Mark (16th C.) Burgess of Selkirk. In 1531 he gave up all claims to the lands of Philiphaugh, in favour of Robert Turnbull, tutor of Philiphaugh. Also in 1531 he had a precept of sasine read out in which Patrick Murray of Falahill granted him lands in Selkirk. Additionally in 1531 he witnessed an agreement between Scotts and Veitches regarding Synton. He was probably the Mark who in 1530 headed a list of men from the Selkirk area who acknowledged that they had taken men, horses, meal and other goods from travellers they thought were traitors from Moffat had returned all the goods. He was probably the Mark who witnessed a document for the Scotts of Headshaw in 1531. In 1531/2 and 1532 he was a Bailie in Selkirk. He was probably the son of Robert and Elizabeth Gledstains recorded in 1533, when his mother gave up her liferent of a tenement to the church. His heir Thomas witnessed a document in 1535 and he himself witnessed a further document in 1536. He may be the Mark who purchased a husbandland (occupied by Alexander Scott) from Patrick Murray in 1536 and a maltkin and yard from Peter Porteous. He may be the same man as Mark of Kippielaw. Mark (16th C.) recorded ‘in Kippelaw’ when he witnessed a court case in Selkirk in 1534. In 1535 he bound himself to discharge George Mitchellhill and William Bement of contracts, as well as acts made with Melrose Abbey through John Scott in Thirlestane. He also witnessed a document relating to John Rutherford of Hunthill in 1535. Also in 1535 he and Robert Turnbull agreed to each hold half of the lands of ‘Philhop’ (but Philiphaugh is probably meant) until John Turnbull (son and heir of the deceased Ralph) came into entry of the lands; they held the wardship of John Turnbull and it seems that he received Robert Turnbull’s half ‘by reason of an omission of his marriage contract’. In 1536/7 John Turnbull of Philiphaugh (then described as his nephew) came of age, and appointed him as curator for his lands. In 1537 he renounced his claims over a maltkiln in Selkirk, in favour of Peter Porteous. He is listed among the friends who would vouch for Alan Mithag in 1539/40. He was one of the men indicted in 1552 for involvement in the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme on Edinburgh High Street, along with several Kerrs and others. His son and heir Thomas is recorded in an undated document from the 1550s resigning lands in Midlem to his younger son Andrew. He and his son Robert of Lochtoure were named in the 1564/5 bond between the Kerrs and the Scotts; his name appears as ‘Mark Ker of Kippeschaw’.

It is possible he is the same man as the contemporary Burgess of Selkirk. Thomas in Kippielaw, who is recorded in 1562/3, was his son and heir. An inventory of his ‘gudis and geiris’ was made in 1579, with his son Thomas and grandson Robert mentioned; he was at that time ‘seik in body and hail in mynd’. Mark ‘Markie’ (16th C.) brother of Lancelot of Gateshaw. In 1588 he and William of Hayhope were accused of wounding William Methven, minister of Langton. Sir Mark (16th C.) son of John of the Hirsel and Littledean. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir John Home of Cowdenknowes. He died without issue and his widow secondly married Sir David Home of Wedderburn. Mark (16th/17th C.) younger son of Walter of Littledean. He was probably trained in the priesthood, since he was known as ‘Mr.’ In 1588 he was appointed Commendator of Coldstream Abbey. He was also Commissary of Lauder and owner of the lands of Brotherstanes. His son Andrew was the first Ker of Morriston in Berwickshire. Mark (17th/18th C.) gardener at ‘Newtoun Kerr’ in Bedrule Parish. In Edinburgh in 1712 he married Agnes, daughter of Edinburgh gardener John Weir. Matthew (15th/16th C.) agent appointed by George, son of Robert Scott of Whames in an action of 1505, where George claimed his father’s lands of Muirhouse in the Barony of Crichton. Ralph of Primside Loch (15th/16th C.) 2nd son of Andrew of Cessford. However, he may be confused with the son of Thomas of Kersheugh and Ferniehirst. He may be the ‘Radulpho Ker, fratri Wateri Ker de Cesfurd’ in 1484 when he was one of the men directed by the Earl of Angus to infeft Robert Elliot of Redheugh in certain lands, the ‘Radulpho Ker’ who was a bailie appointed by Alexander, Lord Home, to infeft Andrew Ker (perhaps his father) in the lands of Crailling and Hownam in 1484, and also the ‘Radulpho Ker de Primsye louch’ further directed in 1489. He is probably the ‘Radulfo
Ker

Car’ who leased the lands of Broadmeadows in 1488. Also in 1488/9, he and his brother Walter were directed by the King to infeft George Douglas, Master of Angus, in lands in Berwickshire. In 1491 he was mentioned in a document relating to the lands of Ruecastel and he and his wife were mentioned in relation to the lands of Middlestead. He may be the ‘Radulpho Ker’ who acted as surety several times at the Justice-aires held in Jedburgh in 1493 and 1494/5, as well as at Selkirk in 1494/5. In 1494 he was ‘Radulphum Ker’ when he was on the panel for the inheritance of Synton. He who was part of a bond in 1498 to act upon men who were already fugitives (also agreed by his son Andrew and by William Turnbull of Minto, among others). In 1499 he was recorded as ‘Radulphus’ brother of Walter of Cessford in a document relating to George, Master of Angus. Also in 1499 he was tenant in Broadmeadow, Baillielee and half of Phaup in Etrick. In 1501 he served as pledge for Sir Thomas Turnbull. In 1501/2, along with his wife, he had the gift of the ward of ‘Hownum, Cesfurd, Caverton and Primsid’ through the decease of Walter of Cessford; he is recorded as being ‘of Prymsidloch’. In 1502 he was surety for several Olivers and a Waugh who had killed Robert Brig and Adam ‘Barnisfader’ at ‘Kelslop’. In the same year he was also involved in a respite with William Ker and James Elliot in ‘Quhitmere’ and Alexander and Patrick Gray in Greenhead, involving thefts by the Elliots. Also in 1502 he had a charter of appraisal for the lands of Falside in Jedforest after being yielded by George Douglas, Master of Angus for not delivering one of his tenants to court. Additionally he was also surety for the Douglasses of Swinside and for Lawrence Rutherford, as well as being fined for failing to produce a riever. He may be the Ralph ‘in le grenehed’ who was fined in 1502 for failing to enter Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule. He held the lease of Broadmeadow, Ploro and Berrybush in 1502. And in that year both William Scott in Fenwick and James Scott in Ashkirk had remission for stealing livestock from his farm at Cauldshiels. In 1503 he had a financial agreement with George Douglas, Master of Angus, done in Jedburgh, with the procurator being Gavin Douglas, Provost of St. Giles. In 1506 he had a charter for lands in Etrick. In 1506/7 he was one of the men to whom Walter Scott of Howpasley, tutor to the Laird of Buchleuch, had to give in his accounts. In 1509 he and his wife Margaret Rutherford sold lands in Heiton. Also in 1509 he was ‘de Prymsidlowich’ in an agreement with George Douglas, Master of Angus, done at his house of ‘Grenheid’. In 1510 his son Andrew was declared a rebel and his goods forfeited after he failed to appear for killing John Brown, assisted by William in Whitmore and his brother James. Also in 1510 he was involved in an indenture, along with Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst, with the Erskines, over lands in Synton; for 400 merks they bought a 20 merk land in Synton Mains, as well as another 20 merk land within Synton, rights to take over the lands of Walter Scott of Synton later, plus lands in Nisbet. Another condition was that the Erskine’s would not sell any neighbouring lands to John Murray of Falahill (his brother-in-law), for reasons that are unspecified. He married Margaret, daughter of Patrick Murray of Falahill and secondly married Margaret Rutherford. His children included: Andrew of Greenhead and Primsid; George of Cavers Carre, who was probably father of Thomas of Cavers Carre; William, Commendator of Kelso; and John, recorded in 1553. Ralph (15th/16th C.) brother of Thomas, Abbot of Kelso. He may be the same as Ralph of Primsid (although it appears that 2 nearly contemporary men of the same name are sometimes confused). In 1532 he was granted a tack of the lands of Cavers Carre by his brother Thomas. He married Marion Haliburton, and their armorial bearings were carved in stones saved from the old house and built into the new one in 1800. His eldest son was George. Ralph of Lintalee (16th C.) recorded having the tack of Lintalee in 1541. He is also recorded as juror on a retour in 1560. He was probably succeeded by James of Lintalee. Ralph (16th C.) one of the men indicted in 1552 for involvement in the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch. He is recorded as ‘Rafe Ker’, but it is unclear where he was from. Ralph (16th C.) entered into ward in England ‘for the bill of Newton’, with a bond given by Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme, sometime during the time of the Regent Moray. In 1573 he broke his ward and was with Lord Hay of Yester, with Sir Walter’s bond forfeited. It is possible that he was the Ralph, son and heir of Thomas of Dalcove and Shaws, who in 1581 married Janet, daughter of Walter of Littledean; he was given most of Dalcove and Shaws, with his father keeping 2 husbandlands of Dalcove that were occupied by the Newton family. He could be the ‘Raulff Ker of Shaw’ who escaped from Edinburgh Tolbooth in 1590. In 1598 there were bonds to resolve a feud between him and Haig of Bemersyde. He was recorded as a juror.
in retours of 1600 and 1601. He is probably the 'Raiff Ker of Schawis' who signed ('with our hand at the pen') a bond among Border Lairds in 1602. He may also have married Alison Ker of Primside. Ralph (16th C.) servant of Mark Kerr, Commendator of Newbattle. In 1597/8 he was 'Rauff Ker' when his master complained that he had been attacked and captured by Scots from Gamescleuch, Glack and 'Jedwartfeild'. Richard of Altonburn (d.1437/8) son of Robert and grandson of Henry (although these generations are confused). He had a charter for several lands from the Earl of Douglas in 1412. As well as Altonburn, he held 'Wawtyswelys' and 'Quitebankedene', in the regality of Sprouston. He may be the Richard 'Kere' who witnessed an agreement between the Rules of Primside and the Kers of Altonburn in 1432. He appears to have died without issue and was succeeded by his brother Andrew of Cessford and Altonburn in 1438 (even although Andrew appears to have been known as 'of Altonburn' before that). Richard of Gateshaw (d.1577) brother of George and younger son of Lancelot. He was named in the 1564/5 bond between the Kers and the Scotts, trying to end the family feud. In 1565 he was charged for disobeying the Warden of the Middle Marches. He had sasine for lands in Primside from Walter Ker of Cessford in 1566/7 and was infested as heir to his brother. In 1571 he entered into a contract with Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. His children included: Lancelot; who succeeded: James; Adam; and a daughter, who married Elliot of Larriston. He made his will in 1576. Robert of Altonburn (14th/15th C.) probably son of Henry. In 1404 he had a charter for the lands of Smailholm and others from Archibald, 4th Earl of Douglas. He had 2 sons: Richard, who appears to have died without issue; and Andrew, who succeeded after the death of his brother. Sir Robert of Caverton (d.1500), younger of Cessford, eldest son of Walter. In 1490 he had the lease of Bowerhope in Ettrick Ward. In 1490/1 he had a charter for lands in the Barony of Haldane. He is probably the Sir Robert who was on the panel for Walter Scott inheriting the Branxholme and Buccleuch titles and lands in 1492. He acted as surety at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493 and was also fined for non-appearance. And he was probably the Sir Robert who acted as one of the sureties in 1494/5 for Robert Langlands after the murder of chaplain George Fairneylaw, paying £20 when Langlands failed to appear. He was Master of the King’s Artillery to James IV and Warden of the Middle Marches. In 1499 he was tenant of Singlie, Erncleugh, Alttrieve and Bowerhope, along with his father. He was murdered by 8 Northumbrians, who were imprisoned in Fust Castle until they died. He married Christian Rutherford of that Ilk. Since he died before his father the Cessford titles and estates were inherited by his son Sir Andrew. Another son was Thomas of ‘Marsingtoun’. Robert ‘in cavertoun’, recorded in 1502, may also have been related. Robert (15th/16th C.) 4th son of Andrew of Cessford and Altonburn. He was Abbot of Kelso 1468–1506. He and his brother Ralph had sheep stolen from their farm at Cauldshiel by William Scott in Fenwick. Robert (d.bef. 1526) tenant in Sunderlandhall. He purchased Ashybank from Sir William Douglas of Cavers and sold it back to him in 1498. Possibly the same Robert ‘de Sonderlandhall’ was on the panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting the lands of Alemoo. Probably the same deceased Robert of Sunderlandhall was recorded in 1526/7 when his son and heir Thomas is mentioned in a document in the Selkirk Protocol Books. In 1530 his widow Margaret Hunter assigned lands near Selkirk to her 2nd son, James. Robert (d.bef. 1533) Burgess of Selkirk. In 1533 his widow Elizabeth Gedstains resigned her tenement and orchard into the hands of her son Mark and Bailie James Scott, to donate them to the chapel in Selkirk. It is possible he was the ‘Robert Carre of Selkrigge’ listed among men who were to mediate between Archibald Douglas, 6th Earl of Angus and his wife, Margaret, Queen of Scotland, in an agreement of 1517. Robert of Crookedshaws (16th C.) probably son of James of Linton. He is probably the ‘brother german’ of George of Linton recorded in a record in Selkirk in 1524. He was a Burgess of Edinburgh, having that right through marrying Elizabeth, daughter of farrier John Harvey. They had a son George. Robert of Graden (16th C.) listed as ‘Robert Car of Greyden’ when he signed a bond of assurance with Somerset at Kelso in 1547, along with many other Border lairds. He is listed as ‘Robin’ in 1547/8 among the Kers who burned lands in Ale Water belonging to Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme, the raid led by supporters of the Lairds of Cessford and Ferniehirst. It is unclear how he was related to other Kers. He may be the ‘Robin Ker, broder to the Laird of Fernierst’ who was said to have sided with Sir Ralph Evers at ‘Lylzeartis Croce’ (i.e. Ancrum Moor) in 1545. He was ‘Robert Carr of Greyden’ in 1544/5 when said to have been put to the horn for the slaughter of the Rutherfords. He may also be the Robert, brother of Walter of Graden, who witnessed a charter other Kers involving Primside in 1537. He is probably the Laird of Graden named in the 1560 bond to settle the feud between the Kerrs and the Rutherfords; in the same bond there were arrangements made for addressing a broken marriage contract involving him, together with Rutherford of Hunthill and Ker of Newhall. He may be the Robert of Graden who was one of those excepted in the 1564/5 bond between the Scotts and the Kerrs. Robert of Lochtour (16th C.) son of Mark of Kippielaw. He and his father were named in the 1564/5 bond between the Kerrs and the Scotts. Robert of Newhall (16th C.) listed on the bond of 1560 to settle the feud between the Kerrs and the Rutherfords. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. He had apparently been responsible for the murder of William Rutherford of Longnewton and was to come to Ancrum Kirk and offer his sword to George, son of William of Longnewton. He married Margaret Rutherford and had 5 sons and 3 daughters, including: Andrew, who succeeded to Newhall; and James and Robert, mentioned in relation to harassment of the tenants of Longnewton in 1595. Robert (16th C.) brother of the Laird of Greenhead. In 1552 he was one of the men indicted for involvement in the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. He could be the ‘Robet Ker, elder, burges of Edinburght’ named in the 1564/5 bond between the Kerrs and the Scotts. He is probably the ‘Roberte Carr sone to the Lorde of Grenehede’ listed in 1541 among Kerrs, Scotts and others who were accused of leading a raid on Mindrum and Hethpool. Robert (16th C.) son of Thomas of Kippielaw. He is mentioned as executor for his grandfather Mark of Kippielaw in 1579. In 1581 he was involved with a transaction between his father and younger brother John, regarding lands in Bowden, Bewlie and Lilliesleaf. He was a servant to Sir Walter of Cessford in the period 1581–87. He is probably the Robert of Kippielaw who in 1594 was surety for Arthur Scott of Gamescleuch to answer a complaint against him by William Cranston, younger of that ilk. He married Agnes Pringle. Robert (16th C.) son of Gilbert of Primside Loch. In 1581 he represented his father and their tenants in an agreement to pay the minister of Selkirk. Robert (16th C.) local cleric. He was titular Archdeacon of Teviotdale after the Reformation and is so recorded in 1582. He was minister at Linton, Mow, Yetholm, Morebattle and Hownam. Robert (16th C.) recorded in 1582 as lawful son to the deceased Thomas of Yair. His brother James had a warning to accept redemption money from Andrew of Yair. Robert (16th/17th C.) recorded in Yair in 1617 when he was listed among the supporters of the Scotts of Yair in their feud with the Scotts of Bonnington. Robert (d.1622) recorded as being ‘in Bewlie’. He was executed in Edinburgh for perjury. He had apparently been bribed to lie by Andrew Turnbull in Belses in a case of stealing he brought against the Middlemasses. Robert (16th/17th C.) portioner of Farnington. In 1621 his son John was among a list of associates of John Ker of Langnewton who were accused of attacking John Haliburton of Muirhouselaw and others. Sir Robert ‘Habbie’ (1570–1650) of Cessford and 1st Earl of Roxburghe, son of Sir William of Cessford. He was committed to ward in 1587 for incursions on the Border. He was knighted at the coronation of Queen Anne in 1590. Also in 1590 he killed William Kerr of Ancrum, part of the feud between the Kerrs of Cessford and the Kerrs of Ferniehirst; however, in 1591 he obtained a remission for his involvement. He was Deputy Warden of the Scottish Middle March from about 1594 to 1603, and assisted his father as Deputy Warden before that. He served as Keeper of Lidlesdale in 1591–92 and Deputy Keeper in 1593. In 1594 he, along with Alexander Lord Home and Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme, he had a commission to raise men to fight against the Earl of Bothwell and his followers. He was an extremely powerful Baron and carried on a great feud with the English Warden Robert Carey; although they apparently grew to respect one another after he was a prisoner of Carey’s at Berwick. In 1595 he was denounced as a rebel for failing to present Andrew of Newhall. In 1595/6 there was an interim reconciliation between him and Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst and Thomas of Cavers Carre over the murder of William of Ancrum. In 1596 his sureties were Robert, Lord Crichton and Andrew of Romano Grange. He was a Privy Councillor in 1596 and 1599. He was Warden of the Middle March in 1600 when listed among leaders ordered to appear before the Privy Council to give advice about peace on the Border. There is a document of about 1600 recording a challenge on him by Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme, with the combat to involve only short swords; it is unclear if either party was injured, but it could not have been very serious. He was created Lord Roxburghe in 1600, accompanied James VI when he ascended the English throne, and was made the Earl of Roxburghe in 1616. He was Bailie.
of Kelso Abbey in 1602 and appointed his son as Commendator. In 1605 and 1606 there were formal apologies to the Kerrs of Ferniehirst (for the death of William of Ancrum) and compensation of 10,000 merks, which effectively ended the family feud. In 1606 he was served heir to his father Sir William, and in 1610 inherited further lands, including Hassendeanbank, which he resigned to the Baron in 1643 (probably to be regranted). In 1618 he was listed among commissioners appointed by the King to keep law and order in Teviotdale and in 1619 was appointed with increased powers. He was served heir to his grandfather Walter of Cessford, in the lands of Cessford Mains in 1623. His Book of Family and Household expenses for the period 1619–30 shows much of what life was like for a wealthy Border Laird in this period. He was one of the overseers of the tutors for the children of Walter Scott, 2nd Earl of Buccleuch, who died in 1633. He was Lord Privy Seal of Scotland in 1637. His properties are listed in the 1643 valuation roll for the county, including land in Hassendean (valued at £550), Lilliesleaf (valued at £1060), Ancrum (valued at £1970), Bowden, Eckford, Kelso, Lindean, Makerston, Maxton, Morebattle, Roxburgh, Smallholm and Sprouston Parishes. He took part in the ‘Engagement’ of 1648 and was deprived of the office of Privy Seal. He married Margaret Maitland and then Jean Drummond. His children were: William, who died unmarried; Jean, who married her cousin John Drummond, 2nd Earl of Perth; Isabella, who married James Scrymgeour; Maria, who married Sir James Haliburton of Piteur, and James Carnegie, 2nd Earl of Southesk; and Henry, who married Margaret Hay, but died before his father. He was succeeded by his grandson Sir William Drummond, who changed his name to Ker. He died at Floors and was the first of the family to be buried at Bowden Kirk. He was effectively the last of the male line of Ker of Cessford. His daughters Maria and Isabella were served heir to their brother William in several lands in 1634 (including Alton near Hawick). Robert (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1617 along with ‘Lancie Airmestrang’ when they were claimed to be from his Majesty’s Guard when sent by the Scotts of Harden to remove Lady Bonnington from her house and lands at Newhouse on the Ettrick Water. He could be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (17th C.) son of Andrew of Faldonside. In 1632 he was served heir to his father in the Mains of Feu-Rule, also called Hallrule, with the mill there, plus Deanside and lands in Bowden. In 1648 he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire. Perhaps the same Robert ‘of Fadesaside’ was listed as owned of lands in Lindean Parish in 1678. Robert (d.1682) 3rd Earl of Roxburgh, son of William (who had been born Drummond). He was served heir to his father (as well as his mother) in 1675, inheriting a large amount of land in Roxburghshire and elsewhere, including Alton near Hawick and the office of Bailie of Ancrum, Lilliesleaf and Ashkirk. He paid the land tax for property in Ancrum Parish, Ashkirk Parish and several other parishes in 1678, as well as the teinds of Lilliesleaf Parish and the Kirklands of Bewlie. He married Margaret, daughter of John Hay, 1st Marquess of Tweeddale (her mother being Jane, daughter of Walter, 1st Earl of Buccleuch). His children included: Robert, who succeeded as 4th Earl; and John, who succeeded his brother. He may also have had another son, William, who was ‘brother-german to Roxburgh’ in the Darien Scheme list of 1695. He was lost at sea in the ship ‘Gloucester’ when it wrecked off Yarmouth Sands, while proceeding with the Duke of York from London to Leith. He is said to have cried out with an offer of money for a boat, and his butler tried to save him on his back, until grabbed by another drowning man. Robert of Gateshaw (17th C.) 10th Laird, he was son of John. He was a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire 1661–86. He was recorded in a bond in 1663. He represented the Hays of Errol in the funeral procession of Jean Ker, Countess of Roxburghe, in about 1675. His son John succeeded him and sold the estate to Sir William Scott of Ancrum. Robert (d.1696) 4th Earl of Roxburghe, eldest son of Robert, 3rd Earl. He was served heir to his father’s extensive lands and titles in 1684, including lands previously held by the Archdeacon of Teviotdale, the lands and advowson of Lilliesleaf Kirk, the office of Bailie of Ancrum, Lilliesleaf and Ashkirk, and Alton near Hawick. He also inherited his grandfather William’s lands of Hassendeanbank and Cappitrig. In 1695 he was appointed as one of the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire. He was succeeded by his younger brother John. Robert (d.bef. 1718) gardener in Hawick. In 1718 his daughter Janet married John, son of James Simpson and in 1721 his daughter Mary married cooper John Aitken. It is likely he had a son Robert, also a gardener, who married Jean Gledstains in 1721. He may also have been father of Margaret, who married gardener James Dunn, and for whom he witnessed a baptism in 1713. Robert (17th/18th C.) gardener in Hawick, possibly son of Robert. In 1741 he witnessed a baptism for weaver James White. In 1721 he married Jean, daughter of William Gledstains of Kirklands. Their children included Isobel (b.1723), Patrick (b.1725), Margaret (b.1727), William (b.1729), Janet (b.1731), Robert (b.1735) and Adam (b.1742). In 1731 the witnesses were William Tudhope and Robert Boyd and in 1742 were ex-Bailie James Scott and junior mason Andrew Turnbull. He may be the Robert who (along with James Gledstains) witnessed a baptism for Adam Scott in 1726. He is probably the gardener of that name who witnessed a baptism in 1737 for wright James Winthrope. He may be the Robert who was given part of the responsibility for collecting subscriptions ‘east the water’ to help pay for the Teviot Bridge in 1740, and who served as a Baillie in the 1740s and 50s. Robert (c.1709–55) 2nd Duke of Roxburgh, only son of John, the 1st Duke. He married his half-cousin Essex, daughter of Sir Roger Mostyn. He was succeeded by his son John (b.1740). He also had a son known as ‘Lord Robert’ (b.1747) and 3 daughters (none of whom married). Lt.-Col. Robert of Cockerton (1747–1781) younger son of Robert, 2nd Duke of Roxburgh and brother of John, 3rd Duke. He was known as ‘Lord Robert’. He was listed on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. He stood unsuccessfully as Roxburghshire M.P. in 1790, objecting to the addition of several people to the roll and the refusal of some of his supporters, claiming that he was ‘duly elected by a majority of legal voters’. Thomas of Gateshaw (15th C.) 3rd son of Andrew of Altonburn, with his mother being a Douglas of Cavers. He was recorded as owner of Gateshaw in 1451, being the first Ker of those lands. He may also have owned part of Primside. He was probably ancestor of later Kers of Gateshaw, perhaps being father of James. Thomas (15th/16th C.) son of Adam of St. Helen Shaw in Selkirk. In 1489 he was re-toured as heir to his father’s lands of ‘Sant Elene Shaw’, including ‘le Kyrk croft’, ‘Caponland’ and ‘Gersland’, by Ralph Ker, bailie to George Douglas, Master of Angus. Thomas (d.bef. 1534) recorded in documents preserved in the Selkirk Protocol Books. It is possible that he was a son of Sir Andrew of Cessford. In 1514 George Ker, Vicar of Morebattle (and Canon of Glasgow) invested him in the Archdeaconry of Teviotdale. About the same time he complained about his removal from the choir of Glasgow Cathedral. In 1516 he granted a dispensation to marry (within the usual bounds of consanguinity) to Ingram Elliot and Elizabeth Scott. He witnessed other documents in 1516 and 1520. He was recorded as Archdeacon of Teviotdale when he died, which was sometime before 1534. Thomas of Yair (16th C.) grandson of William. In 1523 he granted his grandfather’s lands of Stevinston in Peeblesshire from James Douglas, Earl of Morton. Witnesses included James and Robert Ker. In 1530/1 he gave sasine of his lands in Lindean. In 1531 he was in dispute with Patrick Murray of Falahill over the lands of Cranton Riddell. Also in 1531 he was an arbitrator for a feud between the Scotts and Veitches of Synton. In about 1532 he witnessed a marriage agreement between Gavin Elliot and Margaret McDougall. He could be the Thomas in Selkirk who in 1530 was part of a list of men from the Selkirk area who acknowledged that they had taken men, horses, meal and other goods from men they thought were traitors of Amandale, but understanding they were legitimate travellers from Moffat had returned all the goods. In 1532/3 he was witness to a request for an inquest into succession for the deceased John Scott of Roberton. In 1534 he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk for John Waugh of Heap. In 1535 he promised to take down a dyke impinging on Selkirk’s North Common. In 1536 he delivered money to Andrew of Primsideloch for redemption of lands. In 1539 he complained that men from Selkirk had perambulated the boundaries of Yair (presumably while marking their Common). Also in 1539 he witnessed a bond between Scotts regarding the illegitimacy of Thomas son of Adam Scott and took sasine for lands in Sekirk. He witnessed a document relating to Lord John Borthwick and Walter Ker of Cessford in 1543. He married Elizabeth Crichton and was succeeded by his son William. Thomas of Sunderlandhall (16th C.) recorded several times in the period 1531–37 as ‘Master Thomas’, suggesting he was a cleric of some sort. In 1531/2 he was part of an inquest to rule on a land arrangement in Selkirk. In 1533 he declared that he was lawfyl tenant of Sunderlandhall. In 1535 he promised to remove part of a dyke impinging on Selkirk Common. Also in 1535 he was on an assize for a dispute involving Rutherfords and Homes. In 1536 he came to the market cross in Selkirk to represent his ‘brother german’ Walter Scott, requested the debt to be repaid by Andrew Shortreed on behalf of Adam Gledstains. His name appears to be scored out and ‘Thomas’ could be an error for ‘William’. In 1536/7 he witnessed a document for Marion Pringle, widow of Andrew of Primside. In 1540 he witnessed a document for the Kers of Linton and of Whitmuirhall and another for the Pringles of Whitton. In the same year he witnessed William Brydon resigning the Vicarage of Auld Roxburgh in favour of Thomas, with witnesses including Gilbert of Primside, George of Linton and Andrew in Auld Roxburgh. His son John was recorded in 1543. He may have married a Ker of Boghaugh and was probably succeeded by another Thomas. Thomas of Yair (16th C.) son of William or possibly Ralph. He was listed as ‘Thomas Ker of the Yair’ in 1564 when listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the warden, Ker of Cessford. He was recorded in a dispute of about 1570, preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. He was probably succeeded by his son William. He is probably the Thomas of Yair who was deceased in 1581 when his lands in Selkirk are mentioned. His sons Robert and James are recorded in 1582. Thomas of Mersington (16th C.) son of James of Mersington. His lands were in Eckford Parish. He was recorded in 1557. In 1561 he was ‘eldest sone to James Ker of Mersington’ when listed among Border Lairds who appeared before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft. He, ‘his fader, bruder, and thair bairnis’ were named in the 1564/5 bond between the Kers and the Scotts. In 1571/2 he signed the bond to act against Borders thieves and signed the ‘Band of Roxburgh’ in 1573. In 1590 Thomas of Cavers Carre was surety for Andrew of Linton not to harm him. He is probably the Ker of Mersington listed among Lairds who appeared before the Privy Council in 1591 to promise to support the Warden of the Middle March. He was also a juror on a retour in 1591. He was probably succeeded by his son Thomas. Thomas of Kippielaw (16th C.) son of Mark. He was recorded in Kippielaw in 1562/3 when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk. In 1563 he was involved in deals for lands in Midlem, Bowden and Eildon, when his wife Bessie Ker is also recorded and he was also stated to be son and heir of Mark in Kippielaw. Additionally in 1563 his eldest daughter Margaret was one of 2 choices of wife offered to William Davidson by Walter Riddell of that Ilk. In the inventory of his father’s goods, he was listed as son and heir, with his own son Robert being next in line, and another son John being mentioned. In 1580 he received £30 in payment from Walter Scott of Headshaw for 10 bolls of oats. He was recorded in 1581 as grieve to Sir Walter of Cessford. In 1581 he was recorded in a financial arrangement with Andrew Douglas of Friarshaw. Also in 1581 his 2nd son John pronounced land in Bowden in favour of him, his wife Elizabeth and son Robert; in return he assigned the Kirklands of Bewlie and 2 acres in Lilliesleaf to his son John. He also had a daughter, Elisabeth, who married Thomas Pringle. Thomas (16th C.) presented as Archdeacon of Teviotdale in 1565, although these were very unclear times for such titles and benefices. He stayed in the office essentially until about 1572, when it pass to an unnamed person who was hostile to the Reformation. That was the end of the Archdeaconry of Teviotdale. Thomas of Dalcove and Shaws (16th C.) recorded in 1579 as son of the deceased Adam and brother of Elizabeth when he received sasine for his sister’s lands of St. Helen Shaw. Robert acted as bailie for the transaction and may have been related. He was a ward of Thomas of Mersington. He was mentioned in a transaction in Selkirk in 1580, involving the mill and lands of Shaws, and another involving a payment to him in Selkirk. He also witnessed other transactions in Selkirk in 1580. Also in 1580 he transferred ‘Schaw Milne’ from James Gowdie to Peter Sharp. He was recorded as Thomas of Dalcove in 1581, along with his son and heir Ralph, when they gave sasine of lands in Dalcove to Janet, daughter of Walter of Littledean as part of a marriage contract of Ralph with Janet. Additionally his son Ralph assigned to him 2 husbandlands in Dalcove occupied by the Newton family and he gave Ralph his lands of Shaws, reserving for himself a tenement in liferent. He married Isabel Ker. David, ‘son of Thomas Ker of Schawis’ was recorded in a disturbance in Merton Kirk in 1598/9, along with ‘Thomas Ker of Dalcowie’ (suggesting this was a different Thomas). Thomas of Sunderlandhall (16th C.) perhaps son of an earlier Thomas. He is recorded in 1580, along with his wife Margaret Ker. He gave sasine of lands to Thomas of Maisondieu and his wife Isobel Ker, with his brother Robert mentioned too. Also in 1580 he was principle tenant of Sunderland when he admitted Patrick Gray as his tenant and also when he witnessed an instrument giving John, Lord Flemming, sasine of half of Sunderland. In 1581 he and his wife Margaret Ker warned Thomas in Maisondieu and his wife Isabel to appear at Lindean Kirk to receive redemption money, and they also gave sasine of a tenement in Selkirk to George Mitchellhill. Also in 1581 he paid redemption money to James of Yair and Thomas Elliot in Yair, and sold a house and yard in Selkirk. In 1582 he acted as cautioner for James in Yair. He may be the Laird of Sunderlandhall listed among Borderers who appeared before the Privy Council in 1591 to promise to support the Warden of the Middle March. In 1600/1 he was cautioner for Gideon Murray of Elibank. He signed a bond to keep the peace in 1602. He may have been son of John of Whitmuirhall and grandson of an earlier Thomas. He was recorded in 1581 when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk. In 1581 he purchased lands in Dingleton from John Mabon; his wife Marion Ker is also mentioned in the agreement. Additionally he loaned money to Adam Marshall based on other lands in Dingleton. He could be the ‘Goodman of Qhuitmuirhall’ listed in 1590 among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. In 1590 his cautioner was Robert, Burgess of Edinburgh. Thomas of Cavers (d.c.1628) son of George, he was the 2nd Ker of Cavers Carre. He succeeded since his older brother Andrew predeceased their father. He may be the ‘Thomas Ker sumtyme of Caveris’ who was listed as a traitor along with Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst in 1571/2. In 1579 he witnessed transactions done at Riddell between the Scotts of Allanhau and Todrig and between Andrew Riddell and the Scotts of Todrig. He may have been the Thomas of Cavers who was recorded in the ‘pacification’ given to Sir Thomas of Ferniehirst and his followers in 1581 and who also witnessed a bond for the Elliots in 1581. In 1590 he was acquitted of the stealing cattle from Englishman Richard Fenwick, was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents, was accused of not keeping his bond to enter a Scottish prisoner and served as surety for Andrew of Linton. About 1590 he was listed among the landed men of the Borders and in the same year Patrick Murray of Falahill was his surety. In 1592 he was cautioner for the good behaviour of James Scott of Whithope; one of the signatories was his son and heir George. In 1594 he was temporarily imprisoned for not helping fight against the Earl of Bothwell and his supporters. In 1595/6 there was an interim reconciliation of him and Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst with Sir Robert, younger of Cessford, over the murder of William of Ancrum. In 1596 he brought a case against Englishmen for raiding his lands. He is recorded in a discharge of 1597 and on Monipennie’s list of Border Lairds about the same year. In 1599 there was a complaint that the clerk of the Sheriff of Roxburghshire had refused to register letters of horning against him raised by a Burgess of Edinburgh. In 1600 he was on the ‘retour’ for Ker of Cessford. In 1601 Adam Scott ‘the Peck’ was hanged for stealing from him at Nether Whitian (as well as a long list of other crimes), and he also complained against other Englishmen who had stolen sheep from him. Also in 1601 he was mentioned having about 8 years earlier been attacked and hurt as part of the feud between the Kers and Turnbulls. Additionally in 1601 he served as cautioner for Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst to present certain Turnbulls of Bewlie and elsewhere at Edinburgh Tolbooth; he had to pay 2000 merks, which the Laird of Ferniehirst was ordered to repay. A letter from Turnbull to him in 1602 discusses possession of Fulton and mentions a number of tenants in that area of Bedrule. In 1603 he had a charter from James V for the lands of Cavers Carre and others. Also in 1603 his brother John and other burgesses of Edinburgh served as sureties that after being freed from ward in Edinburgh Castle, he would pay his fines or re-enter; additionally his sureties to re-enter when requested were James Pringle of Galashiel, William Laude of Whit-slaid, Alexander Horsburgh of that Ilk, and his brother John. In 1607 he was surety for James Turnbull of Hassendeanbank. In 1611 he and his son George, along with Sir Andrew of Ferniehirst had complaints against them by Hamilton of Innerwick. In 1620 he was involved in a dispute with the Cairncrosses of Comislaw, with his sons William, Andrew and Robert also mentioned. In 1623 he gained possession of much of the remaining lands of Bedrule from the Turnbulls, probably through defaulted loans, this included Fulton, Crosscleuch, Menslaws, Speirmanslands and Ruccastle. He was listed among the major landowners who met to elect M.P.s for Roxburghshire in 1628. He was succeeded by his son George. In 1618 his son Robert complained about being attacked by the servant of John, son of John of Jedburgh. He married Isobel, daughter of Riddell of that Ilk. They had at least 5 sons and 2 daughters, including: Robert; Janet who married William Turnbull of Bedrule; Grisel, who married Robert Straiton of Straiton Mill; William, recorded in 1631, along with his own son, Walter;

Thomas (16th/17th C.) servant to George Haliburton in Pinnacle, he lived at Langnewton. In 1619 he was among a group of more than 100 men under John Ker of Langnewton who Sir Andrew of Oxnam complained had broken up and stolen turfs cut for his use on Oxnam Moor. Sir Thomas of Cavers Carre (1593–1681) son of George. He was served heir to his grandfather Thomas in 1629. In 1631 he was one of the men accused by the minister of Longnewton of taking his teinds. In 1638 he was appointed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire to enforce subscription to the ‘Confessions of Faith’. In 1642 he was named to a commission to try a large number of Borderers who had been declared fugitives. He is recorded as owner of part of Samieston in 1643 as well as lands in Bedrule Parish valued at £1565, consisting of the Town of Bedrule, Menslaw, Corsecleuch and Fulton, and also lands of Belses in Ancrum valued at £291, as well as lands in Bowden, Kelso and Roxburgh Parishes. In 1644 he was commended, along with Sir William Scott of Harden, for helping organise the tenants of the Earl of Buccleuch to repel the (Royalist) forces of the Earl of Montrose. In 1643, 1644, 1646, 1648 and 1649 he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire and in 1643–44 and 1648–49 he represented Roxburghshire in Parliament. He also held the lands of Stanedge, Lurgiescleuch and others in Hobkirk Parish in the 1640s. In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, Dumfries and Annandale. In 1654 he was one of the local men who signed an attestation about the ‘carriage and deportment of the deceased Francis Earl of Buccleuch’: this was part of efforts to have the fines reduced on the Buccleuch estate that had been imposed by Cromwell for the Earl supporting King Charles. He held lands in Abbotrule (as well as Kelso) according to the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. He was recorded in a discharge of 1663. He became Baron and Laird of Bedrule in 1668, perhaps earlier. He was fined in 1662, after the Restoration, for being a Covenant supporter. In 1678 he was a Commissioner for Roxburghshire for raising money for the King. He paid the land tax in Ancrum, Bedrule, Bowden, Jedburgh, Kelso and Roxburgh Parishes in 1678. Also in 1678 he was served heir to his deceased son Andrew’s lands and baronies, including the Barony of Bedrule and lands in Belses, Raperlaw, Rawflat, Pinnacle and Firth; his Bedrule lands were valued at £1632 in 1678, and included land formerly belonging to Turnbull of Bedrule. These lands were later conveyed to John, son of his brother, John of West Nisbet. Also in 1678, 1679 and 1680 he had discharges for annual rents in Selkirk. He married Agnes, eldest daughter of Sir John Riddell of that Ilk, but she died in 1635. He may then have married another woman, whose name is not known. In 1638 he re-married to Grizel, daughter of Sir Robert Halket of Pitfirrane, and she died in 1682, aged 85. His children included: Sir Andrew, son of his 1st wife, who succeeded to Cavers Carre; Isabel, who married Hugh Scott of Gala; Grizel, who married Patrick Home, Lord Polwarth; Margaret, who married Alexander Haliburton of Newmains and secondly Alexander Wedderburn (and also possibly Matthew St. Clair of Herdmanstoun); and Elizabeth, who married James Erskine of Shielfield. Another daughter may have been Christian, who married Francis Scott of Mangerton. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Bessie Dryden in 1726. In 1736 he witnessed a baptism for William Lorraine, resident of Borthaugh. Thomas of Cavers (1724–40) son of Robert and grandson of John of Cavers. In 1738 he succeeded his grandfather. He went abroad for his health with a tutor, but died at Naples. His uncle John succeeded to Cavers. Thomas ‘Tom’ (1856–1932) writer of ‘I Like Auld Hawick the Best’, ‘The Fairest Spot o’ A’, ‘Where Slitrig and Teviot Meet’, and many poems, such as ‘Roond Aboot Hawick Moat’ and ‘Under the Shadow of the Moat’. He was born in Kelso, but raised in the schoolhouse of Drumlanrig school in Hawick, where his father James was head teacher. He trained as a draper and then worked in the hosiery trade, with John Laing’s and then Pringle’s, where he was a traveller. He was a keen sportsman, particularly of cricket, rugby and cycling. He played in the first official rugby game in Hawick, a match with Langholm in 1874, and captained the Greens 1877/8 (being only the second Captain) and 1880/1, as well as acting as club secretary. He was a Town Councillor for North High Street Ward for 12 years from 1900. He was a great Common Riding supporter, being Secretary of the Committee 1908–23, as well as Treasurer for many years. He was also a founder member and first President of the Callants’ Club; he was additionally responsible for honouring the annual dinner guest with an acrostic verse. He was a member of Lodge 111, writing their history in 1898, and acting as their Bard. Enjoying singing, he was a member of Hawick Choral Union, and sung some of his own compositions at gathering of the Teviotdale Amateur Bicycle Club; ‘The Fairest Spot o’ A’’ would be later transcribed from memory by Adam R. Grant, and ‘Where Slitrig and Teviot Meet’ recovered from notes found after the death of Adam Grant (senior). He also wrote episode 7 of the 1914 Pageant, based on the story of ‘Hab o’ Hawick’. He was a regular contributor of verse to the local press and the Border Magazine, often using the pseudonym ‘Tee Kay’. In 1889 he married Isabella, daughter of James McDonald and Isabella Luke, who was from Melrose. Their children were: William, ‘Bill’ (1895–1917), who died in WWI; Edith, ‘Ede’ (b.1897), who married Jimmy Russell from Peebles, a motor engineer and great friend of Jimmy Guthrie; Ronald, ‘Ronnie’ (b.1898), who emigrated and never returned to Hawick; Ruby (b.1903), who married an Alexander and spent time in India; and James, Ralph and Thomas who died in infancy. His wife appears to have suffered from mental health problems and died in Dingleton. He had a second family with Janet McDonald in Edinburgh, consisting of Thomas McDonald (b.1912), a daughter who died at birth and another daughter who was given up for adoption. His poetry is collected in the book ‘Some Thoughts o’ Mine in Song and Verse’ (1924); it contains 66 poems and 26 acrostics. Late in life he moved to Edinburgh and then to Glasgow (to be near his daughter Edith), where he died. He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery, with the epitaph ‘I Like Auld Hawick the Best’ on his gravestone. Walter of Caverston and Cessford (d.1501) 2nd son and successor to Andrew. In 1450 he had a ‘letter of reversion’ to William Douglas of Cavers for the lands of ‘Blackpule’ in the Barony of Cavers; he was there stated to be son of Andrew of Altonburn and grandson or nephew of Douglas of Cavers. He witnessed a charter for James, Earl of Douglas in 1454 and another for William Douglas of Sunderland in 1465. In 1471 he was son and heir of Andrew when he took possession of the lands of Borthwickshiel and Harden Wood. In 1472 he was (along with Andrew of Cessford and David Scott of Buccleuch) appointed bailie for the Earl of Angus in order to give sasine of certain lands in Liddesdale to William Douglas of Cavers. In 1473 he had conferred upon him the Bailliary and Justiciary of the lands of Kelso Abbey. In 1474 he had a charter of the lands of Cessford, Auld Roxburgh, Altonburn, Primside and others, which had been resigned by his father, confirmed in 1481. In 1475 he founded a perpetual chaplainry in Kelso Abbey. In 1479 his niece Margaret resigned the Barony of Cessford to him, as well as the lands of Feu-Rule and others. In 1483 he was witness to a document dealing with Denholm Mains. In 1484 his brother ‘Radulpho’ was one of the men directed by the Earl of Angus to infeft Robert Elliot of Redheugh in some lands. In 1488 he had a charter for Auld Roxburgh. In 1489, along with James Riddell of that Ilk, he had a decree against him for not paying the teinds to Lilliesleaf Kirk. He witnessed a document for the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1493. Also in 1493 he served as surety for several men at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. In 1494 he was on the panel for Alexander Erskine inheriting Synton. In 1494/5 he was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh and also served as surety for several people. He was appointed Warden of the Middle Marches in 1498. In 1499 he was Sheriff of Dumfries when he witnessed the sasine for George Douglas, Master of Angus gaining his local titles. Also in 1499 he had a charter from James IV for the site of the ruined castle and town of Roxburgh. In 1501 he and Henry Haitlie of Mellerstain compounded the fines of 25 men (mainly Rutherfords), according to the Exchequer Rolls. In 1502 Adam Scott had remission for several crimes, including buring and pillaging farms pertaining to him on the waters of Borthwick and Ale. His sons were Sir Robert and Mark of Dolphinston and Littledean. He was succeeded by his grandson Sir Andrew. A younger daughter, Elizabeth, married Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch (and was previously married to Philip, eldest son of James Rutherford of that Ilk and Wells). Sir Walter (d.1584) of Cessford, son of Sir Andrew. He is mentioned (along with several local Scotts) in the 1529 indenture to end the feud between the Kerrs/Kers and the Scotts. As part of the arrangement one of his daughters was supposed to marry a son of Walter Scott of Branxholme. He was among the Lairds of the Borders who submitted themselves to the King in 1530 to keep better order. In 1531 he was granted his father’s lands of Hassendeanbank by the superior, William Cunningham, the ceremony taking place at Hassendeanbank. In 1532 he was one of the local men appointed by the King to a commission to capture some Croziers, Elliots and Foresters for raiding Teviotdale. He was Warden of the West Marches in 1536 when he bound himself to keep Edgerston Castle and to apprehend Robert Rutherford. In 1538 he was convicted (along with James Douglas of Cavers and others) of assisting several men who were ‘at the horn’, thereby breaking an earlier ‘band’. In 1536 he resigned the lands of Hassendeanbank to the Baron, William, Earl of Glencairn, and then had a sasine for them (along with his wife) in 1545. In 1537 he granted the lands of Primside to James, son and heir of George of Linton. In 1541 he was tenant of Windydoors in Tweed, as well as Bowerhope in Ettrick. In 1543 he signed the ‘Secret Bond’ with Cardinal Beaton, resisting English influence over the young Queen Mary. In about 1544 he was recorded as Bailie of the lands of Kelso Abbey. In 1544 he was removed from office as Warden of the West Marches, accused of plotting with the Earl of Angus, assisting the English, and using the office for his own ends. He was among the local Lairds listed as having given pledges to the English in 1544. In 1545 a Parliamentary decree put him at the head of 250 of the 500 soldiers who were mustered in Teviotdale. In 1545 he was among lairds in Teviotdale who signed a bond to settle feuds. He was probably the ‘lard of Cesfoorth’ who signed a bond of assurance with Somerset at Kelso in 1547, along with many other Border lairds. Also in 1547 he was gifted the bailliary of Ashkirk by the King, but in the following year burnt much of the Ale valley in retaliation for Scott of Buccleuch’s force attacking Ferniehirst and Cessford. In 1547/8 he and other Kers supported the English at the Battle of Pinkie and in burning lands of the Scotts of Branxholme. He was imprisoned in Edinburgh for this, but released to sign a bond of loyalty along with the Scotts. In 1549 Walter Scott of Buccleuch petitioned the Lords of Council to be able to post summonses against him, John Kerr of Ferniehirst and others at market crosses of Hawick and other towns, following their assisting the English in carrying out destruction; this specifically included the raiding of farms in the lower Borthwick valley, ‘clois tyme of harvist, of the cornis, cottell, guidis, geir, insicht, barnis, byris, biggingis, peilles, places, stables, howss, and duelling places’ pertaining to Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. There was a further complaint that he had stolen goods from Scott of Buccleuch at Newark. He was appointed Warden of the Middle Marches in 1550 and was reappointed in 1559. He was implicated in the murder of the same Sir Walter Scott in 1552, along with several other Kers and accomplices; in 1552 he pleaded for mercy to the Privy Council on behalf of the Kers, saying that they had been put to the horn, had their goods seized and were being pursued by the Scotts. In 1553 it was decided not to mete out further punishment and in 1553/4 he led a group of Kers in an assurance not to harm the Scotts or their followers and was also part of another bond by the Rutherfords not to harm the Kers. In 1551 he signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’. In 1561 he was among Border Lairds who appeared before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft. Also in 1561 he was reappointed as Warden of the Middle March. In 1562 he and his son (on behalf of their whole band) promised not to enter Ancrum. Also in 1562 he was the first man who appeared before the Privy Council in a promise to end the feud between the Kers and the Scotts. A letter is preserved from 1563 in which, as Warden of the Middle Marches, he authorised a certain Englishman to travel without harm. In 1563/4 he had a marriage contract for his son William with Janet, daughter of Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig. In 1564 there was a list of Borders lairds who swore to support him, with proclamations being made at the mercat crosses of Jedburgh, Kelso, Hawick and Selkirk. In 1564/5 he led the signatories of the bond with Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and his supporters, to end the family feud (partly over the slaying of the previous Sir Walter of Branxholme), promising to go to St. Giles Kirk and ask forgiveness on his knees from God and from the Laird of Buccleuch for the murder of his grandfather. In 1565 his lands at ‘the Burnes’ were raided and burned, with 2 of his servants killed, by a group of men from Liddesdale; this embroiled him in the ongoing feud between the Elliots and the Scotts. He signed the ‘Band of Teviotdale’ in 1565. Also in 1565 he had 2 of his own servants warded in England for crimes committed by servants of Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst and John Rutherford of Hunthill, this included a servant called Thomas Ker. In 1567 his son Thomas had a marriage contract with Elizabeth, sister of Walter Scott of Branxholme. He was an opponent of Mary Queen of Scots and fought against her supporters at Langside in 1568. In 1569 he was surety for Gilbert of Primside Loch. Also in 1569 John Rutherford of Hunthill was directed to relieve him of a debt. In 1569 and 1571/2 he was one of the men to sign bonds to suppress the Border thieves. He supported the Regent Moray at Langside in 1568 and fought for the young King at Leith in 1571. He signed the ‘Band of Roxburgh’ in 1573. He served as cautioner for ‘Hekky’ Armstrong in 1573 and separately for a group of Elliots, as well as being surety for the Bishop of Dunkeld in 1576. In 1576 he had a ‘decret of transumpt’ for the lands of Hassendeanbank. In 1577 he wrote to the Regent Morton about the bond to end the feud between the Scotts and Ker. In about 1578 he was involved in a bond between the Kers and the Rutherfords. In 1578/9 there was a reminder at the Privy Council of an agreement to stop the feud between him and his son William, and the Rutherfords of Hunsdale, Huntly and Edgerston, plus the Bailies of Jedburgh, George Douglas of Bonjedward and Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule. In 1582 he was the main signatory of a bond to heal a feud among the Kers, instigated by the murder of David, brother of the Laird of Linton by Kers of Gradens and Davidsons. He married Isabella, daughter of Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst; in 1560 she was ‘dame Ysabel Ker lady of Cesfurd’ when she purchased quarter of the timber from Melrose Abbey. He was succeeded by his sons Sir Andrew and then William. His other children included Thomas, Agnes, Isabel (who married John Rutherford of Huntly) and Margaret (who married Alexander, 5th Lord Home). His wife, Dame Isobell, was ‘tutrix’ for their grandchildren Grisel and Bessie. Walter of Littledean and the Hirsel (d.c.1598) son of Sir Andrew of the Hirsel. He was a servitor of the Governor of Arran 1545–46. He was listed in 1552 among the men claimed to be involved in the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. He was listed as son and heir of Andrew of Hirsel in 1553/4 as one of the Ker pledges to keep good rule against both Scotland and England. In 1561 he was Walter of Dolphinston (son to Sir Andrew of the Hirsel) when appearing before the Privy Council. He is the ‘Wat Ker of Dolphingstoun’ listed in 1564 among Border lairds who were ordered to support the warden, Ker of Cessford, and who was also listed among Borderers to appear before the Queen to promise to keep peace on the Border. In 1567 he was ‘of Dolphingstoun’ among men ordered to present themselves to be waivered in Blackness Castle; his surety was Robert Ker, younger, Burgess of Edinburgh. In 1568/9 he is listed as being ‘of Dolphingtoune’, son and heir apparent of Sir Andrew of the Hirsel, in the bond between the Kers and the Scotts; his eldest son John is also mentioned being contracted to marry Elizabeth Murray, sister to Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. In 1569 he was among the lairds who signed a bond to keep peace on the Border. He is probably the ‘Watt’ of Dolphinston who swore allegiance to the Crown in 1572/3, with Walter of Caverton as surety. He signed the ‘Band of Roxburgh’ in 1573. In 1574 he was on the retours for Walter Scott of Branxholme as heir to his great-uncle David Scott, as well as his great-grandfather Sir Walter Scott. He was served heir to his father in the lands of Borthwick Mains in 1575. In 1576 he was surety for William Ker, younger of Cessford and was also involved in a dispute with others, including the Bailie of Jedburgh. In 1578/9 he was among 22 Border Lairds who did not appear before the Privy Council when summoned. In 1580 he complained to the Privy Council about the Hailties and others. In 1581 his daughter Janet received sasine of lands in Dalcove from Thomas of Dalcove (as part of a marriage contract with Ralph, heir to Dalcove) and he received payment in redemption for the annual rent of Dalcove. He signed the 1582 bond between various Kers, following the murder of David, brother of the Laird of Linton. He was among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4, 1588 and 1591. He was mentioned in a case where the Earl of Angus was ordered to relieve the King of certain ‘bills’ of English complainant. In 1590/1 he was subject of a case before the Privy Court for non-payment, his son Mark appearing for him. In 1596 his sureties were his son Andrew of ‘Mylnerig’ and James, Burgess of Edinburgh. In 1551 he married Euphemia, daughter of John Edmondson of that Ilk. His children included: Sir John of Littledean, the Hirsel and Jedburgh; Mark, Prior and Commandator of Coldstream, and ancestor of the Kers of Morrison; Andrew; James; and Robert. They are mentioned in a case brought against them by Julian Home, divorced wife of John of the Hirsel, to not molest her in her agreed liferent of the lands of Littledean. Walter of Lochter (16th C.) son of Gilbert and brother of Andrew of Greenhead. In 1588 he was on a list of Borders ‘masters and landlords’ ordered to appear before the Privy Council. Walter (16th C.) witness to a Hawick sasine in 1622 for Allan Deans. He is described as ‘ianitore’, i.e. a porter. Walter (16th/17th C.) son of Andrew and brother of George of Fallochside. In 1598 he had a bond not to harm the Halliburtons, while the Halliburtons had a bond not to harm him or his 4 brothers. In 1599 there were assurances for him and his brother George not to harm a writer in Edinburgh. Walter (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1622, along with his father James of Bewlie and his father’s servants Andrew Turnbull, Thomas Leithead, John Wight and Robert Winthrope. There was a complaint by George of Newhall that they tried to find him to kill him, but instead attacked his servants and later attacked him with drawn weapons. Walter of Faldonside (d.1664) probably son of George of Faldonside. He is recorded in a dispute with the Burgh of Selkirk in 1622. He died without issue and this line of Kers became extinct. Walter of Littledean (d.bef. 1739) son of Andrew. He married the heiress of the family of Strother of Fowberry in Northumberland. He may also be the Ker of Littledean who married Jean, daughter of William Elliott, merchant in London, and grand-daughter of Gilbert of Stobs. His children included: Andrew, who had an illegitimate child with his maid, but died before his father; John Strother, who succeeded; Barbara, who married Sir John Scott of Ancrum; and Katherine, who married John Blackadder of St. Leonard’s. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1758 he witnessed baptisms for Robert Cowan in Borthaugh and for William Telfer in Borthaugh. He married Bessie Scott and their children included: Margaret (b.1749); Thomas (b.1751); Jean (b.1753); James (b.1755); and Robert (b.1758). The witnesses in 1751 were James Dryden and George Lamb. Walter of Littledean (d.1788) son of John Strother, who he succeeded in 1779. In 1754 he married Dorothy, daughter of Alexander Collingwood of Unthank in Northumberland. His children were: a daughter who died young; John Strother, who succeeded; Alexander (b.1758), who also died young; and Walter, who succeeded his brother John Strother. He and his wife are buried in Maxton. Walter (18th C.) smith in Denholm in 1780 and 1782. His surname is recorded as ‘Carre’ in 1782. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included: Betty (b.1776); James (b.1780); Bellow (b.1782); Andrew (b.1785); Robert (b.1787); and Mary (b.1791). Maj.-Gen. Walter of Littledean (d.1833), son of Walter. He succeeded his brother John Strother, who died unmarried in 1795. He also owned Nenthorn and East Bolton in Northumberland. In 1805–12 he was one of the 4 people who claimed succession to the Dukedom of Roxburghe. He was descended from the heirs male of the 1st Earl of Roxburghe. He lost the legal battle and this is supposed to have ruined him. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. In 1797 he married Jane, daughter and heir of Matthew Forster of East Bolton. His children were: Walter Forster, last of the male line; Matthew, who died young; Thomas Collingwood, who died without issue; Eleanor (d.1861), who married William Gray of East Bolton; and Essex, who married John Edward Gray, her brother-in-law, and is said to have been the original for ‘Di’ Vernon in Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Rob Roy’. Walter Forster of Littledean (d.1841), son of Walter. He was a Brigade-Major in the 9th Regiment and died in Madras. Thus ended the male line of Kers of Littledean. William (15th/16th C.) recorded at Whitmuir in 1494/5. In 1502, along with James Elliot (in the same place) and Alexander Gray in Greenbank, he had remission for the murder of John Ford in Selkirk. The same men also had remission for resetting the sons of William Elliot and stealing from Fairnington, with James Ker acting as surety. Additionally, in 1502 Walter, son of Walter Scott of Headshaw was accused of stealing a grey horse from him (but had remission for this and other thefts). William of Mertoun and Yair (d.bef. 1512) younger son of Andrew of Altonburn and Cessford. He was tenant in the King’s lands of Yair in 1469 and regranted the lease in 1476. He was witness to a sasine in 1471 for the lands of Borthwickshields and Harden Wood. He was also referred to as being ‘de Martoun’ (Mertoun, in Berwickshire). In the period 1486–1499 the lands of Yair were let to him and his son William, with his son to have both steadings if he visited the Roman court. In 1493 a man obtained remission for stealing sheep from him. In 1494/5 Lawrence Rutherford in Oakwood and Adam Cranston in Oakwood each had remission for stealing livestock from his farm at Yair. In 1494/5 he served as surety for William Stable in Yair, as well as William Turnbull and James Hall in Selkirk. Also in the same year John Scott in Tushielaw was allowed to ‘compone’ for stealing sheep and cattle from his farm and tenants at Yair. He was also tenant of Williamhope as recorded in 1477 and 1499. In 1503 he was ‘de Zare’ when he witnessed a financial agreement in Jedburgh between George Douglas, Master of Angus and Ralph Ker of Primsideloch. He continued to have the lease of Yair until at least 1504. He witnessed a bond between Turnbuls at Caerleonrig in 1505. In 1505 he was appointed as Coroner and Serjeant of the county of Selkirk. He had a charter for the lands of Bothhill in Peeblesshire in 1507. In 1511/2 he was ‘in Yare elder’ when he witnessed a document in Selkirk. His wife was Christian. His son and heir was probably also William, and may have died at Flodden. William (15th/16th C.) probably a younger son of the Laird of Cessford. He was Archdeacon of Teviotdale, recorded in 1491 and again in 1510/1.
However, it is unclear if he was ever confirmed in the office. William (15th/16th C.) son of William of Yair and Boithill and grandson of Andrew of Cessford. He leased the Crown lands of Yair along with his father from 1486. In 1499 he had a lease for Yair, along with his father. In 1509 he was on the panel of ‘retour’ for Adam Hepburn inheriting the lands of Alemoor; he was there described as ‘juniorem de Zare’. By 1512 his father was deceased when Yair was leased to him and his mother Christian. He was probably succeeded by his son Ralph. Thomas of Yair was recorded in 1528, and surely related, perhaps grandson. This is the family commemorated in Melrose Abbey by the description ‘Here lies the race of the House of Zair’. It is possible that he died at Flodden. He is probably the William in Yair who was deceased in 1532 when his daughter Margaret leased land from David Pringle in Yair. William (16th C.) recorded being ‘in Schaw’ in 1528. He claimed that James Murray had a false sasine for his lands of Shaw in Selkirk. His only son and heir Adam gave sasine to John Scott for lands in Selkirk. He witnessed a document in Selkirk in 1529/30 and was mentioned in another document in 1530, along with Adam of Shaw. In 1530/1 he and his son Adam sold their rigs in Selkirk to John Mollaw. In 1531 there is a document in which John Aitchison owed him money. In 1533 he and his son Adam sold a couple of tenements in Selkirk. In 1534 they were ‘of Sanct Helyne Schaw’ when they sold 2 separate halves of a tenement. Also in that same year he is recorded at ‘the tower of St Helyne Schaw’ when James of Mersington gave a letter of obligation to them. In 1535 he and his son sold a tenement to William Currer. In 1539 he resigned a tenement to Hector Newton and another in 1540 to James Doby; Janet ‘in St. Helyne Schaw’ also gave her consent and may be his daughter. His son may be the Adam who, with his mother Marion Pringle, received non-entries in 1539/40; in that case his wife was Marion Pringle. William (16th C.) recorded in ‘Quhit-mureha’ (i.e. Whitmuirhall) in 1531 when he witnessed an agreement between Scotts and Veitches regarding Synton. James in Whitmuir was also listed and probably related to him. In 1533 he assigned part of ‘Quhitmuirhall’ to his ‘beloved cousin’ John; Bailie Mark and Robert, Vicar in Lindean, were the witnesses. He also witnessed a document in Selkirk in 1534. In 1535 he was on an assize for a dispute involving Rutherfords and Homes. He was probably deceased by 1540 when Janet Ker, widow of William of ‘Quhitmuirhall’ made an agreement along with her son William and George of Linton. William (d.1566) probably son of Ralph of Primside. He was Commendator of Kelso Abbey in the period 1559–66. In 1563 he witnessed a sasine for Spittal-on-Rule, sold by Douglas of Cavers to Gilbert Ker of ‘Primsyde-lock’ (probably his cousin). He could be the same as the ‘vmquhile William Ker of Zair’ recorded in 1574 as a surety for a bond between William Douglas of Cavers and Sir Walter Scott of Branholme. He could be the ‘William Karr brother to the said Master George’ who in 1541 was offered by Sir Andrew (Warden of the Middle Marches) as a pledge for the good behaviour of Teviotdale. He was murdered in 1566. William of Yair (d.1572) probably son of Thomas. He married Christian Pringle and had 2 sons and 6 daughters, including Andrew who succeeded. Sir William of Cessford (c.1543–99/1600) 2nd son of Sir Walter. He was ‘younger’ in 1569 when he served as surety for John Elliot of the Park. He may have been the Sir William of Caverton recorded in 1571, when he served as cautioner for 4 inhabitants of Hawick. He was ‘youngar of Cesfurd’ in 1571/2, when he signed a bond to act against Borders thieves. In 1572/3 he was surety for William Douglas of Cavers, James Gledstains of Cocklaw, John Grahamslow of Little Newton, Hector, son of David Turnbull of Wauchope, and several others, who were swearing allegiance to the Crown and not to help the Kerrs of Ferniehirst. He was still younger in 1573 when he was surety for presenting an Elliot. He signed the ‘Band of Roxburgh’ in 1573. In 1576 he was involved in a dispute with Turnbull of Bedrule over lands in Nether Ancrum. In 1577 he was involved with disputes with Davidsons and Taits. In about 1578 he and his father were involved in a bond between the Kerrs and the Rutherfords. He was younger of Cessford in 1581, and recorded as Warden of the Middle March and Keeper of Liddesdale, when he was bound for the re-entry of Armstrongs and Elliotis. He was also Warden and Keeper in 1583 and again from 1585, assisted by his son Sir Robert. He was also Provost of Jedburgh and Keeper of Jed Forest. He inherited Sir Walter’s lands, including Hassendeanburn and Cappitrig. In 1583/4 he was Warden when he headed a list of Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council. In 1585 he was among the noblemen listed as having their forfeitures lifted. In about 1588 he was appointed as one of the Parliamentary Commissioners for Roxburghshire. He was listed as Bailie Principle of the Barony of Ancrum, Ashkirk and Lilliesleaf in 1589. In 1589/90 he was listed as one of the leaders in Roxburghshire charged with seeing that people subscribed to the Confessions of Faith. In 1590 the King ordered that he or his son Sir Robert would be Provost of Jedburgh for as long as they were Wardens of the Marches. He was Warden of the Middle March in 1590/1 when a case was brought against the Scottish Wardens, with Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst as his cautioner. Also in 1590/1 his cautioners were Andrew of Faldonside and Andrew of Linton that he would not reset Sir Robert (younger of Cessford), who was ‘at the horn’ for the murder of William of Ancrum. He served as a Privy Councillor in 1592 and was a Commissioner for the King in actions involving Spain in 1588 and the Jesuits in 1589. He served in Parliament in 1597 and 1599. In 1562 he married Janet, daughter of Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig, who was widow of James Tweedie of Drumelzier. In about 1588 he secondly married Jean Johnston, widow of Alexander, Lord Abernethy. He was succeeded by his eldest son Sir Robert who became 1st Earl of Roxburghe. Other children included: Sir Mark of Ormiston; Margaret, who became 1st Earl of Roxburghe. Other children included: Sir Robert, portioner of Clifton; James; and Margaret, who married Sir William Scott of Harden (as his 2nd wife). William of Yair (16th/17th C.) son of Andrew. He is recorded in 1619 when he was still ‘younger’. There was a complaint before the Privy Council that he ‘ryding on ane little naig upon the head of the water of Reule’ when James Lorraine in Appotside threatened him with a hagbut, which misfired, and he only escaped being fired at again when some others intervened. He was still ‘appeirand of Yair’ when directed in 1621 to apprehend some rebels for the murder of his cousin James Dalmahoy. He is recorded along with his son Andrew in 1633. The Kers of Yair are buried at Melrose Abbey. William of Linton (17th C.) see William Kerr. Sir William Scrod nee Drummond (1622–75) 2nd Earl of Roxburghe. He was son of Jean Ker and John Drummond (2nd Earl of Perth) and hence the grandson of the 1st Earl of Roxburghe. He married his cousin Jean Ker in 1655 and changed his name to Ker when he assumed the Earldom in 1650. In 1650 he was named one of the overseers of the tutors for the children of Francis, Earl of Buccleuch. He commanded a regiment in the Dutch service, joining the Royalists when he returned to Scotland, leading to a fine by Cromwell in 1654. The family held extensive lands in Roxburghshire in the 1600s and he was recorded paying large sums in several parishes (including Hassendean and Ancrum) in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. In 1673 he was involved in a dispute with the Burgh of Selkirk over the division of the common there. His wife’s funeral in about 1675 was a lavish ceremony, with representatives of many branches of the Kers. He was succeeded by his son Robert. Sir William of Greenhead (d.1721) succeeded his brother Andrew as the 3rd Baronet of Greenhead in 1676. He paid the land tax in several parishes in 1678. He was fined for supporting Covenanters in 1684, but was also in that year one of the men appointed as a commissioner in Roxburghshire for prosecuting Covenanters. He was appointed one of the 2 Parliamentary Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1685 and 1686, and again in 1702 and 1706. He was thus a member of the last Scottish Parliament, and voted for the Union. He then served on the First Parliament of Great Britain 1707–08. He was also a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1690 and 1704 and Colonel of the eastern regiment of militia (appointed in 1689). His brother Gilbert is recorded in sasines in 1710 and 1712. Following his death there was a legal challenge in 1726 between his grandson (also Sir William) and Walter Scott of Whitfield, William Scott of Thirlestane and Walter Scott of Woll. William ‘Bill’ (1895–1917) eldest child of Hawick poet Tom. He became an apprentice at the Royal Bank of Scotland in Hawick at the age of 14. He enlisted in 1914 and became a Corporal in the Lothian and Border Horse. He was killed in action at Salonika in Greece. He is buried at Sarigol Military Cemetery and is listed on the Royal Bank’s War Memorial in Edinburgh (see also Kerr).
Kereti

Kereti (ke-re-tee) n. Gerard (d.1363) canon of Amiens, and counsellor to the King, who also held the Rectorship of Hawick. In 1346 he obtained papal permission not to be ordained for 7 years, in order to enjoy the ‘living’ of several parishes. He was canon of Amiens and clerk and counsellor of King Philip VI of France (who lost the battle of Crécy that same year and died in 1350). It is unclear whether he was in France during this period. His brother Henry, Rector of Villers-en-bois in the Diocese of Amiens had the same petition in 1346. He may be the same ‘Guido Kieretti’ (or ‘Quiëret’) who was Archdeacon of Glasgow over at least the period 1342–61 (also spelled ‘Kerete’).

kern (kern) n., poet. a peasant – ‘Still puirtith, wi’ her poochless kernes, Will damn wi’ night’ [JoHa].

Kerr (ker, kawr) n. Abraham W. (19th C.) clothier of Kerr & Mackenzie, 72 High Street. This could be the premises of the ‘Mr. Kerr’ recorded near there on Wood’s 1824 map. He married Charlotte, daughter of Hawick jailor Michael Anderson, and later re-married. Adam (17th/18th C.) Hawick resident, who, along with William Miller, was rebuked in 1713 for riding on stilts on the Sabbath thereby causing crowds of barns to follow them’. Alexander Boyd (1810–67) younger son of Gen. Thomas William, his grandson Alexander Nairne would succeed to the Abbotrule Lairdship. He was born in London (when the family still owned Abbotrule). He had a military career with the 24th Madras Native Infantry, ending as an Honorary Colonel. He was involved with suppressing the rebellion at Coorg in 1837. In 1838 he married Jane Helen Campbell, daughter of Lt. Gen. Alexander Murray MacGregor and Lady Charlotte Sinclair. Their children were: John MacGregor, whose son would succeed to the Abbotrule title; Charlotte Sarah Fanny; Amelia Margaret, who died young; Helen Isabella Ramsay, who died unmarried; and Charlotte S.F., who married J. Pringle, surgeon of the East India Company; and another who died in infancy. He retired to Edinburgh and is buried in the Cannongate. Alexander Nairne ‘Alec’ (1882–1964) elder son of John MacGregor, born in India and educated at Marlborough. He joined the Army in India and retired as a Lieutenant Colonel; he also served in East Africa in WWI, for which he received the Military Cross. He was also a keen sportsman. He became the 10th Kerr of Abbotrule on the death of his cousin William in 1919. He married Eva Theresa Wayne and their only child John Kinloch became the 11th Kerr of Abbotrule. Andrew of Kersheugh (d.1405) son of Thomas. He was Cup-bearer to King Robert III. He married a daughter of Edmonson of that Ilk and was succeeded by his son Thomas. Andrew of Kersheugh (d.c.1450) son of Thomas. He accompanied the Earl of Douglas to Rome in 1450. He is mentioned by Thomas the Rhymer. He married Jean, daughter of Crichton of Crichton and was succeeded by his son Ralph. Andrew of Kersheugh (d.1488) son of Ralph. He married Mary, daughter of Herbert, Lord Herries. Their children included: Thomas, who succeeded to Kersheugh and may have been the first of Ferniehirst; and John, ancestor of the Kerrs of Greenhead, Chatto and Sunlaws. Sir Andrew ‘Dand’ of Ferniehirst (d.c.1545), son of Thomas of Smailholm and Margaret Kerr of Ferniehirst (although other accounts say he was the eldest son of Thomas of Ferniehirst and Catherine Ochiltree). He could be the ‘Andream Ker de Vuercraling’ who was on the panel for the inheritance of the lands and titles of Branxholme and Buelleuch in 1492. He served as surety for Simon Young in Roughlee in 1493, as well as Adam Kirkton. He was ‘Andream Ker de Farnyhirst’ in 1494 when he was on the panel for the inheritance of Synton. In 1494/5 there was a ‘suit of peace’ against him, not to harm the Vicar of Oxnam. He was referred to being of ‘Vuir Craling’ (i.e. Over Crailing) when Sir William Colville resigned the half Barony of Feu-rule in 1499, and being ‘of Farnyhirst’ in 1501/2 when he held the half Barony: William ‘Elwald’ was there described as his follower (perhaps acting as his Bailie). In 1502 he was fined for failing to produce Patrick and Philip Turnbull in court. In 1502 he served as surety for David Oliver (‘Nae Guid Preist’) in ‘Stryndis’ (probably ‘Strange’ in Rulewater) who had a remission for several raids around the Jedburgh area; he was also surety for another David, Robert, ‘Little John’, Matthew and Martin Oliver, all in the same place. He was also surety for Jedburgh men in 1502, as well as for his brother William. Additionally in 1502 he resigned lands in Oxnam to John Fawlaw of Softlaw. In 1506 he was on an inquest in Jedburgh. In 1508 he was fined by the High Court of the Judiciary. In 1509 he resigned part of the Barony of Oxnam. In 1510 he was involved, along with Ralph Ker of Primside Loch, in an indenture with the Erskines, Barons of Synton. He witnessed the 1512/3 charter of Sir William Drumlanrig when he sold Broadlee. In 1513 he witnessed a charter for John Nesbit of Dalziel. He probably led some of the Borderers at the 1513 Sclaterford skirmish. On the night after the Battle of Flodden, he broke into Kelso Abbey and ousted the superior, installing his brother Thomas as the new Commendator. In 1525 he was among the Border Barons who signed a bond with the Earl of Angus for keeping the peace. Also in 1525 he was on the panel of return for Gordon of Stichill. In 1526 he was involved in the ‘Battle of Skirmish Field’, where he supported the Earl of Angus and others against the Scotts and Elliots, who tried unsuccessfully to capture the young James V. He was listed in 1526/7 among prominent men charged by James V not to attack the lands of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme, John Cranston of that Ilk and Walter Scott of Synton while those men were in ‘respite’ for the charge of treason. He was mentioned (along with several local representatives of the Scott family) in the 1529 indenture to end the feud between the Kerrs and the Scotts. In 1530 he was one of the Border chiefs who were briefly imprisoned for not keeping thieves in check. In 1532 he was one of the local men appointed by the King to a commission to capture some Croziers, Elliots and Foresters for raiding Teviotdale. He was appointed Warden of the Middle Marches in 1538. In 1541 he claimed to hold the lands of Ashiestiel in feu. He became Bailie of Jedburgh Forest in 1542. Documents of the early 1540s give him and his son Robert the rights to various lands, as well as the patronage of Bedrule Kirk. In 1544 he and his son John were taken prisoner by the English during a raid on Rulewater. He swore fealty to Henry in order to be released, and sided with the English army in 1545. He married Janet, daughter of Sir Patrick Home of Polwarth and had at least 7 children, including: Thomas, who pre-deceased him; Sir John, who succeeded; Janet, who married George Turnbull of Bedrule, and secondly married Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch; Isabel, married Sir Walter Ker of Cessford; Christian, married Sir James Douglas of Cavers; Margaret, who married James Menzies from Perth and secondly a Hay of Smithfield; and Robert of Ancrum, whose family carried on the Ferniehirst title after Sir John’s line died out. Andrew (16th C.) recorded as ‘Andrew Karr man to Robine Elliott’ in 1590. He was accused of being in a group led by William of the Steele who stole livestock and prisoners from Catton in England. Sir Andrew of Ferniehirst (d.1631) 1st Lord Jedburgh, eldest son of Sir Thomas of Oxnam and Ferniehirst. He was ‘younger of Farniererst’ in 1583/4 on a list of Borderers summoned to appear before the Privy Council. His curators were William Douglas of Cavers and Robert Ker of Ancrum. He succeeded to Ferniehirst on the death of his father in 1585. In 1587 he served as surety for Rutherfords and Frasers, that they would appear before the Privy Council. In 1587/8 he had a charter confirming the bailiary of the lands belonging to Jedburgh Abbey (which had been held heritably by his father, grandfather and great-grandfather before him). In 1588 he was on a list of Borders ‘masters and landlords’ ordered to appear before the Privy Council. He was involved in an ongoing feud with the Scotts of Buccleuch. He is probably the Laird who was accused of being responsible for a group of 100 men raiding part of Tynedale in 1589. In 1590 his servants John Chalmers and John Kirkaldy were killed, leading to bonds by Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch not to molest him, and by 1595 he had a contract affirming he was satisfied that Scott had made amends. Also in 1590 he was accused by an Englishman of being responsible for his servant, who had stolen a horse. In 1590/1 he was cautioned for William Ker of Cessford, in a case brought against the Scottish Wardens; however, at about the same time he was among those who complained that William Ker of Cessford had reset his son Sir Robert Ker, who was ‘at the horn’ for the murder of his kinsman William of Ancrum. In 1591 he was a ‘gentleman of the King’s bedchamber’ to James VI. He was Keeper of Liddesdale in 1592, under the Duke of Lennox. He was temporarily denounced as a rebel in 1592 for helping the Earl of Bothwell. In 1593 he succeeded to the lands of Kirkaldy of Grange, through his mother. Also in 1593 he is recorded as Deputy Keeper of Liddesdale when ordered to enter ‘brokin men and utheris, inhabitants of Liddisdale’. In 1594 he and his brother Thomas were denounced as rebels for a bond they made with Sir Robert Ker, apparent of Cessford. In 1595 he inherited half the Barony of Feu-Rule from his father Sir Thomas. In 1595/6 there was an interim reconciliation of him and Thomas Ker of Cavers Carre with Sir Robert Ker, younger of Cessford, over the murder of William Ker of Ancrum. In 1596 he had a bond for the good behaviour of several Kerrs and others; in 1602 he failed to appear to answer for many of them who were at the horn for murder and other crimes in Jedburgh. In 1597 he sat in Parliament as a minor baron. His initials, and those of his wife, were inscribed at Ferniehirst Castle in 1598. He was listed among leaders ordered in 1600 to appear before the Privy Council to give advice about peace on the Border. He acted as Captain of the King’s Guard and Commissioner of the Middle Shires from around the time of the Union of the Crowns. He was also Provost of Jedburgh during the slaying of his brother Thomas by a band of Turnbulls in 1601; several Turnbulls were convicted in a protracted court case, including a counter case against him and several Kerrs and other supporters for killing and maiming some of the Turnbull party, in which it seems that the legal system was somewhat stacked in favour of the Kerrs (and he used his later elevated position to avoid trial). In 1601 he was found to have failed to produce ‘Eckie Turnbull of Stanyleg’ and he and his cautioner Thomas Ker of Cavers were ordered to pay the penalty. Also about 1601 his servitor James Turnbull of Hobsburn is recorded disbursing money. He served as Warden of West Teviotdale 1600–03. He is probably the Andrew of Ferniehirst who held a ‘wadset’ in 1606 with Walter Scott of Todrig for the lands of ‘Hardenhead’. In 1615 he had a remission for the murder of several Turnbulls and other crimes taking place while he was a Commissioner. In 1619 he was recorded as Captain of the Border garrison, with Sir William Scott of Harden as his Lieutenant. He created Lord Jedburgh in 1622 and inherited served lands from his father in 1625. He served as an Extraordinary judge of Session and a Privy Councillor. In 1629 he is recorded gaining the Barony of Feu-Rule (as well as other lands) as heir to his deceased son, Sir Andrew, but died himself soon afterwards. In 1631 he granted a confirming charter for the lands of Harwood and Hawthornside. In 1584 he married Anne, eldest daughter of Andrew Stuart, Master of Ochiltree. He had a son who died before him, as well as 6 daughters, and was succeeded by his half-brother James of Crailing. His children were: Sir Andrew of Oxnam, Master of Jedburgh (d.1628); Margaret, who married Sir John Macdowall of Garthland; Jean, married Thomas Kennedy of Pinwhirrie; Alison, married John Rutherford of Hunthill; Anne; Mary; and Lilias, married a McCulloch. Sir Andrew of Oxnam (d.1628) Master of Jedburgh. He was son of Sir Andrew, 1st Lord Jedburgh, but died before his father. As heir-apparent of his father, he was referred to as ‘Master of Jedburgh’. He held land in the Rule valley and specifically the Barony of Feu-Rule. He became owner of the lands of Appotside in 1610. He appears to have removed Robert Elliot ‘in Gedstains’ in 1610, not accepting him as a ‘kindly tenant’. He had a ‘contract of wadset’ for the lands of Templehall and Breulwinds with George Turnbull in 1612. In 1615 he had remission for the slaughter of Hector, son of Walter of Bewlie at Lilliesleaf about Martinmas 1604, and of Hector Turnbull of Stenedge in 1611. It seems likely he was acting as an agent of the Commissioner for the Middle Shires, Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst. However, there appears to have been an ongoing feud between the Kerrs and the Turnbulls. He was appointed Captain of the King’s Guards in 1618 and was appointed as a Commissioner for the Middle Shires in the same year. In 1619 appointed as a Commissioner for Teviotdale, in the absence of Robert, Earl of Roxburgh. In 1622 he still sat on the Commission for keeping peace on the Border. He was also one of the Senators of the College of Justice. He married Margaret Kerr, 3rd daughter of Mark, 1st Earl of Lothian; she was widow of Lord Hay of Yester, and usually called the Lady Yester’. He had no issue, and in 1629 his lands of Ashiestiel were inherited by his father. His funeral procession was elaborate, with a great number of local lairds carrying banners and other regalia from Jedburgh Castle to the Kirk. Andrew of Sunlaws and Chatto (d.1661) son of the first James of Chatto, and uncle of John of Chatto and Sunlaws. He is easily confused with a nearly contemporary Andrew of Chatto. He purchased the lands of Chatto, Sunlaws, etc. from the Earl of Traquair after John of Chatto and Sunlaws had been forced to sell them. He was a supporter of the Commonwealth cause in Scotland, who made Sheriff and Commissary Depute for Teviotdale. He was captured by Scottish Royalist forces in 1653 and brought to Borthwickbrae by a small force under Sir Arthur Forbes, who were pursued by an English Commonwealth force. There was a skirmish at Philip, where he was released, but run through the thigh by an English trooper in the struggle. He married Elizabeth, daughter of James Wright of Gladswod.

Kerr

His children were: Joan; Christian, who married her cousin, John of Chatto; and William, said to be 'a weakly boy', who was served as his heir in 1678. Andrew of Chatto (1628–1705) son of Sir Thomas of Redden and Jean Ker, daughter of James of Chatto. He married Isabella, daughter of George Cranston of Bold, who died in 1675 aged 36. He secondly married Agnes (d.1718), daughter and coheiress of John Abernethy, Bishop of Caithness. His children were: George (1657–88); Andrew of Chatto (1661–1702); James (1664–65); John (1665–95); Thomas (1657–1714), goldsmith in Edinburgh, whose son James of Bughtrig was M.P. for Edinburgh; James (again, 1669–1712); William (1673–1731), whose son William was a Bailie in Kelso; Jean (b.1659); Agnes (1671–1763); Isabella (1675–75); Robert (b.1678); Charles (1680–bef. 1759); and Henry (b.1682). He was ancestor of the Kerrs of Bughtrig and the Haie. Andrew (17th/18th C.) son of Mary Kerr and John Kerr. He inherited half of the lands of Forderlee through his mother. Andrew (b.1786) from Cavers Parish, he was a carter in Newcastle. In 1861 he was at about 13 North Hermitage Street with his wife Ellen and an elderly boarder, Isabella Elliot. Anne (d.1667) daughter of Robert, Marquis of Lothian and brother of William, she was Countess of Lothian in her own right. In 1642 she and her sister Jean were served joint heirs to their father in many lands and rights, including the church of Hobkirk. She married Sir William of Ancrum, who became 3rd Earl of Lothian. Her sons included Robert, 1st Marquess of Lothian and Charles of Abbotrule. Charles (d.1690) 2nd Earl of Ancrum, son of Robert, the 1st Earl and his 2nd wife Anne Stanley. He sat in the Scottish Parliament as a Peer 1671–81 and was said to be a Parliamentary speaker of note. He sold Ancrum to Sir John Scott of Kirkstyle in about 1670. In 1678 and 1680 his lands in Abbotrule were valued at £572 and those in Hobkirk at £300. He married in 1662 and had a son who died before him. He is said to have ended his days in poor circumstances and broken-hearted. His titles eventually merged with those of his brother’s family, the Lords of Lothian. Charles of Abbotrule (1642–82) 3rd son of Sir William, 3rd Earl of Lothian and Ann, who was sister of Robert, Marquis of Lothian and Countess of Lothian in her own right. He is the ancestor of the Kerrs of Abbotrule, his father being the 1st Kerr Laird. He held a charter of the lands of Abbotrule in 1648 (or perhaps 1658), being given this Lairdship during his father’s lifetime. This was confirmed in 1664 and 1665, whereby he received full title to the estate. The land was created a barony in 1667. From 1667 until 1678 he was one of the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire. In 1674 he was part of the dinner party at Swanside, after which James Douglas of Cavers was murdered by Andrew Rutherford (for which he was tried and executed). He is said to have spent much time in London and received a ring from King Charles for having the best manners at Court. In 1678 he paid land tax on £300 in Hobkirk Parish and £572 in Abbotrule Parish. He may also be the ‘Mr Charles Kerr’ who was listed holding the teinds of lands in Jedburgh Parish. In 1666 he married Cecily (or Cecil), only daughter (by his 2nd marriage) of Patrick Scott of Langshaw and Ancrum. His children were: William, the eldest son, who succeeded to Abbotrule; Charles (b.1669), who died young; Robert (b.1671), who also died young; Patrick (b.1673), who farmed at Lustruther, and was mentioned in his brother’s entail; and Cecily (b.1670), who is probably his daughter who married John Scott of Gorrenberry. His son William was served as his heir in 1680 (which may have been while he was still alive). Little else is known about him. Charles (c.1734–56) 5th Laird of Abbotrule, eldest son of William. He succeeded to the Lairdship in 1752 when still quite young. He entered the service of the Honorable East India Company, probably being introduced through Col. Elliot of Wells. After receiving a commission in 1754, he died only 2 years later, it is said in the defence of Calcutta. Since he died without children, he was succeeded by his brother Patrick. Charles of Wells (18th C.) listed on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. It is unclear how he was related to other Kerrs. This was probably the ‘Wells’ near Jedburgh (where he paid the Land Tax in 1771). Charles (1767–1821) 7th Laird of Abbotrule, eldest son of Patrick. He was educated at the Royal High School in Edinburgh. He trained as a lawyer, being apprenticed to David Erskine and became a Writer to the Signet in 1789. He was a friend of Sir Walter Scott at school, and was to serve as the inspiration for ‘Darsie La- timer’ in Scott’s ‘Redgauntlet’; some of their correspondence was published in ‘Walter’s Postbag’ (1932). In 1792 he succeeded to the Abbotrule estate, which was probably already in debt. He is recorded in the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of Abbotrule. He also paid the dog tax there in 1797. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. He was on the subscription list for Jamieson’s Scots dictionary in 1808. In 1811 he was recorded as owner Gatehousecote, parts of Grange (formerly possessed by John Elliot) parts of Ruletownhead, ‘Bossithill’ and Burnkinford (formerly possessed by George Dickson and George Elliot), Doorpool, Midquater and ‘The Parks of Abbotrule’; together they were valued at about £1100. He married Mary Ann Thompson from Peel, Isle of Man, who was only 16 at the time; he was on the island to escape creditors. He was known for debts, gambling and duelling, and fled to Jamaica, where he worked as a clerk. In 1792 he returned to claim his inheritance following the death of his father. He immediately sold off Gatehousecote and Over Bunclester, but for some reason the sale was never completed, and he had them back again. In 1804 he also had a stable block built, bearing his initials. He purchased the neighbouring farm of East Fodderlee in 1806. He joined the Roxburghshire Cavalry and became recruiting officer. By 1800 he had fought 4 duels and purchased a commission as Paymaster of the 68th Regiment of Foot (the Durham Light Infantry). He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. In about 1814 he arranged to sell the unenclosed slope of Bunclester Hill to George Cleghorn of Weens, but desiring to change the deal at the last moment, it fell through; he blamed Cleghorn for this and is said to have had all the trees cut down on the hill to spoil the view from Weens. He then returned to the army and was Paymaster for the Royal Dragoons, perhaps serving at Waterloo. He sold East Fodderlee in 1815. In 1818 he was forced by his creditors to sell all of the Abbotrule estate (to Robert Henderson), ending his family’s connection with the area, although the Lairdship passed to son Patrick and the Commendator of Melrose for lands in Lessuden. He must have been related to the others Kerrs of Fodderlee.

Charles Alexander Gray (1933– ) educated at the Open University, Birmingham University and Edinburgh Theological College, he was ordained in 1967 and became Curate at St. Cuthbert’s in Hawick 1967–9. He went on to become a Priest in Birmingham and then Rector in Musselburgh, retiring in 1986. Christian of Chatto and Sunlaws (18th C.) eldest surviving daughter and heir of William. She was known as ‘Lady Chatto’. She extended the house at Sunlaws and had a new one built at Chatto. She married her cousin Charles Kerr, but they had no children. She left the estates to her distant relative William, son of Alexander Scott of Thirlestane and Barbara, daughter of Henry Kerr of Frogden. Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (b.1878/9) from Denholm, she was a grocer in Newcastle. In 1852 she was listed as a shop-keeper in the village. She was also called ‘Hunter’, which was probably her married name. She lived at about 22 South Hermitage Street. In 1841 she was living with Betty Hutton or Waugh, and in 1851 and 1861 with her niece, also Betty Kerr. George of Corbethouse (16th C.) had a charter for the lands of Corbethouse in Morebattle Parish in 1526. He witnessed a charter in 1535. A transaction with George Ker of Linton in 1540 makes it clear that he probably the same man as George, son of Robert ‘in Cruikitschaws’ (i.e. Crooked Shaws). He made a pledge to serve the English King (along with many Kers and others) in 1544. He may be the ‘Johnne Ker of Corbethous’ listed in 1553/4 among Kers in an assurance not to harm the Scots or their followers. He was succeeded by his sons Andrew and then James. George of Lintalee (17th C.) recorded as ‘George Kerr of Lintly’ in 1628 when he was one of the pall-bearers at the funeral of Lady Isabel Kerr, wife of William, Viscount Drumlanrig, when she was buried in Edinburgh. In 1628/9 he was part of the funeral procession for Andrew Kerr, Master of Jedburgh; there he is ‘of Linttily’. George (17th C.) described as portioner of Fodderlee in 1631 when he had a charter from the Commendator of Melrose for lands in Lessuden. He must have been related to the others Kerrs of Fodderlee. George (18th C.) servant to the Douglasses of Cavers in 1755. He married Isabel nichol and their children included: Betty (b.1752); Margaret (b.1755); Nelly (b.1757); and Isabel (b.1759). George (d.1782) resident of the Kirkwym. His death registration records him as ‘George Kerr Kirkinwind’. He could be the George who married Betty Aitkin (also from Hawick Parish) in 1763. He seems likely to be the...

Charles Kerr, Master of Jedburgh; there he is ‘of Lincalee’ (17th C.) described as portioner of Corbethouse (16th C.) had a charter for the lands of Corbethouse in Morebattle Parish in 1526. Kerr

George who is recorded in 1811 as previous owner of the lands called ‘Allers Garden’ (then owned by John Scott), which seem likely to have been in the modern Allars Crescent. George (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1822 he married Helen Scott, who was also from Hawick. Their son James was baptised in 1824. Gilbert of Gateshaw (b.1749) son of William and Elizabeth, daughter of Gilbert Elliott of Stonedge. His father was Town Clerk of Kelso and Chamberlain to the Duke of Roxburghe, purchased Gateshaw from Sir William Scott of Ancrum in 1758, bringing it back into Ker hands. He was taxed for having a female servant in the 1780s. In 1780 he was ‘younger of Gateshaw’ when added to the list of voters in Roxburghshire. Around 1800 he took over as factor of Wells estate from his uncle Gilbert Elliott of Otterburn. This also meant he was given the key of Gibraltar, a memento of his relative Lord Heathfield, which he took back to Gateshaw when he retired about 1818. He married Margaret, daughter of John Hood of Stoneridge, Berwickshire. They had 9 children: William, who succeeded his uncle, Sir Charles; Lieut. John of the 19th Regiment, who died in Ceylon; Gilbert of the Royal Navy; Thomas, merchant, who died in Jamaica; Jane; Eliza; Cecilia; Margaret, who married Francis Brodie; and Agnes. It is said that his large family resulted in financial problems, so that Gateshaw was purchased from his creditors by his brother Charles. James of Corbet (16th C.) son of George and brother of Andrew, who he succeeded. His estate was also called ‘Corbethous’ and included the tower of Gateshaw. He was listed as being ‘of Corbithows’ in 1560 when he was named on the bond to settle the feud between the Kers and the Rutherfords. His father Andrew of Corbethous, had been killed by John Rutherford of Hunthill and his friends as part of this feud. As part of the arrangements to resolve the feud his daughter ‘Haufie’ was to marry William, 2nd son of John Rutherford of Hunthill. In 1561 he was among a list of men charged to appear before Queen Mary regarding the state of the Borders. He was also listed as one of those excepted in the 1564/5 bond between the Scotts and the Kerrs. However, he was one of the men involved in signing the further bond between the Kers and the Scotts in 1568/9; he is also listed there as being ‘of Corberthouse’. He may be the James in Corbet whose son John witnessed a transaction in Selkirk in 1582. In 1588 and 1590 he was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. He is probably the ‘James Karr laird of Corbett’ recorded in 1590 among men of Teviotdale accused of breaking their bond with an Englishman. His sons John and Andrew were among men accused in 1590 of theft and reset from Woodend, with his sons John and James being accused in a separate case in 1590. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Gilbert Kerr of Heiton. He was succeeded by his son John and also had a daughter Lilias (who married a grandson of the Earl of Bothwell). James (16th/17th C.) brother of Sir Andrew of Ferniehirst, He was among Kers and others who in 1601 besieged and burned a house in Jedburgh, and were declared as rebels. James of Chatto (d.1615) 3rd son of Kerr of Greenhead. He may be the ‘James Carr of Grenhead’ who was a deputy of the March Warden recorded in 1583; however, it is possible there are 2 generations of Jamess here. He is recorded as son to the Laird of Greenhead in 1586 when instructed to enter into court his servants George Middlemass and Archie Elliot. He could be the James ‘sone to the Laird of Grenheid’ who was named in the complaint by the Homes of Wedderburn against the Kers of Littledean in 1593. He became the 1st Kerr Laird of Chatto after purchasing the lands there in 1595. In 1612 he was listed among local men accused by the Privy Council of charging too much interest on loans. He later bought other lands, including Sunlaws from William Rutherford in 1614 and Hangingshaw, Gartshawfield and Pennymuir near to Chatto. He married Christian, sister of Sir John Stewart, Earl of Traquair. His children included: James, the eldest son, who succeeded; Andrew, whose daughter Christian married her cousin John; Margaret, eldest daughter, who married Andrew Scott of Aikwood; and another daughter. His widow remarried to William, brother to Sir Robert of Ancrum. In 1622 some men were accused of stealing some of her cattle from ‘Hakkerstonne’. James of Chatto and Sunlaws (d.1631) eldest son of James of Chatto. He was said to be extravagant in habits and left debts for his successor. He married Joan, daughter of Sir John Murray of Philiphunghe. He was succeeded by his son John and also had 3 daughters. Sir James of Oxnam and Crailing (d.1645) succeeded from his brother Thomas, being served heir in 1603. He was son of Sir Thomas of Ferniehirst and Janet, sister of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. He was half-brother of Sir Andrew, Lord Jedburgh, and succeeded to the title of Lord Jedburgh, although he did not assume it (perhaps because there was a more valid heir, their distant cousin, James, grandson of William who was full brother of Andrew Lord Jedburgh). His family were in reduced circumstances compared with the times of his father. In 1611 he had a charter for some of the lands in Roxburghshire forfeited by Lord John Maxwell. In 1619 he complained that more than 100 men came to Oxnam Moor, breaking up most of the turfs that had been cut for him there and taking away the rest; this was presumably a dispute over the rights on common land. In 1620 he had a charter if lands of Belses, conferred on him by Nichol Rutherford of Hundalee (his father-in-law). In 1622 he was stated to be Captain of the Guard to the Privy Council for the Borders. He served on Parliament for Roxburghshire in 1630. He is probably the Lord Jedburgh who granted a deed to the lands of Barnhills in 1633 (hence had superiority over these lands). He was also known as ‘of Hundalie’ having inherited that estate from his wife Mary, daughter of James Rutherford of Hundalee. His children included: Robert of Crailing, 3rd Lord Jedburgh; and Jean, who married John Ker of West Nisbet. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1792 he married Elizabeth (or ‘Lizzie’) Oliver, who was also from Hawick. Their children included Janet (b.1793) and James (b.1796). James (b.c.1800) green grocer at about 73 High Street. His wife was Elspeth and their children included Elizabeth and James. James Alexander eldest son of John Kinloch, he is the 12th Kerr of Abbotrule. He married Alice Gibbs. James (19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. He married Elizabeth Goodfellow and their children included John (b.1840). Janet (15th/16th C.) daughter of Sir Andrew of Ferniehirst. She married George Turnbull of Bedrule, who died shortly before 1528. In 1530/1 she married Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme (as his 2nd wife). She held a third of the lands of Bedrule from her first husband. She received the ‘liferent’ of the Lordship of Jedforest as part of the marriage contract with her 2nd husband. Because they were ‘second and third of affinite, thridis of consanguinite, and thrid and ferd of affinite’ they had to ask for special permission from the Pope. In 1546, as part of the marriage contract she was required to come to Lilliesleaf Kirk to received a sum of money; she protested that she was in dispute with Walter at that time (perhaps it was during the divorce) and would not accept the money. However, this marriage ended in divorce, with no children. Sir John (d.1562) of Ferniehirst, 2nd and succeeding son of Sir Andrew. In 1538 he was Chamberlain for the Crown’s lands of Jedforest, and was still Chamberlain in 1539, with the returns made by his brother Robert. He served as Depute to his father, who was Warden of the Middle Marches, being recorded in this role in 1541. In 1542/3 he had to appear to answer the charge of murdering Sir John Striveling of Keir. In 1544 he was taken prisoner by the English, along with his father, following a raid on Rulewater. In 1545 a Parliamentary decree put him at the head of 125 of the 500 horsemen who were mustered in Teviotdale. In 1545 he was among lairds in Teviotdale who signed a bond to settle feuds. He served as Bailie of Jedburgh Abbey’s lands in 1546 and was Bailie of Jedforest both under the Crown and the Earls of Angus. He was probably the ‘lard of Fernyherst’ who signed a bond of assurance with Somersett at Kelso in 1547, along with many other Border lairds. In 1547 and 1548 there are records of several bonds (with Elliots, Armstrongs and others) for entering prisoners with him at Ferniehirst. In 1547/8 he was one of the Kerrs who was accused of supporting the English at Pinkie, and of ravaging the lands of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme later in 1548. This included the farms of Goldielands, Todshawhill, Whithope, Wiltonburn, Borthaugh, Todshawhaugh, Wilton Green and Whames. He was knighted in 1548. He led a force that recaptured Ferniehirst from the English in 1549, from which event the motto of the Kerr’s of Abbotrule derives, ‘J’Avance’. It is also sometimes suggested that this event is the origin of the ‘Jethart Baa’, the balls representing the heads of English soldiers. A chronicler of the time describes how they butchered the entire French garrison of Ferniehirst. He was part of the feud between the Scotts and the Kers; in 1549 Walter Scott of Buccleuch petitioned the Lords of Council to post summonses against him and others at the market crosses of Hawick and other towns, following their assistance of the English in carrying out local destruction. In 1551 he signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’. He was knighted in 1552. He was indicted for his part in the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1552, along with several other Kers and his brother-in-law James Douglas of Cavers. In 1553/4 he was listed among Kers in an assurance not to harm the Scotts or their followers, as well as another bond by the Rutherfords not to harm the Kers. Also in 1553/4 his estate was given to his sons Andrew and William, following his non-appearance to answer charges of murdering Walter Scott of Branxholme. In 1557 he complained to the Regent about the behaviour of the Turnbulls of Bedrule and Hallrule raiding his lands. He purchased the lands of Rueycastle in 1558/9. In 1561 he was among Border Lairds who appeared before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft. In 1561/2 he (and his son Sir Thomas) had a bond with several Elliots to enter a Routledge as a prisoner at Ferniehirst. There was a decree of 1562 at his instigation, against the ‘invaders’ of his lands of South Synton. In 1561 and 1562 he raised a court action regarding disputed lands in Feu-Rule, in which he claimed half the Barony and 2/3 of the other half, resulting in a ‘decret of division’ with Agnes Herries. He appears to have acted as some kind of assistant Warden, since there are several bonds with him in the late 1550s and early 1560s for the capture of thieves. He married Catherine, daughter of Sir Andrew Ker of Cessford. Their children were: Sir Thomas of Oxnam and later Ferniehirst; Margaret, who married John Hay, Lord Yester; Elizabeth, who married Andrew Lundin; Andrew of Nethergogar; William, parson of Bedrule; and John. In 1665 it is recorded that the Barony of Feu-Rule (essentially the Parish of Hobkirk) was divided between him and Agnes Herries. John of Shaw (d.1688) brother of Andrew of Kipplaw, he lived at Hyndhaughhead in Southdean Parish. In 1665 at Smallholm he married Catherine, eldest daughter of Sir Robert Carr of Ettal. Their children included: Margaret (1666–90); Alison (1668–1725), who married Robert Rutherford of Fairmile and was probably mother of Alison who wrote a version of ‘Flowers of the Forest; Thomas, Robert and Marie, who died young; William (b.1679); and Marie (again, b.1681). He died at Hyndhaughhead and is buried in Southdean Kirk. John of Chatto and Sunlaws (17th C.) son of James and Joan Murray. He was forced to sell his estates to his great-uncle the Earl of Traquair, although they were later bought by his uncle Andrew. He married his cousin Christian, youngest daughter of Andrew Kerr. His children included Henry, who married Miss Wauchope of Edmonstone, and whose daughter Barbara married Dr. Alexander Scott of Thirlestane and had a son who became William Scott-Kerr of Chatto. John of Gogar (17th C.) received the ‘ward and non-entry’ of the lands of Whitslade in the period 1663–72. John (1665–95) 3rd son of Andrew of Chatto and Isabella Cranston. He is said to have died at Fodderlee, so he must have been related to Robert of Fodderlee, presumably either his nephew or cousin. He was recorded being ‘off fotherlie’ in 1690 among people owing money to the deceased Mark Turnbull (portioner of Fodderlee) and Bessie Kerr (who may have been related to him). He is probably the ‘John Ker in Fotherlie’ recorded in Abbotrule Parish in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He is probably the John ‘of Fodderlie’ whose will is recorded in 1695. John (17th/18th C.) servant of Walter Pringle, proprietor of Roughheugh Waulk Mill. In 1713 the Bailies heard a ‘process of riot and assassination’ against him, brought by Alexander Buchan, surveyor of ale in Hawick. John of Cavers Carre see John Ker. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Janet Miller and their children included: William (b.1779), botanist; Andrew (b.1791); and Robert (b.1793). In 1816 he made a declaration (included in the Hawick Parish birth records), along with James Miller (labourer at Northhouse), stating that his son William had been born in Hawick in 1779. John William Robert (1794–1841) 7th Marquess of Lothian, son of William, 6th Marquess. He was styled Lord Newbottle until 1815 and Earl of Ancram 1815–24. He expanded his family estates, including acquiring Bonjedworth, Timpedean and other lands. He was a Conservative politician, serving as M.P. for Huntingdon and was Captain of the Yeomen of the Guard in the House of Lords. As Lord-Lieutenant of Roxburghshire he was charged with keeping the peace during some of the troubling elections of the early 19th century. In July 1841 he entered Hawick with a troop of dragoons who had been waiting at Hassendeanburn in order to quell the near riots. He married Cecil Chetwynd-Talbot and was succeeded by his sons William Schomberg Robert and then Schomberg Henry. John MacGregor (1839–1915) born in India, only son of Alexander Boyd, his son was to become the 10th Kerr of Abbotrule. He joined the East India Company in 1856 and served with the 3rd Madras Light Cavalry, eventually becoming a Commandant in the Army. He retired as a Colonel after serving for 32 years. He married Janetta Margaret Nairne of Dunsinnan House, who reached the age of 100. Their children were Janet Frances, Alexander Nairne (who succeeded to the Lairdship), Ida Margaret, Lorraine MacGregor and Evan Sinclair. He was very keen on shooting, fishing and golf. A portrait exists of him as a child, as well as later photographs. John Kinloch (1924–94) only son of Alexander Nairne, he became the 11th Kerr of Abbotrule on the death of his father, although the family had long ago sold the estate. He followed the family tradition into the Indian Army and was... seconded to the Singapore Police after WWII. He married Janet Barbara Ferguson and their children James, Andrew and Rosemary were born in Singapore, with Georgina following after their return to Britain. Loraine MacDowall (19th C.) eldest son of Gen. Thomas William Kerr of the Abbotrule family. He was born in Ceylon, served in India with the 65th Native Infantry, retired as a Lieutenant and became a merchant in Edinburgh. He married Mariane White and they had 4 children, with William Alexander succeeding to the Abbotrule Lairdship title. Margaret (c.1570–1645) daughter of Mark, Earl of Lothian. She first married James Hay, 7th Lord Yester and then remarried to Sir Andrew Kerr, Master of Jedburgh. She was thus known as Dame Margaret, Lady Yester, and was founder of Lady Yester’s Church in Edinburgh. She still owned land in Kelso and Sprouston Parishes in 1643. In her will she left money for the poor and schoolmasters of the parishes of Jedburgh, Sprouston, Hobkirk and Oxnam. In Hobkirk Parish the sum of £100 still yielded significant interest in the early 19th century. Mark (d.1584) 2nd son of Sir Andrew of Cessford. He became Abbot of Newbattle in 1546 and Commendator at the Reformation in 1560. In 1547/8 he was among the Kers who burned lands in Ale Water that belonged to Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. He was listed as brother of Sir Walter of Cessford in the 1564/5 bond between the Kers and the Scotts. He married Helen, daughter of George Leslie, 4th Earl of Rothes. He was succeeded by his son Mark, who became 1st Earl of Lothian. Other children included: Andrew of Fentoun and Romanno Grange, who married Isabella Whittlaw; George; William, who married Jean, daughter of James Johnstone; and Catherine, who married William Maxwell 5th Lord Herries of Terregles. Mark (1553–1609) son of Mark, Abbot of Newbattle. He became Master of Requests in 1577, Privy Counsellor in 1587 and Lord of Parliament in 1591. He witnessed the 1586 marriage contract between Margaret and Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. In 1594 he was ‘lord of requesitis’ when appointed a deputy justice for Roxburgh, Selkirk and Peebles. In 1597/8 he was ‘Lord of Neubottle’ when he complained about Shorts from Gamescleuch, Glack and ‘Jedwartfield’ attacking and capturing his servant Ralph Ker. He was created 1st Earl of Lothian in 1606. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir John Maxwell, 4th Lord Herries of Terregles. He was succeeded by his son Robert. His other children included: Margaret, who became Lady Yester; Isabel, who married William Douglas, 1st Earl of Queensberry; and Lilias, who married John, 8th Lord Borthwick. Mary (17th/18th C.) only daughter of Robert of Fodderlee. She married John Kerr in 1686. In 1689 she was infested in half of the lands of Fodderlee, and in turn her son Andrew was infested in these lands in 1695. She was recorded as owner of Fodderlee in a tax document for the Lordship of Melrose in 1700. She was recorded as owner of ‘the east side of Fatherlie’ in 1707, with a value of £280. Mary née Scott (b.c.1813) keeper of a lodging house at 6 Cross Wynd. Her brother was James Scott, engineer and millwright. She married Thomas Kerr, who was a blacksmith on the Cross Wynd. However, she was already a widow by 1851. Her children included Margaret, Euphemia, Mary and Andrew. Ned (17th C.) merchant listed in Hawick among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in 1693/4. The forename given may be an error, since it is essentially unheard of locally at that time. Nichola (15th/16th C.) daughter of George of Samuelston and his first wife, Elizabeth Carmichael. She became her father’s heirress and married Alexander, Lord Home. The couple were granted the lands of Samuelston according to a charter of 1497. Her name is sometimes confusing written ‘Nicolas’. Patrick (17th/18th C.) younger son of Charles, 2nd Laird of Abbotrule. He was described as ‘of Lustruther’. He married Agnes, daughter of Andrew Ker of Bloodylaws, and they had a son, William who is recorded in 1741. Patrick (18th C.) preacher at Teviothead from 1757 until about 1763 When James Erskine took over). His subsequent history is unknown. It is possible he was the Patrick who was ministed at Caerlaverock Castle and moved to Eskdalemuir about 1762. Patrick (d.1791) 6th Laird of Abbotrule, a younger son of William. He inherited the estate from his brother Charles in 1756, but there was some complication over the confirmation of his succession (specifically, the establishment of the death of his brother), which did not occur until 1762. He was sometimes referred to as ‘the Abbot’. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He trained as a lawyer, being apprenticed to Francis Pringle and Walter Scott. He became Writer to the Signet in 1768. He was the driving force behind suppressing the Parish in the 1770s, possibly in part because of a falling out with the minister. He supposedly then took some of the best glebe lands for himself and had the manse pulled down. It is said that 17 years later, following a Sunday Sacrament at Southdean, a pale horse appeared to the minister and elders, with a ghostly apparition of the hated laird; this was also the same day that the Laird died (although the story no doubt improved with the telling!). He was apparently bad tempered, and in later years seldom left the estate. In 1780 he objected to Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto being on the Roxburghshire electors’ roll (on account of having sold the liferent of much of his property to others); in addition he objected to addition of all the liferenters of parts of Minto and Headsheugh proposed by Elliot. Clearly this was part of a political battle between the Whigs (including Elliot and his invented supporters) and the Tories (which must have included Kerr himself). In 1788 his estate in Southdean Parish was valued at £940 4s 8d, and he also held feu-duities of lands in Hobbirk Parish and teinds for lands in Jedburgh Parish. In 1788 he is listed among the voters of Roxburghshire, his privately circulated description being that he was then ‘Embarrassed in his affairs. A family’ and in the election probably a supporter of ‘the Marquis of Lothian, but thinks himself indifferently used by the Marquis’s Trustees’. In 1766 he married Jean (or Jane), daughter of Thomas Hay of Huntingdon and Mordington. His children were: Charles (b.1767), who sold Abbotrule; Thomas William (b.1768), who became a General; Margaret (b.1769), who remained unmarried; Beatrix (b.1770); and Amelia Wilhelmina (b.1771), who had a sketch made of her, lived in Edinburgh and died unmarried. After his death his widow lived on South Bridge in Edinburgh. Patrick (1796–1864) 8th Kerr of Abbotrule, and the first one not to own the family estate, which had been sold by his father Charles. He became a Lieutenant in the Royal Navy, having joined at age 15. He married Margaret Lewis and their daughter Mary Ann kept a school. He may also have married Helen Mitchell. He died at Chepstow and was succeeded by his uncle’s grandson William Alexander. Ralph of Kersheugh (d.c.1350) early local ancestor of the Ferniehirst branch. About 1330 he was given lands near the Jed Water, with the Douglases as superiors, possibly being the first family member to settle in Teviotdale. The lands were previously known as ‘Scraesburgh’, known by him as ‘Kersheugh’ or ‘Kershaw’ and were essentially the same as what was later called Ferniehirst. He was succeeded by his son Thomas. Ralph of Kersheugh (d.c.1460) son of Andrew. He married Mary, daughter of Towers of Innerleith. His sons included: Andrew, who succeeded; and Robert of Yair. Sir Robert (d.1511) Warden of the Middle March who was said to have been murdered by an English trio called Starhead, Lilburn and John ‘the bastard’ Heron. This was used an excuse for King James embarking on the invasion that led to Flodden. The date may be erroneous and confused with Sir Robert Ker of Caiverton, who died c.1500. Robert of Woodhead and Ancrum (d.1588) 3rd son of Sir Andrew of Ferniehirst. In 1539 he made the returns for the Crown land’s of Jedforest, with his brother John as Chamberlain. He had a charter of the lands of Woodhead in the Lordship of Over Ancrum in 1542. He also had a charter for a third of the lands of Dirleton, and also Newton in the Barony of Bedrule. He may be the ‘Robyn Ker’ who swore allegiance to the English in 1544. In 1551 he served on the panel for David Home of Wedderburn inheriting lands in Ettrick Forest. He became quite wealthy, and was involved in dubious activity around Jedburgh, at one point taking several Burgess prisoners. It appears that in 1548 he applied for an assurance from Somerset that he could travel to his own house in order to serve the English King. The house he built at Ancrum had an inscription ‘Robert Ker and Isobel Home Foundar and Compleitar 1558’. He was listed among the men who appeared before the Privy Council in a promise to end the feud between the Kers and the Scotts in 1562. He was in ward in Edinburgh Tolbooth in 1564, as a result of accusations by Andrew of Daldonside. He is mentioned as one of those excepted in the bond between the Scotts and the Kerrs in 1564/5. He was in ward in Edinburgh in 1565, with Sir Thomas of Ferniehirst, Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule and John Rutherford of Hunthill, younger, as sureties. He was released, but this was an error and he was ordered to present himself again to be warded in 1565/6, with a case brought against him by William Turnbull, Burgess of Edinburgh, resolved shortly thereafter. In 1567 he signed a bond to support the infant King James on the throne and was also among men re-ordered to appear before the Privy Council regarding order in the Middle Marches. In 1569 he was a surety for George Rutherford of the Grange and John Turnbull in Abbotrule. He was in ward in 1571 and also ordered to pay for a cask of wine. There is an existing list of his ‘plenishing’ as removed by the Jedburgh authorities (led by Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule, along with other Turnbuls and Rutherfords) in 1571; in 1573 he complained about the raid on his house, but the authorities ruled that he had reset the fugitive.

Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst, and had no right to complain. In 1571 and 1574 he was surety for his illegitimate sons Robert and William. In 1582/3 he was fined by the Privy Council along with Martin Elliot of Braidlie and Gavin’s Jock Elliot for the non-appearance of 2 Elliots from Ramsiegill. He was among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. He signed a marriage contract in 1586 between his son Robert and Helen Grahamslaw of Newton. Either he or his son was among Border Lairds who renewed their bond for keeping the peace in 1617.

He married Isabel, daughter of David Home of Wedderburn. He was succeeded by his son William, and was grandfather of Sir Robert, the 1st Earl of Ancrum. Other children were Robert of Newton, Thomas, Catherine (who married Henry Haliburton of Mertoun) and Isobel (who married George Douglas of Bonjedward). Robert of Newton (16th/17th C.) son of Robert of Woodhead and Ancrum. In 1586 he purchased Newton, in Bedrule Parish from John Grahamslaw. Also in 1586 he served as surety for his brother William of Ancrum to appear before the Privy Council; he was also surety for William Kirkton at the same time. He was later in 1586 denounced as a rebel for not appearing. About 1590 he was listed among the landed men of the Borders. In 1590/1 he was among those who complained that William Ker of Cessford had reset his son Sir Robert Ker, who was ‘at the horn’ for the murder of his brother William of Ancrum. In 1592 his surety was James Douglas, Commendator of Melrose. In 1594 he was denounced as a rebel for an assurance signed with Sir Robert Kerr, heir apparent of Cessford; along with his brother William he was warded in Dumbarton Castle. He married Helen, daughter of the same John Grahamslaw and was succeeded by his son Robert, who married Euphemia Douglas. He and his wife were declared rebels in 1601 for failing to make payment to Sir William Stewart of Traquair; Stewart complained in 1603 that although they had been in the Jedburgh Tolbooth, they were then freely living in their own house, and so they were to be denounced once more. In 1619 there was a dispute between his wife and her son-in-law John Scott of Huntly; so he must have had a daughter who married Scott of Huntly. Robert (d.1624) eldest son of Mark, he was 2nd Earl of Lothian. He married Annabella, daughter of Archibald Campbell, 7th Earl of Argyll. Without surviving male issue his elder daughter Anne became Countess of Lothian in her own right and married Sir William of Ancrum, who became 3rd Earl of Lothian. In 1641/2 his daughters Anne and Joanna were served heirs to many of his lands and rights, including the church of Hobkirk. Robert of Newton (d.c.1639) son of Robert and uncle of Robert, Earl of Ancrum. In 1622 he (or perhaps his father) gained lands resigned by his cousin Sir Robert Kerr of Ancrum. His lands included Newton in Bedrule Parish. In 1628 he was listed among the major landowners who met to elect M.Ps. for Roxburghshire. He married Euphemia Douglas. He was succeeded by his son William. Sir Robert 1st Earl of Ancrum (1578–1654) son of William of Woodhead and Ancrum (who was killed in 1590) and descended from the Kerrs of Ferniehirst. His brother William is recorded in 1602. Also in 1602 he was cautioner for some Rutherfords in Jedburgh and he signed the bond among Border lairds for keeping the peace, when he was Provost of Jedburgh. He was made a Knight of the Bath in 1603. He was served heir to his father in 1603 and his grandfather in 1608. He followed King James to London and spent much time in Court; however, he was forced to flee the country, having become involved in the feud between the Maxwells and Johnstones, in which he slew Charles Maxwell in a duel. He then spent time on the Continent, where he collected art (later presenting them to Charles I). Restored to his post in the Royal Bed-chamber, he acted as Charles I’s advisor on Scottish affairs. He as Captain of the King’s bodyguard until 1613 and served as Keeper of the Privy Purse. He was created Earl in 1633 and had his portrait painted by John Eycks. He was known for his interest in the arts, and wrote poetry himself. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir John Murray of Blackbarony, and sister of the wife of Sir John Riddell of Riddell.

He secondly married Anne Stanley, only daughter of the 6th Earl of Derby (whose portrait was painted by Cornelius Johnson), and widow of Sir Henry Portman. His children (all but the first by his 2nd marriage) were: William, who became the 3rd Earl of Lothian; Charles, who became 2nd Earl of Ancrum; Stanley, who died without issue; Vere, who married Dr. Wilkinson of Oxford; Anne, who married Col. Nathaniel Rich of Stondon; and Elizabeth. There is an interesting correspondence (sometimes called the Ancrum papers) still in existence between him and his son, covering about the last 30 years of his life, during some of which he was living in Holland to escape Cromwell’s England, as well as his creditors. He was a friend and supporter of...
Robert Kerr

Robert (17th C.) son of George and brother of Sir Thomas of Cavers. He acquired the lands of Middlemas Walls (also called the Mains of Softlaw). He is probably the ‘Robet Ker of Cavers’ who complained to the Privy Council in 1628 about William Turnbull in Braidhaugh obstructing the apprehension of his son James, and for ‘hurting and wounding him’. In 1643 he is ‘of Middlemistwalls’ when recorded owning lands on Sprouston Parish. He married Isobel, daughter of Andrew Riddell of that Ilk and was probably succeeded by his son Thomas of Middlemas Walls. Robert of Prieston (17th C.) owner of the north part of Prieston in 1678. He was listed in 1680 among Borderers convicted for being Covenanters, the accusations including attacking ‘the Tower and Castle of Hawick’; however, he did not appear in court, and was presumably in hiding at that point. Robert of Fodderlee (17th C.) recorded in 1685. He must have been a son of one of the landed branches of the Kerrs; he was surely related to John, the 3rd son of Andrew of Chatto, who was born in 1665 and died at Fodderlee in 1695. In 1686 his only daughter Mary married John Kerr. Robert (d.1692) son of Sir James of Crailing and Marie Rutherford. He inherited Hundalee through his mother, who was daughter and heiress of Nichol Rutherford of Hundalee. He repurchased the Ferniehirst estate from the Earl of Lothian. He became 3rd Lord Jedburgh in 1670. He paid land tax for Ricclaton, Ferniehirst, Hundalee, Over Crailing and other lands in 1678. In 1684 he was one of the men appointed as a commissioner in Roxburghshire for prosecuting Covenanters. He married Christian, daughter of Sir Alexander Hamilton of Innerwick and widow of Sir Patrick Home of Polwarth. He had no children and was succeeded by his distant relative William, eldest son of the 1st Marquess of Lothian. However, the estates of Hundalee and others were inherited by his sister’s son, John Kerr of Cavers. He was effectively the last of the male line of Kerrs of Ferniehirst. His will is recorded in 1693. Robert (1636–1703) eldest son of Sir William, he was 4th Earl of Lothian from 1675, became 3rd Earl of Ancrum in 1690 and the 1st Marquess of Lothian in 1701. He was a volunteer in the Dutch War in 1673. He paid the land tax in Ancrum Parish in 1678. About 1685 he raised a troop, with Sir William Eliott of Stobs as Lieutenant, to round up local Covenanters. He supported the Revolution of 1688 and served the government of William III. He married Jean, daughter if the Marquess of Argyll. He had 10 children, including: William, who was known as Lord Jedburgh before he succeeded; Charles; John, of the 31st Regiment; Mark, commander of the 11th Dragoons, who is mentioned in the song ‘Johnnie Cope’; and Mary, who married James, Marquess of Douglas, and was mother of the Duke of Douglas and Lady Jane, who had twins at the age of 52, with the succession argued in court. Robert of Cavers (17th/18th C.) son of John and Agnes Ker. His name is often written ‘Carre’. He succeeded to the patronage of Bedrule Kirk, as well as the Cavers Carre lands. In 1718 he married Jane, daughter of Robert Mihne of Ballinlo, and she died in the following year. He secondly married Helen, sister of Sir Walter Riddell, Baronet of Riddell. His son Thomas inherited the estate, but died in his youth. The lands then went to his brother John. However, patronage of Bedrule went to his daughter Agnes and her husband John Hume of Ninewells and Ferny Castle (brother of David Hume the philosopher). He also had another daughter, Margaret. Robert (b.c.1790) born in Cavers Parish, he was a tailor in Newcastle. He is probably the Robert in Castleton who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He was listed as male head of his family in 1835–41. He is listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories and Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 and 1861 he was at about 5 Montagu Street. His wife was Helen or Ellen and their children included Robert (carpenter), John, Francis and Walter. Robert (b.1822/3) son of tailor Robert. He was a joiner in Newcastle. He married Margaret, daughter of John Cavers. Their children were Margaret, Robert, an unnamed daughter, John, Walter, John Cavers, Helen, Janet, and Francis Napier. The family emigrated to Manitoba, Canada. Robert (19th/20th C.) resident of Effledge. In 1906 he contributed to the fund for the renovation of Kirkton Kirk. Schomberg Henry (1833–1900) 9th Marquess of Lothian, son of John, the 7th Marquess and brother of William Schomberg, the 8th Marquess. He spent much of his life in the diplomatic service, in Lisbon, Tehran, and then several European cities. He was Colonel of the 3rd Battalion Lothian Regiment. He contested Roxburgh county for the Conservatives in 1868, losing to Sir William Scott of Ancrum. He lived for a while at Monteviot. He gained the lands of Belves, Ryeknow and Abbotsmeadow from John Edmund Elliot of New Belves in 1872. He also served as Justice of the Peace in Roxburghshire and was also Deputy-Lieutenant of the county from 1885. He was also Rector of Edinburgh University, Secretary of State for Scotland, Keeper of the Privy Seal, Captain-General of the Royal Company of Archers, Gold Stick of Scotland, etc. Lothian Street in Hawick was named after him. In 1865 he married Lady Victoria Alexandrina Montagu-Douglas-Scott and hence was son-in-law of Walter, 5th Duke of Buccleuch. His children were: Cecil Victoria Constance, who married John Walter Douglas-Montagu-Scott; Walter William Schomberg, who died from a gun accident in Australia; Margaret Isobel, who lived to 96; Schomberg Henry Mark, died in infancy; Mary, who married Henry Kidd; Helen Victoria Lilian, who married Col. Frederick Walter Kerr; Robert Schomberg, who succeeded, but had no sons; Victoria Alexandrina Alberta, who married Maj. William Gosling; and Isobel Alice Adelaide, who married James Cospatrick Hepburne-Scott. The Lothian titles were inherited by the families of his brothers Ralph and then Walter. Thomas of Kersheugh (d.1389) son of Ralph. He married Margaret, daughter of Thomas Somerville of Carnwarth. He was succeeded by his son Andrew. He may have had another son, John, who settled near Aberdeen. Thomas of Kersheugh (d.c.1430) son of Andrew. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas Home of that Ilk. He was succeeded by his son Andrew, and had other sons Thomas and James. Sir Thomas of Ferniehirst (d.1499) son of Andrew of Kersheugh. He was the first of his family to be designated 'of Ferniehirst'. He probably built the original tower there, sometime around 1490. He also had a new charter of his lands from Archibald, Earl of Angus. In 1474 he was summoned to Edinburgh by the King, probably relating to keeping peace on the Border. In 1476 he is listed among other Border Lairds in an action brought by John, Lord Somerville. He married Catherine, daughter of Robert Colville of Ochiltree (who died at Flodden). It is unclear if they had any sons, but they also had a daughter, Margaret, who married Sir Thomas of Smailholm (with whom he is easily confused, and indeed some genealogies have claimed they are the same man). Thomas of Smailholm (d.1484) son of Andrew of Cessford and Altonburn (whose name is usually spelled ‘Ker’). He was probably the builder of the original Smailholm Tower in the 1470s. He may be the ‘Thom Ker’ who was on the panel to decide on the disputed lands of Kirkton Mains and the Flex in 1464/5. He married Margaret Kerr of Kersheugh, daughter of Sir Thomas of Ferniehirst, through whom their son probably gained the lands of Ferniehirst. He was succeeded by his son Sir Andrew of Ferniehirst. Other children include: Ralph of Primside, ancestor of the Cavers Carre branch; Thomas, Abbot of Kelso, d.1528; George; and William, who had a charter of Langlee and ‘Gallastongis’. Thomas (15th/16th C.) witness in 1501 to a notorial instrument relating to Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst’s lands of Feu-rule in the Barony of Cavers. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Thomases. Thomas of Lintalee (15th/16th C.) first man named on the panel of ‘retour’ for Sir Walter Scott inheriting the barony of Branxholme in 1517. He could be the same as one of the other contemporary Thomases. He may be related to the later Ralph of Lintalee. Sir Thomas of Oxnam and Ferniehirst (d.1585) eldest son of Sir John and Catherine Ker of Cessford. He could be the ‘Thomas Karr son to John Kerr’ who in 1541 was offered on behalf of Sir Andrew of Ferniehirst (Warden of the Middle Marches) as a pledge for the good behaviour of Teviotdale. In 1561/2 (and his father Sir John) had a bond with several Elliots to enter a Routledge as a prisoner at Ferniehirst. He succeeded on the death of his father in 1562. Also in 1562 he was among the men who appeared before the Privy Council in a promise to end the feud between the Kers and the Scotts. Later in 1562 he was ordered to appear before the Privy Council and to remain in ward, along with his brothers Andrew and William. He was a strong supporter of Queen Mary, accompanying her to Dumfries in 1565, and helping her escape from Lochleven in 1568. In 1564 he was listed as the ‘Lard of Pharnyhirst’ among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. He was involved in a feud with the Homes about 1564. Also in 1564 he was warded in Edinburgh Castle, at least partly for non-payment of teinds to the Commendator of Jedburgh; it is also reported that he and his brothers Andrew and William forcibly took the teind sheaves of Bedrule and Innerleithen. In 1564/5 he was specifically listed as an exclusion in the bond to end the feud with the Scotts, while his brothers Andrew, William and John were listed as part of the bond. In 1565 he was explicitly instructed (along with John Rutherford of Huntlill) to enter one of his servants at the next truce day, to answer accusations from Englishmen; later this was increased to 2 servants to relieve the Warden, with he himself being warded in Edinburgh Castle to redress the charges against his servants, and then was ordered to pay the expenses to Ker of Cessford. He signed the ‘Band of Teviotdale’ in 1565. Also in 1565 he is listed among men complained about by the Warden of the Middle Marches for not presenting accused men from their lands. Additionally he was a surety for Robert Kerr of Woodhead in 1565 and was among those summoned before the Privy Council to try to resolve the feud between Sir Nicholas Rutherford of Hunsdale and the people of Jedburgh. In 1566 he was ordered not to molest his mother, Dame Katherine Ker, or her other children and servants. He was among men re-ordered to appear before the Privy Council in 1567 regarding order in the Middle Marches. He was also ordered to present a number of Turnbuls and others to answer charges of raiding into England. In 1568/9 he is still explicitly excluded from the bond signed between the Kers and Scotts. In 1569 he also signed the bond to suppress thieves on the Border. In 1569 he and some others were sureties for George Rutherford in the Grange and John Turnbull in Abbotrule. In 1570, along with Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, he raided into England, with Sussex and Hunsdon retaliating by demolishing Ferniehirst the same year. He was Baron of Feurule, as well as holding other local titles; however, he appears to have forfeited these temporarily. His mother brought a decreet of removal against him in about 1571. He was accused of treasonous acts in 1571 (and confirmed in 1574), probably meaning that he had not given up Catholic sympathies. In 1571/2 he fled from Edinburgh, meeting his supporters under Alexander Trotter and was reset at Ancrum Woodhead by Robert Kerr. He later fled to France, but returned several years later and was rehabilitated in 1581. In 1581 he gained the estates, baronies and lordships given up by Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus. This included the Barony of Feurule and lands of Hallrule and others. In 1581 he also had a ‘benefit of pacification’ from the King, for crimes committed by him and his followers in the period 1567–74. There was a dispute between him and Thomas Turnbull, Baron of Bedrule, as well as the parishioners of Bedrule, over the rights of the benefice, the teinds etc.; this must have been at least somewhat related to the Reformation and the ouster of the Catholic priests. He was also Provost of Jedburgh. He may have been temporarily Keeper of Hermitage in 1563 when some Ellirts are recorded in a bond to enter Jock Elliot with him. He was Warden of the Middle Marches, appointed sometime in the 1570s and perhaps again in the last couple of years of his life. He certainly served as Warden of the Middle Marches and Keeper of Liddesdale Castle by 1583. In 1585 a fray took place following a meeting of the March Wardens, in which Sir Francis Russell was killed (the English first saying it was an accident, but later accusing him of deliberately plotting the murder). His Royal Commission for pursuing offenders in order to keep peace on the Border was revoked in 1585, since he was found to be using this power to pursue his enemies for his own purposes. As a result he was committed to ward in Aberdeen, where he died. He married Janet, daughter of Sir William Kirkaldy of Grange and was succeeded by his son Sir Andrew, 1st Lord Jedburgh. Other children by his first marriage were: Julian (or Janet), who married Sir Patrick Home of Polwarth, and Thomas Hamilton, 1st Earl of Haddington; Margaret, who married Robert, Baron Melville; Mary, who married James, son of William Douglas, 6th Lord Morton; and William, who married Elizabeth Lyon and was also called Kirkaldy of Grange. Portraits exist of him and his wife. In 1569 he secondly married Janet, daughter of Sir William Scott of Kirkurd, and sister of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch; this was part of the 1564/5 bond between the Kers and the Scotts, and he was still owed £1000 of dowry money according to the 1574 testament of Sir Walter Scott. In 1573/4 his wife was granted lands in Oxnam and Ashiestiel (while he was in exile), but there were complaints that Dame Catherine Ker, Lady Ferniehirst (his mother) and Andrew Kerr (his brother) were harassing her farms. Their children included: Sir James of Crailing; Thomas of Oxnam; Ann, who married John Elphinstone, 2nd Lord Balmerinoch; and Robert, 1st (and last) Earl of Somerset, who took the surname ‘Carr’. In 1590 his son and wife were charged with not repaying a debt that he had incurred while in England. In 1592/3 his wife Jean Scott, ‘Lady Pharnyhirst’ was in dispute with Sir Robert Ker of Cessford over crops from Redden. Thomas of Oxnam and Over Crailing (d.1601) younger son of Sir Thomas of Ferniehirst and brother of Sir Andrew, 1st Lord Jedburgh, who was Provost of that town. There was a serious feud between the Kers and the Turnbuls in the later years of the 16th century and early years of the 17th. He and his servants Andrew Hogg and George Gardner were declared as rebels in 1596 for the murder of Henry Oliver in ‘Hyndmureheid’; he claimed that they had a ‘relaxation’, and in 1599 the Sherif of Roxburghshire was accused of failing to bring the men to justice. He was killed at Jedburgh Rood Day Fair in 1601 in a fight between the 2 families, when about 30 Turnbulls and allies from the Minto area came to specifically seek him out. He was slain along with his servant George ‘Glaisher’ (or ‘Glaidner’), while on the other side Robert Turnbull of Bewlie and John Middlemas (brother of William of Lilliesleaf Chapel) were killed, and several men were seriously wounded. A number of Turnbulls were murdered in the following years by members of his family, including Hector Turnbull of Bewlie, who may have been one of those responsible in 1601. The case continued until 1604, with Hector Turnbull of Lilliesleaf declared a rebel for the murder of him and his servant. He had no children and his brother Sir James succeeded to the Oxnam and Crailing titles after his death. Sir Thomas of Redden (16th/17th C.) 3rd son of William of Ancrum and Woodhead. He is probably the Thomas of Ancrum who in 1628/9 was part of the funeral procession for Andrew Kerr, Master of Jedburgh. He may be the Thomas ‘Ker of Ancrum’ whose lands in the Lordship of Liddesdale are recorded in 1632. He spent much time abroad in the army and after his return was knighted in 1633. In 1637 he objected his daughter Jean marrying Sir John Ker of Lochtour, but the marriage went ahead later anyway. In 1643 he appears in the county valuation records for Sprouston Parish as being ‘of Gateside, his lands in Reddin’. He married Jean, daughter of James of Chatto. Their children were: John (d.1645); James of Redden, whose successor was Capt. Charles of Redden; Andrew of Chatto; Jean, who married Sir John Kerr of Lochtour and secondly Sir John Wauchope of Nithsdale; Katherine; Christian; and Vair (b.1636). He secondly married Mary Douglas and they had daughters Margaret, Mary and Anne. He also had an illegitimate son, George (b.1639), with Agnes Wilson. Thomas (17th C.) recorded in 1632 as being ‘of Ancrum’ when his extensive lands in Liddesdale were listed in a Privy Council document. It is unclear who he was, since Sir Robert was Laird of Ancrum at that time (and would become 1st Earl), but he may have been the same as Thomas of Redden, brother of Sir Robert. His Liddesdale lands included Catlee, Dinlees, Over and Nether Tinnisburn, ‘Civishill’, Staneygill, Foulwood, ‘Wilwigholms steid’, ‘Megie Twedmes’, Whisgills, Ratlonholm, Copshawholm, Gillfoot, Christie’s Hill, Pollock and Kirkhill. He was also part of a bond, recorded in 1637. Thomas William (1768–1825) 2nd son of Patrick, the 6th Laird of Abbotrule and brother to Charles, the 7th Laird. He was born in Southdean and entered military service as a Lieutenant in the 73rd Highlanders (Black Watch), eventually becoming a Major General. He may have served as Governor General of Ceylon and it is said that Raeburn painted his portrait. He married Sarah Anne, daughter of William Ker of Meadow House in Berwickshire, and she died in 1812, aged just 26. They had 5 children: Loraine McDowall, who was a Lieutenant in the 65th Native Infantry and later a merchant in Glasgow, and whose son William Alexander succeeded; Margaret Amelia, who married John, son of Francis Brodie; Alexander Boyd, whose grandson Alexander Nairne succeeded; Charles, who died young; and Sarah Anne, who married Alexander Maclean, minister of Carnwarth. The 3 oldest children were shown in a painting along with their mother. He is buried at Cannongate Cemetery, Edinburgh. Thomas (c.1810–bef. 1851) blacksmith on the Cross Wynd. He married Mary Scott in 1837; she was probably daughter of millwright Gideon Scott, who lived next door at 8 Cross Wynd. The 1841 census records him at No. 6, living with his wife Mary and children Margaret and Euphemia. There were further children, Mary and Andrew, but he died before 1851, when his wife was a widow running a boarding house at the same Cross Wynd address. His daughter Mary married Rev. Robert Fordyce, minister at West Port. William (16th C.) brother of Andrew of Ferniehirst. In 1529/30 he had a charter for the lands of Woodhead in the Lordship of Over Ancrum. He could be the ‘Willelmo Ker’ who witnessed the ‘precept’ by Sir Walter Scott of Branholme infefting his son David in his lands in 1528. He may be the William who was on the panel of return for Gordon of Stichill in 1525. It is possible that he was the William who had 101 sheep of his stolen by the Olivers of Strange according to a case at the 1502 Justice-aire held in Jedburgh; the Olivers had remission for these thefts, their surety being Andrew of Ferniehirst. He was also listed as brother of Andrew in a 1502 case where he was pledge for ‘gilbert chiridane’ in Jedburgh. William (d.c.1563) a younger son of John of Ferniehirst. He was presented to the Kirk of Bedrule in 1557. In 1562 he was recorded as sometime Parson of Bedrule (and spelled ‘Ker’). Also in 1562 he is probably the William, along with his brother Thomas of Ferniehirst, and their other brother Andrew, who were ordered to remain in ward, or be fined £1000; this was presumably related to accusations against his brother Thomas. In 1563 he is recorded along with Sir Thomas of Ferniehirst and Sir John Allan in a ‘crown precept’ brought by Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule and the parishioners of Bedrule, charging them to produce their writs proving that they are entitled to the benefices of the parish. This suggests some dispute over who was the minister in this time of the Reformation. Probably William held much of the benefice (like in pre-Reformation times), while John Allan was the actual minister. In 1564 he was accused along with his brothers Thomas of Ferniehirst and Andrew, were accused of forcibly taking the teind sheaves of Bedrule and Innerleithen parishes. William of Ancrum and Woodhead (d.1590) son of Robert of Ancrum and brother of Robert of Newton. In 1572 he was convicted for the murder of 2 Burgesses of Jedburgh and in 1574 was obliged to appear before the Privy Council. In about 1578 he was excluded from a bond by the Kers and Rutherfords, since he had been declared a fugitive for the murder of John Rutherford and others in Jedburgh. He was still ‘younger’ of In about 1583 he obtained the gift of the ‘escheat of the liferent’ of the lands belonging to Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule, his son Walter and Mungo Bennet of Chesters. He was described as William of Ancrum in 1586, when he had an obligation to Hugh Nisbet of Reishill. He was son and heir apparent of Robert in 1585/6 when 6 he was involved in a court case with the Bailies of Jedburgh about whether lands granted to him were in their jurisdiction; they also blamed him for the murder of 3 local men and said he was in a feud with the Moscrops. In 1586 he insisted that the Sheriff of Teviotdale should enter him into possession of the lands of Bedrule, Chesters and Halden, but failed to appear personally. Also in 1586 Andrew Ker of Greenhead served as surety for him to appear before the Privy Council; at the same time he was surety for his brother Robert and they were both stated to be sons of Robert of Ancrum when reminded to appear ‘to answer touching the quietnes and gude ordour of the Middle March’. They were all later denounced as rebels for not appearing. He was also denounced in 1586 for not appearing to answer charges of stopping the Commendator of Melrose collecting his teinds in Langnewton. In 1590 he was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. He is probably the Kerr of Ancrum listed in Monipennie’s c.1594 compilation of Border lairds. He married Margaret, daughter of Alexander (or Archibald) Dundas of Fingask, who was widow of Sir David Home of Fishwick. Their children were: Sir Robert, 1st Earl of Ancrum; Sir Thomas of Redden; Isabel, who married John Ker of Corbethouse; William of Overton, Sunlaws and Linton, Groom of the Bedchamber to James VI and Charles I; Andrew, who probably died abroad, unmarried; and George, probably Canon of Glasgow. He was killed by Robert Ker (younger of Cessford), who was later 1st Earl of Roxburgh; in 1590/1 there were cautioners appointed for other Kers not to reset Robert Ker and his accomplices, who were ‘at the horn’ for his murder. The feud between the 2 families was not resolved until letters and payments made in 1606. William (16th/17th C.) (or Lettice), who married Alexander Popham of Littlecote; and Anne, who first married a younger brother of her sister Letitia’s husband, and secondly married Philip Lord Wharton, father of her brother William’s wife! He was still alive in 1640. William (16th/17th C.) Sheriff-Clerk Depute of Roxburghshire, recorded in 1620 when he was witness to a bond for Thomas Turnbull in Spittal-on-Rule. He may be the ‘William Ker’ who signed the Covenant in Hawick in 1638. William of Newton (17th C.) son of Robert, from whom he was served ‘heir special’ (perhaps meaning he was underage) in 1639. This was composed of Newton, including the newly built mill, and ‘lie Smiddielands’. He was confirmed in the lands of Newton (in Bedrule Parish) in 1642/3. He is probably the ‘W. Kerr of Newtone’ who signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. In 1643, 1644, 1646, 1648 and 1649 he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire. In 1646–47 and 1656–58 he was one of the Roxburghshire representatives in Parliament. In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the rebellions in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, Dumfries and Annandale. He was Lieut.-Col. of the regiment of horse rasied in Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire. In 1654 he was one of the local men who signed an attestation about the ‘carriage and deportment of the deceased Francis Earl of Buccleuch’; this was part of efforts to have the fines reduced on the Buccleuch estate that had been imposed by Cromwell for the Earl supporting King Charles. In 1662, after the Restoration, he was fined. He was probably the Laird of Newton who paid the Land tax on £853 in 1663 and 1678. He married Agnes, daughter and co-heir of John Abernethy, Bishop of Caithness. He may also have married Janet, daughter of Sir William Murray of Dunearne. He had 3 daughters, Euphemia (who may have been 2nd wife of William Kerr of Cherrytrees), Agnes and Margaret (who married Andrew Kerr of ‘Sowcoat’, possibly Chatto). Another daughter may have been Christian, who married William Turnbull of Sharpaw. He could be the William of Newton whose will is recorded in 1691 (unless that was the next generation). Sir William (1605–75) Earl of Lothian, eldest son of Sir Robert, Earl of Ancrum by his 1st wife Elizabeth Murray. His 1631 marriage to Anne Kerr (daughter and heiress of Robert, 2nd Earl of Lothian), who was countess of Lothian in her own right, made him 3rd Earl of Ancrum. A series of letters between him and his father still exist. He married Anne Kerr, who was Countess of Lothian in her own right, and was elevated to the peerage as the 3rd (or 1st) Earl of Lothian. His marriage reunited the Ferniehirst and Cessford branches of the family. In 1631 he was one of the men accused by the minister of Longnewton of taking his teinds. He raised the Teviotdale Regiment (also known as ‘Lothian’s Regiment’) in 1639 as part of the Covenanter force. The Regiment crossed the Tweed with Montrose in 1640 and when Newcastle was captured Lothian was made Governor, with a garrison of 2,000 men. He resigned after the Battle of Fyvie, and the Regiment was disbanded in 1641, but reformed the next year. He had a confirmation of the Lordship and Barony of Jedburgh in 1641. In 1643 he was appointed as one of the Colonels of Foot for Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire. Also in 1643 he was recorded as holder of the teinds for much of Jedburgh and Linton Parishes, as well as the lands of Over Ancrum, Woodhead, Braudlaw, Palacehill and Belses, the teinds of Over Ancrum and lands in Longnewton Parish. In 1646 he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire. He acquired Ferniehirst and Riccalton in 1646 (from the creditors of Andrew, Lord Jedburgh), but in 1669 settled them on Robert Kerr of Crailing (later Lord Jedburgh). He became Scottish Secretary of State in 1649, and was one of the Commissioners negotiating with Charles II in 1650. He lived much of his life at Newbattle Abbey, but also held lands at Fernieeles and Templehall (part of Harwood on Rule), which he is recorded giving over for a loan from Walter Riddell in 1649 and 1652, and then transferring to Mark ‘Carre’ (presumably a relative) in 1658. He was also the 1st Kerr of Abbotrule, acquiring the land perhaps around 1642, and gained the Barony of Feu-Rule in 1649, later selling it to Elliott of Stobs. Like many others, he was fined in 1662. He is recorded in the Land Tax Rolls of 1663 in the parishes of Ancrum and Crailing, Hobkirk, Jedburgh, Longnewton and Oxnam. His children were: Robert, 1st Marquess of Lothian; Sir William of Halden; Charles of Abbotrule; John; Anne; Elizabeth; Mary; Margaret; Vere; Henrietta; Lilia, who probably married Thomas Lewin of Amble; and at least 4 other children who died young. A portrait exists of him. William of Chatto and Sunlaws (1653–1721) only son of Andrew. Although apparently expected not to survive to succeed, he lived to a reasonable age. He became entangled in litigation and sold Ormiston to William Elliot of Wells. In about 1675 he took part in the funeral procession for Jean Ker, Countess of Roxburgh. He paid the land tax in Kelso and Sproutston Parishes in 1678. In 1673 he married Christian, eldest daughter of Sir William Scott of Harden. They had 7 children: William (d.1705); John, who married Margaret, niece of Sir William Kerr of Greenhead, and was disinherited; Elizabeth (b.1683); Christian, who succeeded; Robert (b.1687), who died after being transported to Maryland; Margaret (b.1689); and Joan (b.1690). He secondly married Grizel Porteous. William of Newton (17th/18th C.) probably related to the earlier William of Newton. He is recorded related to Bedrule teinds in 1692. He was probably the Laird in 1694 when he paid tax for 6 hearths at ‘the place of Neuton’ in Bedrule Parish, and whose several tenants are also listed. He was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1696. Probably the same William sold Newton (although perhaps not permanently) to the Marquess of Lothian in 1707. Along with his wife, he was probably the ‘Newton Ker and his Ladie’ who gifted communion cups to Bedrule Kirk in 1716. William (1661–1722) 2nd Marquess of Lothian, eldest son of Robert. He inherited the title of Lord Jedburgh in 1692, and thus sat in the Scottish Parliament. He was Colonel of the 7th Regiment of Dragoons in 1696. He succeeded his father in 1703. He had command of the 3rd Regiment of Foot in 1707, but was removed in 1713 for political reasons. He married his cousin Jane, daughter of Archibald Campbell, Earl of Argyll. He was succeeded by his son William. He was buried in Westminster Abbey. William ‘Bitterbeard’ (1667–1747) 3rd Laird of Abbotrule, son of Charles, to whom he was served heir in 1680, when still a minor. His nickname derived from his long unkempt beard. In 1689 he was appointed as a Captain in the local Militia to guard against ‘the papists’. In 1690 and 1704 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire, and in 1700 was one of the Roxburghshire heritors who petitioned Parliament. In 1700 and 1703 he witnessed baptisms for John Scott of Gorreenberry. He is recorded in 1707 as owner of land in Abbotrule Parish (including Braidhaugh), valued at £700 6s 8d. It is said that he was a Jacobite supporter in the 1715 rebellion, fighting in the army of the ‘Old Pretender’, and taking several Rulewater men along with him. He appears to have been a prisoner in Edinburgh Tolbooth in 1716. In 1727 he was listed among the people owing money to the deceased William Nisbet of Dirleton. He was involved (along with James, Lord Cramond) with the division of Templehall Common in 1734. In 1743 he had a ‘bond of tailzie’, resigning his lands in favour of his eldest son William. He married Margaret, eldest daughter of Alexander Nisbet of Craigenstenny (an oil painting of her exists) and they had 2 children: William, who succeeded; and Cecily, who married Gilbert Elliott of Stonedge. He later married Mary Henry, daughter of the Piper of Banff, and had a further 3 children: Mary, who married John Rutherford of Knowesouth in 1739, with an annullment in Edinburgh in 1750; Charles, who died young; and Charlotte, who married Dr. Thomas Elliott of Edinburgh. His second wife is supposed to have exerted strong influence on him, including convincing him to remove his beard. It is said that a portrait of him was painted, but its whereabouts are now unknown. He executed a deed of entail in 1737, where it is stated that his heirs would bear the name and arms of Kerr of Abbotrule. Also in 1737 he granted a provision of 60,000 merks for his daughters. The year of his death is said by Tancred to have been 1751, which is not consistent with an age of 81. In 1753 his wife was the ‘Lady Abbotrule’ who paid the window tax. William (1690–1767) 3rd Marquess of Lothian, son of William. He was Lord Jedburgh before succeeding his father in 1722. He served many times as a Representative Peer. He was Lord High Commissioner of the General Assembly 1732–38. He lived at Monteviot, where he paid the window tax in 1748. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir Thomas Nicolson of Kemnay, and secondly married his cousin, Janet, daughter of Lord Charles Kerr of Cramond. His children were: William, who succeeded; Robert, who died at the Battle of Culloden; and a daughter. William (c.1695–1752) 4th Laird of Abbotrule, son of William. His year of birth is unknown, and he only became Laird 5 years before his death. He paid the window tax at Abbotrule in 1748. In 1751 he sold off part of the family estates (including Mackside, Broadhaugh, Templehall, Hartshaugh Mill, Kirknowe and Blackcleughmouth) by roup within John’s Coffee House in Edinburgh. He married Mary Brown of Cumberland and they had 7 children: Margaret, who died unmarried; Charles, who succeeded; Ann, who married Thomas Shortreed of Easter Essenside; Alexander; Patrick, who later succeeded his brother Charles; William, who died unmarried; and Cecily. William Henry (1713–1775) 4th Marquess of Lothian, son of William. He was the first to use the title Earl of Ancrum before succeeding. He was Captain in the 1st Regiment of Foot, then Lieut.-Col. of the 11th Dragoons, being wounded at Fontenoy in 1724.

William (1779–1815) born in Hawick, son of William Martin; and Essex, married Capt. John Turner. Mary, died unmarried; Elizabeth, married Ellis Schomberg (who was shot at the Battle of the Boyne by his own regiment). His children were: Andrew, who died young; Gilbert, who succeeded to Gateshaw; John, died young; Sir Charles, who succeeded his brother Gilbert; William, W.S. in Edinburgh; Robert, Lieut.-Col. in the East India Company; John, died young; Cecily, died young; Mary, died unmarried; Elizabeth, married Ellis Martin; and Essex, married Capt. John Turner. William (1779–1815) born in Hawick, son of John and Janet Miller. He grew up at the time that Dickson & Turnbull was established in Hawick as a prominent plant nursery, and it seems reasonable to imagine that this had an effect on his career choice. He became a gardener at Kew and a hunter of plants. He may have been the first professional full-time plant collector in the West. At Kew he was instructed by Sir Joseph Banks and was sent to China in 1804. There he discovered many species, including Euonymus japonicus, Lilium lancifolium, Pieris japonica, Nandina domestica, Begonia grandis and Rosa banksiae. He additionally collected plants in Java and the Philippines. He sent back to Kew Gardens some 238 plants that were new to European science, including the shrub named after him, Kerria japonica. In 1812 he was sent to Colombo in Ceylon (now Sri Lanka) to oversee the gardens at King’s House and on Slave Island. He died there 2 years later, apparently as a result of opium addiction. Borders Distillery named a gin after him. William John (1737–1815) 5th Marquess of Lothian, son of William Henry. He was Colonel of the 1st Regiment of Life Guards and later Colonel of the 11th Dragoons. He was taxed for having male servants in the 1770s. In 1788 his lands included Ferniehirst and Over Crailing in Jedburgh Parish and parts of several other parishes in Roxburghshire, namely Ancrum, Crailing, Hownam and Oxnam. He married Elizabeth, only daughter of Chichester Fortescue of Dromiskin and cousin of the Duke of Wellington. His children were: Mary, who married Gen. Frederick St. John; William, who succeeded; Elizabeth, who married John Evelyn Pierrepont Dormer; Charles Beauchamp, who married Elizabeth Crump; Vice.-Adm. Mark Robert, who married Charlotte MacDonnell, Countess of Antrim; and Maj.-Gen. Robert, who married Mary Gilbert. William John (1763–1824) 6th Marquess of Lothian, son of William John, 5th Marquess. He was founder of the Jedforest Club in 1810 (when still Earl of Ancrum) and was Lord-Lieutenant for Midlothian and Roxburghshire. He firstly married Harriet Hart-Hampden, daughter of the Earl of Buckinghamshire and secondly married Harriet Scott, daughter of Henry, 3rd Duke of Buccleuch. He was succeeded by his son John William Robert. He died when visiting the Duke of Buccleuch in Richmond on the Thames. William Schomberg Robert (1832–70) 8th Marquess of Lothian. He was eldest son of John, the 7th Marquess. He was said to be a promising scholar at Oxford, but died while still relatively young. He married Lady Constance Harriet Mahonesa Chetwynd-Talbot, his cousin. He was succeeded by his brother Schomberg Henry. William Alexander (1831–1919) eldest son of Loraine MacDowall. He served in the Army in India, being awarded the Victoria Cross for action during the 1857 mutiny. However, he apparently had to leave the military after striking his superior officer. He married Harriet Atty from Rugby. He published some books on riding and cavalry tactics. He became the 9th Laird of Abbotrule on the death of his cousin in 1864, although the family no longer owned any land locally. Having no children, he was succeeded by his nephew Alexander Nairne. William (20th C.) proprietor of a grocer’s shop on Drumlanrig Place in the mid-1900s. It also contained a sub-post office (occasionally spelled ‘Kerr’; see also Ker).

Kerrfield Burn (ker-heel-de-burn) n. stream on the farm of Newton in Bedrule Parish. It is listed in a description of the lands of the farm in the Land Tax Rolls of 1811. ‘New Kerrfield Houses’ were described as being to the west of there.

kerrie-haundit (ke-reh-hawn-de) adj., arch. left-handed (said to relate to the left-handed Kerrs of Ferniehirst, and their purpose-built spiral staircases; also ker-haundit).

Kerriot Rig (ke-reh-ee-e-rig) n. place name in the headwaters of the Ewes valley, marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Kerriot rigg’. It is probably the same as Carewudrig.

Kerr Pool (ker-pool) n. name for a pool in the Liddel Water in the southern part of Roxburghshire, south of Kershopefoot.

the Kerrs (thu-kerz) n. important local family, being in the Borders since the 12th century, obtaining Jedforest in 1457 and building the original Ferniehirst Castle around 1470. Kerrs from the counties of Stirling, Edinburgh, Peebles and Ayr signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. The Borders family had two main branches, the Kerrs of Ferniehirst and the Kerrs of Cessford, who intermarried and occasionally feuded. The spelling often (although not always) distinguished the 2 branches; additionally the Cavers Carre family preferentially used the ‘Carre’ spelling. They were Wardens of the Middle March for generations, dominating the history of the area around Kelso and Jedburgh. They were also associated with rieving, and received their motto ‘Sero Sed Serio’ (Late but in earnest) at Ancrum Moor. The family are traditionally left-handed, starting with Sir Andrew Kerr, who apparently found it to be a useful trait at Flodden. The name may derive from the Gaelic for left-handed, or from the Norse for ‘small wood’. The Dukes of Roxburghe and the Marquesses of Lothian are derived from Kerr ancestors. Closer to Hawick, a branch of the Kerrs were Lairds of Abbotrule in the late 17th to early 19th centuries, with a motto ‘J’avance’ – ‘The Douglass cam’ frae Liddissdale, Wi’ the young laird o’ Buccleuch; And there were Kerrs and Cockburns baith, All knights of honour true’ [JTe] (although a distinction is often made between the ‘Ker’ and ‘Kerr’ spellings, the difference is less clear in older texts, and ‘Ker’ is almost unknown now; there are several different theories for the origin of the name).

Kerryrig Park (ke-reh-rih-pawrk) n. former name for lands that were part of Newton in Bedrule Parish, according to the Land Tax Rolls of 1811.

the Kerrs see the Kerrs

Kersel (ker-sul) n. Adam (17th C.) resident of Hawick. His daughter Bessie was born in 1692. Adam (17th/18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. In 1717 he married Isobell (or Helen) Jackson. Their children were born in Hawick, including: John (b.1718), also a shoemaker; Marion (b.1720); Janet (b.1723); Agnes (b.1725); Bessie (b.1727); Agnes (b.1729); and Adam (b.1731). The witnesses in 1720 were Thomas Tinlin and William Sinton and in 1731 were James Scott and Walter Purdom. He may be the Adam from whom 3s. 2d. was received by the Town Treasurer in 1755 ‘for Rowly-powly loft’; this was presumably for his right to sit there. Adam (18th C.) gardener at Abbotrule and Weens. In 1767 he is recorded as a gardener at Abbotrule. He was listed as ‘Adam Carsal’ gardener at Weens in 1778 and 1779, when he was working for William Oliver of Dinlabyre. His name is recorded as ‘Kerswall’ ‘Carswell’ and variants at Weens in the period 1785–88. In 1757 he married Betty, daughter of George Stevenson. He is probably the Adam whose children, baptised in Southdean Parish, included: Jean (b.1761), possibly the Jean who married Adam Goodfellow in Wilton in 1788; Agnes (b.1764); John (b.1767), who married Ann Tinlin; and Betty (b.1769). He is probably also the Adam whose children, baptised in Hobkirk Parish, included: George (b.1772); Margaret (b.1774); Adam (b.1776); and James (b.1780). Adam (1745–1811) shoemaker in Hawick, son of John, and grandson of shoemaker Adam. In 1789 he (along with shoemaker Robert Oliver) he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Robert Turnbull. He married Ann Scott in 1769. Their children were: Ann (b.1770); John (b.1772); Adam; William (1775–76); and Agnes (1778–79). It was probably his (later) daughter Agnes who is recorded dying in 1810. Adam (18th/19th C.) wright of Hawick Parish. He married Jean Turnbull in 1799. Their children included: an unnamed child, who died in Hawick in 1802; Helen (1803–82), who married James Hardie; Elizabeth (1806–51), who married George Fiddles; Jean, who died in 1812; June (1816–56), married Walter Rae; Joan (c.1818–92), married Walter Graham Harley; and another unnamed.
child died in 1820. Helen may be the female servant, along with her sister Joan, living with John Hislop’s family at about 15 High Street in 1841; she was in Jedburgh by 1851. He was listed as a joiner on death certificates. Adam (1772/3–1853) resident of Kirkton Parish. In 1805 he married Janet (1781–1851), daughter of James Hutton and Janet Black from Hawick. Their children included: James (c.1818–64); and Adam (c.1820–59). There were surely more children, but no baptismal records have been found, perhaps because they were members of a secession church. The family emigrated to the Galt area of Ontario in 1831, where he was a farmer and member of the First United Presbyterian Church in Galt. They are buried at Cedar Creek Cemetery, North Dumfries, Waterloo County. Adam (1796–1862) shoemaker on the Kirk Wynd, son of John and Anne Tinlin. In 1822 he married Margaret Dryden (1789–1861) from Galashiels. They probably had 9 children: John (b.1820), who died in infancy; an unnamed daughter (d.1821); Ann (1822–77), who married Andrew Wilson; Elizabeth (‘Betty’, c.1824–1900), who married Robert Waldie; Margaret (c.1826–96); Agnes (c.1828–1912), who married John Laidlaw; John (c.1830–92); Janet (c.1832–59) probably son of Adam and brother of James. He most likely travelled to Canada with his family in 1831, settling in the Kitchener-Waterloo area of Ontario, where he was a farmer. He is buried in Cedar Creek Cemetery along with his family members. Adam (b.c.1851) son of John and Elizabeth Tait. He was probably born in Hawick. He married Isabella Waugh and their daughter Jean married M. Gordon from Hawick. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children, baptised there, include an unnamed son (b.1768), Agnes (b.1770), Adam (b.1773) and Betty (b.1766). James (c.1818–64) said to have been born in Hawick, probably of Adam and Janet Hutton. He emigrated to Canada along with his father and family and married Mary Jane Cranston, from Yetholm. Their children were Adam, Robert, James, Adam Cranston, Alexander, Andrew, Margaret and Jessie. He lived in North Dumfries Township near Waterloo in Ontario. John (17th C.) resident of Minto Parish who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. He is probably related to the Robert recorded in Minto a decade later. John (17th C.) resident at Wester Heap according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick. His son John was born in 1693. It is possible that he was also father of shoemaker Adam (whose first-born son was called John). John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Alton in 1724, Borthaugh in 1727 and Drinkstone in 1729. In 1738 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Riddell, who was living at Alton. He married Agnes Oliver in Wilton in 1718; she was also from Wilton. Their children baptised in Wilton included: Margaret (b.1719); Jean (b.1721); Marion (b.1724); Adam (b.1727); Andrew (b.1729); and Marion (again, b.1732). Note that his surname is listed as ‘Carsel’ and ‘Carsell’. The witnesses in 1724 and 1727 were John and Walter Scott and in 1729 were William Scott and James Cavers. He may be related to the John recorded at Wester Heap in 1694. John (1718–88) son of Hawick shoemaker Adam. In 1745 he married Agnes Leithead in Hawick Parish. Their children included Adam (b.1746), who was also a shoemaker. John (b.1767) born in Southdean Parish, son of Adam. He was a shoemaker journeyman in Hawick. He married Ann (b.1761), daughter of Robert Tinlin (‘Rob the Naig’). Their children included: Adam (1796–1862), the Hawick shoemaker; Ann (1805–73), who married Charles Hunter; Margaret (1809–70), who married Thomas Newall and George Didsbury; and John (b.c.1810), who emigrated to Australia. Agnes (b.c.1803) and Janet (b.c.1807) were probably also his children, and died young. The witnesses in 1796 (when his name is incorrectly given as ‘Adam’) were shoemaker Walter Scott and miller John Oliver. He may be the John whose daughter Margaret died in Hawick in 1806 and the deceased shoemaker John whose daughter Janet died in 1811. In 1841 his wife, brother-in-law John and son John were living on the Fore Raw (suggesting he was already deceased). John (b.1772) son of Adam and Ann Scott, he was baptised in Hawick Parish. Family tradition says that they lived at the Mid Raw. He was probably the progenitor of ‘Karsells’ in the United States, Canada and Australia, with his children likely being: Robert (b.1800), who emigrated to the U.S. in 1832; Nancy, who married Charles Hunter and emigrated to the U.S. in 1852; Adam (b.1803), who emigrated to Canada; and John (b.c.1810), who emigrated to Australia in 1852. None of these baptisms are in the Parish records. John (c.1810–90) son of John and Ann Tinlin, he was born in Hawick. In 1841 he was a ‘Woollen Stocking Maker Journeyman’ living on the ForeRaw with his mother and uncle John Tinlin; his age was given there as 26, but that was probably an underestimate. In 1851 he was a frame-worker, living next door to shoemaker Adam’s family on the Kirk Wynd. In about 1847 he married Agnes (or perhaps Ann) Henderson and the family emigrated to Australia in 1852. Their children included Robert (b.c.1849–97), Margaret (1851/2–1935, also known as Agnes), John, Ann and James. The first 2 children were born in Hawick. He died at Moonambel, Victoria. John (b.1829/30–92) son of Adam and Margaret Dryden. He was a woolen spinner in Hawick. In 1851 he was living at 4 Weensland and in 1861 at 3 Kirkwynd. In 1848 he married Elizabeth Tait, who was from Kelso and died in 1892. Their children were: Elizabeth (c.1849–1911), who married Edward Wilson; Adam (c.1851–28), who married Isabella Waugh; Margaret (c.1853–1914), who died unmarried; William (b.1855) and William (again, b.1856), who both died in infancy; John (1858–1922), who emigrated to New Zealand; Robert (1860–1930), who married twice, but had no children; and two more Williams (b.1863 and b.1865), who also died in infancy. John (b.1858) son of John and Elizabeth Tait, he was born in Hawick. In 1881 he emigrated to New Zealand. His children were John Edward, Adam (‘Jim’), Robert (‘Roy’) Tait, Herbert, Kenneth Henry, Doris Guest, Norman, Jean Myrtle and Thelma Bettsworth. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. His children include: Jean, who married James, son of John Scott in 1726; Margaret (b.1704); and William (b.1706). He is probably related to the John recorded in Minto a decade earlier. Jean, who married James Scott in Minto in 1733, may have been his daughter, as well as Margaret, who married Thomas Thomson in Minto in 1736. Robert (1800–92) probably son of John, he was born in Hawick. He was a stocking weaver in Hawick and then in Edinburgh. He spent 12 years in the Navy, where he lost his sight in an accident. In 1832 he emigrated to Ohio, U.S.A. and later lived in Bloomington Indiana. He married Margaret Anderson and secondly Eleanor W. Finney. He lived to the age of 92. His descendants changed their surname to ‘Karsell’. Robert (19th C.) resident of Hawick. His wife Helen Halliday is recorded being in Jedburgh Jail in 1839. She was a widow and pauper living on the Back Row in 1851, with her grand-daughters Janet Kersel and Helen Elliot. Robert (19th/20th C.) local manufacturer. In about 1903 he went into partnership with Walter Scott Barrie to form Barrie & Kersel at Annfield Mills, Teviot Crescent (formerly written ‘Carsel’, ‘Carsell’, ‘Carswell’, ‘Karsell’, ‘Kersal’, ‘Kersall’, ‘Karswell’, ‘Kersel’, ‘Kerssell’, ‘Kerswel’, ‘Kerswell’ and variants).

Kersel’s (ker-ssel) n. small knitwear firm of the 19th century, probably preceding the founding of the Barrie & Kersel partnership.

Kershaw (ker-shaw) n. James (b.1795/6) weaver from England. He was said to be among those who came to Hawick in about 1836, following John Wilson going to the Rochdale area to learn about weaving flannel. In 1841, 1851 and 1861 he was living on O’Connell Street at the former No. 8. His wife was Betty and their children included John, Thomas, Janet, Samuel, Abraham, James, Mary and Edward.

Kersheugh (kers-heugh) n. farm on the Jed Water, just south of Glendouglas. It was a home of the Kers from early times. This is probably the place written as ‘carshuyoill’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, when Andrew Douglas was there. John Douglas was there in 1797 (it is ‘Corysheuch’ on Pont’s c.1654 map, matching the former local pronunciation).

Kershope (ker-shup, -sup) n. area on the Border, immediately south of Newcastleton, alongside the Kershope Burn, with Kershope Forest stretching off into Cumbria. The farms of Scotch and English Kershope are across the Border from each other here. Lands here were granted by William de Rossetdale to the hospital of St. Peter in York, probably in the mid-12th century, as recorded in a copy made in the early 14th century; the grant describes the boundaries of the lands as ‘the fosse of the Galwegians and the rivulus running from thence into the Lydel, and on the other side of the fosse straight to the high moor, and so by the watershed of the moor as far as the old way of Roxburgh, and as said way falls into Creshope from above the shealings which were Eadulf’s’. This was presumably the same as the lands recorded as ‘Greshoppa’ given to the same priory by William ‘de Russendale’ and his wife, as confirmed by King Malcolm and the 'Gressehope' listed in the English part of Liddesdale in 1276. Being right on the Border, the area must have been regularly subject to raids. In 1494/5 Stephen Turnbull, brother of the Laird of Whithope, had remission for stealing 80 cows from there along with some Englishmen, and for killing John Murray. In 1502 Robert Jackson in Wolfeuclehead had remission for bringing in 'traitors of Leven' to steal 14 cows and goods from there, as well as raiding 'le pele de kershop'. It is further recorded in 1502 that Adam Scott had 23 sheep and a horse stolen from him there. In 1541 the lands were valued at 10 merks, but said to be then waste 'except for summering'. In 1551 it was listed as one of the places on the boundaries of Liddlesdale where meetings could take place between the Justiciar of Liddlesdale and the English Wardens. In 1552 it was written by the English that 'From the foot o Cryssop unto the head of Cryssop three several Watches, and in every Watch four men; whereof one to be at Craighill-foot, and the other two beneath, and the Searchers for every Watch nightly to be appointed by the said John Musgrave'. Gilbert Elliot of Stobs had sheep there (perhaps on the English side) in the early 17th century. In 1633 rental was owed from there by the Earl of Buccleuch to Sir Richard Graham. In about 1645 a flock of 50 sheep, belonging to the Earl of Buccleuch, was stolen from there, but the shepherd followed the thieves to an alehouse at Kirkinton in Cumberland, where he accosted the thieves, warning them that other men were also following, whereupon they fled, and he recovered the stolen sheep. The Scottish farm is shown on the 1718 survey of properties belonging to the Scotts of Buccleuch. At that time it consisted of 1007 acres, bounded by the Border, Sorbietrees, lands owned by the Laird of Whithaugh and Flicht; the farmhouse appears to be close to the modern Kershope Bridge. The farmer there in 1797 was Henry Hutton – 'When cauld, sleeky showers stain the braes o' the Kershope, They slightly skim o'er the sweet lass o' the shiel'[DA], 'Richt ower frae Frostylee To Kersop in Siccan Stour, We garr'd the Southrons flee Wi' mony a clash and clure'[TK] (the name first appears as 'Greshoppa' and 'Creshope', in the mid-12th century; it is 'Kershop' in 1494/5 and 1500, 'Cresoppe' in 1584, 'Kershoipe' in 1633 and 'Carshop' in about 1645; it is 'Kirsop' on Gordon's map of Scotland in Blaeu's 1654 atlas and 'Kershope' is marked on Stobie's 1770 map at the modern position of the twin farmsteads of Scotch and English Kershop; its origin is probably the Old English 'cærse hop', meaning 'cress valley').

Kershope (ker-sup) n. former name for lands in the Ward of Ettrick, which were Crown lands at one point. They should not be confused with Kershope on the Border. They are located to the east of Yarrow village, with Easter and Wester Kershope marked on modern maps. The lands were owned by the Crown from about 1456. In the late part of the 15th century the lands there were raided by Stephen Turnbull (brother of the Laird of Whithope), stealing 80 cattle belonging to John Murray of Falahill. The lands were leased by John Murray, then to brothers John and Ninian, then to John's widow and son in 1486, by Baldred Blackadder in 1488, then Ninian and John Murray in 1490. In 1499 the lands were let half to Thomas, son of John Murray, and half to Ninian Murray. Then on the death of Thomas Murray, half was let to James, son of Peter Murray. It remained Crown property until at least 1502 and in 1510 was feued half to John Murray and half to James, son of Peter Murray. Adam Scott was there in the early 16th century, with his son William complaining in 1533 that the Scotts of Howasley and Dryhope raided the farm. In 1533 Isobel Murray (wife of Alexander Elliot) assigned her lands there to her 'brother german' Michael Scott. In 1541 the 'Est Syde of Kershope' was occupied by John Murray and the western side by Michael Scott. In 1555 Robert Scott of Bowhill was served heir to his brother Walter in half a steadying there, called 'Westsyd de Kershop'. In 1610 Andrew Scott of Aikwood inherited his father's half land of 'Forrestae de Kerhoip'. Adam Scott was tenant there in 1731. Wester Kershope was held by Johnstone of Alva n 1802 (it is 'Kershop' in 1456, 1468 and 1486, 'Carsoppe' in 1499 and 1501; it is marked 'Kersupp' on Blaeu's 1654 map).

the Kershope Burn ( thu-ker-shup-burn) n. stream that forms part of the Scotland/England Border for about 8 miles near Newcastleton, and flows into the Liddel. The area was once more heavily populated and there are many signs of former cultivation and settlement along its banks, including settlements, cairnfields, hut circles, rig and furrow lines and sheepfolds. In 1583 Captain Thomas Musgrave described it thus: 'Kyrsope is a smale becke and desendes from the wast grounde called Kyrsophe head'. It devydes the realmes from the meare dyke untill it meat with Lyddall, and is from the head unto the foote without habitation, and at the foote of it is the fortes'
Kershopefit

(the origin is possibly Old English for ‘cress valley’).

Kershopefit (ker-shop-fit) n. Kershopefoot, hamlet on the south (i.e. English) side of the Kershope Burn, just where it meets the Liddel Water. It is ‘Kyrsope fott’ in a letter of 1541 dealing with disputes on the Border. It is recorded as ‘Kyrsopefoote’ on a map of Liddesdale drawn up by Sir William Cecil, c.1561, when there were Foresters there. It was formerly a station on the Waverley Line, marking the official crossing of the Scotland/England border on the route to Carlisle. Earthworks here are probably the site of the former tower. James Armstrong was farmer in the mid-1700s. Mr. Little was there in 1868 and Richard Armstrong in the latter part of the 19th century. There was also a mill just to the east. The place is mentioned in the ballad ‘Hobie Noble’ – ‘At Kershope foot the tryst was set – H’Yiggs and the Wat Wat Sail’ [HI].

Kershopehead (ker-shup-head) n. Kershopehead, a farm on the English side of the upper Kershope Burn. It is ‘Kyrsope hed’ in a letter of 1541 dealing with disputes on the Border. It is ‘Kyrsopehead’ on a map of Liddesdale drawn up by Sir William Cecil, c.1561. The stream itself is marked ‘Kirskophead’ on Sandison’s c.1590 map and is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map; it is ‘Kersehopefoot’ in 1821.

Kersley (kers-lee) n. Leonard (1882–1918) son of William and Hannah Shackell of Winchester. He worked as a printer with Allan Watt’s and also at the Hawick News and opened a draper’s business at 8 Myreslawgreen. He was a Lieutenant in the Salvation Army and served as Vice-President of the Hawick Trades Council. He was Lance Corporal in the K.O.S.B. He was killed in WWI. In 1907 he married Margaret (‘Meg’) Young, daughter of Walter Nisbet; she continued to run the shop until 1936 died in 1970 and is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. They had children Victor William (1909–2002) and Margaret (b.1916) and lived at 2 Morrison Place. The circumstances of his death in June 1918 are not known; he is buried at Dusans British Cemetery, France. Prof. Leonard ‘Len’ (1938– ) son of Victor William and Helen Haig. He was educated at Hawick High School and gained a Ph.D. from the University of Edinburgh. He is Professor in the Physics department at Aberystwyth, researching in atmospheric physics. In 1970 he married Jill Wallace and they have 2 children.

Kerswell (kers-well) n. alternative name for Cresswell.

Kerve (kerv) v., arch. to carve – ‘But nowe thyay brik doum the cervet wark thero’…’ [HSR], ‘…wi’ horn hannels kerved into a’ kinds o’ whurly-whas …’ [DH] (there are spelling variants).

Kessy (ke-see) n. nickname for a Hawick character of the 19th century – ‘The Sootie Kitlin’ and Bumma Rae, Jenny Tranklets and auld Cauld Kail, Jamie Sprinkie, Kessy, the Kay, Doctor H’Yiggs and the Wat Wat Sail’ [HI].

Kett (ke) n., arch. the meat of a diseased animal, especially a sheep.

Kettit (ke-tee’, -ti’) adj., arch. spent, emaciated – ‘Till, peeled o’ flesh by vile ambition’s nither, Tis kettit sae its ribs scarce hing thegither’ [JoHa], ‘Ketteet-oot = spent, exhausted (in the sense of having ‘run done’, or of being no longer fertile or productive’ [ECS].

Kettle Hill (ke-ul-hil) n. small hill in Liddesdale, just to the south of Burnmouth farm, with Shileden Sike to the north.

Kettle Robbie (ke-ul-rob-be) n. nickname for one of the many Robert Scotts of the mid-1800s.

Ketty (ke-te) adj., arch. spongy, fibrous – ‘A ketty peat’ [GW].

Keuch (kewch) n., arch. a persistent, tickly cough, v. to cough persistently because of a tickly throat.

Kevel (ke-vul) v., arch. to cut wood or carve meat clumsily.

Kew Sike (kew-sik) n. stream that joins the Carewoodrighope Burn in the upper Ewes valley. It runs down a steep-sided gully to the north of the road connecting Fiddleton with Hermitage. There are the remains of 2 buildings, one on each side of the sike.

Keyne see Keane

Kickmaleerie (kik-ma-le-ree) n., arch., poet. a trifle, knick-knack, particularly referring to furniture or decoration – ‘Sae mony kickmaleeries In my house do not suppose’ [JR] (see also whig-maleerie).
Kick-ma-leerie

Kick-ma-leerie (kik-ma-lee-ree) n. nickname for Christopher Irving. He was said to be a fiddler, which was another meaning of the phrase.

Kick the can (kik-thu-kan) n. children’s game in which one person tries to find the others before any of them can kick a can that is placed at base – ‘It never cost oo owt ti play kick the can. What fun oo hed though’ [We], ‘...whichever was first ti kick the can, now if hey ran by mei an kicked the can, A’d ti gain away an hide, an hey was left ti dae’d’ [DaS].

Kidd (kid) n. name of a travelling dentist of the mid-19th century, who set up shop at Bunyan the Barbers, 29 High Street, charging sixpence for an extraction. He could be the Thomas D., retired dentist from Lilliesleaf, who is recorded at the Crown Inn in 1871.

Kidd (kid) n. David (d.1835) mason in North Greenholm. He was listed among male heads of households in 1835. Helen see Margaret. James (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was recorded at ‘Borthwickshiels Eskdal’ (although it is unclear what this means) in 1780 and at Borthwickshiels in 1785. He is probably the James who married Isabel Forsyth in Roberton in 1779. His children included: Kathrine (b.1780); Margaret (b.1782); and John (b.1785). He may be the James, son of John, born in Roberton in 1747.

John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Parkhill in 1753. He married Margaret Watson in Roberton in 1746. His children included: James (b.1747); Jean (b.1750); Bell (b.1753); and John (b.1756). John (18th/19th C.) paid the cart tax in Lilliesleaf in 1787–91, and was also recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls at Lilliesleaf. In the 1788 cart tax roll he was listed as ‘Robert’. He could be the ‘old man from Alevater’ of that name who is recorded dying in Hawick in 1805. Margaret ‘Maggie’ (16th C.) resident of the Saughtree area, also known as ‘Helen’ in a different version. She was said to have fathered several children to Robert (or perhaps William) Elliot of Larriston (or perhaps Redheugh), according to a Liddesdale tradition. According to different version, these offspring included Gilbert Elliott, ‘Gibbie wi the Gowden Garters’ or Gilbert, who was recorded as ‘bastard brother of Robert Elliot of Redheugh’ in 1603. She is said to have lived at a place called ‘Kidd’s Walls’, but had to be moved by Elliot when his wife discovered her. She then lived in a small tower he had built at Hartsgarth, the ruins of which were used to build the house there, according to Thomas Elliot of Meikledale. A different version of the story (recounted by Jeffrey) has her being poisoned by the Elliot women and with her dying breath cursing the family to die single and despised. Note that about 200 years later Robert Elliot of Redheugh married a woman of the same name, suggesting that there may be some confounding of stories (also written ‘Kid’).

Kidd’s Linn (kidz-lin) n. waterfall on the Staneshiel Burn on the farm of Dinlabyre in upper Liddesdale. It is also known as ‘Kitty Linn’ or ‘Kitty Linns’. There was formerly a shepherd’s cottage there, where Ninian Hislop was in 1835. James Armstrong was shepherd in 1851. Meg, the wife of an earlier shepherd claimed to have had an encounter with the Devil, pushing him over the precipice near her house. This inspired some lines entitled ‘The Deil’s Dead’, to which Newcastle poet David Anderson composed the reply ‘The Deil’s no dead’ (it is ‘Kittylinns’ in 1835).

Kidd’s Scar (kidz-skar) n. cliffy region by Craikhope Burn in the upper Borthwick valley. An enclosure and some old ring enclosures are visible near there on aerial photographs.

Kidd’s Waas (kidz-wawz) n. supposed site of the former house of Helen (or Maggie) Kidd, who tradition says was a lover of Robert Elliot of Redheugh, tragically poisoned by his family to end the unsuitable match. In Jeffrey’s history of 1864 he identifies a site on the hillside on the opposite side of the valley from Saughtree schoolhouse. Shepherd Frank Turnbull identified a similar site according to a report of 1890. However, it is unclear whether there are any remains there now.

Kiddy (ki-dee) n. Rev. William (1818/9–49) from Coldstream, he became minister at Lilliesleaf Secession Kirk in 1843. However, he died suddenly of cholera only 6 years later; he visited a family with the first cholera case in Lilliesleaf village and was dead the next morning. He married Grace, daughter of Rev. Robert Cranstoun of Morebattle and left a young family.

Kid Sike (kid-sik) n. small stream that joins the north side of the Teviot near the farm of Comnonside.

Kielder (keel-dur) n. village over the Border into England, in the Cheviots, where the Kielder Burn meets the North Tyne. Also the name of the general area, including Kielder Forest Park and Kielder Water. An old barn there was used in the mid-19th century for ‘Tynehead Preaching’ in the summer, with services attended by people from both sides of the Border. Kielder Castle was originally a hunting lodge, built for the Duke of Northumberland in 1775. An old gun found near there is in Hawick Museum – ‘Whar Keelder meets wi’ the Tyne, Masel an’ ma kinsmen three, We tackled the Percies nine – They’ll never mair meddle wi’ me’ [T], ‘The eiry blood-hound howl’d by night, The streamers flaunted red, Till broken streaks of flaky light O’er Keeldar’s mountains spread’ [JL] (note often misspelled ‘Keilder’).

Kielder Forest (keel-dur-fo-rist) n. Britain’s largest forest, and the largest man-made forest in Europe, covering over 230 square miles in Northumberland. Managed as a commercial forest, mainly planted with Sitka and Norway Spruce, it is also used as a recreational area.

the Kielder Stane (thu-keel-dur-stän) n. a boulder marking the Border, since at least the time of the Reivers, about 3 miles east of Deadwater, now in the Kielder Forest. It is said to be unlucky to walk round the stone 3 times counterclockwise.

Kielder Witter (keel-dur-wi'-ur) n. largest man-made lake in Europe, in the North Tyne valley of upland Northumberland. It is about 8 miles long, with 27 miles of coastline, covers some 2,684 acres, and is said to contain enough water to submerge all of England to a depth of 8 m. It supplies water to much of Northumbria, and is a recreational centre attracting a huge number of visitors (sometimes called ‘Kielder Lake’ or ‘Kielder Reservoir’).

Kildowan (kil-dow-in) n. villa occupied by manufacturer William Lyle in the latter part of the 19th century, on Wilton Hill, roughly opposite the Police Station.

Kilford (kil-furd) n. fortified house marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map, roughly on the opposite saide of the valley to Riccarton in Liddesdale. It is near the Kih Burn, suggesting that the name is connected. However, the precise location of this tower house is not known. This is probably the ‘Kylsfurd’ listed on the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale, valued at 4 shillings Scots: ‘The council appoint every one to pay for burning and shealing every kill 4 shillings Scots...’ [BR1729], the framework on which a corn stack is built, a gap left in a stack for airing – ‘The stack kill’ [GW].

Kill Croft (kil-kroft) n. piece of land above the ‘Deidhaugh’, the name being in use in the early 19th century. The land was owned by the Duke of Buccleuch and was once suggested as the site for the new schoolhouse. The area was later referred to as ‘Dr. Graham’s Field’ and eventually became part of Wellogate Cemetery (also ‘Kiln Croft’).

Kill Dry (kil-dri) n. nickname for some Scots in the late 18th and early 19th centuries (presumably related to the drying action of a kiln).

kill-ee (kil-ce) n., arch. a kiln, fireplace of a kiln (also killogie and kiln-logie).

Killhouse (kil-hoos) n. Killhouse, former farmstead in the southernmost part of Castleton Parish. It was situated on the Muir Burn, near Chapel Knowe. Robert Bryson and his family were there in 1841.

the King’s Rantin (thu-kingzrawn-tin) n. former celebration (at public expense) by the local dignitaries on the King’s Birthday. Such a celebration was recorded being held for George I (whose birthdate was 28th May) in 1724 and the expenses are recorded in 1732. It moved to 30th October in 1733, the birthday of George II. In 1739 it is recorded that festivities began at 10 a.m. In 1747 (because of the debt over Teviot Brig) the Council ordain that the Town would not pay the expenses. The festivities grew in size, particularly during the reign of George III, celebrated on the 4th of June (shortly after the Common Riding). This was George III’s actual birthday, but the same day was also celebrated throughout Britain as George IV and William IV’s official birthdays. There was a function in the Council Chambers of the old Town Hall, with the alcohol traditionally being supplied by the Bailies. The excess of the celebration was denounced in James Hogg’s lines ‘Frugal temperance urged no cesses, Birthday rants, nor Bailie’s messes’. There were displays of home made fireworks in the town and rival ‘Eastla’ and ‘Westla’ bonfires. In the 18th century this was a major focus of activity for the town’s youth, with material being collected for about a month before, and regular raids on the opposing gang’s store of fuel. The bonfires lit at each end of town were said to be a very old tradition, but ended about 1800. In the early years of the 19th century the King’s health was drunk outside the Town Hall by the Magistrates and their guests ‘Highland fashion’, with glasses thrown over the shoulders and women of the town catching them in their aprons. In later years there was also a parade through the town – ‘Payd that night ye likcor was got to Ranting 2 4 0\’ [BR1732].

King’s Rig (kingz-rig) n. ridge on the northeast side of the Maidens, crossed by the Catrail. A stream there (which joins the Harwood Burn and ultimately the Slitrig) is called King’s Sike (the connection with any King is obscure).

that he ever left Hawick (and the Australian version is clearly itself a parody of ‘Ring the Bell Watchman’, first published in 1891). Note that the words of the chorus are almost always slightly altered compared with the published version. The accompaniment was slightly changed for the 2001 edition of ‘The Hawick Songs’, with an attempt to restore some cheer to the music. It has been covered by some others artists, e.g. the Caern folk trio in 1969. Scocra recorded a ‘punkified’ version on their 2006 CD ‘Gie’d Sum Wellie’ – ‘...Ring the bell, Kinly, Stick, ring the bell’ [WE], – ‘...And the Kiny Stick he’s mortal And he lies upon the flags’ [WE].

Kinmont Willie (kin-mon’-wi-lee) n. nickname name for William Armstrong who was rescued from Carlisle Castle in 1596 by the Bold Buccleuch, as immortalised in the ballad. He lived at Morton Tower (also called Sark Tower), west of Canonbie, and was the Armstrong chief in that area. According to a letter from Lord Scope, there were 500 (although this is clearly an exaggeration) horsemen, supporters of Buccleuch and Kinmont involved in the assault on Carlisle Castle, ‘appointed with gavlocks and crowes of iron, hand peckes, axes and skailinge lathers’, getting in at a corner of the outer court, undermining the postern door and carrying away Willie. English reports say that 2 watchmen were killed and a guard of the prisoner injured, the action being easy because the night watch were sheltering from the weather. It is also claimed that Johnstones and Ivings were lying in wait near the Border, in case the band of rescuers were pursued and needed help. Further details are available in (probably biased) English accounts of the subsequent investigation. It is said that there were meetings a few days before with certain Englishmen to plan the raid, and that some of the watchmen at the castle had been paid off. An exact roster of the rescuers is not known, but Scott of Satchells gives a list of 33 Scotts who rode with their chief, and we can assume that many Armstrongs also took part. An English informer claimed that the party included: the Laird of Buccleuch (Sir Walter Scott, later 1st Lord of Buccleuch); Walter Scott of Goldielands (probably son of the Laird); Walter Scott of Branxholme (probably an error for Buccleuch); Walter Scott of Harden (either ‘Auld Wat’ or a son of his); (Walter) Scott of Todrig; William Elliot of Gorrenberry (or perhaps a son); John Elliot, called of Copshaw (also perhaps a son); the Laird of Mangerton (Archibald Armstrong); the young Laird of Whithaugh (probably Simon) and his son (perhaps Lancelot); 3 men of ‘Calfhills’ (probably Armstrongs of Calfield); Sandy Armstrong, son to ‘Hebby’ (son of Abraham of Woodehouselee); 4 sons of Kinmont Willie, Jock, Francie, Geordie and Sandy; Willie Bell ‘Red Cloak’ (Laird of Blackethouse) and 2 of his brothers; Walter Bell of ‘Godesby’; 3 Armstrongs from Tweeden (perhaps Hector, Jock and Ringan); John Armstrong of Hollows and his brother; Christie Armstrong of Barnlies and Robbie of Langholm (probably his brother); the Armstrongs of Chingills; and ‘Willie Kange and his brethren’ (the Ivings) – ‘And when we cam to the lower prison, Where Willie o Kinmont he did lie, ’O sleep ye, wake ye, Kinmont Willie, Upon the morn that thou’s to die?’ [T] (also ‘Kynmont’, ‘Kynmouth’ and variants; ‘kinnonts tower’ is marked on Sandison’s c.1590 map).

Kinnaird (ki-núrd) n. James (17th C.) mentioned as a Burgh Officer (along with Walter Stewart) in 1638, this being one of the first records in the earliest existing Town Book. They were presumably the 2 Burgh Officers of the time, corresponding to the Halberdiers of today. He is also mentioned swearing on oath that Thomas Oliver drew his sword at one of the Bailies in a 1642 case. William (16th C.) listed as ‘Kynhard’ in 1534 as a witness at Hassendean Kirk for the sealing of a letter of reversion when Gavin Elliot sold the lands of Nether Galalaw to William Scott. It is unclear if he was from Hawick, Hassendean or Selkirk (in whose Protocol Books the record appeared). William (18th C.) resident of Crook in 1730 when he married Margaret Miller in Cavers Parish. He was at Orchard in 1737. His children included Janet (b.1732) and Hugh (b.1737).

Kinnie (ki-neer) n. Rev. Alexander (c.1627–67) Hawick minister. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1647, became Schoolmaster at Lesmahagow in 1653, and was then assistant at Roberton (in Lanarkshire), before being translated to Bathgate in 1656 and then to Hawick in 1663. This was to replace John Scott, who had refused to accept Episcopacy. His ‘friend’ (presumably a relative) James Kinnie was entered as a tailor’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1659. It is unclear whether he was locally popular, after replacing the ousted John Scott. He was a member of the Presbytery of Jedburgh in 1666 and was still described as ‘minister at Hawick’ in an Edinburgh record of September 1666, when he married Margaret Cunningham. She survived him.
and later married Robert Richardson (W.S.) of Edinburgh. He died a few months before being replaced by John Langlands. A communion token from his time as minister has ‘H’ (for Hawick Kirk) on one side and ‘M — AK’ on the other. Note that another man of the same name was minister at Whitsome Parish from 1608–54 and may of course have been related (also spelled ‘Kinnamon’, ‘Kinney’ and ‘Kynเนة’).

kinneh (ki-nu, -ne) contr. kind of – ‘... might be proof, in some kinnae distant Border reiving incestuous brotherhood, o’ the likes o’ the Ettrick Shepherd or Sir Walter Scott, bit it’s yer ordinary Hawick man thit really makes ee stand an inch taller’ [IHS] (also kindeh).

Kinnecluttie (ki-nul-kü-ee) n. an area in the Borthwick at the top of the steep climb in the road out to Roberton. The cottages there are still called by this name. The stone drinking trough exists, although is no longer used by travellers (the origin is possibly from drovers stopping for a smoke there; also spelled ‘Kinnecluttie’ and ‘Kinnel Cutty’).

kinnelt (ki-nul’) pp. kindled – ‘...whan his wrath is kinlet onlie awec’ [HSR], ‘An’ ane fire was kinlet in their clan ...’ [HSR], ‘...led kinnelt a hunte an war thrang poatchin aboot an maskin tei’ [ECS], ‘...Scraped his buits aye at the door, Kinnelt the fire, an’ never swore’ [I] (also spelled ‘kinlet’ and variants).

kinnen (ki-nin) n., poet. a rabbit – ‘Make kinnen and capon ready then, And venison in great plenty; We’ll welcome hame our royal king, I hope he’ll dine at Gilnockie’ [CPM].

the Kinnin Braes (thu-ki-nin-bráz) n. area in the Ale valley near Ancrum – ‘Before my tottering feet should fail In life’s late wintry days, Oh, let me hear the voice of Aill Amang the Kinnin Braes’ [WP].

Kinninghaa (ki-ning-haw) n. Kinninghall, farm between Cauldsmill and Cavers. It is near the former farm of West Mains. Robert Scott was farming there and at Little Cote in the 1860s (also written ‘Kinning Hall’ and sometimes ‘Kinneyhall’; the name was introduced by an owner after the town in Norfolk, Keninghall).

Kinninghaa Hill (ki-ning-haw-hil) n. Kinninghall Hill, hill in Cavers Parish, just to the east of Deanbrae, reaching a height of 217 m (718 ft). Its summit contains fragmentary remains of a hillfort, with 2 sets of ramparts and possible hut circles inside. To the south-west are the remains of a possible enclosure.

kinness (ki-nish) n., arch. a lever used in quarrying, v., arch. to twist, tighten by twisting, to steal, pilfer, filch – ‘Ee’d better heide thae rock-bools, or the bairns ‘ll kinsh thum’ [ECS], ‘That greedy gullnaw ov a callant heid kinshed the haaf o the fookie-meat A brocht hyimm’ [ECS], ‘Thae ill-deedie callants kinshi’a hash o’ aipples’ [GW] (this is ‘kinch’ elsewhere in Scotland).

Kinsel Haugh (kin-shul-hawch) n. area on the east side of the Wauchope Burn, between Wauchope Common and Hemlaw Knowes, in Hob Kirk Parish.

kinsh-pin (ki-nesh-pin) n., arch. a rod used for twisting ropes in order to tighten them.

kip (kip) n., arch. rush, hurry, haste – ‘Hei was in a teerin kip an wadna stoap a meenint’ [ECS], a fit of anger, outburst – ‘Wheiles she’s aa richt, bit she’s awfih kippy tempert, an oo’ve fund ir in yin o ir kips the nicht’ [ECS].

kip (kip) n., arch. a turned-up tip, especially of a nose (noted by E.C. Smith), the peak of a sharp-pointed hill – ‘Brave Bruce clomb, unskathed, Abyssinia’s dread kipps’ [HSR] (also written ‘kip’; the word is used in several local hill names, e.g. Coldhouse Kipp, the Kipp and Newhouse Kip).

the Kipp (thu-kip) n. small hill to the south-east of Heip Hill, also known as Kippielaw, reaching a height of 218 m. The name may also have been formerly synonymous with Heip (or Heap) Hill itself (marked ‘The Kipp’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

the Kipp (thu-kip) n. eastern spur of Toshawaugh Hill, lying just to the south of Toshawaugh farm.

Kippielaw (ki-pee-law) n. former house to the west of Stirches Road, which disappeared in the late 19th century. John Ferguson was there in 1790. The nearby hill, above Greensidehall, reaches a height of 218 m, and is also known as ‘the Kipp’. There are several other places with the same (or similar) name around Scotland – ‘The tiny yellow tormentils Is peeping here and there. The hollows of the Kippilaw Are never dry or bare’ [WFC] (also spelled ‘Kipielaw’ and ‘Kippilaw’, it is marked ‘Kiplaw’ on Stobie’s 1770 map; the origin is presumably the same as that of the place of the same name 10 miles to the north-east in Bowden Parish).
Kippielaw Moss

Kippielaw Moss (ki-pee-law-mos) n. boggy area with a small pond between Greensidehall and Heip Hill.

Kipplelaw (ki-pee-law) n. farm in Bowden Parish, off the B6359 between Lilliesleaf and Bowden village. There were once Kers there (the origin is probably the Old English 'coppede hillaw', meaning 'hill with the summit cut off'; it first occurs as ‘Kyppelaw’ in 1552, then ‘Cyppelew’ in 1567 and ‘Kyppllaw’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Kippet (ki-pee', -pi') adj., arch. turned up (of the nose) – ‘She hes a kipeet nose, an A’ve harrd eet said that’s a sein (sign) o a short temper’ [ECS] (also written ‘kipeet’).

Kipple (ki-pul) n., arch. a couple – ‘But some said she had in her han’ a kipple o’ bottles o’ branny’ [ES], the inclined rafter or beam of a roof – ‘My auld wife here And me, just quietly on steer Aneath the auld black kipple’ [HSR], ‘Wha lays the kipples o’ his chammers in the waters … ’ [HSR].

Kipple-yill (ki-pul-till) n., arch. the drink given to workmen after erecting the rafters of a house.

Kipps Plantin (kips-plawn’-in) n. plantation to the north-east of the Minto Hills, adjacent to Lambsair Plantation and south of Standhill farm. It is probably associated with Kip’s Park.

Kippy (ki-pee) adj., arch. quick-tempered, hasty – ‘Whieles she’s a a richt, but she’s awfih kippy tempert, an oo’ve fund ir in yin o ir kips the nicht’ [ECS], having an upturned nose.

Kip’s Park (kips-pawrk) n. former name for lands in Minto Parish. It was listed as part of the Minto estate in 1779 (and 1811), when valued at £102 7d. The rental for ‘Kipp’s park and inclosure’ was £28 in 1780. It was probably associated with the modern Kipps Plantin, but it is unclear who ‘Kip’ was.

Kirk (kirk) n. a church – ‘the whole family we’er ti kirk on Sundis’, ‘… But he must pass the lone kirk stile, Before he reach’d her dwelling’ [JR], ‘Though time has wrocht a change or twae On kirk and shop and mill’ [WL], ‘Where Teviot rins by kirk and tower … ’ [IWS], ‘And A pick oot fer ablow iz Every weel kent kirk and mill’ [IWL], ‘ti make a kirk or a mill o’d’ means to do what you like with it, v. to pass through a formal church attendance, particularly applied to the Cornet during Kirking Sunday, often capitalised – ‘It is the day the Cornet is Kirked’ [BEL] (the origin of the word is the Old Norse ‘Kirkja’).

Kirk (kirk) n. Charles (b.1808/9) born in Dunfermline, he was a lawyer in Hawick. He was for a while in partnership with Walter Haddon. He had offices at the corner of the Sandbed and Buccleuch Street and was agent for Western Bank, which failed in 1857. He was an early Trustee for St. George’s Kirk. In 1852 he was listed in Slater’s directory as a ‘writer’ on Buccleuch Street, as well as agent for the Edinburgh insurance company and for the West of England company. In 1851 he was living at about 20 Buccleuch Street, and was ‘Procurator in Sheriff Court of Roxburgh Shire & in practice’. In 1861 he was listed as a Solicitor, living at 3 Buccleuch Street. In the 1860s he is recorded as the Depute-Clerk for the court, which met every other month in Hawick. He was also the local collector for the Inland Revenue. His wife was Margaret B., and their children included Charles M., Mary, James H. and Margaret H. James (d.c.1820) Rector of Hawick Grammar School 1798–1818. He was previously schoolmaster at Haddington, and came to Hawick to replace Thomas Barrie. He also applied for the position of Hawick postmaster in 1802, but appears not to have been successful. He married Eleanora Whitehead in Haddington in 1794, and their children included John, Edmond, Marion, Maria, James and Isabella; all but the first were born in Hawick. He resigned in 1818 and was then teacher in Leith. In 1821 his daughter Elizabeth married Nicholas Whitehead in Leith, but which time he was deceased. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Liverpool who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’. He probably had a local connection. Rev. John (19th C.) minister of the Brighton Street Evangelical Union Church in Edinburgh. In the Spring of 1848 he came to Hawick to assist John Rutherford in leading a special ‘mission’ of prayer meetings and sermons. He joined at the end of the first week and stayed for the following 6. This led directly to the founding of the Evangelical Union (later Congregational) Kirk in Hawick. He returned to Hawick about 1858 to conduct some revival meetings and again returned in 1864 as the Rev. Prof. Kirk to induct the new E.U. minister David Hislop. 3 of his sons became ministers, including Rev. Edward Bruce, who was also a noted amateur astronomer. William (18th C.) collier of Musselburgh who was made an Honorary Burgess in 1753. James Wilson suggests that he was probably a ‘coal viewer’ (but it is unclear what that means).

the Kirk (thu-kirk) n. the Church of Scotland, which seceded from Rome in 1560, led by John Knox, and now has the largest membership of any church in Scotland. It has a Calvinist doctrine and a Presbyterian structure, where each congregation elects its own governing elders.

Kirkandrews (kirk-awn-drooz) n. area in the north of Cumbria, just over the Border off the A7, with an 18th century church and a 16th century occupied peel tower nearby. This was an important part of the English West March, owned by the de Soulis family, then passing to the Douglases and Grahams. The associated parish was part of the Debateable Land (also written ‘Kirk Andrews’).

Kirkbank (kirk-bawngk) n. former station on the Jedburgh Railway, off the Kelso Branch of the North British Railway.

Kirk Borthwick (kirk-bor-theek) n. former site of the chapel that served parishioners in the western part of Wilton Parish (which may even have been a separate Parish of Borthwick in early times) and the name used for the surrounding area. It lay near Borthwickbrae and close to Borthwick Waas cemetery. The precise location is uncertain, but it was probably on the north side of the road on a level platform on the East bank of the Kirk Cleuch, which is a narrow ravine leading up through the lands of Borthwickbrae (however, some accounts place it on the south side of the road). It was probably founded in the late 1200s and was either originally part of the Diocese of Glasgow (like much of Teviotdale), or belonged to the monks of Melrose Abbey (who held lands and pasture rights in the area). It is said that it was dedicated to the Virgin Mary. It could be the church of Borthwick referred to in the charters of Glasgow in about 1150, consecrated by Robert, Bishop of St. Andrews. The land there was referred to as Kirk Borthwick by the time of Robert the Bruce, but only as Borthwick in the first half of the 13th century. A spring about 500 m to the north-west is known as ‘Lady’s Well’, and presumably connected with the church. If the chapel was once in a separate parish, it was certainly annexed to Wilton by the early 14th century. In 1612 it is recorded that half of the living was given to Francis McGill by the minister of Wilton, and as late as 1688 it was listed as part of the charge of the Wilton minister. It was used as the church of the new Borthwick Parish for a while, until Roberton Church was built in 1659, at the centre of the enlarged parish (which was suppressed soon afterwards before finally becoming Roberton in 1689). It was probably in use until the 1650s, but ruined soon afterwards. John Langlands of Wilton (and later Hawick) may have been the last minister to preach there. It is said that the foundations of the church could still be made out up until the mid-19th century (also known as ‘Borthwick Kirk’ and ‘Borthwick Waas Kirk’; the name occurs as ‘Kirkborthewyc’ in the early 14th century).

the Kirk Cleuch (thu-kirk-klooch) n. stream to the north of the road roughly opposite Borthwick Waas Cemetery, and believed to have been the approximate location for Kirk Borthwick.

kirker (kirk-ga’) n. a person who attends church, church-goer.

Kirkgate (kirk-ga’) n. name used between about 1837 and 1882 for the street formerly known as Old Churchyard and now called St. Mary’s Place. The house at 8 Kirkgate was run as a private school by William Murray, the forerunner of St. Mary’s and later Trinity schools.

kirk-gaun (kirk-gawn) adj., arch. church-going – ‘Wullie being a ‘kirk-gaun’ man, and a hunter of new ministers, he had many a quaint remark to make about the various styles of preachers and preachings’ [RM], ‘Hech, sirs! The denty fowk! Primpin by, pair by pair, Kirkgaun . . . ’ [DH].

Kirkhaugh (kirk-hawch) n. former name for lands that were part of the Hawick Common. They were mentioned in 1725. However, it is unclear where these lands were.

the Kirkhaugh (thu-kirk-hawch) n. lands adjacent to the Kirk of Hobkirk. In 1618 there was a ‘wadset’ for ‘the former two acres of land with a day’s wark meadow adjacent thereto lying in the Kirkhauch beside the Kirk of Hopkirk’.

Kirk Hill (kirk-hil) n. hill to the east of the old Buccleuch Kirk on the Rankle Burn, reaching a height of 397 m. The name presumably comes from the former church.

Kirk Hill (kirk-hil) n. hill to the west of Ettleton churchyard in Liddesdale. It reaches a height of 282 m and is topped by a triangulation pillar. There is a hill-fort on the summit, and the extensive remains of a farmstead and field-system on the eastern slopes, possibly the lands of Side where ‘Jock o the Side’ lived. There are terraces, with rig lines and other signs of cultivation to the north-east. On the western side is an enclosure and associated building and ‘lazy-beds’. To the west is also the remains of an old farm at Greenburni on a spur of land called The Tongue.

Kirkhouse (kirk-hoos) n. Kirkhouse, former name for a freeholding near the boundaries of Wilton Glebe, Easter Howlands and the southern part of Roughheugh. Presumably named for its proximity to lands related to Wilton Church.
Kirkhooses

Kirkhooses (kirk-hoo-seez) n. Kirkhouses, former seat of a branch of the Scott family near Ashkirk. The land was presumably attached to the Kirk, either historically or geographically. The first Laird was James, who was a younger son of George of Synton. John, his son and heir had a confirming charter in 1609, when it is ‘Kirkhoussis’, and probably the same John was recorded there as early as 1579. In 1579/80 a document was witnessed there regarding the murder of David Dalgleish in Harehead, involving the Scotts. The lands were valued at £143 in 1643, when owned by Robert Scott of Whitslade. In the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls James Rutherford paid for 6 hearths and there were 6 others listed there, including a blacksmith, Thomas Brown. In 1698 James Matheson was smith there and Francis Elliot was also there. Thomas Scott was there in 1724 when he was given money by the Parish. The ‘five-merk land of Kirkhouse’ was recorded in 1753. By 1788 (and also according to the Land Tax Rolls of about 1811) it was owned by Thomas Wilkinson and with the same value as earlier – ‘…Andrew of Sallinside he was one, With James of Kirkhouse, and Ashkirk’s John’ [CWS], ‘Tell Ashkirk, and Satchels, Burnfoot, and the Kirkhouse, Howpasley, and Roberton, with Harden bold and crouse’ [WSB] (also called ‘Kirkhouse’; it is ‘Kirkhouss’ in 1579 and ‘Kirkhouses’ in 1627).

Kirkhope (kir-kup) n. settlement in the Ettrick valley just west of Ettrickbridge. ‘Old Kirkhope’ lie in the hills above and has a ruined tower. The farm was owned by the Crown from about 1456. It was leased by Sir Thomas Cranston from at least 1471, for his fee as Bailie of Ettrick Forest, passing to John Cranston until about 1490 and then to Alexander, Lord Home. In 1502 it is reported that John Scott in Walls had remission for stealing 3 of Lord Cranston’s horses from here. It remained Crown property until at least 1502 and was sold to Sir William Cranston in 1510. Alexander Scott was tenant in 1536. Lord Cranston still claimed the lands in 1541. There were Turnbull tenants there in the early 16th century. Thomas Johnstone paid rent to Melrose Abbey for the lands in 1557. The lands were owned by the Cranstons of that Ilk in the late 16th century, passing to the Scotts of Thirlestane in 1594. The lands remained part of the Lordship of Melrose until at least 1670. The Scotts of Harden sold them to the Scotts of Buccleuch in the early 18th century. James Matthewson was there in 1702 and Gideon Scott in 1785. It is also the name of an ancient parish of Selkirkshire, which was reconstituted in 1852 out of part of Yarrow Parish – ‘Ho! for the blades of Harden! Ho! for the ring of steel!’ The stolen steers of a hundred years Come home for a Kirkhope meall!’ [WHO], ‘The kye are weary o’ more and fern And ’tis many a mile to the Kirkhope Burn’ [WHO] (it is ‘Kirkhop’ in 1471, ‘Kirkhoup’ in 1557 and ‘Kirkhope’ in 1564; it is marked on Visscher’s 1689 map of Scotland as ‘Kirkkoo’; it is ‘Kirkhoop’ and ‘Kirkchoo wood’, but too far away on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Kirkhope Toor (kir-kup-toor) n. 17th century peel tower located about 7 miles west of Selkirk, near Kirkhope, built on the site of an earlier tower burned by the Armstrongs in 1543, and restored in the 1990s. It was a stronghold of the eldest sons of the Scotts of Harden. In his youth ‘Auld Wat’ brought Mary Scott of Dryhope ‘the Flower of Yarrow’ here and allegedly later ‘Young Wat’ brought ‘Muckle Mou’ed Meg’ – ‘In the mystic hush of the morning hour Came the clatter of hoofs from Kirkhope Tower …’ [WHO], ‘…To Yarrow where the Swire climbs Around grey Kirkhope Tower’ [WL].

kirk (kir-kin) n. a ceremonial attendance at church, especially by councillors after an election. The term was also used in the 19th century (and earlier) to refer to the attendance at church of the bride and groom, usually on the Sunday following their Friday marriage ceremony.

the Kirk (thu-kir-kin) n. ceremonial church service that takes place in the Cornet’s church on the Sunday morning beginning the week of the Common Riding. Traditionally lily of the valley is worn, and it is the first time for sporting the Cornet’s tie. The Principals, in formal dress (morning suits and tile hats), walking behind the Halberdiers, lead the ‘Cornet’s Kirk Parade’ from the Council Chambers to the church. Behind the Principals come the ex-Cornets in order of year, then the ex-Acting Fathers and finally the rest of the supporters, all walking in pairs. At the church the parade meets the Provost and Bailies and the service is also attended by the Lasses. There the Cornet and his Lass is presented with a bible, and afterwards the party goes for the Cornet’s Lass’s Lunch. The ceremony was initiated in 1887, when Rev. John Thomson (of St. John’s Kirk) invited the Common Riding supporters to his church on the following Sunday, after he had accepted an invitation to the Cornet’s breakfast. For many years it took place on the Sunday immediately after the Common Riding, rather than before. The officiating minister is sometimes referred to as the ‘Cornet’s Chaplain’. The 1914 ceremony was part of the Quater-centenary celebrations and also the 700th anniversary of the consecration of St. Mary’s, being attended by an estimated 4,000 people in the churchyard. In 1891 there were both Episcopalian and Evangelical services in a tent on the Haugh on the Sunday after the Common Riding.

Kirkin Sundi (kir-kin-sin-di) n. Sunday preceding the Common Riding weekend, when the Cornet is ‘Kirked’. After the Cornet’s Kirk Parade and church service, there is the Cornet’s Lass’s Lunch, and then the Principals are driven to Hornshole for the laying of the wreath at the 1514 Memorial. This ceremony is carried out by the Cornet’s Lass (and done by the 50-year Lass in 2001 and 2020). Then the Principals go to the Mair to inspect the course before the events of the following week. The day is also referred to as Exhibition Sundi. Note that before the Common Riding was revamped in the 1880s, there had been an ‘old custom of visiting the race course’ on the Sunday before, as a sort of practice for the racing that was to come.

Kirkland (kirk-lind) n. former name for lands in Lilliesleaf adjacent to Bewlie. This was ‘Kirklands of Bewlie’, which were part of the Earl of Roxburgh’s lands in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1643, valued at £90 and subsequently sold to Riddell of Camieston. In 1678 the Earl of Roxburgh paid land tax ‘for the kirklands of and teyndes of the paroch’. Walter Scott of Whitfield (later Harden) owned these lands in 1720 when they were leased to James Shiel and John Mathieson. ‘Kirklands of Bewlie’ were still valued at £90 in 1788 when owned by Duke of Roxburgh. In the mid-19th century the lands were purchased by Riddell of Muselee (also ‘Kirklands’; marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Kirkland (kirk-lind) n. name for lands in Liddesdale, recorded in 1541, and said to pertain to the Vicar. Presumably these lands were near the original site of Castleton Parish Kirk.

Kirkland (kirk-lind) n. Rev. Robert (1906/7–85) born in Glasgow, he became minister of Orrock Church in 1932 and moved to Edinburgh in 1939. During the War he served with the Royal Marines and was awarded the M.B.E.

the Kirkland (thu-kirk-lind) n. former name for farm lands owned by Scott of Buccleuch, and presumably once attached to the Kirk of Hawick. It is possible they were related to the ‘Kirkton’ and ‘Kirkton Tofts’ recorded in early documents. They are mentioned in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme, when the land produced ‘aittis’, ‘corne’ and ‘peis’, and ‘Willie of Allanehauch’ was given ‘the Kirkland, his awne rowme’. Probably the same land is described as ‘ye Kirkland’ in a 1627 valuation of the Parish of Hawick; it is listed among the lands closest to the Town, consisted of 32 acres, was owned by the Lord of Buccleuch and ‘payand presentlie 32 bolls in stock, estimat in stok to 12, and 3 bolls of teynd’ yearly. In 1692 the lands were described as consisting of 34 acres, and were leased by the Duchess of Buccleuch to John Scott, ‘Sodger’, Thomas Scott, ‘Laird’, Andrew Clerk, Robert Ruecastle and Walter Ruecastle (also written ‘the kirk land’, etc.).

Kirklands (kirk-lindz) n. alternative name for the lands of Wilton Glebe, originally belonging to Wilton Parish Church. This could be the ‘kirkland de Wiltoun’ where Thomas Williamson was farmer in 1493. The name survives in Kirklands Hotel on West Stewart Place. It is also the name of a house in Denholm, behind the Church.

Kirklands (kirk-lindz) n. name sometimes formerly used to describe the lands attached to Hobkirk Kirk, somehow more expensive than those later called the Glebe of Hobkirk, and originally being in the Barony of Abbotrule. Hector Turnbull of Hartshaugh possessed these lands in 1580 and had a charter in 1604 which described them as ‘the kirk lands called Vicar’s Lands of the kirk of Hobkirk’, with the Manse and Glebe being explicitly excluded. His grandson Adam inherited these lands of ‘Viccarislandis’ in 1622, along with ‘Viccarishall’.

Kirklands (kirk-lindz) n. former name for land attached to Bedrule Kirk. In 1557 a complaint was made by Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst that Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule and others had invaded his lands there, beating his servants; this may have been part of a dispute over ownership. In the 16th century (as confirmed in 1581) it was ruled that this ‘half merk land of Kirklandis of Bedrowil’ belonged to Sir John Stewart of Traquair rather than Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst.

Kirklands (kirk-lindz) n. house and small estate on the south of the Ale Water, to the west of Ancrum and adjacent to the graveyard. The house dates from about 1830, and there is an enclosed parkland with large lime trees. John Richardson (lawyer, occasional poet and friend of Sir Walter Scott) lived there in the 19th century, purchasing the estate in 1830, spending the autumn months in residence until his retirement, and dying there in 1864.

Kirklands Hotel  (kirk-lindz-ho-tel) n. long-time hotel in Hawick, situated in West Stewart Place. It was built as Viewforth for hatter George Porteous in 1878. It was designed with a mixture of Dutch, French Renaissance and Gothic elements, and had a later extension to the east corner. I. Washington Wallis lived in it for a while, and John Farrar Blenkhorn rented it for a few years. Prior to WWII it became a temperance hotel and after the War was run as a regular hotel. It ceased to be a hotel in 2007. It is a grade C listed building.

kirkless  (kirk-lis) adj. without a church – ‘Sae try to make yoursel’ content, Though kirkless aye, ye’se never want’ [RDW].

kirk-mense  (kirk-mens) n., arch. a first appearance at church – ‘Gaein (an article of dress) kirk-mense or Sunday-mense, respectively, is to let the first occasion on which it is worn be a church service, or fall on a Sunday. According to an auld frait this must invoke some kind of blessing on the article and on its wearer’ [ECS] (also Sundi-mense).

Kirknowe  (kirk-now) n. former farm near Hobkirk Church, once owned by the monks of Jedburgh Abbey. It was described as lying between Langraw and the Church, and is described in older deeds as being in the territory of Langraw in the Parish of Abbotrule. The farmhouse stood on a high bank above Kirkstile. The farm lies to the west of the Parish Kirk and the place is still shown on the modern Ordnance Survey map. It was owned (or perhaps tenanted hereditarily) by the Shiel family from before the Reformation, with half being sold in 1666. It was valued at £78 in 1643 when owned by Walter Shiel and also in about 1663 when Walter Scott was tenant. Thomas Boston paid tax on £78 there in 1678. James Turnbull was tenant there in 1694, with Jean Bennet and Isobel Turnbull also residents. John Mair purchased the farm in 1704 and his son Richard sold it to William Elliot of Wolfelee in 1751. Peter Smith was tenant in the late 18th and early 19th centuries. Half of the land was owned by James Riddell in 1788, with the other half being owned by William Turnbull of Langraw and built in perhaps the 12th century. It was formerly the location for meetings and the signing of documents, e.g. one for Sir Thomas Turnbull of Greenwood in 1488. It was abandoned around 1640 in favour of Yarrow Kirk, nearer the centre of the Parish. In 1557 a band of about 200 Scotts and others broke open the doors of the church looking to murder Sir Peter Cranston; they were unsuccessful and were later bound over not to harm him or his servants in the future. In 1575 ‘Maister John Scott’ was minister there, with responsibility over Ashkirk, Ettrick New Kirk and Rankleburn.

Kirkpatrick  (kirk-pawt-reek) n. Roger (16th C.) recorded as Rector of the Nether Kirk of Ewes in 1556. The Parish was stated to be vacant in 1567 and 1574, and so he presumably did not survive as minister after the Reformation.

Kirk Pool  (kirk-pool) n. former name for a pool in a bend in the Teviot near the site of Hassendean Kirk, opposite Hassendenbarn and Knowetownhead.

Kirk Raw  (kirk-raw) n. Church Row, name used as an address in the mid-19th century. It probably refers to houses in the Kirkstyle or St. Mary’s Place.

Kirkrieg  (kirk-rig) n. former name for lands in Ashkirk Parish. In 1780 ‘half of the Kirkrieg’ was included in lands in Dryden and Clews whose different had been given to Dr. William Elliot.

kirk-riggin  (kirk-ri-gin) n., arch. church roof timbers, ‘a kae in the kirk-riggin’ means a noisy misbehaving child.
the Kirk Road

The Kirk Road (thu-kirk-rød) n. former name for what is now Princes Street and Langlands Road, often referred to in old documents as ‘the Kirk road from Langlands to Wilton’.

Kirk(s) (kirk(s)) n., pl. Churches. There were once many more of these in Hawick than at the present day, the proliferation of Church of Scotland churches being a result of the factions that developed within Presbyterianism in the 18th and 19th centuries. Many of the churches have gone by several different names at different times. A list of the various names that have been used for different church buildings in Hawick (ignoring smaller organisations that may not have had a permanent meeting place) includes: Allars Kirk/the Relief Chaipel/the Relief Kirk/the Cross Wynd Kirk/the Cross Wynd United Presbyterian Kirk; the Anti-Burgher Kirk/the First Seccession Kirk/the Green Kirk/the West End Kirk/the West End Meetin Hoose/the West End United Presbyterian Kirk; the Baptist Kirk; the Burgher Kirk/the Second Seccession Kirk/the Associate Kirk/ the East End Meetin Hoose/the East Bank Kirk/the East End Kirk/East Bank United Free Kirk/East Bank United Presbyterian Kirk; Burnfit Kirk; the Congregational Kirk/the Evangelical Union Kirk/the E.U. Kirk session (kirk-se-shin) n. a body consisting of minister and elected elders in the Presbyterian church, dealing with matters of religion, membership, discipline etc. in a particular parish, being the lowest court of that church – ‘The kirk-session, in compliance with recommendations from the superior courts, were in the frequent practice of setting apart days for public fasting and thanksgiving’ [RJAW].

The Kirk Session (thu-kirk-se-shin) n. body of elders and the Minister of Hawick Parish Kirk, also referred to as simply ‘the Session’. They were appointed to oversee the good conduct of the congregation, and formerly would meet each week, directly after the church service. Two elders were appointed to supervise each of the districts of the Parish, 4 in the Burgh itself and 3 in the country part. The duties they carried out in the 17th and 18th centuries were later mainly taken over by the School board, police and Parish Council. It appears that the main heritors of the Parish also served as part of the Kirk Session, at least for the enactment of some of the business. The minute books of the Session meetings are an invaluable record of civil as well as ecclesiastical matters in the 18th and 19th centuries. The first existing Session Book covers 1711–25 (and is quite comprehensive), the second 1751–68 and the third 1785–1826 (these 2 recording only minutes of the more important meetings). There are also Kirk Treasurer’s books from 1723. A Session Book covering 1700–04 still existed in 1857 (and some extracts are given in James Wilson’s ‘Memories . . . ’ book), but disappeared before the end of the 19th century. All previous books, like earlier communion plate etc., probably went with the former ministers, like they did elsewhere in Scotland around the time of the Revolution.

Kirkside (kirk-sid) n. street in Denholm, running along the north-east side of the Green and running past the church.
Kirksteed (kirk-steed) n. recorded in 1541 as ‘Kirkstead’ on the rental roll of Liddesdale, when it was listed as having no tenant. It is uncertain where exactly these lands were.

Kirk Steps (kirk-steps) n. another name for the Kirkstile, in use in the mid-19th century.

the Kirkstile (tha-kirk-stil) n. short street leading to St. Mary’s Church, formerly known as Easter Kirkstile, and also formally the address of the Church. This is where the Snuffing takes place on the Friday morning of the Common Riding. The street consists partly of a bridge over the Slitrig, which was built to replace the ‘Auld Brig’ in 1852, paid for by William Elliot (who had Tower Mill built). This bridge is about 13½ feet wide and about 5½ feet lower than the Auld Brig, and with no central pier (i.e. less obstructive during floods). There was once a building of some sort here (perhaps a storage building for the church), referred to in 1686 as ‘the church stile building’ when someone was fined for stealing lime from it. When the old church was demolished in 1763, a large part of the steeple fell here, and the material had to be carried back up for making the new building – ‘...There’s peace owre the Kirkstile wa’’ [JEDM] (also written ‘Kirkstyle’, ‘Kirk Stile’ etc.; the word originally meant the opening in the wall around a church, or the steps in the wall of a churchyard).

Kirkstile (kirk-stil) n. former farm in Hobkirk Parish, adjacent to the parish kirk, and once forming half of the lands of Kirknowe. It was held by the Shiels since before the Reformation. It passed from John Shiel to his grandson John Stevenson in an agreement ratified in 1759. In 1779 it was sold to a Riddell, then passed to Alexander Anderson and then Peter Smith. A part of the lands held a cottage and blacksmith’s shop (also called ‘Hobkirkstile’ or ‘Hobkirkstyle’; sometimes spelled ‘Kirkstyle’).

Kirkstyle (kirk-stil) n. former cottage near the church in Ewesdale. It was occupied by 5 separate households in 1841.

Kirkstyle Place (kirk-stil-plis) n. name occasionally used for the Kirkstile.

Kirkton (kirk-tin) n. hamlet on the A6088, about half-way to Bonchester, roughly 4 miles from Hawick. This has been the main route from Hawick to Newcastle since about the 1830s (when it replaced the Wellogate Birneyknowe and Forkins road). It has a church, the present one dating from 1841, and once contained a school. It is also the name of the surrounding small parish, which is probably the same as ‘Cavers Parva’ recorded in Medieval times. Kirkton farm was formerly part of the Cavers estate. Arthur and William Douglas in Kirkton are recorded in 1569. In 1574 it was among the lands that William Douglas of Cavers served as surety for, the inhabitants being guilty ‘for the cryme of thift in tyme bigane’; this included ‘Barty Crosar’. The ‘4 and 2 merk lands’ of Kirkton were sold by Sir Gilbert Elliott to his uncle Sir Archibald Douglas of Cavers in 1655. There was a blacksmith’s there, according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. James Douglas was at the farm there in 1718. The lands were part of the estate of Douglas of Cavers in 1788. A small ball of gneiss with projecting knobs was found there and is now in the Hunterian Museum, Glasgow. A stone axe was also found there. Note that there are many other Kirtkons throughout Scotland, and also an old name of lands near Branxholme (also spelled ‘Kirkton’, ‘Kirktoone’, ‘Kirktown’, ‘Kirkton’, etc.; the name is first recorded in 1458 as ‘Kirketoune’; it is ‘Kirkctoun’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; the origin is simply ‘the farm by the church’, combining the Old Norse ‘kirkja’ with the Old English ‘tun’).

Kirkton (kirk-tin) n. former lands somewhere near Branxholme, referred to also separately as Kirkton Mains and Kirkton Tofts in the 15th and 16th centuries and still recorded in the 17th century. It could be the same lands referred to as ‘terra ecclesiastica’ in the 1420 charter, when half of the lands of Branxholme were granted to Robert Scott of Rankilburn. In 1446, when the other half of Branxholme and neighbouring lands were granted to Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme by Thomas Inglis of Manor, the deal included superiority over ‘certain lands of Kirktown’, lying in the Barony of Hawick. In 1484 these were lands (along with East Mains) which James Douglas of Drumlanrig and his wife already held when James inherited the Barony of Hawick. Later the lands passed to the Douglases of Cavers, with ‘Kirkton and Kirktoon Mains’ still being mentioned in Douglas deed of 1662. It seems reasonable to suppose that these lands were connected with the former chapel near Chapel Hill. However, it is also possible that these were in fact the same lands as those in Kirkton Parish, if they were a detached part of the Barony of Hawick (it is ‘terraram de Kirktoone’ and ‘Kyrktoun’ in 1446).
Burn meets the river. This was ‘Kirkton’, confirmed to Simon Little in 1426. Hector Armstrong of Hillhouse was ‘in the Kirkton of Ewiscale’ in 1590/1. It was surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718, when it consisted of 583 acres of pasture and 83 acres of corn land, both shared with Brierlyshaw farm, which was owned by the Laird of Byreleeuc. It was bounded by Glendivian, Bush, Sorbie, the lands of Sir William Johnstone and Burngrains. The Byers family were there in 1841 and William Armstrong was shepherd there in 1861 (it is ‘Kirkton of Sorbi’ in 1426, ‘Kirkton’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Kirktoone’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Kirkton (kirk-tin) n. Adam (15th C.) tenant in Crailing Mill in 1493, when he had remission for several crimes. He was specifically said to have been involved with theft, reset and inter-communing with the English, as well as for being with the Duke of Albany during the rebellion and for kidnapping off a shoemaker from Jedburgh for ransom. Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst served as surety for him. Probably the same Adam ‘in Oxnam Mains’ was recorded in the Justice-aire in 1494/5 when he ‘came in the King’s will’ for unspecified crimes, with Andrew Kerr again the surety. Probably the same Adam in Crailing had remission in 1502 for bringing in Englishmen to serve as surety. Probably the same Adam ‘in Crailing Mill in 1493, when he had remission for kidnapping off a shoemaker from Jedburgh for ransom. Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst served as surety for him. Probably the same Adam ‘in Oxnam Mains’ was recorded in the Justice-aire in 1494/5 when he ‘came in the King’s will’ for unspecified crimes, with Andrew Kerr again the surety. Probably the same Adam in Crailing had remission in 1502 for bringing in Englishmen to steal livestock from Mellerstain. Adam of Stewartfield (d.bef. 1571) perhaps son of William. He was Steward of Jedburgh Abbey in 1543. He was among Borderers who swore allegiance to the English in 1544. He is listed in 1549 among the associates of Walter Ker of Cessford who were accused of helping the English in raids upon the farms of Sir Walter Scott of Branhholme at Goldielands and elsewhere. In 1551 he signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’. Adam (16th C.) recorded in 1557 as tenant of the farm of Swinny under Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst. Kerr complained to the Queen that a group of men ‘boddin in feir of weir’ came to his farm and dug up peats and terrorised him. He may be the same ‘Adam Kyrkton’ who witnessed a bond of 1557 in which Turnbulls, Elliot and others promised to bring in William Nixon. Possibly the same Adam is listed in 1561 among men charged to appear before Queen Mary regarding the state of the Borders. The line ‘Wi Kirkton, Newton, noblemen’ in the ballad ‘The Battle of Red-Swire’ may refer to him. He may be the same man as Adam of Stewartfield. Adam of Stewartfield (16th/17th C.) succeeded his grandfather William of Stewartfield in 1606 and inherited lands in Bonjedward from his father in 1611. He married Grizel, eldest daughter of Thomas Rutherford of Huntbhill. The marriage contract was witnessed at Woollee (i.e. Wolfelee) House in 1612, with Cranston of that Ilk and 2 other Cranstons (who owned the estate at the time) on the record. His son William was served as his heir in 1642. Alexander (17th C.) Provost of Jedburgh, elected in 1620. He represented Jedburgh in Parliament in 1617 and 1630. Along with John Moscrop, younger (Burgess of Jedburgh) he was joint owner of Nether Byrechester until selling it to Walter Scott in 1653. Andrew (16th/17th C.) graduated from Edinburgh University in 1617 and became minister of Oxnam Parish. Probably the same Andrew, ‘M.A.’ was recorded as schoolmaster in Jedburgh in 1619 and 1623. He married Elizabeth Knox and had sons John and Thomas. George (16th C.) one of the men indicted in 1552 for involvement in the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Branhholme and Buccleuch. He may have been related to Robert, who was also involved, and was listed along with other men from the Jedburgh area and Berwickshire. John (d.1538) associated with the Kirk of Bedrule. After he died, in 1539, Bernard Baillie was presented, but refused by the Archbishop. John (16th C.) officer of the Warden of the Middle March, William Ker of Cessford. In 1583 he appeared at a day of truce with the English Warden, in place of 2 sons of Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule. Robert (16th C.) one of the men indicted in 1552 for the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. He was said to have been on Edinburgh High Street with John Peacock, servant of the Laird of Cowdenknowes, and Lance Ainslie, when they stabbed the wounded Scott several times and took his cloak and bonnets. Perhaps the same Robert was listed in an actin against a Frenchman in Edinburgh in 1550. Robert (17th C.) resident of Jedburgh Parish. His son William was baptised in 1666, with witnesses Andrew and William. Thomas (17th C.) servant of Andrew Kerr, Lord Jedburgh. He was a witness to a document relating to Harwood and Hawthornside in 1631. William (15th C.) listed as ‘Wyll of Kyrkton’ in 1454 when he was witness to a document for Andrew Ker of Altonburn. He is also recorded as ‘William of Kirkton’ when he was witness to a ‘tack’ of David Scott, younger of Branhholme in 1478. Since several of the other witnesses were connected with Jedburgh Abbey, this seems likely to be the local Kirkton. He may be the same William ‘Kirktone’ listed among Border lairds in an action registered with Parliament.
in 1476. He could be the William who had a sasine for Bonjedward in 1483. Perhaps the same William ‘kirkton in kirkton’ was recorded in the Justice-aire held in 1494/5 when he ‘came in the King’s will’ for crimes against Ingram Oliver in Jedburgh. Either the same William, or a later one, was fined in 1502 for failing to ‘give suit’ at the Justice-aire for his lands of Bonjedward; in 1503 he presented John Smith as suitor at the Justice-aire for these same lands, with Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst as his procurator. A probably related ‘William Kirtone’ was one of the men who signed the pledge to help the new Warden (the Earl of Angus) keep the peace in Edinburgh in 1524/5. William of Fairnington (16th C.) recorded in 1581, along with his sons Mungo and John. In a transaction involving Haliburtons, there was mention of a 1580 decree from the Lords of Council in which Walter Haliburton in Ancrum evicting them from his lands in Ancrum Spittal. William of Stewartfield (16th C.) son of Adam, who he succeeded as Steward of Jedburgh Abbey. He is listed along with Oliver of Southdean in 1572/3, when Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule and Richard Rutherford of Edgerston were their cautioners. His surety was for £1000, twice that of the other men; this appears to have been in relation to Kerr of Ferniehirst being declared a fugitive and all his former supporters swearing allegiance to the Crown. He was separately listed in 1572/3, with George Douglas of Bonjedward as surety. He could be the ‘William Kirkton, officer of the Middle March’ recorded in 1586 when William Ker was his surety to appear before the Privy Council; he was denounced as a rebel in 1592 for not appearing (and was then described a a Bailie of Jedburgh). He is listed on the list of ‘Landit Men’ of Scotland in about 1590 and is probably the Kirkton of Stewartfield listed in Monipennie’s c.1594 compilation of Border lairds. There may be 2 generations of Williams here. William (17th C.) son of Adam of Stewartfield. In 1642 he was served heir to his father’s 3 husbandlands in Bonjedburgh, as well as the lands of Stewartfield. Probably the same William is recorded as owner of lands in Ulston in 1643 (spelled ‘Kirkton’, ‘Kirtoune’, ‘Kyrktoun’ and variants).

the Kirkton Burn

stream that rises near Earlside, runs through Kirkton and alongside the A6088 till past Cauldmill, joining the Teviot near Hornshole. Alongside the stream to the south of Birneyknowe is the start of a linear earthwork, which runs about 800 m to end near the road connecting Stobs with Bonchester. There are some signs of enclosures at both ends, suggesting that this was a boundary related to grazing rights. On the upper section, an exposed part of the basaltic dyke which runs across Roxburghshire was used by geologist David Milne-Home in 1842 to illustrate his theory of a crack being filled by lava.

halls in 1933. A new Manse was built near the church in 1866. A Liszt organ was installed in 1893, presented by R. Ballantyne in memory of his parents. Due to falling rolls, the church was linked with Cavers (being served by a single minister) in 1955 and united with it in 1976. Cavers and Kirkton were linked with St. Mary’s 1976–88, with Hobkirk and Southdean 1988–96 and with St. Mary’s and ‘Auld Pairish’ in 1996. Since 1995 the church has only been used for occasional special services. Two pewter cups are still held by the Kirk, but other communion plate appears to have disappeared. The oldest surviving communion token is from 1734, is made of lead, heart-shaped and bears the initials ‘K.K.’; another similar token is from 1761. A roll of the ministry is: Maurice Lovel in 1296; Patrick ‘of Albania’ in 1453; William ‘Amuligane’ (probably Milligan) in 1545; Archibald Heriot, until 1550; William Cranston (Vicar and Parson), 1550–67/8; George Douglas (Vicar and Parson), 1567/8–c.97; William Auchmowtie (Minister, along with several neighbouring parishes), from 1574; John Watson in 1588; John Douglas (Parson and Vicar), from 1597; Walter McGill (Parson and Vicar, along with Cavers), from 1606; James Scott 1616–c.19; Robert Brownlie 1620–c.45; Andrew Pringle 1646–50; Gavin Elliot 1652–62; Alexander Forrest 1664–83; Alexander Burnet 1684–85; Patrick Cunningham 1687–c.1706; John Douglas 1707–50; Alexander Glen 1751–57; Thomas Elliot 1758–63; James Erskine 1764–74; Alexander Gordon 1775–85; James Hay 1785–86; Benjamin Dickson 1787–1800; John Elliot 1801–17; Adam Laidlaw 1818–34; William Stewart Martin 1834–57; George Hunter 1857–81; David Cathels 1882–92; John Stuart 1892–1930; William Robertson 1931–40; George E. Cowe 1940–51; James B. Primrose 1951–55; William Welsh 1955–75; Duncan Clark 1976–84; Alexander C. MacCartney 1985–87; Adam McC. Bowie 1988–96; David W.G. Burt 1996–98; William P. Taylor 1998–

Kirkton Mains (kirk-tin-mäinz) n. lands near Hawick, probably adjacent (or perhaps identical to) ‘Kirkton Tofts’ near Branholme. They are mentioned in 1464/5 along with the Flex in a dispute between William Douglas of Drumlanrig (Baron of Hawick) and Alexander Gledstains. Douglas had a sacine for these lands and the Flex, along with the associated mill, the sacine being delivered at the ‘capitale messuagium’, i.e. principal dwelling house. There was also a mill there. The lands of ‘Est Manis of the Kirktoun, with their pertinentis, lyand in the barony of Hawic’ were among those to be infefted to James, heir to Drumlanrig, as part of his marriage contract in 1470; this is probably the same as (or part of) Kirkton Mains. The lands are mentioned alongside Crumhaugh in Hawick’s 1511 Charter, as part of the Barony of Hawick held ‘in property’ by the Baron. This suggests a location perhaps near Martin’s House or Branholme Bridge; however, there is still a possibility that these lands were in the Parish of Kirkton, but somehow associated with lands nearer to Hawick. In 1545 these lands were specifically mentioned in the inheritance of James Douglas of Cavers, as lands he possessed in the Barony of Hawick, and again when infefted to his son William in 1558. In that year the ‘liferent’ was granted to the mother of the new Laird, Christian Kerr, the value being 40 shillings and held ‘in blench ferm for one penny of asked’ from the Baron of Hawick. The lands are mentioned (again coupled with those of Crumhaugh) in the retour of James Douglas for the Barony of Hawick in 1572. In 1594 the lands of ‘Cruhauch and Kirktoun of Manys’ are ratiﬁed to the Baron Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig, along with many others in the Barony and it is still listed among the Baron’s lands in 1615 (it is ‘Kyrktoune Maynis’ and ‘Kyrktoone Maynis’ in 1464/5, ‘Kirkton Monis’ in 1511, ‘Kyrkton Manys’ in 1511/2, ‘Kirkton Manys’ and ‘Kyrktone Manys’ in 1514, ‘Kyrkton Manys’ in 1545, ‘Kirktoun Mannis’ in 1559, Kirkton Manis’ in 1572, ‘Kirtoun of Manys’ in 1594, ‘Kirktonmanynis’ in 1615 and ‘Kirkton Maynes’ in 1686; see also Kirkton Tofts).

Kirkton Manse (kirk-tin-manus) n. former minister’s house in Kirkton Parish. It was taxed for having 2 hearths in 1694 and 12 windows in 1748. A new house was constructed in about 1760. Around 1840 this was converted into use as a barn and stables, before eventually becoming the church halls in 1933. A new Manse was built in 1866 and is now a private house.

Kirkton Pairish (kirk-tin-pär-resh) n. small parish a few miles to the east and south of Hawick. It is narrow, being about 8 miles long by 2 miles wide, running north-east to south-west, and bounded by Cavers, Hawick and Hobkirk Parishes. It corresponded to the mediaeval ‘Cavers Parva’ and had the status of a Rectory before the Reformation. It formally became a separate parish in the 16th century, and was part of the Diocese of Glasgow. A church existed there at least from the time of Edward I. The Parish is bounded mostly by Cavers, but also by Hawick and Teviothead. The boundary with Cavers used to pass straight through the farm of Cavers Mains. The extent of the Parish formerly included farms as distant from Kirkton village as Winningtonrig and Acreknowe. The lands of Middle were partly in the parish, but included in the Barony of Cavers. In 1649 the land and crops of the Parish were valued at about £4200 and the total value was £4526 13s 4d in 1678. In the early 19th century there were 4 heritors, namely, Elliott of Stobs, Douglas of Cavers, Douglas of Adderstone and Dickson of Tofts. In 1838 it was stated that there were no villages, no toll-bars and no public houses in the Parish. Parish records exist from 1707, although not all births were registered, and only a small fraction of marriages and deaths; there are gaps in baptisms 1710–15 and 1738–42, as well as several gaps in the marriage records. There was a proposal in 1766/7 to suppress the Parish in favour of a new parish in the western parts of Cavers and Hawick (which became Teviothead).

Kirkton Schuil (kirk-tin-skil) n. former school in the Parish of Kirkton. It existed since at least 1669, when it was recorded that the position of schoolmaster was vacant. The building was situated on the left hand-side of the A6088 a few hundred yards before reaching the main settlement of Kirkton, where Clints Cottage was later built. There were about 50 pupils there in the 1830s. The school later moved to the building later known as Athole Cottage until a new building was constructed in 1887. The school closed in 1963. The Borders Archive has school registers for 1890–1939 and log books for 1873–1963. It was once run by the joint Cavers and Kirkton School Board. Thomas Wilson was schoolmaster until the mid-1780s, Walter Scott taking over for a few years (including 1787) and then being succeeded by Andrew Scott. The schoolmaster from 1834 to the 1860s was Thomas Little. John Turnbull was recorded as schoolmaster in at least 1903–06. The ridge overlooking the school has the remains of a hill-fort, consisting of a summit area and a plateau slightly below it, with triple ramparts, but no existing evidence of internal structures; it is about 115 m long by about 40 m, but tapering to the north-east.

Kirkton Tofts (kirk-tin-tofts) n. lands mentioned as an Inglis possession in a 1435 charter, along with Braxholme, Goldielands, Whitlaw, Whitrig, Todshawhills and Harwood, but all in the barony of Hawick (transcribed as ‘Kalkistoftis’). This might appear to refer to the farms of Tofts in Cavers Parish, near to Kirkton, but it is hard to see how this could have been in the barony of Hawick. An undated charter some time before this (and probably before 1426, since Robert Scott was a witness) has John Inglis of Manor and Braxholme granting the lands of ‘Kyrktoun and Toftis’ in the Barony of Hawick to his uncle Sir Simon Inglis. In 1461 the lands of ‘Kirkton and Toftis’ in the Lordship of Braxholme were confirmed to Katherine, daughter and heir of Alexander Inglis, along with her husband ‘Arnou Gourlau’. And in 1521 ‘6 merkland of Kyrktoun’ in the Barony of Braxholme were given to John Gourlay, as heir to his deceased father, John Gourlay of Rulewood; since the lands appear to have been close to Braxholme, perhaps they were associated with Chapelhill Kirk. This may be the place (or places) transcribed as ‘Tofts, Kirkwood’ in the 1594 and 1615 lists of lands for which the Baron of Hawick was superior (see also Kirkton Mains).

Kirkton Kirktown see Kirkton Kirkurd see Kirkton Kirkurd (kir-koord) n. small parish and former barony in western Peeblesshire. Lands there were held by the Scotts from perhaps the early 13th century, and they were probably given the superiority of the barony in the early 14th century. Certainly the superiority was confirmed to Walter, son of Robert Scott in 1389. The family would later move their headquarters to Selkirkshire and Roxburghshire to become the Scotts of Braxholme and Buccleuch, although they continued to hold these Peeblesshire lands until the mid-17th century. Individual pieces of land within Kirkurd were held by Douglas of Dalkeith and Cockburn of Henderland. In the early 16th century there was some dispute over the lands between Sir Walter Scott of Braxholme and James Murray of Falahill. In the later 15th century the lands were considered part of the Barony of Braxholme. By 1574 the lands were valued at 80 merks, when they were considered as a separate barony of the Scotts of Buccleuch. The lands were included in the main Barony of Braxholme in 1634, 1653 and 1661, and according to the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch. It was still recorded as an 80-merk land in 1653. The church there was long the property of Soutra Hospital (also written ‘Kirkcurd’, ‘Kirkkurde’, ‘Kirkurd’, ‘Kyrkecurde’, ‘Kyrkecurde’, ‘Kyrkeurd’, ‘Kyrkurde’, ‘Kyrkurd’, ‘Kyrkurde’, etc.; it is ‘Ecclesia de Orda’ in the 1170s).
the Kirk Walk

Kirkwood (kirk-wood\,-wud) n. Alexander (19th C.) first pastor of Hawick Baptist Kirk. He served the new church, perhaps intermittently 1846–52. He probably preached in Allars Crescent. W.M. Anderson took over from him. Lord Archibald Johnstone ‘Archi’ (1946–) politician, born in Glasgow. He obtained a degree in Pharmacy at Herriot-Watt University, became the first sabbatical student President there, retrained as a solicitor, and was a partner in Hawick with Andrew Haddon for a while. He was elected M.P. for Roxburgh and Berwickshire in 1983, is a member of the Liberal Democrats, has been party Chief Whip and also spokesman on welfare issues. He holds the record for the longest period as Hawick’s Parliamentary representative. He has taken part in some Common Riding Ride-outs. He was knighted in 2003 and became Lord Kirkwood of Kirkhope in 2005 after stepping down as M.P. Rev. James (c.1650–1709) born in Dunbar Parish, he graduated from Edinburgh University in 1670, was licensed by Haddington Presbytery in 1676 and became Chaplain to the family of Sir John Campbell, Earl of Caithness (and later Breadalbane). He was then assistant at Wemyss and was presented to Minto Parish by Walter Riddell of Minto in early 1679, becoming minister later that year. However, he was deprived in late 1681 for not taking ‘the Test’, i.e. refusing to accept Episcopalianism. He went to Colmonell Parish around 1682 or 1683. Then in 1684, through the influence of Dr. Gilbert Burnet (Bishop of Salisbury) he was given the modest living of Astwick in Bedfordshire. He is said to have been ‘outed’ with his consent in 1702, and moved to Ireland. He worked hard to circulate Gaelic copies of the Bible, and to promote libraries in every parish. He left some papers to the Presbytery of Dunbar detailing his efforts to circulate the Bible throughout the Highlands in Gaelic. His books were later transferred to the collection of the General Assembly. He wrote ‘A Discourse of the right way of improving our Time’ (1692), ‘An Overture for Founding and Maintaining Bibliotheces in every Paroch throughout the Kingdom’ (1699, 1889, based on which he is sometimes given the title ‘Father of the Free Libraries’), ‘A Copy of a Letter anent a Project for erecting a Library in every Presbytery, or at least every County in the Highlands’ (1702) and ‘A New Family Book, or the True Interest of Families (1690, 1693). He appears to have died unmarried.

Kirkwud (kirk-wud) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded c.1376 as ‘Kyrkwed’, with a value of 40 pence. It was in the section called ‘Forest’, but the precise location is unclear (perhaps near ‘Kirk Hill’ or near the old Castleton Kirk).

Kirkwudheid (kirk-wud-heed) n. former name for lands listed among those held ‘in tenandry’ by the Baron of Hawick in 1511 and 1572. It is possible that this is an error for ‘Birkwood’ (it is ‘Kirkwod’ in 1511 and 1572).

the Kirkwynd see the Kirk Wynd

the Kirk Wynd (thu-kirk-wind) n. old road from Drumlanrig Square to the Slitrig, named for its proximity to St. Mary’s Church. It was referred to as a ‘vennel’ in a 1610 sasine. By the 19th century it had become a very over-crowded street. Most of the older buildings were demolished in 1973/74, with a car park by St. Mary’s church and a road through to Slitrig Bank being constructed. Some houses were restored and inhabited in 1984. It is the site where the Drums & Fifes assemble to begin the main day of the Common Riding at 6 a.m. on the Friday.

Kirndean (kärn-deen) n. farm just south of Dinlabyre, on the Liddel Water, to the east of the road, about 4½ miles north of Newcastleton. In 1541 it is valued at 1 merk on the rental roll of Liddesdale, with tenant George Armstrong. It was surveyed along with other properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1718, when it consisted of 1589 acres, bounded by Dinlabyre on the east, Sorbiertrees and the Border on the south, Dykewar and lands of the Laird of Whithaugh on the west and Whitehaugh on the north; a house is shown near the modern farmhouse and another far to the south-east. It was one a home of the Armstrongs and then by the Elliot from the early 17th century until about 1950. ‘Fightin Charlie o’ Liddesdale’ is described in the notes to Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Guy Mannering’, and is meant to have been an Armstrong or Elliot from here. Walter Lorraine was tenant there in 1681 and 1682. Andrew Murray was tenant there in 1694. Adam Elliot was farmer there in 1797, Thomas Elliot in 1841, Henry Elliot in 1851, William Scott Elliot in 1861 and Thomas Murray in 1868. It is said that William Scott was farmer there in the early 19th century, and had an interaction with his neighbour ‘Little Robbie o the Castleton’. In the late 19th century John Elliot in Flatt carried on the lease after the death of his uncle John Scott-Elliot. In an area of open moorland to the east lies the remains of a homestead, about 100 ft across, which is labelled on the Ordnance Survey map as ‘Homestead Moat’ (and may correspond to the position of the other house marked in 1718), although there is no indication that the ditch was ever water-filled. 3 flints found near here are in Hawick Museum. It is also the name of a farm in Zimbabwe, although whether this is connected is uncertain (the origin is possibly Old Norse ‘kjarn’ and Old English ‘denu’, together meaning ‘valley of rich pasture’; it first occurs as ‘Kyrndene’ in 1541, is ‘Kirnden’ in 1694, ‘Kirntoun’ in 1797 and written ‘Cairndean’ in 1837 and 1852; it is ‘Kirden’ on Visscher’s 1689 map of Scotland, ‘Kirnden’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and ‘Kirntown’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

clothing, particularly machine-knitted garments.
Weavers were certainly a prominent class of workers in Hawick from the earliest records in about 1640. The knitting of stockings is said to have been introduced into Scotland during the time of the Protectorate of Cromwell, i.e. the 1650s.
The local origins of the industry are in traditional linen and woollen manufacturing, the latter perhaps being developed through the sheep farming of the local monks. The availability of sheep, and the abundance of sources of water-power were the natural seeds for development. Spinning a weaving were originally a domestic business, but people employed specifically as weavers were already a reasonably large fraction of the population of Hawick when the Burgh records begin about 1640. In 1728 the Council encourage the manufacturing of ‘tarred wool’ by helping with the rent of workhouse and ‘to pay £20 yearly to the dresser of coarse wool’. In 1736 it is recorded that ‘at Kirkcudbright, Hawick, Mon-gaff, and other Places near the Wool Countries, several Packs of tarred Wool have been washed and cleaned, and some of it sorted and combed, spun, and wrought up into Blankets, and other course Goods, by private Hands, for their own Use’; the names of Hawick’s first encouragers of local industry are not known. There is early refer-ce to a fulling mill, and wool was spun for manufacture in other towns. By the mid-1700s there was a small factory making linen checks, and from the 1750s Hawick had small factories manufacturing carpets and linen tapes. John Hardie introduced stocking frames in 1771, initially making hosiery from linen and worsted, but gradually giving way to lamb'swool. In about 1776
there were 65 looms in Hawick, making linens and woolens (including carpets) and just 6 stocking frames. By 1791 there were 14 men and 51 women employed in connection with the manufacture of woollen goods, making about 3500 pairs of lamb'swool hose and 600 pairs of cotton hose annually. In 1816 there were 7 carding mills with 44 ‘scribbling’ machines and 100 spinning jennies;
the Town spun 12,000 stones of wool annually, and manufactured 328,000 pairs of stockings on 510 frames. Hawick grew as a hosiery (stockings etc.) manufacturing centre from the later 18th century into a producer of a wide range of knitwear in the late 19th century. There were over a million stockings made in 1838, with over 100,000 stones of wool consumed in the factories,
where there were more than 1200 stocking frames
and more than 200 weaving looms, making more than a million pairs of stockings annually, as well as other items. In 1839 it was stated that items
being manufactured included ‘yarns, under cloth-
18th century into a producer of a wide range of
over a million stockings made in 1838, with over 100,000 stones of wool consumed in the factories,
where there were more than 1200 stocking frames
and more than 200 weaving looms, making more
than a million pairs of stockings annually, as well
being manufactured included ‘yarns, under cloth-ings, flannels, plaidings, shawls, tartans, druggets, cloths of various descriptions, lamb’s wool hosiery of the finest texture, and blankets’. By 1850 there were 268 weaving looms and 3465 people were employed in the industry. In 1869 it was estinated that there were 64 set of machines, 52,864 spinning spindles, 270 power-looms and 100–150 hand looms, with 1.8 million pounds of wool being carded annually. Around 1900 there were 18 hosiery and 14 tweed manufacturers in Hawick. It took many decades for the word ‘knitwear’ to popularly replace ‘hosiery’ as the description of Ha-wick’s main industry; there are conflicting claims about which company used it first, but it seems likely this portmanteau word was coined in Hawick. Innes, Henderson & Co. used ‘knit wear’ in 1924, with a brochure in 1929 having it as one word, while the minutes of the Board of Pringle’s first used it in 1945 – ‘Though I’m forever roving My heart is interwoven With the fabric of this old mill town’ [DF].

knock (k-nok) n., arch. a clock – ‘For taking doune & mending of the knoik’ [BR1701], ‘... and now for mending of the knoike and putting her to chape again’ [BR1701], v., arch. to strike – ‘...he shall keep the Town’s knoike in the steeple in ane going order and sufficient case and condition, without cracke or flaw for knocking and chopping hourly night and day’ [BR1702], ‘...lykewise that oyl be furnished yearelie for the knoike, and towes for the bell...’ [BR1704] (there were many spelling variants).

knowe (now) n. a small rounded hill, hillock, knoll – ‘...he’ll be owre the knowe the roon’, ‘mibbe there was a saicord shooter on the gressy knowe?’, ‘...We saw com marching ower the knoives, Five hunder Fenniks in a Fock’ [CPM], ‘The glower-worn’s lamp is gleaming bright, The sheep on ilk knowe are still...’ [JoHa], ‘Gi’e me the bonnie broumy knowe, The burn that roond it rins...’ [JEDM], ‘Fornenst the Knowe was...’ [WL], (sometimes written ‘know’); it is essentially a variant of the English ‘knoll’, although used more frequently; it exists in many local place names, particularly small hills).

Knowe (now) n. hamlet to the east of Hassendeanburn, on the opposite side of the Teviot from Ashbybank. It was nearer to the river, with ‘Knowetoonheid’ being a little to the north. It was at one time referred to as the East Mains of Hassendean. Thomas Turnbull was owner in 1643, when it was valued at £279 10s. John Turnbull paid tax on £227 8s for land there in 1663 and Thomas Turnbull in 1678. The lands became part of Minto Parish when Hassendean was suppressed in 1690. The Turnbills of Knowe, related to the Minto branch of the family, held land here for many generations, before it passed to the Horsburghs of that Ilk through marriage. Tax was paid in 1694 for 6 hearths for ‘Know and his servants’; in fact Thomas Turnbull of Knowe acted as a collector of the Hearth Tax for Roxburgshire. Anthony Turnbull paid tax for 22 windows there in 1748. The lands were listed as owned by David Simpson of Knowe on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls, when valued at £227. Edward Heron-Maxwell of Teviotbank was owner in about 1874. A glass stirrup-cup used by this family is in the Museum. Their arms showed an ear of rye between 3 bulls’ heads. Andrew Reid farmed there in 1797 (also formerly spelled ‘Know’).

Knowe (now) n. former farmstead in Castleton Parish. It is marked ‘Know’ on Stobie’s 1770 map, to the south of Castleton village and just to the east of Bellshiels.

Knowebog Hill (now-bog-hil) n. hill in Craik Forest, near the head of the Borthwick valley, north-east of Wolfcleuchhead. It reaches a height of 377 m.

Knowe Brig (now-brig) n. former bridge over the Hermitage Water near Toftholm and Shaw farms, which once carried the main road. A farm by this bridge was known as ‘White Know’.

Knowe Burn (now-burn) n. alternative name for the Toftholm Sike, which joins the Hermitage Water between Toftholm and Netherraw. The road bridge across the stream was formerly known as the Knowe Brig, and a cottage by the roadside was Whiteknowe.
Knowe-en’ (now-en) n., poet. the end of a hill – ‘Snaws join the squal, wi’ pu’lin’, pilrin’, An’ drifts, as ‘round knowe-en’s a-whirlin’’ [JoHa].

Knoweheid (now-heed) n. knowehead, former farmstead to the west of Newcastleton, on the south-west side of Park Hill. It was still occupied by shepherd John Hislop in 1858 and by his son John in 1861. The remains of several buildings and enclosure walls can still be seen.

Knowesouth (now-south, noo-sooth) n. mansion on the A698 road to Jedburgh, now a private nursing home. The estate was held by a branch of the Rutherford family (descended from the main Edgerston stem) from about the mid-17th century, who sometimes spelled their name ‘Rutherford’. The lands were valued at £484 in 1678. The farms of the estate featured prominently in the Hearth Tax list for Bedrule Parish at the end of the 17th century, with 4 hearths in the house and 19 tenants listed. Robert Bonnar was there in 1690. John Rutherford paid tax for 26 windows there in 1748 and 1753. When Thomas Rutherford died in 1796 and his brother Capt. John Rutherford died unmarried in the early 19th century the inheritance of the estate was disputed between the husbands of different daughters. It eventually went to Thomas’ nephew Charles Scott. He sold it to William Oliver Rutherford of Dinlabyre, who had a mansion built there in about 1835. However, in 1838 Rutherford sold it to George Pott (who had already purchased the neighbouring Ruecastle). Robert Oliver and John Rutherford are recorded as farmers there in 1797. George and Gideon Pott of Dod lived there in the 1840s to 60s. There is an oil painting of the house and enclosure walls can still be seen.

Knowesouth Burn (now-south-burn) n. stream that rises on the north-west slopes of Black Law in Bedrule Parish and runs roughly northwards, past the farm of Knowesouth to join the Teviot. On the west side of the stream are the remains of a settlement. It consists of a roughly circular enclosure, about 43 m in diameter, with another bank outside, lying between 2 gullies. This is probably the ‘encampment’ described in the 1837 parish summary in the New Statistical Account.

Knowetoonheid (now-toon-heed) n. Knowetownhead, hamlet about 4 miles north-east of Hawick, between Hassendeanburn and Teviot Bank. It is on the east bank of Hassendean Burn and a little to the north of the old farm of Knowe. It was locally also known as simply ‘Toonheid’ (or ‘Townhead’) and was formerly known as ‘East Mains’ of Hassendean. It became part of Minto Parish when Hassendean was suppressed in 1690. William Turnbull held it in the late 15th century. It appears to have been part of the lands owned by Robert Scott of Alton in 1643 and owned by Thomas Gray in 1678, when it was ‘Now called Know Townhead’ and valued at £214. It was owned by the Turnbulks of Knowe in the 17th and 18th centuries, although their house was probably nearer to the river than the modern farmhouse. It was farmed by William Little around 1700. The farmhouse contains a carved wedding plaque, showing ‘1628 TT HT’, probably the marriage of Thomas Turnbull of Knowe, with his wife perhaps being Helen Turnbull; it was presumably taken from the old house of Knowe. In the county valuation of 1788 it is recorded as ‘Thomas Gray of Alton’s Lands, now called Know Townhead’ and valued at £214. There is another carved stone built into the wall, showing 2 dragons (marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Knox (noks) n. Adam (b.1826) son of Walter and Elizabeth Hart. He was the first Cornet from Wilton, being elected at a public meeting in 1856 after the first nominee had declined and then the Council had refused to be further involved. He is shown as Right-hand Man in the first photograph of the Common Riding Principals. He worked as a ‘flesher’ (i.e. butcher). Agnes (17th C.) cottar at Horsleyhill according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. She was probably related to George, John and Thomas, who were also listed there. Andrew ‘Dandie’ (17th C.) married Marion Redford in Ashkirk Parish in 1634. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Firth in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He may be the Andrew who witnessed a baptism in 1690 for Thomas in Ashkirk Parish. Andrew (1690/1–1768) tenant at Newhouse in Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Margaret Kirkwood, who died in 1768, aged 74. Andrew (1756/7–1830), tenant of Mainhill, who is recorded on the same headstone, is probably his grandson. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Riddell in Lilliesleaf Parish. His son Andrew was baptised in 1789. A.O. (18th/19th C.) residing at Wilton Mill, he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. Dan fictional character from ‘The Gutterbludes’, described as ‘Son of a Duke’s farmer’, one of 3 Teri schoolmates who emigrated as settlers to Canada. David (18th/19th C.) resident at Whitlaw, along with James, according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. The pair were probably the uncles of William, who was later farmer at Meikle Whitlaw; they were said to have succeeded as tenants to John Gledstains. David (b.1821) son of Walter and Elizabeth Hart. He was farmer at lands off Langlands Road, before it was developed. In 1851 he was living at Howlands House on Wilton Path, farmer of 34 acres, employing 2 men. In 1861 he was assistant farmer at Meikle Whitlaw. His wife was Ann, from Newcastleton. Their children included Agnes, William and John. David (b.1820/1) born in Wilton Parish, he was farmer at Martinshouse. In 1861 he was farming 116 acres and employing 4 people. He was also recorded there in 1868. His wife was Agnes. George (17th C.) resident at Newhouse in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to Thomas, who was also listed there. George (17th C.) cottar at Horsleyhill according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to Agnes, John and Thomas, who were also listed there. He may be the George, married to Janet Robson, whose children baptised in Roberton Parish (when it still contained Hassendean) included Agnes (b.1684), Thomas (b.1687) and Andrew (b.1689). The witnesses in 1684 were John Knox (who was surely related) and John Brown. George (b.c.1805) stockmaker of Howdenburn, and early member of the Relief (Allars) Kirk. He was son of George, who was a private in the 16th Regiment of Foot, and Agnes Gordon. He lived with his sister Janet. A sketch of him exists. Henry (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 along with James, as residents of ‘Cordlane’. It is unclear where this was, but James Davidson in Raperlaw was accused of stealing 40 sheep from there. James (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 along with Henry at ‘Cordlane’. James (18th/19th C.) recorded at Whitlaw along with David on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was probably ancestor of James who farmed at Little Whitlaw a few decades later and possibly uncle of William, who farmed at Meikle Whitlaw. James (18th/19th C.) gardener at Damside who was also a volunteer. He is probably the James recorded as owner of part of Roughheugh in 1788, valued at £15 3s. He spotted the beacon on Crumhaughhill at the False Alarm of 1804. He ran down the Loan and the Howegate waving his gun, with a crowd running after him, reached the Tower Knowe and fired his gun as a signal, gaining the prize of 20 shillings. He could be the James, who, along with Walter, is described in the 1808 will of ‘Auld Cash’ as ‘late in Damside now at Silverboothall’; according to the 1811 Land Tax Rolls he and Walter were formerly in possession of enclosures that were part of Silverbuthall, and he is probably recorded as owner of part of Roughheugh (later owned by auctioneer James Oliver). He may be the James who married Jean Irwin in Wilton in 1756 and had children: David (b.1757); Andrew (b.1758); Elizabeth (b.1760); Helen (b.1762); James (b.1766); Jean (b.1768); Andrew (b.1770); Walter (b.1771); John (b.1774); and Isobel (b.1780). The witnesses in 1780 were Robert ‘Irwin’ (probably related to his wife) and Thomas Rae. James (b.c.1790) farmer at Little Whitlaw. His brother William was farmer at Meikle Whitlaw. His wife was Thomasina and their children included: Archibald; Janet, who married a Turnbull; and Thomas, who was cashier at Haddon & Turnbull’s. He was probably nephew of David and James who were earlier at Whitlaw. In 1851 he was recorded there, farming 97 acres and employing 3 people. James (19th C.) resident of Harden in Castleton Parish in 1868. John (17th C.) recorded among the poor of Hassendean Parish in 1694, when he was at Horsleyhill. He was probably related to Agnes, George and Thomas, also listed there. He may be the John who witnessed a baptism for George in 1684. John (18th C.) witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1761 for William Nichol and Janet Blaikie. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Belses Mains on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was additionally taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. John (1763/4–1832) son of William, tenant at Newhouse. He farmed at Faldonside. He married Janet Scott, who died in 1836, aged 58. Their children included William and Jean, who died in infancy. He is buried in Lilliesleaf Kirkyard. John (b.1828) son of William. He was a baker in Melrose. He took over his father’s tenancy of Meikle and Little Whitlaw. However, he gave them up in 1895. He died without issue. Rev. Robert (1606–59) eldest son of Robert, who was probably the grand-nephew of the reformer John. He became minister at Kelso in 1633. He signed the National Covenant, probably in Hawick, in 1638. He used some vaults in the old abbey as his manse, adding to the chambers used by his father. He firstly married Margaret, sister.
of John Ker of Lochtour and secondly Elizabeth, 2nd daughter of Sir John Murray of Philiphaugh. Rev. Robert (17th C.) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1668, he was recorded living at Cavers in 1677. Hence he may have been private chaplain or tutor for Douglas of Cavers. He wrote to Rev. Wylie (the former tutor at Cavers) about the apparently supernatural case of Sir George Maxwell of Pollock, and also about the 'ethart' spirit, which accompanied a lady who lived 'in the West marches' of Scotland. He is recorded in Cavers in 1683 and 1684 in discharges to the treasurer of Selkirk for annual rent. He became assistant minister at St. Mungo's in Glasgow in 1688, but was forced to give up on account of being an Episcopalian. He was presented to Peebles in 1690, and although he was not settled, he 'continued to possess the Kirk by violence', eventually being forced to withdraw. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Roberton. He married Jean Turnbull in 1682. He is probably the Thomas who witnessed a baptism for Thomas Graham and Margaret Knox (perhaps his sister) in 1681. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Marion Shiel and their son Andrew was baptised in 1690. The witnesses were James Johnstone and Andrew Knox (who was surely related). Thomas (17th C.) resident at Newhouse in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to George, who was also listed there, and seems likely to have been an ancestor of the later Thomas who farmed at Firth. Thomas (17th C.) resident at Horsleyhill according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to Agnes, George and John, who were also listed there. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His children included: Marion (b.1740); and Thomas (b.1747). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1759 he witnessed a baptism for Robert Waugh at Groundstone. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at Firth, recorded on the 1789–97 Horse Tax Rolls. In 1797 he was owner of 6 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid the dog tax at Firth in 1797. He married Barbara Turnbull and was father of the poet William (b.1789), who was baptised in Lilliesleaf Parish. Other children were probably Jessie (b.1790), Dorothea (b.1794), Thomas (b.1796) and Henrietta (b.1798). His wife has previously been married to George Pott of Todrig. He may have been related to the earlier Thomas at Newhouse. Thomas (19th/20th C.) son of James, farmer at Little Whitlaw. He worked in the woollen trade for a while and was then cashier at Haddon & Turnbull’s. He lived at Ebony Cottage. He was described as ‘an intelligent and kindly man off business, but somewhat to be feared if immersed in business’. He married Isabella, daughter of Benjamin Hall and Mary Wilson. Thomas ‘Tom’ worked in the Tourist Information Centre in Hawick, where he became known for singing to visitors. He wrote the song ‘Where Slitrig Meets Teviot’. Walter (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Bessie Scott and their children included Andrew (b.1653). Walter (18th/19th C.) labourer in Minto in 1797 when he was taxed for having a greyhound. Perhaps the same Walter was listed as owner of a ‘House and Yard’ in Minto Parish in 1779, valued at £1 16s 7d, which was owned by Lord Minto in 1811. Walter (18th/19th C.) shopkeeper in Wilton, with a grocer’s shop. He also ran carts, carrying coals etc., with the help of his sons. It seems likely he was son of James, gardener at Damside; in the 1808 will of ‘Auld Cash’, he and James are described as ‘late in Damside now at Silverboothall’; according to the 1811 Land Tax Rolls he and James were formerly in possession of enclosures that were part of Silverbuthall. He was probably the ‘Mr. Knox’ who owned land around and to the north of Langlands Road, according to Wood’s 1824 map. He was listed as farmer at Howlands among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835. In 1837 he was mentioned as an example in the House of Commons investigation into ‘fictitious voters’; along with his sons Walter and James they rented Hutlerburn in order to have votes in Selkirkshire. He married Elizabeth Hart and their children included: James (b.1809); Helen (b.1811); Walter (b.1813); Jane (b.1815); Adam (b.1817); and Helen (again, b.1819); David (b.1821), who took over the farm in Wilton; John (b.1824); Adam (b.1826), first Cornet from Wilton; and Mary. All of their children were born in Wilton Parish. His widow was living at Howlands House in 1841 and 1851. Walter (b.1813) son of Walter. He farmed at Stirches Mains. He was listed there among heads of households in 1840 and 1841. He was married to Elizabeth and their children included Jessie and Walter. William (1721/2–96) tenant at Newhouse in Lilliesleaf Parish. He was recorded there on the 1788–92 Horse Tax Rolls. He married Janet Smail, who died in 1791, aged 60. Their son John (b.1763/4) was tenant at Falldonside. They also had 2 children who died in infancy. William (1732/3–77) tenant farmer at Dunstane Moor in Lilliesleaf Parish. He married...
Knub

Margaret Cairns, who died in 1772, aged 34. His brother James (1726/7–1805) is recorded on the same headstone. William (1762/3–1825) tenant at Belses farm. He married Margaret Hume, who died in 1859, aged 91. Their children included: Robert (1799/1800–16); Margaret (1803/4–16); Barbara (1801/2–08); and 3 children who died in infancy. William (1789–1825) local poet, born at Firth, near Lilliesleaf, he lived for a while at The Cottage, near Orchard. He was the eldest son of Thomas, a Lilliesleaf farmer, and Barbara Turnbull (who had been married to George Pott of Todrig). He was educated at Lilliesleaf Parish School until aged 12 or 13 and then spent a few years at Musselburgh Grammar School. He was a good friend of Rev. John Cochrane of Hawick, the husband of his sister Jessie Elizabeth. His family farmed at Todrig, where Henry Scott Riddell was a herdsman in youth, and later farmed at Langhope. He himself tried unsuccessfully as a farmer at Wrae near Langholm when he was 23, lasting about 5 years. His family moved to Edinburgh in 1820, where he worked as a journalist, wrote sacred poetry, and became a friend of Sir Walter Scott. His publications include ‘The Lonely Hearth and other poems’ (1818), ‘Songs of Israel’ (1824) and ‘The Harp of Zion’ (1825). His poem ‘Mortality’ (also known as ‘Oh! Why Should the Spirit of Mortal be Proud?’), published in ‘Songs of Israel’) was a favourite of Abraham Lincoln and it was also said that the Emperor of Russia had it printed in gold and hung on the palace walls. He was described as short, but handsome, with a fair complexion and light hair, the hands and knees, to give artificial respiration especially an injured person (also knuizle).

Knigle (ni-, nü-gul) v., arch. to squeeze with the hands and knees, to give artificial respiration (also knuizle).

Knuizle (ni-, nü-zul) v., arch. to press the body, especially an injured person (also knuigle).

Knyvet (ni-vi’) n. Sir Henry (c.1506–bef.1547) of Charlton, Wiltshire, son of Sir Thomas and Muriel Howard. He was one of the lieutenants of the Earl of Hertford during the 1545 ravaging of the Borders. He married Anne Pickering in 1537. Their son Thomas was famous as the captor of Guy Fawkes (older form of ‘Nivet’ with many spelling variations).

Koag see cog

Knob the K.O.S.B. (thu-kä-ō-es-bee) n. the King’s Own Scottish Borderers, local infantry Regiment, covering the Borders and nearby areas. The Regiment was raised in March 1689 in Abbey Close at Holyrood by David Leslie, 3rd Earl of Leven. About 800 men were gathered in about 2 hours as a ‘loyalist’ force to protect Edinburgh against the Highlanders and other supporters of William of Orange. This force was eventually renamed the Kings Own Borderers in 1805 and the K.O.S.B. in 1887, and formally adopted the Leslie tartan in 1898. The K.O.S.B. has fought in almost every campaign involving the British Army in the last 300 years. There is a record of them celebrating the Hawick Common Riding in Egypt in 1889. The 1/4th Battalion (Territorial Force, pronounced ‘first fourth’, i.e. the first part of the 4th Battalion) grew out of the Border Rifles and included many local volunteers who signed up in the years leading up to WWI. In 1915, because of the losses suffered by the regular army units, the 1/4th were sent to Gallipoli, where they took place in that ill-conceived campaign against Turkey. They later served in Egypt, Palestine and on the Western Front. Later the 7th/8th presented the town with their Colours when they were disbanded after WWI. The entire Regiment was given the last freedom of the town in 1974. The Regiment paraded through Hawick in 2006 before merging with the Royal Scots to become the Royal Scots Borderers, 1st Battalion of the Royal Regiment of Scotland. In 2009 a plaque was placed outside the Town Hall to honour all the men who served with the regiment. ‘For king and country and the Scottish Borderers the story of the 1/4th (Border) Battalion, the King’s Own Scottish Borders on the Gallipoli Peninsula 1915’ was written by Gavin Richardson in 1987 and ‘After Gallipoli: the story of the 1/4th (Border) Battalion, The King’s Own Scottish Borderers 1916–1918: Egypt, Palestine and the Western Front’ in 1992. ‘Borderers in Battle: The War Story of the King’s Own Scottish Borderers, 1939–1945’ (1948) was written by Hugh Gunning.

Kossuth (ko-sooth) n. Louis (1802–94) Hungarian revolutionary, who worked for Hungarian independence, becoming President in 1849. However, the republic was short-lived, with Russia intervening to help Austria. He toured Britain and the U.S. and received ovations as a champion of liberty, including being made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick in 1856 after delivering a lecture ‘in the cause of European Freedom’. One of the welcoming banners in Hawick had been made by James ‘Dictionary’ Murray and said ‘Thy Kingdom Come’ in Hungarian. In Glasgow he stayed at the observatory with John Pringle Nichol, who had been a teacher in Hawick. His first name is also written ‘Lajos’.

Kowe (kow) n. Thomas (15th C.) notary for the sasine giving James Douglas of Drumlanrig the Barony of Hawick in 1484. He was a presbyter of the Diocese of Glasgow. It is unclear if there would be a more modern spelling of his surname.

krame (kram) n., arch. a temporary merchant’s booth, stall at a fair – ‘Assolzies George Makwetie fra the claim persewit be John Scott, pethlar, for a half dozen of Butes, maie or fewer, aliget taken away fra his krame in Hawick’ [BR1655], ‘...for the stealing and theftuously away taken out of his krame in open market ane pair of single soled shoes’ [BR1680]. ‘Sally Machusky, Betty Johnny, Jamie Adams and Tammy Graham, The little Gover as smart as ony, Auld Mag Lamb and her penny krame’ [HI], ‘Gibbie the Gowk’s no’ sic a gowk but he’ll pack up the krame a’ right enough’ [JEDM], ‘Rows of ‘krames’ laden with toothsome dainties ...’ [BM1907], ‘A raw o treis: a raw o krames; a raw o hooses’ [ECS], ‘...Better, daur-say, Brocht, factory-fresh (sei telly) til eer hame, twae hunder miles, than frae some mercat-krame ...’ [DH] (also spelled ‘krain’, ‘craime’ and ‘crame’); still in use to refer to stalls up the Moor at the Common Riding, although it is now obscure elsewhere in Scotland; from Mediaeval German or Dutch.

krame-wife (kräm-wif) n., arch. a female stallholder at a fair etc. – ‘...and on Hopękirk Bu’ morning the krain-wives regularly took up their station in the kirkyard and exposed their wares of gingerbread, tam trot, and clagam on the old through stones’ [WaD] (also written ‘kraim-wife’).

Kristenbury Crags (kris-teu-bu-ree-krawgz) n., pl. Christianbury Crags, a rocky outcrop near the farm of Flatt on the English side of the Kershop valley. It can be seen in the distance from parts of southern Liddesdale.

Krucrewch (krook-rooch) n. Andrew (16th C.) listed among tenants of Skelfhill and neighbouring farms in a bond of security signed in Hawick in 1569. It is unclear what the modern form of this name would be, perhaps just an error for ‘Crook’ or ‘Crooch’.

KS (kä-ess) n. for a long time the 2-letter car licence plate code indicating Roxburghshire.

the Kumfy Mill (thu-kum-fee-nil) n. popular name for the Braemar factory on Commercial Road. It was earlier the business of A. Brodie & Co.

kurnel (kur-nul) n., arch. a kernel (also kirnel).

Kush-Mush (kush-mush) n. nickname in use in the 19th century – ‘Here’s Soapy Ballantyne and Wull Slush, Here’s Todd Lowrie and Peggy Neill; Davie A’-things and auld Kush-Mush, And Jenny A’-things is here as weel’ [HI].

kyme (kI) n., pl., arch. cows, cattle – ‘Item sex ky vyz. foure ky with followaris and twa with cauf price of the pece ourheid £8’ [SPB1579], ‘...Betide me life, betide me death, These three ky shall gae t’ Liddesdale wi’ me. Fala, &c’ [CPM], ‘...Or, of my great ancestor’s plight, Whan southrons stole his kye by night’ [JTe], ‘He keeps his pony and his kye: It’s strange how some folks get so high’ [RDW], ‘Ho! For the blades of Harden! Ho! For the driven kye’ [WHO], ‘See them drive the kye before them’ [RSC], ‘...He had kye in the haugh, he had sheep on the hill’ [JT], ‘...Had cried to the startled guard ‘To

[WHO], ‘Sae it seemed that the least the laud could dae Was to lift a wheen kye in the forenicht gray’ [WL], ‘Though gliffed for kye and horses . . .’ [IWL], ‘. . . For ma slice spells serious danger For Elec Cavers’ kye’ [IWL] (also written ‘ky’; this was once the common plural form of ‘cow’; see also kine).

\textit{Kyle} (kil) \textit{n.} Alexander (b.c.1795) dyer living on the Howegate, at about No. 12. His wife was Jane, and their children included John, Anne, Mary, William, Archibald and Thomas. Alexander (19th/20th C.) son of John, he worked in the tweed trade and then was tobacconist at 3 Tower Knowe. He was Cornet in 1872. He married Jessie S. Elliot, who was daughter of Hawick’s first cabman, and died in 1885, aged 29. His son William was Cornet in 1905. Their other children included Thomas, Lizzie H. and William, none of whom reached adulthood. Andrew (1729/30–1833) born at Heughhead farm in Castleton Parish. He was tenant farmer at Braidlie on the Hermitage Water. He was farmer at Demainholm on the 1792 Horse Tax Rolls, and Braidlie in 1794 and 1797. He was also taxed for having 4 non-working dogs in 1797. He married Jean, daughter of David Murray, and she died in 1834, aged 83. He died in his 94th year and is buried at Ettleton. Their children included: David (1776/7–1861) and William (1777/8–1855). His daughters could be the ‘Miss Kyles’ recorded at Braidlie in the 1830s. Andrew (1805/6–91) farmer at Dinlabyre and Midtodhills near Carlisle. He was farmer at Dinlabyre in 1851, when he is recorded farming 140 acres ‘arabl, of Moor N. Known’ and employing 5 labourers. His wife was Elizabeth, who died in 1808, aged 90. Their children included: Margaret (1841/2–1908); William (1842/3–1903); Mary Anne (1844/5–1922); James; Jane (1850–96); and Elizabeth (1853/4–1924). He died in Inverness-shire and the family are buried at Ettleton. Arthur (18th/19th C.) farmer at Braidlie in Castleton Parish. He was listed at ‘Broadlee’ in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’. He was also listed as head of household there in 1835–38. He was probably related to Andrew, who was farmer at Braidlie in 1797. He could be the same Arthur who was farmer at South Greenholm in Castleton Parish in 1841. David (18th C.) resident of Melrose. In 1776 he married Betty Kedie, daughter of Hawick baker John, the marriage being proclaimed in both parishes. They had several children in Melrose. In 1782 his daughter Betty died in Hawick. David (1777–1861) farmer at Broadlee in Castleton Parish. He was son of Andrew and Jean Murray. In 1851 he was listed as farme of 2000 acres of moorland, employing 4 labourers. He married Betty Milligan. Their children included: Mina Crozier (b.1821); Elliott (b.1823); Jane; Andrew; and Anne (b.1833), Anne married shepherd William Glendinning. He is probably the ‘Davie Kyle’, breeder of Dandie Dinmonts, of whom a poem was written by ‘Habert Noble’ in 1861. He fathered a child with Jean Armstrong of Canonbie in 1832. David (b.c.1785) recorded as a ‘broker’ on the Fore Raw in 1841. His wife was Margaret. Francis ‘Frank’ (1818–c.1900) son of James and Janet. He was farmer at Hilliesland, taking over from his father as the Duke of Buccleuch’s tenant there in 1843. He was Cornet in 1845 and owned 74 High Street. His son John was also Cornet and farmed at the Wellogate. In 1851 he was listed at ‘4 High Street – F. Kyle’s’ (although 74 High Street is clearly meant), a farmer of 30 acres, employing 1 person. He was listed as a farmer on the High Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. He was one of the townspeople who recovered from cholera during the 1849 outbreak. He lived into his 80s and was the oldest living Cornet in the late 19th century. He turned out for the Friday at least as late as 1881. There is a photograph of him with the 1846 and 1897 Cornets; this makes him the earliest Cornet of whom we have a photograph. In 1847 he married Isabella Cairns and their children included: Agnes (‘Nancy’); Janet; Isabella; James; and John. George (18th/19th C.) farmer at New Headshaw, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Perhaps the same George was cottar in Castleside in 1762; he married Margaret Laidlaw and had several children baptised in Ashkirk Parish, including Thomas (b.1762), Agnes (b.1763), Mary (b.1765), Janet (b.1767), Isabel (b.1771), and Margaret (b.1775). James (1733/4–1813) weaver in Castleton Parish. He lived at Heughhead, where his wife and some children died. However, he moved to Newcastle, where he himself died. His wife was Agnes Armstrong, who died in 1803, aged 61. Their children included Margaret (1779/80–93). James John (d.bef. 1797) gardener in Hawick Parish. He witnessed a baptism for William Gledstains in 1761. He married Agnes Mitchellhill in 1751.
and she died in Hawick in 1797. Their children included: William (b.1757); John (b.1759); John (again, b.1760); Adam (b.1762); and Walter (b.1765). The witnesses in 1762 were Walter Cook and Thomas Cowan. Note that his forename is sometimes given as just ‘John’ and his wife’s surname sometimes as ‘Mitchel’. James (18th C.) gardener in Hawick Parish. He married Esther Scott and their children included: Agnes (b.1787); Esther (b.1789); John (b.1791); William (b.1794); Robert (b.1796); Beatrix (b.1798); and Adam (b.1802). The witnesses in 1791 were William (surely a close relative) and Thomas Brown. The death of his daughter Beatrix is recorded in Hawick in 1815. James (1752–98) flesher in Hawick. He paid the Horse Tax in 1792 and 1797. He married Mary Porteous (1753–1824). Their children included: Mary (b.1778), who died young; Helen (b.1780), also died young; John (b.1781) manufacturer in Hawick; Andrew (b.1784), who died aged 10; and Mary (again, b.1786), also died young. He is buried in old Wilton Cemetery. He may be the gradener James who witnessed a baptism for Thomas Brown and Beatrix Kyle in 1793. James (c.1780–c.1843) joiner and wood-turner of the High Street, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He is likely the Kyle recorded around 74 High Street on Wood’s 1824 map (but could be the other Kyle listed at No. 33), and at about the same place in the 1841 census. He probably also farmed at Hilliesland. His wife was Janet and their children included: Nancy; Francis, who became Cornet; and Janet. He may be the James recorded in about 1874 as owner of part of the former lands of Patrick Cunningham in Hawick (even if he was deceased by then). Jane (b.1783/4) proprietor of an inn in Newcastle in 1825/6, and explicitly of the Grapes Inn in 1837. This was situated at 16 Douglas Square. In 1851 she was recorded as a widow. She was living with her children William and Mary in 1841 and Mary in 1851. She was also at the Grapes Inn in 1852, although incorrectly listed as ‘Kyle’. She was probably Jean Foster, who married George and had children Betty (b.1806), William (b.1808), Fanny (b.1811), Margaret (b.1813), Mary (b.1815) and Georgina (b.1819). John (18th C.) mason in Hawick. He married Helen Beattie and their children included: Janet (b.1756); Robert (b.1759), also a mason; and Sarah (b.1762). The witnesses in 1759 were smiths James and Robert, who were probably related to his wife. He was deceased before his son Robert died in 1801. He could be the John who witnessed baptisms in 1772 for Thomas Lookup and in 1779 for wright James Hogg. John see James John. John (c.1744–1800) farmer at Heughhead, son of William and Betty Wilson. He was recorded at Heughhead in the Castleton Horse Tax Rolls in 1789–90. He and his father were probably the ‘Messrs Kyles, Heughheads’ who were taxed for having 3 non-working dogs in 1797. He married Agnes Murray, who died in 1806, aged 46. They had a daughter Isabel (d.1869). He was buried at Etterton. John (18th/19th C.) gardener at Cavers in 1797, when he was working for George Douglas. He was also recorded as gardener at Cavers in 1800. His children included: Mark (b.1798); Alexander (b.1800); and Thomas (b.1801). John (18th/19th C.) merchant of Hawick, who was the ‘royalist’ Cornet of the ‘Disputed Common Riding’ of 1809, selected by the Council, but opposed by the ‘Wesla Lads’. This was in objection to new rules imposed by the Council, restricting the Common Riding participants to a limited circle of invited guests. The ‘Wesla Lads’ instead appointed their own ‘rebel’ Cornet, John Tullie. Kyle had about 45 supporters, half of whom were said to be strangers, and they were hissed and cursed at by the crowds. He may be the John born to James and Mary Porteous in Hawick in 1781. He may also be the same John who was a member of the Curling Club in 1812. It is possible he is the grocer and spirit dealer of the High Street who was recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory or the stocking manufacturer of the High Street – ‘...Elect a trader ca’d John Kyle, Massy in iz merchant style’ [MB]. John (1781–1851) son of butcher James, he was hosiery manufacturer of the early 1800s, with firm John Kyle & Co. operating on the High Street. He may be the same John who was appointed as Cornet during the disputed year of 1809. ‘John & James Kyle’ was listed on the High Street among hosiery manufacturers in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. In the 1841 census he is living with James and Mary, probably both younger siblings. Mary Ann, who is listed as house proprietor and hosier on the High Street on the 1851 census, is probably the same sister; she was on Bridge Street in 1861. He may have been son of James and Mary Porteous. John (1791–1866) gardener at Wilton Lodge for 50 years, he was also a Trustee and elder of the Relief Kirk. In 1851 his address was recorded as ‘Wilton Lodge Garden House’. His wife was Margaret, and children included Helen and James. John (18th/19th C.) grocer and spirit dealer on the High Street, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. John ‘the Nether Wulton Youth’ (1827–1900) son of Alexander and Jane (or Janet) Reid, he was born at Netherwitton, Northumberland, and his father was originally from Kelso. His family moved to Hawick when he was about 10. He was known as a great runner in his younger days, hence his nickname. His brothers were William, Thomas and Richard (who was a foreman skinner in Galashiels). He worked all his life with John Laing & Sons, becoming a hosiery manager. He held many positions associated with the Common Riding organisation, and was Acting Father in 1872 for his own son. He attended his 59th Common Riding dinner in 1899, this being said to be a record. He was also a keen Mason, being Master of Lodge 111. On Old Year’s Night 1847 he married Margaret Hall from Eskdalemuir, and she died in 1904, aged 76. Their children were: Alexander, Cornet in 1872; James Hall, frame- smith, who married Jane Little; John, engineer in Bloemfontein, South Africa; Mary, who married Robert Millar; and William, who died in infancy. John (1829–1909) son of William and Robina Cavers. He was a carter, agricultural labourer and ploughman in Castleton. In 1860 he married Mary (1836–1931), daughter of John Armstrong and Janet Glendinning. Their children were: Janet (1860–1908); William (b.1836); Robina (1865–1952); Agnes (1868–82); and John Armstrong (1871–81). The family are buried in Ettleton Cemetery, next to Andrew (d.1891). John (19th C.) son of Francis. He was a farmer who was Cornet in 1885. It is said that his year saw the beginning of the resurgence of interest in the ceremonial side of the Common Riding, with the Council resolving to officially support the events. He may be the farmer John whose property at 74 High Street was demolished to make way for the Pavillion Theatre. John (1871–1958) born in Hawick, son of a fine art dealer Andrew, and Agnes Waugh. He left the High School in 1885, having won the Queen’s Prize for drawing. He worked for 8 years as a watchmaker and jeweller, then got an assistant teaching position in Lancashire, and finally won a scholarship to the Royal College of Art in London. After 3 year’s of study, he travelled in Europe, taught at Huddersfield technical College and in Alloa and emigrated to Canada in 1905, becoming the Art Supervisor for City Schools in Vancouver. He was later described as ‘an outstanding educationalist and one of the most influential men in the history of British Columbia Arts and Crafts’. He was one of the founders of the British Columbia Society of Fine Arts, started the first art night classes in Vancouver and was also instrumental in starting correspondence courses. He was Director of Technical Education for the Province of British Columbia 1913–38. He is also credited with being the first to sponsor an exhibition by Emily Carr. He wrote and illustrated 3 books on teaching woodwork, lettering, and metalwork, ‘Design for Industrial Arts’ (1931). He married Nellie Hadfield, an English-born school teacher in 1920 and they had at least 2 daughters and a son. He established an educational trust for the High School, the Andrew, Agnes and John Kyle Bequest Fund. Robert (d.1801) mason in Hawick. He was son of John, who was also a mason. His wife Betty Turnbull died in Hawick in 1815. Thomas (16th C.) one of the men indicted in 1552 for involvement in the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Brancholme and Buccleuch. It is unclear how he was related to other Kyles. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded at Hummelknowes in 1729 and 1731. His children included: Mark (b.1729); and John (b.1731). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His name is written ‘Cayle’ in 1737 when he witnessed a baptism for Walter Scott in Wilton. He married Marion Sliman and their children included Isobel (b.1739). Thomas (19th C.) brother of John, William and Richard. He was a commercial traveller for John Laing & Sons, and his son was also Thomas. Thomas ‘Tom’ (1830s–1921) son of Thomas, he worked for John Laing & Sons for about 60 years, mainly as a commercial traveller. He was secretary of the Trades Committee for several years, Clerk of the Course at the Moor for 11 years and member of the Race Committee and Ceremonial Committee. He was known as a good cricketer and was a keen supporter of Hawick & Wilton Cricket Club. He celebrated his golden wedding anniversary with his wife Jane Ferguson, daughter of Mrs. Burns of the Crown Hotel. William (c.1709–98) born at Burmemouth in Castleton Parish, son of William and Isobell Moffet. He was tenant at Heughhead. He and his son were probably the ‘Messrs Kyles, Heughheads' who were taxed for having 3 non-working dogs in 1797. He married Betty Wilson, who died in 1786, aged 74. Their children included: John (1743/4–1800): George (1756/7–1819); and 2 sons who died in infancy. William (18th/19th C.) resident at Newcastleton, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He may be the ‘William, senior, Castleton’ who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821 along with ‘William, junior’ (presumably his son). William (18th/19th C.) baker in Lilliesleaf, as recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. William (18th/19th C.) resident of London who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He probably had a local connection. William (18th/19th C.) listed as ‘William, junior, Castleton’ in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ along with ‘William, senior’. He may be the same William as the flesher listed in Newcastle-in-Pigot’s 1837 directory. William (b.1794) son of James and Esther Scott. He was a gardener living on the Sandbed (actually at 6 Buccleuch Street) in at least 1841–61. In 1852 he was listed as a greengrocer on Buccleuch Street. He lived with his sisters Mary and Agnes, and nieces and nephews Helen, James, John and Margaret. In 1861 he was recorded as a market gardener. William (19th C.) recorded at Greenholm among the gentry living near Newcastleton in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He could be the same William of Greenholm recorded dissolving the drapers John Armstrong and Company in Glasgow in 1839. William (1796–1890) carter and farmer at Leaugh in Castleton Parish. In 1851 he is recorded as ‘Farmer of about 300 acres more or less’. He married Robina, daughter of John Cavers and Jane Douglas; she died in 1877, aged 71. Their children included: Agnes (1827–82), who married Andrew Mitchellhill; John (1829–1909); James (1830–46); William (1833–1909), farmer; Thomas (1835–1914); Jane (b.1837), who married Matthew Murray; Betty (b.1839); Henry (b.1843) and another Henry (b.1845), who both died young; James (b.1847), a shepherd; George (1850–1908), a builder; and Mary (b.1853), who died at Netherraw. The family are buried at Ettleton Cemetery. William (1829/30–1904) brother of John, Thomas and Richard. He was a commission agent. William (1833–1909) eldest son of William. He farmed at Leaugh, like his father before him. He and his brother Thomas were subscribers to David Anderson’s book of verse in 1868. He died at Leaugh and is buried at Ettleton. William Elliot ‘Willie’ (19th/20th C.) son of Alexander, he worked as a joiner and then coal merchant, and was probably the most famous Hawick rugby player of his day. He played forward for Hawick R.F.C. for many years, retiring after being concussed in the final of the 1913 Hawick Sevens. He came out of retirement during and after WW1 and also played for Scotland. In his first international match he was the only forward not educated at a Public School. He was Cornet in 1905 (formerly ‘Cayle’, ‘Kyel’, ‘Kyll’ and variants).

kyles (kilz) n., pl., arch. the game played with small skittles (James Murray wrote that this was played in Hawick ‘in the early part of the 19th c.’; possibly from Old French ‘quille’).

Kyle’s Close (kils-klos) n. passageway off the High Street in the mid-19th century, position uncertain. There are Kyles labelled on Wood’s 1824 map at about Nos. 33 and 74: the one opposite the Cross Wynd is clearly marked as a passageway.

Kyle’s Gairden ( kilz-gær-din) n. name used in the late 19th century for land near the Playing Fields, where exactly??.

kylie (ki-lee) n., poet. a small Highland cow – ‘All the grass he had on Closses would not maintain a cayley cow … ’[C&L1767], ‘And they keep, when they can, oot by Frae the onset o’ him and his men, Sae it’s rare that kylies or kye Are harried frae Harden Glen’[TK] (there are spelling variants; more usually kyloe).

kyloe (kl-ö) n., arch. a small Highland cow – ‘A blackie, as I watched it grew twa horns as big’s a Kyloe coo’[TD], ‘He coungers our kyloes, and causes our kebs, And a fearfu’ auld carl is Johnie Nip-nebs’[HSR], ‘Of late years a considerable number of Kyloes, bought at the Falkirk trysts, have been wintered in the parish’[RAN] (also written with a capital ‘Kyloe’; sometimes kylie).

labey (lā-bee) n., arch. the flap of a man’s coat.
the Labour Club (thu-lā-bur-klub) n. the Hawick branch of the Labour Party has never had a very large membership. Many consider that the Burns Club has replaced it, at least in a social capacity. The club used to meet in rooms above the Queen’s Head. Minute books exist from 1918–55 and for the Women’s Section 1924–53.
labourers (lā-bo-ruz) n., pl. manual workers, particular those working on farms. Formerly this was the occupation of a large fraction of the local population. Farm-servants were usually hired by the year if they were married, and by the half-year if single. Day labourers were hired for shorter periods. Tradesmen, such as masons and carpenters were paid more.
Labour Exchange (lā-bur-iks-chānj) n. until 1940 this was located at 32 Commercial Road (more recently the Y.M. clubrooms). For the latter half of the 20th century it was located in the purpose-built building at the corner of the Little Haugh by the river, which is now a nightclub.

Oot on a simmer morning wi the airly sun in eer een’ [DH].
lade (lād) n. a watercourse, especially one that carries water to a mill, also called a dam – ‘they decided ti fill in the auld mill lade’ (sometimes called a ‘mill lead’).
lade see laid
lades (lādz) n., pl. watercourses built to supply power to mills. Those in Hawick at times diverted more water than was flowing through the rivers, while at other times had a reputation for being filthy. Over time large sections of some were covered over, but some parts remained open. Signs still remain of the several that were built in Hawick. They include: the first lade off the Slitrig (the ‘Dam’ of the Backdamgate etc.), which ran the water wheel for Hawick Mill; the later lade in Lynnwood; the old lade in Wilton called Wilton Dam or Roughheugh Dam (with the water diverted by the Cauld) and its extension through Wilton Glebe lands in 1827–28; the lade along Teviot Road; and the lade used by Weendland Mill. A survey was carried out of the complex of lades off Commercial Road in 1999/2000, with 2 of them being bricked up afterwards. A section of the lade in Weensland is still visible near Oliver Park. There were also lades constructed for most of the mills in the countryside around Hawick. These include a channel from Wilton Burn passing the farm of Netherhall, the one at Wilton Dean.
Ladhope (law-dup) n. farm in the Yarrow valley, between Whithope and Sundhope. It was a Crown property from about 1456, being assigned to Patrick Crichton of Cranston in 1488 and Walter Scott (probably of Howpalsy) in 1490 and 1492. Dicksons were recorded there in 1494/5, accused of rieving crimes. In 1541 the lands were occupied by Robert of Howpasley, paying £24 yearly. Walter Scott ‘of Landhoip’ is recorded in 1599. Walter Scott in Ladhope was recorded as deceased in 1671 (it is ‘Ladhop’ in 1456, 1488 and 1490, ‘Laidhope’ in 1492, ‘laidhop’ and in 1494/5 ‘Laudhope’ in 1541).
the Ladies’ Circle (thu-lā-deez-sir-kul) n. a charitable and social organisation, started in 1930, the sister organisation of the Round Table. The Hawick organisation??. the Ladies’ Clothin Society (thu-lā-deez-klo-thin-su-sl-i-ee) n. local charitable organisation, providing clothing for the poor, active in Hawick in the late 19th century. It was run by Mrs. Palmer Douglas and Mrs. Turnbull of Ormiston.
ladies’ gairtens (lā-deez-gār-tnz) n., pl., arch. the striped ribbon grass, Phalaris arundinacea picta.
the Ladies’ Pool (lā-deez-pool) n. former name for a shallow pool below the Cauld, on the north side of the Teviot (with the ‘Cat’s Pool’ being on the other side), used for swimming in summer. The name was in use in the mid-20th century when the river course almost split in two below the Cauld. Boys who went in that side were called ‘jessies’ (also sometimes ‘Lady’s Pool’).

ladies’ purse (lā-deez-purs) n., arch. the shepherd’s purse, Capsella bursa-pastoris, also used for flowers of the calcelaria.

the Ladies’ Purse (thu-lā-deez-purs) n. race held at the Common Riding from at least 1834 to the 1860s. For example in 1861 it was one of only 3 named races, with the others being races for riding gear etc.

ladies’ purses (lā-deez-pur-seez) n., pl. arch. flowers of the calcelaria.

Ladies’ Seat (lā-deez-sā) n. Ladies’ Seat, southern part of Todshawhaugh Hill, on the southern side of the Borthwick valley, south of Todshawhaugh farm. It reaches a height of 264 m.

Ladies’ Slack (lā-deez-slawk) n. pass between Heip Hill and Welsh’s Hill, just to the north-east of Whitebaugh farm (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Ladies’ Well (lā-deez-wel) n. spring just to the east of Knowesouth. It may be the ‘Lady’s well, or Our Lady’s Well’ described in 1837, and suggested perhaps to be associated with Jedburgh Abbey. The Land Tax Rolls of 1811 includes mention of ‘Lady’s Well Meadow’ being part of Newton, adjacent to Lanton.

Ladies’ Edge (lā-deez-ej) n. former name for lands near Newton in Bedrule Parish, listed ‘as Lady’s-edge’ in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls.

ladlie (lā-deez-ee) n., arch. a small ladle.

the Lads (thu-lawdz) n. name sometimes used to refer to followers of the Cornet, particularly the unmarried and/or younger ones. Since 1961 the upstairs gallery at the Colour Bussing has been reserved for ‘the Lads’.

the Lads’ Gallery (thu-lawdz-gaw-lu-ree) n. middle section upstairs in the Town Hall, specifically during the Colour Bussing ceremony, when it is taken up by the Cornet’s supporters. Each ‘Lad’ has a ribbon pinned on him by one of the Maids of Honour. It has become traditional for programmes to be made into paper aeroplanes and thrown down towards the Maids of Honour at the end of the proceedings.

Ladshaw Sike (lad-shaw-sik) n. small stream in the upper Borthwick valley. It rises on Ladshaw Fell, joining Gavel Sike and Stock Grain to become part of the headwaters of the Howpasley Burn.

Lady (lā-dee) n. former house on Hermitage Water, located on the north side of the valley between the Castle and Bridle, at the foot of what is now Lady’s Knowe (marked on Blaeu’s c.1654 map as ‘Ladā’).

Lady Appotside (lā-dee-aw-pi’-sād) n. name used to refer to Lady Margaret Lorraine of Harwood and Appotside.

Lady Day (lā-dee-dā) n. Feast of the Annunciation, 25th March, formerly the beginning of the New Year. The phrase is recorded in the local Commissioners’ Court for 1622, shortly after the beginning of the year had been shifted to 1st January. It was used to denote the end of the hiring period beginning with WhitSunday.

Lady Highchester (lā-dee-bl-ches-tur) n. title of Margaret Hamilton, wife of Sir Gideon Scott of Highchester (or ‘Haychester’).

Lady Howpaslot (lā-dee-how-pas-lo’) n. name used to refer to Lady Scott of Howpasley.

Ladykirk (lā-dee-kirk) n. village on the Tweed in Berwickshire. Originally Upsettlington, its name was changed around 1500 by James IV after he nearly drowned there, it being a popular crossing point for armies. The mansion there was built in 1799, but demolished in the 1930s and replaced by a new house in the 1960s (it is ‘Lady K’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map).

Ladyland (lā-dee-lawnd) n. former name for lands in the eastern part of Hawick. They are referred to in a charter of ‘Soltracroft’ (i.e. the Trinitylands) in 1557, which is described as having Ladyland to the east. This means the lands were somewhere east of Trinity, perhaps around what was later called Weensland. They are again mentioned in 1565/6 as being adjacent to the Trinitylands. A 1627 valuation of Hawick Parish states that ‘there is a land, called Ladyland, possessed by Sir Walter Scott of Goulidians, ther are sick lands as are pretendit to belong to the kirk’, suggesting a connection with St. Mary’s Kirk; the lands are valued at ‘4 bolls in stok, ane boll in teynd’. In a 1696 sasine of Charles Scott of Crumhaugh and Goldielands we find ‘Trinity lands’ included, and it seems likely this was the same piece of land, taking on the more generic name of the larger adjacent lands.

Ladyland (lā-dee-lawnd) n. former piece of land in the Barony of Minto. It was formerly called ‘Hassendean Ladylands’ and owned by Douglas of Cavers; part valued at £18 was sold to the Duke of Roxburghe before 1743 and incorporated into Minto Parish, while another 6-acre part valued at £16 was sold to the Duke of Buccleuch in 1745 and also incorporated into Minto. It is described in 1683 as being 4 acres commonly called Ladyland, inherited by Gilbert Elliot along with Craigend and Deanfoot. In 1811 it was ‘Hassendean Lady Lands’; the 2 separate parts were still then owned by the Duke of Roxburghe and by the Duke of Buccleuch. The name suggests that the lands (like Lanton Ladylands) were associated with a church for which Douglas of Cavers was once parton (see also Oor Lady Land).

Ladylands see Oor Lady Land

Ladylands (lā-dee-lawndz) n. former name for land near Lanton. They were valued at £10 in the 18th century and ‘formerly stated in Cavers parish’. The 1811 Land Tax Rolls describes how these lands had been in the Barony of Cavers, and were ‘Langtown Lady Lands, now in the parish of Jedburgh’. The lands were probably connected with ‘Ladies’ Well’ and ‘Lady’s Edge’, which were once part of the lands of Newton. Like ‘Hassendean Ladyland’ in Minto Parish, these lands were probably once associated with a church for which Douglas of Cavers was patron, both formerly being contained in the Barony of Cavers (see also Lanton Lady Lands).

Ladylaw (lā-dee-law) n. another name for Ladylaw Hoose and the area of eastern Sunnyhill around it.

the Ladylaw Centre (thu-lā-dee-law-sen’-ur) n. multi-purpose commercial building converted from part of the former Wilson and Glenny’s factory on Wilton Path after it closed in 1980. The complex included a furniture and carpet warehouse, small companies, offices and a bistro, which opened in 1983. It was never fully used and closed about 10 years later, being then demolished, and is now the site of a supermarket. Only foundations are left, along with the Bath Street Centre (part of Borders College).

Ladylaw Hoose (lā-dee-law-hos) n. house constructed above Langlands Road on Rosalee Brae for manufacturer John Wilson sometime before 1846, perhaps as early as 1830. It was the first house built in Sunnyhill, in an area of the old Langlands estate formerly known as Roughheugh, and to which it later gave its name. The name itself was probably invented by John Wilson. The house can be seen as the only one in the Sunnyhill area on the painting of Hawick from the Mote in about 1850. It was built in an Italianate style and had a north wing added in 1902, probably by J.P. Alison. Alison lived in the house himself and installed a fireplace in the central hallway, with an inscription commemorating how he survived a gas explosion at the house in 1910. In 1953 the house was split into 2 dwellings. It is a grade B listed building.

Ladylaw Mills (lā-dee-law-milz) n. textile mill in the Langlands or Roughheugh area, for a long time in the Wilson family. It was built for Wilson & Watson’s, then taken over by William Wilson in 1819. In 1851 it passed to John Wilson & Sons and in 1876 to Wilson & Glenny’s, with whom it remained for a century. A water wheel was installed by Melrose’s in 1885 and repaired in 1920, when it was used along with steam engines. Following a major fire in 1959, the mill was substantially rebuilt in 1961, but closed in 1980, to be converted into the Ladylaw Centre and later replaced by Lidl supermarket (also sometimes singular ‘Mill’).

Ladylaw Place (lā-dee-law-plis) n. row of houses built from 1841 on the north side of the western end of what is now Princes Street, named after the nearby Ladylaw House. The Wilton branch of the Co-op was here in the mid-1900s. The name vanished when the area was reconstructed around 1971 and renamed part of Princes Street. North of Ladylaw Place there were allotments in the mid-to-late 19th century, and before that the first open field was called ‘the Pedlar’s Field’.

the Lady Riders (th-lā-dee-rī-durz) n. Hawick Lady Rider’s Association, set up shortly after the 1996 Common Riding, amid the furore over whether women should be allowed to ride during the Ride-outs and the Common Riding itself.

lady’s gairtens (lā-gār-tinz) n., pl., arch. ribon grass, Phalaris arundinacea (also gairtens).

Lady’s Knowe (lā-deez-now) n. small hill to the west of Hermitage Castle, reaching a height of 223m. There is a settlement enclosure on the east side, including the remains of a later farmstead and with a trackway leading downhill from it. The slopes of the hill are covered with evidence of early field systems, including cultivation terraces and rig lines.

the Lady’s Pool (thu-lā-deez-pool) n. former name for a pool in the Slitrig near Lynnwood. It is mentioned as part of a story about ‘Yedie Broon’
Lady's Well

Lady's Pool

Lady's Scar (lā-deez-skawr) n. steep bank on the west side of the Liddel just north of Lea-haugh Cottage.

Lady's Sike (lā-deez-sik) n. stream that effectively forms the western part of the defences of Hermitage Castle, although it was diverted to join the Castle Sike and flow to the east. On the slope between this stream and Castle Sike there is a series of small cairns (the name presumably derives from the nearby chapel being dedicated to St. Mary).

Lady Stirches (lā-deez-stir-chez) n. name used formerly to refer to Mrs. Chisholme of Stirches.

Lady Symington (lā-dee-si-ming-tin) n. listed among the local landowners of the mid-to-late 17th century by James Wilson. Her name is written ‘Summington’. Her lands in Cavers Parish were valued at £200 in 1643, and in one transcription of the valuation rolls she is entered as ‘Anna McGill, Lady Summington’. Her name appears to be wrongly transcribed as ‘Lady Farnington’ in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. Since her name appears alongside that of Rev. Walter McGill, then she was surely related to the minister. Rev. The children of Sir James Douglas of Cavers with his 2nd wife (a daughter of Sir James McGill) were said to have taken the surname McGill in order to claim inheritance from their maternal grandfather. It is hence possible that she and Rev. Walter were brother and sister, or alternatively (and perhaps more likely, given the timing) they were brother-in-law and sister-in-law of Douglas of Cavers. She presumably married the Laird of Symington, but which one is not clear. By 1678 her lands in Cavers Parish were back in the hands of the Douglases of Cavers. In the 1663 Land Tax Rolls her name is mis-transcribed as ‘Farnington’.

Lady’s Well (lā-deez-wel) n. spring on the lands of Borthwickbrae. The 1859 Ordnance Survey Name Book describes it as ‘a well of excellent water’. It lies only about 500 m from the former chapel of Kirkborthwick, which was dedicated to the Virgin Mary.

Lady’s Well (lā-deez-wel) n. spring near Abbotrule church, presumably named after an association with ‘Our Lady’.

Lady’s Well (lā-deez-wel) n. spring lying between Wauchope and Templehall farms, close to the Wauchope Burn, in Hobkirk Parish.

Lady Synton (lā-deez-sin-in) n. name used for the wife of the Laird of Synton, particularly the widow Isobel Scott.

Lady Todrig (lā-dee-tōd-rig) n. former name used for the wife of the Laird of Todrig, i.e. Mrs. Scott.

Lady Whitslade (lā-dee-whi-slād) n. title used to refer to the wife of the Laird of Whit-slade (e.g. in 1707).

 lait (lād) pp., adj., arch. smeared with butter, tar or other substance, to protect from the weather or vermin (said of a sheep’s fleece, or the wool produced from it) – ‘Cheviot wool laid with tar and butter, per stone of 241bs. English, 10s. 7d.; ditto laid with turpentine, 14s. 2d. ...’ [RGJH].

 laidman (lād-mun) n., arch. a carter who works for a miller, delivering corn – ‘Aw mind the first barley mill in Ashkirk Mill, whan Aw was a young chap and the miller’s laidman there’ [BCM1880].

 laidner (lād-nur) n., arch. a larder, hence winter’s provisions, particularly referring to an animal slaughtered and cured for winter food – ‘The lands of meikle whitlaw sett by rentall right To Francis Gledstanes of Whitlaw during his lifet-yme for gentleman Srvice with ane fat mart at ladner tyme or price throf’ [Buc1692].

 Laidlaw (lād-law, -lu, -lee, -li) n. Adam (16th C.) recorded among Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII in 1544. His name was given as ‘Eddie Ladlay’ from Whiteside in Jedforest, and the only other Laidlaw named among a set of mostly Olivers was John of ‘Breerbushes’. Adam ‘Great Legs’ (16th C.) named along with Douglasses, Turnbulles, Shielis and others who were accused in 1590 of stealing livestock and goods from the tenants of Middleton. He may have been from Rulewater like some of the other men named. His name is recorded as ‘Eddie Ladalie Greteleges’. He was also ‘Eddie Ladley ‘great leges’’ in 1590 when accused, with David of ‘Antreahawghe’ and ‘Will the Lad’ Turnbull, of stealing sheep and injuring an Englishman. Additionally in 1590 he was accused along with David of Roughlee of stealing cattle from ‘Hefferlawe’. Presumably his nickname meant he had long legs, rather than good-looking legs! Adam ‘Adie’ (16th C.) listed in 1590 accused of raiding the English Warden’s tenants, along with Thomas of the Haugh, as well as Andrew Waugh of Wadeshill and others. He is also ‘Eddie’ when accused in 1590, along with Thomas of Haugh, of stealing a horse from Ralph Salkeld. It is possible he is the same man as ‘Great Legs’. Adam (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1656 his son James with Bessie Grieve was baptised in Hawick. This child was born illegitimately, with witnesses John (surely a relative) and James Grieve (probably related to Bessie Grieve). Adam (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Veitch and their children included an unnamed son (b.1660). Adam (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Marion Laidlaw and their children included Walter (b.1669) and Margaret (b.1673). Adam (17th C.) recorded as being ‘in Little Cavers’ in 1684 when he was listed among a huge number of people declared as fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. Adam (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isobel ‘Andison’ (presumably ‘Anderson’) and their children included: Alexander (b.1689). Adam (17th C.) cottar at Gatehousecote according to the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret ‘Leadon’ (probably Leyden) and their children included Robert (b.1701). Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He is recorded in Southfield in 1711. He married Janet Fletcher and their children included: David (b.1711); and Adam (b.1715). The witnesses in 1711 were Walter Scott in Newbigging and James Scott in Nether Southfield. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He is recorded at the Marklar in 1716 when his daughter Janet was baptised. Adam (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Helen Bell and their children included: Violet (b.1729); Simon (b.1730); and William (b.1734). Adam (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His son James was baptised in 1731. Adam Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Wester Burnfoot in 1736 and Galalaw in 1747. He married Violet Bonar and their children included: Thomas (b.1736); William (b.1738); Helen (b.1741); Margaret (b.1743); and Violet (b.1747). The witnesses in 1736 were Archibald and John Scott and in 1747 were John and Thomas Scott. Adam (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Marion Veitch and their children included: Adam (b.1754). Adam (18th C.) paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1787–90. Rev. Adam (1753/4–1834) licensed by the Presbytery of Selkirk in 1778, he was ordained as minister at South Shields in 1782, and promoted to St. James’, Silver Street, Newcastle in 1784. He was presented to Southdean Parish in 1809 in competition with John Richmond, who was preferred. However, he became minister at Kirkton in 1818 (although it is unclear what he did in the interim), where he remained until his death. In 1820 he performed a baptism in Cavers (probably at Caerlenrig). In 1786 he married Mary Laidlaw, who died in 1849. Their children included William, Adam, Thomas, John Whitfield, Robert and David. He could be the Adam, student of divinity who witnessed a lease for Simon in Boos Mill in 1773 (suggesting a relationship). Adam (b.1814/5) mason who worked with his uncle Andrew Rodgie Michie. He was disabled in an accident, and had to give up being a builder, becoming a coal agent instead. He is listed in Slater’s 1852 directory as a coal agent at the Station for Edmondston Colliery. After his uncle’s death in 1854 he ran his own builders firm. They built Heronhill and several other local villas and started work on the Exchange Buildings, although the first arch caved in and the firm was replaced. He married Margaret Cathrae in Wilton in 1838. In 1841 he was living at the North Toll Bar. He later lived at Kirkhouse in Wilton Parish and then farmed at Ancrum Craigs. His children included: Adam, who was a clerk; Thomas C., who carried on the farm; John Michie; James, who farmed at Trowmill; and Marjorie (or Margaret Michie), who married a farmer named Elliot, later married D. McBurnie Watson, and was the first librarian of Hawick Public Library. One of his children died in 1838. Alexander (15th/16th C.) recorded in Edgerston in 1502. He was convicted for comming with Rutherfords and Grahamslaws who were fugitives and for the murder of Patrick Hepburn, with Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst as surety. Alexander (16th C.) part of an inquest held in Jedburgh in 1533. He was probably local, like all the other men on the panel. Alexander (16th C.) tenant in Falside in 1541. His part of the farm was valued at 25s. He was probably related to Robert, who was also tenant there. Alexander (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Helen Laidlaw in 1765 and their children included: David (b.1767); Violet (b.1769); and Margaret (b.1773); and Margaret (again, b.1777). Alexander (18th C.) married Isobel Thomson in Wilton Parish in 1768. Alexander (18th/19th C.) married Nelly Hobkirk in Roberton in 1802. Alexander (d.1842) tenant farmer at Bowerhope in the Yarrow valley. He survived being buried for 14 hours following an avalanche when he was a shepherd. He was a good friend of the Ettrick Shepherd, contributed to the ‘Scots Magazine’ and wrote essays for the Highland Society. He was related to William Laidlaw, who wrote ‘Lucy’s Flittin’. Alexander (b.c.1807) farm worker for Ebenezer Beattie at Oakwood. In 1825 Sir Walter Scott writes of an incident in which he came across some little people dressed in strange clothes, sitting under some trees near the Ettrick. Convinced that he was seeing the ‘fairy court’, he summoned neighbours, who also beheld the same sight. However, it turned out that these were puppets which had been stolen from the belongings of a man who had just given a puppet show at a fair in Selkirk, and had been abandoned in the countryside by the thieves. Andrew (16th C.) tenant in Wadeshill in Jedforest in 1541, paying 22 shillings yearly. Andrew (17th C.) resident at Branxholme Town according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Andrew (c.1725–81) tenant farmer at Gair, in Ettrick Parish. He previously lived at Glenkerry and perhaps also at Ropelawshire, where one of his children was born. In 1746 in Westerkirk he married Agnes Glendinning, who died in 1792, aged 67; she was daughter of Archibald Glendinning and Jane Beatty. Their children were: Walter (b.1747); Robert (b.1749); Archibald (b.1751); Jean (b.1753); John (1755–69); William (1758–62); James (b.1760); Elizabeth (b.1762); William (again, b.1765); John (again, 1769–99), buried at Robertson; and Andrew (b.1774). He is buried at Teviothead. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Askirk Parish. His wife was Isabel and their children included: Charles (b.1767). Andrew (17th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His wife was Jean Elliot and their children included Barbara (b.1797). Perhaps the same Andrew was recorded in a legal case in 1814, involving Hawick lawyer Gilbert Amos. Barrie (1921/2–2004) international rugby referee from Hawick. He played for Hawick Harlequins. Bennet (16th C.) listed as tenant in Northbank in 1541 along with ‘Bello’ and Thomas, paying 22 shillings yearly. His first name is recorded as ‘Bennete’. Charles Gray (1804/5–73) youngest son of William, he was named after the evangelist preacher of the Tabernacle. He lived on the Loan (at about No. 14 in 1841). In 1851 he was a widower lodging at 5 Mid Raw with 3 of his children and in 1861 was still there (with his brother-in-law James Harkness). He married Hannah Harkness (who died in 1849), niece of ‘Pawkie’ Paterson. Their children included Margaret, William, Ellen (or Helen, who died in infancy), Thomas, George, a second Ellen (whose son was Walter Laidlaw) and Charles. Daniel McGowan (1826–64) younger son of William and Jane Fisher. He was a commercial traveller and partner in the family hosiery business. He built Hopehill, intending to be married, but died aged 39. There is a portrait of him. David (16th C.) tenant at ‘Anterhauch’ (i.e. Antroch) according to a rental roll of Jedforest in 1541. He was probably an ancestor of the later David there. David (16th C.) resident at Roughlee when he was among men accused in 1590 of raiding into England 2 years earlier. He is ‘Davie Ladley of the Roughley’, and he is listed along with Adie ‘Great Legs’. Additionally he was accused in 1590 of stealing horses from John Salkeld, along with ‘Rennye’, Thomas of Haugh and Steven of the Bank. David ‘Cuddy’s Davie’ (16th C.) listed among Elliots, Armstrongs, Turnbuls and Croziers, accused in 1590 of rieving from the Laird of ‘Troghwen’ and Hedley of ‘Garret Sheills’. His name is recorded as ‘Davie Laidlea Cuddis Davie’, but it is unclear who his father was. David (16th C.) described as ‘Davie Ladlay of Antreahawghe’ in 1590. He was accused of stealing sheep and injuring an Englishman, along with ‘Adie Great Legs’ and ‘Will the Lad’ Turnbull. It seems likely that ‘Antreahawghe’ is Antroch in the Jed valley. David of Sunnyside (16th C.) recorded in 1590 when he was accused (along with Rutherfords, Croziers, Elliots and Armstrongs) of rieving from Woodburn in the previous year. His name is written ‘Davie Ladley of the Sonnye syde’. He probably lived around the Jed valley. David (17th C.) tenant at Jedhead in Southdean Parish according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. David (18th C.) farmer at Highchesters. He was related to John Leyden's father, his sister Margaret probably being Leyden's paternal grandmother. He married Isabella Armstrong, who claimed descent from the Armstrongs of Gilnockie; she died in Hawick in 1808, when he was already deceased. Their children included: Robert (b.1753); and Isabella (b.1764), who married Robert Grieve. David (18th C.) resident at Mabonlaw in 1772 when his son David was baptised in Roberton Parish. Agnes (b.1768) was probably also his daughter. David (18th/19th C.) agricultural labourer. In 1841 and 1851 he was at Whithope in Roberton Parish. He married Helen Hart in 1825 and their children included: Robert; George; Isabella (b.1831); Helen; Margaret; and Davina (b.1838). David (b.c.1810) educated at New Mill and Edinburgh, he was Schoolmaster at Newmill from 1837. He is probably the teacher David, living with Thomas and his family at Branxholme Loch in 1841. He may be the David, son of John, born in Minto Parish in 1808. David (1907–2003) born in 1841. He may be the David, son of John, born in Minto Parish in 1808. David (1907–2003) born near Hawick, and educated at the High School and then Nottingham University, he worked in accountancy, manufacturing and other jobs. He founded the first Scout troop in Hawick, and travelled to Switzerland for the very first Scout Jamboree. He moved to Cornwall, where he spent most of his life, where he was an enthusiastic Rotarian. He married Elsie in 1936. Douglas (b.1810–77) son of William and Helen Douglas, he was from the Rulewater Laidlaws. He was a licensed grocer in Hawick in the early 1800s and apparently known for selling good whisky. He is listed on the Tower Knowe in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He is recorded at about 3 Tower Knowe in the 1841 census, living with Joan and Jessie, probably his sisters. Probably before 1851 he emigrated to the Toronto area, where he married Elizabeth Ross and had a daughter Mary Douglas. He had a general store in Holland Landing and in about 1853 went to Lefroy, where he traded in grain. George (1797–1844) born in Hawick, he emigrated to America. They lived in Delaware County, New York, then moved to Niagara Township in Canada, and from about 1843 set up a farm at Caistor in Lincoln County. In 1817 he married Margaret Rae (d.1846). Their children were: William (1818–53), born in Hawick; Jenny (b.1819), who died in infancy; Jane (1821–63), born in the U.S.A.; Maria (1823–1913); Margaret (b.1824), who died in infancy; Margaret (again, 1825–95); and James (b.1826). Helen see Nelly. Helen (17th C.) listed as resident at Outerside on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Isabel ‘Belle’ (16th C.) tenant in Northbank in 1541, along with Thomas and Bennet. Isabella (b.1865) daughter of William, farmer at Weensmoor, and Agnes Purdon. She was recorded as a pupil teacher in Hawick in 1881 and in 1891 was in Midlothian working as a G.P.O. Clerk. She worked for the Post Office in London. Jackie (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1601 as ‘Jaquie Laidlaw’ who he was part of the raid on the Kers in Jedburgh by a group of Turnbells and their associates. Jacob (17th C.) recorded at Antroch on the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. James (15th/16th C.) listed among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Branxholme) pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran. His surname is recorded as ‘Laidlo’. It is possible he is the same man as ‘Jacobi Laidlaw’ listed as a debtor in the Exchequer Rolls for Selkirkshire in 1501, along with David Scott ‘de Franscurni’ and Adam Scott, with Walter Scott of Tushielaw responsible for their pledges. James (16th C.) tenant in Letham in 1541, along with Lawrence, probably his father or brother. They paid 22 shillings yearly, with Thomas renting another part of the farm. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Helen Scott and their children included Malie (b.1651). James (b.1648), with no mother’s name given, may also be his son. The witnesses in 1651 appear to be William and Walter Laidlaw. James (17th C.) owner of quarter of the lands of Fairnielees in Hobkirk Parish, recorded in a contract of ‘wadset’ of 1647. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Hislop and their children included William (b.1651). The witnesses were William Elliot and William Dickson. James (17th C.) recorded as one of the tenants in Falside in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. Robert was also listed there, and so probably a relative. James (17th C.) recorded as tenant in ‘Wadsholm’ (probably near Wadesshill) in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. James (17th C.) tenant in Kirkton. He is listed in 1684 among those declared as fugitives for being a Covenant. James (17th/18th C.) tenant in Harwood on Teviot. He was recorded there in 1700. In 1699 in Hawick he married Margaret Hislop from Castleton Parish. Their children included: James (b.1700), baptised in Hawick. He is probably the James in Branxholme Town whose son Andrew was baptised in 1702. The witnesses in 1700 were Adam Elliott of Arkleton and William Clerk in Colterscleuch and in 1702 were James Ogilvie (gardener at Branzholm), Henry Orrock and Alexander Hislop (probably related to his wife). Perhaps the same James married ‘Mary Hiselip’ in Kirkton Parish in 1716. He could be the James who witnessed a baptism for James Hislop in 1698. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He was recorded as a herd in Ashkirk itself in 1715. He married Margaret Hislop and their son James was baptised in 1715. It is possible he is the same James from Hawick who married Margaret Hislop. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. His son Adam was baptised in Roberton parish in 1703. Walter (b.1705) may also have been his son. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Deanbrae in 1716. He married Bessie Armstrong in Cavers in 1701. His children baptised in Caves included: William (b.1702); Margaret (b.1703); Walter (b.1705); Walter (again, b.1706); Janet (b.1708); James (b.1711); Thomas (b.1716); John (b.1718); Walter (b.1721); Robert (b.1724); and Agnes (b.1724). James (17th/18th C.) recorded as ‘coater’ (i.e. cottar) at Branxholm Park in 1708. He married Margaret Scott and their children, baptised in Hawick Parish, included: Adam (b.1703); and James (b.1708). The witnesses were Walter Grieve ‘in Park’ and James Grieve in Commonside. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His marriage is recorded in 1715, with no wife’s name given. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, recorded at the Marklair in 1722. Perhaps the same James married Marion Laidlaw in Hawick in 1721. He had an unnamed child baptised in Roberton in 1722. James (18th C.) tenant at Berryfell in the 1730s, where several of his children were born. He leased Over Cassock from Walter Scott of Harden in 1738. He married Margaret Mack in Cavers Parish in 1733 and their children probably included: an unnamed son (b.1734); Helen (b.1736); James (b.1738); James (again, b.1740); and Betty (b.1741). James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Orchard in 1737 when his daughter Margaret was baptised. It is unclear if he could be the same man as the tenant at Berryfell. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Janet Laidlaw in 1739. James (18th C.) resident of ‘Mains’ (i.e. Borthwickbrae Mains) in 1743 when his son Walter was baptised in Roberton Parish. Bessie (b.1749) was probably his daughter. He may be the James living at Parkhill in 1736 when his daughter Janet was baptised. James (d.1756) shepherd at Wigg. His son William was wright in Toono-Rule. It seems likely that he is closely related to James, who was progenitor of the Laidlaws of Weensmoor. James (b.c.1738) farmer in Hobkirk Parish. He lived at Weens, Weensmoor, and Montchester Bridge. In 1764 he married Margaret Scott. Their children were: John (b.1765), who married Margaret Buckham; William (b.1768), who farmed at Weensmoor; Thomas, who died in infancy; James (b.1771); Janet (b.1774); Thomas (again, b.1776); Walter (b.1780), born at Weensmoor, gardener at Raby Castle; and Euphemia (b.1783), who married Walter Elliot from Hawick. He may be the James, son of John who lived at Parkhill. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Oliver and their children included: Thomas (b.1769); Janet (b.1773); Margaret (b.1776); Agnes (b.1778); and Mary (b.1780), baptised in Wilton. The witnesses in 1773 were Thomas Rutherford and Robert Riddell. He could be the James who witnessed a baptism for Hawickshiels blacksmith John Ker in 1760. James (18th C.) farmer at Hartwoodburn, recorded on the 1785 Horse Tax Rolls. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Mary Learmont, who died in 1797 (the result of a drowning). Their children included: Janet (b.1771); James (b.1774); Robert (b.1778); and John (b.1785). The witnesses in 1771 were John Bridges, senior and Alexander Bunyan and in 1774 were the whole congregation. James (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was recorded at Meadshaw in 1780 and 1786. His children included Walter (b.1780) and James (b.1786). He may be the James who married Isobel Scoon in Roberton in 1777 and whose children included Beatrice (b.1791). James (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick. In 1795 he married Janet Darling and she died in 1810; the word ‘sauglay’ appears to be written after his name, and although it is unclear what it meant, it is probably the same as ‘Saughlaw’ applied to Walter in 1787 and 1795. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at Mabonlaw, recorded on the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was owner of 2 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. James (1795–1838) son of hosiery manufacturer William. He was a hosiery finisher, and lived for several years at West Port House. He married Ann Affleck, from Peebles and she died in 1834. He died leaving a young family of 4 sons and 1 daughter: William (b.1821) the eldest; Thomas (b.1824); Robert (b.1826); Catherine (1828–1841); and Walter (b.1832). James ‘Jimmie’ (1797–1879) son of William and Helen Douglas, he was born at Langraw. He was miller at Hallrule Mill, recorded in Pigot’s directories of 1825/6 and 1837, as well as Slater’s 1852 directory. He was listed at Hallrule in 1841. He was tenant of Hallrule Mill farm in the period 1825–55, and all his children were born there. He was later farmer at Hartshaugh Mill, where he was recorded in 1868. For a while he also transported grain across the Border by horse and returned with coals. By 1871 he was farming 237 acres at Hartshaugh Mill. In 1826 he married Isabella Turnbull at Greenriver House, and she died in 1871, aged 73; she was daughter of Henry Turnbull and Betty Stavert. Their children included: Elizabeth (Betsy, 1827–1906), who married Andrew Murray; William (b.1829), who took over at Hartshaugh Mill, but moved to Canada and died unmarried; Henry (1831–89), who had an accident that affected his brain; Helen (b.1833), who lived at old Hallrule House and cared for her brother Henry and father James; John Douglas (1835–1911), who emigrated to Toronto; Isabella Grieve (b.1838), who married George Scott; and probably James Douglas. He and his wife are buried in Hobbirk Kirk-yard. James (b.1818/9) from Jedburgh, he was miller at Trow Mill. His wife was Isabella Walker and their children included George and Andrew. James (19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Jane Hislop and their children included George (b.1865). James (19th C.) son of builder and farmer Adam. He worked as a mason and also farmed at Trowsmill. He later emigrated to Australia, where it is said he was very successful. James Armstrong (1911/2–44) son of Robert and Ellen, he was born in Hawick. He served as a Lance Corporal with the 1st Singapore Volunteer Corps. He was captured by the Japanese and killed on the Rakuyo Maru, one of the ‘Hell Ships’, which were torpedoed by US submarines. Janet (b.c.1775) listed as ‘Independent’ in 1841 when she was living at Hallrule with the Smith family. She was probably a widow of a local Laidlaw. J.B. (18th/19th C.) writer (i.e. lawyer) in Edinburgh. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He probably had a local connection. Jock (1920–2001) born in Makerston, nephew of piper Daniel. He joined the Queen’s Own Cameron Highlanders as a boy piper and served with them during WWII. He was one of only 79 survivors from his battalion who made it back to Britain after the fall of Dunkirk. In 1945 in Burma he led his company into battle, probably the last time this was done in the British army. After the War he lived in Hawick for a while, where he as Pipe Major to the Scout Pipe Band. He then moved to Banbury in Oxfordshire, where he helped found a new pipe band. He was honorary piper to the Dunkirk Veterans’ Association and the Burma Star Association. In later life he lived in Springwood village, near Kelso. He married Margaret and they had children John and Sandra. John (d.bef. 1502) resident of Lil-liesleaf. Archibald Douglas in Effledge had remission for his murder. John (16th C.) tenant in Bank, recorded in a rental roll of Jedforest in 1541. He held half of the farm. John (16th C.) tenant of the farm of Rouchhirst according to the rental roll of Jedforest in 1541. John (16th C.) tenant in a small part of Harelawcleuch in 1541. He was probably related to Patrick, who was one of the tenants in the other part. John (16th C.) tenant in ‘Waldospindillin’ (i.e. Wattie’s Spinnells) in 1541, paying 44 shillings yearly. He was probably related to other Laidlaws who farmed nearby. John (16th C.) recorded as ‘John Ladlay of Breerbush’ on a 1544 list of Scotsmen who gave their allegiance to the English King. ‘Edde’ from Whiteside was the only other Laidlaw listed. His lands were probably Brierlee, near Edgerston. John (17th C.) tenant in Antroch in Jedforest. In 1602 he is recorded as ‘Jacques Laidley in Ancrauch’ when Thomas Turnbull, younger of Minto, was his surety not to harm Jock Rutherford in Tofts and his sons; Thomas Rutherford, younger of Hunthill, was surety for the Rutherfords of Tofts not to harm him. John (17th C.) recorded as tenant in Wadeshill in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. John (17th C.) resident at Shankend in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. He paid tax on 3 hearths. John (17th C.) resident of Ormiston on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He is probably related to Walter, who was at Ormiston in 1684. John (17th C.) resident of Rouchhirst on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to Thomas who was also listed there. John (17th C.) recorded at Thorterwood on the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. John (17th C.) resident in ‘waills’ near Newmill according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. This was probably the farm of Valesburn. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Margaret Hume and their children included Isobel (b.1702). John (d.bef. 1709) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Robson and their children included Margaret (b.1702); and Agnes (b.1709). His wife was a widown in ‘Langtoun’ in...

Ashkirk Parish when their daughter Agnes was baptised. John (d.1712) resident of Craikshiel. His daughter Isobel was baptised in 1712 after his death, his brother ‘being spencer for ye child’. He may be the John who married Mary Murray in Roberton in 1707. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1708 he was described as ‘servitor to Adam Elliott of Arcleton In Harwood’ when his son Walter was baptised in Hawick. The witnesses were Adam Elliot and Bailie Walter Graham. John (17th/18th C.) tailor in Hawick Shiel. In 1721 he married Janet ‘Betie’ from Eskdalemuir. They had a daughter Mary, born in 1722. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Agnes Easton and their children included Janet (b.1729). John (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Easton and their children included Janet (b.1729). John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Scott and their children included Ann (b.1732) and Helen (b.1741). John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Scott and their children included Helen (b.1738) and May (b.1740). John (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Agnes Todd and their children included: James (b.1733). John (18th C.) resident of High- chesters in 1732 and Deanburnhaugh in 1743. He married Agnes Easton in 1728 and their children, baptised in Roberton Parish included: Walter (b.1732); William (b.1734); James (b.1738); and Helen (b.1743). John (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Mary Aitkin in 1736 in Wilton Parish and their children included: George (b.1737). John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their children included William (b.1738). John (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isobel ‘Larment’ (presumably ‘Learnmonth’) and their children included: Elizabeth (b.1739). John (18th C.) married Helen Murray in Wilton Parish in 1744. John (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Elspeth (or Elizabeth) Scott in Ashkirk in 1744 and their children included Ann (b.1747). John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, recorded at Merrylaw in 1749. He married Margaret Blake and their children included David (b.1749). John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Helen Murray and their children included Margaret (b.1752). John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1792 he married Janet Waugh who came from Hawick. Their children included Alexander (b.1794) and Margaret (b.1796). John (b.1765) eldest son of James and Margaret Scott, he was born at Weens. He married Margaret Buckham in 1792 in Bedrule Parish. Their children were: James; John (b.1796), a lawyer in Edinburgh; Jane or Janet (b.1794), who remained unmarried; Margaret (1798–1855), who married Dr. William Brown Purves, and whose son Dr. William Laidlaw Purves was an ear surgeon; and Euphemia (b.1800), also unmarried. He could be the John who died in Hobkirk Parish in 1814. John (1769–99) son of Andrew and Agnes Glendinning. He was a shepherd at Muselee. In 1790 he married Margaret, daughter of James Burnet. Their children included: Agnes (b.1790); Margaret (1794–1856), who married Adam Leyden and died in Hawick; and Andrew (1798–1889), shepherd at Thurston Mains, Innerwick. John (18th/19th C.) married Margaret Scott in Wilton Parish in 1799. John (18th/19th C.) married Nelly Anderson in Wilton Parish in 1806. John (18th/19th C.) married Isobel Scott in Wilton Parish in 1810. John (b.1796) son of John and Margaret Buckham, he was born in Hobkirk Parish. He became a lawyer in Edinburgh. He was involved with the founding of the Union Bank of Scotland in 1830. His services to the bank were noticed after his sudden death. He died unmarried. John Douglas (1835–1911) son of James and Isabella Turnbull, he was born at Hallrule Mill. He emigrated to Canada, becoming a grain merchant in the Toronto area. He later settled in Lumsden, Saskatchewan. He married Annie Louise McKeggue. Joseph (19th/20th C.) cashier with Andrew Oliver & Sons. He was Sunday School Superintendent for Hawick Free Kirk 1889–95 and Session Clerk 1889–95. He may be the same Joseph who had a villa built around West Stewart Place about 1880. Ken see Thomas A. Kenneth Lancelot (17th C.) recorded as tenant in Northbank in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. Lawrence (16th C.) tenant in Letham in 1541, along with James, probably his son or brother. They paid 22 shillings yearly, with Thomas renting another part of the farm. Lawrence and James were also tenants there, and perhaps related. Lionel (17th C.) recorded in 1590 along with Thomas of Haugh. They were accused of stealing from the Reeds of ‘the Old towne’ in England. Margaret (17th C.) resident at Swinnie according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Margaret (b.1794/5) grocer at Robertson Glebefoot. She was there in 1841, along with Agnes, who may have been her daughter. In 1851 and 1861 she was listed as a ‘Huckster’ at Howcleuchshiel. She could be the Margaret, born to John and Janet Waugh in Wilton in 1796. Margaret Shiel (19th/20th C.) lived at Hazelwood and was made a Justice of the Peace in 1921. Marion (d.c.1685) resident of Abbotrule whose will is recorded in 1685. Nelly (b.1777) youngest daughter of William, wright of Town-o-Rule. She was christened ‘Nelly’ rather than this being short for something (although the 1841 census lists her as ‘Helen’). She worked on farms and took up residence at the Sclenty. She was mainly self-educated and was a keen reader. At the age of 49 she became the teacher at the ‘Sclenty Schuil’, which Mrs. Cleghorn set up in Hobkirk Parish. She was always known as ‘Mrs. Laidlaw’ although she was never married. She was known as a strict disciplinarian, but very fond of teaching. She is listed as a teacher at Sclenty Hall in 1841. She is buried in Hobkirk cemetery. Ninian ‘Ringan’ (16th C.) probably name of ‘Rennye Ladley’ recorded in 1590 when accused of stealing a horse from Ralph Salkeld. This was along with Thomas of Haugh, Steven of the Bank and David of Roughlee. He was probably from somewhere in the Jed valley. It seems likely that the same ‘Ninian Laidlo’ was listed along with Olivers of Southdean and William Kirkton of Stewartfield in 1572/3, when Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule and Richard Rutherford of Edgerston were their cautioners; this was probably related to Kerr of Ferniehirst being declared a fugitive and all his former supporters swearing allegiance to the Crown. Patrick (16th C.) tenant in part of Harelawleuch in 1541, along with John Oliver and Richard Oliver. He was probably related to John, who was tenants in the other part. Peter Fisher (1830/1–1917) 2nd surviving son of William, and brother of Thomas and William, he was named after his maternal grandfather. He planned to enter the ministry, but instead joined his father’s manufacturing business, then set up on his own as a hosiery manufacturer in Melgund Place. He later moved to Appletreehall, although that factory burned down. He then lived at Wilton Grove, where he ran a small frame shop, which was later taken over by Robert Murray, then Mr. Routledge and eventually by Peter Scott. He moved to Jedburgh at one point, to work at Allars Mill (run by other family members), but spent most of his long life in Hawick. He later lived at Galabrae and became a coal merchant, auctioneer and newspaper correspondent. He was the last surviving member of the first ‘reformed’ Council, and one of the last two surviving Hawick Burgess. In the 1850s he was on the Railway Committee for Hawick District. He joined the Free Church at the Disruption, and the first meeting to set up a Free Church in Wilton took place in his warehouse in 1866. He was described as ‘unconventional in manners and address’. In 1857 he married Catherine Gray in Rothenburg. Their children were: William, who died young; George (b.1861), also died young; Jessie Lindsay (b.1862); Jane Fisher (b.1864), who married W.F. Duncan; another William (b.1866), who spent many years in Australia and later farmed in California; George Gray, a fruit grower in California; Mary, who married G.A. Hillman of Chino, California; Thomas; Daniel, a chemist in Basingstoke; and Catherine, who married chemist W.B. Rawlinson. He was healthy to the end, walking from his house at Galabrae into town until about a year before his death. He is buried in the Welloagate Cemetery. Peter (19th C.) resident of Wilton. He married Rachel Scott in 1862 and their children included: Helen (b.1863); Hannah (b.1865); Sarah (b.1867); Thomas (b.1869); Robert (b.1871); and Sarah (again, b.1874). Richard (19th/20th C.) served as a Bailie and also as Justice of the Peace in Roxburghshire. He also wrote articles for the Archaeological Society Transactions. In 1939 he was living at Wilton Lodge. Robert (15th/16th C.) recorded being ‘in knawis edzartoun’ in 1502. He was presumably tenant in part of Edgerton. He served as surety for his brother Walter (alias ‘Rutherford’), as well as for himself, and was fined for non-appearance. Robert (16th C.) tenant in Falside in 1541. His part of the farm was valued at 25s. He was probably related to Alexander, who was also tenant there. Robert (17th C.) recorded as tenant in Whiteside in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. Robert (17th C.) recorded as one of the tenants in Falside in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. He was probably related to James, who was also listed as a tenant there. Robert (17th C.) recorded in a rental roll of 1669 along with Adam Oliver. It is unclear where they were tenants, but perhaps Northbank or Slack. Robert (17th C.) listed in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. It is ambiguous where he was a tenant, but he is listed right after John in Wadeshill and before Robert in Southdean Law. He could be the tenant of Wadeshill who is recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. Robert (17th C.) listed as tenant in Southdean Law in the 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. Robert (17th C.) tenant in Roughelee according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. He is probably the same Robert recorded at Southdean Parish on the crossed out part of the rolls. Robert (17th C.) resident of Northbank according to the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. Robert (17th/18th C.) recorded in Haregrain in 1709 when his son James was baptised in Hawick Parish. The witnesses were Walter Grieve in Park and Walter Scott in Merrylaw. Perhaps the same Robert was herd in Commonside in 1714 when his unnamed child was baptised, with witnesses Thomas Hume ‘preacher’ and Walter Purdom. He is probably the Robert who witnessed a baptism for John Scott in Falnash in 1706. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Redfordgreen in 1711 and 1724. His children included Janet (b.1711) and Bessie (b.1724). Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Ellrig in 1711. His children included Andrew (b.1711). He must be distinct from the Robert in Redfordgreen, since the baptisms are just a month apart. Robert (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Thornyhaugh in 1741 when his son Thomas was baptised. Robert (b.1743), Walter (b.1745) and John (b.1747) were probably also his children. Robert (18th C.) farmer at Hyndlee in Hobkirk Parish in 1785–88, according to the Horse Tax Rolls. He was surely related to Thomas who was farmer there immediately afterwards. Robert (18th C.) tenant of Falnash from about the 1760s. In 1762 he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for James Nichol. He was a trustee for the creditors of Robert Shortreed of Easter Essenside in 1778. He was listed on the Horse Tax Rolls in the period 1785–97. In 1797 he was recorded having 3 work horses as well as 1 saddle horse. He also paid tax for 5 dogs in the Dog Tax Rolls in 1797. Around 1799 he was one of the local men who contributed money to help in the war against France. He may have been father of Elizabeth, who married William Elliot in Millburnholm. He may also have been father of Thomas, who moved from Falnash to take over the farm of Todshawhill in Eskdalemuir after the ‘Gonial Blast’ of 1795. He married Jane Shortreed and had children born in Cavers and Hawick Parishes: Elizabeth (b.1750); Mary (b.1752); Margaret (b.1753); Robert (b.1755); Jane (b.1759), who may have married Rev. William Hardie Moncrieff and died in 1821 at Falnash; Janet (b.1762); Thomas (b.1764); Janet (again, b.1765); William (b.1766); John (b.1769); Margaret (b.1771); and Cornelius (b.1772). The witnesses to the 1764 baptism were John Pott and George Pott of ‘Ridge’, while in 1766 they were Walter Scott senior (Commonside) and Robert Scott (Skelfhill). Robert (18th/19th C.) farmer at Gorrenberry, recorded on both the Horse Tax Rolls in 1792–97. He also paid the dog tax in 1797. He may be the Laidlaw at Gorrenberry whose daughter Jean married Henry Elliot of Bush. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1794 he married Janet Scott, who was from Cavers Parish. Robert (18th/19th C.) farmer at Falnash. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821 and Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He may have been son of Thomas and grandson of the earlier Robert, tenant at Falnash. Robert (d.bef. 1809) wright at West Port. He was already deceased in 1809 when his wife Margaret Scott died. He married Margaret Scott in 1790. He was probably the Hawick mason who subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). Robert (18th/19th C.) recorded at Harden in 1786 when his son Walter was baptised in Roberton Parish. He could be the Robert who married Margaret Grieve in Roberton in 1786. Robert (18th/19th C.) recorded in 1796 as ‘Residenter in Denholm’. He married Margaret Blyth and their children included Betty (b.1796) and Andrew (b.1798). Robert (18th/19th C.) tenant in Kingledoors in Drumelzier Parish. In 1788 (and also in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls) he is recorded as owner of the parts of Greenhouse in Lilliesleaf Parish that had previously been owned by Ralph Davidson and Andrew Davidson, valued together at £210 5s 6d. He married Dorothea Turnbull, who was probably daughter of Walter Turnbull of Firth, a previous occupant of Greenhouse. Their children were Robert (b.1782), Walter (b.1783), Dorothea (b.1785), Elizabeth (b.1786), Barbara (b.1788), Robert (again, b.1790), Alexander (b.1792), William (b.1795), Agnes (b.1797), Mary (b.1799), Robert (once more, b.1800), Elizabeth (again, b.1802) and Mary (again, b.1803). Robert (18th/19th C.) married Margaret Sibbald in Wilton Parish in 1803. Robert (18th/19th C.) carrier in Hawick. His son James died in 1819. He also had a child who died in 1838. He may be the Robert who married Anne Walker in Wilton in 1837. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton.

Laidlaw

Parish. He married Beatrix Michie and their children included: William (b.1815). Robert ‘Auld London’ or ‘London Laidlaw’ (1792–1878) son of William, the first of the family to come to Hawick, with his mother being Margaret Aitken. He rented the Moat and other fields and sold milk etc., at his house at 17 Loan. He acted as one of the witnesses called to London to give evidence about the conduct of some Hawick men at the election of 1837, and was given his nickname as a result. He is said to have told his friends on his return that during the boat trip there had ‘only been a fir deal between him and eternity’. His nickname was also pronounced ‘Auld Lunan’. He married Rachel Rae, who died in 1866, aged 71. Their children were: William (b.1815); Margaret (b.1820), who married Andrew Blyth; Rachel (b.1822); Janet (b.1825); Jane (b.1827); and Robert (b.1832), who was born Cornet in 1852 and married Jessie Gow. He is probably the stockmaker Robert whose infant son’s death is recorded in 1822 – ‘Kinly Stick and Daavid Garland, London Laidlaw and Little Dan, Johnny the Gover (in a far land), And Wat the Drummer leads the van’[HI]. Robert (b.1799) only son of Thomas, he was farmer at Nether Cassock, like his father. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He married Jean Beattie and his children included Mary and John. Robert (19th C.) married Ann Walker in Wilton in 1837. Robert (b.1820s) 4th son of Thomas. He became a small hosiery manufacturer in Glasgow, then in 1886 emigrated to New Zealand (although this may have been a generation later). Robert ‘Robbie’ (19th C.) appointed choir-master of Hawick Parish Church in the mid-19th century, being one of the first to hold such a position in Hawick. Robert (b.1825/6) butcher in Denholm. In Slater’s 1852 directory he was listed as a butcher and shopkeeper. In 1861 he was living with his mother Mary and sister Margaret, probably on Main Street. He may be the Robert who chaired the centenary Burns night in Denholm in 1859. Robert (1832/3–1908) son of Robert, he was a mason to trade, but later took over his father’s fields up the Loan. He was Cornet in 1852. He married Jessie Gow from Duns, woollen manufacturer in Honley, near Huddersfield), Walter and Agnes (who lived at Thongsbridge, near Huddersfield). Robert (19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Elizabeth Murray and their children included James (b.1863) and Janet (b.1866). Robert Grierson (1856/7–1933) son of Thomas, he helped run the family tweed manufacturing business along with his brother William. He was for a while President of the South of Scotland Chamber of Commerce. He was also Captain of the Golf Club. He lived at Hazelwood in the late 1800s. After the firm folded around 1908 he carried on as a commission agent, finally retiring only a few years before his death, and passing on that business to George Wilson & Sons. Sir Robert (1856–1915) 2nd son of William and Agnes Purdom, he was born at Bonchester. He was educated at Kirkton and Denholm schools, and served his apprenticeship with Wood, Graham & Co., drapers in Hawick. He then moved to work as a draper in London, leaving in 1875 for Cape Colony (i.e. South Africa), where he carried out business in Kimberley. In 1877 he sailed for Japan, but broke his journey in India. He moved to Calcutta, where he worked for 5 years. In 1881, along with Edward Whiteaway, he set up Whiteaway, Laidlaw & Co., which operated on a strictly cash basis (unusual for businesses in India in those days), with the first premises in Chowringhi. The firm expanded from drapery into general goods, and soon there were department stores in about 20 major cities throughout India. In 1898 he became sole partner and the firm expanded into other Asian cities (including Shanghai and Singapore); it was often referred to as ‘the Selfridge’s of India’, at its height employed 2400 people, and remained in business until 1962. He also owned tea plantations in Darjeeling and rubber estates in the Federated Malay States, and was senior partner in a shipping firm. He joined the American Methodist Church in India and became involved in missionary work and Christian schools. In particular he supported the Calcutta Boy’s School, which opened in 1877, with a girls’ school following 9 years later. He spent 20 years in India before returning to Britain, settling in Chislehurst. He bought a new house there by Camden Park and named it ‘Bonchester’; the street that it is on was later called Bonchester Close. A Liberal, he became more interested in politics on his return to Britain, and was M.P. for West Renfrewshire 1906–10, with Winston Churchill being one of his political supporters. He was knighted in 1909, and became British Commissioner to the International Opium Commission in Shanghai. In 1909 he moved to ‘The Warren’ at Coney Hall, Hayes, and grew rhododendrons and azaleas there. A keen traveller, he was a Fellow of the Royal Geographical Society. He was also President of the World’s Sunday School Association and an Executive of the National Temperance League. In 1912 he purchased the estate of Wolfelee from Edward Elliot, 6th Laird; in later life he was referred to as being ‘of Wolfelee’. In 1879 he married Mary, daughter of Capt. W. Blow Collins and widow of W.L. Francis of the India Office. He became step-father to the several children of his wife, and together they had children: William, who died in infancy; Ethel; Mildred (or Margaret); Dorothy; and 2 daughters who also died in infancy. He had the William Laidlaw Memorial Hall erected at Bonchester Bridge in memory of his son William, as well as his father, who was also William. He left some money in his will to support a school for poor children in South India, which is still known as the Laidlaw Memorial School, Ketti Nilgiris. He privately published ‘By the Way’, about a trip he took around the world.

Robert Henderson (1872–1953) writer of the words for ‘Auld Hawick My Dreams’ and ‘Teviotdale’, among other songs. He was son of stockmaker Thomas and Robina Henderson and born at 6 Slitrig Bank. He apprenticed as a printer in Hawick, but emigrated to America, working in Boston. On returning to Hawick he joined the Hawick Express and became foreman printer there. He contributed poems to the newspaper and also wrote the Betty Whutson’s Letter column for many years. He wrote an article on the Vertythil Well and associated poetry competition for the Archaecological Society. He was long connected with West Port Church, being Session Clerk there for 22 years, as well as Sunday School Superintendent. He was also a lay preacher himself and was a member of Lodge St. James 424. He married Agnes Anderson. He lived at 22 Beaconsfield Terrace, where he died, and is buried in the Welogate Cemetery. Note that an older brother of the same name was born in 1863 and died in infancy, leading to some confusion over his own year of birth.

Simon (15th C.) listed as a witness on the 1432 sasine giving the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffdom of Roxburghshire to William Douglas. His name is recorded as ‘Symone Laidlaw’ and he may have been a ‘presbyter’, along with Thomas Falconer. Simon (18th C.) tenant at Birkwood in Ashkirk Parish in 1762. He was later farmer at Boosmill in Lilliesleaf Parish, according to a tack of 1773, with the Riddells of that Ilk. He was also tenant there according to the 1789–94 Horse Tax Rolls. He married Isobel Anderson and their children, baptised in Ashkirk Parish, included: Thomas (b.1758); Helen (b.1760); and Adam (b.1762). The witnesses in 1762 were William (perhaps his brother) and William Anderson (surely related to his wife). He is probably the Simon, son of Adam and Helen Bell born in Ashkirk in 1730. Steven of Bank (16th C.) recorded in 1590 of stealing horses from Englishman John Salkeld. His name is recorded as ‘Steven Ladley of the Banke’ and others named are ‘Rennye’, Thomas of Haugh and David of Roughlee. He is surely related to Ninian, who was recorded as tenant ‘in the Bank’ in 1572/3. Thomas (16th C.) tenant in Northbank in 1541, along with ‘Belle’ and Bennet. Thomas (16th C.) tenant in Letham in 1541, paying 22 shillings yearly. Lawrence and James were tenants in another part of Letham and probably related. Thomas (d.1543) tenant of the Earl of Angus. John Musgrave led a party of Englishmen on a raid into Scotland in July 1543 in which he was killed trying to recover the spoils from his farm. It is unclear where his farm was, but since the Douglases held much of Southdean, it could be that he was the tenant of Letham. Thomas (16th C.) son of Lyle. He was listed as ‘Lyalles Thome’ among men complained about by the English Warden for a raid into England in 1587. The other men were local Scots, Orviers and others. Thomas (16th C.) tenant in the farm of Haugh in the Jed valley. In 1590 he was accused by John Forster of having reset Clement Crozier (son of Martin) and William Oliver of Lustruther. He was recorded as ‘Thomas Ladelye of the Hawghe’ in 1590 when he was among a group accused of taking livestock, goods and prisoners from the Pott’s of Carrick; others listed include Elliots of the Hill, Martin’s Clem Crozier, James Douglas of Earlside and John Henderson of Plenderleith. He was also listed in 1590 accused of raiding the English Warden’s tenants, along with ‘Eddie’, as well as Andrew Waugh of Wadeshill. Additionally he and ‘Eddie’ were accused in 1590 of stealing a horse from Ralph Salkeld and along with ‘Rennye’, Steven of the Bank and David of Roughlee he was accused of stealing horses by John Salkeld. He was further recorded along with Lionel in 1590, accused of stealing from the Reeds of ‘the Old towe’ in England. Thomas (17th C.) paid the land tax in Southdean Parish on behalf of the Marquess of Douglas in 1663. He may be the same as one of the other Thomases. Thomas (17th C.) tenant in the farm of Roucharthst according to a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. ‘Martin Laidlae, yr.’ was also listed, and presumably his son or brother. Probably the same Thomas was listed at Roucharthst in the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls, along with John. Thomas (17th C.) recorded as tenant of ‘Antwoch’ (i.e. ‘Antroch’) in a rental roll of 1669 for Jedburgh Forest. Thomas (17th C.) tenant at the farm of Haugh in the Jed valley according to a 1669 rental roll. Probably the same Thomas was still tenant in Haugh on the Hearth Tax roll of 1694. There were Laidlaws at Haugh at the end of the 16th century. Thomas (17th C.) married to ‘Euphan Bellinden’. Their son William was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1676, with witnesses Thomas Borthwick and Robert Grieve. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, when it contained Hassendean. He married Isobel Lor-aine and their children included: Helen (b.1686); and Isobel (b.1689). He may be the Thomas who witnessed a baptism in Roberton in 1686 for John ‘Bleak’ and Katherine (who may have been his sister, or other relative). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Stiches in 1747. He is probably the Thomas who witnessed a baptism for John Smith (also living in the Stiches area) in 1747. He married Margaret Turnbull in 1744 and their children included: James (b.1745); Thomas (b.1747); Margaret (b.1750); and Robert (b.1752). The witnesses in 1747 were Walter Scott and James Dryden. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hawick and Wilton Parishes. He married Margaret Anderson and their children included: Janet (b.1765) and James (b.1767), baptised in Hawick; and Janet (b.1769), Thomas (b.1771), Betty (b.1773), Agnes (b.1775), Adam (b.1778), and Adam (again, b.1780), baptised in Wilton. He is probably the Thomas who witnessed baptisms in Hawick in 1767 for herd John Scott and in 1771 for Thomas Elliot in Newmill. Thomas (18th C.) farmer at Hyndlee according to the 1789–91 Horse Tax Rolls. He succeeded Robert as farmer, and was presumably his son or brother. Thomas (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1792 (along with fellow weaver William) he witnessed a baptism for Walter. He was thus probably closely related (perhaps brother) to the the carpenter-making Laidlaws. In 1795 and 1797 he witnessed baptisms for William. He married Margaret Stewart and their children included William (b.1796). The witnesses in 1796 were Walter (perhaps his brother) and Walter Tinlin. He could be the son of William and Is-abel Birnie baptised in Hawick in 1772. Thomas (18th/19th C.) ‘gauger’, i.e. exciseman in Hawick. The death is recorded in 1811 of ‘Mrs. Laidlaw’, spouse to his father. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at Newlands in Minto Parish, recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 3 horses. Thomas (d.1823) farmer at Fulfush. He was probably son of Robert, who also farmed at Falnash. He was listed at Falnash on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1786. He took on the additional farm of Nether Cassock in 1800. He was probably the ‘Mr Laidlaw of Fulfush, a gentleman of great responsibility and intelligence’ who took the young Tom Jenkins into his household, and later encouraged his education. He married Mar-garet Beattie and had one son, Robert. He was listed at Nether Cassock when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He could be the Thomas of Cavers Parish whose son Robert was baptised in 1771. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Agnes Glendinning and their children included Thomas (b.1814). Thomas (18th/19th C.) shoemaker who moved to London. In 1815 the death of his mother, Anne Hogg, is recorded in Hawick. Thomas (18th/19th C.) shoemaker at Denholm, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He may be the resident of Cavers Parish who married Amanda Wood and whose children included Anne (b.1817), Thomas (b.1820), Helen (b.1823) and John Young (b.1826). Thomas (1801/2–28) son of William. He emigrated to America and died in a canal there aged 26. His children included William (grocer in Hawick and manufac-turer at Cumledge Mills), Thomas (also grocer for a while), Walter (who moved to Australia), Robert (hosiery manufacturer of Glasgow, who moved to New Zealand) and Catherine (who mar-ried Alexander Mercer and moved to Australia). Thomas (b.1810/1) born in Wilton Parish, he was a farmer at Longbaulk. In 1841 he was living at Easter Brauxholm Loch (with a teacher, David, who was probably his brother). He was still there in 1851. In 1861 he was recorded as farmer of 20 acres there. His wife was Han-nah and their children included John, David, Pe-ter, Thomas, Sarah, Helen, Hannah and Mary. Thomas (b.1820s) 2nd son of Thomas. He car-ried on his brother William’s grocer’s business at 4 High Street, then moved to Bolton. His children included William, Thomas, James and Cather-ine. Thomas ‘Chinnie’, ‘Secky’ (1829–1907) hosiery manufacturer who ran William Laidlaw
at he crosse’. He was presumably a tradesman of some sort in Hawick. He may be the Walter who witnessed a baptism for Thomas Scott in Hawickshiel in 1766. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margaret Spinney and their children included: Isobel (b.1718); and James (b.1726). Walter (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Christian Anderson and their children included: Isobel (b.1737); and Margaret (b.1742). Walter (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Small and their children included Margaret (b.1741). Walter (18th C.) shepherd in Roberton and Hawick Parishes. He was at Eilrig in 1733, 1735 and 1736 and was recorded as ‘herd’ in 1742. He married Janet Chisholme in Roberton in 1731. Their children included: Margaret (b.1732), Janet (b.1733) and Margaret (again, b.1736), baptised in Roberton; and Walter (b.1742), baptised in Hawick. The witnesses in 1742 were Walter Hogg and John Elliot (both servants). Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Wilson and their son William was baptised in 1745. Walter (18th/19th C.) probably brother of William, with whom he came to Hawick to work in the carpet factory. In 1796 he witnessed a baptism for Thomas (perhaps another brother) and in 1792 he and Thomas witnessed a baptism for William. He married Mary Miller in Hawick in 1780 and their children included: William (b.1781); Beatrix (b.1784); Isabel (b.1785); William (again, b.1788); Margaret (b.1792); and Robert (b.1796). The witnesses in 1792 were weavers William and Thomas Laidlaw, who were probably his brother and another relative. The names of his children suggest that he could also have been a son of William and Isabel Birnie, but his baptism is not recorded in Hawick Parish. Walter (18th C.) recorded in 1787 as ‘Saughlaw’, when his daughter Margaret died and again in 1795 when his unnamed child died in Hawick Parish. Presumably the designation was the place where he lived, but this is unclear. He was probably related to James ‘sauglay’, recorded in 1810. He may be the Walter whose son James died in Hawick in 1781. Walter (b.1780) son of James and Margaret Scott. He was born at Weensmoor in Hobkirk Parish. He became head gardener at Raby Castle, home of the Duke of Cleveland. He had daughters Mary and Anne. Walter (b.c.1780) born at Meadowshaw, son of James and Isabella Scoon. He became a butcher in Hawick. He was listed on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 he was living at about 19 High Street. In 1801 he married Margaret Oliver (b.1777) in Kirkton. Their children included: Robert (b.1802); Mary (1806–81) married James Little; Isabella (b.1812) married Mr. Temple; and Walter (b.1816). Walter (b.1811/2) from Jedburgh, he was a blacksmith in Wilton. In Slater’s 1852 directory he was listed as a blacksmith on Wilton Place. In 1851 he was on Wilton Place, at about the modern 34 Princes Street, and in 1861 on the east side of Dickson Street. His wife was Janet and their children included Thomas and Elizabeth. Walter (1838–1911) poet and local historian in Jedburgh. He wrote several articles about Jedburgh and its history and for 20 years acted as custodian for Jedburgh Abbey. He was a Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland. He wrote ‘Poems: chiefly on Jedburgh and vicinity’ (1901) and ‘Poetry and prose’ (1900, 1904, 1908) – ‘a geyan yibble poyeter an a leal Border Scot ti buit, Walter Laidlaw maun be a sair miss ti the Waeter-gate o Jed [ECS]. William (16th C.) recorded in 1541 as one of the tenants of the lands of Deloraine and ‘Wardishope’ in Ettrick. William (17th C.) recorded as a tenant in Woll in 1639. He was called as a witness in a dispute between Francis Scott of Castleside and his mother-in-law, Margaret Scott. Perhaps the same William had the following children baptised in Ashkirk Parish: William (b.1631); Margaret (b.1632); James (b.1636); Janet (b.1639); Robert (b.1639); Thomas (b.1641); an unnamed daughter (b.1643); Agnes (b.1645); and William (again, b.1647). Probably the same William witnessed a baptism in Ashkirk in 1651 for John Stewart and perhaps one for James. William (17th C.) tenant in the farm of Bank according to a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. John Oliver was tenant there at the same time. William (17th C.) recorded as tenant in ‘Brewbuse’ in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. It is unclear exactly where this farm was. William (17th C.) tenant in Little Cavers recorded in 1684 on a list of men declared as fugitives for being Covenanters. He is probably related to Walter in Ormiston, who was also on the list of fugitives William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isobel Laidlaw and their children included: Agnes (b.1688). William (1656/7–1717) tailor in Dдобurn. He is buried in Borthwick Waas. William (17th/18th C.) herd in Wester Essenside. He married Mary Elliot in 1697. Perhaps the same Laidlaw (with no forename given) was herd in Huntly in 1715 when his son John was baptised. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish.
His children included: Jean (b.1701); and Janet and Catherine (b.1705). William (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included Isabel (b.1712) and Robert (b.1715). William (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Jackson and their children included: James (b.1706); and Robert (b.1708). William (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1728 he was at Broadleeshiel when his daughter Bessie was baptised. Perhaps the same William was at Howcleuch in 1742 when his son James was baptised in Roberton. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Ormiston in 1727, 1730 and 1737. He is probably the William who married Margaret Reed in 1725 and had children John (b.1727), Thomas (b.1730), Janet (b.1732), Betty (b.1735) and Bessie (b.1737).

William (18th C.) son of shepherd James, he was a wright in Town-o-Rule. It was said that the family were related to the Laidlaws of Weensmoor, and their burial grounds were adjacent in Hobkirk Kirkyards. He married Margaret Best of Kirkton Parish in 1762; they were members of the Associate Kirk in Jedburgh. Their children included: Agnes (b.1763), who married an Oliver; Bettie (b.1769); Margaret (b.1771); Thomas (b.1773); Mary (b.1775), who married a Thomson; and Nelly (b.1777), who became teacher at the ‘Sclenty Schuil’. He could be the William who died in Hobkirk Parish in 1811.

William (18th C.) resident at Mabonlaw in 1764 and 1767. His children (baptised in Roberton) included James (b.1764) and Alexander (b.1767). He may be the William who married Bett Matheson in Roberton in 1762, his wife being from Yarrow Parish. William (18th C.) married Helen Greive in Wilton Parish in 1764. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Elizabeth Brown in 1764 and their children included: Adam (b.1765); and Helen (b.1768).

William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isabel Birnie (or Burnet) and their children included: William (b.1759); Isabel (b.1762); Margaret (b.1765); and Thomas (b.1772). The witnesses in 1772 were the whole congregation. Given the names, it is possible that he was father of William of the carpet factory, as well as father of Walter and Thomas. William (1759–1823) along with his brother (perhaps Walter) he came to Hawick from Leith to work in the Orrock Place carpet factory. However, it seems that he may be the son of William and Isabel Birnie born in Hawick (so perhaps the bothers returned to Hawick rather than coming as complete outsiders). His property on the Cross Wynd was sold in 1811 to form part of the site of Allars Kirk. He was also one of the founder members of the Independent Kirk in Hawick, being an elder in that church and calling his youngest son after one of the evangelist preachers, Charles Gray (the ‘Tabernacle’ was built next door to his wife’s family home on the Kirk Wynd). He may be the William who paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1785. He was progenitor of the most prominent local branch of the family. He is probably the weaver William who in 1792 (along with fellow weaver Thomas) witnessed a baptism for Walter. In 1794 he witnessed a baptism for manufacturer Walter Richardson. In the early part of the 19th century he set up his own hosiery business with his son William, starting out with just 4 frames. They later expanded to both tweed and hosiery, building the main mill in 1834, and later focusing just on tweeds. He married Margaret Aitken (1765–1842), daughter of Robert and Janet Scott. They lived in the Mid Raw and their children were: Janet (b.1784), who married spinner Robert Wilson; William (b.1786), ‘Shafles’; Robert (b.1792), ‘Auld London’, who lived at 17 Loan; James (b.1795), who married Ann Affleck and died leaving a young family; Thomas (b.1797), who emigrated to America and drowned in a canal; Walter (b.1797), who probably died in 1819; George (b.1797); Charles Gray; Isabella, who married William Wilson, spinner of Lunwood; Grace, who married draper George Borrowman; and 3 other sons, including one who farmed in Yarrow. The witnesses in 1795 were James Rae and Thomas (who was surely related) and in 1797 were Thomas and Walter (perhaps both his brothers). William (18th/19th C.) recorded as owner of a horse at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. William (b.1768) son of James and Margaret Scott.

He was born at Hartshaugh near Bonchester (although Tancred states he was born at Wester Swanshiel). He was farmer at Weensmoor in Hobkirk Parish. He is recorded there in 1841. His wife was Helen, daughter of James Douglas from Castleton; she was said to be a favourite of the Sheriff of Roxburghshire, William Oliver of Dinlabyre. Their children included: James (b.1797), who farmed at Hallrule Mill and Hartshaugh Mill; Douglas (b.1799), born at Kirknoe, but died young; Christian (b.1801), who married William Gowanlock; Margaret (b.1803), who married William Sibbald; Mary (b.1806), married William Smith; Helen, married John Turnbull and went...

to Canada; Douglas (again, b.1810), who emigrated to Toronto; Joanna (b.1812), who later went to Canada and married storekeeper David Davidson; John (d.1814); William (b.1815), who later farmed at Weensmoor; and Jennet or Jessie (b.1817), who married Hawick shoemaker Charles Scott. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Greatlaws in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Lilliesleaf Parish, when he owned 4 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. William (1780–1845) born at Blackhouse in Selkirkshire, the Ettrick Shepherd worked for his family for 10 years. Together they helped Sir Walter Scott to gather Border ballads. He first encountered Scott when he travelled to Yarrow with John Leyden in 1802. He was a farmer, then an exciseman and later worked as Scott’s factor and secretary. He wrote several poems of his own, including ‘Lucy’s Flittin’ (which appeared in ‘The Banquet of Euphrosyne’, published in Hawick in 1811). He also wrote a description of Selkirkshire for the Edinburgh Encyclopaedia. William (18th/19th C.) married Betty Easton in Wilton Parish in 1809. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Nelly Waldie and their children included Mary Jane (b.1813). William (18th/19th C.) road contractor, who was one of the first residents of Bonchester Brigend in the early 1800s. William ‘Auld Laidlaw’, ‘Shaffles’ or ‘The Auld Laird’ (1786–1861) eldest son of the first William, along with whom he founded the hosiery firm William Laidlaw & Sons in 1811, succeeding to the business of Mr. Purdom. To begin with he was the traveller for the firm, spending much time in the Newcastle area (where he often stayed at the ‘Robin Hood’ on Pilgrim Street) and further afield, sometimes in the company of Robert Leishman. One story is told of how he returned to Hawick on foot during a snowstorm, losing his way, but bumping into Willie Winter’s post, thereby recovering his bearings. It is said that he loved to bargain, and could not take a trip, even once retired, without some goods to sell. He lived for a while in a house at 14 Howe gate, with his stockcing-shop behind; this is probably the place marked ‘Laidlaw’ on Wood’s 1824 map. In 1834 he built Teviot Crescent Mills, expanding into the much larger premises there and moving into tweeds. He built up a huge manufacturing business from humble beginnings. In his day he was apparently the only person to openly sing ‘Teribus’ out of season, at the Bailies’ dinner, and he would sing the ‘Auld Sang’ at the married men’s Common Riding dinner. He was an ardent Conservative in politics, losing his coat tails during the election troubles of 1837, and objections to ‘Radicals’ seeking the vote were often made in his name afterwards. In 1814 he married Jane Fisher (daughter of a Glasgow merchant), who died in 1844, aged 50. His sons were: William (1817–59); Peter Fisher; Daniel McGowan (1824/5–54), who built Hopehill; and Thomas (b.1829). They also had daughters Margaret (who married Rev. John Gilchrist Dyer in 1846), Jane, Jessie (1833–41), one who became Mrs. McGinly, and 4 others who died in infancy. He later married Jane Rutherford (nee Waldie) at Edinburgh in 1845. Her daughter Agnes Rutherford married William, her step-brother. Although most of his family left for the Free Kirk at the Disruption, he stayed with the ‘Auld Kirk’, despite repeatedly being cited for not keeping fast days. He lived beside his factory of Teviot Crescent, and is buried in St. Mary’s Cemetery. A portrait of him is in the Museum, by an unknown artist. William (b.1788) son of the first Hawick William’s brother (possibly Walter), and hence cousin of ‘Shaffles’. He was a weaver and later a grocer. Along with his brother Walter he owned property at 8 Loan. He is listed as a grocer in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. He married Agnes Lamb. Their children included: Mary (b.c.1819), who married Thomas Stevenson; Agnes (b.c.1821), who married Hugh Douglas; and Walter (b.c.1823), an engineer with the government in India. He is buried at St. Mary’s. He could be the ‘Wm. Laidlaw, Loan’ who arranged for a musician from Jedburgh to play for the ‘rebel’ Cornet of 1809. William (b.1792/3) porter in Hawick, living at about 20 High Street in 1841. In 1851 he was described as an ‘Out door Labourer’ and living around the Crown Close. His wife was Isabella and their children included John, Margaret, Elizabeth, William, Catherine, Sophia and Isabella. He could be the William listed in Slater’s 1852 directory as a coal agent (for Arniston Colliery) at the Station. William (19th C.) married Elizabeth Middlemas in Wilton in 1844. William (19th C.) tinsmith in Hawick. He married Helen Elliot Amos (from the Hobkirk family) in 1866. William (b.1814/5) shoemaker in Denholm. In 1851 he was living with his wife Margaret Jamieson and their children Janet, Ann, Catherine, Thomas, Margaret, Joan and Jane. William (1815–80) son of Robert, ‘Auld London’. He was a frameworker living on the Loan, at about No. 9. He married Christian Affleck Scott (1815–75). Their children were: Robert (b.1838);
George (b.1840); Margaret (b.1846), who married Joseph Hogg; Rachel (b.1852); and Daniel (b.1855). He took in 3 sons of his uncle James when he died about 1838: Thomas (b.c.1824); Robert (b.c.1826); and Walter (b.c.1833). William (1815–84) son of William, who farmed at Weensmoor. He is recorded as farmer of Weensmoor in 1851, farming 52 acres and employing 1 labourer. He lived with his niece Mary and nephew James. By 1861 he was farmer at Bonthorpe, farmland of Weensmoor. He is recorded as farmer of Weensmoor in 1851, farming 52 acres and employing 1 labourer.

His wife was Isabel and their children included when he farmed 150 acres and employed 8 men. He farmed at Weensmoor for 19 years. He was listed on the first congregation of Wolfelee Free Kirk in 1849, was a trustee and was Treasurer for 37 years. He also helped with building the first church there. In 1853 he married Agnes Purdom (from Newcastle), aunt of the Agnes Purdom who married mason Andrew Waugh. His children included: William (b.1854), farmer at East Fodderlee; Robert (b.1856), Indian businessman and M.P. for East Renfrewshire; Agnes (b.1858), who married Stewart Douglas Elliot, a Councilor in Edinburgh; Helen (b.1859), who married James Phimister; James (b.1861), who emigrated to Canada and died unmarried; Isabella (b.1865), who worked for the Post Office in London; Arthur (b.1867), who emigrated to San Francisco and married Hattie Turner; John (b.1868), who emigrated to Australia; Margaret (b.1870), who married James Armour, a tea manager in India; Douglas (b.1874), a market gardener in Congleton; and Walter Scott (1877–1919), who trained as a doctor and managed a rubber plantation in the Straits Settlements. The William Laidlaw Memorial Hall was built partly in his memory.

William (1817–59) son of William, he took over the firm of William Laidlaw & Sons in partnership with his brothers in 1845. The firm purchased Lynwood Spinning Mill from Nixon's. He was Cornet in 1838. In the 1850s he was on the Railway Committee for Hawick District. He married Agnes, daughter of builder Robert Rutherford, and his step-sister. Their children were: William, of Grieve & Laidlaw; and Jeannie Waldie Fisher (b.1858), who married John G. Wilson. He later married Christina F. Scott (who died in 1875, aged 59). In 1861 his widow was an ‘Annuitant’ at 3 Teviot Crescent. William (b.1818/9) originally from Melrose, he was a farmer at Clarilaw in Wilton Parish. He is listed there in 1841, when he farmed 150 acres and employed 8 men. His wife was Isabel and their children included William and Mary. William (b.1821) from Hawick. He married Betsy Elliot and became a sheep farmer in Fodderty, Ross and Cromarty.

William (1821–1908) manufacturer, born in Hawick, son of James and grandson of hosier manufacter William. His mother was Ann Affleck, from Peebles. At the age of 17 he was left with no parents, and entered the warehouse of his uncle William on Teviot Crescent, but after a few years became a grocer. His premises were on the High Street (No. 12), where the Cannon Inn had been and the Royal Bank would be built later. In the 1841 census he was there (near the top of the Millport), but in 1851 he was at No. 4 High Street, formerly Andrew Borthwick’s property. In Slater’s 1852 directory he was ‘William Laidlaw, jun.’ on the High Street. He left Hawick in 1854, turning over the grocer’s business to his brother and taking a lease of Cumledge Mills near Duns. He started in yarn weaving, but moved into blanket manufacturing. From 1875 he was also involved (along with other family members) with Allars Mill in Jedburgh. The overall business was called Laidlaw Brothers, and later Laidlaw’s Blanket and Tweed Mills, Ltd. He purchased Cumledge Mills outright in 1888. He managed the Cumledge Mill side of the business along with his sons William and Alexander, with the older brothers, James and John managing Allars Mill. In the 1930s the company directors included 3 William Laidlaws, all cousins! In 1844 he married Elizabeth Middlemas, from Ednam. Their children included: James, J.P., who was Provost of Jedburgh; John, J.P.; William: Alexander; Isabella Broomfield (who married Robert Huggan); and Ann, who was unmarried. He and his wife held their diamond wedding anniversary in 1904. He remained strongly a Teri at heart and was known for his stories of Hawick in olden times, one of his earliest memories being the celebration for the coming of age of the future Duke of Buccleuch in 1827. He died at Cumledge Mills and is buried in Preston Cemetery, Berwickshire.

William (19th C.) resident of Wilton. He married Elizabeth Bell and their children included: Mary (b.1861). William (1835/6–1917) son of Thomas. Along with his brother Robert Grier son he was a partner in Thomas Laidlaw & Sons, but wrapped up the business in 1908. He died at Broadstairs and is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. William (1854–1911) son of William and Agnes Purdom. He farmed at East Fodderlee. In 1880 he married Elizabeth (‘Bessie’, 1854–1925) Hall, 2nd daughter of baker Robert Young. They had 4 sons and 1 daughter, including Douglas (b.1888), Agnes Lamb and Alexander (b.1892).
Laidlawhope

In 1901 his family were living in Minto. William (b.1845/6) son of William and Jane Newell. His marriage certificate states that he was born in Dumfriesshire, although family tradition says that he came from Hawick. He emigrated to Australia and in 1870 in Melbourne married Agnes Ferguson (daughter of a Denholm mason). They had 2 sons. William (1852/3–91) son of William. He was a manufacturer of Grieve & Laidlaw, Stonefield Mills. He married Mary Reid Clark, who died in 1929, aged 76. Their children included William Rutherford Clark, who died aged 16. William (1857/8–1912) cycle agent in Hawick. He was Captain of St. Cuthbert’s (rugby) Football Club for its first two seasons, from when it formed in 1877. He was also known as a keen cyclist in his early years. He worked for 38 years with Geo. & Jas. Oliver, providing valuable assistance to John Oliver in his work as Clerk to the School Board. He was in partnership with Robert Milligan for a while as a cycle business. He married Betsy Park, and she died in 1935, aged 70. They had 2 children who died young. William (1866–1931) eldest son of Peter Fisher. At the age of 19 he emigrated to Queensland, where he was involved with gold mining and prospecting and served in the Australian Bushmen’s Corps in the Boer War. After marrying he moved to California where he became a fruit grower, and his wife Rev. Alice Z. Laidlaw was pastor at the church in Narod. (formerly spelled ‘Ladlaw’, ‘Ladley’, ‘Laidla’, ‘Laidlay’, ‘Laidlae’, ‘Laidlie’, ‘Laidley’, ‘Laidlo’, ‘Laidlow’, ‘Laidhie’, ‘Laidly’, ‘Leudlaw’, ‘Laidlawhope’ (läd-løp) n. former farm in Liddesdale, probably on the Laidlehope Burn. It is listed as ‘Ladlawhope’ in the c.1376 rental roll of Liddesdale, with a value of 4 merks. On the 1541 rental roll it is ‘Ladlihope’ and still worth 4 merks, but vacant at that time. It is possible that this is the ‘Ladhope, of the laird of Howpales’ which were burned by the Armstrongs in 1544 (although ‘Lairhope’ could be meant). It is probably the ‘Laidhop’ listed in 1632 among the lands in Liddesdale owned by Gilbert Elliott of Stobs (and listed among rentals of Kelso Abbey). In 1718 it was combined with Whitrope in the farm of Stitchilhill (it is ‘Ladhope’ in 1718).

Laidlaw Place (läd-law-plis) n. street marked incorrectly for Ladylaw Place on the 1897 Ordnance Survey map.

Laidlaw’s (läd-lawz) n. William Laidlaw & Sons, manufacturers of hosiery and tweeds, founded in 1811 as a hosiery manufacturers in the ‘Mid Raw’. The business moved after a few years to 14 Howegate, with a second stocking-shop in the Backdamgate. Their main factory was next to the Little Haugh (Teviot Crescent Mills), erected in 1834, with extensions built to produce tweed in 1841. A weir was built in the Teviot to channel water along beside Teviot Crescent to power the mill; this was Laidlaw’s Cauld. The firm then introduced piecing machines made by Melrose’s. They also made blankets in the 1840s. They were listed at Teviot Crescent Mills in 1852. From 1864 they purchased Lynnwood Mills and concentrated on yarn spinning and tweed manufacture. They also operated the Weensland spinning mill for several years after 1864. The family retired from business in 1908 although the company name carried on for a while, and was succeeded by George Wilson & Sons. The main mills were later demolished, although some photographs still exist to show how extensive they were. The Museum has company ledgers from 1926–32.

Laidlaw’s Cauld (läd-lawz-kawld) n. weir once stretching over the Teviot near the old Victoria Laundry, named after Laidlaw’s Mill nearby. It was built in about 1834 by Gideon Scott & Sons, and obliterated the piece of ground known as the Fairy Faulds. Traces of it in the form of undressed stones between wooden supports, can still be easily seen when the river is low. It was used to divert water through a mill lade, which ran alongside Teviot Crescent and through Teviot Crescent Mills, coming out opposite Dickson’s & Laing’s Mill; the open lade was filled in in 1914. A second branch ran to the foot of Croft Road and came out near the Henderson College (now Dovecote Mews). The rubble-built Cauld itself was largely removed after WWII. In earlier times there had been a ford near here, just upriver from the main ford at the foot of Walter’s Wynd. In the 19th century, when the river was frozen, there were sometimes curling matches played there. The Cornet and his Right- and Left-Hand Men are shown crossing the Teviot near the Cauld in the 1846 painting of the Common Riding. It also features in the song ‘The Anvil Crew’ – ‘But when we came to Laidlaw’s Cauld, There a horde of pirates lay’ [WE].

Laidlaw Terrace (läd-law-te-ris) n. street constructed in 1888 along the south bank of the Teviot, off North Bridge Street. This involved building up the river-side, with the library being added at the top in 1904 (now Nos. 1 and 2).
Laidlehope Burn

It was named after William Laidlaw & Sons, yarn spinners and tweed manufacturers, with the street essentially being built to provide accommodation for workers at Teviot Crescent Mills. The bottom of the street long had an undeveloped area used as a sawmill yard and later a builder’s yard, with an adjacent footpath along the riverside.

Laidlehope Burn (laid-lup-burn) n. stream that rises near Kiln Knowe, above the Slitrig’s headwaters, and flows south to join the Roughley Burn, not far from the Nisneste Rige. This is related to the farm of ‘Ladlawhope’ recorded in c.1376. Where the burn was crossed by the Waverley Line there was Laidlehope Culvert (it is written ‘Laidlerhope’ by Smail in 1880).

In 1791 he was listed as a butler at Wells and in 1792, 1794 and 1797 as a house servant. His name was sometimes listed as ‘Luke’. He could be the James ‘Loch’ whose son Thomas was baptised in Southdean in 1774. Joshua (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1715 he was a gardener in Cavers. who married hosiery manufacturer James Renwick; James (1846/7–1909), grocer; Euphemia (1850/1–1918), who lived at Marlefield; Eliza (b.c.1853); Agnes (1855–1910) who married manufacturer Francis Elliot Wilson; Adam (b.1858), who died young; Christina Grey (b.1861), who married Alfred Warr, minister of Rosneath; and Jessie D. (b.1864), who married James White and lived in Glasgow. Adam (1859–1918) Burgh Chamberlain of Hawick, co-author of ‘The Hawick Tradition of 1514’ (1898) with R.S. Craig, and author of ‘Branxholme Castle and the Land of the Scotts’ (1901). The book ‘The Hawick Tradition of 1514’ was significant in establishing the connection between the Hawick Flag and Hexham, which overcame criticism at the time about the lack of historical evidence for the events of Hornshole. The 3rd son of Walter of Denholm Hill and Margaret Scott, he was educated in Denholm and at Teviot Grove Academy. He was an apprentice with Purdoms, trained further in Edinburgh and returned to Hawick to work with W.M. Syme. He served as Burgh Chamberlain for 16 years from 1891, before becoming the first Burgh Treasurer. He was one of the founder members of the Callants’ Club, its first Honorary Treasurer, and Vice-President during WWI. He was one of the founders of the Teviotdale Cycling Club, won a couple of Moss paul to Hawick races, and was also involved with other local sports organisations. He helped get the Liberal Club premises built and was Club Treasurer for many years. He was a member of the Archeological Society and the Berwickshire Naturalists’ Club. He also acted as Secretary of the Public Library and Secretary and Treasurer of the Museum. In addition he was heavily involved in erecting many of the monuments and plaques carried out in his day, as well as helping resuscitate Moss paul. He was a keen Common Riding supporter and pushed for the resumption of the riding of the full marches at Pilnuir and the cutting of the sod ceremony. Sinton’s bibliography of Hawick-related works (which he helped to compile) states that he possessed a rare 3rd edition of James Hogg’s ‘Flodden Field and the Colour’, inserted inside of which was a manuscript of the tune as played by the town piper in 1777.

Alexander ‘Sandy’ (1786–1850) hosiery manufacturer. He was son of John and Agnes Donaldson, brother of David, father of Walter and grand-father of J.T. of Linden Park. He was in partnership with his brother in the early 19th century with premises where the Sandbed Store was later located. Originally they spun yarn on the hand jenny and operated a small hosiery business. However, they joined with the Dicksons in 1802 to form Dicksons & Laings. He is probably the ‘A. Laing’ whose property at Dovemount is marked on Wood’s 1824 map. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He probably had the house Springbank built for him, above the main factory area. The family were Reform supporters of their day. In the 1834 electoral roll he and his brother David were listed as joint proprietors in the spinning mill. He is listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835 and in 1840 and 1841 was listed as manufacturer at Wilton Mills. In the 1841 census he was living at Wilton Mills. His first wife was Ann (1789–1822), youngest daughter of Walter Wilson (and sister of skinner Thomas Wilson), who died in childbirth. Their surviving children were: and Ann (b.1811) who married John Elliot and moved to Massachusetts, U.S.A.; John (b.1812); and Walter (b.1820). He secondly married Janet, daughter of William Roger, who was his cousin (their mothers both Donaldsons being sisters). They had 2 surviving children: Margery Donaldson, who married William Brown from Galashiels and was mother of Alexander Laing Brown; and Alexander Brown (b.1829), who married Jane Dinwiddie. She was a widow living at Springbank in 1851 along with her son Alexander and 2 servants. Alexander (18th/19th C.) from Minto Parish. In 1826 he married Elizabeth Thomson from Jedburgh. Alexander ‘Allie’ (b.1829) son of manufacturer Alexander and his 2nd wife Janet Roger. He followed his father into woollen manufacturing. He was partner (with William Irving) in the firm Laing & Irving and lived at Irybank. In the 1850s he was the Alexander (of Laing & Irvine) who was on the Railway Committee for Hawick District. He became a partner in Laing, Michie & Graham and Laing & Gawn, which later merged to become Currie, Lee & Gawn. His caricature appears in the book ‘Noctes Hawickiana’. He is probably the Alex recorded owning part of the former lands of Patrick Cuming ham in about 1874. He married Jane Milligan (1844–111), daughter of James Dinwiddie, who helped establish the hosiery industry in Dumfries. They had a large family, Alexander ‘Lal being the oldest son. Alexander James ‘Lal’ (b.1865) son of Alexander and Jane Milligan Dinwiddie. He was a prominent Hawick rugby forward from around 1883, being Captain of the Hawick team in 1888. He represented Roxburgh County and South of Scotland. He was known as a fast forward. He also played in the British team which first went to Australia in 1888. He emigrated to America shortly after this, married twice and had at least one daughter who visited Hawick a few times and died in Palm Springs. Andrew (b.1803/4) innkeeper of the Black Bull in Lilliesleaf, recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 and 1851 he was gamekeeper at Ayton in Berwickshire. His wife was Isabella and their children included Jessy, Isabella, Thomas, Elizabeth, James, Helen, Robert and Margaret Ann. David of Westerkirk (d.bef. 1727). He married Katherine, eldest daughter of William Elliot of Arkleton in 1720. His widow later married Charles Telfer, Hawick’s minister and thirdly Robert Elliot of Fenwick. David (d.1781) mason in Hawick. He was probably the David, son of Walter, born in Hawick in 1710. In 1734 he and his men were paid for 6½ days’ work they did on the West Port. He was recorded as a mason in 1742 when he witnessed a baptism for mason James Harkness and as a wright in 1745 when he witnessed 2 baptisms. In 1752 he was paid ‘for pointing a hole on the steeple-head, and altering a crack’. He was among the men paid in 1755 ‘for the herd’s house building’. He witnessed a baptism for John Richardson in 1772. He is probably the mason David who (along with mason Walter, likely his son) witnessed a baptism in 1790 for mason John (likely his other son). He is probably the Hawick mason who witnessed a baptism for William Douglas in 1794, along with mason John (possibly his son). He was deceased when his mason son Walter died in 1798. He married Helen Wallace and their children, baptised in Hawick Parish, included: Walter (b.1733); Ann (b.1735); Janet (b.1737); Helen (b.1739); Jean (b.1742); John (b.1744); and James (b.1746). It is possible he was also father of Robert (b.c.1748) and Hannah (b.c.1750), who married Andrew Hunter. The witnesses in 1742 were Robert Pringle, Excise Officer and wright Robert Pringle. He could be the David who hired the Hawick mortcloth in 1761. His death is recorded in 1781 as ‘Auld David Laing Mason’. David (1782–1840) son of John, he was a hosiery manufacturer in Hawick. He was originally in partnership with his brother Alexander and later as part of Dicksons & Laings of Wilton Mills. He was Cornet in 1805. He lived at No. 1 Wilton Bank, which was probably the same place as Springbank. He was one of the first members of Hawick Curling Club. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He married Janet, daughter of John Fiddes in Hobkirk Parish in 1811; she died in Glasgow in 1868, aged 79. Their children included: Elizabeth (b.1812); John (b.1814), draper; Agnes (b.1816); Helen (b.1819); Jemima (b.1824); and James Robert (b.1827). 3 of their daughters moved to Warkworth, Northumberland. His widow was living on Wilton Bank in 1841, along with Helen, Jemima, James and a servant. In 1851 Janet was living on the Howe gate with Jemima and James. He died at Springbank and is buried at St. Mary’s. David (19th C.) Bailie of the 1820s and 1830s. He went to Jedburgh along with 70 special constables to help keep the peace in the election of 1831. He may have been the same man as manufacturer David. After the election of 1832 he released a prisoner in Hawick (by the name of Scott) who had been accused of disorderly conduct and assault. This led to complaints on behalf of the Duke of Buccleuch and others. He is probably the ‘D. Laing’ whose property is marked on Wood’s 1824 map, on the middle of the north side of the Sandbed. Donald McLeod (b.c.1800) son of Thomas Alexander and Agnes Brown. He enlisted in the army in 1914 when he was probably only about 16. After WWI he worked on rubber plantations in Malaya. He married his cousin, Margery Haddon. George (1883–1947) son of manufacturer John Turnbull and Anna Thomson. He was educated at home and in Eastbourne, along with his brothers Walter, Ivan and Maurice. He farmed at Nikuyu in Kenya. Gilbert (d.1777) son of Walter, he became a merchant in St. Petersburg. His brother was William of Meikledale and his sister Margaret married John Elliot of Borthwickbrae. He also had a nephew ‘Watty’ Scott, who spent some time in St. Petersburg, but returned to Scotland in ruin. He suffered strokes in the late 1770s and died in Russia. He married Elizabeth Catherine Gardner in 1765. Some of his correspondence is in the National Archives, labelled ‘I desire my son William not to burn these letters till he has leisure to read them all over’. Ivan (1885–1917) 3rd son of John Turnbull and Anna Drummond Thomson. Born at Springbank (before it was the Haig Maternity Hospital), he was educated at home by a governess and at New College, Eastbourne, as well as in Belgium. When he returned to Hawick he lived at Ashleigh in East Stewart Place. Well-known as an athlete, he excelled at swimming, played three-quarter (wing) for Hawick R.F.C. and also played for the Teviotdale (mixed) hockey team. By some lucky chance he ended up playing for Scotland (with the home nations having separate hockey teams) in the 1908 London Olympics. The story goes that he was spotted on the platform by the other members of the team when their train passed through Hawick and convinced by a sporting friend, Dr. Norman Stevenson, to join the team. How much truth there is in this version is unknown (since a team sheet published the week before the game shows his name), but it certainly makes for a dramatic story! He played in 2 games, scoring the first ever Olympic goal in hockey (against Germany, which is ironic, given the events of a few years later). The official match report reads ‘At the beginning of the game Scotland attacked, and from a pass by Stevenson, Laing quickly scored the first goal’. That first game took place at Shepherd’s Bush stadium, months after the rest of the Games had finished. In the second game they were defeated by England. The team refused to play Wales for the 3rd place play-off (all in the same day!), and he apparently returned to Hawick on the overnight train. However, he never again represented Scotland at hockey. He went into partnership with his father in 1908, their hosier business being Drummond & Laings, Wilton Path. This was later taken over by Innes-Henderson’s, with whom he remained until enlisting in the War effort. In 1915 he joined the 28th Battalion of the London Regiment, the ‘Artists’ Rifles’, and was then gazetted into the Coldstream Guards. He was awarded the Military Cross at the Somme in 1916. But he was killed by machine gun fire when his unit were taking Gouzeacourt. Another tragic casualty of WWI, he is buried in Metz-en-Couture cemetery in France. In 2008, to commemorate the Olympic goal centenary, the Archeological Society commissioned Hamish Smith to make a trophy to be competed for annually by girls versus boys teams at the High School. Bailie James (17th C.) Hawick Magistrate. His 1672 will is in the National Archives (but he appears to have died significantly later). He was related to the Laing family who were later Chamberlains to the Duke of Buccleuch and owned land at the Flex, Burnfoot-on-Ale and elsewhere. He was a Bailie during the 1660s and 70s. He could be the James recorded as one of the owners of West Mains in 1663. He was Bailie in 1668 when the Council made a decree to support the breaking of illegal dykes on the Common. He may be the James who was Bailie in 1670/1, and whose brother William was farmer at Earlside. He is recorded as an ex-Bailie in a sasine of 1687 when his son Walter was witness to a sasine in Hawick. He could be the army in Germany, i.e. presumably considered undesirable to the town. While in Edinburgh Tolbooth he was among 7 of them who complained that they were not in fact the sorts of men who should be pressed into military service, but nevertheless were transported to the wars in Germany.

John (17th C.) resident of Woll in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll. His surname is written ‘Leing’. John of Westerkirk (17th/18th C.) Chamberlain to the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1696 when he was on the Commission of Supply for Dumfriesshire. His children included: Walter, Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch for Selkirkshire; John, Chamberlain in Liddesdale, who held lands at the Flex; Helen, who married James Grieve, tenant at Todshawhaugh; and another daughter who married Ogilvie of Brieryards. John (d.c.1780) son of John of Westerkirk and brother of Walter. He was Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch for Liddesdale in the period 1730–66. He also acted as ‘factor loco tutoris’, i.e. in place of one of the young Duke’s guardians for business in Teviotdale around 1756. In 1736 he rented ‘Stitchelhill and Leyes’ in Liddesdale from the Duke of Buccleuch. He lived at ‘The Roan’ and held lands at the Flex. He paid the window tax at Roan in Castleton Parish in 1748. He is recorded in 1774 writing from the Flex to his niece Meg (or Margaret) Elliot at Borthwickbrae, regarding the debts of Elliot of Borthwickbrae. He is also described as ‘of Burnfoot’ (probably in Ale Water); he was so recorded among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761 and on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. The Elliots of Borthwickbrae eventually came to possess the lands of Flex and Old Melrose through this marriage.

1777 he gained about 7 Scots acres of Hawick Common in the Division. John (18th C.) house servant at Wells in 1778 and 1779, when he was working for William Nassau Elliot.

John (1744–1816) son of David, he was a mason in Hawick. In 1781 he married Agnes, daughter of Alexander Donald (also listed as Donaldson), and she died in about 1824. They had 9 children, including: David (b.1782), manufacturer in Hawick; Agnes (b.1783); Alexander (b.1786), who married his cousin Janet Roger; Helen (b.1788); Walter (b.1790); John (b.1792); James (b.1799). The witnesses in 1790 were masons Walter and David (probably his brother and father) and in 1792 were wright William Roger (who also married a Donald) and mason David (probably his father). An unnamed child of his died in Hawick in 1798. He may be the John from Hawick recorded in a letter to a Selkirk lawyer in 1791. He may be the John who was recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick. He conveyed all his property to his eldest son David, with the condition that he should pay £100 in rentals to his third son Walter a year after his death, or alternatively to give Walter half of the property of his ‘opposite to the West Pant-Well of Hawick’; because David ended up liable for his debts, but the other children renounced their claims, but still expected a share of money from this arrangement, it led to a dispute between the 2 brothers in court in 1829. John (18th/19th C.) mason of Hawick who worked on Stobs Castle around 1800 and who helped compile a ‘New Valuation of Houses and Gardens in the Town of Hawick’ in 1814. This may be the same mason who died at Doveshaughbraehead in 1824, aged 57 and whose wife Isabella Hunter died in Hawick in 1841, aged 69; this family are buried in Bedrule churchyard. He may be the Hawick mason whose unnamed child died in 1798. He is probably the Hawick mason who witnessed a baptism for William Douglas in 1794, along with mason David. John (1812–76) hosiery manufacturer of the mid-19th century. He was son of Alexander and Ann Wilson. He was partner along with his father in Dicksons & Laings from an early age. But after his father’s death he went into business for himself at 8 and 9 Slitrig Crescent, the firm being named John Laing & Sons; it survived until 2006. He is listed as a merchant in Hawick among heads of households in Wilton Parish for 1840 and 1841. In 1851 he was living at 18 Buccleuch Street and listed as a manufacturer of woollen hosiery, employing 28 men and 14 women. He was the first to introduce power frames into Hawick in 1858, and was also an early promoter of the use of merino wool. He was the first President of the Hawick Bowling Club. In the 1850s he was on the Railway Committee for Hawick District. He married Mary, 7th daughter of Thomas Anderson of Kirkcudbright, and she died in 1892, aged 68. Their children were: Alexander and Mary Marion (buried in Menton Cemetery, France), who did not reach adulthood; John Hugh Alexander, a doctor in Edinburgh; Janetta McNaught; Thomas Anderson, manufacturer; Patrick Anderson (b.1853), also manufacturer; and Samuel James Anderson (b.1861). He died at Slitrig House. A portrait of him exists. John (b.1814) son of David and Janet Fiddes, he worked as a draper and later was a hosier and coal merchant. He was cousin. of John, the hosiery manufacturer. His draper's firm is recorded on the High Street in Slater's 1852 directory. He lived at about 55 High Street in 1841 and 49 High Street in 1851 and 1861. His wife was Janet, and their children included James, Ellen, David and William. John (b.1817/8) from Bedrule, son of John, he was a boot-maker in Hawick. In Slater's 1852 directory he was listed as a shoemaker on the High Street. In 1851 he was at about 29 High Street. In 1861 he is recorded at 10 High Street, and employed 8 men. John Turnbull (1854–1913) local manufacturer, son of Walter and Euphemia Turnbull. He was President of the South of Scotland Chamber of Commerce in the 1880s. He was prominent in local politics in the late 19th and early 20th centuries and lived at Lindan Park. He was also on the original committee of Hawick Bowling Club, and President in the 1860s. He married Anna Drummond (1855–1931), 2nd daughter of Dr. George Thomson. Their sons were Walter, George, Ivan and Maurice Wyville. For several years the family held an annual New Year's day mixed hockey match against the Grieves of Branxholme Park. Kenneth Joseph Price (b.1890) son of manufacturer Patrick. He married his cousin Florence ‘Fanny’ Elizabeth (who was born in Chicago), daughter of Joseph Price of Clapham Common. She was sister of Mrs. Robert Pringle of Wood Norton, and died in 1917, aged 54. Their children were Patrick Lindsay Price (Major with the K.O.S.B. in WWI), Norman Hugh Anderson (farmer at Cleuchhead), Kenneth Joseph Price (engineer with Melrose’s) and Margaret Frances Lindsay (married Isaac Grey Wallis). This branch of the family were known as the ‘Balcary Laings’. Patrick Lindsay Price (b.1886) eldest son of Patrick Anderson and Fanny Price. He was a Major in the K.O.S.B. and was awarded the Military Cross in WWI. He commanded ‘C’ Company in the Battle of Romani in 1916, securing the Suez Canal, and receiving the Order of the Nile from the Sultan of Egypt. Patrick Anderson (20th C.) from the Balcary Laings, son of Norman. He served with the 51st Highland Division at Dunkirk and later transferred to the Reconnaissance Corps. He was awarded the Military Cross in 1945. He set up the haulage firm P.A. Laing; and Drummond, who moved to Cape Town, South Africa. Patrick Anderson (1853–1921) son of John and Mary Anderson. He was a partner in John Laing & Sons, along with his brother Thomas. He lived at Balcary. He married Florence ‘Fanny’ Elizabeth (who was born in Chicago), daughter of Joseph Price of Clapham Common. She was sister of Mrs. Robert Pringle of Wood Norton, and died in 1917, aged 54. Their children were Patrick Lindsay Price (Major with the K.O.S.B. in WWI), Norman Hugh Anderson (farmer at Cleuchhead), Kenneth Joseph Price (engineer with Melrose’s) and Margaret Frances Lindsay (married Isaac Grey Wallis). This branch of the family were known as the 'Balcary Laings'. Norman Hugh Anderson (b.1888) son of manufacturer Patrick Anderson and Fanny Price, i.e. one of the ‘Balcary Laings’. He was a farmer at Cleuchhead. He married Cissy, daughter of Dr. George Gunn Bannerman. Their children included: George; Patrick, who received the Military Cross in WWII and set up the haulage firm P.A. Laing; and Drummond, who moved to Cape Town, South Africa. Patrick Anderson (1853–1921) son of John and Mary Anderson. He was a partner in John Laing & Sons, along with his brother Thomas. He lived at Balcary. He married Florence ‘Fanny’ Elizabeth (who was born in Chicago), daughter of Joseph Price of Clapham Common. She was sister of Mrs. Robert Pringle of Wood Norton, and died in 1917, aged 54. Their children were Patrick Lindsay Price (Major with the K.O.S.B. in WWI), Norman Hugh Anderson (farmer at Cleuchhead), Kenneth Joseph Price (engineer with Melrose’s) and Margaret Frances Lindsay (married Isaac Grey Wallis). This branch of the family were known as the ‘Balcary Laings’.
in John Laing & Sons, along with his brother Patrick. He was Honorary Treasurer of the South of Scotland Chamber of Commerce in the 1880s. He lived at Netherwood and Langlee. He married Agnes Eliza Douglas Brown from Kirkcudbrightshire (who died in 1933); she was sister of Esther Brown who married M.P. Alexander Laing Brown. They had a family of 11, including a daughter (who married Charles W. Grieve of Branxholme Park), Donald McLeod (who married his cousin, Margery Haddon), and Florence (who married her cousin Kenneth). This branch were known as the ‘Netherwud Laings’. Walter (17th C.) son of Bailie James. He was witness to a sasine in Hawick in 1687. Probably the same Walter witnessed a baptism in 1687. He is likely to be the merchant and listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. It is possible he was a witness to a baptism for Andrew Angus in Hawick Parish in 1678. Walter (1649/50–1736) son of John of Westerkirk. He was a ‘writer’ in Edinburgh. From 1717 he was Chamberlain to Francis, Duke of Buccleuch, covering Eckford, Lempitlaw and Langton (as well as Ettrick Forest for part of this period) and being based at Newark. He served in this function until 1734, being succeeded by William, probably his son. In 1716 he is ‘clerk to ye Duchess of Buccleugh’ and ‘Tenent of Park’ when his ‘servitor’ Walter Little married Janet Sooon. He married Margaret, 2nd daughter of Alexander Johnston of Elshiesheills about 1713. His sons were probably William, Gilbert and James. His eldest daughter Violet married David Scott, tenant at Carterhaugh and his 2nd daughter Marion married John Laing, farmer at Westerkirk (and surely a relative) about 1750. Another daughter, Margaret, married John Elliot of Borthwickbrae (and through her the Elliots of Borthwickbrae would come into possession of her uncle John’s lands of Flex, Old Melrose, etc.). He died at Todshawhaugh, home of his brother-in-law James Grieve. Walter (b.1680) son of William and Jane Thorbrand. He is probably the Walter who married Janet Bruntfield, and had children Elspeth (b.1703) and David (b.1710). Only his wife witnessed the baptisms, since he was forbidden from attending because of the scandal he caused by getting his niece (Agnes Scott) pregnant, having the child over the Border and then pressuring her and others to swear that there was no bastard child. The witnesses in 1703 were weaver Robert Tinlin and glover James Burn. Walter (d.bef. 1764) probably son of Walter, he was also sometimes Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch at Newark. It is said that he was given the position after risking his life to save some papers for the Scotts of Buccleuch at Dalkeith House. His eldest daughter Margaret married John Elliot of Borthwickbrae in 1764, and she later inherited the lands of Meikledale, Flex, Old Melrose and Burnfoot. He had a son Gilbert who became a merchant in St. Petersburg and another son, William of Meikledale. James may have been another son. His relationship with John (also a Chamberlain to Buccleuch) is unclear. Walter (d.1798) son of David, he was a mason in Hawick. He is probably the son of David and Helen Wallace born in Hawick in 1733. He is probably the mason Walter who (along with mason David, likely his father) witnessed a baptism in 1790 for mason John (likely his brother). Walter (b.c.1790) farmer at Denholmhill. He is probably also the builder in Denholm, recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He acquired Denholmhill farm in about 1818 and expanded the quarrying, which had been started by the Fergusons and the Littles. He opened up the eastern (white) quarry and the western (red) one. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He was still alive in 1851, but dead before 1861. His son Walter took over the farm and quarry. Walter (b.1819/9) son of Walter. He took over the farm of Denholmhill and the quarry there. In 1861 he was farming 520 acres, employing 26 people on the farm, and also tenant of the quarries, employing 37 masons and 26 labourers. He was still recorded there in 1868. His wife was Margaret, and their children included Walter, Christina, Thomas, Adam and Helen. Walter (1820–1895) manufacturer of Laing & Irvine’s and later of Dicksons & Laings. He was son of Alexander and Ann Wilson and brother of John. He carried on with the firm after his brother John split off to form John Laing & Sons. He lived at Springbank and later Lin- den Park. He was a member of the new Town Council who argued for continued Council involvement in the Common Riding in the 1860s. He was also one of the founders of the Working Men’s Building & Investment Co., and its Chairman from 1890–95. In addition he was on the School Board and became Chairman of the Science and Technical School in Hawick, as well as the School of Art. A Liberal in politics, he was President of the Hawick Advanced Liberal Association. He married Euphemia Turnbull, who died in 1895. They had a large family, but all except John Turnbull died before reaching adulthood. Walter (1882–1959) son of John Turnbull and Anna Thomson. He was brother of Maurice, Ivan and George. He played for Hawick R.F.C. and served in the Coldstream Guards. There is a letter from him to his brother Maurice, bringing the news of Ivan’s death on the front. He married Joan Gotto from Belfast and had 2 children. He died in County Down. William (17th C.) tenant in Earlside, brother of James, who was Bailie in Hawick. He was tried in 1678 for being a Covenanter supporter, the accusations including that he was ‘present at divers house and field conventicles, kept at Lilsliemuir, Hassendeanmuir, Blackriddelhill, or about or near the said places, where he has heard John Welsh, Samuel Arnot, Mr. G. Semple, Mr. Riddell, Mr. Robert Traill, Mr. George Johnstone, Mr. John Blackater, Mr. David Williamson, and divers other declared rebels’, as well as being a local ringleader and resetting rebels. Refusing to give up any names, to pay the 500 mark fine or accept Episcopalianism, he was sentenced to be deported to the slavery plantations in Virginia. After 3 months in jail, he was sent on a prison ship from Leith to Gravesend. However, the person in charge of them could not find Ralph Williamson, who was to keep them in prison until the transport ship was available and so they were set free in London. Like many of the others (including Alexander Peden), he probably made it back to Scotland. He is listed among those declared fugitives for refusing to take ‘the Test’ in 1684; he was then recorded being ‘in Hawick’. Their crime was ‘rebellion and reset of rebels’, meaning religious non-conformity following the re-introduction of Episcopalianism. On this second occasion he did not escape, but was among 32 men who were transported to Carolina, subject to great hardship on the journey and then after arrival, so that only 6 returned after the Revolution. Local tradition says that he died on the journey and his body was thrown overboard. He may be the William ‘Lyng’ whose widow was recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls, listed after the house of Earlside in 1694. He might be the William on the list of Hawick men named in the 1673 trial following the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. He could be the William who witnessed a baptism for James Hamilton in Hawick in 1673 and another for William Welch (or ‘Wetch’) in 1675. He may be the William who witnessed a baptism for William Scott (who probably lived in the Borthwick valley) in 1676, as well as for Rev. Patrick Cunningham in 1680. It is said that he had a brother James in Hawick. The James who was tenant in Earlside in 1683 may have been his son. Bailie William (17th/18th C.) Hawick Councillor recorded in 1683 and 1684, who was Bailie in 1685 and in 1697. He may be the William in Hawick (married, aged 28) who gave evidence in 1681 in the trial of Covenanters who hd attacked Drumlanrig’s Tower. In 1685, along with Walter Scott, he had permission from the Council to be reimbursed for the costs of building the ‘Steeple Loft’ in St. Mary’s, suggesting that he was Bailie around the time of construction. In 1688 and 1700 he witnessed baptisms for merchant John Scott ‘Whiteyetts’ and he witnessed another for Robert Hogg in Weensland in 1688 He was ‘late bayleyea’ on the list of subscribers for the Kirk bell drawn up in 1693/4. He is probably the ‘Wm Laing laite Baileyea’ who paid tax for 4 hearths on the west-side of Hawick, according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694; this suggests that he lived in a large house. He is probably the William who, along with ‘Mr James’ witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1700 for glover James Scott. He was ‘balyie’ when he witnessed a baptism in 1686 for schoolmaster John Purdon and ‘late Bailie’ in 1700 when witnessing a baptism for the same man. He also witnessed baptisms for shoemaker John Scott in 1708, for wigmaker John Scott, for glover James Scott and for tailor John Scott in 1709, for smith Thomas Huntly in 1714, and for miller Robert Elliot and for William Ogilvie (who married his daughter) in 1718. He could be the same ex-Bailie who in 1721 gave the excuse that he could not mount the ‘pillar’ of repentance in the Kirk because he was ‘valetudinarian and troubled with an uneasiness in his hough and feet’; the Session allowed him instead to pay a fine and be rebuked in his usual pew; it is unclear what his transgression was. In 1716, 1718 and 1721 he witnessed baptisms for John Ekron. He was probably the William born in Hawick in 1652/3, son of James and Helen Elliot. This William married Jane Thorbrand (probably daughter of Bailie James), and their children were: James (b.1670); Jane (b.1678); Walter (b.1680), who married Jane Bruntfield; David (b.1681); Margaret (b.1684), who married James Gledstains; Helen (b.1686), married a Grieve; Anna (b.1688), who married John Watson, Clerk to the Regality and then John Scott in 1724; John (b.1689); and Martha (b.c.1690), who married William Ogilvie. The witnesses in 1676 were William Elliott of Stobs and Thomas Scott.
Laing an Irvine’s

of Whitslade, suggesting that he had some standing in the Town at that time. The witnesses in 1680 were William Scott, glover and Mr John Purdom and in 1688 were James Scott and Robert Wright. In 1720 he was ‘late bailie of Hawick’ when he and Isobel Tait were recorded as ‘Fornicators’ when their daughter Mary was baptised. He is probably the William ‘Lang’ mentioned in 1735 when the widow of Robert Scott of Falnash sold her property on the Howegate, which was to the west of his, which by then belonged to James Scott. William (1715/6–74) Chamberlain to Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch. He had a house on the Fore Row, referred to as ‘the Chamberlain’s Hoose’. He may also have been related to the William who, in the 1720s, owned a small corn farm and yard to the north (i.e. in Wilton Parish) of where the Grammar School was built at the Sandbed. He succeeded as Chamberlain for Ettrick Forest in 1735, taking over from Walter, probably his father; he served in this capacity until 1766. He was recorded in a Selkirk libel case in 1737. His brother was James, and he must also have been related to John, who was Chamberlain for Liddesdale (probably his uncle). Gilbert was probably another brother. Hudshouse (in Castleton Parish) was rented to him and his brother by the Buccleuch estates in 1742. In 1750 he purchased the lands of Meikledale from William Scott. He left these lands to his nephew, William Elliot Lockhart. William (18th/19th C.) tenant of Sinton Mains. In 1813 he brought a case against John Smith, carter in Selkirk, claiming that Smith had taken his cart and harness when they were with an innkeeper in Edinburgh (also spelled ‘Lainge’, ‘Layng’, ‘Laynge’ and ‘Leing’ in earlier documents).

Laing an Irvine’s (laing-an-ir-vinz) n. wholesale tweed merchants of the 19th century, with their main factory built in 1856 at the corner of Commercial Road and Bath Street. They were effectively an offshoot of Dicksons & Laings, being tweed manufacturers and later tweed merchants. For a while they operated out of Stonefield Mill. They also had a mill in Peebles. At the 1867 Paris Exposition the firm gained a bronze medal as a manufacturer of cloth. They went bankrupt in 1868, and the building later had many uses. They also traded at 26 High Street, which was sometimes called ‘Irvine’s Close’. The partners were Alexander (‘Allie’) Laing and William Irvine. The company partially reformed as Irvine, Grierson & Stevenson. There were also later firms of Laing, Michie & Graham and Laing & Gawn, which merged into Currie, Lee & Gawn.

Laing Terrace (laing-te-ris) n. short street off Dowmenvout Place, built in 1872, and named after the Laings of Dicksons & Laings. It was essentially built to provide nearby housing for workers at Wilton Mills.

lains (länz) n., pl., poet. loins – ‘For my lains ar fillet wi’ foulsumse desese, an’ ther is nae soundness in my flesch’ [HSR], ‘Let thair eye be derkenet that thaye seena, an’ let thair lains containwalle shakk’ [HSR].

laip (läp) v., arch. to lap – ‘A dog or cat licks or laps (= laps) milk, etc.’ [ECS], ‘…the cuill, silver Teiot, where it laippeet bye leafy Mon-tieviot’ [ECS], ‘The dog’s laipin’ a’ the kilttin’ milk’ [GW] (also written ‘lap’).

laipie-luggit (lä-pee-lu-gee’, -gi’) adj., arch. lop-eared, having prominent or protruding ears (also ‘laipy-lugget’ etc.; noted by E.C. Smith).

lair (lär) n., arch. a place of shelter for livestock – ‘Three lambs I hae on Crawbrae lair Will no be worth a benty-strae’ [HSR], a final resting place, burial plot v., arch. to drive livestock to an enclosure – ‘That part of the Common called the west end of the little Bailie Hill, where Mungo Armstrong used to lair the black cattle under the charge in the middle of the day’ [C&L] (from Middle English; the word exists in several local place names, e.g. Cherry Lair, Dinmont Lair, Ewelair Hill, Lairhope, Lairs, Lambaird Edge, Lamblair Hill, Lamblair Knowe, Lamblairs, Marklad and Nolt-lair).

lair (lär) n., arch. learning, education, lore – ‘…Left him scarce ane, nor durst he cock His trusty genet; for girt fo’k Had now found out by college lair, That God had giv’n them ilka hare’ [JR], ‘As little can lair make a weak mind produce strong thoughts’ [JoHa], ‘Yet though I canna dive into the deeps, Not ‘natomise the joints o’ classic lair …’ [JoHa], ‘…an’ yow that has schule lair an’ awquent wi’ sae nectar and new licht o’ things they ha’e fund oot noo-a-days aboot the sterns an’ sae an’ sae’ [BCM1880] (also learn).

laird (lärd) n. a landowner, landed proprietor, nobleman, lord – ‘For here’s the laird’s Jock, the laird’s Wat, And Hobie Noble, come to set thee free’ [CPM], ‘I envy not the laird his wealth, the lord o’ his degree …’ [JoHa], ‘My faither was laird o’ a weil stockit mailin’’ [JT], ‘Says the auld laird ‘We’ll hae nae crap This drookit year’’ [WL], ‘There was no belly-crawling dedication to some laird who had promised to take a dozen copies’ [DH] (also sometimes capitalised; in Scotland the word was applied to the owner of a estate of any size and hence is closer to the English ‘squire’ than ‘lord’).
Laird

Laird (lārd) n. nickname of James Scott, the first recorded Cornet. Thomas and Robert Scott are both recorded in 1693/4 with the same nickname, suggesting perhaps that they were all related, as well as an earlier James recorded in 1676. John Chisholme also had this same nickname in 1712. There are other similar nicknames, e.g. ‘the Blue Laird’, ‘the Black Laird’, ‘the Duddie Laird’ and ‘the Muckle Laird’. Many of these may have been Hilliesland ‘Lairds’, i.e. local men who kept fields up beyond the Wellogate, or elsewhere around Hawick. When a landowner had a grown son they would often be the ‘Auld Laird’ and ‘Young Laird’. In earlier centuries it was common for the sons of a major landowner to be known as ‘the Laird’s Wat’, ‘the Laird’s Jock’, etc.

the Laird (θlārd) n. nickname of the 18th and early 19th centuries, commonly given to men with some property, e.g. William Laidlaw, even small fields, e.g. the Hilliesland Lairds. It may also be that the name was used jocularly or ironically. A person called ‘John ye Laird’ was one of the poor of the Parish who is recorded receiving some of the collection in 1711 and ‘Wat the Laird’ was recorded around 1800.

Laird’s Hill (lārdz-hil) n. hill in the upper Borthwick valley, just north-east of Old HowPasley, reaching a height of 343 m.

lairdship (lārd-ship) n. state of being a laird, territory and rights of a laird – ‘...and the said lairdship of Coklaw to cum to the airis famail of the said James ...’[SB1519].

Laird’s Knowe (lārd-z-now) n. small hill on Craik Moor, just to the north of the old Roman road. The stream to the north-east is Laird’s Cleuch Sike. It is unclear which Laird gave his name to these features.

the Laird’s Wat (θlārdz-waw) n. popular name for Walter Scott of Goldielands – ‘...And the laird Watt, that worthy man, Brought in his name to these features.

lairge (lāj) adj. large – ‘...aw just went rummaging about, an’ then aw saw a lairge fire, an’ made ma way towards it’ [JHH].

lairge (lāj) adv., arch. boastfully (this meaning peculiar to Roxburghshire), adj., arch. boastful, bombastic, copious, full – ‘...and obligt that the sd. persons shall give satisfactione to ye kirke as orthodox and large’[BR1689].

lairgeness (lāj) n. largeness, arch. generosity, largesse – ‘The discriptione of Valter Scot of Govdilandis his qualities. ... Heir lysis breit lair-genes & lavtie ... ’[MI1506].

Lairhope Burn (lā-rup-burn) n. stream in the headwaters of the Teviot, joining Hazelpo
Lairhope Braes

Burn to become Falnash Burn. It rises around Pike Hill and is fed by smaller streams such as Ruthead Sike, Hare Grain, Lousey Hass and Crib Sike. There is a marshy area around Lairhope farm.

Lairhope Braes (lā-rup-brāz) n. hilly slope just to the west of Lairhope, in the headwaters of the Teviot. The name presumably derives from being a slope on the old road that used to pass from here to the top of the Borthwick valley via Howpasley.

lairn (lārn) v. to learn – ‘she gien thum a bible verse ti lairn every night’, ‘A lairned eet fri ma fither’, ‘...gie me understan’in’, that I may learn thy commandments’ [HSR], ‘‘Gin I hadna trainvalled’, the first ane said, ‘I had never lairned.’ ‘Gin I hadna my buiks, quo the second ane, ‘I had naething airned’’ [WL], to teach – ‘that skelpin lairned um aa right’, ‘This day Mr John Purdom gave in ane account of poor scholar’s quarter wages ... and other three in the end of the account are set doun, whom he learned gratis’ [PR1712], ‘Ye glowrin’ idiot. That’ll lairn ye tae glower at your eiffels’ [JrS].

lairnt (lārn’t) pp. learned – ‘...And mony generations syne, Cauldrie, I should hae lairnt to care’ [DH], ‘...that’s where hei lairnt about the world’ [IWL], ‘And the thing that makes oo spacial Is oo speak in oor ain way, And now that oo hev lairnt ee, Ee can dae eet tae’ [IWL] (also written ‘lairned’).

Lairs (lārzh) n. original name for lands that were later known as Lairhope. Robert Turnbull ‘in laris’ was recorded in 1493. It was owned by George Scott in 1501, with some dispute over whether it had been historically held ‘in blanch farm’ or ‘by ward and relief’, from the superior, James Douglas of Drumlanrig. Robert Scott was also recorded as tenant there in 1501. The lands of ‘Lares and Lareshope’ are listed among lands owned by Anna Duchess of Buccleuch in 1686, so they were separate at one point (it is ‘Laris’ in 1501; see also Lairhope and Larristofts).

lait (lāt) v., arch. to allure, entice (noted as an old Teviotdale word by J. Jamieson).

Lain (lā’-in) n., arch. Latin. The following gem is meant to have been recited by a Hawick pupil in the early 1800s – ‘Cæsar Galliam intravit summa diligentia omnibus copiis (Cæsar entered Gaul on the top of a diligence, his forces going in the omnibus)’.

Lakes Haugh Park (läks-hawch-pawrk) n. former name for a piece of land in Minto Parish. It was listed ‘Lake’s-haugh’ in 1779, with a value of £36 9s 10d. It was among lands liferented to Robert Trotter in 1779, but disputed in 1780, with a rental of £10. It was still listed in the Land Tax Rolls of 1811.

Lal (lawl) n. nickname for Alex Laing.

Laldie (lawl-dee) n. a thrashing, particularly in the phrase ‘gie it laldie’, which figuratively means to give it one’s all, perform a task with full energy – ‘...several of the band we’re givin it laldie, playin away’ [IA] (common througout Scotland).

Laith (lāth) adj. loath – ‘...An’, wi’ a look that seems to say, ‘I’m laith’, ‘I’m sure I’m neither laith nor lazy. Though my auld banes be stiff and crazie’ [JoHa], ‘To hurt the creatures I’ll be laith, Gar but the owner pay the skaith’ [JR], ‘To injure you I would be laith, So hide not thou thy horns frae me ...’ [TCh], ‘Bit ‘nae man can tether tieme nor teide,’ an, sweerdrawn an laith thio A was ...’ [ECS], ‘...Ilk feathered songster’s laith to gang Frae the Bank aboon the Boosie’ [DA], ‘Sae, naething laith, hei drank it slowly doon ...’ [DH], ‘Aw tell o’ the day that Scobie was laith ...’ [MB].

laithly (lāth-lee) adj., poet. loathsome, horrible – ‘Aboon the aizles’ dying gleid. The laithly kerlyn satte’ [JTe].

Lamb (lawm) n. Adam (17th C.) resident of Hassendean Parish. He married Bessie Laidlaw and their twins James and Janet were baptised in Hawick in 1689. The witnesses were William Swan and Patrick Bridges. Adam (d.1808) weaver in Hawick, son of weaver John. Perhaps the same Adam married Janet Linton and had a daughter Isabel baptised in Hawick in 1779. He may also be the Adam who married Agnes Hogg (also from Hawick) in 1794. Adam (1826–1913) born in Hawick, son of John and Elizabeth. He trained as a thongmaker, but then emigrated to Galt, Ontario, later moving to MacGregor, Manitoba, where he was among the first settlers. He firstly married Janet Gibb, and secondly married Mary Queen. His children included Robert E. (1862–1932). Agnes ‘Bonnie Aggie’ (19th/20th
C.) seller of confectionary in Hawick. She is believed to have been the originator of the recipe for Hawick Balls. She may have started in Needle Street and then moved to Commercial Road, where she was in business with Jessie McVittie. She certainly had a shop at 31 Drumlanrig Square for a while. She is probably the Agnes Lamb who married Robert Young, who was a baker at 75 High Street. Andrew (17th C.) tenant in Newlands. In 1684 he was listed among local men declared as fugitives for being Covenanters. He is probably also the Andrew ‘servant to Andrew Ogilvie’ (of Newlands, who was associated with Brauxholme) on the same list; he was thus listed twice. Archibald (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded in Cavers itself in 1741. His children included: Ann (b.1741); and Archibald (b.1743). Benjamin (b.1766) son of James, he was a weaver in Hawick. He married Mary Weens in 1790, and she died in 1806. Their children included: Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (18th/19th C.) recorded in 1799 when her illegitimate child was buried in Hawick. George (17th C.) recorded being ‘about Bonjedburgh-mill’ in 1684 on a list of Covenanters fugitives. George (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Wester Mill in 1751. Probably the same George witnessed in 1751 a baptism for Walter Ker, resident of Borthaugh. He married Mary Elliot in Wilton Parish in 1743 and their children included David (b.1745) and Jean (b.1751). The witnesses in 1751 were Walter and Robert Scott. George (18th C.) gardener who married Janet Laidlaw in Hawick Parish in 1759. Their children included: Margaret (b.1760); Janet (b.1763); Mary (b.1765); George (b.1768); and Walter (b.1771). The witnesses to the 1760 baptism were John Laidlaw and James Briggs. He is probably the George recorded as owner of a horse in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, and the George who died in 1802, father of cooper Walter. It is possible he is the George, son of John and Janet Scott, who was born in Wilton Parish in 1740. He may also be the gardener at Wilton Lodge listed in 1792–94, when he was working for Lord Napier. George (18th/19th C.) weaver in Hawick. His unnamed child died in 1809. In 1797 in Hawick possibly the same George married Betty Turnbull from Wilton. Hugh (18th/19th C.) Hawick baker. His daughter Betty died in 1801 and his son Hugh in 1805. James (d.c.1798) tenant in ‘Whitrige’ in 1683 when his will was recorded. This could have been Whitriggs or perhaps somewhere else in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk and Peebles. James (17th C.) name of 2 separate residents of Denholm on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. James (17th C.) resident at Flight in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. James (d.bef. 1808) weaver in Hawick. He was already deceased in 1808 when his son Adam died. James (b.1765/6) weaver who was an old man living at Slaidhills with his daughter Elizabeth in 1841 and 1851. James (b.c.1795) from Teviothead, he was an agricultural labourer. In 1841 he was living at ‘Eildrige Shank’, i.e. Eilrig Burnfoot and in 1851 he was at Dodburn. His wife was Catherine and their children included James, John, Catherine, George, Jane and Walter. Janet (17th C.) recorded among the poor of Hassendean Parish in 1694, when she was at Stichers. Janet (19th/20th C.) shopkeeper of a baby linen and fancy goods shop at 59 High Street. She can be seen outside the shop in an early photograph. The shop sign read ‘John Lamb’, presumably her father, and they must have been from the Needle Street family. She retired in 1928 and the business was sold to Miss Rutherford and later continued by Mr. Stormont. John (15th C.) tenant in Wilton who is mentioned in 1493. Jock Elliot (from Caverton) had remission for several crimes, including stealing 16 sheep from him. John (1652/3–1725) weaver in Bedrule. He is buried in the Bedrule kirkyard. He is probably the John listed on the Hearth Tax records for Bedrule Parish in 1694, and likely related to the William who is listed after him.
Lamb (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded in ‘Gurnford’ in 1703, when his son John was baptised. This happened at the same time as the baptism of a son of John Lorraine, with the witnesses being Adam Scott and Walter Scott. He had other children George (b.1704) and John (again, b.1706). He may be the John who, along with William, witnessed a baptism for Robert Ormiston in Boonraw in 1696. He may be the John whose son William married Jean Turnbull in 1726. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Clarilaw in 1724. He is probably the John who in 1733 and 1738 witnessed baptisms for Robert Ormiston, resident at Boonraw. He married Bessie Collins in Wilton in 1711. Her surname is also recorded as ‘Colven’ and their children included: Janet (b.1718); and John (b.1724). The witnesses in 1724 were John Dryden and Thomas Dodds. He is probably the John who witnessed a baptism in 1729 for William, who was living at Stirches. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Janet Scott and their children included: Agnes (b.1730); John (b.1732); Margaret (b.1735); Robert (b.1738); George (b.1740); Jean (b.1743); an unnamed child (b.1745); and Janet (b.1753). John (d.1805) gardener on the Cross Wynd. In 1772 he witnessed a baptism for William Turner and Agnes Lamb (perhaps his brother-in-law and sister). He married Janet Turner and their children included Agnes (b.1757), William (b.1760) and Andrew (b.1761). The witnesses in 1757 were the whole of Wilton Congregation, in 1761 were Bailie Robert Scott, merchant, and gardener Andrew (who was surely related to his wife). John (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1877 he married Isobel Welsh, also from Hawick. Their daughter Joan was baptised in Hawick, probably in 1789. The witnesses were Andrew Elliot and Thomas Miller. John (b.1793) son of James and Mary. He was a needle-maker at 10 Mid Raw. He is recorded there in 1841, 1851 and 1861. He was listed as a needle-maker in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Janet and their children included Margaret, Mary, Elizabeth (‘Betsy’), Benjamin, Agnes, Isabella, Janet and John. Mary (18th C.) cook and chambermaid at Burnhead in at least the period 1786–88, when she was working for William Scott. Matthew (15th C.) resident of Raperlaw. In 1494/5 he was convicted of common theft ‘of old and new’, but his case was suspended. Miss (18th/19th C.) seller of ‘rock boils’ from the end of Needle Street in the 1800s. This could be the same as the person mentioned in ‘Hawick Immortals’ – ‘Auld Mag Lamb and her penny krame’. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He is recorded as a ‘fisher’ in 1708. He married Bessie Wilson and their children included James (b.1708), with baptismal witnesses carriers John Hardie and James Aitken and Bailie James Deans. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jane Ormiston in Wilton Parish in 1764. Their children included: John (b.1765); Jean (b.1767); James (b.1769); Robert (b.1771); Janet (b.1772); and Robert (again, b.1781). The witnesses in 1769 were Andrew Turner and Thomas Reid, in 1772 were Bailie Andrew Scott and Alexander Bunyan (Kirk Officer) and in 1781 were weaver John Briggs and Thomas Miller. Robert (b.1784/5) born in Hawick, he was a farm worker in Robertson Parish. He was living at Hoscote Cottage in 1841 and Deanburnhaugh in 1851. By 1861 he was a gardener in Kelso. He married Christian Noble and their children included: John (b.1808/9); Betty (b.1810/1), who married a Gibson; Robert (b.1812); Margaret (b.1814); Robert (b.1816); Christian (or ‘Christy’, b.1819); Miney (b.1821); Agnes (b.1826); Peter (b.1832/3); and Barbara (b.1830/1). The first 2 children were baptised in Minto Parish and the next 4 in Ashkirk Parish. Robert (b.c.1832) born at Wilton Pathhead, son of John and Betsy. He trained as a woollen hosierydresser, like his father. He emigrated to Galt, Ontario, along with his older brother Adam. They later moved to MacGregor, Manitoba, where they were among the first settlers. He farmed there and gave 2 acres of his land to establish a school, which he called Path Head School, after his birthplace. There is a cairn marking the location of the former school. Stewart (b.c.1815) Hawick resident who married Margaret Murray in 1840. He was found guilty of mobbing and rioting against Tory supporters at the 1837 election in Hawick, along with 3 others (and one who was found not guilty). Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at Woodhead (probably in Ewesdale). He was one of the founders of the Wisp Club in 1826. Thomas (1851–1939) Slater in Hawick. He joined the Hawick Fire Brigade in 1872, eventually becoming Captain and retiring from the service in 1922. Also a keen bowler, he won the Buccleuch Bowling Club championship 11 times. Walter (1771–1846) son of George and Janet Laidlaw. He was a cooper of the Sandbed, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. In 1841 he was living at about No. 6. He married Christian, daughter.
of William Phillips and Mary Scott. Their children included: George (b.1809), who moved to Canada; Mary (b.1811); William (b.1812), who trained for the ministry; Janet (b.1814); and Christian (b.1817), who was the 2nd wife of James Damone Kennedy. William (16th C.) recorded as Parson of Cavers Parish in March of 1546/7. It is unknown how long he held this position or if he was ever in the parish. He was the sister's son and heir of Patrick Panter, who was Abbot of Cambuskenneth and Secretary of State. William (17th C.) recorded as ‘walker in Bonjedburgh’ in 1684 on a list of Covenanters fugitives. He was presumably a waulker. William (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. William (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish (when Hassendean was still part of it). He is recorded at Newton in 1688. He married Isabel Leyden in 1686 and their children included: William (b.1687); James (b.1688); and George (b.1689). The witnesses in 1687 were William Leyden and James Smith and in 1688 were William and James Leyden, who were surely related to his wife. He is probably the William who witnessed a baptism in 1681 and another for William Scott in Newton in 1683. He may be the William who, along with John, witnessed a baptism for Robert Ormiston in Boonraw in 1696. William (17th C.) resident at Stirches according to the 1694 Hearth Tax roll for Hassendean Parish. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Easter Alemoor in 1714 when his daughter Euphan was baptised. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Boonraw in 1724 and Stirches in 1729. He could be the William who witnessed a baptism in 1735 for William Scott, resident of Weston Burnfoot. He married Agnes Renwick in 1719 (and perhaps also proclaimed in 1718, although no wife’s name is included). Their children included: John (b.1720); Jean (b.1724); Euphan (b.1727); John (b.1729); William (b.1731); and William (again, b.1735). The witnesses in 1724 were James and John Armstrong, in 1727 included William Lorraine and in 1729 were John Lamb (surely related) and John Scott. He is probably the William who witnessed a baptism for Walter Lorraine (resident of Stirches) in 1729 and another for John Lorraine in 1754. He may be the William who hired the Hawick mortcloth in 1760. He could be the William ‘Ballad Singer’ who was already deceased in 1797 when his daughter Jean died in Hawick. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, son of John. He was recorded living at Wester Burnfoot in 1735. In 1726 he married Jean, daughter of Robert Turnbull, the marriage being proclaimed in both Wilton and Minto Parishes. Their children included: Jean (b.1728); Euphan (b.1734); Johanna (b.1735); and Robert (b.1739). The witnesses in 1735 were Walter Riddell and William Sanderson. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick who married Sarah Hume in 1763. His wife was from Minto Parish. They had an unnamed child baptised in 1766. William (d.1815) recorded in the Hawick death register as ‘Betty Ingles’s Husband’. It is unclear why he would have been recorded in this way, but presumably by the time of his death his wife was more well-known in the Town than he was. Rev. William (1812–77) born in Hawick Parish, he was son of cooper Walter and Christian Phillips. He was educated at Edinburgh High School and University and licensed as a minister by Jedburgh Presbytery. He was preacher at Caerlenrig (Teviothead) Chapel of Ease 1843–44 and was then translated to Ednam, where he remained until his death. He married Christian Archibald MacDougall, daughter of Joseph Yair, minister of Eckford. His children were: Helen Josephine (b.1869); Walter minister of Lauder; Christian (b.1871); William (b.1874); George (b.1875); and John Yair (b.1877).

Lambert (lawn-bur’) n. Andrew (b.1814/5) shepherd at Clerklands Cottages in 1851. His wife was Mary A. and they had a son James. James (b.1786/7) farmer at Clerklands in Lilliesleaf Parish. He was recorded as a miller in Lilliesleaf in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1851 he was farming 575 acres and employed 14 workers. He was already widowed and living with his son William. He may be the James who was recorded in Ashkirk Parish in 1819 when his marriage to Jean Melrose was announced in Melrose Parish. James (b.1809/10) born in Selkirk Parish, he was probably son of James. He was farmer and miller at Midlem Mill and Toft Barns in Bowden Parish. In 1851 he was farming 85 acres and employing 4 labourers. His wife was Margaret from Heriot. Their children included Isabella, Janet, Margaret, Jean, Helen and James. James (19th C.) railway guard. He married Agnes (1829–1916), daughter of William Murray. Later she kept a washhouse at 29 Wellogate Place, afterwards run by their daughter Helen. Her sister-in-law (also Helen) the Lamp (thu-lawm) n. the 1537 Charter stipulates that a lamp should be permanently burning before the High Altar of the Parish Church ‘... for the souls of the Barons of Hawick, founders of said lamp, and their successors’. According to the Charter it was the duty of the heirs of James Blair to provide this lamp, and they thus held some special status through paying one penny Scots each Pentecost in return for a half particate of land. Whether this lamp was part of the original foundation of St. Mary’s (and hence started by the Lovels) or began with Douglas of Drumlanrig, or at some point between, is unknown. It is also unclear when this arrangement ended, but certainly the burning of the lamp would have been abolished by the Reformation.

The presence of Sir James Douglas at Parliament during the ratification of the Confessions of Faith in 1560 effectively exonerated the people of Hawick from their obligation to maintain the lamp. The lamp symbol appears on the Hawick coat of arms, and similar lamps were incorporated into the War Memorial – ‘The votive lamp which day and night Shed in the church its hallowed light, And over Vertish Hill, the Man that oo Ca’ Bill’ and other more impromptu songs set to well known tunes (e.g. ‘Safeway’ and ‘Teelio’).

Lanark (law-nurk) n. town in South Lanarkshire, which has been a Royal Burgh since the early 12th century. The earliest record of a riding of the marches festival is 1570 and it still continues, focussed on ‘Lanimers Day’ (usually the same day as the Thursday of Hawick Common Riding) and involving a ‘Lord Cornet’ and ‘Lanimer Queen’. Population (1991) 8,877.

'Doon Oor Close And Up Oor Stair'. He is frequent accompanist at Common Riding and other functions, having taken over in 'the Hut' from Adie Ingle. He has also been star of the annual Panto and played 'Gibbie the Gowk' in 'The Gutterbludes'. He is a public speaker extraordinaire, local dialect enthusiast and general all-rounder entertainer. He has made a large number of valuable tape recordings of elderly locals (an archive of 150 cassette tapes being digitised in 2015), and contributed to local history and culture in innumerable ways. He also has an unrivalled collection of photographic slides relating to Hawick and area. He wrote ‘Honest men and bright-eyed daughters’ (1991), ‘Mair honest men’ (1993) and ‘Son of Honest Men’ (2000) with Derek Lunn, ‘Walking in the Land of the Reivers’ (2011) with Alan Brydon, and has contributed many articles to the Archaeological Society Transactions, as well as serving in most capacities on its committee. He wrote the musical plays ‘A Reiver’s Moon’ and ‘1514: The Musical’ with Alan Brydon. He was Hawick Citizen of the Year in 2000, Common Riding Chief Guest in 2004 and has been President of the 1514 and Callants’ Clubs. He also provides the acrostics for the Callants’ Club dinner guest. He was heavily involved in arranging the Adam Grant plaque, the James Thomson statue and the Bill McLaren bust. His ‘night cless’ has been popular for decades. He was recorded in diarist in 1977. After retirement he wrote court reports for the Hawick News. However, it is as a poet, publishing over 400 pieces. Among these were ‘Oor Border Hame’ and ‘Borthwick Water’, both set to music. Many of his poems have local flavour, including ‘The Exile’s Return’, ‘A Callant’s Games’, ‘Hawick Sang’, ‘Hame Toun’, ‘The Centre o’ them a’, ‘The Rowan Hills sae Green’ and ‘The Herd’s Psalm’. His poetry collections include ‘A Breath frae the Hills: verses Scots and English’ (1969) and ‘Penny Numbers: poems Scots and English’ (1969) and ‘Gooseberry Fair, and other verses, Scots and English’ (1950), ‘Gooseberry Fair, and other verses, Scots and English’ (1952), ‘Penny Numbers: poems Scots and English’ (1969) and ‘Turn o’ the Year and other poems chiefly in Scots’ (1989). As ‘Quartus’ he was writer of the ‘Thought For The Week’ Christian commentary column in the Hawick News; these were collected in ‘I to the Hills’ (1979), ‘All Good Gifts Around Us’ (1982) and ‘Roving Commission’ (1992). He wrote a short book on Will H. Ogilvie in 1992. He was awarded the M.B.E. for services to the community in Hawick – ‘Now as maist o ee ken ‘A few remarks’ and ‘Ian Landles’ irni words ee wad expect ti come across in the same sentence!’ [IWL]. John Chapman Gray, J.P., ‘Chap’ (1892–1980), son of Bailie Andrew and uncle of Wullie. He had his schooling at Buccleuch and Wilton. He served an apprenticeship with Barrie & Kersel and spent the rest of his life with Innes & Henderson. In WWI he served with Lothian and Border Horse. He played rugby, swam and was in the water polo team in the opening game at ‘the Baths’. He was Cornet in 1921, Councillor from 1931 for South High Street Ward and Bailie from 1935. He served as Provost 1938–40, and has been described as Hawick’s first ‘working man’ Provost. The ‘Provost Landles Spitfire Fund’ raised money for the purchase of the ‘Teribus Spitfire’ in WWII. He rode the Marches himself in 1940, and led a group each year during the rest of the war. He was the first enrolled member of the Hawick British Legion, President of the Callants’ Club and of Hawick R.F.C. He was a director on the Board of the Co-op Society, Convenor of the County Health Committee and an elder in St. Andrew’s Church. Landles Road is named after him. Thomas (19th/20th C.) son of Bailie Andrew. He was a policeman and then worked with Urban Electric Co. in Hawick. He was a leading preacher with the Open Brethren. His son William was the local poet, father of Ian. William (14th C.) probably a descendant of John de Landales, who was great-grandson of Orm. He was granted the lands of Swinside and Renalston in about 1390, after they were forfeited by Robert Burrell. He was also granted a charter of lands in Oxnam. He was ‘William de Laundelis of Swynysled’ in 1390 when he witnessed the charter of John Turnbull of Minto, granting Minto to William Stewart of Jedburgh. He also received a charter of lands in Oxnam, forfeited by John Wylie. His wife was Janet and they had a daughter Katharine, who married John Lauder. William ‘Wullie’, M.B.E. (1912–98) cousin of Bill and nephew of ‘Chap’, he was born at 7 Sandbed and educated at Buccleuch and Wilton Schools. He worked in the knitwear industry, first for Turner & Rutherford and then at Glebe Mills, where he was company secretary. He later spent time working for Roberts of Selkirk and Thorburn of Walkerburn before returning to a Hawick firm in John Laing’s, and finally retiring in 1977. After retirement he wrote court reports for the Hawick News. However, it is as a writer that he is remembered, particularly as a poet, publishing over 400 pieces. Among these were ‘Oor Border Hame’ and ‘Borthwick Water’, both set to music. Many of his poems have local flavour, including ‘The Exile’s Return’, ‘A Callant’s Games’, ‘Hawick Sang’, ‘Hame Toun’, ‘The Centre o’ them a’, ‘The Rowan Hills sae Green’ and ‘The Herd’s Psalm’. His poetry collections include ‘A Breath frae the Hills: verses Scots and English’ (1950), ‘Gooseberry Fair, and other verses, Scots and English’ (1952), ‘Penny Numbers: poems Scots and English’ (1969) and ‘Turn o’ the Year and other poems chiefly in Scots’ (1989). As ‘Quartus’ he was writer of the ‘Thought For The Week’ Christian commentary column in the Hawick News; these were collected in ‘I to the Hills’ (1979), ‘All Good Gifts Around Us’ (1982) and ‘Roving Commission’ (1992). He wrote a short book on Will H. Ogilvie in 1992. He was awarded the M.B.E. for services to Border literature in 1996. In addition he was a lay preacher, involved with the local Brethren Fellowship. He was father of Ian W. He is buried in Oxnam. William de Laundelis of Swynysled’ in 1390 when he witnessed the charter of John Turnbull of Minto, granting Minto to William Stewart of Jedburgh. He also received a charter of lands in Oxnam, forfeited by John Wylie. His wife was Janet and they had a daughter Katharine, who married John Lauder. William ‘Wullie’, M.B.E. (1912–98) cousin of Bill and nephew of ‘Chap’, he was born at 7 Sandbed and educated at Buccleuch and Wilton Schools. He worked in the knitwear industry, first for Turner & Rutherford and then at Glebe Mills, where he was company secretary. He later spent time working for Roberts of Selkirk and Thorburn of Walkerburn before returning to a Hawick firm in John Laing’s, and finally retiring in 1977. After retirement he wrote court reports for the Hawick News. However, it is as a writer that he is remembered, particularly as a poet, publishing over 400 pieces. Among these were ‘Oor Border Hame’ and ‘Borthwick Water’, both set to music. Many of his poems have local flavour, including ‘The Exile’s Return’, ‘A Callant’s Games’, ‘Hawick Sang’, ‘Hame Toun’, ‘The Centre o’ them a’, ‘The Rowan Hills sae Green’ and ‘The Herd’s Psalm’. His poetry collections include ‘A Breath frae the Hills: verses Scots and English’ (1950), ‘Gooseberry Fair, and other verses, Scots and English’ (1952), ‘Penny Numbers: poems Scots and English’ (1969) and ‘Turn o’ the Year and other poems chiefly in Scots’ (1989). As ‘Quartus’ he was writer of the ‘Thought For The Week’ Christian commentary column in the Hawick News; these were collected in ‘I to the Hills’ (1979), ‘All Good Gifts Around Us’ (1982) and ‘Roving Commission’ (1992). He wrote a short book on Will H. Ogilvie in 1992. He was awarded the M.B.E. for services to Border literature in 1996. In addition he was a lay preacher, involved with the local Brethren Fellowship. He was father of Ian W. He is buried in Oxnam.
the Wellogate Cemetery. William ‘Bill’ (1923–2016) cousin of Wullie and nephew of ‘Chap’. He was born in Langlands Bank and attended Hawick High School. He worked as a message-boy for the Store, was then a grocer in their High Street branch and was sent as a manager to Riccarton Junction during the War. He was a largely self-taught sculptor, being mentored by Anne Redpath and attended stone-cutting night classes in Hawick given by Andrew Dodds (who had worked on the ‘Horse’ statue with William Beattie). He later went to Edinburgh College of Art, winning a scholarship there, and commuting daily on the train. Training as a teacher, he taught art at the High School for 23 years, retiring in 1980. He exhibited regularly at the Royal Scottish Academy, being known particularly for his figures and has work in galleries all over the world. He sculpted the Will H. Ogilvie memorial (with a replica in Australia), the Adam Grant plaque and the James Thomson statue. There was an exhibition of his work at the Scott Gallery in 2006. He moved to Tyne and Wear in his last years. He and his wife Joyce celebrated their 70th wedding anniversary and they had two children, Eric and Linda. He was described as being a ‘gentleman but also a very gentle man’.

Landleism (lawnd-zi-zum) n. a play on words, often involving idiosyncrasies of the Teri tongue when contrasted with standard English. Named after Ian Landles (or perhaps his uncle Andra, to whom he credits his sense of humour), for his inability to speak for more than a couple of minutes without interjecting such a phrase. ‘Black secks’, ‘the atmosphere’s elestic’ and ‘Archie Oliver Society’ are typical examples, while sentences like ‘Hawick folk canni dae sums, it’s oor own a Big Haugh and a Wee Haugh’ are also abundant.

Landles Road (lawnd-zu-lod) n. road between Mansfield Gardens and Mansfield Square, at one time site of a spur railway line for the Gas Works, Eastfield and Riversdale Mills and then a private road. It was taken over by the council and named after Chap Landles in 1985. However, it is not the address of any house.

He is also recorded in 1688 when his will was listed in Peebles Commissariat. He married Margaret Gledstains and their children baptised in Hawick Parish included: James (b.1682); Marion (b.1683); Margaret (b.1685); Helen (b.1686); and Jane (b.1687). The 1682 baptism was witnessed by William Douglas and John Scott ‘Whiteyet’. In 1685 he witnessed a baptism (along with William Douglas) for John Scott (also written ‘Lans’).

land-setting (lawnd-se’-in) n., arch. the letting of land to tenants – ‘The day before the arrival of the Duke of Buccleuch’s commissioners to let his land at Hawick, which took place annually, and was called the ‘land setting’’ [JJV], ‘. . . as the Laird of Whithaugh did signify to our minister at ye landsetting’ [PR1715], ‘When the Duchess of Monmouth attended the land-sitting, at Hawick, she was remarkably fond of conversing with Hobby . . . ’ [WSB]. This was a great annual occasion in Hawick, with the Duke’s Commissioners and country gentlemen gathering in the town, with a fattened ox slaughtered for the dinner, as described in Somerville’s ‘Life and Times’ (also sometimes ‘land-sitting’).

the Land Tax (thu-lawnd-tawks) n. tax imposed on lands according to their valuation. The rolls were compiled by the Commissioners of Supply in each county and form a valuable record of ownership of land, as well as details of individuals, boundaries, etc. For Roxburghshire (although not all parishes in all cases) there are specific records for 1649, 1663, 1678, 1771, 1803 and 1813 and similar records in Selkirkshire. In most cases the information is accurate a few years earlier (e.g. in 1811 for the 1813 Roll).

landward (lawnd-wurd) adj., arch. outlying, rural, literally ‘towards the land’, referring to the part of the Parish outside the Town – ‘. . . he should pay nothing inward to the town for tolling of the bell at landward burials’ [BR1707], ‘. . . of ye whole householders both in ye toun and landward parts of ye parish . . . extending to ye number of Eleven Score and Nyne or thereby’ [PR1712], ‘. . . intimation was made to ye congregation that

Lang (lawng) n. Andrew (1712–53) writer in Selkirk, son of John (Selkirk Deacon of Trades) and Isobel Murray (from Philiphaugh). He was recorded as the Procurator Fiscal in Selkirk in 1751. In 1741 he married Henrietta Chisholme, widow of Robert Mercer; she was daughter of William Chisholme of Broadlee and Ann Rutherford (daughter of Thomas Rutherford of Knowesouth). Their children included: Isobel (b.1742); Henrietta (b.1743); John (b.1744); and Katherine (b.1752). He drowned in the Ettrick and left 4 children. In 1761 his widow had a discharge with the Burgh of Selkirk, on behalf of herself and her son John; she had several other discharges in the years until 1782. Andrew (1783–1842) son of John, who was Sheriff-Clerk of Selkirkshire. He was also Sheriff Clerk and served under Sir Walter Scott. His son John was also Sheriff Clerk and his grandson was the author, also Andrew. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. Several letters relating to his legal work are preserved in the Walter Mason Collection in the period 1825–29. In 1809 he married Margaret Suter (1787–1874) who was from Ross-shire. Their children included: Elizabeth (1811–40); John (1812–69); Jean (1814–45); Andrew (b.1817); Gideon Scott (1819–90) a pastoralist and writer in Australia; Mary (1820–1904); Margaret Suter (1821–1875); William (b.1823); Mark Pringle (1824–25); Henrietta (1828–1901); and Diana Scott (1829–98). Andrew (1844–1912) author, born at Viewfield in Selkirk. His parents were John, who was Sheriff-Clerk of Selkirkshire and Jane Plesenderleath Sellar. He was descended from a family of trades deacons in Selkirk, and he also had Chisholmes of that Ilk and Murrays of Philiphaugh among his ancestors. He was educated in Edinburgh, St. Andrews, Glasgow and Oxford, and lived most of his life in London. He became a journalist, writing extensively for the Daily News and for Longman’s Magazine. He wrote such a varied selection of things that many people of the time believed he was a pseudonym for a whole group of writers! His collections of fairy tales and writings on angling are still widely read, but he was also a poet and essayist. For works of local interest, he edited Scott’s Waverley Novels, as well as his Poems and Ballads, wrote ‘Sir Walter Scott and the Border Minstrelsy’ (1910) and ‘Highways and Byways in the Border’ (1913, with his brother John). He is buried in Selkirk and the cottage hospital there was renamed the Andrew Lang unit. Janet (18th C.) laundressmaid at Minto in 1791, when she was working for Sir Gilbert Elliot. John (1812–69) son of Andrew, he was Sheriff-Clerk of Selkirkshire like his father before him. He was a member of the Jedforest Club. He inherited Overwells (near Jedburgh) from his maternal uncle Gideon Scott. In 1843 he married Jane Plesenderleath. His son Andrew was the famous author, while his 2nd son, Patrick Sellar, succeeded as Sheriff-Clerk. John (d.1941) cousin on Andrew the author, and brother of Florence and Margaret, who both married Robson-Scotts. He worked for the Indian Civil Service. In 1923 he purchased Cleithaugh from the Duke of Roxburgh. He also purchased Mervinslaw for the shooting. He was a member of the Roxburghshire District Council. He married Winifred Ethel Laurie (from the ‘Annie Laurie’ family). Their son William died when his aircraft crashed in 1941. Their 2nd son, John, was a Commander in the Royal Navy and inherited Newton. His wife remained at Cleithaugh until her death in 1958. John Robert (20th C.) 2nd son of John of Cleithaugh. He was a Commander in the Royal Navy. In 1967 he inherited Newton (near Bedrule) from his cousin Marjorie Robson-Scott. He married Jennifer Douglas and their children included Rear-Adm. John Stewart (b.1941) and Alistair Laurie (b.1943).

langam lily (lawng-um-li-lee) n., arch. the dandelion (a joking reference to Langholm).

Langbaulk (hum-hawk, lawng-bawlwk) n. farmhouse on the left hand-side of Buccleuch Road, just after the Dunk, being at the end of the ‘Lumback’ road. It was formerly split into Easter and Wester parts. John Henderson was farmer here in 1797 and still recorded there in 1841. John Halliday (of ‘Bonnie Teviotdale’ fame) was living there in 1847. Francis Henderson was there in the mid-20th century.
Langbaulk Road

Langbaulk Road (lawng-baurk-rød) n. more recently spelled Longbaulk, but pronounced ‘Lumback’, this is the right fork at the top of the Loan. It was probably developed as a proper road in about 1762, as part of the coach road to Carlisle before the ‘New Road’ was opened in 1815. It is now often used for country walks. Part of the original road is a grass-grown right-of-way, which leaves the metalled road and passes the Longbaulk farm steadings. It was named in 1965, with new private and council houses built here between 1970 and 1980. The part officially called ‘Longbaulk Road’ is a dead end, with ‘the Lumback’ continuing as Crumhaughhill Road. After the ‘New Road’ was built there was for a long time a notice that read, when coming towards Hawick, ‘No road this way for the public. Trespassers will be prosecuted for evasion of the toll bar’ (the name either means ‘a long hard pull’ or refers to a long ‘baulk’ or strip of land left unploughed).

Langbaulk Toll-Hoose (lawng-baurk-tol-hoos) n. former toll-house on the New Road, being now the first house on Parkdaill.

Langbits (lawng-bits) n. lands in the Barony of Cavers. In 1519/20 they were promised from James Gledstains as part of the marriage contract for his son James, and a daughter of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. It is unclear where exactly these lands were, but probably near Teviothead (written ‘Langbittis’).

Lang Burn (lawng-burn) n. stream in the upper Slitrig valley (essentially being the upper part of the Slitrig itself) running alongside the B6399 from Shankend to Langburnshiels. It is essentially formed from the confluence of the Leap Burn, Flos Burn and Rope Sike. The lands there may be the same as those lands recorded in a Baronial dispute of Feu-Rule in 1562 (it is probably the tributary of the Slitrig marked ‘Langhburn’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Langburnshiels (lawng-burn-shedlz) n. Longburnshiels, hamlet and farm near Shankend on the Newcastleton road, once site of the ‘Turf Hotel’ used by railway labourers. It was contained within Hobkirk Parish and was once part of the estate of Elliot of Harwood, being listed as ‘Langburne’ among the Harwood farms on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. It could be the ‘Lanyburne’ where William Oliver was recorded in 1618. Robert Oliver was there from around the 1760s, John Elliot shepherd at about the same time. Robert Elliot was recorded there in 1785, Robert Oliver 1786–90, Alexander Lillico in 1790 and Thomas Oliver in 1791–94. There was a Robertson there in 1797. The tenants were William Stephenson in the late 18th century till 1807, then James Mather from 1813, followed by Daniel Mather. The Carruthers and Elliot families were there in 1841, and the Carruthers and Scotts in 1851. Thomas Carrathers was manager of the farm there until the 1860s. The Hawick postman used to go as far as here by bicycle. Peculiar lines of stones have been noted on a nearby hill, examined by Alexander Michie and James Murray in 1863, as well as a possible hill-fort being described nearby (it is just ‘Langburn’ in 1790; this may be the place marked ‘Shells’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; it has the modern spelling by Stobie’s 1770 map).

Langbyre (lawng-bir) n. former farmstead in the upper Teviot valley, near the modern Lymicleuch. It was among lands purchased by Gilbert Elliot of Stobs from Douglas of Cavers in 1620. It is listed among lands in the Barony of Cavers owned by the Elliotics of Stobs in the latter part of the 17th century. The lands were included among those of Lymicleuch when sold by William Elliot of Stobs to a group of Elliots in 1670, but may have been bought back shortly afterwards. It was among lands inherited by Sir William Elliot from his father in 1692 (marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Lang Cairn (lawng-kärn) n. Long Cairn, near the Kershope Burn, situated on Long Knowe, directly north of Scotch Kershope, now in the middle of Newcastleton Forest. It is the only known neolithic structure in Roxburghshire. It is a stone-built, barrow-like burial cairn, roughly pear-shaped, with maximum size about 53 m by 14 m, and with part of an exposed cist towards the north end. It was excavated around 1850 and investigated again in 1870 when is was said to contain ‘several stone coffins of various sizes standing exposed’. There is a nearby standing stone marking a boundary of the Debatable Lands.

Lang Cleuch (lawng-clooč) n. stream that rises on the northern side of Skelfhill and runs roughly north-eastwards to join the Skelfhill Burn.

Langleuch (lawng-clooč) n. former farmstead marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map in the upper part of the Allan valley, perhaps near Skelfhillhope. ‘Langleuchside’ was listed as part of the lands of Ringwoodfield in 1660. ‘Longleuchside’ is shown on the 1718 survey of Scott of Buccleuch lands, attached to Skelfill and Fairnyside. The cleuch itself is labelled on the map, corresponding to the modern Pen Sike. John Armstrong was farmer there in the late 18th century. It could be the ‘lang-cluch’ recorded in 1502 when John Winthrope, James ‘aronyk’ and Robert Paterson had 60 sheep stolen from there by Patrick, son of Adam Scott in Harwoodhill.

the Lang Croft (thu-lawng-kroft) n. long field that once lay north and north-west of the present Crumluaghill Road, and on part of which Longcroft Crescent and Road were built. It is now the name for the general area of these 2 streets – ‘For haddock, plaise and cod. They came thee Ramsay Road, Fri Myrselawgreen they came, Langcroft yins din the same’ [IW].

Langcroft Crescent (lawng-kroft-kre-sin’) n. Longcroft Crescent, loop off Longbaulk Road, built in 1938 and named after the ‘Long Croft’ which once stood there.

Langcroft Road (lawng-kroft-röd) n. Longcroft Road, street connecting Longcroft Crescent with Longbaulk Road, built in 1938 and named after the ‘Long Croft’.

Langdale (lawng-däl) n. remote area in Cumbria that was a neolithic axe factory. The polished greenstone volcanic tuff found here is the source for a large fraction of the neolithic axe-heads discovered around Britain. An example found at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot (measuring 4.5 × 1.75 × 0.75 inches and now in the National Museum) came from here.

lang drink o witter (lawng-drinkk-ô-wi’-ur) n. colloquial expression for a tall, skinny person.

Lang Eild-rig (lawng-eild-rig) n. former name for lands near Newton in Bedrule Parish, recorded in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls.

langer (lawng-ur) adj., adv. longer – ‘Jimmy Rae’s no cuttin hair ony langer!’ [JR], ‘if ee stand there ony langer, ee’ll take ruit!’ ‘…and to remove from the town for ane yair and langer …’ [BR]. ‘He reas the text with haly anger, ’Till he could sit nor read nae langer’ [JF]. ‘Where will ye get a whisky soss To moistify your middle, ’Till he could sit nor read nae langer’ [BR1644], ‘The langer the better: sae, love, dinna greet …’ [JH], ‘Some say it is a gross abuse, Some say they’ll it nae langer use …’ [TP], ‘…on account o hevin been there a sight langer’ [DH] (note there is no hard g in the pronunciation).

Lang Flow (lawng-flö) n. Long Flow, area between Redfordgreen and Bleak Law, marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map.

the Lang Field (thu-lawng-field) n. name for the field of the Common, to the east of the road between Pilmuir and Pilmuir Rig farms.

Langflat (lawng-fla) n. former name for a farmstead bordering on the old Common, being the eastern part of Southfield farm, lying west of the road shortly before the Caa Knowe. Simon Learmonth and Alexander Kennedy were living there in 1694 when it is ‘Langflatte’ (mentioned in the 1767 description of the boundaries of the Common).

Langformacus (lawng-for-mü-kis) n. Longformacus, a village in Berwickshire, on the Dye Water, north-west of Duns, containing 18th century Longformacus House and associated unusual dovecote (the origin is ‘church meadow of Maccus’ in Old Welsh).

Lang Gill (lawng-gil) n. Long Gill, stream in a narrow ravine in the hills to the west of Newcastleton, rising on Millstone Edge and running roughly south to join the Black Burn. There are a couple of ruined bothies and sheepfolds along its banks, as well as turf-banked enclosure to the south (it is marked on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Lang Grain (lawng-grän) n. Long Grain, stream that joins the Whitrone Burn just south of Whitronefoot. There are grouse butts in the upper part and an old sheepfold part-way down. On the banks of the stream, just to the west of the main road are the remains of 2 shieling-luts. ‘Langgrainfit’ was a former farmstead on the drove road, once an important stopping point before the turnpike road (B6399) was opened. There are many other small streams with the same name, e.g. one in the headwaters of the Teviot, another at Mossfoot and a third near Altrie in the upper Ettrick valley (‘Grain’ is Scots for a branch of a stream, derived from Old Norse).

Lang Grain (lawng-grän) n. stream that runs to the east to join the Black Burn near Mossfoot. It rises on Wisp Hill and forms part of the border between Roxburghshire and Dumfriesshire.

Lang Grain (lawng-grän) n. small stream that rises on Lamblair Hill and flows north-east to join Singdean Burn (it is marked on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Langgrainfit (lawng-grän-fit) n. former farmstead on the drove road by Whitronefoot, near the foot of Long Grain.
Lang Hassendean

Lang Hassendean (lawng-haw-sin-deen) n. lands in the Barony of Hassendean, recorded in a charter of 1457 when they passed from William Cunningham to his son Neil, excepting the part called ‘Camehill’. There was a dispute among the Cunningshams, with the land being confirmed to Elizabeth (daughter of George Cunningham of Belton) in 1483, and confirmed again in 1514. The 1514 sasine states that the lands include a tower, so it may be that ‘Langhassendean’ was simply the name used for the main town of Hassendean. The ‘precept of sasine’ of 1514 also refers to ‘Eister Hassindene’, so these may also be the same lands. A document of 1470 refers to the whole (half) barony as ‘Lang Hassindean’.

Langhauch see Langhaugh

Langhaugh (lawng-hawchw) n. former fortified house on the north side of the Teviot valley somewhere between Teviothead and Blackcleuch. The lands were listed among those held ‘in tenandry’ by the Baron of Hawick in 1511, 1572, 1594 and 1615. James Douglas of Drumlanrig had a ‘horneing’ in 1607 for William Scott of Howpasley to remove from these and other lands. In 1624 the lands were purchased from the Earl of Douglas by Robert Elliot of Falfash (along with Hislop). In 1647 Archibald Elliot of Falfash was served heir to his father’s 5 merk land there. They were sold back to the superior, James, Earl of Queensberry in 1650. They were owned by the Scotts of Crumhaugh from 1674. The lands of ‘Langshaugh wa-ter’ were inherited by Walter Scott of Langshaw from his father Francis in 1690, along with part of Falfash, Tanlaw Naze and Calfwash. The lands were among those inherited by Sir Francis Scott of Thirlestane from his brother Walter in 1695. It is ‘Longhaugh-water’ in 1707 when valued at £166 13s 4d (and can be identified as part of the Hawick Parish lands of Sir Francis Scott of Thirlestane in 1678). It is ‘Longhaugh-water’ in 1788 and ‘Langhaugh Wa-ter’ in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls, when valued at £166 13s 4d. It is ‘Langhauche’ in 1511, ‘Langhaugh’ in 1572, ‘Longhauch’ in 1610, ‘Langheuch’ in 1637 and ‘Langhauche’ in 1647; it is marked ‘Langhauch’ on Gordon’s c. 1590 map, Blaeu’s 1654 map and on Stobie’s 1770 map.

Langhaugh (lawng-hawchw) n. Langhaugh, former farm on the Hermitage Water, between Netherraw and Harts- garth. It is listed in a rental record of about 1376, valued at 10 shillings. It was held by the Elliots of Redheugh from the latter part of the 15th century to at least the early 17th. This is probably where Robert ‘Elwald’ was recorded as Laird there in 1494/5. Will Foster was recorded there in 1611. It was among the lands contested between the Elliots of Redheugh and the Scotts of Buccleuch in about 1612. Archibald Elliot from there was recorded in 1618. It was one of 3 farms that Scott of Buccleuch claimed Elliot of Redheugh had falsely added to his charter; however, it was still owned by the Elliots in 1637. It was under a ‘wadsett’ until James Elliott (son of ‘Gibbrie wi the Gowden Garters’) paid it off in 1639. The lands were valued (along with Hartgarth) at £466 13s 4d in 1678. Christopher Irving of Binks purchased the farm (along with several others) in 1688, after Robert Elliot of Larriston became bankrupt. There was a shepherd recorded there on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. It was purchased by the Oliers of Dinlabyre about 1700 and sold in 1773 to William Sharp of Hartgarth. Dyker William Thomson and family lived there in 1851. Before about 1874 it was owned by the Duke of Buccleuch. By the 18th century it appears that the farm had migrated down-hill. There is now a cottage marked there close to the road. On the eastern slopes of Thornside Hill above are 2 boundary dykes, probably defining the boundaries of the former farm, and area of about 50 hectares, including evidence of ancient field systems and rig lines. On a terrace on the hillside are the remains of a farmstead and hut (it is ‘Langhalgh’ around 1376, ‘langhalch’ in 1494/5, ‘Langhauche’ in 1612, ‘Langhauch’ in 1618, and transcribed as ‘Lahauche’ in about 1624; it is marked ‘Lang- hauch’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Longhaugh’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Langhaugh (lawng-hawchw) n. Langhaugh, former farm in the upper Rule valley, just north of Wauchope. The lands specifically lay to the east of Templehall and Breuwlands. Thomas Turnbull was there in 1502. It is mentioned in 1767 as ‘the Twenty pound land of Wauchope and Long- haugh’ (it is ‘le langhauch’ in 1502, ‘Langheuch’ in 1567, ‘Langhawght’ in 1604, ‘Langhauch’ in 1605, ‘Langhauche’ in 1637 and ‘Langhaughe’ in 1649; marked on Gordon’s c.1590 map, Blaeu’s 1654 map and on Stobie’s 1770 map as ‘Longghaugh’).

Langhaugh (lawng-hawchw) n. Langhaugh, former name for part of the lands of Deanfoot in Minto Parish. In 1779 they were valued at £36 and part of the Minto estate, with the liferent being held by Robert Trotter of Bush. In 1780 the lands were referred as ‘Long-haugh parks’. It was still listed in 1811.

Langhaugh (lawng-hawchw) n. Longhaugh, former name for lands in Ashkirk Parish that were part of Dryden and Clews farms. ‘Longhaugh and Strawbrae’ is listed in 1780 among the lands whose liferent had been given to Dr. William Elliot.

Langhaugh Waas (lawng-hawch-wawz, -walz) n. former farmstead near Langhaugh on the Wauchope estate, also sometimes referred to as ‘Wauchope Waas’ and popularly known as ‘the Waas’. It consisted of small patches of land between the road and the Rule Water. There may have been a small shop there in the early 19th century. The residents in the mid-19th century were William and Rachel Tait (also written ‘Langhaughwalls’, etc.).

Langheugh Hoose (lawng-hew-hoos, -hewch-hoos) n. villa-style house off Buccleuch Road designed by J.P. Alison in 1905. Langheugh Road was originally its drive-way.

Langheugh Road (lawng-hew-röd) n. private street off Buccleuch Road, opposite the playing fields, containing several large houses. It was developed largely in the period 1965–70, and named after several houses had already been built. Many of the residents use Buccleuch Road as their address.

Langholm (lawng-un) n. town 24 miles south of Hawick, along the A7, where the River Esk is met by the Wauchope Water and the Ewes Water. In the heart of riever country, it has been prominent in the tweed industry, with the first major factory being built in 1832; before that there was extensive employment in cotton manufacturing, and later the town was known for the production of checked cloth. Whita Hill (1163 ft) looms over the town, with the monument to Sir John Malcolm on the summit. It was actually 2 towns on opposite sides of the Esk, with the old town being made a burgh of barony in 1610 (with other charters later that century), and the new or ‘Meikleholm’ being built to a fairly regular pattern from 1778 by the Duke of Buccleuch. At the end of the 17th century it was temporarily the county of Roxburghshire. The library dates from 1875–78 and the Town Hall from 1811–12. The ruins of Langholm Castle lie just to the north, built around 1526 and abandoned in the early 18th century. Additionally James Playfair’s Langholm Lodge was built 1786–89 as a hunting lodge for the Duke of Buccleuch. Langholm Common Riding dates back to 1759, with the first Cornet elected in 1817. It involves the carrying of traditional emblems through the streets and the unique ‘Crying of the Fair’ (an example proclamation being published as early as 1731), while the colours are based on those of the Derby winner. John Hyslop’s ‘Echoes from the Border Hills’ (1912, revised in 1992) contains anecdotes from Eskdale in the 19th century. The book ‘Langholm as it was’ (1912) was also written by John Hyslop, with a new edition appearing in 2002. Population 2,538 (1991) – ‘The roads atween Hawick And Langholm Are the roads atween Heaven and hell . . . .’ [DH], ‘. . . was a gaird on the mail coach afore hei took ower the Croon Inn in the Langumb’ [BW1979] (it is ‘ye Langhame’ on Sandison’s c.1590 map, while ‘Cast. of Langhoome’ is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Langholm Castle (lawng-un-kaw-sul) n. ruined tower in Langholm, near the confluence of the Esk and Ewes Water, once home of the Armstrongs. It may have been built in the 1520s and abandoned 200 years later. All that now exists are the south wall and fragments of the adjoining walls. It is also known as ‘Langholm Tower’.

Langholm lily (lawng-un-li-lee) n., arch. a sobriquet for the dandelion (recorded in the Hawick News in 1954).

Langholmite (lawng-un-i') n. person from Langholm. Famous Langholmites include Hugh MacDiarmid, Thomas Telford and William Julius Mickle.

Langholm Street (lawng-un-stree') n. street in Newcastleton which is the beginning of the road over the hills to Langholm. The Parish Manse was at No. 23.

Langhope (lawng-up) n. former name for part of the farm at Crumhaughhill. There are several other places of the same name, including a height near the Wisp Hill, a stream that joins the Ale Water and a former property of the Scotts of Buccluelch near Melrose (it was mentioned in the court case for the division of the Common in 1767).

Langhope (lawng-höp,-up) n. Longhope, farm on the Langhope Burn near Todrig, west of Ashkirk, which was once a Scott possession. It is recorded in a document from the reign of William I, relating to the Diocese of Glasgow’s lands in Ashkirk Parish. They were Crown lands in the latter part of the 15th century, split into the ‘Eststeid de Langhop’, ‘Middillsteid’ and ‘Weststeid’. In the 1470s John Cranston of that Ilk had remission for the ‘grassum’ there. In the 1480s they were leased to Ainslies, Cranstones and John Scott of Todswaughter. In 1499 and 1501 they were assigned to Alexander Scott and his mother, Robert Scott of Stirches, Patrick Home and William Cranston of that Ilk. The land remained Crown property until at least 1502. Adam Ewart was recorded as tenant there in 1502. In 1510 the west steading was feued to Thomas Cranston, the middle steading to Sir William Cranston and then Alexander Scott, and the east steading to Walter Scott; the middle steading was also called ‘Hofford’, suggesting this was the place on the Ettrick, further to the north (making it unclear whether this was the same place or another Langhope on Ettrick). Walter Scott in Synton was tenant in 1541, paying £18 yearly. The meadow there ‘langhope medo’ was part of lands belonging to George Scott of Blindhaugh, which he assigned to his 3rd son William. ‘Robert Scott of Langup’ is listed by Scott of Satchells as one of the 24 ‘Pensioners’ of Buccleuch (this probably around 1600). The Scotts of Langhope were descended from the Huntly branch, and owned the lands until about 1620. The old Scotts of Headshaw then bought the lands, which were sold (along with Headshaw) in 1629 to John of Yorkston, who passed it to his son John Scott of Langhope. 'Langupmedow' was owned by Scott of Woll in 1609. William of Langhope had a ‘wadset’ with Walter Scott of St. Leonards in 1669, and by 1677 Walter was 'now of Langhope'. In 1688 it was sold to his son John Scott, then to Adam Scott of Bowhill in 1691. In 1691 the value was given as £18. Tax was paid for 5 hearths there in 1694. It was later owned by the Elliots of Minto (probably purchased along with Headshaw in 1696). Thomas Nivison was herd there in 1697. John Brydon was tenant there in 1784 and John Paterson in 1785. In 1785 and 1802 it was valued at £548 'of Stock' and £33 for the teinds. Walter Todd lived there in the early 19th century and Thomas Scott in the 1860s. It is also mentioned in the ballad 'The Fray of Elibank' – 'Though Andrew o’ Langhope had fa’n i’ the fight, He only lay still till the battle was by, Then ventured to rise an’ climb over the height, An’ there he set up a lamentable cry’ [ES] (the name occurs in the late 12th century; it is ‘langhop’ in 1502, ‘Lang Hoip’ in 1541 and ‘Langhop’ in 1661; it appears on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Langhop’ and is ‘Longhope’ by Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Langhope Burn (lawng-hop-burn) n. stream that joins the Ale Water above Ashkirk. It is first noted as part of the boundary of the lands of Whitslade in a charter by William I and also as ‘the rivulet of Langhope’ as part of the boundary of lands granted toOrm of Ashkirk – ‘And now the dreary distance doth wear it like a bride, Out beyond Langhope Burn and over Essenside’ [WHO] (it is ‘rivulus de Longhope’ about 1170; there is another stream of the same name in the headwaters of the Ettrick).

Langhope Drive (lawng-hop-driv) n. Longhope Drive, part of the private housing development at the top of Crumhaughhill, built in 1979. It is named after a former croft incorporated into Crumhaughhill farm, the name meaning a piece of enclosed land, usually a hollow.

Langhope Height (lawng-hop-hi) n. hill south of Teviothead, being the western ridge of Comb Hill, with the stream called the Lang Hope nearby.

Langhope Rig (lawng-hop-rig) n. ridge above the Langhope Burn, between Shaws Under Loch and Akermoor Loch. Since 2015 it has been the location for a wind farm, consisting of 10 turbines. A related community fund has supported small projects in the neighbouring district.

langin (lawng-in) n. longing, desire – ‘Lord, a’ my langin’ is afore thee; an’ my graenin’ isna hidden frae thee’ [HSR], ‘… an’ satisfiest the langin’ o’ ilka leivin’ thing’ [HSR], ‘… the thoughts, the langin’s, an’ the resolves o’ an’ exile thrae hame’ [BW1939].

langish (lawng-ee-sh) adj. longish, somewhat long – ‘Well, kindle the pipes chaps, and make yourselves snug, for it’s a langish yarn’ [JEDM].

langit (lawng-i-t) pp., poet. longed – ‘Behald, I hae langet efter thy preceeps …’ [HSR], ‘… for I langet for thy commandements’ [HSR].

Lang Jaymie (lawng-jay-mee) n. nickname for James Richardson.

lang kail (lawng-kail) n., arch. a form of borecole that is purplish and with less wrinkly leaves than the more common variety, soup made from this – ‘If it was het, the langkail gully Play’d smash amang’t to end the tulzie’ [JR] (also written ‘langkail’; see also kail).

Langlands (lawng-lindz) n. former name for a large part of western Wilton town. The more extensive estate was the eastern half barony of Wilton, being the estate of the Langlands family since at least 1451. Robert of that Ilk’s estate in Wilton Parish was valued at £953 16s 8d in 1643 and he paid tax on £992 of land for the estate in 1663. It was still valued at £992 16s 8d in 1678. The Laird of ‘Langlandis’ was listed among ‘Landit Men’ of Scotland in about 1500. On the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls the estate is recorded as being composed of Whitfield, Mervinslaw, Brierhill, Dean Mill, Roughheugh and Heap. The Laird of Langlands is described as ceremoniously observing the marking of his land’s boundary with Hawick in the early 1700s. This happened at the Langlands

Coble Pool and at Roughheugh Mill. The land remained in the family for 300 years, being diminished over time, particularly in the 18th century, and then sold off entirely in 1783 to Thomas Elliot. By that time the main estate was valued at £278 12s 8d and consisted of the half-Barony of Wilton, as well as Calaburn and ‘sundry inclusions in Rough-heugh, sold to other persons, but not yet disjoined’. It then passed to Lord Napier around 1790, to James Anderson about 1805 and finally descended to the Pringles. It was valued at £278 12s 8d in 1811, and some inclusions in Roughheugh were later sold to Rev. John Thomson, so that the value in about 1874 was about £262. By then the remaining property was known as Wilton Lodge and was purchased by the Town in 1889 as a public park. In older records there are people recorded living at ‘Langlands’, but it is not clear how extensive an area was covered by that designation. Note that there are several other places called ‘Langlands’, e.g. in Angus, Ayrshire, Devon, Essex, Falkirk, Kirkcudbrightshire, Lanarkshire, Somerset and Yorkshire (formerly spelled ‘Langlandis’, it is ‘Langlans’ in 1748).

Langlands (lawng-lindz) n. Victorian villa-style house in Sunnyhill, designed by John Guthrie about 1878. It was built for manufacturer Walter Pringle, and was one of the earliest villas in the Sunnyhill area. There were new stables, alterations and additions designed by Peddie & MacKay of Edinburgh in 1880. It was formerly the home of the Pringles and then Sir Thomas Henderson. Art deco style interior alterations were made in the 1920s or 30s. It is now split into ‘East’ and ‘West’ parts and is a grade C listed building.

Langlands (lawng-lindz) n. former name for lands in Liddesdale. They are recorded in 1541 along with Millholm, as pertaining to the Laird of Mangerton. The precise location is unknown. It could be the same as the lands ‘called Langland, within a hedge, worth 33s. 2d.’ listed in the English part of Liddesdale in 1276 (it is ‘Langlandis’ in 1541; the existence of this name also in Liddesdale is confusing).

Langlands (lawng-lindz) n. former name for land in Minto Parish. It is listed in the 1779 (and in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls) along with ‘Quarter of Whitefield’, valued at £73 3s 6d. It was among lands whose liferent was given to Rev. Robert Elliot (brother of Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto) in 1779. In 1780 it is listed as part of the eastern boundary of the lands of Hawthorn Park and Mailchester Park.

Langlands (lawng-lindz) n. former name for lands lying within the Barony of Caverton in Roxburghshire. The name occurs as ‘Langslandis’ in the Exchequer Rolls for the 1450s and 1470s. There is presumably no direct connection with the lands in Wilton.

Langlands (lawng-lindz) n. Adam (16th/17th C.) listed among the men who accompanied Robert Scott, younger of Haining in an attack on Selkirk Mill in 1608. Possibly the same Adam (tenant of some lands that are not transcribed) accompanied the Scotts of Whitheough, Headshaw, Kirkhouses and Huntly when they forcibly took possession of the farm of Hartwoodburn in 1627. He may be the uncle of George of that Ilk recorded in 1610 when the family, along with several Scotts, petitioned for removal of a horning and reduction of penalties. George acted as cautioner for him and several others, promising they would not harm Walter Scott in Hawick (called of Todshawhaugh) and associates. Adam (16th/17th C.) recorded in ‘Spittell’ in 1619 among a group of more than 100 men under John Ker of Langnewton who Sir Andrew Ker of Oxnam complained had broken up and stolen turfs cut for his use on Oxnam Moor. This is probably Anrum Spittal, but could be Spittal-on-Rule. Andrew (15th C.) monk of Newbattle, who was witness to a charter of the Barony of Cranston McGill in 1477/8. In 1488 he was Abbot of Newbattle when he witnessed another document, and was Abbot until at least 1492. He may have been related to the local family. Andrew (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1610 as uncle of George of that Ilk when there a request to lift the ‘horning’ and modify the penalty on their ancestor. This was probably his father James, who was declared a rebel in 1581. It seems likely that he was brother of the previous Laird Robert. He may be the same Andrew who signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. Charles (16th C.) recorded in 1531 as ‘Karolo vicario de Dryvisdall’, i.e. Vicar of Dryfesdale near Lockerbie. It is unclear how he was related to the other Langlands. Gavin (16th C.) recorded in the register of Cupar Abbey in 1550. George (16th/17th C.) of that Ilk, son of Robert. In about 1611 he was served heir to his father in the half lands and Barony of Wilton, including the alternating advowson of the Parish Kirk. In 1610, along with his brothers Robert and James and his uncle Andrew, as well as several Scotts, he asked for suspension of the ‘horning’ (possibly the one imposed on James in 1812.
Langlands

1581), and reduction of the penalties imposed to find caution that they not harm the Scotts of Todshawhaugh and Ormiston. His cautioner in this dispute was William Scott, younger of Harden, while he himself acted as cautioner for the Scotts of Sinton, Whitehaugh and Burnfoot, as well as Robert, James and Adam Langlands, plus Roger in Hawick. He was confirmed in the half barony in 1614 and is recorded in a charter (related to Easter Heap) in 1615. In 1616 he was foreman of the jury that convicted Jock Scott ‘the Suckler’ guilty of multiple thefts. He may have been succeeded soon afterwards by John, who is recorded as ‘of that Ilk’ in 1617. However, he may be the same George who was recorded several times until 1638 (if John was not actually Baron). George (17th C.) of that Ilk. He possibly succeeded his father John (or is the same as the previous George). He is listed as Laird in 1628 among the major landowners who met to elect M.Ps. for Roxburghshire. He signed the Confession of Faith in 1638. This document was also signed by Robert ‘fier of that Ilk’ (i.e. probably his son and heir), together with Andrew and Walter of Brieryhill (probably close relatives). He was probably the George who married Esther Scott, younger daughter of ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden (and widow of Elliot of Falnash).

George (d.beft. 1681) of that Ilk. Probably son of Robert, the length of his tenure as Baron is uncertain. He is recorded as witness to a Gledstains christening in 1672. He was recorded in a deed of 1673, and is probably also the George ‘fier of that Ilk’ recorded in another deed that year. The land tax was paid by the ‘laird of Langlands’ in 1678 (for about £990), with the name not given, suggesting perhaps he was recently deceased and formal succession not yet established. His wife was Janet Douglas, whose will exists from 1681 (when she was ‘relict of George Langlands, of that Ilk’). Her ‘plenishing’ included ‘feather beds, bolster sets and cods, some of which were stuffed with worsted, blankets, sheets and table linen, servitors, board cloths, towels, spindles of worsted, and straiken yarn, round stoupit beds, kists, barrells, tubs, koags, and bickers, one and a half dozen trenchers, pair of clatts and (hand) cairds, heckles, reels, dishes and ladles, baskets and creels, posset pig, pair of raxes and ane speit, broad pleats, two chandleis, salt fat, ane pot and flaggon, ane pynt stoup, crook, girdle and pot coffer’ [DMW]. George (d.1689) eldest son of John, minister of Wilton. His will exists, where he left a parcel of books and other goods, some money and bonds due to him. This is recorded at the commissariot of Peebles in 1690, where he is ‘Mr. George Langlands son to Mr. John Langlands late minister at Wiltoun’. It is unclear where he might have been a minister himself (or if he was instead a schoolmaster perhaps). He is probably the ‘Mr Geo: Langlands’ who witnessed a baptism in Hassendean in 1687 for Adam Scott and Esther Langlands (who was his sister). In his will, he is stated to have left ‘ane little parcel off books’, as well as £40 Scots of ‘ly-ing money’ and £400 in cash. George (d.1752) of that Ilk, son of Robert and Mary Scott, and brother of Rev. John. He was the second last Laird. He may be the George who was entered as a Burgess of Edinburgh (as a surgeon) in 1715 and is further listed in Edinburgh records of 1718 and 1721. He is recorded as Laird in a disposition of 1725 and was ‘preses’ of Wilton Kirk Session meetings in 1741 and 1751. He paid the window tax for Langlands in 1748. There are existing papers relating to the sharing of the patronage of Wilton Kirk with the Duke of Buccleuch. He feued part of his estate, including Howlands, in the mid-18th century. He is recorded having an illegitimate child called ‘Rocher’ with Margaret Scott in 1724; the witnesses to the baptism were William ‘Steward’ and James Simpson (perhaps his servants). He married Anna Couper, and their children included: Marion (b.1725); Robert (1727–1803), who succeeded as last Laird; Margaret (1729/30–1819) last of the local Langlands; William (b.1732); and Isobel (b.1734). James (d.aft. 1453) of that Ilk, son of John. He succeeded to the family lands and from then the family surname was ‘Langlands’. He is mentioned in charters from at least 1427, when he was witness to the document giving the Barony of Hawick to William Douglas, 2nd of Drumlanrig; he is there recorded as ‘Jacobum de Langlandis’. He is probably also the James who was on an ‘inquest of retour’ in 1424 made in Hawick for lands in Hownam (although it is unclear if he was already Laird). In 1431 he granted the lands of Heap (which had been resigned by Robert of Hepe) to Walter Scott ‘Lord of Muirthoustoun’ at St. Mary’s Kirk. It thus appears likely that he was already Baron of Wilton at that time. In 1432 he was witness at the old manor of Cavers to the sasine giving the Barony of Cavers to the sasine of the Duke of Buccleuch. He signed the Confession of Faith in 1638. He was confirmed in the half barony of Wilton Kirk with the Duke of Buccleuch. He was confirmed in the half barony of Wilton Kirk with the Duke of Buccleuch.
Langlands

over the lands of the East Mains of Hawick. In 1447 he was ‘Jacobo Langlandis de eodem’ when he witnessed the charter from Margaret Cusing (wife of Simon Routledge, Burgess of Hawick) to Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. He was the father of the John to whom he resigned the half Barony of Wilton in 1451, reserving a free tenement for himself and after his death to his wife Mary (or ‘Mariote’). He also swapped the lands of Milston with those of Heap with Walter Scott at Wilton Kirk in 1451. And in 1453 he had an ‘excambion’ with Walter Scott of Kirkurd for the freehold of the lands of Wester Heap. This was signed by his son and heir John, as well as Robert of Langlands who must have been a close relative. James of Langlands (15th/16th C.) listed as witness to Richard Rutherford being served heir to his grandfather in 1499. He is recorded as ‘James Langglenes of that Ilk’. Probably the same man was ‘of Wilton’ in 1500 when listed as one of the valuators for Whithope. He was probably either the son or brother of Roger/Robert (who killed George Fairneylaw). He is also probably the ‘James Langlandis of Wiltoun’ listed among 24 Roxburghshire who had remission in 1488/9 for their support of the deceased James III, particularly on the field of battle at Stirling. James (d.c.1590) of that Ilk, probably son of John. He is recorded in a sasine of 1559 and in a bond between the Scotts and Kerrs in March 1564/5, where Walter Scott of Branxholme assumes the burden for ‘James Langlandis of Wiltoun and his barnis’. So they were presumably related, perhaps through his wife or mother (and the suggestion is also that he had children by then). Also in that document he is listed (along with Nicholas Rutherford of Hundalee) as a special ‘umpire’ for the feud between Ker of Cessford and Ormiston of that Ilk. In 1569 he was on the panel of inquest for Grizel Borthwick inheriting superiority of her father’s lands in Wilton. He is mentioned numerous times in the Register of the Privy Seal. In 1569 he was one of the sureties for some Elliots, that they would enter into ward in St. Andrews. He was admitted as a messenger for Roxburgh by Sir David Lindsay, the Lyon King of Arms, in 1569 and mentioned in an inquest in Jedburgh the same year. He was entered before the Privy Council in 1571. He signed the Roxburgh band and ‘made faith’ to James IV and the Regent Morton in early 1572/3, with Andrew Ker of Faldonside as his surety; this appears to have been in relation to Kerr of Ferniehirst being declared a fugitive and all his former supporters swearing allegiance to the Crown. He was also surety for William, son of Walter Scott of Headshaw at the same time. He signed the ‘Band of Roxburgh’ in 1573 (‘with my hand at the pen’). He was also in 1573 surety for the non-appearance of William Robson, charged with the murder of William Hall of ‘Wollie’, and had to pay 20 merks to his daughter ‘Malie’ on Robson’s non-appearance. He was recorded as being ‘de Wiltounhill’ in 1574, when he was superior of the lands of Borthaugh (held by the Scotts of Buccleuch). In 1576 he gave a pledge for George Elliot, ‘the Cleg’ and John Stoddart, his ‘cobilman’. Also in 1576 he was a surety along with Walter Scott of Goldielands and James Langlands of that Ilk for tenants in Lairhope and Broadlee. Also in 1576 it is mentioned in a charter for Stewart of Minto that he held half the market rights of Minto at that time. Furthermore, in 1576 he had an obligation to relieve sureties by the Privy Council. Also in 1576 he was ordered to pay 20 merks to Malie Hall for satisfaction for the murder of her father, James Hall in Woolie by Will Robson of ‘Rochthewchmyln’. Along with 2/3 other Border lairds, he was summoned to appear at Stirling as caution for his kinsmen and retainers in 1578/9, but failed to appear. He was stated to have ‘enterit the said Johnne Stoddart, his cobilman, to the said lord lieutenant and Justice’, but nevertheless was found liable for the other fines. In 1580/1 he witnessed an agreement to settle a dispute between George of Synton and Walter of Stiches regarding the lands of Synton Mill. In 1581 he was on a long list of Scots and others summoned to appear before the Privy Council to answer several charges made by Elliot of Braidlie and the Armstrongs. He was denounced a rebel in 1581 (among a large number of Border Lairds accused of not presenting men to answer rieving charges), but must have been reinstated since he was among Lairds invited to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4 to help quiet troubles in Teviotdale and Liddesdale. In 1581 he gave sasine to his son and heir Robert of his half Barony of Wilton, retaining lifrent for himself and after his death the payment of 20 bolls of grain annually to his wife Marion Scott for ‘up-halding of hir and hir bairnes’: the precept of sasine was made in Selkirk (for unspecified reasons), the witnesses including Walter Riddell of that Ilk, George Scott of Synton, William Scott in Huntly and Walter Veitch of North Synton. The sasine was also recorded in Selkirk, with witnesses Rev. William Auchmowtie, John (his son) and 2 servants of his son Robert. In 1588 he is recorded in a contract regarding teinds with his son John (Parson of Wilton) and Walter Scott of Harden. In 1589 he was cautions for Edward Lorraine of Harwood. In 1590 he was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. The last record of him is in 1590 and he is probably the Laird of Langlands listed on the ‘Roll of the Clans’ in about 1590 (although probably prepared earlier). He may be the James Langlands denounced in 1598, along with John Turnbull in Minto, James Turnbull in Hassendean and Walter Scott ‘of Ordschaw’ for not paying Selkirkshire taxes to the Lord of Newbattle. He married Marion Scott and was succeeded by his son Robert. Other sons included Rev. John and probably Andrew. James ‘Jamie’ (16th C.) recorded as tenant of lands of Kelso Abbey in 1567. It is unclear how he was related to the other Langlands. James (16th/17th C.) recorded being acquitted of crimes in Jedburgh in 1611. It is unclear how he was related to other Langlands. He could be the brother of George of that Ilk who was mentioned in 1610 when they petitioned to have their horning and penalties reduced. James (d.c.1695) brother of Rev. John of Wilton. In 1695 his nephew James was served as his heir. He presumably died without issue. His existence may provide a clue to the identity of the father of Rev. John of Wilton. James (17th C.) son of John, minister of Wilton and younger brother of George, from whom he inherited in 1691. He could be the James listed as resident of the west-side of Hawick on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. In 1695 he was served heir to his uncle James. James (17th/18th C.) Baron of Wilton, who is said to have ridden a black stallion named Nimrod and would turn out in his gaudy finery for a ceremonial marking of the boundaries at the Roughheugh Mill (the axle of its water wheel being on the boundary), with him making a show of defending his property. This was described by Robert Wilson, but it is unclear which period this took place in; the name seems likely to be confused with another Baron. James (18th C.) married Janet Mack in Bedrule in 1737. It is unclear how he was related to the other local Langlands. Janet née Douglas (d.c.1683) wife of George of that Ilk. She was a widow in her will, which includes a detailed list of her possessions, giving an idea of the contents of a late 17th century mansion house. John (d.c.1363) possibly the first family member to use the name ‘de Langlandis’, he was probably the successor to Thomas de Longueville (or Charteris), inheriting the Peeblesshire estate in 1340. He also had lands at ‘Milsallystoun’ (Milsington) and ‘Ochterhyud’ (Outerside), along with a mill there, which were granted to his widow ‘Mariote Cumyne’ (i.e. Marion Comyn) by David II in 1363. It is possible he was the John, son of Margaret, who had a charter for the Barony of Wilton after it was forfeited by William Maxwell during the reign of David II.

John (15th C.) of that Ilk, son of James. In 1450 he was ‘Johannem de Langlandis’ on the ‘retour’ for the inheritance of the Barony of Hawick by William Douglas of Drumlanrig. He was granted the (eastern) half Barony of Wilton, along with Langlands hill (in Peebleshire) in 1451 by James II, the lands having been resigned by his father. His mother Mary is also mentioned in this charter. This is the first definitive record of a line of Langlands Lairds that would stretch over 300 years. However, it seems clear that the family (or the closely related ‘de Charteris’ family) held the lands for several generations before. He probably moved the family seat from Peeblesshire to Wilton about this time. Also in 1451 he had a charter of ‘excambion’ with Sir Walter Scott of Kirkurd (and Buccleuch), where he gave up Milsington for Heap. In 1453 he witnessed a charter of ‘excambion’ with Walter Scott of Kirkurd involving the freeholding of Wester Heap; Robert of Langlands was also a witness, so probably a brother or uncle. He is recorded attesting that John of St. Michael inherited his father’s lands of Whitchesters in a document of 1455 notarised in St. Mary’s Kirkyard. In 1455 he is also recorded as ‘Lord of Heip’. He is probably the ‘Johannes Langlandis’ listed among the men who received a reward from the King for the capture of James Douglas of Balverny in 1463/4. And presumably the same ‘John Langlandis’ was on the panel in 1464/5 to rule on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffship of Roxbury by Archibald Douglas. It is unclear who succeeded him, but there is probably an extra generation between him and Roger, who was responsible for the death of George Fairneylaw around 1493. John (15th C.) listed among the Roxburghshire men given remission in 1488/9 for their support of the deceased James III. James of Wilton was also listed, and so they may have been related. Most of the men appear to have been associated with Douglas of Cavers. He may be the same ‘John of Langlandis’ listed among the men chosen by William Douglas of Cavers to value the lands of Whithope in 1500; James of Wilton was also listed there. It is possible he was the ‘Joh. Langlandis’ who witnessed charters in Edinburgh in 1471 and 1474. John (15th/16th C.) recorded in the accounts of the Lord High Treasurer of Scotland as an ‘Officier’ in the period 1515–1523. The business sometimes involved delivery of letters and proclamations in the Borders, suggesting that he was from the local family, perhaps even the Laird of Langlands. Another James was recorded as ‘messenger’ to the Queen, delivering letters relating to the complaint between Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst and the Turnbulls of Bedrule and Hallrule in 1557, and also witnessing the bond of 1557 in which Turnbulls and others swore to bring in William Nixon; it seems unlikely that this is the same man, but surely is related. John (16th C.) of that Ilk, possibly son of Roger. He was witness to a sasine in 1522. In 1528 he may be the John who was listed among the supporters of Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus, who were summoned to appear before the King and forfeited their lands. He was made a ‘nuncio’ under the Lyon King of Arms in 1540. However, this is confused by Roger being recorded also in 1531/2. In 1539 he witnessed a notorial instrument for Cranstones. He may also be the same Laird of Langlands mentioned as a creditor in the inventory of the estate of William Scott, younger of Buccleuch in 1552. John (16th C.) recorded in Dunfermline in 1561. It is unclear how he is related to other Langlands. John (16th C.) recorded at Ancrum Spittal in 1586/7, among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. John (d.c.1602) son of James of that Ilk. He is first recorded in 1575 as ‘Johne Langlandis, reidare at Wiltoun’ (i.e. Reader, meaning he assisted the minister, who served several parishes). He received a stipend of 20 merks and the Kirk lands left vacant by Thomas Weston. Afterwards he was appointed Rector and is recorded as Reader for the period 1574–85. During that time it appears that William Auchmowtie was minister for Wilton and several neighbouring parishes. The division of responsibilities between the 2 men is unclear, and it is also merely a guess that while Auchmowtie was a Protestant minister, Langlands had been trained as a Catholic Priest. Both he and Auchmowtie were witnesses in 1581 to the sasine where his father resigned his half Barony of Wilton to his brother Robert. In 1588 he is recorded as Parson in a contract (in which his father is mentioned as James of that Ilk), with Walter Scott of Harden involving payment of teinds. He was deposed from Wilton some time before 1590, possibly indicating that he had formerly been a Catholic. However, it is also possible that he was reinstated and served until his death, which appears to have been in 1602, when William Clerk became the new minister. It is possible that he was the minister who received the gift of about 80 acres of the Mains of Wilton, but other versions of the story (which seem more likely) say it was the 17th century minister of the same name. However, he was son of the Laird and certainly held property in his own right in Heiton and Easter Heap (and possibly elsewhere), which his son William inherited in 1612. His children included William (who was served as heir about 10 years after his death, suggesting perhaps there was an older brother or otherwise legal complications) and Bessie (who married Adam, brother of William Scott of Burnhead). John (d.bef. 1628) of that Ilk. His name occurs in a bond of 1617, when Border Lairds renewed their promise to keep the peace. He therefore appears to have succeeded George. If he was Baron, then he was succeeded by another George. Alternatively he may have been brother (or other close relative) of George, and not actually Baron himself. Rev. John (d.bef. 1692) minister of Wilton, he was brother of the Laird of Langlands (probably Robert, but possibly George). He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1634 and became one of the Masters of Edinburgh High School in 1638. He was also one of the signatories of the Confessions of Faith in Hawick in 1638. He was presented to Wilton by Francis, Earl of Buccleuch (incorrectly given as Bothwell in one account) in 1641. He is reputed the minister who received the extensive (80 acre) lands of Wilton Glebe (or Mains). It is said that his brother granted him the extra land of Wilton Mains to increase his income to help with his family of 10 (this account was told by the last local Langlands). He baptised Walter Scott, son of Gideon of Highchesters in 1644. There is a record of 1648 involving Gideon Scott and Francis, Earl of Buccleuch over valuation of teinds. In 1649 there is a record of complaint against the Earl of Buccleuch, craving a more stable stipend, which appears to have been resolved. He also preached occasionally at Borthwick Kirk, probably the last minister to do so; he certainly asked to be freed of his responsibilities in the Borthwick, or to be given a stipend out of it, in 1642. He is listed as proprietor of Wilton in a list of communicants of the area west of Hawick in 1650 (while the Baron, Robert, is listed at Dean Mill); from that document his wife may have been...

Langlands

Agnes Douglas, although elsewhere she is named as Anna Douglas (and it is not clear which branch of the Douglas family she was from), and the other household residents (presumably servants) were John Scott, William Douglas, Adam ‘Roe’ (probably Rae), Janet Scott and Janet ‘Roe’. He is recorded in a sasine in 1664 having an annual rent of land at ‘Hayning’ (probably the Haining in Selkirk). In 1662 he was confined to his Parish for refusing to conform to Episcopacy (i.e. being a Covenanter; the younger ministers were removed from their parishes entirely), but possibly did conform, appears to have been reinstated in 1667 and is still recorded as minister in 1669. He continued as minister, but was removed some time after refusing to take the Test. There is a letter of 1683 from the Archbishop of Glasgow to the Presbytery to stop favouring him since he ‘has not preached for some Sundays’, and asking advice about John Stewart, who succeeded him that year; this suggests that he was probably removed because of religious dispute. In 1669 his son James became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh, and in 1692 his son Walter followed suit, by which time he was deceased. His children are listed (presumably in order) in the will of his son George. His daughters were: Anna, who married Henry Haswell in Crailling; Esther, who married Adam Scott in Galalaw; Elizabeth, who married William McKay or Mackie in Dunbar; Margaret, who married William Elphinstoun in Hartshaugh; Marion, who married Walter Leathead, portioner in Lilliesleaf; Agnes, who married Robert Elliot of Rig (i.e. Caerlenrig); and Rebecca and Jennet, who both stayed in Hawick. His sons were: George, who died in 1689; the already mentioned James; Walter, who lived in Hawick; Robert, who died between 1665 and 1668; and probably John the minister of Hawick (although this is unconfirmed, it seems extremely likely). In 1695 his son James was served as heir to his brother James. It is possible his wife was the ‘Mrs Langlands’ who was taxed for 3 hearths on the west-side of Hawick in 1694. Rev. John (1633–1707) minister of Hawick. Note that he is easily confused with the earlier minister of Wilton of the same name, who was probably his father. He graduated from Edinburgh in 1662, was licensed by the Bishop of Edinburgh in 1666 and was installed in Hawick in October 1667, replacing Presbyterian Alexander Kinnear. He is still recorded as minister in 1684 when the new ‘Steeple Loft’ was built. He was eventually deprived in 1689 for not reading the Proclamation of the Estates and not Praying for William and Mary (i.e. he refused to give up Episcopalianism after the Revolution). He was also accused of praying for the late King James. He was the last Episcopalian minister of Hawick Parish, before the Revolution. He is mentioned in an Edinburgh record as marrying ‘without proclamation’ William Murray, younger of Haddin to Margaret Gladstains (daughter of the late Gladstains of that Ilk) in 1693. After his removal he continued to minister in Hawick to a small congregation of Episcopilians (and presumably Jacobite supporters), in a private house at the top of the Kirk Wynd. In 1694 he acted as cautioner for Robert Langlands (who was surely related and perhaps his son) renting 1/2 of the farm of Wiltonburn. He is mentioned in a disposition relating to the Alcorne family in 1695. He is recorded in the Gladstains bible baptising 4 of the children of Walter Gladstains in the period 1672–81. He is also said to have moved to the north of England, where his family settled near Alnwick (but this seems more likely to have been the family of one of his brothers). He married Margaret Rutherford and their children were: Robert (b.1675); John (b.1678), who became a doctor; Margaret (b.1681), who presumably died young; Alison (b.1682) who may have married Francis Scott in 1713, and was recorded being in Jedburgh Parish at that time; and Margaret (b.1687). John (b.1678) son of Hawick minister John, he became a doctor. He is mentioned in a disposition of 1708 (in the National Archives) when he assigned lands to William Ainslie of Blackhill. It is possible he was the John in Woodhouselee served as joint heir (along with Robert) of Walter, Chamberlain to Sir William Scott of Harden in 1694 and whose son Walter was served as his heir in 1700. He may be the John who in 1718 petitioned the Bailies of Selkirk to be recognised as the heir of his uncle Walter. John (18th C.) recorded in 1730 when he witnessed a baptism for Will Turnbull in Hawick. John Charles (1800–74) direct descendant of the Langlands of Wilton. A son of the Rev. John of Wilton lived and died in Newcastle, his son Ranald was baptised in 1715 and the family continued in Northumberland, with John marrying in 1764, then his son John being baptised in 1773, marrying in 1794 and dying in 1804, and his son being John Charles. He married in 1830 and had 2 sons and 6 daughters. He was born in Newcastle and became tenant of Old Berwick in 1823. He made genealogical notes about the Langlands family. The church there contains memorial panels to several family members. Margaret (1730–1819) daughter of George of that Ilk and sister of Robert, the last Laird of Langlands. She is said (in Wilson’s ‘Memories of Hawick’) to have given the origin of her family as Norman, and described the motto as ‘Bon Esperance’. She died in Hawick, at 26 High Street in reduced circumstances, some accounts saying that this was in 1814 or 15, but the later date is correct, since it is in the Hawick Parish records. She was the last person to be buried in the family aisle in old Wilton Kirk. Since this was below the loft inside the church itself, there was some opposition to this, but it is said that Dr. Charters stated that he would not allow her to be separated from her forefathers. Some of the seats had to be lifted to allow the grave to be dug, and the graveside was lit by candles because of the lack of natural light under the loft. She left £20 ‘to be distributed among the industrious of the parishes of Hawick and Wilton’. Mrs. ?? (17th C.) listed in 1694 among those on the west-side of Hawick who paid the Hearth Tax. She could be the wife of Rev. John or the wife of Robert of that Ilk. Peter (d.1549) Priest at Wilton Kirk. John Greenlaw replaced him after he died. He was presumably son of a former Laird of Langlands. It is probably the same Peter who in 1542 witnessed a procuratory where George Rutherford of Hundalee resigned his lands in favour of his son Nicholas Rutherford. Rachel see Rachel Scott. Richard (14th/15th C.) master of the hospital at St. Germains. He witnessed a charter of Robert II in 1421. He was presumably related to the Langlands of that Ilk. Robert (15th C.) witness to the 1451 transfer of Heap for Milsington, between John Langlands of that Ilk and Walter Scott of Branxholme. He was probably the brother of the Laird or younger brother to the heir, James. He also witnessed the related sasine at Milsington in 1453, where he is ‘Roberto de Langlandis’. Robert (15th/16th C.) of that Ilk, said to have been the Baron of Wilton who killed George Fairneylaw. However, it seems more likely that this was Roger, or that the names were used interchangeably. Robert (15th/16th C.) witness in 1512 to the charter where Roger of that Ilk granted his lands of Mervinslaw to William Inglis of Langlandshill. He was surely related to the Laird, probably brother or son. Robert (d.bef. 1610) of that Ilk, son of James. In 1580/1 his father resigned his hald Baron of Wilton in his favour, reserving a liferent for himself, and with a provision to provide for his mother (Marion Scott) and her children. He is recorded as witness to a bond of March 1594/5 (along with William Scott of Allanhaugh and Allan Deans in Hawick) made by James Gledstains, pledging that Hector and Richard Turnbull of Clarilaw would not harm Gavin Elliott of Stobs or William Elliot of Horsleyhill. He was still head of the family in a record of 1599. In 1602 he signed a bond among Border Lairds for keeping the peace. He was succeeded by George some time before 1610. George’s brothers were Robert and James, and so they were probably all his sons. Similarly, George’s uncle was Adam, so this was probably his brother. His son George was served as his heir in 1611. Robert (17th C.) named by the Hawick Bailie on a list of 16 ‘idle and masterless men’ fit for sending to the army in Germany in 1627. When produced before the Privy Council by the Bailie he was one of the men who were found ‘not fit for the wars’ and dismissed. Robert (17th C.) of that Ilk. He appears to have succeeded George (probably his father) around 1640. In 1638 he signed the Confession of Faith and is recorded there as ‘fier of yt. ilke’. He was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1643 and was also on the Committee of War for the county in 1643, 1644, 1646 and 1648. He was the second largest landowner in Wilton Parish (after the Earl of Buccleuch) in a 1643 valuation, with a value of £953 16s 8d. He was probably also the Robert whose land in Hawick was valued at £3 in 1643. He is also recorded as a heritor of Wilton in 1649. Probably the same Robert was proprietor of Dean Mill in a list of communicants of 1650, and from that document his wife may have been Margaret ‘Per’ and their (adult) children George, Adam and Margaret. In any case, he was probably succeeded by George. In 1659 another son Robert is recorded becoming a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh. He was fined £1,800 (about 2 full years rental as valued on his estates) in 1662 for refusing to give up Episcopacy. He was recorded in a deed of 1663. He was probably the brother of John, minister of Wilton (who was similarly fined). He must have been the Robert of that Ilk recorded in the Land Tax Rolls of 1663, when he paid tax on £992, with part ‘pertaining to Margaret Donaldson’, who may have been his wife. Robert (17th C.) probably related to the Wilton family, although the connection is unclear. He was a tutor of a branch of the house of Cardross, being governor of the brothers of the Earl in the 1670s. In 1675 he was seized by guards under Sir Mungo Robert (17th C.) tenant in Todshawhaugh. In the 1686 ratification of the lands of the Scotts of Buccleuch it is stated that he was sometimes occupier of Whames. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (17th C.) listed in 1694 among those on the west-side of Hawick who paid the Hearth Tax. He could be the Robert, married to Isobel Scott, whose daughter Isobel was born in Hawick in 1680. The witnesses to that baptism were Robert Scott of Horsleyhill and George Scott of Boonraw (who were probably related to his wife). He may be the Robert who witnessed a baptism for carrier James Scott in 1688. Robert (17th C.) rented 1/2 of the farm of Wiltonburn from the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1694 and 1696. Rev. John acted as his cautioner; this makes it clear that he was not the same man as Robert of that Ilk, but it also suggests that he was probably related to the minister. It seems possible that he may be the Robert, son of Rev. John, born in 1675. His will is recorded in 1696, suggesting that this is when he died. Robert (d.bef. 1725) of that Ilk, probably the son of George and Janet Douglas. He was most likely the Laird who was a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1685 and again in 1690. He was also probably the Laird of Langlands in 1694 when his interests in Wilton Parish are recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls; he paid tax for 6 hearths at his house. In 1687 he was granted a sasine for 2 tenements in Hawick, and is also recorded in another Hawick sasine in 1691. He also owned the piece of the Sandbed on which the Grammar School would be built, which he bought in 1701 and sold to Adam Elliot of Arkleton in 1713. In 1701 he obtained a lease of Wester Alemoor from Gideon Scott of Highchester. He could be the Robert who witnessed a baptism for gardener Robert Roger in Hawick in 1701. In 1704 he was again listed among the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire. He married Mary Scott and a sasine in her favour, recorded in 1690, may have been part of the marriage contract; it is unclear from which branch of the Scotts his wife came. He was also recorded as a Commissioner of Supply in 1704. His son George succeeded before 1725, when his widow was still alive. His eldest daughter was Isabella, who married Rev. Robert Lithgow of Ashkirk and died in 1740. Dr. Robert (1727–1803) of that Ilk. Son of George, he was the last Laird of Langlands, being served heir of the half Barony of Wilton in 1758 (with Walter Irwin acting as factor in the interim). Born in Hawick, he studied medicine in Edinburgh and practised there as a surgeon, perhaps also serving with the family of the Duke of Argyll. He played an active part in the work of Wilton Parish in the period 1759–73, his name appearing regularly in the minute books. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. As a member of the Roads Trustees Committee, he was the principal proponent for the building of the New Road for many years before it was finally approved by the Roads Trustees. His first proposal was in around 1765, and his only supporters then were Elliott of Stobs and Scott of Synton. He was also a local Justice of the Peace in the 1760s. He was one of the Commissioners appointed in the court case regarding the division of Hawick Common in 1767. He appears to have sold off the patronage of Wilton Kirk to Henry, Duke of Buccleuch. The estate was already much reduced when he inherited it, but it further diminished under his Lairdship. The estate was handed over to trustees (Sir Francis Elliott of Stobs and writers Thomas Tod and Cornelius Elliot) in the 1770s, and the final part was sold off in 1783. However, he kept the superiority of Langlands and on that basis was kept on the voters roll for Roxburghshire in 1780. He returned to Edinburgh to practise as a doctor in the mid-1770s. He is recorded in 1780 obtaining ‘liferent’ of the lands of Broomhall and part of Mertoun from Walter Scott of Harden, with sasine following in 1792. In 1783 he donated ‘a chicken, preserved in spirits, having two heads conjoined laterally at the back of the skull’ to the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland. He remained unmarried and died in Edinburgh in April 1803, being buried in Old Calton cemetery, in the burial place of the Boyds of Maxpoffle. Roger (15th/16th C.) of that Ilk, Baron of Wilton. Based on dates he is probably a grandson of John of Langlands who is last recorded in 1455. He is said to have beheaded the messenger of Melrose Abbey, George Fairneylaw, around 1493 or 1494, in a dispute over tithes payable to the Abbey (although Fairneylaw was actually a cleric of the Diocese of Glasgow, and his own name is often incorrectly given as ‘Robert’). The tradition also states that the Heap Cross marked the spot of the murder, although this is long gone (and seems likely to have existed long before).

He is supposed to have immediately sought the King's pardon, saying that he had knocked the bonnet off a dignitary of the church, and omitting to say that his head had been in it! The only historical record (from the Justice-naire in Jedburgh, described in Pitcairn's 'Criminal Trials') is of Sir Robert Ker and John Rutherford of Edgerston being sureties for his appearance to answer to the slaughter of 'Sir George Farnylaw, chaplain', and of him being denounced a rebel and being fined (then having all his goods forfeited to the King) in February 1494/5 for failure to appear. He appears to have had a sasine for Wilton in 1503. He was reconciled at least by 1506, when he was witness at an inquest held in Jedburgh. He was also witness to a 'retour' of the Earl of Buccleuch in 1508 and another of Adam Hepburne, Earl of Bothwell that same year. In 1512 there is a charter of transfer of his lands at Mervinslaw to William Inglis of Langlandshill (the name connection with the lands perhaps suggesting he was perhaps a relative) for 1 penny 'blech farm' payable at Pentecost in Wilton Kirk. Robert was a witness, and so presumably a relative. There are no records of him after this (and John is mentioned in 1522), so perhaps he did not survive Flodden – 'Oh, Langlands ye're a graceless man An' a graceless man are ye; If ye wunna pay the kirk its due The kirk's curse ye maun dree' [FL].

Roger (16th C.) recorded as 'of Wiltonhall' in 1531/2 in a charter of the lands of Borthaugh. This may indicate that there was another generation in the early 16th century, and he may have succeeded from John and been succeeded by another John. Roger (16th/17th C.) recorded being in Hawick in 1610. George of that Ilk acted as cautioner for him (and several other Langlands and Scotts) that they would not harm Walter Scott in Hawick (called of Todshawhaugh) and his associates. He was surely a relative of George of that Ilk (but probably not brother or uncle, since that would have been stated). Thomas (14th/15th C.) Abbot of Newbattle in 1422. He is recorded as 'de Langlandis' and so presumably directly related to the main family branch. Walter of Brieryhill (16th C.) signatory of the local Confession of Faith in 1638. He signed along with George of that Ilk, Robert (George's son and heir) and Andrew, who were all surely close relatives. Walter (d.c.1694) Chamberlain to Sir William Scott of Harden. In 1689 he is described as 'chamberlain to Sir William Scot of harden elder and younger' in a discharge with the treasurer of Selkirk regarding annual rent. In 1694 his brothers Robert and John were served as his joint heirs. Robert was described as his immediately younger brother, and John was 'in Woodhouseiel'. His will is recorded in Lauder in 1698, where he is described as Chamberlain to Sir Walter Scott of Harden in the Parish of Merton. It is unclear how he was related to other Langlands; however, given the earlier connections of the Langlands of Wilton to the Scotts of Harden, it is probable he was from the local family. Perhaps he was the eldest (and otherwise unrecorded) son of Rev. John of Hawick, who also had sons Robert and John. He may be the Walter whose nephew petitioned the Bailies of Selkirk in 1718 to be recognised as his heir. William (15th C.) served as surety in 1493, along with the Laird of Bedrule, for John Sinclair in Minto, as well as for John Aitkin and Thomas Bell. It seems likely that he was either Laird of Langlands, or closely related. William (16th/17th C.) son of John, Rector of Wilton. In 1612 he inherited land at 'Heytoun' (possibly Heiton) and an annual grant of grain from 'Eister Heap'. William (16th/17th C.) tenant in Haining recorded in 1618 among men accused of illegally carrying guns. He was ststed to be too poor to find caution and hence promised not to repeat the offence on pain of banishment and having his hand cut off if he returned. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Scott and their son William was baptised in 1719, with witnesses William Cunningham and Beadle John Scott. William (18th/19th C.) married Janet Notman in Minto in 1794 (spelled 'Langlandes', 'Langlandis', 'Langlanis', etc. in earlier documents).

the Langlands (thu-lawng-lindz) n. important family in Wilton, from perhaps as early as 1290, and certainly 1451, until the family sold off the Langlands estate in 1783, with the last local family member dying in Hawick in 1819. Langlands Hill in Peeblesshire may have been the original family seat. The family may have once been 'Longueville', while the 'de Charteris' family may also have been one and the same; however, these connections have been the subject of much debate. Local members were buried in the eastern end of old Wilton Church, in an aisle under the gallery. A branch of the local family moved to the Newcastle area and there are memorial panels to some of them in Old Berwick church. The seal of the local family (showing a lion rampant, without motto) is in the Museum. The family shield is silver with a red chevron and 3 mullets (stars), while the crest shows an anchor standing in the sea and the motto is ‘Spero’ (‘I hope’) or ‘Bon Esperance’. The family seal was donated to the Museum in 1856 and an armorial panel in Wilton Kirk was apparently painted over in the middle of the 19th century – ‘They saw bold Langlands proudly ride In armour burnished bright, With stately Wallace by his side, Fair freedom’s fearless knight’ [JI], ‘And Langlands ne’er meets the marchmen now, To see that his flag is planted fair, And peace prevails where once was feud, And Langlands o’ Langlands is nae mair’ [BCM1880].

Langlands Bank (lawng-lindz-bawngk) n. long row of working-class housing, built between 1850 and 1855, on a parallel street to the south of Langlands Road, and named after the Langlands family who once owned the area. A series of steps led down to the lower level flats. The block can be seen in an 1865 photograph, with little other housing around. The houses were demolished in 1971 and the site grassed over, with the rubble being used to raise the level of the Big Haugh.

Langlands Boathouse (lawng-lindz-bó’-hos) n. Langlands Boathouse, once in the grounds of what is now Deanfield, and the home of the Coble Pool ferryman.

Langlands Brig (lawng-lindz-brig) n. Langlands Bridge, a footbridge across the Teviot in Wilton Lodge Park, off Bucleuch Road at the western end of the Playing Fields. It was erected in 1894 and marks the former boundary of the Burgh (named after the Langlands family).

Langlands Cauld (lawng-lindz-kawld) n. another name for the Coble Cauld (mentioned in the 1767 description of the boundaries of the Common).

Langlands Court (lawng-lindz-kör’) n. sheltered housing complex built in 1984 near the previous Langlands Bank, and on the site of the former St. Margaret’s Church.

Langlands Dean (lawng-lindz-deen) n. former name for Wilton Dean. It was in use in baptismal records from at least 1797, but had died out by the 1860s.

Langlands Mill (lawng-lindz-mil) n. another name for Ladylaw Mill (sometimes called ‘Langlands and Ladylaw Mills’ or ‘Langlands Spinning Mill’), long the property of the Wilson family, and later the main factory of Wilson & Glenny’s. For a time the Langlands Mill part was separate, also sometimes known as the Roughheugh Waulk Mill. A new factory was built behind Dangerfield Mill, probably been 1810 and 1818 when the Wilson and Watson partnership ended; this is marked ‘Langlands Spinning Mill’ on Wood’s 1824 map. It was originally constructed for Wilson to supply yarn for his expanding stocking frame business. The mill was driven by water in the Wilton Dam. In 1831 it contained the first steam engine built in Hawick (by Melrose’s). A separate mill was built perhaps 1851 on a site adjacent to the Roughheugh Waulk Mill, and known at that time as ‘Ladylaw’, distinct from Roughheugh.

Langlands Park (lawng-lindz-pawrk) n. villa built possibly for James Oliver. It was designed in Scottish baronial style by Glasgow-based architect John Thomas Rochead in 1863. The house was renovated for Peter Scott in 1914, and so may have changed its name.

Langlands Place (lawng-lindz-plis) n. street that was incorporated into Wilton Crescent in 1865 (marked on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map).

Langlands Raik (lawng-lindz-rák) n. area mentioned in an old description of the Common at Myreslawgreen, meaning an extent of land used for grazing sheep or cattle – ‘...the highway from West Port to Langlands Raik on the east’ (i.e. the ‘Common Vennel’, so that ‘Langlands Raik’ must have been around the Playing Fields or Coble; this could be ‘Reach’, i.e. a stretch of the Teviot).

Langlands Road (lawng-lindz-ród) n. street stretching from the top of Roadhead to Wilton Path. It was once known as ‘the kirk road from Wilton to Langlands’, and was named around 1868. The street was once very narrow, but widened about 10 feet in 1904, with some demolition of houses at the Roadhead end. The street was extended when Langlands Bank was demolished in 1971.

Langlee (lawng-lee) n. house above Langlands Road, built in 1907 to designs by J.P. Alison. It may have originally been built for for manufacturer T.A. Laing and was later the home of George Scott, son of the founder of Pesco’s.

Langlee (lawng-lee) n. farm on the west side of the Jed Water, opposite Ferniehirst Castle. It was listed as ‘Langlee’ in 1538 among lands in Jedforest that had passed to the Crown, but the lands were ‘claimed by the laird thereof’; at that time it was valued at 25 shillings. It is probably the lands of ‘Langley’ listed among those held by the French family in 1588 (and formerly part of the holdings of Jedburgh Abbey). It was owned by the Bruce family from the early 1800s, then the Dalrymples. James Fair owned the lands in 1788 and through the early 19th century, passing them to his nephew James Elliot Shortreed-Fair. It was bought by Charles Scott of Howcleuch (son of Walter of Wualcope) in the late 19th century. The house built about the 1790s was replaced with a design by David Bryce in the 1860s. There is planted parkland from an earlier period (it is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Langly’).

Langlee (lawng-lee) n. area between Galashielis and Melrose, on the north of where the Water meets the Ettrick. It was formerly an estate with mansion house. It is now a rather depressing suburb of Galashielis.

Langley Cleuch (lawng-lee-klooch) n. small stream in Liddesdale, that rises near Blinkbonnt and runs through Langleycleuch Wood to become part of the Tweedburn.

lang lie (lawng-LI) n. the act of staying in bed longer than usual, a sleep in – ‘tall folk ayehev a lang lie’.

the Lang Moss (thu-lawng-mos) n. area near the northern extent of the old Wilton Common, now on Drinkstone farm, just to the west of Drinkstone Hill (and marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map). It was near here that the temporary grave of ‘Jenny Saut Haa’ was located. There is another ‘Long Moss’ near Cavers Knowes farm.

Langmoss Knowe (lawng-mos-now) n. small hill on the northern side of Drinkstone Hill, containing the remains of some ancient enclosures.

lang-nebbit (lawng-ne-bee’, -bi’) adj., arch. long-nosed – ‘O ye lang-nebbit pryn’ race, Who kittle words an’ letters trace’[JR], astute, learned – ‘Lang-nebbit words he has in store. His brains were ne’er surpassed by ony; Kirk session law, he bang’d it a’, Did Cuillie Jock o’ auld Blinkbonny’[DA].

Langnewton (lawng-new’in) n. Langnewton, hamlet about 3 miles south of Newton St. Boswells. This was also a small, ancient parish, which was absorbed into Ancrum at the end of the 17th century. Hence it was once the western part of the later Parish of Ancrum. The church was described as a benefice of 8 merks in 1220; there is now no sign of it. The Rectory belonged to Jedburgh Abbey. John of ‘Longa Newton’ swore paid homage to Edward I in 1296. The barony was granted to Robert, Stewart of Scotland by Robert the Bruce around the 1320s, and by the late 14th century the barony was held by a branch of the Douglases. In 1377 there was an indenture between John of Kinghorn and William, son of William of Newbigging for lands there. There were Rutherfords there in the 15th century. Patrick and Arthur Crawford were at the mill there in 1493. Patrick Hepburn, Earl of Bothwell, was infefted in lands there in 1499/1500 and the lands were confirmed to Adam, Earl of Bothwell in 1511. There was a tower house here in the 16th century, which in 1513 was given to the custody of Adam, Master of the Anchorite Order, for protection, and in 1589 it was taken by Andrew Ker of Newhall, who was then denounced as a rebel. In addition the Kers of Newhall broke parts of Langnewton Mill in 1589. In the latter part of the 16th century lands there were held by James Douglas of Lochleven as Commander of Melrose; in 1586 he complained that an armed band of Kers, Rutherfords and others had prevented him ‘fra teinding and leiding his teyndis tairof’. The Barony was held by Francis Scott, Earl of Buccleuch when he inherited his father’s lands and rights in 1634. The whole Parish was valued at about £2500 in 1643 and 1663 and was held by the Earl of Lothian. It was among baronies and lands inherited by daughters of George Scott (brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade) in 1670. Patrick Scott, fiar of Ancrum, paid the land tax on the whole parish there in 1678, when it was valued at aabout £2200. Langnewton Moor was said to be a location for Covenanter meetings around 1680. There was formerly a mill here, on the right bank of the Teviot, as well as a school. The area to the north of the village was formerly known as Langnewton Common – ‘The Craig for strength, Woodhead for length, Palacehill for beauty, Sandystones the most confused place In all Langnewton barony’[T] (the name first appears as ‘Longa Neutun’ in 1220, and is thereafter often ‘Langnewton’, ‘Langneutoune’, ‘Langnewtone’, ‘Langnewtonne’, ‘Langnewtoun’, ‘Langnewtowne’, ‘Longnewtounne’, or similar; it is ‘Lang new’ on Gordon’s map of Scotland in Blaeu’s 1654 atlas; the origin is simply Old English for ‘long new town’, which is descriptive of the village).

Langnewton

Langowater

(former farmstead in upper Teviotdale. In the Hawick Parish valuation of 1627 it is listed between Hislop and Blackcleuch, ‘estimat to 20 lb., 3 lb. in teynd’ with ‘no corne’. It is unclear precisely where it was located.)
Lang Penman

Lang Penman (lang-pen-min) n. nickname for a minor riever, captured by the Laird of Buccleuch in 1530. He was also recorded in 1535 as ‘servant of one called Dikkis Wille’ (possibly William Armstrong, son of Richard) among a list of men denounced as rebels for a raid on the farm at Craik. His surname was probably Penman and he was presumably tall.

Langraw (lang-raw) n. farm just south of Bonchester Bridge. The land there was apparently once owned by monks from Jedburgh Abbey, as part of the Barony of Abbotrule. David ‘Schewill’ (or Sheil) was tenant in 1516 and another David recorded there in 1567. A tower there was burned by the English in 1545. In 1569 it was acquired (along with several other lands) by Adam French from the monks of Jedburgh Abbey and was still listed as part of the Lordship of Jedburgh in 1587. Archie Turnbull ‘of Langraw’ was recorded in 1579/80. Robert Elliot ‘in Langraw’ is recorded in 1610, a Shiel was tenant in 1626 and George Shiel in 1688. The lands were valued at £104 in 1643 and 1663, with Lyle Shiel in 1643 and George Shiel in 1663 owning an additional £52 there. It was among lands whose superiority was inherited by daughters of George Scott (brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade) in 1670. The lands (or perhaps their superiority) were among those inherited by William Kerr of Abbotrule in 1680. In the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, William Turnbull ‘of Langraw’ was taxed for having 2 hearths, and James Shiel, ‘portioener’ there, was also taxed for 2 hearths. Alexander Turnbull was tenant there in 1738. Walter Barrie and Thomas Hope are recorded as tenants in 1797. It was owned by the Turnbulls through the 17th and 18th centuries, until sold off by the heir of the last Laird in 1801. It was purchased by William Oliver in 1811; it is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map and Stobie’s 1770 map.

Langraw (lang-raw) n. Longrow, farm in the southern part of Castleton Parish. It is about the southernmost part of Roxburghshire. Just north of the farm are old quarries, in one of which there are exposed parts of a cist, and in another is a grass-grown mound that was a lime kiln. There was formerly a lime kiln to the north-west, on the banks of the Muir Burn. Henry Forester was there in the period 1788-91. John Scott was farmer there in 1851 (it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Langraw Scaur (lang-raw-sawr) n. former name for cottages near Langraw (by Bonchester Bridge), presumably named for a ‘scaur’ there. It was also known as ‘Scaur Noo’k. William Oliver, hind at Langraw, lived there in the mid-19th century.

Lang Sandy (lawng-sawn-dee) n. nickname for Alexander Scott.

Langshaw (lawng-shaw) n. ruined 16th century L-plan tower a few miles north of Galashiels, stronghold of the Borthwicks. It is very close to Colmslie and Hillslap towers. It was in the hands of Lord Home in the latter part of the 15th century and was once a seat of the Murrays. Part of it was rented from Melrose Abbey by the Pringles of Galashiels according to a document of 1529 (the name is probably simply Old English for ‘the long wood’ and is first recorded in 1586: it was spelled ‘Langschaw’ and variants and was later ‘Lainshaw’).

Langshawburn (lawng-shaw-burn) n. remote farmstead over into Dumfriesshire, just to the west of Craik Cross Hill. It was once split into Upper and Nether Langshawburn. Cowans and Murrays lived there in 1841 (it is marked on the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch).

lang shears (lawng-sheerz) n., arch. period of work, labour – ‘By the ‘lang shears o’ Gordon’ I’ll pay ye a’ off; Another day’s work ye shall ne’er hae frae me’ [JoHa], ‘She’s come throw the lang shears’ [GW].

Langside (lawng-sid) n. villa at 39 Weensland Road. It was built for manufacturer Adam Darling in the latter part of the 19th century. James Burnet was there in the 1930s (also written ‘Langsyde’).

Langside (lawng-sid) n. former name for the lands at Langsidebrae. It formed part of the estate of Elliott of Stobs in 1678. At about that time it was said that the Covenant Alexander Peden arrived at the farm incognito, asking for work in exchange for accommodation, only for the family from there to recognise him when he preached at Ruberslaw on the next Sunday, and still recorded that way in 1811 and in about 1874. William Pott was living there in 1702. Walter Bowie in 1719, William Scott in 1757 and William Nichol in 1769 (it is ‘Langsyde’ in 1573, 1692 and 1698 and ‘Langside’ in 1678).

Langside (lawng-sid) n. farm near Bowden. A story is told of the Covenanter Alexander Peden working there in disguise and then being recognised by locals at a field preaching on the following Sunday. There were Elliots of Langside in the 17th century (easily confused with Lansidebraes near Shankend).

Langsidebrae (lawng-sid-brâ) n. farmstead just to the west of the Langside Burn above Shankend in the upper Slitrig valley. This is probably the ‘Langside’ listed among lands in the Barony of Cavers resigned in 1368 by Thomas Baliol to his superior William, Earl of Douglas. The lands here are referred to as just ‘Langside’ in a 1511 charter of Douglas of Cavers. In 1573 Douglas of Cavers had a decree to remove Robert Elliot of Redheugh from these lands, but Elliot argued that ‘his fader and guid sire was in possession of the saidis landis thir mony yeris bigne’. It is probably the farm of that name, possessed by William, younger of Cavers in about 1614 when some livestock were stolen. It was still in the Barony of Cavers when that was inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687 and by his brother Archibald in 1698. It was ‘Langsyde’ owned by the Elliots of Stobs at the end of the 17th century, e.g. inherited by Sir William Elliott in 1692. John Elliot was tenant in ‘Langside’ in 1694. Walter and James Armstrong were farmers there in 1797, with William Hobkirk as shepherd. Thomas Cairns was there in 1868. John Rae was shepherd here in the mid-19th century. Charles Anderson was there in the early 1900s.

Langside Burn (lawng-sid-burn) n. stream joining the Slitrig at Shankend and fed by smaller streams that rise on the slopes of the Maidens and Greatmoor, including Fore Burn, Mid Burn, Back Burn and Pap Sike. In its upper part is the waterfall of Hawkhass Linn, with an adjacent earthwork. A little further down, near where it crosses the line of the Catrail are the remains of a farmstead, being a D-shaped enclosure about 55 m across, with signs of 2 sets of rectangular foundations, one inside and one outside. The stream runs through Langside Burn Wood, near where the 1863 Ordnance Survey map shows some buildings. The steadings of Langsidebraes is to the west. There is a farm of the same name in Bowden Parish and several others across Scotland.

Langside Burn (lawng-sid-burn) n. former name for a stream near Whithope, perhaps Whames Sike. It is listed as ‘langesideburne’ in about the 1190s when Richard Lovel granted lands between Whithope and Whames.

Langslack Sike (lawng-slak-sik) n. Longslack Sike, stream that flows roughly north-east to join the Jed Water, to the east of Southdean Mill. The area is rich in archaeological remains. Hyndhaughead Tower lay on its northern banks, and Slack’s Tower a little to the south. There was another tower house just 150 m east of Hyndhaughead, on the south side of the stream. The foundations are still visible, about 6.6 m by 3.8 m, surrounded by banks, and with 2 larger farmstead buildings adjacent. There are also signs of rig lines, enclosures and other banks from the former farm. It is also possible that there are remains of a homestead here, buried in peat. This may correspond to ‘Watersyde’ on Baue’s c.1654 map.

Lang Sike (lawng-sik) n. small stream joining the Leap Burn just to the west of Robert’s Linn bridge. The Catrail crosses just to the south and there are the remains of a settlement there, being about 110 m in diameter and enclosing 3 platforms. The area is now covered with forest.

langsome (lawng-sum) adj., arch. slow, tedious, weary, lengthy – ‘But I forget the langsome years that o’er our head ha’e fled, I dinna see the burning tears Thae een o’ blue ha’e shed’ [JT].

Lang Stand Oot (thin-lawng-stand-o’o’) n. local industrial dispute of 1822–23, lasting 14 months. It was prompted by the Hawick hosiery employers trying to reduce wages so that they could price their goods more competitively. This was a combined effort of all the town’s manufacturers, except William Beck. Plays and other entertainments were put on in the Town Hall and elsewhere to raise money for the strikers. Strike leaders were imprisoned in Jethart Jail, but were freed without trial. Eventually the employers conceded.

lang syne (lawng-sin) adj., arch., poet. of long ago, old-time, ancient – ‘Lang syne, whan decent gude grey claiith, Did hap the laird an’ tenant baith’[JR], ‘A’ ye wha doat on langsyne things, Wha heap auld armour up in bings . . . ’[JoHa], ‘. . . Gin I be near, I’ll buy’t a flock, For auld langsyne’[JoHa], ‘Jingo ring was ma’ ma line i’ th’ langs-syne days . . . ’[HEx1919], adv., arch., poet. long ago, literally ‘long since’ –
Lang Synton

‘But aa mind a day, long-syne, Aa met ee at The Vertish edge’ [DH], ‘And whiles I think that muckle o’ life’s fun, The satisfaction kent langsyne ...’ [WL], n., arch., poet. the days of the past, old times, nostalgia – ‘...The perfect content o’ the games o’ lang syne’ [??], ‘Fra sister fonts o’ auld lang syne Sae flows your gutterblade wi’ mine’ [JEDM], ‘Gane, the auld petted ewie that fed on the lea – Naething left o’ langsyne but my grandfather’s tree’ [DA] (sometimes written as one word, ‘langsye’).

Lang Synton (lawng-sin-tin) n. possible former name for lands, perhaps near Synton. In 1679 John Shortridge in ‘Longsintoune’ had a discharge for payment with the Burgh of Selkirk and he was in ‘Langseintein’ in 1681.

Lang Tae (lawng-ta) n. hill in Craik Forest, near the head of Wolfcleuch Burn. It reaches a height of 438 m.

Langtae Hill (lawng-ta-hil) n. hill just to the west of Cauldcleuch. It reaches a height of 554 m (1,786 feet) and is the source of the Skelfhill Burn.

Lang Tam Dyce (lawng-tawm-dis) n. nickname for Rev. Thomas Dyce.

lang-tholance (lawng-tho-lins) adj., poet. long-suffering – ‘...fu’ o’ tender pite, an’ gracious, lang-tholance, an’ wavensum in mercie an’ trouth’ [HSR].

Langton (lawng-tin) n. William (b.1814/5) from England, he worked as a stocking frame-smith in Hawick. In 1841 he was at about 55 High Street, but by 1851 had moved to O’Connell Street. His brothers John and James were living with him by then. The family moved to 15 Backdamgate, then back to O’Connell Street by 1871.

Lanton (lawng-tin) n. former name for lands in the Barony of Hawick, probably the same as Harwudhill. The ratification of the Barony to Anna Duchess of Buccleuch in 1686 lists ‘the lands of Harwoodhill and Emmetsheells, somtymes called Lant and Emmetsheels’.

the Lantern Show (thu-lan-turn-sho) n. former name for a slide-show, particularly those associated with the Brethren Hall in Old Manse Lane in the early part of the 20th century.

Lanton (lawn-in, lawn-tin) n. village about 8 miles north-east of Hawick, half a mile off the A698. It contains several 18th century buildings and also a 16th century peel tower incorporated into Lanton House. There is also a garden having a plaque inscribed with Wullie Landles’ poem ‘Lanton’. The village used to be home of the Crowners (i.e. coroner) of Roxburgh and was also known as Cranstoun. Lands here were part of the original grant to Jedburgh Abbey in the early 12th century. Later the lands were split among several different owners, with a total value of more than £1700. Janet Turnbull had sasine for the lands in 1502, and Margaret and Elizabeth Turnbull in 1506. The area was burned by Dacre’s men, led by Sir Roger Fenwick in late 1513, and by Hertford’s men in 1545. A ‘6 pound land of Langtoune’ was owned by the Scotts of Branxholme and Buccleuch from at least 1502; they were valued at £6 in 1574, when still held by the Scotts of Buccleuch. The lands were included in the main Barony of Branxholme according to the services of heirs in 1634 and 1653, and the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch. The Mathers of Lanton were a prominent family in the Jedburgh area in the 17th century. A large part of the land passed to the Douglases sometime in the 17th century (with 2 acres there being included among possessions of the Douglases of Cavers in 1687 and 1698) and was sold to the Fergusons in 1694, then passed to the Youngs and the Browns. Rev. George Dickson held part of the lands from 1770, and they were sold by his trustees to Sir Gilbert Murray Kynynmound Elliot in 1796. In the 1788 county valuation draft lands there were owned by George Black of Menslaws, the Duke of Buccleuch, George Dickson’s trustees, William Douglas of Timpendean, Walter Hunter of Polmood, Andrew Mather, John Mather’s heirs, Thomas Ogilvie of Chester, James Porteous, Thomas Rutherford of Knowesouth, Robert Scott, William Turnbull and Thomas Waugh of Hawkburn. There was once a school in the village (the origin is probably Old English ‘longa tun’, meaning ‘the long town’: it first occurs as ‘Langtoun’ in the mid-12th century, remaining that way for centuries, and still being ‘Langton’ and ‘Langtown’ into the late 18th century; it is ‘Langton’ on Blaen’s map of 1654).

Lanton (lawn-tin, lawung-toon) n. William (15th C.) member of the ‘retour of inquest’ for Ker of Altonburn in 1438. He is recorded as being of ‘Langthoun’.

Lanton Cauld (lawn’-in-kawld) n. weir in the Teviot near Lanton Mill.

Lanton Hill (lawn’-in-hil) n. hill south of Lanton village and west of Jedburgh, containing a farm of the same name. There are 2 forts on its northern side. There is also a linear feature stretching from here to the south, towards the Dunion.

Lanton Ladies (lawn’-in-lä-dee-lawndz) n. lands near Lanton that were once owned by the Douglases of Cavers and valued at £10. The lands were incorporated into Jedburgh Parish before 1788. They are described as ‘formerly in Cavers Parish’ in the 1788 draft valuation, when they belonged to Thomas Rutherford of Knowesouth. The name suggests that the lands were associated with a church for which Douglas of Cavers once held the patronage (along with Hassendean Lady Lands).

Lanton Mains (lawn’-in-mänz) n. farm just past Knowesouth on the A698. In 1870 a Bronze Age cist was discovered there, containing skeletal remains, a beaker and flint flakes.

Lanton Place (lawn’-in-plis) n. part of Stichers, off Guthrie Drive, built in 1978 and named after the village of Lanton.

lantreen (lan-treen) n., arch. a lantern – ‘A’l heh ti wire in, or thance A’l no can wun doon in teime for the majeek-lantreen’[ECS].

lan’-ward (lan-wurd) adv., poet. landward – ‘For I was lan’-ward bred, and Lang for thick-broon at brig-ends, and speech As blunt’s the erse-brod o’ a cairt’ [DH].

lap (lawp) pp., arch., poet. leapt, jumped – ‘Then Dickie lap a loup fu hie, Fala, &c. And I wat a loud laugh laughed he ...’[CPM], ‘...With witches’ hazel in each steel cap, In scorn of Souils’ gramarye; Then shoulder-hight for glee he lap, ‘Methinks I sype a coming tree!’ [JL], ‘The yowes they lap out owre the buchte, And skippit up and downe’ [JTe], ‘And they hobbled and lap with their gyse, When Yeddie play’d up, how they caper’d an’ lap, they thrimm’d their feet a’ sae tightly’ [JoHa], ‘An’ bauld wi’ hindberries frae the syke, I lap an’ ran a turn Alang the divots on the dyke, Doon to the Tweeden burn’[ECB], ‘She was a yauld and willint bitch As ever lap ower hedge and ditch’ [JH], ‘He lap tae gird his sword, At his yauld and willint bitch As ever lap ower hedge’[JBS].

lappert gowan (law-pur-gow-in) n., arch. common name for the march marigold, Caltha palustris – ‘The Marsh or March Marigold, commonly known as Lappart Gowsan, opens its large full yellow wax-like flowers in meadows and marshes’ [JAHM].

larrie (law-ree) n. a lorry – ‘Fient a trap, boaggie, geeg, laarrie, caager’s cairt or hurlie’ [ECS], ‘Hei was on ov a laarrie comin birrilin alang . . . ’ [ECS] (also written ‘laarie’).

Larristofts (law-ris-tofts) n. lands listed in 1511 among those held ‘in tenandry’ by the Baron of Hawick, Douglas of Drumlanrig. The lands continued to be listed in 1572 when James Douglas inherited the Barony of Hawick. In 1615 it is transcribed ‘Lairis, Toftis, Kirkwood’, which is probably ‘Larristofts and Kirkwood’. It seems likely that this is related to the lands of Lairs near Teviothead, and unrelated to Larriston, although of course there may be other possibilities (it is ‘Laristoftis’ in 1511 and ‘Lairis Toftis’ and ‘Lairiss Toftis’ in 1572).

Larriston (law-ris-tin) n. farm on the Liddel Water, south of Saughtree. The Larriston Burn, draining from Larriston Fells, joins the Liddel just below here. A former tower there was an important seat of the Elliots from the early 16th century. It is suggested that the site of the tower was on the Larriston Burn near Upper Larriston, some distance from the main house today. However, there may have been a separate tower-house near the modern house. Jeffrey says that when the foundation were dug up in about 1800 a large oven and an 18 pound cannon-ball were found. It may be the ‘Lanorowstanys’ listed as a 20 merk land in the c.1376 rental roll of Liddesdale. Two separate farms there were formerly called Over and Nether Larriston; these were granted to Robert Elliot of Redheugh by the Earl of Angus in 1484. The farm was occupied by several Nixons in 1544. This was probably the site of the tower built by Martin Elliot of Braidlie in the 1570s and which was attacked by the English in 1584 (referred to in another English account as ‘Martins tower’). Probably a new tower was built by Robert Elliot of Redheugh in the late 1580s, since an English letter of 1596 describes that he ‘within these 12 years, has erected another called laristone’. The last Robert of Redheugh mostly resided there in the early 17th century. He had a daughter Margaret, who married James Elliott, son of ‘Gibbie wi the Golden Garters’, and their son Gilbert became the next Elliot of Larriston. In the 1678 Land Tax Rolls the whole estate was valued at £1934, with Larriston itself valued at £834. Robert Elliot of Larriston became bankrupt and the lands of Over and Nether Larriston were sold to Christopher Irving of Binks in 1688. Tax was paid for 4 hearths at the house in 1694, and there was a shepherd and another house with a kiln recorded. Robert Elliot was able to buy back the lands in 1695, re-instating the dower rights from the rents to his grandmother (Margaret of Redheugh). Bonnie Prince Charlie is said to have spent the night here on his march south, and for a long time the bed he slept in was pointed out. When the farms of the Scotts of Buccleuch were surveyed in 1718 there were 3 small pieces of land belonging to the farm in loops of the Liddel Water adjacent to Riccarton farm. The Elliots of Larriston finally lost the lands through debt, selling Over and Nether Larriston and Larriston Rig to John Oliver of Dinlabyre in 1719 (for £1,808 6 shillings sterling). However, they were back in Elliot hands when purchased by Maj.-Gen. William Elliot (from William Oliver of Dinlabyre) in 1786. In 1788 the lands were recorded valued at £834. Maj.-Gen. Elliot left the lands to his cousin’s son, George Fraser Scott, who took the additional surname ‘Elliott’. This George Scott-Elliott was Laird in 1811 of ‘Laristoun, comprehending Over and Nether Lariston, and mill and Mill Lands thereof’, valued at £627. George Turnbull was a resident there in 1821. Scott-Elliott sold the estate in 1843 to James Jardine for £29,000. It may be the ‘Lanorowstanys’ listed as a 20 merk land in the c.1376 rental roll of Liddesdale. It was popularised in the Ettrick Shepherd’s ballad ‘Lock the Door Lariston’. A lintel above the cottage door there is inscribed ‘J.S.’ and ‘M.R.’ for James of Stobs and Margaret of Redheugh – ‘See how they wane, the proud files of the Windermere, Howard ah! woe to the hopes of the day; Hear the wild welkin rend, While the Scots shouts as- they wane, the proud files of the Windermere, Howard ah! woe to the hopes of the day; Hear the wild welkin rend, While the Scots shouts asc.1590 map as ‘Ladestaine, Ro. Elliott’s’ and on Stobie’s 1770 map as ‘Laristown’.

Larriston Burn (law-ris-tin-burn) n. stream in Liddesdale, rising on Foulmire Heights and Loch Knowe and flowing west and south-west to join the Liddel Water near Steeleroad-end. Among its tributaries are Hirst Sike, Holm Sikes, Pipe Sike, Bught Sike, Storff Sike, Little Warrington Sike, Great Warrington Sike and Westly Sike. It has several waterfalls along its length. It passes the farmstead of Upper Larriston, where the original tower-house may have been situated, as well as Larriston lime works. The farm of Larriston Burn was once separate from that of Larriston. Airchie Elliot was there in 1590, John Nixon in 1588 and Geordie Nixon in 1590, all accused of rieving (it is ‘Lareston burne’ in 1588, ‘Larestone burne’ in 1588, ‘Larestone burne’ in 1590 and ‘Layrestenburne’ in 1590/1).

Larriston Knowe (law-ris-tin-now) n. hill that is part of Whitrope Edge, north of Whitrope-foot (it is unclear whether there is a connection to the Larriston further south).

Larriston Lime Works (law-ris-tin-lim-wurks) n. former lime manufacturory on the Lar- riston Burn, to the south-east of the main farm. This area has also been referred to as Upper Larriston. It started in 1811, and expanded in 1820 after demand from local farmers. It is labelled ‘Larriston Lime Works’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, with ‘Tile Works’ a little to the south. There are remains of lime kilns and old quarries scattered over a wide area.

Larriston Mill (law-ris-tin-mil) n. former mill at Larriston.

Larriston Rig (law-ris-tin-rig) n. farm in Lid- desdale, to the east of Larriston farm, also called Haggiehaugh. John Elliot of Thorlieshope owned the lands (or perhaps just a ‘wadsett’ on the lands) from about the 1670s. They were among lands sold by Robert Elliot of Larriston to Christopher Irving of Binks in 1688, after Elliot went bankrupt. However, they were bought back by Elliot in 1695. John Nixon and George Armstrong were there in 1694. George Scott-Elliot of Larriston was owner in 1811, when it was valued at £207 and ‘now called Haggiehaugh’. James Jardine was owner in about 1874 (also also written ‘Larriston Rigg’ and ‘Larristonrigh’; it is ‘Lariston ridge’ in 1694 and is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

The Lassie That Works in the Mill

the Lasses Association Denner (thu-law- seez-aw-söö-see-ää-shin-de-nur) n. dinner organised for the new Cornet’s Lass and Acting Mother on Picking Night. The pair both make speeches and are presented with their Lasses Association badges, and the Cornet’s Lass is also presented with a Hawick song book.

lassie (law-, la-see) n. a girl, young woman – ‘what a bonnie wee lassie’, ‘Delivered to Bailie Martin in name of Isa Andersson for teaching poor lassies £4 0 0’ [PR], ‘O, lassie dear, O, lassie fair, My heart you’ve fixed in a snare’ [JoHa], ‘O the lassie’s young and bonny, O the lassie’s dear to me’ [JoHa], ‘It canna bring back joy to me Since my sweet lassie’s gane’ [WE], ‘And it’s then that Ah whisper sweet words in the ear O the lassie that works in the mill’ [WAP], ‘I walked more quickly up the brae, The lassie smiled at me, The sun shone fair on Hawick town, I’d met my love, you see!’ [WFC], ‘…A wall of emotion, Like the swell of the sea My lassie in Canada’s waiting for me’ [AB] (diminutive of ‘lass’, implying slightly younger).

The Lassie That Works in the Mill (thu-law-seez-thë-wurkz-in-thu-mil) n. song written by Walter Peden, in a dialect that is only partly Hawick. It was performed regularly by his sons George and Jock, lost for a while, but recovered from a tape recording at the Gilded Chamber. The music was later adapted by Henry Douglas, adding 8 bars to the original 16. Ian Seeley

Lassock (la-sok) n., arch., poet. A small girl – '...And there's nought to marrow the tender grace That liichts the smile o' a lassock's face' [WL] (diminutive form of lass).

Lasson (la-sin) n. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His son John was baptised there in 1712. Perhaps the same Robert 'Lasten' witnessed a baptism for Hawick merchant John Johnston in 1721.

Lat *(law', lart) v. to let, permit – '...lat be, my lad, e'en lat it be; For sae rins a' humanity' [DH] (it is unclear how common this has been in Hawick; cf. luit and lut).

Latch Needle (lawch-nee-duil) n. A needle with a small hook at the end which is closed with a bearded latch to hold the yarn in place while the loop is formed in a knitting machine, thus allowing loop formation and 'knock-over' to happen simultaneously. This was common on a 'V-bed' hand-knitting machine and is similar to a bearded needle. It was patented by a Leicester hosier in 1849.

Late Bailie (lā'-bā-lee) n., arch. Title given to former Bailies of the town in distinction to the 'present bailies'.

Lately (lā'-lee) adv., arch. Recently, newly, not long since – 'Wr. Scott the Beddel being laitlie dead, the minister thought convenient that John Scott son to the said deceast Walter should be admitted to supply the place' [PR1717].

Latewak (lā'-wāk) n., arch. A wake or 'sitting up' with a corpse.

the Latin Schuil (thin-law'-in-skil) n. Another name for the Grammar Schuil, used to distinguish it from the 'English' or Parish School (also Laitin).

Latoun (lā-tin) n. Sir Brian (d.1545) English commander of Henry VIII, who was Governor of Norham Castle. Along with Sir Ralph Evers he headed the invading forces that laid waste to the Borders in 1544/5, possibly including Hawick and Branxholme. Their 'bloody ledger' boasts of destroying 192 towns, towns, barnkies, churches and houses, killing 403 Scots, capturing 816 prisoners, and taking 10,386 cattle, 12,492 sheep, 1296 horses, 200 goats and 850 bolls of corn, along with an incalculable amount of goods. He was killed at Ancrum Moor and probably buried at Jedburgh – 'The ravag’d abbey rang the funereal knell, When fierce Latoun and savage Evers fell' [JL] (also spelled 'Laiton', 'Layton', etc.).

latter-will (law-tur-wil) n., arch. A will, document setting out a persons intentions for disposing of their estate – 'Followis the Legacie and Latterwill. At Hawik, the elevint day of April, the zeir of God jmvc and thrie scoir and fourtene zeris ...' [SB1574].

Lau see Hawick Lau

Lauch (lawch) v., arch. To laugh – 'He that sits in heaven sall lauch ...' [HSR], 'The Lord sall lauch at him, for he sees that his daye is cumin' [HSR], 'The bairns was lauchin' an' schrauchin' among the sauchs doon i' the lauch' [JAHM], '...folk noo-a-days disna believe thee things, an' ye only get yersel' lauched at' [BCM1880], 'Wi' mony a face o' lauchin' glee, Around the auld hearth-stane' [JT], '...it mae rain at, for ochts A care! – Lauch at! Lauchful (lawch-ful) adj., arch. Lawful, permitted by law, legally appointe – '...be the said vmquhile Robert as lauchfull tutoure to me for the tymte' [SB1569], 'Item, whatsomever permitted by law, legally appointe – '...lauchiful and other variants).'

Lauchfullie (lawch-fu-le) adv., arch. Lawfully, permitted by law – '...in sa far as the samin is deulie and lauchfullie maid ...' [SB1574].

Lauchter (lawch-tur) n., arch. Laughter – 'Than was oor mooth fillet wi' lauchtir, an' oor tung wi' singin' ...' [HSR], '...her smittle lauchter echoes clear' [WL].

Laud *(lawd, lowd) v. laud (note the diphthong in the former pronunciation).

Lauder (law dur) n. Town on the border of Berwickshire. It has preserved its original mediaeval form, with a single street widening into the Market Place, and the main road being divided by the central Mid Row, with its 18th century Town Hall. A bridge is recorded there as early as 1482. It was made a royal burgh in 1502, and was the site of the 1482 hanging of six favourites of James III by Archibald Douglas (Bell-the-Cat). Thirlestane Castle lies just outside the town. The town is on the main A68 road north from Hawick via Jedburgh, and until 1755 was also part of the route north via Selkirk, so it must have been a familiar stopping point for centuries of travelling Teriess. Its Common Riding is one of the oldest, with reference to it in 1686, although it was in abeyance for 80 years before being revived in 1910. It includes a mounted procession to the Watering Stane and on to the Burgess Cairn. ‘Lauder and Lauderdale’ was published by Andrew Thomson in 1903. Population (1991) 1,064 (the origin of the name is probably a corruption of the Leader Water, however, it has also been suggested to be related to the Welsh ‘llawedrog’, meaning ‘heapd’).

Lauder (law-dur) n. Adam (b.c.1790) slater in Newcastleon. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821 and was listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. In 1841 he was living at about 41 South Hermitage Street. His wife was Janet and they had children Adam, John, William, Agnes and Walter. Agnes (17th C.) resident of Dryden in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor’. Alexander (16th C.) son and heir of William, Burgess of Edinburgh. In 1540 he and his wife Marion Hay were given sasine of his father’s lands of Todrig by John Hay, Lord of Yester. These lands included the ‘manor and mansion thereto and pertinents’. Also in 1540 he and his wife was Marion Hay sold a tenement to Alexander Gledstains. In 1544 he witnessed the charter for the lands of Galalaw by James Scott of Kirkurd. In 1545 he was recorded as brother of the Laird of Todrig when he had a residence at Todrig, and his father’s lands of Todrig by John Hay, Lord of Yester. These lands included the ‘manor and mansion thereto and pertinents’. Hector of Whitslade (15th C.) granted the lease of Deloraine and Warleshope in 1488. His family lands were Whitslade in Berwickshire (not the place of the same name in Ashkirk Parish). George (16th C.) mentioned in 1538 along with Thomas, when Katherine Gray had their sheep legally removed from Todrig. Probably the same George was also mentioned in 1537 along with Richard when they were ordered to remove themselves and their servants from Todrig. Hector (15th C.) attorney for George, 4th Earl of Angus in 1456, when he accepted sasine of Ewesdale on behalf of Douglas. His name was written as ‘Ector of Lawadyr’. He was specially deputised as Sheriff of Roxburgh in 1464/5 for an inquest giving the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffship of Roxburgh to Archibald, son of the deceased William Douglas of Cavers. His name is recorded as ‘Hector of Lawdref’. He was also on the panel to decide on the disputed lands of Kirkton Mains and the Flex in 1464/5, where he is ‘of LOWNadr’. Hector (15th/16th C.) tenant in Clerklands recorded in 1493 as brother of Thomas. He was allowed to ‘compone’ at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh for a series of crimes, including stealing from several farms, bringing in Nixons from England and associating with William Elliot ‘and other thieves of Branxholme’. His sureties were Robert, son of Walter Scott of Headshaw, and the Laird of Buccleuch. In 1494 he was recorded as brother of the Laird of Todrig when he witnessed the charter for the lands of Galalaw by James Scott of Kirkurd in 1494. In 1494/5 he was recorded as brother of the Laird of Todrig when he had a remission for several crimes, including: helping 2 Elliots and 5 Armstrongs, ‘Traitors of Levy’ in a raid on ‘Qhuitmurr’, involvement in a raid on the ‘Pot-Loche’ of Selkirk; resetting Armstrongs, Elliots and Fosters; ‘wickedness’ done to Adam Thomson in Selkirk; bringing in 2 Nixons; pilaging from Whitlawhouse; the theft of cattle, sheep and a horse from the Turnbolls from Langhope; and further thefts from Shilling Green and Harthern. Robert, son of Walter Scott of Headshaw was surety for him in 1494/5. He is probably the Hector listed in the Exchequer Rolls of 1501 among mostly local men who had been fined (including Walter Scott in Headshaw and David Scott in Galalaw). In 1502 he is described as ‘in Clerklands’ when he had remission for several crimes: stealing 40 cows from John Scott of Hoddom House, along with a band of Armstrongs; burning Whitslade house with the Armstrongs; stealing 2 horses from Lauder woods; stealing several other horses from different people; stealing cows from William Wood out of Harthern and Whittalhouse; stealing 16 cows and 2 horses from Whitslade; and stealing cows from Traquir. John Scott ‘in le walis’ acted as surety. He also had remission for stealing 60 sheep from John Thomson in Harthern and for wounding Adam Thomson in Whitslade house with the Armstrongs; stealing 2 horses from Traquir; and stealing cows from Traquir. John Scott ‘in le walis’ acted as surety. He also had remission for stealing 60 sheep from John Thomson in Harthern and for wounding Adam Thomson in Whitslade, with Robert Scott of Stirches acting as surety. Additionally in 1502, he had remission for stealing 5 horses from several men in the Forest of Lauder, with James Scott of Ashkirk as his surety. James (15th/16th C.) younger brother of Cuthbert of Todrig. In 1582 his brother Walter (who was heir to Cuthbert) appointed him as his procurator to deal with matters related to their brother’s estate. James of Carolside, ‘Beau’ (d.1799) son of John and Agnes Adam. He was owner of the lands of Redfordgreen and Drycleughshiels in 1785. He paid the land tax on their value of £169 6s 8d. He also owned Whitslade and paid tax on its value of £266 13s 4d. His main estate of Carolside was near Earlston. John (15th/16th C.) recorded at Whittmuir in 1502, along with James Elliot and Janet Ker. The three had 7 cows stolen from them, with Adam Turnbull in Hornshole being given remission for the theft. John (d.c.1551) Archdeacon of Teviotdale from 1534. He succeeded George Lockhart, who became Dean of Glasgow, possibly with some exchange between the pair. He resigned the office in favour of John Hepburn in 1544, but retained some of the benefits until his death. John of Carolside and Whitslade (d.c.1788) owner of the lands of Whitslade, Redfordgreen and Drycleughshiels. He married Agnes Adam, who inherited the lands from her brother John Adam of Whitslade. He was succeeded by his son James. Katherine (16th C.) recorded in 1538 when her goods were listed as part of a transaction involving the lands of Todrig. She is probably the Katherine Gray, recorded in connection with Todrig in the same year. She may have been wife of William of Todrig. In 1543 she was ‘spouse of the deceased …’ when Alexander Lauder was directed to pay her 16 merks for the ‘terce’ on a husbandland (probably in Todrig). Richard (16th C.) mentioned along with George in 1537 when they were ordered to remove themselves and their servants from Todrig. Sir Robert of the Bass and Quarrelwood (d.1337) son of Sir Robert. He was referred to as ‘elder’ to distinguish him from his son, also Sir Robert. He served as Ambassador to England during the time of Robert the Bruce. He was also Keeper of Berwick Castle and for a while was Chamberlain of Scotland. From about 1319 he was Justiciar of Lothian, responsible for the justice aires south of the Forth, including those held in Roxburghshire. He was present at the Battle of Halidon in 1333. Robert (15th/16th C.) tenant at ‘Merch-cluche’ whose lands were raided and goods stolen by Peter Turnbull of Bonchester and a group of Englishmen. He himself was taken to Bewcastle ‘until he redeemed himself’, i.e. he was held for ransom. In 1502 Turnbull had remission for these crimes. Robert of that Ilk (d.c.1526) son of Oliver. He held the estate of Muircleuch near Lauder and also the superiority of Sunderland near Selkirk. He firstly married Marion, daughter of James Pringle of Smailholm, secondly married Christine, daughter of Hugh Hamilton of Innerwick and thirdly married Janet Logan. He was succeeded by his son Robert. Robert of that Ilk (16th C.) son of Robert. He is recorded in 1528/9 when he was involved in a deal with John Cranston of that Ilk, for lands in Smailholm. These lands had belonged to Oliver. He was among Border lairds summoned by the King in 1530. He was also listed in 1549 among the associates of Walter Ker of Cessford who were accused of helping the English in raids upon the farms of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. He married Alison Cranston and had 2 sons, including Richard, who succeeded. Stephen (d.bef. 1530) Burgess of Selkirk. In about 1512 he was granted a charter by John Hay, Lord Yester, for the lands of Todrig ‘with the manor and dwelling house thereto and pertinent lying in the said barony of Olivercastell in the sheriffdom of Selkirk’. Richard Lauder was one of the witnesses, and presumably related. He witnessed a document in Selkirk in 1519. In 1526/7 he received money for lands then belonging to James Murray of Fakahill. In 1527/8 he was ‘not sound in his mind but labouring in his final pains’ when he retified his testament. He was deceased in 1530 when William Scott of Harden swore he owed him ‘na mair bot ane merc’, and others swore the same one behalf of William Scott in Todrig. This was all in the presence of his widow, Margaret Lauder. His son William inherited his tenement in Selkirk in 1532. Thomas of Todrig (15th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire in Selkirk in 1494/5. He had remission for his part in several crimes: attacking John and Adam Thomson in Selkirk; stealing sheep from Harthorn; stealing from a poor man called Robert Gordon at Peebles ford; stealing 6 cows from Innerleithen; stealing a cow and a list of items from William Mitchell at ‘war’; stealing a skin from the Laird of Dewar; stealing 16 head of cattle from ‘cabrostoun’; stealing cattle and sheep from Purveshill; resetting Alexander, son of Robert Turnbull; a theft from William Turnbull in Shielswood; and common theft and delivery of stolen goods before the date of his previous remission. Walter Scott of Howpasley served as his surety. He is also recorded in 1493 when his brother Hector was allowed to compound for his surety. Walter Scott of Todrig (15th C.) recorded in the presence of his widow, Margaret Lauder. In 1530 he was among a group of men from the Selkirk area who took goods from men from Moffat, but later returned them. In 1530 Patrick Murray of Falahill granted him sasine of lands in Selkirk. He may be the William who in about 1530 was heir to his grandfather John in a tenement in Selkirk. In 1532 he had a charter for Stephen’s tenement in Selkirk. A further document records how he was to receive rent for the building from Nicholas Ker and Marion Notman. In 1534 he was a Burgess of Selkirk when he resigned a tenement in Selkirk. In 1535 he was among the friends who would vouch for him sasine of lands in Selkirk. He may be the William of Todrig recorded in 1493 when his brother Hector was allowed to compound for his surety. Walter Scott of Todrig (15th C.) recorded in the presence of his widow, Margaret Lauder. He was also involved, and may have been on the side of William Scott of Todrig; Katherine Gray, wife of Hubert Maxwell was also involved, and may have been his widow. In 1540 Alexander was given sasine of his lands of Todrig. William (16th C.) listed as ‘Maister’ in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. He was owed money ‘conform to the Lairdis obligacion’. However, it is unclear who he was, or whether he was local (formerly ‘Ladder’, ‘Lader’ and variants).
Laura Bennett’s (law-ra-be-nits) n. corner shop in the Kirkstyle, on the corner with the Howegate, during the 1940s and 50s. It had a reputation for being open for long hours – ‘...And if owts oo forgot A often would be sen-et Ti some wce corner shop Like Laura Bennet’s’ [IWL].

the Laurels (thin-law-rulz) n. Guest House at 8 Princes Street.

Laurie (law-ree) n. Christian name, usually a familiar form of Lawrence, also sometimes spelled ‘Lawrie’.

Laurie (law-ree, low-ree) n. George from Jedburgh Parish, in 1793 he married Margaret Lamb in Cavers. Their children Anne and Jean were born in Jedburgh. Rev. James (c.1704–83) Minister of Hawick Parish 1757–83. He attended university along with Dr. John Armstrong (of Liddesdale and later London). He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1724, was licensed by Duns Presbytery in 1732 and was ordained at Langton (in Berwickshire) in 1734. There he married and had a family. He was presented to Hawick by Henry, Duke of Buccleuch in mid-1757 and installed a few months later. In 1759 he acted as witness for a baptism for wright John Kay. He was known for being very pugnacious and was an acquaintance of the influential Dr. Alexander Carlyle (minister of Inveresk), who called him ‘a boundless liar’ in his diaries! He was also described thus: ‘as a companion he was very amusing by the relation of fictitious stories’; it is said that he recounted fantastic tales based on the time he and Dr. Armstrong had joined a band of gypsies while they were students and also the time he spent visiting the doctor in London, where he claimed he befriended the top politicians of the day. He accompanied Carlyle and his party through Langholm to Carlisle, where he got into a fight ‘with a drunken squire of the name of Dacres, who had insulted him with foul language’ (a descendant of Lord Dacres perhaps?). However, there is little independent information to support this general character assassination. He gathered some parishioners together in St. Mary’s churchyard to pray during the great flood of 1767, afterwards claiming to have helped abate the waters (although according to the miller the flood had already much receded by then!). Both the Burgher and Anti-Burgher secession churches were formed in Hawick during his ministry, presumably encouraged in part by his unpopularity. It was also said that he refused to allow the parishioners to use a well at the Manse, as they had done previously, and Council records show a wall was pulled down, which he had built across a thoroughfare on Burgh property. In 1767 he was described as owner of property in the East End of Hawick. In 1743 he married Elizabeth Foggo, who died in 1792. Their children (all baptised in Langton) included: John (b.1744), who was minister at Teviothead, Eskdalemuir and Ewes; Cumberland Alex (b.1746); Mary (b.1748); and Elizabeth (b.1751). He could be the James born to John and Elizabeth Whitehead in Cockburnspath in 1707 – ‘Lawrie, that honest man o’ God, Deeming it judgement sent abroad Frae heaven direct because o’sin. Collected folk the kirk within’ [AD].

John (16th C.) notary to a charter relating to Harden in the Barony of Wilton in 1559. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Girnwood in 1716 and 1718. His children included William (b.1714), Janet (b.1716) and Janet (again, b.1718). Rev. John (1702/3–62) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1722, he was licensed by Penpont Presbytery in 1731 and was the second of the regular preachers at the Teviothead chapel-of-ease from 1738 until about 1745. In that year he was translated to Middlebie. He witnessed 2 baptisms in Hawick Parish in 1743 (for workmen John Rieve and John Armstrong, who may have had a connection to Teviothead); he is recorded there as ‘Mr John Lawrie preacher of the Gospel’. He married Anna Bell, who died in 1797, aged 85, and they had at least one son. Rev. John (1744–1817) son of James, minister of Hawick. He witnessed baptisms in Hawick in 1761, 1762, 1763, 1764 and 1765, when he was still a student (perhaps being the stand-in when the parents did not have other witnesses available, or else being an assistant in the church). He was licensed by the Presbytery of Jedburgh in 1767 and became the minister at Teviothead (or Caerlenrig) shortly after that. However, there is some potential confusion here with the earlier Teviothead minister of the same name. In 1772 he was recorded as ‘Preacher’ when he witnessed a baptism for Thomas Lookup, who probably lived in the upper Teviot valley. He is probably the ‘Mr’ John who witnessed a baptism in 1776 for George Balmer. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He was translated to Eskdalemuir in 1785 and to Ewes in 1791. He was taxed for having a female servant in the 1780s. He was recorded at Ewes on the 1790–1797 Horse Tax Rolls and the 1797 Clock Tax Rolls. In 1786 he married Anne, daughter of William Grieve, farmer at Southfield, and she died in 1834.
aged 73. Their children included: James (1787–1851), Lieutenant in the Royal Marines; William (1788–1842), Captain in the Royal Marines; Mary (1789–94); John (1790–1861), who became a Major General; Elizabeth (b.1793), who married Lieut. David Maxwell, younger of Broomholm; Adam Ogilvie (1795–1814), Lieutenant in the Royal Marines, who died at sea; Robert (1797–1828), who died in Langholm; and Walter (1805–44), surgeon with the 4th Regiment Madras Light Cavalry, who died at Anantapur, India. John R. (19th/20th C.) wrote some lines in memory of his brother-in-law James Davidson. Walter (b.c.1833) baker at 39 High Street. His wife was Janet and their children included: David; Adam; Walter; and Euphemia. Walter (1858–1923) son of baker Walter. He was also a baker, based at 39 High Street, who became a licensed grocer at the foot of the Mid Row and wine and spirit merchant of 13 Teviot Crescent. Additionally, he produced and sold aerated waters. He was a well known speaker at social functions and a member of the Masons. He bequeathed money for the Laurie Brig and Laurie Shelter (formerly written ‘Lourie’ and ‘Laurrie’; see also Lawrie and Lowrie).

the Laurie Brig (lau-ree-brig) n. footbridge across the Teviot at the Splotch in Wilton Lodge Park, named after Walter Laurie, built in 1924 and opened by the Prince of Wales. It is near here that the riders stop to sing ‘Teribus’ on the Saturday morning of Common Riding week, the Principals standing in their stirrups. This tradition apparently began because it was once the site of a large gun, melted down like other sources of iron during WWII. The scissors used in the opening ceremony are in the Museum (sometimes erroneously written ‘Lawrie’).

Laurie’s Den (lau-ree-den) n. area to the north of Farr Hill and west of the farm of Ashtrees. To the south-west there are the remains of an ancient enclosure, perhaps a medieval stock pen (note the place of essentially the same name in Hawick, Lawrie’s Den).

the Laurie Shelter (lau-ree-shel-ur) n. shelter in Wilton Lodge Park located near the Boer War Memorial, named after Walter Laurie who bequeathed money for its erection.

Law (law) n. Agnes (17th C.) resident at Chesters according to the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. Archibald (b.1770/1) born in Bowden, he was a grocer and carrier in Lilliesleaf. In Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories he is recorded as carrier, leaving Lilliesleaf for Hawick once a week. In 1851 he was ‘Landed Proprietor & Ag. Lab.’ on the south side of Main Street. In Slater’s 1852 directory he was listed simply as a grocer. He had a daughter Ann. Gilbert (15th/16th C.) resident of Menslaws. In 1502 it is recorded that he had 5 firlots of grain stolen from him there by Adam Grahamslaw, son of the Laird of Little Newton.

Hugh (19th C.) farmer and coal agent, who was the last tenant of the fields between Havelock Street and Howdenbank, at that time part of Wilton Mains. He may have been the same Hugh described as an engineer of Wilton Place. James (c.1560–1632) born in Fife, he graduated from St. Andrews in 1581, and became minister of Kirklinton. As a young minister he is recorded being censured (along with John Spottiswoode) for playing football on the Sabbath. He became a royal chaplain in 1601, and was titular Bishop of Orkney from 1605. He was Moderator of the General Assembly in 1608 and preached in favour of Episcopacy before the assembly in 1610. In 1615 he was appointed Archbishop of Glasgow, succeeding his friend Spottiswood. He must have temporarily held the superiority of local lands, since in 1624 he gave a sasine for Headshaw, Dryden and other lands to Andrew Hay, and in 1628 gave a charter of the lands of Barnhills to William Bennet. He married at least twice. James (d.c.1682) tenant in Horsleyhill. His will is recorded in 1682. He could be the James who witnessed baptisms in 1682. Probate for James in 1687. Probably the same James witnessed a baptism in 1682 for James Turnbull in Fenwick. Rev. John (1791–1875) coming from Linlithgow West, he was educated at Edinburgh University and licensed as a preacher of the Associate Presbytery of Falkirk. He became the third minister of Newcastleton Burgher Kirk in 1812. He was described as ‘very young and blooming’ when he started and ‘never seemed to grow older or less comely’. He was thus an object of much attention among local farmers with marriageable daughters. He was said to be a ‘handsome and vigorous preacher’ who became known as ‘the Lion of Liddesdale’. He started one of the first Sunday Schools in the district, and brought in 2 people from Carlisle to give singing instructions to the congregation. He visited London in 1824, and his wife would only let him go if he left a portrait of himself, so he got one done in Hawick in about 2 hours. In 1828 he was translated to St. Margaret’s, Dunfermline. He moved to Innerleithen in 1850 and had his jubilee as a minister in 1862. He married Jane Murray, who died in 1847; she was from his congregation and one of 7 sisters. They had 4 daughters and 1 son: Agnes; Janie, who married manufacturer George Wilson in Hawick; Janet, who married John Tod from Dalkeith; Ellen, who married Thomas Bonnar, architect in Dunfermline; and William, who died in Trinidad. In 1859 he remarried, to Jessie Sanderson, but she died in 1860. It is said that he was related to Prime Minister Andrew Bonar Law. He died at Eskbank, Dalkeith and is buried at Dunfermline, alongside his wife Jean Murray of Whisgills. John (1906–59) schoolmaster at Denholm. He married Margaret Janet Robertson. They are buried in Denholm. Robert (17th C.) described as ‘in Kames’ in 1632 when along with several others he feued Westbarns (near Belse from Thomas Hamilton, Lord Binning. Walter (19th C.) commission agent of 7 Slitrig Crescent. His daughter Margaret married Walter Scott (of Lyle & Scott), while Kate married John Rennie (of the British Linen Bank) and Jane married Walter Phillips Kennedy (bookseller). He may be the Walter, married to Janet Kedie, whose children baptised in Hawick included: Mary (b.1868); Walter (b.1872); and Thomas Kedie (b.1874).

the Law (thu-law) n. popular name used in the district of Denholm for Ruberslaw – ‘...an then for the Law – his ordinar’ hunting grund’ [BCM1881] (e.g. used by James Murray in 1863).

law borrows (law-bo-röz) n., arch. legal security given by a person, that they will not harm another person – ‘...James Budie, dreading presonal and bodyly harme of Adam Brown, weiver, and craved lawborrows ... ’ [BR].

lawest (law-iist) adj., poet. lowest – ‘Thou hest layde me in the lawist pitt, in mirk, in the deeps’ [HSR].

lawfi (law-fi) adj., arch. lawful, official, proper – ‘...told her that neither God nor man was her master, and that she was a ‘lawfu’ witch’ [EM1820], legitimate, offspring recognised by the law – ‘The Beddall was ordered to summon Robert Eliot eldest lawful son to Francis Eliot…’ [PR1717] (also written ‘lawfu’); the last meaning common in older documents, sometimes contrasted with natural).

Lawgaps (law-gaps) n. possible name for lands in upper Liddesdale, recorded in a rental roll of c.1376 as part of the area called Ermildon. It was recorded as ‘Lawgappis’ and listed as being valued at 20 shillings.

lawgier (law-ge-ur) n., poet. a lawgiver – ‘Ephram alsua is the strench o’ mine heæd, an’ Judah is my lawgier’ [HSR].

Lawhope (law-up) n. former name for land in the Barony of Ashkirk. They were part of the estate purchased by Archibald Cochrane of Ashkirk in 1795. They are described in 1815 as ‘Lawhope meadow’.

lawin (law-in) n., arch. a bill, particularly in a public house – ‘A paid ma laween… an than A lifteet the sneck an gaed oot again ti the Mercat Cross’ [ECS], ‘Yin champagne-cork, left for the lawin’, By a Pipe Band efter yon drummin’ and blawin’’ [DH] (also written ‘laween’).

Lawler (law-lur) n. Thomas ‘Tom’ or ‘the Irish Schoolmaster’ (d.1874) once a schoolmaster in Longford, Ireland, he worked in Hawick as a labourer, lodging-house keeper, and a hawker and carrier along with his wife Kate. He died in Hawick Poorhouse.

lawly (law-lee) adv., arch. lawfully – ‘The Court lawlie fensit. The said day, with the consent of the bailies and council of said bruche of Hawick …’ [BR].

Lawrence (law-rins) n. Samuel (19th C.) town bellman in the late 1900s, who was also the last tenant of the Fleece Inn – ‘Scottie Dottle and Reuben Watt, Dickie Lyon and Jethart Jim, Sam’l Lawrence and Wat the Cat, And Heather Jock baith gray and grim’ [HI].

Lawrie (law-ree, low-ree) n. David (18th/19th C.) from Glasgow, he was fifer to Capt. Campbell of the 91st Regiment. He used to play for the recruiting party, which paraded through Hawick on market days in the early part of the 19th century. In 1809 he offered to play for the ‘rebel’ Cornet, but was forbidden by his Captain. James (18th C.) owner of lands referred to as ‘Lawrie’s Denn’, located around Oliver Crescent and Oliver Place. He may have been the ‘John Lawrie’ referred to by Robert Wilson as one of the founders of the Hawick Farmers’ Club in 1776. Peter (1828–1902) son of William, he was a stockingmaker in Hawick. He married Jane, daughter of Ebenezer Wemyss and Janet Laidlaw. In 1853 the family emigrated to Australia, settling in Tarnagulla, where gold had been found. There are many descendants in the area of Victoria today, using the spelling ‘Laurie’. Thomas (18th C.) listed at ‘Danston Mill’ in Lilliesleaf Parish when he paid the cart tax in 1785. ‘Danston’ is presumably Dunstane. William (b.c.1797) stockingmaker in Hawick. He married Wilhelmina (‘Mina’) Pasley (or Paisley), who had previously been married to Frederick Diener. Their children were: Peter, a stockingmaker; Margaret, who married Robert Richardson; Thomas, who was a cabinet-maker’s apprentice; and an infant son who died in 1822. He may be the same as the William Lawrie who provided entertainment on the ‘slack rope’ as part of the efforts to raise money for strikers during the ‘Lang Stand Oot’ (see also Laurie and Lowrie).

the Lawrie Brig see the Laurie Brig

Lawrie’s Denn (law-reez-den) n. former name for area at the east end of Hawick, in use before the houses were built there. It is marked on Wood’s 1824 map near where the Auction Mart was later built, and on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map the name appears near the beginning of Weensland Road. In 1824 the land was owned by Archibald Dickson. It is referred to as ‘Laurie’s Yard’ and ‘Laurie’s Den’ in the 1841 census. The name derives from James Lawrie who once owned the lands, together with the Old English for ‘wooded hollow’ (also written ‘Laurie’s Denn’).

Lawrie’s Flat (law-reez-flaw’) n. name marked on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map for the orchard area roughly where Trinity School was later built, a little further from the centre of town than ‘Lawrie’s Den’.

Laws (lawz) n. former lands occurring as ‘Lawis’ on the 1594 list of those held ‘in tenancy’ by the Baron of Hawick. The name occurs between ‘Langhaugh’ and ‘Tofts’, suggesting a location in the upper Teviot valley. However, it is possible that the lands meant are those in Liddesdale.

Laws (lawz) n. former name for lands in upper Liddesdale, between the B6357 and Riccarton Junction. They are recorded in the rental roll of c.1376 in the region then known as Ermildon (probably around the modern Arnton Fell).
Lawshall

‘Lawis superior’ is valued at 12 shillings and ‘Lawis inferior’ as 7 shillings, as well as ‘Locus Ricardi de Lawis’ (8 shillings), ‘Locus Roberti de Lawis’ (8 shillings 4 pence) and ‘Locus Ennie de Lawis’ (3 shillings); it is unclear to which family these Lairds belonged. It seems likely this is the same place as Lawshall, which is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map and associated with Law’s Hill on modern maps. It could also be the same place as ‘the Hill’, which was a seat of the Elliots in the 16th century. It is ‘Leys’ on the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch, when it extended to 546 acres, bounded by Dawstonburn, Saughtree, Riccarton, Roughlee and Stitchelhill; the farmhouse was shown on the map close to the place marked as the remains of Riccarton Tower on modern maps.

Lawshall (lawz-hil) n. fortified house marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map, roughly north of Riccarton farm. It is surely connected with the lands of ‘Lawys superior’ and ‘Lawys inferior’ listed on a c.1376 rental roll. Law’s Hill is essentially the southern spur of Shiel Knowe, with Palmer’s Hill Cutting passing through it. The farm was occupied by John Nixon in 1623 and by Walter Scott of Goldielands in the period 1634–47, along with Ricartonfoot and Prickinghaugh (it was ‘Lawis inferior’ in 1634).

the Laws of the Marches (thu-lawz-ov-thu-mär-cheez) n. rules for governing the Border, set up by a commission of English and Scottish knights in 1249. This included the establishment of the Wardens and how they were supposed to deal with rievers etc.

Lawson (law-sin) n. Judge Alexander Sutherland (1842–1916) watchmaker and jeweller of 1 Sandbed. He started his business in 1864, and also acted as an optician, silversmith and shipping agent. He was a member of the Town Council for 43 years, being Treasurer, becoming a Bailie and later a Judge. He was a Mason, associated with B.U.R.A. No. 424. He was also one of the founding members of the Common Riding Ceremonial Committee in 1887, and acted as a Race Steward. The Lawson Bridge was named after him, and he can be seen in a photograph of the older version of the bridge about 1900. His wife’s name was Catherine. His daughter unveiled the Hornshole Memorial in 1901 – ‘…There to answer Bailie Lawson Aboot every wound and scar’ [WE]. Isobel (18th/19th C.) living at Newmill in 1793 when her daughter Margaret (b.1774) was baptised in Robertson. She acted as ‘Sponcer for the child’. James of Cairnmuir (17th C.) had the teinds of the Parish of Bedrule ratified to him in 1639, confirmed by a Private Act of Parliament in 1641. It is unclear what his connection was, but the original grant appears to have been from Rev. Joseph Tennant in 1632. James (18th C.) waiter working for vintner Robert Armstrong in Hawick in 1794. Patrick (15th C.) recorded among a large list of men of Liddesdale who did not appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5, with the Lord of Liddesdale and Captain of Hermitage being fined. Robert (17th C.) listed at Whithope among ‘The poor in Hauick Parioch’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert (18th C.) resident at Teindside. He married Margaret Scoon, who may be the daughter of Walter Scoon and Isobel Miller born in 1720. Their children included: Robert (b.1745); Isobel (b.1747); Elizabeth (b.1750); John (b.1756); and George (b.1760); and Walter (b.1760). His children were baptised in Hawick, Wilton and Roberton Parishes. He was probably also the workman whose son William (b.1742) was baptised in Hawick, with the mother’s name given as ‘Janet’ Scoon and witnesses John Elliot at Goldielands and Robert Scott at Crumhaugh. The witnesses in 1745 were the Thomas Elliot in Harwood and Baille Robert Boyd, and in 1750 were John and Robert Scott from Galalaw. Robert (18th C.) probably son of Robert. He was resident at Chapelhill in 1774 when his daughter Agnes was baptised in Robertson Parish. Other children were William (b.1775), Walter (b.1776), Margaret (b.1778), Margaret (again, b.1779) and Robert (b.1782). Walter (b.1811/2) from Westerkirk, he was a farm worker in Robertson Parish. In 1841 he was at Meadshaw Cottage and in 1851 at Craik. In 1840 in Ettrick Parish he married Janet Jackson (from Cavers Parish) and their children included: Janet (b.1841); Jane (b.1842); Thomas (b.1844); Jean (b.1849); and Susanna (b.1854). Walter (19th C.) Burgh Officer in the 1880s, acting as Keeper of the Town Hall among other duties. He was also the halberdier in 1887 when the custom was revived of having the Burgh Officer, accompanied by the Drums and Fifes, walk to the Cornet-elect’s house on Picking Night. Sir William (d.1632) son of Thomas of Little Usworth, County Durham. He was High Sheriff of Cumberland and in 1591 was made Conveyor of the Commission of the Marches. Knighted in 1604, in 1665 he was Convenor to the English Commission to govern the Borders. His name occurs many times in relation to the pacification of the Borders (i.e. capturing men from various families and executing or exiling them). William (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Todshawhillshiel in 1716. His children included: Helen (b.1714); Robert (b.1716); and Walter (b.1719). William (18th C.) resident of Roberton Burnfoot in 1743 when his daughter Isobel was baptised in Roberton Parish. Margaret (b.1737) and Janet (b.1740) were probably also his daughters. William (18th C.) recorded at Eilig when some of his children were baptised in the 1770s. He married Jean Elliot in Roberton Parish in 1771. His children included: Isobel (b.1772); and Robert (b.1775). William (19th/20th C.) of Edinburgh designer of Hawick’s WWI Roll of Honour (formerly also spelled ‘Lau-sone’, ‘Lawsonne’, etc.).

the Lawson Brig (thu-law-sin-brig) n. iron foot-bridge over the Teviot connecting Free Church Lane with the Haugh, originally constructed in 1904, and replaced in 1988. It was named after Judge Lawson and replaced an earlier wooden structure erected in 1886, with steps at either end. This was built by David Taylor, with building foreman J.P. Tait. There is a photograph showing the original opening in 1886. It was popularly known as the Shit Brig.

Lawston (law-stin) n. farm in the far south of Castleton Parish, between the B6357 and the Liddel Water, after Kershopefoot. There are rig lines to the south-east and to the south are 3 oval hollows, which are probably coal pits. There was a colliery here from a few decades startin about the end of the 18th century, the only one of consequence in Roxburghshire. The stream there is known to have once had a sulphurous spring. William Oliver was there in 1797. William Graham was farmer there in at least the period 1821–51 (it is ‘Lawstone’ in 1821 and ‘Lawstown’ in 1838 and 1851; it appears as ‘Lawstomn’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

de the Lawyer (thu-law-yur) n. nickname for William Oliver in the 16th century.

Lawyhaugh (law-ce-hawc) n. possible place name in Liddesdale, recorded on a rental roll c.1376 as ‘Lawyhalch’, with a value of 3 pounds. This is distinct from ‘Langhalgh’, which is also listed, but the location, and pronunciation, are unknown. It is possible it corresponds to the small farmstead labelled on Stobie’s 1770- map as ‘Lawsholm’, on the Liddel to the southeast of Lawston farm.

lay (lä) n., arch. the movable frame of a loom, containing the reed, which oscillates to beat the yarn into place – ‘Now when sitting at work on his loom, He thought, as the shuttle flew From end to end of the moving lay, That he had had troubles enow’ [JCG].

layne (län) v., poet. to conceal, keep secret – ‘Its I, Watty Wudspurs, loose the kye! I winna layne my name frae thee! And I will loose out the captain’s kye, In scorn of a’ his men and he’’ [T].

The Lay of the Last Minstrel (thu-lä-ov-thu-lawst-mins-trul) n. narrative poem by Sir Walter Scott, which is set partly at Branxholme. It was finished in 1804, published in 1805 and was immediately successful and hugely influential. This success contributed significantly to the romanticised view of Borders history and to local tourism. The poem is composed of 6 cantos and written in an irregular metre. The main story is told by an aging minstrel who receives hospitality from Anna, Duchess of Buccleuch at Newark Castle. He sings about the Lady of Branxholme Castle (Janet Beaton), who opposes the marriage of her daughter Margaret to Henry of Cranstoun, and enemy of the family. Her champion William of Deloraine is dispatched to get the mystic book of Michael Scott from Melrose Abbey, but Deloraine is injured by Cranstoun on his return and the book falls into the hands of Cranstoun’s dwarf retainer. The dwarf finds the book and learns a spell of illusion from it, which he uses to lure the young heir of Branxholme into the woods, where he is later captured by the Englishman Lord Dacre. Dacre comes with a force to Branxholme demanding Deloraine in exchange for the boy. But the Lady of Branxholme makes a deal whereby Deloraine will fight the English champion Sir Richard Musgrave, who has accused Deloraine of plundering his lands during a truce. The goblin page transforms Cranstoun into Deloraine to fight the duel, which he wins. The heir of Branxholme is released and finally Margaret and Henry are allowed to marry. But during the wedding celebrations the ghost of Michael Scott appears to reclaim the evil dwarf as his servant.

lay ti (lā-ti) v., arch. to start on food, set about eating – ‘. . . had their beats pasturing on the Common, they lay to it, and had passage out and in’ [C&L1767].

lazy (lā-zee) n., arch. a fit of laziness – ‘Ach, na! A’m no verrih on wui’d – A’ve taen the laizy the day!’ [ECS] (also written ‘laizy’).

lea (lee) n. a piece of fallow land, untilled land, grassy field – ‘At Kershope-foot the tryst was set, Kershope of the lily lea’ [T], ‘And Crosier says he will do waar – He will do waar if waar can be; He’ll make the bairns a’ fatherless. And then, the land it may lie lee’ [T], ‘. . . my father chanced to look alang the lea at the head o’ the bucht’ [LHTB], ‘Fair May unto the window ran, To see what she could see; And there she saw the hunting band, Parading on the lea’ [JTe], adj. fallow, barren (also written ‘lee’; it is common as a suffix in place names, where it can also be ‘ley’ and ‘lie’).

lea’ (lee) v., arch., poet. to leave, depart from – ‘My heart is unco wae to lea’ thee’ [JS], ‘The plooky-fac’d drinker lea’s hauf o’ his dram . . .’ [JoHa], to leave alone – ‘Lea’ ‘er (’im, iz, ‘d, etc.) alone’ [GW].

Leaburn Drive (lee-burn-driv) n. street off the south of Weensland Road, with housing begun in 1934, with more development after the War and the road being taken over by the Council in the 1960s. It was originally the driveway from Weensland Road to Leaburn House. The road has a turning place half-way up.

Leaburn Grove (lee-burn-gröv) n. street off Leaburn Drive, developed in 2001.

Leaburn Hoose (lee-burn-hoos) n. former house on Leaburn Drive, demolished in 1964. It was the town-house of Thomas Lindsay Watson (presumably named after the meadow on which it was built, and the Boozie Burn that flowed through it).

lead (leed) v., arch. to convey a cart, carry peats etc. – ‘May it therfor please yow to grant your peti- tioner freedom and libertie as to cast, win, and lead, make in and away take of your Commone Muire of Havicke als many divots as will thatch his said stable . . .’ [BR1704], ‘. . . upon ane mis- sive letter from the laird of Gladstains, the bailles and council gave liberty to him to cast, win, and lead some divotts off the common’ [BR1707], ‘. . . for him to buy a beast for carrieing heather, leading of fuel, and carrieing to ane who would employ him’ [PR1723], ‘Paid James Heardye for liding 600 difeits to tolboothe, 1 10 0’ [BR1739], ‘. . . the Hawick beasts seldom touched it, because of the distance, unless when they were leading their peats or turfs’ [C&L].

Leadbetter (led-be’-ur) n. Rev. Dennis (20th C.) minster at Trinity Kirk in the 1960s.

Leadbetter (led-be’-ur) n. Alan Edmon- stoune Greenshields (1897/8–1917) son of Thomas. He was a Major in the Royal Horse Artillery who was mentioned in dispatches at Gallipoli, was wounded at Longueval and killed near Ypres. He is buried at Elverdinghe and there is a memorial plaque in Bedrule Kirk. Thomas Greenshields, J.P. (1859–1931) son of James Greenshields and Margaret MacPherson, he was born in Glasgow and was an architect with Leadbetter & Fairley. He started his own architect’s practice in Edinburgh in 1890, taking on James McLellan Fairley as a partner in 1895. In 1897 he inherited Stobieside from his father and in about 1912 became owner of Spittal Tower near Bedrule, which he had restored. He designed the renova- tions for Bedrule Kirk in 1914, and the War Memorial there, and was an elder at the church 1919–31. He also designed the new Wells House, as well as many other houses in southern Scot- land. He married Mary Anne Usher (daughter of Sir John of Norton and Wells) in Ratho in 1890. There is a plaque to their memory inside Bedrule Kirk. Their children were James Greenshields (solicitor), John Usher and Maj. Alan Edmon- stone (killed in WWI), Mary Balmer and Jean Gillespie.

Leafauld (lee-fawld) n. former lands in Liddesdale, near Leahaugh, Langhaugh and Harts-gharth. It is probably the land referred to as ‘et le fauld’ in 1479 among the lands of Robert Elliot of Redheugh. In 1637 it is ‘Leyfauld’ when part of the lands to be inherited by James Eliott and his wife Margaret, daughter of Robert of Redheugh (the name presumably comes from ‘le fauld’; it is ‘Liefauld’ in about 1624).

Leafauld leally

Leaves (leefs) n., pl. leaves – ‘... The banes o’ murderers an’ thieves, An’ bandit leaders, Porcupine quills, an’ withert leaves, Frae Leb’non’s cedars’[JoHa], ‘The fisslin leaves trimmelt an’ bevert i the simmer breeze’[ECS], ‘... keekin throwe atweeen the leaves ...’[ECS] (an example of the use of a different plural in Hawick than in standard English).

Leafy Hoose (lee-fee-hoos) n. former name for a house in the Weensland area, recorded in the 1851 census. It is probably the same as ‘Ivybank’.

Leafauld leally

Leagair (thu-lee-gair) n. rising ground on the south side of the Liddel Water, inside Cumberland, roughly opposite Liddelbank – ‘... Awake all the song birds adown in the valley. The day-dawn is breaking ayont the Leagair’[DA].

Leaheads (lee-heeds) n. Leaheads, former farmstead by Leahead Loch. William Goodfellow was there in 1708 and Walter Scott in 1709. Alexander Cunningham was there in 1747, John Miller in 1759 and James Riddell in 1797. William Douglas was shepherd there around 1840 and Thomas Lockie was ‘Game Guard’ in 1851 (it is ‘Leeheads’ in 1797, ‘Leehead’ in 1840 and ‘Leahead’ in 1841; it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map of Roxburghshire).

Leahaugh (lee-hawf) n. farmhouse on the Hermitage Water, just south of the Hartsgharth Bridge. Across the road there is the remains of what was once a public right of way and probably the main road through the valley until the 18th century. The name was once also ‘Leauch’. It is ‘Layhalcht’ in 1479 when granted to Robert Elliot of Redheugh along with ‘Carolschelis’ and ‘harts-gharth’. The Elliots held it, along with Hartsgharth, Langhaugh and Leafauld, through the 16th century and into the early 17th. It was one of 3 farms given by the last Robert Elliot of Redheugh to his daughter Esther in about the 1640s. It was possessed by Will Armstrong in 1632. It was valued (along with Greenholm) in 1678 at about £137. John ‘Weily’ was there in 1694. It was owned by William Manderson according to the 1788 county valuation and the Land Tax Rolls of 1811, and still valued along with Greenholm at £136 15s 8d. Robert Elliot and John Blacklock were both there in 1837. Archibald Armstrong was farmer there in the 1840s. The farm was ravaged by the flood of 1846. Thomas and William Kyle were there in 1868. By 1874 it was owned by the Duke of Buccleuch. The farm at Leahaugh Holm was destroyed in the great flood of 1846 (it is ‘layhauch’ in 1489, ‘Layhauch’ in 1526, ‘Leyhauch’ in 1537/8, ‘leyhauch’ in 1613, ‘Leyhauche’ in about 1624, ‘Lehauche’ in 1632, ‘Layheuch’ in about 1640, ‘Lehaugh’ in 1694 and ‘Leehaugh’ in 1797, 1811 and 1841; it is ‘Leehaugh’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Leahaugh Brig (lee-hawf-brig) n. bridge carrying the B6399 road over the Hermitage Water at Leahaugh. It is for some reason labelled ‘Leaugh Bridge’ on the Ordnance Survey map.

Leahaugh Cottage (lee-hawf-ko’-eej) n. cottage in Castleton Parish, between the main road and the river, between Leahaugh and Redheugh farms. Arthur Moffat was farmer there in 1861.

Leaheid Loch (lee-heed-loch) n. Leahead Loch, a small body of water out beyond Stirches, by the roadside roughly opposite Stintyknowe, also called Dykeneuk. There were adjacent farm buildings shown on the Ordnance Survey map of 1863.

Leal (leel) adj., arch., poet. faithful, loyal, true – ‘... the leal an’ aefauld loe thee’[HSR], ‘He’s weel an’ he’s leal, an’ he’s on his way home ...’[JJ], ‘For lads leal and true, And lasses braw and fair ...’[TC], ‘Here though art, and where to-morrow, Far from Hawick, leal and kind ...’[TCh], ‘... At his leal auld chieftan’s word’[JEDM], ‘... A laddie kind and leal’[??], ‘... The leal hands haud out a welcome, The sib herts still beat true’[WL], ‘Lang may the Common Riding leeve in the herts O’ every leal Teri ...’[DH] (from Old English; sometimes spelled ‘leil’).

Leally (lee-lee) adv., arch. faithfully, loyally – ‘... and the faith in my body lelely and treuly’.

‘The fisslin leafs trimmelt an’ withert leafs, Frae Leb’non’s cedars’ [JoHa], ‘The leal an’ aefauld loe thee’ [HSR], ‘He’s weel an’ he’s leal, an’ he’s on his way home ...’ [JJ], ‘For lads leal and true, And lasses braw and fair ...’ [TC], ‘Here though art, and where to-morrow, Far from Hawick, leal and kind ...’ [TCh], ‘... At his leal auld chieftan’s word’ [JEDM], ‘... A laddie kind and leal’ [??], ‘... The leal hands haud out a welcome, The sib herts still beat true’ [WL], ‘Lang may the Common Riding leeve in the herts O’ every leal Teri ...’ [DH] (from Old English; sometimes spelled ‘leil’).
lealest (leel-ist) adj., poet. most loyal – ‘O he was the lord o’ the keenest sword, And he was the lord o’ the lealest love’ [JTe].

lealthfu’ (leelth-foo) adj., poet. loyal, staunch – ‘Her lealthfu’ heart’ [HSR].

leam (leem) v., poet. to gleam, flash – ‘But it never kent the glorie That learned frae flags to riggin . . . ’ [WL], n., poet. a gleam, flash, glow, radiance – ‘And the brustane leme came frae their throats, And syngit his drakit tail’ [JTe], ‘. . . its kools ar kools o’ fire, whilk hae ane maist vee-ment leme’ [HSR], ‘. . . Hae the same leme o colour As Mimi wore at her corsage And braidit in her hair’ [DH] (also written ‘leme’).

Lean Yeddie Gibson (leen-ye-dee-gib-sin) n. song of the mid 19th century, written probably by William Tait and Andrew Cameron, with help from Adam Brown and set to music by Walter Davidson. It is about an enthusiastic Hawick angler who died while fishing the Teviot in the 1850s.

the Leap (thu-leep) n. name often used for Leap Hill to the south of Hawick.

Leap Burn (leep-burn) n. stream that joins the Floss Burn to create the Lang Burn near Langburnshiel. It is hence one of the headwaters of the Slitrig.

Leap Hill (leep-hil) n. hill along the ‘Hill Road to Roberton’, on the north side, to the south of Western Essenside. It reaches 319 m high and contains various ancient earthworks. A probable hill-fort, just south-east of the summit has been largely destroyed by cultivation. The remains of 2 old sheepfolds lie on the south side. This was also the name of a farmstead there, part of the lands owned by George Scott of Blindhaugh in 1544. In that year George’s 3rd son William was assigned ‘all and hail the leip hill langhoup medo and porciones of land about the burn syd callit lainghoup burn’, occupied by Walter Watson. It was owned by the Scotts of Woll in the early 17th century and the Laings in the 18th century, passing to the Cochranes of Ashkirk in 1795. It was valued at £140 in 1643 and owned by Thomas Scott; the teinds were valued (along with Woll, Castleside and Broadlee), valued at £208 and owned by Robert Scott of Heap. Part was owned by Mrs. Elliot of Borthwickebrae in 1788 (as still recorded in about 1811) and Allan Elliott Lockhart by 1874, still valued at £143 (it is ‘Leephill’ in 1609, 1643 and 1788).

Leap Hill (leep-hil) n. hill between Whitrope Cottages and the Maidens, reaching a height of 472 m (1544 feet). It is often referred to as simply ‘the Leap’ and was formerly called ‘Leap Steel’. There is a linear earthwork running west from the western slopes of the hill, now hard to make out, but perhaps once running as far as the head of the Harwood Burn (it is marked ‘Lyipe’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map and has its modern spelling on Stobie’s 1770 map).

the Leap Linns (thu-leep-linz) n. popular name for a narrow gorge through which the Ale Water flows, near Leap Hill, just south-west of Shielwood farm. A pool there was sometimes a summer swimming spot. On an eastern spur of Leap Hill there, there are the remains of a settlement, about 100 m by 45 m, and contains evidence of a hut circle and 2 enclosures, probably later sheepfolds (the name is probably the ‘de Lepes intra Askirke et Whitesale in Alne’, i.e. between Ashkirk and Whitslade, mentioned in a charter of the late 12th century; the ‘linns’ probably refers to the narrow gorge there, and not to a waterfall; it is marked ‘Leap Linn’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Leapsteal (leep-steel) n. former name for an area around the Leap Burn (described as part of the Catrail’s course, between the Maidens and Robert’s Linn, in William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ (1821), Wilson’s ‘Annals of Hawick’ and contemporary descriptions).

lear (leer) n., arch., poet. learning – ‘. . . For want o’ braith or lear’ [DH], ‘What’s this? His lear wad flype The wisdom o’ the day!’ [WL], v. to learn, teach (also lair).

Learmonth (leer-month) n. Archibald (18th C.) resident at Whithope in 1742 when his daughter Helen was baptised in Roberton Parish. Other children included Robert (b.1741) and Margaret (b.1746). Perhaps he is the same as Archibald ‘Lernment’ at Deanhead, whose daughter Isabel was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1737. Henry (19th/20th C.) son of Henry. He was Cornet in 1882, with his own father serving as Acting Father. He was a ‘powerloom tuner’, but later farmed at Greenbrahead, and then emigrated to America. James (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1493 when he failed to appear when called by William Douglas, Sheriff of Roxburghshire, at the Justice- aire in Jedburgh in 1493; Laurence and Thomas were listed right after him. William, son of James, who was called later, may also have been his son. They were all recorded again in 1494/5, when the Sheriff was once more fined for their non-appearance. Perhaps the same ‘Jacobum Lermonth’ was recorded in 1508 when he witnessed the sasine for Adam Herpburn inheriting his father’s Lordship of Liddesdale; many of the other men were relatively local. James (16th/17th C.) recorded as schoolmaster at Minto in deeds of 1624 and 1625. James (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Helen Govenlock and their daughter Bessie was baptised in 1683. He witnessed a baptism for Andrew Fisher in 1681. James (17th C.) resident of Drinkstone according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Highchesters in 1710 and Whitfield in 1712. His children included: Robert (b.1710); and Isobel (b.1712). James Pringle, J.P., Manager of the British Linen Bank in Newcastle in the mid-20th century. He lived at the Bank House and was first Treasurer of the village hall committee. John (17th/18th C.) resident in ‘Mains’ in Roberton Parish in 1717, 1721, 1726, 1729, 1731 and 1734. He is surely related to Thomas, who was there at about the same time. His children included: James (b.1717); Robert (b.1719); John (b.1721); Agnes (b.1724); Isobel (b.1726); John (again, b.1729); William (b.1731); and Thomas (b.1734). John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded living at ‘Mosspalgreen’ in 1755. He married Agnes Scott and their children included Thomas (b.1755). Perhaps the couple with the same names were in Canonbie in 1766 when an unnamed child of theirs was baptised. John (d.bef. 1794) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Turnbull in 1756 and her death is recorded in 1794. They had a daughter Margaret (b.1757). Lawrence (15th C.) recorded in 1493 when he failed to appear when called by William Douglas, Sheriff of Roxburghshire, at the Justice- aire in Jedburgh in 1493; James was listed right before him and Thomas right after. They were all recorded again in 1494/5, when the Sheriff was once more fined for their non-appearance. Robert (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, when it contained Hassendean. He married Isobel Noble and their son John was baptised in 1686. Helen (b.1684) was probably also his child. He is probably the Robert who witnessed a baptism for William Falside in 1686 and another for James Noble in 1687. He may be the same Robert who was at Hassendean Mains according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was recorded at Borthwickshiels in 1711, when his daughter Isobel was baptised. Probably the same Robert was recorded at Howcleuch in early and late 1717 when his sons Robert and John were baptised. He may be the Robert who married Elspeth Little in Roberton in 1708. Thomas, who married Margaret Inglis in Roberton in 1726, may also be his son. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who was married to Janet Andison. In 1721 they were rebuked by the Hawick Session because they ‘did accommodat married men and young men, yea, even boyes, with Candle and Cards, they curseing, swearing and blaspheming the name of God in ye season of ye night’; this would appear to a gambling house (although possibly to do with Tarot cards). In 1724 he was further cited for ‘allowing persons for meeting in his house for playing att cards’. After promising to no longer allow people to come to his house for gambling, the Beadle was instructed to check on him from time to time, this possibly ending the practice. He may have been the Robert born in Hawick to James and Helen Gowenlock. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Wait and their unnamed child was baptised in 1763. He could be the Robert, son of Robert, baptised in Hobkirk in 1736. Simon (17th C.) resident at Langflat (near Southfield) in 1694, according to the Hearth Tax rolls. Thomas (15th C.) witness in 1475/6 to a document relating to the lands of Kirkurd for the Scotts of Buccleuch. His name is recorded as ‘Thoma Lermond’. Thomas (15th C.) recorded in 1493 when he failed to appear when called by William Douglas, Sheriff of Roxburghshire, at the Justice- aire in Jedburgh in 1493; James and Lawrence were also listed, and so they were surely related. All 3 were again cited for non-appearance in 1494/5. Thomas (16th C.) one of the men indicted in 1552 for involvement in the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch. He is recorded as ‘Thomas Lermont, callit Lard of that Ilk’. Thomas (16th C.) farmer at Weens, recorded as ‘Thomas Leirmont’ in the 1562 dispute over lands in the Barony of Feu-Rule. Probably a related Thomas ‘Leirmonth’ is recorded in an inquest in Jedburgh in 1523. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1727 and 1728 he was at Mains. He was surely related to John, who was at Mains at the same time. In 1726 he married Margaret Inglis, also from Roberton. His children included Isobel (b.1727) and Isobel (again, b.1728). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Whitehaugh in Wilton Parish. He married Jean Riddell in 1730 and their children included William (b.1735). The witnesses in 1735 were Thomas and John Irvine. William (15th C.) listed at the
the Learmonth Stakes

1493 Justice-aire in Jedburgh when William Douglas of Cavers was fined for his non-appearance. He was recorded as son of James, who may have been the same James called earlier at the 1493 court. He was cited again at the 1494/5 Justice-aire. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He was recorded as gardener at Whitslade in 1698. His wife was a Brunton and their children included Isobel (b.1698). Perhaps the same William also married Isobel Scott and had further children Janet (b.1701) and Thomas (b.1703) (also spelled ‘Larment’, ‘Learmond’, ‘Learmont’, ‘Leirment’, ‘Lermont’, ‘Lermont’, ‘Lermouth’, ‘Lormon’ and variants).

the Learmonth Stakes (thu-leer-munth-ståks) n. prize race at the Common Riding, discontinued in 1956.

lease (lees) n., arch. division of the threads for weaving – ‘In order to prevent two threads of different colours from coming together in the ‘lease’ at the end of each gang or course in warping …’ [BCM1881], v., arch. to wind off, separate threads before weaving – ‘Ti lease yairn’ [GW].

leasehaud (lees-hawd) n. leasehold – ‘The trimmle o’ pule and stream … the lost lease-haud o’ youth … ’ [DH].

leases (lee-seez) n., pl. rentals of farms. These were traditionally made for periods of 15 or 19 years, but sometimes 9 years or shorter. The land-owner usually leased to the same farmer, sometimes extending over several generations of the same family. Rent was once paid in kind, but that eventually gave way to cash. There were several different kinds of lease, sometimes also called a ‘tack’.

leasur (lee-zur) n., arch. leisure – ‘Bot the season now confounding us to our houses and giving us more leasur to mind and attend thess domesticke affairs … ’ [BR1692 laishur].

leave (leev) n., arch. dismissal, permission to leave, playtime at school – ‘The barns new oot o the skuil for leave, gaed … rinnin aboot’ [ECS].

leave-piece (leev-pees) n. a snack for playtime at school.

leazle (lee-zul) v., poet. to exert – ‘… neither do I leazle mysel’, makin’ a-wark in meikle mattirs, or in things ower heich for me’ [HSR] (this word is only known once, and is suggested to be a misprint for ‘bazle’, a variant of ‘baisse’).

Leche (lesh) n. John (d.1395) secretary to the Bishop of Glasgow. He obtained the living of Hawick Church sometime before 1363 and in that year asked for papal confirmation that he held it over the former incumbent John Fleming. It is said ‘he had the church of Haweyk, near the English march, which on account of wars and pestilences brings no fruits’. He held the Hawick benefice until at least 1378. There is no reason to believe that he ever visited the town, however. In 1366 he is recorded paying the contribution of the See of Glasgow to the King’s Chamberlain (and there was a contemporary of the same name recorded in the Exchequer Rolls who was a Burgess of Linlithgow). In 1376 he is the John ‘Lethi’ or ‘Lechi’ who was ‘vicar-general in spirituals’ of Walter, Bishop of Glasgow, when he arranged the transfer of the living of Cavers to Matthew Glendonwyn. There is a Patrick, perhaps his son, who was Dean of Glasgow sometime after 1421 and before 1444, and Chancellor of Glasgow from around 1444–60 (also spelled ‘Liche’ and possibly equivalent to ‘Lethi’).

Leck (lek) n. Rev. Joseph of Rawflat (c.1698–1785) minister of Yetholm, 1731–85. He gained the lands of Rawflat in 1739 and they later passed to John Edmund Elliot. He was listed on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. A story is told of how he was set upon by robbers, and when he and the leader (the local gypsy Will Faa) recognised each other, there were apologies made, and the pair agreed never to speak of it again. He married Ann Scott from Sprouston and their children included: Henry (1736–67); Susan (b.1742), who married Henry Ainslie, Sheriff-Clerk of Roxburghshire; Jean; William; and Thomas. Robert (b.1811/2) from Castleton Parish, he was a publican at about 31 High Street in 1841 and 1851. This was possibly the same as the White Hart Inn and was listed as the Bull & Butcher in Slater’s 1852 directory. By 1861 he was listed as an agricultural labourer, living at 3 Slitrig Bank. He married Mary (1811–55) daughter of Robert Mitchellhill. Their children included Margaret, Jane, Mary, Robert, Julian, Helen, Thomas, James and William G.

lector (lek-tur) n., arch. a pupil of English (as opposed to Latin), someone who reads the scripture in church – ‘… those who learned humanity, and also the lectors, were all taught under one roof by the then incumbent … and when those who learned humanity, and others who were lectors, were disjoined … ’ [PR1713].

ledder (le-dur) n. a ladder – ‘… As he spiels up and doon his ledder o’ sang, Blithely I ken’ [DH], leddie  see leddy

leddy  (le-dee) n., arch. a lady, female landowner or wife of a landowner – ‘... her blessings on Leddie Elliot were both loud and long ...’[RM], ‘... But now I was ledy o’ houses an’ land’[JT], ‘Hooray for Verter’s famous Wall, An’ Tamson’s bonnie leddy’[VW], ‘And we’ll hing togetherr like burrs, As lang as oor heads we hain, For his Leddy has tabled his spurs, And Harden maun ride again’[TK], ‘Then a’ the leddies curled their brows, The cup smashed wi’ a tune ...’[WFC], ‘... Amang them aa there was none to narrow Auld Harden’s leddy, the ‘Flooer o’ Yarrow’’[WL] (also spelled ‘leddie’ and ‘ledy’, and sometimes capitalised).

led ferm (led-ferm) n., arch. a small farm that is let along with a bigger one on which the tenant resides, the smaller farm having just one or more shepherds living on it – ‘It had been the custom for many years that Craikhope was let as a led farm along with Billholm ...’[RB].

lee  (lee) n., poet. a lie – ‘... As near’s I can tell’t, without telling a lee’[JoHa], ‘... But rather wud wait till oor back’s oot o’ sicht, To drap what they ken is a lee’[WFC], v. to lie – ‘... An muckle mair, An’ Tamson’s ledy emigrated to Galt, Canada when he was 5. There he became a watchmaker like his father, before moving to the U.S.A. and setting up the Lee Firearms Company during the U.S. Civil War, which led to the Remington-Lee rifle design of the 1880s. He later had a hand in developing the typewriter, and back in Britain developed the Lee-Metford rifle. Modifications to this design at the Enfield Royal Ordnance Factory led to the famous Lee-Enfield rifle in 1895, which was extensively used worldwide over the next 50 years. Variants of this rifle were used in every conflict from the Boer War to the Korean War, and the Lee-Enfield Mark III was the decisive British battle rifle of WWI. He married Caroline Chrysler (of the later automobile family) and had sons William and George. He died while on holiday in Newhaven, Connecticut. A commemorative plaque was placed on the stair from the Kirkwynd to St. Mary’s in 1981, the 150th anniversary of his birth. There is a large plaque in Wallaceburg, Chatham-Kent, western Ontario, where he is said to have completed the design of the box magazine while visiting his brother John. John (1833–1907) born in Hawick, son of George and Margaret Paris. He was a younger brother of James. The family emigrated to Galt, Ontario when he was only about 2 years old. He later settled at Wallaceburg, near Chatham-Kent, in south-western Ontario. He owned a foundry there, and worked with his brother to invent the prototype bolt-action rifle, which led to the Lee-Metford and Lee-Enfield series. Oral tradition says that the first shots of the prototype were fired into an oak tree outside the foundry in Wallaceburg. The original gun is housed in a museum there. He married Louisa Cordelia Clifford and had children James Paris and Frank M. Lee

Lee (lee) n. Agnes (16th C.) widow of Robert. In 1541 she was recorded as tenant of half of the farm of Old Jedburgh. Her first name is written ‘Agnete’. George (b.1803/4) probably born in Howman Parish, son of John ‘Lees’ and Isobel Paterson. He worked for several years as a jeweller in Hawick. He married Margaret Paris in Stow in 1826; she was daughter of the Stow schoolmaster. Their children included: Mary (b.1827); John (b.1829), who must have died young; James Paris (b.1831), firearms inventor; John (b.1833) Canadian foundry owner; Isabella (b.1835); Margaret Paris; Ann; George; and Jessie. The first 5 children were born in Hawick. He emigrated to Canada with his family in 1836, originally settling in Galt, Ontario. He was recorded there as a watchmaker in 1852. Gilbert (16th C.) tenant of half of the farm of Old Jedburgh according to the rental roll of Jedforest in 1541. He was probably related to the Lees who held the other half of the lands. James (19th C.) recorded as teacher at a school in O’Connell Street on Pigot’s 1837 directory. James Paris (1831–1904) born in Hawick, son of George, a watchmaker and jeweller. His mother was Margaret Paris. The family emigrated to Galt, Canada when he was 5. There he became a watchmaker like his father, before moving to the U.S.A. and setting up the Lee Firearms Company during the U.S. Civil War, which led to the Remington-Lee rifle design of the 1880s. He later had a hand in developing the typewriter, and back in Britain developed the Lee-Metford rifle. Modifications to this design at the Enfield Royal Ordnance Factory led to the famous Lee-Enfield rifle in 1895, which was extensively used worldwide over the next 50 years. Variants of this rifle were used in every conflict from the Boer War to the Korean War, and the Lee-Enfield Mark III was the decisive British battle rifle of WWI. He married Caroline Chrysler (of the later automobile family) and had sons William and George. He died while on holiday in Newhaven, Connecticut. A commemorative plaque was placed on the stair from the Kirkwynd to St. Mary’s in 1981, the 150th anniversary of his birth. There is a large plaque in Wallaceburg, Chatham-Kent, western Ontario, where he is said to have completed the design of the box magazine while visiting his brother John. John (1833–1907) born in Hawick, son of George and Margaret Paris. He was a younger brother of James. The family emigrated to Galt, Ontario when he was only about 2 years old. He later settled at Wallaceburg, near Chatham-Kent, in south-western Ontario. He owned a foundry there, and worked with his brother to invent the prototype bolt-action rifle, which led to the Lee-Metford and Lee-Enfield series. Oral tradition says that the first shots of the prototype were fired into an oak tree outside the foundry in Wallaceburg. The original gun is housed in a museum there. He married Louisa Cordelia Clifford and had children James Paris and Frank M. William (16th C.) tenant of the farm of ‘Auld Jedburgh-heid’ according to the rental roll of Jedforest in 1541. He was surely related to the other Lees at Old Jedburgh.

Lees see Laws

Lees (leez) n. former name for the farm now called West Lees, near Appletreehall. The old names for the lands there were Easter and Wester Moormaw. There were Scotts of Lees in the 17th and 18th centuries, connected with the Scotts of Catslack. William ‘in Lees’ was recorded in 1698. Robert Scott was there in 1705. John Elliot was tenant there in 1711, Adam Scott in 1721-35, David Renwick in 1725 and Robert Graham in 1729. George Graham was there in 1747, John Irvine in 1759 and John Scott in 1764. Alexander Somerville was tenant there in 1812. The lands were valued at £52 in 1811, when owned by William Scott of Burnhead. John Wilson was farmer there in 1841 and Thomas Turnbull in 1861 (also written ‘Lies’; it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Lees (leez) n. Alexander (b.1821/2) from Earlston, he was a blacksmith on the High Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 he was at about 79 High Street. His wife was Margaret and their children included Margaret and Isabella. David (1812/3–78) farmer at Fenwick. In 1851 he was recorded as farmer of 140 acres, employing 3 people. He married Isabella Tait, who died in 1871, aged 59. Their children included Janet, Isabella and James (who married Jane Little). He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. David Crawford (19th C.) blacksmith in Hawick. He donated a set of communion plate to the Relief (Allars) Kirk before emigrating to America about 1850. These sacrament vessels went to the elders on the closure of Allars. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Clarilaw in 1721. He married Margaret Graham and their children included: James (b.1719); and Francis (b.1721). The witnesses in 1721 were John Dryden and James Blyth. Bessie (b.1723), James (b.1726) and Helen (b.1729), baptised in Minto, could also be his children. William (15th/16th C.) listed among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Branxholme) pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran. His surname is recorded as 'Leys' (also written 'Lies' and 'Leys').

Legerwood (le-jur-wud) n. Adam (18th/19th C.) smith at the Forkins, also known as the ‘Woollee smiddy’. He was listed among the original congregation of Wolfelee Free Kirk in 1849. He married Mary Scott in 1814. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed among the ‘Cottars’ on the Hearth Tax roll there. His name was written ‘Ligertuood’. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish when his daughter Margaret was baptised in 1719. He is probably the James who got married in Ashkirk in 1715 (with no wife’s name given). John (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He farmed on one of the farms of the Knowesouth estate. His name was written ‘Ligeruood’. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isobel Kedie in 1699 and their children included: Isobel (b.1702); Margaret (b.1707); and John (b.1709). William (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1720 he married Bessie Riddell, who was also from Roberton, the marriage taking place in Hawick. His name is recorded as ‘Lidgertwood’ (former spelling variants include ‘Liddgertwood’, ‘Ligertwood’, ‘Litchardwood’ and even ‘Lizzarhide’).

Leggat (le-ga’) n. Andrew (18th/19th C.) coachman and servant to Rev. Dr. Charters of Wilton for 42 years. He was recorded as ‘chaise driver’ for the minister in the tax records of 1797. He was a seceder, being a member of the ‘Burgher’ congregation and hence never entered the church to hear his employer preach. When his master preached at a neighbouring church, he would sleep in the carriage until the service was over. He once drove all the way to Ashkirk by mistake without the minister inside the carriage. He was said to be rather slow in his movements, and a story is told of how, when sent on an errand into Hawick, he would fetch a horse from the far end of the Glebe, so that a maidservant had already gone to Hawick and returned before he was ready to go. It is also said that frequent complaints were made by the maidservants about his old-world and disobliging ways, but the minister would always just say ‘As long as I have a house, Andrew shall have a chair’.

Andrew (18th/19th C.) gardener and house servant at Woll in 1778 and 1779, when he was working for William Scott of Woll. By 1785 he was ‘Footman & House Servant’ for Charles Scott of Woll and continued there until at least 1788. By 1791 there was a different servant at Woll, and he was listed as ‘postillion’ at Burnhead. He was still coachman at Burnhead in 1793. It seems possible he was the same man as the coach-driver for Rev. Charters of Wilton. He is probably the Andrew who married Janet Scott in Ashkirk in 1775, and whose children included: John (b.1777); Andrew (b.1779); Margaret (b.1780), possibly the same as Peggy; Gideon (b.1785); and William (b.1790), born in Wilton, who became a merchant... in New York. Andrew (18th/19th C.) whip-maker in Hawick. His son William died in Hawick in 1808 and his daughter Margaret in 1810; she could be the daughter of Andrew and Janet Scott born in Ashkirk in 1780. His son William died in 1808. Gideon (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included: Andrew (b.1756); Walter (b.1752); John (b.1754); Bettie (b.1856); Gideon (b.1758); James (b.1763); and Robert (b.1767). He may be the Gideon in Unthank who (perhaps secondly) married Margaret Oliver from Abbotrule in 1762. He may be the Gideon, son of Andrew, born in Kirkton in 1722.

John (18th C.) listed as house and stable servant at Woll in 1797, when he was working for Charles Scott. He was probably son of Andrew, who had earlier been the servant of the Scotts of Woll. John (18th/19th C.) proprietor of a public house in Denholm, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He subscribed to Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He may be the John whose son Walter was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1791. Janet, described as ‘independent’ in Denholm in the 1841 census, may have been his widow; by 1851 she is a 76 year old pauper, recorded as born in Denholm. Margaret ‘Peggy’ (b.1780) probably daughter of Andrew and Janet Scott. She married Thomas Purdie in Wilton in 1802.

Rev. Robert (b.1861) son of James and Jane Finlay, he was born at Coatbridge (or Old Monkland). He was educated in Glasgow and learned shorthand at an early age. He worked in an accounting office, then for a newspaper, but gave up journalism to train for the Church. He was licensed in 1889 and in 1891 was ordained as minister of Wolfelee Free Kirk. He remained there until 1898 when he left for Bankhill Church, Berwick, which he resigned in 1919. He set up a Literary Society in Rulewater and contributed to several newspapers and magazines. He did not marry.

William ‘Willie’ or ‘Wullie’ (1718–1768) 2nd son of Andrew, blacksmith at Cauldmill, he grew up with his older brother Archibald and sister Margaret, who worked on Cavers estate. He was a simple-minded worker employed on Cavers estate to run errands, and is traditionally said to have been killed by the cook when he returned with the wrong vegetables. He was immortalised in stone through a crude statue, where he is posing with his dog, bonnet and basket. He lived with his sister Margaret at Cauld Mill; she was a servant, possibly working in the washing house there. Lady Cavers appears to have been kind to him, since there are several estate records of purchases of clothing and shoes on his behalf. The statue was probably an apprentice piece by a mason at Denholm Quarry. One story is that Wullie did not like it and kicked off the dog’s ear in anger. The statue originally stood in the walled garden at Cavers, later being moved to the sawmill and then to near the mansion house itself. There it was vandalised and the pieces fell into different hands and the statue was believed to be lost forever. However, the pieces were collected by W.B. Little and Jack Fraser and the statue reconstructed by Fraser and placed in the garden of old Wilton Manse. After Fraser’s death (and much negotiation) it was returned to Cavers around 2002, and is now situated outside the modern Cavers Kirk. William (b.1790) born in Wilton, son of Andrew and Janet Scott. In Hawick he was a friend of William Scott, later his business partner. He emigrated to New York in 1818, where he started a dry goods firm of Scott & Leggat, with a shop on Hudson Street. He married Mary Robertson and then Jane Ann Atwill (who was a niece of William Scott’s wife). His children were: Jennett (b.1828); Andrew (b.1830); Richard (b.1833); Gertrude Roos (b.1834); William Scott (b.1839); Mary Jane (b.1840); Anna (b.1843); and Alexander (b.1845). It is said that he ‘cherished an ardent love for his native country and retained to the last in all its purity the Scottish accent’.

the Legion (thu-lee-jin) n. Hawick Royal British Legion Club, formed in 1938. The Club met originally in the Y.M.C.A. rooms on O’Connell Street, then on Commercial Road and after WWII moved to 3 O’Connell Street, which had been the ‘Central Rooms’ or Johnstone’s tea rooms. The Club existed to help ex-servicemen in difficulty and as a social centre for ex-servicemen, and was a branch of the national association founded by Earl Haig in 1921 (with the ‘Royal’ title being granted in 1971). Capt. B. Montgomery was the first Chairman and Provost Landles was the first enrolled member. The Club published the ‘Hawick Pictorials’ 1939–59. It also helped found a football team in 1953, started by Ronnie Telfer. The Club closed in 1997, with the club-rooms later used as a fitness centre. There was also a branch in Newcastleton, at 3 North Hermitage Street.

the Legion ( thu-lee-jin) n. Hawick British Legion Football Club, an amateur football team, originally sponsored by the aid of the Legion club, being founded with the aid of a donation in 1953. The club has had many premises and is now located in Princes Street.

leglin (leg-lin) n., arch. a milk-pail – ‘...the goods presented ... ranging from ‘rock bools’ to horn spoons to leglins’ [V&M].

lei (li) v. to lie, fib – ‘deh lei ti mei’, ‘yer mother can aye tell when ee’re lei-in’, n. a lie, untruth – ‘it was juist a teeny-weeny lei’, ‘Hei said they ca’d um Chairlie Broon – Mind, it could hev been a lei ... ’ [DH] (often spelled as in English ‘lie’; note the hard i sound, and that ‘to recline’ is pronounced li).

Leigh (lee) n. Henry (c.1555–c.1606) of Rockcliffe Castle, Cumbria, son of Thomas. He was appointed Deputy Warden of the English West Marches in at least 1597. In that year there was an indenture signed at Copshawholm between him and Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch for the delivery of 5 Scotsmen. He appears to have suffered from lack of family wealth and was imprisoned, probably for meeting personally with James VI, among other things. He may be the same man who was Captain of Carlisle Castle in 1604 and a Border Commissioner in 1606.

lein (liin) pp., arch. lain (noted by E.C. Smith).

Leipzig (lip-zig) n. battle of 1813, where the coalition armies defeated the French under Napoleon, being the largest battle in Europe until WWI, and the first major defeat for Napoleon.

Although no British troops were involved, the victory was a cause of huge celebrations throughout the country. It was celebrated in Hawick with illuminations, probably meaning extra lamps and candles in the mains treets, burning tar barrels and a torchlight procession.

leish (leesh) adj., arch. supple, athletic, active, nimble, sometimes suggesting tallness – ‘...my father was buchtin’ the Brocklaw yowes to twae young, lish, clever hizzies ae night after sun- set’ [LHTB], ‘A pairteet thre the leash, swank-leike fallih (’at ’Ad been followin eis lead) at the whusht road-end at Jedfit’ [ECS], ‘My fishin’-wand, it’s strang and leish ... ’ [DH], ‘The gress grew lang and leish ahint the schule’ [DH] (occasionally spelled ‘leash’ or ‘leesh’).

Leishman (leesh-min) n. James (18th/19th C.) carrier operating between Hawick and Edinburgh and the north, as well as to Newcastle, according to Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He may have married Catherine and had children including Robert. Robert (b.c.1812/3) Hawick hosiery traveller from the West End. In 1837 he was running a cart from Buccleuch Street to Edinburgh and Galashiels twice a week, and once a week to Newcastle. In 1841 he was listed as a carrier on the Back Row. He often accompanied William Laidlaw on sales trips to the Newcastle area. It was said to have been ‘an open secret that Robert’s conscience did not trouble him with knotty questions of excise’ [JHH]. His wife was Margaret, and their children included James, Catherine, Agnes, Margaret, Jane and Thomas. His mother was probably Catherine (living with him in 1841). By 1871 he was living in Berwick and his name was spelled ‘Lishman’. Robert ‘Bert’ (1896/7–1961), well known local auctioneer, with a saleroom in the old ‘Green Kirk’ building at Myreslawgreen. He was writer of the ‘Betty Whuston’ column for many years. He was also a member of Hawick Town Council and Bailie from 1946 to 1961, when he died on a visit to Tasmania.

Leishman Place (leesh-min-plis) n. part of Burnfoot, built in two phases, beginning in 1957. It is a dead-end street off Ruberslaw Road and was named after Bert Leishman.

Leishman’s (leesh-minz) n. carriers firm of the early 19th century which ran weekly between Hawick and Newcastle.

leisome (li-sum) adj., arch. telling a lie, fibbing – ‘If it’s nae lee, it’s e’en unco leesum like’ [Jo] (also written ‘leesome’, but not to be confused with leesome).
leisome-like (lēs-om-lēk) adj., arch. like a lie – ‘A leisome-like story’ [GW].

leister (lee-stur) n. a spear with three or more prongs used for fishing – ‘Wi’ their nets and their leisters, their bowats and glegs . . .’ [UB], ‘In my youth, when ‘leisters’ were not illegal, or at least when their use was winked at by the powers that were . . .’ [RB], v. to fish with a leister – ‘. . . when law allowed the leistering of salmon . . .’ [RM] (probably from Old Norse; some old examples exist in the Museum).

the Leisure Centre (thu-leeshur-sen’-ur) n. Teviotdale Leisure Centre, Mansfield Road, opened in 1982 on the site of the former railway station. It consists of a swimming pool and squash courts, with an indoor bowling hall opened in 1985. It was designed by Faulkener-Brown, Hendy & Stonor of Newcastle, with opinions differing as to its aesthetic qualities. The bowling extension was not designed to match the original part, and here opinions do not differ. The palm tree fell into the pool in 2008.

Leitch (lee-ch) n. Andrew (b.1838) son of Andrew from Largo, he studied at St. Andrews University 1855–59. He became a teacher, working in Castletown, Caithness, Dollar Academy, Dalry, and also in Hawick. George (b.1795/6) from Galashiels, he was farmer at Barnes in 1851. He was then farming 730 acres and employing 6 people. His wife was Isabel (from Smallholm) and their children included James M., Alexander, Isabel and Richard W. Simon (15th/16th C.) tenant of Minto Craigmillar about 1502, along with Thomas Young and his son Thomas, and William Johnstone. Their farms had been raided by a group led by David Scott, called ‘Lady’, in Stirkshaws, for which Scott received remission. His name is recorded as ‘Symon Leich’.

Leith (leeth) n. port situated where the Water of Leith joins the Firth of Forth, now essentially part of Edinburgh. It was an important port for local trade, particularly in the 18th and 19th centuries. Sometimes proclamations were read ‘at the peer of Leith’ in order to be widely broadcast, e.g. a record in the 1723 Session books relating to an attempt to ascertain whether a Hawick woman’s husband was alive or not.

Leithead (lee-th-head, lut-head) n. Andrew (17th/18th C.) weaver in Crumhau. In 1722 he married Rachel Scott in Hawick Parish. They had a daughter Isobel in 1726, and another Isobel in 1732. The 1725 baptism was witnessed by William Elliot and John Scott. He could be the man of that name, ‘old Andrew Cross Wind’, who died in Hawick in 1778. He could be the Andrew who witnessed baptisms in 1772 for Robert and for Walter and in 1774 (along with Robert) for John. David (17th C.) resident of ‘Crackuol’ in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll. Probably the same David married Janet Shiel with their daughter Agnes baptised in 1690, and witness Robert Pringle and James (probably a relative). Gladstones (b.1744) local labourer, son of William. He married Helen Hall and their children, baptised in Kirkton Parish, included: Betty (b.1769); Helen (b.1774); Gilbert (b.1776); Janet (b.1777); and another Janet (b.1786/7), who married shepherd and carrier Adam Scott. Henry (b.1817/8) from Polwarth in Berwickshire, he was a waiter at the Tower Hotel. He is recorded there in 1851 and 1861. His caricature appears in the book ‘Noctes Hawickanae’. He was said to have ‘a curious habit of putting his tongue out at the side of his mouth, and is here represented doing so.’ He married Helen (or ‘Ellen’) Hymers in Cavers Parish in 1856. Their children included James (b.1857), Margaret (b.1859) and Elizabeth Agnes (b.1860). Isabel ‘Tibbie o the Green’ (c.1795–1870) well-known West-ender of the mid-19th century. Daughter of market gardener Robert, the family had a garden at Myreslawgreen, the property of Mr. Turnbull of Briery-yards. She lived in a house near there, possibly corresponding to 4 Myreslawgreen, being there with her brother William until his death in the 1850s. She was known as an independent but warm-hearted person who kept old-fashioned dress. She is probably the woman of this name who was among West-enders to recover from cholera in 1832. In 1851 she was described as a ‘Gardener’ and in 1861 she was an ‘Outdoor Worker’. She also had a niece Isabel Mein and a grand nephew Robert M. Laurie. Her bier is said to have been the last that used the Hawick ‘mort-cloth’. The family name locally goes back at least to William of Cavers Parish, whose daughter Margaret was married in Edinburgh in 1708. James (17th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He is listed separately from the wright there. James (17th C.) wright of Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Nochol and their children included: James (b.1704). The witnesses in 1704 were ‘vintner’ Francis Elliot and weaver Andrew Jardine. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Ormiston who married Janet Laidlaw in Cavers Parish in 1708. Helen (b.1710), baptised in Cavers, was probably his child. Perhaps the same James was at Ormiston in 1705 when his son William was baptised in Cavers. James (17th/18th C.) resident in Milsonsington in 1717 and 1725. He may be the James who married Bessie Riddell in Roberton in 1725. His children, baptised in Robertson Parish, included Jean (b.1717) and an unnamed child (b.1725). He is probably also the James recorded at Todshawhill in 1722 when his daughter Margaret was baptised.

James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Boonraw in 1723. He married Janet Hill in Bowden in 1716. Their children included: Janet (b.1723) and James (b.1725), baptised in Wilton; and Agnes (b.1728) and Isabel (b.1732), baptised in Morebattle. The witnesses in 1723 were John Scott and James Dryden. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Helen Blaikie and their son ‘Gledstines’ was baptised in 1775. He may have been a brother of Gledstains. James ‘Jimmy’ (d.2003) Acting Father in 1960. In 1961 he carried the Flag again, since that year’s Acting Father, Tom Crosbie, had broken his leg. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Ormiston in 1702 and 1716. His children probably included: Andrew (b.1696); William (b.1702); John (b.1713); and Robert (b.1716). Perhaps the same John was at Whitfield in 1698 when his son William was baptised in Wilton; the witnesses were John and Robert Scott. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Katherine Thomson and their children included: Jane (b.1767); John (b.1770); Jane (b.1772); Margaret (b.1774); and Andrew (b.1777). The witnesses in 1774 were Andrew and Robert (who were surely close relatives). John (18th C.) recorded as owner of land in Lilliesleaf in 1788, valued at £6 13s 4d. He was still recorded as owner in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. He was probably related to William, who also owned lands in Lilliesleaf. John (18th/19th C.) carrier in the Denholm area. He was involved in the trip to the summit of Ruberslaw where the Lairds of Cavers and Wells met to resolve a boundary dispute over dinner. He allowed the cart to jolt, resulting in George Hunter (of the Fleece Inn) to come closest in his life to cursing! He may be the John of the Cross Wynd whose unnamed child died in Hawick in 1811. John (1781–1843) born at Shankend, son of William and Janet Tait. He lived at Sandyhall (Ashkirk), Woll (Ashkirk), Birkwood (Ashkirk) and Langshaw (Melrose). In 1803 he married Jane Harvey. Their children included: William (1805–74); Robert (b.1807), who married Janet Jessie Knox and emigrated to Waterloo County, Ontario; Jane (b.1811), who married William Dodds; James (b.1816), who died in Wyoming; Thomas (b.1817); John (b.c.1820); and Janet or Jessie (b.c.1824), who married James Cousins. John (b.c.1810) carter in Hawick. In 1841 he was listed as a farmer, probably on the Cross Wynd, but by 1861 he was at Mather’s Close. His wife was Mary and their children included John, William, Janet, Henry, Thomas, Agnes, Mary and Margaret. He may have been son of the earlier John of the Cross Wynd. Richard (b.c.1775) mason who lived on the Kirkwynd. He married Elizabeth Atikin and their children included Robert, David and Catherine. Robert (17th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He is probably the Robert who (along with Andrew) witnessed a baptism in 1774 for John. He married Betty Laidlaw and their children included Andrew (b.1770) and Isabel (b.1772). The witnesses in 1772 were Andrew (perhaps his father) and Alexander Bunyan. He is probably the Robert whose wife was buried in Hawick in 1772. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isabel Hogg and their son Walter was baptised in 1777. The witnesses were John and Walter, who were surely his close relatives. He may be the Robert who witnessed a baptism for James Tushope in 1767. Robert (18th/19th C.) one of the founders of the Independent Kirk in Hawick in about 1798. Robert (18th/19th C.) described as ‘R. Leithead o’ the Green’. He may be the market gardener who was father to ‘Tibbie o the Green’. In 1809 he and weaver Peter Fletcher walked to Selkirk to secure the services of a drummer and a fifer for the ‘rebel’ party at the Common Riding. He could be the stocking-maker Robert who contracted cholera in 1832, but recovered; he lived in an upper flat of the house containing Henry Haliburton on the Back Row. He married Janet Anderson in 1782. Their children included: William (b.1783), who was a frameworker; Robert (b.1785); Robert (b.1786); Jane (b.1787); Isabel (b.1790), ‘Tibbie o the Green’; Agnes (b.1792); and Mary (b.c.1800). His mother ‘at the green’ died in 1782. He is probably the stockmaking Robert whose unnamed child died in 1811. Robert (19th C.) stocking-maker who lived on the Loan. In 1863 he presented the Archaeological Society with the flag from the ‘Wasla Water’ party of 1809. He was surely related to the earlier ‘R. Leithead o’ the Green’ who had been involved on the ‘rebel’ side in 1809. He could be the Robert born to Richard and Elizabeth Aitken in 1805. Thomas (16th/17th C.) servant to James Ker of Bewlie. He is recorded in 1622, along with Ker and other servants of his when there was a complaint by George of Newhall that they tried to find him to kill him, but instead attacked his servants and later attacked him with drawn weapons. Not appearing, they were all denounced as rebels. Walter (17th C.) wright in Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to William, who was also listed in Lilliesleaf. He may be the Walter, portioner of Lilliesleaf, who married Marion, daughter of John Langlands, minister of Wilton. Walter (17th/18th C.) recorded receiving money from Ashkirk Parish in 1727. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elizabeth (or Euphan) Henry and their children included: Andrew (b.1766); and George (b.1768). Witnesses to the 1766 baptism were Andrew and John, who were surely closely related to him. Probably the same Walter witnessed (along with John) a baptism for Robert in 1777. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Marjory Thomson and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1772. The witnesses were Andrew (surely related to him) and Andrew Thomson (probably related to his wife). William (17th C.) resident in Ashkirk Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. Perhaps the same William married Isobel Scott and had a son Walter baptised in Ashkirk in 1691. The baptismal witnesses were Robert and William Scott (probably related to his wife). William (17th C.) resident in Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, when he paid tax on 2 hearths. He was probably related to Walter, who was a wright in Lilliesleaf at the same time. William (17th C.) farmer in Cavers Parish. He is recorded as deceased in 1708 when his daughter Margaret married Alexander Grib in Edinburgh. William (17th/18th C.) gardener at Fenwick. He married Bessie Stevenson in 1714, possibly at the house of William Whillans at the Flex. This was a ‘supernumerary marriage’, i.e. the celebration had more guests than the modest amount prescribed by the law of the time. Both he and Whillans probably lost the bond that they had lodged with the Session. William (b.1721/2) farm labourer in Hawick Parish, living at Melkne Whitlaw and Flex from infancy. He worked mainly as a ploughman. In 1741 he was recorded as resident at Whittlawhaugh. In 1767 he gave evidence regarding the earlier use of Hawick Common; he was described as married at that time. He married Bessie Gledstains, and their children, born in Hawick Parish, included: John (b.1737); Gledstains (or Gladstone, b.1741), an unusual forename, presumably from his mother’s maiden name; and Janet (b.1743). The witnesses in 1741 were carrier John Ruecastle and Kirk Officer John Telfer. Probably the same William witnessed a baptism for James Scott in Whitlaw in 1768. William (18th C.) recorded living at Orchard in 1749. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included John (b.1743), Richard (b.1745) and Robert (b.1749). William (18th C.) recorded in 1788 as owner of lands in Lilliesleaf Parish that had formerly been owned by the feuars of Lilliesleaf. These lands were valued at £171 10s. He was also recorded in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls as former holder of lands in Lilliesleaf that had been acquired by Edgar Hunter and were at that time owned by William Riddell of Camieston. He was probably related to John, who also owned lands in Lilliesleaf (also spelled ‘Leathhead’, ‘Leitheheide’, ‘Leithhead’, ‘Lifhead’ and ‘Lithhead’).

lemane (le-min) n., poet. a sweetheart, concubine – ‘Ther ar thriescoore queens, and fourscoore lemanes, an’ mays wuthowten nummer’ [HSR] (there are spelling variants).

Lempitlaw (lem-pi-law) n. village in northeastern Roxburghshire, about 3 miles east of Kelso. It used also to be the name of a small parish, which was annexed to Sprouston. The church there was connected with Soutra. The site of the 13th century parish church can still be made out in the churchyard, which includes a well-preserved hog-back gravestone. The lands there were owned by Robert Scott of Rankilburn and his son Walter in the early 15th century. They were effectively annexed to the Barony of Branxholme, remaining that way through part of the 16th and 17th centuries. In 1517 they were described as being ‘waste’, but valued at 20 pounds in times of peace. The lands were included in the main Barony of Branxholme according to the services of heirs in 1634, 1653 and 1661, and the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch. In 1692 the ‘tacks’ of the lands were set to Sir Patrick Scott, along with those of the Barony of Eckford and the lands in Hawick owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch. It was surveyed in 1718 along with other Buccleuch properties and still listed as a Buccleuch property in the Land Tax rolls.
Len

Rolls of the 19th century (the origin of the name is probably Old English ‘lempedu hlaw’, meaning ‘limpet-shaped hill’; it first occurs as ‘Lempedelawe’ in 1190 and is ‘Lempatlaw’ in 1426, ‘Lempatlaw’ in 1463, ‘Lempetlaw’ in 1484, ‘Lempatlaw’ in 1517, and ‘Lempetlaw’ in 1528 and 1553/4).

len (len) n. a loan – ‘gie’s a len o a fiver’, ‘Wull ee gie’z a len o ee graip’ [ECS], ‘Gie’s a len’ o’ eer hurbarra’ [GW], ‘Howenever, insteed o’ comin for the len o’ mine for the denner tables … ’ [BW1978], v. to loan – ‘Sin’ I’ve to len’ a haun’ to raise the treasure, ‘Lang wi’ the toil, I’d like to share the pleasure’ [JoHa], ‘Ane guid man shaws faavor an’ len’s … ’ [HSR], ‘Can ye len’s half a croon?’ [RM], ‘He is evir misrecorde, an’ len’s: an’ his affspring ar blisset’ [HSR] (shortened form of lend; also written ‘len’; see also take a len o).

lenity (le-ni-te) n., arch. mildness, lenience – ‘… and whereas the said Mr John of his own lenity, since the aforesaid year 1669, never quarrelled several persons in the town to educat children further than the said book … ’ [PR1713].

lenten kail (len-tin-kal) n., arch. a meatless vegetable soup, often made of boiled cabbage served in milk – ‘Dame Appetite, he thought to bang her, But flesh is frail! That day – bad luck, (misfortune hang her), Brought lentrin kail’ [JR], ‘It [the food] consisted of milk and meal and what was called ‘Lenten Kail’, an expression now rarely heard in the parish [of Teviothead]’ [HAST1902] (also ‘lentrin kail’; probably from being served in the Spring).

lenth (lenth) n. length, the extent of something – ‘look it the lenth o that hing!’, ‘…lyk as at mair lenth is contenit in the decreet gewyn thairwpon … ’ [SB1500], ‘The paroche is 8 mylles in lenth, so there are some rowmes 8 mylles or thairbry from the kirk … ’ [PR1627], ‘… of before she took them away she either made price with the pursuer, or askit his liberty to goe that lenth with them?’ [BR1680], ‘… as the said act … in it selfe at mair lenth proports … ’ [BR1692], ‘The awfihest blatter o rain cam on, and A was amaist drookeet be A wan the lenth o the Sandbed’ [ECS], state of extreme agitation or anger, tantrum, fit – ‘she we’ an awfi lenth when she saw the mess’, ‘Hei’s gaun a bonnie length’ [ECS], distance to someone’s adobe – ‘If ee come ma lenth, gie’s a ca’’ [GW], the whole extent – ‘The day be the lenth’ [GW] (note the difference in pronunciation compared with standard English).

the lenth (thu-lenth) adv. the distance, as far as required – ‘But they told Bailie Purdom who went the lenth, that … ’ [PR1722].

the lenth o (thu-lenth-o) adv. as far as, the full extent of – ‘the bairn got the lenth o the street afore they fund ‘er’, ‘Yince an A’d wun there, A thocht, A nicht mebbies cood gee t a hurl the lenth o Hawick’ [ECS], ‘A wun the lenth o the brig’ [GW].

leper squint (le-pur-skwun) n., arch. a leper’s squint, a small, low window in a church through which lepers could hear and see the communion service without coming into contact with the congregation. There may be an example in Cavers Auld Kirk (also written ‘leper’s’ or ‘lepers’).

the Leper Well (thu-le-pur-wel) n. popular name for a spring near Spittal-on-Rule, still current in the mid-20th century. The spring was surrounded by dressed stones, and its name gives some credence to the idea that there was once a leper’s hospital there. It was also known as ‘the Kirkyard Well’, and used to be thought to possess healing powers, particularly for skin diseases.

leprosy (lep-ru-see) n. chronic, mildly contagious disease caused by Mycobacterium leprae, characterised by inflamed nodules beneath the skin, loss of sensation and wasting of body parts. It now occurs only in tropical and sub-tropical regions, but was common in Mediaeval Europe, where it was seen as both holy and sinful. It was certainly rife throughout the British Isles by the 11th century. Robert the Bruce is suggested to have died of the disease in 1329, and John Turnbull of Minto may have died from it about 1425 (causing a dispute over his lands). The hospital at Spittal-on-Rule may have been founded to help lepers, perhaps related to the Laird of Bedrule. A spring near there was known as a ‘leper well’. Cavers Auld Kirk may have a ‘leper squint’.

leprous (le-ris) adj., arch. affected with pig ‘measles’ – ‘…[Fined] for publicly selling … ane carcase of swyne which was leprous and consequently dangerous to be made use of’ [BR1692].

Leslie

Leslie (lez-lee) n. A.J. (19th/20th C.) London sculptor responsible for ‘Youth’, which was incorporated into the Hawick War Memorial.

the Lesser Toon Hall (thin-le-sur-toon-hall) n. smaller venue in the Town Hall, off the main auditorium, frequently used for lectures, coffee mornings etc.

Lessuden (le-su-din) n. alternative older name for St. Boswells, surviving in Lessuden House (the origin is Old English ‘laes side wynn’, meaning ‘the meadow by the slope with the pasture’; also spelled ‘Lessudden’).

Lessuden Hoose (le-su-din-hoos) n. family home of the Scots of Raeburn, in St. Boswells. It goes back to at least 1680, with remodelling in each of the following centuries. It has a tower-shaped dovecote dating from about 1800.

lest (lest) v. to last, endure – ‘A deh ken how long he’ll lest is the new R.E. teacher’, ‘She’s like a guid bit tweed hersel’, ‘Made tae lest forever’ [IJ], ‘...But how lang will it lest’ [WL], ‘...And a ‘lestic ba’ in the tother dough’ [DH], ‘Sailin roond in a sea o’ bliss wi a coo-ntoot in yin hand And a ‘lestic ba’ in the tother ...’[DH] (cf. leskit and electic).

let bat (le-baw’) v., arch. to give an indication, let on, inform, declare – ‘Never luit bat! = Take no notice! or Keep ‘muni’!’ [ECS], ‘Brer Rabbit ‘never luit bat’ when he ‘lay low and sed muf-fin’’[ECS], ‘A hard ‘im, but A never let bat’ [GW] (usually with a negative; cf. bat).

let dab (le-clawb) v., arch. to hint, divulge a secret – ‘Aw think she jalooses what Aw’ve come for, but mind, Aw never let dab aboot the rest o’ ee’ [JEDM], ‘And, loons, here’s a secret I’m gawn tae loot dab ...’ [DJ] (sometimes ‘loot dab’).

Letham see Lethem

Letham (le-thum) n. James (1954– ) born in Airdrie, he was educated in Aberdeen at Madras College in St. Andrews and at the Royal Scottish Academy of Music in Glasgow. After training as a teacher he was appointed to Galashiel Academy, then became Head of Music at Jedburgh, before succeeding Ian Seeley as Head of Music at Hawick High School in 1997. He has been involved in a large number of musical enterprises in the Borders, including serving as musical director for Hawick Amateur Operatic Society, conductor of the Eildon Singers and the Borders Youth Orchestra and work with the Hawick community choir the Melody Makers. He has been a strong pro-moter of the work of Hawick-born composer Sir John Blackwood. He also wrote the music for ‘The Best O’ A’. He retired in 2011 (see also Lethem).

Lethem (le-thum) n. hamlet between the A6088 and A68, just before the Carter Bar, in the eastern part of Southdean Parish. In 1538 and 1539 it was described as 3 stedings and valued at £3 6 shillings. In 1541 Thomas Laidlaw was tenant of part paying 22s yearly and Laurence Lawrence and James Laidlaw were tenants of another part paying 22s yearly. John Oliver and Simon Robson were there in 1623. John Thomson was tenant there in 1694. Thomas Scott is recorded there on the 1785–97 Horse Tax Rolls and his son was still there in 1841. Walter Renwick was shepherd there in 1797. There was once a chapel here, but no signs of it remain, although the small hill to the west is known as Chapel Knowe; here there are the remains of a settlement, about 43 m by 33 m in size, overlain by a smaller, roughly triangular enclosure (note, however, that there could be confusion here with the ancient chapel which was once situated in the village of Leitholm in Eccles Parish). A fort is on the hill just to the north. ‘Katey’s Cross’ was also just to the west, once used as a gathering point for a local market, and on the site of the former settlement of ‘Wat-tie’s Spinnels’ (also written ‘Letham’), as well as ‘Leatham’, ‘Lethame’, etc.; there are other places of the same name in Eccles Parish near Berwick, also called ‘Leitholm’, as well as elsewhere in Scotland).

Lethem (le-thum) n. Edmund (13th/14th C.) rector of ‘the church of Saint Marie of Farmain-ship’ (i.e. St. Mary’s of the Lowes, Yarrow) from 1292. He is recorded as ‘Master Edmund de Letham’. In 1296 he swore fealty to Edward I, and later that year he received a writ from Edward to restore him to his lands and rights as ‘parson of the church of the forest’. Helen nee Turnbull (17th C.) wife of James. She kept an inn in Hawick after her husband’s death. Here in 1642 a large group was drinking with a servant of the Laird of Cavers, who accused his companions of stealing his wallet, with the case heard by the Hawick Magistrates. John and William, mentioned in the same case, were her sons. Henry (15th/16th C.) listed on the pardon granted in 1526 to a large number of Scotts, Turnbulls and other Borderers who had assisted the Homes in attacking the Earl of Arran. Isobell (b.1687) born in Hawick, daughter of James and Isobell ‘Gyrdan’. She is recorded as ‘Lithen’ in the Parish records in 1713 when she returned to Hawick after working ‘in service’ in Edinburgh, and was asked to produce a ‘testificate’ since it was rumoured that she had been married and her husband Benjamin Taylor had deserted her. In 1715 she was described as ‘servitrix to ye Laird of Whithaugh’ (the one in Liddesdale) when summoned by Hawick Session from Castleton Parish ‘to come and satisfie here for her scandal of adulterie’. She stood several mornings at the church door in sackcloth, but because of the distance she had to travel was then leniently ‘to appear here-after on the usual place of repentance in sackcloth two other days, before noon and after noon’. She appeared for the last time at the end of that year, and appears to have then satisfied the Session. It is possible she is the Isobel ‘Lithen’ recorded in 1716 when her son John, conceived in adultery with John Scott, was baptised in Hawick. By 1723 she appears to have settled into a relationship with William Hood, and again the Session became upset by ‘the scandal of adulterie’; she stood in sackcloth for 11 Sundays and her partner William for 6 Sundays. James (16th/17th C.) ‘messenger’ in Hawick. He was assaulted by Walter Scott of Burnfoot and his wife Margaret with a large stone in St. Mary’s Kirk in 1616. The pair were also accused of later assaulting him and his wife Helen Turnbull on the High Street, along with 7 accomplices. The same James was probably an innkeeper, whose widow Helen Turnbull is recorded in 1642 as part of a court case when a group of people were accused of stealing a wallet in her establishment. Their sons are there recorded as John and William ‘Lethane’. He may also be the ‘James Lechen’ recorded in the 1616 trial over the slaughter of the Laird of Drumlanrig’s sheep at Howpasley; afterwards when ‘Marion’s Geordie’ was confronted in Hawick as a suspect by James Douglas, he and 2 other men (‘Bonnie Johnnie’ Scott and James Wemyss) took the pistol from Geordie before he could shoot. James (17th C.) probably son of John and Isobel Turnbull. He married Isobel Jardine (or ‘Gyrdan’). Their children included: John (b.1783); Andrew (b.1686); Isobel (b.1687); and Andrew (again, b.1689). The witnesses in 1689 were Bailie James Deans and Andrew Porteous. He may be the James who witnessed a baptism for William in 1684 (suggesting they were related). James (17th C.) recorded as an officer of the Baron in Hawick in 1672, specifically ‘the ane of the Erles officers’, at the 1672 setting of the fair. In 1673 he was recorded as Procurator-fiscal of the Regality of Hawick. James (17th/18th C.) sheriff officer in Hawick. He was ‘officer’ in 1700 when he witnessed baptisms for shoemaker Robert Paisley and for Robert Gledstains. In 1702 (or perhaps 1712) he was found guilty by the Session of drinking after 10 p.m., and for swearing. He is described as ‘James Leythen, shyreff-officer’, but it still seems unclear whether he was a Burgh Officer or an officer of the court. He was ‘officer’ in 1711 when he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Walter (who was surely related). He could be the same ‘James Leithan’ listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. It is possible he was the same James who was Procurator-fiscal of the Regality of Hawick in the 1670s, or otherwise was surely related to him. John (13th C.) witnessed to a charter for Melrose Abbey sometime in the period 1220 to 1243. John (17th C.) son of James and Helen Turnbull. He is described as ‘in Hawick’ in a 1642 Magistrates Court trial when he was one of several people accused of stealing the wallet of Samuel Rutherford (a servant of Douglas of Cavers) in his mother’s inn. He later accused Rutherford of violently demanding the whereabouts of his wallet. His brother William was also mentioned in the 1642 case. He could be the John ‘Lithen’, married to Isobel Turnbull, whose children baptised in Hawick included James (b.1648), James (again, b.1649), Helen (b.1652), William (b.1654), or alternatively the John, married to Janet Gledstains, whose son Francis was baptised in Hawick in 1643. Probably the same John ‘Lethane’ was mentioned in Hawick in 1656, when Martin Elliot was ordered to pay 30 shillings ‘for absence from his service for 5 weeks’, although let off the money claimed ‘for the Trooper coming to the said John Lethane’. John (17th C.) Bailie or officer of the court in Hawick in 1673. In that year the Earl of Queensberry complained that his representatives were attacked when trying to ‘ride the fair’ in Hawick ‘and particularly did assault and invade the said John Leathen with drawn swords, and masterfully pulled him off his horse, tore off his clothes, and struck him’. His surname is given as ‘Leathen’, and it is possible this may have been a variant of ‘Leyden’ rather than ‘Lethem’. However, he may have been related to the slightly later James ‘Leythen’...
lide who was a ‘shyreff-officer’. Richard (17th/18th C.) Hawick resident recorded as ‘Leythen’ in 1707. William Sutter was rebuked for being in his house at the time of Sunday morning service. Walter (17th/18th C.) shoemaker listed among the young men fined for their part in the disturbances at the Common Riding of 1706; his surname is recorded in the Town Book as ‘Leythen’. The group seemed to be mostly from the West-end, suggesting he was also from there. He is probably the Walter, son of William ‘Lithen’ and Jane Morrison, born in Hawick in 1682. He was Walter ‘Lithen’ when he married Isobel Newbie in 1707; they had several children baptised in Hawick, including Marion (b.1708), James (b.1711), William (b.1713), Jane (b.1715), Walter (b.1717), Gavin (b.1719), Robert (b.1721) and Patrick (b.1723). The witnesses in 1711 were Bailie Robert Ruecastle and James Lethem ‘officer’ and in 1721 were Bailies George Martin and Robert Ruecastle. William (17th C.) brother of John in Hawick. They were listed in 1642 among acquaintances of Samuel Rutherford, servant of the Laird of Cavers, who accused them of stealing his wallet in Hawick. William (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He is probably father of shoemaker Walter, and hence likely to have been a shoemaker himself. He is likely the son of John and Isobel Turnbull, born in Hawick in 1654 and the husband of Jane Morrison, whose children baptised in Hawick included Walter (b.1682), Thomas (b.1684), Beatrix (b.1687) and Helen (b.1689). the witnesses in 1684 were Thomas Turnbull and James ‘Lithen’ (who was surely related). (spellings vary, such as ‘Leithan’, ‘Lethane’, ‘Letham’ and ‘Lithen’; the surname probably derives from the lands of Leitholm in Berwickshire, but some fraction may come from the more local area in Southdean Parish; it is possible that the name was once the same as or confused with Leyden).

lether (le-thur) n., arch. a ladder – ‘…unless the bystanders had not quickly procured a leather, which taken at the west gavel of John Kaidzie’s house …’ [JW1767] (see also the more common ladder).

let oot (let-oot, le’-oo’) interj., arch. phrase said by children to others who had blocked the gutter with their feet – ‘At a given signal, the cry of Let oot! the water was freed to ruch ‘doon the brae’ in a grand spate’ [ECS].

Letzlingen (letz-ling-gin) n. site of a Common Riding festival organised by Hawick men serving in the K.O.S.B. during WWII, when??.

leuch (lewch) pp., arch. laughed, uttered a laugh – ‘And leugh, and cried, as he trumpt him down – He will be a sottering breeze’ [JTe], …An’ tellt them. Some leuch, others thought him gaen mad’ [JoHa], ‘…An’ leugh to hersel’, an’ blest that morn, When poverty doom’d her mankind’s scorn’ [JoHa], ‘Hei leuch at the laich door-heid’ [JAHM], ‘The captain turned him round, and leugh; Said – Man, there’s naething in thy house, But ae auld sword without a sheath, That hardly now wad fell a mouse!’’ [T], ‘A’l aye meind the lauch ei leuch!’ [ECS]. ‘He leuch a guid yin’ (= had a hearty laugh) [GW], ‘…he never leuch but when the clock chappit’ [DMW], ‘Syne leuch he up and he leuch at the baur he uttered, And missed the aith that the leddy muttered’ [WL] (also written ‘leugh’; past tense of lauch; the past participle form is leuch); the pronunciation formerly had a long diphthong merging ï and oo).

leuch (lewch) adj., arch. low in various senses, not high, short – ‘Cash from Andrew Pertos, for the rent of the leach prison, 0 10 0’ [BR1751], ‘Shurelie men o’ leuch degree ar vanitie: an’ men o’ heich degree ar ane lee’ [HSR], ‘Beith leuch an’ heich, riche an’ puir thegither’ [HRS], ‘Duist at the gange-in ti the village, alang the lauch road thonder …’ [ECS], ‘A leuch-lyin’ place’ [GW], adv. low in respect to situation (also written ‘laeuich’ and perhaps ‘leach’; cf. laigh and law).

leve (lev) n., arch. permission, leave – ‘…for ouytyn the leve of ony juge of law, spirituale or temporale …’ [SB1470].

the Level (thu-le-vul) n. popular name for the High Level pub.

Leven (lee-vin) n. old name for the ‘Line’ or ‘Lyne’ Water just over the Border in Cumbria. It was formerly one of the lawless valleys of the Border. It is probably the place referred to in the late 15th and early 16th centuries when many Scotsmen were charged by the Privy Council with ‘communing with the English of Levin’ and similar. For example, in 1493 Walter Scott of Headshaw paid a fine for ‘treasonably Intercommuning with the Thieves and Traitors of Levyn’ and Robert Scott in Todshawaugh and John Turnbull in Hawick compounded for bringing in rebels ‘de levyn’. In 1494/5 Hector Lauder in Clerklands had remission for bringing in 5 Armstrong brothers, traitors ‘de levyn’. In a note to a legal case of 1502, Pitcairn gave a footnote to word ‘Levin’ as ‘A district of Lancashire, then infamous for its ‘Traitoris’ and ‘lymmaris,’ who made numerous raids and forays every year on the least protected parts of the Scottish Borders’. However, it seems likely that the term was used to apply fairly generally to rievers from over the Border, rather than only for Englishmen from this valley. Thomas Musgrave in 1583 described it thus: ‘Black Leven water is a littell brooke, and so is Whyt Leven the lyke, and are not in anie place a myle and a halfe distant one from an other, and are inhabyted with the Nyxons, untiit it come to a place called the Blackdobs, are then the Rutligis dwell on bothe the side of it, untiit it come to a place called the Lukkins of Leven, then it descends Sowpert, wheare the Taylors have it, thens it descendes the boundes of Sopert, and is inhabyted with Graymes called the Graymes of Leven, and runeth into the ryver of Eske at Gorth Storys hose called the Lard. There is also a river of the same name in North Yorkshire, which drains Lake Windermere into Morecambe Bay, but it seems unlikely this is what is meant in the 15th and 16th century references (it is written ‘levy’ in 1493).

lew in (lou-in) v., arch. to involve, oblige to do something – ‘Ti lewe in = to involve; to ‘let in’ or ‘drag in’’ [ECS], ‘A was lew’d in ti pay his fine’ [GW] (also written ‘lewe in’; only used in the past participle).

Lewenlees (lew-in-leez) n. possible name for lands in upper Liddesdale, recorded c.1376 on a rental roll as part of the area then known as Ermildon. It was recorded as ‘Lewynleys’, and valued at 16 shillings and 2 pence. In 1541 it was ‘Lewinlowis’ and valued at 10 shillings, with Robert Elliot as tenant.

Lewenshope (lew-inz-hop) n. former farm on the north side of the Yarrow valley, south of Hangingshaw. These were Crown lands in the latter part of the 15th century, leased to Sir George Douglas and to the Murrays, with the Murrays continuing as owners into the 16th century. James Murray of Falahill held the lands of the Queen in 1528 and assigned them to his wife, Margaret Home. Patrick Murray of Hangingshaw was recorded as owner in 1541, when the rental was £50. ‘Lewinshope & Scadarig’ were held by Johnstone of Alva in the 1802 Land Tax Rolls (it is marked both ‘Lewinshooper’ and ‘lewinshoop’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; it is ‘Lewynnishop’ in 1456 and 1471, ‘Lewininshope’ in 1484, ‘Lewynshop’ in 1486, ‘lewynhop’ in 1494/5, ‘Lewinshop’ in 1502 and ‘Leyvinshop’ in 1541).

lew-in-leez (n.) arch. a lever, pole for levering – ‘The mouse proposes to join her in spinning; and inquires, ‘But where will I get a spindle, fair lady mine?’ when the frog desires it to take ‘the auld mill lewer’’ [JL].

Lewis (loo-is) n. Alexander (19th C.) listed in Slater’s 1852 directory as a cole merchant for the Duke of Buccleuch, based at the Hawick Station.

James (b.1828/9) born in Cavers Parish, son of Walter and Barbara. He was living with his parents at Howgill in Ewesdale in 1841. By 1851 he was teacher at Burnmouth School in Castleton Parish. He lived there with his younger sister. By 1861 he had been replaced by John Hardie, but it is unclear what happened to him.

ley (II) n., arch. lea, untilled ground – ‘Well, we had special socks for the ley, an cutters for the ley, an when ye gaed on tae stubble, ye used the bigger rougher type’ [TH], ‘Some pech wi beagles owre the leys, And think it pleesant …’. [DH].

Leyden (lä-, il-din) n. Adam (17th C.) recorded as ‘Adam Ledan in Little Cavers’ in 1684 when he was among those proclaimed as fugitives for being Covenanters. Adam (17th C.) resident of Denholm on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. Andrew (b.1694) was probably his son. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Spittal in 1721. He is probably the Adam who married Helen Turnbull in Cavers in 1709 and their children included: Helen (b.1710); Betty (b.1712); Jane (b.1714); Isabel (b.1717); William (b.1719); and James (b.1721). Adam (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. In 1766 he witnessed a baptism for Adam Pott. He married Elizabeth Richardson and their children included: John (b.1757); Adam (b.1759); Elizabeth (b.1761); Peter (b.1762); Walter (b.1765); and Robert (b.1767). The witnesses in 1757 were the whole congregation, in 1762 were weaver John Simpson and Kirk Officer Alexander Bunyan and in 1765 were Alex Nivison and James Brydon. He could be the Adam ‘Liddon’ who hired the Hawick mortcloth in 1761. He is probably the Adam whose son Andrew died in 1778. Adam
Leyden

(b.1780/1) bookseller in Hawick. In 1841 he was living on Miller’s Close with farmer John (probably his brother) and Helen (John’s wife). In 1851 he was a lodger on O’Connell Street. Adam ‘Yeddie’ (1788–1876) son of Robert and Helen Clerk. He was a farmer living up the Loan. In 1851 he was listed as a farmer of 30 acres, and resided at about 66 High Street. His fields were probably up the Welloagate. In 1816 he married Margaret Laidlaw, and she died in 1856. Their children included: Robert (c.1819–77), who married Betty McAlpine; Betty (b.1819), who died young; John (1821–57); Matthew (b.1824), who died in Melbourne; Andrew (b.1830), coal agent and Cornet; and Helen (b.1834), who married Alexander Nivison Scott. Andrew (17th C.) recorded in 1644 when he was among Hawick men mentioned in relation to raising money and supplies for the Covenanting army. He is probably the Andrew, married to Catherine Aitchison, whose children baptised in Hawick included Manie (b.1635) and Christian (b.1640). The witnesses in 1640 were William Lorraine and Simon Adamson. He himself witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Robert Scott in 1640. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish (probably actually the Hassendean area). He witnessed a baptism for Robert Scott and Isobel Turnbull in 1683 and another for Gavin Turnbull in 1684. He married Janet Fletcher and their children included: Isobel (b.1681); and Andrew (b.1683). The witnesses in 1681 were William Turnbull and William Redford and in 1683 were Robert Thomson and James Thomson. Andrew (18th/19th C.) youngest brother of Dr. John. He stated that, although young at the time, he remembers the farewell visit of his brother, and their mother singing the ballads ‘Young Benjie’, ‘Tam-lane’ and ‘Bonora’. Andrew (b.1830) son of Yeddie, farmer at the Welloagate, who lived at 66 High Street. His mother was Margaret Laidlaw, from Melrose. He was Cornet in 1857, when the first known photograph of the Principals was taken (note that there is some confusion over whether the image might be flipped, with the sash over the wrong shoulder and hence the Ritgh- and Left-Hand Men switched). He worked as a coal agent. In 1859 he married Margaret Elliot (b.1829) from Castleton Parish, daughter of John Elliot and Fanny Wilson. He moved to 6 Cross Wynd and later moved to Newcastle where he ran a pub. Their children included: Frances (formerly surname Elliot, b.1856); William Elliot (b.1859); Margaret (b.1861), who died young; Adam (b.1862), cabinet maker; and John (b.1864). George (b.c.1775) baker who lived at about 49 High Street. He is recorded there in 1841 with his wife Janet and children Joan, George and Margaret. James (1637/8–88) tenant in Earlside. He was probably among the tenants of Douglas of Cavers who complained about punitive rental demands on them in 1684 (as punishment for supporting Lady Cavers and other Covenanters). His gravestone in Cavers kirkyard was written in verse, starting ‘Here lies the body of James Leydon, In this churchyard beneath this stone; And Margaret Scott, his spouse alone, Lyeth also here beneath this stone’. He married Margaret Scott, and their children included William, Adam and John. His will is recorded in 1688. He could be the James (with surname blank) recorded ‘in Earlesyde’ in 1690 when listed among people owing money to the deceased Mark Turnbull (portioner of Fodderlee) and Bessie Kerr. James (17th C.) from Cavers Parish. He was ordered to be transported to America in 1679 for being a Covenanter, and escaped the shipwreck in the Orkneys that killed about 200 men. Most of those who survived were recaptured and sold as slaves in Jamaica or New Jersey. James (17th C.) tenant in Little Cavers. In 1684 he was among a group of tenants of the Cavers estate who complained about the burden placed upon them by the huge fines imposed on Lady Cavers. They would have been forced into ruin had not the young Laird of Cavers, William Douglas, returned from the Continent to take charge of matters. He may be the James who was listed at Ashybank in 1694 or the James in ‘Estloidge’ (if this is East Lodge) whose will is recorded in 1698. James (17th C.) tenant in Adderstoneshiel. The will of his wife Margaret Greenshields is recorded in 1690. James (18th/19th C.) paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1788–91. He was a carrier in Hawick according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls and had 4 horses at that time. He is probably the James ‘Leadon’ whose child died in Hawick in 1787. James (18th/19th C.) married Elizabeth Hay in Hawick in 1813. Jane (19th C.) one of the operators of the first 4 power looms to arrive in Hawick, at Dicksons & Laings in 1830. Janet (17th C.) recorded in 1688 along with Bessie Wilson, when they were fined for insulting Bailie Scott when he was equipping the Royalist Militia. Janet (17th C.) listed ‘eist the water’ in Hawick when she paid the Hearth Tax in 1694. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Gledstains and their son Francis was baptised in 1643. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Turnbull and their children included James (b.1648), James (again, b.1649), Helen (b.1652) and William (b.1654). The witnesses in 1654 were Andrew Liddersdale and Robert Scott. John (1632/3–88) farmer at Earlsdie and ancestor of John Casper. He married Margaret, and his children included William, Adam and John. He is buried in Cavers old churchyard and is said to have composed his own epitaph in verse for his tombstone – ‘Here lies the body of James Leydon, In this Churchyard beneath this stone, And Margaret Scott, his spouse alone, Lyeth also beneath this stone. And their posterity that’s gone, Lies also here beneath this stone: William, Adam Leydon, and John, Ly also here beneath this stone. In Earlsdie they lived some years agone, Now here they ly beneath this stone’.
Leyden

John (17th C.) resident of Ashikirk Parish. He married Agnes Young and their children included Janet (b.1688). John (17th/18th C.) resident of Spittal-on-Rule on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included: William (b.1693); Margaret (b.1694); Isabel (b.1696); and Margaret (again, b.1696). John (17th/18th C.) resident at Dodburn. In 1706 he married Janet Scott in Hawick Parish; he was recorded being from Kirkton Parish. His children baptised in Cavers and Kirkton Parishes included: James (b.1706); Samuel (b.1707); and James (again, b.1709). John (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded in Tower in 1727 when he married Bessie Murray. He may be the John who was in Denholm in 1730 when his son Samuel was baptised. He may also be the John who was in Birneyknow when his unnamed child was baptised. He may be the John who married Jane English in 1713. His other children may have included: Adam (b.1714); Bessie (b.1718); John (b.1722); Adam (b.1724); Isabel (b.1728); Walter (b.1728); John (b.1734); Margaret (b.1736); Euphan (b.1738); an unnamed child (b.1740); another unnamed child (b.1742); Margaret (b.1743); and James (b.1744). It seems likely that there are at least 2 families here.

John (18th C.) tailor in Denholm, recorded in 1726. Probably the same John was also recorded in Denholm in 1730 when his daughter Bessie was baptised. His children included: Hugh (b.1726); and Bessie (b.1730). It is unclear which other children were his, and which were the other contemporary James in Cavers. John (18th C.) cooper at Dykes. His daughter Elizabeth was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1730. He may be the John who married Bessie Murray in 1727. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish who married Margaret Laidlaw. Their children included: Robert (b.1750). John (b.1764) and Margaret (b.1766) may also have been his children. John (18th C.) father of John Casper (b.1775). He was shepherd at Henlawshiel from the late 1770s and later took over the whole of Nether Tofts. He married Isabella Scott. They had 3 other sons, as well as 2 daughters. His children may include Betty (b.1769), Thomas (b.1771), Jean (b.1777) and Mary (b.1780), all born in Cavers Parish, but with no mother’s name given. Robert was one son and the youngest was Andrew (but there appear to be no records of their baptisms). He is probably the John, son of John, born in Cavers Parish in 1734.

John (18th/19th C.) heckler at Denholm, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. William was also recorded in Denholm, and so probably related. John (18th/19th C.) resident at Newcastleton, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John (d.1808) from Cavers Parish, he was described as a lapidary (i.e. jeweller) in Edinburgh when his death was reported in the Scots Magazine. He left £50 to his native parish. Dr. John Casper (1775–1811) linguist and poet, born in Denholm, in the thatched cottage on the Green (which can be seen in an early photo of Denholm, and still exists today). His father John was manager at Nether-Tofts farm and his mother Isabella Scott was from Liddesdale. The family moved to Henlawshiel when he was four. He was taught to read by his grandmother and learned Border ballads from his mother. He went to Kirkton School at age 9, where his roughly 3 years of schooling was interrupted by one schoolmaster dying and another being removed. He was tutored by Rev. James Duncan of Denholm for another couple of years, where he developed his Latin and Greek abilities. It is said that his father wanted to purchase an ass to convey him the 3 or so miles to Denholm, and although put off by the ridicule he would get from his classmates, he accepted the offer when the owner threw in a copy of old language dictionary (the ‘Calepini Dictionarium Octalingue’). At age 15 he went to Edinburgh University (apparently going half-way with his father on a horse, then walking the rest), where he qualified as a doctor and a minister. In Edinburgh he joined the Literary Society, where he made many friends and practised public speaking. He is said to have already known French, Spanish, Italian, German, ancient Icelandic, Arabic and Persian before he was 20! On trips back to Denholm he studied in a bower in Denholm Dean in the summers and in Cavers old kirk in the winters. He also spent one summer as an assistant teacher at Clovenfords (more specifically Caddonlee), where he met Nicol the poet. He was also allowed access to the library of Cavers House when back from university. He was said to be fond of practical jokes, e.g. playing to claims he was dabbling in the black arts by scaring people (with an accomplice draped in the mortcloth) in Cavers Kirk who had come to watch him summon spirits; when he was a guest preacher in Cavers in about 1798 he mischievously took as his text ‘Get thee behind me, Satan’. In the later 1790s he served as private tutor in the summers, and so spent less and less time in his beloved Borderland. With an interest in travel and other cultures, he wrote ‘Historical and Philosophical Sketch of the Discoveries and Settlements of the Europeans in Northern and Western Africa, at the Close of the Eighteenth Century’, published in 1799. Additionally he contributed poetry to the Edinburgh Magazine. However, he continued to be a regular attender at Hawick markets, and nearly came to grief there in 1799, when a troop of Volunteers, friends of Mungo Park’s, objected to Park’s treatment in his book on African discoveries. He was licensed to preach in St. Andrews in 1798, and gave occasional sermons around Edinburgh. At one point there was an arrangement for him to become assistant and successor to the minister of Cavers, but this fell through. He collaborated with Walter Scott in collecting ballads, wrote poetry and edited ‘the Scots Magazine’ for about 6 months. In 1800 he spent several months touring the Highlands (his manuscript travelogue being published much later). His poem ‘The Elfin-king’ was published in Lewis’ ‘Tales of Wonder’ in 1801. On having the prospect of an appointment with the East India Company as assistant surgeon, he quickly completed his medical training, receiving an M.D. from St. Andrews. He paid his last visit to his parents and Teviotdale in late 1802. He missed embarking on the intended ship through illness, that ship wrecking on Margate Sands. While waiting for the next ship he prepared the epic ‘Scenes of Infancy’ for publication. He then sailed for Madras, where he served as surgeon, then went as surgeon and naturalist on an expedition through Mysore, although he became ill and convalesced in the house of Sir John Malcolm (of Eskdale). His anthology ‘The Scottish Descriptive Poems with some illustrations of Scottish literary antiquities’ was published in 1803. In 1805 he went on a sea voyage to Pulo Penang (Prince of Wales Island) Malaysia, where he was the only European on-board, and they narrowly avoided being captured by the French. He spent months there, where he met Stamford Raffles among other people, addressing his verses ‘The Dirge of the departed Year’ to Raffles’ wife Olivia. He returned to Calcutta and after writing a dissertation on asiantic languages was appointed Professor of the Hindostani language in Bengal College, which he later gave up to be a Judge in Calcutta (being appointed by Lord Minto). After 2 years he switched position again to be a Commissioner of the Court of Requests in Calcutta, which required knowledge of the local languages. In 1810 he became Assay Master at the Calcutta mint, with relatively high salary and light duties. But this new easy life was short-lived, for in 1811 he accompanied Lord Minto on an expedition to Java, where he helped translate and write letters between the British and local chiefs. He accompanied the conquering British troops to Batavia but there contracted a fever (it is said from the ‘pestilential air’ of a store room containing ancient objects in a Dutch government building, but probably either malaria or dengue). Three days later he was dead, at the age of 36. He was buried at Tanabang Cemetery, Batavia (now Jakarta). He was said to be of medium stature, but strong and athletic in his youth. He also strictly abstained from vices. He talked loudly and a lot (Lord Minto wrote ‘I do not believe so great a reader was ever so great a talker) in a ‘shrill, piercing, and at the same time grating voice’. He was proudly independent, was said to be lacking in refined manners, and retained his Teviotdale accent throughout his life (which put off many Englishmen). Encouraged to lose his accent he replied ‘Learn English! no, never; it was trying to learn that language that spoilt my Scotch, and as to being silent, I will promise to hold my tongue, if you will make fools hold theirs’. It is said that the main defect of his personality was ‘his passion for display’ and hence ‘he was naturally enough judged by many, who measured him by an ordinary standard, to be more superficial than profound’. Nevertheless his drive to study, even through illness, was remarkable, and he said ‘I cannot be idle; and whether I die or live, the wheel must go round to the last’. He is supposed to have spoken 34 separate languages or dialects (the estimated numbers vary), and translated several texts in obscure dialects. He also translated some of the gospels of the New Testament into

Pushtu, Maldivian, Beluchi, Macassar and Bugi. At the time of his death he was contemplating a comparative arrangement of languages. There are only 2 surviving likenesses of him, one being a sketch made by Capt. George Elliot on the voyage to Java. A monument to him was erected in 1861 in the middle of Denholm Green, designed by Hector H. Orrock. The cottage in which he was born still stands on the north side of the Green. A granite obelisk was erected at Henlaw-shiel where he spent his childhood. His first published poem was in the Edinburgh Literary Magazine in 1795, followed by many more, including ‘Ruberslaw’ that same year; these first contributions were signed ‘J.L., Banks of the Teviot’. As part of his long poem ‘Scenes of Infancy’ (1803), he wrote the oft-quoted lines: ‘Boast! Hawick, boast! thy structures rear’d in blood, Shall rise triumphant over flame and flood; Still doom’d to prosper, since on Flodden’s field Thy sons a hardy band, unwont to yield, Fell with their martial king, and (glorious boast!) Gain’d proud renown where Scotia’s fame was lost’. His 2 other poems with local flavour are ‘Lord Soulis’ and ‘Cout of Kielder’. He contributed several pieces to Scott’s ‘Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border’ (1801), including most of the essay on fairy superstitions. The glossary of his annotated ‘The Complaynt of Scotland’ (1801) is a useful early source of local words. He also edited ‘Scottish Descriptive Poems’ (1803). Much of his output was published in ‘The Poetical Remains of the Late Dr. John Leyden, with Memoirs of His Life’, edited by Rev. James Morton (1819). Although his poetry has largely gone out of fashion, the fantastic poems ‘The Mermaid’ and ‘The Elfin King’ have had a lasting popularity. Several of his translations and other largely completed projects, left with his friends Richard Heber and William Erskine, were published posthumously, but others were lost forever. 2 books, ‘Life of Dr. John Leyden, Poet and Linguist’ (1908) by John Reith, and ‘Leydeniana: or, Gleanings from some unpublished documents regarding Dr. Leyden’ (1912) by James Sinton, collected much of what had been learned about Leyden in subsequent years. A centenary celebration was held in Denholm in 1875 and there were also events in 2011 to mark the 200th anniversary of his death. A booklet ‘Dr. Leyden’s Punjabi Translations’ was published in 2011 – ‘The tongue that was spoken by Leyden and Scott ...’ [WS], ‘His bright and brief career is o’er, And mute his tuneful strains; Quenched is his lamp of varied lore, That lov’d the light of song to pour;
brother John (perhaps the only accurate portrait) and had it altered to become a portrait of himself. Sir Walter Scott wrote to him on hearing the news of his brother’s death. Robert (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Beatrice Balmer in 1844 and their children included: George Lunn (b.1855); Robert (b.1857); and Helen (b.1862). Samuel (18th C.) resident of Kirkton and Cavers Parishes. He was at Dodburn in 1730 when he married Helen Elliot. His children, baptised in Cavers, included John (b.1731), an unnamed child (b.1737), Hanna (b.1743), Jean (b.1745), Elizabeth (b.1748). William (17th C.) married Bessie Elliot in Roberton Parish in 1688. His wife was from Cavers Parish. He is probably the William who witnessed baptisms for Isobel (perhaps his sister) and William Lamb in Roberton in 1687 and 1688. William (17th C.) resident of Denholm on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He was probably related to Adam, who was also listed in Denholm. He is probably the William who was living at Ashybank in 1702. He could be the William whose children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included: Andrew (b.1694); James (b.1696); John (b.1702); and Janet (b.1704). William (17th C.) resident of Ormiston on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. His surname is written ‘Leadin’. He could be the ‘W. Leyden’ fined along with ‘J. Swan’ in 1702 for drunkenness. William (17th/18th C.) wright in Denholm in 1722 when his son Adam was baptised. Other children, baptised in Cavers Parish, who were probably his include William (b.1716), Helen (b.1717), William (again, b.1720), Bessie (b.1727) and William (again, b.1732). William (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. His children included an unnamed son (b.1724), William (b.1726), John (b.1728), Euphan (b.1731) and James (b.1734). William (18th C.) married Helen Blyth in Cavers Parish in 1726. William (18th/19th C.) cooper in Denholm in 1769 and 1771. His children included James (b.1769) and Janet (b.1771). Probably the same William was the resident in Denholm, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls; he was probably related to James, who is also listed under Denholm. There appear to have been 2 contemporary Williams in Cavers, with other children of one or other family being Jane (b.1763), Betty (b.1765), John (b.1765), Isabel (b.1767), James (b.1767), Betty (b.1770), Jeany (b.1773) and Bellow (b.1773). William (b.1811) born in Denholm, son of John and Isabella Burn. In his youth he was a superb athlete, excelling at multiple sports at the St. Ronan’s Games in the period 1832–35. In 1833 he won both the running and standing versions of the ‘hop, step and leap’, as well as 2 races. In 1834 and 1835 he won just about every event he entered, including the long jump, high jump, wrestling and throwing. He was also said to have once ran from Denholm to Innerleithen, won the race there, and then ran home, all in one day! He was a stockmaking in Denholm and also proprietor of the Fox and Hounds. In Slater’s 1852 directory he is listed as vintner at the ‘Hare & Hounds’. His wife was Cecilia and their children included Elizabeth and Isabella (formerly written ‘Leadin’, ‘Leon’, ‘Leidn’, ‘Leydon’, ‘Lidden’, ‘Leiden’, ‘Leidone’, ‘Leydon’, ‘Lidon’, ‘Lithen’ ‘Lydan’, ‘Lyden’, ‘Lydun’, etc.).

Leyden Bank (lā-din-bawngk) n. street in Weensland, developed in 1963 and named after John Leyden.

Leyden Cottage (lā-din-ko’-ej) n. house in Denholm that was the birthplace of John Leyden in 1775. It is a small thatched and harled cottage off the north corner of the Green, on Leyden Road. It bears a commemorative plaque, and is now designated a ‘Class B’ listed building. It can be seen in the 1850s sketch by J.A.H. Murray and in a photograph from perhaps the 1860s. It was re-thatched in 1946 (also called ‘Leyden’s Cottage’).

Leyden Monument (lā-, Il-din-mo-new-min’) n. memorial to John Leyden erected on Denholm Green in 1861. It was designed by Hector H. Orrick and sculpted by Handyside Ritchie. It consists of a Swinton stone Gothic spire on top of two tiers of Aberdeen granite columns. It used to get an annual wash by the Denholm fire brigade. It was restored in 1982 with funds raised by a sponsored walk following the route Leyden took when he left to attend Edinburgh University.

Leyden’s Road (lā-, Il-dinz-rōd) n. street in Denholm, lying between Sunnyside and the Canongate (also called ‘Leyden Road’).

Leyes

Leyes (leez) n. former name of lands in Liddesdale, roughly between Stichell Hill and Riccarton. It is now marked by ‘Leyes Burn’ and the farm of Leysburnfoot. Adam Elliot of the Leys was recorded in 1541 and ‘Hob of the Leys’ in 1595. The lands there were rented by the Duke of Buccleuch to his Chamberlain John Laing in 1736. The farmhouse must have been quite close to what became Riccarton Junction (it is ‘Levis’ in 1541; it is probably the place marked ‘Lieres’ on Blaen’s 1654 map).

Leysburnfit (leez-burn-fi) n. farm where the Leys Burn meets the Roughley Burn, to the east of Whitropefoot and just west of Riccarton Junction. It is probably the second farmhouse shown on the combined farm of Stitchillhill, Laidlawhope and Whitrope in the 1718 Buccleuch survey. It is the same as ‘Fawhopeknewe’ standing shown on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map.

Leythen (ll-it-hin) n. James (17th/18th C.) Sheriff-Officer in Hawick, recorded in 1702. Richard (17th/18th C.) probably an innkeeper in Hawick. In 1707 William ‘Sator’ was rebuked in Hawick Sheriff-Officer in Hawick, recorded in 1702. Richard (17th/18th C.) probably an innkeeper in Hawick. In 1707 William ‘Sator’ was rebuked in Hawick. In 1707 William ‘Sator’ was rebuked in Hawick.

liart (ll-ur) adj., arch. streaked with grey or white – ‘…and a nag of lyart colour, two oxen, three cows, one cowdow, ten auldscheip, six lambs now in the possession of the said Andrew [of Friarshaw]’ [SPB1581], ‘…And startled up auld liart carlins may be Englished, ‘and transformed themselves into old grey headed witches’’ [EM1820] (also written ‘lyart’).

liberty (ll-ber-ee) n., arch. authorization, sanction to do something – ‘…and that nane within the burgh take money far ony merchant for libertie to stand before their doors …’ [BR1662], ‘…Walter Scott of Goldilands, quhair in he desyred liberty to bigg upon the topp of that pairt of the Common dyke quhich marcheth with his ground …’ [BR1675], ‘…the Laird of Gledstaines …obtained allways when neid required the lyke libertie without interruptione’ [BR1704], privileges enjoyed by a free burgh, right of trading within a burgh – ‘Item, that the hale websters …convene and meet together …on any occasion concerning the craft, or for any other particular concerning the town and liberties thereof …’ [BR1640].

the Library (thu-ll-bru-ree) n. Hawick Public Library, founded in 1878 under the provision of the Public Libraries Act (which allowed the use of rate money). It started in rooms in the Exchange, with a temporary move to Bridge Street in 1883, before moving to an upstairs part of the new Town Hall in 1886. The earliest history is unclear, with some accounts suggesting that the first ‘public’ library was founded in 1760 or the first ‘subscription library’ in 1762, with other ‘circulating libraries’ started later; the ‘Public Library of Hawick’ published a catalogue in 1792. Dr. Charters of Wilton set up a free circulating library for members of his congregation in the early 1800s. The Trades’ Library was started in 1802. The current library building on North Bridge Street, built with a gift of £10,000 from Andrew Carnegie, was opened in 1904 by Carnegie himself, with Mrs. Carnegie ceremonially unlocking the doors with a golden key. The opening day was a half holiday in the town, and the streets were decorated with flags etc. It was designed by John Nicholl Scott and Alexander Lorne Campbell of Edinburgh (who also designed the Boer War Memorial), following a design competition. The building has some stonework by William Birnie Rhind, with the exterior dominated by the corner entrance tower and the round-headed gables. There are 4 large windows with heraldic designs, with the arms of Dunfermline (Carnegie’s home town), Hawick, Galashields, Selkirk, Jedburgh, Kelso, Roxburghshire, Selkirkshire, Berwickshire and emblems of Scotland, England and Ireland, together with the arms and mottoes of the Ker, Scott, Douglas, Gladstains, Elliot, Armstrong and Turnbull families. The building had a major extension, funded by Sir Thomas Henderson, in 1939. The Library is now integrated into the Scottish Borders Council Library Service, and holds a valuable reference section of materials relating to Hawick. It is a grade B listed building.

the Liddel (thy-li-duil) n. popular name for Liddel Witter – ‘Right ower the knowe where Liddel lyes, – Nae wonder that it catch’d his ee! A thing of huge and monstrous size Was steering that way hastile’ [ES], ‘Sweet sand the Liddle at our feet, I never heard it flow so cheery; With bliss life’s moments seemed complete That night by Liddle wi’ my dearie’ [TCh] (sometimes written ‘Liddell’ or ‘Liddlel’ and formerly ‘Liddal’).

Liddelbank (li-duil-bawgk) n. mansion on the Liddel Water, near the very southernmost point of Roxburghshire. It was built on what had been part of the farm of Greena in 1793 for William Oliver, the local Sheriff and enthusiastic promoter of road improvements. Oliver was recorded there as owner of no less than 10 horses on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. James Alexander Attwood was there in the early 19th century and Walter Armstrong around 1821. Robert Jardine, M.P., lived there in the mid-19th century, William Brackenridge around 1870 and Thomas Bell in the latter part of the 19th century. Coal was once mined (in limited quantities) on the estate. It is also sometimes called ‘Bellsbank’. The house has a walled garden, now derelict – ‘Liddelbank, unrecorded in tale yet, or story, Neglected – forgotten in Border bards’ song: Fair gem of the Liddel, its pride and its glory, I will chant thee a stave as I journey along’ [DA] (it is ‘Liddel Bank’ in 1797 and ‘Liddell Bank’ in the 1860s).

Liddel Castle (li-duil-kaw-sul) n. former Castle in Liddesdale, between Newcastle and Saughtree, near the confluence of the Liddel and the Esk. Nothing remains now of this Norman fortification, except some impressive earthworks between the road and the river, on a promontory, surrounded on 3 sides by the river and the Kirk Cleuch Burn. It was once surrounded by the Castle Town, which gave its name to the area, although little evidence of former habitation remains today. The castle was probably built by Ranulph de Soulis when he was granted the surrounding barony by David I in the 12th century. It was constructed on the usual motte and bailey pattern, covering about 200m² in the north section and 160m² in the southern, sloping section. The location of a well can also be identified as a square depression. The castle appears to have been abandoned around the early 14th century. Around the 18th century it was sometimes referred to as ‘the Roman Camp’, because the origin of the mounds were not understood.

Liddell (li-duul) n. Andrew (17th C.) recorded as ‘servant to Widow Layng’ on the list of Hawick men named in the 1673 trial following the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. Archibald (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1787 he married Betty Hardie, who was also from Hawick. Their daughter Jane was baptised in 1788. George (15th C.) Rector of Ettrick Forest according to a charter of 1477. He was also recorded as Rector there in 1482 when he witnessed a charter for James Hunter, Rector of Cranston; the other minister who acted as witness was Alexander Murray, Rector of Hawick. He was probably a relative of Robert, who was Ranger of Yarrow Ward.

Sir James of Halkerston (d.c.1484) Ranger of the Ward of Yarrow in at least the period 1476–82. He was Steward to the Duke of Albany and as a result was tried for treason in 1484 an executed soon after. He was patron of Blind Harry, and it is said he was a major source of information for the poem ‘Wallace’. James (17th C.) Town Clerk 1658–59. Probably the same James was on the Council in 1668 and was Procurator Fiscal of Hawick in 1673. In 1673 Robert Scott of Horsleyhill was charged by the Bailies with stealing from his house ‘five firelocks with ane pair of bandellers belonging to the town’. Presumably he had charge of some of the firearms used by the Burgh Officers, and the theft could be part of the events around disputes between the Hawick authorities and the Baron’s Bailie. He may be the James who witnessed a baptism for John Stewart in 1651 and another for Thomas Scott in 1654. He is probably the James who witnessed a baptism for John Elliot, farmer at Southfield, in 1672. He may be the merchant of that name on the list of Hawick men named in the 1673 trial following the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. In 1676 he checked the measures used by several Hawick traders, in presence of divers and sundry witnesses, upon complaint given in not only by the tacksman of the Duke’s measures for making use of other measures besides his, but also by ane great number of poor people; he thus effectively served as the surveyor of weights and measures for the Burgh, and is also referred to as a merchant. He may be the James, married to Isabell Watt, whose children included: Isobell (b.1650); and William (b.1653). Rev. John (17th C.) graduating from Glasgow University in 1674, he was licensed by that Presbytery in 1681. He was presented to Hobkirk Parish in late 1682 and ordained there in early 1683. He was unable to attend a trial of Covenanters in 1684 on account of having broken his leg, but sent a list of charges against his parishioners. However, he was deprived in 1689 for not praying for William and Mary (i.e. not giving up Episcopalianism), specifically saying that ‘he would never pray for them as long as his blood was warm’! He may have reformed, however, since he (or another man of the same name) was recorded as assistant at Montrose in 1696 and Brechin in 1698. Robert of Balmure (15th C.) Steward of King James II. He was one of the Commissioners for negotiating with the English in 1453. He served as Ranger of Yarrow Ward from at least 1456 and through the 1460s. He had the farms of Blackgrain, Montbenger and then Tinnis in Yarrow for his fee. Probably the same Robert was also Keeper of Dunbar Castle, as well as being involved with the leasing of Crown land in Gal- loway and March, and thus mentioned in the Exchequer Rolls through the 1440s and 50s. He may be the Robert whose murder by James Davidson ‘in Quhitmerhall’ is recorded at the Justice-aire in Selkirk in 1502. It seems likely he was related to George, who was Rector of the Forest in the 1470s and 1480s. Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Cawfaulds in 1727. He married Bessie Scott (perhaps in 1714, although no wife’s name is given). Their children included: Robert (b.1717); Robert (again, b.1720); Janet (b.1723); and Isobel (b.1727). The witnesses in 1727 were Thomas Turnbull and William Douglas. He is probably the Robert who in 1729 witnessed a baptism for Andrew Harkness, resident of Clarilaw. Robert (18th C.) resident of Burnfoot Mill. He married Agnes Douglas and their children, baptised in Wilton Parish, included: Robert (b.1751); James (b.1752); Agnes (b.1754); Thomas (b.1757); Archibald (b.1765); and Euphan (b.1770). The 1770 baptism was carried out by Rev. Young of the Associate Congregation in Hawick. Robert (18th C.) tailor in Hawick. He was deceased by 1793 when his widow, Elizabeth Hardie married Alexander Shaw in Edinburgh. Thomas (17th C.) married Isobel Wright in 1686. They were both from Roberton Parish (probably the part corresponding to Has- sendean). Their son Robert was baptised in 1687, with witnesses George Scott and James Wright (who was probably related to his wife). In 1686 he witnessed a baptism for George Cockburn in Roberton Parish. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He is recorded at Briery Yards in 1722 and Clarilaw in 1724, 1727 and 1729. He married Isobel Cavers and their children included: Thomas (b.1722); Isobel (b.1724); James (b.1726); Helen (b.1727); Helen (b.1729); James (b.1731); and Robert (b.1734). The witnesses in 1722 were William and Robert Easton, in 1724 were James Cavers (probably related to his wife) and John Dryden, in 1727 and 1729 were James and John Dryden. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He is recorded at Parkhouses in 1751. He married Margaret Hoy in 1740 and their children included: Robert (b.1742); William (b.1745); Mark (b.1748); Thomas (b.1751); John (b.1753); and Elizabeth (b.1759). The witnesses in 1751 were James Dryden and Walter Scott. Thomas (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Davidson and their children included: Elizabeth (b.1825); Isabella (b.1827); and James (b.1829). Walter (17th C.) see Walter Riddell. William (17th C.) referred to as ‘merchant, younger’ in Hawick in 1644 when he held the surplus of the money collected for the Covenanting army. He or his father may be the same as the procurator fiscal of the Burgh in the 1630s. He may also be the William who was elected to the Council in 1648. He could be the William, married to Jean Lidderdale, whose children baptised in Hawick

Liddel Strength

Parish included John (b.1637), Isobel (b.1639), Janet (b.1640), Marion (b.1644), Jean (b.1646) and James (b.1648). He witnessed baptisms in 1641 for William Wright and Thomas Oliver, both along with Andrew Liddersdale (who was presumably closely related to his wife). William (17th C.) listed among the poor of Hassendean Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, when he was ‘in Burnfoot’. This was presumably Hassendean Burnfoot. He could be the William, married to Margaret Scott, whose daughter Margaret was baptised in Roberton Parish in 1683 (sometimes spelled ‘Liddel’ and formerly ‘Ledale’, ‘Liddale’, etc.; see also Liddel).

Liddel Strength (li-duel-stren-th) n. ruined fortress on the south bank of the Liddel Water, near the confluence with the Esk and the village of Moat in Cumbria. It has an impressive high motte and two baileys built on a cliff and dating to the 12th century with a later tower. Sir John Wake held the castle in the late 13th century, and then it passed to Sir Simon Lindsay, who also held Hermitage at the same time.

Liddel Viaduct (li-duel-vi-a-dukt) n. railway viaduct across the Liddel Water on the Waverley Line, just south of Newcastle. It has been demolished, but the approaches are still visible.

Liddel Witter (li-dul-wi'-ur) n. the Liddel Water, formed by the meeting of 3 burns near Saughtree in the Deadwater heights, it is about 27 miles long and joins the Esk near Canoeburne. It was a central feature in the area of cross-border raids that went on for centuries. In 1583 Captain Thomas Minsgrave described it thus: ‘The ryver is all Scottishe, untill it come to Kyrsopp foote, planted with Ellotes untill it come neare Wheatoughe towre, then the Armestronges inhabit it on both sydes, untill it come to Kyrsopp foote, where it takes the dyvysion of the realmes from Kyrsopp – then the Armestronges have the one syde, and the Englishe Fosters the other syde, see it descendes by the Harloue on the one syde and the Haythawyt on the other, and runeth into the ryver called Eske. Its valley, Liddesdale, is now quite under-populated, with Newcastle the major town (also spelled ‘Liddle’ and older variants).

lidder (li-dur) adj., arch. lazy, tardy – ‘Now Liddesdale has lyan lang in, Fala, fala, fala, faliddle. There is nae riding there at a’: Their horses are grown sae lidder fat, They downa stur out o’ the sta’. Fala, &c’ [CPM], ‘I’ve been very lidder in writin’.’ [GW].

Lidderdale see Liddersdale

Liddersdale (li-duurz-dal) n. Adam (16th C.) ‘flescheour’ (i.e. butcher) of Hawick listed in the testament of Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1574. He was owed money for supplying ‘flesche to the place’ and his name is recorded as ‘Adame Liddersdale’. Andrew (16th C.) holder of 5 participates of land on the north side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. He was probably related to others of the same surname who also owned lands at that time. He could be the same man as Andrew ‘Lutherdale’.

Andrew (17th C.) Councillor who signed the 1640 ‘Act of Bailies and Council’. He is probably the currier from Hawick who witnessed a deed in 1630 for Thomas of St. Mary’s Isle (in Kirkcudbrightshire), who was granted a fourth part of Easter Mains by Viscount Drumlanrig; John, currier in Hawick, and Andrew, currier in Selkirk, were also listed and so presumably related. He is probably the Andrew who witnessed baptisms in Hawick for William Wright and Thomas Oliver in 1641, for George Scott in 1651 and for John Leyden in 1654. Andrew (17th C.) recorded in 1651 when his daughter Janet, with Isobel Young, was baptised in Ashkirk. The record is labelled ‘for’, and witnesses were George Ormiston and George (who was surely related to him). George (16th C.) recorded in 1582 as witness to a sasine in Hawick, involving James Jack. He was son of Thomas, who was also a witness. Gilbert (13th C.) recorded as being ‘of Liddesdale’ in 1278/9 when he was on a panel at Newcastle. His family presumably had lands in Liddersdale, and may have given risen to this surname. Hawise (16th C.) owner of 1 particate of land on the south side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. The forename could have been ‘Hally’ or some other close variant. James (15th/6th C.) recorded in 1502 being ‘in hawik’. He and Philip Fawlaw were sureties for each other and failed to appear at the Justice-arie in Jedburgh, being fined at the next court. James (16th C.) recorded in 1581 as ‘alias Blakstaneous in Hawik’. He was probably a Baillie in Hawick, since he gave sasine of the half Barony of Wilton from James Langlands of that Ilk to his son Robert Langlands. It is unclear what his nickname refers to. Janet (16th C.) owner of 2 participates of land on the south side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. Presumably the same Janet was also joint owner (along with Stephen Scott and John Short) of another particate on the south, as well as a particate on the north side. She was probably related to Andrew, Hawise, Thomas and Nichol, and may have been a widow or heiress. John (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘Johannis Lidderdale’ in Hawick in 1493 when George Waugh in Hawick was surety for him at the Justice-naire in Jedburgh. In the next entry the same John in Hawick was himself surety for Thomas, who was fined for non-appearance. In 1494/5 the pair of men were allowed to ‘compone’ for the crime of conspiring with the Elliots of Branxholme. John ‘Jock the Deacon’ (16th/17th C.) Hawick resident mentioned in a murder trial of 1612, with the events themselves happening 2 years earlier. He may have been a Burgh Officer of some sort, given his implication in the treatment of the prisoner in Hawick steeple. His nickname suggests he may have been Deacon in one of the Trades. It seems likely he was related to the earlier John in Hawick. John (17th C.) leather merchant in Hawick. In 1630 he acted for Thomas of the Isle (in Kirkcudbrightshire) when he had a ‘clare constat’ for quarter of the lands of East Mains, from the Viscount Drumlanrig. He was presumably related to Thomas in some way, and probably closely related to Andrew (currier in Hawick) and William (currier and Burgess of Selkirk) who were witnesses. John (17th C.) schoolmaster in Hawick, who was one of the witnesses to the signing of the ‘Confessions of Faith and Bond of Union’ (Covenant) in 1638. He is the first schoolmaster on record in Hawick, and although it is not known what sort of school he was in charge of, it was presumably the Parish School. Margaret (16th C.) holder of 1½ particates of land on the north side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. Nichol (16th C.) holder of half a particate of land on the south side of the main street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. Philip (16th C.) recorded in 1552 when his wife (‘vxori Phelippi Lidderdaill’) was listed as being owed money by William, younger of Branxholme. He may be the same Philip listed as owning 2 particates of land on the north side of the main street in Hawick’s 1537 Charter. Robert ‘the Corbie’ (17th C.) one of a list of 16 local men named by the Hawick Bailie in 1627 as suitable for sending to the army in Germany, i.e. presumably considered undesirable to the town. However, when produced before the Privy Council by the Bailie he was one of the men who were found ‘not fit for the wars’ and dismissed. Thomas (15th C.) fined in 1493 for non-appearance at the Justice-naire in Jedburgh. John was his surety and he also acted for himself. Both men were ‘in hawic’. He was probably related to the later Thomas. In 1494/5 both he and John were allowed to ‘compone’ at the Justice-naire in Jedburgh for the crime of conspiring with the Elliots of Branxholme. In the Treasurer’s accounts for 1494/5 he is recorded having obtained remission from the King. Thomas (16th C.) mentioned in the 1537 as holder of 2 particates of land on the south side of Hawick’s public street. He was presumably related to some of the other Liddersdales in the Charter. Thomas (16th C.) recorded in 1582 as witness to a saisine in Hawick, involving James Jack. His son George was also a witness and he was listed as ‘elder’ (suggesting there was another Thomas at the time). Thomas (17th C.) of St. Mary’s Isle (in Galloway), given quarter of a ‘merkland’ of Easter Mains by Viscount Drumlanrig in a deed of 1630. The deed also mentions John and Andrew, curriers of the same place, and William, Burgess of Selkirk (probably a variant of ‘Liddesdale’; also spelled ‘Lidderdail’, ‘Lidderdail’, ‘Lidderdale’, ‘Lidderdale’, ‘Liddirdale’, ‘Liddirdale’, etc.; see also Luderdale, which may be the same name in some cases).
in 1514 it was described as ‘12 miles of Lienth, within the Middill Marche of Scotland, whereupon was 100 pleughe’s’. Another rental roll of 1541 (transcribed in the Exchequer Rolls as well as the Buccleuch Muniments) lists more than 140 farms and their values and tenants at that time, mostly Elliots in the north and Armstrongs in the south, with a few Nixons, Croyzers and others. An English record of 1592 describes that ‘the cheif surnames in Liddesdale standes upon Armestronges and Elwoodes’ and ‘is the most offensive countrie against both West and Middle Marches’. The area was long a Lordship, possessed by the Soulises and Douglases, and later the Earls of Bothwell, forfeited by Francis Stewart, Earl of Bothwell and passing to the Earls of Buccleuch and Roxburgh in 1632; the document describing this lists the owners of all the farms at that time. The Lordship is listed among the possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1653 and 1663. The area was surveyed in 1718, when most of the farms were possessed by Anna, Duchess of Buccleuch. These maps forma valuable record of the farm boundaries at that time, as well as the location of farmhouses and woods 300 years ago. It is said that Sir Walter Scott’s carriage was the first wheeled vehicle seen in the area in 1798 – ‘The Armestranges, that aye haie been A hardy house, but not a hail, The Elliots’ honours to maintaine, Brought down the lave o’ Liddesdale’ [T]. ‘Of Liddesdale the common thieves Sa perly steals now and reaves, That nane may keep Horse, nolt, or sheep, For their mischieves’ [SRM], ‘The outlaws come frae Liddesdale, They herry Redesdale far and near; The rich man’s gelding it maun gang, They canna pass the puir man’s mear’ [LHTB], ‘The Teviot lads are frank and free, The Ettrick sheeps, For their mischieves’ [SRM], ‘The outlaws and reaves, That nane may keep Horse, nolt, or sheep, For their mischieves’ [SRM], ‘The Armestranges, that aye haie been A hardy house, but not a hail, The Elliots’ honours to maintaine, Brought down the lave o’ Liddesdale’ [T].

Liddin (\(\text{li-din}\)) n. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He probably farmed near Newton. His name could be an error for some similar surname.

Liddle see Liddell

Liddle (\(\text{li-dul}\)) n. Ebenezer (b.1791/2) gardener and farmer living on Wilton Damside in 1841. In 1851 he was at Upper Damside, farmer of 17 acres. He is listed as a gardener in Wilton in Slater’s 1852 directory. He married Elizabeth Lillias in Wilton in 1812. John (17th C.) minister of Hobkirk Parish. He refused to pray for William and Mary and was removed, leading to the Parish being vacant for 1689–94. John (18th/19th C.) carrier operating between Hawick and Carlisle. In December 1808 he was held up at Branholme by 2 men with pistols. They tied him to a tree and robbed him of over £100. This was the most famous local case of highway robbery. The thieves were never caught, despite a large reward being offered by the carriers of Hawick. Robert (18th/19th C.) overseer at Boghall. He is listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835 and 1840. Thomas (18th C.) mason in Hawick. He married Margaret Turnbull, who died in 1794. He could be the Thomas whose son Thomas (b.1777) to Mary Turnbull was baptised in Wilton Parish. Thomas (d.1835) grocer and corn dealer of the High Street, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He is probably the Thomas who subscribed to Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He married Maragret Davidson in 1822. Their children included: Elizabeth (b.1825), who married baker George Paterson; Isabella (b.1827), who later also married George Paterson; James (b.1829); Margaret (b.1831); Agnes (b.1832); and Jemima (b.1833). His wife and children are recorded at about 8 High Street on the 1841 census (see also Liddell).

lill (lil) n., arch. a hole in a wind instrument, particularly the bagpipes, chanter or flute – ‘A blyther lad ne’er buir a drone, Nor touched a lill; Nor pipe inspir’d wi’ sweeter tone Or better skill’ [CPM].

Lilliard (li-lee-arid) n. the Maiden Lilliard of Maxton who supposedly saw her lover killed at Ancrum Moor and waded in to avenge him, being killed in the process – ‘…And when her legs were cutt off She fought upon her stumps’. A small monument commemorates her supposed grave, about 400 yards east of the A68, near the line of Dere Street. Unfortunately it seems very unlikely that she ever existed, since the place name predates the battle, the monument is essentially a replacement for the earlier ‘Lilliard’s Cross’ and the lines appear to be cribbed from ‘Chevy Chase’, but it’s a good story nevertheless.

Lilliard’s Cross (li-lee-aridz-kros) n. former wayside marker at Lilliard’s Edge. The name dates back to at least the 12th century, and was still in use in the 16th (it is ‘Lilliat Cros’ in 1378 and ‘Lylzeartis Croce’ in 1547/8). Lilliard’s Edge (li-lee-aridz-ej) n. farm by the A68, between Jedburgh and St. Boswells, with a nearby caravan park. Dere Street passes near here, and it is next to the site of the Battle of Ancrum Moor, as well as of the monument to ‘Lilliard’. The name is generally applied to the high point on the A68 here, which reaches 172 m (565 ft). Just off the road to the west is the Monteath Mausoleum, and a little further south lies the Lilliardsedge Park caravan park (the origin of the name is probably from the Old English personal name ‘Lil’ plus ‘geat’, meaning ‘the gate Alexander (19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His wife was Isabella Scott. Their children included Alexander (b.1838). Alexander (19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. His wife was Isabel Grieve. Their children included: Christian (b.1842); John (b.1844); William (b.1845); Margaret (b.1848); and Alexander (b.1849). In 1851 and 1861 his widow was living at Dykecrofts. Andrew (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1623 as tenant farmer of lands near Bedrule, along with Thomas Turnbull, ‘in dweller in Newtoun’. Andrew (17th/18th C.) married Janet Turnbull in Kirkton in 1721. It seems likely that the same Andrew married Isobel Briggs in Kirkton in 1735. His children, baptised in Kirkton, probably included Isobel (b.1722), Thomas (b.1729), Janet (b.1745) and Andrew (b.1748). Perhaps the same Andrew was living at Stobs in 1736 and 1741 and had children baptised in Cavers Parish, including John (b.1736), Marion (b.1739) and Gilbert (b.1741). Douglas (b.1794) son of Alexander, he was born in Hobkirk Parish. He became a shepherd at Wauchope and lived at Hawklaw. In 1820 he married Elizabeth (‘Betty’), daughter of John Taylor, farmer at Unthank in Rulewater. Their children were: Alexander (b.1821); John (b.1822); James (b.1824); Douglas (b.1825); Isabel (b.1828); Robert (b.1831); Elizabeth (b.1834); and Mary (b.1837). George (1704/5–39) shoemaker at Blackburnfoot in Castleton Parish. His children Thomas and 2 others died in infancy. They are buried in Ettleton Cemetery. Hugh (18th/19th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. He married Helen Telfer in 1817, the married being recorded in both Southdean and Hobkirk Parishes. His children included Alexander (b.1818). James (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His daughter Isabell was baptised in 1693. James (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. He married Marion Collier in 1733 and his children included William (b.1734) and Christian (b.1736). James (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His son Andrew was baptised in 1747. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elizabeth Grieve in 1765. James (1815/6–99) son of William and Margaret Nichol who lived in at least Cavers and Castleton Parishes. There appears to be no record of his baptism. He worked as a farm labourer at Riddletonhill near Maxton. In 1841, along with his brother Robert, he emigrated to Canada, settling in Gloucester Township, Ontario. He returned to Scotland, married Jane Bell in Craeling Parish in 1844 and emigrated permanently in 1845, bringing his mother and sister Janet. He purchased land along with his brother, this being called Century Farm (now part of the Industrial Park on Stevenage Drive in Ottawa. His children were Margaret, William, Andrew, Elizabeth, James, Robert, Isabella Duncan and Sarah Jane. He was for a long time Superintendent of the East Gloucester Presbyterian Church. John (16th/17th C.) recorded in Raperlaw in 1619. He was listed among many Turnbulls and others, under Walter of Bedrule, who were accused of taking hay from Huntliehill. Since he appeared personally, he was not denounced as a rebel. John (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He is probably the John who married Janet Wright in Bedrule in 1691. James (b.1697) and John (b.1697), baptised in Bedrule, were probably his children. John (17th/18th C.) married Mary Young in 1705, the marriage being proclaimed in Bedrule and Minto Parishes. Probably the same John had several children baptised in Bedrule: Isabella (b.1706); Margaret (b.1708); Andrew (b.1711); Mary (b.1714); Robert (b.1716); and Isabella (again, b.1722). John (17th/18th C.) married Helen Mather in Bedrule in 1729. John (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included Bessie (b.1727), Janet (b.1730), Marion (b.1732), Thomas (b.1736), Margaret (b.1738) and Walter (b.1743). John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their children included Margaret (b.1768) and Isabel (b.1771). John (18th C.) resident of Kirkton.

Charles Lillico. His daughter Agnes was baptised in 1777.

John (d.1808) Hawick resident. He married Helen Reid, who died one day after him. He could be the John who witnessed a baptism for Walter Scott at Whitfield in Wilton Parish in 1772.

John (19th C.) Hawick resident, member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Margaret Symington in Wilton in 1807 and their children included: Thomas (1807–62), who died in Kelso; and Andrew (1809–c.73), who died in Nenthorn. John (19th C.) Hawick resident. He married Margaret Young and their son Robert was baptised in 1853.

Robert (17th C.) married Agnes ‘Willieton’ in Hawick in 1791. Robert (1818/9–76) son of William and Margaret Nichol who lived in at least Cavers and Castleton Parishes. There appears to be no record of his baptism. He worked as a farm labourer at Riddletonhill near Maxton. In 1841, along with his brother James, he emigrated to Canada, other family members following later. He settled in Gloucester Township, Ontario, where he and his brother purchased a farm; he also worked as a stone mason. He married Christina Kinmond and his children were Jane, Margaret, Isabella, Elisabeth, William, John, Jessie, Robert and Christina. Thomas (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax roll for Bedrule Parish in 1694. Probably the same Thomas married Janet Wright in Bedrule in 1691. His children, baptised in Bedrule, included Robert (b.1695) and Margaret (b.1700). Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Thomson and their daughter Janet was baptised in 1722. Perhaps the same Thomas had children William (b.1715) and Isobel (b.1719) baptised in Cavers.

Thomas (18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. He married Betty Shortreed and their children included Peggy (b.1788) and George (b.1790). Thomas (b.1831/2) from Berwick-on-Tweed, he was a railway engine driver. In 1861 he was living on Wilton Terrace. His wife was Agnes and their children included William and Thomas. Walter (17th C.) recorded on the Hearth Tax list for Bedrule Parish in 1694. He may be closely related to John and Thomas, who are also listed. Walter (18th C.) married Margaret Turnbull in Bedrule in 1730. Walter (b.1819) born in Hobkirk Parish, he was a butcher in Lilliesleaf, probably on the north side. He was listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Eliza Davidson (from Mertoun) and their children included: Agnes; Alexander (b.1849); Jane (b.1851); and William (b.1853). William (1652/3–1720) tenant in West Lees. His wife, Janet Turnbull, died in 1719, aged 55. They are buried in Bedrule kirkyard. He is probably the William listed in the 1694 Hearth Tax records under the Laird of Newton’s farms in Bedrule Parish. He may be the William who married Isabel Rutherford in Bedrule in 1691, and whose children included Walter (b.1691), Thomas (b.1693), Walter (again, b.1696), James (b.1698), William (b.1702), John (b.1705) and Bessie (b.1708). William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He could be the son of William Lillico born in Abbotrule in 1665. He was hird at the Flex in 1700 and in 1709. He married Isobel Rutherford in Bedrule in 1691. Their children included: Andrew (b.1691); Margaret (b.1700); William (b.1702); James (b.1703); Agnes (b.1705); and Isobel (b.1709). The witnesses in 1700 were William and Francis Henderson, smiths at the Flex and in 1709 were James Gray in Whitlaw and William Henderson, younger in Flex. William (18th C.) married Jean Ferguson in Bedrule in 1756. William (18th C.) married Elspeth Beattie in Castleton in 1763. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included Marion (b.1766), Janet (b.1770), Sarah (b.1772), an unnamed child (b.1774) and William (b.1776). He is probably the William who married Jean Aitchison in Hobkirk Parish in 1770 (but then must have had an earlier wife also). William (d.c.1832) resident of Castleton, Cavers and Bedrule Parishes. He was living at Bedrule Mill in about 1829. His wife was Margaret Nichol, the couple being rebuked for their first child being born in fornication. Their children included: Janet (1800–80), baptised in Castleton Parish, who emigrated to Canada with her brothers and became matron of a home for orphans; William (b.1802) also baptised in Castleton; Adam (b.1812), baptised in Cavers; James (1815/6–99), who emigrated to Canada in 1841; and Robert (1818/9–76), who emigrated with his brother. He was already dead in 1841 when his wife, 3 children and 2 grandchildren emigrated to Canada. An entry in the Bedrule Parish records shows his widow being giving some of the poor money. William (1782–1861) son of Alexander and brother of Douglas. He became shepherd at Gatehousecote and later Templehall. In 1841 he was recorded as an agricultural labourer living with his family at South Berryfell and in 1851 was shepherd at Dodburn. By 1861 he and his wife were living at Burnflat in Hawick. In 1814 in Hobkirk Parish he married Christian (or perhaps Katherine) Telfer, who was from Newcastleton; she died in 1873.
Lilliesleaf

Lillie (li-lee) n. Andrew (18th/19th C.) recorded as Blakehope in Castleton Parish on the 1797 Dog Tax Rolls.

Lillielaw Park (li-lee-law-pawrk) n. former name for a piece of land in Minto Parish. It was ‘Lillilaw park’ in 1779, when valued at £72 19s 8d and liferented by Robert Trotter of Bush. It lay to the north-west of the Minto-to-Jedburgh road, bounded by Craigend farm, Cleuchhead farm, Spout Burn Park, the Minto-to-Jedburgh road and Minto Glen garden. It was still listed in the Land Tax Rolls of 1811. A cottage called ‘Lillylaw’ is still marked there on modern maps.

Lilliesleaf (li-leez-leef, lilz-le) n. village about 8 miles north of Hawick, and also the name of the associated parish, part of Roxburghshire. The village was once known as ‘Easter Lilliesleaf’, to distinguish it from the Wester part, which was associated with the Barony of Riddell. The Riddells of that Ilk long held lands there, with an early document naming specific places in the early 13th century. The Barony of Lilliesleaf was owned by the Diocese of Glasgow from at least the early 12th century until the Reformation. The village once held several fortified houses, the largest being a 2-storey tower at the eastern end of the village, part of the walls of which still existed until about 1810. The moors around the village held many ‘conventicles’ in the late 17th century, and was the scene of several skirmishes with the dragoons. John ‘sleich’ and Alexander Alemoor are recorded there in 1502. A charter of 1595/6 lists men granted land within the village being Walter Riddell of that Ilk, William Riddell of Bewlie, Archibald Douglas in Friarslaw, William Riddell in Greatlaws, Alexander Hogg, Thomas Young, William Smail, John Hogg, Thomas Bairnsfather, James Hill, James Henderson, Alexander Smail, Adam Smail, William Robson, William Middlemas, William Douglas and John Redford. The feuars lands were valued at £1 283 15s (exclusive of Walter Scott of Chapel’s share) in the 1643 county valuation. Additionally in 1643 Walter Scott held lands valued at £200, Walter Riddell was portioner of ‘20 soums’ valued at £60 and 4 acres at £26, and Alexander Hood held £10. The feuars lands were valued at £800 in 1678. In 1694 the residents recorded there were Andrew Davidson, William Leithead, Andrew Riddell, Andrew Gray, Thomas Smail, David Gray, Alexander Smail, James Leithead, Thomas Marshall, William Mason, Robert Leithead, Walter Davidson, James Riddell, James Redford, James Hill, John Scott and William Henderson, along with merchant John Smail, smith John Wright, cooper John Glendinning and wrights Walter Leithead, John Smail and James Leithead. The 1797 Horse Tax Rolls records the horse owners there as John Cochrane, John Anderson, Andrew Redford, John Muir, Robert Stirling, Andrew Riddell, James Lunn, William Grieve, John Hislop, John Kid, James Stirling, Thomas Chisholme, John Scott, James Hogg and James Easton. In the 19th century there were weavers there working for Hawick manufacturers. The village consists largely of a single street, and has many 18th and 19th century buildings. The present church was built in 1771, with later additions, and the graveyard contains the remains of the Riddells of that Ilk. A war memorial, made of Doddington stone and designed by J.P. Alison, was erected after WW1. A schoolhouse was built in 1822 as well as the ‘Currie School’ for girls in 1860, and the village still has its own primary school. The Common of Lilliesleaf was divided among the feuars and heritors in 1701/2, and only a few acres remained by the early 19th century. There is a multi-purpose building, Currie Memorial Hall. The Plough Inn and the Cross Keys are the local pubs, although there were 4 public houses in 1834. The village was the very first destination for a Ride-out in 1891. It became a regular location for many years, ending in 1984, but revived again in 2004 and 2005. ‘Voices from Lilliesleaf: Life and Work in a Scottish Borders Village During the Twentieth Century’ (2015) was written by Ian MacDougall, based on interviews with locals – ‘And where around lang Lilliesleaf With lavish hand is flung A wealth of grace more dear to me Than aught that ere was sung’ [FL], ‘Drown the echo of aged 81. Their children included: Helen (b.1815); Alexander (b.1816), who was at Ladfield in Oxnam Parish in 1851; James (b.1818); Isabella (b.1820); Elizabeth (b.1823); Christian (b.1825); Helen; William (1827–95); Elspeth (1830–1903); and Andrew. The family are buried in Wellogate Cemetery. William (b.1827) born in Hobkirk Parish, son of William. He was a shepherd at Wormscleuch in 1861 (also spelled ‘Lillico’, ‘Лиллико’, ‘Lillicow’ and ‘Lillico’).

Lilloco’s (li-lee-köz) n. tobacconist’s shop at 3 High Street in the 20th century. The property was previously a bicycle shop. Note that there have been members of this family in the Hawick area for centuries. Helen Lillico was wife of Walter Turnbull of Bedrule around 1600, and there were Lillicos farming in Bedrule Parish from at least the late 17th century.

Lilliesleaf (li-leez-leef) n. farm in Rivonia on the outskirts of Johannesburg, presumably named after the local village. It hit the headlines in 1963 when it was raided by South African police and a number of ANC leaders were captured. The house had been the group’s hide-out for about 2 years. Nelson Mandela himself was captured separately (at Howick!) in the KwaZulu-Natal Midlands and the whole group were put on trial, leading to ‘Rivonia’ and ‘Lilliesleaf Farm’ becoming internationally synonymous with the suppression of black resistance in South Africa. In 1991, after his release from prison, Mandela spent some time scouring the suburbs for the farmhouse and finally located it. In 2001 the Lilliesleaf Trust was set up to turn the farmhouse to turn the site into a museum and conference centre.

Lilliesleaf (li-leez-leef) n. Adam (13th C.) witness to a grant of lands at Cresswell in H assendean. This was probably in the late 1220s. His name is given as ‘Ada de Liliesclive’. It is unclear how he might have been related to Stephen or other nearly contemporary men with the same designation. Alexander (12th/13th C.) son of Walthof. He witnessed a grant in the period 1185–1215 by Geoffrey the cook of Whiton to the hospital of Jerusalem at Torphichen. He also witnessed the confirmation of this grant by Patrick Riddell and another grant of lands in Whitton by Patrick (who was thus surely related). He further witnessed the grant of lands in Haddington by William of Lilliesleaf to Melrose Abbey, also in 1185–1215. Probably the same Alexander was the father of this same William, who was mentioned in other charters for Walter of Riddell and Adam of Durham in the early 1200s. Geoffrey (12th/13th C.) son of Walthof and brother of Alexander. His name is also written ‘Gaufrid’. In about 1200 he granted 3 oxgangs of lands in Whiton to Melrose Abbey. This was confirmed by Patrick of Ryedale and then Eustace of Vescy in the early 13th century. There was also separate confirmations of grants to Melrose Abbey of 4 oxgangs of land in Whiton and then 13 acres and half a parcel of land in Whiton in the period 1195–1207. In the period 1185–1215 he witnessed a grant for William of Lilliesleaf. It seems likely that the designation ‘of Lilliesleaf’ (and the connection to Whiton) meant that he was directly related to the Riddells of that Ilk. John (12th/13th C.) Rector of Lilliesleaf in the late part of the 12th century and until at least 1204. He was recorded as ‘Master’ in the period 1201–05 when he witnessed a grant of lands in Clifton in Roxburghshire to Melrose Abbey. Sometime in the period 1182–96 he settled a dispute over the teinds of the lands in Roxburghshire previously belonging to Ulkill Wallace. He was also probably the ‘Master J., Rector of Lilliesleaf’, referred to in a papal letter of 1204. He could be the John, brother of Simon, Parson of Lilliesleaf, who may be the same as John of Huntingdon, who was clerk of Bishop Jocelin of Glasgow. It is also possible he was son or other close relative of Walter of Lilliesleaf, recorded about 25 years earlier. John (13th C.) recorded as ‘Johan de Lillesclifi’ in the county of Roxburgh when he signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. It seems reasonable to assume that he was related to the earlier John, Rector of Lilliesleaf. His seal showed an 8-rayed figure and the name ‘S’IOHIS D’LELISCL’. He is probably the ‘Johanne, de Lillisclief’ recorded in a charter of Spronston in 1320/1. John (13th C.) recorded as ‘Johan de Lillesclyne’ in the county of Peebles when he signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. It is possible that this was the same man as the John in Roxburghshire, if his name is entered twice. Richard (15th C.) recorded as ‘de Lylliscleue’ in 1436/7, when he resigned the lands of Lilliesleaf to his superior ‘Mungo de Redale’ (Riddell probably). Simon (12th/13th C.) Rector of Lilliesleaf. Sometime in the period 1204–07 he witnessed a charter establishing the Church of Hassendean. His brother John was also a witness, and it is possible he was the man who was formerly the Rector of Lilliesleaf. They may have been part of the Riddell family, who were the superiors of the lands of Lilliesleaf at that time. Stephen (12th/13th C.) recorded as ‘master, clerk, persona’ in 1204 when he witnessed an agreement between the Bishop of St. Andrews, Durham Cathedral and Coldingham; he was there ‘Stephano de Lilleslif’. He was also witness to a document relating to Soutra Hospital in around the 1220s. He is there recorded as ‘Stephano de Lilleslve’. This may be the same man who held the churches of Borthwick (in Mid-Lothian) and Nenthorn, and who was possibly son of John of Lilliesleaf. He does not appear to have held the church of Lilliesleaf himself. His name occurs no fewer than 42 times in the early 13th century, but disappears by 1227. Stephen (13th/14th C.) mason, listed in an account of wages paid at Linlithgow Castle in 1302. It seems likely he was related to the earlier Stephen. Thomas (d.1222) Parson of Lilliesleaf, recorded in 1222. He succeeded as Archdeacon of Glasgow, but died the same year. Walter (12th C.) Chaplain and Clerk who witnessed the confirmation of the church of Loquhariot in Midlothian in the period 1147–51. In about 1162 he witnessed a grant of the Church of Linton, where he is ‘Galtero’. In a document of 1177/8 regarding a dispute involving Kelso Abbey it seems clear he was a clerk of Jocelin, Bishop of Glasgow. He was not Chaplain of Lilliesleaf, but surely took his designation from there. Waltheof (12th C.) father of Alexander and Geoffrey, also written ‘Waldeve’. He is mentioned in a charter of around 1200. ‘Waltheof’ could be the same as ‘Walter’, and it seems likely (given the connection with Lilliesleaf and Whitton) that he was part of the family of Riddell of that Ilk. William (12th/13th C.) recorded in the period 1185–1215 when he granted lands in Haddington to Melrose Abbey. His name is recorded as ‘Willelmus de Lillesclif’.

Witneses included Alexander and Geoffrey, sons of Waltheof of Lilliesleaf, who were presumably related to him. His seal bore a monk-like figure holding a crozier and the words ‘SIGILLUM WILLELMIT’. William (13th C.) son of Alexander, recorded as witness to a charter for Walter of Riddell in the early 1200s. He is also mentioned in a document in the period 1214–49 when Matilda Corbet resigned her lands in Lilliesleaf ‘except the land of William son of Alexander’. He also witnessed the confirmation of the gift of lands in West Lilliesleaf to Melrose Abbey in about the same period.
the Riddells of Muselee and the Stewarts of Hermiston. A manse was built in 1821, with glebe lands of about 11 acres. Tax was paid on 17 windows at the former manse in 1748. The new church was extended in 1883, and had a nave and square bell-tower added in 1910, under Rev. Arthur Pollock Sym. A triple-arched apse was the added, to designs by J.P. Alison in 1909. It also has a stained glass by W. Wilson. In 1916 a stone panel with an incised sun-dial was added, probably originally from the older church. The church contains a red sandstone font, which may be as old as the 14th century; at some point it must have been rolled down to the churchyard, and was not moved back up until 1883, when it was built into a wall, and 30 years later moved into the new apse. There was also a Relief (or Burgher) church set up in the village in the early years of the 19th century. There were formerly additional chapels in the Parish at Chapel (the site later called Chapel Farm), Hermiston and Riddell (near Riddell Mill). The parish was linked with Ashkirk in 1654, with Bowden in the period 1797–94 and with Ancrum from 1994. Since 1999 it has been linked with Ancrum, Eckford and Crailing. The oldest existing communion token is of lead and round, bearing the inscription ‘Lil. K.’ and the date 1796. A roll of the ministers of the Parish is: Uchtred c.1160; Walter, Chaplain 1174; J[ohn], Rector c.1190; Idel, Chaplain c.1201; J[ohn], Rector 1204; Simon, Rector c.1206; Stephen c.1220s; Thomas, Parson 1222; William of Rutherford, Parson 1296; Robert Turnbull, Rector c.1460–80; John Brown, from 1480; Thomas Riddell, Clerk until 1514; George Riddell, Clerk 1514–22; John Riddell, Clerk from 1522; Thomas Duncanson 1568–75; Archibald Simson 1575–82; Thomas Wilkie 1588–c.1638; William Wilkie 1640–71; John Chisholme 1674–89; Matthew Cooper 1691–95; William Hunter 1695–1736; Robert Riddell 1737–60; William Campbell 1760–1804; James Stalker 1805–16; David Baxter 1816–42; Adam Gourlay 1842–81; Robert Blackstock 1881–88; Arthur Pollock Sym 1888–1928; James McKenzie 1929–61; Ewan S. Trail 1961–69; Henry M. Jamieson 1969–76; Thomas W. Donald 1977–87; James Watson 1988–94; W. Frank Campbell 1999– (the lands of ‘Lilsie-chapell’ are recorded in 1601 and ‘K. of Lilsly’ is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Lilliesleaf Library (li-leez-leaf-li-bru-ree) n. library established in about 1818 in Lilliesleaf. It was stocked with books that had been donated or purchased by the fees of subscribers.

Lilliesleaf Limited (li-leez-leaf-li-mi’-eed) n. company set up recently by Sir Walter John Buchanan Riddell, Baronet of Riddell.

Lilliesleaf Mill (li-leez-leaf-mil) n. former corn mill in Lilliesleaf Parish, probably an alternative name for one of the mills near there, most likely Riddell Mill. In about 1530 William Scott in Ashkirk sold the rights to half of the mill for £40 Scots to his brother Walter. John Riddell was there in 1580. It was confirmed to the Riddells of that Ilk in 1595/6. Simon Riddell was there in 1618. The Earl of Roxburghe was superior in 1643, when the lands were valued at £104; however, it was also listed is part of the possessions of Sir Walter Riddell, valued at £172 in 1643, with a feu duty of £5 and mill teinds (held by the Duke of Roxburghe) at £104. Walter Riddell paid the land tax on ‘Lilliesleaf and for the mylne thereof’ in 1678, when the total value was £407 15s, the mill itself being valued at £167. 2 cottage-lands there were inherited by Andrew Riddell of Haining in 1696. It is ‘Lilias-leaf-mill’ in 1684 when Richard Turner was tenant. John Haliburton was there in 1694. The lands were still valued at £104 in 1788 and owned by the Duke of Roxburghe. James Crawford was tenant in 1787, James Hogg in 1797 and James Lambert in 1825 (it is ‘the mylne of Lylisle’ in 1580, ‘Lillisie Mylne’ in 1618 and ‘Lilislefinyln’ in 1694).

Lilliesleaf Moor (li-leez-leaf-moor) n. area to the south-west of Lilliesleaf village. A spot about 3½ miles from the centre of the village was regularly used for conventicles in the 17th century. It is said that the dragoons came upon the field meeting one Sunday in about 1676, but meeting resistance from the attendees, they fled. It may be that this was the local common, which was divided up among neighbouring farms. Parts of the lands there, once belonging to Chapel and Easter Lilliesleaf farms, were owned by Col. Edgar Hunter of Linthill and acquired by the Riddells of that Ilk (also written ‘Muir’).

Lilliesleaf Moss (li-leez-leaf-mos) n. boggy area to the south of the east end of Lilliesleaf village, known locally as simply ‘The Moss’.

Lilliesleaf Parish (li-leez-leaf-pa-reesh) n. parish in northern Roxburghshire. The parish was historically bounded by Selkirk, Bowden, Ancrum, Minto, Wilton and Ashkirk. The Parish had a church from at least 1116 and this belonged to the See of Glasgow until just before the Reformation. It was formally removed from Glasgow’s control in an act of 1641. Part of the lands were granted by David I to the monks of Kelso Abbey.
about 1160. A charter of Pope Eugenius in 1440 revokes the union of the church there (union with what is unclear), then another charter of union by Pope Sixtus IV in 1479. Presumably the lands originally formed an estate. Robert ‘de Lillis- cleue’ is recorded resigning the lands to ‘Mungo de Redale’ in 1436/7. In 1643 the total value of the Parish was recorded as £8325 18s 4d; the ‘Parsonage Teinds of the parish’ were listed as £1397, with ‘Stipend’ of £333 6s 8d. However, the teinds of the Parish were separately listed at £94 (perhaps sterling) in 1643, when they were held by the Duke of Roxburghie. In 1649 the land and crops of the Parish were valued at about £7700. In 1678 the total rents were valued at £8265 18s 4d, including the Kirk lands and teinds valued at £1257 13s 4d (and owned by the Earl of Roxburghie). The moors were frequently used for ‘field conventicles’ in the 17th century. The patronage of the Parish Kirk went to the Kers of Roxburghie after the Reformation. It is stated in 1834 that older residents could remember when there were 14 towers in the Parish. At the end of the 18th century there were 17 heritors, 630 inhabitants, 14 weavers, 13 joiners, 2 coopers, 11 tailors, and 4 licensed houses. There are Parish registers dating from 1737 (those from back to 1648 apparently became damp and decayed). A book ‘The Parish of Lilliesleaf’ was written by Rev. Arthur Pollock Sym in 1913, while Rev. James McKenzie wrote articles for the Transactions in the 1940s and an oral history project was published in 2015.

Lilliesleaf Schuil (li-leez-leef-skil) n. school in Lilliesleaf, existing since at least the early 18th century. Patrick Nichol was recorded as schoolmaster there in 1634. There were more than 40 pupils in the 1830s. The master there over 1805–50 was George Scott, and in the 1860s was James W. Mackay. There was a school-house built in about the 1820s. The present building was constructed in 1962 and extended in the 1990s. The pupils from the modern primary school attend Selkirk High School.

lilt (lilt, lil’t) v., poet. to sing cheerfully, to trill a tune without singing the words, figuratively applied to birds, running water etc. – ‘As arm in arm we walk’d alang, The mavis liltit up his sang’ [JoHa], ‘...thay chye owt for joy, thay lilt alsua an’ sing’ [HSR], ‘The mavis, lintie and laverock lilt Their love lays in cadence sweet’ [TK], ‘May you ever, happy river, lilt your joyous song’ [WL], to trip, jog, skip, n. cheerful singing, lively song – ‘O blythe is the lilt o’ his ain mither tongue’ [WS], ‘Oh kindly is the Teviot tongue, Her lilt is aye sae bonny’ [RH].

lilfit (lilt-tee’, -ti’) pp., arch. celebrated in song – ‘Poor Sally Gray, and Geordie Gill, Are lilfit here on ilka hill’ [JR], ‘The form -eet is employed for the ending of the preterite and past participle of weak verbs, e.g. lilteet (= lilted), sterteet (= started), etc., etc.’ [ECS].

Lilyot’s Cross (li-lee-t-thee-s-kros) n. place near Muirhouselaw in Maxton Parish, where March Days were held in the 14th century to sort out Border feuds. Its name is the origin of the ‘Maiden Lilliard’ legend.

lily o the valley (li-lee-o-thu-vaw-lee) n. Convallaria majalis, native flowering plant with large green leaves and small, white, bell-shaped flowers. It is traditionally worn at the ‘Kirkin’ of the Cornet. The origin of this custom is unclear, but since the Kirkin itself dates only to the 1880s, there is no reason to believe that the wearing of this flower is an ancient custom. It is also known as ‘Our Lady’s Tears’, with a connection to Mary and hence St. Mary’s Kirk. In religious paintings it symbolised humility.

Lilylaw Ludge (li-lee-law-ljuj) n. name for the southern end of the Minto estates. It is still marked on the Ordnance Survey map, at the southern end of the Minto Craigs woods (also written ‘Lillilaw’).

lilyoak (li-lee-ak) n., arch. lilac, Syringa vulgaris (applied to the shrub or the flower).

lime (lim) n. a substance made by heating and then crushing limestone, used to improve soils for agricultural use. This practice became widespread in the 18th century, leading to the development of rural locations where limestone was quarried and burned on site, such as Limekilnedge and at Larriston. Lime was later used in the building trade.

Limekilnedge (lim-kiln-ej) n. area near the highest section of the road to Newcastle upon Tyne, which was formerly part of the drove road to Liddesdale, important for the coal from Plashetts that was brought over by pony. The summit, with a triangulation pillar, reaches 430 m (1182 ft). The name derives from the former lime-workings there, sometimes called ‘Stobs Limery’, with quarries and some ruined kilns still visible. James Ashcroft was a lime burner there in 1841, Andrew Elliot was based there in the 1850s and William McDonald in 1861. In the early 1860s there were a large number of labourers (plus support people and family members) living in huts there, while working on the nearby tunnel; 71 people are listed on the 1861 census. It was described as a village in an 1868 directory – ‘Frae Limekilnedge to Teviot. The rovin hills sae green ...’ [WL], ‘...And lang or the birds leave the hedge, I’ll stride owre the Limekilnedge’ [WL] (also sometimes ‘the Limekilnedge’; it is marked as ‘Lynkill hedge fells’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Limekilnsyke (lim-kiln-syk) n. former cottage near Langburnshields in Rulewater.

Limekilnwud (lim-kiln-wud) n. former lands in Jedforest, probably near Limekilnsyke. It is listed as ‘Lynmyklywod’ along with Ferniehirst in the Exchequer Rolls of 1538 and 1539. ‘Edwarde Ollyver of Lynmyklywood’ is listed among Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII in 1544.

The Limes (thin-limz) n. Victorian house formerly overlooking Wellfield, now on Raeson Park, also once known as ‘Viewfield’. It was the home of the Blenkhorns in the 1880s, and later of William Boyd Sime and Robert G. Maxwell. There is some confusion over whether this was also a former name for Sillerbuthall House.

li-mur (adj.) n., arch. a lame person, cripple – ‘Nor was A tewd or A’d naether bumberland, brizz, bate, nor blusht-bit ti play the limm an gar iz humple or turn lameter’ [ECS], ‘Ti play the limm = to mar; destroy; spoil’ [ECS] (also written ‘limm’). Limie Sike (li-mee-syk) n. small stream that rises near the Nine Stane Rig and flows to the south-east to join Roughley Burn.

Limieleuch see Lymiecleuch

Limie Sike (li-mee-syk) n. small stream that joins the south side of the Borthwick Water to the west of Eilrig farm.

lim (lim) n., arch. a lame person, cripple – ‘And limmer an lither’ [ECS], suppile, pliant – ‘Often used when referring to boots, when it signifies pliable in the sense of yielding, giving comfort’ [ECS], (the b is sounded; noted by E.C. Smith, suggesting it was more prevalent locally than in standard English).

limmer (li-nur) n., arch. a lowly fellow, rascal, scoundrel, rogue – ‘But what gard thou steal the laird’s Jock’s horse, Fala, &c. And limmer, what gard thon steal him, quo’ he’ [CPM], ‘...Till oot again the looupin’ limmer’ [JBS], ‘Tam said, for aughts that he cou’d hear, She was a wanton limmer’ [JoHa], ‘Did ye ever see sic a limmer?’ [WNK], ‘His een grew bricht, and his senses dimmer, And noucht wad please till the saucy limmer ...’ [WL] (from French).

Linden Park

Linden Park (lin-deen-kre-sin’, -din-) n. street built in 1893 and named after Linden Park. It is a road with a tight bend joining St. Ninian’s Road with the ‘Killin Hoose Brae’.

The Linden (thin-lin-deen) n. Havick Linden, a ‘junior’ rugby team, formed in 1921, and playing in the Borders District League. In 1963 they joined with the Trades in renting facilities at the Volunteer Park. Their strip consists of a royal blue shirt and socks. A history ‘Roots and Branches’ was written by B. Russell in 1997 (note the pronunciation).

Linden Crescent (lin-deen-kre-sin’) n. house built as the residence of Walter Laing of Dicksons & Laings, off the Denholm road past Trow Mill. The site previously held an ancient burial cairn, dug out to prepare the foundations. It was built in 1885, designed by John Guthrie and named after the Linden or lime trees that grew there. There were additions to the house, designed by J.P. Alisson in 1896. There was also a small lake on the grounds, with islands in it. The house was one of the first locally to be lighted by electricity. It also had an ornamental garden in a Chinese style, with pagodas and bridges crossing the pond. A folly built to resemble a ruined keep was also built on the grounds. The house was later home of Walter Laing’s son, manufacturer John Turnbull Laing. It is rumoured to have been the scene of a nighttime visit by a King in a horse-drawn carriage from Hassendean Station to visit his paramour. It burned down in 1921, with the then owner Harry Smith convicted of arson. It was demolished in the 1950s and replaced by a development of bungalows including Linden House, Greenskares and the Archery. A stone bearing a verse from ‘Lay of the Last Minstrel’, carved for the house in 1885, was moved to behind the War Memorial near the Museum in 1978 – ‘...bye auld Hornshole, – a street at the top of Lindescent, built in 1892

and named after Linden Park.

Lindisfarne (lin-diz-fawn) n. also known as Holy Island, the cradle of early Christianity in north-eastern England, established by St. Aidan, St. Cuthbert and St. Wilfred in the 7th century.
It can be reached by foot at low tide, and contains building work dating from every century since at least the 11th. Wilton (‘Wiltuna’) is probably first mentioned about 843 in a deed of Egred, Bishop of Lindisfarne. The whole of Teviotdale appears to have been attached to the Priory’s see until transferred to Durham, perhaps in the middle of the 11th century.

Lindisfarne (lin-diz-fawn) n. large house on
the Innes family, now split into 2 flats. It was built in the latter part of the 19th century, with architect John Guthrie.

Lindsay (lin-zee) n. Alexander of Dunrod (15th C.) held lands of Tofts in 1478, from the superior Archibald, Earl of Angus. This may have been the same as the lands in Kirkton Parish, although this is unclear. Andrew (14th/15th C.) son of William of the Byres and an unknown mother (he was probably illegitimate). He is probably the Andrew who was granted the lands of Stouslie and Groundistone by his father William in an undated charter, probably around 1390.

David (d.1490) son of John, he was 2nd Lord of the Byres. In 1484 he was Baron of Chamberlain Newton when he granted Over and Nether Newhall (later called Burnhead and Burnfoot) to James Scott of Kirkurd. In 1488 he witnessed the charter for the Barony of Branholme. He married Janet Ramsey, but died without issue.
He was succeeded as Lord Lindsay by his brother John. His seal bore a horizontal stripe with 3 stars. James (14th C.) granted the lands of Chamberlain Newton to William de Lindsay in about 1380. He was presumably Baron of these lands at that time, although it is unclear which James he might have been, and how he was related to William. Probably the same James wittnessed the confirming charter of lands in Ringwood to Melrose Abbey in 1381 (when he was described as grandson of King Robert II, who granted the charter). It is possible he was the Lord of Crawford, who witnessed the grant of Drumlanrig to William Douglas in the period 1384–88. James (d.bef. 1488) Rector of Hawick, perhaps from 1447, when it was made a canony and prebend of the Collegiate Church of Bothwell (St. Mary’s was described as the ‘Church of Hauwyc’). He was appointed by William, Earl of Douglas and Avendale, and described as his kinsman (3 separate Lindsays of Crawford had married into the Douglas family in the previous century). In 1470 he held the Rectory of Ben-holm (in St. Andrews Diocese) and swapped it with Gilbert Kennedy for the Canonry of Bothwell and Rectory of Hawick. There was also a dispute in 1470 over whether he really held an M.A. In 1476 it is stated that he was preparing to resign the benefices of Bothwell and Hawick and John Scott requested that he be given them by the Pope (although that does not appear to have happened). In 1480 he was Canon of the Collegiate Church of Bothwell and Prebendary of Hawick when he supplicated to the Pope to be allowed to hold 2 incompatible dignities. He was later Dean of Glasgow, taking over from Thomas Vaus in the mid-1460s. He may be the James of ‘Colbanton’, Rector of Douglas, secretary to the Earl of Douglas, who witnessed a charter granted by the Earl to William Cranston in 1443. He is probably the ‘James Lindissay, canon of Glasgow’ who wittnessed a notorial instrument in 1446/7 made at Newark in which Oswald Abernethy proclaimed that his only superior was the Baron of Hawick.
He is still recorded in 1487, and died shortly af-and a bird, with the words ‘S’ JOHIS DEI GRA. EPI. GLASGUE. AD CAS.’ John of Dunrod (14th C.) son of Sir James of Craigie. He owned the Barony of Langnewton. In 1360 he granted the lands of Langnewton to William Cochrane of that Ilk. John (d.1482) Lord Lindsay of the Byres, son of Sir William of Abercorn and the Byres. In about 1415 (after the death of his father) he had a charter for the Barony of Byres and other lands, which included Chamberlain Newton. He is recorded as Baron of Chamberlain Newton in 1444 in a charter for Borthwickshiel and in 1468 he is recorded granting the lands of ‘Stowislee’ (i.e. Stouslie) to John Turnbull. In 1471 the Lords decreed that Thomas Turnbull ‘of Faulishy’ should pay for 3 years of the ‘male of the landis of Chaumerlane Newtoune’. Also in 1471 he had a precept of sasine for lands in Borthwickshiel. He was High Justiciar of Scotland North of the Forth. He married Agnes, daughter of Robert Stewart, 1st Lord Lorn. He was succeeded in turn by his sons David, John and Patrick. His children included: David, 2nd Lord; John, 3rd Lord; Patrick, 4th Lord; Margaret, who married Walter Stewart, 1st Lord Innermeath and secondly married Henry Wardlaw (Baron of Wilton); Christian, who firstly married John, Master of Seton and secondly married Robert Cunningham, 2nd Earl of Glencain (who was Baron of Haeaddene); and Mariot, who married John Hay, 1st Lord Hay of Yester. He must have lived to be quite old. John of Wauchope (d.1505) from the ancient Dumfriesshire family, probably the 12th Laird. He was witness to a sasine for George Douglas, Master of Angus in 1499. He held the lands of Fiddleton and others prior to them being sold about 1506. He was fined for not appearing at the Justice-aire held in Dumfries in 1504, to give suit for his lands of Hoddam, Langrigs and Wauchope. In 1505 he was hanged at Dumfries for the murder of Bartholomew Glendinning and his brother Simon. Bartholomew was the local Sheriff on official business to ‘poind’ a third of the lands at the insistence of Margaret, widow of his father, John Lindsay. Thereafter his goods and lands were forfeited, although Wauchope was recovered by the family shortly afterwards. The lands in Ewesdale appear to have included Meikledale, Arkleton, Terrona, Flask, Howgill, Glendivain, Sorbie, Burngrains, Bush, Bliss and Wrae. John (15th/16th C.) listed in a letter of remission of 1510 for assisting rebels. He is named along with David Scott of Galalaw, plus John and Walter Scott. John (17th C.) among the men declared as fugitives in 1684 for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. He was a tenant in ‘Spittal-lands’. Patrick (1566–1644) son of John, related to the Lindsayss of Edzell in Angus. He was minister of Guthrie near Arbroath, and then St. Vigeans. He attended several General Assemblies, and was a strong supporter of the episcopalian views of James VI. He became Bishop of Ross in 1613 and then Archbishop of Glasgow in 1633. He must have temporarily held the superiority of lands in Minto, since in 1634 he gave a charter of confirmation for Barnhills to William Bennet. However, in 1638 he was disposed for urging his presbyters to use the ‘New Service Book’, and although ill he escaped to England and died in poverty in York. He was the last Bishop until the Restoration. Sir Simon of Arthuret (13th/14th C.) son of Sir John, Lord Chamberlain, who was the first of the Lindsayss to be granted lands in Wauchopedale. He is recorded in English documents of 1278/9 and 1281/2. He was appointed Captain of Eskdale by Edward I in 1298. His brother Sir Philip had fought with Edward against the Scots, but went over to Bruce’s side at Bannockburn. He himself was powerful on the English side, being effectively Warden of the Western Marches. In 1300 he was appointed as Keeper of the late John Wake’s lands of Liddel and Hermitage, separately referred to as ‘the fortresses of Lydel and Eremitage-Soules’ and ‘the castle of Hermitage, the mote of Lydel, and the lands of the valley of Lydel both in England and Scotland belonging to the late John Wake; this probably refers to the early castles of Liddel Strength and Hermitage. But he must only have held this position for a few years. He became a prisoner after Bannockburn and forfeited all his lands etc. However, his son Sir John received a charter of Wauchope from the King in 1321. His descendants held the lands until the end of the 17th century, and claimed to be the oldest representatives of the Lindsay Clan. Sir William (14th C.) granted lands including those of Borthwickshiel in the 4th year of the reign of Robert II (i.e. c.1375), the lands having been resigned by Laurence Abernethy. It is unclear which William he was, possibly William of Abercorn and the Byres, or William of Rosie and Logie. It is also unclear if the family ever had a direct connection with the Borthwick valley. In the 10th year of Robert II there was a confirming charter from James of Lindsay (presumably a relative) to him for the lands of Chamberlain Newton. Sir William of the Byres (d.1414) son of Sir William and Christiana Mure. He was granted lands in the Barony of Chamberlain Newton, including Stoulsie and Groundistone, by King David II ‘through forfeiture of certain lieges’. In an undated charter (probably around 1390, based on the witnesses) he granted Stoulsie and part of Groundistone to his son Andrew, while part had previously been infested to William Gourlay. He was also recorded as superior of the lands of Borthwickshiel. He married Christiana, daughter of Sir William Keith. He was succeeded by his son John, who was 1st Lord Lindsay of the Byres. William of Garmitlon (d.bef. 1468) resigned the lands of ‘Stowisle’ (i.e Stoulsie) in the Barony of Chamberlain Newton to John Turnbull. His relative John Lord of the Byres was Baron of Chamberlain Newton at the time. William (18th C.) cooper in Hawick. In 1724 he married Agnes Armstrong, who was also from Hawick. Their children included Adam (b.1728) and William (b.1732). Rev. William (b.1876) born in Coathbridge, he graduated in 1901 and became assistant minister at Shettleston and South Leith. He then became minister of St. John’s in Hawick 1906 and was translated to Newbattle in 1913. He was speaker at the 1908 Colour Bussing (formerly also spelled ‘Lindesay’, ‘Lynsey’s’, ‘Lyndseye’, etc.).

Lindsay’s Corner (lin-ze-z-k—nor) n. blind corner in Denholm, on the way into the village from Hawick. A shop there was run by the Lindsay family for most of the 20th century, first as a bakers and then a grocers. The business also used to have a van, which drove around the rural areas, this being particularly during WWII. Although the shop was sold in the 1990s, the popular name is still used.

line (lin) n. a note, authorization – ‘A got a line frae the doctor’, ‘here’s ma bookie’s line’.

Lineart Moss (li—murr—mos) n. boggy area on Hawick Common near Pilmuir farm, also called ‘St. Leonard’s Moss’. It was mentioned in descriptions of the Common in the dispositions given in 1767, where it is also referred to as ‘the Lincart’ (one name is presumably a corruption of the other).

lineen (li—neen) n., arch. a lining, an inside cover, ‘A guid lineen = a satisfying meal’ [ECS].

linen (li—nin) n. a cloth made from thread obtained from the fibres of the flax plant. In the 18th century and before, it was common for everyone to have their own small plot of flax or ‘lint’, which they would ‘swingle’ and ‘heckle’ to produce linen thread to weave into clothing. Linen weaving was formerly known at Haddo, Northhouse, Newbigging, Hawick Shiel and Denholm, among other places. There was also some linen industry in Hawick itself, with a weaving shop manufacturing linen checks from about the middle of the 18th century. A little later there was a factory making ‘inkle’ (or linen tapes), before hosiery took over. The cloth came in either the rawer green form, or was bleached and sold particularly at St. Boswells Fair. The last weavers of linen in the Borders were still active up until about the 1830s in the St. Boswells area (see also lining).

Linfit (lin—fit) n. former school in Yarrow Water, situated near the church in the settlement of Yarrow. The school had a good reputation and had many boarders in the early 1800s, with as many as 100 pupils (as describe by Rev. James Russell). This included Christian Scott from Todshawhaugh and Clement, Tom Brown from the Tower Inn in Hawick and the ‘Dandie Dinmont’ (i.e. Davidson) family from Liddesdale.

The teacher who made the school so well-known was James Scott, who served there 1784–1818. He too over from Alexander (‘Sandy’) Wilson.

ling (ling) n., poet. heather – ‘Ho! For the blades of Harden. Ho! for the pikes that cross. Ho! For the king of lance and ling – A Scott on theEttrick moss’! [WHO], ‘...He heard the whirl of the grousie’s wing And the drone of a bee as it lit on the ling’ [WHO], ‘Whaur the mists on the black hills hing, And the broon burns that, oot o’ the ling, The scent o’ the peat moss bring’ [WL], another species of sedge, e.g. hare-tail cotton-grass or deer’s-hair moss – ‘Alas! my muse she scarce can sing, She’s sapless as winter ling’ [JoHa].

lingle-backit (ling—gul—baw—kee, -ki) adj., arch. having a long, weak back.

lingle-end (ling—gul—end) n., arch. point of a waxed thread.

lingelt (ling—ul) pp., adj., arch. hanging in a clinging way – ‘The linglet tails o’ er skirt’ [GW] (also written ‘liglet’).
Linglie

Linglie (ling-kee) n. former farm over the Ettrick to the north of Selkirk and the name of the road there, as well as a nearby hill containing a linear earthwork. It was long owned by the Burgh of Selkirk. Robert Scott was tenant there in 1708 (note that it may sometimes be confused with Singlie).

Linhope (li-nup, lin-hop) n. farm between Teviothead and Moss paul, once owned by William Aitchison, who was long involved in local farmers groups. It was listed along with Frostylee and Phau in the possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1653, 1661 and in the marriage contract of Anne Scott of Buccleuch in 1663; these were united with lands in Wilton and others into ‘the tenement of Blackgraine’. However, it appears to have been in the Barony of Cavers when that superiorty was inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687 and by his brother Archibald in 1698. James Grieve was tenant of the Duchess of Buccleuch there in 1694. It was surveyed in 1718 when it covered 2669 acres and was bounded by Phau, Skelfhill, Gorrenberry, Billhope, Carewoodrig, Burnfoot in Ewes, Eweslees, Lynniecleuch and Blinks. William Little was there in 1724. John Elliot was there in 1733. It was leased from the Buccleuch Estates to John Elliot (of Borthwickbrae) and Walter Grieve (of Branxholme Park) in 1744. James Dickson was there in 1786. William Aitchison was recorded as farmer there in at least 1792–97, with William Grieve as a herd at the same time. William Little was shepherd there in 1861. The ‘Horn Brig’ lies just to the north, and on the hillsides near here can be seen the hollowed-out tracks of the old ‘Read Roads’. It is also here that the route of the Moss paul ride-out comes down the hill to meet the main road – ‘...braw, braw braes o’ Linhope and lofty Moss paul ’[T], ‘Little know you of our moss troopers’ might; Linhope and Sorbie true, Tundhope and Milburn too, Gentle in manner, but lions in fight’[ES], ‘The lasses o’ Lin’op are braw, An’ them o’ Moss paul they are bonnie; There’s Haz’lop an’ Fa’nashe an’ a’, Aul’ Commonside yields na to mony’[JoHa], ‘The lark ascends from Linhope’s verdant sward ... ’[IWS] (the name derives from Old English ‘hlynn hop’, meaning ‘the valley with the waterfall’; the name appears in 1604 as ‘Lennop’, ‘Lindhope’ in 1653, ‘Lenhope’ in 1661 and 1663, ‘Linhopie’ in 1687, then ‘Linhoip’, achieving its modern form by the end of the 17th century, but being ‘Linehope’ in 1718).

Linhope Braeheid (li-nup-bra-heed) n. former farmstead just south of Linhope, to the east of the A7. George Scott was shepherd there in 1851 and John Cairns in 1861.

Linhope Grain (li-nup-grän) n. former name for the small streams east of Linhope, which form the headwaters of the Frostlie Burn.

lining (li-ning) n., arch. linen, formerly used to make shirts and undergarments – ‘...28s. Scots for 3½ ells of sarking lyneing’ [BR1638] (many spelling variants exist; see also linen).

link (lingk) v., arch. to move with speed, skip, trip along, walk briskly – ‘A’ the day fu’ blithe and cheerie, I gaed linkin’ but and ben!’[JT], ‘...And they a’ gang a’ linkin’ To seek their Hogmanay’[JT], ‘In the bitter back end He will link doun the glen ...’[WL].

Linlithgow (lin-lith-go) n. town in West Lothian, between Edinburgh and Grangemouth, one of the 4 Scottish Burghs created by David I. They have been riding their marches since at least 1541. The festival is now held on the first Tuesday after the second Thursday in June, involves riding to Blackness, having a procession three times round the Cross, and has reciprocal ties with Lanark’s festival. Population (1991) 11,866.

Linlithgow (lin-lith-gō) n. James (16th C.) listed as a ‘grief’ (i.e. grieve) in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, when he was owed for his fee. It is unclear whether or not he was local. William (15th/16th C.) listed in 1526 among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Brancholme) pardoned for an attack on the Earl of Arran. His surname is given as ‘Linlithqw’.

Linlithgow measure (lin-lith-gō-me-shūr) n., arch. standard for measuring the capacity of dry goods, based on a standard of the boll kept in Linlithgow. This was used in Scotland from 1601, with the standard being about 145 litres for wheat, beans and meal, but about 212 litres for barley, oats and malt.

linn (luin) n. a waterfall, pool at the foot of one – ‘And now young Keeldar reach’d the stream, Above the foamy lin; The Border lances round him gleam, And force the warrior in’ [JL], ‘The only tongue that they might hear Was the lynne’s deep murmuring fa’’ [JTe], ‘The rill is now a raging flood, And roars adown the craggie lin’ [JTe], ‘...But aye, as yet, escap’d that linn Owre whilk sae mony fa’s’ [JoHa], ‘The burnie loups, wi’ fitfu’ din, Adown the linn sae craggie’ [JoHa], ‘The wee waterfa’ or the fifty-feet limn’ [HSR], ‘The brown trout lay at the leap o’ the linn Oaring the stream with a lazy fin’ [WHO], ‘...Dooon their ain romantic limns Is the fairest spot o’ a’’ [TK], a steep ravine, narrow gorge – ‘Lynn, two opposite contiguous cliffs or heughs covered with brushwood’ [JaS], ‘...That forms the linn where hazels twine With woodbine and with thorn’ [JJW] (from Old English; also spelled ‘lin’, ‘lynn’ and ‘lyne’; the former meaning occurs in place names such as ‘Robert’s Linn’, ‘Hawkhass Linn’ and ‘Penton Limns’, while the latter occurs in e.g. the ‘Leap Limns’, ‘Lynnwood’).

lint (lin’, lint) n., arch. flax, a small plant with blue flowers, Linum usitatissimum, formerly grown for its fibrous stems, which were prepared to make linen. Used either as animal fodder or for flax prepared for spinning. Formerly it was much grown around Hawick, with even each hind having his own plot. In the early 19th century a ploughman in Hobkirk Parish received a cupful of lint seed as part of his payment in kind. The cultivation of the plants and preparation of the lint was once a very labour intensive operation, with the stalks lying ‘nine nights’ in a pond or pit of water, then using a ‘break’ (or ‘breek’) to split the fibres, followed by the ‘swinging’ – ‘...Two stones of lint £7’ [BR1639], ‘Item whatsoever person that steillis any of their neighbours pettis, turfis, green kail, corne, lint, hemp, ...’[BR1640], ‘A party is fined for steeping lint in Teviot at the yard foots’ [JW1702] (from Medieval English, the word survives in Linthill near Lilliesleaf, Linthaughlee near Jedburgh, Lint Haughs near Denholm, and Lintdub Knowes near Harden).

Lintalee (lin-tu-lee) n. house about a mile south of Jedburgh on the banks of the Jed Water and formerly in the Jed Forest. It was residence of Sir James Douglas from around 1316 when he was Warden of the Marches. It is also the site of a battle where Douglas’ men defeated those of the Earl of Arundel in the Spring of 1317. Some were ambushed using intertwined birch branches in a narrow pass, perhaps at the Willowford Burn, where Sir Thomas of Richmont was killed. Another English group under a priest named Ellis was discovered feasting near Lintalee itself and also defeated. The Englishmen who escaped with tales of defeat convinced Arundel to turn his huge army South again. The manor house there continued to be used by the Lords of Jedforest into the 15th century. In 1457 it was given for the use of Andrew Ker of Cessford, Bailie of the Lordship. William Ker was recorded there in 1494/5. It was valued at 25 shillings in 1538 and also 1541, when the tenant was Ralph Ker. John Douglas was tenant of the Earl of Angus there in 1617, after the removal of James Ker. It was owned by the Marquis of Douglas in 1643 and 1678, when valued at £160. In 1694 it ‘Mr Thomas Sheill’ was taxed for having 10 hearths at the house there; this seems likely to have been the same man who was minister at Roberton Kirk. John Turner paid tax for 21 windows there in 1748. Archibald Douglas of Douglas was recorded as owner in 1788 (also known as ‘Linthaughlee’; it is ‘Lintalchlie’ in 1439, ‘Lintole’ in 1457, ‘Lyn-tounlee’ in 1493, ‘Lintole’ in 1517, ‘Lintolee’ in 1539, ‘Lintole’ in 1541, ‘Lintillie’ in 1617, and ‘Linthlauglie’ and ‘linthauglie’ in 1694; it is ‘Lyn-taly’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; the origin of the name is probably just ‘the clearing where flax grows’).

lint-brake (lin'-bräk) n., arch. a flax-breaking instrument – ‘Lint-brake. An instrument used for breaking or softening flax, in place of the fluted rollers of the flax-mill, previous to the operation of rubbing and swingling, Teviotd.’ [JoJ] (cf. lint-breek).

lint-breek (lin'-brek) n., arch. an instrument for breaking or softening lint before swingling (also written ‘lint-break’; cf. breek and lint-brake).

Lintdub Knowes (lin'-dub-nowz) n. hilly area just to the north of Harden House (the name is presumably from a marshy area where flax once grew).

Lintdykes (lin'-diks) n. former place name in Lilliesleaf Parish, recorded as ‘Lintedikes’ in the early 13th century when it was part of a grant from Walter of Riddell to Melrose Abbey. The lands had previously been held in dowry by Matilda Corbet.

lint-fever (lin'-fee-vur) n., arch. former name for a condition that people sometimes got when they were first involved in ‘swinging’ lint – ‘The first attempt at swinging was often accompanied by an illness called the Lint-fever, supposed to be owing to the dust entering the nostrils and eyes’ [JAHM].

Linthaugh (lin'-howf) n. former name for an area near the river in Denholm, where flax was steeped in the 18th century. It probably refers to the flat piece of land lying to the west of the mouth of the Dean Burn (also ‘Lint Haughs’).

Linthaugh (lin'-howf) n. former farm on the north side of the Ale Water, roughly opposite Synton Mill (marked on Pont’s c.1590 map and Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Linthauch’).

Linthaughlee see Lintalee

Linthill (lin'-hil) n. Victorian mansion between Lilliesleaf and Midlem, once home of the Homes. There is a walled garden nursery there. It may be that this was the same place once called Midlem Mill, with the main house rebuilt after having been sold by the Elliots in about 1756. The land was owned by Rev. William Hunter of Lilliesleaf in the early 18th century, when the part on the south side of the Ale, referred to as ‘Union Hall’, was united with Midlem Mill on the north side, the new estate being called Linthill, or ‘Linthills’. Dr. Hunter paid tax for 13 windows there in 1748. The estate may also at some point owned by the Kerrs of Cavers Carre. The estate was inherited through marriage by the Riddells of Camieston (a cadet line of the Riddells of that Ilk). The lands were valued at £171 10s in 1788, split between Union Hall (valued at £121 10s) and Ryechester and Quartersides (valued at £50). William Riddell sold it to William Currie in 1822, and Curries lived there through much of the 19th century. A plan of the estate from 1820 is in the National Archives – ‘And sweeter walks ane canna get Than walks by fair Linthill, Where murmuring soft the river sings To rose and daffodill’ [FL] (also written ‘Lint Hill’; it is ‘Lintheath’ on Roy’s c.1750 map).

lintie (lin'-ee, lin-tee) n. linnet, often used figuratively to suggest cheerfulness – ‘...And linties sang their tunefu’ lays Among the wuds o’ Teviotdale’ [JoHa], ‘Ye burnies poplin through the grove, Where cushats coo and linties sing’ [JoHa], ‘...he’s off to see if he can cage the lintie and bring her here’ [JEDM], ‘The hawk that built upon the rock, And the lintie in the shaw’ [HSR], ‘And the lintie in her mither’s throat, it’s cheerfu’ music still, Has socht a nest in the yellow gorse beside the murmirin’ Till’ [JYH], ‘The mavis, lintie and laverock lilt ...’ [TK], ‘I hear the linties in the whins Where Ettrick rins’ [JBS].

Lintinhaa (lin-tin-haw) n. lintinhall, former farmstead in roughly the same location as Stintyknowe (marked on Stobie’s 1770 map, and given the similarity of names, possibly an error).

Lintobank (lin'-u-bawng) n. former name for lands in Lilliesleaf Parish, near Riddell. Robert Wilson was recorded there in 1581/2. The name appears as ‘Lintobank tunc Riddell nuncupate’ in 1602 and appears to have replaced the earlier ‘Eschetho’. In 1636 it was a 4-pound land when inherited by Sir Walter Riddell of that Ilk and was still a 4-pound land when inherited by Sir John Riddell in 1669 (it was ‘Lyntophbank’ in 1581/2).

Linton (lin'-in, lin-tin) n. village and parish in east Roxburghshire on the Kale Water, north of Morebattle, famous for its Norman Church and legendary ‘worm’ (which, sadly only dates to the 17th century). The lands there were owned by the Somervilles in the early 15th century and by the Kers of Linton in the 16th and 17th centuries. An account of the parish was written by A.O. Mackie and M.J.H. Robson in 1960 – ‘The wode Laird of Laristone Slew the worm of Worme’s Glen, And wan all Linton parochine’ [T] (the origin is probably Old English ‘Ilyn tun’, meaning the farm by the lake, since much of the Parish was formerly under water; formerly spelled ‘Lyntoume’ and variants).

Linton (lin'-in) n. Adam (19th C.) cattle-dealer of Newton-muir. He was one of the earliest Linton’s Close

Trustees of Hawick Congregational (then Evangelical Union) Kirk, from about 1848. He may be the Adam who married Margaret Wood in Hawick in 1850. His wife Margaret and children Esther, Cecilia, John, George, Andrew and William are recorded at Newton Mains in 1851. Alexander (b.1818/9) born in Cavers Parish. In 1861 he was a shepherd at Allygrain. His wife was Jane and their children included Beatrice, John, Walter, Sarah and Jane. Andrew (b.c.1785) shop-keeper on the High Street. He is listed as a grocer in Pigot’s 1837 directory and a meal-dealer in 1841. In 1841 he was living at about No. 29, with his wife Margaret and children Jessie and Walter. He married Margaret Michie about No. 29, with his wife Margaret and children a meal-dealer in 1841. In 1841 he was living at the Linton Worm (thu-lin’-in-wu-rum n. mythical creature said to have lived in a cave at Linton Hill, near the village of Linton in the 12th century and slain by Somerville of Larriston. A carving over the door of Linton Church commemorates the event. It is also known as the worm of ‘Wormiston’ – ‘Pure blows the summer breeze o’er moor and dell, Since first in Wormiswood the serpent fell’ [JL].

Linton’s Close (lin’-inz-klöś n. passageway in the mid-19th century, next to the current Bank of Scotland, 7 High Street, named after a one-time owner of the property (there could be confusion with Sinton’s Close, since 29 High Street is marked ‘Linton’ on Wood’s 1824 map).

Lisle (li-ul) n. Robert (18th C.) from Acton in Northumberland. He purchased the Stonedge estate from William (or perhaps Thomas) Scott in the mid-1700s. However, he only paid the first installment, with the final settlement not taking place during the lifetime of the vendor. He sold it again to James Chisholme in 1793. Thomas Scott of Boucher was factor for him for a while. In 1788 (and continued in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls) he is listed as owner of the ‘Easter Division of Stonedge and Howa’ (excluding the parts sold to Elliot of Woollee), as well as the Wester Division, his lands being valued at £1191 2s 10d in 1788 (and £1187 14s 5d in 1811). Lithgow (lith-gow) n. Alexander (18th C.) recorded as ‘Mr’ in 1741 when he witnessed a baptism for workman William Graham in Hawick in 1741. He may have been son of Rev. Robert. Andrew (17th/18th C.) excise officer in Hawick. In 1716 he was rebuked by the Session for being involved in late night drunkenness at Thomas Huggan’s house. He apparently went to break up the fight between Huggan and William Oliver. He was witness to the ‘irregular marriage’ of fellow excise officer Thomas Hume of Hawick in 1718.

Helen (17th/18th C.) sister of Rev. Robert of Ashkirk and daughter of Alexander of Drygrange. She is said to have married James Anderson (although this could be confusion with a later James Henderson) and had 3 children: Thomas; John; and Jean, who married George Thorburn, smith in Ashkirk, whose grand-daughter married John Eckford, hosier in Hawick. Her nephew Hector Lithgow left a small fortune, which Eckford spent his life trying to prove a claim to. Rev. John (b.c.1620) son of Thomas, portoner at Redpath, Earlston and Isobel Haliburton. He moved from a charge in Ireland some time before 1646 to become minister at Ewes Kirk. In 1664 he refused to conform to Episcopacy and was deprived of his living. This happened ostentatiously, with the messenger delivering the Act of Suspension right after the Sunday sermon with the congregation still present. He moved to his property at Redpath near Leaderfoot (near where another outed minister, Henry Erskine, lived). He continued to preach at conventicles and in 1682 was fined 5000 merks and sentenced to imprisonment on the Bass Rock. However, he escaped this harsh punishment, on the promise of leaving the country, probably residing in England. He returned to Ewes in 1689 after the Revolution, was restored.
by Act of Parliament in 1690 and was also a member of the Assembly. He retired to Redpath in 1694. He married firstly Isobel Weir and secondly Isobel Scott, widow of James Johnstone of Westerraw. His children included: Thomas, with whom he owned land at Bodisbeck; and Janet, who married Nichol Elliot of Urrthank. Miss M. (19th C.) assistant teacher in Newcastleton in the 1860s. Rev. Robert (c.1680–1729) youngest son of Alexander of Drygrange and Margaret, daughter of Gavin Elliot of Grange. He had a sister called Helen. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1701 and became Chaplain to Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto (his uncle). He was licensed to preach by Edinburgh Presbytery in 1707, called to Ashkirk in 1710 and ordained there in 1711. He was described as a moving preacher, who was pious, judicious and possessing a great deal of ingenuity. In 1711 he performed the baptism for a son of Walter Scott of Woll, although it took place in Selkirk. He married Isabella Langlands (who was related to the Hawick and Wilton ministers of the 17th century), daughter of Robert Langlands of that Ilk, and she died in Edinburgh in 1740. Their children included: Alexander (b.1719), who married Helen Pope and served with the 42nd Regiment; Robert (b.1721), who became a wright’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1737; May (b.1723); Margaret (b.1726); Jean (b.1728); and Helen (b.1730) (also spelled ‘Lythgow’).

litster (lit-stur) n., arch. a dyer of cloth – ‘...the person of John Scott, litster ...’[BR], ‘...Jas. Scott, littest, lat baylyea in Hawick’[BR1694], ‘...and stuff petticoat which James Scott, litstor, or his son, dyed’[BR1697] (spelled ‘litstar’ and other variants).

Litster (lit-stur) n.  Henry (18th/19th C.) hind at Dykes. He married Margaret Rutherford in Ancrum in 1817 and their children included: Janet (b.1818); George (b.1820); and twins John and Henry (b.1822). The baptisms were performed before the Jedburgh Burgher Congregation and recorded in Cavers Parish.

litted (li-teed) pp., arch. dyed – ‘[Margaret Drummond was convicted of stealing] one ells of litted stuff’[BR1697].

litten (li-in) pp. lit, lighted – ‘after the fyre was litten oo didni feel is nithert’ (this is ‘lit’ or ‘lighted’ in standard English).

litter (li-u) n., arch. a carrier, particularly for bodies, probably a hand-barrow for carting the coffin – ‘...that in all time coming the Toun Litter when desired by any country people, they shall pay in to the Treasurer half a crown each time ...’[BR1722], ‘Received from mr Ogilbie of Tiendside for the litter ... 1 10 0’[BR1729], ‘Paid John Aitkin, cooper, for ye hooping of ye litter’[BR1736].

Little (li-, li-ul) n.  Adam (1754/5–1808) died at Larriston. He married Margaret Common, who died in Newcastleton in 1846, aged 95. Their children included: James (1794/5–1831); and 2 who died in infancy. They are buried in Ettleton Cemetery along with his sister Mary (1756/7–1816). Agnes (b.1821/2) from Berwickshire, she was a shopkeeper in Denholm in the 1850s. She lived on the Canongate. Andrew (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1623 as ‘Andro Lytle’ when Rowie Foster was found guilty of stealing a horse from the lands of Chapelhill. It is unclear if this was the local Chapelhill or another one. Andrew (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Moorfield. He is listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835. Andrew (19th C.) listed in 1852 as carrier between Denholm and Selkirk once a week. Andrew (19th C.) shepherd at Gorrenberry in the 1800s. His daughter Margaret married Alexander Turnbull, servant at Wolfelee. Ann (18th C.) cook at Dinlabyre in 1785, when she was working for William Oliver. Archibald (17th C.) resident of Denholm, listed in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls as ‘Elder’, with ‘younger’ (presumably his son) listed separately. He was taxed for 2 hearths, suggesting that he may have been a smith or in a related trade. Archibald (17th/18th C.) listed as ‘younger’ in Denholm on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. Archibald (17th/18th C.) ‘fowler’ in Hawick Parish. In 1720 he and smith William Young witnessed a baptism for Adam Brown ‘Headhouse’. He is probably the Archibald, son to William in Hawick, who in 1716 married Agnes Learmonth from Kelso. They had a child Janet baptised in 1720. Archibald (b.1778/9) tailor in Denholm, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He married Barbara Jamieson (from Selkirk), and their children included: Margaret (b.1805); James (b.1808); John (b.1811); William (b.c.1815); Crichton (b.c.1820); and Betty (b.c.1825). He was still alive in 1851 and was listed in a directory of 1852. Catherine (d.1829) servant of Dr. Graham in Hawick. Charles (18th/19th C.) resident of London who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He probably had a local connection, and may have been related to William, also of London. Charles (19th C.) listed as a baker on the High Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. He was probably related to James, also a baker listed in 1852. Cuthbert (17th C.) tenant at Sandholm in Castleton Parish on the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Dr. ?? (19th C.) Doctor in Hawick in the 1800s, of whom a portrait exists. He was referred to in a report on the cholera outbreak of 1832. Francis (17th C.) resident at Mangerton according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He must have been related to James, who was also listed there. G. (18th/19th C.) cooper in Castleton. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. George (19th C.) draper in Denholm in the latter part of the 19th century. George (1869–1957) born in Hawick, son of John and Janet Ekron. In 1896 he married Margaret Turnbull Deans (d.1921). Their children were: James Ekron (1897–1917), who served with the Royal West Kent Regiment and was killed in action at Ypres; Marion Nichol Deans (b.1899); Janet (1903–82), married John Wallace McLaings and Melrose’s. He became a marine en-gineer, working for John Brown & Sons, Clydebank and then the Cunard Line. In 1914 he was 3rd Engineer aboard S.S. Lusitania when it was torpedoed with the loss of more than 1000 lives. After 4 hours at sea, he was saved, but never fully recovered. He later worked on the R.M.S. Lusitania and died at the Marine Hospital, Green-wich. He left a wife and 5 children. Hamilton Borthwick ‘Hammy’ (1899–1960s) son of mas-ter tailor William and Annie Keir, he was born at 1 Weensland Road. He worked with the Ha-wick News, and joined the army in 1916, although under-age. He was wounded at the Somme, and received a discharge. He later set up his own printing business in Hawick. But he was best known as a singer, at the Common Riding, in the Hawick Operatic Society and around the Borders. He was official Common Riding Song Singer after 1918. He recorded ‘Meda’s Song’ and ‘O’ a’ the Airts’ on a 78 r.p.m. record. He moved his printing business to Langholm about 1945, but gave it up around 1952 to become a music teacher at Langholm Academy, retiring in 1964. He married Daisy Graham and they had one child, Helen. J. (18th/19th C.) listed at ‘junior’ at Clerkkleap in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’. James (17th C.) married Bessie Clerk in Robertson Parish in 1687. James (17th C.) resident at Mangerton according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He must have been related to Francis, who was also listed there. It is possible the is the James ‘ Lit-tlemilne in Mangertoun milne’ (with the extra ‘milne’ in error perhaps) whose will is recorded in 1683. James (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘ Poetical Museum’ (1784). James (18th/19th C.) farmer at Terrona according to both the 1797 Horse Tax and Dog Tax Rolls. James (b.c.1790) farmer in Denholm. In the 1841 census he is recorded around Leyden Road. His wife was Margaret and their children included Janet. He is probably the Denholm farmer recorded in 1815 among men accused of ‘mobbing and deforcing water bailifs’, but acquit-ted. James (b.c.1800) farmer at Whirrigg. He married Agnes Blyth. James (1809/10–53) Ha-wick High Street baker, born in Cavers Parish. He is listed as a High Street baker on Pigot’s 1837 directory. In Slater’s 1852 directory he is listed along with Charles, another baker, who was probably a relative. He is recorded at about 42 High Street in 1841 and 1851. He married He-len Deans, who died in 1849, aged 37. They are buried in Wellogate Cemetery. Their chil-dren included Margaret, Janet, Agnes, Robert, Francis and Agnes (again). James (b.1809/10) stock-maker in Denholm, probably living on Westside. He married Margaret Scott in 1836 and they had children Agnes, Barbary, Archibald and Adam. James (b.1814/5) mason in Denholm. He was son of mason William and Nanny. In 1861 he is listed there, unmarried, and probably living on the Westside. James (b.1820/1) born in Minto Parish, he was nephew of Archibald Robson. In 1861 he was a ‘propri- etor of houses’ at his uncle’s farm of Ashieburn in Acrum. In the 1860s he was recorded as a non-resident voter in Cavers Parish. James (19th C.) skinner in Hawick, recorded in 1872. James (17th C.) herd of Colterscleuch on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. John (17th C.) resi-dent at Gillfoot in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. John (17th/18th C.) tailor and merchant in Hawick. In 1713 he witnessed a baptism (along with smith Thomas Huntly) for William Bulloch. In 1723 (along with John Ekron) he witnessed another for shoemaker William Wright. In 1707 he married Isobel Elliot and their children included: Bessie (b.1708); Sara (b.1711); Bettie (b.1714); Isobel (b.1716);
Helen (b.1718), who in 1742 in Edinburgh married Charles Scott, sergeant in Col. John Price’s regiment; and James (b.1720). The witnesses in 1708 were ‘notar’ William Cunningham and tailor William Scott, in 1714 were Thomas Gray and Thomas Huntly and in 1720 were Thomas Watson (Clerk to the Regality) and merchant Adam Elliot. John (17th/18th C.) shepherd in Newmill. He married Jean, daughter of Thomas Falside, in Hawick Parish in 1717. He married Isabel Hall and their children included Margaret (b.1729). John (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His son Thomas was baptised in 1737. John (18th C.) recorded in Denholm in 1736 when he married Isabel Murray in Cavers Parish. He was also living in Denholm in 1737. His children probably included: Janet (b.1737); and John (b.1739). John (18th C.) farmer near Hermitage, recorded in 1749. John (d.bef. 1794) recorded at Burnfoot in Ewesdale on the 1792 Horse Tax Rolls. It was probably his widow who was listed at Burnfoot in 1797. John (18th/19th C.) flesher in Hawick. He paid the Horse Tax Rolls in Hawick in 1797. He married Jane Armstrong and their children included: Ann (b.1795), born in Langholm, who married Robert Hay and ran the Crown Inn in Hawick; and John (b.1797), born in Hawick, who may have married Elizabeth Clerk in Yarrow. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Colterscleeuch and other farms, recorded on the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was owner of 4 horses in 1797. He was additionally taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. John (18th/19th C.) mason in Denholm, recorded in 1784. He was also listed as a mason in Denholm on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 3 horses. His children included William (b.1782); Agnes (b.1784); Isobel (b.1788); George (b.1790); and ‘Aills’ (b.1793). He may also have been father of John (b.1774). John (d.1813) carrier in the Hawick area. In 1808 near Hawick he was ‘maltreated, and robbed of about £130 . . . about three miles from Hawick’. Never fully recovering his health, he died in Langholm. John (b.1789/90) born in Westerkirk Parish, he was teacher in Ewesdale. He was already schoolmast in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’. He was listed as a teacher living at Unthank in Ewesdale in 1841. In 1851 he was in the Schoolhouse and listed as ‘Parish Schoolmaster’. He was still Parish Schoolmaster in 1861, at the age of 71. His wife was Rachel and their children included Jane and James. John (18th/19th C.) merchant at Coldside in Liddesdale in the early 19th century. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. John (18th/19th C.) listed as being of ‘Know’ in 1825 when he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’. John (b.c.1763) joiner at Greena in Castleton Parish. He is listed there in 1841. John (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Roughley in Castleton Parish. He was listed among heads of households in 1835–41. John (b.1787/8) from Canonbie, he was a blacksmith in Newcastleton. His mother was probably Catherine. He was recorded as a blacksmith in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Pigot’s 1852 directory. In 1841 to 1861 he was living on Douglas Square. He was a registered voter in Castleton Parish in the 1860s. His cousin Robert Armstrong worked with him. John (b.c.1795) from Canonbie, he was at the Stitchellhill Lime Works in 1841 and proprietor of the Limekilnedge Lime Works in 1851. He married Isabelle Irvine and their children included: George, Thomas, John, James, Walter and Andrew. John (19th C.) cabinet-maker who married Jane, daughter of Provost Robert Miligan. He may be the apprentice cabinet-maker living with carpenter Andrew Scott at Myreslawgreen in 1861. John (19th C.) from Cavers Parish. In Hawick in 1840 he married Isabel Irvine. John (b.1800/1) mason in Denholm. In 1841 he was on Main Street and in 1851 on Sunnyside. He married Isabella Hilson and their children included Robert, Barbara, Isabella, Archibald, Eleanor, Betsy, Margaret, John and Walter. John (b.1816/7) mason in Denholm. In 1841 and 1851 he was on Westside. He married Helen Murray and their children included William, Thomas, Euphemia, James, Agnes, Isabella, Robert, John and George. John (b.c.1834) from Langholm, he lived in Hawick. He was a frame worker and lived at 14 Loan. In 1866 he married Janet, daughter of James Ekron and Margaret Thomson. The sureties were Walter Scott of Goldielands, James Gledstains of Cocklaw and James Langlands of that Ilk. He was declared a fugitive in 1578/9 for continuing to commit crimes. Matthew (18th/19th C.) owner of Demainholm (along with Robert Pott) according to the Land Tax Rolls of 1811. Mr. (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1618 when he was in the Tolbooth in Hawick. Scott of Buccleuch, the Sheriff of Teviotdale and Riddell of that Ilk were appointed to a commission to try him. His crimes (and forename) are unspecified. Mrs. John (18th/19th C.) recorded at Burnfoot in Ewesdale on the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. She was taxed for 2 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. She also paid the dog and clock taxes at Burnfoot in 1797. She was widow of John, who was listed there in 1792. Robert (17th C.) local man who married Bessie Murray. Their children Margaret (b.1648) and James (b.1650) were baptised in Hawick and their daughter Malie in Ashkirk in 1652. The witnesses in 1648 were Thomas Shiel and William Grieve and in 1652 were James Hastie and John Armstrong. Robert (18th C.) farmer in Yethouse in Liddesdale, recorded in 1748. Robert (1751/2–1823) died at Tinnisburn. He married Janet Murray, who died at ‘Rashill’ in 1830, aged 71. Their children included: Margaret (1792/3–1812); James (1795/6–1828), who died at Greens; and 2 children who died in infancy. Robert (1760/1–1802) died at Nether Larriston. His wife was Mary Scott and their children included: Isabella (1790/1–1808); and Thomas (1793/4–1820). They are buried in Ettleton Cemetery.

Simon of Meikledale (14th/15th C.) sometimes considered to be the first chief of his clan. In 1426 he had a charter confirmed by James I of an earlier grant by Robert, Duke of Albany. This was for the lands of ‘Senbigill’, ‘Meikildale’, ‘Kirkton’, ‘Sorbi’, ‘le Milnarland’, and ‘le Pullis’ in the barony of ‘Allarynock’ which had been resigned by Alexander Fraser of Ewesdale. He is thus be one of the earliest known Lairds in Ewesdale. Simon of Meikledale (16th C.) descendant of the earlier Simon. In 1499 he witnessed the sasine for George, Master of Angus being infefted in the Lordships of Eskdale and Ewesdale. In 1537 he had a charter of the lands of Meikledale in the valley of Ewes. The charter was witnessed by William Little, Burgess of Edinburgh and the following sasine by Andrew and Edward Little; these may have been relatives. Simon of Meikledale (16th C.) presumably son or grandson of the previous Simon. He is recorded in the comprehensive remission of 1585 for men of Dumfriesshire whose superior was Lord Maxwell (perhaps related to the raid on Stirling). He is listed as ‘Sim Litill, laird of Mekill, Daill’ and a large number of other Littles also appear on the list. Simon (b.1799/1800) from Westerkirk, son of Thomas, he was educated at Kirkton and Edinburgh. He was Schoolmaster at Teviothead from 1818 (effectively succeeding Tom Jenkins). He also acted as Registrar for the area. He was still recorded at Teviothead Schoolhouse in 1861. His wife was Helen and their children included Betsy, William and Isobella. He is buried in Teviothead cemetery, along with an infant child who died in 1832 (as well as Betty Little, 2nd wife of David Scott from Thornhill). He was probably related to the Kirkton Schoolmaster. He was still alive in 1871. Simon (b.1842) born at Kirkton, son of Thomas, schoolmaster at Kirkton, with his mother being Margaret Turnbull. He was ordained minister of Ballantrae and died unmarried at Lanark Manse. Thomas (16th C.) recorded in Langhope in 1579 when he was listed among the debtors to James Liddersdale, Burgess of Selkirk. Thomas of Meikledale (16th/17th C.) broke out of Selkirk jail in 1625, along with Robert Scott of Thirlestane, Gavin Elliot of Brugh and George Davidson of Kames. Thomas (d.1673) son of the Laird of Meikledale. His gravestone was once readable in Ewes Kirkyard. Thomas (18th C.) tenant in Rashiegrain. He married Isabel Beatie. Their children (baptised in Hawick Parish) included: Helen (b.1740); and Betty (b.1743). He may be the Thomas who hired the Hawick mort-cloth twice in 1758. Thomas (d.1799) weaver in Hawick whose death is recorded. Thomas (b.1802/3) probably son of Thomas, he was master of Kirkton School from 1834. He was educated at Kirkton and in Edinburgh. He was recorded there in Pigot’s 1837 directory and remained schoolmaster until the 1860s. He also served as Registrar and Inspector of Poor for the Parish. In 1861 he presented the stone slab, which had been the stool of repentance from Kirkton Kirk, to the Museum. He may be the Thomas who subscribed to Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He married Margaret Turnbull and their children included: Thomas; William T.; Simon, who was minister of Ballantrae; and Isabella. Thomas (b.1812/3) from Middlebie, he was a shepherd at Hilsop in 1861. His wife was Mary. Walter ‘Wat’ (16th C.) tenant of Sir Walter Scott of Howpastley in the lands of Outserdieg in 1569. Sir Walter acted as causer for his tenants at a meeting in Hawick, assuring that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. Walter (17th/18th C.) recorded as ‘servitor to Walter Laing clerk to ye Duchess of Buccleugh, (and servitor to ye sd Walter tenant of Park)’ in 1716 when he married Jenet Scoon (daughter to a deceased Scoon). He was recorded in (Branxholme) Park in 1719. His wife’s name was also recorded as ‘Mary’ and ‘Margaret’ (although this seems likely to all be the same couple), with children: Margaret (b.1717); Margaret (again, b.1719); Jean (b.1721); and an unnamed child (b.1725). The witnesses in 1719 were James Henry and Robert Scoon in Branholme Town (who was probably related to his wife). Walter (18th C.) tenant in Denholm, recorded in 1745 and 1749. He married Janet Spinnie (or Spindie) and their children included: Ann (b.1743); Betty (b.1745); Agnes (b.1747); an unnamed child (b.1749); John (b.1752); and Isabel (b.1756). Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of London. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825, and hence probably had a local connection. Walter (19th C.) carrier in Newcastle. In 1852 he was recorded running a weekly service to Nether-Oakshaw, presumably transporting coals from the mine there. William (15th C.) recorded in Thornyleuch in 1494/5 when his son-in-law John Scott was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Selkirk. William (17th/18th C.) recorded as ‘of Townhead’ when he leased half of ‘Townhead’ to James Runcement, ‘now in Hassendean’. He is recorded in a bond of 1699 as ‘of Hassintounhead’ along with his wife Margaret Gray when he borrowed one thousand pounds from Henry Leck. In 1703 he sold the lands of Hassendeane Townhead to Thomas Turnbull of Knowe and also borrowed money from James Gray of Nether Ancrum (which he seems to have had difficulty repaying). Henry Leck (tenant in ‘Stodridge’) tried to recover his debt in 1701/2 and this may have been done by 1710, since he recovered his tenancy rights to Hassendeane Townhead. In 1705 a bill was sent to him by Gideon Scott of Highcheste, via Bailie Robert Hardie of Hawick, then passed on to Thomas Turnbull of Knowe. Thomas of Knowe paid his teinds for Townhead in 1705, according to a discharge by Gideon Scott of Falnash (the Duchess’ Chamberlain). William (17th/18th C.) tenant in Side. He was listed there in the 1694 Hearth Tax records. In 1707 he was called before the Castleton Kirk Session for making a ‘penny wedding’. He ‘promised that he should not be troublesome about any such thing in future’ and was dismissed to pay a fine to the civil magistrate! William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Gray and their children included: Janet (b.1709); Jean (b.1713); and John (b.1715). William (18th C.) resident at Linhope in 1725 when his daughter Margaret was baptised in Cavers Parish. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Isabel Bunyan and their children included Margaret (b.1749) and probably William (b.1746). William (18th C.) tenant in Denholm in 1761. He is probably the William who married Isabel Scott and whose children, baptised in Cavers, included James (b.1756), William (b.1761) and Archibald (b.1769). William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was recorded as a ‘farrier’ (or perhaps ‘farmer’) in 1789 when he witnessed a baptism for Mark Sutherland. William (18th/19th C.) resident at Newcastle, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He may be the William from Castleton who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. William (18th/19th C.) resident of London who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He probably had a local connection, and may have been related to Charles, also of London. William (b.c.1790) born in Westerkirk, Dumfriesshire, when young he worked as a ploughman at a farm near Birneyknowe. In 1813 he assisted Capt. Walter Scott of Wauchope in catching a murderer (as recounted in Lang’s ‘Stories of the Border Marches’). Scott enlisted the ploughman’s help when he caught up with the 6-foot Irishman (called John Linnichsen or Henry Macgraw) along this former high road from Hawick to Newcastle. He had attacked and robbed John Macdonald, a travelling merchant from Dumfriesshire who was apparently 101 years old. The chase ended on ‘High Tofts Hill’, the murderer was apprehended, walked back to Kirkton, then taken by cart to Hawick and on to Jedburgh for trial. William was apparently presented with a baton and excused from paying taxes for the rest of his life. He was later farmer for a while at Salenside. In 1841 he was living at Clerklands and in 1851 was a labourer at ‘Newtonmoor’ in Wilton Parish. He married Janet (b.c.1800), daughter of George Thorburn, farmer at Stonedge (and she apparently died aged 99). Their children included: Archibald; Jane; William; James; Andrew; Ann; and Catherine Ann, who Robert Scott, vet at George; Janet; William; James; Andrew; Ann; and Robert Scott, vet at Cauldmill. William (b.1776/7) mason in Denholm. In 1841 and 1851 he was living around the north end of Westside with his wife and adult children. His wife was Agnes (or ‘Nanny’) and their children included James, William, George, Robert, Charles and Bell. William (b.1783/4) born in Newbigging, he was a flesher in Newcastleton in 1851 and on an 1852 directory. However, the same William, at about 15 South Hermitage Street, was listed in 1841 as a teacher. His wife was Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’) and they had a daughter, Elizabeth. William (18th/19th C.) mason at Holmfoot, probably near Newcastleton. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. William (b.1800/1) from Westerkirk Parish, he was shepherd at Braedichope in the Hermitage valley in 1851. He may be the labourer William listed as a head of household in Castleton for the first time in 1838. William (b.1818/9) builder in Denholm, son of William. In 1861 he was living around Leyden Road. His wife was Jessie and their children included William and James. William (b.1817/8) shepherd at Stanishope. He married Margaret Greig and their children included William, Elizabeth, Margaret, John, Jane and Robert. He may be the W. Little recorded at Hawkness in 1868. William (b.1817/8) stockingmaker in Denholm, son of Archibald. In 1851 he was living at about Westgate and around Sunnyside in 1861. He married Margaret Johnstone (from Falnash Mill) and their children included Archibald, John, James, Violet I. and Daniel C. He could be the William from Denholm who won 2 leaping events at the 1835 Common Riding Games. William (b.1833/4) from Ashkirk, he was a shepherd at Linhope in 1861. William (19th C.) schoolmaster at Kirkton roughly from the 1840s to the 1860s. His wife was called Mary. William (19th/20th C.) son of James of Carlsgill and Janet Keir. His mother was sister of William Keir of Whithaugh. He inherited Whithaugh from his uncle and sold it in 1924 (former pronunciation as in ‘Leitle’; also spelled ‘Little’, ‘Littil’, ‘Lettill’, ‘Lytil’, ‘Lyttill’, ‘Lytyl’, ‘Lyttle’, ‘Lytte’, etc. in older records).

Little Aggie (li'-ul-aw-gee) n. nickname in use in the 19th century, ??.

Little Causey (li'-ul-kaw-zee) n. former name for part of the road up the Loan. It was here that Capt. Campbell was pelted with manure during the disputed Common Riding of 1809. The precise location is unclear.

Little Cavers (li'-ul-kâ-vurz) n. small house on the side road between Honeyburn and Ashybank. It has long been coloured pink, and may have once had a small hamlet around it. The name may come from the former name for Kirkton Parish, or have simply developed as an epithet for a hamlet near the main village of Cavers. In 1684 Adam Leyden, William Laidlaw and Andrew Riddell, 3 tenants of the farm there, were listed as fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. It was the site for the parish school in the 18th century as Denholm grew, so that a location was required between Denholm and Cavers. However, the school moved to Denholm Green in about 1802 and the building became a residence (it is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

the little cloth (thu'-li'-ul-kloth) n. the second-best funerary cloth, in distinction to the main ‘mortcloth’ – ‘Pay’d for the Mortcloath and Little Cloath helping’ [PR].

Little Cote (li'-ul-ko') n. name for former farm near Littlecote Hill in Cavers Parish. Adam Huntly was tenant in 1694 and William Blyth in 1776. John Johnstone was there in 1791 and Robert Scott was farmer in 1851. The Armstrong brothers farmed it in the mid-20th century. The name was essentially replaced with the late Eastcote, although the earlier farm may have been to the south-west of the modern Eastcote. The earlier farm of ‘Muckle Cote’ may have been closer.

to the modern West Cote. There is a possible old enclosure on Littlecote Hill, which could be associated with the former farmstead – ‘Little Cot, Muckle Cot, Crook and the Trows, Worchart, Wormston and Cavers Knowes’ [T] (it was ‘Littlecoatt’ in 1694 and ‘Lyttle cote’ in 1776).

Little Dan (li'-ul-dawn) n. nickname of the 19th century – ‘Kinly Stick and Daavid Garland, London Laidlaw and Little Dan, Johnny the Gover (in a far land), And Wat the Drummer leads the van’ [HI].

Little Dean (li'-ul-deen) n. former farm near Little Cavers. The area was said to have been used for secret Covenanters’ sermons. It was situated near the plantation still known as Little Dean, which flanks the Honey Burn, just west of Denholm Dean.

Littledean (li'-ul-de-en) n. former farmstead in Wilton Parish, located on the left-hand side of the road between Midshiels and Hassendenburn. The Mather, Brydon and Milne families lived there in 1841 (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, it is ‘Littleden’ in 1841).

Littledean (li'-ul-de-en) n. ruined 15th century tower in Maxton Parish overlooking the banks of the Tweed, once the home of the Kers. Duns Scotus may have been born here about 1265. The lands were possessed by Rutherfords in the 17th century. There is much local folklore about unpleasant occupiers and ghosts. Gen. Ker of Littledean was ruined fighting a legal battle in the early years of the 19th century to establish his claim as heir to the Kers of Cessford and hence to the Dukedom of Roxburghe. The male line of Kers of Littledean ended with the death if Walter Ker in 1841. This family have a burial vault at Ker of Oxnam in 1610. The lands were drawn Ker of Oxnam in 1610. The lands were part of the Stobs estate in the late 17th century, and were included in the contract where rental income went to the widow of Sir Gilbert Elliott and her surviving children. This is probably the ‘Glestains’ where Thomas Oliver was farmer in 1581 was Laird there. Robert Elliot ‘in Gledstaines’ was removed from the lands by Sir Andrew Ker of Oxnam in 1610. The lands were part of the Stobs estate in the late 17th century, and were included in the contract where rental income went to the widow of Sir Gilbert Elliott and her surviving children. This is probably the ‘Glestaines’ where Thomas Oliver was farmer in 1758. The old house was still in existence in 1775, having thick walls and iron bars on the small windows; part of the building materials were incorporated into the garden house at Hobsburn (it is ‘Littildane’ in 1582 and occurs as ‘Littildernn’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Little Drinkstone (li'-ul-drungk-stin) n. former name for lands near Drinkstone. In 1550/1 Robert, son and heir of Adam Scott of ‘Nethirmannis of Hassenden’ was infested by Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule in the ‘2½ merklands of Litill Dryngstoun’ in the Barony of Chamberlain Newton. There followed a letter of reversion by John Scott of Drinkstone in favour of Robert Scott ‘in Hassendenburn’ of the same lands on payment of £70 Scots in 1566. In 1606 Walter Scott of Alton was served heir to his father Adam’s lands of ‘Liittil Dombstoun’ in the Barony of Chamberlain Newton, which is presumably a transcription error for Little Drinkstone.

Little France (li'-ul-frans) n. name for an area between the Slitrig and the old railway line just north of Shankend farm. Aerial photography has identified the outlines of rig lines, a small enclosure and the foundations of former buildings (the origin is obscure; it is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Little Gledstane (li'-ul-gled-stân) n. nickname for one of the local Gledstains family of Cocklaw Castle, who took part in the Raid of the Redeswire. This was probably James of Cocklaw, 12th of that Ilk, the nickname presumably suggesting that he was short. There was also a field in Rulewater with the same name, but whether it was connected is uncertain – ‘The laird Watt did weil indeed, His friends stude stoutly by himsell; With little Gladstone, gude in need, For Greitin kendna gude be ill’ [T].

Little Gledstains (li'-ul-gled-stânz) n. former name for some lands which were part of the Barony of Feu-Rule in the Rule valley. There is presumably some connection with the Gledstains family and perhaps with the local hero of the Raid of the Redeswire in particular, but no details are known. The lands lay between those of Holsburn and Langraw (precisely where is uncertain, since these farms were once of considerable extent) and were said to have formerly been a Lairdship. It is possible that Adam Scott of ‘Gledstaines’ recorded in 1581 was Laird there. Robert Elliot ‘in Gledstaines’ was removed from the lands by Sir Andrew Ker of Oxnam in 1610. The lands were part of the Stobs estate in the late 17th century, and were included in the contract where rental income went to the widow of Sir Gilbert Elliott and her surviving children. This is probably the ‘Glestaines’ where Thomas Oliver was farmer in 1758. The old house was still in existence in 1775, having thick walls and iron bars on the small windows; part of the building materials were incorporated into the garden house at Hobsburn (it is ‘Littildane’ in 1582, ‘Little Gledstaines’ in 1677 and ‘Little Gladstanes’ in 1693).
the Little Gover (thu-li’-ul-gu-var) n. nickname, probably from the 19th century, and possibly related to Johnnie the Gover – ‘Sally Machusky, Betty Johnny, Jamie Adams and Tammy Graham, The little Gover as smart as ony, Auld Mag Lamb and her penny krame’ [HI].

Little Harden Burn (li’-ul-hawr-din-burn) n. small stream in Liddesdale, which rises on Harden Hill and joins Harden Burn to the east of old Castleton.

Little Hassendean (li’-ul-haw-sin-deen) n. former name for Westerhouses in the Parish of Hassendean, so-called in 1582.

Little Haugh (li’-ul-hawf) n. another name for the Wee Haugh.

little-hoose (li’-ul-hoos) n., arch. a toilet, water-closet.

little lee (li-ul-lee) n., poet. little peace – ‘Aft has he beat your slough-hounds back And set yourselves at little lee. Fala, &c.’ [CPM].

the Little Maister (thu-li’-ul-mas-tur) n. nickname for a schoolmaster called Turnbull in the late 18th century.

the Little Muir (thu-li’-ul-mewr) n. former name for a farmstead or area near Closses, at the edge of Hawick Moor. It was mentioned in 1766 in the description of 9 small pieces of land that were let in order to try to prevent encroachment on the Common by neighbouring tenants.

Little Newton (li’-ul-new’-in) n. probably part of the farm of Newton in Bedrule Parish. Adam Grahamlaw, son of the Laird of ‘Il/li’l Newtown’ is recorded in 1502. The farm was burned by Simon Armstrong and Clement Crozier and their men, for which they were pardoned in 1531/2. John Grahamlaw ‘of Littll Newtoun’ is recorded in 1572/3. William and George ‘Grimslay’, sons of the deceased Harry of ‘Little Newton’, were held for the murder of Robert Turnbull of Hallrule in 1606.

Little Park (li’-ul-pawrk) n. former name for lands in Liddesdale, probably the farm of Castleton Park, with the ‘Little’ used to distinguish it from the larger holding of Park (or ‘Copshaw Park’) to the south. William Scott was tenant there in 1694, according to the Horse Tax rolls, with Archibald Nixon also listed as a resident (it is ‘Littll park’ in 1694 and is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Little Rulewud (li’-ul-rool-wud) n. former name for some lands near Denholm, possibly adjacent to those of Rulewud itself. It has also been suggested that it was an old name for Denholm Dean. In the reign of David I (1329–71) there is a Crown confirmation of these lands in the barony of Cavers to Thomas of Cranstoun. The lands probably once belonged to the family of Rule. This was confirmed again in about 1380, with the lands then being referred to as being ‘near Denum’. In 1458/9 the lands are among those for which Thomas Cranston of that Ilk had a discharge with Douglas of Cavers for rentals. The lands of ‘Litiliglouwd, with tower thereof’ are listed among those in the Barony of Cavers in 1511 and regranted to Sir William Cranston of that Ilk in the following year and still held by John Cranston according to a discharge of 1574. The ‘40 shilling land of Roulwoode parva alias tower’ was passed from John, Lord Cranstoun to his nephew William in 1636. It was still in the Barony of Cavers when inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687 and by his brother Archibald in 1698; it is described as having a wood and tower, called the lands of ‘Toure’, near the town of Denholm. In modern times the name has been given to a cottage to the east of Denholm Dean (it is ‘Little Rulwod’ in c. 1380, ‘lytill Roulwode’ in 1458/9, ‘Litil Roulwod’ in 1511, ‘roulewoode parua’ in 1512, ‘Little Roulwood’ in 1574, ‘Little Rowlwood’ in 1687 and ‘Little Roallwood’ in 1698).

Little Saut Haa (li-ul-saw-haw, -saw'-hal) n. Little Salt Hall, house built above Langlands Road in 1937, near the former Salt Hall. It was designed by Kathleen Veitch and probably built for teacher William Redpath. It is a grade C listed building. The word ‘Little’ was later removed from the house’s name.

the Little Shop see the Wee Shop

Little Steil (li’-ul-stell) n. lands in Liddesdale, recorded on the 1541 rental roll as ‘Littlesteil’. They were valued at 6 shillings and tenanted by Bartholomew Nixon (possibly related to Stells or the Steel).

Little Sundi (li-ul-sun-di) n., arch. the day before Communion Sunday, being a fast day, a fast day in general.

Little Tudhope Hill (li-ul-tu-dup-hil) n. hill just to the north-west of Tudhope Hill, on the boundary between Rosburghshire and Dumfriesshire. It reaches a height of 483 m.

Little Warrington Sike (li-ul-waw-rin’-in-sik) n. stream in Castleton Parish, which rises
Little Wrae Cleuch

Livingstone (li-ul-wheel) n., arch. smaller type of spinning wheel, used in Hawick through the 18th and early 19th centuries for flax or hemp spinning – ‘There was presented by Mrs. Hogg, Crumhaugh-hill, a spinning wheel, i.e. the ‘Little Wheel’, formerly used for spinning lint’ [HAST1863] (cf. muckle wheel).

Little Whithaugh (li-ul-whi-tuf) n. small farm near Whithaugh, to the north-east of Newcastleton. Thomas Mather was tenant there in 1694.

Little Whitlaw (li-ul-whi-law) n. name of part of the farm at Whitlaw, lying south of the Flex road, bordering on the old Common. It was next to ‘Meikle Whitalaw’, from which it was separated by the Flex (or Whitlaw) Burn. It was long a tenanted farm owned by the Duke of Buccleuch. The farm was surveyed in 1718, along with other Buccleuch properties, covering 60 acres and being bounded by the Slitrig, Flex and Hawick Common, with no farmhouse at that time. It was leased (along with Meikle Whitlaw) to Francis Gledstains of Whitalaw in 1692. The tenant at the beginning of the 19th century was James Elliot. The farmer there in 1841 and 1851 was James Knox, when the farm covered 97 acres, and in the 1860s the farmer was James Shiel. The area of this earlier farm is the site of farm buildings of Flex farm.

Little Wrae Cleuch (li-ul-r-a-klooch) n. small stream in upper Liddesdale, rising on Windy Knowe and lying to the east of Muckle Wrae Cleuch.

Little Wullie Dunlop see Wullie Dunlop

Livingstone (li-vin-stin) n. Rev. John (1603–72) born in Monyabroch, Stirlingshire, son of Rev. William of Kilsyth and Agnes. He attended Glasgow University from the age of 14 and after graduating had several temporary positions, but turned down presentations to various parishes on account of his religious principles. He preached in Ireland, but was excommunicated and joined a ship bound for America that was forced back in a storm. He signed the National Covenant in 1638 and was one of those charged with presenting it to the Court in London. He was minister at Stranraer for a decade, before being appointed minister of Ancrum in 1648. He was one of the Commissioners to Charles I in 1650, perhaps in the party that travelled to Breda to offer him the Crown. He was appointed by Cromwell in 1654 to recommend ministers to vacant parishes. He attested to the character of the deceased Francis Earl of Buccleuch in 1654. After the Restoration he refused to accept Episcopacy, was banished in 1663 and died in Holland. He wrote an autobiography (not published until 1754), as well as notes on some of his contemporaries, and worked on a translation of the bible into several languages. He was friends with other local ministers, including Rev. James Kerr at Abbotrule, Rev. John Scott at Oxnam, Rev. John Scott at Hawick and Rev. William Elliot at Yarrow. He also associated with Sir William Scott of Harden, Sir Gideon Scott of Highchesters, Sir Walter Riddell of that Ilk and several Pringle landowners, as well as Lady Stobs, Lady Newton and Mrs. Elliot of Craigend. He was said to have been the most popular preacher in the Borders. He married Janet Fleming and had at least 15 children, although most died in infancy. His daughter Marion was born in Stranraer in 1642 and married Rev. John Scott of Hawick. His time at Ancrum is recorded on a stone built into the wall of the Manse garden there. Mary Ann (19th C.) owner of the lands of Coldlaw and Tandlaw according to the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874. Her name is recorded as ‘Mrs. Mary Ann Livingstone or Finlay’. She was presumably the widow of someone called either Livingstone or Finlay, perhaps a descendant of Rev. Robert Scott of Coldhouse. William of Drumry (15th C.) son of Sir Robert, from the Clydebank family. He held the half (probably the eastern half) Barony of Hassendean, according to a sasine of 1467. This was also stated in a ‘letter of reversion’ of 1470, in which Alexander Scott of Howpasley and Abington gave redemption money for Midshiels and Appletreehall; it is unclear when he first gained the barony. He was the Lord of Drumry fined in 1493 for non-presence (relating to his lands in Hassendean) at the Court of the Justiciary in Jedburgh. He resigned the barony to the King in 1493/4 and it then passed to Alexander, Lord Home. Also in 1493/4 he assigned (with the consent of his son Robert) 3 ‘letters of reversion’ to Alexander, Lord Home, these being for on Larriston Fells and joins Storff Sike and then Great Warrington Sike before running into Larriston Burn.

Mary
Lizzie Campbell’s Spring

Midshiels, Appletreehall, East Mains and Clarilaw. He probably married Euphemia, daughter of David Wemyss of that Ilk and was succeeded by his son Sir Robert.

Lizzie Campbell’s Spring (li-zee-kawm-bulz-spring) n. former water supply at ‘the Limes’ old house, later Raesons Park.

lizzie-rin-the-hedge (li-zee-rin-thu-hej) n., arch. goosegrass, cleavers, Galium aparine (also robin-rin-the-hedge; see sticky wullie).

’ll (l, ul) contr. will – ‘Ee’d better heide thae rock-bools, or the bairns ’ll kinsh thum’[ECS], ‘...oor folk ’ll bei touched an’ influenced in a manner which ’ll bei unmistakable’[BW1939] (often attached as a contraction to the previous word).

loadit (ló-dec’, -di’) adj. loaded, rich, well off.

loan (lön) n., arch. a lane, especially one leading to a meadow, in former times a strip of land between fields, left uncultivated for driving cattle homework – ‘At Allanhaugh, a small village (the vestiges of which only now remain) in the upper parts of Tiviotdale, the devil was seen regularly every Saturday evening, walking along the loan’[EM1820], ‘When kye come croonin’ to the loan, an’ lasses litin’ sweet’[JoHa], ‘In loan or steedin’ whene’er they saw her, Muckle Mou’d Meg was the name they’d caa her’[WL].

the Loan (thu-lön) n. once the lane out to the pastures on the Common, being part of the Burgh lands, sandwiched between West Mains and East Mains and connecting the Town with the Common. It was known as the ‘Common Lone’ or ‘Lone’ up until about 1860. It became the main road through the town towards Carlisle, this not changing until the New Road was built in 1815. Both sides were first feued in 1792, this being the first extension of the Town beyond its ports (hence before this time the Loan was technically outside the Burgh limits). It was slowly built up with houses from then on, with further development of the upper West End through the 19th century. J.P. Alison designed Nos. 2 and 7 in 1901. Some houses were removed in 1939. In the mid-20th century there was licensed grocer James Henderson at No. 5 and Allison’s green-grocery at the corner with Beaconsfield Terrace. There was much demolition and building work between 1957 and 1977, with reconstruction in 1974–77, allowing a clear view of the Moat and new access to Drumlanrig School – ‘Up the Loan we’ll drive like fire ...’[AB], ‘Down the Loan we come fu’ doucely ...’[AB], ‘...And doon the Loan like fire’[JT], ‘As Aw was gaun up Hawick Loan ...’[JSB], ‘For now o’ the Loan I used to ken There’s hardly a stannin’ stane’[DH].

loanheid (lön-heed) n., arch. top end of a loan – ‘He may have taken in a piece of the loan-head by that dyke’[HAST1916].

the Loanhead (thu-lön-heed) n. Loanhead, the former name for the area at the top of the Loan. Up until the early 20th century the area had many fields rented by farmers who had their barns and stables in the town. Farmers of the 19th century included the Hendersons of the Back Row, the Blakes of the Back Row, the Elliotis of the Loan, the Waldies of the Green Wynd, the Andersons of the Green Wynd, the Patersons of the Loan, the Laidlaws of the Loan, the Thorburns of the Loan, the Richardsons of the Loan, the Nichols of the Loan and the Hunters of Drumlanrig Place. The last farmers in the area were probably Dick Scott, (who kept pigs at the top on the right-hand side) and the Cavers family (who were there well into the 20th century). The area also had the covered reservoir that supplied most of the town up until the 1960s; for many decades in the 19th century children would sit on its roof to watch the Chase – ‘...The Loanhead cockerel, noisy bird That early in the morn was heard’[IW].

Loanhill (lön-hil) n. lost place name near Branhholme, listed in the description of the half lands of Branhholme in 1420 when they were granted to Robert Scott of Rankilburn. The lands described include ‘half of the meadow of Lonnehill’, with precise location uncertain, but perhaps somewhere to the west of Branhholme.

loanin (ló-nin) n., arch. a lane, between fields – ‘The shepherd child, the healthy wild, The park and loaning green’[JoHa], ‘Ah!’ weel might there be heard a moaning, Throughout the land on ‘ilka loaning’'[AD], ‘The loanin’ up the hill – ay, ay! Far as the laigh march-line; It was the road we took the kye, When we were boys lang-syne’[ECB], ‘They met in the Kirkyard and loaning, Old burses long and true’[RSC], ‘The lang road that rins doon throwe Newtoon an bye the Dryburgh loaneen’[ECS] (also written ‘loanee’).
the Loanin Burn (lhu-lo-nil) n. the Loaning, a street in Denholm, being the road out of town towards the fields to the south of the Hawick to Jedburgh road.

the Loanin Burn (lhu-lo-nil-burn) n. stream in Denholm running alongside the Loaning.

the Loanside (lhu-lo-nil-sid) n. former name for lands lying adjacent to the Loan (also written ‘Loneside’).

Loan Toll (loun-tol) n. one of Hawick’s 4 toll houses, the building still existing with a commemorative plaque, opposite 25 Loan (near the gates of Mote Park). The building sticks out further into the road than those nearby, indicating its former purpose; the Loan was formerly the main road out of Hawick to the south. This is the first place the drums and fifes march to on the Thursday of Common Riding week, and is also on the route of the Cornet’s Walk after the Colour Bussing. It was also referred to as the ‘Turnpike Bar’.

Local Government Bill (loukal-gu-ver-nil-bil) n. important bill of 1929 which took away powers from smaller burgh councils (with a population under 20,000), yielding control to County Councils. Parish Councils and Education Authorities were dissolved, with education and welfare being controlled by the County. In Hawick there was much resistance to these changes, with the town losing control of its police force, public health and road maintenance. Roxburghshire County Council grew in power as a result.

loch (loch) n. lake, the nearest big example near Hawick is St. Mary’s Loch. But plenty of smaller bodies of water just outside the town are also called lochs, e.g. Leahead Loch, Moss hills Loch and Branxholme Loch.

Loch (loch) n. David of Overcarnbie (d.1780), General Inspector of Fisheries in Scotland and Inspector of the Woollen Manufacturers of Scotland. He was made an Honorary Burgess in 1777, presumably when passing through Hawick on the tour he made for the Board of Manufactures. He wrote ‘A Tour through most of the Trading Towns and Villages of Scotland’ in 1778. The book has 2 pages describing trade and industry in Hawick, with a summary of the state of the fledgling knitwear manufacturing. This included a statement that there were 65 looms in the Town (18 of them making carpets) and 6 stocking frames. He once said that children as young as 5 could be usefully employed in the woollen trade.

Loch Bog (loch-bog) n. area to the north of Newmill Burn and south of Branxholme Easter Loch.

Loch Burn (loch-burn) n. stream running from Blackcleuch Loch north-east to the Allan Water, also known as the Low Burn.

Lochburnfit (low-, loch-burn-fi) n. Lochburnfoot, a former farmstead where the Loch Burn meets the Allan Water, west of Southfield. The Moss paul ride-out route often goes past here. There may once have been a weaving village here. Walter Miller was a weaver there in 1694. James and John Reid were living there in 1745 and John ‘Slacer’ in 1748. Agricultural worker Richard Byers and ‘game watcher’ James Miller lived here with their families in 1841 (marked on Stobie’s 1770 map; it is ‘Loochburnfoott’ in 1694 and ‘Loughburnfoot’ in 1745 and 1841).

Lochburn Plantin (loch-burn-plawn’in) n. Lochburn Plantation, wooded area along the south side of the Allan Water, just to the south-west of Southfield farm.

Lochcarron (loch-kaw-rin) n. tartan and knitwear manufacturers, with factory at 76 Princes Street, as well as bases in other Border towns. It was founded by Morris Buchan in 1947 in Gala, with his son Alistair Buchan joining in 1959 and becoming C.E.O. in 1986. The Hawick mill was the main knitwear centre, but closed in 2009.

Loch Cottage (loch-ko’-eej) n. cottage to the south of the road which passes Branxholme Easter Loch.

Lochcraig Heid (loch-krig-heed) n. hill in the south-western part of the Borders, behind Loch Skeen. It reaches a height of 801 m, and can be seen in the distance from many local vantage points.

Lochdail (loch-dail) n. former name for lands near Hawick. They are mentioned among lost placenames by James Wilson in 1850, but their location is still unknown.

Lochgreen (loch-green) n. lands, formerly part of Essenside, bordering on Essenside Loch. This small area was annexed to Castleside in 1760 in exchange for lands nearer to Easter Essenside. This led to a dispute between the Cochranes of Ashkir and the Elliots of Minto over rights to the marle in the Loch in the early 1800s.

Lochend (loch-end) n. former name of farm near Kaimend, about a mile south-east of Hawick. It was just to the north of the small body of water opposite the road to the east of Kaimend, i.e. on the east side of the back road from Hummelknoves to Ormiston, and was also known as Ormiston Lochend. The farmer there in 1797 was John Clerk. In 1861 it was ‘Loughend’ with James Cavers and Alexander Lang and their families as residents. In the 1860s the farmere there was James Davidson (marked on Stobie's 1770 map, between 'Roxmount' and 'Ormistonmains', and labelled 'Ormiston Lochend' on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Loch Hill (loch-hil) n. hill on the east side of the Ewes valley, between the farms of Glendivian and Hoghill. It reaches a height of 258 m and has a hill-fort at its summit, as well as a smaller enclosure to the west. The name presumably comes from the small body of water, which lies on high ground between the 2 archaeological features.

Lochmaben (loch-ma-bin) n. town west of Lockerbie in Annandale. It was a major Bruce seat in the 12th and 13th centuries and became a royal burgh in 1440. Lochmaben Castle was once the strongest fortress in the Borders, and covered 16 acres. The lands passed to the Murrays and then the Johnstones. Population 2,024 (1991).

Loch o the Lowes (loch-o-thu-lowz) n. body of water south of St. Mary's Loch, originally part of it, but separated by deposits from the burns that flow into there. It is about 1½ miles in circumference. This may originally have been the name of the whole lake, with the larger portion later taking the name of the chapel there.

Loch Park (loch-pawrk) n. area to the east of the High Street, once a small pond, but largely drained in 1835 because of the smell, to rid the area of its 'pestilential vapours'. A curling rink was opened there in 1854 and used until 1866, when another pond was opened near St. Leonard's. It was also used as a place for public demonstrations, e.g. in 1884 around 10,000 people rallied there in support of the Franchise Act. The area was used as an auction ring by Andrew Oliver & Son until 1883, when it was purchased by James Scott and David Rutherford, who continued sales there until the early 1900s. The land was then used for other purposes, becoming a railway maintenance yard in 1921, before being converted to an industrial park for small businesses in 1968. Now the name tends to refer specifically to the industrial estate.

Loch Park Road (loch-pawrk-röd) n. road running along the northern side of the Loch Park Industrial Estate, built in 1884, with the name deriving from the former pond. At the bottom of the street the road passed under a railway bridge, which was demolished in the early 1970s.

Loch Rig (loch-rig) n. ridge just to the south of Shielswod Loch.

Loch Sike (loch-sik) n. small stream that rises in Braxholme Easter Loch, running roughly south-east, through Loch Sike Plantation, to join the Newmill Burn and thence into the Teviot.

Loch Skeen (loch-skeen) n. loch high above the Grey Mare's Tail, reached via a track along the Tail Burn (also sometimes 'Skene').

lock (lok) n. one of two positions in rugby, nos. 4 and 5, also known as the second row, who lock together the front row in the scrum. Such players are usually tall and have squashed ears.

Lock (lok) n. John (13th/14th C.) from somewhere in Roxburghshire. He swore fealty to Edward I in 1296, with his name being recorded as 'Johan Lock'. His seal shows an 8-rayed figure and the words 'SJOH'IS LOG'. He was also 'Lok' on the jury for the inquest into the inheritance of the half-barony of Wilton in 1303/4.

Lockerbie (lo-kur-bee) n. town near the Border in Dumfries & Galloway region, where the Dryfe Water meets the Annan. It had a nearby Roman camp at Birrenswark Hill. The town was founded in the early 18th century by the Johnstones, became a burgh in 1863, and was known for its lamb sales. It gave its name to the 'Lockerbie Lick', meaning a slashed face, during the times of feud between the Johnstones and the Maxwells. Tragedy struck in 1988 when a terrorist bomb brought down a Pan-Am jet, killing all on-board and 11 people in the town. Population 3,982 (1991).

Lockhart (lok-har) n. Allan Eliott (1803–78) 5th Laird of Borthwickbrae. Second (and oldest surviving) son of William Eliott, he was a lawyer and became Deputy Lieutenant of Selkirkshire and then Roxburghshire (in 1848). He was listed as a Commissioner in Selkirkshire in 1819, when still younger of Borthwickbrae. He called to the Bar in 1824. He was listed at Borthwickbrae among the local gentry in Pigot’s 1837 directory, and mentioned as a major landowner in Hawick Parish in 1838. He was Selkirkshire M.P. 1846–61, was also involved in local education and agriculture and served as a Commissioner of Supply, Justice of the Peace and Tax Commissioner for Roxburghshire. In 1841 he was absent from Borthwickbrae, but his sister and 4 children were there, along with a governess and 6 other servants. In 1861 he presented a jar of reptiles to the Archeological Society. In 1874 he was listed in the Land Tax Rolls as owner of Flex, as well as Wester Essenside and Leap Hill. In 1830 he married Charlotte (1809–88), 5th daughter of Sir David Dundas of Beechwood, and succeeded to the estates on the death of his father-in-law 2 years later. He had 12 children, including 5 sons who survived to adulthood: William (b.1833), who succeeded and married an Elliot of Wolfelee; David (1834–1903), who married Fanny Wood of Hutton and had 3 sons; Capt. Allan (b.1837), who married twice and had a daughter; Col. Robert Dundas (b.1841), who had 2 daughters; and Charles Walter (1850–94), who married a daughter of Mark Neville and died without issue. His daughters included: Matilda (1832–98); Marianne (b.c.1836); and Robina (1840–1924). He retired in 1861 and after the Death of Lord Polwarth was appointed Lord Lieutenant of Selkirkshire. George (d.1547) cleric who was Archdeacon of Teviotdale from about 1509 until 1533. The George ‘Herber’ referred to in 1509 is probably a transcription error for his name. He was elevated to Dean of Glasgow in 1533, and remained in that office until he died. Sir George (c.1630–89), Lord Carnwath, son of Sir James of Lee. He was a prominent Scottish advocate, who served as Dean of the Faculty of Advocates, Lord President of the Court of Session, Privy Councilor and Commissioner to the Scottish Parliament for Lanarkshire. He married Philadelphia, daughter of Lord Wharton and was succeeded by his son George. He was murdered on Edinburgh High Street by the husband of a woman he had represented against him. In 1690 his son George was served heir to his lands around Jedhead in Southdean Parish. It is unclear how he acquired these in the first place. Sir George of Carnwath (1673–1731) son of Sir George. In 1690 he inherited his father’s annual rents of part of the Marquisate of Douglas in Jedforest, specifically 3 half steadings in Jedhead and half of 2 steads in ‘Campsheill-haugh’. He was a member of Parliament for the county of Edinburgh and one of the commissioners for arranging the union with England. He was a spy who brought to light the extent of bribery before the vote for the 1707 Union, leading to Burns line ‘bought and sold for English gold’. He was a Jacobite supporter and later a spy for Charles Stewart, having to flee the country for a year and dying in a duel 3 years later. Gilbert Elliott (1808–24) younger son of William of Borthwickbrae. He joined the Royal Navy and died onboard H.M.S. Diamond, which was captained by Lord Napier. John (18th C.) married Isabel Lillico in bedrue in 1724. John Elliott of Borthwickbrae (1796–1815). Eldest son of William, he was a Cornet in the Dragoons and was killed at Waterloo. Margaret ‘Peggy’ (18th C.) chambermaid at Cavers in 1791, when she worked for George Douglas. Mary Charlotte (1875–1965) daughter of Capt. William, 6th of Borthwickbrae and Dorothea Helen, daughter of Sir Walter Elliott of Wolfelee. Her father sold Borthwickbrae in 1884. Her 3 brothers died before their father and in 1907 she became head of the lines of both Borthwickbrae and Wolfelee. In 1899 she married Maj. R.H. Adams, but took the surname Elliott-Lockhart in 1907. She had a son, called Sir Allan Robert (b.1905) and a daughter Dorothy Cecil Bertram. Capt. Robert Elliott (19th C.) of Borthwickbrae, he served in the Royal Artillery. Stephen (15th C.) leased the Crown lands of Gilmanscleuch in 1486. Walter Elliott (b.1804) younger son of William. He worked for the East India Company. He married Mary, daughter of William Proctor and died in Madras without any children. Lt.-Col. William Elliott (1764–1832) 4th Laird of Borthwickbrae, eldest surviving son of John of Borthwickbrae and Margaret Laing. He appears to have lived at Orchard before succeeding to Borthwickbrae; he was described as ‘William Elliot Esq. in Orchard’ in the years 1790/1 and 1791/2 when he paid tax for having a female servant and 2 male servants, and also in 1790/1 and 1790/1 when he paid for owning a carriage. From 1792 he was ‘William Elliot of Borthwickbrae’ when he continued to pay the duty for 2 male servants and a carriage in Roberton Parish, with 3 servants in 1793 and 1794 and 1 in 1797. He was at Orchard on the Horse Tax Rolls for 1790–94, when he had up to 4 carriage horses, as well as being owner of 2 work horses in 1797. He also paid the dog tax in 1797. From 1795 he served as Colonel for the local troop of Yeomanry (volunteer cavalry, also known as the Roxburgh Fencible Dragoons), leading his men in repelling the French (who were supplying arms to Ireland) at Killala Bay in 1798. He was later appointed major commandant of the Roxburgh Gentlemen and Yeomanry Cavalry, and turned out with his regiment at the False Alarm of 1804. In 1821 he was appointed Lieut.-Col. of the Roxburghshire Yeomanry Cavalry. In 1802 he paid the Land Tax on Borthwickbrae, the west side of Howcleuch and Lockhart Place

Wester Alemoor. He was listed as a Commissioner for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1805 and 1819. He was a member of the Jedforest Club from 1812. He was among the first to be listed on the ‘Donations’ page for the Hawick Savings Bank in 1815. He was left the lands of Meikledean and Flex by his uncle, William Laing.
He also inherited lands of Old Melrose, where his family would sometimes reside. He became M.P. for Selkirkshire, serving 1806–30, and was made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick in 1823. There is a letter of 1824 where the Burgh of Selkirk asked him for funds for the races at the Common Riding there. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. In 1827 he complained about poachers, with Andrew Oliver as his lawyer. In 1792 he married Marianna (or Marianne), daughter and heiress of Allan Lockhart of Cleghorn, and changed his surname to ‘Elliott-Lockhart’. His children were: Jane (b.1795), baptised at Edinburgh, but recorded in Robertson;
John (1796–1815), who was killed at Waterloo;
Margaret, who was at Borthwickbrae in 1841: Allan (b.1803), who succeeded; Walter, who died in Madras; William (b.1808), who became a Maajor; and Gilbert (1808–24), who died on H.M.S.
Diamond. He died at Cleghorn. Capt. William Elliott (1833–1907) 6th Laird of Borthwickbrae, and 14th of Cleghorn in Lanark, eldest son of Allan. He served in the Camerons and 74th Highlanders, retiring from service in 1868. He was then assistant Chief Constable of Lancashire before becoming Chamberlain for the Duke of Buccleuch at Branxholme, with responsibility for Selkirkshire and Teviotdale. He held this position from 1876 until 1892. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1870. He was also Deputy Lieutenant for Selkirkshire and Teviotdale. He held this position from 1876 until 1892. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1870. He was also Deputy Lieutenant for Selkirkshire and J.P. for Roxburghshire, as well as Selkirkshire and Lanarkshire. He was Chairman of the Managers of Hawick Cottage Hospital and President of the West Teviotdale Agricultural Society, as well as being on the committee for the Upper Teviotdale Fisheries Association. He became an Honorary Burgess of Hawick in 1881.
In 1882 he was present (as Chamberlain) at the opening of the Dod Burn water works in Hawick.
He was also proprietor of the lands at the Flex in the 1880s. He sold Borthwickbrae to Robert Noble in 1884 and for a time lived at Branxholme, but then moved to Cleghorn in Lanarkshire. He matriculated arms in 1893. In 1866 he married Dorothea Helen, eldest daughter of Sir Walter Eliot of Wolfelee. Their children were: Capt.
Allan Ashton (1867–98), who died in Malta; Walter Blair (1870–95), who died unmarried; Mary Charlotte (b.1875), who succeeded as heir of the line; and Norman (b.1871), who died in infancy.
He wrote about the history of Branxholme, including the associated Scotts of Buccleuch, for the Berwickshire Naturalists’ Club (sometimes ‘Lockhardt’, and often called ‘Elliott-Lockhart’, note also that it became ‘Elliott’ rather than ‘Eliott’).

Lockhart Place (lok-har’-plis) n. street in the Wellowate area, built in 1879 by Hawick Working Men’s Building and Investment Company, and named after the second William Elliott Lockhart.
No. 9 is a grade C listed building.

Lockie (lo-kee) n. Alexander (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isabel Thomson and their children included Thomas (b.1769), Agnes (b.1772) and William (b.1777). The witnesses in 1772 were merchant John Oliver and wright James Aitkin. Andrew (17th C.) resident at Easter Essenside on the Hearth Tax roll in 1694. Probably the same Andrew mar-rried Isobel Harvie and had children, baptised in Ashkirk Parish, including John (b.1691) and Bessie (b.1693). James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living in Den-holm in 1720. He married Bessie Storie in 1719.
Their children included: John (b.1720); Marion (b.1731) James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His wife was Jean Scott. Their children included John (b.1768). James (18th C.) resident at Threehead in Roberton Parish. His name was written ‘Locie’ in 1771 when his twins James and William were baptised. Perhaps the same James was witness to a baptism in Wilton for Walter Scott at Whitfield in 1770. James (18th/19th C.) tailor in Denholm, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Janet (b.1798) daughter of mason William. She was still living at Borthwickbraugh in 1851, but described as a ‘Carrrier’. Her son Walter Thomson was also there, as well as her nephew William Turnbull. Janet (b.c.1800) grocer recorded on the 1841 census for Wilton. She lived on Damside, which was perhaps the lower part of Wilton Path. Her children included Mary Hall, jessie, Betsy, John and William. By 1861 she appears to be on Dickson Street and with no occupation. John (13th/14th C.) recorded as ‘John Lok’ when he was on the inquisition of 1303/4 for inheritance of the half barony of Wilton. It seems reasonable to suppose that his named was Lockie and that he was a local man, like the others. John (17th C.) resident of Ashybank who was listed in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William was also listed there and so probably related. John (18th C.) recorded at Denholm in 1725 when his daughter Helen was baptised in Cavers Parish. William (b.1722) and Christian (b.1727), baptised in Cavers, were probably also his children. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1737 he witnessed a baptism for George Wallace, resident at Roughhead. He married Elspeth Porteous in 1731 and their children included: James (b.1734); Anne (b.1736); and James (again, b.1740). It is possible he is the John who died in 1742, after whom the area of ‘Lockieshedge’ was named. John (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Mary Nichol and their children included William (b.1749). John (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Violet Laidlaw and their children included: Mary (b.1752); Janet (b.1754); Isobel (b.1757); and Violet (b.1759). His wife was probably the daughter of Adam Laidlaw and Helen Bell born in 1729. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Jane Stoddart in Robertson Parish in 1791 and their children included Walter (b.1795), Margaret (b.1797) and Janet (b.1802). John (b.c.1773) resident of Sorbie in Ewesdale. In 1800 he married Jean, daughter of Thomas Dryden, blacksmith at St. Boswells. Their children were: Jean (b.1801); Catherine (b.1803), who married Robert Anderson from Langholm; Elizabeth (b.1805); Janet Church (b.1807); and James (b.1809). John (b.c.1800) gamekeeper living at Byreleeau in Robertson Parish in 1841. By 1851 he was working in a factory in Galashiels and in 1861 was a carter at Ladhope. His wife was Janet and their children included Alison, Margaret, Jessie, Marion, Isabella, Anne, Jane and Meriam. Patrick (17th C.) resident in Ashkirk listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He is probably the ‘Pat’ who in 1691 witnessed a baptism for Andrew. He married Bessie Easton and their daughter Bessie was baptised in 1689. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1687 he married Margaret Waugh, as recorded in Robertson Parish. However, the marriage took place at Hassendean Kirk (perhaps one of the last there). He witnessed baptisms in Robertson Parish for George Collin in 1687 and for James Waugh in 1768. Probably the same Thomas was resident of ‘the netherend’ of Hassendean Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1715 he was a wright at Synton Parkhead. He married Helen Veitch and their children included Elizabeth (b.1715) and John (b.1717). Thomas (b.1814/5) born in Robertson Parish, he was a ‘game guard’ at Leahead on the 1851 census. In 1841 he had been visiting Hosscoteshiel, while his family were staying at Coldhouse. He could be the ‘Lockie o’ the Stinty Knowes’ mentioned in the poem ‘Hawick Immortals’. He married Margaret Hay and their children included William, Georgina, Catherine and James. William (17th C.) resident of Ashybank who was listed in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably closely related to John, who was also listed there. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at ‘Whithlaw’ (presumably Whitehaugh) in 1764. He married Janet Laidlaw and their children included John (b.1764), Walter (b.1767) and Rachel (b.1769). The witnesses in 1764 were Robert Orniston and Thomas Scott. William (b.1772/3) mason at Borthwickbrae. He was living at Borthwickbrae Parkhead in 1798. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. In 1841 he was living at Borthwickbrae, he married Margaret Cavers in 1795 and their children included: James (1796–1825), buried in Borthwick Waas, with the first part of the headstone unreadable; Janet (b.1798); John (b.1800); Jane (b.1802); Ann (b.1805); Isobella (b.1807); Thomas (b.1811); Euphemia (b.1813); William (1814/5–33), also buried in Borthwick Waas and Robert (b.1819). William (1788–1853) born at Stinty-Knowes, son of William and Jean Paterson. He was educated at Wilton and became schoolmaster at Stouslie in 1806, serving there for 37 years. He is listed as teacher at Stouslie among male heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835–41. He was also known as a poet. A friend of ‘Clinty’, he wrote one of the Auld Brig poems. He also wrote ‘Farewell to Edinburgh’, a poem in celebration of the lighting of Hawick’s first gas lamps, and others, including annual odes on the Duke of Buccleuch’s birthday. He is also mentioned in a song from ‘ Daft Jock Gray’, recorded in the book ‘Memoir of Robert Chambers’ (1872) – ‘There’s Lockie o’ the Stinty Knowes, There’s Nicol o’ Dick-neuk, And Bryson o’ the Priestrig, And Hall into the Heap’ [DJG]. He married Isabel Anderson (from Roberton) in Wilton Parish in 1808. In the 1841 census he is at Stouslie School with wife Isabella and children Jean (b.1808) and William (b.1814). He is still teacher there in 1851, but now living at Easter Longbaulk, with 3 grandchildren also in the house. He died at Longbaulk. William (19th C.) of William Lockie’s knitwear, founded in 1874, based on the Fore Raw and later at Riversdale Mills. He was a contributor to buying the Auld Mid Raw for demolition.

Lockie’s  see Lockie’s Mill

Lockiesedge (lo-kee-zej) n. sometimes spelling of Lockieshedge.

Lockieshedge (lo-kee-hej, lo-kee-zej) n. area between Stirches Road and Mayfield, around the house with the same name. It was the eastern-most part of the area formerly known as ‘Roughheugh’ and the name applied to a large part of what is now Mayfield. It is first recorded as feud by Robert Langlands in two parts to John Biggar and to Robert and Mark Liddel of Whitehaugh in 1773. This second part passed to the Hart family in 1776. Apparently a beech hedge bordering the old road to Selkirk (Stirches Road) grew until the 18th century, where there are now buildings. Walter Scott was recorded living there in 1797. The 18th century high wall was demolished in 1970 when the road was realigned (named after the hedge and an early resident, John Lockie, who died in 1742; also written, presumably in error, ‘Lockiesedge’ and ‘Lockie’s Edge’).

Lockieshedge Hoose (lo-kee-hej-, lo-kee-zej-hoos) n. house in the area known as Lockieshedge, off Stirches Road, opposite Wellfield Road. Also known just as ‘Lockieshedge’ or sometimes ‘Lockiesedge’.

Lockie’s Mill (lo-kee-mil) n. William Lockie & Co., knitwear manufacturers of Riversdale Mills, founded in 1874. The company also had a small factory off Drumlanrig Square (on the Fore Raw) in the latter part of the 19th century, being a 3-storey building reached from No. 28. This now houses ‘Westfield Works’ at Nos. 27 and 28. The building’s frontage has a combination of paired windows and oriel windows. The modern company focuses on luxury garments.

lockit (lo-kee’, -ki’) pp., arch. locked – ‘Caged up, within a glass-case lockit, He’ll shew the curse that Job invokit’[JoHa], ‘I’ll hae him lockit up for a scoundrel obtaining money by false pretences’[JEDM], ‘... And the lilacs are lockit ticht I’ their maidenhead’[DH].

Lock the Door Laristom (lok-thu-dor-law ri-stin) n. song written by James Hogg, the Ettrick Shepherdt. in 1797. It was popular at the Colour Bussing and similar events in the 19th century. Scocha recorded a version in 2001 – ‘Lock the door, Lariston, Lion of Liddesdale; Lock the door, Lariston, Lowther comes on: The Arm strongs are flying, The widows are crying, The Castleton’s burning, and Oliver’s gone’[ES] (usually spelled with one ‘r’).

locusts (lo-kists) n., pl., arch. carob beans, used as a cattle feed and before WWI purchased by children as a confection, chewing the beans until only the fibre was left – ‘A licorice stick, a neivefu’ monkey nits, A bag o’ locust – tidbits rare’[WL] (also called ‘locust beans’).

Lod (lad, löd) n., arch. Lord – ‘...Till ten had struck, When Bob cries ‘Lod, My chiel, we’re on the batter’’[VW], interj., arch. used to express disapproval or disagreement, especially in phrases like ‘Lod sakes’ or ‘Lod man!’ – ‘...An’ chamin’ smash amang the dirty puddle; Lo’d! how they sprawl aboot, an’ ginnin’ guddle!’[JoHa] (also written ‘Lo’d’).

Lodge 111 (loj-yin-u-kee-vin) n. Hawick Masonic Lodge, being Lodge St. John, No. 111. Affectionately known as ‘the three ones’. Its premises are at 33 Commercial Road, and were converted from the building of Innes, Chambers & Co., tweed merchants in 1923 (with designs by J.P. Alison). Prior to that their premises were located at Myreslawgreen. The Lodge started at least as early as 1768, when a charter gives its number as 141, this being altered later. Activity lapsed in the mid-19th century, but it was resuscitated in 1860 and has been active since then. This lodge helped to erect the Henry Scott Riddell monument. The lodge has a collection of masonic jewels and other artefacts, including the military sword of William F. Beattie.

Lodge 424 (loj-fow-ur-tooo-ee-fow-ur) n. Lodge St. James, Border Union Royal Arch (B.U.R.A.), No. 424, being a branch of the Freemasons, founded in August 1882. The premises were built at 8 Union Street in 1893, to the designs of J.P. Alison. Before that the lodge met every second Tuesday in Orrock Church Hall. It formed essentially out of disputes over the Volunteers, with mass resignations from the other Hawick Lodge in 1863, led by prominent townsmen such as George Hardie Fraser. The Lodge celebrates a Mid-Summer Festival of St. John. Latterly the club members have been meeting twice per month, from September to April. The lodge contains a frieze depicting scenes from the Bible. A history, written by James Edgar, was published in 1932.
Lodgegill

Lodgegill (loj-gil) n. former farm on the Tarras Water, east of the Ewes valley. It was a seat of the Elliots in the 17th and 18th centuries. Descendants of Anderson of Tushielaw were shepherds there in the 18th and 19th centuries. Robert Scott and family were living there in 1841 — ‘Callants, ride! what ails your rotten naigs? He’s making straight for Lodgegill and the craigs!’ [HNo].

Lodgeknowe (loj-now) n. former farmstead in Cavers Parish. William Scott (servant at Colterscleuch) was householder there in 1796. It is recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when John Lunn was farmer there (it is ‘Lodgeknow’ in 1796 and 1797).

Lod-sake (lod-säk) interj. arch. a mild oath, ‘for the Lord’s sake’ — ‘... when, Lo’dsake, callants! wad ye believe it — the cratur a’ at ance just sprang frae the grund like a wull-cat ...!’ [BCM1881], ‘Now, Lod sake, Tam mas, be quick, for aw’ve the pot on the day ...’ [JTu] (see also Lod).

Logan

Logan (lö-gin) n. Andrew ‘Andy’, champion archer from Hawick, who runs the Redgauntlet Archery Club. In 2005 he helped British Telecom by firing a downed telephone cable across the Teviot near Hassendean Burn. Later that year he won the Recurve Bow section of the European Championships and was given the Honorary Provost’s Council’s Achievement Award. He lit the brazier at the Opening Ceremony for the Hawick ‘Olympics’ in 2012 — ‘Oov got threi champions archers Europe’s Logan, and world champions McCombe and Cook’ [AIB], Rev. James (16th/17th C.) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1602, he was presented to the Parish of Southdean in 1609. However, the Presbytery decided about a week later ‘to provide another kirk for him’, so he appears not to have been the official minister. James (17th C.) merchant from Kirkpatrick Parish in Galloway. In 1696 he was admitted as a Burgess of Hawick, with Walter Graham acting as cautioner for him, that he would pay all liabilities. Rev. James (19th C.) born at Muthill, Perth, he was minister of Robertson Free Kirk. He was recorded at Robertson when the Ordnance Survey Name Book was made in the period 1858–60. In 1861 he was a lodger at Northwickbrae Burnfoot. Note that a man of the same was minister at Swinton 1833–68, and made the second statistical account there. Mr. ?? (b.1880) born in Kelso, son of Peter and nephew of Dr. Robertson Nicholl, Editor of the ‘British Weekly’. He was educated in Kelso and at Apatria Agricultural College. He became tenant farmer of Macksdie in the early years of the 20th century. He was a member of the Hobkirk School Board. He married a daughter of Rev. William Smith. Thomas (16th C.) recorded in 1560 as owner of a tenement in Hawick, on the north side of the High Street, east of the tenement of Thomas Short. He is recorded in 1579 when the same tenement in Hawick, belonging to Simon Sanderson, ‘sumtyme pertenit’ to him (also written ‘Londine’).

loggerhead (lo-gur-heed) adj. a loggerhead, idiot – ‘Robert Wright, late bailie, is fined for abusing the present bailie, by hanging of him, calling him drunken sott and loggerhead . . . ’ [BR1685].

logie (lō-gee) n. poet. fire-place of a kiln – ‘Freed for a while to take the air From hell’s tremendous logie’ [JR].

loke (lōk) interj. arch. used to express surprise or happiness, also in the phrase ‘Lokesake mei!’ or ‘Lokesakes!’ (euphemism for ‘Lord’).

the London Scottish Border Counties Association (thu-lun-din-skə′-eesh-bōr-dur-koon′-eez-av-so-see-a-shin) n. former organisation of Borders gentlemen and ladies based in London. It was formed at about the end of 1896, and held its first annual dinner in 1898, with the Chair occupied by the Duke of Buccleuch. Sir Arthur Conan Doyle talked on ‘the literature of the Scottish border’ at the 1904 dinner.

Longueville (long-vil) n. Thomas (d.c.1340) possible the earliest member of the Langlands family. One story is that he was a French Pirate, ‘the Red Rover’, who was captured attacking one of William Wallace’s ships, with the two becoming friends. A more likely story is that the family came across with William the Conqueror and settled in Scotland. It seems he was also known as ‘Thomas de Charteris’ after marrying the Charteris heiress and taking her name. It may have been that a branch of the family established themselves at Langlands and took that as their name. This early history is unclear, and further confused through the influence of historical romances such as ‘The Scottish Chiefs’ (1809) by Jane Porter, popularising earlier tales by the mediaeval ballad-bearer Blind Harry. The family gained lands at Langlandshill in Peeblesshire, built the original Kinfuans Castle in Perthshire and also acquired local lands that would become the Langlands (i.e. Wilton) estate. Wallace is traditionally supposed to have visited the Langlands estate in 1297 and ‘tethered his charger to a thorn tree near the Castle Wall’.

the Longuevilles (thu-long-vilz, -long-gwu-vee) n. originally Norman family, taking their name from a small town in Normandy. The Longuevilles, Earls of Buckingham, were the ancient lords, and there are several places still bearing the name in England. The family held lands in the Barony of Wilton from the early 13th century. There has also been the suggestion that this was the same family as ‘Langlands’, who are recorded as Barons of Wilton in the 15th century; this connection would establish the same family as Barons for about 500 years.

Lookup (loo-kup) n. Andrew (18th C.) writer
(i.e. lawyer) and Provost of Jedburgh, who was made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick in 1776. Probably the same Andrew paid the window tax in Jedburgh in 1748. Thomas (1729/30–1811) forester for the Buccleuch estates in ‘Teviotdale-head’ in at least the period 1798–1807. He is probably the Thomas ‘Lukup’ recorded as ‘Groom and House Servant’ at Branxholme in 1778 and 1779 (working for William Ogilvie) and ‘House Servant’ in 1785 and 1786 (working for Adam Ogilvie). He may be the Thomas who married Alison Gill (or McGill) in 1771 and whose children included: Helen (b.1772); Christian (b.1775); and Robert (b.1783). The witnesses in 1772 were John Laurie (preacher at Caerlenrig) and John Kyle. He died at Branxholme and was buried at St. Mary’s. William (17th C.) listed as wright and servant to Walter Earl of Buccleuch. His surname is transcribed ‘Linkvpe’, but it seems likely this was ‘Lookup’. He was listed in the deceased Earl’s inventory in 1633, when he was owed for work done at Branxholme and Hawick.

loon (loon, lown) n., arch. a lad, youth, fellow, rascal – ‘…Robert Hardie being accusit
…for …calling the council’s officers men-sworn loons’ [BR1657], ‘I chased the loons doon to

Than Denholm’s genius loon’ [WL], ‘…Wi’ pride no man can muster ’less he be a Teri loon’ [DJ], ‘And, loons, here’s a secret I’m gaun tae loot dab …’’[DJ] (also spelled ‘loun’ and
loonder (loon-dur) v., arch. to thump, beat, drub – ‘...Sair loondert pair wee Jocky Bell for cheatin’ at the boos’ [WW], ‘In Coquetdale, Reed and Tyne We drive a prey wi’ glee, And lunder the hubberts like swine, And wha daur meddle i’ me?’ [T]. ‘I ha’e nae doot but I may get a loonder, Frae some ane mighty ’mang the mighty clan’ [JoHa] (also ‘lounder’).

loonderin (loon-dur-in) n., arch. a drubbing, thumping, thrashing – ‘Hei’s a naisty bad yin, at is ei – A’ll gae um a guid loontureen, at wull A’ [ECS], adj. very large of its kind.

looper(gowan) (lo-pur-gow-in) n., arch. the oxeye daisy, marguerite, Chrysanthemum leucanthemum (also ‘loppert gowan’); cf. horse-gowan).

lopport (lo-pur’) pp., adj., arch. coagulated, clotted, said of milk, etc. – ‘At dinner-time he treats his stomach, With lopper’d milk, or barley drammock’ [JR], ‘The mune she shines sae bright, Till a’ the yirth aneth her een Is fu’ o’ loppert licht’ [DH] (also loupered).

lopperty-heid (lo-pur’-ee-heed) n., arch. a dolt, blockhead.

Lord Alemoor (lörd-äl-moor) n. alternative title of the Earl of Tarras (Walter Scott of Hinchester and Harden) in the latter part of the 17th century. It was also the title of Andrew Pringle, an 18th century judge.

Lord Balmerino see Elphinstone

Lord Goldielands (lörd-göld-ee-lindz) n. subsidiary title used by the Scotts of Buccleuch, along with Earl of Deloraine and Viscount Hermitage. It was created in 1706 for Henry, 3rd son of James, 1st Duke of Buccleuch, and became extinct in 1807 when Henry Scott, 4th Earl of Deloraine, died.

Lord Heathfield see Gen. George Augustus Eliott

Lord Herries (lörd-he-reez) n. hereditary title of the Herries and then Maxwell families, who owned the Barony of Herries-Rule until the mid-17th century (see Herries and Maxwell; written ‘Herris’ and variants).

Lord Harry’s Rant (lörd-ha-reez-rawn’) n. song appearing in Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’, published in Hawick in 1784. It is said there to be about one of the Earls of Deloraine, and this may have been Henry Scott (1676–1730), 1st Earl of Deloraine, 2nd son of Ann, Duchess of Buccleuch. With the first lines being ‘Give ear to my frolicsome ditty, Of one that a wager did lay . . . ’, it has been printed in several forms under different names, such as ‘The Rant’. It tells the story of a gentleman who made a bet that he could cross the city without saying anything to the night watchmen. But he is arrested by one, and only freed by the intercession of the Lord Mayor’s daughter.

Lord Lieutenant (lød-loom-te-n’n) n. official position in a county, originally set up in the late 18th century to be responsible for maintaining local law and order and calling out the militias in times of disturbance. It is a non-political position, the appointee being the Crown’s representative in the county, presenting medals on behalf of the Queen, organising royal visits, etc. They also have responsibility for the Territorial Army and Justices of the Peace. The position is typically held by a retired senior military officer, peer or business person. Lieutenants are among the few people allowed to fly the Lion Rampant.

Lord Montague (lød-mon-tu-gew) n. title of Henry James Montagu Scott uncle and guardian to the young 5th Duke of Buccleuch, who was made an Honorary Burgess along with the Duke when they travelled through Hawick in 1821.

Lord o Buccleuch (lød-ô-bu-kloo) n. title used by the head of the Scotts, also known as Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch. The 1st Lord of Buccleuch was Walter, ‘the Bold Buccleuch’, who was raised to the peerage in 1606 and died in 1611. However, several of the earlier chiefs were called ‘Lord’, this being formerly synonymous with ‘Laird’. There were at least 10 Lairds before ‘the Bold Buccleuch’, with the first to sit in the Scottish Parliament as Lord of Buccleuch being Sir David Scott, 7th Laird, in 1481.

Lord o Hawick (lød-ô-hilik) n. title of the Barons of Hawick, particular used of the Douglases, responsible for law enforcement around Hawick in the early 16th century.

Lord Olifer (lød-o-leev-ver) n. nickname for Robert Oliver in the 17th century, and his son, also Robert in the early 18th century, as well as for an earlier Oliver in Falside in Southdean Parish – ‘Lord Olifer embalmed in song, A stranger to fear, a foe to wrong: Like sturdy Hab, branched from your race, Your lineage royalty would grace’ [WNK].

Lord Napier see Napier, Francis
Lord Neaves see Neaves, Charles
Lord Pei Huill (lød-pi-hul) n., arch. a snobbish person – ‘ . . . the man with the airs and graces was inevitably ‘Lord Pei Huill’’ [WL].

Lord Polwarth (lød-pol-wurth) n. the present head of the Scotts of Harden is Henry Alexander Hepburne-Scott, 10th Lord Polwarth. The first local Lord Polwarth was Hugh Scott, 11th Baron of Harden.

the Lord’s Trei (thu-lórzd-tri) n. former tree near the western side of the road shortly before coming to the Caa Knowe. Its position is indicated by a raised area in the field. This is probably an ancient burial cairn (about 33 ft in diameter) with an enclosure around it. It may be related to the Caa Knowe cairn, which is nearby. The date that the tree grew in the centre is not known, but it was already an old tradition by the mid-19th century.

Lord Warden (lød-warden) n. official government position from the early 14th century until the Union of the Crowns in 1603, with responsibility for security of the lands around the Border. There were Lord Wardens of both Scotland and England, with the land split into West, Middle and East portions (sometimes just West and East), with Hawick lying in the Scottish Middle Marches. Sir James Douglas (’The Black Douglas’) was the first recorded appointee on the Scottish side, in 1314. The Wardenship was hereditary with the Douglas family until forfeited in 1455. Afterwards there were usually 3 separate Scottish Wardens. The relevant Wardens for Hawick are approximately: Sir James Douglas, from 1314; Sir William Douglas, from 1343; Sir Archibald Douglas, from 1364 and 1368–1400; Archibald 4th Earl of Douglas, from 1400; James 7th Earl of Douglas, sometime; William Douglas, 2nd Earl of Angus, from 1433; William, 8th Earl of Douglas, from 1450; William Douglas of Cluny, from 1464; James, Earl of Buchan, from 1479; Walter Ker of Cessford, from 1502; Ralph and Andrew Ker, from 1503; Alexander, 3rd Lord Hume, from 1510; Sir Robert Ker, from 1514; Sir Andrew Ker of Cessford, from 1515; Anthony Darcy, from 1516; Archibald Douglas, 6th Earl of Angus, from 1525; Sir Walter Ker of Cessford, from 1536; Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst, from 1538; Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, from 1550; James, Earl of

Bothwell, from 1558; Sir Walter Ker of Cessford, from 1560; Earl of Angus (Archibald Douglas), from 1574; William Ker of Cessford, from 1583; Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst, from 1584; Earl of Arran (James Stewart), from 1584; William Ker of Cessford, from 1585; Duke of Lennox (Ludovic Stewart), from 1592; Sir Robert Ker c.1594–1603 (see also Warden).

Lorenz (lo-renz) n. Helen Ruth nee Palmer-Douglas, eldest daughter of James Malcolm Palmer-Douglas. She inherited the vestiges of the Cavers estate, including the small piece of land on which the Hornshole Monument was erected, which she gifted to the people of Hawick in 2019. She married Walter and had children Jason and Robert.

lorimer (lo-ri-mur, -ree) n., arch. someone who makes metal parts for bridles and saddles, a saddler – ‘Decerns Thomas Oliver to content and pay ten by his guids and geir to James Scott, lorimer, 3 half firlots of aitts eitider –’ [BR1642].

Lorimer (lo-ri-mur) n. Sir Robert Stodart, R.S.A. (1864–1929) born in Edinburgh, he became a noted architect and promoter of the Arts and Crafts movement in Scotland. He designed the National War Memorial at Edinburgh Castle. Locally he was responsible for the design of the 1908 wooden chancel screen in St. Cuthbert’s, the 1897/8 renovation of Fatlips Castle, of the 1908 wooden chancel screen in St. Cuthbert’s, the 1897/8 renovation of Fatlips Castle, the clock tower in Gala Burgh Chambers and the War Memorial in Kelso.

Lorraine (lo-rän) n. Agnes (16th/17th C.) suggested to have been a daughter of Hector of Harwood (although there is no evidence for this). She married Martin Elliot. In 1618 she held the liferent of half a husbandland in Lilliesleaf and gifted the lands to her son and heir William Elliot. In 1625 she and William Elliot had a sasine of lands to her son and heir William Elliot. In 1643 in Ruletownhead in the valuation of Abbotrule Parish. Her lands were valued at £10. Edward (15th C.) Englishman who was the progenitor of the Barons of Kirkharle in Northumberland. It is unclear what connection there was to the Roxburghshire Lorraines; however, the forename Edward was also known in that branch. He was said to have lands in the Durham area. In 1425 he married Johanna, daughter and heiress of William de Strother. He thus became owner of Kirkharle, and neighbouring lands, including the Northumbrian farm of Hawick. He was probably succeeded by his son Edward. Edward (15th/16th C.) possibly son of James. He may have been the uncle of Hector of Harwood, for whom he witnessed a sasine in 1531. The witnesses after him were William and Patrick. Edward (16th C.) son of John who held lands in Blainslie near Melrose. His name appears to be written ‘Lorne’. In 1579 he had sasine for lands in Blainslie as well as the reversion for the lands. Edward (d.c.1598) Laird of Harwood in the late 1500s, son of Hector, who he succeeded in 1573. In 1573 he was summoned to appear before the Privy Council, along with Sir Thomas Turnbull and others for their raid on the house of Robert Kerr of Woodhead; however, they were acquitted because Kerr had been assisting the fugitive Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst. He owned Hawthornside as well as Harwood, and also held the lands of Appotside (perhaps through marriage). In 1578/9 he was ‘guidsone’ (i.e. son-in-law) to Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule, when he was among men required to be presented to the Privy Council, with John Johnstone of that Ilk as cautioner, for the murder of Thomas Shiel. In 1580 he was ‘younger of Harwood’ when he was in a bond with the Turnballs of Bedrule and Barnhills to keep peace with the Turnballs of Minto and others; at that point the Lorraines of Harwood were united with the Turnballs of Bedrule and Barhills, and feuding with the Turnballs of Minto, Wauchope, Bewlie and Hobsburn. In 1583 William Douglas of Cavers was cautioner for him. He is probably the ‘Larde of Harret’ who signed a bond of assurance with the English Warden in 1584 (along with Gledstains, Elliots, Armstrongs and others). He was recorded in 1585 along with William Douglas of Cavers as cautioners for John Douglas of Whitriggs. He and John Turnbull of Minto were cautioners for ‘Hobbie Elliot, called Vicar’s Hobb’ in 1588/9. Also in 1589 James Langlands of that Ilk was cautioner for him. About 1590 he was listed among landed men in the Borders. He is probably the Edward who (along with Gilbert) signed a bond written by Sir John Forster to try to end family feuds on the Border in 1595/6. In 1580 he married Margaret, daughter of Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule. He is said to have been an unassuming man, although his wife was the opposite. She apparently roused the ire of the Turnbull Clan, who laid waste to Harwood in the years 1598–1605. Hector and William, probably his sons or other close relatives, were slain, along with his wife’s servant. Flocks and herds were also carried off, as well as timber. The feud only ended when an appeal was made to the Earl of Angus. His son Hector succeeded him by 1599, while Edward and James were other surviving sons, and he may also have had sons William, Walter and Ferguson. In 1606 his son James was declared a fugitive. Edward (16th/17th C.) younger son of Edward and Margaret Turnbull. He is mentioned several times as ‘Edward the younger of Harwood’. Edward of Harwood (b.c.1600) son of Hector, with his mother possibly being a daughter of Robert Elliot of Redheugh. His father was killed when he was quite young and his uncle James served as his tutor. He is recorded in an instrument of 1619 being required to marry Margaret Hamilton, sister to Francis Hamilton, who was heir of James Hamilton, formerly owner of lands in the Rule valley; this was under the instructions of his superior, Lord Herries. In fact Margaret married Rev. William Weir, who became minister at Hobkirk; it may be that not fulfilling the marriage contract meant that Edward had to pay a fine to Lord Herries. In 1630 he is recorded in a ‘contract of wadsett’ assigning the lands of Harwood and Hawthornside to William Weir, minister of Hobkirk; this followed the contract of 1598 when his father Hector had borrowed money from James Hamilton. In 1631 he granted sasine of Hartshaugh to Gilbert Elliott. Also in 1631 he had a precept of clare constat and sasine for Harwood and Hawthornside, granted by Andrew, Lord Jedburgh; this renewal confirms that he was great-grandson of Hector. In 1632 he and Rev. Weir were involved in another wadset of Harwood to Gilbert Elliot (son of ‘Gibbie wi the Gowden Gairtins’). In 1632 he had a sasine for Appotside, granted by Rev. William Weir, with the consent of Francis, son of James Hamilton, as well as for Tythehouse. In 1633 he had a wadset with Gilbert Elliot for the lands of Tythehouse. In 1637 he and Gilbert Elliot granted the lands of Harwood and Tythehouse to William, eldest son of Simon Elliot of the Binks. He had thus ended his family’s ownership of Harwood, but held onto the small farm of Appotside. In 1643 he is listed as owner of Appotside, valued at £200. He is probably the ‘Laird Lorran’ who led a group of 20 or so men who captured Royalist leader William Murray after the Battle of Philiphaugh. He is recorded as ‘of Appotsyd’ as witness to a contract of 1648 and again in 1649. He witnessed a marriage contract in 1652 for Robert Elliot and Margaret Riddell. In 1654 he is described as the ‘heritable proprietor’ when he and his eldest son Walter had a contract of ‘wadset’ with William Elliot of Harwood and the Binks for the lands of Appotside. In 1656 he resigned his lands of Appotside and Tythehouse in favour of William Elliot of Harwood; this was with the agreement of his wife, Maisie Elliot, and also mentions his eldest son, Walter. An additional contract reserves for him the ‘mill, mulltures, sequels, suckin, kiln, houses, mill-lands lying beyond the water dam on the south side’ of Appotside, along with pasture for a few animals. He signed his surname as ‘Lorraine’. In 1659 he appears to be the tenant of Appotside Mill, along with Walter Riddell (tenant at Appotside), when the ‘liferent’ of the lands was given to Christine Grahamslaw (new wife of William Elliot of Harwood). In 1662 he was listed among the debtors to the deceased William Elliot of Harwood; Walter ‘in Whyttchough’ was also listed, and probably his son. In about 1663 the Land Tax Rolls record that he paid tax on £300 at Appotside. He married Maisie Elliot, who may have been from the Eliotts of Stobs (his neighbours) or the Eliotts of Reidheugh (his mother’s family). His eldest son Walter was perhaps the Walter who married Janet Shortreed and lived in Hawick Parish. He may also have had a daughter Alison, married to Robert Scott, whose daughter Elspeth was born in Kelso in 1635. He may also have had a younger son George, who had a daughter baptised in Hawick the same day as a daughter of Walter. He probably remained at Appotside until his death, ending his family’s association of about 250 years with the lands around Harwood. Eustace (d.bef. 1374) probably ancestor of the Lorraines of Harwood, his surname is given as ‘de Lorreyne’ and similar variants, while his forename is also ‘Eustachius’ and ‘Tassyn’. He was involved in events on both sides of the Border and is recorded between 1323 and 1374 (which is long enough that it is possible there were 2 generations here). It is not known when he was born or who his parents were. Although sometimes referred to as a knight, it is unclear which side of the Border this came from. He held land in Roxburghshire, including ‘Heroude’ (which is surely Harwood in Rulewater), as well as in Dumfriesshire (including ‘Coschogill’) and in Ayrshire. In 1323 he was given safe passage to meet the Earl of Atholl in England, with the stipulation that he was not to go more than 10 leagues across the Border. In 1331 he was among men accused of illegally hunting on the Earl of Angus’ lands in Northumberland. In 1333 he was a Scotsman appointed by Edward III as one of the Commissioners to inquire into the valuation of Berwick. He was a Commissioner for the Treaty of Perth in 1335, having his Scottish lands restored at that time. About the same year he was among a few Scottish noblemen who swore fealty to Edward III and in 1336 was granted a pardon by the English King for crimes committed in Scotland. In 1340 he had remission (now from the Scottish King) for the killing of Robert Lauder, although no details of the incident are given. In 1343 he was given compensation by Edward III for lands lost in Scotland. He was also Warden of Roxburgh Castle (with Sir William Douglas as Governor at the same time) in 1346, when the Castle was surrendered to the English (specifically Henry Percy and Ralph Neville). He had a son (perhaps on the English side) captured at the Battle of Neville’s Cross (by Robert Bertram), for whom ransom was paid in 1347. He was ‘Eustacio Loreyn’ when he witnessed to a charter for Adam of Rule, for the lands of Altonburn, in about 1354. Around that time (and certainly by 1357) he forfeited his lands to Hugh Blair of that Ilk, presumably for acting against the Scottish King; the lands were confirmed to Hugh’s son James Blair in 1374. In 1357/8 he witnessed a charter of confirmation by John Copeland to John Ker for lands in Altonburn; at that point he was ‘of Chatto’. He was still ‘of Chatto’ in 1358 when he witnessed a charter for William of Blakedene, confirming lands of Mollie and Altonburn to John Ker. He was probably related to James, recorded in the 1350s and 60s, including witnessing the 2 charters of 1357/8 and 1358 with him. It has been suggested that James (perhaps ancestor of the Harwood line), Alexander (perhaps ancestor of the Berwickshire line), Robert (perhaps ancestor of the Hummelknowes line) and William may all have been his sons, but there is no definitive evidence for any of these connections. Eustace (15th C.) recorded as a witness to a ratification of a gift of land in Edinburgh in 1457. He was surely a descendant of the earlier Eustace. Fergus (d.1616) murdered at ‘Gaithouslok’ (i.e. Gatehousecote) by Andrew and Cuthbert McDougal, tenants in Stonedge. They were apparently caught ‘with the bloodie hand’ and committed to Jedburgh Tolbooth in 1618. He was surely related to Walter, tenant in Gatehousecote, and it has been suggested that he might have been a younger son of Edward of Harwood. It is unclear where his forename came from, but there is a Fergus Turnbull recorded a century earlier. George (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk. His daughter Elspeth was baptised there in 1641, with his surname being recorded as ‘Lorne’. George (17th C.) described as ‘in Cavers’, along with William, in a Hawick magistrates court case of 1642, when Samuel Rutherford, servant of the Laird of Cavers, accused a large group of his drinking friends of stealing his wallet. George (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Anna (or perhaps Janet) Fleming and their children included John (b.1655). The baptism was witnessed by John Lister and Simon Adamson and was the same day as Walter’s daughter Isobel was baptised; this hints that he may have been Walter’s brother, and hence a younger son of Edward of Harwood. It has been suggested that he may also have had children Robert, William, Isobell and Alexander. George (17th C.) resident of Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Perhaps the same George was recorded in 1691 when he and another man were paid for mowing in the account book of Dame Magdalene Nicholson, widow of Sir Gilbert Elliot of Stobs. George (d.1720) servant of George Scott in Easter Groundiston. His children, baptised in Wilton Parish, included: John (b.1703); George (b.1706); Agnes (b.1709); and Janet (b.1714). The baptism in 1703 was done along with a son of John Lamb, with witnesses Adam Scott and Walter Scott. The 1706 baptism was done at Wilton Common, with witnesses James Irvine and Will Scott. The use of the Wilton 'mortcloth' for his funeral is recorded, and he was transcribed ‘in Coghall’ (probably ‘Boghall’). The death of ‘Agnes Lorran in Heap’ in 1735 was probably his daughter. It has been suggested that he may have been son of John and grandson of George and Janet Fleming. George (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Helen Nichol in 1727 and their children included Helen (b.1731). He may have been the son of George born in 1706 and the later George may have been his own son. George (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Isabel Hart in 1752. He may be the George who witnessed a baptism for John in 1755. He may be the George whose funeral is recorded in Wilton in 1770. He may have been son of the earlier George from Wilton. George (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Orchard in 1763 and 1765 (and hence surely related to John, who was also there at about the same time) and at Hummelknowes in 1772. His children included: Margaret (b.1763); Helen (b.1765); an unnamed son (b.1767); and John (b.1772). Gilbert (16th C.) probably son of Hector. He was listed in 1579 among Scotsmen accused by ‘the Laird of Pansoun, Englishman’ of raiding into England; he was stated there to be son of the Laird of Harwood. He was also on a list in 1579/80 of men charged to make recompense to Englishmen they had acted against; his cautioner then was the Laird of Bedrule. He is also recorded in 1583/4 when he was denounced along with Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule and others for not appearing before the Privy Council. He is probably the Gilbert who (along with Edward) signed a bond written by Sir John Forster to try to end family feuds on the Border in 1595/6. He is probably the Gilbert, who along with Hector ‘Lorance’ (probably his brother) is recorded being fined for crimes against William Hall of Otterburn in 1596. He could be the ‘Gib Lorreyne’ listed along with ‘Archy Trumble’ in a complaint of a raid into England in 1597. In 1599 Hector Turnbull of Wauchope complained that he and Hector, ‘father-brothers of Hector Lorane of that Ilk’ were involved in the slaughter of David Turnbull, heir of Wauchope; they were captured and presented to James Douglas of Cavers, as Sheriff of Roxburghshire, but Douglas refused to enter them in court. Also in 1699 he was ‘father-brother’ to Hector of Harwood when John Turnbull of Minto was cautioner in a bond to enter them. He could be the ‘Gilbert Lorreyen of Hawdon’ recorded in 1601 when Richard Fenwick of Stanton accused him of stealing livestock from him. He may also be the Gib ‘of Apputtsyde’ recorded in 1601 along with Hector and John, as well as several Turnbulls, when they were accused of crimes by an Englishman. He is probably the ‘Gib Loraybe, called Auld Gib’ who was listed as a fugitive in 1605, along with ‘Jock’s John’ and many Armstrongs, Elliots, Turnbulls, etc. He was listed again as a fugitive for failing to attend another Border Commissioners’ court in Jedburgh in 1606, along with his brother Hector; he was then ‘Gib Lorayne, called Old Gib’. This suggests that he may have had a son who was ‘Young Gib’. It has been suggested that he married a sister of William Scott of Tushielaw, but there is no evidence for this. Grizel (17th C.) resident of Gatehousecote listed in 1684 among people who failed to appear in Jedburgh when cited. The others included Margaret (who may have been her sister) and Andrew Shiel. They were probably Covenanting objectors. She was also listed in 1684 along with Margaret and Beatrix, possibly her sisters. It has been suggested she might have been daughter of Walter (but there is no proof for this). Hector (16th C.) owner of the lands of Harwood and Hawthornside according to a charter granted by William Lord Herries in 1531 (incorrectly noted as in one source as 1561). He was the grandson (and heir) of James and son of John. He may have been a minor when he succeeded his grandfather (his father presumably predeceasing his grandfather). He seems to have been the first Hector in his family, so perhaps his mother was a Turnbull (where this forename was known at the time, and with 2 Turnbulls witnessing the 1531 charter). It was stated that the earlier charters for the lands had been accidentally burned, and hence a new charter was given in 1531. The sasine for his lands was witnessed by Edward, William and Patrick.
who may have been his uncles, or other near relatives. He is probably the ‘Ecto’ Lord of Harwode’ who had a bond of 1557 along with Turnbulls, Elliotis and others, to present ‘Will Nyksone, called Gymmerhom’. He is probably the ‘Lard of Harwode’ listed in 1564 among Border lairds who were ordered to support the warden, Ker of Cessford. He was succeeded by his son Edward and probably also had sons Hector and Gilbert, and perhaps daughters Agnes and Marion. He probably died before 1573. In 1583/4 he was probably the Hector of Harwood on a list of Borderers ordered by the Privy Council to render their houses for the King’s use (making it somewhat unclear when he died). He is probably the Hector recorded on Monipennie’s list of Border Laids in the 1590s (even although he was deceased by then). His son Edward is recorded in 1578/9 as ‘guidsone’ to Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule, and hence his wife was probably sister of Turnbull of Bedrule. Hector (16th/17th C.) son of Hector of Harwood and brother of Edward and Gib. He is probably the Hector, who along with Gilbert ‘Lorance’ is recorded being fined for crimes against William Hall of Otterburn in 1596. In 1599 Hector Turnbull of Wauchope complained that he and Gilbert, ‘father-brothers of Hector Lorane of that Ilk’ were involved in the slaughter of David Turnbull, heir of Wauchope; they were captured and presented to James Douglas of Cavers, as Sheriff of Roxburghshire, but Douglas refused to enter them in court. John Turnbull of Minto was cautioner for a bond to enter him and Gilbert, this being subscribed at Barnhills. He is probably the Hector ‘of Apputtsyde’ listed in 1601 along with Gib and John, along with several Turnbulls, when they were accused of crimes by an Englishman. He was listed in 1606, along with his brother ‘Auld Gib’, among men declared as fugitives for not attending a Borders Commissioners’ court in Jedburgh. Hector (c.1582–1604) son of Edward and grandson of Hector. He was Laird of Harwood and was succeeded by his grandson Hector, probably son of his own son Edward. A contract of 1598 with James Hamilton describes a loan (of £1000) from Hamilton, and how he will inherit the lands of Harwood and Hawthornside, but with Hamilton receiving the lands if he defaulted on the loan. This was confirmed in a contract of 1600, where he was to be infected in the lands, with the loan from Hamilton now being almost £1200. In 1602 the wardship of his lands was granted to James Hamilton, as well as ‘the marriage of Hector Lorane, now of Harwode’ and the marriage of any other male heirs who might succeed later; he was still a minor at this point, since he was described as ‘apparent of Harwood’. Hamilton also had a charter for the lands of Tythouse and Apotside. It seems likely that in about 1602 he married a daughter of Robert Elliot of Redheugh and Marion Hamilton, who was the sister of James Hamilton (who held the rights of his marriage). However, his wife’s first name is not recorded and it is not known if she remarried after his early death. He was killed ‘with schotis of hagbutis and pistolettis’ as part of the feud between Lady Appotside (his mother, daughter of the Laird of Bedrule) and other local Turnbulls. After his death the lands of Harwood and Hawthornside reverted to the superior, William, Lord Herries, until taken temporarily by James Hamilton. He probably had a single child, Edward, who succeeded. Hector of Harwood (16th/17th C.) heir to his grandfather Hector. He is recorded in a deed of 1631 for the lands of Harwood and Hawthornside; William and Patrick were witnesses to the associated sasine. He was the last Lorraine Laird of Harwood, selling the lands, along with Tythouse and Appotside to Simon Elliot of the Binks in 1637. He married a daughter of Robert Elliot, 16th of Redheugh, whose brother was William Elliot of Hartshaugh.

Dr. Herbert James Bell (1852–1909) son of Rev. Joseph, minister of Tinwald and Caerlavrock. He was great-great-grandson of William, servitor to John Scott of Gorrenberry, and hence was descended from the Lorraines of Harwood. He graduated from Edinburgh University, then spending 3 years in the U.S.A. before commencing in medical practice in England. He moved to Hawick in about 1889, taking over from Dr. Pennman. He lived at 31 Bridge Street. He served as surgeon to the Mechanics’ Friendly Society and was medical officer to the Hawick Post Office. He was also a member of Hawick School Board, was an elder in Hawick Parish Church and served as President of Hawick R.F.C. He was a Unionist in politics and was President of the Hawick Constitutional Club. He once stood as a local councillor. He spent 1902 as a government medical officer on the Gold Coast in Africa. From 1903 he was medical officer for Stobs Camp. His wife was Janet Hewat (1861–1935), who communicated with George Tancred regarding the Lorraines of Harwood. Their children were: Joseph Currie (b.1886), who was also a doctor; Edith Dickson Bell (b.1887), who married David Bell and secondly H.S. Davidson; Janet Hewat (b.1889), born in Hawick, who married
Lorraine

Charles MacLeod; Alice Mary Neilson (b.1891), also born in Hawick, who married Nicholas Vass; and Richard Hewat Bell (b.1894), also born in Hawick, who married Mary Gould. He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. Hugh (13th C.) recorded in about the period 1210–22 when he and his wife Ada, daughter and heiress of Simon Fraser, renewed a charter to Kelso Abbey. This was for the church of Keith-Humbie in East Lothian. His name is given as ‘Hugo Lorens’, which is presumably ‘Lorraine’. However, it is unclear how he was related to other Lorraines. James (d.1346) said to have been a ‘Banneret’ who was killed at the Battle of Neville’s Cross. His name is given as ‘James Loreyn’. It is unclear if he was on the Scottish or English side, and how he might have been related to Eustace, who was Warden of Roxburgh Castle at that time. James (14th C.) witnessed in 1354 to a charter of Robert of Alton relating to the chantry at the Church of Roxburgh. He was also witness to the charter granting the lands of Altonburn to the Kers in 1357/8 and another granting them further lands in Sprouston in 1358. In 1357/8 he was granted an annuity of £20 by Edward III, for having lost most of his Scottish lands on account of supporting England, and this was repeated the following year. In 1357/8 he witnessed a charter for John Copeland and another in 1358 for William of Blakedene, both relating to the lands of Altonburn (and both also witnessed by Eustace). Also in 1358 he was granted the Barony of Caverton in Roxburghshire, and in 1361 received custody of the lands of Old Roxburgh, formerly belonging to the deceased Nicholas de Seymour. In 1365 he witnessed a quitclaim by Joan, wife of John of Copeland. In about 1370 he witnessed a grant of lands in Lessu-den to Melrose Abbey. He is recorded as being ‘de Lorreyne’, ‘Loreyne’, ‘Loreyn’ and ‘Lorreyn’. He was probably directly related to Eustace (perhaps his son or brother), who was recorded in the 1330s to 50s. One possibility is that he was son of Eustace and direct ancestor of the later Lorraines of Harwood. James (15th C.) recorded in 1454/5 when he attempted to recover the lands of Coschogill in the Regality of Drumlanrig from John Blair of Adamton. These had been in the hands of the Blairs since forfeited by Eustace about a century earlier. Given the court case to recover some of the family lands in Dumfriesshire, it seems clear that he was a direct descendant of Eustace, and either was already Laird of Harwood, or succeeded in recovering these lands about the same time. Probably the same James was on an inquest held in Dumfries in 1451/2 regarding the lands of Sir James Douglas, and he was likely also the Lorraine who witnessed a land transfer to a Bailie of Dumfries in 1453. Perhaps the same James was a member of an inquest at Jedburgh Forest in 1439, relating to succession of the lands of John Douglas of Braidhaugh. He was surely related to the nearly contemporary John of Harwood, perhaps his brother. James (15th/16th C.) mentioned in a charter of 1531 to his grandson Hector, by which time he was deceased. His son (and father of Hector of Harwood) may have been John. It has been suggested that he was son of John of Harwood, recorded in 1464/5, and descended from Eustace. He is recorded as ‘Jacobi lorane’ in 1494/5 when William Douglas of Cavers was fined for his non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. Probably the same James ‘Lorein of Herwod’ was part of an assize in 1507. He may have had sons John, Edward, William and Patrick (the latter 3 being witnesses to the sasine in 1531 for Hector, listed in this order); however, there are no documents to confirm any of this. Nevertheless, there is evidence that John was father of Hector, and hence presumably John was his son. James (16th C.) listed in 1547 among residents of ‘Overtoune of Blainslie’ near Melrose. His surname is given as ‘Lorne’, but it seems likely this was Lorraine. It is unclear how he would have been related to other Lorraines, but it has been suggested that he could have been a son of John of Harwood. He married Agnes Lamb and his son Edward had a ‘precept of clare constat’ for his father’s lands in Blainslie in about 1579. James of Appotside (16th/17th C.) 2nd son of Edward of Harwood and Margaret Turnbull. In 1598 he was implicated in the slaughter of David Turnbull of Wauchope near his house. This was no doubt part of the ongoing feud between the Turnbulls and Lorraines. Note that his younger brother William was killed by Turnbulls in 1600 and his older brother Hector in 1604. In 1605 he is recorded as ‘Jacobo Lorraine fratri Hectoris Lorane de Harwode’ when he had remission for being involved in the murder of David Turnbull of Wauchope. In 1606 he was denounced for resisting a messenger that came to apprehend the fugitive William Turnbull of Braidhaugh. In 1606/7 he was recorded as brother of the deceased Hector of Harwood and ‘propinquior agnatus’ (i.e. closer relative) to Hector, on his father Edward’s side; he was thus appointed as tutor to his young nephew Edward. In 1607
Thomas Home, Burgess of Musselburgh was cautioner for him to appear before the Privy Council to answer the charges brought against him by Thomas Turnbull of Wauchope and Hector Turnbull of Barnhills, namely ‘for presenting bended pistolets to their breasts for their slaughter’. Also in 1607 he was son of Edward of Harwood when he petitioned the Privy Council, claiming that he never received the charge and hence did not appear to be warded in Edinburgh Tolbooth. He paid a fine, but it is unclear if he was imprisoned afterwards. In 1618/9 he was witness to a bond between Walter Turnbull of Bedrule and Adam Turnbull of the Townhead of Abbotrule. In 1619 there was a complaint that he had threatened William Ker (younger of Yair) with a hagbut when he was riding near the headwaters of Rule. He was denounced a rebel for failing to appear, but it is unclear whether or not he escaped punishment. There is no information about whether he married or had children. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Ancrum Parish. He had a marriage contract with Isobel Bairnfather in 1687, in which she has sasine of ‘ane nether hous and two rigs of arrable land in nether ancrum’. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Stirches who was given 10 shillings by Wilton Parish in 1704. He may be the person transcribed as ‘Jannet Lorne’ (possibly at Easter Heap) who was given money the previous year. He was probably related to Patrick and William, who were recorded at Heap in 1650. James (17th/18th C.) recorded as ‘sometime in Cleithaugh’ in Southdean Parish. His daughter Bessie was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1708, with the child’s father engaging for the child in his absense. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at ‘Coldfolds’ (probably Cawfaulds) in 1750, Broadlee in 1753 and Clarilaw in 1758. He married Bessie Scott and their children included: Samuel (b.1750); James (b.1753); and Betty (b.1758). The witnesses in 1750 were Thomas Riddell and James Simpson, in 1753 were James Dryden and James Martin and in 1758 were James Dryden and Andrew Blyth. He is probably the James who witnessed a baptism for John Rutherford in 1779. He could be the James who died in Wilton in 1811, with Betty dying in 1812. James (18th/19th C.) married Betty Scott in Wilton Parish in 1809. Jean (d.1769) resident of Doorpool. She is buried in Hobkirk Cemetery, with the funeral of William being recorded the same day. Dr. Joseph Currie (1886–1945) son of Hawick doctor Herbert. He graduated from Edinburgh University and was admitted to the Royal College of Surgeons. It is said that in 1907 he moved to become medical officer for the Burmah Oil Company in Rangoon. During WWI he served in the R.A.M.C. as a Lieutenant and then Captain. Afterwards he was a surgeon in Edinburgh. He married 3 times, to Margaret Kennedy, Alice Wilson and Margaret Young. He had a son Herbert Derrick Bell (1913–82), who played rugby for Scotland. John of Harwood (15th C.) member of the panel in 1464/5 that ruled on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers by Archibald Douglas. He is listed as ‘John Loraine of Harwod’. He was probably a descendant of Eustace. He was surely closely related to the James who was recorded in 1454/5, perhaps his brother. He may have been father of James of Harwood and hence direct ancestor of later Loraines of Harwood. John of Loraine (15th/16th C.) probably son of James and father of Hector. He is probably the John whose seal is recorded among Rutherford charters, showing a lion rampant and the words ‘S iohanes LORAN’. He is recorded in 1493 when the Sheriff, William Douglas of Cavers, was fined for failure to produce him at the Court of the Justiciary in Jedburgh (unless this was a different generation); he was again recorded in 1494/5 for failing to appear. Given that Hector was served heir to his grandfather James in 1531, he must have already been deceased by then. He was explicitly stated to have been father of Hector in the ‘Acta Dominorum’ for 1535/6, relating to a claim made against his son by James Wallace of ‘Cornell’, son and heir of Adam Wallace of Craigie. As well as a son Hector, he may have had children James (connected with Blainslie), John (perhaps father of ‘Jock’s John’) and Bessie (also in Blainslie, married to Michael Dickson). John (16th C.) recorded in 1574 as owner of property in Jedburgh. It has been suggested that he might have been a son of John and hence brother of Hector of Harwood. He may have been father of ‘Jok’s Johnne’. John of Appotside (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1601 with Gib and Hector, along with several Turnbulls, when they were accused of crimes by an Englishman from Morpeth. Probably the same man was ‘Johne Lorayne, called ‘Jok’s Johnne’ in 1605, when listed as a fugitive, along with ‘Auld Gib’; he was recorded there as ‘Johne Lorayne, called Jok’s Johnne’. He was thus son of John, and surely descended from the Loraines of Harwood (perhaps great-great-grandson of James of Harwood). John (17th C.) witness in Hawick in 1657 to the baptism of Beatrix, daughter of Walter and Janet Shortreed. He was presumably related to Walter. John (b.1655) son of George and Janet Fleming and probably descended from the Lorraines of Harwood. It has been suggested that he may have been father of many of the family members associated with Wilton, e.g. George, James and William. However, there is no documentary proof for this. John (17th C.) resident of Rueltownfoot according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. It is unclear how he was related to other Lorraines. John (17th/18th C.) servant to John Scott of Ancrum. In 1712 he was attending the New North Kirk of Edinburgh when accused by the Ancrum Session of fornication with Agnes Cant; he was publicly rebuked in Ancrum in 1716. In 1714 he married Isabel Leith in Lilliesleaf Parish and their son Thomas (b.1716) was baptised in Ancrum. It is unclear how he was related to other Lorraines. John (18th C.) resident of Kirkton and Cavers Parishes. He was in Upper Tofts in 1722, Berryfell in 1725 and Earlside in 1732. He married Margaret Glendinning in Kirkton Parish in 1722. Their children included: Jane (b.1725); and John (b.1732). He could be the John who witnessed a baptism for Walter in Wilton Parish in 1729. He may also have been father of Agnes, who had a child with Thomas Barrie in 1745. John (18th C.) resident of Kirkton and Cavers Parishes. He married Helen Easton in 1751. Their children included: William (b.1752); Helen (b.1754); and John (b.1755). The witnesses in 1752 were Thomas Hay and Thomas Scott and in 1754 were William Lamb (suggesting that he may have been a son of Walter, who reciprocated in witnessing a baptism for William Lamb) and William Noble. The witness in 1755 was George, who was surely a close relative. In 1752 he and Janet Scott in Wiltonburn were accused of fornication by the Wilton Session, and made to pay fines. Perhaps the same John married Bessie Scott (from Kirkton Parish) in 1758 in Wilton Parish. He may be the John who witnessed a baptism for Robert Stewart in 1775. However, he may also be the John for whom the Wilton ‘mortcloth’ fee was paid in 1774. John (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. In 1748 he married Ann Mitchellhill from Cavers. Further children baptised in Cavers Parish were probably also his: Christian (b.1758); Anne (b.1760); and Margaret (b.1769). In at least 1758–69 he was living in Orchard (and hence was surely related to George, who was in Orchard in 1763). He could be the John, son of John, born in 1732. He is probably the John who received poor relief in Kirkton in 1796. John (18th C.) married Margaret Hobkirk in Kirkton Parish in 1760. His surname is written ‘Lorn’ and ‘Loran’. He was at Acreknowe in 1761 and 1764, and Newmill in 1764 and 1768. His children included: Janet (b.1761), who may have had a child Walter with Robert Ballantyne in 1796 Jean (b.1764); John (b.1766); and Margaret (b.1768), who may have married Robert Anderson. He could be the ‘John Loran’ recorded in 1771 when he paid the Hawick Council for 3000 divots (presumably from Hawick Common); along with several other neighbouring farmers he paid a penny per 50 divots. He is probably the John who received poor relief in Kirkton in 1796. He could be the same as one of the other Johns. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His wife was Helen Learmonth and the couple paid a fine to the Session for fornication. Their children included Benjamin (b.1769). The witnesses were Walter Irvine and John Murray. It seems likely he was related to Walter, who witnessed a baptism for Walter Irvine and Isobel Learmonth (probably related to his wife) in Wilton in 1765. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, possibly son of John and Helen Easton. He married Margaret Graham in 1778. He may be the John who died in Wilton Parish in 1806. Lady Margaret nee Turnbull (16th/17th C.) daughter of Sir Thomas of Bedrule and wife of Edward Lorraine, who was Laird of Harwood and Appotside. She may have been called ‘Lady Appotside’, and it is possible her husband gained these lands from her father through their marriage. She was said to be quite quarrelsome, particularly towards her own family, and suffered the wrath of Turnbull Clan, who laid waste to Harwood and Appotside, with matters coming to a head in 1598 and the years following. 200 cows were stolen, along with 600 sheep, 30 horses and ‘the haill in-sicht and plenissing’ of Harwood in 1598. The following year 30 cows and goods were taken from Appotside, which was also burned. And in the years 1599–1605 the woods at Appotside were cut down, including about 2200 trees. Her servant Lyall Brown was killed in 1598 along with William Lorraine in 1600 and Hector Lorraine of Harwood in 1604 (both probably her sons). Apparently she appealed to the Earl of Angus, who offered to repay her out of his own pocket. And although this never transpired, the feud came to an eventual end. She is probably the same Margaret who (along with her son James) brought a court action in 1609 against Andrew Hamilton for intruding on the lands of Tytthehouse. Margaret

(17th C.) listed as a midwife in 1676 among others of the Abbotrule area who were imprisoned in the Tolbooth of Edinburgh for being ‘most active and guilty of ane insolent ryot latly committed upon the person of Mr. George Baptie, minister, in the churchyard of Abbotrule’. This presumably means she objected to having an Episcopalian minister in her parish. The others listed included her daughter Anna Shiel, as well as Agnes and Bessie Shiel (probably related to her) and Elspeth Jackson. In 1684 she was listed at Gatehousecote among persons who failed to appear at court in Jedburgh; others included Andrew Shiel (surely related, and perhaps even her husband) and Grizel (perhaps her sister) there. She is further listed in 1684 along with Grizel and Beatrix (perhaps both her sisters). She may be the Margaret ‘in Graden Barronnie’ who refused to take the oath of abjuration in 1685. Her daughter Euphan was recorded in 1691 (as well as Jean, wife of William ‘Zeaman’, who could be another sister), when she was again referred to as a ‘mid-wyffie in Gettascot’. Probably the same Margaret was resident of Gatehousecote according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Marion (16th/7th C.) see Marion Turnbull Patrick (14th/15th C.) son and heir of Robert, who was Laird of ‘Homylknolle’ (i.e. Hummelknowes). In 1428/9 he resigned his lands into the hands of his overlord in favour of Janet Rutherford, ‘wyfe quhylem’ (probably ‘former wife’) of George Rutherford of Chatto, excepting his own liferent. He was described as her ‘emc’, meaning uncle (usually maternal); however, it has been suggested that she was a Rutherford of Edgerston. The reason was because she had helped him ‘wyn’ his lands of Homylknolle and the indenture was signed at ‘Lynthaulche’ (probably Lintalee). This document is the earliest record of Hummelknowe, and the earliest connection of the Lorraines with the Hawick area. He has a seal that was a ‘lion passant, guardant crowned’. It has been suggested that his children included sons James (juror in 1439), Robert (juror in 1440) and John (Master of Coldstream Priory); however, there is no evidence for this and it seems more likely that James was from the Harwood branch and John from the Berwickshire line. Patrick (16th C.) mentioned in the records of St. Andrews University. He matriculated in 1525, graduated in 1527 and became a licentiate in 1529. It is possible he is the same Patrick who witnessed the charter for Hector of Harwood in 1531, making him perhaps son of James and Hector’s uncle. He could be the same man as the clerk of Glasgow Diocese. Patrick (16th C.) clerk of the Diocese of Glasgow who drew up the sasine for Wolfelee and other lands for David Home of Wedderburn in 1550. Probably the same notary of the Glasgow Diocese wrote a sasine of 1559 relating to lands in Wilton. He may also be the Patrick who witnessed a sasine in 1531 relating to Hector Lorraine; this suggests he was related to Hector, perhaps being his uncle and hence son of James. Probably the same Patrick also witnessed a bond signed in 1546, for entering Elliots as prisoners at Ferniehirst. Patrick (17th C.) listed along with William on a list of Communicants at Easter Heap in 1650. They were probably related to the later Lorraines of Wilton. Robert (14th C.) recorded in 1361 as a juror on an inquest held at Roxburgh regarding the possessions of Sir William Dacre. It seems likely he was closely related to Eustace, perhaps a brother or son. One possibility is that he was a son of Eustace and direct ancestor of the Lorraines of Hummelknowes. Robert of Hummelknowes (15th C.) recorded on a ‘retour of inquest’ made in Hawick in 1424 (for deciding on the succession of lands in Hownam). He was also ‘Robyn Lorane, Lord of Homylkno’, whose son Patrick is recorded in an indenture of 1428/9. It seems likely that he was a descendant of Eustace, perhaps through his son Robert. It is possible that the same Robert was on a retour of inquest for the lands of Samuelston, held at Lauder in 1440. Bailie Robert (15th C.) along with Simon of Routledge, he was Bailie recorded in a sasine of 1453, and hence one of the first 2 known Bailies of Hawick. It is possible he was the same man as the Robert recorded in the 1420s. Robert (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His wife was Margaret Burn and their children included Beatrix (b.1688). The witnesses to the baptism were John Stuart and Robert Howden. It has been suggested that he was a son of George and Janet Fleming, but it seems more likely that he was closely related to the other Ashkirk Lorraines. He may be the gardener Robert, who witnessed a baptism for his brother Alexander in Ashkirk in 1695. Robert (17th/18th C.) married Margaret Story in Cavers Parish in 1707. He may have been ‘in Tour’. It is possible that he was a son of Robert and Margaret Burn. Robert (18th C.) weaver in Weens. His son James was baptised in Hobkirk Parish in 1728. Roger (13th C.) witness to a confirmation of a gift of Ralph Maule to Newbattle Abbey sometime before 1231. In 1234 he was witness for the settlement of a dispute between the Chapter of Moray and Alan Durward. He is also recorded as a juror for Earl Patrick of Dunbar and Earl Walter Comyn of Menteith in about 1245. His surname is written ‘Lohereng’, ‘Lorren’ and ‘Loren’. It is possible he was an ancestor of the Scottish Lorraines, but there is no direct evidence of any connections. Walter (16th/17th C.) tenant in Gatehousecote. In 1619 he had a bond with his good friend Adam Turnbull, tenant of Bonchester Townhead. Given the timing, it is possible that he was a younger son of Edward of Harwood and Margaret Turnbull. It is suggested that he may have been father of Margaret (wife of a Shiel), who is recorded in Gatehousecote in the 1670s to 90s, and perhaps also father of Grizel and Beatrici (who are recorded along with Margaret in 1684), as well as Jean (recorded along with Margaret in 1691). Walter (17th C.) eldest son of Edward. In 1654 he and his father signed a contract with William Elliot of Harwood and the Binks, guaranteeing Elliott rentals from Appotside and its mill in return for a loan of 6,000 merks Scots. He signed his surname as ‘Lorrane’. Probably the same Walter was recorded as in Whyttehaugh (likely in Castleton Parish) as a debtor in the last testament of William Elliot of Harwood and the Binks in 1662. He may also be the Walter ‘of Greins in the parochine of Castletoune’ who had a bond with his brother-in-law Robert Scott of ‘Cartertoune’ in 1667. In 1670 he was tenant in Riccartonfoot when there was a discharge recording that he was unable to pay £220. In 1671 he rented the farm of Powishholm for a year, rented Byreholm in 1673 and Byegate in 1677. There is a tradition that he was killed at the Battle of Bothwell Brig in 1679, but there is no evidence to support this. It is possible he was the Walter ‘Lorran’ recorded in Hawick in the 1650s and 60s. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He may be the same man as the son of Edward, last Laird of Harwood. He is recorded in 1665 when he accused Marion Gillespie of ‘pulling the hair out of his heid’. Probably the same Walter married Janet Shortreed and his children baptised in Hawick included: Isobell (b.1655), who could be the Isobel who married Thomas Laidlaw and lived in Robertson Parish or the Isobell who married George Minto and lived in Ashkirk Parish; and Beatrici (b.1657). Walter, who married Bessie Riddell, was probably also his son. It is also possible that another son was Archibald who was living in Hobbirk Parish when his son James was baptised in Bedrule. The witnesses to the 1655 baptism were John Scott (possibly of Gorrenberry) and Andrew Chisholme (possibly of Parkhill), while the witnesses in 1657 were John Scott and John Lorraine. Walter (17th C.) married Helen Scott in Ashkirk Parish in 1657. It is possible he was a son of Walter and grandson of Edward of Lorraine and Margaret Turnbull. It is possible that the Helen who married William Thomson in Selkirk in 1697 was his daughter. Walter (d.1679) resident of Abbotrule Parish. He was a Covenanter who was killed at Bothwell Bridge. Walter (17th C.) probably son of Walter and Janet Shortreed. He is recorded in 1681 as ‘in Hardine’ (probably Harden in Liddesdale) when he had a bond borrowing £3 from Walter Scott of Wauchope. He is recorded at Kirndean in 1681 and 1682 in the Buccleuch estates rental book, when it is clear that a lot of his livestock had died. He rented Greens in 1682, but it not recorded what happened to him after that. He married Bessie Riddell and their children son William was baptised in 1682, with witnesses. John Riddell (probably brother or father of Bessie) and William Wilson. If he was grandson of Edward of Harwood, then it is possible that his wife was related to the Riddells of Bewlie (who were associated with that family). Walter (18th C.) resident of Cavers. In 1714 he was in East Cavers and in at least 1717–24 in Denholm. His children included: Ann (b.1714); Thomas (b.1717); Margaret (b.1721); and George (b.1724). He may be the Walter who married Margaret Miller of Cauldmill in 1705. He may also be the ‘Walter Lorraine in Kirkton’ whose son John (b.1706) was baptised in Cavers. It is unclear how he was related to other Lorraines. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He is recorded at Stirches in 1724, 1727 and 1729. He married Bessie Graham in 1722 and their children included: George (b.1724); William (b.1727), who may have married Margaret Hope in Dumfries in 1755; and Agnes (b.1729), who may have married John Armstrong in 1751 and could be the Agnes who died in 1781. The witnesses in 1724 were Walter Scott and John Scott and in 1727 were James Douglas and James Scott. John Lorraine (along with William Lamb) witnessed the baptism in 1729 and must have been a close relative. In 1727 he witnessed a baptism for William Lamb. He was surely related to other Wilton Lorraines. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He may be the Walter (b.1733), son of William and Helen Ovens. He married Margaret Smith in 1760 (apparently after the birth of their 1st daughter) and she died in Hawick in 1781. Their children included: Margaret (b.1759); and Mary (b.1764). The witnesses in 1764 were Walter Ballantyne and James Wilson. He could be the Walter who witnessed a baptism for James Irvine in Wilton Parish in 1765. He was probably the Walter who had a child die of smallpox in Hawick in 1775. He could be the deceased Walter whose daughter Margaret died in 1777. Walter (1742–1817) eldest son of William and Janet Clerk. His father came from Nether Tofts in Kirkton Parish. He was born at Barrgiles in Dumfriesshire. He was a farmer at Oakwoodhill and married Mary, daughter of farmer Francis Currie. Their children included: William (1772–1842); Francis (1773–1815); John (1775–1849); Andrew (1778–87); James (1781–1804); Walter (1783–1872); Joseph (1785–1809); Margaret (1787–92); and Andrew (again, 1790–92). The family are buried at Kirkconnel. William (14th C.) gave a wadset to Alan Lauder in 1386 for his lands of ‘Lorymeslands’. This could be simply ‘Lorraineslands’ and were on the north side of the Lauder Water. He is recorded as ‘Willm. of Lorem of Swynstoun’. It is unclear how he might have been related to other contemporary Lorraines. He may have been a son or other close relative of Eustace, but given that the name ‘William’ was not common in the family immediately afterwards, it seems unlikely he was an ancestor of later local Lorraines. William (15th/16th C.) holder of the lands of Hangingside (i.e. what became Hawthornside) before being granted to Richard Hangingside (before 1488), apparently because he had transferred his allegiance to the English King. William (16th C.) witness to a sasine for Hector’s lands of Harwood and Hawthornside in 1531. He was thus probably related to Hector, perhaps being his uncle, which would make him a son of James. Edward was listed before him and Patrick after him (and were surely related). William (1586/7–1600) son of Edward and Margaret Turnbull. He was killed at the age of 13 in the woods of Lorraine. This was part of a feud between local Turnbuls and his mother ‘Lady Appotside’. His elder brother Hector of Harwood was also killed 4 years later. William (17th C.) described as ‘in Cavers’, along with George, in a Hawick magistrates court case of 1642, when Samuel Rutherford accused a large group of his drinking friends of stealing his wallet. His name came before that of George. William (17th C.) listed along with Patrick on a list of Communicants at Easter Heap in 1650. They were probably related to the later Lorraines in Wilton. He may be the William who witnessed a baptism for Andrew Leiden in Hawick in 1640; the other witness was Simon Adamson, who also witnessed a baptism for George in 1655, suggesting he was related to George and Walter and hence potentially a son of Edward and Maisie Elliot. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He may have been a son of George and Janet Fleming. He married Dorothy Duncan and their children included Mary (b.1697), who was ‘begoten in fornication’. His wife may be the ‘Dorothea Lorrain’ who was given poor relief by Ashkirk Parish in 1713, 1714, 1715 and 1716 and was ‘in Sinton’ when buried in 1716. William (b.1682) son of Walter and Bessie Riddell, he was born in Hawick Parish. He was ‘servitor’ to John Scott of Gorrenberry, who held lands at Nether Tofts. In 1707 in Edinburgh he married Bessie Buchanan, widow of writer Robert ‘Cristall’; she was daughter of wright Duncan Buchanan and married her 1st husband in 1698. This suggests that he was spending some of his time in Edinburgh, where presumably his master also had a house. His son William was baptised in Kirkton in 1709, when he was recorded being in Nether Tofts. Margaret, baptised in Cavers Parish in 1721, was probably also his child. There were also other children baptised in Edinburgh: Elizabeth (b.1708); ‘Sibbillett’ (b.1709); Walter (b.1711); Bessie (b.1712); and Anne (b.1714). Most probably died in childhood and are buried in Edinburgh. He was later a stabler in the South West Parish of Edinburgh and: in 1718 married Katherine Paterson; in 1722 had bans proclaimed to marry Katherine Ogilvie; and in 1723 married Christian Kyle. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1712 he was gardener in Whitfield and in 1716 he may have been at Brieryyards. In 1712 he married Elspeth (or Elizabeth) Brown from Robertson Parish, daughter of Robert Brown, from Kirkton Parish. Their children included John (b.1716). His wife could be the Elspeth Brown who was buried in Wilton in 1747. He may have been a son of John and brother of George and Walter. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, recorded at Borthaugh in most of the baptismal entries 1723–36. However, he may have been at Newton in 1733. He married Helen Ovens and their children included: Walter (b.1723); Margaret (b.1725); Bessie (b.1727), who may have married Robert Wilson and died in 1778; Elizabeth (b.1729); Francis (b.1731); Walter (again, b.1733); and Helen (b.1736). The

witnesses in 1725 and 1729 were George Bell and Walter Riddell, in 1727 were Robert Cowan and James ‘Beasly’, in 1731 were George Bell and John Scott, in 1733 were Patrick Scott and John Hume and in 1736 were Walter Riddell and Thomas Kerr. He may be the William whose death is recorded in Wilton in 1777. William (c.1707–90) son of William, he was baptised in Kirkton Parish in 1709. In 1740 he married Janet Clerk in Hawick; at that time he was still living at Nether Tofts. Soon afterwards he moved to Cadgillside farm at Chapelknowe near Canonbie, where his first son Walter (father of Dr. William) was born in 1742. Other children included: Janet (b.1744); Andrew (1746–1819); William (b.1749); John (1751–1829); James (1753–1822); and Margaret (1755–1833). His wife is recorded at Barnes when she had poor relief in 1889 and also several more times until her death in 1800. William (d.1769) resident of Doorpool. He is buried in Hob Kirk Cemetery, with the funeral of Jean being recorded the same day. Dr. William (1772–1841) born at Chapelknowe near Canonbie, he was son of Walter and grandson of William, who was from Kirkton Parish. He was classics master at Selkirk Grammar School, then Rector of Jedburgh Grammar School and is described in the book ‘A Borders Schoolmaster’ (2000) by Audrey Mitchell. He was later Master at Glasgow High School. In 1803 he married Dorothea (or ‘Dora’), daughter of Thomas Scott of Bonchester. 3 of his sons were Doctors at Glasgow University (formerly spelled ‘Loran’, ‘Lorane’, ‘Lorain’, ‘Lorraine’, ‘Lorayne’, ‘Loreen’, ‘Loreyn’, ‘Loreyne’, ‘Lorn’, ‘Lorrain’, ‘Lorrane’, ‘Lorreyn’, ‘Lorren’, ‘Lorrence’, ‘Lorrning’, ‘Lorrorn’, ‘Lowrran’, etc.).

the Lorraines (θu-ło-ränz) n. family that was once important in the Borders, particularly in Rulewater. The origin of the name is surely the region of Lorraine in north-eastern France, perhaps coming over to Britain at the time of William the Conqueror. The same French family from the Duchy of Lorraine provided a later connection with Scotland through Mary of Guise, who was daughter of Claude of Lorraine, becoming Queen Consort of James V and mother of Mary, Queen of Scots. It has also been claimed that the family is connected with the lands of Deloraine in the Ettrick valley. The early history is very unclear, as is the connection with the Barons of this name who inhabited part of Northumberland (including, confusingly, the farm of Hawick), specifically Kirkharle. Eustace, recorded in the 1330s to 50s, may have been an early ancestor of the Roxburghshire family. There were Lorraines at Hummelknowes near Hawick in the 15th century and Robert Lorraine was one of the earliest recorded Bailies of Hawick, in 1453. The Roxburghshire Lorraines held the lands of Harwood from at least the late 15th century until 1637. The name occurs several times among lists of men accused of mounting raids into England in the 16th century. The arms of Lorraine of Harwood are shown as 3 green laurel leaves on a silver background in 1542.

Lorraine Wud (lō-rən-wud) n. former name for a wood near Harwood or Appotside in the Rule valley, named after the family that once owned the land. It is recorded in 1606 that young William Lorraine was killed ‘within the wood of Lorane’ by a gang of Turnbulls, this being part of an ongoing feud with his mother Margaret, ‘Lady Appotside’, herself a Turnbull by birth.

loss (losh) interj., arch. an exclamation of wonder, dismay or remonstration (perhaps a shortened form of ‘Lord save us’) – ‘His words they were sweeter than honey, But, losh! they were a’ he could gie’ [JoHa], ‘Losh man! hae done wi’ senseless clatter, Will siccan whingeing mend the matter?’ [RDW], ‘Losh chaps, Aw mind yince wi’ senseless clatter, Will siccan whingeing mend the matter?’ [RDW], ‘Losh mei, Aw dinna ken at a’, but ca’ him nae neebor o’ mine’ [JEDM], ‘Losh sakes mei! the thocht that come seipin, are fit ti gar aa the traunches an the fashes gang leike the snaf off the deike in a thowe’ [ECS], ‘Losh! The scene is fair entrancin’, And draws a smile’ [RH], ‘…His head, losh me, is no’ that grey, Sae he may get a couthie kimmer’ [TCh], ‘Losh he wammelt and tumbled ower on to the flure’ [UB], ‘My better half’s just come in wi a bang. And, losh man, her friends drove hame in a carriage’ [TCh], ‘But, losh me, what’s a’ this spread o’er And all the cause of gurgling mirth?’ [WFC] (local variants noted by G. Watson include ‘losh man!’, ‘losh mei!’, ‘losh sake!’ and ‘losh sakes mei!’; this is a euphemism for ‘Lord’, perhaps influenced by other exclamations, such as ‘gosh’).

loss (los, lōs) v. to lose – ‘deh loss the heid’, ‘A hope it rains the whole weekend A hope ye loss yer flag …’ [T], ‘…Loss hauf their power the head to dile, An’ hau the heart’ [JoHa], ‘Let them wha taste a social glass, Ne’er loss the time o’ rising’ [JoHa].

lossit (lo-see’, -si’) pp., arch. lost – ‘…promiseist be him to bring haill, saif and sound to Hawick, quhilk he brak, drownet, and lossit be the way’ [BR1652].
Lot (lo') n., arch. an assessed contribution for a common purpose – ‘...that each inhabitant who pays not stent nor lott shall be lyable for the same price ...’ [BR1722] (also written ‘lott’).

Lothian (lō-thee-in) n. general geographic name for the area around Edinburgh. Latterly it has included the counties of Linlithgow, Midlothian and Haddington, but it formerly applied to all the eastern part of the Lowlands, even including Roxburghshire.

Lothian (lō-thee-in) n. Joseph (18th C.) gardener in Hawick. He married Janet Scott and their children included: Joanna (b.1736); Peter (b.1738); and George (b.1742). The witnesses in 1738 were Walter Scott of Newton and Patrick Scott, younger of Alton, suggesting that his wife was related to these branches of the Scotts. The 1742 witnesses were merchant Charles Tudhope and mason James Harkness (formerly ‘Lowthian’).

Lothian and Border Horse (lō-thee-in-an-bōr-dur-hors) n. local Territorial Yeomanry Regiment. It was generally for the wealthier volunteers who had their own horses. The regiment was formed in 1816 and amalgamated again in 1879, and were renamed the Lothian and Border Horse in 1908. It grew out of the Royal Edinburgh Volunteer Light Dragoons, set up in 1797 (with Sir Walter Scott as its first quartermaster) and the East Lothian Yeomanry Cavalry, set up at the same time by the Duke of Buccleuch. The 2 merged in 1800 to form the Royal Midlothian Yeomanry Cavalry. It disbanded in 1838, but the 2 units reformed in 1840s, and amalgamated again in 1879, and were renamed the Lothian and Border Horse in 1908. C Squadron was based in Hawick, with detachments in the main towns of Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire. Many men volunteered for service in this regiment during WWI. In 1921 armoured cars replaced horses and from 1924 it was associated with the 4th Royal Tank Regiment. It became the 1st and 2nd Lothians and Border Horse in 1939, and saw action in North Africa, France and Italy during WWII. In 1956 it was amalgamated with other regiments to form the Queen’s Own Lowland Yeomanry and was again disbanded in 1967, although resurrected as the Scottish Yeomanry from 1992-99. ‘War Record of the 4th Battalion Kings Own Scottish Borderers and Lothian and Border Horse’ (1920) was written by W.S. Brown. Papers from the regiment are in the National Library of Scotland.

Lothian’s Regiment (lō-thee-inz-re-jee-min’) n. another name for the Teviotdale Regiment.

Lothian Street (lō-thee-in-street’) n. street on the high ground by Loch Park. The main buildings were erected in 1875, with several additional dwellings in the following few years. There was also part of the Lyle & Scott factory there. However, part of the east side was demolished in 1977 and made into a car park. It was named after Schomberg Henry Kerr, 9th Marquess of Lothian.

Lough (lowk) n., arch. a lough.

Lough (lowk) n. Andrew (15th/16th C.) resident of Selkirk. He is recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books for 1535 when, along with several others, he was accused of taking grain from ‘le Schaw’ belonging to John Hall. In 1538 he had George Robson, John Robson, Walter Veitch, David Do[we?] and Walter Scott removed from his 20 merklands in Synton. Oliver (1826-1916) son of Walter, who was a carrier around Southdean. In 1848 he married Agnes, daughter of William Oliver (hind at Langraw). In 1851 they were living with his in-laws at Langraw Scaur. Around the late 1850s they emigrated to Nevada, U.S.A. His children included Walter (b.1848), William (b.1850), Betsey (b.1854) and Henry (b.1856). He died in Nebraska. Walter ‘Wattie’ (b.c.1785-1864) son of James and Christian Oliver, he was born in Jedburgh Parish. He was a carrier at Letham in Southdean Parish in 1841 and in 1851 was carrier and grocer at Gatehousecote. In 1861 he was listed as ‘Formerly Carrier’ at Old Gatehousecote. He ran a cart to Liddesdale in the days before the railway. He married Elizabeth (Betty) Storie in 1819. Their children were: James (b.1820), who married Euphemia Telfer; George (b.1821); Isabella (b.1823), who married George Telfer; Oliver (b.1826), who emigrated to the U.S.A.; Walter (b.1829), who married Isabella Rutherford; Thomas (b.1832), who was a labourer at Highend in 1851; and Mary (b.1834), who married Andrew Smith. Most of his children were born in Oxnam Parish and some were christened at the Free Kirk in Jedburgh. He died in Hobkirk (formerly written ‘Louche’).

loupered (low-purd, -pur’) adj., pp., arch. clotted, curdled – ‘...Sones on the girdle, made wi’ loupered milk, A jug o’ cream still warm frae the byre’ [WL] (also ‘lappert’ etc.; cf. lapper and loppert).

the Loupin Stane (th-low-pin-stān) n. small-standing stone in an isolated area in Craik Forest, a little over a kilometer to the west-northwest from Wolfcleuchhead. The dimensions are 0.8 m long by 35 cm wide at the top, narrowing to a point, and just 5 cm thick. On one side are carved 2 heads and lettering, while on the other is inscribed ‘Wolfcleuchhead’. It is possible this is a mounting step from the steading of Wolfcleuchhead, moved to its present position at some point (see also lowpin-on stane).

the Loupin Stanes (th-low-pin-stänz) n. small stone circle near Eskdalemuir, not far from ‘the Girdle Stanes’. There are 12 stones in an oval about 18 m across, including 2 larger ones that provide the ‘entrance’. The popular name comes the story that locals used to try to leap between these two stones until someone’s leg was broken (although they are probably too far apart for this to be feasible).

lourd (loord) adv., poet. rather, liked – ‘I wad lourd have a winding-sheet, And helped to put it ower his head, Ere he had been disgraced lourd have had a winding-sheet, And helped to put it ower his head, Whan he ower Liddel his men did lead!’ [T].

the Lousy Drain (thu-low-zee-drän) n. popular name for an open ditch in Hobkirk Parish in the 19th century. It ran down from Kirknow farm through the Parish school playground, and served as an open sewer, which older boys would try to jump over.

lout (low’) v., poet. to bend, stoop – ‘...Laigh doun I louted on my knees, An’ preed the Hunter’s pool’ [ECB], ‘The fairies wad hear, quo’ bonny Jeanye Roole, And wi’ louting my back is sair’ [JTe], ‘Lang syne it was, Thon souchin sim’-doun I louted on my knees, An’ preed the Hunter’s pool’ [ECB], ‘The fairies wad hear, quo’ bonny Jeanye Roole, And wi’ louting my back is sair’ [JTe], ‘Lang syne it was, Thon souchin sim’-doun I louted on my knees, An’ preed the Hunter’s pool’ [ECB], ‘The fairies wad hear, quo’ bonny Jeanye Roole, And wi’ louting my back is sair’ [JTe], ‘Lang syne it was, Thon souchin sim’-doun I louted on my knees, An’ preed the Hunter’s pool’ [ECB], ‘The fairies wad hear, quo’ bonny Jeanye Roole, And wi’ louting my back is sair’ [JTe], ‘Lang syne it was, Thon souchin sim’-doun I louted on my knees, An’ preed the Hunter’s pool’ [ECB], ‘The fairies wad hear, quo’ bonny Jeanye Roole, And wi’ louting my back is sair’ [JTe], ‘Lang syne it was, Thon souchin sim’-doun I louted on my knees, An’ preed the Hunter’s pool’ [ECB], ‘The fairies wad hear, quo’ bonny Jeanye Roole, And wi’ lousing my back is sair’ [JTe].

Lovat see Simon Fraser

Lovat Mill (lu-vi’-mil) n. factory of Teviotex at 15 Commercial Road.

Lovel (lu-vul) n. Agnes (13th/14th C.) listed in the Ragman Rolls of 1296 as ‘Agneys Lovel qe fu la femme Henry de counte de Rokesburg’, so she was presumably the wife of an already deceased Henry. Maurice, Parson of ‘Little Cavers’, who also appears on the Roll, may be her son or other relative. It is possible she is the same as the Eva, widow of Henry, who is recorded in 1294. Asceline (d.1119) probably the ancestor of the Lovels. His father was likely to have been Robert de Breheval, who held the castle of Ivery (or Yvery) in Normandy and came to England with William the Conqueror. He was a vassal of William de Breteuil and his surname was ‘Goeló’ or ‘Goel’ (which is probably a variant of ‘Guelph’ or ‘Whelp’, i.e. the wolf-cub’, which became ‘Luppellus’ in the Latinised version of French-Norman). He may also have been known as ‘Gouel de Perceval’ and ‘Gouel de Yvery’, with his nickname ‘Lupus’ coming from his violent demeanour. Although he spent much of his life in Normandy, he held several estates in Somerset, as well as Titmarsh in Northamptonshire. He commanded Norman forces at the siege of Mante in 1087. He also had a lengthy series of sieges involving his liege, the Earl of Breteuil, from whom he eventually gained Ivery. It is said that he tortured the Earl of Breteuil, until he yielded and gave his daughter Isobel, along with a large dowry. He is said to have had 7 sons, including: Richard, who died before him; Robert, who succeeded, but only for a couple of years; William, who succeeded after Robert; John of Harptree, ancestor of the Barons of Harptree Gournay; and Roger, called ‘Balbus’ or ‘the Stutterer’ who was Lord of Grandisilva in Normandy. He also had a daughter, who married Radulfus Rufus. Baldwin (11th/12th C.) of Tintenhull, one of the earliest recorded Lovels. However, these early generations are confused, and it is unclear how he was related to the Lovels of Yvery. He probably succeeded his father Ralph in 1121 and was father of Ralph and possibly also Margaret (although she may have been Ralph’s wife). Henry (12th C.) possibly the Henry Lovel who was said to have been first given the Barony of Hawick, perhaps in the 1130s, and who is among those who encouraged King David to invade England in 1138. However, these generations are quite confused, and it is unclear whether he even existed. Henry (d.c.1194) Lord Cary, son of Ralph and Margaret, or possibly 3rd son of William Gouel de Perceval, and hence brother of Ralph. He succeeded in about 1159. He may also have had a brother, Thomas. He was probably born at Castle Cary, but also held the Barony of Hawick, and is likely to have split his time between England and Scotland. He paid feudal fees in Somerset in 1162. During the time of Robert, Dean of Bath (i.e. before 1166) he had his gift to the Priory of Brunton confirmed. He also witnessed several other grants in Somerset in the latter part of the 12th century. He was ‘Henry Luvel’ in 1166 when he witnessed a charter by King William to Robert de Brus. He is recorded as Baron of Hawick when he was a witness in 1166 and 1190. He was probably also the ‘henrici lupelli’ (i.e. Henry, Little Wolf) who is recorded in a charter (confirmed by Pope Lucius III in 1183, Pope Gregory
Lovel

VIII in 1187 and Pope Clement III in 1188) giving 2 oxgates of land at ‘Brancheulla’ (i.e. Branxholme) to the canons of St. Andrews. This was witnessed by the first 3 clergymen known to be connected with Hawick. This same grant of 2 oxgates of land in Branxholme to St. Andrews Priory in about 1175 was mentioned in a list of gifts in 1206, 1216, 1246 and 1248. In 1190 he was recorded in the Pipe Rolls for Dorset and Somerset. He married Alice de Cary, and his sons were Ralph (who died without issue) and Henry (who succeeded to the Barony of Hawick). Other children may have included Maurice and Richard, who exchanged these 2 oxgates for other nearby lands in about the 1190s. This Richard may have also succeeded the next Henry, and was therefore either his son or grandson. Henry (d.c.1216)

Lord Cary, probably younger son of Henry, he succeeded his brother Ralph, who died in 1207. In 1197 he was assessed for fees for the Norman army. In the period 1198–1202 he was appointed as attorney in a case by Ralph de Trubleville. In 1207 he settled a case brought by Matilda, his brother Ralph’s widow, over lands she claimed she had been given in dower; this included 1/3 of the family’s barony in Scotland (presumably Hawick), but she settled for the manor of ‘Hunewic’ (i.e. Honeywick near Castle Cary), together with money and livestock. In 1208 he paid 300 marks for the livery of his lands, and still held some Somerset lands jointly with his mother Alice and sister-in-law Maud (the same as Matilda). In 1210 he paid King John to avoid going on the expedition to Ireland. He married Christiania and was succeeded by his brother (although some accounts say son) Richard. However this genealogy may be confused, and there may be another extra generation of Henrys and/or Richards. He may be the Henry who was among witnesses to a charter for Gilmerston in the Glasgow chartulary in the reign of William. His widow ‘Cristina’ secondly married Richard Cotel; in about 1222 she complained that Richard ‘Luvel’ (probably her brother-in-law, or possibly her son) had dispossessed her of some of her dower lands. In 1248 she complained again about being removed from her dower lands, and there was a complicated agreement over several lands, including ‘Honeywyk’ (i.e. Honeywick near Castle Cary). Henry (d.1262/3) of Castle Cary and Hawick, 2nd son of Richard, his elder brother William dying before their father. He married Eve (or Eva), who died in 1294. They had sons Richard and Hugh, who both succeeded. They also had daughters Alicia (the elder) and Cristiano (d.bef. 1264), who were both unmarried. Little else is known about him and it is unclear whether he played any direct role in the Hawick area. He may be the ‘Sir H.’ who witnessed an agreement in Somerset in 1256. In 1263 his son and heir Richard did homage to the English King and received his father’s lands. However in 1264 there was an inquest into the age of Richard’s brother Hugh, and whether he should be heir of ‘Kari Lovel’; his widow ‘Lady Eva Lovel’ is also mentioned. Also in 1264 his daughter Alicia brought a case against Hugh, complaining that he had tried to dispossess her from the lands that she and her deceased sister Cristiano had been granted. His widow Eva is further referred to in 1294 when her lands and her son Hugh’s lands were given to the custody of John de Soulis. Hugh (d.c.1290) of Castle Cary and Hawick, brother of Richard and 2nd son of Henry. In 1264 there was an inquiry into his age, since his brother Richard had died, and so he succeeded to the barony of ‘Kari Lovel’ (i.e. Cary). Also in 1264 his sister Alicia accused him of dispossessing her of a manor in Sussex, given to her and her deceased sister Cristiano; he was charged to allow his sister to keep her farm. He was recorded as Baron of Hawick in 1268. A 1268 plea against him for restoring a watercourse at Castle Cary mentions that his grandfather was Richard. A further case in 1268 involves his sister-in-law Cecilia and the land of ‘Wynkanton’. He was recorded as lord of ‘karycastel’ in the 1270s, in 1274 was ‘Sir Hugh’ of Cary when he made an agreement with the Prior of Bruton, and was ‘Hugone Luvel’ when he witnessed a grant for Bruton Priory. He married Eleanor (or ‘Alianors’) and their children were: Sir Richard, who succeeded in 1303 when still a minor, becoming Lord of Castle Cary and Baron of Hawick; and Olivia, who married John de Gournay. He was recorded in 1291 when his widow was directed not to re-marry without the King’s permission and John de Soulis was given custody of 2/3 of his lands until his heir reached majority. Additional lands and privileges of his (including the church of ‘Stoketone’) were granted to John de Soulis in 1292/3, and also in his lands were confirmed to John de Soulis, along with the lands which Eva Lovel (his mother) had held until his majority. Hugh (13th/14th C.) recorded in an English record of 1306 as a supporter of Robert the Bruce who had been sent to a prison. It is unclear how he was related to the other Lovels of the time. Sir James (c.1316–42) only son of Richard the first Lord of Castle Cary. He married Elizabeth or Isabel around 1328, but died before his father. Their children were Richard (who died young) and Muriel (who inherited the titles and married Nicholas Seymour). Sir William of Douglas had a crown charter of 1341 for all his forfeited lands in Eskdale and Ewesdale. In 1342 his widow is recorded having livery of 2 manors in Somerset, which had been given to him by his father in 1328/9. Sir John (13th C.) recorded ‘as magistro Johanne Lovel’ on an assize in Cumberland in 1292, then in a court case in Newcastle in 1293, relating to affairs in Scotland. He was also recorded in the same way in 1296, in a document relating to equipping Edward I’s expedition into Scotland. He was certainly English, but it is unclear where he came from. He was also recorded as ‘the marshal’ who had come to pacify the dispute between the Welsh and English in Edinburgh. Lawrence (13th C.) recorded (probably early) in the period 1259–86 in a document relating to King Alexander at Lanark. He served as some kind of soldier. It is unclear how he was related to other Scottish Lovels. Margaret (d. bef. 1164) wife of Ralph. It is unknown what her maiden name was, but not impossible she was also a Lovel. She may have held the lands of Hawick after her husband’s death. Her son and heir was Henry. She secondly married Thomas of London (who also married Escina of Mow); with the consent of her sons Henry and Thomas she granted ‘Ughtredshaghe’ (probably Outerside) to Jedburgh Abbey at its foundation, as confirmed in about 1170. Maurice (13th C.) probably son of Henry. Along with Richard he exchanged these 2 oxgangs for other nearby lands in about the 1190s. He may be the Maurice who witnessed an undated grant by Richard, Lord of Cary, to the Priory of Bruton, with another witness being Henry, son of Richard. Maurice (13th C.) recorded as ‘Morice Louel, persone del Eglise de Petyt Cares, del comte de Rokesburgh’ (i.e. ‘parson of Little Cavers’) in the Ragman Rolls of 1296. In a list drawn up in 1777 he is transcribed as ‘Mauricius Lunel, Parsons ecclesia de Parva Caures’. The ‘Agneys Louel’, widow of Henry, who also appears on the Ragman Rolls may have been his mother. Note that there was another Maurice a generation or 2 earlier, probably brother of the Richard who died in 1253. Muriel (b.1331/2) daughter of James, who died in 1342, she succeeded her grandfather Sir Richard in 1351, probably becoming Baroness Lovel. It is unclear if she inherited the Barony of Hawick, although control of the lands was certainly no longer in Lovel hands by her time. She married Nicholas, Lord St. Maur. Ralph (d.c.1121) one of the earliest known Lovels. He held Castle Cary in 1107. He was probably the son of Walter de Douai, Baron Bampton, who held the Castle at the time of the Domesday Book. However, these early generations are very uncertain, and it is unclear how he may have been related to the other contemporary Lovels. He may have been succeeded by Baldwin. Ralph (d.c.1159) of Tintenhull and Castle Cary, son of William (although possibly related to the near contemporary Baldwin, since accounts of these generations are very uncertain). He may have been the first family member to adopt the surname ‘Lovel’, based on the family nickname ‘Lupellus’, meaning ‘Little Wolf’ (which was also applied to his brothers Henry and William). He appears to have also had the nickname ‘Simelt’. Along with his father he was part of the rebellion against King Stephen of England, and defended Castle Cary in a siege in 1152. He is said to have married a daughter of Henry de Novo Mercatu, from whom he received Dunkerton in Somerset. This wife could have been Margaret, who appears to have been the heiress of Hawick (and so possible the barony was part of her dower lands), and died before 1164; it is not impossible that she was the Margaret who secondly married Thomas de London. He was succeeded by Henry, who was probably his brother (or possibly his son). He may be the Ralph who restored the grant of lands to the Priory of Bruton that his father had taken away; this was witnessed by ‘Thoma Lupell’, who was surely a close relative. Ralph (d.c.1207) eldest son of Henry, from whom he succeeded, before in turn being succeeded in the Barones of Castle Cary and Hawick by his brother Henry. His name is also recorded as ‘Rodolph’. He married Maud (or Matilda), daughter of Henry de Newnarche. In 1207, after he had died without issue, ‘Matilildis’ claimed her dower lands and made a settlement with her brother-in-law Henry over rights to the manor of ‘Hunewic’ (probably ‘Honeywick’). In about 1222 his widow was now married to Ralph Lebutiler, when she and Christina (widow of Henry) complained that Richard had dispossessed them of their inheritance, including some lands in Scotland. Richard (12th C.) of Castle Cary and Hawick, possibly son of Henry. He married Alice and their sons were William (who died young) and Henry. He is probably also the ‘Ricardi Lupelli domini de Hawic’ recorded in the Register of the Priory of St. Andrews in about the 1190s. There he exchanged 2 ‘bovates’ (i.e. ox-gates) of land between Whames and Whithope to the canons of St. Andrews, in exchange for lands in ‘Brancheshelm’ (i.e. Branxholm) which had been conferred by his father Henry. The boundaries of these lands are given, and are interesting in preserving several lost place names, namely ‘anesotd terre’, ‘chestriss’, ‘farmop’, ‘langesideburne’ and ‘quikenne’. He may also be the ‘Richard Luvell, lord of Cary’ who confirmed a gift to the Priory of Bruton, and whose confirmation was witnessed by his son Henry, as well as Maurice (who could have been his brother). Note that there are several Richards, Henrys and Ralphs at about this time, and so the details of the family tree are hard to disentangle. Richard (d.1253) probably son of Henry, and brother of Ralph and Henry. However, given the length of time that elapsed, it is also possible he was son of an additional Richard, and hence grandson of Henry. He was probably the Richard ‘Luvell’ who was involved in a land transaction relating to Biddesham near Cary in 1203/4. He succeeded Henry in 1218, paying £100 for the livery of Cary and the other Somerset estates. In about 1222 he was described as tenant when there was a claim against him by Christina, widow of Henry. She had remarried to Richard Cotel, and claimed that he had dispossessed her of her dower lands of ‘Kary, Wreketon and Pidecumbe’, as well as other lands and rights. Also mentioned was Matilda, formerly wife of Ralph ‘Luvell’, and now wife of Ralph Lebutilter, who also held lands in inheritance. These disagreements included ‘the land which Richard Luvell held in Scotland’. In 1231 he had a charter for demesne lands of Cary and also witnessed another charter. He is further recorded in the 1230s and 40s regarding knights service. In about 1237 he gave agreement that the Priory of Bath should hold the rights to the church of Castle Cary, as granted by his father Henry. In 1248 Christina ‘Luvell’ (stated to have been the wife of his brother) complained again that he owes her money and dower lands, ‘as well in England as in Scotland’. A court case against him in 1255 was adjourned because he was deceased by then. He married Alice, whose surname is unknown. After she was widowed, her marriage was granted to William Berkeley, but he married someone else and so she then married Nicholas de Havershams.
married Roger Rouhaut of Aston Rowant. He is probably the Richard whose seal bore a lion rampant on a background of crosses. The failure of the male line here ended the direct succession of more than 2 centuries. Robert (d.1121) son of Ascelin Gouel de Percival and brother of William (at least in some accounts of the early Lovels). He probably inherited Castle Cary from his father in about 1119, but died soon afterwards. In 1119 he took up arms against Henry I, but negotiations, involving Radulfus Rufus (his brother-in-law) led him to switch allegiance to the King. He may be the ‘Robertus Luvellus’ who witnessed a gift to the canons of Bruton. He left no issue and was succeeded by his brother William. Roger (13th C.) son of Roger. In 1242 he and Richard de Dreycoyte confirmed a grant of lands to the Canons of Bruton; ‘Domino Ricardo Lupello’ was the first witness and hence probably a close relative. He is recorded as ‘Rogero Lupello’ when he witnessed an agreement with the Priory of Bruton in 1253. Probably the same Roger was also recorded in some other Somerset documents at about the same time. Thomas (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 among men for whose murder William Clerk ‘apud ecclesiam foreste’ (i.e. at the Kirk of the Forest) had remission a the Justice- aire in Selkirk. He may have been one of the last men of this surname in the region. William (d.c.1155) of Castle Cary, also described as Earl of Yvery and ‘Lupellus’, his surname may have been ‘Gouel de Perceval’, with ‘Lovell’ being first adopted by his son from the ‘Lupellus’ nickname. It is said that his nickname was the diminutive form of ‘Lupus’, which had been attached to his father. In some accounts of the early Lovels he is the son of Ascelin Gouel de Perceval and younger brother of Robert, from whom he succeeded; however, these early generation are very uncertain, and there is dispute among authorities. He held estates of Yvery in Normandy and Cary, Weston, Stawell, etc. in England. Spending more time in England than his father and grandfather, he may have built the first stone castle at Castle Cary. He fought for Waleran in a rebellion against Henry I about 1123, escaping imprisonment in 1124 and returning home in disguise, barefoot, having given the Seine ferryman his shoes. He supported Matilda against Stephen in the English civil war, resulting in Stephen besieging Castle Cary, taking it in 1138, but returning it on the promise not to support Matilda. The castle was again besieged in 1153, when William and his son Ralph reneged on this promise, but was saved by the arrival of the Earl of Gloucester’s force. He is probably the ‘Willelmus, qui cognominatur Lupellus’ who had a charter with the Abbey of St. Peter of Chartres in the early 12th century. He also confirmed a gift to the Priory of Bruton. It is unclear if he was also Baron of Hawick, or if the barony was first held by his son, or even if it was held by another family member during his lifetime. He married Auberie, sister of Waleran de Bellemonte, Earl of Mellent (and related to the Kings of France). Their children may have included: Waleran, Baron de Yvery, whose descendants retained that Barony until the 15th century; Ralph, who succeeded to Castle Cary; Henry, who later succeeded; William of Titchmarsh and Minster Lovel, although this is disputed by some accounts; and Richard Perceval, ancestor of the Earls of Egmont. William (14th C.) said to have forfeited lands in Eskdale and Ewesdale in the reign of David II. These lands were granted to William, Lord Douglas, younger. He is probably the Sir William who was at ‘Haydenebruge’ in 1327. However, it is unclear how he was related to James, who forfeited the same lands in 1341; it may be that the names were in error (also written ‘Lovell’, ‘Lowel’, ‘Lupellus’, ‘Luvel’, ‘Lvull’, ‘Luvellus’, etc.). Lovel Court (lu-vul-kör’) n. street name for the courtyard developed behind Drumlanrig’s Tower when the area was renovated in the early 1990s. It had once been the stabiling area for the Tower Inn and a large building housing the Tower Garage (originally misspelled ‘Lovell’ on the street sign). Lovell see Lovel the Lovels (luh-hul-vulz) n. family name of Norman nobility who were given lands around Hawick by David I in the 1120s or 30s. The family held the lands of Yvery in Normandy. They may have settled in Teviotdale in the previous reign of Alexander I. Their lands included Brauxholme, which they held until 1307. They built their castle, the Moat (or Motte), a wooden palisaded tower on a mound of earth, as a symbol of their lordship of the lands around Hawick. They later built a more substantial tower where Drumlanrig’s Tower now stands, as well as rebuilding St. Mary’s in stone. The Lovels held the patronage of the church in Hawick until 1355. The family also held lands elsewhere, particularly Castle Cary in Somersetshire (south of Bristol). Castle Cary was a Norman fortification, built at the foot of Lodge Hill, and held by the Lovels from perhaps 1107 until it was destroyed about 1155. The fortifications can still be seen above the town, including a mound where the castle stood (reminiscent of Hawick’s Moat). During the Wars of Independence their loyalties lay with the English and the family returned to Somerset. Their Hawick lands were forfeited by David II and given to Maurice Murray, later being passed to Archibald Douglas in the 15th century. The Lovels continued to hold lands in Somerset long after the castle there had been destroyed, and the town there is still called Castle Cary. The family name probably derives from an early member nicknamed ‘Lupellus’ (Little Wolf) which became ‘Lupel’ and then ‘Lovel’. Their arms were a gold background strewn with crosses, and with a blue lion rampant. The identification of Lovel of Hawick and Bramholme with Lovel of Castle Cary was only made in about the 1870s by historian Joseph Bain. Note that there were other prominent branches of the family, e.g. the Lovels of Titchmarsh (or ‘Tichmersh, in Northamptonshire), the Lovels of Minster Lovell (in Oxfordshire) and the Lovels of Balumbie (in Angus), but they may not all have been directly connected. There is a Lovel mentioned in the Scottish ballad ‘The Battle of Otterburn’ and a ballad called ‘Lord Lovel’ (about a knight who dies of sorrow after returning to hear of the death of his love) – ‘What shameful deed besmirched a flame, light, low – ‘And he took the blue booke from his breaste, The letters seemed to lowe’ [JTe], ‘And saw the sun o’ Easter Heeze up and lowe until It kinned till a burnin’ buss The thorns on Hardie’s Hill’ [DH], ‘But she lootit doon and her rock tuik a lowe, An’ that was a bad beginnin’ o’t’ [T], ‘But while a wee bit spark o’ light Will raise an unco low … ’[JT], ‘A weel filled pipe, a cutty stool, A gude peat fire lowing bonny’ [DA], ‘…True love that is hained and shared Will lowe and growe till the last brae-fit’ [WL], n., poet. a flame, light, glow – ‘Gin owre ye fairly she thraws her glances, And into her blue een the luve lowe dances’ [WL] (also spelled ‘low’).

Lowe (lō) n. Rev. Alexander (19th/20th C.) born in Edinburgh, he was minister of the Park Church in Newcastleton from 1898. This was the former Free Church, and now the village hall. He resigned in 1934, after which the charge of this church was merged with that of the South Church in the village. In 1906 he sued the Council for leaving a mud-heap in the road, which he fell over in the dark. The village hall was later named in his honour.

Lowis (lōwz) n. Patrick of Manor (d.bef. 1459) from the family which held half of the Barony of Manor (the other being held by the Inglis family, with a small part also connected with the local Gledstains). He acted as Baron Bailie for the Scotts of Buccleuch, and is recorded as witness to documents at least from 1427–57. In 1446 he witnessed the charter between Inglis of Manor and Scott of Buccleuch. In 1447 he was one of the witnesses to the feu charter between Simon of Routledge and Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch for lands of Birkwood just outside Hawick. In 1449 he was Patricio Lowis de Mener' when he witnessed the renunciation of the lands of Lochurd. In 1451 he witnessed a document for Sir Walter Scott of Kirkurd in Edinburgh. He was succeeded by Thomas, probably his son. William (15th C.) on the panel for James Douglas of Drumlanrig inheriting the Barony of Hawick in 1484. William (17th C.) tenant in Catslack-knowe in 1684 when his servant William Inglis was on a list of Covenanter fugitives.

Ludne (lu-den) n. former name for a former area in Liddesdale. In a rental roll of c.1376 the 'Quarterium de Ludne' is listed as one of the 4 main sections, including 29 farms, with total value of 18 pounds 11 shillings and 8 pence. Among the farms were Greenshields, Oldshields, Carryshields, Hartsgarth, Langhaugh and Tofts, and the holders of lands were 'Fethyng', 'Loumane', 'Willelmi filii Alani', 'Ricardi de Roule' and 'Willelmi del Syde'. It seems to have coincided with the west side of the Hermitage Water. However, the precise extent of the area, as well as the pronunciation and any connection with modern lands, is unknown.

Luff (luft) n. John George (1845/6–1918) local hotel proprietor. Born in Sussex, he came to Hawick about 1877 as a waiter in the Tower Hotel, where he developed a novel shorthand slate attached to his waiter’s tray. It is said that he spoke fluent French and Italian, having spent time on the Continent. He went into business on his own, later having the Central Hotel built, which he ran originally as a temperance hotel. He later offered to demolish the ‘Coffin End’ at his own expense if the Town would grant him a liquor licence; this request was denied, but after improving his hotel and being granted a licence, he did in fact have the wooden eye-sores removed and gifted the land to the Town. He was a vocal opponent of the Clubs of the Town and in general, claiming they were merely unlicensed drinking establishments; he published some pamphlets on this topic. He was a Councillor for Wilton Ward in the period 1901–04, being fond of novel schemes and for quoting aphorisms, and famous for speeches he gave from the Central Hotel balcony. On one such famous occasion he proposed a scheme to turn the Park into a pleasure park, with a huge artificial lake. He published ‘A system of mastering Pitman’s manual’ (1877), ‘Thoughts on clubs by a country cook’ (1889) and ‘The Income Tax Corrector (c.1910). His engraved shorthand tray is in the Museum, and he is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery – ‘When the moon is made of green cheese, And pigs begin to fly, Though they are the most unlikely birds That ever went into the sky. When Councillor Luff is Provost, Oh! won’t the pork be high!’ [T], ‘He’s a scrumptious sort of man is John George Luff, He’s a bumptious sort of man is John George Luff; And the Central Hotel It suits him very well, A vigorous sort of man is John Georg Luff’ [JCG].

Lunardi (luoo-nar-dee) n. Vincent (1759–1806) balloonist, who made the first substantial flight in Britain, and was a household name in the late 18th century. He made several flights in Britain in the 1780s, including from Edinburgh and from Kelso (to Northumberland, perhaps the world’s first international flight!). After launching from St. Andrews Churchyard, Glasgow on the 23rd November 1785 at 1.45 p.m. (with a crowd estimated at 100,000), he had an adventurous voyage, with the wind blowing him to the south-east. He tried to land on a hill near Dryhope (apparently thinking that St. Mary's Loch might be an arm of the sea), where he lost his anchor, flag and some ropes, and was spotted by many local people. He eventually came down about 2 miles east of Alemoor at about 3.55, being fortuitously met by Mr. and Mrs. Chisholm of Stirches, who had shouted 'Lunardi, come down' at him. Mrs. Chisholme rode for about 3 miles in the balloon, with 2 shepherds holding the ropes. Then they brought him to Hawick and he spent the night at Stirches. The following day he was received by the Magistrates, entertained at a special dinner and afterwards given the freedom of the Town.

Lundie (lun-dee) n. Allan (16th/17th C.) studied at St. Salvator’s College and graduated from St. Andrews University in 1586. He became Vicar at Lessuden (St. Boswells) in 1596. He was rebuked by the Presbytery in 1608 and again in 1610 for negligence and being ‘ane player at cairdis’, among other complaints. He was translated to Hassendean in 1610, but only stayed about a year before moving on to Channelkirk in 1611 (basically he had a choice, and while he preferred Hassendean, the Presbytery advised Channelkirk). He went to Hutton and Fishwick in 1614, demitted sometime before 1636, but was recorded as still alive in 1639. His descendants held land at Spittal (near Berwick) for several generations. He married Agnes Trottar and their children were James (next minister of Hutton), William, John, Andrew and Elizabeth. James (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1517 being given the wardship of the lands of the deceased Walter Scott of Howpasley, as well as rights over the marriage of his daughter. These were the superiority of lands forfeited after the execution of Alexander, Lord Home. In 1535 there was a reversion of his lands forfeited after the execution of Alexander, of his daughter. These were the superiority of Howpasley, as well as rights over the marriage wardship of the lands of the deceased Walter Scott (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1517 being given the

Lunn (lun) n. Andrew (18th C.) married Isabel Lillico in Bedrule in 1730. Derek son of Bill and Joyce, he is a local photographer, long-time member of Hawick Camera Club and Associate Member of the Royal Photographic Society. After receiving a camera as a 21st-birthday gift, he decided to turn his hobby into his profession. His work has included weddings and commercial commissions, but he is particularly known for portraits. His studio space has been at 49 North Bridge Street and then 10 Howegate. He was named Scottish Portrait Photographer of the Year in 2002. With Ian Landles he mounted exhibitions with accompanying books: ‘Honest Men and Bright-eyed Daughters’ (1990); ‘Mair Honest Men . . . ’ (1993); and ‘Son of Honest Men’ (2000). He also plays guitar and sings, being for several years in the band ‘3D’ and later drummer in ‘The Medicine Hat’. Donald (1931–2008) born on the Loan, he was an apprentice butcher with Scott & Telfer’s and started his own business on the Howegate, famous for his tripe and haggis. He also played rugby for the Trades and served in the R.A.F. for 2 years He was Cornet in 1957 and was President of the Callants’, Mosstroopers’ and 1514 Clubs. He married Eileen and had a daughter Vivienne. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married to Janet Hobkirk and their son Walter was baptised in 1639. James (17th C.) weaver in Hawick. His son, also James, was a witness in 1666 to a case involving a fight in St. Mary’s Kirk between William Turnbull likely to be son of the earlier weaver James. In 1707 he witnessed a baptism for weaver ‘Black’ John Swan. He married Marion Wilson and their children, born in Hawick, included: Thomas (b.1671); Marion (b.1672); James (b.1680); Jane (b.1683), Thomas (again, b.1686); and Bessie (b.1689). The witnesses in 1680 were William Swan and William Bridges and in 1689 were weaver William Swan and dyer George Young. Marion who married William Murray in Yarrow in 1705. Other children, who were probably his include Walter (b.1696), Janet (b.1699), Janet (again, b.1700) and James (b.1708). James (b.c.1705) resident of Hawick. He married Helen Rae (b.c.1711) and their children, baptised in Hawick, included: Katherine (b.1738); and Walter (b.1740). He may be the James, son of John, born in Hawick in 1705, or the son of James born in Cavers in 1708. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf, recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. James (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Earlside. Additionally he was taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. James (1769–1839) son of Walter and Betty Turnbull. He was born at Colterscleuch. Based on the births of his children he lived at Rough-hope, and elsewhere in the Borthwick and upper Teviot valleys. He married Elizabeth Telford (c.1773–1845), who is buried at Teviothead. Their children included: Elizabeth (1796–1880), who married James Lough at Ropelawshiel; Mina (c.1799–1888), who married Henry Scott and died at Milsington; Joan (c.1801–80), who married William Scott; Walter (1803–73), who married Janet Grieve and die at Meadshaw; Janet (1806–79), who married William Beattie; and Grace, who married Robert Armstrong. Jean ‘Blinnd Jean’ (d.1778) Hawick resident whose death is recorded along with her nickname. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Clerk and their unnamed child was baptised in 1671. It seems likely that he was father of weaver John, as well as Helen, who married James Scott ‘Laird’. John (17th C.) married Isobel Young in Roberton in 1687. John (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He is probably the weaver who in 1700 (along with James Scott, Laird’) witnessed a baptism for weaver ‘Black’ John Swan. He gave evidence in 1710 about a fight in St. Mary’s Kirk between 2 other weavers. He married Marion Wight in Hawick in 1701. Their children included: Marie (b.1701); Janet (b.1703); and James (b.1705). The witnesses in 1703 were James Scott ‘Laird’ and weaver Mungo Swan, and in 1705 were John Swan, James Scott ‘Westport’ and James Scott ‘Doctor’. It seems likely he was son of the earlier weaver John and the wife of James Scott ‘Laird’ was Helen Lunn, who may have been his sister. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Jean Rule and their children included: Bessie (b.1719); Jean (b.1722); and Isobel (b.1725). weaver in Hawick who gave evidence in 1710 about John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Mary Nisbet and their children included: James (b.1760); Walter (b.1763); and Charles (b.1764). John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes McMillan and their children included: John (b.1762). John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Lodgeknow (in Cavers Parish), recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John (1777–1861) son of Walter and Betty Turnbull. He was a labourer living in Newcastleton. In 1841 he was at about 6 South Liddle Street, and in 1851 was with his son Robert at Eskdalemuir. He married Isabella Eckford, who came from Crailing. Their children included: Walter (1806–79), who was born in Hobkirk Parish, married Margaret Dalgleish and live in Selkirk; Agnes (1807–90), who married Francis Govenlock; George (b.1809); Elizabeth (1817–93), born in Kirkton Parish, married Archibald Hall and died in Langholm; and Robert (1817–56), who married Isabella Armstrong. He secondly married Nelly (d.1870), daughter of John Hotson. John (b.1802) son of James and Janet Reid. He was a woollen and linen draper in Lilliesleaf, recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was listed as a merchant in Lilliesleaf in 1841. In 1851 and 1861 he was recorded on the south side of Main Street. He lived with his mother Janet and sisters Margaret and Jean. He was probably unmarried when he died. His drapery business was carried on by James Hood, and in 1872 (after his death) was renamed John Lunn & Co. John (1812–71) from Lilliesleaf, he wrote occasional pieces for the local press. He could be the same man as the draper in Lilliesleaf. He chaired the Lilliesleaf centenary Burns Night. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Hawick. In 1689 he was fined by the Magistrates for the ‘exhorbitant’ wedding of his daughter to William Douglas. He was listed as a merchant among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. Probably the same Thomas ‘Lune’ was listed on the west-side of Hawick on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. He may be the ‘T. Lun’ who was fined by the Bailies in 1675 ‘in not coming to the night watch when he was charged to do so’. He may be the Thomas, married to Margaret Armstrong, whose children baptised in Hawick included Marion (b.1672) and Alison (or perhaps ‘A son’, b.1675); the witnesses in 1675 were James Newbie and William Swan. He witnessed a baptism for Patrick Bridges in 1678, along with William Swan. Thomas (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1724 he appeared before the Session to apologise for defaming his fellow weaver William Scott. He was probably the Thomas born in Hawick in 1686 to James and Marion Wilson. Thomas ‘Tom’ (18th/19th C.) weaver at Shuttlehaa near Teviothea. It is unclear how he was related to other local Lunn's.

He was married to the sister of James Swanson, who brought Tom Jenkins to the area; however, her name is not known. After Swanson died a few days after returning to Hawick, he looked after Jenkins, as well as Swanson's illegitimate son James. Thomas (18th/19th C.) stocking manufacturer in Lilliesleaf, in partnership with James Sterling, as recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Walter (17th C.) resident of Denholm on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. Walter (b.1740) baptised in Hawick Parish, son of James and Helen Rae. He lived at Colterscleuch. He married Betty Turnbull in Hawick in 1765. Their children included: Betty (b.1766), who married Archibald Scott; James (1769–1839), who married Elizabeth Telford; Walter (b.1773), who married Betty Hobkirk; John (1777–1861), who married Isabella Eckford and died in Newcastle; Robert (1782–1865), who married Elspeth (or Euphemia) Hope and died in Langholm; and Janet (1783–1862), who married John Sword and died at Easter Alemoor. Betty who was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1756 (unless this is an error) may also have been his child. Walter (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He paid the horse tax in 1792–94 and the cart tax in 1797. He became bankrupt in 1799. In 1803 he is described as ‘Merchant or Travelling Packman, laterly residing in Hawick’ whose estate was sequestered and he was the subject of a petition by his trustee Hawick merchant John Nixon (this being written by Sir Walter Scott). Nixon opposed his request to be declared ‘cessio bonorum’, on the basis that he had in fact misled his creditors in various ways. In 1803 he was in Edinburgh Tolbooth, presumably the result of being a debtor. His wife was Elizabeth Hay (formerly wife of William Borthwick), daughter of Alexander Hay and Janet Smith. Walter (18th/19th C.) married Berry Hobkirk in Cavers Parish in 1808. Walter (1803–73) son of James and Elizabeth Telford. He was born in Teviothead Parish and worked as a shepherd and agricultural labourer, living at Meadshaw in 1841, 1851 and 1861. In 1828 he married Janet, daughter of Walter Grieve and Margaret Glendinning; she died in 1883. Their children were: Isabella (1828–60), who married John Preston and died in Lilliesleaf; James (b.1830); Elizabeth (Betty, b.1834), who married John Murray; James (again, b.1836), who married Margaret Hunter; Agnes (1842–94); and Jane (1844–59). Walter (??–??) writer of the local poem ‘Thochts o Langsyne’. He may be the same as one of the other Walters. William (18th C.) resident at Mabonlaw in 1774 when his son John was baptised in Robertson Parish. Adam (b.1776) was probably also his child (formerly written ‘Lun’, ‘Lune’, etc.).

Lunon (lu-nin) n. London, capital of England, once connected to Hawick by train – ‘Fraw Lunnin town an act they shaw, To summon men by dint o law’ [JR], ‘...I wonder how the King an’ the fouk o Lunin allow sic things’ [RW] (spelled several ways).

lunt (lun’, hunt) n., arch. poet. a light, ember, match, piece of inflammable material – ‘Lunt...The flame of a smothered fire which suddenly bursts into a blaze, Teviotd.’ [JoJ], ‘A wheen folk oot picnickin at a deike-fit on Dunionseide hed kinnelt a lunt...’ [ECS], ‘Salome flang like a wanton, free, A lunt, the flash o her witchin’ ee’ [WL], v., arch. to light, become alight – ‘Ye shake yer head – thou anger canna hide it: Lunt, puff! quo’ I; joost bite yer lip an’ bide it’ [JoHa], ‘When siclike things they’ve gotten right, Their cuttys next they’re luntin’ ’ [JoHa], ‘Thae rositty sticks’ll lunt grand’ [GW], to set on fire, to light – ‘A luntin’ match’ [GW], to smoke a pipe, especially to make it give off a lot of smoke.

Lurden (lur-din) n. farm in the former Hassendean Parish, just to the north of Knowetownhead (this is an old Scots word for ‘mean fellow, sluggard’).

Lurden Burn (lur-din-burn) n. small stream that rises near Clarilaw, passes Hassendeanburn farm and joins the Hassendean Burn at Lurden. A footbridge over the burn gives access to the farm.

Lurden Entry (lur-din-en-tree) n. former name for a track leading from Lurden and Knowetownhead to the B6359 just east of Horsleyhill. There was a railway bridge over the track here, and another bridge over the railway to the south.
Lurgie

Lurgie (luh-gee) n. nickname of Robert Wilson, deriving from the family home of Lurgiescleuch.

Lurgies Burn (luh-geez-burn) n. stream that runs into the Harwood Lake in the upper Rule valley. It is formed from Black Cleuch and the Freestone Cleuch.

Lurgiescleuch (luh-gee-z-clooch) n. farm on the track above Harwood, lying on the Lurgie Burn. It was the former home of Hawick historian Robert Wilson’s family (probably his grandfather), hence his nickname ‘Lurgie’. It once formed the eastern quarter of the lands of Fairnielees and was sold by William, Earl of Lothian in 1647 (along with Stanedge) to Sir Thomas Ker of Cavers. There was 1 hearth listed on the tax rolls at the end of the 17th century. John Wilson was there in 1786. James Dryden and Thomas Potts were there in 1821. Shepherd James Wilson and his family were there in 1861 and G. Pringle in 1868. An old road crosses from here to Langburnshields in the Slitrig valley (it is ‘Lurgiscleuch’ in 1647 and ‘Lurgiscleugh’ in 1694 and 1786; the farm is marked ‘Lurgyscleugh’ on Stobie’s 1770 map; the origin of the name is obscure).

Lurgie’s Well (luh-geez-well) n. popular name for a spring beside St. Leonard’s, named after Robert ‘Lurgie’ Wilson, from it being a favourite rendezvous of his. It is said that he fell asleep there and caught the chill that led to his death.

luskee (lus-kee) n., poet. meaning uncertain – ‘In the upland way ... the luskees there that bussk the brae Are the bees that mak’ the honey’ [HSR].

Lustruther (luh-stru-thur) n. farm and surrounding area in Southdean, just south of the main road between Chesters and Southdean. Robert Oliver was tenant there about 1502. The Olivers farmed there for many generations, this being the same family as the Olivers of Dinlabyre, and said to have been descended from the Strynds branch. It has also been stated that around the 17th century the family made a fortune from driving Scottish cattle to markets in England, when that was illegal. It was described being 2 steadings valued at 50 shillings in the Exchequer Rolls in 1538 and 1539. In 1541 the tenants listed on the rental roll were William (‘the Lawyer’), Marion (his mother), John (‘Blackhead’), another John, Katherine, Marion, Janet and Robert Oliver; it was split into 4 parts, with total value 50s. A tower near here was burned by Dacre’s men (led by Sir John Radcliff) in late 1513 and by the English again in 1544; there is now no sign of the tower house, and the modern farmhouse bears the date 1777. William Oliver, Hob Oliver and John Oliver, younger, were all ‘of Lustrodder’ when they were among Olivers swearing allegiance to Henry VIII in 1544. It is said that around the 17th century the Olivers of Lustruther made a fortune engaged in (illegally) driving cattle across the Border. David Turnbull, tenant there, was exiled for perjury in 1622. The tenants of the farm in 1669 were Agnes Shiel and William Oliver. Christian Oliver was recorded there in 1684. George Riddell was there in 1688, John Oliver in 1694, William Slatter in 1797 and James Fair around the 1820s. Above the plantation known as Lustruther Strip is a short linear earthwork, and in the same area there is a quarry, field boundaries and rig and furrow lines (the origin is probably Old English ‘hlose’ and Middle English ‘struther’, meaning ‘the pig-sty by the marsh; the name is first recorded in 1502 as ‘Lustruthir’, it is ‘Lurchursthrother’ in 1543, ‘Lustrodder’ in 1538, ‘Lustrudir’ in 1539, ‘Lustruder’ and ‘Lustrodder’ in 1544, ‘Lwstruder’ in 1562, ‘Lustrother’ in 1583, ‘Lustrurther’ in 1622 and ‘Lusterurther’ in 1694; it appears on Gordon’s c. 1650 map as ‘Listrurther’ and on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Listrurther’).

lut (luh, lut) v., poet. to let – ‘An’ he lut it fu’ in the middle o’ thair camp roun’ aboot thair bydin’-plexes’ [HSR], ‘The king sendet an’ luit the people, an’ luit him gae free’ [HSR] (cf. luit and lut).

Lutherdale (luh-thur-dal) n. Andrew (15th C.) recorded as Rector of Abbotrule in 1476 when he supplicated to the Pope to be allowed to hold 2 benefices at once. His name appears as ‘Luderdel’. Probably the same Andrew was Abbot of Dryburgh 1482–1508. He seems likely to be related to the Lairds of St. Mary’s Isle in Kirkudbrightshire, who appear to have moved there from the Roxburghshire and Berwickshire area in the mid-16th century. Andrew (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Andrea Luther-dail’ when he witnessed the baronial sasine for Hawick in 1511/2. This was along with Robert (Chaplain) and James, who were presumably related. He also witnessed the sasine of 1514 for James Douglas of Drumlanrig. He may be the same as the earlier Andrew, or else was probably related to him. David (d.bef. 1486) recorded as Archdeacon of Teviotdale 1474–75. His is probably the ‘Duncan archd. of Glasgow’ mentioned in 1474. He appears as Archdeacon of Dunkeld.
Lyall (15th/16th C.) first witness to the 1511/2 sasine for giving the Barony of Hawick to Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig. He is recorded as ‘domino Roberto Luderdale, capellano’, so he was Chaplain, presumably of Hawick, and held a Masters degree. Andrew and James were also witnesses, and so probably brothers or sons. He also witnessed the sasine for the Barony in 1514, listed after Alexander Newton, ‘vicario de Hawick’. This suggests he had a subsidiary function to Newton, or was in charge of one of the smaller chapels within the Barony. Probably the same ‘domino Roberto Luderdale’ was listed in a Glasgow Diocese document in 1510. Thomas (15th C.) witness in 1432 to the sasine giving the Barony of Cavers to Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig. He is recorded as ‘Tho ma Luderdale’, and he is listed as a Burgess (presumably of Hawick) along with Simon Routledge. He was also ‘Thoma de Luderdale’ in 1452 when he was among 4 Burgess of Hawick on the list of witnesses to the sasine granting the Barony of Hawick to William Douglas of Drumlanrig. He is recorded in an early Hawick sasine of 1453, where his name was written ‘Thomas of Luderdale’. In 1455 he was ‘Thomas de Luderdale’ when he witnessed a document at St. Mary’s relating to the lands of Whitchesters. And in 1456 he was one of the witnesses for another Whitchesters document, where he is listed as ‘Thoma de Luderdale’ and one of the burgesses (of Hawick presumably) (also spelled ‘Luderdale’, ‘Luderdalel’, ‘Luderdail’, ‘Luthirdaile’, etc.; this may be a variant of ‘Lauderdale’; cf. Liddertsdale, which may be based on ‘Liddesdale’, but may in some cases be the same surname).

Lyall (ll-ll) n. Joseph C. (19th C.) registrar for Ewes Parish in at least the 1860s to 1880s. He also served as Session Clerk and Clerk to the School Board. Thomas ‘Tom’ (1940–2020) born in the Haig, son of lorry driver Tom and Ina Scott, he attended Trinity and the High School. He was known as a successful rugby player in the back row and as centre for the Y.M. and also played for Hawick R.F.C. He worked Turner & Ruthertons, Braemar and John Laing, ending up as knitting manager. He married Georgie Collins and they had children Julie, Kirsty and Kendra.

Lyand (ll-and) pres. part., arch. lyin – ‘…with the pertinentis, liand within the baronie of Braxhelme …’[SB1569], ‘…for the compositioun of hir teindis of Trowis, liand within the parroch of Cauers’[SB1574], ‘…of the said lands of Flex heritable pertaining to him lyand contiguous with and to our Common of Havieke …’[BR1692], ‘…upon ane tenement of land of his in Hawick, lyand betwixt the land of James Brown on the north part …’[JW] (also written ‘liand’).

Lydgate (lid-ga) n. Adam (15th C.) recorded as ‘Adam de Lydgat’ in 1453 when he witnessed a sasine at Milsington. Several of the other witnesses were local men, but it is unclear where he was from.

Lyin money (ll-in-nu-nee) n., arch. unused money – ‘Lyin money or eidl (idle) money = unused capital, or money not invested in any business or enterprise, etc.’[ECS].

Lyle (lll) n. Adam (16th C.) recorded in 1567 as ‘man and servand’ to David Turnbull of Wauchope. Turnbull was ordered to present him to answer charges of raiding into England. Agnes McDonald nee Robson, ‘Nan’, M.B.E. (1929–2010). Born and lived in Hawick all her life, she had several jobs, including librarian at Newmill. She was associated with many local clubs and charitable organisations, in particular with the Scouting movement along with husband Rob, for which she received an M.B.E. in 1988. She received many honours from the Scouts, including the Silver Wolf, serving as a leader for about 60 years. She gave a talk to the Archæological Society on the history of Scouting in Hawick. She was also awarded the Paul Harris Fellowship by the Rotary Club and had a village school named after her in Kenya, following her work with the Borders Exploration Group. A memorial cairn was erected on Whitchesters Hill in 2011, with an associated walk. The top of the cairn is inscribed ‘Baden-Powell Do your best. Try and leave this world a little better than you found it’. Her children were Ruth, Joyce and Andrew.

Lyme

Lyme an Scott’s Brig

Lily-in-scots-brig n. footbridge across the Slitrig connecting the Back Braes to a footpath behind the Lyle & Scott’s factory on Liddesdale Road. It was built in about 1957 by an engineering company from Monmouth, under the instruction of Adam Balmer, chief engineer of the factory. There had previously been flat stepping stones there, which were useful when the river was low. With the expansion into Y-fronts the company built the bridge to assist its workers from the West-end (also sometimes called ‘the Backbrae Fitbrig’).

Lymie (li-ni) n. former informal name for Lymecleuch – ‘There is one at the Carlanrigg, Might sof’en the heart o’ auld Simey; But gin ye want lasses that’s trig, Gae up the burn fa’ther to Limey’ [JoHa] (also written ‘Limey’).

Lymecleuch (li-ni-klooch) n. farm on the side road south-west of Teviothead. Robert Grieve was there in 1618. In 1670 it was purchased from William Elliott, younger of Stobs, by Simon Elliot of the Binks and Swinside, William Elliot of Urthank, and William’s son Adam. At that time it included the lands of Corriesike, Langbyre and Giddenscleuch. In 1678 it was valued at £1000 and part of the estate of Elliott of Stobs. The precise ownership in the late 17th century is complicated. Sir William Elliott of Stobs and William Elliot paid the land tax in 1678 for their halves of the lands, each valued at £500. Adam Elliot of Mosspeeble gained a charter of the lands in 1673, but lost them in 1687. In that year Sir William Elliott of Stobs, issued a charter to his brother John for these lands, but John did not gain possession until 1695. About 1695 William and Robert Elliot of Lymecleuch and Penchrise were charged with theft by John Riddell of Haining; failing to appear, their surety, Gilbert Elliott of Stobs paid the fine, and after a further payment acquired both farms. Adam Elliot of Lymecleuch was involved in a legal action with Anna Duches of Buccleuch in the period 1698–1703. Adam Elliot was there in 1705, Walter Scott in 1708, James Telfer in 1717 and James Jardine in 1719. William Pott was there in 1727, Thomas Davidson was there in 1730 and John Rae in 1731. In 1788 it was valued at £1000 and owned by Sir Francis Elliott of Stobs. Thomas Telfer and William Nixon were farmers there in 1797. James Elliot was farmer there in 1841 and John Clerk in 1868. It was used as a shooting lodge in the late 19th century. The hill above is called Limie Hill, and the Limie Sike joins the Lymecleuch Burn there. The hamlet there appears to have been locally known as ‘Limey’, as in John Halliday’s poem ‘The Lasses o’ Limey’ (also spelled ‘Lymecleuch’ ‘Lymeacleuch’ and ‘Lymmercleugh’; it is transcribed ‘Lymmercleuch’ in 1618, is ‘Limey-cleugh’ and ‘Lymeicleugh’ in 1678, ‘Lymycleuch’ in 1695 and ‘Lymeicleugh’ about 1700, ‘Lymeicleuch’ in 1717, ‘Lymeicleuch’ in 1797 and ‘Limeycleuch’ in 1821; note there is a place of essentially the same name near Canonbie, with which it can be easily confused).

Lyme cleuch Burn (li-ni-klooch-burn) n. stream that is formed from the streams of Merry- path Sike, Wrangway Burn and Lang Hope near the farm of Wisp and runs roughly northwards to join the Teviot near Teviothead. Its source is around Pikethaw Hill on the border of Roxburghshire with Dumfriesshire (it is ‘Lymeucleuch Burn’ in 1839).

Lyn’s (lin-cheez) n. toy shop on the north side of the High Street, at No. 19, in the latter part of the 20th century. Also known as ‘J. Lynch’ (pronounced *j*l), ‘Miss Lynch’s’ and ‘Pairky Aathing’s’. It closed in 1989 – ‘Oo went ti Paisley’s for oor tools, Jess McVeetie’s for rock bools, Lynch’s hed a’ kinds o’ toys, Ellen Riddle hed her pies …’ [IWl].

Lyne (lin) n. farm marked on Gordon’s manuscript map c.1650 and Adair’s c. 1688 manuscript map of the Sheriffdom of Ettrick Forest, between Milsington and Hosocate, on the north side of the Borthwick. This corresponds roughly to the position of Deanburnhaugh. It is probably the same place referred to in several charters and other documents along with Girnwood as ‘Greenwood and Lyne’, also sometimes as ‘the Lyne’. In 1488 the lands were leased by Robert Scott from Thomas Turnbull, later leased by the Lords of Home, and sold to the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1532/3. In 1506 ‘the lands of Lyne were valued at £2 Scots, in time of peace 1 merk, and were held of the king for ward and relief’. The lands were ratified to Anna, Duchess of Buccleuch in 1693. It seems likely this was associated with the waterfall at Girnwood Linn, to the west of the farm of Girnwood (it is ‘Lyne’ in 1488 and probably ‘Lyn’ in 1574 and 1589 and Linn in 1661).

Lyne (lin) n. parish to the west of Peebles, formerly part of ‘Lyne and Megget’ parish. The Lyne Water flows through the area to join the Tweed. The area contains the remains of an extensive Roman fort from the 2nd century, and a road probably connected it with Newsteads near Melrose.

lin n.
William (17th C.) tenant of Goldiehalls in 1642 when he is recorded as part of an accusation (probably unfounded) of theft in Hawick magistrates court. His wife was Margaret McDougall.

Lyneside
former station on the Waverley Line, shortly before Carlisle.

lin n.
Richard (19th/20th C.) served as Burgh Foreman for Hawick. In that capacity he lived at 10 Slitrig. He is probably the ‘Dick’ whose son ran Swinton the builders in Hawick. It is said that just after the Boer War he came across another Hawick man in South Africa, while leaning out of a train window, and although they recognised each other, the train passed before they could talk.

Lynnlie
li-nee n., ins.
name sometimes used for someone from Lynnwood housing estate, usually used derogatorily.

Lynnwood see Lynnwud

lin-wud n.
Lynnwood, an area in the south-west of Hawick, off the Newcastleton Road, on a flat piece of ground in a loop of the Slitrig. It became a council housing estate on the outskirts of town, built in 1933 and comprising Lynnwood Road and Lynnwood Crescent. Originally a pleasant enough residential area, it grew to be infamous, becoming synonymous with the least desirable elements within the town, the area being renamed Liddesdale in an attempt to reinvent the area. It fell into a state of disrepair and was largely demolished in 1980-81, being completely levelled in 1991 to make way for new housing. After a public vote the area was renamed Lynnwood again – ‘The plaintive sound is wafted on the gale, And Lynnwood’s sighs are heard to join the wail’ [WNK]. ‘Oh Lynnwood guards the South approach. Drumlanrig holds the West … ’ [NM], ‘Since Stephehson’s infernal din Came scream’in’ doon frae Linwood Linn … ’ [WP] (named for the ‘linn’, i.e. stream in a ravine, and wood that stood there; sometimes spelled with one ‘n’, and sometimes with an ‘i’).

Lynnwud Brig
lin-wud-brig n.
Lynnwood Bridge, name sometimes used for the bridge across the Slitrig to Lynnwood House. It may also refer to the bridge behind Lyle & Scott’s factory, connecting Liddesdale Road with the ‘Back Braes’. A footbridge near there, sometimes called ‘Nixon’s Brig’, was washed away in the 1846 flood.

Lynnwud Cauld
lin-wud-kawld n.
Lynnwood Cauld, the weir built upstream from Lynnwood, by Slitrig Viaduct, which once helped supply the water power for Lynnwood Mill. It was sometimes known as ‘Nixon’s Cauld’. It was partly swept away in the flood of 1846.

Lynnwud Crescent
lin-wud-kre-sin’ n.
Lynnwood Crescent, street at the south east end of town, named after the nearby stream and wood, with the houses built in 1933. It was renamed Liddesdale Road in 1971 and by 1991 the houses has been demolished and the site cleared, with new housing appearing from 2001.

Lynnwud Hoose
lin-wud-hoos n.
Lynnwood House, built for William Nixon on the western bank of the Slitrig north of the ‘Scaur’. It is a large white house on the right-hand side of the road driving out of Hawick, and is now split into flats. It was certainly built before 1841 and William Nixon was still recorded there in 1868. Originally the house was reached via a drive that crossed a ford over the Slitrig, but in 1878 a bridge was erected and the gate lodge built, along with landscaping of the gardens. During WWII it was used as a hostel for women war workers.

Lynnwud Ludge
gate house for Lynnwood House at 10 Liddesdale Road. It was probably built in 1878 at the same time as the bridge over the Slitrig to the main house. It is a single-storey house with a rectangular plan, but with overhanging eaves and an attic gable.

Lynnwood Mill, hosiery mill at Lynnwood, built by John Nixon & Sons, with the first construction perhaps being as early as 1803. Before it was built the spun wool was sent to Galashiels for carding; but the new factory enabled the spinning and carding to be carried out in one place. The factory was probably extended during the days of William Nixon, and the 1858 Ordnance Survey map clearly shows the associated gasometer and ‘tenter fields’. The mill was sold to Laidlaws in 1864. There was a serious fire there in 1869, with rebuilding afterwards. It was a prominent factory throughout the 19th century, but closed at the beginning of the 20th. Water power was provided by a short lade, fed from Lynnwood Cauld. It was demolished in 1933 to make way for the Lynnwood housing scheme – ‘While fashion’d fair and worldly gear May charm whae’er they will, Gi’e me my ain, my bonnie Jean, – The lass o’ Lynnwood Mill’ [JT] (also sometimes ‘Lynnwud Mills’).
Lynnwud Road (lin-wud-rød) n. Lynnwood Road, name given for the continuation of Slitrig Crescent, being the beginning of the B6399 leading to Newcastleton. The mill lade used to pass along the east side of the road, in front of all the houses there. The name was given when new houses were built in 1933, and came from the nearby stream and wood. In the mid-20th century M. Campbell’s grocer’s shop was on the road, just before the housing estate. It was renamed Liddesdale Road in 1971, had new houses built in 1973, and the houses at the southern end were demolished in 1982.

Lynnwud Wud (lin-wud-wud) n. name sometimes used for the wood above Lynnwood, or possibly for the wood that was formerly at Lynnwood before development.

Lynwud see Lynnwud

He was one of the Justiciars at the Circuit Court in Jedburgh and Selkirk in 1494. He married Elizabeth Scrymgeour and was succeeded by his eldest son, John. Three other sons of his were killed at Flodden. Matthew (19th C.) Hawick stockingmaker, with a small shop near Hawick Mill. He apparently figured out how to make improvements so that silk and wool for men’s coats could be made using the stocking frame. He was given £40 from the Board of Trade for this innovation. He sold a cloak to the Duchess of Buccleuch, then made one for the Duke of York, which used lamb’s wool in a tartan pattern. This was exhibited in the Town Hall, following which the Duke ordered a second. He then made a cloak of blue silk and scarlet wool for King George IV and was at Dalkeith House when it was presented to him in 1822. There is a sketch of him by Alexander Michie. He could have been the Matthew, married to Janet Norrie, whose son Matthew was born in Hawick in 1796. The death of Matthew, son to stocking-maker Matthew, is recorded in Hawick in 1816. Richard (19th C.) resident of Hawick. In 1863 he presented to the Museum a Roman coin that was found when the Auld Brig was demolished in 1851. Robert (16th C.) recorded as ‘fabro farraris’ (i.e. horseshoe maker or blacksmith) in Hawick in a list of creditors of William Scott, younger of Buccleuch, in 1552. Robert (b.1850) married Joan Currie and had 8 children in Hawick. They were: Catherine (b.1873); Andrew (b.1875); William (b.1877); Jessie (b.1879); Daniel (b.1881); James (b.1885); Robert (b.1885), possibly a twin of James; and Mary (b.1890) (formerly spelled ‘Lion’).

She took over the running of Town-o-Rule farm after the death of her husband. In 1861 she was recorded there as farmer of 230 acres, employing 7 labourers. Her son William eventually took over the farm.

Bryden minister of Castleton Parish from 1965, He was famously arrested for leading a protest against the closing of the Waverley Line, blocking the level crossing in Newcastleton for the last train. He was previously in the Orkneys,ing the level crossing in Newcastleton for the third time.

Mabonlaw

Mabonlaw (mā-bin-law) n. farm above Harden, once part of the estate of the Scotts of Harden, it had more recently been available as a rental cottage. It stands near the Marchelyton Burn, and the hill above, presumably Mabon Law, reaches a height of 256 m and contains a fort, about 55 m by 25 m, with a single rampart and external ditches. It was part of the Harden estate from the 16th to 19th centuries, being valued in 1811 (along with ‘Highchesters Whinny Park’) at £312. In 1576 it was ‘infested’ to Marion Scott (“the Flower of Yarrow”) as part of the marriage agreement with Walter Scott (later ‘Auld Wat’) of Harden. There were 18 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650, namely Isobel Briggs, John Briggs, Helen Lunn, John White, Janet Turnbull, Bessie White, Robert Rule, Bessie Henderson, James Riddell, Janet Miller, John Wilson, Jean Scott, George Lawson, Margaret Wilson, James Telfer, Janet Easton, John Telfer and Jeanie Brand. John Thomson, was tenant there in 1684, when he was declared as a fugitive for attending field conventicles. The area was part of Wilton Parish until transferred to Roberton in 1690. It was included among lands inherited by Gideon Scott of Hichchester from his father Walter, Earl of Tarras in 1694. There were 8 separate households listed there in 1694, including 3 Riddells. John Leith was recorded there in 1702. Thomas Anderson was there in 1710, James Wilson in 1710–23, Adam Hardie in at least 1711–1713, Walter Riddell and William Beattie in 1717, William Nichol in 1718–23, Janet Sweet in 1720, William Elliot in 1721–27, John Nichol in 1723, Thomas Turnbull in 1725 and Andrew Chisholme in 1728. It may have been sold by Walter Scott of Harden about 1725 and Andrew Chisholme in 1728. It was valued (along with Highfarmer here in 1794–97 and James Miller was also there in 1795. The headlands with Todshaw were divided in 1757. James Hume was living there in 1757, Robert Turnbull in 1763–66, William Laidlaw in 1764–67 and Thomas Nichol in 1766, Walter Elliot in 1771, David Laidlaw in 1772, John Watson in 1773 and William Lunn in 1774. In 1779 it was among lands whose liferent was sold by Walter Scott of Harden to Charles Scott, younger of Woll. John Scott was living there in at least 1780–85, John Henderson in 1780, James Laidlaw was farmer here in 1794–97 and James Miller was also there in 1795. It was valued (along with Highchests Mill and ‘Dunsbush’) at £463 9s in the late 18th century. Weaver James Miller was living there in 1800. William Rutherford and Walter Clerk were there with their families in 1841 and 1851. Walter Rutherford was shepherd there in 1861. In about 1874 it was listed among the properties of Lord Polwarth. The cottage there has latterly been let as a holiday property (note that older versions of the name are easy to confuse with Mervinslaw; formerly ‘Mabinlaw’ etc., it is ‘Mabenlaw’ in 1643, ‘Maybenlaw’ in 1648, ‘Mabinlaw’ and ‘Maybenlaw’ in 1694, ‘Mevinlaw’ in 1702, ‘Mabinlaw’ in 1710, ‘Mevin law’, and ‘Mavinla’ in 1713, ‘Mebinlaw’ in 1721, 1725 and 1728, ‘Mebonlaw’ in 1764 and 1772, ‘Mebonlaw’ in 1774 and ‘Mawbonlaw’ and ‘Mebinlaw’ in 1780; it is ‘Mebinlaw’ on a 1650 parish map, Blaeu’s 1654 map marks ‘Mabinlaw’, while it is ‘Mabinlaw’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Mabonlaw Moss (mä-bin-law-mos) n. boggy area to the north of Mabonlaw.

Macbeth (muk-beth) n. (c.1005–57) King of Scotland from 1040. He was the grandson of Malcolm II and claimed the throne over Duncan I (another grandson), who died in battle against him. However, Duncan’s son Malcolm Canmore then fought for the throne, with the assistance of Siward, the Earl of Northumbria, and they captured the south of Scotland. He was then killed by Malcolm and the throne passed to his step-son Lulach.

MacCalman (mu-kawl-min) n. Rev. Ian B. (d.1967) minister of Minto Parish 1956–67. He had been an army chaplain and his wife was from South Africa. During his time as minister a new manse was built on the Hassendean road.

MacDiarmid (mu-ker-mi) n. Hugh (1837–1901) real name Christopher Murray Grieve, born in Langholm, he was probably the most famous 20th century Scottish poet. With Hawick’s Francis George Scott and William Johnstone, he formed part of what was sometimes called a Scottish Renaissance in the 1930s. He wrote the poem ‘The Sauchs in the Reuch Heuch Hauch’ (i.e. the Roughheugh Haugh) inspired by a line of James Murray’s, with the poem being set to music by Francis George Scott. Scott was one of his close friends, and set many of his verses to music, as well as helping him to compile various writings into ‘A Drunk Man Looks at the Thistle’. A modern monument to him was erected on Whita Hill in 1988.

MacDonald (mu-ker-mul) n. Archibald J.F. ‘Archie’ (1904–83) Liberal M.P. for Roxburgh & Selkirkshire 1950–51. He won with a large majority over Lord William Scott in a by-election, but the next year was defeated by C.E.M. Donaldson by only 829 votes. His name is often spelled ‘Macdonald’. James Ronald (1858–1937) born in St. Andrews, son of James and Catherine. He was educated at Madras College, St. Andrews University and Edinburgh University, where he graduated M.A. in 1880 and was licensed to preach in 1892. He became licentiate at Saughtree Kirk in 1892 and left in 1902 to become assistant and then minister at Eskdalemuir. He married Emily Sophia Nichols. Jessie Stoddart M. (d.2004) wrote ‘The Place-names of Roxburghshire’ (1991) which was started as a thesis project when she was a student and completed for a Transactions article and this book. It mainly focuses on names for which there is evidence before 1600 (and an addendum is lodged with the Borders Archive). She also wrote ‘Bowden Kirk, 1128–1978’ (1978 and 1994) and a paper for the Archæological Society in 1992 on James Oliver, inventor of the

He used to ride at the head of the Common Riding Procession, and can be seen in the Gaylor film clip of 1899. Mr. ?? Police Superintendent in Hawick in the 1970s/80s??.

Robert (b.1817/8) from Muckhart in Perthshire, he was a grocer and wine merchant at about 6 Howegate in 1851. He was already a widower, with daughters Janet W. and Jane M. In Slater’s 1852 directory he was a grocer and spirit dealer on the Howegate, as well as seedsman, ‘agent for Bigg’s sheep dipping compound’ and ‘tallow chandler’. Col. William of Powderhall and Ormiston (19th C.), J.P., officer of the Scots Greys who were used to control riots surrounding elections in Roxburghshire in the 1830s. It is said that in 1836, when he was in Hawick to attend a dinner given for Lord Minto, the open carriage in which he was leaving with his family was followed for about a mile out of town, with a crowd pelting it with mud. He led the troop who were in Hawick to keep the peace at the election of 1837. He attacked the mob along with several special constables, losing his hat and being struck by a stone on the forehead in the doorway of 3 Sandbed. He also attended the 1839 banquet held at Branxholme to honour the Duke of Buccleuch. He subscribed to 4 copies of Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825, when he was already ‘of Ormiston’. Col. MacDowall (muk-dow-ul) n. Fergus (15th C.) held the benefice of Cavers Parish from about 1465. He was directly appointed by the Pope, and not by the monks of Melrose that had made some previous appointments. The same name occurs within the MacDowalls of Galloway. He is probably the Fergus who witnessed a few charters in 1463 and perhaps the same ‘Fergusio Macdowell’ recorded on a charters for lands in Wigtown in 1508. Perhaps 2 men are conflated here: one Fergus, Lord Register and Rector of Wigtown, who was the 2nd son of Uchtred Macdowall, 7th of Garthland; and the other the son of Dungald, who is mentioned in a letter of marriage of 1465/6.

John (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1619, probably at Raperlaw. He was among many Turnbulls and others, under Walter of Bedrule, who were accused of taking hay from Huntliehill and declared as rebels for not appearing to answer the charge. His surname is written ‘McDowell’ (see also McDougall).

Macfee (muk-fee) n. William G. (19th/20th C.) from Dennistoun, Glasgow. He preached for several months in the ‘Ern Kirk’ in Wilton in 1889. The congregation were keen for him to become their minister, but he was ordained at Pendleton Church in Manchester, went to Partick in 1895 and then moved to a better climate for his health in 1900.

MacGill (mu-gil) n. Rev. John White (1867–1937) born in Musselburgh, son of a minister, he graduated M.A. from Edinburgh University in 1889 and was licensed by Dalkeith Presbytery in 1892. He was assistant at Alexandria, North Berwick and St. Margaret’s (Edinburgh), before being ordained at St. Catherine’s, British Guiana in 1897. In 1924 he was translated to Inverallochy and then became minister of Saughtree kirk in 1925. However, he remained only 2 years before moving to Caerlaverock. He married Edith Sarah Luxton Wexford, and they had 2 children (also McGill).

MacGregor (mu-gre-gur) n. Alexander (19th C.) teacher at Saughtree school in the mid-1860s. He took over from James Telfer, who had been teacher there for almost 30 years. He is probably the same as Rev. Alexander, who graduated M.A. from Glasgow University in 1861, was ordained as minister of Hags in 1865 and was at Inverkeithing and Rosyth from 1866. Augustus Wallace, W.S. (1867–1937) son of Rev. John and grandson of the Rev. J.A. Wallace. He was employed by Purdon's in Hawick for 16 years and was later a partner of Auld & MacDonald, W.S. He was a member of the Scottish Zoological Society and the Hawick Archaeological Society, and was also known as a stamp collector (jointly editing a catalogue on the Malay States). He also edited the book ‘Fifty Years of Lawn Tennis in Scotland’ (1927). It is said that he was more interested in tennis than employment, and was a notable player in his youth. He served as a Captain in the K.O.S.B. in WWI, although he was never posted abroad. He also helped execute Hawick’s WWI Roll of Honour. He died in Hawick. Donald (b.1856) from Inverness, he graduated M.A. from Glasgow University in 1878, M.B. from Edinburgh in 1884 and M.D. in 1886. He was at Chester-Le-Street and Ketteringham, before coming to the Hawick area. He lived in Denholm in the 1880s and 1890s. In 1887 he married Jessie, daughter of J.H. Mundell of Mundeville Park, Bournemouth. Their children included Donald Hamilton (d.1918, who fought with the Gordon Highlanders) and Marjorie S. John (18th C.) listed as footman at Borthwickbrae in 1792 and 1793, when he was working for William Elliot Lockhart. Rev. John (1824–73) born in Golspie, Sutherland, he studied at New College, Edinburgh 1850–54. He assisted at Rothesay and the Free New North Church in Edinburgh, was ordained at Kirkurd in Peeblesshire and became minister of Hawick Free Kirk (i.e. St. George’s) in 1865, having been called in 1864. He was apparently a great biblical scholar. In 1865 he married Rev. Wallace’s eldest daughter, Wilhelmina Hepburn; however, she died of small-pox in 1869. He became ill in 1879 and was given 6 months leave, but died within a couple of months, leaving his only child Augustus Wallace (b.1867) an orphan.

Mr. ?? (18th C.) dance-master who hired out part of the Hawick Town House in order to give lessons in 1794. He probably went round other Border towns.

Machell (ma-kel) n. Nicholas (19th C.) listed as a carrier’s agent on the Backdamgate in Pigot’s 1837 directory. His carts went to Carlisle Edinburgh and parts of Lancashire from the Backdamgate every Monday and Thursday. He married Mary Hunter in Hawick in 1838. Although he is unrecorded after that, it may be that his surname was really ‘Maxwell’ or ‘Mitchell’, for example.

Machine (nu-sheen) n., arch. a passenger vehicle, small carriage, motor car – ‘...an A ettlt at fiundin some machine ti serr ma ends’ [ECS].

MacIntyre (maw-kin-tlr) n. Charles (18th C.) footman at Riddell in 1794, when he was working for Lady Riddell. Rev. Duncan (1883–1969) son of an Inverness Headmaster, he trained for the Episcopalian ministry, being ordained in 1910. He served as Curate in Hawick that same year before moving to Glasgow. He was later Rector of Dumfries and at Aberfeldy and Strathtay.

Mack see mauk

Mack (mawk) n. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Denholm, where he was recorded in 1718 and 1722. His children included Jane (b.1718); and John (b.1722). Other children, baptised in Cavers, who could be his include Margaret (b.1707) and Adam (b.1711). Adam (18th C.) from Cavers Parish, he married Margaret Henderson in Roberton in 1749. John (b.1825) son of John and Mary Colledge. He was a grocer and mason in Denholm. He was recorded around Canongate in 1861. In 1850 in Hobkirk Parish he married Jane Bane, and their children included: Janet (b.1851); Mary (b.1853); Emily (b.1856): Agnes; and John (b.1861). In 1867 he secondly married Euphemia Dickson (who was a widow of John Rutherford), and had a second family: Jane (b.1868); Catherine (b.1870); Robert Dickson (b.1871); and Grace (b.1873). She kept a shop in Denholm, which sold ‘taffy’, scones, etc. William (16th C.) listed as ‘William Mak’, along with 15 other people who occupied Newton in Bedrule in 1531 (it is unclear precisely what his surname was).

Mackay (nu-kI) n. Daniel Neil ‘Neil’ (1928–96) born at 10 Slitrig Crescent, where his father was Burgh Foreman, he was son of draper William Gibson. He was educated at Hawick High School and the Royal High School in Edinburgh and served with the Royal Signals in Sri Lanka. On returning to Hawick he ran the family draper’s shop in Croft Road, and later moved it to North Bridge Street, near the Baptist Opening. He was elected Town Councillor in 1969 and served the Town as Dean of Guild. He was also a Justice of the Peace and later a county councillor, as well as Vice-Chairman of Roxburgh District Council until 1980. He was additionally Chairman of Hawick Chamber of Trade and was an instigator for the twinning of Hawick with Bailleul. He was also a member of Lodge St. John 111. He was a keen writer, originating the ‘Janus’ column in the Hawick News. He also played piano and wrote the song ‘Home By Burnfoot’. He was Town Councillor for Burnfoot Ward when he wrote the song, which won a contest set by Burnfoot Residents’ Association. He died at 5 Wilton Glebe and is buried in Wilton Cemetery. Rev. Donald (1817–75) son of Dr. George from Rafford, Moray, he studied in Aberdeen and Edinburgh. He was assistant at Drainie (Lossiemouth) and became a Free Kirk minister there in 1844. He resigned because of ill-health in 1852, but accepted a call to Newcastleton Free Kirk in 1856. He remained until 1860, when he moved to Rafford as his father’s successor. He married Sophia Wood in Dumfries in 1861, but they appear to have had no children. Rev. Donald from Dalrymple, he became minister at Burnfoot in 1966. Hugh Hawick’s deputy librarian for many years, and long-time committee member of the Archæological Society. He moved to Hawick in 1974. He wrote the introduction to the collection of David Hill’s writings in 2011. James W. (19th C.) teacher at Lilliesleaf School in the 1860s. He also served as Registrar and Inspector of Poor for the Parish. Neil see Daniel Neil. William (19th C.) saddler recorded on Douglas Square in Newcastleton in the 1860s. He could be the same man as the Irish railway worker residing in the village in 1861 (also written ‘MacKay’).

Mackenzie (mu-ken-zee) n. Rev. Alexander (18th C.) minister from Edinburgh. He married Margaret, daughter of Dr. William Rutherford of Barnhills. His wife inherited 1/3 of Barnhills, and he purchased the other 2/3 from his sisters-in-law, Helen and Jean in the late 1730s. He also held lands at Auldsmeeton. In 1749 Barnhills was sold to John Callender, W.S., then immediately to John Mackenzie (possibly a relative) of Devlin and then Rev. Walter Stewart, minister of Ashkirk. Elizabeth Toll-keeper and early member of Allars Kirk. Rev. George Omond (1893–1943) son of John and Janet Ormond, he was educated at George Watson’s and Edinburgh University. He was licensed in 1922, became assistant at Kirkintilloch and was translated from Methil to become minister of Minto Kirk in 1927. He demitted in 1935 and was admitted to Nicolson Street Church, Edinburgh, in 1939. He married Isabella Jopp Spence and their children were: Ian Gordon (1916–80); Thomas Spence Seaforth (1917–23); George Fingal (1920–45), killed when his ship was torpedoed; Gilbert Omand (1921–2003); Kenneth Macbeth (1923–1992); and Ella Jean Christine (b.1926). James (d.1744) son of George, Earl of Cromarty. He was known as Lord Royston. He was one of the Commissioners for letting the Duchess of Buccleuch’s lands in Scotland, serving in this capacity 1711–31. In 1725 the Hawick Kirk Session wrote to him asking for assistance with the many poor people in the Parish. There are many letters in existence from the Duchess to him, covering that time period. In about 1730 she wrote about several matters including thanking him ‘for buying that piece of ground in Hauick. ’Tis most convenient for me of anie thing belonging to that litll howse’ (presumably referring to land adjacent to Drumlanrig’s Tower). Rev. Laurence (1816–69) son of Andrew of Greenburn. He studied at St. Andrews University 1831–9, and was a Probationer within Perth Presbytery for many years before being ordained as a minister. He was presented to Ashkirk Parish by Gilbert, Earl of Minto in 1843 after John Edmondston walked out with much of the congregation at the Disruption. He was deprived in 1854 and died unmarried in Crieff (see also McKenzie).

Mackintosh (ma-kin-tosh) n. Angus (19th C.) factor to the Earl of Minto in the 1860s. He thus served as Chairman of the Parochial Board. He lived at Minto Cleuchhead, but must have taken over from Ephraim Selby after 1861. William (18th C.) house servant at Synton in 1778 and 1779, when he was working for Alexander Scott of Synton (also spelled ‘McIntosh’ and variants).

Mackside (mawk-sid) n. farm a little to the east of Hobkirk and Wolfelee, once part of the Barony of Abbotrule. Peter Turnbull is recorded there in 1502. It was acquired by Adam French from the monks of Jedburgh Abbey in 1569. The superiority was still with the Lordship of Jedburgh in 1587. John Turnbull was there in 1603 and David Turnbull in 1611, Patrick Turnbull in 1618 and Lawrence Turnbull in 1622. It is probably the ‘Laird of Toft’s Turnbull’s . . .side’ recorded in the 1643 county valuation, valued at £100; Gavin Turnbull was also there (with land valued at £24) and Janet Home was liferenter (with land valued at £50). It was among lands whose superiority was inherited by daughters of George Scott (brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade) in 1670. The lands (or perhaps their superiority) were among those inherited by William Kerr of Abbotrule in 1680. Archibald Shiel was a tenant there in 1684 when listed as a fugitive for attending conventicles. John Turnbull and James Oliver were tenant there in 1694, with William Shiel, Margaret Dickson, William Scott and Thomas Turnbull all listed as cottars. It was sold by William Kerr of Abbotrule to William Elliot of Wolfelee in 1751, MacLeven (muk-lee-vin) n. Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (17th/18th C.) from Galloway, she settled at Gorennberry in Castleton Parish. She was rebuked by the Session for providing a false ‘testimonial’, and explained how she had had a child out of wedlock and had to move.

Macmaster (muk-maw-stur) n. Rev. Robert (19th C.) listed as ‘M’Master’, minister of the Hawick Baptist Chapel on Allars Crescent in Slater’s 1852 directory. This is probably Baptist minister Robert Paton Macmaster (1830–95), who was born in Ayrshire, became a Baptist and wandered around preaching for a few years, before obtaining his first formal charge at Walsall in about 1853; he married Annie Robertson miller in Edinburgh in 1852, and was later at Coventry, Bristol, Bradford and Darlington. It seems likely that he spent only a short time in Hawick.

Macmillan (mawk-mi-lin) n. Hugh (20th C.) head gardner at Branxholme in the mid-1900s.

Macmillan-Scott (mawk-mi-lin-sko’) n. Arthur Francis of Howcleuch and Langlee (1854–1935) 2nd surviving son of Thomas. He was probably born at Harwood in Rulewater. He was educated at Harrow and was Captain in the 2nd Battalion Rifle Brigade and 5th Lancers. He later became a member of the Scottish Bar and then farmed sheep in Australia for a while. He was then involved in Toynbee Hall (the original ‘settlement house’ for the middle class to live and provide direct aid in poor neighbourhoods) in East London. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1896. He inherited Howcleuch and Langlee from his uncle Charles Scott. In 1899 he married Louisa Leslie Florence, daughter of Henry Strickland Bryant of the Education Department. As a Reserve he was sent to fight in the Boer War in 1900, becoming Captain and receiving the South African Medal. His wife joined him in South Africa for over a year.

Katherine Jane nee Roberts (d.1913) daughter of Capt. Browne Roberts of the East India Company; who was Sheriff of Calcutta. In 1844 she married the Laird of Wauchope, Thomas. She was a lock in rugby. He played basketball and golf at school, but joined the Trades at the age of 20. He then played for Hawick R.F.C. He joined the Border Reivers in 2002, but left to play for Welsh rugby team the Scarlets and then the Newcastle Falcons. He was first capped for Scotland in 2004 and has 24 caps, including 2 Calcutta Cup wins. He retired from playing in the 2015/6 season and started coaching (also McLeod).

MacLeod (muk-lowd) n. Scott (1979– ) born in Hawick and educated at the High School, he was a lock in rugby. He played basketball and golf at school, but joined the Trades at the age of 20. He then played for Hawick R.F.C. He joined the Border Reivers in 2002, but left to play for Welsh rugby team the Scarlets and then the Newcastle Falcons. He was first capped for Scotland in 2004 and has 24 caps, including 2 Calcutta Cup wins. He retired from playing in the 2015/6 season and started coaching (also McLeod).
Macmorland

Painted a sketch of Wauchope House in 1848. She had 3 sons and 3 daughters. Her name is also written 'Catherine'. She lived at Wauchope after her husband's death, and is recorded as proprietor there in a directory of 1868. She later moved to Pinnaclehill, near Kelso. Thomas, J.P. (1816–62) of Wauchope and Pinnaclehill, eldest son of Walter the 4th Laird. He was educated at Loretto, trained as a lawyer, apprenticed to Laurence Davidson and Thomas Syme, and became Writer to the Signet in 1838. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1841. In 1844 he married Katherine Jane, daughter of Capt. Browne Roberts from Kent (who had been High Sheriff of Calcutta); his sister-in-law Margaret Amelia Roberts later married his brother Charles of Langlee. They lived in Edinburgh and then at Harrow Wood, where most of his family was born. Quiet in manner, it is said that the secluded country life suited him. He succeeded to Wauchope after the death of his father in 1857 and moved there. He also held part of Weensland that had previously belonged to Archibald Dickson. He assumed the Macmillan surname after inheriting his maternal grandfather's estate of Shorthope. His children were: Walter, who died in infancy; another Walter, who succeeded; Arthur Francis; Edith Marion, who married Maj.-Gen. Frederick Edward Sotheby from Northamptonshire; Marion Maude, who died unmarried; and Katherine Margaret, died young after joining a sisterhood in England.

Thomas Alexander Frederick (1881–c.1952) 7th Laird of Wauchope and Pinnaclehill, son of Walter. He was educated at Eton and trained as an English lawyer. He let Wauchope out for shooting. He sold it about 1936.

He became Lieutenant in the 6th Dragoon Guards and later served as Captain of the Scottish Borderers Militia, based in Dumfries. He had a new house built at Wauchope about 1875. Regarded as reserved like his father, he was fond of reading and also rode with the Blackmoorvale hounds. He was Justice of the Peace for Selkirkshire and Chairman of the Hobkirk School Board. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1869. In about 1874 he is recorded as owner of the estate of Wauchope. In 1888 he was the first County Councillor elected for Hobkirk Parish. He left Wauchope for Bournemouth due to failing health, and died there. In 1876 he married Antoinetta, eldest daughter of Theodore Henry Dury of Bonsall, Derbyshire. His children were: Thomas Arthur Frederick; and Cecille Margaret, who married Cmdr. James Tancred of the Royal Navy.

Macmorland (muk-mo-rin) n.

William (d.c.1408) cleric of Glasgow Diocese, whose name has variant spellings, such as 'McMoyn'. He held the position of Archdeacon of Teviotdale sometime shortly before 1408. He may also have been Archdeacon of Glasgow in about 1403.

Macmorrin (muk-mor-lin) n.

Daniel (d.c.1860) preacher at Teviothead from 1847, probably until it became a new Parish in 1850. He then emigrated to Hamilton, Ontario, but later returned to Scotland and died in Edinburgh.

George Fraser (1863–1905) born in Wilton, son of Robert and Jemima Fraser. He was a student teacher at Buccleuch School, before moving to Edinburgh where he became Secretary to the Church of Scotland Committee on Education. He was also Vice-President of the Edinburgh Borders Union, organising their Hawick nights. He may have written the article on Hawick Common Riding for the Edinburgh Despatch in 1891. He presented the Cornet with a new Sash in 1898 (on behalf of Teries in Edinburgh), and was a member of the Callants' and Archeological Clubs. A keen walker of Border hills, he once walked from Hawick to Newcastle in a single day. He also walked Hadrian's Wall extensively and gave illustrated lectures on it. He was also a keen Volunteer, becoming Captain of College Company 4th Volunteer Battalion Royal Scots. He was said to be of a happy and generous disposition and have a boyish enthusiasm for his native town. He died in a shooting accident (his trigger apparently caught on a twig when he was shooting rabbits at Corstorphine) and was buried with military honours in Bournemouth.
the MacNee Fountain

the Wellogate. The MacNee Fountain was erected in his memory by public subscription.

the MacNee Fountain (\textit{thun-muk-ne-fown'-in}) \textit{n.} ornate grey granite drinking fountain in Wilton Lodge Park, near Langlands Bridge. It was erected by public subscription in 1906 in memory of George Fraser MacNee.

MacNeill (\textit{muk-neel}) \textit{n.} Jessie (1853–1922) younger daughter of Bedrule Schoolmaster William. From 1882 she assisted her father as sewing mistress. After his death in 1893 she stayed on for a short time, but then became sick-nurse for a farmer in Southdean called Riddell. Late in life she married Denholm postman Hugh Rigby.

William (1814–1893) from Tranent in East Lothian, son of David and Frances Fraser. He became teacher at Longnidry in 1844 and then was teacher at Cogsmill from 1849. A few years later he moved to Bedrule School, where he was schoolmaster for 38 years. He also served as Registrar for the Parish, as well as Session Clerk, Inspector of the Poor and Clerk of the School Board. In 1843 he married Helen Imrie (who died in 1878). Their children included: Mary (b.1844); David (b.1845); Frances (b.1847), who married Archibald Stewart; Alexander (b.1849); Helen (b.1851), who married William Cairns Ross; Jessie (b.1853), who married Hugh J. Rigby of Denholm; and William (b.1857), who died in his teens. His wife worked as an assistant at Bedrule School, but after her death he was denied a request for an assistant. After he resigned and was reinstated, he was able to hire his daughter Jessie as a sewing mistress from 1882. He complained about the state of the schoolhouse in 1892 and retired later that year. The family are buried in Bedrule churchyard (also written 'MacNeil' and 'McNeil').

Macquoid (\textit{mu-kwoid}) \textit{n.} Peter Craik (b.1895) born on the Isle of Wight and licensed to preach by Edinburgh Presbytery in 1921. Probably his first charge was as assistant in Hawick. He moved to become minister at Bothkennar in 1924 and went to Turriff in 1927.

MacRae (\textit{muk-ra}) \textit{n.} Rev. Dr. John (1815–92) native of Glasgow (born on Burns birthday), he was the son of James, a Glasgow shoemaker. He was educated at Glasgow University and licensed by that Presbytery. He succeeded Wallace as Minister of Hawick Parish at the Disruption of 1843 and remained for almost 50 years. He lived in the Manse on Buccleuch Road. He moved from St. Mary’s to the new Old Parish Church in 1844. His time as minister also saw the creation of the separate congregations of St. Mary’s and St. John’s. He was the instigator for the founding of the Industrial School (later Drumlanrig) and also served as an Orrock Trustee. He was one of the most scholarly preachers of his age, receiving an honorary Doctor of Divinity from Glasgow University in 1864. He also founded the Blantyre Mission in British Central Africa (now Malawi). A disagreement with his assistant (J.A. Birrell) in 1881 resulted in part of the congregation leaving to form Wellington Church. He was a highly respected figure in Hawick, projecting an air of old-time dignity (and argued against instrumental music as late as 1882). He laboured under a lameness of foot, and was supposed to have said a pretty strong proof that his tenants for time immemorial have been in use to pasture, and to cast peats, &c'. He was consulted again in 1774, by which time he was of the opinion that the neighbouring land owners had a claim and suggested that the Town should offer to concede $1/3$ of the Common to save expense. He was known as a brilliant lawyer, who was coarse, heavy-drinking and extremely popular. He was afterwards Lord Braxfield, becoming infamous as a judge who was fond of savage punishments, e.g. sentencing reformer Thomas Muir to transportation. He was the original of R.L. Stevenson’s ‘Weir of Hermiston’ and the ‘Jolly Judge’ pub in Edinburgh was named after him. Rev. Richard Rose (b.1833) born at Braemar, he was a missionary involved with the Free Kirk in Hawick. He studied at Edinburgh University. He became the first ordained minister of the West Port Free Church in 1869, staying for only a few years. In 1870 he married Margaret Phillips, widow of brewer George Henry King. He left Hawick in 1872 to move to Dundee and then was translated to Knockando in 1875 (also spelled ‘McQueen’).
MacRae’s Band (muk-řaź-bawnd) n. popular name for a choir that started in the Parish Church in the mid-19th century when Rev. MacRae was Minister. They practised every Saturday night in the old Parish School in Orrock Place, and were later disbanded.

Mactaggart (muk-taw-gur) n. Bruce see W. Bruce. Ian C. (1900/1–1965) son of Robert and Mary Aikman, he was Cornet in 1928. Events at his year as Common Riding were recorded on a silent black and white film. He won the Medway Cup outright at the Common Riding Races of 1933, winning on Rufus for the third time (after victories in 1929 and 1932, and coming second in 1930 and 1931). In 1934 it was replaced by the Rufus Trophy and won by him on Rufus! In 1966 the Medway trophy was returned by his wife for competition. He was Callants’ Club President in 1955. He was Managing Director of Mactaggart Brothers, wool merchants, seeing the firm in 1964. He served as chief executive officer for wool control in Scotland during WWII. He married Jessie S. Borland and they are both buried in Denholm. They had 2 daughters, Fiona and Ann. Robert Lamb Watson (1870–1949) son of Robert Lamb Watson and Mary Jane Alexander Main, and brother of William Alexander Main. He was born in Duddingston, Midlothian and became a manager at Pringle’s in Hawick. He married Mary Helen (‘Nellie’) Aikman. Their children were: James (d.1956); Ian (1900/1–65); and Mamie. He secondly married Hyndmer Hewatt, and their children included Arthur Crosbie (1918–42), who died at El Alamein. William Alexander Main (b.1868) born in Glasgow, son of Robert Lamb Watson (also the name of his brother) and Mary Jane Alexander Main. He was a businessman who established the skinworks Mactaggart Brothers. In 1903 he married Mary Jane Cooper, and their children included William Alexander and Mary Bryson. William Alexander, C.B.E., J.P. ‘Wullie’ or ‘Wullie Mac’ (1906–2002) born at Braeside, Weensland Road, son of William Alexander Main and Margaret Jane Cooper. He was educated in Melrose and at Sedbergh School. He took up rugby and first played for Hawick R.F.C. at 17. He was part of the team that won all the ‘sevens’ in 1927. Instead of following in the family business he joined Pringle’s in 1925 as a trainee manager, becoming Director in 1932 and joint Managing Director (with Arthur Oddy) in 1933 at the age of only 27. In 1936 he convinced the other directors to change the name from ‘Robert Pringle & Sons’ to just ‘Pringles’ and to diversify into fashion knitwear. He served with the K.O.S.B. territorial battalion 1926–33 and was put in charge of the Hawick Air Training Corps in 1939, later serving with the R.A.M.C. in Europe. He became sole Managing Director in 1945, following the resignation of Oddy. He then led the company to enormous post-war success, becoming Chairman of the Board in 1960. He resigned as Managing Director in 1968, following the take-over by Dawson International, but he reamined as Chairman until 1969. During his time in charge the workforce increased from 200 to 2,000 and the firm essentially cornered the worldwide market in fashion knitwear for golfers. He is said to have a very ‘hands-on’ approach to management, regularly walking on the shop-floor and talking individually to the workers. He received the C.B.E. in 1964 for services to industry. He was Cornet in 1930. He was also briefly on the Town Council, and involved with the Callants’ Club, Vertish Hill Sports and Bucelleuch Hunt. He contributed funds to establish the Hawick Youth Centre, and he and his wife donated stained glass windows to Lilliesleaf Church. He was President of Hawick R.F.C. in 1972, its centenary year. He married his Cornet’s Lass Marjorie Laing Innes, and she died in 1998. The family settled at Bewlie. Their children were: Bruce; Alan; and Claire. He lived at Bewlie House. W. Bruce (1933– ) son of Wulie. He joined Pringle’s as a trainee in 1951, becoming a Director in 1964 and Managing Director in 1969. He was Cornet in 1954 and Acting Father in 1971 (to the son of his own Acting Father, John P. Martin). He married Sheila Tait and had 2 sons and 2 daughters. He was the Jubilee Cornet in 2004 and Jubilee Acting Father in 2021.

Mactaggart’s (muk-taw-gurtz n.) skinworks,

(see also Meg).
Maggy Fendy

Maggy Fendy (maw-gee-fen-dee) n., nickname of Margaret Scott of Harden (this, or variants such as ‘Maggie Findy’, was used to refer to a self-reliant woman).

magic lantern (maw-jeek-lan-turn) n. former name for a slide projector, particularly with mounted glass slides, which became popular in Victorian times. ‘Magic lantern shows’ caused a sensation when they first appeared in the late 19th century, essentially a forerunner of the cinema. There are records of large turnouts for such shows in Hawick, and many slides from around 1900 survive in the Museum, most made by D. Gaylor.

Magistrate (maw-jis-trä’) n. formerly one of two officers, the Senior Magistrate and the Junior Magistrate, elected annually by the Burgess to enforce laws with the town. The word was synonymous with ‘Bailie’ for most of Hawick’s recorded history. Typically each Magistrate would serve for 2 years (with the election in early October), first as Junior and then as Senior Magistrate, although there were exceptions to this. Because of the specific wording of Hawick’s Charter, the Magistrates exercise a jurisdiction similar to that of Magistrates in a Royal Burgh, and in former times they had a great amount of leeway in administering justice. In the 17th and 18th centuries there were often disputes over jurisdiction, with Hawick residents being forbidden from appealing to any other courts (i.e. the Baron Bailie or the Sheriff) than the Hawick Magistrates Court. During the 18th century it was common for the magistrates also to keep an inn where local disputes would be settled and much of the business of the Town carried out; there was criticism that they profitted from the Town’s business. Before there was a Provost, the Senior Magistrate was the highest elected official in town. After the reconstitution of the council in 1861 there were 4 magistrates. The Magistrates would sit on the bench to deal with local legal matters, although they were also Justices of the Peace only in fairly recent times. Their legal jurisdiction only extended to the Burgh boundaries (formerly synonymous with Bailie).

magistracie (maw-jis-tri-see) n., arch. the office of a magistrate, the magistrates collectively – ‘...conform to the ancient pratique of this burgh since the first ryse and beginning of magistracy within the same’ [BR1673], ‘...even to the comitting of some ryott, abusing of Magistracie and almost to the effusion of blood’ [BR1706], ‘...that whosoever has a mind to set up for the Magistracy, and peuther for it, shall be put in the Bailies’ Leet without any objection’ [BR1756] (also written ‘magistry’).

the Magna Charta (thu-mawg-na-chawr-ta) n. name sometimes formerly used for the Charter of 1357 granted by James Douglas of Drumlanrig to the inhabitants of the Burgh of Hawick.

Mag Nichol’s Trough (mawg-ni-kuTZ-trof) n. popular name for a former public water supply near the head of the Loan. Also sometimes called ‘Jamie Nichol’s Trough’. There was also a private supply nearby that was used by the Nichols.

maidenheid (mä-din-heed) n., arch. maidenhood.

the Maidens (thu-mä-dinz) n. the Maiden Paps, south of Hawick and prominent along the Newcastleton Road. Like several of the higher peaks in the area, these hills are formed from igneous rocks. The heights of the 2 peaks are 510 m (1,677 ft) and 505 m (1,650 ft). Their double peaks are a distinctive feature of the skyline to the south (marked ‘Maiden papes hills’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

the Maiden Paps (thu-mä-pawps) n. another name for the Maidens – ‘It rows aboot, it trows aboot, Baith near and far awa; Whiles it is on the Maiden’s Paps, And whiles on Ruberslaw’ [TCh] (it is ‘Maiden Paps’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

the Maiden Way (thu-mä-din-wä) n. ancient road passing nearby to Hawick, believed to pre-date the Romans. There may be more than one road given this name. The local one passes through the head of Liddesdale and across the hills to the west of Dodburn, being used as a drove road until relatively recent times. This has been suggested as the northern extension of the road of the same name, which crosses the Penines (being part of the Pennine Way near Alston), passing near Bewcastle and on through the South Tyne valley. The ‘Thief’s Road’ may have followed a similar path (the origin is probably Old Welsh for ‘elevated’ rather than being related to the English word).

the Maids o’ Honour

a group of single women selected by the Cornet’s Lass to assist at the Colour Bussing (and Overseas Night the evening before). They follow her in with the Flag, and pin ribbons on the Cornet’s supporters. Their role in the Colour Bussing and in decorating the Principals’ coats with ribbons goes back at least to the beginning of the 19th century. The number is fixed at 22, 10 selected by the Cornet and his Lass, 5 each by the Right-and Left-Hand Men and Lasses and 2 by the Acting Mother.

Main (mān) n. Agnes (17th C.) listed among the poor living at Hassendean on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Andrew (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Whithope in 1722, Borthwickbrae in 1724 and Whithope in 1728. In 1720 he married ‘Manny Whitt’ (presumably Many White), who was also from Robertson. He may also have married Janet Scott in Roberton in 1727. His children included: Janet (b.1722); John (b.1724); Hugh (b.1728); and James (b.1730).

Andrew (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Muselee in 1741. He is probably the Andrew who married Margaret Easton in Robertson in 1736. His children included: Margaret (b.1741); and Helen (b.1745). He is surely related to the earlier Andrew. Isobel (17th/18th C.) recorded receiving money from Ashkirk Parish in 1727. James (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish, when it contained Hassendean. He was married in 1687, although his wife’s name is then blank. His wife was Isobel Martin and their daughter Bessie was baptised in 1689. He may also be the James whose son John was baptised in Robertson in 1702. He witnessed a baptism for Adam Craig and Isobel Main (surely a relative) in 1688. John (18th C.) gardener in Orniston. In 1728 in Cavers Parish he married Agnes Elliot. His children included Richard (b.1731) and Marion (b.1732).

Richard (17th/18th C.) resident of Earlside in 1708 when his son Thomas was baptised in Cavers Parish. Other children were: Agnes (b.1710) and James (b.1722). Mains see Borthwick Mains

Mains see Cavers Mains

Mains (mānz) n. farm near old Castleton. There are enclosures, field boundaries and earthworks nearby, close to the old railway line. It is recorded in the ballad ‘Hobbie Noble’ that ‘Sim o’ the Mains’ was the betrayer of Hobbie. In the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale it is ‘Manys’, with value 10 shillings and 8 pence, and tenanted by Thomas Armstrong. David Elliot ‘in the Manis’ was recorded in 1586/7. A later Thomas Armstrong ‘of Maynes’ was recorded in 1590. ‘Gilbert Elliot of the Maynis’ is recorded in 1599. James Murray was there in 1682. Adam Murray and Quintin Crozier were there in 1694. George Irvine was farmer there in 1797, William Irving in 1821 and William Snowden in the 1860s – ‘At Kershope foot the tryste was set, Kershope of the Iliye lee; And there was traitor Sim o’ the Mains, And with him a private companie’ [T] (marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map and Stobie’s 1770 map; it was presumably once the ‘home farm’ for the local baron).

the Mains (thu-mānz) n. former local name for Borthwick Mains.
Mains Haugh

Mains Haugh (mänz-hawch) n. former name for a piece of land in Minto Parish. It was ‘Main’s-haugh’ in 1779, valued at £21 17s 11d and still listed in the Land Tax Rolls of 1811.

Mainshiel Heid (män-shiel-heed) n. Mainshiel Head, hill on the north side of the Borthwick valley, to the west of Harden and south of Borthwickshiel. It reaches a height of 258 m, although an unnamed peak to the west rises to 274 m. Harden Knowe is essentially its eastern spur.

Mains o Feu-Rule (mänz-ö-few-rool) n. former name for lands in the Barony of Feu-Rule, possibly the same as Hallrule. In 1632 Margaret and Isobella, sisters of Walter Turnbull of Rawflat were each served as ‘heirs portioner’ in a third part of the 10-pound land (of old extent) of ‘villae et Maynes de Feuralroull’. Also in 1632 Robert, son of Andrew Ker of Faldonside, inherited part of the ‘Maynes de Fewardaill alias Fewroule vocatis Halsroule cum molendino’.

the Mains o Wulton (thu-mänz-ö-wul’-in) n. another name for Wultan Mains.

Main Street (män-stree’) n. street in Denholm that runs along the south side of the Green and is part of the A698. It is also called Eastgate. The houses were all white-washed until into the 20th century. It contains the Cross Keys Inn and the Fox and Hounds Inn and used to have several shops, including the Post Office and 2 butchers. The cobbles were removed in the 1930s. There were railings next to the Green from WWII until the 1960s.

mair (mär) adj. more, larger in quantity, additionally, furthermore – ‘That bid’s us toil, on, on, frae year to year, Wha’s ceaseless cry is, ‘Gie us mair! mair! mair!’ [JoHa], ‘...Kens weel the gossip o' the place That mak's his smile the mair?’ [WFC], ‘Look aboot ye, was there ever Vista that could offer mair?’ [WL].

mair (mär) n., arch. a moor, broad area of open land, often high and containing boggy regions – ‘Where we roam o'er the hill, or tread heather mairs Or walk in the valley among scenes so rare’ [JCa] (the spelling and pronunciation are problematic, since muir is often written down although mär is meant; see also moor in place names).

the Mair (thu-mär) n. Hawick Moor, part of the Common, usually referring explicitly to the area containing St. Leonard’s race course. This is the location of the main social event of the Common Riding on the Friday and Saturday afternoons (since 1855 and 1868, respectively). Stalls, entertainments, beer tents etc. are in abundance. On Common Riding Friday the Cornet and his followers arrive at the back gate (towards Pil-muir) at about noon. The Cornet then rides round the course with the Flag, followed by the Right- and Left-Hand Men and Acting Father and then the other riders. The ‘Big Fower’ ride their horses back round the course to the Paddock and the Cornet climbs to the roof of the Committee Room, waving the Flag towards the hillside and then towards the Paddock side, before setting it there for the duration of the races. When he climbs down the Cornet, together with the Acting Father, are presented with riding crops by the Chief Guest. The race meeting then starts in earnest, with both the more serious ‘fallping’ races and the Cornet’s Races (which are only for supporters who have ridden that day). The betting is fiercest on the ‘Tradesmen’s Handicap’. Before the Cornet has even arrived there has been a relay race run between children from the primary schools in Hawick. The Cornet leaves the Mair on the Friday at about 4 p.m., exiting by the top gate. Most people usually stay there for much longer, however, and the ‘picnics’ go on until well into the night if the weather is good. The race meeting starts later on the Saturday. Admission was first charged in 1883. In 1919 no licensed tents were permitted – ‘We’ll a’ hie to the mair a-riding: Drumlanrig gave it for providing’ [AB], ‘But while the Common-Riding’s on there’s never yin’ll care O’ joining Bonnie Chairlie’s flag They’ll a’ be at the Mair’ [T] (also known as ‘the Muir’, ‘the Moor’ or more formally ‘St. Leonard’s Park’).

Mair (määr) n. Adam (18th/19th C.) weaver in Newcastleton. He was listed among heads of households in 1835. He was surely related to Andrew. Alexander (1776–1842) carrier of Hawick, operating from Backdamgate. In the early 19th century his firm ran a service between Hawick and Galashiels every Tuesday, continuing on to Edinburgh and Leith, amongst other places. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He is listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory leaving for Edinburgh on Tuesdays and Fridays and returning on Wednesdays and Saturdays, as well as going to Glasgow on Wednesdays. In 1837 he is listed going to Galashiels and Edinburgh every Tuesday. At the 1837 election one of the Tory voters escaped the mob by hiding in his house, which was stated to be ‘by the Tower-dyke-side’. He is recorded as a carrier near the Crescent (possibly the Mill Path) in 1841. He was heavily involved with the Relief Kirk. He married Elizabeth, daughter of carrier William Wilson, who died in 1847 aged 67. Their children included: William (1809/10–47), innkeeper at Gala Bank; Ann (1812/13–46); John; Janet; and Elizabeth (b.1821/2), who died young. One of his daughters became Mrs. Drummond. Andrew (18th C.) wrought in Town-o’-Rule. Andrew (b.1794/5) from Newcastleton, he was listed as a weaver among heads of a households in 1835. By 1841 he was a hand-loom weaver in Hawick, living at Lockiesedge, then 5 Bourtree Place in 1851 and 5 O’Connell Street in 1851. His wife was Isabella and their children included Andrew Jr., Adam, Jane and Isabella. Gilbert (b.1785/6) born in Castleton Parish. He was an agricultural labourer living at Silverbuthall in 1841 and Wilton Roadhead in 1851. His wife was Margaret, and their children included William, Andrew, Walter, Francis, Thomas and Mary. James (d.1812) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His wife died in 1811 and he followed a year later. He could be the James, son of Andrew born in Hobkirk in 1743. James (b.c.1793) weaver in Wilton. He was listed among heads of households in 1840 and 1841 at Lockiesedge. He was also recorded at Lockiesedge on the 1841 census. His children included David, Catherine, Jane, Agnes, Mary and Margaret. John (17th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His wife was Margaret Scott and their son Thomas was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1673. The witnesses were Richard Elliot and Robert Scott. His name is written ‘Mayr’.

John (17th C.) recorded as resident at Stonedge on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. His name was listed as ‘John Maire Elder’, and the ‘younger’ John who was also there was probably his son. John (17th/18th C.) probably son of John, he was tenant farmer at Mackside. He may be the John ‘younger’ who was listed along with John ‘Elder’ at Stonedge in 1694. In 1704 (or perhaps a confirmation of the purchase of 1666) he purchased half the lands of Kirknowe from John Shiel. His son Richard married Janet, only daughter of John Shiel (and probably grand-daughter of the man he bought the land from). John (18th C.) paid the cart tax in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1785–91. Rev. John (1822–1902) born in Paisley, 3rd son of John. He was educated in Paisley and at Glasgow University and was licensed by Paisley Presbytery in 1845. Then in 1847 he was ordained as assistant and successor at Southdean, and remained there for well over half a century. In 1887 he obtained a doctorate from Glasgow University. He married Agnes (who died in 1900), daughter of George Grant of Glasgow, who founded a bursary in her father’s name. His publications include ‘Memorial Sermon preached in the Old Parish Church of Southdean’ (1876), ‘Sermon on the Life and Character of Jane Grant’ (published in Hawick, 1883), ‘Sermon on the Life and Character of James Stewart, Min. of Wilton’ (Hawick, 1886), and ‘Pulpit Memorail of the Life and Character of the late Rev. John MacRae, D.D., Min. of Hawick (Hawick, 1892). There is a bronze plaque to his memory in Southdean Kirk. Richard (18th C.) significant parishioner of Hobkirk in the early 1700s, described as a ‘portioner’. He was son of John, who had purchased half of Kirknowe in Hobkirk Parish. He was recorded as possessor of part of Kirknowe and Kirkstile in 1745. With the permission of his wife Janet Shiel he sold the lands to William Elliot of Wolfelee in 1751. His daughters Jane and Magdalen later possessed a cottage at Kirkstile. Dr. Robert (1864–1902) born in Tarbolton, Ayrshire, son of Archibald and Anne Vass. He graduated M.B. and C.M. from Glasgow University in 1886. He came to Hawick in 1890 to assist Dr. Bannerman, later becoming a partner. He first followed the Cornet in 1891, along with several of the town’s other doctors. As well as being a popular doctor, he became a Councilor for North High Street Ward in 1894, serving on the Sanitary Committee and Lunacy Board. This led to him being Cornet in 1896, the only known non-Teri to hold that office. The explanation is that when a last minute Cornet needed to be found he was the only unmarried man on the Council, and was talked into accepting the position. Provost Barrie served as his Acting Father, and it appears that he did not serve as Right- or Left-Hand Man afterwards. He was a keen sportsman, being Captain of the Golf Club, and he was also involved with the Border Rifles and the Masons. He died at age 37 and is buried at Tarbolton. W. (18th/19th C.) teacher in Castleton. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. William (b.1823/4) blacksmith living on Ladylaw Place in 1851. His wife was Ann (also ‘Maire’ and ‘Mayr’).

In modern times the favourite day for weddings has been Saturday, but formerly the normal day was the Friday following the 3 proclammations made in church. The ceremony was often preceeded by a feet-washing tradition before the hen party, which usually took place on the Tuesday before. Prior to about the mid-19th century marriages in Hawick took place at the Manse, rather than in the Kirk. ‘Irregular’ marriages were performed in front of witnesses and not by the parish minister; they were common in the 17th and 18th century among the religiously disenfranchised.

mairriaged (mär-reejd) adj., arch. married – ‘...and purposed to cohabit togither as maireiged persones, if not questioned by the magistrat of ye sd. toune’ [BR1689].

Queen of Scots and James VI. His father, Sir William, had fallen at Flodden, and he married Mary Cranstoun. Becoming blind later in life, he wrote a series of satirical poems, e.g. ‘Agnis the Theivis of Liddeadaill’, which are important sources of information about the period, and he also importantly collected and preserved early Scots verse. Robert (15th C.) listed among local men as witness to the 1464/5 sasine for the lands of Kirkton Mains and Flex. His name is recorded as ‘Roberto Mateland’. William of Lethington (1525–73) son of poet Richard, he was Secretary of State to Mary of Lorraine and also Mary, Queen of Scots. He was often referred to simply as ‘Lethington’. He was originally an ally of the Earl of Moray, probably being involved in the murders of Rizzio and Darnley, but later sided with Mary. In 1559 he was appointed along with the Earl of Bothwell and Ker of Cessford to keep order on the Border. He acted to restore Mary to power, but was forced to surrender in a siege at Edinburgh Castle and died in Leith prison.

maitter (mà-ur) n. matter – ‘…there’s often matters being discussed that we ken noughts about, and ee wad be best to keep wheest and no’ let on eer ignorance’ [JHH], ‘…no’ let on eer ignorance’ [JHH], ‘…about, and ee wad be best to keep wheest and ten maitters being discussed that we ken noughts’ [BR1673].

Makerstoun Hoose

Makerstoun (ma-kurz-tin, -toon) n. small parish on the north side of the Tweed, between Dryburgh and Kelso. It contains the village of Mekerstoun, as well as Makerstoun House (the origin of the name is probably ‘Mælcærf’s fram’; it first appears in 1159 as ‘Malcarvaston’ and in a list from St. Andrews Priory about the same time as ‘Malkaruistun’; the ‘l’ disappeared in the 15th century; it is also written ‘Makerston’, ‘Makeairistoun’, ‘Mackayrstoun’, ‘McCairston’, ‘M’Caristoun’ and other variants; it is ‘Machenstoun’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map and ‘Maccarston’ on Roy’s 1750 map).

Makerstoun Hoose (mawk-ur-stin-hoos) n. house in the parish of Makerstoun, standing in extensive grounds above the Tweed between St. Boswells and Kelso. Originally a tower of the Corbetts was there, it was home to the McDougalls (or Makdouglas) of Makerstoun from 1374. A new house was built on the ruins of a tower destroyed by Hertford’s men in 1545, constructed in 1590, with extensive later renovations.
It was rebuilt in 1714 to designs by William Adam (father of Robert) and enlarged into a Victorian mansion in 1812, to plans of Archibald Elliot. The estate passed to Hay-McDongall, then to General Sir Thomas Brisbane, and then the Scotts of Gala, all through marriage. Sir Thomas Brisbane built an observatory in the grounds, where he carried out pioneering observations on magnetism. Although the house burned down in 1970, it was rebuilt to the original design by 1973. On the opposite side of the Teviot stands ‘The Law’, also known as ‘The Pleahill’, probably a Norman motte, where local courts were held.

make up (māk-up) v., arch. to ascend – ‘On the tother hand – the richt – the road wunds about the Green an makes up the brae’ [ECS] to plan, arrange, especially in the phrase ‘made it up’ – ‘... two young men, more resolute than their neighbours, ‘made it up’ to go and look in at the old woman’s window’ [EM1820], ‘... but wey made it up that aw was to come ower an’ see her efter a while, an’ whan there was a munelicht nacht’ [BCM1880].

Maknet (mak-net) n. William (16th C.) listed in 1552 among people owed money on the last testament of William Scott, younger of Branxholme. The surname could be ‘McKnight’ or something else.

mak penny (mak-pe-nee) v., arch. to convert into cash, realise as funds – ‘... and mak penny of his rediast gudis, to the awaile of the said sown of thua hunder merkis ...’ [SB1500].

mala fama (ma-la-fa-ma) n., arch. a report of bad behaviour – ‘... or yet to sett or hire to any person who is in mala fama, or under ane evil report, any of their said houses ...’ [BR1699] (from Latin for ‘evil rumour’).

Malanoth (ma-la-noth) n. Adam (15th C.) received 2 sheep in the will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme in 1491/2. It is unclear if his surname is a variant of something else.

Malcolm (mawl-kum) n. name of 4 Scottish Kings. Malcolm I (d.954) King of Alba (i.e. northern Scotland) from 943. He signed a treaty with Edward I of England, gaining Strathclyde and Cumbria. He was never the monarch in the Scottish Borders. Malcolm II (d.1034) son of Kenneth III. He fought at the Battle of Carham, the outcome of which merged Strathclyde with Alba, leading to the formation of modern Scotland. He was thus the first ‘Scottish’ monarch for the Hawick area. Malcolm III (c.1031–93) eldest son of Duncan I, he was King from 1058. He was also known as Malcolm Canmore (‘of the large head’). After his father died he took refuge in England, later invading with the help of the noblemen of Southern Scotland and killed Lulach I. He made an alliance with England, and married St. Margaret. It is thought that during this time Middle English became the dominant language in the Scottish Lowlands. In 1072 he was forced to swear allegiance to William I of England, but in 1091 invaded Northumbria and besieged Durham. This attempt to control Northumbria failed when William II of England sent an army north. But he tried again in 1093, besieging Alnwick. However, he was killed there, along with his son Edward. He was succeeded by his younger brother Donald III. Malcolm IV (c.1141–65) grandson of David I, he succeeded to the throne in 1153. Sometimes referred to as the ‘Maiden’, he died unmarried in Jedburgh and was succeeded by William I. He founded Soutra Hospital in 1164. He also granted additional lands and rights to the monks of Jedburgh Abbey.

Malcolm (mawl-kum) n. George (1722–1803) son of Rev. Robert, minister of Ewes. His father was granted the farm of Burnfoot-in-Ewes and he helped his father to run it and succeeded to the farm. He also merged it with the neighbouring lands of Douglas. He married Margaret Paisley of Craig and had a family of 17. Among these were the ‘4 knights of Eskdale’, namely Col. Sir James, Adm. Sir Pulteney, Vice-Adm. Sir Charles and Gen. Sir John. Sir John (1769–1833) soldier and diplomat from a prominent family based at Burnfoot near Langholm, he and his 3 brothers being called the ‘Four Knights of Eskdale’. He entered the military at the age of 12. He served as Governor of Bombay, is buried in Westminster, and had a 100 ft obelisk built in his memory on Whita Hill above Langholm in 1835. In about 1805 he helped the ailing Dr. John Leyden to recover from illness in his home at Seringapatam. He inscribed some complementary lines of verse in Leyden’s ‘Scenes of Infancy’, to which Leyden reciprocated. John (19th C.) from Samuelston, he was schoolmaster at Hobkirk from 1857. He had a stove and a porch fitted to the schoolhouse. He taught through the transition from Parish to Board School. He was said to be an excellent teacher, although perhaps pedantic and with a hasty temper. He was keen on teaching his pupils about Border history. He was Secretary of the Border Association of Teachers. He married the sister of Daniel Henderson of the Bonchester Bridge Inn and they had children. He died at about age 50 and is buried in Hobkirk Kirkyard. Rev. Robert (1687/8–1761) son of Malcolm’s Moss

David from the Lochore family. He graduated from St. Andrews University in 1707, became tutor to Lord President Dalrymple and was licensed by Haddington Presbytery in 1716. He was called Eves Kirk in 1717 and remained there until his death. He failed to inherit the family estate near Cupar on account of his relative being an Episcopalian and leaving it to someone else. However, he was given the estate of Burnfoot (in Eskdale) by the Earl of Dalkeith, and this would remain in his family for several generations. He established a Poor House in the Parish. In 1722 he married Agnes, daughter of Rev. George Campbell, and she died in 1767. Their children were: George (1722–1803), farmer at Burnfoot, father of the ‘4 Knights of Eskdale’; William Elphinstone (1816–1907) from the family of Burnfoot in Dumfriesshire, he was son of Adm. Sir Pulteney. He served in the Royal Navy from the age of 14, but left 2 years later on account of weak health. After graduating from Cambridge he travelled extensively and then settled at Burnfoot farm in 1843. He was a Justice of the Peace, Commissioner of Supply and Deputy-Lieutenant for Dumfriesshire and commanded the Langholm Company of Volunteers. In 1857 he married Mary (d.1859) daughter of James of Cavers. When his wife’s brother James died in 1878, the Cavers estate was inherited by his daughter Mary. After his first wife’s death he secondly married Charlotte Leslie Melville (1826–92). William (19th/20th C.) from Norham-on-Tweed, he was Police Constable in Rulewater, being based at the Forkins. He married Jessie Johnstone.

Mangerton (mänjer-, mang-ger-tin) n. former tower house of the chief of the Armstrongs, between Newcastle and Kershopefoot, on the banks of the Liddel. It was the seat of 10 successive Armstrong chiefs, from the late 13th century to the early 17th. ‘Alyxandir Arnystrand’ is listed as owner of the lands in a rental roll of c.1376. The remains of the tower are now just ruins of the lower storey, measuring about 10.4 m by 7.7 m. There is an armorial stone, which appears to bear the date 1563 and the initials ‘SA’ and ‘EF,’ for Simon Armstrong and Elizabeth Foster. The tower was partly blown up by a force led by the Regent Moray in 1569, when the Armstrongs refused to submit. The tower is now cared for by the Armstrong Clan Trust, and is situated about 300 m south of the modern farmhouse. To the west of the farmhouse is Mangerton Mill, which lies on a lade built off the Liddel Water. The lands associated with the estate are listed on a rental roll of around 1376 in the charters of the Douglasses of Morton: Ragarth; Speteltoun; Mangerton; Mangertounholme; Grenys; Qwythawlhg; Westburneflat; Pouterlampert; Dominium inferius;
In 1788 the lands were still valued at £... James Renwick was tenant in the mid-1700s.

1707. The farm was surveyed in 1718, along with other properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch, when lands of William Scott of Mangerton were valued at £1800 in 1643. ‘Lady Mangerstowne’ was responsible for the land tax in 1663, including £852 for ‘towresfeild’, £100 for the ‘teind of the towre’ and £800 for her rents in Castleton. The ‘Laird of Mangerstain’ paid tax on a value of £1280 in 1678. John Armstrong, James Little and Francis Little were listed there on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. The farm was still valued at £1280 in 1707. The farm was surveyed in 1718, along with other properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch, when it extended to 349 acres, bounded by Sorbietrees, Liddel Water and Tweeden Burn. At that time it contained the farmstead of Blacksidelees, there being 13 shillings.

Mangerton Mill (mān-jer-tin-mill) n. former mill near the farm of Mangerton. It is marked on the 1718 Buccleuch survey, and still clearly on the modern Ordnance Survey map, beside the mill lade at the curve in the Liddel there. James Armstrong was tenant there in 1611. James ‘Littlemilne’ was tenant in 1683. Andrew Turnbull was miller there in the mid-18th century. Thomas Elliot was miller there in 1852 (it is ‘Mangertoum Myln’ in 1611; it is ‘Mangertonm mill’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Manor (ma-nur) n. parish in Peeblesshire, south-west of the town of Peebles, extending along the valley of the Manor Water from the Tweed towards Megget. It is also sometimes called Kirkton Manor. The barony was granted by Robert III to Sir William Inglis in 1396, as a reward for killing the English knight Thomas de Strutters at Rulehaugh. This was the same Inglis family who were barons of Branxholme. Sir William’s son John had a charter of the barony from Archibald, Earl of Douglas, who was already superior of the family’s lands in Roxburghshire. John Inglis of Manor swapped half of Branxholme for Murdiestoun with Robert Scotts of Buccleuch in 1420. And in 1446 his son, Thomas Inglis of Manor, swapped the other half of Branxholme with Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. The Inglis family sold their half to David Pringle of Smailholm in 1420. And in 1446 his son, Thomas Inglis of Manor, swapped half of Branxholme in 1444 (renamed Parkview and more recently Dunira). A new manse was built on Old Manse Road in 1763, at a cost of £200. This was for a while the only house beyond the Old Parish Church along the New Road. The phrase is also used sometimes to refer to the homes of other local ministers (see also the Auld Manse).
Manse Brae (mans-brä) n. former popular name for the road at Denholm Townhead, where the Church manse was located (now Beechlands), i.e. part of the road from Hawick into Denholm. Also the name for the road (north) up to the Manse in Robertson, at the top of which the older church stood.

Manse Lane (mans-län) n. name used for Old Manse Lane before about 1860.
Mansfield (manz-, mans-feeld) n. area of town down-river from the North Bridge, generally referring to the part on the north side of the Teviot, lying along Mansfield Road. It consists of housing, factories, sports grounds, and an industrial area. It was named after Wilton Parish Church Manse, which was once the only property in the area (now in Mansfield Square), the Minister of Wilton owning a large tract of land there from at least the mid-17th century. The Mansfield Glebe land here was purchased by the Town Council in the late 1870s, with factories, housing and the sewage works built soon after. Eastfield Mills dominated the area in the late 19th century, with Blenkinsorn, Richardson & Co. building most of the tenement blocks to provide convenient housing for their workers.
Mansfield (manz-feeld) n. Ralph (1556–1633) from Yorkshire, he was appointed as a deputy warden by Ralph Evers, Lord Eure. He served as Captain of Harbottle and Keeper of Tynedale. There were complaints against him by other Englishmen in 1597, including his ‘extortions of 15 score head of cattle and 400 sheep – conveyance of Cesford to Toplif to buy a horse – caused 2

Englishmen to fight before Buccleuch at Hawick – till one was slain’. It is separately referred to as an incident of ‘carrying Englishmen into Scotland to combat before Bawcleuch, where the one murdered the other’. His response to the last accusation is that he took no men to Hawick, ‘but 2 English fugitives, some time of Redesdale, one accusing the other of crimes, did combat before Buccleuch’, and when he got there he tried to stop the fight. The true details of these events, and where exactly this fight may have taken place, are not known.

Roched, with italianten decor and splendid gardens. It retains much of the original ceiling plasterwork. Sold by the Olivers in 1936, it was owned by Lt.-Col. Mudue and by 1956 had become a hotel and night club, having several owners over the subsequent decades. In 1973 it was taken over by the Hawkines, who changed the name to Mansfield Park Hotel. Later the McMannuses changed the name to Mansfield House Hotel. It was taken over by Ian and Sheila McKinmon in 1985 and renovated into Hawick’s premier hotel, with 12 unique bedrooms and set in 10 acres of land. In 2009 it was purchased by the Midgee Company. It has been a very popular site for wedding receptions (see also Thornwud Hoose).

Mantel Waas (mawn-tul-wawz) n. name use for a former ruin near Ancrum, around Nether Ancrum, to the east of the village. It was sometimes referred to as 'Malton Walls' (most likely in in error, leading to a supposed association with the Knights of Malta), but 'Mantel' is how the locals referred to it, which means simply parapet walls. It was perhaps a palace of the Bishops of Glasgow, who held lands there, or otherwise remains of former fortifications at Ancrum. It was described at the end of the 18th century (by Dr. Somerville of Jedburgh) as being a parallelogram in plan, built of stone and lime, and having vaults under it. A high gable with a beautiful window as said to have stood until the mid-18th century and the last portion of the walls fell in about the mid-19th century. It was said that human bones were regularly unearthed there and in 1956 the remains of a statue were dug up nearby. A grave-stone inscribed ‘1607’ is built into a house in the area. Nothing can now be seen of this former construction today. There is a fanciful tradition that an underground passage led from this place to Timpendean Castle (also written ‘Mantle’; it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Manuel (mawn-wel) n. George (17th C.) resident at Barnes in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. His surname is written ‘Mannall’. George (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Hall and their children included Robert (b.1683). John (b.1806) master blacksmith in Lilliesleaf, son of William. His smithy was on the north side of Main Street. He may never have married, being listed living with his sister as housekeeper in 1851. He was also recorded in Slater’s 1852 directory. John (1838–1900) Burgh Surveyor and Master of Works from 1874–1900. Born in Perth, son of Peter, the Clerk of Works in Edinburgh, and Agnes Wilson. He was a journeyman joiner and became assistant to the Burgh Engineer of the City of Edinburgh. He came to Hawick in 1874, serving as Road Surveyor and Master of Works, following the death of Andrew Wilson. He supervised public works in Hawick in the period 1874–1900, which saw a huge amount of construction. His office was at 2 Wellington Street and later 28 High Street. He originally lived at 27 High Street, then 25 North Bridge Street, but designed his own house Elm Bank in Fenwick Park in 1884, with the access road called ‘Manuel’s Brae’ long afterwards. He also worked as an architect for Hawick Working Men’s Building & Investment Company (on the Terraces). He designed several other buildings, including Howlands Mill and prepared plans for renovating several others, such as St. Leonard’s Farm, Drumlanrig School and Hawick Jail. He was responsible for the plans for the Mansfield Brig in 1888, for opening up O’Connell Street in 1889 and for the Fever Hospital at Burnfoot in 1900. He was one of the founders of Hawick Golf Club, and also keen on bowling, curling and fishing. In addition he was a Mason and manager at East Bank Kirk, as well as being known as a fine bass singer and Secretary of the Hawick Choral Society. One of his regular duties was to oversee the erection of the ring and platforms at the Common Riding Games. He married music teacher Isabella (or Catherine) Hunter of North Berwick (d.18986) and their children were: Margaret Agnes (b.1877), who became an artist in New York; John (b.1879); Catherine Hunter (1881–1969), who died in Vancouver; Francis Eric (b.1886), who went to India, worked as a banker, and retired to the south coast of England; and Florence Wilson (1888–1971), who died in Kelowna, British Columbia. John and the 3 daughters all eventually emigrated to North America. There is a possibility that another son may have been Robert, who emigrated to America and named the Hawick in Minnesota (although there is no evidence to support this, and the timing does not work very well). His wife died on Christmas day in 1896 and was buried in Wilton Cemetery (the lay-out of which he must have been closely involved in). He became ill in 1900, with his son John taking over his duties temporarily. He moved to Lilliesleaf, but died suddenly of a heart-attack and was also buried at Wilton. John
Manuel’s Brae

(1879–1933) son of John, born at 25 North Bridge Street. He trained in Hawick under J.P. Alison as well as in Edinburgh, and worked in London. When his father became ill in 1900, he returned to Hawick to serve as interim Burgh Surveyor. But by 1904 he moved to Liverpool, then London, then Colwyn Bay in Wales. He exhibited designs and drawings at the R.S.A. in 1900 and 1901. He married Madeline, daughter of hardware merchant William Brown in 1908. After 1912 he emigrated to Canada (his 3 sisters following him there), where he contributed to the design of the Provincial Legislature in Winnipeg and the Labor Temple in Calgary. He was also resident architect at the Banff Springs Hotel. He died after falling from a 10th floor window at the Palliser Hotel in Calgary, and is buried there.

Robert (19th C.) said to be son of John (although there is no evidence to support this). He became a railway manager in the U.S.A., and was responsible for the naming of Hawick, Minnesota (mis-typed ‘R. Manvel’ in the 1905 history). The name came from John Manuel, who built ‘Elm Bank’. There were built at Fenwick Park, off Weensland Road. It is the lower part of the street now known as Fenwick Park. The name came from John Manuel, who built ‘Elm Bank’.

manufacturin (maw-new-fak-choor-in) n. manufacturing. Hawick’s production of goods grew slowly, until the rapid expansion of woollens in the early 19th century. In the earliest records there are examples of various tradesmen in the town, making items from wood, metal, leather, etc. There was also small-scale, largely domestic, production of linen and woollen garments. The trades were governed through 7 ‘incorporations’, namely weavers, shoemakers (or cordiners), skinners (and glovers), hammermen, fleshers (i.e. butchers), tailors and bakers (or baxters). A small factory making carpets appeared in Hawick in the 1750s, stocking frames were introduced in the 1770s, linen tape manufacturing started in the 1780s and yarn spinning commenced in the early 1800s. In 1839 the Minister described people being employed ‘in the manufacture of thongs, gloves, candles, machinery, and in the tanning of leather and dressing of sheep skins’, although woollen manufacturing by far dominated.

Manuel’s Brae (mawn-welz-brä) n. former name for the road leading to the large houses that were built at Fenwick Park, off Weensland Road. It is the lower part of the street now known as Fenwick Park. The name came from John Manuel, who built ‘Elm Bank’.

Manvers (man-vurz) n. Robert de (13th/14th C.), given part of the estate of Chisholme by the English King Edward in 1317 (along with Ranulphus de Home), although it was restored to John de Cheseholme 3 years later.
the Maori flag

_the Maori flag (thu-mow-ree-flawg) n._ artefact donated to Hawick Museum in 1921 by artist Tom Scott. It had been captured by Crown forces in 1865 at the Battle of Oamaruhakeke. In 2015 there was a request to return the flag to New Zealand.

Mar (mawr) _n._ Margaret (d.c.1391) daughter of Donald, 8th Earl of Mar, and sister of Thomas, 9th Earl. She married William, 1st Earl of Douglas. Her husband died in 1384 and she secondly married Sir John Swinton of Swinton. Her son James inherited the titles of both Douglas and Mar. However, she also seems to have been regarded as Countess of Mar in her own right, with that title going to her daughter Isabel. Thomas 9th (or 10th) Earl of Mar (c.1332–c.74) son of Donald, 8th Earl of Mar and Isabel Stewart, last of a line of 'Mormaers' of Mar (in Aberdeenshire), with no clear surname. Both Thomas Baliol and the Earl of Douglas are referred to as his brothers, but it seems this was likely to have meant step-brothers or brothers-in-law. He was apparently raised in England. He witnessed charters during the reigns of David II and Robert II and became High Chamberlain of Scotland. He also held many titles, particularly in northern Scotland, but also including the Barony of Cavers. He was certainly Lord of Cavers by 1357. In 1358 he witnessed the charter for the Barony of Hawick, granted to Sir Thomas Murray. He granted the lands of Denholm, Denholm Dean and 'Balleolhage' to Thomas Cranston in an undated charter (confirmed decades later in 1441). The grant excepted his domain lands within the Barony of Cavers and his lands of Stobs. He granted Cavers to Thomas Baliol, in fee. In 1368 he granted the patronage and advowson of Cavers Kirk to Melrose Abbey. Also in 1368 he gave his consent to a grant by Thomas Baliol to William, Earl of Douglas, of Earlside in the Barony of Cavers. It is unclear exactly when he died, and it seems there was some confusion after his death about the inheritance of the Cavers lands and titles immediately afterwards; however, in an investigation into the status of the Kirk of Cavers in 1406 he is still referred to as the former Baron, with his confirming gift of the Kirk to Melrose Abbey cited. He married Margaret Graham, Countess of Menteith (and widow of John Murray) and later Margaret Stewart, Countess of Angus, elder daughter of Thomas, Earl of Angus. He had no heirs and his titles fell to his sister Margaret, Countess of Mar, who married William, 1st Earl of Douglas and Earl of Mar. The titles then passed to their daughter Isabella, Countess of Mar, and eventually to the Douglasses directly.

Marchmount (mawrch-mown) _n._ alternative name for Roxburgh Castle.

Marcus (mar-kis) _n._ Walter ‘Mr. Walter’ (20th C.) from Westphalia in Germany, he had to leave because of Nazi persecution and founded a fashion house in London, along with his younger brother Otto. When they established a factory in Hawick in 1940, he came to live in the Town and stayed until the 1950s, being manager of the W. & O. Marcus factory on Commercial Road. He also organised regular fashion shows in the Tower Hotel. He joined the Home Guard during the War. He lived with his wife Anne and daughter Helen at Wellogate Villa. He had a reputation for being a strict, but fair employer. However, it was said that he was often bad-tempered during Jewish fast days, with his wife calling ahead to the factory to warn the workers. He moved to London in the mid-1950s after his brother became ill. But he continued to visit Hawick until the factory closed in 1964.

Marcus’s (mar-kisz) _n._ W. & O. Marcus, former dress-making factory on Commercial Road. The firm was founded by Jewish refugees Walter and Otto Marcus (friends of Otto Wiesz) in 1939, and became one of the top 10 fashion houses in London. The Hawick factory was set up in 1940 in part of the Willglen Mill building. It operated until 1965, managed by Frederica Rosenberger. The connection to Hawick was probably established from the brothers knowing Otto Wiesz, head designer at Pringles (as well as the known availability of textile workers and the relative safety of the Borders in wartime). During the London Blitz workers were brought up to work in Hawick and many of them stayed. At the height of production it employed 180 workers. The dresses were known for their use of luxury materials. The firm supplied dresses to many London department stores, such as Harrods, Liberty, Fortnum & Mason, Bourne & Hollingsworth, Debenhams and Selfridges, as well as Greensmith Downes and Jenners in Edinburgh. One of the reasons cited for closure was rising rail costs for transporting materials and finished goods to and from London. After the factory closed the building was Margaret Scott (née Marfaux) was brought to Scotland as her ward, she was brought by ship from France where a family member had been killed. The Inglis and Scott families lived there around 1283–90. Queen of Norway from 1286, she was known as ‘the Maid of Norway’. She was the great-grand-daughter of Alexander III and his only surviving descendant, being daughter of Eric II of Norway. Following the Treaty of Birgham (near Kelso), in which she was betrothed to Edward I’s son in return for assurance of Scottish independence, but with Edward as her ward, she was brought by ship from Norway, but died en route. This left Scotland with at least a dozen claimants to the throne, including Sir Nicholas de Soulis. Michael Scot is said to have helped bring her back to Scotland.

Marjoribanks (mawrk) n. John (16th C.) son of Philip, who was one of the first to use this surname. He was a younger brother of William (to whom he succeeded) and elder brother of Thomas (who represented Douglas of Cavers in 1541). He was a Guild Brother and Bailie in Edinburgh and served as Dean of Guild. He is probably the Burgess of Edinburgh of that name who in 1532 witnessed a sasine (recorded in Selkirk) for William Walker selling his tenement in Hawick to John Morlaw. Thomas of that Ilk (d.1557), son of Philip and brother of John. He was one of 10 advocates appointed as procurators before the Lords of Session. He served as Lord Provost of Edinburgh and later became Lord Clerk Register, with the title Lord Ratho. In 1541 he represented James Douglas of Cavers and his tenants in asking for reparations from Walter Scott of Branxholme for burning the farm of Whitriggs. Perhaps the same Thomas served as procurator for a case in Selkirk in 1533 regarding Sunderlandhall. Probably the same Thomas acted as agent in 1539 to receive a large number of sheep from Patrick Murray of Falahill and others, owed to the King and passed to Robert Scott of Howpasley and Ninian Anderson (formerly ‘Mairiorbankis’ and variants).

Mark (mawrk) n. Adam (18th C.) resident of Crumhaugh. In 1724 he married Jean Goodfellow, who was from Robertson Parish, the marriage being recorded in both Hawick and Roberton. Andrew (17th C.) resident at Burnfoot in Ashkirk Parish on the Hearth Tax roll in 1694. He was probably related to Robert, who was also listed there. In 1690 he witnessed a baptism for John Hastie and in 1691 probably witnessed another for Robert. In 1694 he and Robert witnessed a baptism for James Deans. George (19th C.) farmer at Hassendeanburn in the 1860s. John (17th C.) resident the Hawick area. He witnessed a Robertson baptism for Andrew Fisher in 1681 and a Hawick baptism for William Haswell in 1688. Robert (17th C.) resident at Burnfoot in Ashkirk Parish on the Hearth Tax roll in 1694. In 1694 he and Andrew witnessed a baptism for...
James Deans. He married Janet Henderson and their children included Marion (b.1691) and Margaret (b.1698). The witnesses in 1691 were Andrew [probably Mark] and Alexander [probably Wilson]. Simon (17th/18th C.) resident of the east-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He is listed as 'Simon Mack, carrier' among those contributing to funds for the new Kirk bell in 1693/4. He married Isobel Young and their children, baptised in Hawick, included Isobel (b.1701), Robert (b.1702), Janet (b.1708) and Agnes (b.1713). Janet (b.1694) may also have been his child. The witnesses in 1708 were Ballie George Martin and smith James Scott. Simon (17th/18th C.) carrier in Hawick Parish. His name appears to be written 'Merk' in one records. He married Helen 'Huisoon' and their children included Anna (b.1719). The witnesses in 1719 were tailor James Turnbull and 'Mr' John Purdom. William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1651 he witnessed a baptism for James Elliot. Probably the same William married Janet 'Bran' and had children Marion (b.1657) and Bessie (b.1660). Agnes (b.1645) and Marion (b.1651), with no mother's name given, were probably also his children. The witnesses in 1651 were James Elliot and George 'diure'. He may also have witnessed a baptism in 1656 for Walter Scott 'called of Huntlie' (also written 'Marke' and 'Merk').

the Marklair (þhu-mawr-klær) n. former farmstead in the upper reaches of the Borthwick valley. It is recorded in a document of 1650, about a mile further out than Howpasley and with 2 'communicants' recorded. Adam Laidlaw was living there in 1716 and James Laidlaw in 1722. The lands were sold by the Scotts of Crumhaugh to the Duke of Buccleuch along with Howpasley about 1760. It is still shown as 'Mark Lair' near Mark Sike on the Ordnance Survey map, high above Howpasley, although there is now no sign of former habitation there (it is 'Marklear' in 1716 and 'Merklear' in 1722 and transcribed 'Maichlair' in about 1760; it is 'The marke Laire' on a parish map of 1650 and the farm of 'Mirk Lair' is on Roy's c.1750 map; 'lair' is either a boggy area or an area of shelter for sheep).

Mark Sike (mawr-sik) n. small stream in the upper Borthwick valley. It rises near Mark Lair and joins the Howpasley Burn.

marl (mawr-rul) n. lime-rich clay, used to neutralize acid soil. In the late 18th century opening up marl pits became a central element of agricultural improvement. Pits were developed on the Minto, Buccleuch and Harden estates, starting with Sir Gilbert Elliot opening a pit at Crow's Moss in 1755 and marling 200 acres. Groundstone and Blackcleuch (presumably at Teviothead) were also used. Broadlee Loch and Brauxholme Loch were both drained to get at the marl on their bottoms, and not restored again until the mid-19th century – 'There is also marle in different parts of the parish, which is used successfully on land in pasture, as well as in tillage'[RRG] (also written 'marle').

marled (maw-ruld) adj., poet. mottled, woven with 2 colours – 'O, gif I kenned but where ye baide, I'd send to you a marled plaid'[BS] (also marlt).

the Marl Loch (þhu-mawr-rul-loch) n. name used in the 19th century for Broadlee Loch, when it was drained to provide marl.

Marlsid (ma-rul-sid) n. former name for lands in Hassendean Parish. It was included along with Hassendean in the 1718 survey of properties belonging to the Scotts of Buccleuch, presumably corresponding to the part to the north, around Marlside Hill.

Marlside Hill (ma-rul-sid-hil) n. small hill in Minto Parish, between Hassendean farm and Newlands. It reaches a height of 180 m.

marlt (maw-rul-t, -rult) adj., poet. mottled – 'The mune she shines sae bricht, Till a' the yirth is marlt wi' The grymins o' her licht'[DH] (also marled).

Marmion Road (mawr-meé-in-röd) n. street between Weensland and the Orchard Road, reached by Fenwick Park and Weensgate Drive. The houses were built from 1966 and the street was named after the hero of Scott's novel of the same name. It was a popular street for teachers for many years.

maroon (maw-roon) n., adj. a very unpleasant colour, being a sort of muddy purple, and almost unknown within Hawick.

The Marquis (þhu-mawr-kwís) n. nickname for Andrew Miller in the late 19th century.

Marr (mawr) n. Edward (b.1825/6) from Selkirk, he was a tailor in Wilton. He was at Ladydaw Place in 1851, employing one apprentice, and was listed in Slater's 1852 directory on Ladydaw Place. James (18th C.) recorded in 1788 as having purchased part of Kowesouth, which were by then in the hands of Thomas Ogilvie of Chesters. These lands were valued at £39 18s 1d.

Marriot (maw-ree-i) n. Daniel ‘Rueben Watts’ or ‘Reuben Watt’ (1817–92) English stockings-maker, born in Ashover, Derbyshire, he came to Hawick in 1851. He worked diligently to promote improved public sanitation, conducting a voluminous correspondence with the newspapers, Town Council, and officials all the way up to the Home Secretary and even the Prince of Wales. He was considered a nuisance by many, complaining regularly about policing, municipal works etc. He married Mary Randle (nee Orr). After his son was killed during the Chase in 1868 he became staunchly opposed to the Common Riding. He also had sons Daniel and David. In 1861 he lived at 13 Back Row. He adopted the name ‘Reuben Watts’ in Hawick, particularly in his correspondence, and is buried at the Wellogate – ’...While

Mars (mawrz) n. Peter (b.1832/3) probably son of James and Elizabeth Birnie, he was a gardener at Dickson’s nurseries. His wife Margaret Murray d.(1864) is buried in Wellogate Cemetery, along with 2 children who died in infancy. He may have been related to an S. Mars, who had ground in St. Mary’s. It is also possible that ‘Tidy Mars’ was a relative. James (b.c.1800) agricultural labourer who lived on the Back Row. His wife was Elizabeth Birnie and their children included Margaret, Peter, Mary, John and James.

Marsden (mawrz-din) n. Philip ‘Phil’ (1931–2010) born in Yorkshire, he was a semi-professional football player with Wolverhampton Wanderers. He married Jean in Hawick in 1955, and the couple settled permanently in Hawick in 1963, where he worked in the construction industry, at the Hawick Community Workshop and lastly as custodian of Hermitage Castle. He was the first S.N.P. councillor in Hawick and became a Bailie and Justice of the Peace, as well as being involved in many of the Town’s clubs.

Martini (mar-tee-nee) n. John (15th/16th C.)
Archdeacon of Teviotdale, succeeding William Elphinestone (senior). He resigned his rights some time before 1510, and may have served 1486–91.

Martinlee Sike (mer-in-lee-si) n. stream in Southdean Parish, crossed by the A6088 shortly before the turn-off for Lethem. On the north side of the road there, between Steele Knowe and Crink Law, are the remains of a settlement, consisting of an oval enclosure about 30 m across (perhaps from the first millennium B.C.E.). A little further east, also on the north side of the road are further archaeological remains, comprising a roughly circular enclosure 14 m across and a hut circle 7 m in diameter. And further to the west of the stream are more field boundaries, a homestead site, 2 disused quarries and rig and furrow lines seen on aerial photographs. On the south side of the road there are the remains of 2 farmsteads, rig lines, cultivation terraces, small cairns and pens, surrounded by 2 large enclosures.
Also on the south side of the road, but the other side of the stream is the remains of yet another homestead and hut platform. The age of all of these farmsteads is unknown, and there are no corresponding settlements on any old maps of the area. The forest there is known as Martin-lee Plantation.

Scottish quarter days, falling on 11th November.
It was a Christian feast in commemoration of the death of St. Martin of Tours. It was formerly one of the main days used for the payment of annual rents. The land-holders of Hawick formerly had to pay the token rent to the Baron on this date, as well as on Whitsunday. The first Thursday after Martinmas was called ‘Term Thursdi’ and was once an important fair day in Hawick. In country areas the ‘mairt’ was killed about this day to be salted and stored for the winter – ‘...account promised be the said Adam Scott to him for his shonne fra Martinmas last to Whitsunday next’ [BR]. ‘Yon gowd o’ Martinmas winter – ’ about this day to be salted and stored for the Hawick. Mary o Guise (mă-ree-OG-giz) n. (1515–60) daughter of Claude de Lorrain, duc de Guise, she married Louis d’Orléans, 2nd duc de Longueville, who died in 1537. She then married James V of Scotland and became Regent after his death in 1542. She stopped her daughter Mary (later Queen of Scots) being arranged into a marriage with Prince Edward of England, thereby initiating the ‘Rough Wooing’. In 1548 there is a letter in which she undertakes to support Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in recognition of his ‘band of maurent’ to her. She later prosecuted Protestants in Scotland, with the aid of Archbishop Beaton, which helped accelerate the Scottish Reformation. Her death effectively brought an end to the Auld Alliance.

Mary Queen o Scots (mă-ree-kwēn-OG-skots) n. (1542–87) Mary Stuart (or Stewart) daughter of James V and Mary of Guise, born at Linlithgow, she became Queen of Scotland 6 days later. She was sent to France at age 6, and married Francis, which later made her Queen of France. She returned to Scotland in 1561, and after much political intrigue was forced to abdicate in favour of her son James in 1567. She went to England for support, but never met Elizabeth, instead being imprisoned for 19 years, becoming implicated in various Catholic plots, and finally being beheaded at Fotheringay. In Hawick she was significant for confirming (as required by law) Douglas’ Charter to Hawick in 1545, when she was just 2½! Attempts to have her wed Henry VIII’s son Edward led to the ‘Rough Wooing’ and the burning of Hawick along with much of the rest of the Borders. She stayed temporarily in Jedburgh, and famously rode from there to visit the wounded Earl of Bothwell at Hermitage Castle in 1566, returning the same night, possibly causing an illness that incapacitated her for weeks. It has been suggested that her route proceeded via Jedburgh Castle, the Dunion, Swinnie Moor, Earlsdie, Coliforthill, Whitlaw, Flex, Priesthaugh and the Brae Burn (the headwaters of which are still called the Queen’s Mire). Memorabilia can be seen at ‘Mary Queen of Scots House’ in Jedburgh and in Abbotsford.

Mary’s Well (mă-ree-OG-wel) n. former spring by the side of the road near Denesyde, on the left-hand side while ascending the hill towards Hawthornside. It was described by Oliver of Langrave in 1870 as being ‘on the lower side of the turnpike road below Hawthornside’ and suggests a possible association with Mary Queen of Scots’ ride to Hermitage. Adam Turnbull of Denesyde (said to be a Jacobite supporter in 1715) convinced Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs to preserve the Well as a roadside watering-place when he took over the lands. It disappeared some time before the mid-19th century, probably as a result of farm improvements (also called ‘Queen Mary’s Well’; the origin of the name is uncertain, and there may be confusion about the position, cf. St. Mary’s Well).

Maryswud (mă-ree-OG-wud) n. Maryswud, area south of the Hoscothe Burn, north-east of Flate Hill. It is now within Craik Forest.

Mary the Bishop (mă-ree-thu-bi-shup) n. nickname of Mary Clerk.

masel (maw-sel) pron. myself – ‘A was in masel aa night’, ‘Aa hed to sei for masel’. And it was shundert ...’ [DH], ‘...An’ aw said tae masel’, ‘By jings, but he’s richt’’ [IJ] (mysel is less common).

masher (maw-shur) n., poet. a smasher, dandy – ‘The dressmaker masher wi’ scarcely a flaw ...’ [WAP] (not a common word).

mash (maw-sh) v. to brew or steep (less common than mask).

mask (mask) v. to brew or steep, particularly tea – ‘did ee mask the tei yet?’, ‘...hed kinnelt
a hunt an thrang poachtin aboot an maskin tei’ [ECS] (cf. the less common mash).

the Masonic (thu-maw-so-neck) n. popular name for the Masonic Hall, referring to the former building at Myreslawgreen or the one on Union Street. There were dances organised at the Union Street hall during the 1930s, continuing during and after the War years for the benefit of troops stationed at Stobs, and often organised by Jocky Thomson.

the Masonic Hall (thu-maw-so-neck-hawl) n. former Freemason’s building at Myreslawgreen until 1922, after which No. 111 moved to Commercial Road. The other Lodge, No. 424, has been on Union Street since 1893, and often held functions in its adjoining hall. The hall at Myreslawgreen had previously been the ‘Green Kirk’, and was later used for dances, when it was referred to as ‘the Rabble’.

Masson (maw-sin) n. Alexander (18th/19th C.) weaver in Lilliesleaf. His children included: Margaret (b.1784); Agnes (b.1790); Joseph (b.1800); and Alexander (b.1802). George (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His children included: William (b.1752); ‘Nanse’ (b.1754); and

massie (maw-see) adj., arch. haughty, bumptious, overly proud – ‘Never daeauldin ti crak poord an massy aboot its bonnie bits an its history’ [ECS], ‘...lang or monie a massy jumpeet-toon was buggen or tocht o’ [ECS], ‘...Eelect a trader ca’d John Kyle, Massy, in iz merchant style’ [MB], adv. haughtily, proudly – ‘...never daeauldin ti crak poord an massy aboot its bonnie bits an its history’ [ECS], ‘But I’ll up throwe thir divots Afore him, massy, his lane, Ablow thon lee’in’ hunderwechts O’ marble stane!’ [DH] (also spelled ‘massy’).

Elizabeth (b.1760). George (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He is recorded as ‘Junior’ in 1790, so he is probably son of the earlier George. His children included: Isabel (b.1784); Elizabeth (b.1786); Rabina (b.1788); George (b.1790); George (again, also b.1790); Robert (b.1792); Margaret (b.1795); and Janet (b.1797). William (20th C.) head forester on the Cavers estate. He lived with his family at the Overseer’s Cottage from about 1923 until the late 1940s. His wife was Nellie and their children were: Marjory, who married Johnnie Bryce and was postmistress at the Sandbed Post Office; Hellen, who married Allan Watt of Dovemount newsagent’s; and Ina, who married Thomas Brockie of Hawthornside farm (this name may be a variant of Mason).

Master Grain (maw-stur-gran) n. small stream in the headwaters of the Skelfhill Burn, rising between Millstone Edge and Langtae Hill. It is marked on a 1718 survey of Skelfhill farm.

Masterton (maw-stur-tin) n. Thomas (b.1828/9) from Edinburgh. He was a grocer and spirit dealer on the Sandbed, along with William Richmond. The pair are listed in the 1851 census and as ‘Richmond & Masterton’ in Slater’s 1852 directory.

mateit (mā-tee’, -ti’) pp., poet. mated – ‘Dame Fortune hath unto thee mateit Mair hamilt place …’ [JoHa].

Mathane (maw-thän) n. Thomas (14th C.) recorded as ‘de Mathane’ when he was Archdeacon of Teviotdale in 1394. He is described as ‘teacher and schoolmaster’ of David, Earl of Carrick, eldest son of the King of Scotland, who petitioned for a benefice for him. It is unclear where he was from. Nothing else appears to be known about him.

Mather (ma-diur) n. Andrew of Lanton (16th C.) listed in 1549 among the associates of Walter Ker of Cessford who were accused of helping the English raid Goldielands and neighbouring farms. His name is recorded as ‘Andro Mader of Langtoun’. In 1553/4 he was ‘Andream Mader de Langtoun’ when he was on the panel for the inheritance of Walter Scott of Branzholme. He could be the ‘Andrew Meyther’ who signed a bond of assurance with Somerset at Kelso in 1547, along with many other Border lairds. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He probably farmed near Newton and was closely related to James, John and Margaret, who are listed separately. Andrew (17th C.) recorded as ‘cottar’ at Rule-townfoot according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Daniel (1716/7–99) tenant farmer at Ashybank. He paid tax for having a saddle horse at Ashybank in the years 1789–97. He was recorded as owner of 10 farm horses and 1 saddle horse there on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was additionally taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. He married Jean Chisholme, who died in 1795, aged 72. Their son James succeeded as tenant of Ashybank. Daniel (1808–69) son of James, he was born at Ashybank. He took over from his father as tenant of Hallrule when he reached majority. Sometime during his tenancy of Hallrule a large cairn was removed, inside which was discovered an ‘urn’ (which has not survived). He was said to be a big, powerful-looking man, with a slow, deep voice and possessed of an abundance of common sense. He lived in Rule Water for more than 50 years. He was responsible for ploughing Ruberslaw almost up to the crags (although this resulted in the removal of an ancient cairn). He was a keen horseman and rode with the Buccleuch Hunt. He also purchased land in Ireland and improved the farms there, although in 1855 he was shot in the back there, taking several months to recover, despite attempting to follow his assailant on horseback. He also had some pellets embedded in his forehead until his death. As a result of this purchase in Ireland he was referred to as ‘of Falty Park, Ballinasloe’. In 1851 he was recorded as farmer of 600 acres of arable land and 7000 acres of hill pasture, employing 41 men and 10 women. He was still recorded as farmer at Hallrule in 1868. He died unmarried and left his property to his sister’s son John Arres (who added his surname). John and James Arres erected a memorial to his memory (and including other family members) in Jedburgh Abbey cemetery. George (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1504 as ‘george mader of langtoun’. He was surety to enter Tom and James (presumably relatives) as well as 2 men named ‘finlo’ to answer for the murder of ‘David bachel’. George (17th C.) tenant in ‘Langtoun’ (i.e. Lanton). The will of his wife Helen Brown is recorded in 1686. George (18th C.) dyker in Lanton. His wife ‘Isble Madder’ died in 1762, aged 39, and is buried in Bedrule kirkyard. Helen (17th C.) resident of Spittal-on-Rule on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. James (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1598 as schoolmaster at Longnewton. He also is recorded in deeds of 1608 and 1609 as schoolmaster at Bedrule. Probably the same James was schoolmaster at Jedburgh and Dundee in 1610. James (17th C.) recorded as owner of lands at Lanton in the 1643 valuation rolls. He also held ‘the lands called Turnbull’s lands’ in Jedburgh Parish. He was probably son or brother of John of Lanton, who is also listed in 1643. Probably the same James is recorded at Lanton in 1663. James (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He probably farmed near Newton and was probably closely related to Andrew, John and Margaret. He may be the James recorded as owner of lands in Lanton valued at £580 in 1678 (and also lands in Ulston); at the same time William of Lanton held the bulk of the lands there, and so was probably his father or elder brother. James (1761/2–1826) farmer, who was tenant at Ashybank in the first quarter of the 19th century. He was son of Daniel, who farmed there before him. In 1813 made an offer to be tenant of Langburnshiels, his success being announced after the Laird, James Elliot of Harwood, dined with all the prospective tenants in the Tower Inn in Hawick. A few years later he leased Hallrule farm. He married Rachel Ogilvie, who died in 1837, aged 71. Their son Daniel took over the farm, and they also had a daughter, Jessie. James (18th/19th C.) lived at Mosshouses, Dykeraw and Southdean. He married Janet Synton and their children included: John (b.1804); Peter (b.1805); Janet (b.1808); Agnes (b.1811); James (b.1812); Margaret; Ann, who married Matthew Henderson in Oxnam; and Cecilia, who married William Telfer in Jedburgh. James (c.1810–bef. 1857) gardener, grocer and spirit dealer in Wilton. He is listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory in Wilton, as grocer and spirit dealer. He is recorded among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1840, when he was a gardener at Damside. He was a gardener and spirit dealer at Damside on the 1841 census. By 1851 his widow was a vintner on Wilton Path and she was listed as grocer on Wilton Path in Slater’s 1852 directory, suggesting that he was already deceased by then. He was also a master gardener. He married Janet Lillico. Their children included: Andrew (b.1831); Robert (b.1834); Agnes (b.1835), who married Robert Weir and secondly Robert Cavers (in 1857, by which time he was deceased); and James (b.1839). His father may be the ‘Mr. Mather’ whose property is marked on Wood’s 1824 map along what became Baker Street. This may thus be the family that gave its name to Mather’s Close. Janet (b.1800/1) grocer listed on Wilton Path in 1851 and in Slater’s 1852 directory, as well as in 1861. She was married to James, who appears to have died at least by 1857. In 1861 she was living with her daughter Agnes Cavers (also a widow) and granddaughter Robina Cavers. Rev. John (d.bef. 1642) son of William of Lanton, he graduated from Edinburgh University in 1598. He became minister at Minto in 1601 and was translated to Hassendean in 1602. He was deposed in 1609 for ‘keeping licentious company, &c.’. His widow is described as being destitute in 1642. Robert Collace was recorded as being Reader at Hassendean in 1606, so it may be that Collace was the actual preacher, while Mader simply held the living. John of Lanton (17th C.) recorded as owner of lands in Jedburgh Parish in 1643. It is possible he is the same man as Rev. John, Andrew and the recently deceased John, recorded as owners of lands in Lanton in 1788, were probably his descendants. John (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He probably farmed near Newton and was related to Andrew, James and Margaret. John (18th C.) Town Piper in Hawick, probably around 1732–41. His surname is recorded as ‘Meader’. In 1732 he was recorded being paid for playing at the King’s Rantin. Margaret (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. She was probably widow of a farmer near Newton. Thomas (16th C.) listed among the occupiers of the lands of Newton in Bedrule in 1531. Thomas (17th C.) tenant at Little Whithaugh in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Walter (18th/19th C.) son of Daniel and probably father of James. He farmed at Ashybank for 12 years up until 1802, which may have been when he died. William (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘Willelmus Mader of Langtoun’ in 1569 when he was on the panel of inquest for Grizel Borthwick inheriting superiority of her father’s lands in Wilton. He is probably the William of Lanton whose son was Rev. John, minister of Minto. William (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘William Mader of Langtoun’ in 1610 when he was listed on an inquest for lands in Rulewater. William of Lanton (17th C.) leased the lands of ‘Kaimies and the Hills’ from Walter Riddell of Minto in 1683. He paid the land tax in Jedburgh Parish in 1678, his lands of Lanton being valued at about £680; at the same time James (probably his son) had land valued at about £580. He was described as ‘in Longtoun’ in 1686/7 when Walter Scott, Earl of Tar- ras took him to court for non-payment of duties for the lands of ‘Kaimies and Minto hills’. But he sub-leased the same lands to Thomas Rutherford of Knowesouth in 1687. He is probably the William of Linton recorded in 1707 with lands valued at about £650; at that time ‘J. and W. Maders portioners there’ had land valued at about £520. William (b.1806/7) tailor in Minto. He is recorded there in 1852. His children included Helen and Isabella. William (b.1857) son of Rachel Tait, born at Wauchope Waas. He took over the local carrier’s business from his grandfather William Tait in the mid-1880s. In 1884 he married Elspeth Scott from Twislehope and they had a daughter Margaret Jane. His wife became the local post-mistress (also formerly spelled ‘Mader’, ‘Madder’ and ‘Meader’).

Mather’s Close (maw-thurz-kłös) n. former passageway off the High Street situated where Baker Street is now. It was once an area of severely over-crowded housing, with shops at the top, and only a narrow passageway connecting to the High Street. There was also a smithy near the top. The 1858 Ordnance Survey map shows a bridge over the mill lade at the bottom. The close was opened up into a street about 1868 when No. 75 High Street was rebuilt.

Mathieson (maw-thee-sin) n. James (17th/18th C.) smith at Kirkhope in at least the period 1698–1702. He married Agnes Coltart and their children included: Jean (b.1695); Walter (b.1698); and an unnamed child (b.1702). James (18th/19th C.) recorded as blacksmith in Ashkirk in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. His name is recorded as ‘Matthewson’. His wife may have been Mary, who was living with children John, Ann and Robert at Ashkirk Mill in 1841. John (b.1812/3) veterinary surgeon and blacksmith in Ashkirk. He may be son of James, who was blacksmith earlier in Ashkirk. He was at Ashkirk Mill in 1841 and was resident of the smithy also known as Crowknowe. In 1861 he was alisted as ‘Landed Proprietor & Vetinary Surgeon, Farmer of 22 acres & Blacksmith’. In the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874 he was listed as owner of the lands in Lilliesleaf that had formerly belonged to Andrew Gray. He married Isabella Redford and their children included: Margaret (b.1843); Mary Anne (b.1845); and Isabella (b.1850). Peter (b.1816/7) gardener living at Borthwicksheils Cottage in 1841. In 1851 and 1861 he was gardener at Wolfelee. He married Agnes Gledstains in Peebles in 1838 and their children included: Helen; Louisa; Jane; Euphemia; Andrew (b.1844); Elizabeth (or ‘Betsy’, b.1844); Thomas (b.1847); Margaret E. (b.1849); James; and Robert (b.1857). Walter (18th C.) married Margaret Lillico in 1722, the marriage being proclaimed in Bedrule and Minto Parishes. Rev. William (1849–1913) training at Edinburgh Theological Hall, he was the last minister of the old Congregational Kirk in Hawick, replacing Rev. W.L. Walker, but only staying for part of 1877. The congregation had already dwindled, and probably those remaining joined the Evangelical Kirk, which later changed its name to become today’s Congregational Kirk. He was later minister at Stuartfield, Aberdeenshire and Cumnock, Ayrshire (sometimes written ‘Mathewson’ or ‘Mathewson’; see also Mathieson).

Matheson’s (maw-thee-sinz) n. bakers and confectioners on the west side of North Bridge Street through much of the 20th century.

Mathieson (maw-thee-sin) n. Alexander ‘Sandy’ (19th C.) brother of James. He was gardener at Weens, and together with his brother and John Halliday (‘the Rustic Bard’) founded the Hobkirk Flower Show. In 1851 he and his nephew saw ‘a man walking in the sky’, i.e. a ‘Brocken spectre’ or mirage illusion of a man’s shadow, as reported by John Halliday. He could be the Alexander living at Borthwicksheils Cottage with gardener Peter in 1841. James (19th C.) brother of Sandy, he was gardener at Wauchope, and one of the founders of the Hobkirk Flower Show. James (1825/6–1900) grandson of Sir Walter Scott’s coachman. He was a foreman at Weensland Mills. He married Charlotte Sinclair, who died in 1889, aged 62. Their children included Charlotte, Alison and Thomas (all of whom died young), as well as another Charlotte and William Sinclair (who was a confectioner and tobacconist). He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. John (17th/18th C.) tenant of lands at Bewlie along with James Shiel. They leased the Kirklands of Bewlie from Walter Scott of Whitfield in 1720. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1770 he witnessed a baptism for Robert Cowan at Borthaugh, and another for James Turnbull at Courtthill. In 1772 he witnessed a baptism for George Turnbull at Appletreehall and another for Thomas Turnbull at Damside. Robert (17th C.) resident of Ashnkirk Parish. He witnessed baptisms in 1651 for James Elliot, in 1652 for Thomas Fletcher and in 1661 for James Rathie and Isobel (who was likely related). He married Margaret Turnbull and their children included James (b.1659) and William (b.1660). Robert (18th C.) resident of Castleton. He is said to have married Elizabeth, daughter of William, who was a cooper and farmer at Dinlabyre. Thomas (18th/19th...
Mattha mauky-flei

C.) resident at Newcastleton, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He may be the Thomas, married to Margaret Plenderlieth whose children included Helen (b.1792), Isabel (b.1795), John (b.1797) and William (b.1798), baptised at Pathhead. W. (18th/19th C.) carter in Castleton. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. William Sinclair (1867–1932) son of James. For almost 40 years he was a confectioner and tobacconist at 16 Bridge Street. Matthew Gotterson (maw-th-go'-ur-sin) n. pen-name used by James Smail. Matthew Henderson’s Croft (maw-thew-hen-dur-sinz-kroft) n. former name for area that was later called Nichol’s Croft and now known as the Village. Two particates of land were confirmed to Matthew Henderson in the 1537 charter. Matthews (maww-thewz) n. Lee Cornet in 1995, His Lass was Angela Gray and his Acting Father was Phil Nichol. He was on crutches a week before the first Ride-out, having been a bone-marrow donor, and did the Monday morning Chase with the first Rider. There was a record turnout of 330 riders on the Friday in his year.

Maurice (maw-vis) n. (13th C.) described as Parson of Hawick when he witnessed a letter of dedication for St. Peter’s churchyard in 1235. He is thus one of the earliest Hawick ministers on record. His surname is unknown, although he may have been a Lovel, since another Maurice from that family was Parson at ‘Little Cavers’ later the same century.

Maut (maut, mawt) n., arch. malt, sprouted barley mainly used for brewing, ale brewed from malt – ‘I’d rather be ca’d Hobie Noble, In Carlisle where he suffers for his fault, Before I was ca’d traitor Mains, That eats and drinks of meal and maut. Mautsauk the Mauthaugh (thu-mawt-hawch) n. former name for an area in Hawick near the Slitrig, named after the malt kiln that was once there. It may be the same place that was later called ‘the Deid Haugh’ or ‘the Brewery Haugh’ (recorded in a sasine of 1728).

Mautman (mawt-mawn) n., arch. a maltman, someone who makes malt, a brewer. Hawick had 3 of these recorded in the late 17th century – ‘The bailies adjudge Robert Inglis, maltman, to pay £30 to the town’s use, because he was not burdened with quartering the English army . . .’ [BR1651], ‘William Hardie maltman and Christian Lookup both in Hawick were married April 3rd’ [PR1724].

Mautsteep see the Maut Steep

Mautsauk the Maut Steep (thu-mawt-steep) n. the ‘Maut Steep’, an area noted on old maps, north of Lockieshedge, which contained premises used for steeping barley and other grains in preparation for brewing. John Laing’s field there was one of the earliest to be divided into allotments in the mid 19th century. It was an address used in the 1841 census, with 2 families separate from those at Lockieshedge (also written as one word).

Mavis (mä-vis) n., poet. song thrush, Turdus philomelos – ‘Nor yet because the mavis sings his mellow morning glee Sae sweetly fraw the branches o’ the auld aik tree’ [JoHa], ‘As arm in arm we walk’d alang, The mavis liited up his sang . . .’ [JoHa], ‘A mavis might pike at yer nose for a cherry ony day, ya guid for naething vagabond’ [JEDM], ‘. . .every blackbird, mavis and starling Jock saw . . .’ [RM], ‘The maxter (maks-tur) n., arch. a mixture – ‘Humour and faith weel blent thegither To match the maxter o' the days' [WL] (cf. the more common mixtur).

Maxton (maks-tin) n. village on the A699 between St. Boswells and Kelso, a former station on the Kelso Branch of the North British Railway, and a Parish bordering on St. Boswells and Roxburgh. Destroyed by Hertford's men in 1545, it was made a Burgh of Barony in 1587, with the Ker's the original landowners. The parish church is mid-18th century, with portions of an earlier building, and the Maxton Cross is on the former village green. A history of the Parish was published by Charles Denoon in 2000 (the origin is probably ‘the farm belonging to Maccus' and first appears as ‘Mackestun' in 1116).

Maxton Court (mawks-tin-kör) n. part of Stirlches, adjacent to Oxnam Court, built in 1976 and named after the village.

Maxwell (maks-wul, -wel) n. Agnes (c.1534–94) 4th Lady of Herries. She was the only daughter and heir of William, 3rd Lord Herries. Her maiden name should probably be considered as ‘Herries'. She married John Maxwell, son of the 5th Lord Maxwell (after Maxwell had sought agreement from her guardian, the Earl of Arran, using 2,000 horsemen!; Maxwell eventually became Lord Herries himself, but later suffered for his support of Mary Queen of Scots). They had 4 sons and 7 daughters, including William, who succeeded. She was the superior of part of the Barony of Feu-Rule (essentially Hobkirk Parish), inherited from her father. There was a major dispute with Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst in 1561 and 1562 over the Barony, resulting in her lands being fixed at 1/3 of half of the Barony. Alex see Mowdie Maxwell. Alexander Harley of Portrack (1782–1853) Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch for Eskdale and Liddesdale in the period 1833–51. He married Sarah Telfer Hyslop. Alexander (b.1895/6) originally from Lanarkshire, he was an itinerant peddler in the Borders, specialising in small hardware items. He was a regular visitor to Newcastleton and elsewhere. He carried a brass-bound wooden box on his back from which he sold cheap jewellery, pocket knives, shaving necessities, etc. He was said to resemble Father Christmas and wear a very tall hat. He was living at 5 High Street on the 1861 census, along with his son William, daughter Ellen and 2 grandchildren. His occupation was given as ‘Travelling Toy & Jewellery Mcht.' Archibald of Liddelbank and Liverpool (19th C.) along with Thomas (probably his son) he was on the Borders
MAXWELL

Union Railway Committee for Liddesdale in the 1850s. Sir Aymer (d.1266) son of John, who was Chamberlain of Scotland. He was also Chamberlain, as well as Justiciar. His name was written ‘Eymuer’ and other variants. Along with his father, he witnessed a charter for Melrose Abbey’s lands in Ettrick in 1235/6. He granted the lands of Todrig to Alexander de Synton in about 1260. He may be the same as the ‘Elmero de Maxwell’ who was ‘vicecomite’ (i.e. Sheriff) of Roxburghshire in about 1250 when he witnessed a deed of Lempitlaw to Soutra. He was removed by King Alexander from his Council, because of offences against England, in a document drawn up at Sprouston in 1255. Lands in Tynedale were delivered to him in 1260/1. He was recorded as the King’s Sheriff in 1262. He married Mary (or Maria) McGauchen of Mearns and was succeeded by his son Sir Herbert. Charles (b.c.1765) surgeon recorded at Riccarton in 1835. He was also there in 1841, along with 2 Janes, probably his wife and daughter. He probably married Jean Jardine and they had a daughter Mary in 1800. He may be the ‘Mr. C. Maxwell, surgeon’ in Jedburgh in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’. He is probably the Dr. Maxwell who was on the Committee of the Proprietors of Castleton Library in 1832. George (16th C.) Hawick merchant mentioned in the will of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1574. He is listed as being owed money for ‘merchandice and furnesing of the Lairdis seruandis’, however, it is unclear what sort of merchant he was. Perhaps the same George was listed in 1571 as one of 4 inhabitants of Hawick who entered themselves to remain in ward in Leith, with Sir William Ker of Caverton as cautioner. In 1572/3 the same men swore allegiance to the Crown and gave assurance that they would not help or reset Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst and others, with Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig as cautioner. Gilbert (13th/14th C.) received the eastern half of the Barony of Wilton (with Henry Wardlaw being granted the other part) in 1306, presumably for helping Robert the Bruce in his struggle to achieve independence for Scotland. However, in 1342 he pledged the estate to the monks of Melrose Abbey for the payment of one silver penny at the festival of the nativity of St. John the Baptist, while holding the right for himself or his heirs to redeem the land for the payment of £40 sterling. It appears that the land was indeed redeemed, and was later forfeited and returned to the Crown. His seal bore a lion rampant with a saltire on top and the words ‘S’ GILBERTI DE MAXWELE’. Sir Herbert de (d.c.1206) Sheriff of Teviotdale as well as Dumfries. He is only the 2nd or 3rd recorded generation of Maxwells, but little is known about him. He witnessed the confirmation of the church of Hassendean to Paisley Abbey in the 1180s. He is recorded in a document relating to lands in Yorkshire in 1190/1. He had 3 sons: John, who was Sheriff of Roxburgh and Chamberlain of Scotland; Aymer; and Robert. The later Baron of Wilton, Gilbert, was probably a descendant of his. James (16th/17th C.) member of the court of James VI, who was rewarded in 1605, along with Robert Douglas, with the former Debatable Lands. These were erected into the Barony of Tarras. However, in 1607 the two men brought a case against many Armstrongs and others who had tried to prevent them from possessing the lands. In a second Act of 1609 the lands were granted to him alone. James (b.1808/9) from Kirkcaldy, he was a tinsmith in Hawick. He was on the Kirk Wynd in 1841 and on the Roond Close in 1851. His wife was Janet and they had children Robert, Isabella, Elizabeth (‘Betsy’), Agnes, Jane, Hannah and Mary Ann. John (d.1241) Chamberlain to King Alexander II, he also served as Sheriff of Berwick and Sheriff of Roxburgh. He was son of Herbert and brother of Aymer. He witnessed a charter between Gervase Avenel and Melrose Abbey in 1214. He is recorded as Sheriff of Roxburgh when he witnessed grants involving Kelso Abbey from at least 1214 and also and another in the period 1213–19 for Patrick of Whitton to Melrose Abbey. In 1215 he was among a few men sent by the King to the English court to attend to his affairs. In 1220 he witnessed a pledge by King Alexander to marry King Henry of England’s sister Joan, and in 1221 he witnessed the dowry charter for Joan of England, which included Jedburgh and Hassendean. He was also recorded as Sheriff in 1225 and 1226. As Chamberlain he is also named in many other documents in the 1220s and 1230s. He witnessed the charter granting lands in Ettrick to Melrose Abbey in 1235/6. He was succeeded by his son Aymer. John (d.1513) 4th Lord, son of John. He succeeded his father in 1486 and also then became Warden of the West Marches. He was recorded at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1502, when he was fined for non-appearance for his Roxburghshire lands of Maxwellfield. He was also fined for non-appearance at the court in Dunfries in 1504. In 1508 he, along with William Douglas of Drumlanrig and their men attacked the Crichtons and others in Dunfries. He married Agnes, daughter of James Stewart, 1st Earl of Buchan. They had at least 8 children, including Robert, who succeeded. He was killed at Flodden. John (15th/16th C.) listed among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Branxholme) pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran. Sir John 4th Lord Herries of Terregles (c.1512–82/3) younger brother of Robert, 5th Lord of Maxwell. He served as Warden of the West Marches in 1552 and was reappointed in 1561. He was said to be a great supporter of Mary, Queen of Scots. He was listed (on the side of Sir Walter of Buccleuch) on the 1564/5 bond between the Scotts and the Kerrs. The situation was sufficiently lawless in the West Marches that in 1565 the Privy Council laid out what would happen to his wife and children in the event that he should die performing his duties as Warden. In 1579 he made pledges to bring certain Armstrongs before the Privy Council, and also had a disagreement about ownership of lands with Christie Armstrong of ‘Barngleis’. He married Agnes Herries (daughter and heiress of William, 3rd Lord Herries), from whom he inherited his titles. He was succeeded by his son William, the 5th Lord. John 7th Lord Maxwell (1553–93) posthumously born 2nd son of Robert, the 5th Lord. He succeeded after his older brother Robert died aged 4. He and other Maxwells were sureties in 1569 for 5 Scotts of Ewesdale. In 1572 he was among the men who signed the retour for James Douglas to the Barony of Hawick. He signed the ‘Band of Roxburgh’ in 1573. He was made Warden of the West Marches in the 1570s, although for a while the title was given to his rivals the Johnstones. He was recorded in the register of the Privy Council several times in the 1570s. He and Robert of Cowhill served as sureties for several Armstrongs and others who were being held in ward. He temporarily received the Earldom of Morton, after the Regent Morton was executed in 1581. He was denounced as a rebel in 1581 for failing to present Armstrongs and Beatties to answer their rieving crimes. He was a strong supporter of the old Catholic religion and was involved with other Lords in struggles for power in Scotland. In 1585, for his good service to the King, he and his followers (a huge number named explicitly) had relief for all their crimes committed since 1569. However, in 1587 he was again out of favour with the King, and was plotting to help the Spanish Armada invade England. He was captured and imprisoned in Edinburgh, but released in 1589. In 1590 he was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. He was again Warden of the West Marches 1590–92. He gathered allies in order to attack the Johnstones, the conflict taking place at Dryfe Sands near Lockerbie in December 1593. These allies included Drumlanrig, who, however, left the battle early with his men. On the Johnstone side were many Scotts, Ellisons, Armstrongs, Chisholm and others from the Hawick area. His force suffered a complete rout and he himself was killed, after being cornered and having his right hand cut off. A letter of ‘respite’ by James VI in 1594 lists about 160 men implicated in his slaughter, including many from Teviotdale and Liddesdale. 2 thorn trees ‘Maxwell’s Thorns’ were said to have been planted where he fell. He married Elizabeth, daughter of David Douglas, 7th Earl of Angus. He was succeeded by his son John. John 6th Lord Herries (1583–c.1627) son of William, 5th Lord of Herries. In 1604 he was served heir to his father William in the Barony of Feu-Rule, which was erected with other lands into the Barony of Herries. He was recorded in 1614 when he failed to produce documents relating to the lands of Feu-Rule when requested by Sir Andrew Ker of Oxnam; in 1619 Ker complained that he remained ‘unrelaxed from a horning’. He married Elizabeth, daughter of John, 8th Lord Maxwell and was succeeded by his son John, 7th Lord Herries. John 8th Lord Maxwell (c.1585–1613) son of John, who was killed at Dryfe Sands. He was probably the John, Lord Maxwell, who was warded in Edinburgh Castle in 1599 for the obedience of the men of the West March. He was served heir to his father’s extensive properties in 1604, including farms in Ewesdale. In 1601 he found caution for the Maxwells in a feud with the Johnstones, with the assurances renewed in 1602. He was a Catholic, like his father, and was imprisoned in 1601 for ‘favouring Popery’. In 1602 he was ordered not to be released from Edinburgh Castle for refusing to sign a bond of assurance with Sir James Johnstone, Warden of the West Marches. He escaped Edinburgh Castle in 1602 and had 2 of the Johnstones killed, although there was supposedly a reconciliation in 1605. He challenged William Douglas of Lochleven to a duel over the Morton title, and was again imprisoned in Edinburgh in 1607. However, he once more escaped (although his fellow prisoner Sir James Macdonald was found hiding in a dung hill). Another meeting was arranged to attempted reconciliation with the Johnstones, at which he shot Sir James Johnstone in the back. Tried in his absence in 1609 he fled to France, returned to Scotland in 1612, was captured and executed. The lands and titles he forfeited included the Lordship of the lower part of Ewesdale. He married the only sister of James, 2nd Marquis of Hamilton. His titles and lands were forfeited, but eventually reacquired by his brother Robert. His tale is told in the ballad ‘Lord Maxwell’s Good Night’.

John 3rd Earl of Nithsdale, 7th Lord Herries (d.1677) son of John, 6th Lord Herries of Terregles, his mother being Elizabeth Maxwell, sister of Robert, 1st Earl of Nithsdale. He succeeded his great-grandfather’s brother Robert in 1670, as Lord of Maxwell, Eskdale and Carlisle. He was also superior of lands in Arkleton, Meikledale, Ewesdale, including Flask, Howgill, Glendivian, Burngrains, Wolfhope, Park, Terrona and Whiteshields. He married Elizabeth Gordon and was succeeded by his son, Robert, 4th Earl of Nithsdale.

John of Broomholm (d.1806) son of William of Broomholm and Agnes Scott of Woll. He was one of the Commissioners appointed in the court case regarding the division of Hawick Common in 1767. He married Wilhelmina Malcolm and was succeeded in turn by his sons George and David.

John (b.1802/3) stockingmaker who was noted as one of those who helped during the cholera outbreak of 1849. He was the father of John.

John (19th/20th C.) plumber and conductor of the Saxhorn Band. Mina (b.1798/9) recorded as ‘Ind.’ at the farm of Wrae in Ewesdale in the 1841 census. Mysie see Mysie Maxwell. Peter (18th/19th C.) resident of Edinburgh. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825, and hence presumably had a local connection.

Robert 4th Lord of Caerlaverock (d.1546) son of John, who was killed at Flodden. He was part of James V’s Royal Council, also serving as Extraordinary Lord of Session and High Admiral. In addition he was Warden of the West Marches and in 1526 was appointed as Justiciar. He was one of the Border chiefs imprisoned briefly in 1530 for failing to keep control of thieves. He was said to have been terrified of the power of Johnnie Armstrong and when James V had Armstrong hanged, he received a charter for his lands, signed by the King at Priesthaugh. In 1530/1 he was a surety for the entry of John, son of Walter Scott of Synton and William, son of Robert Scott in Allanhaugh. He served as interim Keeper of Hermitage in the 1530s while the Earl of Bothwell was imprisoned or exiled; in 1534 their is an entry in the Lord High Treasurer’s accounts to him ‘for keeping the House of Armytage and Rewling of the inhabitants of Liddesdale for ye space of seven months’ and another entry in 1540 for repairing the castle. He resigned the lands of Park in Ewesdale, for which David Armstrong had a charter in 1535. In 1537 he was granted the lands and possessions in Ewesdale previously belonging to Simon Armstrong of Whitehaugh. In 1540 Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch offered to take over the rule of Eskdale, Ewesdale and Wauchopedale if he would not take it. In 1541 an English letter claims he had met at Langholm with 2 Armstrongs, 2 Elliots and 2 Croziers, to encourage them to carry out raids on England. He was captured by the English at the Battle of Solway Moss in 1542. He married Janet, daughter of Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig and secondly married Agnes, daughter of James Stewart, 1st Earl of Buchan. His children included: Margaret, who married Archibald Douglas, 6th Earl of Douglas; Robert, who succeeded; and Sir John, Lord Herries of Terregles. Robert 5th Lord of Caerlaverock (d.1552) son of Robert. He succeeded his father in the Barony of Caerlaverock and other lands in 1550. He also held several farms in Ewesdale and Eskdale. In 1545 he was ‘Master of Maxwell’ when listed among Border lairds who gave assurance to ‘have na intelligence with Ingland’. He married Beatrix, daughter of James Douglas, 3rd Earl of Morton. He was Warden of the West Marches from 1550 (but perhaps replacing his father as early as 1542) until his death. He was succeeded by his sons Robert and John. Robert 6th Lord of Caerlaverock (d.1554) son of Robert and Beatrnx Douglas. He succeeded his father as an infant and died when still just 4, being in turn succeeded by his brother John. Robert 4th Earl of Nithsdale (1628–96) succeeded his father John in his many titles and lands. This included superiority of the farms of Nether Ewesdale. He married Lucy Douglas, daughter of William, 1st Marquess of Douglas. He was succeeded by his son William. Robert G. (1877/8–1916) elder brother of William, founder and head of the woollen manufacturers Robert G. Maxwell & Co., based in Dovecote Street. He lived at the Limes on Raeson Park. He played for Hawick R.F.C. and was President of the South of Scotland Chamber of Commerce. He enlisted into the Seaforth Highlanders in 1914, became Captain and died during an advance on Kut, Mesopotamia. Stewart Maxwellheugh (b.c.1795) woollen hosier, living at ‘Wilton Lodge Park cottage’ in 1841. This was probably somewhere near the end of Langlands Road. William (14th C.) holder of the (eastern) half barony of Wilton, and hence probably the heir of Gilbert. He appears to have redeemed the estate from the monks of Melrose Abbey and then forfeited it to the Crown, sometime around 1340. It was then granted to John, son of Margaret (surname not given). He is possibly the William, who along with his wife, was granted the lands of ‘Apiltrie’ by King Robert, after being forfeited by Thomas Carnot (probably Charteris); this is likely to be Appletreehall, although there are other possibilities. William (1555–1604) 5th Lord Herries, son of Agnes Herries and Sir John Maxwell. He held part of the Barony of Feu-Rule. In 1587 he served as Warden of the Western Marches and in 1587/8 he was instructed to enter a number of Elliots, Armstrongs and others to the Privy Council. In 1597 he complained against Englishmen for stealing large amounts of livestock from his farms, as well as ransoming 4 of his servants. He was Warden of the West March in 1600 when listed among leaders ordered to appear before the Privy Council to give advice about peace on the Border. In 1602 he granted the wardship of Appotside and Tythehouse to James Hamilton and also the lands of Harwood and Hawthornside to him during the minority of Hector Lorraine. In 1603 he granted a marriage contract between Turnbulls and a maiden, girl – ‘It was the witching time of night – The hour o’ gloamynge gray, And she that lay in her loveris armis, I wis they næme is aintmint teemet owt, therfor do the mays loe thee’ [HSR].

May Hirin Fair (mā-hi-rin-fār) n. formerly the main fair in Hawick for the hiring of farm workers etc., up until the latter part of the 19th century. The date was generally the 17th of May, but for many years it extended over 2 days, with the first day considered to be for the country people and the second for the townspeople. It was held at the Sandbed until 1815, with gypsies’ carts etc. filling the area and other ‘krames’ spilling up into the High Street. The North side of the street typically had gingerbread, nuts and other edible wares, while the South side was generally for shoes, wooden vessels, china, crystal, etc. These stalls were closely packed together all the way to the Town Hall. As well as being a festive fair there was also hiring of farm workers and servants and a cattle market. It was also the occasion for a parade around town by the Cornet and his supporters, headed by the drums and fifes, which was followed by a dance, without female partners. This tradition ended in the 1880s, by which time the Fair had also died out. It was effectively replaced with the modern stalls at the Mair and Shows on the Haugh during the Common Riding.

May o Gorrenberry (mā-o-go-rin-bu-ree) n. probably fictional beauty in John Leyden’s poem ‘Lord Soulis’. She was supposedly betrothed to the young heir to Branxholme – ‘O May she came, and May she gaed, By Goranberry green; And May she was the fairest maid That ever yet was seen’ [JL].

He was ordained as minister of Cavers in 1854 and remained there until his death. He married Jane Carfin, daughter of William Elliot of Hawick. She later married advocate David Duncan and died in 1893 (also written ‘Maccoll’ and ‘M’Coll’).

McConnell (mu-ko-nul) n. Brian (1950/1– ) brother of David, he played centre forward in football. Both brothers excelled at swimming and represented Scotland in water polo. They first played football for a team in Denholm, moving to Hawick United Colts and then the senior team. They were also part of a successful five-aside team and both moved to play for Selkirk. He later played for Hawick Royal Albert (including in their Scottish Qualifying Cup-winning team). He then returned to Hawick United and finished his playing days at Hawick Legion at the age of 48.

David (1951/2– ) brother of Brian, he initially played football at full-back, but was best remembered as a goalkeeper. After a defeat to Montrose in the Scottish Cup in 1974 he was asked to play in a trial for St. Mirren reserves, followed by a trial in goal for the first team against Rangers. He was signed by Alex Ferguson for St. Mirren and stayed for a season. He then played for Berwick Rangers, had to quit because of injury, but returned to play for Hawick Royal Albert before coaching Hawick Legion. Rev. Robert minister of Robertson Kirk 1966–83. He was also responsible for Teviothead 1966–72.

McCrae (mu-kra) n. Lt.-Col. David (1845–1930) from Balnagie in Kirkcudbrightshire, he emigrated to Canada with his father Thomas and lived in Guelph. He was partner in the firm McCrae & Armstrong, along with John Armstrong of Hawick, and they employed many weavers who had come from around Hawick. Robert Ewan describes being shown around Guelph by him in ‘Through Canada in 1878’. He was father of John, writer of the WWI poem ‘In Flanders Fields’.

McCreadie (mu-kree-ree) n. Charles W. ‘Charlie’ Cornet in 1975, often referred to as ‘the Sunshine Cornet’ because of how sunny it was at the Common Riding that year. He was also one of the founder members of the Border Horse Racing Association.

McCrone (mu-kron) n. Senga (1933/4–2020) born in Kilmarnock, she grew up in Ayrshire and later lived in Northern Ireland before moving to Hawick. She worked in Bantel her entire working life. She was a successful lawn bowler, starting in Northern Ireland, where she was part of the winning fours team in Irish national competition in 1971 and the British Isles fours championship in 1972. In Hawick she became a member of the Buccleuch Bowling Club. She first represented Scotland in 1981, paying as skip for most of the next 13 years, which included winning the silver medal in Singles at the 1986 Commonwealth Games. She won the Scottish Pairs in 1992, the Scottish Triples in 1993, as well as 3 World Championships. She married James (‘Jim’) and had sons Stewart and Alan.

McTurk (muk-turk) n. Andrew (15th/16th C.) attorney appointed as the agent of James Douglas of Drumlanrig in the sasine giving him the Barony of Hawick in 1514. It is unclear whether he was local or from Dumfriesshire (written ‘Makturk’).

McCullough (mu-ku-loch) n. Francis ‘Frank’ (b.1879/80) pedlar who was charged with murder at the Howegate and High Street in 1906. Rev. William Cupples (1867–1939) born in Aghadoey, County Down, he was educated in Belfast and was licensed to preach by Banbridge Presbytery in 1892. He was ordained at Mullingar in 1895 and translated to St. Margaret’s, Hawick, in 1905. He demitted his charge in 1935 and died in London. He married Marion (who died in 1934), daughter of Richard Jones, and their children were William Donald Hamilton (who worked for the B.B.C.) and Richard Denis Miller.

McDonald (muk-do-muld) n. Alexander (b.1811/2) tailor on the Cross Wynd, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was still on the Cross Wynd in 1841, but by 1851 he was on the Howe gate (at about No. 15). In 1851 and on Slater’s 1852 directory he is recorded as ‘Tailor & Pawnbroker’. He was part of the Buccleuch Bowling Club. He first represented Scotland in 1981, paying as skip for most of the next 13 years, which included winning the silver medal in Singles at the 1986 Commonwealth Games. She won the Scottish Pairs in 1992, the Scottish Triples in 1993, as well as 3 World Championships. She married James (‘Jim’) and had sons Stewart and Alan.
other sod-built pubs to serve the navvies working on the Hawick to Carlisle railway line. James (19th/20th C.) referred to as ‘Pastor’ and ‘the Kilwinning Martyr’, he was a fraudulent anti-Catholic preacher. He started a Protestant Guild in Hawick in about 1913, but was arrested for deserting his family in Hamilton. There were wild scenes in Hawick when he tried to return, caused by an antagonistic crowd, outnumbering his supporters. He was later fined for drunkennes in Hawick. Robert (b.c.1780) born in Wigtown, he was a nailer at the Sandbed, recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. In 1841 he was living on the Back Row with wife Elizabeth and children Joan, Flora, Elizabeth, Jane, Anne and Margaret. In 1851 he was on the Kilnpath, with his daughters Flora, Jane and Ann. Robert (19th/20th C.) proprietor of a restaurant at the Station Buildings. A photograph taken in the 1920s shows him outside his business. William (b.1807/8) from Knockando in Invernesshire, he was a limeburner at Limekilnedge. He was recorded there in 1861. His wife was Jane and their children included William and Ann (see also MacDonald).

McDonald’s (muk-do-nuldz) n. former restaurant at the Station Buildings, run by Robert McDonald. It did a roaring business in the heyday of the railway, serving breakfasts, teas and dinners. McDonald and staff can be seen outside the business premises in a photograph of the 1920s. The location was later the Station Launderette and the Shugonda Balti House.

the McDonald Shelter (thu-muk-do-nuld-shel-tur) n. public shelter constructed on the Station side of the North Bridge in 1959, constructed of concrete slabs, with public toilets attached. Construction was made possible through a bequest of the McDonald family (related to Swintons). It was demolished around 2000 during construction of the Waverley Bridge.

McDougall (muk-doo-gul) n. Andrew (15th/16th C.) son of Dugal. He was listed as son and heir of his father in 1477/8, in the lands of Makerstoun and Yetholm. He is ‘And. Makkowell de Makearstoun’ in 1490/1 when he witnessed a charter for Patrick Hepburn, Earl of Bothwell. He witnessed a confirming charter for the Barony of Wilton (for John Scott) in 1494. He had a confirming charter for the Barony of Yetholm in 1495. He witnessed a charter for Adam Hepburne of Craigs in 1505 and another for Patrick Hepburn, Earl of Bothwell, in 1506/7. In 1510 he and about 20 of his associates were charged with robbing and harassing Katherine Hoppringle (perhaps the widow of his father), depriving her of the lands to which she was legally entitled. He married Elizabeth daughter of Patrick Hepburn, 1st Lord of Hailes. He was probably father of Thomas (who married Janet Scott of Howpasley in about 1532), William (who is said to have succeeded, although this may be confused), Elizabeth (who married Andrew Haig of Bemersyde) and Maragret (who married Gavin Elliot). Andrew (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1616 as tenant in Stonedale along with Cuthbert when they were caught ‘with the bloody hand’ for the murder of Fergus Lorraine in Gatehousecote. He is recorded as ‘Andro McDowall in Stainledge’. In 1618 Andrew Ker suggested that the men on the assize should be changed, since they were his tenants, but he had a feud with 2 of the commissioners (namely Thomas Turnbull of Minto and William Douglas of Bonjedward). It seems likely he and Cuthbert (probably his brother) were hanged for the murder in 1618. Cuthbert (16th/17th C.) listed along with Andrew in 1616 when they were caught red-handed for the murder of Fergus Lorraine. The pair were committed to Jedburgh Tolbooth in 1618 and although the outcome is not recorded, they were probably hanged. Dugal of Makerstoun (15th C.) had a sasine for an 80 merk land in 1461. He was part of the panel of 1464/5 which ruled on the dispute between William Douglas of Drumlanrig and Alexander Gledstains over the lands of Kirkton Mains and the Flex. He had a confirming charter for the lands of Makerstoun and Yetholm in 1477/8. He witnessed a charter for Robert Ramsay of Cockpen in 1485/6. He was probably son of Duncan, father of Andrew and brother of Barbara, who married Gilbert Haig of Bemersyde. George (16th/17th C.) probably son of Thomas and Margaret Home. He signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638, his name being recorded as ‘G. Makdougall of Makarstoun’. He may be the McDougall who represented Roxburghshire in Parliament in 1625. He appears to have been succeeded by Sir William, presumably his son. Henry ‘Harry’ (17th C.) probably son of Sir William of Makerstoun. In 1658 he was among 20 ‘gentlemen and heritors’ of Roxburghshire who signed a commission to oppose payment requested from the county. He was one of the Commissioners for Roxburghshire (i.e. an M.P.), appointed in 1665, 1678 and 1681. He was probably the ‘M’Doual of Mackerton’ who was listed in 1684 as one of the men appointed as a commissioner in Roxburghshire for prosecuting Covenanters. He was a Commissioner. of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1685. His wife was Barbara and there was a ratification of Thomas as his heir in 1670. John (19th C.) law clerk in Hawick in the 1860s. Robert (17th C.) listed among the ‘Deficients in Hauick Parich’ in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. Robert (18th/19th C.) cart-wright on the Round Close, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded being in Makerstoun in 1502. Along with William Ormiston, in the same place, he was absent from the indictments given at Jedburgh, although the crimes are not recorded. His name is given as Thomas makdowell. Thomas of Makerstoun (d.1571) recorded in a marriage contract of 1532 with Janet Scott of Howpasley. He is probably the Thomas ‘McDuell’ who witnessed a document in Selkirk in 1533. He witnessed a document in Selkirk between the Kers of Mersington and Shaws in 1534. He is recorded in 1537 among Kers and others who were accused of burning Cunzierton and killing 2 men called Hall. He is also listed in 1549 among the associates of Walter Ker of Cessford who were accused of helping the English in raids upon the farms of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme; Alexander of ‘Stedrik’ is also listed and probably closely related. In 1551 he signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’. In 1560 he was named (as guarantor on the Ker side) on the bond to settle the feud between the Kers and the Rutherfords. He is probably the Thomas listed in 1569 among the lairds who signed a bond to keep peace on the Border. He married Janet Scott of Howpasley and their children may have included: James, who succeeded; Euphemia, who married Howpasley and their children may have included: Henry, who succeeded; and Anne Isabel, who married Walter Scott of Raeburn. William (18th C.) miller at Spittal. His son David was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1725 (also ‘MacDougal’, ‘Makdougal’, ‘Mkdougall’, and variants; formerly interchangeable with MacDowall, Macdowall, Makdowel, McDowell, etc.).

McEwen (muk-yoo-win) n. Rev. James (1831–1924) from Kirkcudbright, he graduated M.A. from Glasgow University in 1852. He was ordained as minister of Ford in 1856. In 1862 he was translated to become minister of the East Bank Church. He introduced hymn singing, as opposed to the traditional unaccompanied psalms, led by the precentor. He remained until 1873, when he moved to Sydney Place, Glasgow. In 1858 he married Jane Blackwood (1839–71), who died at East Back Manse, and is buried in the Wloogate. In 1873 he secondly married Margaret (b.1851), daughter of engineer John Melrose, and she died in 1937, aged 87. His children were: Jane (1861–90); Thomas (1863–1937), who was born in Hawick; William; Sir John Blackwood (1868–1948), also born in Hawick; George Cavet (b.1871); Katherine; Marion Cavet (1875–1961); Jessie Seath (b.1877); Helen Melrose (b.1879); and Sydney Melrose (b.1881). He was described as ‘of thin, wiry make, nimble in mind and body, he seemed to be endowed with a tireless energy’. A photograph of him exist. Sir John Blackwood (1868–1948) composer and college head. He was born in Hawick at the East Bank Manse, son of Rev. James and Jane Blackwood. At age 17 St. John’s Kirk appointed him as organist and choirmaster. He graduated from Glasgow University in 1888, then studied music, while being employed as choirmaster. Afterwards he attended the Royal Academy of Music in London, returning to Scotland in 1895, but being invited back to the Royal Academy 3 years later as a professor of harmony and composition. He was a prominent member of the Philharmonic Society, as well as a founder member and first Honorary Secretary of the Society of British Composers. He became Principal of the Royal Academy of Music in 1924, holding this position until 1936. He produced a significant body of music, particularly chamber music. The first public performance of his work was in 1894. Probably his best-known piece is the ‘Solway Symphony’, composed in 1911, first performed in 1922, and performed for the first time (at least the first movement) in Hawick in 2014. It was the first piece by a British composer to be recorded on the HMV label. His music is described as ‘post-Wagnerian’, with influences from Scottish folk traditions. He wrote a large amount of chamber music, including 17 string quartets and 7 violin sonatas. He also wrote orchestral music, including settings of 3 Border Ballads. In 1913 he suffered some sort of personal crisis, which led him to focus on chamber music thereafter. He received an honorary degree from Oxford in 1926 and Glasgow in 1933 and was knighted in 1931. He had left-wing political views, set out in pamphlets such as ‘Abolish Money’ and ‘Total Democracy’. In 1902 he married Hedwig Ethel, daughter of naval architect Henry Alwyn Bevan Cole; they had no children. The Provost of Hawick sent him a congratulatory note on his 80th birthday. He died at his home in London and left a large legacy for the promotion of new Scottish chamber music. Most of his manuscripts are held at Glasgow University. An exhibition and concert to celebrate his music were organised in Hawick in 2013 (also written ‘McEwan’).

McFarlane (muik-fawr-lin) n. James (b.1825/6) from St. Boswells, he was listed as blacksmith on Mather’s Close in 1851. His wife was Helen Thompson and they had a son, James. John (18th C.) resident of Denholm. His son Peter was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1784. Robert (b.c.1840) shoemaker in Hawick, listed on the Howegate in 1837 and on the 1841 census. His wife was Janet and they had children William, Robert, Jane and Anne. Tib (18th/19th C.) probably Isabel or Elizabeth, she was a resident of Cavers Parish. In her old age she was quite bent, and reputed by local people to be a witch. One day she was caught by Thomas Turnbull stealing harvested oats from his farm at East Middle, and he turned her off his land. However, a deputation of reapers from Denholm came to complain to him that they would all be cursed.

McGarrity (mu-ga-ri'-ee) n. Rev. Robert Forsyth (1869–1933) born in Armadale in West Lothian, he was a minister at Carfin and then Burray (Orkney). He became minister at Saughtree Kirk in 1929 and remained until his death. He married Jeanie Gloag and died in Edinburgh.

McGaughey (mu-gaw-ch) n. Sean (1961/2–) attended St. Margaret’s and the High School. After leaving school he worked in the knitwear industry. He played rugby for the Y.M., then for Hawick R.F.C., firstly in the 1979/80 season; he became a regular in the back row in the team that won the title 3 years in a row, 1984/5, 1985/6 and 1986/7. In 1983/4 he toured with the Grand Slam-winning Scottish team, gaining a single cap. He also played for the South of Scotland and the Barbarians. He was forwards coach in Hawick 2001/2.

McGee (mu-gee) n. Allan Hawick paramedic who has long been involved with the Tweed Valley Mountain Rescue, Duke of Edinburgh’s Award Scheme and Borders Exploration Group. He has been awarded the Winston Churchill Award and the Honorary Provost’s Achievement Award.

McGeorge (mu-jor-jeez) n. J. & D. McGeorge Ltd., Hawick knitwear manufacturers of the latter part of the 20th century. Records of the company covering the period 1960–96 exist. The original company was founded by James McGeorge in Dumfries in 1881.

McGibbon (mu-gi-bin) n. Fr. Charles Mungo (1905–90) born in Joppa, Edinburgh, his father died in WWI. He was ordained a priest in 1930 and served in Grenada, Tivoli and Victoria. He returned to Britain in 1950, serving in Edinburgh and Leicester, before returning to Barbados. In 1964 he was appointed Chaplain to the Dominican sisters in Hawick, remaining until St. Margaret’s Convent was closed in 1988. He spent his last years back in Edinburgh.

McGill (mu-giil) n. Anna see Lady Symington. Rev. Francis (1588/9–1664) licensed by the Presbytery of Jedburgh in 1611, he obtained half the living of Borthwick from the minister of Wilton (William Clerk) in 1612. It is unclear for how long he may have preached there, but he became minister of Kirkmichael in 1620. He married Elizabeth McMoran, who died in 1670 at 93 years old. Their children were Margaret and Marion (who married William Herreis of Harthwaite). John (18th C.) tenant farmer at Hasendean Townhead. In 1725 the schoolmaster of Minto, Walter Turnbull, rasied ‘letters of horn- ing and poinding’ against him, presumably to try to recover a debt. Rev. Walter (d.1651) possibly related to Sir James Douglas of Cavers, whose children with his 2nd wife (a daughter of Sir James McGill) are said to have taken the surname McGill. He was probably born too early to have been a son of Sir James Douglas, and so may have been his brother-in-law or similar. He graduated from St. Andrews University in 1593. He is recorded as minister and vicar of Cavers in 1603 when he gave the ‘tack of the teinds’ to Sir Walter Scott of Branhholme, and again in 1607. He held the parsonage and vicarage of Kirkton from 1606, as well as the parsonage of Cavers (although he was only presented to the vicarage in 1609). In a Scottish statute of 1622 he is recorded having the right of the vicarage of Cavers Parish. He was minister in 1627 when William Henderson (‘Rattlin Roarin Willie’) was excommunicated for the slaying of William Elliot. He witnessed a charter transferring Harwood from Edward Lorraine and Rev. William Weir of Hobkirk to Gilbert Elliott and another regarding Appotside and Tythhouse in 1632. He gave £20 towards buidling the Library at Glasgow University in about 1636. He signed the National Covenant in Hawick in 1638. In 1642 he was stated as being aged and infirm and requiring an assistant. His lands in Cavers Parish were valued at £100 in 1643 (and were part of the estate of Douglas of Cavers by the 1678 valuation). He is recorded as minister of Cavers in a Hawick Burgh records entry of 1644. Also in 1644 he reported to the Presbytery about 2 men at Fastcastle (in Bedrule Parish) who refused to sign the Covenant. He remained Cavers minister minister until 1647, when succeeded by James Douglas. He preached to a visitation of ministers minister until 1647, when succeeded by William Henderson (‘Rattlin Roarin Willie’) was excommunicated for the slaying of William Elliot. He witnessed a charter transferring Harwood from Edward Lorraine and Rev. William Weir of Hobkirk to Gilbert Elliott and another regarding Appotside and Tythhouse in 1632. He gave £20 towards building the Library at Glasgow University in about 1636. He signed the National Covenant in Hawick in 1638. In 1642 he was stated as being aged and infirm and requiring an assistant. His lands in Cavers Parish were valued at £100 in 1643 (and were part of the estate of Douglas of Cavers by the 1678 valuation). He is recorded as minister of Cavers in a Hawick Burgh records entry of 1644. Also in 1644 he reported to the Presbytery about 2 men at Fastcastle (in Bedrule Parish) who refused to sign the Covenant. He remained Cavers minister minister until 1647, when succeeded by James Douglas. He preached to a visitation of Cavers in 1645 when there is a record that he was 100 years old (although this scarcely seems credible, given that he graduated in 1593). He was said to have died in his 107th year (which also seems unlikely). He married Lilias Bartane (or Bartoun, who died in 1671) and their children included: James, mentioned in 1642, who died before 1651; Walter (d.1694), Minister of Leswalt, Wigton and Kilsyth, who was next of kin in 1651; and Samuel, Minister of Trafflat from 1627. His wife is recorded in a bond of 1651 with John Wynram of Libberton. A gravestone in Cavers old Kirkyard, marked ‘Johanna Magel, 1630’ is probably his daughter (spelled ‘Makgill’ and variants; see also MacGill).
McKelvie (maw-kul-vee) n. William (d.1906) police Constable who was beaten while making an arrest in Hawick and died. Possibly the only police officer in modern times to be killed on duty in the town.

McKenzie (mu-ken-zee) n. Alexander (18th/19th C.) shoemaker in Denholm, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Catherine (19th C.) servant to pub proprietor Robert Newall. She was one of the people who contracted cholera in the 1832 outbreak, but recovered. Charles (18th C.) writer (i.e. lawyer) of Edinburgh who was made an Honorary Burgess in 1779.

McLagan (muk-law-gin) n. Thomas Burns (1875–1965) native of Ladybank in Fife, he came to Hawick in 1895 as a postal sorting clerk, eventually becoming overseer. He was a Town Councillor for North High Street Ward from 1938 until 1955, being appointed Dean of Guild in 1939, Junior Bailie in 1940 and serving as Provost 1940–45. Because of the War years, he is the only Provost to have never officiated at a Common Riding. He was Convenor of the County Health and Welfare Committee, a member of the Archæological Society and an elder in St. John’s McKie (mu-kee) n. William (b.1821/2) from Dumfries, he went into partnership with William Nixon, forming Nixon & McKie around 1850. He led the hosiery part of the business, with Nixon in charge of the spinning. However, the firm folded in about 1866 and the premises were sold to Thomas Laidlaw and Robert Pringle & Son. He was one of the founder members of Hawick Bowling Club in 1854. In 1861 he was living at 17 Buccleuch Street and was unmarried; he employed 87 people at that time.

the McKinley Act (thu-mu-kin-lee-awkt) n. U.S. act of 1890, imposing large tariffs on imported high quality woollen goods (among other items), which led to economic difficulties for many Hawick tweed manufacturers.

McKinnon (mu-ki-n) n. Hugh (b.1782/3) from Dumfriesshire, he was a stocking-maker in Hawick. In 1841 and 1851 he was living at Roadhead in Wilton. He married Isabella (‘Tibbie’) Aitken, maternal aunt of the writer Thomas Carlyle. His children were: Alexander; Angus; Mary Ann, who married James Jamieson; Sarah, who married George Turnbull; and Marion (d.1844), who died of consumption. There are mentions of some members of the family in the letters of Thomas Carlyle, with the name sometimes being spelled ‘McKinnow’. James ‘Jim’ (1931/2– ) road sweeper for the Council and horse-racing enthusiast. He was Cornet’s groom for over 15 years.
McLagan Drive

Church. As Provost he gave the V.J. Day address to the town from the balcony of the Council Chambers in 1945. Married to Elizabeth Grierson of Hawick, he had no family, and shunned publicity. Later he became Postmaster at Keith and Head Postmaster at Forfar, before retiring back to Hawick. McLagan Drive was named after him.

McLagan Drive (muk-law-gin-driv) n. part of Burnfoot, built in 1949, extended in 1963 and named after Provost Thomas B. McLagan. Several of the houses were redeveloped by Eildon Housing.

McLaren (muk-law-rin) n. Sandy (1945–) born in Ballinluig, he worked on the family farm until a dust allergy forced him to find a new career. In 1972 he came to Hawick as a policeman, becoming a Sergeant in 1980. He spent several years in Edinburgh and other Border towns before returning to Hawick in 1998 as Inspector in the traffic department. He retired from the Police in 2004, but later had some part-time jobs in Hawick as well as volunteering as a drover with the Royal Voluntary Service. At age 60 he took up the pipes, joining the Hawick Scout Pipe Band. He also has the distinction of having been a member of the Atholl Highlanders, the only lawful private army in Europe. His wife Shiela came from Strathtay and had several jobs in Hawick. The couple celebrated their golden wedding anniversary in 2020. Their children are Shonagh (the first full-time female firefighter in the Borders) and Allison (Deputy Head in Earlston). William Pollock ‘Bill’, M.B.E. (1923–2010) born and brought up in Hawick, he attended Trinity and the High School, and was commissioned with the Royal Artillery in WWII. A bout of T.B. ended his rugby playing career early, but he taught rugby to primary school boys until 1987. He worked with the Hawick Express, later becoming well known as a radio and TV commentator, and has also written or edited several books on rugby, for example ‘100 Years of Hawick Rugby’ (1972), and narrated TV programmes and videos on the Borders. He was awarded an M.B.E. for services to rugby in 1979, followed by an O.B.E. in 1995 and a C.B.E. in 2003. He finally retired from rugby commenting in 2002. His autobiography ‘The Voice of Rugby’ was published in 2004. McLaren Court is named after him. A memorial bust was unveiled in 2012, sculpted by Rory Maciver, and inscribed ‘The Voice of Rugby’. He can be heard recounting rugby memories on on ‘Sounds of the Borders’ (2012).

McLaren Court (muk-law-rin-kör) n. part of the Meadows, built in 1964, refurbished later as luxury flats, and named after rugby commentator Bill McLaren.

McLear (muk-leer) n. Margaret (18th C.) housekeeper at Branxholme in 1789 when she was working for Adam Ogilvie.

McLean (muk-lian) n. Rev. Joseph William (1850/1–1903) came to Saughtree Kirk as licen- ciate in 1902. However, he died the following year. William (15th/16th C.) listed on the pardon granted in 1526 to a large number of Scotts, Turnbuls and other Borderers who had assisted the Homes in attacking the Earl of Arran. His surname is recorded as ‘Makclaine’. Rev. William (19th C.) presented to Ashkirk Parish by Gilbert, Earl of Minto in late 1854 and ordained there early the following year. He was translated to Merton in 1860 and then to Peningham in 1864.

McLellan (muk-le-lin) n. Ebenezer (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, probably the son of Peter born in Forgandenny, Perthshire in 1769. He married Jane Turnbull in 1794; she may have been the eldest daughter of Thomas Turnbull and Beatrix Ruecastle. They had a son, Peter (b.1796). Even although his name is transcribed as ‘Mclenan’ in the parish records, it seems likely he was a McLellan. He is probably also the Ebenezer who later married Janet Wilson and whose children (baptised in Hawick Parish) included: John (b.1805); and James (b.1809), with the surname recorded as ‘Mcleeland’. Patrick (17th C.) gardener listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He witnessed baptisms in 1700 for tailor Alexander Hislop, in 1703 for fellow gardener John Vair, in 1704 for Thatcher John Shiel and for John Turnbull ‘oye’ to Rev. James Ker and in 1705 for workman John Douglas. He is probably the Patrick, married to Marion Scoon, who had an unnamed son baptised in Hawick in 1683. He is probably also the Patrick whose children baptised in Hawick included Mary (b.1701) and Patrick (b.1703). Peter (18th/19th C.) resident of London. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He was probably the son of Ebenezer and Jane Turnbull born in Hawick in 1796 (formerly ‘Macclan’ and ‘Mclelan’).

McLennan (muk-le-nin) n. Rev. Findlay (18th C.) minister of Kelso Qualified Chapel 1750–7. He carried out Episcopalian services in Hawick around this time, probably in a building on Kirk Wynd. The Hawick Parish register in the 1770s records an earlier baptism: ‘Mira McLeod (nu-klowd) n. Brian, B.E.M. (1946/7– ) son of a soldier, he attended school in Berlin, Burnfoot and Hawick High. After being in the Army for 23 years he settled back in Hawick. After retiring he took command of the Hawick Army Cadet Force and had for a long time been on the Committee of the local British Legion, for which service he received the B.E.M. in 2016. He has also been a Community Councillor. He married Marilyn in 1970 and the couple celebrated their golden wedding anniversary in 2020. They had children Tracy and Iain. Christine (1934– ) Hawick born and bred, sister-in-law of Hugh. She worked in Pringle’s, and has been a Girl Guide Commissioner, and for which she was awarded the B.E.M. Dr. Donald J.A. (c.1828–1903) born in the Hebrides, educated at Edinburgh University, he came to Denholm in 1849 to assist with the cholera outbreak. After the last case in Denholm he moved to help in the Hawick cholera outbreak, when 141 people died in the parish. He was a partner of Hawick’s Dr. John Douglas (following the death of Robert Douglas, the former partner and brother of Dr. Douglas). He became joint Medical Officer of the Parish in 1851 (in connection with the Poorhouse), Medical Officer in 1856, Medical Officer for the Burgh in 1868 and local Police Surgeon in 1896. He also acted as medical officer for several other local organisations, including being Honorary Medical Officer for the Cottage Hospital. He later practised in partnership with Dr. Barrie. In all, he was a doctor in the town for more than 50 years. He was an active member of the Con Club, a leader in the efforts to establish public swimming baths in Hawick, and a founder member of the Hawick Bowling Club and Hawick Billiards Club. His business premises were at 7 Buccleuch Street. His caricature from 1856 appears in the book ‘Noctes Hawickianæ’.

Hugh F., O.B.E. (1932–2014) rugby prop forward, born and bred in the town. He supposedly played his first junior rugby game at 17, when walking past the ground and asked to join in when one of the players was ill. He played for Hawick R.F.C. 1949–62, and was capped forty consecutive times 1954–62. He played 14 times for the Barbarians and toured with the British Lions. He was awarded the O.B.E. in 1962 for services to rugby and was President of Hawick R.F.C. 1983–85. He ran a plasterer’s business and sports shop. John (19th C.) father of John, he lived in Edinburgh, but developed strong connections with Hawick. For Thomas Laidlaw of Sillerbuthall he painted a view of Hawick from the West Braid Road about 1870, useful as a record of the growth of the Town. The painting was acquired by the trustees of Sheriff Anderson and presented to the Magistrates and Council, and is now in the Museum collection. He was married twice, secondly to Christina, daughter of William Somerville. He had 8 children, including John (of the Hawick News), George S. (librarian) and Arthur Stuart (secretary of the Evangelical Union of South America). John (1856–1925) co-founder of the Hawick News, with James Vair, and co-publisher of ‘Pictures from the Past of Auld Hawick’ (1911) with J.J. Vernon, ‘Hawick and the Great War, 1914–1919’ (1920) with Vair and several other books. He was born in Edinburgh, son of a painter, and moved to Hawick in 1871, working on the Hawick Advertiser. He took sole control of the Hawick News in 1908, passing it on to his family when he died, and is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery.

McNicol (muk-ni-kol) n. Rev. Donald (19th/20th C.) from Clydebank, he was minister at Hawick Baptist Kirk from 1903. He took over after a roughly 1½ year long vacancy. He was said to be a powerful preacher, and attracted many new young people to the Church. During his time a balcony was added to the church and a new baptistry introduced. In 1907 he moved to Edinburgh to become the first minister of the Baptist Church in Gorgie. In 1910 he moved to South Australia. He returned to Hawick in 1916 as Chaplain for visiting Australian troops.

McPhail (muk-fäl) n. Rev. Archibald Connell (1827–1907) born in Southend, Campbeltown, son of Dougal (or Dugald) and Margaret Connell, his grandfather being a tenant farmer on Mull and his middle name coming from a maternal uncle who made a fortune in Tobago. He was educated at Dalintobar and Edinburgh University. He was licensed by Kintyre Presbytery and became a missionary at Crofthead in Whitburn Parish. He was ordained as minister at Quarter Chapel in Hamilton Parish 1862, translated to Beath, Fife in 1870 and then became minister of Hobkirk in 1876, where he remained until his death. He married Mary Georgina, daughter of Dr. George Welsh (a medical missionary in India), who was widow of Capt. Robert Roy. His wife died in 1900. Their only daughter Georgina Louisa married Walter Turnbull, farmer at Hartshaugh. He is buried in Hobkirk Kirkyard.

McPherson (muk-for-sin) n. Donald (1842–1907) born at Berriedale in Caithness, he learned gardening, moved to Oban and trained in forestry. Army. He moved to New York to pursue an acting career, supporting himself in advertising before finding success in the mid-1970s. He became a professional actor, appearing in stage productions, as well as on screen. He may be best known as a regular on the television show ‘Law & Order’ and for playing Jake Gyllenhaal’s father in ‘Brokeback Mountain’, as well as Maggie Gyllenhaal’s father in ‘World Trade Center’. He married Charlotte Bova in 1977 and they have 2 children, Oliver and Andrew.

McRobert (muk-ro-bur’) n. Rev. John (b.1794/5–1876) born at Kirkbean in Kirkcudbrightshire, he was the last minister of Denholm Congregational Kirk. He trained at Glasgow Theological Hall and was minister at Ellon 1828–34, Falkirk 1834–36, Grangemouth 1836–38 and Cambuslang 1838–46, before coming to Denholm in 1846. He remained as minister until 1876. He also ran the Free Library in Denholm in the 1850s. In 1831 he married Catherine Copland, from Glasgow, and she was a teacher. They lived at Deanburn Cottage in 1851 and on Westgate in 1861. Mary McRobert, listed as infant school teacher in Denholm in 1852, was probably his daughter.

McVittie (muk-vi’-ee, -vee’) n. George (17th C.) recorded in the Town Book for 1655. He was absolved from the claim brought against him by John Scott ‘pethar’ for 6 or so boots taken from his stall in Hawick. He is probably the George who witnessed a baptism for Robert Scott of Glack in Hawick in 1680. James (19th C.) minor poet who wrote under the pseudonym ‘Eskdale’. Jess (19th C.) seller of tripe, toffee and other wares in the later 19th century and early 20th. Her shop was at the corner of Drumlanrig Square and the Kirk Wynd. Robert (b.c.1795) roadmaker who was living at Fiddletown in 1841. His children included Alexander, Helen, Jane, Henry, Thomas, Elizabeth, Mary and Barbara. William (17th C.) one of a list of 16 ‘idle and masterless men’ suggested by the Hawick Bailie to the Privy Council in 1627 as suitable for sending to the wars in Germany. While in Edinburgh Tolbooth he was among 7 of them who complained that they were not in fact the sorts of men who should be pressed into military service, but nevertheless were transported to the wars in Germany (also written ‘McVite’, ‘McVitie’ and variants).

McWatters (muk-wa’-urz, muk-wi’-urz) n. William ‘Billy’, M.B.E (1940– ) born and bred in Hawick, he worked in Braemar, the Town Hall and as Bursar of St. Margaret’s Nursing Home. His work on behalf of the Duke of Edinburgh’s Award Scheme was rewarded by an M.B.E. He has also performed as a magician under the name of Bill Stewart.

Meadsgrove Plantin (meedsgr-o-phil-tin) n. plantation on the former Wells estate, situated to the north of Blawearie cottage.

Meadshaw (meed-shaw) n. farm on the north side of the Borthwick valley just past Philip. It has sometimes been marked ‘Meadowshaw’ on maps. ‘Archie, hantand [habitually] in Meidshaw’ is recorded in 1586/7, but with no surname given. There were 5 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650, namely James Todd, Jean Scott, Walter Beattie, James Chisholme and Janet Bap-tie. There was a skirmish between Royalist and Commonwealth forces near here in 1653 (perhaps the last military conflict near Hawick). It was part of Wilton Parish until Robertson was formed in 1689/90. Robert Scott was there in 1702 and Walter Stoddart in 1710. It was surveyed in 1718 along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties; at that time the farm covered 344, ‘but very inconve-nient it being long and narrow’, bounded by the Borthwick Water, Craik, Henwoodie common and Outersiderig. It was rented from the Buccleuch estates by William Ogilvie in 1723. Cooper James Scott was living there in 1753. Robert Beattie was there in 1766, James Laidlaw in 1780–86 and John Nichol in 1792. It was valued along with Craik and Whinneycleuch in 1785 and 1803. James Douglas was shepherd there in the early 1800s. Walter Lawson, Walter Lunn and their families were there in 1841. About 500 m to the west, near the northern bank of the Borthwick, are the remains of a settlement, roughly circular, about 45 m in diameter. To the north-east of this settlement is another circular enclosure, probably an old sheepfold (formerly also written ‘Midshaw’, ‘Meidshaw’, etc.; it appears to be ‘Meitsheills’ in 1650, ‘Mitcheshaw’ in 1690, ‘Mitcha’ in 1702, ‘meatshaw’ in 1710 and ‘Midshaw’ in 1785; it is marked on Blaen’s 1654 map as ‘Meadesh’, on Stobie’s 1770 map as ‘Milshaw’ and on Ainslie’s 1773 map as ‘Midshaw’).

Meadshaw Rig (meed-shaw-rig) n. ridge on the south side of the Borthwick valley, south of Eldrig farm, lying between Mid Hill and Rashy Hill. Note that it is a couple of kilometres from the farm of Meadshaw. There is a linear earthwork there.

the Mechanics’ Institute (thu-me-kaw-neeks-in-sti-choo’) n. organisation active in Hawick in the mid-19th century, which ran lectures to promote general knowledge among the working class. There were many ‘Mechanics’ Institutes’ set up in other towns in this period. It ran a library on O’Connell Street. It may have been the same as the I.O.U.S. Mechanics Friendly Society.

Meda (mee-da) n. the scout in the play ‘The Gutterbludes’, described as ‘A Veteran Canadian Pioneer, originally named ‘The Medicine Man’ by the Mohicans, of Scottish Descent’.

Meda’s Song (mee-duz-sawng) n. song written for the play ‘The Gutterbludes’ in 1905, with words by J.E.D. Murray and music by Adam Grant. It is about an Indian scout (Meda) who is really an exiled Teri in disguise, with the role first performed by W.F. Crosby. It is also sometimes called ‘The Song of Meda’. It was first published in 1905 as part of the song sheet for ‘The Gutterbludes’, but the 3rd verse was not published until 1913 (in an edition by Adam Grant, published in memory of his daughter Nan), so it is unclear if this verse was included in the original. A version was recorded by Hamilton B. Little on a 78 r.p.m. record in the 1930s. Grant’s simple accompaniment was embellished by Adie Ingles for the 1957 song book. It was changed again by Ian Seeley for the 2001 edition of ‘The Hawick Songs’, making it again chordal, but more modern. It is a powerful song, and retains its popularity. Despite having no chorus, the audience typically join in gradually as the song progresses, until all are singing by the end.

Medlicott (med-lee-ko’) n. Capt. Walter Sandfield (1879–1970) son of Henry Edmondstone and Kate D’Oyley Gale. He was an officer in the Northumberland Hussars. He married Lavender Mary Pease. Later in life he lived at Old Fodderlee, where he died, aged 90.

the Medway Cup (thu-med-wa-kup) n. the Medway Challenge Cup, competed for at the Common Riding races, presented by Oliver Kennedy in 1927, when it replaced the Branxholme Stakes. Kennedy moved to Southend to set up his own knitwear company, using ‘Medway’ as his trade name (because the factory looked across the Thames Estuary to where it is joined by the River Medway). The cup was won by Marjorie Haddon on Rufus on Common Riding Saturday of 1927. Cornet Ian Mactaggart, also riding Rufus, won it in 1929, was second in 1930 and 1931 and won again in 1932 and 1933, getting it outright following his 3 victories. However, the cup was given back for competition again in 1966 by the widow of ex-Cornet Ian Mactaggart. The Kennedy family continues to provide sponsorship for the race.

meed (meed) n., poet. merit, reward – ‘O heaven and earth! but death is a meed, Which sorrow like her’s might desire …’[JTe], ‘…Baffling despair with a Border blow, and deeming our brightest meed, The sunny smile of an auld, auld toon, Where the Teviot twines to the Tweed’[JYH], mood, disposition.

meenister (meen-istur, mi-nee-tur) n. a minister – ‘The meenister said, When he gied us a ca’, ‘We ken some folk that weel, We dinna ken them ava’’[IJ] (also sometimes ‘mineester’).

meenisters (meenis-turz) n., pl. ministers, being appointed to each parish in the post-Reformation Church of Scotland, as well as other related churches. They also served as Moderators for their parish Sessions. The Hawick minister enjoyed the privilege of cutting peat and turf on the Common and of grazing on the Common any horses, cows or sheep that he possessed; he also received a ‘teind’ for any newborns to the Town’s livestock, 4d for a lamb, 1s for a calf and 1s 8d for a foal. Parish ministers of Hawick can be traced back for several centuries, although the early days are actual duties to the parish. The first Hawick clergymen on record are Henry, ‘persona’ (i.e. Parson), and Algar and William, both ‘capellano’ (i.e. Chaplain) in about 1183. Then comes William (‘Willo Clerico de hauwic’), probably the same man 4 more times in the next decade or 2, followed by ‘Maurice, Parson of Hawick’ in 1235. Then there is Radolphus (or Ralph) in the 1260s and Richard de Wotton in 1296. There then follows several Rectors who held the ‘benefice’ of the church of Hawick, although probably never visited the town, and may have had a curate performing the pastoral duties. The roll afterwards is: Robert de Ormesby in 1297; Richard de Clare for a few years up until perhaps 1311; an unnamed appointee of Edward II in 1319; Gerard Kereti, from about 1346–53; John of Hawick, from 1355/6; John Fleming (possibly the same as the previous Rector) until some time before 1363; John Leche, from before 1363 until at least 1378; John Cromdale, probably after 1378; William Turnbull, from before 1431; James Lindsay, Rector from 1447, Prebendary from 1470; Thomas Falconer, Chaplain in 1452; Hugh de Douglas noted in 1460; Gilbert Kennedy, Prebendary until 1470; Alexander Murray at least 1476–83; John Sandilands was recorded as Rector in 1554 and 1558, and after the Reformation was Parson, probably from 1563 until 1583. John Spottiswood was also recorded in 1585 until 1601. However, Henry Scott was Reader in 1574–79, and John Young was burned in his tower in 1548. George Hepburn, Rector from 1532; Pate Witelow around 1532; and John Scott, Rector from 1536. John Young was burned in his tower in 1548. George Hepburn was Parson around 1559, probably the last before the Reformation. John Sandilands was recorded as Rector in 1554 and 1558, and after the Reformation was Parson, probably from 1563 until 1583. John Spottiswood was also recorded as a Rector in 1558 (so there were apparently 2 men sharing this benefice). William Fowler held the post of Parson from 1585 until 1601. However, Henry Scott was Reader in 1574–79, while William Auchmowtie was Minister for Hawick, Wilton, Kirkton, Hassendean and Cavers (at the same time) from 1575 until at least 1591, i.e. he was the actual minister during the time of at least a couple of Parsons and Readers. The charge was vacant in 1599 (and possibly for several years around that time). We then have the post-Reformation bona fide Hawick Parish Ministers: Thomas Abernethy, from 1601 until about 1610; Adam Scott 1612–c.24; Robert Cunningham 1625–56; John Scott 1657–62; and Alexander Kinnear about 1663–67. John Langlands was the last Episcopalian, appointed in 1667 and deprived in 1689. There was then a vacancy for about 2 years in the confusing times after the Revolution. The following is a list thereafter: Alexander Orrock 1691–1711; Robert Cunningham 1712–22; Charles Telfer 1723–31; William Somerville 1732–57; James Laurie 1757–83; Thomas Sharp 1784–99; Robert Gillan 1789–1800; James Arkle 1800–23; John Cochrane 1823–32; John A. Wallace 1833–43; John MacRae 1843–92; David Cathels 1892–1925; John A.G. Thomson 1925–99; L. Wright 1972–86.

The Meikle Brig (thu-mee-kul-brig) n. former name for Hawick’s main bridge, perhaps suggesting there was a second one, as also indicated by other records of the early 18th century. The Session books of 1722 state that 2 elders are to be elected by other records of the early 18th century. The area was referred to as ‘Meggotland’ around the early 1500s when it was a favourite hunting centre for the King, and also used as a base for suppressing rievers. It is also the name of the river that rises near Broad Law, passes through the Reservoir and empties into St. Mary’s Loch – ‘Meggat Water and Tema, Loch was flooded, covering the ruined 16th century Cramalt Tower. It has the biggest earth dam in Scotland and supplies water to Edinburgh and the Lothians. The area was referred to as ‘Meggtotland’ around the early 1500s when it was a favourite hunting centre for the King, and also used as a base for suppressing rievers. It is also the name of the river that rises near Broad Law, passes through the Reservoir and empties into St. Mary’s Loch – ‘Meggat Water and Tema, They tumble down from the hills, With the scent of peat In their tinkling feet, And the brown trout They tumble down from the hills, With the scent of peat In their tinkling feet, And the brown trout They tumble down from the hills, With the scent of peat In their tinkling feet, And the brown trout They tumble down from the hills, With the scent of peat In their tinkling feet, And the brown trout They tumble down from the hills, With the scent of peat In their tinkling feet, And the brown trout They tumble down from the hills, With the scent of peat In their tinkling feet, And the brown trout They tumble down from the hills, With the scent of peat In their tinkling feet, And the brown trout They tumble down from the hills, With the scent of peat In their tinkling feet, And the brown trout They tumble down from the hills, With the scent of peat In their tinkling feet, And the brown trout They tumble down from the hills, With the scent of peat In their tinkling feet, And the brown trout They tumble down from the hills, With the scent of peat In their tinkling feet, And the brown trout Meikledale (meek-kul-dal) n. farm near where the Meikledale Burn joins the Ewes Water on the A7, about 5 miles south of Mosspaul. The lands there were long the seat of the Littles, from before 1426 when Simon Little had an earlier grant confirmed. They were described as a 20-merk land in 1550, when inherited by Robert, Lord Maxwell, by John, Lord Maxwell in 1604, by Robert, Lord Maxwell in 1619, by John, Earl of Nithsdale in 1670 and by William, Earl of Nithsdale in 1696. They were then owned by the Elliots. The farm was valued at £900 in 1671 when Adam Elliot was owner. When inherited by Adam’s son William in 1682 the farm (together with Meikledalehope) was described as a 19-merk land of old extent. William Scott of Rowanburn (a descendant of the Scotts of Thirlestane) acquired it in 1733 and sold it to William Laing (Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch in 1750). Thomas Beattie was then the tenant, and wrote a diary, which survives. He was still there until at least 1797. Mr. Laing sold it to William Elliot Lockhart of Borthwickbrae, his nephew. The tenant in 1841 and until at least the 1860s was John Common. An ancient standing stone, the ‘Grey Wether’ stood in front of the house. There are remains of an ancient settlement just to the north-east, and another further up the Burn at Riogfoot. There was also formerly a mill there (sometimes ‘Muckledale’); it is ‘Meikledale’ in 1426, ‘Mekyldail’ in 1499, ‘Mekilldail’ in 1550, ‘Mekildail’ in 1569 and ‘Muckleenal’ in 1785; it is ‘Mekildale’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Muckledeil’ on Crawford’s 1804 map).

Meikledale Burn (meek-kul-dal-burn) n. major stream that rises at Faw Side and Rashiegrain Height (on the boundary between Roxburghshire and Dumfriesshire) and joins the Ewes Water near the farm of Meikledale. There are signs of a rectangular platform near the head of the burn and signs of a settlement further down.

Meikle Whitlaw (mee-kul-whi’law) n. former name for a farm at Whitlaw, to the north of the Flex road, opposite ‘Little Whitlaw’. The 2 former farms were separated by the Flex Burn. The farm was surveyed in 1718, along with other properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch, at that time covering 188 acres and being bounded by the Slitrig, Little Whitlaw and Hawick Common, with the farmhouse at the south end, on the Flex Burn. The old boundary of the Common came to a point there, with the boundary line running through one of the farm buildings; this was the house of Janet Martin at the time of the 1767 description of the Common. At the Riding of the Marches a cut sod was placed on the roof and the Flag passed over it also (presumably by the Cornet). The farm was formerly owned by the Gladstains, then became a tenanted farm belonging to the Duke of Buccleuch. There is a record of a band of English and Scottish thieves stealing cattle from John Gledstanes’ byre there in 1580 and being followed by a band of Gladstains and Scotts; on their return through Liddesdale they were ambushed by Armstrongs and others and Walter, brother of James Gladstains of Cocklaw was killed. In 1692 Francis Gladstains renewed his lease, which he held by right through ‘gentleman service’. In the 1750s there was a dispute over the apportionment of the ‘cess’ between these lands and the Flex. ‘Mickle and Little Whitlaws’ were valued together at £152 2s 7d in 1811, when owned by the Duke of Buccleuch. The farmer in the mid-19th century was William Knox; he was said to have succeeded 2 of his uncles, who became tenants in about 1746 (although it was probably later), succeeding John Gladstains. The site of the former farm buildings is now the main part of Flex farm (also known as ‘Muckle Whitlaw’; it is ‘Mekle Qhuitelaw’ in 1580 and ‘Meikle Whittlawes’ in 1718).

melly (\textit{me-lee}) \textit{n.}, \textit{arch.} cloth that is a mixture of colours – ‘…for art and part of theft and concealment …six ells of melly, twenty-four ells of white cloth …’ [RBA1537].

Melrose (\textit{me-löz}) \textit{n.} town built at the foot of the Eildons in the Tweed valley, birthplace of rugby sevens. St. Aidan founded a monastery here in the 7th century, being succeeded by St. Boswell and St. Cuthbert, with the present abbey founded around 1136. The town became a Burgh of Barony in 1609. The 15th century Commendator’s House, repaired 1645 Market Cross, and Priorwood Gardens are other attractions. At one time called Fordel, it was well known for producing linens until the late 18th century, and also known as the former home of ‘Coltart’s Candy’. Melrose was a station on the Waverley Line, but is now primarily a residential and retirement community. Considered ‘posh’ by other Borderers, it is rarely the best-loved among the other towns – ‘The dastards of Melrose and Galashiels weavers! They pulled out our badge, and became our deceivers’ [JH]. Melrose Festival Week was inaugurated in 1938, led by the Melrosian and the Festival Queen, and has some events in the grounds of Melrose Abbey. The local song has some great words – ‘It’s oor ain toon, It’s the best toon That ever there be: Here’s tae Melrose, gem o’ Scotland, The toon o’ the free’. The town has also given rise to a surname. Population (1991) 2,270 (the origin is possibly the Old British ‘mael’ and Old Welsh ‘rhos’, meaning ‘bare or cropped moon’, although the Gaelic ‘ros’ for ‘promontory’ has also been suggested; the name was probably transferred from Old Melrose where the Abbey was first sited; certainly the name has nothing to do with the rose, despite its appearance on the town’s coat of arms; the name first appears as ‘Mailros’ about 700 and had varied spellings until the 17th century).

Melrose (mel-röz) n. Adam (d.1222) referred to as ‘Adam of Melrose’, where he became Abbot in 1207. His origins are a mystery. In 1213 he became Bishop of Caithness, and was consecrated in May 1214. In the following month he dedicated the church of St. Mary in Hawick. This is presumably because he had previously been Abbot of Melrose, and would have been something he did before returning to Caithness. In 1218 he was one of the Bishops who visited the Pope to reverse the excommunication imposed upon the whole Kingdom of Scotland. He was burned to death in his kitchen at Halkirk by a mob of infuriated farmers after he had increased the tax. Adam (1817/8–74) another of the engineering family, of whom a portrait exists. He married Agnes, daughter of plumber and slater Walter Grieve, and she died in 1891, aged 75. Their children included: Janet, who married James Davidson, who worked for Patons, spinners in Alloa; Helen (b.1844); Agnes; another Agnes; Walter (b.1849); Maggie (b.1853); Lizzie; Isabella; and Jennie. He is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. Helen (19th C.) listed as milliner or dressmaker in Slater’s 1852 directory. J. (d.1814) resident of Macksdie. His death is recorded in Hobkirk Parish. James (b.1767/8) born in Ratho, Midlothian, he was an engineer who came to Hawick from Berwick in the 1810s and founded the local firm James Melrose & Sons in 1815. Their premises started in Brougham Place (shown on Wood’s 1824 map) and moved to Slitrig Crescent. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He is listed as a millwright and machine maker at ‘Woodyard’ on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory, and was still there on the 1841 census. The firm produced much of the machinery for woollen mills in the South of Scotland. He is recorded as a joint proprietor with his son James in the 1837 electoral roll. In 1837 he was listed simply on the High Street. He is said to have invented the piecing machine (for joining the ‘rovings’ in preparation for spinning) in Hawick in 1844, which was adopted throughout Scotland, as well as in England, and as far afield as Russia. In 1851 he was at 1 High Street (although clearly the east end of the High Street was meant) and ‘Jas. Melrose & Son, millwrights, East end’ is listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1808 he married Helen (or ‘Nelly’) Hardie in Eccles, Berwickshire. Their children included: Elizabeth (b.1810); and John (b.1815). He was still alive in 1851. James (d.1862) from Hawick, he became foreman of the Keysham Steam Factory in Devonport. He married Janet Easton, who died in Hawick in 1886. He is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. John (15th C.) recorded in 1493 as tenant in ‘quithalch’, when he was allowed to ‘compone’ for stealing cows from the Frisells near Peebles. It is unclear which of the Whithaugh’s or Whitaugh’s he lived at, but his surety was Robert Scott of Whitchester. John (c.1815–89) son of James, he ran the family engineering firm. He was born in Berwick. He was a Town Councillor for Slitrig Ward until 1867. He was Chairman of Hawick Gas Light Co., and member of the Parochial Board. He was also on the original Hawick Bowling Club committee in 1854. In 1851 he was at 5 Brougham Place and at 14 Slitrig Crescent in 1861. He donated a communion cup from the Green Kirk to the Museum. He married Catherine Easton. Their children were: Eliza (b.1841); James (b.1843); Helen Hardie (b.1845); William (b.1847); Margaret (b.1850); John (b.1853), who became Hawick Provost; and Catherine (b.c.1855). John, C.B.E. (b.1853) son of John and Cathering Easton. He grew up in Hawick, where he was taught for a while by James Murray. He ran the engineering company James Melrose & Sons. He was on Hawick Town Council for Teviot Ward from 1898 and was soon elected a Magistrate, then was Provost 1902–1919, being Hawick’s longest serving Provost. He was said to be a man of few words, but an untiring public servant. A large number of improvements were carried out during his Provostship, including the Boer War.

Memorial, the Quater-Centenary, the Corporation Swimming Baths, Anderson Sanatorium, the Fire Station, acquisition of Moat Park and the move of the Museum to Wilton Lodge. In 1906 he was the first Provost to wear the robes, with chain and badge of office. He was Chairman of the Common Riding Committee and the Ceremonial Committee, Chairman of the Home-Coming and Pageant Committee, one of the original members of the Callants’ Club and an early President. He was also Chairman of the local Military Tribunal during WWI, for which service he received the C.B.E. He was Unionist in politics, Chairman of the Hawick Gas Company and Teviotdale Dairy Co., Governor of Hawick Savings Bank, member of the District Board of Control and a J.P. He married Grace Franch Taylor, who came from Lauder. On his retirement he was presented with a portrait by George Fiddes Watt, R.S.A., which is now in the Town Hall. He lived at Hopehill, is buried at Wilton Cemetery, and Melrose Court is named after him. He can be seen in a film clip of Baden-Powell’s visit to Hawick in 1910. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’) Rieve in Roberton in 1794. Their children included: Robert (b.1795), baptised in Roberton; and Janet (b.1805), baptised in Galashiels. The 1795 baptism was by law in Kelso Parish’. William (15th C.) witness in 1454 to a charter in Wilton Parish. He is recorded as ‘Willelmo Melross’. Most of the other witnesses were local men. William (d.1908) brother of Provost John, he was a partner in Melrose’s engineering firm, having served as apprentice under his father and uncle. He was on the School Board, associated with the Archeological Society, a Director of the Hawick Gas-Light Company and a member of the East-Bank Church. He had been taught by J.A.H. Murray and was one of the first people in Hawick to take up cycling. He installed the first electric generator in Hawick, which ran at Tower Mill, and provided electric lighting to William Elliot’s house at Teviot Lodge.

Melrose

Melrose Abbey (mél-roz-aw-bee) n. Abbey in the town of Melrose, founded by David I around 1136, with Cistercian (also known as ‘white’) monks. This followed an earlier monastery built at Old Melrose, in a loop of the Tweed, about 2½ miles downriver. It was founded around 650 by St. Aidan, with St. Boisil and St. Cuthbert also Priors there. This building was burned in 839, slowly fell into decay and was abandoned by the 11th century. The new abbey was dedicated to St. Mary and was headed by an Abbot. The town of Melrose grew up around the Abbey. The ‘Chronicle of Melrose’ is a historical record compiled by the monks, covering the period 731–1264, and including the consecration of St. Mary’s in Hawick in 1214. The Abbey held the right of patronage of Hassendean Parish from the late 12th century until the Reformation. They also held extensive pieces of land throughout the Borders, including a large chunk of Ettrick (according to a charter of around 1235) and Ringwood, an area in southern Cavers Parish, as first recorded in 1360. Their lands were erected into a free regality in 1358. Around the same time there was confirmation of the Abbey’s right to the annual rents from the sheriff courts and justice courts of Roxburghshire. Walter Scott of Branxholme was appointed Bailie of their lands in 1519, confirmed in 1524/5; this included ‘Melrosland, Ettrickheid, Rodonaland, Eskdalmuir, Ringwoodfield, Est Tevidall and Vgynys’. The Abbey was frequently damaged during Border skirmishes, being burned in 1322, when Abbot Peebles was slain by Edward II’s men. Robert the Bruce gave a huge sum for its rebuilding. Lands gifted to the Abbey about that time included some in the Borthwick valley. Burned again in 1385, it was rebuilt in the 15th century, and burned again in 1545. Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme apparently dismantled much of it in 1569 (according to a court case of 1573), claiming he had carried off the materials to save them from the English. The abbey was finally destroyed in the Reformation, and the lands were administered by a Commendator. After many changes of lands the lands (including the Kirks of Hassendean and Cavers) were formally resigned in 1609, becoming part of the Lordship of Melrose. The parish kirk was constructed over the nave in 1618. Thomas Hamilton became Earl of Melrose and gained the lands of the Abbey in 1619, and later they passed to the Scots of Buccleuch. Records of the Regality of Melrose, pertaining to the former Abbey’s lands preserve some important local information. The Abbey was built in red sandstone, including fine tracery, with much intricate carving surviving. It was extensively restored in 1822, at the expense of the Duke of Buccleuch, under the supervision of Sir Walter Scott. Alexander II is buried here, as well as allegedly the heart of Robert the Bruce, after being carried back from the Crusades. More local connections include that St. Cuthbert is said to have Melrose’s (mei-róz-ü-zëz) n. butcher’s shop also run as a hostel by Mrs. Melrose in the early 19th century. It was located at the eastern side of the Tower.

Melrosian (mei-róz-ëe-un) n. someone from Melrose, also the name of the principal of the Melrose festival.

melt (mel-tith) n., arch. the spawn of a male fish, melt.
meltith (mel’t) n., arch. the molt, male reproductive gland of a fish, arch., poet. a meal, food, sustenance – ‘Thaye sail fa’ bie the sword; thaye sail be ane mellteth for the tods’ [HSR], ‘…an’ that was ay when ye gaed him a gude melltith – a nicht’s hudgin’ an’ a pileek meal away wi’ him in the mornin’’ [BCM1880].

Melville (mel-vil) n. David (1660–1728) 3rd son of George, Earl of Melville. He became 3rd Earl of Leven in 1681. He came over to Scotland with the army of William of Orange in 1688. Along with his father, he helped deal with the affairs in Scotland for Anna, Duchess of Buccleuch, who was half-sister of his mother. There are several letters in existence from her to him in the period 1696–1702. Holding several high offices, he was appointed a Commissioner for the Union in 1706, was a Representative Peer 1707–10, but dismissed from all offices in 1712. George (1636–1707) 4th Lord and 1st Earl of Melville. He was an advisor of the young Duchess of Buccleuch, taking care of her affairs in Scotland. Accused in the ‘Rye House Plot’ of 1683, he fled to Holland. He returned to Scotland after the Revolution and became Secretary of State for Scotland. He and his son continued to deal with the estates of the Duchess, but after her return to Scotland in 1701 she started to suspect that they had worked in their own interest, and the legal disputes took until 1711 to resolve. He is portrayed as Henry Morton in Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Old Mortality’. He married Catherine, only daughter of Lady Margaret Leslie and her 1st husband, Lord Balgonie; she was a step-sister of the Duchess of Buccleuch. He was succeeded by his son David, who was also Earl of Leven. James of Halhill (d.bef. 1714) son of Sir James of Halhill and Burntisland. His great-grandfather, also Sir James, was author of the ‘Memoirs of His Own Life’. In 1694 he served as a Commissioner for assessing the rentals for the Duchess of Buccleuch. In 1696 John Scott of Synton and Sir Francis Scott of Thirlestane had a bond with him. Rev. John (17th C.) from the Mearns, he graduated from Aberdeen in 1667. He became minister at Ewes Kirk in about 1682. However, he was deprived in 1689 for refusing to give up Episcopalianism.

mem (mem) n., arch. ma’am, madam – ‘I dinna ken how much whisky they took, mem, but they’ve drucken sax gang o’ watter!’ [V&M], ‘‘Deed, then, mem’, said she, ‘I wain’t hire with that condition: for I wadna gie the crack i’ the kirk-yaird after, for a’ the rest o’ the service’ [WiS].

Members o’ Parliament (mem-burz-ôt-par-lim’n) n. Members of Parliament, elected by voters in a constituency to represent them in the House of Commons. This system grew out of conventions of the minor barons, which started about the 15th century, but without specifically representing a region. From the 16th century counties had representatives to the Scottish Parliament, called Commissioners; there were 2 of these at a time throughout the 17th century, with an additional 2 appointed in 1690, and the last term being 1702–07. The families of Douglas of Cavers, Pringle of Stichell, Elliott of Stobs, Elliot of Minto, McDougall of Makerstoun, Scott of Langshaw, Ker of Greenhead, Scott of Ancrum, Riddell of that Ilk, Bennet of Grubet, Scott of Woll, Scott of Gala and Elliot of Headshaw all represented the county. A surviving document of 1628 describes how the Sheriff was unable to get anyone to agree to be a Commissioner, even after 4 meetings! For the Parliament of 1621 the Commissioners were the Sheriff himself (Sir William Douglas of Cavers) and (Andrew) Riddell of that Ilk, while for the 1633 Parliament it was again the Sheriff and (perhaps Walter) Riddell of that Ilk. The appointment of Commissioners to the Parliament of Charles and William during the chaotic 17th centuries is hard to track, and it may be that men were appointed in place of others (hence the list below may not be accurate in this period). The first Westminster Member of Parliament for Roxburghshire was in 1708. Before 1832 there were very few local electors, for example the number in Hawick was only 2 or 3 out of the 143 voters in the county of Roxburghshire in 1812. Hawick people were extremely active in pushing for electoral reform and the extension of political franchise. After the 1868 Representation of the People (Scotland) Act, a new constituency, the Hawick (or Border) Burghs was set up, including the boundaries of Hawick, Galashiels and Selkirk. Hawick’s M.P. was thus separate from that of Roxburghshire until this seat was dissolved in 1918. The constituency was called ‘Roxburgh & Selkirk’ 1918–55, then merged into ‘Roxburgh and Berwickshire’ 1983–2005 and is now Berwickshire, Roxburgh & Selkirk. A list of Hawick’s M.P.s. is: Thomas McDougall of Makerstoun 1597; Sir John Ker of Hirsel 1605, 1607; Sir William Cranston 1608; Sir William Douglas of Cavers 1612, 1617, 1621, 1628–33, 1639–40, 1644, 1645–46, 1650; Andrew Riddell of that Ilk 1617, 1621; John Haliburton of Muirhouselaw 1625; Sir William McDougall of Makerstoun 1625; Sir Walter Riddell of that Ilk 1628–33, 1646–47, 1650; Sir James Kerr of Hundalea and Crailing 1630; John Rutherford of Hunthill 1630; Sir Walter Riddell of that Ilk 1633; Robert Pringle of Stichill 1639–41; William Elliott of Stobs 1640–41, 1643, 1645–47, 1650–51; Sir Thomas Ker of Cavers 1643–44, 1648–49; Sir John Ker of Lochtoun 1644; Sir Andrew Ker of Greenhead 1645, 1648–49; William Kerr of Newton 1646–47, 1656–58; Gideon Scott of Highchester 1650; Sir Andrew Ker of Greenhead 1658–59, 1669–74; Sir Archibald Douglas of Cavers 1661–63; Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs 1661–63, 1667, 1669–74; John Scott of Langshaw 1665; Henry McDougall 1665, 1678, 1681; Robert Pringle of Stichill 1678, 1681–82; Sir William Ker of Greenhead 1685–86, 1702–07, 1707–08; Sir Patrick Scott of Longnewton and Ancrum 1685–93; Sir William Elliott of Stobs 1689–93; Sir William Douglas of Cavers 1690–98; Sir John Riddell of that Ilk 1690–1700; John Scott of Woll 1693–1702; William Bennet of Grubet 1693–1702, 1702–07, 1707–08; James Scott of Gala 1698–1702; Archibald Douglas of Cavers 1700–02, 1702–07; Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto 1702–07; Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs 1708–15; William Douglas of Cavers 1715–22; Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto 1722–26; Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs 1726–27; William Douglas of Cavers 1727–34; John Rutherford of Edgerston 1734–42; William Douglas of Cavers 1742–47; Walter Scott 1747–65; Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto 1765–77; Sir Gilbert Elliott (later Earl of Minto) 1777–84; Sir George Douglas of Springwood Park 1784–1806; John Rutherford of Edgerston 1806–12; Gilbert Elliot-Murray-Kynynmound (later Earl of Minto) 1812–14; Sir Alexander Don of Newton 1814–26; Henry Francis Hepburne-Scott (later Lord Polwarth) 1826–32; George Elliot (Captain R.N.) 1832–35; Lord John Douglas Montagu-Douglas-Scott 1835–37; John Edmund Elliot of Belses 1837–41; Francis Scott of Mertoun House 1841–47; John Edmund Elliot of Belses 1847–59; Sir William Scott of Ancrum 1859–68; George Otto Trevelyan 1868–86; Alexander Laing Brown 1886–92; Thomas Shaw 1892–1909; Sir John Nicholson Barran 1909–18; Robert Munro (later Baron Alness) 1918–22; Sir Thomas Henderson 1922–23; Walter John Montagu-Douglas Scott (later Duke of Buccleuch)
Mem Dyce

memorial (me-mo-rul) n., poet. a memorial – ‘...an’ thy memorall, O Lord, throweowt a’

The Memory Bank (thu-me-nu-ree-hawng) n. the Scottish Borders’ Memory Bank was set up as a Millennium project to collect and record memories of life in the Borders, started in 1998 and co-ordinated by Wendy Ball. Several Hawick citizens have been taped and transcribed.

menage (nu-naj) n., arch. a benefit club of neighbours or workers, particularly a scheme, generally among women in the early and 20th centuries, where those joining paid a fixed amount every week (plus perhaps a small commission going to the treasurer for managing the fund) for 20 weeks and a draw was made to distribute the total each week. In the late 1800s the contribution might be 1 shilling, with the £1 total given out randomly each week. The practice may still be carried out in mills today, with larger sums involved, and sometimes individuals arranging to be near the beginning or end of the draw – ‘...joining a ‘menage’ was as stupid a thing as going to the pawnbroker ...’ [JTu] (from French; noted by E.C. Smith, but already a thing of the past by then; cf. teedly).

mend (mend) v., arch. to fully recover from an illness or injury (different meaning from standard English; noted by E.C. Smith; see also mends).

mender (men-dur) n. a person who makes minor repairs to the stitching of garments in the knitwear industry after being found by a ‘looker’. Good practitioners of this art are ‘invisible menders’.

mendit (men-dee’, -di’) pp. mended – ‘The hurlie at ei mendeet the trams o’ [ECS].

mends (mendz) n., pl., arch. recovery, healing – ‘On the way o mends = to be convalescent; progressing towards recovery of health’ [ECS] (cf. mend).

meng (meng) v. to smell, stink, pong, arch. to mix among filth, n. a smell, stink, n., arch. human excrement (also ming).

Menie (me-neec) n. diminutive of the name ‘Williamina’ – ‘O where is tinye Hewe? O where is little Lennie? And where is bonny Lu? And Menie o’ the glenne?’ [JTe].

menna see menni

mennent (men-en) n., arch. a minnow – ‘Christopher North’ uses baggie-mennon, an approximate combination of two Hawick terms. Ramsay has mennin’ [ECS] (also written ‘mennant’ and ‘mennet’).

menni (me-ni, -na, -nu) contr. mustn’t, must not, may not – ‘ee menni dae’d’, ‘Yow yins that’s keinda perjink menna be ugget at iz for aa this’ [ECS], ‘An’ wei menna forget that in the vast majority o’ the tenements in the toon the kitchen had tae ser’ as the bedroom as weel’ [BW1938] (also written ‘menna’; cf. mauni).

men’s baa (menz-baw) n., arch. handball game formerly played in Hawick on the Monday preceding the game in Jedburgh (held on ‘Eastern’s’ E’en’, i.e. Shrove Tuesday, or the day before Lent). It was distinguished from the ‘callants’ baa’, which was played on the preceeding Saturday.

mense (mens) n., arch., poet. manners, decorum, respectability, honour, dignity, hospitality – ‘You now will see an altered chield, Wi’ sense, and mense, and wisdom filled’ [JoHa], ‘That wum-man hes naether sense nor mense’ [ECS], ‘Never heed! oo’l heh baith oor oat an oor mense (said when a cordial invitation has been declined)’ [ECS], ‘For she had baked a crumpie cake And butter scones, for mense’s sake, To entertain her lodger’ [HSR], ‘Then, licking my chops, I thought that the Auld Testament had muckle mense ...’ [DH], ‘God gie us mense this Christmas To fluff intil a lowe ...’ [WL], ‘...A han-tle o’ mense to oor dull heids send’ [WL], credit, sense of pride – ‘For Bosells hes muckle mense o’ her Green!’ [ECS], ‘Her family hae muckle mense o’ her’ [GW], someone who is a credit, respect – ‘She’s the mense o’ the family’ [GW], ‘Hei’s a gleg callant; ee heh muckle mense o un’ [ECS], reward, recompense – ‘...And a’ the prayers the poor fool pray’d, I wish I had a mense for my aine ky. Menslaws (mens-laws, -les) n. farm just north of Spittal-on-Rule, near where the Rule Water joins the Teviot. There was once a quarry there, which supplied stone to Hawick, among other place. It may be the ‘menskles’ where Gilbert Law had grain stolen by Adam Grahamslaw, according to a case of 1502. It is probably the ‘Mensles’ listed among the lands of the Stobs estate purchased by Gilbert Elliott from his half sisters in about 1608. In 1623 the lands were granted to the Kers of Cavers-Carre and later the farm at ‘Menseless Pathhead’ was part of the Cavers estate. It was among lands owned by Sir Thomas Ker in 1643, valued at £357. It was among lands inherited by John, son of John Kerr of West Nisbet in 1684. William Brown was there in 1687. Also in 1687 5 acres of land there were listed among lands inherited by Sir William Douglas of Cavers and by his brother Archibald in 1698. James Riddell was recorded there in 1745. Before 1786 the farm was owned by William Black, his lands being stated in 1788 to have been valued at £263 16s 3d, including the 2 husbandlands at the ‘waulk-mill’. The farm then passed to the Bells; William Bell had a new house built there about this time and was recorded as owner of 5 horses there in 1797. In the 1811 Land Tax Rolls it was recorded being owned by Robert Bell, and valued at £264. Land steward Mark Turnbull was there in 1851. In 1860, a year after the death of George Bell, it was sold to Thomas Cockburn, then owned briefly by a Mr. Turnbull, before being bought by Robert Cunningham, Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch. Thomas Riddell was there in the 1860s. The tenants of the house in the early 20th century were 2 sisters called Peter. There was once a quarry there, supplying stone for buildings in Hawick and Jedburgh. A burial cist was found there, north of the farm, at the edge of the Teviot flood plain; 2 Hawick boys discovered it in 1960, James Wallace and Michael Turnbull, and it was excavated by the Archeological Society the following year, revealing an adult and juvenile skeleton and triangular flint point. The remains are in the Museum (sometimes ‘Mainslaws’, the name is probably from the Old English ‘gemænes leah’, all sorts of farm produce sold. In general the market area was around the Cross until the late 18th century, with 80–120 stalls extending along the High Street, selling everything from housewares and food to meat and coal. The sheep market was recorded being at the Sandbed in 1700. The general market moved to the Sandbed for a few decades, and shifted to the Tower Knowe in 1815 with the construction of the New Road. It was stated in 1839 that the number of carts coming to the town for a market day was about 170. The cattle market (and hiring fair), a right of the Duke of Buccleuch, took place in early November until the end of the 19th century. The Auction Mart, at what is now Mart Street, dominated the sale of livestock through the late 19th and much of the 20th centuries. In the 20th century the Saturday market was held near the Auction Mart and is now in the Big Haugh – ‘To fair or maret she walked alone. At best, the lasie was unco plain’ [WL] (also spelled ‘merket’, etc.; cf. mairket, mairt and mert).

the Mercat Cross (theu-mer-ki'-kros) n. Market Cross, denoting the place at which markets were held, formerly the site of Hawick’s cross. It was also sometimes referred to as the ‘fleshmarket cross’. In Hawick this was near the Town Hall, at the junction of the roads to Edinburgh, Jedburgh, Newcastle and Carlisle. It is referred to in 1514 as ‘cruccm foralem’ when part of the ceremony for giving Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig the Barony of Hawick was carried out there. It was extant in 1542, when a proclamation was read from it, and presumably there earlier. In 1545 it is among the market crosses to which a proclamation about Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme was to be attached. There is a record in 1715 (when it is referred to as the ‘common mercat crose’) that it was to be repaired and several other records of it being mended from about 1724 on. During the 18th century it is recorded that a proclamation was made there on the day of the Common Riding, describing what parts of the Common were to be used for cutting peats and for making ‘bakes’, etc. It was demolished in 1762 during road improvements, the shaft and capital apparently being sold off for 11/6. The removal took 2 labourers 2 full days. The base of the Cross was inverted, sunk into the pavement nearby, had an iron ring attached, and until about 1781 was used for bull-baiting and for displaying criminals as a public spectacle. It was then removed to near the Teviot, where it was used for tying skins to be washed in the river. The stone was rescued when Teviot Road was built in about 1860 and moved to the Museum at Orrock Place and later to the Buccleuch Memorial. William N. Kennedy wrote an article on the Cross in 1863, stating that the base was made of Whitrope Burn sandstone. In 1927 the Cross was reconstructed beside the Museum, using a modern shaft and a capital (perhaps 17th century, probably the one discovered at Abbey Sike in Castleton). However, the capital was moved inside after the Cross was vandalised in 1985. A plaque (placed around 1946) marks its original position near the bottom of the Cross Wynd, which was named for it. Here also the proclamation to the Burgesses is made by the Burgh Officer, warning them all to attend the Riding of the Marches or pay a hefty fine. For centuries this advertisement for the Common Riding has been called out on the Thursday here. In former times the Burgess Roll was also called here on the Friday before the Riding of the Marches. Other notices would be fixed to the Cross in former times, e.g. lists of those accused of being Covenanters in the late 17th century, and the ‘Chevalier’ was proclaimed here in 1715. Thieves were sometimes made to stand at the cross on market day, with their crime written on a piece of paper stuck to their forehead. This punishment continued into the early 19th century. In addition the town stocks were once located next to the Cross – ‘...the said Adam Gowanlock brought the said meir to the mercat-crose of Hawick the said day to be apprised ...’[BR], ‘...in respect it was publicly done at the mercatt cross, in presence and in the hearing of divers famous witnesses’[BR1685] (note that Market Crosses were rarely ‘cross-shaped’, usually consisting of a shaft crowned with a carved emblem as capital; it is unclear what was carved on the capital of Hawick’s original Cross).

the Mercat Gait (theu-mer-ki'-gā) n. former name for a road in Ashkirk. It is recorded in 1580 that it was on the west and north sides of Wollhaugh.

Mercat Place (mer-ki'-plis) n. Market Place, name used for a while in the 19th century for an area including Tower Knowe and Drumlanrig Bridge over the Slitrig, which was used as a market place. It is so labelled on Wood’s 1824 map and also used in Slater’s 1852 directory.

Mercer (mer-sur) n. Janet nee Reid (b.1799/1800) from Hawick, she was a wool sorter living at about 7 Allars Bank in 1841. She listed as a coffee-house keeper on the Cross Wynd in 1851, living with her grandchild Mary E., as well as 5 lodgers and a female servant. She may be the Jane who had worked as a servant with the Halliburton family in the West End, contracting cholera in 1832, but recovering. Robert W.S. (1797–1875) lawyer in Edinburgh. He was son of James of Scotsbank. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825 and so presumably had a local connection. He was a Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries. He married Elizabeth, daughter of William Scott-Moncrieff.

merch (merch) v., arch. to set a boundary, particularly by laying down markers – ‘The said day, Allane Deanes, travellour, being accusit for not being at the ryding and merching of the Commoun ...’ [BR1645].

merch *(merch) n., v. march – ‘Oh the grand auld Duke o York, hei hed ten thousand men, hei merched thum up ti the top o the hill, an’ ei merched them doon agin’ [T], ‘It depends on what direction they hev ti turn when they come out the toon hall ti merch ti the new Cornet-Elect’s hoose’ [We], ‘Hogg was sid ti hev been part o the Hawick contingent thit merched ti Selkirk that fatefi day in 1815 ...’ [IHS] (cf. mairch).

Merchamston see Merchiston

merchand (mer-chind) n., arch. a merchant, shopkeeper, trader, itinerant salesman – ‘Item, that ilk merchand that buys cuntie gier with trone wecht, sall sell it again in small with the lyik wecht ...’ [BR1640], ‘The hail council having taken into their consideration the wrong and abuse committed by the merchands and others of the burgh of Hawick ...’ [BR1662], ‘...for cutting of William Elliot, merchand, with ane sword in ye head’ [BR1669], ‘...and voted Thomas Hardie, merchand, to be ensigne and to carrie the colour’ [BR1706], ‘...John Young, merchand in the toon for his disorderlie and irregular marriage ...’ [BR1706].

merchant (mer-chin’) n. formerly a shopkeeper and member of the merchants’ incorporation in the Town, now used as a suffix to denote someone who is overly fond of a particular activity – ‘hei’s a right patter-merchant that yin’.

Merchant (mer-chin’) n. nickname for William Oliver in the 16th century.

merchants (mer-chints) n. the shopkeepers and traders of Hawick collectively. They were not one of the 7 ‘incorporated trades’ in the Burgh, but must have had some kind of status as a body. In 1687 the ‘Incorporation of Merchants’ bought ‘ane Holland brasen trone’ (i.e. brass weight) to be used as a new standard in Hawick, and also arranged for ‘ane elwandel’ (i.e. measuring rod) made of iron to be made the same length as the standard one in Jedburgh.

Merchelyton Burn (merch-li-tin-burn) n. stream that rises on Harden Moss and flows roughly southwards past the farm of Mabonlaw to join the Harden Burn south of Harden Glen. Part of it is labelled White Cleugh on the Ordnance Survey maps (the name suggests it marked a boundary at one time; it is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

the Merchinburn (thu-mer-chin-burn) n. Merchinburn, former name for a stream in Liddesdale, where it is recorded that Walter de Bolbeck established a hermitage dedicated to St. Mary to pray for the souls of him and his wife Sybilla. This was probably the original Hermitage Chapel, which led to the stream being later known as the Hermitage Water. The hermit was called William ‘de Mercelye’, and the date is unknown, but must have been before 1206. The second monk from Kelso was called Roger, and he was granted land beside ‘Heluckyesters’ (probably in Temple Healey) some time before 1229 (the name suggests a boundary between properties, but it is unknown what these may have been; the name does not appear on any map, and was completely superseded by ‘Hermitage’).

Merchinlee (mer-chin-lee) n. former name for lands on the Hermitage Water. William ‘de Mercelye’ was granted a hermitage there by Walter de Bolbeck some time before 1206, this probably being the original Hermitage Chapel. It was set up for 2 monks from Kelso Abbey, the other being ‘Roger monk of Merchingley’ who was later granted 26 acres of land beside Heleychesters (probably in Temple Healey) by Hugh de Baliol, some time before 1229. The lands are described as ‘from the Merchinburn on the one side, by a circuit from the Tile Ford on to the Ford where the Stanesden Burn (possibly the Roughley Burn) descends to the Merchinburn’ (also written ‘Merchelea’).

Merchiston (mer-chi-, -chum-stin) n. James (d.c.1527) recorded as Rector of Hawick in 1504. 2 years earlier he is recorded receiving payment from the court of James IV for a young horse brought by him from Flanders. He was listed as a Chaplain of Glasgow Diocese in 1505, although the parish is not named. He also appears to have received more senior appointments in the Diocese in 1511. In 1512 he was designated Provost of the Collegiate Church of Corstorphine and lived on Edinburgh High Street, so probably ceased to be associated with Hawick before then. Also in 1512

he was one of the Auditors of the Treasurer’s Accounts. His name appears in various Edinburgh deeds in the period 1512–18 (also written ‘Merchamston’, ‘Merchainston’, etc.).

mercifi (mer-see-fi) adj., arch. merciful, temperate (of weather) – ‘The weather on the Friday had been mercifieth bit a damp Setderday had cut the attendance at the Sports’ [BW1974] (also written ‘mercifieh’).

merk (merk) n., arch. an old Scottish silver coin worth thirteen shillings and four pence (two-thirds of a pound) Scots, or about 13 shillings and ½ pence sterling – ‘...the soyme of forty lib. and fourtene merkis, gude an vsuale money of Scotland ...’[SB1510/1], ‘...the two hundred merks allowit by the Earl of Queensberry and debursed be the town of Hawick ...’[BR1644], ‘...9000 merks to the schoolmaster, and the rent of the 1600 merks to the poor of the parish’[PR1714], ‘Whip her in, whip her oot, Sax merks in a clout’[JP].

merkit (mer-kee’, -ki’) adj., pp. marked – ‘A cood wale oot Rule Waeter’s coorse feine, – merket wui raws on raws o treis’[ECS], ‘Says I tae um was this man ony way merkeet so as tae be recognised’[JEDM] (also written ‘merkeet’).

merkland (merk-lawnd) n., arch. a piece of land originally assessed at one mark value (common in pre-18th century land documents).

merle (me-rol) n., poet. the blackbird, Turdus merula – ‘Where the merle from his liquid throat Can melodize the dean’[JTe], ‘...And over future prospects talk, And hear the merle cry’[JoHa], ‘I have seen the merle, when we robbed her nest, Haunting the hazel in hopeless quest ...’[WHO], ‘The soun’ o’ her mirth is the merle’s clear sin’gin’, Bewitchin’, the saft smiles that dimpls her mou’’[WL].

Merlin (mer-lin) n. semi-mythical poet-warrior of the 6th century, referred to as ‘Merlins Cambdonensis’ (‘Merlin of Caledonia’) and ‘Myrddin Wyllyt’ (‘Merlin the Wild’) in several Old Welsh and later sources. He is the most important prototype for Merlin of the Arthurian legends. He is said to have been born at Cærwerthevin (perhaps Carnwarth) and was present at the Battle of Arderydd (probably Arthuret or possibly Ettrick) in 573, where he killed his own nephew, driving him mad and into seclusion in the forests of southern Scotland. He was said to have been buried at Drumelzier in Tweeddale. Geoffrey of Monmouth around 1150 wrote about his supposed life and prophecies. John Leyden included notes on him in ‘Scenes of Infancy’ – ‘Such strains the harp of haunted Merlin threw, When from his dreams the mountain-sprites withdrew’ [JL].
Merrylaw

Merlin Dean (mer-lin-deen) n. wooded stream that rises on the eastern slopes of Black Law in Bedrule Parish, joining the Greypeel Burn and eventually flowing into the Jed Water.

Merlin’s Cleuch (mer-linz-klooch) n. probable name of a small stream on Penchrise farm (mentioned in Robert Grieve’s diary in 1861).

merl (me-rul’, -rult) adj., arch. mottled, mixed up in colour (also merled and merly).

merly (mer-le) adj., arch. mottled, parti-coloured – ‘The plantins and ploughed rigs dinkin’ its merlie-merkit braes’ [ECS], ‘A merly sheep, hen, cat, etc.’ [GW] (also spelled ‘merlie’; cf. merlit).

merr see mer

merrer (me-rur) n., arch. someone who steers the course of farm animals, the ‘gaurd’ in a ‘yoke-a-tullie’ – ‘A guid (or skeely) merrer’ [GW] (cf. mer).

merry dancers (me-ree-dan-surz) n., pl., arch. heat haze, the effects of turbulence in the air on a hot day, described by J. Jamieson as ‘The exhalations from the earth in a warm day, as seen flickering in the atmosphere, Roxb.’.

Merry Knowes (me-ree-nowz) n. hilly area just to the north-east of Whitslade farm, to the south of Whitslade Hill. A local version of the ballad ‘Ewe-buchts’ (or ‘The Broom o’ Cowden-knowes’) states that they are part of Whitslade – ‘Come round about the Merry-Knowes, my Marion, For Whitslade is lying lee’ [T] (also written ‘Merry-Knowes’).

Merrylaw (me-ree-law) n. farm along the road leading south-west from Teviothead, lying close to the source of the Teviot, on the south side. It was home of a branch of the Scotts and also Turnbuls, who were tenants at Falnash. The earliest known owners were Elliotics, holding the lands of their feudal superiors the Douglases. It appears to have been joined with Carlenrig in the valuation of 1678, but was separated in 1788 when valued at £133 6s 8d. It was ‘Mirrilaw’ owned by the Elliotts of Stobs at the end of the 17th century. However, it appears to have been in the Barony of Cavers when Sir William Douglas succeeded as Baron in 1687. It was among lands inherited by Sir William Elliott from his father in 1692. About 1694 ‘William Scott in Merrylaw’ was tenant of Elliott of Stobs. Walter Scott of Merrylaw was renting part of Whithope in 1698 and he was an elder of Roberton Kirk in the early 1700s. David Scott was there in at least 1708–24, James Murray in 1724, John Laidlaw in 1749 and John Telfer in 1755. William Goodfellow was tenant there in at least 1784–90. William Scott of Merrylaw was minister at Kirkpatrick-Juxta. Walter Scott of Merrylaw was a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1809. He was probably the Scott of Merrylaw who was listed as owner in 1788 (and still listed in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls). William Goodfellow was tenant there for about 50 years in the late 1700s and early 1800s. James Dryden (d.1820) was shepherd there. There were Hopes there in 1841. It was owned by Turnbuls in the mid-to-late 19th century and bought by the Strang-Steel family about 1920. The Martins farmed there in the early 1900s and the Tullies were there from 1935 until the mid-1960s. The farm lay within Cavers Parish until the formation of Teviothead Parish in 1850. The lands are now mainly planted with trees – ‘Maps . . . skurled wi’ odd scales o’ troot Frae Merrylaw to Meggat . . . ’ [DH] (first occurring in 1830, it is transcribed ‘Murlaw’ in 1687, ‘Merrilaw’ in 1692 and 1694, ‘Mirrielaw’ in 1698, ‘Merriela’ in 1708, 1709 and 1713, ‘Mirrilaw’ in 1724, ‘Mirrielaw’ in 1730 and ‘Mirrilaw’ in 1749; the origin of the first part of the name is obscure, but probably connected with Merry Naze and Merrypath Rig).

merry-meat (me-ree-mee) n., arch. a meal to celebrate the birth of a child – ‘The merry-meat was right good cheer’ [JoHo].

Merry Naze (me-ree-näz) n. hill lying to the south of Lairhope farm, west of Falnash, and not far from Tanlaw Naze. It is probably the lands called ‘Murrynese’ in the Barony of Hawick, which were explicitly listed among the lands held ‘in property’ by the Baron in 1511, and among the lands inherited along with the Barony in 1572. There was once a farm near here, home to the son of Elliot of Falnash in 1562. Archibald Elliot ‘of Mirrieneis’ was recorded in 1598. In 1627 the farm was estimated to ‘pay 40 lb. in stok, and 8 merk in teynd. The ‘maynes lands’ there are listed among the lands for which Anna, Duchess of Buccleuch was superior in 1686. The lands were sold by Thomas Scott of Falnash to Henry, Duke of Buccleuch around 1760 (marked ‘Mirrieneys’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; it is probably ‘Murrynese’ and ‘Murinese’ in 1511, ‘Murynes’ in 1514, ‘Merynes’ in 1562, ‘Murynes’ in 1572, ‘Merryneis’ in 1615, ‘Merryneis’ in 1627, ‘Merrenies’ in 1686 and ‘Merrynes’ about 1760; the first element of the name could be Middle English ‘mirrie’ for merry, but may have another origin in common with Merrylaw and Merrypath Rig, while the second element is Middle English ‘nese’, being a projecting nose of land.
Merrypath Rig

Merrypath Rig (merr-pawth-rig) n. ridge between Merrylaw and Ewes Doors, the summit reaching a height of 382 m. There is a linear earthwork, about 150 m long, which is crossed by the course of the old road from Ewesless to Caerlenrig (it is marked ‘Meddop petth’ in Blaeu’s 1654 atlas).

the Merse (Thu-mers) n. Eastern Border country, generally corresponding to Berwickshire, or a slightly larger area including the entire plain of the Tweed. It is usually synonymous with the Scottish East March – ‘A Merse mist alang the Tweed. In a harvest monrin’ guid indeed’ [T], ‘Roxburgh huddles her shattered shell In the folds of her mossy plaid; Gazing at ease o’er the meadowed Merse, Hume towers, in her green arrayed’ [WL].

mershal (mer-shul) n., v. marshal. At the Common Riding the Marshals are experienced riders appointed to check that the road is clear for the Chase, ensure the safety of the riders on Ride-outs, etc.

Mershall (mer-shul) n. (Marshall) Alfred (19th C.) married Margaret, daughter of Thomas Murray and Mary Scott. His wife was younger sister of Sir James ‘Dictionary’ Murray. Their children included Mary Isa (1880/1–1961), daughter of Alfred and Margaret Murray. Her mother was a sister of James ‘Dictionary’ Murray. She was a teacher at Drumlanrig School for about 25 years. She was also a keen member of the Hawick Liberal Association. She was the oldest member of the Archæological Society at the time of her death. She lived at 6 Elm Grove. She died in hospital at Melrose. Robert (b.1826/7) from Scone in Perthshire, he was a builder in Hawick, with the firm Marshall & Ballantyne. They were responsible for the renovations to St. Mary’s Kirk in 1863. He donated an old coin he found there to the Museum. In 1861 he was living at Ladylaw Place with his wife Ann and children John, Robert, Frances Elizabeth Ann, James Young and Jessie Young. Stuart (1963/4–) born and bred in Hawick he became a local Councillor and was Honorary Provost 2013–17. He has also been involved with Escape Youth Cafe, the Hawick Flood Group and many other local organisations. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. William (16th/17th C.) resident of Riddell. In 1621 James Scott, indweller in Selkirk, was summonsed at Mervinslaw in 1709. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His son Alexander died in Hawick in 1778. He could be the James who married Margaret Murray in 1774 and whose children included Katherine (b.1775), John (b.1782) and Alexander (b.1785). Jason (1970–) Hawick man who started working for the Hawick News in 1986, later working for the Tweeddale Press. He became Editor of the Hawick News in 2007. John (d.1815) recorded as father of Mary and Jean and was unhitched in Hawick in 1815. John (b.1782/3) tobacco manufacturer in Hawick, recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. He lived at about 20 High Street in 1841 and 1851. He was unmarried and lived with his sister Catherine. John (1801–74) head of the local builders’ firm John Marshall & Sons, which was responsible for several prominent buildings. They built the new Teviot Bridge in 1865 and the factory for Lyle & Scott in 1874/5. John (19th/20th C.) assistant Burgh Surveyor in Hawick, working under John Manuel. In 1894 he was appointed District Surveyor for Norfolk District Council and presented with a gold watch chain and cuff-links by the Town Council on his departure. Katie (19th C.) proprietor of a tobacconist’s shop at 20 High Street in the mid-19th century, which gave its name to the adjacent close. She lived in the property along with her brother James. Mary Isabella G. ‘Isa’ (1880/1–1961) daughter of Alfred and Margaret Murray. She was a sister of James ‘Dictionary’ Murray. She was an editor of the Hawick News for about 25 years. She was also a keen member of the Hawick Liberal Association. She was the oldest member of the Archæological Society at the time of her death. She lived at 6 Elm Grove. She died in hospital at Melrose. Robert (b.1826/7) from Scone in Perthshire, he was a builder in Hawick, with the firm Marshall & Ballantyne. They were responsible for the renovations to St. Mary’s Kirk in 1863. He donated an old coin he found there to the Museum. In 1861 he was living at Ladylaw Place with his wife Ann and children John, Robert, Frances Elizabeth Ann, James Young and Jessie Young. Stuart (1963/4–) born and bred in Hawick he became a local Councillor and was Honorary Provost 2013–17. He has also been involved with Escape Youth Cafe, the Hawick Flood Group and many other local organisations. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. William (16th/17th C.) resident of Riddell. In 1621 James Scott, indweller in Selkirk, was summonsed to appear before the Lords of Council and Session for stealing his horse. William (19th C.) partner with John in the local builders firm. He was probably John’s son. He made donations to the Museum in the 1860s (also formerly ‘Marsel’, ‘Merces’, ‘Mersall’, ‘Mersel’, and ‘Mersell’).

Mershall’s (mer-shulz) n. John Marshall & Sons, a large local building firm, significant in the latter part of the 19th and early part of the 20th centuries. They were responsible for the Teviot Bridge (1865), Henry Scott Riddell Memorial (1874), Lyle & Scott’s factory (1874/5), Town Hall (1884-86), and the Brown Fountain (1910). Their yards were on the west side of Commercial Road and before that on Slitrig Crescent. They also had an interest in the Blaxter Quarry in Northumberland.

Mershall’s Close (mer-shulz-klös) n. Marshall’s Close, a passageway at 20 High Street in the mid-19th century. It was located to the west of the Crown Hotel, between 2 small shops, and named after the tobacconist’s run by Katie Marshall.

Merten see Mertin

Mertimes (mer-tee-mes) n. former version of Martinmas – ‘…for the Witsounday and MERTymes male of the landis of Lempetlaw …’ [SB1574] (also formerly Mertimes).

Mertin (mer’-in, mar-tin) n. (Marten or Martin) A. (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. Adam (17th C.) one of 3 men fined in 1642 for their animals eating the oats of Gilbert Watt, the Town Clerk. He is probably the same ‘Adam Mairtene’ who was one of the men who appraised horses in Hawick for the Covenanter army in 1644. He could be the Adam, married to Margaret Gordon, whose children baptised in Hawick included James (b.1634), Agnes (b.1642), Janet (b.1644) and Helen (b.1647), or the Adam, married to Margaret Weens, whose daughter Bessie was baptised in 1648. Perhaps he is the Adam who (along with Alexander) witnessed a baptism for James. He could be the Adam who witnessed a baptism in 1671 for Margaret (perhaps his daughter) and William Renwick. Adam (17th C.) carrier in Hawick recorded in 1673 on the list of men named in the trial for the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. Perhaps the same Adam married Anna Henderson in Robertson (actually Has Sendean) in 1687 and had a daughter Margaret baptised in 1688: the baptismal witnesses were John Martin and Thomas Henderson (who were probably related to him and his wife). Andrew (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1716 he married Margaret Martin, both being described as ‘servants in Goldielands’. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at Clarilaw in 1724 and 1727. In 1737 he witnessed baptism for James Dryden and for Robert Easton, who both lived at Clarilaw. He married Margaret Crozier and their children included: John (b.1717); Janet (b.1720); Marion (b.1722); James (b.1724); and James (again, b.1727). The witnesses in 1724 were Thomas Irvine and William Easton and in 1727 were James Blyth and W. Graham. Andrew (d.1892) ‘Drew’ Cornet in 1971. For his Acting Father he selected Bruce Mactaggart, who had been Cornet in 1954, with his own father John as Acting Father. His year is remembered as one of the wettest in memory; the Principals’ clothes were dried out in the oven’s of his father on the Friday night so they would be ready for the Saturday. Elliot H. (19th C.) artist living in Hawick in the latter part of the 19th century, running the Hawick School of Art on Wilton Hill. Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (17th C.) listed ‘eist the water’ among those paying the Hearth Tax in Hawick in 1694. Bailie George (17th/18th C.) merchant of Hawick. He witnessed a baptism in 1700 for gardener Gideon Gardner (and was there ‘merchant’, but not recorded as Bailie). He was listed as Bailie (although this probably meant ex-Bailie) when he witnessed baptisms in 1702 for tailor John Scott, for Bailie Walter Graham and for merchant Patrick Angus. He also witnessed baptisms in 1703 for herd James Glendinning, in 1704 for merchant Michael Scott, for merchant William Dickson and for John Turnbull (‘oye’ to Rev. James Ker), in 1705 for merchant William Oliver and for Bailie Walter Graham, in 1706 for workman John Shiel, for shoemaker Robert Oliver, for Walter Paterson in Burnflat, for workman John Renwick and for Robert Rutherford, in 1707 for smith George Scott, Thomas Gledstains, merchant ‘Black Walter’ Scott, gardener James Dunn and William Gledstains, workman in Whitlaw, in 1708 for David Young and for John Rae, in 1709 for merchant William Dickson, for baker Adam Richardson and for weaver William Hill, in 1712 for John Chisholme ‘Laird’, and in 1714 for weaver George Wight. Based on all of this, it seems likely he served as an Elder in the Kirk. The witnesses to his daughter’s baptism in 1704 were glover John Hart and merchant Thomas Waugh. He was the person who purchased the new Flag in 1707 (now the oldest one in existence) in Edinburgh, at a cost of £10 14s. He was still on the Town Council in 1707 (when a fine was imposed on the 2 acting Bailies). He was an ex-Bailie on the Council when the bond was granted (dated 1710, but recorded in the Town Book in 1711) to provide money for the Master of the new Grammar School. He witnessed further baptisms for John Ekron in 1716 and 1723, for workman William Inglis and for shoemaker Walter Lethem in 1721, for carrier John Tait and for John Fairgrieve in 1726, for merchant Robert Howison in 1730, and for Robert Aitken in 1731. His first wife was Grizel Oliver and their children included: Christian (b.1701); George (b.1702); Bessie (b.1704); Anna (b.1706); Helen (b.1708); Janet (b.1709); Thomas (b.1712); and Jean (b.1714). The witnesses in 1701 were Glover John Hart and Bailie Walter Graham, in 1702 were Bailie Patrick Richardson and Glover Holm Hart, in 1704 were Glover John Hart and merchant Thomas Waugh, in 1706 were Bailies Walter Graham and Patrick Richardson, in 1708 were Gideon Scott of Falnash and Bailie Walter Graham, in 1712 were miller Walter Paisley and weaver David Miller, and in 1714 were Bailies Walter Elliot and Robert Rucastle. He married Elizabeth Ker (widow of James Wastoun) in ‘Haddock hole’ Edinburgh in 1719; he was then described as ‘late bailie of Hawick’. He was probably the Bailie Martin who was an elder charged with collecting money from ‘ye Cross upon both sides of ye toune even unto the bridge’ in 1717 (suggesting he lived in this area perhaps) and being one of the elders charged with resolving the dispute between Bailies Rucastle and Graham in 1718. His son Thomas became a skinner’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1738 and his daughter Jane (possibly born in 1714) married David Greg of Edinburgh in 1743. George (18th C.) teacher at the ‘English school’ in Selkirk in 1744. Helen (17th C.) resident of Midlem. In about 1684 she was on a list of Covenanters fugitives. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Cowan and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1648. The witnesses were Alexander and Adam. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Bessie White. Their son James was baptised in 1648. James (17th C.) farmer at Branzholme Town in 1671, when there were 7 tenants recorded there. His name does not appear in 1675. There were Jameses born in Hawick Parish in 1634, 1639 and 1647, any of which could be him. He may be the James, married to Rosie Richardson (a family who also farmed at Branzholme Town), whose daughter Helen was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1677, and who may also have been father of Malie, baptised in 1673 (with no mother’s name given, but witnesses John Richardson and Patrick Scoon). James (17th C.) recorded at Appletreehall in 1682 when one of his children was baptised in Roberton Parish. He married Marion Liddersdale and their children included James (b.1682). The witnesses were Walter Scott and Walter Armstrong. He is probably the James who (along with John) witnessed a baptism for William Macomie in the Hassendean part of Roberton Parish in 1688. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Janet Lamb in 1752. He is probably the James who witnessed a baptism for Thomas Douglas at Clarilaw in 1772. Janet (18th C.) resident of a house on the farm of Muckle Whitlaw. It was described in 1767 in the description of the perambulation of the Common, this being a house where the boundary passed over. Johan (19th/20th C.) granddaughter of tailor Robert. She was known as a poet and painter. John (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘John Martyn in Braxholme’ in the Register of the Privy Seal of 1504 when he received remission for his crimes. This seems to have been connected with the crimes of William Scott ‘in Hawick’ and John Scott ‘in Wilton’, who received pardons a few years earlier. He is probably an ancestor of the same local family after whom ‘Mertin’s Brig’ is named. John (16th C.) tenant at Braxholme Town in 1574, as described in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Braxholme. He is listed as ‘Johne Martene in Banxholme toune’. He is surely related to the John who was tenant in the same place half a century later. John (16th/17th C.) described as ‘Jon Mairtene in Branzholme toune’ in 1623 when he (and 3 other local men, from Chapelhill, Priesthaugh and Craik) were surety for ‘Hob Cowane in Ailmure’. John (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, when it contained Hassendean. His name appears to be written ‘Mortine’ (and hence could also be ‘Morton’). He married Agnes Porteous and their children included: Marie (b.1679); and Bessie (b.1681). The witnesses in 1681 were Adam Sanderson and John Martin (who may have been his father). He is probably the John who (along with James) witnessed a baptism for William Macomie in the Hassendean part of Roberton Parish in 1688 and who witnessed a baptism for Adam in 1688. John (17th C.) listed at Crumhaugh among ‘The poor in Hauick Paroich’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the John who was married to Margaret Elliot, and whose children baptised in Hawick Parish included Charles (b.1675), Helen (b.1682), Walter (b.1685) and Andrew (b.1688). He could be the John who witnessed a baptism for tailor John Wilson in 1680. John (19th C.) owner of the farm of Firth in about 1874, according to the Land Tax Rolls. John P. baker who was Cornet in 1938. He served as Acting Father to Bruce Mactaggart in 1954. Mactaggart was in turn Acting Father to his son Drew. Margaret (17th C.) resident of ‘Barnknow’. In 1680 she was found guilty of attempting to steal a pair of shoes from a Selkirk stall-owner at Hawick Market. She was sentenced to be ‘punished in her person and goods’. Mrs. ?? (18th/19th C.) recorded at Minto House on the subscription list for Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. She was presumably a house-keeper or governess. Robert (16th/17th C.) surety for ‘Hob Cowane in Ailnure’ in the Circuit Court records of 1623, along with John Martin (presumably a relative), Simon Wilson (in Priesthaugh) and William Cowan (in Craik). Robert (b.1821/2) from Jedburgh, he was a tailor who lived at Howdenburn. He was there in 1851, when he employed 1 man, and was also there in Slater’s 1852 directory. He married Mary Hunter, daughter of ‘Kittlin Soup’ and their children included Margaret, James, Mary and Thomas. They were grand-parents of local poet and painter Johan Miller. Simon (16th C.) holder of 2 particates of land on the north side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. Thomas (15th/16th C.) tenant in part of the lands of Fulton in Bedrule Parish in 1615. He is recorded as ‘Thomas Martene in Fultoun’. There was a complaint by Stewart of Traquair in 1619 that the Turnbulls of Bedrule were attending the General Assembly. He wrote a description of Langholm Parish for Sinclair’s Statistical Account. Thomas (b.c.1813/4) born in Canonbie, he was a cooper in Newcastleton. He was listed among heads of households for the first time in 1838. He was listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. He continued as a cooper until the 1850s. He lived at about 2 South Hermitage Street. He married Janet Udale and their children included: Anne (b.1836); Isabella (b.1837); William (b.1839); and Robert (b.1841). Rev. Walter (c.1631–76) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1651, he is recorded as schoolmaster in Hawick in 1657, his surname then spelled ‘Martaine’. In that year Robert Howitson was ordered to pay him ‘19 merkis Scots for byegane quarter wages due to him for teaching of his sons in the schole several quarters bygane’; this suggests that he had been a teacher in Hawick for at least a couple of years previously. He was again recorded in 1665, as ‘Mairteen’. Later that year he was recommended to be licensed to preach, and he became minister of Abbotrule in mid-1666. Since he was an Episcoplain replacement for the exiled former Covenanting minister, it is unclear if he was popular in his parish. He was responsible for reporting a Covenanter from his congregation to the authorities, resulting in the man being sentenced to conscription as a soldier, and instead paying a £100 alternative fine. A ‘gift of his bastardy’ was given by the King to his widow Barbara Skinner (or Kinnear) in 1676. Walter (17th C.) resident of Coliforthill on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Walter (17th C.) tenant in the Flex. He witnessed a baptism for Robert Stoddart (in Flex), along with William Henderson (also in Flex) in 1674. He is probably the Walter whose wife Margaret Scott’s will is recorded in 1687. Their children included Thomas (b.1673) and an unnamed son (b.1675). He may have been father of the later Walter in the Flex (or else he had a second marriage late in life). Walter (17th/18th C.) tenant in the Flex. He is so recorded in 1700, although his name is listed as ‘Walleam’, which is likely an error. He is probably the Walter who witnessed a baptism for wright John Dalgleish in Hawick. He married Agnes Nixon and their children included: William (b.1700); Walter (b.1702); and Margaret (b.1705). The witnesses in 1700 were Francis Gledstains of Whitlaw and William Nixon and in 1705 were William and Francis Henderson, smiths at the Flex and Francis Paterson, also at the Flex. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Alton Croft in 1700. He was recorded there as tenant in 1702. His wife was Margaret Glendinning and their children included: Margaret (b.1700); John (b.1702); Esther (b.1704); Helen (b.1707);
James (b.1710); and Janet (b.1714). The witnesses in 1700 were gardener James Falsyde and Walter Scott in Goldielands and in 1702 were Andrew Riddell in Goldielands and Walter Riddell in Allanhaugh Mill. It is unclear how he might have been related to the Walter who was at the Flex at the same time (but they were clearly distinct, with their children being baptised on the same day in 1700). Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jane Leyden and their children included: Euphan (b.1777); Samuel (b.1784); and Betty (b.1786). The witnesses were the Associate Congregation. Perhaps the same Walter was recorded at Broomhill in Hawick Parish on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. William (15th C.) tenant in Whitchester who is mentioned in 1493. Jock Elliot (from Caverton) had remission for several crimes, including stealing 3 sheep from him. It seems likely that he was related to the later Martins of the area. William ‘Willie’ (16th/17th C.) tenant in Branxholme in 1628 when he was on a list of men accused by the Earl of Buccleuch of chopping down his trees at Todshawhaugh or Trinitylands. William (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, or probably the Hassendean part. He married Bessie Turnbull and their children included: Andrew (b.1680); James (b.1682); and Margaret (b.1687). The witnesses in 1687 were William Young and Thomas Caldwell. In 1683 he witnessed a baptism for Adam Craig. William (17th/18th C.) recorded being ‘servant in Winnington ridge’ in 1719 when he married Margaret Douglas, daughter of a carrier in Hawick. He was in ‘Rige’, i.e. Winningtonrig when his son William was baptised in Kirkton Parish in 1720. He is probably not the same man as William, resident of Over Southfield. William (17th/18th C.) farm servant at Over Southfield. He was ‘servitor in over Southfield’ in 1713 and recorded still living at Over Southfield in 1720. He was also recorded as servant to John Goodfellow in Over Southfield in 1712 when he married Helen Nichol from Hawick Parish. His wife may have been the daughter of William Nichol and Janet Gray baptised in Hawick in 1688. Their children (also baptised in Hawick) included: Walter (b.1713); John (b.1718); Walter (b.1720); Janet (b.1722); and Robert (b.1723). Janet (b.1714) and William (b.1716) were probably also his children. The witnesses in 1713 were John and William Goodfellow in Over Southfield and in 1720 were Walter Scott and William Goodfellow. William (17th/18th C.) recorded at Parkhill in 1722 when his daughter Janet was baptised in Roberton Parish. It is possible this was somehow a second baptism for the daughter of William and Helen Nichol. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jean ‘Clemison’. Their unnamed child died in Hawick in 1816 and their daughter Isabella was baptised in 1824. Rev. William Stewart (1793/4–1857) from Crawford in Lanarkshire, he was educated at Edinburgh University and licensed by Jedburgh Presbytery in 1823. He became minister of Kirkton in 1834, where he remained until his death. He wrote a description of the Parish for the New Statistical Account in 1838; it is the shortest of the local entries. He could regularly ride over the hill to take services at Cogsmill Schoolhouse. He lived at the Parish Manse with a servant and never married (early spellings include ‘Mairteen’, ‘Mairten’, ‘Mairtene’, ‘Marteine’, ‘Marteen’, ‘Martene’, ‘Martine’, ‘Martyn’, ‘Mertei’, ‘Merten’, ‘Mertene’, ‘Merton’, ‘Mertyn’, etc.).

Mertinmas (mer'-in-mis) n. another name for Martinmas – ‘Dedicat til a man (syne deid) wha spiered: ‘Hev ee been writin ony hairy poetry, lately?’ Mertinmas. 1969’[DH] (also formerly Mertimes).

Mertin’s Brig (mer'-inz-brig) n. Martin’s Bridge, over the Teviot just south of town, marking the beginning of the B711 road to the Borthwick, and named for its proximity to Martin’s House. It was built in 1826, providing a more direct route to the Borthwick valley from Hawick. It is a popular end-point for walks. In the field to the west of here, linear field markings have been seen in aerial photographs, probably old field boundaries or ditches – ‘Doon by mony a knowe and knoll, Branksholme, Martin’s Brig, the Toll, ’...’[TK].

Mertin’s House (mer'-inz-hoos) n. Martin’s House, a farmhouse near Martin’s Bridge, marking the end of the Goldielands-Langbaulk section of the road south, before the New Road was built in 1815. The farmers recorded there in 1797 were William Scott and John Scott. John Scott was farmer there in 1841 and William Fulton in 1851. The front elevation of the house is towards the hill, since the main road used to pass there – ‘Martin-House’s hint side is now its fore side, and the real auld front is round about at the back’[V&M] (also written as one word, its origin is uncertain, since no ‘Martin’ is recorded there, Merton’s Sym (mer’-in-sim) n. nickname of Simon Elliot of Phillhope, son of Martin of Braidlie.

Merton (mer-ton) n. John (13th/14th C.) Archdeacon of Teviotdale from 1395. He exchanged this position with Gilbert Mouseald before 1404. He is referred to as ‘de Merton’.

Mertoun (mer-toon) n. parish in the south-west part of Berwickshire, divided by the Tweed from Melrose, St. Boswells and Maxton. It contains Mertoun House, Bemersyde and Dryburgh Abbey. The Scotts of Harden formerly possessed the Barony of Mertoun.

Mertoun Hoose (mer-in-, mer-toon-hoos) n. mansion house on the Tweed near St. Boswells, built in the early 18th century by Sir William Bruce for the Scotts of Harden. Sir William Scott of Harden acquired Old Mertoun House (still existing) around 1649, and the second Sir William made it the main family seat (with his brother Sir Gideon of Highchester taking up residence at Harden itself). The family moved back to Harden in 1912. A former house was burned by Hertford’s men in 1545. Mertoun Kirk, dating from 1658 stands on the estate, with the churchyard containing the burial vault of the Scotts of Harden. The gardens are open to the public, and contain a dovecote dating from 1576 (it was formerly ‘Merton’ and variants).

mervellous (mer-ve-lis) n., poet. marvellous – ‘Shaw thy mervellous loein-kindniss … ’[HSR], ‘Ca’ til mind his mervellous warks that he has dune … ’[HSR].

mervil (mer-vil) adj., arch. inactive in both body and mind (noted by J. Jamieson).

Mervinslaw (mer-vinz-law) n. farm in the north-east part of Southdean Parish, off the western side of the A68. The modern farm is to the west of Camptown, off the side road that leads to Roughlee and Falside. The older farm was probably further south, nearer to the ruined peel tower. Jedforest Deer and Farm Park is on Mervinslaw Estate. It may be the ‘Sherwingle’ (with various spelling transcriptions) given in the founding charter of Jedburgh Abbey in the mid-12th century, when one third of the lands were gifted to the Abbey by Christina, wife of Gervase Riddell. The estate was once held as part of the fee by the office of Bailie of the Regality of Jedforest. Robert Waugh was tenant there around 1500. The ruins of the pele there have dimensions about 8 m × 4 m, within walls almost 2 m thick, and probably date to the late 16th century. It was described as the 8 steadings, valued at £10 in the Exchequer Rolls in 1538 and 1539. James Oliver, William Oliver, Margaret Oliver (his mother), Marion Craighill, James Craighill (her son), David Stobs, Elizabeth Hunter, John Wedderburn, William Oliver (alias ‘Merchant’) and James Waugh were listed as tenants there in 1541; it was split into 7 separate steadings, with total yearly payments of £1 6s 3d. It is possible that ‘William Ollyver of Myrleslawe’ and ‘Ranyon Ollyver of the same’, included in a 1544 list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII, may have been from here. The tenants in 1669 were John ‘Wach’, Thomas ‘Olipher’, Mrs. ‘McFeison’, James ‘fforsett’, John ‘Waderburn’, ‘Ritchart’ and John Curle and James ‘Olipher’. The will of John Aitken in Mervinslaw is recorded in 1683. Robert Oliver was there in 1685. In 1694 the residents were Thomas Miller, John Hill, Thomas Walker, Thomas Curle, Margaret Waugh and Margaret Young, as well as Jean Frissell listed among the poor of the Parish. Robert Davidson was there in 1790–92. In 1797 William Turnbull, Charles Scott and John Scott were there, with Thomas Thomson at ‘Marvenslaw Mains’. Adam Buckham was shepherd there in 1797. Thomas Scott was farmer there in the mid-19th century. The land was purchased by John Lang in 1923. Jack Waterstones was the occupier in the mid-20th century. The hill ‘Mervins Law’ reaches 255 m (836 ft) to the south of the farm. Near where the Peel Burn meets the Jed Water the 1863 Ordnance Survey map shows a building and some enclosures. A mediaeval sword pommel found there is in the National Museum of Antiquities (it is probably the ‘Xernwingslawe’ or ‘Hernwingslawe’ listed in the 1165 charter of Jedburgh Abbey as being opposite the chapel at Old Jeddart; it is ‘mervynnis law’ in 1502, ‘Mervynslaw’ in 1538, ‘Merwinysslaw’ in 1539, ‘Mervenslaw’ and ‘Mervenlaw’ in 1541, ‘Mervinslaw’ in 1571/2, ‘Mervingslaw’ in 1582, ‘Mervingslaw’ in 1669, ‘mervinsla’ in 1704 and ‘Marvinslaw’ and ‘Marvenslaw’ in 1797; Blaeu’s c.1654 map shows the tower at ‘Mervinslaw’, as well as farms at ‘Nuik’, ‘Banck’ and ‘Hauch’ to the south; note that there was once a farmstead of the same name in Wilton Parish).

Mervinslaw (mer-vinz-law) n. former farmstead in Wilton Parish, lying near the hill Mervins Law, once part of the estates of the Scotts of Whitehaugh. There is a record of it being sold by Roger Langlands of Wilton to William Inglis.

of Langlandshill in 1512. It was to be held for one penny ‘blench-fern’, payable yearly at Pentecost in Wilton Church. There were 7 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650, namely William Miller, Marion Langlands, Helen Miller, Robert Hogg, William Gotterson, Christian Morton and Margaret Gotterson. John Riddell was cottar there in 1694. Walter Cavers was there in 1697, Francis Scott in 1704, William Graham in 1705 and Helen Hislop in 1707. In 1709 Andrew Marshall was tenant, John Scott was tailor there and John Rule was shepherd. Francis Elliot was living there in 1721 and James Noble in 1751 (it may sometimes be confused with the farm of the same name in Southdean Parish and Mabonlaw in Wilton Parish; it is ‘Mervynnislaw’ in 1512, ‘Mavinslaw’ in 1707 and ‘Marvinislaw’ in 1709; it is marked ‘Marvin’s Law’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Mervins Law (mer-vinz-law) n. hill a couple of miles west of Hawick, between Whitehaugh and Calaburn farms. The farm of ‘Mervinslaw’ was once near there (it is marked ‘Marvin’s Law’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Mervinslaw Toor (mer-vinz-law-toor) n. ruined, but well-preserved, 16th century peel tower, about 5 miles south of Jedburgh on the Peel Burn. It is quite far south of the modern Mervinslaw farm, on the southern slopes of Mervin’s Law. It still has 2 stories and a garret, and measures about 8 m by 6.5 m. Each storey is one unvaulted room, and the top level must have been reached by an internal ladder. Below is a D-shaped excavation of some sort and on the surrounding slopes are the remains of 3 separate buildings.

Mervinswud (mer-vinz-wud) n. former lands in Jedforest, listed in a rental roll of 1541, next to Mervinslaw. William Hunter was tenant and the lands paid 12s 6d yearly (‘Mervenniswod’ in 1541).

mese (mees) v., arch. to mellow, mature fruit by forcing (noted by J. Jamieson; also written ‘meise’).

mess (mes) n., arch. a quantity of food set on the table, a portion of food given to a guest, food or meal served to a group of people together – ‘Frugal temperance urged no cesses, Birthday rates nor bailsies’ messes’ [JH].

messenger (me-su-jer) n., arch. a messenger, officer who delivers official letters – ‘...as ane messenger quha sall assur zou of the performance of quhatsumeuer was conclusit ...’ [SB1584].

messages (me-su-jeez) n., pl. errands, shopping – ‘A’m away ti get the messages then’, ‘Wull meet (met) n., arch. measurement, standard unit – ‘...and twa firlots malt gud and sufficiant stuf...viz. of the met of the burcht of Jedburgh’ [SPB1579], v. to measure, ‘to met the belt’ referred to a supposed divining practice of witches – ‘...and that scho mett the belt for seeke per- sons affirming if the belt crape [crept] in thair is danger of death if it crap not in thair is no danger’ [SPB1628].

metaphysics (me-ta-fee-ziks) n., poet. met-physics – ‘When the yin that’s listenin’ doesna ken what the yin that’s talkin’ means; and when the yin that’s talkin’ doesna ken what he means himsel’...that’s metapheesics!’ [DH].

Metcalf (met-lawf) n. John, M.B.E., from Hawick, he was Chairman of the Borders branch of the Multiple Sclerosis Society. He held the Borders position for 13 years, retiring in 2003, and was Scottish Chairman 1994–97. He received the M.B.E. for sevices to the Multiple Sclerosis Society in 2003.

metheglin (me-the-glin) n., poet. a spicy mead – ‘Then drink the pure metheglin of the bee, The heath’s brown juice, and live or perish free!’ [JL].

metter (me-tur) n., arch. a measurer, particularly applied to the act of preparing to cast spells mettled

– ‘Compeired Issobell Howsetson in Riddell ane being ... as a common chairmer and a metter of the belt’ [SPB1628].

mettled (met-uld) adj., arch. high-spirited, ardent, mettlesome – ‘The Cornet and his merry men On mettled steeds are prancin’’ [JT], ‘The heroes are marshalled, the mettled steeds are bounding’ [JT], ‘...That glorious chase on mettled steeds By lads wha aye were free’ [WLau], ‘His mettled wife, inured to strife ... ’ [MG].

Mettlin Well (met-lin-wel) n. spring between the farms of Netherraw, Greenhouse and Raperlaw. There was an agreement for its use between the neighbouring farms in 1909.

Mey see Maye

Meyrle (mā-rul) n. lost place name near Brancholm, mentioned in the 1420 description when half the lands of Brancholm were granted to Robert Scott of Rankilburn. The description includes ‘the half of the lands of the Meyrle, and the two cottage lands on the west side of the said river of Branchemell in the barony of Hawick’. The precise location is uncertain, since even the ‘river’ mentioned is ambiguous, although perhaps the stream running through Brancholm Glen is meant (note that the pronunciation is unclear).

mibbe (mi-bee) adv. maybe, perhaps – ‘there’s mibbe twae or threi better yins’, ‘All mibbe gaun’, ‘A said ‘mibbe’, and that’s final!’ (cf. the less common mebbe and older mibbies).

mibbies (mi-bee) adv. maybe, perhaps – ‘Mibbes oo should look closer at Mother Nature’ [We] (also spelled ‘mibbes’; cf. the older mebbies).

Michael (mi-kul) n. (11th/12th C.) probably of Cumbrian origin, he was nominated as Bishop of Glasgow by David, brother of King Alexander of Scotland. His consecration by Archbishop Thomas of York was sometime between 1109 and 1114. He filled a position that had been vacant for a long time. However, it is unclear if he ever played a significant role in the Diocese, or ever visited Teviotdale.

Michael Graham’s (mi-kul-grā-umz) n. cobbler’s shop on Silver Street through much of the 20th century – ‘...Pies and peas at Bruciana’s and tuckets at Michael Graham’s ... ’ [AY].

Michaelmas (mi-kal-mis) n. important date in the calendar of former centuries, being a feast day of the Archangel Michael, held on the 29th of September. Around the 16th century, this was one of the 3 times a year that the head courts would meet annually, specifically the 1st Tuesday after Michaelmas. It was once the date on which Hawick’s Bailies were annually selected – ‘...payable at Michellness nixt, for the use and behoove of the said towne’ [BR1707]. ‘In the Michaelmas moonlight, weird and tall The watchman stood on the peel tower wall’ [WHO].

Michie (mi-čhee) n. Alastair (1921–2008) eldest son of Ann Redpath, he was born in France, but moved to Hawick with his family in 1934. He attended the High School and received a scholarship to study architecture at the Edinburgh College of Art. However, war intervened, and he became an R.A.F. pilot, later working as an illustrator and graphic designer. He became a self-taught painter and sculptor at the age of 40, after seeing an exhibition of American abstract expressionists. He lived in Dorset and married Hazel Greenham and secondly Sally Greasley. The Hawick Museum has at least one of his paintings.

Alexander (b.1764) probably son of John, who was the first Michie of Old Northhouse. His eldest son was John. Alexander (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Betty Potts in 1797. He was probably father of Alexander and Robert of the Archaeological Society. Alexander (18th/19th C.) slubber with William Wilson. In 1797 he was sent to Galashiels for 10 months to learn the trade and he returned to be the first slubber in Hawick. He could be the spinner of that name who went to America, and when he returned in the 1840s there was a big celebration in the Fleece Inn, hosted by the Hawick Instrumental Band in which he had formerly played.

Alexander (b.1788/9) originally from Aberdeen, he was a gardener in Hawick. He is recorded at about 59 High Street in 1841 and 1851 (when he was a widower). Margaret, who was an unmarried seamstress in an adjacent house, was probably related. Alexander (b.c.1795) mason who lived at Branxholme Bridgend in 1841. He may have been brother of William and Robert. His wife was Jean and he probably had a daughter Jean, who married Robert Archibald. Alexander (1813–1886) brother of Robert, he was also a skinner in Hawick. He was living on the Cross Wynd in 1841, with the family of millwright Gideon Scott. In 1851 he was listed on Orrock Place as a master skinner, employing 3 men. He must have been partner with another skinner, since ‘Scott & Michie’ is listed at Teviot Square in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1861 he was at 4 Orrock Place as a master skinner employing 5 men. He may later have moved to Galashiels. He was a founder member of the Hawick Archæological Society, being the fourth official member. He acted as Museum Curator for the Archæological Society in the early 1860s. He also wrote some anonymous poetry, such as ‘Auld Moat’s Address’, before he left Hawick in 1864 to live in Galashiels. As a youth he was a great athlete, regularly appearing at the Innerleithen and Mangerton games, excelling at running, leaping, hammer-throwing and ‘hitch-and-kick’. He may have been the same Alexander who served as first Treasurer for the Congregational Kirk. Later in life he wrote regularly in the local press about reminiscences of the Common Riding and related themes. He also wrote the introduction for the 1886 edition of Common Riding songs. He is supposed to have only missed a single Common Riding in his life. Much of the credit for the revival of the Common Riding in the 1880s is due to his letter-writing and powers of persuasion. As a result, he was invited as a special guest to all the events of 1886. Some of his articles on Hawick characters, printed in the Transactions, later appeared in Robert Murray’s book. He is probably the Alex recorded owning part of the former lands of Patrick Cunningham in about 1874. In 1845 he married Isabella Scott, who was a dressmaker. Their children included: James Cockburn (b.1846), who died young; Jessie Sibbald (b.1847); Elizabeth Pott (b.1851); Walter Francis Scott (b.1855); Susan Mary (b.1859); and Gideon Scott (b.1862), presumably named after the former millwright. A photograph of him exists. He also appears in a portrait (painted by John Guthrie) along with his brother Robert and William N. Kennedy. Ballie Alexander (b.1832) son of currier Robert. He was a Magistrate in Hawick, and should not be confused with the other contemporary Alexander, who was his uncle. He also served as Vice-President of the Archæological Society. He left for South Africa in 1879, with Frank Hogg first publicly singing ‘I Like Auld Hawick’ at his farewell dinner. He lived at Maraisburg, Transvaal. Andrew Rodgie (1806/7–54) builder in Hawick. He was one of the ‘Brigend Michies’, this family being raised in the Green Kirk, hence his middle name (and the fact that birth records are scarce for these Michies). It is said by James Haining that he had brothers Robert (a mason), John (building foreman in Edinburgh) and Hugh (of Laing, Michie & Graham), but Hugh seems more likely to have been his nephew; it is also unclear who their father might have been. He was listed on the Loan in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. He lived 19 Loan, according to the 1841 and 1851 censuses. In 1851 he is recorded as a master mason, employing 20 men, 4 apprentices and 8 labourers. His firm constructed the Old Parish Church and several other important buildings of the mid-19th century. His wife was Mary, and they had a daughter, Betsy. His nephew Adam Laidlaw carried on the business after his death. Andrew Smith (1844–1936) son of skinner Robert, he was born in Hawick. He worked for the National Bank of Scotland in Hawick and was transferred to Edinburgh in 1862, then London in 1866. In 1874 he moved to the Royal Bank of Scotland, being recruited as Deputy Manager in London. In 1889 he became sub-cashier in the bank’s Glasgow office and a year later was Cashier there. He retired in 1910, returning to London. He is buried at Rowledge in Surrey. He married Jessie Fraser in 1872 and they had children Arthur, Charles and Agnes. He published many articles on banking and revised James William Gilbart’s work ‘The history, principles and practice of banking’. Bruce raised in Hawick, he played in the baritone horn section of the Saxhorn Band. He trained in medicine, but continued to perform as a multi-instrumentalist woodwind player, based in Perthshire. He has played with The Walktalls, Martin Stephenson and Delta Mainline. Christopher Young (b.1829) born in Cavers Parish, son of John and Betty Young. It is said that as a child he was chased by the Devil in the form of a pig. He worked as a forester to the Countess of Seafield and contributed to the Transactions of the Highland and Agricultural Society. He was apparently offered the position of Factor at Balmoral, but declined. He wrote ‘The Larch: A Practical Treatise on Its Culture and General Management’ (1882 and 1885), as well as ‘Practice of Forestry’ (1888). David (19th/20th C.) apprentice with chemist John Craig, he became manager of the lemonade works, then partner, and sole owner from 1919. David A.R. (b.1928) youngest son of James and Anne Redpath. He became an artist, like his brother Alastair. He was born in France, but moved to Hawick with his family in 1934, attending St. Mary’s and the High School. He was an instructor in the Royal Artillery Signals Training Regiment, then studied at the Edinburgh College of Art. After travelling to Italy, he started on an art career that has included one-man exhibitions and prizes, being known for both oils and watercolours. He worked as a teacher at the Edinburgh College of Michie

Art, later becoming Head of the School of Drawing and later Vice-President. He was Common Riding Chief Guest in 1889 and had an exhibition at the Scott Gallery in 2009. He was awarded the O.B.E. in 1997 and is a member of the Royal Scottish Academy. George (18th/19th C.) agricultural worker, probably son of Alexander, from Slatehills. He married Margaret Turnbull and their daughter Jane married Thomas Rutherford, from Haysike. Hugh (b.c.1831) farmer at Slatehills. He may have had a brother called John, who was the first of the Michies of Old Northhouse. Hugh (18th/19th C.) farmer recorded at ‘Goldielands Bridge End’ in 1797. He was part of the family that farmed in that area for many generations. He may be the Hugh who married Margaret Telfer in Hawick Parish in 1787. Hugh (1830–91) said to be brother of Andrew Rodgie, Robert and John. However, he seems more likely to be son of mason Robert. He was partner in tweed merchants’ Laing, Michie & Graham. Later he opened a newsagent’s shop at 2 High Street, with the help of his daughter Margaret. He married Christina Dobson, from the wood merchants of Leith; she died at the age of 85. Their children include: Robert (b.1863), emigrated to Australia; Margaret Allan (1865–1932); George Dobson (b.1866); John Stewart (b.1869), tweed designer in Huddersfield, who retired to Folkestone; and Agnes Dobson (b.1873). John (18th C.) probably the first of the Michies of Northhouse. He may have been father of Alexander and brother of Hugh of Slatehills. John (18th C.) married Margaret Shiel in Roberton Parish in 1739. John (18th/19th C.) weaver of Old Northhouse. He may have been son of the earlier John and father of the later John. He could be the John who married Mary Douglas in Hawick Parish in 1790. He was one of the Volunteers who responded to the ‘False Alarim’ in 1804; when he went off with his gun his daughter is meant to have said ‘Shoot it ’eersel’, faither; ye’ll dae it cannier than the Frainch’. He had at least 2 daughters: Janet, who married Adam Easton, farmer at Overhall; and Margaret (1805/6–87), who married warehouseman Thomas Anderson. John (1788/9–1861) weaver at Old Northhouse in 1841. In 1851 he is recorded there as an ex-weaver, along with his wife, both as paupers at that time. He married Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’) Young, recorded in Cavers and Kirkton Parishes in 1821; she died in Denhollum in 1864, aged 78. Their children included: Jessey (b.1821–46); Isabel (b.1824); William (b.1826); Christopher Young (b.1829); Robert (b.1832); and Mary Ann (b.1835). He could be the John Michie of Hawick who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. John (b.c.1800) spinner in Wilton. He is listed among heads of households in 1835 at Dovemount and in 1840 and 1841 at Kirkstyle. He was also an Elder of Wilton Kirk. His wife was Jane and their children included Robert, Eliza and John. John (19th C.) probably brother of masons Andrew Rodgie and Robert. He became a foreman with builders Messres. Colvile of Edinburgh. John (1813–70) clerk in the Relief Kirk Session. John (19th C.) of the Victoria Tavern, Hobart, listed as a subscriber to the Common Riding in 1888 and 1889. Robert (b.c.1805) mason journeyman, living at Branxholme Bridgend in 1841. He was brother of William, who farmed there. He may also have been brother of Andrew Rodgie. He probably married Agnes Ann Smith and had children including Hugh (b.c.1831), Walter (b.c.1833), Elizabeth (b.c.1834) and John (b.c.1837). Robert (1807–1875) brother of Alexander (later of Galashields), and probably son of Alexander and Betty Pott. He was a founder member of the Hawick Archaeological Society, being its second official member. A great sportsman in his youth, he won the wrestling contest at the St. Ronan’s games at Innerleithen in 1831, as well as winning the ‘light ball’ event (probably throwing). At the Common Riding Games of 1834 he won the ‘ball throw’ event. He was a currier by trade, and was recorded as such on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was also listed as a currier on O’Connell Street in the 1841 and 1851 censuses, and appears in Slater’s 1852 directory, where he was a currier and leather cutter, as well as a Tanner and Skinner. In 1851 he was listed at 11 O’Connell Street (originally No. 6), as an employer of 1 journeyman and 2 apprentices. In 1861 he was at 6 O’Connell Street, master currier and tanner, employing 3 men and 1 boy. In 1846 he wrote to an American temperance leader, the letter being printed in a Boston newspaper, but then reprinted in Britain, getting him into trouble with the Hawick Free Church; a locally-published pamphlet attacked his abolitionist views. He gave a lecture on ‘Local Antiquities’ in 1856 (immediately after a lecture on Archaeology by George Webster), this being only the second lecture given at the Society’s meetings. He also gave a lecture on local hill forts in December of 1856 and one on Trimontium in February 1857. He was also on the Town Council. In the 1850s he was on the Railway Committee for Hawick District. He was one of the first Deacons of the Evangelical Union (later Congregational) Kirk, as well as one of the first Trustees. He was also one of the earliest members of the Hawick Total Abstinence Society, and well known for giving speeches on this subject, always in local dialect. He married Agnes Elizabeth (or Ann) Smith in Wilton Parish in 1830. Their children included: Grace (b.1830); Alexander (b.1832); Elizabeth (b.1834); Joanna (b.1836) and Joana (b.1838), who both died young; Thomas (b.1842); Andrew Smith (b.1841); Andrew Smith (again, b.1844); and Robert (b.1848). He appeared in a portrait (painted by John Guthrie) along with his brother Alexander and William N. Kennedy. A portrait of him alone was presented to the Archaeological Society by his son A.S. Michie on the occasion of the 1906 jubilee – ‘Guid Robbie Michie, noble man, First o’ the speechifyin’ clan’ [RDW].

Robert (b.1810/1) born in Cavers Parish, he was a shepherd in the Hawick area. He may be the Robert who was an agricultural labourer at Whitchesters in 1841. He is listed at Minto Kaims in 1851 and Hayside (in Wilton Parish) in 1861. His wife was Helen (from Minto) and their children included John, James, Janet, Mary, Rachel, Robert, Helen and Thomas. Robert (b.1832/3) born in Wilton Parish, probably son of spinner John. He was miller at Newstead near Melrose. His wife was Agnes and their children included John, William and Isabella. Robert (19th C.) first Captain of Hawick R.F.C., from 1873 for 4 years. Walter (1753/4–1816) undertaker in Edinburgh. He died in Hawick. William (1792–1885) from Old Northhouse. He emigrated to Canada, settling in Esquesing, Ontario, where he farmed and had a saw-mill. His wife was Margaret, and their children included: Thomas (1824–1901); Mary (1834–1902); Robert (b.1837); Alexander (1843–93); Ellen (1850–1901); George (1851–1918); Elizabeth (1853–1901); and William (b.1854). He died in Esquesing, aged 92½. William (1797/8–1862) farmer at Branxholme Bridgend. In 1841 the family were living at ‘Branxholme bras’, which may have been the same as Scatterpenny. In 1851 and 1861 he was at Branxholme Bridgend, farming 16 acres and employing one man. He contributed local information for the Ordnance Survey in about 1859. He married Isabella. They had 9 daughters, including: Margaret who became Mrs. Welsh; Wilhelmina (or ‘Mina’), who married baker John Campbell; Isabella; Mary; Beatrix, who married James Dewar; Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’); and Alexandrina. He is buried in old Wilton Cemetery.

Michie’s (micht-eez) n. Robert Michie & Son, tanner’s business in Hawick in the mid-to-late 19th century. They were situated on Buccheluch Street, by the River Teviot. In 1871 the firm estimated that it tanned 1,270 hides, producing over 21,000 pounds of leather.

Michie’s Brig (micht-eez-brig) n. another name for the Branxholme Bridge, across the Teviot at Branxholme Bridgend, named after the family which lived there for generations and who became builders in the early 19th century.

Michie’s Well (micht-eez-well) n. a former public water supply about half-way up Drumlanrig Square, above the Mid Row, also known as ‘Porteous’ Well.

michty me (mich-tee-mee) interj., arch. expression of mild surprise or exasperation, also used as a mild oath – ‘michty me, A’ve never seen sic a thing’.

mickle (mi-kul) adj., arch., poet. large, big, great, much, large amount – ‘For as mickle as wee have been with your lordschip ….’ [CBP1957], ‘…as mickle as in a’ thesaures’ [HSR], ‘Afflicket I am verra mickle ….’ [HSR], ‘Weel bairnies, what is tae be the day. How mickle hev ec?’ [JEDM], ‘We’ laid her doon’ wi mickle care,’ And cairrit on tae Eskdalemuir’ [DH] (not often used in Hawick; cf. muckle).

Mickle (mi-kul) n. William Julius (1734–88) born in Langholm, 3rd son of the Parish minister, changing his name from ‘Meikle’. He was educated in Langholm and then at Edinburgh High School and went into the brewing trade followed by some of his family. In 1762 he published ‘Providence and other poems’, then went to London to try for a literary career, eventually becoming a corrector for the Clarendon Press in Oxford. This he gave up to translate Camoens’ ‘Lusiad’ (from the Portuguese), taking 4 years and being published in 1775. His ballad ‘Cumnor Hall’ is supposed to have inspired Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Kenilworth’. He also travelled to Portugal with the Navy, returning fairly wealthy and married Mary Tomkins. As a poet he was very versatile, writing both short and long pieces, including the Scottish patriotic song ‘There’s Nae Luck Aboot the Hoose’.

Mid Broadlee (mid-brød-lee) n. formerly part of the farm of Broadlee. In 1650 the ‘communicants’ recorded there were John Clerk, Malie Shiel, Alexander Scott and Agnes Scott.

Midburn (mid-burn) n. farm in Hobkirk Parish, between Hawthornside and Highend. It was also known as ‘Africa’. The L-shaped barns probably date from the mid-18th century. James Renwick was there in 1790 and John Common was tenant in 1797. It was farmed by the Turnbulls through the 19th century, from about 1823. Thomas Turnbull was there in 1868. There was also once a small threshing mill there, powered by water from a pond (it is ‘Middleburn’ in 1790 and marked ‘Middleburn’ on Stobie’s 1770 map.

midden (mi-din, -den, -deen) n. literally the house waste heap or dunghill, but applied to mean any dirty or untidy place – ‘yon hoose was a right midden’. Middens in Hawick were common at the front of every house, often under the forestairs. They were forbidden by Council rules in 1749, but mostly not removed until around 1800. The last to remain were those in the Sandbed, Kirk Wynd and Green Wynd (the owners paying a small rent to the Burgh to keep their middens), which were removed following a petition in 1810 – ‘He raises up in the puir owt o’ the dust, an’ lyfts up the needie owt o’ the midden’ [HSR], ‘A stinkin’ midden, a scartin’ hen – There’s sma’ choice there ’ween craws and men’ [DH], ‘…Like a struttin’ cock on the midden heap’ [WL] (also ‘midding’ and variants).

midden-stank (mi-din-stawngk) n., arch. a foul ditch that drains from a dunghill heap – ‘…But the hypocrite weed Grew rank in its stead. Frae a heart vile as yon midden-stank’ [JoHa] (see midden and stank).

middest (mi-dist) n., arch. middle, midst, centre – ‘…in offering to beat up and break of the door of the dwelling houss …in the middest of the night’ [BR].

middle (mi-dul) v., arch. to meddle, bother – ‘Dunion …is buirdly billie ti Ruberslaw, an there the perr stand …leike as they war glunshin an shuirrin doon at aabodie that wad middle thum’ [ECS].

Middle (mi-dul) n. former name for lands that were incorporated into the Wells estate near Bedrule. Along with ‘Holm’ they may have been part of the lands called Dykes. They are listed (along with Fowlerslands and Holm) in the 1511 charter of the Douglasses of Cavers, along with the ‘corn mill and walk mill’ (that was later called Doveshaughmill). The lands were at one time partly in the Parish of Kirkton, but in the Barony of Cavers (on the west side of the Rule Water). In earlier times it may have been in the Barony of Feu-Rule. In 1634 James Stewart of Nether Horsburgh was served heir to his father Robert Stewart in his lands of ‘Helme et Middill’, with grain mill and fuller’s mill called ‘Dowishauch’, comprising a 3 merk land in the Barony of Cavers. It was still in the Barony of Cavers when inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687 and his brother Archibald in 1698, and still listed along with ‘Helme’ as having a corn mill and waulk mill attached. James Dryden was there in 1736. It is unclear whether these lands were associated with East Middle (it is ‘Middill’ and ‘Myddill’ in 1511 and ‘Middle’ in 1698: the origin of the name is probably from being the centre of the in-bye land of an estate).

Middle (mi-dul) n. lands in Cavers Parish, later divided into East Middle and West Middle. William Douglas was there in 1720 when he had a daughter baptised in Kirkton Parish (the origin probably comes from being farmlands central to the estate, as opposed to the out-bye land).

Middleburn (mi-dul-burn) n. former name for Midburn.

the Middle Loft (thu-mi-dul-loft) n. former balcony in St. Mary’s Kirk, built in 1684 by James Thorbrand. In 1685 William Laing and Walter Scott (presumably Bailies at the time) were paid back the 100 marks Scots that it had cost to construct. This balcony was lost when the church was rebuilt around 1763. It was also known as ‘the Steeple Loft’. The 2 front seats were formally assigned to the Bailies in 1707 (although this is a little confusing, since the ‘Bailies’ Loft’ was a separate balcony). The Council paid 200 merks Scots for the timber work to fix it in 1708, the money being raised by assessing the Burgesses. It was one of two balconies that were entered from the steeple side, the higher one being the ‘High Loft’ – ‘John Turnbull, mason, to collect ye Mide and Wester Lofts’ [PR1718].

Middle Mairches (mi-dul-mär-cheez) n. the Middle Marches, generally referring to an area running from the Cheviots to the Kershope Burn. The Scottish Middle March consisted essentially of Roxburghshire (including Liddesdale), Selkirkshire and Peeblesshire, with judicial centre in Jedburgh, and the Wardens being the Kers or Kerrs for much of the time. The English Middle March consisted of Coquetdale, Redesdale and Tynedale. Together they saw the worst of the lawlessness of riving times.

Middlemas (mi-dul-mis) n. Adam (d.bef. 1581) recorded being deceased when his son John witnessed a sasine for William (son to the deceased John) in Lilliesleaf in 1580/1. Andrew (15th/16th C.) convicted in 1510 in Jedburgh Justice-airy, with secretly destroying the wood of Gateshaw. George (16th C.) servant to James Kerr, son of the Laird of Greenhead. In 1586 his master was instructed to enter him and another servant into court. James (16th C.) recorded in 1561, when Thomas Scott of Haining was obliged to enter him before the Warden of the East Marches. Either he or ‘quyte Will Young’, or his servant or some other person was to be warded to answer the charge of stealing from David Thomson in Berwick. He was presumably local. James (16th/17th C.) son of William of Lilliesleaf Chapel. In 1604 he and his father were declared rebels for failing to appear to answer to the charges of killing Thomas Kerr of Crailing and his servant. This appears to have been part of an on-going feud between the Kers and the Turnbulls, with the power of the courts on the Ker side. He is probably the brother of William of Lilliesleaf who (along with 2 other men) was part of a complaint in 1617 by George Douglas of Friarshaw and George Douglas in Lilliesleaf, specifically that the 3 men had tried to break into both the houses at Lilliesleaf and Friarshaw. He is also recorded as brother of William ‘of Lillislie’ listed in 1618 among men accused of assaulting and threatening George Turnbull of Belses and his workers; he was ordered to be imprisoned in Edinburgh Tolbooth. James (d.bef. 1671) proprietor of Raperlaw. He was listed as owner of Raperlaw in Lilliesleaf on the 1643 county valuation, his lands being valued at £416. His is recorded as owner of ‘Reaperhall’ (i.e. Raperlaw) in 1670 when he brought a court action. In 1671 (by which time he was deceased) he is transcribed as ‘portioner of Kaperhall’. In the 1663 Land Tax Rolls he paid tax on £110 10s, as one of the heritors of Raperlaw in Lilliesleaf Parish. His daughter Emma (or Anna) married Walter Scott of Alton. He could be the same as the James of Raperlaw who married Anna Scott, and whose son William was involved with claims with her new husband Thomas Riddell in 1661. He is probably the James of ‘Reaperlaw’ who signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. James (17th C.) paid the land tax on part of Raperlaw in 1678. These were the lands formerly held by Walter Turnbull and corresponded to Childknow (valued at £101 19s 4d) and ‘Part of the muir of Childknaw’ (valued at £33 9s 2d). He is recorded at Raperlaw in Lilliesleaf Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He is probably related to the earlier James, as well as to Walter, who is also recorded at Raperlaw in 1694. The same lands were owned by Hunter of Hunthill in the 18th century. James (b.1819/20) woollen manufacturer, son of John. In 1861 he was living at 10 Slitrig Crescent and employing 18 workmen. He was at that time living with his widowed mother Isabella and his brother William.
Middlemas

He may be the Mr. Middlemas of Slitrig Bank who gave a talk on ‘Botany’ to the Archeological Society in 1857. John (15th/16th C.) tenant in Lilliesleaf who was listed among the Borderers pardoned in 1526 for their earlier attack on the Earl of Arran. John (d.bef. 1581) tenant in Lilliesleaf, perhaps son of the earlier John. In 1563 his eldest daughter Janet was one of 2 choices of wife offered to William Davidson by Walter Riddell of that Ilk. Probably the same John was listed as owner of half of Raperlaw when it was leased to Andrew Gray, George Gray and Thomas Allan. He is probably the John in Lilliesleaf recorded being deceased in 1580/1 when his son William received sasine to his 4 husbandlands in Lilliesleaf. John (d.1601) brother of William of Lilliesleaf Chapel. He was killed in Jedburgh on Rood Fair Day in 1601 as part of an ongoing feud between Turnbuls and Kers. About 30 Turnbuls from the Minto area entered Jedburgh to find Thomas Kerr of Crailing (brother of the Provost), killing him and his servant and wounding several other Jedburgh men. On the Turnbull side he was killed, along with Robert Turnbull of Bewlie. Several men were later convicted and hanged for their part in this skirmish. Margaret Turnbull a relative (possibly sister) was one of the ‘persewaris’ of the case against the Kers for his murder. John of Alton (17th C.) mentioned in a 1666 list of landowners in Hassendean Parish. He may have been related to Walter Scott of Alton, who married Anna Middlemas at about that time. John (b.1791) son of Alexander, he was born in Ednam. He was a small-scale manufacturer in Hawick in the early-to-mid 1800s. He was listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835 as foreman at Pathead and was at Stellhouse in 1840. In 1841 he was recorded as a woollen factory foreman, living at Stellhouse. He married Isabella Broomfield, sister of Alexander, who was foreman at Cumledge Mills. Their children included: Alexander; James (b.1820), who carried on his father’s business; Elizabeth (Betsy), who married William Laidlaw (grocer and manufacturer); Isobella; Jane; William; and Margaret. Robert (18th C.) servant to Douglas of Cavers, recorded in 1785 and 1791. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included: William (b.1785); and Janet (b.1791). Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Christian Scott and their children included Robert (b.1809). Thomas (15th C.) recorded on the ‘retour of inquest’ for Ker of Altonburn in 1438. Thomas (15th C.) early member of this family, based at Ploro. He was master ranger of Yarrow from at least 1468, and presumably related to William, who was Ranger before him. He is surely the Thomas, cousin of Robert Scott of Haining, to whom Scott granted the lands of ‘Greviston and Gillishau’ in Peeblesshire in 1476. He is recorded ‘in Ploro’, in 1494/5 (probably related to the area of Plora near Innerleithen). That year there was remission to Alexander, son of Andrew Turnbull of Dryden, for resetting the thefts of Adam Howiston and Robert Jackson. This included the slaughter of his wife and 2 sons, as well as 11 horses, 44 cows and a long list of items. This list is unique in its detailed specification of valuable goods belonging to a minor (but relatively wealthy laird) at the end of the 1400s. Also in 1494/5 John Scott of Erncleuch was allowed to ‘compone’ for his part in several crimes, including bringing in thieves and ‘traitors of Leven’ to salughter his wife and two ‘offspring’, Ninian and John. He was probably the same as Thomas, chief of the Middlemas clan, who acquired Ploro in 1497. Thomas (16th C.) listed in 1541 among Scotsmen accused of being responsible for the deaths of Englishmen. He was said to have slain Quentin Watson. Thomas ‘Tammy Mid’ (20th C.) metal merchant of the mid-20th century, running the business at 55 High Street, which was very successful during the War years. He was also known for his large feet, which meant he wore excessively patched hand-made boots. Walter (16th/17th C.) son of William of Middlemas. Along with his brother William, he was accused of harassing and attacking George Turnbull of Belses and his farm workers; appearing personally before the Privy Council, he was sent to Edinburgh Tolbooth afterwards. William Elliot, his servitor, was also involved. George Ker, apparent of Cavers Carre became cautioner for him and his brother William for the sum of 300 merks, not to harm George Turnbull or his family or servants. Walter (17th C.) recorded at Raperlaw in Lilliesleaf Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He paid tax on 2 hearths and was probably related to James, who was also listed there. William (14th/15th C.) Vicar of Selkirk. In 1425 he was granted the office of Master of the Ward of Yarrow by Archibald, Earl of Douglas, confirmed by James I in the following year; his nephew George was also named in the charter as his successor in the office. In 1436 he was recorded in a charter related to St. Andrews Kirk in Peebles. William (15th C.) Master Ranger of Yarrow Ward from at least 1456 until 1460. He was succeeded in this office by Thomas, who was therefore probably his son. William (15th/16th C.) along with David Hoppringle, Walter Scott of Howpasley and George Hepburn, he held the lands of Boonraw, which passed to Robert Scott of Stirches in 1504/5. Perhaps the same William is recorded in 1502 when Robert Scott in Synton and William Scott in Fenwick were fined for failing to enter him in the itinerant court at Jedburgh. William (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1527 as a witness in Selkirk for a transaction involving land in Lilliesleaf. William of Lilliesleaf (16th C.) recorded as ‘Middilnest in Lilliseleif’ in 1563 when he ‘wadset’ his lands at the ‘Hungrill’ and other lands near Lilliesleaf Kirk to Walter Riddell of that ilk. In the same year he was ‘William Myddilnest in Lissie Freirschaw’ when he rented some land to John Redford, this being ‘Coit acre’ and a rig of land lying in ‘Myddillis’ (perhaps suggesting a connection with his name). Probably the same William is recorded in 1562 when he let an acre of land in fields of the town of Lilliesleaf to Hohn Hislop. He is probably the William ‘Middelnest of Lillisle’ recorded in 1580 when he admitted John Donaldson as tenant to 6 acres of land in the town of Lilliesleaf, for yearly payments of 24 pounds; these lands were at ‘Portus Croft Heid’. He may be the William, son of the deceased John of Lilliesleaf recorded in 1580/1 when he received sasine for 4 husbandlands in Lillieleaf. In 1581 he witnessed a transaction between William Scott in Burnfoot and Scott’s future wife Janet, daughter of William Scott in Huntly. Also in 1581 he witnessed an agreement involving the liferent of Blindhaugh and Casteleis with the Scotts in Blindhaugh. Probably the same William is recorded in 1581/2 when ‘one quarter of the half husbandland’ of his steadings held by John Smail was given to Smail’s mother as part of a marriage contract. He is also recorded as ‘Middilnest of Leilsle’ in 1583 when he received half of the meadow of Belses. And in 1583/4 when he was ordered to Edinburgh Tolbooth afterwards. George Ker, apparent of Cavers Carre became cautioner for him and his brother Walter for the sum of 300 merks, not to harm George Turnbull or his family or servants. He was served heir to his father in 1622 in the lands of Raperlaw. He is probably the William ‘Middlemaist of Lillisleif Chappell’ who in 1617 the Rutherfords complained was still at the horn, but not yet apprehended. Additionally, in 1619 Archibald Ker in Bowden complained that he owed him money and was ‘unrelaxed from a horning’. William of Chapel (17th C.) son of William of Chapel. He is probably the ‘William Middlemest, younger’ of Lilliesleaf named in 1618 among Middlemases and their supporters who had harassed and attacked George Turnbull of Belses and his farm workers. His brother James, sons William and Walter, and other supporters were also involved. He was ordered by the Privy Council to be entered into Edinburgh Tolbooth ‘and to remain there till further order be taken with them’. He is probably the William ‘of Lillisleis Chappell’ who in 1617 the Rutherfords complained was still at the horn, but not yet apprehended. Additionally, in 1619 Archibald Ker in Bowden complained that he owed him money and was ‘unrelaxed from a horning’. William of Chapel (17th C.) son of William of Chapel. He is probably the ‘William Middlemest, younger’ of Lilliesleaf named in 1618 among Middlemases and their supporters who had harassed and attacked George Turnbull of Belses and his farm workers; appearing personally before the Privy Council, he was sent to Edinburgh Tolbooth afterwards. George Ker, apparent of Cavers Carre became cautioner for him and his brother Walter for the sum of 300 merks, not to harm George Turnbull or his family or servants. He was served heir to his father in 1622 in the lands of Raperlaw. He is probably the William ‘Middlemaist of Lillisleif Chappell’ recorded as a juror in the 1622 and 1623 Commissioners’ Courts and ‘Williame Middlemost of Chapel’ on an assize in 1624. He is probably the ‘goodmane of the chapel’ recorded in 1628 when his son James was said to have been cured by Isobel ‘Howetsone’, who was accused of witchcraft. William (17th C.) son of James of Raperlaw and Anna Scott. In 1661 his guardian John Middlemas was involved in a discharge of claims with his mother and her new husband Thomas Riddell William (b.1833/4) from Earlston, he was son of John, a woollen carder in Wilton. Midgehope was 2nd son of William of Tushielaw, 1573. In the late 16th century William Scott of and 4 or 5 prisoners. There were Littles there in of Atmstrongs in 1543, taking 200 cows, 20 horses with Thirlestane, it was raided by a large group of reformed half the lands, resigning this to Walter Scott of Tushielaw in 1620. The lands were still part of the Lordship of Melrose in 1670. Charles Scott of Woll owned the lands in 1785. In the late 18th century John Scott of Midgehope was a son of William of Woll and father of William of Teviot Bank. Andrew Henderson was owner in 1803 – ‘Gae warn the lords of Thirlstone, Gensleugh, and Newburgh fair, With Tushielaw, and Midgehope, in armour to appear’ [WSB] (called ‘Midgap’ by Scott of Satchells; it is ‘Mighope’ and ‘Migehope’ in 1415, ‘mygchope’ in 1494/5, ‘mygehop’ in 1502, ‘Migehoip’ in 1564 and ‘Megehoip’ in 1573; ‘Midgehoop’ is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Mid Grain (mid-grän) n. small stream that rises on Whitegrain Fell and flows north-east to join Singdean Burn (it is marked on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Mid Hill (mid-hil) n. hill in the Slitrig Water, to the east of Stobs Woodfoot. On a shelf near the summit is a hill-fort, approximately 75 m by 40 m, but largely destroyed by later occupation by a settlement and quarrying. It consists of inner and outer ramparts, and contains several hut circles associated with the settlement. Just south-east of the fort are the remains of a linear earthwork, traceable about 140 m, but probably once longer.

Mid Hill (mid-hil) n. hill on the southern side of the Borthwick valley, just to the south-east of Eilrig farm, and reaching a height of 317 m.

Mid Hill (mid-hil) n. hill on the northern side of the Borthwick valley, near the head of Borthwickbrae Burn. It lies between Byrelee Hill and Easter Hill and reaches a height of 368 m.

Mid Hill (mid-hil) n. hill in upper Liddesdale, lying on the west side of Cliffhope Burn near Singdean. It reaches a height of 434 m (it appears to be marked on the 1718 Buccleuch survey as ‘Middle’).

Mid Hill (mid-hil) n. hill in the very upper part of the Hermitage valley, south-west of Twislehope Hope. It reaches a height of 436 m.

Midholm (mi-dum) n. former name for Midden, particularly used to refer to its Secessionist congregation in the 18th century.

Midlem

Midlem (mid-hum) n. hamlet north of Hawick and about 4½ miles east of Selkirk. It has an old rectangular lay-out, with the smithy in the middle of the village green. It was once a linen manufacturing centre, and a village of some importance. It lies on the Midlem Burn, which joins the Ale Water. The village is mentioned in 1119 in connection with Selkirk Abbey and remained in monastic hands for 450 years, with the Knights Templar apparently also having some land there. The village also had possibly the first Secession church in Scotland, built in 1746, and closed in 1938, with some Hawick area families travelling all the way there for services; there are baptismal records covering the period 1743–1919 (with some gaps). The top end of the village offers a magnificent view of Ruberslaw. In 1535 Robert Scott of Allanhaugh was tried (and found not guilty) of leading men from Liddesdale to there, stealing 100 cows and 20 horses. J. Walter Elliot wrote ‘The Story of Midlem and the Midlem Pail’ (the origin is Old English ‘middel ham’, meaning simply ‘middle homestead’; it first occurs as ‘Middelham’ about 1120, is ‘Mydlem’ in 1353 and only gains its modern spelling by the 17th century; it occurs on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Midlumum’).

Midlem Mill (mid-hum-mil) n. farm with a mill, situated near the village of Midlem. John Lillie and James Lawson are recorded there in 1493. It was later a seat of a branch of the Elliots. The first Laird, in the mid-17th century, was Gavin Elliott, also of Grange (son of ‘Gibbie wi the Gowden Gairters’ and ancestor of the Earls of Minto), followed by Robert, another Robert and finally Gavin. Robert Elliot paid tax on his lands there valued at about £400 in 1678. Lady Elliot paid tax on 19 windows in 1753. The estate was sold off to clear debts in about 1756. It was sold to Prof. George Stewart in 1773. Robert Scott was farmer there in 1797 and Thomas Weir in the 1860s. It is said that the house was rebuilt and named Linthill (also spelled ‘Middlemilne’, ‘Midlemilne’, ‘Midlem连续年’, ‘Midlemmiln’, ‘Midlemmyne’, ‘Midlamyne’; it is ‘Midlaymilne’ in Hawick Burgh records of 1734).

Mid Liddle Street (mid-li-dul-stee’) n. street in Newcastleton, lying along the west side of the Liddel (or Liddle) Water, between North Liddle Street and South Liddle Street.

Midlothian (mid-lo-thee-in) n. county sharing a small common border with the north of Roxburghshire.

Midroughlee

Midroughlee (mid-rowch-lee) n. former farm in Abbotrule Parish. It was advertised for lease in 1785, along with others on the Abbotrule estate. ‘Doorpool, Midquarter, (including the Easter Park) and a small possession, part of the Farm occupied by George Minto’ was listed on the Land Tax Rolls of 1811, owned by Charles Kerr of Abbotrule and valued at about £210 (it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

the Mid Raw (thu-mid-raw) n. row of pended, thatched tenements which stood in the centre of what is now Drumlanrig Square, between the Fore and Back Raws. The original construction may date back to around the 16th century. It exists in several photographs, including one during its demolition, showing the arched lower floor. A public well, originating at the Sclidder Springs, stood at the bottom. The gable end at the top held a large notice board. It was the location for some of the densest and poorest housing conditions in Hawick, with no sanitation and some rooms still having clay floors. It is estimated that there were 110 people living in 10 separate houses. By the latter part of the 19th century they had become very dilapidated and the building was demolished in 1884, after being purchased by public subscription and gifted to the Town (since the Council had no powers to declare houses unfit for habitation). A Commemorative plaque was placed on a nearby house. In 1910 the site was turned into an ornamental garden with fountain and the Brown Clock in the centre of the Square, designed by J.P. Alison. Some of the stone was used to build the wall along the roadside at Pipleheugh (since rebuilt), and a wooden cup in the Museum was made by James Thomson from a salvaged beam. A few fragments of the former Pipleheugh wall were incorporated into the James Thomson statue base. A photograph was taken shortly before the demolition – ‘Though the Moat itself may fa’, Like the famous auld Mid Raw . . . ’ [JEDM], ‘… And we maun bid a last farewell To the Auld Mid Raw’ [JT].

mids  (midz)  n.,  arch.  the  middle,  middle  of,  midst  – ‘...he  sall  set  the  thornis  within  his  awin  bounds,  and  his  nibeour's  within  the  mids  ...’ [BR1640], ‘In the myds o’’ [JAHM], ‘Thre thids  o  thir  verra  busse  ...’ [ECS], ‘I  the  mids  o’ Lammas  fair’  [GW],  a  middle  course,  medium  example, compromise – ‘There’s  a  guid  mids  o’  Lammas  fair’  [ECS].

Midshiels  (mid-sheelz)  n.  farm  near  the  Teviot  about  2  miles  north-east  of  Hawick,  just  north  of  Briery  Yards,  nestled  between  the  Teviot  and  the  old  railway  line.  A  mound  nearby  is  said  to  be  the  site  of  a  cottage  that  was  covered  over  when  the  residents  had  the  plague;  this  may  be  the  same  as  the  round  cairn,  planted  with  trees,  which  is  about  300  m  north-west  of  the  house  (on  the  opposite  side  of  the  road,  near  the  railway,  marked  ‘Tumulus’  on  the  1863  Ordnance  Survey  map)  and  about  25  m  in  diameter.  There  is  also  an  ancient  standing  stone,  just  to  the  north-east  of  the  cairn;  this  is  about  2.3  m  high,  4-sided  and  more  than  2  m  around  at  the  base.  Aerial  photography  has  revealed  signs  of  an  enclosure  in  the  field  to  the  north  of  the  house.  Redemption  money  was  paid  for  the  lands  (along  with  Appletreehall)  by  Alexander  Scott  of  Howpasley  and  Abington  in  1470.  Superiority  of  the  lands  (along  with  Appletreehall  and  parts  of  Hassendean)  were  forfeited  after  the  execution  of  Alexander,  Lord  Home  in  1516,  passing  to  James  Lundie,  but  returning  to  George,  Lord  Home,  probably  in  1522.  Robert  Scott  of  Howpasley  and  his  wife  Isobel  Murray  had  a  charter  of  the  lands  in  1536,  when  they  were  part  of  the  barony  of  Hassendean,  with  superior  being  Alexander,  Lord  Home.  It  was  probably  owned  (along  with  Appletreehall)  by  Walter  Scott  of  Howpasley  before  that.  It  passed  to  Sir  Walter  Scott  of  Birkenside  in  1578/9  and  then  his  son  Walter  Scott  of  Howpasley  in  1588.  In  1611  it  was  confirmed  to  Philip  Scott  of  Dryhope  by  the  superior  Alexander  Cranston  of  Mordiston.  Walter  Scott  of  Midshiels  was  recorded  in  1628.  It  was  a  tenanted  farm  of  the  Scotts  of  Buccleuch  from  at  least  the  late  17th  century.  Some  women  from  here  were  supposedly  involved  in  the  dispute  over  the  removal  of  Hassendean  Kirk’s  roof  to  Roberton  in  the  late  17th  century.  It  was  part  of  the  lands  of  Walter  Scott  of  Chamberlain  Newton  in  1678.  The  Laird  of  Newton  (probably  Francis  Scott)  was  living  there  in  1694,  when  he  paid  tax  for  having  7  hearths.  Walter  Scott  of  Crumhaugh  was  living  there  in  1722  and  1724,  Robert  Turnbull  and  Richard  Turnbull  in  1729  and  William  Turnbull  and  Robert  Turnbull  in  1733–36.  Gideon  Scott  was  there  in  1747.  Rebecca  Scott  paid  the  window  tax  on  16  windows  there  in  1748.  Capt.  John  Douglas  of  Cavers  purchased  the  estate  from  the  Scotts  of  Crumhaugh  in  the  mid-1700s.  After  his  death  in  1786  it  was  inherited  by  the  son  of  his  cousin,  who  was  Archibald  Douglas  of  Adderstone.  Archibald  Douglas  owned  the  farm  by  1788  (and  still  recorded  that  way  in  the  1811  Land  Tax  Rolls),  when  it  was  valued  at  £235.  It  was  later  the  home  of  miller  John  White.  The  Dougales  sold  the  land  to  William  Turnbull  of  Fenwick  in  1852,  who  sold  it  in  1896  to  Rutherford  Shielles.  The  level  area  in  front  of  the  house  was  used  on  several  occasions  for  reviewing  the  Border  Mounted  Rifles.  The  road  to  Hawick  passing  near  here  was  improved  in  1775.  The  house  is  a  grade  B  listed  building  – ‘And  there  were  three  wives  in  Midshielles,  And  three  in  Bridieyairds;  And  they’re  awa  to  the  Kirk  o’  Hassendean,  And  left  baith  wheel  and  cairds’  [T]  (it  is  marked  on  Gordon’s  c.  1650  map  and  Blaeu’s  1654  map  as  ‘Midsheels’,  on  the  1718  Buccleuch  survey  as  ‘Meadshielles’  and  on  Stobie’s  1770  map  as  ‘Meidshielles’;  it  was  recorded  as  ‘Mydschelis’  in  1535  and  1536,  ‘meidschellis’  in  1561/2,  ‘Midshielles’  in  1628,  ‘Midsheils’  in  1678,  ‘Meitchels’  in  1694,  ‘Meatsheels’  in  1711,  ‘mitchels’  in  1724,  ‘medshielles’  in  1729,  ‘Meetshielles’  in  1821  and  ‘Midshields’  in  1841).

Midsideshaw  (mid-si-de-shaw)  n.  former  lands  in  the  Rule  valley,  described  a  ‘pendicle’  of  ‘Woollie’  (i.e.  Wolfelee)  in  1659  (it  is  possible  this  is  an  error  for  ‘Macksideshaw’).

Mid Sike (mid-sik) n. small stream on the north side of the Borthwick valley. It joins the Hoscote Burn just below Black Sike.

Midsummer (mid-su-mur) n. formerly in Scotland this was June 24th, sometimes used as a term day – ‘...geifand  a  penny  of  the  wsuale  mone  of  Scotland  at  the  Fest  of  Nativete  of  Sant  Jhone  the  Baptist,  callit  Mydsomer ...’  [SB1500].

Midsummer Fair (mid-su-nur-fair) n. former fair taking place at various dates in the Summer in Hawick. In 1670 it happened on 24th June, actually close to the middle of Summer. However, it was on 5th July in the 18th century. It was moved to 17th July (the day before the St. Boswells Fair) in 1799. It was set up as a fair and market for cattle, wool and linen goods, and ceased around the middle of the 19th century.

Milbank (mil-angk) n. Sir Frederick Acclom (1820–98) of Well (near Ripon), M.P. and famous sportsman of his times. He holds one of the records for the most grouse shot in a single day (2,070 in a party with 6 guns in 1872). He took part in a celebrated early cricket match at Borthwickbrae in the 1840s, and at the return game on the Upper Haugh drove the ball from the Upper Haugh into the Under Haugh. He was recorded in a directory of 1852 living at Borthwickbrae. Along with his wife he presented a silver chalice, paten and wine flagon to St. Cuthbert’s Kirk.

Miles (mile) n. Francis (b.1705) son of Richard. In 1725 he witnessed a baptism for ‘periewiggmaker’ Robert (surely a relative, perhaps his brother). In 1723 in Hawick he married Isabel Phaup or ‘Phape’. Their children included: Margaret (b.1723); Jean (b.1724); Thomas (b.1726); Robert (b.1728); Gideon (b.1730); William (b.1737); and Francis (b.1740). The witnesses in 1730 were Richard and Robert (probably his father and other relative). Francis (18th C.) Hawick resident who married Mary Hair. Their children included Isobel (b.1743). He could be the same man as the barber, if he married twice. Francis (18th C.) married Margaret Riddell in Hawick in 1758. He could be the barber of that name who witnessed a baptism for Andrew Scott and Ann ‘Doeg’ in 1758. He could be the Francis who witnessed a baptism for wig-maker Robert in 1766. James (19th C.) married Isabella Hessel in Hawick in 1869. Their son Adam may have drowned in a pool near the Flex. Mr. (16th C.) recorded in Hawick in 1579. James Burn, indweller in Selkirk, owed him 5 half firlots of meal. His forename is not recorded. Richard (17th/18th C.) wig-maker in Hawick. In 1697 someone was convicted of stealing ‘ane laced pinner’ from his wife. In 1709 he witnessed a baptism for Adam Brown, ‘Headhouse younger’. In 1714 he witnessed a baptism for Robert (who was surely closely related). He may be the same Richard who married Agnes Lindsay in Hawick in 1705 and whose children included: Francis (b.1705), also a wigmaker; and Richard (b.1707). The witnesses in 1707 were gardener James Fal-side and merchant Thomas Hardie. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Martha Bell and their son Richard was baptised in 1714. The witnesses in 1714 were Richard (who was surely either his father or brother) and John Nordell. Robert (17th/18th C.) recorded as ‘periewiggmaker’ in Hawick in 1725. Also in 1725 he was ‘wigmaker’ when he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Walter Scott. He married Jean Cook in Hawick in 1715. Their children included: Mary (b.1716); Isobella (b.1718); Agnes (b.1719); Margaret (b.1721); Janet (b.1723); and Robert (b.1725). The witnesses in 1725 were Francis (who was surely related) and John Scott ‘Whites-gates’. Robert (18th C.) wig-maker in Hawick. He married Rachel Nichol (perhaps this was the 2nd marriage of the wigmaker Robert who had married Jean Cook). Their children included Mary (b.1737). The witnesses to her baptism were merchant William Oliver junior and Kirk Officer John Telfer. Robert (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included: Elizabeth (b.1758); Margaret (b.1760); and an unnamed child (b.1762). Robert (18th C.) wig-maker in Hawick, who married Ann Elliot. Their children included: William (b.1764); Catherine (b.1766); William (again, b.1768); and Robert (b.1775). The witnesses in 1764 were Francis and John (with the surnames hard to read) and in 1766 were Francis Miles (surely a close relative) and Archibald Elliot. He could be the Robert whose daughter Agnes died in Hawick in 1777. He could be son of the earlier wig-maker of the same name (or he married twice with a big gap). Robert (18th/19th C.) married Agnes Aitkin in Hawick in 1796. He could be the barber who died in 1805. Robert (d.1805) local barber, son of Francis. His children included: James, who married Isabella Hessel; and unnamed children who died in 1805 and 1808 – ‘Robert Miles the barber, and Michael up the stair, Willie Tully makes the wigs, and Jenny buys the hair’ [T]. Robert (b.1812/3) stocking-maker living on O’Connell Street in 1841 and in Wilton Kirkstyle in 1851. He married Janet Bramwell. Their children included: Robert (b.1836); John; Euphemia; James; David; and Agnes. His older sister Elizabeth also lived with him. He could be the Robert who died in 1877. Robert (b.1836) son of Robert, he worked as a fuller in Wilton. In 1851 he was living on Langlands Bank. He married Ann Stewart and their children included Agnes and Robert. William...
(18th C.) resident of Hawick. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He could be the William born to Robert and Ann Elliot in Hawick in 1768 (also formerly written ‘Myles’).

Milestoneane Peth (mil-stän-peth) n. former name for a path between Ashybank and Honeyburn. The path went to the south from the main Hawick-Denholm road (A698), crossing a small hill that was removed to straighten the road. It is now by-passed by the modern course of the main road. There was once a ford across the Teviot at the foot of the path. It is now marked on the Ordnance Survey map through the name of the wood alongside the A698 near there. The name derived from a milestone that was once on the road near there, marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, showing 4 miles to Hawick and 16 miles to Kelso. mile stanes (mil-stänz) n., pl. formerly, numbered markers by the side of a road, set out at intervals of 1 mile. Wood’s 1824 map show a mile stone near the present position of the Horse.

the Military Hospital (thu-mi-li'-u-ree-hosp-pi'-ul) n. hospital in Hawick for treating wounded soldiers during WWI. It was also known as ‘Hawick War Hospital’, where?? Patients were banned from visiting licensed premises.

the Militia (thu-mi-li'-sha) n. an army distinct from the professional army, being the forerunner of today’s Territorial Army. The history of the militia goes back for hundreds of years, although locally it is relevant only in the 17th to 19th centuries. In Hawick the term was applied to one of a number of partly voluntary forces, although technically distinct from the Volunteers and the Yeomanry. There are records of court cases involving ‘his Majesty’s Militia’ from the 1660s, when money was raised and men were selected to serve by ballot; in 1688 2 men were fined for fleeing the Town when they were recruiting and in 1694 2 men were admitted as Honorary Burgesses for serving ‘as militia hired men for the said town’. In 1796 a law was passed proscribing that each community should provide men or pay £25 each, which Hawick did for its quota of 3. Schoolmasters were meant to provide lists of all men between 18 and 35, those serving to be chosen by ballot (although there were many reasons for exceptions). Initially such forces were under the command of the Lord Lieutenants of each county. Men had to commit to a certain number of days of service (21 days annually) over 5 years, during which they could be called up in times of need. Militia units were very active in the late 18th century, with the threat of French invasion. Hawick was the rallying place for the upper troop of Roxburghshire Yeomanry, while the early 19th century saw the Roxburgh Militia active. The 1st Regiment Roxburghshire Militia was established in 1810 and based at Jedburgh, with the 2nd Regiment based at Kelso. The men in these units were drawn by ballot (between the ages of 18 and 30), served for 4 years, and were not allowed to find substitutes. The would only train within the county, unless invasion or rebellion broke out. There is a record of messages being posted at schoolhouses in Selkirkshire in 1813, describing the balloting process. The Dumfries Militia, which was more like a semi-professional unit, recruited in Hawick in the early part of the 19th century.

the Milk Drum (thu-milk-drum) n. former popular name for the hospitality offered to the Drums and Fifes on the Friday morning around 7 a.m. The tradition is said to have started when Mrs. Hardie, proprietor of the dairy, offered one of the ailing members of the band some fresh milk in 1871. It was continued by Hardie’s and then the Brown family (at what point rum may have been added is not known!).

milkit (mil'-kee', -ki') pp. milked – ‘When bonny Jeanye Roole she milket the yowes I’ the buchte aboon the lynne . . .’[JTe].

Milksweet Willie’s Thorn (milk-swee'-wi-leez-thorn) n. ancient thorn bush at Newmill, associated with the ballad ‘Rattlin Roarin Willie’ (see also Sweet Milk).

milk-the-kye (milk-thu-kl) n., arch. the dock weed in its seed-bearing stage.

mill (mil) n. a factory, building containing manufacturing machines, particularly referring to a knitwear factory. ‘The mill’ is a familiar name for one of the main town factories. The first factories in Hawick appeared in the late 18th century, for the manufacture of linen tapes and carpets. Spinning and weaving then moved from being domestic operations, to being organised in large factories. Through the 19th century these dominated employment in the Town. Working conditions were poor to start with; it is recorded in the 1830s that the standard working week was 6 a.m. to 7 p.m., Monday to Saturday, with night shifts coming in at about that time. Women were employed as well as men, but traditionally in different jobs, and with children working as ‘piecers’ from about the age of 9. In earlier times the word referred exclusively to a corn mill, which in older records would be ‘milha’ – ‘. . . Mind, aw’m gettin’ the hang o’ it And next year, for the mill aw’ll maybe no yearn’ [AY], ‘There’s a little town that’s nestling ’mid the glory of the hills, Where the smoke goes rising slowly from the busy, scattered mills’ [WFC].

Mill (mil) n. John (18th C.) butler at Cavers in 1785, when he was working for Capt. John Douglas.

the Mill Acre (thu-mil-ā-kur) n. former name for a triangle of land north of Wellington Street, bounded by Wilton Path and Langlands Road (presumably once connected with Roughheugh Mill).

Mill Acre (mil-ā-kur) n. former name for lands associated with Belses Mill. They were included among lands served to Sir Thomas Ker of Cavers Carre in 1678, after the death of his son Andrew (it is ‘Mylne aiker’ in 1678 and ‘Milnaiker’ in 1684).

Millbank (mil-bawngk) n. another name for the Mill Path. It may also have been the name of the hosiery factory built there for Robert Ewen and later part of Hogg’s Mill. Houses in this area were removed to make way for the railway to Carlisle in about 1860 (‘Mill Bank Street’ is recorded in the 1851 census).

Millbank Hoose (mil-bawngk) n. house on the Mill Path, once the residence of Provost and manufacturer Robert Ewen.

Millburn (mil-burn) n. former lands located roughly where Hermitage village is. In 1718 it was included along with Over Closs and several other farmsteads in the survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch. In 1839 in the New Statistical Survey it was reported that the Nine Stane Rig within the bounds of this farm. A flint found near here is in Hawick Museum – ‘Now, wae be to thee, Armstrong o’ Millburn! And O an ill death may’st thou dee! Through thee we have lost brave Lairistan. But his equal thou wilt never be’ [ES] (also written ‘Milburn’; it is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Milburne’, on the Bucceuch survey as ‘Millburne’ and is probably the ‘Millholme’ of Sandison’s c.1590 map).

Millburnholm (mil-burn-hōm) n. former farm where the Whitrope Burn meets the Hermitage Water, at the modern location of Hermitage village. This was probably the farm of ‘Jame of Milbourne home’ (most likely an Elliot) recorded in 1587/8. William Henderson was tenant there in 1694. It was included along with Over Closs, Millburn and several adjacent farmsteads when surveyed for the Duchess of Bucceuch in 1718. The former farmhouse was visited by Sir Walter Scott and Robert Shortreed in 1792, and was at that time the last of the old style cottages in the district. It was a single storey at one end, with an extra storey at the other end, and with tiny windows looking through the thatched roof. Willie Elliot was farmer there at that time, and still recorded in 1797. Robert Elliot was farmer there in 1821 and 1841. There is a linear earthwork there, running east from the B6399 at least to the next stream, possibly all the way to the Roughley Burn (it is ‘Mylnburnholme’ in 1694, ‘Milnburnholm’ in 1797 and ‘Millburn Holm’ in 1821; it is ‘Milheburneholme’ and ‘Millburneholme’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and is on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Millburn Schuil see Hermitage Schuil

Mill Cornet (mil-kör-ni’) n. a mock Cornet selected in one of the local knitwear factories. Usually it was the youngest apprentice, and in the larger mills there were also Cornet’s Lasses, as well as Right- and Left-Hand Men and their Lasses, with those selected being the youngest 3 male and female employees. They would wear the same jackets and hats each year, and the party would go round the various ‘flats’, entertaining the workforce. The practice took place from at least the 1920s, including Braemar, Hawick Cashmere, John Laing’s, Johnstone’s, Lyle & Scott’s, Pesco’s, Pringle’s, Turner & Ruthford’s and Woodcock’s. The tradition largely died out in the 1970s, but is still continued by a few companies.

Millcote (mil-ko’) n. lands in Liddesdale recorded on a rental roll from about 1376, and associated with the Mangerton estate. They are listed as ‘Mylncotis’ and with a value of 10 shillings.

mill-door (mil-dōr) n., arch. entrance to a mill – ‘Saying ‘She has a mooth like (or as big as) a mill-door (= one very large and gaping)’ [GW].

the Millennium Nature Trail (thu-mi-len-ee-um-nā-chur-trāl) n. nature trail laid out in Wilton Lodge Park around 2000. There is an accompanying leaflet that describes the trail, which starts from the Museum.

the Millennium Stane (thu-mi-len-ee-um-stān) n. commemorative standing stone placed on the Mill’s Knowes in 2000, inscribed – ‘Look back on Bonnie Teviotside, and Hawick Among the Hills’. It was brought from a quarry near Jedburgh.

miller (mi-lur) n. person who runs a corn mill, having a special status within a barony – ‘Ee’ve the cheek o’ (or as muckle impetence as) the miller’s horse’ [GW], ‘ti droon the miller’ meant to add too much water to dough, liquor, etc. (see also millers).

Miller (mi-lur) n. Adam (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He witnessed a baptism for Walter in 1690 and for Francis in 1691 (possibly his sons). Adam (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Cauldmill in 1723. His children included: James (b.1721); and Adam (b.1723). Adam (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Appletreehall in 1724. He married Elspeth ‘mooor’ and their children included Bessie (b.1724), with witnesses John and Walter Scott. Adam (b.c.1753) originally from Robertson Parish, he was living in Denholm in 1788, 1793, 1798 and 1800. He is recorded as ‘independent’ on the 1841 Hawick census, living somewhere on Buccleuch Street. He may be the ‘Mr. Miller’ marked on Buccleuch Street on Wood’s 1824 map. He married Rachel Scott in Crailing Parish in 1784. Their children included (the first 2 baptised in Crailing and the rest in Robertson Parish): William (b.1786), baptised in Crailing; Adam (b.1788), Thomas (b.1790) and John (b.1793), baptised in Cavers; and an unnamed child (b.1792), Alexander (b.1796), Charles (b.1798), twins Janet and Elizabeth (b.1800), and Robert (b.1803), baptised in Robertson. John (b.c.1801) may have been another child. Alexander (18th C.) owner of lands in Ruescastle in Bedrule Parish. In 1643 his lands were valued at £27. His son was probably William, who owned the same lands in 1678. Alexander (18th C.) shepherd at ‘…head’ in Wilton Parish, according to his headstone. He married Marion Smith, who died in 1769, aged 59, and is buried in Wilton Old Cemetery. Alexander (18th/19th C.) farmer at Griphnowe in 1786. His children baptised in Kirkton Parish included: Mary (b.1783); William (b.1786); and John (b.1787). Alexander (18th/19th C.) farmer at Teindside, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Alexander (1867–1947) from Ayton in Berwickshire, he served as Stationmaster at several locations, including Hawick in about 1915. Andrew (18th/19th C.) resident of North Shields. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He must have had a local connection.

Andrew ‘The Marquis’ (19th/20th C.) son of a coal agent in Hawick. There is a story told of him pulling Peter Laidlaw’s leg by recounting a dream in which he was in Hell and the Devil tells him to get off his seat, saying ‘Ee’ve nae richt there; it’s reserved for Peter Laidlaw’. Charles (18th C.) weaver in Hawick Parish. In 1757 he witnessed baptisms for carrier Thomas Black and for weaver David (who was surely related, perhaps his brother). In 1760 he witnessed baptisms for weaver David (who was surely related to him) and John Scott. He married Ann Blaikie and their daughter Ann was baptised in Hawick in 1758. He may be the Charles whose unnamed child died in hawick in 1787 and whose son David died in 1808. He is probably the Charles, father-in-law to stocking-maker Thomas Scott, whose death is recorded in Hawick in 1816 (in which case Isabel was his daughter). He could be the son of John and Helen Paterson born in Hawick in 1723. Charles (18th C.) resident at Chapelhill in 1775 when his daughter Margaret was baptised in Robertson Parish. Christian (18th/19th C.) proprietor of a public house on Silver Street, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. She is probably the Christian at ‘Slitrige Bridge’ and described as ‘in-independent’ on the 1841 census. She could be the Christian, daughter of James and Christian Winthrope, who was born in Hawick in 1785. David (17th/18th C.) tailor in Hawick. In 1705 he witnessed a baptism for workman John Douglas. Probably the same David witnessed a baptism for James Thomson in Weensland in 1704. David (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1705 he was perhaps in Burngrove (the entry is hard to read) when his daughter Jean was baptised. William Miller and Adam Scott were witnesses. He may be the David who married Bessie Scott and whose son Walter was baptised in Wilton in 1695. David (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He is recorded as witness to several baptisms in 1702, 1704, 1705, 1706, 1708, 1709 and 1712. He thus seems likely to have either been an elder of the Kirk or held an office within the Incorporation of Weavers. He is probably the David who witnessed baptisms for Walter White in 1712 and 1731. In 1719 he witnessed a baptism for James Dickson, the other witness being weaver William (who was surely related). His son John was baptised in Hawick in 1700, with witnesses Walter Turnbull and Patrick Richardson. He is probably the David who was fined in 1716 for calling Isobel Anderson a liar in court. He is probably the David who witnessed baptisms in 1718 for shoemaker John Gardner and for John Scott ‘Whitegates’. He and John (perhaps his son) were witnesses to a baptism for William Gledstains in 1721. David (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He may have been son of the earlier David. In 1723 he married Margaret, daughter of the deceased Walter Armstrong in Weensland. Their children included: Margaret (b.1724); and David (b.1728). The witnesses in 1728 were William Tudhope and weaver John (probably his brother). David (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. His children included: William (b.1733); and Helen (b.1736). David (18th C.) weaver in Hawick, perhaps related to the earlier David. He may be the David, son of David and Margaret Armstrong, baptised in Hawick in 1728. He married Helen Wright in 1756 and their children included: Jean (b.1757); John (b.1760); Helen (b.1761); and Robert (b.1763). Weaver Charles Miller witnessed the 1760 baptism and was surely related. The witnesses in 1757 were weavers John Gray and Charles (who was surely related). He could be the David who hired the Hawick mortcloth in 1760. He could be the weaver David whose death is recorded in 1810 when he ‘Drowned himself in Slitrigg’. He could be the David whose son Francis died in 1781. David (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their children included: Isabel (b.1772); John (b.1773); John (again, b.1773); David (b.1778); and William (b.1782). The witnesses in 1772 were the whole congregation. He is probably the David who (along with weaver Robert Douglas) in 1774 witnessed a baptism for weaver Archibald Douglas; the next baptismal entry was for his own child in 1773, with the witnesses being weavers Robert and Archibald Douglas. David (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1798 he married Agnes Scott, who was also from Hawick. David (18th/19th C.) tailor in Newcastle. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825, and hence must have had a local connection. David (b.1795) son of Thomas. He emigrated to America in 1817, settling in Bovina, New York. In 1817 he married Nancy, daughter of Scotsman John Thomson. His 2nd wife was Isabella, daughter of Bailie ‘Tammy’ Turnbull. Their daughter Isabella Wilson married John Robertson Hoy. Many letters survive, sent to him from his family members in the Borthwick valley. Elizabeth (17th C.) recorded in 1695 when she was convicted of theft in Hawick. She was banished ‘out of the Ports of the town’, with the Burgh Officers announcing that no one should habour or reset her. Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (d.1720) recorded being in Wiltonburn when her funeral took place in Wilton Parish. She may have been related to Robert, who was blacksmith at Borthaugh. Francis (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Helen Turnbull and their children included: Adam (b.1685); Helen (b.1700); Thomas (b.1703); Walter (b.1706); and Sarah (b.1708). In 1691 he was married to ‘Bessie’ Turnbull (probably an error) when his daughter Isobel was baptised, with witnesses Adam Miller and James Neil. George (1777/8–1849) sawyer in Hawick, son of Janet Kedie, who died in 1832, aged 75. In 1841 he was resident at about 71 High Street and recorded as ‘independent’. He was living with his sister Isabel (who died in 1841, aged 50), as well as a servant, Janet Hume. He could be the Miller who gave his name to the adjacent close. He is buried in St. Mary’s. George (b.1829/30) born in Ancrum Parish. He was a flour miller living on the Cross Wynd in 1851. In 1850 he married Jane, daughter of Archibald Hobkirk from Jedburgh and their children included Robert. James (16th C.) notary, probably in Jedburgh. In 1574 he was notary for Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule and other Turnbulls in their bond of service with Archibald Douglas, 8th Earl of Angus. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1661 he witnessed a baptism for Patrick Redford. He married Margaret Redford in 1656 and their children included Isobel (b.1657), Robert (b.1659) and Thomas (b.1661). The witnesses in 1661 were Thomas Maben and James Wallace. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Thomson and their children included: Margaret (b.1670); and Janet (b.1673). James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Allan and their children included Isobel (b.1675). James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Laidlaw and their daughter Janet was baptised in 1689. The witnesses were William Bell in Whitchesters and weaver John Turnbull. James (17th C.) from Lochburnfoot, he lived at Harwoodskefoot. He was said to be a Covenanter and once carried a child to the top of Ruberslaw to be baptised. He may be the same as one of the others Jameses. James (17th/18th C.) weaver living at Slaidhills. In 1717 he married Bessie Wilson in Hawick. James (17th/18th C.) proprietor of the main inn in Denholm in 1745, when the Highlander army passed through. The officers apparently stayed at the inn. It is said that a servant stole the paybag of the army, but it was returned after there was a threat to burn down the village. James (b.c.1725) gardener, one of the 6 representative Burgesses appointed to perambulate and define the boundaries of the Burgh’s land in 1767, during court proceedings for the division of the Common.
He could be the James who married Jean Gledstains in Wilton in 1741 and had children including: Margaret (b.1743) and Betty (b.1761), baptised in Hawick; John (b.1748), William (b.1749), Thomas (b.1751), Thomas (again, b.1752), Isaac (b.1754) and Halbert (b.1756), baptised in Melrose; and Albert (b.1758), baptised in Wilton. James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Northhousehaugh in 1772 when his daughter Mary was baptised. James (18th C.) writer (i.e. lawyer) in Hawick who subscribed to 2 copies of Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He is probably the James paid by the Council in 1771 for ‘making poor’s list’. He may be the James who married Christian Wintrope (probably sister of the writer James) in 1772, with children: Walter (b.1772); Thomas (1774–1819), also a writer in Hawick; Jane (b.1775), who married Joseph Peacock; James (b.1777); Andrew (b.1779); Margaret (b.1781); and Christian (b.1785). James (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Howcleuch in 1774 and Parkhill in 1785. His children included John (b.1774) and James (b.1785). James (18th C.) weaver in Robertson Parish. He married Mary Stavert in 1790 and was recorded at ‘Eskdalesyke’. He was living at Harden in 1793 and Mabonlaw in 1800. His children included: Thomas (b.1790); Mary (b.1791); Margaret (b.1793); William (b.1795); Jane (b.1797); and John (b.1800). James (18th/19th C.) labourer at Northhouse. He witnessed a declaration made in 1816 about the birth of William Ker in 1779. He was probably related to Ker’s mother Janet Miller, perhaps her brother. James (1763/4–1835) resident of Deanburnhaugh. In 1795 he was recorded at Mabonlaw. He married Mary Stavert, who died in 1839, aged 77. Their children included: Thomas (b.1790); Mary (b.1791); William (b.1795); and Jane (b.1797). He and his wife are buried in Old Wilton Cemetery. James (18th/19th C.) grocer, spirit dealer, wine merchant and seedsman in Hawick. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He is recorded at Bridge End in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory and on the Sandbed in 1837, but does not appear on the 1841 census. He is probably the James who married Margaret Turnbull, and whose children included: Alexander (b.1801), possibly the Alexander of Dundee who also subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’; Elizabeth (b.1803); Thomas (b.1805); Isobel (b.1807); Andrew (b.1808); James (b.1814); and Walter William (b.1818); and William (b.1821). He may be the ‘servant’ of William Oliver (‘Auld Cash’) who witnessed his will in 1808. James (b.1795/6) from Wilton Parish, he was a joiner in Denholm. He was listed as a writer in directories of 1837 and 1852. In 1851 and 1861 he was on Main Street. He married Margaret Beattie and their children included James, John, Agnes and George. James (b.1809/10) born in Hawick, son of Walter and Agnes Laing. He was a mason in Denholm, living on Canongate in 1851. In 1833 he married Percy Georgina, daughter of John Leyden. Their children included: Walter (b.1833/4); Isabella (b.1835/6); Agnes (b.1837/8); John (b.1842/3); Margaret (b.1845/5); and Hannah (1849–1919), who married Richard Osborne Charlton. The family emigrated to Australia (on the ‘Boomer’) in 1853. James (19th C.) Chief Magistrate in the early 1830s. James (b.1810/1) hosiery worker in Hawick. He married Beatrice Easton in 1752 and their children included: Mary (b.1757); and Margaret (b.1763). His son Robert was a carter and died in 1798. He could be the deceased Robert whose wife Betty ‘Ekron’ died in Hawick in 1790. Robert (d.1798) son of wright Robert. He may be the Robert baptised in Hawick in 1760. He paid the cart tax in Hawick in the period 1785–91. He was a carrier in Hawick, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. His descendant could be the ‘Mr. Miller’ whose property is shown on Buccleuch Street on Wood’s 1824 map. Robert (18th C.) married Janet ‘Kier’ in Hawick in 1764. Their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1768. Robert (18th C.) married Beatrice Elliot. Their daughter Margaret was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1777. The witnesses to the baptism were Thomas Scott, Senior and Thomas Scott, Junior. Robert (19th C.) married Margaret Scott in Hawick in 1786. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Henderson and their son Robert was baptised in 1787. His widow appears to have been living with their son Robert on the Loan in 1841. Robert (18th/19th C.) Schoolmaster in Roberton in at least the period 1798–1800. He married Beatrice Scott. Their children included: Agnes (b.1790); Agnes (again, b.1792); Robert (b.1794); Beatriz (b.1796); Henrietta (b.1798); Walter (b.1800); and James Scott (b.1803). The witnesses in 1798 were James Scott, Elder (who may have been related to his wife), and William Hodge, gardener at Borthwickshilles. He is probably the same Roberton schoolmaster who is said to have died very suddenly in 1822. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elizabeth Armstrong and their son John Armstrong was baptised in 1808. Robert (b.1785) tenant at Belses Mill. He was recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory and on the 1841 and 1851 censuses. His wife was Isabella and their children included Mary, Robert, Susan, Ann, Betsy, Janet, Andrew and William. He was living at 50 High Street in 1861 and later at 7 Albion Place. In 1876 his daughter Janet had a paternity case against John Scott of Ladylaw Place. Sir Ronald Andrew Baird (1937– ) born and educated in Edinburgh, he trained as a chartered accountant and worked in London and the Midlands before returning to Scotland in 1968 to join Dawson International. He became a Director in 1976 and from 1982–95 he was Chairman and Chief Executive, helping Dawson to become one of Scotland’s leading companies, with Pringle’s being one of its main assets. However, this period also saw the decline of Pringle’s and knitwear in Hawick generally. In 1995 he was effectively forced to resign after poor performance by Dawson, and his hefty compensation package caused some protest at the time. He was Chairman of the Scottish Textile Association 1992–95. He was Chief Guest at the 1993 Common Riding. He received the C.B.E. in 1975 and a knighthood in 1993. Mr. ?? station-master of Hawick Station in the early 20th century. Simon (17th C.) resident at Hawick Shiel in 1694, according to the Hearth Tax rolls. He was also there in 1704 when he witnessed a baptism for Robert Scott, resident there. He and Walter Scott were described as tenants in Hawick Shiel in 1706 when they witnessed a baptism for James Davidson, also tenant in Hawick Shiel. He was joint tenant of Hawick Shiel (along with Walter Scott) in about 1710, as attested in evidence given regarding the state of Hawick’s Common in 1767.

In 1716 he (and Walter Nixon, also at Hawick Shiel) witnessed a baptism for James Borthwick, shepherd at Hawick Shiel. He may be the Simon, married to a Murray, who had an unnamed child baptised in Hawick Parish in 1683. Thomas (17th C.) listed as tenant at Mervinslaw in Wilton Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He may be the Thomas married to an Easton whose son John was baptised in Wilton in 1697. The witnesses were Robert and William Scott. Thomas (17th C.) joint tenant along with John ‘Bue’ in Timbersidemill according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. They were recorded as having ‘an kihl betuixt thm’. Thomas (17th/18th C.) married Marion Hobkirk in Cavers Parish in 1708. He may be the Thomas who was atOrmiston in 1709 when his son William was baptised and at Hummelknowes in 1717 when his son John was baptised in Cavers. William (b.1709), Margaret (b.1712), Marion (b.1714), John (b.1717), Robert (b.1719) and Janet (b.1721) are probably also his children. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Grizel Graham and their daughter Agnes was baptised in 1745. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Murray and their children included: Janet (b.1745); Janet (again, b.1747); William (b.1749); John (b.1751); Thomas (b.1753); Robert (b.1755); Jane (b.1760); James (b.1762); and Francis (b.1765). He could be the gardener Thomas who witnessed a baptism in 1761 for shoemaker John Oliver. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Elliot and their children included Elizabeth (b.1771), William (b.1774) and Robert (b.1777). Thomas (18th/19th C.) carrier operating between Hawick and Kelso. He paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1785–88. He was a carrier recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He was surely related to Robert, who was also a carrier. He may be the Thomas, married to Agnes Smith, whose children (baptised in Hawick) included: John (b.1775); Agnes (b.1777); James (b.1781); and James (again, b.1784). The witnesses in 1781 were shoemaker Charles Wilson and tailor Walter Pringle. He may be the Thomas who witnessed a baptism for Robert Grieve in 1763 and another for Robert Lamb in 1781. An unnamed child of his died in Hawick in 1787. He is probably the Thomas whose father John died in Hawick in 1790; if so he was probably born in 1744. Thomas (d.1794) Kirk Officer whose death is recorded in Hawick. He was Kirk Officer when he witnessed baptisms in 1784 for shoemaker James Cheap, in 1786 for John Stewart and (along with shoemaker George Gardner) for shoemaker John Wiens, in 1788 for watchmaker John Stewart, and in about 1789 for John Lamb. He may be the same as one of the other Thomases. Thomas (18th/19th C.) gardener in Hawick. His unnamed child died in 1808. Thomas (1774–1819) son of writer James. He was a ‘writer’ in 1799 when he witnessed baptisms for Joseph Peacock and Jean (his sister) in 1799, 1801, 1805, 1806 and 1808. He is probably the Thomas of Hawick recorded in a document in Selkirk in 1807 and the Hawick writer recorded in letters of 1814, preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. He is still listed as a writer when he died in Hawick. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of London. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825, and hence must have had a local connection. Thomas (d.bef. 1835) resident of Deanburnhaugh, probably a tenant farmer. His father was probably James and his brother John, joiner at Robertson. He was recorded living at Highchesters in 1801. He was Beadle at Robertson Kirk. In 1791 he married Agnes Laidlaw in Hawick, the pair both recorded being from Hawick Parish. In 1812 he secondly married Isabella Scott in Robertson. His children, baptised in Robertson Parish, included: William (b.1791), who emigrated to Bovina, New York; David (b.1795), who also emigrated to Bovina; John (b.1797), who was factor at Traquair; Christina ('Cirsty', b.1799), who moved to Bovina and married James Fletcher from Ettrick; and Berry Shaw (b.1801), named after the local minister, who joined his brothers. He lost an eye to a cow’s horn in about 1822. Thomas (18th/19th C.) tailor at ‘Parkhouses’ (i.e. Packhooses) in Wilton Parish in 1841. His wife was Mary. Walter (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isobel Wood in 1689 and their daughter Jean was baptised in 1690. The witnesses were Adam Miller and Andrew Riddell. Walter (17th C.) weaver at Lochburnfoot according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He could be the Walter, married to Margaret Glendinning, whose children baptised in Hawick Parish included: Isobel (b.1678); Janet (b.1682); and Helen (b.1684). In 1684 the witnesses were John Turnbull and William Paterson. Walter (17th C.) resident at Wester Heap according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. He may be the Walter who witnessed a baptism for Walter Cavers in Mervinslaw in 1697. Walter (17th C.) listed as tenant at Outsides among the ‘deficient’ on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. Walter (18th C.) resident at Parkhill in 1743 when his daughter Bessie was baptised in Robertson Parish in 1743. It seems likely he is the Walter who married Margaret Halliday in Robertson in 1735. He is probably the Walter who was at ‘Haugh’ in 1757 when his daughter Beatrix was baptised in Robertson. Other children born in Robertson who may have been his include William (b.1738), Isobel (b.1741), Margaret (b.1747), James (b.1749) and Mary (b.1754). Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Laing and their children included James (b.c.1810), who was a mason in Denholm. Walter (18th/19th C.) saddler recorded in Denholm in 1837. William (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. In 1663 and 1678 he is recorded paying the land tax on £27. He is probably son of Alexander, who owned the same lands in 1643. William (17th/18th C.) married Isobel Allan in Wilton in 1702. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Todshaw. His son William was baptised in Robertson Parish in 1703 William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His wife was Agnes and they had an unnamed daughter baptised in 1708. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1711 he was at Easter Groundstone when his daughter Helen was baptised. He could be the William who married Bessie (or Jean) Murray and had children Agnes (b.1716) and Jean (b.1719) baptised in Wilton. William (17th/18th C.) Hawick resident, who, along with Adam Kerr, was rebuked in 1713 for riding on stilts on the Sabbath ‘thereby causing crowds of bairns to follow them’. William (17th/18th C.) resident in Hardenburnfoot in 1717, 1720, 1722, 1724 and 1727. His children included: Robert (b.1717); Thomas (b.1720); James (b.1722); Helen (b.1724); and Janet (b.1727). He is probably the William who married Margaret Neil in 1715 or the William who married Janet Wilson in 1716. Other children, baptised in Robertson Parish, may include Marion (b.1719) and Isobel (b.1729). William (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1705 he witnessed a baptism for gardener Thomas Boyd and in 1725 another for tailor Robert Chisholme. He was recorded as ‘weaver att ye east end of Hawick’ in 1715. In 1719 he witnessed a baptism for James Dickson, the other witness being weaver David (who was surely related). Also in 1719 he servant William Scott got married in Hawick. He married Marion Huntly and their children included: Bessie (b.1712); Mary (b.1715); Janet (b.1718); and David (b.1721). The witnesses in 1712 were Bailie James Scott and merchant Thomas Hardie and in 1715 were John (surely a relative, perhaps a brother) and Bailie James Scott. William (17th/18th C.) Hawick resident who married Anna Hope. Their children included: Robert (b.1711); Margaret (b.1714); Margaret (again, b.1717); and Janet (b.1720). William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was in Denholm in 1738. His children included: Janet (b.1723); Margaret (b.1733); Thomas (b.1735); and Charles (b.1738). William (18th C.) resident at Woodburn in 1772 when his son Walter was baptised in Robertson Parish. He could be the same as the William recorded at Whithope in 1774 when his son George was baptised and at Highchesters in 1781 when his son James was baptised. He could be the William who married Janet Kedie in Robertson in 1769. Other children were probably Agnes (b.1770), John (b.1776), Thomas (b.1777) and William (b.1779). William (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was living at Wiltonburn in 1786 and 1789. Perhaps the same William married Betty Watson in 1785 and was living at Threehead in 1795 and 1798. His children probably included Robert (b.1786), Andrew (b.1789), Jane (b.1792), James Hay (b.1795) and Thomas (b.1798). William (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1794 he married Ann...
Routledge, who was also from Hawick. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Shielwood, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Bowanhill Roadside, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. William (b.c.1770) overseer at a woollen factory, living on Wilton Damside in 1841. He is probably the William living at Roughen in 1835, when listed among heads of households on Wilton Parish. He could be the William ‘Slubber’ whose son died in Hawick in 1824. He could also be the William, spinner, who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. William (18th/19th C.) member of Hawick Curling Club in 1812. This could be the same man as William the painter. William (b.1782/3) painter and glazier on the High Street, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He was on the short-list for Cornet in 1817. He could be the ‘Mr. Miller’ whose property is marked on Wood’s 1824 map at about 69 High Street, giving its name to Miller’s Close. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. In Pigot’s 1837 directory he was a painter on the Howegate. In 1841 he was living at the Sandbed with wife Margaret and children James and William. He married Margaret, daughter of slater Robert Elliot, and their children included: William (b.1836); Janet (b.1839); Jane (b.1841); Robert (b.1845); Margaret (b.1850); He may have been the William born to David and Margaret Scott in Hawick in 1782. William (d.bef. 1840) wright in Hawick. He married Helen (‘Nelly’) Buckham, and she died in 1840. They had a son James who died in 1808, another James (b.1810), as well as John (1805/6–23). William (1791–1870) eldest son of Thomas, he was probably born at Deanburnhaugh. He was a farm labourer at Milsington and lived at Easter Parkhill and Muselee (where he was tenant farmer for a while). In 1819 he married Elizabeth Scott, from Milsington. In 1825 he married Isabel Scott, daughter of Michael Dickson and Jane Jardine. The family emigrated to America in 1831, settling in Bovina, New York. Their first 3 children were born in Robertson Parish and the rest in America. Their children were: Thomas (1826–1911); Michael (1828–1915); William (1830–1912); David (b.1832), who died young; Walter (1835–1908); Berry Shaw (1837–1906); Janet (1839–70); and Gibert Dickson (1843–1931). Photographs of him and his wife exist. William (b.c.1810) blacksmith on the Sandbed. His wife was Helen and their children included Mary, Thomas, Janet, Margaret and Walter. William (b.1811/2) tailor on Orrock Place in 1851 and at 21 Howegate in 1861. He was listed as a tailor on ‘Teviot square’ in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Margaret and their children included Margaret, Mary, Sarah, Elizabeth, John and Walter Alexander. William ‘Willie’ (19th C.) one of 3 men who instigated the Hawick Home Mission in 1872. He was the first President when the Mission was formally founded in the next year. Either he or a later William was leader of the Hawick Home Mission choir for 25 years in the early part of the 20th century. Rev. William Carrick (1858–1915) born in Glasgow, son of Andrew and Margaret Carrick. He was educated at the Church of Scotland Normal School and Glasgow University, and licensed to preach in 1881. He became assistant at St. George’s, Paisley and was ordained at Howood Chapel in 1883. He was first Minister of the new Wellington Church in 1886 and first minister of the newly created St. Margaret’s Parish in 1896. He was a guest at the 1890 Colour Bussing. He was translated to Yetholm in 1898. He married Margaret Walker, daughter of Thomas McQueen in 1887, and she died in 1894. He secondly married Johanna, daughter of John Bonthron in 1901. His children included William Bonthron Carrick and John Bonthron (formerly spelled ‘Millar’ and ‘Milner’).

millers (mi-lurz) n. people in charge of corn mills. In Hawick the mill was at the Mill Port, moving to the Mill Path in the late 18th century, and the miller had grazing rights and grew corn at the Miller’s Knowes. Hawick’s millers have included: John Dempster in 1622; William Paterson 1680s; Walter Elliot, at least 1709–1714 Robert Elliot 1720s; James Scott 1750s; Adam Scott in 1784; John Ainslie late 1700s; John Oliver 1820s to 1840s; and John Young Scott mid-1800s.

the Miller’s (thu-mi-lurz) n. the Miller’s Knowes, a hilly area between Weensland Road and the Orchard Road, reached via the iron gate and path off Weensland Road, or from the Braid Road. It is named after the miller of the old Hawick corn mill, who for centuries grew corn and had grazing rights there. The area was made notorious after a man called John Webster committed suicide in the old quarry there in 1748. It has been a public park since 1892, part being purchased from the Duke of Buccleuch in 1920, and the rest gifted in 1930. It is now officially known as Miller’s Knowes Park, and offers spectacular views of the town, and is also used by children for sledging and sliding, as well as dog walkers and others. The Independent Broadcasting Authority leased part of the summit for 60 years for a microwave transmitter in 1962 (used as a relay for the Selkirk transmitter), and a BMX track was constructed in 1985 (but closed in the late 1990s due to continual bad weather). It is also home to a playground, the Millennium Stone and nearby memorial seat (to Frank T. Scott). It was once properly known as ‘Galanaw Knowes’ – ‘Sae lasses braw an’ callants a’ Where better mak’ your vows, Than where the hill o’erlooks the toon – The bonnie Miller’s Knowes’ [WFC].

Miller’s Close (mi-lurz-klōs) n. popular 19th century name for a passageway located at 69 High Street. It was named after someone by the name of Miller, whose property is marked on Wood’s 1824 map. Local historian Robert Murray’s family lived there (also written ‘Millar’s Close’).

the miller’s horse (thu-mi-lurz-hors) n., arch. proverbially cheeky animal – ‘Ee’ve the cheek o’ (or as muckle impetance as) the miller’s horse’ [GW].

the Miller’s Knowes (thu-mi-lurz-nowz) n. full name of the Miller’s – ‘And so it was in Hawick town, Nearby the Miller’s Knowes, We pledged our troth together there, With all a lover’s vows’ [WFC], ‘Some summer day again we’ll gang To wander through the verdant howes, And greet dear Memories amang The gentle, winding Millers Knowes’ [WFC].

the Miller’s Knowes Steps (thu-mi-lurz-nowz-steps) n. informal name for public staircase connecting Orchard Terrace with the Braid Road, much used by people walking in the Miller’s Knowes or Target Hills areas.

Millfield Plain (mil-field-plān) n. land-locked valley near Wooler in Northumberland, between the Tweed and Till rivers, close to the final battle site of Flodden Field. It was once the base of a prehistoric lake, and traditionally associated with King Arthur. It was also the scene of a minor battle in August 1513. Lord Home’s raiding party was ambushed by Sir William Bulmer’s men, resulting in heavy losses for the Scots. This event is also referred to as ‘the Ill Raid’ and was a forerunner for Flodden about a month later. It is also associated with the battle of Homloldon Hill and a much earlier Saxon battlefield – ‘...Not all the snow on Millfield Plain Could make those white blades white again!’ [WHO] (the name is probably p-Celtic in origin).

Millholm (mil-hōm) n. place marked as ‘Milholm’ on Sandison’s c.1590 map of the Debatable Land. It appears to be near the modern Hermitage village, and is probably the same place as Millburn. It may be the ‘mylnholme’ where Walter Turnbull is recorded as tenant in 1694 (but is hard to distinguish from Millholm, which is further to the south).

Millholm (mil-hōm-kros) n. former lands in Liddesdale, located near the Millholm Cross, south of Newcastle. In 1541 it was recorded as ‘Mylnholme’ and in the hands of the Laird of Mangerton. In 1622 there is a record that 20 sheep were stolen from Walter Scott there. In 1632 the farm here, along with Ettleton, was possessed by David Goldie and James Mitchelson. Andrew Wilson was there in 1685. It is described in a survey carried out for the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1718, when it consisted of 1553 acres, and was bounded by Gillfoot, the Liddel Water, Side, Tarras, Copshaw Park and Blackburn. The farmhouse is in approximately the modern place, with cornland between it and the river, and adjacent small fields belonging to Greens and Mangerton farms. A symbol near the farmhouse could be meant to indicate the Millholm Cross, but there is no sign of Ettleton Cemetery on the 1718 map. The farmer there in the mid-18th century was Walter Scott. James Ingles was tenant in the early 19th century. The name may simply be the ‘home mill’ for the local laird (also called ‘Milnholm’; it is ‘Mylnholme’ in 1622, ‘Mylnholmes’ in 1632, ‘Myne-holm’ in 1685 and ‘Milnholm’ in 1718; it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

the Millholm Cross (thu-mi-hōm-kros) n. ancient carved cross just south of Newcastle, on the west side of the Canonbie road. It probably commemorates Alexander Armstrong, Laird of Mangerton, who was killed in 1320 and his body laid here while his clansmen rested on their way to Ettleton churchyard. The original part of the cross is about 10 feet high, including the base, and it has a modern top. The shaft has the letters ‘MA’ and ‘AA’, together with a carved sword. The Armstrong Clan Trust erected a memorial seat (to Frank T. Scott). It was once the ‘home mill’ for the local laird (also called ‘Milnholm’; it is ‘Mylnholme’ in 1622, ‘Mylnholmes’ in 1632, ‘Myln-holm’ in 1685 and ‘Milnholm’ in 1718; it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Milloose (mil-hoos) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded in a rental roll c.1376. They are listed there as ‘Milnhouse’, with a value of 5
Mill Hoose

Mill Hoose (mil-hoose) n. 2-storey house attached to the former Corn Mill on the Mill Path, also known as ‘Hawick Mill Hoose’ or ‘the Mill Hoose’. It was rebuilt 1862–3. It has a central plastered door-piece and a simple elegance of construction. It is a grade C listed building.

Milligan (mi-lee-gin) n. Charles (19th/20th C.) son of William, and nephew of Provost Robert. He married Jane Beattie, whose mother was a Nichol of Craik and also related to Provost Renwick’s grandmother. He learned the upholstery trade from his uncle and started his own business. This was carried on as Milligan Brothers by his sons Robert and John. Christopher ‘Kit’ (?–??) wrote ‘Riccarton Junction: memories of my life in this railway village’ (1994). He was born in the village and lived there until the railway closed, when he moved to Hawick. At the site of the Riccarton Junction North signal box an information panel has been erected in his memory. George (1775–1855) from Watten in Caithness, he was a joiner, cabinet-maker and undertaker in Hawick. He was father of Provost Robert, William (farmer in Denholm) and Sophia (who married Andrew Park and emigrated to America in 1857). He was an elder in the Relief Kirk. He was listed as a joiner and cabinet-maker on Moncrieff’s Close (an old name for Tannage Close) in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was living on Tannage Close in 1841 and in 1851 he was a lodger with clockmaker John Graham. He married Jane Paterson, sister of ‘Pawkie’ Paterson, who died in 1839, aged 54 (she had previously had a child with Frenchman M. Cabourne). He died suddenly stepping into a train carriage at Hawick station the morning after the Winter Fair. Together with his son Robert, the pair ran the family cabinet-maker’s for about 75 years. George Halberdier 1856–96. He worked for the Council and was officially a ‘District Officer’. He was thus the main Halberdier, who would organise the venues, etc., as well as reading the Proclamation and delivering the letter to the Cornet Elect. John (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1612 as ‘Johnne Amulliekyn, in Cruikis’. Along with Ninian Armstrong (son of Thomas) he was found guilty of helping John, Lord Maxwell, who was on the run for murder and treason. His farm was near Langholm, possibly the Crooks next to Westerkirk. He was sentenced to be hanged in Edinburgh. Rev. Robert (1836–88) son of Dumfries hosiery manufacturer William, he studied at Edinburgh University and New College. He was ordained as 2nd minister of Wolfelee Free Kirk in 1863. He was quite evangelical in style, had a large bible class and introduced hymn singing to Wolfelee. He and his family contributed significantly to the fund for the new church building. It is said that he also laboured at the Free Church mission in Hawick and made designs for the new free Church in Newcastleton. He left Wolfelee in 1871 for the Chalmers Territorial Church in Dundee. He married Mary Spiers from Glasgow in 1863, and she died in 1906. Their children were: Jane (b.1865), born in Hobkirk, married Robert White in Lanarkshire; Amelia Baxter (b.1867), born in Hockirk, married Carl Ludwig Arter from Zurich and settled in Tehran; Phebe (b.1869), born in Hobkirk, married Rev. Frederick Arthur Taylor; and William (b.1874), born in Dundee, who was either a businessman in Tehran or moved to Alberta, Canada. He drowned while bathing at Montrose while on holiday with his family, on the eve of celebrating 25 years in the ministry. Robert (1821–1892) born on Common Riding morning, his mother was a sister of ‘Pawkie’ Paterson. He became a cabinet-maker and undertaker and was well-known for his repartee as an auctioneer. In 1851 he was listed as a joiner on Moncrieff’s Close. His later business premises were at 80 High Street, where the Liberal Club was later built. The house was set back and the yard in front was used for furniture sales. He was a Councillor for over 30 years, mainly for South High Street Ward, becoming a Magistrate (possibly for longer than anyone else), then acting-Provost in 1875, beating Edward Wilson by a single vote in the 1884 Council election and being Provost 1887–90. He was sometimes referred to as ‘the Bailyeh’. As a Councillor he was known to be blunt and outspoken. He had virtually no formal education and it is said that he rather gloried in this fact. Wilton Lodge Park was acquired during his Provostship. He was a keen Common Riding supporter, being Chairman of the Race Committee and he was the Provost referred to in J.E.D. Murray’s ‘Nicht Afore the Morn’. He was a School Board member, Parochial Board member, keen bowler (being on the founding committee of Hawick Bowling Club), Vice-President of the Curling Club, and a Conservative, although little involved in party politics. He was presented with a gold watch on his retirement as Provost. He married Margaret Hunter, daughter of the landlord of the Black Bull, and she died in 1856, aged 34. Their children were George and Robert, who died in infancy, Barbara Scott, Margaret, Mary (who married John Henderson) and Jane (who married John Little).

He secondly married Margaret, daughter of John Smith, and she died in 1897, aged 70. Their children were Robert (also an auctioneer) and Janet.
He is buried in the Wellogate, and his portrait hangs in the Town Hall (painted by Frank Wood in 1890, and said to have perhaps been damaged by a halberd!). Robert (1851/2–1931) son of William and nephew of Provost Robert. He became a cycle and motor mechanic and was known as a cheerful individual, who had great technical and creative skill, but less business acumen.
He built a 1 1/2 horse power motor quadrocycle, which was essentially an early motor car. He also built many other mechanical devices, and was a keen early promoter of pneumatic tyres. He went into partnership with William Laidlaw and later with Alexander Bell, the firm Milligan & Bell being successful through most of the 20th century.
Robert (1865–1906) son of Provost Robert and Margaret Smith. He carried on the auctioneer-ing business after his father’s death, but it gradually petered out. He married Grace Bilby and their son Robert fought in WWI in the Canadian forces. Sandy born and raised in Denholm, he worked in textile engineering design, but in 1993 became a full-time artist. He specialises in Border landscapes using pastels. William (16th C.) Vicar of Kirkton Parish. He is recorded in 1545 as ‘Amuligane’. Nothing else appears to be known about him. William (19th C.) brother of Provost Robert, he was a farmer near Denholm.
He married a Scott of Milsington and his children included: Charles, who became an upholsterer;
and Robert, a bicycle and motor engineer (also written ‘Millican’).

Milligan’s (mi-lee-ginz) n. former popular name for the business premises at 80 High Street. The Milligan family lived there, with their cabinetmaker’s shop below.

Milligan’s Peth (mi-lee-ginz-peth) n. name sometimes used in the late 19th century for Brougham Place, after the cabinet-making business of Robert Milligan, which was at the foot of the street.

Millingwud Fell (mi-lin-wud-fel) n. Milling-wood Fell, also formerly known as Millenwood Fell, a high hill in the west of Castleton Parish, near the source of the Hermitage Water. It reaches a height of 517m, with the somewhat higher Scawd Bank just to the south (it appears to be ‘Millin Wod Fell’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey, is ‘Mellenwood Fell’ on Stobie’s 1770 map and is ‘Millenwood-fell’ in the New Statistical Account).

mill lade (mil-lad) n. another term for a lade (possibly more common than simply ‘lade’).

millman (mil-mun) n. occupation in the knitwear industry, someone who mills (or washes) garments after they have been knitted and joined Together. This was generally carried out by a highly experienced worker, who could tell by the feel whether a garment had been fully milled.

Millooer (mil-noor) n. lands in Liddesdale once attached to the estate of Mangerton. In a c.1376 rental roll they are listed as ‘Milnmore’ with a value of 2 shillings.

Millpeth see the Mill Peth

the Mill Peth ( thu-nil-peth) n. Mill Path, a short street running from Slitrig Crescent to Wellogate Brae, named after Hawick Corn Mill and formerly known as Kiln Path. The original houses were constructed in 1849 and the county police station was once on this street. The lower part, including the old Salvation Army Hall, was demolished in 1968 to make way for new housing for elderly people. The Song Singing ceremony takes place here on the Friday of the Common Riding. The Cornet and mounted supporters are led up the Cross Wynd by the Drums and Fifes and at the top of the Mill Path the Cornet dismounts, thanking the riders as they pass. Then the Principles, Provost and Bailies walk down to the foot of the street for the Proclamation and the Song Singing. This takes place on a specially constructed platform on the north side (corner with Allars Crescent), which replaced the former site, the roof of Tibbie the Fiddler’s Cottage on the opposite side of the street. No 3 and the Corn Mill are listed buildings – ‘Owre the Mill Path swells the chorus, Flag and ribbons waving o’er us’ [RK].

Millport see Mill Pool

Mill Pool (mil-pool) n. pool in the Teviot near Lanton Mill. The weir there was called ‘Lanton Cauld’.

Mill Port (mil-por) n. short piece of road along the side of the Slitrig, entered by steps opposite the Tower. It was originally the site of a gateway near the old Corn Mill, which was partly washed away in the flood of 1767 and the remains demolished. The ‘undermost house of the Miln Port’ was also carried away in the flood. The steps down from the High Street date at least from the early 19th century. It once contained a number of poor lodging-houses, being the site of a murder (resulting in Hawick’s last hanging) in 1814. A thatched row of tenements, one with an outside staircase, was demolished in the 1860s (it is ‘milneport’ in 1708).

Mill Shot (mil-sho) n. former name for lands near Newton in Bedrule Parish, recorded in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. It is listed as ‘Colver Field, or Mill Shot’.

Millport Toor (mil-pőr-toor) n. former building on Mill Port. It may be the tower in Hawick ‘between the bridges’ owned by the Scotts of Whitchesters in the early 16th century. This may be the same place once called the Lieutenant’s Tower and referred to as ‘the Peill’ in 1556. In a description of the great flood of 1767 it was said that the ‘old Milnport Tower is undermined and the walls rent’. It was probably demolished after that. There is a legend that it was connected by an underground passage to Drumlanrig’s Tower.

Millrig-quarter (mil-rig-kwar-tur) n. former name for lands in Belses. They were included among lands served to Sir Thomas Ker of Cavers Carre in 1678, after the death of his son Andrew, and in 1684 when inherited by Sir Thomas’ nephew John. In 1684 it was described as 7 husbandlands of land (it is listed as ‘Mylhrigquarter’ in 1678 and ‘Milnerig quarter’ in 1684).

Millrig Sike (mil-rig-sik) n. former name for lands in Belses, described in 1684 as 3 husbandlands in Belses ‘cum rivola vocata the Milnerig Sike’. The lands were presumably by a small stream or perhaps the mill lade.

mill-rynd (mil-rind) n., arch. the iron structure supporting the upper stone in a corn mill, a coin with an impression like the image of such – ‘...being £11 money of this realme thereinto, being three 4 merk peices coneyst (i.e. coined) with the milne rynd ...’ [BR1642].

mills (milz) n., pl. corn mills, i.e. buildings used for grinding grains into flour or meal, formerly crucial parts of the feudal structure, with each barony having its own mill where the tenant farmers had to have their produce ground for a fee. These reached their peak probably in the 17th century, and then began to disappear, although 10 local ones are still listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Eventually some of them were converted into textile mills. They were almost always water powered, although in earlier times they would have been hand-mills, and animal-driven mills also existed. The following were probably all local mills: Hawick Mill; Allanhaugh Mill; Ancrum Mill; Appotside Mill; Ashkirk Mill; Bedrule Mill; Belses Mill; Boosmill (on Ale); Borthaugh Mill; Buccleuch Mill; Burnfit Mill; Cauld Mill; Chisholme Mill; Cogsmill; Craik Mill; Crawhill Mill; Dean Mill; Denum Mill; Dodburn Mill; Doveshague Mill; Falnash Mill; Hallrule Mill; Hartshaugh Mill; Harwood Mill; Hassendean Mill; Headshlaw Mill; Highchesters Mill; Hobsburn Mill; Howcleuch Mill; Hummelknowe Mill; Larriston Mill; Lilliesleaf Mill; Midlem Mill; Minto Mill; Newmill on Teviot; Newmill on Slitrig; Newton Mill (Bedrule); Philhope Mill; Raesknowe Mill; Riccarton Mill; Riddell Mill; Roughheugh/Langlands/Wilton Mill; Ruletownhead Mill; Scaw Mill/Timberside Mill; Soothdean Mill; Spittal Mill; Synton Mill; Trow Mill; Weensland Mill; Wester Mill (Wilton); Whitehaugh Mill (Liddesdale); Whithope Mill (Borthwick); Winnington Mill; and Woollee Mill (Rule). There were also small mills on some farms, powered by water from ponds. In Rulewater, for example, these were at Abbotrule, Bedrule, Billerwell, Cleuchhead, Doorpool, Easter Fodderlee, Gatehousecote, Greenriver, Hallrule, Hawthornside, Mackside, Midburn, Ruletownhead, Towno-Rule, Tythehouse, Wester Fodderlee and Westerhouses.

Mills (milz) n. George (b.1812/3) from Edinburgh, he was a coach painter living on the Back Row in 1851. His wife was Ann and their children included Jane, Margaret, James and David. Henry (18th C.) listed as postillion at Cavers in 1791, when he was working for George Douglas. He could be related to the butler John ‘Mill’, who was working at Cavers a few years earlier. James (19th C.) hid at Midshields. He is listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835 and 1840.

Millside (mil-sid) n. former name for a place near Hawick. John Cook was living there in 1767. It is unclear where this might have been, but perhaps an alternative name for the Mill Path.

Millstone Edge (mil-stān-ej) n. Millstone Edge, hill roughly between Limhope farm and Cauldcleuch Head, to the north of Tudhope Hill. It reaches a height of 567 m.

Millstone Edge (mil-stān-ej) n. Millstone Edge, hill in southern Roxburghshire, lying on the border with Dumfriesshire, north-west of Newcastleton, just south of Roan Fell. It reaches a height of 561 m and has a triangulation pillar on another slight summit to the south. There are many cairns in the area. The hill got its name from the quarry on the eastern side, where blanks for millstones were cut, one good discarded example being visible there today (there is a well-known place of the same name in the Derbyhire Peak District).

Millstane Sike (mil-stān-sikh) n. small stream in Southdean Parish on the right side of the A6088 just before Letherem. It flows into the Carter Burn. The reason for the name is unknown. But there are several quarry holes on both sides of the stream, which have been used to excavate the outcrops of sandstone found here.

mill-steep (mil-stēp) n., arch. a lever fixed to the machinery of a corn-mill, by which the millstones may be moved relative to each other (noted by J. Jamieson).

mill-yins (mil-yinz) n., pl. factory workers – ‘The mills war skailin an the mill-yins war toavin hyimm’ [ECS].

Milma (mil-ma) n. alternative name of the lands held by William Scott in Lees in the 16th century, and later by the Scotts of Lees and Burnhead. The 1788 county valuation and the Land Tax Rolls of 1811 lists ‘Mownmaw, or Millmae, commonly called Lees’, valued at £52 (the name is probably related to ‘Wester and East Moor- maw’, an old name for West and East Lees; see also Moormaw).

Milmoe (mil-mō) n. Hugh Joseph (1819/20–85) coming from Ireland, he was a pawn-broker at 2 Orrock Place. He was immortalized in the verse of the song ‘Kinly Stick’. He was in Hawick at least as early as 1871, when he had an advertisement in the Hawick Advertiser. He died at 5 Baker Street, where his brother Patrick died and his sister Bridget in 1899. There is a family with similar Christian names in County Sligo.

Milmoe’s (mil-mōz) n. former pawnshop in the Sandbed, remembered in the song ‘Kinly Stick’ – ‘... Streicht to the pawnshop that’s kept by Milmoe’ [WE].

miln (miln) n., arch. a mill, usually for grinding corn, and typically water-powered. As part of the feudal system every barony or estate would have at least one mill, with the tenants kept in a system of mulcture, i.e. they were obliged to have their corn and other grains ground there, and would pay part of the grains as a tax. Burghs and abbeys would have their own separate mills. Hawick is known to have had one since at least 1412 – ‘Heir liys ane honest man, John Deaneis, qvhav was tenant kyndlie of Havik Miln’ (from Old English, surviving longer in place names than in speech).

Milne (miln) n. Alexander ‘Wat’ (16th C.) tenant of Sir Walter Scott of Howpasley in the lands of Outersideig in 1569. Sir Walter acted as cautioner for his tenants at a meeting in Hawick, assuring that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. His surname is recorded as ‘Mylne’. Henry ‘Henry the Hadda Man’ (19th C.) fishmonger at 5 High Street.

milm-steed (miln-steed) n., arch. a mill steed, piece of land suitable for a mill – ‘It is two reason- able myle Between the milm-steed and the kirk- style’ [BR1688].

mil-sie (mil-sie) n., arch. a milk-sieve – ‘Seilin the milk throwe a milsie’ [ECS] (also written ‘milsie’; noted by E.C. Smith).

Milsington (mil-sing-tin, mil-sin-toon) n. farm along the Borthwick valley, on the right before Deanburnhaugh. It was formerly part of Has- sendean Parish before becoming part of the new Parish of Roberton in 1689/90. At that time, along with Girnwood, it was valued at about £1300. The lands belonged to John de Langlands in the 14th century. His widow Marion Conyn had a charter for these lands, along with the mill and the lands of Outerside in about 1363. The Langlands exchanged the lands for Hepe with Sir Walter Scott in 1451 (in a charter dated at Wilton Kirk). In this charter they are described as ly- ing between the lands of Borthwick on the east, Chisholme on the south, ‘Dualyrig’ and Hoscote on the west and Bellendean on the north. Wal- ter was to pay annually a red rose or six pennies Scots at the feast of St. John the Baptist. In 1453 there was a confirming charter of ‘excamb- bion’ of James of Langlands ‘frank-tenement of the town of Milsaintoun’ for Sir Walter Scott’s frank-tenement of Wester Hepe. The sasine was signed at the ‘chief messuage’ of Milsington on the last day of December in 1453. In 1492 the lands were described as being then waste, but normally valued at 10 merks (and still worth £10 Scots in 1553/4). John Cockburn was recorded there in 1502. From the late 16th century the Milsington Scotts resided there, descended from Thomas, second son of Walter ‘the Hawke’ who accompanied the ‘Brave Buccleuch’ on the rescue of Kinmont Willie. The Milsington line is con- tinued in the Scotts of Girnwood and of Newton. There were 15 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650, namely James Purdom, Margaret Nichol, Robert Purdom, Helen Nichol, Thomas Brown, Milsingtonhaugh

Bessie Inglis, Walter Scott, Adam Robson, Margaret Greenshields, Helen Rae, John Rae, Patrick Thomson, Thomas Robson, William Robson and Margaret Turnbull. It was listed among properties of the Duke of Buccleuch in 1678. The farm was in Wiltun Parish until Robertson was formed in 1689/90. William Scott paid the Hearth Tax for 3 hearths in 1694, with John Goodfellow as shepherd at that time. It was surveyed in 1718 along with other Buccleuch properties, when it covered 1259 acres and was bounded by Borthwickbrae, the Borthwick Water, Hosocate, Henwoodie common and Bellendean. James Leithead was recorded there in 1717–25, John Dickson in 1720, John Wight in 1725, James Elliot in 1756, Andrew Goodfellow in 1764 and William Scott in 1797. In the 1788 county valuation the lands here, along with Girnwood, were valued at £1305 13s 4d. From 1831 Milsington was tenanted by Charles Scott, cousin of Sir Walter the writer. In 1641 there were about 20 people living around the farm estate, as well as those in the principal farmhouse. The main road through the Borthwick used to pass directly in front of the farmhouse. A side road leaves from near here to join the Teviot valley at Brantholme Bridge. A massive Roman bronze leg of a man on horseback was found there in 1820, possibly part of the loot from some southern town, and now in the Scottish National Museum; collected with it was a brass base (with an inscribed ‘L’) of what may have been a statue of Victory, perhaps also found at Milsington. There is a local tradition of buried treasure at Pot Syke, which may be where these items were found (first recorded as ‘Milislistoun’ in 1363, it was ‘Mlysintoun’ in 1451, ‘Milsintoun’ in 1453, ‘Mlysintoun’ in 1492, ‘melsintoun’ in 1502, ‘Milsyntoun’ in 1563/4, ‘Mylsintoun’ in 1574 and 1640, ‘Milsingtoun’ in 1652, ‘Milsington’ in 1684, ‘Milsingtoun’ in 1718, ‘Milsington’ in 1764 and 1771 and ‘Milsintoun’ in 1717; there are many other spelling variants, including ‘Milsingtoun’, etc.; it is ‘Milsingtoun’ on a 1650 parish map and Blaeu’s 1654 map shows it as ‘N. Milsintoun’ and ‘O. Milsintoun’, while Jenner & Hollar’s c. 1644 map and Vischer’s 1689 map of Scotland have it as ‘Milsintoun’ and Adair’s c. 1688 manuscript appears to show ‘Milsingtoun’; the name probably derives from ‘Maelsiuthan’s farm’, where ‘Maelsiuthan’ or ‘Myslan’ is a personal name introduced by the Norwegians from Ireland).

Milsingtonhaugh (mil-sin-toon-hawch) n. former farmstead near Milsington. It is recorded in 1790 as ‘Milsington Haug’, when John Anderson paid the cart tax there and in 1797, when Robert Oliver was farmer there. Walter Scott was living there in at least 1793–95.

Milsington Hill (mil-sing-tin-hil, mil-sinto-hil) n. hill just to the west of Milsington farm in the Borthwick valley. It has two peaks, both reaching to 263 m. The western one contains the remains of an earthwork, about 85 m across; it consists of a bank and ditch, best preserved at the south corner.

Milsingtonshankfit (mil-sin-tin-shawngk-fi’) n. former cottage in the Borthwick valley, situated at the beginning of the road to Milsington farmhouse (it is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Milsingtonshiel (mil-sin-toon-sheel) n. former farmstead near Milsington. It may be the same place sometimes called ‘Whaupshaw’. James Hinton was there in at least 1716–22, James Scott in 1717–23, Walter Henderson in 1726, Walter Scott in 1741 and Thomas Rae in 1762–71. Farm worker John Pringle and family were there in 1841 (it is ‘Milsingtonshieils’ in 1716, ‘Milsingtonsheils’ in 1721, ‘Milsingtontown Shiel’ in 1741 and ‘Milsingtonshiel’ in 1771).

Milestone Path (mil-, mil-stan-pawth) n. hill between Ashybank and Honeyburn on the A698, and also the name for a field and wood there. This was presumably once part of the original route between Hawick and Denholm, before the lower route was built for coaches. The oak wood was partly removed when the course of the main road was changed in the late 20th century, but was replanted.

Milton (mil-tin) n. possibly a former alternative name for Rawflat.

Milton (mil-tin) n. village in Dumfries & Galloway (actually one of several with this name) off the A74 south of Moffat, built on the site of a large Roman fort established around the year 80. There is a possible military road from there to the fort near Aikwood Tower.

Minti (min'-i, min-ti) n. Minto, a village, for-er estate and parish about 6 miles north-east of Hawick and 1 1/2 miles north of Denholm. In 1383 it was included in a lists of lands from which rentals were paid to the Ward of Roxburgh Castle.
The village was burned in a raid about 1490. It was burned again by the Earl of Hertford’s men in 1545, including ‘Mynto Crag, Mynto town, Mynto place, Weast Mynto, the Crag End’. Some of the old village can still be made out, but the present one was laid out by William Playfair for the 2nd Earl of Minto in the early 19th century. The move was arranged so that the village could not be directly seen from Minto House. It contains the William Playfair 1830/1 gothic-style church, renovated in 1934, as well as the Thomas Clapperton War Memorial. Nearby is the demolished Minto House, with grounds containing the remains of an old Norman Church with an ancient burial ground, as well as an 18-hole golf course. The estate was owned by the Turnbells from at least 1329, although at least part of the barony was granted to the Stewarts of Jedworth in 1390, and then disputed in the next century. James Langlands appears to have held half the rights to the markets there in 1476. In 1501 William Turnbull had a dasine for $\frac{2}{3}$ of the lands, with Alexander Stewart having a dasine for the other $\frac{1}{3}$. The half baronies were held by the Turnbells and Stewarts until the early 17th century. John Turnbull of Minto was a significant leader of the Turnbells in the late 16th century. In 1643 the lands owned by Turnbull of Minto were valued at £2006 13s 4d and consisted of 'Minto, town, mains, mill, kaims, with teinds and pertinents'; there was also £102 of land owned by Turnbull of Tofts and the lands of Craigen and Deanfoot, owned by Gilbert Elliott and valued at £660. In 1678 the estate of the Laird of Minto was valued at £2008 13s 4d. Craigen and Deanfoot were sold to Gilbert Elliott of Craigend in about 1640 and later combined with part of Minto, which continued to pass to Elliotts until sold by Gilbert Elliott in 1687. The rest of the lands passed to the Scotts of Harwood in 1673, then Walter Riddell from Edinburgh in 1676, briefly Thomas Rutherford and eventually the Scotts of Harden in 1691, with Gideon Scott of Highchester having a confirming charter for the Barony in 1695. At this time the village became a Burgh of Barony, and the existing Common is also mentioned. Markets were to be held on Wednesdays and fairs on 14th June and 14th November. The lands were sold to the Elliots in 1703. In 1707 the whole Barony was valued at £2768 13s 4d. In the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls the residents listed were Robert Brown, John Dickson, William Turnbull (smith), James Oliver and (another) William Turnbull. In 1811 the 'Barony (being the whole of the old Parish) of Minto' was valued at about £2800; the full Parish at that time was valued at £5163. An ancient bronze axe was found nearby about 1888 and is now in the National Museum of Scotland. A spindle whorl from here is in Hawick Museum. Note that there are now several Mintos elsewhere in the world, all ultimately deriving from this small area (but many via the Earl of Minto). The village also gave rise to a surname – 'In lines of crystal shine the wandering rills Down the green slopes of Minto's sun-bright hills' [JL] (the name probably derives from the Old Welsh for a hill, plus 'how' for a hollow, or Old English 'hoh', also meaning hill; it is recorded from very early times, with the 'd' changing to a 't' by 1150, when it is 'Munetov' and 1166, when it is 'Munethov'; it is thereafter 'Mintov', etc., with the middle 'h' disappearing by the end of the 14th century; it was formerly often written 'Mynto'; it is 'Mynetowe' in 1296, 'Mynethow' in 1380, 'Mentov' in 1383, 'Mintou' and 'Myntow' in 1390, 'Mintow' in c.1400, 'Mintow' in 1461, 'Mynto' in 1491/2, 'mynto' in 1493, 'Myneto' in 1501 and 'Mynto' in 1508, 1511, 1516, 1528, 1535, 1548, 1553/4 and 1576; 'Mintotour', 'Mintocraig' and 'Minto K.' are marked on Blaeu's 1654 map).

Minti (min-‘i, min-ti) n. (Minto) Andrew ‘Dand’ (16th C.) listed as one of the tenants of Gavin Elliot in Skelfhill and neighbouring farms in a bond of security signed in Hawick in 1569. His name is recorded as ‘Dande Mynto’. He may have been an ancestor of later local Mintos. Andrew (17th/18th C.) merchant in Selkirk. In 1720 he was charged with assault and also with throwing stones at a dog. In 1723 he was recorded in 2 legal cases involving debt and another for an assault. He may be the son of Walter who was charged with assault, threatening to kill someone and breach of the peace (along with his father) in Selkirk in 1719. Andrew (b.1734) 2nd son of George and Agnes Forrest. He was a resident of Southdean Parish, perhaps a mason like his father and brother Archibald. He firstly married Janet Oliver in 1758 and secondly married (in an irregular marriage of some sort) Betty ‘Boal’ (probably Bowie) in 1776. His children included: George (b.1775); John (b.1779); Nelly (b.1781); William (b.1783); Andrew (b.1785); Betty (b.1790); and Archibald (b.1794), who was baptised in Hobkirk. All except the last were baptised in Southdean Parish. Andrew (b.1785) born in Southdean Parish, son of Andrew and Betty ‘Boal’. He was a farmer at Greenhouse in Lilliesleaf Parish. In 1861 he was 'Fundholder & Retired Farmer', living in Lilliesleaf village. In 1817 he married Janet Dalgliesh, and she died in 1852. Their children included: Alexander (b.1818); Andrew (b.1820), born in Hawick, who was a cattle dealer; Elizabeth (b.c.1823); and John (b.c.1826). Andrew (1817–1903) son of William, he was born in Hobkirk Parish. He worked for a while as a servant at Weens. In 2050 1861 he was a ploughman, living at Cleughhead Cottages. He was part of the original congregation of Wolfelee Free Kirk in 1849. His wife was Catherine and their children included Janet, Jean, Ann and Margaret. One of his daughters married Mr. Kennedy of the Tower Hotel in Hawick. Archibald (b.1732) son of George and Agnes Forrest, was baptised in Minto Parish and was a mason in Abbotrule. In 1766 he married Margaret (or Mary) Turnbull. Their children included: Margaret (b.1767); Agnes (b.1769); Nelly (b.1774); George (1776–1860); and Robert (b.1781). In 1767 he was living at Midguard. David (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1527 as owner of a tenement in Selkirk. This was near the tenement of Thomas, who was surely related. In 1535 he purchased a tenement from William Ker; Thomas was one of the witnesses and probably a relative. He may be the David who resigned a tenement in 1541 to his younger son John and another tenement in favour of his 2nd son James in 1545. He may be the David ‘elder’ who was involved in a transaction with David, smith, in 1541. He is probably the deceased David whose son John inherited his property in Selkirk in 1542/3. David (15th/16th C.) smith recorded in Selkirk in 1541. He was son and heir of the deceased James. David (17th C.) resident at Doecluch according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. David (17th/18th C.) carrier in Hawick. He is probably the ‘Dauied Mintoe’ recorded in the Hawick Town Book of 1731; he was paid ‘for 3 lod of claye for the well, 5s. 6d. Scots’. He was recorded as a carrier when he witnessed baptisms for Walter Scott in Crumhaugh in 1708, for wright John Pringle in 1709, for wright John Pringle in 1716, and for ‘Tenent in Hawick’ David Wilson in 1721. He married Janet Glendinning and their children included: Margaret (b.1691), who probably married William Riddell in 1714; John (b.1700); Walter (b.1701); Beatrix (b.1703); David (b.1706); Robert (b.1708); and David (again, b.1713). The witnesses in 1700 were Baille Walter Graham and weaver James Wight, in 1703 were gardener James Falside as merchant Thomas Waugh, in 1706 were ‘vintner’ Francis Elliot and weaver Robert Wight, and in 1713 were Baille (of the Regality) Walter Elliot and ex-Baille Robert Ruescastle. David (17th/18th C.) recorded in a bond in Selkirk in 1721 with Walter. He is also recorded in Selkirk in 1726, when he was paid for building bridges, renovating the mill dam and other construction work. In 1727 he was paid for working on the school in Selkirk, in 1730 for further wright work, in 1745 for mason work, in 1749 for work on bridges, in 1752 for work on the school and well, in 1753 for work on the Town House and for further work in 1761. David (18th C.) responsible for dealing with (i.e. moving on) crippled beggars for the Hawick Kirk Session in the early-to-mid 1700s. He could be the David, married to Janet Glendinning, whose son Walter was born in 1701. David (18th C.) tenant in Fairnilee Bridgend. In 1763 he represented some residents of Midlem in a case in Selkirk. Perhaps the same David is recorded in a receipt in Selkirk in 1758. David (18th/19th C.) dyker recorded in a document in Selkirk in 1814. William is also mentioned and so presumably related. Francis (17th/18th C.) thatcher in Selkirk, recorded in 1708. Perhaps the same Francis was a wright recorded in Selkirk (along with John) in 1727 and recorded in a receipt in 1732. Francis (18th C.) wright in Selkirk. He was paid in 1762 for supplying timber for the Corn Mill in Selkirk and had a complaint against him in 1774. Gavin (b.1841) born in Wilton Parish, son of William and Rebecca Pow. He was a blacksmith in Ashkirk, later moving to the Carlisle area. In 1861 he was at Blacklee, Hobkirk, working with blacksmith William Pow. In 1866 he married Elizabeth Telfer in Ashkirk Parish. Their children included Margaret (b.1867), William (b.1869), James Simpson (b.1872), Andrew (b.1874), Rebecca (b.c.1880), Elizabeth (b.c.1885) and Charlotte (b.c.1885). George (17th C.) listed on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls for Hassendean Parish. He paid tax for a kiln, as well as a hearth, suggesting he was a tradesman of some sort. Although unclear, he may have been at Burnfoot in Wilton. He could be the George who married Isobel Lorraine in Ashkirk in 1688, and who had a son Thomas (b.1689) baptised in Ashkirk; the witnesses to the baptism were William Minto and Andrew Fletcher. It seems likely he was an ancestor of the George recorded in 1731. George (18th C.) mason in Hassendean, probably a descendant of the earlier George who lived in Hassendean. He was a direct ancestor of the later minister at Lilliesleaf of the same name and also of more than half of the Mintos living in Roxburghshire in the 19th century. In Minto Parish in 1731 he married Agnes (b.1712), daughter of Archibald Forrest of Huntlaw. Their children included: Archibald (b.1732), who was baptised in Minto Parish and was also a mason; Andrew (b.1734), baptised in Ancrum Parish; John (b.1737), who married Margaret Scott in 1764 and may have moved away from the Borders; and twins George and William (b.1740), who may have died in infancy. Their 4 younger children were baptised in Ancrum Parish.

George (18th C.) tenant farmer at Langside. In 1752 he married Barbara, daughter of Mark Chisholme and Barbara Bennet. He later lived at Ruletownhead, which had been owned by his in-laws. His children, baptised in Southdean Parish, included: Markie (b.1755), named after her grandfather, who married William Bell of Menslaws; and William (b.1756), who was an officer in the Royal Marines.

George (18th C.) married Isabella Sharp in Bedrule Parish in 1782. He is probably different from the George who had children in Southdean Parish (although this is unclear). William (b.1794) and Margaret (b.1796), baptised in Bedrule Parish, were probably his children.

George (1759) son of Andrew and Janet Oliver. He is probably the George who got married in Southdean Parish in 1787 (perhaps to Mary Moscrop). Probably the same George had the following children baptised in Southdean Parish: Betty (b.1788); Janet (b.1790); and Isabella (b.1792).

George (1776–1860) son of mason Archibald. He is said to have farmed Abbotrule Glebe. He may be the George, part of whose farm in Southdean Parish was owned by Charles Kerr of Abbotrule, according to the Land Tax Rolls of 1811. He was great-grandfather of Rev. George of Lilliesleaf. In 1803 he married Helen Murray and their children included: Margaret (b.1803); Archibald (b.1806); Agnes (b.1807); James (b.1811); Ellison (b.c.1811); Robert (b.c.1818); Thomas (b.c.1820); and George (b.c.1827). Archibald (b.1806), baptised in Southdean Parish, was probably his son.

Rev. George (1864–1947) from Greenock, he was ordained as minister of Lilliesleaf United Free Kirk in 1897 and remained until 1908. He came from a long line of local Mintos, going back at least to his great-great-grandfather George, who was a mason in Hassendean. 2 months after arriving in Lilliesleaf he married Eliza, daughter of Ewen Sutherland. Their children were: Marjorie (b.1898); George Walker (b.1899); Ewen Sutherland (b.1902); Archibald Herbert (b.1905); Robert Macfie (b.1908); and Kenneth Ross (b.1910).

HeLEN (b.1793) dealer in small wares on Orrock Place. She was recorded there in 1841 and 1851, when she was a ‘Caledoner’ (i.e. presser of fabrics). Her daughter Betsy Grieve assisted her. By 1861 she was ‘Keeper of a Mangle’ on Factory Close.

Henry (15th C.) had a sasine for a half merk land in Selkirk in 1545.

James (16th C.) recorded as witness to transactions in Selkirk in 1535 and 1539. Probably the same James was son to the deceased Thomas when he purchased ½ of Ladylands in Selkirk in 1536.

James (16th C.) 2nd son of David. In 1543 C.) baker in Selkirk, recorded in 1620.

James (17th C.) resident of Minto Parish who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Perhaps the same James witnessed a baptism in Ashkirk Parish in 1691 for Andrew Lockie.

John (15th C.) resident of Minto. In 1493 Walter and Adam Turnbull in Hornshole were able to ‘compone’ for several crimes, including the theft of 16 sheep from him. He was probably related to William who was also ‘in mynto’ at the same time.

John (d.bef. 1502) recorded at the 1502 Justice-aire in Jedburgh. Richard Davidson in Primside was convicted of commuting with his son John, who was ‘at the horn’ for his murder. His name is recorded as ‘Johannis Mynto’; it is not stated where he was from, but he could be the same as the resident of Minto.

John (16th C.) recorded as ‘John Mynto, younger’ when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk in 1543. He may be the same as John ‘elder’ who is recorded in Selkirk in 1579, 1579/80 and 1581. He is probably the Burgess John who made a financial bond in Selkirk in 1580.

John ‘younger’ is also recorded in 1579, 1580 and 1581, and probably his son, while Janet may have been his daughter.

John (17th C.) recorded in 1672 when his ‘arable lands and crofts’ in Selkirk are mentioned.

John (17th C.) resident at Easter Essenside on the Hearth Tax roll in 1694. He witnessed a baptism in 1690 for William Scott and others in 1694 for James Scott and Janet Scott, for William Scott and Margaret Scott and for Andrew Raither. He is probably the John, married to Isobel Sword, whose daughter Margaret was baptised in Ashkirk in 1687.

John (17th/18th C.) wright recorded in Selkirk in 1727, along with Francis. They were probably both related to Thomas. Probably the same John was recorded in a receipt in 1731 and was paid for repair work in Selkirk in about 1745 and for making up tables of weights in 1762 and 1767. He signed an admission to the Hammermen’s Incorporation in 1758.

John (18th C.) recorded as master of the English School in Selkirk in at least 1752–72. Perhaps his widow may have been the ‘Bell Minto’ who wrote to the Burgh of Selkirk in 1784.

John (b.c.1816) farmworker in Castleton. In 1841 he was an agricultural labourer at about 29 South Hermitage Street, but by 1851 was shepherd at Broadlie
Minti

Burnfoot. He married Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’) Little and their children included Jean (b.c.1835), Elspeth (‘Eppy’, b.c.1837), William (b.c.1839), Margaret (b.c.1843) and Helen (b.c.1851). John (18th/19th C.) resident of Minto Parish. In 1822 he married Helen Richardson, who was from Hawick. John (18th/19th C.) Burgess of Selkirk. In 1527 he including stealing a black ox from him. Thomas in Raperlaw was charged with several crimes, into Robert de Brus.

Robert (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. In 1738 he witnessed a baptism for fellow shoemaker William Riddell. Robert ‘My Lord Minto’ (d.1776) Hawick resident whose death is recorded with an unusual nickname. He could be the Robert who married Betty (or Agnes) Paterson and had children Janet (b.1736), Margaret (b.1739) and Agnes (b.1743). Alterneratively he could be the Robert ho married Margaret Scott in 1742 and whose children included Agnes (b.1743).

Robert (b.1781) baptised in Southdean Parish, younger son of Archibald and Margaret Turnbull. He married Isabella Bicket and they had 3 children baptised in Bowden Parish: Janet (b.1805); Archibald (b.1806); and William Bicket (b.1812). Robert (19th C.) son of the farmer of Abbot-rule Glebe. He became a ship’s steward, voyaging across the Atlantic, but he returned to help on the farm. He married Mary Telfer (daughter of the tenant of Roundabouts), and they lived at Kelso, Whittle Toll, Dykeraw and Wolfelee Glen. He was a handyman on Wolfelee estate before being appointed gamekeeper and moving into the new lodge there. After retiring he moved to Mack-side old Toll Bar. He lived to the age of about 80, as did his wife. Their children were George, Euphemia, Ellen, Mary and Jessie (who married Robert Tinlin). Roger (12th C.) witness to a charter of Ranulph de Souils about 1150. He is recorded as ‘of Munetov’, along with Simon his brother. In 1166 he was ‘Roger de Munetov’ when he was witness to a grant by King William to Robert de Brus. Thomas (15th C.) tenant of Minto Common. In 1494/5 James Davidson in Raperlaw was charged with several crimes, including stealing a black ox from him. Thomas (15th/16th C.) Burgess of Selkirk. In 1527 he is recorded resigning his tenement of land to his wife Elizabeth Notman, as well as reginging an annual rent of the tenement of David (who was surely a relative). The nearby tenement of David was also mentioned in 1527. In the same year he witnessed a document in Selkirk. He was owner of a rig of land in Selkirk in 1530/1. He is still recorded as owner of a tenement in 1531 and 1534. In 1532 he was ‘elder’ when he witnessed a sasine in Selkirk and also resigned a tenement to Thomas ‘younger’ (presumably his son). In 1535 he was one of the ‘landmaires’ cho-

Thomas (16th C.) probably son of Thomas. He was recorded as ‘younger’ when he was a witness in Selkirk in 1580 and 1580/1. In 1581 he was warned to ap-ppear to receive redemption money at Selkirk Kirk.

Thomas (d.bef. 1539) resident of Selkirk, perhaps son of the earlier Thomas. He is recorded in 1539 when a transaction involving tenants in Ashkirk and Falside was done in his house. Later in 1539 he was deceased when his wife Marion Minto and

Thomas (15th C.) resident of Selkirk is mentioned in 1536. Thomas (16th C.) probably son of Thomas. He was recorded representing someone in a court case in Selkirk in 1561. He is probably the Thomas ‘elder’ who was a Burgess of Selkirk in 1581 when he had an agreement involving his wife ‘Bigie’ Murray and son Thomas. He is probably also the Thomas who rig in Selkirk is mentioned in 1581. Thomas (16th C.) son of the farmer of Abbot-rule Glebe. He became a ship’s steward, voyaging across the Atlantic, but he returned to help on the farm. Also in 1581 he was involved in an agreement involving his father Thomas, involving a loan and the transfer of land in Selkirk and another agreement over the purchase of a horse. He is probably the Burgess of Selkirk who witnessed another transaction in 1581. Thomas (17th/18th C.) wright in Selkirk. He is recorded in 1727 when he was paid for mending the Selkirk Tollbooth. Also in 1727, along with William Scott, he received money for ‘work at the milns, bridges, mealmarket and house’ in Selkirk. Wrights Francis and John are also mentioned in 1727 and surely related. In 1729 he provided a bell for the top of Selkirk Schoolhouse. He was involved in a case for recovering a debt in 1737. In 1741 and 1742 he carried out other ‘builder work’ and ‘smithy work’ for the Burgh of Selkirk. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. His children included Janet

(b.1726), William (b.1730), Agnes (b.1732), John (b.1734) and Thomas (b.1738). Thomas (19th C.) coach driver who was an early member of Allars Kirk. He is described as a ‘chaise driver’ in 1829, when one of his children died. Walter (17th C.) resident of Minto Parish who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. He may be related to James, who is also listed. Walter (17th C.) listed at Highchers on the Hearth Tax records of 1694. He paid tax for 3 hearths, suggesting he was either a significant tenant or a tradesman of some sort. Walter (17th/18th C.) recorded in Selkirk in 1719 when he and his son Andrew were charged with assault. Perhaps the same Walter was recorded in a bond in Selkirk in 1721 with David. William of Minto (15th C.) notary in 1431 for the ‘instrument’ transferring the lands of Heap between the Langlands and the Scotts. He is recorded as ‘Willelmus de Myntow presbyter Glasguensis diocesis’. William (15th C.) resident of Minto. In 1493 Walter and Adam Turnbull in Hornshole were able to ‘compone’ for several crimes, including the theft of a cow from him. He was probably related to John who was also ‘in mynto’ at the same time. William (18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. He married Agnes Scott in 1726 and his son William was baptised in 1727. Lt.-Col. William (1756–1827) born at Rueltownhead, son of George and Barbara Chisholme, he was christened in Southdean Parish. He served in the Royal Marine Artillery. Joining as a Lieutenant in 1779, he became Captain in 1796 and Major in 1801. He was wounded 3 separate times, once in 1783 while fighting the French frigate Sybille on board the British Magicienne, and another time in 1801 when in a battalion attached to the Army at Aboukir in Egypt. He later served in the Royal Marines Artillery and retired in 1826. In 1812 he married Grace Little, but they had no children. William (b.1788) born in Southdean Parish, son of Andrew and Betty ‘Boal’. He was a mason living at Forkins in the 1841 to 1861 censuses. In 1815 he married Janet Oliver (from Castleton) and their children included: George (b.1819); Betty (b.1822); Jessy (b.1824); John (b.1827); Helen (b.1829); Archibald (b.1831); Robert (b.1833); Margaret (b.1835); Peter (b.1837); Agnes (b.1840); and James (b.1840). Andrew (b.1817), who worked at Weens and was ploughman at Cleughhead Cottages, was probably also his son. William (b.c.1801) born in Southdean Parish, he was a labourer living at Doorpool in 1841, Binneyknowe in 1851 and Cleughhead Cottages in 1861. He was surely related to the mason of the same name, who was his near neighbour, as well as Andrew, who also lived at Cleughhead. His wife was Mary and their children included Margaret, Agnes, Archibald, James, Robert Robina and Janet. He was already widowed by 1861. He may be the William, son of Agnes (or Nanny), baptised in Southdean Parish in 1802. Another labourer of the same name, son of mason George, died in Lanton in 1865. William (b.1812) born in Castleton, son of William and Margaret Elliot. In 1841 and 1851 he was a labourer living at Borthanh Cottages. In 1861 he was ‘General Servant Ploughman’, living at Highchester Cottage in Roberton Parish. He married Rebecca Pow and their children included: William (b.1835); Andrew (b.1838); Gavin (b.1841); Mary (b.1843); William Bruce (b.c.1845); George (b.1847); Margaret (b.1850); and James O. (b.1853). William (b.c.1815) born in Southdean Parish, he was a farm labourer. In 1851 he was visiting William Scott, farm servant at Silverbuthall. William (b.1834/5) from Langholm, he was blacksmith at Hewswbridge in Castleton Parish in 1861. He was recorded as resident at Steele Road in 1868. His wife was Jessie. William (19th C.) elder of Newcastleton U.P. Kirk in the latter part of the 19th century. William (19th/20th C.) proprietor of a cab business on Oliver Crescent around 1900. He married Ellen, daughter of James Grieve, tailor at Bonchester Bridge (formerly written ‘Mintoe’ and other variants).

Minti Bank (min’-i-bangk) n. former name for lands in Minto Parish that were part of Deanfoot. It probably corresponds to the place labelled ‘Deanfoot Bank’ on modern maps (it is ‘Mintobank’ in 1780).

Minti Brae (min’-i-brâ) n. name sometimes used for the road north of Denholm leading to Minto, particularly the part across the river. There was a saw mill here in the 19th century.

Minti Cleuchheid (min’-i-klooch-head) n. Minto Cleuchhead, farmstead recorded in the late 17th and early 18th centuries when it was farmed by the Turnbulls. Stepeh Turnbull was there in 1692. The house there was a home of the Earl of Minto’s family in the 20th century and is still a family residence. The ‘Minto Stone’ was moved there in 2013/4 (also written ‘Cleughhead’ etc.).

Minti Cragfit (min’-i-krawg-fi’) n. Minto Cragfoot, former name for an area at the foot of the Crags. A story is told (in the 1820 Edinburgh Magazine and repeated in 1914 in ‘Highways and Byways in the Border’) of a mother from here having her infant swapped for a changeling by the fairies. The minister of Bedrule (Rev. Borland) was called and administered a brew of boiled fox-gloves (i.e. digitalis!) to the infant, and locked it in a barn for the night, after which it apparently returned to be ‘as healthy and cheerful as it formerly was’.

Minti Crags (min’-i-krawg) n. Minto Crags, a prominent rocky outcrop overlooking the Teviot valley, just north-east of Minto village. The crags can be seen in a sketch of 1790, before the plantations of the 1st Earl of Minto covered them. They reach 224 m (729 ft) and have Fatlips Castle perched on the steep side, and Barnhills Bed below. Additionally there is some evidence for a fort in the region to the north and north-west of Fatlips; the ramparts were probably built to take advantage of the natural rock outcroppings, and have been partly obliterated by quarrying and planting – ‘On Minto-crags the moonbeams glint, Where Barnhill hew’d his bed of flint’ [SWS], ‘...athwart the fer seide o Teiot’s flooery vale, Mintih Craigs (haappeet an rowed in their leafy maud) brenrt raise ther skerrs’ [ECS] (also sometimes ‘Craigs’).

Minti Craig see min’-i-krāg n. former fortified house at Minto. ‘Mynto Crag’ was burned by the Earl of Hertford’s men in 1545. In 1550 it is listed as the limit of the half of the Middle Marches to which Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme was appointed Warden. The farm there was known by the same name and owned by the Turnbulls in the early 19th century the village was moved so that it was 4 storeys in height and was called and administered a brew of boiled fox-gloves (i.e. digitalis!) to the infant, and locked it in a barn for the night, after which it apparently returned to be ‘as healthy and cheerful as it formerly was’.

Minti Craigend see min’-i-krāg-end n. former name for a farmstead near Minto Crags, and also called simply Craigend. Note that the lands called ‘Minti Craig’ were probably adjacent, but distinct. Gilbert and William Johnstone, Simon Leitch, Margaret Ord and Thomas Young were there in 1502. Thomas Porteous leased the lands in 1686. Patrick Bowie, Thomas Brown, William Cunningham, John Haliburton, Robert Minto, Walter Renwick, John Stavert, Thomas Wilkie and Robert Young were there in 1694

Minti Craigs see Minti Crags

Minti East Ludge (min’-i-cest-luj) n. former lodge house for Minto estate, situated to the south of Minto Crags.

Minti Gairdens (min’-i-gair-dinz) n. road in Denholm off the Canongate, with private housing built in the 1970s.

Minti Glen (min’-i-glen) n. narrow valley around a stream passing from Minto to the Teviot, and also the name of a farm there. The glen was once laid out with walks, as part of the Minto estate and contained many planted trees, including some of the first larches to be imported into Scotland. The small lake near its head was artificially created in 1735 as part of the landscaping for Minto House.

Minti Golf Club (min’-i-golf-klok) n. golf club that runs a course near Minto village, established in 1928. It is the closest course other than the Vertish and is 5,393 yards, par 69.

Minti Hills (min’-i-hilz) n. Minto Hills, better known as the Mintis, which are easily seen from points around Hawick. The southern peak reaches a height of 276 m (905 ft), with a triangulation pillar on top, while the northern hill is 253 m (837 ft) and topped by a cairn. This was also the name of a farm, which is recorded in 1779 being valued at £365 2d. In the Land Tax Rolls of about 1811 it was owned by Lord Minto and liferented by the late Lord Westhall – ‘While the Mintis Hills in their verdure seen Seem reflecting the light frae their mantle green’ [TC], ‘Now, the ‘ern-horse’ rins roond ahint the Mintih Hills …’ [ECS] (the word ‘Minto’ probably derives from the Old Welsh for hill, ‘mynydd’ together with the Old English for hill, ‘hoh’, and hence ‘Minto Hills’ means the same thing thrice!).

Minti Hoose (min’-i-hoos) n. Minto House, former seat of the Elliots of Minto for 2 centuries. Existing from the 16th century, the house was charged for having 8 hearths in 1694, and 46 windows in 1748. It was substantially remodelled 1738–43 to a V-plan by William Adam, and essentially completed in 1809–14 by Archibald Elliot (from Ancrum). The ‘Lands round Minto House’ were valued at £72 17s 6d in 1788 and in 1811 (with the garden and nursery, and several other pieces of land listed separately). The house was altered again in 1837 by William Playfair and terraced gardens were landscaped by Sir Robert Lorimer in the period 1894–1906. In the early 19th century the village was moved so that it could not be seen from the windows of the mansion; the exact choice of location for the house has been considered puzzling, and may have been related to this. It was 4 storeys in height and the top floor contained a sort of museum, showing artefacts related to the family. A watercolour sketch of the house exists from 1792. After being abandoned by the Elliot family, the house was used in the War effort, then rented to serve as the location of a private girl’s school, Craigmount School from 1952 until 1962. The school then purchased the house, but went into liquidation in 1966 and the house became derelict. In 1972 Viscount Melgund (later Earl of Minto) outbid another purchaser and immediately applied for permission to demolish this listed building, which was finally given by the County Council. It was partially demolished in 1973, becoming a roofless shell, and there followed lengthy debate about its fate. There was a plan in 1991 to dismantle the remaining walls and ship them to Japan, stone by stone, although costs proved prohibitive. Demolition re-started in 1992, including burning of internal timbers, despite being re-listed category ‘A’, and there is now little left. This episode is sometimes referred to as the ‘Minto Debacle’, and influenced subsequent policies on preserving historical buildings in Scotland. The grounds contain the remains of a Norman church and burial enclosure, as well as the golf course. There were other buildings associated with the mansion and school, including a residential building, stable (later gymnasium), cottage (used for laundry) and dairy.

Minti Kames (min’-i-kámz) n. Minti Kames, farm just north of the Minto Hills, adjacent to the old railway line. It is probably the ‘Place of Camys’ referred to in 1502, when Peter Turnbull and other Turnbull outlaws were accused of stealing oxen, cows, horses and mares from John Grahamslaw there. It may also be the ‘camys’ where in the same year, 2 Croziers were convicted of stealing sheep from James Dalgleish. John Young ‘in the Cames’ in Minto Parish was hanged for murder in 1580. ‘Dand’ Davidson in ‘Kames’ is recorded in 1580/1 and 1595. David (perhaps an error for ‘Dand’) Davidson ‘of the Kaims’ was recorded in 1601 when he was maimed in Jedburgh in a fight than was part of the feud between the Turnbulls of the Minto area and the Kers. ‘Kaines and Minto hills’ were owned by Scott of Harden and farmed by William Mather in the late 17th century. William Douglas was ‘late tenant’ in 1743. In 1779 the lands were part of the Minto estate, valued at £219 2d and liferent by Sir John Dalrymple. The farm was owned by Lord Minto according to the 1811 Land Tax Roll. John Thorburn was farmer there in 1797 when he had 12 horses. John Turnbull was farmer in 1841 and David Brockie in 1861. Crop marks visible from the air in a field to the north-west may be old boundaries and rig lines. There is a bridge to the farm, over the former railway line, another over the line near Kames North Loch, and one more for a track to the south. To the north-west of Kames South Loch is a field with signs of an ancient enclosure (it is ‘Kamys’ in 1576, ‘the Cames’ in 1595, ‘the Kams’ in 1601 and ‘Kaims’ in 1811; probably the same place is marked ‘Keems’ and ‘Kennmer’ on Blaeu’s 1654 maps, and although not exactly in the right location this appears to be a transcription error from Blaeu’s 1590s manuscript that shows ‘M. Keams’; it is written ‘Kaines’ on the 1718 Bucleuch survey; see also Kames Moss).

Minti Kirk (min’-i-kirk) n. Minto Parish Church, the present one replacing a much earlier building, dating back to at least 1275. This is when the Rectory is listed on Bagimont’s Roll, with a value of 4 s. 4 d. The remains of this Norman Church, on the grounds of the Minto estate, contain a burial enclosure with some ancient stones and a set of iron neck-rings set in the doorway. There are many gravestones from the 17th and 18th centuries, and part of a child’s stone coffin, probably from the 13th or 14th century. ‘Serlo’ was parson there when he witnessed a grant by daughter of the Baron of Minto in about the period 1230–60. William Woodburn may have been a Parson there who signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. The church was mentioned in ratifications of other churches being connected to Melrose Abbey in 1315. There is a curious charter of Edward III in 1374, which states that the church was then in the diocese of Lincoln. The old church was demolished in 1831, and it is said that at that time a collection of about 400 small silver coins (from the 13th and 14th century) were discovered. The current Gothic-style church was constructed 1830–31 by William Playfair, and built on the road through the village. When built, there was a private gallery for the family of the Earl of Minto. It has a square tower, contains an organ presented by the Countess of Minto in 1880 and was renovated in 1934. The standard of the Blues and Royals Household Cavalry Regiment was laid there in 2004 in memory of Alexander Tweedie, the first Borderer to be killed in the Iraq conflict. Nearby is the Thomas Clapperton War Memorial. The Manse was built at the same time in a Tuscan villa style, and later called Melgund Glen (an earlier Manse was taxed for 18 windows in 1748). When the new church was built the old churchyard was converted into a garden on the Minto estate, much admired in the 19th century. The church was linked with Ancrum 1968–76 and then with Denholm and Bedrule in 1976. In 2003 it was linked, along with Denholm and Bedrule, into a wider area called Ruberslaw, which was then extended to include Hobkirk and Southdean. The oldest surviving communion token is a large lead oblong shape, bearing the letters ‘M.K.’ and probably from the 17th century. In 1838 the minister describes 2 artefacts founds nearby, which may date to the period of monastic connection: a large silver hoop, inscribed ‘IHESUS NA’ (possibly Jesus of Nazareth) and cross shapes; and an ancient copper seal inscribed ‘S ADEN PASTOREL’, along with a primitive lamb. A roll of the ministry is: Serlo, mid-13th C.; William Woodburn, 1296; John Blackadder, Rector in 1463; Patrick Mason, Rector in 1483; George Panter, Rector from 1512; Walter Stewart, Rector at least 1542–44; John Turnbull, Clerk 1559; David Turnbull, 1569; William McGowen, Parson 1574–76 (and perhaps to 1585); Edward Dickson, Reader 1576–78; Robert Hamilton, Reader 1579; Patrick Bishop 1589–c.90; John Mather 1601–02; James Johnstone 1607–08; Adam Scott 1608–12; Samuel Cockburn 1609–c.24; William Wishart, assistant 1613–18; William Maxwell 1625–51; James Ainslie 1652–62; Francis Scott 1664–78; James Kirkwood 1679–81; William Wishart 1682–90; James Ainslie 1690–102; Walter Ainslie 1698–1700; John Ritchie 1703–44; George Kay, assistant 1741–43; George Bruce 1745–66; Thomas Somerville 1767–73; William Burn 1774–1826; David Aitken 1827–64; J.P. Macmorland 1865–93; Alexander Galloway 1878–1926; George O. Mackenzie 1927–35; John Pollock 1936–56; Ian B. MacCalman 1956–67; Peter B. Gunn 1968–76; James F. Falconer 1976–77; John T. Stuart 1978–84; Moira Herkes 1985–88; Thomas Preston 1989–92.

Minti Mill (min’-i-nil) n. former farm near Minto, site of the local corn mill. William Brown was tenant there in 1684. This was an earlier name for lands that were included in 1779 along with Craigend in the part of Minto liferented to Sir John Stewart of Allanshaws. It is possible that this was essentially the same location as the earlier farm of Minto Mill. The 1811 Land Tax Rolls lists ‘Mill Banks’, ‘Mill Haugh’ and related lands lying near to Craigend.

Minti Muir Parks (min’-i-new-pawrks) n. former name for a set of lands in Minto Parish. In 1779 they were liferented to Sir John Dalrymple when valued at £127 15s 1d. They were listed separately from Minto Muir and described as ‘four inclosures’ bounded by the farm of Minto Hills, the road from Hassendean to Troneyhill, the road from Lilliesleaf to Jedburgh, the lands of Crows Moss and Walrigpark, the road from Hawick to St. Boswell’s, the farm of Newlands and the lands of Hassendean. In 1811 the lands were owned by Lord Minto.

Minti North Ludge (min’-i-north-luj) n. former lodge house for Minto estate, situated at a turn in the road, between Hillend and Standhill. The adjacent plantation is called the North Lodge Strip. One roofed building, an unroofed building and an enclosure are marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map.

Minti Pairish (min’-i-pa-reesh) n. small parish of Minto, consisting of the villages of Minto and Hassendean and adjacent areas, being bordered by Lilliesleaf, Ancrum, Bedrule, Cavers and Wilton Parishes and part of Selkirkshire. It once coincided with the boundaries of the Barony of Minto, but later included a large part of the suppressed parish of Hassendean. The topography is dominated by the Minto Hills and Minto Crags. It was a Rectory within the Diocese of Glasgow, taxed at 50s 4d in 1275 and £15 11s 1d (along with Kirkmahoe) in 1376. In 1643 the lands were valued at £2768 13s 4d and there were only 5 owners: John Turnbull, William Turnbull and Elizabeth Elliot for Minto; Turnbull of Tofts; and Gilbert Elliot for Craigend and Deanfoot. In 1649 the land and crops of the Parish were valued at about £2400. In 1663 the land tax on more than £2100 was paid by the Laird of Minto (probably still John Turnbull) and £606 by Gilbert Elliot. The value was the same in 1688, when the entire Parish was owned by 2 Gilbert Elliots, one being the Laird of Minto and the other the Laird of Craigend. In the mid-19th century the parish had a reputation for having no paupers, no tollbars and no public houses. In 1838 the minister wrote that education was eroding the local language and that ‘it is not improbable, that, ere long, the ancient dialect of the district, which has several interesting peculiarities, may become, in a great measure, extinct.’ The existing parish registers begin in 1703, and are fairly complete for births. However, no register of deaths was kept until more recent times, and marriages were only recorded through the reading of the banns, with some significant gaps.

Minti Place (min’-i-plis) n. Minto Place, a street in the Wellogate on the opposite side of the street from Glebe View. It was built in 1875 by Hawick Working Men’s Building and Investment Company and named after Gilbert John Elliot-Murray-Kynynmound, 4th Earl of Minto. The upper houses were originally named Glebe Terrace until 1882.

Minti pump (min’-i-pump) n. water pump at the main road junction in Minto village. It dates from about 1860 and was restored in 2020.

the Minti Road (th-min’-rőd) n. street in Denholm leading out of the village towards Minto, being part of the B6405.

the Mintis (thu-min’-iz, min-tiz) n. the Minto Hills, twin hills near Minto, a distinctive feature of the landscape north-east of Hawick. The hills are formed of igneous rocks, like many of the higher peaks in the area; it isbelieved that they are the eroded remains of a paired volcanic vent. The southern hill has a triangulation marker and reaches 276 m, the other reaches 253 m and is topped by a cairn. The summit of the southern hill has the faint remains of a former fort, about 120 m by 75 m in size, with an entrance on the west side. The cairn on the summit of the north hill is about 10 m in diameter, flat-topped, and has some large kerb-stones around it. Around the lower slopes of the hills are extensive remains of rig, terraces and other signs of earlier cultivation – ‘The scenes round Denholm, they are rich indeed; With Minto hills and crags what can compare? And Ruberslaw, whose high majestic head Towers upward, like the lark, till lost in air’ [TCh]

(see also Minti Hills).

Minti Schuil (min’-i-skil) n. schoolhouse in Minto, serving the surrounding area. It was probably established in the early 17th century. John Davidson was recorded as schoolmaster there in 1616 and James Learmonth in 1624 and 1625. Walter Elliot was schoolmaster there in the 1720s and early 1730s. A Mr. Watson was master until about 1784 and George Scott from around then until the 1820s. They were followed by William Grant, who gave the school a strong reputation, with several students boarding there from outside the Parish. Mr. Wylie took over as schoolmaster about 1840 and John R. Hamilton was teacher in the 1850s and 60s. The teacher normally served as Clerk to the Heritors and Session Clerk for the Parish. In the early 19th century there was also a small school teaching younger children and instructing girls in sewing. The Borders Archive has School Board documents for 1873–1916, registers for 1915–63 and log books for 1874–1963.

the Minti Stakes (th-min’-i-stäks) n. former Friday Common Riding race, started at least as early as the 1880s.

the Minti Stane (th-min’-i-stän) n. inscribed stone on the Minto estate, coming from near the town of Malang in East Java, also called the Sangguran Stone. The stone is about 2 metres tall and weighs more than 3 tons. It was carved in the year 982, and carries a long inscription to the Javanese King Sri Maharaja Rakai Pangkaja Dyah Wawa Sri Wijayalokanamottungga. The text (not all of which was legible) describes a granting of rights for establishing the village of Sangguran, including taxation rules, with the obverse containing a long curse against anyone who broke these rules. It was collected in 1812 by Colin Mackenzie and his team for Sir Stamford Raffles and transported ‘with the consent, and by the assistance of the Native Regent from Malang’. Mackenzie had previously worked with Dr. John Leyden and it was he who discovered the buried site of Borobudur (the largest Buddhist temple in the world). In 1813 the stone was given as a gift to the parting Governor-General of India, Gilbert Elliot, Lord Minto, who had it sent to his home in Scotland. Although Lord Minto died in England on his return, the stone continued the planned journey and was displayed in a glass case in Minto House. However, when the house was requisitioned as a military hospital in WWII, the stone was moved to garden, where it was exposed to the elements. In 2013/4 the present Earl of Minto had the stone moved to Cleughhead.

Minti Toon (min’-i-toon) n. former name for an area in Minto Parish, presumably around the old home farm of the Baron. It is listed among the lands of ‘Minto Townhead’ that were lereferred by Rev. Robert Elliot from 1779.

Minti Toonheid (min’-i-toon-heed) n. farm at the northern end of Minto village. In the early 19th century it was farmed by the Turnbulls, with William Turnbull there in the 1860s.
Robert Watson was farmer in the early 20th century. In 1779 Rev. William Elliot (brother of the Laird of Minto) was granted liferent of these lands. They are described as consisting of South Croft, North Croft, Quick Sands Park, Notman’s Shot, Langlangs, Templecroft, Howden, Whitfield, West South Croft, Minto Town and the green of Minto, ‘which pieces of ground were some time ago known by the name of Minto Townhead’. The lands were valued at £461 1s 10d. The boundaries of the lands were the Minto-to-Hawick road, Minto Glebe, the march ‘which runs through Howden syke’, the foot of Minto Hill, Hilllends Park, Towledge Park, Cow Park and the lawn around Minto House.

Minti Toor (min’-i-toor, -tow-ur) n. another name for Fatlips Castle.

Minti West Ludge (min’-i-west-luj) n. former lodge house for the Minto estate, situated south of the village, by the modern entrance to the golf club.

Minti Wuds (min’-i-wudz) n. wooded area near Minto – ‘Sine off we’d hie tae Minto Woods For blueberries and slaes’ [WLu].

Mintlaw (min’-law) n. terraced house in Denholm, on the middle of Main Street. It is part of the Class C listed building area.

mistryst (mis-trist) v., arch. to fail to keep an appointment.

Mitchel (mi-chul) n. Hugh (18th/19th C.) wood merchant of Fisherrow (Musselburgh), who was made an Honorary Burgess in 1813. He was probably the ‘Hugh Mitchel, Burntisland’ who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. James (17th/18th C.) tailor in Hawick. His unnamed child died in 1811. He is probably the same James who married Ann Murray in Wilton in 1805, and whose children included: Jean (b.1808); and Thomas (b.1809). James (17th C.) resident of Ewes Parish. He married Jean Beattie and their children included: Janet (b.1756); Thomas (b.1758); Jean (b.1760); and James (b.1763). The witnesses in 1758 were Andrew Lamb and John Elliot. John (18th/19th C.) gardener at Liddel Bank in 1797, when he was working for William Oliver. Robert ‘Bob’ (b.1780/1) Hawick’s first milkman, operating from Southfield, formerly ostler of the Tower Hotel. On one famous occasion, in a snowstorm in 1831, he brought back the Carlisle mail on foot after abandoning his horse at Teviothead. Thomas (16th C.) one of the men who in 1530 swore that William Scott of Harden did not owe more than a mark to the deceased Stephen Lauder. William (17th/18th C.) tailor on the Howegate; and James (b.1830), who emigrated to Canada. He could be the James, son of William, born in Cavers Parish in 1785. James (18th/19th C.) tailor on the Howegate; and James (b.1830), who emigrated to Canada. He could be the James, son of William, born in Cavers Parish in 1785. James (18th/19th C.) listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory as running an eating house on the Howegate. James (1830–1914) born in Hawick, son of High Street tailor James. He was employed as a weaver, and still living with his brother and mother on the Howe-gate in 1851. He emigrated to Canada in 1854, arriving in Galt, then moving to Guelph before moving to Manitoba, settling in Arrow River in 1882. He homesteaded, also serving as ferryman across the Assiniboine River. He invented a new kind of lifeboat, patented in 1898 and exhibited in Europe in 1909 (when he also returned for a visit to Hawick). He married Janet Bell Waugh (1836–1920), who came from Moffat and they had several children. John (c.1815–81) real name of the man who inspired ‘Heather Jock’ in the song ‘Kinly Stick’. He was a native of Hexham, who came to Hawick at age 16; it is said that he walked all the way in order to find work. He was well known in Town for the next 50 years. He was a wrestler and runner in his youth. He worked in the hosiery industry, but mainly made a living at poaching, as well as by gathering cresses, labouring, etc. He was also in the Grenadier Guards for a while, but deserted. In 1841 he was a stockingmaker, living at 4 Silver Street, then around Punch Bowl Close in 1851. He is listed as a railway labourer on Dickson Street in 1861 and was living at 9 Kirk Wynd in 1871. It seems that he became a wanderer, collecting moss and sleeping rough (hence his nickname). Adie Ingles suggests that he may have spent some time in Australia, and returned whistling the tune of ‘Click Go the Shears’, but there is no evidence to support this. He is probably the Hawick stocking-maker, born in Corbridge, who is recorded in Jedburgh Jail in (at least) 1843, 1851, 1852, 1855, 1856, 1864, and 1865 (twice), and the Hexham man in Hawick Jail in 1851. In 1874 he was rescued from the Teviot ‘having been inbibing of his favourite beverage rather freely’. In 1841 he married Elizabeth Lamb in Hawick. Their children included Benjamin (b.1853/4), John (b.1846/7) and James (b.1849/50); she also had children Adam (b.1833/4) and Janet (b.1839/40) from a previous marriage. He died of tetanus in Jethart Jail – ‘Crane-like he watched the purling streams, And for a crust would gather bones; Of statute laws he’s broken more Than ere he broke of hard whin stones’ [TCh]. Peter (17th/18th C.) mason in Hawick. He witnessed baptisms in 1710 for carrier David Wilson and for younger carrier William Aitken. In 1705 in Edinburgh he married Agnes Guild, servant to merchant and Burgess of Edinburgh, David Weems; his name is recorded there as ‘Patrick’. Their children included: Anna (b.1706); James (b.1708); John (b.1708); and Jean (b.1712). The witnesses in 1706 were masons John Napier and John Turnbull, in 1708 were merchant Walter Weens and mason John Napier and in 1712 were masons John Turnbull and Nichol Turnbull. Rev. Robert (1826–93) from Auchterarder, he probably attended Edinburgh University. He came to Hawick as a guest preacher at the Evangelical Union (later Congregational) Church towards the end of 1849, a few weeks later accepted the ‘call’ to the church, and was inducted early in 1850. He preached 3 sermons every Sunday, as well as in the open air on street corners and around the countryside. He also carried out a vigorous correspondence about evangelism in the Hawick Advertiser. He turned down one call to another church, but left suddenly in 1864 to become assistant to Dr. Morrison at Dundas Street Church, Glasgow. He was later minister at Queen’s Park, Manchester, St. John’s Wood Terrace, Middlesex, Chorton-cum-Hardy, Lancashire, Elgin Brook, Hertfordshire and Nelson Street, Greenock. Robert (1848–1928) born in Kinross, Perthshire, he spent his early years in Gala, ran away from home at age 14 and was a glazier’s apprentice in Edinburgh. He began a glaziers business in Hawick in about 1873, and certainly by 1875; this would become the longest established glazing business in Scotland. He was a Councillor for North High Street Ward from 1884, was a Magistrate for 9 years, Provost 1896–1902, and returned to the Council 1919–23. He was also appointed Honorary Sheriff-Substitute of Roxburghshire. His Provostship saw the erection of the Public Library, re-laying of the pavements and the letting of the Haugh as a show-ground at the Common Riding. He was an early advocate for electric lighting, Chairman of the Hawick School Board and a Common Riding supporter. Liberal in politics, he was a Mason and an Orrock Church elder. His business on Oliver Crescent can be seen in a photograph from the early 1900s. The glazing business was continued by his son Alexander. He is buried in Wilton Cemetery (formerly ‘Mitchil’ etc.; see also Mitchell).
Mitchellhill

(b.1773); and Mary (b.1777). He is probably the George, son of the deceased Alexander, who died in 1822, aged 76. Henry (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1690 he witnessed a baptism for Andrew Scott. He married Isobel Robson and their children included John (b.1689). He may have witnessed a baptism in 1690 for Robert. Henry (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Craikshiel in 1726 when his daughter Janet was baptised. Henry (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Woodburn in 1755. His children included: Margaret (b.1748); John (b.1750); Janet (b.1752); Janet (b.1754); Helen (b.1757); and William (b.1760). Henry (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He was at West Burnfoot in 1744. He married Margaret Thomson and their children included: Isabel (b.1744); William (b.1746); Thomas (b.1749); Henry (b.1750); Catherine (b.1753); and Helen (b.1755). J. (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He was probably closely related to Robert, who also subscribed. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1776 he married Margaret Scott, who was from Jedburgh Parish. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick. 2 unnamed children of his died in 1810. James (b.1809) son of Thomas and Janet Thomson. He was innkeeper of the Black Bull on North Hermitage Street in Newcastle in 1851, living with his sister Jane and Brother Andrew. He was also listed there in 1852. Jane (b.1815) daughter of Thomas and Janet Thomson and brother of James. She married William Nichol, but was already a widow by 1851. She had children Mary Anne, Thomas and Betty. She was living with her innkeeper brother on North Hermitage Street in Newcastle in 1951, but by 1861 was innkeeper herself. Her inn was at about 45 North Hermitage Street, and called the Black Bull. Jenny (18th/19th C.) recorded in the story of the disputed Common Riding of 1809. A bucketful of material from her byre was used to pelt Captain Campbell and others of the ‘royalist’ party as they rode up the Loan. She was presumably the wife of a man with fields up the Loan. John (16th C.) notary in 1528 to an agreement between James Murray of Falahill and Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, signed at Selkirk. Other witnesses included the Vicars of Selkirk and Hawick. Probably the same ‘sir John’ witnessed a document in 1530 for Robert Turnbull of Philiphaugh and was recorded as a chaplain when he witnessed a document related to an action against Patrick Murray of Falahill. He was recorded as ‘sir’ in 1532 when he held a tenement in Selkirk and in 1535 when he witnessed a document for Walter Scott of Robertson. He also witnessed an agreement in 1536 between Richard Bothwell, Parson of Ashkirk, and Simon Shortreed, Vicar of Ashkirk. In 1539 he was notary for an instrument among Scotts, relating to the illegitimacy of Thomas, son to Adam Scott. In 1540 he witnessed an agreement between Katherine Scott of Colifort and John Cranston of that Ilk. John (18th C.) resident at Penchriese. He probably married Janet Blaikie in Cavers Parish in 1734. His son John was baptised in 1734. Robert (17th C.) resident in Ashkirk Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He married Margaret Allan and their children included Thomas (b.1691) and Robert (b.1696). The witnesses in 1691 were hard to read (perhaps Thomas and Henry Mitchellhill). Robert (d.bef. 1766) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Ginwood in 1757 and Eilrig in 1764. His widow was recorded at Chisholme in 1766 when his last child was born posthumously. His children included Isobel (b.1755), William (b.1757), Robert (b.1759), Thomas (b.1761), James (b.1764) and John (b.1766). Robert (1782/3–1858) from Selkirk, he was a farmer and carter in Newcastle in 1851. He was probably the Mitchellhill listed as ‘R., Castleton’ who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He was listed as a carter in Newcastle among heads of households in 1835–41. In 1841 and 1851 he was on Douglas Square. He emigrated to Galt, Ontario, where he died. He married Margaret Murray, who died in 1882, aged 94. Their children included: Thomas (1810/1–24); Robert (1818/9–42); Jane (b.1823/4); July; and Margaret (1830/1–43). Robert (b.1787/8) from Jedburgh, he was an agricultural labourer in Denholm in 1841. By 1851 he was listed as a pensioner at ‘Guide Post’ cottages at Spittal-on-Rule. His wife was Margaret and their children included: Mary (b.1831/2); Isabel (b.1834/5); Robert (b.1836); William (b.1837/8); and Agnes (b.1840/1). Thomas (d.bef. 1841) proprietor of the Black Bull in Newcastle in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He was also listed as an innkeeper in Newcastle among heads of households in 1835. He married Janet Thomson and their children included: James (b.1809); Mary (b.1811); William (b.1812), a farm labourer; Jane (b.1815), who married William Nichol and later ran the inn; and Andrew
Mitchell's Ford

(b.c.1820), who was running the inn in 1841. William (17th/18th C.) recorded as servitor to William Ogilvie in Branxholme. In 1719 he was recorded as ‘workman in Branxholmontoun’. He married ‘Marion’ Laidlaw in Hawick in 1718; she was recorded as ‘servitrix to James Griebe in Todshawhaugh. Their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1720, with witnesses Robert Scott (tenant in Branxholme Town) and William Thomson (in Newmill). His wife is recorded as ‘Helen’ in the baptismal records for their children: Robert (b.1719); Thomas (b.1725); Jean (b.1727); Agnes (b.1729); and William (b.1739). The witnesses in 1719 were William Cunningham and ‘servant’ Walter Scott. William (18th/19th C.) working man from the Newmill area, who set up a Sunday School there along with James Ruckbie. He could be related to the earlier William from Branxholme Town. He is probably the William who witnessed a baptism in 1774 for James Easton from Branxholme and in 1773 and 1776 for Thomas Rutherford from Branxholme. He may be the William who married Helen Murray and whose children included Agnes (b.1775), Helen (b.1777) and Margaret Helen (b.1781). The witnesses in 1777 were the whole congregation. William (1859–1938) son of Andrew and Agnes Kyle, he was born in Castleton. He worked as a mason. He married Isabella Bell and their son William (1898–1918) died of wounds in France (also written ‘Mitchelhill’ and ‘Mitchelhill’; sometimes formerly recorded as just ‘Mitchell’).

Mitchell’s Ford (mi-chulz-ford) n. former ford across the Teviot, situated a little south of a line joining Midshiels with Eastcote (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Mitchell’s Gless (mi-chulz-gles) n. Mitchell Glass, glazier’s based in Hawick. It was founded by Robert Mitchell in about 1873 and became the oldest established glaziers in Scotland. The firm was continued by Ronert’s son Alexander, and then by the Fisher family.

Mitchell’s Hole see Mitchell’s Slack

Mitchell’s Slack (mi-chulz-slawk) n. former name of a hollow near Southfield, said to have been a place where Covenanters held secret sermons in the 17th century. It is also known as ‘Mitchell’s Hole’. The name is said to have been given to commemorate Covenanter James Mitchell (even although there was no direct connection to him), who tried to assassinate Archbishop Sharp in 1668, and was executed in 1678.

Mitchels (mi-chulz) n. former farm, possibly near Briery-yards. It is recorded (as ‘Mitchells’) among the lands transferred from Hassendean Parish to Wilton in 1690.

Mitchel’s (mi-chulz) n. former carrier’s business. In the early 19th century they travelled twice a week, both ways, between Hawick and Carlisle.

Mitchelson (mi-chul-sin) n. Andrew (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as ‘Andew Michelsone’, when David Scott, called ‘Lady’, in Stirches had a remission for a raid on lands at Blackhall (or Blackhaugh) tenanted by him and John ‘Spedane’. It is unclear whether this was in Rulewater or Ewesdale or elsewhere. George ‘Geordie’ (16th/17th C.) John (16th/17th C.) probably resident of Liddesdale. In 1603 he was ‘Geordie Mitcheiulstoun’ when there was a complaint that he and others had raided ‘Sewingdene’ in 1601, stealing livestock and goods and injuring several people; ‘Cubbie’s Archie’, servant of Simon Elliot of Binks, was the leader of the group, which also contained Armstrongs. George (17th C.) tenant at Sorbietrees in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Rev. James (d.1625) brother of John of Middleton, he graduated from Edinburgh University in 1605 and became minister at Hassendean in 1611. He was translated to Bathans (Yester) in 1613 and was a member of the Assembly in 1618. He married Eupham Borthwick (who died in 1627) and their children were John, Margaret, William and James. James (17th C.) joint tenant with David Goldie of the farms of Ettleton and Millholm in Liddesdale in 1632. John (15th/16th C.) recorded as resident of Oakwood in 1502 when Alexander Scott had remission for stealing a horse from him. Thomas (17th C.) listed on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls as resident of the lands of Castleton. Thomas (d.bef. 1696) probably farmer in the lower Borthwick valley. In 1696 his widow, a Riddell whose first name is not given, was renting half of the farm of Wiltonburn from the Duchess of Buccleuch. Her cautioner was Robert Scott (also farmer at Wiltonburn), suggesting a close relationship. Note that in 1694 1/3 of Wiltonburn was being rented by Bessie Scott, widow of James Riddell, who seems likely to have been related to his wife. William (17th C.) resident at Roan in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694 (also spelled ‘Michelsone’, ‘Mitchelsone’ and ‘Mitchelsoune’).

Mithag (mi-thag) n. Alan of Hartwoodburn (16th C.) recorded in 1539/40 when he had a commission from the Dean of Jedburgh regarding a slander brought against him about stealing and eating some sheep. The list of friends who would support him included Thomas Elliot, Mark Ker in Kippielaw, William Scott in Hartwoodmyres, Walter Scott in Headshaw, Thomas Lauder, John Chisholme, David Todrig, Ninian Brydon and David Mithag. There were several other men with this same surname in Selkirk at that time (the pronunciation is unclear).

moderator (mo-du-rā’-ur) n. a minister presiding over a senior body in the Church of Scotland – ‘The ordinary meeting of the Synod of Merse and Teviotdale was held on Tuesday in the Abbey Church, Jedburgh – the Rev. Mr Fergusson, moderator’ [HAd1868].

Modrell (mod-rel) n. Mungo (17th C.) recorded among the poor of Hassendean Parish in 1694, when he was at Hassendeanbank. His surname could be a transcription error for some more familiar name.

Moffat (mo-fā’) n. town about 40 miles to the west of Hawick, in the south-eastern part of Dumfries & Galloway. Receiving Burgh of Barony status only in 1648, it developed as a market town on the main west-coast routes to Glasgow and Edinburgh. Centrepiece of the town is the magnificent Moffat Ram statue. The nearby sulphurous spring was popular for its purported health benefits in the 18th and 19th centuries. Population 2,342 (1991) – ‘‘Tween Moffat hills and lofty Cheviot’ [JH].

Moffat (mo-fā’) n. Adam (17th C.) piper who was rebuked by Ashkirk Session in 1638 for ‘pyping at bridals’. He was ordered to appear at the Kirk door wrapped in sheets, with bare feet and legs, and ‘after the pepil wes in, to go to the place of repentance, and so to continue Sabbathlie induring their wills’. Arthur (b.1803/4) from Tundergarth, he was farmer at Leaugh Cottage in Castleton Parish. In 1861 he is recorded there as farmer of 6 acres. His wife was Janet and their children included Jane, Walter, Janet, Margaret, James and Helen Agnes. David (16th C.) recorded in Synton in 1581 when he was witness to an agreement between Margaret, widow of William Scott of Burnfoot and her son William. George (18th C.) listed as footman at Synton in 1792, when he was working for Charles Riddell. George (18th/19th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. In 1789 he married Isabella Murray. James (15th/16th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1502 when the Cornor, William Cranston, was fined for failing to arrest him. His name is given as ‘Jacobo moffet’ in Holydean or Nisbet. James (17th C.) leased part of the farm of Todshawhill from the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1693. James (1720/1–1779) son of James, from whom he took over as tenant of Howpasley farm. In 1744 he moved to Garwald in Dumfriesshire, rented from the Duke of Buccleuch. He also farmed at Meikleholm for a while. He married Margaret Borthwick (1732/3–1806). His children included: John (1772–1823), who took over as farmer at Garwald; William (1773–1847), who farmed at Mosspeeble and Craik; and Margaret (1762/3–1855), who married Rev. Dr. William Brown of Eskdalemuir, and died in Hawick. James (1811–76) elder son of William. He and his brother James helped their father farm at Craik, as well as Garwald over in Dumfriesshire. John (1677/8–1728) tenant at Howpasley. He was said to be descended from Thomas, who received a grant of lands in Meggat in the 14th century. He was recorded at Howpasley in the baptismal records of most of his children in Robertson Parish. He married Helen Borthwick (1677/8–1754). He was succeeded at Howpasley by his son James (1721–79, baptised in Robertson) and had 7 other children, including Janet, Mary and Euphemia (1708/9–97). Other children baptised in Robertson who were probably his include Margaret (b.1716), Elspeth (b.1718), Margaret (again, b.1721) and Bettie (b.1722). He was buried at Watcarrick Churchyard. John (1813–82) son of William. He helped his father and brother James farm at Craik and Garwald. He was still tenant farmer at Craik in the 1870s. He married Anne Laidlaw (d.1915) and their children included: William (1864–1932); James (d.1941), who married Janet Robina Brydon; and Anne (d.1853). John (1859) born at Old Hopsrig, Westerkirk, in 1887 he married Elizabeth McInnes. Their children included: John (b.1883), born in Canonbie; Mary (b.1889), born in Hawick; Peter (1890–1968), born at Branxholme Park; Janet (b.1892), born at Branxholme Park; and Margaret (b.1894), born in Hawick. His wife may be the Elizabeth McInnes who wrote the poem ‘A Legend of Hawick’. Nicholas (d.1270) Archdeacon of Teviotdale in the period 1245–70, referred to as being ‘de Moffat’. He witnessed a charter for Soutra Hospital in 1255. He was bishop-elect of Glasgow twice, the first time (1259) travelling to Rome, but failing to be consecrated (probably because of political infighting among his travelling companions) and the second time (1268–70) because he died before consecration. He was buried at Tyningham, East Lothian. Robert (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Tait, who was from Yarrow Parish. Their children included John (b.1654) and Janet (b.1656). The witnesses in 1656 were ‘John . . .’ and ‘Robert . . .’. Robert of Hermiston (18th C.) recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. It is unclear where he came from, or how long he owned these local lands. William (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Craikhope in 1723, 1726, 1728 and 1736. His children included: Helen (b.1723); Helen (again, b.1726); Margaret (b.1728); Mary (b.1730); John (b.1736); and William (b.1741). William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Deancourt in 1777 when his son William was baptised. William (1773–1847) son of James, tenant farmer at Garwald in Dumfriesshire, and formerly at HowPasley. He became tenant at Mosspeebble in 1800 and then Craik in 1817. He was joint tenant there with his sons John and James from 1833. In addition he ran the farm at Garwald after the death of his older brother John in 1823. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He married Jane Grieve. His sons James (1811–76) and John (1813–82) continued to farm after him. He also had 1 other son and 6 daughters. William (1864–1932) born at Craik farm, he took over Garwald when he reached the age of 21. He became known as a sheep judge, as well as a pursuer of country sports. In 1911 he bought the farm of Georgefield and Glendinning, and later purchased the farm of Garwald, which the family had long tenanted. He married Alison Gray and their children included: John (b.1892), who sold Georgefield and Glendinning in 1947; Mary; Anne; and Alexander Gray (b.1905), who sold Garwald in 1950 (also formerly ‘Moffet’).

Moffat Well (mo-fi-nil) n. sulphurous spring near Moffat, once believed to have healing powers. There are notices in Hawick’s 18th century parish records of disbursements to help sick people travel there. It was discovered in 1633 and access improved in 1758. It was a draw for visitors until the 1920s.

Moggans (mo-ginz) n., pl., arch. the legs (noted by J. Jamieson).

Moinnet (moi-net) n. James (15th C.) witness to the charter of 1494 in which James of Kirkurd granted the lands of Galalaw to his son David. It is unclear whether his surname has a modern equivalent.

moistify (moi-sti-fl) v., poet. to moisten – ‘Where ye will get a whisky soss To moistify your middle’ [JR].

mole-catcher (mol-kaw-chur) n., arch. someone earning their living from catching moles. From medieval times until the mid-20th century this was a common occupation in rural areas. There were at least a couple employed in Denholm alone around 1900.

mole-heid (mol-heed) n., arch. a mole-head, doit, stupid person – ‘Dogsrabbit it, what’s keepit ye, ye lazy molehead?’ [WNK], ‘Hae dune, ye molehead, Wilton Kirk’s comin’ over Teiot Brig’ [RM].

Moll (mol) n. horse owned by William Nixon, and rode by him when he was Cornet in 1813. It was also known as ‘Molly’. In later years it was often seen with Nixon’s groom, Wullie Bulloch, who doted over it. The pair were painted together by Adam Brown.

Molle (mol, mow) n. former parish, forming what is now the southernmost part of Morebattle, which was united with Morebattle in the 17th century. It was owned by Eschina de Londonis (or de Molle) in the mid-12th century, and part of it was gifted to Kelso Abbey around 1190. Some of the lands there were also held by the Lovel family. The lands were also briefly owned by Adam of Rule, through his wife Johanna. They later passed to the Kers. Liulf, son of Uchtred, Lord of Mow, was a witness to the charter of about 1120 founding Selkirk Abbey. The Molle family married into the families of Avenel, Maleverer, de Lincoln, de Vesci, Scott and others, and tracing their lineage is difficult. The names Mow Hope, Mow Kirk (granted before 1152 to Kelso Abbey by Uchtred son of Liulf) and Mow Stell are lost, but it survives in Mowhaugh on the Bowmont Water. Members of the eponymous family crop up in local documents, e.g. ‘William Mow in Mow-maynis’ was part of inquest for lands in Rulewater in 1610 (also spelled ‘Mow’ and variants; the name probably comes from the Old Welsh ‘mael’ for ‘bare hill’, and is first recorded in the mid-12th century).

Molle (mol) n. Anselm (12th C.) formerly of Whitton, he gained part of the lands at Molle, granted in a charter during the reign of William I (probably 1170–90), which was witnessed by Roger, son of ‘John de Hawic’, as well as Robert of Wilton and Adam of Ashkirk; this was one of the first mentions of anyone who came from Hawick. His son Richard was also a witness. In about 1193 he granted lands of Molle (or Mow) to Kelso Abbey and later had a dispute with Kelso Abbey over teinds at Molle. His relationship with Eschina is unclear (it may be that they held different parts of the lands of Molle and were unrelated). His name may also have been written ‘Ansold’. His wife was Agnes. His daughter Isolda married Alexander and had a part of Molle in the early 1200s, while his main heiress was Matilda, who married Richard de Lincoln. He was ancestor of the family of Mow of that Ilk. Eschina also ‘Eschyne’ (12th/13th C.) daughter of Thomas de...
Londonis (who held the office of Doorward under William the Lion, and his ancestors took the name of Dorward) and Eschelyn (daughter of Uchtred de Molle), she was also known as ‘Eschina de Londonis’. In some accounts her father is given as Uchtred, son of Liulf. She was born in Roxburghshire and held lands at Huntlaw and Molle on the Bowmont Water. She may have first married Robert ‘de Croc’. She married Walter Fitz Alan, 1st High Steward of Scotland, who held ‘Mow’ about 1160, as well as lands at Hassendean and at Renfrew; he died in 1177. She had a charter of Molle in 1186. Around 1190 she gifted part of Molle to Kelso Abbey. She lastly married Henry ‘de Mow’, the 2 settling a dispute with Kelso Abbey about 1200 and still later is described as a widow. Alan, her son with Walter, succeeded to most of his father’s lands, as well as the office of Steward of Scotland. With Henry she had 4 daughters: Margaret (buried at Paisley Abbey, where she had given land); Eschina; Avicia (or Alicia), who probably married Richard Scott, ancestor of the Scotts of Buccleuch; and Cecilia, who married Simon Mauleverer and had a charter of Molle in about 1250. Isolda (13th C.) daughter of Anselm and younger sister of Matilda. She married Alexander (son of William, son of Edgar) and they had a daughter, Christina, who married Almer Scott of Mow, who may have been related to Richard Scott of Mow. Uchtred (12th C.) son of Liulf. He granted the Church of Molle (present day Morebattle) to Kelso Abbey in the mid-1100s. He perambulated the boundaries himself, along with Aldred, the Dean of Teviotdale. He may have been the father of Eschina (earlier written ‘de Molle’ and variants).

mollets (mo-lits) n., pl., arch. fantastic airs (noted by J. Jamieson; cf. molllops).
molligrumphs (mo-lee-grumfs) n., arch. a fit of bad temper, snit fit – ‘She’s taen the molligrumphs’ [GW] (also nulligrumphs).
mollop (mo-llop) n., arch. to toss the head disdainfully, indulge in antics.
mollops (mo-lops) n., pl., arch. antics, capers – ‘Set ee up wui eef feyk mollops an een er friggen an falderals! Some folk heh sic a tredd wui theirsels, – primpin!’ [ECS] (cf. mollets).

Monaghan (mo-mu-hin) n. Fr. James (1814/5–52) born in County Monaghan, Ireland, he served as Hawick’s first Catholic clergyman since before the Reformation, being the priest at S.S. Mary & David’s 1846–47. He held morning services every other Sunday, as well as lectures in the evening. He also preached in alternate weeks at a temporary chapel in St. Boswells, as well as ministering to Catholics in in Jedburgh and Kelso. This being a strain on his health, he was transferred to Dumfries and then Edinburgh, where he died suddenly.

Monanday (mu-nin-dä, mō-nin-dä) n., arch. Monday – ‘As Aw was gaun up Hawick Loan Yeh Monanday at morn . . . ’ [JSB] (cf. the more modern Mondie: derived from the Anglo-Saxon).

Moncrieff (mon-k reef) n. David (1771–1834) youngest son of Annan minister William and Ann Hardie. His brother William Hardie was minister at Annan after their father. He was proprietor of properties in Moncrieff’s Close from 1812, and made an Honorary Burgess in 1818 for benevolence to the poor. His property is marked on Wood’s 1824 map at about No. 63 High Street. It is unclear what the family’s original connection was to Hawick, but it could possibly be through his mother Ann Hardie (who died in 1821, aged 86). It is said that he was a great benefactor of the poor and unfortunate, and gave many contributions anonymously. He also befriended and helped Tom Jenkins, offering money so he could continue bidding on a Greek dictionary in an auction in Hawick, and later writing him a letter of reference. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. His brother married Jean Laidlaw, who died at Falnash, and was probably daughter of Robert Laidlaw, farmer there; their daughter (his niece) Mary married Rev. Robert Shaw of Ewes (and earlier preacher at Teviotdale). He was described as having a round face, which was ruddy and cheerful, stout on person, always clad in black, with matching breeches and silk stockings, and carried a gold-headed cane. He appears to have married Helen Webster, and they had a daughter, Margaret. His curling stone (inscribed with his name) is in the Museum. John (d.1697), W.S. acted as agent to the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1696, for the rentals around Brauxholme. Margaret (b.1800) daughter of David, grand-daughter of Rev. William of Annan, and niece of Marion. She presented a cloth for the communion table at Hawick Free Kirk. She lived with her aunt at 63 High Street. Marion (1768–1862) daughter of Rev. William of Annan, and brother of David. She lived at 63 High Street. She was known as a charitable contributor to many causes in Hawick. One story is told of how she was asked to donate to some particular scheme, the organisation of which had taken 4 years, during which time she saved a pound note in her bible, so that she would be sure to have it on hand when the minister called. She was listed as ‘Miss Moncrieff’ among the local gentry in Pigot’s 1837 directory. She presented a communion token mold to the new Hawick Free Kirk in the early 1840s. Her niece Margaret is also recorded presenting a cloth for the communion table. She is probably the ‘Miss Marion’ involved in a bond with Robert Kerr Elliot of Harwood in 1845. In later age she and her niece were referred to as the ‘Misses Moncrieff’ (e.g. in Slater’s 1852 directory, when they are listed among the local gentry). She also lived for a while with her grand-nieces Anne Janet and Marion Shaw. She died in Hawick at the age of 94 – ‘There’s Bailie Nixon, merchant, The Miss Moncrieffs and a’, And if ye gang some farther east, Ye’ll come to Willie Ha’’ [DJG].

Moncrieff’s Close (mon-kreefs-kloś) n. name in use for Tannage Close in the early 19th century, from a family who used to live at the top on the east side, at No. 63 High Street (to confuse matters, the 1858 Ordnance Survey map marks only the top of the street as Moncrieff’s Close, with the bottom labelled as Tannage Close).

Mondi (mun-di) n. Monday (also spelled ‘Mondih’; cf. the older Monanday).

the Mondi (thur-mun-di) n. sometimes used to refer to the Monday of Common Riding Week. This day has the first of the morning Chases, with the horses leaving the Backdamgate at 6.30 a.m.

moneth (nu-nith) n., arch. month – ‘The twenty day of the moneth of Maij, in the zer of God a thowsande fyf hundreth …’ [SB1500], ‘…upon the Fryday befor, being the 24th day of the said moneth, conforme to ancient custome had elected and voted . . .’ [BR1706], ‘…for ane supernumerarie mariage of the said John Hardie upon Isobell Atkine holden upon the first day of the said moneth of Februar’ [PR1706], ‘…to go to Jedburgh Thursday next ye 23 of the moneth to solicit ye Brethren . . .’ [PR1722].

monie (mo-, mō-nee) adj., pron. many – ‘there’s ower monie o ee’, ‘how monie times hev A got ti tell ee?’, ‘And because her fact’ries mony . . .’ [??], ‘Say, am I doom’d to live my lane, Amang sae mony braw things?’ [JR], ‘And spent the night in rite and spell, And mony a nameless thing’ [JTe], ‘An’ mony a, mony a bottle’s taen The tippler’s drouth to slossen’ [JoHa], ‘…Wi mony a sort o’ corn’ [JSB], ‘Monie, O Lord my God, ar thy wunderfu’ warks whilk thou hest dune . . .’ [HSR], ‘Ther be monie that say, Wha wull shaw us onie guid?’ [HSR], ‘…And mony oots and ins’ [JEDM], ‘And Times brought mony changes . . .’ [JT], ‘When Callants wander far afield On mony a foreign plain’ [RH], ‘…But entertainment wasna fer to seek – We’d mony a pantomime at hame!’ [WL], ‘I’ve travelled in monie lands And monie places seen But there’s ae toon I ne’er forget Wherever I hae been’ [JSE], ‘But mony’s the time aa’ve heard sile-iclike cryin’ . . .’ [DH], ‘Though mony years they’ve wandered forth, They love the toon that gi’en thum birth’ [IW], ‘Bit in yin o his mony teesh articles Kennedy illustrates art . . .’ [IH] (also spelled ‘mony’; cf. munie; the pronunciation used to have an element of a diphthongal əʊ-ʊ).

moniefald (nu-nee-fawld) adj., arch. manyfold – ‘O Lord, howe moniefald ar thy wurs! in wus-doom hest thou mae thee a’ . . .’ [HSR] (also spelled ‘monyfald’).

moniest (nu-nee-ist) adj., arch. most numerous – ‘…after manniest voittis all electit and choisit the said Robert Scott . . .’ [BR1638], ‘The youth whose fowl does moniest pay Is victor ca’d for year and day’ [JoHo] (also written ‘maniest’, etc.).

moniment (nu-nee-min’) n., arch. a monument – ‘Yeh gowsty nicht (wui a wund fit ti blaw doors oot at wundihis) a turbuleent woare as the ordnar dang doon the firrst Peinelheuch Moniment’ [ECS], ‘…bye auld Hornshole, – a picter o gray an green – wui a glisk o the Moniment’ [ECS].

monimental (nu-nee-men’-al) adj., arch. monumental, drunk – ‘He was fair monimental’ [GW] (see monumental).

Monipennie (mu-nee-pe-nee) n. John (16th/17th C.) Scottish chronicler and compiler. His ‘Certeine matters concerning the realme of Scotland, composed together’ (c.1594, 1603) contained ‘The names of the principal clannes, and surnames of the borderers not landed’ (although both ‘landed’ and ‘not landed’ are included). This represents a valuable listing of the important men in each family at the end of the 16th century, and includes Olivers, Armstrongs, Elliots, Nixons, Croizers, Scotts, etc. He also lists ‘The names of the barons, lairds, and chiefe gentlemen in euerie sherifdome’. Although first published about 1594, the list appears to have been compiled somewhat earlier.

the Monkey (thu-mung-kee) n. nickname in use in the 19th century. It was used for the proprietor of the Ewe and Lamb, and perhaps for others before him.

the Monkeyman’s (thu-mung-kee-munz) n. former popular name for the hill where Weensgate Drive and Marmion Road are now located, once used by Hawick’s youth for sledging in the winter.

the Monkeys (thu-mung-keez) n. popular name for the Ewe and Lamb bar in Orrock Place. This apparently arose from a former proprietor, Mr. Carruthers, father of the 1933 Cornet’s Lass, who was nicknamed ‘Monkey Carruthers’, and hence regulars spoke about ‘gaun ti the Monkey’s’.

Monkland (mungk-lind) n. former name for the Monk’s Croft.

the Monk’s Croft (thu-mungks-kroft) n. former farm adjacent to the farmhouse at Hassendeanbank. The rents belonged to Melrose Abbey, as part of the agreement going back to the 12th century. In the time of William the Lion it was restricted to the pasturage of 200 ewes, 16 oxen and 4 cows. It was listed in 1582 among lands for which Robert Elliot of Horsleyhill demanded the charters of his father from the widow of Sir Walter Ker of Cessford. It was referred to as ‘a half merk land in Clarelaw called Monkland’ in about 1620 when Walter Scott had a charter from the Commendator of Melrose. The land became part of Minto Parish when Hassendean was suppressed in 1690. The lands were referred to as ‘Monks meadow’ in the 1692 rental lists of the Duchess of Buccleuch in Hassendean, when they were ‘evicted by the minister for his glebe’. William Elliot and John Elliot were there in 1694. It was farmed by the Dicksons of Hassendeanburn in the 18th century. The name presumably derives from an association with the monks of Melrose Abbey and the former tower nearby (also written ‘Monkscroft’; it was ‘Munkscroft’ in 1694; it is presumably the farm adjacent to Knowetownhead, labelled ‘Mountcroft’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Monk’s Flats (mungks-flawts) n. former name for lands in Hassendean Parish, recorded as ‘Monkiesflattes’ in a charter around the late 1220s. It is likely to be the same as the Monk’s Croft.

Monk’s Meadow (mungks-me-dō) n. another name for Monk’s Croft, mentioned in 1692.

the Monk’s Toor (thu-mungks-toor, -towur) n. the Monk’s Tower, former name for the tower at Hassendean, so called because of the local connection with Melrose Abbey. It was set up as a ‘hospital’ for pilgrims journeying to Melrose Abbey, perhaps as early as the reign of William I. The land was granted by Melrose Abbey to Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and his wife Janet Beaton, as confirmed by royal charter in 1574. It is referred to at that time as ‘the tower called Hassenden tour or Monkstour’. A branch of Scotts lived there for at least the next several decades. In 1580 a transaction involving Robert Scott of Alton was witnessed there; it was then referred to as ‘the monk tour’. Scott of Satchells lists ‘John Scott of Monks-tower, brother to old William Scott of Alton’ as one of the supporters of Buccleuch around the late 16th century. The 1634 service of heirs for Scott of Buccleuch lists the fortalice called ‘Hassenden-tour alias Monkstour’ among their possessions and it is so recorded in the service of heirs for Mary of Buccleuch in 1653 and for Anne in 1661. The ‘touer and fortalice called Hassendane tower, alias Monkstower’ is recorded in 1693 in the ratification of the charter to James Scott, Earl of Dalkeith, as heir to his mother. Its site is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, by the road to the south of Hassendean farm.

Monk’s Pond (mungks-pond) n. name for the area between Bedrule and Reecastle. Presumably there was once a pond there, perhaps with a connection to Jedburgh Abbey.

the Monk’s Well (thu-mungks-wel) n. spring located near the old Wheel Kirk.

Monmouth (mon-mnooth, -mowth) n. familiar name for the Duke of Monmouth and Buccleuch, James Scott nee Crofts.

Monograptus riccartonensis (mo-nö-grap-tus-ri-kar-tin-en-sis) n. species of graptolite fossil, identified by Charles Lapworth in 1876 in rocks from the ‘Riccarton Beds’ at Ellistsfield. It is named for the locality of Riccarton.

monster (mon-stur) n., arch. an abnormally large child – ‘An overgrown or unnaturally large child is so called in Hawick. The word carries with it the impression of stupidity as well as hugeness’ [ECS].

Montagu-Douglas-Scott (mon-ta-gew-dug-lis-skö) n. George William (1866–1947) 3rd son of William Henry, 6th Duke of Buccleuch and younger brother of John Charles, the 7th Duke. He was Captain in the 10th Hussars and fought in the Boer War. He was Deputy Lieutenant of Roxburghshire and J.P. in Roxburghshire. In WWI he was Lieut.-Col. in the Border Horse Yeomanry. He received the O.B.E. in 1919. In 1903 he married Elizabeth Emily Manners, daughter of the...
Duke of Rutland. Their children were: Phylis Anne, Jeanetta Ruth; Marjorie Katherine; Lt.-Col. John Henry; and Lt.-Col. Claud Everard Walter. Henry John (1832–1905) 2nd son of Walter Francis, 5th Duke of Buccleuch. He was usually referred to as ‘Lord Henry’, and was created 1st Baron Montagu of Beaulieu. He was M.P. for Selkirkshire 1861–68 and for South Hampshire 1868–84. He was also Captain of the Midlothian Yeomanry and served as a Justice of the Peace in Roxburghshire. He was also Patron of the Liddesdale Curling Club. In 1865 he married Cecily Susan, 2nd daughter of John Stuart-Wortley-Mackenzie, 2nd Lord Wharncliffe. Their children were: John Walter Edward (b.1866), who married Cecil Victoria Constance Kerr, daughter of 9th Marquess of Lothian, and secondly Alice Pearl Crake; Robert Henry (b.1867), who married Alice Fisher; Rachel Cecily (b.1868), who married Henry William, Lord Forster; and James Francis (b.1873), who died young. John Douglas (1809–60) Lord Scott, son of Charles, 4th Duke and younger brother of Walter the 5th Duke of Buccleuch. He inherited the estate of Dunchurch near Rugby. He entered the Grenadier Guards in 1827, becoming Lieutenant and Captain in 1831 and retiring in 1833. He was also a member of the Jedforest Club. A Tory in politics, he was said to be dashing in appearance and having a great command of language. He stood as a candidate in the 1832 post-Reform Act election in Roxburghshire, but was defeated by Capt. George Elliot. After voting himself in Hawick in 1832 he claimed he was attacked by a mob, who tried to pull him from his horse and was struck on the cheek by a rock; those on the other side of the story claimed that the incident started when his servant struck at the people around him on leaving the Tower Inn. He was also in Hawick for the 1835 election, when there were near riots around the Tower Knowe; in this election he defeated Capt. Elliot of Minto by 76 votes (and there was much accusation of ‘faggot’ voters at the time). He remained M.P. until 1837, but thereafter was never induced to stand again. He was also known as a keen sportsman, yachtsman, angler and hunter. In 1836 he married Alicia Anne, elder daughter of John Spottiswoode; she composed the tune for ‘Annie Laurie’ as well as other songs, and died in 1900. He had no children. He is buried at Dunchurch, Warwickshire, where his wife designed a sun-dial in his memory. Verses were written about him standing in the 1832 election – ‘...And shall we then give the dear freedom we've won To vapourising bullies like booby Lord John?’ John Charles (1864–1935) 2nd son of William, the 6th Duke, He trained for the Navy, passing his entrance examination at the age of 12, and served for several years at sea, reaching the rank of Lieutenant. However, his naval career was cut short by the accidental death of his elder brother Walter Henry in 1886, when he became Earl of Dalkeith. He became the 7th Duke of Buccleuch on the death of his father in 1914. He was Conservative M.P. for Roxburghshire 1895–1906 while Earl of Dalkeith. He was Deputy Lieutenant of Roxburgh 1915–35 and also served as a J.P. for Selkirkshire and Roxburghshire. He was also Captain General of the Royal Company of Archers and Honorary Colonel in the Royal Artillery (Territorial Army). He was Lord Clerk Register for Scotland 1926–35. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1889. He was also Honorary President of the Hawick & Wilton Cricket Club and of Hawick R.F.C. He was made an Honorary Burgess in 1904 when the Library was opened, and was present at the unveiling of the Horse Monument in 1914. He also gave the Playing Fields to the Town in 1933. In 1893 he married Margaret Alice Bridgeman, 2nd daughter of Viscount Newport. Their children were: Margaret Ida, who married Adm. Sir Geoffrey Alan brooke Hawkins; Walter John, who succeeded; Lt.-Col. William Walter, who married Rachel Douglas-Home, daughter of the 13th Earl of Home; Sybil Anne, who married Charles Bathurst Hele Phipps; Alice Christabel, who married Henry William Frederick Albert Windsor, 1st Duke of Gloucester (and son of George V) and lived to be 102; Mary Theresa, who married David George Brownlow Cecil, Marquis of Exeter; Angela Christine Rose, who married Vice-Adm. Sir Peter Dawnay; and George Francis John, who married Mary Wina Mannin Bishopp. He died at Bowhill and was buried at Dalkeith. Richard Walter John (1954– ) 10th Duke of Buccleuch, succeeding on the death of his father in 2007. He long managed the Buccleuch estates as the Earl of Dalkeith. He was also Regimental Trustee of the K.O.S.B., and has been involved in several television and arts bodies. He married Lady Elizabeth Kerr (daughter of the Marquess of Lothian) and their children are: Walter; Lord Charles; and Lady Amabel. Lady Sybil Anne (1899–1990) 4th eldest child of John Charles, 7th Duke of Buccleuch. At the age of 14 she was given the honour of unveiling the Horse Memorial in Hawick. In 1919 she married Charles Bathurst Hele Phipps... and they had 4 children. Walter Francis (1806–1884) 5th Duke of Buccleuch and 7th Duke of Queensberry, son of Charles Montagu-Scott. He was born at Dalkeith House and succeeded when he was 13. He was the Honorable Walter Francis Montagu until the death of his elder brother, then had the title of Lord Whitchesther until his father became Duke after which he was the Earl of Dalkeith. He was a Commissioner of Selkirkshire (as the Earl of Dalkeith) in 1819. He succeeded to the Buccleuch titles on the death of his father in 1819. His guardian was his uncle, Lord Montagu, and he was sent to Eton to be educated, but had to leave due to ill-health. He later attended St. John’s College, Cambridge. He was made an Honorary Burgess when passing through Hawick for the first time in 1821. In 1822 he was host to George IV at Dalkeith House for a fortnight (and repeated this for Queen Victoria in 1842). Celebrations for his coming of age (in 1827) were somewhat tempered by the recent death of his grandmother, Duchess Elizabeth. He subscribed to 3 copies of Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. In 1827 there was a great celebration in Hawick, with an ox roasted at the Tower Knowe, distributed to all comers, along with 500 loaves and a hogshead of ale, with the Town illuminated along with fireworks and a beacon at Crumhaugh-hill. He was made Lord Lieutenant of Midlothian in 1828 and Roxburghshire in 1841. In 1829 he took his seat in the House of Lords as the Earl of Duncaster, and was a staunch Conservative in politics. However, in later years he changed his position and became a supporter of the repeal of the Corn Laws. He had Granton Harbour built in 1835. In 1838 he became Captain-General of the Royal Company of Archers. In 1839 there was a banquet held at Branhxholme to celebrate his return from a long trip to Europe. A pavilion in the style of a baronial hall was erected on the Castle green (by Smith of Darnick), able to seat about 1,000 people; the chairman of the event was James Grieve of Branhxholme Braes and above the chair was a buck’s head with the word ‘Belden’ in gold lettering. Sometimes referred to as ‘the Good Duke Walter’, among his gifts to the town were Hawick Old Parish Church, the repair of St. Mary’s, St. Cuthbert’s Episcopal Church, parsonage and school, Buccleuch School, school-house and grounds, St. Mary’s School, the sites for the Corn Exchange, Cottage Hospital and the Industrial (Drumlanrig) School, and facilities for the Allan and Dod water works. He performed the turning on ceremonies for both the Allan and Dod supplies. He also remitted customs that were traditionally levied by the Baron, cancelled a debt owed to him by the Road Trust, feued land to the Hawick Working Men’s Building Society, and gave fields to the Bowling and Cricket Clubs at minimal rent. He served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He became a Privy Councillor in 1842 and Lord Privy Seal in 1842–46 in Sir Robert Peel’s administration, and was also President of the Council, as well as being ‘Gold Stick’ in 2 coronations. He regularly attended the House of Lords, but seldom spoke. He was Colonel of the Edinburgh Militia, the ‘Duke’s Canaries’. He was also President of the Highland Agricultural Society, the Society of Antiquaries, the Architectural Society of Scotland and the British Association as well as Chancellor of Glasgow University, Vice-President of the Royal Institution for the Encouragement of the Fine Arts and leading member of the Board of Trustees for Manufactures. He was heavily involved in agricultural improvements, and headed the subscription list for enlarging Edinburgh university. He received honorary degrees from Glasgow, Edinburgh and Cambridge Universities. As a member of the Bannatyne Club he funded the publication of the ‘Chartulary of Melrose’ in 1837. In the 1850s he wrote to the tenants of his farms, urging them to preserve any monuments of antiquity. A dinner was held in his honour in Edinburgh in 1878 on the occasion of his jubilee as landlord, with an illuminated address being signed by 700 tenants. His statue stands in front of St. Giles Kirk in Edinburgh, with a decorated pedestal showing scenes from the history of his family. The Buccleuch Memorial was erected in his honour, Duke Street was named after him, and a portrait of him by Knighton Warren (commissioned by the Council) hangs in the Town Hall. In 1829 he married Lady Charlotte Anne Thynne, youngest daughter of Thomas, 2nd Marquis of Bath, who was Mistress of the Robes to Queen Victoria; she died in 1895, aged 84. Their children were: William Henry Walter (b.1831), who succeeded as 6th Duke; Henry John (b.1832); Walter Charles (b.1834), Captain of the 15th Hussars, who married Anna Maria, daughter of Sir William Edmund Cradock Hartopp; Francis Robert (b.1837), who died aged 2; Charles Thomas (b.1839), Admiral in the Royal Navy; Victoria Alexandrina (b.1844), who married the Marquess of Lothian and secondly married Bertram Talbot; Margaret Elizabeth (b.1846), who married Donald Cameron of Lochiel; and Mary Charlotte.
Montagu-Douglas-Scott

(b.1851), who married Walter Rodolph Trefusis. He died at Bowhill after being Duke for an unprecedented 65 years, and was buried at Dalkeith.

Walter Francis John ‘Johnnie’ (1923–2007) 9th Duke of Buccleuch, son of Walter John, he attended Eton and served in the Navy during WWII. He then studied agriculture and forestry at Oxford and became Director of the Buccleuch Estates in 1949. He served as a Roxburghshire County Councillor 1958–60. He was Conservative M.P. for Edinburgh North, 1960–73, as Earl of Dalkeith. He was also Captain in the Royal Company of Archers, Lord Lieutenant of Roxburgh, Ettrick & Lauderdale, President of the Royal Highland and Agricultural Society for Scotland and served on committees for many benevolent organisations, including advocating for those with disabilities. In 1971 he injured his spine in a hunting accident, and was then confined to a wheelchair. In 1973 he succeeded to the Buccleuch titles on the death of his father. He was then in the House of Lords until the removal of hereditary peers in 1999. He was made a Knight of the Thistle in 1978, and changed his surname back to simply ‘Scott’. He married Jane McNeill of Colonsay in 1953 (she had been a famous model) and they had 4 children: Richard, who succeeded; Lord William, who married Hafize Berrin Torolsan; Lady Charlotte-Anne, who married Count Bernard de Castellane; and Lord Damian, who married Elizabeth Powis. He was the biggest landowner in the U.K. (about 400 square miles), and owned many great art treasures (including da Vinci’s ‘Madonna and the Yarnwinder’, stolen from Drumlanrig Castle in 2003). He died at Bowhill and his funeral was held at Melrose Abbey. Walter Henry (1861–1886) eldest son of William Henry, 6th Duke of Buccleuch. He had the title Lord Eskdale. He died from a gun accident when stalking deer near Achnacarry, and so the Dukedom was eventually inherited by his younger brother John Charles.

Walter John (1894–1973) son of John Charles, he became the 8th Duke of Buccleuch in 1935. He was educated at Eton and Christ Church College, Oxford. He was a soldier, politician, farmer and banker, as well as Lord Steward of Her Majesty’s Household and Chancellor of the Order of the Thistle. He was Commanding Officer of the 4th Battalion K.O.S.B. 1923–30. He was M.P. for Roxburgh and Selkirk Counties 1929–35 (while Lord Dalkeith) and was made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick in 1933. He was also Lord Lieutenant of Roxburghshire 1932-73 and Captain General of the Royal Company of Archers, as well as being a J.P. for Roxburghshire and Dumfriesshire and Deputy-Lieutenant of Selkirkshire. He served as Aide-de-Camp to the Governor-General of Canada. He received honorary degrees from Edinburgh and St. Andrews Universities. In 1921 he married Vreda Esther Mary, daughter of Maj. William Frank Lascelles. Their children were: Elizabeth Diana, who married Hugh Algeron Percy, 10th Duke of Northumberland; Walter Francis John, who succeeded; and Caroline Margaret, who married Sir Ian Hedworth John Little Gilmour, Baron of Craigmillar. William Henry Walter (1831–1914) son of Walter, he had been Earl of Dalkeith, and became the 6th Duke of Buccleuch and 8th of Queensberry in 1884. He was educated at Eton and Christ Church College, Oxford. He was M.P. for Mid-Lothian 1853–68 and 1874–80 and stood unsuccessfully against Gladstone in the 1880 election. He was also Lord Lieutenant for Dumfriesshire from 1858 and Lieut.-Gen. of the Royal Company of Archers. He served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justic of the Peace in Roxburghshire. In 1885 he was made an Honorary Burgess when the foundation stone of the new Town Hall was laid and the Cottage Hospital opened. He was President of the Hawick Fine Art Association, the Cottage Hospital and the Upper Teviotdale Fisheries Association and Patron of the Archaeological Society and the West Teviotdale Agricultural Society. He presented a prize bat for the best batsman of the Hawick and Wilton Cricket Club in the late 1800s. In 1901 he was made a Privy Councillor. He also opened the Museum in Wilton Lodge in 1910 and was presented with a golden key in commemoration of his recent golden wedding. In 1859 he married Louisa Jane Hamilton, 3rd daughter of James, Duke of Abercorn; she was Mistress of the Robes to Queen Victoria and Queen Alexandra. Their children were: Walter Henry, Lord Eskdale, who died in a shooting accident aged 25; John Charles, who succeeded; George William, Captain in the 10th Hussars, who married Elizabeth Emily Manners, youngest daughter of the Duke of Rutland; Henry Francis, Major in the Royal Scots, who died unmarried; Herbert Andrew, Captain in the Irish Guards, who planted the British flag at Pretoria, and married Marie Josephine, daughter of James Edwards; Francis George, Aide-de-Camp to the Viceroy of India and married Eileen Nina Sibell Elliot-Murray-Kynynmound, daughter of the 4th Earl of Minto; Katherine Mary, married Major Thomas Brand, eldest son of Viscount Hampden; and Constance Anne, who married Douglas Halyburton, son of the 1st Earl Cairns. Lord William Walter (1896–1958) son of John Charles, the 7th Duke of Buccleuch and brother of Walter John, the 8th Duke. He was educated at Eton and Sandhurst. He was Captain in the 10th Hussars, received the Military Cross in 1919 and was Aide-de-Camp to the Governor-General of Canada 1925–26. He was also admitted to the Royal Company of Archers. He was Conservative M.P. for Roxburghshire & Selkirkshire 1935–1950, losing to Liberal A.J.F. MacDonald. In the 1930s he was connected with Sir Oswald Mosley’s ‘January Club’ and British Union of Fascists. He is also referred to as Lt. Col. Scott. He married Lady Rachel Douglas-Hone, daughter of the 13th Earl of Home and they had 5 children: Margaret Elizabeth; Frances Henrietta; Rosemary Alice; Jean Louise; and Walter William. He lived at Eildon Hall, St. Boswells. (the name is also sometimes un-hyphenated and occasionally spelled ‘Montague’).

Montagu-Scott (mon-ta-gew-sko’) n. Charles William Henry (1772–1819) eldest surviving son of Henry Scott of Buccleuch and Lady Elizabeth Montagu. He was called the Earl of Dalkeith during his father’s lifetime. Educated at Eton, he was an English M.P. for Marlborough, Ludgershall, St. Michaels and Marlborough (again) in the years 1793–1807. He was called to the House of Lords as Baron Tynedale in 1807 and became the 4th Duke of Buccleuch and 6th of Queensberry in 1812. He was Lord Lieutenant of Selkirkshire 1794–1819 and Dumfriesshire 1810–19, as well as Colonel Commandant of the Dumfries Militia. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1813. He was also President of the Pitt Club of Scotland, Governor of the Royal Bank and President of the Highland Society. He provided assistance to both Sir Walter Scott and the Ettrick Shepherd (to whom he gave free tenancy of the farm of Altrieve), and had the ‘Lay of the Last Minstrel’ dedicated to him. He was on the subscription list for Jamieson’s Scots dictionary in 1808. He was present at the ‘Carterhaugh Baa’ in 1815. He repaired Drumlanrig Castle and generally improved the Queensberry estates. However, Robert Wilson describes how he was reluctant to grant feus for woollen mill development on his property around Hawick. It is said that he led a relatively quiet and religious life, managing his estates rather than spending time in London. In 1795 he married Harriet Katherine Townsend, 4th daughter of Thomas, Viscount Sydney; she died in 1814. He was succeeded by his eldest son Walter Francis (1806–84), when the surname Montagu-Douglas-Scott began to be used. His other children were: Anne Elizabeth (1796–1844), who died unmarried, aged 47; George Henry (1798–1808), Lord Scott, who died of measles while a schoolboy at Eton; Charlotte Albinia (1799–1828), who married James Thomas, 4th Earl of Courtown, and died in Rome; Isabella Mary (1800–29), who married Peregrine Francis Cost; Katherine Frances (1803–14), who died aged 10; John Douglas (1809–60), who was M.P. for Roxburghshire; Margaret Harriet (1811–46), who married Charles Viscount Marsham, who was later Earl of Romney; and Harriet Janet Sarah (1814–70), who married Rev. Edward Moore, Honorary Canon of Canterbury Cathedral. In ill-health for at least 6 years, he died in Lisbon, where he had gone for his health, and is buried at Warkton. Henry James see Henry James Scott (the surnames are confusing during this generation).

Montagu Street (mon-ta-gew-stree’) n. street in Newcastleton off North Hermitage Street, opposite Whitchester Street.

Montbenger (mont-beng-gur) n. lands in the upper Yarrow valley, near where the B709 meets the A708. These were Crown lands in the latter part of the 15th century, held by the Crichtons of Cranston Riddell in the early 16th century. It was owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch in the 16th and 17th centuries. William Elliot of Horsleyhill claimed he was owed ‘mails’ for his steading at the Easter part there in 1575/6. There were Scotts there in the 17th century (also written ‘Montbenger’; it is ‘Montengeris’ in 1456, ‘Montbereger’ in 1468, ‘Monbreneris’ in 1471, ‘Montbereris Estir et Westir’ in 1502, ‘Montberger Wester’ and ‘Montberger Eister’ in 1541, ‘Montbergeare, Estir and Westir’ in 1542, ‘Estir and Wester Montbenger’ in 1550, Montbenger Ester’ in 1575/6, ‘Eister et Wester Montberringeris’ in 1634 and ‘Easter and Wester Montbengeris’ in 1663).

Monteath (mon-teeth) n. Miss (19th/20th C.) of St. Boswells. She rode on Common Riding Friday in 1914, perhaps the first woman to do this.

Monteath Mausoleum (mon-teeth-maw-zo-lee-un) n. mausoleum just west of Lilliard’s Edge, built in a domed Byzantine style with decorations reminiscent of India. It is the tomb of Gen. Sir Thomas Monteath Douglas.
Monteviot Hoose

(of Stonebyres, Lanarkshire), who had a distinguished military career in the early 19th century, spending much of his time in India. It was designed by the Edinburgh architects Peddie & Kinnear and erected in 1864 by Harkness, stonemasons of Hawick, under the supervision of Sir Thomas himself (with the lions carved by Alex Pirnie). The general took up residence there in 1868.

Monteviot Hoose (mon-teev-yi'-hoos) n. stately home about 2 miles south of Jedburgh. The lands there were held by the Earl of Lothian in 1678. The mansion was created from a farm-house around 1740, with much later alteration. The lands were described in 1788 as ‘Spittal, now called Mount Teviot’. The house was lived in by Adm. John Elliot, then the Kerrs, and is now the seat of the Marquess of Lothian. The landscaping of the estate is on a grand scale compared with the modest size of the house – ‘Here stands Mountvitiou, opening to the eye A second paradise for rural sweets . . . ’[JR] (the name first appears as ‘Tevioutmount’ in 1665, although the area was formerly known as ‘Ancrum Spittal’).

Montgomery (mont-gu-mu-ree) n. George (18th C.) witnessed a baptism in Hawick for surgeon Walter Scott in 1731. George (b.1824/5) shoemaker in Hawick. In 1861 he was a boarder with Walter Ballantyne at 7 Back Row, and was employing 3 men. His wife was Elizabeth and their children included George, Elizabeth, John and Walter. George (d.1835) cooper of the Kirk Wynd, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. James (1721–1803) born in Peebleshire, he was appointed Sheriff there at age 27, then served as M.P. for Dumfriesshire and for Peebleshire before becoming Solicitor General and then Lord Advocate. He was often called upon as a legal arbitrator, and in that role he was asked for his opinion on Hawick’s rights to the Common in 1765, driven by the Town’s intention to put the land to better use. His opinion at that time was that the Common belonged jointly to the successors to the particates named in the Charter of 1537 and ‘neither the Duke of Buccleuch as superior, nor the Burgesses who have neither houses nor lands, are entitled to any share in the division’. After the Council decided to let parts of the Common adjacent to the neighbouring lands, he was again asked his opinion in 1766. This time his opinion had changed somewhat and he suggested that the Duke’s tenants may have a right of pasturage on the Common, and he recommended formal arbitration to resolve the issue. He appears to have given no weight at all to the annual marking of the boundaries of the Common by the Burgesses of Hawick. He was in fact later the issuer of the decision to give 30% of the Common Moor to Buccleuch and other neighbouring landowners; this despite the fact that he was a close friend of the Duke of Buccleuch (working in Parliament to pass the Bank of Ayr bill, which directly affected both the Buccleuch and Queensberry estates), and hence could hardly be considered to be impartial. In 1777 he was appointed Chief Baron of the Exchequer. In 1778 the Magistrates of Hawick presented him with a carpet, stating that he ‘did not know that any carpets of such size, without a seam, had been made in this country’. He purchased Stanhope in Peebleshire and was said to be enthusiastic about agricultural improvement. He retired in 1801 as Baronet of Stobo. James (18th C.) recorded at Hummelknowshaugh in 1780. He married Isabel Douglas and their children included George (b.1780). James (b.c.1805) recorded as a horse-keeper on the Fore Row in 1841. His wife was Sarah, and their children included Mary, James, Agnes and Elizabeth. James (19th/20th C.) local cricketer, having the highest batting average for the Hawick and Wilton club in the 13 years from 1886 until 1898. He also scored 43 in a match for Roxburgh County against an M.C.C. visiting side in 1895. Janet (18th/19th C.) grocer on the Howegate, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. John (b.1814/5) shoemaker who lived at ‘Kirkgate’ (i.e. St. Mary’s Place) according to the 1851 census. He is probably the John listed as a shopkeeper on Needle Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Isabel and their children included Agnes, Elizabeth, Janet and Ann H. His wife may have been Isabel Cairns, recorded as a school mistress in 1841. His first wife Agnes Smith died in 1840. Robert (16th C.) minister at Stirling, he was appointed as titular Archbishop of Glasgow in 1581, even although he had opposed episcopalianism. However, these were troubled times, his appointment was disputed, there were violent clashes at Glasgow Cathedral and he was deprived in 1585. He was later minister in Ayrshire. William Augustus (1872–1948) born in Hawick, he studied piano, organ and music theory, graduating with a B. Mus. from Durham in 1897. He was organist and choirmaster in Gainsborough Parish in England and emigrated to Canada in 1913. There he was organist and choirmaster in Sherbrooke, Calgary and Halifax. He published more than 100 musical compositions, including works for voice, organ, piano and violin (also spelled ‘Montgomerie’ and ‘Montgomery’).

He then worked as a chartered accountant before taking over as Liberal M.P. for Tweeddale, Ettrick & Lauderdale from David Steel in 1997. After boundary changes he was elected M.P. for the new Berwickshire, Roxburgh & Selkirk seat in 2005. Re-elected in 2010 he became Secretary of State for Scotland (also written ‘Moor’, ‘More’ and ‘Mour’; the name may have formerly been the same as Muir).

Moorfield see Muirfield
Moormaw (moor-naw) n. former farm in Hassendean Parish, later called ‘Lees’, with ‘West Lees’ still existing. Charters for the Easter and Wester parts was granted by John Scott of Burnhead to John Scott, Vicar of Hawick in 1535 and 1539. And in 1544 East Moormaw was sold by John Scott, Vicar of Hawick back to John Scott of Burnhead. However, in 1606 William Scott in Catslack was served heir to these lands of his great-grand-uncle, John Scott, Vicar of Hawick; at that point Easter Moormaw was a ‘40 shilling land’. It is recorded being occupied by a branch of the Scott family in 1666. It is probably the place where Walter Scott of Catslack paid the land tax on £52 in 1663 and John Scott of Catslack in 1678. It seems possible it is the ‘milmaw–’ in Hassendean Parish, where Andrew Donald and Thomas Sanderson were located at the time of the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. It is the ‘Mowmaw, or Millmaw, commonly called Lees’ owned by William Scott of Burnhead and valued at £52 according to the Land Tax Rolls of 1811 (also written ‘Muremaw’; it is ‘Mormaw’ in 1544 and transcribed ‘Eister Mirmawok’ in 1607; see also Milma).

Moorsom (moor-sum) n. Jermyn (d.1951) married Pamela Irene Milborne-Swinnerton-Pilkington and lived at Hyndlee. His brother, Raisley Stuart (1892–1981) was involved with the Bloomsbury set between the Wars.

moose (moos) n. a mouse – ‘ee’re no feard o a wee moose, ir ee?’, ‘Well aw feel like a moose in Hamlin toon’ [MB], ‘This century-auld cat and a wee moose, ir ee?’, ‘Well aw feel like a moosey (also spelled ‘moosie’).

Moose Gray (moos-see-grä) n. nickname for some male members of the local Gray family.

Moosey Tofts (moos-see-tofts) n. nickname in use in the early 19th century.

moothie (moo-thee) n. a mouth-organ, harmonica.

mooth-poke (mooth-pök) n., arch. a horse’s nose-bag.

mootle (moo’-ul) v., arch. to fritter away, nibble bit by bit – ‘A Child is said to mootle its piece’ [JoJ], ‘A was vext A hedna socht a piece i ma pootch for ti mootle in the road’ [ECS] (also moot).
moppy (mo-pee) n., arch. a bunny, childish name for a rabbit – ‘...ti gîrn the bits o moppies skiltlin aboot’ [ECS], ‘Ther’s a moppie gaen skiddlin owre that paster the now, duist’ [ECS] (also written ‘moppie’).

Morlaw (mor-law, -lô) n. Duncan (15th C.) witness to Hawick’s earliest known sasine in 1453. His name is written ‘Morlay’. It is easy to imagine that he was an ancestor of the later Morlows in Hawick. Isobel (17th C.) recorded in Hawick in 1641. She was ordered to pay money that she owed Helen Deans as her fee for a period in the previous year, ‘but assoilzied fra her hois and schone’. Presumably Deans was a servant of hers. Janet (17th C.) resident of Dean Mill recorded in a 1650 list of communicants (recorded as ‘Jannet Morling’). She may have been one of the last descendants of John to have the family name. James (16th C.) recorded as witness to a Hawick sasine of 1558, where his name is recorded as ‘Morlaw’. It is easy to imagine that he was son of John from the 1537 Charter. John (16th C.) recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books of 1530/1 when he purchased rigs from William and Adam Ker in Shaws. In 1532 he purchased from William Walker a croft and a tenement in Hawick. He was recorded as being ‘John Morlawe of Todshawe’, suggesting that he owned the lands of Todshaw in the Borthwick valley. His tenement was at the Tower Knowe, described as being ‘on the north side of the king’s street between the tenement of Alexander Paslaw on the east, the Slytryk water on the west and north and the said king’s street on the south’, while the croft ‘lies on the east side of the Slytryk water with the Teviot water on the north and the tenement of James Blair on the west’. The croft is surely what became known as Morlaw’s Croft (and so the ‘east’ in the Selkirk record must be an error for ‘west’). Perhaps the same John is recorded in 1532/3 when he purchased further land in Selkirk from John Scott. He purchased further land in Selkirk from the Kers of Shaws in 1534 and also complained that they owed him 2 bolls of flour. In 1535 he bought a tenement in Selkirk from Alan ‘Mithag’. He is also mentioned in the 1537 charter as being the holder of 3 participles on the north side of the main street in Hawick, with his surname written ‘Morlo’. He was still recorded as owner of a tenement in ‘Peilgait’ in Selkirk in 1543. Thomas (16th C.) owner of a tenement on the main street in Selkirk in 1528. In 1530 he gained a rig of land near Selkirk and in 1531 another tenement, according to the Protocol Books. In 1538 he purchased a small piece of land in East Haining. In 1539 he was one of the tenants who Thomas Scott warned to remove themselves from his lands of Haining. However, in 1540 he had sasine for an eighth part of East Haining. In 1542/3 he purchased a tenement in Selkirk and further lands in 1544 (also spelled ‘Morlaw’, ‘Morlawe’, ‘Morlo’, ‘Morolawe’, etc.; this may be the same surname as the modern ‘Morland’/’Moreland’ or Morley).

Morlaw’s Croft (mor-laz-kroft) n. area of around 2 acres lying to the west of what became Orrock Place. The name was in use in the 18th century, but by the 19th century became referred to as ‘the Back o the Yairds’. An item in the Selkirk Protocol Books for 1532 records how the croft was sold to John ‘Morlawe’ of Todshaw by William Walker, nephew and heir of John Walker. It is described as being ‘on the east [which must be an error for ‘west’] side of the Slytryk water with the Teviot water on the north and the tenement of James Blair on the west’.

Morlo see Morlaw

Mormons (mor-minz) n., pl. members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, founded in the U.S.A. in the 1820s. Among their activities are sending young men (and now occasionally women) on two year missions, isolated from friends and family, to try to make converts. There was apparently a mormon from Salt Lake City living off Denholm Main Street in the years around 1900. Missionaries have been showing up in Hawick since ??.

morn (mörn) n. tomorrow is generally referred to as the morn – ‘let’s gaun oot the morn night’; ‘It’s duist an off-pit o teime hevin ti gaun there the morn’ [ECS].

mornin see mornin

mornin (mör-neen, -nin) n. morning – ‘how er ee this mornin?’, ‘she’s still in mornin this mornin’, ‘A’ll cry in as A gaun bye the morn’s mornin’ [ECS] (also spelled ‘morneneen’ and most commonly pronounced with een; the time after this but before noon is often called the forenin).
Morpeth (mor-peth) n. town in Northumberland on the Wansbeck River, an important market centre, with a bridge built by Thomas Telford, and an interesting old clock tower. Morpeth Castle was once the seat of the Lords Dacre, Wardens of the Marches. It was also the site of a Covenan-ter’s siege of 1644. It has celebrated the Morpeth Gathering in April since 1968, with the ‘Border Cavalcade’ commemorating Lord Greyseoke’s return from Otterburn in 1388. Population 14,400.

Morren (mo-rin) n. John (1863–1950) born in Auchindoir in Aberdeenshire, in 1902 he moved from Aberdeen City Police to be Superintendent of the Hawick Burgh force. He lived at Glenview on Orchrad Terrace. He remained as Chief Constable until 1909, taking over as Chief Constable of the Berwickshire, Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire Constabularies. He retired in 1933 and moved back to Aberdeen. He was awarded the King George V Coronation (Scottish Police) Medal, as well as the O.B.E. He can be seen in a photographic portrait in full uniform, with remarkable moustache.

Morris Clyde (mo-riis-klid) n. pen-name for the writer of the poem ‘The Hawick Gathering Cry’.

Morrishaa (mo-ris-haw) n. Morrishall, former farmstead in Wilton Parish, between Wilton Dean and Whitehaugh, near Brieryhill, lying beside the modern Whitehaugh Road. John Morton and family were there in at least 1835–1851. It was probably deserted in the 1850s and derelict soon after. It was also known as ‘Murrayshall’ (it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Morrison (mo-ree-sin) n. Alexander (17th/18th C.) son of Robert, baker in Edinburgh, his mother being a Home. In 1693 he was served heir portioner, along with James Dickson and John Shoreswood, in the Barony of Home, inherited from Jean, daughter of John Home. This included superiority over lands in Hassendean, and explicitly Appletreehall, as well as the lands of Redfordgreen, Drycleuchlea, Huntly and Hartwoodburn. James (15th/16th C.) recorded as a fugitive in 1502, this being for the murder of John and James Jackson. William Douglas of Cavers dealt with his escheated goods. Rev. James (1732–1824) born in Perth and Kinross, he was licensed by the Associate Presbytery of Earlston in 1756 and in the same year ordained as minister at Norham (just across the Border). He was Clerk of the Anti-Burgher Synod and Presbytery for more than 50 years. He is one of the people claimed to have started the first Sunday School, this being in 1756 or 1757. It is recorded that in 1766 he was in Hawick to perform a baptism for Robert Brown and Agnes Scott, members of the Anti-Burgher congregation, who did not yet have a local minister of their own. It thus appears that he may have been a temporary preacher at the Green Kirk, before John Young arrived. He is buried at Norham. James (1816–93) evangelical preacher who was one of the founders of the Evangelical Union, after being ousted from the Synod of the United Secession Church in 1841. His first visit to the Borders was to preach in Hawick and Denholm in a December of the mid-1840s. On one Sunday he preached at the old Cameronian Chapel in Denholm, then in the open air at the Tower Knowe to a crowd of 700–800, and finally in the Subscription Rooms (with the seats removed)
and moved back to Aberdeen. He was awarded
the King George V Coronation (Scottish Police)

the Subscription Rooms (with the seats removed)
to perhaps 1,000. This was part of the impetus for forming Hawick Congregational Kirk in 1848. He returned in early 1849 to formally induct Alexander Duff as the first E.U. minister in Hawick and later to open the new church. James (b.1829/30) from Lanark, he was head gardener at Wauchope in the 1860s. His wife was Helen and their children included John, Anne H. and Elizabeth. John (b.1822/3) head gardener at Weens in the 1860s. From Lanark, he was probably younger brother of James, gardener at Wauchope.
His wife was Mary and they had a daughter Mary J.D. Robert (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He was described as late Bailie in 1735 in the deposition where the widow of Robert Scott of Fal-ashed sold her property on the Howegate to Patrick Hardie. William (16th C.) tailor who was owed money according to the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1574. It is unclear if he was from the Hawick area or Edinburgh. William (19th C.) earthenware and glass dealer on Needle Street, listed in Slater’s 1852 directory.
He could be the William listed in the 1851 census as a boot closer from Edinburgh, living as a lodger on the Round Close. William, J.P.
(1839–92) born in Craig Madderty, Perthshire, he became a detective with the Leith Constabulary, then came to Hawick around 1865. He acted as Super-intendent of Police and Procurator-Fiscal for the Burgh for 11 years, as well as being Fire-master and managing the Hawick Advertiser from 1876–90. His company was printer, publisher, book-seller and stationer at 3 High Street. He was on the Town Council for at least a dozen years, serving as a Bailie for most of that time, Morrison Cottage

and being a candidate for Provost. For several years he provided the refreshments for the riders at Myslawggreen on the Friday of the Common Riding. He was the first Bailie to carry the Flag at the Chase in 1887 when that practice was revived (and the Provost of the day could not ride). However, in 1890 he galloped round the course with the Flag, to the cheers of the crowd, but the decision of the Common Riding organisers, since it was against all tradition. He was also Chairman of the Parochial Board, as well as being involved with the School Board, the Gas Company board, the Hawick Bowling Club, the Masons and the Common Riding. He was a Liberal in politics and was a candidate for Provost in 1890. He left Hawick suddenly in 1890 and died accidentally near Seattle (U.S.A.) a year and a half later. His wife was Margaret Gregg, who wrote some poetry under the pseudonym ‘M.G.M.’ She lived at Morrison Cottage, which gave its name to Morrison Place. Mrs. William nee Gregg (1834–98) wife of Bailie Morrison, whom she married in Leith in 1862. They had 6 children in Hawick. She wrote poetry in the local papers and in ‘Modern Scottish Poets’ using the initials M.G.M. She died at 3 Morrison Place.

Morrison Cottage (mo-ree-sin-ko’-eej) n. house built by William Morrison on what became known as Morrison Place, and still exists there.

Morrison Place (mo-ree-sin-plis) n. originally part of the ‘Green Wynd’ it was named in 1883 after Morrison Cottage, built by William Morrison there. The street was popularly known in the 19th century as Hospital Brae. It is likely that it runs along part of what was known as the ‘Common Vennel at Myreslawgreen’ at the time of the 1537 Charter.

Morrison’s (mo-ree-sinz) n. W. Morrison & Co., printers, publishers, stationers, booksellers and bookbinders at 3 High Street in the latter part of the 19th century. It was run by William Morrison, joined by his son, also William. The company’s ‘Business Directory’ came out in at least the year 1890.

mort (mor’) n., arch. the skin of a sheep that has died a natural death – ‘Mort-woo, Wool of such skins’ [JoJ] (also ‘murt’).

mort-cloth (mor’-kloth) n., arch. a black velvet pall placed over coffins on their way to the cemetery. The Hawick Parish one was hired out by the kirk session, the money used to help the poor of the Parish. Deaths were often recorded in the ledgers as ‘mort-cloth’ hires. The Hawick Parish ‘mort-cloth’ was used from at least 1712, and in 1720 a new one was provided by William Elliot of London (who was born at Southfield); this being of Genoan velvet and much finer than the Dutch velvet it replaced. The new cloth was kept by one of the elders (Bailie Ruecastle in 1721). There are also records of a 2nd (presumably the older vel-vet one, sometimes called ‘the little cloth’) and even 3rd cloth (possibly just of cheap black material) being rented for lesser fees; in the mid-18th century there were the ‘best’, ‘second’ and ‘littell’ ‘cloaths’. The use of the cloth was widely debated in the mid-19th century, it fell into disfavour by the 1860s and is said to have been last used for Tibbie Leithead in 1870. The fee was 18 shillings Scots for those in the town and 20 shillings for the country part of the parish. There was also one in use in Wilton Parish. Other mort-cloths owned by incorporated trades were in use until 1721, with a ‘memorial’ against the use of private mort-cloths issued in 1726 – ‘Wm Dickson gave in account of ye profites of ye 2 mortcloths …’ [PR1724], ‘This day a man in the Hungreyhill was buried having the Mortcloath payed’ [Ash], ‘O, have ye heard the news of late. That things have come to sic a state, The fouk o’ Hawick are talking great Against our bonnie mortcloth, Some say it is a gross abuse, Some say they’ll it nae langer use. And some they will not pay the dues O’ hiring out our mortcloth’ [TP] (also spelled as one word ‘mortcloth’).

mortify (mor-ti-fl) v., arch. to bequeath in perpetuity, particularly when given to a public body – ‘I hereby mortifie and dispone to the said Paroch of Hawick all and haill the Soume of Nine thousand Merks Scots money to ly as ane mortified fund’ [PR], ‘…who are to bestow the money mortified by the late Mr Alexander Orrok, our minister here …’ [PR1714] (Scots Law term).

mortification (mor-ti-f-k-shun) n., arch. property or money bequeathed to charity – ‘And by the said mortification her Grace is patron of both for presenting the schoolmaster when vacant …’ [PR1714].

mortifier (mor-ti-fl-ur) n., arch. one who mortifies, person who bequeaths something to a public body – ‘They in the highlands gote the best part thereof according to the desire of the mortifier’ [PR715].

Mortimer (mor’-i-nur, -ne-) n. Rev. Cyrus M. minister of Robertson from 1930–54. He Morton (mor-'in) n. Adam (15th C.) bequeathed 6 sheep in the 1491/2 will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme. He is listed as ‘Ade Mortoun’. Adam (17th C.) resident of Briery Yards according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably the Adam, married to Anna Henderson, whose children, baptised in Wilton Parish, included Helen (b.1695), Anna (b.1702) and Jean (b.1709) He is probably the Adam who in 1698 witnessed a baptism for William Scott in Lees and Isabella Morton (perhaps his sister). Andrew (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He witnessed a baptism for John Scott, tenant in Faulnash, in 1706. George ‘Geordie’ (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘in Harrett’ (presumably Harwood) in the 1622 Commissioners’ Court in 1622 when he was cleared, along with Walter Turnbull (tenant of Skelfhill) of stealing 2 sheep from ‘Laird Swarley’ (an Englishman). Rev. James (1783–1865) said to be a cousin of Dr. John Leyden, he was Prebendary of Lincoln and Vicar of Holbeach in Lincolnshire. He wrote ‘The Poetical Remains of the late Dr. John Leyden’ (1819) and ‘Monastick Annals of Teviotdale’ (1832). He became acquainted with William Norman Kennedy after a visit to Hawick, in which he was given a tour of local archaeological sites, along with Robert White of Newcastle. John (15th C.) listed in 1463/4 among the men who were rewarded by the King for assisting in the capture of John Douglas of Balveny, probably part of the force led by Scott of Buccleuch. He is recorded as ‘Johannes de Mortoun’. The other men were Scotts, Turnbulls, Gledstains, Langlands, Dalgleish etc., and so he is probably local. John (15th/16th C.) recorded in ‘Le craik’ (presumably Craik) in 1502 at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh. He was fined for non-appearance, and acted as his ownsurety. John (d.c.1683) at Appletreehall in 1683 when his will is recorded. His surname is written ‘Mortoun’. John (b.c.1840) agricultural labourer in Wilton Parish. He was listed at Murrayshall, among heads of households, 1835–41. His wife was Agnes and their children included Jeannie, Isabella, Katherine, Agnes, Betty and Mary. Robert (b.1778/9) from Dalkeith, he was a farmer and gardener living at Damhead in 1841. In 1851 he was at Upper Damsdie. He is listed as a gardener in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Catherine and their children included William, Catherine and John. Rev. Thomas ‘Tom’ (1919–2013) born in Kilmarnock, he studied Arts at Glasgow University and trained for the ministry there. He was ordained as minister of West Port Kirk in 1945 and remained until 1951. He then moved to St. Nicholas’ Church in Cardonald, and in 1947 was translated to Stonelaw, Rutherglen, where he was minister until he retired in 1986. In 1978–79 he was Moderator of the Glasgow Presbytery. His wife was Netta. William (16th C.) holder of a participate of land on the north side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter (in earlier times this is easily confused with Mertin).

Mort-safe (mor'-saf) n., arch. a device for preventing a coffin from being stolen, often an iron cage that could be locked over a grave. They were prevalent in the late 18th and early 19th centuries. Records in Cavers Parish in 1826 show that 2 such devices were purchased and quite explicit rules laid out for their use, with William Thomson and Robert Dryden in charge. A padlock from the device used at Cavers up until about 1830 is in the Museum.

Moscrop (mos-krop, -krip) n. Adam (16th C.) 2 men with the same name, one ‘Mr.’ and one ‘Sir’ were chaplains and notaries to an instrument following an inquest over disputed land in Jedburgh in 1533. They could easily have been descended from the earlier Patrick and/or James. One of them was probably the Adam who was notary for a sasine of lands in Feu-Rule in 1560 and for a document for Lady Catherine Kerr of Ferniehirst in 1564. ‘Master Adam Mostrope curate in Jed’ was involved in the marriage of John Rutherford of Huntill and Christian Pringle in 1529. Adam (16th C.) recorded in Riddell in 1580 when his servant Robert witnessed an agreement between James Riddell in Maxton and John Riddell in Newton Mill. Clement (16th/17th C.) listed as ‘in Southfield’ in 1611 when he was part of the assize at the Justice Court on Jedburgh. It is unclear if this was the local Southfield or perhaps the one near Kelso. James (15th C.) one of the witnesses to the 1490 sasine in which Robert Scott purchased land in Hawick from Robert Cessford. His wife may be the ‘uxori Jacobi Moscrop’ who received 40 shillings in the will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme in 1491/2. James (16th/17th C.) one of several local men accused in a 1612 document of charging more than the allowed interest rate on loans. He is described as ‘in Flexcis’ (presumably Flex) and was one of the men who appeared to answer the charges. Perhaps the same James is witness to a sasine of 1610 involving the Scotts and the Turnbulls and land on the Kirkwynd. John (17th C.) Burgess of Jedburgh. Along with Alexander Kirkton (Provost of Jedburgh) he was joint owner of Nether Bouchester until selling it to Walter Scott in 1653. He was referred to as ‘younger’, suggesting his father was also John. Patrick (15th C.) notary for Hawick’s earliest known sasine in 1453, where he is described as ‘bachelor in decrees, priest, Glasgow dioecese’. He was also the notary for the 1452 sasine in which William Douglas of Drumlanrig was regranted the Barony of Hawick; he is there ‘Patricius Moscrop, presbyter Glasuensis dioecesis, bacallarius in decretis’. He was notary for the sasine carried out at Milston in 1453. He was also notary for a legal instrument (relating to lands in Eckford) which was witnessed in the house of John Walche (presumably Waugh) in Hawick in 1454. He was notary for a document relating to the lands of Whitchechers, signed at St. Mary’s Kirk in 1455, and the associated notorial instrument made at Branhxolme the following year. He could be the Patrick who had a sasine for ‘Gleensyland’ in Roxburghshire in 1461. Probably the same man was witness in 1478 to a document granting rights in Selkirk to David Scott, younger of Branhxolme. Robert (15th/16th C.) resident of Jedburgh recorded in 1502 when he had remission for the murder of Gilbert Black, with Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst as his surety. His surname was written ‘mostrope’.

Robert (16th C.) recorded in 1580 as servant to Adam in Riddell when he witnessed an agreement between James Riddell in Maxton and John Riddell in Newton Mill. Robert (17th C.) resident of ‘Dodburne in Kirkton Parioch’ according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William ‘Will’ (16th C.) one of the men indicted in 1552 for involvement in the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Branhxolme and Buccleuch. He is recorded as ‘Ville Moscrop in Jedburgh’. William (17th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children were baptised in Hawick Parish. He probably lived in the country area towards Teviothead. He married Marion Rae and their children included: Margaret (b.1670); Isobel (b.1672); Janet (b.1676); and an unnamed son (b.1686). The witnesses in 1676 were schoolmaster John Purdom and James Elliot (also formerly ‘Moscrip’ and ‘Moscrope’).

moss (mos) n. marshy land, bog, morass, moorland, usually high up and sometimes applied to an area used for cutting peats and turfs – ‘He’s guided them o’er moss and muir, O’er hill and houp, and mony ae down’ [T], ‘How swift they flew! no eye could view Their track on heath or hill; Yet swift across both moor and moss, St. Clair did follow still’ [IL], ‘The skulls o’ elk-deer, bisions, tups, Fund i’ the mosses, Worm-eaten dudds, andl cheens, an’ raips, Fossils o’ fishes’ [JoHa], ‘...Of the snort of the nags as they toil at the steep; Of the suck of the hoofs when the moss rides deep [WHO], rough grass that grows on moorland, especially Eriophorum vaginatum, the hare-tail cotton grass, and related species – ‘The plant, called the moss, rises before any other in the spring, affords excellent nourishment, and is carefully sought after by the flocks’ [RAB] (the word occurs locally in place names, such as Adderstonelee Moss, Barnes Moss, Berry Moss, Bitchlaw Moss, Blackgarn Moss, Blind Moss, Boghall Moss, Broadlee Moss, Buckstane Moss, Burnsire Moss, Cartshaw Moss, Cavers’ Moss, Craw’s Moss, Crookedhaugh Moss, Dinley Moss, Dunhoch Moss, Ewen’s Moss, Fluther Moss, Gillfit Moss, Greenside Moss, Hallmoss, Harden Moss, Haremoss, Hawick Moss, Hillessland Moss, Kames Moss, Kippielaw Moss, Lincart Moss, Lionfield Moss, Long Moss, Mabonlaw Moss, Mackside Moss, Malcolm’s Moss, Mossbrae, Mossburnford, Mosshills Loch, Mosshouses, Moss Knowe, Mosspark Rig, Mosspatrick, Moss paul, Mosspemeble, Mossy Knowe, Picmaw Moss, Redmoss, Riddellshiel Moss, Robertson Moss, Rotten Moss, Ruins Moss, Slatehillmoss, Staneford Moss, St. Leonards Moss, Swarf Moss, Syn ton Moss, Tandlaw Moss, Taras Moss, Tocher Lodge Moss, Weaver’s Moss, Whitchesters Moss, Whithope Moss, Winnington Moss, Woolaw Moss and Wulliestruther Moss; see also mosses).

Moss (mos) n. John (17th/18th C.) maltman in Hawick. In 1746 he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for merchant Andrew Ekron. In 1724 he married Bessie Richardson, who was also from the Town of Hawick. Their children included Helen (b.1725) and Janet (b.1738). The 1725 baptism was witnessed by Robert Ruecastel and Henry Orrock. In 1725 he witnessed a baptism for carrier Thomas Porteous and in 1743 he witnessed a baptism for James Oliver, tenant in Earlside.

mossbluiter (mos-bl’-ur) n., arch. the bittern, Botaurus stellaris, the common snipe, Capella gallinago – ‘...cultivating wastes, where the whaup and mossbluiter are heard, or where the wild fowls of heaven are destined to reside’ [RW] (also bog-bluter and sometimes heather-bleat, from the noise made by the snipe’s tail feathers during courtship, or the booming call of the male bittern).

Mossbrae (mos-brä) n. placename in Roberton
Parish. Robert Scott was recorded there in 1717, John Turnbull in 1718 and James Donaldson in 1725–28. It is unclear where exactly this might be.

Mossburnford (mos-burn-förd) n. hamlet about 3 miles south of Jedburgh. Mossburnford House dates from the early 19th century, but is on the site of a much earlier house. This was once home of a branch of the Rutherfords and was visited by Burns in 1787.

mosscheeper (mos-chee-pur) n., arch. the meadow pipit, Anthus pratensis (also muircheeper and titlin).

moss-dub (mos-dub) n., poet. a pool in marshy land – ‘Gude keep ye aye frae warlocks, witches, Black moss-dubs, and dirty ditches . . . ’ [JoHa].

mosser (mo-sur) n., arch. a mosstrooper, some-

mosses (mo-seez) n., pl., arch. areas of moorland, particularly those from which peats are cut – ‘. . . and that they must not spread peets or set any bings within the said mosses for the space of fifteen days . . . ’ [BR1743], ‘. . . generally got his peats and turf for the use of his ffamily from the ously been cut – ‘The breadth of the Border,

Moss Knowe (mos-now) n. hill to the south-est of Shielwood Loch, being a shallow hill reaching a height of 299 m.

Mossman (mos-mun) n. Alan (16th C.)
Burgess of Edinburgh, recorded in a charter of 1531/2 receiving the lands of Borthaugh and its mill from Roger Langlands. His acquisition of the land was involved in an agreement with Law-song of Highriggs, perhaps settling a debt of John Scott of Borthaugh. Later that year, however, he sold Borthaugh, Commonside and Dryden to Walter Scott of Branxholme and his wife Janet Kerr. James (17th C.) resident of Cavers Parish at a famstead called ‘the Mount’. In about 1678 he was fined 1000 merks for attending conventicles, this being a larger sum than the other 6 or 7 people who were fined at the same time, this presumably because he was considered as a ringleader. The accusations against him included that he ‘hath conversed and conducted the said Mr John Welsh and others up and down the country in arms, and hath furnished them with horses to that purpose’. It was suggested that he was imprisoned on the Bass Rock, to face later transportation. However, he was among the men who escaped from their ship in London. What happened to him afterwards is not known. James (18th C.) early hosicry manufacturer in Hawick.
There is a record of 1791 (from the Board of Trustees for Manufactures) of him receiving £10 towards purchasing a frame for making ribbed stockings, and a few years later he received money for a twisting mill. In 1790 and 1792 he witnessed baptisms for skinner James Renwick. He is probable the stockmaking whose unnamed child is recorded dying in 1805 and whose unnamed child and grandchild are recorded dying in 1808. He is probably the merchant James whose son James died in Hawick in 1816. He may be the James who married Janet Renwick in 1783, and whose children (baptised in Hawick) included Elizabeth (b.1784) and Adam (b.1785). The witnesses in 1784 were flesher Gideon Renwick and shoemaker William Renwick (who were surely related to his wife). James (18th/19th C.) fishing tackle maker

Mossills Loch (mos-hilz-loch) n. small body of water in the Target Hills, lying between the Braid Road and Ormiston, also known as the Target Pond (it is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Mossills Road (mos-hilz-röd) n. former name for part of the road above the Wellogate, probably the narrow road towards Ormiston that goes past Mossills Loch. The name is used in Robert Murray’s ‘Hawick Songs and Song Wit-ners’, when it is suggested that Sir Walter Scott may have conducted the Wordsworths here in 1803.

Mosshooses (mos-hoos-eez) n. Mosshouses, former cottages on the farm of Mackside that were lived in during the 18th and early 19th centuries, but were already gone by the beginning of the 20th.

Mosspark Rig

of the Howegate, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Margaret (18th C.) cook at Branxholme in 1785, when she was working for Adam Ogilvie.
Mosspark Rig (mos-pawrk-rig) n. area of moorland on the west side of the Hermitage Water near Leaugh. There is an ancient enclosure near the river there, and another close to the confluence with the Thie Sike.
Mosspatrick (mos-paw-trik) n. former name for an area roughly between the heads of the Allan Water and the Braehead Burn off Hermitage. This may correspond to the ‘Queen’s Mire’ on modern maps (it is recorded in Douglas of Cavers papers in the 15th century and is ‘McPatrick’ in 1516; ‘Mosspatrickhope swire’ is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).
Mosspatrickhope (mos-paw-trik-hop) n. former house at Mosspatrick, once a home of the Elliots. It is probably the ‘Mal Patrikhope’ which was granted by William Douglas, Earl of Angus to Archibald Douglas of Cavers in 1428, along with Braehead and ‘Le Schewis’, and granted to a William Douglas of Cavers in 1470, with sasine given in 1472. It is transcribed as ‘Makpatrikhope’ in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale, when it was valued at 10 merks and had William Elliot as tenant. Later in the 16th century it was tenanted by another William Elliot. It was owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch by 1632 (it is ‘Mal Patrikhope’ in 1428, ‘Mawpatrickhope’ in 1470, ‘Mawpatrickhope’ in 1472, ‘Mospatrikhop’ in 1581 and 1587/8 and transcribed ‘Makpatrikhope’ in 1632; ‘Moss Patrick hopeswyne’ and ‘Mospelpatrick hopswyre’ appear on separate sheets of Blaeu’s 1654 map).
Mossaul (mos-pawl) n. hotel on the A7 near the highest (853 ft) point of the road, on the watershed on the way to Langholm, and very close to the boundary of the Scottish Borders with Dumfries and Galloway. A shelter has existed here for hundreds of years; it has been suggested that this was perhaps established by the monks of Melrose Abbey, and although there is no evidence for this suggestion, they did own the neighbouring lands of Penangushope and others (in Ringwoodfield to the north). Lawrence Elliot was there in 1494/5. It was listed among the lands in Ewesdale held by Alexander, Lord Home in 1509/10. In 1525 the lands were among those in Ewesdale resigned by Simon Armstrong to his superior George, Lord Home; this was carried out at Kelso Abbey (suggesting this Abbey held control over Ewesdale Parish). This transfer of the superiority back to the Homes was confirmed in 1535 when the King revoked the preceding charter. It is probably the ‘Mossauld’ listed in 1663 among the lands owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch in the Lordship of Ewesdale. The inn is first definitively recorded in 1767 (by Dr. Carlyle of Inveresk), but could be much older. It became an important stopping point for mail coaches and carters when the road was improved in the mid-18th century. In the early days it is said to have been occasionally used by debtors trying to nip over the county border to escape either the Roxburghshire or Dumfriesshire authorities. John Scott is recorded living there in 1779 and 1782 and was explicitly listed as innkeeper there in 1788. James Ruikbie wrote a poem after seeing the improvements made to the buildings in the early years of the 19th century. Robert Govenlock was landlord for 45 years until 1861. The hotel was much improved, with a large stableing area to the west, consisting of as many as 42 stalls, where the coaches horses were exchanged. It was a very busy place for several decades. However, with the building of the Hawick-Carlisle railway the hotel fell into disuse, its licence lapsing in 1865, and the building becoming derelict in the latter part of the 19th century. There were tall poles lining the road at intervals, which were used to guide the coaches through snow drifts; some were still in place in the early 20th century. The inn was resuscitated in 1900 through a private company of local gentlemen, largely to cater for cycling enthusiasts, the land being feued on good terms for use as a wayside hostelry. The more modern building was smaller than its predecessor. A bowling green was added for a while on the western side and a 6-hole golf course was also opened. It is also the location of the Mosspaul ride out of 24 miles over rough moorland. This first took place in 1901, and is traditionally 2 weeks before Common Ridings weekend. The Mosstroopers’ Club erected a memorial cairn there in 2000 – ‘The lasses o’ Lin’op are braw, An’ them o’ Mosspaul they are bonnie … ’ [JoHa] ‘Oo get yon spacial feelin as the Saxhorn Band leads the Mosstroopers safe in frae Mosspaul’ [IWL] [the name is probably derived from the boggy ground, with the roots being the old Celtic ‘megestu’ for ‘open land’ and ‘pol’ suggesting ‘boggy hollow’ or ‘upland stream’; the 2nd syllable has also been suggested to indicate that a pole here once marked the county boundary, but that seems less likely; there is an even more fanciful suggestion that it relates to a chapel to St. Paul that may have been on the site, but there is no evidence for this, and it may be a confusion with the chapel to St. Paul which was a few miles further south at Ewes Doors; the name perhaps first appears in 1494/5 as ‘mos paul’; it is ‘Mospall’ in 1506, ‘Mosspaul’ in 1509/10, ‘Mospall’ in 1525, ‘Mospaule’ in 1535 and ‘Mispaul’ in 1782).

Mosspeeble (mos-pee-bul) n. farm on the A7 between Mosspaul and Langholm, just south of Unthank. Like other parts of Ewesdale, the superi ority was held by the Homes in the early 16th century. Adam Scott was a farmer there in 1585 and Nichol Scott was recorded there in 1590. The lands were listed in 1663 among those owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch in the Lordship of Ewesdale. It was surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718, when it was combined with ‘Byercleughwater’, consisting of 1592 acres, bounded by Tarras, lands of the Laird of Arkleton and Unthank. Robert Aitchison was there in at least the period 1785–97. In 1800 it was leased by William Moffat. Alexander Borthwick was farmer in 1841 and Capt. Stewart in the 1860s. There are remains of an ancient settlement south-east of the farmhouse (it appears on Gordon’s c. 1650 maps as ‘Mospeel’ and ‘Mospepill’ and Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Mospeels’; it is ‘Mospeule’ in 1506, ‘Mospeble’ in 1509/10, ‘Mospebull’ in 1525, ‘Mospeble’ in 1535, ‘Mospebel’ in 156, ‘Mespeble’ in 1590 and ‘Mospepeople’ in 1663; the name is probably of Cumbric origin, meaning ‘field of the tents’).

Mosspeeble Cottage (mos-pee-bul-ko’-e j) n. former cottage near Mosspeeble farm in the Ewes valley. John Murray and 3 others were living there in 1841.

Moss Place (mos-plis) n. small street in Newcastle, off Moss Road.

Moss Road (mos-rød) n. street in Newcastle, off North Hermitage Street, opposite Henry Street.

Moss Toor (mos-toor) n. placename near Hawick, recorded in 1582. Robert Weens ‘in Mos toure’ witnessed an agreement in Hawick for Alan Deans and Alexander Weens.

Moss Toor (mos-toor, -tow-ur) n. ruined 15th century tower near Eckford, which could only be approached through the march from a causeway on the north side. It was destroyed in 1523, rebuilt and burned by Sir Ralph Evers men in 1544.

moststroop (mos-troop) v., arch. to freeboot, rieve – ‘Whitslade is slumbering undisturbed and down in Harden Glen The tall trees murmur in their dreams of Wat’s mosstrooping men’ [WHO].

moststrooper (mos-troo-pur) n. one of a band of raiders operating on the boggy moorland of the Borders around the 17th century, a marauder – ‘By moor and moss and river, To the swish of swathed grass And burnside reeds aquiver, The dead mosstroopers pass’ [RSC].

Mosstrooper (mos-troo-pur) n. member of the Ancient Order of Mosstroopers. Membership consists of those who have ridden to Mosspaul and back on the annual ride-out.

Mosstrooper (mos-troo-pur) n. club formed of members of the Ancient Order of Mosstroopers. It existed from probably 1901, when there was a ride-out to the newly opened Mosspaul Hotel, with the riders being entertained there by the directors. There was originally a ‘secret’ initiation ceremony, with new members smearing the sign of ‘the Hawick cross’ on their foreheads. It was ‘reconstituted’ following the suggestion of J.E.D. Murray at a meeting in 1920. One of the main aims was to encourage mounted supporters to follow the Cornet. The first club President was T.G. Winning in 1920 and since then there has been a new President each year. The Club motto is ‘Aye Defend’, their song is ‘The Mosstrooper’s Song’, and the Club badge was designed by J.E.D. Murray, with his own favourite horse’s head making the main part of the design. Badges were presented to some women in the period 1920–31, with this ceasing after a female rider broke her leg. The Club’s tie was designed in 1951, and is moss green with red and yellow stripes. A junior tie was designed in 1995. Perhaps the main event in the Clubs’ calendar is the Smoker for the Cornet, held on the evening of the Moss pau Rideout. The Club also holds an annual ball (since 1920), Burns night (since 1949), organises race meetings, gymkhanas and other events, and regularly contributes to causes that preserve the town’s traditions. A CD was released under the Club’s auspices in 2013. A book ‘The Time it has Rolled’ was published in 2020, decrying 100 years of the Club.
The Mosstrooper’s Song

The Mosstrooper’s Song (thu-mos-troopurs-sawng) n. song composed by Adam Colledge, with words by J.E.D. Murray, written in 1928 and published in 1931, with the subtitle ‘Four Hunder Horsemen’. It was officially adopted as the anthem of the Mosstroopers’ Club in 1937. The tune bears a similarity to Costa’s ‘March of the Israelites’. It has remained popular despite having a different chorus for each verse. Adam Ingles changed the accompaniment for the 1957 song book, which probably added to its popularity. It was slightly altered again by Ian Seeley for the 2001 song anthology.

Mossy Knowe (mo-see-now) n. standing on the south side of the Teviot, where the Northhouse Burn joins. William Murray was joiner there in the early 19th century. Widow Mary Murray and her family were there in 1841. This area is also known as ‘Change Hoose’. The name may derive from the enclosure about 500 yards further up the River. This is a low earthen bank, much eroded, covering an area about 300 ft by 200 ft with a gap in the north-east (it is Moozieknowe in 1841).

the Mote (thu-mō’) n. Norman built earthwork, once topped by a defensive wooden tower, 312 feet (95 m) round at its base (about 30 m diameter) and 25–30 feet (about 8 m) high. It is situated in Mote Park, roughly behind 23 Loan. In the 19th century it was conjectured to be associated with Druids, sun-worship and human sacrifice, and was also believed to be a burial mound. It was also traditionally said to have been a place of justice (as first stated by Robert Wilson). An archaeological investigation by Dr. Alexander O. Curle in 1912 revealed an ancient ditch and several artefacts (now in the Museum) of Norman date, clearing up any doubt about its origin; this included pottery shards, a bone needle and a coin of Henry II. It was probably a fairly standard ‘motte and bailey’ construction (as should always have been clear, given the name), with the bailey to the north-east, enclosed in a wooden palisade. This was the seat of the Lovels and possibly Douglasses until they moved to where Drumlanrig’s Tower is now. It is likely that the location had legal significance long after the wooden structure on the top was gone. In 1484 the sasine for the Barony of Hawick was granted ‘at the principal messuage of the barony of Hawick, called the Mote’, and the same phrase was repeated in 1514; this suggests that the site (whether or not there was still a building there) was at that point recognised as the Baron’s legal headquarters. Lands in that area were once held by a branch of the Scotts, with William ‘in the Mott’ being one of the 24 ‘pensioners’ of Buccleuch mentioned by Scott of Satchells. The Mote is now in the centre of a park and has a staircase (38 steps) and seat on top. Each Common Riding the Cornet and other Principals sing ‘Teribus’ on the top of the Mote to greet the Saturday dawn (although in 1896 this visit was shifted to 1.30 a.m.); this tradition is shown in a photograph from 1911. It may be that the Mote once formed a more important part of the Common Riding events, since in about 1710 Rev. Robert Cunningham wrote in his poem that this ‘artful Mount’ was where the natives ‘acted all their games of May’ – ‘It first be torn not by the plough The ancient bonny green Moat-Knowe; For sair I fear it, too, maun fall, Though reared by hands Druidical’ [AD], ‘Is it natural or artificial?’ asked a stranger at a little boy. ‘It’s neither of the two; it’s just the moat’ [RJT], ‘We’ve a Moat, which down the ages, Witnessed many a deed of fame’ [TC], ‘And the Moat’s there, and the Haugh’s there, And the auld soul-stirring songs’ [WL]. ‘The green auld Mote stands sentinel The echo o’ St. Mary’s bell Still rings out owre hill and dell In Hawick ma Border hame’ [IWl] (often locally spelled ‘Moat’, leading to some confusion about its origin, with people incorrectly envisioning a water-filled ditch, rather than a defensive mound; note also that hills where open air courts were held were often called ‘moot-hills’, and this may also be relevant to the origin, or simply another source of confusion; it is ‘le Mott de Hawik’ in 1511, ‘le Mott in Hawyk’ in 1511/2 and ‘the Mote’ in 1793 and 1821; other surviving examples of mottes include those at Riddell, the Haining and Phenzhopehaugh).

motey breid (mō-tee-breed) n., poet. a curranty loaf – ‘Motey breed right plenty’ [JoHo].

Mother Riley’s (mu-thur-ri-leez) n. former popular name of the Bourtree Place fish and chip shop, named for the older Mrs. Shiel, after the popular films of the 1930s and 40s – ‘Headin’ mo’ and maw, moy and maw’ mou (mow, moo) n., arch., poet. mouth – ‘...And boom’d against the milkye wave, Afore it closed its mou’ [JTe], ‘...Were’t no the greed o’ that gib, growlin’ mou’, The State’s unsatisfied, rapacious maw’ [JoHa], ‘The rubies gang to mak her witchin mou ... ’ [WL], ‘Ne’er judge you a lass by the shape o’ her mou’’ [DJ] (also spelled ‘moo’, ‘mow’ and ‘mou’); cf. Muckle Mou’d Meg; the common Teviotdale pronunciation is mow, even when written ‘mou’.

Mount (mounn’) n. former farmstead where Perrysheik Sike meets the Whitrope Burn, just south of Whitropefoot. It may be the farm of that same name in Cavers Parish where James Mossman farmed before he was prosecuted in 1678 for being a Covenanter. This is probably where Gilbert Elliot ‘at Mount’ (son of William of Penchrise) lived around 1700. William Barton was shepherd there around 1840. In 1851 road labourer Andrew Elliot and family were there, in 1861 William Beatie’s family and in 1868 John Kyle (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

mountain dew (mown’n-in-joo) n., arch. homourous name for whisky, often referring to the illicitly distilled sort – ‘...might partake of pot-luck with him, taste his maw and mountain dew ... ’ [RW], ‘...They’re penurious and few, If they tried my Mountain Dew They would tipple on the sly, says John George Luff’ [JCG].

Mountbenger (mown’n-beng-sur) n. farm in the Yarrow valley, near the Gordon Arms, where the Mountbenger Burn meets the Yarrow Water. Mountbenger Law, to the north, reaches a height of 543 m. It was formerly Crown land, leased to the Crichtons in the late 15th century. John Chisholme was there in 1579 and John Hislop in 1581 (‘Estir Munbergeris’ and ‘Westir Munberg-eris’ are recorded in 1489, ‘Montberger’ in 1492 and ‘Munbarenger’ in 1579; ‘West Munbarnger’ and ‘East Munbarnger’ are on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Mount Common (mown’n-ko-min) n. lands in the Ettrick valley, by the Tima Water. Mountcommon Hill reaches a height of 462 m. The lands were owned by the Crown from about 1456. The lands were let at ‘half ferme’ to David Scott (probably of Buccleuch) in 1459. They were described as a land of 2 steadings in 1488, namely Deephope and Gamescleuch. They were let to Alexander Scott and David Scott in 1469. It remained Crown property until at least 1502. In 1541 it was ‘Montcolmone, alias Deiphope’, when occupied by William Scott, paying £10 yearly. It was once part of the parish of Rankiburn. It has long been part of the Buccleuch estates (it is ‘Monco-mane’ in 1456, ‘Montcolman’ in 1459 and 1469, ‘Montcowman’ in 1488, ‘Montcowman’ in 1492 and ‘Montcommone’ in 1502; ‘Mon Comon Hill’ is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Mount Hawick (mownt-ha-wik) n. hill in Western Australia, south-west of the town of Halls Creek. It was named on April 27th 1894 by David W. Carnegie (1871–1900, youngest son of the Earl of Southesk), as described in his book ‘Spinifex and Sand, A Narrative of Five Years’ Pioneering and Exploration in Western Australia’ (1898). Carnegie’s journey across Western Australia is described as one of the last great explorations of the Australian wilderness. He named it after his prospecting partner Lord Percy Douglas (who was also Lord Douglas of Hawick). Carnegie died in Nigeria as a result of being shot with a poisoned arrow. Mount Hawick is approximately at Latitude 18°54' South, Longitude 127°1' East (there is also a separate ‘Hawick Hill’ in Western Australia).

the Mountin Sang (thu-mown-'in-sawng) n. name sometimes used for the ‘Auld Sang’, particularly as sung at the Tower Knowe when the Cornet and supporters mount their horses for the marching of the Common on the Friday. The singing is led by the official ‘Sang Singer’. Until 1921 it was sung from a window of a room at the Tower, while from 1922 it has been performed on the steps outside.

Mouswald (mows-wawld) n. Gilbert (14th/15th C.) Archdeacon of Teviotdale from 1404 when he exchanged for another benefice with John de Merton. He appears to have still held it in 1308, but this is somewhat confusing, since William Macmorin also held the position in that year. He gifted a missal to Glasgow Cathedral in about 1400.

movit (moo-vec’ -vi’) pp., arch. moved, instituted a legal action – ‘…aunet the slauch-teris and vtheris caussis movit be the sonis of ymquhile Adame Scot of Alanheucht aganis me, the said Walter …’ [SB1585], ‘…he sall nevir thole the riqueous til be muvet’ [HSR], ‘…the world sal alsua be sete siccer that it canna be muvet …’ [HSR].

mow (mow) n., arch. the mouth, v. to mouth, to grimace (more common in Teviotdale than the pronunciation of ‘moo’; cf. mou).
mow (mow) n., poet. foolery, a jest – ‘Yet was our meeting meek enough, Begun wi’ merriness and mows …’ [CPM].

Mow see Moile.

Mowat (mow-i’) n. John (17th C.) listed as resident at Todshaw in Wilton Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. His surname is recorded as ‘Mowatt’. John (20th C.) minister of St. Andrew’s Kirk 1922-30. Robert (d.1686) tenant in Ashieburn in 1686 when his will is recorded. His surname is written ‘Mowit’.

Mowbray (mô-bree) n. Arthur (18th C.) factor to James Douglas of Cavers in at least the period 1775–79. Francis (d.1603) son of John of Barnbougle, near Queensferry. His sisters had been attendants of Mary, Queen of Scots, and he probably retained Catholic sympathies. He was involved in (at least rumours of) several possible rebellions in Scotland. He was said to have been in the retinue of Walter Scott of Buccleuch at about the time of the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. He was imprisoned in Edinburgh Castle in 1602, accused of treason. He used a rope made from bedding to try to escape, but fell onto the rocks and died. However, his body was still hanged, drawn and quartered. Whether he actually took part in the events on the Border in 1596 is not known. Galfrid (14th C.) appointed Sheriff of Roxburgh by Edward III in 1334.

mow-bund (mow-bund) adj., arch. mouth-bound, unable to get used to a new phrase – ‘The grieve said he was mow-bund to his maister’s new name Sir William’ [GW].

the muckle leet

peak (it is ‘Meikle Knowe’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

the muckle leet (\textit{thu-mu-kul-lee'}) \textit{n.} phrase used in the 18th and early 19th centuries for the list of acquaintances named by the friends listed by the Cornet. This formed the longer list of people formally invited to the Common Riding festivities – ‘There was the Cornet’s leets, enumerating his own circle of acquaintances, and there was the ‘muckle leet’, prepared by the Cornet in consultation with his immediate associates’ [WSR].

Muckle Michael (\textit{mu-kul-mI-kul}) \textit{n.} nickname for Michael Anderson of Denholm.

actually Agnes Murray, daughter of the Laird of Elibank, apparently hard to marry off because of her appearance, she eventually married Sir William Scott of Harden in a choice between her and the gallowes. Details of the real marriage are preserved in 2 separate contracts, separated by a few months in 1611. The romanticised story is told in the ballad, one version of which is Hogg’s ‘The Fray at Elibank’. Wullie Landlees also wrote a long poem based on the story – ‘In loan or steedin’ whene’er they saw her, Muckle Mou’d Meg was the name they’d caa her’ [WL], ‘What Am A ti dae, mun, what Am A ti dae? Ave either got ti mairry Meg or face the hingin tree.
Was ever man gien sic a choice, doon through a history? What Am A ti dae, mun, what Am a ti da’? ’ [IWL].

what a haggis she got, the mucklest chieftain o
the puddin race imaginable, thri’ fit in diameter
...’ [IWL].

Muckle Swine Cleuch (\textit{mu-kul-swIn-klooch}) \textit{n.}
stream that rises on Needs Law and flows west-wards to join the Caddroun Burn near Singdean.
Cathide Sike is a small side stream. Little Swine Cleuch lies just to the south (it is marked ‘Swines Cleuch’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Muckle Thwarter Gill (\textit{mu-kul-thwar’-ur-gil}) \textit{n.}
stream in eastern Liddesdale, rising on Thwartergill Head and running southwards to join the Kershop Burn to the west of Scotch Kers-

Looks muckle to mean and lane’ [DH], ‘The poor o’ the parish are muckle to mean In a but or a ben they dwell by their lane’ [RF] (noted by E.C.
Smith).

the Muckle Toun (\textit{thu-mu-kul-toon}) \textit{n.}
soubriquet for Langholm.

muckle wheel (\textit{mu-kul-wheel}) \textit{n.}, arch. simple design for a spinning wheel popular in the 18th century. In the earliest form there was a large, wooden fly-wheel, which was propelled by a shove of the hand, with the operator walking backwards to draw out the yarn, the length of which was then wound on a spindle and the process repeated.
Later a drive belt linked the small spindle to the large wheel, which was still typically driven by hand until foot treads came in much later. This was the first machine to be widely used in the beginnings of the knitwear industry in Hawick, and was common in homes into the 19th century.
It was effectively replaced by the ‘spinning jenny’
– ‘...a small trade in yarns spun by women on the muckle wheel ...’ [WSR] (also known as the ‘meikle wheel’; cf. little wheel).

Muckle Whitlew see Meikle Whitlew

deeper, an get awfu’ suddl’t’ [JoHa].
mudgeons (\textit{mu-jinz}) \textit{n.}, pl., arch. movements of the features showing displeasure or scorn.

Mudie (\textit{mu-dee}) \textit{n.} James C. (19th C.) teacher of the Academy based at the Subscription Rooms in the mid-19th century. He was later joined by James Brand, but apparently a clash of personalities led Brand to leave and start his own school. The school was known as ‘Hawick High School’ and was in competition with the public ‘Bucleuch School’ across the street. It ran until around 1874. He eventually wound up the school
Mudie’s monkeys and left Hawick, possibly because of the competition from ‘Brand’s Schuil’. He also served as Session Clerk for Hawick Free Kirk 1866–74. In about 1874 he was recorded owning part of the former lands of Patrick Cunningham in Hawick (see also Moodie).

Mudie’s monkeys (mu-deez-mung-keez) n., pl. former nickname for pupils at the Subscription Rooms Academy, taught by Mr. Mudie, and used as a taunt by pupils from the Grammar School (‘Dodds’s whulps’).

muffatei (mu-faw-ti) n., arch. a muffetee, small muff, usually worn over the wrists.

mugger (mu-gur) n., arch. an itinerant tinker – ‘Originally muggers were a bohemian class of the tinker (tinkler in Hawick) kind, but the word has come to denote ‘people of disreputable habits and appearance’. An inference is that the old name of mugger was derived from the nature of the wares sold by these people, viz., earthenware, crockery, ‘mugs’, etc.’ [ECS], ‘…A stan-nin’, droolin’, at your place, Like hauf-sterved friendship or companionship upon another’ [ECS].

muggit (mu-gee’, -gi’) adj., arch. soiled or spoiled through ill-use – ‘Mugget is allied closely to maigget, though not necessarily inferring actual handling or fingering, whereas the latter term does. On the other hand, the rough ‘fondling’ which a kitten often receives at the hands of a child is more often spoken of as a muggeen than as a maiggeen, probably more from the effect than from the deed’ [ECS] (so mug and cf. maigit).

muil (miil, mil) n., arch. mould, earth, especially on a grave (cf. muils and mools).

muil (miil) n., arch. a mule.

muil in wi (mil-in-wi) v., arch. to seek intimate acquaintance with, especially by insinuation – ‘Ti muil in wui = to insinuate or wheedle one’s friendship or companionship upon another’ [ECS].

muiller (mi-lur) v., arch. to crumble, moulder away, cause to crumble – ‘Ti muiller bread’ [GW], ‘Frost muillers the clods’ [GW] (noted by E.C. Smith).

child (b.1687). The witnesses in 1680 were Walter Paisley and Dand Gray (based on which, he probably lived at Weensland). He could be the Alexander who received money from the Wilton poor box in 1705. Sir Archibald of Rowallan (d.1298) son of Sir Gilchrist. He probably held lands in upper Teviotdale, like his father. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir John Montgomery. He was succeeded by his son William and also had daughters Jean and Margaret. He died in battle near Berwick. Archibald of Rowallan (d.1426) son of Sir Adam. He probably held the lands of Commonside, Dryden and Harwood, like generations of his family before. He married Euphame, daughter of Kennedy of Dunmuir. His eldest son John died before him and he was succeeded by his grandson John, who died at Flodden. Sir Gilchrist (d.c.1280) possibly son of Sir Adam. He was said to have gained the family seat of Rowallan Castle through marrying Isabel, daughter and heir of Walter Comyn. However, another version (in the 17th century family history by Sir William Muir) states that he was dispossessed by Comyn until Alexander III raised a sufficient force to eject the Comyns and re-establish him at Rowallan. He fought at the Battle of Largs. He was succeeded by Sir Archibald of Rowallan. He was also said by his 17th century descendant to have acquired lands in Roxburghshire through his marriage to Isabel Comyn, specifically ‘Cumin-side, draden and harwoods’; these are surely the lands of Commonside, Dryden and Harwood in upper Teviotdale. Support for the connection with the Comyns comes from part of the family shield of the Muirs of Rowallan being that of the Comyns. His family were still associated with the lands of Commonside, Dryden and Over Harwood until the early 16th century. Gordon (1595– ) son of Bob and Jean, he attended the High School and then trained as a graphic designer in London and New Mexico. He worked for a while as a woodblock artist in Tokyo and in 1984 was a founding partner of Border Image. Along with his old school friend Doug Veitch, he brought the Zimbabwean band the Bhundu Boys to Britain in 1986. He then managed them on a year long tour, which was pivotal in the World Music movement of the time. As a sculptor he has several pieces in public spaces, e.g. ‘Alex the Goose and Friend’ and ‘Leap of Faith’ in Belfast, a set of pieces in Coatbridge and memorials to the men who died building the Forth Bridge. In 2020 he and Paul Hogarth re-designed the landscaping around the Hornshole Monument. James (17th C.) resident of Woll in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll. His surname is written as ‘Muere’. Jean (1933– ) school-teacher and long-time Cavers resident, originally from Banffshire. She married Acting Father Bob, and has long been involved with the Archaeological Society. She is author of ‘Cavers: a keek in the window’ (2000), for which she also provided sketches. She also wrote ‘Aircie Oliver’s a Hander a Half’ and co-wrote ‘Aircie Oliver’s Birthday Cairds’ with Jim Coltman. In 2015, she, along with her husband and son Gordon, wrote an article about the leaders of the Scottish Renaissance, MacDiarmid and Johnstone being friends of the family. John of Rowallan (d.1513) grandson of Robert and son of John and Elizabeth Stewart. In 1508 he was directed by the Privy Council to grant ‘warrandice’ to George Scott of Whames (grandson of Stephen Scott of Muirhouse) in the lands of Dryden, Commonside and Over Harwood. In 1510/1 George Scott wrote a letter of acquittance, stating that he (John) had paid him (George) the £40 and 14 merks owed for these lands. He may thus be the last Muir of Rowallan to have been associated with lands in upper Teviotdale. He married Margaret, 3rd daughter of Archibald Boyd of Bonshaw; they had 4 sons (including Mungo, who succeeded) and 4 daughters. He was killed at Flodden. His great-great-grandson was a poet and politician, who wrote a family history. John (d.1579) Rector of Ashkirk from about the time of the Reformation. He is recorded as holding the parsonage of Ashkirk Parish until his demission in 1570, when it was presented to John Hamilton; he is there recorded as ‘John Murie’. He was deprived in 1573 for failing to subscribe to articles of religion. He is presumably the same ‘Sir John Muir’ who died in 1579 when the vicarage of Ashkirk was given to Thomas Cranstoun. John (17th C.) recorded as being in Weensland in 1687 when his daughter Helen was baptised in Hawick Parish. His wife was Isobel Blyth and the witnesses were James Gray and James Miller. He could be the resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. It is possible he is the John ‘mure’ who witnessed (along with Walter Paisley) the baptism in Robertson Parish of a ‘bastard child’ of Adam Scott of Burnfoot in 1686. John (17th C.) carrier listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He could be the same as the John who was in Weensland. John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Greenbank in 1785, 1786 and 1788, with his surname recorded as ‘Moor’. He married Esther Turnbull in 1784 and their children included: Nelly (b.1785); James (b.1786); and John (b.1788). He may be the 70-year old recorded at Deanburnhaugh in the 1841 census, living with Janet (probably his daughter), and Walter Nichol (who later married Janet). John (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf, recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls.

Robert of Rowallan (d.1504) from near Kilmaurs in Ayrshire, he was nicknamed ‘the Rud’. He held the lands of Dryden, Commonside and Over Harwood in 1462 as security for a loan to Stephen Scott of Muirhouse. He paid 200 merks for these lands, the document being signed in Edinburgh (presumably where he lived). His name is written ‘Robertus Mure de Rowallane’. In 1477 he gave a discharge to Robert Scott of ‘Dogehauch’ for the balance of the loan. It seems unlikely he ever lived in upper Teviotdale, but his family had been associated with these lands from the 13th century. He married Margaret Newton, daughter of the Laird of Mitchelhill. They had 4 sons (including John, who succeeded) and a daughter. In 1508 his grandson John was directed by the Privy Council to grant ‘warrandice’ to George Scott in the same lands. Rev. Robert (1832–1882) from Ayr, he became minister at Holm of Balfron and then minister of Allars Church from 1864. He is said to have been of saintly character and with a very liberal outlook. He suffered from ill-health for several years and died in office, leaving a 9 month vacancy at Allars. He wrote ‘The Perpetuity of Christian Friendship’ in Logan’s ‘Words of Comfort’ and contributed articles to ‘Forward’. He married Susan, daughter of the Laird of Mitchelhill. They had 4 daughters and 1 son: one daughter wrote short stories; one was a classical scholar; Anne Davidson, who became a well-known watercolour artist; and Sir Robert. Sir Robert, F.R.S. (1864–1959) son of Rev. Robert, he was born at Balfron, Stirlingshire, but his father became minister at Hawick shortly after he was born. He spent 16 years growing up in Hawick. He was educated at Hawick Grammar School and Teviot Grove Academy and then Edinburgh University. He chose to follow a career in pathology, first working in Edinburgh, then being offered the Chair of Pathology at St. Andrews and then he was Professor of Pathology at the University of Glasgow 1899–1936. He served on the Medical Research Council and many other bodies related with cancer and disease. During WWI he had a position overseeing hospitals in Scotland. He became a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1911, had a royal medal in 1929, was knighted in 1934 and received the Lister Medal in 1936. He was also a member of the Royal Society of Edinburgh. He returned to Hawick in 1926 as the Callants’ Club guest. He was said to have a shy and aloof character, but delighted in deflating pompous colleagues. He never married, but in later life live with 2 of his sisters in Edinburgh. At the age of almost 90 he flew to Australia to visit his eldest sister. He died in Edinburgh. His ‘Manual of Bacteriology’ (1897) went through several editions, and his ‘Textbook of Pathology’ (1924) was extremely successful.

Robert ‘Bob’ (1930–) local vet, who was Acting Father in 1975. He was the first Acting Father to accompany the ‘Big Threi’ to the Coble on the Saturday. He served as President of the Callants’ Club. In 2020 he featured in a video for the song ‘The Grey’, written by his son Gordon. He is married to Jean and father of Gordon, John and Janet. William of Rowallan (13th/14th C.) son of Sir Archibald. He probably owned the lands in upper Teviotdale that were first held by his grandfather. He married a daughter of William Lindsay of Craigie and was succeeded by Sir Adam (formerly written ‘Mure’ and sometimes ‘Moor’).

muir-band (mewr-bawnd n., arch. a hard layer of sand and clay below the topsoil, impervious to water, and believed to hinder the full exploitation of the land – ‘...there exits, not much below the surface, a stiff, dense and sterile clay, which denies all passage to moisture, as well as to the roots of plants...commonly denominated ‘muir-band’...’) [RJE] (also muir-bund).

muir-bund (mewr-bund n., arch. a layer of hard subsoil, adj. having a hard layer (of clay, etc.) beneath the turf – ‘Underlaid by a ‘moor-band’ or a ‘moorband pan’’ [GW] (also muir-band).

Muir Ferm (mewr-ferm) n. former name for Pilmuir farm.
Muirferm (mewr-ferm) n. former name for a farmstead in Wilton Parish. It is recorded as ‘Moorfarm’ on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, with James Grieve the farmer there. It is unclear where this was, but presumably distinct from Muirfield.
Muirfield (mewr-feeld) n. area between Groundistone and Hassendean. The lands and farm were formerly part of Hassendean Common, which was divided in the late 18th century. William Douglas was recorded there in 1772 and John Oliver in 1791. George Bell was farmer there in 1797. Andrew Little was shepherd there in 1835. Labourer Adam Brydon was there in 1841. A drove road used to pass over here, between Hassendean Common and Groundistone. To the north-east are signs of rig and furrow cultivation. To the north of the farm is a triangulation station at a height of 262 m (also called ‘Moorfield’, so marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).
Muirfield (mewr-feeld) n. former name for lands in Abbotrule. It is recorded in the 1678 valuation roll as ‘Muirfield acres (Abbotrule)’ when Charles Kerr held the teinds.

Muirheid (mewr-heed) n. (Muirhead) Andrew see Andrew de Durisdeer. George (15th/16th C.) son and heir of Robert of Windyhill in Dumfriesshire. He appears to have had a dispute with Douglas of Cavers over the £10 lands of Denholm Mains. He was recorded in 1490 as ‘Master George Murehede’ when he granted a charter of lands within Denholm and Cavers. He gave sasine of these lands to William Douglas of Cavers in 1491/2. He was said to be a ‘familiar servitor’ of the King and was probably related to Master Richard ‘Murehead’ who was Lord Clerk Register and Secretary. He married Anabelle Grierson, with whom he is recorded in a charter for Windyhills in 1506/7. Robert (15th C.) recorded in 1479 when James Alemoor of that Ilk and John Turnbull ‘in the Fithe’ were ordered to pay rentals to him for his lands in Cavers Parish. Additionally William Douglas of Cavers did not appear when called to pay the £25 owed for the mals of these same lands. In 1490 his son and heir George had a charter from James IV for lands in ‘the dominical lands of Denhame, and ten-pound land lying in the town and territory of Cavers.’ He is recorded as being of ‘Windihillis’, which is probably the village of Windyhills near Closeburn, Dumfriesshire. Witnesses to the document were Bishop Robert Muirhead of Glasgow and Dean Richard Muirhead of Glasgow, who were presumably relatives. Rev. Robert (1706/7–84) minister of Southdean Parish from 1756 until his death. He married Elizabeth Ainslie in 1779, and she died in 1800.
muirhen (mewr-, mär-h) n. a female red grouse. Muirhouse (mewr-hoos) n. Muirhouse, former name for lands in the barony of Crichton and county of Roxburghshire. The lands were owned by a branch of the Scotts in the 15th century. The name is lost, and the precise location is uncertain (but somewhere near Pathhead). Stephen Scott had a charter of Muirhouse in 1450 and a sasine in 1463; he appears to be the same man who was also ‘of Wilton’ as well as other lands, and was a son of Robert Scott of Rankleburn. Muirhouse was inherited by Stephen’s son Robert, who had a sasine in 1464, then there was a dispute over inheritance by Robert’s son George (also of Borthaugh), with a counter-claim by Patrick, Earl of Bothwell. George Scott must have won this case, since his son John had a confirmation in these lands in 1526/7 (note that there are many other places of the same name, including one near Lilliardsedge, another near Dyfesdale in Dumfriesshire and at least 6 others in Midlothian; it is ‘Murhaus’ in 1464 and ‘Myvrous’ in 1505).

Muirhooselaw (mewr-hoos-law) n. Muirhouselaw, place name south of Maxton, being essentially the same place as Ancrum Moor and Lilliard’s Edge, and hence sometimes referred to as the site of the Battle of Ancrum Moor in 1545. A trial of 1502 describes how 4 Henrisons were taken from their farm there by rievers and ransomed to the English. It is recorded being leased from Thomas Hamilton to John Haiburton in the 17th century. Haliburton of Muirhouselaw gave evidence at the trial of George Turnbull of Belses in 1603. Many of the buildings of the estate are in a picturesque pink-red sandstone. There is a triangulation pillar above the farmhouse, at a height of 178 m (the name ‘Muirhouse’, now lost, deriving from the Old English ‘mor hus’, meaning ‘house on the moor’, first appears about 1200, while this name first appears in 1529 as ‘Murrieslaw’, is ‘Moreislaw’ in 1603 and ‘Murouslaw’ in 1621; it is ‘Murrislaw’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map).

Muirknowe (mowr-, mowr-, mür-now) n. former name for lands in the Barony of Riddell. According to the services of heirs in 1636 and 1669 they corresponded to part of the lands of West Lilliesleaf (it is ‘Murieknow’ in 1636 and ‘Muirknow’ in 1669).

Muirlaw (mewr-, mür-law) n. former name for lands in the Barony of Cavers. It is listed as ‘Murelaw’ in a 1511 charter of the Douglasses of Cavers, along with ‘Drileth, Elrechill, and Dennummains’. It was still in the Barony of Cavers when inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687 and by his brother Archibald in 1698. The precise location is unknown, but presumably near Denholm (it is ‘Murlaw’ in 1687 and ‘Muirlaw’ in 1698).

muir-man (mür-, moor-man) n., poet. an inhabitant of the moors, outdoor worker, particularly on the Border – ‘It fell about the Lammas time, When the muir-men won their hay’ [T], ‘Muirmen were mawin’ hay far doun The hill-side, lowne an’ braid . . . ’ [ECB].

Munro (mu-nró) n. Adam (b.1834) son of William, he continued the rope-making business of his father. In 1861 he was still living with his parents and siblings at 1 Bourtree Place. He married Christina Govenlock and their children included: Mary (b.1871); and William Alexander (b.1873), who was a chemist. Daniel (b.1831/2) from Ireland, he was appointed Superintendent of the Roxburghshire Constabulary by the new Town Council in 1861. In the 1861 census he was living on Jedburgh High Street with his wife Elizabeth and children Janet, Archibald, Helen and Daniel. He was given an increased police force to improve law and order on the streets of Hawick. However, he was dismissed in 1867 and charged with breach of trust and embezzlement.

Eliza (b.1829/30) daughter of Congregational minister and rope-maker William. She was mistress of the Infants’ School on Buccleuch Street in 1852. John (17th C.) listed among the subscribers for the new Kirk bell in 1693/4. He is probably the John, married to Isobel Henderson, whose children born in Hawick included: Helen (b.1680); William (b.1683); and Agnes (b.1687). Robert (1868–1955) born in Alnness, he was educated at Aberdeen Grammar School and Edinburgh University. Admitted to the Scottish Bar in 1893, he became King’s Counsel in 1910. He was Liberal M.P. for Wick 1910–18 and Liberal M.P. for Roxburgh and Selkirk after 1918–22, the first such M.P. after the Border Burghs constituency was dissolved. He was Privy Counsellor from 1913 and Lord Advocate 1913–16, before becoming Secretary of State for Scotland 1916–22. He later became Lord Alness, Chief Justice Clerk. He was created Baron Alness on his retirement from the bench in 1933. He was later Lord-in-Waiting to King George VI and awarded the Grand Cross of the Order of the British Empire. He opened the War Memorial in the Park at a special ceremony in 1920. Rev. William (1798/9–1883) rope-maker from Berwick who became Congregational Church minister for around 40 years. In Pigot’s 1825/6 directory he was a rope and twine maker and flax dresser on the High Street. He witnessed a baptism for weaver Charles Scott in 1826. He appears to have first become minister of the newly (re-)formed congregation in 1836, which faltered for several years, with a 2nd splinter Church also forming in 1842. In Pigot’s 1837 directory he was a rope-make at the East Port and in the 1841 census he was at ‘Eastend’ and still a rope-maker. By 1851 he was at 1 Bourtree Place and minister of the ‘Cong. Union Chapel’. In Slater’s 1852 directory he was still listed as a roper-maker, and separately as minister of the Independent Chapel on Melgund Place. In 1847 he invited John Rutherford of Kelso to preach at a series of prayer meetings in Hawick, which took place in the Spring of 1848, ultimately lasted for 7 weeks, and led to the founding of the Evangelical Union Kirk in Hawick (the present Congregational Kirk). However, some dispute led to him to withdraw his support from this ‘mission’, hence the forming of the E.U. Kirk, separate from his own. He was Chairman of the Parochial Board for 20 years and active in public service. He was also first Vice-President of the Hawick Total Abstinence Society. He was noted for courageously visiting the sick and dying during the 1849 cholera epidemic, as a result of which he had a public funeral. He was succeeded as minister in 1873 by Rev. W.L. Walker, by which time the congregation must have been dwindling. He is probably the William Munro who is recorded in about 1874 as owner of the ‘particate lands’ that had earlier been owned by Robert Herkness. He married Alison, daughter of Yeddie Smail. Their children included: Alexander (b.1826); Eliza (b.1830), who was an infant teacher; Adam (b.1834), who continued the rope-making business; Agnes (b.c.1837); Alison (b.c.1839); Margaret (‘Maggie’, b.c.1842); William Alexander (b.c.1844); Charles (b.c.1847); Mary (b.c.1850); and an unnamed son who died in 1840. He may also have had a son John who, along with 2 other Hawick men, was in a tweed manufacturing partnership in Cork (but there may be confusion over the name). A portrait of him exists. He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery (with ropemaker symbols). William Alexander (b.c.1845) son of Rev. William. He was a clerk at Thomas Purdom & Sons. He was connected with Allars Kirk for its last 5 decades, being Session Clerk. He was described as being ‘notable for his fine appearance’ (also written ‘Monroe’). munsie (mun-see) n., arch. someone deserving contempt, a monstrosity, fright, sight, spectacle – ‘…an amaist the whole road-end cam oot-ther-oot ti waal an glawr at the unordnar munsie’ [ECS] (from French ‘monsieur’; mainly from the Scottish North-east).

Alexander (15th C.) recorded in 1428/9 when he gave a sasine at the command of Archibald, Earl of Douglas, of the Barony of Hawick to William Douglas of Drumlanrig. He may have been an officer or bailie for the Baron or Earl, or possibly he held the rights of the Barony while the heir to Drumlanrig was a minor. He is probably the ‘Sandris of murray’ on an assize for lands in Beversyde in 1425. He is also probably the ‘Alexandrum de Murrase’ who was on the inquest for the lands of Eilrig in 1426. Probably the same ‘Alexandro de Murray’ witnessed the 1431 document transferring Heap from the Langlands to the Scotts; in his attestation to the same transfer he is ‘Alysander off Murray off Cranstoun’. In 1432 he witnessed a charter for lands in Sprouston being granted to Thomas Cranston of that Ilk and another for William Cranston being granted Nether Cranling in 1434. In 1443 he is ‘Alexander ‘de Moravia’ of Cranston being granted Nether Cranling in 1434. He was 2nd son of John of Philiphaugh, brother of Patrick of Falahill and uncle of John, ‘the Outlaw Murray’. As a cleric, he was sometimes referred to as ‘Master’. He was mentioned regularly in the Exchequer Rolls from at least 1460, being King’s Receiver and then Clerk of the Chancery from 1465. He was Clerk and Director of the Chancery of Scotland in 1477. He was also one of the Auditors of the Exchequer and a Canon of Moray from at least 1464. His name appears between 1476 and 1482 as Rector of Hawick. In 1476/7 he was listed as Rector of Hawick and Director of the Chancery when he has a charter for lands in Berwick. In 1479 he brought an action against David Scott of Buculeuch for the sum of 44 pounds of tax belonging to the church, but collected by Scott; there is no record of how this was resolved. Also in 1479 he was assigned the ‘grassum’ for part of the lands of ‘Warmwod’ in Ettrick Ward. He was listed as ‘rectore de Hawk’ when he witnessed a charter for James Hunter, Rector of Cranston. In 1482 he was also recorded as Rector of ‘Petty and Brachly’ when witness to an Inverness-shire document (along with the Rector of Ettrick Forest and others). About 1484 he appears to have himself been ‘rector of The Forest’ (i.e. Yarrow Kirk), and was still Director of the Chancery. His brother William is mentioned in 1485, by which time he was deceased. In 1536/7 it is written that John Scott took over as Vicar of Hawick following the death of Alexander Murray; however, this must either be an error or a later man of the same name. Alexander of Orchard (16th C.) recorded in 1575/6 making a complaint regarding ‘mails’ for Elibank. It is unclear how he was related to other Murrays, but he was surely connected with the Murrays of Blackbarony. Alexander (d.1682) son and heir of Sir Robert of Priestfield. In 1672 he was served heir to his father’s lands in Hawick. This was explicitly the annual rent of 600 merks for the 20 husbandlands of lands in the east of the Town of Hawick and 8 husbandlands of land in the west of Hawick. It is unclear where these lands were, why they were owned by Murrays, and what happened to them. He married Janet, daughter of James Rocheid of Inverleith. He was succeeded by his son Sir Alexander of Melgum (1682–1713), who married Grizel, daughter of Patrick Kynynmound of that Ilk. Alexander (b.c.1790) from Brownmuir in Selkirkshire, he was a cattle dealer in Lilliesleaf. He lived with his brothers William (a teacher) and Walter (an agricultural labourer) on the Loan in 1841 and on the south side of Main Street in 1851 and 1861. His wife was Janet and their children included Thomas, Jessie, Margaret and John W. He was still alive in 1861, although a widower. Alexander Davidson (1840–1907) son of Thomas, clothier in Denholm and Hawick, with his mother being Mary Scott, daughter of Charles Scott, Hawick linen manufacturer. He was younger brother of Sir J.A.H. He was an apprentice at the Hawick Advertiser and was local correspondent for the Southern Reporter. He was a prominent member of the Hawick Mutual Improvement Society. He left Hawick in 1862 to become editor of the Peeblesshire Advertiser. He later was editor of the Fife Journal and Dumfries Courier, before becoming editor of the Newcastle Daily Journal, a position he held for 37 years. He married Elizabeth Stuart Honeyman of Cupar, and she died in 1926, aged 81. They had 7 children. He published a story ‘Charnwood; or, lost, found and faithful!’ in 1876, set in the Borders in the mid-19th century, and a novel ‘The Barringtons’ in 1908. Andrew of Blackbarony (16th C.) son of John, who was Burgess of Edinburgh, and died at Flodden. He was a great-grandson of John of Philiphaugh. There was a ‘retour of service’ for him to inherit his father’s lands in 1513/4, with a special dispensation because of his age. In 1541 he claimed the tenancy of the Crown lands of the wester side of ‘Warmwod’, ‘alias Quhitehauch Braa’ (in Ettrick), then occupied by Walter Scott in Synton; he also claimed Priesthope in Ettrick and Glenypet in Yarrow. He was one of the 4 ‘curators’ of Sir Walter Scott of Buculeuch. In 1564/5 he was listed (on the Buculeuch side) on the bond between the Scotts and the Kers, and his support was also mentioned in the 1568/9 bond. He firstly married Elizabeth, daughter and heiress of William Lockhart, and had a daughter Marion, who married James Pringle of Whytbank. He secondly married Grizel Beaton, widow of Sir William Scott of Kirkurd, and was thus Sir Walter’s step-father. Their children were: Sir John of Blackbarony; Andrew; Sir Gideon of Elibank; William of Dunerne and Newton; Elizabeth, who married James Bothwick of Newbyres and Sir Thomas Hamilton of Priestfield; and Agnes, who married her cousin Patrick Murray of Falafill, but was mentioned in a potential marriage contract in 1568/9, part of the resolution of the feud between the Kers and the Scotts. Andrew (17th C.) possibly the father of Andrew of Spittal Tower. He is said to have come from the Braemar area, and refusing to join the force under his superior, the Earl of Mar, he was forced to flee south, where he joined a troop of horsemen under Douglas of Cavers. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1648 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Douglas. He married Margaret Scoon and their children included Adam (b.1643), Helen (b.1646) and Isobel (b.1654). His wife’s name was recorded as Janet in 1646. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jane Anderson and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1671. The witnesses were John Elliot and William Gray. Andrew (17th C.) tenant in Kirndean in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Andrew ‘The Hazel Dog o’the Toor’ (1715–77) second son of John and brother of John (and ancestor of Sir James A.H.). He carried on running the farm tenanted by his father, Spittal Tower. He is recorded as gardener at Tower in 1753 when one of his children was baptised. He married Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’) Spottiswoode, who came from an old Melrose family (her sister Isobel married James Hood of Dryburgh, ancestor of the Hoods of Lilliesleaf). Their children, baptised in Cavers Parish, were: Elizabeth (b.1747), who emigrated to Canada; Isabel (b.1751); Andrew (b.1753); William (b.1754); Jane (b.1756); John (b.1758); Helen; James (b.1764); Agnes (b.1767); and Mary (1770/1–1845). Andrew (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Betty Inglis and their children included: Thomas (b.1775); and Andrew (b.1777). He may be the spinner whose child died in Hawick in 1809. Andrew (1753–94) eldest son of Andrew and Elizabeth Spottiswood. He was a tenant farmer, with farms leased from the Dicksons of Hassendeanburn, first Westerhouses and then Newton. He was also tenant at Spittal Tower, like his father. In 1791 he was recorded at ‘Spittalhall’ when one of his children was baptised in Wilton Parish. In 1789 he married Isabella Henderson of Banchester and she died in 1841/2 (although she was still living with her son William in Hawick in 1841). There is a story about him finding a box of gold when ploughing the fields at Westerhouses. He is supposed to have said to his wife ‘I am just going to shave and take it down to the Burn’, and then he delivered it to Mr. Dickson, who rewarded him with a year’s free rent. His children were: Andrew (1781–1848), who emigrated to Australia; Jean, who died young; James, who married a Wintrop of Hawick and was Sir J.A.H.’s grandfather; William (b.1789), stockingmaker and merchant of Hawick; Elizabeth (or ‘Betsy’), who married whip-maker Michael Ogilvy; Jane (b.1791), who married William Clerk; and John (b.1793), who died young. Several of his children were christened in Wilton Parish. Andrew (1781–1848) eldest child of Andrew of Spittal Tower. He was an agricultural labourer in Oxnam Parish. He married Isabella Cranston (whose sister was the grandmother of Cogsmill teacher Andrew Oliver); she died in 1832, aged 48 and is buried at Oxnam. After his wife’s death he emigrated with his family to Australia. Their children included: Robert (1811–92), who married Jane Blair and was buried at ‘Haning’ near Bendemeer, New South Wales; Margaret Ann (1813–39), who died on the voyage to Australia; Andrew (1815–46), who became ship’s master and was lost at sea; Isabella (1817–98); William (1819–76), who died at sea; Elizabeth (1821–77); and Jane (b.1824). He died near Melbourne. Andrew (b.c.1783) farmer at Old Castleton in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’. He was also listed there in 1841. His wife was Janet and their children included George and John. Andrew (1819/20–1907) born in Kirkton Parish, he moved to Hob Kirk Parish with his father, who was a hind at Ruletownhead. In 1851 he was an agricultural labourer at Hallrule Mill and in 1861 was a ploughman at Kirknowe. In 1857 he married Betsy, the eldest daughter of the miller at Hallrule, James Laidlaw; she died in 1906. Both he and his wife died at Forkins and are buried at Hob Kirk. Their children were: Isabella (b.1857), who died aged 5; and William (b.1858). Andrew (b.1821/2) son of William and brother of William and John. In the 1840s he opened a school in a room at the top of Baker Street. He later left for college, and the school was continued by his brother John, moving to the old East Bank Kirk. He returned later to assist his brother William in running the much larger school, which moved to 8 Kirkgate (i.e. St. Mary’s Place). They were living at 7 Kirkgate in 1861, presumably next to the school. This eventually became St. Mary’s and ultimately Trinity. Andrew (1823–82) son of weaver and merchant William. He was a foreman in Hawick. In 1851 he was living on Nichol’s Close and in 1851 at 3 Back Row. He married Isabella Brown and their children included Jane, Helen, William and John. Anne (1694–1737) daughter of Bennet, Laird of Chesters, she married her cousin John Murray, who was the Duke of Buccleuch’s tenant at Unthank, and died in 1728. In 1734 she moved to Hawick, where she died. Her son James (b.1713) emigrated to North Carolina in 1735, and is an ancestor of Franklin D. Roosevelt. Sir Archibald of Blackbarony (d. bef. 1634) son of Sir John. He was knighted by James VI when he was young, and was made a Baronet of Nova Scotia in 1628. He married Margaret Maule, a descendant of the house of Pannmure. Their children were: Sir Alexander, 2nd Baronet; Walter of Halmire; Robert, ancestor of the Murrays of Murray’s Hall; Margaret, who married Sir John Hope; Bethia, who married Sir William Forbes of Craigievor and secondly Sir Alexander Forbes of Tolquhoun; Helen, who married Sir John Carstairs; and Elizabeth, who married William Scott of Mangerton. Archibald (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1719 he was herd at Hislop. He married Bessie Black and their daughter Bessie was baptised in 1719, with witnesses ‘Mr’ Thomas Hume in Commonside, Robert Scott, tenant in Falmarsh and Archibald Scott in Hislop. Archibald (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living in Denholm in 1733 when he married Betty Little. Archibald (b.1744) was probably his son. Archibald (18th/19th C.) tailor in Denholm, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 2 horses. He was probably related to James (grandfather of Sir James A.H.), a tailor in Hawick, who learned his trade in Denholm. Cameron ‘Cammie’ (1975– ) son of Ernie, from Jedburgh and June, he was born in Hawick and brought up in Prestonpans and Haddington. after leaving school he joined Hawick R.F.C., being part of their 1996 cup-winning side. He later played professionally for the Borders and Edinburgh before returning to Hawick in 2001/2 and finishing his playing career with Melrose. He was first capped for Scotland in 1998, eventually gaining 24 caps. He works as a P.E. teacher at Berwickshire High School. He married Diane and they have sons Glen and Jack. Charles (18th C.) workman in Hawick Parish. He married Isabel Dryden and their children included: Isobel (b.1770); Robert (b.1772); Charles (b.1776); and Daniel (b.1778). Charles Oliver (1842–1923) son of Thomas and Mary Scott, he was born in Denholm. Brother of Sir James, he was known as an engraver. He worked as a clerk in a woollen factory in Hawick until the age of 21. He then attended the Edinburgh School of Design, working by day as a lithographer. He was Gold and Silver Medalist at the Royal Scottish Academy School. He settled in London in 1868, being on the staff of ‘Punch and Judy’. In London he became an engraver and was a founder member of the Royal Society of Painter Etchers. He first exhibited his plates in the Royal Academy Exhibition in 1878. He also worked on some local projects, including the reproduction of Tom Scott’s ‘Return to Hawick’, and some original etchings of Hawick, for example images of the old Town Hall and St. Mary’s Kirk. There is also a well-known picture of Sir Walter Scott’s Tomb at Dryburgh Abbey. He married Elizabeth Wilson, daughter of Archibald Campbell from Glasgow and they had 7 children. He died in Croydon. Christina née Winthrope (18th/19th C.) daughter of Hawick writer (i.e. lawyer) Thomas. She married a Mr. Stewart and became widowed. A story is told of how she met her new husband James Murray. Apparently she dreamt she was walking in her father’s garden at the Wheathole and there met a man she did not recognise, but later saw him in East Bank Kirk (built on the site of the garden), later was introduced to him and eventually they were married. David (b.1704) son of David, he was born in Ewes Parish. He lived at Whisgills farm in Castleton Parish. He married Elizabeth Murray (b.1716). Their children included: Elizabeth; Jean, who married Andrew Kyle; Agnes (b.1740); David (b.1743); John (b.1746); William Easton (b.1749); and Thomas (b.1754). David (1768/9–1841) son of James and Anne Dalrymple. He was a joiner at Teindside and perhaps in the Borthwick valley. His wife Mary Anderson died in 1819, aged 43. In 1820 he secondly married Mary Wilson, daughter of a Hawick blacksmith. The Murray family living at Mossyknowe in 1841 are probably his widow Mary and children James (a journeyman joiner), Henry, David and John. David (1791/2–1815) son of Thomas, tenant at Whisgills. He was described as ‘six feet six inches high; and to a majestic and well-proportioned person, he joined the mildest dispositions of mind’. He died aged 23. David (1832/3–83) son of James, he was tenant at Whisgills, like his father. He married Elizabeth Rob-son, who died in 1896, aged 54. Their children included Jessie Temple (1877/8–1938) and prob-ably James who also farmed at Whisgills. They are buried at Ettleton. David (1870/1–1911) youngest son of William, teacher at St. Mary’s School. He trained as a doctor at Edinburgh University and became assistant to Dr. James Brydon in the Sandbed. He later married Dr. Barydon’s daughter Mary. He then worked in Dunbarton and Edinburgh, but returned to Hawick as partner to Dr. Brydon about 1901. He carried on for a few years after Brydon’s death in 1905, later taking on Dr. Samuel Davidson as a new partner, but dying himself not long after, aged only 40. He left 2 daughters. E. Judith local art teacher. In 2009, along with Lesley Fraser, she produced the booklet ‘Hawick Common Riding, An Illustrated Guide’, as well as the children’s version ‘The Kidz Guide’, distributed to senior primary pupils. ‘My First Common Riding Book’, aimed at nursery and primary school children followed. Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (17th C.) resident of North Synton in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor’. Elliot (18th/19th C.) married Violet Elliot in 1805 in Southdean, and she died at Banchester. Their children included Charlotte (who married Adam Bell from Camp-town), Charles (who worked at Wolfelee), Walter (farm servant, who died at Old Jethart) and John (servant at Wauchope and hedger for Minto estate). Elliot (b.c.1840) from Hobkirk Parish. He took over as blacksmith at Chesters from his uncle John Waugh in the early 1870s. He re-mained as blacksmith for more than 30 years, so that between him, his uncle and his uncle’s father (Robert), they had been blacksmiths at Chesters for about 95 years. Francis (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Scoon and their children included: Janet (b.1670); Margaret (b.1674); and Marie (b.1675). The witnesses in 1674 were John Murray and John Scoon (who may have been fathers or brothers of the couple). He could be the Francis born in 1643 to Alaexan-der and ‘Manie’ Scott. Frank James (d.1943) younger brother of J.E.D. He was a plumber, like his father. He married Mary Dickie, and had 2 children, John Archibald Campbell (who worked in hosiery) and Mary Margaret. Gavin P. (19th/20th C.) 4th man to serve as Secretary for the Congregational Kirk. George (17th C.) weaver at Whitehaugh in Wilton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. George (18th/19th C.) farmer at Castleton, recorded along with John on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John’s name came first and so was presumably his elder brother or father. George (b.1803/4) from Castleton Parish, he was shepherd at Rule-townmead in 1861. He probably took over as shepherd there from his father, and was likely brother of Andrew. His wife was Jane and she had a son John Hume from a previous marriage. They had a daughter Jane. George (b.c.1810) grocer on the Howegate, probably at No. 16. He later worked as a mason’s labourer. He married Helen Tully and their children included Agnes, George, Janet and David. George (b.1806/7) from Castleton Parish, he was a shoemaker journeyman in Hawick. He was living at about 43 High Street in 1841 and on the Kirkwynd in 1851. His wife was Sarah and their children included Helen and Ann. George (19th C.) shepherd of Allanhaughmill. From about 1848 he was one of the first Trustees of Hawick Congregational (then Evangelical) Kirk. He could be the agri-cultural labourer listed at Haysike in 1841, with wife Margaret and children John, Thomas and Helen. George Oliver (b.1857) younger son of local historian Robert. In 1863 he presented to the Museum an amulet found in the Glebe allotments. He provided a horn null (or perhaps the snuff) for the Snuffing in 1889. He became a doctor in Tunnel City, Wisconsin. He married Sarah Johnstone and their children were Robert Oliver and Agnes Ariska. George Malcolm ‘Malcolm’, C.B.E. (1937/8– ) educated at Hawick High School, he qualified as a Fellow of the Faculty of Actuaries in 1961. He was a Director of the Scottish Life Assurance Company and President of the Faculty of Actuaries 1994–96. He was awarded a C.B.E. in 1995. He has been President of the Callants’ Club and Hawick R.F.C., as well as honorary secretary of Edinburgh Borderers R.F.C. and involved with the Scottish Sports Council, the General Teaching Council of Scotland and Craiglockhart College. Sir Gideon of Elibank (d.1621) 3rd son of Sir Andrew of Blackbarony. His mother was Grizel Beaton, widow of Sir William Scott of Kirkurd, and thus he was half-brother to Sir Walter Scott, 10th Laird of Buccleuch. Sir Walter owed him ‘males’ for the lands of Glenpyet in his last testament of 1574. In 1592 he was ‘of Glenpoyte’ when he served as surety for William Scott of Hartwoodmyres and Walter Scott of Stiches. In 1594 he was ‘Jedion Murray of Glenpint’ among the 180 or so follow-ers of Sir James Johnstone who had a ‘respite’ for their role at Dryfe Sands the year before. He may have been educated for the church and was ‘chantour’ of Aberdeen. In 1590 along with John of Blackbarony, Patrick of Falahill and other Murays he was put under caution not to harm Robert Scott of Haining and James Scott, ‘callit Mekle Jame Eister’. He is probably the ‘Mr. Gedion Murray’ who witnessed a document in Edinburgh for Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1591. In about 1591 he killed a man called Aitchison. In 1592, along with Walter Scott of Goldielands, he was given a commission to ‘demolish the houses and fortalices of Harden and Dryhoip’, because of Walter Scott of Harden’s involvement in the Falkland Raid. He is probably the ‘Jedion Murray of Glenpoyt’ listed among the supporters of Sir James Johnstone at Dryfe Sands in 1593 and about the same time he was ‘of Glenpoyt’ when he was surety for William Scott of Hartwoodmyres and Walter Scott of Stirkshaws. In 1594 he was Mr. Gideon Murray of Glenpoytte when he witnessed a document for the Duke of Lennox and also witnessed a bond of ‘manrent’ for the Beatties to Sir Walter Scott, signed in Hawick in 1595. In 1595 the King confirmed a charter granting him ‘Elebank, or Eleburne, in the forest and Lordship of Ettrick’. In 1596/7 Sir Walter of Buccleuch granted him the lands of Crichton, this being signed in Hawick. He was Provost of Crichton, this patronage later going to the Earl of Buccleuch. In 1598 he was procurator for Sir Walter scott of Branxholme in a claim that Sir Walter should be responsible for Walter Scott of Harden. In 1598 he acted as commissioner to Sir Walter Scott in a contract with the Homes to ee Wi’ Wat o’ Harden could never see [WL].

Gideon (1772/3–1839) resident of Colterscleuch Toll. He married Margaret Oliver (1778/9–1843). They were buried at Teviothead. Gordon F. (20th C.) Town Hall Legal Assistant 1958–60 and Depute Town Clerk 1960–62. Graeme (d.2000) well known reciter, brother of Philip. Harold James Ruthven (1868–1955) son of Sir James A.H. He was known as an educationalist, inspector of schools, chess historian and champion of lefthandedness. He wrote an article ‘The Family of Sir James Murray’ in the 1928 Archaeological Society Transactions and a biographical sketch of his father’s life in the 1934 Transactions. He also provided family-related notes to James Haining for his monumental inscriptions. Helen (b.c.1780)
Murray

(18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He was married to Ann Bell and they had several children baptised at Netherraw and Upper Raw. Their children included Adam (b.1795), Robert (b.1797), Betty (b.1799), James (b.1802), Margaret (b.1806) and George (b.1806). James of Bowhill (d.1513) recorded in about 1529 in the Selkirk Protocol Books. He was said to have ‘died under the banner of our deceased supreme lord king James IV’ in about 1529, when his only daughter and heir Isabel gave the south part of Bowhill to her uncle, Michael Scott of Aikwood, and Michael’s son William. Also in 1529 his daughter granted her lands of the west side of Kershope to Michael Scott. This suggests that he had married a sister of Michael Scott of Aikwood. He was probably related to the deceased Thomas of Bowhill recorded in 1539. James of Falahill (d.c.1529) elder son of John ‘the Outlaw’. His sisters Elizabeth, Isabel and Janet married Sir James Douglas of Cavers, Robert Scott of Howpastley and Sir Robert Stewart of Minto, respectively. He held several lands in Selkirkshire and also Peeblesshire. In 1519/20 he resigned ‘Eldinghop’ (in Yarrow) to Walter Scott of Branxholme. He was on an inquest in Jedburgh in 1523. In 1524/5 he was one of those who promised to help keep order with the newly appointed Warden and Lieutenant of the Borders, the Earl of Angus. He is probably the James recorded in 1526 as Sheriff of Selkirkshire. In 1527 he had an agreement with Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme to end their feud; he agreed to forgive the Scotts and their allies for all former killings and spoliations in return for 500 merks Scots, and he also agreed to end his dispute over the lands of Kirkurd. In 1528 he agreed to deliver up all charters etc. relating to Kirkurd and give up any claim to the lands. Also in 1528 he assigned his lands of Lewenshope to his wife. He married Margaret Home and/or a daughter of Sir John Cranston and was succeeded by his son Patrick in 1530. James (16th C.) tenant in Sundhope in the Yarrow Valley. He was recorded in 1539/40 as ‘layman of the diocese of Glasgow when he was decreed to be within the 4th grade of consanguinity with Marion, daughter of Adam Dalglesh of Deuchar. James (16th C.) tenant of Swinstead in Kirkton Parish. In 1581 he was ‘in Swynsteids’ along with Hector Jardine when they (along with several Elliots) witnessed the sasine for Gavin Gledstains inheriting Stobs from his deceased brother George Gledstains. Sir James (17th C.) son of John of Falahill and Philiphaugh. He was knighted by Charles I. In 1628–33 he represented Selkirkshire in Parliament. He married Anne, daughter of Sir Thomas Craig of Riccarton. He died before his father and his son Sir John succeeded to Philiphaugh. His daughter Janet married James Scott of Gala. James (d.1658) 2nd Earl of Annandale, son of John, 1st Earl. In 1641 he was served heir to his father’s 5-pound Chapel lands of Caerlenrig, and also a huge number of other lands. He moved to England and lived quietly there during the Civil War. He married Jean Carnegie, Viscountess of Stormont. He died without issue. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Armstrong and their son William was baptised in 1648. James (17th C.) recorded in 1656 when his daughter Agnes with Isobel Nixon was baptised in Hawick. This was labelled ‘for: in Cavers’, making it clear that the couple were unmarried and that at least one of them was from Cavers Parish. The witnesses were Thomas Johnston and William Nixon (probably related to Isobel). James (17th C.) recorded as schoolmaster in Selkirk in 1668. James (d.c.1682) recorded as tenant ‘in Mains of Liddesdaill’ in 1682, when his will is listed. He was surely related to Adam who was at Mains in 1694. James (17th C.) herd at Borthwickshiels in 1683. His daughter Bessie was baptised in Roberton Parish in that year, with witnesses Thomas Elliot and William Elliot (perhaps the tenant in Borthwickshiels and his son, who became Laird of Borthwickbrae). Sir James of Philiphaugh (1655–1708) eldest son of Sir John and Anne Douglas of Cavers. He was served heir to his father in 1677. He was Senator of the College of Justice. He served as M.P. for Selkirkshire in 1678, 1681–82 and 1702–03. He was then Lord Clerk Register. In 1680 he was involved in a dispute with Selkirk over the boundaries of its Common and had a discharge with the Burgh (probably over annual rent) in 1681. He acted as a Commissioner for assessing the rents of the local farms of the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1694. He contributed £500 to the Darien Scheme in 1695. He married Anne Hepburn of Blackcastle and secondly married Margaret, daughter of Sir Alexander Don of Newton. His children were: John, who succeeded; James, who died unmarried; Alexander, also died unmarried; Rachel, died unmarried; Anne, married Pringle of Haining; Elizabeth; Jane; and Margaret. He died at Inch. James (17th C.) resident of Shielwood in Ashkirk Parish in 1694.
when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll. He may be the James who witnessed a baptism in 1689 in Ashkirk Parish for William Coltart and others in 1690 for Walter Wilson and for Thomas Smith. He may be the James who married Helen Nivison and whose son Robert was baptised in 1690, with witnesses Thomas Nivison and Water Coltart. James (17th C.) herd at Broadhaugh on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. James (17th C.) listed as resident at Outerside on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th C.) listed at Newbigging among 'The poor in Hauick Parochi' on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Mary Nichol in Roberton in 1702. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded as a gardener in Clarilaw in 1711. James (b.1713) may also have been his child. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Denholm. His daughter Isabel was baptised in 1709. Isabel (b.1701) and Archibald (b.1704), baptised in Cavers, may also have been his children. James (17th/18th C.) resident at Merrylaw. In 1724 his daughter Bessie was baptised in Cavers Parish. Other children, baptised in Cavers, who were probably his, include Bessie (b.1713), Ann (b.1715) and Ann (again, b.1719). James (17th/18th C.) weaver in Wilton Parish. He was at Burnhead in 1709 and at Newton in 1711. His children included: Jean (b.1709); and William (b.1711). He could be the James who married Elspeth (or Janet) Turnbull in Wilton in 1707. He could also be the James, married to Marion Turnbull, whose son Andrew was baptised in Wilton in 1716 or the James, married to Agnes Brown, whose son James was baptised in 1716. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Craikshiel in 1718 and Craik in 1720. He probably married Bessie Dickson in Roberton in 1717 and their children included: Bessie (b.1718); and an un-named son (b.1720). James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Janet Blacker in 1728. James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Dykes in 1730 and 1738. His children included Isabel (b.1730) and Adam (b.1738). He may be the James who married Mary (or Marion) Rutherford in 1726, the marriage being recorded in Bedrule and Hobkirk parishes. James (1713–81) born at Unthank in the Ewes valley, son of James and Ann Bennet. His father died in 1728 and in 1732 the lease of Unthank and Fieldton were taken by Robert Elliot of Fenwick and Walter Scott (his cousin, farmer at Commonside and uncle of Sir Walter Scott the writer). He then became a merchant’s apprentice in London, and emigrated to North Carolina (it is said in 1735, although this is impossibly early, since his wife was only born in 1724), while his mother moved to Hawick in 1734 (where she died). He married his cousin Barbara, daughter of Andrew Bennet of Chester's; probably the same Barbara's 'bride money' was paid in Ancrum Parish in 1744. Their children were Elizabeth Dorothy, Archibald, John, Jean and two children who died in infancy. Elizabeth married Edward Hutchinson Robbins, their daughter Annie Jean Robbins married Joseph Lyman, whose daughter Catherine Robbins Lyman married Warenn Delano and had a daughter Sara (or Sallie) Delano, who was the mother of U.S. President Franklin Delano Roose-velt. James himself was exiled after the American Revolution, being loyal to King George, and dying in Halifax, Nova Scotia. Some of his correspondence (including a brief account of a visit to Hawick) was published in 'Letters of James Murray, Loyalist' (1901). James (1716/7–92) resident of Teinside. He married Anne Dalrymple, who died at Teinside in 1809, aged 80. Their children included: William, James, Nelly, Elizabeth (or 'Betty', 1758) and Anne (b.1766), who probably all died young; David (1768/9–1841), joiner; and John, who also died at Teinside at the age of 70. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Burnfoot in 1747 and 1751. He married Helen ‘Hoom’ (i.e. Hume) and their children included: Margaret (b.1746); John (b.1747); Janet (b.1749); and William (b.1751). The witnesses in 1747 were Walter Scott and James Dryden and in 1751 were Robert and John Scott. James (18th C.) resident at Borthwickbrae in 1743 and 1753. His children, baptised in Roberton Parish, probably included Helen (b.1743), Robert (b.1745), Thomas (b.1747), Bessie (b.1749), Ann (b.1751), Walter (b.1753) and James (b.1755) were probably also his children. He is probably the wright in Mains (presumably Borthwick Mains) who died in 1775 and is buried in Roberton Cemetery, along with his wife Anne ‘Rickeltoun’ (d.1797). James (b.1741) 2nd son of John, farmer at Spittal-on-Rule. He trained for the ministry and became minister at the Presbyterian Church in Harbottle. James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included: William (b.1768); James (b.1773); and William (b.1778). James (18th C.) resident of Ewes Parish. In 1783 he was at 'Drummondshall'.
He married Mararet Scott and their children included: Elizabeth (b.1783); Janet (b.1787); Margaret (b.1795); and William (b.1797). The witnesses in 1783 were John and James Carruthers. James ‘Jamie’ (b.c.1755) probably from Ettrick, although possibly the James, son of James, born in Robertson Parish in 1755. His story of encountering a ghost at the Bishop’s Stone (on Woll Rig) in about 1775 was recounted to someone in 1831 who wrote about it in the Border Counties’ Magazine in 1880 (reprinted in 1904). He married Jean Rae In Yarrow in 1810; she had worked as a servant at Headshaw. Their children included: Jean (b.1811); and William (b.1815). James (1756/7–1827) joiner at Borthwickbrae, probably the son of James born in 1755. He is recorded as owner of a horse at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He is buried in Robertson Cemetery. His children included: William (1802/3–27). He may be the same as the James who lived at Borthwick Mains. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was living at Borthwick Mains in 1788 and 1792 and Borthwick Burnfoot in 1798. He married Ann Turnbull in Robertson in 1787 and their children included: Betty (b.1788); James (b.1790); Walter (b.1792); and an unnamed son (b.1798). James of Philiphaugh (1769–1852) 3rd son of John. In 1809 he married Mary Dale, daughter of Henry Hughes. They had 3 sons and a daughter, and he was succeeded by the eldest son, John. James (b.c.1775) born in Yarrow Parish, perhaps son of John. He worked as a soldier, being listed as Private and then Corporal in the Dumfriesshire Militia. He married Mary Scott in Canongate, Edinburgh in 1803; his wife was daughter of miller Robert Scott (perhaps miller at Roughheugh) and born in Wilton Parish. His children (born and baptised in Musselburgh, Dalkeith and Wilton, but all registered in Wilton) were: John (b.1806); Robert (b.1808); and James (b.1810). There was also an earlier son, whose name is unknown. The baptism of James in 1810 was witnessed by John Thomline and George Wallace. He may have later had children: Christina (b.1824/5); Thomas (b.1812/3); Andrew (b.1826/7); Mary (b.1827/8); and Helen (b.1829/30). The family were living at ‘Nixon’s Mill’ (probably Lynwood Cottages) in 1841, where he was a wool spinner. They were in Dumfries in 1851, where he as working as ‘Under Carder Master Wool’. James (18th/19th C.) resident of London who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He presumably had a local connection. James (18th/19th C.) mason in Newcastle-ton, listed among heads of households in 1835. James (1785–1843) from the Spittal family, he was 3rd child of Andrew who farmed Westerhouses and Newton. He was paternal grandfather of ‘Dictionary’ James. In about 1806 he married (with a curious story of her seeing him in a dream before she knew him) Christina, daughter of Thomas Wintroppe, who was a writer in Hawick. He became a tailor, learning his trade in Denholm and later having a shop at 67 High Street (which became the Co-op grocers). He was listed as a High Street tailor in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was long an elder of the East Bank Seces- sion Church, having been one of the original sub- scribers, receiving money in exchange for bonds (which through some irregularity were all later taken by his grandson Andrew, leaving the rest of his grand-children with nothing). His children were: Isabella, who married Hawick shoemaker William Somerville; Andrew, tailor in Morebat- tle, who married Minnie Buglass; Thomas, father of Sir James A.H.; Elizabeth, who died young; Stewart, a roper with Munro’s, who married Isabella Anderson; James, a tailor in Hawick who married Isabella Mabon; and Elizabeth, who married stockingmaker Andrew Hood. In 1841 he was listed as a tailor on the High Street, living along with ‘Cathrine’ (possibly his wife Christian, oth- erwise a sister), and children James and Betty, as well as another James (probably a grandson). James (1789–1853) youngest child of John and Mary Cleuch and grandson of John, farmer at Spittal-on-Rule. He was father of Gen. Sir John Murray. He was educated at Denholm, Minto and Jedburgh schools and Edinburgh University. He studied to be a minister, but due to a speech de- fect he had to give up his ambition (which ap- parently was not an impediment to becoming a teacher!). He ran a private school in Hawick for several years before being appointed schoolmas- ter of Hawick Grammar School in 1821 (perhaps as assistant from 1818). He was appointed as Session Clerk in 1821, and as such was the last to carry on the practice of reading the scriptures in church between the morning and evening ser- vices. However, he kept only sporadic records in the Session books. He was the first teacher at the new United Schools, when the Parish and Gram- mar Schools merged in 1825. His favourite saying when punishing pupils was ‘I’ll trim ye!’ He sub- scribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He gave up as session clerk in 1850, but was headmaster right up until his death in the first few days of 1853. In a directory of 1852 he is listed as Porochial Schoolmaster on Teviot Square. He married Margaret (1790–1851), eldest daughter of Thomas Irvine, farmer at Wauknell, Eskdale; her brother was Maj.-Gen. Sir Archibald Irvine. They had at least 3 children: John Irvine (b.1826), who became a General; Elizabeth, who married Col. Ryall, but died of cholera and had no surviving children; and Thomas Irvine, who died in infancy. He is buried in St. Mary’s churchyard. James (1796/7–1871) son of Thomas and Janet Ingles, he was tenant farmer at Whisgills in Castleton Parish. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. In 1861 he was recorded as farmer of 700 acres, employing 3 men. He married Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’) Scott, who died in 1874, aged 78. Their children included: Elizabeth; Thomas (1806/7–58), tenant in Burnmouth; Betty (1817–24); David (1832/3–83), also tenant at Whisgills; Agnes (1832/3–80); Jane; Janet, who married John Irving; John; and Mary, who married Adam Scott. They are mostly buried in Ettleton Cemetery. James (b.1810) son of James and Mary Scott. His father was a soldier, and he was born and baptised in Wilton. He worked as a handloom weaver. In 1841 he was living on Punchbowl Close, was at 5 Teviot Crescent in 1851 and was on Mather’s Close in 1861. He married Isabella Howison and their children included: David (b.1833/4); Robert (b.1835); William (b.1836/7); Isabella (b.1839/40), who must have died young; James (b.1846/7); Jane (or Ann, b.1848/9); Isabella (again, b.1850/1) and Helen (b.1853/4). James (b.1810/1) born in Wilton, he was a shoemaker in Hawick. He was on the Kirk Wynd in 1841 and at 25 Loan in 1851 and 1861. His wife was Catherine and their children were John, Robert, Helen, Walter, Andrew and Mary. He may be the James, son of John and Mary Scott, baptised in Wilton in 1810. James (1812–75) from Coldstream, he was a blacksmith with premises on Brougham Place. The location was afterwards used by Gould the frame-smith. He married Christian, who died in 1896, aged 82. Their children included several who did not reach adulthood, plus Isabella and another daughter who married William Taylor of Ashybank. James (19th C.) founder of J. Murray & Sons, plumbers and slaters of Hawick. He was an elder in Allars Kirk. Sir James Augustus Henry ‘Dictionary Murray’ (1837–1915) born in Denholm, in the Crown Inn on Main Street. He was eldest son of Thomas Murray (clothier in Denholm and later Hawick, from the Spittal Tower family) and Mary Scott (also of Hawick, daughter of Charles Scott, linen manufacturer, and from the Boonrow family), and was a distant relative of the Hawick schoolmaster who was also James Murray. His middle names were added only after he went to Hawick and discovered that some people had more than one Christian name. He developed an early interest in botany, geology and astronomy, as well as languages. He was educated at Cavers, Denholm and Minto schools, attending school only between the ages of 6 and 14½. By the time he left school he had already studied Latin, French, German, Italian and classical Greek. He became a Junior Assistant Master at the United Schools of Hawick in 1854 at age 17. 3 years later he was made headmaster of a new private school in Hawick, the Subscription Academy. He was apparently keen on taking his pupils on excursions to study local botany, geology, etc. He was a founder member of the Archaeological Society in 1856 (when he was still only 19 years old), being the third official member and its first Secretary, as well as contributing many articles (51 in all) on a huge range of topics; he was also the last surviving founder member of the Society. In the early years of the Society, he talked at a large fraction of meetings, covering botany, geology, archaeological artefacts, local history, ‘Two Days’ Ramble up the Slitrig and down the Liddell’, etc. He made a 5-foot long map of ‘Scotland under the Romans’, which he talked about at one of the first meetings of 1856. He wrote a series of articles in the Hawick Advertiser in the 1850s, describing the botany of the area. He also presented the Museum with a cabinet of insects he had collected. In Hawick he was also involved with politics as well as the Total Abstinence Society. He had many talents, for example his sketch of Leyden’s birthplace was used as the frontispiece for the 1858 collection of Leyden’s works. In 1863 he made stencil copies of the stones describing Walter Scott of Goldielands, which were uncovered in St. Mary’s Kirk. He was a member of the Congregational Kirk in Denholm. In 1862 he married Maggie Isabella Sarah Scott (1834–65) in Belfast; she was an infant teacher and daughter of a Hawick clerk. They soon moved to London for his wife’s health, where nevertheless she died in 1865 (of consumption, aged 31), and their infant daughter Anne Marie Gretchen the year before (buried in the Wellogate Cemetery). There he worked for the Chartered Bank of India, Australia and China in Threadneedle Street. He obtained a reader’s ticket for the British Museum and resumed his interest in languages, soon meeting several philologists who lived in the London area. In 1867 he married Ada Agnes Ruthven (1845–1936), with Alexander Graham Bell as the best man. In 1870 he was appointed schoolmaster at Mill Hill School, north-west of London and lived in a nearby house called 'Sunnyside'; he regarded his time there as the happiest of his life (apart from when he was in Hawick of course). He completed 'The Dialect of the Southern Counties of Scotland' (1873), the first systematic study of any dialect, and gave papers at meetings of the Philological Society. Contributing more seriously to philological study, he produced editions of 'The Minor Poems of Sir David Lindsay' (1871), 'The Complaynt of Scotland' (1872) with an extensive introduction and glossary and 'Romance and prophecies of Thomas of Erceldoune' (1875), again with notes. He obtained a B.A. from London University in 1873 and an honorary LL.D. from Edinburgh University in 1874. He became President of the Philological Society in 1878 and around 1879 he took over as editor of the 'New English Dictionary on Historical Principles' (to become the Oxford English Dictionary). An undertaking of gargantuan proportions, he died before it was completed, although the work was finished under his organisation and inspiration. Much of the work was carried out in a glorified shed in his garden, referred to as the 'Scriptorium'. After the second volume was published he moved with his family to Oxford to work full time on the dictionary in a new Scriptorium in the garden of 78 Banbury Road, renamed Sunnyhill. Apart from the occasional family holiday he worked tirelessly on the dictionary. He was made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick in 1874. Apart from the occasional family holiday he worked tirelessly on the dictionary. He was made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick in 1908, aged 32. His 2nd wife Margaret Brown died in 1956, aged 76. They are buried in Etton Cemetery. Dr. James (1875/6–1920) doctor in Allendale, he died in Newcastle. His wife Elizabeth Jane Murray came from Whisgills, and died in 1963; she secondly married William B. Paterson of Rutherglen. They are buried at Etton. Janet (b.1820/1) grocer on Wilton Place, listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. She was wife of John, tailor at the Sandbed. In 1851 she was a widow at Wilton Place, with her children John, Elizabeth and William. In 1861 she was at Dovecote with John and William. Her maiden name may have been Wilson. Joan (14th C.) daughter of Sir Maurice, Earl of Strathearn, who was also Baron of Hawick. Through her father she inherited the Barony of Hawick, which then passed to her husband, Sir Thomas of Bothwell. There is some confusion here over multiple Joannas, but it seems likely that it was not her, but her daughter, who married Archibald, 3rd Earl of Douglas. It seems that she was promised to Douglas, but may have died in the plague that ravaged Britain in 1362 (and possibly also killed her husband a year or so earlier). Douglas seems to have instead married the daughter, also Joan. Joan or ‘Joanna’ (d.aft. 1401) probably daughter of Sir Thomas Murray of Bothwell. However, she is often confused with her mother, Joan, who was daughter of Sir Maurice, Earl of Strathearn (and in fact the evidence that there were 2 separate women is not clear). She appears to have been the heiress of the Bothwell titles (including the Barony of Hawick), and after the death of her mother she married Archibald Douglas, ‘the Grim’, 3rd Earl of Douglas; however, she would have been quite young when... this happened. The Hawick Barony then passed to the Douglases. John (15th C.) witness in 1431 to the transfer of the lands of Heap between the Langlands’ and the Scotts. All of the other men who wrote special testaments were local lairds, including Alexander Murray, who must have been a near relation. He was recorded as ‘Jhone off Murray’ and could have been John of Falahill. John of Falahill and Philiphaugh (d.1477) descendant of Roger de Moravia. He had a charter of the lands of Philiphaugh in 1461. This included the lands of Harehead, Hangingshaw and Lewishope. In 1462 he was appointed Herd-keeper to Queen Mary of Gueldres. He was also Keeper of Newark Castle in the 1460s. In 1463 he was on the panel of return for Archibald Douglas, 5th Earl of Angus, as heir to his father. He had the lease of Lewenshope and Hangingshaw from 1471 and in 1480 the lease was passed to his son Patrick. In 1475 he was keeper of the King’s property at Bowhill. His sons included: Patrick of Falahill, the eldest, who succeeded; William in Sundhope; and another, whose son John was Burgess in Edinburgh and progenitor of the Murrays of Blackbarony. John (d.c.1485) brother of Ninian. Along with his brother he leased the Crown lands of Kerhope on the Ettrick in 1485. In the following year the lease passed to his widow Elizabeth Sinclaire, and son Thomas. He was stated to have been killed when his property was devastated by traitors and rebels. John (d.beef. 1494) resident of the Kershope area. In 1494/5 Steven Turnbull, brother of the Laird of Whithope, had remission for his slaughter. Turnbull was also cited for other crimes, including bringing in ‘traitors of Leven’ for the pillaging and burning of Kershope and the theft of 80 cows from the tenants there. John of Falahill (d.1510) eldest son of Patrick of Philiphaugh and Falahill. He was nephew of Alexander who was Rector of Hawick and was probably the closest historical person to ‘the Outlaw Murray’ of the ballad. In 1488 he was joint tenant with his father in the Crown lands of Lewenshop and Hangingshaw, and later with his son John. In 1489/90 he had a charter for lands in Peeblesshire. He was Ranger of Yarrow Ward until 1489, when he had the lease of Tinnis for his fee. In 1491 he was ‘procurator’ for Alexander Lord Home in an instrument granting Home tenancy in the lands of Harden. He is probably the John who acted as surety for several people at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493. He is probably the John ‘de hangitschaw’ whose brother Thomas served as a surety at the Justice-aire in Selkirk in 1494/5 and who himself served as surety for John Scott in Tushielaw. Also in 1494/5 it is recorded that he had livestock stolen from Newark by Robert Scott of Deloraine. He is also recorded being ‘de hangitschaw’ in the accounts for the Selkirk Justice-aire of 1494/5, when he was pledge for John Wilson in Hartwoodmyre. He was owner of Westerhouses in Hassendean Parish, receiving the lands ‘under reversion’ (i.e. on non-payment of a loan) from Alexander, Lord Home. In 1497 he had a charter for Cranston-Riddell. In 1499 he had a ‘tack’ of lands with David Hoppringle of ‘the Tynnes’. Also in 1499 he was assigned the lands of ‘Levinishop’ and Hangingshaw in Yarrow, along with his son John (which may be an error). About the same time he gave his permission for Walter Scott to take the lease of Haining. In 1500 Walter Scott of Brauxholme was recorded as assignee of him and Ninian (probably a brother or other close relative), when goods of Philip Turnbull of Whithope were recovered as part of 19 score merks that he owed them; this was for the damage done to their lands of Kershope. He was Depute Sheriff of Selkirkshire in 1501. In 1501/2 he was witness to another bond of reversion for the lands of Harden, also involving Alexander, Lord Home. In 1502-09 he had the lease of the Crown lands of Hangingshaw, Leweneshope and Harehead. In 1502 his farms at Fastheugh and Hangingshaw were raided by Philip Turnbull in Whithope and David Turnbull in Carlinpool. Also in 1502 he was surety for a man from Fairnilee who had remission for murder. In 1502/3 at Galashiels he infefted Queen Margaret in the lands of the Forest. He served as surety at the Justice-aire in Selkirk in 1505. In 1506/7 he was one of the men to whom Walter Scott of Howpasley, tutor to the Laird of Bucleuch, had to give in his accounts. In 1507/8 he had a letter of obligation with Robert Scott of Whitchesters, involving a loan, with the tower in Hawick ‘between the bridges’ as security. He was appointed as High Sheriff of Selkirkshire, which the King had to humiliatingly give him according to the ballad. He was Sheriff of Selkirkshire in 1508 in a charter for lands in Selkirk and in 1509 in the document where Adam Hepburn inherited the lands of Alemoor. In 1508 he had a charter for Falahill and Whitlawsland, in 1509 a charter for the lands of Peel Hill and also in 1509 had a reversion with George Douglas, Master of Angus, for the lands of Selkirk. In 1510/1 he and his wife had a charter for the lands of Cranston-Riddell. He married Janet Forester and later Margaret, daughter of Patrick Hepburn. His children were: James, who succeeded; William, ancestor of the Romanno, Stanhope and Clooney branches; John, who was recorded in the Exchequer Rolls in 1507/8; Patrick, who had a charter for Broadmeadows in 1510; Elizabeth, who married Sir James Douglas, 5th Laird of Cavers; Isabel, who married Robert Scott of Howpsaley; and Janet, who married Sir Robert Stewart of Minto. Tradition attributes his death to Scott of Buccleuch or perhaps Scott of Haining at a little mount below Newark Castle. However, he was actually killed by Andrew Ker of Gaveston and Thomas, brother of Philip Scott of Headshaw, according to cases at Jedburgh Justise-aire in 1510. John (15th/16th C.) son of John of Falahill. In 1507/8 he leased the Crown lands of Hangingshaw, Lewenshope and Harehead. He was recorded as son and heir of John of Falahill in 1509 and still leasing Crown lands in 1513. He may have been the Sheriff in Selkirkshire recorded at the Justise-aire at Selkirk in 1510. At that court he was among men found guilty of burning some of the wood in Ettrick Forest. He is probably the John of Falahill who had a charter for the lands of Bold and Philiphaugh in 1512. John of Blackbarony (d.1513) Burgess of Edinburgh, he was grandson of John of Philiphaugh, his father’s name being unknown. He is John of ‘blac barony’ when he acted as surety at the Justise-aire held in Peebles in 1498. He was recorded in the Exchequer Rolls of the early years of the 16th century as Chamberlain of Ballincrief and ‘custumar’ of Haddington. In 1505/6 he was an assignee of the executors of William in Sundhope, his uncle. He is probably the John junior who was allowed the ‘fermes’ of Winterburgh in 1506 and Carterhaugh in 1507. In 1507 he had a charter of the Barony of Blackbarony or Hatton. He is probably the ‘Master John Murray of Blakbarony’ who in 1510/1 was granted the lands of Briery Yards, in the Barony of Hassendean, which had been forfeited by Cuthbert Cunningham, Earl of Glencairn. In 1511 he had a charter for lands in Edinburgh and Haddington and in 1512 and 1513 other charters for lands in Selkirkshire and elsewhere. In 1503/4 he married Isobel, daughter of Richard Happar. They had 2 daughters, and a son, Andrew of Blackbarony. He died at Flodden. John ‘Jock’ (16th C.) tenant of Gavin of Elliot of Falnash in 1569. Elliot acted as causer for his tenants at a meeting in Hawick, assuring that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. Sir John of Blackbarony (16th/17th C.) son of Andrew. He was knighted by James VI at Stirling upon announcing to the King the birth of his eldest son, Henry, Prince of Wales. In 1575/6 he was a complainant regarding ‘mails’ for ‘Glenpoit and Preischoip’ (this being Glenpyet in the Yarrow valley). In 1580 he was named in a transaction in Selkirk. In 1581/2 he acted as cautioner for Robert of Aikwood. In 1586 he is recorded as one of the ‘curators’ of the young Walter Scott of Buccleuch. In 1587 he served as a cautioner for Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch after he was released from prison in Edinburgh Castle. He served as cautioner for Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1590. He may be the John who witnessed a bond of ‘manrent’ in Hawick in 1595, between the Beatties and Sir Walter of Branxholme (Gideon Murray, his brother, was also a witness). In 1607 he was in dispute with the Burgh of Selkirk. In 1610 he was appointed keeper of the rolls for the Justices of the Peace in Peeblesshire. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir Alexander Hamilton. Their children were: Andrew, who died before his father; Sir Archibald, who succeeded; Sir John of Raveling; Col. Walter of Pilmore; Alexander; Patrick; William; Margaret, who married Sir Robert Halket of Pitfirrane; Agnes, who married Sir John Riddell of that Ilk; Elizabeth, who married Sir Robert Ker, 1st Earl of Ancrum; Grizel, who married Sir William Douglas of Casbogle; Christian, who married Sir William Veitch of Dawyck; Isabel, who married Patrick Scott of Thirlestane; and possibly another daughter who married William Scott of Mangerton. Sir John of Falahill and Philiphaugh (d.c.1640) son of Patrick of Falahill, he was the first of the family designated ‘of Philiphaugh’. He had a charter of 1584, as heir to his father and also held lands at Hangingshaw and Traquair. He was probably the ‘Johne Murray, sone to the Sheriff of Selkirk’ who was among Borderers cited for non-appearance in 1578/9. He was probably the ‘younger in Philophaucht’ recorded in Selkirk in 1581. He is probably the John in Philiphaugh who witnessed a transaction in Selkirk in 1582. He was served heir to his father in 1601 in the lands of Philiphaugh, as well as the office of Sheriff of Selkirkshire. He represented Selkirkshire (or ‘the Forest’) in the Parliament of 1612. In 1614, on behalf of his wife, he paid money to the Donalds of Broadmeadows. In 1618 he was listed as one of the curators of the young Andrew Scott of Aikwood. Also in 1618 he was appointed as a Commissioner for the Middle Shires. In 1620 he had a precept of sasine for Broadmeadows.
He was recorded in documents in the Walter Mason Collection in 1610 and c.1620. In 1622 and 1623 he was on the Commission for keeping peace on the Border. In 1623 a man was found guilty of stealing an ox from his servitor, John Murray, from the lands of ‘Low, otherwise called the Catclughe’. He had a charter of 1624 involving lands in the Barony of Buccleuch. In 1624 he and his heir James gave sasine of Broadmeadows to Andrew, son of William Scott in Fauldshop. He married Janet, daughter of Sir William Scott of Ardross (or perhaps Sir William of Harden) and secondly married Helen (or Isabel), daughter of Sir James Pringle of Galashiels. His children included: Sir James of Balincrief, his eldest son, who married Anne, daughter of Sir Thomas Craig of Riccarton and whose son succeeded to Philiphaugh; Gideon, aide-de-camp to Charles I, who died in service; Joan, a daughter who married James Kerr of Chatto; Anne, who married John Shaw; Grezel; John of Ashiestiel; William, who died fighting for the King; David, who also died the same way; Helen, who married Scott of Broadmeadows; Elizabeth, who married Rev. Robert Knox of Kelso, as his 2nd wife; and Isabel. He was succeeded by his grandson, Sir John. Sir John (d.1640) 1st Earl of Annandale, son of Sir Charles of Cockpool and Margaret Somerville. His siblings included: Sir James of Cockpool, who married Janet, daughter of Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig, but died without an heir; Sir Richard, whom he eventually succeeded; Jean, who married John Maxwell of Kirkhouse; and another sister, who married Robert Elliot of Redheugh. In 1616 and 1624 he sent a letter to Walter Scott, Lord of Buccleuch, expressing his support and essentially apologising for raids against Buccleuch and into England. He was a great favourite of Charles I and acquired a huge estate. Among his lands and rights were the 5-pound land of the Chapel lands of Caerlenrig, which his son James inherited in 1641. He was created Earl of Annandale in 1624/5 and acquired vast estates. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir John Shaw. He was succeeded as 2nd Earl by his son James, who died without issue and the title became extinct. Sir John of Ravelrig (17th C.) 3rd son of Sir John of Blackbarony. He was granted lands in Belses by William, Earl of Lothian in 1634. He was one of the overseers of the tutors of the children of Walter, Earl of Buccleuch, who died in 1633. John (17th C.) tenant in Woll when he signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. It is unclear how he was related to other Murrays. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Redford and their children included: Francis (b.1690); Adam (b.1692); Elizabeth (b.1694); Jean (b.1696); and Anna (b.1699). The witnesses in 1690 were Francis (perhaps his father or brother) and William Dunlop. He may be related to the earlier tenant in Woll. Sir John of Philiphaugh (d.1676) son of Sir James, he succeeded his grandfather Sir John. He was heritable Sheriff of Selkirkshire. In 1646 he was recorded as a judge for trying people in Selkirkshire and Roxburghshire. In 1643, 1646 and 1649 he was on the Committee of War for Selkirkshire and was Convenor in 1644. He joined with Graham’s force in 1646 and claimed for damages he sustained against Montrose in 1649. In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves on the Border. He is probably the ‘John morray of …’ who witnessed a baptism in Ashkirk in 1656 for Thomas Scott of Whitslade. He was M.P. for Selkirkshire from 1661. He married Anne, daughter of Sir Archibald Douglas of Cavers and secondly married Margaret, widow of John Trotter of Charterhall and daughter of Sir John Scott of Scotstarvet. His children were: Sir James, who succeeded; John of Bowhill; Col. William; Archibald, Thomas and Lewis, who died young; Anne, who married Alexander Pringle of Whytbank and later Robert Rutherford of Bowland; Janet; Rachel; Elizabeth; and Jean, who died young. In 1688 his wife was served heir to their daughter Jean. John (17th C.) married Marian Lillico in Bedrule in 1694. John (17th C.) resident at Wester Heap according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. John (17th C.) resident at Easter Highchesters according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. John of Bowhill (c.1667–1714) younger son of Sir John of Philiphaugh and brother of Sir James. He was a Senator in the College of Justice. He served as representative to Parliament for Selkirk 1689–1702 and for Selkirkshire 1703–07. In 1704 he was a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire and for Selkirkshire. He was a great supporter of the Union, and was briefly part of the first Parliament of Great Britain until he became Lord Bowhill in 1707. He owned the estate of Bowhill (temporarily out of the hands of the Scotts) and built the house there in 1708. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir John Scott of Ancrum and their children included John (farmer at Unthank). He was succeeded in the lands of Bowhill by his nephew Lieut.-Col. James. There was an elegy written on his death. John (1669/70–1749) gardener at Spittal Tower, who was a direct ancestor of ‘Dictionary’ Murray. He came from Hobkirk Parish, renting the garden haugh and enclosure at Spittal Tower in about 1712. His father may have been Andrew, but that is uncertain. He is recorded as gardener at ‘Tower’ in 1715. In 1701 he married Isobel Turnbull (from Bedrule), who died in 1746, aged 67. They had 7 children (several baptised in Cavers Parish): John (1709–72), the eldest son, with several later generations having the same name; Margaret, eldest daughter, married James Veitch, and her grand-daughter married Castleton Schoolmaster William Scott; Jean, who died in infancy; Agnes (b.1713); Andrew (b.1715); James (b.1720), who also died in infancy; and Mary (b.1724). They are buried in Bedrule churchyard. John (1677–1728) born at Unthank, son of John (from the Philiphaugh family) and Margaret Scott of Ancrum. He leased the farms of Unthank and Fiddleton from the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1722. His son James resigned the lands to Robert Elliot of Fenwick and Walter Scott (farmer at Commonside) in 1733. He married his cousin Ann, daughter of Archibald Bennet of Chesters (near Ancrum) in 1712 and their children were: James (b.1713); Archibald (b.1715); Barbara (b.1717); Anna (or Anna, b.1719); John (b.1721, who became a doctor in Norwich); Andrew (b.1723); William (b.1724); Elizabeth (b.1726); and Andrew (b.1728). John (17th/18th C.) tailor in Howcleuch. In 1712 in Hawick Parish, he married Marion Paterson, who was ‘servitrix to Walter Grieve’ in Branxholme Park. Their son William was baptised in Hawick in 1719. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hoscote in 1712 when his daughter Bessie was baptised in Robertson Parish and in 1719 when his son John was baptised. He may also be the John resident at Outerside in 1715 when his son James was baptised and in 1717 when his son William was baptised. Other John (17th/18th C.) resident of Chisholme Mill in 1720 when his son Robert was baptised in Robertson Parish. Helen (b.1723) may also be his child. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Whithope in 1718 when his daughter Mary was baptised and in 1721 when his twins Walter and Helen were baptised in Robertson. John of Philiphaugh (d.1753) son of Sir James. He was heritable Sheriff of Selkirk. He was M.P. for Linlithgow Burghs and for Selkirkshire from 1734 until his death. In 1737 he was involved in a bon with a tenant in Philiphaugh. In 1711 he married Eleanor, daughter of Lord Basil Hamilton, and she died in 1783. Their children were: Basil, who died young; John, who was also M.P. for the Linlithgow Burghs; Charles, who died unmarried; James, who succeeded his brother; Janet, who married Mr. Dennis of Jamaica; Eleanor, who married Sir James Nasmyth of Posso; Mary, who married John Macqueen of Jamaica and possibly also Sir Alexander Don, 4th Baronet of Newton; and Margaret, who married Capt. Baugh. John (1709–72) eldest son of John and brother of Andrew. He was the grandfather of the Hawick Rector James Murray, and great-grandfather of Gen. Sir John Murray. He became tenant farmer at Spittal-on-Rule in 1730. He shared the tenancy with the Veitches and the Bunyans, his part including the orchard (hence he was referred to as ‘Gardener in Toure’). He was recorded as gardener at Spittal or at Tower when his children were baptised in Cavers Parish. He married Jean Henderson in 1734 at Newton in Bedrule, and she died in 1786, aged 72. Their children (baptised in Cavers Parish) were: John (b.1735), who was also tenant at Spittal and married Mary Cleuch; James (b.1741), who became Presbyterian minister at Harbottle; Isabel (b.1744), married Mr. Thomson, farmer at Netherraw; Archibald; Andrew (b.1747), whose grandson was editor of the Kelso Mail; Jean (or Jenny, b.1755), lived at Harbottle, then at Hawick; Betty, married James Veitch; Margaret (b.1757); and William (b.1759), who had sons Veitch and John. The baptism of Andrew appears to have been recorded twice in 1747. He is buried in Bedrule kirkyard along with most of his family. John (18th C.) resident of Ewesdale. He married Betty Park and their children included: James (b.1753), born in Langholm; and Margaret (b.1759), baptised in Ewes, who probably married Adam Jardine. John of Philiphaugh (d.1800) 2nd son of John of Philiphaugh. He owned the lands of Todshaw in 1757 when its head lands were divided from those of Mabonlaw. He was also involved in a dispute with Henry, Duke of Buccleuch over teinds for Todshaw in the period 1745–70. He was M.P. for Linlithgow Burghs 1754–61. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1761. He was listed on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. He paid the land tax for his lands of Philiphaugh in 1785. He was also listed among the voters of Selkirkshire in 1788. He sold a large part of the estate of Philiphaugh to John Johnstone of Alva (brother of William Johnstone...
Murray

John (1735–1809) eldest son of John, farmer and gardener at Spittal-on-Rule. On his gravestone he is referred to as ‘Gardiner at Spittal’. He farmed at Spittal in partnership with his mother until her death in 1786 and may have ceased farming there altogether when the holdings were merged in 1807. In 1782 he married Mary Cleuch, who died in Denholm in 1816, aged 65. Their children were: John, whose family emigrated to Australia; Mary (b.1785), who married brewer Alexander Russell and secondly hosier Thomas Scott; Jane (or ‘Jean’, b.1787), the youngest daughter; and James (b.1789), schoolmaster in Hawick. He died in Denholm in 1816, aged 65. Their children were: John, whose family emigrated to Australia; and Helen Stavert (b.1852), who died in infancy. The family are buried at Ettleton.

John (18th C.) listed as house servant and groom at Stiches in 1785 and 1786, when he was working for Gilbert Chisholme. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was fined in 1785 for his ‘irregular marriage’. Perhaps he is the John whose daughter Betty was baptised in 1787. John of Philiphaugh (d.1830) son of John. He was listed in 1805 and 1819 as a Commissioner for Selkirkshire. He died unmarried and was succeeded by his brother James. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Huntlyhill (in Bedrule Parish), recorded as owner of 3 horses on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Castleton, recorded along with George on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John (18th/19th C.) drover from ‘Benpeith’ (probably Bentpath) whose death is recorded in Hawick in 1824. John (18th/19th C.) linen and woollen draper in Newcastleton, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He is probably the Castleton merchant of the same name who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. John (1777/8–1851) born in Castleton Parish, probably son of Robert and Marion Crozier. He was a weaver of Newcastleton, as well as being a farmer and blacksmith, probably on North Hermitage Street. He married Anne Jardine (1802/3–57), who came from Gretna and was significantly younger than him. Their children included: Robert, who was a carter, and emigrated to Ontario; Walter; Marion; John, a blacksmith, who also emigrated to Ontario; James (1834/5–1908); Jennie; and Matthew. He and his wife are buried at Ettleton cemetery. John (1780–1845) son of John and Mary Cleuch. He farmed at Denholm Town-foot and later at Camptown, where he died. He married Isabella Veitch. Their children were: John; Thomas; Robert; George; William; Agnes; Veitch; James; Walter; and Hugh. The children all emigrated to Australia, where they settled on the Murray River. He is buried in Bedrule kirkyard.

John (1806–90) born in Wilton Parish, son of James and Mary Scott. He trained as a clothier and tailor. He was recorded on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. On the 1841 census he was listed at about No. 1 Sandbed, with wife Janet and children John, Elizabeth and a new-born (William). In Hawick he married Janet (b.1818), daughter of William Williamson and Elspeth Turnbull. Family history states that in about 1851 he emigrated to Canada with his wife and sons James, John Scott and Robert. His wife was said to have died on the voyage, and he settled down as a farmer, purchasing land in Euphrasia Township, Ontario, in 1855. By 1851 his widow was a grocer on Wilton Place. In 1861 she was at Dovemount (probably about No. 2 Princes Street) and the census says ‘surname Willison deleted’. It is possible there were 2 different Johns being confounded here, but more likely is that some of the information is incorrect, and that his wife returned to Hawick after they emigrated. John (b.1807/8) born in Castleton Parish, son of Thomas and Janet Ingles. He became farmer at Wolfelee. In 1851 he was farmer of 145 arable acres and 3000 acres of pasture, employing 5 people. He married Helen (or Ellen), daughter of Thomas Stavert; she died in 1852, aged 59. Their children included: Thomas (1845–61); John (d.1855); Archibald Stavert (b.1849), who emigrated to Australia; and Helen Stavert (b.1852), who died in infancy. The family are buried at Ettleton.

John (1814/5–92) son of William (teacher in the Canonbie area) and Helen Bell. He himself became a teacher in Langholm. He came to Hawick in the late 1840s to run the school at the head of Baker Street, which had been started by his brother Andrew. The school grew, and moved to the old East Bank Kirk. He is listed as teacher at a school in the East End in 1852. He was assisted by his younger brother William, who eventually ran the school that would become St. Mary’s and ultimately Trinity. He himself left to become schoolmaster at Longnewton and eventually at Caverton Mill, near Kelso. He married Jane Richardson, who died in 1915, aged 84. Their children included Graham, who was a to-bacconist at 17 High Street, and Nellie, a milliner who retired to Denholm. John (1815/6–88) born in Hobkirk Parish, he was 3rd son of Elliot. He worked as a servant at Wauchope for 19 years, then worked as a hedger at Minto and spent his last 15 years of employment as farm steward at Dimpleknowe. In 1849 he was among the original congregation of Wolfelee Free Kirk. In 1861 he was Land Steward, living at Wauchope Cottages. He married Helen, daughter of Robert Waugh, Chesters blacksmith in 1839. They had 4 sons and 2 daughters, including: Robert, carpenter at Blacklee who married Margaret Jackson; John; William, who worked as a successful wool broker in Melbourne, then went to Japan; Violet; and a daughter, possibly Elizabeth, who married his brother, James. His wife was Margaret Dodd (daughter of slater and plumber John. He married Helen, daughter of Robert Waugh, Chesters blacksmith in 1839. They had 4 sons and 2 daughters, including: Robert, carpenter at Blacklee who married Margaret Jackson; John; William, who worked as a successful wool broker in Melbourne, then went to Japan; Violet; and a daughter, possibly Elizabeth, who married Hawick grocer Mr. Brydon. He died at St. Boswells. John (1815/6–83) father of J.E.D., he was a Slater and plumber in Hawick. He had a brother, James. His wife was Margaret Dodd (daughter of the chief drummer with the Drums and Fifes), who died in 1902, aged 78. In 1841 he was living with Margaret on O’Connell Street. The family later lived at 2 Union Street. Their other children were: Isabella A., who married teacher James Brand; Robert, who was a commercial traveller in London; Alison, who married Rev. John Gordon; and Frank James; along with Isabella, Robert, Alison, Margaret and Alison Scott, who all died young. He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. John of Philiphaugh (1817–82) eldest son of James. He was Deputy Lieutenant and J.P. in Selkirkshire. In 1840 he married Rose Mary, heiress of William Andrew Nesbitt. Their children were: John Forbes Pringle Nesbitt, who succeeded; James (b.1845), who married Mary Russell; and Jesse Rose Mary, who married Sir William Lewis Salisbury Trelawny. Gen. Sir John Irvine, K.C.B., V.C. (1826–1902) son of James, the Hawick schoolmaster, and Margaret Irvine from Eskdale. He was 3rd cousin of Sir James A.H. He was born in Hawick and must have grown up in the town. He joined the East India Company at the age of 16 and was sent out to Calcutta in 1842. He was appointed to the 71st Native Infantry later in 1842, and rose through the ranks of the Bengal army, eventually becoming commander of the Indian army. He received a medal during the Punjab Campaign of 1848/9, was mentioned in dispatches and wounded at the Battle of Alighur in 1857, commanded a brigade of horsemen at Kutchla Ghaut in 1858 and then on the Nepal frontier, receiving another medal. In 1865/6 he was on the Bhootan Expedition, for which he received another medal. He became Lieut.-Col. in 1866, Col. in 1868, Maj.-Gen. in 1882, Lieut.-Gen. in 1887 and Gen. in 1891. He received the K.C.B. on the Queen’s Golden Jubilee in 1897. He retired to Kensington. In 1854 he married Wilhelmina Stanley (d.1912), daughter of Col. Duncan Archibald Malcolm; he was son of Thomas Malcolm, who was brother of the 4 knights of Burnfoot. They had 6 children: Lieut. Archibald Ross, who served in Afghanistan, but died of cholera at the age of 24; Duncan, who died in childhood; Minnie, who married Maj. Wright; Caroline, who married T.W. Rawlings; Mary Stewart, who worked with the Salvation Army, being sent out to South Africa in the Boer War and France and Belgium in WWII, being awarded an O.B.E.; and Agnes Meade, who married Capt. Woolcombe of the K.O.S.B. John (b.1829/30) farmer at Upper Burnmouth in Castleton Parish. In 1861 he was farming 400 acres and employing 3 men. He lived with his sister Agnes. He could be the John who was on the Town Committee of Management in Newcastleton in the 1860s. He subscribed to David Anderson’s book of verse in 1868. John Scott (1835–1904) son of John and Janet Williamson. He was born in Hawick, and in about 1851 he sailed to Canada with his father and maternal grandfather, William Williamson. They settled in Euphrasia Township, Grey County, Ontario, where he farmed. He married Jane Quinton and they had 8 children. John, J.P. (1835/6–1911) from the Annan area, he became a draper in Hawick (at 31 High Street) and later actuary for Hawick Savings Bank. He also served as a Town Councillor and was Burgh Treasurer in the 1880s. He was Treasurer of the Working Men’s Building & Investment Society and possibly the same John Murray was an early committee member of Hawick R.F.C. His sister Janet married Hawick teacher William Murray (probably her second cousin). He married Elspeth Ferguson, who died in 1929, aged 86. Their children included John (who died in Vancouver), Peter Wilson (of the bullion department in a London bank) and Elizabeth (who married Abraham P. Hindle). John Edward Dodd ‘Jed’ (1858–1936) son of slater and plumber John. He was writer of the words for many Hawick songs, particularly ‘The Mosstroopers’ Song’, ‘Clinty’s Song’, ‘The Wail of Flodden’, ‘Meda’s Song’ and the ‘Invocation’. He also wrote poems such as ‘Hornshole’ (published when he was 14), ‘Oor Gutterblude’, ‘The Reeky Howe’ (also known as ‘Naething New’, composed for the 1889 Dinner) and ‘Lest We Forget’. In addition there were several comedic plays, and musical plays written with Adam Grant, including ‘Turning Back the Clock’, ‘The Caddie’s Ghost’ (1894), ‘The Tramp’ (1896), ‘The Witch o’ the Wisp Hill’ (1901), ‘Kirsty o’ Cocklaw Castle’ (1904) and ‘The Gutterbludes’ (1905); only for the last 2 do scripts survive. Additionally he wrote many of the words for the ‘Quater-Centenary Pageant’, acting as Pageant Master. Born at 57 High Street, he apprenticed with John Wield, druggist, but had his health damaged by chemicals. He then left Hawick to pursue work in the chemist’s, grocery and insurance trades, returning to Hawick in 1886 when he started his photographic business. His studio was first where the Post Office was later built (at the corner of Bridge Street and Croft Road), moving to 43 Bridge Street in 1902 (designed by J.P. Alison, who lived next door). This became one of Hawick’s foremost photography businesses, closing in 1972. An ardent supporter of the Common Riding, his return to Hawick coincided with the rejuvenation of the ceremonial aspects, and he quickly became involved. J.E.D. was Cornet in 1890 (when he recited a specially-composed poem) and Acting Father no less than 4 times (the last time at the age of 67). He helped inaugurate the annual Cornet’s dinner in 1895, ordered the Curds and Cream for almost half a century and acted as marshal for many years. He was a founder member of the Callants’ Club in 1903. During WWI he personally rode the marches each Common Riding day, against the wishes of the Council and the Callants’ Club. In 1920 he suggested the founding of the Mosstroopers’ Club, and his horse was the model for the badge. In addition he was involved with the local Amateur Operatic Society (doing their stage make-up until the year of his death) and succeeded James Thomson as Bard of Masonic Lodge 424. He became an honorary life member of the golf club after the success of ‘the Caddie’s Ghost’ at their 1894 fund-raiser. He was also a great walker and lover of the outdoors, publishing a book entitled ‘Over the Rolling Stones by One of Them’. He additionally wrote an introductory article for James Edgar’s ‘Hawick Songs and Recitations’ (1892). He was also known as painter, particularly of animals. He married Margaret ‘Daisy’ Young (daughter of a Sandbed baker), who had been his Lass, and they had one child, Melgund. The Museum mounted an exhibition devoted to his life in the late 1990s. A portrait of his favourite horse ‘Oakwood Daisy’ is in the Museum, along with an inkwell made from the foot of another, called ‘Ben’. There is also a painting of his, ‘Mrs. Reid, with Betsy the Cow, Pilmuir’. He is buried in the Welloagate Cemetery in an unmarked grave, although a plaque was unveiled there in 1990. The J.E.D. Murray Memorial Challenge Trophy was first presented at the 1938 Common Riding race meeting. A plaque was unveiled at 57 High Street in 2006 and the Mosstroopers’ Club held a celebration in 2008 to mark the 150th anniversary of his birth. His son Malcolm was among the visitors who visited Gallipoli in 2015. John (1898–1992) born in Selkirk. In 1915 he walked to Galashiels to volunteer for the K.O.S.B., even although he was only 16. She is buried in Borthwick Waas Cemetery. Margaret (b.1820/1) draper, grocer and post-mistress in Newcastleton in the 1850s and 60s. She lived on South Hermitage Street with her twin sister Jane (who was a hat-maker), and another sister Agnes (also a milliner). Her business was listed as ‘Margaret Murray & Co.’ in Slater’s 1852 directory. She was probably related to the earlier draper, John. Mary (18th/19th C.) resident at Newcastleton, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls.

Matthew (d.1840) son of John and Ann Jardine, he was born in Castleton. He worked as a farm servant, general labourer and stone quarrier. In 1866 he married Jane (b.1837) daughter of William Kyle and Robina Cavers. Their children were: John (b.1867); William (b.1868); Anna Jane (b.1870); and Thomas (b.1872). Sir Maurice ‘de Moravia’ (1276–1346) Earl of Strathearn. Born in Drumsargard, Cambuslang, Lanarkshire, he was probably eldest son of Sir John of Drumsargard and an unknown mother. His step-mother (or perhaps mother) was Mary, daughter of Malise, 7th Earl of Strathearn. In 1320 he witnessed the charter granting Sir James Douglas the Lorschip of Jedburgh. He may have fought at Halidon Hill in 1333, as well as Sprouston and Strathaven in Lanarkshire. This was probably to try to curb the power of Robert the Steward in Clydesdale and William Douglas of Liddesdale (both out of favour with the Crown). He was granted the Earldom of Strathearn in 1343; this had been forfeited by his relative (perhaps uncle) Malise of Strathearn. In 1344 he was one of the cautioners for the followers of Alexander Ramsay, who had been murdered by William Douglas. He witnessed many royal charters in the early 1340s. He was created a Justiciar, and would undoubtedly have become more powerful still had he not been killed at the Battle of Neville’s Cross. Robert the Steward would later claim the Earldom of Strathearn for himself. In 1339 he married Joan (or Joanna) of Menteith, daughter of Wal-damage done to their lands. He is probably the Ninian who, along with John (as well as James Ker) had their farms of Fastheuch and Hangingshaw raided sometime before 1502. Also in 1502, Robert Jackson in Wolfcleuchhead had remission for bringing in ‘traitors of Leven’ to steal from his farm and peel at Kershope. Probably the same Ninian was on the 1509 panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting the lands of Alemoor. Thomas is listed after him, and possibly a relative. Norman N. (d.2017) plumber who was Cornet in 1959. Sir Oswyn (1873–1936) born at Mill Hill, London, he was a son of Sir James A.H. He went into the Civil Service and became Secretary to the Admiralty 1917–36. His wife Lady Mildred

Patrick wrote a biography of him. Patrick of Falahill (d.c.1492) son of John. He acquired land near Philiphaugh in about 1477. He had a sasine for the lands of ‘Pringillisland’ and ‘Litsterland’ in Selkirkshire in 1477. From 1477 he was granted the lease of Lewenshope and Hangingshaw, which had been in the hands of his father. In 1479 he gave his seal to an obligation involving the Kers of Cessford. In 1484 and again in 1488 he and his son John had the lease of Lewenshope and Hangingshaw. Around 1485–90 he was also tenant of Bowhill along with his brother Peter. His children included: John, ‘the Outlaw Murray’; Thomas, mentioned as brother of John in 1494/5; and Margaret. Patrick of Falahill (d.1580) son of James of Falahill and grandson of ‘the Outlaw Murray’. He held the office of hereditary Sheriff of Selkirkshire. He also held the lands of Philiphaugh, according to a charter of 1528. In 1530 he was served heir to his father James in the customs and duties of Selkirk, as well as the Sheriffsip. However, there was a dispute in that year, with John Scott, Vicar of Hawick, producing royal letters breaking the privilege office of Sheriff that he held; Alexander Tait of Pirn was procurator for a counter-claim that the letters did not discharge him from being Sheriff. In 1531 he owed teind sheaves for his lands of Hangingshaw. In 1533/4 in Selkirk he had a bond between William Stewart of Traquair. In 1534 he required William Douglas of Bonkedward to appear at his court. In 1535 he declared that his forebears and tenants had always kept their herds on Selkirk Common. In 1536 the Bailies of Selkirk complained that he had come to the common ‘with a multitude of men in violent oppression with swords, staffs and cudgels’ and taken away cattle belonging to one of the Bailies; he declared that he had only come to the common with his servants to peaceably pasture his own cattle. In 1536/7 he complained about others encroaching on his ‘friend’ Thomas, who had farmed at Easter Bowhill for 40 years. He was ‘of Hangitschaw’ in 1541 when recorded as owner of the lands of Lewenshope and Hangingshaw in Yarrow, as well as ‘Hairheid’ in Ettrick. In about 1544 there was a ‘summons of reduction’ against him by the Provost and Bailies of Selkirk (probably regarding Selkirk Common). In 1547/8 he was listed among the supporters of Sir Walter Scott of Brauxholme in a bond along with the Kers. In 1564/5 he was one of the witnesses to the bond between the Kers and the Scotts. In 1569 he was among the lairds who signed a bond to keep peace on the Border. In 1576 there was an agreement with the Burgh of Selkirk restoring him to his lands. He married Margaret, daughter of John, Lord Fleming, secondly married a daughter of Lord Borthwick and thirdly married Elizabeth Ormiston, who was a widow. His eldest son was James, who married Margaret, daughter of William Stewart of Traquair, and whose son Patrick succeeded. His son Malcolm is recorded in 1573 and 2 sons Malcolm and James in 1590. He also had a daughter, Catherine, who married James Somerville of Cambusnethan. Conflicting with the usual genealogy, in 1579 his son and heir Patrick is recorded in a transaction in Selkirk. Patrick of Falahill (d.1601) grandson of Patrick of Falahill. He is probably the Patrick ‘of Fawlayhill’ who in 1580 witnessed was named in a transaction in Selkirk and witnessed several others. In 1581 he had an arrangement with Robert Scott of Haining over the ‘feu maill’ of Haining. He may be the Patrick ‘ooy and heir’ to the deceased Patrick of Falahill who in 1581/2 granted a sasine to Adam Scott of Bonnington. In about 1588 he was appointed as one of the Parliamentary Commissioners for Selkirk and Peebles. In 1590 there was some dispute between him and the Bailies and Burgesses of Selkirk, with a band signed that they would not harm him or his dependants. Additionally he served as caution for Robert Scott of Aikwood not to harm William Douglas, Earl of Angus or his dependants; his ‘father-brothers’ Malcolm and James were witnesses. He is listed on the 1590 ‘Roll of the Clans’. In 1599 there was a complaint that he was not performing his duties as Sheriff of Selkirkshire, specifically failing to apprehend a number of men. He married Agnes, daughter of Sir Andrew Murray of Blackbarony, and secondly married Marian, daughter of Sir Lewis Bellendon. His children were: Sir John, who succeeded; Patrick, who held lands in
