and heir of his father Sir Robert in a document relating to the lands of Altrive and Corsecleuch in Selkirkshire; Robert, son of Walter Scott of Burnfoot is also mentioned, and so possibly a relative. He was involved in a court case in 1634 (referring to a contract of 1623) with Sir William Scott of Harden and Robert Scott of Headshaw, over the lands of Thirlestane. He may be the John ‘Thirrilsone’ who was made a Burgess of Glasgow (gratis) in 1634, along with Walter of [blank] (although it is unclear who this is). In 1637 he had a decree of adjudication relating to the lands of Bourhope brought by Robert Scott of Whitelade, and decrees of appraising over the same lands with Patrick of Tanlawhill (his cousin) in 1642 and Robert of Whitelade in 1643. In 1641 he signed a contract with his cousin Patrick relating to the Thirlestane estate, but the terms were not clearly specified, and also Sir William of Harden resigned the Thirlestane estates to him, the 2 documents being signed in Hawick. This was important for the subsequent dispute of succession between him and his cousin Patrick of Tanlawhill, fought (and lost) by his descendants in court in the period 1727–44. His cousin Patrick clearly manipulated the situation (even having him imprisoned in Selkirk and in Home Castle) and eventually claimed the Thirlestane estates outright, although he was still fighting for his family lands until his death. He was served heir to his father Sir Robert in 1642 (perhaps as part of the legal battle). In 1643 he was referred to as ‘son and heir of the late Sir Robert’ of Thirlestane when Patrick Scott had a charter of the lands of Crookston and others that he had owned. He was also involved in a dispute with the Scotts of Buccleuch over the lands of Fingland, Davington and others in Eskdale. He sided with Charles I in the Civil War, joining the Marquis of Montrose and is said to have been at the Battle of Kilsyth, being knighted about then. He was sequestrated by Parliament and fined by Cromwell, only being rehabilitated at the Restoration, but dying shortly afterwards, his loyalty to the crown contributing to him losing his claim to the Thirlestane estates. He continued to use the designation ‘of Thirlestane’ until his death, although he only managed to hold onto the farms of Davington and Cassock near Eskdalemuir. He still owed money to the deceased Earl of Buccleuch in 1660. He is probably the Sir John of Thirlestane recorded in a deed in 1663. In 1643 he married Euphame (or Euphemia) Young, widow of Sir David Ogilvie of Clova (his comrade in arms). Their children were: Francis (b.1646) of Davington, baptised in Canongate; and Katharine, possibly an ancestor of James Scott of Calfie. He secondly married Margaret, widow of Robert Scott of Hartwoodmyres. John of Allanhaugh (17th C.) probably son of William of Allanhaugh (or perhaps Walter of Allanmouth). He was listed in a county valuation of Hawick Parish in 1643, with his lands valued at £110. It is possible he is the same as John of Weens, recorded in the earlier 1600s. John of Todshawhill (d.c.1653) recorded in the 1643 county valuation of lands in Hawick Parish, with the value being £133 6s 8d. In 1631–37 he was a Chamberlain for the Scotts of Buccleuch for rents in part of Bransholme and Wilton. He may be descended from Andrew of Todshawhill, who was one of the 24 ‘pensioners’ of Buccleuch. John of Yorkston and Headshaw (d.c.1646) 2nd son of George of Synton. His lands may have been near Temple in Midlothian (unless there is another place of the same name). He is probably the ‘brother german’ of Walter of Synton who in 1609 was involved in a sasine for the lands of Satchells. He is probably the John ‘of Sintoun’ who served as assignee to Gilbert Elliott of Stobs in a complaint against the Ainslies of Jedburgh in 1617. He is also recorded as John ‘of Sintoun’ in 1620 when a complaint was made that he and Walter, Earl of Buccleuch, still owed the Keeper of Edinburgh Tolbooth for lodging William of Howplesley there for several years. In 1629 he purchased Headshaw and Langhope from the old family of Scotts of Headshaw. He is recorded in the period 1631–42 as Chamberlain in Liddesdale to the Scotts of Buccleuch. In 1632 he had a feu-contract with Thomas, Lord Binning for lands in Belses. He is probably the ‘John of Syntoun’ who, along with Robert Pringle of Stichel, captured ‘Geordy Armstrong of Dykraw’. In 1634 he was part of the Earl of Buccleuch’s funeral procession in Hawick, where he carried the arms of Douglas of Angus. He appears to have repurchased Headshaw, Dryden and other lands in 1636. In 1637 he was ‘Johnne Scot of Heidschaw, bailie of Liddeisdale’ when he witnessed a document for the sale of Harwood. In 1638 he signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick as ‘Johne Scott of Heidschaw’. In 1643 he was listed as owner of Dryden, valued at £290, as well as Headshaw, ‘Crawknows, and Cleuches’, valued at £760 10s. In 1643 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire. He was also on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire in 1644. His son William of Headshaw is also mentioned in Buccleuch accounts for 1646, as served as his heir in 1653 and had a sasine as his heir in 1655. He was also recorded in 1660 (after his decease) when the curators for Mary Scott of Buccleuch tried to recover a debt from his sons William and John, owed to her father. His children were: William, who succeeded; Walter of Dryden; John of Langhope; Mungo in Dryden; and Robert, also in Dryden. John (17th C.) recorded in a deed in 1655. He was probably his included: Robert (b.1634); Robert (again, b.1637); Walter (b.1641); Janet (b.1642); and Margaret (b.1645). John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Agnes Scott in 1646. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Noble in 1634 and their son George was baptised in 1651. The witnesses included George (probably related). Other baptisms to a John Scott in Ashkirk may also be his children. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Thomson in 1646 and their daughter Elizabeth was baptised in 1653. John of Clerklands (17th C.) landowner of the mid-to-late 1600s, according to James Wilson. He paid the land tax on £180 in Ashkirk Parish in 1663 and £182 in 1678. He may have been the same as one of the other local Johns. John (b.1620) son of John of Rennaldburn and Newburgh. He was probably the John of Rennaldburn who was served heir to his father John in 1673. He was referred to as ‘Squire of Newburgh’ and ‘alias of Rennalburn’. His father was ‘tutor’ for the young Francis of Davington, whom it is said he ‘tried to encroach upon . . . and would have deprived him of his remaining estate, but for the friendship of Sir Francis Scott of Thirlestane’. Like his father, he served the Scotts of Buccleuch. He was Chamberlain for Eskdalemuir, Ewesdale and Wauchopedale from the 1670s through until 1692 and a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1685. He also had a court case against Francis Scott of Thirlestane around 1676. He was living at the time of publication of Scott of Satchells doggerel history (1688). He was named as an agent of the Duchess of Buccleuch on the rental rolls for Branxholme in 1690 and 1692. He is probably the Laird of Rennaldburn whose sister was under 13 when charged in Jedburgh in 1684 with not attending her own church, but listening to Covenanting preachers; he was cautioned for her good behaviour in the future. He may be the John whose will is recorded in the Commissariat of Dumfries in 1692 and whose widow Margaret Scott’s will was recorded in 1693; another John was served heir to his father John in 1697. He was said to have been succeeded by James, who married in Philadelphia in 1721; however, that may be the next generation. John (17th C.) married Malie Scott in Ashkirk in 1652. John (17th C.) married Margaret Scott in Ashkirk in 1652. John (17th C.) married Masie Elliot in Ashkirk in 1653. John (17th C.) married Margaret Elliot in Ashkirk in 1654. John of Satchells (17th C.) recorded in a deed in 1655. He was probably a younger son of Robert, with his brothers being William and Capt. Walter. He may have succeeded his brother, but they both probably died without heirs, since Capt. Walter appears to have succeeded on returning from the wars. John of Brieryyards (d.bef. 1667) local landowner of the mid-1600s, brother of William of Chamberlain Newton and probably son of Walter. He is probably the tenant in Brieryyards who in 1611 was fined for the non-appearance at court in Jedburgh of Robert in Hawick, ‘called Symmeis Hob’, ... and Walter ‘called Dandis Wattie’. He is probably the John of Chamberlain Newton recorded in 1612 when he and Michael Hunter of ‘Powmude’ complained to the Privy Council about several Stewarts. In 1619 he signed a bond in Hawick with Adam Turnbull of Abbotrule, which was registered in 1624; witnesses included William, ‘fiar of Quhithauch’ and Walter ‘called of Altoun’. In about 1621 he had a charter of the lands of ‘Calfald’ from the Commendator of Melrose. It is possible he is the John of Brieryyards whose nephew William of Chamberlain Newton was served heir to his lands of Brieryyards and ‘Braidleyis’ in 1633 and 1637. In 1638 he was appointed as tutor to Walter, son of William of Chamberlain Newton, his brother. In 1638 he signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick. He was recorded as owner of ‘Briddeyards’ in 1643. He was on the Committee of War in 1646 as ‘of Breidineairdis’, in 1648 as ‘of Breiryairdis’ and in 1649 as ‘of Breiryeards’. He may have been the same man as John of Hornshole. In 1656 he and his sons (including Walter) purchased a ‘merk land of Hassendeanbank’ from Thomas Turnbull; this was probably Cockerheugh. In 1656 as ‘of Langhop in the parish of Krkop’ and the witnesses were William ‘of...’ (probably of Headshaw, his brother) and Robert (perhaps another brother). John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Christian Liddell and their children included Margaret (b.1635), James (b.1637), Isobel (b.1639), Walter (b.1642), Marion (b.1643), John (b.1645), Adam (b.1647), Marion (again, b.1649), William (b.1652) and Christian (b.1654). The witnesses in 1654 were Walter Purdom and Robert. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Helen Veitch (or ‘Heilling Veatche’ in 1647 and their children included: Margaret (b.1652); John (b.1655); and Helen (b.1657). Given his wife’s surname, it is possible that they were both connected with Synton. John (17th C.) merchant in Hawick. In 1652 the Council found that traveller Thomas Oliver was not liable to pay him for £6, 10s. worth of tobacco pipes, another £6, 10s. for ‘hott waters’, as well as 8 merks of powder and 8 merks of white sugar, all of which Oliver had been transporting from Edinburgh for him, but were ‘brak, drownet, and lossit by the way’. John (17th C.) recorded in 1656 when he accused Walter ‘Westport’ of selling him 3 barrels of spirits that were supposed to be ‘24 stoupis’, but was short. Walter was acquitted by the Hawick Magistrates. John ‘West Port’ (17th C.) recorded in 1656 when his child William with Janet Robson was baptised in Hawick. The witnesses were Gilbert Watt (the Town Clerk) and another John. He was ‘westport’ and the baptism was labelled as ‘for:’. He was described as ‘in Westport of Haik’ in 1674 when his son William (presumably the same one) became a skinner’s apprentice in Edinburgh. This could be the same family as the Cornet of 1705, and probably also related to Walter ‘called Westport’, who is recorded in the period 1648–79. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Riddell and their children included Manie (b.1656) and Agnes (b.1671). The witnesses in 1656 were James and Robert. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Jean Gibson in 1660. John of Hornshole (17th C.) recorded in a list of landowners of Hassendean Parish in 1666. He may be the same man as the John listed as tenant in Hornshole in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John in Hornshole, married to Margaret Glendinning, was recorded in 1694, when his son James was baptised in Wilton Parish; the witnesses were William Scott and Thomas Scott, who were probably related, and it is one of the earliest Wilton Parish records. He may possibly be the same as John, son of John of Brieryards. John (17th C.) son of John of Gorrenberry. In 1663 he became a merchant’s apprentice with Patrick Fife in Edinburgh. John (17th C.) rented part of the farms of Braxholme Mains and Braxholme Park in 1671. Perhaps the same John leased 1/3 of Braxholme Mains in 1696 and 1697. He could be the same as one of the other Johns. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Leyden and their daughter Marion was baptised in 1671. John (17th C.) recorded in Hawick in 1674 when he was fined ‘for abusing and taking away of the bailies their good name, by calling them robers’. Perhaps the same John was banished from the Burgh in 1675 ‘because of several thefts committed by him’. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Jackson and their son Thomas was baptised in 1673. The witnessed were John Cuthbertson and James Wright. John (17th C.) recorded being ‘called Yles’ in 1673 when he was listed among those named in the court case relating to the disturbances at St. Jude’s Fair in Hawick. James Wilson says that the ‘nickname has been preserved, and is pronounced ceely’ and suggests that it meant he had an eye missing or some other peculiarity with his eyes. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Turnbull and their children included: John (b.1673); Walter (b.1675); William (b.1675); and Margaret (b.1678). John of Catslack (17th C.) recorded in the Land Tax Rolls in 1678 when he paid tax on £52 in Hassendean Parish. He was probably son of Walter, who paid the land tax there in 1663. It also seems that he could be the same man as John of Lees. It is unclear how he was related to Rev. James of Kirkton, who was also associated with Catslack. John (17th C.) married to Janet Bell. His unnamed child was baptised in Hawick in 1672. John (17th C.) recorded in a deed of 1673 being ‘in Corslee’. This is probably Crosslee in Ettrick. John (d.1679) from ‘Ettrick Forest’. He was among the 200 men who died on ‘the Crown of London’ when it shipwrecked off the Orkneys and the captain refused to unlock the hatches to let the prisoners save themselves. The ship was transporting Covenanters to America after their capture at Bothwell Bridge. It is known where exactly he lived. John (17th C.) recorded in 1684 as being ‘in Weins’ when his son Robert was among the men declared fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. It is unclear if he may be the same as the contemporary John of Weens. It is possible he was the John of Hawick who had to flee to England in 1676 for being a Covenanter, where he was said to have been involved in preaching in Cumberland and Northumberland. John of Bowhill (17th/18th C.) probably son of James of Bowhill. He appears to have been the last male in this family line. He sold the lands to Adam in Deloraine, brother of Francis of Grassyards. John of Headshaw (d.1691) eldest son of William. He was probably the ‘younger of Headshaw’ who was fined in 1662, after the Restoration (listed under Dumfriesshire). His father transferred the lands of Headshaw, Dumfriesshire. His father transferred the lands of Headshaw, Dryden, etc. to him in 1688. He married Jean Hackett (or Halket) in Edinburgh in 1682; she was only daughter of Col. R. Halket, and probably a cousin of some sort. When he died his sister Mary (who had married Patrick Porpeous of Hawkshaw) became heir to Headshaw. John (17th C.) son of Thomas in Bonchester (probably the same as Thomas ‘of’ Nether Bonchester). He was declared a fugitive in 1684 for nonconformity. He is mentioned in 1690 as son of Thomas of Nether Bonchester when he had a bond and discharge in the Burgh of Selkirk for 500 merks Scots. Perhaps the same John (said by George Tancred to be a Writer to the Signet) died in 1705 and was buried at Greyfriars Kirkyard in Edinburgh. John (17th/18th C.) married Margaret Scott in Ashkirk in 1693. John of Synton (d.bef. 1705) son of William. If he was the 3rd son, then his 2 older brothers must have died before him and with no heirs. In 1662 his uncle Francis was appointed as tutor during his minority. In 1670 his brother William became a surgeon’s apprentice in Edinburgh. He is recorded in a sasine of 1670 and annexed the lands of North Synton in 1675 (although they were partly in the family since 1641). He was recorded in a deed of 1673. In 1675 he was served heir to his father William of Synton, in the lands of North Synton; his father had died earlier than this, suggesting that perhaps this is when he reached majority. He paid the land tax at Hermiston in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1678 (half of Easter Hermiston, valued at £130) and was also owner of the lands of Esenside (valued at £365), although at that time North Synton was in the hands of Rev. Robert Cunningham. He may also be the Laird of Synton who whose lands in Selkirkshire were valued at £1600 in 1678. He is recorded as ‘of Synetoune’ in a bond of 1682. He later added Satchells to the estate and gained some land from Selkirk Common. He owned additional lands in Tweedsmuir Parish, according to a ‘tack’ of 1687 by Francis Scott, minister of Tweedsmuir (who may have been a relative). He was on the Commission of Supply for Selkirkshire in 1690. He was probably the Laird in 1694 when he paid tax for 35 hearths on his lands. In 1696 he and Sir Francis Scott of Thirlestane had a bond with James Melville of Halhill. He is also recorded in 1670 when his ‘brother-germane’ William became a surgeon’s apprentice in Edinburgh. In 1703 he witnessed a baptism for George Douglas of Friarshaw and his sister Elizabeth. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir Alexander Murray of Blackbarony in 1686 (probably not the daughter of John Murray of Cringletie, as stated by Keith Scott). In 1702 he secondly married Anna, eldest daughter of Sir John Scott of Ancrum and widow of William Scott of Raeburn. His children were: William (b.1688), baptised in Ashkirk, who probably died young; Alexander (b.1690), baptised in Ashkirk, who is recorded in an assignation by his grandmother Lady Blackbarony in 1697, and succeeded; Jean (b.1694), also baptised in Ashkirk, who had a similar assignation in 1697, but appears to have died a year later; and Margaret, who received money from his mother-in-law’s estate in 1699 and married William Elliot of Borthwickbrae in 1706, by which date he was deceased. The 1690 baptism was witnessed by John of Woll and William (probably of Headshaw) and the 1694 one by Alexander Murray (probably his father-in-law) and Walter of Todrig. He may have been the John, son of William, born in Ashkirk in 1646. He may have died in 1710 (as stated by Keith Scott). Rev. John (d.c.1690) minister of Hawick. He was tutor in the family of Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs, and may also have been related to that family. Based on his witnessing of documents of the Elliots of Harwood, he may have been a son of a sister of William Elliot of Harwood and Binks. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1650 and became Hawick minister in 1657. He may be the John of Hawick whose behaviour was complained about at the admission of Andrew Rutherford as minister of Eccles in 1655. He was deprived in 1662 for refusing to embrace Episcopacy, effectively being forced to leave the town; however, he is said to have preached regularly at conventicles, e.g. at Earlsdie. He apparently contemplated joining a Covenanter force in 1666, but refrained when he found out how disorganised they were. However, he was present at the Pentland rising in 1666. He fled to the north of England, preaching in Northumberland and Cumbria. In 1678 he chaired a meeting of outed ministers who opposed the more extreme views of Richard Cameron and others. He also helped Archibald, Earl of Argyll escape in 1681, giving him a Covenanter password, then arranging for him to stay with Pringle of Torwoodlee, and then go via Hawick to Northumberland and eventually to Holland (although Argyll was later captured and beheaded). He survived past the Revolution, but appears not to have resumed service as a minister. In 1658 he married Marion, daughter of John Livingsstone, the minister of Ancrum (and famous Covenanter); she died aged only 19 in 1661, and is buried at St. Mary’s. He later married Elizabeth Anderson, who died in 1698 and is buried in Greyfriars, Edinburgh. It is possible he was the ‘Mr John Scott’ recorded as resident of Lilliesleaf in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. In 1698 James Livingstone, merchant in Edinburgh, was served heir to his wife Marion (probably her brother, although it is unclear why this was so long after her death). John of Ormiston (17th C.) merchant of Hawick in the later 1600s. He was listed by James Wilson among the local landowners of the mid-to-late 17th century. He was probably related to (or confused with) James of Ormiston, and the earlier John. He was listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He witnessed a baptism (along with schoolmaster John Purdom) for mason David Rutherford in 1685. He could be the John Scott ‘ormston’ who witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Walter in 1720. John of Cockerheugh (17th C.) probably 2nd son of John of Brieryyards and brother of James of Brieryards. His father purchased ‘a merk land of Hassendeanbank’ (probably Cockerheugh) from Thomas Turnbull in 1656 and had a ‘wadset’ in his name in 1657 with the Turnbolls, involving ‘the markland of horneshole with houses'. He transferred the wad-set and lands to his brother James in 1667. He may be the John who (along with Walter, perhaps another brother) witnessed baptism for James of Brieryyards in Roberton Parish in 1681 and 1687. Also in 1681 there was a ‘disposition and assignation’ to him from Walter, probably also a brother (or other near relative). He was one of the her-itors accused in 1690 of inciting the crowd that gathered to try to stop the roof being removed from Hassendean Kirk. Along with his nephew John (son of James ‘of Brieryairdis’) he was accused of striking Charles Lithgow in this incident. He is probably the John whose son Walter inherited Cockerheugh from him in 1721, and whose daughter Bessie married Walter (‘Uncle to Crumhaugh’), also in 1721. In 1705 he was ‘of Cockerheugh Now Tennant in Langlands’ when a woman appeared before the Session to confess to being pregnant by his son Walter. John (17th C.) recorded as tenant in Skelfhill in a deed of 1663. He may be the same as one of the other Johns. John of Lees (d.c.1685) recorded being ‘of Leis’ in 1685 when his will was registered. Probably the same John is recorded being of Moormaw in a Hassendean Parish list of landowners and tenants of 1666. He was presumably related to other Scotts of Moormaw and Lees. He may be the same man as John of Catslack who paid land tax in Hassendean Parish in 1678. In 1682 he was ‘of lyes’ when (along with Adam) he witnessed a baptism for William of Clarilaw (who was probably related to him). John (17th C.) married to Janet Renwick. His children, baptised in Hawick, included Esther (b.1674) and an unnamed child (b.1680). John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Renwick in 1680. His designation appears to be ‘in Barnknow’ (presumably the farm of Barn Knowe). James Newbie and Andrew Angus were witnesses. Perhaps the same John, with his wife’s name as ‘Rennick’ had a son John baptised in 1696. He was surely related to Robert, who was also recorded in Barn Knowe in 1680. John ‘Whiteyetts’ or ‘Whitegates’, ‘Cloaks’ (17th/18th C.) merchant of Hawick. It is hard to separate the contemporary Johns, but it seems clear that the merchant and ‘Whiteyetts’ are the same man, although it is possible that the entry here describes 2 generations. In 1680 he witnessed a baptism (along with William Scott ‘Flex’) for Thomas Scott and in 1682 another for baxter James Lands. He was recorded in 1683 when he was among a group of men fined for throwing stones across the Teviot at night, injuring a couple of women who were watching their linens, and damaging the clothes being bleached there by James Brydon; since he confessed and appeared before the Bailie, he was excused. He is recorded as merchant in several deeds of 1682. In 1689 he witnessed (along with weaver James Beattie) a baptism for Walter Anderson. He could be the ‘merchant Elder’ listed in 1694 among those on the west-side of Hawick who paid the Hearth Tax. He could also be the John who witnessed a baptism for Walter Wilson in Hawick in 1698. He is ‘Whitegates’ in 1700 and ‘Whitegates junior’ in 1705 when he witnessed baptisms in Hawick for merchant Michael. He was ‘whitegates’ in 1706 when he witnessed a baptism (for workman William Riddell) along with John ‘younger Soger’ and also in 1707 when he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Walter. In 1712 he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Walter, along with tailor John ‘Casae end’. In 1716 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Scott and Elizabeth Wilson and in 1720 another for James Scott and Sarah Gledstains. He is recorded in 1701 in the Burgh Records and in 1718 in the Hawick Session Records, when he was rebuked for providing William Whaton with military-type coat and sword to ride through the town, as part of a wager. In 1725 he witnessed a baptism for wigmaker Robert Miles. He married Margaret Paterson (being recorded as both merchant and as ‘Whiteyetts’ or ‘whitegates’ in separate baptismal entries) and had children: Margaret (b.1685); William (b.1686), who fled after getting Margaret Brydon pregnant; John (b.1688); and Gideon (b.1700). In the baptismal record of 1700 he is ‘whitegates younger’, suggesting his father was also John ‘Whiteyetts’, and making it clear that the ‘younger’ referred (at least some of the time) to him and not to his son John (b.1688). The witnesses in 1688 were Bailie William Laing and Adam Ruecastle and in 1700 were Michael Scott and William Laing. He could also be the John whose son John was baptised in 1699, with Walter Anderson and William Paterson as witnesses. Either he secondly married Agnes (or Ann) Scott, or this was his son, perhaps the man born in 1686; his name is given as ‘Cloaks and Whitegates’ in some of the records. Their children included: Gideon (b.1707); Walter (b.1709); Jean (b.1712); John (b.1713); Janet (b.1715); and Thomas (b.1718). The witnesses in 1707 were Robert Ruecastle and Walter Anderson, in 1708 were Gideon of Falnash and Bailie Walter Elliot, in 1712 were shoemaker Walter Scott and William ‘Whaton’, in 1713 were James Scott ‘Doctor’ and Walter Anderson, and in 1718 were Walter Henderson and David Miller. He witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1716 for an illegitimate child of Walter Scott, brother to the Laird of Whitelaw. It is unclear if his nickname referred to a specific place, and if so, where this might have been. John (17th C.) son of Bailie Scott, although it is unclear which one. In 1685 Adam Young was fined for insulting him and his father, specifically ‘calumniating them and taking away yr. good name’ in claiming they had reset peas that had been taken by footboys of Lord Airlie’s troop (i.e. Royalists under James Ogilvy of Airlie). John of Whitehaugh (17th C.) recorded in Hawick in 1688. Along with William of Brieryyards he witnessed a baptism for James Stewart (from Clydesdale), who had twins in Hawick. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts of Whitehaugh (or if ‘John’ was perhaps an error). John (17th/18th C.) cordiner (i.e. shoemaker) in Hawick. He witnessed a baptism for Thomas Briggs in 1680 and another for wright Robert Cowan in 1688. His son Walter was witness to a Hawick sasine of 1688, while another son William served as ‘procurator’ for Patrick Cunningham in the same sasine. He is and was listed as a shoemaker among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He is probably the cordiner listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694, when he paid tax for 2 hearths. He may be the shoemaker John who witnessed baptisms for weaver ‘Black’ John Swan in 1707, for wright John Pringle in 1711, for Thomas Greenshields and for James Scott son of John ‘Laird’ in 1714, for weaver James Weens in 1720, for weaver John Weens in 1723, for gardener Walter in 1726 and for gardener William Paterson in 1728. He may be the same shoemaker (although perhaps this is another generation) who married Janet Briggs and had a son Thomas baptised in 1708, with witnesses Bailies William Laing and Walter Elliot. He was probably the senior of ‘John Scotts Elder and Younger Shoemakers’ who witnessed the baptism in 1738 of a child of shoemaker Andrew. John (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He probably farmed near Newton. John (17th C.) resident at Broadlee in Ashkirk Parish, recorded on the Hearth Tax roll in 1694. He was probably related to Andrew, who is also listed. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Headshaw in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll there. He was listed along with Andrew and James, each having a single hearth. Perhaps the same John was recorded in 1715 as cot tar in Headshaw; he married Helen Wilson (perhaps in 1715, with no wife’s name recorded) and their children included William (b.1715), Andrew (b.1717) and John (b.1726). John (17th C.) resident of Denholm on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. John (17th C.) resident at Stobicote according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He is listed right before James, and so probably related, perhaps his father. He could be an ancestor of millwright Gideon. John (17th C.) shepherd at Stobicote according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He is listed separately from another John (not shepherd) there. John (17th C.) resident at Winningtonrig in Cavers Parish in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. James and Thomas, listed after him at the same place, were presumably related to him. It is possible he is the John, in Cavers Parish, who married Margaret Scott in Hawick in 1680. John (17th C.) resident of Hummelknowes on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He may be related to later Scotts of Hummelknewed Mill. John (17th C.) ploughman at Adderstoneshiel listed among the ‘deficient’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th C.) tenant in Blackburn in Southdean Parish according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. John (17th C.) recorded as a tailor at Borthaugh on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Perhaps the same tailor John was in Mervinslaw in 1709. The witnesses were Andrew . . . , tenant in Mervinslaw, and John Rule, shepherd there. It is also possible he was the John in Borthaugh who received money from the Wilton poor box, including for the purchase of a coat in 1705. John (17th C.) rented quarter of the farm of Wiltonburn from the Duchess of Buccleuch in at least the period 1690–96 an a third in 1698. He is also listed as resident at Wiltonburn on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls; a separate John was also recorded as a wether in the same place. He witnessed a baptism for Francis in Timbersidemill in 1697. He may have been closely related to Robert or Bessie (widow of James Rid dell), who were also renting part of Wiltonburn in 1694. He may be the John recorded at Wilton burn in 1696; he married a Renwick and their children included John (b.1696), with witnesses John and Robert Scott. John (17th C.) recorded as resident at Dykeraw in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th C.) listed with the word ‘Grinna’ after his name on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. It is unclear if ‘Grinna’ is meant to indicate a place or a nickname, however, George is also listed in 1694 with the same name. John (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He is listed separately from men of the same name who were tailor, cordiner, ‘yonger’ and ‘Grinna’. He could be the same man as the smith recorded in 1693/4. John ‘younger’ (17th C.) listed in 1694 among those paying the Hearth Tax in Hawick ‘eist the water’. His name is written ‘John Scott yonger’. He could be the same man as ‘Whiteyetts’ or ‘Sodger’. John (17th C.) carrier in Hawick who was listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was listed separately from the ‘Soldier’, who was a carrier at the same time. He could be the John, who along with Robert, appears to have been listed as a carrier when witnessing a baptism for Walter Henderson in Hawick in 1680. He is probably the carrier who was a witness in 1681 in the trial of Covenanters for attacking Drumlanrig’s Tower. He was listed as a carrier when he witnessed a baptism for tailor Walter Turnbull in 1685. John ‘Sodger’ (17th C.) carrier in Hawick. In 1692 he was recorded as ‘Sodger’ when leasing 34 acres of the Kirklands of Hawick from the Duchess of Buccleuch. He was recorded among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4, where his name was listed as ‘John Scott, carrier, called soldier’. He was listed as ‘Shouldier’ and resident of the west-side of Hawick on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. In 1706 he was recorded as ‘carrier in Teviotdale and indweller in Hawick commonly called Souldier John’ when he is recorded making a bond in Selkirk with Walter Mitchell, merchant in Glasgow. In 1707 he and his son, John younger, were fined by the Council for ‘violent putting, thrusting, and expelling, under cloud of night’ the horses of William Aitken, younger, from his barn; the Aitkens were also carriers in Hawick, but it is unclear what the dispute was between the families. In 1713 he (or possibly his son) was ‘distinctionis causa called John the Souldier’ when when witnessing a baptism for Walter Paterson of Burnflat and Margaret Scott (who may have been related to him). John ‘Gouldilands’ (17th C.) resident of the west-side of Hawick according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694, when he paid for 2 hearths. He was associated with Goldielands in some way, although Charles of Goldielands was also listed on the tax rolls. In 1689 he was listed as ‘brother to Goldielands’. He married Catherine Scott and their son James was baptised in 1689, with witnesses dyer George Young and merchant James Simpson. James (b.1683) and Walter (b.1686), baptised to John and Catherine Burn in Hawick in 1683 could also be his children. It is possible that he could be the same man as ‘Uncle John’. John (17th C.) shepherd at Dryden Burnfoot according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to the John listed as shepherd at Dryden a few decades later. He is probably the John ‘in Dryden’ whose son John was baptised in Hawick in 1706, with witnesses Adam Elliot of Arkleton and James Grieve in Commonside. Perhaps the same John was recorded as herd at Drydenburn in 1713. He married Helen Hislop and their children included: Margaret (b.1702); Isobel (b.1703); Margaret (again, b.1707); Elizabeth (b.1710); and Bessie (b.1713). The witnesses in 1713 were ‘Mr’ Thomas Hume ‘probationer’ and tailor James Robson (from Roberton Parish). John (17th C.) resident at Whithope according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Possibly the same John in Whithope was recorded in a deed in 1663. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Johns. John (17th C.) resident at Whitchesters according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He may be related to Robert and Walter, who were also listed there. He could be the John who (along with Walter) was in Whitchesters in 1713 when he witnessed a baptism for herd William Cowan. John (17th C.) tenant in Burnfoot according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. This is listed under Hassendean Parish, but is clearly the farm in Wilton Parish. He may have been related to Adam of Burnfoot, who was probably Laird at that time. He may be the John who (along with William) witnessed a baptism in 1722 for James, tenant at West Burnfoot Mill and another in 1729 for George at West Burnfoot. John (17th C.) recorded among the poor of Hassendean Parish in 1694, when he was at Appletreehall. Probably the same John was listed in Appletreehall in a baptismal record of 1688. He married Jean Bell and their children included: Janet (b.1681), baptised in Hawick; an unnamed son (b.1685), baptised in Hawick; and David (b.1688), baptised in Roberton. The witnesses in 1685 were James and Stephen Greenshields (the latter being quartermaster of the weavers) and in 1688 were John Hope and George Scott. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Greenshields and their children included Helen (b.1682), James (b.1684), Bessie (b.1684) and Thomas (b.1686). John ‘Laird’ (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was father of weaver James according to a baptismal record for one of James’ children. in 1714; however, this was the James who married Janet Bryson and not James ‘Laird’, who married Helen Lunn and was Hawick’s first known Cornet. Nevertheless, he was surely related to the roughly contemporary Robert and Walter, and the earlier James, who were also nicknamed ‘Laird’. He himself witnessed a baptism in 1704 (along with James ‘Doctor’) for weaver ‘Black’ John Swan. It seems likely that he was also a weaver. John of Woll (d.c.1706) 5th son of Sir William of Harden. He purchased the lands of Woll in 1660. He was recorded in a deed of 1663. He paid tax on £533 6s 8d in Ashkirk Parish according to the 1663 Land Tax Rolls and £595 in 1678. He wrote to his brother Sir William in 1665 from Aikwood. He served as Chamberlain to the Scotts of Buccleuch for Ettrick, Selkirk and St. Mary’s in at least the periods 1657–63 and 1671–1703, when he also covered the Barony of Kirkurd. He was named as an agent of the Duchess of Buccleuch on the rental rolls for Branxholme in 1690, 1692, 1694 and 1698. He may have been the John who served as Chamberlain for the Countess of Wemyss’ rents in Teviotdale in the period 1652–66 (although there were other contemporary men of the same name); and also responsible for the Countess’ rentals in Eckford Parish. He was also factor to his brother Sir William of Harden in the period 1660–83. In 1661 he was listed as owing about £700 to the Duchess of Buccleuch for rentals in Ettrick Forest. He received the East Mains of Selkirk from Walter Scott of Harden and his wife Christian Ker in 1669 (although it is unclear who this Walter could be, given the dates). He was recorded in a bond of relief in 1673. In 1678 he acted as ‘amicable compositor’ between the parties involved when part of Selkirk Common was divided. He is recorded in deeds of 1682. Also in 1682 he was on the jury that found Alexander Home guilty of being at the head of the group of Covenanters who attacked Drumlanrig’s Tower; however, it may be that he was one of the jurors who voted to acquit. In 1683 and again in 1684 he was fined by Lord Meldrum because of his wife’s withdrawal from the parish kirk; in 1683 he was sent to the prison at Edinburgh Castle along with Gledstains from Hawick, Gledstains of Ormiston, Douglas of Bonjedward, William Ker and Gideon Scott. It was said that he paid 2600 merks to Mel- douglas of Bonjedward, William Ker and Gideon Gledstains from Hawick, Gledstains of Ormiston, sent to the prison at Edinburgh Castle along with withdrawal from the parish kirk; in 1683 he was fined by Lord Meldrum because of his wife’s guiltiness of being at the head of the group of Covenanters who attacked Drumlanrig’s Tower; however, it may be that he was one of the jurors who voted to acquit. In 1683 and again in 1684 he was fined by Lord Meldrum because of his wife’s withdrawal from the parish kirk; in 1683 he was sent to the prison at Edinburgh Castle along with Gledstains from Hawick, Gledstains of Ormiston, Douglas of Bonjedward, William Ker and Gideon Scott. It was said that he paid 2600 merks to Meldrum ‘to save the Duchess of Buccleuch’s people in that shire from more particular sufferings’. He witnessed a baptism for John Scott of Synton in 1690. In 1692 he was one of the 2 Chamberlains of Buccleuch who gave their consent for Francis Gledstains wanted to enclose part of the Flex. In 1690 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire and also Berwickshire and in 1693 he was appointed as a Parliamentary Commissioner (i.e. M.P.) for Roxburghshire, serving until 1702. Also in 1693 there is an existing letter to his nephew Walter, Earl of Tarras. He witnessed a baptism in 1693, in Ashkirk Parish, for John, younger of Gilman-scleuch. He was probably the Laird of Woll who paid tax on 8 hearths at his house in 1694. When his eldest son married in 1694 he resigned the lands of Woll to him. He may be the John ‘of Well’ who was a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1704. He married Agnes, only daughter of Robert Scott of Harwood and started the Scotts of Woll (or restarted, since there was an earlier branch of the Scotts who were Lairds of Woll). His wife, Lady Scott of Woll, was a strong supporter of the Covenant, attending field meetings (perhaps on Lilliesleaf Moor) and in 1684 was fined £300 Scots for failing to attend services at Ashkirk Kirk. His children included: Walter, who succeeded; John, who married Margaret Scott; Gideon; 2 other sons, who died before 1710 without having sons; Agnes (b.c.1675), who married Alexander Veitch of Glen in 1698; and Margaret, who married John, younger of Gilman-scleuch in 1693. John (17th/18th C.) described as ‘in Hawick’ in 1698 when his son James was baptised in Hawick. This was the day before the baptism of a child of Gideon Scott of Falnash and with the same witnesses, Adam Elliot of Arkleton and ‘Mr’ Archibald Gledstains in Northhouse. John of Langhope (17th/18th C.) son of Walter of Langhope and St. Leonards. He appears to have purchased Langhope from his father in 1688, and was served heir to these lands of his father’s in 1691. However, later in 1691 he and his wife Janet sold the lands to Adam of Bowhill. Sir John of Ancrum (d.1712) son of Patrick of Langshaw and Elizabeth Simson, and descended from the Scotts of Balwearie. He is sometimes called ‘of Kirkstyle’ (in Perthshire), although his father probably sold those lands. He is also sometimes called ‘of Langshaw’, like his father, although those lands would go to his younger brother Francis. In 1654 he bought the lands of Ormiston from William, Earl of Roxburgh and was the ‘fiar of Langshaw’ who was the son of Patrick of Langshaw. He was listed as ‘fiar of Langshaw’ in 1661 when he and his partners owed money to the Scotts of Buccleuch for duties on the coal-fields of Sheriffhall. He was recorded as ‘of Langshaw’ and Chamberlain to the Duchess of Buccleuch in 3 deeds of 1663. In 1663 he is recorded holding lands in Melrose Parish that had previously belonged to Lord Elibank. He is recorded in document in the Melrose Regality records, relating to the ‘multures’ of Langshaw and other matters in 1663–68. In 1668 he had a sasine of the lands of ‘Wouplaw’. He acquired Ancrum from Charles Kerr, 2nd Earl of Ancrum. He had a charter of the lands and barony of Ancrum in 1670 and in 1671 became the 1st Baronet of Ancrum (in the baronetcy of Nova Scotia). He was Chamberlain to the Scotts of Buccleuch for Teviotdalehead for the years 1660–62 (as Scott of Langshaw) and 1665–70 (as Scott of Ancrum). He was appointed Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire in 1663 and Depute Sheriff of Roxburghshire in 1664. He represented Roxburghshire in Parliament in 1665. He was recorded in a deed of 1673. He paid the land tax on £2400 in Ancrum Parish in 1678. He was tried in 1680 for speaking against the King and the Privy Council. He was a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1685. In 1694 he paid tax on 19 hearths for his estate at Ancrum. In 1700 he was made a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh, in right of his deceased father, Patrick of Langshaw. He was one of the Roxburghshire heritors who petitioned Parliament in 1700 and was on the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1704. In the early 1700s he was accused of embezzling money during the minority of Anna, Duchess of Buccleuch. In 1652 he married Elizabeth, eldest daughter of Francis (or perhaps William) Scott of Mangerton, and they had 5 sons and 5 daughters. He secondly married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir William Bennet of Grubet, and had 2 further daughters, from whom are descended Sir Hector Maclean Hay of Alderston and Sir William Henry Walsingham Calder. In 1708 he lastly married Barbara, daughter of Walter Ker of Littledean; when the local minister refused to proclaim the banns 3 times in a single day, he took his intended bride to Cornhill where they were married. His children were: Sir Patrick, who succeeded; Charles of Palace Hill, who married Margaret, sister of John, 5th Lord Rutherford; John (b.1702), a merchant, who was apprenticed in Edinburgh in 1677, spent time in London and Jamaica, settled in New York and whose descendant, John Morin Scott, was Mayor of Philadelphia; Andrew, who became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1693, and participated in funding for the disastrous Darien colony; William, an advocate, who was imprisoned for taking part in the uprising of 1715; Elizabeth, who married Sir William Elliott of Stobs; Anna (or Anne), who married William Scott of Raeburn and secondly John Scott of Syston; Cecilia (or Cicely), who married William Ainslie of Blackhill; Jean, who married John Murray of Bowhill; Elizabeth, who married John Erskine of Shielfield; Margaret, who married Thomas Scott of Whitslade, and later Sir David Murray of Stenhouse; and Christian, who married Sir Thomas Calder of Muirtoine. John ‘Wyndheid’ (d.c.1712) married to Bessie Paisley. His nickname may have come from living at the head of Walter’s Wynd, suggesting he was related to the later Walter (although it is possible that the Cross Wynd or Kirk Wynd are meant). In 1676 he was among a group of Hawick people found guilty of using faulty measures; along with Robert Taylor, he was specifically found to have a half-peck that was ‘ane half-fourpitt short’. There he was referred to as ‘Wyndheads’. With his wife Bessie Paisley his children included: John (b.1680); John (again, b.1685); William (b.1687); and Bessie (b.1690). The witnesses in 1685 were James Lands and William Douglas. Then probably the same John married Helen Stoddart in Hawick in 1709 and had a child Archibald (b.1711). He was John ‘called Wyndhead late servant to Robert Robson’ in 1711, with witnesses Dand Gray in Whitlaw and Andrew Riddell in Goldielands. In 1712 his widow was called before the Kirk Session and rebuked for harassing her neighbours. He may be related to Robert ‘Wyndhead’, recorded in 1701, George ‘Wyndhead’ also recorded about the same time and Walter and another John ‘Wyndhead’ recorded a little later. John ‘Causeyend’ (d.bef. 1715) tailor in Hawick. His nickname designated where he lived, although it is unclear exactly where this was. In 1704 he was ‘taylor in Hawick near to ye Casyend’. In 1712 he was witness to a baptism for shoemaker Walter and was distinguished as ‘Casae end’ from the other witness, John ‘Whitegates’. He may have been a descendant of the earlier James at the ‘Casa End’. He may be the John, ‘taylier’ who witnessed a Hawick sasine in 1688. He is probably the tailor John listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694 and the tailor listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. In 1707 he was ‘taylor, and towne tresawrer’ when the 2 Bailies were fined for their behaviour at the Common Riding. He was a member of the Council when it granted a bond (dated 1710, but recorded in the Town Book in 1711) to provide money for the Master of the new Grammar School. He married Isobel Harkness and their children included: Elizabeth (b.1700); John (b.1702); Robert (b.1704); George (b.1707); Isobel and Margaret (b.1709); and Francis (b.1711). The witnesses in 1700 were glover John and merchant William, in 1702 were Bailies Robert Hardie and George Martin, in 1704 were Bailies Robert Hardie and John Binnie and in 1709 were Bailies William Laing and Walter Elliot. In 1715 his widow was involved in a dispute with Robert Deans over who should sit in a particular pew in St. Mary’s. He may be the John described as ‘sometimes tailyor in Hawick’ in 1720 when his daughter Elizabeth married Town Clerk Walter Gledstains; however, if he died before 1715 then this would have to have been a different tailor John. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Rashiegrain. He married Marion Scott (also from Hawick Parish) in 1702. John ‘Uncle John’ (17th/18th C.) resident of the Hawick area. His nickname was recorded in 1702 when he was a witness to a birth for Walter in Goldielands, with the other witness being Robert of Tandlaw; it seems likely he was related to the Goldielands and Tandlaw branches, but it is otherwise unclear who he was. Presumably his nickname distinguished him from other contemporary Johns, but its meaning is unclear. He married Jean Stuart (also from Hawick Parish) in Hawick in 1704, when he was ‘distinctionis causa called uncle John’. Their children included: John (b.1705); Robert (b.1707); and Walter (b.1709). In the 1705 baptismal record he is stated to be in Blackcleuch and the witnesses were Robert in Blackcleuch (perhaps his father) and John in Falnash (perhaps another relative). His nickname is again given in the 1707 baptismal record. the nickname is recorded once more. John (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1700 as ‘brother-german to the Laird of Tishilow’ when he was made a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh, gratis ‘by request of dean convener’. He was probably brother of Walter, the last Laird of Tushielaw. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Riddell in 1696 and their children included Robert (b.1706), John (b.1708) and Agnes (b.1710). John (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Marion Bell and their children included Alison (b.1708), Andrew (b.1713) and William (b.1715). John (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish, recorded as a servant at Synton Mains in 1709. He married Helen Brown in 1706 and their children included: Janet (b.1707); Walter (b.1709); Magdalen (b.1714); and Helen (b.1716). John (17th/18th C.) glover in Hawick. He witnessed baptisms in 1700 for flesher Robert Renwick (along with merchant William) and for tailor John, in 1704 for Robert Scott, ‘Pope’ and for smith James Scott and in 1709 for weaver Patrick Forman. In 1707 he was ‘onlawed for deriding and mocking the bailie’. He witnessed baptisms in 1714 for shoemaker Robert Allan, in 1717 for merchant Walter Elliot and Bessie Scott, and in 1718 for shoemaker Walter Scott and for merchant William Dickson. He was appointed in 1718 to try to raise money for a new Kirk clock in Hawick. In 1720 (along with candlemaker John) he witnessed baptisms for merchant John Cavers, for merchant William Dickson and for merchant James Aitkin. He may be the ‘John Scott Shoemaker’ who witnessed a baptism for weaver Andrew Jardine in 1721. In 1725 he witnessed a baptism for Andrew Turnbull and he witnessed others for gardener Walter in 1740 and for shoemaker George Gardner in 1744. He married Mary (also recorded as Marion and Martha) Rutherford and their children included: William (b.1701); William (again, b.1703); Robert (b.1705); Margaret (b.1708); John (b.1711); Rachel (b.1713); Thomas (b.1715); Jean (b.1718); and David (b.1721). William Scott, shoemaker, witnessed the 1705 baptism and so may have been his father or brother. The 1708 witnesses were Gideon Scott of Falnash and Bailie Walter Elliot and in 1718 were Alexander Scott of Boonraw and merchant John Robson. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Jean Murray in 1707 and their son Thomas was baptised in 1708. John (d.1710) tenant in Falnash. He was recorded in 1711 as ‘younger in Falnash’ when his widow Janet Aitchison married William Scott in Skelfhill. He may have been related to Gideon, ‘Auld Falnash’. He is probably the John in Falnash who witnessed baptisms in 1703 for James Stewart, smith in Falnash, in 1704 for William Anderson in Ramsaycleuchburn, in 1705 for John in Blackcleuch and in 1709 for Archibald in Hislop. He was ‘tenant in Falnesh’ when he married Margaret Anderson in 1702; she was daughter of Edward Aitchison, tenant in Eweslees. They had children: Margaret (b.1703); Marion (b.1704); Helen (b.1706); Bessie (b.1708); and John (b.1711). The witnesses in 1706 were Robert Laidlaw and Andrew Morton. He was already deceased in early 1711 when his son John was baptised in Hawick, his father-in-law Edward Aitchison agreeing to arrange for the education of the child; the witnesses were Archibald, tenant in Hislop and John Armstrong. John (1659/20–1738) tenant in Denholm. He is buried in Cavers Old Cemetery, along with his son William (1703/4–49). He could be the resident of Cavers Parish who in 1702 was probably at Denholm when his son William was baptised. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1710 he was recorded as servant to Robert Robson. He married Helen Stoddart and their children included: Archibald (b.1711); Janet (b.1715); Bessie (b.1717); and Helen (b.1720). The witnesses in 1710 were George Scott ‘Wyndhead’ and merchant Robert Robson. John (17th/18th C.) carrier in Hawick Parish. He was recorded being ‘called John Scott Acreknow’ (to distinguish him from other Johns) when his son William was baptised in Hawick in 1711. The witnesses were William Gledstads and Alexander Hislop, both tailors in Hawick. John (17th/18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He is hard to separate from another shoemaker of the same name. In 1722 he witnessed a baptism for merchant James Hardie (on the same day that one of his own children was baptised). He married Margaret Briggs in 1705 and their children included: Janet (b.1706); Jean (b.1711); Margaret (b.1713); James (b.1716); and Helen (b.1722). The witnesses in 1716 were Bailie George Martin and gardener James Falsyde and in 1722 was his brother Walter (perhaps the shoemaker, or else the servant of the minister) and student John Cunningham. He may be partly confounded with the earlier shoemaker of the same name. John (17th/18th C.) described as a skinner in Hawick when his son William became an apprentice baxter in Edinburgh in 1717. He may be related to the earlier John of West Port (given the name and trade coincidence). He may be the same John as the glover. John (17th/18th C.) recorded being ‘in ffalnesh’ (i.e. Falnash) in Cavers Parish in 1716 when his son Thomas was baptised in Robertson Parish. It is unclear how he was related to Scots in Robertson or at Falnash (e.g. the earlier John in Falnash, who died in 1710). John of Davington (1680–c.1710) eldest son of Francis of Davington. Dying without children, he was succeeded by his brother Robert. John (17th/18th C.) younger son of Scott of Bonchester (probably Walter), he is possibly the same man as John of Ashtrees. He took part in the 1715 rebellion, along with William Kerr of Abbotrule. He was banished as a result of this. A story (recounted by Walter Deans in 1887) was told of his time in the colonies, labouiring at a government building, when the Governor’s new wife recognised him, saying ‘That stane wad row easier doon Buneestir Hill, than up there’, whereon he recognised her as a local woman of lowly birth who had once been whipped through the streets of Hawick! Keeping quiet about this, his conditions were improved and he was later sent back on a ship to Britain, but lived and died on Jersey rather than in Rulewater. George Tancred states that in 1740 he was father of a girl aged 8 and a boy aged 5. He was probably nephew of George (son of Thomas in Bonchester), who was declared a fugitive in 1684 for nonconformity. John of Gilmanscleuch (17th/18th C.) son of Francis. He also appears to have served as a Chamberlain to the Scots of Buccleuch. In 1678 he paid the land tax of more than £800 in Selkirkshire. In 1690 ‘John Scotts, elder and younger of Gilmenscleugh’ were on the Commission of Supply for Selkirkshire (i.e. his son John also served, although after this it is unclear whether he or his son are being described). It was his son John (and not him) who married Margaret, daughter of John of Woll. It is unclear who he married. Michael, son of John ‘of Gilmingscleugh’, recorded in a deed in 1663 and Robert, son of John ‘of Gilmerscleugh’, recorded in a deed of 1673, were probably his sons. John (d.bef. 1710) 2nd son of John of Woll and grandson of Sir William of Harden. He married Margaret Scott and they had a daughter, Agnes (although this could be confusion with John of Gilmanscleuch). He died before having male heirs, however. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Margaret Telfer and their son James was baptised in 1684. John (17th C.) married Margaret Henderson in 1686. They were both from Robertson Parish. Their son William was baptised in Ashirk Parish in 1689, with witnesses Thomas Wallace and Thomas Scott (who may have been related). John (17th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Margaret Paterson and their children included: Margaret (b.1685); William (b.1686); John (b.1688); Gideon (b.1700); and Janet (b.1702). John (17th C.) younger son of Robert of Horsleyhill. In 1687 he became an apprentice to merchant Robert Campbell in Edinburgh. John of Gilmanscleuch (17th/18th C.) son of John, he was described as ‘younger of Gilmanscleuch’ in the period 1685–90 when they both served the county of Selkirkshire. In 1689 he was appointed as an officer in the local Militia. In 1690 ‘John Scotts, elder and younger of Gillmenschleugh’ were on the Commission of Supply for Selkirkshire. He was still ‘younger off Gillmenschluich’ in 1693 when a daughter of his was baptised. In 1704 he was a Commissioner of Supply for Selkirkshire. In 1707 he was involved in a bond with Francis Scott of Baillielee and Robert Scott ‘in Overdelorain’. Sometime before 1712 he lost his estates because of debts, including Gilmenschleuch, which went to Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch. About 1728 he was appointed Surveyor of Roads. He married Margaret Scott, daughter of John of Woll (perhaps in Ashkirk in 1722), and their daughter Agnes was baptised in Ashkirk Parish, with witnesses John of Woll and George Currer. His son and heir was probably William, last to be called ‘of Gillmenschleuch’. His son Robert became a mason’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1730. Rev. John (d.1741) minister of Carluke. He was licensed by Lanark Presbytery in 1693 and ordained at Carluke in 1694. In 1701 he was made a Burgess of Glasgow (gratis); alternatively he could be the ‘preacher of the Gospel’ who was made a Burgess in 1712 or ‘one of the ministers of Glasgow’ who was made a Burgess in 1713. He became minister at St. Paul’s Glasgow in 1713. He married Grizel, son of Carluke minister Peter Kid; she died in 1734. Their children were: Peter, minister of Leigh Kirk, Paisley; John; Mary (1704–64); Elizabeth (d.1725); Sussanah (d.1714); and Barbara. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, recorded as tenant in Branxholme in 1702, 1703, 1709 and 1713. He witnessed baptisms for Thomas ‘hutson’ in 1702, for Walter Scott, herd in Branxholme Town in 1703, for Robert Tudhope (herd in Over Southfield) in 1709 and for carrier Robert in Branxholme Town (along with William in Branxholme Town) in 1712. He married Isobel Thomson in 1701 and their children included William (b.1702), with witnesses James Ogilvie and William Scott, both also in Branxholme. He may be the same John who was at Branxholme Mains in the 1690s. His son-in-law was William Scott, who had a son Robert baptised in 1709; presumably this means he had a daughter in about the 1680s. John of Gorrenberry (d.bef. 1729) son of Francis. In 1691 he was served heir to his father’s lands of Adderstone and Adderstoneshiel. In 1692 and 1694 he served as a Commissioner for assessing the rentals for the Duchess of Buccleuch. He took the money from the Orrock Bequest and paid interest to the Hawick heritors in the early 18th century. He must be the owner of ‘Gorranbries Hous’ in either Cavers or Kirkton Parish, which was taxed for having 8 hearths in 1694; it is not stated where his house was, but it seems likely to have been at Adderstone. He was ‘of Gorrenberrie’ in 1695 when he contributed £200 to the Darien Scheme. He appears to have have held lands in Kirkton Parish, since his servant William Lorraine was resident in that parish when he is recorded marrying in 1707; but since William was married in Edinburgh it suggests he also had a house there. He is probably the Laird of Gorrenberry who was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1704. In 1722 there is record of a payment made to the Burgh for the use of the bell for a burial relating to him. In 1723 he was mentioned in the Hawick Session book for his interest (presumably meaning return on his money) in ‘ye building of ye Schoolhouse for ye Grammar School’. In 1724 there was again deliberation about ‘the affaire of the Money in Gorrenberrie’s hands for a Schol-house and Schoolmaster’s house’. He married Margaret, daughter of Charles Kerr of Abbotrule. Their children included: Francis, who succeeded; Anna (b.1695), baptised in Hawick; John (b.1698); Charles (b.1700), baptised in Hawick; James (b.1703), baptised in Hawick, who became a surgeon’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1718; Margaret (c.1704–68), who married John Elliot of Whithaugh; Ann (again, b.1709), who was the 3rd wife of Walter Scott of Harden; and another daughter who may have married Douglas of Cavers (but this could be confusion with an earlier generation). The witnesses in 1695 were Archibald douglas and James Gledstains of that Ilk, in 1698 were ‘Mr’ Alexander Riddell and James Heatley, in 1700 were William Kerr of Abbotrule (his brother-in-law) and James Gledstains of Cocklaw, and in 1703 were William Kerr of Abbotrule (again) and Francis Gledstains of Whitlaw. He may be the John of Gorrenberry who married Janet, daughter of Robert Elliot of Larriston in 1716 (as her second husband). John (17th/18th C.) resident in Adderstoneshiel. His son Walter was baptised in Kirkton Parish in 1709. James (b.1707) may also have been his son. He may be the ‘servitor’ to John Tait in Adderstoneshiel whose daughter Agnes was baptised in Kirkton Parish in 1720. John (17th/18th C.) recorded in the 1718 survey of the lands of the Duchess of Buccleuch as owner of a small piece of land within the East Mains of Hawick, extending to 7 acres, 3 roods and 27 perches. He is surely the same as one of the contemporary Johns, but it is not clear which one. John 'Young Sodger' (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, presumably son of 'Sodger'. In 1704 he was John 'younger Soger' when he (along with John 'Whitegates') witnessed a baptism for workman William Riddell. In 1707 he is 'Souldier younger' when he and William Aitken, younger, witnessed a baptism for carrier Henry Paterson. He is also mentioned in the parish records of 1714 answering 'for his sin of adultery'; he is thus one of the earliest adulterers explicitly on record in Hawick Parish! He is described as 'sojer' and 'younger of the Wester Kirk Style'. He was ordered to appear in sackcloth on the next Sunday, but failed to do so, appearing some months later in front of the Presbytery, along with his co-sinner where they were rebuked and referred back to the Session (presumably to pay a fine). In 1716 he is 'Souldier' when his son John was baptised, the mother being Isobel 'Lithen' and the record labelled 'Adult:'. In 1724 he was described as 'distinctions causa, called the young Souldier' when rebuked along with Thomas Weddell for breaking the Sabbath. It seems likely that his name was to distinguish him from John Scott, 'Sodger', who may of course have been his father. Walter Scott 'Soldier', recorded in the 1740s, may have been his son. John 'Herd' (17th/18th C.) listed as being 'called herd' among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He is probably the 'John Scott herd' listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694. He married Margaret Purdom in Hawick in 1700, when he is recorded as 'John Scott called Herd'. He is further recorded with the same nickname in 1714 when he received money from Hawick Session to help buy a horse 'for carrying his motherless child in ye countrie in ye summer', the charity being repeated the following year for a similar purpose. He may have been Town Herd, or otherwise worked as a shepherd, or this could have been an unrelated nickname. John (17th/18th C.) tailor of Wilton Parish. He was living at Borthwickhaugh in 1709 when his son John was baptised. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Agnes Scott. Their children included Thomas (b.1718). John (17th/18th C.) candlemaker, who was an Elder of Hawick Kirk. In 1717 he was directed to collect monies from 'Whitla, Whitlahaugh, Flexes and Burnflat', suggesting he may have lived in this area. He witnessed baptisms in 1717 for merchant Walter Elliot and Bessie Scott, in for Robert Manuel in Hawick and in 1720 (along with glover John) for merchant John Cavers and for merchant William Dickson. In 1722 he was appointed to collect from 'ye Meekle bridge to Wm. Dickson's house', although it is unclear to which bridge this referred. He witnessed further baptisms in 1725 for carrier Walter Bryson, 1726 for John Fairgrieve and for gardener Walter in 1726 and in 1727 for William Ekron. He may also be the John who witnessed several baptisms in 1728. He married Janet Renwick and their children included Christian (b.1709) and Elspeth (b.1709). The witnesses in 1709 were baker John whillians and merchant William Dickson. Probably the same candlemaker secondly married Margaret Clerk and had children Margaret (b.1714), Jane (b.1717), James (b.1718), Helen (b.1720), Christian (again, b.1722), John (b.1725) and Helen (again, b.1727). The witnesses in 1714 were Bailie Walter Elliot and William Hodge, in 1720 were Walter Purdom and Francis Ruecastle and in 1722 were Bailie George Martin and merchant William Dickson. John (17th/18th C.) elder of Hawick Kirk (distinct from the candlemaker). He lived at Branxholme, and may have been related to William, 'elder in Branxholmtoun'; the 2 were charged with collecting monies from the Branxholme area in 1717. He may also be the ‘James’ (perhaps a transcription error) mentioned as being one of the aged elders in 1718. John (17th/18th C.) smith in Hawick who was admitted as a Burgess in 1692. He is also listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He witnessed baptisms for James Grieve (from Wilton) in Hawick in 1701 and for James Henderson in Weensland in 1709. He was listed as a smith and member of the Council when it granted a bond (dated 1710, but recorded in the Town Book in 1711) to provide money for the Master of the new Grammar School. He witnessed baptisms in 1711 (along with Francis Gledstains) for James Grieve, in 1712 and 1716 for William Sanderson (tenant in Hawick), in 1718 for Robert Scott, ‘Wyndhead’, in 1720 for merchant James Beattie, in 1723 (along with John Chisholm, ‘ Laird ‘) for gardener John Tait, for waulker William Hood, for gardener Robert Ker and for weaver Walter White, in 1725 for workman William Henderson, and in 1729 for shoemaker George Oliver. He is probably the John ‘smith in ye Wynd’ who witnessed a baptism (along with Francis Gledstains) for weaver Walter White in 1718, and the John who witnessed a baptism for the same man in 1731. In 1720 he witnessed a baptism for John

Chisholme ‘Laird’. He could be the John who was a Bailie in the 1720s. He married Jean ‘Betye’ (i.e. Beattie) (from Westerkirk) in Hawick in 1703, with children including: William (b.1704); Margaret (b.1708); Robert (b.1716); and Jean (b.1718). The witnesses in 1704 were Walter Wilson and merchant Walter Oliver, in 1708 were merchant Walter Wilson, James Falsyde and John Shiel and in 1716 were wright Francis Gledstains and merchant James Simpson. In 1721 probably the same smith married Elspeth ‘Red’ (probably Reid), who was widow of George Hardie. In 1722 he is recorded being paid 12 shillings ‘for yell [ale] when the ded bell was mended’. In 1723, along with another smith, James Beattie, he was asked to explain himself to the Hawick Session about ‘entertaining all the night in his house Janet Anderson’ who was involved in a ‘scandal’ in Ettrick Parish. John (17th/18th C.) son of Robert in Skelfhill. In Hawick Parish in 1700 he married Margaret Armstrong. John (17th/18th C.) recorded as ‘John Scot at ye port’ in 1709 when his son Walter was baptised in Hawick. The witnesses were weavers John Swan and John Swan (suggesting that he was probably also a weaver and from the West-end). He was probably related to the West Port Scotts. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Thorbrand and their daughter Janet was baptised in 1704. John (17th/18th C.) wigmaker in Hawick. He married Margaret Ker. In 1709 his daughter Anna was baptised, with witnesses Bailies Robert Hardie and James Burn, as well as ‘bailiffs’ William Laing and Walter Elliot. There are several other children who could be his. John (c.1678–1754/5) shepherd at Lymielochie. He married Jean Goodfellow, probably daughter of Archibald from the Bewcastle area, whose brother William farmed nearby; she died in 1783, aged 93. He had sons Thomas (1713/4–42), Robert (shepherd at Merrylaw) and William (‘the Auld Mason’). John of Weens (d.1727) probably descended from Andrew of Weens. He was one of the last Scott owners of Weens estate. He paid the land tax in Hobkirk Parish in 1678, for ‘Weymes’, valued at £200. He was listed in 1680 among local men convicted for being Covenanters, the accusations including attacking ‘the Tower and Castle of Hawick’. He is also recorded in a bond of 1682. In the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls he was taxed for having 3 hearths at Weens. He is listed as John ‘of Weens’ when he was a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1695. He may have married a daughter of Rev. James Ainslie of Minto. His son was also called John. In 1722 he and his son made an arrangement with Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs, whereby they gave up their pasturage rights to Feu-Rule Common in exchange for 1/5th of the land of the Common (now Hallrule farm). He was probably the Laird of Weens for whose burial the funeral bells were rung in Hawick in 1727. In 1729 his daughter Betsy married Sam Oliver, schoolmaster at Hobkirk. John (17th/18th C.) tenant in Allanhaugh Mill. In 1715 he married Euphen, daughter of Robert Riddell. Their children included: Robert (b.1718); and John (b.1725). The 1725 baptism was witnessed by Walter Riddell and Walter Nixon. John (17th/18th C.) married Janet Bell in Ashkirk in 1723. Perhaps he is the same John who earlier married Marion Bell. John (17th/18th C.) millwright in Allanhaugh Mill. He appears to be distinct from the tenant there of the same name, but may have been related. He married Elizabeth (or ‘Bessie’) Blyth and their children included: Andrew (b.1725); Elspeth (b.1726); and Andrew (again, b.1730). The same couple appear to have had a daughter Helen baptised in Wilton in 1728. The witnesses in 1725 were 2 William Riddells in Allanhaugh. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. His son Thomas (b.1715) was baptised in Ashkirk in 1715. The mother was Helen Laidlaw (presumably from Ashkirk) and the couple were married earlier that same year, although the child was ‘begotten in fornicatione’. John (17th/18th C.) Beadle of Hawick Kirk in the early part of the 18th century. He was son of Walter, who died in 1717, and whom he replaced. In 1718 he was already ‘beddell’ when he witnessed baptisms for William Reid, tenant in Raesknowe, for William Elliot, tenant in Crumhaugh and for John Napier. He witnessed further baptisms in 1719 for William Langlands, in 1720 for a posthumously born child, for 2 ‘Fornicators’ and for maltman William Hardie and in 1722 for Robert Scoon in Brauxholmtown and for Clerk to the Regality Thomas Watson. He is probably the ‘Walter Scott Beddell’ recorded in a 1722 baptismal record; this is presumably an error for his father’s name. In 1720 he was rebuked for taking several days to return from Selkirk Fair, missing the Sabbath in Hawick. In 1723 he was witness for the baptisms of 2 illegitimate children and he witnessed other baptisms in 1724 and 1725. Also in 1724 he was severely rebuked for drunkenness, ‘(as he expressed it) he was mistaken with Drink’ and unable to bring another person before the Session for the same crime. After much debate he submitted to the censure of the Session, was rebuked before the congregation, and kept his job. John (17th/18th C.) tenant in Over Southfield. He was witness to a baptism for John Graham in Allanhaugh Mill in 1725. John ‘Wyndhead’ (17th/18th C.) recorded in 1723 when he witnessed a baptism for Walter Henderson in Hawick. He may be the same as one of the other Johns. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Henderson and their children included: Robert (b.1721); and Charles (b.1724); and Robert (again, b.1729). The witnesses in 1729 were Benjamin Thomson and Patrick Angus and he may be described as a weaver (although it is hard to read). Sir John of Ancrum (d.1746) son of Sir Patrick, he was the 3rd Baronet. He is probably the ‘John, yr., Esq., of Ancrum’ who was made a Burgess of Canongate (gratis) in 1724/5. He was younger in 1727 when listed among the people owing money to the deceased William Nisbet of Dirleton (his father-in-law). He was made a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh in 1737, in right of his father. He was listed on a memorial of 1738, claiming the right of the Lordship of Rutherford for John Scott of Belford. In 1714 he married Christian, daughter of William Nisbet of Dirleton and she died in 1738. His children included: Patrick (d.1742), who was an army officer and died before his father; Sir William, who succeeded; John of Craigintinnie (b.1729), who also took the surname Nisbet, and whose son John became 5th Baronet of Ancrum; Patrick; Walter (b.1733); Margaret; and Christian (1730–88).

John of Harden (d.1734) younger son of Gideon. He succeeded to Harden in 1720, after the death of his brother Walter, becoming 9th Laird. In 1720 he was made a Burgess and Guild Brother of Glasgow, gratis. He was probably a minor when he inherited the lands, since they were run by curators until 1723. About 1724–26 there were legal proceedings over claims on part of the Harden estates by his former ‘tutors and curators’, Walter of Whitfield, William of Thirlestane and Walter of Woll. He married Jean Erskine, daughter of Alexander, 4th Earl of Kellie. They had daughters: Anne, who married Thomas Shairp of Houston; and Mary Lilias (said to be a great beauty). A document of 1726 dispones Harden House as jointly owned with his wife. Dying without male issue, the estate went to his uncle Walter (of Whitfield), second son of the Earl of Tar- ras. He granted Harden (including Mabonlaw and Highchesters) to his uncle Walter in 1731, with the instrument of sasine registered in 1732. His testaments are recorded in the Commissariat of Lauder in 1735, 1736, 1737 and 1740. John of Whitslade (d.bef. 1727) 2nd son of Thomas, he succeeded to the family estates after the death of his brother Thomas. He thus became the 8th and last Laird. He sold off the Whitslade estate about 1722 (having had the lands ‘disjoined’ in 1714), it having been in the family for around 6 generations. At that point the estate included Castle-side, the Redfordgreens, Ashkirk farm, Ashkirk Mill, Salenside and Broadlee. He leased the lands of Harden Mains for 2 years in 1723, leading to legal disputes involving his brother Walter with Walter of Whitfield after his death. He died unmarried, ending this branch of the family. He was said to have been 14th in descent from the Baron of Buccleuch. Thus the direct representation of the Synton branch passed to the Scotts of Todrig. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Witton Parish. He was recorded at ‘Bridihall’ (i.e. Brieryhill) in 1724. He married Helen Scott and their children included Thomas (b.1717), Agnes (b.1719), Helen (b.1722), Helen (again, b.1724) and Robert (b.1726). The witnesses in 1724 were David Taylor and John Miller. He is probably the John who on the same day in 1724 (along with David Tay- lor) witnessed a baptism for John Miller. John (17th/18th C.) tenant in Hawick Shiel. In 1719 he married Agnes, daughter of Alexander Thom- son (‘sometimes tenant in Whitchesters’). Their children included: Margaret (b.1721); James (b.1724); and Agnes (b.1729). The witnesses in 1721 were Walter Nixon and James Scott. John (17th/18th C.) tenant at Broadlee in Ashkirk Parish. He married Elspeth Scott and their children included: William (b.1713); Janet (b.1724); and Mary (b.1726). John (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Euphan Scott (perhaps in 1718, with no wife’s name given in the record) and their children included: James (b.1719); Rachel (b.1723); William (b.1728); and Elizabeth (b.1731). Thomas (b.1733), baptised in Ashkirk, with no mother’s name given, may also be his child. It is possible he is the same man as the John whose wife was Elspeth Scott. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He is recorded in Hawick Shiel in 1721 and is ‘coater in Fennick’ in 1723. He married Janet Henry. They they had a son William baptised in 1721, on the same day as a child of another John (with the same witnesses), who was recorded as tenant in Hawickshiel. They also had an unnamed son baptised in 1723. Bailie John (17th/18th C.) merchant of Hawick. He was recorded in 1728 when he witnessed baptisms for shoemaker Robert Oliver, for Robert Hardie and in 1729 when he witnessed a baptism for writer Thomas Watson. He is also recorded in 1730 when he witnessed a baptism for Walter Scott ‘junior surgeon’. He could also be the John who witnessed the wedding in Edinburgh for the same Walter, and hence was probably related to him. Perhaps the same ‘late Bailie’ John witnessed a baptism for merchant Andrew Riddell in Hawick in 1738 (when another John appears to have been Bailie). In 1724 he was rebuked for his ‘irregular marriage’ with Anna, daughter of William Laing and Jane Thorbrand, widow of John Watson (who had been Clerk to the Regality in Hawick). They were married in Hawick by John Middleton, with witnesses Andrew Turnbull (mason) and Walter Gledstains (lawyer); the inclusion of a Gledstains suggests they may have been adherents of the Episcopalian church. They had a child John (b.1728), with witnesses John Laing (surely related to his wife) and Robert Elliot (although it is not clear which one). John (17th/18th C.) tenant in Kershope on Yarrow. In 1752 he was deceased when his only daughter Jean had a discharge with the Burgh of Selkirk. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, recorded at Priesthaugh in 1726 when his daughter Isabel was baptised. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, recorded at Doecleuch in 1726 and 1729. His children included: Jane (b.1726); and John (b.1729). John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Blyth and their children included: Andrew (b.1725); Elspeth (b.1726); and Andrew (again, b.1730). The witnesses in 1726 were William and Robert Thomson. John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Outerside in 1720 when his son John was baptised. Perhaps the same John was at Deanburnhaugh in 1722 when his daughter Margaret was baptised. There are several potential marriages and many children who could be his. John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at at Mains in 1723 when his son William was baptised. Perhaps the same John was at Todshaw in 1725 when his son William was baptised. Perhaps the same John was in Todshawhaugh in 1765 when listed among the men selected to perambulate the boundaries of Wilton Common. John (18th C.) tenant in Stirches in the mid-1730s, as recounted in evidence given regarding the division of Wilton Common in 1764. John (18th C.) son of William of Burnhead. In 1705 he became an apprentice feltmaker to Alexander Bowie in Edinburgh. John (18th C.) resident of Kirkton. His snuff box is in the Museum, labelled ‘John Scott in Kirkton – his box 1735’. It is unclear who he was. John (18th C.) recorded at Branxholme in 1734 when his daughter Isobel was baptised in Roberton Parish. Presumably his family or his wife came from the Borthwick valley. He could be the same as one of the other Johns. John (18th C.) tenant in Hawick Shiel. He married Bessy Goodfellow. Their son John was baptised in 1738, with witnesses John Telfer, ‘Kirk Officer’ and William Oliver, tailor. He may be the same as the earlier tenant in Hawick Shiel of the same name (if he married twice). John (18th C.) resident of Askirk Parish. He married Magdalene Bowie in 1739 and their son John was baptised in 1741. John (18th C.) weaver in Hawick Parish. He witnessed a couple of baptisms in 1738. Perhaps the same weaver witnessed baptisms in 1719 for William Reid, tenant in Raesknowe and for William Hislop, servant in Allanhaugh Mill, and in 1726 for weaver Walter. In 1719 he was separately recorded as weaver and as Beadle; if this was not an error, then he is the same John as the Beadle. He may be the weaver who witnessed a baptism for tailor Thomas Kay in 1739. John of Ashtrees (18th C.) probably descended from the Scotts of Bonchester. He was possibly 3rd son of Walter, 3rd Laird of Nether Bonchester and Jane Turnbull; however, it is also suggested that that John was sent to the plantations after the 1715 rebellion (and hence was a different man). He was factor to Capt. John Rutherford of Edgerston. He married Helen, daughter of Thomas Oliver of Ashtrees. On the death of his father-in-law in 1739 he inherited the lands of Ashtrees in Southdean Parish. These would later pass to his grandchildren. John (18th C.) mentioned in evidence as ‘servant to James Oliver in Ashtree’ at that time. John (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Christian Crawford and their children included: Agnes (b.1731); Janet (b.1733); and George (b.1735). John (b.1705/6) farm worker in the Hawick area. In about the period 1723–25 he was herd for Thomas Scott in Tandlaw. He gave evidence in 1764 at the court case for the division of Wilton Common and was ‘servant to James Oliver in Ashybank’ at that time. John (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Magdalene Bowie in 1739 and their son John was baptised in 1741. John (18th C.) weaver in Hawick Parish. He witnessed a couple of baptisms in 1738. Perhaps the same weaver witnessed baptisms in 1719 for William Reid, tenant in Raesknowe and for William Hislop, servant in Allanhaugh Mill, and in 1726 for weaver Walter. In 1719 he was separately recorded as weaver and as Beadle; if this was not an error, then he is the same John as the Beadle. He may be the weaver who witnessed a baptism for tailor Thomas Kay in 1739. John of Ashtrees (18th C.) probably descended from the Scotts of Bonchester. On the death of his father-in-law in 1739 he inherited the lands of Ashtrees in Southdean Parish. These would later pass to his grandchildren. John (18th C.) mentioned in evidence as ‘servant to James Oliver in Ashtree’ at that time. John (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Christian Crawford and their children included: Agnes (b.1731); Janet (b.1733); and George (b.1735). John (b.1705/6) farm worker in the Hawick area. In about the period 1723–25 he was herd for Thomas Scott in Tandlaw. He gave evidence in 1764 at the court case for the division of Wilton Common and was ‘servant to James Oliver in Ashybank’ at that time. John (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Christian Crawford and their children included: Agnes (b.1731); Janet (b.1733); and George (b.1735). John (b.1705/6) farm worker in the Hawick area. Alexander) Scott of Burnhead. He was surely related to the Scotts of Burnhead. John (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. In 1738 he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Andrew, who was therefore probably related. He was probably the junior of ‘John Scotts Elder and Younger Shoemakers’ who witnessed the baptism in 1738 of a child of shoemaker Andrew. In 1742 he witnessed baptisms for shoemaker Thomas (who was probably related) and for flesher William Renwick. In 1743 he witnessed baptisms for carrier John Pott, for taylor Walter Rae, Burgh Officer Francis Turnbull, and Robert Fowler in Sea Croft. In 1744 he witnessed a further baptism for shoemaker Thomas, while he and Thomas together witnessed a baptism for Robert Riddell ‘at Park’. He also witnessed 3 baptisms in 1745, one for the Town Piper William Brown, another for William Wilson ‘messanger’ and the last for carrier John Pott, along with shoemaker Thomas. His name is given first and hence Thomas was probably his son or younger brother. He also witnessed a baptism for shoemaker James Waugh and his wife Margaret Scott (who was possibly related to him) in 1757. He may be the shoemaker John who witnessed a baptism for Francis Gledstains in 1725. He may also be the shoemaker John who witnessed baptisms for weaver John Elder in 1760 and for weaver Robert Stevenson in 1762. All of these witnessings suggest that he was an elder of the Kirk. He may be the shoemaker who married Henrietta Hope in Hawick in 1724. He was probably related to other shoemaking Scotts (e.g. the earlier and later Johns). John (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Scott and their children included Walter (b.1731) and Walter (again, b.1735). John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Riddell and their children included: John (b.1738); and Robert (b.1739). John (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk and Wilton Parishes. He was living at Appletreehall in 1744. He married Magdalene Scott and their children included: Robert (b.1740) and John (b.1741), baptised in Ashkirk; and Walter (b.1744), baptised in 1744. The witnesses in 1744 were James Dryden and Adam (b.1749). Other children baptised in Cavers Parish around the same time are probably his. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded at Giddenscleuch in 1749. He married Margaret Riddle and their children included John (b.1749). He may have been related to David, who was at Giddenscleuch a little earlier. John (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at East Highchesters in 1742 when his daughter Christian was baptised. It is possible this is the same man as the tenant of Highchesters Mill, if he had an earlier marriage. He may be the same John who was at Whithope in 1735 when his son John was baptised. There were several other children baptised in Robertson who could also be his. John (18th C.) recorded being at Winnington Rig in 1746. He was a witness in Hawick for merchant Gideon and his wife Sussana Scott. He may have been related to one member of this couple. John (18th C.) carrier in Hawick. He witnessed a baptism in 1745 (along with another John, shoemaker) and another in 1746 for carrier James Oliver. John of Belford (18th C.) son of Charles and grandson of Sir John of Langshaw and Ancrum. His mother was Margaret, daughter of Robert, 4th Lord Rutherford. In 1738 he tried to claim the Lordship, after the death of his distant relative, Alexander, 6th Lord Rutherford. He supported the Jacobites in 1745, meeting Charles at Kelso. As a result of this support he later lost his estate, and was never able to claim the peerage. He paid the window tax for Belford (in Morebattel Parish) in the period 1748–59. However, it is possible he was the John ‘of Palacehill’ listed among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761. He married Marion, daughter of Alexander Baillie from Ashiestiel.
They had 5 daughters, the eldest being Agnes, who married Thomas Cockburn of Rowchester (in Berwickshire). John (18th C.) recorded as a ‘wool comber’ in 1730 when he was admitted as a Burgess of Hawick. In 1735 he was recorded receiving a Burgess ticket gratis. It is unclear why this happened, but perhaps he had been brought in from outside Hawick to stimulate the manufacturing of yarn. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Johns. John of Weens (d.bef. 1777) son of John of Weens. He is probably the ‘younger of Weens in ye parish of Hopkirk’ recorded in 1712 when his daughter Janet ‘begoten in ye aforesd parish in fornication’ was baptised in Hawick; the witnesses were Robert Hardie and John Craw (‘fowler’ in Branxholme Town). In 1731 he signed the marriage contract of William Elliot of Lodgegill and Jean Elliot of Harwood. In 1733 he married Marion (or ‘Mary’), 3rd daughter of William Elliot of Harwood. In 1744 he sold the lands of Weens to John Armstrong with the consent of his wife. Marion was a widow in 1777 when she had a discharge to her brother Henry. His son James was baptised in Hobkirk Parish in 1738 (when he is recorded being ‘of Weens’). Other children baptised there who may have been his included Elizabeth (b.1734), Margaret (b.1736), Henry (b.1739), Christian (b.1741), an unnamed son (b.1741) and Janet (b.1743). John (18th C.) married Ann Thomson in 1745. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was at Crawhill in 1751, 1759 and 1764. He married Helen Scott in 1761 and their children included: William (b.1762); Margaret (b.1765); Walter (b.1767); Alexander (b.1769); Elspeth (b.1772); John (b.1775); Alexander (again, b.1777); and Jean (b.1779). John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Lees in 1764. He married Jean Dougall and their children included: Mary (b.1760); Esther (b.1762); Margaret (b.1764); William (b.1767); Robert (b.1769); Agnes (b.1772); and Jean (b.1774). The witnesses in 1764 were Robert Easton and Thomas Reid. John (d.bef. 1781) resident of Hawick Parish. He was recorded as ‘Herd’ in 1767 (probably his occupation, but it might instead have been a nickname). He married Helen Henry in Ashkirk in 1757 and their children included Alexander (b.1767). The witnesses in 1767 were John Rieve and Thomas Laidlaw. He was already deceased in 1781 when the death of his wife was recorded in Hawick. He may have been related to John ‘the Herd’ recorded in 1708. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1766 he married Euphan Ruecastle. Their children included: John (b.1767); Walter (b.1768); John (again, b.1770); and Elizabeth (b.1771). John (18th C.) tenant in Highchesters Mill. He married Beatrice Thomson in 1756 and she died in 1797, aged 66. Their children included Archibald (b.1756), William (b.1762), Beatrix (b.1764), John (b.1777) and Mary (b.1772). Other children baptised in Robertson Parish that may have been his include Margaret (b.1760) and Nelly (b.1768). He died at the age of 50 (although not in 1748, as reported). The family are buried in Borthwick Waas. He may have been related to the Robert who was at Highchesters Mill in the 1740s. John (d.bef. 1763) younger son of Robert of Davington, brother of James and William. He was a direct descendant of the Scotts of Thirlestane, although his branch failed in the male line. He was an attorney in Canonbie. He married Isabel, daughter of James Scott of Calfield. Their children included: Robert, in the Seaforth Regiment in the American War, and also in India; James, moved to Canonbie; William, married Ann Little and killed in a quarry accident; John, also at Canonbie; probably Francis; Jane; and Margaret. John (18th C.) tenant in Allanhaugh Mill, probably the son of John, born in 1725. He married Mary Dodds in 1755 and they had an unnamed child in 1758. John of Gorrenberry (d.1785) son of Charles of Gorrenberry. He was a doctor in the London area. He was recorded as a doctor on the list of Commissioners of Roxburghshire in 1761. He married Jean Fox, who secondly... married Charles Fox of Chacombe and died in 1820. Their children included: Francis (b.1768), who died in infancy; and Charles, M.D. (d.1794). The family are buried in Bromley, Kent. John (18th C.) descended from the Scotts of Synton, through millers at Boosmill on Ale Water, who also farmed at Dimpleknoke, and then moved to a mill on Rule Water. However, Keith Scott also suggests he was a son of Alexander, miller in Rulewater and at Roughheugh. He himself became miller at Hummelknoke, and later married the widow Henderson, tenant of the mill. In 1755 he was recorded as miller at Hummelknoke, with wife Jane Scott. He was also recorded at Hummelknoke Mill in 1761. Children, baptised in Cavers, who were probably his include: Margaret (b.1751); George (b.1753); Walter (b.1755); and John (b.1761), who was also tenant in Hummelknoke. It is unclear if the William of Hummelknoke who paid the window tax in 1748 is an error for his name or was perhaps a relative.

John (18th C.) Town Treasurer listed in 1734. He may be the same as Bailie John or one of the other contemporary men with the same name. In 1734 there is a record in the Treasurer’s book that he paid his son for joinery work on the lofts of St. Mary’s Kirk. In 1737 the Treasurer’s book records money ‘paid to my wife when ye workmen went to see where ye brige should be’; this suggests he may have been involved with the building of Teviot Brig, and may be the same man as Bailie John. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Newton in 1733. He married Margaret Dryden in 1731 and their children included: Margaret (b.1733); and Jean (b.1738). The witnesses in 1733 were Robert and William (who were probably related to him). John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded in Cavers itself when his son Hugh was baptised in 1737 and when his son Charles was baptised in 1742. He may be the weaver John who was in Cavers in 1744 when his son John was baptised. John (18th C.) shepherd at Dryden. He was probably related to the John, shepherd at Dryden Burnfoot, recorded in 1694. He married Margaret Riddell and their children included: John (b.1738); Robert (b.1739); and John (b.1749), born in Cavers Parish. The witnesses in 1739 were Robert Elliot of Rigg and Walter Scott at Commonside. John (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Bessie Blyth and their daughter Isobel was baptised in 1736. Bailie John (18th C.) referred to as ‘younger’ when Bailie in the 1730s (suggesting that he may have been son of another John). He was Magistrate in 1738, when plans were laid for building Teviot Bridge. Also in 1738 he witnessed a baptism of James Weir (who was Town Clerk). Along with William Tudhope he arranged for the bond to pay for construction of the bridge. He was Bailie along with James Scott in about 1743 when they gave orders to the Burgh Officers to find the animals of the neighbouring tenants pasturing on the common and drive them into the Town. He may be the ex-Bailie John who, along with Thomas Turnbull and Rev. Partick Cunningham, sold East Mains (of Hawick) to the Duke of Buccleuch in the 1740s. He was listed as ‘late Bailie’ when he witnessed baptisms for wright James Winthrop in 1740, Walter Scott of Newton and merchant Andrew Riddell in 1743, mason Andrew Wilson in 1744 and writer James Weir in 1745. He was recorded in 1747 when the tradesmen were paid in his place (presumably an inn) after taking down the kirk bell. He may be the Bailie John who witnessed a baptism in 1757 and another in 1759 for tailor James Gledstains. He is probably one of the skinners James, John and Walter Scott, recorded as Bailies in the 1740s. He may be the John who was still a Bailie in the 1760s. He could be the Bailie James who hired the Hawick mortcloth in 1761. He may be the John who witnessed baptisms for Richard Purdom and Jane Scott (perhaps his daughter) in 1762, 1764, 1766 an 1773; in 1762 the entry may say ‘skinner’ (but is hard to read). He may be the tailor who witnessed a baptism for William (perhaps a relative) in 1766 and who also hired the Hawick Parish mortcloth in 1759. He is probably the Bailie John who, along with Bailie Thomas Turnbull of Fenwick, witnessed a baptism for the younger Thomas Turnbull in 1763. John (b.c.1719) resident of Wilton and Hawick Parishes. He spent 13 years as tenant of Galalaw along with his brother Thomas, leaving in about 1751. He was recorded living at Galalaw in 1746. By 1764 he was ‘residenter in Flex’ when he gave brief evidence regarding the former use of part of Wilton Common. He married Helen Easton in Wilton in 1746. Their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1746, with witnesses John and Thomas Scott. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1744 and 1747 he was living at Netherhall. He married Isobel Turnbull in 1733 and their children included: John (b.1739); Margaret (b.1744); Walter (b.1747); and Robert (b.1750). The witnesses in 1744 were 2 James Scotts and in 1747 were Walter Scott and James Dryden. John (18th C.) recorded in Deanbrae in 1759 when he hired the Hawick Parish mortcloth. He may be the same as one of the other Johns. John younger of Synton (d.bef. 1765) eldest son of Alexander of Synton. In 1735 he married Mary, only daughter of William Oliver of Dinlabyre (and grand-daughter of William Chisholme of that Ilk). However, he died before his father, his only son Alexander succeeding to the Synton estates. He also had a daughter, Margaret, who married William Fairbairn, schoolmaster at Galashiels; she died in 1815. John (b.c.1749) son of James and Margaret Legerwood. He was a ‘tacksman’ at Roughleigh in Wilton Parish. John (1749–1824) miller in Hawick. In 1779 he witnessed a baptism for inn-keeper John Kennedy. He is probably the John, miller in Hawick, who subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ in 1784. He married Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’, 1758–c.92) Thomson in 1767, the marriage being recorded in both Hawick and St. Boswell’s parishes; however, another marriage of the same couple appears to be recorded in Hawick in 1770. Their children included: James (b.1771); Dr. William (1773–1884), surgeon who made his fortune in the West Indies; James (b.1776); Ann (1778–1852), who married miller John White; Margaret (b.1780); Mary (b.1782); Beatrice (b.1784); Elizabeth (1786–1853), who married Thomas Wemyss; Robert (b.1789); and Jane (b.1790). The witnesses in 1773 were James Tudhope and James Turnbull, in 1776 were Walter Purdom and Robert Thomson, in 1778 were William ‘Masen’ and Walter Purdom, in 1784 were stockingmaker William Thomson and Session Clerk James Inglis, and in 1789 were John Henderson and another John Scott. An unnamed child of his died on the last day of 1790 (at the same time as the child of under-miller Adam Jardine, suggesting there was perhaps some disease in the household). Probably the same John married Ann Boyle in 1795 (recorded in both Hawick and Kelso Parishes) and in 1796 made an application to the Barons at the Exchequer Chambers in Edinburgh in respect of the estate of his deceased wife. John (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Catherine Aitken and their daughter Agnes was baptised in 1748. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Agnes Turnbull in Wilton Parish in 1751. Their children (all baptised in Hawick Parish) were: William (b.1757); John (b.1758); Adam (b.1760); Isobel (b.1761); Beatrice (b.1763); Jane (b.1765). Witnesses to the 1760 baptism were Thomas Laidlaw and weaver Charles Miller, and in 1765 were Walter Burn and Archibald Henderson. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Boonraw in 1751 and 1758. Perhaps the same John ‘in Boonraw’ was among those selected to perambulate the boundaries of Wilton Common in 1765. He married Margaret Henderson in 1751 and their children included: John (b.1751); John (again, b.1752); James (b.1754); Helen (b.1756); Robert (b.1758); Agnes (b.1760); Thomas (b.1762); and James (b.1764). Scott and in 1758 were Robert Ormiston and George Scott. John (18th C.) married Martha Rae in Ashkirk in 1759. John of Gala (1732–85) son of Hugh, he was 6th Laird. He was recorded as a Commissioner for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1761 (when still ‘junior’). He was taxed for having 2 or 3 male servants in the period 1778–79. He was on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. He married Anne, only daughter of George McDougall of Makerston. Their children were: Elizabeth; Col. Hugh, who succeeded; Barbara (1764–1844); Adm. Sir George (1769–1841); and Col. John (1774–1832), whose eldest daughter Maria Sarah Makdougall inherited Makerston. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Whitchfield in 1762 and Boonraw in 1764 and 1767. In 1760 he married Margaret Lorraine, who was from Yarrow. Their children included: Robert (b.1762); twins William and John (b.1764); Helen (b.1767); and Janet (b.1768). The witnesses in 1762 were Thomas Scott and Robert Scott and in 1764 were Robert and Walter Ormiston (probably both in Boonraw). John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Harkness and their children included Walter (b.1769), James (b.1771), Robert (b.1774), John (b.1783) and Rachel (b.1786). The witnesses in 1771 were Robert and James Harkness. The witnesses in 1778 and 1786 were the whole congregation. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Clarilaw in 1780. He married Betty Martin in 1779 and their children included: James (b.1780); John (b.1781); Robert (b.1784); Janet (b.1786); Margaret (b.1791); Andrew (b.1797); and Thomas (b.1798). The witnesses in 1780 were James Martin and James Scott (probably related to his wife and him). It is possible he was the weaver John whose child’s burial is recorded in 1799. John (18th C.) gardener at Knowe in Minto Parish in 1778 and 1779, when he was working for Thomas Turnbull. John (18th C.) listed as owner of a ‘House and Yard’ in Minto Parish in 1779, valued at £1 16s 7d. The same piece of land was owned by Lord Minto in 1811. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, recorded at Fenwick in 1786. He married Isobel Turnbull and their children included: Mary (b.1784); Janet (b.1786); and Elizabeth (b.1788). Given the forename coincidence he may also have been father of Charles (b.1783), who emigrated to Waterloo County, Ontario. John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Mabonlaw in 1780 and 1785 when his children Nelly and Ann were baptised. Probably the same John was at Harden in 1788 and 1789 when his sons Robert and John were baptised. There are several marriages in Roberton around this time that could be his. John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Broadlee Burnfoot in 1781 when his son James was baptised. He is surely related to the cooper James, who was also recorded at Broadlee Burnfoot in 1781, and probably Robert, who was there slightly earlier. Perhaps he is the same as the John who married Jane Irvine and was living at Muselee in 1792. John (18th C.) married Margaret Laidlaw in Wilton Parish in 1780. Their children included Isabel (b.1782). John (18th C.) shepherd in Hobkirk Parish. He married Isabel Blaikie and their son Adam (who was also a shepherd) was baptised in 1782. Several other children baptised in Hobkirk around this time may also have been his. John (18th C.) tenant farmer at Borthwickbrae according to the Horse Tax Rolls of 1790–91. He may be the same as one of the other Johns. John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Jane Irvine in Roberton in 1781. Their children included Margaret (b.1792), baptised in Roberton; and Mary (b.1799), baptised in Ettrick Parish. John (18th C.) skinner in Hawick. His daughter Sarah died in 1798. John ‘Gover’ (d.bef. 1809) Hawick resident whose wife Betty Cunningham died in 1795. The death of his daughter Isabel is recorded in Hawick in 1809. He could be related to the later ‘Gover’. John (18th C.) resident of Weens in 1790 when his son Thomas was baptised in Hobkirk Parish. Sir John of Ancrum (1757–1812) son of John, who was 3rd son of Sir John, 3rd Baronet of Ancrum. He was born at Longnewton. His father succeeded to Craignetinnie in right of his mother, taking the additional surname of Nisbet. He became the 5th Baronet of Ancrum, succeeding his uncle Sir William. He was a Cornet with the Royal Regiment of Horse Guards, then with the Horse Grenadiers and 17th Foot. He was listed on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. He was recorded at Ancrum on the 1785–97 Horse Tax Rolls. He subscribed to 2 copies of Burns ‘Edinburgh Edition’ in 1787. He was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1788 (when described as ‘once Aide-de-camp to the late General Mackay, Commander-in-Chief, but now not employed. At present unfit for business’). In 1794 he was appointed Major-Commandant with the Roxburgh Cavalry, later being promoted to Colonel and travelling with them to Ireland. He (as well as his mother, Mrs. Scott Nisbet) paid tax for having both male and female servants in the period 1778–91, and just himself from 1792–97. He was recorded at Ancrum on the 1785–97 Horse Tax Rolls and in the period 1792–98 was taxed for owning a carriage. He was additionally taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. In 1799 he was on the Lieutenancy Committee in Roxburghshire. He was recorded as owner of an estate in Ancrum Parish valued at more than £2000 in 1788 and 1811. He was one of the founder members of the Jedforest Club in 1810, and presented them with a snuff mull, which was used at dinners long afterwards. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. In 1792 he married Harriet, daughter of William Grahame of Gartmore. They had 2 sons and 4 daughters: Sir John, who succeeded; Sir William, who succeeded his brother; Harriet, who married George Oldmixon; Elizabeth, who married Col. de Veules; Margaret; and Lucy. He was buried in Old Greyfriars in Edinburgh. John, W.S. of Midgehope (1757–1803) 3rd son of William of Woll and brother of Charles. He was apprentice to lawyer Cornelius Elliot. In 1780 he received the superiority of lands in Merton from Walter Scott of Harden, but renounced them again in 1791. He also acquired the estate of Glenormiston in Peeblesshire. He was apprenticed to Cornelius Elliot of Wolfelee and became Writer to the Signet in 1784. In 1782 he married Beatrice, daughter of Thomas Caverhill. His children were: William of Hope (1757–1803) 3rd son of William of Woll and brother of Charles. He was apprentice to lawyer Cornelius Elliot. In 1780 he received the superiority of lands in Merton from Walter Scott of Harden, but renounced them again in 1791. He also acquired the estate of Glenormiston in Peeblesshire. He was apprenticed to Cornelius Elliot of Wolfelee and became Writer to the Signet in 1784. In 1782 he married Beatrice, daughter of Thomas Caverhill. His children were: William of Teviot Bank; and James of Ellem. He could be the Edinburgh lawyer who was made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick in 1778. In 1788 he was listed among the voters of Selkirkshire, and described as being a supporter of Scott of Buccleuch, but having his ‘real vote from his father’. Lieut. John of Synton (d.1796) only son of Alexander. He is probably the John of Synton who paid the land tax in 1785 for Synton and Synton Mill. In 1788 he was recorded as owner of Satchells (valued at £200). He was Lieutenant in the 57th Regiment and died in Grenada. He left no male heirs, but had 2 surviving sisters Catherine and...
Helen, the first of whom inherited the Synton estate. John of Horsleyhill, see Capt. Francis James of Horsleyhill. John (18th C.) recorded in Denholm in 1779 when his son William was baptised in Cavers Parish. Probably the same John was a labourer in Denholm when his son Thomas was baptised in 1781. John (18th C.) recorded in Mosspaul in 1779 and 1782 and as innkeeper there in (probably) 1788. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included: William (b.1779); James (b.1782); and John (b.1788). John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, recorded at Binks in 1780 and 1782 when his children Christian and Isabel were baptised. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, recorded in Cavers itself in 1787 when his son Paul was baptised. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He is recorded as miller in Denholm in 1789 and 1795 when his sons, both called Robert, were baptised. He could be the same as one of the other Johns, and was probably related to other Scott millers. John (18th C.) listed in the 1785–91 cart tax records as ‘John Scott Post’ and ‘John Scott the Post’, suggesting that he was deliverer of mail at that time. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Helen Learmonth and their children included Benjamin (b.1769). John (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. He married Margaret Turnbull in 1771. John (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He may have been related to the earlier shoemaker of the same name. He witnessed a baptism in 1775 for stocking-maker James Haldane. He is recorded as a shoemaker when his son Thomas died in 1787 and when his daughter Peggy died in 1794. He could be the John who married Elizabeth Aitkin, with children including Thomas (b.1782), Mary (b.1784), Margaret (b.1786) and Henrietta (b.1792). The witnesses in 1792 were Young and Thomas Rae. John (18th C.) married Ann Hume in Robertson Parish in 1776. John (18th C.) described as ‘analysts of Valuation Books’. He wrote an analysis of the land valuations of Selkirkshire for the Commissioners of Supply for that county in 1785 and another for Roxburghshire in 1788. These contain valuable details about how lands had changed hands between the 1643 and 1678 valuations, and then continuing through the 18th century. He may have worked in Edinburgh, but is seems fairly likely that he was associated with one of the local Scott families. He may be the same as one of the other Johns. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Weensland Mill. He is recorded in 1797 among Hawick men on the ballot to serve in the Militia. In 1799 he was listed among those whose names had not been drawn, but were no longer living in the area. However, in 1800 his name was drawn to replace Adam Leyden, who had been found to be unfit for service; he was then stated ‘not to be found’ and Walter Dalgleish was selected in his place. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Bewie Mains, which he leased from Walter Scott of Harden in 1770 for 7 years. He is recorded as farmer there in the 1787–97 Horse Tax Rolls. He also owned 4 farm horses there in 1797. Additionally he may be the John recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Lilliesleaf. In 1811 it is recorded that he had feued the part of Lilliesleaf Common known as Stotfield and Nolt-lair from William Riddell of Camieston. It is possible he is the same as John of Synton. It may be his son George who is recorded on the Militia ballot list in 1799. John (d.bef. 1787) resident of Hawick Parish. He was already deceased when the death of his wife Betty Lunn is recorded. John (d.1809) tailor in Hawick. He was brother of Walter, wright, who was already deceased in 1809. He could be the tailor whose son John died in 1777. It is possible he was the ‘John Wyndhead’ whose son Walter the tailor died in 1810. John (1749/50–1828) Schoolmaster in Ancrum. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825, suggesting that he had a connection to Hawick. His son George was on the Militia list for Ancrum in about 1800. The schoolmaster at Ancrum from 1828 was also John, and hence perhaps his son. John (18th/19th C.) Schoolmaster at Lessuden. In 1792 he married Betty Oliver in Cavers Parish. It is possible he is the same man as the schoolmaster in Ancrum. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Scott and their children included: Nanny (b.1794); John (b.1796); and Agnes (b.1798). John (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Hislop in Hawick Parish in 1797, according to the Horse Tax Rolls. John (18th/19th C.) tenant at Whithope Mill (on the Borthwick), recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses. He may have been related to Adam, who farmed Whithope at the same time and George, who was referred to in 1808 when his son George died. John (b.c.1760) son of George, tenant in Falla. His grandfather was tenant at Roughiegh Mill in Hawick. He married his cousin Euphemia, daughter of Robert Scott, also miller at Roughiegh Mill. Their children were: Robert; George; John; Ann, who married D. Clarke; and Betsy. They may all have died without issue. He may be the ‘John Scott Milns’ who is recorded as owner of 3 horses in Hawick on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He is probably also the John ‘in Hawick Mill’ recorded in the 1810 inventory after the death of ‘Auld Cash’. He is probably also the John of Hawick Mill whose wife’s death is recorded in Hawick in 1824. John (18th/19th C.) from Ettrick Parish, he married Agnes Beattie in Robertson Parish in 1789. Their children included: an unnamed son (b.1798), baptised in Ettrick; and Walter (b.1802), Isabel (b.1803) and Robert (b.1806), baptised in Yarrow. In 1841 his widow is recorded at Catslacknowe, with sons Archibald and Robert. John (1766–1850) son of Robert, who farmed at Whitchesters. He became tenant farmer at Boonraw. In 1796 he married Euphemia Elliot (also born in 1766), both being described as from Hawick Parish; both of them died in the cholera outbreak of 1850. Their children included: Robert, who also farmed at Boonraw; George, who married Mary Thompson and had 3 children, but died of smallpox while emigrating to America; William (b.1801), who became a doctor in Canada; and 3 children who died in 1809, Janet, Margaret and John. He and his wife (although her name is given as Elspeth) are recorded at East Boonraw in 1841. John (18th/19th C.) married Janet Mein in Hawick Parish in 1796. John (18th/19th C.) servant at Hallrule. He is recorded in the Lieutenancy Book for Roxburghshire in 1797. In 1799 he was listed on the Militia ballot in place of Richard Renwick, who had been declared unfit to serve; however, he paid £10 forfeit. John (18th/19th C.) recorded as ‘Junior Mason Whinfield’ in the Lieutenancy Book for Ashkirk Parish in 1797; in 1799 he was ‘In the Ballot Box 1799 not drawn still residing in Ashkirk parish’. Probably the same mason John was living at Headshaw Mill in 1801 according to the Militia ballot for Ashkirk Parish. He may be the son of John baptised in Ashkirk in 1775. John (b.c.1770s) son to James in Denholmhill, according to the ballot list for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799. His brother James was also listed. Probably the same John was recorded as tenant at Denholmhill on the 1801 Militia ballot. John (18th/19th C.) married Ann Oliver in 1798, both being from Hawick Parish. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His son James was baptised in 1800. John (18th/19th C.) tailor in Hawick according to the ballot for the Militia in 1801. It is unclear how he was connected to other Scott tailors. John (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Margaret (or Peggy) Tait and their children included Agnes (b.1805), Margaret (b.1808), Isobel (b.1811), Mary (b.1814). John (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Agnes (or Nancy) Blyth and their children included James (b.1805), Thomas (b.1807), Thomas (again, b.1809), George (b.1811), John (b.1813), Agnes (b.1813). John (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Jean Hill and their children included George (b.1815), Agnes (b.1817), Janet (b.1818) and David (b.1821). John (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Ann Gledstains and their children included Ann (b.1816) and John (b.1818). John (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Nelly Hume and their children included Betty (b.1817). John (18th/19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isobel Bartle and their son Gideon was baptised in 1823. John (18th/19th C.) resident of London when he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He is listed along with James, also of London, and it seems likely that the pair had a direct connection with Hawick. John (b.1769) 2nd son of Rev. William of Southdean and brother of Adam Scott-Elliot of Arkleton. His children included: William; Rev. Charles; Adam; Margaret; Sybil; Ann; Elizabeth; and Mary. There were apparently no grandchildren John of Whitehaugh (d.1823) 2nd cousin of Isobel and William, who had previously held the lands of Whitehaugh. He was son of James, wright in Hawick, who represented him in the legal proceedings for the division of Wilton Common in 1765. He succeeded in 1759 on the death of Isobel, but was still a minor at that time. He was one of the landowners involved in the court case over the division of Wilton Common in 1765; he was ‘representative of the late William Scot of Whitehaugh’ and sasines were produced for William succeeding his father Walter. At that time the estate consisted of ‘Whitehaugh, Heip, Timberside, Timberside-mill, or Skaw-miln, Greensidehall, and Leeheads’, valued at £648 10s. In 1774 he witnessed a baptism for Bailie John Hardie. He is ‘John Scott, Esq; Whitehaugh’ on the subscription list for Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ in 1784. He was listed in 1788 (and still on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls) as owner of ‘Whitehaugh, otherwise called Wester Whitehaugh; and Wester Heap, otherwise called Easter Whitehaugh’, valued at £648 10s. He also sold the small piece of land called ‘Souter’s Acre’, which was later owned by Thomas Laydlaw of Silverbuthall. He paid the Horse Tax at Whitehaugh from 1785–94. In 1797 he is recorded as owner of 2 horses in the Horse Tax Rolls for Wilton; he also paid the dog tax there in the same year. He helped fund the extension to the old Wilton Kirk in 1800. About the same time he contributed to the local subscription to support the war against France. He is recorded as a vassal of Buccleuch in correspondence of the mid-18th century in the Buccleuch archives. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and in 1819 along with his son Walter. As well as the lands of Whitehaugh, he also owned the farms of Greensidehall and Broomhall. In 1767 he married Margaret (perhaps also known as Elizabeth), daughter and co-heiress of Walter of Chamberlain Newton; they were both in Hawick Parish. They had 12 children, although only 3 sons and 3 daughters survived childhood. Their children, baptised in Wilton, included: John (b.1768); Walter (b.1769), who succeeded; William (b.1770); Agnes (b.1772), who married Adam Stavert of Hoscote; Francis (b.1773), Major in the army, killed in the Peninsular War; James (b.1775), who succeeded Walter as the last Laird; Elizabeth, ‘Betty’ (b.1776), who was the 2nd wife of Gilbert Chisholme of that Ilk; Susanna (b.1778); William (again, b.1782); and Margaret (b.1783). John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Scott and their children included Agnes (b.1776). John (18th C.) resident of Wilton. In 1787 he married Janet Scott, from Hawick Parish. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their children included: Jane (b.1786); Betty (b.1787); and John (b.1789). John (18th C.) recorded at Sandyhaugh in 1788 when his son Thomas was baptised in Roberton Parish. John (18th C.) resident in Wilton Parish, living at Priestrig in 1790. He married Margaret Reid and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1790. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1794 he married Janet Turnbull, who was also from Hawick. Their children included: Margaret (b.1794); Margaret (again, b.1795); Christian (b.1798); and Robert (b.1799). John (b.c.1765) ploughman in Yarrow and Ashkirk Parishes. He married Helen (or ‘Nellie’) Scott and their children included: George (b.1792), who married Jean Stewart; John (b.1796), who married Christian Nichol; Margaret (b.1800), who married Robert Turnbull; Mary (b.1806), who married William Scott, thatcher and farm-worker at Synton; Walter (b.1809); and William (b.1812), who married Jane Currie. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Mervinslaw in 1797, according to the Horse Tax Rolls. He owned 2 work horses. John (18th/19th C.) recorded at Timbersidemill on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, where he is listed owning 2 work horses. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Easter Essenside on the 1789–97 Horse Tax Rolls. In 1797 he owned 5 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He was additionally taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. He was also the farmer at Easter Essenside listed in 1797 among men on the ballot to serve in the Militia; in 1799 he was ‘In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn still residing in Askirk parish’. John (b.c.1780) servant at Easter Essenside according to the ballot for the Militia in Ashkirk Parish in 1801. He is probably distinct from John who was farmer at Easter Essenside from at least 1789. John (18th/19th C.) recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as farmer at Askirk Mill. He is probably the ‘J. Scott’ whose letter from ‘Askirkmill’ in 1791 is preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. His servant William Scott was recorded at Askirk Mill on the 1801 Militia ballot. He may be the John, married to Anne Scott, whose children baptised in Ashkirk Parish included: Nelly (b.1792); Margaret (b.1794); Charlotte (b.1796); Alexander (b.1798); Thomas (b.1800); James (b.1802); John (b.1804); Beatrix (b.1805); and James (b.1807). John (18th/19th C.) wright in Hawick, son of George. In 1797 he was listed in the Lieutenancy Book for Roxburghshire among the men balloted to serve in the Militia (there is another entry for a wright of the same name, which may be a duplicate and a third entry for John, wright with William Rodger). In 1799 he was among those ‘In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn still residing in Hawick parish’. Probably the same wright John was still listed on the ballot of 1801. He was probably the son of wright George baptised in Hawick in 1776. John (18th/19th C.) wright in Hawick, listed in the Lieutenancy Book in 1797, separately from 2 other men of the same name. In 1799 he was listed among those whose names had not been drawn, but were no longer living in the area. He is probably the John Scott, from Hawick.
Scott Parish, who could no longer be found in 1800, so that Walter Dalgleish was selected in his place. John (18th/19th C.) wright in Hawick with William Rodger, listed in the Lieutenant Book in 1797. In 1799 he was listed having been ‘(then) with Wm Rodger’ among those whose names had not been drawn, but were no longer living in the area. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Susan Oliver and their children included Margaret Hume (b.1802). John (18th/19th C.) cooper and wheelwright in Lilliesleaf, as recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He is probably the wright in Lilliesleaf whose son William was baptised in 1789. Agnes (b.1791), John (b.1793), Helen (b.1795), Susan (b.1798) and James (b.1800) were probably also his children. John (b.1772) possibly son of James, who was tenant at Denholmhill, where he was later tenant himself. He married Agnes, daughter of Thomas Blyth and Isabel Reid, who was born at East Middle. Their children were: Isabella (b.1802); Elizabeth, ‘Betty’ (b.1803); James (b.1805), who died in Australia; Thomas (1809–67), who may have died at sea; George (1811–96), who died in Manitoba, Canada; Agnes (b.1813); and John (b.1813). They were baptised at the Burger Kirk in Hawick. He could be the John listed at Denholm Mill on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 4 horses. John (b.c.1770) farmer at Langbaurk. He is recorded there in 1841, along with John and Mary, probably his children. He was probably related to William, who was about the same age and also a farmer there. John (18th/19th C.) stockmaking recorded in 1797 among Hawick men on the ballot to serve in the Militia. In 1799 he was among those ‘In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn still residing in Hawick parish’ and he was still on the list in 1801. He may be the same as one of the other Johns. John (b.c.1775) local hosier employer, known as ‘John the Turk’. He is probably the hosier who was Cornet in 1806. The nickname may have already been in the family, but he was known for reducing wages, having labour organisers (including James Hogg) imprisoned, etc. There is a record of him receiving help from the Board of Trustees for Manufactures for purchasing a ribbed stocking frame in 1798. His attempt to reduce the price of men’s stockings by 6 pence per dozen, through wage reductions, led to the first known strike of hosiers workers in 1817. He is listed as a manufacturer on the High Street on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory, and seems to have been at ‘Turk’s Close’, around No. 60 on the 1841 census (along with his wife Ann). He is probably the Hawick spinner of that name who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. In 1826 he received further help from the Board of Trustees for carding and spinning machinery. His house stood on the site of the Bridge Hotel. He married Ann Gedstains, last of her family in Hawick. He had a son John who died in 1819. John (18th/19th C.) recorded at Martin’s House in 1797, along with William. They were surely related to the later farmer at Martin’s House, also called John. John (18th/19th C.) son of John. He took over from his father as tenant of Hummelknowes Mill. He is probably the John recorded as tenant there on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He married a miss Deans and his children included John (also miller at Hummelknowes) and Walter (farmer at Hummelknowes). He died at Hummelknowes Mill. John (18th/19th C.) recorded in the 1788 county valuation and in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls as owner of ‘Part of Mr. Patrick Cunningham’s Lands, now called Allers Garden, which belonged to George Kerr’. This separate piece of the former lands of Rev. Cunningham was valued at £10 19s; it seems likely to have been land near the modern Allars Crescent. He is probably the same as one of the other Johns, and perhaps related to Walter, who also held part of the former Patrick Cunningham’s lands. John of Ashtrees (b.1762/3) born in Oxnam Parish, he was son of Adam and grandson of John. He was descended from the Scotts of Bonchester. He was farmer at Woodhouse. In the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls he is recorded as tenant of ‘Woodhouse &c.’ when he owned 4 farm horses and 1 saddle horse; he also paid the dog tax at Woodhouse in 1797. He was listed as owner of Ashtrees on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. He is recorded as proprietor of ‘Ashtree, Woodhouse, Southdean’ on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory, and of ‘Ashtree, Woodehouse’ in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 he was ‘Landed prop.’ at Woodhouse, occupying 100 acres, with 550 acres of hill pasture and employing 7 people. In 1787 he married Isabella Rae and among their children was Adam of Tullich, Loch Carron. In 1855 his executors sold the farm of Ashtrees to his cousin, Thomas Scott of Riccalton. John (b.c.1770s) servant at Turn according to the ballot for the Militia in Kirkton Parish in 1799. John (b.c.1770s) labourer at New Mill according to the ballot for the Militia in Kirkton Parish in 1799. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at ‘Minto-hill-end’ when he subscribed to Andrew Scott’s book of poetry, published in Kelso in 1811. John (b.c.1780) cabinet-maker who lived on the Mid Raw in 1841. His wife was Jane and their children included George, David, Janet, John and Helen. His daughter Agnes married carrier James Hill (ancestor of the Hawick Ball family). John (b.c.1781/2) from Yarrow, he was an agricultural labourer in Lilliesleaf Parish. He was living at Riddell in 1841 and at Riddell West Lodge in 1851. His wife was Betty and their children included Walter, Agnes, Margaret and Ann. John (1784–1840) born at Gripknowe in Kirkton Parish, son of John and Helen Rennie. He was an agricultural labourer, moving to Melrose Parish. He lived at Shielshaugh Cottage and also Abbey Street, where he served as Abbey Keeper. In 1815 in Ancrum he married Beatrice (1792–1836), daughter of William Boa and Beatrix Scott. Their children were: Rev. John D. (1817–95), who died at Hamilton, Ontario, Canada; Catherine (1821–99), who also emigrated to Canada; William T. (1828–95), lived in Bruce County, Ontario; James (1828–97), who died in Manitoba; Rev. Peter (1830–1908), also in Ontario; Robert (1832–900), also Ontario. He and his wife are buried at Borthwick Waas. John of Riccalton (1785–1858) younger son of Thomas of Peel. He was tenant farmer at Lethem, jointly with his brother Thomas. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. He was probably the John recorded at Letham among subscribers to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He was elected as an honorary member at the first meeting of the Jedforest Club, and arranged to have the club coats made out of Cheviot wool. In 1829 he bought Riccalton from the daughters of the Duke of Roxburgh, also purchasing the superiority. He then became an ordinary member of the Jedforest Club. In 1855 he bought Ashtrees from the trustees of John Scott, tenant of Woodhouses (and a distant relative). He died unmarried, leaving Ashtrees to his nephew, Dr. James Robson, and Riccalton to his nephew, John Elliot (2nd son of his sister Helen). He may be the Scott of Riccalton recorded as owner of Middles Knowes in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874. John (b.1787/8) born in Southdean Parish, he was an agricultural labourer at Hayknowe in 1841. In 1851 he was a retired shepherd at Ellotsfield and in 1861 at Wauchope Burn, along with his wife Margaret from Jedburgh. He married Margaret Turnbull in 1818 and their children included: Elizabeth (b.1819/20), who married shepherd Alexander Burnett; Ann (b.c.1828); Adam (b.1829/30), shepherd at Shankendshiel; Agnes (b.c.1842); and Jessie (b.1836/7). John (b.1787/8) proprietor of Timpendean in the 19th century. He was listed there among the gentry of the Jedburgh area in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 he was farming 700 acres and employed 18 labourers. It is said that he and his sons were instrumental in changing the way farming was done locally, turning hill farms into half-arable farms. His wife was Agnes and their children included William (who succeeded to Timpendean) and George. John (b.1788/9) farmer at Longrow in Castleton Parish. In 1851 he was farmer of 260 acres there. His wife was Jane and their children included Archibald, Mary, Thomas, Jane, Elizabeth, Ann, Helen and John. John (b.1788/9) from Canonbie, he was an innkeeper in Newcastleton. In 1841 he was farmer at Langraw and in 1851 was farming 260 acres there (‘worked by family’). He kept the Commercial Inn in the 1860s (the same as the Liddesdale Hotel on Douglas Square). His wife was Jane G. (from Bewcastle) and their children included: Archibald (b.c.1830); Hector (1831/2–1909); Mary (b.c.1833); Thomas (b.c.1834); Jane (1836/7–1908); Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’, b.c.1836); Ann (1839/40–88); Hannah (b.c.1838); Helen (1841/2–1919); and John (1842/3–1906). Some of the family are buried in Ettleton Cemetery. John Sibbald (1789–1864) eldest son of Henry, farmer at Deloraine and Agnes Sibbald. He was tenant at Over Deloraine. In 1822 he married Christian, daughter of Alexander Scott, tenant in Ladhope. Their children were: Henry Ale, tenant in Gilmancleuch; Alexander, tenant in Ransaycleuch; Charles, tenant in Over Whittlaw; John, who succeeded his father in Deloraine; Ardbuthnot; Agnes, who married James Gibson of Shaws; and Christian, who married T. Ballantyne of Whithope. Col. John of Woll (b.1790) youngest surviving son of Charles of Woll. He was ‘of Ravenswood’ before the death of his brother Charles Ballfour in 1838, and the relinquishing of Woll by his nephew Charles Scott-Plummer. He thus gained Woll in 1839, and sold the estate in 1863 to a Mr. Ainslie. He was recorded at Woll in 1841, along with his wife, 2 daughters, a governess and 3 other domestic servants; he was then ‘late E. I. Compys. Service Pen’. He married Clementina Marianne, daughter of Edward Shaw. They had 2 daughters: Clementina (b.1829), who married John Henry Durbin; and Elizabeth (b.1831), who died in 1883. John of Gala (1790–1840) only son of Col. Hugh, he was 9th Laird. He became one of Sir Walter Scott’s closest friends. He was suspected of being involved in getting the Galashiels men to switch sides at the Carterhaugh Baa in 1815. He was a Commissioner of Selkirkshire in 1819. In 1820 he married Magdalen, daughter of Sir Archibald Hope of Craighall and Pinkie. Their children were: Maj. Hugh, who succeeded; Capt. Archibald (1827–70), who died without issue; Elizabeth; and Isabella. John (b.1791/2) son of John, with his mother being a Deans. He was miller at Hummelknowes Mill, like his father before him. He was recorded as miller at ‘Hublknows’ in 1851, with his brother Walter as farmer. He was still listed as miller there in Slater’s 1852 directory. He was unmarried. Sir John of Ancrum (1798–1814) son of Sir John, he was 6th Baronet, but only briefly. He was born at Athlone, while his father was serving there with the Roxburgh Cavalry. He joined the Navy and died on board H.M.S. Rhine at age 16, having succeeded his father only 2 years earlier. However, he was still listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819. He was succeeded by his brother William. John (b.1795) youngest son of William, farmer at Singlie, and Margaret Pott. He became a physician in Edinburgh and is referred to in glowing terms in Riddell-Carr’s ‘Border Memories’. He had one son, William Henry, also a physician, who died aged 24. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Margaret Aitchison and their children included: Sarah (b.1819); John (b.1821); Walter (b.1823); and William (b.1825). John (b.1796/7) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1841 he was an agricultural labourer at Nook Haugh and in 1851 and 1861 was a road contractor at Whinfield. He married Catherine (or Christine or ‘Christy’, b.1794/5) Nichol and their children included: Janet (b.1821); and John (b.1825), perhaps the shepherd at Bowknoye who was later a grocer in Selkirk. John (b.c.1795) farmer at Martin’s House, where he is recorded in 1841. He is surely related to William and John, who are recorded at Martin’s House in 1797. He married Isabel Michie in Cavers Parish in 1816. They had a large family of perhaps a dozen children, including Isobel (b.1817), Mina (b.1818), William (b.1820), John (b.1822), James (b.1824), Margaret (b.1825), Mary (b.1827), Agnes (b.1828), Robert (b.1830), Adam (b.1833), Helen (b.1835), Janet (b.1837), Elizabeth (b.1839) and Jane (b.1841). He was presumably related to the William and John who were recorded as farmers there in 1797. He could be the John born to James in Cavers Parish in 1792. John (b.c.1795) joiner at Riddell. He was living at Riddell East Lodge in 1841 and 1851. His wife was Margaret (or Mary) and their children included Margaret, Francis, Andrew, John and George. John (b.1797/8) resident of Deanburnhaugh. He was recorded as an agricultural labourer there in 1841 and 1851, and in 1861 was at Hoscote. He married Ann Henderson in 1830 and their children included Janet (b.1832), Mary (b.1834), Jane (b.1839), George (b.1842) and Francis (b.1844). John (b.1799/1800) from Lilliesleaf Parish. In 1851 he was a farm steward, living at West Nisbet farm in Crailing Parish. His wife was Ann and their children included Walter, Isobel and Robert. John (1799/1800–1872) son of a shepherd at Cauldsidie in Liddesdale, where he was born. He worked as a shepherd in Castleton Parish, living at Merseburnhead (near Canonbie), and later feued land in Newcastleton. He was a keen Free Kirk supporter there. In 1861 he was at 35 South Hermitage Street. He married Margaret Murray, daughter of the tenant farmer at Whisgills (probably Thomas); she died in 1861, aged 61. They had 4 sons and 2 daughters, including: John (1819–32); Archie; Thomas; David (1828/9–1911); Janet (1830–32); and Janet (again, b.1834/5). His grandsons farmed at Wolfehopelee. John (b.c.1805) flesher on the High Street, recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 he was living at about 6 High Street, along with Charlotte, possibly his sister. John (b.1805/6) from Jedburgh, he was farmer at Harwood on Teviot. He was there in 1851, farming 750 acres. He was unmarried. John of Teviot Bank and Rodono (1809–67), W.S., son of William. His grandfather was John and his great-grandfather William of Woll. He trained as a lawyer, being apprenticed to Gilbert Laurie Finlay. He became Writer to the Signet in 1832. He became a Roxburghshire J.P. and was also a member of the Jedforest Club. He succeeded to Teviot Bank and sold it in 1854 to Agnes Scott, widow of his uncle James Scott of Ellem. He purchased the lands of Riskenhope from George Pott of Dod and Chapelhope from John Gray Abbotrule, these being on the banks of St. Mary’s. He renamed the land Rodono, after the ancient barony there, and built a mansion house, but died before it was completed. In 1863 he presented the household expense book of Mrs. Bennet of Chester’s to the Museum, along with manuscripts of Rev. Hardie of Ashkirk’s sermons, a letter from Rev. Thomas Boston and a stirrup-cup used by Turnbull of Knowe. In 1850 he married Anne, 2nd daughter of Henry Singleton of Belpatrick, County Louth. They had no family. He was compiling a history of the Scotts of Woll and others when he died, entitled ‘A Genealogical Memoir of the Scotts of Thirlstane with Genealogical Notes of other Families of the Name of Scott’; three typed copies of the extensive manuscript are lodged in libraries. They are a valuable source of information gathered together on branches of the Scott family through the 14th, 15th and 16th centuries. He died in Marienbad, Czech Republic, where his widow had a church erected in his memory in 1879. His wife died in 1891. There is a portrait of him by John Watson Gordon in the collection of the Society of Writers to Her Majesty’s Signet. John (b.1806) youngest son of Charlie of the Crescent, he was uncle of Sir James A.H. Murray. His father sought a position for him with the excise, and got the support of Scott of Harden, claiming that they were distantly related. He claimed to be 2nd cousin of Lady Ogilvy, who was also called the Duchess of Airlie; this supports the family claim that his great-grandfather had married a daughter of Charles Ogilvy. He may have moved to Argyll for a while. He married Catherine Watson and their children were: Agnes, who married Richard Johnson, bank clerk in Liverpool; George, bank clerk in Edinburgh; and 3 other children who went to Australia. After his wife died he moved to Eveside, with his niece, Mrs. John Douglas, keeping house for him. John Young (1806/7–80) son of John and Janet Young. He was manager of the Hawick Gas Works at the Common Haugh from at least 1838 until 1851 and was then miller of Hawick Mill. He was still listed as manager of the gas works in Slater’s 1852 directory. He also farmed, and lived at Slittig Crescent. He was noted for helping during the cholera outbreak of 1849. The Caledonian Mercury of 1838 reported that he ‘has now in his possession a stalk of oats fully seven feet long, bearing one hundred and ninety four ears or pickles’. He married Mina, daughter of another John Scott (b.1792) and Isabel Michie. Their children included Isabella, John Young, William, Jessie, Thomas, James, Helen and Agnes. He may also be the same ‘J.Y.’ who was on the Town Council and of whom a portrait exists. Lord John (1809–60) see John Douglas Montagu-Douglas-Scott. John of Synton (19th C.) see John Corse Scott. John (b.c.1800) cooper in Lilliesleaf. He was living on Main Street in 1841. He married Agnes, daughter of weaver John Gillon, and their children included: Isabel (b.1831); Hannah (b.1833); Agnes (b.1835); and Elizabeth (b.1839). John (b.c.1800) hedger in Lilliesleaf Parish. He was unmarried and living at Linthill West Lodge in 1841, 1851 and 1861, with his sister Betty. John (19th C.) from Ashkirk Parish, he was an agricultural labourer in Lilliesleaf Parish. In 1851 he was living at Bewliehill Avenuefoots and in 1861 was a hedger at Netheraw Cottage. He married Helen Burton and their children included: James (b.1842); Elizabeth (b.1844); Walter (b.1845); Mary (b.1848); John (b.1850); Henry (b.1852); and Adam Gourlay (b.1853). John (1814–56) son of Charles and Margaret Douglas, he was born in Lilliesleaf. The family emigrated to Ontario when he was about 20 years old. He became a doctor and settled in the town of Berlin, Ontario. Some of his letters back to his family in Scotland are preserved in the Scottish Record Office. He died in Kitchener, Ontario. John (19th C.) Treasurer and Secretary of Liddesdale Curling Club in the 1860s. He is probably the same as one of the Johns who lived in Newcastleton at the time. John (b.1824/5) son of Walter, farmer at Stintieknowe. He was born at Stobs Woodfoot, where his grandfather was gamekeeper. He lived at Northhouse Haugh for 11 years, then worked as a roadman, living at Castleweary for 40 years. He was a friend of Henry Scott Riddell, who lived nearby. For a while he had charge of the coach horses when Castleweary was used for changing horses. In 1845 he married Ann (1827–1909), daughter of William Fulton, Governor of Hawick Prison. They had 7 children, including Margaret Cairns (b.1846), Walter (b.1848), Isabella (b.1851), Robina Young (b.1853), William (b.1860), Ann (b.1862) and John (b.1862). His son succeeded him as roadman in Teviothead. After retirement the couple moved to Hawick, where they lived at 5 Garfield Street. In 1895 they celebrated their golden wedding anniversary, receiving many gifts and in 1905 celebrated their diamond wedding anniversary. He was still tending to Dr. Hamilton’s sheep in the Wellogate in his 79th year. John (b.c.1825) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He was an agricultural labourer at Bowknowe in 1851 and was a grocer in Selkirk in 1861. He married Margaret Kennedy, who was from Wilton Parish. Their children included John (b.1849), Margaret (b.1851), Christina (b.1853), Christina Thomas K. (b.1856/7); and Mary (b.1859/60). John (b.1825/6) born in Ancrum Parish, he was a ploughman living at Greenhouse Cottage in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1861. He married Isabella Pringle and their children included Helen, Thomas P., Elizabeth and Margaret. John ‘Johnnie the Gover’ (1828–c.1889) tweed designer in Hawick who emigrated to America. He was Cornet in 1853 and returned to Hawick for the 1881 Common Riding. He could be ‘the Gover’ who was recorded winning foot races at the Common Riding of 1862, like he had done many times in the past. He was Chairman of the Race Committee and Steward at the Races (e.g. in 1873), as well as being a Town Councillor. In 1887 he wrote an account of his early memories of the Common Riding for the Hawick Express. His nickname reportedly came from his father’s penchant for using the word ‘gover’ (meaning a stupid or aimless person). In 1861 he was an unmarried ‘Tweed Foreman’ living at 5 Teviot Crescent with his aunt Margaret Scott as his housekeeper, and also his young cousin Charlotte. He was probably the John, son of James, born in Wilton Parish – ‘Kinly Stick and Daavid Garland, London Laidlaw and Little Dan, Johnny the Gover (in a far land), And Wat the Drummer leads the van’ [HI]. John (1831–86) son of William and Mary Scott, who lived at Synton. He was born in Yarrow Parish. In 1851 he was a thatcher, still living with his mother and brothers. In 1861 he was a police constable in Stow. He married Mary Irving and their children were William, Jane, Robert, John, Mary, Thomas, Walter and Margaret. He died in Innerleithen. John (1832/3–1903) mason in Newcastleton, living on South Hermitage Street in 1861. He married Margaret Inglis, who died in 1921, aged 79. Their children included: Adam (1874–1954), who was also a mason. John (b.1832/3) farmer at Hawwood on Teviot, he was born in Oxnam Parish. He was described in 1861 as ‘Farmer’s Son Manager’ and widower. He may be related to the man of the same name who was farmer at Hawwood in 1851. John (b.1835/6) born in Hawick, he was a skinner in Duns in 1861. In 1860 he married Charlotte (c.1835–1925), daughter of Hawick shoemaker Adam Kersel. Their children included James (b.c.1860). John (b.1837/8) draper in Newcastleton. In 1861 he was based at about 3 Douglas Square and employing 5 men. He lived with his sister Elizabeth. John (19th C.) Song-Singer at the 1875 Common Riding, where it was said he had 20 years of experience.

John Douglas see John Douglas Montagu-Douglas-Scott. John (1832/3–88) tweed finisher who lived at 18 Bourtree Place. His parents were farmer Thomas and Nancy Leitch. He married Margaret Murray, who died in 1889, aged 53. Their children included Thomas and Annie (who died at Balbriggan). John (19th C.) known as ‘Jock the Sweep’, Sheriff Officer in the 1840s. John (1836–80) well-known botanist and horticulturist, brought up in Denholm. Son of farmer Robert and Helen Turnbull, he had a sister, Nancy. He was orphaned at the age of 4 and brought up by an aunt. He is probably the John Scott living at about the Cross Keys Inn in 1841 and 1851, with joiner and spirit dealer John Turnbull and Jeany Turnbull, senior and junior. Jane or ‘Jeany’ Turnbull (b.1819) was presumably the aunt who raised him, and likely the sister of his mother. He attended Minto School under Mr. Hamilton. Encouraged by his cousin Rev. James Duncan, he won many prizes in local flower shows as a boy. In the 1851 census he was listed as a stockmaking, but very shortly after that he started an apprenticeship as a gardener, working in Jedburgh and Westmorland. He then became a gardener at the Royal Botanical Gardens in Edinburgh, being foreman of the propagating department from 1859, where he experimented with hybridization. He contributed 3 papers to the transactions of the Botanical Society. He corresponded with Charles Darwin, starting in 1862, with one letter describing him having ‘remarkable talent, astonishing perseverance, much modesty, and what I admire, determined difference from me on many points’. He also corresponded with the great botanist Sir J.D. Hooker. He moved to Calcutta Botanic Garden in 1864, where he became Curator of the Royal Botanic Garden, his passage to India being paid for by Darwin. There he conducted experiments in the cultivation of cotton and other plants, wrote a paper on ‘the tree ferns of British Sikkim’ and provided Darwin with information for his book ‘Expression’ (1872). He became a Fellow of the Linnean Society in 1873. He was then seconded by the Indian government to work on diseases that affected the opium crop and he wrote ‘Manual of Opium Husbandry of Behar and Benares’ (1877). He caught an infection of the spleen in Darjeeling, and returned to Edinburgh in 1879, dying in his sister’s house at Garvald, East Lothian. He died unmarried, having published over 20 papers on a wide range of botanical subjects. He was described by his contemporaries as extremely modest and a remarkable self-taught man. However, he was also of a nervous and shy disposition, such that ‘the condition of nervous tension in which he seemed to live was indicated by frequent nervous gestures with his hands and by the restless twisting of his long beard in which he continuously indulged’. John (b.c.1830) originally from Yarrow Parish, he lived in Ashkirk Parish. He was probably the Thatcher, son of widow Mary, living at Dimpleskowne in 1851. He married Mary Scott in 1852 and their children, baptised in Ashkirk, were William (b.1852) and Jane (b.1854). Probably the same John was a Police Constable in Stow by 1861, with additional children Robert, John and Mary. John (b.1832) son of George and Jean, he was born in Ashkirk Parish. His father worked on farms at Synton. He was a ploughman and then worked as a railway porter and lampman. His wife was Margaret, and they lived at Burnfoot, then Adderstoneshiel, Upper Village and the High Street. Their daughter was Georgina (b.c.1858). John (1836–1900) 4th son of John, tenant in Over Deloraine and Christian Scott from Ladhope. He was descended from the Scotts of Single. He succeeded his father as tenant at Over Deloraine, later known as West Deloraine. He was recorded as farmer there in 1868. In 1871 he married Jane, daughter of John Thomson from Catslackburn. Their children included: John (1872–1923); James Thomson (b.1874), who lived at Dinningburn, Yorkshire; William (b.1876) who married Alice Watson McCaig from Galashiels and settled in Penrith; and Andrew Thomson (b.1885), who emigrated to Manitoba, Canada, and married his cousin Jean Thomson. John Henry Francis Kinnaird of Gala (1859–1935) son of Hugh, he was the 10th Laird. He was educated at Radley College, Abingdon, Oxfordshire. He was Justice of the Peace for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire and was Deputy Lieutenant for Selkirkshire. He served as Provincial Grand Master of the Masons 1921–26. He died unmarried and was succeeded by his nephew Henry John Alexander. John M. (19th C.) writer of some local poetry, e.g. ‘The Nicht Afore the Morn’ in 1893. Rev. John (19th/20th C.) minister at Dalkeith West, who moved to Saughtree Kirk in 1922. He stayed until 1925, when he was translated to Anwoth, Kirkcudbright. He demitted in 1931. John Robson (19th/20th C.) farmer at Newton (probably in Bedrule Parish). John (19th/20th C.) farmer at Kinninghall. His father and uncle were joiners at Stobs Woodfoot. John Hyslop (d.1944) served with the K.O.S.B. territorials and worked for Wilson & Glenny. He served with the 1st Lincolnshire Regiment and died of gunshot wounds in India. He is buried in the Delhi War Cemetery and is commemorated on the Hawick War Memorial. John Ross (1951– ) local man who was newspaper reporter and Hawick News editor in the 1990s. He was first on Jedburgh Council, then a Hawick Councillor from 1985, as a Liberal, being Honorary Provost from 1999 until 2002, when he took over as Convenor of the Scottish Borders Council. However, he lost his seat to Mary Beck in 2003. Also a Justice of the Peace, he has had particular interest in transport matters. Joseph (18th C.) wright in Hawick. He was son of the miller, probably James. He was said to be possessor of the ‘undermost house of the Miln Port’, which was carried away by the great flood of 1767. He is probably the Joseph who married Margaret Scott in 1775 (registered in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes) and whose children included: George (b.1776); Jane (b.1783); and Joseph (b.1785). Joseph (b.c.1790–bef. 1851) gun-maker and ironmonger at the Sandbed, listed on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He is also listed as a tinsmith there. In 1837 he was listed as a blacksmith and tin-plate worker on the High Street, with ‘Joseph Scott & Sons’ also being listed as ironmongers, gun-makers and tin-plate workers on the Sandbed. On the 1841 census he was at about 21 High Street and listed as a smith. His wife and daughter were still running the ironmonger’s business in 1851. However, confusingly Slater’s 1852 directory lists among the ironmongers ‘Joseph Scott & Sons’ on Teviot Square and Jane Scott on the High Street. He married Jane Veitch, apparently in Edinburgh in 1826. Their children included: Joseph (b.1828), who probably died young; and Elizabeth (b.1830). He is probably the Joseph born to Joseph and Peggy in Wilton in 1785. Joseph (b.1799) born in Selkirk, son of James and Barbara Skirving. He was recorded in the 1851 census as a teacher of Latin, Greek and French on the Cross Wynd. In 1852 he was listed as a teacher in Punchbowl Close. Katherine of Colifort (16th C.) recorded in 1540 being ‘of Colinfurd’. She acknowledged receipt of 100 merks Scots from John Cranston of that Ilk for redemption of 4 husbandlands in Denholm. It is unclear how she was related to other Scotts. Janet (with no surname given) is also mentioned as the person renouncing the 4 husbandlands. Katherine (d.c.1578) widow of Gavin Turnbull in Over Auncrom Her will was registered in Edinburgh in 1578 and that of her husband in 1574/5. Katherine (d.c.1581) described as ‘sometime spouse’ to John Mowbray, merchant Burgess of Edinburgh in 1581 when her will was registered there. Keith Stanley Malcolm, M.B.E. (b.1884) son of Joseph Rogerson and Annie Latimer. He was from Scott from a line of Scotts who settled in Morpeth, and were descended from Gideon, 5th son of John of Woll. He inherited Kenton Hall in Northumberland from his father, but sold it and purchased Greenwood, a small farm in Cumberland. In 1923 he published his compilation of Scott family history, called ‘Scott, 1118–1923’ (reprinted in 1969). When he was almost done with his work he discovered the unfinished study by John of Rodono; he then incorporated some of this information, and lodged 3 typed copies in library collections. In 1910 he married Rosina Marguerita, daughter of Cavalier V.A. Montaldi of Forest Hall. Kenneth (1953/4– ) ‘Ken’ lawyer based in Denver, Colorado, but frequent visitor to Hawick. He served for 12 years as an Assistant U.S. Attorney in the Department of Justice. He then spent 13 years in the Hague, where he worked as a senior prosecutor in the International Criminal Tribunal. In 2017 he received the Mostar Peace Prize for his work investigating and litigating war crimes in the former Yugoslavia. He has also worked on cases in Somalia, the Lebanon and South Sudan. He has been an adjunct professor at the U.S. Air Force Academy, the University of Colorado-Boulder and Regis University. He first came to Hawick in 1998 when touring to investigate his Scottish roots, staying for the Common Riding that year. Despite the fact that he never did find any direct historical link between his family and Hawick, he has returned regularly for the Common Riding, as a rider and supporter. He was Callants’ Club Chief Guest in 2015. Kentigern (14th C.) recorded in an English document of 1337 when Edward III had him under his special protection since he had ‘long dwelt at his allegiance in his realm’. Kentigern (16th C.) recorded in 1582 as witness to a sasine in Hawick, involving James Jack. His forename is recorded as ‘Quintigern’. Lady of Howpasley (16th/17th C.), presumably widow of the former Laird of Howpasley, who was either Walter or his son William. Neither her first name nor her maiden name are recorded. Assisted by Jean Scott of Satchells, she presided over a Council of War at Hawick Cross in April 1615, complaining that Sir James Douglas had taken lands at Howpasley, and urging a band of supporters to kill all the sheep there. About 60 sheep were slaughtered, in an act of spectacular barbarism, described as ‘sic monstruous and unharm of crewaltie, as the lyk quhairof hes nicht bene hard amangist the wyld Irisch and savadge people’. Several of the perpetrators were subsequently hanged, although she escaped punishment, and the lands of Howpasley were soon afterwards back in her family’s hands. Lawrence (13th C.) recorded as ‘Laurence Scot’ in 1272/3 when he had a letter granting safe conduct from King Edward I so he could visit ‘the threshold of St. Andrew the Apostle’. It is unclear how he might have been related to other family members. Lawrence (14th C.) recorded in 1343 regarding the accounts for Forfar in the Exchequer Rolls. Lawrence (15th C.) recorded in 1495 as witness to a charter for Thomas Grundistone of Kingask, signed in Edinburgh. His name is recorded as ‘Laurentio Scot’. Lawrence (15th C.) recorded as owner of a piece of land in Ayr according to an ‘obit’ of 1496. He was described as ‘in Irvine’ and hence may have been an ancestor of Lawrence of Harperrig. Lawrence (15th/16th C.) graduated from the University of Glasgow in 1509. Perhaps the same man is recorded in 1516 when ‘Janet Murr’, a widow, protested in Glasgow that he had promised to marry her and hence she objected to his betrothal in Irvine to ‘Isabella Mugumry’; however, Muir later retracted her statement. In 1519 he was ‘Mr. Laurence Scot’ when he witnessed an instrument in Irvine. Lawrence of Harperrig and Clerkington (d.1637), J.P., son of Hugh of Scotsloch. He was descended from a branch of the Scotts of Buccleuch who had moved to Ayrshire. Before 1592 he was apprenticed to Robert Scott of Knightspottie, Rector of Chancery, and became an advocate. He is probably the ‘Lowry Scott, writer’ who became a Burgess of Glasgow in 1601. In 1604 he became a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh in right of marrying Bessie, daughter of William ‘Hoppringle’, who was a Burgess. He bought Harperrig in 1605. In 1609 he witnessed a charter for lands in Ashkirk Parish. In 1612 he was granted (the right of) the marriage of the young Walter Scott of Buccleuch. He later served the Earl on the commission to run his affairs while he was in Holland, his son William also being a commissioner. In 1618 he represented Walter of Buccleuch before the Privy Council when several men from upper Teviotdale were accused of cutting down timber at Gorrenberry. In 1620 he was witness to a charter for the Earl of Buccleuch for the lands of Goldielands. In 1634 he carried the coat of honour at the Earl’s funeral in Hawick, and his sons William and James also took part in the procession. He had a charter for Elliston in about 1622 and was granted the lands of Bavelaw in Edinburgh in 1628, Bonnington (in West Lothian) in 1629 and Clerkington in 1634. In 1633 he was appointed one of the ‘Tutors Testamentary’ to oversee the Earl of Buccleuch’s will. He may be the same advocate who was one of those representing a group of Scots accused of slaughtering sheep at Howpasey in a trial of 1616. In 1617 he and his son-in-law James Scott were charged with assault. He represented the Earl of Buccleuch in 1628 when he accused a number of Hawick men of cutting down trees on his land. He married Elizabeth, daughter of William Pringle from Edinburgh. His children were: Sir William of Clerkington, who was one of the Lords of Session; James of Bonnington (in West Lothian); Lawrence of Bavelaw; Marion, who married James Scott of Vogrie, uncle to Sir John Scott of Scotstarvit; Margaret, who married William Wallace of Shewalton; Agnes, married Patrick Kinloch; Joanna, married James Clerk; and Alison, married Peter Houston. His widow Bessie was recorded in a deed of 1663. Lawrence of Bavelaw (d.c.1670) 3rd son of Lawrence of Harperrig. He seems to be sometimes referred to as ‘Lancelot’. In 1649 he became a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh, by right of his father-in-law Stephen Boyd. In 1650 he was named as one of the ‘tutors’ for the children of Francis Earl of Buccleuch in his will and also served as one of the ‘tutors testamentaries’ for the will of Francis. He was a Chamberlain to Scott of Buccleuch 1658–59 and listed in 1661 as still owing money for the rentals for these years. He witnessed the marriage contract of Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch in 1663. He firstly married Margaret, daughter of Stephen Boyd of Temple. He secondly married Katherine Binning (who is recorded as his widow in 1673). The couple were granted the Barony of Corstophine by Oliver Cromwell. His son Lawrence of Bavelaw was served as his heir in various lands in 1670 and 1673, and was in turn served by another son Charles in 1691. His children were: Lawrence (1643–79), who succeeded; Elizabeth, who married Sir William Binning; Marion; Ann; Margaret, who married Hugh Wallace, W.S.; Barbara; Janet; William (1647/8–90), who succeeded his half-brother Lawrence; Charles (d.1701), who succeeded his brother William; Hugh (b.1658); David (b.1660); Katherine; Barbara, who married Sir Roger Hogg; Eupham; Christian, who married Sir Alexander Brand; Marion; Janet, who married Michael Lumsden; Anna; and Agnes, who married Adam Fullerton, W.S. Lawrence (17th C.) witnessed a baptism in Ashkirk Parish in 1651 for Patrick Howburn. Leticia (13th C.) recorded as surname ‘Scot’ in 1272, when she gave half a mark to have a writ ‘ad terminum’ at Westminster. Lilias (17th C.) daughter of Jean, who was sister of the last Walter of Crumhaugh (although these generations are quite uncertain). She married William Knox, servant to George, Lord Ross. She inherited parts of the Goldielands and Crumhaugh estates from her uncle Walter (along with her cousin Robert Scott of Glack). But these passed to another relative, Walter of Crumhaugh, in the early 1670s. Lilias (b.1835) daughter of Francis Napier and Janet Oliver. She married spinner Adam Murray and they emigrated to Canada, living in Ontario. They had a daughter, Jessie Murray Scott (b.1857), perhaps before they were married. They had a daughter Annie who married William Roper (son of William Roper from Massachusetts and Ann, daughter of Robert Greenwood from Hawick); their daughter Annie Roper married her father’s cousin William Maxwell, a son of Grace Maxwell, who was half-sister of Ann Greenwood. They also had a son George Stevenson Murray. Lucas (d.bef. 1270) recorded in 1242 as ‘Lucas Scot mayor of Dunwich’ in pleas in the county of Norfolk, relating to sacks of Scottish wool. He was probably related to Gerald, who was also listed. He is recorded as ‘Luke the Scotsman’ in a document from the Sheriff of Norfolk and Suffolk in 1243. He is ‘Lucas le Scot’ of Dunwich in a court case in 1256 and another in 1258. He is further listed as ’le Escot’ in a plea at Dunwich in 1258, and also as ’les Es- cot’ of Dunwich in a document from Norfolk and Suffolk in 1262. His wife suffered some sort of infirmity, and there was a case against a surgeon called Reginald, whose goods they had kept when he tried to cure her; his son Richard is also mentioned. His son and heir Richard is recorded in another document in 1267/8. In 1260 he is ‘Luke the Scotsman of Dunwich’ in a case involving merchants from Hamburg. Ludovic (15th C.) merchant from Genoa, perhaps originally of Scottish origin. In 1447 there was an expense at Roxburgh Castle recorded to him and other Genoese merchants. Malcolm (13th/14th C.) holder of lands in Glasgow, according to a document of about 1300. He is referred to as ‘Malcolmus dicti Scoti’. Mallie (d.c.1599) described as ‘Maillie, relict of James Gilmour’, portioner of Auchtermuchty in 1599 when her will was registered in Edinburgh. Margaret (13th C.) recorded York in 1254, when Margaret (15th C.) tenant of half of ‘Nethir sannake’ in Galloway in 1481, when her right was assigned to John Kennedy. Margaret (15th/16th C.) wife of John and mother of Alexander. She was a widow in 1499 when the East steading of Langhope was assigned to her and her son Alexander. And in 1501 the Middle stead was assigned to the pair. Margaret (16th C.) wife of Laurence Huggan. She is recorded in 2 documents from Abernethy Parish in Perthshire in 1551, giving up her rights to the lands of ‘Ovir Vestir Pitgrunze’. Margaret (16th C.) recorded in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter of Branzholme, she was possibly a Scott. The entry states that payment is due ‘to Thomas Hendrie in Selkirk, for chaithe furnest to Margaret of the Wallis’. This may have either been Woll in the Ale valley or Walls in Dryfesdale (where there were also Scotts). Margaret (d.c.1581) described as ‘sometime spouse’ to John of Dryhope when her will was registered in Edinburgh in 1581/2. It is unclear what branch of the Scotts she came from. Margaret (d.c.1586) described as ‘alias Brandlow, sometime spouse’ to John Robertson, maltman, Burgess of Perth in 1586 when her will was registered in Edinburgh. It is unclear what her nickname referred to. Margaret (d.c.1589) described as ‘sometime spouse to John Seytoun, mariner, in Northsyde of the Church. She is specifically said to have married Robert Scott of Thirlestane (but this is probably confusion with an earlier Margaret); Mary Scott, who married William Elliot of Larriston; Francis Stewart (b.1584); John Stewart; Frederick Stewart; Henry Stewart; Elizabeth Stewart (b.1590), who married James, Master of Cranston and was mother of William Cranston, 3rd Lord Cranston; Helen Stewart, who married John Macfarlane of that Ill; Jean Stewart, who married Robert Elliot of Redheugh; and Margaret Stewart, who married Alan, 5th Lord Cathcart. She lived to a great old age and is buried at Eckford. Margaret (16th/17th C.) wife of Walter of Burnfoot. She was tried at Edinburgh in 1620 for assailing James ‘Lethame’ in 1616 in Hawick Parish Church. She is specifically said to have ‘in the verie tyme of divyne service’ struck him ‘with ane mekle grite key of twa pund wecht in hir hand’, making his head bleed within the church. Later, she was accused of assailing James on the High Street, along with 7 accomplices, armed ‘with lanceis, staullffis, swerdis, long kentis or grite treis’, again wounding him in the head and giving his wife ‘mony bauch and bla striakis’. Lastly she was accused of leading a group to James’ house.
to attack him and his wife. Not appearing before the Privy Council she was denounced as a rebel. She later complained about not being informed that she should appear and after finding caution was ordered to pay James Lethem a fine of 10 merks. The origin of this dispute is not described. Presumably her own surname was also Scott, but it is unclear from what branch of the family she came. Margaret (b.c.1600) only daughter of ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden and his 2nd wife, Margaret, daughter of John Edgar of Wedderlie, widow of William Spottiswood of that Ilk. She married David Pringle, heir apparent of Galashiels and in 1625 secondly married Sir William McDougall of Makerstoun. The marriage contract with her brother Sir William suggested that she was still a minor in 1623. She received ‘annualrent’ of Makerstoun as part of the contract in 1625 and in 1632 renounced her right to the demesne lands of Smailholm to Sir James Pringle of Galashiels. Margaret ‘Maggy Fendy’ (16th/17th C.) daughter of Walter of Harden and Mary, ‘the Flower of Yarrow’. She married Gilbert Eliott of Stobs and Horsleyhill, ‘Gibbie o the Gowden Garters’ and their son William succeeded to Stobs. In 1643 she is recorded as mother of William when she was liferenter of lands in Kirkton Parish valued at £666 13s 4d. She may also have been the ‘Mar. Scott, gudwife of Horsliehill’ who owned lands in Hassendean Parish valued at £637, also in 1643. She is probably the ‘Lady Stobs’ who was said to have refused to attend her parish church when the minister was an Episcopalian. It was said that her grandson Gilbert (later 1st Lord Minto) spent a lot of time in her company. Margaret (16th/17th C.) mother-in-law of Francis of Castleside. Francis’ wife appears to have been Isobel, and so would have been her daughter. In 1639 there is a dispute in the Ashkirk Parish records between her and her son, apparently over access to the family seat in the Kirk. She claimed Francis had ‘maliciously and unreverently rackt and ruggit her from her said seat’, while he claimed she had called him ‘thief and traitour’. The precise nature of the dispute is not clear. However, she is referred to as ‘sometyme in Castleside’. The resolution was that she ‘would hear no reason’ and so was charged to appear before the Selkirk Presetry. The fact that she was referred to as ‘of Castleside’ herself suggests that she was Margaret, daughter of George of Castleside, who was served heir to her father, along with their 2 sisters Janet and Bessie, in 1632. Margaret (17th C.) owner of the lands of Broadlee in Ashkirk Parish in 1643. She is recorded as ‘Mar. Scott for Braidlies’, valued at £160. Probably the same ‘Goodwife of braidlie’ paid tax on £160 in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. She was presumably widow of the former Laird of Broadlee. It is also possible that she was the same Margaret as the mother-in-law of Francis of Castleside. Margaret (d.1672) daughter of William of Chamberlain Newton, and also related to the Scotts of Brieryyard. She married Thomas Elliot in Borthwickshields and had at least 5 children, including William Elliot, 1st Laird of Borthwickbrae. She may be the ‘Mariota’, daughter of William of Chamberlain Newton, who was served heir to her father’s brother Simon in 1643. Margaret (17th C.) daughter of Robert of Whitslade. In 1647 she was served heir to her father’s lands of Ettrickhouse, Bowerhope and Dalgleish, all of which were contained in the Barony of Synton by annexation. Margaret (17th C.) one of the daughters of Robert of Alton. In 1653 she and her sisters Bessie and Agnes were served heirs to their ‘foir grandsher’ (probably great-gandfather) Robert in half of the East Mains of Hassendean. Margaret (17th C.) recorded in 1676 as ‘goodwife of Coudhouse’, i.e. wife of Scott of Coldhouse (although her husband’s name is unrecorded). James Henderson was found guilty of giving her ‘a blow for-against the heart’. It is possible she is the same woman as Marie of Coldhouse, recorded in 1663. Margaret (17th C.) resident of ‘Crawknow’ in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor’. Margaret (17th C.) resident at Doecluch according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. She is recorded as ‘Margrat Scott in Brugh’, suggesting that she was perhaps widow of a Scott who had farmed at nearby Brugh. Margaret (17th/18th C.) wife of James, who farmed at Borthaugh in the early 1690s. In 1696 and 1698 she herself was renting 1/4 of Borthaugh and was then a widow. Her cautioners were Adam and Walter, farmers at Overhall, who were probably closely related. Margaret (17th/18th C.) recorded receiving money from Ashkirk Parish in 1727. Margaret (b.1736) resident of Wilton Parish. The Session records for 1736 record the receipt of ‘more of the valow’ of her effects. Margaret (d.c.1782) widow who had her will proved at the Prerogative Court of Canterbury in 1783. Her surname is listed as ‘Scott alias Brown’ and she was from Hawick, Roxburghshire. It is unclear if she was a Scott or a Brown. Margaret ‘Cripple Meg’ (18th C.) recorded in 1781 when her daughter Margaret died in Hawick. Her nickname seems self-explanatory. It is unclear if Scott was her maiden or married name. Her daughter could be the Margaret baptised in Hawick in 1773, with no parents names given. Margaret (18th C.) housemaid at Bransholme in 1789 when she was working for Adam Ogilvie. Margaret (d.1815) daughter of Robert of Burnhead. In 1786 she married Rev. Samuel Charters of Wilton. She succeeded her brother to Burnhead following his death in 1795. She died without issue and was in turn succeeded by her cousin William Watson. Margaret ‘Peggy’ nee Anderson (b.c.1780) possibly the daughter of Michael Anderson born in Roberton Parish in 1770, she married Thomas Scott and lived at Deanburnhaugh. She lived to an old age and was said to have at least 300 descendants by the 1930s. She was described as being ‘everybody’s body. Whenever trouble or stress prevailed she was always ready to do and to dare for the sake of others’. She had at least 8 children in the period 1799–1819. In 1841 she was recorded living in Deanburnhaugh with her younger son Robert; together with James (probably her grandchild) and young teacher Thomas Amos. In 1851 she was living with her son Robert, daughter Isabella and grand-daughter Isaballa Rutherford. In 1861 she was living with her son Robert, granddaughter Christian Rutherford and great-grand-daughter Isabella Miller. Margaret (1809-23) daughter of Rev. David of Castleton. She was listed among subscribers to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. Margaret Taylor (1848–1921) daughter of James, who was a carpenter from Roxburghshire, and perhaps from the area around Hawick. She grew up in Dundas, Ontario, attended the Toronto Normal School, and then taught at Pickering, Strathroy, Brantford and Ottawa. She was headmistress of the Toronto Model School and then the Toronto Presbyterian Ladies’ College. However, in 1903 she set up her own school in Toronto, which she called ‘Branksome Hall’, probably after the fictional castle of Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Lay of the Last Minstrel’, rather than the real castle of Bransholme. The name was suggested by Alexander MacMillan. She moved to Vancouver because of ill health, and died there. She was survived by brothers James and William (superintendent of emigration in Ottawa), and sisters Mrs. Conklin, Elizabeth and Jean. Maria see Mary, Countess of Bucleuch. Marie (17th C.) liferenter of Coldhouse in the 1643 county valuation, when her lands were valued at £40. Probably the same Marie was recorded as owner of lands in Hawick valued at £3. She was probably widow of the former Laird of Coldhouse (perhaps Peter, recorded being ‘of Cowdhome’ in 1654). It is possible that she was the Marie (or Mary), sister of Robert Scott of Hartwoodmyres, who married Walter of Howford (who was connected to the Coldhouse family) in 1615. She may be the ‘goodwife of Coudhouse’ recorded in 1676. William of Coldhouse held these same lands in 1678 and seems likely to have been her son. Marion (d.c.1591) described as ‘sometime spouse to John Gibson, dwelling in Litill-Ardit, in Luchars, par. in Fife’ when her will was registered in Edinburgh in 1591. Marion (17th C.) daughter of William of Fingland. She married William Wilson ‘in Gulzeaneflat’. In 1602 she was served heir to her brother Walter of Howpasley. However, Howpasley passed shortly thereafter to Walter, son of her cousin Patrick of Tanlawhill. Marion Adamson (1886–1963) daughter of Peter, founder of Pesco’s. When her father died she took over the house Norwood. She never married. Marjorie (d.c.1582) described as ‘sometime spouse to umquhile Henry Broun, of the Horne’ when her will was registered in Edinburgh in 1582. Marjorie (d.c.1583) described as ‘sometime spouse to Mr. Thomas Monorgund, in Argayth’, Errol Parish, Perthshire, when her will was registered in Edinburgh in 1583/4. Mark (17th/18th C.) recorded as drummer in Selkirk in 1708. He was given a salary in that year, including 3 pairs of shoes. Martin (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Martimus Scot’ in the Exchequer Rolls of 1501. Along with ‘Willelmus Unys’ he had his fine in Roxburghshire compounded. It is unclear which branch of the Scotts he came from. Martin (d.bef. 1609) merchant in Edinburgh who became a Burgess in 1585/6. He was already deceased and recorded as ‘Mairtine’ in 1609 when his eldest son George became a merchant in Edinburgh. Mary (16th C.) called ‘the Flower of Yarrow’, popularised in the ballad of the same name. She was said to be the daughter of Philip Scott of Dryhope Tower and renowned for her beauty; in fact she was probably sister of Philip, and 2nd daughter of John of Dryhope, but presumably tales of her beauty had real foundation. In 1576 she married Walter Scott of Harden (‘Auld Wat’, the marriage contract still exists) and bore 4 sons and 6 daughters. She is there referred to as ‘Marion’, and was to be infel in liferent in the lands of Mabonlaw as part of the contract, with Harden to pay to Dryhope.
400 merks Scots. She is said to have served him his spurs when the larders were empty. Mary (16th/17th C.) wife of Simon of Bonnington. It is unclear if she was also a Scott. In 1617 she is ‘Marie Scott, Lady Bonytoun’ when she complained to the Privy Council about the actions of the Scotts of Harden and others. She stated that she had several children, with only a son surviving (presumably Robert) who died at the age of 19 following injuries sustained through an attack by William Riddell, miller in Todrig Mill, who was supported by Walter Scott of Harden. She further complained that she and her grandchildren were attacked at their house at Newhouse (probably the place near Ettrickbridge), with the walls being undermined and collapsing, with the occupants narrowly escaping, then her nurse being assaulted, some of the small children being trampled underfoot by the assailants and her only milk cow having its udder deliberately injured. Later a larger group of Scotts ‘all bodin in feir of weir, with swerdis, gantillatis, plaitslevis, and utheris wappomis invasive’ demanded the keys to their tower of Newhouse and ousted them without their belongings in the middle of winter. They also forbade any of the 16 mills in Ettrick Forest from grinding her corn, only to be saved by Sir Robert Scott of Traquair offering her mill. She further complained that she still held the livery of her husband’s lands, and hence the Scotts of Harden should not be allowed to take her crops, with her having no means of livelihood or house for her grandchildren. She appeared personally before the Privy Council, but it was found that she had failed to prove the charges. Mary (1647–1661) Countess of Buccleuch, she succeeded her father, Francis, the 2nd Earl, at age 4, being served heir to all the lands and titles of the Scotts of Buccleuch, including the half Barony of Wilton, the Barony of Chamberlain Newton, the Lordship of Liddesdale, etc. She was also referred to as ‘Maria’ or ‘Marie’. Her tutors and trustees were Sir John Scott of Scotstarvit, Sir William Scott of Clerkington, Sir William Scott of Harden, Sir William Scott younger of Harden, Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs, Gideon Scott of Highchester, John Scott of Gorrenberry, Patrick Scott of Thirlestane, Lawrence Scott of Bavelaw and Patrick Scott of Langshaw. There were disputes between the ‘Lothian tutors’ and the ‘South Country tutors’, as well as between Gideon Scott of Highchester and John Hay, Earl of Tweeddale (her uncle), who were trying to arrange for her marriage. There was also a great power struggle between her mother, Countess of Wemyss, and the appointed trustees for control of her and her sister Anne: Oliver Cromwell was enlisted in support, affirming that the daughters should be entrusted to their mother. During her minority Dalkeith house was occupied by Gen. Monck. She had a huge fine of £15,000 imposed by Cromwell for her father’s support of Charles II, with the tutors pleading for a reduction in the amount. There were schemes to marry her to the sons of many noblemen, probably including Sir Andrew Ker of Greenhead, Lord Robert Kerr, a son of the Earl of Tweeddale, the son of Scott of Scottshall in Kent and the son of John Scott of Gorrenberry. She was in fact married in secrecy to Walter, eldest son of Sir Gideon Scott of Highchesters, when she was 11 years of age (and he was 14), although there was an attempt to annul the marriage until she was at least 12! However, Cromwell died in this period, which complicated the legal challenges, although there continued to be machinations to control her future and that of her sister. She was never in good health, being regularly attended by doctors (who probably did more harm than good), with an arm infection that refused to heal. She went to London for the curing power of the King’s touch, but the journey probably made her condition worse and then she caught measles on her return to Scotland. She died at the age of 13. The power struggles continued, with the last revision to her will giving family control to the Earls of Rothes and Wemyss, freezing out Sir Gideon of Highchester and her husband Walter of Tarras. She was succeeded by her sister Anne (or Anna) and was buried at Dalkeith. She was recorded in several deeds in 1663, although already deceased by then. Mary (17th/18th C.) sister and heiress of John of Headshaw. In 1681 she married Patrick Porteous, Burgess of Peebles. She succeeded to the estate of Headshaw in 1691, there being no male heirs. This included Headshaw Mill and Dryden, as well as Crawknow and Clews. In 1696 she and her husband sold Headshaw to Sir Gilbert Elliot. She was involved in an ‘action of relief’ with Anna, Duchess of Buccleuch in 1713. Her daughter Henrietta married Michael Anderson of Tushielaw. She is also referred to as ‘Marie’. Mary Lilia (d.1790) eldest daughter of John of Harden. She was sometimes known as the ‘Flower of Yarrow’, like her ancestor namesake. There was a portrait of her by Allan Ramsay, which hung in Hamilton Palace (transferred to Mertoun House), painted it is said for the Duke of Hamilton who was infatuated with her, although she was attached to the 2nd son of Scott of Scotchavert (who died, and she never married). She is also said to have had the song ‘Tweedside’ written about her, particularly the lines ‘What beauties does Flora disclose! How sweet are her smiles upon Tweed! Yet Mary’s still sweeter than those; Both nature and fancy exceed’. Mary ‘Floor o Rankleburn’ (18th/19th C.) married Thomas Smith, farmer at Hartshaugh Mill. Her nickname came from her good looks, the story being that a gentleman visiting her father’s house asked for her name, and said that since there was a Mary Scott ‘Flower of Yarrow’, she should be the ‘Flower of Rankleburn’. Her daughter Mary married Robert Purdom. She also had several other children, including Peter, Patrick, Robert, Archibald, Thomas, Andrew, Margaret and Jane. Mary (18th C.) chambermaid at Langlands in 1786, when she was working for Gilbert Elliot. Mary (b.1808/9) from Selkirk, she was school mistress at Deanburnhaugh. She is recorded there on the 1851 census. Matthew (12th/13th C.) recorded as ‘Master Matthew de Scotia’ in Paris in 1218. He was King’s Chancellor in 1228 when he was elected as Bishop of Aberdeen, although he resigned this in favour of Dunkeld. He was also mentioned in a letter from Ralph Neville, Bishop of Chichester, in 1228. He may have died in 1230 before becoming Bishop. He may be the same Matthew as the Archdeacon of Cleveland. Matthew (13th C.) listed as ‘Matheus le Scot’ along with Walter and Adam from Chillingham for robbing a house in the area of Hebburn and Lynemouth. Matthew of Belstanerig (16th C.) mentioned in 1586/7 when his brother Alexander was listed among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. Matthew (17th C.) recorded in 1579/80 as ‘Mathew if the bent in Tuchellaw’. He promised to pay John Brydon, bridlemaker in Selkirk for an unspecified reason. Matthew (16th/17th C.) listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605. He was recorded as ‘Mathou Scott, called Broid of Steill’, and was probably associated with the lands of the Steele. Michael (c.1175–c.1234) sometimes called ‘the Border Wizard’. Traditionally his birth and death have been placed in the Borders, although there is no evidence for this. He was possibly Michael, who was second son of Richard, and grandson of Uchtred. He held lands in Fife and flourished in the reign of William I, and his descendants are the Scotts of Balwearie, as well as the Scotts of Ancrum. He studied in Oxford and Durham, then travelled widely around Europe, serving as court astronomer and physician (or astrologer and alchemist) to Holy Roman Emperor Frederick II. He is recorded in Toldeo, Spain, in 1217 and was also in Italy. He had a licence for 2 cures in Scotland, as well as the Archbishopric of Cashel in Ireland, which he resigned by 1224. He had another licence to hold a cure in England and 2 in Scotland in 1225. He translated many important works from Arabic into Latin, thus reintroducing Aristotelian ideas to the western world. Legends of his supernatural powers abound (popularised in Dante, Boccaccio and Sir Walter Scott), and few hard facts are known about his life. He is supposed to have helped bring the infant Maid of Norway to claim the Scottish throne in 1290, when in his 70s, although this may have been a later Michael of Balwearie. He is also said to be buried in Melrose Abbey along with a ‘mighty book’ of necromancy, although others suggest he was buried at Home Coltrame in Cumberland. He is said to have caused the Eildons to be split into 3 and the local belief in his magical powers continued for centuries after his death. It may be that more than one man’s life is being compounded here. The Michael who held lands in Fife married Margaret, daughter of Duncan Syras of that ilk and was succeeded by his son Duncan, with his grandson Michael becoming the first Scott Laird of Balwearie – ‘The black spae-book from his breast he took, Impressed with many a warlock spell: And the book it was wrote by Michael Scott, Who held in awe the fiends of hell’ [JL], ‘In these far climes it was my lot To meet the wondrous Michael Scot’ [SWS] ‘And here, though history tells it not, Has crossed it was wrote by Michael Scott, Of the Kingdom of Scotland’ [WNK] (often written ‘Scot’). J. Wood Brown wrote ‘An enquiry into the life and legends of Michael Scott’ (1897), Lynn Thorndike wrote ‘Michael Scot’ (1965) and Tom Hubbard wrote ‘Michael Scot: myth and polymath’ (2006). Michael (13th C.) along with his wife made a grant of Gask (in Fife) to Dunfermline Abbey sometime before 1231. He is referred to as Michael Scot ‘of the Kingdom of Scotland’ when he made a grant for income from lands in Fife. He was witnessed another couple of grants from Fife in about 1230 and 1231. He could be the Michael, son of Malothen, recorded in 1231. His wife was Margaret, daughter of Duncan of Ceres and his heir was Duncan. He had another son, John. His wife was a widow in the period 1238–50 when she confirmed the grant of Gask.
Scott Scott

He was surely associated with the Balwearie family, but the details are uncertain; in particular, he appears to be contemporary with Michael ‘the Wizard’. Michael (13th C.) recorded in the Exchequer Rolls for 1265. This was in the accounts of the Sheriff of Traquair regarding the lands of ‘Stuth’. His surname was written ‘Scoto’. Sir Michael of Balwearie (13th C.) son of Duncan and probably great-grandson of the first Richard. He was knighted by Alexander II. He married the daughter and heiress of Sir Richard Balwearie, and so came into possession of Balwearie in Fife, which the family held for another 13 generations, ending with Col. Walter of Balwearie, who died in Flanders in the reign of Charles II. He may be the Michael who paid homage to Edward I in 1291, and was succeeded by his son, also Sir Michael, who swore fealty to Edward I in 1295/6. His seal bore a chevron with 3 lion’s heads, with a crescent on each side of the shield, and the words ‘S’ MICHAELIS SCOTT MILITIS’; this may be the earliest seal known for the Scott family. His wife Mary (or perhaps Margaret) is recorded as wife of a prisoner held in England in 1296. Michael (13th C.) from Linlithgowshire, he paid homage to Edward I in 1296, and is presumably separate from Sir Michael of Balwearie. Sir Michael of Balwearie (13th/14th C.) son of Sir Michael. He is recorded at Kinghorn in 1291 and signed the Ragman Rolls of 1295/6, where he is ‘Sir Michael Scot of Fife’; his seal bore a chevron between 3 lion’s heads. He was recorded in 1294 among holders of the lands of the Earldom of Fife. He was taken prisoner at Dunbar and held at Wallingford Castle in England in 1296/7; his name is recorded as ‘Dominus Michael le Scot’. He is listed in a ‘letters patent’ in 1297 promising to serve Edward I in France and elsewhere. His lands were restored by Edward I in 1297, along with those of ‘Duncan le Scot’, who was probably his son or grandson. He is listed on a roll of horses used by supporters of Edward I in 1298. He was on a jury in 1305 in Perthshire. He was succeeded by his son Sir Henry, while grandson Duncan was progenitor of the Scotts of northern Scotland and a later descendant was Andrew, progenitor of the Scotts of Ancrum. He has sometimes been identified as Michael ‘the Wizard’, but there is no evidence to support this and that Michael lived much earlier.

Sir Michael (bef. 1320–46) 2nd Laird of Rankleburn (Bucleuch), son of Sir Richard and an Inglis of Muchockstone (although these early generations are still a little uncertain). He may have been born at Rankleburn (the first of the Scotts of Bucleuch to be born locally). He was known as a gallant warrior, who distinguished himself at Halidon Hill in 1333, and was knighted some time previous to this. He fought in the division commanded by Archibald Douglas, Lord of Galloway, and was among the few noblemen who survived the battlefield. He also accompanied David II to the unfortunate Battle of Durham (or Neville’s Cross) where he was killed. He was succeeded by his son Robert, while his second son John is said to have been ancestor of the Scotts of Synton, Harden, Whitelade, Todrig, Raeburn, Woll, Thistlestane, etc. His daughter Jean may have married John Ainslie of Dophinston. Nothing much else is known about him, including the name of his wife. His Christian name may have derived from the ancestor of the Scotts of Balwearie (perhaps his great-granduncle), but seems to not have been used afterwards. Michael (14th/15th C.) born in Flanders, he was husband of the daughter of William od Swayne, who was a Burgess of Calais. In 1400 he was granted the privileges of a Burgess of Calais for his good service. He was further recorded in 1401/2 as an indweller of Calais when Henry IV conferred upon him the franchises and liberties of Calais for his good service and aid to the garrison there. This was in spite of the restriction that the town could only have Englishmen as burgesses. He may have been of Scottish origin and born in Flanders. He was also mentioned being in Calais in a petition of 1405. Sir Michael of Balwearie (14th/15th C.) son of Sir William. He disposed of the lands of ‘Cambrune’ to Sir John Wemyss of that Ilk. He was one of the hostages for King James I in 1424. The name of his wife appears to be unknown. His children included: Sir William, who succeeded; and Margaret or Marjory, who married Sir John Melville of Raith. Michael of Aikwood (d.c.1544) son of Robert of Aikwood, who he succeeded in 1517. Robert of Bonnington was probably his brother. Their mother’s name is unknown, but his forename may have come from that side of the family. In the 1526 remission to a large number of Borderers for supporting the Homes in attacking the Earl of Arran, he is recorded as ‘Maister Mychal Scott in Aikwod’ and ‘Thomas Scot, thare’ was also listed and perhaps his son; it seems that he was given the designation ‘maister’ because he trained for the priesthood (or possible the law), taking an M.A. He is probably the ‘Maister Mychael Scot’ who was among the local men who had remission in 1527 for their part in the Battle of Skirmish Field. In 1528 he was ‘magistro

Michaeli Scot de Aikwod’ when appointed as one of the Bailies for infefting David Scott in the lands of his father, Sir Walter of Branxholme. In about 1529 he and his son William were given half the lands of Bowhill in exchange for a sum to be used as the dowry for his niece Isabel Murray; Thomas in Aikwood was one of the witnesses. Also in 1529 he gained Isobel Murray’s lands of the west side of Kershope. He was probably one of the witnesses to the discharge from Patrick Earl of Bothwell to Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1528/9, where he is recorded as ‘Mr. Michell Scott’ just before ‘sir John Scot, notary’. In 1530 he witnessed a document for Robert Turnbull of Philiphaugh, in which Philip acted as an official. He is recorded in 1530 as ‘master’ when witness to a document in Selkirk and other documents in 1531 and 1531/2. In 1532/3 he was ‘master Michael Scott master of arts’ when involved with an inquest into the succession for the deceased John Scott of Roberton. In 1532/3 he was also witness to a request for an inquest into succession for the deceased John of Roberton. In 1533 he was ‘brother german’ to Isabel Murray (wife of Alexander Elliot) when she assigned to him her lands in Kershope; ‘instruments’ were sought ‘at the manor of the said master Michael’. In 1533/4 he witnessed a bond between Patrick Murray of Falahill and William Stewart of Traquair. He was ‘master Michell Scott in Aikvod’ in 1536 when he witnessed the proclamation of a royal letter in Selkirk. Also in 1536 he purchased Hermiston ‘with the fortalice of stone and lime called the Peile in the barony of Lillescleif’ from Walter Scott of Roberton. In 1536/7 there was a complaint about him farming at Easter Bowhill. In 1538 he gave have of Hermiston to Thomas Scott in Todrig. In 1539 a loan from him to Isobel Scott (probably his sister in her second marriage, wife of Alexander Elliot) was discharged. Also in 1539 he witnessed a bond between Scotts regarding the illegitimacy of Thomas son of Adam. He was witness for an action involving Alan Mithag in 1539/40. He was one of the supporters of John Scott in 1540/1, when it was agreed that John should answer for the death of Walter Down; his sons William, Robert and Walter are also listed. According to the Exchequer Rolls he claimed the lands of Aikwood in 1541 and was also tenant in half of Bowhill, half of Huntly and the wester side of Kershope. In 1541 he bound himself to William in Bowhill (probably his son) and others, with William in Hartwoodburn as a witness. He had a charter for the lands of ‘Aikwood’ in 1541, along with his wife Isobel Ker and son William. William was also granted Bowhill in the same document and witnesses included Thomas and Gilbert Scott, as well as Robert and William Scott. In 1541/2 he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk for Alexander and another in 1543/4 for George in Blindhaugh. He married Isabel Ker, from an unknown branch of the Kers. In 1541 he was said to have built ‘a honest mansion and tower’ at Aikwood when he obtained a new infeftment to himself and his wife, producing a charter from 1517 for Aikwood and Bowhill; his son and heir William is also mentioned. His children included: Walter who succeeded to Kershope; William, who succeeded to Bowhill; Robert, who succeeded his elder brothers; Adam, recorded in 1552; possibly Thomas, mentioned in the remission of 1526; and Elizabeth, stated to be sister of Robert in 1580, when she had a marriage contract with Robert, son of the deceased James in Whitslade. His widow secondly married Robert Scott of Wamphray. Michael of Vogrie (d.bef. 1581) recorded as already deceased in 1581 when his son Walter had a marriage contract with Marion, daughter of William Pringle of ‘Cartho’. Walter was to receive certain lands in Stow and John in Kirkhouses was a witness. Probably the same Michael ‘in the vogrie, par. of Borthhui’ had his will registered in Edinburgh in 1583/4. Michael of Innerteil and Balwearie (d.c.1586) recorded in 1586/7 when his will was registered in Edinburgh. It is unclear how he fits in with the genealogy of the Scotts of Balwearie. Michael of Aikwood (16th C.) listed on the roll of ‘Landit Men’ in Roxburgh and Selkirk in about 1590. It is unclear who he was, since the Laird of Oakwood at that time was Robert; however, it is possible that the long deceased Michael was meant. Michael (16th/17th C.) brother of ‘Hob Scot in the Howfurd’. The pair were described as ‘suster sones’ to Walter Scott of Harden (‘Auld Wat’) in 1617 when Lady Bonnington complained that they and others came to Newhouse, where they undermined the walls, causing the house to fall, and the next night attacked a nurse of Lady Bonnington’s household. They were also said to have later ‘trampit and tred the young ones under thair feit’ and injured the udder of their only milk cow. It is unclear who his mother was, but presumably she was a sister of Auld Wat. Michael (17th C.) Chamberlain of the Earl of Buccleuch at the time of the Earl’s death in 1633. It is unclear what branch of the family he came from. Michael (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish.

He married Christian Scott and their children included Margaret (b.1646) and Marion (b.1650). Michael (17th C.) son of John of Gilmainscleuch. He is recorded in a deed of 1663. Michael (17th/18th C.) Hawick merchant. He witnessed a baptism for John Scott ‘Whiteyetts’ in 1700. In 1703 he was fined for drinking after the rining of the 10 hour bell. He witnessed further baptisms in 1705 (along with Walter in Crumhaugh) for innkeeper William called ‘of Goldielands’ and in 1708 for smith James Scott (along with tailor George). In 1716 he was rebuked by the minister for ‘being extremely drunk laitlie in the street, and not capable to go to his dwelling house’; the minister told him he was a ‘most sad spectacle’, but not being previously guilty of drunkenness he was only admonished and told to mend his ways. He witnessed baptisms in 1720 for smith Thomas Huntly and for weaver Walter Douglas. He married Margaret Gledstains, and their children, baptised in Hawick Parish, included: John (b.1700); Walter (b.1702); Robert (b.1704); Margaret (b.1705); James (b.1709); and John (again, b.1712). The witnesses in 1700 were baker John Whillans and John Scott ‘Whitegates’, in 1702 were baker John Whillans and merchant Patrick Angus, in 1705 were John Scott of Whitegates ‘younger’ and merchant John Forman, in 1709 were tailor William Gledstains and baxter William Hodge and in 1712 were Bailie James Burn and shoemaker Robert Porteous. Michael (19th C.) married Ann Hume in Hawick Parish in 1824. Mrs. (18th/19th C.) recorded at Stirches Mains on both the 1797 Horse Tax and Dog Tax Rolls. It is unclear who she may have been married to. Alexander was recorded as tenant at Stirches Mains on the ballots for the Militia in 1797, 1799 and 1801 and may have been her son. Thomas, also listed at Stiches Mains in 1799 and 1801 may have been another son. One possibility is that she is Janet Buckham, 2nd wife (and presumably widow) of Robert, miller at Roughheugh, and step-mother of Alexander (later of Kinninghall) and Thomas (later of Little Cote). Mrs. Robert (16th C.) wife of a Hawick man, mentioned in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. She is listed being owed money ‘for sum ordinar dtwie’, but what this duty might have been is unclear. Mungo (d.c.1599) Burgess in Edinburgh recorded several times in the period 1574–84. In 1574/5 he was surety for a case involving Jedburgh Abbey. He was also caun- ter (along with Alexander, also a Burgess of Edinburgh) for George of Synton when he was warded in Edinburgh Castle in 1581, and also for Walter Scott of Goldielands (along with Robert, Burgess in Edinburgh and and James Gledstains of Cocklaw). There was a further caution by him and Alexander in 1581 for George of Synton and Robert of Haining ‘now in ward in Edinburgh Castle, in £1000 each’. It seems likely that he was closely related to Alexander and Robert, and probably also related to the Scotts of Goldielands and Buccleuch. In 1581/2 he acted as caunter for Robert of Aikwood. In 1593 he was a Burgess of Edinburgh listed among the cautioners for the inhabitants of Kelso being loyal to the King. He was also involved in a bond not to harm an Edinburgh tailor in 1595. He is probably the Burgess of Edinburgh whose will was recorded in 1599, with the will of his wife, Bessie Aikman, being recorded in 1586. Mungo (16th C.) became a merchant Burgess of Edinburgh in 1583. He is distinct from the slightly earlier merchant of the same name. Mungo (16th/17th C.) described as ‘in Castellsyd’ (i.e. Castleside) in the records of the Circuit Court of 1623 when several local men twice gave their security for his appearance. They included Andrew Allan, John Gowanlock and James Coltart in Headshaw, John Turnbull and John Campbell in Newton and Gilbert Elliot of Brugh. It is unclear whether he was related to George and Francis of Castleside. He may be the Mungo whose children baptised in Ashkirk Parish included James (b.1631), Walter (b.1635) and John (b.1636). Perhaps the same ‘Mungno’ witnessed Ashkirk baptisms in 1651 for John White and in 1652 for James Easton and Janet Scott. Mungo (17th C.) listed as resident at Todshaw in Wilton Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Mungo (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1694 he witnessed a baptism for William Scott and Jean Scott. In 1698 he was recorded as servant of the Laird of Bezwie. He married Helen Rae and their children included William (b.1698), Thomas (b.1703) and Walter (b.1708). He may be the Mungo, born to James and Agnes Stewart in 1658. Mungo (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Mary Dryden and their children included Janet (b.1772) and Thomas (b.1774). The witnesses in 1772 were the whole congregation and in 1774 included Bailie Elliot. Nelly (b.1768) and Elizabeth (b.1769) were probably also his children. Mungo (b.c.1780) hand-loom weaver in Roberton Parish. In 1841 he is listed at ‘Make Shift’ somewhere near Broadlee or Milsington. He was from out of the county and living with Jane, probably his wife. He could be the Mungo who married Jean Scott in Wilton Parish in 1813. Mungo (18th/19th C.) blacksmith at the Sandbed, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. Nell ‘Nelly the King’ (19th C.) sister of ‘Andrew the King’, and also known as a simple-minded soul. Her first could be a short form of ‘Helen’. She may have been born in 1798. Nichol (15th C.) recorded in 1456/7 as witness to the saisine for Ewesdale passing from Robert of Ewesdale to George Douglas, 4th Earl of Angus. He may have been from Ewesdale, along with Wat, Sim, Henry and John, who are also listed. Nichol (d.c.1594) son and heir of Henry. His father was already deceased in 1583 when he became a merchant Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh. His will was recorded in the commissariat of Edinburgh in 1594/5. Nichol (16th C.) cordiner in Glasgow. He was made a Burgess there in 1589/9. His eldest lawful son John was also a cordiner and made a Burgess in 1617. Their connection to other Scotts is unclear. Nichol (16th C.) tenant in Mosepeebles. He is recorded in 1590 in a case where Lord Maxwell and Alexander, Lord Home were ordered to enter certain men of Ewesdale to answer some English complaints. In 1590/1 he was ‘in Mespeble’ among men who Lord Maxwell and separately Lord Home were to enter before the Privy Council; he was specifically called out with a few others ‘to answer for all their other steel-fellows [fellow thieves]’. He was probably related to Adam, recorded in Mosepeebles in 1585. Nichol (d.bef. 1594) Burgess of Edinburgh. His will is recorded in 1594/5. His eldest son William became a merchant Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh in 1596. Nicholas (13th C.) resident of Northumberland. He is recorded in the 1279 assize roll there when his wife Agnes had rights to the young heir of ‘Walteri super Teysam’. He may already have been dead by this time. Another entry for the same year mentions ‘Nicholaus le Scot’. He could be the same as Nicholas ‘le Escot’ who was listed in an assize relating to lands in Newcastle in 1266; Henry ‘le Escot’ was also a pledge for him. He may be the Nicholas ‘le Escot’ who was among men sued by the Prior of Tynemouth in 1269 (with Henry and John also listed). It is unclear whether he or his wife were related to other Scotts. Sir Nicholas (13th/14th C.) recorded in 1318 as an English knight in a receipt involving provisions from th King’s stores in Newcastle. Perhaps the same main is recorded in an English document appraising horses in Berwick in 1311/2; his name is given there as ‘Nicholaus Skot’. Part of his seal exists and seems quite distinct from the Buccleuch arms. Nicholas of Okham (14th C.) clerk who was pardoned by Edward III at the request of Edward Baliol, late King of Scotland in 1355/6. The agreement was made in Roxburgh and was regarding the death of a monk of Westminster. Nicholas (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1618 being ‘in Quyltysede’, which could be Whiteside in the Jed valley. He complained that James Tweedie of Drev and his son owed him money and should be apprehended. Ninian (15th/16th C.) listed among the many Borders men given remission in 1526 for their earlier support of the Homes in attacking the Earl of Arran. After his name appears ‘William brother’, presumably meaning his brother. It is unclear to which branch of the family he belonged, but the Christian name is not common among Scotts. Ninian (d.bef. 1580) listed in 1580 in Selkirk, when his widow Marion was among those who Janet Gledstains owed money to. Ninian (b.c.1770s) shepherd at Sundhope according to the ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1799. He was shepherd at Roughley in Castleton Parish on the ballot in 1801. Perhaps the same Ninian was a member of the East Bank Kirk who married Agnes Reid and had a son William (b.1807). Ninian (b.c.1780s) shepherd at Eilig according to the ballot for the Militia in Roberton Parish in 1812. Osbert (13th C.) recorded as ‘Osberto scoto’ and ‘serviens’ of Walter Oliphant, Justiciar of Lothian, when he was witness to a statement about a dispute between Walter, Bishop of Glasgow, and Jordon of Corra. This was sometime in the period 1223–4. Patrick of Reston (13th C.) referred to in a charter of the 1270s involving Coldingham Priory and the lands of Great Reston. The same gift to Coldingham is described in a charter of Robert, son of Reginald of Reston, which is some time before 1233. His sons were John and Patrick. Patrick of Reston (13th C.) son of Patrick and brother of John. He witnessed several charters involving Coldingham Priory. In the 1170s he had a claim to the lands of Great Reston, which had previously been held by his father and brother. Patrick (13th C.) merchant of Berwick recorded as ‘Patrick le Esco’ in 1276, when there was a complaint of wool being stolen from their boat on the way to Dieppe. He is ‘Patrick Scot’ in 1296 when his former house in Berwick is mentioned in another case and he was ‘Patrick Lescot’ when he swore fealty to Edward I in that same year. His seal was oval with a classical head and cross and the name ‘S’PATRICII SCOT’. He may be the same as ‘Patricius Scot’ recorded in relation to Bambourgh in 1279. It is unclear if he was related to the local Scotts. Patrick (13th/14th C.) juror in 1310 for cases involving Lindores Abbey. Patrick (14th C.) resident of Berwick, whose tenement is listed in an English legal petition of 1335. Patrick (14th/15th C.) Chaplain to Robert, Duke of Albany, Governor of Scotland. In 1418 he was recorded as perpetual vicar of Inverkeilor for Stirling with Michael ‘Uchilere’, and Robert, Duke of Albany, Governor of Scotland. In 1438. Patrick (15th C.) served as Chamberlain of Strathearn and Comptroller of receipts. He is recorded many times in the Exchequer Rolls around 1500–10. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. Patrick (15th/16th C.) son of Adam, tenant in Harwoodhill. In 1502 he had remission for resetting Richard Armstrong, called ‘Skaw’, who had stolen 200 sheep from David Hoppringle at ‘Fechane’, with the help of Alexander Scott. Walter of Howpasley and Robert of Stirches acted as sureties, suggesting one or both were related to him. Also in 1502 he had remission for stealing 60 sheep from ‘langcluch’ and 15 sheep from Alexander Turnbull in Dodrig; his surety then was Robert in Synton. Patrick (15th/16th C.) witness to an instrument in the Commissary of Lesmahago in 1512. Patrick (15th/16th C.) became a saddler Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh in 1517, as 2nd son to his father. Patrick (d.bef. 1574) painter in Glasgow. James (presumably his son) was served as his heir in 1574 and was thereby made a Burgess of Glasgow. He may be the Burgess of Glasgow whose daughter married traveller Thomas Park, who was made a Burgess there in 1600. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts. Patrick of Monzie, see Peter of Monzie. Patrick (16th/17th C.) said to be a surgeon and Burgess in Hawick around 1600. His great-granddaughter Janet Scott was served heir to him in 1667; she married carrier Patrick Hardie. Patrick of Tanlawhill and Thirlestane (d.1666), son of Walter of Gamescleuch and Janet Porteous (probably being named after his maternal grandfather). His father was killed by John, son of Walter of Tushielaw, part of a feud between the Thirlestane and Tushielaw branches that lasted for many years. He was a nephew of Sir Robert of Thirlestane, and also held the lands of Howpasley from his cousin Robert Scott. He was placed in charge of bringing Walter, Earl of Buccleuch's body from London to Leith in 1633, a journey that took 15 weeks, and included being shipwrecked on the Norwegian coast. About 1634 he redeemed some of the mortgages of his cousin Sir John of Thirlestane, and had most of the lands transferred into his name. He was Chamberlain to Francis, 2nd Earl of Buccleuch for Ettrick Forest in the 1640s, as well as Eckford, Lemplitaw and Langton into the 1650s. In 1641 William Wallace made the factor's account in his place, since he was ill. In 1641 he signed a document in Hawick with his cousin Sir John, relating to the Thirlestane estates, but with the terms unspecified. He had his cousin imprisoned on 2 occasions. Eventually he would claim permanent ownership of the Thirlestane estates, in precedence to his cousin Sir John. This was at least partly because of different allegiances in the Civil War (Sir John’s descendants would fight the succession in court a century later). In 1642 he had a decree of appraising against Sir John, relating to the lands of Bourhope. In 1643 he had a charter of the lands of Crookston and others in Peeblesshire, which he gained from his cousin John, son of Sir Robert of Thirlestane. He was cautioner for a William Scott in about 1646. He supported the Parliamentary side in the Civil War and was on the Committee of War for Selkirkshire in 1643, 1644, 1646, 1648 and 1649. He also represented Selkirkshire in Parliament in 1648–49. After being fined by both Cromwell and the Royalists for taking sides, he repurchased Thirlestane from Sir William of Harden and others. In 1644 he was witness to a contract for lands at Smallholm. In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, Dumfries and Annandale. He served as one of the ‘tutors testamentars’ for the will of Francis, Earl of Buccleuch. In 1650 he was also named as one of the ‘tutors’ for the children of Francis in his will and served in this capacity for the young Marie, Countess of Buccleuch, being involved in a law suit in 1659 with some of her other tutors over breaking locks to her charter chests. In 1653 he was involved in the construction of the bridge over the Yarrow at Deuchar, acting as Chamberlain to Scott of Buccleuch. In 1653 he had a charter of the lands of Rutherford. He was fined by Cromwell in 1654 and also fined in 1662 for complicity with Cromwell! In 1661 he was listed as still owing about £8000 to the Duchess of Buccleuch for rentals in Ettrick Forest, where he had been Chamberlain. In 1663 he was appointed as a justice of the peace for Selkirkshire. He was also recorded in a deed of 1663. He married Isabel, daughter of Sir John Murray of Blackbarony and was succeeded by his son Sir Francis. Other children were: David, who was buried at Greyfriars in Edinburgh in 1659; Walter, who held Howpalsley briefly; Jean, who married Sir James Hay of Linplume; Margaret, who married Sir Alexander Bannerman of Elsick; and Mary, who married Sir William Primrose of Carrington. He may also be the Patrick whose wife Agnes had a testament in 1637. Patrick of Kirkstyle and Langshaw (17th C.) son of George of Kirkstyle and Catherine Moncrief. He was descended from the Scotts of Balwearie, through a son, Andrew of Glendoeick and Kirkstyle in Perthshire; Col. Walter, last Scott of Balwearie, who died unmarried in Flanders in the reign of Charles II, sent him the seal of the Balwearie family; however, similarity of Christian names, and a statement of close kinship by Scott of Satchells suggests instead, or additionally, a relationship with the Scotts of Thirlestane. He was described as ‘writer of Edinburgh’ from about 1638 and through the 1640s, when he dealt with city business for the Scotts of Buccleuch, and by 1652 he was ‘now of Langshaw’. He sold Kirkstyle in Perthshire and purchased Langshaw (although it is unclear if these were the lands in South Lanarkshire, or the place north of Galashiels). He may also later have acquired the lands and barony of Anerum (although perhaps the first connection may have been through his son Sir John). He was also previously ‘of Eddrington’, and had a crown charter of Langshaw in 1653. In 1650 he was named as one of the ‘tutors’ for the children of Francis Earl of Buccleuch in his will and also served as one of the ‘tutors testamentary’ for the will of Francis, as well as being described as ‘wryter in Edinburgh, our servitor’, when he witnessed the document. He became a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh in 1655, in right of his father-in-law, Andrew Purves. He was recorded in various documents in the Melrose Regality records in the period 1657–61. He served as ‘receiver general’ for the Buccleuch estates in at least the period 1650–72. He was recorded as ‘of Langshaw’ in a deed of 1663. He may be the Patrick, writer in Edinburgh, who had a discharge from the treasurer of Selkirk in 1664/5 for his pension. He may also be the Edinburgh writer recorded in deeds in 1663. He was Chamberlain for the Lordship of Dalkeith in at least the period 1669–74. There were legal proceedings against his son by the Duchess of Buccleuch 1673–1704 over an embezzlement he is alleged to have committed. He may be the same Patrick described as the Earl of Buccleuch’s attendant in 1636–38, and was factor in at least the period 1638–41 and 1650–56. He was recorded in deeds in 1673. In 1629 he married Elspeth (or Elizabeth) Simson, sister of David Simson of ‘Monturpie’ and they had 3 sons and 1 daughter. In 1647 he secondly married ‘Cicilie Drurie’ (or Cicely Drury), daughter of Sir Robert Drury of Rugham, and widow of George Douglas, Doctor of Divinity; with her he had 1 more daughter. He seems to have also married Agnes, daughter to Andrew Purves; she was already deceased in 1655 when he became a Burgess in Edinburgh as a result of marrying her. His children were: Sir John, 1st Baronet of Anerum, who married Elizabeth Scott of Mangerton; James, who became a merchant Burgess in Edinburgh in 1693 and died without issue; Francis of Langshaw; Agnes, who married William Douglas of Ardet (and may be the Agnes who later married John Wilkie, merchant in Edinburgh), and was mother of Sir Robert Douglas of Glenbervie; and Cicely, who married Charles Kerr of Abbotsrule in 1666, and whose daughter married John Scott of Gorrenberry. Patrick, ‘lawful son of the said Patrick Scott of Langshaw’ is recorded as witness to a document for Mary, Countess of Buccleuch in 1658 and in deeds of 1663 and 1682, and so must have been another son; his daughters Agnes and Margaret were served as his heirs in 1696. Francis of Colmslie was caution for a bond for the ‘deceased Patrick Scott, writer in Edinburgh’ according to a case heard in Melrose in 1683; this may well have been him. Sir Patrick of Longnewton and Anerum (d.1734) son of Sir John (he is easy to confuse with his grandfather Patrick of Langshaw). He became an advocate in 1676 and was on the Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1678 and 1685. He became a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh in 1684, and was entered again in 1700 (gratis), in right of his father Sir John. He was ‘feir’ of Ancrum in 1678 when he paid the land tax on the whole value of Longnewton Parish (valued at more than £2000). He served as Chamberlain to Scott of Buccleuch for Eckford in 1689–95. He was one of the 2 Parliamentary Commissioners (i.e. M.Ps.) for Roxburghshire 1685–86 and was appointed again in 1689, but replaced in 1693 for absence; this is surely related to the politics of the day. In 1690 (before he succeeded to Ancrum) and in 1704 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire. In 1692 he held the ‘teinds’ of the Baronie of Eckford and the ‘tacks’ of the lands of Lempitlaw and ‘Langtoun’ (probably Longnewton) owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch. In 1694 he paid tax on 10 hearths at his house in Langnewton. He contributed £1000 to the Darien Scheme in 1695. He was one of the Roxburghshire heritors who petitioned Parliament in 1700. He could be the Patrick who in 1700, along with his servant was made a Burgess of Glasgow (gratis). In 1704 he witnessed a baptism for George Douglas of Friarshaw and his daughter Elizabeth. There are some existing letters between him and his brother William and son John from 1709. He married Anne, daughter of William Wallace of Helington. His wife was wealthy, but they had no issue. In 1680 he secondly married Margaret, daughter of William Scott of Harden. They had 2 sons and 4 daughters: Sir John, who succeeded; William, who became an advocate, marrying Anne, daughter of Capt. Benjamin Barton and secondly Elizabeth, daughter of William Ainslie of Blackhill; Christian, who married John Pringle of Whytbank; Elizabeth, who married George Douglas of Friarshaw; Anna; Jean, married David Muirhead of Linhouse and secondly James Gartshore; and Margaret, who died unmarried. Some correspondence exists in the National Archives between him and family members. Patrick, W.S. (d.1711) nephew of Hercules Scott, who was a merchant in Edinburgh. He is easy to confuse with Patrick of Langshaw and Patrick of Langnewton. He trained a lawyer, being apprenticed to Robert Innes and becoming Writer to the Signet in 1699. He could be the ‘Mr. Patrick, W.S.’ who in 1707 was made a Burgess of Glasgow (gratis). He married Elizabeth Carnichael. Patrick (17th C.) recorded in Ashkirk Parish in 1691 when his daughter Margaret was baptised. Although hard to read, his wife’s name is Janet … [possibly Paterson]. Patrick (18th C.) son of Walter, minister at Westruther. His brother Francis also served as minister at Westruther. He was mentioned in 1735 in the deposition where the widow of Robert Scott of Falnash sold her property on the Howegate to Patrick Hardie. It is unclear what his connection to the family was. Patrick (18th C.) eldest lawful son of Francis of Alton. He was ‘younger of Altoun’ in 1738 when he witnessed a baptism (along with Walter of Newton, who may well have been related), for Joseph Lothian and Janet Scott (who may also have been closely related). He was recorded in 1742 agreeing to his father’s sale of the lands of Alton to John Horsburgh of that Ilk. It is possible he was the Patrick who witnessed a baptism for William Lorraine in Wilton in 1733 and the Patrick who (along with Francis) witnessed a baptism in 1735 for James Beattie, resident of Borthaugh. He may be the Patrick who married Janet Gledstains in Wilton Parish in 1751. Patrick (d.bef. 1762) miller in Bedrule parish, recorded in 1762 when his daughter Janet married John Turnbull, wright, in Edinburgh. Patrick (18th/19th C.) recorded at Whitlaw on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. His name is sometimes recorded as ‘Peter’. He is listed on the 1785–94 Horse Tax Rolls at Whitlaw. He was probably the ‘Patrick Scot in Borthaugh’ described as tenant farmer in Whitlaw in the 1750s when Robert Hobkirk was Town Herd; this suggests he was directly related to other Scotts associated with Borthaugh. He may have been the Patrick, son of Robert and Agnes Elliot, born in Hawick in 1728. He seems likely to have been the Patrick who married Janet Gledstains (perhaps from the Gledstains of Whitlaw family) in Wilton Parish in 1751. Paul (16th C.) made a Burgess of Glasgow in 1582. His eldest lawful son John was a skinner in Glasgow and became a Burgess in 1617. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts. Peter of Monzie (16th C.) recorded being ‘of Monze’ when he was Chamberlain for Strathearn, according to the Exchequer Rolls for 1536–42. He is probably the ‘Patrik of Monze’ whose will was recorded in the Commissariat of Edinburgh in 1584. His lands were in Perthshire, with his heiress, Margaret Scott, granting them to her son James Graeme in 1613. Peter (16th/17th C.) ‘son natural’ of Sir Robert of Thirlestane. In 1608 his father was caution for him, his half-brother Robert and Walter of Whitslade that they not harm Archibald of ‘Deiphop’ and his sons. In 1609 he was among the men (under Walter of Headshaw) whom his father and brother Robert and their tenants were bound not to reset. Sir Robert and the others were then fined for resetting him and the other men. This was part of the feud between the Scotts of Thirlestane and Tushielaw. Peter (d.bef. 1654) referred to as being ‘of Cowdhome’ in an act of caution of 1654, preserved in the records of Jedburgh Sheriff Court. Capt. Walter Scott (the later poet) complained against his son Robert. It seems likely that this is ‘Coldhouse’ in Wilton Parish. Peter (17th/18th C.) probably a Hawick Councillor. In 1701 he was one of those appointed to collect the ‘stent’ in the area ‘west the water’, suggesting he lived in the West-end. Peter in Whitlaw (see Patrick). Peter (18th/19th C.) recorded at Ancrum Mill in 1797, when he paid tax for having 2 non-working dogs. Peter (18th/19th C.) recorded at Clarilaw in 1835, among heads of households in Wilton Parish. Peter (b.1826/7) born in Hawick Parish. In 1861 he was a ‘Game Watcher’, living at ‘Hill House (Wood)’ in Castleton Parish. His wife was Helen and their children included Helen. Peter (19th C.) coachman to Robert F. Watson in Hawick in the 1860s to 80s. Peter (1852–1925) hosiery manufacturer, born in Hawick, with residence at Norwood. He was son of George, grocer at 19 Howegate, and his brother Tom was Cornet in 1887. He started work at age 13 for Peter Laidlaw at Wilton Grove, eventually taking over the small frame shop. He founded Peter Scott & Co. in 1878, with Mr. Adamson as his partner, although it was not until 1899 that he established the ‘Pesco’ brand of underwear. The expansion of the company after that was explosive. He was Chairman of the Scottish Hosiery Association, and served on several committees during WWI. He was also President of the Hawick Hosiery Manufacturers’ Association, and a Director of the South of Scotland Manufacturers’ Mutual Insurance Co. Ltd. He bought about 6 hectares of land on Sunnyhill, at the top of Roadhead and there had the villa Norwood built for him in 1904, designed by J.P. Alison; Norwood would be owned by the family until 1964. The gatehouse Norwood Lodge was built about the same time, with the adjacent Woodgate and Langlee built in about 1907. He was also a keen bowler, acting as President of the Buccleuch Bowling Club and took part in a bowling tour of Canada in 1910. He and his brother George were also noted draughts players. He gifted the ‘Beechwood’ and ‘Norwood’ trophies, which were competed for among the local clubs. He also gifted an organ to St. George’s Kirk in 1919 in memory of his daughter Bessie. In 1876 at Wilton Dean, he married Mary, daughter of James Brydon from Castleton. Their children were: George (1879–1940), who was a director in the family firm; Esther Laidlaw (b.1880), who died young; Marion Adamson (1886–1963), who never married; Jeanie (b.1887); Bessie (1890–1917); and James Brydon (1894–1958), also a company director at Pesco’s. It is said that he was well liked in the town and proud of his ‘guitterbluid’ heritage. He died suddenly while on holiday in the south of France, and his funeral procession was one of the biggest ever to be seen in Hawick. Peter Brydon (1920–43) son of James Brydon and grandson of Peter, founder of Pesco’s. He served with the Royal Scots Fusiliers, having the rank of Lieutenant. He died while in Burma and there is a baptismal font in his memory in Denholm Kirk. Philip (15th/16th C.) recorded along with Robert and Andrew in 1494/5. The three were among men who were already fugitives when John of Deloraine was accused of ‘resetting, supplying and intercommuning’ with them. It seems reasonable to assume that they were closely related, perhaps brothers, but from which branch of the Scotts is unknown. Philip of Heap (15th/16th C.) described as ‘Philip Scot of Hoip’ in 1508 when he witnessed a sasine of lands at Synton. He must have been closely related to David of Whitehaugh, recorded in 1479, and Walter of Whitehaugh, recorded in 1488. He was in turn succeeded by Walter, who gained the lands of Wester Heap in 1532. Philip (15th/16th C.) recorded as a sergeant at the Court in Jedburgh in 1502. Perhaps the same Philip was recorded in 1530 acting for Thomas Forest when he rented part of the lands of Philiphaugh from Robert Turnbull. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts. Philip of Headshaw (d.c.1531) son of Walter of Headshaw, who he succeeded. He is recorded as ‘of Aidschaw’ in 1510 when his brother Thomas was convicted of being part of the murder of John Murray of Falahill. Sureties were William in Hawick, George in Goldielands, David in Whitehaugh, William in Fenwick and John of Haining, suggesting that some of them were closely related. He was on the 1517 ‘re-tour’ for Sir Walter of Branxholme. In 1519/20 he was listed as someone who could give permission to change the details of a marriage contract between the Scotts of Buccleuch and a son of the Gledstains family; he is there ‘Philip Scot of Eadschaw’. He was listed on the 1526 remiss for Borders men for supporting the Homes in an attack on the Earl of Arran (with his son Walter also listed). And in 1527 he was among the Lairds, led by Walter of Branxholme, who had remission for their part in the Battle of Skirmish Field. In 1529/30 he witnessed a pledge relating to crimes done against George of Linton by Robert Elliot ‘alias Flasikovd’. In 1530 he was one of the Border Lairds who submitted themselves to James V to keep better order. In a document of 1531 he assigned to his 2nd son Robert the lands of Hartwoodburn after his death, which he held in tack from Queen Margaret; his brother William of Ormiston ‘sought instruments’. Also in 1531 he witnessed an agreement between Scotts and Veitches regarding Synton. In 1532 his widow, Isabel Murray was involved in a dispute with his son and heir, Walter; James Pringle and Walter in Synton represented his wife, while Philip Riddell and William in Harden represented his son. In a further dispute in 1535, Isabel mother is described as the stepmother of Walter, and hence she must have been his second wife. He was succeeded by his son Walter of Headshaw and also had another son, Robert (who is recorded as brother of Walter in 1541/2). Philip (16th C.) tenant in Dryhope and ‘Farmynhop’ in 1541. Probably the same Philip in ‘Dryhoup’ was accused (along with Robert of Howpasley) by William in Kershope (in Ettrick) of stealing goods from there, and William sought restitution through the efforts of John Murray of Kershope. Perhaps the same Philip witnessed a transaction for John Scott of Thirlestane in 1539. He was ‘of Drihoup’ in 1562 when he witnessed a transaction where Robert of Howpasley leased his farm of Whitehope (in Yarrow) to John Dalgelish in Deuchar. Immediately afterwards Dalgelish leased half of Whithope to John, who appears to have been his son. In the In 1564 he was listed as ‘Philip Scot of Dryhope’ among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. He may be related to the later Philip of Dryhope. Philip (16th C.) tenant of Todshawhill recorded in 1549 as the first of the tenants and servants of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme when they complained about their farms being raided and burned by the Kers. Either he or Philip in Wiltonburn could have been father of ‘Philip’s Jock’. Philip (16th C.) tenant in Wiltonburn in 1549 when he was among the tenants of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, who complained about the actions of Walter Ker of Cessford and others. It is possible that he was father of ‘Philip’s Jock’ recorded in the 1570s. Philip (16th C.) recorded in 1579/80 as son of the deceased Hector in Selkirk when he witnessed a promise by ‘Mathew of the bent in Tuchellaw’. Philip (16th C.) brother of Scott of Hassendean, as well as brother of William. In 1580 he was ‘brother german to Scot of Hassindane’ when he witnessed a declaration in Selkirk involving Walter of Stirches. In 1583/4 he was brother to ‘Scot of Hassindan among a number of men from the area who were denounced for failing to appear to give evidence in a case against the Turnbulls of Bedrule. It is unclear who was Laird of Hassendean at that time, since David was murdered in 1564 and is usually said to have been succeeded by his grandson Robert. Philip of Kirkhope (16th C.) son of John of Thirlstane, and younger brother of Robert, who succeeded. He was said by Scott of Satchells to have been the 1st husband of the youngest daughter of Walter Scott of Synton and Whitslade. Since she had 2 other husbands, this presumably means that he died relatively young, and is said to have had no children. Philip of Dryhope (d.bef. 1632) probably son or brother of John. He is sometimes stated as the father of Mary, ‘Flower of Yarrow’, but she was probably his sister. He is listed on the ‘Roll of the Clans’ in 1590. In 1591 he purchased half of Stanhope in Peeblesshire and sold it again in 1600. In 1591 Walter of Tushielaw served as surety for him. He purchased the lands of Glensax from Alexander Horsburgh in 1600. He was ‘of Dryhoip’ when denounced as a rebel in 1592 for his part in the Falkland Raid (and Dryhoip was ordered to be demolished at about the same time); his brother Andrew was a signatory to the bond of caution for him by John Hay of Smithfield. In 1599 he witnessed the bonds (signed at Branxholme) between Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch and the Armstrongs and Elliots of Liddesdale. In 1602 he signed a bond among Border Lairds for keeping the peace. Also in 1603 he was among Scots and others, subordinates of Scott of Buccleuch, who ‘had been put to the horn’ for not paying feu mails for their lands to the Queen’s Chamberlain, with Robert of Haining not entering them in court. In 1610 there is a bond of caution for him and his sons Philip and William. In 1611 he gave back (presumably following repayment of a debt) the lands of Midshiels, Appletreehall, Coitlaw and Crawhill to Alexander Cranston of Mordiston. He was witness to the bond of 1612 for keeping peace on the Border and was also on the panel of ‘retour’ for Tweedie of Drumelzier. Additionally in 1612 he was listed among Scots and others accused of overcharging interest on loans. His brother James (and son William) are recorded in 1617. In 1618 he was listed as one of the curators of the young Andrew Scott of Aikwood. He is ‘recorded as ‘elder of Dryhoip’ in charters of 1618 and 1621 and in 1621 when the Hays of Smithfield complained he had not settled a debt. He married Margaret, and his eldest son was Robert, although he was succeeded in the Lairdship of Dryhope by his son Philip. Another son William was complained about in 1612 and 1617 and witnessed a charter in 1618. In 1620 both Philip elder and Philip younger were vited by the tailors of Edinburgh for not paying them. In 1628 he resigned his half of the lands of Glensax. Note that these generations are quite confused (Keith Scott suggests there were 2 generations of Philips of Dryhope, father and son, but it is unclear when the son succeeded). Philip of Aikwood (16th/17th C.) possibly the same man as Philip of Dryhope. He is recorded in 1627, but by 1630 the lands of Oakwood had passed to a Murray, possibly of the Elibank family. The lands of Oakwood later became part of the estates of the Scotts of Harden.

Philip of Dryhope (17th C.) younger brother of Walter, the previous Laird (recorded in 1669). He may also have been brother of the Laird before, Robert, and hence a younger son of William. He was the last Scott Laird of Dryhope. It is possible he is the Burgess of that name recorded in Selkirk in 1665 and the witness recorded there in 1683. Philip (17th/18th C.) Chamberlain to Sir William of Harden. He is recorded in 1692-1716 as factor for the lands in Selkirkshire and in 1704 when his son Walter became an apothecary’s apprentice in Edinburgh. In the 1720 Hawick Parish records he is stated to have been lately Chamberlain to Scott of Harden. In 1720 his eldest son Walter married Sara, daughter of Walter Scott, also an apothecary in Hawick. He may be the Philip ’in Whitmurehall’ recorded in a bond with the Scotts of Harden in 1687 and a discharge with the Burgh of Selkirk in 1700. Perhaps he was the same man as Philip in Oakwood. He could be the Philip, married to Grissell Bruce, whose son Walter was baptised in Ashkirk Parish in 1688. Philip (17th/18th C.) recorded being in Cogsmill in 1709 when he married Margaret Riddell in Kirktoun Parish. His son John was baptised in 1710. Philip (17th/18th C.) recorded in Aikwood in 1709, in a discharge with the Burgh of Selkirk. He was still tenant there according to other discharges of 1719 and 1729, as well as a bond in 1725. He was one of the founding members of the ‘Honest Country Club’ in 1711. Probably the same Philip was in Oakwood in 1732 when he borrowed money from the Selkirk Merchant Company; it was due for repayment in 1736, but he had still nor paid it back by 1738. He was surely related to James, who was recorded in Aikwood at the end of the 17th century. In 1723 his daughter Jane (1701/2–76) married Walter, 2nd son of William in Milsington. Philip (18th C.) recorded as ‘in Todrigg’ in 1753 when he was paid by Scott of Buccleuch for acting as gamekeeper. It is unclear if he was related to the earlier Scotts of Todrig. Rachel nee Langlands (17th/18th C.) described as ‘of Wilton’, so she was probably daughter of one of the last Langlands Lairds. She married Charles Scott of Crumhaugh, probably in the mid-1680s. She had a ‘bond of provision’ from her husband in 1696. However, Charles died about a couple of years later. She is probably the same Rachel who secondly married Francis Elliot of Fenwick. Her children included Walter (who succeeded to Crumhaugh) and probably James, who was a surgeon in Hawick. Rankin (14th C.) recorded in 1388 as ‘Rankyn Scote’. This was in a warrant to the Archbishop of York, stating that Richard II had appointed him keeper of his ‘carues’ (i.e. ploughs). Rebecca (18th C.) paid the window tax for Midshiels in 1748. She is ‘Rebecca Scott Medsheils’. It is unclear how she was related to other Scotts, but perhaps was connected to the Scotts of Crumhaugh, who sold Midshiels in about the mid-18th century. Reginald (13th C.) recorded as ‘Reginaldus le Scot’ in the 1279 assize roll of Northumberland. He was involved in a case in the town of ‘Lowick’. Richard (12th C.) probably the son of Uchtred Fitz-Scott. He witnessed a charter by the Bishop of St. Andrews to Holyrood Abbey in 1158 (although the charter is now lost, and so there is no proof that he was son of Uchtred). He was succeeded by his son Richard. Another son was probably Sir Michael, ancestor of the Scotts of Balwearie. Richard (12th/13th C.) son of Richard and probably grandson of Uchtred Fitz-Scott. He married Alicia, daughter of Henry and Eschina de Molla (or Molle). He and his wife received lands in Roxburgh in the reign of Alexander II. He may thus have been the first Scott to be associated with Roxbroughshire, and was referred to as Richard ‘of Molle’. Sometime between 1185 and 1215 he granted lands in Mow to Kelso Abbey; he is referred to there as ‘son of Anselm of Mow’ (so perhaps there are 2 Richard Scotts confounded here, or ‘son’ meant ‘son-in-law’). He was also referred to in charters of c.1190 for lands adjacent

Richard (12th/13th C.) recorded in a court case in London in 1220. He was caught with the stolen seal of Walter de Morton, and was ordered to be hanged for the crime. Richard (13th C.) listed in 1236 along with Walter and Robert, his brother. They were accused of attacking Eustace (Bailiff of the Abbot of ‘Burgo’), beating him, killing his horse, and imprisoning his servant. The Sheriff of Northampton was commanded to make them appear at Westminster. It is unclear how they were related to other Scotts. Richard (13th C.) listed in 1244 when the Sheriff of Huntingdon commanded him to give a knight’s fee to John Baliol. He may be ancestor of later Scotts of Huntingdon. Richard (13th C.) recorded in Leicester in 1262 as ‘son of Robert Scot junior’ when he gave a mark for an assize. Richard (13th C.) recorded as ‘le Escot’ in a document relating to Northumberland in 1265. He could be the same as Richard ‘le Scot’ who was listed in 1255/6, along with his wife Margery, in a court case in Northumberland. He may also be the ‘Richard Scot, essoin’ of Roger Bertram listed in a plea in Northumberland in 1258/9. Richard (13th C.) son and heir of Lucas ‘le Escot’ of Dunwich, recorded in a document relating to Norfolk in 1267/8. In 1268/9 he was Richard ‘le Scot of Dunwich’ when he was recorded in relation to money due to the English King’s Exchequer from Dunwich in Suffolk. He was also recorded in 1271 in relation to a ship that he claimed had been owned by his father Lucas. In 1272 he accused someone at Stratford of the murder of his cousin Robert ‘le Escot’ (son of Gerald). Also in 1272 he was accused of stealing a cask of wine from someone in Dunwich and paid 20 shillings for a writ. Sir Richard (c.1265–1320) Laird of Rankilburn (synonymous with Buccleuch) and Murthockstone (or Murdostoun) in Lanarkshire. He was probably son of William, but these early generations are quite uncertain; however, from him onwards, the genealogy of the Scotts of Buccleuch is generally considered to be secure. Capt. Walter says that he originally resided at Scotstoun in Peeblesshire. He swore fealty to Edward I of England in 1296 (in the Ragman Rolls) under the name ‘Richard Le Scot de Murthoxtoun’, in the County of Lanark; 9 other people of the same surname are also recorded, with Alexander ‘de Pertheyk’ also being from Lanarkshire, and William (no designation given) being the only one from Roxburghshire. His seal bore a lion rampant ‘regardant’ and the name ‘S’RICARDI SCOTTI’. He may have been the first Scott to have local lands, at Rankilburn, sometime before 1296. These may be the lands in Selkirkshire that were restored to him (assuming it is the same Richard) in 1296. He may have held these lands as Ranger of the King’s Forest. He may be the Richard who also swore fealty to King Edward in 1304. He acquired the Barony of Murdostoun (in Lanark) by marriage with the English heiress. As a result the crescent and stars of the Scott arms were placed on the bend of Murdostoun thereafter. He was probably father of Sir Michael of Rankilburn and Murthockstone and possibly also of John (ancestor of the first Scotts of Synton, although this may have been his grandson). The Walter ‘le Scot’ who also swore fealty to Edward in 1296 may have been his brother (perhaps older brother), and held lands in Peebles. An English record of 1302 pardons Eustace de Fenham for the death of William, son of Richard Scott, on account of his service on the coast of Scotland; this may have been his son. For some reason his Christian name was not used afterwards by the Scotts of Buccleuch. Richard (13th/14th C.) Templar whose name is recorded as ‘Richard Scott’. He joined the order in Paris in about 1302. Richard (13th/14th C.) listed in 1317 among Scotsmen who were captured at ‘le Redepethe’ when ‘plundering and burning in Tynedale’. Some Englishmen rescued most of them, but it is not recorded whether this included him. Richard (13th/14th C.) recorded in 1319 when his son John was pardoned by Edward II for joining the Scots. Richard (14th C.) son of John of Newcastle. In 1367/8 there was an inquisition held at Newcastle Castle, with the panel deciding that it would not damage the King’s interests if he was permitted to make a deer park of his woods of ‘Benewelle called le Westwode’. This later became Scottswood, one of the most troubled areas of West Newcastle. Richard (d.bef. 1420) Bailie of Dundee recorded in the period 1386–1405 according to the Exchequer Rolls. He was ‘Clerk of Cocket of Dundee’ in the Exchequer Rolls in the period 1397–20. He thus held the seal for issuing customs documents. He was responsible for rendering the accounts of the Bailies of Dundee, and was also paid for numbering animal skins there. He may have been related to the Scotts of Balwearie. Richard (15th/16th C.) recorded as witness to 2 land transactions in Edinburgh in 1502/3. He was deceased in 1502 when his lands on the south side of the ‘King’s street’ in Edinburgh are mentioned in 2 other documents. Richard (d.c.1577) flesher and Burgess of Perth. His will was registered in Edinburgh in 1577/8. Richard (16th C.) son of John. His father was already deceased in 1559/60 when he became a saddler Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh. Richard of Burnbroom (d.c.1596) described as ‘of Burnebrume, par. of Monkland’ in Lanarkshire when his will was registered in Edinburgh in 1596/7. Rev. Richard (1641–1722) 3rd son of George, the last of the old Scotts of Synton, with his mother being Mary Gladstains of Dod and Whitlaw. His brother was George of Boonraw. He was educated in Edinburgh, receiving his M.A. in 1658 and becoming minister at Kirkbean in Kirkcudbrightshire in 1675. He became minister in his home Parish of Ashkirk in 1685. However, he was deprived of his living in 1689 for refusing to read the Proclamation of the Estates and to pray for William and Mary, i.e. being an Episcopalian (or a Jacobite). He married Katherine Crichton and their children included Jean, who married Alexander Leslie, an Aberdeen advocate and secondly married Alexander Abercrombie of Fetterneir; she is mentioned in a disposition of 1724 as a widow of Abercrombie. He is recorded being resident in Lady Yester’s parish in Edinburgh along with his wife and daughter in 1694. He died in Edinburgh without male issue. It has been suggested that he may have helped Scott of Satchells with his ‘True History’. His year of death is sometimes incorrectly given as 1702. Richard (17th/18th C.) said to be a younger son of George of Boonraw, and brother of Archibald, the last Laird of Boonraw. If he existed it would prove the claim that Charlie of the Crescent was descended from the Scotts of Boonraw. He was said (by James Haining) to have married a daughter of Charles ‘Ogilvy’ (although it is unclear who this might have been, perhaps a different Ogilvie). It is possible he was the Richard who (along with George) witnessed a baptism in 1721 for John Turnbull in Wester Groundistone and who (also with George) in 1724 witnessed a baptism for George in Groundistone and in 1729 (also along with George) witnessed another baptism for a different George in Groundistone. It is possible he was the Richard whose children (baptised in Wilton) included: Marion (b.1703), who may have married Alexander Purdon in Hawick in 1725; Bessy (b.1705); Janet (b.1707); and Agnes (b.1710). He may also be the Richard, married to Margaret Scott, whose children (baptised in Hawick) included: Richard (b.1717); and William (b.1720). Richard of Boghall (17th/18th C.) recorded in 1722 as witness to 2 baptisms in Hawick. One was for Robert Nichol, workman in Weensland (with the other witness being Robert, tenant in Newton), while the other was for William Stoddart, workman in Hawick. It is possible he is the same man as the son of George of Boonraw. Rev. Richard (1729–90) son of John, minister of Stenhouse. He was educated at the University of Glasgow, licensed by the Presbytery of Peebles in 1752 and ordained at Cranshaws in 1759. He was presented to Ewes Kirk by the Duke of Buccleuch in 1761 and remained there until he died. He was said to have been ‘mild and gentle in manner’, but ‘fervent in the divine service’. He was recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1785 and 1787. In 1761 he married Mary Turnbull, and she died in 1796. They had 5 sons and 3 daughters, including: Janet (b.1762), who married William Irvine; James (b.1764), a merchant in New York; Hector (b.1766); John (b.1768), who died young; Anne (b.1768), a twin to John; John (again, b.1771), merchant in London; Martha (b.1774); and George (b.1778), also merchant in London. He wrote ‘Letters on the Culture of Potatoes’. Richard (18th C.) married Helen Rae in Wilton in 1859. Richard (18th C.) recorded in 1757 when his daughter Agnes was baptised in Hawick Parish. The mother was Mary Rutherford and ‘Forni-’ was indicated beside the entry. The witnesses were Walter of Boghall (perhaps his father) and carrier Walter Purdom. Richard (b.1889) born in Kirkton Parish, he was a warehouse foreman in Hawick and later became a publican. In 1916 he married Elizabeth Anderson Ballantyne (1892–1977), whose father was a mill foreman, brother was killed at the Somme and paternal grandfather was Burgh Chamberlain in Galashiels (all called Andrew). His daughter Margaret Dobson (1920–2018) married Richard Street and was known for her efforts to protect Scottish heritage. Richard Edmondson ‘Dick’ (1910–1991) local artist, writer and historian. He was son of Bailie Francis, married Agnes Townsend and was father of Francis Townsend (Frank) and Elizabeth Anne (Anne). Born at 26 High Street, he left school at 14 to work for Watsons, then worked in the family painters and decorators from about 1935. During WWII he served in the Physical Training Corps, but did not enjoy his forced exile from Hawick. In the mid-1950s he became a reporter with the Hawick Express, eventually taking over as editor from John Hood. He was the anonymous writer of the ‘Betty Whutson’ column for... the years 1961–83. As an artist he was responsible for hundreds of Hawick scenes, usually in watercolour, signing as ‘R.E. Scott’. He exhibited at Art Club shows regularly for decades, as well as having paintings exhibited at the Royal Scottish Academy in 1943 and 1944. And as a sign-writer his work was a familiar sight around Hawick for several decades. He was a successful sprinter with the Teviotdale Harriers in the 1930s, being club 100 yards champion in 1930, 1935, 1936 and 1937. He won the Common Riding sprint in 1930, the 120 yards handicap and 100 yard scratch race at the 1937 Lauder Common Riding on the same day, was Border 120 yards champion in 1936 and 1937 and 100 yards champion in 1937 and won a 100 yards handicap event at Clyde F.C. Sports in 1938. He was also a member of the Hawick Swimming Club, becoming Club President, Secretary and Captain. He had a 28 year connection with the Scouting movement, helping set up the first Cub troop in the late 1920s and becoming a local Cub Scout Commissioner. He was a member of the Vertish Hill Sports Committee for many years, and was also a member of the P.S.A. Choir and the Masons. He spent much of his ‘spare’ time trekking the local hills with his wife Agnes. He wrote ‘The Companion to Hawick’ (1970, revised 1981), ‘Hawick’s Honorary Burgesses Since 1734’ (1974), ‘I Saved the King: the Story of the Turnbulls’ (1977) and ‘A Hundred Years are Gane and Mair, A History of Hawick Burns Club 1878–1978’ (1978), as well as many articles for the Archaeological Society Transactions. He was Secretary, Syllabus Secretary, Transactions Editor and President of the Archaeological Society, giving 50 years of service. In 1967 he became Curator of the Museum, revelling in this job, and living in the flat on the top floor of Wilton Lodge until his retirement in 1975. He was known for his modest nature and for being an enthusiastic and meticulous local historian of his day, questions being referred to him long after his retirement – ‘...So Hawick folk both young and old, never forget Dick Scott: In praises, he deserved far more than those he ever got’ [IWL]. Robert (12th C.) witness to a grant of lands in Kinross-shire to St. Andrews Priory in the 1170s. Robert (12th C.) recorded in a record of Buckinghamshire and Bedfordshire in 1189/90 as ‘Robert le Scot in Ailiesbiriæ’. The Sheriff of those counties gave account for his lands there. Robert (13th C.) listed in a court case in 1236, along with his brother Walter, as well as Richard. They were accused of attacking a man called Eustace, killing his horse and imprisoning his servant, and the Sheriff of Northampton was directed to make sure they appeared at Westminster. Robert (13th C.) recorded as ‘le Scot’, messenger, when there was a writ in 1242 for his payment of 1 mark for his expenses by King Henry’s gift. Robert (13th/14th C.) Templar, who was recorded as Robert ‘le Scot’. He joined the order in about 1283 at Château Pélérin in modern Israel. He left the order, but 2 years later went to Rome to confess, paid a penance and was readmitted at Nicosia. He was later in England, at Daney in Kent, and may have been among the Templars arrested in 1309. Robert of Esperston (13th/14th C.) holder of lands in Midlothian. As told in a 14th century document, his daughter Christina married William, daughter of Geoffrey of Halkerston, who gave his wife’s lands to the Knights Templar; after William’s death, she was forcibly removed from her lands, losing a finger in the process, appealed to the King, was re-instated in her lands, but was expelled by the Templars once more in 1296. Robert (13th C.) recorded as Robert ‘le Scot’ ‘of Hecham’ in a document of 1290 relating to the Priory of Lewes (presumably the one in Sussex). His lands may have been at Hexham. He was married to ‘Cristiana Ate-hallegate’. Their son John acknowledged in the document that he was ‘servus’ and ‘rusticus’ of the Prior. He could be the same as ‘Robertum Scot’ and ‘Robertus le Scot’ recorded in the 1279 assize roll of Northumberland. It is unknown if he was related to other Scotts. Robert (13th/14th C.) recorded in 1296 in a case relating to Richard of Whiteacre. This was among cases at a court of the English army held at Roxburgh. Probably the same Robert (along with William) was paid in 1307/8 for acting as messenger from Cumnock, to Ayr and then to Lanark. Robert (c.13th C.) landholder in Dumfries mentioned in an undated document of Kelso Abbey. Robert (13th/14th C.) from Glasgow, he was recorded in 1301 when he delivered letters to the Queen from the (English) Sheriff of Roxburgh regarding expenses. He may have been related to William, who was recorded at the same time. Robert (13th/14th C.) archer at Edinburgh Castle according to an English document of 1311/2. Robert (bef. 1346–c.89) 3rd Laird of Rankilburn (Buccleuch) and also of Kirkurd and Mudieston. He was probably son of Sir Michael (although these early generations are still murky). His brother John was probably the ancestor of the Scotts of Syston, Harden and Raeburn. Little is known about him, probably because this was a relatively peaceful period in Scottish history! He lived for more than 40 years after succeeding his father. He held the lands in Selkirkshire, as well as those older lands in Peeblesshire and the lands in Lanarkshire that had been acquired through marriage. It is possible that he died at the Battle of Otterburn in 1388, although there are no records to support this. He was succeeded by his son Sir Walter, who had a charter for the superiority of Kirkurd in 1389. It is possible he is the Sir Robert, from Glasgow Diocese, whose widow Alice had permission in 1408 to marry Richard Turnbull. Robert (14th C.) mentioned in an English documents when he was pardoned by Edward II in 1335. Perhaps the same Robert was in the garrison at Roxburgh in 1342, when his son Robert was also mentioned. Robert (14th C.) mentioned in 1410 as a former owner of the lands of ‘Borthwic’ and ‘Thoftcotys’ in the Borthwick valley. Since the first record of the name ‘Roberton’ was only a few years earlier, it is possible that the area was named after his house there. It is stated that the lands were conferred on Sir William ‘of Borthwic’ on resignation by him. Hence it is possible there was a connection between the first of the Borthwick family and the Scotts. He was surely related to the Scotts of Buccleuch and possibly related to the later Scotts of Robertson and Borthwick. Robert (14th/15th C.) esquire in the county of Huntingdon recorded in 1426/7. He was one of 3 men who bound themselves to produce at court in London a merchant from ‘Conyngham’ in Scotland who had a debt to Englishmen. Robert (d.1426) 5th Laird of Rankilburn (Buccleuch), he succeeded his father, the first Sir Walter Scott, who died at Homildon Hill. He is named as the superior of the lands of Kirkurd in a charter for Ladyurd in 1406. In 1406/7 he confirmed a charter, as Lord of ‘Muthokston’ for lands in the Barony of Kirkurd. Robert, from John Inglis in 1420, thereby becoming the first Scott of Branxholme. In 1426 he granted Lemplitlaw to his son Walter, shortly before he died. He is also probably the Robert ‘of Murthar and Liston’ (probably a transcription error for ‘Muthokston’) who witnessed an undated charter whereby John Inglis of Manor and Branxholme granted ‘Kyrktoine and Toftis’ in the Barony of Hawick to his uncle Sir Simon Inglis. He was succeeded by his son Sir Walter. Other sons were probably Stephen of Castlelaw and Burrellands and Robert of Haining. His 1415 seal bore a diagonal band with 2 crescents and a star and the words ‘SIGILLUM ROBERTI SCOTT’; this is the earliest known seal for the main branch of the family. Robert (14th/15th C.) Rector of Tinwald in Dumfriesshire. In 1427 he made a request to the Pope to confirm him in Tinwald because of some dispute. In 1429 he requested to be given the Church of Lincluden. He was also said to be Chaplain to Archibald, 4th Earl of Douglas. Robert (15th C.) English Lieutenant to the Constable of the Tower of London. He received Scottish prisoners from Pontefract Castle in 1424 and from Knaresborough in 1424. He was also recorded in 1434, 1437/8 and 1438 regarding expenses for Scottish hostages, through accounts of the Warden of Roxburgh Castle; he is described as ‘late lieutenant of the constable of the Tower’. Robert (15th C.) listed as a Bailie of Hawick (along with Thomas Blair) among the witnesses to the saisine of 1452 regranting the Barony of Hawick to William Douglas of Drumlanrig. Presumably the same man is described as a Burgess (probably of Hawick) in 1454 when he was witness to a legal instrument relating to lands in Eckford, which was witnessed in a tenement of ‘John Walche, elder, in town of Hawic’. It is unclear how exactly he was related to the Scotts of Branxholme and Buccleuch, but this establishes that there were Scotts within the Burgh from its very earliest days. Robert of Todshaw (15th C.) name in an ‘instrument of obligation’ from King James III in 1463/4 for the sum of 1200 merks Scots. This was in payment equivalent to the 50 merks of money and 50 merks of land promised for the capture of John Douglas of Balveny, brother of the Earl of Douglas. He may be the Robert who in 1463 was on the panel of retour for Archibald Douglas, 5th Earl of Angus, as heir to his father. He is probably the same as Robert of ‘Togehaugh’ (i.e. Todshawhaugh) who witnessed a charter for the lands of Whitchester in 1484. It seems likely that his lands were at Todshawhaugh (rather than what was later called Todshaw). Perhaps the same ‘Robertus scot in todshawhalch’ was able to ‘compone’ in 1493, along with John Turnbull in Hawick for the crime of bringing in Englishmen; his surety was the Laird of Howpasley. Robert of Eilrig (15th C.) leased the lands of Craik from Alexander Cockler of Ormiston in 1477 for 6 years. Cockburn also appointed him as ‘Bailie’ of those lands, with the power to hold courts etc. Robert (15th C.) recorded as customs officer in Arbroath in the period 1481–96. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. Robert of Muirhouse and Whames (d.c.1505) son of Stephen. He had a sasine for the lands of ‘Murhaus’ (i.e. Muirhouse near Edinburgh) in 1464. He is recorded in 1482 being sold the land of ‘Underchesters’ (probably adjacent to Highchesters) by Henry Wardlaw, at that time still Baron of Wilton. The ‘Murehouse’ was in the Barony of Crichton (now in Midlothian) and not the place near Dryfesdale in Dunfrriesshire (where there was a connection in the next couple of generations), or the area near Lilliard’s Edge. He is probably the same Robert, son and heir of Stephen of Muirhouse, who witnessed a 1453 sasine at Milnston. This Stephen seems was also referred to as being of Castelaw, who was a brother of Sir Walter of Buccleuch. He is probably the Robert ‘of Gehauch’ who repaid the loan on the lands of Dryden, Commonside and Over Harwood in 1477 (which had involved Stephen of Muirhouse 15 years earlier). It also seems likely he was related to the Howpasley and Thirlestane branches; John of Thirlestane received the half Barony of Wilton from Henry Wardlaw in 1483. He is ‘roberti de quhamys’ in 1493 when his brother Alexander was allowed to ‘compone’ for stealing livestock. He is probably the Robert ‘in Quhominis’ recorded in the Exchequer Rolls of 1501, along with ‘Thome Howate’ had their fines remitted. His son and heir George had an instrument in 1505/6 where he claimed his father’s lands of Muirhouse. Robert of Cockerheugh (15th C.) recorded as ‘of Cochaucha’ when witness to a charter of 1484/5 when Sir David of Brancxholm gave Whitchesters to his son Robert (of Allanhaugh). He was probably closely related to the Scotts of Hassendean. Robert of Bowerhouse (15th C.) mentioned in the Justice-aine in Jedburgh in 1494/5 when David Waugh in Bedrule and Hawick had remission for stealing sheep from him. He is recorded being ‘de bourhous’, which is probably Bowerhouse, perhaps the one near Lauder. Robert of Allanhaugh and Whitchester (d.bef. 1506) 3rd son of Sir David, 7th Laird of Buccleuch. By 1471/2 he was the 2nd surviving son of Sir David (the oldest son Walter having died) when he was named in the marriage contract between his brother David and Jane Douglas; if David died, then he was to marry Jane, sister of Archibald, Earl of Angus. He may be the ‘Roberto Scot’ who witnessed the document passing Mangerton from the Armstrongs to David of Buccleuch in 1482. He received Whitchester from his father in 1483, with a charter of the lands and lordship following in 1484/5. He resigned them back to his father shortly afterwards, apparently so that Sir David could arrange the entail of his lands. Following the death of his brother David (whose son Walter would succeed to the Buccleuch titles) he became increasingly important in the running of his father’s affairs. In 1484 he was, with his father, granted the Bailiary of lands belonging to Melrose Abbey (meaning that they administered the lands financially and judicially). He is recorded as son of David of Buccleuch when he leased the Crown lands of Winterburgh in 1483. The lease continued in 1488, along with William Roger, with Sir David of Buccleuch as pledge, and continued further in 1490 and 1492. In 1487 he was procurator for his father when he resigned his lands into the hands of the King. In 1488 he and his father were thanked for their service to the King at the Battle of Blackness, with the Barony of Brancxholm being regranted and him named as second in line, after his nephew Walter (who became Lord of Brancxholm and Buccleuch). Also in 1488 he leased the lands of Greenwood (probably Girnwood) and the Lyne for 19 years from Sir Thomas Turnbull. He is probably the ‘Robert Scot of Brancxholme’ who is recorded in a sasine of 1490 purchasing land in Hawick from Robert Cessford. He features prominently in the last will of Sir David Scott of Brancxholm in 1491/2, being given £40 and appointed as ‘tutor’ for Sir David’s heir Walter (his nephew), as well as a ‘tutor’ for William Turnbull of Minto. In 1491/2 he was ‘of Quhytchester’ when he witnessed a sasine for William Douglas of Cavers. In 1492 his nephew Walter assigned to him all the moveable goods of his father Sir David, in order to pay off debts etc. In 1493 at the Justice-aine in Jedburgh, he served as surety for: Robert, son of Gilbert Elliot; Alexander, brother of Robert of Whames; Thomas Brown in Minto; Walter of Howpasley; William, son of William of Goldielands; John Melrose in Whithaugh; George Waugh in Hawick; John Davidson in Minto; and

Scott
when his son Robert was involved in redeeming a Buccleuch. In 1506/7 he was already deceased or a relative to the young Walter of 25), so that Walter of Howpasley was then the
with his sons then being minors (younger than
must have had his children late; this is because the Laird of Buccleuch was surety for him. He is recorded in the Treasurer’s accounts for 1494/5 having obtained remission from the King. He was also Robert ‘of Allanhaugh’ in 1494/5 when, along with Adam in Annelshope, he was surety for John in Ernleuch. In 1498/9 he had remission from the King for commuting with and assisting rebels and for other crimes. In 1499 he was ‘de Quhitchester’ when he witnessed the sasine for George, Master of Angus being infefted in the Lordships of Eskdale and Ewesdale. He was one of the men chosen to value the lands of Whithope in 1500. He is recorded in a bond of 1500, where Walter Scott of Branxholme (his nephew and superior) held his tenancy of the lands of Whitchesters until he repaid a debt to Alexander Cockburn ofOrmiston Hall; however, it is possible that this was his son rather than him. He is probably the ‘Robertus scot de allanehalch’ who was surety in 1502 for Alexander Weens and was fined for the non-appearance of Weens at court in Jedburgh. Also in 1502, at the Justice-aire in Peebles, he was surety for Alex-der in Hopeton, who may have been the same man as his son Alexander. Additionally, along with Patrick Dickson, he was joint surety in Edinburgh for entering George Dickson for the murder of Simon Dickson. He may have married Christian, sister of William Cockburn of Henderland, who was hanged as a reiver in 1530; however, this seems more likely to have been his son. His oldest son was also Robert, who held property in Hawick and farmed at Whitchesters. His grand-daughter married John Scott of Thirlestane. Other sons were Alexander, who may have been progenitor of the Scotts of Scotstarvit; and James (said to be the 3rd son), who was Provost of the Collegiate Church of Corstorphine. It is claimed that he died at an advanced age, but in that case he must have had his children late; this is because Scott of Rodono suggests he was dead by 1509, with his sons then being minors (younger than
closer adult male relative to the young Walter of Buccleuch. In 1506/7 he was already deceased when his son Robert was involved in redeeming a loan with John Murray of Falahill with a tower in Hawick as collateral; he may have had this tower ‘between the bridges’ built – it is possible that it was the predecessor of Drumlanrig’s Tower. Robert of Haining (15th C.) possibly 3rd son of Robert, 5th Laird of Buccleuch (however, he would appear to have lived about a generation later than this). In 1463 he had a charter for the lands of ‘Grevistoun et le Gillishaunha’ in Peeblessness from James Crichton of Cairns, witnessed in Edinburgh by David and Alexander, son of Sir Walter of Kirkurd (6th Laird of Buccleuch, hence perhaps his nephews). In 1464/5 he was ‘Robin Scot of the Haveigg’ when he was on the panel to rule on the dispute over the lands of Kirkton Mains and the Flex. In 1476 he granted a charter for lands in Peeblesshire to his cousin Thomas Middlemas. In 1477 he sold the lands of Haining, witnesses again including David and Alexander, sons of Sir Walter of Buccleuch. The lands passed to Murray of Philiphaugh, but returned to his son John. He is recorded in a ‘letter of reversion’ with David Scott of Branxholme in 1482. This involved borrowing on lands in Selkirk, with security of the lands of ‘Uverhawkischelis’, ‘Netherhawkechelis’ and ‘Quhitrig’ in the Barony of Branxholme. He is probably the Robert who acted as one of the Earl of Angus’ Bailies for infesting David Scott of Branxholme in the lands of Mangerton in 1482.
In 1484/5 he is described as ‘Bailie in that part’ in a saisine giving the lands of Mangerton to Walter Scott of Branxholme, and in the same year he is ‘in Hanyng’ when he witnessed the charter giving Whitchesters to Robert Scott of Allanhaugh (with Adam listed after him, so possibly a son).
In 1486 it is stated in the Exchequer Rolls that he held the Haining for life. He was appointed as one of the bailies in 1488 for the leasing of Greenwood (i.e. Girnwood) and the Lyne by Robert Scott from Sir Thomas Turnbull; he was there referred to as ‘Roberto Scot de Hanyn’. His son Robert was witness to a related document in 1488 and was also ‘junior’ in 1492 when he and his mother Janet had a 3 year lease on the Haining.
In 1489 he was on the retour panel for the Kers in Edinburgh by David and Alexander, son of Sir
a sasine for the lands of Maxton Craig. He was succeeded by John of Haining, who is recorded in 1510 and died at Flodden. His wife’s first name was Janet, but her surname is not recorded. Robert (15th C.) bequeathed 12 sheep in the last will of Sir David of Branxholme in 1491/2. He is separate from Robert of Allanhaugh, but it is unclear if he is the same as one of the other contemporary Roberts. Robert of Horsleyhill (15th C.). William Elliot of Larriston is said to have married his daughter and thereby inherited Horsleyhill. It is unclear how he may have been related to other local Scotts: the Scotts of Horsleyhill of the 17th and 18th centuries were descendants of the Scotts of Tushielaw, and so (presumably) not closely related. Robert (15th C.) first witness listed on the 1494 charter in which James of Kirkurd granted the lands of Galalaw to his son David. He is listed as being of ‘Achinstancelich’, but it is uncertain where these lands were. It seems likely he is the same as one of the other contemporary Roberts. Robert (15th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire held in Selkirk in 1494/5 along with Robert Edgar. The pair were already ‘at the horn’ when James Young in Eldinhope was convicted of resetting and communing with them. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (15th/16th C.) son of David, recorded at the Justice-aire held in Selkirk in 1494/5. He was surety for James Laidlaw in ‘Wynterburn’ (possibly Winterburgh) who had remission for killing his cousin John Laidlaw from Wolfehope. It is possible he was Robert, son of the Laird of Buccleuch, but that Robert was recorded being of Whitchester when he served as surety in the same year; hence it seems more likely he was son of David, younger of Buccleuch, and hence brother of Sir Walter of Buccleuch. However, he could be son of some other David with a connection to Selkirkshire. Robert (15th/16th C.) recorded along with Philip and Andrew in 1494/5. The three were among men who were already fugitives when John of Deloraine was accused of ‘resetting, supplying and intercommuning’ with them. It seems reasonable to assume that they were closely related, perhaps brothers, but from which branch of the Scotts is unknown. Robert (15th/16th C.) one of two men of the same name recorded in a document relating to Uddingston, in the Glasgow chartulary, listed as ‘Robertum Scot’. 2 Johns are also listed, as well as the widow of another John. They were all residents of Uddingston, and were presumably related. Robert (15th/16th C.) tenant in Langhope. He is recorded in the Exchequer Rolls for 1499, coming after Adam in Tushielaw in the list of payments made in Ettrick. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert of Hartshaw (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1499 when his son Walter gave his consent for Middlestead of Langhope was assigned to Patrick Home. This was probably the Langhope in the Ale valley. However, it is unclear where ‘Hartschaw’ was. He may have been the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (15th/16th C.) occupier of the lands of Redford for 6 years prior to 1499, when they were let instead to the Comptroller, Patrick Home, and he had to pay the balance due. These were the 3 steadings of ‘Hindhop, Drycleuchschele, and Redefurd’ in Ettrick Forest, which may have been associated with what was later called Redfordgreen. He may be the Robert, who had payment for the ‘fermes’ of some Crown lands in Ettrick Forest in the period 1503–06. Robert (15th/16th C.) witness in 1500 to a document for Scott of Branxholme, relating to the lands of Whitchesters. He is recorded as being ‘de La Toure’, although it is unclear which tower. He may be related to Adam of Hermiston or Walter, son of James of Hassendean, who are also listed. He may be the same man as one of the other contemporary Roberts. It is possible that he is son of Robert of Whitchesters and Allanhaugh, and resided as the tower ‘between the bridges’ in Hawick, which is mentioned in a document of 1507/8. He may be related to John ‘called of the Toor’, who is recorded in 1609. Robert (15th/16th C.) tenant in Lairs who is listed in the Exchequer Rolls in 1501 among mostly local men who had their fines compounded. He is recorded as ‘Robertus Scot in Laris’. It seems likely he was related to George, who owned Lairs at that time. Robert of Deloraine (15th/16th C.) son of John of Deloraine. In 1494/5 he was recorded as elder son (‘filius senior’) of John when he served as surety for John Reid at the Justice-aire in Selkirk. He may have been tenant of Deloraine, rather than owner. Probably the same Robert ‘of Dalorain’ was recorded in 1494/5 when he received ‘remission’ along with David Lauder for assisting the King’s rebels etc. Also in 1494/5 he was allowed to ‘compone’ for several rieving crimes (including stealing cows from Thomas Frissell, horses from Wolfehope and cows from Newark), with Walter of Howpasley as surety. He could also be the ‘Robertum Scot de Ettrik’ recorded in the Exchequer Rolls of 1501 in relation to payments made to him. He was recorded in 1502 as being called ‘Bel-lit Robin’ (probably meaning that he was bald).
when William Douglas of Cavers was fined for his non-appearance at the Jedburgh court. In 1510 it must be the same man who is 'Belde Robin Scot' when the Lady of Buccleuch (Elizabeth Kerr, wife of Sir Walter, the 8th Laird) was surety for him, but fined for his non-appearance; he was denounced a rebel and his goods forfeited. His nickname suggests that he was bald-headed. Robert (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 when he was fined £40 for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. Alexander 'Wyndis' of that Ilk was convicted at the same time for the crime done to Philip Fawlaw, who lived in Hawick. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (15th/16th C.) recorded as witness to several land transactions in Edinburgh in 1502. Robert of Aikwood (d.bef. 1516) possibly a son of the first Robert of Haining, although this is far from certain. He might be the Robert, son of Robert of Haining, who is recorded in 1486, 1488 and 1492. He was the first Scott of Oakwood, and is recorded as such in 1503 when he was witness to a pledge made by William Cranston of that Ilk at the Justice-aire in Selkirk. His children included: Michael, who succeeded; and Robert, who may have been grandfather of Simon of Bonnington. He may also have had a daughter Isabel, who married James Murray of Bowhill (whose daughter later transferred her lands to her uncle, Michael of Aikwood), Robert (d.bef. 1532) son of Robert of the Haining. In 1486 he leased the lands of ‘Weststeide de of Filchosysde’ in Ettrick Ward. He was witness to a document relating to the lease of the lands of Greenwood (i.e. Girnwood) and the Lyne in 1488. He is explicitly referred to as son of Robert of Haining (who was one of the bailies in that part for the precept associated with the same land transfer). In 1492 he is recorded as ‘Roberto Scot juniore’ when he and his mother leased the lands of Haining. It seems that Haining was later inherited by his brother John. He may be the same man as Robert of Aikwood. Robert of Whitehaugh (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Robert Scot of Quhithide’ when witness to a sasine in 1499 for George Douglas, Master of Angus. This is probably the Whitehaugh near Hawick, although this is not certain. He was probably related to David ‘in Quhithauche’ who is recorded in 1510 and perhaps the David who first gained Whitehaugh in 1479. He may have been related to the Scotts of Heap and Borthwick. Robert of Burnfoot (15th/16th C.) probably 3rd (or 4th) son of James of Kirkurd, Over and Nether Newhall and Hassendean. He was referred to as ‘of Nether Newhall’ and later ‘of Burnfoot’, showing that these were once different names for the same estate. He is recorded in 1510/1 receiving the 2 ‘merklands’ of ‘Dowiswod’ in the Barony of Hassendean from his brother David of Hassendean. He may have been succeeded by Adam. Robert of ‘Stirckshaw’ and Synton (d.bef. 1509) probably 2nd son of Walter of Synton and Stirkshaws (Stirches), although there are varied interpretations in these generations. He must have had a tower at Stirches, and was certainly involved in the transfer of Harden land to William ‘Boltfoot’, who is the ancestor of the Scotts of Harden. He was later the 8th Laird of Synton, making it unclear whether he was the same man as Robert ‘in Synton’, or whether there were 2 contemporary Roberts, both associated with Synton. He is probably the Robert of Stirches to whom James Newton of Dalcove sold the lands of Boonraw for 300 merks in 1481; in the associated sasine of 1487 he was described as son of Walter of Headshaw (further complicating the genealogy). In 1499 he is described as ‘Roberti Scot in Langhop’ when his rental entry is recorded in the Exchequer Rolls. In 1500 he was one of the men appointed to value the lands of Whithope. In 1501 he was assigned the ‘Weststeid de Gildhous, alias Dodbank’; he was described there as ‘Robert Scot [mortuus] de Stirckshaw’ (i.e., already dead, suggesting perhaps that there are 2 distinct Roberts of Stirches in this period) and the pledge was given by John, son of James Scott (probably of Kirkurd and Hassendean). He also refused the rental of Redford in 1501. In 1501/2 there is a bond of reversion with Alexander, Lord Home, in which he agreed to resign the lands of Harden on payment of £100 Scots at the alter of Wilton Kirk (however, it is unclear whether this happened). In 1502 he was ‘de stirckshawis’ when he served as surety for John in Hassendean at the Justice-aire in Selkirk. In 1504/5 he bought the ‘6 merkland of Bondraw of old extent’ (i.e. Boonraw, perhaps repurchasing) from David Hoppringle, Walter Scott of Howpasley, George Hepburn and William Middlemas; these lands had formerly belonged to James Newton of Dalcove, and he had a charter for the lands in 1505. In 1531 he was ‘Vat Scot douther sone and ayr to umquhill George Vaych of Norcht Synton’, suggesting that he married a daughter of George Veitch, and thereby inherited part of Synton. His sons were Walter of Synton, William of Harden and David. He was killed by Andrew Crossar (i.e. Crozier), for which Crossar was drawn and hanged in 1509. He was probably dead by 1507/8 when Walter of Stirches (presumably his son) is recorded, and in 1510, when Walter, son of the deceased Robert, is mentioned holding lands in Synton, in an indenture between the Erskines and Kerrs. He was certainly deceased in 1512 when his son Walter transferred Harden to his other son William. David ‘Lady’ was recorded as tenant in Stirches in the early years of the 16th century, suggesting he may have been a close relative, possibly his son. In 1526 the long list of Borders men who had remission for their attack on the Earl of Arran contains ‘Walter Scot of Syntoun, William Scot in Hardane, Daudi Scot his brother’, all of whom were probably his sons. Adam Scott is recorded as brother-in-law of Walter in Synton, and hence was probably married to one of his daughters. Robert (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1509 as ‘Robertum Scott de Turri prope Selkirk’ on the panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting his father’s lands of Alemoor. His lands were clearly near Selkirk, but it is unclear whether they were a tower, or somewhere with a similar name. It is possible he was the same Robert mentioned being ‘de La Toure’ in a 1500 document. Robert (15th/16th C.) son of Walter of Headshaw, brother of Philip, David, Simon, Walter and Thomas. He was tenant in Synton and is easily confused with Robert of Stirches, who was also sometimes ‘of Synton’. In 1493 and in 1494/5 he was surety for Hector Lauder, Laird of Todrig, who had been involved with a raid on Minto and other crimes. In 1502 he is Robert ‘in syntoun’ who, along with William in Fenwick, was fined by the Court of the Judiciary for failing to enter William Middlemas. Also in 1502 he was surety for John in Whitehaugh, for John in Hermiston, for John in Walls (along with Walter of Headshaw), for William in Fenwick (when he was described as son of Walter of Headshaw) and for Patrick in Harwoodhill (when he was ‘in syntoun’). Additionally in 1502 he was ‘de stirkischawis’ when he served as surety for Hector Lauder in Clerklands, who had stolen livestock from Harthern and wounded a man in Selkirk, and also (along with Walter of Howpasley) served as surety for Patrick, son of Adam ‘in Harwoodhill’, for Walter, son of Walter of Headshaw, and (with George Turnbull of Hallrule) for Walter Turnbull in Branxholme. Robert (15th/16th C.) recorded as witness to an instrument in Ayr in 1524. Robert of Haining (d.bef. 1532) son of John of Haining, who died at Flodden. He was served heir in 1514. He was succeeded by his son Thomas, who was still a minor when he died. In 1617 he was one of several supporters of the Scotts of Harden who Lady Bonnington complained had attacked her family As part of a feud between the Harden and Bonnington Scotts]. He is probably the Robert whose heirs are mentioned in 1527 when James ‘Mouss’, Burgess of Selkirk, resigned the fourth part of his lands of East Haining, which he held in bond from them. His son Thomas succeeded to Haining in 1538. Robert (16th C.) son of Adam of Tushielaw. He is mentioned in 1526, when Thomas McClellan of Bomby complained that his mother-in-law was removed by her son James Gordon of Lochinvar and delivered to him. Also in 1526 he was among Borderers listed having remission for the attack on the Earl of Arran; his father and brothers John and William were also listed. Robert (16th C.) recorded in Blindhaugh in 1535 when he witnessed a document at Drinkstone. This involved Robert in Howford requesting John in Drinkstone to vacate Drinkstone. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert of Howford (16th C.) recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books in 1535. He was then ‘in Howford’ and warned John ‘in Dringstoun’ to vacate Drinkstone, which belonged heritably to him. John protested that he had valid possession consistent with the dues agreed to be paid to him. It is unclear how this dispute was resolved. Robert in Blindhaugh was one of the witnesses. The connections here may give a clue to the origins of the Scotts of Howford. In 1538 he witnessed (along with George in Blindhaugh) a document for Ralph Davidson involving Grahamslaw and ‘Chames’. In 1539 there is a marriage contract between his son Walter and Elizabeth, daughter of Marion Dalgleish (who appears to have been a sister of Adam Dalgleish of Deuchar). George in Blindhaugh was described as ‘gudschir’ (i.e. grand-father or other senior male relative) of his son Walter; it seems likely that George in Blindhaugh was his brother. An entry (in the Selkirk Protocol Books) in 1540 makes it clear that Marion Dalgleish was his wife, and hence the marriage contract was between step-brother and step-sister. He is probably the Robert ‘in Howford’ recorded in 1544 when John, heir of the deceased James Gledstanes of Cocklaw complained that he and his tutor William Scott (perhaps an uncle) had made an arrangement for 6 1/2 husbandlands in Cocklaw and owed Gledstains 200 merks redemption money. Robert ‘Tutor of Howpasley’ (15th/16th C.) probably the 2nd or 3rd son of Alexander of Howpasley. He may be the Robert of Howpasley who in 1493 served as surety for Adam and Walter Turnbull in Hornshole and may also be the Laird of Howpasley who was surety for Robert in Todshawhaugh and John Turnbull in Hawick. However, Walter of Howpasley (presumably his brother) is also recorded as surety for several people in 1493 and 1494/5, and it appears that both men were designated as Laird of these lands at the same time. He is probably the ‘Robertum Scot de Holpaslot’ who was on the 1517 panel for Sir Walter Scott inheriting the lands of Branxholme. In 1524/5 he was ‘Tutor of Howpaslot’ when he was one of the men who pledged to help the new Warden (the Earl of Angus) keep the peace. He was listed as ‘tutour to Howpaslot’ in the large number of Borderers pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran (with his brother Simon also listed). In 1526 he was one of the men recorded in a protest by the superior of his lands, Douglas of Drumlanrig. He may also have been tutor to the Scotts of Buccleuch, like his brother Walter. In 1527 he was witness to the agreement ending the feud between Sir Walter of Branxholme and James Murray of Falahill. In 1527 he was among the local lairds, led by Sir Walter of Branxholme, given remission for mustering their supporters at Melrose (i.e. Skirmish Field) and Linlithgow. In 1528 he (along with other supporters of Buccleuch) was pardoned for crimes of treason and had his lands restored; this was at the instigation of Buccleuch, and the crimes referred to presumably included trying to capture the young King at Skirmish Field. He is ‘tutor of Howpaslot’ in 1528, when one of the arbitrators asked to decide on the succession to the lands of Borthaugh. He also witnessed an agreement between Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and James Murray of Falahill in 1528. He is further recorded as witness to a discharge relating to Scott lands in 1528/9, where he is described as ‘Robert Scot, tutor of Howpaslot’ and holder of the lands of Craik. He is mentioned in the indenture of 1529 to reconcile the feuding Scotts and Kerrs. In 1530 he was the first of the Lairds of Roxburghshire listed as submitting themselves to the King’s will to keep peace on the Border. In 1532 he was still ‘tutor of Houpaslot’ when he was executor (along with George of Blindhaugh) for Janet of Howpasley, and agreed to pay Andrew Ker of Primside a fee for the marriage of Janet to Thomas McDougall of Makerstoun; he also promised to bind himself to ‘his beloved friend’ George of Blindhaugh, against payment for this dowry. A charter of 1532/3 transfers Midshiels and Appletreehall from Janet Scott (daughter of his brother Walter) to him. This is confirmed in a royal grant of 1536, Appletreehall and Midshiels formerly being held by his father (presumably Alexander of Howpasley). Robert (d. bef. 1539) became a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh in 1516/7, in right of his wife, who was a daughter of William Forsyth. In 1539 his widow Elizabeth Forsyth gave her tenement and rigs in Selkirk to their daughter Elizabeth; James (who was probably a relative) pointed out that he already had livery of the tenement. Robert (16th C.) became a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh in 1524, in right of his wife, who was a daughter of Laurence Henrison. Robert (16th C.) recorded in 1539 as a subtenant of Margaret Falside and Walter Scott in their lands in either Ashkirk or Falside. Robert (16th C.) resident of Perthshire. In 1551 there was a marriage contract between his daughter Janet and Hugh, son of John ‘Fenesoun’; the marriage to take place ‘in all gudly haist’. He was to pay 90 merks as a dowry, while the couple were to receive tacks from the lands of Carpow, ‘Pitgrugny’ and Ferryfield near Abernethy. He may be the Robert, portioner in Carpow in Fife whose will was registered in Edinburgh in 1575/6, at the same time as that of Thomas, also portioner in Carpow. He was probably related to John in Carpow, whose will was registered in 1582/3. Robert ‘Auld Hob o Riskenhope’ (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1557 when he paid rental on Shorthope in the Ettrick valley to the monks of Melrose. He was probably related to the Scotts of Tushielaw, Thirlestane etc. Robert (16th C.) tenant in ‘Vestir Dron’ in Perthshire. He is recorded as witness to a document of 1558 relating to lands there. Several other documents at about that time were witnessed by Roberts who could be him. Robert of Howpasley (d. bef. 1567) son of Sir Walter of Howpasley. His uncle Robert was his ‘tutor’ for many years; he was a minor until at least 1530. He is probably the Robert to whom in 1532 Janet (his mother) sold her 10 merklands of Birkenside in Berwickshire, and which he then sold to Andrew Ker of Primside. In 1533 he (and presumably not his uncle), along with John of Thirlestane, entered a ‘bond of manrent’ with Malcolm, Lord Flemming (Chamberlain of Scotland). Also in 1533 he and Philip in Dryhope were accused by William in Kershope (in Ettrick) of stealing goods from there. In 1539 he and Ninian Anderson received 289 sheep on behalf of Thomas Marjoribanks, which Patrick Murray of Falahill, ‘Sanders’ Murray and James Grieve owed to the King’s grace. He is probably the Robert of Howpasley who had 6 particates of land within Hawick according to the 1537 Charter. He had the lands of Howpasley confirmed to him and his wife Isobel Murray in 1536, and later received the ‘non-entry’ duties of the lands for the years since the death of his father Walter. He is the Laird of ‘Howpaslot’ who was on an assize in Edinburgh in 1534. In 1535 he had a black horse stolen from his lands of ‘Wolcleuche’ by Simon Armstrong and others and his farm at Howpasley was burned by a group of Armstrongs, with 60 cattle being taken. In 1539 he and Thomas (son of Adam) were warned to remove their tenants from the lands of Falside, owned by Sir Walter of Branxholme and his son Walter. In 1539/40 he sold the farm of ‘le cot rig’ in the Mains of Appletreehall to Janet Scott, widow of Robert ‘Eland’; it is written that he ‘binds himself faithfully after coming to his house from Edinburgh’ to guarantee peaceful possession of the farm by Janet until he paid her the same amount back. In 1539 he was on the ‘retour’ panel for James Crichton of Cranston Riddell. In 1541 he occupied the lands of Whitehope (in Yarrow), Ladhope (in Ettrick) and ‘Aldishope’ (in Ettrick), as well as claiming the lands of Howford. In 1541 he was one of the cautioners (for the huge sum of £10,000) for John Johnstone of that Ilk. Also in 1541 he was one of the sureties for Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and witnessed an infeftment of lands to William, son of Robert of Allanhaugh. An English document of 1543 describes how his farms at ‘Appilltre and Chauerbent’ (presumably Appletreehall and Chamberlain Newton) were attacked by men from Tynedale, who took 70 head of cattle, 170 sheep, 28 horses and goods from the houses, as well as 12 prisoners. He is listed among the supporters of Sir Walter in 1547/8 when they complained about the Kerrs joining the English at Pinkie, and burning their lands. In 1549 he granted his 2 husband lands of Appletreehall to Hector, brother of David Turnbull of Wauchope; his heir Walter, and other son Robert, were among the witnesses. In 1550 he gave a further charter to Hector Turnbull for the lands of Pinnacle and Broomlands. Also in 1550, he entered into a bond with Sir Walter of Branxholme and 9 other Scotts (and Elliot of Redheugh) in which they promised the Queen and Lord Governor to assist in bringing in criminals. He is recorded in 1553, along with his son Walter, when their lands of Birkenside in Berwickshire were ‘apprised’, i.e. sold to pay debts. In 1553/4 he was listed among Scotts and their supporters who a group of Kers promised not to harm. In 1557 he was fined for not appearing among other Scotts to answer for the attempted murder of Sir Peter Cranston at the Kirk of the Lowes. In 1561 he was among Border Lairds who appeared before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft. In 1562 he leased his farm of Whitehope (in Yarrow) to John Dalgleish in Deuchar; the witnesses included William in Hartwoodmyres, William’s son Thomas, Adam of ‘Vamfra’, Philip of Dryhope and William in Tushielaw. Also in 1562 he witnessed a transaction for William in Hartwoodmyres. In 1562/3 he was elder of Howpasley when, along with his son Sir Walter, the superior of the lands tried unsuccessfully to have him removed. He is probably the ‘Lard of Howpaslocht’ listed in 1564 among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. He is probably the Laird of Howpasley listed on Monipennie’s c.1594 compilation of Border lairds (even although he was long deceased by then). His wife is recorded in this charter as Isobel Murray, who was 2nd daughter of John ‘the Outlaw Murray’ of Falahill. He was succeeded by his son Sir Walter of Birkenside and Howpasley in 1578/9. His children may also have included John of Thirlestane. Robert of Allanhaugh (d.c.1557) son of Robert of Allanhaugh and Whitchesters, he held 3 ‘particates’ of land in Hawick according to the 1537 Charter. He may be the same man as Robert ‘de La Toure’ who witnessed a charter relating to the lands of Whitchesters in 1500 (although it is possible there was another generation of Roberts). In 1507/8 he was probably the Robert, son and heir of Robert of Whitchesters who had a loan with John Murray of Falahill involving the ‘turrim edificatam burgo de Hawic inter pontes’ (i.e. the tower built in Hawick between the bridges). If this is true, it suggests that the predecessor of Drumlanrig’s Tower was built by the Scotts of Whitchesters and Allanhaugh. In 1517 he was on the panel of ‘retour’ for Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch inheriting his father’s barony of Branxholme. He was probably the Robert of ‘Allanhauche’ who, with several others, swore to help the Earl of Angus (the new Warden) keep the peace in 1524/5. He is probably also the Robert of ‘Allanshaugh’ who is recorded in a protest by Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1526. In 1527 he was among the local lairds given remission for mustering their supporters at Melrose (i.e. Skirmish Field) and Linlithgow. He is mentioned as being pardoned about 1528, along with Robert of Howpasley and William of Hassendean, and also mentioned in the indenture of 1529 attempting to reconcile the Scotts and Kers. In 1530 he was listed among the 21 Roxburghshire Lairds who submitted themselves to James V to keep better order. In 1530/1 his son and heir apparent William was entered into ward in Borthwick Castle along with John, son of Walter of Synton, with sureties being Robert, Lord Maxwell and John Johnstone of that Ilk. In 1535 he was indicted for not paying to George, Lord Home 9 years of rent for the lands of Greenwood and Lyne; his brother Adam acted as surety. Also in 1535 he was tried in Jedburgh of a set of rieving crimes, specifically bringing men from Liddesdale to burn Midlem and steal from several farms near there, as well as at Croslie, Fastheugh, Yair, Town-of-Rule, Sunderlandhall, Clarilaw and elsewhere; he was found innocent of the charges. He is recorded as ‘of Alanhaucht’ in 1539 when involved with a bond among Scotts, relating to the illegitimacy of Thomas, son to Adam Scott. He was a witness to the 1540 resignation of the lands of Nether Harden from Simon Scott of Fenwick to William Scott of Harden. In 1541 he was accused by Sir Walter of Buccleuch of attacking his wife with a Jedburgh staff, and ‘had she not been ready, the butt end had slain her’; later that year, on Boxing Day, he drove away the cattle from Branxholme, and clearly there was a feud of some sort between the two Scotts. He may be the ‘Rob Scott of Halowathe in Tevedall’ who was recorded in an English letter as having his houses burned by men of Bewcastle in 1542, and 16 of his cows taken. In 1553/4 he was listed among Scotts and their supporters who a group of Kers promised not to harm. In 1554/5 he is recorded in a sasine as the tutor of the young Walter Scott of Branxholme. He was one of the group of 200 Scotts and others who rode to the Kirk of the Lowes to try to kill Sir Peter Cranston in 1557, being later bound over not to harm Cranston afterwards. He may be the Robert ‘of Allanmouthe’ listed as being ‘in a former age’ a ‘Pensioner’ of the house of Buccleuch by Scott of Satchells. He served as a ‘tutor’ for Walter Scott of Buccleuch during his minority. He may be the Robert of Whitchesters who was said to have married Christian, daughter of William Cockburn of Henderland. He was succeeded by his son William, and may also have had a daughter who married John Scott of Thirlestane. In 1541 he infefted his son William (an William’s wife, Margaret, daughter of John of Thirlestane) in his 6 merkland of ‘Quhysester treis’ in the Barony of Whitchesters. In 1569 his grandson and heir was stated to be another Robert of Allanhaugh (whose son William is recorded in 1581); it therefore seems likely that the succession was this Robert, William, Robert and William again, all before 1600. Robert of Alton and Clarilaw (16th C.) eldest son of Adam of Clarilaw. He is recorded as ‘in Clarilaw’ in 1528/9 in a ‘discharge’ of fees by Patrick, Earl of Bothwell, relating to lands of several Scotts. He probably also related to the David ‘in Clarilaw’ recorded in the 1530s and 1540s. He is said to have lived to an advanced age and was succeeded in the lands of Alton by his son Adam. He is probably the Robert ‘in Clarilaw descended from the antient house of Hassanden’ who was listed by Satchells as being among the 24 ‘Pensioners’ of Buccleuch. Probably the same man was recorded as son and heir of Adam of ‘Nethirmanis of Hassinden’ in 1550/1 when he was infefted in the lands of Little Drinkstone. In 1566 presumably the same Robert is ‘in Hassendenburn’ when he had a letter of reversion in his favour from John Scott of Drinkstone for the lands of Little Drinkstone. He is recorded as Robert of Over Hassendean when he was witness to a confirming charter for the Turnbull of Hassendeanbank in 1571. He is similarly recorded in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme; he had purchased some land from John Scott of Drinkstone, the money being held by Scott of Branxholme’s agent, John Watson. In 1580 he gave annual rent of his lands of the Over Mains of Hassendeanburn to the servant of Margaret Douglas, Countess of Bothwell (widow of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch) for the loan of £60 Scots; this was with the consent of his eldest son Adam. He ‘touched the pen’ to subscribe (meaning that he could not write himself). He was probably the Robert of Alton listed among many Scotts and their allies in a 1581 summons to appear before the Privy Council regarding the feud with the Eliots and Armstrongs. He was also a witness in 1581 to a ‘letter of slains’ in Hawick whereby Robert and James Scott forgave the Scotts of Allanhaugh and Over Southfield for the murder of their brother George. He was ‘of Altoun’ when he signed the Scott clan bond in 1589. He may be the Robert of Hassendean who was involved in a dispute with Robert Elliot of Horsleyhill in 1592 over a 2 merk land in Dowwood. Keith Scott suggests he lived to an advanced age and died about 1594, but this seems too late, so there may be 2 generations here. His son was Adam of Alton and his grandson was Robert of Alton; in 1606 Robert was served as heir to his father Adam in lands in Chamberlain Newton and to his grandfather Robert in lands in Hassendean, thus establishing the link between the 3 generations. In 1553 Robert of Alton’s daughters Margaret, Bessie and Agnes were served ‘heirs portioners’ of Robert ‘of Easter Maines of Hasindaine’, their ‘foir grandsher’, who was probably him; hence he was great-grandfather of these 3 women. It is unclear how he was related to earlier and contemporary Scotts of Hassendean, however, it is possible he was closely connected with David (who was killed about 1564). Robert (16th C.) 2nd son of Philip of Headshaw. In 1531 he assigned to him the lands of Hartwoodburn after his death, his uncle William of Ormiston acting as official for the legal transaction. It is unclear whether this happened, since his brother Walter was occupying Hartwoodburn in 1541. However, also in 1541 Walter assigned to him one quarter of Hartwoodburn, ‘lying in ryndaill by open fields’ for 5 years. He is recorded again as brother of Walter in a Selkirk document of 1541/2. In 1542 he is probably the Robert who let half of Hartwoodburn to John Angus, with the advice of Walter in Headshaw (probably his brother) and Walter of Haining. He could be the Robert in Hartwoodburn who witnessed a sasine in Selkirk in 1544, involving Thomas. In 1579 he was recorded as brother german of Walter of Headshaw when he was witness to the making of the inventory of Isabel Donald, widow of Robert of Palace. Robert (16th C.) Customar of Irvine according to the Exchequer Rolls for at least the years 1537–42. He gave in his reports with William, junior, who was surely related. He was probably also related to John, who was an official in Irvine at about the same time. Probably the same Robert was a Burgess of Irvine recorded in an instrument made in Ayr in 1531 and who held lands in ‘Newtown’ in Ayrshire in the same year. Robert (16th C.) tenant in Borthaugh who was recorded in 1549 when tenants and servants of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme complained about their farms being burned by a group of Englishmen and Kers in the previous year. Robert (16th C.) possibly a son of David of Tushielaw and younger brother of Adam of Tushielaw and John of Thirlestane (although this is uncertain). He was Parish Clerk of St. Mary of the Lowes. He was described as ‘in Bowhill’ in 1557 when he was repledged for his part in the armed mob which came to the Church at St. Mary’s seeking to kill Sir Peter Cranston. His sureties were Sir John Scott, Commissary of the Archbishop of Glasgow and Robert Scott of Bonnington. Other men named include Scotts of Allanhaugh, Burnfoot, Haining, Harden, Howpasley, Synton and Thirlestane. He is probably the Robert ‘of Bowhill’ who paid rental for lands in Rodono to Melrose Abbey in 1557. He is easy to confuse with Robert of Aikwood and Bowhill. Robert of Horsleyhill (16th C.) charged by the Queen’s Advocate in 1563 with ‘Resetting of Inglismenne, and Thiftuus Steling of certane Oxin’. William of Tushielaw was fined for not producing the relevant documents. Since it appears that Horsleyhill was owned by the Elliots about this time it is unclear how he could have been Laird (perhaps this was an error of Pitcairn in ‘Scott’ for ‘Elliot’?; however, descendants of the Scotts of Tushielaw would later own Horsleyhill). Robert ‘Wait Aboot Um’ (16th C.) recorded in 1562 along with Robert ‘of Collefurd’ and John ‘callit the Clerk’. The 3 were excepted from the bond between the Scotts and the Kers, but instead we to be pursued for their crimes. His name is explicitly recorded as ‘Wait About Him’, but it is unclear what this meant. Robert ‘Hob’ (d.1564) recorded in 1562 along with John ‘callit the Clerk’ his brother and Hob ‘Wait About Him’. He is listed as Robert ‘of Collefurd’. The 3 were excepted from the assurance given by the Scotts that they would end their feud with the Kers, but instead these men were to be pursued (and hence presumably already found guilty of crimes). They were convicted of sheep-stealing and reset and hanged, along Mark Elliot called ‘of the Hill’ and John Henderson ‘the Falsers’; he is recorded as ‘callit of Colyfurd’. He was surely related to the William, son of Walter, who had a sasine for Coliftor in 1550. It may be his widow who was the Katherine Scott, wife of the deceased Robert ‘of Collenfurde’ who remarried to Walter Dalmahoy in South Synton and resigned her lands in Houleshope (in Peeblesshire) to her son Thomas Scott. Robert of Wamphray, Rysholm and Bonnington (d.bef. 1563) probably from the Scotts of Aikwood, but the precise connection is not established. He could, for example, have been a younger son of the first Robert of Aikwood. Sometime in the period 1514–1524 he married Katherine, daughter and heiress of John Boyle of Wamphray (in Dumfriesshire) and Rysholm (in Ayrshire); she was widow of John Johnstone and died in 1524. He assumed the designation ‘of Wamphray and Rysholm’. In 1530 he was surety for 4 Johnstone brothers and in the same year Helen ‘Baty’ (wife of Alan Stewart) sued him for the right of marriage of the heir of Wamphray. He served on an assize in 1532 in Dumfriesshire and in 1535 was cautioner for Philip Murray of Falahill. In about 1540 he and Sir Walter of Buccleuch were released from ward after making promises to help keep order on the Border. He was ‘of Wamphray’ recorded in ward in 1540 when he was released (along with Robert of Howpsalys) on condition of keeping the peace, with 2 of their friends to remain in ward as pledges. In 1541 he was ‘of Wamphray’ when he claimed tenancy of the lands of Winterburgh in Ettrick. His son Robert was infeft in the lands of Rysholm in 1541, but died before 1549. He was recorded as tenant in ‘Ryisholme’ in Ayrshire in 1542, when he had a sasine for those lands. He was accused of being a traitor and spy in 1545 and appears to have taken refuge at Aikwood. He is also listed being of Wamphray in 1547/8 among the supporters of Sir Walter of Branxholme in a bond of loyalty to the Crown, along with the Kerrs, and in 1550 he was one of 10 Scotts to sign a bond with the Queen, to keep order and bring in criminals. In 1550 he was ‘of Wamfre’ when he witnessed an obligation by Sir Walter Scott to bring in criminals on the Border. He and his son Adam sold Wamphray to James Johnstone of Pocornwell in 1548/9 and they also disposed of Rysholm in about 1550. They then moved to Selkirkshire, where he was ‘in Haikwood’ (i.e. Oakwood) in 1550. In about 1550 he purchased ‘Haitpule and Little Ernstoun’ from Lord Brthwick; he had previously been tenant in Haitpule. He was ‘formerly of Wamfra’ in 1552 when he and Robert of Thirlestane paid fines for people at the Justice- aire in Selkirk. In 1553/4 he was listed as ‘of Wamfra’ among Scotts and their supporters who a group of Kers promised not to harm. In 1557 he was ‘sometime of Wamfray’ when along with his son Adam they were bound by a charter to sell ‘Ryisholme’ in Ayrshire to John Hamilton of ‘Beynstoun’; however, they were unable to do so, having been evicted and hence had to give rentals of Bonnington and other lands in Peebleshire to Hamilton. He is probably the same as the Robert ‘of Bonyntoune’ who was surety for some of the Scotts charged in 1557 with trying to kill Sir Peter Cranston at the Kirk of the Lowes, and who was on the panel for charging John Gledstains of Cocklaw with murder in 1561. In 1557 he was ‘of Bonytoun’ when he paid rental to Melrose Abbey for ‘Esphoup’ and ‘Stobeclouch’. In 1558 he was ‘of Wamfra’ when he received ‘cloiss writtins’ from the Queen. He was listed among the men who appeared before the Privy Council in a promise to end the feud between the Kers and the Scotts in 1562. He secondly married Isobel Ker, who was widow of Michael of Aikwood. He was succeeded in the lands of Bonnington by his son Adam, and he was grandfather of Simon of Bonnington (who was served heir to his grandmother, Katherine Boyle, in 1611); he may be the Adam ‘of Vanfra’ recorded in 1562. His other sons were: Robert, who predeceased him; John of Wakefield; John (again), an illegitimate son; Robert, another illegitimate son, who was legitimatised in 1576 (and may be the Robert of Wamphray mentioned in 1597/8). He is probably the Robert recorded in a service of heirs in 1625; William Burnet succeeded to the brother of his great-grandfather on his mother’s side, as heir to John of ‘Walkmanfield’ (in Peeblesshire), son of Robert of Bonnington, brother of Adam. Robert (16th C.) recorded in 1550 as Bailie to Lord Hay, Constable of Scotland, in a legal instrument in Perthshire. Robert of Thirlestane (d.c.1576) son of John, the first recorded Laird of Thirlestane, in Ettrick valley. In 1550 he was among local lairds (including Walter of Buccleuch and Robert of Howpsalys) who swore to the Queen and Lord Governor that they would help bring in criminals. In 1553 there is an assurance by Walter Kerr of Cessford not to hurt him or his family and friends (this following the murder of Sir Walter of Buccleuch in Edinburgh). In 1557 he was listed as being ‘of Schastaine’ (perhaps a transcription error) when he paid rental for ‘Craige’, ‘Ramseclouch’ and ‘Thrilistane’ to the monks of Melrose. He was also involved in 1557 with the band of about 200 Scotts and their supporters who sought out Sir Patrick Cranston at the Kirk of the Lowes as part of a feud. He was appointed one of the curators of Sir Walter of Branxholme in 1562, when he was in his minority. In 1564 he was listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. He was probably the ‘Gudman of Thristane’ on an assize of 1564 involving the murder of David of Hassendean. And in 1564/5 he was also listed as one of the 4 curators of Sir Walter of Branxholme in the bond signed with the Kerr's; he signed 'with my hand at the pen', indicating that he could not write). He was probably Warden-Depute of the West Borders, although no dates are known. In 1567 he was one of the cautioners for the marriage contract between Elizabeth, sister of Walter of Bransholme and Thomas, son of Walter Ker of Cessford. Also in 1567 he and Master Thomas Weston relieved Sir Walter Scott of Bransholme as surety for Archie's Will in Gorrenberry and Sim Elliot in Dodburn. In 1568 he had a charter of feu-right for Thirlestane, Ramseycleuch, Scabcleuch and Craighill from the Commendator of Melrose Abbey. In 1568/9 his support was mentioned as a curator of Sir Walter of Buccleuch on a further bond between the Scotts and Kers. In 1569 he was on the panel of inquest for Grizel Borthwick inheriting superiority of her father's lands in Wilton. In 1569 he (along with Sir Walter of Bransholme, Langlands of that Ilk and William, Lord Borthwick) was surety for several Elliots. He was also co-surety for Walter of Headshaw in 1569 and for other Borderers in 1573. In 1573 he was named as a debtor in the will of Dr. John Craig in Edinburgh. In late 1573 he was charged to enter Ade Dodds and George Laidlaw, tenants in Ramseycleuch. He was curator of Walter Scott of Buccleuch, recorded in 1575, but is deceased by 1577. He is probably the Laird listed in Monipennie's c.1594 (but put together much earlier) compilation of Border chiefs. He married Margaret Scott, who may have been daughter of 'Wicked Wat' (not a daughter of the 1st Lord of Buccleuch, as stated by Satchells); she was among the curators of her son Robert, complaining about the treatment he had at the hands of Simon Scott of Winterburgh, and was still living at Thirlestane in 1609. He was succeeded by his eldest son Sir Robert. Other sons were Walter of Gamescleuch and William of Fingland (who may also have had the lands of Merrylaw); both these sons are listed among those involved with the 1593 slaughter of Lord Maxwell and his men at Dryfe Sands, and both were probably at the rescue of Kinmont Willie. Robert of Allanhaugh (16th C.) recorded as 'Young Robert Scot of Allanhaugh' in 1557 when he rented the Brugh from Melrose Abbey. Probably the same Robert is described as heir to his deceased grandfather in 1569, when there was a discharge from his cousin, Sir Walter of Bransholme, for whom his grandfather acted as tutor during Sir Walter's minority; he was also granted the non-entry of the rents and other fees associated with Whitchester, from the time of the death of the former Robert of Allanhaugh (around 1557) until he became of age. He is probably the Robert of Allanhaugh who in 1579 sold (or borrowed money on) the annual rent of 'Reahousknow' for £100 Scots to Walter of Todrig; the transaction was witnessed at Riddell. Probably the same Robert of Allanhaugh is listed in 1581 among Scots and their allies who were summoned to appear before the Privy Council; his son William is also listed. He was most likely the Robert of Allanhaugh (along with William 'in Alanehaucht, now in Hawik', presumably his son, and Scotts associated with Over Southfield) who were involved in the murder of Hawick resident George Scott in 1578; George's brothers Robert and James wrote a 'letter of slains' in Hawick in which they forgave the assailants. In 1585 he had a bond with Sir Walter of Buccleuch, settling an old feud over the death of David, son of Adam of Allanhaugh, and Hob Dalgleish, servant of Sir Walter's in Braidhaugh; his 'brother germane' Walter is also listed. In 1590 his cautioners were Sir Walter of Buccleuch and Sir John Edmonson. He was also recorded in about 1590 among the landed men of the Borders and was 'of Allanhaugh or Raisknowis' in 1590 among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. Probably the same Robert 'of Alanehauch' was in 1599 listed among Scots and others who were charged to find sureties for 'observing the King's peace'. Papers relating to him in the period 1581–1600 are in the National Archives. It seems possible that he was son of William, but may have been the direct heir of his grandfather, the previous Robert. However, the history of this family is very unclear. Robert (d.1540s) probably eldest son of Robert of Wamphray, Rysholm and Bonnington. In 1542 he was infefted in his father's lands of Rysholm, but died shortly afterwards, his father's successor being his brother Adam of Bonnington. Another Robert was his father's illegitimate son. Robert (16th C.) Bailie of Hawick, recorded in 1560 when Thomas Short inherited his brother John Short's tenement on the north side of the High Street. He is probably also the Bailie who signed the 1569 bond against the thieves of Liddesdale, along with many inhabitants of Roxburghshire, Selkirkshire, Berwickshire and Peeblesshire. He may be the same as one of the other local Robert Scotts of the time. Robert (16th C.) recorded in 1571/2 as one of 4 inhabitants of Hawick who entered themselves to answer some kind of bond, with Sir William Ker of Caverton as cautioner. 'Philip's

Jock’ was one of the other men and hence possibly related. In 1572/3 the same men swore allegiance to the Crown and gave assurance that they would not help or reset Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst and others, with Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig as cautioner. Robert (16th C.) son and heir of William ‘in Hawik’, mentioned in 1557 and in 1565/6. His father had leases on lands in Hawick owned by Trinity Collegiate Church in Edinburgh (and formerly belonging to Soutra). It is possible he is the same as Robert ‘in Hawik’ recorded in 1592. Robert of Stirches (16th C.) probably son of Walter of Synton by his 2nd wife Margaret, daughter of James Riddell of that Ilk. His step-mother was a Cockburn of Ormiston, from whom the family inherited the lands of Whitslade. He was the progenitor of the Scotts of Whitlades and Stirches. He is probably the Robert, son of Walter of Synton who appeared for his father in 1561 to promise to produce ‘Hob Flescheour’, who was accused of theft in Berwick. In the same year he was listed as son to Walter of Synton among Border Lairds who appeared before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft. He may be the Robert, brother to Walter of Stirches who witnessed the installation of the new Parson and Vicar of Ashkirk in 1579/80. He married a daughter (possibly Helen) of Rutherfurd of Huntly and was succeeded by his son Walter ‘the Hawk’ (who was probably the first to be designated ‘of Whitslade’, and was served heir to his grandfather Walter in the lands of Whitslade in 1605). Scott of Satchells also says he had a son Thomas, who was 1st of Todrig, but this appears to be off by a generation. It is said that another son, also Robert, accompanied Scott of Buccleuch on the raid to rescue Kinmont Willie from Carlisle Castle in 1596. He may be the Robert of Burnfoot who, along with Robert of Burhead, was in 1579/80 involved in a case against Thomas Dalgleish and Simon of Gamescleuch over the murder of David Dalgleish in Harehead; restitution was being sought from the pair, with their arbitrators being William of Huntly and Robert, Burgess of Hawick. He may have been father of William of Burnfoot in Ale and hence Robert and Walter, brothers of William. These 3 brothers were mentioned in 1612 when the sons of the Earl of Bothwell were involved in an ongoing dispute with them over land and titles. Robert (16th C.) described as son of deceased Robert of Raesknowe in an undated marriage contract with Agnes, daughter of Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule. Sir Thomas lived until 1572, and hence it must have been before this date. He was probably related to David of Raesknowe who was one of the 24 ‘pensioners’ of Buccleuch. Probably the same Robert ‘of Reahouskowne’ was recorded in 1581 when he witnessed an arrangement where Katherine Scott, widow of Robert of Colifort, resigned her lands of Hundleshope to her son Thomas; his brother William was also a witness, as well as William of Allanbaugh. In 1582 he witnessed an agreement in Hawick between Alan Deans and Alexander Weens. Robert of Over Hassendean (16th C.) see Robert of Alton and Clarilaw. Robert (d.c.1568) described as ‘skippar in the Wester-Wenyis’ in 1568 when his will was registered in Edinburgh. Robert (d.c.1568) described as ‘wobstarm in the Potter-raw’ in 1568/9 when his will was registered in Edinburgh. Robert (16th C.) mentioned in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. It is stated that ‘Robert Scottis wyf in Hawik’ was owed ‘for sum ordinar dwtie, sex pundis’, suggesting that she had provided some kind of service to the Laird (perhaps catering). Robert (d.c.1574) described being ‘in Mildane’ when his will was registered in Edinburgh in 1574. It is unclear where he lived. Robert of Palace (d.bef. 1579) recorded in 1579 when the inventory of his widow Isabel Donald was listed in Selkirk. The witnesses were Robert (brother of Walter of Headshaw), John in Kirkhouses (and his son James), George Waugh in Kirkhouses and John Beattie in Burnfoot. His wife had previously been married to Andrew Shortreed. The executors for his children were Walter of Headshaw and George Shortreed of Essendine. His daughter with her, Marion ‘alias Mane’ was left with George of Synton. Robert (16th C.) became a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh in 1580, in right of his wife, Isabella, daughter of William Lawson. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th C.) recorded in 1581 as ‘callit of Glenrathane’ when, along with his brother George and Hob ‘callit Huitill’ they were accused of attacking Martin Elliot of Braidlie’s farm at Northcroft. Their chief was Walter of Goldielands, and so they must have been relatively local. ‘Glenrathane’ is probably Glenrauchan in Evesdale, rather than Glenrath south of Peebles. He is probably the ‘Hob Scott in Glenrachane’ listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605. He was surely related to Archibald there, who was declared a fugitive in 1606. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th C.) referred to as ‘callit Huitill’ in 1581 when there was a complaint against him and 2 other Scotts (Hob of ‘Glenrathane’ and his brother George) attacking Martin Elliot’s farm of Northcroft. It is unclear where ‘Huitill’ might have been. Robert of Aikwood (d.bef. 1581) son of Michael of Aikwood. He was younger brother of Walter and William, who both appear to have died without heirs. In 1553 he received a precept from the Archbishop of Glasgow as heir to his father’s lands of Hermiston. In 1554 he succeeded his brother William to his half of Bowhill. He was ‘of Bowhill’ when served heir to his brother Walter in the half steadings of Kershope (called ‘Westsyd de Kershop’ in Ettrick) in 1555. Scott of Satchells describes him as the progenitor of the Scotts of Bowhill. In 1564/5 he married Marion, daughter of Sir William Cranston of that Ilk. In 1580 there was a marriage contract between his sister Elizabeth and Robert, son of the deceased James in Whitslade. Also in 1580 he sold some woods near Selkirk to a group of men. In 1581 he and William of Tushielaw were the ‘byndaris’ in an action of Adam in Bonnington against Robert of Haining, regarding ownership of 6 chalders of grain. He is probably the ‘Robert of . . . wod’ listed among many Scotts and their allies in a 1581 summons to appear before the Privy Council regarding the feud with the Elliots and Armstrongs. In 1581 he represented his tenants in an agreement to pay the minister of Selkirk. Also in 1581 there was an agreement between his son and heir Robert and his widow Marion over liferents, which were in 1581/2 assigned to Isobel, daughter of John Home of Crumstane, his widow’s 2nd husband. He was succeeded by his son Robert, and it is unclear which of the Selkirk records of about 1580 relate to him and which to his son. His children include: Robert, who succeeded to Bowhill; William (in Scotstaines) who was probably at the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596; James, recorded in 1599; and Walter (alive in 1592). Robert (16th C.) described as ‘scribe to the Lords of Session’ in 1574. In that year he requested that ‘travellor’ Robert (perhaps a relative) should be made a Burgess of Glasgow. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts. Rev. Robert (16th C.) son of Walter of ‘Hindscha’ (i.e. Headshaw) he became minister of Ashkirk in 1585/6, on the death of Daniel Chalmers. However, nothing else is recorded about him. It is possible he is actually the same man as Robert of Headshaw, unless there are 2 generations of Walter of Headshaw and he is son of the 1st (or Walter of Headshaw had 2 sons called Robert). Robert (16th C.) Burgess of Hawick recorded in 1579/80 when he served as an arbitrator on behalf of Robert of Burnfoot and Robert of Burnhead in a case against Thomas Dalgleish of Deuchar and Simon of Gamescleuch. He was also listed as Burgess of Hawick in 1581, when he was recorded as brother of George and James (who was a cordiner). In 1581 he and his brother James wrote a ‘letter of slains’ in Hawick, forgiving the murderers of his brother, who were the Scotts from Allanhaugh, Over Southfield and others. He signed the document ‘wytht my hand’ (although his brother James did not). He may well be the same as one of the other contemporary Roberts. Robert ‘Hob o the Knowe’ (16th C.) recorded in Selkirk in 1580 when he resigned a tenement there in liferent to his wife, Alison Lyle. Robert (16th C.) servitor to Adam Hislop in Catslack. In 1581 in Selkirk he is listed among people who owed money to Thomas Cruickshank. Robert (d.c.1586) became a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh in 1577, in right of his wife, Margaret, eldest daughter of James Hunter ‘glassinwrycht’. His will was registered in Edinburgh in 1586. His wife Agnes Cowie’s will was registered in 1576 and his wife Margaret Hunter’s in 1592. Robert (d.c.1592) writer in Edinburgh, who was a Clerk of the College of Justice. His will is recorded in Edinburgh in 1592 and that of his wife Elizabeth Scott in 1593/4. He could be the writer in Edinburgh who requested that John, son of David Wilson, be made a Burgess of Glasgow (gratis) in 1579. Robert (d.c.1594) described as ‘in Mekill-Futhie’, Farnell Parish in Angus in 1594 when his will was registered in Edinburgh. Robert (d.c.1595) described as ‘in Broumsetoun’ in Lanarkshire whose will was registered in Edinburgh in 1595. Robert (d.c.1578) described as ‘in Grenand-manise’ in Dalry Parish when his wife Marion Maxwell’s will was registered in Edinburgh in 1578. Robert of Howford (16th/17th C.) listed by Scott of Satchells as one of the 24 ‘Pensioners’ of Buccleuch. He was also said to have been on the raid to rescue Kinmont Willie in 1596 and to have received the lands of ‘Cowd-house’ (presumably Coldhouse) for his service. He must have been related to the later Scotts of Coldhouse. He was probably son of Robert of Howford and was succeeded by William, probably his son. He may be the Robert of ‘Cowfurd’ recorded in 1581 when his son and heir Thomas was involved in a dispute over the ‘maills’ of lands in Hundlehope with John, parson in Hundlehope. Robert (16th/17th C.) fisher in Glasgow. He was made a Burgess there in 1595/6 on account of marrying a daughter of Burgess Archibald Homill. He may be the deceased fisher Robert whose eldest son John (a merchant) was made a Burgess of Glasgow in 1632. His connection to other Scotts is unclear. Robert of Langhope and Huntly (16th/17th C.) listed as one of the 24 ‘Pensioners’ of Buccleuch in Scott of Satchells doggerel verse. He is there recorded as ‘of Langup’ and having the lands of ‘Outter-huntly’ for his service for several ages’. He was said to have been in the group that rescued Kinmont Willie in 1596. He was probably son of William ‘in Huntly’, who was 3rd son of John, younger of Synton. His brothers Walter and William were listed among supporters of Scott of Thirlestane about 1610. He was probably succeeded by his son Walter, who appears to have been succeeded by another James, who was probably a younger son. William, recorded in 1608 as brother of Walter, was probably yet another son. Robert of Shielwood (16th/17th C.) 5th son of John, younger of Synton. His sons probably included: Robert of Shielwood; and Walter of Girnwood. Robert of Haining (d.bef. 1611) son of Thomas. He is recorded in a bond of 1576/7, not to remove ‘kindly’ tenants and in the following year lost a dispute with John, minister of Selkirk, over the possession of ‘the half toun and landis of Elstoun’. Also in 1576/7 he was a witness to the payment of a fine by Sir Walter Ker of Cessford because of George Ker not marrying Sir Walter of Branxholme’s sister Janet. In 1579 Walter of Goldielands, acting as Bailie Depute of the Regality of Melrose, entered him into the lands of ‘Elestoun’ or ‘Ilistoun’ (which had been possessed by Adam of Bonnington). He witnessed another transaction in Selkirk in 1579. In 1579/80 he appears to be recorded as Provost of Selkirk and complained that Walter of Goldielands had backed-tracked on his promise to appoint him as Provost Depute; Scott of Goldielands claimed he was not appointed as Depute, but elected into that role. In 1580 he had a court case against Adam of Bonnington and his wife ‘Dame Janet Scott’ was mentioned in a sasine fo ‘Ilistoun’. Additionally in 1580 he received 200 merks from James in Whithope in redemption for the lands of ‘Hanyung Mot’ and was recorded in a transaction involving lands in ‘Ilistoun’, with his brothers William and Walter acting as witnesses. Also in 1580 he paid redemption money to John in Aikwood for the lands of Haining Rig and ‘Louchtknow’. In 1580/1 he was a judge appointed on behalf of George of Synton in a dispute over ownership of Synton Mill with Walter of Stirches. He was listed among many Scotts and their allies in a 1581 summons to appear before the Privy Council regarding the feud with the Elliots and Armstrongs (he may have been involved with Scott of Headshaw in the attack on the Elliots of Braidlie). He was in ward in Edinburgh Castle in 1581, along with George of Synton, when his cautioners were Mungo and Alexander, Burgessess of Edinburgh; Alexander was cautioner for him when the surety was renewed. Also in 1581 he leased the half land of Haining Rig to Gilbert Govenlock; William in Haining was a witness. Additionally in 1581 he had an arrangement with Patrick Murray of Falahill over the ‘feu maill’ of the lands of Haining and witnessed an agreement between Margaret, widow of William of Burnfoot and her son William. Further in 1581 he admitted Adam Broadfoot to a piece of land in East Haining, with his brother William acting as a witness, and he represented his tenants in an agreement to pay the minister of Selkirk. He also in 1581 took a loan from John Geddes in Branxholme for annual rent of lands in Haining, witnessed by 2 of his servants. In 1585 he witnessed a bond (signed at Selkirk and Hawick) settling a feud between... the Scotts of Branxholme and the Scotts of Al-hanhaugh. In 1587 he acted as cautioner for Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule, for Walter of Bran-holm and for Walter Chisholme of that Ilk. He signed a bond with other Scotts in 1589 and was listed on the ‘Roll of the Clans’ of 1590. In 1590 he was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. Also in 1590 a number of Murrays were put under caution not to harm him and James Scott ‘callit Mekle Jame Eister’. Additionally in the same year James Pringle of Torsonce and William Borthwick of Crookston were his cautioners for him not to harm Patrick Murray of Falahill or his dependants. In 1590/1 he was a cautioner for Walter Chisholme of that Ilk in a case brought against the Scottish Wardens and leaders on the Border, for failing to produce certain fugitives. He was in dispute over the minister of Selkirk, according to documents of 1594, 1595 and 1607. He represented Buccleuch at a meeting of Wardens representatives at Dayholme on the Kershope Burn in 1596. Afterwards Lord Scrope’s agent, Salkeld, captured Kinmont Willie, leading to his daring escape from Carlisle Castle.
In 1597/8 he was still Provost Depute of Selkirk.
In 1599 he witnessed the bonds (signed at Branxholme) between Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch and the Armstrongs and Elliots of Liddes-dale. Also in 1599 he was among a list of Scotts and others charged to find caution to ‘observe the King’s peace’. He is probably the Scott of Haining listed among leaders ordered in 1600 to appear before the Privy Council to give advice about peace on the Border. Also in 1600 he was procurator for James of Balwearie, who was cau-tioner for Scott of Buccleuch, in a case before the Privy Council. In the early centuries of the century he (along with Sir Robert of Thirlestane) acted for the interests of Sir Walter of Buccleuch while he was abroad. In 1601 he was mentioned in an English letter listing Armstrong who were outlaws under the Laird of Buccleuch, when he appears to have been acting as a Deputy Warden. In 1602 he signed the ‘General Band’ among Border Lairds.
In 1602 (while Walter of Buccleuch was abroad) he was charged with entering a group of Scotts of Huddleshope, Thirlestane, Gamescleuch, Bonnington and Bowhill, who were accused of raiding the lands of Adam Veitch. He was also meant to present James of Whithope in 1602, but failing to do so, was denounced as a rebel. Also in 1602 he was denounced again for not producing the Scotts of Whithope, Gamescleuch, Thirlestane and Hartwoodmyres for not paying their portion of the taxes of Ettrick Forest. In 1603 he was still standing in for Walter of Buccleuch when he failed to appear to enter the Scott Lairds of Bonnington, Newburgh, Kirkstead, Dryhope, Thirlestane and Deephope and he was also ‘keeper depute of Lid-disaill’ when there was a complaint that he had not entered Armstrongs and others for a raid on ‘Sewingdene’, delaying making restitution to the complainers, and again being denounced. In 1606 he was surety for Ninian Armstrong and Andrew Henderson in a murder trial. In 1607 he was involved in a dispute with the minister of Selkirk.
In 1608 it is said that he ‘hounded out’ John, brother of Walter of Woll and his half-brother John Turnbull, leading to them attacking some citizens in Selkirk, and then being rescued from the Bailies by a gang of Scotts including his brother William; his servitors Walter and John Gledstains were also involved. Also in 1608 a letter under the seal of James VI demands that he remove himself from Yair Corn Mill. His son Robert and several of his servants were alleged to have attacked Sir Andrew Ker’s lands at Selkirk Mill in 1608; his servants included Thomas Young, Francis Scott, William Elliot, Patrick Brown and William Thomson. He was summoned to appear in Edinburgh in 1608. He is probably the Robert who was named as a Commissioner for keeping peace in Selkirkshire in 1610. Along with his wife Janet Scott and his son Robert (along with his wife Elizabeth Murray) had a charter for Hain-ing Mill recorded as 1629 (but this may be an error). Some time before 1580 he married Janet, daughter of Sir Walter (9th of Buccleuch); she had previously been married to John Cranston of that Ilk, and contracted to marry George Ker, younger of Faldonside. In the marriage contract in 1579, he promised to give her his half of the lands of ‘Ilistoun’, as well as his tenement in Selkirk. In 1580 he resigned to her his lands ‘lie burnemyleh plus the loch called ‘Hanyng Louchet’ with mill-race, and the crofts called ‘lie mylnecroft’, ‘lie harisbuttis, Hoppringillis acre, Craufurdis acre, chekeynis acre, myln croft’; his wife was referred to as ‘Dame Scott of Hanyng’ and the agreement was witnessed by his brother William. At the same time he granted his wife an annual rent of some lands. He was succeeded by his son Robert.
He also had a younger son, William, who was one of the rescuers of Kinmont Willie. Robert (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1602 being ‘in Stir-field’ when he signed a bond of peace among Border lairds. This was ‘at the pen led by William Wylie, clerk, writer of the band’. His lands were probably Stirkfield between Peebles and Biggar. Robert of Bowhill (16th/17th C.) eldest son of Robert of Aikwood. He held the lands of the southside of Bowhill. He is probably the Robert ‘of Rowhill’ [sic] who was denounced in 1597, along with Andrew Ker of Primisdelloch and Walter of Todrig, for not restoring teind sheaves to Mr. James Durham. He is recorded in 1601 when his brothers Walter, James and William ‘in Schostanis’, together with John ‘in Quholplaw’ were tried for the murder of Archibald Napier of ‘Wovnet’ (Woolmot, near Edinburgh). And in 1602 his brother James was part of a group of Scotts who attacked lands at ‘Fechane’ and he was ordered to present his brother. His son Robert may have succeeded him in 1625. Robert of North Bowhill (16th/17th C.) son of Walter of Bowhill and nephew of Robert of (southside of ) Bowhill. In 1609 he succeeded to his father Walter’s lands of North Bowhill. In 1627 he was one of the Scotts who paid reparation to the Nappers on behalf of John Scott in Wooplaw (alias John of Bonnington). Robert of Bowden (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1594 as ‘callit of Bowden’ on the list of 180 or so men who had a ‘respite’ for killing Lord Maxwell and others at Drye Sands. He is probably related to William of Bowden, who was recorded in the 1550s. Robert ‘Hob’ of Wamphray (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1579 as Burgess of Edinburgh when he was one of the witnesses to a transaction made in Selkirk. This involved John Chisholme in Eldinhopeknow and the widow of John Chisholme in Mountbenger. His name is recorded as ‘Robert Scot alias Hob of Wamfery’. He was ‘of Wamfray burgess of Edinburgh’ in 1580/1 when he had sasines for the annual rent of lands in Newstead and Eildon. Probably the same Burgess of Edinburgh who in 1581 was a cautioner (with Mungo, Burgesses of Edinburgh, as well as James Gledstains of Cocklaw) for Walter Scott of Goldielands being entered into ward in Edinburgh Castle. He was probably directly related to Mungo, as well as being a relative of the Scotts of Goldielands (and hence Buccleuch). Probably the same Robert, Burgess of Edinburgh, was in 1580 one of 2 judges appointed (by Sir Walter of Birkenside and William of Tushielaw) to decide on George of Synton’s claim on lands in ‘Ilistoun’. He may be the illegitimate son of Robert of Wamphray, whose birth was legitimised in 1547. Robert (16th/17th C.) son and heir of the deceased James, Burgess in Selkirk, recorded in 1580. David Fairlie appears to have been acting as his tutor for 5 years, in relation to his half of the mill of ‘Hadderlie’ and his future marriage. He held lands from Gilbert Ker of Primisdilloch that he set to Andrew ‘Loucht’. Robert (16th/17th C.) natural son of Adam of Bonnington. In 1581/2 he witnessed a sasine for his father (recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books). Robert of Burnfoot (d.1612) son of William. His lands were Burnfoot on Teviot, and he should not be confused with Robert of Burnfoot on Ale. In 1585 he succeeded his grandfather Adam in the lands of Over and Nether Newhall. He may be the Robert of Burnfoot for whom Walter of Goldielands and James Gledstains of Cocklaw acted as cautioners in 1590. He may be the ‘Robert alias Rob Scott of Burnefute’ listed (along with William of Burnfoot) among 200 Scotts and associates who stole livestock from Drumelzier and Dreva in 1591/2; his unnamed brothers are also mentioned. He is said to have been at the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. He was probably the Robert of Burnfoot who in 1599 was listed among Scotts and others who were charged to find sureties for ‘observing the King’s peace’; Robert ‘tutor of Burnefute’ was also listed (and may have been associated to Burnfoot on Ale). He is listed among a large number of Scotts and others among ‘pretended tenants’ whom the Baron of Hassendean, James Cunningham, was trying to eject from their lands in 1603. He had at least 3 sons: Adam, who succeeded; Robert, who succeeded his elder brother; and William, tenant in Burnhead. He is probably the ‘Guidman of Burnefute’ listed on the ‘Roll of the Clans’ in about 1590. Robert (16th C.) recorded as ‘Robert Scot in Hawik’ when he was witness to an instrument of sasine for Crook in 1592. William in Hawick and Adam in Ormieston are also mentioned. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Roberts. Robert (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1597 among defendants in cases brought by the English Wardens involving raids by men of Liddesdale. His name is given as ‘Hobb (Robert) Scott called ‘bradowe’’. It is unclear whether his to-name was a nickname or location. Robert (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1599 as ‘tutor of Burnefute’. He was listed among Scotts and others who were charged to find sureties for ‘observing the King’s peace’; Robert of Burnfoot (probably on Teviot) was also listed, suggesting he may have been associated with Burnfoot on Ale. Robert ‘Hobbie’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1599 as ‘Hobbie of Candie’. He was listed among other Scots who Sir Walter of Branxholme declared were ‘his men’ and therefore accepted responsibility for making them answer to justice. It is unclear where ‘Candie’ was (perhaps a transcription error) or if he was the same as another Robert. Robert of Easter Groundisone (16th/17th C.) nephew to Robert of Headshaw according to Capt. Scott of Satchells when he listed him as one of the 24 ‘Pensioners’ of Buccleuch. His grandfather was Walter of Headshaw, but it is unclear what his father’s name was (possibly Walter). Robert ‘Hob’ (16th/17th C.) listed among men of Eskdale, Ewesdale, etc., declared fugitive at a court in Peebles in 1605. He is recorded as ‘Hob Scott of the Laik’, but it is unclear where this might have been. Sir Robert is recorded as ‘Hob Scott of the Laik’, but it is unclear where this might have been. Sir Robert of Thirlestane (c.1558–1627) son of Robert, with his mother being Margaret Scott (either daughter of ‘Wicked Wat’ of Buccleuch or Wat of Harden). He is first recorded in 1568, and Satchells claims he was born in 1566 (although he appears to have reached majority by 1581). During his minority his ‘tutor’ was his uncle Simon of Gamescleuch, while his curators were Sir John Johnstone of that Ilk, Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule and James Gledstains of Cocklaw. In 1578 he and his curators complained that his tutor ‘Sym Scot of Wintirburch’ had taken 2 horses from Thirlestane, harassed his tenants and then forcibly taken possession of the house at Thirlestane; Simon was ordered to restore Thirlestane to him. He is said to have attended the University of St. Andrews along with the young Walter of Buccleuch (and at the same time as the young James VI), and about 1585 accompanied Walter to the site of the old Rankleburn Kirk, where they found some buried tombstones bearing the arms of Buccleuch. He was listed among many Scotts and their allies in a 1581 summons to appear before the Privy Council regarding the feud with the Elliots and Armstrongs. His brother Walter was recorded as witness to a transaction in Selkirk involving Thirlestane in 1581. In 1583/4 he is among the Border Lairds summoned by the Privy Council for advice on preserving peace in Teviotdale and Liddesdale. In 1583/4 he and Sim of Winterburgh were cautioners for John in Hundleshope. He could be the Robert ‘in Cringillis’ who witnessed a bond in 1585 (signed at Selkirk and Havick) settling a feud between the Scotts of Branxholme and the Scotts of Allanhaugh. In 1590 he was purchased the lands of Altrive and Corsecleuch (Selkirkshire) from Alexander Lord Home, his family having been ‘kindly tenants’ there for generations. He was also listed on the 1590 ‘Roll of the Clans’. A confirming charter of 1590 records that he purchased the lands of Crookston in Peeblesshire, on account of a messenger taking refuge there, this being part of a dispute between Cranston and Arthur Scott of Gamescleuch. He gained the lands of Kirkhope in Ettrick and the teinds of Ettrick Kirk in 1594; his eldest son and heir, Robert was also given liferent of these properties of Melrose Abbey. In 1596 he was one of the men consulted by Walter of Buccleuch in organising the rescue of Kinmont Willie, and he accompanied Walter to London to see Elizabeth I in 1597. In 1596/7 the citizens of Peebles complained that he had led a group of Scotts to attack their lands of ‘Kaidmure’; they were all denounced as rebels for failure to appear. Along with his brother Walter he is included in a list of supporters of Scott of Buccleuch in 1599. Also in 1599 he witnessed the bonds (signed at Branxholme) between Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch and the Armstrongs and Elliots of Liddesdale. Additionally in 1599 he was among a list of Scotts who Sir Walter of Branxholme declared were ‘his men’ and therefore accepted responsibility for making them answer to justice; his brother Walter was also listed. In the same year he served as cautioner for Simon of Bonnington and Sir Walter of Branxholme declared that he ‘holds his lands of him’ and was therefore obliged to answer for him. In the early years of the 1600s he and Robert of Haining acted for Sir Walter of Branxholme while he was abroad. In 1602 Gideon Murray of Elibank was surety for him in regard to charges against him by the warden of the middle marches ‘at the instance of the laird of Neutoun, Englishman’; he later refused to enter himself into court or to pay the amount and hence was to be declared as a rebel. Also in 1602 he signed a bond among Border Lairds for keeping the peace. Additionally in 1602 he was denounced for not paying £51 13s 4d for his part of the taxes of Ettrick Forest. His brother Wat was accused of being on a raid in 1602. In 1603 he was among Scotts and others, subordinates of Sir Walter of Buccleuch, who ‘had been put to the horn’ for not paying feu mails for their lands to the Queen’s Chamberlain, with Robert of Haining not entering them in court. In 1604 he sold the lands of Cruxton to William Elliot, Burgess of Peebles. In 1605 he had a bond to enter his tenants (Scotts of Hundleshope and others) for not appearing to answer charges of attacking the lands at ‘Fechane’. He was probably knighted in 1606 and in 1607 was Member of the Scottish Parliament for Selkirkshire, the first elected representative. He was involved in every local quarrel of his day, including helping organise the rescue of Kinmont Willie. He was cautious for several relatives and tenants in 1608 not to harm Archibald ‘of Deiphoip’, and also caution for Sir John Murray of Philiphaugh. There was a feud with the Scotts of Tushielaw, culminating in the death of his brother Walter at the hands of John, son of Walter Scott of Tushielaw in 1609. In 1609 he and his son Robert (and several others) were bonded not to reset Walter of Headshaw and a group of other men, and were later fined for resetting the same men (including his natural son Peter and brother William). In 1609 he also complained against Armstrongs and other men who were troubling him in his lands and vowing to take his life. He witnessed a charter for Scott of Woll in 1609. In 1610 there was a bond of assurance with the Scotts of Tushielaw in order to resolve the feud. That same year he was ordered apprehended since he still had a ‘homing’ for the attack on Peebles in 1596/7. Also in 1610 he and his son had a ‘wadset’ with Robert of Whitslade and another with Robert of Burnfoot and he was cautioner for the Scotts of Whitslade and Satchells that they would not harm Walter in Hawick, called Todshawhill and his associates. In 1612 there was a complaint to the Privy Council that he and his son Sir Robert had not paid former fines and should be apprehended, the Council also asked him and Walter of Tushielaw to appear to resolve the contradictory claims of each family. William Scott, younger of Harden had him and others removed from the lands of Deephope in 1615/16. In 1620 he had a charter for Thirlestane, Ettrickhouse, Ramseycleuch and Scabcleuch from the Commendator of Melrose, as well as another charter for half of the lands of ‘Cringillis’. He and his son Robert were also granted the teinds of the new Kirk of Ettrick.

In 1621 he had 15 sheep stolen from his lands of Eskdalemuir and along with John of Gilmancesleuch and Sir John of Newburgh he promised not to molest the Elphinstones. Also in 1621 he was appointed as Sheriff of Selkirkshire. In the years 1621–3 he was involved with financial bonds with Sir William of Harden, as well as Sir Walter of Whitslade and Walter, Earl of Buccleuch (essentially borrowing money using his lands as collateral). In 1622 he was fined for not being on the jury for the case involving Turnbulls of Belses etc. He was recorded in a disposition of 1623 to his chief the Earl of Buccleuch. Also in 1623 he was one of the representatives of Tweeddale and Selkirk on the Parliamentary Commission to discuss the export of Scottish wool. In 1624 he rented Gamescleuch from Sir William Scott of Harden. Also in 1624 his lands of Crookston were ‘apprised for debt’, and he also sold an ‘annualrent’ there. In 1625 he was one of the men who broke out of the jail in Selkirk (the others being Gavin Elliot of Brugh, George Davidson of Kames, Thomas Little of Meikledale and his servant John ‘Skailis’), breaking the walls on 2 sides, his prison bed being found to have 2 plow blades and ‘twain greit craw-irnes’; he must have been in his 60s by then! It appears that his estates were resigned to Sir William of Harden, and later inherited by his nephew Patrick of Tandlawhill, although there was dispute for the next century with the descendants of his son (with his 2nd wife) Sir John. In about 1626 he appears to have lost the lands of Thirlestane, Ramseycleuch and Scabcleuch (at least temporarily) to John Fisher, perhaps because of non-payment of loans to Scott of Harden. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir John Cranston of that Ilk sometime before 1594. In 1602 he secondly married Katherine, daughter of Sir Alexander Jardine of Applegirth. His sons were Sir Robert, Sir John and James. John was listed in the last testament of the Earl of Bucceuch in 1633 owing rental money to Mary Lyon (wife of Sir Robert of Crookston, i.e. his sister-in-law). In 1616 his daughter Grizel married Walter of Tushielaw without his permission. Other daughters were probably Jean, who married Robert of Satchells, and Susannah, who married Sir Walter of Whitslade. He may also have been the Robert who inspired the story told of a 2nd wife of Thirlestane being involved in the jealous murder of her stepson (this would be Katherine or Catherine Jardine and her stepson, Sir Robert). He is easily confused with his son, also Sir Robert (often called ‘of Crookston’), who appears to have pre-deceased him in 1619. In 1621 he was served heir to his son Robert’s lands of Gamescleuch, Ettrickside, Bowrhowe and the lands of the Kirk o the Lowes. Also in 1621 he was appointed to a commission to apprehend the men who killed Robert of Gilmancesleuch. His wife Catherine Jardine held lands of Davington and others ‘in liferent’ after his death, recorded in 1627 in a document with Walter, Earl of Bucceuch. His son John was served as his heir in 1642. Robert ‘Sim’s Hob’ (16th/17th C.) referred to as ‘in Hawick’ when he was witness to a discharge of 1605 between ‘Lang Sandie’ Scott and William Scott of Howpasley. His father was presumably Simon. Probably the same ‘Robert Scot in Hawik, callit Symmies Habie’ was recorded in 1611 when he failed to appear in court at Jedburgh; John in Brieryyards was fined for his non-appearance. Robert (16th/17th C.) brother of William of Burnfoot. George Langlands of that Ilk was cautioned for him in 1610, that he not harm William in Hawick (called of Todshawhill) and his associates. His brother and several other Scotts were also involved in this dispute. He was also mentioned in 1612 as brother of William of Burnfoot on Ale (along with Walter, another brother) in the ongoing dispute with the sons of Francis, Earl of Bothwell. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Roberts. Rev. Robert (c.1577–1629) early Regent of the University of Glasgow. He was admitted to the Collegiate Charge in 1604 and moved to St. Mungo’s in 1616. He was one of 42 ministers who signed a Protestation for the Liberties of the Kirk in 1617. He was made a Burgess and Guild Brother of Glasgow in 1616. He served as Rector of Glasgow University 1618, 1619 and 1621–26. He was summoned in 1620 for not conforming to the Articles of Perth and was appointed as one of 2 deputies to attend court regarding the affairs of the Church in 1627. He married Esther Fleming, widow of George Geddes of Edmestoun Mains and secondly married Agnes, 3rd daughter of Robert Hamilton of Goslington. His children were: John, recorded in 1616; Robert; Laurence; William; Margaret; and Lillias, who married James Scott, Provost of Irvine, who was made a Burgess of Glasgow in 1623 through marrying his daughter. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. Robert in Northhouse (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1607 when Hector Turnbull of Stonedige had a complaint against him before the Privy Council. He may be the ‘Hob Scot’, brother to Will ‘called of Northhouse’, named along with his brother, when Gilbert Elliott of Horsleyhill (and later of Stobs) complained to the Privy Council that they attacked him in Hawick, ‘with drawn swords’; Gilbert later complained that they had not responded and requested that they should be apprehended, although it is unclear what happened next. He was ‘of Northhouse’ in 1611 when he was part of the assize at the Justice Court in Jedburgh. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1617 as ‘Hob Scot in the Howfurd’ and brother of Michael, both being ‘suster sones’ to Walter Scott of Harden (‘Auld Wat’). Lady Bonnington complained that they and others came to Newhouse, where they undermined the walls, causing the house to fall, and the next night attacked a nurse of Lady Bonnington’s household. They were also said to have later ‘trampit and tred the young ones under thair feit’ and injured the udder of their only milk cow. It is unclear if he was directly related to the Scotts ‘of’ Howford, or who his mother was, but presumably she was a sister of Auld Wat. Robert (16th/17th C.) tenant in Nether Southfield in in 1628 when he was on a list of men accused by the Earl of Buccleuch of chopping down his trees at Todshawhaugh or Trinitylands. He may have been related to later Scotts of the Southfield area. Robert of Howshaw (16th/17th C.) said to have headed the funerary procession for Walter, Earl of Buccleuch in 1634. He rode fully armed, carrying a small banner of the Earl’s colours on the point of his lance. The account comes from Chamber’s Domestic Annals of Scotland. However, it seems likely that ‘Howshaw’ is an error for some different place, since this Robert is otherwise unknown. Robert of Satchells (16th/17th C.) probably son of James, who was 4th son of John, younger of Synton. He is said to have been involved in the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. In 1602 he signed a bond among Border Lairds for keeping the peace (transcribed in one version being ‘of Stitschellis’). He had a charter from John, Archbishop of Glasgow for the lands of Satchells in the Barony of Lilliesleaf in 1607, and a confirming charter from the King in 1609. In 1609 he also had a charter for Dodbank in Selkirkshire, which his father James, and others before him had occupied. In 1610 Sir Robert of Thirlestane acted as caution for him, that he not harm Walter Scott in Hawick (called of Todshawhill) and his associates; he was named along with Walter of Whitslade and his son Thomas, suggesting a close link between these families at that time. He is one of the signatories of the 1612 bond to keep peace on the Border. It appears that he lost the Satchells estate, probably through a loan, and moved to a small farm in Eskdalemuir. He may have died soon afterwards, since Jean (presumably his widow) was involved with the sheep-slaughter incident of 1616 along with Lady Scott of Howplesay. In 1617 he was among the supporters of the Scotts of Harden mentioned in a complaint against them heard at the Privy Council; however, it is unclear if he was already deceased at this time. He is probably also the Robert who complained at the Privy Council in 1619 about men from Hindhope cutting down trees on his land at Dodhead. His wife was probably Jean, daughter of Sir Robert of Thirlestane. He was probably the father of Capt. Walter the poet and family historian, and also William. Additional children may have included Robert, referred to as younger of Satchells in the 1620s and John, mentioned in a deed of 1655. He may be the ‘Robert Scot of Satchels’ who was among the 24 ‘pensioners’ of Buccleuch, having ‘Southinrig for his Service’, according to Capt. Walter’s postscript. Keith Scott suggests he died about 1629 (but then Lady Satchells would not have been a widow in 1616); he also suggests there are 2 generations called Robert, so the situation is quite unclear. Robert of Aikwood (d.1615) son of Robert of Aikwood and Marion Cranston. Keith Scott suggests he was son of William, but that conflicts with R.C. Reid’s 1950s genealogy, which is supported by transactions made in Selkirk about 1580, which probably involved his father Robert. He may be the same man as Robert of Bowhill, eldest son of Robert of Aikwood. In 1581/2 he was son of the deceased Robert of Aikwood when his mother Marion Cranston made her step-daughter Isabel Home ‘cessioner’ to recover the 700 merks that he owed her mother. He also witnessed a sasine for Adam of Bonnington in 1581/2. He signed the bond with the other Scotts in 1589. In 1590 Patrick Murray of Falahill was his cautioner that he would not harm William Douglas, Earl of Angus or his dependants. He witnessed a deed in 1592. Also in 1592 he signed a caution for the good behaviour of John in Foulshiels. He had the present tower at Oakwood built in 1602; a dressed stone there bears that date, as well as the initials ‘R.S.’ and ‘L.M.’ (perhaps a Murray) and a crescent for the Scotts of Harden. In 1602 he signed a bond among Border Lairds for keeping the peace. In 1607 he was summoned before the Selkirk Presbytery, accused of perjury against the minister of Selkirk and in 1614 was cited by the minister for ‘drinking during the time of sermon’. In 1611 he was caution for Philip of Dryhope. He was witness to the bond for keeping peace on the Border in 1612. He was succeeded by his son Andrew in 1615, in the southside of Bowhill, half of Ker-shope and the ‘Peile-Quarter’ in Belses. Philip of Aikwood (who succeeded Andrew) may have been another son. He may also have been the ‘goodman of Aikwood’ whose sons James and William are listed in 1618 among men of the Selkirk area accused of illegally carrying guns. Robert ‘Hob the Lonkie’ (16th/17th C.) Hawick resident mentioned in a murder trial of 1612, after a man apparently hung himself in the Kirk steeple in 1610. His nickname may be a transcription error for ‘Loukie’, meaning lucky or fortunate. Bailie Robert ‘Hob’ of Alton (16th/17th C.) Magistrate in Hawick. It is unclear how he was related to the other Scotts of Alton. The Robert of Auldtown whose son Adam is listed among those implicated in the slaughter of Lord Maxwell and his men at Dryfe Sands in 1593 may have been his direct ancestor; it is possible he was son of Adam referred to as ‘vocat de Altoun’, who was younger brother of Walter of Alton. He was Bailie in 1603, 1612 (at the same time as ‘Marion’s Hob’) and 1619, and possibly other years, since it is hard to distinguish the various Roberts. He may be the ‘Hob Scot, bailie of Hawik’, who was cautioner for Jamie Chisholme at court in Jedburgh in 1611. He was involved with the incident in 1612 in which the Bailies imposed a stent and market tax without seeking the permission of the Baron, thereby testing the legal authority of Douglas of Drumlanrig within Hawick. An extract of his sasine of 1615 is in the National Archives, this having been copied from the Protocol Book of Gilbert Watt (Hawick’s later Town Clerk). In 1620 he is recorded paying back a loan made to Thomas Rutherford, brother of John of Hunthill. He was also a ‘personne of assyse’ in the Commissioners’ Court of 1622 and 1623. He is recorded in 1627–29 claiming a debt against the Earl of Buccleuch, where he is described as ‘some-time bailie in Hawick’. ‘Robert, bailie in Hawick, called of Auldtown’ is also mentioned in a dispute with William Douglas of Drumlanrig relating to a bond of 1601. The later Robert of Alton (who died around 1650) was probably his brother Walter’s son. Bailie Robert (16th/17th C.) brother of William called ‘of the Know’, with George and David also being brothers. In 1608 they were bound over not to harm Thomas Abernethy, minister of Hawick (the nature of the dispute being unclear), and he was similarly bound. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Bailies of the same name. They may also have been related to John Scott, Bailie of Selkirk, who acted as surety for them. Bailie Robert (16th/17th C.) Magistrate in 1610, along with Adam Scott, when Jock Elliot died while imprisoned in the Kirk steeple. Elliot’s wife took the Bailies and others to court for his death, but the decision was that it was a suicide. He was one of the men called to give evidence at the trial. He is probably the same as one of the other contemporary Bailie Roberts, but it is unclear which one. Sir...
Robert of Haining (16th/17th C.) son of Robert. In 1608 he is ‘younger of Haining’ when he was part of a group of men complained about by Sir Andrew Ker of Heiton, saying that they came to his lands of Selkirk Mill and ‘violentlie caist out the dam-heid furth thairof’. They returned with a group of Scotts, Murrays, Elliots, Gledstains, etc., threatened the millers and smashed equipment. He and James ‘Corsane’ were imprisoned, with 2 others being asked to appear later. In 1610 he was ‘younger of Hanying’ when along with his wife ‘Elspeth’ Murray he was involved in a dispute with the Lord of Buccleuch over ownership of Haining mill. He succeeded his father in 1611. In 1612 he was one of the witnesses called by the Privy Council in an attempt to resolve the feud between the Scotts of Tushielaw and Thirlestane. In 1614 he gave sasine of some lands in Selkirk to James Cowan. In 1617 he was among a list of Border Lairds denounced as rebels for not appearing before the Privy Council. In 1621 he was appointed to a commission to apprehend the men who killed Robert of Gilmancesleuch. He was removed from the Earl of Home’s lands at Hartwoodburn in 1622. About 1625 he sold Haining, but was still known as ‘of Haining’ afterwards. Along with his wife Elizabeth Murray and his father Robert (and mother Janet Scott), he had a charter for Haining Mill recorded as 1629 (but this may be an error). He is probably the same Sir Robert of Haining who carried the arms of Scott of Buccleuch in the Earl’s funeral procession in Hawick in 1634. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Patrick Murray of Falahill and had at least 2 sons: Sir Robert, who succeeded; and Walter, portor of Guilan. Bailie Robert ‘Marion’s Hob’ or ‘Marion’s Rab’ (16th/17th C.) Magistrate in late 1612, along with ‘Hob of Alton’, when the authority of the Baron was challenged. He was also Bailie in 1622, 1623 and 1626. He served as a juror at the Commissioners’ Court of 1622 and 1623 when he was ‘laitt bailye of Hawik’. His servitor, William Johnstone, is recorded in the trial for the claimed murder of John Elliot in Hawick in 1610. He was probably one of the 2 Bailie Roberts listed among the 9 men charged with performing a valuation of the lands in the Parish of Hawick. He could be the Bailie Robert who acted as cautioner for James Henderson in ‘Catheuch’ in 1611. His mother was presumably Marion. It is possible his brother was the contemporary ‘Marion’s Geordie’. Bailie Robert (16th/17th C.) Magistrate in Hawick in 1614. He is presumably different from ‘Hob of Alton’ and ‘Marion’s Hob’, but could be the Robert ‘of Westport’ recorded in documents at the same time; the proliferation of men of the same name makes this confusing. There was also a Robert (with no nickname) who was Bailie in 1627, and a ‘laitt bailye of Hawik’ when he was a ‘personne of assyze’ acting in Dumfries Circuit Court in 1622. Robert of Salenside (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1614, along with his kinsman John Scott of Kirkhouses, when he was summoned before the Presbytery to answer for charges of murder. He must have been related to Andrew of Salensis, who is recorded in 1613 (possibly his brother or elder son, but if so he was probably dead by 1621 when Thomas of Salenside is recorded). Robert (16th/17th C.) son of James in Whitslade and grandson of John, younger of Synton. In 1580 he had a marriage contract with Elizabeth, sister of Robert in Aikwood, with the consent of his deceased father’s brothers George in Synton and William in Huntly. He agreed to give his future wife liferent of Dodhead if he should die before her and also agreed to ratify the contract when he reached the age of 21. Also in 1580 he was recorded as son of the deceased James of Whitslade when he witnessed a transaction for Robert of Aikwood. Scott of Satchells lists him among the men who were involved in the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. It is suggested that he is son of Robert of Whitslade and brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade; however, this appears to be muddled. Bailie Robert (16th/17th C.) Magistrate from Hawick. In 1627 he and James Gledstains were Bailies when there was a series of records with the Privy Council involving men from Hawick who had been selected to be sent to the wars in Germany; he was fined 300 merks and had to find caution for a further £1000 in order to make him produce the named men. He is surely one of the two Bailie Roberts listed in 1627 among 9 men charged with performing a valuation of the lands in the Parish of Hawick; he was one of the men who refused to accept some of the items in the valuation, presumably because of a dispute over either the Kirland, Ladyland or Trinitylands. He was probably the same as one of the other contemporary Roberts. Robert of Bowhill (16th/17th C.) son of Robert, who he succeeded in 1625. However, there appears to be confusion among Roberts of Aikwood and Bowhill. He carried the arms of Douglas of Drumlanrig in the funeral procession of the Earl of Buccleuch in Hawick in 1634. He had 2 sons, Andrew and James, both of whom succeeded to Bowhill. His son James became a merchant's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1642. In 1648 this same son James, a merchant in Edinburgh, was 'bailie in that part' when he granted sasine of Broadmeadows from Andrew of Broadmeadows to William of Tushielaw; the Scotts of Bowhill were distantly related to the Scotts of Tushielaw. Robert of Tushielaw (d.1632) eldest son of Sir Walter of Tushielaw, brother of James and John, who were both at the rescue of Kinmont Willie. In 1599 his father Walter was surety for himself, as well as him and his brothers James and John, to 'observe the King's peace'. He signed a bond among Border Lairds, along with his father in 1602. He was 'apparent of Tuischelaw' in 1604 when he acted as bailie for a sasine of the Regality of Melrose for lands in Ettrick. In 1612 he signed the bond for keeping peace on the Border. In 1617 he was 'apparent of Tuschenlaw' when his son Walter was listed among Scotts and others who freed Patrick Porteous of Hawkshaw and attacked his captors. He was described as 'fear of Tuschenlaw' and lawful son of Sir Walter of Tushielaw in a charter of 1618 in which he received lands at 'Wairdlawrig' in Selkirkshire from John, Lord Hay of Yester. In 1619 he was 'of Tuschenlaw' when his brother John witnessed a bond for Thomas Turnbull in Spittal-on-Rule. In about 1620 he had a charter from the Commendator of Melrose for Glenkerry, Midgehope and Phaup. However, these must have been effectively mortgaged that time, since also in 1620 the lands of 'Glencarie' and Midgehope, held in 'wadset' from him, were given by Gilbert Elliott of Stobs to his youngest son James. He was 'of Tuschenlaw' in 1620 when his brother John witnessed a bond between Thomas Turnbull, tenant of Spittal-on-Rule and Robert Pringle. He was succeeded by his son Walter in 1633, and he in turn was succeeded by the younger son, William of Fawdshope. Robert of Shielwood (16th/17th C.) son of Robert and brother of Robert of Girnwood. He had a charter for Shielwood in the Parish of Ashkirk in 1609. He is mentioned in various documents in the period 1606–26. He was Robert ‘in Schelliswoid’ on the 1616 jury that convicted Jock Scott ‘the Suckler’ of sheep stealing. In 1617 he was one of several supporters of the Scotts of Harden who Lady Bonnington complained had attacked her family (as part of a feud between the Harden and Bonnington Scotts); his brother Walter was also listed. In 1629 he was appointed as tutor to Robert and Walter, sons of his deceased brother, Walter of Girnwood. He is recorded in 1632 when his eldest son Walter leased part of the lands of Belses. He married Margaret, who re-married Robert Scott of Hartwoodnymeus after his death. He was succeeded by Walter and had another son, Robert. He may have had a daughter Isobel who married Walter Scott of Burnfoot’s brother Francis. Robert (16th/17th C.) brother of Walter of Whitehaugh. In 1610 he was part of a petition, along with several local Langlands and Scotts (including his brother Walter), to have hornings lifted and penalties reduced. His cautioner was George Langlands of that Ilk, and one record seems to state that he was uncle of George (although this may be a transcription confusion). He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Robert's. Robert of Hassendean (d.bef. 1669) recorded in a 'letter of apprising' (i.e. transferring heritable lands to clear debts) of 1604, with 'Dedrig, Easter and Wester Cappitrig' passing to Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch. He was probably a son or grandson of David of Hassendean, who was killed around 1564. He was succeeded by his son Adam in 1669, but may have died earlier. He may be the same man as Robert of Over Hassendean. He may have been the Laird listed on the 'Roll of the Clans' in about 1590. And he may be the Robert of Hassendean who was said to have been in the party which rescued Kinmont Willie in 1596. He may be the Laird of Hassendean who in 1699 was listed among Scotts and others who were charged to find sureties for ‘observing the King’s peace’. He may be the Scott Hassendean (no forename given) who in 1617 was among Border Lairds who renewed their bond for keeping the peace. Sir Robert of Crookston (d.1619) eldest son of Sir Robert of Thirlestane and his 1st wife, who was Margaret, daughter of Sir John Cranston of that Ilk (however, it is hard to separate father and son, and some accounts confound them in a single generation). He appears to have been born before 1594, when his name first appears. In that year he was eldest son and heir of Robert of Thirlestane, when they were both granted the teinds and vicarage of Ettrick Kirk for their lifetimes. Before he succeeded his father he was known as ‘of Crucston’ or ‘Cruikstane’. He acquired Gamescleuch in 1605 and in 1607 (when he was ‘younger’ of Thirlestane) he had a charter for the lands of Bourhope (or ‘Bowerhope’) adjacent to St. Mary’s Loch. He is probably the younger Laird of Thirlestane (first name not given) who was on a list of Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1708. He was involved in the bond of 1609 (along with his father and several others) not to reset Walter of Headshaw and other men, and the action by Walter of Tushielaw to fine them for resetting the same men. He was knighted about 1612. His memorial stone inscribed 'S / R S MEMENTO MORE 1619' is in Ettrick Kirk (although it is possible this was his father’s, and the next 8 years refer to incidents in his life). His life may be the basis of the story told (first by the Ettrick Shepherd and later by Sir Bernard Burke) of a 2nd wife at Thirlestane (presumably Katherine Jardine) having her step-son murdered so that her own son could inherit the estates, but when found out her husband had her locked up for a year while his eldest son lay in state and he spent the family fortunes in lavish feasting. It is unclear what truth there is in the story, but in 1617 he married Mary Lyon, daughter of the Earl of Strathmoore, and died without issue; Mary Lyon remarried to Robert Semple of Beltrees, and in 1633 was named in the will of the Earl of Buccleuch being owed money through John, ‘son and air to the said vmquhile Sir Robert of Thirlestane’ (presumably her brother-in-law). His younger brother Sir John (son of Katherine Jardine of Appleginth) did not succeed either, the titles going to their cousin Patrick of Tanlawhill who effectively purchased the Thirlestane estate. In 1621 his father, Sir Robert of Thirlestane was served heir to his lands of Gamescleuch, Ettrickside, Bowerehope and the lands of the Kirk o the Lowes; this strongly suggests that he was deceased by 1621. He is the ‘Sir Robert of Cruikstane’ who is recorded as deceased in the period 1649–77 when his brother and heir John was involved in a dispute with the Scotts of Buccleuch over lands in Eskdale. John is described as the son and heir of Sir Robert of Thirlestane in a 1632 document involving the lands of Alltrive and Corsecleuch (so he was certainly already deceased by then). He is said to have left an illegitimate son, Peter, who was living in 1609. Robert ‘Geordie’s Hobie’ (16th/17th C.) one of 3 Hawick men acquitted in 1621 of carrying hagbuts and pistols in public. They specifically were accused of having ‘schoit and slayne thairwith greit noberis of thair nighbouris propper dowis and wyldfoull of all kyndis, and useis the same for thair particular revenge upoun all sic personis aganis whom they beare querrer’. The other 2 were Allan Deans and Robert Armstrong. His father was presumably George. Robert (16th/17th C.) illegitimate son of Arthur of Newburgh. He was listed in 1608 among relatives and tenants of Sir Robert of Thirlestane who were bound over not to harm Archibald ‘of Dephoip’ or his sons. Robert of Gilmanscleuch (d. bef. 1621) son of James. He was called ‘Truth’ and was said to be one of the men who helped rescue Kinmont Willie in 1596. He married Bessie Naysmith and his sons were: John, who succeeded; William; Gideon; and Adam, tenant at Shaw’s who was father of Francis. He was killed by John Elphinstone in Henderson and his brother David, who were declared rebels in 1620. In the following year a commission of Scotts was formed to apprehend the 2 men, the case being brought by his widow and sons William and Gideon. He is probably the Robert of Gilmanscleuch whose son Adam was served heir to his other son William in 1647. Robert of Westport (16th/17th C.) one of the ‘personnes of assyze’ representing Hawick at the Justice Court of 1622 in Dumfries as well as in Jedburgh (along with another Robert), and in 1623 (along with Robert of Alton and ‘Marion’s Hob’). It is unclear whether this is one of the other men of the same name, but he was clearly distinct from Robert of Alton and Bailie Robert, since all 3 sat on the a-suprise at the Justice Court in Jedburgh in 1622. He may be related to later Westport Scotts, e.g. father of the Walter recorded in the 1650s and 1670s. Robert of Burnhead (d.1609) probably eldest son of John of Burnhead. He is probably the Robert of Burnhead who, along with Robert of Burnfoot (ptobably on Ale), was in 1579/80 involved in a case against Thomas Dalgleish and Simon of Gamescleuch over the murder of David Dalgleish in Harehead; restitution was being sought from the pair, with their arbitrators being William of Huntly and Robert, Burgess of Hawick. He signed the Scott clan bond in 1589. He was among those listed in 1603 as men that the Baron, James Cunningham, was trying to eject from their lands. He was succeeded by his son William and had 2 other sons, one of them probably Adam (who married Bessie Langlands) and the 3rd son probably the Robert who is said to have settled in Holland and died in 1609 (unless this is confusion with his own death). Robert of Headshaw (16th/17th C.) eldest son of Walter of Headshaw, whom he succeeded before 1593. He may have been the Laird of ‘Eidschaw’ listed on the ‘Roll of the Clans’ in about 1590. He may be the Robert of Headshaw (unless this is an error for Walter) who is recorded being held in ward in Edinburgh Castle in 1581, with Paul Doig acting as caution for the pledge of Walter Scott of Goldielands, that he would answer for the hurting of Martin Elliot of Braeildie. He is probably the Robert ‘in Headshaw’ who had a charter of Headshaw and Easter Essenside in 1593 (incorrectly transcribed as 1553) from Ludovic, Duke of Lennox. Scott of Satchells lists him among the men on the Carlisle raid to rescue Kinmont Willie in 1596. He is recorded in a series of writs of the lands of Headshaw ‘disposed’ to Andrew Hay in the period 1593–1624; his wife was Elizabeth and his son Robert. In 1609 he was caution for Sir Robert of Thirlestane in a bond for not resetting Walter of Headshaw (surely a relative, possibly his brother) and others. In 1610 he had a bond (along with Walter, fiar of Whit slade for Sir Robert of Thirlestane) not to harm Walter of Tushielaw and his sons. And in another 1610 bond he was surety for Robert ‘of Well’ for the same thing. In 1617 he was among Border Lairds who renewed their bond for keeping the peace. He was also cautioner, along with Sir Walter Scott of Whit slade, for a bond involving the Hays of Smithfield in 1619. In 1620 he was Robert ‘elder, called of Heidshaw’ when he witnessed a charter of Goldielands for Walter, Earl of Buccleuch. In 1622 he had an agreement with the Countess of Home for leasing Hartwoodburn for a year, possibly longer. He is probably the Robert who purchased the estate of Whiteaugh from his sister Janet’s son Walter. He is also probably the Robert of Headshaw whose ‘brother-son’ (i.e. nephew) was Robert of Easter Groundistone, listed by Scott of Satchells as one of the ‘Pensioners’ of the house of Buccleuch. He had sons: Robert, who appears not to have succeeded to the lands, since the estate was sold first; and Francis. Walter, brother of Robert ‘of Hirdschaw’ was recorded in 1621. Walter and James, two brothers of the younger Robert of Headshaw are recorded in 1627, and so were presumably his sons also.

Robert of Bonnington (d.bef. 1624) eldest son and heir of Simon. Together with his father he had ‘liferent’ of the lands of ‘Ernescleugh’ and Singlie in 1593, confirmed in 1607. He was succeeded by his uncle John. Robert (16th/17th C.) progenitor of the Scotts of Horsleyhill, whose genealogy is given by Scott of Satchells, and called there ‘Portioner and Bailie of Hawick’. His father was William, said to be second son to Walter, Laird of ‘Midgap’, who was grandson of Adam of Tushielaw. It seems more likely that he was son of William of Midgehope, who was grandson of William of Tushielaw and great-grandson of Adam of Tushielaw. He may be the same man as one of the Bailie Roberts recorded in Hawick in the early 1600s. His son William may have been the first to be called Laird of Horsleyhill.

Note there appears to be a much earlier Scott of Horsleyhill family, who are presumably not directly related. Bailie Robert (16th/17th C.) son of ‘Watis Jok’, so presumably his father was John and his grandfather Walter. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Bailies. He is recorded in a sasine of 1610, along with his wife Helen Turnbull, for a ‘tenement’ in the south side of the Kirkwynd, which had been resigned by George Turnbull, tenant in Howay, brother of Hector Turnbull of Bornhills. The land was specifically described as being between Nichol’s Croft (roughly the Village), a garden of Robert Dickson, a tenement belonging to the Hendersons and the Kirkwynd itself. Robert (d.bef. 1641) Burgess and notary in Selkirk, recorded as writer of documents in the period 1602–30 relating to Andrew Riddell of that Ilk and Andrew Scott of Wemyss. In about 1618 he was listed among men who might act as witnesses to the illegal use of hagbuts and pistols. He was deceased by 1641, when his son Thomas became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh. Robert (17th C.) tenant at Harwood in the Rule valley. He was witness to a sasine of 1631 for the lands of Harwood and Hawthornside. Robert of Dryhope (d.bef. 1633) probably son of William. He is recorded in 1632 in an assignation for a bond, and in 1633 for non-payment. He appears to be already deceased in 1633 when he is mentioned in a contract over the lands of ‘Evillane’, with the consent of James Scott of Hagbrae (presumably a near relative). However, he could be the Robert ‘of Drayvpe’ who carried the arms of Hamilton of Clydesdale in the funeral procession for the Earl of Buccleuch in 1634. He was probably succeeded by his brother Walter. Robert (17th C.) servant of Sir John of Scotstarvit. He was made a Burgess of Glasgow (gratis) in 1630. Robert (17th C.) had a charter for the lands of Brieryyards and Broadlee in 1637, with a confirmation in the name of Charles I. It is unclear to which branch of the family he belonged, and how he was related to the later John of Brieryyards. Sir Robert of Haining (17th C.) son of Sir Robert. Although his father had sold off the Haining estate, he still had the designation. He served with the 2nd Earl of Buccleuch in 1643; in that same year he was made a Burgess and Guild Brother of Glasgow (gratis), along with Earl Francis and the Earl’s brother David. Also in 1643 he was witness for a charter granted by Robert of Burnfoot on Teviot (d.bef. 1667) 2nd son of Robert. He succeeded his elder brother Adam. He is recorded along with other tenants of Over and Nether Newhalls in a precept of warning issued by Walter, Lord Scott of Buccleuch in 1625. He is also recorded in 1638 and 1639 when he received the lands of Rottenrow in Hundalee from John Rutherford prior to marrying Anne Rutherford, daughter of John and Isobel Bennet (this was explicitly ‘Burnfutt near Tiviot’, rather than the one in Ale Water, which is easy to confuse in this period). He was succeeded by his son Walter.

Robert of Whitslade (d.1644) eldest son of Sir Walter, from whom he succeeded in 1628. He was served heir to his father in 1633 and his grandfather Walter in 1635. In 1637 he had a decree of adjudication against John, son of Sir Robert of Thirlestane over the lands of Bourhope, followed by a decree of appraising in 1643. He signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick. In 1638 he represented Selkirk in Parliament in 1639–41 and was also made Parliamentary Convenor for the Selkirkshire War Committee in 1643. In 1641 he was one of the Roxburghshire heritors who signed a letter to the Privy Council relating to the raising of levies for sending troops to Ireland. He was served heir to his father Walter’s lands of ‘Schorthope’ and Ettrickhouse in 1643. In 1643 he was recorded as owner of lands in Ashkirk (valued at £243 10s), as well as Salensis (£116), Kirkhouse (£143) and Ashkirk Mill (£84). He was also listed in 1643 as owner of lands in Hassendean Parish, valued at £214 10s (which were owned by William Chisholme of Stirches by 1678) and Hermiston in Lilliesleaf Parish, valued at £130 (which were owned by William Johnstone by 1663). He married ‘Holland’s Jean’, natural daughter of Walter Scott, 1st Earl of Buccleuch. His children included: Walter, baptised in 1636; Francis, baptised in 1643; Mary; and Margaret, who in 1647 was served heir to his lands at Ettrickhouse (although these later went to her uncle Thomas), and married John Scott of Langhope. His 2 sons must have died in infancy. He died at the Battle of Marston Moor, probably fighting on the same side as Cromwell. He was succeeded by his brother Sir Walter (who died fighting against Cromwell) in 1645 and then his brother Thomas. His death is the subject of the verse in Caw’s Poetical Museum (1784), probably written by Capt. Scott of Satchells, entitled ‘Lines on the Death of Robert Scott, Esq., of Whitslade’, although in fact the contents focus more on the later death of his brother Thomas. Robert of Burnfoot in Ale (d.bef. 1669) son of Walter Scott of Burnfoot. He is recorded in a document of 1632 along with John, son of Sir Robert of Thirlestane, relating to the lands of Altrieve and Corsecleuch in Selkirkshire. Note that this is Burnfoot in the Ale valley (although it is easy to confuse him with the nearly contemporary Robert of Burnfoot on Teviot). He was served heir to his father in 1641. He is recorded paying £400 in Ashkirk Parish according to the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. He is probably the Robert of Burnfoot recorded in 1666 in a list of landowners in Hassendean Parish. He had at least 2 sons: Walter, who succeeded; and Francis, who married Isobel Scott, and to whom Scott of Satchells addressed one of his dedications. He probably had two other sons, William who became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1666 and George who became a surgeon’s apprentice there in 1668. He may be the Robert of Burnfoot recorded paying the land tax in Ashkirk Parish in 1678 (even although perhaps he was deceased by then). Robert (17th C.) described as the heir apparent of Satchells in 1622–25 when he was involved in a court action with George Scott (brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade) over the lands of Dodbank in Ettrick. He was probably a son of Robert and father of Capt. Walter (of family history fame), although this is not certain. Presumably the same Robert was also the ‘zunger of Satchellis’ who signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. He may be the Scott of Satchells (first name not given) listed in the inventory of the deceased Walter Earl of Buccleuch in 1633, when he was owed for rental of the lands of ‘Dodheid’. He may be the Robert of Satchells recorded in 1643 when his lands of Satchells (in Lilliesleaf Parish) were valued at £200, and also his lands of ‘Cringills’ at £156. He is probably the Robert ‘of Satscheill’ who is recorded in 1653 when his son and heir apparent Walter had a bond not to harm the Bailies of Selkirk. Robert of Alton (d.bef. 1653) eldest son of Walter of Alton. He was probably nephew of the ‘Hob of Alton’ who was Bailie in Hawick. He succeeded his father in about 1638, the year that he signed the ‘Confessions’ of Faith’ in Hawick. In 1643 he is recorded... as owner of lands in Hassendean Parish, valued at £474; based on who owned these later, they were Alton, Knowetownhead and Tandlaw. His son William ‘younger of Alton’ died before him. He was already deceased in 1653 when his daughters Margaret, Bessie and Agnes were served ‘heirs portioners’ to Robert of the East Mains of Hassendean, their ‘foir grandsherr’ (either great-grandfather or great-great-grandfather). Presumably the lands of Alton passed to one of them, who married another Scott, since Scotts (perhaps from the Gorrenberry branch) held the lands until about 1742. It is possible he was the ‘yngquhill Robert Scott of Anldtoun Crofts’ (if Alton and Alton Croft were sometimes confused) mentioned in the 1651 will of Francis, Earl of Buccleuch when his eldest son (name unfortunately left blank) was granted 200 merks yearly. His wife may have been Margaret Turnbull, who was recorded as ‘relict of Alton’ in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls, when she jointly with James Scott of Whitslade paid tax on £414 for lands in Hassendean Parish. Robert of Goldielands (17th C.) Bailie of Hawick (along with William Scott) at the time of the signing of the 1638 Covenant. His name appears as ‘R. Scott’, alongside Walter of Goldielands, suggesting that he might have been a brother or son of Walter (although there may be confusion of 2 R. Scotts here); this Walter was meant to have been the last of the distinct Lairds of Goldielands. Also in 1638 (in the first main entry in the Town Book) he was recorded as being ‘callit of Goldielands’ when listed as one of the Bailies at the meeting for choosing the new Bailies and Officers; he was again chosen as a Bailie for the year 1638/9. He is probably the Robert who signed the Act of Bailies and Council of 1640 (his name appearing just after the 2 Bailies). He was elected to the Council in late 1648 and was also a Bailie in the 1640s. He may be the same as the Robert who was ‘brother natural of the said Sir Walter Scott’ in the charter of Goldielands in 1620. Another possibility is that he is the same as Robert of Glack, who inherited part of the Goldielands estate through marriage. Robert of Woll (d.1640s) eldest son of Walter of Woll. In 1617 he was appointed guardian to his half-brother and sister, George and Katherine. Probably the same Robert ‘of Woll’ had a bond in 1610 (with Robert of Headshaw as surety) not to harm Walter of Tushielaw and his sons. He is probably the Scott ‘of the Well’ who in 1617 was among Border Lairds who renewed their bond for keeping the peace. His wife Rachel complained about his behaviour to the Privy Council several times in 1631 and 1632, where he was described as ‘some time of the Well’. He was ordered to hand over all his assets to his wife and to allow her to cohabit with him, but instead went off to England with Jean, daughter of the deceased Andrew Ker of Graden, and remained with her ‘in the filthie cryme of adulterie all the last harvest’. His wife apparently stated she would forgive him if he would return to her and their eight children, ‘quhairof foure are so young and weake that they cannot putt on thair cloathes’. Meanwhile he kept Jean Ker ‘in ane oasterlerns’ until she had his child, and sold his house (probably not Woll) and belongings, making his wife and children ‘brought to beggary’. He is probably the Robert ‘of Wallis’ whose son George became a surgeon’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1640 and whose son Robert became an apothecary’s apprentice in 1641. Also in 1641 he is ‘of the Woll’ when his son James became a saddeler’s apprentice in Edinburgh. In 1643 he is ‘Robert Scott of Well’ when his son James was incarcerated in Edinburgh Tolbooth at the insistence of saddler David Brown. His wife Rachel was buried in Greyfriars, Edinburgh, in 1661. He had at least 5 sons: Francis, who succeeded; James, who succeeded his brother, but sold Woll; George, who was also served heir to his father; Robert; and John. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was married to Isobel Tudhope and their children included Agnes (b.1635) and Isobel (b.1640). Witnesses in 1640 were William Tudhope (surely a relative of his wife) and Andrew Leyden. Robert (17th C.) recorded as ‘in Grundiston’ in 1640, when Robert Deans was fined ‘for bluiding of the said Robert Scott upon the cheek and hand’. It is unclear how he was related to other local Scotts, but he could perhaps be a descendant of Robert of Easter Groundistone, who is recorded by Scott of Satchells. Robert of Braidhaugh (17th C.) see Robert of Harwood. Robert of Howpasley (d.1658) probably eldest son of William of Fingland, brother of Walter, half-brother of Simon and cousin of Patrick of Tanlawhill. It is unclear exactly how he acquired Howpasley. On his death the lands passed to his brother Walter. He is buried in Greyfriars Cemetery. Robert of Carterton (17th C.) recorded in 1667 when he granted a bond (for £332 Scots) to Walter Loraine, tenant in Greens, who was described as his ‘good brother’ (i.e. brother-in-law). His farm was in northern Dumfriesshire, but it seems likely he was related to more local Scotts, perhaps a branch with a connection to the Lorraines of Harwood.
It is possible he was the Robert, married to Alison Lorraine (perhaps daughter of Edward Lorraine and Maisie Elliot), whose daughter Elspeth was baptised in Kelso in 1635. He was surely related to Francis of Carterton (perhaps his son), who is recorded on the Committee of War for Dumfriesshire in 1644 and 1649. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Gillespie and their children included Robert (b.1644), Andrew (b.1645), Thomas (b.1648), Isobel (b.1649) and Margaret (b.1653). The witnesses in 1648 were Robert Gillespie and George Ruecastle. Robert (17th C.) younger son of Robert of Woll. In 1641 he became an apprentice apothecary with Patrick McAulay in Edinburgh. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Turnbull and their children included: Bessie and Marion (b.1647); Isobel (b.1650); William (b.1651); Janet (b.1653); Walter (b.1655); and Janet (again, b.1656). The witnesses in 1656 were David Beattie and James Newbie. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Marion Scott and their child Christian was baptised in 1655. Robert of Shielwood (b.1640) 2nd son of Walter. He succeeded his brother Francis. He paid tax on £260 in Ashkirk Parish according to the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. He is recorded on an inquest in 1669. He died without any children and was succeeded by his sister Marian. She married Adam Scott of Shaws. Robert of Horsleyhill (17th C.) son of William, he was descended from the Scotts of Tushielaw. He was Laird at the time Capt. Scott of Satchells wrote his Postral (and a family genealogy is given there). In 1673 he was charged by the Hawick Bailies of having ‘masterfully spuilzied out of James Liddell’s house five firelocks with ane pair of bandeliers belonging to the town’; the reason for this apparent theft is not known, but Liddell was Hawick’s Procurator-fiscal, and this was a time when there were serious disputes with the Baron Bailie. Probably the same Robert of Horsleyhill gave evidence at the trial of Andrew Rutherford for the murder of James Douglas of Cavers in 1674; in fact Rutherford tried to accused him, in order to discredit his testimony. He was admitted as a Burgess of Hawick in 1675. In 1676 he was probably already acting as Bailie of Regality when there was a case in which the weavers complaining that 2 of their members had appealed to him, rather than obey the Bailies of Hawick. In 1678 he paid land tax on £264 for Weensland in Hawick Parish and £637 (for Horsleyhill) in Hassendean Parish. Also in 1678 he witnessed (along with Walter of Goldielands) a baptism for Walter of Harwood. He is probably the Robert in ‘Horbie Hill’ who in 1680 was called as a witness in the trial of local Covenanters, but did not appear. In 1680 he witnessed (along with George of Boonraw) a baptism in Hawick for Robert Langlands and Isobel Scott. In a 1688 sasine he is described as ‘bailie in that part for James Duke of Buccleuch and Monmouth’. He married Isabella Scott, probably in Ashkirk Parish in 1663 (suggesting she was from one of the branches of the Scotts in that area). His children included: William, the eldest son; John (b.1670), who became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1687; Francis (b.1677), who became a surgeon-apothecary’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1696; and Marion (b.1680). Elizabeth (b.1669), Charles (b.1672), Janet (b.1681) and Patrick (b.1682), all baptised in Hawick, were probably also his children. The witnesses in 1680 were Mr. Francis (probably the minister of Hassendean) and Walter of Goldielands. He is probably the Scott of Horsleyhill whose daughter Eliza married Walter of Woll in 1694. In 1678, 1685 and 1690 he was one of the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire. He leased the Trinitylands from the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1692. In 1692 he signed the agreement between Francis Gledstains of Whitalw and the Town of Hawick, regarding planting on the edge of the Common. He was probably succeeded by his sons William and then Francis. He is probably the Robert, Laird of Horsleyhill, who married Elizabeth, daughter of William Ainslie and Christian Scott in Jedburgh in 1708. Robert (17th C.) described as ‘in Raesknowe’ when he acted as Chamberlain to the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1640–41 for rental records for Wilton, Branxholme and Whitchester, and in 1642–44 for Teviotdalehead and Eveshead. He may be the same as Robert of Harwood. Robert of Glack (d.bef. 1647) described being ‘of Gleik, parish of Mearns’ in 1647 when his son William became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh. He was deceased before some of the records of a later Robert of Glack, who was connected with the Scotts of Goldielands. Mearns was in Renfrewshire, but ‘Glack’ or ‘the Glack’ is more likely to be the narrow valley near Kirkton Manor in Peebleshire. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts associated with Glack. Robert of Hartwoodmill (17th C.) recorded as landowner (jointly with Sir Robert Dalyell) in a 1643 valuation of Hawick Parish (this may be an error for ‘Hartwoodhill’ in Lanarkshire or ‘Hartwoodmyres’). The lands were valued at £533 6s 8d.
Robert of Hartwoodmyres (d.1654) probably direct descendant of William of Hartwoodmyres, who is recorded in 1589 and 1596. It is possible there are 2 generations of Roberts here. In 1612 he complained that a group of Kers and others, amounting to about 60 men, came to his lands of Hartwoodmyres and ‘rave up and tillit over agane’ his lands, then attempted to find him with violene in mind, but he was not at home; he was unable to prove his claim to the Privy Council.
Also in 1612 he was on the panel of ‘retour’ for Tweedie of Drumelzier. He is recorded in 1615 when his sister Marie (or Mary) married Walter Scott of Howford. In 1618 he was a cautioner for Walter, son of John Scott in Newark. In 1627 he was one of the Commissioners left by the Earl of Buccleuch to administer his affairs when he left for Holland. Also in 1627 he is mentioned in an action that was brought against him and Andrew of Aikwood in Selkirk. In 1628 he was given a commission to hold a trial for 2 women accused of witchcraft. In 1633 he was appointed one of the ‘Tutors Testamentary’ to oversee the Earl of Buc-cleuch’s will. He was part of the funeral procession for the Earl of Buccleuch, which took place in Hawick in 1634, with him carrying the arms of Beaton of Creighe. He signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. In 1643 he witnessed a ‘supplication’ to the Privy Council. He is listed as one of the landowners in a 1643 valuation of the lands in Wilton Parish, the value being £26 13s 4d (it is unclear where these lands were, but by 1788 were owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch). He is probably the Robert of ‘Hartwoodmill’ recorded as landowner (jointly with Sir Robert Dalzell) in a 1643 valuation of Hawick Parish; the lands were valued at £533 6s 8d. In 1643 he was on the Com-mision of Supply for Selkirkshire (so he was M.P. for 1643–45) and in 1646, 1648 and 1649 he was on the Committee of War for Selkirkshire. In 1657 and 1671, respectively.
Robert of Girnwood (b.c.1615) eldest son of Walter of Girnwood.
He was still a minor when his father died, with his uncle Robert of Shielwood acting as tutor to him and his brother, Walter from 1629. He was served heir to his father in 1636, presumably when he reached majority. In 1640 he married Bessie, daughter of Sir Walter of Whitslade. Robert of Borthwickbrae (17th C.) recorded in a list of ‘communicants’ of the Borthwick valley in 1650. It appears that his wife was Margaret Scott and their sons William and Walter. In 1643 and 1644 he was appointed by Parliament to the Committee of War for Selkirkshire. He was probably the last Scott of Borthwickbrae. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Paterson and their children included Bessie (b.1652) and Margaret (b.1654). The witnesses in 1652 were Robert Deans and William Runcastle and in 1654 were John Scott and Walter Chisholme. Robert (d.bef. 1678) son of Thomas of Todrig and younger brother of the next Thomas of Todrig. He is mentioned in 1637 as son of Thomas when he became a merchant’s apprentice to Alexander Clerk in Edinburgh. He is further recorded in 1678 and 1680 when his widow Isobel Scott had discharges for annual rent in Selkirk. He was transferred estates and passed them to Walter Scott of Harwood, who acquired Farnash and other lands. He also appears to have inherited part of the Goldielands estates and may be the Chamberlain to the Scotts of Buccleuch for his service. In 1654 he transferred the lands of Farnwick, Highchesters and half of Ladyurd to Robert Scott of Harwood, but had them back 2 years later, as confirmed by the Duke and Duchess of Buccleuch in a charter of 1668. He also paid £100 in land tax in Hawick Parish in 1663, and also in 1678, and the land tax on lands valued at £130 in Wilton Parish (where he is recorded being ‘of Clack’, the lands probably being East Highchesters). He is easy to confuse with Robert, son of Robert of Harwood, who acquired Farnash and other lands. He also appears to have inherited part of the Goldielands, estates and passed them to Walter Scott of Crumhaugh in 1674. He may be the Robert ‘of Glack’ whose widow Jean Brown married Malcolm Inglis of Manorhead in 1666. He is probably the Robert ‘of Cloak’ who witnessed a baptism for tailor John Wilson in 1678 and another for William of Harwood in 1680. He is probably also the Robert of Glack whose son James with Bessie Henderson (labelled ‘forn’ for fornication) was baptised in Hawick in 1680. Lieut.-Col. Robert (17th C.) son of Walter, portioner of Guilan, and grandson of Sir Robert of Haining. He was the last member of the Scotts of Haining of whom there is any record. Robert of Harwood (d.bef. 1667) son of Walter ‘in Braidehau, i.e. Braidehau, who was Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch for upper Teviotdale and the Langholm area. The precise kinship with the Scotts of Buccleuch is uncertain. He is ‘in Braidehau’ in 1638 when he signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick. He may be the Chamberlain to the Scotts of Buccleuch who was at Raeskowen in 1640–44. He may be the Robert of Farnwick listed as the 3rd largest landowner in the 1643 valuation of Hawick Parish (with lands valued at £1400). He is described as ‘in Braidehauche’ in 1644–50 when he acted as...
Chamberlain to Scott of Buccleuch for the upper Teviot valley, like his father before him. He was also ‘in Braid Hauche’ in 1646, 1648 and 1649 when he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire. In 1651 he is ‘callit of Braidhauch’ and described as eldest lawful son of Walter of Arkleton in the will of Francis, Earl of Buccleuch, when he was granted 800 merks yearly for his lifetime. By 1652 he was referred to as ‘in Braidhauche, now of Harwode’, and he was still Chamberlain in 1660. He is the Robert ‘of Harwoode’ who acted as Chamberlain to Scott of Buccleuch for Ettrick, St. Mary’s and Selkirk in 1657–60. A bond at the end of 1653 transfers the lands of Fenwick, Highchesters and half of Ladyurd (in Peeblesshire) to him from Robert Scott of Glack (who may have been a relative). But the lands were returned in 1656, as confirmed by the Duke and Duchess of Buccleuch in a charter of 1668. He witnessed charters for lands in Dalkeith for the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1656 and 1658. In 1661 he was listed as still owing £4600 to the Duchess of Buccleuch for rentals in Teviotdalehead. In 1662, after the Restoration, he was fined £300. In 1663 he is recorded as ‘liferenter of the lands of Dalcove’ when he renounced the burial place in the choir of the old kirk of Mertoun to Sir William Scott of Harden. And in 1663 he was involved in a libel action with Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs. Also in 1663 he witnessed the marriage contract of Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch, and was listed there as one of her curators. Furthermore, he is probably the ‘Braidhaugh for Harrot’ who is recorded on the Land Tax Rolls in 1663, paying £866 13s 4d. He was also recorded in 2 discharges of 1663. He married Beatrice (or Beatrix) Gledstains, from the family of Gledstains of that Ilk. Their children included: Walter (b.1640), who succeeded by 1672; Robert, who became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1662; Francis (b.1642) of Greenhill; John (b.1644), who probably died young; David (b.1646); William (b.1649), who became an apothecary’s apprentice in 1667, and was probably the same as the surgeon in Hawick in the late 17th century; Gideon of Falnash (b.1651), ‘Auld Falnash’, Chamberlain to the Duchess of Buccleuch; John (again, b.1652); and Agnes, who married John Scott of Woll. It is possible that Andrew (b.1656), whose mother’s name is given as ‘Bessie’ Gledstains, was also his son. The witnesses in 1651 were Patrick Hamilton and Gideon (surely a relative and perhaps Sir Gideon of Highchester) and in 1652 were Gideon (again) and John Gledstains. He is probably the Scott of Harwood whose estate was sold off by his creditors in 1681, as further pursued in the courts in 1688. Robert (17th C.) son of William of ‘Faldonsyde’ (i.e. Falkdonside). His father was already deceased in 1648 when he became a merchant’s apprentice with John ‘Riolsh’ in Edinburgh. Robert (17th C.) tenant in Drinkstone. He is probably the Robert ‘of … stoun’ recorded in 1643 as owner of lands in Hassendean Parish valued at £66 13s 4d. He is Robert ‘of Drnkstowne’ in the Land Tax Rolls for 1663 when paid tax on £66 13s 4d. He is probably the Robert in Drinkstone whose wife Bessie’s will is recorded in 1682; they may have married in Ashkirk Parish in 1640, with children including William (b.1649), James (b.1651), Francis (b.1653) and Margaret (b.1660). The witnesses in 1651 were Robert and George (who were probably related to him or his wife). He could be the Robert of Drinkstone whose son Robert married Bessie, daughter of William of Galalaw, according to a marriage contract of 1663. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Miller and their children included: James (b.1671); Marion (b.1673); John (b.1676); William (b.1679); an unnamed son (b.1682); James (again, b.1684); and another unnamed son (b.1687). The witnesses in 1671 were James and Walter (who were probably relatives) and in 1673 were Walter of Goldielands and Robert of Tandlaw. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1680 he was ‘in Barnknow’ (presumably the farm of Barn Knowe) when he witnessed a baptism for tailor John Wilson; a witness for Wilson 2 years earlier was Robert ‘in Barnknow’), making it possible that this was the same man. He was surely related to John, who was also recorded in Barn Knowe in 1680. Robert of Whitslade (17th C.) local landowner of the mid-to-late 1600s. He married Jean Hay in Edinburgh in 1681. He may have been the oldest son of Thomas, or his younger brother. Robert (17th C.) resident of Burnhead according to a baptismal record of 1682. He is probably related to Adam who was also in Burnhead at that time. It seems likely they are the Adam and Robert who witnessed baptisms for William (later referred to as ‘of Burnhead’) in 1686 and 1688. He married Margaret Scott and their children (baptised in Roberton Parish) included: John (b.1680); Robert (b.1682); Bessie (b.1687); and Margaret (b.1689). The witnesses in 1680 were John Scott and William Scott (who were presumably related to either him or his wife), in 1682 were William and John Scott (perhaps the same 2 men) and in 1687 were William and Adam Scott. He is probably the Robert who was resident at Burnhead on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls; he was probably related to the William who was also listed as a householder and given the coincidence of the names, they may have both been related to the contemporary and previous Lairds of Burnhead. It is possible he is the same man as Robert of Lees. Robert (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Jean Murray and their son Robert was baptised in 1681. The witnesses were Thomas Gray and Robert Graham. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hwick Parish. He married Marion Thomson and their children included: William (b.1674); James (b.1677); an unnamed child (b.1683); Agnes (b.1684); and Marion (b.1688). The witnesses in 1683 were John (perhaps a relative) and William Douglas. Robert (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, when it contained Hassendean. He married Helen Dryden and their children included: Adam (b.1679); Janet (b.1681); and Christian (b.1687). The witnesses in 1681 were Robert Turnbull and James Law and in 1687 were John and Robert Noble. Robert (17th C.) fined £100 Scots in 1688 for leaving the town when the militia was in Hawick charging young men ‘for throwing of dyce and drawing of balotes’. He clearly did not want to serve! He may be the same as one of the contemporary Roberts. Robert of Bonnington (17th C.) son of John of Bonnington. He was in possession of the lands in 1670. He had a son John. He was succeeded by James, who was either his brother or son. Robert (17th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. His brother Walter was a merchant, who in 1673 was accused of striking him, apparently the result of a misunderstanding involving Thomas Brown and Robert Dickson. He is probably ‘Robert Scott, laird, shoemaker’ listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4; the ‘laird’ suggests he might have been related to Thomas and James, who had the same nickname. He is probably the cordiner of the same name listed ‘uest the water’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert (17th C.) son of John of Gilmanskcleuch. He was recorded in a deed of renunciation and discharge in 1673. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1679 George Hall was fined for ‘ane blood’ on his, and ordered to pay him 5 shillings Scots per day, since ‘his arms was swollen by the stockies, and he could not shear’. He was presumably a farm worker of some sort. Robert of Tandlaw (17th C.) recorded in 1666 in a list of landowners in Hassendean Parish. In 1673 he (along with Walter of Goldielands) witnessed a baptism for Robert (presumably a relative) and Bessie Miller in Hawick Parish. In 1678 he paid the land tax in Hassendean Parish. He was listed in 1682 among the heritors of the Regality of Melrose. Probably the same Robert was on the list of Hassendean heritors accused of inciting the riot of 1690. There was a warrant for his arrest along with Adam (probably a relative) and Thomas Turnbull of Knowe. He was listed on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls (for Hassendean Parish). Along with Robert in Drinkstone, he witnessed a baptism in 1698 for John Easton in Drinkstone. He was witness to the birth of a child of William in Goldielands in 1702, suggesting that they were closely related. He is probably the Robert of Tandlaw who (along with Robert in Drinkstone) witnessed a baptism for Robert of Coldhouse in 1711. He married Barbara Scott and had children baptised in Roberton Parish (actually the area of the former Hassendean Parish). He was recorded at Tandlaw in a baptismal record of 1682. He is difficult to separate from Robert in Galalaw, whose wife had the same name! His children included: Helen (b.1682); and probably Barbara (b.1685), who seems likely to be the Barbara from Tandlaw who married James Ormiston in Boonraw in 1713. Some of Adam (b.1685), Bessie (b.1685) and Charles (b.1688) may also be his children. The witnesses in 1682 were William and George Scott, who were probably related to him and his wife. The witnesses in 1687 were Robert Scott and Andrew Chisholme (perhaps the man associated with Coldhouse). Robert (17th C.) recorded in 1681 being at Galalaw. He married Barbara Scott in Roberton Parish in 1680 and their children (baptised in Roberton) included William (b.1681) and probably Margaret (b.1683), as well as some of Adam (b.1685), Bessie (b.1685) and Charles (b.1688). The witnesses in 1681 were William (perhaps his father) and George (perhaps related to his wife). Robert (17th C.) recorded as a merchant in Hawick in 1682, when his son Roert became a skinners apprentice in Edinburgh. The Edinburgh skinner was William, who could have been a relative. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (17th C.) recorded in Hassendean in the 1680s, when it was part of Roberton Parish. He married Isobel Turnbull in 1682 and their children included: Bessie (b.1683); Margaret (b.1685); and George (b.1688). The witnesses in 1683 were Andrew Leyden and Walter Fowler. He could be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (d.c.1685) tenant in ‘Newtoune’ in 1685 when his will was recorded. He was probably one of the Scotts of Newton near Hawick. He could be the Robert, ‘tenant Newton’ who in 1722 witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Robert Nichol, workman in Weensland; the other witness was Richard of Boghall. He could be the Robert who witnessed a baptism for William, resident at Newton in 1725. Robert (17th C.) son of John in Weens. In 1684 he was among the men declared fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. It is unclear what happened to him. Robert of Greenhill (17th C.) recorded in 1684 when he and Walter of Whitehaugh were witnesses for a baptism in Hawick for carrier John Aitchison. It seems likely he was related to Walter of Whitehaugh. However, it is unclear how he might have been related to the contemporary Francis of Greenhill. Perhaps the same man was Robert ‘of Whithaugh’ in 1689 when (along with John) he witnessed the baptism of an illegitimate child for David Wilson in Hawick. Robert of Falnash (17th C.) younger son of Robert of Harwood and Beatrice Gedlaints. He is probably the Robert, son of Robert of ‘Horwood’ who became a merchant’s apprentice with John Hamilton in Edinburgh in 1662. He acquired the lands of Falnash and others from Robert of Glack (with whom he is therefore easily confused). In 1689 (confirmed in 1694) he is recorded transferring his lands of Fenwick, Easter Highchesters, half of ‘Ladyurd’ in Kirkurd and Nether Glack in Manor (the latter 2 in Peeblesshire) to Gideon Scott of Outerside (later ‘Auld Falnash’), who was his brother. This appears to have been because he had no heirs, and was with the agreement of his wife Mary Elliot. He may be the Robert, married to Mary Elliot, whose children baptised in Hawick Parish included Adam (b.1646), Margaret (b.1647), Walter (b.1650) and Isobel (b.1653), although these births seem too early. Robert ‘Muckle Robin’ (17th/18th C.) recorded as having previously been servant to the Laird of Whitehaugh, who in about 1705 was part of a group of men who perambulated the boundaries of Wilton Common, presumably to settle some dispute. This was recounted by Hector Cockburn in 1764, who described him as ‘another old man’ and gave his nickname. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (17th C.) recorded in Roberton Parish in the 1680s, when Hassendean was part of it. He married Marion Scott and their children included: Walter (b.1683); and John (b.1686). The witnesses in 1683 were William (probably a relative) and Walter Gedlaints. In 1686 the witnesses were Adam and Robert Scott, who may have been related to him and his wife. He may be the same as one of the Roberts recorded in Hassendean in the tax records of the 1690s. Robert (17th C.) shoemaker on the east side of Hawick. He is a ‘cordiner’ listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694 (in distinction to the one from the west). Probably the same ‘cordiner’ is listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. Robert (17th C.) wright in Hawick listed among those contributing to funds for the new Kirk bell in 1693/4. He may be the wright who witnessed baptisms for Walter Henderson and for James Tudhope in 1723. He married Isobel Stoddart and their son Robert was baptised in 1700. The witnesses in 1700 were Andrew Scott ‘customer’ and Bailie James Deans (and also listed as John Elliot and Gilbert Elliot in Nether Southfield, but that was for Robert in Newbigging). It is unclear if he was the same as one of the contemporary Roberts. Robert (17th C.) Thatcher in Hawick, on the 1693/4 subscribers’ list for the new Kirk bell. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Perhaps he was the Thatcher Robert whose grandchild died in 1794. Robert (17th C.) described as ‘sometime saddler in Fanesh’ (i.e. Falnash) in 1684 when he was on the long list of men declared as fugitives for refusing to yield to Episcopalianism. Robert (17th C.) recorded as ‘flesher’ in 1693 when he gave evidence to the Magistrates in a case of disorder within the Kirk. He was listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was listed as flesher in 1694 among those on the west-side of Hawick who paid the Hearth Tax. In 1700 he witnessed (along with ‘officer’ Alexander) a baptism for wright Andrew, suggesting that they might all be closely related. He also witnessed a baptism in 1700 for Walter Purdom. Robert of Broadmeadows (d.1694) son of William, and grandson of William of Tushielaw. In an instrument of sasine of 1692 (preserved in the Walter Mason Collection) he was given the lands of Broadmeadows by his father (recorded as ‘Robert’, perhaps in error), following his marriage to Agnes Kelso. His ‘brother german’ Thomas and servant John Ker, were among the witnesses. He died without issue and in 1694 his sisters Isabella (who married John Balfour of Kailzie) and Jean (who married advocate John Murray) inherited his lands. Through Isabella’s son, Charles Balfour, the lands passed to a granddaughter, Jean Balfour, who married William Scott of Woll. His testament is recorded in 1694. Robert (17th C.) Chamberlain to the Laird of High Chesten, recorded in 1694 in a assise for lands in Minto. In 1697 he is recorded as 'late chamberlain to Heychesters'. He was 'Bailie Robert Scot of Selkirk, then factor for Haychesters' in the 1690s when he made a protest against the perambulation of Wilton Common. He was probably the same as one of the contemporay Robert. Robert (17th C.) resident in Ashkirk Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. Robert (17th C.) resident of Castle-side in Ashkirk Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He was distinct from Robert in Ashkirk. Robert (17th C.) resident of Broad-haugh on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He could be the same as one of the contemporay Roberts. Robert (17th C.) renter of a quarter of the lands of Borthaugh in 1691 and 1692 and was 'Scrivener' in 1694 when he continued to rent Borthaugh. He continued to rent ¼ of Borthaugh in 1696 and 1698, and was still described as 'Scrivener'. He was also recorded as a 'Scrver' at Borthaugh on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls for Wilton Parish. He was presumably a lawyer, and may have been son of the James, who previously rented part of Borthaugh and was also designated 'Scrivener'. Robert (17th C.) tenant at Potterlammert according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert of Benholm (d.1626/7–90) son of James of Logie. His lands were in Kin-cardineshire. He married Catherine, daughter of Patrick Elliot of Cranmond. Their children included: Robert, who became a merchant's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1689; Charles, who became a tailor's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1690; and Hercules, who became a merchant's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1693. He may have been succeeded by James, whose son Patrick became an apprentice merchant in Edinburgh in 1712. Robert (17th C.) recorded as 'one of the clerks of His Majesty’s chancellor' in 1673 when his son William became a merchant's apprentice in Edinburgh. Robert ‘Pope’ (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick listed among those contributing to funds for the new Kirk bell in 1693/4. It is unclear what his nickname might mean. He is probably the merchant on the east-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. In the 1704 baptismal record he is ‘distinctionis causa called Pope’. Perhaps the same Robert was merchant who witnessed a baptism for James Dickson (tenant in Hawick) in 1714 and was the merchant who (along with Francis, another merchant) witnessed a baptism for carter Walter Bryson in Hawick in 1721. His children included Helen (b.1704), with witnesses Ballie James Deans and glover James Scott. Robert (17th C.) candlemaker listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He is listed separately from the merchant called ‘Pope’, but may be the same as one of the other contemporary Roberts. Robert (17th C.) resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He was called ‘Ormiston’, to distinguish him from other Roberts; however, it is unclear if he was related to James of Ormiston. Robert (17th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at ‘Mayns’ in 1696 when his daughter Isabella was baptised (with no mother’s name listed). The witnesses were Adam Scott and William Riddell. Robert (17th/18th C.) leased half the farm of Newbigging from the Duchess of Buccleuch in at least the period 1690–98. He was also resident at Newbigging in Hawick Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was presumably separate from the 2 Robert Scotts (father and son) who leased Over Southfield at the same time. He was recorded at Newbigging in 1700. In 1706 he witnessed a baptism for William Cowan, herd in Southfield and in 1708 further baptisms for Thomas Turnbull, herd in Nether Southfield and for William Hood, weaver in Nether Southfield. He was still tenant of Newbigging in about 1710, as attested in evidence given regarding the state of Hawick’s Common in 1767. He married Janet Elliot and their children included: Gavin (b.1698); and Archibald (b.1700). Witnesses in 1698 were John Elliot and John Goodfellow and in 1700 were John and Gilbert Elliot, both in Southfield (who could have been related to his wife). Robert (17th C.) resident at Over Southfield in 1694, according to the Hearth Tax rolls. In the period 1690–98 half of the farm of Over Southfield was rented jointly to ‘Rot. Scott father and sone’; so there were 2 generations called Robert at that time. In 1694 there was a connection made between the rental of Over Southfield and Allanhaugh Mill. Robert (17th C.) listed at Todshawhill among ‘The poor in Hauick Parioch’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert (d.bef. 1716) resident of Wilton, recorded at Drinkstone on the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He may be the same as the earlier Robert in Drinkstone (but this seems more likely to be the next generation). It is possible he was the Robert, son of Robert of Drinkstone, who in 1663 married Bessie, daughter of William in Galalaw. He was recorded in Drinkstone in 1696 when he witnessed a baptism (along with James) for Francis in Groundstone and in 1698 when he witnessed another for John Easton in Drinkstone. In 1700 he witnessed a baptism in Hawick Parish for James Grieve in Teindside. He is probably the Robert in Drinkstone who witnessed a baptism for Robert of Coldhouse in 1709; along with Robert of Tandlaw he witnessed a baptism for Robert of Coldhouse in 1711 and also in 1711, along with Robert of Coldhouse, he witnessed a baptism at Drinkstone. He was already deceased in 1716 when his daughter Elspeth married merchant William Tudhope in Hawick. Robert (17th C.) carrier in Hawick Church. He married Janet Boyd and their children included: Margaret (b.1686); and Robert (b.1687), who may be the carrier in Branxholme Town about 20 years later. Robert’s baptism was witnessed by John, who may have been a relative. He could be the Robert, who along with John, appears to have been listed as a carrier when witnessing a baptism for Walter Henderson in Hawick in 1680. 2 separate carriers of the same name are listed ‘eist the water’ on Hearth Tax Rolls for Hawick in 1694. One of them is listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He could be the ‘carrier in Hawick’ who was said to be one of 2 witnesses who walked and described the boundaries of Wilton Common in the 1690s. Robert (17th C.) resident at Alton on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls for Hassendean Parish. It is unclear whether he was related to the Scotts of Alton. Robert (17th C.) recorded among the poor of Hassendean Parish in 1694, when he was at Horsleyhill. Robert (17th C.) rented 1/3 of the farm of Wiltonburn from the Duchess of Buccleuch in at least the period 1694–98. He may have been closely related to John or Bessie (widow of James Riddell), who were also renting part of Wiltonburn in 1694, and to another Riddell, widow of Thomas Mitchelson, who was renting part of the farm in 1696. His cautioner in 1698 was Robert Miller. He may be the Robert who (along with Adam) witnessed a baptism for James in Wiltonburn in 1705. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Roberts. Robert of Hassendean (17th/18th C.) son of Adam. He may be the Robert of Hassendean, described as aged 40 and married, who gave evidence in the 1682 trial of Alexander Home for being a Covenanter. He may be the ‘Scot of Hassinden’ recorded in 1684 among Borderers fined for their wives failing to attend parish church (i.e. for supporting Covenanters); however, he was acquitted when he said that ‘he did put hir away, and served ane inhibition against hir’. He is recorded in 1690 as one of the heritors accused of inciting the riot at the de-roofing of Hassendean Kirk and being arrested (along with Adam Scott and Thomas Turnbull of Knowe). He was served heir to his father Adam in 1695. In 1696 and 1704 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire. He is probably the Robert ‘of Hessindane’ who witnessed a baptism for Francis of Newton in 1705. He sold the lands of Hassendean to Anne Duchess of Buccleuch in the period 1679–1710. Robert ‘younger of Hassendean’ brought an action against Rev. Francis Scott, following his removal by the Privy Council, and this was probably his son. However, this next Robert does not appear to have succeeded, and so he himself was the last Scott of Hassendean. Nevertheless, he is probably the Robert of Hassendean who witnessed a baptism for Francis of Newton in 1709. He may be the Robert ‘elder of Hassendean’ whose son Robert is recorded in a deed of 1682. The pair may be the ‘Hassanden Elder’ and ‘Hassanden younger’ recorded each paying for 2 hearths ‘in the netherend’ of Hassendean Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert (17th C.) recorded as ‘younger of Hassendean’ when he was indicted in 1680 for being a Covenanter. The accusations against him including attacking ‘the Tower and Castle of Hawick’. He was probably son of Robert of Hassendean. Perhaps the same Robert ‘younger of Hassendean’ brought an action against Rev. Francis Scott, following his removal by the Privy Council in 1689. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His children John and Jean were baptised in 1696, with witnesses Patrick Richardson and Robert Ruecastle (both Bailies). He could be same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (d.c.1725) carrier in Branxholme Town. Note that there was an earlier carrier of the same name, who may have been his father. The baptism of his son William, along with Margaret Turnbull (labelled ‘fornicators’) is recorded in 1705, with witnesses Robert Cook in Branxholme and Henry Orrock; he was recorded being ‘commonly called ye Duchess of Buchlugh’s carier in Branholintown’. He was recorded being in arrears for rent on part of Braxholme Town in 1711–20 (and may be related to the William, who was also on the same farm at that time). He was recorded in 1714 as a carrier at Braxholme Town, when there was a promise that he pay some of what he owed for the lease, when his son Francis was baptised in Robertson Parish, and also when he and James (smith in the same place) witnessed a baptism for the Scoons at Commonside. He could be the carrier who witnessed a baptism (along with smith James) in Hawick in 1714 for Walter Scoon and Helen Scott. He was still mentioned in the rental records for Braxholme Town in 1725, but deceased in 1726, when James Sanderson took over his part of the farm. He married Agnes Armstrong (also from Hawick Parish) in 1706 and their children included: John (b.1707); Isobel (b.1708); Robert (b.1710); Janet (b.1712); Francis (b.1717), baptised in Robertson, but also recorded in Hawick; and Adam (b.1718). The witnesses in 1707 were Robert Thomson and Andrew Ogilvie. 1710 were James Craw and William Scott in Braxholme Town and in 1712 were John in Braxholme and William in Braxholme Town. He is probably the Robert in Braxholme Town whose son Francis was baptised in Robertson in 1717 (along with 3 others from the same place on that day). He may be the Robert, tenant in Braxholme Town whose son Walter was baptised in Hawick in 1720, with witnesses William Thomson in Newmill and smith James Dryden. If so, he is also the Robert in Braxholme Town who witnessed baptisms in 1720 for William Mitchellhill in Braxholme Town and James Dryden in Newmill. He could be the Robert recorded as a householder at Braxholme Park on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was tenant in Heap in 1709 when his son Robert was baptised. There are several other children on record who could be his. He seems likely to be related to the earlier tenant in Heap with the same name. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was tenant in Newton in 1717, along with Robert Storie. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert of Falnash (d.1734) eldest son of Gideon (‘Auld Falnash’) and Mary Scott of Thirlestane. He was designated ‘Mr’ in 1720 when he witnessed baptisms for Gideon Elliott of Falnash and for Walter Turnbull cottar in Harwood. He is presumably the ‘Robert Scott, merchant, called of Falnash’, who was unanimously elected to be Cornet in 1722 (this presumably being shortly before he was married). He was Chamberlain to the Duchess of Buccleuch for Teviotdalehead 1721–27. He was mentioned as the Baron’s representative on Hawick Parish Session from 1722, and in 1723 ceased to be an Elder of Cavers to become a member of Hawick Parish Session ‘in consideration of having his chief interest and business in this parish’. He witnessed baptisms in Wilton in 1722 and 1724 for his sister Beatrix and Walter of Crumhaugh. He witnessed a baptism for John Ekron in Hawick in 1725. He also witnessed baptisms in Hawick for Gideon Elliot of Harwood in 1726 and 1728; in 1728 he and the Laird of Harwood were witnesses for William Grieve in Fenwick. He was in charge of transferring the tenancy of Whitchesters to William Ogilvie in 1731. He was recorded at Crawhill in 1733. He married Violet, daughter of Thomas Rutherford of Edgerston and Susanna Riddell of Minto. Their children were: Susanna (baptised in Cavers Parish in 1723), who married Thomas Turnbull of Knowe in Minto Parish in 1755; Gideon (b.1724), baptised in Cavers Parish, who succeeded; Thomas (b.1726), baptised in Cavers Parish, who sold Falnash to the Duke of Buccleuch in 1759, and may have been a minister of the Relief Kirk; John (b.1728), baptised in Cavers; Robert of Orchard (1731–1813), baptised in Hawick Parish; and James (1733–1818), baptised at Crawhill in Wilton Parish, who became minister in Perth. In 1735 his wife, Lady Falnash, sold her property in Hawick to Patrick Hardie, described as ‘High and Leigh, back and fore, with appurtenances, trees and lime pit, in yard called the Howegate and bounded by properties of William Lang later James Scott on east, Robert Hardy and William Leiden on west and Kings hiestreet on south’. It is unclear where his young family was raised after his death. The witnesses to the 1731 baptism were James Anderson (Rector of Hawick Grammar School) and Thomas Watson (writer in Hawick) and in 1733 were James of Whitfield (after whom the child might have been named) and Charles of Crumhaugh. Robert (c.1660–1752) son of Thomas of Todrig and Janet Pringle. He served for a long time in the army, being involved with the artillery in the royal army at the Battle of Sheriffmooor in 1715. He was said to be ‘a man of great simplicity of manners, and of great integrity and honour’. He was probably the Robert, ‘brother to Todrig’, whose heirs are listed among the heritors of the Regality of Melrose in 1682. In 1696 he leased Borthwickshiel and Roberton from Gideon Scott of Highchester. He was a witness in 1700 to the in 1705. Robert (17th/18th C.) married Margaret Scott and Walter Scott, both also from Hawickshiels. He was baptised in 1704, with witnesses Simon Miller and Walter Scott, both also from Hawickshiels. Robert (17th/18th C.) married Margaret Scott in 1705. Robert ‘Wyndhead’ (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick. He presumably lived at the head of the Wynd, which was probably what became Walter’s Wynd. It is therefore possible that he was connected with the Scotts of Horsleyhill. He is recorded as ‘wyndhead’ when his children were baptised in 1701, 1712, 1715 and 1718. In 1708 he gave evidence before the Hawick Kirk Session to say that William Scott (son of John ‘Cloaks’) spent time with Margaret Brydon on Common Riding night the year before, leading to an illegitimate child. In 1723 he witnessed a baptism for tailor Walter, who was also called ‘Wyndhead’. He married Margaret Crozier. Their other children included: Robert (b.1701); Robert (again, b.1710); Archibald (b.1712); Walter (b.1715); and Marjorie (b.1718). The witnesses in 1712 were tailors Archibald and George Scott (who may have been related to him) and in 1718 were shoemaker James Chisholme and smith John Scott. He was probably related to John ‘Wyndhead’, who died before 1712. Robert (17th/18th C.) son of Walter, he was tenant in Goldielands. He was thus recorded in 1702, when his son Robert was born; this was probably the same as the Robert recorded at Goldielands a few decades later. He married Mary Scott in 1701, with his father given there as Walter; from the similarity of names, it seems likely he is descended from the Scotts of Goldielands and Crumhaugh. Robert of Harden (d.1710) son of William, succeeding from his brother Sir William in 1707. He was previously ‘of Iliston’ (or ‘Elistoun’, near Melrose), which he had inherited in 1686. He lived in Edinburgh before gaining the Harden titles. In 1708 he was listed as a Commissioner of Supply for Berwickshire. In 1709 he sold half of Kershope to William Kerr of Chatto. He married Jean, daughter of Sir Thomas Ker of Fernilee. However, he (like his brother) died without issue and was succeeded by his cousin Walter (actually first cousin, twice removed), son of Sir Gideon of Highchester. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He is recorded at ‘Mitcha’ (probably Meadshaw) in 1702 when his son Gideon was baptised. Robert (17th/18th C.) tenant in Blackcleuch near Teviothead. He was recorded in Blackcleuch in 1704, 1708, 1716 and 1724. In 1705 he witnessed a baptism for John in Blackcleuch (also called ‘Uncle John’), who may have been a relative; the other witness was John in Falnash. In 1716 he was recorded as tenant in Blackcleuch when he witnessed a baptism for William Anderson, shepherd in Blackcleuch. He could be the tenant in Falnash who witnessed baptisms in 1719 for Archibald Murray, herd in Hislop and in 1720 for John Nichol from Commonbrae. He married Mary (or ‘Marie’) Scott in 1701 and their children included: Janet (b.1704); and Walter (b.1708). His son John was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1724 (with no mother’s name given). The witnesses in 1704 were Walter Elliot in Commonbrae and John Beattie ‘servant’ and in 1708 were Walter in Crumhaugh (probably owner of the lands of Blackcleuch) and Walter in Lymiecleuch. Rev. Robert (1673/4–1727) brother of William, Laird of Whitehaugh, and hence son of Walter of Whitehaugh and Headshaw. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1693 and was licensed to preach by Selkirk Presbytery in 1698. He was called to Robertson Parish in late 1699 and became minister there in 1700, remaining until his death. Because of the ruinous state of the Manse he and his family stayed in Hawick for most of that time; a record of 1715 refers to him and his family being forced to return to Hawick. The oldest existing Robertson communion token dates from 1705, during his incumbency. It is said that in 1703 he was one of the local ministers who walked out of the Synod meeting at Duns, in sympathy with the objections of Hawick’s minister Alexander Orr. He is probably the ‘mr Rott Scott’ who (along with William of Whitehaugh) witnessed a baptism for James in Whitehaugh in 1721. He was ‘minister of the Gospell att Robertson’ in 1727 when (along with his brother William) he witnessed a baptism for James Scott and Janet Scott in Borthaugh. He married Janet Scott in Hawick, and their children (baptised in Robertson) were: Elizabeth (or Bessie, b.1710); Walter (b.1716); and Marion. He published ‘Twelve Sermons preached before and after the celebration of the Lord’s Supper’ (1729). He is buried at Robertson and a memorial tablet was built into the churchyard wall, erected by his brother William. Robert (17th/18th C.) son of Bailie James. In 1708 he caused a disturbance in St. Mary’s by trying to take seat in the ‘Steeple Loft’ which had been his deceased father’s, although the Council had just decreed that these front seats were reserved for the present Bailies. Along with Walter Purdom (son of another deceased Bailie) he spent 24 hours in jail. It is unclear whether he is the same as one of the other contemporary men named Robert. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He is recorded at Outside in 1711 when his daughter Janet was baptised. There are many possibilities for children born in Roberton at about the same time who could be his. Robert (17th/18th C.) married Isabell Hobkirk in Hawick in 1710. Perhaps the same Isabell Hobkirk married Robert Gledstains in Hawick in 1714. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident in Mosbrae in 1717 when his son Andrew was baptised in Roberton Parish. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident at Nether Tofts. In 1718 his son Simon was baptised in Kirkton Parish. Probably the same Robert was in Effedge in 1720 when his son John was baptised. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1719 he was recorded as ‘Crawship’ when he witnessed a baptism Hawick weaver Robert Riddill. His designation might signify a connection with the lands of Crawshope in upper Teviotdale. Robert of Scotsbank (d.bef. 1713) owner of the lands of ‘Scott’s Bank’, part of the farm of Hyndhope on the Ettrick. In about 1705 he was part of a group of men who perambulated the boundaries of Wilton Common, presumably to settle some dispute; he was described as then living in Selkirk and being factor to the Laird of Harden. He was recorded in a discharge with the Burgh of Selkirk in 1707. In 1708 he is recorded as owner of land in Selkirk, adjacent to the main ‘causey’, which was laid by Hawick man Archibald Paterson. Also in 1708 he attended the ‘convention of Burrows’ in Selkirk and was listed as a Commissioner of Supply for Selkirkshire. There was a further discharge in 1709, which referred to a loan of 2000 merks he made to the Burgh of Selkirk in 1696 (perhaps related to the Darien Company). His widow Janet Halliday is recorded in a ‘ly-bell’ in Selkirk in 1713. He is also recorded in 1719 when his widow, Janet Halliday, complained about Thomas Hunter, maltman and Burgess of Selkirk and was also in dispute over a butcher’s bill and in another case in 1720. His widow also had discharges with the Burgh of Selkirk in 1727, 1730, 1732 and 1734, and she complained about march stones with the ‘burleymen’ of Selkirk in 1731. In 1708 his second daughter (and co-heir) Mary married Thomas of Todrig. He may be the Robert who married Janet Halliday in Gladsmuir Parish in 1703 (in which case she must have been his second wife); their children included Alexander (b.1710) and William (b.1712). Robert (17th/18th C.) described as a tenant in Hawick. He married Janet Greenshields and their children included: James (b.1721); Mary (b.1723); and William (b.1725). The witnesses in 1725 were mason John Turnbull and Dand Gray in Weensland. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Groundistone in 1725 (at the same time as another Robert) and Wester Groundistone in 1729. He married Isobel Hall (or perhaps Hill) in Wilton in 1719. Their children included: Margaret (b.1722); John (b.1725); Isobel (b.1727); Andrew (b.1729); William (b.1731); and Robert (b.1734); and Walter (b.1739). The witnesses in 1725 were George Scott and Walter Riddell and in 1729 were William Turnbull and Robert Scott. Robert (17th/18th C.) from Roberton Parish. He was living at Girnwood in 1718 and 1722 when his daughters Janet and Helen were baptised. He may be the same as on of the other Roberts. Robert (17th/18th C.) from Roberton Parish, he married Jean Taylor in Ashkirk in 1719. Robert (17th/18th C.) cottar in North Synton. He married Euphan Dunlop and their children included: William (b.1719); John (b.1731); and Bettie (b.1732). Robert (17th/18th C.) from Roberton Parish, he married Dorothy McVittie in Hawick in 1721. Her name is written ‘Doarthie Magvitie’. Robert (17th/18th C.) from Roberton Parish, he was at Parkhill in 1723 when his son Robert was baptised. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Borthwickbrae in 1722 when his son William was baptised. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (17th/18th C.) from Roberton Parish, he was at Skelfhill. He is listed as tenant there on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He may be the Robert recorded in Skelfhill in 1712 when he witnessed a baptism for William Scott, tenant in Fulnash (who was formerly at Skelfhill, and was probably related). In 1722 he, along with Robert Elliot of Caerlenrig and James Grieve of Commonside petitioned the Presbytery for a preacher and meeting house in their district. In 1723 he is recorded in the Hawick Session records giving in ‘400 merks of ye poors money’. It is possible he is the ‘Old Hobby in Skelfhill’ who wrote a version of ‘The Braes of Branxholme’ and of whom several other stories are told by William Scott, teacher in Burnmouth (see Auld Hobbie o Skelfhill). He is probably the Robert in Skelfhill whose son John was married in Hawick in 1700. He may be the ‘Auld Hobbie Scott in Skelfhill’ who was grandfather of Robert Scott in Skelfhill who described him in 1809; he was said to have married a daughter of John Elliot, farmer in Southfield. Robert (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick Shiel. He married Margaret Martin in 1722. Their children included: Margaret (b.1723); and Helen (b.1725). The 1723 baptism was witnessed by Walter Nixon in Hawick Shiel and John Glendinning in Whitchesters and the 1725 baptism by Walter Nixon and John Scott ‘in Hawick’. Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, residing at Tandlaw in 1729. He married Janet Gledstains in 1727 and their children included: Margaret (b.1729); Bessie (b.1730); and Robert (b.1734). The witnesses in 1729 were Walter Scott and William Stewart and in 1730 were William Harkness and George Stavert. Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Groundistone in 1729 (at the same time as another Robert); he is probably the Robert who witnessed a baptism for the other Robert in 1729. He married Bessie Harkness and their children included: William (b.1718); Walter (b.1720); James (b.1729); and Mary (b.1734). The witnesses in 1729 were George and Richard (who were probably related to him). He may be the Robert who, along with William, witnessed a baptism for Thomas Kyle at Groundistone in 1737. Robert (17th/18th C.) son of Francis of Gilmanscleuch. His father was already deceased in 1711 when he became a barber’s apprentice in Edinburgh. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Boonraw in 1729. He married Margaret Easton in 1728 and their children included: Isobel (b.1729); and Janet (b.1731). The witnesses in 1729 were James and Robert Ormiston. Dr. Robert (d.c.1757) surgeon in Hawick, possibly the last of the Scotts of Whitslade. Dr. Thomas Somerville’s ‘My Own Life and Times’ describes him as ‘the only surviving representative of the ancient family of Whitslade’. He appears to have been brother of Walter, and also of John, who sold Whitslade. He was probably the 4th son of Thomas (d.c.1698), and was said to have greatly outlived his 6 brothers. It was also said that he was 14th in descent from the Lord of Buccleuch. In his old age he became quite poor, being described as ‘a gentlemanlike person in ruin, tall, meagre – the countenance of hunger and despondency’, and is said to have survived through occasional donations of distant relatives. He was also helped by Hawick’s minister Rev. William Somerville, perhaps inspired by the assistance the Scotts of Whitslade had given to Somerville’s father, Rev. Thomas S. Somerville, when he was ousted as minister of Cavers during the Revolution and settled in Hawick. He witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1745, for Skinner John Currier. Perhaps a different Dr. Robert (or the same, but with confused details) is described as being the 4th son of William of Raeburn, and 14th in descent from Buccleuch; this Robert married Mary Flemming and their son Robert may have been a surgeon in Musselburgh, who married Elizabeth Chalmers, and whose daughter Helen apparently helped Sir Walter with the plot of Ivanhoe. He is recorded as ‘Mr. Robert Scott Whitslade Surgeon in Hawick’ when he witnessed a baptism in 1753 for a daughter of John Gledstains of Whitlaw. This suggests that he continued to be an Episcopalian throughout his life. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Branxholme. He married Agnes Elliot and their son Patrick was baptised in 1728. The witnesses were Walter in ‘New...’ and John in ‘Ever...’. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1720 he was at Highchesters when his daughter Helen was baptised. Robert (18th C.) son of John of Gilmanscleuch. He became an apprentice mason with David Ramsay in Edinburgh in 1730. Robert (18th C.) resident of Whitfield. His son Walter was baptised in Roberton Parish in 1732 (apparently twice in successive weeks!). There are several other children baptised in Roberton at about the same time who could be his. Probably the same Robert married Marion Scott and was recorded in Whitfield in 1747 when their daughter Susanna was baptised in Wilton Parish. Other children of this same couple included Margaret (b.1750) and Helen (b.1752). The 1747 witnesses were Walter and John Scott, who seem likely to have been related to him or his wife. He may be the Robert who was in Whitfield in 1765 when selected to perambulate the boundaries of Wilton Common. Robert (18th C.) recorded ‘in Strother-house’ in 1765 when he was among the men selected to perambulate Wilton Common. Robert (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Borthwickshiel in 1732 and 1736. His children included: Janet (b.1732); and Margaret (b.1736). Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish who married Jean Goodfellow. He was at Midshiels in 1741 when his son Charles was baptised. The witnesses were John and Walter Scott. Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Mervinslaw in 1741, 1743 and 1744. He married Agnes Hood in Wilton in 1738. Their children included: Janet (b.1741); Robert (b.1743); Margaret (b.1744); William (b.1745); Walter (b.1749); Anne (b.1752); and Robert (again, b.1755). The witnesses in 1741 were John and Walter Scott, in 1743 were James Dryden and Walter Scott and in 1744 were Robert and Walter Scott. Robert (18th C.) servant to Rev. William Somerville in Hawick. He witnessed a baptism for shepherd Andrew Brown in 1740. Robert (d.1750) resident of Stouslie whose funeral is recorded in Wilton Parish. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert of Coldhouse (c.1685–1772) father of Robert, minister of Innerleithen and grandfather of Alexander, friend of Lord Byron. He is probably a descendant of the earlier Robert of Howford and Coldhouse, but the identity of his own parents are not clear (however, he seems to have been born around the time of the death of William of Coldhouse, who may have been his father). In 1765 he states that George Douglas, former tenant in Whitfield, was a relative (hence perhaps his mother was a Douglas). He is recorded being ‘of Coldhouse’ in Wilton baptisms in at least 1709, 1711 and 1724. He was tenant of West Burnfoot (on Ale) in 1716–18 and Drinkstone 1719–43. In 1743 his son William (as part of his marriage contract) was infel in the lands of Little Drinkstone (‘commonly called Tanlaw’) and Tanlawrig (‘commonly called Cowdhouse’). He was one of the landowners involved in the court case over the division of Wilton Common in 1765, with his son William representing him; however, he gave evidence of his recollections of the use of Wilton Common over the previous 70 or so years. This includes recalling the earlier time that the common was perambulated, which he suggested was when he was 10–12, but according to other witnesses was around 1705–10. His lands of Coldhouse and Tandlaw were valued at £80 in 1764. In 1708 in Wilton Parish, he married Jean, daughter of James Cunningham. His children included: William, who succeeded; James (b.1709), tenant at Tandlaw for a while; Margaret (b.1711); Rev. Robert (b.1714); an unnamed son (b.1717); Walter (b.1724); and Jean (b.1726). William (b.1713), baptised in Wilton with no mother’s name recorded, could be his son. Helen (b.1726), baptised in Hawick to a couple with the same names, could also be his child. The witnesses in 1709 were William Chisholme of Parkhill, Alexander Scott, younger of Galalaw, and Robert Scott in Drinkstone. The witnesses in 1711 were Robert of Tandlaw and Robert in Drinkstone; also in 1711, along with Robert in Drinkstone, he witnessed a baptism at Drinkstone. The witnesses in 1724 were Alexander of Galalaw and Walter Cunningham (who was surely related to his wife, and may have given his name to the child). He is probably the Laird recorded in Hawick in 1739 when the bells were rung for ‘Coldhouses wife’s burial’. He witnessed a baptism (along with Alexander of Galalaw) for William Scott in Whitfield in 1744. He is probably also the ‘Laird of Coldhouse’ who hired the Hawick Parish mortcloth in 1758. His death at Tandlaw is recorded in the Scots Magazine, and he was said to be ‘aged 90 and upwards’. Robert (1688–1768) 3rd son of William in Milsington. He became tenant at Singlie before 1712. He is probably the tenant in Singlie who was involved in a case with Alexander, flesher in Selkirk in 1762. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Henry Elliot of Lodgegill. Their children included: William, who succeeded as tenant at Singlie; Henry, who farmed at Over Deloraine; Margaret, who married William Scott, farmer at Kirkhope; and Elizabeth. Robert (17th/18th C.) recorded in 1699 in Selkirk as late Dean of Guild. Robert (17th/18th C.) tenant in Linglie, near Selkirk, as recorded in 1708 for a receipt for a transaction involving Philiphaugh Mill. It is unclear how he is related to other Scotts, but it is possible he is the same man as the Dean of guild in 1715 (since the Burgh of Selkirk owned the farm of Linglie). Note the potential confusion with ‘Singlie’. Robert (17th/18th C.) recorded as Burgh Officer in Selkirk in 1716. Robert of Gorrenberry (17th/18th C.) recorded in 1724 when his daughter Margaret married John Elliot of Whitehaugh. He must have been related to the earlier John of Gorrenberry, or perhaps to the Alton branch. However, it is possible that ‘Robert’ is an error for another Scott of Gorrenberry. Robert of Harwood (d.bef. 1744) son of Walter of Harwood and Christian Ker. He may have been history: the ‘Harwood’ recorded in 1721 paying money to the town for ringing the bells at the burial of his child. It is said that the family fortunes were lost through the extravagance of his mother. He sold Harwood to Henry, Duke of Buccleuch (or perhaps confirmed the earlier sale of his father) in about 1738. His widow Elizabeth Mason is recorded leasing the farms of Skelfhill and Fairnyside from the Buccleuch Estates in 1744. This is confirmed to her eldest son Robert, said to be under age in 1744; that document also states that the Duke’s tenants shall keep the privilege of casting peats. It is possible that Robert, recorded later as tenant in Skelfhill was this same son. His 5th son James eventually became farmer at Skelfhill. It is unclear whether the ‘Robert Scott of Harrot’ recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761 was his son (or an error). Robert ‘Rob’ (17th/18th C.) recorded in the Parish Records of the early 1700s setting up seats and making a ‘footgang’ at Hawick Kirk. He was thus presumably a joiner. Robert of Davington (c.1682–1764) 2nd son of Francis of Davington, and descendant of the Scotts of Thirlestane. He succeeded after the death of his father in 1706 and his older brother John about 1710. Sir Francis of Thirlestane had him and his widowed mother thrown off their farm at Cassock. About 1727 he (and his brothers Francis and William) started a legal battle to recover the estates lost by his great-grandfather during the Civil War (based on a document made out by his grandfather Sir John of Thirlestane in Hawick in 1641). This ended in 1744 and he renounced all rights to the lands to his brother Francis in 1747. He was known as ‘Robert the Laird’. He married Mary McAlpine. Their children included: James, who succeeded, and had an only son James, who died without issue; John, attorney in Canonbie, who had several children, but also failed in the male line; and William of Meikledale. Robert (1691/2–1763) agricultural labourer in southern Liddesdale and northern England. He married Christian Turnbull, who died in 1750, aged 55. Their children included: Margaret (d.1771), who died at Longcleuchside; and James (1726/7–1801), who died at Pyke. He died at Blacklin and they are buried at Etterleton. Robert (1698–1771) son of Walter of Woll and Eliza, daughter of Robert Scott of Horsleyhill. He moved to Tamnamore in County Londo and was progenitor of a line of Scotts in Ulster, including proprietors of W. & C. Scott, millmen in Omagh. The family history is described in ‘The Stones that Ground the Corn, The Story of an Irish County Grain Mill, 1850–2000’, by Tony Deeson et al. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Mary ‘Megaohon’ and their children included Mary (b.1762) and Ann (b.1765). Robert (1699–1775) son of Walter ‘Beardie’ and grandfather of Sir Walter of Abbotsford. He received a lease of Sandyknowe from Scott of Harden. He paid the window tax there in the 1750s. He married Barbara Haliburton in 1728 and their children were: Walter (b.1729) W.S., father of the author; Thomas (b.1731), who married Anne Scott of Raeburn and secondly Jean Rutherford of Knowesouth and was tenant farmer at Wolfelee; Janet (1733–1805), who lived in Kelso and died unmarried; Mary (b.1735), also died unmarried; Jean (b.1737), married her relative Walter Scott of Raeburn; Robert (b.1739), who lived at Rosebank, Kelso; Barbara (b.1742), who married Mr. Currie; and John (b.1749), who died young on H.M.S. Southampton. Robert (18th C.) recorded in Whitriggs in 1725 when his son Francis was baptised. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert of Fenwick (18th C.), called ‘Clack’. Son of Francis of Fenwick, he married Jean Scott and later Katherine Elliot of Arkleton. He may be the Robert of Clack who was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1690 (although this could have been the earlier Robert of ‘Clack’, who also owned Fenwick). In about 1710 he and several tenants neighbouring Hawick Common formed themselves into a club and ‘drunk the Magistrates of Hawick, and got liberty from the Magistrates to rest their beaets on the Common from nine in the morning to twelve mid-day’ (according to evidence given on the state of the Common in 1767). He is probably the ‘Laird of Fenick’ who paid Hawick £9 for a year’s rent of the weigh-house in 1729 (suggesting he was the Baron’s Bailie for the Town). He is probably the Robert of Fenwick who (along with Charles of Crumhaugh) in 1747 witnessed a baptism for Gideon and Rachel Scott (perhaps his daughter). He had a son, Gavin, but it is unclear who his wife might have been and if they had other children. The bells of St. Mary’s were rung in 1732 for ‘Lady Glask’s buriall’, which was probably his wife. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1726 he married Helen Dickson from Roberton Parish, the marriage taking place at Commonside. It is possible he was the tenant in Thornyhaugh who witnessed a baptism in 1738; the other witness was Walter at Commonside, raising the possibility that there was a relationship between them. It is possible he was the son of Walter in Crumhaugh and Christian Bennet, born in 1704, who is said to have been a tenant in Crumhaugh who died without issue. Robert (18th C.) tenant farmer at Whitchesters, son of David. He married Elizabeth Douglas. Their son John was tenant at Boonraw. Walter (b.1732) and James (b.1734), born in Wilton, were probably also their children. Col. Robert of Horsleyhill (b.1704) son of Francis, descendant of the Scotts of Midgehope and Tushielaw. He was also referred to as ‘Captain’. His family had extensive lands in Weensland and a town-house at the top of Walter’s Wynd. In 1734 he was made an Honorary Burgess, the first one on record. In 1742 he registered arms at the Lyon Office. He also owned lands elsewhere, and was a heritor of Morebattle Parish. In 1744 he was involved in a dispute with Andrew Chatto, minister of Morebattle and Mow over teinds. He was Hawick Bailie for 4 years until about 1758 (and easy to confuse with the merchant of the same name who was a Bailie at a similar time). He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He was one of the defenders in the action of 1767 brought by the Duke of Buccleuch against the Bailies of Hawick and the neighbouring landowners regarding the division of the Common. He was also one of the witnesses in the Division of the Common proceedings. He is probably the ‘Captain Scott of Weensland’ described in 1777, among those who gained part of the Common (his allocation being included as part of that of Thomas Turnbull of Fenwick). He may be the Robert Scott whose former lands in Weensland are recorded in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls as belonging to James Dickson and passing to auctioneer James Oliver by the mid-19th century. In 1746 in Edinburgh he married Agnes Douglas of Springbank (b.1720), daughter of George Douglas of Friarshaw. They had 2 sons and 2 daughters, with their son Francis James (not John as listed in Keith Scott’s book) succeeding. Robert (b.1704) youngest son of Walter and Christian Bennet. His father was uncle to Walter Scott of Crumhaugh, and had been described as sometimes tenant of Crumhaugh. In 1742 he witnessed (along with John Elliot at Goldielands) a baptism for workman Robert Lawson. In 1743 he received sasine of ‘Croftangry’ in Hawick, as heir to his half-brother Walter. He was also described as tenant in Crumhaugh himself. Also in 1743 he gained ‘a tene ment of land and onestead of houses in Hawick’ which had been ‘deponed’ by his brother Walter in 1730; this may have been the same or different lands. He was then described as ‘multurer’. He probably died without children. Robert (18th C.) recorded as ‘workman in Hawick’ in 1765 when he was among the men selected to perambulate the boundaries of Wilton Common. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (18th C.) baker in Hawick. He was recorded as a ‘baxter’ in 1742 when he witnessed baptisms for shoemaker William (who may have been related) and for wright Henry Haliburton, and in 1743 when he witnessed a baptism for workman Robert Crozier. He may have been father of the later Robert Scott who was also a baker. Robert (18th C.) resident at Roberton Parish. He was at Craik in 1742 when his son James was baptised. Robert (18th C.) resident at Highchesters in 1743 when his son daughter Mary was baptised in Roberton Parish in 1743. Probably the same Robert was recorded in ‘Easter Haychester’ in 1763 in a court case in Selkirk for non-payment of a bill. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (18th C.) recorded in 1742 and 1745 being ‘at Goldilands’ when his children were baptised in Hawick. He married Agnes Rutherford and their children included: Marjorie (b.1733), baptised in Oxnam Parish; and Walter (b.1735), John (b.1737), Anne (b.1739), Charles (b.1742) and Beatrix (b.1745), baptised in Hawick Parish. The witnesses in 1742 were workman Walter Scott and Kirk Officer John Telfer and in 1745 included his servant Walter Scott. It is unclear whether he was directly connected to the former Scotts of Goldielands, but may have been son of the earlier Robert in Goldielands, born in 1702. Robert (18th C.) resident of Roberton itself in 1743 when his daughter Christian was baptised in that parish. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert of Burnhead (d.1755) eldest son of William, who he probably succeeded around 1720. He is probably the Robert ‘of Burnhead’ who in 1718 witnessed a baptism for a child of the deceased William of Breryhill. In 1720 he witnessed baptisms in Hawick for Walter of Crumhaugh and Beatrice Scott and for carrier Henry Paterson and for Clerk to the Regality Thomas Watson. In 1725 he and Adam in Lees witnessed a baptism in Hawick for John Norville and Christian Scott (to whom he may have been related). His sister Eupham married Thomas Watson, who was Clerk to the Regality of Hawick, and Margaret (probably another sister), married Patrick Scott and secondly James Scott, surgeon in Hawick. He was recorded living at Clarilaw in 1721, 1725 and 1727. In 1722 and 1724 he witnessed baptisms in Wilton for Walter of Crumhaugh. He served as a Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch for Eskdale in the period 1728-43. He was mentioned in 1735 in the position where the widow of Robert Scott of Falnash sold her property on the Howegate to Patrick Hardie. In 1719 in Wilton he married Agnes, 2nd daughter of Gideon Scott of Falnash and Mary Scott of Thirlestane. Their children were: Mary (b.1721); William (b.1723), who succeeded; Agnes (b.1725); Gideon (b.1727); Margaret, who married Rev. Samuel Charters of Wilton in 1786, and succeeded her brother; and Walter. The witnesses in 1721 were Gideon of Falnash and Walter of Crumhaugh. The witnesses in 1725 were Thomas Watson, writer in Hawick and James Scott, surgeon in Hawick (who married his sister Margaret). The 1727 baptism is recorded being ‘to Robert Scott of Burnhead and his Lady Agnes Scott’; the witnesses were James (perhaps the surgeon) and writer Thomas Watson. It seems like he must be the ‘Robert Scott, Laird of Burnfoot or Burnhead’ who in 1722 married Ann Stoddart in Ashkirk Parish; however, this conflicts with him marrying Agnes Scott. Robert of Hummelknowes (18th C.) recorded in 1753 when he paid the window tax in Cavers Parish. This was for 14 windows, as William (perhaps his father) had paid in 1748. His name is written ‘Robert Scott Esqr. Humbleknows’, the ‘Esqr.’ suggesting he was a man of some status. It is possible there is a connection with the Scotts of Burnhead, who owned Hummelknowes in the 19th century. Robert (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He married Anne Porteous and their children included: Robert (b.1741); Jean (b.1742). It is possible that the Robert married to Elspeth (or ‘Eppy’) Porteous was the same man, with children Robert (b.1737) and Janet (b.1739). The witnesses in 1742 were ex-Bailie Robert Howison and merchant John Ruecastle. Bailie Robert (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He was Bailie in the 1750s and also recorded as Bailie in 1763. He was possibly the same merchant Robert who had been involved with the 1740 bond for the construction of the Teviot Bridge. He may be the merchant who witnessed a baptism for Andrew Turnbull ‘Town Post’ in 1742. He is probably the Bailie Robert who witnessed baptisms for carrier Gilbert Oliver in 1746, for merchant Walter (along with shoemaker Andrew) in 1761 and also for gardener John Lamb in 1761. In 1762 he (along with miller James) was witness for a baptism for miller Adam (who may have been related). He is probably the merchant Robert who married Betty, daughter of William Aitkin (or Aitken), and whose children included: William (b.1743); George (b.1745); and William (again, b.1747). The witnesses in 1745 were mason David Laing and merchant George Scott (who may have been related) and in 1747 were merchant George and shoemaker Walter. He also witnessed a baptism in 1745 for miller James (who may have been a relative). Probably the same Bailie Robert witnessed a baptism in 1757 for miller Adam (who may have been related), along with merchant George. In 1765 he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Andrew (who may have been related). In 1767 it was described that his father-in-law, William Aitken, had lighthouse keeper of a house in Hawick, for which he had the fee for his son William. He is probably the Bailie Robert whose son James died in 1777. It may have been a relative of his who was the Robert whose son Robert became a skinner’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1682. Robert (18th C.) married Helen Scoon in Hawick Parish in 1758. Robert (d.bef. 1780) tenant of Skelfhill. He is recorded being at Skelfhill in 1766 when he witnessed a baptism for Robert Laidlaw of Falnash. He is recorded as ‘late in Skelfhill’ in a notice to his creditors published in 1780; he had been declared bankrupt. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts associated with Skelfhill. However, it is possible he was son of Robert of Harwood (whose wife had a connection to Skelfhill). He is probably the Robert recorded at Skelfhill in 1727, 1729, 1731 and 1738 when his children Robert, George, Janet and James were baptised in Cavers Parish. He may also be the ‘Mr. Scott in Scalhill’ whose son John was baptised in 1741. It is unclear how he was related to the Robert who was in Skelfhill in 1772. Robert (18th C.) recorded in Moumbenger Burn in 1761 and 1765, when he had discharges with the Burgh of Selkirk. Robert (18th C.) recorded as resident of Whitchesters in 1766. He was probably related to the earlier Robert, farmer in Whitchesters. He married Margaret Turner in 1759 and their children included: Robert (b.1760); Walter (b.1762); and John (b.1766). Witnesses in 1766 were John Hobkirk and Robert Liddell. He may be the Robert recorded in 1771 when he paid the Hawick Council for 3000 divots (presumably from Hawick Common). Rev. Robert (1714–96) born at Coldhouse (in Wilton), son of Robert. He was licensed as a minister by the Presbytery of Selkirk in 1774 and became minister at Innerleithen in 1777. There is a receipt from him in 1782 preserved in Selkirk. In 1788 (and continued in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls) he was recorded as owner of Coldhouse and Tandlaw, with a value of £80 together. In 1781 he married Margaret (or perhaps Agnes) Chisholme (d.1817), daughter of Thomas, the Selkirk surgeon. They had 8 children: Agnes (1782–1802); Thomas Chisholme (1784–1811), who died in Bengal; William Chisholme (b.1785) who probably later owned Chisholme House; Charles James James Scott (1787–1807), who died at sea; Jean (b.1789); James Robert (1790–1833), who lived in Cheltenham and Jedburgh; Robert (b.1791); and Alexander (1793–1860), who was a friend of Lord Byron. It seems that Burns met him when he passed through Innerleithen on his Borders tour in 1787. Later in the 1800s his lands of Coldhouse and Tandlaw were owned by Mrs. Mary Ann Livingstone or Finlay, who was probably a descendant. Robert ‘Rob the Laird’ (18th C.) only son of James, who was a son of Francis of Davington, and direct descendant of the Scotts of Thirlestane. He farmed at Holm (near Eskdalemuir) and then at Binks. He took the daughters of James Scott of Davington (his cousin) to court in an attempt to gain the remaining family estates. In 1786 he was imprisoned in Dumfries Tolbooth for a month for illegally resuming possession of the farm of Davington. In 1792 he drafted a genealogy of his family. He had no known children. He is mentioned in notes to the Ettrick Shepherd's poem ‘Thirlestane, a fragment’; it is stated that he was called ‘Rob the Laird’ because he would have been Laird, and also that he referred to the murderous Lady of Thirlestane as ‘the d–d b–h’.

Robert (1721/2–1807) gardener at Wells. He was listed there in 1778 and 1779, when the estate was held by William Nassau Elliot. He was still there in 1785–88 when it was owned by Gilbert Elliott. By 1791 probably the same Robert was a gardener at Weens, working for William Oliver. In 1794 he was again recorded at Wells, working for Gilbert Eliott. He married Margaret Hope, and she died in 1786, aged 77. Their children included: Elizabeth (1748/9–1824), who married John Fiddes; and Margaret (1753/4–98). They are buried in Bedrule kirkyard. Robert (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living in Cavers itself in 1748 when his son James was baptised. He could be the Robert living in Denholm whose when his children John (b.1753), Janet (b.1757) and Margaret (b.1761) were baptised. Robert (18th C.) tenant in Denholm. He seems to be distinct from another Robert who was in Denholm at the same time, based on the fact that they both had children baptised in 1757 and in 1761 (only a couple of months apart each time). His children included James (b.1757) and Andrew (b.1761). He could be the Robert, farmer at Denholm Farm, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 4 horses; note that the place he farmed was distinct from Denholm Hill and Denholm Mill farms. He could be the tenant in Denholm whose nephew James was listed on the ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799. Robert (18th C.) grandson of Archibald Goodfellow, his mother marrying a Scott, and his brother being William ‘the Auld Mason’. He was shepherd at Merrylaw. His parents were probably Jean Goodfellow and shepherd John. Robert (18th C.) innkeeper in Hawick recorded supplying the refreshments to a meeting relating to Wilton Kirk in 1764. He is probably the same Robert where it is said that the local Justices of the Peace would meet in the winter, when it was too cold in the Town House. Robert (1727/8–83) resident at Lanton. His son Thomas set up a memorial stone in Bedrule kirkyard to him and other members of the family. He married Jean, who died at Lantonhill in 1819, aged 86. He may be the ‘Capt. Scott’ whose lands in Lanton are recorded in the valuation rolls of the 18th century. Robert, who is recorded in 1788 as owner of the adjacent ‘part of James Henderson’s lands in Langtoun’ may have been his son. Robert (b.c.1730) younger son of Alexander, who was miller in Rulewater and later tenant at Roughheugh Mill. He took over from his father as tenant in Roughheugh Mill in Wilton. He was recorded there in a baptismal record of 1790 and on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He is recorded as owner of the ‘Cornmill of Roughheugh, acquired from Langlands’ according to the county valuation in 1788 and the Tax Rolls of 1811 (even although he may have been deceased by then). He appears to have married Ann Brown, and their children were: Alexander of Kinninghall (b.1778), who married Margaret Bell; Thomas of Little Cote, who married, but died without issue; Euphan (or Euphemia, b.1775), who married her cousin John, brother of Alexander of Falla; and Alice (or Alison, b.1782), who married Mr. Briggs of Middlesnows. He Secondly married Janet Buchkam and had children: Mary (b.1786); Helen (b.1788); Robert (b.1790); and William (b.1792). He may be the Robert who in 1770, along with Thomas, witnessed a baptism for clothier and dyer Thomas Turnbull, resident of Roughheugh. Robert of Orchard (1731–1813) younger son of Robert of Falnash. He was Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch in 1758–68 for ‘Teviotdalehead’, which included Hawick, Wilton, Cavers, Teviothead and Robertson. He was probably the Robert ‘in Burnfoot’ who was a factor for the Duke of Buccleuch during the proceedings for the division of Wilton Common in 1764–65; he was said to be 28 in 1764, was a grandson of Gideon of Falnash (whose office he occupied) and stated that his grandfather... had died in about 1722 or 1723. In 1765 he applied to the Town Council to be allowed to cut turf on Hawick Moor ‘for covering part of the office houses at Branksholm’, and was allowed to do so. However, in 1766 he is probably the Duke’s Chamberlain who led a group of his tenants and farm workers to try to put their sheep and cattle onto the small pieces of land that the Town had let on the Common (in a deliberate attempt to stop encroachment by neighbouring tenants); these confrontations came close to resulting in violence. In 1767 he represented the Duke of Buccleuch at the perambulation of Hawick Common made as part of the court case for its division.

On the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls he is recorded as ‘Robert Scott Esqr.’ at Orchard Cottage, when he owned 3 farm horses as well as 1 saddle horse. Also in 1797 he was listed as being of ‘Cotage’, when he was taxed for male servants. He paid the land tax at Orchard in 1811. In Wilton in 1759 he married Elizabeth, daughter of Bailie Robert Howison of Orchard, and eventually became proprietor of Orchard himself (probably inheriting after the death of his nephew William Dickson in 1788). Their children were: Margaret (b.1761), who married Dr. Andrew Wilson from Kelso; Robert (b.1762), who probably died young; and Violet (b.1765), who married farmer William Bell, from whom was descended William Scott Bell of Woll. He died in Edinburgh, and is then described as ‘late of Orchard’. Robert (18th C.) carrier in Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Deans in 1752 and their children included: Isabel (b.1753); Jean (b.1756); John (b.1758); Walter (b.1760); and Agnes (b.1765). He may be the Hawick carrier listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Robert (18th C.) weaver in Hawick Parish. In 1761 he married Jane Little, who was from Wilton Parish. Their children included Jane (b.1762), John (b.1765) and Elizabeth (b.1767). The witnesses in 1765 were the whole congregation. Robert (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at ‘Broadlieshiel’ (i.e. Broadleeshiel) in 1762, 1763 and 1767 and ‘Broadlie burnfoot’ in 1771. Perhaps the same Robert was at Gair in 1769. His children probably included: George (b.1762); William (b.1763); Janet (b.1765); Charles (b.1767); James (b.1768); Agnes (b.1769); and George (again, b.1771), probably the Wilton contractor, who was father of twins in 1799. He could be the Robert who married Margaret Dickson in Roberton in 1761. There were Scotts on the list of communicants in the Borthwick Water in 1650 who might conceivably have been related. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Scott and their children included: Isabel (b.1764); Janet (b.1771); and Helen (b.1773). The witnesses in 1764 were John (probably a relative) and Alexander Bumyan. Robert (b.1757), Walter (b.1759) and Margaret (b.1762), baptised in Wilton Parish, could also be his children. Robert (18th C.) resident at Whithope in 1757, 1764 and 1765 when children of his were baptised in Roberton Parish. His children included Janet (b.1757), William (b.1764) and Robert (b.1765). He could be the Robert who married Mary Scott in Roberton in 1756. Robert (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Phillopheshiel in 1765 when his daughter Jean was baptised. Robert (18th C.) baker in Hawick. He was listed as ‘Junr. Baker’ in 1762 when one of his children was baptised. He was described as ‘junior, baker’ in 1769 when he was appointed to the commission to discuss the Common with representatives of the Duke of Buccleuch. He was thus probably a member of the Council. It seems likely that his father was also Robert. Probably the same Robert was recorded in 1766, along with barber Francis (perhaps a relative), when he witnessed a baptism for James Rae and Agnes Scott (perhaps also related); his designation appears to be ‘Cross Keys’, suggesting he was proprietor of one of the inns of that name (perhaps the older one on the High Street). He married Mary McGaughan (or ‘Megahan’), whose death in 1776 is recorded as ‘Mrs. Scott Cross keys’. Their children included: Mary (b.1762) and Ann (b.1765). Their witnesses in 1762 were writer John Gledstains and baker William Elliot. Robert (1735/6–1807) shepherd at Baldhill. His wife was Betty Park (d.1798) and their children included William and Betty. The family are buried at Teviothead. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1758 he married Christian Scott, this being recorded in Hawick and Hobkirk Parishes. Their children included: Jean (b.1758); Isabel (b.1761); William (b.1763); and Walter (b.1765). The witnesses in 1763 were William Paterson and ‘Mr’ Walter Scott (presumably a local landowner). Robert (18th C.) recorded in 1763 along with Betty Scott, when their daughter Mary was baptised in Roberton Parish. They were listed ‘being Sponsors for ye child’, which may suggest that they had moved from the parish.

Robert (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded as ‘Mr. Robt. Scott in Skelfhill’ in 1772, when his son John was baptised. It is unclear how he might have been related to the earlier and later Roberts who lived at Skelfhill. Robert (18th C.) resident at Wester Parkhill in 1774 when his son Robert was baptised in Roberton Parish. There are many possibilities of children of Robert born in Roberton around that time that could be his. Robert (18th/19th C.) 4th son of William, tenant in Milsington. He was a manufacturer in Hawick and died unmarried. Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1759 he married Margaret Turner and their children included Robert (b.1760), Walter (b.1762) and John (b.1766). His wife died in Wilton Parish in 1817. Robert (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). In 1786 he and ex-Bailie Andrew witnessed a baptism for the sitting Bailie William (who was probably related). He and Andrew (also a shoemaker) witnessed the indenture of apprenticeship of John Pringle to William Beck in 1794. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Roberts. Robert of Rosebank (1739–1804) 3rd son of Robert of Sandyknoke. He was uncle of Sir Walter the writer. He was Captain of vessel in the Merchant Navy and later purchased the small estate of Rosebank near Kelso. He is probably the bank agent at Kelso who was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1788, with his being ‘a lienten [sic] vote from Baron Ruthervurd’. He served on the Lieutenancy Committee for Roxburghshire in 1798. He died unmarried and was buried at Kelso Abbey. He left his estate to his nephew, Sir Walter, whose literary career he had long encouraged. Robert (18th C.) married Mary Welsh in Southdean Parish in 1775. Robert (18th C.) lived at Arkleton in Ewesdale. He married Janet Turnbull and their children included: Esther (b.1778); James (b.1780); John (b.1782); unnamed (b.1783); and James (again, b.1784). Perhaps the same Robert and Janet Turnbull had children Helen (b.1786) and Esther (b.1789) baptised in Hawick. Robert (18th C.) gardener at Cavers in 1785, when he was working for Capt. John Douglas. It is possible he is the Robert in Dykes recorded in 1784 when his son Thomas was baptised in Cavers Parish. Robert (18th C.) gardener and driver at Knoue in Minto Parish in 1785, when he was working for Thomas Turnbull. In 1786 he was listed as a ‘Chaise driver’. Robert (1758–1815) eldest son of James. He farmed at Skelfhill, like his father. His son James in turn became farmer there. He is probably the Robert in Skelfhill who made statements about his family history in 1809, e.g. that ‘Old Hobbie Scott in Skelfhill’ was his grandfather. Robert (18th C.) workman in Hawick. He married Jane Scott and their children included Thomas (b.1785) and James (b.1789). Robert (18th/19th C.) from Wilton Parish. In 1794 he married Isabel Armstrong, who was also from Wilton. Their children included: James (b.1796); William (b.1799); Thomas (b.1802); William (again, b.1803); and Robert (b.1805). Robert (d.bef. 1810) weaver in Hawick. His son Andrew died in 1810, when his cognomen appears to be given as ‘Killdry’. He is surely related to Adam, who had essentially the same nickname. Robert (18th C.) hosier in Hawick. In 1786 he and weaver Charles (perhaps ‘Clairlie o the Crescent’) witnessed a baptism for George Blaikie and Agnes (who may have been sister of him and Charles). He could be the son of Charles and Janet Porteous baptised in Hawick in 1764. Robert (b.c.1760) agricultural labourer living at Dovemount in 1841. Margaret (b.c.1790) was also there, and probably his daughter. He may be the ‘R. Scott, Dovemount’ who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. Robert (18th/19th C.) from Galashiels, in 1794 he married Betty Renwick, who was from Hawick. Perhaps they are the couple of the same names who had children in Melrose in 1799 and 1800. farmer at Whitfield in 1797, according to the Horse Robert (18th/19th C.) farmer at Whitfield in 1797, according to the Horse Tax Rolls. He owned 3 horses at that time. Robert (18th/19th C.) farmer at ‘Kerritrig’ (i.e. Carewoodrig) in Ewesdale in 1792–97 according to the Horse Tax Rolls. He also paid the dog and clock taxes in 1797. Robert (18th/19th C.) servant at Mervinslaw in Southdean Parish. In 1797 he was listed in the Lieutenancy Book for Roxburghshire and he was still a servant at Mervinslaw on the 1801 ballot for the Militia. Robert (18th/19th C.) servant at Mackside in Southdean Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. Robert (18th/19th C.) weaver at Hassendean in Minto Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. Robert (18th/19th C.) gardener at Riddell in Lilliesleaf Parish in the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. Robert (18th/19th C.) recorded as ‘Bundle’ when his grandchild died in 1805. He is probably the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (b.1764/5) born in Wilton Parish, he lived at Dykeneuk. In 1841 he was an agricultural labourer living at Dykeneuk, along with Isabella (probably his sister) and William Ormiston. In 1851 he is listed as an unmarried retired farmer, living at Dykeneuk with a lodger, William Ormiston (probably his sister’s step-son), and his niece Janet Ormiston (daughter of his sister Isabel and Adam Ormiston). He may be the Robert listed at Drinkstone among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835. Robert (b.c.1765) mason who lived at Hummelknowhaugh, recorded on the 1841 census. He could be the Hawick mason who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauty of the Border’ in 1821. Robert (18th/19th C.) owner of parts of Weensland according to the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. He had purchased 2 parts from William Irvine and Adam Ormiston and (presumably the same Robert) had already sold part to Andrew Porteous. By about 1874 these parts were owned by manufacturer Walter Wilson and others. Robert (b.c.1770s) tenant at ‘Titus foord’, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. His farm was probably the same place also known as ‘Tythehousefield’. Robert (18th/19th C.) farmer at Midlem Mill on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Lilliesleaf Parish. Robert (b.c.1770s) tenant at Lymiecleuch, according to the ballot list for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799. James was servant there at the same time and perhaps related. Robert (b.c.1770s) mason at Dewyhaugh on the ballot list for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799. He was probably related to David, who was farmer there at the same time, and David junior who was also on the ballot in 1799. His name appeared at Dewyhaugh again on the 1801 Militia ballot, along with David and mason Christopher. He may be the son of David baptised in Cavers Parish in 1777. Robert (1773–1844) eldest son of William, tenant of Singlie. He became tenant farmer at Todshawhaugh in 1800 (after the death of Walter Grieve of Bradholme Park). He was leasing ‘Helms’ (i.e. Whames) along with Todshawhaugh in 1802 and was listed being in arrears for Todshawhaugh in 1812. Also in 1812 he was recorded as tenant at Todshawhaugh on the ballot for the Militia in Roberton Parish in 1812. He was involved in a loan with the Jardines and Elliotts of Harwood in 1823. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He married Janet Jardine of Thorleshope. Their children included: Christian (b.1804) who married James Dickson of Chatto and Housebyres in 1827; William (b.1806), who died young; Gideon (d.c.1835), farmer at Middemoss, who married Barbara Armstrong; Margaret (b.1810); Janet (b.1813), who also died young; Janet (b.1814); and Agnes (b.1819). One of his daughters (possibly Jessie) married William Dove, who succeeded his father-in-law as tenant of Todshawhaugh. Robert (18th/19th C.) wright at the Sandbed. The deaths of his daughter Betty and son Walter are recorded in 1810, as well as the death of another son in 1824. He could be the wright in Hawick listed on the ballot for the Militia in 1799 and still on the list in 1801. Robert (b.c.1770s) recorded as ‘Clerk to Mr Turnbull Allars’ in Hawick when listed (along with another clerk of the same name) in the 1799 list for the Militia ballot. He was also ‘Clerk to Baillie Turnbull’ on the 1801 list. He is probably the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Priesthaugh. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauty of the Border’ in 1821. He was probably related to Walter, who farmed at Priesthaugh earlier and David who was there later. Robert (b.c.1783) agricultural labourer in Newcastleton, living at about 3 Langholm Street. His wife was probably Isabella, and children included Thomas, Robert, Elizabeth and Isabella. The family were working as carriers in 1851, when he was already deceased. However, he was still listed in Slater’s 1852 directory as a carrier, leaving Hawick for Newcastleton on Thursdays. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Isobel Wight and their children included: James (b.1811); Isobel (b.1814); and Margaret (b.1817). Robert (18th/19th C.) recorded as ‘Ro. Scott’ at about 5 High Street on Wood’s 1824 map. He could be the same as one of the other contemporary Roberts. Robert (18th/19th C.) writer (i.e. lawyer) of Hawick, recorded at least as early as 1814. He was listed on the High Street in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Probably the same Robert was listed as an accountant on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He could be the accountant listed in 1841, living on the High Street (probably No. 45) with farmer James, likely his brother; this Robert was 74 in 1861 and could be the son of William and Margaret Goodfellow born in Hawick in 1786. He is probably the Robert recorded in a letter regarding the estate of Thomas Telford, preserved in the Walter Mason collection. It is possible he is the ‘Clerk to Mr Turnbull Banker’ (perhaps Thomas of Fenwick) in Hawick listed (along with another clerk of the same name) in the 1799 list for the Militia ballot. Robert (b.c.1780) mason in Hobkirk Parish. He was based at ‘Scaur Nook’ (near Langraw) in 1841. He is probably the mason of this name who was said to be one of the last residents of the hamlet of Unthank in Hobkirk Parish. Robert (b.c.1780) resident of Whitlaw according to the ballot for the Militia in Hawick Parish in 1801. He was described as ‘lame of a Leg’, and hence presumably not fit to serve. Robert (b.c.1780) resident of Hawick Muir according to the ballot for the Militia in Hawick Parish in 1801. He was clearly separate from the Robert at Whitlaw, but may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (b.c.1780) servant at Larriston according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish. Robert (b.c.1780) stockmaker in Denholm according to the ballot for the Militia in 1801. Andrew is listed right after him and so they may have been related. Robert (b.c.1780) recorded as servant to Thomas Turnbull at West Fodderlee on the 1801 ballot for the Militia. Robert (b.1783/4) born in Hawick Parish, was farmer at Kaimend. He married Isabella Scott in Kirkton Parish in 1807. Their children included: Mary (b.1808); Thomas (b.1810); Janet (b.1812); Archibald (b.1815); and Robert (b.1819). He was there from at least 1841, and in 1861 was farming 160 acres and employing 3 labourers. Robert ‘Robbie the Cow’ (b.1786/7) owner of a tenament at 43 High Street, living on the ground floor in the mid-19th century. The nickname was probably because he kept cows in the back of his house. His housekeeper (Barbara Anderson) was known as ‘Babbie the Cow’. In 1841 he was recorded as an accountant and living with farmer James (probably his older brother) and 2 servants, including ‘Barbary’. By 1851 he was there with only ‘Babbie’, when listed as ‘Accountant and occupier of 26 Acres of land’. By around 1860 the house was occupied by George Brown, green-grocer and was later rebuilt by Walter Paisley, ironmonger. He may be the Robert born in Hawick in 1786 to William and Margaret Goodfellow, with brothers George (b.1778), James (b.1782) and William (b.1791), as well as 2 earlier Roberts (who must have died young). He could be the grocer and meal dealer on the High Street recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Robert ‘Rob’ (1788–1872) born at Harden House, son of John and Helen Elsington. He joined the local militia when very young and enlisted in the 85th Regiment of Foot in 1809. He served in the Peninsular War under Sir Arthur Wellesley (later Duke of Wellington), seeing lots of action, and was sent to America in 1814, where he was said to be close by Gen. Ross when he fell at Baltimore. He himself was wounded at New Orleans and he was discharged in 1816, retiring as a Colour-Sergeant with a pension. He settled back in Hawick where he was landlord of the Red Lion Inn at the Sandbed (as recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory). He also worked as a stockmaker and was a noted supporter of the strikers during the ‘Lang Stand Oot’ of 1822. He could be the stock-making recorded in Wilton Parish at Pathhead in 1835 and Roadside in 1840 and 1841. In 1841 he and his family were living at No. 5 Wilton Bank. He married Helen Oliver from Jedburgh. Their children were: Helen, who became Mrs. Greig; George; an unnamed child; John; Elizabeth; Gilbert; Robert (b.1827); Andrew; Agnes; Janet, who became Mrs. Dobson; Adam, who moved to Ballarat, Australia; and Mary. His son Adam erected a headstone in memory of him and his wife in Wilton Old Cemetery. Robert (b.1792/3) farmer at Castle-side in Ashkirk Parish, originally from Castleton Parish. He may have been son of George and Margaret Murray. His wife was Helen, and he secondly married Anne S. In 1841 he was living at Castleside with his wife and mother Helen. Robert (1794/5–1860) son of William, who was a gentleman’s servant, and Margaret Gray, he was a labourer who lived at Stobs Woodfoot. He was unmarried and lived with his brother William and sister Nell (i.e. Helen). He was buried in Wilton cemetery. Robert (1795/6–1855) shepherd at Lodgegill on the Tarras Water. He was listed there as an agricultural labourer in 1841. He married Margaret Scott, and she died in 1868. Their children included Margaret, Eliza, Jane, George and William. He died in Hawick. Robert (1796–1872) son of John and grandson of Robert. He was tenant farmer at East Boonraw; he was listed there on the 1841 census and still there in 1868. He married Agnes Margaret Scott, who died in 1831, following childbirth. Their children were: Janet or ‘Jeanette’ (b.1819), who married farmer Thomas Potts and lived near Hawick; Elizabeth (‘Betty’, b.1820), who married farmer Robert Miller; Margaret (1821–97), who married Gideon Harkness and emigrated to Owen Sound, Ontario; John (b.1823), who emigrated to America, but was murdered for his money by the couple he was lodging with in Wisconsin; Ellen (b.1825), who died unmarried after emigrating to stay with her brothers William and then Adam; Adam (b.1828), who married Elizabeth Anderson of the Burnfoot on Ale family and they emigrated to America, his son Thomas A. later returning to Hawick; and William (b.1830), who emigrated to settle at Pine Bluff, Wisconsin, where his brother John had been murdered, and he married Martha Rice. He later married Janet Douglas, who came from Jedburgh and died in 1888, aged 71. Their children were: Robert, who married Matha Craig and lived in Toronto; Douglas, who married Susan Ann Woodcroft from Buckinghamshire, emigrated to Canada in 1869 and worked as a contractor; Euphemia, who married farmer Walter Thompson; Agnes, who married Tom Graham from Edinburgh; Eliza, who married John Moffatt and emigrated to America; John, who married Margaret Richardson, who also emigrated to America; Walter, who lived in Manchester; George, who married Julia Frizzel and worked with his brother Douglas. Robert of Eweslees (b.1797/8) one of the founder members of the Wisp Club. He was born in Cavers Parish. He was farmer at Eweslees in 1841, in 1851 was employing 5 labourers there and by 1861 was farmer of 1700 acres, employing 2 shepherds. He was still there in 1868. His wife was Violet and their children included Barbara and Jane. Robert ‘Bob’ (b.1800/1) auctioneer and appraiser in Lilliesleaf, who also worked as a frameworker. He was on Back Road in the 1861 census. It was said that he, along with John Lunn and Tammie Turnbull, used to gather in the Post Office to sort out all the business of the village. He married Elizabeth Whitworth and their children included: David (b.1826/7); Sarah (b.1828/9); Janet (b.1831/2); Wilhelmina Kidd (b.1843); and Elizabeth (b.1844). Robert ‘Robbie’ (1800–1868) son of George of Calaburn. He was apprentice smith with Adam Legerwood at Forkins. He became a blacksmith, vet and farrier and also a local authority on cows and their diseases. He worked in Kirkton and then at Cauldmill after James Smith moved to Hawick). In 1820 he married Jessie (1799–1869), eldest daughter of Moses Renwick. In 1841 he was at Cauldmill with his wife and children Betty, Robert, Ann (or Mary Ann) and Jane. His children were: George (b.1820), Mary (b.1827), Jessy (b.1830); and Jane Grant (b.1840), who all died young; Violet (b.1822); Betty (b.1824), who became Mrs. Oliver and died in Canada; Robert ‘Young Robbie’ (b.1834), also a local vet; and Mary Ann (b.1837), who became Mrs. Fleming and died in Canada. He is buried in Cavers and Kirkton Parish Churchyard. Robert (b.1800/1) agricultural labourer at Bewlie in 1841. His wife was Betty and their children included Isabel, John, Alexander, Margaret, Agnes, Betty, Mary and George. Robert (b.1804/5) listed in 1861 as farmer of 10 acres, living at 1 Burnflat. His younger brother Gilbert (a woollen weaver) also lived there. Robert (b.c.1805) farmer at Todlaw, in Cavers Parish. He was born in Jedburgh. In 1841 he was listed as a mason journeyman, but by 1851 was a farmer. He married Elizabeth Wilson. Their children included Margaret (1833–96, who married Denholm clothier Robert Turnbull), Jessie and Robert. He is probably the Robert, married to Elizabeth Wilson, whose son Thomas was baptised in East Bank Kirk in 1831. Robert (d.c.1840) tenant farmer in Denholm. He married Helen Turnbull in Cavers in 1835. Their children included: John (1836–80), botanist and gardener; and Nancy (b.1837), who later lived in Garvald, East Lothian. Both he and his wife were dead by 1841, with his son John being raised by an aunt, Jean Turnbull. His daughter is probably the Agnes who was living with John and Jean Turnbull (her uncle and aunt) at the Cross Keys in Denholm in 1861. Robert (19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Isobel Welsh and their children included Robert (b.1827). Robert (19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Margaret Aitkin and their children included Robert (b.1827) and Walter (b.1830). Robert (19th C.) listed as a toy dealer on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. Robert (b.1813/4) cabinet-maker on Buccleuch Street. His wife was Margaret (from Selkirk) and children included Susan, Robert, William, Thomas, Walter, Jane and Helen. He was probably related to Thomas and Robert Scott, recorded as wheelwrights on Buccleuch Street on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. It seems likely he was son of Thomas, joiner at the Sandbed on the 1841 directory, and brother of Thomas and Walter, who were also trainee joiners there. He may be the ‘Robert, jun.’ listed as a joiner on Ladylaw Place in Slater’s 1852 directory. By 1861 he was living at 52 Loan. Robert of Kinninghall (1817–97) son of Alexander, who farmed at Kinninghall. He was grandson of the tenant of Roughheugh Mill. He farmed at Little Cote and Kinninghall in Cavers Parish. He was at Kinninghall in 1851, when he was farmer of 200 acres, employing 7 men and in 1861 he was recorded employing 20 people there. In the 1860s he was farmer of Little Cote and also Kinninghall together. He later farmed at Falnash. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1863. In 1845 in Hawick he married Mary Scott Purdom (b.c.1824), daughter of Robert Purdom, Hawick Cornet and Bailie; she was sister of Thomas Purdom, Town Clerk. Their children included: Mary (1845–99); Margaret Bell (1847–1902); Alexander (b.1849), who died young; Alexander (again, 1851–1933) of Kinninghall and later Vencen, Yetholm; Robert Purdom (1853–1929), who married Kate Worth; Agnes P. (b.1855), who married Alexander Nichol; William (b.1857); Walter Purdom (1859–1934), tenant in Falnash; Thomas John (b.1861), who married Ada M. Fox; and Ann Isabella (or ‘Annie’, 1864–1933). He died at Falnash and bequeathed the lease of Kinninghall to his son Alexander and Falnash to his son Walter. Robert (b.c.1820) grocer and spirit dealer at about 9 Howegate, recorded in 1841. Robert (1834–1908) son of William and Scott, who lived at Synton. He was born at Langtonheight in Ashkirk Parish. In 1851 and 1861 he was a Thatcher still living at Dimpleknowe with his mother and brothers. He was a shepherd at Synton Parkhead for the last 30 years of his life. He was an office-bearer in Ashkirk United Free Church and known for exhibiting in local horticultural shows. He married Jane Scott and their children were: William (b.1866), born in Roberton; John (b.1869), born in Lilliesleaf; Anne (b.1872), born in Lilliesleaf; and Mary (b.1875), born at Synt Moss End. He died at Synton Parkhead. "Robert Young Robbie" (1834–1902) son of ‘Robbie’. He was a blacksmith and qualified veterinary surgeon, living at Cauldmill, with a practice in the Rule valley and around Hawick. He specialised in cows, like his father. He was remembered ‘as a man of few words, but of good judgement’. A story is told of how he was frustrated at a visiting couple, fawning over their newborn son, and when they said ‘what a fine heid of hair he hez’ replied ‘Hair, he’s nae mair hair than a hagges’. He married Catherine Anna Little, daughter of William, farmer at Birneyknowe and Selkirk. Their children were: Robert (b.1867), who also became a local vet; William Little (b.1868), farmer at Langrigg; Janet Thorburn (1870–1951); George (b.1871), who worked at Birmingham and Midland Pharmaceutical College; Andrew Little (1873–92); Catherine (or Kate, 1874/5–91); and James (1883/4–1938). Robert ‘Robbie Scare a Hair’ (b.c.1848) son of grocer Thomas (‘Sly Tannie’) he was an auctioneer in Hawick. He apparently used to attend social evenings in David Shiel’s public house on Baker Street, along with almost a dozen other Robert Scotts, all of whom had distinguishing nicknames! Robert ‘Rob o the Bent’ (19th C.) one of the men of the same name who regularly gathered in a Baker Street howf in the mid-19th century. Robert ‘Kettle Robbie’ (19th C.) another of the men of the same name who gathered in a Baker Street pub in the mid-1800s. Robert ‘Robbie Barrel’ (19th C.) another of the Robert Scotts who went to the same inn in the mid-1800s. He may be the Robert listed along with Thomas as wheelwrights on Buccleuch Street, according to Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Robert ‘Selkirk Rob’ (19th C.) one more of the men of the same name who frequented the same pub in the mid-1800s. Robert ‘De-num Rob’ (19th C.) another of the Robert Scotts who went to the same Baker Street pub in the mid-19th century. It is possible he is the Robert recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as a ‘heckler’ in Denholm. This same heckler in Denholm was involved in a dispute in 1794 with James Young in Crawknowe. Robert ‘Hensmeat’ (19th C.) one more of the men of the same name who frequented David Shiel’s inn on Baker Street in the mid-1800s. He was brother of James, Governor of Hawick Poorhouse. On one occasion he is supposed to have been chairing the evening and said ‘Rob Scare a Hair will gie us a song’ when one of the other Robert Scotts appeared, to which the reply was ‘Aw’ve nae objection, but if ee wull ca’ me ‘Scare a Hair’ aw’ll ca’ you by your name ‘Hensmeat’ ’ [JHH], from which we can assume the name was somewhat insulting. Robert (b.1827/8) carter in Newcastleton, son of Robert. In 1852 he is recorded running a cart to Carlisle once a week. In 1851 he was living with his mother Isabella and siblings Thomas, Elizabeth and Isabella at about 3 Langholm Street. His was described as a ‘Feuar’s Son’ there in 1861. Robert (1853–1929) son of Robert and Mary Purdom. He was educated in Hawick and at Edinburgh Academy and trained as a banker. He emigrated to Australia in 1876, where he was a bank manager. In about 1897 he purchased a parcel of land near Warraninni in Bridgetown, Western Australia, which he farmed with his sons; this was later split into ‘Dalmore’ and ‘Falnash’. He married Kate Worth and they had: 3 sons, Robert Wooley, Alexander ‘Alec’ Bell and William ‘Bill’ Purdom; and 4 daughters, Mary (who married F.R. Bradley), Annie Isabel (who married M.E. Minchin), Kate Louise (who married B. Wardell-Johnson) and Ethel Margueritte. He died in Sandringham, Victoria. Robert (19th/20th C.) son of Robbie, he was a local vet, like his father and grandfather before him. He lived at Oliver Crescent. His children included: Robert, who was killed at Ypres on his 20th birthday; and Charles, the 4th generation vet. Robert V. (20th C.) Cornet in 1947. During WWII he saw service in France and was captured by the Japanese, spending several months working on the notorious ‘death railway’ in Siam. He was later on a transport ship that was sunk by U.S. bombers, and although he swam ashore, he was recaptured by the Japanese and witnessed the nuclear blast at Nagasaki. Robin (13th C.) listed as ‘Robinus Scot de Hedon’ on the 1269 assize roll of Northumberland. It is unclear where his lands may have been or whether he was related to the later Scottish Scots. Roger (13th C.) recorded as ‘Roguerum Scot’ on the 1279 assize roll of Northumberland. His lands were mentioned in a case heard at Westmorland. Roger (14th/15th C.) esquire listed on the muster roll for Roxburgh Castle in 1400. His name appears among others who were from Teviotdale, although serving in the English garrison. Roger (16th/17th C.) described as ‘capitane of the Armetage’ in 1599 when he witnessed the bonds (signed at Branxholme) between Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch and the Armstrongs and Elliots of Liddesdale. In 1611 he was ‘captain of the Innetage’ when he was cautioner for William Foster in Langhaugh, as well as for John Armstrong ‘called Quyteheid’. He was additionally fined for the non-appearance of Rowie Crozier in Harthgarthburnside. He was also part of the assize at the Justice Court on Jedburgh in 1611. He was also ‘Capitane of the Airmetage’ when he was fined for not appearing at a trial in 1612 (relating to the apparent hanging death of John Elliot in St. Mary’s Steeple). He may have been the last such deputy keeper of Hermitage Castle. It is unclear how he was related to other contemporary Scots. Roland ‘Rowie of Huttikill’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1616 when Jock Scott ‘the Suckler’ was hanged for stealing one his sheep (and other crimes). The sheep was taken ‘furth of the Lyn beside Eilrig’. He may be the same as Rowie ‘in Vttersyde’ (i.e. Outerside), one of the pursuers of the case. It is unclear where precisely this place was located, but he was surely related to David and Alexander ‘callit Huttitill’, who are recorded at ‘Andishop’ in 1573. Roland ‘Rowie’ (16th/17th C.) one of the ‘Persewaris’ of the 1616 case against Jock Scott ‘the Suckler’ for sheep stealing. He is recorded as being ‘in Vttersyde’ (i.e. Outerside) and his son Walter was also a pursuer. He may be the same as the man ‘callit Rowie of Huttikill’, who was one of the men whose sheep were stolen. Simon (13th C.) recorded as ‘Simonis le Scot’ in the 1279 assize roll of Northumberland. His case was heard in the town of Alnwick. He is separately recorded as ‘Simone de Scotia’. Perhaps the same man is recorded as Simonis Scot in Swynborne’ in a record of Edward I in 1293. It is unclear whether he was related to later Scots. Simon ‘Sim’ (15th C.) recorded in 1456/7 as witness to the sasine for Ewesdale passing from Robert of Ewesdale to George Douglas, 4th Earl of Angus. His name is given as ‘Sym Scot’ and he may have been from Ewesdale, along with Wat, Henry, John and Nichol, who are also listed. Simon (15th C.) listed in 1463/4 among the local men who were rewarded by the King for assisting in the capture of John Douglas of Balveny. He is surely related to others who were named (John, Robert of Todshaw, etc.), but it is unclear how. Simon (15th C.) recorded at the Justice- aire held in Selkirk in 1494/5, as being ‘in mykilhop’ (i.e. Meiklehope, perhaps the same as Meikledalehope), now ‘in . . .’, with the location being blank. He was indicted, but did not appear, with his surety, Richard Davidson in Meiklehope, being fined (or perhaps he was surety for Davidson). Simon (15th C.) recorded at the Justice- aire held in Selkirk in 1494/5, when he was ‘in mygchop’, i.e. Midgehope. He served as surety for himself and was fined for non-appearance. Simon (15th/16th C.) tenant in Eilrig listed in the Exchequer Rolls of 1501 among mostly local men who had been fined. It is unclear how he was related to other Scots. Simon of Arkyn (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 when George Douglas, Master of Angus had to surrender the lands of Falside (in Jedforest) to Ralph Ker of Primside Loch for failing to present him at court. He had stolen 200 ‘angle-nobles’ from the English and is recorded as ‘Symonous Scot de Arkyn’. It is unclear where ‘Arkyn’ was. Simon ‘Sym’ (15th/16th C.) recorded in the 1526 remission to a large number of Borderers for an attack on the Earl of Arran. He is listed as brother of Robert, tutor of Howpsley, making him son of Alexander of Howpsley and brother of Adam of Tushielaw (listed next in the same 1526 document). Simon of Fenwick was listed separately and so presumably not the same man. Probably the same Simon was the first witness listed for the instrument of sasine at ‘Fawsyde’ (probably in the Ettrick valley) for Janet Scott (widow of Robert ‘Elwand’) purchasing lands in Appletreehall from Robert of Howpsley; James, William in Hartwoodmyres and Roland are listed after him and some may have been closely related. Simon of Fenwick (16th C.) listed as ‘Symoun Scot of Fynnik’ in mission for attacking the Earl of Arran. He is also mentioned in 1526/7 when his brother Adam was a witness to a document relating to Harden.
In 1527 he was among the local lairds given remission for mustering their supporters at Melrose (i.e. Skirnisch Field) and Linlithgow. He was one of the arbitrators to decide on the succession to the lands of Borthaugh in 1528. In 1530 he is listed among the 21 Roxburghshire Lairds who submitted themselves to James V to keep better order. He is also recorded in a ‘letter of reversion’ of 1540 in which he resigned lands of Nether Harden (described as in the Barony of Chamberlain Newton) to William Scott of Harden. A bond of the same year shows William of Harden giving him the lands of Nether Harden until George, Lord Home redeems them. In 1561 probably the same ‘Sym Scot of Fynnyk’ was among a list of men charged to appear before Queen Mary regarding the state of the Borders. He was listed as ‘Sym Scot of Fynynk’ among the men who appeared before the Privy Council in a promise to to end the feud between the Kers and the Scotts in 1562. He is probably related to William in Fenwick, who is recorded in 1510. In the 1526 remission there is a ‘Sym Scot’ listed as brother of Robert, tutor of Howpasley, suggesting that this was a different man (even although listed right beside Robert), unless there were multiple entries in the list. Simon (16th C.) chaplain of the diocese of Glasgow. In 1537 he was invested in the Rectorship of Rankleburn Kirk, and the benefices that came with it. The ceremony was carried out at the church itself by Simon Shortreed, Vicar of Ashkirk. Walter of Synton was one of the wittnesses. He is probably the Simon who witnessed a transaction relating to Robert Scott of Howpasley and lands in Appletreehall in 1539/40. Simon (16th C.) recorded as ‘Sym’ along with John in about 1557. They were sons of the ‘guidman of Alanhauch’, who was probably either William or Robert, when they rented Stobicote from Melrose Abbey. He could be the ‘Sym Scot of Alanhauch’ listed in 1561 among Border Lairds who appeared before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft. He may well be ‘Syme Scot in Oversouthfeild’ who was named along with Robert of Allanhaugh and others in 1581, when they were forgiven for the murder of George Scott 3 years earlier. ‘Watt Scot thair, Syme Scott thair, Jok Scot, duelland in Hawik, callit Watt-tis Jok’ are all listed, and seem likely to be related. He may also be the ‘umquhile Symme Scot in Southfield’ mentioned in 1609. Simon ‘Sym’ (16th C.) recorded as resident of Over Southfield in 1581, along with ‘Syme Scot in Oversouthfeild’, ‘Watt Scot thair’ and ‘Jok Scot, duelland in Hawik, callit Wattis Jok’. He was presumably related to the other men listed (e.g. he could have been son of Simon, tenant in Over Southfield), all of whom were probably related to the Scotts of Allanhaugh, who were also named in the ‘letter of slains’ for the murder of George Scott in 1578. Simon (16th C.) listed as ‘Sym Scot of Fern-nil’ in about 1557, when, along with Archibald Elliott of Gorrenberry, he rented Bowanhill and ‘Grangia alias Stanyetoum’ from Melrose Abbey.
His lands may have been Fairmilee or Fernelees, or somewhere else. Simon (16th C.) recorded in 1579 as a Burgess of Hawick. He was appointed as procurator for Robert Johnstone in Kirkholm (in Annandale) to deal with the sale of a tenement in Hawick to David, brother of Walter in Chamberlain Newton. Simon (16th C.) recorded in 1580/1 in Philiphaugh when he had a mar-rriage contract with Janet, daughter of Edward Wilson who was either a weaver or a thatcher in Selkirk. If he died before any children were conceived then his goods were to be divided between his wife Janet and his sister’s son, William Dickson. John ‘Eister’, Burgess of Selkirk, was one of the witnesses. He was also in Philiphaugh in 1581 when he witnessed a transaction for George Turnbull in Philiphaugh. Simon ‘Sym wi the Spear’ of Gamescleuch and Winterburgh (d.bef. 1590) 2nd son of Sir John of Thirlestane (although some suggest he was the 4th son). He was the ‘tutor’ of his nephew Robert of Thirlestane and progenitor of the Scotts of Newburgh and Rennaldburn.
He is recorded as ‘in Winterburgh’ in 1559 when he purchased the lands of Gamescleuch. He is ‘Symon Scot of Wynterburgh’ in 1561/2, when he witnessed a document for Adam, son of Robert of Bonnington. He is probably the ‘Sym Scot, bruther to Robert Scot of Thirlestane’ recorded in 1562 when he promised to enter James ‘Mawar’ to the Warden, Ker of Cessford. Also in 1562 he was said to already have some arrangement with William in Hartwoodburn when William assigned his steading of Gamescleuch to his son; he was then ‘in Thristleane’. In 1573 he was charged to enter some of his tenants in Ettrickside. In 1578 he was ‘of Wintirburch’ when Robert of Thirlestane (for whom he was ‘tutor’) complained that he had taken away 2 horses from Thirlestane, threatened the tenants, and later forcibly took possession of the house; clearly there were serious disputes between him and his charge. He was forced by the Privy Council to yield up Thirlestane house after a few months. In 1576 he was ‘Sym Scot, tutour of Thirlestane’ when listed among the cautioners for Sim Armstrong; he was cited for non-appearance as cautioner in 1578/9. In 1578 he signed the caution ‘with my hand at the len’ (meaning that he could not write). In 1579/80 he was involved in a case with Thomas Dalgleish over the murder of David Dalgleish in Harehead; they were seeking restitution from Robert Scott of Burnfoot and Robert Scott of Burnhead. In 1581 he was probably the Simon of ‘Gammescleucht’ who, along with several other Scotts (from Hartwoodmyres, Gilmanscleuch, Chamberlain Newton, Edinburgh, North Bowhill, Dryhope, Catslack and Howpasley), supported William of Tushielaw and Robert of Aikwood in representing Adam in Bonnington in a dispute with Robert of Haining. He was probably the William ‘of Gemmylliscleuch’ listed among many Scotts and their allies in a 1581 summons to appear before the Privy Council regarding the feud with the Elliots and Armstrongs. He may be the son of the Laird of Thirlestane who was murdered by his step-mother (although the names and suggested dates for this story are confused). He was one of the representatives of Teviotdale at the General Assembly of 1581. In 1583/4 he and Robert of Thirlestane were both among Border Lairds summoned for advice on how to keep peace in Teviotdale and Liddesdale; they were also caution for an agreement between John in Hundslophae and James Gledstains of Cocklaw. In 1585 he witnessed a bond (signed at Selkirk and Hawick) settling a feud between the Scotts of Branxholme and the Scotts of Allanhaugh. He was declared a rebel and in 1586 his property was escheat to Alexander Douglas, Captain of Tantallon; this was for not repossessing Archibald Douglas, 8th Earl of Angus in the lands of Catslack. He was probably succeeded by John (perhaps his elder son) and then his son Arthur. Simon (16th C.) son of Walter of Newton. He was presented to the vicarage of Hassendean in 1595 on the demission of Thomas Newbie. It is unclear whether this means he became the minister or just held part of the benefice of the Parish. His father may have been Walter of Chamberlain Newton. Simon of Dryhope (16th C.) 1st Laird. Scott of Satchells suggests he was brother of Adam of Tushielaw, while Keith Scott prefers to connect him as 3rd son of Walter of Headshaw. In 1581, along with several other Scotts (from Hartwoodmyres, Gilmanscleuch, Chamberlain Newton, Edinburgh, North Bowhill, Catslack and Howpasley), he supported William of Tushielaw and Robert of Aikwood in representing Adam in Bonnington in a dispute with Robert of Haining; he was surely related to some of these other Scotts. He was succeeded by John, father of the ‘Flower of Yarrow’, but the relationship is unclear (Keith Scott claims his sons were Philip, Simon, Andrew, Adam and Walter, but some of these may have been sons of John). Simon (16th/17th C.) probably son of George in Northhouse and brother of William. In 1582, along with William, he witnessed a transaction at Branxholme involving the Scott of Allanhaugh. He may be the same as one of the other Simons. Simon (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1597 as brother-in-law of William Cockburn, younger of Henderland. The pair were denounced for not finding ‘lawborrows’ for William Veitch of Kingside in Peeblesshire. Simon (d.bef. 1609) father of John Scott who was among several men fined in 1609 for harassing the lands of Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane. His son was ‘Jean’s John’, suggesting that his wife was Jean. He was referred to as ‘unquhile Symme Scot in Southfield’, although it is unclear if this is the Southfield near Hawick or another. Simon of Montbenger (16th/17th C.) descended from the Scotts of Dryhope. He was either son of Sim (1st Laird) or John (2nd Laird). Assuming he was son of John, he would also be brother of Philip of Dryhope; he was thus recorded in 1599 as a member of the Gledstains of Cocklaw was surety for him, that he would ‘observe the King’s peace’. He was succeeded by Robert, and later descendants were the Scotts of Catslacknowe. Simon (16th/17th C.) natural son of William of Fingland, who was brother of Sir Robert of Thirlestane. In 1608 he was among the relations and tenants of Sir Robert who were bonded not to harm Archibald ‘of Dehoip’. In 1609 he was among the men (including his father William, as well as Walter of Headshaw) who Sir Robert of Thirlestane and his tenants were bound not to reset. This was part of the feud with the Scotts of Tushielaw. In 1610 he was ordered to be apprehended for not signing the bond relating to the Scotts of Tushielaw. In 1616/7 he was probably the ‘Willis Symme of Thirlestane’ who was accused of accompanying John Scott and his brothers Adam and Simon of Bonnington, when Walter Scott ‘in Essenside’ (son of ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden) was murdered. Simon ‘Sim’ of Bonnington (d.bef. 1617) son of Adam of Bonnington and brother of John, Thomas and Adam. He succeeded his father as Laird of Bonnington in 1607. The designation may originally have come from the lands elsewhere (e.g. near Kilmarnock), but it is clear that he possessed Bonnington in Peeblesshire (not to be confused with the another Bonnington in West Lothian, later held by other Scotts), with a charter of James V as heir to his father in 1607. He signed the Scott clan bond in 1589. He is recorded in documents relating to the lands of Bonnington in 1591–1607. In 1592 his cautioner was John Tennant of Cairns that he would not reset any of those who had supported the Earl of Bothwell. In 1593 he purchased ‘Ernisheuch’ and ‘Singlie’ in Ettrick Forest, confirmed in 1607; a condition was that he built a mansion-house there, which he did at Newhouse. He is recorded as a witness in Selkirk in 1594. In 1594/5 he is recorded as being son of Adam, when he owned ‘Halmedow and Horsewade’ in the Barony of Manor in Peeblesshire. In 1596/7, along with his brother John, plus Robert of Thirlestane and other Scotts, he was summoned by the Provost and Bailies of Peebles for an attack on the ploughmen at ‘Kaidmure’; there was a further dispute over the same lands in 1610, with Sir Robert of Thirlestane serving as his surety. In 1599 Robert of Thirlestane served as his surety that he would ‘keep good rule and redress parties skaithed’. In 1602 he signed a bond among Border Lairds for keeping the peace. Also in 1602 his brother John was part of a group of Scotts who attacked lands at ‘Fechane’ and he was ordered to present his brother in court. In 1603 he was among Scotts and others, subordinates of Sir Walter of Buccleuch, who ‘had been put to the horn’ for not paying feu mails for their lands to the Queen’s Chamberlain, with Robert of Haining not entering them in court. In 1604 he had a charter for the lands of ‘Espiehoip’ on Ettrick. Also in 1604 James Tweedie of Drumelzier was surety for him that he not harm Dame Jane Herries, Lady Skirling. In 1611 he is confirmed as grandson of Robert and Katherine Boyle, when he was served as heir to his grandmother. In 1611 he had a court case against Carruthers of Holmends and the Jardines of Applegarth. Also in 1611 he was served heir to his grandmother Katherine Boyle. He was also one of the signatories of the bond of 1612 to keep peace on the Border and also on a ‘retour’ panel for Tweedy of Drumelzier. In 1612 ‘Simeon Scott of Bonnytoun’ was ordered to appear at Melrose to answer for the ‘horrible slaughter of Walter Scott’ of Tushielaw, which may be connected with the origin of the ballad ‘The Dowie Dens of Yarrow’. In 1616/17 he was one of the men said to have accompanied his brother John when Walter Scott ‘in Essenside’ was murdered while fishing on the Ettrick, according to criminal complaints made by Walter’s wife. Note that these 2 murders may be confused in the re-telling. It was said that the murder of Walter in Essenside was because of the death of his only surviving son at the hands of the miller of Todrig Mill (who was subordinate to the Scotts of Harden). He was declared a rebel after the murder and was either killed or went into exile. In 1617 and 1618 (and perhaps covering the period 1611–29) he was named in a court case with Sir William Scott of Harden over the value of the lands of Bonnington and others; the Scotts of Harden purchased the ‘eschete’ of his lands and in 1617 a charter of King James VI granted Bonnington to William, heir to Harden, with a value of his lands given as £4985 6s. 6d., redeemable within 7 years. His wife was Mary, who was recorded as ‘Marie Scott, Lady Bonytoun’ in 1617 when she complained about the Scotts of Harden and their supporters constantly harassing her family, to the extent that her only son (presumably Robert) was killed at the age of 19 and her grandchildren and servants were hounded out of their house and lands; this was presumably part of the ongoing feud between the families and despite her protestations to the Privy Council the accused were found not guilty. It was said that his house at Newhouse was destroyed, his old nurse assaulted and his wife and children turned out into the cold. Also in 1617 Elizabeth Hay, widow of Walter in Essenside complained that he remained at large, despite being put to the horn, along with his brothers John and Adam and Simon called ‘Willis Symme of Thirlestane’. A letter from the King in 1619 ordered the relevant parties to appear personally before the court. His son and heir Robert, appears to have predeceased him. He had at least one daughter, Margaret, who married William, son of John Burnet of Barns (near Peebles). He was succeeded in the lands of Bonnington by his brother John, and then by William Burnet of Barns, his grandson, who inherited the lands of Bonnington in 1627. Andrew, surgeon in Edinburgh also had a claim on Bonnington in 1624 and must have been a nephew or other close relative. His brother John was served heir to his land of ‘Ernisheuche’ and Singlie in 1624. Simon ‘Syme of Newtoune in Hawick’ (16th/17th C.) recorded as a juror for the Commissioners’ Court of 1622. He could be the same man as the son of Walter of Newton who held the benefice of Hassendean. Probably the same Simon in Newton was served heir to his brother Walter in the lands of Easter Craik in 1618, as well as Ladhope, ‘Alterhous’ and ‘Quhithope’ in Ettrick Forest. It is unclear whether his lands were Chamberlain Newton or a different Newton. Simon (d.bef. 1643) brother of William of Chamberlain Newton. He is recorded in 1643 when Mariota Scott, daughter of his brother William, was served as his heir. He may be the same as Simon ‘of Newtoune’. Simon (18th/19th C.) resident of 8 Abercromby Place in Edinburgh when he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. It seems likely that he had a direct connection with Hawick. Stephen (15th C.) recorded in the Exchequer Rolls in the 1440s and 50s. He was explicitly mentioned in 1440 in the Aberdeen area, in 1441 for work at Edinburgh Castle, for collecting the customs in Edinburgh in 1443, was paid his fee in 1444, 1445 and 1446 and received payment from Robert Moffat in Edinburgh in 1454. It is possible that he is the same as Stephen of Muirhouse and Castelaw. Stephen of Muirhouse, Castelaw and Burrellands (15th C.) younger son of Robert of Rankleburn and brother of Sir Walter of Buccleuch. He may be the Stephen who was witness in 1431 to the transfer of Heap from James Langlands of that Ilk to Walter Scott of Buccleuch (if so this was his brother); John Scott is also listed beside him and so possibly a close relative. He may be the Stephen appointed as a procurator by Ellen Rule of Primside in 1439 when she resigned her lands to their superior, Archibald, Earl of Douglas and probably the ‘Stephanus Scott’ who witnessed a charter for Thomas Wiley of Bonnington (in Peeblesshire) in 1442. He is probably the Stephen who witnessed a charter for the lands of Borthwicksield in 1444 (with Sir Walter also a witness). In 1445 (probably, since the date of 1400 on the document is wrong) he requested an ‘instrument of transumpt’ relating to the lands of Grahamslaw in the Barony of Eckford; he was there described as brother and procurator of Sir Walter of Buccleuch and listed as ‘Stephanus Scott de Castellaw’ (there are several places of this name, so it is unclear which one this is). The Robert Scott who also signed this document may have been a close relative. In 1447 he was witness to a document relating to the ‘Cusingland’ involving Margaret Cousin, wife of Simon Routledge, and his brother Sir Walter. He obtained the Burrellands (in Eckford Parish) in 1448, after they were resigned by John Burrell; there he is transcribed ‘of le Castellaw’. In 1448 he witnessed the sasine for the lands of Birkwood and Burnflat for his brother, Sir Walter. He had a crown charter for the lands of ‘Murhous’ in 1450; these are lands in the Barony of Crichton (somewhere near Pathhead in Midlothian, and not one of the Muirhouses elsewhere). In 1450 he also had a charter for the lands of ‘Castelcary, et de Weltoue’ in Stirlingshire; this suggests that the ‘Weltou’ associated with him may not have been Wilton at all, and that ‘Castelaw’ was actually ‘Castle Cary’ near Cumbernauld (adjacent to Walton farm). These lands had been forfeited by Robert Livingstone and were confirmed in 1450/1. He is probably the ‘Stephano Scot’ who witnessed the charter exchanging Milsington with Heap in 1451. In 1453 he was listed as ‘of the Mwrhouse’ when he renounced the lands of Castelcary and the Weltoue to Henry, son of Robert Livingstone of Linlithgow; it seems likely that the ‘Castelaw’ sometimes connected with his name is ‘Castelcary’ in the former Sherifdom of Stirling (and the Hawick connection with Castle Cary in Somerset is just a coincidence). An instrument of 1454 relating to these lands is one of the first documents known to have been signed in Hawick; he may be the same ‘Stephen Scot of Muirhouse’ mentioned there, who ‘asked instruments’. He is recorded as being ‘of Muirhouse’ when he witnessed a document of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1453 and also in a document of 1454 (one of the first documents known to have been signed in Hawick). He is probably the Stephen who witnessed a document for the Kers of Altonburn in 1454/5. He was one of Scott of Buccleuch’s Bailies in Eckford. He also had a charter of the lands of ‘Weltou’, which were probably the lands of Walton adjacent to Castelcary near the modern Cumbernauld; however, the family also had a connection with Wilton Parish, which is confusing. The next recorded Laird of ‘Weltou’ was John, who was probably his son or grandson. His son and heir Robert witnessed the sasine for the exchange of Milsington and Wester Heap in 1453; he is recorded as ‘Robert of Muirhouse’ in 1482. He witnessed a document for Sir Walter of Buccleuch in 1456. In 1462 he had a loan of 100 merks from Robert Muir of Rowallan, with the lands of Dryden, Commonside and Upper Harwood given in security. This loan was discharged by Robert of ‘Dogehauch’ in 1477, probably his same son Robert. He had a sasine for the... lands of Muirhouse in 1463. Stephen (15th/16th C.) one of the ‘bailies in that part’ appointed by Patrick, Earl of Bothwell in 1504 to infeft Walter of Buccleuch in his father’s lands in Annandale. The others were Walter of Howpsley, together with William and William’s son Robert. Perhaps the same ‘Stephano Scot’ was assigned the farm of Mount Common and steading of Deephope in 1503 and had the lease renewed in 1510, along with Deephope. Probably the same Stephen served as surety at the Justice-aire in Selkirk in 1494/5. It is probably the Stephen in Deephope who in 1502 was surety for ‘Crooked Adam’ in Wolfhope. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Stephens. Stephen (16th C.) probably younger son of John of Roberton and Walls, and brother of Walter of Roberton. In 1526 he is listed along with George as a son of John ‘in the Valys’ on the list of Borders men pardoned for their earlier attack on the Earl of Arran. He is described as ‘in Valls’ (probably ‘Walls’ in Dryfesdale, north of Lockerbie) in 1528 when he witnessed the document giving the decision over the disputed succession of the lands of Borthaugh, and in 1535 when he purchased lands at Roberton and Howcleuch from his ‘brother-german’ Walter Scott of Roberton. His son John was also named in the charter. The witnesses were Michael Scott of Aikwood, Sir William Gordoun (or Brydoun), Chaplain, William Scott of Fauldshope, Gilbert Scott and Sir Ninian ‘Bridin’, Chaplain and Notary Public. He was probably the Stephen who acted as procurator for Isabel Douglas (likely his mother) in claiming her rights to lands within her lifetime, when Walter (likely his older brother) succeeded to the lands of John of Roberton. He was probably succeeded by his son John of Roberton. Stephen (16th C.) witness to a confirming charter to William Scott of the lands of Harden in 1535. He is described as ‘in Hoil’. He may also have been the Stephen who witnessed a sasine for the lands of Meikledale in 1537 (along with George Scott and several Armstrongs and Littles). He may have been related to the Scotts of Whitehaugh (and Heap) or else was the same as Stephen ‘in Valls’. Stephen (16th C.) joint owner of a particate of land (along with John Short and Janet Lidderdale) on the south side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. Perhaps the same Stephen was also listed as holder of half a particate on the north side. He may be the same as one of the other Stephens. Stephen (16th C.) recorded in the register of the Privy Council in 1574, when he was surety for someone. It is unclear who he was. Steven (16th C.) Hawick man recorded as ‘Stevin’ in a 1558 document where he is stated as being the father of Alexander who sold land in one of the earliest known sasines relating to Hawick. It is possible he was the same man recorded owning pieces of land in the 1537 Charter. Steven (16th/17th C.) recorded in Bransholmetown in 1611 when he was part of the assize at the Justice Court on Jedburgh. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. Stewart (?) writer of East Bank Church, Hawick: Its origin and history, 1773–1923 (1923). Susan (d.1806) daughter of the deceased ‘Docter Scott Newton’. Her death is recorded in Hawick. It is unclear who her father was and whether he was a doctor or the name was a nickname; however, she was probably part of the Scotts of Newton. Thomas (12th/13th C.) recorded as ‘Thomas de Colevillia cognomento Scot’ during the reign of King William the Lion. He was clearly of the surname ‘Coleville’, but for some reason had also gained the appellation ‘Scot’. His name appears in many charters of around 1200, most undated, and his seal bears the inscription ‘SIGII. THOME DE COLLEVILLA SCOTTT’. In 1223 he was already deceased when the Abbey of Vaudey in Lincolnshire passed on his gift of lands in Ayshire to Melrose Abbey. It seems unlikely that he was related to any Thomas (13th C.) listed in 1248/9 when he was the attorney of Devorguilla, wife of John Baliol. Thomas (13th C.) recorded in 1255/6 when he was imprisoned at Northampton for trespassing in King Henry’s vivarium. The Sheriff there was commanded to deliver him to 12 men in his bailliary until the King’s justices arrived. Thomas (13th C.) recorded in 1261 in London. He was pardoned at the insistence of Margaret Queen of Scotland, for the murder of ‘Thomas le lung’ in London. Thomas (13th C.) listed as ‘le Escot’ in 1272, when he gave half a mark for an assize in Suffolk. Thomas (13th C.) recorded in 1273 as ‘Thomas Scot, messenger’ when he was paid by the English court for expenses transmitting letters to the King and Queen of Scotland. He may be the same as ‘Thomas Scoticus’ listed on a jury in Warkworth, Northumberland in 1269 or ‘ Thomam le Scot’ (and variants) listed several times on the 1279 assize rolls of Northumberland, some entries related to Alnwick.
Scotland

Abbey. Thomas (13th C.) merchant of Newcastle recorded in 1302 as ‘Thomas Scot’, when canvas was purchased from him as part of an order of goods for Edward I’s fortresses in Scotland. Thomas (13th/14th C.) member of the Templars who fled when many of his brothers were arrested in England in 1309. Thomas (13th/14th C.) recorded as an Irish ‘hobelar’ (i.e. light horseman) in the English garrison at Berwick in 1312. A second horseman of the same name was also listed. Thomas (13th/14th C.) recorded in 1316 when he was one of a group of Scottish prisoners in York ‘lately captured at sea’. He was a prisoner at York Castle 1316–17. Thomas (14th/15th C.) Englishman who left his service before the end of the agreement and hence was imprisoned in Newgate. In 1401 the King ordered him to be released after he found sufficient securities. Thomas (14th/15th C.) Bailie of Haddington. He is recorded in the Exchequer Rolls several times in the period 1412–31. Thomas (15th C.) listed in 1463/4 among the local men who were rewarded by the King for assisting in the capture of John Douglas of Balveny. He is surely related to others who were named (John, Robert of Todshaw, Simon and ‘niger’ Walter), but it is unclear how. Thomas of Roberton (15th C.) said to have had a daughter who married George of Synton. However, there is no evidence that any such man actually existed (and hence presumably she was the daughter of a different Scott of Roberton). Thomas (15th C.) member of the English garrison at Roxburgh Castle, he was ‘late of London’. In 1459 he was given a fiat of protection for a year under Henry VI’s cousin Sir William Neville. Thomas (15th C.) recorded having remission for the fine of a shiel in the Eaststead. Thomas of Bush (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 when he and his son Adam were separately fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire held in Selkirk. He is recorded being ‘de Bus’ and was probably an ancestor of later Scotts of Bush in Ewesdale. Thomas (15th/16th C.) brother of Andrew, the pair were tenants in ‘nortschelis’ (probably North Shielis) in Peeblesshire. In 1498 Andrew was fined for his non-appearance, but later he was allowed to ‘compone’ for the crime of mutilating James Davidson in ‘brachio’ (i.e. the arm). Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as being already one of the King’s rebels, along with Gilbert Rutherford and Thomas Grahamshaw. Robert Rutherford had remission for associating with them in their involvement in the murder of Patrick Hepburn. Thomas (15th/16th C.) resident of Branculme. In 1502, along with John in Spittal, he was convicted for the felony done to Thomas Story, when they came across him in Spittal. He was allowed to compound, while John was fined. Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502. He was presented by the Lord of Bucleuch at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh as his ‘suitor’ for the lands of Lanton. He may be the same as one of the other Thomases. Thomas (15th/16th C.) tenant in Priestdykes near Lochmaben. In 1504 at the Justice-aire in Dumfries, he ‘came in the King’s will’ for ‘intercommuning with the Armstrongis, the King’s rebels’. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts. Thomas (15th/16th C.) son of Walter of Headshaw and brother of Philip of Headshaw. In 1510 he was charged with the murder of John Murray of Falahill, with Andrew Ker of Gateshaw implicated in the same crime. Failing to appear at the Jedburgh court he was denounced as a rebel. He was represented by William in Hawick, George in Goldielands and David in Whitehaugh, who were fined for his non-appearance. The goods of William Scott in Fenwick and John Scott in Haining were used as further insurance. This suggests that all of these men were fairly closely related. Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1514 as witness in Selkirk when George Ker, Canon of Glasgow appointed Thomas Ker as Archdeacon of Teviotdale. Perhaps the same Thomas witness a dispensation to marry in 1516, for Inram Elliot and Elizabeth Scott (with Alexander as another witness). Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘curate of the parish church of Irwin’ in 1519. Probably the same ‘Mr. Thomas’ was chaplain in an instrument made in Ayr Kirk in 1522. He may be related to other Scotts in the Irvine area. Thomas ‘Tom’ (16th C.) listed as ‘Thome Scot’ among the bailies of the Sheriff of Roxburgh on the Precept of Chancery (probably in 1532) for William Scott of Hassendean retaining his properties. He may be the same as another contemporary Thomas. Bailie Thomas (16th C.) recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books in 1534 as Bailie in Hawick. He witnessed a renunciation by John in Hawick (who may have been a relative) and along with Vicar John bound themselves to the contract between John in Hawick and Thomas Johnstone. Probably the same Thomas was owner of 3 particiates of land on the south side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. He may be the same man. who was recorded as a Burgess of Hawick in the 1540s and 50s. Thomas of Pitgormo (1479–1539) 2nd son of William of Balwearie. He became a judge in 1532, in place of his father, and was made Justice Clerk in 1535, being a favourite of James V. He is recorded being of ‘Pettgormo’ in the Exchequer Rolls. He was auditor of the Exchequer in at least the years 1537 and 1538. He married Agnes Moncrieff and was succeeded by his son Thomas. Thomas (16th C.) recorded in 1533/4 being ‘in Aikwode ester’. He and the other tenants in Aikwood delivered £10 Scots to the Queen’s Chamberlain for Ettrick Forest for occupying Hartwoodmyres. Probably the same Thomas was ‘in Vodburne’ in 1536 when he witnessed a transaction between Walter of Roberton and Michael of Aikwood. He may be the same as one of the other Thomases. Thomas (16th C.) recorded in Selkirk in 1536. Along with a Paterson, he complained that John Scott had slandered them by accusing them of stealing sheep. Thomas (16th C.) recorded in 1538 when he rented ‘ane quarter and half quarter of Todrik’ (i.e. Todrig) to Thomas Robson. Probably the same Thomas in 1538 ‘asked instruments’ that the tenants of ‘the town of Quihtislands’ (probably Whitslade) wanted to graze their cattle at Todrig as their predecessors had done. He was also there when Katherine Gray had the sheep of Thomas and George Lauder removed from Todrig. Also in 1538 he was ‘in Todrig’ when he produced a precept from Michael Scott in Aikwood for half the lands of Hermiston to fulfil a debt of service. In 1539 he was on the inquest panel for Alexander Lauder succeeding to Todrig. In 1540 he was among the tenants who were warned to remove themselves from Todrig when Alexander Lauder succeeded to the lands. He may be the same as one of the other Thomases. Thomas (16th C.) described as a Burgess of Hawick when he was a witness to the 1540 resignation of the lands of Nether Harden from Simon Scott of Fenwick to William Scott of Harden. He is also witness to a confirmation of this in 1556, where he is described as ‘in Hawick’. Probably the same Thomas ‘in Hawick’ was on the 1553/4 panel for the inheritance of Walter Scott of Branzholme and Buccleuch as heir to his grandfather. Perhaps the same Thomas ‘of Hawik at the queen’s command’ who was recorded in 1562 in reference to ‘thirds of benefices’. It is possible he was related (perhaps grandfather) to Walter, ‘burges in Hawik, sonne to wmquhell Thomas Scot in Hawik, zonguer’, who witnessed a document in 1585. Thomas (16th C.) recorded in 1539 as son of the deceased Adam. Along with Robert of Howapasley, he was warned to remove his tenants from the lands of Falside, owned by Sir Walter of Branzholme and his son Walter. Perhaps he is the same Thomas, son of Adam, who was subject to a bond in 1539; Walter of Buccleuch, his son and heir David and Robert of Allanhaugh had a bond with the Depute Sheriff of Selkirk that William would prove he was ‘a bastard according to the custom of the law used in such cases’. Also in 1539 he offered to the Queen’s Chamberlain the ‘ferme’ of Falside. He may be the same as one of the other Thomases. Thomas (16th C.) owner of lands in the Burgh of ‘Enrovre’ in Aberdeenshire, as recorded in instruments of 1542 and 1543. Thomas (16th C.) recorded as a servant of Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst in 1557. It was complained that he and another servant had been beaten at the Kirklands of Bedrule by a group of Turnbulls of Bedrule and others. Thomas of Haining (16th C.) son of Robert of Haining. He was a minor when he succeeded. In 1527 he is recorded as son and heir apparent of the deceased Robert of Haining. His uncle Walter was still acting as his tutor in 1532. In 1538 he succeeded to his father’s lands of ‘all the lands and the loch of Hanyng’. He is recorded being of Haining in 1538 when he held a sasine for the lands and in 1539 when he warned certain tenants to remove themselves from East Haining and West Haining. He is probably the feu of Haining recorded in 1540 when he gave sasine for part of East Haining to Thomas Morlaw. In 1541 he was ‘chief lord of the lands of est Hanyng’. In 1543/4 he made a bond not to harm John Wilson. He is probably the Thomas who purchased a tenement in Selkirk from Thomas Johnstone in 1544; Walter and Robert of Hartwoodburn were witnesses. He is also listed in 1557 among the Scotts who descended on the Kirk of the Lowes to try to kill Sir Peter Cranston as part of some feud. He was probably related to some of the other Scotts who were in the band of about 200, from Allanhaugh, Burnfoot, Harden, Howpasley, Synton and Thirlestane. In 1561 he was (along with Walter of Synton and Nicholas Rutherford of Hundalee) cited by the Privy Council for non-appearance. Also in 1561 he was among Border Lairds who appeared before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft. Additionally in 1561 he witnessed a bond between Bruntons and Armstrongs in Selkirk, and was listed among men who swore they did not steal a horse in Selkirk in the previous year. He was listed among the men who appeared before the Privy Council in a promise to end the feud between the Kers and the Scotts in 1562. In 1564/5 he was listed as one of the 4 curators of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in the bond with the Kers, and was one of the signatories. He was on the assize of 1564 related to the murder of David Scott of Hasendean. He acted as a bailiff for the Commendator of Melrose in the teind records from at least 1562 and in a sasine of 1567. In 1567 he represented Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in a marriage contract for Sir Walter’s sister Elizabeth. In 1568 he was granted the lands of Elliston by the Commendator of Melrose and was mentioned in a sasine of Crook in the same year. He had a charter of ‘feuferme’ for lands in ‘Ilistoun’ (as stated in 1580), which later passed to his son Robert, who was involved in a dispute over these lands in 1576, with John, minister of Selkirk. His children probably included: Robert, who succeeded to Haining; William, recorded as brother of Robert in 1580 and 1581; and Walter, also mentioned in 1580. Elizabeth Turnbull’s will and inventory was recorded in 1580; she was living in Haining Castle and had Robert and his wife as executors, as well as young daughters, suggesting that she may have been his second wife and step-mother of Robert of Haining. Thomas (16th C.) recorded as a witness to a charter for Aberbrothick Monastery in 1546. He was probably a cleric of some sort there. Thomas ‘Tom of the Stour’ (16th C.) recorded as ‘Thome Scot callit the Stowir’ in 1569 when he entered a pledge for himself and all the Scotts of Ewesdale (excluding those already under the pledge of Andrew Armstrong of Gingills). Later in 1569 he was recorded being held in Ravensheugh Castle as pledge for ‘Johnne Scott callit the Braid; Arche Scott of the Buss; Thome Scott of Blakhall’. He was clearly a prominent Scott of Ewesdale at that time. He is ‘called the Stowr’ in the register of the Privy Council for 1573 when he was surety for someone. In 1586/7 he was ‘callit of the Stoir’ when his brother John was listed among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. He could be related to the Jock ‘Stowre of Quinscleich’ recorded in 1598. His nickname may have alluded to ‘stour’ as in a violent conflict, but appears more likely to refer to a place, perhaps in Ewesdale. Thomas (d.c.1575) portioner in Carpow in Fife. His will was registered in Edinburgh in 1575/6, at the same time as that of Robert, also portioner in Carpow. He was probably related to John in Carpow, whose will was registered in 1582/3. Thomas (d.c.1580) tailor in Edinburgh, who was apprentice to John ‘Mure’ and became a Burgess of Edinburgh in 1573/4. He was listed in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch being owed money for an account. He could be the Thomas, Burgess of Edinburgh, who ‘undertakes surety’ according to the register of the Privy Council in 1577. His will was recorded in Edinburgh in 1580/1. His son-in-law Andrew Scott became a merchant Burgess in right of marrying his daughter ‘Bessie, alias Elizabeth’. Thomas (16th C.) baxter in Glasgow. In 1577 his 2nd son James was made a Burgess of Glasgow. It is unclear how he might have been connected to other Scotts. The will of David, son of Thomas ‘indweller in Glasgow’ was recorded in Edinburgh in 1592/3 and may have been his son. John, baxter who was eldest lawful son of baxter Thomas, was made a Burgess of Glasgow in 1634 and may have been related. Thomas of Whitehaugbrae (16th C.) possibly son of Walter of Synton and Stirches and younger brother of John of Synton and Robert of Stirches. His mother was probably Margaret Riddell. He was ancestor of the Scotts of Whitehaugbrae, although it is unclear if he owned the lands himself. His son and heir was Walter of Whitehaugbrae. Thomas ‘Jock’s Tom’ (16th C.) mentioned in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1574. He is listed among those owed money as ‘Thome Scot callit Jok Thome’. There is a good chance he was from Hawick, based on the others he is listed alongside. He was presumably a tradesman or merchant of some sort. Thomas (16th C.) recorded as witness to a sasine in Hawick in 1579, when Robert Johnstone sold a tenement to David, brother of Walter in Chamberlain Newton. He is listed as ‘alias Thome of Hauden’, which may be Howden; however, it is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts. Thomas (16th C.) tenant in Burnturk in Fife. The will of his wife Margaret Boist was registered in Edinburgh in 1576. Thomas of Abbotshall (16th C.) son of Sir Thomas and Agnes Moncrieff. His family lands were in Fife. In 1581 he was listed as ‘od and overman’ (i.e. the third arbitrator, to break any deadlock) in a dispute between Adam in Bonnington and Robert of Haining. He was probably selected as a fellow Scott (and probably lawyer) with no conflict of interest. His son William of Abbotshall is recorded in 1585, but appears not to have succeeded until 1606. He was probably the Laird of Abbotshall who, along with the Laird of Balwearie was pledge in 1588/9 for the Scotts of

Ewesdale. His children included: William of Abbotshull; and Jean or Janet, who married James Anstruther. It is possible that Margaret Murray, 'Lady Abbotshull (Scott)', whose will was registered in Edinburgh in 1593/4, was probably his wife. Thomas (16th C.) brother of 'Wat's Jock', he was a Burgess in Hawick. In 1585 he was one of the witnesses to the bond in which Sir Walter of Branxholme and Robert of Allanhaugh resolved a family feud. His father was presumably Walter. Thomas 'Tom' (16th C.) tenant at Blackhall in the Ewes valley. In 1569 he was listed as 'Thome Scott of Blakhall', along with John 'the Braid' and Aitchie 'of the Buss', as those men for whom Tom 'callit the Stowir' was held as pledge in Ravensheugh Castle. He was recorded in the 1585 remission for last crimes of men whose superior was Lord Maxwell. His son John is also listed. Another son Tom was recorded in 1611. Thomas (d.c.1588) described being 'in Clairmestoun' in Corstorphine when his will was registered in Edinburgh in 1588/9. Thomas (d.c.1590) tenant in Logie in Fife. The will of his wife Isobel Cluney was registered in Edinburgh in 1590. Thomas 'Tom' (16th C.) recorded as being 'Thome of the Flower', one of the Scott chiefs of Ewesdale on Monipennie's c.1594 compilation. He is listed along with 'Ante the Busse'. It is unclear where his lands were, but it is possible he is the same as Tom in Blackhall. Thomas (16th C.) recorded being 'in the Inche of Bathcat' (i.e. the Inch of Bathgate) in 1595. His son Thomas became a merchant's apprentice in Edinburgh with Robert Scott (possibly a relative). Thomas (16th/17th C.) listed by Scott of Satchells as being 'in Wester-groundston' (i.e. Wester Groundstone) and among the 24 'Pensioners' of the house of Buccleuch. He was said to have been the brother of William of Whitehaugh, son of Walter of Whitehaugh and descended from Scott of Buccleuch. Thomas (d.c.1594) described being 'in Balmayne' in Largo Parish, Fife, when his will was registered in Edinburgh in 1594/5. He was surely related to Andrew in Blamian, whose will was recorded in 1597. Thomas (d.c.1598) maltman and Burgess of Kinghorn. His will was registered in Edinburgh in 1598. Thomas (16th/17th C.) brother of William of Hundleshope, and tenant of Sir Robert of Thirlestane. According to Keith Scott, he was a younger son of James of Hundleshope. However, he could alternatively be the Thomas, son of Katherine Scott, widow of Robert of Colifort, whose mother resigned her lands of Hundleshope to him in 1581, with witnesses including Scotts of Raeskowne, Allanhaugh and Drinkstone; if this is the same Thomas then presumably his mother was from the Scotts of Hundleshope, not his father. He is probably the 'Thomas Scot, callit Thome of Hundellishop' who witnessed the bond between Sir Walter of Buccleuch and Robert of Allanhaugh in Hawick and Selkirk in 1585. He was brother of Jojn 'sometime in Hundillishoip' in 1596/7 when part of a group led by Robert Scott of Thirlestane who the citizens of Peebles complained had attacked their lands of 'Kaidmure'. In 1602 he was among a group of Scotts who attacked Adam Veitch's lands at 'Fechane'. Others listed were Scotts of Thirlestane, Bonnington, Gamescleuch and Bowhill. He and his brother attacked the same place again in 1603. He is recorded having 6 men well horsed at the Wappinshaw of 1627 in Peebleshire. Thomas (16th C.) became a Burgess of Edinburgh in 1599, as a 'peuderer' (i.e. worker in pewter). Thomas (16th/17th C.) brother of William of Glack. In 1599 he was among a list of Scotts who Sir Walter of Branxholme declared were 'his men' and therefore accepted responsibility for making them answer to justice. Thomas (16th/17th C.) son of Adam of Bonnington. In 1610 he assisted his brother Simon of Bonnington in a raid on the lands of 'Caiddmure' belonging to the Burgh of Peebles. Thomas (16th/17th C.) servitor to 'Lord Bugcleuch' listed about 1610 among supporters of Scott of Thirlestane in their feud with the Scotts of Tushielaw. He could be the same as one of the contemporary Thomases. Thomas of Salen-side (d.c.1636) possibly son of Andrew of Salen-side, who was on the Carlisle Raid of 1596. In 1621 he inherited Whitehaughbrae from Walter of Whitehaughbrae, who was a near relative (son of his grandfather's brother, hence first cousin, once removed). He had at least 2 sons: William, to whom he gave possession of Salen-side during his lifetime; and Andrew, to whom he gave possession of Whitehaughbrae, also while he was still alive. He later sold both properties to Sir William Scott of Harden. Thomas (16th/17th C.) referred to being 'called of Ormestoun' in 1610 when he was part of a group of Scotts charging Langlends and other Scotts to find caution in 1610, with the other side petitioning for the penalties to be reduced. Additionally, the Scotts of Harden, Whit-slade and Satchells were also bound not to harm him and his associates and there was a similar bond in 1610 for Andrew Riddell of that Ilk and his son not to harm them. His brother Alexander Thomas (16th/17th C.) of Larriston. He of Scott of Todrig, who married Robert Ellter, Janet, who may be the Janet, 2nd daughter called Walter. He may also have had a daughter in Edinburgh in 1637. Additionally he had a son Robert who became a merchant's apprentice in 1678; this was probably his son Thomas was served as his heir in 1653. Thomas' brother Robert (hence another son) was recorded with them in 1643, 1644, 1646, 1648 and 1649. In the early 1650s he and his son Thomas are described as Thomas Scott elder and younger of Toderig. He is said to have married Jean Pringle, with their dowry recorded in 1643; however, this seems more likely to have been his son Thomas, with whom he is sometimes confounded. His son Thomas was served as his heir in 1653. Thomas' brother Robert (hence another son) was recorded as deceased in 1678; this was probably his son Robert who became a merchant's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1637. Additionally he had a son called Walter. He may also have had a daughter, Janet, who may be the Janet, 2nd daughter of Scott of Todrig, who married Robert Elliot of Larriston. Thomas of Nether Bons (d.1680) brother of Walter, ‘Wat o the Dykes’. He was given Nether Bonchester by his nephew William of Galalaw, after the death of his brother Walter (1st Laird), following some previous family agreement. He was involved in transactions with John Kerr of Grange in the 1630s relating to feu duties. He is recorded in a document of wadset for the lands of Appotside in 1654, when he was described as ‘bailie in that part’. In the 1663 Land Tax Rolls he paid tax on £552 for lands in Abbotrule. He was recorded in a hereditary bond in 1673. He is mentioned in 1690 when his son John had a bond and discharge in the Burgh of Selkirk for 500 merks Scots. He had 3 sons: Walter of Nether Bonchester; George, progenitor of the Scotts of Falla, who was listed among Covenanters in 1684; and John, who was also in 1684 among those declared as fugitives for refusing to conform to Presbyterianism. He also had 2 daughters: Christian; and Janet. It is possible that he died in confinement because of his Covenanting principles. Thomas (17th C.) was recorded as servitor to Gilbert Elliott of Stobs in a deed in 1663. He may be the same as one of the other Thomas. Thomas (17th C.) brother of Walter of Hyndhope. He is recorded in a deed of 1663, along with Thomas, servitor of Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. Thomas of Todrig (d.c.1691) eldest son of Thomas. He was served heir to his father in 1653 and is recorded as Laird by 1656. He was fined in 1662, after the Restoration, for being a Covenant supporter. He was appointed a Justice of the Peace for Selkirkshire in 1663. He was recorded in a bond of 1663 and 2 in 1673. He paid the land tax in Ashkirk Parish in 1678, his estate being valued at £552. His brother Robert is mentioned in a discharge in Selkirk in 1678. In 1682 he is listed in the testament of Thomas Pringle of Clifton, possibly his brother-in-law. His sons Walter and William are also mentioned. He was on the Commission of Supply for Selkirkshire in 1678 and 1685 (as 'younger', which may indicate this was his son), and in 1690 along with Walter (presumably his son). He was probably the Laird of Todrig listed among heirs of the Regality of Melrose in 1682, along with his brother Robert. He probably married twice, having at least 3 children with his first wife, and his 2nd wife being Janet, daughter of Mark Pringle of Clifton. She is probably the ‘Jean’ Pringle, with whom his ‘tocher’ to the Parson of Ancrum (Mark Pringle’s father-in-law) is recorded. in 1643. His children included: Walter, who succeeded; Thomas (b.1639); William of Milstingon (b.1645), first of that branch; Robert (b.c.1660), who leased Borthwickshiel and Roberton from Gideon Scott of Highcheston in 1696, and witnessed the 1700 marriage contract between William Elliot of Harwood and his niece Jean Scott; Marion or Mary (b.1656), baptised in Ashkirk, who married Dr. Rutherford of Jedburgh; Anna (b.1659), baptised in Ashkirk, who died unmarried; Robert (b.1660), also baptised in Ashkirk; and Jane, who may have married a Scott of Baillielee. The witness to the 1656 baptism was Sir Robert Pringle (probably of Clifton, brother of his wife). Thomas (17th C.) tenant of Hummelknowes Mill, which would have Scotts for perhaps the next 200 years. He is mentioned as one of a large number of people accused of stealing a wallet in Hawick in 1642. It is unclear if he was directly related to John Scott, who came from the Rulewater millers and married the widow Henderson, who was tenant at Hummelknowes Mill. Thomas of Whitslade (17th C.) appears to be the proprietor of the estate in a list of communicants of the area in 1650. John, William and James (listed under him) may have been his adult sons or brothers. It is unclear how he may have been related to the other Scotts of Whitslade. ‘Leddie whithaugh’, who was taxed for 2 hearths on the west-side of Hawick in 1694, could possibly be his widow. Thomas of Whitslade (d.1671) 3rd son of Sir Walter, he succeeded in 1651, his elder brothers Robert and Sir Walter having no male heirs. In 1647 he was served heir to the lands of Whitslade, Redfordgreen, Drycleuchshiel and Ettrickhouse, previously belonging to his brothers. There was a further service of heirs for him in 1655, for the lands of Whitslade, as well as Drycleuchshiel, Redfordgreen, Ettrickhouse and Dalgleish, mentioned ‘feu duty and augmentation’. However, he sold the Stiches estate to Walter Chisholme of that Ilk in 1660, ending two centuries of ownership by the Scotts of Whitslade. He was recorded in the Land Tax Rolls of 1663 (presumably referring to an earlier period) paying £214 for Stiches and £156 for lands in Lillesleaf Parish. He fought alongside his brother Sir Walter at Inverkeithing in 1651 and was wounded there. Like his uncles Sir Walter and Robert before him, he was Member of Parliament for Selkirk, serving 1661–63. In 1661 he is recorded as Laird when he witnessed a baptism in Ashkirk for William of Synton. In 1663 he was appointed as a Justice of the Peace for Selkirkshire. Also in 1663 he witnessed the marriage contract of Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch, and was listed there as one of her curators. He was probably the Scott of Whitslade who entered into a teind agreement with the curators of the Duke of Buccleuch in the late 1660s. In 1666 he was one of the ‘curators’ of Francis of Davington. In 1613 he married Janet, daughter of Walter Scott (‘Auld Wat’) of Harden (and if this date was correct, he must have been quite young). In 1655 he secondly married Janet Mitchell, who was probably a widow. He is probably also the Thomas Scott of Whitslade who married ‘Ladie Ednum’ in the Canongate Kirk in 1662. His children included: George, presumably with his first wife, who became a surgeon’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1663 (but must have died before him); Marie (b.1656), baptised in Ashkirk; Walter (b.1657), who also died before him; and Thomas, who succeeded. The witnesses in 1656 were Sir Archibald Douglas (probably of Cavers) and John Murray (probably of Philiphaugh), the Sheriffs of Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire. It is said that his death was greatly lamented and inspired the verses that appeared in Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ in 1784, probably written by Capt. Walter Scott of Satchells (even although the title would make the poem seem to be about the earlier death of his brother Robert). Thomas of Wester Essenside (17th C.) recorded as owner of Wester Essenside in 1643, valued at £400, as well as Leap Hill, valued at £140. He also paid tax on £540 in Ashkirk Parish according to the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts, and he may be the same as one of the other Thomases (e.g. the younger Thomas of Todrig). Thomas (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Cessford and their children included Nellie (b.1644), William (b.1647), William (again, b.1649) and William (again, b.1654). His wife’s name is recorded as ‘Bessie’ in 1644. The witnesses in 1654 were John (perhaps a relative) and James Liddell. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel ‘Cowtert’ or ‘Coutert’ (probably Coltart) and their children included: John (b.1676); Andrew (b.1678); William (b.1680); and Bessie (b.1683). The baptism witnesses in 1678 were James Deans and William Scott and in 1680 were William Scott, ‘Flex’ and John Scott in Whiteyetts. Thomas (17th C.) tailor in Hawick. In 1684 his brother Walter was among those declared fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. Thomas (17th C.) servant at Hilliesland (presumably for the Gledstains family). In 1684 he was on a list of men declared as fugitives for frequenting conventicles.

Thomas (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was 'Jenet Lyttle'. Their son John was born in 1687, with witnesses Henry Scott and Robert Scott (so possibly relatives). Thomas (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish who married Jean Hislop. Their children included: Thomas (b.1687); and Marion (b.1690). The witnesses in 1690 were Thomas Wallace and Adam Hislop (who was probably related to his wife). Thomas of Synton (17th C.) recorded in 1690. However, he was not the Laird at that time, so was either tenant there or was Laird of neighbouring lands. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He farmed on one of the farms of the Knowesouth estate. Thomas (17th C.) resident at Winningtonrig in Cavers Parish in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to the James and John who are also listed there. Thomas (17th C.) tenant in Ruletownfoot, listed along with Thomas Turnbull on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the Thomas ‘in Roull’ whose wife’s will, Janet Porteous, was recorded in 1685. Thomas (17th C.) recorded on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls at Borthaugh. Thomas (17th C.) listed as tenant at ‘Bridieholl’ (probably Brieryhill) in Wilton Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. In 1700 he was ‘in Brierihole’ when he (along with smith Robert Miller) witnessed a baptism for William Riddell ‘in Brierihole’ when he (along with smith Robert Miller) witnessed a baptism for William Riddell in 1687, with witnesses Henry Scott and Robert Scott (so possibly relatives). Thomas (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Jean Hislop. Their children included: Thomas (b.1687); and Marion (b.1690). The witnesses in 1690 were Thomas Wallace and Adam Hislop (who was probably related to his wife). Thomas of Synton (17th C.) recorded in 1690. the death of his father and uncles that appeared in Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784) – ‘Of beauty grave, and courage brave; Although his years be young, There’s none on earth can parallel Old Whitslade – but his son’ [CWS]. Thomas (18th C.) younger son of Sir Gideon of Highchester. He became a merchant’s apprentice in Rouen in 1671 and a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh (as a merchant) in right of his father in 1677. Thomas of Chapel (17th/18th C.) paid tax on 7 hearths for himself and his tenants in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1694. He was on the Committee of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1698. He was also one of the Roxburghshire heritors who petitioned Parliament in 1700. In 1699 he exchanged lands with John Nisbet, spouse of Agnes Riddell, portioner of Bewlie. He may be the Laird of Chapel whose name appears on a list of Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1708. He must have been related to the earlier Walter of Chapel. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Askirk Parish. He married Marion Scott and their children included: James (b.1701) and Walter (b.1704). Perhaps the same Thomas was married to ‘Mary’ Scott and had further children including Janet (b.1710), Walter (b.1712), Robert (b.1714), Elizabeth (b.1715), Thomas (b.1717), John (b.1718) and William (b.1719). Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Borthwickshiels in 1710 when his daughter Janet was baptised. He may be the Thomas who married Bessie Richardson in Roberton in 1702 or the Thomas who married Isabel Scott in Roberton in 1705. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at West Middle in 1716 when he married Janet Scott. He was also at West Middle in 1726 when his daughter Ann was baptised. Perhaps the same couple were at Brieryyards in Wilton Parish in 1724 when their daughter Helen was baptised; the witnesses were John Scott and William Easton. Thomas (17th/18th C.) recorded as tenant in Hassendean in 1731. He complained about non-payment by William Tunno in Selkirk. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Synton Mill recorded in 1719. He married Agnes Taylor and their children included: George (b.1714); Magdalen (b.1719); Robert (b.1721); and Margaret (b.1723). Frances (b.1726), with mother ‘Bessie’ Taylor, was probably also his child. Thomas (17th/18th C.) cottar in ‘Langtoun’ (i.e. Langtonside) in Askirk Parish. His daughter Margaret was baptised in 1716. His wife’s name is not recorded, but he may be the same as one of the other Thomases. Thomas (17th/18th C.) recorded in Ormiston in 1718 when his son David was baptised in Cavers Parish. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident ‘in Kirkhouses’ in Askirk Parish. In 1724 the Parish gave him 14s. He was probably a pauper at that time and was probably related to earlier Scotts of Kirkhouses. Thomas of Todrig (d.1753) only son of Walter of Todrig. He was the 6th and last Laird of Todrig (although he is also sometimes confounded with his son Thomas). He was educated at Glasgow University. He was ‘younger’ of Todrig in 1708 when he had a marriage contract with Mary, 2nd daughter of Robert Scott of Scotsbank. In 1713 he brought a case against several other Scotts relating to a 1669 bond of ‘Auchter Auter Struther’. He was one of the petitioners in support of the lands of Whitslade being ‘disjoined’ in 1714. He is probably the Laird of Todrig recorded in Hawick in 1732 when the town ‘litter’ was rented for his son’s funeral. In 1731 he signed the marriage contract of William Elliot of Lodgegill and Jean Elliot of Harwood. He is said to have lived too liberally, having to sell Todrig in 1746 and Wester Essendon a few years earlier. His children with Mary Scott included: Walter (b.c.1710), who was in the Horse Guards; Robert (b.1714), who died young; Thomas (b.1717); John (b.1718), possibly died at sea; William (b.1719); possibly Patrick, who also went to sea and died unmarried; Janet (1710–67), who married Mr. Howie, surgeon in Selkirk and secondly Rev. David Brown of Selkirk; and Elizabeth, who was still unmarried in 1783. He secondly married Jane, sister to John Elliot of Peel (who must have been a cousin of some sort), widow of Thomas Pringle of Kirton; they had no children together. He died in Selkirk and is buried in Ashkirk. He was the progenitor of the Scotts of Stokoe in Northumberland. Thomas (17th/18th C.) son of William ‘in Wilsington’ (presumably Milsington) who witnessed a document for the Elliots of Harwood in 1694. If the date is correct, then he would have been the eldest son, but if so must have died before his brother William, who succeeded to the tenancy of Milsington. Thomas (18th C.) married Agnes Scott in Wilton Parish in 1731. Their children, baptised in Hawick, included James (b.1732) and Margaret (b.1736). He may be the Thomas who was tenant in Tandlaw in at about 1716–24 and was at Heap in about 1724. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Wester Alemoor in 1734. He was probably related to the other Scotts who lived at Alemoor around the same time (specifically Gideon, Walter and William). His children included Walter (b.1734). Thomas of Falnash (d.1779) son of Robert, grandson of ‘Auld Falnash’ and younger brother of Gideon, from whom he succeeded to the Lairdship. He sold Falnash, along with ‘Merrynees’ (i.e. Merry Naze) and other lands to the Duke of Buccleuch in about 1760. He may be the ‘Dr. Thomas Scott of Fanash’ who kept a lark and a song thrush in cages in his parlour (according to a letter by A.C. Hall in 1831). It is also possible that he was the same man as Rev. Thomas, minister of the Relief Kirk in Auchtermuchty. Thomas of Stonedge (d.1786) probably son of William of Stonedge. He appears to have served as Chamberlain for the Duke of Buccleuch for the Liddesdale lands in 1725 (although he must have been quite young at the time). He was already referred to as ‘of Stonedge’ in 1731, when he signed the marriage contract of William Elliot of Lodgegill and Jean Elliot of Harwood, although he may not yet have succeeded to his father. He was a great improver of his lands, having dykes built and plantations laid out. He was a heritor of Hobkirk Parish, and described as ‘late of Hobsburn’ when he lived at Grange in Edinburgh. He may also earlier have been described as ‘in Wauchope’. In 1741 he had an elaborately carved through-stone erected in Hobkirk kirkyard; this was in commemoration of Scott of Wauchope (probably his grandfather, Walter). He appears to have sold Forkins to William Elliot of Wolfelee in 1757. He was recorded as a Commissioner for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1761. In 1764 he was named as one of the commissioners for assessing the boundaries of Wilton Common. In 1767 he was recorded as tenant of Wauchope, like earlier members of his family. He was one of the Commissioners appointed in the court case regarding the division of Hawick Common in 1767. He was a lawyer who gave evidence at the trial regarding the Division of the Common and then was appointed by Lord Advocate Montgomery to make the actual Division itself. He suffered an unpleasant experience at the hands of some Hawick residents as a consequence, describing that ‘the mob were very riotous, pelted the chaise I was in with the surveyors’. However, he was also made an Honorary Burgess. He was listed as a voter in Roxburghshire in 1780. He sold Stonedge to Robert Lisle Burgess. He was listed as a voter in Roxburghshire in 1780. He sold Stonedge to Robert Lisle of Acton, although the sale was never completed. In 1732 he married Margaret, daughter of William Elliot, 2nd Laird of Borthwickbrae (the marriage recorded in Hobkirk Parish), and in 1758 purchased part of Borthwickbrae for himself. In the 1785 Land Tax Rolls it is recorded that he was differing about half of Borthwickbrae and the west part of Howcleuch from John Elliot of Borthwickbrae. His children included: William (b.1737). Other children baptised in Hobkirk Parish who may have been his were Elizabeth (b.1727), Margaret (b.1733), Susan (b.1734), Janet (b.1736) and Thomas (b.1736). His last will and testament is dated 1778 and he died at Grange, described as ‘late of Stonedge’. Thomas (b.1717) younger son of Thomas, last Laird of Todrig. He went to sea in 1740, received several wounds and lost an eye. Around 1750 he entered into service with the East India Company, remaining 13 or 14 years. He later lived in retirement, still being alive in 1783, but without issue. Thomas (b.c.1714) resident of Wilton Parish and later Effedge. He was tenant at Galalaw from about 1736–53, for 13 years with his brother John (who later lived at the Flex). He was recorded at Galalaw in 1742, 1744 and 1751. In 1764 he was living in Effledge when he gave brief evidence regarding the former use of Wilton Common. He married Isobel Blyth in Wilton Parish in 1741. Their children included: John (b.1742); William (b.1744); John (again, b.1746); Isabel (b.1748); and Elizabeth (b.1751). The witnesses were John and James Scott in 1742, John Scott and James Douglas in 1744 and James Dryden and Walter Scott in 1751. Thomas (b.1716/7) lived at Stiches from about the age of 12, where his father was tenant. He lived there off and on for 20 years, being tenant himself in about 1756–64. In 1764 he gave evidence regarding the former use of part of Wilton Common and was then in Easter Groundstone. Thomas (18th C.) married Betty Leyden in Cavers Parish in 1744. Thomas (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He witnessed baptisms in 1742 for workman William Nichol, in 1745 for weaver James Roger and for carrier John Pott (along with shoemaker John, with his name given after John’s, and hence he was probably son or younger brother of John), and in 1747 for wright Robert Pringle. In 1744 he and John together witnessed a baptism for Robert Riddell ‘at Park’. He married Margaret Deans and their children included: Margaret (b.1737); Janet (b.1740); John (b.1742); and Henrietta (b.1744). The witnesses in 1742 were junior mason Andrew Turnbull and shoemaker John (who was probably related) and in 1744 were merchant John Ruecastle and shoemaker John (again). Rev. Thomas (1722–90) son of Walter, a merchant in Leith, who was descended from the Scotts of Harden, his mother being Martha Cunningham. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1742. He was presented as minister of Cavers by William Douglas of Cavers in 1746 and ordained there in 1747. He was ‘Mr. Thos. Scott the mance’ when he paid the window tax in Cavers Parish in 1748; he paid again in 1753. He was translated to ‘Second Charge’ of South Leith in 1762 and moved to the ‘First Charge’ in 1765. In 1750 he married Helen Balfour from Pilrig, and she died in 1806. Their children were: Walter (b.1752); Martha; Janet; John, surgeon with the 10th Light Dragoons; and Thomas, minister of Newton, near Edinburgh, who married Elizabeth, daughter of Gilbert Kerr of Gateshaw. Thomas of Urlings, County Tipperary (18th C.) progenitor of the Earls of Clonmell. He is probably descended from one of the Border Scott branches. He married Rachel, daughter of Mark Prim of Johnswell. Their son John (b.1739) was Solicitor-General and Attorney-General and was created Earl of Clonmell. Rev. Thomas (1722/3–92) said to have been born in Wilton Parish, and brother of Rev. James of Jedburgh (however, this may be confusion). He was said to have been ordained at Harbottle in 1736, but that is surely too early. He became minister of the Presbyterian Church in Hexham in 1756. He turned down Colinsburgh in 1761, since he thought that the size of the congregation and travel involved would be too much. In 1763 he became 1st minister of the Relief Kirk at Auchtermuchty (the 5th such congregation). He appears to have ended as minister in 1786. In 1770 he married Rachel Scott, who was previously married to Rev. John Ward; she died in Edinburgh in 1810. Their children included: Robert, druggist in Edinburgh. He is buried in Canongate Churchyard. He could be the son of William and Christian Hoy, born in Wilton in 1723. It is unclear if he was brother of Rev. James of Jedburgh Relief Kirk or Rev. James (licensed by Jedburgh Presbytery), minister at Perth; he may thus have been an elder son of Robert of Falnash, perhaps born at Crowhill (like James), and may be the same Thomas who sold Falnash to the Duke of Buccleuch. It is thus possible that he was the ‘Dr Thomas Scot’, grandson of Gideon of Falnash, who was said at the legal proceedings for the division of Wilton Common in 1764 to be in possession of the papers of Scott of Falnash. Thomas (18th C.) married Mary Turnbull in Wilton Parish in 1751. Their children, included: Walter (b.1752) and William (b.1754), baptised in Wilton; and Helen (b.1761), Thomas (b.1766), Mary (b.1768), baptised in Hawick. Thomas (18th C.) resided in Auchtermuchty in 1751. He married Margaret Bell in Wilton Parish in 1751. Their children included Thomas (b.1751), John (b.1753), Robert (b.1755), Isabel (b.1757), Adam (b.1760) James (b.1761), William (b.1763), George (b.1765), Elizabeth (b.1768) and Margaret (b.1771). The witnesses in 1751 were Robert and Walter Scott. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hobkir Park. He was living at Harwood Mill in 1758. His children included Francis (b.1749), Susannah (b.1751), Jean (b.1753), Janet (b.1756) and Thomas (b.1758). Thomas (18th C.) married to Helen Renwick, their son William was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1757. In the entry he is marked ‘Buccleugh’, but it is unclear if that refers to the farm or something else. Probably the same Thomas and Helen Renwick were married in Roberton Parish in 1745. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Eves Parish. He married Jean Veitch and their children included: Thomas (b.1743); Isobel (b.1753); Jean (b.1755); and Archibald (b.1759). The witnesses in 1759 were William Maxwell and Charles Scott (who was probably related). Thomas (18th C.) schoolmaster in Ashkirk in the 1760s and 1770s. He married Marion Elliot in 1765. Thomas of Nether Bonchester (1729–1807) eldest surviving son of Walter and brother of Rev. William of Abbotrule and Southdean. He succeeded to Nether Bonchester in 1750, as grandson of Walter. He was said to have greatly improved the Bonchester estate, making a nursery for young trees and enclosing land. The couple of acres of best land that he set aside for growing and selling young trees was called the Nursery and the cottage there was called the Nursery House. The planting of trees also became popular with his neighbours, leading to the valley of the Rule becoming well wooded. He also farmed Mackside for a while and was factor for Robert Lisle of Stonedge. However, he later struggled financially and had to place his affairs in the hands of trustees, who were William Turnbull of Langraw, Thomas Scott in Lethem and Peter Brown in Minto. This led to the sale of the Bonchester estate in 1779, the purchaser being William Oliver of Dinlabyre. The Duke of Buccleuch is said to have sympathised with his kinsman and allowed him to live at a farm on the Bowhill estate for a nominal rent. He may be the Scott of Nether Bonchester (forename not given) listed among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761. In 1764 he was appointed, along with Archibald Rutherford in Jedburgh, as a surveyor of Wilton Common. He married Hannah Burnett. His only surviving child was Dorothea (‘Dora’, b.1778), who married Dr. William Lorraine from Glasgow (although born near Canonbie, and grandson of William Lorraine from Kirkton). He also had a daughter, Nelly, who died young. He died at Bowhill at the age of 78 and is buried at Hobkirk. Thomas (1732–1823) 2nd son of Robert Scott (‘in Sandyknowe’) and Barbara Haliburton. He was thus uncle of Sir Walter of Abbotsford. He gained ‘liferent’ of lands that were part of Oakwood in 1759. He also held lands at Bewlie, which he resigned to Walter Scott of Harden in 1766. He was recorded as Thomas ‘Son to Robert Scott of Sandicknow’ [sic] among the Commissioners for Selkirkshire in 1761. In 1788 he was listed among the voters in Selkirkshire. On the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls he was recorded as farmer at ‘Woolie’ (i.e. Wolfelee), when he owned 6 horses. He farmed at Wolfelee, holding the tenancy until 1810, then later at Monkland, near Jedburgh. During his time at Wolfelee he was a heritor of Hobkirk Parish and the young Walter Scott is said to have visited several times. For a while the tutor to his family was James Sanson, supposed to be the inspiration for Sir Walter Scott’s character ‘Dominie Sampson’. He was a skilled performer on the Border bagpipes, and in about 1816 wrote a list of the best Border bagpipers of earlier times. He married Anne, daughter of William Scott, 4th Laird of Raeburn (or perhaps Barbara, daughter of Walter Scott of Raeburn). In 1780 he secondly married Jean, sister of Thomas Rutherford of Knowesouth. His children included: James, who died unmarried in Edinburgh; Charles, who inherited Knowesouth, and farmed at Milings-ton; Mary; Anne; and Jean, who married Andrew Oliver of Langraw. He died at Monklaw, near Jedburgh. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hawickshiel. He married Mary Turnbull in 1751 and their children included: Walter (b.1752); William (b.1754); Helen (b.1761); Thomas (b.1766); and Mary (b.1768). The witnesses in 1766 were Walter Laidlaw and John Ker (blacksmith in Hawick-shiel). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Whithope in 1767 when his daughter Mary was baptised. He may be one of the Thomases who married Margaret Turnbull in 1754, Isobel Anderson in 1758 or Nelly Laidlaw in 1766. Isobel (b.1758), baptised in Roberton, may also be his child. Thomas (1735/6–1800) 4th son of Walter, tenant farmer at Girnwood. Along with his brother Walter he took over from his father as co-tenant of Girnwood. Both brothers being unmarried, the tenancy passed to their relative Walter, 2nd son of the 3rd William in Milings-ton. Thomas of Peel (1737–1813) 2nd son of John of Ashtrees and Helen Oliver. He was tenant farmer in Lethem, Southdean Parish, and is recorded there as farmer in 1792 when he had a bond with the Elliots of Harwood. He was ‘in Letham’ when recorded as a trustee for Thomas of Nether Bonchester (who had to sell his lands) in about 1779. He was recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls from 1785, owning 11 horses there in 1797. He also paid the dog tax at Lethem in 1797. He was appointed as one of the trustees for Thomas Scott of Nether Bonchester when he got into financial difficulties; the trustees sold off that farm in 1779. In 1807 he bought Peel (then called Buxtonlee) from Lord Douglas. He married Esther, daughter of Thomas Turnbull (of the Hawick carpet factory), this probably being in Wilton Parish in 1777; his wife died at Lethem in 1877, aged 37. Their children included: Thomas, who inherited Peel; John of Riccalton, who later re-purchased the family lands of Ash trees; Helen, who married Thomas Elliot, son of Elliot of Harwood; and Esther, who married John, 2nd son of James Robson of Sami eston. John Robson-Scott of Newton was his direct descendant, as well as the Boog-Scotts of Peel. Thomas (18th C.) blacksmith at Uthanhk in Hobkirk Parish in the last quarter of the 1700s. He could be the Thomas who married Betty Best in 1772. Some of these children, baptised in Hob kirk, could be his: Elizabeth (b.1773); James (b.1774); Nelly (b.1777); Isabel (b.1778); Dorothy (b.1778); William (b.1780); John (b.1782); Robert (b.1787); George (b.1789); and William (b.1794). There may be 2 families here. Thomas (18th C.) described as ‘sometime of Silverboothall’, he was probably son of James, farmer at Boonraw and Laird of Silverboothall. In the late 1700s he sold a small piece of the former Wilton Common to William Oliver ‘Auld cash’. He may be the same as one of the other contemporaries. Thomas (18th C.) gardener listed at Burnhead in 1791, when he was working for William Scott. Thomas (d.bef. 1805) weaver at Hawick. He married Christian Weir in 1771. Their children included James (b.1772), probably the millwright; and Thomas (b.1775), probably the weaver. He was a member of the Associate Congregation, which witnessed the baptisms. His wife’s death is recorded in 1805, by which time he was already deceased. Thomas (18th C.) recorded being let the farm of Pilmuir Rig for the first time in 1778, after the Division of the Common. He may be the same as one of the other Thomas es. Thomas (18th C.) farmer at Hawthornside in Hob kirk Parish according to the Horse Tax Rolls of 1788–91. He was probably related to George, who farmed there soon afterwards. Thomas (18th C.) recorded at Whitchesters in 1791 in a letter to a Selkirk lawyer. Thomas (18th/19th C.) from Hawick Parish, in 1792 he married Janet Riddell in Cavers. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at Northhouse, recorded on the 1792–97 Horse Tax Rolls. He was owner of 8 horses in 1797. He was additionally taxed for having 3 non-working dogs in 1797. In 1799 his son George was on the ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish. Thomas (18th/19th C.) servant at Wauchope in Hob kirk Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. Thomas (d.1808) son of Walter from Wiltonburn. He is described as a ‘hosier’ when he died in Hawick. He may be the same as one of the other Thomases. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1788 he married Helen Pott, who was from Castle ton. Their children (baptised in Castle ton) included: Helen (b.1789); Robert (b.1791); Helen (b.1797); James (b.1799); and Thomas (b.1801). Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident at Long newton according to the 1790–97 Horse Tax Rolls. William was also there in 1797 and so presumably a close relative. His son George was recorded in the Lieutenancy Book in 1797 and 1798. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1783 he married Janet Elliot, who was from Hob kirk. He may be the Thomas whose son John was baptised in Cavers in 1786. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Earlside in 1784 when his son Robert was baptised. Perhaps the same Thomas was recorded as a labourer at Earlside in 1800 when his daughter Barara was baptised. Thomas (b.c.1765) joiner of the Sandbed, possibly son of Walter, who established a joiner’s firm there in 1750. He is presumably the Thomas listed as a joiner on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He married Christian (or Chistina) Downie, and their children included Walter (who carried on the business) and Jane. A younger joiner Thomas, also listed at the Sandbed on the 1841 census, may have been his son, as well as Robert at an adjacent address. He is listed as wright on the Sandbed in 1808 when an unnamed child died and in 1811 when his daughter Nelly died. Thomas (18th/19th C.) servant at Woodhouse in Southdean Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. Thomas (d.bef. 1822) possibly miller at Hawick Mill. The death of his wife Agnes Reid is recorded in 1822, when he was already deceased, with his designation given as ‘H. Mill’. Thomas (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Nelly Kerr and their children included Archibald (b.1811), Margaret (b.1813), James (b.1815) and Mary (b.1820). Thomas (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Agnes Leithead and their children included Janet (b.1813), Charles (b.1815), Robert (b.1818), Walter (b.1820), Thomas (b.1822), William Hay (b.1824), James (b.1827) and Alexander (b.1829). Thomas (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Rachel Gregor and their children included Margaret (b.1824). Thomas (18th/19th C.) mason at Deanburnhaugh. He is probably the Thomas, son of Walter, who was born in Roberton Parish in 1769. He was recorded as a mason living at Borthwick Mains in 1799. In 1798 he married Margaret (or ‘Peggy’) Anderson, who lived to an old age and was said to have at least 300 descendants by the 1930s; she was probably the daughter of Michael Anderson born in Roberton Parish in 1770. She was described as being ‘everybody’s body. Whenever trouble or stress prevailed she was always ready to do and to dare for the sake of others’. Their children included: Walter (b.1799); Isabel (b.1801), who was living with her mother in 1851; William (b.1804); Beatrix (b.1806), who married James Pringle, hosiery worker in Hawick; Thomas (b.1810), probably the mason in Deanburnhaugh; Margaret (b.1812); George (b.1816); and Robert (b.1819), a labourer in Deanburnhaugh. His widow and son Robert were recorded in Deanburnhaugh on the 1841, 1851 and 1861 censuses. Thomas (b.c.1775) weaver in Hawick, probably son of weaver Thomas. He may be the weaver of that name listed among the men on the ballot to serve in the Militia in 1797; in 1799 he was among those ‘In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn still residing in Hawick parish’ and was still listed as a weaver on the ballot in 1801. He was grandfather of grocer George and great-grandfather of Peter, who founded Pesco’s. In 1841 he was living at about 6 Walter’s Wynd. His wife was Janet, and their children included George (b.c.1820) and James (b.c.1830). Thomas (1774/5–1846) joiner in Newcastleton, son of George. He is probably the joiner from Newcastleton of that name listed in 1797 among men on the ballot to serve in the Militia and still in Newcastleton in 1799 and 1801. His brother Archibald was also listed as a wright in Newcastleton in 1801. He subscribed to 2 copies of William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He is probably the wright listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. In 1841 he was living at about 30 South Hermitage Street. He married Mary Elliot, who died in 1806, aged 23. He secondly married Janet Elliot, who died in 1867, aged 73. His children included: George, who died in infancy; Mary; Archibald (1826/7–1904), also a joiner; Thomas; Hendry; John; and Helen. Thomas (18th/19th C.) mason in Hawick. In 1799 he was substitute for Robert Purdom to serve in the Militia. He was declared fit to serve and joined the regiment right away; however, he deserted by mid-1799 (although his surname is given incorrectly as ‘Young’) and John Fowler was balloted in his place. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Knowe in Minto Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. Thomas (b.1776/7) born in Roberton Parish, he was carter in Wilton. In 1841 he was recorded at Dovemount and in 1851 at Wilton Place. His wife was Nancy (or Agnes) Leithead, and she died before 1851. Their children included: Janet (1813–57), who married James Black and died in Ontario; Charles (b.1815); Robert (b.1818); Walter (b.1820); Thomas (b.1822); William (b.1824); James (b.1827); Alexander Nivison (b.1829), dyer in Melrose, named after the Robertson minister; and John Young (b.1833). Thomas (b.c.1770s) ploughman at the Tower Inn recorded on the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Hawick. Probably the same Thomas was recorded as a labourer in Hawick on the 1801 list. He may be the same as one of the other Thomases. Thomas (b.c.1770s) resident of Stirches Mains according to the ballots for the Militia in Wilton Parish in 1799 and 1801. He may have been related to Alexander, who was recorded as tenant at Stirches Mains at the same time; perhaps he was Alexander’s younger brother. One possibility is that this is the same Thomas who later farmed at Little Cote. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was living at Deanburnhaugh in 1800 (at the same time as the mason of the same name). He married Janet Scott in 1797, the marriage being recorded in Robertson and Wilton Parishes. Their children (baptised in Robertson) included Mary (b.1798), David (b.1800), Walter (b.1802), Robert (b.1804) and Thomas (b.1806). Thomas (18th/19th C.) stocking-maker in Hawick. He is probably the stocking-maker listed on the ballot for the Militia in 1801. He married Isabel Miller and their children included: John (b.1805); Catherine (b.1808); and Adam (b.1812). The death of his father-in-law Charles Miller is given incorrectly as ‘Young’) and John Fowler was balloted in his place. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Knowe in Minto Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. Thomas (b.1776/7) born in Roberton Parish, he was carter in Wilton. In 1841 he was recorded at Dovemount and in 1851 at Wilton Place. His wife was Nancy (or Agnes) Leithead, and she died before 1851. Their children included: Janet (1813–57), who married James Black and died in Ontario; Charles (b.1815); Robert (b.1818); Walter (b.1820); Thomas (b.1822); William (b.1824); James (b.1827); Alexander Nivison (b.1829), dyer in Melrose, named after the Robertson minister; and John Young (b.1833). Thomas (b.c.1770s) ploughman at the Tower Inn recorded on the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Hawick. Probably the same Thomas was recorded as a labourer in Hawick on the 1801 list. He may be the same as one of the other Thomases. Thomas (b.c.1770s) resident of Stirches Mains according to the ballots for the Militia in Wilton Parish in 1799 and 1801. He may have been related to Alexander, who was recorded as tenant at Stirches Mains at the same time; perhaps he was Alexander’s younger brother. One possibility is that this is the same Thomas who later farmed at Little Cote. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was living at Deanburnhaugh in 1800 (at the same time as the mason of the same name). He married Janet Scott in 1797, the marriage being recorded in Robertson and Wilton Parishes. Their children (baptised in Robertson) included Mary (b.1798), David (b.1800), Walter (b.1802), Robert (b.1804) and Thomas (b.1806). Thomas (18th/19th C.) stocking-maker in Hawick. He is probably the stocking-maker listed on the ballot for the Militia in 1801. He married Isabel Miller and their children included: John (b.1805); Catherine (b.1808); and Adam (b.1812). The death of his father-in-law Charles Miller is recorded in 1816. Thomas (b.c.1780) farmer at Eastcote in Cavers Parish. Thomas (b.1773) son of Rev. William of Southdean. He was recorded at Southdean Manse in the ballot for the Militia in 1801. He died without offspring. Thomas (18th/19th C.) of James, farmer at Todlaw. He was listed on the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish, along with his brother James. Thomas of Peel and Newton (1781–1858) son of Thomas, 1st Laird of Peel, he was born in Southdean Parish. He was joint tenant of Lethem with his brother John. He served with the volunteer yeomanry, and turned out at the False Alarm of 1804. In 1810 he became Captain in the 1st Regiment of Roxburghshire local militia. He was still ‘younger of Peel’ when he became an original member of the Jedforest Club in 1810. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. In 1833 he bought Newton (on Teviot) from William Ogilvie of Chesters. In 1841 he is listed as ‘Ind Farmer & Landowner’ at Letham and in 1851 was farmer of 7,000 acres there (jointly with his brother John), employing 19 men and 4 women. He left Peel to his nephew William Elliot (son of his elder sister Helen) and Newton to his nephew Thomas Robson (son of his younger sister Esther). He died (unmarried) in Edinburgh. His portrait was painted by Mr. Frain of Kelso, and depicted him in the uniform coat of the Jedforest Club. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Minto. He subscribed to Andrew Scott’s book of poetry, published in Kelso in 1811. Thomas (1782/3–1851) born in Yarrow Parish, he was shepherd at Nether Deloraine. In 1808 he was shepherd at Borthwickbrae Parkhead. He was also shepherd at Borthwickbrae Parkhead according to the 1812 ballot for the Militia in Robertson Parish. In 1808 he married Rachel Grieve, who was born in Langholm; she died in 1853, aged 71. Their children (baptised in Roberton) included: William (b.1808); Helen (b.1812); Christian (b.1814); Rachel (b.1816); Joan (b.1817); Jane Atchison (b.1819); John (b.1827/8), also a shepherd. He and his wife are buried in Borthwick Waas. Thomas Chisholme (1784–1811) son of Rev. Robert of Coldhouse and Margaret Chisholme from Selkirk. He was baptised in Peebles in 1785. His brothers included William Chisholme, who probably owned Chisholme House and Alexander, who was a friend of Lord Byron. In 1802 he inherited a share in some plantations in Jamaica from his uncle, William Chisholme. In 1805 he graduated from the College of Fort William, an oriental studies academy in Calcutta, with his name at the head of those conferred with a Degree of Honour. He became Registrar of Purneah in Bengal, and died there. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. In 1812 he married Mary, daughter of Adam Hobkirk. Their children were: Adam (b.1812); Thomas (b.1814); Jane (b.1816); and John (b.1823). Thomas (18th/19th C.) wheelwright on Buccleuch Street, recorded along with Robert on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. They were probably brothers or father and son. He may be the Thomas recorded as a wright on Buccleuch Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory, or part of the Thomas and Robert recorded on the High Street. He may also be the Thomas listed as a carrier’s agent on Buccleuch Street in 1837. Thomas (18th/19th C.) carter who lived at Whitrope Toll. He was listed among heads of households in 1835. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident at Lanton, son of Robert. He erected a headstone to his relations who are buried in Bedrule kirkyard. This included: his wife Mary, who died at Lantonhill in 1820, aged 40; son Robert, who died in Jedburgh in 1839, aged 29; and his father, mother and ‘brethren’. He could be the Thomas, ploughman in ‘Langtown’ (in Jedburgh Parish), who was on the ballot to serve in the Militia in 1799. Capt. Thomas (1788–1858) born in Kirkton Parish, he was son of William, who farmed at Single, with his mother being Margaret Pott. He was farmer at Shielwood and Captain in the 94th Regiment of Foot. In the 1841 and 1851 censuses he is listed as a farmer and a lieutenant on half-pay. His children (with his first wife) included a son Henry and a daughter Agnes. In 1856 he married Mary Ballantyne, daughter of John and Mary Miller; she was already a widow, her first husband being John Little, and she may also have thirdly married an Elliot. Their children were Gideon and Margaret (who married Gideon Thomas Scott, Selkirk wine merchant). An obituary was written for the Hawick Advertiser by Dr. John Douglas. Thomas (1788–1848) son of Archibald and Jeany, he was born in Falstone, Northumberland. He was proprietor of the Crown Inn in Newcastle on (possibly at 8 Douglas Square), according to Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He married Isabella, daughter of John Kyle; she died in 1869, aged 74. Their children included: John (b.1817), who died in Antigua; Agnes (b.1821); Thomas (1820/1–1902), carter; William (1824–41), also died in Antigua; Robert Elliot (1827–89); Jean (b.1830); Elizabeth (b.1833); Archibald (1834/5–66), died on the passage back from the West Indies; and Isabel (b.c.1836). The family are buried in Etterton Cemetery. Thomas (18th/19th C.) tenant in Selkirk Mill in 1825. In about 1828 he took the lease for another year. Thomas (18th/19th C.) mason in Wilton Dean. He is listed among heads of households there in 1835. Thomas (b.c.1780) son of Robert, miller at Roughheugh Mill. He was farmer at Little Cote. He was one of those said to have been attacked at the election riot in Hawick in 1837; he was thrown into the Slitrig near the Tower Inn and struck on the head. In 1841 he is recorded at East Cote, living with a female servant and 2 farm workers. He married, but had no issue. Thomas (b.1794/5) farmer at Priestrig. He farmed 16 acres and employed 1 labourer. In 1841, 1851 and 1861 he was living there with his wife Christian and family. Their children included Adam, Margaret and Christian. Thomas (b.1794/5) resident of Deanburnhaugh. In 1841 he is recorded as an agricultural labourer, and is easy to confuse with the mason of the same name, who also lived at Deanburnhaugh. He married Mina Inglis in Roberton Parish in 1830 and their children included: John (b.1831); William (b.1833); Helen (b.1834); Thomas (b.1837), ploughman in Lilliesleaf. Thomas (b.1809/10) mason in Deanburnhaugh, born in Roberton Parish, probably son of Thomas. He was living in Deanburnhaugh in 1841 and 1851, but by 1861 was at Myreslawgreen. In 1829 he married Jemima King (from Canonbie) in Roberton Parish in 1829, and their children included: Thomas (b.1830); James (b.1831); Margaret (b.1833); William (b.1835); Walter (b.1837); Barbara (b.1840); Isabella (b.1842); Mary (b.1844); Beatrice (b.1846); Wilhelmina (or Mina, b.1848); and Robert (b.1852). Thomas (b.1810) joiner in Hawick, probably son of Thomas. In 1841 he was living at the Sandbed. He may be the joiner from Hawick who was in the asylum in Dumfries in 1851. Thomas (b.1810) handloom weaver in Hawick. He was living at 53 Loan in 1851 and 1861. In 1835 he married Jane ‘Hallowell’ or Holywell. Their children included: George (b.1837); Elizabeth (or ‘Betsy’, b.1840); Margaret (b.1843); Robert (b.1845); Helen (or ‘Nellie’) (c.1847–1907); James (1848/9–52); Adam (1850/1–54); Isabella (b.1857); and Jemima (b.1859). The family are buried in St.

Mary’s Kirk. Thomas (19th C.) married Ann Simpson in Hobkirk in 1835. Thomas (1815–1879) eldest son of Charles, farmer at Milsington, who was a cousin of Sir Walter Scott. His mother was Esther Elliot. He took over the tenancy from his father and farmed at Milsington from 1854 until his death. In 1861 he was recorded as farmer of 1000 acres there. In 1856 he married Marion (or Mary), daughter of Henry Scott, farmer at Stelshaw. Their children included: Charles (b.1857/8), who purchased the farm of Milsington; James (b.1841), who moved to Canada; Henry Scott (b.1837/8); Catherine (b.1839/40); Adam (b.1841/2); and Mary Ann (b.1844/5. He was deceased by 1851 when his wife was listed as a grocer on the Howegate. Thomas (b.1818/9) born in Hobkirk Parish, he was a farm steward at Tyhehouse in 1851 and at Honeyburn in 1861. He married Isabella Davidson and their children, baptised in Cavers, included: Charles (b.1847); Barbara (b.1849); James (b.1851); Jane (b.1853); Betsy (b.1855/6); Isabella (b.1858/9); and Thomas (b.1861). Thomas (1820/1–1902) carter in Newcastleton. He is listed on the 1851 and 1861 censuses on Langholm Street. He married Jane Mitchellhill, who died in 1911, aged 88. Their children included: Robert (b.c.1848); Margaret (b.c.1854); Mary (1854/5–7); Thomas (b.c.1857); Mary (1858/9–63); and William (1861–9). He was probably son of Newcastleton innkeeper Thomas, who is buried in an adjacent plot in Etttleton Cemetery. Thomas (19th C.) married Catherine Farquhar in Hawick in 1850. She was daughter of stocking needlemaker Peter Farquhar. Thomas (1824/5–89) 3rd son of Liddesdale farmer John. He was a shepherd, starting out at Hartsgarth with his uncle Mr. Murray, then moving to Westshields. After marrying he lived at the Pietsnest (on Hyndlee) and then Westshields again, where he died. He married Christian, younger daughter of Robert Armstrong (and sister of his brother’s wife); she died at Wolfehopelee in 1909, aged 78. His children John, Robert and Mary became tenants of Wolfehopelee. His children included: Thomas (d.1876); Mary Anderson (1863/4–1933), who died in Hawick; and John (1859/60–1936), who died at Priesthaugh; Robert (1866/7–1953), who died at Flint Cottage, Denholm. Thomas B. (1849–1924) son of Walter and Mary Beattie, he was born in Wilton. He was a tweed manufacturer and died in Toronto, Canada. He married Winifred Brannah. Their son Douglas G., served with the R.A.F. and was killed in 1917 at the age of 21. Thomas (19th C.) farmer recorded at Langhope in Ashkirk Parish in 1868. Thomas ‘Tom’, ‘Scotia’ (1862–1906) son of George, grocer on the Howegate. His grandfather and great-grandfather before him had been West-enders. He was a traveller with his brother’s firm Pesco’s. He spent some time in Ontario, Canada, where in 1883 he helped establish an annual Common Riding celebration in the Galt/Guelph area, being the first secretary of the organising committee. He was Cornet in 1887, the year that the Ceremonial Committee was appointed. His Cornet’s Lass appears to have been ‘Miss Montgomery’, perhaps Agnes (b.1867), who was the first to buss the Flag in the Council Chambers. He married Margaret Elliot (1870–1914), daughter of John Robert Brough. Their children were: George Douglas (1899–1984), who married Ella Christie in 1933; Elliot B. (b.1901), who died young; Laura Isobel (1902–96), who married George M. Clunie; Thomas (1904–93); and Peter Adamson (1905–85). He suffered from tuberculosis and took his family to South Africa for his health; however, he died in London on his way home from there. Thomas A. (1853–1926) son of Adam and grandson of Robert, farmer at Boonraw. He was born at Burnfoot on the Ale Water. He studied medicine at the University of Iowa and Rush Medical Center. He worked in Illinois and Oregon and then as a surgeon on boats that travelled in many parts of the world. He retired in 1921 and moved back to his homeland, where he married Margaret, daughter of oil extractor Archibald Johnstone Donaldson in 1922, this being his 4th marriage. He died in Hawick. Thomas ‘Tom’ (1854–1927) watercolour painter, born in Selkirk. He studied at the Royal Institution and Royal Scottish Academy in Edinburgh and had many commissions from wealthy Border tweed manufacturers. He lived at Earlston and Bowden and settled at Leslie Cottage in Philiphaugh. Known for his powerful landscapes, he also illustrated many Border books, including Craig and Laing’s ‘The Hawick Tradition of 1514’ (1898) and ‘Branxholme Castle and the Land of the Scotts’ (1901), and was commissioned to paint ‘Return to Hawick from Hornshole, 1514’. He was said to be a regular visitor to Hawick and encouraged the young W.S.A. Ingles in his watercolour painting. He was a guest at the 1890 Common Riding and was the first guest at the Callants’ Club annual dinner in 1906. He read a paper on stone implements to the Archaeological Society in 1906 and donated a collection of his archaeological finds to the Museum, which now has more than a dozen of his paintings, including ‘Hawick Motte 1898’. In all, he exhibited 167 paintings at the Royal Scottish Academy. There is a bronze bust of him, by Thomas Clapperton, in Selkirk. A book ‘Lest we Forget’, about his Hawick connections, was written by M.H. Coltman in 1991. The museum in Drumlanrig’s Tower has a Tom Scott room, containing several of his paintings. Thomas John (b.1861) son of Robert and Mary Purdom. He was born in Cavers Parish. In 1882 he emigrated to Australia where he married Ada M. Fox in Melbourne, Victoria. Thomas (1862/3–1918) tenant in Edinburgh. His seal bore a hawk on a field of Azure. He was Edeneburgh’ (i.e. the Bishop of St. Andrews’ Scot tenant le Euesqe de Seint Andreu, del counte de Edeneburgh) (12th C.) recorded as ‘Walthero Scot’ in the Ragman Rolls in 1296, who came from Edinburgh (although it is unclear if he is distinct from any of the other early Walters. Walter (13th C.) recorded in 1254 as ‘de Escote’ in a document of Henry III relating to lands in Bedfordshire. Walter (d.c.1263) sergeant of the King’s Chapel, probably at Hereford. He was given a penny a day by the King, to be drawn by the Sheriff of Hereford. In 1263 his wife Edith and their children were granted the same penny a day for their lives. Walter (13th C.) listed as being ‘of Wyteby’ in 1265 when he gave half a mark to have an assize in Yorkshire. Walter (13th C.) Englishman recorded in 1265 among a list of rebels. He was Walter ‘Scoticus de Welte-done’ who was accused of plundering and probably forfeited his lands. Walter (13th C.) gave half a mark to have an assize in Sommerset in 1270. Walter (13th C.) listed as ‘le Escot of Weltedene’ in the Patent Rolls of Henry III in 1270/1. He is recorded several times in the 1279 assize roll of Northumberland. He is ‘Walterus Schot de Wilteden’, ‘Walterum Skot de Weltdeden’ and variants. It is unclear where these lands were, but presumably on the English side. He could be the same Walter recorded among a set of pleas of the English army made at Berwick in 1296; this particularly involved a dispute with Matilda of Blackburnshire over trespass and a coat. Walter (13th C.) holder of lands in Peeblesshire (or perhaps Lanarkshire, this is not entirely clear) who signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. He is recorded as ‘Wautier Lescot’. It is possible that he was son of William and brother of Richard of Rankleburn and Murthockstone (who also swore fealty to Edward I). There is some suggestion that he was the elder brother, although the chiefdom of the family passed through Richard, so perhaps he had no heirs. The lands he held may have included Kirkurd, which were certainly later owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch. He may have been the first of his family to have the name ‘Walter’. He may be the same ‘Waltero Scot’ who witnessed a charter relating to Soutra Hospital in about 1280. It is also possible he was descended from Adam, whose name was associated with lands in Peeblesshire in the early 120s. Walter (13th C.) signatory of the Ragman Rolls in 1296, who came from Edinburgh (although it is unclear if he is distinct from the man from Peeblesshire, or whether this is a duplicate entry). He was recorded as ‘Wautier Scott tenant le Euesqe de Seint Andreu, del counte de Edeneburgh’ (i.e. the Bishop of St. Andrews’ tenant in Edinburgh). His seal bore a hawk on a wrist, together with a crescent and star in fields and the name ‘SWALTERI SCOTTI. The crescent and star indicate a close relationship with the Scott chiefs. Walter ‘the Ratton’ (d.c.1400) said to have been grandson of John ‘the Lamer’, and son of a Chamberlain to the Archbishop of Glasgow (although there is some confusion between father and son). Alternatively he was a younger son of Sir Michael of Rankilburn. He was probably the 1st Laird of Synton, although accounts differ, and information about these generations is very uncertain. His nickname came from his temper and small size. In about 1389 he settled at Burnfoot in the Ae valley and became the first (new) Laird of Synton. He married a Shortreed of Headshaw. His children probably included: George, who succeeded to Synton; John of Headshaw; Walter of Ashkirk; and William of Glack. He died during the reign of Robert III. Sir Walter (d.1402) 4th Laird of Rankilburn (Buccleuch), Murdostoun and Kirkurd, son of Robert. He was the first of a huge number of Sir Walters who would come later. He was said to be a brave man who performed many actions in service of the Crown. He had a charter of 1389 for superiority of the lands of Kirkurd. He may be the Walter who had an indenture in 1391 with Hugh Fotheringham for the lands of Caverton, made at Borthwick. In 1398 he was among the barons who were bound to keep peace on the Border and he was appointed as ‘borowis for the Erlis boundis of Douglas of the mydil marche’ (thus the first of his family associated with the Wardenship of the Marches). Additionally in 1398 he was one of the ‘borowis’ for the Earl of Douglas bounds on the Middle March, according to an English document. His wife’s name is not known, and his only known child is Robert, who succeeded him. He was killed at the Battle of Homildon Hill, serving in the army of Archibald, Earl of Douglas. Walter of Ashkirk (14th/15th C.) younger son of Walter, 1st Laird of Synton. However, these generations are very uncertain, and nothing else is known about him. He was probably ancestor of the James recorded in Ashkirk in 1502 and 1526. Walter ‘Wat’ (15th C.) recorded in 1456/7 as witness to the sasine for Ewesdale passing from Robert of Ewesdale to George Douglas, 4th Earl of Angus. He may have been from Ewesdale, along with Sim, Henry, John and Nichol, who are also listed. Sir Walter of Buccleuch (d.c.1468) eldest son of Robert, he was 6th (and last) Laird of Murthockstone (or Murdostoun) and the first to be described as ‘of Buccleuch’. He was also sometimes still described as ‘of Kirkurd’. He was mentioned as son and heir of Robert in 1415, when his father swapped lands of Glenkerry for Bellendean with Melrose Abbey. In 1426 he is described as son and heir of Robert of ‘Murtouson’ when he was granted the lands of Lemptlaw in the regality of Sprouston. He was probably the Walter on the ‘retour’ for the lands of Caverton in 1429/30. In 1431 he had a ‘transumpt’ made of the charter of 1420 in which his father was granted half the lands of Branhomle. He obtained lands of Heap in Wilton from James Langlands in 1431, a public instrument to that effect being signed at St. Mary’s Kirk; he swapped these lands for Milsington in 1451 at Wilton Kirk (with a confirming deed in 1453). He witnessed a confirming charter for lands in Primside in 1432 and another for Nether Crailing in 1434, both granted by Archibald, Earl of Douglas. In 1434 he was ‘lord of Morthouystoun’ in a document relating to Ladyurd.i He was knighted by James II in 1437, and also granted a charter for lands in Eckford in 1439 (confirmed in 1450), apparently for capturing Gilbert of Rutherford. He is recorded in a document as Lord of ‘Morthouystoun’ in 1434, and was still presiding over the Baron Court of Kirkurd in 1455. He witnessed several charters granted by James II in the 1430s to 1450s. In the 1430s he gained lands at Grahamslaw from William Crichton of that Ilk (who is described as his relative, and was clearly a close political ally). In 1438 he was listed on the ‘retour of inquest’ for Ker of Altonburn. In 1443 he witnessed a charter for William Cranston of Crailing. He witnessed a charter for Borthwickshiels in 1444 and a lease for related lands in 1445. In 1446 he exchanged the family’s Lanarkshire property (Murtleckston) for the rest of Branhomle, with Thomas Inglis; in response to Inglis’ complaint about English incursions on Branhomle, he supposedly remarked that ‘the Cumberland cattle were as good as those of Teviotdale’. He thereby acquired Todshawhill, Todshawhaugh, Goldielands, Whitlaw, Whitrig and part of Over Harwood. In 1446 he was witness to a charter for Ker of Altonburn and in 1446/7 was on a ‘retour’ panel for Ker of Altonburn. In 1447 he bought the ‘Cousinlands’ (to the north of Branhomle) from Margaret Cousin, wife of Simon Routledge and mother of Robert Scott (hence probably a relative). He witnessed a charter for Stephen of Castlelaw (his brother) in 1448. In 1449/50, with the consent of his eldest son David, he renounced his superiority over... the lands of Lochurd and Kirkurd to the chaplains of the prebend of Kirkurd (then part of the Collegiate Church of Dalkeith). In 1450 he was on the panel for the ‘retour’ of William Douglas for the Barony of Hawick. During the reign of James II he was one of the conservators of truces with England. He was a conservator of truces with England in 1449, 1451, 1453, 1457 and 1459, and he was one of the signatories of the Border Laws document drawn up in 1449. In 1451 he exchanged the lands of Heap for those of Milsington with John of Langlands. He could be the Walter who was among the conservators for the truce with England in 1451. He was on an assize for the Douglases in Dumfries in 1451/2. In 1452 he witnessed the document creating the Barony of Kilmaurs for Alexander Cunningham; this was done while part of the expedition into England, led by James II. In 1453 he was granted the fees of the men of Teviotdale according to the Exchequer Rolls. In 1454/5 he witnessed a document for the Kers of Altonburn. In 1455 he led a group of Borderers against the remnants of the army raised to revenge the murder of William Douglas by the King, the battle taking place at Arkholm. Thereby he was granted ‘Quhytehestir’ (Whitchester) in the Barony of Hawick (forfeited by John St. Michael), as well as lands in Selkirkshire. In 1456 he was on the panel that acquitted Andrew Ker of Altonburn of helping the English burn lands around Jedburgh. In 1457 he witnessed the document appointing Andrew Ker of Cessford as Bailie of the Lordship of Jedforest. In 1458/9 he obtained lands at Abington, Pharelholm and Glendonanrig, which had previously belonged to the Douglases. Along with his son Sir David he was also granted part of Langholm. In 1458 he had a charter for Glendowran and other lands in Lanarkshire (which may have been held by a cadet branch for another 3 centuries). He is recorded as Master Ranger of Ettrick ward from at least 1455 and was probably the ‘Sir Walter of Kirkurd’ listed as Master Ranger in 1467 when he had the farm of Eldinhope for his fee; he remained in this position until 1468. In 1461 (as superior of Branxholme) he transferred the lands of ‘Kirkton and Toftis’ to Katherine Inglis. His sons David and Alexander witnessed a charter in Edinburgh in 1464. Also in 1464 he was on the panel for the inheritance of the lands of Cavers and Sheriffship of Roxburgh. Also in 1464 he witnessed the document giving a reward to Robert Scott of Todshaw and other local men for the capture of John Douglas of Balveny. He was also present in Parliament in Edinburgh in 1464. In 1464/5 he was on the panel for the inheritance of the lands of Cavers and Sheriffship of Roxburgh. Also in 1464/5 he witness the document giving a reward to Robert Scott of Todshaw and other local men for the capture of John Douglas of Balveny. He was also on the panel that decided on the disputed lands of Kirkton Mains and Flex in 1464/5. He married Margaret, daughter of Peter Cockburn of Henderland, and appears to have had at least 3 sons (although things are still confused in these generations): David, who succeeded; James of Kirkurd and Hassendean, ancestor of the Scotts of Hassendean, Burnfoot and Burnhead (although there is some suggestion that he was not a full brother of David); and Sir Alexander of Abington and Howpasley, ancestor of the Scotts of Thirlestane, Howpasley, Horsleyhill, Gilmscleuch, Newburgh and Tushielaw. It seems feasible that John of Thirlestane, who gained the half Barony of Wilton in 1483, was another son. His seal bore a diagonal band with 2 crescents and a star, and the words ‘S’ WALTERI SCOT DE BUKCLUCH’. Walter (d.1471) eldest son of Sir David of Branxholme and Buccluch. In 1465 he was contracted to marry Katherine, daughter of John Lindsay of Covington, involving the lands of Kirkurd. However, it is unclear that the marriage ever happened. In 1469/70, along with his father, he was made Keeper of Hermitage Castle by Archibald Douglas ‘Bell the Cat’. However, he did not live much longer, predeceasing his father and dying without issue. He is mentioned in 1470 in a charter for lands in the Hermitage valley; he is there described as son and heir of David of Buccluch. In June 1471 he was gifted the relief of the lands of West Lilliesleaf and Whitton. By the following year David (his brother) was the heir (although he may be the Walter who was witness, along with David of Buccluch, to a saisine for the lands of Borthwickshiel in May 1471). Walter of Fenwick (15th C.) witness to a notorial instrument relating to the lands of Whitchesters in 1456, possibly relating to a ‘retour’ witnessed a few years earlier. Probably the same Walter of

Fenwick is recorded as witness in 1484/5 to a charter where Sir David of Branxholme gave Whitchesters to his son Robert (of Allanhaugh). In 1488 he was one of the bailies appointed for the precept in 1488 in which Sir Thomas Turnbull leased Greenwood and Lyne to Robert Scott, and also witnessed the same document. He may have been ancestor of later Scotts of Fenwick. Walter 3rd Laird of Synton (15th C.) probably son of George. He is said to have married a daughter of Scott of Hassendean during the reign of James II; however, it is unclear which Scott of Hassendean is intended. His children were John and Walter, both of whom succeeded. Walter 5th Laird of Synton (d.c.1463), younger son of Walter and brother of John the 4th Laird. He married a daughter of Sir John Johnstone of that ilk and his sons included George, who succeeded. He is said to have died near the beginning of the reign of James III, but James IV is more likely. Walter (15th C.) listed among the local men who were rewarded by the King in 1463/4 for helping to capture John Douglas of Balveny. He is recorded as ‘niger Walterus Scot’, presumably a reference to a swarthy complexion. He is surely related to some of the other Scotts mentioned (John, Robert of Todshaw, Simon and Thomas), but it is unclear how. He could be the same as one of the other contemporary Walters. Walter (15th C.) held a sasine for the lands of ‘Wester Lymfleris’ in Lanarkshire in 1478. It is unclear if he was the same as one of the other Walters. Walter of Whitehaugh (15th C.) recorded in the 1488 Charter for the Barony of Branxholme. He was listed among the heirs of Sir David of Buccleuch, the last to be explicitly related, suggesting he may have been a nephew of Sir David perhaps. He must have been related to David of Whitehaugh who is recorded in 1479, John in Whitehaugh, listed in 1501, and Philip of Heap, mentioned in 1508. Walter of Heap (15th C.) member of the panel or the inheritance of Branxholme and Buccleuch by Walter, grandson of Sir David in 1492. He was also ‘Walterum Scot de Hep’ in 1494 on the panel for the inheritance of Synton. He may be the same as Walter of Whitehaugh. Walter of Tushielaw (15th/16th C.) see Sir Walter of Howpasley. Sir Walter of Howpasley (d.1513) eldest son of Sir Alexander of Howpasley and Abington. His brothers were Robert (who probably started the Scotts of Thirlestane); William, Abbot of Melrose; Adam; Alexander; and probably David of Tushielaw. In 1478 (possibly an error) he was ordered to pay William Inglis for the lands of Meiklehope in an arrangement involving his deceased father Alexander. He was witness to a transfer of land between Robert Scott of Haining and David Scott of Branxholme in 1482. He may be the Walter who acted as one of the Earl of Angus’ Bailies for infesting David Scott of Branxholme in the lands of Mangerton in 1482. In 1484 there was a claim by Jane Douglas (widow of David Scott, younger of Buccleuch) for 8 years’ rent of lands detained by him. He was mentioned in a charter of the Barony of Branxholme in 1488, clearly stated there to be son of the deceased Alexander. In 1491/2 he was one of the executors of the will of David of Buccleuch. He was appointed as tutor to young Walter (‘Wicked Wat’) of Buccleuch by Walter the 8th Laird and handled his affairs during his minority. In 1487-90 he was Master Ranger of Ettrick (and stated to be son of Alexander), when assigned the lands of Auldhope. In 1488 (probably just after the death of his father) and in the period 1484-90 these lands were said to be in the hands of him and his mother, Lady Joan Douglas; the lease was extended until 1496. In 1488 he was also leased the lands of Tushielaw, with David of Buccleuch as pledge. In 1493 he was surety for William Grahamslaw at Hassendean Kirk (however, Robert of Howpasley also served as surety in 1493, and was probably his brother). He was also allowed to pay a fine for his crimes of bringing William Scott, called ‘Gyde’, William’s brother John (it is unclear whether they were related to him) and other ‘Traitors of Levyn’ to raid the lands of Harehead, as well as resetting Henry Scott and others. In 1494/5 he was surety for Adam ‘in Auldinnischop’ (probably his brother), Robert of Deloraine, David son of James in Hassendean, Adam Turnbull in Hornshole, William Dickson in Ladhope, Thomas Launder of Todrig and Andrew Dickson in Buccleuch. Also in 1494/5 he is probably the Walter recorded being ‘of Tushielaw’ (since these lands were also held by his family) when he was surety for David Turnbull, son of the Laird of Whithope. He was additionally listed in 1494/5 as owner (along with Walter Turnbull of Howpasley) of sheep that were stolen from Stouslie by the Grahamslaws of Newton. It is unclear if he or Walter of Buccleuch was the Walter listed as Ranger for Ettrick in 1494–6 (with John as Deputy Ranger). It is unclear when he ended his position as Custodian for the Ward of Ettrick, since it is difficult to separate him from Walter of Buccleuch (his cousin’s son), who held a similar role around 1500. In 1499 he was assigned the lands of ‘Laudehop’ (presumably Ladhope on the Yarrow), with the pledge being the Laird of Buccleuch; he also acted as pledge for Walter of Buccleuch in some other lands. He may also be the Walter of Tushielaw who was ‘coronator principalis de Ettrik’ according to the Exchequer Rolls of 1501, when he was liable for the fines of David Scott, Adam Scott and James Laidlaw; it was stated that since he had no means within the Sheriffdom of Selkirk, the charge was to be transmitted to the Sheriff of Peebles. He was also listed as ‘Walterus Scot de Howpaslo’ in the Exchequer Rolls of 1501, among mostly local men whose fines were compounded. He had a ‘letter of reversion’ for the lands of Appletreehall with Alexander Lord Home in 1502. Also in 1502 he served as surety (along with Robert of Stiches) for Patrick, son of Adam ‘in Hardwodhill’; also mentioned is Alexander Scott, probably his brother. In that same year he served as surety for his brother Alexander, who had remission for several thefts (from John in ‘Valis’ and from David Pringle out of ‘Fechane’) and for Adam Turnbull in Hornshole. Additionally in 1502 William in Broadmeadows had remission for several crimes, including injuring him at Tushielaw (when he was described being ‘de tuschelaw’) and he was surety for Adam ‘in aldinershope’ (probably Anneshop) and Adam in Tushielaw (who may have been related to him). In 1504 he was one of the ‘Bailies in that part’ appointed by Patrick, Earl of Bothwell to infeft Walter of Buccleuch in lands in Annadale. Also in 1504 he was fined at the Justice-aire in Dumfries for failing to give suit for his lands of ‘Rig’ (i.e. Caerenrig). In 1504/5, along with David Hopringle, George Hepburn and William Middlemas, he held lands at Boonraw, which were sold to Robert Scott of Stiches. In 1506/7 he was ‘tutoure to the Larde of Bukcleuch’ (the young Walter, who had just succeeded) when he gave in his tutory accounts. In 1507 he had a charter for the lands of Ladhope in Ettrick Forest. He was still ‘tutor’ in 1509, when he was said to be the closest male relative. In 1509 he was on the panel for ruling on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers by James Douglas. In 1510 he was fined along with 35 others of ‘destroying the Woods of Ettrik-Forest’. Also in 1510 he was recorded in a pledge by Margaret, wife of James Scott in Falside. He was recorded as part of an assize in Edinburgh in early 1513. He married a daughter of Elliot of Larriston (perhaps Elizabeth, based on the names of his daughter Janet’s children). The gift of wardship of his lands and marriage (meaning the financial gains from the contract etc.) of his daughter went to James Lundie in 1517. His daughter and heiress (at least for some lands) was Janet, who appears to have firstly married John Baird, Lord Posso (who died in 1527) and secondly married Thomas MacDowell; she transferred Midshields and Apple-treehall to her uncle Robert in 1532/3. He was succeeded by his son Robert. He is one of the most prominent local Lairds who died at Flodden. Walter (15th C.) name of 2 men recorded in the last will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme in 1491/2, in addition to Walter of Howpasley. Walter Scote’ was left 3 sheep and ‘magno Waltero Scot’ was left 20 shillings. Walter of Whitchester (15th C.) recorded in the 1493 Justice-aire held in Jedburgh when he was surety for Thomas Brown in Minto. It may be that this is an error for Robert of Whitchester. Sir Walter (1470s–1504) 8th Laird of Buccleuch, grandson of Sir David, who he succeeded in 1492, his father David having died first. He was the only child of David and Jane Douglas, daughter of the Earl of Angus. He must have been the Walter of Branxholme receiving the lands of Mangerton in a sasine of 1484/5 (with George Fairneylaw as notary). In his grandfather’s last testament he was granted £40 and 11 oxen and made a ‘tutor’ of William Turnbull of Minto. In 1492 he succeeded to the lands of Branxholme, Whitchesters, Lempitlaw, Eilrig, Rankleburn, Milingsington and Kirkurd. However, he received sasine of half of Branxholme, together with Eckford and Langton only in 1500, the lands having been held in ward by the Crown for 7 years; this suggests he only reached majority in this year. He was still superior of the Barony of Kirkurd (Peeblesshire) recorded in sasines of 1493 and 1495. In 1494 he was on the panel for Alexander Erskine inheriting Synton and the office of Sheriff of Selkirk. In 1494/5 he acted as surety at Jedburgh Justice-aire for George Young, who had been captured at Minto. In 1494 he obtained a decree from the Lords of Council regarding the earlier plunder of his grandfather’s lands and house at Buccleuch. He may be the Walter who leased the lands of Whitsiels (near Langholm) in 1494. He is probably the ‘Walteri Scot’ who was made custodian of the Ward of Ettrick in at least the period 1496–98 (although there may be confusion with Walter of Howpasley); in 1496 he was liable for the fines of Adam Scott and others and he was given the rental of ‘Aldanehop’ for his fee as Ranger of Ettrick Ward. In 1499 he was tenant. of Deloraine and ‘Warldishope’. In 1500 he was infefted in the lands of Grahamslaw by the Earl of Bothwell, and also his uncle Robert of Allanhaugh resigned Whitchesters into his hands as security for a loan. He was granted the lands of Whithope (in the Barony of Hawick) in a charter of 1502. Also in 1502 he was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh, failing to ‘give suit’ for his lands of Branxholme, Lanton and Eckford (as well as his lands of Buccleuch in Selkirkshire). Additionally he was surely for William Dalgleish in Braidhaugh and for John Cockburn in Milsington. His name was mentioned in connection with negotiations for the marriage of King James IV with Margaret, daughter of Henry VII of England in 1502/3, and he witnessed the infeftment of Queen Margaret in the lands of the Forest at Galashiels in 1503. Also in 1503 he witnessed a financial agreement in Jedburgh between George Douglas, Master of Angus and Ralph Ker of Primisdeloch. In 1503 he witnessed 5 sasines relating to Queen Margaret’s attorneys, done at Methven, Meuteith, Stirling, Linlithgow and Galashiels. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Walter Ker of Cessford, who was widow of Philip Rutherford, younger of that Ilk. She long outlived him, being burnt within Catslack tower by Lord Grey and an English raiding party (supported by the Kers) in 1547. He was succeeded by his son Sir Walter (‘Wicked Wat’). A 2nd son was William of Whithope. He was said to have been one of the few nobles to escape from Flodden, but this seems more likely to have been his son, Sir Walter. His widow and son are recorded being assigned the lease of Deloraine and Warshehope in 1504; she had liferent of these farms in 1510. Walter of Synton (d.c.1500) probably son of George, he is usually referred to as being the 7th of Synton. However, there is sometimes confusion with his grandson, Walter. He is mentioned in family writs in 1487 and flourished during the reign of James IV. Some early family histories say he married a daughter of Cockburn of Hernderland and secondly a daughter of James Riddell of that Ilk, but this seems to be incorrect. His son was Robert of Stiches and later of Synton (however, the relationship between the Scotts of Synton, Stiches and Headshaw are confused in these generations). Walter (15th/16th C.) son of James of Hassendeane (probably the same as James of Kirkurd) who witnessed a document for the Scotts of Branxholme in 1500. He may be the same as one of the other contemporaries Walters. Walter (15th/16th C.) son of Robert of Hartshaw. In 1499 he gave his consent for Middlestead of Langhope to be assigned to Patrick Home. This was probably the Langhope in the Ale valley. However, it is unclear where ‘Hartschaw’ was (perhaps an error for Headshaw). Probably the same Walter was feued the east steading of Langhope in 1510, and was the son and heir of Robert who feued the west steading of Gildhouse (also called Dodbank) in the same year. Walter of Headshaw (d.bef. 1510) probably descendant (perhaps son) of John of Headshaw, son of Walter of Synton. He is recorded as ‘of Eidschaw’ when witness to a sasine of 1484/5 for lands of Mangerton going to the Scotts of Branxholme. In 1484 he was ‘Walter Scot de Eedschau’ when he was one of the men directed by the Earl of Angus to infeft Robert Elliot of Redheugh in some lands. In 1484/5 he also witnessed a document relating to Whitchesters. His son David leased lands in the Ettrick valley in 1486. In 1487 his son Robert bought the lands of Boonraw from James Newton of Dalcove, and he was one of the witnesses to the sasine (this Robert appears to be the same as Robert of Stiches). In 1493 he was ‘of Eidschaw’ when he was allowed to ‘compone; for being associated with ‘the thieves and traitors of Leven’. In 1493 and 1494/5 his son Robert was surety for Hector Lauder, brother of the Laird of Todrig. He is listed in the Exchequer Rolls in 1501 among mostly local men whose fines were compounded. He may be the same Walter of Headshaw recorded in 1502 when he had a remission for stealing 8 oxen and 4 horses from Robert Lauder. John Scott of ‘Valis’ acted as surety (and hence may have been a close relative). Also in 1502 his son Walter had remission for stealing sheep from farms at Yair, Selkirk, Cauldshielis and Broadmeadows, with James in Ashkirk and Robert of Stiches acting as sureties. In 1502 he and Walter in Synton (his son) were sureties for John in Walls and also in 1502 he was surety for William in Fenwick. Thomas, brother of Philip of Headshaw is recorded in 1510, so surely his descendants. His sons may have been: Philip, his heir; David; Simon of Dryhope; Robert; Walter; and Thomas. Walter (15th/16th C.) described as son of Walter ‘of Eidschaw’ (i.e. Headshaw) in 1502. He had remission for several thefts, specifically stealing 80 sheep from William Ker at Yair, 60 sheep from Robert Brown and John Turnbull at Selkirk, 60 sheep from the Abbot of Kelso and Ralph Ker at Cauldshielis (this incident perhaps also involving Adam Turnbull in Hornshole and Chamberlain Newton), 80 sheep from

Ralph Ker at Broadmeadows (this probably also involving Adam Turnbull, as well as David ‘the Lady’ in Stirches), 60 cattle from Ralph Ker at Whittlawhouse, a horse and goods from Alexander Pringle, 2 horses from a house in Selkirk, another horse from Selkirk Castle, a grey horse from William Ker in Whitemuir, a heifer from John Scott of Haining, 6 oxen from Haining, and a horse and 4 oxen from the Hospital of St. Andrew in Peebles; also for resetting David Turnbull, John Somerville, Christopher Taylor, Edmund Taylor and the ‘traitors of Leven’. James Scott in Ashkirk and Robert Scott in Stirches acted as sureties, the remission being described at the Justice-aire held in Selkirk. His daughter may have been the Janet who married Walter of Whitehaugh. The Walter in Headshaw who was recorded in 1532 and 1533 is probably his nephew. Walter (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 being ‘in le newhalburnhed’. Along with Thomas Brown in Cavers he was surety for George Turnbull in Weens (who was one of the men charged with the murder of Robert Oliver at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh). He was presumably tenant at Burnhead, but it is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts of Burnhead or Over Newhall. Walter (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 when John Elliot in Foulshiels was convicted of stealing 100 sheep from his farm at Hartwoodburn. He is probably the same as one of the other Walters. Walter (15th/16th C.) tenant in Broadmeadows, brother of John in Hassendean. At the Justice-aire in Selkirk in 1502 he had remission for stealing 7 cows from William Wood in Williamhope, 2 horses from William Wood in Broadmeadows 14 cows, 4 horses and various goods from Thomas Denholm in Blackgrain, 24 sheep from George Bonniton in Whitlaw House and Greenhead, and 28 sheep belonging to the Abbot of Kelso and William Lowry in Cauldshiellhouse. His surety was John in Hassendean, his brother. He may have been related to William and John, sons of James of Broadmeadows, who were recorded at the same Justice-aire. Walter of Midgehope (15th/16th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire in Selkirk in 1502. He had remission for resetting David ‘de francia’, especially in the theft of cows from Glensax. Walter Scott of Howpasley (who also held Tushielaw) was his surety and hence perhaps related. However, it is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts. Walter (15th/16th C.) son of Adam. Along with his father he is recorded in the Exchequer Rolls of 1512 relating to earlier payments for ‘fermes’ of their steadings in Ettrick Forest. He may have been son of Adam who was son of Sir Alexander of Abington and Howpasley. Walter (15th/16th C.) had the ‘fermes’ of Shaws and Berrybush remitted to him in 1513. He may be the same as one of the other Walters. Walter (15th/16th C.) listed on the 1526 remission for Borderers involved in attacking the Earl of Arran. He is recorded as being ‘in the Haucheid’, which may be Haughhead near where the Boonraw Burn joins the Teviot or the Haughhead in Eckford Parish. His sons William and Adam are also listed. Walter (15th/16th C.) probably the son of James of Ashkirk, who was listed in the remission given in 1526 to a large number of Borderers for attacking the Earl of Arran. He was probably also related to the John of Ashkirk who was killed in 1526. He was recorded being ‘in Ashkirk’ in about 1530 when he assigned half of Lilliesleaf Mill to his brother William and his wife Beatrix. He may be the Walter ‘in Askyrk’ who witnessed documents for the Scotts of Headshaw and for the Scotts and Veitches of Synton in 1531. He was listed in 1532 among the witnesses to a public declaration made in Selkirk by William Scott in Headshaw. He was described as ‘in Askyrk’ when part of an inquest at Jedburgh in 1533 regarding lands at Longnewton. In 1535 he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk for John Veitch of North Synton and another for Walter of Headshaw. He is probably the deceased Walter in Ashkirk whose widow Margaret Falside and son and heir Walter are recorded in Selkirk in 1539 acknowledging receipt of interest from the subtenants in Ashkirk and Falside. Sir Walter ‘Wicked Wat’ (1499/1500–1552) 9th Laird of Buccleuch and Branxholm, son of Sir Walter, whom he succeeded in 1504, with a reinfeldment of his lands in 1516 and a ‘retour’ in 1517. In 1508 he had a charter of Branxholme and Kirkurd. His ‘tutor’ when he was a minor was Walter of Howpasley. In 1512 he was feued the lands of Deloraine, Warleshope and Eldinhope, along with his mother Elizabeth Ker. He was probably made a knight on the eve of Flodden and is said to have been one of the few Scots noblemen to have escaped the battle. Throughout most of his life there was conflict with the Douglases and the Kers of Cessford, as well as many Border raids. In 1515/6 he and his mother Elizabeth had a ‘notorial transumpt of papal indulgences’ seeking a condessor to absolve them from all crimes and sins. In 1519 and again in 1524 (confirmed in 1525) he was appointed Bailie of lands belonging to Melrose Abbey, including Ringwoodfield, but also ‘Melroseland’, Ettrick, Rodono, Eskdalemuir and East Teviotdale; this was said to be for the ‘divers diligent labours and travauls’ that he and his family and friends had done towards the Abbey, and the appointment was hereditary afterwards. In the 1524 charter he was assigned the farms of Northhouse and Thirlestane for his fee. In 1523 he and his wife Elizabeth Carmichael had a regrant of the family charter of the Barony of Eckford. In 1524 he was imprisoned in Edinburgh over a dispute with the Queen-Dowager over lands in Ettrick Forest, but he managed to escape. Later in 1524 he was part of an unsuccessful coup in Edinburgh, along with the Earls of Angus and Lennox and others. In July 1525 there was also remission to a group containing him (and William, Master of Glencairn) for a breach of peace and crime committed in Edinburgh, upon condition that they submit to punishment by the King, and that they help in ‘repressing of murmurs among the people and among strangers’; on the back of this document is an obligation to them for ‘the slauchtir of Duchemen, etc.’ In 1525 he was part of a bond among Border Barons to assist the Earl of Angus in keeping the peace. In 1526 he was pardoned (as leader of a large number of Borderers) for his role in gathering ‘in feir of weir’ in Edinburgh and then attempting to capture the Earl of Arran at Stirling (the events probably taking place a couple of years earlier). Also in 1526 he led a group of Scotts, Elliots and their followers to try to capture the young James V from the control of the Earl of Angus at Skirmish Field, near Melrose. This battle against Angus and his local supporters (the Kers and Homes) led to the loss of many men, and also the death of Ker of Cessford, which fuelled the later feud with the Kers. He was exiled for this act, but had remission along with several other Scotts and Turnbulls in 1527. There was a document of 1526/7 directing Archibald, Earl of Angus and others not to harm him, as well as Walter Scott of Synton, John Cranston of that Ilk and their followers. He was summoned to appear in Selkirk in 1527, according to a royal breve. He was fully pardoned in 1527/8 (probably because the young King had encouraged him in the attack at Skirmish Field) and was made Principal Cupbearer to the King, as well as Warden of the western part of the Middle March. In 1528 he was charged, by the King and his Lords who were at Jedburgh and Melrose, to show his support to the King; he came ‘in ane ledgerin cote and ane blak bonet on his heid’ ready to obey the King’s commands. And in 1529 there was also royal ratification of an Act of Parliament stating that he had come to Melrose specifically at the request of the King and so was innocent of treason. In 1527 he had an agreement with James Murray of Falahill to end the feud between the Scotts and Murrays. In 1528 he was ‘oversman’ to the arbitrators chosen to decide on the succession to the lands of Borthaugh. Also in 1528 he had a discharge from the King for paying the non-entry fees for the Lordship of Bedrule; he also had the right to arrange the marriage of the heir of Bedrule. He infefted his son and heir David in all of his lands in 1528. In 1528/9 he had a ‘discharge’ from Patrick, Earl of Bothwell, for his wardship and related fees and ‘non-entry’ fees associated with several local Scotts. In 1529 he also received Angus’s former Lordship of Jedforest. About the same time he also had remission for ‘breaking ward’ from Blackness Castle. In 1530 he came ‘in the King’s will’ for the murder of John, Lord Flemming, and was fined for not entering 6 men for the same crime. Shortly after the raid on Border thieves, which James V arranged in 1530, he slew the ‘verrie crewal Thief’ Robert Johnstone ‘to gratiffie the King’, but this led to a feud with the Johnstones. In 1530/1 he received the hereditary office of bailie of the monastery of Melrose. In 1531 he was entered in ward in Borthwick Castle (for unspecified crimes), his surety being Sir James Hamilton. In 1532 there was remission for Simon Armstrong and Clement Crozier for the ‘tresonabil taking of Walter Scot of Branxhelm, knycht, in cumpanye with Inglismen, and tresonabil inbringth of thaim within the realme’. In 1532 he was one of the local men appointed by the King to a commission to capture some Croziers, Elliots and Foresters for raiding Teviotdale. Also in 1532 he is probably the Sir Walter who, along with Robert, made a public complaint in Selkirk about John Hepburn ‘pretended rector of Hawyk’ who had claimed teinds from them and then acted to have them excommunicated. In 1532 the Earl of Northumberland burned Bransholme Tower and he made a retaliatory raid into England, laying waste Northumberland as far as the River Beamish, with a force of 3,000 men. In 1533 he complained in Selkirk that a precept from Alexander ‘Carmag’, to remove him from certain lands ‘had na officiar nemmit ... was of na streucht norcht valour’. In 1534 the King discharged him of the bond he had made for the good behaviour of Adam and Gavin Turnbull. His charter for the lands of Westhouses and Easter Mains of Hassendean was revoked by the King in 1535, as well as his charter of the superiority of the lands of Harden. This was for supposedly helping Lord Dacre burn Denholm and Cavers in 1535, for which he was briefly imprisoned; his estates were only restored in 1542/3 (as ratified by Queen Mary in 1545). In 1538 he was accused of ‘intromitting’ over lands in Jedforest that had previously belonged to Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus. In 1539 he issued an instruction that Douglas of Cavers should not deal with certain (unspecified) lands. Also in 1539 he had a bond (along with his son David and Robert of Allanhaugh) with the Depute Sheriff of Selkirk regarding the illegitimacy of Thomas, son of Adam. In the Exchequer Rolls of 1540 there are records of payments made to the ‘King’s shepherds’ in his lands of parts of Ringwoodfield, Broadlee, Philhope, Bellendean, Buccleuch and Eskdalemoor; this was presumably since he had temporarily forfeited these lands to the Crown. In 1540 the was in ward when the King gave him permission to pursue legal actions, particularly against Janet, daughter of Walter of Howpasley. Around 1540 he (along with Robert of Wamphray) was released on condition that he help keep peace on the Border, with 2 of their friends to remain in ward as pledges; he also agreed to take on the rule of Eksdale, Evesdale and Wauchopedale if Lord Maxwell did not take it, and also to assist Lord Bothwell at Hermitage. In 1540/1 several other noblemen served as caution for him when he was prisoner in Edinburgh Castle. Then in 1541 he appeared in Elgin as instructed by the King and was ordered to stay north of the Spey and later to remain within Dumbarton. Also in that year he raised an action against Scott of Allanhaugh (who must have been a close relative) for attacking his wife with a Jedburgh staff. Furthermore he was accused of being responsible for the death of Englishman Jenkin Pott, along with Dand Ker. He could be the Walter who was ‘provost for the time’ in 1541/2 in Selkirk. In 1542 he was also accused of stealing the King’s own sheep from the lands of Melrose Abbey; presumably such activity led to his later nickname ‘Wicked Wat’. Also in 1542 there was a letter summoning him to appear before the King. Another letter of 1542/3 certifies that his livestock and goods, which had been held by the Captain of Crawford are to be returned to him. Also in 1542/3 a letter from Mary, Queen of Scots, entitles him to speak and deal with Englishmen; this is confirmed in 1547, with permission for him to ‘intercommune with the Protector, army, and council of England’. In 1543 he was made hereditary Keeper of Newark Castle (through the patronage of Cardinal Beaton, who was related to his 3rd wife). In 1543 he signed the ‘Secret Bond’ with Cardinal Beaton, resisting English plans for the infant Queen Mary (to marry Prince Edward of England). Also in 1543 he was chosen as Provost of Selkirk. He led large Scots contingents at Ancrum Moor in 1544 and Pinkie in 1547. It is said that it was his suggestion that the Scots fight on foot at Ancrum Moor, this leading the English to imagine they were abandoning the battle and thus to mount a disatrous attack. However, he was also imprisoned twice in Edinburgh for opposing Margaret. In 1544 the Abbot of Newbattle gave 100 merks for 19 years to him and his son William for the ‘grete plesouris and steid done and to be done’ for defending the abbey’s lands and steadings from ‘thieves and broken men’. Also in 1544 he made an agreement with Marion Pringle, widow of Andrew Ker of Primsde over rentals on her lands of Broadmeadows. In 1544 he was granted lands in Ettrick Forest (including ‘Gawlayschellis’, and in 1546/7 was granted the tower at Hassendean (and other lands) by Melrose Abbey. In 1545 a Parliamentary decree put him at the head of 125 of the 500 horsemen who were mustered in Teviotdale. Also in 1545 he was among lairds in Teviotdale who signed a bond to settle feuds. In 1547 he aroused the enmity of the Kers of Cessford, who instigated Lord Grey to lead a raiding party, which burned and pillaged Hawick, Selkirk and his lands in the valleys of the Ale, Yarrow, Ettrick, Teviot, Slitrig and Borthwick, as well as killing his mother in Catslack Tower. In 1547/8 he was involved in a bond of loyalty to the Crown along with the Kers. In 1548/9 he was granted the lands of Easter Craik, which had been forfeited by John Cockburn of Ormiston; this was for service defending the kingdom against the English and ‘for the great losses and burning of his lands’. In 1548 he had a letter from Mary of Guise (the Queen Dowager) supporting him in all endeavours, in return for his ‘band of manrent’. Also in 1548 he received ward of the lands belonging to Turnbull of Minto, until the heir was of lawful age. In 1549 he was made hereditary Keeper of Newark Castle. within Ettrick Forest and in the Borthwick valley. He was made Warden of (half of) the Middle Marches in 1550 (between Minto Craig and Craik Cross) and also Warden and Justiciar of Liddesdale in 1550/1, with permission to hold courts and in pursuing fugitives ‘burn their dwellings, and put their families to fire and sword’. In 1550 John, Archbishop of St. Andrews had a bond of maintenance with him, in response to his bond of manrent. In 1551 there were letters from the Queen, to be proclaimed at market crosses, in support of his work as Warden, and an Act of the Privy Council brought by him for the same purpose, laying down rules that were expected also to be imposed by the English Wardens. Also in 1551 he signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’, his name appearing first. In 1551/2 there is a ‘letter of inhibition’ by him against Walter Ker of Cessford and others to prevent them disposing of property to avoid paying his claimed damages. In the middle of 1552 he had a letter excusing him of attendance at inquests etc., on account of his duties as Warden and is buried at St. Mary’s in Hawick. The gravestone of his natural son, Sir Walter of Goldielands, eulogises thus: ‘the valiant Laird of Bvcklevch yat vas slane crevelie be ye Kerris in Edinburgh vithin ye garter war, When the streets of high Dunedin Saw lances gleam, and falchions redden And heard the slogan’s deadly yell – Then the chief of Branksome fell’ [SWS]. Walter (16th C.) witness to an instrument in Aberdeenshire in 1537, relating to lands in the Lordship of ‘Keig and Monimvsk’. Walter (16th C.) recorded in a transaction in Selkirk in 1541/2 as the ‘well known man Walter Scot provost of Selkirk’. He is probably the same as one of the other local Walters. Walter (16th C.) listed as being ‘in the Hanyng’ in the 1526 pardon that a large number of Borderers had for attacking the Earl of Arran. He is there listed between William and George, tenants of Phaup, who may have been related. He was ‘in Haining’ when he witnessed documents in Selkirk in 1528 and 1529/30. He is also listed as ‘in Haining’ when part of an inquest in Jedburgh in 1533. He was probably the younger son of John of Haining, who died at Flodden, and who acted as ‘tutor’ to his nephew Thomas in the 1530s. In 1531 he was ‘tutor of Haining’ when his cousin John of Myres gave him his lands in Lilliesleaf. This was further confirmed in 1531/2, with Robert Turnbull (also tutor of Howden) as one of the witnesses. In 1531/2 he was part of an inquest to rule on a land arrangement in Selkirk. In 1532 he witnessed a document for Andrew Brydon, probably relating to lands owned by Sir Walter of Braitholme. He was ‘tutor of Haynyng’ in 1534 when his lands were described as lying to the east of Howden. Also in 1534 he promised to bind himself to Thomas Graham and John Brown. In 1535 he witnessed a couple of documents in Selkirk. When Thomas succeeded to the Haining in 1538, he requested payment of a fee as tutor. He witnessed a document in Selkirk in 1539 and was also on the inquest panel for Alexander Lauder succeeding to Todrig. Perhaps the same Walter in Haining occupied the Crown lands of Haining and Hyndhope in 1541. In 1542 he (along with Walter in Headshaw) is mentioned giving advice to Robert regarding leasing part of Hartwoodburn. Walter of Roberton (16th C.) son of John of Roberton, who was mentioned several times in the 1520s. He is recorded in 1535 in a charter executed at Selkirk in which he sold Roberton and Howcleuch to his ‘brother-german’ Stephen ‘in Valls’ (probably ‘Walls’ in Dryfesdale, north of Lockerbie) and Stephen’s son John. Also in 1535 in Selkirk he asked for clemency from Robert Hunter for his part in the killing of his brother John Hunter; the circumstances of this killing are not given. In 1536 he was ‘son and heir of the deceased John Scot of Robertoune’ when he received money from Michael Scott of Aikwood for the lands of ‘Hirdmenstoun’ (presumably Hermiston in Lilliesleaf Parish). He was not able to write and so signed ‘with my own hand at the pen’. He probably had no children of his own. Walter (16th C.) 2nd son of George of Borthaugh, by his 2nd wife, and younger brother of John (who had a different mother). There was a dispute in 1528 over the succession to the estates of Borthaugh, Comminside, Dryden and ‘the Wallis in Drynisdale’ (probably the place now called ‘St. Michael’s Walls’, in Dryfesdale near Lockerbie), because his father swore on his deathbed that he never had dispensation to marry his 1st wife, who was his cousin. The panel ruled in favour of his brother John, but gave him the ‘40s land of the Quhonnis, and 40s land of Woltoun Greyne’, along with a 10-shilling land in ‘sum uthir peciable and proffatable place’. These were probably ‘Whames’ and somewhere around ‘Wiltonburn’ perhaps. Walter (16th C.) son of John, Burgess of Selkirk. In 1532/3 he was given sasine of half of his father’s land, which was one quarter of East Haining, with his mother Margaret Scott to be reserved a redemption. He may be the same Walter who held lands in East Haining in 1543. Walter (16th C.) baker in Edinburgh. In 1541 he was tenant in ‘Kirksteid of Farnynhope’ in the Yarrow valley. This was adjacent to Dryhope. He was probably related to other local Scotts. Walter ‘Wat’ of Synton and Stirches (d.c.1561) eldest son of Robert of Stiches and Synton. His brothers were William and probably David. He was known as ‘Watty Fire-the-Braes’. He is referred to as the 9th Laird of Synton, but there appears to be much confusion with his grandfather, Walter. There is also confusion over precisely who was the first Scott of Harden, but it may have been this Walter (or his father Robert, or brother William). He is probably the Walter Scott of Syntoun ‘Whames’ and somewhere around ‘Wiltonburn’ perhaps. These were probably ‘Walls’ in Dryfesdale, north of Lockerbie and proffatable place’. These were probably the Quhonnis, and 40s land of Woltoun Greyne’, his brother John, but gave him the ‘40s land of Michael’s Walls’, in Dryfesdale near Lockerbie, ‘in Valls’ (probably ‘Walls’ in Drynisdale, north of Lockerbie) and Stephen’s son John. Also in 1535 in Selkirk he asked for clemency from Robert Hunter for his part in the killing of his brother John Hunter; the circumstances of this killing are not given. He is probably the Walter Scott of Syntoun "Whames" and somewhere around "Wiltonburn" perhaps. These were probably "Walls" in Dryfesdale, north of Lockerbie and proffatable place". This was adjacent to Dryhope. He of the lands of Boonraw and Outersiderig, as well as Alemoor. He was mentioned in the indenture of 1529 to attempt to end the feud between the Scotts and the Kerrs, and also mentioned in 1535 in the valuation for lands of the Archbishop of St. Andrews. In 1529/30 he witnessed a pledge relating to crimes against George of Linton by Robert Elliot ‘alias Flaskvold’ and in 1530 witnessed a document for Robert Turnbull of Philiphaugh, in which Philip acted as an official. In 1531 he, along with his brother-in-law Adam and Walter Veitch were involved in a dispute over the succession to Synton with John and William Veitch. In 1531/2 he was part of an inquest to rule on a land arrangement in Selkirk. In 1532 he acted as an arbitrator for Isabel Murray in a dispute with her son Walter in Headshaw. In 1532/3 he was witness to a request for an inquest into succession for the deceased John of Robertson. In 1534 he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk for John Waugh of Heap. He may be the Walter ‘in Sintoun’ who in 1537 was warned to remove himself and his servants from some lands belonging to Andrew Ker of Greenhead; his procurator was Thomas and another Walter was among the witnesses. He also witnessed the installation of Simon Scott as Rector of Rankilburn. He was witness to a charter of 1540 in which Simon Scott of Fenwick resigned lands of Nether Harden to William Scott of Harden. He may be the Walter ‘in Synton’ recorded in 1541 as tenant of half of the lands of Huntlee, as well as Whitehaugh Brae, Langhope and Dodbank (in Ettrick). In 1544 he witnessed a transaction for Sir Walter of Branholme and Marion Pringle. In 1547/8 he was one of the supporters of Sir Walter of Branholme when they had a bond, along with the Kerrs, who had sided with the English at Pinkie and burned Hawick, etc. In 1550 he was one of 10 Scotts who signed a bond with the Queen, to keep good order and deliver up criminals. Also in 1550 he was one of the 2 curators for James Crichton of Cranston Riddell (step-son of Sir Walter of Branholme). In 1551 he was surety for Robert Ormiston of New Hall (later of Old Melrose) and Robert’s nephew James Ormiston of that Ilk. In 1553/4 he was listed (transcribed ‘of Lyntoun’) among Scotts and their supporters who a group of Kerrs promised not to harm. In 1561 he was (along with Thomas of Haining and Nicholas Rutherford of Hundalee) cited by the Privy Council for non-appearance; his son Robert appeared in his place and promised to produce ‘Hob Flescheour’, who was accused of theft in Berwick. He married Marjorie, daughter of William Cockburn of Henderland, and secondly married a Riddell (perhaps Margaret, daughter of James of that Ilk). In some early histories it is claimed that he (or his son perhaps) married a Riddell who was his father’s second wife’s younger sister. It was probably his son John who was entered in ward in Borthwick Castle in 1530/1, along with William, son of Robert in Allanhaugh. His eldest son John (by his first marriage) probably predeceased him. Robert, a son to his 2nd wife, was probably the progenitor of the Scotts of Whitslade and Stirches, while a 3rd son, Thomas, was probably the progenitor of the Whitehaughbrae branch. His son Walter (although this could be an error for his grandson) is recorded in 1561 when he entered Sandy Fletcher for crimes against an Englishman. Scott of Satchells also suggests other sons (William of Huntly and James of Satchells), but these seem unclear. His 8 daughters were said by Scott of Satchells to have married (in order): the Laird of Black Ormiston; Langlands of that Ilk (possibly James if this was the mid-1500s); the Laird of ‘Tofturnbull’ (although it is unclear where this is, perhaps a Turnbull of Tofts); the Laird of ‘Ailmour’ (presumably Alemoor, although it is unclear who this could be); the Laird of Falnash’ (presumably an Elliot); the Laird of ‘Chapel-Middelmiss’ (possibly William Middlemas of Chapel in Lilliesleaf Parish); a daughter who is missed out; and the youngest who firstly married Philip Scott of Kirkhope (brother of Robert of Thirlestane), secondly Walter Scott of Woll (and not William, as stated in one source, although it is still unclear who this was) and thirdly Alexander Chisholme of Parkhill (who did in fact exist in the late 16th century). He may have been referred to as ‘Auld Synton’, and is supposed to have died at the age of 90. It is suggested that he gave up the lands of Synton (although not the designation) to his eldest son John, and then lived himself at Whitslade, which he inherited through his first wife. His 2nd wife died at Whitslade in 1585. Walter (16th C.) recorded being ‘in Assindane’ (i.e. Hassendean) in 1537. This was in a (poorly preserved) document in the Selkirk Protocol Books in which he was a witness for a transaction involving Katherine Scott and her sister Janet. Adam was another witness and may have been related. Perhaps the same Walter was recorded as ‘in Hassindene’ in 1564 when his son James was one of the men tried (along with Elliots of Horsleyhill and others) for the murder of David of Hassendean. Walter (16th C.) Scott

Scott

recorded being ‘in Fausyd’ (i.e. Falside) in 1537, in a document also mentioning Alan Pringle, Margaret Pringle and messenger John Cob. Walter of Stirches (16th C.) recorded as ‘Walter Scot of Styrkschaw’ in 1528/9 when he was a witness to a discharge of Patrick, Earl of Bothwell, related to several local Scotts. Walter of Synton is mentioned there, showing that they were not the same man (which is confusing). Walter (15th/16th C.) successor to Philip of Whitehaugh (and Heap).
He succeeded to Wester Heap in 1532. He married Janet, daughter of Walter Scott of Headshaw. His sons were: William, who died unmarried; and Walter, who sold the estate to his uncle Robert of Headshaw. Walter (d.bef. 1535) owner of 3 husbandlands in Denholm. His widow Janet Scott had sasine of these land in 1535, at that time occupied by William Davidson, Archibald Turnbull and James Hobkirk. The ‘bailies in that part’ were William Cranston and James ‘Spuin’. Walter ‘Wat’ (d.bef. 1550) recorded as being called ‘of teviddaile’ in 1550 when his son took sasine for the lands of Colifort in the Slitrig valley. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts. Walter (16th C.) tenant of Todshawhaugh, recorded in 1549 when tenants and servants of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme complained about their farms being burned by a group of Englishmen and Kers in the previous year. He was probably related to William ‘callit Wille of Todsschawhauch’ who was a resident of Whames at the same time. He was ‘in Todschaw haucht’ when his son Adam witnessed a marriage agreement in Lilliesleaf in 1563. Walter (16th C.) listed among people who were owed money by William Scott, younger of Branxholme, when he died in 1552. He is listed as ‘Waltero Scot in Hawick’. He may be related to some of the near contemporary men who were ‘in Hawick’. Walter (16th C.) Bailie for John Wemyss of that Ilk. He was recorded in a memorandum in Perthshire in 1554. Allan was a witness and possibly related. Walter (16th C.) tenant in ‘Ladinvrguhard’ or ‘Ladynvrquhard’ (i.e. Leden Urquhart) in Perthshire. In 1556 he was surety in a legal document relating to the yearly payment of grain from these lands. Walter (16th C.) became a Burgess of Edinburgh in 1559/60. He was a ‘sclater’ and his ‘Dutie given to Lord Setoun, provost, be right of his oﬃce’. Walter of Dryhope (16th C.) recorded in 1573 when, along with Sir Walter of Birkenside (and Howpasley), they were to enter into ward in Edinburgh a man from Laidhope. Perhaps the same Walter of Dryhope was in 1599 list among other Scotts who Sir Walter of Branxholme declared were ‘his men’ and therefore accepted responsibility for making them answer to justice. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts, but may be the same as a contemporary Walter. Sir Walter ‘Wat’ of Goldielands (1531/2–1596) natural son of ‘Wicked Wat’, to an unknown mother. It is said that his father built the tower at Goldielands for him, but if so this must have been shortly before his murder in 1552.

He led the Scotts during the minority of the heir to Buccleuch (possibly for an extended period, since there was no heir of age for more than 30 of the subsequent years). He must thus have been powerful and important locally, so it is odd that so little is known about him. He is probably the ‘Walter Scot sone naturale of umquhile Walter Scot of Broxholme Knycht’ who is listed among Scotts who appeared before the Privy Council in 1562 to promise to end their feud with the Kers.
He appeared personally as leader of the Scotts when they made a bond to keep the peace with the Kers of Cessford and others in 1564. He and James Gledstains of Cocklaw presented a number of Hawick residents at a court case in 1574, possibly related to a raid. Also in that year he was one of the witnesses to the last testament of Sir Walter of Branxholme (being transcribed as ‘of Gorlandis’ and ‘Gordelandis’). Additionally in 1574 he was one of the noblemen appointed to resolve the dispute between the Johnstones and Maxwells. He was probably the ‘Laird’s Wat’, who was present at the Raid of the Redeswire in 1575. Also in 1575 he had an assurance with Lord Borthwick. In 1577 he was referred to as the eﬀective leader of the Scotts in a letter from Walter Ker of Cessford to the Regent Morton.
In 1576 he was cautioner for several Borderers accused of rieving and in he was a representative of Johnsone of that Ilk in an agreement between the Johnstones and Maxwells. In 1578/9 he was among 22 Border Lairds who did not appear before the Privy Council when summoned (he was surety for several men). He was then found liable for the ﬁnes, which, if he failed to pay, would be taken from his goods or lands. In 1579 he was Bailie Depute of the Regality of Melrose, having been appointed by James Douglas, Earl of Morton (who was tutor to the young Sir Walter of Branxholme and Buccleuch) when he gave possession of the lands of ‘Elestoun’ (or ‘Illistoun’) to Robert of Haining; in 1580 he was in duspute with this same Robert, who claimed that, as Provost of Selkirk, he had appointed


Robert as Depute Provost. In 1579/80 he was a witness in Kirkhouses for a case between Dalgleishes and Scotts. In 1580, the Earl of Morton (Walter of Branxholme’s legal guardian) made a promise on his behalf for the behaviour of ‘Branxholme’s men dwelling in Teviotdale’. In 1580 he was the Bailie of Buccleuch who raised a party to follow those who had raided the Gladstains’ farm at Meikle Whitlaw; he was wounded and captured along with about 40 others, when they were set upon by a large group of Armstrongs and Elliots on their return through Liddlesdale. He had to arrange to pay Lancie Armstrong, Laird of Whithaugh, for their release. But he, James Gladstains of Cocklaw and Robert Elliot of Redheugh complained to the Privy Council, and the attackers were all denounced as rebels. Also in 1580 he is recorded serving as Provost of Selkirk (presumably in place of the young Sir Walter of Buccleuch) when Robert of Haining complained that he had reneged on appointing him as Depute Provost; in 1581 he was recorded as Provost when a man was imprisoned in Selkirk Tolbooth. In 1580/1 he was referred to as ‘baillie, and appointit to answer for the landis and tennentis of the Laird of Bukcleuch’. In 1580/1 he witnessed an agreement to settle a dispute between George of Synton and Walter of Stirches regarding the lands of Synton Mill. In 1581 he witnessed an agreement for a dispute between Adam of Bonnington and Robert of Haining and another agreement between Margaret, widow of William of Burnfoot and her son William. Also in 1581 he was among a list of Border Lairds who denounced their bonds with Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus. In 1581 he promised to the King to answer for the behaviour of the men dwelling on Walter Scott of Buccleuch’s lands and in particular was also directed in 1581 to find caution for Walter of Headshaw and associates, who had failed to appear. However, that same year he was among a large group denounced as rebels for failing to present men to answer their rieving crimes. He was entered into ward in Edinburgh Castle in 1581, with his cautioners being Robert and Mungo, Burgess’s of Edinburgh, along with James Gladstains of Cocklaw, the amount being £2000. Later Paul Doig of Coldoch was his cautioner in case he should ‘brek the assurance’ for crimes committed by the Scotts on Dand Elliot of Braidlie by Robert of Headshaw and others. Additionally in 1581 he was allied with James Gladstains of Cocklaw and Robert Elliot of Redheugh when they had a set of complaints made against them to the Privy Council by Martin of Braidlie, Simon Armstrong of Mangerton and Lance Armstrong of Whithaugh; he was clearly acting as chief of the Scotts at that time. He was denounced as a rebel in 1583 for non-appearance, when he was recorded as ‘chamberlain of Atrik Forrest’. He was ‘Wat Scot of Goldelandis’ among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. About the same time he led the signatories on a bond of support for the Warden of the Middle Marches, Sir Thomas Ferniehirst. He witnessed the 1586 marriage contract between Margaret Ker and Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. Also in 1586 he was listed among leaders in upper Teviotdale. He was appointed as a Parliamentary Commissioner for Roxburghshire in about 1588. He had a ‘Band of Association’ in 1589 with about 50 men of his clan; this proscribed any Scotts from taking land from each other, transgressions going before a panel of 5 of their number, a similar rule even applying of he himself encroached upon any of his kinsmen’s possessions. In 1589 he was on a list of Border Lairds who failed to appear before the Privy Council to give ‘thair gude advise anent the gude reule and quietnes of the Bordouris’ and were denounced as rebels. In about 1590 he was listed among a large number of landed men in the Borders and in 1590 he was among Border landlards and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. In 1590 his cautioner was Sir John Edmonson of that Ilk and he himself acted as cautioner for Robert of Burnfoot, Walter of Howpasley and James Gladstains of that Ilk. In 1591/2 his sons Walter, David and William were listed among 200 Scotts and others accused of stealing 4000 sheep, 200 cows and 40 horses from the Tweedy’s lands of Drumelzier and Dreva; it was later declared that the men were not tenants of Walter of Buccleuch, but chiefly dependent on him, in the absence of the Laird of Buccleuch, and since he had already appeared before the Privy Council, the men were ordered to pay the Tweedy’s for what had been taken. Also in 1591/2 he acted as surety for William Elliot of Hartsgarth. In 1592 he was instructed (along with Gideon Murray) to demolish Harden and Dryhope, because of Walter of Harden’s involvement in the Falkland Raid. In 1594 he is described as ‘cosin and deputie’ to Sir Walter of Branxholme in an indenture that he had with his English counterpart, servant of Lord Scrope. His son was also Walter and was probably present at the rescue of Kinmont Willie; however, some have suggested that this was him, but being about the age of 64 at the time it seems improbable. He died later in the same year that the rescue of Kinmont Willie took place. He was buried in the vaults at St. Mary’s, and his tombstone was removed in 1863 for preservation in the Museum; his tombstone is headed ‘Valter Scot his Genealogie’ and he is recorded as ‘Valter Scot of Govdillandis’, son of ‘Sir Valter Scot the valiant Laird of Byckllevich yat vas slane crevelie be ye Kerris in Edinburgh’. A second stone, cut in high relief records ‘HIS QVALITIES’, namely ‘Heir lyis bvreit visdome & virthines Heir lyis bvreit trevth & honestie Heir lyis bvreit fridome & gentres Heir lyis bvreit manheid & cheritie Heir lyis bvreit lairgenes & larttie Heir lyis bvreit hap & experience Heir lyis bvreit pietie & diligence Glorie be to God for althings’. Both stones were stencilled after discovery by Sir James Murray. Another stone bears his arms, with the Buccleuch arms crossed by the bar of illegitimacy. The name of his wife is not known. He was succeeded by his son Walter and had other sons including David and William. He may also have had an illegitimate son, Charles of Crumhaugh, as well as a daughter who married Robert of Glack (but this may have been a later generation). A record of 1620 mentions Robert, ‘brother natural’ to Sir Walter of Goldielands (his son), showing that he had another son, Robert – ‘The laird Watt did weil indeed, His friends stude stoutly by himself ...’ [CPM]. Walter (d.1553) son of David and nephew of Sir Walter of Buccleuch, to whom he was heir (although this seems confusing). His uncle was appointed as his tutor in 1551, but died the following year. Assuming there isn’t simply an error, he must have died about the same time, since his cousin, also Walter, son of Sir William of Kirkurd, succeeded to the Buccleuch titles. Walter (d.bef. 1555) son of Michael of Aikwood. It is claimed in one genealogy that he was the eldest son, but his brother William was recorded as their father’s heir in 1541. In 1543 he was infefted by his father in his half of Kershope (on Ettrick). He was recorded in 1555 when his brother Robert of Bowhill was served heir to his half steading called ‘Westsyd de Kershop’ in Ettrick. Walter (16th C.) son and heir of Robert in Howford. In 1539 there is a marriage contract between him and Elizabeth, daughter of Marion Dalgleish (who was niece of Adam Dalgleish of Deuchar). His own ‘gudscher’ (either grandfather or perhaps uncle) was recorded being George in Blindhaugh. It appears that Marion Dalgleish was his step-mother and hence the marriage contract was with his step-sister. In 1539 he was still not old enough to marry, and it is unclear if the marriage took place. Walter of Harden (d.c.1563) possibly son of William ‘Bolt-foot’, 1st Laird of Harden. However, it is unclear if there really is an extra Walter between ‘Bolt-foot’ and ‘Auld Wat o Harden’. If he existed, he only lived for a couple of years beyond his father. Satchells suggests that he married a Riddell, daughter of his step-mother. His sons were Walter, ‘Auld Wat o Harden’ and William ‘in the Mott’. Sir Walter (1548/9–74) 10th Laird of Buccleuch, succeeded his grandfather in 1553/4, his father Sir William of Kirkurd (‘Whitecloak’) having died first. His ‘retour’ of 1553/4 as heir to his deceased grandfather Sir Walter, mentions an impediment to his inheritance on account of the enmity of the Sheriffs of Roxburghshire and Peeblesshire towards his kinsmen and friends. In 1554/5 it is recorded in a sasine that his tutor was Robert Scott of Allanhaugh. He is stated in one charter as achieving his majority in 1561. He signed a bond with the Kerrs in 1564/5, attempting to end the family feud (it contains the names of many of his supporters and retainers of the time, including Sir Walter of Goldielands, who appeared personally); it is promised the Scotts and Kerrs will ‘leif in perfite amit´ e, lufe, and Cristine nychtburheid’, and marriages are arranged between his sister Janet and Thomas, son of Sir Walter Ker of Cessford, as well as his father’s sister Janet with George, son of Andrew Kerr of Faldonside. However, another feud erupted with the Elliots in 1564, perhaps sparked by the murder of David of Hassindean. This led to raids into Elliot lands in Liddesdale and counter-raids on his lands in Teviotdale, including the burning of Hawick in 1565. In one such raid he and his men slew 7 Elliots and Croziers, while some of those from Liddesdale raided the Hawick area, killing one man and stealing cattle. In 1565/6 he was made Captain of Newark Castle. He was a devoted supporter of Mary Queen of Scots, raiding England with Kerr of Ferniehirst, expecting the Regent Moray to have been assassinated. In retaliation the Earl of Sussex and Lord Scrope blew up Branhomle and laid waste the lands around Hawick. In 1568/9 he signed another contract with the Kerrs relating to the murder of his grandfather; this time Sir Andrew Ker of Hirsel, James Kerr of Corbet, Walter Hogg and their kin agreed to come to the church of Melrose to apologise, and the grandson of Sir Andrew was to marry Elizabeth Murray, his sister. His armorial seal of 1568 is the first to show supporters, in this case 2 bucks. In 1569 he signed the bond for suppressing thieves on the Border and in that same year was served heir to his uncle David in Roxburghshire Sheriff Court. In early 1569 he apparently (according at a case before the Lords of Council 4 years later) despoiled some of what was left of Melrose Abbey, carrying away a great deal of the ‘stanis tymmer leid irne and glas of the said kirk’; he sold it to some burgesses of Selkirk, Dame Isobel Ker of Cessford and others, but claimed he was preserving the Abbey from the English army and promised to spend the same money to repair it. Also in 1569 he was obliged to enter someone in court in Dumfries. Additionally in 1569 he was found liable for the sureties for the Elliots of Falnash, Gorrenberry and Dodburn, who had not appeared, with his lands and goods to be held if he did not pay. He brought a ‘letter of inhibition’ against the teinds of the Kirks of Cavers and Hassendean in 1570, suggesting some local dispute. Also in 1570 he signed a bond on behalf of his kin, friends, etc., for keeping the peace on the Border. He had Branxholme Castle rebuilt in 1571. He was a principal leader in the 1571 raid on Stirling to seize the Regent Lennox, where he was captured and was for a while imprisoned in Castle Doune. In 1573 he was re-appointed as Captain, Constable and Keeper of Newark Castle and as Bailie and Chamberlain of the Lordship of Ettrick Forest. Also in 1573 he served as surety for some Borderers and signed the ‘Band of Roxburgh’. He was responsible for paying an English ‘bill’ of £3600 Scots after Ralph Ker broke ward in England. In 1574 he was witness to a discharge between Cranston of that Ilk and Douglas of Cavers relating to the lands of Denholm. At a very young age (in 1567/8) he was contracted to marry Margaret, daughter of David Douglas, 7th Earl of Angus. She continued the rebuilding of Melrose Abbey, carrying away a great deal of the abbey’s sine in 1569 for the lands of Crook; he is ‘Walter Scott there’, meaning he resided near Crook. It is possible he is connected with the nearly contemporary Scotts in Orchard. Walter of Headshaw (d.bef. 1593) son of Philip. He is probably the Walter, son of Philip of Headshaw who is listed on the 1526 remission for Borders men for supporting the Homes in an attack on the Earl of Arran; he must have been quite young at the time. He is listed as being ‘in Edschawe’ in the Selkirk Protocol Books in 1532 when he declared that John Riddell of that Ilk and William Scott of Harden were his arbitrators in his dispute with Elizabeth (probably an error for Isabel) Murray. He is also described as ‘in Eteschaw’ in 1533 when he was part of a panel at a Jedburgh inquest for a dispute over the lands of Longmowton. In 1535 he complained that his dispute with his stepmother Isabel Murray had not been resolved 3 years earlier; this makes it clear that he was son of Philip of Headshaw (and Philip’s first wife). In 1539 he was on the inquest panel for Alexander Lauder succeeding to Todrig. He is listed among the friends who would vouch for Alan Mithaq in 1539/40. In 1541 he is recorded being ‘in Edschaw’ and occupying the lands of Hartwoodburn. He also in 1541 assigned his brother Robert one quarter of Hartwoodburn. His ‘brother german’ Robert is recorded in a Selkirk document in 1541/2. In 1542 he is mentioned giving advice to Robert (probably his brother) regarding leasing part of Hartwoodburn. In 1542/3 his ‘sergeant’ William Donaldson had 2 of his horses appraised in Selkirk. He witnessed a transactions for Thomas in Haining in 1543/4. He is ‘of Edschaw’ among a group of Scotts who signed a bond with the Queen in 1550 to keep order and hand over criminals. In 1553/4 he is listed among Scotts and their supporters who a group of Kers promised not to harm. He witnessed a transaction in Selkirk in 1561. He was listed among the men who appeared before the Privy Council in a promise to end the feud between the Kers and the Scotts in 1562. He is recorded as of ‘Edschaw’ in a panel of 1564 to hear the case involving Scotts and Elliots accused of killing David Scott of Hassendean. Also in 1564 he is probably the ‘Guidman of Eidschaw’ who was listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. In 1569 Robert of Thirlestane was caution for him. Also in 1569 he was on the panel of inquest for Grizel Borthwick inheriting the superiority of her father’s lands in Wilton. His son William was warded in 1571 and was also recorded swearing allegiance to the Crown and Regent in 1572/3, with James Langlands of that Ilk as surety. In 1573 he served as surety for several Borderers. In 1579 he witnessed a transaction involving Walter of Goldielands and Robert of Haining. Also in 1579 he was named as an executor for the children of the deceased Robert of Palace. In 1580 he signed a bond with William of Whitehaugh, assigning to him the east half of the lands of Whitehaugh, called ‘the Pleucht Tylth’, along with the lands of Deanheads, in the Barony of Wilton. Also in 1580 he witnessed an arrangement for certain payments to be made to the children of the deceased John of Blindhaugh. Additionally in 1580 his cautioners John Thomson and Richard Brown (both in Headshaw) made payment for him of £30 to Thomas Ker of Kippielaw for 10 bolls of oats. In 1580/1 he was a judge appointed on behalf of George of Synton in a dispute over ownership of Synton Mill with Walter of Stiches. Also in 1580/1 he sold a horse to Walter in Ashkirk, but the other Walter was unable to pay and so offered to enter him into a husbandland in Ashkirk. In 1581 he was accused of leading a group who attacked 2 sons of Martin Elliot of Braidlie as they rode past Headshaw, cutting off the hand of one, and seriously injuring the other. In 1581 he was named as an executor for the children of the deceased Robert of Palace. He could be the Walter recorded as ‘sone to Wat’ of Hassendean (16th C.) listed in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. He probably served as factor or similar, along with several other men whose fees were exactly the same. He may be the same as the tenant in Hassendean recorded in 1564. He is listed as ‘alias Wattie of Hassindane’ in 1580 when he witnessed an agreement involving George, son to Walter Chisholme of that Ilk. Walter (16th C.) became a merchant Burgess of Edinburgh in 1575 and a Guild Brother in 1577. Walter of Synton (d.bef. 1589) son of John, he succeeded his grandfather Walter as Laird of Synton. He was recorded (along with his brothers Robert, William and James) as the ‘young Laird of Syntoune’ in 1557 when he was involved in an attack by the Scotts on the church of St. Mary of the Lowes. He could be the Walter, recorded as ‘sone to Wat Scot of Syntoum’ (even although he was grandson) in 1561. Either he or his grandfather was the Walter listed among the men who appeared before the Privy Council in a promise to end the feud between the Kers and the Scotts in 1562. In 1564 he was listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. There is some uncertainty in these generations. He married Christian Riddell of that Ilk, and died without an heir. However, it appears he was succeeded by his brother George (although Scott of Satchells suggests that George was his son, which seems unlikely). His heir George is recorded as ‘in Syntoum’ in 1570. Walter, son of Walter of ’Syntoun’ was witness to a sasine in Melrose in 1574. He may be the Walter, brother of George of Synton who in 1580 had a lease of the lands of Wollaugh from Isabella Turnbull widow of John of Blindhaugh. His grandson Walter was served heir to his lands of Whitslade in 1605. Sir Walter of Birkenside and Howpasley (d.c.1580) eldest son of Robert of Howpasley. He witnessed a charter in 1549 in which his father granted his lands of Appletreehall to the Turnbulls, also witnessed by his brother Robert. He is recorded as younger of Howpasley in 1562/3. In 1569 he was on the panel of inquest for Grizel Borthwick inheriting superiority of her father’s lands in Wilton. Also in 1569 he appeared in Hawick before the Warden and Sir Walter of Branxholme, serving as surety for 23 tenants in Outersiderig, that they would answer to the laws of the Lord Regent. In 1571/2 he signed the bond to act against Borders thieves. According to the register of the Privy Council he served as surety in 1571, 1573 and 1576 and was warded in 1571. In 1574 he was on the retours for Walter Scott of Branxholme as heir to his great-uncle David Scott and his great-grandfather Sir Walter Scott. Also in 1574 there was a ‘reversion’ with him for the mill of Easter Burufoot, with William of Harden and James of Whitslade. His father appears to have died before 1567, but he did not succeeded to Howpasley until 1578/9 and also held the lands of Birksend in Berwickshire. In 1580 he and William of Tushielaw appointed 2 other Scotts to decide on George of Synton’s claim on lands in ‘Ilistoun’. His will is recorded in the Commissariot of Edinburgh in 1580/1; he is there described as ‘of Birkinsyd’. He was succeeded by his son Walter in 1580, although he did not become infeft in his lands until 1588. Another son may have been on the raid to rescue Kinmont Willie in 1596. Sir Walter ‘Watt’ of Tushielaw (d.c.1618) eldest son of William of Tushielaw. In 1563/4 he and his father were ordered to replace the sheep that they had stolen from the lands of Bailielee, belonging to Dand Elliot. He signed the bond for suppressing the Border thieves in 1569 and was witness to the last testament of Sir Walter of Branxholme in 1574. In 1573 he is referred to as being ‘in Hartwoodmyris’ (and son of William of Tushielaw) when he was to present William Porteous ‘in Borthuikbra’ for trial in Edinburgh, as well as Littles from Midgehope; it is unclear if he was related to the later Scotts of Hartwoodmyres. In 1574 he was one of the noblemen appointed to resolve the dispute between the Johnstones and Maxwells. In 1578 he was ‘younger of Tushielaw’ when was pledge for ‘Archie Kene’ Elliot. In 1578/9 he was among 22 Border Lairds who did not appear before the Privy Council when summoned. However, he later swore to the Council that he had entered into ward ‘Archie Kene’ Elliot. Also in 1578/9 there was a complaint by Patrick Murray of Falahill, that he and his accomplices had illegally taken over the lands of ‘Skaddoneis’ (perhaps ‘Scaddow Rig’). Additionally, tenants in Gattonside complained that he and his supporters (including his brother James and his son Walter, as well as James, William and Dand in Selkirk) attacked the farm at Gattonside, breaking barns and stealing corn; failing to appear before the Privy Council, he was denounced as a rebel. He was still recorded as being ‘in Hartwoodmyries’ at that time. In 1579/80 he was accused of being involved in an ‘intrigue’ with Grizel Scott, wife of William, Lord Borthwick (and daughter of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme); this was also claimed to be ‘incest’, suggesting that he had married another daughter of Sir Walter. In 1581 he was still ‘younger, of Tuschelaw’ among a large group denounced as rebels for failing to present men to answer their rieving crimes. Also in 1581 he witnessed a ‘letter of slains’ in Hawick whereby Robert and James Scott forgave the Scotts of Allanbaugh and Over Southfield for the murder of their brother George. Additionally in 1581 he was ‘in Hartwoodmyris’ when along with several other Scotts (from Gamescleuch, Gilmanscleuch, Chamberlain Newton, Edinburgh, North Bowhill, Dryhope, Catslack and Howpasley) he supported William of Tushielaw (his father) and Robert of Aikwood in representing Adam in Bonnington in a dispute with Robert of Haining; William in Hartwoodmyres is also listed. He was among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. In 1584 he was a cautioner for a number of men (from around Heriot). He is listed in 1586 among leaders in upper Teviotdale in a document by King James VI instructing his Lieutenant on the Border. He resigned his lands to Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1588 (presumably to grant a new charter). He is mentioned in 1589 when his servant Robert Elliot ‘in Borthuikbra’ refused to restore 2 mares and a horse that had been stolen. Also in 1589 he and his brother James signed a bond with other Scotts to settle differences amongst themselves. He is listed on the ‘Roll of the Clans’ in about 1590 and also in 1590 he was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. In 1591 William Stewart of Traquair acted as surety for him and he himself was surety for Philip of Dryhope. He gained Gamescleuch in 1591. In 1592 he had a charter, ratified by Parliament, for the lands of Tushielaw, including Coom Law and Gamilsheugh, making it clear that other claims on the lands were to be disallowed. He is listed in 1594 among those implicated in the slaughter of Lord Maxwell and his men at Dryfe Sands; his sons Robert, James and John are also listed. In 1599 he was surety for himself and his sons Robert, James and John to ‘observe the King’s peace’. He is probably the Scott of Tushielaw listed among leaders ordered in 1600 to appear before the Privy Council to give advice about peace on the Border. In 1601 he is ‘the Goodman of Tushelaw’ listed among men of an assize to decide cases brought by the March Wardens. He and his son Robert signed a bond among Border Lairds in 1602. In 1603 he witnessed a ‘bond of manrent’ between Francis Armstrong of Kinmont and Sir James Johnstone of that Ilk. In 1603 he complained about a gang of Armstronds raided his farms of ‘Dudhop’, ‘Medop’ (probably Midgehope), ‘Woulshop’, Tushielaw and Kirkbank on several occasions in 1586, stealing cattle, sheep, horses and goods. In 1607 he was ‘gudman of Tuschelew’ when he was witness for a report of the bailie court of the Regality of Melrose; his son John was also witness. In 1607 he was also paid bolls of malt by the tenants of Lessuden. Additionally in 1607 he was the first named in a long list of men charged with trying to stop James Maxwell and Robert Douglas taking possession of the Debatable Lands. In 1609 there is a court case involving him and his eldest son Robert with Alexander, Earl of Home over an agreement involving the lands of Cacrabank in 1597; there it is clearly stated that his wife was Elizabeth Gledstains and also that neither father nor son could write. Also in 1609 he brought an action against Sir Robert of Thirlestane and his tenants for resetting Walter of Headshaw and others; this was related to the feud with the Scotts of Thirlestane, which had resulted in the death of Walter of Gamescleuch (brother of Sir Robert of Thirlestane) at the sword of his son John. In 1610 Robert of Headshaw, and Walter, fiar of Whitlade (for Sir Robert of Thirlestane) had a bond for not harming him or his sons Robert and James. Additionally Andrew Riddell of that Ilk and his son John had a similar bond. Also in 1610 there was a complaint against his servant Martin Johnstone, claiming that he and another man raided the farm of Nether ‘Liverhay’. In 1611 he complained that Francis Armstrong of Kinmont was occupying his lands of Mumbiehirst. In 1612 the Privy Council also asked him and Sir Robert of Thirlestane appear to resolve the contradictory claims of each family. He was one of the signers of the bond of 1612 to keep peace in the Borders, which his son Robert also signed. In 1614 his son John had remission from the King for the death of Walter of Gamescleuch, and had his excommunication lifted in 1615. However, in 1616 he ran off with Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane’s daughter, Grizel, marrying her at Bellingham. The Presbytery records show that the couple were to appear to confess their sin, with the Laird of Thirlestane to be absent that day. It has been suggested that he was killed a few months later by a group of Scotts (including Simon of Bonnington), but this appears to be confusion with the murder of Walter, tenant in Essenside (a younger son of ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden). He is recorded as still alive in 1617 and is also mentioned in a charter of 1618 when his lawful son Robert received lands at ‘Wairdlawrig’ in Selkirkshire from John Lord Hay of Yester. He married Elizabeth, daughter of a Gledstains of Cocklaw. His son Robert was ‘of Tuschelew’ in 1619, suggesting he was deceased by then. His son and heir William is recorded in a ‘letter of inhibition’ with Walter, Earl of Buccleuch in 1619 (but this may be an error). He is probably the Walter of Tushielaw to whom the reversion of half of Glenkerry and Midgehope were rezigned by Gilbert Eliott of Stobs in 1620 (although he may have been deceased by then). It is suggested in some accounts that he was succeeded by another Walter, however he was most likely succeeded by his eldest son Robert (unless 2 generations of Walters are compounded). His other sons were: James of Boyken and Glenrath; and John of Mackersway, who killed Walter of Gamesleuch. Both James and John took part in the rescue of Kinmont Willie. Walter (16th C.) recorded as ‘in Todrig’ when he witnessed a charter for lands in Rulewater in 1568. It is unclear how he might have been related to other local Scotts, unless he was Walter, son and heir of the Laird at that time, George of Todrig. Walter ‘Wat’ of Eldinhope (16th C.) recorded in the register of the Privy Council in 1576 when he relieved a surety. He appears as ‘Watt Scott of Eldinhope’. It seems likely that he is the same as one of the other contemporary Walters, probably related to the Scotts of Buccleuch (who held these lands). Walter of Ashkirk (16th C.) listed in 1579 among people who owed money to Isabel Donald, widow of Robert of Palace. He may be the son of Walter in Ashkirk and Margaret Falside recorded in 1539 when he and his mother are recorded acknowledging receipt of interest on his deceased father’s lands in Ashkirk and Falside from their subtenants. In 1580 he paid John in Kirkhouses redemption money for the lands of ‘Ediehauch’, ‘Ediebray’, 2 husbandlands and a croft, plus the lands of Salenside. He is probably the Walter in Ashkirk who in 1580/1 declared that he was unable to pay the £20 Scots for a horse from Walter of Headshaw and is he could not pay him soon, would enter him in a husbandland in Ashkirk, at that time occupied by Richard Brown. In 1580/1 he set to John in Aikwood the ‘knaufishchip and bannock’ of Ashkirk Mill for 5 years; one of the witnesses was Walter Shortreed, recorded as his brother (perhaps his brother-in-law). In 1581 the husbandland he had wadset to John in Kirkhouses was resigned, and he instead assigned to John 2 pieces of land called Salenside Croft and ‘Skakriggis’. Also in 1581 he witnessed an agreement involving the liferent of Blindhaugh and Castle-side with the Scotts in Blindhaugh. In 1581/2 he acknowledged that he had received payment from James, son of John in Kirkhouses, giving him tack of half a husbandland (previously occupied by Adam Hislop) in Ashkirk. In 1593/4 he and Alexander of Clerkland were cautioners for John Veitch, heir apparent of Dawyck, not to harm the Tweedies. It is unclear how he is related to other Scotts of Ashkirk. Walter (16th C.) recorded in Palace in 1580 when he witnessed an agreement regarding payments to the children of John of Blindhaugh. In 1581 his wife Margaret Scott, widow of William of Burnfoot, resigned her liferent of Shielwood and half of Burnfoot Mill to her son William. It is unclear whether he was related to the earlier Scotts of Palace. Walter ‘Wat’ (16th C.) recorded as resident of Over Southfield in 1581, along with ‘Syme Scot in Oversouthfield’, ‘Syme Scot thair’ and ‘Jok Scot, dueland in Hawik, callit Wattis Jok’. He was presumably related to the other men listed, all of whom were probably related to the Scotts of Allanhaugh, who were also named in the ‘letter of slains’ for the murder of George Scott in 1578. Walter (16th C.) Burgess of Hawick, recorded as ‘some to wmquhell Thomas Scot in Hawick, younger’ in 1585 when he was one of the witnesses to the bond in which Sir Walter of Branxholme and Robert of Allanhaugh resolved a family feud. It seems that his father was Thomas, and probably also his grandfather. Walter (16th C.) son of Adam of Bonnington. In 1580 he witnessed a transaction between Walter of Ashkirk and John in Kirkhouses. Walter of Howpasley (16th C.) probably son of Sir Walter of Birken-side and grandson of Robert of Howpasley. He succeeded his father in 1580, but was probably then a minor, since he did not become ‘infeft’ until 1588, when he also succeeded to the lands of Midshiels and Appletreehall (which had been ‘in the King’s hands’ for more than 7 years). He was probably the Laird of ‘Howpaslott’ listed among the Borderers summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. In instructions from the King to Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus (Lieutenant on the Border) in 1586, he is probably the Laird listed along with the Lairds of Buccleuch, Gledstains, Redheugh, Briardle, Whithaugh and others as chiefs in upper Teviotdale; however, he may have still been a minor at that time. In 1590 his cautioner was Walter of Goldielands. He was probably Laird of ‘Howpaslott’ when the ‘Roll of the Clans’ was drawn up around 1590 and the ‘Goodman of Howpaslott’ listed among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. He may have had a brother who was at the raid to rescue Kinmont Willie in 1596. He may have been father of William and/or the husband of ‘Lady Howpasley’ who was involved in the slaughter of sheep in 1616. He is recorded in 1591 as the possessor of the lands of ‘Gallowlaw’ in the Barony of Hassendean, charged by the Baron, James Cunningham, to produce charters for these lands. He was probably succeeded by William, who may have been the last of the direct line of Scotts of Howpasley. Walter (16th C.) son of Michael of Vogrie. In 1581 he had a marriage contract with Marion, daughter of William Pringle in ‘Cartho’. He was to receive certain lands in Stow from Thomas Pringle in Stow (grandfather of his wife-to-be). John in Kirkhouses was a witness, and possibly related. Walter of Stirches (16th C.) listed among landed men of the Borders in about 1590. Walter of Chamberlain Newton, Walter of Harden and the Laird of Synton are all listed separately, showing that he was distinct from all of them; however, it is unclear what his relationship was with other nearly contemporary Lairds. He is probably also the Walter of Starkshaws who along with William of Hartwoodmyres was under caution in 1592, with Gideon Murray as surety. It is possible he was Walter, younger of Synton (son of George). He may also be the Walter ‘of Styrk Chawis’ whose brother probably Robert witnessed the installation of the new Parson and Vicar of Ashkirk in 1579/80. In 1580 he witnessed an agreement between William Scott of Whitehaugh and Walter Scott of Headshaw. He may be the Walter ‘in Styrkschawis’ who in 1580 received redemption money from his ‘gude brother’ David Fairlie for a tenement in Selkirk. In 1580/1 he had a dispute with George of Synton over the lands of Synton Mill; the agreement to appoint arbitrators was made at Groundistone, with his chosen judges being William of Whitehaugh and Walter of Todrig. In 1581 he witnessed a marriage contract between William in Burnfoot and Janet, daughter of William in Huntly, and also a separate arrangement between the pair. Also in 1581 he witnessed an agreement involving the livery of Blindhaugh and Castleside with the Scots in Blindhaugh. In 1599 he was among a list of Scots and others charged to find caution to ‘observe the King’s peace’. He is probably the Walter of Todshawhaugh and Ormiston. His son George was served heir to his lands of Outersiderig and Boonraw in 1610. He married Isobel, daughter of Douglas of Whittinghame (probably William, 3rd of Whittinghame, or perhaps Sir Archibald his son). Their children were: George, who succeeded; Anne, said to have married Capt. Gledstains of Whitlea (possibly John); Capt. Archibald, who probably died unmarried; Elspeth; and Christian. His daughters are mentioned in his last testament. It may have been his widow who was summoned by the Presbytery in 1615 ‘for abusing the minister, Mr. Alex. Hog, publicly, by words and countenance, on Sabbath, betwixt the serious, in the audience of the congregation’. She was probably also the ‘gudewife of Sintoun’ who received communion at both Hassendean and Lilliesleaf Kirks in 1615, rather than her own church at Ashkirk, resulting in rebuke for both ministers.

It is unclear what the nature of this dispute was, but presumably a doctrinal difference with her minister (Alexander Hogg). Walter (16th/17th C.) son of William of Bowden, who rented Northhouse. He is recorded in 1582 as witness to a transaction involving the Scots of Allanhaugh, taking place at Branxholme; other witnesses include William, son of George in Northhouse and John Gledstains of Whitlaw (possibly John); Capt. Archibald, son of William in Huntly, and also a separate arrangement between the pair. Also in 1581 he was among a list of Scots and others charged to find caution to ‘observe the King’s peace’. He is probably the Walter of Todshawhaugh and Ormiston. His son George was served heir to his lands of Outersiderig and Boonraw in 1610. He married Isobel, daughter of Douglas of Whittinghame (probably William, 3rd of Whittinghame, or perhaps Sir Archibald his son). Their children were: George, who succeeded; Anne, said to have married Capt. Gledstains of Whitlea (possibly John); Capt. Archibald, who probably died unmarried; Elspeth; and Christian. His daughters are mentioned in his last testament. It may have been his widow who was summoned by the Presbytery in 1615 ‘for abusing the minister, Mr. Alex. Hog, publicly, by words and countenance, on Sabbath, betwixt the serious, in the audience of the congregation’. She was probably also the ‘gudewife of Sintoun’ who received communion at both Hassendean and Lilliesleaf Kirks in 1615, rather than her own church at Ashkirk, resulting in rebuke for both ministers. It is unclear what the nature of this dispute was, but presumably a doctrinal difference with her minister (Alexander Hogg). Walter (16th/17th C.) son of William of Bowden, who rented Northhouse. He is recorded in 1582 as witness to a transaction involving the Scots of Allanhaugh, taking place at Branxholme; other witnesses include William, son of George in Northhouse and John Gledstains of Winningtonhall. He may be the same as one of the other Walters. Walter (d.c.1584) described as ‘in Fairmynhirst, within the Stow’ when his will was registered in Edinburgh in 1584. Walter (d.c.1593) Burgess of Dysart. His will was recorded in the Commissariat of Edinburgh in 1594. He was brother of John, who was also a Burgess there, and had wills recorded in Edinburgh in 1594 and 1605. Walter (d.c.1594) mason and Burgess of Dysart, whose will was recorded in Edinburgh in 1594. He was distinct from his contemporary in Dysart, whose will was registered in the previous year. Walter of Deephope (16th/17th C.). Said to have been on the raid to rescue Kinmont Willie in 1596. It is unclear how he was related to other Scots. Walter of Blindhaugh (16th C.) signatory of the Scott clan bond of 1589. He was probably related to the neighbouring Scots, e.g. the Woll branch, who owned the lands of Blindhaugh later. He is probably the 2nd son of George of Blindhaugh and Margaret Turnbull who in 1544 was designated as the successor to his father’s lands of Broadlee, a part of Blindhaugh. Walter (16th/17th C.) served heir in 1598 to the lands of ‘Montquhanny’ in Fife, belonging to his sisters Margaret and Elizabeth. Walter (d.bef. 1612) tenant in Stonedge. In 1612 his nephew William complained to the Privy Council about Andrew Newton in Jedburgh not paying him. Walter ‘Watt’ of Gamescleuch (d.1609) 2nd son of Sir Robert of Thirlestane. He may have been the brother of Robert of Thirlestane recorded in 1581 when he was witness to a saisin for the lands of Thirlestane and Hopehouse, involving the Cranstons of that Ilk. He was probably also the brother of Robert of Thirlestane included in a list of those involved in the 1593 slaughter of Lord Maxwell and his men at Drye Sands. He was probably present at the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. In 1599 he was probably the Walter, brother of Robert of Thirlestane listed among Scots who Sir Walter of Branxholme declared were ‘his men’ and therefore accepted responsibility for making them answer to justice. In 1602 he was among the group of Scots who attacked Adam Veitch’s lands at ‘Fechane’. He is probably the Walter of Thirlestane who in 1603 was among Scots and others, subordinates of Sir Walter of Buccleuch, who ‘had been put to the horn’ for not paying feu mails for their lands to the Queen’s Chamberlain, with Robert of Haining not entering them in court. He may be the Walter ‘of Thirlestane’ who was in the gang of Scots that forcibly released 2 of their kin from imprisonment by the Bailies of Selkirk in 1608. Also in 1608 he was among the relatives and friends of Sir Robert of Thirlestane who were bound not to harm Archibald ‘of Dephoip’. He was slain by John, son of Walter Scott of Tushielaw, an incident that may have been the inspiration for the ‘Dowie Dens of Yarrow’. They had a duel on a field to the west of Yarrow Kirk, known as ‘Deuchar-swyre’. It is said that he went there as a mediator in the arranged combat between his nephew Robert, and John, son of Walter of Tushielaw. There followed much legal process before the local Presbytery and the Privy Council. John Scott’s pardon by James VI is recorded in 1614. He married Marion (or Janet), daughter of Sir Patrick Porteous of Hawkshaw and had an only surviving son, Patrick of Tanlawhill and Thirlestane. Simon may have been another son and his daughters were: Marion, who married Rev. Robert Martin in 1617; and Margaret. Walter of Woll (d.c.1617) first noted in 1606, is suggested (by Keith Scott) to have been descended from the Scotts of Haining. His brother John of Ashkirk was said to have been among those involved in the rescue of Kinmont Willie. He is recorded in 1608 when his brother John, and several others, attacked and maltreated some residents of Selkirk. He is there recorded as ‘Waltir Scot of Well’ and his half-brother John Turnbull (apparent of Harden) is also mentioned. In 1609 he was ‘in Woll’ when he had a charter for the lands of ‘Blindhauch . . .’, Braidley, Castelsyde, Leiphill, Rynnes, Rycroft, Roundhauch, Sandiehauch and Langupmedow’ in the Barony of Ashkirk. He married twice. By his first wife he had: Robert, who succeeded; and Francis. He secondly married Catherine Ormiston, and their children were: George; and Katherine. In 1617 his eldest son Robert was appointed as tutor to his younger children George and Katherine (half-siblings of Robert), by which time he was deceased. Walter of Bowhill (16th/17th C.) son of Robert, he was recorded in 1592 and was also known as being ‘of North Bowhill’. Also in 1592 he was ‘Wattie Scott in Bolhill’ when he was signatory for a caution for the good behaviour of John in Foulshiels. He had brothers Robert (of the Southside of) Bowhill, William (who was at the rescue of Kinmont Willie) and James. In 1599 he was among a list of Scots who Sir Walter of Branxholme declared were ‘his men’ and therefore accepted responsibility for making them answer to justice; his brother William was also listed. He was succeeded by his eldest son Robert in 1609. Walter of Huintly (16th/17th C.) possibly son of Robert of Huntly, who was said to have been in the raid that rescued Kinmont Willie. He was part of a gang of Scots (from Bowhill, Thirlestane, Synton, etc.) who forcibly freed 2 of their kin from imprisonment in Selkirk in 1608. His brother William is also mentioned. He was also upon an inquest in 1612. However, in 1616 James of Huntly is recorded (perhaps his brother), suggesting he was deceased by then. He could be the Walter ‘elder of Huntlie’ listed in a court case before the Privy Council in 1627, when a band of Scots were accused of harassing the tenant of Hartwoodburn. Walter of Headshaw (16th/17th C.) listed in 1599 among Scots and others charged to find caution to ‘observe the King’s peace’. He was then ‘of Eidislaw’. He is transcribed being ‘of Edieslaw’ in a 1603 document when a large number of Scots and some Turnbells and Elliots were given a summons to remove themselves from land that was claimed by James Cunningham, Earl of Glencairn to be wrongfully possessed. He may have been the 2nd son of Walter of Headshaw and brother of Robert of Headshaw (if so he could have been father of Robert of Easter Groundistone). In 1609 Robert of Headshaw and a number of other men were bonded not to reset him and several others while they were ‘at the horn’ for not signing an assurance not to harm Walter of Tushielaw. And later the same men were fined for resetting him and the others, this being part of the feud between the Scotts of Thirlestane and Tushielaw. Probably the same Walter ‘brother-german to Robert Scott of Hirdshaw’ was recorded in 1621 when his son Harry became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh. Walter of Whitehaugh (16th/17th C.) one of the ‘pretended tenants’ who James Cunningham, Earl of Glencairn (and Baron of Haseendean) tried to evict in 1603. He could be the Wat Scot of Whithauch’ who signed the ‘General Band’ among Border Lairds in 1602. He is probably the younger son of Walter of Whitehaugh, who succeeded to the estate on the death of his unmarried older brother, William. In 1610 he was part of a petition, along with several local Langlands and Scotts, to have hornings lifted and penalties reduced; George Langlands of that Ilk had acted as cautioner for him and several other Scotts in this dispute against the Scotts of Todshawhaugh and Ormiston. He sold the estate to his maternal uncle Robert of Headshaw. However, he was probably still called ‘Walter Scott of Quhytehauch’ in 1627 when there was a complaint against him to the Privy Council, that he and a band of other Scotts (from Headshaw, Kirkhouses and Huntly) had forcibly removed the tenant from Hartwoodburn. He apparently claimed a right to these lands, and felt compelled to take matters into his own hands, taking the farmhouse ‘all in armes, with hagbuittis and pistolettis’, and threatening to debar anyone who tried to come there; it is unclear what happened as a result of the summons against him and his compatriots. Also in 1627 he gave caution to the Privy Council for John Geddes, Burgess of Dumfries. It is also hard to understand how he might fit in with the genealogy given by Scott of Satchells.

Walter ‘Wat’ (16th C.) recorded as tenant in Borthaugh in 1569. He signed the bond to keep the peace on the Border. Walter ‘the Hawk’ of Whitslade (d.c.1610) son of Robert. He lived in the earlier part of his life at Stirches, like his father. He was probably the first to style himself ‘of Whitslade’. His nickname was said to be ‘on account of his sharpness and activity’. He had a charter in 1575, in which he was described as son and heir of Robert, who was 2nd son of Walter of Synton. He was listed among many Scotts and their allies in a 1581 summons to appear before the Privy Council regarding the feud with the Elliots and Armstrongs. In 1581 he was listed among the supporters of the Earl of Crawford who attacked Ruthven Castle; he was also listed in a complaint made by Margaret Erskine, Lady Ruthven against Crawford and his followers in 1583. He may have been the Walter of ‘Whitslaid’ who signed the Buccleuch Band in 1589. In 1590 he was ‘of Quhistslaid or Stirkschawis’ when listed among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. In 1591, along with Sir Walter of Buccleuch and Walter of Harden, he had a letter of pardon from the King for ‘intercommuning with Francis’ Earl of Bothwell. He was listed among 200 Scotts and associates who were accused of stealing livestock from Drumelzier and Drea in 1591/2. It is said that his brother Robert went on the raid to rescue Kinmont Willie in 1596. In 1603 he (probably incorrectly transcribed as ‘William’) was one of the large list of men given a ‘summons of removal’ from their lands in Haseendean by the Baron at that time, James Cunningham. He is recorded in a ‘retour’ of 1605, as heir to his grandfather Walter of Synton, in the lands of Whitslade. In 1608 Sir Robert of Thirlestane was caution for him and 2 of his sons, that they not harm Archibald of ‘Deiphoip’. He married a daughter of Douglas of Cavers. His sons included: Sir Walter, who succeeded; Thomas of Todrig, who married Janet, daughter of Walter Scott of Harden, with pre-uptial contract in 1590 he was ‘of Quhitslaid or Stirkschawis’ when listed among Border landlords and heads of families. In 1591, along with Sir Walter of Buccleuch and Walter of Harden, he had a letter of pardon from the King for ‘intercommuning with Francis’ Earl of Bothwell. He was listed among 200 Scotts and associates who were accused of stealing livestock from Drumelzier and Drea in 1591/2. It is said that his brother Robert went on the raid to rescue Kinmont Willie in 1596. In 1603 he (probably incorrectly transcribed as ‘William’) was one of the large list of men given a ‘summons of removal’ from their lands in Haseendean by the Baron at that time, James Cunningham. He is recorded in a ‘retour’ of 1605, as heir to his grandfather Walter of Synton, in the lands of Whitslade. In 1608 Sir Robert of Thirlestane was caution for him and 2 of his sons, that they not harm Archibald of ‘Deiphoip’. He married a daughter of Douglas of Cavers. His sons included: Sir Walter, who succeeded; Thomas of Todrig, who married Janet, daughter of Walter Scott of Harden, with pre-uptial contract in late 1613 (by which time he was deceased): probably Robert, who was on the Carlisle raid in 1596; probably George, recorded as brother of Walter in the 1620s when there were court proceedings with Robert, younger of Satchells; and James, who in 1620 married Agnes Scott, widow of Rev. Alexander Hogg and held lands at Eildon – ‘Whitslade the Hawk, and Headshaw came And warriors more than I may name: From Yarrowcleugh to Hindhaugh-sweir, From Woodhouselie to Chesterglen, Troop’d man and horse, and bow and spear; Their gathering word was Bel-lenden’ [SWS]. Walter of Northhouse (16th/17th C.). Scott of Satchells gives him first on the list of ‘Pensioners’ of the house of Buccleuch. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Walters. He could be the Walter, brother of ‘Will’ of Northhouse who was involved in a raid on Stobs in 1608. Satchells says he was ‘the first gentleman descended from the family’, presumably meaning he was the first Scott of Northhouse. He could be the Walter ‘callit Nothis’ appointed in 1622 to assist Walter Scott of Buccleuch in administering justice in the Middle Shires. Walter of Chapelhill (16th/17th C.) listed by Scott of Satchells among the 24 ‘Pensioners’ of Buccleuch. He was said to be half-brother to the Laird of Chisholme; it is unclear who the Laird was at that time, but Walter Chisholme married Ann, daughter of William of Chapelhill in the latter part of the 16th century, so perhaps ‘half-brother’ means brother-in-law. He may be related to James in Chapelhill, who was listed among fugitives in 1618. Sir Walter of Goldielands (d.aft. 1627) son of the ‘Laird’s Wat’, he was probably the Walter of Goldielands who took part in the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596 (although some have suggested this was his elderly father). He was listed in 1591/2 as a son of Walter of Goldielands who was part of a group of 200 Scotts and others who stole 4000 sheep, 200 cows and 40 horses from the Tweedy’s lands of Drumelzier and Drea. He is ‘younger of Goldielands’ in 1593 when he witnessed a marriage contract between Gledstains of Cocklaw and Turnbull of Wauchope. He is recorded as ‘Walter Scot sone to Wat of Gaudylandis’ in a 1594 list of those implicated in the slaughter of Lord Maxwell and his men at Dryfe Sands. In 1599 he may be the Laird of Goldielands listed among Scotts and others charged to find caution to ‘observe the King’s peace’. In 1600 2 lawyers complained that he had not paid the ‘feu maills’ on the lands of ‘Stow in Woddell’ (i.e. Stow of Wedale, the old name for Stow) that he occupied; in the following year they complained that Robert Turnbull, Sheriff Clerk of Roxburghshire, hd not registered their complaint. He signed a bond among Border Lairds in 1602 for keeping the peace. He is probably the Walter of Goldielands who was among the 15 Border lairds who were removed from their homes in 1608 for being ‘ringleaders suspected wither of their bygone conversation or for their present disordered courses’; he and Robert Elliot of Redhewgh were sent to Cupar in Fife. In 1610 he was listed among the supporters of the Scots of Thirlestane in their feud with the Scotts of Tushielaw. In 1612 he signed a bond at Jedburgh for keeping peace on the Border, along with several other local men. Also in 1612 he was on the panel of ‘retour’ for Tweedie of Drumelzier. He is recorded as the ‘Guidman of Goudelandis’ who was complained about to the Privy Council in 1617 by 2 Englishmen, who had apparently been imprisoned for 18 weeks without trial; later the Keeper of Edinburgh Tolbooth complained that he had failed to pay to keep the men in prison. Additionally in 1618 William Oliver ‘in Lanyburne’ (possibly Langburneshiels) complained that he had directed some men to unlawfully apprehend him; the Privy Council said that he and his accomplices should be denounced as rebels. These generations are quite uncertain (Keith Scott disagreeing with Tancred, for example), with some details confused, e.g. he did not marry Jean Riddell, since that marriage was with his son, who was also Walter. It has also been suggested that he died without issue and was succeeded by his cousin Walter, son of his uncle Charles; however, this seems like it refers to a later generation. He must be the Sir Walter of Goldielands referred to in a 1670 court case in which his son Walter demanded copies of earlier instruments of sasine relating to Goldielands (which existed in the former Hawick Town Clerk’s ‘protocol book’); in 1620 he was infefted by Walter, Earl of Buccleuch, in the lands of Goldielands and Westcotrig, and the same day granted Goldielands to his son Walter, retaining the ‘liferent’ for himself. His ‘brother natural’ Robert is also mentioned in 1620. He is probably the Sir Walter of Goldielands recorded in 1627 as owner of ‘the Ladyland’ near Hawick (since his son Walter was not referred to as ‘Sir’). His wife’s name is unknown, and there are also no records of other children. However, it is possible that his wife was the ‘Lady Gaudielands, Edgerstons Aunt’ who was recorded on a document of 1666 describing the division of the burial space in the choir of Jedburgh Abbey among various Rutherfords. Sir Walter ‘the Bold Bucleuch’ (1565/6–1611) 11th Laird and later 1st Lord of Buccleuch, only son of Sir Walter of Branxholme and Buccleuch. He succeeded his father in 1574, and although he was a minor, he had special dispensation from the Regent. There was a precept of sasine for him inheriting his father’s lands that were held by Melrose Abbey, including the Monk’s Tower in Hassendean, Ringwoodfield, Ettrick, Rodono, Eskdalemuir, Northhouse and Thirlestane, as well as the office of Bailie of Melroseland. In 1574 he also was formally served as heir to the lands of his great-uncle David and his great-grandfather Sir Walter (these being legally necessary because of inheritance during the minority of previous generations). This included the Barones of Branxholme, Eckford and Kirkurd, as well as Lanton, Whitchevers, Rankleburn, Lempitlaw, Eilrig, Whithope, Dryden, Commonside, Girnwood, Borthaugh, Grahamslaw and lands within the Regality of Melrose. His ‘tutor’ was his great-uncle, James Douglas, Earl of Morton (who was asked to make Walter of Goldielands responsible for the behaviour of ‘Branxholme’s men dwelling in Teviotdale’ in 1581). He became one of the most powerful barons of his time, was noted for his bravery, and is often regarded as the last of the Border rievers. He was constantly involved in attempts by the crown to keep peace on the Border, and went in and out of favour, including brief exile in France. He is recorded (presumably his agents) bringing a letter of inhibition against Cavers Kirk for non-payment of teinds in 1577 and in 1588 he was confirmed in the ‘tack’ of the teinds of Hassendean and Cavers Parishes. In 1582 he and his accomplices were accused by the men of Bewcastle of stealing 200 cows and 300 goats and sheep. In 1582/3 he received remission from King James VI for crimes for which he had been imprisoned in Blackness (but escaped). In 1585 he had a bond with Robert of Allanhaugh, resolving a feud, partly the result of him being involved (during his minority) in the death of David, son of Adam of Allanhaugh. Also in 1585 he raised a force of Scots to join the Earls of Angus, Mar and Bothwell (his step-father) against the Earl of Arran and James VI at Stirling Castle. In 1586 he was involved in raids into England, along with Bothwell and Maxwell. Also in 1586 he is recorded as ‘baillie principal’ of the Regality of Melrose. Additionally there was an order from the Privy Council for him and William, Lord Hay of Yester to resolve their feud and stop invading each other’s lands. In 1587 the English Warden wrote that he led a band into Redesdale with 200 men (in daylight, with his pennant and a trumpeter belonging to the Earl of Bothwell), burning the woods and killing a man. In the same year he was briefly imprisoned in Edinburgh Castle for a raid against the English (perhaps the counter-attack following Sir Cuthbert Collingwood’s raid into Teviotdale); John Murray of Blackbarony and John Carmichael of that Ilk were his sureties once he was released. Additionally in 1587 Robert of Haining acted as his cautioner, that he would appear before the Privy Council ‘and underlie sic ordour as salbe imputt for the weill and quietnes of the Bordouris’ and he and his supporters (except for the Scotts of Ewesdale) submitted to arbitration to settle differences with James Tweedy of Drumelzier and his followers. In 1588 he had a commission to protect Selkirkshire and was on a list of Borders ‘masters and landlords’ ordered to appear before the Privy Council. Also in 1588 the English Warden complained that he and the Lairds of Chisholme and Whithaugh led about 100 Scotsmen on a raid into England, killing 4 men. A letter of 1589 from the King commended him for his loyalty and invited him and his followers to Edinburgh. However, in 1590/1 the English Warden were complaining about raids that he had led into England. In 1589/90 he was listed as one of the leaders in Roxburghshire charged with seeing that people subscribed to the Confessions of Faith. He was knighted in 1590 and in that year had an order to relieve the King of certain ‘bills’ of English complainants; it was stated that he was formerly ‘Walter Scott of Branxholme’, but was ‘Sir Walter, now of Bukcleugh’, suggesting that the ‘Buccleuch’ designation formally accompanied his knighthood. John Murray of Blackbarony served as his cautioner in 1590. He received permission to travel to France to alleviate his gout in 1590, and had a letter from James VI in 1591 allowing him to stay in Edinburgh and Leith until the weather improved to allow him to sail. He would have been the Laird of Buccleuch when listed on the ‘Roll of the Clans’ in about 1590. He was appointed Keeper of Liddesdale in 1591 (and reappointed in 1594), obtained a Lordship of Crichton and Liddesdale in 1595, and was Warden of the West Marches. In 1591 he signed a bond to support the King against Francis Stewart, 5th Earl of Bothwell (his step-father), and also in that year received a pardon for ‘intercommuning’ with the Earl of Bothwell. He had a letter of protection from the King in 1591, declaring that all actions against him should be suspended and his lands protected, while he travelled to England and France. However, it also appears that he had fallen out of favour again, being stripped of his new responsibilities and effectively exiled overseas for 3 years, his cautioners for £10,000 being Sir James of Balwearie and William of Abbotshall; however, he returned after 15 months, with a letter allowing his return written by the King in late 1592. In 1591/2 his cautioner was Sir John Edmonston of that Ilk when there was a complaint that he had led 200 Scots and others to steal 4000 sheep, 200 cows and 40 horses from the Tweedy’s lands of Drumelzier and Dreva. In 1593 he sided with the Laird of Johnstone against the Laird of Maxwell at Dryfesdale Sands (and later sided with Maxwell against Johnstone). Also in 1593 he was accused of being involved in the death of Charltons in England. In 1594 he had a commission (along with Alexander Lord Home and Sir Robert Ker of Cessford) to raise men to fight against the Earl of Bothwell and his followers. Later that year he gained many of the titles and estates forfeited by the Earl of Bothwell and was reappointed Keeper of Liddesdale; he wrote a letter confirming his position to the English Warden Scrope in 1594, which is signed at Hawick. He is recorded in a confirming charter of 1595 as still being superior of the lands of Kirkurd in Peeblesshire. Also in 1595 he had a 'bond of manrent' with the Beatties and another with John Veitch of Dawyck, both signed in Hawick. In 1595/6 an English letter describes how he strengthened Hermitage Castle and 'has drawn most of the Ellots to his house at Hawick, and keeps an extra-ordinarie number in house'. In 1596 Sir James of Balwearie was surety that those for whom he was responsible would 'observe the King's peace and redress all skaiths committed'.

He acquired his nickname particularly after the rescue of 'Kinmont Willie' from Carlisle Castle in 1596, when he led 80 horsemen on a daring raid into England to free a reiver who had been treacherously captured. There followed much arguing, including letters between the two monarchs, with the English wanting him delivered up, and meanwhile an English force razing Liddesdale, then his force raiding into Tynedale (where 36 men were captured and hanged). After further complaints by Queen Elizabeth he surrendered at Berwick and was again briefly exiled, although he was received by Elizabeth and is said to have impressed her, she stating 'With ten thousand such men, our brother in Scotland might shake the finest throne of Europe'. Although considered a hero locally, Lord Scrope described him as 'ever the chief enemy (and still is) to the quiet of the border'. In 1596 there was a complaint that 'with his trumpeteter and 500 men' he attacked the house of Bankhead on Esk, taking prisoners as well as goods. In 1597 he served on Parliament as a minor baron. There is an indenture, signed by him at Copshawholm in 1597, to deliver 5 Scotsmen to the English Deputy Wardem. In 1597 he is also supposed to have personally led a party that rode into Tynedale on the Sabbath, burning 20 houses and killing 14 men who had taken home booty from Scotland. He signed in 1599 an agreement with the Elliots of Redheugh and Braidlie to bury their differences. Also in 1599 he was regranted his local lands, with Branxholme being erected into a Barony. As Warden, he had bonds with both the Armstrongs and the Elliots to be answerable for any complaints from England about the inhabitants of Liddesdale. In 1599 the Earl of Angus (William Douglas) wrote that he refused to enter his pledges for keeping the peace until the other Border lairds had done so. He spent several months in Paris, again for his health, with a letter of safe conduct being issued by Queen Elizabeth in 1599. Around 1600 he challenged Robert Ker of Cessford to combat; it is unclear whether either party was injured, but it could not have been serious. He was out of the country in 1602 when Robert of Haining acted as his procurator. In 1603 he was one of a large number of men issued with a 'summons of removing' by the Earl of Glencairn, then Baron of Hassendean. In 1604 he is recorded gaining lands in Hassendean from Robert Scott of Hassendean. On the accession of James VI to England he raised a regiment that fought under Maurice, Prince of Orange in Holland; this was probably filled with men who would formerly have been rievers in the Border country. He remained in Holland until the truce of 1609. He was elevated to a peerage in 1608 (after a Commission was struck by the King in 1606). In 1608 he had a letter of release and remission from the Privy Council for his efforts maintaining peace on the Border. About 1610 he was involved in a dispute with Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig over the lands of Whithope. Also in 1610 he was involved in a dispute over ownership of Haining mill with Robert, younger of Haining. Additionally, in 1610 he was named as a Commissioner for keeping peace within Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire. In 1611 he was appointed a member of the Privy Council, but died that same year. He married Mary (or Margaret), daughter of Sir William Ker of Cessford, according to a contract of 1586. Their children included: Walter, the 1st Earl; Margaret, who married James, 6th Lord Ross and secondly Alexander, 6th Earl of Eglington; Elizabeth, who married John, 2nd Lord Cranstoun; Jean (whose pension is mentioned in her brother's testament); and possibly Mary, who married William Elliot of Larriston (but she was perhaps his sister). By Delia, daughter of Captain Thomas Butler in Holland, he had an illegitimate daughter, Jean, called 'Holland's Jean'. He also had an illegitimate son, John, probably the Provost of Crichton. He was the first Scott of...
Buccleuch whose arms carried the star above the 2 crescents. He most likely died at Branxholme and was buried at St. Mary’s. His testament and inventory of possessions still exist – ‘Lord of Buccleugh into the Scots Border, Was high Lord Warden, to keep them in good order’ [CWS]. Walter (d.bef. 1620) possibly son of William of Allanhaugh, or otherwise related to the Allanhaugh Scotts. He could be the Walter, ‘brother germane’ to Robert of Allanhaugh, who witnessed the bond of 1585 in which Sir Walter of Branxholme and Robert of Allanhaugh resolved a family feud. He is probably the same Walter ‘in Ellenmouth’ included in a list of about 180 men given a ‘respite’ in 1594 for the slaughter of Lord Maxwell and his men at Dryfe Sands. In 1606 his ‘brother-german’ John purchased the lands of Hobbsburn and Weens from Thomas Turnbull; in this document he is referred to as being ‘of Allmannouth’. He is described as ‘in Allan Mouth’ and already deceased in 1620 when his son Walter became a brewer’s apprentice in Edinburgh. He may have been succeeded by John. Walter ‘Dand’s Wattie’ (16th/17th C.) failed to appear at court in Jedburgh in 1611. John in Brieryyards was fined for his non-appearance, as well as that of ‘Simmy’s Hob’ in Hawick, suggesting that he was a local man. His father was presumably Andrew. Sir Walter of Whitslaide (d.1628) son of Walter. He appears to have been a military man, and probably served in Holland. The circumstances for which he was knighted are unknown. In 1608 he was ‘younger of Quhitsuaid’ when he witnessed a bond for Sir Robert of Thirlestane and was ‘fiar of Quhitsuaid’ when he acted for Sir Robert in 1610 (along with Robert of Headshaw) in 2 bonds not to harm Walter of Tushielaw and his sons. He probably succeeded his father in about 1610 (and is easy to confuse with his father). In late 1610 he and his son Thomas (unless this was his father and brother) were bound not to harm Walter Scott in Hawick, called Todshawhill, and his associates; Sir Robert of Thirlestane acted as cautioner. In 1613 he was in trouble with the Presbytery for non-attendance, he ‘allegit that he haunted some kirkis now and then; but that he could not come to his own kirk because his seat quilk he won, and his fellows, to sit in was taken from him by the guidwife of Synton’; this could either have been Isobel, widow of Walter of Synton, or possibly his daughter Isabel, wife of Francis of (the new Harden branch of) Synton. In 1617 he was among Border Lairds who renewed their bond for keeping the peace. Along with Robert of Headshaw he was a cautioner for a bond of 1619 involving the Hays of Smithfield. In 1620 he had a bond with Thomas, son of Robert Turnbull, called ‘of Bedroull’. In 1621 he was appointed to a commission to apprehend the men who killed Robert of Gilmanscleuch. In about 1622 he had a charter from Sir Robert of Thirlestane for the lands of Ettrickhouse (essentially holding the lands in collateral for a loan). He is recorded in the period 1622–25 when his brother George was involved in a court action against Robert Scott, younger of Satchells. He married Susanna, daughter of Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane, but she died without issue. He secondly married a daughter of Sir John Scott of Newburgh (and sister of the next Sir John of Newburgh). His children included: Robert, who succeeded, but died at Marston Moor; Sir Walter, who succeeded his brother and died at InverKeithing; Thomas, the 3rd son to succeed; George, whose daughters Elizabeth and Anna were served heirs to his lands of Linton in 1670; Isobel (or Isabella), who married Francis, son of ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden in 1624; and Elizabeth (or ‘Bessie’), who married Robert Scott of Girnwood. He is said to have died at an advanced age. Walter of Whitehaugbrae (d.1621) son of Thomas and probably grandson of Walter of Synton. He may have acquired Whitehaugbrae from Thomas of Todrig. He was a signatory of the Scott clan bond in 1589. He died without an heir and the lands passed to Thomas of Salenside (probably his cousin’s son). His genealogy is treated extensively by John Scott of Rodono (although there may be some confusion over multiple men of the same name owning the lands). Walter ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden (1540s–c.1629), usually referred to as ‘Auld Wat o Harden’, since he reputedly lived to be 80. He was son and heir of William of Harden (or perhaps grandson of William if there was another Walter in between). He took part in the group of about 200 Scotts and their followers who broke into the Kirk of the Lowes in 1557 looking to kill Sir Peter Cranston. He is mentioned in a 1559 charter of the lands of Harden between Alexander, Lord Hume and his father. He was also Laird of Todshaw, Mabonslaw, Highchesters, Todrig, Wester Essenside, Burnfoot and Shielswood. He accompanied Buccleuch in the rescue of Kinmont Willie, and was renowned as a riever. He was descended from the Scotts of Synton and succeeded his father in 1563. In 1579 he witnessed a transaction involving Walter of Goldielands and Robert of Haining. He apparently received the lands of Gilmanscleuch after his youngest son was slain by the Scotts of Gilmanscleuch in a hunting match (although this story seems confounded with that of his son Walter in Essenside). However, in 1579/80 he was accused along with Elliot of Redheugh and Elliot of Hoscote of committing a raid on Coquet Water. The Elliots (then allied with the English) raided his property at Hoscote in 1580. Also in 1580 he complained to the Privy Council (along with the Countess of Bothwell and James Gledstains of Cocklaw) of thefts and outrages committed by the Elliots on their farms. In 1581 he witnessed a marriage contract between William in Burnfoot (on Ale) and Janet, daughter of William in Huntly. There is a contract between him and James and John Langlands in 1588 over teinds from Harden and Todshaw. In 1590 he is listed on the ‘Roll of the Clans’. In 1591, along with Sir Walter of Buccleuch and Walter of Whitslade, he had a letter of pardon from the King for ‘intercommuning with Francis’ Earl of Bothwell. He took part with Bothwell at the ‘Falkland Raid’ in 1592, when they tried to capture the King. Because of his role in this he was denounced as a rebel and his houses at Harden and Dryhope were ordered to be destroyed. In 1592 or 1593 he helped Bothwell to plunder lands in Tweedside, reportedly carrying off 4,000 sheep, 200 cattle, 40 horses and £2,000 in goods. In 1591/2 he was listed among a large number of Scotts who were accused of stealing livestock from Drumelzier and Dreva. He was listed along with his brother William among those implicated in the 1593 slaughter of Lord Maxwell and his men at Dryfe Sands. In 1595 he witnessed a bond of ‘manrent’ in Hawick, between the Beatties and Sir Walter of Braxholme. Also in 1595 he was among Elliots, Nixons and others complained about by the Lord of Gilsland regarding raids into England. He is also said to have been on the raid to rescue Kinmont Willie in 1596. Also in 1596 he was accused of leading a raid along with Willie Elliot of Larriston and the young Laird of Whitaugh and 60 men, who took 300 head of cattle, 20 horses and goods from ‘the Leabecke at Wilkinsskarre’; in another complaint the same year it is said that he headed a group of 400 men in a raid on Gilsland. In 1598 he was ‘put to the horn’ at the instigation of Sir John Ker of the Hirsel for non-payment of profits arising from Borthwickshielis, and remained officially a rebel for about a year ‘in proude contempt of his Hienes, and in manifest defraud of the said complainer’. In 1599 he was among a list of Scotts and others charged to find caution to ‘observe the King’s peace’. In 1599 he was responsible (along with Gideon Murray of Ellibank and Gilbert Elliot of Horsleyhill) for burning West Burnflat (in Liddesdale), for which they received remission in 1604. In 1602 he signed the new ‘General Band’ among Border Lairds. Also in 1602 he and Gavin Elliott of Horsleyhill were cautioners for Kinmont Willie Armstrong. In 1603 he was among a list of ‘pretended tenants’ served with a summons to remove themselves from lands in the Barony of Hasedean by James Cunningham. Also in 1603 he had a charter for the land of Pirntaton, near Stow. He was regularly bound over in large sums to keep the peace, threatened with outlawry, etc. Later in life he helped keep the peace, e.g. taking part in an important meeting of Lairds in Jedburgh in 1612, and signing the bond to keep the peace. In 1610 Gilbert Elliott of Horsleyhill (later of Stobs) stood as cautioner for him and his sons Walter, Francis and Hugh, that they would not harm Walter Scott in Hawick, called of Todshawhill, and his associates; the nature of this dispute with his neighbours is not clear. There was also a feud with the Scotts of Bonnington, who held lands on the Ettrick Water; while fishing there his son Walter was killed, leading to him gaining the lands of Single, Ern Cleuch, Newhouse, etc., and then Lady Bonnington complaining about being harassed by him and his supporters in 1617. He and his son William were described in 1617 as ‘chalmernanis and bailsis to Waltir, Lord Scot of Bugcleuche, haveling the cheif commandiement within the hail boundis of the countrey of the Forest’. A stone bearing his initials and those of his wife (and the date 1628) used to be on the bridge at Ettrickbridge, which he had built there. His wife is supposed to have served him his spurs when the meat supply was dwindling. In 1576/7 he married Mary (or Marion) Scott, daughter of John (not Philip as often stated) of Dryhope; she was also called the ‘Flower of Yarrow’. It is said that he agreed to provide ‘horse meat and man’s meat’ for a year and a day, as well as the plunder from the next Michaelmas moon; there is unfortunately no evidence to support this story. In 1598 he secondly married Margaret, daughter of John Edgar of Wedderlie, widow of William Spottiswood of that Ilk (and she died about 1629). His sons were: Sir William, who succeeded; Walter in Essenside, who was killed by one of the Scotts of Newhouse; Hugh in Greenhead, also called ‘of Deuchar’, who started the Scotts of Gala and married Jean, daughter of Sir James Pringle of Gala; Francis ‘in Howfurid’, who was ancestor of the Corse Scotts of Synton and married Isobel, sister of Sir Walter Scott of Whitslade; and possibly George of Castle Syde. He also had many daughters: Margaret (‘Maggie Fendy’), who married Gilbert Elliott of Stobs (‘Gibbie wi the Gourden Gartins’); Esther, who married Elliott of Falsnash (perhaps Archibald) and later George Langlands of that ilk (although it is unclear if this matches up with what is known about the Langlands family); Janet who married Thomas Scott of Whitslade; Isobel, who married James Johnstone of Westerhall; another daughter possibly marrying Scott of Tushielaw; another daughter marrying Geddes of Kirkurd; another daughter marrying Porteous of Hawkshaw; another Margaret (only child with his 2nd wife), who married David Pringle of Galashields and later Sir William McDougall of Makerstoun; and probably an illegitimate daughter who married Robert, son of Robert Elliot of Horsleyhill, and progenitor of the Elliots of Borthwickbrae and Oakwood Mill. The Museum has a porridge pot said to have belonged to him, as well as a lock and key from Old Harden House – ‘Not even the Flower of Yarrow’s charms In youth, might tame his rage for arms. And still, in age, he spurn’d at rest, And still his brows the helmet press’d [SWS]. Walter (16th/17th C.) son of Adam of Todshawhaugh. He is listed among the supporters of Sir James Johnstone who had a respite in 1594 for killing Lord Maxwell and others at Dryfe Sands. He could be the Walter of Todshawhaugh listed in 1628 among men accused by the Earl of Buccleuch of cutting down trees on his land. He was accused along with John Currie (also from Todshawhaugh) and James Donaldson in Cavers. He could be the Walter ‘in Hawik, called of Todshawhauch’ who led a group of Scots charging Langlands and other Scots to find caution in 1610, with the other side petitioning for the penalties to be reduced; his son George is also listed there. He was also recorded as ‘in Hawik, called of Todschawhill’ in the same year when the Scotts of Harden, Whitslade and Satchells were also bound not to harm him and his associates; the nature of this dispute among local landowners is not clear. Walter (16th/17th C.) tenant in Catslack. He was father of James (d.1679), who was Minister at Kirkton 1615–19. He may also have been father of William in Catslack, who was served heir to the lands of Easter Moormaw in 1607 (previously belonging to the brother of his great-grandfather, John, Vicar of Hawick). In 1620 he complained about Alexander Stewart assaulting him at the house of Walter in Catslack, striking him ‘upoun the face and luggis with a grite rod and with a drawn whinyer gaif him ane deep and deidlie straik and wound in the breist’, then threatened to shoot him. Additionally they claimed that Alexander, along with John (son of David Stewart in Glen) regularly harassed him with ‘hagbutis and pistoletis’; the Privy Council declared the Stewart men to be rebels. Also in 1620 he was recorded as Walter ‘in Slak’ in a complaint, along with his brother Adam and William ‘of Slak’; this was Alexander Stewart in Phaup complaining about being unfairly imprisoned. Separately, he and William complained about the Stewarts and vice versa, with him being represented by his brother Andrew, surgeon in Edinburgh. Walter of Todrig (16th/17th C.) probably son of George of Todrig and grandson of the first Laird of Harden, William. He may have been the Walter ‘in Todrig’ who witnessed a charter for lands in Rulewater in 1568 (when his father would still have been Laird). In 1579 he is recording paying Robert of Allanhaugh £100 Scots for the annual rent of the lands of Raesknowe; additionally he received payment of £50 Scots from Andrew Riddell (brother of Walter of Riddell) for the annual rent of his lands of Todrig, this was with the consent of his wife Margaret Ker and her mother Elizabeth Ker (‘conjunct feuars of his lands of Todrik’). In 1580/1 he was a judge appointed on behalf of Walter of Stirches in a dispute with George of Synton over ownership of Synton Mill. In 1581 he leased the lands and steading of Shielwood from William Scott in Burnfoot. Also in 1581 he witnessed a marriage contract between William in Burnfoot (on Ale) and Janet, daughter of William in Huntly. Additionally in 1581 he is recorded in a dispute over the sale of a horse of his in Selkirk. He was listed among many Scots and their allies in a 1581 summons to appear before the Privy Council regarding the feud with the Elliots and Armstrongs. In 1581/2 he gave a sasine for half the land of Todrig ‘with tower, fortalace, houses, biggings and yards’ to Joanna, daughter of ‘Dund’ Rutherford of Grange ‘in full settlement of her terce, conjunct fee or liferent’. This suggests perhaps that he or his son married this Helen Rutherford. The sasine was given with the consent of his mother, Elizabeth Ker (and hence it is unclear if she was his mother or mother-in-law). He was a signatory of the clan bond in 1589. He is recorded in a charter of 1594 renting Ferniehirst Mill and its lands from Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst. He is also said to have been in the raiding party which rescued Kinmont Willie in 1596. He was denounced in 1597, along with Andrew Ker of Primisideloch and Robert Scott of Bowhill, for not restoring teind sheaves to Mr. James Durham. In 1606 he held the lands of ‘Hardenhead’ from Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst through a ‘wadset’, and in 1610 was referred to in revocation of a contract by Sir Andrew Kerr of Oxnam. In 1607 he had a charter (probably a confirmation for the lands of Todrig) from James, Lord Hay of Yester and another in 1619. In 1610 he was part of a petition, along with several local Langlands and Scotts, to have hornings lifted and penalties reduced. He was claimed to have been wounded in about 1616 when the Scotts of Bonnington killed Walter in Essenside. In 1617 his 2nd son Walter was a ‘near kinsman’ of the deceased Walter in Essenside whose widow complained to the Privy Council about the Scotts of Bonnington still being at large. In 1617 he was one of several supporters of the Scotts of Harden who Lady Bonnington complained had attacked her family (as part of a feud between the Harden and Bonnington Scotts); his son Walter was also mentioned. In 1617 he was among Border Lairds who renewed their bond for keeping the peace. In 1619/20 he and his son William had a warrant for the arrest of Robert Ormiston of Old Melrose (perhaps for encroaching upon their lands). In 1620 there was a further charter for holdings in the Todrig estate, which mentioned his brothers Robert and William. He is also mentioned in the Commissioners’ Court for 1623 when Thomas Hood (from Ancrum) was accused of stealing cattle belonging to him from ‘Plassadge’ in England (Plasketts perhaps?), and also Michael Birny (in Fairnilee) found guilty of stealing 30 sheep belonging to him and his associates; his son Walter is also mentioned in 1623. It is possible that some of these events relate to ‘Auld Wat’ (of Harden, Todrig, etc.). His children included: William, who was his heir and married Isabella Livingston; and Walter, who was involved with the feud between the Scotts of Harden and the Scotts of Bonnington. In about 1630 he probably sold Todrig to Thomas, brother of Sir Walter Scott of Whitslade. Walter (16th/17th C.) tenant in Ladhope. He was recorded in 1599, when the Laird of Howpsley (probably William) who was surety for him, as well as the Laird’s son John (who may have been related). He is listed being ‘of Landhoip’ and may be the same as one of the other Walters. Walter (c.1587–1633) 2nd Lord and 1st Earl of Buccleuch, son of Sir Walter ‘the Bold’. In 1590 he was described as ‘Walter Scott, younger’ when he rented the West Mains of Hawick from Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig. In 1606 he was the ‘master of Buccleuch’ who had a feu charter of the Kirklands of Hawick (except for the Manse and Glebe) from William Fowler (Parson of Hawick), with the consent of his father, Walter, Lord of Buccleuch. In 1611 he had a letter from the Privy Council forbidding the holding of a horse race between him and the brother of Sir Robert Gordon of Lochinvar. The inventory of the estates when he succeeded in 1612 still exists. He was the first in his family for 140 years to succeed to the titles when of full age. He served extensively in Holland, but also lived for periods at Branxholme. In 1618 he was appointed by the King as a commissioner to keep law and order in Liddesdale and Eskdale. In 1619 he was created Baron Scott of Whitchester and Eskdale and Earl of Buccleuch. Also in 1619 he was appointed as a Commissioner for Liddesdale and the Debatable Land, as well as Eskdale (along with Robert, Lord Maxwell) for dealing with idle and incorrigible persons. He purchased Synton from John Erskine, Earl of Mar in 1619. In 1621 he resigned the lands of Ringwoodfield (in upper Teviotdale) to Thomas Hamilton, Earl of Melrose (but the Scotts of Buccleuch held them again not much later). In 1621 he was at the meeting of the Scottish Parliament held in Edinburgh. In 1622 he was part of the local Commissioners’ Court appointed to help keep the peace on the Border. Also in 1622 he was in dispute with the Marquis of Hamilton over lands formerly held by Francis Stewart, Earl of Bothwell. Through the 1620s he continued as one of the joint English-Scottish Commissioners of the Middle Shires and was also member of the Privy Council. He had a narrow escape in his family’s feud with the Elliots in 1624. He complained about the Elliots of Redheugh oppressed his tenants (on their former lands in Liddesdale), leading him to eject them, but after the Elliots regained lands through the courts they continued to plot against him. It is said that he overstretched his estate and so entered the service of the States-General of Holland in 1627. By 1629 he was given a commission as Colonel of a company in the Netherlands and was present at the sieges of Bergen-op-Zoom and Maastricht. He was called home by a letter of King Charles I in 1631, but went back to Maastricht in 1633, after making a will in Scotland. He was still recorded as superior of the lands of Kirkurd in 1632. He married in 1616.
Lady Mary Hay of Erroll, daughter of Francis, Earl of Erroll. His legitimate children were: Elizabeth (b.1621), who married John, Lord Erskine and Earl of Mar; Walter (b.1625), the eldest, who died aged 4; Francis (b.1626), Lord Scott, who succeeded; David (b.1627) of Canonbie; Jane (or Jean, b.1629), who married John, Master of Yester, who became the Marquess of Tweedale; and Mary (b.1631), who died unmarried. He also had at least 11 illegitimate children, including: Francis of Mangerton; William, also of Mangerton; John of Gorrenberry; Margaret, who married John, son of Robert Pringle of Stichill; and Janet, who married Andrew Scott of Foulshiel. He died in London, on his way home again from Holland. He was the last of the Scotts of Buccleuch to be buried in the family vault at St. Mary’s Church (7 months later). His body was brought by ship from London, but driven to Norway in a storm, arriving at Leith 15 weeks later. There was a huge mediæval-style funeral procession from Branxholme to St. Mary’s in June 1634 when ‘he was caried be his honorable freinds and the maist part of the whole nobilitie from the said place [Branxholme] to his kirk of Hawick all on fut under a fair velvet pale and the ceremoni with the armes wes set doun by some of his freinds thaimselffes with advyse of ane painter’. His armorial bearings were the first to have the supporters as ‘two ladies richly attired’. His will and inventory still exist – ‘...And of Earl Walter, rest him, God! A braver ne’er to battle rode; And how full many a tale he knew, Of the old warriors of Buccleuch’ [SWS], ‘Earl Walter was Lord Walter’s son, A Mars for Valour, Wisdom, and Renown, His courage durst a Lyon fear, His Frowns would terrify’d a Boar’ [CWS]. Walter (16th/17th C.) described as ‘the Earl’s servant’ in 1620 when he was one of the witnesses for Walter, Earl of Buccleuch granting Goldielands to Sir Walter of Goldielands. Walter (16th/17th C.) tenant in ‘Mylneholme’ in 1622 when a Little was accused of stealing his sheep. This was probably the Millholm in Liddesdale, and he may have been an ancestor of the later Walter there. Walter of Howford (16th/17th C.) son of William. In 1615 he married Marie (or Mary), sister of Robert Scott of Hartwoodmyres. He witnessed several documents in 1621. He sold Howford to Sir William Scott of Harden. In 1686 it was stated that the representative of Scott of Howford was Scott of Coldhouse (hence presumably a near relation). It is possible that his widow was the ‘Marie Scott lyfrenter of Cowdhouse’ recorded on the Land Tax Rolls in 1663. Walter of Midshiels (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1628 when he was the first named in a list of Scotts charged by the Privy Council to keep the peace with the Turnbulls of Know. His son Adam was also listed, along with Adam of Burnfoot, William, smith in Hawick, and William’s brother Adam; he may well have been related to some of these men. Adam of Burnfoot paid caution of 100 merks. It is unclear how he was connected to other Scotts of Midshiels or of Howpasley. Walter of Tushielaw (d.bef. 1643) son of Robert, from whom he succeeded in 1633. He was specifically served heir to the lands of Tushielaw, with mill, and the lands of ‘Conninglaw’ and Cacrabank. He may previously have been called ‘of Fawdshope’. In 1617 he was recorded as son of Robert (then still heir apparent to Tushielaw) when listed among Scotts and others who had freed Patrick Porteous of Hawkshaw and attacked his captors. He was succeeded by his brother William in 1643, after (probably) having conveyed the estates to him in 1636. His children included: James, who was Brigadier in the Life Guards; and Robert. He appears to have granted his son Robert ‘in Fauldishoip’ his lands in 1636 (although this could be confusion with his brother William). Walter of Chamberlain Newton (d.bef. 1619) recorded in the register of the Privy Council in 1573, when there was surety for him. He is listed there being ‘in Chalmerlane Newton’, along with his brother John. They were both sons of Margaret Turnbull, who was widow of David Elliot, who possessed half of the farm of Chamberlain Newton. Gavin Elliot of Bailleelee (and later of Stobs) complained that they had attacked his servant on the other half of the farm. Following his non-appearance, his brother John was declared a fugitive in 1573; he and his mother were decalred fugitives later in 1573, but then bound to Sir Walter Scott of Braxholme and John Tweedy, tutor of Drumelzier, not to molest Gavin Elliot, his wife Jean Scott, their children or servants. It is unclear who their father might have been. In 1576 surety was found for him ‘not to molest’ Gavin Elliot. In 1579 his brother David purchased a tenement in Hawick from Robert Johnstone from Annandale. In 1581, along with several other Scotts (from Hartwoodmyres, Gamescleuch, Gilmanscleuch, Edinburgh, North Bowhill, Dryhope, Catslack and Howpasley), supported William of Tushielaw and Robert of Aikwood in representing Adam in Bonnington in a dispute with Robert of Haining. He is also recorded in 1588 when his brothers John and David were witnesses to a saisine for the Scotts of Howpasley for Midshiels and Appletreehall. He is listed among landed men of the Borders in about 1590. In 1592 his cautioner was John Hay of Smithfield that he would not reset any of those who had supported the Earl of Bothwell. He is included on a list of several Scotts and others whom the Baron of Hassendean (James Cunningham) was trying to remove from their lands in 1603. His son John had a bond with Adam Turnbull of Abbotrule in 1619 (registered in 1624) by which time he was deceased. William ‘of Newton’ is probably his direct descendent (perhaps his son), and possibly also ‘Syme of Newtoun in Hawick’. He may have been father of both William of Chamberlain Newton and John of Brieryyards (recorded as brothers in the 1630s). Walter (16th/17th C.) tenant farmer in ‘Crayk’, i.e. Craik in about 1610, when he was listed among supporters of the Scotts of Thirlestane in their feud with the Scotts of Tushielaw. Probably the same Walter is recorded in 1618 when his brother Simon in Newton was served heir to him in the lands of Easter Craik. Walter (16th/17th C.) described as being ‘in Hawick’ in 1610 when Sir Robert of Thirlestane served as caution for Robert of Satchells, who was bound not to harm him. Walter of Burnfoot (d.1640s) in Ale Water, probably son of William, or perhaps his brother. He was recorded in the Circuit Court records of 1623 when 2 men were found guilty of stealing a horse from him; there his lands are referred to as ‘Burnfute upon ye Watter of Aill’. Margaret, wife of probably the same Walter was tried at Edinburgh in 1620 for assaulting James ‘Lethame’ in Hawick Parish Church, in 1616 and later on the High Street. It seems unlikely that he was the Walter of Burnfoot on Ale who was given a bond by Francis Stewart (son of the Earl of Bothwell) in 1604, since that would have been too early (and perhaps that ‘Walter’ is an error for ‘William’). However, he may have been involved in the ongoing dispute with the sons of the Earl of Bothwell, which lasted until the 1620s. He signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. His son Robert was served heir to him in 1641. It is unclear when he died. His name still appears in the county valuation of 1643, with the lands being valued at £400. However, he appears to have been deceased in 1632 when his son Robert was summoned (along with John, son of Sir Robert of Thirlestane) to received payment for the lands of Altrieve and Corsecleuch. Walter (d.c.1616) 2nd son of Walter ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden, described as ‘in Essenside’. In 1610 he was named along with his father and brothers when Gilbert Elliott of Horsleyhill (later of Stobs) was cautioner for them not to harm Walter Scott in Hawick, called Todshawhill, and his associates. In 1614 there is a bond with his father Walter and brother William, relating to his future wife and the lands of Borthwickshiel, Alemoor and others. He married Elspeth (or Elizabeth), daughter of John Hay of Haystoun (or Smithfield); in 1632 Elizabeth (by then remarried) renounced her claim to Alemoor, and in 1647 assigned lands to her son James. He was killed (according to complaints raised by his wife in 1616–17) by John Scott, brother of Simon of Bonnington, along with Simon, another brother Adam and ‘Will’s Sym’ of Thirlestane who came ‘bodin in feir of weir with lances, swordis, secreitis, plateslevis, quhingeris and utheris wappones invasive’, attacked him while he was fishing on the Ettrick, and he died 48 hours later; it is also said he was killed by one of the Scotts of Newhouse, suggesting that John, brother of Simon of Bonnington, was of Newhouse. In 1617 Mary Scott, Lady Bonnington, complained about her family being continually harassed by the Scotts of Harden, this presumably being a continuation of the feud between these families; her complaint includes a description of the events that led to his death, stating that the Scotts of Harden were being deliberately provocative by fishing in the waters belonging to the Scotts of Bonnington. He is probably the Walter ‘of Ashinsyde’ (i.e. Essenside) recorded in 1617 when William Scott appeared at the Privy Council in his name (even although he was deceased), as well as those of several other supporters of the Scotts of Harden. Also in 1617 his widow, Elspeth Hay, complained on behalf of the Scotts of Harden that Simon Scott of Bonnington and his supporters remained ‘unrelaxed from a horning’. His widow, brothers Hugh and Francis and others involved were ordered to appear personally before the court in 1619. His widow later married William Scott of Salenside. In the period 1633-53 his daughters and heirs Jean and Margaret had an action raised against them by James, son of William of Salenside (and hence their step-brother, presumably over the inheritance of Essenside), with Sir William of Harden as their curator. These 2 daughters were served as his heirs in 1641, with him being described as the 2nd lawful son of Walter ‘senioris de Harden’. Note that Keith Scott (and others) confuses details of his death (saying he was killed Robert (‘junior of Altoun’, who succeeded and ‘called of Altoun’. His sons were probably Turnbull of Abbotrule. He is recorded as being a bond signed in Hawick between John, Hawick was probably his brother. In 1619 he witnessed a document relating to the sale of Harwood in 1637. He signed the Covenant (against episcopalianism) in Hawick in 1638. In 1649 part of Cromwell's army (under Generals Bright and Pride) stayed several nights at Castle ton Kirk on their way back to England. There they broke the seats and communion tables, took the minister’s books and lit their pipes using the parish records for the years 1612–48. There is no record of how the minister himself was treated, but he died later that same year. His brother’s son Walter Scott in Norham was served as his heir in 1649, so he presumably had no children of his own. Walter (16th/17th C.) son of Andrew of Salenside. In 1613 he became an apprentice in Edinburgh to beer-brewer Thomas Scott (who may have been related). He is probably the apprentice of Thomas who became a Burgess of Edinburgh in 1636 and could be the Walter who became a Guild Brother in 1643 (however, there were 2 apprentices of the same name). Walter (16th/17th C.) son of Walter of Allamouth. His father was already deceased in 1620 when he became an apprentice in Edinburgh to beer-brewer Thomas Scott (who may have been related). He is probably the apprentice of Thomas who became a Burgess of Edinburgh in 1636 and could be the Walter who became a Guild Brother in 1643 (however, there were 2 apprentices of the same name). Walter of Headshaw (17th C.) signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. Robert ‘suntyme of Heidschaw’ also signed. He could be the same Walter recorded in 1603 and 1609, who was a younger son of Walter and recorded as brother of Robert of Headshaw in 1621. He could also be related to the Walter of Whitehaugh and Headshaw recorded later in the century. Sir Walter of Whitslade (d.1651) 2nd son of Sir Walter, he succeeded from his older brother Robert and was in turn succeeded by his younger brother Thomas. He was served heir to Robert in 1645. He commanded a regiment of horse in the royalist army and was involved in the civil wars, probably being knighted by Charles II in 1651. In 1644 and 1646 and he was on the Committee of War for Selkirkshire, in 1648 also for Roxburghshire and in 1649 again for Selkirkshire. He represented Selkirk in Parliament in 1645–46, 1650 and 1651. In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, Dumfries and Annandale. He is mentioned in 1658 in a case in the Regality of Melrose, in a lawsuit over money due for ‘three troops horse of Captan Walter Scott’ to him, also involving Robert Ker of Faldonside, relating to 1650. He held lands at Drycleuchshiel and Redfordgreen, as well as Whitslade. He married a daughter of Sir Robert Stewart of Ormiston, brother of the Earl of Traquair. His children included: Robert, baptised in 1647, who must have died in infancy; Walter, baptised in 1649 and also died in infancy; and Jean. He died at Inverkeithing, fighting against Cromwell (while his brother Robert had probably died fighting on Cromwell’s side 8 years earlier). Walter (17th C.) maltman of Hawick, who was on a list of 16 ‘idle and masterless men’ suggested by the Hawick Bailie as suitable for sending to the wars in Germany in 1627. While in Edinburgh Tolbooth he was among 7 of them who complained that they were not in fact the sorts of men who should be pressed into military service, but nevertheless were transported to the wars in Germany. He could have been related to Bailie John, who was also a maltman in the next few decades. Walter of Braidhaugh and Arkleton (d.bef. 1661) 3rd son of John of Newark. He was also sometimes referred to as Walter of Harwood. It seems likely that he was a distant relative of the Scotts of Buccleuch, although the detailed descent of his family is unclear. He is probably the Walter, son of John of Newark, who was convicted of mutilating 3 fingers of Adam, son of John Dalgleish of Deuchar; Walter Scott of Buccleuch was instructed to apprehend him, as well as his brothers James and William, and William in Fastheugh for the murder of Adam Dalgleish in Deuchar. He was tenant (and probably not owner) of Broadhaugh in the upper Teviot valley. He served as local Chamberlain to Scott of Buccleuch in the period 1630–34 and probably through at least the late 1630s, with responsibility for ‘Teviotdale-head’ and Ewesdale. He was also Chamberlain for Eskdale, Ewesdale, Wauchopedale and Eskdalemuir. He is also recorded in 1632 in a note from Walter, Earl of Buccleuch about fixing the roof at Branzholme, where he is described as ‘in Braidhauche’. He was ‘of Breidhauche’ in 1638 when he signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick. In 1644 he was bailie to the Earl of Buccleuch for the 4 kirks of Eskdale, Ewesdale and the Debatable Land, and was given orders by the Committee of War for Roxburghshire to convey soldiers from these parishes to the Master of Cranstoun. He purchased Meikledale and Meikledale-hope from Adam Cunningham in 1643 (when he was referred to as being of Harwood) and shortly afterwards acquired Arkleton from the same man. He was ‘of Arkiltoun’ in 1649 when he wrote a description of the Sherifflom of Selkirk along with William Elliott of Stobs, and in the same year when he was listed on the Committee of War for Dumfriesshire and Annandale. In 1651 he is referred to as ‘of Arkiltoun’ when his son Robert ‘callit of Braidhauch’ was granted 800 merks yearly in the will of Francis, Earl of Buccleuch. In 1653 he had a contract with Adam Cunningham and the Earl of Nithsdale (as superior) relating to Meikledale, which was part of a legal case over ownership of those lands in the early 18th century. He married Agnes (or perhaps Anna), daughter of Turnbull of Minto. His son Francis succeeded to Arkleton and was also Chamberlain for the Langholm area. Another son, Robert, became Robert of Harwood. It is said he had several daughters, including one who married Maxwell of Broomholm (possibly Jean, wife of John Maxwell). Walter of Commonside (17th C.) recorded in 1643 when he was made a Burgess and Guild Brother of Glasgow (gratis), along with Earl Francis and several other Scotts. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts of Commonside. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Gowanlock and their daughter Janet was baptised in 1648. Walter (17th C.) younger son of Sir Robert of Haining (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Turnbull and their daughter Janet was baptised in 1648. Walter ‘Wat o the Buss’ (17th C.) listed in 1642 among a large number of Borderers declared as fugitives. He was probably connected to Bush in Ewesdale and related to earlier Scotts of Commonside. Walter ‘Gray’ (17th C.) recorded in a Hawick Magistrates Court case of 1642 involving skinner Andrew Deans and merchant Walter Robson. Walter ‘Wat o the Dykes’ (d.1653). It is unclear from which branch of the Scotts he came, although there is a tradition that the Scotts of Bonchester were related to the Scotts of Harden. It is also unclear what the ‘Dykes’ in his nickname referred to, but ‘the Dykes’ near Bedrule seems likely. He is probably the Walter described as ‘of Dykis’ in 1605 when Robert of Thirlestane was served heir to his brother in the lands of ‘Fadounsyd’ and ‘Nether Whittlawhous’. In 1652 his estate was inherited by his 2 daughters, Elizabeth and Jean, one of whom, Elizabeth, married James Scott of Bowhill. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Malie, and their daughter Janet was born in 1648. Walter of Bonchester, ‘Wat o the Dykes’ (d.1653). It is unclear from which branch of the Scotts he came, although there is a tradition that the Scotts of Bonchester were related to the Scotts of Harden. He was recorded in the 1663 and 1678 Land Tax Rolls in Lilliesleaf Parish, still paying tax on £668. Walter of Foulshiels (17th C.) son of James, and brother of Andrew. In 1647 he was served heir to his brother in the lands of ‘Fadounsyd’ and ‘Nether Whittlawhous’. In 1652 his estate was inherited by his 2 daughters, Elizabeth and Jean, one of whom, Elizabeth, married James Scott of Bowhill. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Malie, and their daughter Janet was born in 1648. Walter of Bonchester in 1632 from Alexander Kirkton (Provost of Jedburgh) and John Moscrop, younger (Burgess of Jedburgh); these joint owners had previously had a wadset on the property that was not redeemed. He was recorded as owner of Nether Bonchester in 1643, when it was valued at £180. His eldest son was James Scott of Bonchester in 1632 from Alexander Kirkton (Provost of Jedburgh) and John Moscrop, younger (Burgess of Jedburgh); these joint owners had previously had a wadset on the property that was not redeemed. He was recorded as owner of Nether Bonchester in 1643, when it was valued at £180. His eldest son was William, Laird of Galalaw. He was succeeded by Thomas, who is suggested to have been his 2nd son, but was probably his brother; his son William (and his wife Margaret Gledstains) gave over the lands to his uncle Thomas in 1653, according to a previous family arrangement. Walter (17th C.) eldest son of Robert of Shielwood. He is recorded in 1632 when he feued part of the lands... of Belses from Thomas, Lord Binning. In 1643 he was ‘in Sheilswood’ when his lands of Sheilswood (in Ashkirk Parish) were valued at £260, and his lands in Belses were also valued at £130. He is mentioned on an inquest in 1643 and is probably the Walter of Sheilswood listed by James Wilson among the local landowners of the mid-to-late 17th century. In 1636 he married Margaret Scott (although it is unclear which branch she came from). He had 2 sons and a daughter: Francis, who succeeded; Robert, who succeeded his brother; and Marian, who eventually also succeeded and married James Scott of Shaw. Walter (17th C.) son of William and grandson of Walter of Todrig, who was part of the raiding party that rescued Kimmont Willie in 1596. In 1629 he inherited the lands of Grange from his father William. His grandfather sold Todrig during his father’s lifetime, this being to Thomas, brother of William. His grandfather sold Todrig to his brother, and Marian, who eventually also succeeded and married James Scott of Shaw. Walter (17th C.) son of Walter ‘in the Wernysse’, which is probably Weens. In 1653 he became a surgeon’s apprentice with Walter Turnbull in Edinburgh. Walter of Catslack (17th C.) recorded in the Land Tax Rolls in 1663 when he paid tax on £52 in Hassendean Parish. He was surely related to earlier Scotts of Catslack, perhaps son of William in Catslack. He was probably father of John of Catslack who paid land tax in Hassendean Parish in 1678. Walter of Kirknowe (17th C.) recorded on the Land Tax Rolls in 1663 for the Parish of Hobkirk. He paid tax on £78 for his rental there. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts, but he could have been father of the wright William who lived at Kirknowe in about 1700. Walter of Hyndhope (17th C.) recorded in a deed of 1663 along with his brother Thomas. Walter of Dryhope (17th C.) recorded as Laird in 1669. He may have been brother of the previous Laird, Robert. He was succeeded by his brother, Philip. Walter ‘Westport’ (17th C.) resident of the Hawick, near the West Port. He was elected to the Council in 1648. He is also recorded in 1656 when he was cleared of the claim that John Scott made against him regarding a deal over 3 barrels of drink; he sold the barrels and was therefore presumably a merchant. He is recorded being ‘in the west port’ in 1663, when he was one of the owners of West Mains. Also in 1663 he was ‘merchant, Hawick, indweller at the West Port, thereof’ in a deed. He was listed among the Councillors in 1668. Presumably the same Walter is recorded in 1676 when he brought a ‘letter of horning’ against William Elliot of Philhope, with Henry Elliot of Harwood as cautioner (although part of the document is missing). He was probably Bailie in 1678 when Walter Hardie was fined for saying the ‘Westport would be hanged’. In 1679 a woman was cited for accusing his servant John Moore of theft. He was probably related to the other West Port Scotts, and may have been father of the later Walter of Westport, and possibly grandfather of Hawick’s second known Cornet, James ‘called of Westport’; James’ father Walter was already deceased in 1706. He is probably the deceased Walter ‘Westport’ (unless there are 2 generations of Walters) whose son James married Sara Gledstains in 1719. Walter of Tinnis (17th C.) Chamberlain to the Scotts of Buccleuch for Ettrick Forest in the period 1631–41. In 1642 he was named by the Privy Council to a commission to try a large number of Borderers who had been declared fugitives; he was recorded there as ‘William Scot of Tinneis, curator to the Erle of Buccleuch’. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Williams. Walter of Howpasley (d.c.1660) son of William of Fingland. He was brother of Robert and half-brother of Simon. When his brother died, he acquired the lands of Howpasley. After he died without issue, his sister Marion (wife of William Wilson in ‘Gulzeanflat’) was served as his heir and then Howpasley passed to Walter, son of his cousin Patrick of Tanlawhill. Walter (d.bef. 1667) youngest son of Patrick of Tanlawhill and Thirlestane. He inherited the lands of Howpasley, but died without issue and they went to his brother Sir Francis. His brother was served as his heir in 1667 (as confirmed in 1695), consistent with the claim that he died in about 1663, before his father. The lands he held included Rashiegrain, Easter and Wester Hislop, Langhaugh, Commonbrae and Ramsaycleuch, as well as Howpasley. He is probably the same man as Walter of Ramsaycleuchburn. Col. Walter of Hartwoodburn (d.1650) probably related to the Scotts of Whitehaugh, he was also referred to as being ‘of Harlawood’, and hence is easily confused with the nearby contemporary Walter of Harwood on Teviot. It is also unclear if he was related to the slightly later William of Hartwoodmyres. In any case, the identity of his father in unknown. He served in Parliament for Selkirkshire 1646–47 and 1648–49. In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, Dumfries and Annandale. He was appointed as one of the ‘tutors’ for the children of Francis Earl of Buccleuch. He is probably the ‘Colonell’ Walter who became a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh (gratis) in 1647. He was a Royalist, who raised a regiment in Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1649 and fought against Cromwell’s forces at Dunbar. In the correction to the will of Earl Francis in 1651, he is described as deceased when 200 merks yearly is allocated to his widow, Elizabeth Napier, and their second son, Walter. His widow Elizabeth Napier remarried to Sir Bryce Cochrane and was recorded in a deed in 1673; her will was proved in Edinburgh in 1677 by their son Walter ‘of St. Leonards and Harlawood’. In 1673 his daughter Anna Helena was served heir to the fifth parts of ‘Waughtoun’ in Prestonhaugh Parish, from her siblings Walter, Francis, Elizabeth and Margaret. In 1694 his daughter Anna Helena was served heir to Walter (presumably her brother), who was son of Walter ‘de Quhythaugh’ (presumably another designation of his) and gained the lands of Hartwoodburn. His children appear to have been: Walter of St. Leonards; Francis; Elizabeth; Margaret; and Anna Helena, who firstly Sir William Adair of Kinhilt and secondly Archibald Edmonston of Duntrreath. He died at the Battle of Dunbar. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Elliot and their children included: Jean (b.1635); William (b.1638); Adam (b.1640); and James (b.1645). Walter of Goldielands (d.bef. 1672) son of Walter (and not, as some genealogies state, son of Charles, half-brother of the first Walter of Goldielands). He was the last of the name to be acknowledged as ‘of Goldielands’ by the Scotts of Buccleuch (although there is also a record of Robert of Goldielands in 1638, and others given that designation, at least informally, later). He is hard to separate from his father, who was certainly alive in 1620, but was designated ‘Sir Walter’. In 1620 his father had a charter from Walter, Earl of Buccleuch, for the lands of Goldielands and Westcoterig, and the same day granted Goldielands to him (retaining the liferent). Also mentioned is Jean Riddell (probably daughter of Andrew Riddell of that Ilk), to whom he was promised in a contract of marriage, the contract involving the lands of ‘Pirntatoune’ or ‘Pirntaiton’ (presumably Pintaton on Gala Water). He is probably the Walter of Goldielands who bore the ‘pincell of black taffata’ on a lance point in the funeral procession of the Earl of Buccleuch in Hawick in 1634. He signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638; the name ‘R. Scott’ beside his could indicate this was his brother, son or perhaps uncle. In 1641 he witnessed a document for the Scotts of Thirlestane. In 1643 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire and in 1643, 1646, 1648 and 1649 he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire; in 1649 he is ‘of Gawdilands and Stanesh’, suggesting a connection with Stanedge (although the Scotts appear not to have owned it for at least another half century). In 1643 his lands in Hawick Parish were valued at £566 13s 4d. He is probably also the ‘W. Scott of Gowdilands’ recorded as owner of lands in Cavers Parish valued at £400 in 1643; these lands were owned by the Duke of Buccleuch by 1678. In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, Dumfries and Annandale. He is recorded in a county valuation of landowners in Hawick Parish in 1643 (as the 4th largest landowner) and on a list of landowners and tenants of Hassendean Parish in 1666. In 1649 he and Patrick Scott (writer in Edinburgh) were involved in a loan with James Crichton, pronounced to Sir Patrick Hamilton in 1652. In 1662, after the Restoration, he was fined £600. In 1655 he is recorded owing about £6800 to the deceased Francis, Earl of Buccleuch; this was for rental of the farms of Riccartonfoot, Prickinghaugh and Lawshill in the period 1634–47. He paid the land tax on property in Cavers Parish in 1663 and also paid more tax for lands recently acquired in Hawick Parish (from Cavers Kirk), as well as more than £500 for Goldielands itself. He was probably one of the ‘curators’ of Francis Scott of Davington, appointed in 1666. His descendants took the designation ‘of Crumhaugh’. His lands appear to have passed to Robert Scott of Clack, son of his youngest sister (or perhaps aunt), as well as Lilias, daughter of his sister Jean. However, he was succeeded by Walter of Crumhaugh, probably his cousin. He may be the Walter of Goldielands recorded in a deed of renunciation and discharge with Walter ‘in’ Goldielands in 1673. Walter (d.bef. 1671) tenant in Ladhope. In 1671, 1674, 1676, 1679 and 1680 his widow had discharges with the treasurer of Selkirk for annual rent. He is probably the ‘William’ whose widow Bessie Scott was deceased in 1683 when her son-in-law Andrew Angus (Bailie of Selkirk) was her executor. Walter (17th C.) recorded as proprietor of Allanhaugh in a transcription of the 1678 valuation rolls. However, it may be that this is confusion with ‘Altoncrofts and Alintoun’. If he was a Scott of Allanhaugh, it is unclear how he might have been related to previous Scotts of Allanhaugh.

Walter of Crumhaugh and Goldielands (1631/2–1700) probably a son of Charles of Crumhaugh, who was son of the first Sir Walter of Goldielands. He succeeded his cousin Walter in 1675, inheriting several lands, although those attached directly to Goldielands passed to the Scotts of Buccleuch. He succeeded to Robert Scott of Glack and Lilias Scott (wife of William Knox), who were nephew and niece of Walter of Goldielands. These lands included half of Ramsaycleuch, Commonside, Rashiegrain, Howpasley, Easter and Wester Hislop and Langhaugh, as well as Crumhaugh. It is possible he was the Walter of Glack recorded in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls paying £130 for lands in Wilton Parish. He is probably the Walter of Goldielands recorded in 1675 when he requested permission from the Hawick Bailies and Council to build a fence on top of the dyke separating his lands from those of the Common. He is Walter of Crumhaugh in 1678 when he paid land tax on £1116 13s 4d in Hawick Parish. He is probably the Scott ‘off Gowddielands’ listed among the heritors of the Regality of Melrose in 1682. He was on the Commission of Supply for Roxbroughshire in 1690. He may have been the ‘Goldilands, elder’ on the list of subscribers for the Hawick Kirk bell in in 1693/4 (with the ‘Goldilands, younger’ being his son Charles). In 1696 he resigned these lands, as well as Trinity Lands, ‘Corsback’ and others, to Charles of Crumhaugh, his elder son. He married Janet (or Jean) Glendinning and her will is recorded in 1682. His children included: Charles, who succeeded, but appears to have died before him; Walter, whose descendants later became the representatives of this branch of the family; and William, who married Isobel Gledstains in 1702. John, recorded as ‘brother of Goldilands’ in 1689 may also have been his son. Note, however, that these generations are quite murky. His memorial stone was uncovered during renovations in St. Mary’s Kirk around 1863 and reads: ‘Here lies Walter Scot of Crumhaugh Who deceased 20 day of December 1700 and of age 68’. Jean, who married Walter of West Port in 1700/1, was probably his daughter. In 1687 he witnessed a baptism for Elspeth (married to James ‘Bleak’), who may have been a sister, with the other witness being William, doctor in Hawick, who may have been a brother or other close relative. He is probably the Walter of Goldielands, who (along with Robert of Tandlaw, who was thus probably closely related) witnessed a baptism in 1673 for Robert (perhaps his son or brother) and Bessie Miller. He also witnessed a baptism in 1678 for Walter of Harwood and 2 more in 1680 for William of Harwood and for Robert of Horsleyhill. He is Walter ‘of Crumhaugh’ in 1700 when, along with his son William, he witnessed a baptism for Walter in Goldielands (his son); this was just a few months before he died. Walter of Minto (17th C.) another name for Walter of Harwood. Capt. Walter of Satchells (c.1613-c.1694) writer of ‘A True History of the Right Honourable name of Scot’, a family history in doggerel verse, which was published in 1688, reprinted in 1786 and again in 1894. The words were said to have been dictated to school boys from Hawick. He was probably son of Jean Scott of Thirlestane and Robert Scott of Satchells, and may have been born on a farm in Eskdalemuir; however, there is no documentary evidence about his parents, and another suggestion is that his mother was a daughter of Riddell of that Ilk. He spent his youth herding cattle, then joined the Duke of Buccleuch’s regiment at age 16 (probably in 1629) and supposedly served for 57 years. He was in the army of the Swedish King from about 1631 until long after the peace of Munster in 1648. However, it appears that he was not permanently overseas and spent some of that time in Scotland. He is probably the Walter, heir apparent of Robert of Satchells recorded in 1653 when he had a bond to desist from harming the Bailies of Selkirk. In 1654 he had an act of caution against Robert, son of Peter Scott of ‘Cowdhome’; his signature is recorded in this document. He is probably the Walter ‘of Satsheilles’ (although it looks like ‘falsheilles’) who paid tax on £200 in Lilliesleat Parish in the Land Tax Rolls of 1663. He was also owner there in the 1678 county valuation, the lands being valued at £256. He is said to have begun his metrical family history at about the age of 73 (or as sometimes claimed, 88!). It was first published in Edinburgh in 1688, with a second edition in 1776, a third published in Hawick in 1786 and a reprinted edition in 1894, with extensive notes by John G. Winning. The family lost the lands of Satchells earlier in the 17th century, and so it is unclear exactly where he lived when he retired (but the impression is that it was near to the old lands). There is little documentary evidence about whether he had a family, although Dr. William Scott of Stokoe says that after returning to Scotland he married a young woman with whom he had a daughter called Gustava (after King Gustavus of Sweden, in whose army he had served). He is probably the Walter of Satchells whose wife Jean Pringle, widow of William of Glenrath, is recorded in a deed connected with a factory in 1663 (suggesting perhaps that he was married twice). The only other known work attributed to him is a ballad about the Scotts of Whitslade printed in Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ – ‘Captain Walter Scot, An old Souldier and no Scholler, And one that can write nane But just the Letters of his Name’ [CWS] (often written ‘Scott’). Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1649. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Stevenson and their son Alexander was baptised in 1655. Walter of Tushielaw (17th C.) son of William, whom he succeeded as last Scott Laird of Tushielaw (but must have been still quite young at this time). He was served heir to the lands of Tushielaw, including ‘Comislaw’ in 1670. He acted as cautioner for the Commissioners of Excise in Selkirkshire in 1682. He is recorded in 1681 when his son Francis became a surgeon’s apprentice in Edinburgh and in 1686 when his daughter Jean was buried in Greyfriars, Edinburgh. He is recorded in bonds of 1682. He may be the ‘Laird of Tishilow’ recorded in 1700 when his brother John was entered as a Burgess of Edinburgh. He may also be the Walter ‘uncle to Tushilow’ who signed the marriage contract in 1678 between Elliot of Midlem Mill and Elliot of Harwood. His mother may have been Margaret Elliot and his uncle Francis Scott, who served as his cautioner in 1686. In 1688 he sold the family estate to Michael Anderson, who had married his sister. In 1689 he appeared before Parliament to give assurance that he would leave the country or live peaceably etc.; this suggests he was a supporter of the Jacobite cause, unlike his father. He may be the Scott of Tushielaw who in 1692 witnessed a sasine for Robert of Broadmeadows. Walter (17th C.) described as ‘in Boghall’ in a list of landowners and tenants of Hassendean Parish in 1666. He may have been ancestor of the later Walter of Boghall. Walter of Newton (17th C.) probably son of William, for whom John of Brieryyards was appointed tutor in 1638. He is probably the same Walter ‘of Chamberlayne Newton’ recorded in a 1643 valuation of lands in Hawick Parish, his lands valued at £266 13s 4d; his lands in Hassendean Parish were also valued at £1378 4s 4d in 1663. He is probably also the Walter of ‘Chamberlane Newtoun’ recorded in 2 bonds in 1663 and the Walter ‘of Newtoune’ in 2 other deeds in 1663. He is also recorded in a record relating to Hassendean Parish in 1666. He may be the Walter of Newton recorded paying the land tax on Lairhope, valued at £266 13s 4d in 1678 and paying tax on £1182 (presumably for Newton and neighbouring lands) in Hassendean Parish. He may have been succeeded by another Francis. Walter (17th C.) had a charter of the half merk land of ‘Mounkland’ in Clarilaw, from the Commendator of Melrose in about 1620. He is described as ‘in Monkland’ in a record of major residents of Hassendean Parish in the mid-1600s. He could be a descendant of John ‘of Monks-tower’ listed by Scott of Satchells. However, it is unclear how he might have been related to other local Scotts. Walter of Woll (17th C.) recorded in the 1643 county valuation as owner of ‘Wall’ in Ashkirk Parish. The lands were valued at £533. According to Keith Scott’s genealogy brothers Francis of Woll and James of Woll were owners at that time. It is therefore unclear how he fits into the family tree; perhaps he is another brother, who succeed between Francis and James, or else the name is an error. Walter ‘in Stobitcote’ (17th C.) local landowner of the mid-to-late 1600s, according to James Wilson. He was recorded in 1643 as owner of lands valued at £260 in Cavers Parish; these same lands were owned by the Duke of Buccleuch by 1678. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. Walter of St. Leonards and Whitehaugh (d.1685) son of Col. Walter of Hartwoodburn, he was a local landowner of the mid-to-late 1600s. He may be the Walter ‘in St. Leonards’ who became a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh (gratis) in 1656. He purchased the lands of Whitehaugh from Andrew Hay in 1656. In 1666 he gave his consent to a marriage contract of his nephew Walter to Bessie, daughter of William Scott of Horsleyhill; this included conveyance of Whitehaugh, ‘Westerhead’ (probably Wester Heap) and other lands to his nephew. He sold the estate of Whitehaugh to his nephew Walter of Headshaw in 1771 (perhaps when he came of age); however, it is unclear how the 2 Walter were connected. In 1669 he had a ‘wadset’ with William of Langhope (and his curator). He had a charter of Langhope in 1678 when he was referred to as ‘now of Langhope’. He may be the Walter of Langhope who paid the land tax in Selkirkshire in 1678. However, these lands were sold to John Scott (possibly his son) in 1688. In 1670 he was Bailie to George, Lord Ross of Halkhead and Melville for a sasine in Linnithgow and another sasine to William Scott in Manuel. He was recorded in a deed of 1673 being ‘of Saint Leonards’. Also in 1673 his sister Anna Helena was served area to the fifth parts of 'Waughtoun' in Prestonhaugh Parish belonging to him and his siblings Francis, Elizabeth and Margaret. He acted as Chamberlain (along with William Scott, Bailie of Dalkeith) for the Buccleuch estates in Dalkeith in 1673, and on his own for the years 1674–88. In 1675 he was cautioner for a bond by Sir John Nicholson to Walter, brother of Sir Lawrence Scott of Eyemouth. He is probably the 'Walter Scot Whithaugh' who witnessed a baptism for James Liddell in 1683. It is unclear exactly who he was or where the 'St. Leonards' refers to (most likely Edinburgh, but possibilities include lands in Ednam, Lauder or Peebles). His mother appears to have been Elizabeth Napier, widow of Walter of 'Harlawood', who had remarried to Sir Bryce Cochrane, and he proved her will in Edinburgh in 1677; he thus seems to have been the same man as Walter, son of Walter of Hartwoodburn. It is also possible he was closely related to the Scotts of Langhope: his wife was Janet Scott and although it is unclear to which branch she belonged, it is possible she was sister of William of Langhope. His children included John, who sold the estate of Langhope to Adam Scott of Bowhill in about 1692. His sister Anna Helena, who inherited their father's lands of Hartwoodburn from him in 1694. A later Walter paid the land tax on St. Leonards in St. Cuthbert's Parish Edinburgh in 1726; this could have been his son. Walter of Burnfoot on Teviot (17th C.) probably eldest son of Robert. He succeeded his grandfather Robert in 1667, becoming Laird of Burnfoot and Burnhead, which were still referred to in the service of heirs as Nether and Over Newhall. He is probably the Walter of Burnfoot who paid the 1663 and 1678 Land Tax Rolls on £312 in Hassendean Parish (presumably for Burnfoot). He is recorded in a deed of 1673 being 'of Burnefit in Tiviot'. It is hard to separate him from his near contemporary, Walter of Burnfoot on Ale (17th C.) probably eldest son of Robert. He is hard to separate from his near contemporary, Walter of Burnfoot on Teviot. He succeeded sometime before 1669. He was mentioned as a landowner in a record relating to Hassendean parish in 1666. He could be the Walter of Burnfoot recorded in the Land Tax Rolls of 1663, listed along with owners of lands in Wilton Parish, when he paid tax on £312. He was recorded in a deed in 1673 (separate from another for Walter of Burnfoot on Teviot), along with his son William. He (or the other Walter) was recorded in 1677 when his son Walter became a skinner's apprentice in Edinburgh. He was still Laird in 1686, when he was one of those to whom Scott of Satchells dedicated an address. He gained Hartwoodmyres from Sir William Scott of Harden about 1690. In about 1710 he stopped the perambulation of Wilton Common by Langlands of Langlands, Scott of Whitehaugh and Scott of Falmash, questioning their authority to march the boundaries of the Common (recounted later, with the exact year uncertain). He was probably the Laird of Burnfoot in Ashkirk Parish who paid tax on 3 hearths in 1694. He was involved in financial dealings with the Scotts of Thirlestane and was involved in legal action to recover money in the 1690s. His brother Francis married Isobel Scott. He may be the Walter of Burnfoot, son and heir of Robert, who inherited Burnfoot on Ale in 1692; however, it is possible there is another generation of Walters and Roberts represented here. He may be the Walter of Burnfoot on Ale whose nephew Walter inherited the lands and started living there in 1715. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Turnbull and their son John was baptised in 1677. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Henderson and their daughter Elspeth was baptised in 1673. Walter (d.c.1695) servant to Sir William Elliot, he was 'of Penchrist' in 1695 when his will was recorded. Walter (17th C.) tenant in Whitehillbrae in Cavers Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Walter (17th C.) tenant in 'Weimes' (presumably Weens) in 1687 when the will of his wife Bessie Scott is recorded. He is also recorded being 'of Weins' in 1688. He was probably related to John, who was at Weens in 1694. Walter (17th C.) recorded on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls at Borthaugh. Another Walter was listed as a 'cottar' there at the same time. He could be the Walter 'in Burtoch' whose will was recorded in 1692, and probably related to George 'in Bortoch', whose will is recorded in 1692, as well as to other Scotts associated with Borthaugh around that time, e.g. James. Walter of Headshaw and Whitehaugh (d.c.1691) purchased the lands of Whitehaugh from his uncle Walter of St. Leonards (probably the same as Walter of...
‘Harlawood’ or Hartwoodburn). There is a marriage contract in 1666 between him and Bessie, daughter of William Scott of Horsleyhill; this was with the consent of his uncle, suggesting that he was still a minor at that time, and the contract included conveying to him the lands of Whitehaugh, ‘Westerhead’ (probably Wester Heap) and others. He was the representative of the Scotts of Headshaw in 1671. It is possible he was the Walter ‘of Westerheape’ recorded in a tack in 1673. He was succeeded by his son William of Whitehaugh in 1692 (with William having sasine for the lands in 1697, confirming him as heir to his father). Other children were: Robert, minister of Roberton; John; May (or Mary); and Isobel, who succeeded her brother William. He could be the Walter of Whitehaugh recorded in 1684 when he and Robert of Greenhill were witnesses for a baptism in Hawick for carrier John Aitchison. His widow Bessie Scott, Lady Whitehaugh, had her will registered in 1696. Walter of Raeburn, ‘Wat Wudspurs’ (d bef. 1688). He was 3rd son of Sir William of Harden and Agnes Murray (‘Muckle Mou’d Meg’) and first of the Scotts of Raeburn. In 1661 he was served heir to his sister Janet. He was recorded in a deed in 1663. He is mentioned in a list of landowners of Hassendean Parish in 1666, and was a supporter of the suppression of the Parish. He acted as Chamberlain for the Scotts of Buccleuch in Dalkeith and Lugton. He is mentioned in documents of the Regality of Melrose in 1670–74. In the 1678 Land Tax Rolls he is recording paying tax for ‘Ilerig’ or ‘Flerig’ (presumably Eilrig) in Hawick Parish, as well as for Raeburn in St. Boswells (or Lessuden) Parish. He married Anne Isobel, daughter of William McDougall of Makerstoun (who may have been his cousin). He and his wife became Quakers (perhaps during the 1657 visit of George Fox to southern Scotland); as a result he was imprisoned in Edinburgh Tolbooth and had his children removed from him by Sir William (his brother). He was moved to Jedburgh Jail, where he remained for more than 4 years. His children were: William, who succeeded to the Raeburn estates; Walter, ‘Beardie’, who was the great-grandfather of Sir Walter Scott the writer; Isabel; and Christian. Walter (17th C.) merchant of Hawick, recorded marrying Marion Armstrong in Edinburgh in 1652. It is not known how he was related to any of the other contemporary Scotts. He may be the Walter, merchant in Hawick, whose will is recorded in 1687. Walter (17th C.) described as ‘our master stabler’ in the 1651 will of Francis, Earl of Buccleuch, when he was granted 200 merks yearly. He probably worked at Newark and Dalkeith, where the Earl mostly lived, but it is unclear where he came from. He could be the Walter who was owed money for a year’s fie from the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1661. Walter (17th C.) probably a son of John of Brieryyards. He had a sasine in 1656 for a ‘merk land in Hassendeanbank’, which was probably Cockerheugh, which his father purchased from Thomas Turnbull in 1656. He is probably the Walter of Cockerheugh who paid the land tax in Hassendean Parish in 1678. He may be the Walter who (along with John, probably his brother) witnessed baptisms for James of Brieryyards in Roberton Parish in 1681 and 1687, and perhaps another for James Martin in Appletreehall in 1682. Also in 1681 he gave a disposition to John in 1681, probably assigning Cockerheugh to his brother. He is probably the Walter Scott Breariyards listed on the east-side of Hawick on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. Walter (17th C.) said to have been eldest son of Walter, and last of the Scotts of Synton, who died unmarried. Instead he was probably eldest son of George, the last of the original Synton Lairds, with his brother being George of Boonraw. Walter ‘Poelsman’ (17th C.) Burgess of Hawick who is recorded in 1660 transferring land containing houses and yards to Robert Scott, son of the late James Scott, also Burgess of Hawick. His byname is written ‘Poelsman’, and the meaning is uncertain (although a connection with the coble ferry is not impossible). Walter (1644–93) of Highchester and of Harden, eldest son of Sir Gideon of Highchester, he became Earl of Tarras. He was baptised by John Langands of Wytton. He was married to Mary Scott, Countess of Buccleuch, when he was just less than 14 and she was 11, apparently after he was kidnapped on his way to school. The marriage took place in secrecy at the Chapel of Wemyss, and without proclamation, which caused much debate at the time. It was dissolved by the Commissary in 1659, but ratified again when she reached the age of 12. He and his wife the Countess of Buccleuch were recorded in a tack of 1663 (although he was deceased before then). He was occasionally referred to as Earl of Buccleuch, but this title was not generally accepted. Instead, in 1660, he was created Earl of Tarras, Lord Alemoor and Campcastell, for his lifetime only (this followed a custom of granting such an honour to any commoner who married a Countess; the names of the titles came from lands held by his family). However, his young bride died after only about 2 years, leading to years of dispute over his entitlements to life-rents etc.; he finally renounced his claims to Buccleuch lands only in 1678. In about 1667 he went abroad, travelling in France, Italy and the Netherlands, and keeping a diary of his voyage, which survives. On returning to Britain in 1670, he visited the court, attempting to recover some of the £4000 annuity due from his marriage contract, but to no avail (and it is said that his descendants in the schoolroom at Mertoun used to be asked to work out the compound interest on 2 centuries of arrears!). He succeeded to Harden in 1672 (although there is some confusion here), with a charter in 1677 and confirming charter in 1683. He paid the land tax on land valued at £1074 in Wilton Parish in 1678 (formerly belonging to Scott of Harden and Elliott of Stobs), as well as £600 for Borthwicksheilds. His lands in Selkirkshire were valued at about £850 at that time. In 1678 he was one of the Commissioners for Roxburghshire, charged with raising money for the King. He substantially renovated Harden House around 1691. The initials ‘W.E.T.’ carved on a fireplace at Harden probably refer to him (‘Earl of Tarras’). He was tried for his part in the ‘Ryehouse Plot’ of 1683 (when several Scottish noblemen plotted to exclude the Duke of York from succeeding to Charles II) and support for the Duke of Monmouth (husband of Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch), gave his confession and threw himself on the mercy of the King; he thereby implicated Robert Baillie of Jerviswood (who was hanged), as well as the Lairds of Philiphough and Polwarth. In 1684 he was called to give evidence in the trial of his uncle, Robert Baillie of Jerviswood. He was imprisoned for treason and had his estates confiscated. However, because of the ‘great benefit that did arise by his full and sincere confession’ he was rehabilitated, receiving a pardon in 1685, having his personal estate restored in 1686 and all his honours and lands restored in 1687 (including Roberton and Howcleuch Mill). He became one of the first to engage in the Revolution of 1688. He was also one of the main instigators of the petition that was successful in having Roberton Parish created in 1690, with the consequence that Hassendean Parish was suppressed. In 1690 he was one of the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire and for Selkirkshire. He gained part (perhaps half) of the lands of Minto in 1691 from Rachel Ingles, widow of John Turnbull. In 1692 he served as a Commissioner for assessing the rentals for the Duchess of Buccleuch. There is a letter from his sister Margaret in Hawick in 1693. He also survived a claim on the estates of Harden from his uncle Walter of Raeburn. He is recorded in 1694 having paid tax on 17 hearths at Harden House; he also held the estate of Borthwicksheilds and his lands in (the former) Hassendean Parish at that time included Hassendean Mains. In 1677 he married his second wife, Helen, daughter of Thomas Hepburne of Humbie; she became Countess of Tarras and appears to have remarried to Sir William Lockhart of Carstairs. They had sons: Gideon (b.1678) of Highchester, baptised in Edinburgh, who succeeded: Thomas (b.1681), who died young; Walter (b.1682) of Whitfield, who later succeeded to Harden on the death of his nephews Walter and John; William (b.1682), who died before 1710; and Francis (b.1691), who died young. Their daughters were: Helen; Elizabeth; Mary, who married a Drummond; Agnes; Ann; and Margaret, who married Thomas Gordon. The succession of Harden after his death is complicated, but it eventually went to his second son Walter. His son Thomas is recorded becoming a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1702 (he may be a later Thomas than the one born in 1681). His testament is recorded in 1693. Walter of Harwood, on Teviot (17th C.) eldest son of Robert and Beatrice Gledstains (and probably not closely related to the nearly contemporary Col. Walter of ‘Harwood’). He was also later known as Walter of Minto. Along with his father he is recorded in 1663 renouncing the burial place in the choir of the old kirk of Mertoun to Sir William Scott of Harden. In 1667 his brother William became an apothecary’s apprentice in Edinburgh. In 1669 he was served heir to his father in Glendinning and other lands in Westerkirk Parish. He was recorded in 1669 as Bailie of the Regality of Hawick, appointed by William, Lord Drumlanrig; there was a dispute between him and the Bailies of Hawick over whether he had the right to hold his courts in the Tolbooth. In 1671 he gave his consent for a disposition involving the lands of Hornshole between the Turnbulls of Minto and the Scotts of Brieryyards. He registered arms in 1672. In 1672 he was Sheriff-Depute when giving sasine to Sir Alexander Don of Newton for Altonburn and other lands. In 1672 he leased Branxholme Mains, Branxholme Park and the ‘Steill and Henhaugh’ from the Scotts of Buccleuch. He was recorded in several deeds in 1673. In 1673 he and his eldest son Robert purchased a large part of the Barony of Minto from John Turnbull of Minto. However, they appear to have resigned these lands, which were then sold to Walter Riddell (as confirmed in 1681). He served as Chamberlain to Scott of Buccleuch for ‘Teviotdalehead’ (i.e. Cavers, Hassendean, Hawick and Wilton Parishes) in at least the period 1671–77. In 1676 he served as caution for the Duke of Duchess of Buccleuch (and Monmouth) obtaining a licence to bring in 4500 cattle and 200 horses from Ireland to restock their farms in southern Scotland after the ‘Thirteen Drifty Days’; he was fined when it was found that some were more than a year old, such imports from Ireland being prohibited at that time. In 1677 he was recorded leasing the farm of Todshawhill, as well as Branxholme Mains and Park. In the 1678 Land Tax Rolls he is ‘of Harwood and falleness’ when he paid tax on £1550 13s 4d in Hawick Parish; these were probably the lands of Falnash and Harwood. In 1678 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire. He also served as Sheriff-Depute of Roxburghshire in the 1670s. He is probably the Walter of ‘Hairwood’ recorded in several bonds of 1682 and was served heir to his father Robert of Harwood in that year. William, his ‘brother-german’, became an apothecary’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1667. Another ‘brother-german’ may have been Gideon, who married Jeanette Elliot of Arkleton in 1677 (and was later ‘of Falnash’). He married Christian, daughter of Sir Andrew Ker. Their children included: Robert, the eldest son; Elizabeth, who married Gilbert Elliott of Stonedge in 1693; Walter (b.1673), baptised in Hawick; Andrew (b.1678), also baptised in Hawick; and George (b.1681), also baptised in Hawick, who became a barber’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1698. The witnesses in 1678 were Walter of Goldielands and Robert of Horsleyhill. It is said that the family was ruined by his wife’s extravagance and that Harwood was sold off. He is probably the Walter ‘in Harwood’ whose ‘natural Daughter’ married weaver John Jolly in Hawick in 1721. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Cook and their children included: John (b.1669); William (b.1675); James (b.1684); and Janet (b.1687). The witnesses in 1684 were Andrew Cook (probably related to his wife) and John Scott (perhaps related to him). Walter (17th C.) recorded as a glover on the list of Hawick men named in the 1673 trial following the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Walters. Walter and William are recorded separately as glovers on the same list. Walter ‘Reid Wat’ (17th C.) leased the farm of Chapelhill in at least the period 1671–77. He also leased part of Todshawhaugh in 1675. It is unclear whether his nickname referred to his hair colour or something else. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Walters, and could be descended from the earlier Walter of Chapelhill. Walter of Alton (17th C.) probably the Walter whose initials are recorded on the lintel of ‘Auld Alton’ house, along with those of ‘A.M.’ and the date 1675. He was married to Anna (or Emma), daughter of James Middlemas portioner of Raperlaw, as recorded when the pair were issued a ‘letter of horning’ in 1671. According to the marriage contract of 1669 he was brother of Francis of Gorrenberry; hence he may not have been directly related to the earlier Scotts of Alton. His children, baptised in Robertson Parish (when it still contained Hassendean) included: Margaret (b.1683); and Thomas (b.1684). The witnesses in 1683 were Adam and William Scott (who may have been relatives), and in 1684 were James Byers and Robert Davidson. He is probably the Walter of Alton who witnessed a baptism in 1687 for Robert Cook and Isobel Scott (to whom he may have been related). In 1678 he paid the land tax in Hassendean Parish (presumably for Alton), as well as for Raperlaw in Lilliesleaf Parish. He is probably the same as the Walter of Alton recorded later in the 17th century, although it is possible there were 2 separate men here. He may be the ‘Scot of Alston’ recorded in 1684 among Borders fined for their wives failing to attend parish church (i.e. for supporting Covenanters). He was probably the Walter ‘of Alton’ who in 1686 was granted by James VII a commission of the office of the Bailie of Regality of Hawick (this on account of Anna, Duchess of Buccleuch, the heritable Bailie, losing her right because of not taking ‘the test’). He was one of the heritors accused in 1690 of inciting the disturbance at the removal of the roof of Hassendean Kirk. He may be the same as ‘Walter Scott of Alton in Raperlaw’. In 1690 in Edinburgh he married Helen Fisher; this was either his second marriage or there were 2 different Walters. He was probably the Laird of Alton in 1694 when ‘Altone his hous’ was listed on the Hearth Tax rolls, with tax paid on 6 hearths. In 1698 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire. Walter (17th C.) recorded in a tack of 1673 being ‘of Westerheape’. This is presumably Wester Heap and hence he may be the same as Walter of Whitehaugh. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Wilson and their daughter Janet was baptised in 1672. Walter of Todrig (1630s–1722) eldest son of Thomas, whom he succeeded by 1691. He was recorded as son of Thomas in a deed in 1673. He acted as one of the ‘curators’ for Alexander Scott of Synton and was also tutor for Mark Pringle of Clifton (his cousin). He was probably the Walter ‘fear of Todrig’ who was recorded in 1682 as the nephew of Robert Pringle of Clifton’s testament. In 1690 he was a Commissioner of Supply for Selkirkshire along with Thomas (probably his father) and in 1704 he was again a Commissioner for Selkirkshire. He was still recorded in the discharge of a loan, along with William Elliot of Harwood in 1707. It seems likely he was the ‘Laird of Todrick younger’ who was recorded paying tax for 5 hearths at Eassendin in 1694. Also in 1694 he witnessed a baptism for John of Synton. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir Thomas Ker of Fairnilee in 1682. He had one son and 7 daughters: Thomas, who succeeded; Jane (or ‘Jean’), who married William Elliot, 3rd Laird of Harwood by post-nuptial contract in 1700 (she is described as ‘Mrs. Scott’ and so this may have been her second marriage); Elizabeth, who married Henry Elliot of Peel, brother of William Elliot of Harwood; Nelly, who married John Elliot, another brother of William Elliot of Harwood, and secondly married Rev. William Home; Janet, who married Mr. Purdon from Hawick; Christian, who married Edinburgh solicitor George Denniston; Margaret, who married David Scott of Merrylaw; and Violet (b.1691), baptised in Ashkirk, who married in Lothian. In the 1691 baptismal record he is already ‘of Todrige’ and his wife is ‘his lady’, with witnesses Robert Scott . . . (perhaps his brother) and Patrick Ker of Fairnilee (his brother-in-law). Walter ‘of Altencrofts’ (17th C.) local landowner of the mid-to-late 1600s, presumably connected with Alton Croft south of Hawick. He was probably different from Walter of Alton, although there may be confusion between the 2 farms. In 1678 he was ‘of Alton crofts & wynroun’ (or ‘Altoncrofts and Alintoun’) when his lands in Hawick Parish were valued at £110. In 1681 it was stated that ‘the sons and grandson of the deceased John Scott of Gorreberrie, and Walter Scott of Alontcrofts’ were among the potential heirs of Francis, Earl of Buccleuch. He seems to have witnessed a baptism in Hawick Parish (for John Wilson) in 1682. In 1688 he was baptismal witness for Charles Scott of Crumhaugh. In 1689 he had a daughter Janet (with Jean Dalglish) baptised, the record labelled ‘fornicators’; the witnesses were James Graham in Altoncroft and Robert Cook. He may be the Walter of Alton Croft whose will was recorded in 1696; he was son of Robert and had a sister Marion, whose son William Wright inherited Alton Croft. Walter (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish when it included Hassendean. He married Janet Grieve and their son William was baptised in 1687. The witnesses were Robert and William, who were probably either relatives or prominent Scots in the area. Walter (17th C.) said by Capt. Scott of Satchells to be a ‘shepherd swain’, living in 1688 when his book was published. His pedigree is given by Satchells: son of Adam, who was son of William, who was brother of Thomas in Wester Groundstone and son of Walter, who was son of Robert, who was son of Walter, the first Laird of Whitehaugh; however, there is no support for this, and it does not connect with other early recorded Lairds of Whitehaugh. Walter of Eilrig (17th C.) local landowner of the mid-to-late 1600s, according to James Wilson. He was presumably a descendant of Robert. Bailie Walter (d.bef. 1685) Hawick man, probably a merchant of some kind. Along with Walter Laing, he was a Town Councillor when the ‘Steeple Loft’ was built in St. Mary’s. In 1685 (by which time he was deceased) the pair had an agreement from the Town Council to be reimbursed for the costs of building this balcony. Bailie James (and his son Bailie Robert) may have been related to him. It is possible that he is the same as one of the other contemporary Walters. Walter of Chamberlain Newton (17th C.) recorded in 1693, along with his son, also Walter. In the service of heirs for John Ker of Cavers Carre, inheriting his uncle’s Lordship of Jeyburgh, is contained a reference to annual rentals of 300 merks, corresponding to 5000 merklands of Appletreehall, pertaining to the Walter Scotts, senior and junior ‘de Chamberland-Newtoun’. He may be the same as the Walter of Newton recorded in the 1660s, and his son could be the Walter of Newton recorded in the 1730s. Walter ‘the Butterman’ (17th C.) said to be ‘of the sort of Scotts of Robertowne’, he is recorded in the Town Book in 1694, saying he and his wife would leave the Town in connection to any theft ‘if bu the worth and value of ane horn spoon, be laid to our charge and proven’. It is unclear if he dealt in butter, or if his nickname referred to something else. Perhaps the same Walter is recorded in 1693 when his wife was found guilty of stealing ‘and little new pan'; as well as being fined, she was ordered to remain in the stocks until market day and then to sit at the Cross with the pan about her neck. Walter (17th C.) resident of Doorpool in Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Walter (17th C.) listed as resident at Outerside on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Walter (17th C.) tenant in Copshaw Park according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He is recorded in 1693 when his wife was found guilty of stealing 'and little new pan'. As well as being fined, she was ordered to remain in the stocks until market day and then to sit at the Cross with the pan about her neck. Walter (17th C.) listed on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls as resident of the lands of Castleton. He paid tax on 2 hearths. Walter (17th C.) resident at Branxholme Town according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Probably the same Walter was recorded as herd in Branxholme Town in 1703 when his son John was baptised in Hawick. The witnesses were James Ogilvie and John, both tenants in Branxholme. Walter (17th C.) listed at Branxholme among 'The poor in Haick Parich' on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He is listed separately from the Walter in Branxholme Town. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident at Whitchesters according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He may be related to Robert and John, who were also listed there. He is probably the tenant in Whitchesters recorded in the baptismal records for 1706. He is probably the Walter who (along with John) was in Whitchesters in 1713 when he witnessed a baptism for herd William Cowan. He married Janet Scott and their children included Margaret (b.1706), with witnesses being Alexander Thomson and Robert Scott, who were also tenants in Whitchester. Other children to couples of the same name include Margaret (b.1715), Agnes (b.1718) and John (b.1724). Walter (17th C.) smith who was listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. Walter (17th C.) listed among the 'Deficients in Hauick Parich' in 1694. He appears to be at 'The Tour of Hauick' and is 'called Poor' (which appears to be a nickname). He may be related to John 'called o the Tour' in Hawick in 1609. Walter (17th C.) shepherd at Drinkstone according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Perhaps the same Walter at Drinkstone witnessed a baptism (for Archibald Riddell in Borthaugh) in 1704. He may be the Walter, servant to William, tenant in Drinkstone, whose daughter Bessie was baptised in Wilton Parish in 1709, and who lived at Leaheads. Walter ‘Chief’ (17th/18th C.) listed as renter of half the farm of Overhall in 1694, with Adam leasing the other half. The pair continued to rent half of the farm in 1696 and 1698. He must have been related to this Adam, as well as to the James, who was leasing half of Overhall in 1690 and 1692 (for whose widow, Margaret, he served as cautioner). His nickname may have given rise to the name for the ‘Chief’s Pool’ in the Teviot near there; we can only speculate about whether it might have been his favourite swimming hole or fishing spot. James ‘the Chief’, who died in 1778, was surely a descendant, perhaps his son; this James was born in about 1700 and described in 1764 how he was at Overhall from his birth until 1741, after his father was deceased. Walter of Langshaw (d.c.1695) son of Francis and grandson of Patrick of Kirkstyle. Sir John of Ancrum was his uncle. In 1690 he was served heir to his father's lands of Falnash, Tanlaw Naze, ‘Calfshaw’ and ‘Langshaugh wa- ter’ in the Parish of Hawick. In 1695 his brother Thomas was served heir to their father's lands of Langshaw, suggesting that he may have been deceased by then. Walter (17th/18th C.) tenant in Wauchope. He is described as 'in Wauchope' in 1665 when he witnessed a document relating to Harwood lands and in 1677 when he witnessed the 'bond of provision' for Sir Gilbert Elliot of Stobs. He was a cautioner for Gilbert Elliot of Stonedge in 1688 and 1693 and witness to a bond by Dame Magdalene Nicholson (widow of Stobs) in 1690. He was recorded being 'in Wauchope' in a bond of 1682. There was a 'letter of horn- ing' for him and Henry Elliot of Harwood by Archibald Douglas of 'Garvat' (Gervald perhaps) in 1695. In 1700 probably the same Walter was also witness to the marriage contract between William Elliot of Harwood and Jean Scott of Todrig. He married Janet, daughter of Walter, 3rd Laird of Nether Bonchester, who was sister of James, writer in Jedburgh. Their sons were: Adam, tenant in Wauchope and purchaser of Stanedge; and William, later of Stanedge, who was Chamber- lain to Scott of Buccleuch. There is no reason to believe he was directly connected with the later Scotts of Wauchope. He is probably the Scott of Wauchope commemorated on an elaborately carved through-stone once visible in Hobkirk kirkyard, erected by Thomas of Stonedge in 1741; the inscription apparently indicated that he was a relative of Scott of Buccleuch. Walter ‘Auld Wat’ (17th/18th C.) recorded in 1705 when he witnessed a baptism in Hawick Parish for William Douglas of Bonjedward. The entry appears to say ‘called old Watt’. He may have been related to Douglas’ wife Beatrix Scott. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded in Appletreehall in 1705 and as tenant there in 1711. His children included Walter (b.1705) and William (b.1711). He was probably related to William, who was also tenant in Appletreehall in 1711. Walter (d.1717) Beadle of Hawick Kirk. In 1708 he was the ‘Beddell’ who presented the illegitimate child of Margaret Brydon and William Scott to be baptised. He is recorded receiving his salary in the first year of the oldest existing Session financial records in 1711, but it is unknown how much earlier he had served. He was ‘Beddell of ye parish’ in 1715 when he witnessed a posthumous baptism for a child of merchant Thomas ‘Huishon’. In 1716 he was recorded as ‘beddel in Hawick’ when he witnessed the baptism of Robert ‘Old Mortality’, son of Walter Paterson of Burnflat; it seems that he might have been related to Walter Paterson’s wife Margaret Scott. He also witnessed another couple of baptisms in 1716. His son John succeeded him as Beadle at the end of 1717. He was listed as deceased and ‘sometimes Beddell’ in 1719 when his daughter Agnes married gardener Andrew ‘Colwort’ (or Collier). Walter of Nether Bonchester (1650–1733) eldest son of Thomas of Nether Bonchester. He succeeded his father as 3rd Laird in 1680, with the charter and sasine for Nether Bonchester being issued by the superior William Kerr of Abbotrune in 1681. He was witness to a sasine of 1693 for Gilbert Elliott of Stonedge. He also witnessed a sasine for Hobburn in 1693. He was listed on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. In 1699 he was entered as a Burgess of Hawick, with the payment being in the form of one of his best ash trees for the Town to use to rebuild the bell-house of the steeple of St. Mary’s. In 1720 he witnessed a baptism for cooper William Turnbull. He married Jane Turnbull and their children included: Walter, who succeeded; James, who was a writer in Jedburgh; John, who was transported to America (and may sometimes be confused with John of Ashtrees); and Janet, who married Walter Scott, farmer in Wauchope. The Hobkirk Parish ‘mort-cloth’ is recorded being used for his burial. Walter (17th C.) recorded as tenant in Wauchope in 1681, when he had a bond with Walter Lorraine in Harden, loaning him £3, signed at Hartshaughmill. He is probably the same as one of the contemporary Walters. Walter ‘Beardie’ or ‘Bearded Wat’ (c.1653–1729) 2nd son of Walter, 1st Laird of Raeburn. Having Jacobite sympathies, it is said that his nickname came from a vow not to shave until the Stuarts were restored. It is said that he was a good classical scholar. He was listed as ‘brother to Raeburn’ in 1695 when he contributed £200 to the Darien Scheme. He was a guardian to his nephew Walter, 3rd Laird of Raeburn. He is probably the Walter, brother of the deceased William of Raeburn who in 1727 was listed among the people owing money to the deceased William Nisbet of Dirleton. He married Margaret, daughter of Campbell of Silvercraigs. Their children were: Walter, farmer at Baillieknowe; Robert of Sandyknowe, who was grandfather of Sir Walter of Abbotsford; William, farmer at Easter Muirdean, near Kelso; Mary; Christian; and Margaret. Walter of West Port (b.c.1670) possibly 2nd son of Walter of Goldielands. He is probably the Walter ‘westport’ recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. It is possible he was the ‘Walter Scott Sone to Goldielands’ who rented the farm of Castlehill from the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1696. He married Jean, daughter of Walter Scott of Crumhaugh in 1701 (possibly a cousin, or otherwise this may be the only connection with the Crumhaugh and Goldielands Scotts). At the end of that year their son Walter was born, and he was to become the first Scott of Wauchope. It seems reasonable to assume that he was related to the other West Port Scotts, including Hawick’s second known Cornet, but the precise relationship is unclear. He is probably the Walter, son and heir of the deceased Walter of West Port, merchant in Hawick, who is recorded in 1716, with a bond he had in 1709 with Walter Scott (uncle of Walter of Crumhaugh) for the lands of Currie cleugh in Cavers Parish. These generations are quite uncertain; he may be the same as Walter ‘in Crumhaugh and Goldielands’, or perhaps distinct, but partly confounded with him in some accounts. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick. His son Robert was baptised in 1699, with witnesses Walter Scott and Thomas Beattie. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of How pasley. His son James was baptised in Robertson Parish in 1703. He may be the same as one of the other Walters. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living in Cavers itself in 1702 when his son James was baptised. Perhaps the same Walter in Cavers had a daughter Isabel baptised in 1709. Walter ‘Laird’ (17th/18th C.) recorded in 1707 when he witnessed a baptism for weaver Adam. He was probably related to James, ‘Laird’ (Hawick’s first known Cornet, perhaps his brother), as well as John, Robert and the earlier James, who were all also nicknamed ‘Laird’. He may be the son of Thomas who was baptised in Hawick in 1678. Walter (17th/18th C.) tenant in Nether Southfield. In 1708 he witnessed a baptism for William Hood, weaver in Nether Southfield and another for John Dryden, smith in Newmill. He was also tenant there (along with James) in about 1710, as attested in evidence given regarding the state of Hawick’s Common in 1767. In 1713 he and James, both in Nether Southfield, witnessed a baptism for another James Scott in the same place. In 1718 he witnessed a baptism for James, who was also tenant in Nether Southfield. He may be the Walter who in 1720 witnessed a baptism for William Martin in Over Southfield. He is probably the Walter who (along with James) witnessed a baptism in 1726 for John Elliot, cooper in Nether Southfield. His daughter Margaret was baptised in 1709, with witnesses Dand and James Gray from Whitlaw. Walter (17th/18th C.) recorded in Binks in Cavers Parish in 1709 when he married Isobel Beattie. His wife was from Hawick Parish and was ‘saevtrix’ to Bailie Graham. Walter (17th/18th C.) recorded as tenant in Alton Croft in about 1710 according to evidence given in 1767 about the pasturing of livestock on Hawick Common. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was a servant in Acreknowe in 1722. In 1711 he married Helen ‘Boa’ (or Bowie). Their children included William (b.1713), John (b.1719) and Walter (b.1722). Bessie (b.1724), with the mother’s name just given as ‘Helen’, may also be his child. The witnesses in 1722 were Bailies Robert Ruecastle and Walter Purdom. Walter of Merrylaw (17th/18th C.) recorded as ‘Walter Scott of Mirrielaw’ when he rented part of Whithope in 1698. He was surely related to the slightly earlier William and the later Walter. He could be the Walter who was at Whithope in 1703 when his daughter Janet was baptised in Roberton Parish. He was an elder of Roberton Kirk according to parish records from 1707. In 1713 he was ‘of merrila in the parish of Robertoun’ when one of his children was baptised in Hawick (suggesting that he was indeed farming at Whithope). In 1709 he witnessed a baptism for Robert Laidlaw in Haregrain. Probably the same Walter ‘of merriel’ married Margaret Grieve and had a son Walter, who was baptised in Hawick in 1713. The witnesses in 1713 were Water Grieve in Branxholme Park (perhaps related to his wife) and William Ogilvie in Craik. Walter (1670–bef. 1741) described as ‘in Crumhaugh’, and ‘in Goldielands’, he was 2nd son of Walter and Janet Glendinning. He was thus brother to Charles and uncle to Walter of Crumhaugh and Howpasley (with whom he is easily confused). In 1700 he was ‘in Goldielands’ when he witnessed a baptism for Walter Martin in Alton Croft. He is probably the Walter ‘in Crumhaugh’ who (along with Michael) witnessed a baptism in 1705 for innkeeper William called ‘of Goldielands’ (who was probably related to him). He also witnessed baptisms in 1707 for William Henderson, younger in Flex and Glover James Scott, and in 1708 for Robert, tenant in Blackcleuch (which his family probably owned at that time) and for Walter Grieve, tenant in Colterscleuch. In 1709 his servant James Hogg got married. He may be the Walter ‘of Crumheugh’ recorded in a 1710 land valuation of Hawick Parish, when his lands were valued at 400 merks. In 1712 he was ‘in Goldielands’ when (along with Andrew Riddell) he witnessed a baptism for Walter Glendinning. In 1716 he was described as ‘now in Hawick’ when he had a sasine for Curriescleugh in Cavers Parish, which he had been promised by Walter Scott of West Port (who was surely a relative, but demonstrating that they were not the same man). He was probably the Walter ‘of Crumhaugh’ who in 1716 witnessed a baptism for William Elliot, tenant in Crumhaugh. In 1717 he and Gideon of Falnash witnessed a baptism for John Watson, Clerk to the Rgality. In 1720 he was ‘uncle to Mr Scott of Crumhauch’ when he witnessed a baptism for another Walter, tenant in Newbigging. In 1721 he was ‘uncle to Crumhauch’ when he witnessed a baptism for weaver William Crozier (with his nephew Walter ‘of Croamhauch’ also being a witness in the same year). In 1728 he was granted a disposition by James Burn for the lands in Hawick called ‘Croftangry’. He may be the Walter who in 1729 witnessed a baptism (along with John Elliot) for William Elliot in Crumhaugh. He is probably the Walter of Crumhaugh who in 1734 was one of those appointed by the Hawick Council to sort out the rebuilding of the Bailies’ seat in St. Mary’s. He is probably the Walter who in 1731 witnessed a baptism for Walter Scott, tenant in Newbigging and Anna Scott (his daughter). He may be the ‘Walter Scott, Crumhaugh, a Councellour’ who was mentioned in 1735 as one of the keepers of the keys to the Charter Chest. He firstly married Christian, daughter of Robert Bennet of Chesters, and she died in 1708, aged 34; her memorial stone was examined by her great-grandson Walter Scott of Wauchope in 1851, and uncovered during renovations to St. Mary’s Kirk about 1863. Their children included: Anna, the eldest daughter, who married Walter Scott, tenant in Newbigging; Charles (b.1696), who died young; Walter (b.1700), baptised in Hawick, who succeeded and became the 1st Laird of Wauchope (although he appears sometimes to be confused with Walter, son of Walter of West Port); Joan (or Jean, b.1702); Robert (b.1704), baptised in Hawick, who became tenant in Crumhaugh and died without issue; Margaret (b.1706); and Charles (b.1708), who also died without children. The witnesses in 1696 were Charles (probably his brother) and Henry Orrock, in 1700 were Walter of Crumhaugh (his father) and Walter’s son William (i.e. his brother), in 1702 were Robert of Tandlaw and John ‘called Uncle John’, who were presumably relatives, and in 1704 were Walter and James Glendinning. The baptism in 1706 was in Ancrum Parish, where he is described as son-in-law to the Laird of Chesters. The 1708 baptism in Hawick was witnessed by carrier David Minto and Andrew Riddell in Goldielands. His second wife was Elizabeth (or Bessie) Scott, the marriage being recorded in Hawick Parish in 1709; she was sister to Walter Scott of Cockerkheugh, and he was described as ‘Uncle to Crumhaugh’. Their children included Walter (b.1712), a wright, who was deceased by 1743. The witnesses in 1712 were Andrew Riddell (tenant in Goldielands) and Walter Glendinning. His wife Elizabeth occupied the mill at Croft Angry as ‘liferrentix’, and her step-son Robert eventually inherited it; she could be the ‘Leadye Croumach’ recorded at Clarilaw on the 1694 Hearth rolls. Walter of Clarilaw (17th/18th C.) probably son or nephew of Robert of Lies. Some time before 1700 he purchased Ashieburn, which became the seat of this branch of the family. He was succeeded by his son William, He could be the Walter recorded at Clarilaw on the 1694 Tax rolls. Walter of Shielwood (17th/18th C.) eldest lawful son of James of Shaw’s and Marion Scott of Shielwood. He is recorded in 1705. In 1712 he and his father sold Shielwood to Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto (and his son Gilbert). It is unclear what subsequently happened to him. Walter ‘Black Walter’ (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. His nickname is recorded in several baptisms. He married Christian Simpson and their children included: Margaret (b.1701); Isobel (b.1703); Christian (b.1707), a daughter; Margaret (b.1710); and Isobel (again, b.1711). The witnesses in 1707 were Bailie George Martin and baker William Hodge. Some other children baptised around the same time may also be his. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen ‘Betie’ (presumably Beattie) and their children included John (b.1703) and Margaret (b.1709). Walter (17th/18th C.) recorded in Lymiecleuch in 1708 when he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Robert, tenant in Blackcleuch. Walter (17th/18th C.) servant to Archibald Douglas of Cavers. In 1715 he was made a Burgess and Guild Brother of Glasgow (gratis), shortly after his master. Walter (1682–1766) 2nd son of William, who settled at Milsington. He moved to Ginwood in 1712. He re-leased the lands of Ginwood from the Buccleuch Estates in 1744. In 1723 he married Jane, daughter of Philip Scott of Oakwood, and she died in 1776, aged 74. Their children (mostly baptised in Robertson) included: William (b.1724), who married his cousin Elizabeth; Philip (b.1727); perhaps another son, whose name is not known; Jean (b.1732); Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’, b.1734), who married her cousin William; Walter (b.1736), who succeeded as tenant with his brother Thomas; and Thomas (b.1742), co-tenant of Ginwood with his brother. Janet of ‘Greenwood’, who married Robert Elliot, tenant in Hermitage, may have been another daughter. Grisell (b.1726), daughter to Walter in Ginwood, was probably also his daughter. Walter of Woll (d.1744) eldest son of John of Woll and Agnes Scott of Harwood. His brother was Gideon, tenant in Ladhope. He was ‘younger, of Wool’ in 1695 when he contributed £100 to the Darien Scheme (along with his brother Gideon). He was ‘y[ounger] of Woall’ in 1696 when he rented the farm of Whithope in the Borthwick valley from the Duchess of Buccleuch. He was ‘younger of Wooll’ when on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1698 and in 1701 was ‘younger of Woll’ when he had a bond with Sir William Scott of Harden. In fact his father resigned the lands of Woll to him when he married in 1694. He served as Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch for the lands of Ettrick Forest for at least the years 1702–14, taking over from John of Woll (presumably his father). He was ‘younger of Wooll, bailie to the duchess of Buccleugh’ in 1704 when he was on the Commission of Supply for Selkirkshire and was also probably the ‘younger of Well’ on the Commission for Roxburghshire in the same year along with his father John. And along with Walter Scott of Harden he gave 1,000 merks to Alexander Orrock in 1705, this forming part of the Orrock Bequest for Hawick Grammar School. He was presumably a heritor of Hawick Parish. He was also a ‘curator’ for Alexander Scott of Synton. He received Borthwickshiel and Robertson through a ‘wadset’ with Gideon Scott of Highchester in 1705 and he was proprietor of these lands in 1720, when it is recorded that he arranged for an exchange of grazing rights for the convenience of the minister of Robertson. He was still ‘younger of Woll’ when he had a court case with Gideon of Highchester over ownership of lands, with the adjudication in 1707 ruling that Harden, Todshaw, Borthwick Mains, Robertson, Howcleuch, Alemoor belonged to him (as well as lands elsewhere). In 1711 he was one of the original members of the short-lived ‘Honest Country Club’. He was probably the Walter ‘of Waals’ who had a bond with Walter of Whitfield and William of Thirlestane in 1715, and ‘of Wool’ in 1724–26 when the 3 were tutors of John Scott of Harden and made claims on the Harden estate. In 1727 he was listed among the people owing money to the deceased William Nisbet of Dirleton. He may have been the Walter ‘of Woall’ recorded in 1737 in a document relating to sums owed by the late Duchess of Buccleuch. In 1694 he married Elizabeth (or ‘Eliza’), daughter of Robert Scott of Horsleyhill. He had 4 sons and 2 daughters: William, who succeeded and was Sheriff of Selkirkshire; Robert, baptised in 1696 (not 1676, as stated in some genealogies) and settled in Tomneymore (or Tamnymore), Londonderry; John (b.1702), baptised in Ashkirk; Walter (b.1711), baptised in Selkirk; Isobel; and Jean. In 1711 he was living ‘at present’ in Selkirk, where his son was baptised by the Rev. Lithgow of Ashkirk; the witnesses included Andrew Pringle, brother to the Laird of Clifton and Haining and several town officials of Selkirk. Walter (17th/18th C.) cooper in Hawick. In 1711 he witnessed a baptism for carrier Henry Paterson. He may be the same as one of the other Walters. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident at Alemoor. He was recorded there in 1711 and 1713, was at Easter Alemoor in 1716 and at Alemoor again in 1720. He was ‘younger in Almure’ in 1713, suggesting that his father was also Walter. His children, baptised in Robertson Parish, included: Walter (b.1711); Janet (b.1713); Margaret (b.1714); Christian (b.1716); twins Thomas and Bessie (b.1717); and Robert (b.1720). Walter (17th/18th C.) recorded being ‘in Hawick’ in 1731 when his son Walter became a wright’s apprentice with Alexander Turnbull in Edinburgh. Walter (17th/18th C.) servant to Hawick minister Rev. Robert Cunningham. He is recorded in 1720 as ‘servitor to Mr Rot Cunningham’, the Minister of Hawick. This was when he witnessed 2 baptisms (along with John Scott, the Beadle) for ‘Fornicators’ and another (along with surgeon William Cunningham) for weaver John Anderson. Probably the same servant Walter (along with William, son to Rev. Cunningham) witnessed baptisms in 1720 for Walter Henderson, for shoemaker Robert Porteous, for weaver Robert Jolly and for merchant Andrew Turnbull and witnessed at least a handful of other baptisms in 1722. Some baptisms were witnessed along with Beadle John, who may have been related to him. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. In 1721 he married Agnes Gledstains in Robertson Parish. He could be the Walter in Milsington in 1722 when his son Archibald was baptised in Robertson. Walter (18th C.) resident of Newmill. He married Helen Rae and their daughter Helen was baptised in Hawick in 1726. The witnesses were Robert and William Thomson. He is probably the Walter who (along with Robert Thomson) witnessed a baptism for William Thomson in 1731. Walter (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was recorded at Wester Alemoor in 1734. His children included Helen (b.1733) and Mungo (b.1734). He could be the same as the earlier Walter at Alemoor, if this was a second marriage: otherwise he was that Walter’s son or other close relative. Walter (b.1696) eldest son of Walter ‘Beardie’, and grandson of the 1st Laird of Raeburn. He became tenant farmer at Baillieknowe. He married Janet, daughter of surgeon Thomas Inglis. Their children were: Robert (b.c.1731); William (b.c.1752); Mary; and Janet. It is said that this branch of the family emigrated to America. Walter (17th/18th C.) miller in Selkirk. In 1727 he was ‘late tacksman of the mills of Selkirk’ when he had a receipt for money he gave to repair the mills of the Burgh of Selkirk. Walter (18th C.) tenant in Eldinhope in 1737 when he was recorded in a legal case in Selkirk. Walter (17th/18th C.) tenant in Newbigging. He is probably the Walter in Newbigging who witnessed baptisms in 1708 for John Wilson in Newbigging, in 1711 for Adam Laidlaw in Southfield, in 1713 and 1714 for James Sanderson in Newbigging, in 1714 for William Williamson in Whitchesters and John Hobkirk also in Whitchesters, in 1718 for John Nichol (who lived at Allanhaugh Mill), and in 1719 for weaver John Stevenson. He is recorded ‘in Newbigging’ in 1723 when he became an elder of Hawick Kirk. He was tenant in 1726–32 when James Robson was shepherd at Newbigging. He was also a Burgess of Hawick. He could be related to James, who was tenant at Newbigging a century earlier and Walter, who was there about a generation later. In 1716 he married Anne (or Anna), eldest daughter of Walter Scott, uncle to the Laird of Crumhaugh. Their children included: Walter (b.1720); John (b.1724); Janet (b.1725); Bessie (b.1726); and Robert (b.1731). Other children probably born to the same parents were Robert (b.1717), Christian (b.1722) and Helen (b.1723). The 1720 baptism was witnessed by Walter, uncle to Walter of Crumhaugh (his father-in-law) and James Davidson in Newbigging, the 1722 baptism by Gilbert Elliot in Winningtonrig and James Grieve in Commonside, the 1725 baptism by ‘Mr. Venice preacher’ and Gilbert Elliot in Winningtonrig, and the 1731 baptism by another Walter Scott and John Glendinning. He may be the Walter in ‘New... ’ who witnessed a baptism for Robert in Branxholme in 1728. Walter (17th/18th C.) recorded being paid in 1725 ‘for making the lifting brod’ (i.e. collection plate) in the Bailies’ Loft of St. Mary’s. And in 1734 he put up the ‘brest in the bilife’s loft’. He was either a joiner, or possibly this was the contemporary Beadle of the same name. Walter (17th/18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He was a member of the Council when it granted a bond (dated 1710, but recorded in the Town Book in 1711) to provide money for the Master of the new Grammar School. He witnessed a baptism for John Scott ‘Whitegates’ in 1712 and for candlemaker George Turnbull in 1713. It is possible he was the Walter who witnessed a baptism for his brother shoemaker John in 1722. He was a Councillor in 1727 when he was ordered to refrain from using the ‘counsellors’ seat in the bailies’ loft, in respect of his twice breaking prison’ after being convicted ‘of a riot, and arrested’; he may also have been removed as a Councillor. It is possible that the same shoemaker Walter witnessed a baptism for merchant Robert (along with merchant George) in 1747. Probably the same shoemaker married Margaret Scott (also from Hawick Parish) in Hawick in 1704 and their children include John (b.1705). He also witnessed a baptism for carrier James Boyd in 1705. It seems likely that the same shoemaker married Margaret Davidson (from Wilton Parish) in Hawick in 1706, with children James (b.1707), Margaret (b.1709), Francis (b.1712), Robert (b.1714), Isabel (b.1716), William (b.1718), Elizabeth (b.1720), John (b.1721) and Mary (b.1725). The witnesses in 1707 were John ‘Whitegates’ and writer William Rucastle, in 1712 were John ‘whitegates’ and tailor John ‘casue end’, in 1714 (the single witness) was Henry Orrock, in 1718 were glover John and shoemaker Robert Oliver, in 1720 were wigmaker John Norville and John in Ormiston, and in 1725 were glover John (again) and wigmaker Robert Miles. Walter (18th C.) married Helen Turnbull in Hawick Parish in 1721. Their children included Margaret (b.1727). Walter (18th C.) resident of Fenwick in 1722. He married Jean Turnbull and their children included William (b.1722) and Jean (b.1728). The witnesses in 1722 were gardener Andrew ‘Colwort’ and wright Walter Dalgleish. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Rae and their children included Helen (b.1726). Walter of Bonchester (d.1743) son of Walter of Nether Bonchester. He farmed along with his father until 1724, when they ended their partnership. He then farmed at Wauchope along with his brother-in-law Walter Scott, tenant in Wauchope. He succeeded his father as 4th Laird in 1733. In 1726 at Doorpool he married Helen, only daughter of Adam Turnbull, tenant at Doorpool; she was sister of Rev. William Turnbull, minister of Abbotrule. Their children included: Walter (b.1727), who died young of smallpox; Thomas of Bonchester (b.1729), who succeeded and sold the Bonchester estate; Adam (b.1731), who went to the West Indies and married Mrs. Thorpe; Margaret (1733–38); Rev. William (b.1735), minister at Abbotrule and Southdean; Agnes (b.1735), twin of William, who remained unmarried and lived at Gallahill, near Jedburgh; Janet (b.1737), who married John Rutherford, saddler in Jedburgh; Helen (b.1740), who died young; and Walter (b.1741). He was recorded in a document of 1756 (by which time he was surely deceased), between his 2nd (surviving) son Adam and Rev. William Turnbull of Abbotrule (his brother-in-law). His farm diary from the period 1730–43 is in the National Library of Scotland. Walter of Harden (d.1719) elder son of Gideon of Highchester and Harden. He inherited the Harden and Highchesters estates following the death of his father in 1707 (although some accounts claim he inherited the estates from his cousins). He must have been a minor when he succeeded, since the estates were run by his ‘tutors’ in the period 1710–19, their ‘sederunt books’ being in the National Archives. He continued to be referred to as ‘of Highchester’ until the death of his cousin Robert in 1710, when he succeeded to Mertoun and the rest of the family estates (becoming the 8th of Harden). He appears to have become bankrupt, resulting in the sale in early 1719 of his lands of Harden, Mabonlaw, Highchesters, Todshaw, Borthwickshiel, Robertton, Howcleuch, Easter and Wester Alemoor and others. On his death Harden passed to his brother John. Walter (17th/18th C.) tenant in Hawick Shiel. He is recorded in 1704 when he witnessed a baptism for Robert (perhaps a relative), who also lived there. He was also at Hawick Shiel in 1705 and in 1706 when he witnessed a baptism for John Irvine in Hawick Shiel. He and Simon Miller were described as tenants in Hawick Shiel in 1706 when they witnessed a baptism for James Davidson, also tenant in Hawick Shiel. He was in Hawick Shiel in 1709 when his own child was baptised. He was joint tenant of Hawick Shiel around 1710, along with Simon Miller; this was attested in evidence given regarding the state of Hawick’s Common in 1767. He and Walter Nixon were tenants there in 1712 when they witnessed a baptism for William Hislop. He is probably the tenant called Scott mentioned in 1717 when he had ‘ploghd. up an march corner hott standing upon the nortt side of said Common, opposite to the towm of Nethr Southfield’. In 1718 he and Walter Nixon (both recorded as tenants in Hawick Shiel) witnessed a baptism for Matthew Charlton. He married Agnes Nichol and their children included: Elizabeth (b.1705); and Walter (b.1709). The witnesses in 1705 were Gilbert Elliot in Nether Southfield and glover John Hart and in 1709 were Walter Nixon in Hawick Shiel and Dand Gray in Whitlaw. Walter (d.bef. 1738) doctor in Hawick. He is described as an ‘apothecarie in Hawick’ and ‘chirurgeon’ in some baptismal records. For example, in 1707 he witnessed a baptism for John Turnbull, ‘oeye’ to Rev. James Kerr of Abbotrule. He married Sara Middleton and their children included: Hugh (b.1703); Gideon (b.1706), perhaps the druggist in Hawick; Mary (b.1710); James (b.1719); and Elizabeth (b.1723). The witnesses in 1703 were Francis Gledstains of Whitlaw and William Shiel in Stobicote, in 1706 were Gideon of Falnash (who may therefore have had the child named in his honour) and Adam Elliot of Arkleton, in 1719 were John Watson (Clerk to the Regality) and Thomas Shiel (‘apprentis to ye sd Walter’) and in 1723 were ‘Mr’ Charles Telfer and ‘Mr’ John Purdom. He is described as ‘surgeon in Haick’ in 1738, when his son William became a tailor’s apprentice in Edinburgh. He may be the same Walter (with no occupation given) who was still alive in 1731 when his son Walter became a wright’s apprentice in Edinburgh. He was probably the surgeon in Hawick whose daughter Sara married another Walter (eldest son of Philip, Chamberlain to Scott of Harden) in an ‘irregular marriage’ in 1720. It is unclear how he might have been related to other local Scotts, e.g. James, who was also a surgeon in Hawick at the same time. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Todshaw in 1710 when his daughter Janet was baptised and in 1715 when his son John was baptised. There are lots of other children baptised in Roberton Parish around the same time who could be his. Walter (17th/18th C.) married Jean Lillico in Hawick in 1712. Their children included Bessie (b.1713) and William (b.1715). Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was recorded at Woodburn in 1716 and 1720. His children included John (b.1716) and Walter (b.1720). Walter (b.1683/4) born in Drinkstone, which he left when he was 20. He was tenant of one quarter of Burnfoot on Ale in about the 1740s. In 1764 he was ‘indweller in Hawick, aged 80’, when he gave brief evidence regarding the former use of Wilton Common. He was also one of the men who perambulated the boundaries in 1764 and recalled the marches being walked in about 1705. He may be the same as one of the other Walters. Walter of Crumhaugh and Howpasley (1689–bef. 1743) son of Charles and Rachel Langlands. He is easy to confuse with his uncle Walter, whose name was also associated with Crumhaugh. In 1717 he inherited the lands of Crumhaugh, Howpasley and others, which had been in ‘non-entry’ for 18½ years; this suggests he was a minor when he succeeded his grandfather. He may be the Walter of Crumhaugh (unless that was his uncle) who witnessed a baptism for miller Robert Elliot in 1718. He was recorded as a Hawick Parish heritor in 1718. He is probably the Walter ‘of Crumhauch’ who (along with Bailie George Martin) witnessed a baptism for workman William Inglis in 1721; in the same year the other Walter ‘uncle to Crumhauch’ also acted as witness to a baptism. He also witnessed a baptism in Wilton in 1721 (along with Gideon of Falnash) for Robert of Burnhead and his wife Agnes Scott and others in Hawick in 1722 for miller Robert Elliot, for Town Clerk Walter Gledstains and for John Glendinning in Whitchesters. He was living at Midshiels in 1722 when one of his children was baptised. A rent book exists for the period 1717–45, with him as landlord to John Moffat of Garwald, so he must also have owned property elsewhere (unless this was a different Crumhaugh). He is probably the Laird of Crumhaugh who lived at Fenwick in the earlier part of the 18th century (according to information given in 1767). He could be the Walter who in 1728 witnessed a baptism for Archibald Paterson, tenant in Fenwick. In 1716 in Cavers Parish, he married Beatrix (or Beatrice), eldest daughter of Gideon Scott of Falnash (who was Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch for decades); she was described as ‘in Broadhaugh’ at that time. Their children, baptised in Hawick, included: an unnamed child (b.1718); Charles (b.1719), who succeeded; Gideon (b.1720) in Priesthaugh (sometimes written as ‘Priesthope’), whose daughter Beatrice married Walter Scott of Wauchope; Mary (b.1721); and Archibald (b.1724). He may also be the Walter, married to Beatrice Scott, whose children baptised in Wilton Parish included Rachel (b.1722) and Archibald (b.1724). The witnesses in 1719 were Gideon of Falnash and Rev. John Douglas of Kirkton, in 1720 were Robert of Burnhead and Robert Cleghorn, merchant at Dalkeith, and in both 1722 and 1724 were Robert of Burnhead and Robert of Falnash (his brother-in-law). His wife Beatrice had ‘liferent’ of the lands of Crumhaugh, as well as Harwoodhill and other lands. He is probably the Walter whose second sister Margaret married Rev. Hugh Kennedy of Cavers (and later Rotterdam). Walter ‘Crooked Wat’ (17th/18th C.) Hawick Town Herd in the years around 1710. He was known as an honest and diligent shepherd, and was called ‘Crooked’ because of his crook, not that he was dishonest. He could be the ‘Walter Scott herd’, married to Bessie Turncrook, not that he was dishonest. He could be herd, and was called ‘Crooked’ because of his He was known as an honest and diligent shepherd who in 1715 in Ashkirk he married Elizabeth, daughter of Robert Wilson. Their daughter Helen was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1716. The witnesses were John Scott ‘Whitegates’ and weaver Robert Turnbull. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was living at Easter Parkhill in 1718 when his son William was baptised. Walter of Bewlie (17th/18th C.) several letters from his sister Helen survive in the period 1725–28. Walter of Whifeld and Harden (1682–1746) third son (and second surviving son) of Walter of Hichester and of Harden, Earl of Tarras. He served as factor for the family estates on the death of his brother Gideon in 1707. In 1713 he received a five-pound land of Bewlie as part of his marriage contract with the daughter of John Nisbet of Nisbetfield. He was involved with Walter of Woll and William of Thirlestane (his future father-in-law) in a bond of 1715. He was Laird of Whifield when he purchased the lands of Harden, Highchesters and Mabonlaw from other family members in 1720 (although he did not inherit the titles until later). There are dispositions to him in 1720/1 from Lady Mary Sharp, Lady Agnes Scott, Margaret Scott and Lady Mary Drummond, the female representatives of close branches of the family, relating to debts on Toshaw and Robertson. He was ‘of Whifeld being at present at Hardon’ in 1721. He sold Whifield and Mervinslaw to Walter Scott, brother of William of Thirlestane in 1723. In 1727 he was listed among the people owing money to the deceased William Nisbet of Dirleton. He is referred to as ‘of Whitfield’ throughout the 1720s, but also lived at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot; however, he was ‘of Heychesters’ in 1732 and 1733 when he had children baptised in Robertson Parish. He was one of the ‘tutors’ for his nephew John of Harden, and was involved in a legal battle over consequent claims on part of the Harden estate about 1724–26. His nephew John of Harden granted him the lands of Harden (including Mabonlaw and Highchesters) in 1731, with the instrument of sasine registered in 1732. The Harden titles eventually fell to him on the death of John in 1734, and he became the 10th Laird (sometimes referred to as 9th). He was listed on a memorial of 1738, claiming the right of the Lordship of Ruthford to John Scott of Belford. He was the Laird at the time of the 1745 Jacobite rebellion, and was apparently a supporter who was at the Battle of Prestonpans. A story is told (recounted by John Anderson, blacksmith at Ettrickbridge) about his narrow escape from the dragoons, who tried to capture him when he returned in disguise to Oakwood, and were also in wait for him at Woll and Harden; although the story seems too detailed to be an invention, it is still hard to believe this of a man in his 60s. He supposedly was caught trying to board a ship in Newcastle, when a simple-minded tenant of his recognised him, but he ended up with only a heavy fine, resulting in the loss of Howford, Helmburn, Baillielee and other lands. He married 4 times: firstly to Agnes, daughter of John Nisbet of Nisbetfield in 1709 (this perhaps being the marriage recorded in Wilton in 1708), but she died only a few years later; secondly Agnes, daughter of William Scott of Thirlestane (with whom he had a daughter, Christian, b.1721, baptised in Robertson Parish) in 1719; thirdly Anne, daughter of John Scott of Gorrenberry (to whom he had his heir, Walter) in 1724; and lastly Christian, daughter of Henry Kerr of Frogden in 1736. He paid for the bell of St. Mary’s to ring in 1723, presumably for his wife Agnes or a child, and paid for renting the Town ‘litter’ for his wife’s funeral in 1730 (presumably Anne). His younger children (with his 3rd wife) included: John (b.1729), who died young; William (b.1730), also died young; Francis of Beechwood (b.1732), baptised in Robertson; Jean; Helen, who married George Brown of Elliston in Edinburgh in 1756; and Ann (b.1733, or ‘Annie’), recorded in a land sale of 1790. He also provided for the daughters of his predecessor John of Harden in 1731. He is probably the man referred to as ‘Walter Scott, old Whitfield’ in 1764, in recounting him lying ‘on a heathery know within the moss, or on a green know at the side of the moss, cracking to the workers’ who were cutting peat on Wilton Common in some earlier decade. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1720 he was living at Orchard when he married Elspeth Laidlaw. Probably the same Walter was heard at Orchard in 1728 when his daughter Elizabeth was baptised in Cavers. It is possible that the same Walter was still at Orchard in 1737 when his son Robert was baptised. Walter (1692–1765) second son of William of Thirlestane and great-grandson of ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden. He became a wine merchant in Leith. His attorney was Robert Shortreed of Essenside when he had a sasine for Wauchope from the superior James, Lord Cranstoun in 1750; this was a ‘heritable bond’, although it is unclear who else was involved or if he was related to any of the other Scotts associated with Wauchope. He married Martha, daughter of Cunningham of Balboggie and also married a second time. His children included: Thomas, minister of Cavers; Walter (d.1765), a surgeon in the 10th Hussars; and Euphemia. Walter (18th C.) servant to John Elliot in Goldielands. Perhaps the same Walter was ‘Servitor to our Minr’ in 1717 when he witnessed a baptism for William Henderson in Newbigging. He may be the ‘servant’ who witnessed baptisms in 1719 for William Mitchellhill (workman in Brauxholme Town) and for Walter Inglis (servant in Crumhaugh). In 1725 he was living at Borthaugh. He may be the Walter who in 1738 witnessed a baptism for William Telfer, who lived at Borthaugh. He could also be the workman who in 1742 witnessed a baptism for Robert at Goldielands (who may have been related). In 1721 in Hawick he married Helen Turnbull, who was also a servant to John Elliot. Their children included: Helen (b.1722), baptised in Wilton; Janet (b.1725), baptised in Wilton; and Margaret (b.1727), baptised in Hawick. The witnesses in 1725 were John and Walter Scott. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1725 he was ‘workman in Goldielands’. He married Agnes ‘Huison’ (or Howison). Their children included Walter (b.1725) and Bessie (b.1727). He could also be the Walter, married to Agnes ‘Whitson’ whose child John was baptised in Wilton in 1717. The witnesses in 1725 were John Elliot in Goldielands and Andrew Leithead in Crumhaugh. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at Wiltonburn in 1713, 1724 and 1727. Along with William Scott and James Irvine, he tenanted 1/2 of the farm. He is easy to confuse with a contemporary of the same name who also lived at Wiltonburn. In 1727 he is probably the Walter who witnessed a baptism for William at Wilton Burnfoot. In 1713 he married Mary Cockburn, who was from Alton, the proclamations being recorded in Wilton Parish. Their children probably included: James (b.1722); Mary (b.1724); Helen (b.1726); George (b.1726); William (b.1728); Bessie (b.1730); and Walter (b.1733). The witnesses in 1724 were Walter Scott and James Irvine and in 1727 were William Scott and Andrew Irvine. It is possible he was the Walter who was recorded witnessing several baptisms in the 1720s and 1730s, suggesting he was an elder of Wilton Kirk. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at Wiltonburn in 1721, 1724 and 1732. He is probably the Walter who witnessed a baptism in 1724 for the other Walter at Wiltonburn. He married Helen Scott and their children included: Helen (b.1716); Bessie (b.1718); Helen (again, b.1719); William (b.1721); Thomas (b.1724); Helen (again, b.1727); William (again, b.1730); and Walter (b.1732). The witnesses in 1721 were William Scott and James Grieve, in 1724 were John and Walter Scott and in 1732 were John Scott and John Dryden. Note that there appear to have been 2 contemporary men of the same name living at Wiltonburn. One of them probably witnessed baptisms for William in Wiltonburn in 1736, 1737 and 1739. Walter of Howcleuch and Wauchope (1701–86) son of Walter and Christian Bennet of Chesters. Some accounts have him as son of Walter of West Port and Jean, who was daughter of Walter Scott of Crumhaugh; it may be that there are two men compounded here. It seems that in 1725 he married his cousin Rachel, youngest sister of the then Laird of Crumhaugh, Walter Scott (however, there could be confusion here). He leased Commonside shortly before his marriage, and lived for most of his lived at Commonside House. He certainly married Rachel, daughter of Francis Elliot of Fenwick, and (as stated on the family gravestone at St. Mary’s) had 2 sons with her: Walter (b.c.1728) of Wauchope; and Charles (b.1728) of Howcleuch. Walter was baptised in Hawick in 1728, with his mother’s name listed as Rachel Scott (and the witnesses being ‘Mr. Millar’ and John Scott), making the identity of the mother confusing. He is probably the Walter ‘at Commonside’ who witnessed several baptisms in Hawick Parish in 1738, 1739, 1740, 1741 and 1744 (suggesting he was Kirk Elder, responsible for the Teviothead area). In 1739 and 1744 he witnessed baptisms for fiddler Robert Whutson, whose wife was a Scott. In 1747 he was also ‘at Commonside’ when he witnessed a baptism for Charles of Crumhaugh (who was surely a relative of some sort). He became a prominent man in the district, whose advice was often sought out. Like other men in a similar position, he also acted as a money lender. In 1755 he bought Howcleuch and Borthwick Mains from Rev. Simon Halliburton. He was probably the Walter of Commonside recorded as a Commissioner for Selkirkshire in 1761. He is probably the Walter at Commonside who witnessed a baptism for Adam Hutton in 1762. In 1765 he was ‘of Howcleuch elder’ when named as one of the commissioners for assessing the boundaries of Wilton Common. He was ‘Senior’ of Commonside in 1766 when he witnessed a baptism for Robert Laidlaw of Falnash. He was one of the Commissioners appointed in the court case regarding the division of Hawick Common in 1767. He bought Wauchope in 1767 at public auction (from James Cranston, 6th Lord Cranstoun), thus becoming the 1st Scott Laird of Wauchope. However, he did not live at these estates he had acquired, but gave them to his 2 sons, Walter and Charles. Walter inherited Wauchope, while Howcleuch went to Charles. In 1784 he retired from farming and gave over his property to his 2 sons, presumably dying not many years later. In 1785 he still paid the land tax on Howcleuch. The family are buried in an aisle at St. Mary’s. Walter (18th C.) married Jean Rutherford in Kirkton Parish in 1730. Walter of Raeburn (d.1707) eldest son of William of Raeburn. In 1703 he married Anne, 3rd daughter of Hugh Scott of Gala. Their children were: William, who succeeded; Isobel; and Anne. In October 1707 he attended a dinner in Selkirk with other local landowners and got into a dispute (perhaps over the Union) with Mark, youngest son of Andrew Pringle of Crichton. They fought a duel with swords and he was killed, the location being afterwards known as Raeburn’s Meadow. His killer fled abroad, becoming a merchant in Spain and later British Consul there. Walter (18th C.) married Anne Scott in Hawick in 1716. Walter (18th C.) married Ann Scott in Cavers in 1724. Walter (18th C.) ‘indweller in Hawick’ when he was among the men selected to perambulate the boundaries of Wilton Common in 1765. He may be the same as one of the other Walters. Walter (18th C.) resident in Hawick Shiel. His wife was ‘Maray Gladstons’ and their son Robert was baptised in 1726, with witnesses James Grieve and John Scott. Perhaps the same resident in Hawick Shiel in 1728 married Margaret, daughter of ‘Dand’ Grey, tenant in Weensland; their daughter Margaret was born in 1741. Probably the same Walter in Hawick Shiel had a daughter Janet baptised in Cavers in 1732. Walter (18th C.) 3rd son of Thomas of Whisltadle and brother of John. He is probably the ‘brother German to the Laird of Whiteslade’ whose child Helen ‘begotten in fornication Within ye paroch of Askirk’ was baptised in Hawick in 1716. The mother of the child was Elizabeth, daughter to carrier Robert Wilson, it was presented for baptism by tailor Walter Kay and the witnesses were John Scott ‘Whitegates’ and weaver Robert Turnbull. In 1727–29 he was involved in legal proceedings with Walter Scott of Whifield (later of Harden), probably over debts incurred by his brother John. In 1734 he was described as ‘late of Whitslade’ when he was accused for the 5th time of refusing to undergo penance and was excommunicated by the Synod. He must also have been related to the Dr. Robert, who lived in Hawick, possibly his brother. Walter (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He is recorded at ‘Wester P...’ (probably Parkhill) in 1733 when his daughter May was baptised. He is probably related to other Scotts who were at Parkhill. He could be the Walter who was at Milsingtonshiel in 1741 when his son Henry was baptised (and was therefore perhaps related to the earlier James at Milsingtonshiel). Walter (18th C.) wright in Hawick, youngest son of Walter, who was brother of Charles of Crunhaugh near the end of the 17th century. His mother would have been Elizabeth Scott. He is probably the wright who witnessed baptisms for workman Thomas Stoddart in 1725 and for Bailie James in 1730. He may be the Walter, wright in Hawick, who witnessed the notorial instrument of 1734 in which the Town complained about encroachment on the Common by tenants of Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. In 1743 he was described as a wright when he registered a sasine for a tenement of land ‘and onstead of houses in Hawick’ to his brother Robert, these lands having been ‘disponed’ in 1730. He is perhaps the wright called Walter who witnessed a baptism (for Robert Oliver, shoemaker) in 1738, others for mason Andrew Wilson, Bailie Gideon Ruecastle, ‘messenger’ William Wilson, tailor John Turnbull and weaver Andrew Simpson in 1743. He may have been deceased in 1743 when his brother Robert gained the lands of ‘Croftangry’ from him; whether this is the same as the ‘tenement’ mentioned above is unclear. He could be the wright called Walter recorded in the list for paying tax on 18 windows in Hawick in 1748. He may be the wright in Hawick who had a child Christian with Janet Shiel in 1725, the baptism labelled ‘Forn:’ and with witnesses tailor James Gledstains and mason Andrew Turnbull. Walter (18th C.) brother of William of Thirlestone. In 1723 he is described as ‘in Sourhope’ when he purchased Whitfield and Mervinslaw from Walter Scott of Whitfield. He seems likely to be the same as one of the other Walters. He may be the Walter of Whitfield who held the lands of Whitfield, Mervinslaw and Todshaw (perhaps in wadset with John Murray of Philiphaugh) during the process for the division of Wilton Common in 1765; at that time these lands were valued at £482 12s 4d. Walter (b.1700) farmer at Commonside. He leased Unthank and Fiddleton from the Buccleuch Estates, along with Robert Elliot of Fenwick, in 1733 (taking over from the Murray family). His father had married Christine Bennet of Chesters, and he was uncle of Sir Walter Scott the writer. Since there was another Walter who farmed Commonside at about the same time, some of this information may be confused. He also appears to have been confounded (e.g. by Tancred) with Walter, 1st Laird of Wauchope. He could be the Walter in Commonside, married to Helen Hogg, whose daughter Rachel was baptised in Hawick in 1726; the witnesses were William Harkness and William Scott. Walter (18th C.) tailor in Hawick. He married Elizabeth (‘Bettie’ or ‘Bessie’) Scott in 1721. Their children included: Anne (b.1728); and Elspeth (b.1730). The witnesses to the 1728 baptism were Bailie Walter Purdom and Bailie Scott ‘Senior’ (who may have been related). Walter of Burnfoot (17th/18th C.) recorded in 1723 when he and Anne ‘Stotherd in Flexs’ had a child baptised in Hawick. The baptism was labelled ‘Fornic:’, so they were not married. The witnesses were Walter Purdom, as well as William and James Tudhope. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts of Burnfoot and whether this was Burnfoot on Teviot or Ale. Walter of Cockerheugh (d.bef. 1743) son of John, he was a descendant of the Scotts of Brieryards. In 1705 Isobel Waugh appeared before the Wilton Kirk Session to confess to being pregnant with his child; she sat in the place of repentance and paid a small fine, with him paying £4 Scots as a penalty. He inherited Cockerheugh (part of Hassendeanbank) from his John in 1721. The 1720 records for Wilton Parish state that 12 shillings was collected for ‘Walter Scott of cockerheugh for his proclamation’, presumably meaning his marriage. His sister married Walter Scott (‘Uncle to Crumhaugh’) in 1721 (this probably being the next entry in the Wilton register, for ‘Walter Scott in Hawick’). In 1722 he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for carrier Henry Paterson and in 1724 he witnessed a baptism in Wilton for James in Whitehaugh and Janet Scott (and hence may have been related to one of them). He sold Cockerheugh to the Duke of Roxburgh in 1734. However he is still ‘of Cockerheugh’ in 1738 when he witnessed a baptism for James, miller at Crawhill. He is described as ‘late of Cockermuir’ in a record of 1743, involving Adam Scott and Anthony Turnbull of Knowe. Walter ‘Wyndheid’ (18th C.) tailor in Hawick. He was listed as ‘taylor in Hawick’ in the 1723 baptismal record and ‘Walter Scott Wyndhead’ in 1725. In 1723 he married Anne, daughter of James Scott. Their children included: Helen (b.1723); John (b.1724); Janet (b.1725); and Bessie (b.1726). The witnesses in 1723 were Robert Scott ‘Wyndhead’ and smith James Scott (who were perhaps related to him and his wife). He was probably also related to the later ‘Wattie o the Wyndheid’. He is easy to confuse with another tailor called Walter, who married Bessie Scott. Walter of Merrylaw (18th C.) perhaps son of the William who was tenant in Merrylaw in 1694 or Walter of Merrylaw who is recorded around 1700. He leased Ellrig from Walter Scott of Raeburn in 1730 and leased the lands of Craik and Whinneycleuch from the Buccleuch Estates in 1744. Rev. William was probably his son. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. Walter (b.c.1700) ploughman in Hawick Parish. He worked at Goldielands from 1715, serving several tenants (except for 5 years) through until 1767 when he moved to Langlands. He gave evidence in 1767 regarding the former use of Haig Common; he was said to be in his 60s and married at that time. Walter (b.c.1710) eldest son of Thomas, last Laird of Todrig. He served in the Horse Guards. In 1732 he married Jane, only daughter and heiress of William Robson of High Stokoe, Northumberland. They had about a dozen children, those surviving being: Dr. William (b.1733) of Stokoe, who compiled a family tree of that branch, including information on the Scotts of Synton, Whitslade and Todrig; Patrick, a doctor who settled on the Isle of Man; Mary, who married John Best; and Jane, who married Paul Blakey. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1737 he married Janet Aitchison, who was from Wilton. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Gray in 1728 and their daughter Mary was baptised in 1741. Walter (18th C.) married Margaret Lillico in Minto in 1743. Walter (18th C.) described in 1743 as ‘late Baillie Depute’. He was probably the Baron’s officer within Hawick. His wife was Agnes Paisley (or ‘Paslaw’) and their children included: Jean (b.1727); Agnes (b.1729); Thomas (b.1731); Walter (b.1733); Agnes (again, b.1738); Agnes (again, b.1739); Elizabeth (b.1742); Jean (again, b.1743); and James (b.1746). The witnesses in 1743 were writer James Weir and mason Andrew Turnbull, senior. Walter (18th C.) gardener in Hawick. In 1722 he married Agnes, daughter of Robert Gardner. Their children included: Helen (b.1723); Thomas (b.1726); Janet (b.1732); Agnes (b.1737); and John (b.1740). The witnesses in 1726 were shoemaker John Scott and candlemaker John Scott and in 1740 were Glover John Scott and merchant James Sanderson. Walter (18th C.) son of Walter in Synton Mill. He is recorded in a legal disposition of 1759. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Whitehaugh in 1729 and at just ‘Wilton’ in 1737. He married Margaret Scott and their children included: William (b.1728); Bessie (b.1729); Adam (b.1732); Anne (b.1734); Isobel (b.1737); Elspeth (b.1740); and James (b.1743). The witnesses in 1729 were William and Robert Scott (who were probably related to him or his wife, perhaps the Laird of Whitehaugh and his brother the minister) and in 1737 were James Simpson (soon to be minister of Wilton) and Thomas ‘Cayle’. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, recorded at Burnfoot in 1735 and 1737. He married Bessie Leyden in 1734 and their children included: Helen (b.1735); an unnamed child (b.1737); Margaret (b.1740); and Jean (b.1743). The witnesses in 1735 were William and Walter Scott (who may have been related to him). He may be the Walter who inherited Burnfoot on Ale from his uncle Walter, started living there himself in 1715 and moved in 1737 after he sold Easter and Wester Burnfoot to Laing; this Walter was born in about 1695 and gave evidence in the court case for the division of Wilton Common. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at...

Borthaugh in 1741. He married Euphan Telfer and their children included Walter (b.1741) and John (b.1745). The witnesses in 1741 were Walter ‘Stot’ and another Walter Scott. Walter (18th C.) recorded at Crook in 1745 when his son James was baptised in Cavers Parish. Walter (18th C.) carrier in Hawick. He may be the Hawick carrier who in 1762 was granted land in Wilton Parish, but on the south side of the Teviot (hence possibly near the Sandbed) by Rev. Henry Erskine of Robertson, acting on behalf of Rev. Patrick Cunningham; the land had previously been possessed by James Irving. Owning this land in Wilton meant that he was included in the court case over the division of Wilton Common in about 1765. His wife’s surname was ‘Leaden’ (presumably Leyden) and their children included: Adam (b.1745); and William (b.1747). The witnesses in 1745 were wright Robert Pringle and Kirk Officer John Telfer; Pringle had a child baptised on the same day, and he reciprocated as witness. The witnesses in 1747 were weavers William Roger and William Turnbull. Walter (18th C.) listed ‘in Finesh’ (i.e. Fahnash) when the paid the window tax (for 11 windows) in Hawick Parish in 1748. He may be the same as one of the other Walters (e.g. Walter of Wauchope and Howcleuch, who farmed at Commonside and married a Scott of Falnash). In 1743 he was ‘in Fahnash’ when he witnessed 2 baptisms in Hawick Parish (for workmen John Rieve and John Armstrong, who may have had a connection to the Teviothead area). In 1744 he witnessed a baptism (along with Walter at Commonside) for fiddler Robert Whutson, whose wife was a Scott. Walter (18th C.) recorded in 1743 as ‘Soldier’. If this is a nickname, then he may be a descendant of the earlier John ‘Young Sodger’; however, it could be his occupation. He married Elizabeth Scott and their son Walter was baptised in 1743, with witnesses Kirk Officer John Telfer and shoemaker William Scott. The same couple may also have been parents of Charles (b.1741), with witnesses workman John Gledstains and Kirk Officer John Telfer; he was recorded in 1741 as tenant at Crumhaugh (and so may be related to earlier Scotts of Crumhaugh). It is possible (although unlikely that he is the same man as the tenant in Newbigging, whose wife was also Elizabeth Scott. Walter (18th C.) resident of Newbigging in Hawick Parish. He may have been related to the Walter who was at Newbigging a generation earlier. He could be the Walter, tenant in Newbigging, who was admitted as a heritable Burgess of Hawick in 1756. His wife was Elizabeth (or Betty) Scott and their children included: William (b.1756); Archibald (b.1758); Ann (b.1760); and Robert (b.1762). The witnesses in 1758 were William Rae and William Mair and in 1762 were ‘student’ John Laurie and Walter Cavers. He is probably the Walter from Newbigging who witnessed baptisms for another Walter (perhaps a relative, married to Agnes Laidlaw) in 1760 and 1761. He is probably the deceased Walter ‘late in Newbigging’ whose son James died in Hawick in 1798. Walter (18th C.) farmer at Millholm in Castleton Parish. When there was a large gathering of successors at Snaberlee in the early 1750s, he tried to claim the collection for the poor of the Parish, but the case was thrown out by Sir Gilbert Elliott in Hawick. Walter (18th C.) merchant of Hawick. He is listed among the subscribers to the reprinted Buchanans’s ‘History of Scotland’ (1752). He may be the same as one of the contemporary Walters. Walter of Boghall (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Boghall in 1739, 1742 and 1748, and was recorded there in 1757 when he witnessed a baptism for Richard (perhaps his son) and Mary Rutherford. He married Janet Dickson in 1736, the marriage being proclaimed in both Wilton and Minto Parishes. Their children included: Richard (b.1739); Robert (b.1742); Richard (again, b.1745); James (b.1748); and Margaret (b.1751). The witnesses in 1739 were George and Walter Scott (who could have been related), and in 1742 were Robert Scott (perhaps related) and George Hood. Walter (18th C.) skinner in Hawick. He is one of the skinners James, John and Walter Scott (probably related), recorded as Bailies in the 1740s. He paid tax on 20 windows in Hawick in 1748. He may be the Bailie Walter recorded in 1755 when the costs of a meeting in his place ‘when getting the new stocks’ were 6 pence. ‘Bailie John’ was also there and possibly this was also a Scott and perhaps related. He may also have been the Bailie Walter paid for work on the ‘book-board in the tolbooth’ in 1755 and given part payment for building the Herd’s House (suggesting that this Walter may have been a builder of some sort). He married Christian Deans and their children included: James (b.1735); William (b.1738); Jean (b.1741); Jean (again, b.1744); Beatrix (b.1746); and Walter (b.1747). The witnesses in 1746 were merchant William Oliver and ex-Bailie Thomas Turnbull. He is probably the deceased Bailie and skinner recorded in 1811 when his son William died. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Whitfield in 1748. He married Ann Storie in Kirkton in 1745. Their children included Elizabeth (b.1748), with witnesses being another Walter Scott and James Dryden. Walter (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He married Jane (or Jean) Scott and their children included: Henry (b.1757); Walter (b.1759); and Andrew, William and Mary (b.1761), baptised on the same day. The witnesses in 1761 were Bailie Robert (merchant) and Andrew (shoemaker), who were probably related to him. Walter (d.1810) tailor, nicknamed ‘Wattie o the Wyndheid’. He must have been related to the Walter ‘Wyndhead’ recorded earlier in the 18th century. He was probably the tailor of that name who was recorded as son of the deceased John ‘Wyndhead’ on the 1810 death register. His shop was located near the top of what became known as Walter’s Wynd (after him). The death of his daughter Margaret is recorded in the Parish register for 1805. He could be the tailor in Hawick recorded on the 1799 ballot for the Militia; if so then he was born in the 1770s. Walter (18th C.) only son of Francis, wig-maker of Hawick. He was made an Honorary Burgess in 1760. Walter ‘Black Wat’ (18th C.) Cornet in 1765. It is possible he was related to the earlier ‘Black Walter’. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1767 he married Margaret Robertson (or ‘Robison’), who was from Wilton Parish. Their children included: Walter (b.1767); Archibald (b.1770); John (b.1772); Adam (b.1776); Ann (b.1779); and Thomas (b.1784). The witnesses in 1767 were wright James (probably a relative) and shoemaker John Oliver and in 1772 were another Walter and James. He could be the same as one of the other Walters. Walter (18th C.) founder of a joiner’s firm on Buccleuch Street, Walter Scott & Son, established in 1750. The firm moved into the former Grammar School building around 1886. It is possible that he could be the Walter son of Hawick surgeon Walter who became a wright’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1732. He is probably the wright who witnessed a baptism for merchant Walter in 1766. It seems likely that he was the same wright Walter who married Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’) Laidlaw in 1760 and had children: Walter (b.1761); Margaret (b.1762); William (b.1765); Thomas (b.1766); Mary (b.1768); Jane (b.1770); and Robert (b.1776). The witnesses in both 1762 and 1766 were baker John Osburn and weaver George Paterson. He could also be the wright Walter whose son George was a weaver listed on the ballot for men to serve in the Militia in 1797 and 1798. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Laidlaw in 1760 and their children included William (b.1760) and William (again, b.1761). The witnesses in 1760 were another Walter from Newbigging and cooper Robert Paterson and in 1761 were Walter from Newbigging (again) and William Scott. It is possible that his wife was the ‘Agness Scott spouse to Walter Do. Newbigging’ whose death is recorded in Hawick in 1824. Walter (18th C.) married Marion Knox in Wilton in 1770. Walter (18th C.) married Margaret Donald in Hawick in 1772. Walter of Raeburn (18th C.) son of William, he was the 5th Laird. In 1772 he married Jean, 3rd daughter of Robert Scott of Sandyknowe. She was the sister of his sister’s husband. Their children were: William (1773–1855), who succeeded; Robert (1774–1837); Hugh of Draycott, Derby (1777–1852); Walter (d.1802); John (d.1832); and Barbara. Walter (18th C.) resident of Whitfield. In 1761 he married Catherine Turnbull (from Hawick), the marriage being recorded in both Wilton and Hawick Parishes. Their children (baptised in Wilton Parish, with the last one in Hawick), included: Charles (b.1762); Euphan (b.1764); Robert (b.1765); John (b.1770); Helen (b.1772); Walter (b.1775); and John (b.1776). The witnesses in 1772 were John Lillico and Walter Rae and in 1773 was also witness for Walter Rae (at Whitfield). Walter (18th C.) schoolmaster at Kirkton in the late 1780s, where he took over from Thomas Wilson. There he taught a young John Leyden. However, after only a year or two he moved, apparently for a better position elsewhere and was succeeded by Andrew Scott. He was schoolmaster in 1787 when his daughter Peggy was baptised in Kirkton Parish. Walter of Harden (1724–1793) son of Walter, from whom he succeeded in 1746. In 1748 he was made a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh, gratis. He is the 11th Laird (sometimes called the 10th) of Harden. He sold part of the Harden estates in 1751 to pay his father’s debts. In 1754 he had a charter to the lands of Bewlie in Lilliesleaf. He was M.P. for Roxburghshire 1747–65, then serving as cashier of Excise in Scotland until his death.

was baptised. Perhaps the same Walter was at Parkhead in 1767 when his daughter Kathrine was baptised. There are many other children born in Roberton at about the same time who could be his. Walter (1736–1818) 3rd son of Walter, tenant farmer at Girnwood. Along with his brother Thomas he took over from his father as co-tenant of Girnwood. Both brothers being unmarried, the tenancy later passed to their relative Walter, 2nd son of the 3rd William in Milsington. He was recorded as farmer at Girnwood on the Horse Tax Rolls in the period 1785–97. He also paid tax on 2 non-working dogs at Girnwood in 1797. Walter of Newton (18th/19th C.) probably Laird of Chamberlain Newton. In 1738 he witnessed a baptism, along with Patrick, younger of Alton; this was for Joseph Lothian and Janet Scott, suggesting that Janet may have been related to him. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He married Agnes Watson and their children (baptised in Hawick) included: Anne (b.1737); Francis (b.1739); John (b.1741); Margaret (b.1743), who married John Scott, who succeeded to Whitehaugh in 1759; and Susanna (b.1746). The witnesses in 1743 were ex-Bailie John and writer James Weir. In 1767 his daughter Margaret (or perhaps Elizabeth) married John Scott of Whitehaugh; she was his eldest daughter and co-heir. Perhaps he was son of the earlier Walter of Newton. George ‘brother to the laird of Newton’, who signed the 1731 marriage contract of William Elliot of Lodgegill and Jean Elliot of Harwood, may have been his brother. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Borthwick and their children included: David (b.1744) and John (b.1745). Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1762 he married Margaret Nichol, the marriage being recorded in both Hawick and Roberton Parishes. He may be the same as one of the other Walters. Walter (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He married Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’ Ekron in 1765. Their children included: Isabel (b.1766); Andrew (b.1768); Alice (b.1769); and James (b.1771). The witnesses in 1766, 1768 and 1771 were merchants Andrew Scott and James Ekron, who were probably his father (or brother) and father-in-law. Based on the naming convention his parents were probably Andrew and Alice. He could be the merchant Walter who (along with merchant Andrew) witnessed a baptism for William Philip and Mary Scott in 1772. Walter (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He married Margaret Dryden in 1763. Their children included: James (b.1765); William (b.1766); and Margaret (b.1767). The witnesses in 1766 were wright Walter and baker William Elliot. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Cowan and their son Robert was baptised in 1766. Walter (18th C.) resident of Roberton Cowan. He was at Woodburn in 1769 when his son Thomas was baptised. Walter (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. The death of his unnamed child is recorded in 1791. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1777 he married Agnes Scott, who was also from Hawick Parish. Their children included: Walter (b.1778); Walter (again, b.1786); and Janet (b.1788). Walter (18th C.) schoolmaster at Abbotrule. His children included: Peggy (b.1773); James (1774); and Jeanie (b.1776). He may be the Walter who married Nelly Turnbull in Abbotrule in 1772. He could be the same as one of the other contemporary local teachers. Capt. Walter ‘Wattie’ (1742–1809) eldest son of Charles of Crumhaugh and Howpsley and Christopher Anderson. He was the last of the Scotts of Crumhaugh. He was born at Midshiel and died without issue. He may be the Capt. Scott of ‘Gauldillands’ whose daughter Charlotte was ‘begotten in fornication’ with Isobel Scott in Longtown in 1766 and christened in Ashkirk. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ in 1784. He may also be the Walter who is recorded as tenant in Crumhaughhill in 1797, paying tax on 6 farm horses. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1768 he married Helen Anderson and their daughter Janet was baptised in 1771. Walter (18th C.) married Mary Wallace in Wilton Parish in 1767. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Thomson and their children included: James (b.1769); James (again, b.1775); Robert (b.1780); and Robert (again, b.1781). The witnesses in 1781 were Walter Scott and Archibald Scott (who were surely related). Walter (18th C.) wright in Denholm in 1776 and 1779. His children included Robert (b.1776) and Janet (b.1779). Walter (18th C.) Church Officer in Hawick. In 1779 he witnessed a baptism for inn-keeper John Kennedy. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Coldhouse in 1780. He married Isobel Gray in 1780 and their son Charles was baptised later the same year, with witnesses ‘Mr’ William Scott (perhaps the minister at Southdean) and James Scott. Walter ‘Reid Wat’ (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He is recorded as ‘Red Watt’ in 1781 when his daughter Ann died in Hawick. He could be related to the earlier man with the same nickname, who was tenant in Chapelhill. Perhaps the same Walter married Margaret ‘Robison’ and had children Adam (b.1776) and Ann (b.1779) baptised in Hawick. Walter (18th C.) resident of Commonside. He married Sarah Paterson and their son James was baptised in 1782, with the Associate Congregation as witnesses. He could be the same as one of the other Walters associated with Commonside. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1783 he married Helen Kerr. Walter (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Dykes in 1786 when his son John was baptised. Walter (18th C.) resident of Roberston Parish. He was at Highchesters in 1786 when his daughter Nelly was baptised. Walter (18th C.) resident at Woodfoot in Kirkton Parish in 1790 when his son Walter was baptised. William (b.1792) and John (b.1796), also baptised in Kirkton Parish, were probably also his sons. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1793 he married Helen Irvine. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident at Hawick Shiel in 1797 when he was taxed for having 2 non-working dogs and 3 farm horses. Walter (18th/19th C.) married Margaret Hood in Wilton Parish in 1799. Walter (18th/19th C.) surgeon in Hawick, recorded on the ballot for the Militia in 1799. There does not appear to be any other record of him, unless he is the same man as Walter of Whitehaugh. Walter (18th/19th C.) farmer at Wiltonburn. His son Thomas was described as a ‘hosier’ when he died in Hawick in 1808. Walter (18th C.) listed as footman at Waughope in 1792, when he was working for Walter Scott. Walter (18th C.) from Ewes, he served as schoolmaster in Ashkirk in the period 1795–99. Walter (18th/19th C.) servant in Wester Essendy. In 1797 he was listed among men balloted to serve in the Militia; the annotation ‘Subst.’ suggests that someone else served in his place. His name appears again in 1798 and in early 1799 John Cook from Lessuden acted as substitute for him, as confirmed in the amended list for Ashkirk Parish in 1799. Walter (18th/19th C.) servant at Drinkstone. He is recorded in 1797 on the list of men on the ballot to serve in the Militia and in 1799 was among those whose names had not been drawn, but were no longer living in the area. Walter of Merrylaw (18th/19th C.) listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. He is probably the son of Rev. William born in Southdean in 1767. It is unclear how he acquired Merrylaw, or whether he had a direct connection to the earlier Scotts of Merrylaw.

Walter (18th/19th C.) married Isabel (or ‘Tibbie’) Ainslie in 1795. She died in Hawick in 1840, when he was recorded at ‘Kirktown Coat’. Walter (18th/19th C.) weaver in Hawick. His daughter Betty died in 1808. Walter (18th/19th C.) farmer at Boonraw, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 5 horses. He is probably the Walter who married Janet, daughter of Robert Ormiston, tenant at Boonraw, and who emigrated to New York state in about 1825. It is possible he was the Walter recorded as owner of part of Roughheugh (valued at £10 18s 6d) in 1788 and according to the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. Walter (18th/19th C.) married Agnes Reid in Wilton in 1811. Walter (18th/19th C.) from Rulewater, he was a shepherd at Craik in about 1820. In 1822 at Harwoodiskefoot he married Mary, daughter of Thomas Elliot and Magdaleene Thomson. They emigrated to America in 1823. Perhaps the same Walter was ploughman at Craik according to the 1812 ballot for the Militia in Robertson Parish. Walter (18th/19th C.) owner of 2 horses at Newbigging in 1797, according to the Horse Tax Rolls. He may have been a descendant of the Walter who was at Newbigging earlier in the 18th century. The elderly Catherine (nee Hume) at Newbigging in 1841 may have been his wife, with William and the younger Catherine his children. Walter (18th/19th C.) farmer at Priesthaugh. He subscribed to John Learmont’s book of poetry in 1791. He paid the Horse Tax at Priesthaugh in 1785–94. He is also recorded as owner of 2 horses on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was additionally taxed for having 5 non-working dogs in 1797. He may have been son of Gilbert, tenant of Priesthaugh earlier in the 18th century. His will is recorded in Peebles Commissary Court in 1809. Walter (d.bef. 1809) wright in the Hawick area. The death of his brother, tailor John, is recorded in Hawick in 1809. He could be the same man as the founder of the firm of Walter Scott & Son. Walter ‘Cannie Wattie’, ‘Wat the Sauter’ or ‘Napier’s Wat’ (1753–1849). A tenant of the Duke of Buccleuch, he lived in the Salt House at the West Port. He was also for a time the servant of Lord Napier at Wilton Lodge. He was a carrier of salt etc., with his yard at the entrance to the Workhouse, later becoming a farmer near Orchard. He lived to the age of 96. His name appears to sometimes be given in error as ‘Robert’. Walter (18th/19th C.) recorded in the 1788 county valuation and in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls as owner of ‘Part of Patrick Cunningham’s Lands’, valued at £28 1s. He is probably the same as one of the other Walters, and perhaps related to John, who also held part of the former Patrick Cunningham’s lands. By about 1874 his lands had been divided among Alexander Laing, Alexander Michie, James Mudie, the heirs of John Hargreaves, the Roman Catholic Church, James Kyle, the heirs of William Scott, John Fildes Wilson, Mrs. Agnes Oliver, Walter Grieve, the heirs of Mrs. Charles Scott, John Wilson, the heirs of William Wood, Janet Brown, Mrs. Rodgie and James Oliver; this gives an indication of the extent of the lands. Walter (b.c.1780) local farm worker. He married Ann Purdom in Cavers in 1813 and their children included: Mungo (b.1815), baptised in Hawick Parish; Mary (b.1817, Hawick); and John (b.1822, Cavers). In 1841 he was living at Greenbank Haugh in Roberton Parish with his children John and Mary, along with the older Isobel Purdom (probably his mother-in-law) and young Thomas Hogg. Next door was pauper Isobel (perhaps his sister) and his son Mungo. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at ‘Roadside’ in 1791. He married Betty Douglas, and their son Robert was baptised in 1791, with witnesses Hector and Peter Blaikie. Walter (1761–1843) son of William and Margaret Hobkirk. A family legend states that they are related to ‘Old Mortality’ (Robert Paiterson) through Margaret Scott at Burnflat (and this could have been Paiterson’s mother). He could be the ‘Walter Scott, Parkhill’, who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He moved into Hawick and worked as a handloom weaver, living in Wilton. In 1797 he is recorded living at Lokeshedge, when one of his children was baptised ‘before the Antiburgh Congregation’. In 1785 he married Elizabeth (1762–1844), daughter of Thomas Biggar from Wilton. He was living at Dovemount (about 34 Princes Street) along with his wife and probably 2 grandchildren in 1841. Their children were: Margaret (b.1785); William (b.1788), who became a businessman in New York; Catherine (b.1789); John (b.1791); Robert (b.1793), who moved to Ohio; Margaret, ‘Peggy’ (1794–1867), who also moved to Ohio; Charles (b.1797); Walter (b.1799), who married Elizabeth Renwick and lived in Hawick; Sarah (b.1805); and Sarah (1807–88), who married Richard Purdie in Hawick. He died at Dovemount. Walter (1764–1837) 2nd son of William in Milsington. In 1793 and 1795 he was recorded at Milsingtonhaugh and at Borthwickbrae Parkhead in 1798 and 1800. He was later tenant of Girnwood. In 1792 he married Mary Wilson. Their children (baptised in Roberton) included: William (b.1793), also tenant in Girnwood, who married Ann Laidlaw; James of Allanshaws (b.1795), who succeeded his uncle William as tenant at Milsington, and was also a cattle-dealer on the Crescent; Walter of Newton (b.1798), who married an Elliot of Harwood; Annie (b.1800); Thomas (b.1802), who went to America; and Henry, who farmed at Elirig and died in Hawick. Walter of Whitehaugh (1769–1841) eldest surviving son of John of Whitehaugh. He trained as a surgeon and practised for many years. He could be the ‘Mr Walter Scott whitehaugh’ who witnessed a baptism for James Scott (perhaps a relative) and Mary Turnbull in 1793. He was listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819, when still ‘junior of Whitehaugh’. He was probably the Walter of Whitehaugh who subscribed to Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He was listed in 1835–41 among heads of households in Wilton Parish. He was also listed among the local gentry on Pigot’s 1837 directory. In the 1841 census he is recorded at Whitehaugh with his younger brother James, together with Christian Chisholme and 2 female servants. He died unmarried and was succeeded by his brother James. He is buried at Whitehaugh Aisle ‘in this spot selected by himself’. Walter (18th C.) married Margaret Renwick in Hawick in 1794. Walter (18th/19th C.) married Agnes Tait in Kirkton in 1802. Walter (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Isobel Redford and their children included David (b.1809) and Francis (b.1811). Walter (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Isobel Hogg and their children included George (b.1818), Isobel (b.1823), James (b.1825) and Agnes (b.1827). Walter (c.1780–bef. 1851) grocer and spirit merchant of 6 Sandbed. He is probably the Walter listed as a grocer at Buccleuch Street on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory and a ‘victual dealer’ in 1837. He was still on Buccleuch Street in the 1841 census. He married Isabella Anderson and their children were said to include: Margaret (b.1803), who married grocer John Hum; Charles (b.1805); greengrocer Thomas ‘Sly Tamnie’ (b.1810); Charles (b.1814), probably died young; Isabella (b.1816); and Christian (b.1818). However, they are surely the couple of the same names whose children, baptised in East Bank Kirk, included: James (b.1805), Robert (b.1808), Thomas (b.1810), Janet (b.1812), Janet (again, b.1814), Isabel (b.1816), Christian (b.1818) and Walter (b.1821). He is secondly said to have married another Isabella (Hogg), and their children were: Charles, also a spirit merchant; Jessie (b.1825); Agnes (b.1827); Helen (b.1829), probably died young; Walter (b.1831), chemist in Durham; Robert (b.1833); Mary Ann (b.1835); and Andrew (b.1839), Burgh Assessor. The recorded children of this couple, baptised in East Bank Kirk, included: George (b.1818), Isobel (b.1823), James (b.1825) and Agnes (b.1827). His widow Isabella was living at 8 Buccleuch Street in 1851 and 1861, and continued the grocer’s shop. He is probably the Walter Scott, ‘Newroad’ whose son died in 1829. He may be the ‘servant’ of William Oliver (‘Auld Cash’) who witnessed his will in 1808. Sir Walter of Abbotsford (1771–1832) world famous writer. He was born in Edinburgh, son of Walter and Anne Rutherford, but on account of ill-health, spent much of his childhood at his grandfather’s house at Sandyknowe in the Borders, where he recuperated from polio. He was descended from ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden, and learned much about Borders history and lore in his youth. He wrote a great deal of poetry and effectively established the form of the historical novel. ‘The Lay of the Last Minstrel’ is set at Branxholme, and many other books have a local flavour, if romanticised somewhat. His ‘Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border’ (1802, with subsequent volumes and enlarged editions, first published in Kelso) was instrumental in preserving many Border ballads and establishing them as international literature (although again he is criticised for rewriting some of them himself). He helped popularise the ‘shepherd’s-check’ trousers, which assisted the development of the Borders knitwear industry. He made 7 annual trips into Liddesdale in the 1790s. He was appointed as Principal Clerk of Session in 1806, and was created a Baronet in 1820. In 1808 he was on the subscription list for the first real Scots dictionary, compiled by his friend John Jamieson. Several legal letters to him are preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. His authorship of the ‘Waverley’ novels remained a secret for 22 years, being revealed in 1827. He subscribed for 2 copies of Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. Although by all accounts amiable to all classes, he was not locally popular among the ordinary Borderers, partly because he was a Sheriff and also an anti-Chartist. Around Hawick and Selkirk he was also rumoured to have helped intice the Galmen to switch sides at the ‘Carterhaugh Baa’. His carriage was reputedly stoned during the 1831 election in Jedburgh, apparently by a group of about 1,000 Hawick weavers (although some reports dispute this). With financial support from the Duke of Buccleuch, he led efforts to preserve Melrose Abbey. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. He wrote the lines ‘Sweet Teviot! on thy silver tide The glaring bale-fires blaze no more; No longer steel-clad warriors ride Along the wild and willow’d shore’, and Hawick is further mentioned in the ‘Lay . . .’ in the lines ‘Dimly he view’d the Moat-hill’s mound, Where Druid shades still flitted round; In Ha-wick twinkled many a light, Behind him soon they set in night’. In 1797 he married Margaret Charlotte (who he met by chance at Gilsland, and married 4 months later), daughter of Jean Charpentier of Lyons. Their children were: Walter, 2nd Baronet (1801–47), who died without issue; Charles (1805–41), died in Tehran; Charlotte Sophia, who married John Gibson Lockhart; and Anne (d.1833). He was buried at Dryburgh Abbey and his house at Abbotsford became a museum. His court-room on Selkirk square is also a museum. The Gothic-style Scott Monument on Princes Street in Edinburgh was built 1840–44, is 200 feet 6 inches high and contains a marble statue of the writer at the base. There is also a Doric column topped by a statue in Glasgow, as well as the life size statue in Selkirk square. A celebration for his centenary birthday was held at Branxholme, with a procession, speeches, toasts and songs. He was apparently editing the memoirs of Rev. Dr. John Young of Hawick when he was suffered some sort of stroke in 1830, and the work never appeared. He went to the Mediterranean to recuperate, but returned to die at Abbotsford. Scott Crescent in Burnfoot was named after him in 1952 – ‘O Scott! with whom, in youth’s serenest prime, I wove with careless hand the fairy rhyme’ [JL], ‘Then he will see our Laureat wight. The first he ever made a knight, The great Sir Walter, our delight, The Bard o Caledonia’ [BY], ‘Praise to the bard, immortal Scott, Who sleeps in ‘Dryburgh Bowers’, Whose genius hallowed every spot In this dear land of ours’ [JT], ‘Fu’ weel I trow that Selkirk Can never be forgot, Her fate, her sang, her Shirra, Immortal Wal-ter Scott’ [JBS], ‘Like a loved ghost thy fabled flood Fleets through the dusky land; Where Scott, come home to die, has stood, My feet returning stand’ [ALg]. Walter (18th/19th C.) proprietor of a public house in Denholm, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Walter (18th/19th C.) proprietor of a public house in Newcastleton according to Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Walter (b.c.1769) joiner in Newcastleton. He was listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories as a wright there. In 1841 he was living at about 41 North Hermitage Street. Walter (18th/19th C.) carrier in Hawick. His father-in-law Robert Anderson died in 1819. He may be the Walter who married Isabella Anderson and whose children include Margaret (b.1803), Charles (b.1805), Thomas (b.1810), Isabella (b.1816) and Christian (b.1818). Walter (1778–1857) 4th Laird of Wauchope, son of Charles, he was descended from the Scotts of Crumhaugh and Goldielands. He was recorded in the Lieutenancy Book in 1797, but by 1798 had paid £10 to avoid military service. He was also listed as ‘Wat Scott Junr. of Waughop’ in the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. He succeeded his father in 1808 and farmed at Wauchope. He was a representative on the council of Heritors in Hoblirk Parish even before he succeeded. He raised nearly 100 men during the French invasion scare of 1803, which became the Light Company of the Roxburgh Volunteers. He was captain of this unit during the False Alarm of 1804, and rode to collect men from Liddesdale, arriving at their head in Hawick before daybreak. When the unit disbanded in 1809 he became first Captain of the (1st Regiment) Roxburgh Local Militia. He and his father were listed among the Commissioners for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1805 and 1819. He was one of the original members of the Jedforest Club in 1810. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. In the Land Tax Rolls in 1811 he is recorded as owner of parts of Wauchope, called Common, Hawklawtongues (or Wauchope-head), Wauchope-rig and Wigg. There is a story told (in Lang’s ‘Stories of the Border Marches’) of how, on the road to Hawick in 1813, he came upon an old man who had been recently attacked, and with the help of a local ploughman (William Little) tracked down the robber, who was later hung for his crime; the report in the Scots Magazine for 1813 states that the man attacked was 101 years old, and that the attacker was sentenced to transportation for robbery. It is said that he was generally slow to make up his mind, but known for his common sense and an authority on parish business. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He was made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick in 1828. He was nephew of Walter Dickson, merchant of Edinburgh, and so was related to the Hassendean and Hawick Dicksons. He was listed among the local gentry in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In the 1841 census he is listed as ‘Independent’, and the house had 3 servants and in 1851 was listed as ‘J.P. Landed Prop.’, employing 2 labourers. Also in 1851 he examined the memorial stones of the Scotts of Goldielands and Crumhaugh in St. Mary’s Kirk, including that of Christian Bennet, who was his great-grandmother. He was said to be a keen supporter of the Hobkirk Baa, riding on his grey horse to encourage the ‘uppies’ side. In 1812 he married Marion, daughter of Thomas Macmillan of Shorthope in Selkirkshire. Their children were: a daughter (b.1813), who probably died in infancy; Charles (1814–17); Thomas (1816–62), who succeeded and changed his surname to Macmillan-Scott; Walter (1817–44), who worked for the East India Company; Charles (1819–95), who farmed at Lintalee, and succeeded his uncle Archibald to Howcleuch; Archibald (1822–62), who died in Malta; and Anne, who also died in infancy. He died at Wauchope and is buried in Hobkirk kirkyard. A portrait of his wife Marion was painted by Sir John Watson Gordon. Walter (b.1780) labourer at Greena according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish. Walter (b.1780) shepherd at Roughleeneuk according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Southdean Parish. He may have been related to George and William, who were at Roughleeneuk at about the same time. Walter (b.1780) servant at Hassendeanbank according to the ballot for the Militia in 1801. A note states that he ‘has had three Children’ and ‘lame of an arm’, suggesting this might excuse him from being selected. Walter ‘Wat o the Knowe’ (b.1786/7) claimed to be a descendant of Walter Scott of Goldielands, he farmed at ‘the Knowe’ (now Bowanhill) near Teviothead. His family had previously been farmers at Newbigging on the edge of Hawick Common. His sister Agnes married mason John Armstrong from Wilton Dean and he had another sister who was grandmother of William Murray, gardener at Borthwickshiels. He was recorded at ‘Henderson’s Knowe’ in 1841. In 1851 he was a farmer of 630 acres at Bowanhill, employing 3 labourers, and in 1861 it was 650 acres, employing 2 labourers. He was still there in 1868. His toddy ladle is in the Museum, and he is buried in the aisle of St. Mary’s (with special permission of the Duke of Buccleuch). His housekeeper’s headstone at Teviothead is curtly inscribed ‘Tibbie Bell, Wat’s housekeeper, died 16th December 1863, aged 69’. He died unmarried. Walter (b.1790) farmer at Henderson’s Knowe on the 1841 census. He may have been related to Henry and Francis, who were labourers in the same place in 1799. Walter (b.1790/1) farmer at Wiltonburn. He is probably son of the earlier Walter from Wiltonburn. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He was listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835 and 1840. In 1851 he is listed as a farmer of 450 acres. His wife was Elizabeth and children included Margaret R., Walter, Elizabeth, Douglas, Walter D., Williamina J.N. and Ann T. Walter (b.c.1790) farm steward at Todsawhaugh according to the 1841 census. Walter (1790/1–1853) born in Cavers Parish, he became a shepherd at Singdean. He had been shepherd at Hyndlee to James Davidson, also called ‘Dandie Dinmont’, and was a keen fox hunter. He married Elspeth ‘Eppy’ Telfer, who died in 1881, aged 80. The couple had 5 boys and 5 (surviving) girls: Walter (b.1820); Helen (b.1822), who married Andrew Amos; James (b.1824); Margaret (1826–43); Jean (b.1828); Andrew (b.1830); John (b.1832); William (b.1834); Anne Elliot (b.1836); Christian E. (b.1840); and Eppy (b.c.1842). 2 of his sons were also shepherds and another was a gamekeeper. He is probably the Walter at Singdean appointed as a Parish elder in 1832 and listed as male head of family there 1835–41. It is said that he came across a French doctor who had settled in Scotland after the Peninsular War, and from him learned the secret of a herbal plaster that could cure cancer. This cure became quite famous at the time, and people would come from all around to try the cure. One particular story concerns the apparently successful treatment of a huge tumour on the wife of a tradesman from Galashiels. His son Andrew was shepherd at Singdean and he also had a daughter Esther. He was appointed an elder of Castleton Kirk in 1832. He is listed as male head of family at Netherraw in 1835–41. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. In 1822 he married Janet Roxburgh in Hawick. Walter of Newton (b.1798/9) 3rd son of Walter, tenant in Girnwood. He is said to have married an Elliot of the Harwood branch, possibly Helen in Hawick in 1838; this seems likely to have been Helen (b.c.1794), daughter of Walter in Hermitage. His daughter Margaret Ann married Andrew Scott, who was afterwards of Newton. He is probably the cattle-dealer of that name recorded on the Crescent along with James (who would have been his brother) in 1841. In 1851 he was farmer of 1000 acres at Satchells. In 1861 he was farming 385 acres at Newton and employing 10 people there; his wife was Helen (b.c.1797), from Newcastleton, and his nephew George Ballantyne was farm overseer. He was still recorded at Newton in an 1868 directory. His wife Helen ‘Elliott or Scott’ was recorded as owner of Newton in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874. Walter ‘Watty’, ‘Wattie Scott the Cairrier’ (d.1857) owner of a carriers business in Hawick. His stabling and yard were at the west side of where the Liberal Club was built, 78 High Street; this was referred to as ‘Wood Yard’ in the 1841 census, and he shared the premises with another carrier, James Best. His firm carried general goods to Berwick and elsewhere. He may be the Walter listed in 1837, leaving from the Grapes for Glasgow every other Tuesday, and for Langholm every other Thursday, as well as going to Selkirk every other Tuesday and Thursday. He may be the Walter listed in 1852 as carrier between Denholm, Hawick and Jedburgh once a week. He was also listed in 1852 going to Carlisle, Langholm and Longtown every Monday and Wednesday, Jedburgh and Kelso on Mondays and Fridays, and Selkirk, Melrose and Galashiels on Tuesdays and Fridays. His son, also Walter, was Cornet in 1859. Walter (18th/19th C.) labourer in Hawick. He married Eliza Borthwick. Their daughter Helen (1822/3–95) married George Wilson and carried on his greengrocer’s business on the Howegate after her husband died. Walter ‘Wat the Sweep’ (1799–1869) well known character in 19th century Hawick, with sooty black clothes and a huge bushy beard. He liked to recount astonishing tales of his own strength at harvesting and in the wars. He died in Hawick Poorhouse. Walter (1801–47) son of Sir Walter, he was 2nd Baronet of Abbotsford. In 1815 he played a ceremonial role in the ‘Carterhaugh Baa’, riding out with the Buccleuch banner to signal the start of the match. He died without issue. Walter (b.1812/3–92) son of Thomas and Christian. He was a joiner on Buccleuch Street (No. 4), like his father before him. He was listed as a joiner on Buccleuch Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 he was living with his sister Jean. He later married Christian (or Christina) Lillico in 1853 and their children included Thomas and William. He died at 4 Buccleuch Street. Walter (b.1814/5) coachman at Whitehaugh Cottage in 1841 and 1851.
His wife was Isabella and they had a son, also Walter. Walter (1817–44) 2nd son of Walter of Wauchope and Marion Macmillan. He was a doctor with the East India Company. He died at Allahabad, Bengal. Walter (19th C.) recorded being ‘of Haggishaugh’ in about 1874 when he was owner of part of Burnflat. He is probably the same as one of the other Walters. Walter (1820–84) born in Roberton Parish, son of Thomas and Agnes Leithead. He worked as a fuller in Wilton. His sister Janet married James Black. In 1851 he was living at Wilton Place and in 1861 at Upper Hope Park. He married Mary Beattie (from Selkirk), who died in 1891, aged 65. Their children included: Thomas (1849–1924), tweed manufacturer, who died in Toronto; John Beattie (b.1852); and Robert (or ‘Bob’, b.1864). In the 1880s his son Thomas was living at Ellabank with his widow Mary. He was said to be 61 when he died (probably in error) and was buried in Wilton Cemetery. Walter (19th C.) married Helen Elliot in Hawick in 1838. Walter (19th C.) married Ann Best in Hawick in 1837. Walter (19th C.) son of John, his mother being a Deans. He was last of more than a century of tenants of the same family at Hummelknowes Mill. He was recorded there in 1851, as farmer of 26 acres, living with his brother John, who was miller at Hummelknowes. He left the farm in 1855, moving to Ormiston. He was farmer at Ormiston Parkhead in 1861. He married Margaret Nichol and their children included: John (b.1846); William, J.P. (b.1848); Janet (b.1850); and Walter (b.1852). Walter (1819–99), J.P., born in Hawick, he spent most of his life in Langholm. He attended school in Hawick and served 2 apprenticeships there. In 1841 he was a journeyman skinner living on the Crescent. He was one of the first Precentors in the Free Kirk in Hawick, but then became a member of the Evangelical Union (i.e. Congregational Kirk) in Hawick. He married Joan Paisley in Hawick in 1842 and they lived in a thatched cottage near the Mill Path, which was completely flooded in 1846. He moved to Langholm in about 1850, walking all the way, and starting up as a skinner. There he was the main instigator of the Evangelical Union Kirk in Langholm, loaming the congregation the use of the ‘bark hoose’ before the church was built and also being the first Elder. He was a Temperance supporter, as well as member of the School and Parochial Boards. He was a Justice of the Peace and also Commissioner for Dumfriesshire. He lived at Holmfoot, which he left to the church when he died. He and his wife were buried at Staplegordon. Walter (1822–1892) son of William, tenant farmer at Girnwood. He took over from his father as farmer at Girnwood. He died unmarried and was succeeded in the tenancy by his niece Hannah Davies, who purchased the property. In 1861 he was listed as farmer of 600 acres at Girnwood and he was still there in 1868. Walter (b.1831) son of grocer and spirit merchant Walter, with his mother being Isabella Hogg. He was a chemist and druggist, being in Galashiels in 1859 and was at Ladhope in 1861, with his brother-in-law David Scott Park visiting. He later worked in Durham. In 1859 at Hawick Free Kirk, he married Ellen Cabourn Park, daughter of David Scott Park. Walter (1835/6–1892) son of grocer Thomas and Mary Helm. In 1874 or 1875 he was co-founder of Lyle & Scott’s, along with William Lyle. He was described as ‘a gentleman of long practical experience in the trade, having held important positions with eminent manufacturers here for years’. They built the firm up from modest beginnings into a huge concern, largely through his efforts. He married Margaret Law (who died aged 24), with whom his children were: Walter, died young; Thomas, died aged 23; and Margaret, who married John Elliot of Selkirk. He secondly married Helen Por- teous, with additional children: William P., Cornet in 1893; Robert P., killed in France in 1917; James; Isa Watson, who died young; and John P. He is recorded attending the 1891 Common Rid- ing in a carriage along with several of Hawick’s most respected elderly gentlemen. He died at Craigview, Denholm. Walter ‘Hawick Wattie’ (1844/5–1904) born in Hawick, said to be from a good family, he was a stockingmaker by trade. He was employed in Elliot’s shop for many years, but became a homeless wanderer. He roamed around the local countryside for many years. He was said to be ‘a good-natured, humorous man, with a fund of song and anecdote’. Always seen at Border fairs, he was often the worse for drink, and well known to local Magistrates. William Pef- fers immortalised him in a poem – ‘Now Wattie neither begs nor buys, Nor steals, nor sells, nor does he trock. For daily bread he jist relies On kindliness o’ country folk’ [WP], ‘...They’re Jamie Cant and Pally Wattie, Come, let us run them in’ [WE]. Walter (1845–1919) born at Syn- ton, son of William and Mary Scott. In 1861 he was a joiner’s apprentice with Thomas Waldie in Ashkirk. He emigrated to Canada, along with his brothers George and Alexander. He married twice and had 7 children. He died in York, Ontario. Walter E. (19th/20th C.) farmer at Pil \rum, who was Cornet in 1903 and one of the founder members of the Callants' Club. Walter Purdom (1859–1934), J.P., son of Robert and Mary Purdom. He was farmer at Falnash, being bequeathed the lease from his father. He was a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. Walter Ross ‘Wattie’ (1926–2006) son of Andrew and Buntie, who had moved to Canada, he was born in Winnipeg, but soon returned to the ‘Nitton’. He was widely stated to be the best Hawick R.F.C. player who was never capped for Scotland. He was Greens captain 1948/9 and 1952/3, won 30 sevens medals and regularly played for the South of Scotland, being renowned for his strong hand-off. He spent his life in farming and was also a keen curler. An enthusiastic Common Riding supporter, he first followed during the War years, was Acting Father in 1970 and served as President of the Mosstroopers and Callants’ Clubs. He married Joey (who was a teacher at Wilton School) and had children John Ross (Honorary Provost), Terry (also Acting Father) and Jill. Warin (13th C.) listed on a panel in Kent when the goods at Chileham, belonging to the late wife of Alexander Baliol were valued. His name occurs as ‘Warin Scot’, but it is unclear if he could be related to local Scotts. William (12th/13th C.) probably son of Richard and great-grandson of Uchtred Fitz-Scott. He attended the court of Alexander II, and is recorded as witness to a charter of Walter (grandson of Walter, Steward of Scotland) between 1207 and 1214. He may be the same William who witnessed charters by Walter the Steward to Paisley Abbey, a payment of rent for Paisley mill, a gift of a church in Ayrshire, a gift of lands in Perth and another related to Coldingham Priory, all perhaps in the 1220s; he is there recorded as ‘Willelmo Scot’. He may also be the William who witnessed a grant of lands in Strathblane around the 1240s. He was succeeded by Sir Richard, generally considered to be his son, who was probably the first Scott to own lands anywhere near to Hawick. It is possible that another son was Walter, who held lands in Peebles and signed the Ragman Rolls along with Richard in 1296. William (13th C.) recorded as William ‘le Scot’ in 1233 in Stratford (perhaps Stratford). He was tailor of Richard, Earl of Cornwall, and was commanded to be given the house in Bordeaux that had been taken from him by the Seneschal of Gascony. William (d.c.1243) recorded as ‘William Scot’ and William ‘of Stitchill’. He was recorded as Archdeacon of Worcester in 1218. In 1226 he was presented as Bishop of Durham, but this was objected to by King Henry III, and the election was quashed by the Pope in 1227. He may have been father of Robert Stichill, who was later Bishop of Durham. It is unclear if he was related to any other Scotts. William (13th C.) listed in Lincoln in 1252. Along with his wife ‘Hawise’, he had a writ ‘ad terminum’. William (13th C.) recorded as ‘le Escot’ in Cumberland in 1254. William (13th C.) recorded in Essex in 1259, when his daughter Matilda gave money for an assize. He was ‘Walter le Scot of Mapledystede’. William (13th C.) mentioned in 1261, when his son and heir John ‘le Escot’ was listed in a document relating to Trent in Northumberland. William (13th C.) recorded as being of ‘Parva Jernemue’ (i.e. Little Yarmouth) in 1262. This was in a set of pleas from several counties, given at Canterbury, involving John Baliol in Suffolk, in which he and others were fined. William (13th C.) recorded as ‘Willelmus Scot de Inethal’ and ‘Willelmo Scot in Ethal’ in the 1279 assize roll of Northumberland. His lands were probably in the area near Stanford, where the court was held. William (13th/14th C.) signatory of the Ragman Rolls in 1296. He thus swore fealty to Edward I, along with 9 other people of the same name, although he was the only one from Roxburghshire. It is unclear how he might have been related to the main line of the Scotts of Buccleuch. One possibility is that he was a son of Sir Richard of Murthockstone (whose father was also William) who also signed the Ragman Rolls. William (13th/14th C.) from Glasgow, he was recorded in 1301 when he delivered letters to the Queen from the (English) Sheriff of Roxburgh regarding expenses. He may have been related to Robert, who was recorded at the same time. William (13th/14th C.) recorded as ‘William [Les] cot’ when he was on a jury in Lanark in 1302/3. He is presumably different from other Williams. William (13th/14th C.) servant to Sir John of Kingston. In 1303/4 he took letters between King Edward I and his master. William of Dundonald (d.1305) taken prisoner at the siege of Stirling in 1304. He was beheaded the following year. He may have been from the county of Cunningham. William (13th/14th C.) mentioned along with Robert in 1307/8 when they were paid for being messengers of the English army. They delivered something between Cumnock, Ayr and Lanark. It is possible he was the same as one of the other contemporary Williams.
William (13th/14th C.) recorded as a ‘hobelar’ (i.e. light horseman) in the English garrison at Berwick in 1312. William (13th/14th C.) probably resident of the Kintyre area. He was recorded in the Exchequer Rolls when he was paid for renewing the mill and kiln at Tarbert in 1326 and for completing the park at Tarbert in 1326. William (13th/14th C.) recorded in the Exchequer Rolls regarding the ‘fernes’ of Haddington in 1327, 1329, 1330 and 1331. William (14th C.) recorded as a one of the ‘palefridarii’ (probably some kind of horseman) for Edward III. In 1379 he was granted an annuity of 2 pence per day on account of being maimed while in service. William (14th C.) recorded in the Exchequer Rolls in the period 1379–84, when an annuity was paid to his heirs from the East Mill of Haddington. He may have been related to the nearly contemporary John, who was also associated with Haddington. Sir William of Balwearie (d. bef. 1406) son of Sir Andrew. He had a confirming charter as ‘domino Willelmo Scot de Balweary’ in 1393. He was succeeded by Sir Michael. William (14th/15th C.) recorded in 1404 when he gained the lands of ‘Nemphlar’ in Lanarkshire, which were resigned by his mother Janet Lockhart. William (14th/15th C.) brother of the Laird of Balwearie. In a charter of the Duke of Albany (probably about 1410), he was granted lands in Fife by his brother. William of Glack (14th/15th C.) younger son of Walter, 1st Laird of Synton. However, information about these generations is very uncertain. William (14th/15th C.) Chaplain of the King of Scotland. He was envoy to Scotland of the University of Paris, Rector of Culter and Vicar of Innerleithen. In about 1432 he became Rector of Biggar, exchanging it for Innerleithen with Thomas of Peebles. He was described as ‘secretary, orator, familiar domestic and continual commensal’ of the King, ‘priest, M.A., of Paris, who reads canonical hours with the king and has studied canon law for about four years’. William (15th C.) recorded in 1430 when he witnessed a charter for lands in Lanarkshire for Melrose Abbey. He was a Chaplain, probably with the Abbey. He could be the William, Master of Arts, who was empowered by James I to deliver letters confirming the treaty with English ambassadors to the Bishop of Durham in 1424. Perhaps the same ‘magistri Willelmi Scott’ was Master of the Hospital of St. Leonard’s near Lanark in the period 1428–31 according to the Exchequer Rolls. Perhaps the same William was a Chaplain who, along with other Scotsmen, had a warrant in 1448 for safe conduct to pass through England on their way to Rome. William (15th C.) witness to a sasine for the lands of Cessford in 1441. His son John was also listed, as well as Adam. It is unclear how they were related to other contemporaries. William (15th C.) witness to the 1447 sasine for the sale of the Cousinlands to Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. He is described as a presbyter and perpetual vicar of Westerkirk. The other Scots who witnessed the document were all close relatives of Scott of Buccleuch. William (15th C.) customs officer in Arbroath in 1447 and 1450, according to the Exchequer Rolls. In 1454 he had a sasine for the lands of ‘Manuell Macnab’ near Strathern. Probably the same William gave the payment in 1435 for the communities of Montrose and Arbroath. He may have been ancestor of the Bailie of Montrose of the same name recorded in 1507. William (15th C.) father of John, resident of Surrey. In 1459 there was a command from King Henry VI for John to get sasine of his lands, since he had proved his age. William (15th C.) Burgess of Edinburgh recorded in the Exchequer Rolls of 1456 when he was repaid for an advance to John Dalrymple in Bruges. William ‘Will’ (15th C.) recorded in 1474/5 when he compounded with the King for a remission for the slaughter of ‘Johnne Crossate’. He was said to have a ‘letter of slains’ with the injured party. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Williams. William of Foulshiels (15th C.) probably 3rd surviving son of Sir David, mentioned in the 1471/2 marriage contract with the sister of Archibald, Earl of Angus. Alternatively he could be the 4th son of Sir Walter of Buccleuch (or the 2 men could be compounded). He was witness to a charter by Robert of Haining in 1476, and may be the William who (along with John) witnessed a document for David of Buccleuch relating to Kirkurd in 1475/6. He was probably deceased by 1488, since he is not mentioned in the list of heirs in the Crown charter for the Barony of Branxholme in that year. He may have married in 1472 and have died without issue. It is unclear whether he was actually ‘of Foulshiels’, or if this was confusion with the later William of Foulshiels. It is also possible that he was the same as the Rector of Southdean or the same as the uncle (who was declared a rebel) of the later Robert of Allanhaugh. He was stated to be the son of David in 1478, when he took over from his father as Ranger of Ettrick Ward. According to the Exchequer Rolls he served as Ranger until at least 1484. He held a ‘stead’ at Cacrabank for his fee; at the same time John Murray represented Yarrow ward and James Pringle the ward of Tweed. He also leased Tushielaw in 1484 and is probably the William who had the lease of Deephope in 1486. He was recorded as deceased and former Ranger in 1490, with his arrears mentioned. It is possible he is the William of Tushielaw from which Robert Elliot had remission in 1493 for stealing a horse. William (15th C.) recorded as ‘rectore de Sowdone’ (i.e. Southdean) when he witnessed the resignation of the lands of Mangerton at Branxholme in 1482. He is ‘domino Willelmo Scot rec- tore de Sowdone’ (not as recorded in one place ‘Foudoun’) when he was witness to a charter of 1484/5 for the lands of Whitchesters being given by Sir David of Branxholme to his son Robert (of Allanhaugh). He also witnessed a resignation of the same lands shortly afterwards. In 1488/9 he witnessed an agreement between the Vicar of Hassendean and the Abbot of Melrose. In 1491/2 he was the priest who witnessed the last will of Sir David Scott, and who was to choose the priest who would say mass when he died. It is possible he was the same man as William, described as ‘decani tevidalie’ named among other priests at the Justice-aiire in Jedburgh in 1493. He seems likely to have been closely related to the Scots of Branxholme, perhaps even a brother or cousin of Sir David. William (15th C.) lord of the manor of Stapleford Tawney in Essex. In 1485, along with his son John senior, he was named in an indenture regarding their lands. His name was written ‘Scottie’. William of Goldielands (15th C.) mentioned in 1493 when his son William was allowed to ‘compone’ for rieving crimes. It seems likely that he was related to the Scotts of Buccleuch, but the connection is not known. He is the first known Scott of Goldielands, but whether he was closely related to the later ones is not known. William (15th C.) son of William of Goldielands. At the 1493 Justice-aiire held in Jedburgh, he was allowed to compone for stealing 12 goats from Fastheugh and for associating with English thieves. His surety was Robert of Whitchester. William ‘Gyde’ (15th C.) recorded in 1493 at the Justice-aiire in Jedburgh. Walter of Howpasley was allowed to compound for bringing in him and his brother John, as well as other ‘traitors of Levin’, to raid the farm of Harehead. He may have been related to other Scotts with the same nickname. William (15th C.) recorded in the 1494/5 Justice-aiire in Selkirk, along with ‘Wantoun’ Walter Dalgleish. William Dickson in Ladhope was convicted for resetting the pair, with his surety being Walter Scott of Howpasley. He may be the same as one of the other Williams. William (15th C.) recorded in 1497 when he had remission, along with ‘Johanne Scott and Johanne Scott’ for the slaughter of ‘Johnne Fischare’, fleeing to England, and other crimes. It is unknown to which branch of the Scotts he belonged. Sir William of Bal- wearie (15th C.) son of Sir Michael. He married Isabel, daughter of Sir John Moncrieff and his children included: Sir William, who succeeded; Alexander of Fingask; Euphame, who married Sir John Arnot of that Ilk; possibly Catherine, who married James Sandilands of Crvie and William Wood of Bonynontoun; and a daughter who mar- ried Robert Brown of Fordell. William ‘Will’ (15th/16th C.) one of the 4 men selected by the Sheriff of Roxburghshire to appraise the goods of Philip Turnbull of Whithope in 1500. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Williams. It is possible he was the same William listed among the bailies of the Sheriff of Roxburgh on the Precept of Chancery (probably in 1532) for William Scott of Hassendean retaining his prop- erties. William (15th/16th C.) son of David of Tushielaw, brother of Adam ‘King of Thieves’. He is recorded in 1502 when Patrick Turnbull in Wauchope had remission for associating with him and 2 Armstrongs (Archibald and Ninian) for their ‘Stouthreifs, Slaughters, Burnings, and other crimes’. He is probably also the William ‘in Thirlestane’ in 1502 who ‘came in the King’s Will’ for violently occupying the lands of Thirlestane, without having a lease from Patrick Crichton of Cranston-Riddell; Walter of Buccleuch served as surety. This case suggests some ongoing dispute over the lands of Thirlestane (foreshadowing what would come later). His brother John would later become Laird of Thirlestane. He may also have been related to John of Thirlestane, who was recorded earlier. William (15th/16th C.) son of James of Broadmeadows. He is recorded at the Justice-aiire in Selkirk in 1502 receiving re- mission for stealing cattle from John Romanno of that Ilk. His surety was John Scott in Hassendean, who may have been related. In a second case he had remission for injuring Walter Scott of Tushielaw and for stealing a horse from James Arres, 44 sheep from John Lauder in Philiphaugh and 7 cows from the younger Laird of Ormiston; the surety was again John in Hassendean. In a third case he was ‘in braid medois’ when he had remission for stealing 26 cows from William Murray in Wester Hailes, with Alexander, Lord Home as his surety. John, also listed as son of James of Broadmeadows, also had remission at the same Justice-aire, and was therefore his brother. William (15th/16th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire in Selkirk in 1503 in about 1502. The entry is crossed out in the transcribed record, but it is unclear why. Adam of Roberton presented him as a suitor for his lands (presumably of Roberton) before witnesses including William Todd, John Cant and William Muir. Essentially the same entry occurred earlier but was scored out. He is perhaps related to the Scotts of Roberton, and could be the same as one of the other Williams. William (15th/16th C.) younger son of Sir Alexander of Howpasley. He is said to have been Abbot of Melrose 1504-06, according to Scott of Rodono (although his name does not appear on lists of the Abbots, so this is unclear). William (15th/16th C.) one of the ‘bailies in that part’ appointed by Patrick, Earl of Bothwell in 1504 to infest Walter of Buccleuch in his father’s lands in Annandale. The others were his son Robert, along with Walter of Howpasley and Stephen. It is unclear who he was and whether he was closely related to the other appointed bailies. William of Fenwick (15th/16th C.) member of the panel for deciding on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers by James Douglas in 1509. In 1502 he is probably the William ‘in fenwik’ who, along with Robert in Synton, was fined by the Court of the Judiciary for failing to enter William Middemas. He was also ‘in fenwik’ when he had remission for stealing sheep and cattle from Bowden, with his surety being Robert in Synton and for stealing sheep belonging to the Kers from the farm of Cauldshielis, with his surety being Walter Scott of Headshaw. Probably the same William was tenant at Fenwick in 1510, when he was one of the sureties for Thomas, brother of Philip of Headshaw, who was implicated in the murder of John Murray of Falahill. Other sureties were William in Hawick, George in Goldielands, David in Whitehaugh and John of Haining, suggesting he was probably closely related to some of those branches. He was also recorded as ‘de Fenwyk’ in 1510 when he was a pledge for Stephen, who leased Deephope and Mount Common. He could be son of Walter of Fenwick, recorded in 1484/5, and probably related to Simon in Fenwick, who is mentioned in 1528 and 1540. William (15th/16th C.) described as ‘in Hawick’ in 1510 when (along with George in Goldielands and David in Whitehaugh) he was surety for Thomas Scott, brother of Philip of Headshaw, who had been involved in the murder of John Murray of Falahill. This may be the same William ‘in hawic’ who is recorded in the Register of the Privy Seal of 1502 receiving remission for the slaying of Simon Chapman; the same William is recorded in the records of the Justice-aire in Jedburgh being declared a fugitive for this same crime. He is likely to have been related to the Scott branches in Headshaw, Goldielands, Whitehaugh, Fenwick and Haining (since they are all mentioned in the same case). Probably the same William ‘in Hawik’ is among the men listed in the remission of 1526 for the attack on the Earl of Arran led by the Homes; after him are listed John, Thomas, John, Thomas, Philip and Steven, ‘brether to the said Johnne’, some of whom may be close relatives. Bailie William (15th/16th C.) witness to the sasine for the Barony of Hawick being given to James Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1514. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Williams. William (d.1532) of Balwearie, so of Sir William. He was one of a small number of Scottish noblemen taken prisoner at the Battle of Flodden. He sold off some of his property to pay the ransom. He married Janet, daughter of Thomas Lundy of that Ilk. Their children incuded Sir William (who succeeded), Thomas, Catherine (married James Sandilands of Cruvie and then William Wood of Bonnyton) and Marion. William of Whithope (d.1523) younger son of Sir Walter, 8th Laird of Branxholme and Buccleuch. In 1515 he had a charter of Whithope from James Douglas of Drumlanrig. He died without male issue and his brother Walter was his heir. William (15th/16th C.) named as ‘bailie’ in 2 instruments relating to lands in Lauchsanye in Aberdeen in 1521. William (15th/16th C.) merchant in Irvine. He was recorded in an instrument relating to the customs of Ayr in 1528. William (15th/16th C.) recorded as being ‘in Fawlishope’ (probably ‘Phaup’ in the Ettrick valley) in 1526 on a list of many Borders men who had remission for helping the Homes attack the Earl of Arran. George was also listed as being in the same place, and so probably related. William of Ormiston (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1531 as the person who ‘sought instruments’ in a transaction where Philip of Headshaw assigned his lands of Hartwoodburn to his 2nd son Robert on his death. He was uncle to Robert and hence presumably brother to Philip of Headshaw. He could be the deceased ‘Wlc of O…’ recorded in 1537 in relation to the lands of Todrig. He may be the same as William ‘in Hartwood’ who in 1536/7 accused someone of selling stolen skins. He may be the William in Hartwoodburn who witnessed a bond in 1541, involving William in Bowhill and ‘master’ Michael. He may also be the William in ‘Hartvoedburn’ listed along with John in Aikwood (‘Dustyba’) and others in 1544 when John Dunlop accused them of stealing his butter. William (16th C.) described as ‘in Hilhous’ in 1528 when he was one of the arbitrators (along with Robert of Howpsalay, William of Harden, Walter of Synton, John of Roberton and Simon of Fenwick) to decide on the succession of Borthaugh lands. William of Foulshiels (16th C.) son of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, probably ‘Wicked Wat’; he was probably an illegitimate son, since Sir Walter’s eldest surviving son was Sir William of Kirkurd (with the same name). In 1532 he had a charter for the lands of Foulshiels (in Selkirkshire). The later John of Foulshiels was probably his son or grandson. The earlier William, son of David of Buccleuch, may not be directly related (but this is uncertain). It is possible he was the same as Sir William of Kirkurd. William (15th/16th C.) recorded in Sundhope (in Yarrow) in 1533 when he witnessed a document about the murder of John Wilson, who probably also lived at Sundhope. William (15th/16th C.) uncle of William, who was son of Robert of Allanhauch. In 1535 the younger William was given remission for associating with him, since he had been declared a rebel, as well as for wounding George, son of Thomas Turnbull; it is unclear how much earlier these crimes took place. He must have been brother of the earlier Robert of Allanhaugh, and hence a son of Sir David of Branxholme. It is also possible that he was the same as William of Foulshiels, or some other contemporary William. Sir William of Balwearie (d.1532) elder son of Sir William and Isobel Moncrieff. He was taken prisoner at Flodden in 1513. He sold some of his lands of Strathmiglo to purchase his ransom. He became a Commissioner to Parliament in 1524 and was appointed as a Justice. In 1532 he was nominated to the College of Justice, but die later that year. He married Janet, daughter of Thomas Lundy of that Ilk. Their children included: Sir William, who succeeded; Thomas of Pitgorno (c.1480–1539); and possibly Marion, who married Alexander Scott and George Henderson of Fordell. William (16th C.) recorded being ‘in Faldishoip’ (i.e. Fauldshope) in 1534/5 when he witnessed a document in Selkirk. He was ‘in Faldishoup’ in 1535 when he witnessed another document in Selkirk. In 1536 he was ‘Voll Scot in Fauldishoup’ when he witnessed a transaction between Walter of Roberton and Michael of Aikwood. William of Hassendean (16th C.) probably a younger son of James of Kirkurd, or alternatively a grandson of James. He was heir to his brother (or uncle) John, succeeding in 1530. He is listed as being ‘in Halsyndene’ (i.e. Hassendean) in 1526 among the Borderers given remission for an earlier attack on the Earl of Arran (note that William, brother of Adam in Clarilaw, is listed separately, suggesting there were 2 closely related Williams at that time). In 1527 he is among the Lairds, under Walter of Branxholme, who had remission for their role in the Battle of Skirmish Field; he is there ‘of Hassindene’. He is recorded being pardoned in 1528, along with Robert of Allanhaugh, Robert of Howpsalay and William Turnbull of Minto. He may be the William who was one of the Bailies appointed in 1528 to infest David, son of Sir Walter of Branxholme, in his lands. In 1530 he was one of the Border Lairds who submitted themselves to James V to keep better order. He resigned the lands of Fallside (in Yarrow) to William, son of Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1532, as ratified by Queen Margaret in 1539. Probably in 1532 (note that Fraser makes this the 19th year of the reign of James VI, which must be incorrect) he had a Precept of Chancery for keeping his lands, after having forfeited them for supporting Sir Walter at Melrose (presumably in 1526); these lands were Over and Nether Newhall in the Barony of Chamberlain Newton and Easter Hassendean and ‘Deidrig’ in the half Barony of Hassendean. He was part of an inquest panel held in Jedburgh in 1533. In 1534 he purchased the 40-shilling lands of Nether Galalaw from Gavin Elliot, the letter of reversion being sealed at Hassendean Kirk. In 1536 he granted Thomas Turnbull ‘in the Tronyhill’ lands on the east part of Eastern Hassendean. He is recorded about 1537 in a ‘letter of reversion’ by David Scott in Clarilaw for the lands of the Mains of ‘Capitrig’ near Hassendean tower. In 1538 Thomas Turnbull of Rawflat had remission for stealing from him, specifically 2 letters of reversion for the lands of ‘Copitrig’ which were kept in his box in the house of Nicholas Rutherford in Edinburgh. He was given the lands of Fallside (again) in Selkirkshire in 1539. And it is probably the same William ‘in Hassendean’ who had a court dispute in 1540 with Thomas Turnbull, tenant of Rawflat, over ‘wadsets’. They were also in dispute over a 1536 marriage contract between his eldest daughter and heir (although it is unclear how this could have been, since he appears to have had sons) Elizabeth and George, heir to the same Thomas Turnbull. Probably the same William was witness to a sasine in 1551 confirming the Barony of Hassendean to Alexander Cunningham; his son David is also mentioned. David probably succeeded him, while Adam of Burnfoot and Walter may have been other sons. He probably married Elizabeth, the elder daughter of George Chisholme of that Ilk. William of Alton (16th C.) recorded in Scott of Satchells’ doggerel family history. It is stated that ‘John Scot of the Monks-tower’ was ‘brother to old William Scot of Altoun’. It is unclear how he was related to the other Scotts of Alton. William (16th C.) described as ‘in Layk’ in 1535 when he was charged with stealing cattle from Arthur Douglas and Thomas Fresall ‘in Efflesche’ (probably Effledge) and also Marion Davidson in the same place. It is unclear where ‘Layk’ might be. William (16th C.) recorded in Elindhope in 1539 when he complained in Selkirk that James Stoddart had taken violent possession of his lands of ‘est Eldinhoup’. However, Stoddart counter-claimed that he had ‘wrongfully manured and sowed my lands’. William (16th C.) smith who became a Guild Brother. He probably married Elizabeth, the elder daughter of George Chisholme of that Ilk. William of Alton (16th C.) recorded in Scott of Satchells’ doggerel family history. It is stated that ‘John Scot of the Monks-tower’ was ‘brother to old William Scot of Altoun’. It is unclear how he was related to the other Scotts of Alton. William (16th C.) described as ‘in Layk’ in 1535 when he was charged with stealing cattle from Arthur Douglas and Thomas Fresall ‘in Efflesche’ (probably Effledge) and also Marion Davidson in the same place. It is unclear where ‘Layk’ might be. William (16th C.) recorded in Elindhope in 1539 when he complained in Selkirk that James Stoddart had taken violent possession of his lands of ‘est Eldinhoup’. However, Stoddart counter-claimed that he had ‘wrongfully manured and sowed my lands’. William (16th C.) Smith who became a Guild Brother in Edinburgh in 1538, with his duty paid to the ‘Fabric of the Church’. Sir William of Kirkurd, ‘Whitecloak’ (d.1552), 2nd son and eldest surviving son of ‘Wicked Wat’. He became heir after the death of his brother David, but predeceased his father. In 1532 he was granted the lands of Falside in Selkirkshire, resigned by William Scott of Hassendean; this was ratified by Margaret, Queen of Scots in 1539. In 1539 he is ‘feuar of Fausyd’ when he and his father Sir Walter had their official give notice of removal to Thomas (son of Adam) and Robert of Howpasley. In 1541 he is recorded as ‘second sone to the lard of Bukcleuch’ when he claimed tenancy of the Crown lands of ‘Hawtherne’ in Yarrow. He took part in Border expeditions with his father and was present at Pinkie in 1547. In 1549 he entered into a bond of ‘man-rent’ with Mary of Lorraine, the Queen Regent, in which he was to receive the same fees and profits received by the deceased John Melville of Raith. Later in 1549 she granted him a pension of £100 Scots as a result of the damages he sustained defending ‘contrair oure auld inimeis off Ingland’. In 1550 he was listed as one of the 2 curators of James Crichton of Cranston Riddell, his step-brother (i.e. son of his mother by her first husband). He married Grizel Betoun, sister to his step-mother (they were both daughters of John Betoun of Creich with different mothers); after his death she remarried Sir Andrew Murray of Blackbarony. His children included: Sir Walter, the 10th Laird; Janet, who married Sir Thomas Kerr of Oxnam and Ferniehirst; Margaret, who married Sir John Johnstone of that Ilk and secondly Sir Alexander Jardine of Applegirth and was buried in 1618; Elizabeth, who married John Carnichael of Meadowflat, having previously had marriage contracts with Thomas, 2nd son of Sir Walter Ker of Cessford, as well as with John, grandson of Sir Andrew Ker of the Hirsel; and another daughter who married Walter Scott of Headshaw. John, recorded in 1632 as ‘brother naturall’ to Sir William Murray of Elibank was probably another son. There is an existing inventory of his estate when he died, which was only a few months before his father was murdered on Edinburgh High Street. William (16th C.) Custos of Irvine according to the Exchequer Rolls for at least the years 1537–42. He is recorded as ‘junior’ (suggesting there was a senior William in Irvine) and gave in his reports with Robert, who was surely related. William ‘the Boltfoot’ of Todrig and Harden (d.c.1561) 2nd son of Robert of Stiches. He was renowned as a fearless horseman and for several daring deeds. His nickname derived from a lameness caused by a wound received in battle. He is probably the ‘Willelmo Scott, fratre germano Walteri Scot de Styrkschaw’ who witnessed a document in 1507/8 relating to the tower in Hawick ‘between the bridges’ for Scott of Whitchesters. Originally of Todrig, near Synton, he acquired Harden in 1512, from his brother Walter of Synton and Stirkshaws, as confirmed in a 1535 charter from the Lord of Home. As well as Harden the lands included Highchesters, Todrig, Wester Essendie, Burnfoot and Shielswood; 1 acre at the east end still belonged to Walter, but that was also transferred according to another confirming charter of 1559 (although it is possibly 1550), in which his son Walter is named. He also had the lands of Hoscoate confirmed in 1525; these were subject of a letter of ‘warrandice’ with George, Lord Home in 1535. In 1530 he swore before the widow of Stephen Lauder (who had also held lands at Todrig) that he owed Lauder no more than a merk. In 1533 he was ‘in Toddryk’ when (along with John there) he witnessed a document relating to a murder at Sundhope. He is probably the William ‘in Hardene’ who in 1532... acted as an arbitrator for Walter in Headshaw in a dispute with his mother Isabel Murray. In 1535 he was tenant in Todrig when William Lauder (then Laird of Todrig) acted to have him removed. He received the lands of Nether Harden from Simon Scott of Fenwick in 1540 (finally consigned in 1566). He was listed on the 1526 remission for Borders men for supporting the Homes in an attack on the Earl of Arran; he is listed right after Walter of Snyton, and his brother David (possibly ‘Lady’, tenant in Stirches) is right afterwards. 1528 he was one of the Scotts who acted as arbitrators to decide on the succession to the lands of Borthaugh. He was listed in the Selkirk Protocol Books in 1532 as one of 2 arbiters for Walter Scott in Headshaw’s dispute with Elizabeth Murray. In 1548/9 he was sent (along with Adam of Burnfoot and Clement Crozier) by the Laird of Buccleuch to visit Alexander MacDougall, probably to extract a horse from him. In 1550 he was one of 10 Scotts who signed a bond with the Queen to keep order and hand over criminals. In 1550 he (and his wife Elizabeth Ker) had a sasine for estates at Todrig. Also in 1550 he is ‘in Todrig’ when, along with his son and heir Walter, he had a letter of reversion for the lands of Harden with Alexander, Lord Home. He is probably the William ‘in Harden’ who witnessed a Riddell document of 1551. Also in 1551 he signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’. In 1553 he and his wife were also mentioned in 2 documents of John, 4th Lord Hay of Yester. In 1553/4 he was listed among Scotts and their supporters who a group of Kers promised not to harm. And in 1555/6 he is probably the William in Harden who was summoned by Alexander Lord Home to appear at Melrose Abbey to receive redemption money for Hoscote. He married Mary, daughter of Chisholme of that Ilk (possibly Robert); she was mother of his successor, Walter, who may have been ‘Auld Wat o Harden’. However, there is dispute over these generations, some accounts placing an extra Walter (d.c.1563) between him and ‘Auld Wat’. He secondly married Elizabeth Ker of Fairnilee (possibly a widow of Riddell of that Ilk), with whom he had at least 2 sons: Robert of Burnfoot (in Ale Water); and George of Todrig. He probably died at Todrig – ‘The Laird and Lady of Harden Betwixt them procreat was a son Called William Boltfoot of Harden – He did survive to be a man’ [CWS], ‘To tak’ the foord he aye was first, Unless the English loons were near; Plunge vassal then, plunge horse and man, Auld Boltfoot rides into the rear’ [SWS]. William (16th C.) son of Adam, who lived at Kershope on the Ettrick. In 1533 he complained that Robert of Howpasley and Philip in Dryhope had ‘violently stolen’ goods from Kershope and he charged John Murray of Kershope with seeking restitution. He is probably the William ‘of Kershope’ who witnessed a document in Selkirk in 1536, relating to the lands of Friarshaw. William (16th C.) recorded being ‘in Haining’ when he witnessed a document in Selkirk in 1535. He may be related to John, who was in Haining in about 1534. William (16th C.) priest mentioned in the 1537 Charter of Douglas of Drumlanrig, along with several other clergymen. Since he is designated ‘Mr.’, he presumably already had his Masters degree and was a fully qualified priest. But his precise status in Hawick, relative to the other clergymen mentioned in the Charter, is unknown. William (16th C.) owner of half a particate of land on the south side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. William, son of William Scott is also listed as having 11 participates (and could be his son). One of these men is the ‘said William’ who also held 3 participates of land on the north side of Hawick. William (16th C.) recorded being ‘in Hartwoodmyres’ among the witness listed in 1539/40 for the instrument of sasine at ‘Fawsyde’ (probably in the Ettrick valley) for Janet Scott (widow of Robert ‘Elwand’) purchasing lands in Appletreehall from Robert of Howpasley; Simon, James and Roland are also listed and some may have been closely related. He is probably the Scott in Hartwoodmyres who was listed among the friends who would vouch for Alan Mithag in 1539/40. In 1541 he witnessed a document in Selkirk for Patrick Murray of Falahill. Also in 1541 he was of ‘Hartvood myris’ when he witnessed part of a marriage contract between a son of Robert of Allanhaugh and a daughter of John of Thirlestane. He could be the William recorded in 1542 when he asked Simon Shortreed (Vicar of Ashkirk) to produce ‘the evidents of his father’ and give sasine of a tenement to him. It seems he is distinct from the contemporary William in Hartwoodburn. In 1562 both he and William in Tushielaw witnessed a transaction for Robert of Howpasley (making it clear that they are different men). However, it is still possible he was the same as one of the other contemporary Williams. His son Thomas was also a witness in 1562. Also in 1562 he assigned to his son and heir John his steading of Gamescleuch ‘callit Eittrikysyde’, including a condition to follow the arrangements already made with Simon in Thirlestane; the witnesses included Robert of Howpsasley, Adam of Wamphray, William in Tushielaw and William’s son Walter. William (16th C.) recorded in 1530 as part of an action against Patrick Murray of Falahill and Alexander Tait of Piro. John Scott, Vicar of Hawick, stated that he (William) ‘inhabited and manured . . . le forest steid called Craggischank and received the benefits of the same . . . throughout a period of 12 weeks’. He is probably the same as one of the other Williams. William of Allanhaugh (16th C.) son of Robert. He was recorded as heir apparent of Robert in Allanhaugh and was entered into ward in Borthwick Castle in 1530/1 along with John, son of Walter of Synton; sureties were Robert, Lord Maxwell and John Johnstone of that Ilk. In 1535 he had remission for associating with his uncle William (then a rebel) and for wounding George, son of Thomas Turnbull. In 1541 his father infested him in his 6 merklands of ‘Qhyisyester treis’ in the Barony of Whitchesters, as part of his marriage contract with Margaret, daughter of John of Thirlestane. He appears to have succeeded his father in about 1557. In 1557 there are several renters (from Melrose Abbey) of lands in Ringwoodfield who may have been his sons, assuming he was ‘the guidman of Alanehauch’ at that time. They are: ‘Young Robert’, who rented Brugh; Simon and John, who rented Stobicote; and Adam ‘of Alanehauch’, who rented ‘Rigwodhat’, and was presumably either a son or brother. He was probably succeeded by his son William (or there may have been an additional Robert between). William of Aikwood (16th C.) son of Michael of Aikwood. In about 1529 he and his father gained half the lands of Bowhill from his cousin Isabel Murray. He was younger in Aikwood in 1530 on a list of men from the Selkirk area who acknowledged that they had taken prisoners, horses, meal and other goods from men they thought were traitors of Anndale, but understanding they were legitimate travellers from Moffat had returned all the goods; John in Aikwood was also listed. In 1540/1 he witnessed an agreement for John Scott being responsible for the death of Walter Down, with his father Michael and brothers Robert and Walter as other witnesses. He had a confirming charter for the lands of Aikwood in 1541. He may also be the William in Bowhill who in 1541 bound himself with others, including ‘master’ Michael (probably his father) and notary Ninian Brydon; William in Hartwoodburn was a witness. He was succeeded by his brother Robert. Robert’s sister Elizabeth (who would then also be his sister) had a marriage contract in 1580. William (16th C.) recorded in Catslack in 1531/2 when he was part of an inquest to rule on a land arrangement in Selkirk, along with several other Scotts. He was surely related to other Scotts associated with Catslack. William (16th C.) 3rd son of George of Blindhaugh and Margaret Turnbull. In 1544 he was designated as the successor to his father’s lands of Leap Hill and Langhope. Perhaps the same William was recorded as a ‘young man’ and in ‘Blyndhaucht’ in 1561 when he purchased a house and yard in Selkirk. He also witnessed a bond between Bruntons and Armstrongs in Selkirk in 1561. Bailie William (16th C.) witness to a bond of 1546 for Elliot of Redheugh and others entering several Elliot’s (of Tholrieshope etc.) as prisoners with Kerr of Ferniehirst. He was described as ‘balye of Hawik’ and may have been the same as one of the contemporary Williams. Sir William of Balwairie (16th C.) son of Sir William and Janet Lundy. During his father’s lifetime he gained the lands of Innertiel and was known as ‘of Innertiel’. He married Isabel, daughter of Patrick, 4th Lord Lindsay of the Byres. His children included: Sir William, who succeeded; Andrew of Glendoick and Kirkstyle, progenitor of the Scotts of Ancrum; and Catherine, who married Laurence Mercer of Aldie. William (16th C.) recorded as ‘Wyllm Skott’ in 1548/9, when he was taken prisoner by the English when they burned the Laird of Buccleuch’s tower in Hawick. He thus may have been a servant of Scott of Buccleuch. William (16th C.) tenant of Whames, listed in 1549 among the men who complained that their farms had been raided and burned by a group of English and Kers. He is probably related to John, who was also in Whames at that time, and another William who was there in 1580. William ‘Willie’ (16th C.) younger of Branxholme, he supposedly led the raid to avenge ‘Jamie Telfer of the fair Dodhead’ and was killed in the process. Unfortunately, it seems likely that he never existed. William (16th C.) took sasine for the lands of Colifort in 1550. He was described as being son of Wat ‘of Teviotdale’. He was probably related to Hob, who was convicted of rieving crimes in 1564. He is probably related to the ‘Wyll of Coliforde’, whose son ‘Reid Wyllie’ witnessed a document for Scott of Branxholme in 1585. William (16th C.) described as factor of ‘Sanct Columbes Inche’, i.e. Inchcolm, in a legal instrument of 1550. The other factor was Lady Methven, and the pair agreed to accept certain amounts of grain. from 2 men called Tyre. William (16th C.) described as being ‘in Hawick’ in 1557. He occupied ‘Soltracroft’, as well as ‘Blakatis ayker’, for which he owed rent to Trinity Collegiate Church in Edinburgh. His son and heir apparent Robert is also mentioned. In 1565/6 he had another lease of lands from Trinity Collegiate Church, specifically for ‘Soltra-croft’, ‘Blacatis-aker’ and ‘Campioun-croft’. It is unclear how he was related to other contemporary Scotts. He may be the ‘Wilelmum Scot in Hawik’ who was on the ‘retrou’ panel for Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1553/4. He may be the Walter ‘in Hawik’ who witnessed a transaction in Selkirk in 1545, involving Patrick Kelso and his wife Christian Scott; he is probably related to the George in Hawick who bought a tenement in Selkirk from the same Patrick Kelso and Christian Scott. He may have been related to the earlier and later Williams who are also ‘in Hawick’. William (16th C.) became a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh in 1553/6, in right of his wife, Helen, daughter of Thomas Ud-dart. The duty was paid to the ‘Fabric of the Church’. Sir William of Balwearie, Balvey and Innertiel (16th C.) son of Sir William and Isabel Lindsay. He married Helen, daughter of Sir William Lauder of Hatton and his children included: Michael, who died before him; and Sir William, who succeeded. William of Bowden (d.bef. 1582) recorded in about 1557 when he rented Northhouse from Melrose Abbey. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. Probably the same William ‘of Bolden’ was listed in 1553/4 among Scotts and their supporters who a group of Kers promised not to harm. He was deceased in 1562 when his son Walter witnessed a transaction involving the Scotts of Allanhaugh, taking place at Branxholme. William (d.bef. 1561) Burgess of Selkirk. In 1561 his son and heir George paid entry to Patrick Murray for his lands. This was with the assistance of his friend Walter. In 1562 his son George (and George’s wife Janet Veitch) paid additional entry money to Walter and Walter’s son Walter. William of Chapelhill (16th C.). His daughter Ann married Walter Chisholme of that Ilk. He was surely related (perhaps father) to Walter of Chapelhill, who was listed by Scott of Satchells as one of the 24 ‘pensioners’ of Buccleuch. William ‘of Gluk’ (16th C.) probably ‘of Glack’, he was witness to a 1556 document relating to Nether Harden. His brother John was also a witness. He was surely closely related to the later William of Glack, or perhaps even the same man. William (16th C.) became a cutler Burgess of Edinburgh in 1562, in right of his wife, Dorothe, daughter of smith John Walter. William (16th C.) became a merchant Burgess of Edinburgh in 1565, by right of Bailie William Paterson, ‘who is souertie for stob and staik’. William ‘Will’ (16th C.) recorded in ‘Montbernger’ in 1578/9 among 22 Border Lairds who did not appear before the Privy Council when summoned. He acted as surety for 2 Elliots who had previously been entered before the Council. He was also listed in 1581, among a large group of Border Lairds denounced as rebels for failing to present men to answer their rieving crimes. In 1581 he witnessed James Ker in Yair receiving sasine for Catslack and Mountbenger. He is listed among ‘Landit Men’ of Scotland in about 1590. In 1590/1 he was William ‘in Montbernger Wester’ when John Hay of Smithfield acted as his surety. He was in ‘Wester Momberngear’ in 1592 when James Lawson of ‘Carnmure’ was his surety for not resetting those who had helped the Earl of Bothwell. In 1599 he was among a list of Scotts who Sir Walter of Branxholme declared were ‘his men’ and therefore accepted responsibility for making them answer to justice. It is likely he was the same as another contemporary William. He could be the same as William of Montbenger, whose son Robert was appointed as tutor to his brother James of Newholme’s grandchildren. William ‘in Hawick’ (16th C.) referred to by Scott of Satchells as ‘William in the Mott’ when listed among the ‘pensioners’ of Buccleuch. He was apparently a brother of a Walter Scott of Harden (probably ‘Auld Wat o Harden’) and was son of either Walter of Harden (who died c.1563) or of William, 1st Laird of Harden. He held lands beyond the West-Port in Hawick (presumably named for proximity to the Mote), these being given to him for his service to Buccleuch (according to Satchells). He was living in 1591. He was probably the brother of Walter of Harden listed (along with his brother) among 200 Scotts and associates who stole livestock from Drumelzier and Dreva in 1591/2. He may be the brother of Walter of Harden listed among 200 Scotts and associates who stole livestock from Drumelzier and Dreva in 1591/2. Scott of Rodono suggests that the earlier Scotts of Todrig were descended from him. It is possible that the same William ‘in Hawik’ was involved in a precept of ‘clare constat’ and gave the associated instrument of sasine for Martin Douglas inheriting the lands of Crook from his father William in 1592; he was thus either a lawyer or Bailie. He should not be confused with William Graham, ‘William of the Mote’, a prominent Englishman of the same time, who lived at Liddel Mote. William (d.1579) probably a resident of Edinburgh. Along with a man called Turnbull, a schoolmaster in Edinburgh, he was executed for composing ‘rhyming libels’ about the death of John Stewart, 4th Earl of Atholl. These supported the rumours that Atholl had been poisoned at Stirling by the Earl of Morton (James Douglas). They were executed at Stirling. William (16th C.) brother of Robert of Raesknowe. In 1581 he witnessed an arrangement where Katherine Scott, widow of Robert of Colifort, resigned her lands of Hundleshope to her son Thomas; his brother Robert was also a witness, as well as William of Allanhaugh. He may be the same as one of the other Williams. William (d.bef. 1582) tenant in ‘Braidle’ (probably Broadlee in Ashkirk Parish) recorded in 1581/2 when his son John witnessed a transaction in Selkirk. William of Deloraine ‘Cut at the Black’ (16th C.) listed as one of the 24 ‘Pensioners’ of Buccleuch by Scott of Satchells. He had the lands of Nether Deloraine for his service. He was said to be a brother of Scott of Haining, a branch that was descended from Hassendean, and he himself was the progenitor of the Scotts of ‘Scotstarbet and Elie, now called Ardross’. William of Tushielaw (16th C.) probably son of Adam ‘King of Thieves’ (although Satchells suggests there is a Robert in an intervening generation). He could be the William listed as a son of Adam of Tushielaw in the 1526 remission for a large number of Borderers who had attacked the Earl of Arran; the sons listed are Robert, John and William (in that order), and so it is also possible that Robert was the eldest son of Adam and that he (William) succeeded his older brother, or could alternatively have been Robert’s son (consistent with Satchells’ version). He could be the William ‘in Tussilaw’ who witnessed a transaction for Elizabeth Gledstains in Selkirk in 1533. It seems likely he is the tenant in Tushielaw and Cowanlaw recorded in 1541, who may also have occupied Mount Common (‘alias Deiphope’), as well as Cacrabank (along with his mother, who may therefore have been the widow of Adam). In 1553/4 he was listed among Scotts and their supporters who a group of Kers promised not to harm. He was ‘in Tuschelelaw’ in 1562 when he witnessed a transaction for Robert of Howpasley. Also in 1562 he and his son Walter witnessed a transaction for William in Hartwoodmyres. He acted as surety for William Cranston of that Ilk in 1563, along with his son and heir apparent, Walter. Also in that year he was accused by the Queen’s Advocate of theft and reset from Robert Elliot of ‘Bellelie’. He was also fined for the non-compliance of Robert Scott of Horsleyhill for similar crimes. He and his son Walter took sheep from the lands of Baillelee, belonging to Dand Elliot; in 1563/4 they were ordered by the Privy Council to replace the stolen sheep. In 1564 he was on an assize that convicted several men (including Scotts) of sheep-stealing and another that dealt with the murder of David of Hassendean. Also in 1564 he was listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. He may have married Grizel, daughter of Robert of Thirlestane (although that could be Walter, his grandson, unless there were 2 similar marriages). In 1573 his son ‘Wat in Hartwoodmyris’ was to present William Porteous ‘in Borthruikbra’ for trial in Edinburgh and he himself entered the Littles of Tushielaw Mill and others. In 1574 he witnessed a discharge between the Douglases of Cavers and the Cranstons of that Ilk. In 1580 he and Sir Walter of Birkenside appointed 2 other Scotts to decide on George of Synton’s claim on lands in ‘Ilistoun’. In 1581 he and Robert of Alkwood were the ‘byndaris’ in an action of Adam in Bonnington against Robert of Haining, regarding ownership of 6 chalders of grain; his son Walter in Hartwoodmyres was also mentioned. He is probably the William listed among many Scotts and their allies in a 1581 summons to appear before the Privy Council regarding the feud with the Elliots and Armstrongs. In 1582 he is recorded as having witnessed the delivery of some documents by William and David (sons of Adam of Allanhaugh) to Walter of Goldielands. He is probably the ‘Scot of Tuschelaw’ listed in Monipennie’s c.1594 (but put together much earlier) compilation of Border lairds. His children included: Walter, who succeeded; William of Midgehope (ancestor of the Scotts of Horsleyhill); James of Hundleshope; and John, who killed the father of John Govane of Cardrono. William (d.c.1564) tenant in Leith whose will was registered in Edinburgh in 1564. William (d.c.1567) described as servitor to Cuthbert Ramsay, Burgess of Edinburgh, when his will was registered in Edinburgh in 1567. William (16th C.) Burgess of Edinburgh. The will of his wife Helen Udwart was registered in Edinburgh in 1565/6. William (16th C.) younger son of Sir John of Thirlestane. He was recorded as brother-german of Robert of Thirlestane in 1567 when he witnessed the marriage contract between Elizabeth, sister of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch and Thomas, son of Sir Walter Ker of Cessford. He could be the ‘Wylle of Thirlstane’ who in 1581/2 witnessed a transaction for Robert of Aikwood. William (d.c.1572) maltman at the West Port in Edinburgh. His will was registered in Edinburgh in 1572/3. William (16th C.) son of Walter of Headshaw. He is recorded as William, son of Walter of ‘Eidshaw’ when warded in 1571. In 1572/3 he swore allegiance to the Crown and Regent, suggesting that he had been suspected of being a supporter of the fugitive Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst. He is probably the ‘William Scott of Eidschaw’ recorded in 1571/2 when he signed the bond to act against Borders thieves. Sir William of Balwewearie (16th/17th C.) son of Sir William and Helen Lauder. He served as surety for the Elliots in the register of the Privy Council on two occasions in 1573. He claimed in 1573 that he had not received John Elliot of the Park, and had a bond with Sir Walter Ker of Cessford, Andrew Ker of Faldonside and Walter Riddell of that Ilk. He married Janet, daughter of John Lindsay of Dowhill and was succeeded by his son Sir James. Other children probably included: Margaret, who married John Melville of Raith; Barbara, who married Thomas Forthingham of Pannie; Robert; George; and Agnes. He is probably the Sir William of Balwewearie whose wills are recorded in Edinburgh in 1575/6 and 1578. William (16th C.) described as ‘in Harden’ in 1574 when, along with James ‘in Quhistslaid’, he paid back a loan on the mill of Easter Burnfoot to Sir Walter Scott of Birkeneside. The same year they also paid back a loan to Sir Walter of Branxholme for lands at Birkenside. The same year they also paid back a loan to Sir Walter Scott of Blindhaugh. He served as an arbitrator on behalf of Robert of Burnfoot and Robert of Burnhead in a case against Thomas Dalgleish of Deuchar and Simon of Gamescleuch. In 1579/80 he served as an arbitrator on behalf of Robert of Burnfoot and Robert of Burnhead in a case against Thomas Dalgleish of Deuchar and Simon of Gamescleuch. In 1580 he was ‘in Huntlie’ when and his brother George in Synton gave their consent for Robert, son of their deceased brother James in Whitslade, to marry Elizabeth, daughter of Robert in Aikwood (this confirms that these 3 men were brothers, and hence all sons of John, younger of Synton). Additionally in 1580 he was meant to pay certain amounts to the 5 children of the deceased John of Blindhaugh; David Fairlie took the bond to stand as cautioner for him. In 1580/1 he witnessed an agreement to settle a dispute between George of Synton and Walter of Stirches regarding the lands of Synton Mill. In 1581 he witnessed an agreement in Selkirk where James Langlands of that Ilk resigned his lands to his son Robert Langlands. He was also in Huntly in 1581 when (along with George of Synton, Walter of Goldielands, Robert of Haining and others) witnessed an agreement between Margaret, widow of William of Burnfoot and her son, also William. Furthermore, in 1581 there was a marriage contract between his daughter Janet and William Scott in Burnfoot, with the dowry being 400 merks, while his daughter received liferent of Shielwood. And in 1581 he agreed to take Marion Scott (daughter of the deceased John in Blindhaugh) into his household (suggesting that... he may have been a close relation). He was listed among many Scotts and their allies in a 1581 summons to appear before the Privy Council regarding the feud with the Elliots and Armstrongs. He may be the William ‘in Huntly’ who signed the Scott clan bond in 1589 (and was also mentioned ‘in Huntlie’ in a case involving theft of a horse by neighbours in Hutlerburn). He was listed as ‘Will Scott of Huntlie’ on the roll of landed men of Scotland in about 1590 and was on an inquest in 1592. He was probably ancestor of the Scotts of Huntly, being succeeded by Robert of Huntly, who was at the Carlisle raid in 1596. William (16th C.) recorded in 1579/80 as ‘alias William with the teyth’, presumably referring either to his teeth or to a tythe. John Sinton stated that he had stolen 5 sheep from near Simon Glendinning’s house that belonged to [blank] Coltarte’. The instrument was witnessed at the house of William, younger Burgess of Selkirk. William (16th C.) recorded as son of John ‘late in Quhomes’ (i.e. Whames) 1580 when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk between John Scott in Whithope and Robert Scott of Haining. He was probably related to (or perhaps even the same as) the William recorded as tenant in Whames in 1549. William ‘Will’ of Allanhaugh (16th C.) probably the son of Robert of Allanhaugh recorded in the Register of the Privy Council for 1581. He was recorded as ‘Willie of Allanehauch’ in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. William (16th C.) brother to ‘Scot of Hassinden’, as well as brother of Philip. In 1583/4 he was among a number of men from the area who were denounced for failing to appear to give evidence in a case against the Turnbulls of Bedrule. It is unclear who was Laird of Hassendean at that time. William ‘Reid Wullie’ (16th C.) son of Will of Colliford. He is recorded in 1585 when he was one of the witnesses to the bond in which Sir Walter of Branxholme and Robert of Allanhaugh resolved a family feud. He is listed as ‘William Scot, sone to Wyll of Collefurde, called Reid Wullie’; it is a little unclear whether the nickname referred to him or his father (who is recorded in 1550). William (d.bef. 1583) smith in Edinburgh. He was already deceased in 1583 when his eldest son James became a merchant Burgess and Guild Brother in Edinburgh. He could be the smith William who became a Guild Brother in 1538, with his fee going to ‘the Fabric of the Church’.

William ‘Stand-in-the-rain’ (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 being ‘callit Stand in the Rayne’, among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. One can imagine how he got his nickname. William ‘Will’, ‘Minedirt’ (16th C.) recorded on a list of Borderers accused of crimes in 1586/7. His name appears as ‘Will Scott, callit Minedirt’, with the meaning of his nickname being unclear. William (16th C.) brother of ‘Braid’s Andrew’. The pair were included in a long list of men from the Borderers who had absented themselves from court, but were given one last opportunity in 1586/7 to find cautioners. Probably the same man was ‘Willie Scott, called the Braid’s Will’ recorded in 1587/8 among Elliots and Armstrongs (probably from Ewesdale) who William Maxwell, Lord Herries, was ordered to present to the Privy Council. William (16th C.) tenant in Kirkhope. The will of his wife Jane Scott was recorded in Edinburgh in 1581/2; she was described as ‘soyme spouse’ to him. He presumably lived at Kirkhope near Selkirk. William (d.c.1591) described being ‘in Cottartoun of Gourdie’ in Angus when his will was registered in Edinburgh in 1591. William (d.bef. 1595) resident of the Edinburgh area. He was already deceased in 1595 when his son Robert became a saddler’s apprentice in Edinburgh. William ‘Little William’ (16th/17th C.) resident of Selkirk recorded in 1590. He was ‘called Little William’ on a list of men promising not to harm Patrick Murray of Falahill or his dependants. ‘Little James’, Burgess in Selkirk, was also listed and perhaps related. William of Todshawhaugh (16th/17th C.) listed by Scott of Satchells as being ‘of Totchahaugh’ and among the 24 ‘Pensioners’ of Buccleuch. He was said to be descended from Scott of Borthaugh. He was surely related to Adam of Todshawhaugh and his son Walter, recorded in 1594. He may be the William ‘alias callit Wille of Todschawhaugh’ who was recorded as a resident of Whames in 1549; at that time Walter was tenant of Todshawhaugh, and so probably related. William of Abbotshall (d.c.1600) probably son of Thomas. In 1595 he made an agreement with his cousin Sir James of Balwearie that his own son James would inherit the Scott lands of Balwearie, Innertieil, Strathmiglo and Glendock if Sir James’ line were to fail. He infested someone in lands in Pittenweem in 1598. He was described being ‘of Abbotsshall, par. of Kirkcaldy’ when his will was registered in Edinburgh in 1600. His son James was served as his heir in 1606. William of Glack (16th/17th C.) probably related to the earlier William of Glack. He was listed among many Scotts and their allies in a 1581 summons to appear before the Privy Council regarding the feud with the Elliots and Armstrongs. In 1585 he was ‘of Glak’ when he witnessed a bond (signed at Selkirk and Hawick) settling a feud between the Scotts of Brauxholm and the Scotts of Allanhaugh. He may be the Laird of ‘Glak’ who was in 1589 on a list of Border Lairds who failed to appear before the Privy Council and who was listed among several Border Scotts in the ‘Roll of the Clans’ of 1590. He was probably the William ‘in Clack’ stated by Scott of Satchells to have assisted in the rescue of Kimmont Willie in 1596. In 1596/7 he was ‘in Glak’ when part of the group of Scotts (under Robert of Thirlestane) who attacked ploughmen from Peebles; they were denounced as rebels for not appearing. In 1597/8 Mark Kerr, Commendator of Newbattle complained that his servant Ralph Ker had been attacked and captured by him, along with his brother James ‘in Jedwartfield’ and Arthur of Gamecleuch. In 1599 he was ‘in Glak’ when James of Bowhill was cautioned for him not to harm the provost, bailies, council and community of Peebles. Also in 1599 his brother Thomas was recorded among a list of Scotts who Sir Walter of Brauxholm declared were ‘his men’ and therefore accepted responsibility for making them answer to justice. He was ‘in Glak’ when among the men listed (along with Walter of Headshaw) whom Sir Robert of Thirlestane was bound not to reset in 1609. This was part of the dispute between the Scotts of Thirlestane and Tushielaw. Probably the same William ‘of Glak’ was cautions for his brother John of Hundlehope in 1618, promising that John would not molest the Moffats of Granton. William (16th/17th C.) son of Adam of Allanhaugh. In 1582 he and his brother David acknowledged that Walter of Goldielands had returned some documents that he had been given to keep for them. William (16th C.) son of Walter of Goldielands. In 1591/2 he is listed along with his brothers Walter and David among 200 Scotts and others who were accused of stealing livestock from the farms of Drumelzier and Dreva. He may be the same as one of the other Davids. William (16th/17th C.) servitor of the Laird of Buccleuch. He is listed among the 180 supporters of Sir James Johnstone who had a respite in 1594 for killing Lord Maxwell and others at Drye Sands. It is unclear if he is the same as one of the other contemporary Williams. William of Midgehope (16th/17th C.) 2nd son of William of Tushielaw and brother of Sir Walter of Tushielaw. In 1557 he was ‘Vil Scot of Migerhoup’ when he paid rental for Fawhope to the monks of Melrose. However, there is some confusion, since he was presumably the William ‘in Megehop, son of the deceased Wat Scott’ who occupied lands in Ettrick and Rodono in 1556. He may also have been called ‘Will’ of Hartwoodmyres (although there is possible confusion with his son here). He was succeeded by his son William, who was at the rescue of ‘Kimmont Willie’. William ‘Will’ of Hartwoodmyres (16th/17th C.) listed on the ‘Roll of the Clans’ of about 1590. He is probably the William ‘in Hartwoodmyris’ who in 1581, among with several other Scotts (from Gamecleuch, Gilmanscleuch, Chamberlain Newton, Edinburgh, North Bowhill, Dryhope, Catslack and Howpasley), supported William of Tushielaw and Robert of Aikwood in representing Adam in Bonnington in a dispute with Robert of Haining; he was surely related to some of these other Scotts, perhaps including Walter in Hartwoodmyres (son of William of Tushielaw), who was also listed. In 1592 Gideon Murray of Glenpyet was surety for him ‘to answer for all attemptattis committed or to be committed by himself and those for whom he is liable’. In about 1593 he and Walter of Stirkshaws were under caution, with Gideon Murray as surety. He was also said to have assisted in the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. He was in 1599 listed among Scotts and others who were charged to find sureties for ‘observing the King’s peace’. In 1602 he signed a bond among Border Lairds for keeping the peace. Also in 1602 he was denounced as a rebel for not paying £14 for his part of the taxes of Ettrick Forest. He was witness to the bond of 1612 for keeping peace on the Border. He may have been son of William of Tushielaw, and therefore the same as William of Midgheap (this is unclear, although a close connection with the Scotts of Tushielaw seems clear). He was probably succeeded by Robert. William of Midgheap (16th/17th C.) son of William of Midgheap and grandson of William of Tushielaw. He was said to have been at the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. He was succeeded by his son Robert, Bailie of Hawick. William of Hundleshope (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1592 when his cautioner was James Stewart of Tinnis. This was among a long list of conditions imposed by the King following the Falkland Raid. He was among a group of Scotts who attacked Adam Veitch’s lands at ‘Fechane’ in 1602; his brother Thomas was also mentioned, as were Scotts of Thirlestane, Gamescleuch, Bonnington and Bowhill. Also in 1602 Sir John Murray of Ettleston and Gideon Murray of Elibank were ordered to remove him from the lands of ‘Feithane. In 1603 he and his brother attacked the same lands again, having been declared rebels. William of Howpasley (16th/17th C.) succeeded Walter, who was probably his father. In 1595 he, along with John Rutherford of Hunthill and Hector Turnbull of Wauchope were ‘put to the horn’ for failing to pay to the Sheriff their ‘blench ferm and castle-wards’; in 1599 there was a complaint about the Sheriff (James Douglas of Cavers) for not prosecuting the men. In 1599 he is probably the Scott of Howpasley who was surety for himself, his son John and Walter of Ladhope. In 1602 he signed a bond among Border Lairds for keeping the peace. He is on a list of several Scotts and others who the Baron of Hassendean (James Cunningham, Earl of Glencairn) tried to oust from their lands in 1603. In 1605 Alexander Scott (‘Lang Sandy’) discharged him from his obligation in the annual rent of the lands of Wark. There was a ‘horning’ of 1607 requiring him to remove from ‘Longhauch, Ramseclewis, Diksone’s Reid, Howpaisal and Schawis’ by the superior of the lands, James Douglas of Drumlanrig. This was followed by an action in 1610 against him and James Gledstains for not paying taxes on some of the same lands. He may have been the husband of Lady Howpasley who instigated the slaughter of sheep there in 1615 (in which case he was already deceased). In 1620 the Keeper of Edinburgh Tolbooth complained to the Privy Council that money was still owed for furnishing him (the deceased William) with food and drink during his several years in prison; Walter, Earl of Buccleuch and John of Synton had at that point still not paid the minimum 900 merks promised (out of an estimated total bill of 2600 merks). Howpasley is said to have passed to Robert and Walter (cousins of Patrick of Tanlawhill) and then to the Scotts of Thirlestane and later the Scotts of Crumhaugh. William (16th/17th C.) became a merchant Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh in 1596, as eldest son of the deceased Nichol. William (16th/17th C.) son of James ‘in Hawick’. In 1595 he became a skinner’s apprentice with Samuel Wilson in Edinburgh. William (16th/17th C.) referred to as ‘called of the Know’ in 1608. Along with his brother Robert, Bailie of Hawick, and their surety James Scott, Bailie of Selkirk, they appeared for themselves and for their brothers George and David, with a bond not to harm Thomas Abernethy, minister of Hawick. It is unclear what the nature of the dispute was, but the minister left 2 years later. It is also unclear whether this ‘Know’ was the one at Teviothead, in Hassendean, perhaps at the Tower Knowe, or elsewhere. There were also several Bailie Roberts around that time, and it is unclear which one this is. William (16th/17th C.) probably son of Thomas and brother of Robert of Haining. In 1579/80 he was recorded as brother of Robert of Haining witnessed a transaction involving land in Lilliesleaf. In 1580 he witnessed 2 agreements between his brother Robert of Haining and his wife, Dame Janet of Haining. In 1581 he witnessed a transaction for his brother Robert of Haining. He was listed among the members of the rescue party for Kinmont Willie in 1596. In 1608 he was part of a gang of Scotts who freed 2 of their kin (John, brother of Walter of Woll, and his half-brother John Turnbull) from imprisonment by the Bailies of Selkirk. It is possible that he was the same as William of Deloraine, supposed to be a brother of Scott of Haining. It is also possible he was the William in Haining who witnessed a transaction in Selkirk in 1581, involving Robert of Haining. He is probably also the William in Haining who in 1581 witnessed an agreement involving the liferent of Blindhaugh and Castleside with the Scotts in Blindhaugh. William (16th/17th C.) listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a Borders Commissioners’ court in Jedburgh in 1605. He is recorded as ‘Willie Scott, man to Young Wauchope’, meaning he was probably a servant of Thomas Turnbull, younger of Wauchope. William (16th/17th C.) servant of Sir James Ker of Cralinghall. In 1628 his son James became a tailor’s apprentice in Edinburgh. William (16th/17th C.) brother of Walter of Huntly. In 1608 he was one of the gang of Scotts who forcibly freed 2 of their kin from imprisonment by the Bailies of Selkirk. Perhaps he was the ‘Will Scott of Huntlie’ who was listed among Scotts and others who were charged to find sureties for ‘observing the King’s peace’ in 1599. Perhaps the same William ‘of Huntley’ was in 1603 among Scotts and others, subordinates of Sir Walter of Buccleuch, who ‘had been put to the horn’ for not paying feu mails for their lands to the Queen’s Chamberlain, with Robert of Haining not entering them in court. William (16th/17th C.) nephew of Walter, tenant in Stonedge. In 1612 he complained to the Privy Council about Andrew Newton in Jedburgh had not payed him following being found guilty of charges 2 years earlier. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Williams. William of Whitehaugh (16th/17th C.) elder son of Walter of Whitehaugh and Janet Scott of Headshaw. He succeeded his father, but died unmarried and was succeeded by his younger brother Walter, who sold the family lands. It is possible he is the William who was ‘tacksman’ of the Parsonage of Wilton in 1568–69 and jointly with James Langlands in 1570–72. In 1580 he signed a bond with Walter of Headshaw, who assigned to him the east half of the lands of Whitehaugh, called ‘the Pleucht Tyllth’, along with the lands of Deanheads, in the Barony of Wilton; Walter of Stiches was one of the witnesses. In 1580/1 he was a judge appointed on behalf of Walter of Stiches in a dispute with George of Synton over ownership of Synton Mill. He may be the same William of Whitehaugh recorded in 1612 and 1619, but this is unclear. William (16th/17th C.) son of Robert of Aikwood. He was brother of Walter of Bowhill, as well as James and Walter. He was tenant in ‘Scotstaines’ or ‘Schostanis’ (although it is unclear where this is). Scott of Satchells lists him among those who helped rescue Kinmont Willie in 1596. Possibly the same William is recorded in 1596/7 as ‘in Brokhill’ when he was part of the group of Scotts (under Robert of Thirlestane) who attacked some ploughmen of Peebles; they were all denounced as rebels for failure to appear. In 1599 he and his brother Walter of (North) Bowhill were among a list of Scotts who Sir Walter of Branzholme declared were ‘his men’ and therefore accepted responsibility for making them answer to justice. He is recorded in 1601 when his brothers Robert, Walter and James, together with John ‘in Qhoolplaw’ were tried for the murder of Archibald Napier of ‘Wowmet’ (Woolnot, near Edinburgh). In 1602 he assisted the Scotts of Bonnington in the eviction of the Vetches from F'ehane. In 1608 when he was part of the gang of Scotts who forcibly took 2 of their kin (John, brother of Walter Scott of Woll, and John Turnbull, his half-brother) from confinement by the Selkirk Bailies; his brother James was also part of the gang. He may be the ‘tutor of Bowhill’ listed among Scotts and others accused in 1612 by the Privy Council of overcharging interest on loans. He may be the William of Bowhill whose son Andrew was infefted in the lands of ‘Crocecent’. He may also be the William ‘callit of Bowhill’ who in about 1618 was listed among men who had illegally used hagbuts and pistols in Ettrick Forest; his son Andrew was also listed. He may also be the William ‘in Bowhill’ who was pursued at the Privy Council for non-payment in 1620. William ‘Muckle Willie’ (16th/17th C.) recorded as witness to a bond of ‘manrent’, signed in 1595 in Hawick, between the Beatties and Sir Walter of Branzholme. His name (unfortunate by modern standards) is given as ‘William Scot callit Mekill Willy’. Given the status of the other witnesses, it seems likely he was a prominent Scott, and hence probably the same as another William. William (16th/17th C.) son of James in Hawick. He became an apprentice skinner with Samuel Wilson in Edinburgh. William ‘Will’ of Northhouse (16th/17th C.) mentioned along with his brother Walter and others in 1608. A complaint was made against them by Jean Scott, widow of Gavin Elliott of Stobs and his female heirs, stating that the Scotts had taken ‘all the evidents and wirts’, threatening to burn them if their demands were not met. He failed to appear and was denounced as a rebel. Presumably this was related to a dispute over lands, but the details are not recorded. In 1610 Gilbert Elliott of Horsleyhill (later of Stobs) complained to the Privy Council that he was attacked by him and his brother Hob in Hawick, with drawn swords, and they would have killed him if not for some of the inhabitants of the Town. He may be the William, son of the deceased George in Northhouse, who in 1582 witnessed a transaction at Branholme involving the Scott of Allanhaugh. William (16th/17th C.) recorded being ‘in Harden’ in 1612 when he was listed among local men accused by the Privy Council of overcharging interest on loans. However, his name is omitted from the list of those who were charged. It is unclear how he might have been related to the Scotts of Harden at that time, but it seems unlikely he was the same man as William, younger of Harden, who was already well established at that time. William (16th/17th C.) son of John of Newark. In 1618 Walter Scott of Buccleuch was instructed to apprehend him and his brother James for the murder of Adam Dalgleish in Deuchar. William (16th/17th C.) resident of Fastheugh who was an associate of John of Newark. In 1618 Walter Scott of Buccleuch was charged with apprehending him and John of Newark for their ‘unrelaxed’ hornings. It is possible he is the same man as William in Fastcheugh, but seems to be distinct. William of Robertson (d.1622) son of John, who was probably in the party that rescued Kinmont Willie. In 1610 he was served heir to his father’s lands of Robertson and Howcleugh. He was succeeded by his son James, last of Robertson. William of Burnfoot on Ale (d.c.1622) probably descended from the Scotts of Harden. Keith Scott suggests he was son of Robert; however, he may be the William, son of William, who in 1581 was given the liferent of his widowed mother’s lands of Shielswood and Burnfoot Mill for a payment of 350 merks and a quantity of lime. He then leased his lands of Shielswood to Walter of Todrig for a period of 5 years. In 1581 there was a marriage contract between him and Janet, daughter of William in Huntly, with the dowry being 400 merks, while his wife received liferent of Shielswood. In a separate transaction he gave his future wife ‘half his miln called Burnefuyt Mylne with murtures, suckens and knaiships in liferent’. Also in 1581 he witnessed an agreement involving the liferent of Blindhaugh and Castleside with the Scotts in Blindhaugh. He was listed being ‘of Burnefute’ along with Robert ‘alias Rob Scott of Burnefute’ among 200 Scotts and associates who stole livestock from Drumelzier and Dreva in 1591/2. He was among those implicated in the 1593 slaughter of Lord Maxwell and his men at Dryfe Sands. He was witness to Walter Scott of Stiches as heir to his father in 1592. He was said to have been at the Rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. In 1602 he signed (‘with our handis at the pen’) a bond among Border Lairds for keeping the peace. He had a confirming charter of the lands of Burnfoot and Wester Essenside in Ale Water in 1609. He may be the William ‘called of Burnfute’ who in 1610 was part of a petition, along with several local Langlands and Scotts, to have hornings lifted and penalties reduced; George Langlands of that Ilk had acted as cautioner for him and several other Scotts in this dispute against the Scotts of Todshawaugh and Ormiston. He may be the ‘Walter’ (if the name was given incorrectly) of Burnfoot on Ale who was given a bond in 1604 by Francis Stewart (son of the Earl of Bothwell) for ‘6 or 7 chalders of victual during recipient’s life’ for his faithful service, to be given once Francis regained the King’s favour and returned from exile (which never happened). In 1612 the Privy Council records a complaint by the Earl’s sons Francis, John, Harry and Frederick, against him and his brothers Walter and Robert, stating that ‘ather of the saidis partyis lyis at await [await] to tak theair advantage of utheris’ and should appear before the Council. He was described as ‘in Burnfute in the Water of Aill’ when he (along with several other Scotts) signed the bond of 1612 to keep the peace on the Border. In 1617 he was ‘in Burnefute’ among several supporters of the Scotts of Harden who Lady Bonnington complained had attacked her family (as part of a feud between the Harden and Bonnington Scotts). He is also mentioned in the Circuit Court records of 1622 in a bond of security for ‘Geordie Jonsoune of Eschinsyd’. He was succeeded by his eldest son Walter. William of fingland (d.c.1610) son of Robert of Thirlestane and younger brother of Sir Robert of Thirlestane and Walter of Gamescleuch (who was killed by John, son of Walter of Tushielaw). He may be the William of Thirlestane who is mentioned in an indenture of 1594/5 between the Wardens, his case (whatever it was) being delayed. He probably took part in the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. He was included in the list of Scotts and others who the Scotts of Thirlestane and their tenants were bound not to reset in 1609; this was part of the family feud with the Scotts of Tushielaw. His son Simon (possibly illegitimate) is also listed. Other children included Walter and Robert, neither of whom had male issue (but both of whom held the lands of Howpasley). In 1610 he was ordered to pay £10 for the non-appearance of his kin in relation to the assurance against the Scotts of Tushielaw. He must have died soon afterwards, since his son Simon is described as son of the ‘late William Scott, who was brother of Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane’ later in 1610. Either he, or a closely related William, also received the lands of Merrylaw. He had 2 daughters, one of whom, ‘Mariota’ (probably Marion) was served heir to her brother Walter of Howpasley in 1662. William ‘Jock’ (16th/17th C.) described as ‘in Branxholme’ in 1612 was on the jury for the case on the death of John Elliot ‘in Redden’ while in custody in Hawick. It is unclear how he was related to other local Scotts. William ‘Willie’ of Satchells (16th/17th C.) possibly son of Jean and Robert of Satchells. He was one of the men accused of involvement in the slaughter of the Laird of Drumlanrig’s sheep at Howpasley in 1615. He is described as both ‘callit in Satchellis’ and ‘callit of Satscheillis’, so it is uncertain whether he was Laird or tenant. It also seems likely that he was related to Capt. Walter of Satchells (possibly his brother) and the Robert described as heir apparent to Satchells in 1622–25. He rode out from Hawick with ‘Marion’s Geordie’, meeting Jock Scott ‘the Suckler’ at the foot of the Eilig Burn, and there he was ‘muffellit’ (i.e. disguised), before they proceeded to kill or maim 60 sheep. He did not undergo trial in 1616 along with ‘Marion’s Geordie’ Scott and Wattie and Ingram Scott, perhaps simply because he was not captured, but disappeared to ‘the North’. William (16th/17th C.) listed by Satchells as being ‘in Lies’ (i.e. Lees) among the ‘pensioners’ of the house of Buccleuch. The lands were referred to as ‘alias Milma’ (probably the same as Moormaw), and he was also called ‘of Catslac-Know’ and descended from the Scotts of Dryhope. He is probably the same man as the William ‘in Catslak’ who in 1607 was served heir to his great-grandfather’s brother, John Scott, Vicar of Hawick, in the lands of Easter Moormaw; this connects him to many others Scotts, even if the precise connections are unclear. He may be the William ‘of Slak’ who was complained about to the Privy Council in 1620 by Alexander Stewart of Phaup, apparently demanding the imprisonment of Alexander Stewart until he produced another Stewart; Andrew, surgeon and Burgess of Edinburgh appeared for him to answer the complaint and caution was set for him, Walter (also in ‘Slak’), Andrew, Burgess of Edinburgh, Adam, brother to Walter, and their wives and families. Also in 1620 William in Catslack complained that Walter’s house he was attacked by the Stewarts from Phaup. The Stewarts complained that he and Walter set upon Alexander Stewart, giving him 2 wounds in his side and then harassed him daily with pistols; he made a counter claim that Stewart struck him, while Stewart complained he had been wrongfully declared a rebel for non-appearance, since he was too injured to attend. In 1621 he was ‘of Catslak’ when, along with his father-in-law Andrew of Salenside, complained that after Alexander Stewart was released from imprisonment he resumed his attacks, wounding Andrew outside Selkirk. An earlier ‘William of Leis’ (with no surname given), who witnessed a sasine for William, Lord Borthwick in 1461, may have been related. He was surely related to the later Walter in Catslack, who was father of James, minister at Kirkton and Ancrum (Keith Scott suggests he was brother of Rev. James, and hence son of Walter, but there is no evidence for this). William (16th/17th C.) son and heir of Sir Walter of Tushielaw. He is recorded in 1619 in a ‘letter of inhibition’ brought by Walter, Earl of Buccleuch. This may be an error, since Robert was the son and heir of Sir Walter of Tushielaw. It is possible he is the same as the contemporary William of Hartwoodmyres (which had been an earlier possession of Walter of Tushielaw). It is also possible that he was the same as William in Phaup, whose son Andrew in Broadmeadows is recorded in 1627. William of Whitehaugh (16th/17th C.) witness to the bond of 1612 for keeping peace on the Border. He was also recorded as ‘fiar of Quhitthauch’ when he was witness in Hawick in 1619 to a bond by Adam Turnbull of Abbotrule and John, son of Walter Scott of Chamberlain Newton. He may be the William of Whitehaugh mentioned by Scott of Satchells as being brother of Thomas in Wester Groundistone. However, this is uncertain, since William, son of Walter of Whitehaugh must surely have been dead by this time, with the estate probably by then in the hands of Robert of Headshaw. He may be the William ‘callit of Quhitsla’ (possibly mistranscribed) who signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. He may be the John ‘in Quhitthauch’ recorded in Selkirk in 1580 when accused of hurting Gilbert Helm. William of Howford (d.bef. 1621) signatory of the Scott clan bond of 1589. He was probably son of Robert. He is recorded as being ‘of Howfoord’ in 1607. He was succeeded by his son Walter. William of Burnhead (d.c.1640) eldest son of Robert of Burnhead (or alternatively suggested to be 3rd son of Robert of Burnfoot). He may have been tenant of Burnhead, rather than Laird. His brother Adam married Bessie Langlands, daughter of John, the minister of Wilton. He is said to have served in Holland in the Scotch Brigade, during his father's lifetime. Douglas' 'Baronage' states that he 'was an officer in Holland, and served under the brave Walter Scott, Lord Buccleuch, against the Spaniards in the year 1604, when that cohort of Scots performed many glorious actions against their enemies'. He married Margaret, daughter of Nicol Cairncross of Hislop or Callhill and had an only son and heir, Robert. William (16th/17th C.) described as 'Will Scott in Weems' in Rulewater (presumably Weens) when John Young was accused of stealing some of his sheep at the 1622 Circuit Court. He could be the William 'dweller in Weyndis' who witnessed the 1607 sasine for John Scott gaining the lands of Hobsburn and Weens. William (16th/17th C.) son and heir apparent of Walter of Todrig. However, in about 1630 his father sold the lands of Todrig to another branch of the Scotts. He may be the Walter recorded along with William in a case in 1620 regarding the imprisonment of a man from Old Melrose. He married Isabella Livingston and had a son Walter. William of Dryhope (16th/17th C.) son of Philip of Dryhope. He was recorded in 1612 when Robert Horsburgh complained to the Privy Council that he and another 10 or so men came to his house in Peebles struck him and pursued him. In 1617 he was recorded as son of Philip when listed among Scots and others who had freed Patrick Porteous of Hawkshaw and attacked his captors. He is also recorded as 'lawful son' of Philip of Dryhope in a charter of 1618. He probably succeeded his father Philip, and was succeeded by Robert, possibly his son. He is recorded in a 'letter of poinding' in 1628, with Samuel Cockburn of Henderland as his cautioner. He was succeeded by Robert, probably his son, who was in turn succeeded by Walter, who may have also have been his son (hence Robert's younger brother), and then Philip, the last Laird, may have been his son too. William 'Young Gillie' (17th C.) one of a list of 16 local men named by the Hawick Bailie in 1627 as suitable for sending to the army in Germany, i.e. presumably considered undesirable to the town. When produced by the Bailie before the Privy Council in Edinburgh he was charged 200 merks caution, in order to appear again if required; presumably this means he was not sent off to the wars. The caution was paid by John Short, skinner and Burgess of Edinburgh (who probably had some connection with Hawick); he is referred to there as 'son to Robert Scott, late bailie of Hawik', although there are several possibilities for which Robert this was. It is unclear what his nickname meant. William of Chamberlain Newton (d.c.1638) brother of John of Brieryyards. In 1638 his brother was appointed as tutor to his son Walter, by which time he was already deceased. He was probably father of the William, nephew of John Brieryyards, who is recorded in 1633 and 1637. He is presumably related to other Scots of Chamberlain Newton, e.g. the William recorded in 1581. William of Chamberlain Newton (d. bef. 1643) son of William and nephew of John of Brieryyards. In 1633 (and again in 1637) he was served heir to his father's brother in the lands of Brieryyards and 'Braidleys' in the Barony of Hassendean; these were 100-shilling lands of old extent, and included a mill. He may be the Scott, 'liferenter of Newtoun' who held land worth £156 in Hassendean Parish in 1643; this was probably Galalaw (and he may already have been deceased, explaining why no first name was given). He is probably the William of Chamberlain Newton, brother of Simon, whose daughter 'Mariota' was served as heir in 1643 (by which time he was deceased). She may be the Margaret, daughter of William of Chamberlain Newton, who married Thomas Elliot in Borthwickshiels (and of Bewlie), probably in the 1650s. William (16th/17th C.) smith in Hawick, recorded in 1628. He was listed among Scots of Midshiels and Burnfoot who were charged by the Privy Council to keep the peace with the Turnbuls of Know. His brother Adam was also listed, but otherwise there is no clear connection with any other Scots. William (16th/17th C.) Bailie in Selkirk, who is recorded in 1630 being 'of Pellaris' or 'Pillaris'. He gave sasine for a tenement there. Probably the same William 'in Pittaris' signed the bond among Border Lairds in 1617. In 1621 he was on a list of Selkirk men who James Mitchellhill claimed had assaulted him and destroyed his crops. William (d.c.1647) son of Robert of Gilmanscleuch. In 1621, along with his brother Gideon and his mother Bessie Naysmith, there was a complaint about the murderers of his father (2 Elphinstones) still being at large. In 1647 his immediate elder brother Adam was served as his heir, implying that he had no children to succeed him. John of Gilmanscleuch was probably also his brother. He may well be the same as one of the contemporary Williams. William of Mangerton (d.c.1649) local landowner of the mid-1600s. He was an illegitimate younger son of Walter, the 1st Earl of Buccleuch, and assumed the title of Laird of Mangerton on the death of his brother Francis about 1640. In 1633 he was appointed one of the ‘Tutors Testamentary’ to oversee the Earl of Buccleuch’s will. He was also owed rental for the lands of Tinnis in the inventory of the deceased Earl. In 1643 he was listed as owner of lands in Cavers Parish, which were later acquired by the Buccleuch estates, with a value of £1000; he also held land in Castleton Parish valued at £1800 (including Tholrisheshope, which was later sold). In 1643, 1644 and 1646 he was on the Committee for War for Selkirkshire, in 1648 also for Roxburghshire and again in 1649 for Selkirkshire. In 1643 and 1644 he was described as ‘in Newark’, suggesting that he lived there rather than at Mangerton (or perhaps that he was related to the Scots in Newark). He served as Chamberlain to the Scotts of Buccleuch for ‘the Forest’ (i.e. St. Mary’s Parish) in the period 1640–48. In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, Dumfries and Annandale. He married Elizabeth, a daughter of Sir Archibald Murray, 1st Baronet of Blackbarony. He granted the lands of Mangerton to his eldest son Francis in 1648 (but Francis was probably a minor at this time). His daughter Elizabeth married John, eldest son of Patrick Scott of Langshaw. His widow Elizabeth submitted the accounts for Ettrick Forest to the Earl of Buccleuch for the year 1648–9. She was probably also the ‘Lady Mangerstowne’ recorded in the Land Tax Rolls of 1663 (although perhaps really dating from earlier), paying about £1750 for ‘towrefield’, ‘towre’ and other lands in Castleton, as well as £260 for lands in Cavers Parish and £2440 in Wilton Parish; these entries were listed under Hawick Parish, and were probably associated with the Scotts of Buccleuch. William of Salenside (d.bef. 1653) also referred to as ‘in Salenside’ in 1632. He must have been related to the earlier Andrew and Robert and was probably son of Thomas of Salenside, who died around 1636. His father granted him possession of Salenside during his lifetime (while his brother held Whitehaugbræ), but the properties were later sold to Sir William of Harden. He is mentioned several times in the period 1636–43. He is recorded in the Ashkirk Parish records as one of the Lairds helping to collect money for plague victims. He married Elizabeth Hay, who was the widow of Walter Scott, 2nd son of ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden (who was murdered). His eldest son was James, who raised an action against his step-sisters. Another son was Thomas. William (17th C.) son to John, Burgess of Hawick. His father was already deceased in 1634 when he became an apprentice with wright Andrew Hastie in Edinburgh. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Elliot and their children included John (b.1636), James (b.1639), Margaret (b.1642), Walter (b.1645), William (b.1652) and Robert (b.1655). The witnesses in 1639 were Robert (perhaps a relative) and Adam Murray. William ‘at the Cross’ (17th C.) one of the signatories of the Covenant in 1638. There is some confusion here, since there was also apparently a separate Bailie of the same name. Yet he was re-elected as Bailie in 1638, when he is referred to as ‘at the Croce’. He was also the William who was Bailie in 1640 when the ‘Act of Bailies and Council’ was signed (although a separate William, Councillor at that time, also signed). He presumably lived near the Mercat Cross. He was elected to the Council in late 1648. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. William (17th C.) Councillor who signed the 1640 Act of Bailies and Council. He was distinct from the Bailie at that time, who had the same name. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was married to Margaret Riddell and in 1640 their daughter Helen was born, with George Scott and Andrew Riddell as witnesses. William (17th C.) tenant at Headshaw Mill. In 1640 he was accused by the Kirk Session of Ashkirk of carrying a sack of meal on his horse on Sunday. William of Tushielaw (d.c.1663) son of Robert and younger brother of Walter. He may have been related to the earlier William in Fauldshope. In 1624 he was ‘in Fauldishop’ when his son William had a sasine for Broadmeadows from the Murrays of Philiphaugh and in 1627 he was ‘in Falishope’ when his son William made a complaint to the Privy Council that James Inglis of Huntly and others cut down trees on his land. He was ‘of Fauldishop’ in 1633 when he resigned the lands of Broadmeadows in favour of his son Andrew. He succeeded his brother Walter to the Lairdship of Tushielaw in 1643. He was a Burgess of Selkirk and was appointed to the Committee of War in 1643, 1644, 1646, 1648 and 1649. In 1648 Andrew of Broadmeadows (who may have been his son) gave a sasine to him and his son William for the lands of Broadmeadows. He was fined in 1662 after the Restoration and was appointed as a Justice of the Peace for Selkirkshire in 1663. He is said to have married Grizel, daughter of Robert Scott of Thirlestane, but this may be confusion with his father Walter or great-grandfather William; she could possibly have been the Grizel recorded paying the land tax for Craighaugh in Dumfriesshire in 1671. His children from his first marriage were: Andrew, who purchased Broadmeadows; and Walter in Cacrabank. He secondly married Margaret, daughter of John Govane of Cardrono and they had one son, William of Broadmeadows. William of Clarilaw (17th C.) recorded in 1643 as owner of lands in Hassendean Parish valued at £156. These were probably the lands of Wester Clarilaw, which were owned by William Scott of Burnhead later in the 17th century. He was surely related to that branch of the Scotts; however, Robert Scott of Burnhead is separately recorded in 1643 (as owner of Burnhead, with land having the same value). He may be the same as the later William of Clarilaw, and hence son of Robert of Burnhead. Sir William of Harden (d.1655) son of ‘Auld Wat’, he married ‘Muckle Mou’d Meg’, whose real name was Agnes Murray of Elibank. In the ballad version he chose to marry Meg (the ugliest of 3 daughters) as an alternative to the gallows, after he was caught raiding her fathers sheep. His marriage contract of 1611 still exists, witnessed at Crichton, East Lothian and saying that they both bind themselves ‘be the south and treuth in thair bodies to solemnizat and compleit the haly band of matrimony aither of thame with others’. He also gave her a charter of the rents of Stichill in 1611. In 1606 he received the lands of Tarras. He was Sheriff of Selkirk and also held land in the counties of Dumfries, Selkirk, Berwick and Peebles. In 1610, as ‘apparent of Harden’, he acted as cautioner for George Langlands of that Ilk in a dispute with Walter in Hawick (called of Todshawhill). He is recorded in a contract for the lands of Harden and Hoscote in 1612, when he was still heir apparent of Harden. He also gained the lands of Kirkhope in the same year. He may have been the ‘William of Todrig’ recorded in a contract with Kerr of Oxnam about 1614 and another with Mark, son of Hector Turnbull in Hartshaugh in 1616 (although these could be an error for ‘Walter’). Also in 1616 he witnessed the sale of parts of Hassendean and Horsleyhill by the Earl of Home to Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. In 1617, along with his father and several supporters, there were complaints against him by Lady Bonnington (whose husband Simon Scott was involved with the murder of his brother Walter), claiming that they had harassed and attacked her family. In 1619 he was stated to be the Lieutenant to the Captain of the Border garrison (Sir Andrew Ker of Oxnam). In 1620 he complained about a debt with Walter Stewart of Kirkland. In 1620, along with his father, he had confirming charters for the Harden estates. He also had a charter for the lands of Hundlehope in Peeblesshire, with the superior being Walter Gledstains of Cocklaw. He was probably the William of Harden who had a charter for Langhope in about 1620. In 1621 he was appointed to a commission to apprehend the men who killed Robert of Gilmanscleuch. In about 1622 he had a charter from Sir Robert of Thirlestane for Thirlestane, Ramsaycleuch and Scableuch (essentially holding them in collateral for a loan). In 1625 he was appointed Sheriff Principle of Selkirk. He carried the arms of the deceased Earl of Buccleuch in the funeral procession between Branholme and Hawick in 1634 and was appointed one of the ‘Tutors Testamentary’ to oversee the Earl’s will. Also in 1634 he was one of 2 representatives of the young Earl of Buccleuch who travelled to London to hear the King’s decision in an ongoing land dispute with Francis Stewart. He was also appointed as one of the ‘tutors’ for the children of Francis, and was one of the trustees for Mary of Buccleuch during her minority. In 1636 he received a long term ‘tack’ for Aikwood, where he may have resided; he possessed significant lands in the Ettrick valley. In 1638 he was appointed as a Commissioner for Selkirkshire to enforce subscription to the ‘Confessions of Faith’, and he signed it himself in Hawick. He was a Commissioner for the Treaty of Ripon in 1641. He received his knighthood in 1641 and was also in that year appointed as a Commissioner to Parliament for Selkirkshire. In 1642 he was made (or reappointed) Sheriff of Selkirkshire. He also represented Selkirkshire in Parliament 1643–44 and 1644–46. In 1642 he was served heir to his father in his lands of Over and Nether Cliffehope, Wheelkirk, Wheellands, Wormsleuch and Abbotsike, as well as the lands of Harden in the Barony of Wilton, lands in Stow and others. Also in 1642 he was named to a commission that was charged to apprehend and try a large number of Borders men accused of being ‘notorious criminalls, thieves and ressetters of theft’, and was appointed one of the assessors to the Justice General for these courts. He was appointed as a Colonel of the Horses for Roxburgh and Selkirk, i.e. he commanded the cavalry in the Teviotdale Regiment, and was Lieut.-Col. in a regiment of about 1,200 men raised by Buccleuch, which fought at Philiphaugh. In 1643 he was also appointed as a ‘commissioner for the establishment of manufactories’. In a 1643 county valuation he was the third largest landowner in Wilton Parish (after Buccleuch and Langlands), his lands valued at £814, and he also held lands in Hasedean Parish valued at £600 (this being Borthwickshiel, which was later in Roberton Parish) and teinds in Lessuden Parish (for Ellieston, valued at £420). Also in 1643 he promised the lands of Mabonlaw, Highchesters, Todshaw and Borthwickshiel to his son Gideon and his future wife Margaret Hamilton. He was also in 1643 served heir to his great-grandfather William of Harden’s lands of Hoscote (this clearly establishing him as great-grandson of the first William of Harden). In 1644 he and Sir Thomas Ker of Cavers were commended for organising tenants of the Earl of Buccleuch to help repel the Royalist forces of the Earl of Montrose. In 1646 he was on the Committee of War for Selkirkshire, and in 1648 and 1649 also for Roxburghshire. He was Sheriff of Selkirk in 1647. In 1648 he was appointed along with the Earl of Buccleuch, as well as his son (Sir William) and others to suppress lawlessness on the Border. He bought Merton House in around 1649, which would become the principal seat of the Scotts of Harden in the next generation; in 1649 he gave a disposition of the lands of Mertoun, Aikwood, Harden and Whitrig to his eldest son Sir William. Also in 1649 he was made a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh, ‘for pains taken in Parliament in the Town’s affairs, gratis’. In 1649 he and Andrew Kerr of Sunlaws wrote an account of the Sheriffdom of Roxburgh, which was published in 1908 as part of Walter MacFarlane’s ‘Geographical Collections’. His support of the Royalist side led to him being fined by Cromwell in 1654. In 1661 he married Agnes, daughter of Sir Gideon Murray of Elibank. They had 5 sons and at least 4 daughters: Sir William, who succeeded; Sir Gideon of Highchester, whose descendants eventually succeeded to Harden; Walter, who started the Scotts of Raeburn; James, ancestor of the Scotts of Thirlestane; John, progenitor of the Scotts of Woll; Elizabeth (or Elspeth), who married Sir Andrew Ker of Greenhead; Margaret, who married Thomas Ker of Mersington; Janet, who married John, son of Sir John Murray of Philiphaugh; and Susannah, who married Gideon Ogilvie of Hartwoodmyres. He secondly (in 1633) married Margaret, daughter of William Ker of Linton, but had no further children – ‘Doon in the depths o’ the auld grey castle, Shut in alane wi’ his thoughts to wrassle, Wull Scott sat on the cauld stane fluir, And kent that his hopes o’ the morn were pair’ [WL]. William of Synton (d.1661) eldest son of Francis, the first of the Harden Syntons. He became a Burgess of Selkirk in 1643 and was on the Committee of War in 1648 for Selkirkshire and Roxburghshire and in 1649 for Selkirkshire. The keystone of the burial enclosure of the Scotts of Synton in Ashkirk kirkyard is inscribed ‘W S 1646’, which are probably his initials. In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, Dumfries and Annandale. In 1661 he (along with William of Headshaw) witnessed a baptism for Walter and Jean Scott. He is probably the William ‘of Sintone’ recorded in a deed in 1663 (even although deceased by then) regarding a factory. In 1647 he married Jean, daughter of Robert Scott of Headshaw. Their children included: Francis (b.1649) and William (b.1652), both of whom may have died young; John, who succeeded (and was either eldest son or 3rd and eldest surviving); Grizel; Isobel (b.1659), who married William Elliot, 1st Laird of Borthwickbrae; and Elizabeth (b.1661). Most of these children were baptised in Ashkirk Parish. The witnesses in 1652 were Sir William (probably of Harden) and Thomas (perhaps of Whit slade) and William Gledstains ‘of Whitslade) and in 1661 were Thomas of Whit slade and William Gledstains ‘of . . .’ (probably of that Ilk). His brother Francis was appointed as tutor to his eldest son John in 1662. If John was the 3rd son (as Keith Scott states), then there may have been an additional son William, recorded in 1670 as ‘brother-germane’ to John of Synton when he became a surgeon’s apprentice in Edinburgh. Sir William of Harden (1617–1699) son of Sir William and ‘Muckle Mou’d Meg’. He was known as ‘Little Sir William’ and was referred to as being ‘of Oakwood’ during his father’s lifetime. Along with his wife Christian Boyd, he took custody of his brother Walter’s children to keep them from Quakerism. He was on the Committee of War for Selkirkshire in 1643 and 1644 and served along with his father also for Roxburghshire in 1648 and 1649. In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named (along with the his father, Sir William of Harden, and the Earl of Buccleuch) on a Commission to suppress the thieves in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, Dumfries and Annandale. He received the lands of Merton, Aikwood, Harden and Whitrig from his father Sir...
William in 1649. He was one of the Commissioners to Parliament for Selkirkshire appointed in 1649. He served as one of the ‘tutors testamentari’ for the will of Francis, Earl of Buccleuch. He was one of the trustees of the Buccleuch estates during the minority of Mary in the 1650s and then for her sister Anne. He was knighted in 1660, like his father before him. As a supporter of the Covenant, he was fined £18,000 in about 1662. He witnessed the marriage contract of Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch in 1663, and was listed there as one of her curators. He is probably the Sir William who paid tax on £500 land tax for Eilrig in 1663 and also the Sir William who paid the land tax on Elliston in St. Boswell’s Parish in 1663 and 1678. His grieve is recorded in discharges over annual rents with treasurer of Selkirk in 1665 and 1667. About 1666 he was appointed one of the ‘curators’ of Francis of Davington. He received Parliamentary ratification of his lands of Borthwickshiels in 1672. In 1673 he matriculated his arms. He was also recorded in several deeds in 1673, one involving his son William. He inherited Hartwoodmyres in 1677, but sold the lands to Walter Scott of Burnfoot about 1690. He is recorded in 1673 acting as one of the commissioners to the Duke and Duchess of Buccleuch. In 1676 he inherited his father’s lands of Hundlehope in Peeblesshire, as well as Hoscote and Hartwoodmyres. In 1677/8 he received the lands of Robertson, Howcyleuch and Borthwickshiels Mains for ‘non-entry’. In 1678 he paid tax on land valued at more than £5000 in Selkirkshire (with his son responsible for more lands), as well as almost £2000 of land in Smallholm Parish. He is recorded in deeds of 1682, including in a list of heritors of the Regality of Melrose. He was indicted in 1682 as a Covenanter supporter, with his wife being accused of attending conventicles. Like his nephew, the Earl of Tarras, he was imprisoned in Edinburgh. In 1683 he appeared in court again in Jedburgh, and was carried off to imprisonment in Edinburgh Castle. The proceedings against him dragged on, and he was eventually released on bail paid by Sir Patrick Scott of Ancrum. However, he became a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh (gratis) in 1684 and after the Restoration was knighted by Charles II. He was also further fined that year (along with his son and other Teviotdale Lairds). In 1686 he gave a charter to Walter, Earl of Tarras, his nephew. On 1687 he and his wife were acquitted of stealing ‘a little girl, called the Tumbling-Lassie, that danced upon the stage’, actually freeing her from what amounted to slavery. In 1688 his servant James Scott was made a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh; this was because he ‘has been verie charitable to the poor of this cittie albeit his deceased father in law has left nothing to the poor’. His Chamberlain was Walter Langlands in at least the period 1689–94. In 1690 he was one of the local Barons who were appointed to the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire, as well as for Selkirkshire and Berwickshire. In 1641 he married Christian, daughter of Robert, 7th Lord Boyd of Kilmarnock. His wife was served as one of the heirs to her sister Helen Boyd in 1647. His children were: Sir William, who succeeded; Robert of Iliston, who succeeded his brother; Christian, who married William Kerr of Chatto; and Margaret, who married Sir Patrick Scott of Ancrum. Another daughter may have been Susanah, who married Gideon Ogilvie (but that may have been his sister). His will is recorded at Lauderdale Commissariot in 1699. William of Faldonside (b.bef. 1648) recorded in 1648 as already deceased when his son Robert became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh. He may be the same as one of the other Williams. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1656 his son Robert with Margaret Preacher was baptised (and labelled as conceived through fornication). The witnesses were Robert Deans and David Scott (who was probably a relative). William of Horsleyhill (17th C.) son of Robert who was ‘Baillee and Portioner in Hawick’ according to Scott of Satchells. He was descended from the Scotts of Tushielaw. He was probably the first of his family to be referred to as Laird of Horsleyhill. He was granted Weensland, along with Shaws and Burnflat in 1653, including rights to use Hawick’s Common. He sold the Tolbooth to the town in 1657. He was listed as a member of the Town Council in 1660. In 1662, following the Restoration, he was listed as being ‘of Husleyhill’ when fined £1,200 for being a supporter of the Covenant. He is probably the William recorded in the Land Tax Rolls of 1663 in Hawick and Hassendean Parishes; he paid tax on £304 for his lands of Weensland, ‘Acoth haugh’ (possibly Usuch Haugh) and Shaws, as well as £637 for Horsleyhill. He was also mentioned in a record of 1666 relating to Hassendean Parish. He may also have been the William Scott recorded as a Bailie in 1638, and the William who was on the Town Council in 1668. However, there are at least 2 generations here, and so it may be hard to separate them. He was probably succeeded by his son Robert (with William being the grandson). His other children included: Janet, who married Harry Riddell in 1659; and Bessie, who had a marriage contract with Walter Scott of Whitehaugh in 1666. William of Headshaw (d.c.1690) eldest son of John of Headshaw and grandson of George of Synton. He was made a Burgess and Guild Brother of Glasgow (gratis) in 1643, along with Earl Francis and several other Scots. He is recorded in the Buccleuch archives in 1646 for the accounts of the deceased John of Headshaw. He was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire in 1648 and may have been the William, ‘younger of Heidshaw’ who was on the Committee for Selkirkshire in 1649. He was served heir to his father John in 1653 and had a sasine for his father’s lands of Headshaw, Dryden and others in 1655. He is probably the William who witnessed a baptism for his brother Robert of Langhope in Ashkirk in 1656. In 1659 he witnessed the document declaring the adherence to the marriage agreement of Mary, Countess of Buccleuch with Walter (later Earl of Tarras). In 1661 he (along with William of Synton) witnessed a baptism for Walter and Jean Scott. He paid tax on £1028 in Ashkirk Parish according to the 1663 Land Tax Rolls and £1160 18s 4d in 1678. He resigned the lands of Headshaw and Dryden to his son John in 1686. He witnessed several documents for the Lairds of Todrig, Whitslade and Synton in the period 1688–90. He may be the William who witnessed a baptism for John Scott of Synton in 1690. He must have been the ‘Scot of Headshaw, elder’ who was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1690, but died shortly afterwards. In 1647 in Dunfermline he married Jean Halket, sister of Sir James Halket. Their children were: John, who succeeded; William (b.1648); Elizabeth (b.1651), baptised in Ashkirk; Mary (or Marie), who married Patrick Porteous, Burgess of Peebles, and she became heiress on the death of her brother John; and Thomas (b.1656), also baptised in Ashkirk. In the 1651 Ashkirk baptismal record his wife’s surname is ‘Hackit’, with witnesses ‘Sir Walter . . .’ (perhaps Scott of Buccleuch) and ‘Sir Thomas . . .’ (perhaps Ker of Cavers Carre, who married Grizel, daughter of Sir Robert Halket of Pittfirrane). The witnesses in 1656 were ‘Sir Thomas C . . .of . . .’ (probably Ker again) and Thomas Scott (perhaps of Whitslade). Sir William of Clerkington (d.1656) son of Lawrence of Harperrig. He was an advocate, becoming Clerk to the Privy Council and one of the Clerks of Session. He was made a Burgess of Glasgow in 1623. In 1633 he was appointed one of the ‘Tutors Testamentary’ to oversee the Earl of Buccleuch’s will and served the same purpose for Francis, the 2nd Earl. He was served heir to his father in 1638. He was knighted by Charles I in 1641 and appointed a Lord of Session in 1649. He also served as a tutor to the young Mary, Countess of Buccleuch. In 1651 his 2nd lawful son William was one of the witnesses to corrections to the will of Francis, Earl of Buccleuch. His son Lawrence was served as his heir in 1657. Sir William of Aikwood (17th C.) recorded in a Melrose Regality document of 1669, referring to an agreement over teinds going back to 1650. He could be the same as Sir William of Harden. William (17th C.) ordered by the Council in 1658 to pay 4 merks for ‘both-meall’ (i.e. booth rent) until Whitsunday. He was presumably a merchant of some sort. In the same year perhaps the same William was ordered to pay £6 for the ‘liberty of the burgh’ (i.e. becoming a Burgess), ‘fourtie shilling being deduced for the buttis bigine’. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who was married to Bessie Armstrong. Their children included George (b.1643), James (b.1646), Margaret (b.1648), Thomas (b.1650) and Walter (b.1652). William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who was married to Bessie Scott. Their children included John (b.1651). William of Galalaw (17th C.) eldest son of Walter of Nether Boucher. He is recorded in a list of Hassendean landowners in 1666. He paid tax on £156 according to the Land Tax Rolls of 1663 and 1678 in Hassendean Parish. He married Margaret, daughter of Walter Gledstains of Whitlaw. Following the death of his father Walter in 1653, he gave Nether Boucher to his uncle Thomas, according to a previous family arrangement. His daughter Bessie married Robert, son of Robert of Drinkstone, according to a marriage contract of 1663. He was father of Adam, whose marriage contract in 1671 with Elizabeth, daughter of Rev. Alexander Cunningham, states that he was granted the lands of Galalaw (i.e. was his heir). He may have been related to the much earlier David ‘of Gallowlaw’. William (17th C.) son of John ‘of Badenyaards’, which seems likely to be a transcription error for ‘Bridieyaards’, i.e. Brieryyards. In 1659 he became a surgeon’s apprentice to Walter Turnbull in Edinburgh. William of Bonnington (d.bef. 1684) recorded in 1684 when his son William became a goldsmith’s apprentice in Edinburgh. His lands were Bonnington in Lothian. He was the eldest son of James.
of Bonnington and married Elizabeth Eliott of Stobs. He appears to have acted as a Chamberlain to Scott of Buccleuch in Dalkeith in 1661–62, when he is described as ‘fiar of Bonnytoun’. He died before his father, and by then only had a single child, Margaret, who married James Cockburn. His daughter ‘Magdalena’ was served heir to his wife Elizabeth Eliott in 1662. William of Tushielaw (17th C.) probably son of Andrew, he is said to have succeeded when still a minor, most likely in the 1660s. In 1651 he was given 400 merks yearly during his lifetime in the will of Francis, Earl of Buccleuch; he is described there as ‘eldest sone to Andrew Scott of Tushilaw, our servitor’. In 1659 he was ‘yownger of Tushillaw’ when he witnessed the document declaring the adherence to the marriage agreement of Mary, Countess of Buccleuch with Walter (later Earl of Tarras). In about 1670 he was succeeded by Walter, who was the last Laird; although it is suggested (by Keith Scott) that Walter was his son, it also seems possible that he was a younger brother. He may be the William of Tushielaw who married Margaret, daughter of Francis Scott of Synton. David and Francis, ‘brothers of the deceased . . . Scot of Tushellaw’ were recorded in a court case in the Regality of Melrose in 1676. This suggests he was dead by then, and these were his brothers; however, the succession around that time is complicated, and so it is possible the 2 men were his uncles. William (17th C.) recorded as Ballie in 1678. He may be the same as William of Brieryyards. Probably the same William served as Procurator Fiscal during the 1670s. William of Coldhouse (d.c.1686) mentioned in 1666 in a record relating to Hassendean Parish. He is probably the same as ‘William of Cowdhouse and Tandlaw’ and is probably related to the later Robert of Coldhouse, perhaps his father. In 1678 he paid the land tax on £40 in Hassendean Parish (presumably for Coldhouse). It seems likely that his mother was the ‘Marie Scott, liferenter of Coudhouse’ listed in 1643. His will is recorded in 1686. William of Hartwoodmyres (17th C.) possibly son of Robert of Hartwoodmyres. He is probably the William ‘of Hartickmyres’ who was made a Burgess and Guild Brother of Glasgow (gratis) in 1643, along with Earl Francis and several other Scotts. In 1663 John Armstrong (possibly a factor or similar) was recorded paying his land tax of more than £600 in Wilton Parish, but he is likely the ‘Hartwoodmire’ who also paid tax on £26. He was also recorded in 3 deeds in 1663. He is recorded in a list of major residents of Hassendean Parish in 1666. He was one of those who wanted the parish suppressed. He was appointed as a Justice of the Peace for Selkirkshire in 1663 and as a Commissioner to Parliament for Selkirkshire in 1666. In 1667 he was a Commissioner of the King’s Bounty. He was also farmer at Borthwickbrae in 1670 and in 1672 was leasing the west end of Branxholme Muir (from the Scotts of Buccleuch). He appears to have been the last of the Scotts of Hartwoodmyres, but may be related to the Coldhouse Scotts. In 1677 the lands of Hartwoodmyres went to Sir William Scott of Harden. He could be the deceased William of Borthwickbrae whose lands in Selkirkshire were valued at £960. In 1682 ‘the aires of [William] Scott of Hartwoodmyres’ are listed among the heritors of the Regality of Melrose. William (17th C.) merchant in Hawick. His brother Robert was a shoemaker. In 1673 he was charged with striking his brother Robert, apparently because Thomas Brown had called him a ‘yallanger’, presumably this being the result of a drunken mix-up. Probably the same merchant William is on the list of Hawick men named in the 1673 trial following the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. He may be the same William as the merchant listed ‘eist the water’ in Hawick in the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694 and the merchant listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. Possibly the same merchant William was a witness in 1700 (along with glover John) for flesher Robert Renwick and for tailor John. William (17th C.) married Isobel Porteous. In 1676 he is recorded being ‘for: in Ashkirk’ when his son John was baptised in Hawick. The witnesses were William Laing and Robert Cowan. Their daughter Janet was baptised in Roberton Parish in 1683. William (17th C.) listed in 1682 among the heritors of the Regality of Melrose. He is distinct from William of Clarilaw (who is also listed), but may be the same as one of the other contemporary Williams. William (17th C.) tenant in Todshawhill along with Adam (presumably a relative) in the period 1632–72. It is possible that he is the same man as William of Hartwoodmyres who leased part of Branxholme Muir in 1672. William (17th C.) recorded as ‘eister’ on the list of Hawick men named in the 1673 trial following the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. He may be the same as one of the other Williams, possibly the later William ‘eist the water’. William (d.c.1686) glover in Hawick. He is probably the William listed along with Walter as glovers in the trial of men for the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair in 1673. In 1675 he was one of the men named to go to check on the boundary wall being built by Walter Scott of Goldielands, to ensure that the Common was not being encroached upon. He was thus likely to have been a member of the Town Council. In 1680 he witnessed a baptism for William Laing and in 1685 another for carrier William Aitken. His will is recorded in 1686. William (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish, when it included Hassendean. He is recorded in Clarilaw in the baptismal record of 1688. In 1680 he married Margaret Turnbull and their children included: Jean (b.1681); John (b.1683); Margaret and Janet (b.1685); and Thomas (b.1688). The witnesses in 1681 were Andrew Donald and James Douglas and in 1688 were John Armstrong and Thomas Henderson. His daughter may be the Margaret, daughter of William, who married George Fletcher in Robertson in 1718. Perhaps the same William was resident at Clarilaw on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish, when it contained Hassendean. He married Bessie Turnbull and their children included: Margaret (b.1679); Jean (b.1681); and Isobel (b.1687). The witnesses in 1681 were James Law and Robert Noble and in 1687 were Robert Turnbull (perhaps related to his wife) and John Noble. William (d.1679) from Castleton Parish. He was among the 200 men who died on ‘the Crown of London’ when it shipwrecked off the Orkneys and the captain refused to unlock the hatches to let the prisoners save themselves. The ship was transporting Covenanters to America after their capture at Bothwell Bridge. It is said that ‘they were taken prisoners, stripped almost naked, and treated more like beasts than human beings’; they were imprisoned in the open in Greyfriars Churchyard for months, so that transportation was initially seen as a sign of hope.

William (17th C.) recorded in Newton in a baptismal record of 1683, when Hassendean was part of Robertson Parish. He married Janet Shiel and their children included: Walter (b.1683); and Janet (b.1685). The witnesses in 1683 were Robert Scott (who was probably related) and William Lamb. William (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish (which it contined Hassendean). He married Janet Little and their children included Archibald (b.1686). The witnesses were Patrick Dodds and Archibald Little (who was surely related to his wife). Bailie William (17th C.) recorded as one of the 2 Hawick Bailies in 1692. It is unclear if he was the same man as William of Brieryyards. William (17th C.) smith listed in 1694 among those on the west-side of Hawick who paid the Hearth Tax. He was taxed for 2 hearths. He is probably the same as one of the other Williams. William of Clarilaw (17th C.) see William of Burnhead. William (17th C.) resident at Burnhead. William (17th C.) recorded as one of the 2 Hawick Bailies in 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was separate from the Laird of Burnhead (also William at that time), but probably related to the Robert who was also listed as a householder there. William ‘Bellman’ (d.bef. 1696) acted as Burgh Officer for most of his life. He was stated to be ‘officer in the sd. towne, from almost his infancy to his dying day’. His son Alexander was later Burgh Officer, appointed in 1696, by which time he was deceased. William of Broadmeadows (d.bef. 1695) son of William of Tushielaw and his 2nd wife, Margaret Gowane. He and his father had a wadset for Broadmeadows from his half-brother Andrew of Broadmeadows in 1648 and the lands were fully resigned to him in 1667 (the sasine being preserved in the Walter Mason collection). In 1658 there was a transaction to protect his estates from predation. In 1676 he had a decree to build a loft on the south side of the west aisle of Selkirk Kirk. He married Helen, daughter of Sir John Murray of Philiphaugh. Their children were: Robert, who succeeded; Gideon, who became a surgeon’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1683; Andrew, who became a barber and wigmaker’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1684; Isabella, who married John Balfour of Kailyie; and Jean, who married John Murray of Philiphaugh and later Lord Bowhill. In 1695 his daughters Isabella and Jean were his heiresses and resigned Broadmeadows to John Balfour and his son Charles Balfour. William of Brieryyards (17th C.) Bailie in the 1680s and 1690s: he may have been the Baron Bailie, rather than a Magistrate of the Town. He must have been related to the earlier James and John of Brieryyards. In 1688 he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for James Stewart. In 1689 a man is recorded being fined for insulting and questioning the authority of him and the other Bailie. He was Baron Bailie of the Regality of Hawick (i.e. the agent of the Baron) in 1693, when Walter Ruecastle was fined for assaulting him. He was probably the ‘late bayliea’ listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was probably the Laird referred to in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls as ‘Breariyeards his house’, when he was taxed for 4 hearths. He may be the ‘baylie’, married to Bessie Scott, whose unnamed child was baptised in Hawick in 1683; the... couple’s other children may have included William (b.1679), Margaret (b.1681), James (b.1684), Agnes (b.1685) and Francis (b.1687). The witnesses in 1683 were ‘Mr’ Walter Gledstains and William Purdon. William (1645–1739) 3rd son of Thomas of Todrig. He purchased the lease of Milstington farm in about 1670, starting several centuries of continuous residence there by the same family. He was thus also the progenitor of the Scotts of Girnwood and Singlie. He may be the William ‘in Wilsonton’ whose son Thomas was witness to an instrument of sasine for Elliot of Harwood in 1694. He is probably the William who paid the Heath Tax for 3 hearths at Milstington in 1694. He was a petitioner in support of having the Whitslaide lands ‘disjoined’ in 1714. He probably married a daughter of James Elliott of Stobs and Margaret Elliot of Redheugh. His children included: William, tenant in Milstington; possibly Thomas; Walter, who settled at Girnwood; Robert, who settled at Singlie; and James, who was a notary in Hawick. He is buried in Ashkirk (and lived to a very old age, unless the date of his death is a mistake). William (17th C.) son of William of Synton. In 1670 he was recorded as ‘brother-germane to John Scott of Sinton’ when he became apprentice to surgeon-apothecary George Sterling in Edinburgh. William (17th C.) tenant at Salenside in Ashkirk Parish listed on the Heath Tax records in 1694. He may have been related to the earlier William of Salenside. Perhaps he was the William who married Isobel Scott, with their son Robert baptised in Ashkirk in 1690; the witnesses were Thomas Wallace and William Dunlop. He may be the Scott, tenant in Salenside from about 1702–18, whose son Francis gave evidence in the court case for the division of Wilton Common in 1764. William (17th C.) resident at Easter Essenside on the Heath Tax roll in 1694. He was listed separately from William in Ashkirk. Perhaps he is the William who married Margaret Scott and whose children, baptised in Ashkirk Parish, may have included (although there may be 2 families here): Isobel (b.1690); Margaret (b.1691); Janet (b.1692); George (b.1694); John (b.1697); John (again, b.1699); and John (again, b.1700). Additionally William (b.1702) was child of William ‘tenant in Essinside’ and Margaret Scott; although the surname is omitted, this seems likely to be the same man. The witnesses in 1690 were Francis Redford and John Minto (both at Easter Essenside) and in 1694 were John Minto and John Stewart. He could be the William who is recorded collecting money for Ashkirk Parish in 1727. William (17th C.) listed as a resident of Kirkton on the 1694 Heath Tax roll. He may be the resident of Kirkton Parish whose son James was baptised in Cavers in 1696. He may also be the William in Newton whose son Adam was baptised in Kirkton in 1708. William (17th C.) resident of Spittal-on-Rule on the Heath Tax records in 1694. William (17th C.) resident at Peelbrae in Cavers Parish according to the 1694 Heath Tax records. William (17th C.) tenant in Little Park in Castleton Parish according to the Heath Tax records of 1694. William (17th C.) listed on the Heath Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694, when he paid tax on 2 hearths. He was separate from the merchant of the same name who was also listed, but may be the same as one of the contemporary Williams. He may be the William who witnessed a baptism for baxter James Lands in 1682. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was recorded at Slaidhills in 1702 when his son Robert was baptised in Robertson Parish. William (17th/18th C.) recorded as ‘indweller in Walls in Teviotdale’ who was factor to Thomas Turnbull of Knowe in an undated document, probably from the early 1700s. ‘Walls’ may have been ‘Woll’ or ‘Wells’. William of Raeburn (d.1699) eldest son of Walter ‘Wat Wudspurs’, he was the 2nd Laird of Raeburn and grandson of Sir William of Harden. His brother Walter was the great-grandfather of Sir Walter of Abbotsford. In 1685 and 1690 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire. He claimed the Harden estates against Walter, Earl of Tarras, in a court action starting in 1691. But the estates were inherited by the Earl’s eldest son Gideon. In 1682 he was listed among the heritors of the Regality of Melrose. He contributed £300 to the Darien Scheme in 1695. He married Anna, eldest daughter of Sir John Scott of Ancrum and was succeeded by his son Walter. Other children were: John, who died unmarried; and Isabella (or Isabel), who married Dr. John Rutherford of Knowesouth. In 1702 his widow married John Scott of Synton. William of Langhope (b.1654) son of John of Langhope, and descended from the Scotts of Synton. He succeeded on his father's death in 1666, being served heir in 1669. He had a ‘wadset’ with Walter of St. Leonards in 1669, and lost the lands of Langhope to Walter in 1677. Margaret Scott of St. Leonards, with whom he had a disposition, may have been his mother, and it is possible that Walter was his brother. He is probably the same as William ‘in Langhope’ who was involved with decrees for the lands of Langhope with Adam Scott and others. In 1684 he was said to have helped warn Sir William, younger of Harden, that soldiers were on the way to arrest him. He is mentioned as ‘Will Scott of Langup’ in Scott of Satchells’ postral, published in 1688. His name appears on inquests in 1686, 1693 and 1699, still using the designation ‘of Langhope’, even although he had sold the lands. He had discharges with the treasurer of Selkirk in 1690 and 1691, regarding annual rents. In 1692 he was a curator for his sister-in-law Janet Scott when he requested the Burgh of Selkirk to repay a debt owed to her and his wife Isobel of £15 2s.

William (b.1656) son of John ‘Westport’. He was baptised in Hawick, with his mother being Janet Robson, and a notation that the birth was the result of fornication. Probably the same William, son of John, became an apprentice to skinner William Brown in Edinburgh in 1674. William (17th C.) recorded in 1680 as ‘Flex’ when he witnessed a baptism for Thomas and Isobel Coltart. The other witness was John in Whiteyetts. He may be the same as one of the other contemporaries. Presumably he farmed or lived at the Flex. William (d.c.1690) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Falsyde and their children included: Margaret (b.1683), who married Walter Hume; and Anne, who married James, tenant in Stobice. His wife secondly married Robert Thomson, tenant in Newmill and had at least 3 more children in the period 1694–1701. She could be the Margaret Falsyde recorded ‘eist the water’ in the 1694 Hearth Tax Roll for Hawick. William (d.c.1697) doctor in Hawick, probably son of Robert of Harwood, and hence brother of Gideon of Falnash. He is recorded as ‘brother-german’ of Walter of Harwood in 1667 when he became an apothecary’s apprentice in Edinburgh. He served as a Bailie in Hawick in the 1670s. Probably the same William was listed as an apothecary when he witnessed a baptism in 1687; this was for Elspeth Scott, with the other witness being Walter of Goldielands, suggesting a close family connection perhaps. He leased the ‘old Glebe land’ in Hawick from the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1692. He was ‘Wm. Scott of Harwood, apothecary’ on the list of subscribers for the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. His wife was Bessie Scott and their children included: William (b.1679); Margaret (b.1681); an unnamed child (b.1683), who presumably died; James (b.1684); Agnes (b.1685); and Francis (b.1687). He is also probably the William ‘of Harwood’ recorded in 1680 when he and his wife ‘Isobel’ Scott had their daughter Marion baptised in Hawick; the witnesses were Robert of Glack and Walter of Goldielands. The baptism of Francis was witnessed by the Town Clerk, Walter Gledstains, and James Gledstaines. He could be the William, apothecary in Hawick, whose brother Gideon was served as his heir in 1697; presumably this was because none of his children had reached maturity. William of Whitehaugh (17th C.) recorded in 1688 when he witnessed a baptism for Andrew Jardine in Hawick Parish. The other witness was Robert, who was probably related. It is unclear how he fits into the succession of Scotts of Whitehaugh, but he may be the same as the son of Walter of Whitehaugh, who succeeded in the 1690s. William (17th C.) tenant in Merrylaw in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the ‘Walter Scott of Mirrielaw’ (if this was an error in the name) who rented part of Whithope in 1698. William (17th C.) resident at Birkhill in Hobkirk Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was recorded at ‘birkhill’ in 1690 when listed among people owing money to the deceased Mark Turnbull and Bessie Kerr. William (17th C.) cottar at Mackside in Abbotsrule Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (17th C.) resident at Bank in Liliesleaf Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. It is unclear exactly where his farm was. William (17th C.) resident of ‘the netherend’ of Hassendean Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was ‘wt the kilne’ and paid tax on 2 hearths. William (17th C.) resident at Appletreehall according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He is probably the William in Appletreehall whose wife Janet Shiel’s will is recorded in 1687. He may be related to the later William, tenant in Appletreehall. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Jean Scott and their children included (although there may be 2 families here): Agnes (b.1688); James (b.1694); James (again, b.1697); Ann (b.1703); Jean (b.1705); Agnes (again, b.1707); William (b.1709); and Isobel (b.1710). The witnesses in 1694 were John Easton and Mungo Scott (who may have been related.
Scott to either him or his wife). William (17th/18th C.) resident of Weensland. An unnamed child of his was baptised in 1696. The witnesses were James Gray and Walter Paisley (probably the miller at Weensland Mill). William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at Wiltonburn in 1697. He married Agnes Scott and their children included William (b.1697). Agnes (b.1698), baptised in Wilton, with no mother’s name given, was probably also his child. Bessie (b.1689), Adam (b.1691) and John (b.1700), baptised in Ashkirk, to parents with the same names, may be the same family. The witnesses in 1691 were Walter Scott and Robert Pringle. The witnesses in 1697 were Robert and Adam Scott. He may be related to the William who was tenant in Wiltonburn in 1711. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at Lees in 1698. His wife was Isabella Morton and their children included William (b.1698). The baptismal witnesses were Adam Morton (surely related to his wife) and Robert Turnbull. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish, recorded as cottar in Birkwood in 1698. He married Isobel Renwick and their children included: George (b.1691); Gilbert (b.1698); Mary (b.1703); and Bessie (b.1705). The witnesses in 1691 were Thomas Wallace and Robert Taylor. William (17th/18th C.) from Wilton Parish, his son John was baptised in Hawick in 1700. The witnesses were John and Gilbert Elliot in Nether Southfield. William of Horsleyhill (17th/18th C.) son of Robert and grandson of the previous William. He succeeded Robert, probably in the late 1680s (even although Keith Scott’s genealogy misses him out). He was one of the heritors accused of inciting the riot at the de-roofing of Hassendean Kirk in 1690. He may be the ‘Laird of Horslihill’ who paid tax for 4 hearths in Hawick in 1694. In 1696 there is a record of Francis Scott ‘brother-german to William Scott of Horsliehill’ becoming a surgeon’s apprentice in Edinburgh. He could be the Laird of Horsleyhill who was listed on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1704. He appears to have been succeeded by his brother Francis, and so presumably had no male heirs. William (17th/18th C.) boatman of Langlands. He owned the land on which the Grammar School was built, at the Sandbed, from 1693. He sold it to Robert Langlands of Langlands in 1701 (who was presumably a relative of the Laird). In the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls he was listed as being ‘in Boathouse’ on the Langlands estate. In 1709 he is probably the William who appears to be ‘Boatman in Couble haugh’ when his daughter Mary was baptised in Wilton Parish. In 1711 he was listed as ‘Boatman’ when his son Will witnessed a baptism in Wilton Parish. William (17th/18th C.) probably 3rd son of Walter of Crumhaugh, and hence brother to Charles of Crumhaugh and Walter in Goldielands. In 1700 he was described as son of Walter of Crumhaugh when the 2 of them witnessed a baptism for Walter in Goldielands (his brother). He was described as son of the deceased Walter of Crumhaugh in 1702 when he married Isobel Gledstains in Hawick. He could be the Hawick innkeeper ‘called William of Goldielands’ whose son Walter was baptised in 1705, with witnesses Walter in Crumhaugh (who could thus be his brother) and Michael. William of Nether Bonchester (17th/18th C.) recorded as owner of lands valued at £180 in Abbotrule Parish in 1707. ‘William’ may be an error for ‘Walter’, who was Laird at that time. William (17th/18th C.) tenant in Drinkstone. His servant Walter had a child baptised in Wilton Parish in 1709. William (17th/18th C.) wright who lived at Kirknowe in Hobkirk Parish, recorded in a bill for repairing Wolfelee House in 1709. William (17th/18th C.) tenant in Whitchesters, where his recorded in 1706. He married Janet Scott and their son William was baptised in Hawick in 1709, with witnesses Andrew Riddell in Goldielands and James Falsyde. Probably the same William in Whitchesters had a daughter Bessie baptised in 1696, with witnesses William Bell and Alexander Thomson. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His daughter Mary was baptised in 1709. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded as tenant in Appletreehall in 1711 when his son John was baptised. He is probably related to the earlier William who lived at Appletreehall, as well as Walter who was also a tenant at Appletreehall in 1711. William of Clarilaw and Burnhead (d.1714) eldest son of Robert, who was tenant in Burnhead. He may be the William, son of Robert and Bessie Turnbull born in Hawick in 1651. He was also known as William of Burnhead when he was a local landowner in the mid-to-late 1600s. He was William of Clarilaw in 1678 when he paid land tax in Hassendean Parish for £182 for Wester Clarilaw, as well as £156 for ‘the lands of Burnhead’. He is probably the William of Clarilaw recorded in a list of heritors of the Regality of Melrose in 1682. He was also ‘of clarilaw’ in 1682 when one of his children was baptised in Robertson Parish.
In 1691 he was leasing part of the lands of Branxholme Mains from the Scotts of Buccleuch. He purchased Burnhead (the family lands) from his distant cousin Adam Scott of Burnfoot in about 1692. In 1692 he paid the teinds to the Duchess of Buccleuch for his part of the lands of Clarilaw. He was probably the Laird who paid tax on 3 hearths recorded as ‘Burnhead his hous’ in 1694. He was Chamberlain to Scott of Buccleuch (in name of John Scott of Pitlochie) for the years 1681–4, for Branxholme, Wilton and Whitchester. He acted as Chamberlain to the Earl of Lothian for the period 1689–1705. He was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1696 and was probably the William of Clarilaw who was a Commissioner in 1704. He is recorded being ‘of Burnhead’ in 1705 when his son John became a felt-maker’s apprentice in Edinburgh. Probably the same William of Burnhead is described in a document relating to teinds in Wilton Parish in about 1720. He may have lived at Clarilaw rather than Burnhead. He married Agnes, daughter of Archibald Wedderstain (or ‘Wathersone’), merchant of Dalkeith; she was one of 2 daughters who were ‘heirs-portioners’ of their father and in 1675 she granted her half of the lands in Dalkeith to John Larmouth. She may be the ‘Lady Burnhead’ for whom the funeral bells of St. Mary’s were rung in 1729. Their children included: Robert (b.1680), baptised in Roberton Parish, who succeeded; Eupham, who married Thomas Watson, ‘writer’ in Hawick; William (b.1682); Margaret (b.1684), who married Patrick Scott and secondly James Scott, surgeon in Hawick; Jean (b.1686); Peter; John (b.1688); and other daughters. One of these was probably Agnes, who married James Scott in Calfield in 1721. In 1729 the funeral bells in Hawick were also rung for ‘Burnhead’s sister’, who (since this was after his own death) could thus either have been his sister or his daughter. The witnesses to the 1682 baptism were John of Lees and Adam (who were probably both related to him) and in 1686 and 1688 were Adam and Robert (who were probably also Scotts of the Hassendean area). William (17th/18th C.) resident of Denholm. In 1684 he was charged at a court in Jedburgh with not attending his parish church for 2 years and fined the equivalent of 2 years’ rental, corresponding to £156 Scots. His sister-in-law Helen Stewart was also accused of attending conventicles. Sir William of Harden (d.1707) succeeded his father Sir William. He had been engaged in the rebellion of the Earl of Argyll. In 1684 there was an attempt to capture him, but word was gotten to him while he was curling with Riddell of Haining and others, so he escaped. He was captured later in Newcastle, but had a re- mission in 1685. He became a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh (gratis) in 1687 when still ‘younger of Harden’. He was appointed as a Commissioner to Parliament for Selkirkshire in 1689, serving until 1693, when his seat was declared vac- ant because he had not signed ‘the assurance’. In 1678 he was ‘younger of Harden’ when he acted as a Commissioner for Selkirkshire for raising money for the King. In that year he was also ‘younger’ when he paid tax on land valued at more than £2400 in Selkirkshire. And in 1690 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire, as well as for Selkirkshire and Berwickshire, along with his father. He was still ‘younger of Harden’ in 1695 when he contributed the large amount of £2000 to the Darien ill-fated Company. He is listed on a tax document for the Lordship of Melrose in 1700. Also in 1700 he was granted the rights as heir-male of Synton on their resignation by Archibald Scott of Boonraw; it was stated that he was descended from the ancient family of Synton. In 1701 he had a bond with Walter Scott, younger of Woll. In 1704 he was a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire and for Selkirkshire. And in 1705, along with Walter Scott of Woll, he gave a bond of 1,000 merks to Alexander Orrock, which formed part of the Orrock Bequest. In 1673 he married Jean, only daughter of Sir John Nisbet of Dirleton (and she later remarried Sir William Scott of Thirlestane). Dying without issue, he was succeeded by his brother Robert. His wife may have been the ‘Dame Jean Scott, lady Harden’ listed among the contributors to the Darien Scheme in 1695. His testaments are recorded at Lauder Commissariat in 1708, 1715 and 1728. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1703 he married Margaret, daughter of James Scott ‘Colifort’. Their children may include James (b.1706) and Robert (b.1709). William (17th/18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. In 1705 he witnessed a baptism for John Scott, glover. William (17th/18th C.) resident of the lands of ‘Kirktoon’ in Kirkton Parish. His son John was baptised in 1710. William (17th/18th C.) carrier in Hawick. He married Isobel Hardie in 1708. In 1719 his widow Isobel Hardie married carrier Robert Aitken. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was in Howcleuch in 1710 when his daugh- ter Isobel was baptised and in 1712 when his son Robert was baptised. Perhaps the same William was in Harden in 1714 when his son John was baptised. William of Brieryhill (d.1718) son of Adam of Galalaw, and brother of Alexander of Galalaw. He married Jean Scott. In 1718 he was deceased when his brother Alexander presented his daughter Agnes for baptism in Hawick Parish. He is recorded being ‘of Brierie-hole’ and the witnesses were Robert Scott of Burnhead and wigmaker John Elliot (brother to Robert Elliot of Rigg). Margaret (b.1715) may also have been his child. It is unclear if the later Dr. William of Brieryhill was a descendant. William (b.1686) son of John ‘Cloaks’, who was also called ‘Whitegates’. The Parish records describe how ‘in ye commonriding night’ of 1707 he was ‘together a considerable time alone in her Mothers Stable’ with Margaret Brydon, as witnessed by Robert Scott ‘called Wyndhead’. He also went to her house and finding the doors close and the family asleep, climbed in the window. In 1708 the illegitimate child, John, was baptised in Hawick, by which time he had already fled the country. The witnesses in 1708 included David Miller and James Gray in Whitchesters. William (17th/18th C.) described as ‘elder in Branxholmtoun’ in 1717 when along with John Scott (elder in Branxholme) he was appointed to collect money from Branxholme, Branxholme Town and Castlehill. He may be the William recorded in Branxholme in 1702 when he witnessed a baptism for John in Branxholme. Probably the same William (or his son) was tenant at Branxholmtown when he witnessed baptisms in 1705, 1710, 1712, 1713 and 1715. On 2 occasions he witnessed a baptism for John, carrier in Branxholme Town, who may have been related to him (and once the other witness was John in Branxholme, who may also have been related). He was recorded being in arrears for rent on part of Branxholme Town in the period 1712–17 (and was probably related to the Robert, who was also on the same farm at that time). He was still farming ½ of Branxholme Town in 1718. In 1720 he was ‘in Branxholmtoun’ when (along with James Crow) he witnessed a baptism for Walter Scoon in Branxholmtown. He may be the William ‘in Branxholm’, married to Margaret Scott, whose children included James (b.1703) and James (again, b.1706); the witnesses in 1706 were Andrew Ogilvie and Andrew Riddell in Goldielands. It is also possible he was the William ‘son in law to John Scott tenant in Branxholm’, who married Anna Laidlaw (perhaps as his 2nd wife), whose son Robert was baptised in 1709, with witnesses Andrew Riddell in Goldielands and gardener James Falsyde. William of Thirlestane (b.1663) eldest son of James, who was brother of Sir William of Harden. He was 2nd Laird of Thirlestane (near Yetholm, not the more familiar ones in the Ettrick or near Lauder), succeeding in 1687. In 1684 he married Christian Don. They had 13 children (mostly baptised in Yetholm): 4 who died young; Agnes (b.1690), who married Walter Scott of Harden; Alexander (b.1691), who became a doctor and succeeded to Thirlestane in 1729; Walter (b.1692), a wine merchant in Leith, whose son Thomas was minister at Cavers; John (b.1693); Patrick (b.1695); Christian (b.1696); Andrew (b.1697); Gideon (b.1699); and Isabel. William (17th/18th C.) tenant in Easter Burnfoot. His daughter Agnes was baptised in Wilton Parish in 1709. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was ‘W... in Roughheugh Mylne’ in 1709 when his son Thomas was baptised. William (1679–1744) eldest son of William, he was tenant in Milsington, like his father. He was ‘Younger in Milsintoun’ in 1733 when his eldest son was baptised in Roberton. He is probably the William ‘in Milsington’ who is mentioned in a lease from the Buccleuch Estates in 1744. In 1731 he married Elizabeth, daughter of William Elliot of Harwood (who had married his cousin Jane Scott). His children were: William (b.1733), also tenant in Milsington; Thomas (b.1735); Henry (b.1736), baptised in Robertson; Walter (b.1740); Robert (b.1742), baptised in Robertson, a doctor in Lasswade; Jean; Elizabeth, who married her cousin William, son of Walter Scott in Girnwood; and Janet. William of Stonedge (d.1730s) brother of Adam, who had been tenant of Wauchope in 1718 when he purchased Stonedge and Howa farms. He was son of Walter, tenant of Wauchope. He may have been the William who was an elder of Hobkirk in the early 1700s. He was recorded as being ‘in Hopsburn’ in 1709 in a document relating to repairs to Wolfelee House and also involving the tutors of Stonedge. In 1724 his brother transferred Stonedge and Howa farms to him and 6 years later he purchased most of the rest (the eastern part) of the Stonedge estate from Gilbert Elliott. He served as a Chamberlain to the Duchess of Buccleuch, appointed to cover the Liddesdale estates for the period 1714–24. He married Susanna, daughter of Thomas Elliot, tenant in Borthwickshields. Their eldest daughter Margaret married William Elliot, 1st Laird of Wolfelee, in Edinburgh in 1727. His son was probably Thomas, who was recorded as ‘of Stonedge’ in 1732, although he may not have succeeded his father until later. He (or his son Thomas) later sold the estate to Robert Lisle. His widow was probably the ‘Lady Standlidge’ who paid the window tax in Jedburgh in 1748. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1698 his son Walter was baptised in Hawick, with witnesses John Douglas and William Rae. William (17th/18th C.) tailor in Cavers Parish. In 1699 he married Christian Nichol in Hawick. William (17th/18th C.) tailor in Hawick on the 1693/4 subscribers’ list for the new Kirk bell. He is listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He was married to Elspeth Elliot and their daughter Helen was born in 1701. In 1708 he witnessed a baptism for fellow tailor John Little. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded as tenant in Wiltonburn in 1711 when his daughter Margaret was baptised. Along with Walter Scott and James Irvine, he tenanted 1/3 of the farm. It is possible he is the same man as the earlier William associated with Wiltonburn (if this was a second marriage, perhaps). William (17th/18th C.) gardener in the Hawick area. He witnessed baptisms in 1708 for weaver Robert Rodger and for merchant William Black, and in 1709 for carrier Henry Paterson. William ‘Will’ (17th/18th C.) son of William the boatman at Langlands. In 1711 he witnessed a baptism for James Irvine, tenant in Wiltonburn. William (17th/18th C.) described as ‘in Skelfhill’ in 1711 when he married Janet Aitchison in Hawick Parish. She was widow of John Scott ‘younger in Falnash’ and the wedding took place at Falnash, officiated by Rev. Bell, the minister of Cavers. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts who farmed at Skelfhill. In 1712 he was ‘tenant in Falnash’. His children with Janet Aitchison included: John (b.1711); and William (b.1712). The witnesses in 1712 were Robert Scott in Skelfhill (who was surely related) and Robert Pringle in Caerton. He could be the William, tenant in ‘Falenesh’, whose only lawful son William in ‘Duesles’ (probably Eweslees) had his will recorded in the Commissariat of Dumfries in 1730. William (d.1726) weaver in Hawick. In 1723 he witnessed a baptism for smith Thomas Huntly. In 1724 he appeared before the Session to hear an apology from fellow weaver Thomas Lunn for calling him certain unspecified names. Probably the same weaver William mar-rried Bessie Douglas and had children including Charles (b.1723), Helen (b.1725), Isabel (b.1726) and Thomas (b.1726). He was already deceased when his son Thomas was baptised. The witnesses in 1723 were Bailie George Martin and carrrier Robert Aitkin and in 1726 were weavers John Swan and John Scott (who may have been a relate). William (d.bef. 1721) listed as ‘sometimes in Deanburn haugh’. In 1721 he was already deceased when his daughter Bessie married workman John Scott. William (17th/18th C.) recorded as servant to Alexander, Laird of Synton in 1717, when he witnessed a baptism for his master. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Jean Sanderson and their children included: ‘Francies’ (b.1717); El-speth (b.1720); and Walter (b.1722). William (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He is recorded in 1719 as servant to William Miller, weaver in Hawick. He married Margaret Wilson, ‘servit-rix’ to Rev. Robert Bell of Cavers. Their children included: Francis (b.1722); James (b.1724); and Janet (b.1724). The witnesses in 1722 were students John and Robert Cunningham. William (17th/18th C.) tenant in Dryden, recorded in relation to a debt in Selkirk in 1723. This is presumably the Dryden near Ashkirk. William (17th/18th C.) tenant in Sundhope in Yarrow. He was deceased in 1753 when his widow Janet Inglis was already deceased when his daughter Bessie married her master. William (17th/18th C.) son of John, skinner in Hawick. In 1717 in Edinburgh, he became an apprentice baxter to Thomas Rutherford. William (18th C.) son of Charles ‘in Palacehill’. In 1720 his father was already deceased when he became an apprentice clockmaker to Patrick Gordon in Edinburgh. William (18th C.) resident at Ashybank in 1723, 1724 and 1730. He married Janet Turnbull in 1723. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included Bessie (b.1724) and James (b.1730). William (18th C.) resident at Newton in Wilton Parish in at least 1725–1739. He married Christian Hoy and their children included: Mark (b.1720); Thomas (b.1723); John (b.1725); Janet (b.1727); Mark (again, b.1732); William (b.1734); George (b.1736); and James (b.1739). The witnesses in 1725 were Robert Scott (who may have been related) and Robert Storie, in 1727 were Alexander Moor and James Dryden, in 1732 were Robert Scott (again) and Robert Storie (again) and in 1739 were George and Walter Scott. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts associated with Newton. William (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1727 he married Isobel Brown, who was also from Ashkirk. William (18th C.) resident of Ettrick Parish. He was living at Annelshope in 1728. He married Marion Laidlaw and their children included Marion (b.1728) and Walter (b.1731). William (18th C.) married Katherine Halliday in Cavers Parish in 1731. William of Whithugh (d.1750) son of Walter of Headshaw and Whitehaugh. He was served heir to his father in 1692. A sasine of 1697, granted by the Duchess of Buccleuch, infests him in Whitehaugh as heir to his father Walter; this was for ‘the east part of the lands of Whitehaugh, with the tower, fortalice, manor-place, houses, biggings, yards, parts, pendicles, and pertinents’, and additionally for ‘Wester Heip, Greenside, Westside of Whitehaugh, and Deanhead, with the mill and mill-lands thereof, whole houses, biggings, yards, tofts, crofts, parts, pendicles, privileges, and pertinents’. He was probably the Laird of Whitehaugh who in about 1705 was part of a group of men who perambulated the boundaries of Wilton Common, presumably to settle some dispute. He may be the person meant by ‘Walter [sic] Scot of Whithugh’ on a list of Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1708. His brother Robert was minister at Roberton. The pair of them witnessed a baptism in 1721 for James in Whitehaugh (who may have been related) and another in 1727 for James Scott and Janet Scott in Borthaugh (the same couple). He also witnessed a baptism for the couple in 1724, with his brother performing the ceremony and other witnesses being James (the child’s grandfather), John (the child’s uncle) and Walter of Cockerheugh. He gave 4 silver communion cups to Wilton Kirk in 1728, including the family motto ‘Vincit Amor Patriæ’. In 1737 he witnessed a baptism for John Chisholme, younger of Stiches and in 1747 and 1748 others for the Wilton Minister, James Simpson. He paid the window tax in Wilton Parish in 1748. In 1705 he is said to have married Ann, daughter of Dr. John Rutherford of Knowesouth. However, it was actually Anne, daughter of Rev. John Rutherford of Yarrow and Christian Shaw (grand-daughter of Rev. John Shaw of Selkirk), who were the great-grandparents of author Sir Walter Scott; the marriage is recorded in Roberton Parish and they lived in George Square in Edinburgh, with Sir Walter Scott telling a story about their shaggy dog. His wife’s will was recorded in 1765. He died without any children and outlived his brothers Robert and John, as well as his sister May. He was succeeded by his sister Isobel (in the liferent of Whitehaugh), and then by their 2nd cousin John. Sir William 2nd Baronet of Thirlestane (d.1725) only surviving son of Sir Francis. He became a member of the Faculty of Advocates in 1702. In 1690 and 1704 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire as ‘younger of Thirlestane’, as well as in 1698 for Selkirkshire. In 1700 he was one of the Roxburghshire heritors who petitioned Parliament. He was involved in a bond with Walter of Whitfield (later of Harden) and Walter of Woll in 1715. Later the 3 were ‘tutors’ to John of Harden, and were involved in legal proceedings over their consequent claims on part of the Harden estate in 1724–26. Known as a man of great learning, he is believed to have written the words for ‘The Blythesome Bridal’ and wrote several verses in English and in Scots dialect, as well as poems in Latin (24 of which appeared in ‘Selecta Poemata’ in 1727). In 1699 he married Elizabeth Brisbane, Mistress of Napier, only surviving child of Margaret, Baroness Napier of Merchiston and John Brisbane. Their son Francis assumed the name Napier and the appellation ‘of Merchiston’; his great-grandson, Lord Francis Napier would live at Wilton Lodge for several years. His first wife died in 1705. In 1710 he secondly married Jean, daughter of Sir John Nisbet of Dirleton, widow of Sir William Scott of Harden. William (d.bef. 1727) recorded as Laird of Wauchope. His daughter Margaret married William Elliot in Edinburgh in 1727. He was probably related to the Scotts who had long been tenants at Wauchope, but unrelated to the Scotts who purchased the estate later in the 18th century. William of Raeburn (b.1704) son of Walter and father of the next Walter. He was the 4th Laird of Raeburn and owner of lands in the Borthwick valley, including Eilrig, which he (or his agents) leased to John Chisholme of Stiches in 1719. He paid the window tax in Lessuden Parish in 1748. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. In 1743 he married Jean Elliott. They had 2 children: Walter, who succeeded; and Anne, who married Thomas, 2nd son of Robert Scott of Sandyknowe. William (d.c.1755) younger son of Francis of Davington. It is said that he had tenancy of a farm on good terms from the Scotts of Buccleuch, connected with the once powerful status of his Thirlestane ancestors. He farmed at Holm and then Beatock. He married Marion Veitch in 1721. Their only son was William, who farmed at Beatock and then moved to Moffat, marrying Jean Carruthers, but dying without issue. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1724, 1727, 1729 and 1733 he was at ‘W: burnfoot’ (i.e. Wester Burnfoot), which was probably at the foot of Wilton Burn. He is probably the William who witnessed baptisms in 1737 and 1739 for Walter Scott at Wiltonburn. He married Jean Scott in 1723, as recorded in Wilton Parish; she is probably the Jean, son of Walter Scott who married William, as recorded in Hawick 2 weeks later. Their children (baptised in Wilton) included: John (b.1724); Bessie (b.1727); Christian (b.1729); Margaret (b.1731); Walter (b.1733); and William (b.1736). The witnesses in 1724 were Walter (perhaps his wife’s father) and John (perhaps his own father), in 1727 were Walter Scott and William Elliot, in 1729 were John and Walter, in 1733 were Walter and James and in 1735 were Walter Scott and William Lamb. William (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Craik in 1732 when an unnamed child of his was baptised. Perhaps the same William was at Elrig in 1736 when he had a child baptised. William (b.c.1714) born at Wiltonburn, where his father lived while he was tenant of a third of Mervinslaw. It is unclear which Scott associated with Wiltonburn was his father. He was at Wiltonburn until the age of 24, and then spent about 1739–48 at Whitfield. He was in Synton Parkhead in 1764 when he gave brief evidence about the use of Wilton Common. Probably the same William was recorded at Wiltonburn in 1736 and 1739 and Whitfield in 1741, 1743 and 1748. He married Bessie Scott in 1734 and their children (mostly baptised in Wilton) included: William (b.1736); George (b.1737); William (again, b.1739); Charles (b.1741); John (b.1743); Janet (b.1746); Margaret (b.1748); and Margaret (again, b.1750), baptised in Ashkirk. The witnesses in 1736, 1737 and 1739 were another William and Walter, in 1741 were William Scott and Robert Cowan, in 1743 were William of Coldhouse and Robert Easton and in 1748 were Walter Scott and James Dryden. William (18th C.) son of Hawick surgeon Walter. In 1738 in Edinburgh he became apprentice to tailor William Clerk. William (18th C.) tenant in the Flex in 1743. In that year he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for James Reid, who was also a tenant at the Flex. He may be related to the later tenant of the same name at the Flex.
1763 when money was being raised to pay for the new bell for St. Mary’s Kirk. He was still Treasurer in 1769 when he was appointed to the commission to discuss the Common with representatives of the Duke of Buccleuch. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Williams. William of Meikledale (1693/4–1772) 3rd son of Robert of Davington and descendant of the Scotts of Thirlestane. He also farmed at Rowanburnfoot, near Canonbie. He went into partnership with Benjamin Bell to drove cattle, being very successful for a while, but being ruined by a distemper outbreak. He purchased Meikledale in 1731, but sold it to William Laing in 1750. He was ‘of Muckledale’ when he was made a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh in 1741. In 1722 he married Katherine, daughter of James Scott of Caffield. Their children were: Capt. James of Forge in Canonbie; Elizabeth, who married Thomas Bell; Mary, who never married; Susanna, who married Gilbert Richardson; Catherine, who married John Carruthers; and William, Ann, Agnes and Helen, who probably all died young. He may also have had a son Francis, who went to the East Indies. William (18th C.) recorded at Highchesters in 1721 and 1723. His children, baptised in Robertson Parish, included: Janet (b.1721); and Alexander (b.1723). William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was recorded as servant in Overhall in 1723 when he married Bessie Turnbull, who was ‘att Hawick miln’. Their children included Andrew (b.1724) and Robert (b.1727). William (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was living at Easter Alemoor in 1725, 1727 and 1732 and Alemoor in 1736. In 1724 he married Bessie Riddell in Wilton, the marriage also being proclaimed in Roberton. Most of these children, baptised in Robertson Parish, were probably his: Thomas (b.1725); William (b.1727); John (b.1730); Marion (b.1732); William (again, b.1733); Jean (b.1734); Thomas (b.1736); and Marion (again, b.1740). He was probably related to other Scotts who lived at Alemoor at about the same time, e.g. Gideon and Walter. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Rigg in 1729 when his son Robert was baptised. Perhaps the same William was at Stobcite in 1738 when his son James was baptised. William (18th C.) recorded as ‘younger in Sinton Mill’ in 1734 when his daughter Jean was baptised in Robertson Parish. He is probably related to Thomas, who was in Sinton Mill a little earlier. William of Coldhouse (18th C.) son of Robert of Coldhouse. As part of his 1743 marriage contract he was infeft in his father’s lands of Little Drinkstone (‘commonly called Tanlaw’) and Tanlawrig (‘commonly called Cowdhouse’). He represented his father in the court case for the division of Wilton Common in 1765. He could be the William who married Jean Paterson in Wilton in 1743; their children included Robert (b.1744), Walter (b.1748) and Jean (b.1750). He is also recorded in 1743 as a baptismal witness for William Scott in Whitfield in Wilton Parish (unless this was an error for Robert of Coldhouse, who witnessed a baptism in Wilton a few months later). William (b.1709) 2nd son of Gideon and Agnes Elliot, his grandfather being John of Woll. He was tenant farmer in Kirkoipe. In 1761 he married Margaret, daughter of Robert Scott of Singlie. Their children were: Gideon (1762–1841), farmer at Kirkoipe and later Laird of Overwells; Robert (b.1769); and Elizabeth, who married Thomas Suter. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living in Denholm in 1730, 1732, 1737 and 1741 when his children James, William, Agnes and Charles were baptised. Sir William of Ancrum (d.1769) 4th Baronet of Ancrum, son of Sir John. He was a Lieutenant, of Barrels’ Foot Regiment. He paid the window tax for Ancrum House in 1748 and 1753. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He died without issue and was succeeded by his nephew John Scott Nisbet of Craigentinnie. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded at Cavers itself in 1737 when his daughters Ann and Katherine were baptised. He was also living in Cavers in 1741 when his son Adam was baptised. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Colterscleuch in 1753 when his daughter Margaret was baptised. He may be related to the later William, servant at Colterscleuch. William (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He married Margaret Hobkirk in 1742, and their children may have included: William (b.1743); Mary (b.1756); and Walter (b.1761), who was a weaver in Wilton. William of Hummelknowes (18th C.) recorded in 1748 when he paid the window tax in Cavers Parish. He paid for 14 windows, but it is unclear whether this was for Hummelknowes or somewhere else. It is also if this was an error for John, who was miller there at about this time, or if this is even a different family entirely. Robert, who paid the window tax there in 1753 was probably his son. It is possible he is the same man. as William of Burnhead, who is recorded owning Hummelknowes a few decades later. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Langside in 1757 when his daughter Bettie was baptised in 1757. It could also have been his child who was baptised in 1761 (with no names recorded). William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Gordon and their children included: Isabel (b.1756); Helen (b.1759); Janet (b.1761); and Margaret (b.1766). The witnesses in 1761 were shoemakers James Chisholme and Alexander Bunyan (Kirk Officer) and in 1766 were tailor John Scott (perhaps a relative) and Alexander Bunyan. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1767 he married Mary Anderson, who was from Hawick Parish. Their children, baptised in Hawick, included: Janet (b.1768); and Cicilia (b.1770). William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Dryden and their children included Euphan (b.1771) and William (b.1772). The witnesses in 1772 were Thomas Grieve and Alexander Bunyan. William (18th C.) resident of Denholm. He was recorded as a shoemaker in 1776 and 1778, one of the earliest on record in Cavers Parish. His children included Andrew (b.1776) and Jean (b.1778). William (18th C.) probably son of John, younger of Gilmancesluch. He sold the family property to the Duchess of Buccleuch. He could be the ‘poor Miller at Ettrick bridge, a man of austere manners and great strength as well his sons’ mentioned by the Ettrick Shepherd as the representative of the family in 1806. William (1727/8–61) schoolmaster in Castleton. His gravestone depicted a man carved in relief (presumably William himself), holding a bible in one hand and a rose in the other, wearing a wig and a long buttoned coat. His wife Mary (1732/3–60) was also buried in the old kiryard. Dr. William of Stokoe (b.1733) eldest son of Walter and grandson of the last Thomas of Todrig. He settled at Stamfordham in Northumberland. He compiled a pedigree of the Scotts of Stokoe (used by Keith Scott in his 1923 book), which included information on their ancestors, the Scotts of Todrig and Whitslade. In 1759 he married Martha, daughter of Rev. Edward Fenwick, Vicar of Kirkwhelpington and they had 2 surviving sons, Walter and Edward Fenwick. William (18th C.) married Margaret Glendinning in Ashkirk in 1743. William of Woll (d.1785) eldest son of Walter, whom he succeeded in 1744 (note that some accounts of these generations are quite confused). He was trained as an advocate and served as Sheriff of Selkirkshire. He paid the window tax for Woll in 1748 and 1753. He was recorded as a Commissioner for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1761. Also in 1761 he was described as Sheriff Depute of Selkirkshire in a document regarding election of the Commissioners to Parliament. In 1764 he was named as one of the commissioners for assessing the boundaries of Wiltow Common. He was on the role of electors in Roxburghshire in 1780. He is recorded as witness to an Ashkirk marriage in 1766; Charles ‘at Woll’ was also mentioned, this being his son. He is recorded as proprietor of Woll on Ainslie’s 1773 map. The Walter Mason Collection preserves correspondence with William Ogilvie in 1777 over shares of ‘the Moss’ and submissions between him and the Duke of Buccleuch in 1777 and 1778. He was taxed for having a male servant (Andrew Leggat) in 1778 and 1779. He married Jean, daughter of Charles Balfour of Broadmeadows and Janet Plummer, who was a daughter of Plummer of Middlestead and Jean Kerr of Sunderland Hall. He inherited the lands of Broadmeadows through his wife, and she died in Hawick in 1797. They had 7 sons and 5 daughters, including: Elizabeth (b.1741); Agnes (b.1742); Walter (b.1743); Charles (b.1744), who succeeded; Isobel (b.1745); Margaret (b.1748); Janet or Jean (b.1750), his eldest surviving daughter, who married James Grieve and Rev. Benjamin Dickison; Elizabeth (b.1751); Andrew; Walter (b.1755); John of Midgehope (b.1757), father of William of Teviotbank; William (b.1759); and James (b.1760). It was said that his 5 daughters were all 6 feet high. The witnesses to the 1744 baptism were Alexander of Synton and John Sinton. A letter of his to Walter Scott of Harden from 1781 is in the National Archives. His wife ‘Mrs. Scott of Wall’ paid tax for having a female servant at her house in Hawick in 1786 and 1 in 1788–91. William (18th C.) resident of Ewes Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their children included: Hugh (b.1740); John (b.1740); James (b.1742); Jean (b.1744); Mary (b.1744); Jean (again, b.1745); Violet (b.1756); and Wilhelmina (b.1759). The witness in 1759 was John Laidlaw. William (18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. His children included Robert (b.1738), Rachel (b.1741) and Marion (b.1750). William of Thirlestane (18th C.) recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. However, this could be an error, since there was no Laird of that name at this time. William (1733–97) son of William. He was tenant in Milington, like his father. He was recorded as owner of a saddle horse in 1785–94. Either he or his son was the William recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 4 horses, and also paid dog tax on 3 non-working horses at Milsington in the same year. He was ‘Mr. Scott in Milsingtown’ in 1771 and 1773. In 1760 he married his cousin Betty, daughter of Walter Scott in Girnwood. Their children were: William, who also farmed Milsington; Walter (b.1764), baptised in Robertson, who succeeded as tenant in Girnwood; Henry (b.1767), baptised in Robertson, who had a family and moved to America; Robert, a manufacturer in Hawick; Thomas, who went to America and drowned at sea; Jane (or Jean, b.1762), who married James Richardson (who was 1777 Cornet) in Hawick; Elizabeth, who married William Miller; Janet (b.1771), baptised in Roberton; and twin sons Robert and Thomas (b.1773), baptised in Robertson. William (18th C.) recorded at Skelfhill in 1772 when his son Walter was baptised in Roberton Parish. The word ‘fornication’ was included on the register. William (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. In 1762 he married Betty Burnet, who was also from the same parish. William (18th C.) resident at Parkhill near Chisholm in at least the period 1764–75. His children, baptised in Robertson Parish, included: Agnes (b.1762); James (b.1764); William (b.1766); Mary (b.1771); Janet (b.1773); and Margaret (b.1775). There are several marriages in Robertson at about the right time that could be his. William (18th C.) resident at Headshaw in Ashkirk Parish in 1775 when his son Alexander was baptised in Robertson Parish. Dr. William (18th C.) physician in Hawick, who owned Brieryhill. It is unclear if he was a descendant of the earlier William of Brieryhill. He had sasine for the lands of ‘Brieryhole’ in 1739. He was one of the instigators (along with Robert Langlands of that Ilk and James Scott of Easter Heap) for the division of Wilton Common in 1765; at that time his land was valued at £81 3s 10d. In 1776 and over the next few years he had a few cases written up in the Edinburgh journal ‘Medical Commentaries’. These related, for example, to a mason who had a wounded thigh and a servant girl who passed ‘fatty substances’. He paid the Horse Tax in Hawick in 1785. He was recorded in the 1786 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick Parish as being ‘of Brieryhole’. In 1787 and 1788 he was a bachelor in Hawick who paid tax for having a female servant. In 1787 the death of his servant Janet Rodger is recorded. In 1788 he was listed as owner of Brieryhill in Wilton Parish, which was valued at £81 3s 10d. In 1792 he witnessed a baptism for mason William Philip. He was listed as a surgeon when he paid the horse tax in Hawick in 1794 and 1797 and the dog tax in 1797. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts, but he may have been a son of the earlier William of Brieryhill. It is possible he is the surgeon of this name who medically examined some of the men balloted to serve in the Militia around 1800. William (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He witnessed baptisms for Walter Scott ‘Soldier’, for merchant Andrew Scott and for carrier Walter Wilson in 1743, for shoemaker Robert Oliver in 1757 and (along with fellow shoemaker Andrew) for shoemaker Thomas Weens in 1765. He witnessed further baptisms in 1781 and 1784. He married Helen Gray and their children included Helen (b.1742). The witnesses in 1742 were baker Robert Scott (who may have been related) and mason Andrew Turnbull, elder. William (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. He was at Billerwell in 1758 when his daughter Janet was baptised. Dorothy (b.1753) and John (b.1761) may also have been his children. William (18th C.) gardener at Minto in 1785, when he was working for Sir Gilbert Elliot. It is possible he was the gardener who witnessed a baptism for tailor William Turner in 1766. He could be the William whose children Thomas (b.1790) and James (b.1791) were baptised in Minto. William (18th C.) mason in Castleton Parish. He opened up the vault at Hermitage, discovering the supposed dungeon where Ramsay was starved to death. His son William was also a mason, as well as author of ‘Border Exploits’. William (d.1794) shepherd at Priesthaughshiel. He died in the ‘Gonial Blast’ of January 1794, which killed several other shepherds in southern Scotland. William (18th C.) recorded at Highchesters in 1763 and 1766 when his daughter Ann and Helen were baptised in Robertson Parish. He may be related to the earlier William who lived at Highchesters. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, recorded at Fenwick in 1771. He married Jane Scott and their daughter Janet was baptised in 1771. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Ann Christie and their son Thomas was baptised in 1771. William (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their children included Robert (b.1783). Bailie William (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He was ‘present Magistrate’ in a baptismal entry of 1786. He is probably the Bailie William recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick as owner of 2 work horses. He married Margaret Goodscell; George (b.1778), probably them the son of Bailie William selected by ballot to serve in the Militia in 1797; James (b.1782); unnamed (b.1785); Robert (again, b.1786); and

William (b.1791). The witnesses in 1776, 1778 and 1791 were ex-Bailie Andrew and shoemaker

Henry (who were probably relatives) and in 1786 were ex-Bailie Andrew and shoemaker Robert.

He is probably the ‘Ballia William Scott Meal-mark’ whose death is recorded in Hawick in 1815. William of Burnhead (1723–1795) only surviving son of Robert and Agnes Scott, he was baptised in Wilton Parish. His maternal grandfather was Gideon of Falnash. He is listed among the subscribers to the reprinted Buchanan’s ‘History of Scotland’ (1752). He appears to have been involved in a dispute with Henry, Duke of Buccleuch, over the teinds of Clarilaw and Broom-lands in the 1760s. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He was listed among others who claimed rights to peat and turf on Wilton Common in 1764; in the court proceedings for the division, he swore to the authenticity of a document written by his wife’s father, Gideon of Falnash. He was also one of the Commissioners appointed in the court case regarding the division of Hawick Common in 1767. He later had a share of part of Hassendean Common when it was divided. In 1775 he wrote to Gilbert Elliott of Otterburn, describing the genealogy of the Elliots. He paid tax on a male servant (a footman or groom) in the period 1778–90, for a gardener and coachman 1791–94. He also paid tax for having a female servant in 1785 and 1786, 2 in 1787, 1 in 1788 and 2 in 1789 and 1790. He was taxed at Burnhead for owning a carriage in the period 1788–95 and horses in 1785–94. In 1788 his lands included Burnhead, part of Wester Clarilaw, Pinnacle and Lees, as well as Appletreehall Townfoot and Crawhill, all in Wilton Parish, and also Hummelknowes in Cavers Parish. He was also listed as owner of these lands in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls (although already deceased by then). When he died unmarried, the estate passed to his sister Margaret and then to his aunt Eupham’s son William Watson. William (1747/8–1820) tenant in Parkhill. He may have been son of the earlier William, who was tenant earlier. He married

Marion, daughter of James Clerk, tenant in Whitslade, and she died in 1798, aged 68. He is buried at Borthwick Waas along with several related people. William (18th C.) resident at Nether Tofts.

In 1787 his daughter Isabel was baptised in Kirkton Parish and his son William in 1791. William (18th C.) recorded as servant to Mr. Scott of Wauchope in 1790 when his daughter Helen was baptised in Hobkirk Parish. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1790 he married Katherine Hume. William (18th/19th C.)

resident of Hawick Parish. He married Wilhelmina (or ‘Mina’) Scott and their children included: Margaret (b.1788); Agnes (b.1790); John (b.1792); Wilhelmina (b.1794); William (b.1798); and James (b.1800). The baptisms were all recorded together in 1801, with John Henderson as a witness. William (18th/19th C.) recorded at Martin’s House on 1797, along with John. He was taxed for 2 farm horses, and so was probably the senior farmer. Willie from Martinshouse was probably a descendant. He could be the William who married Janet Beattie in Ashkirk

Parish in 1761 and whose son John was baptised in 1768 (with his designation perhaps reading

‘Martin house’ and the witnesses being the Associate Congregation). William junior, recorded at Martin’s House on the 1801 ballot for the Militia, may be his son; if so, then Charles, also there on the same list, was probably also his son.

William (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Shielswood, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Upper Raw in Castleton Parish, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls along with James. They owned 3 horses. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Roughleeneuk, recorded on the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was owner of 6 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid the dog tax there in the same year. He was probably related to George and Walter, who were also at Roughleeneuk at about the same time. William (1729/30–1812) tobacconist in Hawick. He is probably the tobacconist of that name who is recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls in Hawick in 1787–90 and 1794.

His death is recorded at the age of 82. He seems likely to be related to the later tobacconist of the same name. He is probably the William who married Margaret Scott and whose children included:

Sarah (b.1768); Francis (b.1769); Isabel (b.1771);

James (b.1773); and Isabel (again, b.1775). Francis and James may be the tobacconists of Hawick in the early 1800s. He could be the son of Francis and Jean Miller baptised in Hawick in 1727.

William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Isabel Kelzie and their children included: George (b.1773), probably the joiner in

and Jean (b.1779). William (1749–1810) son of William, he was baptised in Hobkirk Parish; he died in 1836, aged 82. Their children included: William (b.1779); Robert (b.1781); Jane (b.1783); Janet (b.1784); Mary (b.1786), who married John Blair, emigrated to Australia after being widowed and died at ‘Haning’, Armidale, aged 93; James (1788–1855), who was a ploughman; Richard (1790–1874), who married Jane Byers; Margaret (b.1793); Catherine (b.1795); and Walter (1796/7–1812). He was variously at Nisbet, Eckford, Town-o-Rule (in 1786) and Hallrule (in 1788 and 1790) when his children were baptised. The family are buried in Hobkirk Cemetery. William ‘Keek i’ the Kirk’ (18th/19th C.) father of the landlord of the King’s Head, mentioned in the 1823 Parish Records. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Scawmill in 1797. He married Sarah Farr and their son Edward was baptised in 1797. William (18th/19th C.) contributor (from Jamaica) in about 1799 to the local fund to support the war against France. He must have been from one of the local branches of the Scotts. He could be the same as Dr. William. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1798 he married Margaret Currer from Cavers Parish. He is recorded as ‘Mr’ and his bride as ‘Miss’, suggesting he was a landowner perhaps. William (18th/19th C.) resident at Longnewton according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Thomas was also there at that time and so presumably a close relative. Rev. William (1735–1809) 4th son of Walter of Nether Boucher and Helen Turnbull (sister of Rev. William Turnbull of Abbotrule). He was younger brother of Thomas of Boucher. He was licensed by the Presbytery of Dalkeith in 1760. He became minister at Ravingstondale in 1762 and was translated to Abbotrule in 1764. He was the last minister of the former Parish, reading the ‘Decree of Suppression’ in 1777 and finally moving to Southdean in 1785. He was then minister at Southdean until his death. It is said that in 1791 a ghostly rider appeared to him and 2 other ministers (or perhaps the elders) at about the same time that Patrick Kerr of Abbotrule died. It is likely he is the ‘Mr’ William who witnessed a baptism for Walter (resident of Coldhouse) in 1780. He is recorded at Southdean on the 1787–97 Horse Tax Rolls and in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls when he owned 2 work horses and 1 saddle horse. He married Sybil, daughter of John Henderson of Lockholm, Westmorland (although her name is also given as Hewitson), and she died in 1822. Their children were: Walter (b.1767), who had 2 sons, William and John, neither of whom had male heirs; John (b.1769), who had at least 8 children, but no grandchildren; Thomas (b.1773), who died without offspring; Adam (b.1775), insurance broker in London, who assumed the surname ‘Scott-Elliot’ when succeeding to Arkleton through his wife; Anne Nancy (b.1771, possibly also called Dorothy), who marrying Mr. Reid and later Charles Baxter of Edinburgh; William; and Robert Hewitson (b.1785), who died young. He wrote a description of Southdean Parish for Sinclair’s Statistical Account. A Southdean poet, Thomas Oliver wrote about the suddenness of his death – ‘I saw him from the kirk descend, And in five hours his life did end’. A monument to his memory is in Southdean kirkyard. William (1739–1814) son of Robert and Elizabeth Elliot. He farmed at Singlie, like his father. Among his employees (for a time) was James Hogg, the Ettrick Shepherd. He paid the Horse Tax at Singlie in the period 1785–97. He married Margaret Pott, who died in 1807 (according to the Scots Magazine). Their children included: Robert, tenant in Todshawhaugh; James (b.1775), a doctor in the army; William (b.1776), also an army doctor; George (b.1779), who went to Africa with Mungo Park, and died there; Henry (b.1780), an Edinburgh hatter; Gideon, who succeeded as tenant at Singlie; Thomas (b.1788), Captain in the army and tenant at Shielswood; John (b.1795), youngest son, who was a friend of the Ettrick Shepherd and became a distinguished surgeon in Edinburgh; Jane or Janet (b.1784), who married David (or perhaps Robert) Henderson of Abbotrule; Jessie, who married Rev. David Scott of Newcastleton; Margaret, who drowned along with her sister and 2 of their companions while bathing in a deep pool in the Ettrick; and Isabella (b.1791), who also drowned in 1800. William (18th C.) labourer in Hawick Parish. He married Betty Philip and their children included: John (b.1774); George (b.1776); and Robert (b.1784). The witnesses in 1774 were the whole congregation and in 1784 were William Philip and mason Robert Philip (surely related to his wife). William ‘Wullie the King’ (18th/19th C.) landlord of the King’s Head. His children were ‘Andrew the King’ and ‘Nelly the King’. His wife was Janet Dickson (possibly a daughter of Nellie Dickson, a former proprietor of the same inn).
He probably lived in a pended house on the High Street near the Cross Wynd, known as ‘Wullie the King’s’. He is probably the William recorded on the 1841 census as a publican at around 30 High Street – ‘Wagga Wagga and Jocky Sling, Rumpie Laidlaw and Rob the Laird, Jocky Tencocks and Wullie the King, Henry Mullens and Hope the Gaird’ [HI]. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1796 he was recorded as servant at Colterscleuch and householder at Lodgeknowe when his unnamed child was baptised in Cavers Parish. He could be the same as one of the other Williams. William (d.bef. 1809) from Girnwood. The death of his daughter Lizzie is William (18th/19th C.) married Nelly Anderson in Cavers Parish in 1787. recorded in Hawick in 1809. He may have been the son of Walter in Girnwood who married his cousin Elizabeth. William (d.1807) elder son of Rev. James and brother of Ebenezer, who was a surgeon in Dalkeith. He succeeded to Ashieburn in 1794, and was succeeded by his son Henry Erskine. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805. William (b.c.1765) joiner in Hawick. In 1841 he was living on the Sandbed. His wife was Christian and their children included Walter and Jane. William (b.c.1767) resident of Newcastleton, originally from England. He is recorded as ‘Independent’ in 1841, when he was living at about 9 Langholm Street in Newcastleton. His sons William and Francis were carters, and he also had a daughter, Agnes. William of Friarshaw (18th/19th C.) recorded as owner of Friarshaw in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. He was also owner of parts of Midslen. It is unclear how he might have been related to the Scott-Douglases of Friarshaw, and it may be that his name is an error. Dr. William (1773–1834) son of John and Elizabeth Thomson. He served as a surgeon in the sugar plantations of Barbados, being based at Content, St. Thomas on the island of Barbados. He amassed a fortune, some of which he left to his nephew John White, miller of Hawick Mill. He could be the surgeon William listed in Hawick on the subscription list to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He married Eliza Tucker in the West Indies, but retired to Edinburgh, although later moving to Paris. He is buried at Pere la Chaise cemetery in Paris, and a portrait of him exists, with one hand missing. William of Raeburn (1773–1855) son of Walter. In 1806 he married Susan, eldest daughter of Alexander Horsburgh. Their children were: Walter (1811–28); Alexander (1813–43); Robert, who succeeded; William Hugh; Violet; Susan Elizabeth; Barbara; Charlotte; Mary; Sarah; and Anne Rutherford. William Thomas in Milsington (1773–1829) great-grandson of William, the first Scott of Milsington. He was tenant farmer in Milsington. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. In 1822 he complained to the Duke of Buccleuch about interference in his rights of rental of the lands of Crowbyreshaugh in the East Mains of Hawick. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. In 1819 he married Janet, daughter of Mr. Arres, farmer at Farmington (although it is also said she was from Kirkton); she died in 1835. He died without issue, and the lease of Milsington went to his nephew James. William (1772–1846) son of Gideon and Mary Scott, he was born at Parkhead in Robertson Parish. In 1797 he married Janet Wilson, who was from Hawick; the marriage was proclaimed in both Hawick and Robertson Parishes. They had a son James (b.1797), who worked as a railway engineer in Liverpool, along with his brother William; his great-great grandson was airship pilot George Herbert Scott. He died in York. He may be the William, married to Janet Wilson, whose daughter Janet was baptised in East Bank Kirk in 1806. William (b.1770s) servant on Pathhead, according to the ballots for the Militia in Wilton Parish in 1799 and 1801. William (b.c.1770s) servant at Whitehaugh Mains according to the ballot for the Militia in Wilton Parish in 1799. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Kirndean in Castleton Parish. In the ‘Local Historians Table Book’ of 1841 it is described how more than 20 years earlier he had a run in with Robert Elliot, ‘Little Hobbie o the Castleton’, who lived at Byreholm. He was described as ‘an able, stout, brave borderer, who stood 6ft. 3in. high’ and had been spreading stories to harm the reputation of his diminutive neighbour. Elliot took him upstairs in his house, showed him pistols and swords and challenged him to a duel, at which he fled. If he existed at all, then he may be the same as one of the contemporary Williams. William of Woll and Sunderland Hall (1778–1820) eldest son of Charles of Woll. In 1801 he was ‘Mr William Scott (In first Regt Edr. Val’ on the ballot for the Militia in Ashkirk Parish; this meant that he was already a volunteer and hence excepted from selection for the Militia. He was promoted to Captain in the Selkirk and Galashiels Volunteer Infantry in 1803 and was Captain during the False Alarm of 1804. He was referred to as ‘younger of Woll’ during his father's lifetime; he was so listed along with his father among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1805. He was still 'younger of Wool' when listed as a Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire Commissioner in 1819. He trained as an Advocate and became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1811. His family had inherited Sunderland Hall through marriage. He went to Canada and there in 1815 married Alicia, daughter of Richard John Uniacke of Mount Uniacke (who was Attorney-General for Cape Breton and Judge of the Supreme Court in Nova Scotia). They had 2 sons: Charles Andrew (1817–38), who inherited Wool and died in Rome; and Richard (1818–27). Sunderland Hall eventually passed to his nephew, son of Charles Balfour Scott. He became Commissioner of Customs. William (b.c.1780) recorded at Branholme Park on the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Hawick Parish. William (b.c.1780) resident of Martin's House according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia; he was 'junior' and hence presumably son of an older William. Charles was also listed there and probably his brother. William (b.c.1780) servant to John, tenant at Ashkirk Mill, according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. He could be the same as one of the other Johns. William (b.c.1780) servant at Firth in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. William (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Isobel Glendinning and their children included James (b.1806). William (18th/19th C.) resident of the Flex, recorded in 1799 and 1802 baptismal records. He is also recorded on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls as 'William Scott at Flex'. He was owner of part of the 'particulate lands' of Hawick, which were later owned by Walter Pringle. His wife's name is given as 'Mrs Scott' and their children included Helen (b.1799) and Andrew (b.1802). William (18th/19th C.) physician on the High Street, recorded on Pigot's 1825/6 directory. William (c.1780–bef. 1851) farmer at the Greens, south of Newcastleton. He is recorded there in 1841, but must have died soon afterwards. In 1851 his wife was farmer of 7 acres at the Greens, and she was 'Feuar' in 1861. He married Agnes (or Nancy) Armstrong, from Canonbie. Their children included Elizabeth, Ann, William (an agricultural labourer and carter) and Mary. He is probably the carter at Greens listed among heads of households in 1835–41. William (b.1774/5) wright in Newcastleton according to the ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1799 and 1801. He was a joiner in Newcastleton, listed in Pigot's 1837 directory and a wright in Slater's 1852 directory. In 1841 he was on North Hermitage Street and in 1851 at about 5 Whitchester Street. His wife was Elizabeth ('Betty') Wemyss and they had a son, Charles (b.1814). William (b.c.1770s) servant at Horsleyhill in Minto Parish according to the ballots for the Militia in 1799 and 1801. In 1801 a wright of the same name was also listed at Horsleyhill. William (b.c.1780) wright at Horsleyhill in Minto Parish according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. He was separate from the farm servant of the same name who was also there in 1801. One of them was probably the William whose children George (b.1806) and Catherine (b.1807) were baptised in Minto. William (b.c.1780s) labourer at Howpsley according to the ballot for the Militia in Robertson Parish in 1812. William (d.1842) son of a mason from Lower Burnmouth in Castleton, he was educated at Teviothead. From 1810 he was master at the small school at Burnmouth, and was later a mason in Newcastleton. He made a sketch of Hermitage Castle before it was renovated in 1820. In 1806, at the desire of Lord Dalkeith, he performed some excavations at Hermitage, uncovering a paved floor and finding a large key. When the school at Burnmouth was closed during harvest time he travelled the country lettering new tombstones, and deciphering old ones. He collected historical artefacts, and was an expert on local traditions. He published 'Border Exploits' in Hawick in 1812 (2nd edition 1832) and also ' Beauties of the Border' (1821). He was recorded as schoolmaster at Burnmouth among heads of households 1835–41. He was listed as master of the auxiliary parochial school at Burnmouth in Pigot's 1837 directory. He married Isabella Veitch from the Bedrue family. He had 3 sons, one of whom, Andrew (b.1800), became a Professor at Aberdeen University, while another, Thomas, was a teacher at Beith and Kirkcaldy in Fife. He is probably the William (aged 77) who is recorded as a schoolmaster at Burnmouth in 1841, living along with his wife Janet (presumably a second wife). He died after accidently being thrown from a cart and is buried in Castleton. David Anderson wrote a poem after he died – 'No more will be sculpture the stone for the dead, No more show the young the pure path they should tread, No more, lonely Hermitage, will he portray Thy clear sparkling waters and battlements grey' [DA]. William (18th/19th C.) married Jean Lillico in 1812. William (d.1842) son of a mason from Lower Burnmouth in Castleton, he was educated at Teviothead. From 1810 he was master at the small school at Burnmouth, and was later a mason in Newcastleton. He made a sketch of Hermitage Castle before it was renovated in 1820. William (18th/19th C.) married Jean Lillico in 1819. William (18th/19th C.) grocer and spirit dealer on the High Street, recorded on Pigot's 1825/6 directory. He may be the publican on the High Street (at about No. 30) on the 1841 census, living there with Christian, Robert, Adam and Margaret, probably all his younger siblings, and all born outside Hawick.
William (b.1778/9) mason at Borthaugh Cottage. He is recorded as a mason at Borthaugh in 1797 on the list of men on the ballot to serve in the Militia; he was still at Borthaugh in 1799 when listed was among those 'In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn residing in Wilton parish' and still listed as a mason at Borthaugh Cottages in 1841. His wife was Helen, and their children included: Isabella (b.c.1810); James (b.c.1815), who was a mason at Overhall; John (b.c.1820); William (b.c.1822); Robert (b.c.1825); Thomas (b.c.1830); and Isabella (b.c.1835). William (c.1779–1855) son of William and Euphemia Smail, he was born in Traquair. He was brought up in Yarrow and Ettrick Parishes, but later was a handloom weaver in Balgonie, Markinch Parish, Fife. He married Isobell Bell, who was born in Dunbar and died in Balgonie, Fife. Their children were: William (1801-48), farm worker in Ashkirk Parish; John (b.1803); Mar-et (b.1805); Euphemia (b.1807); James (1809– 74), wood sawyer who died in Galashiels; Walter (1811–33); David (b.1813); Thomas (b.1817); Isabella (b.1819); Robert (b.1822); and Andrew (1825–97), weaver in Selkirk. He died in Selkirk.

was probably at about No. 25 on the 1841 census. His wife was Agnes, and children included Agnes, Janet and Margaret. He may have married Janet Cook, who was a widow and innkeeper at 17 High Street. He may be the William whose heirs were recorded owning part of the former lands of Patrick Cunningham in Hawick in about 1874. William (1795–1859) clerk with Wilson’s, who was known as a local poet and a strong temperance supporter. He was a friend of James Ruickbie, and had 10 of his own poems included in Ruickbie’s ‘Poems’ (1826). He wrote some lines about the talents of his contemporary, James Hogg (of ‘Teribus’). He was also a close friend of the local poet Elliot Aitchison, as well as Andrew Leyden, brother of the poet and linguist. He was a competitor in the contest for poems of the Auld Brig in 1851, and also contributed to the local press. A poem on the celebration of the Duke of Buccleuch’s birthday apparently earned him a job as a clerk at the Dalkeith colliery. He later moved further away and died in Belfast. His daughter Margaret Isabella Sarah was the first wife of Sir James A.H. Murray, while another daughter, Elizabeth Jane married George Easton. His long poem ‘The Sportyng Dominie; or, a Sang o’ ane Gray Catte’ was published in ‘Living Bards of the Border’ in 1859, when he was said to have ‘now left this country and gone to Ireland’; this poem contains many examples of dialect words from the mid-19th century. William (b.c.1785) butcher of the Howegate, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He is probably the Hawick butcher of that name who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He may be the William listed as a flesher in Hawick (after George, also a flesher) among heads of households in Wilton Kirk in 1840 and 1841. In the 1841 census he was living alone at around 60 High Street. An unnamed child of his died in 1816 and his son James died in 1823, aged 15. William (b.1799) son of Charles, he was a shepherd in Southdean Parish. In 1841 and 1851 he was living at Tamsfieldhaugh. He married Janet Oliver in 1827. Their children included: Margaret (b.1827/8); Charles (b.1829/30); Mary (b.1831/2); Isabella (b.1834/5), who married James Waugh, who became a successful horse trainer; Janet (b.1837/8); Helen (b.1840/1); and Elizabeth (b.1842/3). William (19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Isobel Hogg and their children included Robert (b.1833).

William (1800/1–1858) eldest son of Walter, he took over as tenant of Girnwood. He was already listed there in 1841, when he had 2 female servants and also 2 farm labourers also living in his house. He married Ann Laidlaw in Roberton in 1821. Their children were: Walter (b.1822), who succeeded as tenant of Girnwood; and Margaret, who married George Davies, and whose daughter Hannah purchased the property. William (1801–48) born in Yarrow Parish, he lived in Ashkirk, at several farms around Synton, working as a farm labourer, gamekeeper and thatcher. In 1841 the family were living at Synton Lodge. In 1826 he married Mary Scott (c.1806–80), daughter of John and Helen Scott from Selkirk Parish; there are thus a lot of Scotts in this family tree! Their sons were: William (1826–78); John (b.1831); Robert (b.1834); George (b.1836); Alexander (b.1840); and Walter (b.1846), who emigrated to Canada. He died in an unfortunate way, having fallen into the mill lade near Roughheugh Mill, and being rescued, he walked home to Synton Mill on a cold October night and next day was found to the north of Groundistone Heights, having frozen to death. His widow and children were living at Dimpleknowe in 1851. He is buried in Ashkirk kirkyard. William (b.1803) son of George, he was a joiner at Deanburnhaugh, like his father before him. He was recorded as a joiner there in 1841, 1851 and 1861. His retired father George was living with his family in 1861. He married Isabella Brown in 1836 and their children included: George (b.1836); William (b.1838); Barbara (b.1840); Robert (b.1842); Mary (b.1844); Isabella (b.1847); Adam (b.1849); Margaret (b.1852); and Ann (b.1858). William (19th C.) shepherd at Gorrenberry. In 1832 he when accused of ‘the sin of fornication’ with Alison Crozier. At the same time John ‘in Castleton’ was accused of the same thing with Jean Crozier (perhaps her sister). William (19th C.) listed as a carrier in 1837, leaving Hawick for Langholm once a week. It is possible that he was from Langholm. William (b.c.1800) ironmonger and blacksmith on the Howegate. He is recorded at about No. 7 in 1841 and 1851. His wife was Isabella, from Aberlady, and their children included Joseph, George, Helen, Margaret and Isabella. William (b.1802/3) foreman at Weensland Mills. He was living there in 1841 and 1851. His wife was Ann, and their children included Ebenezer, Louisa (who married James McMorran), John, Janet Stuart, Robert, William and Ann. Sir William of Ancrum (1803–71) 7th Baronet, son of Sir John. He succeeded Ann Laidlaw in Roberton in 1821. Their children were: Walter (b.1822), who succeeded as tenant of Girnwood; and Margaret, who married George Davies, and whose daughter Hannah purchased the property.
He served briefly as an officer in the 2nd Life Guards. He became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1826, but left in 1834 when the Chairmen refused to toast the new Whig M.P. He was M.P. for Carlisle 1829–30 and for Roxburghshire 1859–70. He was unopposed in 1865, defeated Lord Schomberg Henry Kerr in 1868 and resigned in 1870. He was also a J.P. and Deputy-Lieutenant for Roxburghshire, as well as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for the county. He served on the Lunacy Board for the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk and Berwick and on the Police and Prison Boards for Roxburghshire. He was also a Vice-President of the Edinburgh Border Counties Association. He married Elizabeth, daughter and heir of David Anderson of Balgay, Forfar, and she died in 1878. He was succeeded by his son Sir William Monteath, with whom the Baronetcy became extinct. His other children were: John (d.1859), Captain in the Scots Guard; Henry (or Harry) Warren (1833–89), who married Cecilia Louisa Burnaby; Arthur (1835–74), who died unmarried; Elizabeth, married Lieut.-Col. Charles Lennox Tredcroft; Harriet, married Col. Edward E. Dulier, and whose daughter Irene was also a Vice-President of the Edinburgh Border Counties Association. He married Elizabeth Turnbull. He was Commissioner of the Lunacy Board for the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk and Berwick, with his discharge connected to the Teviot. He served as a commissioner of supply and justice of the Peace for the county. In 1872 he was listed as a skinner in Ha-wick, with his discharge connected to the Teviot. His wife was Margaret R. (probably Davidson). William ‘Willie’ (b.c.1820) farm labourer who lived at Martinshouse. He was known as a great runner. There was a special race arranged between him and William Stewart from Hawthornside. It took place over half a mile near Stobs, with all of his supporters present; however, he lost to Stewart. William (1821/2–83) son of John, from whom he succeeded to Timpendean. In 1857 he became a member of the Royal Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland. In 1861 he was a farmer there of 1600 acres, employing 16 labourers. He was recorded at Timpendean in a directory of 1868. He married Margaret Patterson, from Morebattle. Their children included John, Ellen, Agnes, Francis, Margaret and Isabella. William John (1827–73) son of James of Ellem and Agnes. He was a great-grandson of William of Woll. He was living at Teviot Bank in 1851, when he farmed 240 acres and employed 9 labourers and had 5 servants. His cousin Jane Elliot also acted as a housekeeper. He was also listed at Teviot Bank in an 1852 directory. He formally succeeded to Teviot Bank on the death of his mother about 1857, but sold it in 1860. He married Theresa Newcomer Harris (1839–1928) in London, Ontario. He was born (in 1837 according to some sources) in Jedburgh and died on the H.H.S. Palestine near Suez. His wife secondly married explorer Clement Littledale, and she became the first woman to enter the Tibetan mon-sastery of Lhasa. William Percival (1820/1–93) son of Robert and Janet Colledge. He was a stockmaker in Denholm, living on Leyden

Ashkirk Parish, in 1851 he was a farm servant living at Synton Mill and in 1861 he was a carter living at Under Hope Park in Wilton. He was later a forester on the Abbotrule estate until he died. He married Jane Hogg and had a son William (b.1851). Sir William Monteath of Ancrum (1829–1902) 8th Baronet of Ancrum, son of Sir William.
He served with the 79th Highlanders and the Roxburghshire Volunteers. He was a Deputy-Lieutenant and County Councillor for Roxburghshire, as well as being a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for the county. He had a new house built at Ancrum when the original house burned down in 1873. In 1861 he married Amelia, daughter of Gen. Sir Thomas Monteath Douglas of Stonebyres, and she died in 1890. They had one child, Constance Emily. William (b.1830/1) son of William and Agnes Armstrong from the Greens.
He was an agricultural labourer and carter, He could be the carter of that name who is recorded in the 1860s running from Newcastle to Hawick once a week. William (b.c.1830) born in Cavers Parish, in 1861 he was a ‘Gameguard’ living at Sunnybank in Wilton Parish. His wife Jane was from Canonbie. He may be the son of shepherd Adam and Janet Leithead who was living at Houndshall in Cavers Parish in 1841, since Janet died at Sunnybank in 1865. William (b.1833/4) born in Ettrick, he was a shepherd, living at Adderstoneshels Cottages in 1901. His wife was Jane and their son William was also a shepherd.
William Munro (b.1844) son of weaver Charles.
He was a younger cousin of Sir James A.H. Murray. His middle name came from his uncle. It is said that he built a canoe, which he paddled to Berwick and then down the coast to Newbigging, where he almost drowned. William (19th C.)

Mary, eldest daughter of Thomas Bailey, Gatley, Cheshire. He had a son, Walter Nichol. William Laidlaw ‘Wowie’ (1847–1922) son of grocer and shoemaker Charles. He was said to be somewhat simple and had a speech impediment. He continued his father’s shoemaking business. William (b.1851) born in Lilliesleaf Parish, son of William and Jane Hogg. His father William (b.1826) was born in Ashkirk, son of William and Mary Scott. He worked locally in the building trade.
He later moved to England, where he was an architect. He married 3 times, and had 4 children, one of whom, Euphemia, had a son, Hugh Mc-Neill, comic-book artist of the mid-1900s. In 1901 he wrote a letter in verse on the occasion of the return of his uncle Walter to Dimpleknowe. William (19th C.) married Janet Hobkirk in Hawick in 1874. William Porteous (1852/3–1916) son of manufacturer Walter and Helen Porteous. He ers, tweed merchants. He served as Clerk of the Deacon’s Court at St. George’s Kirk. William James ‘Willie’ (1897–1989) folk singer, sometimes called ‘the Border Shepherd’. Born at Andrew’s Knowes, Canonbie, Dumfriesshire, he spent most of his life as a shepherd, living at many places around the Scottish Borders, including near Hawick for many years. He came from a musical family, with all of his siblings being singers or musicians. He was also a self-taught fiddle player. In 1953 he moved to Fifeshire, and was ‘discovered’ as a national treasure. In 1968 he retired as a shepherd, but continued to perform. He recorded an album ‘The Shepherd’s Song – Border Ballads’ (1967), and also sings 3 songs on ‘Borders Sangsters’. A collection of his songs, ‘Herd Laddie o’ the Glen’ was edited by Alison McMorland in 1988, with a new and expanded edition in 2006. He married Frances Thompson, daughter of a Canonbie ploughman.

Scott Crescent (sko'-kre-sin') n. part of Burnfoot, built in 1952 and named after Sir Walter Scott of Abbotsford.

Scott-Douglas (sko'-dug-lis) n. Sir George Henry of Springwood Park (1825–85) 4th Baronet and son of Sir John James Douglas and Hannah Charlotte Scott of Horsleyhill and Belford, as well as being the grandson of Sir George Douglas, who had been M.P. for Roxburghshire 1784–1806. His father had changed the family surname as part of the inheritance of his mother’s family lands (she was daughter of Henry Scott, last Laird of Horsleyhill). He succeeded in 1836 and became Captain of the 34th Regiment of Foot (later the Border Regiment).

Scott-Elliot (sko'-e-li') n. Adam (1775–1821) 4th son of Rev. William Scott of Southdean. He was an insurance broker in London and merchant in Leith. In 1807 he married Margaret, daughter of William Elliot of Arkleton. After his wife’s brother Maj. Robert Elliot died in 1810 she became sole heir, and they assumed the conjoint surname. His wife died in Edinburgh in 1816. In 1818 he became a member of the Jedforest Club. His children were: Ann (b.1809 in Hackney); William (b.1811), W.S., who succeeded to Arkleton; and Cassandra (b.1814), who married John Rutherford, W.S. George Fraser (1784–1848) youngest child of Capt. James Scott, who lived at Forge in Canonbie. He was a direct descendant of the Scotts of Thirlestane. A childhood accident left him lame, and with the nickname ‘Pinfoot’. He worked as a law clerk in London. After the death of his father’s cousin, Maj.-Gen. William Elliot of Larriston in 1803, he inherited the lands of Larriston and took the additional name of Elliot; he was just 19 when he inherited. A local rumour circulated that he was the illegitimate son of the Maj.-Gen., but this was not the case. He is probably the ‘George Elliot’ of Larriston listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. He also lived at ‘Woodside’, near Canonbie and farmed at Nether Woodhouselees. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. In the Land Tax Rolls for 1811 he was owner of ‘Lariston, comprehending Over and Nether Lariston, and Mill and Mill Lands thereof’, as well as Lariston Rig and Blackhope. In 1813 he became a member of the Highland Society of Scotland. He also became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1813 and gave the 2nd toast at the gathering to welcome home the 5th Duke of Buccleuch in 1839. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He was a cautioner for the agent of the Leith Banking Company in Langholm in 1822, and involved in a related court case in 1830. Having inherited an estate that was already in debt, and failing in introducing a new breed of sheep, he became insolvent in 1843 and sold Larriston to James Jardine. He married Ann Marjory ‘Marion’, from the closely-connected Bell family. Their children included: William Elliot (b.1818), who became Surveyor of Customs; James (1820–80), merchant in Calcutta, father of explorer George Francis; George (1821–49), Lieutenant in the Madras Artillery, died at Jalnash; Marion (1823–1908), married George Douglas and secondly Rev. George Golville of Canonbie; Charles (1825–99), became a General in India and married Mary Vertue; Harris, or ‘Harry’ (b.1828); Pheobe Anne (‘Annie’, d.1868) married Alexander Walker; and Eliza Georgina Isabella, who married Francis Henry Connolly in 1865 and died in Madras. He died at Woodslee, Canonbie, where he is buried. James (1820–80) 3rd son of George Fraser. He became a prosperous merchant in Calcutta, returning to Scotland in 1866. He kept extensive diaries in the period 1842–65, which are in the National Library. He married Francisca May Durand. They had 3 sons and 5 daughters, including: Prof. George Francis (1862–1934), a botanist, explorer and author; Lieut.-Col. William (1873–1943), who has descendants still bearing the ‘Scott-Elliot’ surname; Charles, who died in infancy; Edith May, who married Joseph Gillon Fergusson; Annie Emilia, who married Capt. Arthur Ripley Pott of Todrig and Borthwickshiel and secondly married Capt. J.A. Doig; Lilian, who married Eric Talyeur; and Ethel and Eliza, who both died young. A portrait of him exists. His diaries are in the National Library of Scotland. John (b.c.1818) 2nd surviving son of Thomas Elliot (brother of William of Harwood) and Helen Scott (daughter of Thomas of Peel). He inherited Riccalton (in Oxnam Parish) from his uncle John Scott and took the additional surname of Scott. He served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. He also succeeded to the life-rent of Peel on the death of his brother William. He was listed in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874 as owner of ‘Backstonelees, Blackstonelees, or Peel’, as well as Riccalton, with his name written as ‘John Scott Elliot Scott of Peel’. When he died the liferent and existing leases went to his nephew John Elliot in Flatt. Margaret ‘Peggy’ (1779–1816) daughter of William of Arkleton. Her brothers Adam, Robert and William all died in service overseas. She inherited Arkleton in 1810 and assumed the name Scott-Elliot. In 1807 she married Adam, son of Rev. William Scott, minister at Southdean. Their children were: Ann; Cassandra, who married John Rutherford; and William, who succeeded. Walter Travers of Arkleton (1895–1977) only child of William. He was the 11th Laird of Arkleton and was a Captain in the Coldstream Guards. He was Managing Director in the Bombay Company, trading goods between Britain and India. In 1945 he was elected as Labour M.P. for Accrington, serving as a Parliamentary Private Secretary to the War Office and on the Executive Committee of the National Trust. He stood down in 1948 and went back to his estate and business. He firstly married Reichsdile Maria Alice, daughter of Capt. Alexander Reichstitter von Groeller, formerly of the Austro-Hungarian Navy. He secondly married Dorothy, daughter of William Nunn of Calcutta. In 1964 he sold Arkleton to Prof. Higgs of Oxford. Along with his wife Dorothy, he was murdered by his new Butler, Archibald Hall, after being drugged and driven to the Highlands. The case caused a sensation at the time. William of Arkleton (1811–1901), W.S., only son of Margaret Elliot and Adam Scott. His parents had adopted the double-barrelled surname in order to inherit the Arkleton estate. He is famous for modelling for a portrait by Sir Henry Raeburn at the age of about 4. His father died in 1821 and he succeeded to Arkleton when he reached majority. He was trained as a lawyer, became Writer to the Signet in 1833 and served as a J.P. He attended the 1839 dinner at Branxholme given in honour of the Duke of Buccleuch. He had Arkleton renovated as a Scots baronial house, probably under the influence of his father-in-law. In 1848 he married Margaret, 2nd daughter of Edinburgh architect Lewis Alexander Wallace, and they had 7 children: William (b.1849), who succeeded; Louisa (b.1850); Isabel (b.1852), who married Edward A. Baxter of Kincaldrum; Margaret (b.1854); Lewis Alexander (b.1857), who firstly married Laura, daughter of Col. Hastings of the U.S. Army and secondly married Princess Eydua Marie, daughter of Prince Arthur Odelsey of Swiipe, Hungary; Col. Adam (b.1860) of the Cameron Highlanders, who married Marjorie, daughter of Lewis Evans of Cornell Park; and Mary (b.1861). William of Peel (1811/2–71) 3rd son of Thomas Elliot (brother of William of Harwood) and Helen Scott (daughter of Thomas of Peel). He inherited the lands of Peel in Liddesdale from his uncle John Scott and took the additional surname of Scott (as his brother John did to inherit Riccalton). He was on the Borders Union Railway Committee for Liddesdale in the 1850s. He was listed as one of the principal landowners in Castleton Parish in the 1860s. In 1861 he was farmer of 6098 acres at Kirndean, living with his sisters Ann Jane and Christian. He served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. After his death his brother John succeeded to the life-rent of Peel. William (1818–1905) eldest son of George Fraser. He was brought up to be heir of the Larriston estate, but after his father went bankrupt he entered the Customs & Excise service, eventually becoming Surveyor of Customs at Leith. After falling from his horse he was nursed by the woman he would later marry, Jessie Brown, daughter of a Renfrewshire minister. Their only son, William, died unmarried in 1948. They also had daughters Georgina, Netta (or Janet), Marion and Anne (or Annie). William of Arkleton (1849–1919) eldest son of William, and descended from the Scotts of Bonchester. He was a merchant banker in London. He was a member of the Theosophy Society, through whom he met Charles Leadbetter. The pair claimed to have received knowledge of ancient Atlantis via ‘astral clairvoyance’. He subsequently wrote the books ‘The Story of Atlantis’ (1896) and ‘The Lost Lemuria’ (1904), in which he described the supposed development of early races of 15-foot tall Lemurians into modern humans. He matriculated arms in 1904. In 1893 he married Maude Louisa, daughter of Robert Boyle Travers of Farsid, County Cork. His only child was Walter Travers, M.P. for Accrington.

Scott Gallery (sko-'gaw-in-ree) n. extension to Wilton Lodge Museum, built in 1975 with grants from the Scottish Arts Council, education authorities and other bodies. It houses the town’s collection of largely 19th and 20th century local artwork, and show-cases temporary exhibitions. It was named after Bailie F. Scott, who first suggested its construction back in 1906, and also partly after R.E. Scott, who was Museum curator at the time. The gallery was opened by Earl Haig of Bemersyde, with the first display being largely the former Hawick Art Club collection. During the building work sections of 5 foot thick walls from an earlier house were uncovered. This area behind Wilton Lodge was a courtyard of servants’ areas, coach-house and stables until the 1950s.

local clan by Sir Walter in 1596 (although it is also stated that they descended from the Thirlestane branch). Upper Teviotdale, the Borthwick and Ale valleys were the strongholds of the family for centuries. The Dukedom of Buccleuch became one of the richest in Scotland and the main Scott seat is now at Bowhill. Several minor branches of the Buccleuch family have been important within Hawick, including Scotts of Goldielands and Allanhaugh. The Scotts of Harden have an ancient history, and are now represented by the Lords Polwarth. The Scotts of Horsleyhill were prominent Hawick townspeople for centuries, as well as Scotts of Alton, and other local branches include the Scotts of Crumhaugh, of Whitehaugh, of Goldielands, of Burnfoot, of Hassendean, of Synton, of Todrig, of Whitslade, of Woll, etc. Around the 16th and 17th centuries there were property-owning Scotts, called ‘o the Mote’, ‘o the Toor’, etc., who were probably branches from younger sons of local Lairds. Around the 18th century there were also tradesman-class families within and around Hawick, e.g. the Mill Port Scotts, the West Port Scotts (probably related to the Crumhaugh branch), the East Port Scotts, the Scotts at the Cross, the Scotts of the Wyndheid, the Ormiston Scotts, the Scotts of Hummelknowe Mill, etc. The family motto is ‘Amo’ (I love), the arms of the Scotts of Buccleuch are a 6-pomited star and two crescent moons on a blue diagonal band (also described as ‘or, on a bend azure a mullet between two crescents of the field’) and the crest is ‘a stag reipant, proper’. A huge amount of family history is contained in the records of the Scotts of Buccleuch, which are preserved in the National Archives of Scotland, much of which was transcribed by William Fraser in 1878 – ‘He was gloved and mailed, he was booted and spurred, For a Scott must ride at the lightest word’ [WHO].

the Secession (thu-se-se-shin) n. event in the Church of Scotland in which a group of dissenting ministers left to form their own independent church. It was caused by 2 acts of the General Assembly in 1732, principally regarding the powers of the congregation to appoint ministers. The dissent was led by Ebenezer and Ralph Erskine, who were from Berwickshire (and related to Harry Erskine, minister at Roberton). The Seceders called themselves the Associate Synod, and gathered strength until they split over whether members of their church could conscientiously take the Burgess Oath, which talked of supporting the ‘true religion at present professed within the realm’. This led to the formation of the Burgher and Anti-Burgher kirk. In about 1738 it was stated that in Hawick Parish the Seceders did not register their baptisms, which amounts to about 3 per year. The customs within the secession movement were generally stricter than in the established church, e.g. it is stated that at local weddings in the 18th century the bridal party danced back to back. Some locals attended the associate church in Midlem before the Green Kirk was built in the 1760s, followed by the East Bank Kirk in the 1770s.

Seigiva (sā-gi-va) n. one of two women worshippers (the other being Rosfritha) from 'Hahwick' who apparently witnessed a miracle in the chapel of St. Cuthbert on the 'Slitrith', according to the contemporary historian Reginald of Durham. They are said to have travelled many miles on a feast day of St. Cuthbert before Reginald wrote his book in about the 1170s, coming to the chapel, which is generally assumed to be at a site near Cogsmill. They were dismayed at the failure of the altar candle, but with their faith in St. Cuthbert, a new candle appeared in the middle of the altar ‘which diffused all around its beaming rays’ (also transcribed ‘Seigiv’ and ‘Sægifa’).

Selby (sel-bee) n. Ephraim (b.1801) son of Robert, he was also factor at Minto. He lived for a while at Hassendeanbank. In 1861 he is recorded living at Minto Cleuchhead, farming 375 acres and employing 13 people. He served as a Commissioner for the county of Roxburghshire. He is probably the Mr. Selby who, along with George Pott of Dod, first suggested building a bridge and roads to connect Hassendean station with Denholm. He was listed as a Steward at the Common Riding Races of 1836. His right to be a registered voter was questioned in the House of Commons investigation into ‘Fictitious Voters’ in 1837. He was on the Railway Committee for Hawick District in the 1850s. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1863. He was still recorded as farmer at Hassendeanbank in 1868. He married Catherine, daughter of Thomas Rutherford, servant to Gilbert, 2nd Earl of Minto; her diaries are in the National Library of Scotland Manuscript Collection. His children included Robert (who farmed at Hassendeanbank), Gilbert R. and William. His wife is probably the ‘Mrs. Selby, wife of the factor on Minto estate’, who is said to have helped the young James ‘Dictionary’ Murray to learn Italian and German. Robert (18th/19th C.) factor at Minto. His son Ephraim was also factor there, while his daughter Mary married hosiery manufacturer Peter Wilson. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. Robert (b.1840/1) son of Ephraim. In 1861 he is recorded as farmer of 434 acres and employing 15 people at Hassendeanbank, although only 20 years old. He was present at the famous otter hunt of 1863, led by Dr. Grant of Hawick. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1872. Sir William (c.1556–1638) son of Sir John, he was Governor of Berwick and one of the Border Commissioners. In 1603 he was sent to deal with the Armstrongs and other Liddesdale men who were regarded as trouble-makers, burning many Border towers in the process.

seld see selled

seldom (sel-dum) adj., arch. in short supply, scarce, of small quantity – ‘His hair’s gey seldom’ [GW].

selfcorn (self-körn) n., arch. a blackhead.

the Selgovæ (thu-sel-gö-vl) n., pl. ancient Celtic tribe which existed in the Borders during and after Roman occupation. Their territory consisted of the middle and upper Tweed basin and its tributaries (including the Teviot) and extended to the Solway (and was probably the origin of that name). One of their headquarters was at Newstead near Melrose, called Trimontium. The other 3 towns mentioned by Ptolemy were Carbantorium, Uxellum and Corda, and all are unidentified. The Votadini were the tribe to the east and north, and the Novantae to the west. However, it is unclear whether the Selgovæ were part of the Votadini or distinct. They were effectively conquered by the Romans in 79–80 C.E. (the word is thought to mean ‘hunters’).

Selliceset (se-lis-se’) pp., poet. ceased – ‘An’ when they were come intill the schip the win’ selliceset’ [HSR] (the word is obscure, perhaps a variant of ‘silenced’).

Selkirk (sel-kurk) n. town 11 miles north of Hawick, being the Ancient and Royal Burgh of Selkirk, built high above the Ettrick and Yarrow valleys, which was the seat of the county of Selkirkshire. The town has for centuries been on the main road north from Hawick to Edinburgh. It was already an established mediæval town when David I established and abbey here in 1113 (although the monks soon moved to Kelso), with a castle and hunting forest following in the same century. Selkirk became a Royal Burgh perhaps in the 13th century and the Scottish Parliament met here in 1204. James V granted part of the royal forest as a common, and the town may have had the largest common in the country. The town has a mediæval plan, built around the market square, although the top part of the old town was levelled in the 1960s. It was burned by the English in 1418 and the inhabitants robbed in 1502 by Englishman Sir John Musgrave, with the help of Adam Turnbull (tenant at Hornshole and Chamberlain Newton). It was burned by the English again in 1543. A nearby massacre of Montrose’s Royalists took place by Leslie’s Covenanters in 1645. Sir Walter Scott was Sheriff here for 33 years. His statue sits in the square, and there are also memorials to Selkirk natives Mungo Park, Tom Scott and J.B. Selkirk, as well as the ‘Fletcher’ statue by Thomas Clapperton. The Pant Well monument is from 1898, although the well was in use much earlier. The old Court House dates from 1803 and has a 33 m (110 ft) spire. The County Buildings and Court House are linked to the Old Jail under the main road. Originally known for shoemaking, specialist tweed industries and latterly other light industries are now the main employers, with the mills on the low ground of the Ettrick haughs. Selkirk Common Riding is at least 400 years old, involving the Riding of the Marches as well as a commemoration of the return of ‘Fletcher’ from Flodden (another version states that Walter Bordon, the Town Clerk, was the only one surviving from the town’s 80 volunteers). Records of the ‘ryding off the comon’ go back to at least 1516/7. Ceremonies include ‘crying the burley’, bussing the Burgh Flag, fording the River Ettrick, and the ‘casting of the colours’. Part of it was filmed around 1900 by Hawick man David Gaylor. The town’s coat of arms shows a Madonna and Child, although there are claims it originally represented a dead woman with suckling child found at Ladywoodedge when the remnants of the local men returned from Flodden. Population (1991) 5,922. J. Walter Elliot has written several books on the history of Selkirk – ‘Then up with the banner to Selkirk men’s honour. That sounded o’er Britain eight ages and more...’ [JH], ‘...And threaded his way through the oakwood brown To the diamond roofs of Selkirk town’ [WHO] (the origin is possibly Old English for ‘hall church’ or ‘church by the shiels’; Teries often talk about going ‘ower ti Selkirk’; it is ‘Selechirche’ in about 1120, ‘Selkryke’ in 1415 and ‘Selcrige’ in 1597 in a letter from Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme; it is marked ‘Selkirk’ on Pont’s c.1590 manuscript map and ‘Selkirk’ on Gordon’s c.1650 map and Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Selkirk (sel-kurk) n. Herbert (d.1164) Tironensian monk, sometimes referred to as ‘Herbert of Selkirk’. He became the 3rd Abbot of Selkirk in 1119 and persuaded the King to allow the monks to move to Kelso by 1127. He was elected Bishop of Glasgow in 1147 and remained in that position until he died. He was thus Hawick’s bishop for about 17 years. He was Bishop around 1150 when he confirmed the gift of the Church of Molle to Kelso Abbey. Hugh (13th C.) recorded as ‘Hugh Selechirch’ during the reign of Alexander II, when Petronella, daughter of ‘Adam Harang’ granted lands in the Borthwick, which were said to be adjacent to his house. His name may be ‘selch’ rather than ‘Selkirk’. J.B. see James B. Broon. Rev. Matthew (c.1642–1728) graduating from Glasgow University in 1662, he was chaplain to Douglas of Bonjedward in the 1670s. He was said to have been assaulted for his support of ‘the Indulgence’ in the late 1680s. He became minister at Crichton in 1690. He married Agnes Cunningham and his children included Matthew,
Selkirk Abbey

Robert, James, Janet, Agnes and Lawrence. Peter (13th/14th C.) recorded in an English document appraising horses in Berwick in 1311/2. His name is given as ‘Petrus de Selekirke’. William ‘Wullie Dunlop’ (1811–93) possibly Hawick’s shortest man. Born in Lauder, he lived in Gala until he was 16, but then spent most of his life in Hawick. At age 15 he developed severe joint pains, leaving him quite stunted. He worked as a seamer, and reared game cocks as a hobby. His walking stick is in the Museum.

Selkirk Abbey (sel-kurk-aw-bee) n. former abbey in Selkirk, with no visible trace remaining. It was founded around 1113 by David I, with 13 monks brought from the reformed Benedictine Order in France. It was founded in honour of St. Mary and St. John the Evangelist, and received a large amount of the surrounding lands. The location of the abbey itself was probably the old kirkyard of Lindean by the Batts (i.e. ‘Abbot’s’ Burn). It is unlikely to have been a very substantial structure, since by 1128 the abbey was moved to Kelso. A roll of the abbots is: Radulf, 1113–17; William 1117–19; Herbert 1119–28.

Selkirk banni (sel-kurk-baw-ni) n. Selkirk bannock, a type of round fruit loaf made in Selkirk (also written ‘bannae’; cf. curly banni).

Selkirk Castle (sel-kurk-kaw-sul) n. former castle in Selkirk, probably dating to the early 12th century. It was frequently used by Scottish Kings in the 12th and 13th centuries, mostly as a royal hunting seat, but also holding occasional parliaments there. A new castle was built in 1302, including a drawbridge and portcullis. In 1304 it appears to have been captured by the Scots, but was back in English hands 2 years later, and in 1310 the English King, Edward II, stayed there for several days. After Bannockburn the office of Constable of Selikirk passed to Turnbull (13th/14th C.) recorded in an English document appraising horses in Berwick in 1311/2. The ‘castrum de selkirk’ is recorded in 1502, when Walter, son of Walter Scott of Heand-Semple (sem-pul) n. Rev. Gabriel (1631/2–1706) son of Sir Bryce of Cathcart, he trained as a Covenanting minister. He served at Kirkpatrick-Durham in Dumriesshire until ousted in 1662. He is said to have been the first to start field conventicles. Being sought by the authorities, he hid in Yetholm and in Northumberland with Henry Hall and fled to Ireland for a while. He preached for several years at Ford and regularly crossed into Scotland to address field meetings. Lady Douglas of Cavers was accused of attending conventicles in the period 1679–82. He was captured in his sickbed at Blackcastle in 1681 and imprisoned in Edinburgh, but released after a short time. After the Revolution he was minister at Jedburgh. He had 3 wives: Margaret, daughter of Sir Patrick Murray of Blackcastle; Alison, daughter of Sir Walter Riddell of that Ilk; and Margaret, daughter of Sir Robert Carr of Etal. His children included: Samuel, minister of Liberton; and Janet, who married Walter Home of Bassendean.

Seneshiels (se-nu-shelz) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded as ‘Seneschelis’ in a rental roll of c.1376, with a value of 2 merks. Probably the same place is transcribed ‘Sisseschelis’ in a rental roll of 1541, when it was leased to Alexander Armstrong (probably son of ‘Ill Will’). The location, spelling and pronunciation are all uncertain.

Senior Magistrate (seen-yur-maw-jis-trä) n. the more senior of two officials elected to administer and enforce law in the town until 1861, also referred to as the Senior Bailie or Chief Magistrate. His house was formerly one of the main stops of the Procession on the Thursday evening of Common Riding week, and the Flag used to fly there after the morning Chase until it was bussed. After the reconstitution of the Council the position disappeared, and so the Common Riding duties were assumed by the ‘Acting Senior Magistrate’ or Acting Father.

the Seturdi (thu-se‘-ur-di) n. Common Riding Saturday, beginning with the end of the Ball and greeting the dawn with song-singing at the Mote, and then a last dancing of the Reel in front of the Tower. There is usually a short rest before the Drums and Fifes rouse the town at 8 a.m., walking from the West Port to the Horse. At 9.30 a.m. the mounted procession proceeds to the Park, where the Principals stand in their stirrups and sing ‘Teribus’ at the end of the Avenue, before laying wreaths at the War Memorial. They then ride through the streets and are led from the Horse to the Loan by the Drums and Fifes. They then proceed to the Moor via the Duke’s Wood, the Flex, Wulliesteruther, Pilmuir Rig and Pilmuir Field. The riders once again do a circuit of the race course, and the Flag is displayed as on the previous day. There are more races and events there, but shorter than on the Friday. The Cornet takes the Flag from the roof of the Committee room at 3 p.m., after which he leads his mounted supporters back to the Town Hall via Crumhaughhill, being met at the top of the Loan by the Drums and Fifes. The cavalcade then proceed along the High Street for the Handing Back ceremony at the Town Hall. The Cornet returns the Flag to the Provost ‘unsullied and unstained’, and displays it one last time from the balcony. As the Cornet lowers the Flag the Saxhorn Band play ‘the Invocation’. At the end of the tune the Cornet re-plants the Flag and the Big Four say their last farewells to it and the crowd, the Left-Hand Man and then the Acting Father being last to leave the balcony. After this the men are usually carried shoulder-high to the Tower to dance the Reel again. The ‘Greetin Denner’ has been traditionally held on the Saturday evening and the Principals usually visit the Shows, or in recent years go back to the Moor to see the live bands. It is unclear how far back the Saturday traditions go, with the first clear record being in 1744 when it was written that the Cornet was ‘to go to the moss on Saturday yr. after’. In older times the Saturday proceeded similarly to the Friday, with the Races and Games at the Haugh (with the Dinner between), but with a shorter programme. There was also a more formal Dinner on the Saturday, and the formal end of the Common Riding was the Kirking ceremony, which happened on the Sunday afterwards. The Drums and Fifes first took part in the Saturday procession from 1889. The tradition of riding the boundaries of the newly acquired Wilton Lodge estate was begun in 1890, but in 1892 was replaced with a visit to the Lodge. The Drums and Fifes and Burgh
the Seturdi Plate

Officer were first involved in the Saturday procession from 1890.

green shaws, and on thy flowery braes' [WiS], ‘Ilka bird carolled sweetly round burn, brae, and shaw ...’ [DA], ‘For me, the music o’ the shaw, The blackie’s mellow whussle’ [WL] (from Old English: the word survives in several place names, e.g. Abbotshaws, Brieryshaw, Calfshaw, Catleeshaw, Copshaw, Friarsshaw, Gateshaw, Gillshaw, Hangingshaw, Headshaw, Mackideshaw, Meadshaw, Ragarthshaw, Shaw Burn, Shaws, Stirkshaws, Todshaw, Welshaw and Wthaupshaw).

shaw (shaw) n., arch. a bank of land that is narrow at the top and broad and flat at the bottom – ‘Thus Birken-shaw, a piece of ground, of the description given, covered with short scraggy birches; Breck-en-shaw, a shaw covered with ferns’ [JoJ] (this word may apply to some placenames, rather than the ‘wood’ meaning, e.g. Langshaw and Langshawburn).

shaw (shaw) n., arch. a show – ‘There’s nocht sae braw in the wide world’s schaw, As the heughs and holms o’ the South Countrie ...’ [JBu], v., arch., poet. to show – ‘And after they had shaw’d their backs, Yet Tyndale men they turn’d again ...’ [CPM], ‘Let Rubsleraw to Jedburgh shaw, Sad news, that Whitslade’s dead’ [CWS], ‘He tooke the pith of a parson’s faithe, And shaw’d it on his loofe ...’ [JTe], ‘... And rather wad in ward be thrown Than shaw the gait to sic a man’ [AD], ‘... but the richeous shaws mercie an’ gies’ [HSR], ‘My mouth sall shaw furth thy righteousniss an’ salvatione a’ the daye ...’ [HSR], ‘...A hantle o’ mense to oor dull heids send, And shaw us the airt to gae’ [WL] (also spelled ‘schaw’; not recently local pronunciation).

Shaw (shaw) n. Alexander (18th C.) writer in Edinburgh. He represented John Murray of Philiphaugh in the court proceedings dealing with the division of Wilton Common in 1765. Maj. George Boyd ‘Tarry’ (1917–2004) born in Glasgow, he attended Hawick High School and then worked in Hawick’s woollen mills. He enlisted in the Scots Grey’s in 1934, and quickly became known as a brilliant horseman. He was promoted to quartermaster, then Sergeant Major. He saw active service in the Middle East, Italy, France, the Netherlands and on into Germany. After the War he was quartermaster sergeant, and helped prepare horses for the winning British team at the 1952 Olympics. He retired in 1967, having served as Regimental Sergeant Major in several overseas postings. He was also the last rough rider in the regiment, being the only man who could tame the wildest horses. He married Nancy Cressey and they had 3 sons and 2 daughters. Jane nee Hunter (19th/20th C.) daughter of commission agent James Hunter, she married printer William Clegg. She kept a china shop up a few steps at 5 Silver Street (which had previously been the Post Office and then Mungo Wilson’s). She later moved to 68 High Street. Joseph (19th C.) Hawick innkeeper listed on the 1837 electoral roll, and listed as a vintner on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He could be the Joseph listed as a weaver at about 30 High Street in 1841. Probably the same Joseph was on the subscribers’ list for Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. Lady (17th C.) recorded at Hyn- dhauthead in Southdean Parish on the Heath Tax rolls of 1694. She paid tax for having 2 hearths. It is unclear who she was. Rev. Robert ‘Robbie’ (1780–1853) youngest son of George, minister of Abbotshall, and brother of the minister of Langholm. He was born at Abbotshall in Fife. He studied at the United College in St. Andrews and was licensed to preach by St. Andrews Presbytery in 1802. In 1804 he was appointed preacher at Teviothead ‘chapel-of-ease’ and was ordained there in 1807. In 1816 he was translated to Ewes Kirk, where he presented by Charles, Duke of Bucceuch and became assistant and successor to John Laurie (son of the minister of Hawick). In 1818 he performed a baptism in Cavers (probably at Caerlenrig). He wrote an account of that parish in 1835, including a discussion of Mosspaun. In 1818 he married Mary, daughter of William H. Moncrieff, minister of Annan (and brother of David Moncrieff of Hawick). Their children were: George (b.1819), farmer at Din- lees; Jane (b.1820); Margaret (b.1825); William (b.1827); Ann Janet (b.1831); Marion (b.1837); and Helen Mary (b.1839). T. (17th C.) probably a local heritor or perhaps a factor of the Douglass of Cavers. He was ‘T. Shaw of Cavers’ in 1641 when he was one of the Roxburghshire men who signed a letter to the Privy Council relating to the raising of levies for sending troops to Ireland. His signature also appears on the existing 1638 Covenant of Minigaff (along with Douglas of Cavers). Thomas, K.C. ‘Tammy’ (1850–1937) son of a Dunfermline baker, he went to Ed- inburgh University and trained as a lawyer. A gifted orator, he entered politics, becoming M.P. for the Hawick Burghs in 1892, defeating Robert Fraser Watson. He won a bye-election in 1894 and held the seat until 1909. He was made was Solicitor General of Scotland and Lord Advocate of Scotland, became Lord Shaw of Dunfermline and ended as Lord Craigmyle. He was also responsible...
Shawbrae

for advising Andrew Carnegie on disposing of £20 million on causes within Scotland, including the Carnegie Trust for the Universities of Scotland. He was a Liberal, with strong views on home-rule, the South African War and law reform. He was made an Honorary Burgess in 1904 on the opening of the new Public Library in Hawick. He made the presentation of Tom Scott’s ‘Return from Hornshead’ at the 1898 Colour Bussing. He served in a judicial capacity in the House of Lords and the Privy Council until 1929, although without any obvious distinction. He also served on many commissions and public inquiries. He published two unconventional autobiographies, ‘Letters to Isabel’ (1921) and ‘The Other Bundle’ (1927), as well as legal works, biographies and 2 plays in verse. He was succeeded as 2nd Baron Craigmyle by his son Alexander. Rev. William Berry ‘Willie’ (1775/6–1856) eldest son of George, minister at Abbotshall, he studied at St. Andrews University and was licensed to preach in 1799. His brother ‘Robbie’ was minister at Teviothead and then Ewes. At St. Andrews he shared a room with Thomas Chalmers, who became leader of the Free Kirk Disruption. He acted as assistant to Rev. Thomas Elliot at Cavers in 1801 and later in that year was ordained as assistant minister and successor at Roberton. However, he demitted in 1812 when he became the new minister at Langholm. During the intervening period he assisted the previous minister, James Hay, who had retired for his health, but recovered and took up his duties again in 1812. He remained at Langholm until his death. He was an anti-Reformist, in 1817 calling those from Langholm who wrote a Reformist petition ‘idle, profligate miscreants’. He subscribed to those from Langholm who wrote a Reformist petition ‘idle, profligate miscreants’. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He married Eliza, youngest daughter of Henry Scott of Deloraine in 1813; she was the ‘Bonnie lass of Deloraine’ in a poem of the Ettrick Shepherd’s, and along with her sister Margaret, they were the prototypes for ‘Minna’ and ‘Brenda’ in Sir Walter Scott’s ‘The Pirate’. Their children were George, William, Henry, Margaret, Jane and Elizabeth. He wrote ‘Five Single Sermons’ (published in Hawick, 1810), ‘Sermons, Doctrinal and Practical’ (1859) and a sermon in Gillan’s ‘Scottish Pulpit’. It is said that when he signed the Confession of Faith he added a flourish which looked like ‘E.E.’ perhaps meaning ‘erroribus exceptis’ (‘excepting errors’). William ‘Bill’ (b.c.1805) weaver from England. He was said to be among those who came to Hawick in about 1836, following John Wilson going to the Rochdale area to learn about weaving flannel. In 1841 he was living at Hawick Kirkyard, in 1851 on the Fore Raw and in 1861 at 11 Kirkwynd. His wife was Agnes and their children included Margaret, Janet, James, Molly, Jane, William and Betsy. William Clegg (b.c.1835) son of weaver Bill, he was a printer in Hawick. He married Jane Young, daughter of commission agent James Hunter. Their children included: Ella Young (b.1870); and William Clegg (b.1871).

Shawbrae (shaw-bræ) n. former name for lands in Ashkirk Parish that were part of Dryden and Clews farms. It is probably associated with the modern Shaw Hill. ‘Longhaugh and Strawbrae’ [sic] is listed in 1780 among the lands whose different had been given to Dr. William Elliot, with ‘the Shawbrae pasture-ground’ recorded as part of the boundary of Elliot’s lands.

Shawburn (shaw-burn) n. farm near the stream of the same name in Lilliesleaf Parish. T. Jeffrey was farmer there in 1868 – ‘And whiles we’ve dauntered up the glen Where flowers nod white On many an ancient thorn’ [FL].

Shaw Burn (shaw-burn) n. stream in Southdean Parish, running past Lethem to join the Jed Water. Near the head of the stream is a linear earthwork, probably a boundary ditch. The stream passes ‘Wattie’s Spindles’ and Hilly Linn. On the west side of its lower stretches are the remains of a small building on a terrace.

Shaw Craigs (shaw-krægz) n. rocky hill on the boundary between Southdean and Jedburgh Parishes, just north of Lethem. It reaches a height of 300 m and is topped with a triangulation pillar. It also contains the remains of a fort and settlement, now within a clearing of the forest. It may be of early Iron Age date, with later construction phases, since it consists of different walls and ramparts, covering about 90 m by 50 m. It has also been suggested that the last period of construction may be post-Roman (also written ‘Shaw Craig’).

shawit (shaw-ee’, -i’) pp., poet. showed – ‘...an’ shawet untill the chief priests a’ the things that wer dune’ [HSR].

shawn (shawn) pp., poet. shown – ‘...his rich-teousniss he heth opinlie shawn in the sicht o’ the heathin’ [HSR].

Shaws (shawz) n. former name for lands near Hawick. It is listed among the Baron’s lands in Hawick in 1615. It is also listed in the 1627 valuation of the lands in Hawick Parish, between Weensland and ‘Trowhauch’ in the list, and hence probably somewhere in that area. It is described as ‘three lands callit the Schawis’ and ‘paying presentlie 12 bolls; estimat to 8 bolls in stok and 2 bolls in teynd’ annually (it is ‘Schiawis’ in 1615).

the Shaws (thu-shawz) n. area around Shaws Under Loch, south of Shaw’s Hill, between the Ettrick and Ale valleys. There was once a farm here owned by the Waughis, called Ettrickshaws Farm on modern maps. This may be the Shaws held by Walter Scott (along with Berrybush) in 1513. It may be the ‘Schiawis’ tenanted by the Laird of Cranston in 1541, valued at £10 and ‘in rental’ £2.2. It is possible this was the ‘three merk land of Shaws’ granted to William Scott of Horsleyhill in 1653. It was owned by John Ker in 1678 and by Charles Scott of Woll in 1785, and valued at £204 3s 4d. A stone cist and bones were discovered here in about 1870, at the nearby ‘Sleepy Knowe’. There are several other local places called ‘Shaws’ (it is ‘Schiawis’ in 1513 and 1670 and ‘the Schawes’ in c.1680; it is marked ‘Schiawis’ on Gordon’s c.1650 map).

Shaws (shawz) n. farm to the east of the B6399 where the Roughley Burn meets the Hermitage Water. It is probably ‘Le Schewis’ which in 1428/9 was granted to Archibald Douglas of Cavers by William, Earl of Angus, and ‘le Schewis’ when granted to William Douglas of Cavers in 1470, with sasine given 2 years later. It was probably the seat of the Elliots called ‘the Shaws’ in the 16th century. In 1541 the tenants was Robert Elliot and the lands were valued at 5 merks. ‘Hob of the Schewis’ (an Elliot) is recorded in 1569. Gib Elliot of the Shaws in 1578 and Adam Elliot in the Shaw in the 1580s. Gavin Elliot of ‘the Schewis’ was there in 1611. Robert Henderson and William Watson were there in 1694. In the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch it was combined with Newlands, the farms together covering 245 acres, bounded by Roughley, Cleuchhead, Toftholm, Netherraw and Millburnholm, and including some land on the west side of the river; the farmhouses seems to be in much the same place as the modern one, and woods are also shown, including young alders, between the farmhouses.

George Turnbull was a mason there in 1799 and William Hardie a labourer in 1801. In the latter part of the 19th century the tenant was Mr. Ballantyne and the farm extended all the way to Steele Road. The New Statistical Account reports in 1839 the existence of 2 circular earthworks on the farm (it is ‘lye Schawis’ in 1472, ‘Schawis’ in 1541, 1569, 1574 and 1578, ‘the Shawes’ in 1581, ‘the Schaw’ in 1586, ‘ye Schawis’ in 1623 and ‘Shaues’ in 1694; it is marked as ‘Shawis’ on Gordon’s c.1650 map, ‘Shawes’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, ‘Shawes’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and ‘Shawes’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Shaw’s Brae (shawz-bræ) n. slope just to the south-east of where the Roughley Burn meets the Hermitage Water, being essentially a south-western extension of Arnton Fell.

Shaw’s Bush (shawz-bush) n. name for a strip of plantation on the former Minto estate, south of the old church, and now forming part of the north-eastern boundary of the gold course.

Shaw’s Close (shawz-kloès) n. popular name for a close off the High Street in the mid-19th century, with uncertain position. Presumably someone called Shaw once resided there.

Shawshiel Rig (shaw-sheel-rig) n. ridge in Liddesdale, essentially being the lower south-west part of Arnton Fell, between Newlands and the Steele. There are remains of a turf-walled building and field systems there. It was presumably once the shiel for Shaws farm.

Shaws Plantin (shawz-plawn-tin) n. former name for a plantation to the north of Spittal Tower (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Shaws Under Loch (shaw-z-un-dur-loch) n. small body of water on the Langhoipe Burn, north of Hellmoor, with the even smaller upper loch just to the west. These may be the places transcribed as ‘Twa Gildis Loch’ on the 1649 list of bodies of water in Selkirkshire.

shear (sheer, shîr) v., arch. to reap, cut hay – ‘Item, that na persone nor personnis scheir medowis, balkis, or haynit gers thifteouslie …’ [BR1640], ‘Several parties fined for going away to scheir, and ordered to remove fra the town for ane year’ [BR1644], ‘Thaye that saw in teærs, sall scheir in joy’ [HSR], ‘…for they sawna, neither do they sheer, nar gether intill berns’ [HSR], ‘…guid at scheirin’ [JAHM] (also spelled ‘scheir’, ‘sheer’, etc.). shearer (shee-rur) n., arch. a reaper, harvester – ‘‘...an’ in the time o’ the hairst I wull say til the sheeerers, Gether ye theegether first the tares ...’’[HSR], ‘He was ye thegither first the taresers ...’’[RM] (also written ‘sheerer’).

shearer’s breid (shee-rurz-breed) n., arch. bread given to reapers as a snack during harvest – ‘‘...there having been a want of meal for sheeerers' bread in the farm-house of Bedrule ...’’[EM1820].

shears (sheerz) n., pl. any kind of scissors or clippers – ‘The shop-boy now throws by his sheers, Wi's measuring-yard dispenses’[JoHa], ‘My only problem, as he clacked his shears, The wee hairs that kept kiltlin nose and ears’[WL], arch. the socket of a garden fork (i.e. the bifurcated metal piece that fits over the wooden shaft), ‘the lang shears’ means a period of difficult labour – ‘She’ll some throw the lang shears’[GW] (also spelled ‘sheers’, ‘shiers’, etc.).

shebeen (she-been) n., arch. an unlicensed drinking establishment – ‘...stigmatising them as licensed or legalised shebeens, and the members of such, as shebeeners’[JE].

Sheckum (she-kum) n. nickname for one of the mill bosses of the Laidlaw family, who had both a speech impediment and a propensity for firing employees. This was probably Thomas, who was also known as ‘Secky’.

Shecky (she-kee) n. nickname for several members of the Wilson family.

Sheil see Shiel
Shein (sheen) n. John (17th C.) listed as a ‘fisher’ among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was also listed as a resident of the east-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. His surname may be a variant of some more well-known name.

sheive see shive shelfie see shilfie
shelves (shelvz) n., pl. shelves – ‘... but this consonantal change is still avoided in haaf (= half), haafs; laif (= loaf), laifs; shelf, shelfs’ [ECS].

Shells (shelz) n. farmstead marked on Blaeu’s 1564 map in the upper Slitrig valley, perhaps corresponding to Langburnshielsh (although this is little more than a guess).

sheltie (shel-te) n. a Shetland pony, a small pony generally – ‘A wheen o callants lowsed the girths And loot the sheltie free ...’ [WL].

shelty see sheltie
the Shepherds (thu-she-purdez) n. one of a number of Friendly Societies existing in Hawick in the latter part of the 19th century. The local branch was Sanctuary ‘Flower of Teviotdale’, No. 5771.

Sheridan (she-ri-din) n. Francis ‘Big Frank’ (1837–1870) probably Hawick’s tallest man. He was a native of County Cavan in Ireland, coming to Hawick as a young man. He grew to a height of 7 feet 8 inches, having a 52 inch chest and weighing 22 stone, but also had health problems. He worked as a labourer and as a stockmaker, and apparently refused to go on a travelling show when asked. In 1861 he is recorded as a frame-worker, living on Mather’s Close with his sister Bridget, their mother Helen and step-father Patrick McCart. He was for a while landlord of the Irish Harp pub in Baker Street. His coffin apparently had to be taken out of the window in Baker Street, because it was too large for the stairs, and his funeral was said to be about the best attended in Hawick up until that time. He is buried in the Wellogate and his walking stick is in the Museum.

sheriff see shiriff
sherk (sherk) n. a shark – ‘hei’s a right sherk on the pool table’ (also shairk).

sherply (sher-blee) adv. sharply.

Sherwinlaw (sher-win-law) n. hill and place name somewhere near Jedburgh. It is ‘Schewinglen’ in a charter for Jedburgh Abbey in the time of King David, and ‘Xernwingeslawe’ in a confirming charter of Earl Henry. Later Christina, wife of Gervase Riddell, gave a third of her lands of ‘Hernwingeslawe’ to the monks of Jedburgh. ‘Sire Wautier de Sherwynclawe’ swore fealty to Edward I in 1296; the same man was ‘de Sherewyndelawe’ when he had his lands restored later in 1296. It is possible that this is the same place as Shirenscleuch near Bellendean, but it is more likely it is an ancient form of Mervinslaw. Sir ‘Joceto de Sherwenlaw’ was witness to a charter relating to Kelso Abbey in about 1328 (recorded as early as the mid-12th century, the origin may be from Old English ‘sceorfh’, meaning ‘steep slope’, plus ‘wynd’, or from the local dialect ‘shirrew’, meaning ‘field mouse’).

Sherwood (sher-wood) n. Andrew Godfrey Purvis (1950– ) born in Kenya, he studied violin and composition at the Royal College of Music. He became Professor of Violin at Trinity Laban Conservatoire of Music and Dance. He has been principal conductor for the European Youth Summer Music, Director of the Brighton Youth Orchestra, Musical Director of the Musicians of All Saints, Director of Music and Choirs at the University of Brighton and Conductor of Somerset County Youth Orchestra. He married Mary Helen Hepburne-Scott and they live near Lilliesleaf. He wrote a piece called ‘Heart of Hawick’ to celebrate the opening of the new centre in 2008. He has also been involved in reviving pieces by local composers, particularly Francis George Scott and Sir John Blackwood McEwen.

she’s (sheez) contr. she’s, she is, ‘she’s an awfi blether’, she has – ‘she’s the scar ti prove eet’, ‘she’s the same mother, bit a different fither’ (this second form is less common in English).

sheugh (shooch) n., arch., poet. a ditch, trench, furrow, muddy drain – ‘...an’ heth fa’i intil the seuch whilk he mæde’ [HSR], ‘Forgotten was our snaw-wreathed road, It’s hidden sheughs o’ water’ [VW], ‘...each sheuch an heidie-hole i thir verra rigs was den for fairee sodgers in fechtin-graith’ [ECS] (also written ‘sheuch’, ‘seuch’ and variants; the pronunciation formerly had a long diphthong merging oo and oo).

shiel (sheel) n., arch. a temporary hut or other rough building used by shepherds – ‘Weel Nature accords wi’ the sorrow I feel, As I gaze on the site o’ my grandfather’s shiel’ [DA], ‘Jock’s to the Plashetts gane for coals, An’ Crummie’s i’ the shiel’ [WiSp] (also shielin: it survives in the names of many steadings and other place names, e.g. Adderstoneshiel, Bellsheils, Borthwickshiel, Broadleesheiel, Burnfithsheiel, Coltersculeuch Shiel, Corries’ Shiel, Craikshiel, Doecleuchshiel, Emmetshiels, Foulshiels, Girnwudshiel, Greensheils, Hawick Shiel, Henlawshiel, Hoscoteshiel, Howashiel, Howcleuchshiel, Langburnshiel, Midshiel, Milsingtonshiel, Outersideshiel, Philhopeshiel, Priesthaughshiel, Ridellsheil, Ropelawshiel, Shankendshiel, Shiel Burn, Shiel Cleuch, Shiel Knowe, Shiel Rig, Shiel Sike, Shielwood, Skelfhillshiel, Soothdean Rig Shiel, Staneshiel, Syntonshiel, Templehaishiel, Todshallowshiel, Westshiel, Whitehillshiel, Wundshiel and Wolfehopeshiel). mother and 2 other Shiels) in 1676 among others of the Abbotrule area who were imprisoned in the Tolbooth of Edinburgh for attacking the minister, George Baptie. This presumably means she objected to having an Episcopalian minister in her parish. She was listed as ‘dochter of the said Margret, now servitrix to the Lady Bonjeddart’ (probably wife of William Douglas of Bonjedward). Archibald (17th C.) tenant in Mackside. He is listed in 1684 among those declared as fugitives for refusing to take ‘the Test’. He may have been related to Walter in Abbotrule and John in Gatehousecote, who were also listed. Catherine (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor’. David (15th C.) witness to a sasine in 1479 for the lands of Wolfelee for the Homes of Wedderburn. His surname is recorded as ‘Schevile’. Alexander is listed right after him, and so probably related. David (15th/16th C.) listed in 1502 along with Andrew, being among Turnbuls and others called to answer for the murder of Robert Oliver. George Turnbull of Hallrule was fined for his non-appearance and he was declared a fugitive and his goods forfeited. He could be the same as one of the contemporary Davids from Rulewater. David (15th/16th C.) tenant at ‘Hoppiston’, recorded in the 1516 remission for many Turnbuls for assisting the traitorous Homes. The lands he farmed were in Rulewater, possibly Hobbsburn. David (15th/16th C.) tenant at Langraw in 1516, when he was listed among many Turnbuls for any role in assisting Alexander, Lord Home. He was probably related to the other Shiels who were listed there. David (16th C.) tenant in Fodderlee. In 1567 he was listed among men on lands under the superiority of Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst was ordered to present to crimes against Englishmen. He was probably related to the later John in Fodderlee. David (16th C.) recorded as ‘younger in Langraw’ in 1567. He was among men who Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst was ordered to present to answer changes of raiding into England. David in Fodderlee was also listed and probably related. David (18th C.) listed as house servant at Borthwickbrae in 1791, when he was working for John Elliot. David (b.1826/7) grocer and spirit dealer on Matther’s Close on the 1861 census. He was probably son of weaver James. He married Jessie Scott and their children included: James (b.1851); Walter (b.1854/5); George (b.1856/7); Margaret (b.1848/9); and Agnes E. (b.1861). Along with Thomas (perhaps his brother), he created fizzy drinks. Edward (16th/17th C.) tenant at Langhaugh in Rulewater, recorded in 1605. George (17th C.) resident of the Abbotrule area. He was a Covenantanter who died in prison. George (17th C.) recorded paying tax on £52 for Langraw on the 1663 and 1678 Land Tax Rolls for Hobirk Parish. Probably the same George in Langraw had his will recorded in 1688. Perhaps he is the ‘George Scheel’ who died in 1691 and was buried in Hobirk Parish, his gravestone bearing a tailor’s ‘goose’ and pair of shears, indicating that he was a tailor. He is surely related to Lyle, who was at Langraw in 1643. George (18th C.) resident of Rulewater. Part of his lands (along with ‘Boston’s half of Kirk-know’) were listed among the possessions of Elliot of Wolfelee in 1788, and valued at £22 15s. George (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He married Ann Pott (or Potts) and their children included Adam (b.1774), James (b.1776), Janet (b.1778) and Janet (again, b.1780). The witnesses in 1774 and 1780 were the whole congregation. His father James died in Hawick in 1787. Gilbert (15th C.) recorded at the Justice- aire held in Jedburgh in 1494/5. He was ‘Gilbertus schevil in bethroule’ and was fined for non-appearance of his wife, for whom he was surety (with her name not given). He was separately listed when he had remission for several crimes, including: burning Minto; being a supporter of Alexander, Duke of Albany; stealing many sheep from Minto Craigend and from several different people in Bedrule; stealing an ox from Fulton; and stealing 30 silver shillings and a stone of butter. His surety for these entries was the Laird of Bedrule. In 1494/5 he was again listed being ‘in bethroule’ among a group of 8 Olivers who had remission for comming with the English. He may be the same man as ‘Gilbert Schell’ who witnessed a sasine for Wolfelee in 1469. Hector (15th/16th C.) recorded at the Justice- aire in Jedburgh in 1502. Along with the Laird of Bedrule he had remission for stealing 9 sheep from Matthew Dodd out of Dolphinston. His surety was George Turnbull in Hallrule. Hector (d.bef. 1579) mentioned in 1579/80 as a resident of Selkirk when his son Philip witnessed a promise for ‘Mathew of the bent in Tuchellaw’. Hector (17th C.) captured along with George of the Bog and presented for trial by Robert, Lord Maxwell, Warden of the West Marches. They were accused of murdering James Paterson and William Gleghorn in Langlandhill and for raids on Peebles and Tweeddale.
as well as on the Captain of Edinburgh at Cat-sack in Ettrick Forest. He was probably executed along with George of the Bog. Hector (17th C.) son of John, tenant of Kirknowe in Hobkirk Parish. In 1621, along with his father, he was pronounced as a rebel for cutting ‘greenwood’ in the woods of William, Lord Cranstoun. In 1618 he and Jenet Sinclair (who had remarried the min-ister of Hobkirk, Rev. Thomas Thomson) and her son Andrew Brydon had a ‘wadset’ for the 2 acres of land in the Kirkhaugh beside Hobkirk Kirk. This was with the consent of Bessie Turnbull, who may therefore have been his wife. Hector (17th C.) resident of the Hassendean part of Roberton Parish. He married Margaret Young in 1687 and their daughter Helen was baptised in 1688. The witnesses were John Hope and Robert Scott. He is probably the cottar at Newton in Hassendean Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Hector (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His children included James (b.1701) and Thomas (b.1704). He could be the Hector who married Margaret Young in Roberton Parish in 1687. Hugh ‘Hog’ (15th/16th C.) tenant in Hobkirk, recorded at the 1494/5 Justice-aire held in Jedburgh. The Sherif of Rox-burghshire was fined for his non-appearance, although his crimes were not specified; his name is given as ‘hoigis schevil’. Probably the same man was recorded as ‘hugone schewill alias hoge’ in 1502 at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh, among many men said to be guilty of the murder of Robert Oliver. George Turnbull of Hallrule was fined for his non-appearance and he was declared as a fugitive. He was probably related to Andrew and David who are also listed. Isabel ‘Tibbie’ (1783–1878) inn-keeper who gave her name to a pub on the shores of St. Mary’s Loch. She was daughter of Walter and Mary Grieve and born at Thirlestane Mill in Ettrick. When young she had been a servant with the Ettrick Shepherd’s mother. In 1806 she married Robert Richardson (1783–1824), a molecatcher from Westmorland. They became tenants of a cottage near Chapelhope, at the upper end of the Loch of the Lowes. In 1823, shortly before her husband died, she moved to the coaching inn at the bridge between St. Mary’s Loch and the Loch of the Lowes. The inn became famous as a meeting place for friends of James Hogg, the Ettrick Shepherd, including Sir Walter Scott and Professor John Wilson. She had all her mental faculties intact until her death, aged 95. The couple had several children, including: Thomas (1808–1890), who emigrated to Canada; Walter (c.1810–80), who also emigrated to Canada; Margaret (1812–52); William (1816–91), who remained at the family home; Mary (1818–96), who became Mrs. Michell, Crosscleugh and died in Hawick; and Dorothy (b.1820), who died in infancy. J. Rutherford (d.1916) bought Midshiels from Turnbull of Fenwick in 1896. He is probably the man of the same name who donated an adder killed at Hassendean to the Museum in 1863. In 1906 he (along with Miss Joan, probably his daughter) contributed to the fund for the renovation of Kirk-ton Kirk. James (16th C.) tenant in Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme’s farm at Blackgrain (in the Yarrow valley) according to his last testament of 1574. An inventory of the cattle there is provided in the testament. James (16th/17th C.) resident of Friarshaw. In the trial documents for witchcraft of Isobel Howison in 1628 there is a note to say that ‘he kennes scho wes a chairme cat’. James (d.c.1694) tenant of Southdean Mill. He was witness to the baptism of a daughter of John Ker of Shaw in Southdean Kirk in 1681. In 1691 he had a discharge with William Currer of Whitmuir. His will is recorded in 1694. James (17th C.) farmer in Hassendean Parish. He is recorded being at Easter Burnfoot when his children were baptised in Roberton Parish in 1682 and 1688. In 1686, along with his son John, he rented the lands of Knowe from William Scott. He is probably the James who witnessed a bap-tism for another James in Hassendean in 1687. He was recorded in Hassendeanburn in 1694 and his son John may be the resident of Midshiels at that time. He could be the James ‘in Know-head’ whose will is recorded in 1689. He could be the James who witnessed a baptism for George Riddell in Roberton Parish in 1681 and another for Walter Sanderson in 1683. He married Chris-tian Miller in Roberton in 1681 and their children included: Margaret (b.1682); Margaret (b.1682); William (b.1685); and Janet (b.1688). The 1682 witnesses were William Beattie and James . . . and in 1688 were Thomas and Walter Sanderson. James (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, when it contained Hassendean. He married Janet Shiel and their children included Bessie and Isobel (b.1687). The witnesses were William Scott and James Shiel (probably the other man of the same name who was at Easter Burnfoot). James of Langraw (17th C.) witnessed a sasine for Hob-sburn in 1693. Also in 1693 he is the James ‘called of Tour, indweller’ at Langraw who wit-nessed a sasine between Gilbert Eliott of Stonedge James (17th C.) resident of Boosmill in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls for Hobkirk Parish. He was probably related to George, recorded in Langraw in 1688. James (17th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Ormiston in 1737 and 1742. His children may have included James (b.1737), John (b.1739), Mary (b.1741) and Isabella (b.1743). Perhaps the same James married Janet ‘Boll’ in Cavers in 1733. James (b.1770/1) born in Eckford Parish, he was farmer at Hassendean. He is recorded there in 1841 and in 1851 was farmer of 1,000 acres, employing 11 labourers. His wife was Helen, and their children included James, Andrew (who continued with the farm) and John (who assisted his brother). James (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Cairns and their children included: Isabel (b.1798); Janet (b.1800); Mary (b.1803); James (b.1805); Francis (b.1807); Euphemia (b.1809); and Margaret (b.1812). James (1776–1858) weaver of West Port who was one of the founders of the Relief Kirk in Hawick. In 1841 he was living at about No. 3 Loan. He married Agnes Elliot and their children included: George (b.1807); Margaret (b.1809), who probably married Burgh Officer Jamie Smith; Ann (b.1812); Thomas (b.1814); John (b.c.1819); James (b.1821); and David (b.c.1827), who was a grocer on Mather’s Close. He had twin sons who died in 1819. He could be the weaver of this name listed among men balloted to serve in the Militia in 1797 (with the annotation ‘Serving’); his name appears again in 1798, and later that year he was sworn into the Militia, as confirmed in the amended 1790 list. James (18th/19th C.) horse dealer of Hawick. He is recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He could be the carter whose unnamed child died in Hawick in 1808. James (b.c.1795) farmer at Greenbraeheads and Whitlaw. He is recorded at Greenbraeheads in 1841, along with his brothers John and Robert, and their mother Janet. He was probably son of Robert, recorded there in 1797. By 1861 he was farmer at Little Whitlaw, unmarried and living with his brother John and sister Janet. He was still recorded at Little Whitlaw in 1868. James (18th/19th C.) son of Thomas. He married Margaret Common, who died at Southdean Schoolhouse in 1868, aged 90. Their children included: Thomas (1808–56), Schoolmaster in Hobkirk; and Mary (b.1816/7), who married Neil Taylor, schoolmaster at Southdean. John (b.c.1810), who was living with Thomas and Mary at Hobkirk Schoolhouse in 1841, was probably also his son. He died at the age of 47 and is buried at Borthwick Waas, along with his wife and parents. James (b.1805/6) innkeeper of the Coach & Horses at the Tower Knowe. He is listed on Silver Street in 1851 and on Teviot Square in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1861 he was a widower and grocer at 30 High Street. He married Janet Stewart and their children included: Janet Cairns (b.1842); and Isabella (b.1844). James (19th C.) listed as Clerk of the Course at the Common Riding Races of 1873. He is probably the same as one of the contemporary Jameses. James (b.1830/1) born in Oxnam Parish, he was farmer at Hassendean. In 1861 he was farming there jointly with his uncles Andrew and John. James (d.1919) born in the West End, he became Registrar, Inspector of the Poor and Clerk of the Burial Ground for Wilton Parish in the latter part of the 19th century. He was the first Registrar of Wilton, following the Registration Act of 1854. His full time job was as foreman in one of the factories at Damside. In 1861 he is listed as Inspector of Poor & Registrar on Albion Place. His later office (and probably house) was at 2 Laing Terrace. He was also later Clerk and Treasurer of Hawick Combination Poorhouse. Probably the same James was a singer at the Colour Bussing and similar events. His wife was Helen and their children included James, Andrew and Janet Helen. James (19th C.) proprietor of the West End Bar in the latter part of the 19th century. A stone bottle labelled with his name is in the Museum. He may be the Mr. Shiel who lived in the new house built at the foot of the Loan (and by the entrance to the Poorhouse) in about 1879. John (15th C.) listed at the 1493 Justice- aire in Jedburgh when William Douglas of Cavers was fined for his non-appearance. He was recorded as son of ‘tassy’, although it is unclear if this was a forename or a nickname. He was again cited for non-appearance in 1494/5. John (16th C.) recorded in Fodderlee in 1586/7 among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. In 1587 his sureties was recorded being ‘Dand’, Burgess of Jedburgh and William, also in Jedburgh. John (16th C.) servant of Robert Elliot and brother of Steven. He is recorded as ‘John Shevell his man’ in a list of men accused in 1590... of stealing livestock from Middleton Hall in England in 1589. He was named along with ‘Gib Elliot son to Robin’, John Noble (another servant of Robert Elliot) and other Elliots and Croziers. He was also listed along with Steven, and Elliots of the Steele, the Park, Binks, and others, who were complained about in 1590 for a raid into England. Probably the same ‘Jock Shieil’ is accused along with Steven in another case of stealing from Sir John Forster’s tenants in ‘Cowperhaugh’. Probably the same Jock, along with Steven, Jenkin Nixon and Will Elliot of the Steele, was accused in 1590 of stealing from Roland Walker. Additionally he was probably the John, named along with Steven, among Elliots, Nixons and others who in 1590 were accused by the tenants of Woodhall of stealing from them, and the John, named along with Steven and several Elliots accused of having raided Dotland a couple of years earlier. He was listed explicitly as ‘Jock Sheill Robin Elliot’s man’ in another case of 1590, with his brother Steven and several Nixons, Croziers and others, accused of stealing from the Wilkinsons of ‘Lin-briggs’; his name was given before Steven’s and so he was presumably the older brother. John ‘Jock’ of Kirkknowe (16th C.) recorded in 1589 on a list of Border Lairds who failed to appear before the Privy Council to give ‘thair gude advise anent the gude reule and quietnes of the Bordouris’ and were denounced as rebels. He was recorded as tenant in Kirknowe when accused in 1590 of raiding the English farm of Middleton Hall in 1589. He was ‘Younge Jocke Sheile of Kyrknowe’ and ‘Jock Sheile of the Kirkeknowe’ listed along with Douglasses, Laidlaws, Turnbulls and others who were accused of stealing livestock and goods. He was probably an ancestor of the later Shiels of Kirknowe. John (17th C.) tenant in Kirknowe in Hobkirk Parish, recorded in 1621. He and his son Hector were denounced as rebels for cutting down ‘greenwood’ on the land of William, Lord Cranstoun. In 1666 he (or his direct descendant) sold half the land to John Mair of Mackside. His son was Hector. Either the same John or his father was recorded as ‘John Schewill in Kirknow’ in 1610 in an inquest for the succession to Appotside and Tythehouse. They were surely related to Walter of Kirknowe who was recorded in 1643. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret (or ‘Malie’) Grieve and their children included: William (b.1646); and Robert (b.1648). John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Agnes Murray and their children included Helen (b.1650) and Marion (b.1652). The witnesses in 1652 were George Helm and William Scott. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elspeth Riddell and their children included: James Shiel (b.1656). John (17th C.) tenant in Boosmull. Along with his brother (whose first name is not given) he was declared a fugitive in 1684 for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. John (17th C.) resident of Denholm on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. Perhaps the same John had a son Adam baptised in Cavers Parish in 1695. John (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His children included Adam (b.1691) and William (b.1695). His name is recorded as ‘Sheilds’. John (17th C.) resident at Midshiels according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th C.) resident at Swinnie according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to Thomas who was also listed there. John (17th/18th C.) resident in Hawick Parish. He was recorded as ‘theiker’ (i.e. thatcher) in 1704 when his son John was baptised, with witnesses gardener Patrick McLeallan and weaver David Miller. Perhaps the same John was ‘workman in Hawick’ in 1706 when his daughter Bessie was baptised, with witnesses Gideon Scott of Falnash and Bailie George Martin. He may be the John who witnessed a baptism for smith John Scott in 1708. John (17th/18th C.) schoolmaster in Ashkirk Parish, recorded in 1709. Based on the handwriting in the parish records, it seems likely he started in about 1697 and continued until around 1714. He married Margaret Shiel in Ashkirk in 1703 and their children included: William (b.1704); George (b.1706); and Dorothy and Elizabeth (b.1709). The children baptised in 1709 were ‘att one birth’, presumably meaning they were twins. John (17th/18th C.) lived at Dodheadshiels in Yarrow Parish. In 1728 his unnamed son was baptised in Robertson Parish. It is unclear what his connection was to this parish. John (18th C.) from Cavers Parish, in 1733 he married Helen Bell from Hawick. John (18th C.) farmer at Kirknowe who was a significant Hobkirk parishioner in the early 1700s. The land of Kirknowe was in possession of the Shiels from before the Reformation. The part that he held was formerly called Hobkirkstile or just Kirkstile. He held it from at least 1718. His only daughter was Janet, who married Richard, son of John Mair. He left his lands to his grandson, John Stephenson, according to a settlement dated 1749 and ratified in 1759. John (18th C.) recorded as herd in Shaws in 1785 when he was part of a legal case in Selkirk. This could be the Shaws near Ashkirk. John (b.c.1770s) servant at Beryfell according to the ballot list for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1798 he married Janet Cairns, who was also from Hawick. John (18th/19th C.) recorded as miller at Weensland Mill in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. John (b.1805/6) born in Jedburgh, he was farmer at Hassendean, along with his older brother Andrew and nephew James. In 1861 they are jointly recorded as farmers of 250 acres, employing 14 people. John ‘Jocky’ (19th/20th C.) proprietor of a tobacconist and sweet shop at the corner of the Loan and Beaconsfield Terrace. Leon (15th/16th C.) listed as ‘Leonem Schavil’ when he was on the 1517 panel of ‘retour’ for Sir Walter Scott of Branzholme. Lyle (15th C.) recorded in 1493 when he failed to appear when called by William Douglas, Sheriff of Roxburghshire, at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493; he appears right after Routledges and Douglases who were probably local to the Borders area. He was again recorded in 1494/5, when the Sheriff was once more fined for his non-appearance. Lyle (17th C.) recorded in 1643 as owner of lands in Hobkirk Parish valued at £52. His listed after George Turnbull of Langraw as ‘Lyell Scheil there’. He is surely related to who held the same lands in 1663. Robert (15th/16th C.) resident in Bedrule. In 1502 he had remission for stealing 8 sheep from Thomas Phaup in Bedrule, with the Laird of Bedrule as his surety. Robert (16th/17th C.) servant to John Ker of Lannewton, recorded in 1621. Robert (17th/18th C.) gardener at Alton in 1711. His children, baptised in Wilton Parish, included: Margaret (b.1711); and James (b.1715). He is probably the Robert married to Janet Smith whose daughter Jean was baptised in 1718. Robert (18th C.) farmer at Greenbraeheads in 1797, according to the Horse Tax Rolls. The farmers there in 1841, James, John and Robert, were probably his sons. Ruther (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet ‘Query’ and their children included George (b.1756). Rutherford (b.c.1805) farmer at Ulston in Jedburgh Parish. He reported to the inquest in 1837 into election intimidation that there was an attempt to stop him voting in Hawick, and in fact he did not vote. Steven (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 being ‘in Mynt’ (presumably Minto) among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. Steven (16th C.) recorded in 1590 among Elliots of the Steele, the Park, Binks, and others, when complained about for a raid into England. John was also listed and so presumably a close relative. In another case he and Jock were accused of stealing from Sir John Forster’s tenants in ‘Cowperhaugh’. He was further accused in 1590, along with Jock, William Elliot of the Steele and Jenkin Nixon of stealing from Roland Walker. Additionally he and John were accused in 1590, along with Elliots, Nixons and others, of stealing from the tenants of Woodhall in England, and the Steven, named along with John and several Elliots accused of having raided Dotland a couple of years earlier. He was listed explicitly as brother of Jock, who was ‘Robin Elliott’s man’ in another case of 1590, along with several Nixons, Croziers and others, accused of stealing from the Wilkinson’s of ‘Lynbriggs’. Thomas (d.c.1578) recorded as ‘Thomas Schevill’ in 1578/9 when Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule and members of his family were asked to appear before the Privy Council to answer for his murder. The others accused of being involved were Sir Thomas’ sons Wat and Thomas, his nephew John and his son-in-law Edward Lorraine. He was presumably a local man, but it is not known where he was from. Thomas (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘Thomas Scheill’ in Wauchope in 1605 and ‘Thomas Schewill in Wauchop’ in 1612 when he was witness to a sasine. Rev. Thomas (1630/1–1708) first minister at the newly created Parish of Roberton in 1689. Probably the same ‘Mr. Thomas Shiel’ witnessed a baptism in Hawick Parish (along with Gideon Scott of Outerside) in 1687, suggesting he was already in the area at that time. He was a member of the Assemblies in 1690 and 1692. He was probably the same as the former minister at Kirkbride in Dumfriesshire, who was admitted in 1655, but deprived in 1662. His whereabouts during the time of persecution are unknown, but it seems that he may have settled in the Hawick area and started officiating at Roberton in about 1689. This same minister was restored by Act of Parliament in 1690 and was translated to Sanquhar in 1693, where he remained until his death (as confirmed by a Sanquar Session minute book, starting in 1696 and recording his demise in 1708), and where he is buried. There is a letter dated 1691 from ‘R. Wylie, Woll, to Tarra’s’ (i.e. from the minister of Ashkirk to Scott of Harden) saying that he may be kept in the area by offering him Wilton Shiel

Parish until Roberton is re-erected. There is also an assignation of 1692 in which he requests the stipend from Hassendean to which he claims the right. He was recorded as tenant of the farm of Todshawhaugh, leasing half in 1672 and 1673, all in 1677, until 1693, and being tenant in 1694 along with his son Thomas. It seems likely he was the ‘Mr Thomas Sheill’ who was taxed for having 10 hearths at Lintalee house in 1694 (although why he would have been there at this time is a mystery), as well as being also listed as ‘Mr Tho. Sheill’ when taxed for 3 hearths at Todshawhaugh (although this could feasibly be his son). The Thomas who married Grizel Dalgleish (daughter of a Westerkirk minister) and had a son Thomas in 1701 was probably his son (since he himself would have been about 70 at the time, and there was no ‘Mr.’ title written). His son William farmed at Todshawhaugh, as clearly stated in a 1696 record. However, there is no documented evidence about his wife and the births of his children. Thomas (17th C.) tenant in Denholm. He is listed in 1684 among men declared as fugitives for religious non-conformity. His wife Agnes Hall was also accused of attending conventicles. Thomas (17th C.) resident at Swinnie according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to John who was also listed there. Thomas (17th/18th C.) son of Rev. Thomas, he was tenant at Todshawhill. He was recorded as tenant in 1694, along with his father, the minister. In 1699 he rebuilt the farmhouse there on a more convenient site. He was ‘in Todshawhill’ when he witnessed baptisms in Hawick in 1712 for James Scott in Stobicote, in 1713 for a weaver called Douglas and in 1722 for Walter Scoon in Branxholm. He was in arrears for the rent of Todshawhill in 1713–20. In 1723 he witnessed a baptism for William Grieve, tenant in Fenwick. In 1728 he was ‘Mr. Shiel in Todja...’ when he witnessed a baptism for Gideon Elliot of Harwood. He is still recorded as the tenant of the farm in 1735. He could be the Thomas of Roberton Parish who married Grizel Dalgleish in Westerkirk Parish in 1701; she was probably daughter of the former minister there, Walter Dalgleish. The couple had a son Thomas who was baptised in Hawick and Roberton Parishes in 1701: one of the witnesses was ‘Mr James Dalgleish’, suggesting his wife’s brother or other near relative was a minister, and it seems likely she was daughter of Walter Dalgleish, ousted minister of Westerkirk. Other children born to a Thomas in Roberton Parish (mostly in Todshawhill) were: Jean (b.1717); Grisel (b.1719); Elizabeth (b.1721); an unnamed child (b.1722); Rachel (b.1724); and Robert (b.1726). These seem likely to be the same father, although the gap between children is unusually wide, so perhaps he remarried. His servant Isobel Millar married Walter Scoon in 1720. In 1729 he is described as ‘in Todshawhill’ when his son James became a wright’s apprentice in Edinburgh and when his son Robert became a weaver’s apprentice in 1741. He was no longer tenant by 1745. He was also a joint tenant of Linhope with Walter Grieve in 1729. A Wilton funeral was recorded ‘at Togahill’ in 1737, which could be for one of his children. James Grieve, tenant of Branxholme Park describes (in 1821) how he was son of a Dumfriesshire minister, and had a brother who married the sister of the ‘Bonnie Lass o Branholme’. However, it is possible there were 2 generations confounded here. Thomas (18th C.) recorded as ‘apprentis to ye sd Walter’ in 1719 when he witnessed a baptism for Hawick doctor Walter Scott. Thomas (1723/4–1812) buried in Borthwick Waas, his wife died in 1798. Their children included: James, who died aged 47, and whose son Thomas was Schoolmaster in Hobkirk. He may be the Thomas, son of James and Jean Kerr who was born in Bowden Parish in 1723. Thomas (18th C.) paid the cart tax in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1791. Thomas (1808–56) son of James and Margaret Common. He was Schoolmaster at Hobkirk Parish School, perhaps just before Mr. Lightbody. He was already teacher there in 1841, living with his mother, brother John and sister Mary. In 1851 he was living with his mother Margaret in the Hobkirk Schoolhouse. He was listed as Hobkirk schoolmaster in Slater’s 1852 directory. After his death his widow and daughter took over the post office at Bonchester Bridge. However, not long afterwards his sister married the schoolmaster at Chesters. Perhaps the same Thomas was schoolmaster at Cogsmill from 1829. Tibbie see Isabel Shiel. Walter of Kirknowe (17th C.) recorded in 1643 as owner of lands in Hobkirk Parish valued at £78. He was surely related to John in Kirknowe, who was recorded earlier. Walter (17th C.) tenant in Abbotrule listed in 1684 among those men proclaimed as fugitives for being Covenanters. He may have been related to Archibald in Mackside and John in Gatehousecote, who were also listed. Walter (18th C.) indweller of Thirlestane Mill in Ettrick. In 1779 he married Mary Grieve from the same place, with witnesses Adam Scott, tenant in Ramseycleuch and Robert Dods, weaver at Thirlestane. Their children included: Mary (b.1780), baptised by Rev. Erskine of Robertson, who married William Broadwood; William (b.1781); Isobel (b.1783); Alexander (b.1785); James (b.1788); Walter (b.1791); Joan (b.1795); and Elizabeth (b.1799). Walter (19th/20th C.) resident of Whitriggs in Cavers Parish. In 1906 he was among those who contributed to the fund for renovating Kirkton Kirk. William (15th C.) recorded as ‘Willelmo Schewill’ in 1427 when he was on the ‘inquest of retour’ for William Douglas of Drumlanrig inheriting the Barony of Hawick from his father. Presumably the same ‘William Schewyll’ was listed on the ‘retour of inquest’ for Ker of Altonburn. William (15th C.) recorded as ‘Willelmo Schevil’ in the period 1456–60 when he was Clerk of the Court for Etrick Forest and was assigned the farm of Kershope. William (15th/16th C.) witness in 1514 to the baronial sasine for Hawick. He is listed as ‘Willelmo Schewyll’. William (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘William Schevill of Fodderlie’ in 1618 when there was a bond in his name, involving Walter Turnbull of Bedrule and George Rutherford, younger in Abbotrule, ‘for two bolls cherittie meal, of the met and measure of Jedburgh’. He may be the same man as the William in Hartshaugh recorded later. William (17th C.) recorded as ‘William Schievell, indweller in Hartsheild’ (probably ‘Hartshaugh’) when he was witness to a disposition of 1630 between Francis Hamilton and Rev. William Weir. His name is transcribed ‘William Schewill’. William (17th C.) tenant in ‘Mossyd’ according to the Register of the Privy Council in 1676. His wife Agnes and daughter Bessie were among others of the Abbotrule area who were imprisoned in the Tolbooth of Edinburgh for attacking the minister, George Baptie. This presumably means that they objected to having an Episcopalian minister in their parish. He was probably related to the husband of Margaret Lorraine (also listed in 1676), who was also a Shiel (perhaps Andrew). It is possible he was the same as William in Mackside. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Walker and their children included: Helen (b.1655); and John (b.1657). William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elspeth Riddell and their son Hector was baptised in 1669. William (17th C.) cottar at Mackside in Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (d.bef. 1719) described as ‘writer in Hawick’ when his son Thomas became a skinner’s apprentice in 1719. William (17th/18th C.) innkeeper in Hawick. His ‘servitrix’ Janet Stothart married William Whillans in Hawick in 1714. He was rebuked by the Session in 1716 after the minister saw him ‘coming home and holden on by a man riding behind him for drunkenness’. Also in 1716, he was witness to a baptism (along with servant William Brown) for wigmaker John Norville. It is unclear which inn he was associated with. William (17th/18th C.) farmer at Todshawhaugh. He was brother of the Thomas who farmed at Todshawhaugh, and son of Rev. Thomas. In 1696 when he rented Todshawhaugh he is clearly described as son of the minister Thomas; he appears to have taken over from his brother Thomas about then (since Thomas is listed as farmer in 1694). He is recorded in 1694 when he witnessed a disposition for the Elliots of Rulewater. He was still renting Todshawhaugh in 1698. He was rebuked by Roberton session in 1701 for allowing a ‘mock’ wedding to take place in his house on the Sabbath, between Archibald Scott of Boonraw and Esther Turnbull. He could be the brother of Thomas, farmer at Todshawhill, who is said to have married a sister of the ‘Bonny Lass o’ Braucholme’. William (17th/18th C.) recorded in Stobicoate in 1703 when he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for apothecary Walter Scott. It is possible he is the same as the farmer at Todshawhaugh. William (17th/18th C.) resident of the Flex. In 1712 he witnessed a baptism for Andrew Gray in Whitalaw, along with Archibald Paterson in the Flex. William (17th/18th C.) recorded at Cavers in 1705 when his daughter Bessie was baptised. Other children, baptised in Cavers, who may have been his include Jean (b.1702), Margaret (b.1704), Margaret (b.1711) and John (b.1714). He may be the William recorded at West Middle in 1719 when his son William was baptised in Cavers. William (18th/19th C.) recorded in Hawick in 1824 when his child with Betty Laidlaw died (also formerly spelled ‘Scheil’, ‘Scheill’, ‘Schele’, ‘Schevell’, ‘Schevill’, ‘Schevill’, ‘Scheull’, ‘Sheel’, ‘Sheill’, ‘Sheills’, ‘Shevell’, ‘Sheild’, ‘Shiel’, ‘Shields’ and variants).

Shiel Burn (sheel-burn) n. stream in Lidessdale, rising near Wilson’s Pile and running roughly north-west to join Boghall Burn. It is now entirely within forest. The 1857 Ordnance Survey map marks a small settlement on its banks, of which there is now no sign.
Shiel Cleugh

Shiel Cleugh (sheel-klooch) n. small stream in Southdean Parish, whichroft Plantation, between the sites of Slack’s Tower and Northbank Tower, and runs north to meet the Jed Water. There are lines of rig covering about 10 hectares on both sides of the cleugh, and aerial photography has revealed a possible farmstead, now buried in the forest.

Shielsden Sike (sheel-sik) n. stream in Liddesdale, just south of Burnmouth farm, between the Kihl Burn and Howden Cleuch. The 1863 Ordnance Survey map shows a ruined cottage there. Labourer John Lamb was there in 1835 and there were Elliots there in 1841, but it was abandoned before 1851. The area formerly had a fortified house, known as Stripshielden (it is ‘Shielden’ in 1835 and ‘Sheldon’ in 1841).

Shielie’s (shee-leez) n. sweetie shop at the Sandbed in the early-to-mid 20th century – ‘Across the road auld Shielie did us braw For bawbees we wad ware owre there . . . ’ [WL].

Shielin (shee-lin) n., arch. a remote and often crude shelter built for shepherds, remote pasture lands where animals would be driven in the summer – ‘. . . as the shellins o’ Kedar, as the coortins o’ Solomon’ [HSR], ‘The mirth o’ the glein and the warmth o’ the shieling Are broucht to the wynds o’ the grey toun again’ [WL] (also shiel).

Shiel Knowe (sheel-now) n. hill lying southwest of Riccarton Junction and west of Saughtree, reaching a height of 292 m.

Shiellaw (sheel-law) n. former farmstead, close to the present location of Hassendean Common farm (marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Shiellaw Plantin (sheel-law-plawn-tin) n. former plantation near Hassendean Common (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Shiel Rig (sheel-rig) n. ridge in Southdean Parish, situated on the right, opposite the turnoff for Lethem. There are the remains of a group of 4 shielings, 5 pens and a stock enclosure there, just to the west of the forest. These are probably the remains of a mediaeval steading. There is also a 300 m boundary bank to the south-west, near the Carter Burn (also written as ‘Shiellig’).

Shiels see Shiel

Shielshaugh (sheelz-hawch) n. farmstead on the west bank of the Ettrick Water, just a little north of Oakwood, situated on the Shielshaugh Burn. Francis Scott, formerly at Salenside, was living there in 1764.

Shiel Sike (sheel-sik) n. stream in the Borthwick valley, which rises as the Red Cleuch near Redcleuch Edge and Cowbush hill, and joins the Dirthope Burn before running into the Borthwick. There is an old rectangular enclosure on the eastern side and a building marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map.

Shiel’s Lands (sheelz-lawud) n. former name for lands in Hobkirk Parish. In 1811 ‘Part of Shiel’s Lands, and Boston’s half of Kirk-know’ were valued at £22 15s, among the lands of Cornelius Elliot of Woollee, while the rest was valued at £68 5s and owned by William Oliver of Langraw.

Shielswoods Hill (sheelz-steedz-hil) n. Shielswoods Hill, small hill in southern Castleton Parish, just west of Kershope Bridge. It has been suggested that this might be the site of the shielings of Eadulf, which are noted in a 14th century charter confirming a 12th century grant of neighbouring land at Kershope.

Shielswood (sheelz-wud, -wood) n. Shielswood, area around Shielswood Loch and Shielswood farm, on the Ashkirk to Roberton road. This is the highest part of Ashkirk parish, containing the hills Cringie Law, Threephead, Smasha Hill, Gandiesknowe, Horn Hill, etc. William Turnbull was recorded at ‘sheliswod meadow’ when Thomas Lauder of Todrig was accused of stealing from him in 1494/5. The lands there were owned by a branch of the Scott family from the mid-16th century and more recently became part of the estates of the Elliots of Minto. In 1581 Margaret Scott, widow of William Scott of Burnfoot, resigned her liferent of lands there to her son William. William Scott then leased the lands and steadying to Walter Scott of Todrig, promising also to finish building a stone house there, but the liferent went to his new bride, Janet, daughter of William Scott in Huntly. The lands were valued at £260 in 1643 and owned by Walter Scott of Shielswood. It still had the same value according to the 1663 Land Tax Rolls, and also in 1678 when it was owned by James Scott. The main house is listed as having 5 hearths in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694, with 3 other tenants on the estate and one poor person. In 1712 James Scott of Shielswood (and his son Walter) granted the lands to Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto (and his son Gilbert) in 1712; it was then described having value 4 merks, 10 shillings and 8 pennies. John Oliver was herd there in about the period 1729–63 and John Nivison was also there in 1765. ‘A Plan of the Farm of Shielswood’ was drawn up in 1767 and less detailed one in 1829. In 1779 the liferent had been given by Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto to Rev. Simon Haliburton, and it was still valued at £260. It was also described in 1780 as ‘a four merk ten shilling and eight penny land’. William Scott is recorded as shepherd there and William Miller as farmer, on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John Hobkirk was a servant there in at least 1799–1801 (the house there is marked as ‘Sheelswood’ on Gordon’s c.1650 map, Blaue’s 1654 map and Adair’s c.1688 map, and is ‘Shiel Wood’ on Ainslie’s 1773 map; it is ‘sheelswood’ in 1494/5, ‘Scheilswode’ in 1609, ‘Scheilswood’ in 1616, ‘Scheilswood’ in 1617, ‘Scheilswoode’ in 1648, ‘Sheilswood’, ‘Sheil-wood’ in 1695, ‘Scheilswood’ in 1690, ‘Scheilswood’ in 1692, ‘Shilswood’ in 1694 and ‘Sheilswood’ in 1712).

Shielswudhaugh (sheelz-wud-hawrh) n. former steading near Shielswood. Thomas Gray was a weaver living there in 1709. Gideon Scott was recorded there in 1727 (it is ‘Shielwood hauch’ in 1709).

Shielswud

Loch (sheelz-wud-loch) n. Shielswood Loch, loch about 3 miles north-west of Hawick, south of Shielswood farm on the ‘Hill Road to Roberton’. It is ‘Scheilswood Loch’ in 1649 when listed among the lochs in Roxburghshire (it is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Sheelswood L.’).

shift (shift) n., arch. a stratagem, ploy, plan, evasion – ‘The Treasurer informed that some who owed money by Bill to the Session refused or made shift of payment’ [PR1724], livelihood – ‘...for gameing at ye Cards ... that that was a sinfull and dishonest shift to get a living’ [PR1724], ‘...and the other of them is not so, his wife being valetudinary, and can make no shift for a living’ [PR1725], v., arch. to evade, dodge – ‘The Treasurer made report that the Delinquents shifts the payment of their penalties of fornication’ [PR1724].

shilfa (shil-fa) n., arch. the chaffinch, Fringilla coelebs – ‘The twit of the shilfa, Or song of the thrush ... ’ [JJW], ‘The robin wi’ his rosie vest, The wren in russet lively drest, And shilfa frae his cosie nest On the Bank aboon the Boosie’ [DA], ‘Mute and sad is the mavis, for simmer’s awa; And a lilt frae the shilfa I ne'er get ava’ [TCh], ‘The shilfa’s warble and the cushia’s cry Wake woodland echoes from the feathered throng’ [TK] (shilfa is more common locally).

shilfie (shil-fee, shel-fee) n. the chaffinch, Fringilla coelebs – ‘The callant at herreect the shilfie’s nest’ [ECS], ‘The shilfies frea the buskit thorn Sing salutations to the simmer’ [DH], ‘...Where shillies, blackies, linties poure Their offering o’ sang’ [WL], ‘The hedge sparrow trills and the robin pipes, and ‘shillies’ are flitting nearby’ [WFC] (also spelled ‘shelfie’, ‘shiffy’, etc.; cf. the less common shila).

shifly see shilfie

shillin (shi-lin) n. a pre-decimalisation coin (i.e. from before 1971), worth twelve old pence or one twentieth of a pound, and used sometimes to mean five new pence – ‘...To send a bottle out o’ fight, Could he command a shillin’ ... ’ [JR]. The word is also used to indicate the strength of beer, historically indicating the duty payable per barrel – ‘A’ll hev a pint o yer aeighty shillin’. Additionally it was sometimes used as a unit of weight, representing $\frac{1}{40}$ of a pound – ‘Item, Gowldilands, neuer payit ferme; estimat to pay 100 lbs. in stok, parsonage 3 bolls, vicarage 7 lbs. 10 sh.’ [PR1627].

the shillin (thu-shi-lin) n., arch. also called the King’s Shilling, this was a token bounty accepted when signing up for the army – ‘Come ladies come, hear the cannons roar, Tak’ the King’s shilling an’ we’re off tae war’ [T].

Shillinlaw (shi-lin-law) n. (Shillinglaw) Andrew (b.c.1810) agricultural labourer living at Milsington in 1841. His wife was Helen and their children included Margaret, Mary, Christian, Robert, John and Jane. George (18th C.) son of Joseph, who was miller at Legerwood. He was recorded as groom and postillion at Burnhead in 1788, when he was working for William Scott. He married Dorothy Smith and they were living at Crow Hill when their daughter Betty was baptised in 1787; the baptism was recorded in both Wilton and Earlston Parishes and the witnesses in Wilton were William Beattie and Adam Scott. By 1789 he was living at Currie in Bothwick Parish. He was later a gardener and nurseryman in Earlston, where he had several additional children, and was said to have supplied plants to Sir Walter Scott at Abbotsford.

shillin-shakers (shi-lin-sha-kurz) n., pl., arch. quaking grass, Briza media (also shiller-shakers).

shilment (shil-min’) n., arch. a frame fitted to a cart, particularly during harvest, to increase its capacity.

shilpit (shil-pee’, shilpi’) adj. pale, puny, sickly, underfed looking – ‘look it that pair wee shilpit dog’, ‘... an wad spruiz an turn leify again the maist shilpeet an disjaskect!’ [ECS], ‘Whiles they wad looy shilpit When the wund was snell’ [DH], arch. unfriendly, dreary – ‘In a like manner one sense of Shilpit in Roxb. is ‘cold and comfortless, ungenial’’ [JoJ].

shine (shīn) v., arch. to throw, pitch, fling – ‘There was nocht for’t but the plates, an’ aw shined them and a bowl or twa doon and made a fit-ba’ o’ the fragments’ [HAST1868], ‘Hei sheind eis bonnet doon an wanteet ti fecht’ [ECS], ‘Hei sheind them and a bowl or twa doon and made a...’ [HAST1868] (also written ‘shein’).

shine (shīn) n., arch., poet. a social gathering, party, bustle, caper, row – ‘Gude kens how ‘twill end at the last, But sailry I’m dreading a shiney; I doot it will end in a blast, For the deil’s i’ the end at the last, But sairly I’m dreading a shiney; I doot it will end in a blast, For the deil’...’ [HAST1868].

Shinin Gair (shīn-nī-gār) n. former name for a small stream that rises to the east of Shaws Under Loch and runs roughly north-eastwards to join the Langhope Burn. It is marked ‘Shining Gare’ on a 1767 map of Langhope farm.

shinin-gless (shīn-ī-gles) n., arch. a piece of mirror used by children as a reflecting toy.

shinit (shī-nīt, -nī) pp., poet. shone, shined – ‘Owt o’ Zion, the perfiteniss o’ beutie, the Lord beth shynet’ [HSR].

shinty (shīn-tī) n. a Scottish game similar to hockey, also sometimes applied to the version played on ice – ‘And then what fun beyond compare! What joy abune a’ price! We’d pick oor sides and play the game O’ shinty on the ice’ [WLu]. It was played in Hawick in the early 19th century.

Shiplaw (ship-lu, -law) n. area around the former cottage of ‘Shiplaw Cross’, near the cattle-grid on the Earlside to Hawthornside road. Cars often stop near here to watch the horses cross the road on the Bonchester Ride-out. There is another Shiplaw north of Peebles near Eddleston and Sharplaw outside Jedburgh and near Howman.

Shiplaw Bog (ship-hū-bōg) n. marshy area to the north of Cogsmill school, presumably related to the old chapel near there.

Shiplaw Corse (ship-hū-kōrs) n. area on the side road between Hawthornside and Earlside. Also known as ‘Chaipel Cross’, ‘Sheeplaw Cross’ or ‘Shiplaw Cross’, the cottage here was the highest house in Cavers Parish. William Whillans (who had been blacksmith at the Flex) was there in 1725. Robert Wilson was living there in 1749. It was a shepherd’s cottage from about 1780, when the shepherd was John Rutherford, whose descendants were blacksmiths in Bukchester. Adam Easton was there in 1792. The cottage was rebuilt in 1826, with the farmer about that time being John Elliot. Later it was occupied by a roadman, and in the mid-19th century the tenant was a Mr. Blake, when visited by Lady Scott of Spottiswood, who made a sketch of it. The house was destroyed by fire in 1902. It can be seen in a photograph of the mid-19th century, and is a late surviving example of country houses of an earlier era. It was a 1-storey thatched dwelling, built of rough, undressed stones, with the holes filled with mud. The walls were about 7 feet high and 3 feet thick. The name survives in the nearby plantation called ‘Chaipel o Cross Plantation’; the ‘Chapel of Cross’ has been suggested to be a medieval chapel dedicated to the holy cross, but there is no evidence that there was such a chapel there, with its existence probably deriving from the name (the connection with a ‘cross’ is unclear, however, it is possible there was a wayside cross associated with the chapel at Cogsmill; it is ‘Shyplawcross’ in 1725, ‘Sheeplawcross’ in 1749 and appears to be ‘Sleepacross’ in 1792).

Shipley (ship-le) n. Frederick (1889–1917) born in Hawick, son of Robert and Jane Fraser. His paternal grandparents were William (who came from England) and Margaret Stevenson, while his maternal grandparents were George Fraser and Mary Ballantyne. He emigrated to Ontario, Canada in 1906, with his mother following the next year. He married in 1912, but his wife died in childbirth in 1914. He enlisted in 1915 and was killed at Vimy Ridge. He is buried at Nine Elms Military Cemetery in France. He was posthumously awarded the Memorial Cross, which in 2007 was bought on E-Bay by the museum in Welland, his adopted home town.
Shiriff Court (Shirenscleuch shire) (Shiriff Clerk (Shiriff shiriff shippit Shiriff o Roxburgh)

William Henderson was described as ‘Shiref officer in Hawick’ in 1722. In Hawick, before the Police Act of 1861, he was responsible, along with the two Burgh Officers, for maintaining law and order.

Shiriff o Roxburgh (shirif-ö-roks-bu-ru) n. hereditary title, synonymous with the Shirifship of Teviotdale, and held for generations by the Douglases of Cavers. This was formally a royal appointment and the holder was the King’s officer in the county. In the earliest times it may only have been a military leader connected with Roxburgh Castle, but later it became an office with administrative and judicial responsibility for the county. The first known ‘vicecomite’ of Roxburgh was Gospatric, mentioned in the founding charter of Selkirk Abbey. Henry Kerr was Shiriff in the 14th century, George Douglas, Earl of Angus, gained the title along with several lands in 1397 and Sir Archibald Douglas acquired the hereditary title by royal charter in 1412. A decree of 1620 abolishing heritable jurisdictions led to William Douglas of Cavers agreeing to part with the Shiriffldom (and teinds from Cavers Kirk) for the sum of £20,000 Scots. But in 1626, when only £4,000 had been paid, he refused to surrender the office, and Parliament agreed he could do so until the full amount was paid. In fact the family held on to the Shiriffldom until the final abolition of such offices in 1747. A roll of the Shiriffldom is: Gospatric, c.1125; Gervase Riddell, c.1138; Robert, son of Guy, 1147; John, son of Orm, c.1170; Bernard of Hadden, c.1203 and 1227/8; John Maxwell, c.1214 and 1223/4-26; Adam of Bathgate, 1237/8; Nicholas de Soulis, 1246; Aymer Maxwell, c.1250; Hugh Abernethy, c.1264; Thomas Cavers, c.1265; Thomas Randolph, 1266; Hugh de Pearsby, at least 1285-6; William de Soulis, 1289/90; Walter Tonke, 1296; Sir Robert Hastings, 1296–1307 (English); Sir Ingram de Umfraville, 1302 (Scottish); Sir Robert...

Shiriff Depute (shirif-de-pewt) n. deputy appointed to assist the Sheriff in running the Sheriff Court. In earlier centuries this was usually someone with formal legal training who would help the Sheriff. After the abolition of heritable sheriffs, the ‘Depute’ actually held the office of Sheriff and the term ‘Sheriff Depute’ was synonymous with ‘Sheriff Principal’, with deputies known as ‘Sheriff Substitutes’.

Shiriff officer (she-rif-o-fee-sur) n. official of a Sheriff Court, charged with duties such as delivering summonses or seizing goods to pay off debts.

Shippit (shiriff) (shi-rif, she-riff) n. official of a Sheriff Court, responsible for criminal and administrative matters, with a Sheriff-Depute appointed to perform legal functions. In Roxburghshire the office became a hereditary one with the Douglases of Cavers, and was synonymous with the title ‘Sheriff of Teviotdale’. After such heritable positions were abolished in 1748 the position was replaced with the Sheriff-Principal, assisted by Sheriff-substitutes, who were usually known as simply ‘Sheriffs’, a title they took officially after 1971.

Shiriff (shirifee sur) (Shirifee sur) (Shirif-shee-fee) (Shiriff o Roxburgh)

Shirifee (shiriff) (shi-rif, she-riff) n. a legal officer who sits as judge in a Sheriff Court. Formerly each county had a principle official called the Sheriff, responsible for criminal and administrative matters, with a Sheriff-Depute appointed to perform legal functions. In Roxburghshire the office became a hereditary one with the Douglases of Cavers, and was synonymous with the title ‘Sheriff of Teviotdale’. After such heritable positions were abolished in 1748 the position was replaced with the Sheriff-Principal, assisted by Sheriff-substitutes, who were usually known as simply ‘Sheriffs’, a title they took officially after 1971.

Shiriff Clerk (shirifee-klerk) (shi-rif-klerk) n. clerk appointed to act as secretary to the Sheriff Court, specifically to record the business of the court.

Shiriff Court (shirifee kör, she-riff-kör) (Shirif-shee-kör) (Shiriff o Roxburgh)

Shiriff Depute (shirifee de-pewt) n. deputy appointed to assist the Sheriff in running the Sheriff Court. In earlier centuries this was usually someone with formal legal training who would help the Sheriff. After the abolition of heritable sheriffs, the ‘Depute’ actually held the office of Sheriff and the term ‘Sheriff Depute’ was synonymous with ‘Sheriff Principal’, with deputies known as ‘Sheriff Substitutes’.

Shiriff Court (shirifee kör, she-riff-kör) (Shirif-shee-kör) (Shiriff o Roxburgh)

Shippit (shiriff) (shi-rif, she-riff) n. official of a Sheriff Court, responsible for criminal and administrative matters, with a Sheriff-Depute appointed to perform legal functions. In Roxburghshire the office became a hereditary one with the Douglases of Cavers, and was synonymous with the title ‘Sheriff of Teviotdale’. After such heritable positions were abolished in 1748 the position was replaced with the Sheriff-Principal, assisted by Sheriff-substitutes, who were usually known as simply ‘Sheriffs’, a title they took officially after 1971.

Shiriff (shirifee) (shiriff) (shi-rif, she-riff) n. a legal officer who sits as judge in a Sheriff Court. Formerly each county had a principle official called the Sheriff, responsible for criminal and administrative matters, with a Sheriff-Depute appointed to perform legal functions. In Roxburghshire the office became a hereditary one with the Douglases of Cavers, and was synonymous with the title ‘Sheriff of Teviotdale’. After such heritable positions were abolished in 1748 the position was replaced with the Sheriff-Principal, assisted by Sheriff-substitutes, who were usually known as simply ‘Sheriffs’, a title they took officially after 1971.

shoemakers (shoo-mä-kurz) n., once one of the 7 incorporated trades in Hawick, which until 1861 had two representatives on the Town Council. They were incorporated before the existing Burgh Records (which go back to 1638). In 1643 they were directed by the Council to ‘try the market’ for the quality of the shoes and the quartermasters are recorded in 1677 examining the shoes at the market, to make sure they were ‘all of sufficient barked leather’. They were in earlier times referred to as ‘cordiners’, although the ‘cordiners’ made a request to form a separate incorporation in 1722; the cordiners were allowed to be a separate incorporation from ‘those who make single-soled shoes’. However, they are not mentioned as separate bodies in later times, and so presumably merged again soon after. In 1747 they were ordered by the Council to turn over their books. In 1836 there were 7 shoemakers in the incorporation, each paying 2 shillings admission fee. In local parades they would sometimes appear attired in the costume of the Ancient Order of St. Crispin, and were described as particularly splendid in the 1832 Reform Bill celebratory parade.

Shoreswood (shorz-wood) n. John (17th/18th C.) son of John, with his mother being a Home. In 1693 he was served heir portioner, along with James Dickson and Alexander Morrison, in the Barony of Home, inherited from Jean, daughter of John Home. This included superiority over lands in Hassendean, and explicitly Appletreehall, as well as the lands of Redfordgreen, Drycleuchlea, Huntly and Hartwoodburn. His father was already deceased in 1693. It is unclear what happened to the Barony afterwards.

Short (shor, shor’i) n. Colin Roderick ‘Doddy’ (1942–2010) son of Pipe Major Robert, he was born and bred in Hawick. He was Head Boy at Trinity, then attended the High School and Henderson Tech. He worked for Pringles for 25 years, then started his own business, Shorts of Hawick, making tartan hose for pipe bands. He played pipes with the Boys’ Brigade and then the Hawick Pipe Band, being 2nd Pipe Major and band secretary for decades. He married Helen Greenhill and had children Karen, Kenny, Julie and Allister. James (1818–88) born in Eckford Parish, he was son of John, who farmed at Hartshaugh Mill. He was coachman at Wolfelee Glen in 1851 and coachman at Wauchope Cottage in 1861. He later moved to Jedburgh. In 1846 he married Helen (1823–1911), daughter of William Sibbald; she died in Hawick. They they had 11 children, born in Hobkirk and Southdean Parishes, including: John (b.1846), who died in infancy; John (b.1848) the eldest surviving son, who became head gardener at Hummers Knott, Darlington; Margaret (b.1849); Euphemia (b.1852), who worked in the hosiery industry in Hawick; Mary (1853–93); Helen (b.1855), who died in infancy; William (1858–69); James (b.1860), who died in infancy; James (1863–1905), also a gardener in...

Yorkshire, died in Hawick; Peter (1865–1921), a telegraph linesman; and Francis (b.1868). John (16th C.) joint owner of a particate of land (along with Stephen Scott and Janet Liddersdale) on the south side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. He may have been related to Robert who is also listed as a particate-holder in 1537. Probably the same John was deceased in 1560 when his brother Thomas inherited his tenement on the north side of the High Street; this was between the tenements of Thomas Logan and John Halliday. John ‘Jock’ (16th/17th C.) Hawick resident mentioned in a murder trial of 1612. John Elliot was claimed by Elliot’s wife to have been murdered ‘within the said Jok Schortis duelling hous’, but in fact appears to have hanged himself with his own belt when imprisoned in St. Mary’s steele. This suggests that he was an innkeeper. John (b.c.1775) farmer at Hartshaugh Mill. He is listed as miller at Hartshaugh in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. He was at Hartshaugh Mill in 1841, but absent by 1851. He married Margaret Davidson and their children (born in Eckford Parish) included: John (b.1808); Francis Davidson (b.1809); Euphan (b.1812); William (b.1817), who married Mary Dalgleish; James (b.1819), who married Helen Sibbald; George (b.1820), who married Rachel Scott; and Adam (b.1822). He could be the John, son of John and Isobel Thomson, born in Kelso Parish in 1779. John Dalgleish (b.1842) farmer at Hartshaugh Mill and later Borthwickbraefoot. He was son of William, also farmer at Hartshaugh Mill and nephew of the John who married Margaret Davidson. In 1861 he was a ploughman, living with his siblings and widowed mother in Chesters. He married Margaret, daughter of Robert Cavers, also from Rulewater. Their children included Mary Euphemia (b.1855) (formerly spelled ‘Schort’, ‘Schorte’ etc.).

shortbread (shor'-bread) n. shortbread, baked item made from flour, sugar and butter – ‘A pek of flur bikin short brid and buttor to it, £1 4s’ [1690/HAST1905].

Shortbutts (shor'-butts) n. former name for lands in the territory of Sorbie (probably meaning near Sorbietrees) in Liddesdale. In the late 12th century Race Fitz Malger granted half of the land there to Jedburgh Abbey. In 1541 it is valued at 20 shillings and said to pertain to the Laird of Shortbutts. Along with Flatt it was owned by Francis Robson in 1632 (it was is ‘Scortbuttes’ in the late 1100s, ‘Schortbuttis’ in 1541 and ‘Schortbus’ in 1632).

the Shorter Catechism (thu-shor'-ur-kaw'-e-ki-zum) n. short form of the question and answer instruction manual, designed to be memorised in order to test parishioners. The short form was the one mostly used, consisting of 107 questions. It was written in the 1640s by English and Scottish clergy, and also referred to as the Westminster Shorter Catechism. Locally it was called ‘the carritch’. Examination was often carried out in the parishioners own houses by the minister, but often in order round a circle, so it was possible to memorize only a subset of the answers.
Shorthope

Shorthope (shor-tup) n. farm in the Ettrick valley, before reaching Kirkhope and Phawhope. In 1557 ‘Auld Hob Scot of Riskynhoup’ paid rent for the lands to Melrose Abbey. In 1609 it was owned by the Scotts of Thirlestane, with tenant Andrew Scott. Robert Scott of Whitslade was served heir to his father’s lands here in 1643. It was still part of the Lordship of Melrose until at least 1670. It was long part of the Buccleuch estates (it is ‘Schorthope’ in 1564 and ‘Schorthoip’ in 1609; ‘Shortup’ is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

short-leet (shor-’lee’) n. a short list – ‘A deh ken if A’ve got the job, bit A’m on the short-leet’ (this term survives, although the use of ‘leet’ itself seems to have died out).

Shortreed (shor-’reed) n. Andrew (16th C.) listed in the 1526 remission given to a large number of Borders men for an attack upon the Earl of Arran; his son John is also listed. Probably the same Andrew was one of the men who in 1530 swore that William Scott of Harden did not owe more than a merk to the deceased Stephen Lauder. He is probably the Andrew who owned a piece of land in Selkirk according to a document of 1530. He witnessed an agreement between Scotts and Veitches over Synton in 1531. He was also part of an inquest into the disputed lands of Longnewton held in Jedburgh in 1533. Most of the other men listed were local, and so he was probably from the family based near Ashkirk. Probably the same Andrew ‘Shortreid’ in 1532 among the witnesses to a public declaration made in Selkirk by William Scott in Headshaw. In 1536 he was cited by Walter Scott (brother-german of Kerr of Sunderland Hall) for failing to produce Adam Gledstains at the market cross of Selkirk. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish who married Bessie Shortreed in 1658. Their son William was baptised in 1660. Andrew (b.c.1770s) servant at Synton according to the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Ashkirk Parish. He could be the Andrew who married Janet Laidlaw in Wilton in 1804. Bernard (15th C.) tenant in Essenside. In 1494/5 he had remission for theft of sheep from the Murrays of Sundhope. Adam Scott of ‘auldinnis hop’ served as his surety. David (16th C.) recorded in 1581 as resident at Burnfoot on Ale when acting as a cautioner for William Scott there. He was surely related to William, who was also at Burnfoot. David (16th C.) recorded in 1581 as resident at Essenside when he was cautioner for William Scott in Burnfoot on Ale. He is probably related to Thomas, who was also at Essenside, but distinct from David who was at Burnfoot. Gavin (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His son Robert was baptised in 1639. George of Essenside (16th C.) recorded in 1569 as an executor for the children of Isabel Donald, widow of Robert Scott of Palace. George (19th C.) married Ann Waugh in Hawick in 1842. James (17th/18th C.) recorded as an elder of Wilton Parish in 1705, 1706 and 1711. He may be the James who married Margaret Shiel in 1692 and whose children included Robert (b.1695) and William (b.1704). He could be the James who is recorded as resident at Whitehaugh in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He witnessed a baptism (along with Robert Renwick) for George Renwick in the Sandbed in 1697. He is probably the James who in about 1700 was tenant in Whitehaugh and step-father of Hector Cockburn; this means that his wife had previously been married to George Cockburn. James (1726–83) eldest son of Robert and Elizabeth Elliott, he was ‘younger of Essenside’. He acquired part of Hermiston from George Johnstone in 1758, the lands being valued at £260. He was owner of Easter Essenside in 1759, and sold the lands to Capt. (later Adm.) John Elliot in 1778, with the consent of his wife Helen Currer and the trustees for his creditors: Cornelius Elliot, W.S.; Robert Laidlaw, tenant in Falnash; and Walter Scott of Wauchope. He was struck off the list of freeholders of Roxburghshire in 1780, having lost his lands in the county. He married Ellen Currie (also recorded as ‘Helen Currer’) in 1754 in Ashkirk and they had a son, Thomas (b.1786). He is probably the same James ‘late of Essenside’ who was buried in old Wilton Kirkyard, his table stone stating that he died in 1783, aged 75; his wife Bella Currie was buried beside him, and died in 1808, aged 84. His wife may have been the ‘Mrs. Shortreed’ recorded as owner of ‘Nether interchange’ according to the 1788 valuation and the 1811 Land Tax Rolls; the farm was valued at £20 and later owned by John James Scott Chisholme of Stiches. James (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His children included: Robert (b.1755); Isabel Margaret (b.1756); Betty (b.1758); Margaret (b.1760); Jean (b.1762); George (b.1763); Jean (again, b.1764); Agnes (b.1766); Ann (b.1767); Nelly (b.1769); Robert (again, b.1771); Mary (b.1773); Thomas (b.1774); Elliotie (b.1775); Andrew (b.1776); and Willie (b.1777). There may be 2 families here. John (15th/16th C.) listed in 1526 in the remission for a large number of Borderers who attacked... the Earl of Arran’s forces. He was son of Andrew. John (17th C.) married Margaret Thomson in Ashkirk Parish in 1631. John (17th C.) recorded being in ‘Longsintoume’ in 1679 when he had a discharge for payment with the treasurer of Selkirk. He was in ‘Langesentein’ in 1681 when he had a similar discharge. John (17th/18th C.) farmer in Ashkirk Parish. In 1706 in Edinburgh his daughter Agnes married William Thomson, who was ‘servitor to Bartholomew Brecher, bower’. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. His children included: William (b.1702); an unnamed child (b.1703); Helen (b.1705); and Andrew (b.1707). John (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Elrig in 1717 and Borthwickbrae in 1720. He probably married Mary Hislop in Roberton in 1717 and their children included: Margaret (b.1718); and Janet (b.1720). John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded at Rigg in 1729 when he married Margaret Scott. John of Greenhead (b.1705) son of Robert. He spent 1718–28 with his father at Whitfield and Todshaw. He presumably purchased the lands of Greenhead near Selkirk. In 1764 he was one of the people who gave evidence at the court proceedings for the division of Wilton Common. In 1783 he was pursued at the Court of Session for his contribution to the Selkirk poor rates. Robert of Greenhead, who paid the land tax in 1813 in may have been his son. John (18th C.) recorded in a marriage in Ashkirk Parish in 1735. John (18th C.) tenant in Oakwood in 1737 when he was recorded in a legal case in Selkirk. Perhaps the same John was tenant in ‘Haining-mote’ in 1741. John (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isabel Shortreed in 1771 and their daughter Peggy was baptised in 1788. Robert (16th/17th C.) local tenant recorded in 1628 when he was on a list of men accused by the Earl of Buccleuch of chopping down his trees at Todshawhaugh or Trinitylands. The farm he was connected with is not transcribed. Robert (17th C.) resident of Drinkstone according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Elizabeth Dalgleish and their son William was baptised in 1695. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Riddell and their children included: John (b.1705); and Janet (b.1713). He is probably the Robert who was tenant of half of the farms of Whitfield and Todshaw, on the west side of the Cala Burn, from about 1718 until the 1730s. Robert of Essendine (b.1695) born in Wilton Parish, he became a Bailie and lawyer in Ashkirk Parish. He may have been son of James and Margaret Sheil. He may be the Robert ‘shortridg’ who witnessed a baptism for John Hendry in Wilton in 1721. He is probably the Robert who paid the window tax at ‘woolie’ in Southdean Parish in 1748 (presumably he lived there temporarily). He acted as attorney for Walter Scott of Leith when he gained the lands of Wauchope in 1750. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. In 1725 he married Elizabeth (‘Bessie’), daughter of Thomas Elliot of Oakwood Mill and sister of William Elliot, 1st Laird of Wolfelee. Their children included: James (b.1726), the eldest son; Jean (b.1727); and Thomas, who was a farmer. He may have been father of Margaret (b.c.1735) who married William Elliot of Whithaugh; she may be the Maragret who was baptised in Roberton in 1730. His sister Agnes may have married his brother-in-law Andrew. Robert (18th C.) married Janet Chatto in Ashkirk Parish in 1764. Robert ‘Bob’ (1762–1829) born in Southdean Parish, eldest son of farmer Thomas and Ann Maria Kerr of the Abbotrule family. He became Sheriff-Substitute for Roxburghshire. He had musical talent and collected local songs and legends. He was a friend of Sir Walter Scott, accompanying him on several trips in the Liddesdale area, gathering ballads etc. He paid the Horse Tax in Jedburgh in the 1790s. He represented Weens on the Hobkirke Parish heritors council in 1803. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauty of the Border’ in 1821. He was a founder member of the Jedforest Club and was the 2nd Honorary Secretary. He built a house in Jedburgh, which was later British Linen Bank house. His sister Mary married William Aitchison and helped him run the Cross Keys Inn at 11 Sandbed. He was Substitute to Sheriff William Oliver, who wrote some doggerel verse about him – ‘From chattering women all refrain, Let silence universal reign, While thro the world I proclaim A friend in need is Bob Shortreed’. He married Margaret, 3rd daughter of Jedburgh lawyer James Fair. He had 2 infant children buried in Jedburgh Abbey churchyard in 1802. His other children included: Thomas, who also helped Sir Walter Scott, and followed his father as Secretary of the Jedforest Club; John Elliot, bank manager in Wexford; Capt. William of the Bengal service of the East India Company; James Elliot, who succeeded his uncle to the Langlee estate and took the additional name of Fair; Col. Pringle of the Bengal Native Infantry; and Robert, tenant of Atton-burn. Simon (d.1550) Vicar at Ashkirk, who was succeeded by James Ker. He s probably the ‘Si-mon Shortreid’ listed as a priest who witnessed an announcement by ‘Walter Scot in Edschawe’ in Selkirk in 1532. He also witnessed an agreement in 1531 between Scots and Veitches regarding Sinton, another agreement regarding lands at Haining in about 1534 and an agreement regarding the ‘Dean’s lambs of Selkirk’ in 1536. In 1536 he was ‘ane discreet man my servand’ to the Parson of Ashkirk Richard Bothwell, when Richard set him part of the kirklands ‘callit the clewis and kempis knows’ for 3 years; the witnesses included John Mitchellhill, James Davidson and David Brownfield, who were chaplains (but it is not clear where). In 1537 he invested Simon Scott in the benefices of the Rectorship of Rankilburn; Andrew was one of the witnesses (and may have been related). In 1538 he witnessed a document for Ralph Davidson involving Grahamslaw and ‘Chames’. In 1539 he witnessed a transaction where Thomas Scott in Haining warned certain tenants to remove themselves. He was involved in a transaction for William Scott (probably relating to lands near Ashkirk) in 1542. In 1543 he resigned a tenement in Selkirk in favour of William (whose relationship is not recorded). Thomas (16th C.) recorded in Whitehillbrae (in Kirkhope Parish) in 1580/1 when Janet Turnbull (widow of John Scott in Blindhaugh) and William Allan assigned him their lands in Blindhaugh. Walter in Selkirk was one of the witnesses and may have been related. On the same day he confessed that he owed Walter money and was having to defer payment. He was also recorded as occupier of a husbandland in Blindhaugh in 1581 when the liferent was transferred to Walter, son of the deceased John Scott in Blindhaugh. Thomas (16th C.) recorded as resident at Essenside when acting as a cautioner for William Scott in Burnfoot on Ale in 1581. He was probably related to David, who was also at Essenside. He may be the Thomas in Woll who in 1581/2 witnessed a transaction in Selkirk. Thomas (1733–98) farmer at Easter Essenside. He was son of Robert and Elizabeth, who was daughter of Thomas Elliot of Oakwood Mill (ancestor of the Ellots of Borthwickbrae and Wolfelee). He also farmed at Wolfelee, Hyndlee, Lustruther and Jedhead, being one of the most extensive farmers in the Jedforest. However, he was financially ruined following the American War, and it is said the worry from this shortened his life. He was also said to have been the last man to carry out a Border raid, this after some English thieves had carried off some of his sheep; instead of appealing to the courts he crossed the Border and brought back his livestock, like had happened in earlier centuries. In 1757 in Southdean Parish he married Ann Maria, daughter of William Kerr of Abbot-rule. Their eldest son Robert was a friend of Sir Walter Scott, while their daughter Mary married William Aitchison. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His children included Mary (b.1759), Betty (b.1760), Robert (b.1762), Margaret (b.1764), William (b.1768), James (b.1769), Thomas (b.1771) and Patrick (b.1775). Thomas (18th C.) tailor at Falnash. He is recorded in the 1799 ballot list for the Militia in Hawick Parish, with his surname given as ‘Shrotreed’. He was still at Falnash on the ballot in 1801. Thomas (1786–1842) born in Hawick Parish, son of James and Ellen Currie. He married Isabella Armstrong in 1774. Their children were George, James, John, Robert L., William and Thomas. In 1831 he emigrated with his wife and 6 sons, settling in Guelph, Ontario. Thomas (1796–1826) eldest son of Robert, Sheriff-Substitute of Roxburgh-shire. His great schoolfriend was Robert Lindsay Armstrong, later Director of the Mint in St. Petersburg. He was greatly interested in local history, publishing a pamphlet on the orchards of Jedburgh. He also collected Border ballads and helped Sir Walter Scott with ‘Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border’. He was Procurator-Fiscal for Roxburghshire. He may be the Thomas listed at Falnash in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’. In 1825 he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’. He took over from his father as Secretary of the Jedforest Club in 1820, retiring in 1826 because of ill-health. He never married and died at Camberwell. Walter (16th C.) recorded in 1580/1 as witness to an agreement between Walter Scott of Ashkirk and John Scott in Aikwood over Ashkirk Mill. He is recorded as brother of Walter Scott, perhaps meaning brother-in-law. He is again recorded as brother of Walter Scott in Ashkirk in a further transaction of 1581. He may be the same William recorded in 1581 as resident at Burnfoot on Ale when acting as a cautioner for William Scott there. He was surely related to David, who was also at Burnfoot. He was still recorded as brother of Walter Scott in Ashkirk when he witnessed a transaction for him in 1581/2. Walter (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. His children included Walter (b.1702). Walter (18th C.)

Sibbald (si-buld) n. James (1745–1803) son of John, farmer at Whitlaw in Bowden Parish. His brother John was farmer at Borthaugh. He attended Selkirk Grammar School and then leased the farms of Newton (on Slitrig) and Whitehill-brae (on the Dod Burn) from Sir Francis Elliott of Stobs. He spent much of his time studying botany and the classics, and failed as a farmer, giving up his lease in 1779. Learning the publishing trade rapidly in London, he moved to Edinburgh, helping his cousin the publisher Charles Elliot in his shop. In 1780 he purchased (from Mrs. Margaret Yair) the circulating library that had belonged to Allan Ramsay, and became a bookseller and publisher on Parliament Square. A young Sir Walter Scott was a frequent visitor to his circulating library and described him as ‘a man of rough manners but of some taste and judgment, [who] cultivated music and poetry’. In 1785 he started to publish the ‘Edinburgh Magazine, or Literary Miscellany’ as a competitor to the ‘Scots Magazine’. He himself wrote many articles on Scottish antiquities, as well as many other topics, such as the first serious review of Robert Burns ‘Kilmarnock’ edition. He went through mixed fortunes, running a paper mill, giving up his publishing business, setting up a short-lived Edinburgh newspaper, handing over the circulating library (but later getting it back), spending some time effectively missing in London (when he wrote a book about the life of Jesus), and seeing the Edinburgh Magazine merge with the Scots Magazine. His best known work is ‘Chronicle of Scottish Poetry from the Thirteenth Century to the Union of the Crowns, to which is added a glossary’ (1802), with the 4th and final volume being effectively a Scots dictionary. This is locally valuable for including words attributed to use in Teviotdale in his time. There is an etchings of him by John Kay, a portrait by an unknown artist (previously attributed to Raeburn) and he appears in W. Borthwick Johnstone’s 1856 painting of Edinburgh literary characters. He died unmarried at his house on Leith Walk. James (b.1832) son of William. He was raised on a farm. In 1855 he married Agnes Hardie of Newcastleton, and the couple emigrated to Canada, settling in Bruce County. They had 5 sons and 3 daughters. He sold up his farm in 1890 and made a last visit back to Rulewater before joining several of his children to live out his days in Duluth, Minnesota. John (1714–83) eldest son of John and Agnes, daughter of Thomas Elliot, tenant in Oakwood Mill. His brother was William of Pinnacle. He was tenant farmer of Whitlaw in Bowden Parish, where he paid the window tax in 1753. In 1764 he was one of 3 men chosen to perambulate the lands of Wilton Common and value each plot. He married Margaret Grieve in 1743. Their children were: James (1747–1803) publisher of ‘The Edinburgh Magazine’; William of Gladswood (d.1817) merchant and ship-owner in Leith; John (b.1755), who was tenant in Borthaugh; Agnes (b.1751), who married Henry Scott, tenant in Deloraine; and Jean (d.1815), who married John Lang, Sheriff-Clerk of Selkirkshire and was the lady who sent off her son’s uniform to equip him in Edinburgh after the ‘False Alarm’ of 1804, as described in Sir Walter Scott’s note ‘Alarm of invasion’ in ‘The Antiquary’. John (1746–77) younger of Pinnacle. He was eldest son of William and Charlotte Clelland. He was a merchant in London. He married Anne Franks, and they had 1 son (Lt.-Col. William, who succeeded his grandfather) and 2 daughters (one of whom, Charlotte, married Archibald Scott of Howcleuch). The other may have been Ann, who married James Grieve, farmer in Branxholme Braes. John of Borthaugh (1755–1822) son of John and Margaret Grieve. His ancestors farmed in the Eildon and Bowden areas. He was recorded at Borthaugh on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, where he is listed as owner of 4 work... horses and 1 saddle horse. His servant Alexander Tait was listed at Borthaugh on the ballot for the Militia in 1801 (although his name was incorrectly given as William, rather than John). He was a local Conservative supporter of the early 1800s who is said to have put pins in his coat-tails before voting in Hawick, to avoid being ‘winged’. He married Jean Cunningham (from Ettrick) in Wilton Parish in 1804 and they had a large family, including: John (b.1805), who was running the farm in 1841; Jean (1807–65); who married poet William Wilson and emigrated to Pughkeepsie, New York; James (b.1808); Margaret (b.1810); William (b.1811), who was superintendent of the farm in 1851; Walter (b.1813); Agnes (b.1814); George (b.1816); Isabella (b.1817); and Helen (b.1819). It seems he must have been quite old when he had his family. John (1805–47) son of John and Jean Cunningham. He was listed as a Steward at the Common Riding Races of 1836. He was farmer at Borthaugh in 1841, living with his sisters Margaret and Agnes. He appears to have been dead by 1851, when his brother William was running the farm. John (b.1835) son of James and Elizabeth, he was born in Leith. He was assistant gamekeeper on the Cavers estate, living at Effledge. He was said to be a terror for the Hawick poachers. On one occasion a gang came to his house to get him, but he was ill and his wife called David Honeyman, the head keeper, who was badly beaten up instead. Another story told is how he caught 3 poachers who had swam out to the island in Buckstruther Loch to collect gulls eggs; he bundled up their clothes, but instead of giving themselves up to him they ran off naked in the direction of Hawick. He is listed as a ploughman at Effledge in 1861. He married Margaret Best in Ashkirk Parish in 1857. Their children included: John (b.1857); Alexander (1860–1942), who died in Victoria, British Columbia; Thomas (1863–1948), who also died in Victoria; and Agnes (b.1865). Margaret (b.1845) daughter of William and Margaret Laidlaw. She helped her father with his duties as postmaster at Duncheaster Bridge, and took over after his death in 1880. She also served as Clerk to the School Board and Clerk to the Heritors, and was one of the best known people in the Rule valley in her day. She was one of the original members of Wolfelee Free Kirk. She helped George Tancred with information for his Rulewater book. In 1901 she was living at Newington, Edinburgh. Peter (1835–85) son of William and Margaret Laidlaw, he was born in Hobkirk Parish. He worked as a mason in Hobkirk and then in Hawick. He was visiting Howahill at the time of the 1841 census. In 1858 he married Mary (1827–1912), daughter of James Nichol. Their children were: William (b.1860); Peter (b.1862); Thomas (b.1864); Elizabeth Burnet (b.1865); and Robert Nichol (b.1872), who married Mina Inglis. Robert (b.1828/9) born in Hawick. In 1851 he was listed as a shoemaker at about 16 Howegate, with his wife Janet being a boot-binder. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children baptised there included: William (b.1757), probably the plasterer in Hawick; Samuel (b.1760); Elizabeth (b.1763); Isabel (b.1764); George (b.1766); and Agnes (b.1768). Thomas (1863–1948) born at Effledge, son of John, who was an assistant gamekeeper there, and Margaret Best. He worked at Chatelherault, Kinmount, Croxton Park and Fawley Court, before becoming gamekeeper at Wells estate. He later moved to Victoria, British Columbia, where he died. He married Jessie, daughter of Alexander Anderson, forester on the Kinmount estate in Dumfriesshire. William of Pinnacle (1719–98) 2nd son of John and Agnes Elliot. He was recorded as owner of Pinnacle in 1788, valued at £500. He married Charlotte Cleland from Edinburgh, who died in 1791. They had 12 sons and 1 daughter. His eldest son John predeceased him, and he was succeeded by his grandson William. In fact he outlived all his sons, except for William, an officer in India (who had no children). His 10th son Hugh died while defending a fort at Seringapatam in 1792. William (d.1815) plasterer in Hawick, who lived at the Sandbed. He is said to have been a descendant of the Sibbalds of Pinnacle and Whiterig and the earlier portioners of Eildon and Bowden. He was probably son of Thomas, baptised in Cavers Parish in 1757. He witnessed a baptism for mason William Philip in 1792. He is listed as ‘Plaisterer’ on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick. He married Mary Weir, who died in 1835. Their children (baptised in Wilton Parish) included: Thomas (1784–1808); Ann (b.1786); Elizabeth (‘Betty’, b.1787), who probably married Walter Gillies and was a widow at 56 High Street in 1851 and 1861; Peter (b.1789); Mary (b.1792); Mary (again, 1793–1804); and William (b.1803), who became tenant on the Weens estate. The 1787 baptism was ‘before the Congregation’. He may have earlier married Katherine Grieve in Hawick in 1778. He was ‘Plaisterer Sandbed’ in 1815. Lt.-Col. William of Pinnacle and Whiterig (1771–1835), J.P., only son of John. He succeeded his grandfather William in 1798. He joined the army in about 1794, becoming Captain in the 35th Regiment of Foot, transferring to the 15th Foot as Lieutenant-Colonel in 1807. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. He was recorded as a freethinker in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. He became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1817 and was also a member of the ‘Border Bowmen’. In 1807 he married Susan, 6th daughter of Thomas Mein of Eildon Hall. They had 9 sons and 2 daughters, including: John (1809–43), Captain in the 34th Madras Infantry; Thomas, Royal Navy Commander, who lived at Eildon Hall, Ontario; William (b.1814); James (b.1816); Archibald (b.1817); Charles (b.1819) who served as a militia officer during the Canadian rebellion of 1837; Hugh (b.1823), served in Bengal and also moved to Canada; and Francis Clunie, who served with the Royal Navy and was later a doctor in Sutton West, Canada. After his death the family lands were sold off.

William (1803–80) son of Hawick plasterer William and Mary Weir, he was born in Wilton Parish and educated at Wilton School. He was a stocking-maker in Hawick and in about 1823 moved to one of the Scletty Hall cottages in Hobkirk, becoming a tenant farmer on the Weens estate. He then became a land measurer, in about 1840 was appointed Heritors’ Clerk and in 1846 was made Inspector of Poor and Collector for the Parish. He later became Registrar and Clerk of the School Board and ran the Hobkirk Library, being a great lover of books. He was also Precentor at Hobkirk Kirk at one time. He served as a factor for the Weens estate for a while. The 1841 census lists him as a stockingmaker at Scletty Hall, and at 3 Weens Cottages in 1851. In 1861 he was listed as ‘Reg-istrar of Births &c. Inspr. of Poor’ at Weens Cottages. He was Chairman at the Burns centenary celebration in Rulewater in 1859. Later in life he was postmaster at Bonchester Bridge, probably from the late 1860s, succeeding Miss Renwick. His daughter helped him as he got older, and after her death she became postmistress. In 1823 he married Margaret, 2nd daughter of William Laidlaw of Weensmoor. Their children included: Helen (b.1823), who married James William Laidlaw of Weensmoor. siddernwud

Side (siid) n., former tower just south of Newcastleton (or Copshaw). The earliest records are in a c.1376 rental roll, for ‘Locus Willelmi del Syde’ (8 shillings) and ‘Locus Ade de Syde’ (16 shillings). It is unclear to which family these men belonged. It is possibly also the ‘Siders’ recorded as an Elliott residence in 1498. It was home of ‘Jock o the Side’ in the 16th century, probably an Armstrong who was immortalised in the ballad of the same name. ‘Chrystie of the Syde’ is listed among Liddesdale chief’s at the end of the 16th century by Monipennie and may have been Jock’s brother. ‘Sym’ and ‘Lancie’ Armstrong of ‘the Syde’ are recorded in 1601 and John ‘called of the Syd’ in 1642. William Thomas was tenant there in 1694, with William Little, Thomas Ovens and George Hewitson also listed. Adam Henderson was tenant in 1706, when 2 of his servants were rebuked for fighting on the Sabbath. William Little was there in 1707 when summoned for having a ‘penny wedding’. In a survey of 1718 it is stated that Shipshielde was also known as Side. The site may be the farmstead whose remains are on the east side of Kirk Hill, at the head of Ettleton Sike, or perhaps further to the south, as marked on Stobie’s 1770 map. The farmstead has at least 3 buildings, a kiln-barn and several enclosures, although the remains of a tower have not been established. Another site, pointed out in the 19th century (and said to be marked by a solitary tree), which is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, south of Kirk Hill, has no traces of foundations (also spelled ‘Syde’ etc.; it appears on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Syid’ and on Gordon’s c.1650 map as ‘Syd’).

side-be-side (süd-bee-süd) adv. side-by-side – ‘...whan billies fell seide-be-seide till the braeface was traisselt’ [ECS].

sideeways see sideeways

Side Hill (siid-hill) n. former name for a hill on the west side of the Liddel valley, near the lands of Side. It is probably the same as Kirk Hill, since it is described in the New Statistical Account in 1839 as having a square fort on top.

Siders (si-durz) n. nickname for William Elliot about 1500, the designation referring to his residence, which may have been ‘Side’.

sides-away (siiz-a-wa) n., arch. former street game, similar to kick-the-can – ‘Sides-away, that was another popular thing’ [DaS].

sideyways (si-dee-waiz) adv. sideways – ‘sei if it’ll fit throwe sideyways’, ‘Fred and Flash Broon were awfih like yin another frae sideyways on’ [IWL] (also spelled ‘sideeways’, ‘seidieways’, etc.; sometimes ‘sideyways-on’).

These are denominated a pair o’ siles, Ayrs., Roxb.’ [JoJ], ‘Cyle, the foor or lower part of a couple or rafter; synon. Soire, Roxb.’ [GW] (also written ‘cyle’ and ‘syle’).

siler (si-lur) n., arch. a milk strainer.

the Silent Toast (thu-s-lin’töst) n. traditional toast to the memory of James Douglas of Drumlanrig at the Cornet’s Dinner, taken in solemn silence. The origin and antiquity of this tradition is uncertain, but it is recorded at least as early as 1887.

siler (si-lur) n., arch. a strainer, particularly for milk.

sillar see siller

siller (si-lur) adj., arch. silver, made of silver, having a silvery lustre – ‘…I only scorn’d the ways Some take to catch thy sunny, siller blaze’ [JoHa], ‘Like siller muntymbanks they spring …’ [JBS], ‘When simmer waves wi’ siller wing, On banks and braes the daisies spring …’ [DA], ‘The sillar saughs are in the bud, As down the glen we gang’ [JT], n. silver, money – ‘…with four 6 shilling peices, and 12 peace, with the rest of small siller …’ [BR1642], ‘A party is fined for giving some of the border false, clipped, and counterfeit siller to James Badie …’ [JW1704], ‘Gif she be ane wa’, we wull bigg apon hir ane palece o’ siller’ [HSR], ‘…kiveret wi’ siller, an’ her feathers wi’ yallo gowd’ [HSR], ‘…The symbols o’ sic strength and peace That siller kanna buy’ [WL], ‘We spend oor siller, and stake oor life, And syne at the gloamin’ faa’ [WL], ‘…And the siller horn o’ the Hunter’s Mune’ [DH], v., arch. to give money to – ‘A siller’t snirt makes quickest sail, To Hymen’s port’ [JoHa], ‘…Bids siller’d blockheads them despise’ [JoHa] (also spelled ‘sillar’).

Sillerbithaa (si-lur-bi’-haw, -hal) n. older version of Silverbuthall, referring to the area previously called Easter Heap.

Sillerbit Hall (si-lur-bi’-hal, -haw) n. this older name for Silverbuthall was adopted in 1861 for the lands purchased by Thomas Laidlaw (from Walter Wilson), and the mansion house he had built there in the period 1863–1866. The house was located roughly near the top of the present Churchill Road, with the approach from the main entrance at the top of Havelock Street. The architect was J.T. Rochead of Glasgow, and it was in the Scottish baronial style, with French elements. The house was used by Belgian refugees during WWI. It was demolished in 1946 when the council purchased the estate (being quite full of dry rot etc.). A window panel (with the Burgh crest) is preserved in the Museum. The gate lodge for the main house still exists, now numbered as 23 Havelock Street. A ‘wedge-shaped perforated hammer of rough surfaced sandstone’ found near here was donated to the Museum (see also Silverbuthall).

sillerless (si-lur-lis) adj., arch. silverless, impecunious – ‘Then up wi’ the purse an’ the siller,

The jinglin’ yellow for me; Than wed wi’ a sillerless bodie, I’d far rather want till I dec’ [JoHa].

siller Seterdii (si-lur-se’-ur-di) n., arch. the silvery seed tops of certain grasses.

siller shakers (si-lur-sha-kurz) n., pl., arch. quaking grass, Briza media.

silly man (si-lee-mawn) interj., arch. an expression of kindness and compassion, literally ‘poor fellow’ (noted by J. Jamieson).

Silurian shale (si-loo-ree-in-shal) n. shale formed in the third period of the Palæozoic Era, about 405–425 million years ago. It is the dominant geology around Hawick, specifically referred to as the Hawick Group.

Silverbuthall (si-lur-bi’-hal, -haw) n. an area at the north end of Hawick, roughly corresponding to the old estate of Easter Heip, and now containing a housing estate. The name occurs as early as 1694, although spelling varies. The lands were part of the estates of Langlands of that Ilk, until sold to James Scott, farmer at Boonraw, who was Laird there in the mid-18th century. Small enclosures were separately sold to James and Walter Knox, and later acquired by Archibald Dunlop and then John Scott Chisholme. Andrew Marshall was tenant there in 1711. John Blyth was living there in 1723, George Scott in at least 1728–32, James Scott in at least 1743–48 and Robert Smith in 1791. Thomas Hall was farmer there in 1797 and John Ferguson was a labourer there in 1799. The house there was lived in by banker William Oliver (‘Auld Cash’), who died in 1808, when it was inherited by his nieces. The lands were valued at £80 in 1765, 1788 and 1811 (including the enclosures), when owned by James Scott. The lands were bought in about 1822 by James Scott, retired teacher from Yarrow, who died in the early 1840s. In 1841 there were 8 households living there. Small pieces of the lands were sold to Chisholme of Stirches and Robert Turnbull of Galalaw. A large part of the lands were purchased by Thomas Laidlaw in 1861, who had a new mansion built there (near the present Churchill Road), designed by J.T. Rochead, and including a lodge house (which still exists), with construction by local building firm George Tait. The house can be seen in an aerial photograph of 1933. This estate was acquired by the Council in 1945 for new housing in the north of town, with the ‘prefabs’ being constructed first, and the present day housing from the mid-1960s. It comprises Silverbuthall Road, Branzholme Road and adjoining streets (the word refers to the placement of the butts, i.e. archery targets, of Wilton Parish being sited near there, and the practice of having a silver arrow as shooting prize; it is ‘Silverboothall’ in 1797 and ‘Silverboothall’ in 1808; it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map; see also Sillerbit Hall).

Silverbuthall Ludge (sil-vur-bi-hal-luj) n. former gate lodge for the mansion at Silverbuthall. It was probably designed by J.T. Roxhead (who designed the main house, which was built 1863–6), and survives at No. 23 Havelock Street, the corner with Wellfield Road. It is in a striking Scottish Baronial style, with a circular stair tower and conical-capped gatepiers. It is a grade B listed building.

Silverbuthall Road (sil-vur-bi-hal-rođ) n. main road through the Silverbuthall housing scheme, with houses built in 1965.

Silver Field (sil-vur-feeld) n. local name for a piece of ground to the north of Ettleton churchyard, said to be where coins were sometimes found. It was perhaps the manse of the old kirk.

the Silver Flush (thu-sil-vur-flush) n. former name for a spring at the lower end of the area where Newcastleton was built. It was said to be named after the ‘palfrey’ of a young lady (who was to marry the Laird of Whithaugh) stopped, with its silver bells being heard from some distance (as noted in ‘Beauties of the Border’).

Silver Street (sil-vur-stree) n. narrow street alongside the west bank of the Slitrig. It is one of the oldest streets in Hawick, although most of the present buildings are Victorian, and the name is not recorded before 1801. Up until the latter part of the 18th century it was part of the main road through Hawick, and houses there were referred to as on ‘the King’s High Street’. It was flooded in the great Slitrig flood of 1767, when several buildings were damaged. It became more of a back street with the erection of Drumlanrig Bridge in 1776, and more so with the demolition of the Auld Brig in 1851. The banker ‘Auld Cash’ (William Oliver) lived there, and presumably had his banking office there too. A sketch of ‘old court, Silver Street’ exists by T.H. Laidlaw in the late 19th century. J.P. Alison designed alterations at Nos. 2 and 3. (the origin is obscure, with some suggestion that it is a reference to ‘Auld Cash’, similarity between his name ‘Oliver’ and ‘Silver’ perhaps not being a coincidence either; however, if the name is older than that, it may relate to the silver arrow prize at the Hawick ‘butts’).

Sim (sim) n. George (20th C.) foreman at Innes, Henderson and later Braemar. His wife was Jessie and their children were: Shonnie; Mary Shortreed (‘Myra’), Provost of Hawick; and Vera. The family lived on Ramsay Road, Moat Crescent and lastly Burnfoot Road. He was reported in the national press for trying to break into the fever hospital to see his daughter Myra after reading her being named in alist of typhoid-related deaths.

Sime (sim) n. James Boyd (1865–1953) son of William of Galashiels and Ellen Boyd, and brother of William Boyd. He was a manufacturer who was on the Town Council in the early years of the 20th century and lived at Dunira. He became a partner in Pringle’s in 1906 and resigned in 1929. He was one of the earliest players of tennis in Hawick and also shared an early interest in cinematography with David Gaylor. He fought in WWI, but when his brother died in 1917 he became Chairman of Sime, Williamson & Co. He was also a Church Warden at St. Cuthbert’s. On the 1891 census he was living at Ivy Bank, Fenwick Park, with his mother and his only sister, Ellen. He married Williamina (‘Mina’) daughter of dyer John Turnbull. Saida (??–??) gave a gift that helped build the Youth Centre in 1970.

William Boyd (1867–1917) born in Galashiels, eldest son of William, who was partner in Sime, Sanderson & Co., Botany Mills, Galashiels. In 1889 he became partner in Sime, Williamson & Co., Weensland Mills. He lived at the Limes and then had ‘the Coille’ built for him. He married Margaret Elliot (sometimes incorrectly written ‘Syme’).

Sime’s (simz) n. manufacturers Sime, Williamson & Co.

Sime, Williamson & Co. (sim-wi-leem-sim-in-kô) n. tweed manufacturers, founded in 1889, with their main mill part of Weensland Mills. They were also sometimes known as simply Simmie (si-mee) n., arch. former pet form of the name Sim, also used as an informal name for the Devil – ‘...And ane and a’ o’ them they vow and declare, ‘Twas Simmy, in shape o a bodie’ [JoHa] (cf. Sim and Syme).

Simmie’s Pottie (si-meez-po’-ee) n. popular name for a block of freestone on the east side of Ruberslaw, which has a cavity on the top, its former use being uncertain. Presumably ‘Simmie’ refers to the Devil.

Simmons (si-minz) n. Anne Vernon of Tushielaw (1797–1837) daughter of Philip and Vernona Estwick. She was grand-daughter of Henry Peter Simmons and Ann Kirton and great-grand-daughter of Barbara Anderson of Tushielaw. She inherited the farms of Tushielaw and Hislop on the death of her great-uncle John Kirton Anderson in 1816. She married Benjamin Thomas Gaskin in 1818, and had their only child (a son of the same name) after her husband’s early death. Her son took the additional surname Anderson when he inherited.

Simon (si-min) n. (12th/13th C.) Rector of Lilliesleaf. He is recorded in a document of about 1206, re-establishing the church of Hassendean. There was a Precentor of Glasgow with the same name recorded at about the same time (also written ‘Simeon’).

Simon (si-min) n. (13th C.) brewer listed in the period 1214–49 as witness to the sale of lands in West Lilliesleaf by Adam, son of Adam of Durham to Melrose Abbey. His name was given as ‘Symone braciatore’. He could have been related to the Rector of Lilliesleaf.

simple (sim-pul) n., arch. a herb, plant material used as an ingredient in a medicine – ‘Her mother, — Scott, was great for simples (herbs), and belonged Deanhunghaugh’ [JHH]; simpliciter (sim-pli-si-ter) adv., arch. simply, unconditionally – ‘...exonerat quit claims and simpliciter discharges the saidis two bayleys ...’ [BR1701] (a legal term).

Simpson (sim-sin) n. Alexander (18th C.) gardener at Langlands House in 1788, when he was working for Thomas Elliot. He was still gardener there in 1791, when he was working for Lord Napier. In 1794 he was gardener at Teviotbank in Minto Parish, working for David Simpson. Andrew (16th C.) recorded as tenant of Overraw, along with William, on the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. Andrew (17th C.) merchant listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was also listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He could be the Andrew who married Isobel Scott, and whose daughter Janet was born in Hawick in 1671. Andrew (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He married Agnes Turnbull and their daughter Mary was baptised in 1743, with witnesses ex-Bailie Robert Howison and wright Walter Scott. Perhaps the same Andrew was married to Margaret Turnbull when their son John was baptised in 1746. Andrew (18th C.) tailor in Hawick. He was already deceased in 1794 when his son John died. Dr. Andrew (20th C.) born in Kirkcaldy, he graduated in Medicine from Edinburgh University in 1923 and about 1924 took over the practice of Dr. Dixon in Hawick. He was Medical Officer for Hawick R.F.C. He was a founder President of Hawick Rotary Club and served as Chairman of the local British Legion.
Simpson Simpson

He retired in 1967 after being a Hawick G.P. for over 40 years. Dr. Andrew Rutherford ‘Ford’ (1932–2002) born in Hawick, son of local doctor Andrew. He was in the R.A.M.C. as part of National Service, then trained as a doctor, coming to practise with his father in Bridge Street in 1964. He served as President of the Hawick Rotary Club, team doctor and President of Hawick R.F.C., Callants’ Club President, Chairman of Douglas Haig Court Committee. He was also known as a popular reciter of Border poetry.

Archibald (15th C.) listed among a large number of Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. His name appears as ‘archibaldi symson’. Archibald (16th C.) Reader of Glasgow Diocese who supplied Lilliesleaf parish in the period 1575–82, the last pre-Reformation preacher to preach there. His name is spelled ‘Symsonn’ and ‘Simsoun’. In 1575 Thomas Duncan was Minister (also for Bowden, Langnewton and Melrose), i.e. he had most of the living of the parishes. In 1582 he is recorded as one of 6 preachers from southern Scotland who were deprived for ‘abusing the sacraments’, then excommunicated in 1588 and threatened with death in 1590 if they did not stop their practices. This may suggest that the men had been Catholic priests before the Reformation. Ashley (1973– ) one of two women to publicly attempt to join Ride-outs before the Reformation.

David M. (1861) son of George, farmer at Bedrule. He studied engineering at Edinburgh University then worked in several positions, including as constructing engineer on the Edinburgh Suburban Railway. In 1887 he went to Buenos Aires, then in 1891 to Havana, where he was awarded the Spanish Order of Merit for working during the rebellion. From 1896–1906 he was chief engineer of the Buenos Aires Western Railway. Francis (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He witnessed a baptism for George Scott in 1671, along with John Scott, and another for John Blake in 1673, along with Walter Purdom. Francis ‘Frank’ (1888–1964) born at 10 Trinity Street, he was son of mill foreman Thomas B. He was church organist at St. George’s Kirk, having previously been at the Parish Church of Leslie in Fife. He was also a private music teacher in Hawick, and was conductor of Hawick Choral Society in the 1920 and 30s. He is buried in Wellowgate Cemetery.

that he and others had raided lands in England at King Water; others riding with him include Will Elliot of the Steele and Anthony Elliot of the Binks, suggesting he was from Liddesdale. He is probably the George who signed a bond written by Sir John Forster to try to end family feuds on the Border in 1595/6. George (18th C.) factor to the estates of Scott of Harden in the period 1757–83. George (18th C.) son of Alexander, minister of Monymusk, he was made Honorary Burgess in 1751. George (d.c.1889) born at Oxnam Row. His father was David, while his grand-father George and great-grandfather John farmed at Bloodylaws in Oxnam Parish. He was tenant farmer at Bedrule from 1846, with his trustees continuing from 1889 until it was sold by the Elliotts to the Ushers in 1898. The farm was drained significantly during his tenure. This branch of the family often used the ‘Simson’ spelling. He married Emily Roy and their son was David M. Geraldine (1921–2010) great-great-granddaughter of Pringle’s founder Robert Pringle, she was born in Edinburgh to James Muir and Francis Pringle. She was sent to Hawick while her father recovered from injuries sustained during WWI, and raised by her maternal grandparents at Woodnorton. She attended school in Aberdeen and was a ‘land girl’ there in WWII, travelling around on horseback. With her mother she ran Fetteresso Castle as a temperance hotel; her grandfather George Pringle came to live with them in his last few years. She married Maurice ‘Chrystal’ Simpson, who was minister of Alford’s Tullynessle Church, and they had a daughter Maureen. The family later moved to Muchalls Castle, which they restored. She helped found the Architectural Heritage Society of Scotland and was a keen photographer of old houses. She was a long-time friend of the the author Nigel Tranter. In about 2000 she returned to Hawick to present the family bible to the Museum, since she was essentially the last of the Pringle dynasty. Harold (?– ) Council employee who was Common Riding Secretary from about 1966 until Reorganisation. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Mathison and their children included: Bessie (b.1697). He may be the James ‘in ye toum of Hawick’ whose son John married Janet Ker in Hawick in 1718. James (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick, on the 1693/4 subscribers’ list for the new Kirk bell. He was listed ‘oust the water’ in Hawick on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He witnessed a baptism for John Scott, ‘brother to Goldilands’ in 1689. He was also witness to a baptism for shoemaker Robert Allan in 1709. He could also be the merchant who in 1709 was ‘called Latin [or something similar] Simson’ when his daughter Marion was baptised, with witnesses James Falsyde and Andrew Riddell. He may be the carrier who witnessed baptisms in 1711 for smith Thomas Huntly and for merchant Walter Scott, in 1716 for smith John Scott and for William Sanderson (along with smith John Scott), in 1719 for gardener James Dunn and in 1725 for weaver Robert Turnbull. He is probably the ‘tenant’ who witnessed a baptism in 1725 for shoemaker Patrick Hardie. Probably the same James was recorded in 1731 when he was paid for ‘lintseed oyle and whit lead got to the wither-kok in 1728’. His daughter Janet married weaver James Roger in 1724. He may be the merchant who married (assuming it was a second marriage, otherwise there are 2 generations here) Marion (or Mary) Stewart in 1706 and whose children included: Andrew (b.1707); Marion (b.1709); Caleb (b.1711); John (b.1713); Isabella (b.1716); Jean (b.1718); Christian (b.1721); and James (b.1725). The witnesses in 1707 were merchants Walter Scott and John Robson and in 1721 were Bailie James Deans and tailor Robert Wilson. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1715 he was living at Ormiston. His children included: John and William (b.1714); William (again, b.1715). Probably the same James was gardener in Cavers in 1727 and 1729 and also at Cavers in 1736 (perhaps marrying for a second time), with additional children were John (b.1727), Katherine (b.1729), William (b.1731), Helen (b.1734) and Gilbert (b.1736). James (17th/18th C.) married Margaret Boa in Minto in 1721. Her father was Patrick Boa. He could be the same man as the gardener in Cavers. Rev. James (1708–71) Minister of Wilton Parish 1738–71. He was son of John, minister of Morebattle. He was educated at Edinburgh University, licensed by Jedburgh Presbytery in 1737 and presented to Wilton by Francis, Duke of Buccleuch soon afterwards. He witnessed a baptism in Wilton in September 1737 and another in February 1738, suggesting he was already in the area. He was ordained at Wilton in 1738 and remained until his death. Wilton Common was divided during his time as minister, with the lands ofPriestrig being reserved for the minister. In 1748 he arranged for a piece of his land (near Burnfoot Mill) to be exchanged for a piece of the Duke of Buccleuch’s ‘Trinity lands’, lying on the Wilton side of the Teviot. He is recorded paying the window tax at ‘the mance’ in Wilton Parish in 1748. He witnessed a baptism in Wilton for John Miller in 1759. In about 1763 his re-buke of dissenters during a baptism of a child of James Scott (farmer at Boonraw), convinced Scott to leave the established church, which led to the forming of the Green Kirk in Hawick. The oldest existing Wilton communion token is from 1763, during his incumbency. In 1764 he made a plea, during the legal proceedings for the division of Wilton Common, that his rents be properly valued (so that he and future ministers might get a larger share of the common). In 1743 he married Anne Cranstoune, daughter of the minister of Ancrum. Their children were: John (b.1743), who died young; William (b.1744), who became minister of the Tron Kirk in Edinburgh; John (again, b.1745); David (b.1747) of Know and Teviotbank; James (b.1748), perhaps also of Teviotbank; Anne (b.1748), who died young; and Andrew (b.1751), who also died young. The witnesses in 1747 and 1748 were William Scott of Whitehaugh and John Chisholme of Stiches, and in 1751 were Kirk Elders Robert and Walter Scott. James (18th C.) Bailie who, along with John Nixon, in 1793 presented a bible for use by subsequent Magistrates in St. Mary’s Kirk. It was moved to the Old Parish in 1849 and was there for at least another half-century. He was also Bailie in the very early 1800s. Gen. Sir James (1792–1868) grandson of Rev. James Simpson, son of David Simpson of Teviotbank and Mary Elliott of Borthwickbrae. He was educated at Edinburgh University and commissioned in the Grenadier Guards in 1811. He served in several campaigns, being severely wounded at Quatre Bras, and promoted through the ranks as he served in Mauritius, Bengal and Sind. He went to the Crimea as a Major-General in 1851, becoming acting senior officer and was promoted to General in 1852, along with receiving the G.C.B. He handed over command soon after and retired near Bury St. Edmunds. He was awarded many honours including the Grand Cross of the Legion of Honour and being made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick while staying at the Tower Hotel in 1856 after visiting his cousin A.E. Lockhart at Borthwickbrae. He was said to be the tallest officer in the British Army. In 1839 he married Elizabeth, 2nd daughter of Sir Robert Dundas, but she died in the following year. John (17th C.) merchant in Hawick. In 1674 he was fined for not allowing Bailie Purdom to take his horse to ride to Jedburgh on the Town’s business. He could be the John who was married to Isobell Brown and whose children, baptised in Hawick, included John (b.1669) and Francis (b.1673). The witnesses in 1673 were John Scott and John Hardie. He may be the ‘Jon Symson, skinner’ recorded in 1673 on the list of men named in the trial for the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. John (17th C.) tenant in Stobicote. He was listed in 1684 among many men declared as fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. John (17th/18th C.) son of James, he was a tenant in Hawick. In 1718 he married Janet, daughter of deceased gardener Robert Ker. Their daughter Janet was baptised in 1722, with witnesses John Cunningham (perhaps son of the minister) and (schoolmaster) John Purdom. John (17th/18th C.) carrier in Hawick. It seems likely he was son of merchant James. In 1714 he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Patrick Hardie and in 1719 he witnessed a baptism for William Bulloch. In 1725 he witnessed a baptism for James Rodger and Janet Simpson (probably his sister). In 1728 he was witness for Robert Renwick in Sandbed. In 1728 he married Margaret, daughter of William Little. Their children included: Margaret (b.1729); Janet (b.1731); Janet (again, b.1737); Margaret (again, b.1737); James (b.1740); and William (b.1743). The witnesses in 1743 were weaver James Roger and shoemaker Patrick Hardie. John (18th C.) recorded in 1751 as ‘lying at the Point of Death in all probability’. This was in the Hawick Session records, where there was a discussion about what to do with ‘the Horse belonging to the Session’. His connection with the Session is unclear. John (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1762 he witnessed a baptism for merchant Adam Leyden. John (18th C.) recorded in 1771 when he was paid by the Town Council ‘for a standard for salt from Jedburgh’. It is unclear what his occupation was. John (d.1794) tailor in Hawick, son of Andrew. He could be the John (b.1746) son of Andrew and Margaret Turnbull. John (18th/19th C.) recorded at Dimpleknowe as owner of a saddle horse on the 1878–97 Horse Tax Rolls, as well as a farm horse in 1797. He also paid the dog tax there in the same year. John (18th/19th C.) organist and precentor at Kirkton Kirk from 1895. Mary (18th C.) midwife in Hawick. In 1759 she was a witness for the baptism of a child of dyker George Sandie. It is extremely unusual for a woman to act as witness, suggesting there must have been a special reason. Mary (19th/20th C.) ward maid at Hawick Cottage Hospital for over 30 years. When her health failed, the managers of the Hospital arranged for her to have free board and lodgings there. Robert ‘Smith’ (15th/16th C.) recorded in a list of men from Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. His name is listed as ‘roberti symson vocatis smyt’. He was also among men who pledged good behaviour to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell in 1500; he is listed as ‘Robert Simson, callit Smyth’. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of West Riddell. A dispute with his servant Walter Stoddart from c.1823 is preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. In 1825 a letter records how Walter Stoddart was hired as his servant at Hawick Fair and there are further letters about the age dispute. Thomas (15th/16th C.) witness to the 1512 charter where Roger Langlands of that Ilk sold his lands of Mervinslaw to William Inglis of Langshill. He was probably from in or around the Barony of Wilton. Thomas (1833/4–98) shoemaker in Newcastle. In 1861 he was living on South Hermitage Street. His wife was Elizabeth, who died in 1916, aged 82. Their children included Andrew (1860/1–1933), who married Euphemia (1862/3–1939). Probably the same Thomas was manager of Newcastle U.P. Kirk, recorded in 1879. They are buried at Ettleton. William (16th C.) tenant in Overraw, along with Andrew, recorded in the 1541 rental roll for Liddesdale. William (17th C.) resident of Minto Parish who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. William (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He probably farmed near Newton. William (18th C.) witnessed a baptism in Wilton Parish in 1770 for Anthony Haig. William (18th C.) resident of Whitriggs. In 1784 he was on the Poor Roll of Cavers Parish, with the inventory of his belongings being 2 beds, 2 chairs, 1 dresser, 1 pot, 1 pan, 2 chests, 1 stove, 6 pairs of blankets, 1 pair of sheets, 3 dishes and 1 girdle. William (18th/19th C.) recorded as farmer at Headshaw on the Horse Tax Rolls in the period 1785–1797. In 1797 he owned the grand sum of 13 farm horses and 1 carriage or saddle horse. He was additionally taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. He could be the tenant from about then who was recorded as an attender at Midlem Secession Kirk. He was probably father of William junior, who was recorded at Headshaw in the Lieutenancy Book for Roxburghshire in 1797; in 1799 he was ‘In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn still residing in Askirk parish’ and he was still ‘Junr.’ at Headshaw in 1801. William (18th C.) married Mary Lang in Minto Parish in 1790. William (18th/19th C.) recorded as ‘Junior’ at Headshaw in 1797 when he was listed among men on the ballot to serve in the Militia. He was still ‘Junr.’ at Headshaw on the 1801 Militia ballot. He was probably son of William, who was farmer at Headshaw. He was probably the William recorded at Headshaw on the subscription list for Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He could be the William, married to Euphan Laidlaw, whose children baptised in Askirk Parish included John (b.1813) and Jessie (b.1819). William (b.c.1805) from Galashiels, he was a tailor in Hawick. He was recorded on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1841 he was living at about 29 High Street. His wife (who died before 1851) was Mary and their children included Walter, Helen, William, Robert and David. William (b.1818/9) from Kelso, he worked for James Kennedy, bookbinder. In about 1870 he started his own bookbinders and printers at 9 Oliver Place. By 1886 he also had a shop at 3 Silver Street. His business was continued by his sons Ebenezer and Walter as E.W. & W. Simpson, which can be seen in a photograph of 1889. The firm was later incorporated into Deans and Simpsons. William (1862/3–1929) joiner in Newcastle. He married Margaret Oliver, who died on the Isle of Wight in 1898, aged 29. Rev. William (1863–1946) born at Elves, Elgin, son of Charles and Margaret Edwards. He was educated at Aberdeen and St. Andrews Universities. He was licensed by St. Andrews Presbytery in 1891, and was minister in Australia and New Zealand before returning to Scotland in 1904. He was minister at Downfield and then at Maud, before being translated to St. Mary’s in Hawick in 1927. He demitted his charge in 1933 and died as the result of an accident 13 years later. He married Sarah Dare (who died in 1940) and their son William Nightingale was a doctor in Stow (formerly also ‘Simson’, as well as ‘Simsonn’, ‘Sympson’, ‘Symson’, ‘Symsonne’, etc.). Simpson’s (sim-sinz) n. D. Simpson Ltd., a tobacconist’s at 60 High Street in the mid-20th century. It was an Edinburgh company, which took over from William Sharp just before WWII and continued into the 1960s. The shop had a striking red and black vitralite frontage and was also known for its blend of pipe tobacco called ‘Teviotdale’. Simpson’s Hill (sim-sinz-hil) n. small hill between Northhouse and Old Northhouse, just to the east of Inner Hill. It reaches a height of 308 m.

since (sins) adv. ago – ‘... twae or threi month since’ [CoH] (more common than in English, where ‘long since’ is the only frequent example).

Sinclair (sing-klaer) n. Adam (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Adam Singlar’ when he witnessed the 1508 sasine for Adam Hepburn inheriting his father’s Lordship of Liddesdale. John was also a witness, and so perhaps related. Archibald (18th C.) gardener at Minto in 1791–93, when he was working for Sir Gilbert Elliot. In 1794 he was listed as groomsman at Minto and in 1797 was a gardener there. Beatrix (16th C.) married William Alemoor and had children with him. She secondly married William Scott, brother of Walter Scott in Ashkirk. In about 1530 Walter Scott granted his brother William (along with her and her children with her first husband) half of Lilliesleaf Mill. Charles Lord Sinclair (1768–1863) eldest son of Andrew and Elizabeth Rutherford. He succeeded to the family titles in 1776, becoming 13th Lord. He joined the Royal Scots Regiment of Foot at age 16 and in 1790 raised an independent company. He switched to the 15th Regiment of Foot and became Lieutenant-Colonel, quitting the Army in 1802, but becoming Lieutenant-Colonel of the Berwickshire Militia. In 1807 he was elected as a representative peer of Scotland then was involved with the Haddington Militia. He served as a Justice of the Peace in Roxburghshire. In 1802 he married Mary Agnes, daughter of James Chisholme of Stonedge. On the death of his father-in-law in 1812 he inherited the Stonedge estate. His wife died 2 years later and Their eldest son James became the 14th lord Sinclair. Their other children were: Matthew, who died aged 21; Charles, who became a Royal Navy Commander and lived at Eyemouth; and Susan. He secondly married Isabella Mary, youngest daughter of Alexander Chatto of Mainhouse in Roxburghshire and had 3 more children: John, who died aged 22; Eleanor; and Jane Elizabeth. He lived to the age of 95. Charles William Lord Sinclair (b.1831) eldest son of James, he was the 15th Lord. He was Colonel in the 57th Regiment, serving in Crimea, being present at Balaklava and Inkerman, in the Bosphorus, the Indian Mutiny and the New Zealand War, receiving several medals. He retired from the Army in 1878 and lived in Berwickshire, where he was a J.P. and Deputy-Lieutenant, as well as being a representative peer. Among his titles was also Laird of Stonedge in Rulewater. He also served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. In 1870 he married Margaret Jane Younger, daughter of James Murray of Bryanston Square, London. Their sons were Archibald James Murray and Charles Henry Murray, both of whom served in the Army, and they also had 3 daughters: Ada Jane, Margaret Helen and Georgina Violet. Charles ‘Charlie’ (19th C.) resident of Lintalee. He could be the same man as Charles, Lord Sinclair. He was instrumental in forming the new pack of Jedforest Hounds in about 1882. He served as Huntsman 1885–92. George became a Director at Pringle’s in 1947. James Lord Sinclair (1803–80) eldest son of Charles and Mary Agnes Chisholme, from whom he inherited the Stonedge estate in Rulewater. He was a heritor of Hobkirk Parish, and in 1836 was referred to as being ‘of Greenriver’. He was the 14th Lord Sinclair. He was Captain of the Grenadier Guards and became a Scottish representative peer. He served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of ... hired as a compulsory attendance officer in Hawick about 1873, following the requirements of the Education Scotland Act of 1872. He was thus the town’s first truant officer! His main job was as a stockmaker (written ‘St. Clair’, ‘Sinclare’ and ‘Sinclar’ in early times).

Singdean (sing-deen) n. farm and former ham- let between the ‘Note o the Gate’ and Saughtree. It is probably the place transcribed as ‘Sougdon’ (with a value of 12 merks) on the c.1376 rental roll of Liddesdale. On the 1541 roll it is listed as ‘Sangdane’, with the same value, and William Elliot being the tenant. There were originally separate farms of Over and Nether Singdean, which were part of the lands in upper Liddesdale held by Jedburgh Abbey. By at least 1632 the lands were owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch. Adam Thomson was tenant there in 1694. The farm was included in those surveyed for the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1718; it covered 1770 acres, bounded by Hudshouse, Dawstonburn and farms belonging to other landowners, and with the farmhouse in the same location as the modern one. Walter Scott was shepherd there in the mid-19th cen- tury, known for making a particular plaster that was said to cure cancer. In the late 19th cen- tury John Elliot in Flatt carried on the lease after the death of his uncle John Scott-Elliot. Jeffrey reports that in the late 1850s a rudely carved stone cross, nearly 4 feet long, was found at a pass near here and in the possession of Mr. Stavert of Saughtree. In 1793 Sir Walter Scott passed here, and heard a coughing cow, which the judge in an earlier court case had ruled impossible. Thomas Armstrong was shepherd there in at least 1797–99 and John Oliver was shepherd in 1801. Walter Scott was shepherd from at least the 1830s until his death in 1853 and his sons Andrew and James after him. The farm was part of those tenanted by John Elliot until his death in 1897. William Telfe was shepherd in at least 1898–1901. The farm was let to S.C. Gibbons in 1910 and sold by the Buccleuch Estates to James Beattie in 1920. In 1940 a lorry carrying 75 sheep left the road and plunged down the hill near here. Robert Kyle bought the farm from Andrew Beattie in 1963 and in 1967 it was purchased by Andrew Stavert Turnbull. In 1973 the land was purchased by Mr. & Mrs. Harris, who 2 years later sold it to Margaret Thompson, who left it to her daughter Stephanie in 2007. Chista and Del Dobson purchased it in 2012 and developed the ‘Alphauhaus’ chalet for use as bed and breakfast accommodation (also written ‘Singden’ and ‘Singdon’; the origin is probably Old English ‘sengan demu’, for ‘valley cleared by burn’); it first occurs unambiguously as ‘Singdane’ in 1541, is ‘Singdoun’ in 1632, ‘Singden’ in 1694 and ‘Sington’ in 1799; it is marked ‘Singden in Liddisdeill’ on Pont’s map of Teviotdale, ‘Singlen’ on Gordon’s c.1650 map, ‘Singden’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map of Roxburghshire and ‘Singlemn’ on the Liddesdale map; it is ‘Singden in Liddisdeill’ on Pont’s c.1590 manuscript map, ‘Singden’ and ‘Singdenn’ on Gordon’s c.1650 maps, ‘Singden’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and ‘Singdon’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Singdean Hope (sing-deen-hop) n. former name for area near Singdean. It was reported in 1890 that a landslide here had blocked the Dawston Burn, choking the Liddell downstream and resulting in the deaths of a large number of salmon and other fish. The name presumably applies to an upper part of the Singdean Burn.

the Singdean Plaister (thin-sing-deenplästur) n. poultice developed by a family at Singdean, which was supposed to cure external cancers. The recipe was said to have been learned by shepherd Walter Scott (c.1790–1853) from a French doctor. It consisted of perhaps as few as 3 herbs, all (or most) of which grew commonly near Singdean and were dried in a ‘keb-hoose’ on the hillside. At one point the cure became so popular that the shepherd used to hide out when visitors came to the cottage. It was said that large sums of money were offered for the secret, but the family never divulged it. Walter Scott’s notebook is in the museum in Newcastleton, but with the critical pages torn out. The secret was passed on to Walter’s son Andrew and then to Andrew’s sons Adam and Walter. A man called John Wood from Jedburgh, who also applied curative plasters, was said to possess the same recipe, but confessed that he did not know one of the missing ingredients. By 1940 it was said that the recipe was held by Miss Mary Scott, Fernlea, Bowden and later by a descendant in Arbroath.

singed sheep’s head (singit-sheeps-heed) n., arch. formerly popular dish, made by taking a sheep’s head, burning the wool off it, and then serving it in various ways – ‘... there was a singed sheep’s-head on the table which had been got up for next day’s dinner’ [WNK].

singel (sing-ul) adj. single – ‘there wasri a singel Teri among them’, also used to refer to an item ordered in a fish and chip shop without chips – ‘A’ll hev a fish supper an a singel haggis’ (note the lack of hard g).

singel-end (sing-ul-end) n., arch. a one-roomed cottage – ‘The single end next door was occupied by a Mrs. Turnbull and she was the mother of the original Turnbull of Haddon & Turnbull’ [JeC] (see also yin-end).

singit (sing-ee’, -i’) adj., arch. stunted in growth, shrivelled – ‘Let them alane, ye singit-like shurf’ [HAST1868], ‘The Hawick meaning of singeet is lean, emanciated, ill-fed’ [ECS], ‘ye singit thing’ [GW].

singit-lookin (sing-ee’-loo-kin) adj., arch. having the appearance of being puny or shrivelled – ‘ye singit-lookin’ wasp, shurf’ [GW] (also ‘singit-like’).

Singleton (sing-gul-tin) n. A. telegraph and station agent in Newcastleton in the 1860s.

Singley (sinj-lee??) n. former farmstead at Singley Brae near Penchrise. It once formed part of Cavers estate, and is recorded being resigned by Thomas Baliol to William, Earl of Douglas in 1368. It is listed as part of Cavers estate in a charter of 1511. It was owned by the Eliotts of Stobs at the end of the 17th century. It was still in the Barony of Cavers when Sir William Douglas succeeded as Baron in 1687 and also when his brother Archibald succeeded in 1698. It formed part of the estate of Elliott of Stobs in 1678 and was among lands inherited by Sir William Elliott from his father in 1692 (the origin is probably ‘clearing made by burning’ from the Old English ‘sengan’, to scorch, plus ‘leah’, a wood; the name is recorded as ‘Senglee’ in the 14th century, is ‘Singlie’ and ‘Synglie’ in 1511, ‘Singleeys’ in 1678 and is transcribed as ‘Finglio’ in 1687).

Singley Brae (sîn-j-le-bra?) n. area between Penchrise and the Maidens, on the slopes of the Pike. The Catrail passes down the slope, and there are earthworks and the remains of a farmstead nearby, presumably Singley farm.

Singlie (sîn-j-le?) n. farm on the north side of the Ettrick valley, roughly opposite Hyndhope, with Singliehill End a little to the west. It was Crown lands from at least 1456, being assigned to Turnbulls in the 1480s, Homes in the 1490s and the Kers of Caverton and Cessford in 1499. John Reid was tenant there in 1494/5 when accused of rieving crimes. It remained Crown property until at least 1502. In 1502 it is recorded that 50 sheep were stolen from John Dalgleish there. In a rental roll of 1541 the tenancy was claimed by the Laird of Cessford, ‘occupiit be the kingis gudis’ paying £24 yearly. The lands belonged to the Laird of Buccleuch in 1543 when they were raided by a group of English and Scotsmen, taking 1400 sheep and 2 prisoners, with 2 people killed in the process. John Lauder was (b.1819) born in Jedburgh, son of William and Isabella Scott. He worked as a grocer in Hawick, and later as a labourer. Along with mill-worker John Forsyth, he was found guilty in 1865 of stealing coins from Hawick Museum, and sentenced to 5 years in prison. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Robert Waugh, blacksmith at Chesters. Their children included William, Robert and Elizabeth. His wife is recorded as a widow in 1874. Alexander (12th/13th C.) Sheriff of Selkirk, he was son of Andrew who was granted the lands and title by William the Lion. He witnessed several charters for Melrose Abbey in the early 13th century. There was confirmation of lands in Hownan in 1195–98, a gift of lands in Lessenden in 1199, confirmation of lands in Clifton 1201–09, gift of several churches by King William 1204–07, a gift of Sorrowlessfield 1208–12, a dispute between Melrose Abbey and Earl of Dunbar in 1208, a charter for the lands of Fairnington in about 1214, lands in Lilliesleaf 1214–40, lands in Elliston 1220–43 and a gift of Maxton in 1226. He was succeeded by another Andrew. Alexander (d.1292/3) Sheriff of Selkirk, he was son of Andrew, the 3rd Sheriff. He may be the Alexander who had a charter of the lands of Todrig from Aymer de Maxwell in about 1260. His accounts as Sheriff of Selkirk are recorded in 1265 and 1288. He may be the same Alexander who witnessed a charter for Alexander of Moravia in 1280. He was mentioned as Sheriff of Selkirk in 1293. His wife was Marie, who swore fealty to Edward I in 1296, as holder of the lands. In 1296 she complained that she had been a widow for 3 years, and pleased with the English King for her dower lands of 20 merks. Their children included: Andrew, who succeeded; and Isabella, who married Edward Keith and succeeded her brother. Andrew (12th/13th C.) appointed Sheriff of Selkirk by William the Lion. He is referred to as ‘Andrew de Synton’. On his appointment he gave up the farm associated with Roxburgh Castle; this explains why Synton estate afterwards lay within Selkirkshire, even although it was surrounded by Roxburghshire. 4 generations of his descendants were also Sheriffs (as described at an inquest in 1305). In about 1250 he witnessed a grant by Henry of Ashkirk to Coldingham Priory, where he is recorded as ‘Andrea de Sintun’. He was succeeded by his son Alexander. Andrew (13th C.) son of Alexander. He was the 3rd member of the family to be Sheriff of Selkirk. He was succeeded by his son Alexander. Andrew (d.c.1300) probably son of Alexander and brother of Isabella. He held the title of Sheriff of Selkirk as well as the Synton estates. In 1296 he was captured at Dunbar and sent to Fotheringay Castle as a prisoner, along with several other Scottish noblemen; his name was recorded as ‘Andreas de Synton’. In 1298 there was a command from Edward I for payment to his jailors. However, he died in prison, and his heir was his sister Isabella (although separately suggested to have been his wife Isabel, so this is either confusion or there were 2 women with the same name). The family’s history is described in an inquisition in 1305. Andrew (b.c.1816) son of William and Isabella Scott. He was born in Jedburgh, although his mother was from the Hawick area. He lived in Ancrum and Cavers Parishes. He worked as a road contractor, probably on the Wynd in Denholm. He married Margaret Dodds in Cavers in 1841. Their children included: Margaret (b.1843); William (1845); Walter (b.1847); Isabella; Andrew; Helen (b.1854); James (b.1856); and twins Richard Thomson and Jessy (b.1859). Bailie (18th/19th C.) said to have been the first druggist in Hawick. His premises were at 29 High Street, which became known as ‘Sinton’s Close’. Note, however, that the same property is labelled ‘Linton’ on Wood’s 1824 map and so there may be confusion over the surname. His first name is unknown, but it is possible that he is the same man as Andrew Linton. George (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Easter Alemoor in 1720. He married Bessie Scott in 1707. His children included: Walter (b.1709); Thomas (b.1711); Margaret (b.1713); and George (b.1720). George (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Bessie Scott. Their children included Thomas (b.1725). George (d.1806) labourer in Hawick. His daughter Alison died in 1790. Perhaps the same George married Margaret Beattie in Wilton in 1766 and in 1771 was living at ‘Morrishall’, i.e. Morrishall. Their children included: Thomas (b.1771), who was a farmer in Laggan, Invernesshire; probably William (b.c.1778–1841), who married Isabella Scott and died in Jedburgh; and Allison (c.1780–90), who died in Hawick. He may be the son of John baptised in Ashkirk in 1737. He died in ‘Lenton’, which is probably Lanton near Jedburgh. George (18th/19th C.) from Leith, he was a grocer in Wilton. In 1897 he purchased the grocer’s business from Mary (nee Govenlock) Brodie. Helen (18th C.) cook at Branxholme in 1789 when she was working for Adam Ogilvie. Probably the same ‘Nelly’ was cook at Midshiels in 1791. Isabella (b.c.1825) either sister or wife of the last ‘de Synton’ Sheriff of Selkirk, she was the heiress of Synton. It is possible that 2 separate women are conflated here; in 1296 Isabella, wife of Andrew of Sinton complained about her estates being seized when her husband was imprisoned at Dunbar, and pleaded for 20 merks worth of land. She was married to Edward de Kethe (or Keith), who was Sheriff of Aberdeen and son of Sir William de Keith. Together with her husband she claimed the sheriffdom of Selkirk from Edward I in 1305. Their children were Sir William, John of Inverugie, Catherine and Janet. James (17th C.) married Janet Govenlock in Ashkirk Parish in 1663. Probably the same James was recorded in 1661 when he witnessed a baptism for Andrew Govenlock. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Anderson and their daughter Isobel was baptised in 1689. James (17th/18th C.) recorded in a marriage in Wilton Parish in 1714, with the bride’s name not given. Probably the same James was married to Bessie Henderson and had children Isobel (b.1715) and John (b.1716) baptised in Wilton. James (b.1702) son of John, he was born in Yarrow Parish. His brother John lived in Ashkirk and Roberton Parishes. He was at Deloraineshiel and Dodhead when some of his children were baptised. In 1728 in Yarrow he married Katherine Cairns. Their children, baptised in Ettrick and Yarrow Parishes, included: John (b.1729); James (b.1731); William (b.1732); Margaret (b.1735); Marion (b.1737); an unnamed child (b.1739); and Catharine (b.1744). James (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included: Robert (b.1726); and Ann (b.1728). James (c.1730–1802) carrier in Abbotrule. He lived at Clesslee and at Strangeburnfoot. His wife may have been Margaret. Their children included: Peter; Thomas (b.1755); Margaret (b.1758); and James (b.1760). Probably he was the same James who also married Janet Oliver (from Unthank) in 1762, the marriage recorded in both Hobkirk and Southdean Parishes. Their children included: Mary (b.1763); Margaret (b.1765); Robert (b.1767), born at Strangeburnfoot; John (b.1769) also at Strangeburnfoot; James (b.1772), who married Barbara Oliver; and Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’, b.1773). He died at Clessleepeel. James (b.1731) son of James, he was a shepherd in Yarrow Parish. He was living at Wester Deloraine in 1774 and Inner Huntly in 1778. He married Mary Fletcher (b.1740, who was from Hawick) in Ashkirk in 1764. Their children included: James (b.1766); Catherine (b.1769); Jean (b.1772); Helen (b.1774); William (b.1778). James (b.c.1772) son of James and Janet Oliver. He married Barbara Oliver in Southdean in 1804. Their son was John (b.1806), born at ‘Clessleepeel’ in Southdean Parish. James (b.c.1775) son of Peter and Janet Donaldson, he was born at Southdeanmillhead. He married Margaret Wilkie. Their children included: Peter (b.1805), born in Wilton Parish; and Robert (b.1813), born at Clarilaw Moor. James (18th/19th C.) weave at Brownhills in in Southdean Parish according to the ballots for the Militia in 1799 and 1801. He is probably the same as one of the other Jameses. James (b.c.1780) probably related to the other Southdean Sintons. In 1816 he married Isabella Fleming, and she died in 1867. Their children were: Robert (d.1897); and William (d.1851). He died in the 1840s, probably at Bonjedward. James (b.c.1780) servant at Sinton Parkhead according to the 1801 Militia ballot for Ashkirk Parish. James (1805–61) labourer in Jedburgh, son of William. In 1851 he was a road labourer at Greenriver Garden in Hobkirk Parish and at Fulton in 1861. He married Margaret Hogg (1807–79) in 1836, the marriage recorded in both Hawick and Jedburgh Parishes. His wife was born in Wilton, daughter of Walter Hogg, and said to be related to the Ettrick Shepherd. Their children included: James (b.1836); William (b.1837); Walter (b.1841); John (b.1845); and George (b.1847). The family were living at Fulton when he died; shortly afterwards his widow and sons John and George emigrated to New Zealand, where his son William had already settled. James (b.c.1821) born in Southdean Parish, son of Peter and Jane Wight. He married Mary Ann Fleming. Their children included: Robert William (b.1875), who was born at Blakedean, Morebattle; and James (b.1883), born in Bedrule Parish. James (1841–1938) of Eastfield, Joppa, where his house was called ‘Hassendean’. He was born in Denholm, son of John (from Jedburgh) and Mary Ann Gillies. He served as groom to Daniel Mather of Hallrule. However, he later worked for Blackwood the publishers in Edinburgh. He contributed several articles to the Transactions, as well as editing some other works and bibliographies. He married Mary, daughter of Peter Bruce. Their son John (b.1867) was born in Hawick. He published Leyden’s ‘Tour in the Highlands and Western Islands’ (1903) and wrote ‘Leydeniana’ (1912). He also edited William Laidlaw’s recollections about Sir Walter Scott, published in Hawick in 1905. His major local contribution, however, was ‘Biography of works relating to, or published in Hawick’ (1908), which he stated to be ‘a work of great labour, and it has occupied my leisure time extending over a very considerable period’. This was a more focused extension to his ‘List of books relating to or published in the Counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, and Peebles, which appeared as an appendix to Sir George Douglas' 1899 'History of Roxburgh, Selkirk, and Peebles'. His Hawick biography contains information about newspapers, maps and music, as well as a thoroughly researched list of books. He died in Denholm. James (19th/20th C.) resident of Greenriver Cottage. In 1906 he contributed to the fund for the renovation of Kirkton Kirk. James (b.1883) son of James and Mary Ann Fleming. He was born in Bedrule Parish. He married Rhoda Carr and his son was also James. John (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1494/5 when Adam Turnbull in Hornshole had remission for several crimes, including stealing 24 sheep, 3 cows and a horse from his land in Synton, with the help of James Elliot. He was also witness to a 1508 sasine for the Erskine's land of Synton; like the other witnesses, he was probably local. He was probably the Laird in 1502 when the estate was attacked by David Scott It seems likely that he was descended from the original Sintons of Synton. (‘the Lady’) and some Armstong, with many sheep and cattle stolen. John (16th C.) wool merchant (‘lanitor’) in Selkirk. In 1579/80 he stated in Selkirk that William Scott ‘alias William with the teyth’ stole 5 sheep from near Simon Glendinning’s house. John (17th C.) recorded as a merchant in Selkirk in 1671. In 1674 he also had an account with the Burgh in Selkirk. Probably the same John was ex-Burgh Treasurer of Selkirk in 1663. John (17th C.) married Isobel Stoddart in Roberton Parish in 1679. John (17th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. He was said to be a Covenanter who was taken prisoner in Redesdale, perhaps in 1683. John (b.1700) son of John, he was baptised in Yarrow Parish. His brother James was a shepherd at Deloraineshiel. He was a resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Jean Cuthbertson (or ‘Culberson’) in 1727, the marriage being recorded in both Roberton and Ashkirk Parishes. They lived at Synton Mill and then at Huntly. Their children, baptised in Ashkirk, included: Isobel (b.1729), William (b.1733); John (b.1735); George (b.1737); Thomas (b.1739); an unnamed child (b.1741); and Margaret (b.1743). John (18th C.) farm worker in Ashkirk Parish. In 1737 he was recorded as a servant to Scott of Synton. He married Margarett Learmont in 1735. Their children were: Katherine (b.1735); Alexander (b.1736); Helen (b.1739), perhaps the Helen who died in Hawick in 1808, widow of John Turnbull; Walter (b.1746); Elizabeth (b.1749); and William (b.1750). He is probably the John who (along with Alexander Scott of Synton) witnessed a baptism for William Scott of Woll in 1744. John (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. He was a tailor at Wauchope in 1758. His children included Elizabeth (or ‘Bessy’, b.1752), James (b.1754) and Anne (b.1758). John (18th C.) recorded in 1785 as servant to John Paterson, tenant in Langhope, when he was involved in a legal case in Selkirk. Helen Hunter in Philiphaugh demanded that he acknowledge he was father of her son and demanding payment. John (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Wester Alemuir in 1771 and 1774 and at Bellendean in 1785. He is probably the John who married Betty Burnet in Robertson in 1769 and whose children included Isobel (b.1771), Robert (b.1774), Betty (b.1779), Christian (b.1782) and Mary (b.1785). John (b.c.1780) servant at Northhouse Haugh according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish. John (1780–1856) son of William and Isobel Black. He was born in Southdean Parish. He lived at Letham and in Hobkirk Parish. He may be the servant at Cleithaug in Southdean Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. He married Dorothy Easton (or ‘Eastham’), who died in 1844. Their children, included: William (b.1807), recorded in both Hobkirk and Southdean; Richard (b.1810), James (b.1815) and George (b.1817), baptised in Hobkirk; and Isabella (b.1823), baptised in Southdean. John (1806–54) son of James and Barbara Oliver. He was born at ‘Clesleepeel’ in Southdean Parish. In 1829 he married Alison, daughter of John Hall and Betty Briggs. Their children included: Robert (b.1831); John (b.1833); William (b.1836); and James Oliver (b.1848). They were all born in Jedburgh. He died in Argyll and was buried at Eckford. John (1810–65) son of William and Isabella Scott, who was from Hawick, he was born in Jedburgh and lived in Denholm. In 1841 he was an agricultural labourer in Denholm. In 1851 he was a game watcher at Woodside Cottage in Cavers Parish. He firstly married Mary Ann Gillies in Hawick in 1835 and their children, mostly baptised in Cavers, included: William (b.1836/7); Jane (or Jean, b.1839); James (b.1841), who contributed local history articles; Isabel (b.1843); John Gillies (b.1843); and George (b.1845). He secondly married Mary Dickson, and their children included: Robert (b.1854); Thomas (b.1856), skinner in Hawick; and Mary (b.1860), who married Adam Huggan, tobacconist in Hawick. John Gillies (1843–1904) born in Cavers Parish, son of John and Mary Ann Gillies. In 1864 he married Isabella Wight in Maxton. Their children were: John (b.1862); Helen (1869–1948); Mary (b.1871); James (1873–1936); George (b.1878) in Hawick; William Wight (1866–95); and Francis Douglas (1882–1971). Marie (13th C.) signatory of the Ragman Rolls in 1296. She was widow of Alexander, the former Sheriff of Selkirkshire. Her seal, attached to the Ragman Rolls, showed a figure of eight rays and the name ‘S’MARIE DE SINTVN’. Also in 1296 she pleaded to the English King for dower lands worth 20 merks, since she had been left a widow for 3 years. Mark (16th C.) recorded in Lessuden in 1581 in a transaction in the Selkirk Protocol Books. Peter (d.1811) cattle dealer at Bairnkine in Southdean Parish. He also lived at Southdean Mill. His father may have been James. There is confusion because he is named Patrick in some records. He married Janet Donaldson. Their children probably included: James (1772–1855), born at Southdeanmillhead; John (b.1774), born at Strangeburnfoot; Thomas (1776–1861); Janet (c.1782–1855); Peter (c.1783–1866); Margaret (c.1790–1869); Isabella (1792–1869), who married Richard Robson; and Cecilia (c.1795–1877), who married William Thomson. He was buried at Abbotrule. Peter (c.1783–1866) son of Peter and Janet Donaldson, he was born in Southdean Parish. He is probably the Peter who was servant at Southdean on the 1801 Militia ballot. He married Jane Wight in 1806. Their children included: Peter (b.1808), who was born at Rueltownhead; and James (b.c.1821), who was born in Southdean. Peter (b.1805) son of James and Margaret Willie. He was born in Wilton Parish. He married Marion Ker and their children included Alexander (b.1839), who was born in Midlothian. Peter (b.1808) born at Rueltownhead, son of Peter and Jane Wight. He married May Scott, and their son was John (b.1859), who was born in Corsenside, Northumberland. Robert (17th C.) resident in Ashkirk listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. Robert (b.1813) born at Clarilaw Muir, son of James and Margaret Willie. Their children included Robert (b.1852), who was born at Raelee in Selkirkshire. Robert (c.1817–97) born in Southdean Parish, son of James and Isabella Fleming. He married Helen Scott. Their children included: George (b.c.1845); Robert (b.1847); William (b.1856); and John (b.1866). Robert (b.1818) born in Hobkirk Parish, son of Thomas and Mary Elliot. He married Isabella Oliver, and their children included Thomas (b.1851), who was born at Lan- ton. Thomas (1776–1861) son of Peter and Janet Donaldson. He was born in Southdean Parish. He is probably the labourer at Burnkinford recorded in the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. He married Mary Elliot in Hobkirk in 1810. Their children, baptised in Hobkirk, included Peter (b.1812) and Robert (b.1818) and Thomas (b.1822). He is probably the Thomas, servant in Southdean who is listed in the Lieutenancy Book for Roxburghshire in 1797. Probably the same Thomas married Elizabeth Hastie in Southdean in 1828. Thomas (b.1856) son of John and Mary Dickson. He was a skinner in Hawick. His sister Mary married tobacconist Adam Huggan. He married Annie Scott and their children included: John (b.1878); and Walter (b.c.1886). Walter (16th/17th C.) brother of William ‘in Helialdrum Burne’. Along with his brother, Thomas Brown and others, he was directed by Walter Scott of Goldielands to apprehend William Oliver. William (16th C.) Burgess of Selkirk. He witnessed a transaction in Selkirk in 1579/80, purchased 2 rigs of land there in 1580 and witnessed transactions in 1581. Also in 1581 he leased a tenement in Selkirk from John Hall and he may be the William in Newton recorded as witness to another transaction in Selkirk in 1581. He witnessed a further transaction in Selkirk in 1582. His surname is recorded as ‘Suyntoun’ in a charter of 1588 relating to lands in Selkirk in the Melrose charl- tulary. Given the location it seems likely he is a descendant of the family from Synton. William (16th/17th C.) tenant in ‘Helialdrum Burne’ recorded in 1618. Along with his brother Walter, Thomas Brown ‘in Thorishop’ and others, he was directed by Walter Scott of Goldielands to apprehend William Oliver in Lanyburne (possibly Langburnshiels). Oliver complained to the Privy Council and those responsible for his unlawful capture were declared rebels. could be Langburnshiels. William (17th/18th C.) married Isobel Dryden in Roberton Parish in 1714. He may be the William in Borthwickburn whose daughter Bessie was baptised in 1714. Perhaps the same William witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Adam Kersel in 1720. William (b.1718) born in Duns, son of John and Janet Scott. He married Isabel Dunlop. His children included: James (b.1760), who was born in Ashkirk; and Thomas (b.c.1763). William (b.1733) son of John, he was born in Ashkirk Parish. He married Isabel Dunlop in Ashkirk in 1760. Their children included: James (b.1760), baptised in Ashkirk; and Maragret (b.1777) and Thomas (b.1781), baptised in Sinton’s Close

Selkirk. Possibly the same William was living at Henwoody when his children Janet (b.1764) and William (b.1766) were baptised in Roberton. William (b.c.1750) probably born in Jedburgh and related to the Southdean Sintons. He married Isobel Black. Their children included: James (b.c.1776); and John (1780–1856), born in Southdean. William (c.1778–1841) born in Jedburgh. He is presumably closely related to other Sintons, perhaps son of George and Margaret Beatie. He married Isabella Scott in Hawick in 1804. Their children were: James (1805–61), who married Margaret Hogg from Wilton; William (1808–73), who lived in Denholm; John (1810–65), who also lived in Denholm; Thomas (b.1813); Andrew (c.1816–68); and Adam (b.1819). There are many descendants living in New Zealand. He died in Jedburgh. William (1808–73) son of William and Isabella Scott, his parents being from Jedburgh and Hawick, respectively. He lived in Denholm, probably on Canongate, where he was a farmer and road contractor. In 1851 he was farming 50 acres and employing 2 men. His wife was Jessie Lamb and their children included: William (b.1847); Betsy (b.1850); Isabella (b.1854); and George (b.1857) (also written ‘Sintone’, ‘Sinton’ and variants; note the possible confusion with Linton in older written records).

Sinton’s Close (sint’-inz-kloś) n. former name for a close at 29 High Street, demolished in 1875 when the property was rebuilt. It was named after a wealthy Bailie who had been the first druggist in town. Afterwards Armstrong the printer began selling drugs there, then a Mr. Wilson started up the same kind of business there. A later businessman was sitting in William Elliot his house[c.1778–1841] , a dwelling house on a farm – ‘The two schools were to sit doon tomorrow’[BR1713], n. an opportunity to be seated (note the pronunciation, also written ‘sid-doon’; see also sutter-doone).

sisseth (si-thinz) prep., poet. seeing that, considering that – ‘Thay canna sit soft; they’re aye natterin an fechtin’[ECS] (generally used negatively).

sittand (si-tand) pp., arch. sitting – ‘James Thorbrand and James Scott, bailies, sittand in judgement . . . ’[BR1673], ‘. . . while the sd. balyewe was sittand in William Elliot his house . . . ’[1693], ‘. . . Robert Hardie, ane of the tuo present Bayleyes of the Bright of Havicke, sittand in Judgement in ane lawfull fenced Court . . . ’[BR1706].

sittin (si-in) adj., arch. in office, presently carrying out an administrative function, in session – ‘. . . when the said Bailie was sitting a Magistrate upon the toun’s affairs . . . ’[PR1718].

sittin up (si-in-up) n., arch. a wake, former tradition of keeping watch over a corpse. Locally this used to take place from 8 p.m. on the day after death, the corpse being covered by a white sheet, and candles placed at the head of the coffin.
Sivvieha (si-vee-haw) n. another common abbreviation for Silverbruthall, particularly referring to the housing estate.

the Six Arch Brig (thu-siks-arch-brig) n. popular name for the Slitrig Viaduct, out beyond Lynwood. It was built in 1860 as part of the line from Hawick to Carlisle, and demolished in 1982 (partly because of the danger of people throwing things from it). An early photograph shows the bridge being constructed. A set of steps was built here around 2009, allowing walkers to connect between the road and the former railway line. Whins have rapidly taken over this area. Because of the prominence of the viaduct when entering Hawick from the south, it became widely known as ‘the town with the six-arch bridge’.

skaddaw (ska-da) n., poet. a shadow – ‘I satt down an under his skaddaw wi’ grit delicht’ [HSR], ‘The hills wer kiveret wi’ the skaddaw o’t an’ the bouchs o’t wer like the guidlie cedars’ [HSR] (also written ‘scaddaw’).

Skagrigs (skag-rigs) n. name for a piece of land in Ashkirk. In 1581 it is recorded along with Salenside Croft when assigned to John Scott in Kirkhouses, having previously been occupied by Richard Brown and George Easton (it is ‘Skakriggis’ in 1581).

Skirmish Field (ski-meesh-feeld) n. meadow by the river Tweed near Melrose, which was the site of a battle of 1526. Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch with about 600 Scotts, Elliots and supporters from Liddesdale and Annandale tried to wrest the young King James V (supposedly at the King’s request) from the control of the Earl of Angus and his local allies the Kers and the Homes. Interestingly, Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig (Baron of Hawick) sided with Scott of Buccleuch, against his brother-in-law the Earl of Angus. Scott failed in this attempt and lost 84 men in the struggle (including John of Ashkirk), while Andrew Ker of Cessford was also killed at ‘Turn Again’ (possibly by an Elliott of Stobs, although this predates their ownership of the estate). This led to a feud between the Scotts and the Kers, which lasted for decades. After the battle James Elliot was hanged for treason. In 1527 a number of local lairds had remission for mustering their supporters at this battle, specifically Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme, John Cranston of that Ilk, James Hoppringle, Walter Scott in Syn-ton, Robert Scott of Allanhaugh, Robert Scott in Howpasley, William Scott of Hassindean, John Scott of Borthaugh, Philip Scott in Headshaw, William Turnbull of Minto, Robert Turnbull in Hallrulc, John Scott of the Walls, Simon Scott of Fenwick and Master Michael Scott. The battle is also known as the ‘Battle of Darnick’ and the ‘Battle of Melrose’. The Waverley Castle Ho-tel, the first concrete building in Scotland, was built on the site (also known as ‘Skirmish Hill’). Another nearby hill, known as ‘the Charge Law’ was where Buccleuch gathered his men for the attack, while ‘Turn Again’ is a small eminence where Scott’s men rallied and Andrew Ker was skuggit (sku-gee’, -git’) adj., pp., arch. sheltered, shielded – ‘...the treis that skuggeet Barnhill’s staney bed’ [ECS].

William (b.1775), baptised in Southdean (also written ‘Slazier’).

slack (slawk) n., poet. a pass, hollow, gap, saddle in a hill ridge – ‘Red Ringun sped and the spearman led Up Goranberry slack: Aye, many a wight unmatch’d in fight, Who never more came back’[JL], ‘And up the slackis of the morning cloud, Aneath the links of light’[JTe], a bog, morass, particularly used in liddesdale – ‘The fell and the woodland, each summit and slack, Smiled on us, and said – ‘We will welcome you back’’[DA] (preserved in ‘Deep Slack’, ‘Mitchell’s Slack’, ‘the Paddock Slack’ and other place names).

Slack see Slack’s Toor

Slack (slawk) n. former name for lands near Borthwickbrae and Howcleuch. In 1581 ‘Borthuikbray and Slack’ were together assessed for tax at £10, while ‘Slak et Westsyde de Howcleuch’ were described in 1621 as pertinents to the lands of Borthwickbrae.

Slack (slawk) n. James (b.c.1780) from Lockerbie, he was a tailor in Newcastleton, recorded on the ballots for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1799 and 1801. His name there was written ‘Slacke’ in 1799. He was also listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1841 he was at about 1 Langholm Street, and by 1851 he was a pauper lodging on South Liddel Street. His wife was Jenny. Rev. John Watson (d.2003) minister of Ashkirk, linked with Selkirk Lawson Memorial. He served from 1983 until 1986.

Slackhills (slawk-hilz) n. farm recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John Kedzie was farmer there, with 2 horses working on the farm. Given that this occurs in the list between Teindside and Commonside, it is possibly an error for Slaidhills.

Slacks (slawks) n. former farmstead in Southdean Parish, north-east of the hamlet of Southdean. There are still remains of the peel tower to be seen there, as well as signs of several other buildings, enclosures and agricultural development. Immediately to the south of the tower are the grass-covered footings of another peel (perhaps earlier). The farmstead and its enclosures was probably just to the south-east of the tower. Further to the south and west are extensive rig lines, partly erased by cultivation. A field to the north-west shows an old turf boundary and south of the peel is an old turf-walled enclosure, as well as several apparenty phases of boundary and enclosure banks. The lands were valued at 44 shillings in the Exchequer Rolls of 1538 and 1539. In 1541 Thomas and John were tenants of part valued at 22s, with Charles tenant of the remaining part valued at 11s. John Oliver was a tenant in 1544. William Oliver was recorded there in 1583. George, William and John Oliver are recorded as tenant farmers in ‘Slacks’ in 1669. Margaret Oliver was there in 1684. The 1694 Hearth Tax Return lists 3 hearths at ‘Slaks’. But the settlement seems to have disappeared in the 18th century (also written ‘Slacks’ with no apostrophe; it is ‘Slakis’ in 1538 and 1539, ‘Slakkis’ in 1541, ‘Slakis’ in 1544, ‘the Slakkis’ in 1571/2, ‘Slakes’ in 1583 and ‘Slaxes’ in 1694; it is marked ‘Slack’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map on the south side of the river, roughly opposite where Southdean Mill lies, but is absent from 18th century maps).

Slack’s Toor (slawks-toor, -tow-ur) n. ruined 16th century tower in Southdean Parish, located near the head of a stream off the Jed Water, to the north-east of the hamlet of Southdean. The peel tower had 3 floors, with a plan 12 m by 7.5 m (a little longer than other local towers). The gables are still standing. There are also signs of 3 buildings immediately to the north and 3 more to the south-east, as well as an earlier tower to the east, all part of an archaeological survey in 1991. The area around the tower shows signs of a complex settlement, with extensive agricultural development. Just south-east of the tower are the remains of a farmstead, with some enclosures, presumably the farm of Slacks.

*slae (slä) n., arch. sloe, blackthorn, wild plum, Prunus spinosa – ‘Twae een she had as black as slaes, An’ like twae diamonds glancin’, An’ gaed sae neat aye in her claes, Gart a’ the laids rin dancin’’[JR], ‘The slae maun be frosst ere pleasant to eat; The rose maun be pu’d frae the prickly brier’[JoHa], ‘Came ye, lads, by Branxholme Braes, Whaur Teviot, gentle river, Glides among the saughs and slaes’[GWe], ‘…Where first I pou’d the rasp and slae, On the Bank aboon the Boosie’[DA], ‘We’ve denned anearth the blooming slaes, And row’d among the ferns’[JT], ‘He’ll hear nae mair the gurgling rills Nor gather up the slae’[BM1898], ‘Where oft in boyhood’s happy days I gathered nits and Slaidhills see Slaidhills

Slaidhills (släd-hilz) n. farmstead above Teindside, sometimes called the singular ‘Slaidhill’ and also formerly known as ‘Slaithill’ and ‘Slatehills’. An earlier name for essentially the same area is ‘Almondslands’. The lands were part of the estate of Teindside and Harwood owned by the Abernethy family from the late 14th to late 15th centuries. The lands were held by the Countess of Bothwell in 1580 when there was a raid by Elliotics and Armstrongs, who stole 12 cows and oxen and ‘left ane of hir servandis lyand for deid’. Francis, Earl of Bothwell had the lands confirmed to him in 1585. It is ‘Almondslands alias Slaidhills’ when listed among the Baron of Hawick’s properties in 1615. It is probably the ‘Steadhills’ listed (along with Teindside, Harwood and Carlinpool) among the possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1634, 1653, 1661 and 1663. In 1681 Thomas, son of Thomas Crawford, merchant in Edinburgh, was served heir to his grandfather Thomas in the same lands. William Elliot was tenant in ‘outer slaidhills’ in 1694. William Waugh was tenant there in 1699, with William Oliver, William Waugh and John Waugh recorded in 1701. William Scott was recorded there in 1702 and Thomas Pott in 1704. Alexander Hutton was tenant in 1707, with Thomas Rae as shepherd. James Miller was a weaver there in 1717. In the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch Outer Slaidhill and Inner Slaidhill are listed separately: Outer Slaidhill consisted of 366 acres, bounded by Branxholme Moor, Hott, Inner Slaidhill, Commonside, Woodburn and Chisholme; and Inner Slaidhill lay to the south and was not a Buccleuch property. Robert Elliot was tenant in at least 1740–43. Patrick Hume was alsotenant in 1743, with Adam Hogg also living there. Thomas Miller was there in 1801. Christopher Grieve was there in about 1822. Robert Grieve was shepherd there in 1851, and weaver James Lamb also lived there. About 350 yards north-east of the farmhouse are the remains of a hill-fort on a rocky knoll. The inner area is about 205 ft by 105 ft oriented east-west, with an entrance on the north side. There are 2 other forts on Teindsie Hill just to the south (the origin of the name is probably Old English ‘slaed hyll’, meaning ‘the hill with the hollow in it’, referring to the shape of the hill to the east of the farm, with the 2 apparent summits probably also explaining the sometimes plural form; the name occurs as ‘Slaidhills’ in 1494, ‘Slaidhillis’ in 1581, ‘Slaidhill’ in 1585, ‘Slaidhillis’ in 1634, ‘Sledhills’, ‘Slaidhilis’ in 1664, ‘Sledhill’s in 1693, ‘Slatehills’ in 1701, ‘Sclethills’ in 1702, ‘Slatehills’ in 1740, ‘Sclatehills’ in 1743 and 1801 and ‘Slatehills’ in the 1851 census; it is ‘Slaidhills’ on Blaue’s 1654 map and ‘Slatchhills’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Slaidhills Moss (släd-hilz-mos) n. marshy region to the north of Slaidhills farmstead, in the headwaters of Vales Burn. It is printed as ‘Slatchhill Moss’ in William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’, when he is describing the course of the Catrail.

Slitrick see Slittrick

Slitridge (sli-rij) n. former name and spelling for Slitrig, used in the 17th and 18th centuries. ‘The water of Slitridge’ is recorded in a 1687 sasine and it is ‘Slitridge Water’ on Wood’s 1824 map.

the Slitrig (thu-sli-reeg, -rig, -reek, -rik) n. Slitrig Water, river that rises near Windburgh and joins the Teviot at Hawick, flowing for approximately 11 miles (17.5 km). A description of 1649 states that it ‘begins at Stenhouse Hope, and runs into Tiot, within the Town of Hawick’. It formerly divided the town into its east and west halves, and for centuries there was only one bridge across it, the ‘Auld Brig’. It could also be forded in Hawick near where the Slitrig Brig was later built. It is prone to rise rapidly, and has caused some of the most infamous town floods. The river rises in several headwaters, Floss Burn and Leap Burn meeting, becoming Lang Burn and then being joined by Langside Burn where the Slitrig proper starts. After that it is joined by: Hope Sike; Pennichrse Burn; Gibby’s Side; Cogsmill Burn; Barnes Burn; Pagton Burn; Horsley Burn; Acreknowe Burn; Flex Burn and the Snaile Burn – ‘... Where Slitrig dances doon the glen’ [JT], ‘...And the Slitrig aye filling wi’ rain’ [FH], ‘Where the Slitrig and Teviot meet, With nature’s charms replete, There are beauties rare Beyond compare Where the Slitrig and Teviot meet’ [TK] (the origin is uncertain, ‘rith’ being Old English for ‘stream’, with the first element perhaps related to ‘slite’, a narrow opening, or ‘slitin’ to split, or even possibly ‘slit’; it is first mentioned as ‘Slitrith’ in Reginald of Durham’s book on St. Cuthbert, where it is suggested that the name comes from the river abounding with fish, and although the connection with any words relating to an abundance of fish seems obscure, it is possible it is ‘slitet’, meaning animals for slaughter; there are a variety of earlier spellings, e.g. ‘Slytryk’ in 1433, ‘slitrirk’ in 1493 and 1502, ‘Slytryk’ in 1532 and ‘Slitrik’ in 1547/8 and 1649; it is still ‘Slidderick’ in 1795, ‘Slitrige’ in 1821 and ‘Slitrige’ in 1839; it is ‘Slitrick’ on Pont’s c.1590 manuscript map, ‘Slitrick R.’ on Blaen’s 1654 map and ‘Slittrik fl.’ on Gordon’s c.1650 map).

Slitrig Bank (sli-reg-bawn-gk) n. house occupied by shoemaker Peter Wilson in the late 18th century, now being 1 Slitrig Bank. It was probably built a little before 1800 and was also known as Slitrig Cottage. It was the headquarters for Slitrig Bank

Slitrig Bank (sli'-reeg-bawng) n. short street between St. Mary’s and the Slitrig. It was named after the house of the same name, which is now 1 Slitrig Bank. The rest of the street was developed in the period 1850–55. A house there (probably the same No. 1) was the headquarters for the French prisoners of war in the period 1812–14, later the residence of George Scott the builder.

Slitrig Brig (sli'-reeg-brig) n. Slitrig Bridge, the name originally given to the main bridge over the Slitrig, built in 1776–77, and later named Drumlanrig Bridge. The masons may have been John Haldane of Gala and James Wood of Hawick, both of whom were made Honorary Burgesses in 1776. The name is recorded as an address in Pigot’s 1837 directory, presumably referring to houses around Silver Street or the Tower Knowe. The same name is also sometimes used for the bridge over the Slitrig at the bottom of the Kirk Wynd, more properly called the Slitrig Crescent Bridge. It may be that the ‘Auld Brig’ was also once known by this name – ‘On Slitrig Brig on that summer morn …’[DN].

Slitrig Cauld (sli'-reeg-kawld) n. name sometimes used for the weir near Lynnwood House, which supplied the water for the main Slitrig mill lade, ‘the Back Dam’ (not to be confused with Lynnwood Cauld, which was further upriver).

Slitrig Chaipel see St. Cuthbert’s Chaipel

Slitrig Cottage (sli'-reeg-ko'-ee) n. name sometimes used for No. 1 The Village. The house probably dates from the late 18th century and is 2 storeys plus attic. It is shown on Wood’s 1824 plan of Hawick and in a drawing by M. Thirat in 1813, showing no windows to the right of the principal elevation. It is a grade C listed building. Note that the name was also used in the 1871 census for the house later called ‘Slitrig Villa’, where Backdamgate meets Slitrig Crescent.

Slitrig Cottages (sli'-reeg-ko'-ee-jeez) n. former name for the block of houses on the east side of Liddesdale Road south of Stonefield, also called Stonefield Cottages. These houses had the mill lade running in front of them, with a footbridge to reach the houses.

Slitrig Crescent (sli'-reeg-kre-sin') n. crescent shaped, one-sided street along the south bank of the Slitrig, still occasionally known by its former name ‘the Crescent’. It was developed around 1799–1805 and was one of the first ‘suburbs’ of the town, the land having previously been known as Duntersdales. The original buildings were a row of 2-storey terraces, only a few of which retain their original details. In 1831 the houses here were the first in Hawick to have gas installed. The street was once very dirty on the river side, until retaining walls were built at the end of the 19th century, and the land tidied up as a small park. The street also contains St. Cuthbert’s Church, and for a long time had the Whisky House Mill, later premises of James Melrose & Sons engineers. Nos. 3, 4, 5, 17, 18 and 19 are grade C listed – ‘…The other dam, up Slitrig Crescent Where ee fed the ducks wi breid’ [AY].

Slitrig Crescent Brig (sli'-reeg-kre-sin'-brig) n. stone bridge over the Slitrig, connecting the Kirk Wynd with Slitrig Crescent. There was no bridge there in the early 19th century, but the ‘wire bridge’ was nearby, and there was also an adjacent ford. An iron bridge was constructed in the early 19th century, but was destroyed in the 1846 flood, with part of it being lodged against the Auld Brig by the floodwaters. A replacement footbridge is recorded in the 1846 Town Treasurer’s accounts as ‘Wooden Bridge at Kirk Wynd Foot’ and is shown on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map. The present structure was built in 1864, consisting of a sandstone bridge of a single arch, containing the Ordnance Survey 360 foot benchmark and is said to have been built in only 10 days. It seems to have no generally agreed name, being referred to in many other ways, including ‘the Kirkwynd Brig’. It is a grade C listed building.

Slitrig Dam (sli'-reeg-dawn) n. the main mill lade fed by the Slitrig, and the oldest one in Hawick, also known as the Back Dam. It probably pre-dated the 1537 Charter, although presumably was lengthened over the years. Originally it was relatively short, but in the mid-19th century it was extended to join what was called Lynnwood Dam or Nixon’s Dam. It was fed by a cauld near Lynnwood House and ran along the east side of Liddesdale Road and Slitrig Crescent, providing water power for Stonefield Mills, Whiskyhouse Mill, and Hawick Corn Mill, as well as water for Slitrig Dyeworks. During dry spells it was possible to feed the dam by allowing water the Slitrig Flid (utthu-sli’-reeg-flid) n. huge flood of 1846, which particularly affected the Slitrig. It should not be confused with the Great Flid of 1767. The high flood (sometimes also called the Great Flood) of 29th July 1846 commenced in the early evening with a torrential downpour and thunder and lightning for about 3 hours. The police warned some people to leave their houses at about 11 p.m. and the town bell was rung at midnight. The Teviot rose dramatically, but the biggest effect was on the Slitrig, which was 14–15 feet above normal levels, with trees, sheep, cattle, crops and carts carried downriver. Lynnwood Cauld, Slitrig Crescent iron footbridge and everal wooden bridges were swept away, and its level at Towerdykeside is marked by a brass plaque 1.5m (5 feet) above pavement level. The Auld Brig was again blocked by debris and effectively dammed the Slitrig. Silver Street became part of the river, with the ground floors about 3-feet deep in water and river pushing down Buccleuch Road as far as the Free Kirk; water ran over the Tower Knowe and down the Mill Port (where it gouged out a hole more than 10-feet deep), it flowed down the High Street as far as the Round Close, forming streams to the Teviot down several closes. The worst damage was to the businesses on the Sandbed, where goods were carried away. The Teviot also overflowed, causing great damage over a wider area, covering the Avenue and Damside (Victoria Road) and being a continuous sheet of water all the way to Teviot Crescent, and sweeping away iron railings at the Haugh. The cellars in Teviot Crescent were completely filled with water and several of the mills alongside the Teviot suffered damage. Further downriver the haughs were all flooded and part of the road at Burnfoot was washed away. The Town was in panic as people escaped flooded buildings and ran around trying to save property and belongings. A dramatic rescue of a small child from a house in Damside is one noted example, a baker named Connachie was rescued from his home under the Post Office, a window had to be broken at the Tower Hotel in order to free the horses in the stables and 2 horses belonging to William Watson were rescued from the Under Haugh. Fortunately there were no fatalities in Hawick. The flood subsided quickly, leaving huge amounts of debris, with the ‘Market Place’ being a sandbank, covered with large trees and 2 wooden bridges. There was similar damage in Teviotdale, Rulewater (where the river was said to be 10–12 feet higher than normal, a house was carried off at Bedrule and Hobsburn bridge was lost), the Slitrig valley (with whole fields and plantations being swept clean near Stobs), the Allan (where dykes and crops were carried away), Liddesdale (where some cottages were washed away) and elsewhere. It was said that the body of a man was seen floating above Ancrum Bridge and a man was drowned returning from Langholm Common Riding, which coincided with the day of flooding of the Esk.

Slitrig Hall (sli’-reeg-hal, -haw) n. meeting hall on Old Manse Lane, formerly the fire station, built in 1857. The address is 2, 4 and 6 Old Manse Lane. It was used as the fire station into the early 20th century, but then converted to be a meeting hall, which was used by the Brethren Fellowship. The building is 2-stories, with a roundel window above the (now blocked) arched engine entrance.

Slitrigheid (sli’-reeg-heed) n. name sometimes applied to the area at the head of the Slitrig Water. In the last few years of the 18th century William Elliot of Harwood leased a limestone quarry there to William Turnbull of Burnfoot and John Ridley of Parkend.

Slitrig Hoose (sli’-reeg-hooz) n. name sometimes used for 8–9 Slitrig Crescent, home of John Laing of Hawick, Ltd.

Slitrig Lodge (sli’-reeg-luj) n. Hawick branch of the Royal Antediluvian Order of Buffaloes, Slitrig Lodge 9858. Sometimes known as ‘the Buffs’, this was one of two local branches of a fraternal and benevolent organisation founded in the 19th century. It met until 2015 in the Trinity Bar.

Slitrig Place (sli'-reeg-plis) n. former street behind Slitrig Bank House, at an angle between Slitrig Bank and the Kirk Wynd, named in 1878 after the River Slitrig. It was demolished around 1973/4 when a road through to Slitrig Bank was constructed in its place.

Smail (smal) n. Adam (16th/17th C.) granted a half husbandland of land in Lilliesleaf in 1595/6. He was described as ‘son of Thomas there’. Adam (18th/19th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He is probably the Adam, son of shoemaker John and Helen Aitkin, born in 1758. His name is recorded as ‘Smeal’ in about 1810 when his wife Jean Phillips died. Their son John was baptised in 1786, with witnesses Walter Aitkin and William Philip. Adam ‘Yeddie’ (b.c.1780) joiner on Bourtree Place, his premises located behind No. 8. This is marked on Wood’s 1824 map. Probably the same man was listed as a wright on the High Street on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory and still listed on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was recorded being at ‘Eastend’ on the 1841 census, with Adam Scott as his apprentice. At one point he owned the entire property from 6 to 16 Bourtree Place and all the way back to the railway line. He married Elizabeth (or ‘Eliza’) Redford. Their children included: Margaret, who married weaver Charles Scott; and Alison (b.1806), baptised in the East Bank Kirk, who married roper William Munro. He could be the Adam born in Jedburgh in 1779. It seems likely he is the wright recorded at Kirkton on the ballot for the Militia in 1799 and the joiner at ‘Deanbraebarr’ in Cavers Parish on the 1801 Militia ballot (‘Denholm braeheads’ is crossed out and hence presumably the same place). Alexander (16th/17th C.) son of William. He was granted a half husbandland and a cottage-land in Lilliesleaf in 1595/6. His father was also granted land at the same time. They were presumably residents of the village of Lilliesleaf at that time. Perhaps the same Alexander ‘in Lylisle’ witnessed a transaction for William Middlemas of Lilliesleaf in 1580. Alexander (17th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. He married Margaret White and in 1724 their daughter Jean married Walter Aitchison. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, son of James. He was living at Alton in 1737 and Clarilaw in 1741. In 1738 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Riddell, who was living at Alton. He married Margaret Hume, the marriage recorded in both Minto and Roberton Parishes. Their children included: James (b.1737); Agnes (b.1738); Walter (b.1739); and Andrew (b.1741). One of the witnesses in 1737 was George (presumably a near relative), while in 1741 the witnesses were Richard Turnbull and John Scott. Andrew (18th C.) married Katherine ‘Frier’ in Minto Parish in 1740. William (b.1742), John (b.1744), Isobel (b.1746) and George (b.1749) were probably also his children. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His children included John (b.1752), Betty (b.1753), Andrew (b.1754), George (b.1756), Robert (b.1757), Margaret (b.1759) and Agnes (b.1762). Andrew (18th C.) resident of Askirk Parish. He married Betty Scoon in 1765. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Anne Oliver and their children included: Margaret (b.1767); Thomas (b.1770); and an unnamed child (b.1773). Andrew (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Janet Purves and their children included Andrew (b.1778), Margaret (b.1781) and John (b.1784). Anne (b.1786), Mary (b.1789), Thomas (b.1790) and Thomas (again, b.1792), with no mother’s name given, were probably also his children. He was recorded being in Ancrum Parish in 1789. Andrew (18th/19th C.) servant at Ormiston in Cavers Parish. In 1797 he was listed among men on the ballot to serve in the Militia and in 1799 was among those ‘In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn still residing in Cavers Parish’ and he was still listed at Ormiston on the 1801 Militia ballot. Andrew (18th/19th C.) recorded as journeyman wright at Clerklands in 1797 he was listed among men on the ballot to serve in the Militia. In 1799 he was ‘In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn still residing in Askirk parish’. George (17th C.) resident of Minto Kames who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. George (17th/18th C.) resident of Askirk Parish. He was a cottar in Headshaw Mill. He married Margaret Scott and their daughter Elizabeth (b.1717) was baptised in Headshaw Mill (‘being weak’). George (18th C.) married Helen Hill in Minto Parish in 1744. George (b.c.1780) toll-keeper at Spittal Toll. His wife was Janet. George (b.1810/1) from Ancrum, he was a blacksmith in Denholm. He is recorded on the 1841 census and by 1861 was at around Leyden Road. His wife was Agnes, and their children included John, Margaret and George. He secondly married Janet, and had step-daughter Janet Brown, as well as children Robert W., James D. and Mary. James (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His children included Bessie (b.1741), William (b.1742) and Elizabeth (b.1748). James (18th C.) resident... of Lilliesleaf Parish, recorded at Linthill in 1789 when his son Robert was baptised. James (19th C.) purchaser of the farm of Catshawhill in Lilliesleaf Parish. This was sometime before 1837. He was a nurseryman and seedman. He was probably succeeded by William. James (19th C.) farm steward at Timpendean in the mid-to-late 1800s, working for Mr. Elliot Boag. He married Margaret, daughter of William Oliver, hind at Langraw. James (1828–1905) from Jedburgh, brother of printer John. He became a banker with the National Bank in Kelso, opening the branch in Earlstorn. He then moved to the Commercial Bank, working in Earlstorn, Galashiels, then Kirkcaldy, and eventually becoming Secretary of the head office of the Commercial Bank in Edinburgh. He was strongly connected with Rulewater, meeting his wife Margaret Boa there, and being a keen angler of the Rule and Jed Waters. He wrote verse under the pen-name ‘Matthew Gotterson’ and under this name published the poem ‘The Callant’ in the Scotsman in 1889 (reprinted in ‘Hawick Songs and Recitations’ in 1892); this was used as the anthem for the Callants’ Club, the third verse being put to music by Addie Ingles in the late 1940s, and the words were erroneously attributed to J.E.D. Murray in the 2001 Hawick Songs anthology. A version of the ballad ‘Little Jock Elliot’ was written under this pen-name. There was additionally a collection of poems called ‘Roole Water: a Remembrance’. He also wrote broadly on angling topics and was a President of the Berwickshire Naturalists’ Club. He wrote an extensive article on the Catrail in 1880, having tried to trace it course for several days accompanied by Mr. Craig-Brown and Mr. Elliot of Hollybush, as well as local farmers and shepherds. He was also a keen Volunteer, being an officer of the Border Battalion and Secretary of the Border Rifle Association. Additionally he was involved as treasurer or secretary of the agricultural societies in Selkirkshire as well as the Landward School Board. His wife died later the same year he did. John (16th C.) recorded being in Lilliesleaf in 1580 when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk. He could be the son of Thomas, who received a half husbandland in Lilliesleaf from his father in 1581/2. Also in 1581/2 there was a marriage contract between him and Janet, daughter of John Redford in Lilliesleaf; the couple gained a half husbandland in Midlem from his father Thomas and he promised his mother land in Lilliesleaf in liferent. John (17th C.) merchant in Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to Thomas, who was listed right before him. John (17th C.) wright in Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He was probably related to other Smails living there. Perhaps the same wright John was listed among Covenanters fugitives in about 1684. John (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He may be the John who witnessed a baptism in 1772 for Walter Aitkin. He married Helen Aitkin and their children included: George (b.1743); James (b.1744); Margaret (b.1746); Jean (b.1758); and Adam (b.1761). The witnesses in 1743 were cooper John Aitkin (perhaps related to his wife) and shoemaker Robert Wilson, and in 1758 were James Oliver and Walter Aitkin. John (18th C.) married Agnes Graham in Wilton in 1758. John (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Christian Smail and their daughter Anne was baptised in 1792. John (b.c.1780) servant to Alexander Scott, tenant in Ashkirk, according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. John (b.1785/6) born at Hermiston in Lilliesleaf Parish, he was a cadger and carrier in St. Boswells. In 1852 he is recorded running a cart between Lilliesleaf, St. Boswells and Kelso. His wife was Esther and their children included Thomas and Jane. Margaret ‘Meg’ (16th/17th C.) resident of the Lilliesleaf area, wife of Mungo Young. In the 1628 witchcraft trial of Isobel Howison, she gave evidence that about 9 years earlier Howison came to her sick child ‘and said he had gotten a blast of ill wind betuene tuo furres [furrows] and she spake some words over him and he wes better within twenty four houres’. Martin (16th C.) listed as one of the tenants of Skelfhill and neighbouring farms in a bond of security signed in Hawick in 1569. His name is listed as ‘Martine Smaill’. Robert (b.c.1770s) servant at Adderstoneshiel according to the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Kirkton Parish. Robert (b.c.1780) servant at Raperlaw Townhead in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. Robert (b.1798/9) born in Ancrum, he was a farmer at Hillhead in Lilliesleaf Parish. His brother John also helped run the farm. In 1851 they were farming 41 acres and employing 1 labourer. Another brother, William, also lived on the farm. Thomas (16th C.) recorded in a document of 1561/2, agreeing that Thomas Young, his brother-in-law, should occupy some lands in Lilliesleaf during his mother’s life. His mother was Elizabeth (‘Bessie’) Riddell, presumably related in some way to the Riddells of that Ilk. His sister was Margaret. Probably the same Thomas in 1563 leased for 19 years a tenement from his neighbour Thomas Gray. He was to pay 20 shillings twice a year, along with ‘ane pek to the boll’ of grain, and if he built a kiln there, then Gray would provide him with beams for its construction. The witnesses in 1563 were ‘Berte’ Riddell, James Leithhead and Robert Hastie, who may also have been from Lilliesleaf. In 1564 he witnessed a marriage contract for John Johnstone, tenant in Hermiston. Probably the same Thomas in Lilliesleaf is recorded in 1581/2 when Walter Turnbull in Belses took over his debt with Richard Wilson in Howford. In 1581/2 he resigned his half husbandland in Lilliesleaf in favour of his eldest son John and arranged a marriage contract between John and Janet, daughte of John Redford in Lilliesleaf; he gave the couple his half husbandland in Midlem and his wife Helen Clerk received quarter of a steadingle William Middlemas. He may be the Thomas in Lilliesleaf whose son Adam was granted land in the village in 1595/6.

Thomas (17th C.) married Janet Paterson in Ashkirk in 1642. Thomas (17th C.) resident in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to merchant John, who was also listed there. Thomas (18th C.) tenant farmer in Borthwickbrae in the Horse Tax Rolls for 1787–88. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at Catshawhill in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was probably related to William, who farmed at Raperlaw. Thomas (18th/19th C.) recorded as ‘Junior’ at Longnewton on the ballots for the Militia in 1799 and 1801. Thomas (b.1808/9) agricultural labourer from Auncrarn Parish. In 1851 he was living at Hallrule Cottages and in 1861 was at Fairnington in Roxburgh Parish. He married Mary, daughter of Walter Hogg from Wilton. Their children included Margaret, Walter, Janet, Euphemia, John, Thomas and George.

Thomas (19th/20th C.) driver of the Wolfelee estate carts (mainly coal from Hawick) under 3 separate Lairds. He married Mary, daughter of Thomas Baptie and a Buckham. He retired to Hawick. William (16th/17th C.) granted a half husbandland of land in Lilliesleaf in 1595/6. His son Alexander was also granted land at the same time. William (17th C.) tenant in Harwood in Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Turnbull. Their son William was born in 1687. He could be the William born to Martin and Helen ‘Furgrie’ in Hawick in 1635. William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Helen Wight and their son Philip was baptised in 1688. William (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Helen Leyden and their children included: William (b.1744); Adam (b.1754); and Helen (b.1756). William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Catshawhill in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1785. In 1786 he was ‘of Catch’ at Raperlaw. His surname was given as ‘Smeal’ in 1788, when he was recorded as owner of Catshawhill. He was still at Raperlaw in 1797. He is probably the William ‘Small’ recorded as possessor of the land of ‘Kaims-muir park’ in 1780. In the Land Tax Rolls of 1811 (although the information came from earlier) he was listed as owner of Catshawhill and part of Raperlaw. He may have been father of James of Catshawhill recorded later. Probably the same William at Raperlaw subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. Probably the same William of Catshawhill served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. His name was recorded as William ‘Sonnail of Catshawhill’ in the 1819 list of Commissioners of Roxburghshire.

William (18th/19th C.) from Lilliesleaf Parish, he married Janet (or ‘Jenny’) Stuart. Their children included: Margaret (b.1801); and Elizabeth (b.1803). His name given, may also have been his children. William (d.1838) from Lilliesleaf. In 1790 he married Janet Thomson and their children included: Janet (or ‘Jessy’, b.1803), who married Andrew Buckham; Alexander (b.1805); and Robert (b.1810), who probably married Ellen Ramage. Helen (b.1797) and William (b.1799), with no mother’s name given, may also have been his children. In about 1820 the family emigrated to eastern Ontario and there are descendants in the United States. He may have been father of William who in about 1823 married Mary Hunter in Edwardsburgh Township, Ontario; if so, he was said to have been a companion of a young Walter Scott at Smailholm. He died in Elgin Ontario and is buried in Montreal. William (c.1795–1879) prominent citizen in the area of Edwardsburgh, Ontario, along with his brother Robert and nephew Andrew. He was said to be from the Jedburgh area, but was probably son of William and Janet Thomson, who came from Lilliesleaf, emigrating in 1820. In about 1823 he married Mary Hunter (from Ayrshire) and their children included Robert, Andrew, Thomas, John, Alex and Ann. He served as ‘Reeve’ of Edwardsburgh and county councillor and was an organiser of the Reform movement, which laid the foundations for the Liberal Party of Canada. His farm was called Glen Smail (formerly written ‘Smaill’, ‘Smaile’, ‘Small’, ‘Smeal’, ‘Smeall’, ‘Smell’ and ‘Smyle’).
Smailcleugh

Smailcleugh (smál-klooch) n. former house about 3 miles south of Jedburgh in Southdean Parish. It was near the foot of the Smail Cleuch, on the opposite side of the Jed Water from Ferniehirst Mill. The farm was in the 17th century the residence of the famed Ringan Oliver, who was said to have lived in a tower there. There was a blacksmith’s there in the 19th century (also written ‘Smailcleuch’).

Smaile Burn (smál-burn??) n. stream now running underground from the Nipknowes to Haggishaa, with the original course being over the Vertish, and on to the Slitrig. The name was in use from at least as early as the 15th century. The springs that feed it provided an early town water supply (1797–1865), conveyed in lead pipes to a reservoir at the top of the Loan (the origin is probably from Old English for ‘small’); the name occurs in 1433 as ‘Smaleburne’ and is ‘Smale Burn’ in 1448.

Smailholm (smâ-hum) n. village north-west of Kelso, with Smailholm Tower, the 18th century Smailholm House and a church dating back to the 13th century, last rebuilt in the 19th. Robert Ker of Altonburn had a charter of the lands in 1404 and Robert Pringle had a charter probably not many years later. The lands were held by Lord Cranston in 1502. In 1544 it was raided by men of Tynedale and Redesdale, taking 600 cattle, 100 horses and 100 prisoners. Also the name of the surrounding Parish of northern Roxburghshire, bounded by Kelso and Makerstoun, as well as Berwickshire. According to one story, St. Cuthbert was born in the nearby village of Wrangham, which has entirely disappeared. It is said that it was the first parish to divide its common land, starting a trend that would sweep across Border parishes, including Hawick, Wilton, Hassendean, etc. ‘Book of the Bazaar, On Smailholm Men, Smailholm Parish and Smailholm Church’ (1896) was written by William Lamb Sime (the origin is probably Old English ‘smael ham’, meaning ‘the narrow village’; the name first appears in 1160).

Smailholm (smâ-hum) n. Henry (d.bef. 1364) admitted as Archdeacon of Teviotdale in 1354, with his name written ‘Smallham’. He served until his death.

Smailholm Toor (smâ-hum-toor, -tow-ur) n. 5-storey 15th century peel tower on an isolated crag near Smailholm village, about 6 miles west of Kelso, renovated in the 1980s and now housing a museum. It may have originally been built by the Kerrs for the eldest son of Ferniehirst. The existing tower was probably built by the Pringles around 1400. It was the subject of many raids in the 16th century, and was sold to the Scotts of Harden in 1645. It is sometimes also called ‘Sandyknowe’ from the farm and hillock on which it stands. Sir Walter Scott regarded it as very inspirational in his youth – ‘These crags, that mountain tower, which charmed my fancy’s waking hour … Menthought grim features, seemed with scars, Glared through the window’s rusty bars’ [SWS], ‘At Smailholm’s Tower, Scott’s youthful hours Were nursed in song and story’ [RF].

smairg (smârg) adj., v. to bedaub, besmear – ‘…for thaye smairg inequitie apon me, an’ i wrath thaye luote me’ [HSR], ‘…an a smairggin rowk feiles ilka thing’ [ECS], to smear sheep with a tarry mixture to protect the fleece against vermin.

smart (smâr’) adj., v. smart (also the more common smert).

Small (smaw, smawl) n. Adam (18th/19th C.) resident of Belses Mill. His son William was recorded on the ballot for the Militia in 1801. James (17th C.) listed along with Andrew Robson in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. Together they paid tax on £390 for the lands of the Laird of Haining (probably John Pringle). William (18th C.) leased the lands of Boghall (presumably in Wilton) from Scott of Harden in 1749 for 11 years. William (18th/19th C.) mason recorded in Barnhills in 1799. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Belses Mill recorded in the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. He was still at Belses Mill in 1801 and recorded as son of Adam (it is possible this is the same as Smail).

small-pox (smaw-, smal-poks) n. contagious viral disease, which was a major source of death across Europe until well into the 19th century. It was not always fatal (Mary, Queen of Scots and Elizabeth I of England both contracted it), but it often left victims scarred or blind. Hawick was hit by a particularly fatal outbreak in 1821. Immoculation was introduced in the early 19th century, but taken up in a patchy way, and largely among the wealthier classes; its historical effectiveness is still a matter of debate, but ultimately it led to eradication of the disease.

Smallshiel Sike (smaw-, smal-sheel-sik) n. small stream on the east side of the Whitrope Burn, opposite Flasket Sike.

smally (smâ-lee) adj., arch. small, meagre, under-sized – ‘Smaallie (adj.) = deliberately framed (applied especially to a child of smarroch (sma-roch) n., poet. a confused collection, crowd – ‘The dirdums o’ the wheezlebugs Chunter the lee-lang day And for a smarroch o’ scowderdowps My greasily hert is wae’ [DH].

Smasha Hill (smaw-sha-hil) n. hill to the east of Blawearie at the end of the ‘Hill Road to Roberton’, reaching a height of 335 m. It contains a Bronze Age burial cairn, about 500 m yards east-north-east of the summit, measuring about 10 m in diameter and about 0.4 m high. There are also several others in the vicinity. On the north side of the hill there is a ‘droveway sign-wall’, a section of drystone dyke to indicate the direction for driving, or perhaps as a warning to drovers (it is ‘Smallshill-hill’ and ‘Small Shawhill’ in the 1765 description of the boundaries of Wilton Common, suggesting that it was originally named after a small wood near there).

smashit (smaw-shchee, -shi’) pp., poet. smashed – ‘An’ whamseaeiv sall fa’ on this stane sall be smashet . . . ’ [HSR].

smat (smat) pp., poet. smote – ‘Behald he smat the rok, that the waters rashet owt . . . ‘ [HSR], ‘An’ smat a’ the first-born in Egypt . . . ‘ [HSR].

smatter (sma-ur) n., pl., arch. small pieces, smitherens – ‘Hei broke it inti smatters’ [GW], v., arch. to break into small pieces – ‘. . . And rap’d, but answer getting none. The pane he smattered wi’ a pelt’ [HSR], ‘Thou didist smatter the heeads o’ leviathan intil flenders . . . ‘ [HSR].

Smeaton (snee-in) n. John (b.1827/8) born in Dunfermline, he was Governor of Hawick Combination Poorhouse during the 1861 census. He presented some items from Borneo to the Museum in 1863. His wife was Matron and Harriet Smeaton presented some items from Borneo to the Museum in 1863. He pre-directed by William Kerr of Newton in 1637. Rev. William (1775/6–1837) from Blackfriars Kirk in Jedburgh, he was ‘probationer’ at Castleton Burgher Kirk following the resignation of Fletcher in 1801. He was said to have done much to inspire confidence in the waning congregation and helped to secure a site for the new church in Newcastle. However, he remained only a short time, because in 1802 he was called to Paisley. He died suddenly while returning from a meeting of the Presbytery there. A volume of his sermons was published by his son Rev. William of Linlithgow.

smarter (smer-tur) adj. smarter – ‘. . . Like panoramic views were cast, still better an’ still smarter’ [VW].

smiddie see smiddy

Smiddielands (sni-dee-lawndz) n. former name for lands in Bedrule Parish, adjacent to Newton. They were included in the lands inherited by William Kerr of Newton in 1637.

smiddies (sni-deez) n. blacksmith’s workshops. These used to be common and crucial parts of everyday life in Hawick and surrounding area. Local ones included Peter Clark’s at the Sandbed, Rob Young’s of the Back Raw, and 3 in the Fore Raw (including James Bowie and Tom Ferguson), as well as others in the Croon Place. In the mid-19th century there must have been around a dozen in Hawick. Those of the surrounding countryside included Ashkirk (Kirk-houses), Bonchester Bridge, Borthaugh Wudfit, Borthwickbrae Burnfit, Cauldnill, Chisholme, Denholm (two), Flex, Forkins (or Unthank), Hassendean, Headshaw, Heap (or Sticheres), Hobkirk (Blacklee), Kirkhouses, Kirkton, Lil-liesleaf, Minto, Newmill, (Bedrule) Newton, Park (Copshaw), Stobs, Teviothead (Bowanhill) and Todshawaugh. The business in the Crown Close (Telfer’s) survived until the late 1970s, and Hook’s on Union Street even more recently. As well as shoeing horses and dealing with other metalwork jobs, through much of the 18th and 19th centuries they were also responsible for performing medical procedures like tooth extractions and bleedings for various ailments. Adam Scott is recorded as smith in Hawick in 1640 and ‘Hew Elliot’ in 1642.

smiddy (smi-dee) n. a smithy, blacksmith’s workshop – ‘He took the horses next to Bon’s smiddy to get their shoes taken off’ [RM], ‘And in winter we wad gather round the bleezin’ smiddy hearth …’ [JT], a frame-smith’s or mechanical workshop in a mill (also spelled ‘smiddie’).

smiddy-end (smi-dee-end) n., arch. gable wall of a blacksmith’s – ‘A dandert aboot amang the auld byres an smiddie-ends’ [ECS], ‘Oh, the Auld Smiddy end, where in youth’s happy day A merry band o’ bairnies wad gather at their play’ [JT].

smirl (smir) n., arch. a trick, prank – ‘I’ll play him a smirl for that yet’, Teviotd. Nearly syn. with Pliskie’ [JoJ].

smirn (smirn) n., arch. a smug, officious person.

smirr (smir) n., poet. drizzle, light rain – ‘A smirr o’ rain was fa’in’ That buid to spoil the drizzle, (the origin is unknown).

Smith (smith) n. Adam (17th C.) listed as a smith on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’. He paid tax on 2 hearths. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His son James was baptised in 1696. Agnes (17th C.) resident of Hallrule who was listed among the poor in Hobkirck Parish in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Sir Alan (1917–2013) born at South Shields, he was R.A.F. pilot who fought alongside Douglas Bader and was awarded the D.F.C. He was later an industrialist, being a strong Tory supporter and becoming a friend of Margaret Thatcher. He ran Dawson International from 1970. He was Chief Guest at the 1986 Common Riding. With the demise of Pringle’s following soon afterwards, he was among the executives blamed for the downfall of Hawick’s knitwear industry. Alexander (18th C.) resident of Appletreehall. In 1764 he witnessed a baptism for John Hunter, who also lived at Appletreehall. He married Margaret Laidlaw in 1766, and their children, baptised in Wilton Parish, included: James (b.1767); Isabel (b.1770); John (b.1772); Susanna and Christy (b.1773); John (again, b.1775); Margaret (b.1778); Peggy (b.1780); David (b.1784); and Alexander (b.1786). The witnesses in 1770 were James Dryden and Thomas Reid and in 1772 were James Dryden and Robert Hume. Alexander (b.c.1770s) wright at Nether Burnmouth according to the ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1799. Alexander (b.1817/8) son of Hawick blacksmith James. He was blacksmith at Appletreehall and later also vet there. He was listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1841. He lived at Appletreehall with his sister Jane. Late in life he married Margaret, from Stranraer. Alexander ‘Alex’ (d.1960s) originally from Wick, he came to Hawick to work as a watchmaker in George Reid’s High Street shop. In 1947 he started his own jeweller’s and watchmaker’s shop on Walter’s Wynd. This business was continued by his son Hamish. He also had a son Alasdair. Andrew (17th/18th C.) mason in Bedrule Parish. His children Isobel (d.1690) and William (d.1693) are buried in Bedrule kirkyard. Andrew (b.c.1770s) weaver at Roughheugh according to the ballots for the Militia in Wilton Parish in 1799 and 1801. Sir Andrew, M.D. ‘Smithie fri Soothfield’ (1797–1872) born at Heronhaa near Southfield (also referred to as Winnington Rig), son of a shepherd, he was an Army surgeon who became Director General of the Army Medical Department and is sometimes described as the father of South African zoology. He was baptised in Kirkton Parish, his father being Thomas P., his mother Grizzel Tait, and the location given as Winnington. He was the eldest of 5 children, having 1 brother and 3 sisters. He attended school at Stobs, where he was said to be flogged regularly for playing truant. In 1809 the family moved to Hassendean and he attended Minto and then Lilliesleaf schools. He had a 3 year apprenticeship with Dr. Walter Graham in Hawick (sometimes given incorrectly as a ‘Mr. Gordon in Roxburghshire’) before training at Edinburgh University and joining the army in 1815, shortly after Waterloo. He trained at various stations around Britain, and later when quartered in Edinburgh, continued his studies at the University, where he received his M.D. in 1819. He went to the Cape in 1820 as a medical assistant to the 72nd Regiment, and was there for 16 years, also being associated with the 49th and 98th Regiments and the Cape Mounted Rifle Corps. He was district surgeon at Albany and in 1822 opened the first free dispensary for native patients in South Africa. He learned much about the indigenous peoples and was sent on several missions to visit tribes beyond the frontier, resulting in a description of the customs of the Xhosa tribes in 1824. Spending much of his leisure time studying natural history, he established a reputation as a zoologist and ethnographer. He reported on the Bushmen and the Amazooooloo (specifically the San, Khoi-Khoi and other peoples). In addition his expertise in zoology was sought out by Charles Darwin. He led a 6 month expedition to Port Natal, the report from which ultimately led to the founding of the colony at Natal. He was also the first Superintendent of the South African Museum from 1825. In 1834 he led probably the first scientific expedition into the interior, where he also negotiated treaties, as well as exploring the Oori, Mariqua and Limpopo rivers, returning after 18 months. About 5,000 specimens, 500 drawings and 1800 artefacts were brought back. In 1836 he met a young Charles Darwin when the Beagle stopped at the Cape, showing Darwin rock formations and giving him some rock samples. He returned to Britain in 1837, being promoted to the rank of surgeon and based at Fort Pitt, Chatham. A grant was appropriated to publish his 5 volume ‘Illustrations of the Zoology of South Africa’ (1838–47), which he wrote with no personal remuneration. He identified and named many animals, particularly reptiles and birds. He described more species of South African birds than anyone before or since and Gekko smithii (a gecko), Lepidophyama smithii (a lizard) and Pangshura smithii (a freshwater turtle) are all named after him. He was also first to formally describe the largest living shark, the whale shark, as well as to properly distinguish the genus of the great white shark and to name it ‘Carcharodon’ (so that the species was sometimes called ‘Carcharodon smithii’ as a result). Ill health prevented him publishing the expedition journal, but much of the information appeared elsewhere (and his diaries from 1834–36 were finally published in 1939–40). He continued to be promoted, becoming Principal Medical Officer at Chatham, then Deputy Inspector of Hospitals in London, and by 1853 he was Director General of the Army and Ordnance Medical Department. During the Crimean War he was personally attacked for being responsible for the state of medical care for British troops, with Florence Nightingale calling him the ‘smoke-dried Andrew Smith’. However, his conduct was vindicated after inquiries by several parliamentary committees. He retired in 1858, when he was made a K.C.B. He received numerous other honorary titles and awards, including being Fellow of the Royal College of Surgeons of Edinburgh, the Zoological Society and of the Royal Society. He was made an Honorary Burgess in 1838 on a visit back to Hawick. He also received honorary degrees from Edinburgh and Trinity College, Dublin. He retired from his post in 1858 and was then knighted. In 1844 he married his housekeeper, Ellen Henderson (c.1802–64), and converted to her Roman Catholic faith. After the death of his wife and then his sister, he lost interest in African exploration and scientific writing and went into decline. He died at his home at 16 Alexander Square, London and is buried at Kensal Green Cemetery. There are at least 2 known portraits of him. A plaque (on the right-hand side of the road past Southfield) marks the site of the cottage in which he was born (actually on the opposite side of the road). Annie Henderson nee Cowan (b.1861) daughter of Elliot Cowan and Jeannie Hunter. She was well known locally as a singer, for example, singing ‘Up Wi’ the Banner’ at the 1889 Colour Bussing. She was mother of William, James and Elliot and married to Cornet John, with whom she moved to the Manchester area in the 1890s. She gave a talk to the Archaeological Society in 1935, providing valuable information about 19th century Hawick language and place names. It was said that she insisted on her family speaking Hawick dialect at home in Manchester and their house was a haven for other Teries in Lancashire. Her son Elliot referred to her as ‘a leal and compe-tent guardian of the vernacular’, and explicitly highlighted her influence in developing his fasci-nation with the dialect of Hawick. Archibald ‘Airie’ (b.1782) son of Thomas and Mary Scott ‘The Flooer o Rankleburn’. He was listed as son to Thomas at Hartshaugh Mill on the Militia ballot in 1801. It is said that as a young man in charge of carts in Berwick, he was press-ganged into joining the crew of a man-of-war. He returned to Rulewater a few years later and married Mary Turnbull (whose sister Ellen has married his brother Peter). One of their sons was found dead at the bottom of a cliff at Edgerston, while a daughter married Robert Taylor. He may be the Archibald whose children, baptised in Hobkirk Parish, included Thomas (b.1802), Mary (b.1804), Walter (b.1807), Betty (b.1812), Archibald (b.1814), Peter (b.1817), Isabel (b.1820) and Andrew (b.1825). Along with the rest of his family he emigrated to America. Archibald (19th C.) married Margaret Armstrong in Hobkirk Parish in 1837. Charles (19th C.) grocer on the High Street. He is listed as grocer, spirit dealer and victual dealer on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was Cornet in 1840. He appears to have left the town shortly afterwards. Mysteriously he appears to have fathered an unnamed child who died in 1840. Charles (b.1817/8) from Edinburgh, he was a tailor in Hawick. In 1861 he was ‘Clothier or Foreman Taylor’ at 15 Howegate. His wife was Jane and their children included Margaret, Jane, Charles, Thomas, Christina, Agnes and Jessie. Rev. David (b.1892) educated in Dunfermline and at Edinburgh University. He was licensed to preach by Dunfermline Presbytery and was assistant minister in Dumfries. He was ordained as minister of Saughtree Kirk in 1921. However, he was translated to Inverkeithing the following year, and later went to Ceres. He married Anna Clarke. David Nicholson ‘Kel’ (20th C.) driving instructor in Hawick. His nickname came from the fact that he grew up in Kelso. He was well known as Clerk to the Course at the Common riding Races for many years, with many stories told of his droll humour heard over the loud-speaker system at the Moor. Elliot Cowan (1891–1917) native of Hawick, whose father, grandfather and great-grandfather had been Cornet. His father was John and his mother Annie Cowan. He was a student at Manchester Municipal High School and worked as an accountant. Well read in all forms of literature, he had a particular interest in Scottish writing and the vernacular of Hawick. In 1914 he wrote what is probably the best example of Hawick dialect prose ‘Mang Howes an’ Knowes: a Day’s Dander Throwe Border Waeter-Gates’. This when he was only 23 years old, and after having spent most of his life in the Manchester area, where his family moved. It was published in 1925, with illustrations by his brother, James Dryden. He also contributed the dialect dictionary and discussion ‘Braid Haick’ to the Transactions, as well as publishing ‘To Dee and Don: recollection and rumination’ (reprinted from the Hawick Express) in 1912. He was also a lover of music, from high opera to old Scottish songs. Never being in robust health, it was said that he was disappointed not to be able to enlist like his 2 brothers. He lived at 61 Carlton Street, Old Trafford, Manchester. He died at the age of only 25 and is buried in the Wellogate. George (18th C.) tenant in Hawick. He married Helen Graham and their children included: Janet (b.1722); and George (b.1725). the witnesses in 1725 were weavers Robert Wight and John Stevenson. George, A.R.C.O. (19th/20th C.) organist at St. Cuthbert’s in the early 20th century. He gave organ lessons to Adie Ingles. Gilbert (18th C.) house servant at Stiches in 1778 and 1779, when he was working for Gilbert Chisholme. In 1792 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Stewart, who lived at Stiches. Hamish D. (1946/7– ) jeweller at Bourtree Place, well known for incorporating local elements into his designs. He was educated at Burnfoot and Hawick High. He worked with Lyle & Scott and was then a fencer on motor-ways, then worked in his father Alex’s jewellery shop at 45 High Street, which in 1970 became his own business at 17 High Street. The premises moved to 47 High Street then in 1991 to Eastbank House on Bourtree Place (with members of the Linden being enlisted to move the heavy safe). He was Hawick Business Forum Chairman in the 1980s. He has designed badges and chains of office for several of the local clubs, including for the President of the Archaeological Society (in memory of his father) in 1991. He also makes badges for Jedburgh, Lauder and Duns festival principals. The ‘Teribus Clock’ has been a feature of his shop since 1996 (constructed by him, Tosh Scott and other local tradesmen). He and Tosh Scott also provided a new clock for the Town Hall balcony. In 2012 he created a Hawick version of the olympic torch. He married Sylvia and had children Janie and Graham. James (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He probably farmed near Newton. James (17th C.) resident of Spittal-on-Rule on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. James (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish, in the Hassendean part. He witnessed a baptism in Hassendean for William Lamb in 1687. He married Margaret Armstrong in 1679 and their children included: Walter (b.1679); Janet (b.1682); and Margaret (b.1688). He is probably the resident in Westerhouses recorded in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls for Hassendean Parish. It seems likely that he and his wife are related to the Walter Armstrong who married Isobel Smith in Roberton in 1686. James (1680/1–1743) blacksmith at Longtown. He had at least 3 children who died young: Archibald (b.1722/3); Mary (b.1725/6); and Agnes (b.1725/6). He was buried in old Wilton Cemetery. James (17th/18th C.) recorded at Ashybank in 1709 when he married Helen Turner in Cavers Parish. James (17th/18th C.) married Agnes ‘M.’ in Wilton Parish in 1708. James (17th/18th C.) married Elspeth Aitken in Wilton Parish in 1708. Isobel (b.1710), with no mother’s name given, may have been his child. James (17th/18th C.) married Helen Turner in Cavers Parish in 1709. James (17th/18th C.) married Beatrix Buckholm in Bedrule Parish in 1718. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at ‘Heap burnfoot’ in 1725. He married Elspeth (or Elizabeth) Aitken and their children included: Helen (b.1716); Margaret (b.1719); Agnes (b.1723); and James (b.1725). The witnesses in 1725 were James and Robert Easton. It is possible he was the same as the blacksmith at Longtown. He is surely related to John, who was blacksmith at Stirches and recorded at Heapburn at about the same time. James (18th C.) married Margaret Buckholm in 1746, the marriage recorded in both Bedrule and Kirkton Parishes. James (18th C.) married Margaret Brown in Kirkton Parish in 1749. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elizabeth Armstrong in 1761. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Isabel Lees and their children included James (b.1766). James (18th C.) married Jean Davidson in 1775. The marriage was recorded in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. Their children, baptised in Wilton, included: John (b.1777); Margaret (b.1779); and John (again, b.1781). James (18th C.) married Betty Elliot in Cavers Parish in 1793. James (b.1790/1) gardener in Castleton Parish, originally from Canobie. He was living at Castleton in 1841 and in Newcastleton in 1851. His wife was Margaret and their children included James, Betty, George (a teacher), John and Joseph. James (18th/19th C.) resident at Appletreehall. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He could be the James who married Jean Forsyth in Wilton Parish in 1816 and had children: Alexander (b.1817); Janet (b.1819); and Jane (b.1821). James (b.c.1780) carpet-weaver in Hawick according to the ballot for the Militia in 1801. Probably the same weaver in Hawick is recorded when an unnamed child of his died in 1809. He could be the James who had a child John (b.1800) with Margaret Oliver, baptised in Hawick, and married Margaret Oliver in Kirkton in 1804. The couple additionally had Robert (b.1806) and John (b.1809) baptised in East Bank Kirk. James (1785–1855) born in Oxnam, son of John. He was blacksmith in Hawick at 5 Melgund Place, and before that at Cauldmill. He may have been a grandson of John, blacksmith at Heap. He is listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory as blacksmith and mill-wright on Melgund Place along with William (presumably his son). In Slater’s 1852 directory he was listed as a blacksmith on Melgund Place. He married Margaret (or ‘Peggy’) Kennedy in Wilton in 1804 and she died in 1872, aged 86. Their children included: John (b.1805), baptised in Wilton Parish; William (b.1807), baptised in Melrose Parish; James (1809–37); Janet (1811–70); Isabel (1813–29); Robert (b.1815); Helen (b.1817); Margaret, teacher; Charles Kennedy (b.1822); Alexander (b.1824), who was blacksmith at Appletreehall; Joan (1824/5–82), who married shoemaker William Burnet; Thomas Young (b.1827), watchmaker, who emigrated to Australia; Gilbert (b.1830); and Jessie. Most of their children were born in Cavers Parish, with Thomas recorded at Cauldmill. He is buried in old Wilton Kirkyard. A story is told of how a stranger sought shelter from the rain in Cauldmill Smiddy in the early 1820s, and after he quoted some lines of poetry the visitor confessed that he was the author, William Knox, whereupon he was invited in for a meal and conversation. James (b.1805/6) stocking-maker, who was one of the 5 men tried for mobbing and assault during the 1837 election in Hawick. He was the only one found not guilty; this was largely because of a technicality, with the indictment saying he chased one of the men into the house of Jean Turnbull (nee Riddell), while it was actually the house of her son George. James (19th C.) one of the 6 elders of Hawick Parish who left along with the minister during the Disruption of 1843 to form Hawick Free Kirk. He was probably the first Session Clerk of the new church, serving until 1855. James (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Mary Glendinning and their children included Mary (b.1822). James ‘Jamie’ (b.1805/6) born in Cockpen, Midlothian, he was a grocer on the Howegate and then Burgh Officer and Halberdier in Hawick from about 1860. He was the Burgh Officer for a while along with ‘Tam-a-Linkin’, then with Michael Wintrup. He was noted as a wit. He also looked after the town’s poor house for many years. It is said that he was well liked in the town, and that even the beggars respected him. He married Margaret Shiel, and their children included: Agnes (b.1831), who married house painter James Smith (probably no relation); William (b.1833); James (b.1835); and Catherine (b.1838). He lived at 4 Loan according to the 1861 census. James (19th C.) married Helen Turnbull in Bedrule Parish in 1830. James (b.c.1795) farmer at Braidhaugh in Hobbirk Parish. His wife was Helen and their children included: Helen (b.1837). James (b.1810/1) farmer at Templehall and proprietor of Harwood Sawmill. He was at Harwood Mill in 1841 and listed there in 1861 as farmer of 1000 acres, employing 3 labourers. He was still recorded as farmer at Harwood Mill in 1868. He married Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’) Henderson in 1836 and their children included: Thomas (b.1837): Mina (b.1839); Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’, b.1844); William (b.1846); James (b.1848); Peter; and Oliver (b.1853). The Jane Smith (aged about 70) living with him in 1841 was probably his mother. He was probably the ‘Jamie Smith of Harwood Mill’ listed among local ‘Hard-riding Dick’s’ in H.H. Dixon’s ‘Field and Fern or Scottish Flocks and Herds (South)’ (1865); he was said to be a keen fox-hunter. James (19th C.) married Elizabeth Henderson in Hobbirk Parish in 1836. James (b.1817/8) from Canonbie, he was gamekeeper at Larriston House in 1851 and 1861. James (19th C.) married Isobel Beattie in Wilton Parish in 1844. James (19th C.) married Elizabeth Scott in Hawick Parish in 1845. Their children, baptised in Hawick Free Kirk, were Jane (b.1846) and Mary (b.1849). James (19th C.) married Agnes Oliver in Hawick Parish in 1847. James (b.1815/6) born in Hawick Parish, he was a shoemaker in Wilton. In 1851 he was lodging with the Rivile family on Wilton Path, along with his wife Jane. James (1819/20) born in Hawick, he was a woolen spinner in Wilton. In 1861 he was living on Roadhead with his wife Caroline (from Jedburgh) and their children James H. and Mary. James (b.1823/4) painter, son of whip and thong maker John. He was a grandson of James ‘Deacon’ Dryden, father of John and grandfather of Elliot Cowan. He was Cornet in 1846, and Acting Father for his son John in 1881. He annually painted a line at Towerdykeside to mark the level of the flood in the year of his Cornetship; this was replaced by a plaque in 1902. There is a painting (by Andrew Kennedy) of him and his Right- and Left-Hand men crossing the Teviot near Laidlaw’s Cauld. This is probably the earliest image of the Common Riding. There is also a photograph of him with the Cornets of 1845 and 1897; this makes him one of the first Cornets of whom we have a photographic image. In 1848 he married Agnes, probably daughter of Howegate grocer and Burgh Officer James Smith. Their children were: Margaret Shiel (b.c.1850), who married Allan Watt; Elizabeth (b.c.1851): Hannah; John (b.1856); Jemima Catherine (b.1863); Ann; Agnes Elliot (b.1869); Agnes Elliot (again, b.1870); and Helen (b.1873). The family lived at 8 Howegate, then 3 Green Wynd, and then 4 Loan, where they kept a ‘house of refuge’. After his wife’s death he lived at 1 Silver Street and lastly 19 Howegate. He was still alive in 1901. James (19th C.) married Jane Hogg in Wilton Parish in 1852. James (b.1831/2) from Canonbie, he was groom and gardener, living at Cavers Manse Cottage in 1861. His wife was Mary (from Hutton, Dumfriesshire) and their children included Walter, Peter T. and Mary. James Turnbull (d.1905) eldest son of Thomas and Mary Smith. In 1900 he married Margaret Murray (b.1875), who was from Galashiels. Their children were Peggie, Mary and Thomas James (born after his father’s death). He died following a bad fall from his bicycle at ‘Jenny Walker’s Brae’. His wife was later keeper of the Laidlaw Memorial Hall. James Dryden ‘Jamie’ (c.1881–1966) son of John and Annie Cowan, and older brother of Elliot Cowan. He was named after his great-great-grandfather ‘Deacon Dryden’, who was Cornet in 1772. He moved to Manchester with the rest of his family when he was young. He became a member of the Royal Institute of British Architects and was employed by a brewer’s in Manchester for many years. After retiring he moved back to Hawick, where he and his wife settled at 11 Backdamgate. He was a keen student of Hawick’s dialect and became known as a local historian, who was often consulted. He was also a rugby enthusiast, acting as correspondent for Manchester papers, for both Rugby Union and Rugby League. He provided the illustrations for ‘Mang Howes an Knowes’. He accompanied his mother to Gallipoli in 1926, as part of an organised family memorial trip, and wrote about it for the Hawick Express; they were able to walk on the battlefield where his brother William had fallen, and he made a sketch while they were there. He was a member of the Archeological Society Committee and contributed an article to the Transactions in 1958. He acted as Bard for Lodge 111, and was also a member of the Callants’ Club. He also was donor of the J.D. Smith bequest, which benefited several local causes. He was described as a ‘small and dapper figure’. He married his cousin Jane Hunter Scott. He was buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. Jean (18th C.) kitchen maid at Wilton Lodge in 1791, when she was working for Lord Napier. Jenny nee Ferguson (1908–74) born in Stirling, she trained as a teacher in Dundee, being qualified as a primary teacher with a specialisation in music. She first taught in Yetholm, then moved to Manchester, after marrying local baker Robert T. The couple moved to Hawick in the late 1930s, where her husband established his bakery business on Bridge Street. She taught at Drumnlanrig 1964–71, and while there wrote the music for ‘Hurrah! for the Cornet’, to words written by her Primary 5 class. She also wrote a song ‘The Jewel in the Crown’ for the 1970 Burnfoot song competition. In 1971 she taught in Yetholm, then moved to Manchester, where she was working for Lord Napier. was probably the John, inkeeper in Newcastle-lon, who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He may be the carter of that name recorded as male head of household in Newcastleton in 1835. John (b.1773/4) from England, he was a shoemaker on the Mid Raw in 1841.
Jane and John, who lived with him were probably his children. John (b.c.1780) carter at Riddell in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. He was distinct from the man of the same name who was a ploughman at Bewsie Hill in 1801. John (d.1811) weaver in Hawick, son of Walter. John (b.1794/5) whip and thong maker on the Howegate. He lived at 8 Howegate, being there in 1841 and 1851, and was at 3 Brougham Place by 1861. He married Elizabeth Dryden (b.c.1801). Their children included: Christian (b.1820/1); James (b.1823/4), who was Cornet in 1846; Helen (b.1826/7); and Walter (b.1835), who was a shoemaker. He could be the John who was born to John in Cavers Parish in 1794, but he was also related to William, ‘Wull the Cutler’.
His sister Jenny is said to have gone to Flodden in about 1820 and returned with green twigs to adorn the Cornet’s followers in the procession to the Games. John (19th C.) gamekeeper for the Earl of Minto. A story is told in the 1881 Border Counties’ Magazine of how he kept a pet fox on a chain; it would deliberately scatter barley within reach so that it could catch a hen when it got close enough. John (b.1810/1) born in Edinburgh, he was a baker in Denholm. His shop was probably on Main Street. He married Margaret Eckford and their children included Helen, William, John and Catherine J. John (1827–69) of Darnick (near Melrose). Last major head of the family architects and builders business, John & Thomas Smith. They were responsible for many of the finest Victorian buildings around Melrose, as well as the North Brig in Hawick, the Wallace Statue at Dryburgh and the Hermitage Water Bridge. He was commissioned to make a survey of the Auld Brig of Hawick before it was demolished in 1851. He was also an early photographer, who took photographs of Queen Victoria’s visit in 1867. He added an east wing to Dar-nick Tower. His sister Mary married John Elliot of Binks. The Smith Memorial Hall was built in Darnick in his memory. John (19th C.) one of the first professional cricketers in town, playning for the Wilton team in the late 1850s. Rev.
John Anderson (1840–1911) born in Renfrewshire, he studied in Edinburgh and Glasgow. He became a minister of the Free Church in Bewcastle in 1873. In 1876 he moved to Newcastle-t Free Kirk. In 1898 he was given a colleague and successor and retired from many of his duties. In 1894 he was involved in legal action, claiming he had been defrauded into making investments. In 1873 he married Jane W. Steele and in 1882 he married Eliza J. Reid. John (1856–1904) son of Cornet James and sister of Margaret, the matriarch of the Watt family. He was Cornet in 1881, with his own father as Acting Father. He also served as Acting Father in 1886 (2 years after his own father served in this role). He married Annie Cowan, and their sons were: James Dryden; William, who died at Gallipoli; and Elliot Cowan, who wrote ‘Mang Howes an Knowes’. A plumber by trade, he moved with his family to Old Trafford, Manchester in the 1890s. There he became the first Chairman of the Hawick Exiles’ Club. Dying at a young age, he was buried in Hawick, being the first Cornet’s coffin to be draped with the Burgh Standard. Rev. John (1859– 1928) born at Haddington, he graduated M.A. from Glasgow University in 1888. He was minister at Denholm Free Kirk from 1892 until his death.
In 1908 he helped compile the notes of Rev. Duncan Stewart into the book ‘The Covenanters of Teviotdale and Neighbouring Districts’. He marbled Agnes Hume. His daughter was a geography teacher at the High School in the 1950s and his grandson was a local vet. Joseph (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His daughter Janet was baptised in 1761. Joseph (19th/20th C.) gas manager in Hawick. His daughter Annie was the 2nd wife of Robert Riddle Thompson. Rev.
Malcolm (1860–91) from the Gillespie area in Glasgow, he graduated M.A. from Glasgow University in 1886 and B.D. in 1889. He was ordained as the 1st minister of Wilton South Kirk in 1890. However, about a year and a half later he drowned while swimming on holiday at Spitztal. Some of his sermons and a memoriam were collected and published in Hawick in 1891. Margaret nee Murray (b.1875) daughter of Robert, carpenter at Blacklee, Hobkirk Parish. She mar-rried James, eldest son of Thomas Smith, tenant farmer at Tythehouse. They had 3 children, but her husband died as the result of an accident.
She later was keeper of the Laidlaw Memorial Hall. Rev. Martin trained as a Pastor at Charl-ott Chapel in Edinburgh, he became Pastor of Hawick Baptist Church in about 2018. Oliver (19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. He mar-rried Mary Smith and their children included Willliam (b.1832). Thomas (b.1835), with no mother’s name given, may also have been his child. Oliver (19th C.) son of Thomas and Jane Oliver. He was a farm steward at Langraw in 1861. He married Helen Waters in Hobkirk in 1833 and their children included: Jane Oliver (b.1837); Alexander (b.1839); James (b.1841); John (b.1843); Oliver (b.1845); Henry (b.1848); Janet (b.1850); and Helen (b.1853). The last 3 children were baptised in Southdean Parish. Patrick (15th C.) listed in 1463/4 among the men who were rewarded by the King for assisting in the capture of John Douglas of Balveny, probably part of the force led by Scott of Buccleuch. He is recorded as ‘Patricius Smyth’. The other men were Scotts, Turnbulls, a Gledstains, a Langlands, a Dalgleish etc., and so he is probably also local. Patrick (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included Patrick (b.1757) and Andrew (b.1760). Peter (18th/19th C.) brother of Thomas (tenant of Hartshaugh Mill), he was factor to Elliot of Wolfelee. He was resident in Kirknowe in Hobkirk Parish in 1788 and 1790 when he had children baptised. He was also tenant of Kirknowe in 1797, when he owned 2 horses. In 1807 he bought the lands of Hobkirk Kirkstile (part of Kirknowe) and farmed there. He married and had at least 7 children: Peter (b.1788), who married Helen Scott; Isobel (b.1789); Betty (b.1790); Jane; Margaret (b.1797); Thomas (b.1798); and Walter (possibly b.1802), who emigrated to America. James (b.1793) was probably also his child. Peter (b.1780) eldest son of Thomas and Mary Scott, ‘the Flooer o Rankleburn’. He is probably the Peter recorded at Bankend on the 1801 ballot for the Militia. He farmed at Harwood Mill. He was probably the Peter at ‘Harrot’ who subscribed to 6 copies of William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He married Ellen Turnbull, whose sister Mary married his brother Archibald. They had a large family, including: Thomas (b.1801); Walter (b.1803); Peter (b.1804); Archibald (b.1806); Elizabeth (b.1808), who married J. Blake; Mary; Andrew (b.1812); William (b.1814); Mark (b.1815), who died at Lanton; Turnbull (1816–79), farm steward, who died at Hawick; Nelly (b.1818), who married W. Elliot; and Isobel (1821–1898), who died in Hawick. He is said to have been very strict in all things relating to religion. Peter (b.1788) eldest son of Peter, he was factor for James Elliot of Wolfelee in the early 1800s and lived at Kirknowe. He was farmer at Kirknowe in 1841 and in 1851 was farming 170 acres and employing 4 labourers. In 1823 he married Helen Scott, one of the Scotts of Woodhouse and related to the Turnbulls who farmed at Spittal. Their children were: Isobel or Isabella (1824–49), who married Robert, son of Robert Stewart, farmer at Hawthornside; Peter (b.1827), who married Isobel Oliver; Betty (b.1830); John (b.1832); and Agnes Scott (b.1835). Peter (1804–86) son of Peter, who was the eldest son of Thomas. He became farmer at Harwood Mill, where he was born. In 1841 he was an agricultural labourer at Parkhead in Roberton Parish, in 1851 was at Hunthill and in 1861 he was farm steward at Greenriver. His cousin Mary married Robert Purdom of Hawick. He himself married Elizabeth ‘Betty’ Ronaldson Dunlop in Coldstream. Their children were: Mary (b.c.1839); Peter (b.1841), who died at Jarrow-on-Tyne; Helen Turnbull (‘Ellen’), b.1843), who married A. Telfer; Williamina (or Mina, b.1847), who married Sandbed baker John Young (and was mother-in-law of J.E.D. Murray); and Elizabeth (or Betsy, b.1852), who emigrated to Queensland. There is a story told of him encountering a ‘spunkie’ (i.e. ‘will-o’-the-wisp’) when riding past Mackside Dennings. He was active until a few years before his death, which occurred at Swanshiel. Peter (b.1825/6) toll-bar keeper at Deanbrae in 1851. His wife was Margaret and they had a daughter, Dorothy. Robert (16th C.) recorded in 1541 on a list of associates of James Douglas of Cavers when he complained about his farm of Whitriggs being burned by Walter Scott of Branxholme. He was probably a tenant of Douglas of Cavers. He may be related to the two Thomases who were also listed. Robert (17th C.) Hawick Councillor who signed the 1640 ‘Act of Bailies and Council’. Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded as a resident of Whitfield in 1751 and 1769. He was also farmer in Newton, in Wilton Parish. He became tenant in Mervinslaw in about 1754. He is probably the Robert who witnessed a baptism for James Pott, resident of Borthaugh, in 1751. He was one of the founders of the secession church, which met in Hawick in 1763. In 1764 he was said to have been a former tenant of Murray of Philiphaugh who resolved an issue over use of the Common with James Robson, tenant of Calaburn. He may be the Robert who is recorded as formerly being in possession of an enclosure that was part of Silverbuthall, according to the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. He married Alison Irvine (or ‘Irwin’) in 1748, the marriage being proclaimed in Wilton and Ancrum Parishes; she could be the daughter of Thomas Irvine and Jean Irvine, baptised in Wiltin in 1725. Their children included: John (b.1749); Thomas (b.1751); Walter (b.1753); James (b.1755); Janet (b.1758); Nelly (b.1762); Robert (b.1764); and Thomas (again, b.1769). The witnesses in 1751 were James Dryden and Walter Scott. The witnesses in 1769 were James Scott (probably the farmer at Bonnraw, who was also an Anti-Burgher) and Walter Irvine (who was surely related to his wife), the baptism carried out by Mr. Arnot, who had previously been connected with the Green Kirk in Hawick. Robert (18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. In 1780 it is recorded that he was tenant of 'House and yard', with rent of 10s. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Silverbuthall in 1791. He married Isobel Ormiston and their children included: Esther (b.1791); and Robert (b.1794). Robert (18th/19th C.) Slater in Hawick. His employee David Reid was recorded on the ballot for the Militia in 1801. Robert (18th/19th C.) farmer at 'Swin' in Kirkton Parish, possibly the same place as 'Swinted'. He is recorded there on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1797 as owner of 2 horses. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Stonedge in Hobkirk Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. Robert (19th C.) married Margaret Miller in Hobkirk in 1833. Robert (b.1816/7) originally from Maxton, he married Helen Redpath in Hobkirk in 1840. He was living at Weens Cottages with his wife Helen (from Hobkirk) in 1851 and 1861. His mother Mary was living with them in 1861. Robert (b.1837/8) drystane dyker in the Hawick area around the 1860s. In the 1861 census he was in Wilton Parish, married to Mary and with daughter Janet. Robert Tait (d.1958) baker and rugby player. He played prop and was capped 7 times for Scotland in 1929 and 1930. He married Jenny Ferguson, who wrote the music for 'Hurrah! For the Cornet'. Spending some time in Manchester, in the late 1930s he returned to Hawick and took over the bakery business of W. & R. Johnstone on Bridge Street. Ronald 'Ron' High School Geography teacher who was Assistant Headteacher 1984–2002. He has been heavily involved in Hawick R.F.C., co-editing 'The Green Machine: 125 years of Hawick rugby' (1998) and also 'Glimpses of Green' (2002). He was a Scottish Borders Councillor and from 2011 until 2013 served as Hawick’s Honorary Provost. He was Rotary Club President from 2020 and also an Elder of Teviot Church. Thomas (16th C.) name of 2 men recorded in 1541 on a list of tenants and other associates of James Douglas of Cavers when he complained about his farm of Whitriggs being burned by Walter Scott of Branxholme. They may have been related to Robert, who was also named. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Gray and their daughter Bessie was baptised in 1690. The witnesses were James Murray and William Smith. Thomas (17th/18th C.) born at Wells in Rulwater. He was described in 1717 as 'now keeper of ane puppie pleay' (perhaps a dog entertainment of some kind) when he was fined for assault in Hawick. Thomas (18th C.) footman at Knowe in Minto Parish in 1785, when he was working for Thomas Turnbull. Thomas (1757–1827) brother of Peter, it is unclear where the previous generation came from. He was tenant at Hartshaugh Mill when his children were baptised in 1785 and 1788. He was listed as miller on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he was owner of 2 horses. His son Archibald was listed on the Militia ballot in 1801. He is still listed as miller of Hartshaugh Mill in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He married Mary Scott, the ‘Flower of Rankleburn’. Their children were: Peter (b.1780), who married Ellen Turnbull of Harwood Mill; Patrick (b.1781); Robert; Archibald (b.1782), who later emigrated to America; Thomas (b.1784); Andrew (b.1785); Isobel (b.1787); Walter (b.1788), who may have died young; Betty (b.1790); Margaret (b.1791), who married William Crozier; Mary (b.1793), who married Robert Purdom of Hawick in 1817; and Jane (or ‘Jean’, b.1795), who married John Dalgliesh. He secondly married Jane (or ‘Jeany’) Oliver in Southdean Parish in 1807. Their children were: Oliver (b.1809), who married Helen Waters and emigrated to America; James (b.1810), who married Elizabeth Henderson; Mina, who married W. Telfer, farmer at Roundabouts; Elizabeth, who died in 1864, and may have been the same as Betty; William, who emigrated to New Zealand; and another Oliver, who may have been a twin of William and died young. He is probably the ‘T. Smith’ whose mother is recorded dying in Hobkirk in 1815. Thomas. (18th/19th C.) from England, in 1789 he married Margaret Paterson in Roberton Parish. Their son Thomas (b.1790) was baptised in Roberton. Thomas. (18th/19th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His children included James (b.1795). Thomas P. (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Heronhna near Southfield. In 1797 he married ‘Grizzle’ (or Grizel) Tait, the marriage being recorded in both Kirkton and...
Wilton Parishes. They had 5 children: Sir Andrew (1797–1872), army surgeon and famous zoologist; Joan (b.1800); Barbara (b.1802); James (b.1804); and Agnes Anne (b.1807). All their children were baptised in Kirkton Parish. He may be the Thomas whose son James was baptised in Hobkirk Parish in 1810. Rev. Thomas (1828–1901) born at Powfoot in Dumfriesshire, son of John and Marion Murray. He was educated at Edinburgh University and licensed by Annan Presbytery. He was ordained as minister of Ewes Kirk 1853 and remained there until his death. In 1856 he married Margaret, daughter of William Sutherland Fraser, jeweller in Edinburgh. Their children were: Agnes (1857–1913), who married Alexander Simson from Melrose; and Marion (b.1860), who married James Calder, doctor in Jamaica. Thomas (b.1827/8) born in Cavers Parish, son of blacksmith James. He was a watchmaker on the Howegate (near the top of the east side), listed in the 1851 census and in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Isabella. Thomas ‘Tom’ (b.1837) son of James and Elizabeth Henderson, and grandson of miller Thomas. He is recorded as a keen follower of the Jedforest Hunt in the latter part of the 19th century. He was tenant farmer at Tythehouse in Hobkirk Parish. He married a distant cousin, Mary Smith. Their children were: James Turnbull; Elizabeth; Thomas, the eldest son was James. Thomas (b.c.1805) agricultural labourer in Hobkirk Parish, included Helen and Isabella. His mother may have been Helen. He was a widower by 1851. Walter (d.1840) weaver in Hawick. Walter (19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. He married Elizabeth Taylor in 1836 and their daughter Janet was baptised in 1837. Walter (b.c.1805) agricultural labourer in Hobkirk Parish. He was at Hallrule in 1841. His wife was Margaret and their children included Janet (b.1829/30), John (b.1831/2), Andrew (b.1836/7) and Isabella (b.1839/40). Walter (19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. He married Margaret ‘Phorson’ and their son Robert was baptised in 1852. William (16th C.) servant to Walter Scott of Branxholme. In 1581 he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk involving John Geddes in Branxholme. William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Marion ‘Hellin’ and their children included: George (b.1656); and Agnes (b.1660). Probably the same William witnessed a baptism for Thomas in 1690. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living in Denholm in 1721, 1723, 1726 and 1729. He may be the William who got married in Kirkton in 1712 (with no wife’s name given). His children may have included Margaret (b.1713), Marion (b.1715), George (b.1721), John (b.1723), Helen (b.1726), Euphan (b.1729), Bessie (b.1731) and Jane (b.1735). Perhaps the same William was recorded at Denholm in 1715. William ‘Wull the Cutler’ (1766–c.1833) son of John and Betty ‘Chine’ and was related to the Hawick family that produced 2 Cornets in the 19th century. He was a wright by trade, making the first ‘spinning jennies’ in Hawick. He was known as a very snappy dresser in the late 18th century, and was particularly vain about his hair. He apparently took the first taste of the ‘Auld Brig gin’ (a keg of water) in the joke perpetrated on the exciseman by W. Inglis. He took up fishing late in life. He is listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory as ‘cutler & basket maker’ on the High Street. He was nephew of Catherine Cheyne, who was long-time domestic servant of the Gledstains of Hilliesland; from her he gained possession of the ‘Gledstane Bible’, which he passed on to merchant Andrew Irvine. There is a portrait of him by Adam Brown – ‘Auld Cash and Tufty blithely trip, Lean Yeddie Gibson’s creel is full, Jamie Tamson and John the Dip Gang hand in hand wi’ Cutler Wull’[III]. William (b.c.1780) wright in Hawick according to the ballot for the Militia in 1801. It is unclear how he was related to other Smiths. William (b.c.1785) born in Oxnam Parish, son of John. He was probably brother of James, blacksmith in Hawick. He was a blacksmith in Denholm, listed on Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He is also listed in 1835 as a joint proprietor in Denholm with William Barrie, hosier. He probably lived on Westside. His wife was Elizabeth Anandale, and their children included Catherine and Margaret. He may be the William, at Hayknowe, whose model plough (for which he won a premium at Kelso in 1848) was presented to the Museum in 1857. William (19th C.) perhaps born on the English side of the Border, he married Mary, daughter of William Laidlaw in Hobkirk Parish in 1827. Their children were: James; Joan; William; Helen (b.1829), who married William Stewart in Hawthornside;Thomas (b.1831); Anne (b.1833); and Mary (b.1836). His sister Mary married William Redpath, who worked at Weens. William (19th C.) blacksmith of Hawick, probably son of James. He is listed in the 1835 electoral roll as joint tenant along with James. In Pigot’s 1837 directory ‘Jas. & Wm. Smith’ are listed as blacksmiths on Melgund Place. He does not appear on the censuses of 1841–61, but is listed in Rutherford’s 1866 directory as blacksmith on Melgund Place. William (b.1803/4) from Stow, he was a mason living at Comonside Bankhead in 1841 and ‘Bowanhillbridge’ in 1851. His wife was Isabel and their children included Bridget, William, Alexander, Adam and Helen. William (19th C.) married Jane Whillans in Southdean in 1855. William (b.1822/3) from England, he was listed as ‘Railway Gaffer’ in Newcastleton in 1861. He was on South Hermitage Street, lodging with carter Francis Scott. He is probably the Bill Smith who was in charge of bringing the first locomotive engine by road from Carlisle; the engine bogged down in mud and toppled a number of times, falling on him and killing him. William (b.1831/2) from Selkirk, son of John and Margaret. In 1861 he was a ploughman living at Easter Fodderle Cottages in Hobkirk Parish. He was already a widower and had children Isabella (b.1856/7) and John (b.1857/8). William (19th C.) farmer at Learmouth, Cornhill. In the 1860s he was a non-resident voter in Cavers Parish. Rev. William Grierson (d.1870) born in Edinburgh, eldest son of James. He was educated at Glasgow University and ordained minister of Fintry in 1840. He was presented to Ashkirk Parish by Gilbert John, Earl of Minto and became minister there in 1861. He married Hannah Grierson of Bridgenorth, who died in 1891. They had a son Alfred William, who died young. He wrote a description of Fintry Parish. Rev. William (b.1840) born in Oldhamstocks, son of David and Ann Thompson. He graduated M.A. from the University of Edinburgh in 1868. He was licentiate at Saughtree Kirk 1870–77. He was ordained as minister of Dunsyre in 1877. William Walter (1852–1942) born in Hawick, son of gamekeeper Thomas and Ellen Robson. He worked as gardener in various English country houses and emigrated to New Zealand in about 1875. He continued to work as a gardener. He held the view that many native species would be driven extinct by the effects of colonisation and so began to collect native plants, insects, Maori artefacts and other items. He wrote extensive notes, some of which were published, and several species were named after him. In 1903 he was appointed to the commission charged with putting the Scenery Conservation Act into effect. He was later appointed curator of Pukekura Park, New Plymouth. It appears he was not easy to work with, holding down positions typically for only a few years at a time. However, he remained a sought-out authority on New Zealand natural history until his death, at New Plymouth, in his 90th year. He married Mary Foreman and had at least 7 children. Rev. William (1855–91) born in St. Fergus, Peterhead, son of a blacksmith. He studied at the Free Church College in Aberdeen and was ordained by the English Presbyterian Church in Scarborough. He then assisted at several churches, included Roberton. He came to Wolfelee Free Kirk to help while Rev. William Russell was ill in 1890. He was then inducted in 1891 (although some of the congregation objected that he was not himself in good enough health to take on the full task). He collapsed in the middle of his second sermon as minister and died about a month later, leaving a widow and young child. He married Agnes Shewan Kerr and their only child was John Kerr (b.1890), who died in infancy. William (1893/4–1915) son of John and Annie Cowan, brother of Elliott and James. He became a calico designer in Manchester, but enlisted with the Territorials in Hawick, becoming a Corporal in the 1/4th K.O.S.B. He was killed at Gallipoli in the disastrous offensive of 12th July 1915. His name is recorded on the Helles Memorial (for his death by suffocation – ‘For the enimie hæs smitet my liffe doun til the gruund: he hæs smitet my liffe doun til the gruund...’ [HSR]).

Smithie fri Sootherfield (smi-thee-fri-sooth-feeld) n. local nickname for Sir Andrew Smith.

smoch (smo-ch) v., arch. to emit stifling smoke, n., arch. thick, stifling smoke, such as from burning rotten wood.

the Smoker (thu-smo-kur) n. specific social gathering with entertainment, often referring to the congratulatory smoker held for the Cornet-elect on Picking night. This is recorded as happening after the Tuesday night Picking of the Cornet in 1888, but may have happened from much earlier times. The Callants’ Club have organised this event since 1904. There are speeches and songs and the Cornet is presented with his badge. The term is also used to refer to other smokers.

and ran bus service for about 50 years. They acquired the Borders-based company Brooke and Amos in 1926 and later Adam Graham and the Border Motor Transport Co. As well as the Edinburgh to Carlisle service, they ran bus lines around Hawick, as well as transporting mill workers. The firm became Scottish Omnibuses in 1949 and the local fleet was known as Eastern Scottish. The colours of the bus fleet were a distinctive green, later becoming green and cream. After de-regulation of bus services, the name of the operator (and the quality of service) changed several times, e.g. to Lowland Scottish and First. The offices were in Oliver Place and the main bus depot was in Dovestone Street, which closed in the 1980s.

smudge (smu̇dʒ) v., arch. to laugh in a suppressed way, laugh to oneself, smirk – ‘Then with new keenness wad they caper, He slyly smudg’d to see them vaper ...’ [CPM], ‘...still Buffin an smudgin inti eis sel’ [ECS], n., arch. a suppressed laugh – ‘Loth. Roxb. Clydes. often ‘a smudge o’ a laghi’ [JoJ].

smuggle (smu̇g-gul) v., arch. to carry by concealment in a ‘Baa’ game, to dispose of the ‘geg’ in a boy’s game, n., arch. a scrimmage in handball in which the ball is concealed in order to try to ‘hail’ it.

smuggle-the-geg (smu̇g-gul-thu̇g-geg) n., arch. a game formerly played by boys in which an agreed upon article (the ‘geg’) is concealed by one team, the other team trying to find the boy who has the article.

smuggling (smu̇g-lin, -gu̇n-lin) n. smuggling, the trade in goods without paying duties. This was rampant in the Hawick area in the 17th and 18th centuries and on into the 19th. Before the Union, the difference in duties meant that salt, skins and malt were smuggled into England, and wool smuggled into Scotland. In the 18th and early 19th centuries there was a brisk local business in smuggling whisky south of the Border, because of the large difference in duties. This was particularly after the increase on whisky duty in 1799. The favourite source of goods locally was from Capt. Daniel Fleury, who would land his boat at Boulmer in Northumberland, from where ‘Boomersmen’ would secretly carry goods over the Border. There was also a vigorous trade in black market salt, again encouraged by increased taxation. Smugglers were pursued by the excise officers. In the 18th century there was a collector, 2 supervisors and 18 officers in Teviotdale, and by the 19th century there were 28 mounted Revenue Officers employed in Roxburghshire. 	former church in the Borthwick valley, built shortly after the Disruption of 1843 as Robertson Free Church, also known as Robertson United Pres-yterian Kirk. The dissenting congregation first held meetings in the joiner’s yard at Dearnburn-haugh, before being given the ground at Parkhillhaugh by John Chisholme, with the church being built very quickly. It was reached from the main road via a footbridge. By 1852 the declining rural population meant that the church was reduced to a preaching station; it picked up again later, but always had a struggling existence. It switched from Selkirk Presbytery to Jedburgh Presbytery in 1880. The building was renovated in 1908/9, SNUFFIN (snu-fin) n., arch. the act of taking snuff.

THE SNUFFIN (thu-snu-fin) n. ceremony taking place at the Kirkstile, near the site of the western end of the Auld Brig, early on the Friday morning of the Common Riding. Snuff is dispensed to the waiting crowd, harkening back to an old social custom of passing round the snuff box during some convenient halt in any proceedings. There is also a more fanciful story told that when the band returned from Hornshole in 1514 they found an old man partaking of snuff on the Auld Brig (long before tobacco came to the old world!). Formerly the ceremony took place on the Thursday evening on the Auld Brig, and was simply a private habit indulged in by the Burgh Officers and band members. It slowly became an accepted part of the traditions. After the Auld Brig was demolished in 1851 it was discontinued for several years, but subsequently restarted through the efforts of William Norman Kennedy, who provided a horn mull. The Thursday evening ceremony ceased in the 1870s. In 1881 the ceremony is recorded involving ‘many hundreds’. The ceremony was again revived by the Ceremonial Committee in 1887, when the sons of W.N. Kennedy undertook to again be at the Snuffing with their father’s horn mull. George O. Murray also provided a horn mull in 1889, or possibly just the snuff. Since those days the Snuffing has grown in popularity, was extended to the Friday morning, and now is restricted to the Friday morning only. The original horn mull is still in use. Since 1921 the song-singer has been in charge of distributing loose snuff from the horn, in a melee at the Kirkstile, protected by two bodyguards! This happens when the Drums and Fifes reach the site of the Auld Brig, shortly after 6 a.m. After the Song Singer reaches the Tower Knowe he throws small packets of snuff down from a window to the people below; these packets are highly sought after, even although the taking of snuff is now a thing of the past. It is traditional for the crowds to disperse to nearby hosteries for rum and milk refreshments afterwards. There is a short film clip showing the Snuffing of 1905 and others in 1929, 1932, 1933, 1934 and 1937 – ‘It was mebbe a melee ootseide beyond the common riding ...’ [HEx1966], ‘At Snuffin’ when ee hear the drum End of eev hed milk an rum Want ti laugh, want ti greet, Want ti be nimble on eer feet’ [MB], ‘A had never ever seen the Snuffin ceremony until the first time that A turned up’ [HD].

Somerville

for resetting him in his crimes. Mary nee Fairfax (1780–1872) daughter of Sir William Fairfax (one of Nelson’s Captains), who lived at Burntisland in Fife, she was born in the Manse at Jedburgh, home of her mother’s sister Martha Charters and Rev. Thomas Somerville. In 1804 she married a naval officer, Samuel Greig (Russian Consul for Britain, whose father had been the man who had brought Hobkirk’s Adam Armstrong to Russia), who was a distant cousin; he died 3 years later. She was a regular visitor in Jedburgh where she was taught Latin and other subjects by her uncle. She was in Jedburgh on the evening of the False Alarm of 1804.
