the Slitrig (thu-slit-reeg, -rig, -reek, -rik) n. Slitrig Water, river that rises near Windburgh and joins the Teviot at Hawick, flowing for approximately 11 miles (17.5 km). It formerly divided the town into its east and west halves, and for centuries there was only one bridge across it, the ‘Auld Brig’. It is prone to rise rapidly, and has caused some of the most infamous town floods. The river rises in several headwaters, Fosk Burn and Leap Burn meeting, becoming Lang Burn and being joined by Langside Burn where the Slitrig proper starts. After that it is joined by: Hope Sike; Penchrise Burn; Gibby’s Sike; Cogsmill Burn; Barnes Burn; Pagton Burn; Horsley Burn; Acreknowe Burn; Flex Burn and the Snaile Burn – ‘...Where Slitrig dances doon the glen’ [JT], ‘...And the Slitrig aver filling wi’ rain’ [FH]. Where the Slitrig and Teviot meet, With nature’s charms replete, There are beauties rare Beyond compare Where the Slitrig and Teviot meet’ [TK] (the origin is uncertain, ‘rith’ being Old English for ‘stream’, with the first element perhaps related to ‘slite’, a narrow opening, or ‘slitan’ to split, or even possibly ‘slitter’; it is first mentioned as ‘Slitrith’ in Reginald of Durham’s book on St. Cuthbert, where it is suggested that the name comes from the river abounding with fish, and although the connection with any words relating to an abundance of fish seems obscure, it is possible it is ‘slithe’, meaning animals for slaughter; there are a variety of earlier spellings, e.g. ‘Slitttryk’ in 1433, ‘slittrik’ in 1493 and 1502, ‘Slitryk’ in 1532 and ‘Slitrik’ in 1547/8; it is still ‘Slidderick’ in 1795, ‘Slitridge’ in 1821 and ‘Slitrige’ in 1839; it is ‘Slittrige R.’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Slittrik’ on Gordon’s c. 1650 map).

Slitrig Bank (slit-reeg-bawnk) n. house occupied by shoemaker Peter Wilson in the late 18th century, now being 1 Slitrig Bank. It was probably built a little before 1800. It was the headquarters for the Napoleonic prisoners-of-war, and partitions in the cellar may related to this use. The house is shown in a painting of about 1813; this painting exists in a photograph, but the original is lost. The current house is 2-storeys with an attic, in a rectangular plan, built of whinstone rubble and with sandstone dressings. It is a grade C listed building.

Slitrig Bank (slit-reeg-bawnk) n. short street between St. Mary’s and the Slitrig. It was named after the house of the same name, which is now 1 Slitrig Bank. The rest of the street was developed in the period 1850–55. A house there (probably the same No. 1) was the headquarters for the French prisoners of war in the period 1812–14, later the residence of George Scott the builder.

Slitrig Brig (slit-reeg-brig) n. Slitrig Bridge, the name originally given to the main bridge over the Slitrig, built in 1776–77, and later named Drumlanrig Bridge. The masons may have been John Haldane of Gala and James Wood of Hawick, both of whom were made Honorary Burgesses in 1776. The name is recorded as an address in Pigot’s 1837 directory, presumably referring to houses around Silver Street or the Tower Knowe. The same name is also sometimes used for the bridge over the Slitrig at the bottom of the Kirk Wynd, more properly called the Slitrig Crescent Bridge. It may be that the ‘Auld Brig’ was also once known by this name – ‘On Slitrig Brig on that summer morn . . .’ [DN].

Slitrig Cauld (slit-reeg-kawld) n. name sometimes used for the weir near Lynnwood House, which supplied the water for the main Slitrig mill lade, ‘the Back Damm’ (not to be confused with Lynnwood Cauld, which was further upriver).

Slitrig Chaipel see St. Cuthbert’s Chaipel

Slitrig Cottage (slit-reeg-ko’ee) n. name sometimes used for No. 1 The Village. The house probably dates from the late 18th century and is 2 storeys plus attic. It is shown on Wood’s 1824 plan of Hawick in a drawing by M. Thirat in 1813, showing no windows to the right of the principal elevation. It is a grade C listed building. Note that the name was also used in the 1871 census for the house later called ‘Slitrig Villa’, where Backdamgate meets Slitrig Crescent.

Slitrig Cottages (slit-reeg-ko’ee-jeez) n. former name for the block of houses on the east side of Liddesdale Road south of Stonefield, also called Stonefield Cottages. These houses had the mill lade running in front of them, with a footbridge to reach the houses.

Slitrig Crescent (sli'-reeg-kre-sin') n. crescent shaped, one-sided street along the south bank of the Slitrig, still occasionally known by its former name ‘the Crescent’. It was developed around 1799–1805 and was one of the first ‘suburbs’ of the town, the land having previously been known as Duntersdales. The original buildings were a row of 2-storey terraces, only a few of which retain their original details. In 1831 the houses here were the first in Hawick to have gas installed. The street was once very dirty on the river side, until retaining walls were built at the end of the 19th century, and the land tidied up as a small park. The street also contains St. Cuthbert’s Church, and for a long time had the Whisky House Mill, later premises of James Melrose & Sons engineers. Nos. 3, 4, 5, 17, 18 and 19 are grade C listed – ‘…The other dam, up Slitrig Crescent Where eed the ducks wi breid’ [AY].

Slitrig Crescent Brig (sli'-reeg-kre-sin'-brig) n. stone bridge over the Slitrig, connecting the Kirk Wynd with Slitrig Crescent. The present structure was built in 1864, replacing a footbridge (shown on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map), which in turn replaced an earlier iron footbridge destroyed in the 1846 flood. It is said to have been built in only 10 days. There was no bridge there in the early 19th century, but the ‘wire bridge’ was nearby, and there was also an adjacent ford. The footbridge is recorded in the 1846 Town Treasurer’s accounts as ‘Wooden Bridge at Kirk Wynd Foot’. The present structure is a sandstone bridge of a single arch, containing the Ordnance Survey 360 foot benchmark. It seems to have no generally agreed name, being referred to in many other ways, including ‘the Kirkwynd Brig’. It is a grade C listed building.

Slitrig Dam (sli'-reeg-dawm) n. the main mill lade fed by the Slitrig, and the oldest one in Hawick, also known as the Back Dam. It probably pre-dated the 1537 Charter, although presumably was lengthened over the years. Originally it was relatively short, but in the mid-19th century it was extended to join what was called Lynnwood Dam or Nixon’s Dam. It was fed by a cauld near Lynnwood House and ran along the east side of Liddesdale Road and Slitrig Crescent, providing water power for Stonefield Mills, Whiskyhouse Mill, and Hawick Corn Mill, as well as water for Slitrig Dyeworks. During dry spells it was possible to feed the dam by allowing water from Wulliestruther Loch to flow into the Slitrig. Several footbridges across the lade gave access to businesses and houses from the main road (the 1857 Ordnance Survey map shows at least half a dozen). Some of the first baptisms of the Brethren were performed in its waters. Much of the lade was covered over with concrete slabs in the mid-1960s. An explosion in the tunnel under Lynnwood Road (near the entrance to Lynnwood House) in the mid-1960s, caused by a build-up of natural methane, led to an understanding that unused tunnels needed to be filled. The lade was almost entirely filled in in the early 1970s when new housing was constructed in the area. The course of the dam is shown clearly on Wood’s 1824 map.

Slitrig (sli'-rij) n. another alternative spelling for ‘Slitrig’.

Slitrig Gairdens (sli'-reeg-gär-dinz) n. gardens along the west side of Slitrig Crescent, between the old Exchange Buildings and the bridge.

Slitrig Hall (sli'-reeg-hal, -haw) n. meeting hall on Old Manse Lane, formerly the fire station, built in 1857. The address is 2, 4 and 6 Old Manse Lane. It was used as the fire station into the early 20th century, but then converted to be a meeting hall, which was used by the Brethren Fellowship. The building is 2-stories, with a roundel window above the (now blocked) arched engine entrance.

Slitrighied (sli'-reeg-heed) n. name sometimes applied to the area at the head of the Slitrig Water. In the last few years of the 18th century William Elliot of Harwood leased a limestone quarry there to William Turnbull of Burnfoot and John Ridley of Parkend.

Slitrig Hoose (sli'-reeg-hoos) n. name sometimes used for 8–9 Slitrig Crescent, home of John Laing of Hawick, Ltd.

Slitrig Ludge (sli'-reeg-luj) n. Hawick branch of the Royal Antediluvian Order of Buffaloes, Slitrig Lodge 9858. Sometimes known as ‘the Buffs’, this was one of two local branches of a fraternal and benevolent organisation founded in the 19th century. It met until 2015 in the Trinity Bar.

Slitrig Place (sli'-reeg-plis) n. former street behind Slitrig Bank House, at an angle between Slitrig Bank and the Kirk Wynd, named in 1878 after the River Slitrig. It was demolished around 1973/4 when a road through to Slitrig Bank was constructed in its place.

Smail (smäl) n. Adam (16th/17th C.) granted a half husbandland of land in Lilliesleaf in 1595/6. He was described as ‘son of Thomas there’. Adam (18th/19th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He is probably the Adam, son of shoemaker John and Helen Aitkin, born in 1758. His name is recorded as ‘Smeal’ in about 1810 when his wife Jean Phillips died. Their son John was baptised in 1786, with witnesses Walter Aitkin and William Philip. Adam ‘Yeddie’ (b.c.1780) joiner on Bourtree Place, his premises located behind No. 8. This is marked on Wood’s 1824 map. Probably the same man was listed as a wright on the High Street on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory and still listed on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was recorded being at ‘Eastend’ on the 1841 census, with Adam Scott as his apprentice. At one point he owned the entire property from 6 to 16 Bourtree Place and all the way back to the railway line. He married Elizabeth (or ‘Eliza’) Redford. Their children included: Margaret, who married weaver Charles Scott; and Alison (b.1806), baptised in the East Bank Kirk, who married roper William Munro. He could be the Adam born in Jedburgh in 1779. Alexander (16th/17th C.) son of William. He was granted a half husbandland and a cottage-land in Lilliesleaf in 1595/6. His father was also granted land at the same time. They were presumably residents of the village of Lilliesleaf at that time. Perhaps the same Alexander ‘in Lylisle’ witnessed a transaction for William Middlemas of Lilliesleaf in 1580. Alexander (17th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. He married Margaret White and in 1724 their daughter Jean married Walter Aitchison. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, son of James. He is probably the Andrew who in 1738 witnessed a baptism for Walter Riddell, who was living at Alton. He married Margaret Hume in Minto in 1736 and their children included: James (b.1737); Agnes (b.1738); Walter (b.1739); and Andrew (b.1741).

Andrew (18th C.) married Katherine ‘Frier’ in Minto Parish in 1740. William (b.1742), John (b.1744), Isobel (b.1746) and George (b.1749) were probably also his children. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His children included John (b.1752), Betty (b.1753), Andrew (b.1754), George (b.1756), Robert (b.1757), Margaret (b.1759) and Agnes (b.1762). Andrew (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Anne Oliver and their children included: Margaret (b.1767); Thomas (b.1770); and an unnamed child (b.1773). Andrew (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Janet Purves and their children included Andrew (b.1778), Margaret (b.1781) and John (b.1784). Anne (b.1786), Mary (b.1789), Thomas (b.1790) and Thomas (again, b.1792), with no mother’s name given, were probably also his children. He was recorded being in Ancrum Parish in 1789. George (17th C.) resident of Minto Kames who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. George (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He was a cottar in Headshaw Mill. He married Margaret Scott and their daughter Elizabeth (b.1717) was baptised in Headshaw Mill (‘being weak’). George (b.c.1780) toll-keeper at Spittal Toll. His wife was Janet. George (b.1810/1) from Ancrum, he was a blacksmith in Denholm. He is recorded on the 1841 census and by 1861 was at around Leyden Road. His wife was Agnes, and their children included John, Margaret and George. He secondly married Janet, and had step-daughter Janet Brown, as well as children Robert W., James D. and Mary. James (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His children included Bessie (b.1741), William (b.1742) and Elizabeth (b.1748). James (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish, recorded at Linthill in 1789 when his son Robert was baptised. James (19th C.) purchaser of the farm of Catshawhill in Lilliesleaf Parish. This was sometime before 1837. He was a nurseryman and seedsmen. He was probably succeeded by William. James (19th C.) farm steward at Timpendean in the mid-to-late 1800s, working for Mr. Elliot Boag. He married Margaret, daughter of William Oliver, hind at Langraw. James (1828–1905) from Jedburgh, brother of printer John. He became a banker with the National Bank in Kelso, opening the branch in Earlston. He then moved to the Commercial Bank, working in Earlston, Galashiels, then Kirkcaldy, and eventually becoming Secretary of the head office of the Commercial Bank in Edinburgh. He was strongly connected with Rulewater, meeting his wife Margaret Boa there, and being a keen angler of the Rule and Jed Waters. He wrote verse under the pen-name ‘Matthew Gotterson’ and under this name published the poem ‘The Callant’ in the Scotsman in 1889 (reprinted in ‘Hawick Songs and Recitations’ in 1892); this was used as the anthem for the Callants’ Club, the third verse being put to music by Addie Ingles in the late 1940s, and the words were erroneously attributed to J.E.D. Murray in the 2001 Hawick Songs anthology. A version of the ballad ‘Little Jock Elliot’ was written under this pen-name. He also wrote extensively on angling topics and was a President of the Berwickshire Naturalists’ Club. He wrote an extensive article on the Catrail in 1880, having tried to trace it course for several days accompanied by Mr. Craig-Brown and Mr. Elliot of Hollybush, as well as local farmers and shepherds. He was also a keen Volunteer, being an officer of the Border Battalion and Secretary of the Border Rifle Association. Additionally he was involved as treasurer or secretary of the agricultural societies in Selkirkshire as well as the Landward School Board. His wife died later the same year he did. John (16th C.) recorded being in Lilliesleaf in 1580 when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk. He could be the son of Thomas, who received a half husbandland in Lilliesleaf from his father in 1581/2. Also in 1581/2 there was a marriage contract between him and Janet, daughter of John Redford in Lilliesleaf; the couple gained a half husbandland in Midlem from his father Thomas and he promised his mother land in Lilliesleaf in liferent. John (17th C.) merchant in Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to Thomas, who was listed right before him. John (17th C.) wright in Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He was probably related to other Smails living there.
John (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He may be the John who witnessed a baptism in 1772 for Walter Aitkin. He married Helen Aitkin and their children included: George (b.1743); James (b.1744); Margaret (b.1746); Jean (b.1758); and Adam (b.1761). The witnesses in 1743 were cooper John Aitkin (perhaps related to his wife) and shoemaker Robert Wilson, and in 1758 were James Oliver and Walter Aitkin. John (18th C.) listed as owner of a ‘House and Yard’ in Minto Parish in 1779, valued at £1 16s 7d. It was owned by Lord Minto in 1811. John (b.1785/6) born at Hermiston in Lilliesleaf Parish, he was a cadger and carrier in St. Boswells. In 1852 he is recorded running a cart between Lilliesleaf and Kelso. His wife was Esther and their children included Thomas and Jane. Margaret ‘McC’ (16th/17th C.) resident of the Lilliesleaf area, wife of Mungo Young. In the 1628 witchcraft trial of Isobel Howison, she gave evidence that about 9 years earlier Howison came to her sick child ‘and said he had gotten a blast of ill wind betuene tuo furres [furrows] and shee spake some words over him and he was better within twenty four houres’. Martin (16th C.) listed as one of the tenants of Skelfhill and neighbouring farms in a bond of security signed in Hawick in 1569. His name is listed as ‘Martine Smail’. Robert (b.1798/9) born in Ancrum, he was a farmer at Hillhead in Lilliesleaf Parish. His brother John also helped run the farm. In 1851 they were farming 41 acres and employing 1 labourer. Another brother, William, also lived on the farm. Thomas (16th C.) recorded in a document of 1561/2, agreeing that Thomas Young, his brother-in-law, should occupy some lands in Lilliesleaf during his mother’s life. His mother was Elizabeth (‘Bessie’) Riddell, presumably related in some way to the Riddells of that Ilk. His sister was Margaret. Probably the same Thomas in 1563 leased for 19 years a tenement from his neighbour Thomas Gray. He was to pay 20 shillings twice a year, along with ‘ane pek to the boll’ of grain, and if he built a klin there, then Gray would provide him with beams for its construction. The witnesses in 1563 were ‘Berte’ Riddell, James Leithead and Robert Hastie, who may also have been from Lilliesleaf. In 1564 he witnessed a marriage contract for John Johnstone, tenant in Hermiston. Probably the same Thomas in Lilliesleaf is recorded in 1581/2 when Walter Turnbull in Belses took over his debt with Richard Wilson in Howford. In 1581/2 he resigned his half husbandland in Lilliesleaf in favour of his eldest son John and arranged a marriage contract between John and Janet, daughter of John Redford in Lilliesleaf; he gave the couple his half husbandland in Midlem and his wife Helen Clerk received quarter of a steading of William Middlemes. He may be the Thomas in Lilliesleaf whose son Adam was granted land in the village in 1595/6. Thomas (17th C.) resident in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to merchant John, who was also listed there. Thomas (18th C.) tenant farmer in Borthwickbrae in the Horse Tax Rolls for 1787–88. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at Catshawhill in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was probably related to William, who farmed at Raperlaw. Thomas (19th/20th C.) driver of the Wolfelee estate carts (mainly coal from Hawick) under 3 separate Lairds. He married Mary, daughter of Thomas Baptie and a Buckham. He retired to Hawick. William (16th/17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Helen Wight and their children included: George (b.1743); Adam (b.1754); and Helen (b.1756). William (18th/19th C.) farme at Catshawhill in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1785. In 1786 he was ‘of Catch’ at Raperlaw. His surname was given as ‘Smal’ in 1788, when he was recorded as owner of Catshawhill. He was still at Raperlaw in 1797. He is probably the William ‘Small’ recorded as possessor of the land of ‘Kaims-muir park’ in 1780. In the Land Tax Rolls of 1811 (although the information came from earlier) he was listed as owner of Catshawhill and part of Raperlaw. He may have been father of James of Catshawhill recorded later. Probably the same William at Raperlaw subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. Probably the same William of Catshawhill served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. His name was recorded as William ‘Sonmail of Catshawill’ in the 1819 list of Commissioners of Roxburghshire. William (18th/19th C.) from Lilliesleaf Parish, he married Janet (or ‘Jenny’) Stuart. Their children included: Margaret (b.1801); and Elizabeth (b.1803). name given, may also have been his children. William (d.1838) from Lilliesleaf. In 1790 he married Janet Thomson and their children included: Janet (or ‘Jessy’, b.1803), who married Andrew Buckham; Alexander (b.1805); and Robert (b.1810), who probably married Ellen Ramage. Helen (b.1797) and William (b.1799), with no mother’s name given, may also have been his children. In about 1820 the family emigrated to eastern Ontario and there are descendants in the United States. He may have been father of William who in about 1823 married Mary Hunter in Edwardsburgh Township, Ontario. He died in Elgin Ontario and is buried in Montreal. William (c.1795–1879) prominent citizen in the area of Edwardsburgh, Ontario, along with his brother Robert and nephew Andrew. He was said to be from the Jedburgh area, but was probably son of William and Janet Thomson, who came from Lilliesleaf, emigrating in 1820. In about 1823 he married Mary Hunter (from Ayrshire) and their children included Robert, Andrew, Thomas, John, Alex and Ann. He served as ‘Reeve’ of Edwardsburgh and county councillor and was an organiser of the Reform movement, which laid the foundations for the Liberal Party of Canada. His farm was called Glen Smail (formerly written ‘Smail’, ‘Smaile’, ‘Small’, ‘Smeal’, ‘Smeall’ and ‘Smyle’).

Smailcleugh (smä-l-kloo) n. former house about 3 miles south of Jedburgh in Southdean Parish. It was near the foot of the Smail Cleuch, on the opposite side of the Jed Water from Ferniehirst Mill. The farm was in the 17th century the residence of the famed Ringan Oliver, who was said to have lived in a tower there. There was a blacksmith’s there in the 19th century (also written ‘Smailcleuch’).

Smaile see Smail

Smaile Burn (smäl-burn??) n. stream now running underground from the Nipkowes to Haggishaa, with the original course being over the Vertish, and on to the Slitrig. The name was in use from at least as early as the 15th century. The springs that feed it provided an early town water supply (1797–1865), conveyed in lead pipes to a reservoir at the top of the Loan (the origin is probably from Old English for ‘small’; the name occurs in 1433 as ‘Smaelecturne’ and is ‘Smaile Burn’ in 1448).

Smailholm (smä-lum) n. village north-west of Kelso, with Smailholm Tower, the 18th century Smailholm House and a church dating back to the 13th century, last rebuilt in the 19th. Robert Ker of Altonburn had a charter of the lands in 1404 and Robert Pringle had a charter probably not many years later. The lands were held by Lord Cranston in 1502. In 1544 it was raided by men of Tynedale and Redesdale, taking 600 cattle, 100 horses and 100 prisoners. Also the name of the surrounding Parish of northern Roxburghshire, bounded by Kelso and Makerstoun, as well as Berwickshire. According to one story, St. Cuthbert was born in the nearby village of Wrangham, which has entirely disappeared. It is said that it was the first parish to divide its common land, starting a trend that would sweep across Border parishes, including Hawick, Wilton, Hassendean, etc. ‘Book of the Bazaar, On Smailholm Men, Smailholm Parish and Smailholm Church’ (1896) was written by William Lamb Sime (the origin is probably Old English ‘smael ham’, meaning ‘the narrow village’; the name first appears in 1160).

Smailholm Tower (smä-lum-toor, -tow-ur) n. 5-storey 15th century peel tower on an isolated crag near Smailholm village, about 6 miles west of Kelso, renovated in the 1980s and now housing a museum. It may have originally been built by the Kerrs for the eldest son of Ferniehirst. The existing tower was probably built by the Pringles. It was the subject of many raids in the 16th century, and was sold to the Scotts of Harden in 1645. It is sometimes also called ‘Sandyknowe’ from the farm and hillock on which it stands. Sir Walter Scott regarded it as very inspirational in his youth – ‘These crags, that mountain tower, which charmed my fancy’s waking hour …Methought grim features, seemed with scars, Glared through the window’s rusty bars’ [SWS], ‘At Smailholm’s Tower, Scott’s youthful hours Were nursed in song and story’ [RF].

smairg (smärg) adj., v. to bedaub, besmear – ‘…for thaye smairgin inequitie apon me, an’ in wraeth thaye hete me’ [HSR], ‘…an a smairgggin rowk feiles ilka thing’ [ECS], to smear sheep with a tarry mixture to protect the fleece against vermin.

smairt (smär) adj., v. smart (also the more common smert).

Small (smaw, smawl) n. James (17th C.) listed along with Andrew Robson in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. Together they paid tax on £390 for the lands of the Laird of Haining (probably John Pringle). William (18th C.) leased the lands...

small-pox (smaw-, smal-poks) n. contagious viral disease, which was a major source of death across Europe until well into the 19th century. It was not always fatal (Mary, Queen of Scots and Elizabeth I of England both contracted it), but it often left victims scarred or blind. Hawick was hit by a particularly fatal outbreak in 1821. Inoculation was introduced in the early 19th century, but taken up in a patchy way, and largely among the wealthier classes; its historical effectiveness is still a matter of debate, but ultimately it led to eradication of the disease.

smally (sma-lee) adj., arch. small, meagre, under-sized - ‘Smaalie (adj.) = delicately framed (applied especially to a child of frail physique)’ [ECS], ‘A smally bairn’ [GW] (also written ‘smallie’; diminutive of smaa).

smarroch (sma-roch) n., poet. a confused collection, crowd – ‘The dirdums o’ the wheezlebugs Chunter the lee-lang day And for a smarroch o’ scowderdowps My greasly hert is wae’ [DH].

Smasha Hill (snaaw-she-ah-hil) n. hill to the east of Blawearie at the end of the ‘Hill Road to Roberdon’, reaching a height of 335 m. It contains a Bronze Age burial cairn, about 500 m yards east-north-east of the summit, measuring about 10 m in diameter and about 0.4 m high. There are several others in the vicinity. On the north side of the hill there is a ‘droveway sign-wall’, a section of drystone dyke to indicate the direction for droving, or perhaps as a warning to drovers.

smat (smat) pp., poet. smote – ‘Behald he smat the rok, that the waters rashedet owt …’ [HSR], ‘An’ smat a’ the first-born in Egypt …’ [HSR].

smatter (smaa’-ur) n., pl., arch. small pieces, smitherens – ‘Hei broke it inti smatters’ [GW], v., arch. to break into small pieces – ‘The pane he smattered wi’ a pelt’ [HSR], ‘Thou didist smatter the heeds o’ leviathan intil flenders …’ [HSR].

Smeaton (snee-in) n. John (b.1827/8) born in Dunfermline, he was Governor of Hawick Combination Poorhouse during the 1861 census. He presented some items from Borneo to the Museum in 1863. His wife was Matron and Harriet Smeaton (probably his sister) also worked there.

smeddum (sme-dum) n., poet. spirit, mettle, common sense, resourcefulness, strength – ‘The smeddum o’ your barmie pills, Gars misers loose their poses, But wi’ your carts ye send twa deils, Like to rive aff folks noses’ [JR], ‘…And pits sic smeddum in my step’ [WL] (from Old English).

smeeg (smeeg) n., arch. a kiss (noted by J. Jamieson).

smert (smer’) adj. smart, clever – ‘deh try ti be smert’, ‘Let cleverality, mockreek folk that are unco smert …’ [ECS], well-dressed, stylish, attractive – ‘ee’re lookin awfi smert the day’, ‘Hei’s a smert kind o felli, thou’ [ECS], ‘Weel, aa met a lorry-driver, As smert as ee could seil …’ [DH], ‘Hei’s a big smert felli mind’ [JCo], ‘she’s a smert lookin lassie, no like her mother’, brisk, quiet – ‘An so, after a smert hurl, oo clattert inti Hawick High Street duist on the chap o six …’ [ECS], v. to smart – ‘ma backside’s still smertin’, ‘…And lashed oor smertin’ cheeks’ [WL] (cf. the less common smaart).

Smellie (snee-lee) n. James (19th C.) teacher at Ashkirk in the 1860s. He also served as Registrar and Inspector of Poor for the Parish.

Smert (smer’) n. (Smart) Alexander (b.1815/6) born in Stow, he was a baker in Hawick. He is listed on the High Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 he was at about 39 High Street and in 1861 at 2 Allars Crescent. His wife was Agnes and their children included Alexander William, Agnes, Jane and George. Rev. William (1775/6–1837) from Blackfriars Kirk in Jedburgh, he was ‘probationer’ at Castleton Burgher Kirk following the resignation of Fletcher in 1801. He was said to have done much to inspire confidence in the waning congregation and helped to secure a site for the new church in Newcastleton village. However, he remained only a short time, because in 1802 he was called to Paisley. He died suddenly while returning from a meeting of the Presbytery there. A volume of his sermons was published by his son Rev. William of Linlithgow.

smarter (smer-tur) adj. smarter – ‘…Like panoramic views were cast, still better an’ still smarter’ [VW].

Smiddielands (sni-dee-lawndz) n. former name for lands in Bedrule Parish, adjacent to Newton. They were included in the lands inherited by William Kerr of Newton in 1637.

smiddies (sni-deez) n. blacksmith’s workshops. These used to be common and crucial parts of everyday life in Hawick and surrounding area. Local ones included Peter Clark’s at the Sandbed, Rob Young’s of the Back Raw, and 3 in the Fore Raw (including James Bowie and Tom Ferguson), as well as others in the Croon Close, Broughton Place (Murray in the basement of No. 7), Melgund Place (No. 5) and Albion Place. In the mid-19th century there must have been around a dozen in Hawick. Those of the surrounding country-side included Ashkirk (Kirkhouses), Bonchester Bridge, Borthaugh Wudfit, Borthwickbrae Burn-fit, Cauldmill, Chisholme, Denholm (two), Flex, Forkins (or Uuthank), Hassendedean, Headshaw, Heap, Hokkirk (Blacklee), Kirkhouses, Kirkton, Lilliesleaf, Minto, Newmill, (Bedrule) Newton, Park (Copshaw), Stirches, Stobs, Teviothead (Bowannahill) and Todshawaugh. The business in the Crown Close (Telfer’s) survived until the late 1970s, and Hook’s on Union Street even more recently. As well as shoeing horses and dealing with other metalwork jobs, through much of the 18th and 19th centuries they were also responsible for performing medical procedures like tooth extractions and bleedings for various ailments. Adam Scott is recorded as smith in Hawick in 1640 and ‘Hew Ellot’ in 1642.

smiddy (sni-dee) n. a smithy, blacksmith’s workshop – ‘He took the horses next to Boa’s smiddy to get their shoes taken off’ [RM], ‘And in winter we wad gather round the bleizin’ smiddy hearth ...’ [JT], a frame-smith’s or mechanical workshop in a mill (also spelled ‘smiddle’).

smiddy-end (sni-dee-end) n., arch. gable wall of a blacksmith’s – ‘A dandert aboot amang the auld byres an smiddie-ends’ [ECS], ‘Oh, the Auld Smiddy end, where in youth’s happy day A merry band o’ bairnies wad gather at their play’ [JT].

smirr (sni-rul) n., arch. a trick, prank – ‘I’ll play him a smirr for that yet’, Teviotd. Nearly syn. with Pliskie’ [JoJ].

smirr (smir) n., poet. drizzle, light rain – ‘A smirr o’ rain was fa’in That buid to spoil the day’ [WL], ‘There cam’ a blast wi’ smirr o’ snaw As Tam cam’ amblin’ hame’ [WFC], v., arch. to drizzle.

smit (sni’) v., arch. to infect, contaminate.

the smit (thu-sni’, thu-snit) n. illness, infection, attack of minor disease – ‘hei got the smit off her’, ‘...He’s hed ye! Ye’re hit! Ye’ve gotten the smit! Ye’re another Robbie Dye’ [DH] (from Old English).

smitch (smich) n., poet. Thou art a’ fair, my loofe, ther is nae smitch in thee’ [HSR].

Smith (smith) n. Adam (17th C.) listed as a smith on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘cist the water’. He paid tax on 2 hearths. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His son James was baptised in 1696. Agnes (17th C.) resident of Hallrule who was listed among the poor in Hobkirk Parish in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Sir Alan (1917– ) R.A.F. pilot who fought alongside Douglas Bader and was awarded the D.F.C. He was later an industrialist, being a strong Tory supporter and becoming a friend of Margaret Thatcher. He ran Dawson International from 1970. He was Chief Guest at the 1986 Common Riding. Alexander (18th C.) resident of Appletreehall. In 1764 he witnessed a baptism for John Hunter, who also lived at Appletreehall. He married Margaret Laidlaw in 1766, and their children, baptised in Wilton Parish, included: James (b.1767); Isobel (b.1770); John (b.1772); Susanna and Christy (b.1773); John (again, b.1775); Margaret (b.1778); Peggy (b.1780); David (b.1784); and Alexander (b.1786). The witnesses in 1770 were James Dryden and Thomas Reid and in 1772 were James Dryden and Robert Hume. Alexander (b.1817/8) son of Hawick blacksmith James. He was blacksmith at Appletreehall and later also vet there. He was listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1841. He lived at Appletreehall with his sister Jane. Late in life he married Margaret, from Stranraer. Alexander ‘Alex’ (d.1960s) originally from Wick, he came to Hawick to work as a watchmaker in George Reid’s High Street shop. In 1947 he started his own jeweller’s and watchmaker’s shop on Walter’s Wynd. This business was continued by his son Hamish. He also had a son Alasdair. Andrew (17th/18th C.) mason in Bedrule Parish. His children Isobel (d.1690) and William (d.1693) are buried in Bedrule kirkyard. Sir Andrew, M.D. ‘Smittie fri Soothfield’ (1797–1872) born at Heronhaa near Southfield (also referred to as Winnington Rig), son of a shepherd, he was an Army surgeon who became Director General of the Army Medical Department and is sometimes described as the father of South African zoology. He was baptised in Kirkton Parish, his father being Thomas P., his mother Grizzel Tait, and the location given as Winnington. He was the eldest of 5 children, having 1 brother and 3 sisters. He attended school at Stobs, where he was said to be flogged regularly for playing truant. In 1809 the family moved to Hassendedean and he attended Minto and then Lilliesleaf schools. He had a 3 year apprenticeship with Dr. Walter Graham in Hawick (sometimes given incorrectly as a ‘Mr. Gordon in Roxburghshire’) before training at Edinburgh University and joining the army in 1815, shortly after Waterloo. He trained at various stations around Britain, and later when quartered in Edinburgh, continued his studies at the University, where he received his M.D. in 1819. He went to the Cape in 1820 as a medical assistant to the 72nd Regiment, and was there for 16 years, also being associated with the 49th and 98th Regiments and the Cape Mounted Rifle Corps. He was district surgeon at Albany and in 1822 opened the first free dispensary for native patients in South Africa. He learned much about the indigenous peoples and was sent on several missions to visit tribes beyond the frontier, resulting in a description of the customs of the Xhosa tribes in 1824. Spending much of his leisure time studying natural history, he established a reputation as a zoologist and ethnographer. He reported on the Bushmen and the Amazooloo (specifically the San, Khoi-Khoi and other peoples). In addition his expertise in zoology was sought out by Charles Darwin. He led a 6 month expedition to Port Natal, the report from which ultimately led to the founding of the colony at Natal. He was also the first Superintendent of the South African Museum from 1825. In 1834 he led probably the first scientific expedition into the interior, where he also negotiated treaties, as well as exploring the Oori, Mariqua and Limpopo rivers, returning after 18 months. About 5,000 specimens, 500 drawings and 1800 artefacts were brought back. In 1836 he met a young Charles Darwin when the Beagle stopped at the Cape, showing Darwin rock formations and giving him some rock samples. He returned to Britain in 1837, being promoted to the rank of surgeon and based at Fort Pitt, Chatham. A grant was appropriated to publish his 5 volume ‘Illustrations of the Zoology of South Africa’ (1838–47), which he wrote with no personal remuneration. He identified and named many animals, particularly reptiles and birds. He described more species of South African birds than anyone before or since and Gekko smithii (a gecko), Lepidophyma smithii (a lizard) and Pangshura smithii (a freshwater turtle) are all named after him. He was also first to formally describe the largest living shark, the whale shark, as well as to properly distinguish the genus of the great white shark and to name it ‘Carcharodon’ (so that the species was sometimes called ‘Carcharodon smithii’ as a result). Ill health prevented him publishing the expedition journal, but much of the information appeared elsewhere (and his diaries from 1834–36 were finally published in 1939–40). He continued to be promoted, becoming Principal Medical Officer at Chatham, then Deputy Inspector of Hospitals in London, and by 1853 he was Director General of the Army and Ordnance Medical Department. During the Crimean War he was personally attacked for being responsible for the state of medical care for British troops, with Florence Nightingale calling him the ‘smoke-dried Andrew Smith’. However, his conduct was vindicated after inquiries by several parliamentary committees. He retired in 1858, when he was made a K.C.B. He received numerous other honorary titles and awards, including being Fellow of the Royal College of Surgeons of Edinburgh, the Zoological Society and of the Royal Society. He was made an Honorary Burgess in 1838 on a visit back to Hawick. He also received honorary degrees from Edinburgh and Trinity College, Dublin. He retired from his post in 1858 and was then knighted. In 1844 he married his housekeeper, Ellen Henderson (c.1802–64), and converted to her Roman Catholic faith. After the death of his wife and then his sister, he lost interest in African exploration and scientific writing and went into decline. He died at his home at 16 Alexander Square, London and is buried at Kensal Green Cemetery. There are at least 2 known portraits of him. A plaque (on the right-hand side of the road past Southfield) marks the site of the cottage in which he was born (actually on the opposite side of the road). Annie Hender- son nee Cowan (b.1861) daughter of Elliot Cowan and Jeanie Hunter. She was well known locally as a singer, for example, singing ‘Up Wi’ the Banner’ at the 1889 Colour Bussing. She was mother of William, James and Elliot and married to Cornet John, with whom she moved to the Manchester area in the 1890s. She gave a talk to the Archaeological Society in 1935, providing valuable information about 19th century Hawick language and place names. It was said that she insisted on her family speaking Hawick dialect at home in Manchester and their house was a haven for other Teries in Lancashire. Her son Elliot referred to her as ‘a leal and competent guardian of the vernacular’, and explicitly highlighted her influence in developing his fascination with the dialect of Hawick. Archibald ‘Airchie’ (b.1782) son of Thomas and Mary Scott ‘The Flooer o Rankleburn’. It is said that as a young man in charge of carts in Berwick, he was press-ganged into joining the crew of a man-of-war. He returned to Rulewater a few years later and married Mary Turnbull (whose sister Ellen has married his brother Peter). One of their sons was found dead at the bottom of a cliff at Edgerston, while a daughter married Robert Taylor. Along with the rest of his family he emigrated to America. Charles (19th C.) grocer on the High Street. He is listed as grocer, spirit dealer and victual dealer on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was Cornet in 1840. He appears to have left the town shortly afterwards. Mysteriously he appears to have fathered an unnamed child who died in 1840.

Rev. David (b.1892) educated in Dunfermline and at Edinburgh University. He was licensed to preach by Dunfermline Presbytery and was assistant minister in Dumfries. He was ordained as minister of Saughtree Kirk in 1921. However, he was translated to Inverkeithing the following year, and later went to Ceres. He married Anna Clarke. Elliot Cowan (1891–1917) native of Hawick, whose father, grandfather and great-grandfather had been Cornet. His father was John and his mother Annie Cowan. He was a student at Manchester Municipal High School and worked as an accountant. Well read in all forms of literature, he had a particular interest in Scottish writing and the vernacular of Hawick. In 1914 he wrote what is probably the best example of Hawick dialect prose ‘Mang Howes an’ Knowes: a Day’s Dander Throwe Border Waeter-Gates’. This when he was only 23 years old, and after having spent most of his life in the Manchester area, where his family moved. It was published in 1925, with illustrations by his brother, James Dryden. He also contributed the dialect dictionary and discussion ‘Braid Haack’ to the Transactions, as well as publishing ‘To Dee and Don: recollection and rumination’ (reprinted from the Hawick Express) in 1912. He was also a lover of music, from high opera to old Scottish songs. Never being in robust health, it was said that he was disappointed not to be able to enlist like his 2 brothers. He lived at 61 Carlton Street, Old Trafford, Manchester. He died at the age of only 25 and is buried in the Wellogate. George, A.R.C.O. (19th/20th C.) organist at St. Cuthbert’s in the early 20th century. He gave organ lessons to Adie Ingles. Gilbert (18th C.) house servant at Stiches in 1778 and 1779, when he was working for Gilbert Chisholme. In 1792 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Stewart, who lived at Stiches. Hamish D. (1946–7–) jeweller at Bourtree Place, well known for incorporating local elements into his designs. He was educated at Burnfoot and Hawick High. He worked with Lyle & Scott and was then a fencer on motorways, then worked in his father Alex’s jewellery shop at 45 High Street, which in 1970 became his own business at 17 High Street. The premises moved to 47 High Street then in 1991 to Eastbank House on Bourtree Place (with members of the Linden being enlisted to move the heavy safe). He was Hawick Business Forum Chairman in the 1980s. He has designed badges and chains of office for several of the local clubs. He also makes badges for Jedburgh, Lauder and Duns festival principals. The ‘Teribus Clock’ has been a feature of his shop since 1996 (constructed by him, Tosh Scott and other local tradesmen). He and Tosh Scott also provided a new clock for the Town Hall balcony. In 2012 he created a Hawick version of the olympic torch. He married Sylvia and had children Janie and Graham. James (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He probably farmed near Newton. James (17th C.) resident of Spittal-on-Rule on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. James (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish, in the Hassendean part. He witnessed a baptism in Hassendean for William Lamb in 1687. He married Margaret Armstrong in 1679 and their children included: Walter (b.1679); Janet (b.1682); and Margaret (b.1688). He is probably the resident in Westerhouses recorded in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls for Hassendean Parish. It seems likely that he and his wife are related to the Walter Armstrong who married Isobel Smith in Robertson in 1686. James (1680/1–1743) blacksmith at Longtown. He had at least 3 children who died young: Archibald (b.1722/3); Mary (b.1725/6); and Agnes (b.1725/6). He was buried in old Wilton Cemetery. James (17th/18th C.) recorded at Ashybank in 1709 when he married Helen Turner. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at ‘Heap burnfoot’ in 1725. He married Elspeth (or Elizabeth) Aitken and their children included: Helen (b.1716); Margaret (b.1719); Agnes (b.1723); and James (b.1725). The witnesses in 1725 were James and Robert Easton. It is possible he was the same as the blacksmith at Longtown. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elizabeth Armstrong in 1761. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Isabel Lees and their children included James (b.1766). James (18th C.) married Jean Davidson in 1775. The marriage was recorded in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Betty Elliott in 1793. James (18th/19th C.) resident at Appletreehall. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He could be the James who married Margaret Oliver in 1800. James (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. An unnamed child of his died in 1809. James (1785–1855) born in Oxnam, son of John. He was blacksmith in Hawick at 5 Melgund Place, and before that at Cauldmill. He may have been a grandson of John, blacksmith at Heap. He is listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory as blacksmith and mill-wright on Melgund Place along with William (presumably his son). In Slater’s 1852 directory he was listed as a blacksmith on Melgund Place. He married Margaret (or ‘Peggy’) Kennedy and she died in 1872, aged 86. Their children included: John (b.1805), born in Wilton Parish; William (b.1807), born in Melrose Parish; James (1809–37); Janet (1811–70); Isabel (1813–29); Robert (b.1815); Helen (b.1817); Margaret, teacher; Charles Kennedy (b.1822); Alexander (b.1824), who was blacksmith at Appletreehall; Joan (1824/5–82), who married shoemaker William Turet; Thomas Young (b.1827), watchmaker, who emigrated to Australia; Gilbert (b.1830); and Jessie. Most of their children were born in Cavers Parish, with Thomas recorded at Cauldmill. He is buried in old Wilton Kirkyard. James (19th C.) one of the 5 men tried for mobbing and assault during the 1837 election in Hawick. He was the only one found not guilty. James (19th C.) one of the 6 elders of Hawick Parish who left along with the minister during the Disruption of 1843 to form Hawick Free Kirk. He was probably the first Session Clerk of the new church, serving until 1855. James (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Mary Glendinning and their children included Mary (b.1822). James ‘Jamie’ (b.1805/6) born in Cockpen, Midlothian, he was a grocer on the Howegate and then Burgh Officer and Halberdier in Hawick from about 1860. He was the Burgh Officer for a while along with ‘Tam-a-Linkin’, then with Michael Wintrup. He was noted as a wit. He also looked after the town’s poor house for many years. It is said that he was well liked in the town, and that even the beggars respected him. He married Margaret Shiell, and their children included: Agnes (b.1831), who married house painter James Smith (probably no relation); William (b.1833); James (b.1835); and Catherine (b.1838). He lived at 4 Loan according to the 1861 census. James (b.1810/1) farmer at Templehall and proprietor of Harwood Sawmill. He was at Harwood Mill in 1841 and listed there in 1861 as farmer of 1000 acres, employing 3 labourers. He was still recorded as farmer at Harwood Mill in 1868. His wife was Betty and their children included Thomas, Mina, Betty, William, James and Peter. The Jane Smith (aged about 70) living with him in 1841 was probably his mother. James (b.1823/4) painter, son of whip and thong maker John. He was a grandson of James ‘Deacon’ Dryden, father of John and grandfather of Elliot Cowan. He was Cornet in 1846, and Acting Father for his son John in 1881. He annually painted a line at Towerdykeside to mark the level of the flood in the year of his Cornetship; this was replaced by a plaque in 1902. There is a painting (by Andrew Kennedy) of him and his Right- and Left-Hand men crossing the Teviot near Laidlaw’s Cauld. This is probably the earliest image of the Common Riding. There is also a photograph of him with the Cornets of 1845 and 1897; this makes him one of the first Cornets of whom we have a photographic image. In 1848 he married Agnes, probably daughter of Howegate grocer and Burgh Officer James Smith. Their children were: Margaret Shiel (b.c.1850), who married Allan Watt; Elizabeth (b.c.1851); Hannah; John (b.1856); Jemima Catherine (b.1863); Ann; Agnes Elliot (b.1869); Agnes Elliot (again, b.1870); and Helen (b.1873). The family lived at 8 Howegate, then 3 Green Wynd, and then 4 Loan, where they kept a ‘house of refuge’. After his wife’s death he lived at 1 Silver Street and lastly 19 Howegate. He was still alive in 1901. James Turnbull (d.1905) eldest son of Thomas and Mary Smith. In 1900 he married Margaret Murray (b.1875), who was from Galashiels. Their children were Peggie, Mary and Thomas James (born after his father’s death). He died following a bad fall from his bicycle at ‘Jenny Walker’s Brac’. His wife was later keeper of the Laidlaw Memorial Hall. James Dryden ‘Jamie’ (c.1881–1966) son of John and Annie Cowan, and older brother of Elliot Cowan. He was named after his great-great-grandfather ‘Deacon Dryden’, who was Cornet in 1772. He moved to Manchester with the rest of his family when he was young. He became a member of the Royal Institute of British Architects and was employed by a brewer’s in Manchester for many years. After retiring he moved back to Hawick, where he and his wife settled at 11 Backdamgate. He was a keen student of Hawick’s dialect and became known as a local historian, who was often consulted. He was also a rugby enthusiast, acting as correspondent for Manchester papers, for both Rugby Union and Rugby League. He provided the illustrations for ‘Mang Howes an Knowes’. He accompanied his mother to Gallipoli in 1926, as part of an organised family memorial trip, and wrote about it for the Hawick Express; they were able to walk on the battlefield where his brother William had fallen, and he made a sketch while they were there. He was a member of the Archaological Society Committee and contributed an article to the Transactions in 1958. He acted as Bard for Lodge 111, and was also a member of the Callants’ Club. He also was donor of the J.D. Smith bequest, which benefited several local causes. He was described as a ‘small and dapper figure’. He married his cousin Jane Hunter Scott. He was buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. Jean (18th C.) kitchen maid at Wilton Lodge in 1791, when she was working for Lord Napier. Jenny nee Ferguson (1908–74) born in Stirling, she trained as a teacher in Dundee, being qualified as a primary teacher with a specialisation in music. She first taught in Yetholm, then moved to Manchester, after marrying local baker Robert T. The couple moved to Hawick in the late 1930s, where her husband established his bakery business on Bridge Street. She taught at Drumlanrig 1964–71, and while there wrote the music for ‘Hurrah! for the Cornet’, to words written by her Primary 5 class. She also wrote a song ‘The Jewel in the Crown’ for the 1970 Burnfoot song competition. In 1971 she remarried, becoming Mrs. Dorward. She died at the Cottage Hospital and was buried in Wilton Cemetery. John (16th C.) doctor recorded in 1581/2 being in Riddell and also in Lilliesleaf. He witnessed the marriage contract between Helen, daughter of Alexander Gledstains and Gavin Gledstains (who sold Stobs), as well as an instrument of sasine between Alexander Gledstains (Burgess of Selkirk) and Gavin Gledstains (who sold Stobs to Gavin Elliott). John (17th/18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His son James was baptised in 1696. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Orchard in 1715. His children were probably: James (b.1714); Margaret (b.1715); John (b.1717) and William (b.1719). John (18th C.) blacksmith in Stirches. In 1747 he is recorded living at ‘Heap foord’. In the records for the division of Wilton Common in the 1760s he is referred to as ‘John Smith, smith in Heap, on the lands of Stirchshaws’. In 1735 he married Margaret Dryden (1712/3–51) in Wilton Parish. Their children included: James (b.1736), who died aged 7; Margaret (b.1739); John (b.1739), who died young; Alexander (b.1741); Isobel (b.1744); and Elspeth (b.1747). The witnesses in 1747 were James Dryden (probably related to his wife) and Thomas Laidlaw. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His wife was ‘Cecil Spinnie’ (or ‘Spindie’). Their children included John (b.1751), George (b.1752), James (b.1754) and Agnes (b.1756). Helen (b.1758), an unnamed son (b.1760), Margaret (b.1762) and Agnes (b.1767) may also be his children. John of Spittal (18th C.) made an Honorary Burgess in 1777. John (18th C.) resident of Firth in Lilliesleaf Parish. His daughter Betty was baptised in 1790. John (18th C.) resident at Scaw Mill in Wilton Parish, when he paid the cart tax in 1791. It is possible he was the same as the Stirches blacksmith. John (d.1794) blacksmith at Heap. He must have been son of the previous blacksmith John (or else he was the same man and quite old when he died). He may have been father or grandfather of James, the blacksmith at Cauldmill and at Melgund Place, Hawick. He died at Cavers and is buried in old Wilton Cemetery. Isabel, who died in 1807, aged 27, was buried along with him, and so probably a daughter. John (18th/19th C.) weaver in Hawick. He married Betty Chain (or ‘Chine’ or ‘Shien’) in Hawick in 1757 and had children: Christian (b.1758); James (b.1760); Walter (b.1762); Robert (b.1764); William (b.1766, probably ‘Wull the Cutler’); and John (b.1768). He was listed as a weaver in the 1764 baptism, when the witnesses were clothiers Gavin and Thomas Turnbull, and also in 1766 when the whole congregation were witnesses. The witnesses in 1768 were fellow weavers Francis Cairns and Robert Chisholme. The death of his son Robert is recorded in 1798, his daughter Christian in 1800 and his wife Betty Chain in 1799. John (18th C.) gamekeeper at Cavers in at least the period 1793–97, when he was working for George Douglas. He was recorded in Cavers in 1792. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included Isobel (b.1790), Christian (b.1792) and John (b.1794). John (18th/19th C.) inkeeper in Newcastle. He is probably the resident of the village recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. In 1817 his inn was used as the meeting place for creditors of a bankrupt merchant in Newcastle. He was listed as proprietor of a public house in Newcastle on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He was probably the John, inkeeper in Newcastle, who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He may be the carter of that name recorded as male head of household in Newcastle in 1835. John (b.1773/4) from England, he was a shoemaker on the Mid Raw in 1841. Jane and John, who lived with him were probably his children. John (d.1811) weaver in Hawick, son of Walter. John (b.1794/5) whip and thong maker on the Howegate. He lived at 8 Howegate, being there in 1841 and 1851, and was at 3 Brougham Place by 1861. He married Elizabeth Dryden (b.c.1801). Their children included: Christian (b.1820/1); James (b.1823/4), who was Cornet in 1846; Helen (b.1826/7); and Walter (b.1835), who was a shoemaker. He could be the John who was born to John in Cavers Parish in 1794, but he was also related to William, 'Wull the Cutler'. His sister Jenny is said to have gone to Flodden in about 1820 and returned with green twigs to adorn the Cornet’s followers in the procession to the Games. John (19th C.) gamekeeper for the Earl of Minto. A story is told in the 1881 Border Counties’ Magazine of how he kept a pet fox on a chain; it would deliberately scatter barley within reach so that it could catch a hen when it got close enough. John (b.1810/1) born in Edinburgh, he was a baker in Denholm. His shop was probably on Main Street. He married Margaret Eckford and their children included Helen, William, John and Catherine J.

John (1827–69) of Darnick (near Melrose). Last major head of the family architects and builders business, John & Thomas Smith. They were responsible for many of the finest Victorian buildings around Melrose, as well as the North Brig in Hawick, the Wallace Statue at Dryburgh and the Hermitage Water Bridge. He was commissioned to make a survey of the Auld Brig of Hawick before it was demolished in 1851. He was also an early photographer, who took photographs of Queen Victoria’s visit in 1867. He added an east wing to Darnick Tower. His sister Mary married John Elliot of Binks. The Smith Memorial Hall was built in Darnick in his memory. John (19th C.) one of the first professional cricketers in town, playing for the Wilton team in the late 1850s.

John (1856–1904) son of Cornet James and sister of Margaret, the matriarch of the Watt family. He was Cornet in 1881, with his own father as Acting Father. He also served as Acting Father in 1886 (2 years after his own father served in this role). He married Annie Cowan, and their sons were: James Dryden; William, who died at Gallipoli; and Elliot Cowan, who wrote ‘Mang Howes an Knowes’. A plumber by trade, he moved with his family to Old Trafford, Manchester in the 1890s. There he became the first Chairman of the Hawick Exiles’ Club. Dying at a young age, he was buried in Hawick, being the first Cornet’s coffin to be draped with the Burgh Standard.

Rev. John (1859–1928) born at Haddington, he graduated M.A. from Glasgow University in 1888. He was minister at Denholm Free Kirk from 1892 until his death. He married Agnes Hume. His daughter was a geography teacher at the High School in the 1950s and his grandson was a local vet. Joseph (19th/20th C.) gas manager in Hawick. His daughter Annie was the 2nd wife of Robert Riddle Thompson. Rev. Malcolm (1860–91) from the Gillespie area in Glasgow, he graduated M.A. from Glasgow University in 1886 and B.D. in 1889. He was ordained as the 1st minister of Wilton South Kirk in 1890. However, about a year and a half later he drowned while swimming on holiday at Spittal. Some of his sermons and a memorial were collected and published in Hawick in 1891. Margaret nee Murray (b.1875) daughter of Robert, carpenter at Blacklee, Hobkirk Parish. She married James, eldest son of Thomas Smith, tenant farmer at Tythehouse. They had 3 children, but her husband died as the result of an accident. She later was keeper of the Laidlaw Memorial Hall. Patrick (15th C.) listed in 1463/4 among the men who were rewarded by the King for assisting in the capture of John Douglas of Balveny; probably part of the force led by Scott of Buccleuch. He is recorded as ‘Patricius Smyth’. The other men were Scotts, Turnbuls, a Gledstains, a Langlands, a Dalgleish etc., and so he is probably also local. Peter (18th/19th C.) brother of Thomas (tenant of Hartshaugh Mill), he was factor to Elliot of Wolfelee. He was resident in Kirknowe in Hobkirk Parish in 1788 and 1790 when he had children baptised. He was also tenant of Kirknowe in 1797, when he owned 2 horses. In 1807 he bought the lands of Hobkirk Kirkstile (part of Kirknowe) and farmed there. He married and had at least 7 children: Peter (b.1788), who married Helen Scott; Isobel (b.1789); Betty (b.1790); James; Margaret (b.1797); Thomas (b.1798); and Walter (possibly b.1802), who emigrated to America. James (b.1793) was probably also his child. Peter (b.1780) eldest son of Thomas and Mary Scott, ‘the Flooer o Rankeburn’. He farmed at Harwood Mill. He was probably the Peter at ‘Harrot’ who subscribed to 6 copies of William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He married Ellen Turnbull, whose sister Mary married his brother Archibald. They had a large family, including: Thomas (b.1801); Walter (b.1803); Peter (b.1804); Archibald (b.1806); Elizabeth (b.1808), who married J. Blake; Mary; Andrew (b.1812); William (b.1814); Mark (b.1815), who died at Lanton; Turnbull (1816–79), farm steward, who died at Hawick; Nelly (b.1818), who married W. Elliot; and Isobel (1821–1898), who died in Hawick. He is said to have been very strict in all things relating to religion. Peter (b.1788) eldest son of Peter, he was factor for James Elliot of Wolfelee in the early 1800s and lived at Kirknowe. In 1823 he married Helen Scott, one of the Scotts of Woodhouse and related to the Turnbulls who farmed at Spittal. Their children were: Isobel or Isabella (1824–49), who married Robert, son of Robert Stewart, farmer at Hawthornside; Peter (b.1827), who married Isobel Oliver; Betty (b.1830); John (b.1832); and Agnes Scott (b.1835). Peter (1804–86) son of Peter, who was the eldest son of Thomas. He became farmer at Harwood Mill, where he was born. In 1841 he was an agricultural labourer at Parkhead in Robertson Parish, in 1851 was at Hunthill and in 1861 he was farm steward at Greenriver. His cousin Mary married Robert Purdom of Hawick. He himself married Elizabeth ‘Betty’ Ronaldson Dunlop in Coldstream. Their children were: Mary (b.c.1839); Peter (b.1841), who died at Jarrow-on-Tyne; Helen Turnbull (‘Ellen’, b.1843), who married A. Telfer; Williamina (or Mina, b.1847), who married Sandbed baker John Young (and was mother-in-law of J.E.D. Murray); and Elizabeth (or Betsy, b.1852), who emigrated to Queensland. There is a story told of him encountering a ‘spunkie’ (i.e. ‘will-o’-the-wisp’) when riding past Mackside Demmings. He was active until a few years before his death, which occurred at Swanshiel. Peter (b.1825/6) toll-bar keeper at Deanbrae in 1851. His wife was Margaret and they had a daughter, Dorothy. Robert (16th C.) recorded in 1541 on a list of associates of James Douglas of Cavers when he complained about his farm of Whitriggs being burned by Walter Scott of Branholme. He was probably a tenant of Douglas of Cavers. He may be related to the two Thomases who were also listed. Robert (17th C.) Hawick Councillor who signed the 1640 ‘Act of Bailies and Council’. Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded as a resident of Whitfield in 1751 and 1769. He was also farmer in Newton, in Wilton Parish. He is probably the Robert who witnessed a baptism for James Pott, resident of Borthaugh, in 1751. He was one of the founders of the secession church, which met in Hawick in 1763. He may be the Robert who is recorded as formerly being in possession of an enclosure that was part of Silverbuthall, according to the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. He married Alison Irvine (or ‘Irwin’) in 1748, the marriage being proclaimed in Wilton and Ancrum Parishes. Their children included: John (b.1749); Thomas (b.1751); Walter (b.1753); James (b.1755); Janet (b.1758); Nelly (b.1762); Robert (b.1764); and Thomas (again, b.1769). The witnesses in 1751 were James Dryden and Walter Scott. The witnesses in 1769 were James Scott (probably the farmer at Boonraw, who was also an Anti-Burgher) and Walter Irvine (who was surely related to his wife), the baptism carried out by Mr. Arnot, who had previously been connected with the Green Kirk in Hawick. Robert (18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. In 1780 it is recorded that he was tenant of ‘House and yard’, with rent of 10s. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Silverbuthall in 1791. He married Isobel Oramston and their children included: Esther (b.1791); and Robert (b.1794). Robert (18th/19th C.) farmer at ‘Swin’ in Kirkton Parish, possibly the same place as ‘Swinesteid’. He is recorded there on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1797 as owner of 2 horses. Robert (b.1837/8) drystane dyker in the Hawick area around the 1860s. In the 1861 census he was in Wilton Parish, married to Mary and with daughter Janet. Robert Tait (d.1958) baker and rugby player. He played prop and was capped 7 times for Scotland in 1929 and 1930. He married Jenny Ferguson, who wrote the music for ‘Hurrah! For the Cornel’. Spending some time in Manchester, in the late 1930s he returned to Hawick and took over the bakery business of W. & R. Johnstone on Bridge Street. Ronald ‘Ron’ High School Geography teacher who was Assistant Headteacher 1984–2002. He has been heavily involved in Hawick R.F.C., co-editing ‘The Green Machine: 125 years of Hawick rugby’ (1998) and also ‘Glimpses of Green’ (2002). He has been a Scottish Borders Councillor and from 2011 until 2013 served as Hawick’s Honorary Provost. He was Rotary Club President from 2020. Thomas (16th C.) name of 2 men recorded in 1541 on a list of tenants and other associates of James Douglas of Cavers when he complained about his farm of Whitriggs being burned by Walter Scott of Branholme. They may have been related to Robert, who was also named. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Gray and their daughter Bessie was baptised in 1690. The witnesses were James Murray and William Smith. Thomas (17th/18th C.) born at Wells in Rulewater. He was described in 1717 as ‘now keeper of one puppie pleyn’ (perhaps a dog entertainment of some kind) when he was fined for assault in Hawick. Thomas (18th C.) footman at Knowe in Minto Parish in 1785, when he was working for Thomas Turnbull. Thomas (1757–1827) brother of Peter, it is unclear where the previous generation came from. He was tenant at Hartshaugh Mill when his children were baptised in 1785 and 1788. He was listed as miller on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he was owner of 2 horses. He is still listed as miller of Hartshaugh Mill recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He married Mary Scott, the ‘Flower of Rankleburn’. Their children were: Peter (b.1780), who married Ellen Turnbull of Harwood Mill; Patrick (b.1781); Robert; Archibald (b.1782), who later emigrated to America; Thomas (b.1784); Andrew (b.1785); Isobel (b.1787); Walter (b.1788), who may have died young; Betty (b.1790); Margaret (b.1791), who married William Crozier; Mary (b.1793), who married Robert Purdom of Hawick in 1817; and Jane (or ‘Jean’, b.1795), who married John Dalgleish. He secondly married Jane (or ‘Jean’y’) Oliver in Southdean Parish in 1807. Their children were: Oliver (b.1809), who married Helen Waters and emigrated to America; James (b.1810), who married Elizabeth Henderson; Mina, who married W. Telfer, farmer at Roundabouts; Elizabeth, who died in 1864, and may have been the same as Betty; William, who emigrated to New Zealand; and another Oliver, who may have been a twin of William and died young. He is probably the ‘T. Smith’ whose mother is recorded dying in Hobkirk in 1815. Thomas. (18th/19th C.) from England, in 1789 he married Margaret Paterson in Roberton Parish. Their son Thomas (b.1790) was baptised in Roberton. Thomas. (18th/19th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His children included James (b.1795). Thomas P. (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Heronhaa near Southfield. In 1797 he married ‘Grizzle’ (or Grizel) Tait, the marriage being recorded in both Kirkton and Wilton Parishes. They had 5 children: Sir Andrew (1797–1872), army surgeon and famous zoologist; Joan (b.1800); Barbara (b.1802); James (b.1804); and Agnes Anne (b.1807). All their children were baptised in Kirkton Parish. He may be the Thomas whose son James was baptised in Hobkirk Parish in 1810. Rev. Thomas (1828–1901) born at Powfoot in Dumfriesshire, son of John and Marion Murray. He was educated at Edinburgh University and licensed by Annan Presbytery. He was ordained as minister of Ewes Kirk 1853 and remained there until his death. In 1856 he married Margaret, daughter of William Sutherland Fraser, jeweller in Edinburgh. Their children were: Agnes (1857–1913), who married Alexander Simson from Melrose; and Marion (b.1860), who married James Calder, doctor in Jamaica. Thomas (b.1827/8) born in Cavers Parish, son of blacksmith James. He was a watchmaker on the Howegate (near the top of the east side), listed in the 1851 census and in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Isabella. Thomas ‘Tom’ (b.1837) son of James and Elizabeth Henderson, and grandson of miller Thomas. He is recorded as a keen follower of the Jedforest Hunt in the latter part of the 19th century. He was tenant farmer at Tythehouse in Hobkirk Parish. He married a distant cousin, Mary Smith. Their children were: James Turnbull; Elizabeth; Thomas, who emigrated to Canada; and Peter Smith, who farmed at Coldtown. Thomas Aird (b.1854) son of William and Isabell Aird, who was sister of Thomas Aird. He was brought up at Bridgehaugh near Selkirk. He became tenant farmer at Kirkton and Bedrule, remaining at Bedrule 1898–1921. He was a keen hunter and said to be a heavy man, requiring specially bred horses. He had at least 3 children, Isabel, Jessie and William (who all followed the Jedforest Hunt when young). Thomas ‘Tom’ (19th C.) tenant farmer at Tythehouse. He was a keen supporter of the Jedforest Hunt. His eldest son was James. Thomas (b.c.1870) son of John James, who was born in Malta, and Isabella Morrison. Although born in County Durham, he grew up in Hawick, where his father was a hand-loom weaver and later publican. He also worked as a spirit merchant in Hawick. In 1901 he married Margaret, daughter of James Blaikie. Their son John James was born in Wilton in 1902. About 1907 he emigrated to Rainy River, Ontario, his wife coming later. Thomas ‘Tom’ (19th/20th C.) local bowler, who also laid out at least 30 greens, including the one for Wilton Bolwing Club. Turnbull (1816–79) son of Peter and grandson of the first known Thomas of Rulewater. He was a farm steward, who died in Hawick. Walter (d.bef. 1811) weaver in Hawick. He was on the subscription list for Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He could be the son of John and Betty ‘Shien’ born in Hawick Parish in 1762. He may also be the Walter who married Helen Gibson in Hawick in 1789 and had an unnamed child baptised in Hawick. His son John, also a weaver, died in 1811. Walter (b.1787/8) born in Hobkirk Parish, he was farmer at Scaw Mill near the Dean. He may have been son of John, who was previously at Scaw Mill. He was recorded as miller there in Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He was listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835–41. He was farmer there on the 1841 census, married to Janet and with daughter Mary. He was still alive in 1861. Thomas, who was living at Scaur Mill Stable in 1841 may have been his son. Walter (b.1792/3) thong maker of the High Street, according to the 1841 and 1851 censuses. In 1841 he was at Miller's Close. His wife was Janet and their children included Helen and Isabella. His mother may have been Helen. He was a widower by 1851. Walter (d.1840) weaver in Hawick. William (16th C.) servant to Walter Scott of Branxholme. In 1851 he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk involving John Geddes in Branxholme. William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Marion ‘Hellin’ and their children included: George (b.1656); and Agnes (b.1660). Probably the same William witnessed a baptism for Thomas in 1690. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living in Denholm in 1721, 1723, 1726 and 1729. He may be the William who got married in Kirkton in 1712 (with no wife’s name given). His children may have included Margaret (b.1713), Marion (b.1715), George (b.1721), John (b.1723), Helen (b.1726), Euphan (b.1729), Bessie (b.1731) and Jane (b.1735). Perhaps the same William was recorded at Denholm in 1715. William ‘Wull the Cutler’ (1766–c.1833) son of John and Betty ‘Chine’ and was related to the Hawick family that produced 2 Cornets in the 19th century. He was a wright by trade, making the first ‘spinning jennies’ in Hawick. He was known as a very snappy dresser in the late 18th century, and was particularly vain about his hair. He apparently took the first taste of the ‘Auld Brig gin’ (a keg of water) in the joke perpetrated on the exciseman by Wat Inglis. He took up fishing late in life. He is listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory as ‘cutler & basket maker’ on the High Street. He was nephew of Catherine Cheyne, who was long-time domestic servant of the Gledstains of Hillesland; from her he gained possession of the ‘Gledstane Bible’, which he passed on to merchant Andrew Irvine. There is a portrait of him by Adam Brown – ‘Auld Cash and Tufty blithely trip. Lean Yeddle Gibson’s creel is full, Jamie Tamson and John the Dip Gang hand in hand wi’ Cutler Wall’ [Hi]. William (b.c.1785) born in Oxnam Parish, son of John. He was probably brother of James, blacksmith in Hawick. He was a blacksmith in Denholm, listed on Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He is also listed in 1835 as a joint proprietor in Denholm with William Barrie, hosier. He probably lived on Westside. His wife was Elizabeth Anandale, and their children included Catherine and Margaret. He may be the William, at Hayknowe, whose model plough (for which he won a premium at Kelso in 1848) was presented to the Museum in 1857. William (19th C.) perhaps born on the English side of the Border, he married Mary, daughter of William Laidlaw in Hobkirk Parish in 1827. Their children were: James; Joan; William; Helen (b.1829), who married William Stewart in Hawthornside; Thomas (b.1831); Anne (b.1833); and Mary (b.1836). His sister Mary married William Redpath, who worked at Weens. William (19th C.) blacksmith of Hawick, probably son of James. He is listed in the 1835 electoral roll as joint tenant along with James. In Pigot’s 1837 directory ‘Jas. & Wm. Smith’ are listed as blacksmiths on Melgund Place. He does not appear on the censuses of 1841–61, but is listed in Rutherford’s 1866 directory as blacksmith on Melgund Place. William (b.1803/4) from Stow, he was a mason living at Communsound Bankhead in 1841 and ‘Bowannahillbridge’ in 1851. His wife was Isabel and their children included Bridget, William, Alexander, Adam and Helen. William (b.1822/3) from England, he was listed as ‘Railway Gaffer’ in Newcastleton in 1861. He was on South Hermitage Street, lodging with carter Francis Scott. He is probably the Bill Smith who was in charge of bringing the first locomotive engine by road from Carlisle; the engine bogged down in mud and toppled a number of times, falling on him and killing him. William (19th C.) farmer at Learmouth, Cornhill. In the 1860s he was a non-resident voter in Cavers Parish. Rev. William Grierson (d.1870) born in Edinburgh, eldest son of James. He was educated at Glasgow University and ordained minister of Fintry in 1840. He was presented to Ashkirk Parish by Gilbert John, Earl of Minto and became minister there in 1861. He married Hannah Grierson of Bridgenorth, who died in 1891. They had a son Alfred William, who died young. He wrote a description of Fintry Parish. Rev. William (b.1840) born in Oldhamstocks, son of David and Ann Thompson. He graduated M.A. from the University of Edinburgh in 1868. He was licentiate at Saughtree Kirk 1870–77. He was ordained as minister of Dunsyre in 1877. William Walter (1852–1942) born in Hawick, son of gamekeeper.
Thomas and Ellen Robson. He worked as gardener in various English country houses and emigrated to New Zealand in about 1875. He continued to work as a gardener. He held the view that many native species would be driven extinct by the effects of colonisation and so began to collect native plants, insects, Maori artefacts and other items. He wrote extensive notes, some of which were published, and several species were named after him. In 1903 he was appointed to the commission charged with putting the Scenery Conservation Act into effect. He was later appointed curator of Pukekura Park, New Plymouth. It appears he was not easy to work with, holding down positions typically for only a few years at a time. However, he remained a sought-out authority on New Zealand natural history until his death, at New Plymouth, in his 90th year. He married Mary Foreman and had at least 7 children. Rev. William (1855–91) born in St. Fergus, Peterhead, son of a blacksmith. He studied at the Free Church College in Aberdeen and was ordained by the English Presbyterian Church in Scarborough. He then assisted at several churches, including Roberton. He came to Wolfelee Free Kirk to help while Rev. William Russell was ill in 1890. He was then inducted in 1891 (although some of the congregation objected that he was not himself in good enough health to take on the full task). He collapsed in the middle of his second sermon as minister and died about a month later, leaving a widow and young child. He married Agnes Shewan Kerr and their only child was John Kerr (b.1890). William (1893/4–1915) son of John and Annie Cowan, brother of Elliot and James. He became a calico designer in Manchester, but enlisted with the Territorials in Hawick, becoming a Corporal in the 1/4th K.O.S.B. He was was killed at Gallipoli in the disastrous offensive of 12th July 1915. His name is recorded on the Helles Memorial (formerly written ‘Smycht’ and ‘smoik’). However, he remained a sought-out authority on native plants, insects, Maori artefacts and other items. He wrote extensive notes, some of which were published, and several species were named after him. S.M.T. (es-em-tee) n. Scottish Motor Traction Company, which took over the main Hawick coach routes from Border Motor Transport about 1930, and ran bus service for about 50 years. They acquired the Borders-based company Brooke and Amos in 1926 and later Adam Graham and the Border Motor Transport Co. As well as the Edinburgh to Carlisle service, they ran bus lines around Hawick, as well as transporting mill workers. The firm became Scottish Omnibuses in 1949 and the local fleet was known as Eastern Scottish. The colours of the bus fleet were a distinctive green, later becoming green and cream. After de-regulation of bus services, the name of the operator (and the quality of service) changed several times, e.g. to Lowland Scottish and First. The offices were in Oliver Place and the main bus depot was in Dovecto Street, which closed in the 1980s.

smugglin (smu-glin, -gu-lin) n. smuggling, the trade in goods without paying duties. This was rampant in the Hawick area in the 17th and 18th centuries and on into the 19th. Before the Union, the difference in duties meant that salt, skins and malt were smuggled into England, and wool smuggled into Scotland. In the 18th and early 19th centuries there was a brisk local business in smuggling whisky south of the Border, because of the large difference in duties. This was particularly after the increase on whisky duty in 1799. The favourite source of goods locally was from Capt. Daniel Fleury, who would land his boat at Boulmer in Northumberland, from where ‘Boomers’ would secretly carry goods over the Border. There was also a vigorous trade in black market salt, again encouraged by increased taxation. Smugglers were pursued by the excise officers. In the 18th century there was a collector, 2 supervisors and 18 officers in Teviotdale, and by the 19th century there were 28 mounted Revenue Officers employed in Roxburghshire. In 1836 the minister of Hobkirk records that ‘smuggling and illicit distilling are not now practised’.

Snaberlee (snä-bur-lee) n. area just to the east of where the Hermitage Water joins the Liddel, marked as ‘Snaberlee Rig’ on modern Ordnance Survey maps. There was formerly a small thatched cottage at Snaberlee Brae, inhabited by a lone woman until the late 19th century. In the early 1750s this was the site of open air sermons as part of the Secession movement in this parish. The farm was acquired by William Manderson from the Laird of Whithaugh and in 1811 valued at £23 8s (the origin of the name is probably from the Old Norse personal name ‘Snabjorn’; it occurs as ‘Snabirly’ on Blaeu’s 1662 map and is ‘Snaberly’ on Stobie’s 1770 map; it is ‘Sunaberlie’ in 1665, ‘Snaberlie’ in 1666 and ‘Snaberly’ in 1811).

The Snoot Kirk (thu-snöo'-kirk) n. Small former church in the Borthwick valley, built shortly after the Disruption of 1843 as Roberton Free Church. The dissenting congregation first held meetings in the joiner’s yard at Dearnburnhaugh, before being given the ground at Parkhillhaugh by John Chisholme, with the church being built very quickly. It was reached from the main road via a footbridge. By 1852 the declining rural population meant that the church was reduced to a preaching station; it picked up again later, but always had a struggling existence. It switched from Selkirk Presbytery to Jedburgh Presbytery in 1880. The building was renovated in 1908/9, when a vestry was also built. It continued to be used as a church until 1927, and the congregation formally merged with Roberton Kirk in 1930. The land reverted to the Chisholme estate and was gifted to the Scottish Youth Hostel Association by Mr. Bruce of Chisholme in 1935. It was then used by the Youth Hostel Association, particularly as a pony trekking centre. The building succumbed to dry rot in the mid-1990s. A roll of the ministers is: John Dow 1845–52; James Logan around 1860; Thomas W. Paterson 1889–1900; Alexander Cameron 1906–11; David Brunton 1912–25.

The Snoot (thu-snöo') n. Area of the Borthwick around the Snoot Church, so-called from the nose-like feature of the river enclosing the area on 3 sides. Also the familiar name for the youth hostel that was set up in the old church – ‘Owre at the Snoot, the sun gae don’ As that bedraggled hiker Was wrin’ oot his socks and sark Wi’ wry thocht o’ the dyker!’ [WL] (also sometimes written ‘Snout’).

Somervel see Somerville

Somerville (su-mur-vil) n. Alexander (18th/19th C.) tenant farmer at Lees in Wilton Parish. He married Janet Anderson in 1811 and their children include: William (b.1813); and James (b.1816). The 1813 baptism was witnessed by James Somerville, Nanny Thomson and Nanny Mein. Euphemia nee Eckford (d.1928) daughter of Hawick grocer John Eckford, she married George, who was a cousin of Sir James A.H. Murray. She lived in Denholm and bequeathed money, which was used to purchase property, including buildings around the arch on Sunnyside, where she had lived. It was hoped that rental would maintain the Somerville Trust, which supplied a nurse for Denholm, but eventually the moneys dwindled and the properties were sold. Hugh (17th/18th C.) ‘agent’ who witnessed a baptism for John Ekron in 1721. Mary nee Fairfax (1780–1872) daughter of Sir William Fairfax (one of Nelson’s Captains), she was born in the Manse at Jedburgh, home of her mother’s sister Martha Charters and Rev. Thomas Somerville. In 1804 she married a naval officer, Samuel Greig (Russian Consul for Britain, whose father had been the man who had brought Hobkirk’s Adam Armstrong to Russia), who was a distant cousin; he died 3 years later. She was in Jedburgh on the evening of the False Alarm of 1804. She had a telescope made by James Veitch of Inchbonny, was well acquainted with Sir David Brewster and also got to know Sir Walter Scott. In 1812 she secondly married her cousin William Somerville (1771–1860), eldest son of Dr. Thos., who was physician to Chelsea Hospital. Despite only 1 year of formal education, she educated herself at the family’s Burntisland home and became a mathematician and science writer. In fact she has the distinction of being the first person to whom the word ‘scientist’ was applied, in 1834 in a review of her book ‘On the Connexion of the Physical Sciences’. She translated and annotated Laplace’s work, hypothesized a planet perturbing the orbit of Uranus (which led to the discovery of Neptune), and wrote a popular school geography textbook. She was elected to the Royal Astronomical Society and received many other honours. She spent most of the time from 1838 living in Italy. She was a great supporter of women’s education, and Somerville College, Oxford was named after her. She also has an asteroid and lunar crater named in her honour. A history of her life was written by her daughter Martha. She is buried in Naples. Her children were: Woronzow Grieg (1805–65), a barrister; William George Grieg (1806–14); Margaret Farquhar Somerville (1813–23); Thomas Somerville (1814–15); Martha Somerville

Charters Somerville (1815–79); and Mary Charlotte Somerville (1817–75). Robert (16th/17th C.) recorded ‘in ye Midle’ in 1623, when Thomas Hood in Ancrum was accused of stealing 2 cows 7 years earlier from him. This was from lands at ‘Plassadage’ in England, the cattle belonging to him and Walter Scott of Todrig. It is unclear if he was tenant in Middle in Cavers Parish or elsewhere. Rev. Thomas S. (d.bef. 1710) minister of Cavers. He was son of James, who was second son of Sir James of Cambusnethan. He studied at St. Salvator’s College and St. Andrews University, where he graduated in 1666. He was presented to Cavers in 1674 and ordained there in the following year. It is recorded that the Presbytery had to swear him in at the ‘kirk-stile’, since the church and churchyard were locked up and no keys were to be had from the house of Sir William Douglas of Cavers. The Presbytery were also met by a number of women in the churchyard bearing stones, which they threatened to throw, and called them ‘soul murderers and the devil’s servants’. Given the Covenanting support in Cavers Parish, it is clear that the new Episcopalian minister was not popular! In 1689 he refused to pray for William and Mary and read the Proclamation of the Estates (i.e. refused to embrace the return to Presbyterianism), but he may have continued as minister until 1693 (precisely what the arrangement was is unclear, since there was great confusion after the Revolution). He then moved to Hawick, where he continued to preach (probably in his own lodgings) to some adherents of Episcopaliam and the exiled James II. This group included members of the Gledstains and Chisholme families. Baptisms are recorded by him in Hawick in 1694 and 1697. He was listed as ‘Mr Tho. Sumervail’, living on the west-side of Hawick, on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He is said to have ministered in Hawick along with Francis Scott, ousted minister of Hassendean, and a meeting house was opened at the Kirkwynd (or Playlaw) after the passing of the Act of Toleration in 1712 (but he must already have been dead by then). He may also have assisted Rev. John Langlands until about 1700. He married Miss Burnside and their son William was minister of Hawick (i.e., trained as a Presbyterian, despite he himself remaining true to his Episcopalian principles), while their daughter Dorothis married William Hadden, one of the masters of Edinburgh High School in 1710, and they had one other daughter. Rev. Dr. Thomas (1741–1830) historian, born in Hawick, son of Rev. William. He was orphaned at about age 17 and educated in Hawick, Jedburgh and at Edinburgh University. One of his close early friends was Samuel Charters, who would become minister at Wilton (and whose cousin he would marry). He was for a while tutor of the young Lord Minto. He was licensed by the Presbytery of Edinburgh in 1764 and presented to Minto Parish in late 1766 by Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto, becoming minister there early the following year. He was presented to Jedburgh in 1773, translated there the following year, and this is where he spent the rest of his life. He was recorded there in the Horse Tax Rolls in the 1780s. He obtained a doctorate from St. Andrews University in 1789 and became one of his Majesty’s Chaplains for Scotland in 1793. He was arrested while visiting the House of Commons about 1798, being mistaken for the accomplice of a notorious swindler. In 1798 he was offered the Chair of Church History at Edinburgh University, but declined, and had a yearly pension from 1800. He became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1813. He was also a Fellow of the Royal Society of Edinburgh. He wrote several political and historical books, including ‘Candid Thought on American Independence’ (1780), ‘The History of Political Transactions and of Parties from the Restoration of King Charles II to the Death of King William III’ (1792), ‘Observations on the Constitution and State of Britain’ (1793), ‘The Effects of the French Revolution with respect to the interests of humanity, liberty, religion, and morality’ (1793) and ‘The History of Great Britain, during the Reign of Queen Anne’ (1798), as well as several sermons published in Kelso, Hawick and Edinburgh. He also wrote descriptions of Jedburgh and Ancrum for the Statistical Accounts. His posthumously published book ‘My own life and times 1741–1814’ (1861) contains some valuable anecdotes relating to Hawick in the latter 18th century, and describes some aspects of everyday life in the neighbourhood in those times. He married Martha Charters (daughter of Samuel, Solicitor of Customs for Scotland), who died in 1809 and they had 3 sons: William, Inspector of Military Hospitals, and second husband of his cousin Mary Somerville the mathematician; Samuel, solicitor; and James Burges, who died young. They also had 4 daughters: Christian, who married Walter Riddell of Friar’s Glen, 3rd son of Patrick Riddell of Muselee; Janet (or Jenny), who married Joseph Pringle of Ferney Green, Consul General at Madeira, and secondly Lieut.-Gen. Henry Elliot of Rosebank (son of Capt. Robert, brother of the Laird of Harwood); Margaret (d.1843); and Martha, who married William Rutherford, solicitor of Jedburgh. His wife is said to have been a clever woman, who took great care with the education of her children, who were taught by David Brewster (later Sir David). When he died he was ‘father of the church’, i.e. the oldest serving minister, in his 90th year. He is buried in Jedburgh Abbey. Sir William (12th/13th C.) son of William of Carnwath. It is said that during the reign of William the Lion he slew a fearful monster, which was terrorising the district of Linton; the place was known as Worsington, and the event is commemorated in a carved stone in wall of the parish church. He was ‘Willelmo de Sumerville’ when he witnessed the granting of the Church of Moll to Kelso Abbey in the mid-1100s. In 1174 he had the lands conferred on him by the King. He also became Sheriff of Roxburghshire, as well as the Chief Falconer to the King. Rev. William (1691–1757) son of Thomas, the minister of Cavers, he was minister of Hawick Parish 1731–57, and father of Dr. Thomas. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1707, became a tutor for the family of Alexander, Lord Elibank, and was licensed by the Presbytery of Duns in 1719. He thereafter spent time in the household of James, Lord Somerville (presumably a relative), managing his business affairs. He was called to Hawick Parish in late 1731 and ordained early the following year. In 1735 he was involved with the Duke of Buccleuch in the sale of land within Dalkeith. He wrote an account of the Parish sometime before 1743 (perhaps in 1738), this being one of the earliest descriptions with any detail. There he mentions an examination he made of the Buccleuch vault under St. Mary’s in 1738; his transcription of stones there was eventually published in James Wilson’s ‘Memories of Hawick’. He is listed at the Manse in 1748, when he paid the window tax in Hawick Parish. In 1733 he married Janet, only daughter of John Grierson, minister of South Queensferry (their post-nuptial contract is in the National Archives); she was said to be a great beauty. Their children included: Agnes (b.1735); James (b.1740), who may have died young; Thomas (b.1741), who became minister at Jedburgh; Jean (b.1742), who probably also died young; William (b.1744), who probably also did not survive; Janet (b.1745); and Helen. The witness in 1741 was schoolmaster James Anderson and the witnesses in 1742 were Francis Gledstains and Robert Boyd (the Bailies at the time).

His first wife died in 1749 and in 1753 he secondly married again Isobel (or Isabella) Scott of Whitelaw, described as ‘a maiden-gentlewoman of about 80’, and she died in 1759. He is probably the ‘Mr. Somervell’ who hired the Hawick Parish mortcloth in 1758 (although probably deceased before then). It has sometimes been claimed that he was the original of the ‘little round fat oily man of God’ of James Thomson’s ‘Castle of Indolence’, but others insist that the model was instead an English clergyman, Rev. Patrick Murdock. William (1771–1860) son of Dr. Thomas and Martha Charters, he was born at Minto. He trained as a surgeon and entered the army, travelling on expeditions to the Cape of Good Hope. He also travelled on a Mediterranean expedition against Napoleon and to Canada, where he was inspector-general of hospitals from about 1807–11. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1812. In 1812 he became deputy inspector of army hospitals in Scotland and in 1816 had to move to London as a member of the army medical board. In 1806 he married Miss Rutherford of Knowesouth, but she died 2 years later. In 1812 he secondly married his cousin Mary, daughter of Adm. Fairfax, and widow of Samuel Grieg; she is known worldwide as one of the first female mathematicians. It is said that after his marriage he gave up his own ambitions to support his wife’s scientific career. In 1818 he was involved in a legal case over inheritance of Knowesouth, claiming that his first wife’s uncle, a lawyer in Jedburgh, had defrauded him out of liferent on the estate. He became seriously ill in 1838, so that his family wintered abroad and from then on lived mainly on the continent. He died in his 89th year in Florence and is buried in the Protestant cemetery there. William (c.1800–49) shoemaker who lived at Miller’s Close on the High Street. He married Isabella (1807–89), eldest daughter of James Murray, and hence he was uncle of Sir J.A.H. Their children included John, Christian, Jean and James. He may have been born in Kelso, son of William and Mary Weatherhead (also spelled ‘Somervel’, ‘Somervell’, ‘Sumerval’, ‘Somervel’, ‘Summervale’, etc. in early records).

sooplest (soo-plist) adj. most supple – ‘Dan gie’s a loup to the pipe o’ the sailors – Sooplest o’ callants there …’ [WL].

soor (soor) adj. sour – ‘that was a right soor aiple’, ‘…May hang upon a soor ploom tree, And sleep in Etrick Forest’ [JT], ‘…But sank his teeth in them to find them soure’ [WL], scowling, ill-humoured, brooding – ‘ee’re awfhi soure lookin’ the day, what’s the mitter?’ , v. to sour – ‘…And the auld laird stappin’ heman, Is a soored man’ [WL] (also spelled ‘soure’).

soorage (soor-jp) n. a system of sewers, sewage. Hawick got its first sewage plant in 1878 – ‘…Past the Sew’rage gate, if he thocht he was late Went supersonic Dye’ [DH], ‘The what? Oh, the sewerage, ’m aye on for that: You’re laughin’; but that’s no sae droll!’ [WL], ‘…bein vaised ti bein doonwund o the sewerage at Mansfield Park’ [WL] (also written ‘sewerage’).

the Soorage Works (the-soor-juw wurks) n. Hawick Sewage Works, build by the Town on Mansfield Road in 1877/8. The land had formerly been part of Wilton Glebe and this flat area was also known as Burnfoot Haugh. Early plans and other documents are in the National Archives.

soor-faced (soor-fisul) adj. sour-faced – ‘hei’s a soor-faced auld ginn’.

Soorhope (soor-rup) n. Sourhope, farm near the Bowmont Water in the upper part of Morebattel Parish. In the 18th century it was farmed by a brother of William Scott of Thirlestane (the origin is probably ‘the valley of sour pasture’ and the name first occurs in 1544).

soor-kit (soor-ki) n., arch. a dish of clotted cream (noted by J. Leyden).

soor ploom (soor-ploom) n. a boiled sweet, usually green and with a very acid taste, traditionally made in both Galashiels and Peebles.

sooth (sooth) n., adj., adv. south – ‘Ti the sooth, ayownt the sweire, stuide Black Law …’ [ECS], ‘…Lookin sooth owre God’s ain country Fae the Vertish Hill’ [WL], ‘Auld Scotland we love thee, the North, East and West, But we live in the South, so we like it the best’ [JCa], ‘When the wund blaws canny I’ the kindly sooth Wi’ the barest hint O’ heather in her mooth’ [DH], ‘…Where aince the thunderin engines raced Far sooth to London town’ [WL], ‘And come I fraw sooth or nor-ward, My rest sall but be the same In the dear auld town in the hollow – For the dear auld town is hame!’ [WL].

The Sooth (thu-sooth) n. formerly, the South of Scotland district Rugby Union team, which existed through most of the 20th century, and is effectively replaced by ‘the Borders’ team.

Sooth Berryfell (sooth-be-ree-fell) n. another name for the main farm at Berryfell.

Sooth Bright Street (sooth-bri'-stree') n. South Bright Street, a street in the West End off Bright Street. The houses were built in 1927, but after restoration work in 1973 they were found to be unsafe and were demolished in 1975. The street was named after statesman and social reformer John Bright.

Sooth Croft Park (sooth-kroft-pawrk) n. Southcroft Park, former name for a piece of land on Minto estate. It was valued at £73 3s 6d in 1779 when included among lands whose liferent had been granted to Rev. Robert Elliot. They are still so listed in 1811.

Soothdean (sooth-deen, soo-, sow-din) n. Southdean, hamlet on the A6088 towards the Carter Bar, on the banks of the Jed, formerly written ‘Souden’ and variants. Formerly part of Jed Forest, the name ‘Soothdean’ is fairly synonymous with Chesters, although perhaps more often applied to the upper part of the district. It is also the name of the associated Parish, which extends to Wolfelee and also contains the former Free Church there. The original church dates back to at least the 13th century and was a meeting place for Scottish leaders before Otterburn. A replacement church was built about 1690 and the current one in 1786. The village itself was burned by Dacre’s men (led by Sir John Radcliff) in late 1513 and again in 1544. Jock Oliver was recorded living there in 1544. In 1669 the farm of that name was tenanted by James Oliver, David Oliver and Thomas Oliver. William Oliver and David Baptie were there in 1694. An old outhouse in the area was called Peden’s Barn and connected with Covenanters. The settlement has been on the main route from Hawick to Newcastle since long before the modern road was developed (around the 1820s). There are many nearby archaeological remains, including hill-forts, settlements and ruined peel towers. Several Bronze Age artefacts found nearby are in Jedburgh Museum, including a flat axe, part of a rapier blade, and a socketed axe. Othre items from the area include a greenstone axe, a whinstone hammerhead and 3 small whorls of polished green stone.

The Statistical Account of 1794 notes that the region contained several ancient cairns, one of which was found to contain bones, and nearly all of which had been robbed for stones. ‘Souden Kirk: a Border shrine’ was published by John R. Spence in 1951 (the origin is probably a corrupted version of ‘Souden’, the original pronunciation, which may be from the Old English ‘suth dun’, meaning simply ‘the southern hill’ or may be related to Old Welsh for a hill-fort; the name first occurs as ‘Soudon’ in 1275 and has various related forms, including ‘Soudon’ in 1404, ‘Sowdon’ in 1455, ‘Sowdone’ in 1484/5, ‘sawdene’ in 1488/9, ‘Sowdoun’ in 1491/2, ‘Sodane’ in 1538, ‘Sodene’ in 1539, transcribed as ‘Fowden’ in 1544, ‘Sowdoun’ in 1559, ‘Suddon’ in 1575, ‘Suddum’ in 1586, ‘Sudan’ in 1638, ‘Sudden’ in 1689 and ‘Souden’ in 1701; ‘Soudan K.’ is marked on Morden’s 1687 map of Scotland and ‘K. of Soudann’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Soothdean (sooth-deen) n. region in the hills to the east of Colterscleuch, containing Southdean Rigg (which reaches 354 m) and Southdean Burn (which joins Northhouse Burn). There was also formerly a farmstead here. The lands were once part of Ringwoodfield (marked ‘Sudarig’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; it is spelled ‘Suddenrig’ in 1693 and ‘Suddenrig’ in 1744).

Soothdean Kirk (sooth-deen-, soo-, sow-din-kirk) n. church in Southdean Parish. The original church was first mentioned as early as the 1260s. Adam, the Parson, signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. It was in the Diocese of Glasgow and Archdeaconry of Teviotdale, but it is not known when it was dedicated. The patronage was held by the Douglases, passing to Scott of Branxholme in 1528, reverting to the Crown in about 1537 and recovered by the Earl of Angus in 1542/3. The church consisted of a west tower and a nave, probably of 13th century, together with a chancel, probably added in the 15th century (replacing an earlier chancel). Excavations also revealed foundations of a perhaps earlier building, a few feet to the north of the nave. The church was the location for a meeting of Lord Douglas and the other Scottish commanders in 1388, in which an English spy is meant to have revealed information that was important for the skirmish at Newcastle and the battle at Otterburn. The ruins of this original ‘Souden Kirk’ stands just below the level of the main A6088 road, about a mile after Chesters. A commemorative plaque was erected there after excavations by the Hawick Archeological Society in 1910. At the same time part of the tower was roofed over to hold some of the unearthed stonework, and the site was dedicated as a memorial to the Battle of Otterburn; repair work was carried out on the tower in 2015. A carved super-altar (of sandstone, about 23 cm by 18 cm), probably from the 15th century, was moved to the new church. This original church was abandoned in 1688 when the roof collapsed (on a Sunday, but fortunately after the congregation had left). A second church was built in 1689/90, whose roofless walls stand in the graveyard of the grounds of the new (1876) church near Chesters. This building had no ceiling and it is said that the pauper’s coffin was stored in the rafters, in plain view of the congregation. The new church contains a memorial window to James Thompson, author of ‘The Seasons’ and ‘Rule Britannia’. The new churchyard is displaced from the church, up on Chesters Brae.

The Manse for the Kirk is located to the east of Whiteburn farmstead; it was built in 1795, on the site of the former building; this was ‘The Mans’ on which tax was paid for 4 hearths in 1694 and 20 windows in 1748. The glebe lands extended to 40 acres. The patronage was held by Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme from 1528, then the Earl of Angus from 1542/3. The benefice of the Rectory was held by Douglas of Bonjedward from 1566. The church was linked with Edgerston 1960–73, united formally with Hobkirk in 1973, and linked with Cavers and Hobkirk in 1988. It became part of the wider area of Ruberslaw in 2004 (along with Denholm, Minto, Bedrule and Hobkirk). The oldest common token is heart-shaped and made of lead.

A roll of the ministers of the church is: Galfrid, Vicar in 1260; Adam, Parson in 1296; Thomas Forest, Rector in 1404; Robert Pennen, from 1424 until at least 1455; John Inglis, Rector in 1471; William Scott, Rector from at least 1482–1491/2; Richard, Parson in 1526/7; Hugh Douglas, Rector at least 1558/9–63; Walter Lyle, Exhorter in 1567; John Douglas, Reader 1574–87; Andrew Clayhills, Minister in 1575; John Scott, Reader 1579–82; William Douglas 1585; Andrew Douglas 1599–1605; George Douglas 1607–08; James Logan, presented 1608; William Weir 1610–26; James Fisher 1626–35; John Davidson 1635–66; John Dargavel 1667–70; George Baptie 1670–88; Thomas Rutherford 1689; Samuel Johnstone 1690–99; Thomas Thomson 1700–16; Thomas Leck, presented 1716; John Inglis 1718–43; John Oliver 1736–55; Robert Muirhead 1756–84; William Scott 1785–1809; John Richmond 1810–47; John Mair 1847–1902; George Henry Donald 1902–06; John R. Spence 1907–50; John Roberts 1951–65; George Urquhart 1966–72; Stephen Goodbrand 1973–82; James A. Strachan 1983–88; Adam McC. Bowie 1988–96 (it is marked ‘Soudan K.’ on Gordon’s map of Scotland in Blaeu’s 1654 atlas).

Soothdean Pairish

Soothdean Law (sooth-deen-, soo-, sow-din-law) n. Southdean Law, hill near Southdean and also formerly the name of a farm there. In 1669 the tenants were Andrew Douglas and Robert Laidlaw. The hill is on the left hand side of the A6088. It reaches a height of 300 m and contains a fort and settlement, as well as having a triangulation pillar, all on the western peak. The fort consists of a pear-shaped enclosure around the summit, about 50 m by 30 m, and is probably from the early Iron Age (perhaps the first millennium B.C.E.). There is an annex to the northeast of the main enclosure, and this is probably later. In this area there are also the remains of 11 stone-walled houses (from 4.5 to 8 m in diameter) and several enclosures, perhaps dating to the 2nd, 3rd or 4th century. The surrounding slopes contain evidence of a field-system and rig lines, some running right up to the boundaries of the fort, and hence probably of a similar age. There are also the remains of an old building and enclosure to the north-west, in the direction of Shack’s Tower. 2 Bronze Age socketed axes were found near here, but their location is unknown (it is ‘Sudenlaw’ and ‘Souden Law’ in 1669).

Soothdean Mill

Soothdean Mill (sooth-deen-, soo-, sow-din-nil) n. former corn mill in Southdean Parish, situated on a lade off the Jed Water, just to the east of Chesters village. It was valued at £5 in the Exchequer Rolls in 1538, 1539 and 1541. Patrick, Janet and Marion Oliver were joint tenants there in 1541, with William and Marion (probably also Oliver, but surname not given) renting one third of the farm. James Shiel was tenant there in the 1680s and 90s. It is referred to in 1738 by the Duke of Douglas’s factor, shortly after it had burned down. Walter Riddell was tenant there in 1797. George Bell was miller and farmer there in 1866. ‘Southdeanmillhead’ is recorded in the late 18th century. There is still a farm in the same location, with evidence of its former use as a corn mill and a saw mill (it is ‘molendini de Sowden’ in 1538, ‘molendini de Sowdene’ in 1539, ‘Soden-mylne’ and ‘molendini de Soden’ in 1541, ‘suden milne’ in 1681 and ‘Suden Mylne’ in 1694).

Soothdean Pairish

Soothdean Pairish (sooth-deen-, soo-, sow-din-pa-reesh) n. Southdean Parish, lying along the upper banks of the Jed, crossed by the A6088 road from Hawick to the Carter Bar. It is also sometimes referred to as Chesters Parish. The Soothdeanrig

Parish is about 12 miles by 7 miles in size, and is bounded by Jedburgh, Oxnam, Castleton, Hокbkirk and part of Northumberland. It was formerly in the Diocese of Glasgow and Archdeaconry of Teviotdale. In early times it was called ‘Suden’, and pronounced that way until fairly recently. In 1649 the land and crops of the Parish were valued at £5500. In 1678 the lands had the same value, split between the Marquess of Douglas and Gilbert Elliott of Wolfelee. It received part of the former Abbotrule Parish in 1777 (including the area having the former church), with a small part moved from Hockerry in 1793. However, a northern section (bordering on Bedrule, including Gatehousecote and Ruletownhead) was later transferred to Hockbery Parish. It was valued at about £6500 in 1811. Some of the Cheviots are in the Parish, and the highest hills are Carter Fell, Carlintooth Fell, Peel Fell and Wolfelee Hill. Chesters is the main settlement, although it really only grew in the 19th century. The Parish contains a great many ancient forts, remains of peel towers, etc. There are Parish Council books for 1851–1930 in the Borders Archive and the Parish records date back to 1696. In 1834 there were in the Parish: 4 heritors; 20 larger and 18 smaller tenants; about 17,000 sheep; and one ‘a’lehous’ at the Carter Bar. The register of births begins in 1696 (with a gap 1700–37 and also in the 1740s) and marriages and deaths in 1736 (but also with gaps); registration was irregular for births, but fairly complete for the proclamation of banns (it is ‘Soudon Parich’ in 1694).

Soothdeanrig (soo- skil) n. Southdeanrig, former farmstead near Northhouse, lying on part of Southdean Rig, between the Cromrig and Southdean Burns, south of the Teviot. The lands were included in a set leased by Walter Scott of Branxholme from Melrose Abbey in 1500 and stated to be in the Lairdshep of ‘Ringwoodfeild’. It is probably the place transcribed as ‘Southcoethrig’ (along with ‘Vesticotrig’ and ‘Bolburg’) where the King’s shepherd Richard Henderson is recorded in 1540. ‘The gudman of Syntoun and Arch Elliot of Thirlishoup’ (probably Walter Scott of Synton and Archibald Elliot of Thorlieshope) rented these lands, along with Cauldcluech, from Melrose Abbey in 1557; at that time it was valued at £5. Capt. Walter Scott of Satchells said that Robert Scott of Satchells (his father or grandfather probably) received the lands of ‘Soothinrig’ for his service to the house of Buccleuch. It was recorded as part of the land of Ringwoodfield in the Lordship of Melrose in 1634, 1653, 1661 and 1663. William Clerk was there in 1708. In 1718 it was surveyed along with other Buccleuch properties, at that point covering 1017 acres and bounded by Northhouse, Phaup, Binks, Bowanhill and Colterscleuch. James Grieve was recorded there in at least 1723–35 and William Main in 1724–29. In 1744 the lands were leased by Thomas Elliot, farmer at Harwood. William Elliot was there in 1748–53, James Grieve was tenant in 1751 and Walter Elliot was there in 1757. Gideon Scott was there in 1785 and John Turnbull was herd 1785–97. An enclosed area on the north-east side contained a building and sheepfold, shown on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map (it is ‘Sowdinryg’ in 1500, ‘Sowdenrig’ in 1557 and 1564, ‘Soudenrig’in 1621, ‘Sudenrig’ in 1634, ‘Soudenrig’ in 1660, ‘Suddennrig’ in 1661, ‘Suudinrigh’ in 1663, ‘Suddennrigg’ in 1693, ‘Suddenridge’ in 1708 and ‘Southdean rigg’ in 1723; it appears on Blaen’s 1654 map as ‘Sudarigg’ in the 1718 Buccleuch survey as ‘Sowdenrig’ and on Stobie’s 1770 map as ‘Southdeanridge’; see also Soothinrig).

Soothdean Rig (sooth-deen-, soo-din-rig) n. ridge in Southdean Parish, lying to the south of the main A6088, being essentially the northern shoulder of Charlie’s Knowe. The area is rich in archaeological remains, around the Carter Burn, as well as further north to Jordan Sike. In particular there are apparent remains of buildings within enclosures.

Soothdean Rig Shiel (sooth-deen-, soo-din-rig-sheel) n. shepherd’s cottage on Southdean Rig. Francis Dickson and his son Francis, were shepherds there through much of the 19th century.

Soothdean Schuil (sooth-deen-skil) n. former school in Southdean Parish. It may have been established in the early 17th century. Thomas Turnbull was schoolmaster in 1620 and George Weir in 1622. There were more than 70 pupils in the 1830s. Thomas Armstrong was schoolmaster there from 1825 and his son Richmond Armstrong from 1837. School Board minute books are in the Borders Archive for the period 1873–1919.

Soothfield (sooth-feeld) n. Southfield, farm about 4 miles south of Hawick, lying on the boundary of the old Common. It was previously split into ‘Nether Soothfield’ and ‘Over Soothfield’, and these farms were surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718. The name is also used for the general area around the farm. The marshy area just to the north was once dammed and labelled as ‘Mill Dam’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map. James Glendinning was a tenant here in 1864 when he was listed among men declared as a fugitive for attending field conventicles. Adam Laidlaw was there in 1711. Grieves farmed here from at least the 1750s until 1888, when the lease was given up by Walter; this is probably the longest tenancy by a single family of any farm of the Buccleuch Estates. There are several forts, carins and ancient settlements in the vicinity. Several flint and chert implements found in the area around the farm are in the Museum, and some others may be in the National Museum of Antiquities. A spearhead found near here is probably still in the Museum’s collection, and has been classified as Middle Bronze Age. (marked as ‘N. Southfield’ and O. Southfield’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, and also marked on Visscher’s 1689 map of Scotland; the name presumably just means the ‘south field’, but it may suggest that it was once part of Hawick Common: there are several places of the same name elsewhere in Scotland).
Soothfield Gate

Soothfield Gate (sooth-field-gà’) n. Southfield Gate, former farm, long ruined, near the road end just beyond the Caa Knowe, just after the turn-off for Southfield farm and shortly before the road reaches the Gate Burn at the Troutlawford. The name is also used to refer to the road to Southfield, and hence to the far end of the Common and the Caa Knowe – ‘...And syne, with them, by Southfield Gate, I pray I’ll hear the Burgess-Roll and answer to my name’ [JYH] (also written ‘Southfieldgate’; it is marked ‘Southfieldgate ruins of’ on J.P. Alison’s map of the Common in 1777).

Sooth Hermitage Street (sooth-her-mi’-eej-stree’) n. South Hermitage Street, part of the main B6357 through Newcastle, lying to the south of Douglas Square.

Soothinrig (soo-thin-rig) n. former name for lands at Southdean Rig, being more recently part of the estates of the Duke of Buccleuch and part of Colterscleuch farm. They were once held by an ancestor of Capt. Walter Scott of Satchells, of Colterscleuch farm. They were once held by the Callants’ Club in 1964. Until the 1830s this was the road to Newcastle and other points to the south-east (also sometimes the ‘Cross Wynd Port’ or ‘Cross Port’).

Sooth Port (sooth-pör’) n. South Port, being the gate from town leading south up the Cross Wynd until the mid-18th century. The gate was probably situated a little way up the Wynd, and was once the beginning of the road towards Newcastle. It was recorded being ‘taken down’ in 1732, and may have been more fully removed in 1762 along with the Mercat Cross. A plaque was placed on the Town Hall near the original location by the Callants’ Club in 1964. Until the 1830s this was the road to Newcastle and other points to the south-east (also sometimes the ‘Cross Wynd Port’ or ‘Cross Port’).

Soothron (sooth-rin) n., adj., arch. people from the south, i.e. the English – ‘...for at that period such was the thirst of Southron revenge that things both sacred and civil met with the same treatment’ [WaD], ‘And the fierce rievers swam the currents o’er In hot pursuit of flying Southron foe’ [GWe], ‘...Where prickling and spurring are rife, And the bluid boils up like a sea; But Southrons gand doon i’ the strife! And wha daur meddle wi’ me?’ [T] adj., arch. southern – ‘Oor forebears an ther Southron neebers coodna sit soft ava i thae days’ [ECS].

Sooth Synton (sooth-sin’-in) n. former name for the main farm of Synton (or Sinton), to distinguish it from ‘North Synton’ on the opposite side of the Ale valley. It was long the property of the Scotts. The house there was rebuilt in the 18th century and demolished in the latter part of the 20th century. James Scott from South Synton Mill was minister at Ashkirk in the late 1500s (marked with this name on Gordon’s c. 1650 map and Blaeu’s 1654 map).

soothwards (sooth-wurdz) adv. southwards – ‘...And, galloping doon the glen, Aye soothwards they disappear; They are riding their raids again For their ain or their neighbour’s gear’ [TK].

the Sootie Kittlin (thu-soo’-ee-kit-lin) n. nickname in use in the 19th century, presumably (somehow) related to a sooty kitten – ‘The Sootie Kittlin’ and Bumna Rae, Jenny Tranklets and auld Cauld Kail, Jamie Sprinkle, Kessy, the Kay, Doctor H’Yiggs and the Wat Wat Sail’ [HH].

Sooty Knowe (soo’ee-now) n. small hill just south-east of Southfield. It once contained a cairn, marked on the 1926 Ordnance Survey map, but subsequently obliterated by cultivation and quarrying.

Sorbie (sor-bee) n. farm on a side road just south of Ewes, a few miles north of Langholm, once the site of a corn mill. It was confirmed to Simon
Sorbie

Little in 1426. ‘Danid Armstrang de Sourby’ witnessed a document for the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1456. The lands were occupied by the Armstrongs into the 17th century. It was valued at £250 in 1671. John Armstrong is recorded leasing a quarter of the farm in 1672 and 1673 and there was a 1685 gravestone for John Armstrong of Sorbie in Ewes Kirkyard. Sorbie was surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch farms in 1718, when it covered 329 acres, bounded by Kirkton, Glendivian, Howgill, Middle and Over Wrae, Staplegordon, lands of the Laird of Rennaldburn and Burnfoot in Westerkirk. Thomas Armstrong leased the farm in 1735. William Borthwick was there in at least 1785–90, Mrs. Borthwick in 1794 and Alexander Borthwick in 1797. Robert Hardie was farmer in 1841 and D. Hardie in 1868. Henry Scott Riddell was born here in a shepherd’s cottage which stood in the plantation near the bridge. A plaque on the bridge commemorates the site. ‘Sorbie Haas’ was the former name used for the road from the Ewes valley to Westerkirk (the same name occurs elsewhere in Scotland and Northern England; it is ‘Sourbi’ in 1462 and ‘Sourby’ in 1456; it is ‘Sourby’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Sorby’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Sorbie (sor-bee) n. former name for lands in Liddesdale, near to Sorbietrees. In the late 1100s Race Fitz Malger granted the whole ‘shaw’ there, and 1 acre next to the shaw, with pasture for 40 cows and their calves, 2 bulls, 10 oxen and 2 horses. This was together with half of the land of Shortbutts, which was also in the territory of Sorbie. The farm of Abbotshaws may recall this case of foot and mouth disease – ‘A wailing sigh is borne upon the breeze, Athwart the shatter’d pines of Sorbietrees’ [HNo], ‘To Sorbietrees and Larriston, Wi’ news that Wull was deid, And craws micht leeve in peace at last Frae Flatt to Tweeden-heid . . . ’ [DH] (the origin of the name is probably the Old Norse ‘saurr’ and Old English ‘treow’, meaning ‘trees at the muddy farm’; it first appears as ‘Sourby’ in 1456, but could be the ‘Southby’ recorded in the c.1376 rental roll of Liddesdale; it is ‘Sorbe et Sorbetrees’ in 1541, ‘Sorbitrees’ in 1694 and ‘Sorbytrees’ in 1797, 1839 and 1851; it is ‘Sorbitrees’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Sorbie Hass (sor-bee-hass) n. name used for the road winding between Sorbie and Staplegordon. This was the main route through the lower Ewes valley to the Langholm area until Langholm became a separate parish in 1703. There was an old hawthorn tree at the junction of this road with the main Ewes road, which grew until sometime in the 19th century. It was said to be used as a meeting spot by the monks of Melrose (also written ‘Haas’, the word comes from Old Norse for a pass; the road is labelled on Crawford’s 1804 map).

Sorbietresi (sor-bee-triz) n. Sorbietrees, farm about 3 miles south of Newcastleton. When surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718 it extended to 1492 acres and included the farmsteads of High Mangerton, Catheugh and ‘Demmebeck’. It was bounded by the Kershope Burn, Flatt, Mangerton, lands of the Laird of Whithaugh and Kershope, with the farmhouse clearly shown and a wood of old trees around the Fouty Sike. In 1541 it is listed along with Ragarth and Sorbie, with value 10 merks, and stated to erpertain to the Laird of Mangerton. It was formerly a stronghold of the Armstrongs. George Mitchelson and Roland Porteous were there in 1694. A shepherd here perished during the ‘Gonial Blast’ of 1794. Archibald Armstrong was farmer there in at least 1794–97. William Armstrong was there in 1841 and 1851; he was killed by the minister of Walton (being mistaken for an intruder), and is buried in Ettleton cemetery. The present farmhouse was built by the Buccleuch Estates and is run as a bed and breakfast. The New Statistical Account reports in 1839 the existence of a circular earthwork on the farm. This is probably the site where ramparts were once removed, revealing paved area on the south side, with some burned material. In 2001 it had the dubious distinction of recording the first Scottish Borders case of foot and mouth disease – ‘For my liffe is spendet wi’ sorra, the country suffering sadly from bands of thieves, and sorres fleeing from labour and living in plenty upon the fruit of other men’s labour’ [WNK], ‘The land was simply swarming with beggars and sorries, the latter of whom extorted food or help by terrifying the dwellers in lonely farms and cottages’ [JJV].

Roman road Dere Street is also preserved. It is located off the A68 between Jedburgh and Dalkeith, the Aisle itself being a private burial vault for the Pringles, dated 1686 and built in part of the former Church.

Soutra Hospital (soo-tra-hos-pi'-ul) n. a medieval hospital, located on high ground about 40 miles from Hawick, just off the A68, also known as ‘Soltre’. It was founded by Malcolm IV in 1164 for the accommodation of travellers and pilgrims and the treatment of the sick and poor of the district. It was dedicated to the Holy Trinity. A spring near there was known as the Trinity Well, and visited by many for its supposed healing powers. It was run by the Augustinian monks from the 12th century until around 1650, being annexed in 1462 to Trinity College Church and Hospital, Edinburgh. The superior was referred to as the ‘Magister’ or Master. It fell into ruin after the Reformation, and Trinity College Church and Hospital itself was demolished in 1848 (to make way for the railway). It was said that much of the ruins were used locally for building materials in the early 19th century. Excavations at Soutra have provided a wealth of evidence relating to medieval medicine, including over 300 identified plant species. The hospital was run with the granting of 300 estates, including a small-holding in Hawick, ‘Soutra Croft’. This is almost certainly the area that became known as the Trinity lands at the eastern end of town. The endowment of this croft may have gone to an altar dedicated to Mary in the church of Soutra (also written ‘Soltre‘ and variants).

Soutralands (soo-tra-lawndz) n. another name for Trinitylands, the part of Hawick given to Soutra Hospital. In 1507 they are referred to as ‘vulgariter vocatas ly Soltrelandis’ and in 1578 as ‘Sowtre landis in Hawik’. Dedicated to Mary in the church of Soutra (also endowment of this croft may have gone to an altar dedicated to Mary in the church of Soutra (also written ‘Soltre‘ and variants).

Speirnslands (spier-minz-lawnzd) n. former name for lands in Bedrule Parish. In 1623 they are ‘Speirnslands’ when granted to Thomas Ker of Cavers-Carre, along with Fulton, Crosscleuch, Menslaws and Ruecastle. They were also named in services of heirs for Kers of Cavers Ker in 1672, 1678 and 1684. The precise location is uncertain (it is ‘Speirnslands’ in 1672, ‘Spearmanlands’ in 1678 and ‘Spirmannland’ in 1684).

Speirs (sprerz) n. Kenneth ‘Kenny’(?– ?) professional folk musician born in Gala. He worked for many years as a teacher in Hawick and lived near Denholm. He was a founder member of the John Wright Band, released the solo albums ‘Bordersong’ (1998) and ‘North Wind Blowing’ (2002) and has recently formed the band Real Time, with their self-named CD released in 2002, followed by ‘Hell and High Water’ (2004). He has also organised guitar workshops locally. His songs of a local flavour include ‘My Borderland’.

Spence (spens) n. Alan (12th/13th C. listed in the period 1214–49 as witness to the sale of lands in West Lilliesleaf by Adam, son of Adam of Durham to Melrose Abbey. His name was given as ‘Alano spens’. It seems likely that he was somehow associated with Lilliesleaf. Barry L. (1950/1–2017) son of William, he ran Spence’s Music Shop for more than half a century, taking over from his father in 1966. Starting at the height of Beatlemania, he was the main person from whom Terries bought hit records through the last decades of the 20th century and into the 21st. A blues fan himself, he stocked all kinds of music. He was a long-standing member of the Teviotdale Harriers. His wife is Margaret and their children Adrienne and Sandi. John of Condie (d.1573) son of James, he became a Lord Advocate in Scotland. He was also Queen’s Advocate to Mary, Queen of Scots, from 1555. He acted as one of the curators for the young Sir Walter Scott, whose father had been killed in 1552. In 1564/5 he signed the bond between the Scots and the Kers and also signed the further bond of 1568/9. Rev. John (19th C.) minister at Denholm Congregational Kirk 1844–46. In 1844 he married Ann Drew of Portobello. Rev. John Ryrie (b.1880) born in Helensburgh, son of James and Jane Ryrie. He graduated M.A. from Glasgow University in 1901 and B.D. in 1905, and was licensed by the Presbytery there in 1905. He became assistant at South Leith before being ordained as minister at Southdean in 1907. He remained there until 1950. He married Janet, daughter of James Currie and their children included James (b.1911). Matthew (16th C.) farmer at Weens. His barn and yard are mentioned in the 1562 document regarding the Barony of Fend-Rule.

main supplier of recorded music, instruments and equipment from 1966. The business was started by William Spence in Drumlanrig Square in 1962 before moving to its familiar location. William’s son Barry retired in 2017.

Spender (spen-dur) n. Robert ‘Rab’ (17th C.) recorded on a gravestone in Abbotrule. His wife ‘Margat Turnbul’ was commemorated on a stone that was set into the east window of the ruined church, but is now not discernible.

sperk (sperk) n. a spark – ‘ee think ee’re a bright sperk div ee?’; v. to spark – ‘And the roar of the pitte was in their mouthes, And its fire was sperkin i’ their eyn’ [JTe], ‘...whaese heidmaister Robert Wood sperked off his lifelong interest in poetry’ [IW], to issue, to sputter (as grease in cooking), to spatter.

sperkit (sper-kee’, -ki‘) pp., poet. sparked – ‘The kerlyn’s eye it sperkyt wi’ joy, Her leathery chaftis grew wide ...’ [JTe].

the Spetch (the Spec’h) n. the Spetchman’s (or Spetchmond) Haugh, an area of the Teviot above the Laurie Bridge, a favourite area for bathing in the Summer – ‘Yer great-great-grannie’s great-great-grannie Bathed in my Spetch in sunshine balmly ...’ [WP], ‘...Dookin in the Spetch was braw Divin in off the Dunk wa’’ [IW].

the Spetchman’s Haugh (the Spec’h-minz-hawch) n. full name for the Spetch, being the flat land in the Park, on the south bank of the Teviot adjacent to the Laurie Bridge. The area was used in the period 1812–14 for morning roll call of the French prisoners of war in Hawick. The name is old, but not officially recorded until recently, hence its origin is obscure. It may have been pronounced as ‘spetchin’ in a transcript from 1764 (although willows are a prominent riverside feature near there, there is no evidence to support suggestions that it comes from an old Scots word for ‘willow’, and it seems more likely to derive from a personal name like ‘Spetch’ which means a leather patch or a cobbler, in some dialects).

the Spetchman’s Sang (the Spec’h-minz-sawng) n. poem written by David Hill, with the refrain ‘A day frae Hawick’s a day wasted’. Music was written for it by Scocha in 2001.

Spetchmond Haugh (spec’h-mund-hawch) n. a variant on the old name for the Spetch.

spewin (spew-in) adj. extremely bad-tempered – ‘spewin o ill-naitur’.

the Spider Hoose (the Sp-l-dur-hoos) n. name for an outbuilding at Branzholme. Tradition says that it was either named after one of the Duke of Buccleuch’s favourite horses, or after a story connected with Wullie Craw climbing up to its rafters. It is recorded as ‘Spider’s House’ in the Ordnance Survey Name Book and map of 1859, to the west of the castle ruins.

the Board of Trustee for Manufactures. The first factor for the school was Robert Howison, and the instigation for founding it came from Douglas of Cavers, as well as Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs, John Chisholme of Stirches and some other local gentlemen. Weaving appears to have been added about 1736. The industry really took off when machinery was first introduced around 1789. In about 1850 it was estimated that yarn-spinning supplied about 1300 looms in Hawick.

spinnin jenny (spi-nin-je-nee) n. a spinning machine that allowed multiple spindles to be turned using a single wheel, invented by James Hargreaves in Lancashire in 1764, and named after his daughter. It was in use in Hawick from the late 18th century until the mid-19th. In 1816 there were as many as 100 hand spinning jennies in the town. It was eventually replaced by the ‘spinning mule’, invented by Samuel Crompton; with the invention of an automated version in 1825 it was soon in wide use in Hawick’s spinning mills.

spinnin jenny (spi-nin-je-nee) n., arch. a cranefly, ‘daddy longlegs’, a toy made with a piece of pipe-stem and a match, which spins by twisting a thread attached to the middle of the match and threaded through the pipe-stem (cf. jenny-spinner).

spinnele (spi-nul) n. a spindle – ‘And the yairs whussle throwe the hacks Frae spinnele heavy banks’ [WL].

the Spion Kop (thu-spi-in-kop) n. former drinking club based on the Loan from about 1890 (named after the mountain in Natal, which was the scene of a defeat of the British by the Boers in 1900, and Dutch for ‘Look-out Hill’).

spirly (spi-lee) adj., arch. spindly, thin.

spirly-leggit (spi-lee-lee-gee)’ adj., arch. having thin legs.

spitefi (spi-fi) adj. spiteful – ‘...Her mither’s choice, to be far to the lass, For a spitefu’ dame was Herodias’ [WL] (also written ‘spitefu’).

spither (spi-thur) n., poet. empty speech, frothy talk – ‘...Or some auld aunt’s loquacious sithter O’ with and glee’, ‘Wha vauld’ not your college spither, A rigmairie’ [JR] (this word is obscure).

Spittal (spi-ul) n. fishing village south of Berwick that became a seaside resort town in the 19th century – ‘Thae browt ‘im a mount for heiz got the smittal Juist half the size o’ a donkey at Spittal’ [MB]. Also a local name for Spittal-on-Rule and other former hospitals, e.g. Smailholm Spittal.

Spittal see Spittal-on-Rule

Spittal Brig (spi-ul-brig) n. bridge at Spittal-on-Rule, carrying the A698 across the Rule Water. The original bridge was built in 1748 by the Douglasses of Cavers and stands just to the north of the modern bridge.

Spittalflatt (spi-ul-faw)’ n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded as ‘Spittelflatt’ in 1541. It is stated to be valued at 6 merks and at that time vacant, but formerly tenanted along with the lands of Flatt. It is presumably adjacent to Flatt. The connection is to a hospital is unclear, but just to the north is Abbotshaws.

Spittal Haugh (spi-ul-hawch) n. former farm near Spittal-on-Rule. It was a tenanted farm of the Cavers estate.

Spittal Mill (spi-ul-mil) n. corn mill of the 17th century in Spittal-on-Rule, and name of the associated farm. The old Teind Barn there was presumably connected with the mill. James Scott was miller there in 1694. In the 18th century the lands of Spittal-on-Rule were separated between the Murrays, Veitches and Bunyans, with the Veitches being tenants of the mill lands. John Veitch is recorded as tenant in 1792–97, James Turnbull in 1852 and James Ingles in the 1860s.

Spittal-on-Rule (spi-ul-rool) n. former village in the easternmost part of Cavers Parish, near the confluence of the Teviot and the Rule, between Denholm and Bedrule, off the A698. Rich in history, it is now little more than a farm. A leper hospital was probably founded there before 1425, with an attached chapel, possibly dedicated to St. Mary. The location of the chapel may have been the same as the later teind barn, or very close. In the chapel in 1425/6 there was a meeting of Turnbulls, Scotts and others to investigate the leprosy of John Turnbull of Minto (since lepers were legally forbidden from holding lands). John Davidson in Minto was recorded in 1493 having stolen 100 ells of woollen cloth from there. George Thomson was recorded there in 1502 (when he had 2 pigs stolen) and John Scott was also recorded there in the same year. The patronage of the church there was granted to James Douglas of Cavers in 1508 and the ‘advocation and gift of the kirk of Spittal’ was listed among the rights inherited by the Barons of Cavers in 1509. The small graveyard was still used in the 18th century, and the vestiges of a former orchard were still clear in the early 20th century. At the nearby ‘Dead Haugh’ the Turnbulls are supposed to have begged the King’s forgiveness (with ropes around their necks) in 1494, instead every tenth man being hanged. The town was burned by Hertford’s men in 1545, probably destroying the hospital and chapel. However, the ‘advocation of the church’ was still mentioned in the 1558 Douglas of Cavers charter. In 1554 an acre of land ‘in terris hospitialis de Rolle, super lie Harparhill’ was granted to Archibald Elliot of Gorrenberry, along with the advowson of the chapel of St. Mary at Caerlenrig (perhaps suggesting a connection between the chapel at Caerlenrig and the one associated with the leper hospital at Spittal). The Mains of Spittal-on-Rule was sold by William Douglas of Cavers to Gilbert Ker of Primside in 1563. The lands were farmed by Patrick Storie in 1605 and Richard Brown in 1610. Robert and John Wright were tenants there in 1642. John Lindsay was tenant there in 1684 when declared as a fugitive for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. 9 people were listed there on the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Adam Leyden was there in 1721, Alexander Gowk in 1726, John Bunyan in 1727–30, John Veitch in 1727, James Bunyan in 1728, William Veitch in 1729–30 and William Douglas in 1733–44. John Fairbairn was there in 1781. There were 3 tenants in the 18th century, the Murrays, Veitches and Bynans, but the 3 holdings were combined in 1807. Thomas Bunyan was there in 1795. In about 1795 it was listed among parts of Cavers Parish that were nearer to Bedrule Kirk than their own kirk. William Johnstone is recorded as tenant in 1797, John Turnbull in 1841 and 1851, James Turnbull in 1861 and William G. Turnbull in 1868. It was purchased by Thomas Greenshields Leadbetter from Mrs. Palmer-Douglas in 1913. Several ruins can still be found here, including the Teind Barn, once the oldest building in the parish, and an ancient stone grave, found in a small knoll near the modern farmhouse. The 1863 Ordnance Survey map shows the location of the site of the chapel and old graveyard. The Kirkyard (or ‘Leper’) Well was said to possess healing powers, and the last Denholm witch was buried here. The hospital that gave its name to the location was possibly for lepers and maintained by monks from one of the nearby abbeys. A road bridge crosses the Rule Water nearby, with the adjacent arch of an older structure. The village was the location for a toll on the road between Denholm and Jedburgh; the Toll House at the road bend has had its windows bricked up and painted over with ‘false’ windows. Often locally called just ‘Spittal’ (and spelled various ways in the past, such as ‘Spittle’ and ‘Spittalrule’; the origin of the name is ‘hospital by the river Rule’, with ‘spital’ being a Middle Scots word for a hospital, usually connected with a monastery; there are many places in Scotland and northern England that are also called ‘Spittal’ for the same reason; the name first occurs as ‘spittale de roull’ in 1493, then ‘villa de spittale’ in 1502, ‘Spitale’ in 1509, ‘Ecclesia de Spittale’ in 1511, ‘Rewle Spittel’ in 1545, ‘the Spytyll, Roull’ in 1548/9, ‘Spittalroull’ in 1558, ‘Sptyall of Roule’ in 1563, ‘Spittroull’ in 1576/7, ‘Rowl Spittell’ in 1605, ‘Rowlespittell’ in 1610, ‘Rowllspittle’ in 1619 and ‘Spitle’ in 1694; it is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Spittell’).

Spittal Plantin (spi-ul-plawn-tin) n. Former name for a plantation near Spittal-on-Rule. It is unclear whether this referred to a wood near Spittal Ford, by the Teviot, or a wood by the Rule. The linen weavers of the Denholm area used to soak their lint near here.

Spittalrule see Spittal-on-Rule

Spittal Toll (spi-ul-tol) n. Former toll-house at Spittal-on-Rule, on the corner of the A698, with the road to the north-west formerly leading to the ford. The building is well known for its pretend painted windows. It is also known as ‘The Lucky Hoose’.

Spittaltoon (spi-ul-toon) n. Lost place name in Liddesdale, once part of the lands of Mangerton. It is listed as ‘Speteltoun’ and worth 4 pounds in a rental roll of c.1376.

Spittal Toor (spi-ul-toor) n. Spittal Tower, modern farmhouse on the site of a former fortified house, west of Bedrule, up the Tower Burn from Spittal-on-Rule. The former farm, often just called ‘Tour’, was owned by Turnbulls in the 16th century. Gavin Turnbull ‘of the Toure’ was recorded in 1551 and James Turnbull ‘of the Toure’ in 1579/80. It was valued at £104 in 1643 and 1663. The ‘Mains of Tour’ (perhaps the same as the Mains of Spittal) was valued at £560 in 1643 and at that time owned by Douglas of Bonjedward. By 1678 the former lands of Turnbull of Toor were then in the hands of the Douglasses of Cavers. The farm was tenanted by the Murrays in the 18th century, ancestors of ‘Dictionary’ Murray. John Murray was a gardener living there in 1715. [blank] Clerk was there in 1742 and Robert Cavers in 1778. In about 1795 it was listed among parts of Cavers Parish that were nearer to Bedrule Kirk than their own kirk. William Johnstone, younger, was recorded as farmer there in 1797. Robert Barrie was farmer there in 1851 and 1861. It was combined into a larger farm with Spittal-on-Rule in the 19th century (it was ‘tours of Roulwode’ in 1622 and ‘Tower’ in 1715;
split (split) n., arch. a small piece of split reed or metal, making a division through which the warp threads pass in weaving, also the space between the reeds – ‘...multiply the set of reed by the number of threads on the leaf, and divide by the number of splits in the draught’ [BCM1881].

Spottiswood (spots-wud) n. David of that Ilk (d.c.1550) son of William and Elizabeth Hopp- prune. He was probably the ‘Spottiswood of that ilk’ who was listed in 1549 among the associates of Ker of Cessford who were accused by Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme of raiding and burning his farms at Goldielands and on the Borthwick. He was succeeded by his son Ninian. James (15th C.) rector of the church of Rankilburn, listed in 1453 on a roll of bachelors entered at the newly founded University of Glasgow. He is ‘rector ecclesiae de Rankelburn’. John (16th C.) recorded in 1558 as a rector of the church of Hawick, along with John Sandilands. This is probably the same man who was appointed as minister of Calder in 1560, son of William of Spottiswood (who was killed at Flodden). This John (1510-85) graduated from Glasgow University in 1536, went to London, returned to Scotland in 1643, became a Reformer and was appointed Superintendent of London, returned to Scotland in 1643, became a

In 1867 he bought the estate of Drygrange from Sir George Leith and built a new mansion there. He married Marian Gray, daughter of James Boyd and also married a second time. His children were: Edward Mark of Drygrange (b.1872), who served with the King’s Shropshire Light Infantry; James William Lennox Boyd (b.1886); Harold Maitland (b.1888); and John Boyd (1889–98). Frances (1808–1902) brother of Mark of Riddell. In 1883 she gave money to build 6 cottages for ‘friendless and deserving widows or daughters of clergymen, and other ladies who had formerly been in better circumstances’. John (18th C.) recorded at Woll on the 1787–92 Horse Tax Rolls. He is recorded at ‘New Woll’ in 1794. It is unclear if he was connected with the later Sprots of Riddell. Col. John (1830–1907) son of Mark. He was educated in England and Germany and entered the 83rd Regiment as ensign in 1848. He served in Ireland and then for many years in India, where he was also put in charge of public works, directing the building of a road. He was Lieutenant during the Indian Mutiny of 1858. He returned to Britain in 1860, being in charge of the depot at Chatham and serving again in Ireland and in Gibraltar. He took leave from the army spending 18 months touring Europe, but then resumed duties as Major of the 91st Highlanders. He was then appointed Assistant Adjutant and Quartermaster-General for Scotland. He is said to have been the first person to recognise the potential military uses for the bicycle. He retired with the rank of Lieutenant-General in 1885, having succeeded to the Riddell estate in 1883. He is often referred to as ‘Col.’, but achieved higher rank later. He extended the main farmhouse at Riddell in 1898. He was a Deputy-Lieutenant and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1885. In 1869 he married Georgina Mary, daughter of H.E. Surtees of Redworth Hall and The Grove, county Durham. In 1878 he secondly married Cecilia Elizabeth, eldest daughter of Rev. W.B. Doveton of Corston. In 1886 he thirdly married Charlotte Gertrude, daughter of W.T. Cole of Boscastle, Cornwall (whose mother was Anne Rutherford, daughter of William Scott of Raeburn and Lessden and cousin of Sir Walter Scott). His children included: Cecilia Mary Dorothea (b.1880), who married Patrick Keith Murray; John Mark Francis (b.1881); and Col. Alexander William Ramsay (b.1883); Cecil George; Edward Walter Hearle (b.1887); Gertrude Gladys Violet (b.1888); Jack Hugh Stewart (b.1894). He wrote `History of the family of Sprot and the ancient mansion and estate of Riddell’. He also wrote several military pamphlets. John Mark Francis (b.1881) son of John. He married Meliora Hay. Their eldest son was John. Maj. John ‘Jock’ (1910–2010) of Riddell, born at old Riddell House. His sister was the Viscountess Whitelaw. He was awarded the M.B.E. He lived to his 100th year and was buried at Lilliesleaf. An autobiography was published on his 98th birthday. Mark (1802–83) eldest son of John and Mary, daughter of Benjamin Yule of Wheatfield. His father spent time in India and made his fortune in London. His great uncle Mark, was a financier who was involved with founding the London Stock Exchange. He was born in London in the same house as Benjamin Disraeli. His father died in 1817, and inheriting a fortune, he abandoned plans to enter the army. The Riddell estate was purchased in 1823, while he was still a minor. He was listed as proprietor in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. In 1826 he was still a minor. He was listed as proprietor of the Barony of Riddell, as directory. In about 1874 he was listed in the Land Tax Rolls as owner of the Barony of Riddell, as well as Friarshaw, Newhouse and other lands in Lilliesleaf Parish; he also held some of Midlem, the superiority of lands in Ashkirk and Bowden Parishes, as well as Lilliesleaf. In 1829 he married Elizabeth, daughter of John Shewell of Sutton Park, Surrey. His sons were: John (b.1830), who succeeded; Capt. Mark George (1832–59), who died in Geneva; James Lewis Boyd (1845–57), who died at school in Ealing aged 13; and Edward William (b.1846) of Drygrange. Maj. Mark of Muselee and Riddell (20th C.) gained the rank of Major in the Royal Scots Guards. He was President of the Scottish Agricultural Organisation Society. He served as Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He married Meloria, daughter of Sir John Adam Hay. Their daughter Cecilia Doriel married Sir William Whitelaw and became Viscountess Whitelaw (also sometimes ‘Sprot’).

S.S. Mary an David (sintz-mi-ree-an-da-dvaid) n. Roman Catholic Chapel at 15 Buccleuch Street. This was the first Catholic church in Hawick since the Reformation, made necessary largely by the arrival of Irish workers, who had been meeting informally through the 1820s and 1830s. Fr. William Wallace of Traquair worked to build the church and purchased land in 1841. This plot (later designated 15 Buccleuch Street) was bought from William Wilson, between the Subscription Rooms and the meeting house of the Society of Friends. The land formerly held several 2-storey buildings, which were demolished. The foundation stone was laid in June 1843 (amid inclement weather), officiated by Fr. Wallace himself, flanked by the 2 Bailies. It was opened by Bishop Gillis the following year, with several other priests in attendance, as well as Earl and Lady Traquair and the choir of St. Mary’s. It original seated 400, the furnishings, altar and pulpit being given by the Earl of Traquair. When erected it was the only Catholic church between Edinburgh and Carlisle. A house for the priest was built in 1850/1 on the property immediately to the south and the associated school was started in 1854 (later with a separate building behind the Chapel on Buccleuch Terrace). A side aisle on the south was constructed in 1879, increasing the seatings by about a factor of 2. The Statue of the Sacred Heart was unveiled in 1913 and a War Memorial in 1920. The adjoining property (built as the Subscription Rooms) was purchased in the 1920s, and opened by Archbishop McDonald as the new Halls in 1930. The ornamental facade was removed in 1967 when renovations extended the front by a few feet. For much of the 20th century there was an assistant in Hawick, as well as the Priest. The Scottish Catholic Archives have records covering the period 1793–1939 and there are marriage and birth records from 1847 in the National Archives. The roll of the priesthood is: James Monaghan 1846–47; Patrick Taggart 1847–87; Patrick Shivers 1887–92; John Stevenson Lyle 1892–1912; George H. Bennett 1912–18; Thomas Gillon 1918–24; Edward Mellon 1924–30; Dominic Hart 1930–38; Daniel Kelly 1938–42; Gordon Gray 1942–47; James K. Stainton (stän’-in) n. Alexander ‘Elec the Bellman’ (1853/4–1926) son of Samuel, he was Hawick’s last Bellman, effectively acting as Town Crier. He lived on Dickson Street or perhaps 10 Wilton Crescent. He may be the same Alexander who was Precentor at the East Bank Kirk. He was celebrated in a poem by William Peffers – ‘A wee bit earnest, faithfu’ man, Far sma’er than his voice. Ye’d wonder how he can contain Sic devastatin’ noise’ [WP]. He can also be seen in a portrait by ‘Elliot’. A photograph of him used to hang in the staircase at Arthurl Armstrong’s store. He also appears in a film clip at the Ver tish Hill Sports in 1909/10, wearing a distinctive ‘yachting-style’ hat. Private Thomas R. Stainton (1896/7–17) of the Black Watch was probably his son. James (b.1800/1) from England, he was a nail maker in Hawick. In 1851 he was at 8 O’Connell Street and in 1861 was a ‘Nail maker Master’ at 2 Melgund Place, employing 1 man. His 1st wife died in 1840 and his 2nd wife was Janet, from Kirkton. Their children included Elizabeth. Robert (c.1825–90) born in Hawick, son of music teacher James, he apparently left Scotland in 1856 after an argument with his father. He became a preacher, living for a while in Chester and travelling around the north of England. He married Elizabeth Warburton and later Eliza Hayton Davis, and his sons were Robert Kirk and James H. Following a famous court case in 1867, in which several Union men were convicted of bombings and other ‘rat-tening’ crimes, he interceded to try to get one of the men his old job back. He is buried at Huds-ersfield. Samuel ‘Sam’ (1820/21–1894) a native of Berwick, he went to Nottingham to learn the stocking-making trade, then moved to Hawick, where he was Sunday School Teacher, Organist and Precentor at Wilton Church from 1855. In that same year he led the formation of the Sax horn Band, for which he was the first bandmaster. His regular job was a woollen frameworker. He was living at 12 O’Connell Street (probably formerly No. 4) in 1851 and on Dickson Street in 1861. Stalker  (staw-kur)  n.  Rev. James (d.1816) son of John of Edinkillie, he graduated from King’s College, Aberdeen in 1777. His brother Donald was schoolmaster at Rothiemurchus. He was licensed by Chanonry Presbytery in 1784 and in 1785 was ordained as assistant minister at Fort George. Here he was Chaplain to the Royal Forces, leading to some service that earned the gratitude of his Patron, William, Duke of Roxburghe (then Lord Bellenden). He was also made a Burgess of the Burgh of Nairn in 1793. He was presented as minister of Lilliesleaf by the Duke of Roxburghe in 1804 and admitted there the following year. However, this was against the wishes of some of the Lilliesleaf parishioners, who wanted the previous incumbent’s son John Campbell as their minister. This disagreement led to about 70 families seceding to form a Relief congregation, which built the secession church in the village. Despite a rocky start, he stayed at Lilliesleaf until his death, and remained unmarried. A letter to his brother describes in detail the circumstances of his presentation to Lilliesleaf Parish. He subscribed to Andrew Scott’s book of poetry, published in Kelso in 1811. He died at the Manse.

stammack  (staw-muk)  n., poet. stomach, appetite – ‘The master’s hearte raise to his hoss, His stomach vow’d to flynch’ [JTe], ‘Syne, when the stammack’s satisfied, The twae heids cry, ‘Weel met!’’ [DH] (also written ‘stomach’).

stammel  (staw-nul)  v., arch. to stumble, walk with a hobbling gait, to stumble upon something – ‘I stammmit in upon them when they were courtin’, Roxb.’ [JoJ] (see also stam and stample).

Stamper’s  (stawm-purz)  n. public house at the north corner of North Bridge Street and Croft Road (address 2 North Bridge Street), in part of the former post office building. It is well known as a local music venue.

stample  (stawn-pul)  v., arch. to stamp, walk heavily – ‘The auld gudeman cane stamplin ben, On battle he was bent . . . ’ [JTe].
Standard Grade

Langholm, Longtown, Carlisle, Penrith and Lancaster. The other coach operating at that time was the ‘Royal Mail’.

Standard Grade (stan-durd-gräd) n. certificate given for completion of lower SCE exams, usually taken in the fourth year of High School, replacing the Ordinary Grade.

standart (stan-durf’, -durt) n., adj., arch. standard – ‘...by plurality of votes Robert Scott, merchant, called of Falnash, was elected to carry the standart’ [BR1722].

Standhill (stawnd-hil) n. site for sidings on the Waverley Line, just north of Hassendean, in Ancrum Parish. The farm (or at least its 2 parts) was once owned by the Kers. David Murray was recorded there in 1494/5, when sheep, cattle, horses and other goods were pillaged from there, as well as the farm being burned. George Turnbull of Standhill is recorded in 1553/4. John Hodge was there in 1580. Hector Turnbull had a charter of ‘feu farm’ of the ‘2 1/2 lands’ of Standhill in 1610 and it was held by the Turnbuls of Knowe, as recorded in 1631 and in 1660 and existing in the National Archives. John Turnbull in ‘Standhill’ had his lands valued at £120 in 1643; he is also recorded as owner in the Land Tax Rolls of 1663 and 1678. It appears to have passed to the Riddells about 1664. However, Turnbull of Standhill is supposed to have been the leader of the Covenanter supporters who besieged and broke into Drumlanrig’s Tower in 1679. It later formed part of the estates of the Elliots of Minto; there are deeds among the Minto papers dating from 1610 to 1806. ‘Captain Turnbull’ paid tax for 14 windows there in 1748. In 1779 it is recorded that the lands were owned by ‘Mrs Turnbull and Mrs Stenhouse’ and in 1788 by Capt. Stenhouse. John Amos was farmer there in 1794–97. The Minto estates sold it in 1951 (marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map; it was ‘standhil’ in 1494/5).

stand oot (stawn-doot) n., arch. a strike. Hawick’s first one recorded was in 1817 – ‘Hawick had hitherto been free of stikes, or ‘stand oots’, as they were called’ [RM].

stand oot (stawn-doot) n., poet. to be in opposition, rebel – ‘...Nae stoutlier studie out for their laird, Nor did the lads o’ Liddesdale’ [CPM].

St. Andrew (sin’-awn-droo) n. patron saint of Scotland, who was crucified on a diagonal cross in Patras, some of his bones later finding their way to Scotland. The saltire was adopted as the flag of Scotland, according to legend because it appeared against the blue sky when King Angus prayed to St. Andrew during a battle in 832 C.E. It is reputedly the oldest national flag in Europe. The same saltire has made its way onto the Hawick flag.

St. Andrew’s Convent (sin’-awn-drooz-kon-vin’) n. name of the former convent and nursing home at Stirches House.

St. Andrew’s Kirk (sin’-awn-drooz-kirk) n. St. Andrew’s Church, founded as a branch of the Free Church in 1866, to serve the north end of town and also Wilton. Originally called ‘Wilton Free Kirk’, it was founded largely through the efforts of Thomas Laidlaw and George Hobkirk, with the first organisational meeting taking place in Peter Laidlaw’s warehouse in March 1866. The congregation started with 115 members from Hawick Free Kirk, first meeting in the Exchange Hall until the church was built on North Bridge Street in 1868/9, and then named St. Andrew’s. Its gothic-style design was by Glasgow-based architect J.T. Rochead, and it had a spire reaching a height of 103 feet. It was constructed by local building firm George Tait. The church could hold 900 people, and below it was a hall that could accommodate about 200 for Sunday School and other activities. The church manse was built off Weensland Road in 1890. A church organ was added in 1904 and in 1911 there were major alterations (designed by J.P. Alison), with the addition of a church hall. A serious fire in 1922 resulted in major repairs and a closure of 18 months, during which time the congregation joined St. John’s. The church was demolished in 1959/60, with congregation becoming part of Trinity Church. The site was used as a petrol station and later a car wash. A roll of the ministers is: Duncan Stewart 1868–1908; William Farquharson 1908–14; James A. T. Kennedy 1915–21; John Mowat 1922–30; George Sutherland 1930–40; Neil D. Craig 1941–46; John S. Miller 1954–59.

St. Andrew’s Nursin Haim (sin’-awn-drooz-nur-sin-häm) n. private nursing home in Stirches, located in the old home of John Blenkhorn. It cares for about 50 elderly patients, is run by Augustinian Sisters and has its own chapel. It is also known as ‘Stirches House’ and ‘the Convent’.

St. Andrew’s Place (sin’-awn-drooz-plis) n. street planned for Stirches, but never built, despite appearing on Burrow’s street map.

stane (stän) n. a stone, stone – ‘A’ ye wha pry deep into nature In yirth, an’ stane, an’ a sic matter ...’ [JoHa], ‘My stanes the steps o’ those hae borne, By which they gloried to be worn’ [AD].
‘Happy sall he be that tak’s an’ devals thy wee anes agayne the stanes’ [HSR], ‘I couldn’a thole the cauld hearting stane . . .’ [JEDM], ‘Oh! Had thae rugged stanes a tongue What sermons they could preach’ [JT], ‘Wulton was biggit in comely thae rugged stanes a tongue What sermons they laid a’ right sair on me . . .’ [CPM], ‘Evil deeds, ye dirty savage, and staned us oot, an’ staned us a’ the time we were there’ [WNK], ‘‘To sit stane-dumb . . .’’ [JoHo].

Stane-berk (stän-berk) n. arch. liverwort, lichen (noted by J. Jamieson).

Stane-blind (stän-blind) adj. arch. completely blind.

Stane-clod (stän-klod) n. arch. a stonecast, stones-throw (noted by J. Jamieson).

Stane-deef (stän-deef) adj. completely deaf, as deaf as a stone.

Stanedge see Stonedge

Stane-dumb (stän-dum) adj. arch. completely silent – ‘To sit stane-dumb . . .’ [JoHo].

Stonefield (stän-feeld) n. area around the Stonefield Place housing scheme, and the former Stonefield Mill, between Liddesdale Road and the old railway line.

Stonefield Centre (stän-feeld-se’-ur) n. club for old people living in the area around the Stonefield housing development, converted from a building on the old brewery site. It has more recently been used as a nursery.

Stonefield Cottage (stän-feeld-ko’-eej) n. former house attached at the north end of the Rockvale block on Lynnwood Road, reached over the mill lade by a foot bridge. The block was also referred to as ‘Stonefield Cottages’ and perhaps also ‘Slitrig Cottages’.

Stonefield Mill (stän-feeld-nil) n. factory on the eastern side of Lynnwood Road, demolished in 1973. It originally received water power via the Slitrig Dam. It was purchased by William Elliot in 1850. It was occupied by Laing & Irving in the mid-19th century, then Noble & Richardson for a few years (from about 1871), and later Grieve & Laidlaw and J. & R. Macnee, becoming a spinning factory around the 1920s. A painting showing the mill was painted by J.F. Pollocj in about 1890 and is in the Museum (also written as ‘Mills’).

Stanefield Place (stän-feeld-plis) n. Stonefield Place, housing aimed at elder people, built on the sites of the former Buccleuch Nurseries and Stonefield Mill in 1971–73. A footpath leads there to the old railway line. The housing underwent extensive redevelopment in 2015/6.

Stanegarthside (stän-girth-sid, -garth-) n. mansion house above the banks of the Liddel Water on the English side. It was originally built as a tower house perhaps around the 13th century, with wings added in 1682. It was long the seat of the Forsters. William Glendinning was at Nether Stanegarthside in 1778 – ‘What map of the Border Country would be complete without Bewcastle, and Stanegarthside, where the Captain of Bewcastle lived?’ [DH].

Staneholm (stän-höm) n. former farmstead in the Upper Teviot valley. It was part of the larger set of lands called Ringwoodfield when leased from Melrose Abbey by the Scotts of Branxholme in 1500. It is probably the land called ‘Grangia alas Stanyhetoun’ which ‘Sym Scot of Fernili and Arche Elliot of Gorumberry’ rented from Melrose Abbey in about 1557; it was worth £4 at that time. Blaeu’s c.1654 map shows it as ‘Stonyhelme’ south of Southdeanrig on the ‘Cairtham’ Burn. The precise location is uncertain, but a connection with Staney Hill, just east of Southdean Rig, seems likely.

Stoneknapper (stän-naw-pur) n. arch. a stone-breaker – ‘. . . the teime a stane-nappin injin gaed-on leike a tuim mill, – skrushin – chaimpin – haanshin – nickerin – dirlin – snokerin – an reesellin’ [ECS] (also ‘napper’).

the Stane o Destiny (thu-stän-ô-des-ti-nee) n. stone on which Kings of Scotland were historically crowned at Scone, which was removed and taken to Westminster by Edward I in 1296, to be fitted into a chair used to crown subsequent English sovereigns. Although just a rather unremarkable oblong of locally-mined sandstone, the object was held to have mystical properties, with legends claiming it came from ancient Ireland or even the Middle East. In 1950 a group of 4 Scottish students removed the stone from the Abbey and ‘repatriated’ it to Scotland. With major Border crossings closed the group smuggled the stone by car up the A7 and there is a rumour that it spent the night in Hawick (perhaps in Bob and Nessie Oliver’s shop on Drumlanrig Square) on its way north. Certainly one of those responsible, Alan Stuart, had a granny who lived in Hawick at the time. There was a huge police operation to find the culprits and the stone, which was deposited at Arbroath Abbey a few months later, quickly being returned to England, but ‘loaned back’ to Scotland in 1996.

Staney Brae

That felt like staney rocks’ [AY] (also written as bed’ [ECS], ‘A flock mattress wi’ muckle lumps atween the treis that skuggeet Barnhill’s staney’.

A farmstead there is recorded in 1544. It could be the ‘Stanehilburnfoot’ where labourer Walter A. was recorded at. A waterfall known as ‘Kiddslinn’ or ‘Kitty Linn’ stands at the foot of the stream, while higher up it contains a platform suggessted that it is the same as what is now called the Roughley Burn.

Stanesden Burn (stänz-din-burn) n. former name for a stream near Hermitage Castle. It is mentioned in a description of the lands of ‘Merchinlee’ granted to monks of Kelso, which formed the site of the original hermitage. The description mentions a ford crossing the Hermitage Water where this stream joined. It has been suggested that it is the same as what is now called the Roughley Burn.

Staneshiel (stän-sheel) n. former farmstead in Liddesdale, close to the Staneshiel Burn. This is probably the ‘Stanesheildes’ and ‘Stanesheld’ where John Nixon and Jenkin Nixon were in 1544. It was ‘Stanny sheil’ and ‘Stain sheile’ in 1590 and ‘Staneshale’ in 1595. John Crozier was also recorded at ‘Staneshale’ in 1590.

Staneshiel Burn (stän-sheel-burn) n. stream in the upper Liddel valley. It rises near Bloodbush Edge and runs roughly north-west to join the Liddel Water between Dinlabyre and Steeleroad-end. There are remains of cottages at the foot of the stream, while higher up it contains a waterfall known as ‘Kiddslinn’ or ‘Kitty Linn’. A farmstead there is recorded in 1544. It could be the ‘Stanahilburnfoot’ where labourer Walter Hislop was living in 1835.

Staneygill (stän-ee-gil) n. lands in Liddesdale, to the north of Whisgills. In a rental roll of c.1376 ‘Stanygill’ was valued at 5 shillings. In a 1541 roll ‘Stanygill’ was leased to Simon Armstrong (possibly of Tinnisburn), and valued at 5 shillings. In 1632 it is listed among the Liddesdale possessions of the Sheriff of Teviotdale, as well as among the lands of Thomas Kerr of Ancrum. Stanystygill Rig lies to the east of Tinnis Hill, with the Stanystygill Burn running roughly southwards to meet the Tinnis Burn near Redmoss. Where Black grain and Dow Sike join the Stanystygill Burn is a sheepfold built over the remains of a rectangular structure, possibly a tower. Jeffrey suggested this was ‘Puddingburn Ha’’, but that seems more likely to be much further north, near Paddington Sike. The remains of the tower here are about 7 m by 5 m, with the east wall missing entirely. Further upstream, on the west bank, is a platform suggestive of the location of an illicit still (it is ‘Stannygill’ and ‘Stanygill’ in 1632; ‘Staneygill’ is marked on Blaeu’s c.1654 map).

Staneyhaugh (stän-ee-hawgh) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded on a rental roll of c.1376, with a value of 8 shillings. The precise location is unknown, but probably on the west side of the Hermitage Water (it is ‘Staneyhaich’ around 1376; it could be connected with Staneshiel).

Staney Hill (stän-ee-hil) n. hill to the southwest of Old Northhouse, reaching a height of 335 m. It may be related to the lands of ‘Staneholm’, recorded in the 16th century (it is ‘Stony Hill’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, but ‘Staney Hill’ today).

Staney Meadi (stā-nee-mē-dī) n. former name for lands near Newton in Bedrule Parish, listed as ‘Stoney Meadow’ in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls.

Staney Stewart (stā-nē-stew-ur’) n. dyke builder in John Ballantyne’s song ‘Pawkie Paitemson’. His first name is unknown, but one possibility is Andrew Stewart, and agricultural labourer living at Crow Byres in 1841, about the time the song was written – ‘And as for Stoney Stewart, He’s often scarce o’ stanes, And for to mend his aulf fail dykes Aw’ll leave him ma auld banes’ [JSB].

stang (stawng) n., arch. a sting, wound, stab or pain made by a sting – ‘Her words nae stang was cairry’ [WL].

Stanger (stān-jur) n. Tony (1967/8–) rugby winger, he attended Wilton an Hawick High and played for the school teams, as well as the Wanderers and Linden. He first played for Hawick R.F.C. while still in high school in 1985/6. He later played for the Borders, Edinburgh, Grenoble and Leeds Tykes. He first played for Scotland in 1989 and gained 52 caps, scoring a total of 106 points, including a record 24 tries, one of which was the famous Grand Slam winner. He also played for the British Lions in 1997. He married Bid and settled in New Zealand, running a company that helps to develop coaching skills – ‘Come and tell me, Tony Stanger, have your feet returned to earth? Was it for this magic moment that your mother gave you birth? When you louped halfway to Heaven, did you hear the mighty roar, As fifty thousand voices were all willing you to score’ [TD].

Stanishope (sta-nis-hōp) n. farmstead in Cavers parish, to the north of the Maidens, reached via a track from Shankend. The Catrail passes near here. It is probably the ‘Scanehushope’ among lands in the Barony of Cavers resigned in 1368 by Thomas Baliol to his superior William, Earl of Douglas. It is listed as part of the holdings of Douglas of Cavers in a charter of 1511. There are further deeds from 1614, 1624 and 1625 in the Douglas of Cavers papers. It was owned by the Elliots of Stobs at the end of the 17th century. It was listed among the lands of Eliot of Stobs in 1678. It was still in the Barony of Cavers when inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687 and by his brother Archibald in 1698. It was still listed among the possessions of Sir William Eliot of Stobs in the Land Tax Rolls of 1811. William Little was shepherd there in 1861 and R. Elliot was there in 1868. The area is under forestation and an extensive area around the former stealing are now sometimes called ‘Stennishope forestry plantation’ (also written ‘Staneshope’, ‘Stenishope’ and ‘Stennishope’ on the Ordnance Survey map; the origin is probably from Old English ‘stan hus hop’, ‘the valley with the stone house’; the name first occurs as ‘Stanhushope’ in the mid-14th century, is ‘Stanishop’ in 1511, ‘Staineyshope’ in 1678 and is transcribed ‘Stoniehome’ in 1687 and ‘Stainhope’ in 1698).

stank (stawngk) n., arch. a pond, swampy pool, ditch ‘Alang by the dead water stank, Jock Fenwick I met on the lea, But his saddle was toom in a clank, An’ wha daur medle wi’ me?’ [T] (from French).

stank-hen (stawngk-hen) n., arch. a water-hen, moor hen, Gallinula chloropus.

stankish (stawng-kish) adj., arch. somewhat stagnant – ‘stankish water’ [GW].

Stanledge (stan-līj) n. former name for Stanedge.

stanner (staw-nur) n., poet. a rounded pebble on a shore – ‘Stannirs, the rough projecting stones on the shore of the sea, on the banks of rivers, and the braes of burns’ [JL].

stanner (staw-nur) n., poet. a stander, pillar – ‘He mde the stannirs o’t o’ siller …’ [HSR].

stannin (staw-nin) pres. part. standing – ‘hei was stannie at the bottom o the Policeman’s Brae’, ‘He turns the wuldirniss intil ane stannin’ water, an’ drye grund intil wals o’ water’ [HSR], ‘…so that A was stannin on bluiddy Ancrum Muir’ [ECS], ‘There was Jock, wui Robbie an Yid, an kens whae forby, stannin at the road-end’ [ECS], ‘For now o’ the Loan I used to ken There’s hardly a stannin’ stane’ [DH], ‘…Comes brestin abune the tides o’ Nicht To the cauld drife fule still stan’in there’ [DH], ‘…Dotards, can ye leave them stannin’?’ [GW], ‘Ee sei, the Queen was at the tither side o’ the carfrew where Aw was stannin’’ [BW1978] (also written ‘stain’in’, etc.; note that ‘stand’ is usual for the verb, but the present participle loses the d).

stannin stane (staw-nin-stān) n. a large stone that appears to have been deliberately placed in its location, often upright, and of great antiquity. Examples near to Hawick include individual stones at Midshiels, near Saughtree (the Knocking Stone and the White Stones), at Hermitage (the Buck Stone), on Brown Rig, at Lilliard’s Edge and near Priesthaugh (the Tinlee Stone), as well as the stone circles at Burgh Hill and Nines-tane Rig.

Stan Reid’s (stan-reedz) n. popular venue for dances in the pre-WWII years, located in the Drill Hall, and organised by Stan Reid. For the next few years dances were organised by the Territorial Army, but still referred to as ‘Stan Reid’s’.

Stansfield (stanz-feeld) n. Sir James (d.1687) receiver general for the Scotts of Buccleuch from 1673, taking over the position from Patrick Scott of Langshaw. He was a Colonel in the Parliamentary army. He was murdered near Haddington by his son Philip, apparently because he dis-inherited him. The curious story involves the body apparently bleeding at the son’s touch, this being considered as a divine sign of his guilt, and after the son was hanged his tongue was cut out for cursing his father, his hand cut off for patricide and his severed head put on public display.

stap (stapw) v., arch. to stop up (a hole), block, stuff, choke, fill up – ‘Drawe out alsa the speer, an’ stap the waye agayne thame that persikute me …’ [HSR], ‘…thaye ar like the deef eddart that stapps hir lug’ [HSR], ‘Hawick does not use ti stap for to stop except in the expression ti stap up = to choke up or to cram’ [ECS], ‘The brander’s stappeet up!’ [ECS], ‘…An’ stap, a dish in ilka haund, Wi’ bread ye scarce could see’ [WFC], ‘So … I’m weel-weshed, then stapped wi’ ingin, And yits and liver, lites and a’ thing …’ [DH], ‘Then he staps his pipe Wi’ bacca rank, And trots till he’s dry Alang the bank’ [DH], ‘I liked to see the big man twirl the poke, And stap it fu’ o’ sugar and brose meal’ [WL], to thrust, push vigorously – ‘Stap eet in throwe the door!’ [ECS], n., arch. a stopper, stave of a wooden vessel, ‘Ti take a stop oot o yoon’s bicker’ means literally to reduce the size of one’s dish, or figuratively to humble someone – ‘I’ll taik a stap oot o yoor bicker = I’ll reduce your allowance’ [ECS], ‘Ti gang a’ ti stapps’ is to fall to pieces, become worthless, deteriorate, degenerate – ‘Ma wesheen-tub is geznt. Its gaen an ti staps’ [ECS].

Staplegordon (stā-pul-gor-din) n. village a few miles north of Langholm and name for the surrounding parish. The settlement was formerly of greater importance and was once a burgh in its own right. The parish was briefly united with Roxburghshire following an Act of Parliament in 1672. It was united with Wauchope in 1702 and its name changed to Langholm Parish (it is ‘Stabiglotourn’ in 1324 and ‘Stablegordon’ on Sandison’s c.1590 map).

stappin (staw-pin) adj., arch. striding awkwardly (also written ‘stapuin’; noted by J. Jamieson).

Starcleuch (stawr-klooch) n. a hill between Cauldcleuch and Greatmoor, about 10 miles south of Hawick, also known as Starcleuch Edge – ‘Breath of the heather from glade and glen, By Cauldcleuch and Starcleuch and Penchrise Pen’ [JYH], ‘Just the verses, in strong-standing Scots – un-pawky, hale and sound – and all on one theme. A hill called Starcleuch Edge’ [DH].

Stark (stawrk, sterk) n. Andrew (1827–1900) from Westruther, Berwickshire, son of Robert and Isabel Moir. In 1861 he was a grocer and corn dealer on Dickson Street in Wilton. He was later a farmer in Lilliesleaf Parish and at Broom in Ancrum Parish. In 1858 in Wilton he married Eliza, daughter of James Riddel. Their children included: an unnamed son (b.1858); Mary (b.1860); Jane (b.1862); James (b.1864); Isabella (b.1866); Robert (b.1870); and William (b.1875). the Star o’ Robbie Burns

star an o’er loup (star-in-ôr-lowp) n., arch. the limited right of livestock to startle and leap over a boundary into neighbouring lands — ‘...did not disturb the Hawick horses, as they allowed start and oer loup ...’ [C&L1767], ‘The tenants of his Grace, whose farms lay contiguous to the town-common, had been in the practice of taking start and o’er loup with their cattle on the burgh muir’ [RW] (see also owerloup).

the Station (Thu-stá-shin) n. Hawick Railway Station, built when the Edinburgh line was opened in 1849 and reconstructed in 1862 with the opening of the Carlisle line. The original station was about 80 m west of the newer one, and was then used as a goods depot. An extra platform and subway were constructed for the 1914 Highland Show. The Station area also had extensive goods yards and sidings, and the offices of coal merchants. The last train left on 5th January 1969, with the track lifted 2 years later, and the buildings demolished in 1975. The site eventually saw the opening of the Leisure Centre in 1982. There is little remaining to indicate a station was ever there, although part of the original platform is incorporated into the footpath to Burnfoot. The name is still occasionally used to describe this area, or more commonly to refer to the pub across the street, which is one of the few tangible reminders of Hawick’s railway past.

the Station Brig (Thu-stá-shin-brig) n. popular name for the bridge across the Teviot, officially called North Bridge — ‘When ee stood there on the Station Brig Just lookin’ at the waitter There was naething mair excitin’ And naething else wad maitter’ [AY].

Station Buildings (stá-shin-bil-dinz) n. block of houses between Commercial Road and Laing Terrace, previously part of Dovemount Place, but renamed in 1890, and now being ‘Station Buildings, Dovemount Place’. It is 4 storeys high, with shops on the bottom and ornamental dormers. The much more plain lower block on the corner of Commercial Road was added later (this may be the block designed for Alan Watt by J.P. Alison in 1894). In its early days the name ‘Station Buildings’ was displayed prominently at the top. Businesses here include James Byrdon, grocers, and Kearney the chemists.

the Station Hotel (Thu-stá-shin-hó-tel) n. hotel and pub on Dovemount Place, opposite Hawick’s former railway station. Also popularly known as ‘the Station’ or ‘the Station Bar’. The building was constructed in 1871, with Scots Renaissance and Baronial features, and is Grade C listed. The signal box by the station had the ability to ring a bell there to warn passengers in the bar that a train was leaving in 5 minutes.

station-maister (stá-shin-mäs-tur) n. a station-master — ‘...where the station-maister has verra obviously just laid doon his howe and put on his official coat and hat when he heard the signal wires gurrin’ [DH].

Station Road (stá-shin-röd) n. name sometimes used for former the road from Dovemount up to the Station.

the Station Viaduct (Thu-stá-shin-vI-adukt) n. main railway bridge crossing the Teviot just south of the Station, having 6 arches. The last train crossed it on 18th April 1971, when lifting track. The viaduct was blown up (twice!) in September 1975. The base of one of the pillars is... still visible in the river (also called ‘Teviot Viaduct’ or just ‘the Viaduct’).

statute (sta-tew’) v., arch. to decree, enact – ‘...the two present bayleyes, and toum counsell being convened, did statut and enact unanimously lie nemine contradicente ...’ [BR1694], ‘...the said Bayleyes and town Counsell did statut and ordaine that the said Robert Hardie ...should carie the said colour ...’ [BR1706], pp., arch. decreed, enacted – ‘The said day, it is statute and ordained that the cordiners shall try this market for insufficient leather and unbankit schone ...’ [BR1643], ‘It was statut, enacted, and ordained that noe person ...should ...transport or Cary any other colour, pencell, or standard ...’ [BR1707] (also spelled ‘statut’).

statutory labour (sta-tew-tu-re-kä-bur’) n. a system by which labouring classes were required to undertake public works up to a certain number of days a year. It was particularly used for the upkeep of roads, following Acts of 1617, 1661 and 1669. In later years there was some compensation for the work done. The system was abolished in 1845 and replaced by land assessment to pay for hired labour. But this would be a regular burden on local men in the late 17th, entire 18th and early 19th centuries.

staucher (stau-chur’) v., poet. to stagger, stumble about – ‘She chased auld Winter frae the lea Ti staucher hame ti Greenland ...’ [WP], ‘Gin wi’ your faith set firm aboon, Ye staucher on alane ...’ [WL] (also spelled ‘stacher’).

staun see stan

staur-licht (stau-r-licht’) n., poet. starlight – ‘...The whaups a’ beddit, and ilk lamb and yowe, Snug aneth the staur-licht, the haill nicht afore him’ [DH] (see also ster, stern and starnie).

stave (stāv’) v. to sprain, wrench, bemeum – ‘A staved ma pinkie when the baa dunted off cett’, ‘Staived thoom = a sprained thumb (a painful strain caused by the end of the thumb coming into violent contact with a hard body)’ [ECS], n. an injury caused by a sprain or twist – ‘it’s no broken, it’s just a stave’ (also written ‘staive’).

stave (stāv’) v., arch. to walk aimlessly (noted by J.A.H. Murray).

stavel (stā-vul’) v. to stagger, stumble (also written ‘staivel’).

Staven (stā-vin’) n. John (16th C.) listed in the Admiralty Court Book in 1557 as ‘Johnne Staven in Hawick’ when he purchased a tenement in Jedburgh from advocate John Moscrop. The land was on the Canongate, and he paid £20. It is unclear if his surname has been transcribed correctly; it could be ‘Steven’ or ‘Stavert’, for example.

Stavert (stä-vur’) n. Adam (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elizabeth Pott and their children included William (b.1635) and John (b.1640). Adam of Hoscote (1750–1827) son of Thomas and Elizabeth Pott. He bought the portion of Hoscote that his brother George had inherited from their uncle, George Pott, and also bought the other portion from his cousin John Grieve. He is probably the Adam recorded at Tordrig on the 1785–90 Horse Tax Rolls and 1791–97 at Hoscote. In 1793 he paid the land tax at Philogar in Howman. He is recorded at Hoscote on both the 1797 Horse Tax and Dog Tax Rolls. He was confirmed in the lands of Hoscote by Hugh Scott of Harden in 1801. He paid the land tax at Hoscote in 1802. He was listed as a Commissioner for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1805 and 1819 (although his name was transcribed as ‘Stewart’). He was owner of Cunzierton and Harcarse in Oxnam Parish, as well as Outerside in Robertson Parish, according to the Land Tax Rolls of 1811. He was the Laird of recorded when he borrowed money from William Elliot of Harwood in 1824 and still Laird in 1825. He married Anne, daughter of John Brownell of Breck, Recorder of the Isle of Man. Their only child was Hannah, who married Archibald Dickson of Hassendeaburn. In 1797 he secondly married Agnes, daughter of John Scott of Whitehaugh; she is recorded as a widow in 1851, living with her brother James Scott at Whitehaugh, and she died in 1855, aged 83. Their children were: Thomas (1798–1847), who succeeded; Margaret (1801–65), who also later succeeded to Hoscote; Elizabeth (b.1805–1862), who married Richard Bryn; and John (1807–59), who succeeded his brother Thomas. When he died his trustees included Walter Scott, George Pott and James Pott. His gravestone in Robertson Cemetery appears to say that he died at the age of 84. Lieut.-Col. Adam William (1939-) current holder of the ‘Stavert of Hoscote’ title. He was educated at Stowe and Sandhurst. He married Shuna Nancy McNab and has family. Andrew (1809–91) son of Robert, he was a farmer at Dykecrofts in Castleton Parish. He was recorded there in 1841 and in 1851 he was farming 1500 acres and employing 13 labourers. He was there on the 1861 census and still there in 1868. He married Margaret Armstrong in 1836 and their children included: Ann Stavert

(b.1834); Robert (1838–99), who moved to England; Francis (b.1840); Mary (b.1842); William (1843–91), died in Cheshire; Thomas (b.1845); Margaret (b.1847); Helen (b.1849); Andrew Graham (b.1851); and Jessie Elliot (b.1854). His brother Robert (a discharged soldier) was also living with them. He died at Dykecroft. Archibald (17th C.) resident in Edinburgh; Archibald (b.1806/7) tenant in Saughtree. In the 1834 electoral roll he is listed as joint tenant along with his brother Robert (residing in Manchester). The lands were assigned to them by their father with the consent of the Duke of Buccleuch. He is listed among heads of households in 1835–41. He was recorded at Saughtree in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. He was on the Borders Union Railway Committee for Liddesdale in the 1850s. In 1851 he was farmer of about 3,000 acres of ‘mountain-land’, employing 4 labourers; in 1861 it was 3,200 acres and employing on average 8 labourers. He lived with his sister Janet. He is probably the Mr. Stavert of Saughtree who donated a red deer to the Museum in 1863. He was still recorded at Saughtree in 1868. Archibald of Hoscote (b.1828) eldest surviving son of William and Marion Park. He became Laird of Hoscote in 1857, succeeding his aunt Margaret, his uncles having already died. He also owned lands in Oxnam and Hownam parishes, and had a house in Edinburgh at 34 Palmerston Place. He was recorded in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874 (incorrectly as ‘Andrew’) as owner of Cunzierton and Harcarse in Oxnam Parish, as well as (correctly as Archibald) Outerside. In 1857 he married Rosina, daughter of William Hope, and she died in 1897. Their children were: William James (b.1858), Rector of Burnslack, Yorkshire and Chaplain to the Earl of Craven; Thomas Hope (b.1859), Major in the Leinster Regiment; Herbert John (b.1861) accountant in Edinburgh; Archibald Arthur (b.1864) with the Priory of South Queensferry, linlithgow; Francis Edward Vose (b.1870); and a daughter. Miss C. (18th/19th C.) listed at Florida in 1821 when she subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’. This was probably the farm of that name in Liddesdale. It is unclear how she was related to other Staverts. Elizabeth ‘Lizzy’ (18th/19th C.) recorded in Hawick in 1815 when her child died. Dr. Elliot (1810–85) son of Thomas and Janet Armstrong, he was born at Saughtree in Castleton Parish. He graduated in medicine from Edinburgh University in 1834 and became a doctor in Preston, Lancashire, where he was also a councillor. In 1837 he married Margaret Jenkinson and they had children Elizabeth, Thomas and Margaret. He secondly married Ann Eliza Whitehead. Elliot (19th C.) donator to Hawick Museum of the 2 stone cross pieces which were found near the Abbey Sike in the mid-19th century. The first was about 4 feet long, in the shape of a sword handle, and found about 1850 near the ‘Abbey’. The second was a rounded head with a cross on each side, found by shepherd John Chisholm in the Abbey Sike in 1880. He could be the Elliot born to Thomas in Castleton Parish in 1810, who was a doctor in Preston and died in 1885. George (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1737 his children included Agnes (b.1737). George (18th C.) tenant in Allanhaugh Mill. He married Betty (or ‘Eliza’) Neil and their children included: Mary (b.1758); Thomas (b.1760); and Betty (b.1766), who probably married Henry Turnbull. George (18th/19th C.) farmer at Orchard, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Walter is listed alongside him, and so presumably his brother or son. George (1756–1807) son of Thomas and Elizabeth Pott. He inherited part of Hoscote from his uncle George Pott. He was a surgeon in the Royal Navy. He is probably the George who owned Outersiderig in 1788. In 1783 he married Elizabeth Brownell, sister of his brother Adam’s first wife. Their children were: Thomas (b.1787), Deputy-Lieutenant in Selkirkshire; and William (b.1792), who married Marion, daughter of Archibald Park, Windymains. He died in Liverpool. James (d.c.1682) tenant in Earlside. His will is recorded in 1682. He must have been related to William, who is recorded at Earlside in 1684. John (17th C.) resident of Minto Craigend who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He is recorded in Todshaw in 1720, 1723, 1725 and 1726. He married Marion Wilson in Roberton in 1718. Their children included: Thomas (b.1720); John (b.1723); George (b.1725); and Thomas (again, b.1726). John (17th C.) resident of Minto Parish. In 1738 he married Helen Veitch from Cavers Parish. Margaret (b.1740), baptised in Cavers, was probably their child. Perhaps the same John had children to a previous marriage, Agnes (b.1732) and Jean (b.1734). John (18th C.) married Margaret Scott in Hawick Parish in 1769. His daughter Elizabeth was baptised at ‘Todshaw hillshiel’ in Roberton Parish in 1771. She may have been the Betty who married John Henderson in Cavers in 1791 and probably John Turnbull in Wilton and died in 1831 at West Port. He is probably related to the earlier John recorded at Todshaw. John of Hosocate (1807–59) born in Robertson Parish, son of Adam. He was Laird of Hosocate after Thomas, his older brother. He served as Justice of the Peace. In the 1850s he was living at Burngrove. He married Elizabeth Bridget Watson, who died in 1868, aged 48. In 1851 he was living with his sister Elizabeth Bruce, who was a widow. Margaret (1801–65) elder daughter of Adam Stavert with his wife Agnes Scott. In 1851 she was living with her mother and uncle, James Scott of Whitehaugh. She inherited the estate of Hosocate after the death of her brothers Thomas and John. She married her cousin, Thomas Stavert, and died without children. Hosocate was inherited by her nephew Archibald. Ralph Alan (d.1798) inherited Hosocate in 1732. During WWII he was posted to India, where he worked as an engineer. He married Pearl Gallagher and she died in 1985. The iron gates, removed during the war, were replaced after his death, as a memorial to him. They are buried at Borthwick Waas. Robert (17th/18th C.) early member of this local family. He is listed at Earlside along with William on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. He is also recorded in 1695 at Earlside (or ‘Earlswood’). His children (baptised in Cavers Parish) included: Janet (b.1695); Robert (b.1701); Isobel (b.1705); and Thomas (b.1709). Robert of Earlside (18th C.). First of the local lairds (rather than tenants) of this family, he may have been the son of Robert born in 1701. Robert (17th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Hummelknowes in 1737 and Ashybank in 1745. His children included: Isobel (b.1737); Margaret (b.1739); Jane (b.1745); and William (b.1747). Perhaps the same Robert, married to Henrietta Black, had several children baptised in Cavers, including Thomas (b.1750), Walter (b.1752), Janet (b.1753) and Elizabeth (b.1756). Robert (18th C.) farmer at Effledge according to the 1794 Horse Tax Rolls. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton. He was probably son of Thomas, farmer at Saughtree. He married Helen (or ‘Nelly’) Pott. Their children included: Thomas (b.1780), who farmed at Saughtree; Robert (b.1781); and Helen (b.1783). He is probably the Robert recorded at Saughtree on the 1785–92 Horse Tax Rolls. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. His wife was Mary Graham and their children included: Robert (b.1808); Andrew (b.1809), farmer at Dykecrofts; and Ketren Elliot (b.1810). Thomas (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Marion Laidlaw and their children included William (b.1684) and Marion (b.1692). The witnesses in 1684 were John Purcell and William Purdom. Thomas (17th C.) resident at Todshawhaugh according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. His son John was baptised in 1705. Thomas (b.1697) son of William, he was baptised in Cavers Parish. He may be the Thomas who married Marion Williamson and whose son William was baptised in Galashiels Parish in 1723. Thomas (1709–93) son of Robert. He occupied the farm of Coliforthill, it is said this was a reward for military service rendered to the Duke of Buccleuch. He paid the Horse Tax at Coliforthill in 1785–97. Although supposed to have died in 1793, he is probably the Thomas recorded at Coliforthill in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was additionally taxed for having 3 non-working dogs in 1797. In 1744 he married Elizabeth (or Betty, d.1793), daughter of Adam Pott of Hosocate; his wife’s sister Jean married Walter Grieve at the same time in Roberton. They had a large family, including: George (b.1756), who inherited part of Hosocate; Adam (b.1750), baptised in Cavers, who was later Laird of Hosocate; Betty (b.1752), Jean (b.1758) and Janet, none of whom reached adulthood; and Robert, who married Helen Pott. He may be the Thomas whose daughter Betty (b.1745) and unnamed child (b.1746) were baptised in Kirktom. He may also be the Thomas whose children Margaret (b.1748), William (b.1754) and Thomas (b.1761) were baptised in Cavers. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was recorded at Broadlee in 1753, 1762 and 1763. His children were probably John (b.1747), Isobel (b.1750), Margaret (b.1753), George (b.1756), William (b.1759) and Mary (b.1760), George (again, b.1762) and Janet (b.1763). It is unclear how he might have been related to Thomas, farmer at Coliforthill. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. His son Robert was baptised in 1756. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Marion Davidson and their daughter Helen was baptised in 1767. Thomas (d.1798) farmer at Saughtree. He is probably the Thomas listed there on both the 1797 Horse Tax and Dog Tax Rolls. He is recorded in the Edinburgh Magazine as dying ‘in consequence of a fall from his horse in hunting’. His son Robert probably took over as farmer of Saughtree. Thomas (d.bef. 1810) resident of Roberton Parish. He may have been the son of Thomas (who lived at Broadlee), baptised in Roberton in 1756. He is probably the Thomas who married Jane (or ‘Jean’) Kidd in Roberton in 1777; her death is recorded in Hawick in 1810, by which time he was already deceased. He was recorded at Harden Burnfoot in 1781 and in 1810, by which time he was already deceased. His children included: Margaret (b.1778); Janet Armstrong and their children were: Robert (b.1802); James (b.1803); Archibald (b.1806); Thomas (b.1808); Eliot (b.1810), who was a doctor in Preston; Helen (or Ellen, b.1812), who married John Murray and died at Wolfelee farm; Janet (b.1814); Agnes (b.1816); and John Armstrong (b.1824). He may be the Stavert of Saughtree who was on the Committee of the Proprietors of Castleton Library. Thomas, J.P. (b.1787) elder son of George, grandson of Thomas and Elizabeth Pott. He was a Deputy-Lieutenant of Selkirkshire. He married his cousin Margaret. Thomas (1791–1869) born in Hawick Parish, son of Robert. Both his parents died when he was 8. He moved to Ettrick at the age of 14, where he was one of the men employed to haul building materials for Thomas Boston’s memorial. In 1820 he married Margaret Boa, and they had their first child, Catherine in Scotland. In 1821 the family emigrated to Prince Edward Island (Canada), where he was one of the pioneer settlers. They had several children who went on to be farmers on Prince Edward Island. Thomas of Hoscote (1798–1847) elder son of Adam. He was born at Hoscote, and lived in the house until he died, unmarried. The family were Lairds of Earlside and then Hoscote from about 1695 until 1900. He was listed as a Commissioner of Selkirkshire in 1819, when still younger of Hoscote. He became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1821. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He was involved with financial deals with the Elliots of Harwood in the 1830s. He was listed among the local gentry in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was listed as ‘Proprietor’ at Hoscote in 1841, living with 5 servants. He was succeeded by his brother John. Thomas (18th/19th C.) spinner in Hawick who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He could be the framework knitter, married to Euphemia who lived on the Loan and was born in about 1805; his wife was Euphemia Bramwell and their children included Margaret (b.1835), Thomas (b.1837) and Janima (b.1839). Walter (17th C.) mentioned in 1655 when Robert rucastle was order by the Hawick Bailies to pay him ‘four merkis, borrowed when he went from Glasgow to Edinburgh, and 7s. Scots for a leg of mutton’. Walter (18th/19th C.) farmer at Orchard, along with George, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He could be the same Walter recorded at Nether Tofts in the 1794 Horse Tax Rolls. William (17th C.) recorded in 1684, along with his wife Jean, signing a petition to the Laird of Cavers against having to pay a year’s rent towards the fine exacted for the release of the good Lady Cavers. He is the first local man of this family on record, although they may have been retainers of Douglas of Cavers since the time of Otterburn. He may be the William listed at Earlside along with Robert on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. He is surely related to James in Earlside, whose will is recorded in 1682. He may be the William whose son Thomas was baptised in Cavers in 1697. William (18th/19th C.) draper and grocer in Lilliesleaf, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He may be the 70 year old William recorded on Main Street in 1841. William (18th/19th C.) stockingmaker in Hawick who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. William (b.1792) younger son of George, grandson of Thomas and Elizabeth Pott. He married Marion, daughter of Archibald Park, Windymains. Their eldest surviving son Archibald became proprietor of Hoscote after the death of their distant cousin Margaret (who was also the wife of his uncle Thomas). William James (19th/20th C.) proprietor of Hoscote. He wrote an introduction to ‘The Annals of a Border Club’ in 1898 (formerly written ‘Stavart’, etc.).

staw (staw) n., arch., poet. a surfeit, feeling of nausea, pest, nuisance, boredom – ‘A’ve gotten a fair staw at it’ [GW], ‘Siccar the slow, slow fingring rub, Straikin without staw, Smoothin his name on the wa’ [DH], a nuisance, bore, v., arch. to satiate, become full, fill, sicken, tire – ‘... whan ma lugs are staaed o throapply blethers’ [ECS], ‘Howt! A’m fair staad o laif, eend on. Let’s sei a hyimm-backen scone’ [ECS], ‘A’m staw’d o’ kail every day’ [GW], ‘Oor wames we’ll staw wi’ feastin, Oor heids wi’ ribaldrie’ [WL].
Staward

Staward (staw-urd) n. Henry (14th C.) traditionally said to be the ancestor of the Stavert family. He may be the Stavert who carried the pennon of the young Laird of Cavers (Archibald Douglas) at Otterburn. The story is also told of how his helmet was so dented at the Battle that he had to have it fixed by a blacksmith on the way back to Scotland. The Stawards (or Staverts) are traditionally retainers of the hereditary Sheriffs of Roxburghshire.

stawed (stawd) pp., adj., arch. sated, surfeited, full of drink, tired of something, wearied – ‘A’m staw’d o’ kail every day’ [GW], ‘Weel, A ranged the haaf o the toon, or A turnt staaed’ [ECS] (also written ‘staaed’; cf. seek-staaed).

stawn (stawn) pp., poet. stolen – ‘...For lang might thou in Cumberland dwelt, Ere the laird’s Jock had stawn frae thee. Fala &c.’ [CPM].

stay (stä) n., poet. a help, support – ‘Becaus thou hest been my staye, therfor in the skaddaw o’ they wings wull I rejoyce’ [HSR].

St. Boisel (sin’-boi-zul) n. (d.c.664) Abbot of Melrose Abbey and teacher of St. Cuthbert. Almost all that is known about him comes from Bede. He was a Northumbrian, trained at Lindisfarne by St. Aidan. He is supposed to have had prophetic powers, predicting his own death in a plague. He was buried at Melrose. Relics relating to him were taken to Durham, and parts of a shrine dedicated to him can be seen in Jedburgh Abbey Museum. His day was once celebrated on 7th February. The town of St. Boswells was effectively named after him.

St. Boswells (sin’-bo-zulz) n. formal name for the town known as Bosells.

St. Bullion’s Day (sin’-bu-lee-inz-dă) n., arch. St. Swithin’s Day, 15th July (from St. Martin of Bullion, whose feast day was 4th July, which became 15th July in the new calendar).

St. Clair see Sinclair

St. Cuthbert (sin’-kuth-bur’) n. (c.638–87) 7th century bishop, born in the Borders, possibly on Leader Water. He was Prior at the old Melrose Abbey in the early 660s, and this was one of the resting places for his body (although he was buried at Holy Island). He was called a saint because his body was said to have been miraculously preserved 11 years after his death (and also said to be still uncorrupted when examined at the time of the Reformation!). He is traditionally supposed to have lived for a time near the location of St. Mary’s in Hawick, founding a church there and spreading Christianity throughout Teviotdale and beyond. A description of miracles described in a 12th century account of his life (by Reginald of Durham) contains one of the earliest mentions of Hawick. It also refers to a chapel dedicated to him, which has been identified with a site at Cogsmill, and which was associated with several apparently miraculous stories. This may be the same place referred to by Bede as a place where St.Cuthbert took shelter, and miraculously found a loaf of bread, when travelling from Carlisle to Melrose. His remains were removed from Lindisfarne by his followers and moved from place to place, finally coming to rest at Durham Cathedral, where they are to this day, along with several relics associated with him. In the Middle Ages both 20th March and 4th September were celebrated as his saints day.

St. Cuthbert’s (sin’-kuth-burts) n. popular name for St. Cuthbert’s Kirk.

St. Cuthbert’s Chaipel (sin’-kuth-burts-chă-pul) n. chapel on the Slitrig dedicated to St. Cuthbert, noted in the 12th century by Reginald of Durham and believed to have been at a site near Cogsmill. The chapel is supposed to have been founded in 687 (the year the saint died) and already ruined by the 12th century. Stories were related by Reginald in about the 1170s, as told to him by Dolfinus, Pastor of Cavers. The miracles include: a crowd celebrating his saint’s day being protected from a snowstorm, even although the chapel was roofless; 2 women from Hawick, Sægifa and Rosfritha, whose candle went out, but another one appeared; a woman (Dolfinus’ mother) was cured of swelling, after being an invalid for 17 years; a flock of sheep belonging to a poor widow from Cavers Parish was protected from wolves in the churchyard; a woman from Raperlaw, who was crippled from birth, was cured; and Hugh Flamang from Yorkshire, fled to Teviotdale, spending the night in the chapel, where moss from the stone basin prevented his enemies from recognising him. There is now no sign of the building, although the location has been associated with an apparently levelled shelf at Cogsmill, measuring 49 yards by 31 yards, with the probable graveyard surrounded by an earthen bank and covered with trees. This lies about 400 feet south of Adderstoneshiel farmhouse, and the stand of trees was planted to mark the site in about 1830. The area was once locally referred to as ‘the Chaipel Park’. Excavations in the late 19th century uncovered 2 carved globe-shaped stone finials, which were added as gateposts to the farm garden. It is suggested these date from the 17th century, although there is also a record of some much older stonework being unearthed earlier. The associated graveyard must have been used for centuries, but there were already no existing stones there by the mid-19th century. Note that there have also been suggestions that the site of the chapel may have been near Penchrise (presumably an erroneous interpretation of the name) or near Hummelknowes (because of the adjacent Priestcrown).

St. Cuthbert’s Court (sin’-kuth-burts-kör”) n.
housing built on Slitrig Crescent opposite St. Cuthbert’s Church in 1984, previously occupied by James Melrose & Sons engineers. It was essentially rebuilt from a wing of the former brewery.

St. Cuthbert’s Cricket Club (sin’-kuthburts-ki’-klub) n. cricket club formed in 1862 for the pupils of St. Cuthbert’s School and junior members of the Church choir. They played on the Brewery Haugh and had George Peterson and Ben Tillotson as professionals at various times.
Nicknamed ‘the Saints’, it was the last club to survive, other than Hawick & Wilton, folding in 1889.

St. Cuthbert’s Fitbaa Club (sin’-kuthburts-fi’-baw-klub) n. rugby club associated with St. Cuthbert’s Cricket Club in the late 19th century. It was formed in 1877, with William Laidlaw as Captain for the first 2 seasons. They played against the separate ‘Hawick’ and ‘Hawick and Wilton’ teams, and won the whole Borders championship one year. The club folded in 1892.

St. Cuthbert’s Haugh (sin’-kuth-burtshawf) n. another name for the Brewery Haugh.

St. Cuthbert’s Kirk (sin’-kuth-burts-kirk) n.
St. Cuthbert’s Episcopal Church. The foundation stone was laid in 1857, after the 5th Duke of Buccleuch gifted the land between Slitrig Crescent and the river and paid for the building. The de-design was by Sir George Gilbert Scott (responsible for the resoration of several English Cathedrals, as well as the Episcopcal Cathedral in Edinburgh and the Foreign Office in London), with John Herbertson of Galashiels the main builders and Melrose’s supplying the iron work. The church was opened in 1858, and gave the first permanent home to a congregation that traces its roots back to the Disestablishment of the Church of Scotland in 1869. In Hawick it is sometimes referred to as ‘the English Kirk’. For a long time it started its services half an hour later than the other churches. It was named after the local

St. Cuthbert, who is said to have had a chapel nearby. There is a stained-glass window showing him as a bishop holding the head of King Oswald of Northumbria in his hand (apparently representing the fact that the Abbot of Melrose was the King’s Confessor, thus holding his conscience). There is also an 1889 memorial window to the 5th Duke of Buccleuch, showing him presenting a model of the building to the Bishop of Glasgow, and 2 memorial windows for the Scott-Watson family of Burnhead, as well as a War memorial window, unveiled in 1921. The nave had 4 bays and there is a bell-cot over the chancel arch. The reredos by J. Oldrid Scott (son of the main architect) was added in 1905. At that time the niche in the apse became the site for a statue of St. Cuthbert holding the head of Oswald of Northumbria, like in the window design.
The chancel screen is by Sir Robert Lorimer, and was added in 1908, at the same time that a vestry was built (designed by Lorimer and John Fraser Matthew). The vestry contains the original communion table, lent to the congregation in 1847 by Isaac and Johanna Edmondson. A plaque in the church commemorates to 2 Grieves of Brax-holme Park who were killed on board naval vessels before WWI. The nearby Church Hall was formerly part of the brewery (and was converted around 1980 and is now 2 houses). The church possesses its own Episcopal Cemetery, and the adjacent Rectory has been converted into houses.
The church building is currently listed category B.
A centenary history was written in 1958 by Hector McBean Hart. Records for the church and school covering 1847–1944 are in the National Archives.

St. Cuthbert’s Kirk Club (sin’-kuth-burtskirk-klub) n. St. Cuthbert’s Church Club, a local musical society of the late 19th century.
St. Cuthbert’s Schuil

St. Cuthbert’s Schuil (sin’-kuth-burts-skil) n. Episcopal school near to St. Cuthbert’s Church on Slitrig Crescent. The school was for pupils of Episcopalian families, and like the church was gifted by the 5th Duke of Buccleuch. It was built in 1850–52 and had a house for the schoolmaster attached. The building was also used for a few years for church services. Previous to the erection of the purpose-built school there had been an Episcopal school on the Mid Raw around 1846 and another (per perhaps the same one) in the ballroom on Half-Moon Close, starting in 1847 or 1848. The new school was situated on the opposite side of Lynnwood Road, beyond Stonefield Mill and was reached via a footbridge across Slitrig Dam. The school was often known locally as ‘the English Schuil’. Pupils over the age of 12 were transferred to the High School in 1928, and it became St. Cuthbert’s Primary School. It was closed in 1956, and the pupils incorporated into the renamed Drumlanrig and St. Cuthbert’s Primary School. The school and adjacent schoolhouse were demolished in 1972. School Inspectors’ Reports for 1935–56 are in the National Archives. The register for 1934–56 and log books for 1941–56 are in the Borders Archive. A list of schoolmasters (perhaps not all of them being Head teacher, and some of them for only a short period) is: Mr. Ellis; Mr. King; Mr. Craven; Jacob Jay 1861–93; Mr. Bountvie; Mr. Beaton; James Turnbull; Walter Inglis; David Gillis 1894–1915; Mr. Lumsden; Mr. Cormack 1945–48; and Mr. Walker.

'Aye, aye, a shaft to-day and a wheel to-morrow', was the doctor's observations' [BP], a stall for an injured finger (also written 'stiel'; noted by J. Jamieson).

steel (steel) n., arch. a steep bank, spur of a ridge (used in place names, particularly in the Borders, e.g. 'Ashiestiel', 'Leapsteal', 'the Steel' and 'Steele Knowe').

Steel (steel) n. Lord David Martin Scott (1938– ) born in Kirkcaldy, son of a minister, he became M.P. for Roxburgh, Selkirk & Peebles from 1965, at age 26, and was known as 'Boy David'. He remained Hawick's M.P. until the boundary changes saw him move to Tweeddale, Ettrick & Lauderdale in 1983. However, in 1970 he only won by 550 votes. He was Liberal Party leader from 1976, including the period of the 'Lib-Lab pact' and the SDP-Liberal Alliance, resigning in 1987. He was knighted in 1990 and became Lord Steel of Aikwood in 1997 when he retired after 32 years in Westminster. He then became the M.S.P. for the Lothians and first Presiding Officer of the Scottish Parliament 1999–2003. He rode to Mossopaul and followed the Cornet on the Friday in 1965 and was Common Riding Chief Guest in the Millenium year. In 1987 she founded the Rowan Tree Theatre Company in the Borders, and in 2011 was awarded the M.B.E. for services to theatre in the Borders. She championed the renovation of Aikwood Tower (including wood recycled from the pews of Hawick Parish Church), later housing a museum to her idol, James Hogg, 'the Ettrick Shepherd'. In 2007 her play 'The Journey of Jeannie Deans' was the first production to be staged in the new Heart of Hawick auditorium. She has 3 children, Graeme, Catriona Judith and Roray, and an adopted son, Billy. The couple retired to live in Selkirk. Rev. Robert (1826–1920) born in Saltcoats, he attended the Evangelical Union Hall in Kilmarnock. In 1866 he came to Newcastleton to be minister of the Congregational Church there, and remained until 1875. After that he was minister at Dalmellington and Galston in Ayrshire. During the 1851 census he was a lodger in Newcastleton, listed as 'Independent Minister', and so he had an association with the village long before 1866.

the Steel (thu-steel) n. hill between the Teviot and Borthwick valleys, north of Swanstand Hill and south of Branxholme Wester Loch, reaching a height of 326 m. It may be associated with the lands of 'Steyll' mentioned in the 1420 charter for half of the lands of Branxholme (probably from the old English for steep).

The Steel Bonnets (thu-steel-bo-nits) n. book by George MacDonald Fraser, full title 'The Steel Bonnets: The Story of the Anglo-Scottish Steele

Border Reivers’, it was written in 1971. Fraser was known as a writer of swash-buckling historical fiction. His background makes this book both grippingly written and over-romanticised.

Steele (steel) n. Andrew (1811–82) local poet, born in Coldstream. He spent a few years in the parish school, worked as an agricultural labourer and was then apprenticed as a shoemaker, moving to Galashiels. He published his first poem in the Kelso Chronicle and sometime thereafter published a volume of his poems. He moved to Hawick about 1869 and published a second edition of his book in 1871. In later life he sold tea for a wholesale grocer. He was also a great dog lover, writing a poem to his dog Nailer. His longer verses are derivative of well-known English poets, but his Borders poetry is more valuable. He died at 14 Dickson Street and was buried in Wilton Cemetery. John (19th C.) factor of the Minto estate, recorded in 1885.

the Steele (thu-steel) n. former name of lands in Liddesdale, associated with the modern Steele Road. The specific place marked on maps is the ridge of land just to the north-west of the road junction at Steele Road, between the Hermitage and Liddel Waters. ‘Willaim Niksom in the Stele’ is recorded in 1516, ‘Barte Nixson of Stelle’, as well as Archie, Thomas and Alexander in 1544, and Will Elliot of the Steele in 1583 and 1599. In 1584 Harry and Archie Nixon ‘of the Steill’ were among men who signed the bond of assurance with the English Wardens. John Elliot was there in 1590 when complained about for a raid into England. Additionally the lands of ‘Stel-lis within the Dyk’ are recorded in 1541, when it was tenanted by Nixons; it is unclear if these are the same lands or not. Francie Beattie was there in 1623. Andrew Young was tenant in 1694. It was surveyed for the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1718, when it consisted of Nether and Over Steele, and was combined with Brighouse, ‘Ingrasswall’, ‘Guelbeck’ and Cleuchhead. Together they covered 706 acres and were bounded by Taylorcleuchhead, Dimlayre, Bygate and Shaws, with the farmhouse being marked near the modern location of Cleuchhead and another farmhouse to the north, perhaps around Shawshiel Rig. The ‘Steele Road’ is the name given to the road that crosses here, linking the Liddel and Hermitage valleys (also written ‘the Steel’; it is ‘Stell’ and ‘Stelle’ in 1544, ‘Steil’ in 1694 and ‘Stell’ in 1718; the same word occurs in other place names, such as ‘Ashiesteel’, and means the spur of a hill, with the same Old English root giving us the word ‘stile’).

Steele Knowe (steel-now) n. hill in Southdean Parish, on the left side of the A6088 after the hamlet of Southdean. It reaches a height of 273 m. To the north-east is an old stock enclosure with turf walls, as well as 4 small cairns. To the north is another enclosure, with a bank and ditch. On the south-west slopes are the remains of 2 turf huts. On a terrace on the west side are the remains of 3 round-ended buildings, one of which is 26.5 m long and divided into 3 parts (and may have been a combination of dry and domestic uses). There are also other enclosures and banks in this area between the hill and Jordan Sike, some cut through by a gas pipeline. To the south of the hill there is a roughly 3 km boundary bank, which runs all the way from Jordan Sike to the east, to finish south of Lethem (also written ‘Steel Knowe’).

Steele Plantin (steel-plawn-tin) n. plantation in Liddesdale, running along the north side of the Steele road (i.e. the road connecting Steele Road station with the B6399).

Steele Road (steel-rôd) n. small station on the Waverley Line, between Riccarton and Newcastleton, now a house. The station was opened in 1862 and closed in 1869 along with the rest of the railway. The name used until 1900 was Netherhope. There was a signal-box south of the station, which has been demolished. The place name ‘Steele’ long precedes the railway, with Nether and Over Steele being farmed by the Elliots and the Croziers from at least the 16th century and surviving into the 20th century. ‘Steele Road’ is the name of the road that crosses ‘the Steele’, and the station took its name from that. Several large enclosures have been identified to the west from aerial photography, as well as 2 areas of ridge-and-furrow to the east (sometimes ‘Steel Road’; it is ‘the Steile’ and ‘the Steill’ in the 1580s; it is marked as ‘O. Steell’ and ‘N. Steell’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Steele road-end (steel-rôd-end) n. shepherd’s cottage on the B6357, south of Larriston, marked the end of the road over ‘the Steele’. It is situated where the way to the hamlet (and ex-station) of Steele Road meets the main road. It may also have been called ‘Riccarton roadend’. This could be the ‘Road End’ where William Elliot was recorded in 1868.

Stell Hoose (stel-hoos) n. house situated at the corner of Havelock Street and Wilton Hill, demolished in 1945, with the site becoming part of the garage there. It was described as 2 buildings when the land passed from George Haliburton to John Miller in 1813. Dyer Robert Scott was there in 1835, and foreman John Middlemas and mason George Oliver in 1840. James Black of the garage there. It was described as 2 buildings when the land passed from George Haliburton to John Miller in 1813. Dyer Robert Scott was there in 1835, and foreman John Middlemas and mason George Oliver in 1840. James Black and John Middlemas lived there in 1841 and it is marked on the 1858 Ordnance Survey map (originally adjacent to the farmlands of Wilton Mains, so presumably there was once a 'stell' nearby; also sometimes ‘the Still').

the Stelloose Brae (thu-stel-hoos-brá) n. a former name for Wilton Hill, named after the house that once stood at the bottom.

Stelloose Park (stel-hoos-pawrk) n. area beside the 'Stell Hoose', which was drained in 1826. The area later contained the 'Cadger's Well' from 1842 until the early 20th century.

stells (stelz) n. sheep enclosures. These are usually circular and often about 50 yards in circumference and five feet high, although they vary in size. The entrances are on the leeside of the prevailing wind, and are usually built wider at the top than the bottom. The stone came by sled from nearby quarries. There are thousands of them across the Borders and there is a claim that the basic design originated in Hawick.
Stells (stelz) n. lands in Liddesdale, recorded on the 1541 rental roll as ‘Stellis, within the Dyk’. It is valued at 31 shillings and tenanted by Nixons. The lands of ‘Littlestel’ may have been nearby; they were valued in 1541 at 6 shillings and tenanted by Bartholomew Nixon (it is also possible this was related to Steele Road or the Steel).

stend (stend) v., poet. to leap, spring, bound – ‘The spring that ilk ane lik’d he kend; Auld wives wick and Lilliesleaf, Midlem or Bowden, leaving is recorded running a weekly service between Haining and Lilliesleaf Kirk, recorded as a witness to a grant of Glasgow church lands. This was sometime after the Division (a corruption of ‘extent’); cf. Stintynknewe).

stent-maister (sten’-mais-tur) n., arch. an official appointed to fix the ‘stent’ to be paid – ‘Stent-masters appointed to stent the inhabitants for the schoolmaster’s wage’ [BR1660], ‘Gedeon Scott of Falnash and the bailies, appoint stent-masters’ [BR1699].

Stenton’s Pump (sten’-inz-pump) n. former spring near the corner of Melgund Place and O’Connell Street, also known as the ‘Melgund Pump’. The smith who used to live there charged two pence a month for the use of his well when the public wells went dry (the name probably comes from the Stainton family, who lived near there in the early-to-mid 1800s).

stent-roll (sten’-ról) n., arch. a valuation prepared for the purpose of imposing levies on Burgess – ‘...Anie yeirlie stent-roll to be made’ [BR].

sterle (ster’-ul, ster-tul) v. to startle, to rush about madly – ‘The nowt’s sterlin’’ [GW].
stervation (ster-vi-shin) n. a state of extreme cold – ‘it’s stervation oot there the day’ (from an older meaning of ‘sterve’, being to affect with extreme cold).

sterve (sterv) v. to starve – ‘But I’ll face to the hills this day, The hills sae derk wi’ rain, Nor easy valley omens seek – While bairns sterve deid in Spain’ [DH].
stervin (ster-vin) adj., pres. part. starving, extremely hungry.
stervin o hunger (ster-vin-o-hung-ur) adj. literally ‘starving with hunger’, a common local tautology.

stevel (ste-vul) n., arch. a stumble, a strong buffet causing one to stagger.

Steven (stev-vin) n. Alexander (16th/17th C.) recorded in a deed of 1623 as schoolmaster at Headshaw in Ashkirk Parish. William, who was recorded as schoolmaster in Jedburgh in 1630, may have been related to him. Alexander (19th/20th C.) proprietor of the ‘Berwick News’ and ‘Berwick Journal’. He married Mary, daughter of David McBunrie Watson. He gave 3 bursaries to the Edinburgh Border Counties Association, in memory of ‘Ada Carr Steven’, ‘Mary Watson Steven’ and ‘Esther Watson Steven’. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. His children included: Walter (b.1702) and Beat tie (b.1704). Robert (16th/17th C.) notary for a bond between Robert Turnbull, tenant in Bedrule, and Joseph Tennant, minister of Bedrule in 1614. And he was notary in 1618 for a bond between Walter Turnbull of Bedrule and George Rutherford, younger in Abbotrule.

Stevens (stee-vinz) n. Mrs. ?? (18th C.) housekeeper at Cavers in 1789 when she was working for George Douglas. She was presumably wife of Thomas. Thomas (18th C.) valet at Cavers in 1786, when he was working for George Douglas. He is probably the Thomas from Cavers whose will was proved at the Prerogative Court of Canterbury in 1797.

Stevenson (stee-vin-sin) n. Agnes ‘Nancy’ (18th/19th C.) daughter of John of Kirkstile in Hobkirk Parish, and sister of Nel and Maizie, whom she lived with. She kept an unlicensed drinking establishment at her cottage, apparently buying a whisky jug from Douglas Laidlaw in Hawick, to give her whisky an appearance of quality. She was visited by the exciseman one day and thereafter fined, although let off lightly because James Elliot of Wolfelee was on the bench. However, when caught again and fined more severely she gave up her illicit business. She was the last surviving member of her family and lived her last days at the old blacksmith’s house at Forkins. Alexander (d.1724) shepherd at ‘Wadiespinnells’, presumably near Lethem in Southdean Parish. His will is in the Douglas of Cavers papers. Andrew (1795–1871) younger son of George. Like his father he was blacksmith at Bonchester Bridge, taking over after the death of his brother John in 1823. He sold the cottage and blacksmith’s shop at Hobkirk Kirkstile to James Elliot of Wolfelee. It was said that he could neither read nor write, his education at the parish school having been hampered by a speech impediment. In 1861 he was listed as blacksmith at Bonchester Bridge, along with his grand-nephew Thomas Rutherford. Rutherford took over as smith at Bonchester after his death. Andrew (19th C.) Hawick carrier. He may have been the Andrew born in 1832, son of James and Marion Douglas. His cousin Elizabeth Stevenson married Thomas Huggan. Andrew (b.1905/6) Hawick man who worked for Turnbull the Dyers, where his father was Foreman. He moved to Langholm in the 1930s to work for Arthur Bell and started his own dyeing business in 1946, called the Langholm Dyeing Company. His sons David and Neil joined the family firm, which evolved into Edinburgh Woollen Mill. Ann (18th C.) servant at Wells in 1791, when she worked for Gilbert Elliott. Archibald (18th C.) merchant of Peebles, who was made an Honorary Burgess in 1736. Archibald Forrester (1811–47) son of Rev. David of Wilton. In Pigot’s 1837 directory he was recorded as a surgeon in Lilliesleaf. He was recorded as a surgeon at the Sandbed (possibly Bridge House) in 1841. In 1835 he married Mary Moodie in Lilliesleaf Parish. They had children: Jessie (b.1839); Jessie (again, b.1843); Alexander (b.1845); and James (b.1845), twin of Alexander. He died the year of a cholera outbreak in Hawick. Rev. Charles Findlater (1831–1905) son of Rev. David of Wilton. He was born in Wilton Parish. He was educated at Edinburgh University and licensed to preach by Jedburgh Presbytery. He was ordained at Stobhill in 1860 and was Minister of Barry from 1866. He died unmarried. It seems likely that he was named after Rev. Charles Findlater, minister of Linton and Newlands, who died in 1828. Rev. David (1784–1851) born in Glasgow, son of David and Jean Renton, he was educated at Glasgow University. He became schoolmaster at West Linton in 1810 and was licensed by Peebles in 1817. He was presented to Wilton by Walter Francis, Duke of Buccleuch in late 1825, taking up his new position in 1826, where he remained until his death. In 1834 he wrote a description of the Parish for the New Statistical Account. He married Christian Taylor, daughter of a Lasswade farmer and they had many children, including: William (1810–57), who became a merchant and died in the U.S.A.; Archibald Forrester (1811–47), a surgeon in Hawick; Jane (1813–43), who married James Farish of Montreal; Alexander (1815–41), also a surgeon; Thomas (1817–78), who worked with H.M. Customs; James (1819–44), a merchant; Catherine, who died in infancy; Anne (1821–91); Christian Buchanan (1823–87); Robert Dundas (1827–58), another surgeon; Catherine Forrester (1829–37); Charles Findlater (1831–1905), who became minister of Barry; and Ellen (1833–52). He published ‘Two Sermons preached on the death of Rev. James Strachan’ (1840) and ‘Sermons on important subjects, Doctrinal and Practical’ (1841) and also wrote a description of Wilton Parish for the New Statistical Account of 1845. David, C.B.E. (1941– ) son of Andrew, he was born in the Haig Maternity Home, even although his family lived in Langholm by then. His grandfather had been foreman-dyer at Turnbulls of Hawick. He attended school in Langholm, then Dumfries Academy and Edinburgh University, before qualifying as a chartered accountant. He was a champion pole-vaulter, breaking Borders and Scottish records on 10 occasions; his first open competition in the pole vault was at the Hawick Common Riding Games. He represented Scotland in the Commonwealth Games in 1962, 1966 and 1970, and Britain in the 1964 Olympics. He joined the family dyeing business in 1967. In order to promote the 1970 Commonwealth Games tartan he (and his brother Neil) started Edinburgh Woollen Mill. This grew into a retail company, expanding outlets, and using Heather Mills in Selkirk for producing cloth. He sold the company in 1996 and later concentrated on his firm Ashleybank Investments. He also became a racehorse owner, having several winners. Additionally he sponsored Borders show-jumper Ian Stark. He was made C.B.E. in 1988 for business achievements. He was Deputy Lord Lieutenant of Dumfriesshire for 20 years and was made Honorary Freeman of Dumfries and Galloway in 2012. He has been involved in several charities, such as the Robertson Trust and Scottish Sports Aid, championed the redevelopment of Langholm’s Buccleuch Centre and was founder chairman of the Langholm Initiative. He was the Hawick Common Riding Chief Guest in 2017. His wife Alix is a former international long-jumper and hockey player. They have 2 daughters, Karen and Lynne. Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (18th C.) cook at Branxholme in 1791, when she worked for Adam Ogilvie. George (16th C.) tenant of Sir Walter Scott of Howpasley in the lands of Outersiderig in 1569. Sir Walter acted as cautioner for his tenants at a meeting in Hawick, assuring that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. He was surely related to Peter, who was also listed. George (d.bef. 1759) son of John. He was blacksmith at ‘Hob Kirkstile’, recorded in 1735. He married a daughter of John Shiel of Hob Kirkstile. Their children included: Charles (b.1732); John (b.1735); Betty (b.1738), who married gardener Adam Kersel in 1759; Jean (b.1743), who married Robert Riddell in 1767; Ann, who married William Henry in 1771; and Janet (b.1755). George (b.1760) son of John of Hob Kirkstile, and probably grandson of the elder George. He worked in the blacksmith’s shop with his father. He may be the George who was lived at Boucher Bridge according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He married Jane (or ‘Jeany’) Laidlaw. Their children (baptised in Southdean Parish) included: Jane (or Jenny, b.1787), who married Robert Riddell in 1767; Ann, who married William Henry in 1771; and Janet (b.1755).

Helen (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. Probably the name is given after James Scott, with Adam Scott being the tenant, and hence she may have been related to one or both of them. Helen ‘Nel’ (b.1771) daughter of John, Laird of Hob Kirkstile and sister of Nancy and Maizie, with whom she lived. She married a Murray, but they separated and she apparently hated to be called ‘Mrs. Murray’. She made a living by spinning yarn. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. His children included: John (b.1702); William (b.1703); and John (again, b.1707). James (17th/18th C.) tenant in Harwood on Teviot. In 1708 he was described as ‘(in Harwood) tenant to acleton’. He married Jean Thomson and their children, baptised in Hawick Parish, included: Adam (b.1705); James (b.1707); John (b.1708); Bessie (b.1710); and Margaret (b.1710). The witnesses in 1705 were Andrew Riddell in Goldielands and Gilbert Elliot in Southfield, in 1707 were Adam Elliot of Arkleton and Francis Gledstains in Braidhaugh and in 1708 were Adam Elliot of Arkleton and Robert Thomson in Newmill. James (18th C.) married Jane (or Jean) Scott in Cavers Parish in 1754. His wife died in 1814, aged 87. Their children included: Jane (1754–97), who married Thomas Grieve and died at Musesel; John (1759/60–87), who died at Alderybar; and James (1760/1–85), who also died at Alderybar. James (18th C.) married Ann Dryden in Hob Kirkstile Parish in 1766. James (1805–89) educated in Jedburgh, he entered the office of Roxburghshire Procurator-Fiscal Shortreed, and was appointed to that position himself in 1827 when he became of age. He served for the astonishing period of 60 years, latterly assisted by his son. He was also Clerk of Supply for Roxburghshire. He was a clerk in Jedburgh when he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. There are letters to him preserved in the Walter Mason Collection from the 1820s. He was honorary secretary and later full member of the Jedforest Club. He was an ardent Tory, but took no part in local politics. He married Charlotte, daughter of William Graham, doctor in Jedburgh and secondly married a daughter of Rev. William Aston Shute. His eldest son James Charles took over most of his county duties. John (16th C.) priest at the Kirk of the Lowes. He was listed as ‘vicar pensioner of the Forrest kirk’ in 1574 when he was still owed for previous years in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. John (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. Probably the same John was baptismal witness in 1708 (along with weaver...

John Richardson) for weaver David Reid, in 1714 (along with shoemaker John Scott) for James Scott ‘Laird’, in 1721 (along with weaver Adam Scott) for merchant William Black and in 1725 (along with weaver George Wight) for weaver Robert Wight. In 1716 he married Jean, daughter of Thomas Scott called ‘Laird’. Their children included: Janet (b.1717); Thomas (b.1719); John (b.1720); John (again, b.1722); Robert (b.1724); and James (b.1726). The witnesses in 1719 were wright John Pringle and Walter Scott in Newbigging, and in 1720 were weavers James Scott and Thomas Greenshields. John (17th/18th C.) early member of the Stevensons of Rulewater, first recorded in 1729 when he made use of the Hobkirk ‘mort cloath’ for a family burial. They lived at Singdean at that time. His mother died in 1733. His son was George, who was blacksmith at Hobkirkstyle. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Howcleuch in 1716 and 1721. His children probably included: John (b.1716); Margaret (b.1721); and James (b.1728). John (18th C.) son of George, he was Laird of Hobkirk Kirkstile, which he inherited from his grandfather John Shiel. He was also portioner of Kirknowe. He lived in a cottage at Singdean. He sold Hobkirkstile in 1758. He had 3 daughters, Nel, Nancy and Maizie, whose lives are described in Tancred’s history of Rulewater. He may have been the John who married Agnes Douglas in 1758. George (b.1760) was probably also his son. Betty may have been another daughter, whose daughter Betty Beattie married blacksmith Tom Rutherford. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Mary Scott and their son John was baptised in 1785 (or perhaps 1787). The witnesses were Archibald Elliot and John Smith. John (d.1823) eldest son of George and brother of Andrew. He took over from his father as blacksmith at Bonchester Bridge. After his death he was succeeded in the business by his brother Andrew. Rev. John (1846–1929) born in Eccles, Berwickshire, son of John, the schoolmaster there. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1865, was licensed by Duns Presbytery in 1869 and was ordained as assistant and successor to Rev. Archibald Craig of Bedrule in 1875. He was Clerk of the Presbytery in 1891. He married Christina Laing of Denholmhill, and she died in 1891. He secondly married Christina Govanlock Turnbull (daughter of John Turnbull, farmer at Priestrig), and she died in 1961 at the age of 94. His children were: Margaret Scott, who married Thomas William Brockie; Mary Farmer (d.1918), who married John B. Forsyth; and John, who was a Captain in the R.A.M.C. He demitted his charge in 1923, died at Bonchester Bridge and is buried at Bedrule, where there is a memorial plaque inside the church. John Briggs (1849–1931) son of Thomas P., he was born in Hawick. He went to Brownsea Island, Poole and then to Bournemouth in 1887, where he became Purks Superintendent, retiring in 1919. His children included Thomas, John, Charles, Harry and Hugh. He is probably the John Briggs recorded as proprietor of Comonside in about 1900. Margaret (19th C.) resident of the West Port area. In 1832 she is one of the Hawick people who contracted cholera, but recovered. Mary ‘Maizie’ (18th/19th C.) youngest daughter of John who lived at Hobkirk Kirkstile with her sisters Nel and Nancy. She had a natural son called Robert Wilson, who worked on the plantations at Wolfelee. In later life she was the cleaner at Hobkirk Church. But she used the cushions from the ‘Lairds’ Lofts’ as a bed for lodgers during the week, and was dismissed when this was discovered. Michael (d.1789) first landlord of the Tower Inn, from about 1771. In that year it is recorded that Bailie Hardie was reimbursed by the Council ‘for a bottle of wine (Stevenson’s), at attending His Grace the Duke of Buccleuch’, suggesting that he was already running the inn by then. He was brought from Yorkshire specifically to be inn-keeper and was admitted as a Burgess of Hawick in 1773. In 1773 the Council recorded that they met ‘in Michael Stevenson’s’ to petition an agent of the Duke of Buccleuch regarding repairs to the Auld Brig. He is recorded as inn-keeper there in 1778 and 1780. He was taxed for having 2 4-wheel carriages in the years 1785–1789 and for having a female servant in 1787 and 1788. In 1785 he was taxed for employing James ‘Stevanson’ (who was presumably therefore unrelated) as a waiter, as well as an unnamed waiter in 1787. ‘Mrs. Stevenson’ was taxed for carriages in the year 1789/90 and for having a female servant in 1789, suggesting that he was deceased by then. In 1798 the death is recorded in Hawick of ‘Mrs. Stevenson spouse to Decd. Mr. Stevenson tower inn’. He is described by W.N. Kennedy as ‘of Falstaffian proportions, and a fine burly specimen of the Boniface brotherhood, and is reputed to have weighed upwards of thirty stone’. It was said that he needed a pulley yo get to his feet in the morning and that after he died the coffin had to be hoisted in and out of the window of his bedroom. Patrick (16th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He... married Margaret Hislop and their children included: Robert (b.1651); and Bessie (b.1652). The witnesses in 1651 were Robert Grieve and William Elliot. Peter ‘Pate’ (16th C.) tenant in Outersiderig, for whom Sir Walter Scott of Howpasley stood as cautioner in 1569. He was listed as ‘Pait Stevinsone’ right after George. Peter (18th C.) surgeon in Hawick. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ in 1784. It is possible he was later the Peter, surgeon in Hexham, who died there in 1828. Robert (17th/18th C.) tenant in Hawick Shiel. His wife was Mary Plendergast and their children included: Margaret (b.1684); and Christian (b.1702). Robert (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He married Agnes Reid and their children included: Jean (b.1756); Janet (b.1758); John (b.1760); Jane (b.1762); Betty (b.1767); and Thomas (b.1771). The witnesses in 1762 were shoemaker John Scott and tobacconist James Scott. Robert (19th C.) stockingmaker in Hawick. His infant child’s death is recorded in 1840, with his wife Christian Scott dying 2 days later. Sandy (??-2002) local solicitor, born in Kelso. He came to Hawick in 1963, was Acting Father in 1973 and Secretary of the Common Riding Committee 1977–87 and again for part of 2001 Thomas (17th/18th C.) said to have come from Hummelknowes and become tenant at Little Whital, where he kept more than a hundred sheep on the Town’s Common. However, the ‘Town Herd of Hawick hounded, scattered, and destroyed said Thomas Stevenson’s sheep, till he was obliged to make sale of what was left, and gave up his farm’; this is according to evidence given by John Douglas in 1767. Thomas (18th/19th C.) winder of ‘pirns’ for stocking-makers. He lived near the West Port. He had a son, also Thomas, whose wife Margaret was one of the people who contracted cholera in early 1832, but managed to recover. He may be the deceased Thomas whose wife Isobel Turnbull died in 1840 (on the same day as 9 others, and hence possibly in a cholera outbreak). His son Robert with Isobel Turnbull was baptised in Hawick in 1797, with witnesses Rev. W. Knox (although hard to read) and merchant George Waldie. Thomas (b.1800/1) son of Thomas. He married Margaret Laidlaw in Wilton in 1829. They lived at the West Port, where his wife contracted cholera from a neighbour in 1832, but recovered. He was listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835, when he was at Roadhead. He and his wife were at Roadhead in Wilton in 1841, 1851 and 1861. Their children included Jane, Isobella (who was Mrs. Peden), Thomas, Andrew, Agnes (who married Charles Spalding) and Jane. Thomas Pasley (1818/19–72) married Mary, daughter of William Laidlaw, and she died in 1890, aged 71. Their children included: Thomas P. and Jemima (b.1860), who both died young; Agnes, who married mason James Turnbull; William Laidlaw, woollen merchant; John Briggs, who moved to England; Thomas, postman and proprietor of the Douglas Hotel; and Beatrix (b.1857). He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. Thomas (19th C.) from Langholm. Around the 1860s he came to Newcastle once a week to operate a branch of the British Linen Company Bank. Thomas Pasley (b.1862) son of Thomas P. He worked as a postman and was later in the Douglas Hotel. Walter (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Trow Mill in 1744 when his daughter Jane was baptised. His other children included: Walter (b.1741); and Helen (b.1745). Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Janet Oliver. Their children included: William (b.1768); Walter (b.1768); Gilbert (b.1770); and Katharine (b.1779). The witnesses to William’s baptism in 1768 were Gilbert Oliver (probably his father-in-law) and Francis Aitkin. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1794 his daughter with Ann Howison died. Walter Laidlaw (19th C.) partner with Alexander Innes in the woollen merchants firm Innes, Stevenson & Co. He retired in 1892, after which the firm continued with F.E.H. Chambers as a new partner. William (18th C.) listed as owner of a ‘House and Yard’ in Minto Parish in 1779. It was owned by Lord Minto in 1811 and valued at £3 13s 2d. William (1729/30–1807) tenant farmer at Langburnshiels. He is recorded as owner of 5 farm horses and 1 saddle horse on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1797. He also paid tax on 5 non-working dogs in 1797. He contributed to the subscription for the defence of the country (against the French) in 1803. It was said that his ‘sound knowledge, singular abilities, and successful improvements, as a store-farmer, have been seldom equalled’. William (b.c.1785) tanner in Hawick. In 1841 he was living at about 23 High Street. His wife was Jane and their children included Agnes, Isabel, Jane, Thomas, Margaret and Williamina. His widow appears to be living at Kirkstyle in 1851. William Laidlaw (1845/6–93) worked for Laing & Irving, eventually becoming a partner in Irving, Groerson & Stevenson. He left this partnership to go into business with A.K. Innes as Innes, Stevenson & Co, retiring only about a year before his death. He built the villa Dunira. He married Susan Yule, who died in 1872, aged 26. Their only child was Bella, who married Maj. James Rodger (formerly spelled ‘Stevinson’ etc., and interchangeable with ‘Stephenson’ before the mid-18th century).

the Stewards’ Plate (thu-stew-urdz-pla’ n. race at the Saturday of the Common Riding, held from at least 1899.

Stewart (stew’r) n. Adam (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living in Denholm in 1723 and 1730. His children included Janet (b.1723), Adam (b.1726), Bessie (b.1728), Margaret (b.1730) and Elizabeth (b.1732). Alexander Earl of Mar and Garioch (d.1435) illegitimate son of Alexander, Earl of Buchan, and grandson of King Robert II. He was a supporter of his uncle, the Regent Albany. He married Isobel, Countess of Mar, daughter of William Douglas, Earl of Mar. Through her he inherited titles, including part of the Barony of Cavers and the Forest of Jedburgh, as recorded in a document of 1405. He was appointed Admiral of the Realm of Scotland about 1420. He had only one (illegitimate) son, Sir Thomas, who pre-deceased him. Alexander (c.1454–85) 1st Duke of Albany, 2nd son of King James II. He was Warden of the Western Marches from 1475. He also held the positions of Lord High Admiral, Governor of Berwick, and Lieutenant of the Kingdom. He was imprisoned after being suspected of plotting against his brother James III, but escaped and made pacts with Edward IV of England. He also offered to give Evesdale and other parts of the Borders to England. After being sentenced to death in Scotland he fled to France, where he died in a tournament accident. His titles were inherited by John, son of his 2nd wife. Several men from the Borders were much later (in 1493) given remission at Jedburgh for having been among his supporters, including Ralph Ainslie, Thomas Brown in Minto, Robert Dalgleish in Howden, George Davidson in Raperlaw, John Grahamslaw of Newton, Adam Kirkton in Crailing Mill, Patrick Mow, Thomas Riddell brother of Riddell of that Ilk, Gilbert Shiel in Bedrule, George Turnbull of Bedrule, John Turnbull in Bedrule, Thomas Turnbull in Gatehousecote and John Waugh (possibly in Hawick). Sir Alexander of Dalswinton and Garlies (d.c.1500) son of Sir William of Minto. In 1458/9 he and his wife Elizabeth had a charter for the lands of Sunlaws and Morebattle. His family held lands locally, including Howpasley, which he resigned about 1468, when he was still ‘younger’;

these may have previously belonged to an elder brother, Andrew, who must have died first. Another brother was Sir Thomas of Minto to whom he gave consent in 1476 to his father’s grant of the lands of Minto. In the same year he also resigned to his brother the lands of Sunlaws and Morebattle, also with the consent of his wife, Elizabeth, reserving for themselves a 20 merk land there. In 1477 he had a charter for the lands of Dalswinton, with the permission of his son, witnessed by his brother Thomas of Minto. He served as Scottish Ambassador to England in 1485 and fought at Sauchieburn in 1488. He is probably the Alexander mentioned in 1501 when it is stated that sasine had been given to him for half of the market rights in Minto, which had been in the King’s hands for 3 years. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir Archibald Douglas of Cavers. He was succeeded by his son Alexander, who was killed at Flodden. His other children included: Agnes, who married John, 3rd Lord Maxwell; John: Archibald, Parson of Kirkmaho; and Janet, who married Sir John Dunbar of Mochrum. Sir Alexander of Garlies (d.1513) son of Sir Alexander and Elizabeth Douglas, daughter of the Laird of Cavers. He married Elizabeth Kennedy, probably a daughter of Kennedy of Blairquhan. He was succeeded by his son Alexander, and was said to have also had 16 daughters, each of whom married a laird of distinction. He was killed at Flodden. Sir Alexander of Garlies (c.1508–c.93) son of Alexander who was killed at Flodden. He was the 4th of Garlies, and was a minor under his uncle Archibald, parson of Kirkmaho. He was captured at Solway Moss in 1542 and his son was held as hostage in his place. Also in 1542 he erected his lands into the Baronies of Dalswinton and Garlies. The Dalswinton Barony included the family’s half merkland in Minto, and patronage of the Rectory there. He was a Commissioner for Wigtownshire in the 1550s and sat in Parliament in 1560 and 1565. He acted as ambassador to Henry VIII in 1572. He was still alive in 1593, but died soon afterwards. He firstly married Katherine, daughter of Sir James Crichton of Cranston Riddell. He secondly married Margaret Dunbar and thirdly married Catherine, daughter of his cousin Walter Stewart of Barcyle. His children were: Sir Alexander, who died before him, with his son Sir Alexander succeeding; John; Margaret; Anthony; Robert; William; and Helen. Sir Alexander of Garlies (d.1597) 5th of Garlies, grandson of Sir Alexander, the previous Laird, his father (also Sir Alexander) dying before his grandfather. His mother was Katherine, 2nd daughter and co-heir of William, Lord Herries of Terregles. He inherited many lands, including the small piece of land and rights within Minto. He was knighted in 1590 and sat in Parliament in 1594 and 1596. He married Christian, daughter of Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig and secondly married Elizabeth Douglas, daughter of David, Earl of Angus, who was widow of Lord Maxwell. His children were Alexander (who succeeded), Thomas, William, Helen, Janet, Nicholas and John. Alexander of Garlies (d.1649) son of Sir Alexander and Christian Douglas of Drumlanrig. He inherited his father’s rights in Minto in 1603; this included a half merkland in Minto, with the advowson of the Kirk there. He became Lord Garlies in 1607 and sat in Parliament several times. In 1623 he was raised to be Earl of Galloway. A firm supporter of Charles I he was appointed as a Privy Councillor. He married Grizel, daughter of Sir John Gordon of Lochinvar and their children included: Alexander (d.1638); Sir James, who succeeded; and Anne. Alexander (16th/17th C.) son of James of Tinnis. In 1609 he was listed along with Walter Scott of Headshaw and other Scotts as men that Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane and his tenants were fined for resetting. This was part of the feud between the Scotts of Thirlestane and Tushielaw. His brother John was mentioned later. Perhaps the same Alexander 'in Tynneis' witnessed a transaction in Selkirk for the Turnbulls of Philiphaugh in 1580. Alexander (17th/18th C.) dyker in Hawick. He married Margaret Wilson and their children included Margaret (b.1714). The witnesses in 1714 were weaver Robert Tinlin and shoemaker Robert Allan. Alexander (18th/19th C.) hosier in Hawick. His unnamed child died in 1811. He could be the Alexander who married Margaret Scott and had children Ebenezer (b.1805), Betty (b.1808), David (b.1810) and David (again, b.1812), baptised in Wilton. Alexander (b.c.1820) servant at Cavers House in 1841. Allan (19th C.) from Barra in Invernesshire, he was a quarryman in Hawick. He married Agnes Ekron in 1857 and their children included: Angus (b.c.1857); Anne E. (b.1862); and Elizabeth (b.1871). His wife may have been daughter of Andrew Ekron, with her mother’s name being Elizabeth. Andrew (d.c.1460) eldest son of Sir William of Dalswinton, brother of Alexander and Thomas of Minto. In 1458/9 he had a crown charter of the lands of Minto, Howpasley, Longnewton, as well as lands in Dumfriesshire, Kirkcudbright and Wigton. However, he probably died soon after, since his brother Alexander resigned the lands in about 1468 and later succeeded to Dalswinton and Garlies. Andrew (16th C.) recorded as servant to the Laird of Riddell in 1596. He was accused of crimes by Englishman Nicholas Forster in the previous year. Andrew of Ochiltree (c.1560–1628/9) son of Andrew, Master of Ochiltree, he was the 3rd Lord. He served as Lieutenant and Warden of the West Marches in the 1580s. He was later First Gentleman to the Bedchamber of King James VI. He was also General of Edinburgh Castle. He settled in Northern Ireland at Castle Stuart. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir John Kennedy of Blairquhan and was succeeded by his son Sir Andrew. Andrew (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1729 he witnessed a baptism for Robert Turnbull and Elspeth Douglas, residents of Midshiels and in 1733 another for William Turnbull, also living at Midshiels. Probably the same Andrew married Marion Huntly in Wilton in 1731 and had children Janet (b.1732), Robert (b.1734) and Mary (b.1737). Andrew (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Janet Douglas and their children included Agnes (b.1742), James (b.1744), George (b.1746), James (again, b.1748), Ann (b.1750), Andrew (b.1753) and Margaret (b.1755). Andrew (18th C.) married Jean Wright in 1761, both from Wilton Parish. Andrew (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. He married Christian Crozier. Their children (born in Lilliesleaf, but baptised in Linton) included: Peggy (b.1787); and Robert (b.1790). Andrew, J.P. (19th C.) owner of the farm of Cotfield in Lilliesleaf Parish in the 1870s. In about 1874 he is recorded owning the share of Lilliesleaf Common (and its teinds) that formerly pertained to the lands of Beulie Hill, as well as Hermiston. Archibald (16th/17th C.) illegitimate son of James of Tinnis. In 1608 he was among the relatives and tenants of Sir Robert of Thirlestane who were bound over not to harm Archibald of 'Dephoip' or his sons. Archibald (19th/20th C.) gardener at Wells estate. He had a brother who worked on the Maxpoffle estate and sisters who lived in Melrose. In 1882 at Bedrule Schoolhouse, he married Frances, daughter of schoolmaster William MacNeill. After Wells estate was sold off he moved to West Linton. The couple’s only child was William MacNeill. Bell (18th/19th C.) spinner from Glasgow. It is said that when the first spinning jenny arrived in Hawick, for operation at the Tower Knowe Mill, one of the strongest workers was given the task of operating it, but gave up, claiming that no one could stand to run it. The employers, Waldie & Pringle, then called for an experienced operator from Glasgow, to show the workers how it could be done easily. This was probably around the early 1820s. Charles (b.1618) son of Francis and grandson of the last Earl of Bothwell. He was born at Tranent. There are papers relating to his lands of Wilton, Liddesdale and others in 1647 and 1648. He fought at the Battle of Worcester. He died unmarried, bringing an end to the local connection of the Hepburns and Stewarts. Charles 6th Duke of Lennox and 3rd Duke of Richmond (1639–72) son of George, 9th Seigneur d’Aubigny and grandson of Esmé, 3rd Duke of Lennox. On the death of his cousin Esmé he inherited the Lennox and Richmond titles. This included the Baronies of Ancrum, Ashkirk and Lilliesleaf. As Duke of Lennox he paid a small amount in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls in Ashkirk. However, it is unclear if he played any role in local affairs. He served as hereditary Great Chamberlain of Scotland. He drowned at Elsinore on a trip as ambassador to persuade Denmark to join a war on the Dutch. Although he married 3 times (the third time to Frances Teresa Stewart, mistress of his cousin Charles II), he died without issue. Charles (d.1744) 4th Earl of Traquair. He succeeded to his brother William, his other brother George having died before him. He was the last of his family to be Laird of Wells in Roxburghshire. Burdened with his grandfather’s debts, he sold the estate to Thomas Rutherford in 1687. He married Mary, daughter of Robert Maxwell, 4th Earl of Nithsdale and was succeeded by his sons Charles and then John. Charles Edward ‘Bonnie Prince Charlie’ or ‘the Young Pretender’ (1720–88) son of James Francis and grandson of King James VII. In 1745 he attempted to capture the throne for his father, from George, landing in Scotland, gaining the support of an army of Highlanders and marching into England, where they met defeat. After being on the run for several months in Scotland he was able to flee to France and died an old man in Rome. Although there seems to have little local support for him at the time, part of his army passed near Hawick in 1745, and many tales grew up around events said to have happened at that time. Charles (19th/20th C.) local writer, who used the pseudonym ‘Karl Brown’. He who wrote a poem about the Scaterford skirmish and may be the ‘Carl Brown’ who wrote ‘A Hawick Common-Riding Toast’. He is also the author of the novel ‘Andrew Macpherson: a tale of the Borders’ (1905), which was serialised in the Hawick Express. This tells the story of the minister of the fictitious Roselea (a thinly disguised Lilliesleaf) and his love affairs, with some of the action taking place in South Africa. David (18th C.) merchant of Hawick who married Ann Fordyce of Aberdeen in Edinburgh in 1776. David member of the Archaeological Society and font of knowledge on Hawick and the nearby rural areas. He was recorded in dialect in 2004 as part of the BBC ‘Voices’ project. His daughter is Norma. Rev. Duncan (1841–1908) from Dunblane, he studied at Edinburgh University and New College. He became the first minister of St. Andrew’s Free Church, being called there in 1867, inducted in 1868 and remaining for about 40 years. He was said to have ‘the appearance of a jolly farmer of some twelve stones’ and to possess a powerful voice. He was involved with the temperance movement and the National Bible Society and locally with the Cottage Hospital and with Stobs. He also researched into Teviotdale connections with the Covenanters, for example publicising the besieging of Drumlanrig’s Tower. He wrote ‘The Covenanters of Teviotdale and neighbouring districts’ (1908). In 1890 he married Mary J.S. Mitchell. Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. An account of hers to Thomas Inglis for soap, muslin and lace from 1797. Esmé 5th Duke of Lennox (1649–1660) son of James, 1st Duke of Richmond. His father died in 1655 and he was served heir to the family properties and titles. This included the Baronies of Ancrum, Ashkirk and Lilliesleaf. He went into exile to France with his mother and died of smallpox. His titles passed to his cousin Charles. Francis 5th Earl of Bothwell (1563–1611) nephew of James Hepburn, the 4th Earl. His father was John, Commendator of Coldingham, being an illegitimate son of James V (hence he was first cousin of James VI) and his mother was Lady Janet Hepburn, daughter of Patrick, the 3rd Earl. He was a powerful force in late 16th century Scotland. He was lay Commendator of Kelso Abbey, and held many baronies and estates, including Wilton, granted in a charter of 1568. Patronage of St. Mary’s Kirk in Hawick was confirmed to him in 1581 and 1585 by James VI. In 1586 he re-leased several lands in Liddesdale to Elliot. A charter of 1587 confers on him the forfeited titles of his uncle, the 4th Earl, including Keeper of Liddesdale and Hermitage. In November 1587 (according to an English letter) he rode to Brauxholme and Hawick, there meeting with leaders.
from Liddesdale; although he publicly reminded them of the justice on the Border, his stepson Scott of Buccleuch carried out a raid around Bewcastle using his trumpet and standard. In 1591 he escaped from prison in Edinburgh and there was a ‘band’ between the main noblemen of the Borders to lay aside their quarrels in order to capture him. He led several attempts to capture King James VI, including the ‘Falkland Raid’ of 1592, which involved about 300 horsemen from the Borders. This led to him losing all his titles, including Keeper of Hermitage, as well as his estates, to Sir Walter Scott, 1st Lord of Buccleuch (his stepson). A ‘summons of treason’ of 1592 lists him and his wife, along with many men (including some from the Borders) who were his supporters. Eventually forced to flee abroad, he died in Italy. There is a bond of 1604 in which he promises ‘6 or 7 chalders of victual during recipient’s life’ to his servant Walter Scott of Burnfoot (on Ale Water) when he was restored to the King’s favour and his former privileges; this never happened, with the Privy Council recording a complaint between his sons Francis, John, Harry and Frederick against William Scott of Burnfoot and his brothers Walter and Robert, and furthermore his son and heir Francis was still trying to recover the lands in the 1620s. He married Lady Margaret Douglas, widow of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch; she was also denounced as a rebel following the Falkland Raid. His daughter Elizabeth married James, Master of Cranston (and their daughter married Sir Gilbert Elliot of Stobs). Another daughter Jean married Robert Elliot of Redlieugh. A son John was Commendator of Coldingham, and another, Harry, held lands in Teviotdale. His seal showed a ‘bend’ in the 1st and 4th quarters, and a rose and 2 lions in the 2nd and 3rd, together with a surtout, a lion rampant, an anchor and a shield bearing ‘F.S.’ He is mentioned by Scott of Satchells, who mixes up father and son—‘King James the Fifth his bastard Son Was of as much regard, He married Buckcleugh’s Relict He being but a Laird’ [CWS]. Francis (1584–1639) eldest son of Francis, Earl of Bothwell. He was rehabilitated in 1614, a few years after his father’s death. But he did not get back the bulk of the lands that had gone to the Earl of Home and the Lords of Roxburgh and Buccleuch. King Charles interceded to try to resolve differences between him and the Earls of Buccleuch and Roxburgh. In 1632 the patronage he had held of many churches around the Borders (including both Hawick and Wilton) went to Walter Scott, Earl of Buccleuch. His rehabilitation was ratified by Parliament in 1633. In 1634 2 of the ‘tutors’ of the young Earl of Buccleuch went to London to hear the King’s determination of the ongoing dispute he had over Buccleuch lands. He received lands in Lothian and made a financial arrangement over rights to the lands in the Borders in 1634. He married Isobel, daughter of Robert Seton, 1st Earl of Winton. Their children were Charles, Robert, Margaret and Elizabeth. Francis (17th C.) Hawick resident, married to Helen Muir. His son William was born in 1637. Francis (b.c.1785) stocking-maker who lived at Appletreehall. He was also an army pensioner. His wife was Rachel and their children included George, Euphemia, Agnes, Francis, John and Janet. George (16th C.) farmer at Rulewood. His barn and yard are mentioned as part of the land dispute between Barons of Feu-Rule in 1562. George (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Groundystone in 1729. He married Isabel, daughter of William Harkness in 1727, the marriage being proclaimed in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. Their daughter Mary was baptised in 1729, with witnesses James Scott and Robert Riddell. George (c.1715–93) Professor of Humanity (i.e. Latin) at Edinburgh University for more than 30 years from 1741. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Selkirkshire in 1761. He bought the estate of Midlem Mill in 1773, but must have already held Selkirkshire property before that. He was granted lieuerten of Shielswood by Elliot of Minto (probably as part of the common practice of adding supporters to the county voter’s roll); he renounced this right in 1779, when it was given to Rev. Simon Haliburton. His son Gilbert was a historian and reviewer. George (b.c.1795) tenant of the quarry at Bedrule Mill in the 1841 census. His wife was Isabella and they has a son William. Helen ‘Nelly’ (18th C.) cook at Orchard in 1791, when she worked for William Elliot Lockhart. Helen (18th/19th C.) daughter of Rev. Walter. Along with her sisters Mary and Isabel, she succeeded her brother Matthew in the lands of Barnhills in 1796. The lands were sold soon afterwards to Sir Gilbert Murray Kynynmound Elliot, with whom she had a heritable bond in 1798. She succeeded her 2 sisters in 1803. Henry ‘Harry’ (16th/17th C.) younger son of Francis, 5th Earl of Bothwell. He is recorded in the period 1640–42 in legal papers of Francis Scott, Earl of Buccleuch over the teinds of the lands of ‘Kalrice, Commoynsyde and Mynesingtonou’; the first place could conceivably be Caerlenrig. Hercules of Whitelaw (d.1595) son of John Stewart, Lord Darnley and brother of Francis, Earl of Bothwell. Said to have owned Whitelaw near Hawick, but more likely to have been one of the numerous areas of a similar name elsewhere (near Bowden, Morebattle and in Lothian). A ‘summons of treason’ listed him in 1592 and in 1593/4 he was denounced a rebel, along with others who had helped the Earl of Bothwell. He married Mary, daughter of Patrick Whitelaw of that Ilk, and their children included Margaret and John. Isabel (d.c.1348) probably daughter of Sir Alexander of Bonkill. She married Donald, Earl of Mar. They had 2 children: Thomas, who succeeded as Earl of Mar, and also inherited Cavers, but died childless; and Margaret, who became Countess of Mar in her own right, and was the ancestor of the Earls of Douglas. Donald was Regent of Scotland for a few months, but was killed at the Battle of Dupplin Moor in 1332, 3 years after his uncle, Robert the Bruce. She secondly married Geoffrey Murray, but divorced him soon afterwards. Thirdly married William Carswell, who was Sheriff of Roxburghshire. She claimed the sheriffship of Roxburghshire and the custody of Selkirk Forest as a hereditary right; this was looked into by Edward III in 1334 and led to the appointment of her husband by the English (then in control of the Borders) in 1347. She appears to have been deceased in 1348 when her husband William Carswell was granted her rights and lands in Scotland until her son Thomas (Earl of Mar) came of age. She may have also married Alexander Balliol, Laird of Cavers. Note that a later Isabella, Countess of Mar, was her grand-daughter. Isabel (17th C.) recorded in 1676 when she was fined along with Janet Halliwell for fighting over the placement of their market stalls. She could be the Isabel born of Whitlaw (d.1595) whose son William died at the Battle of Flodden.

James (d.1513) 1st of Traquair, 2nd (and illegitimate) son of James Earl of Buchan, his mother being Margaret Murray. In 1507/8 he was the first witness to the document relating to the tower in Hawick ‘between the bridges’ for the Scotts of Whitchechesters. Sometime before 1505 he married Katherine, grand-daughter of James Rutherford of that Ilk and Wells. He is said to have taken her away from her family and compelled her to marry him. She is said to have failed to inherit any of the Rutherford lands because of this marriage being to a kinsman. However, their son would later become Laird of Wells, after the death of her sister Helen. They had a son William (who succeeded and married Christina, daughter of John, 2nd Lord Hay of Yester), and another son James, as well as a daughter Mary and another daughter who may have married Archibald, 6th Earl of Douglas. His widow complained about her treatment at his hands and the fact that she had lost her share of the inheritance to her sister; the result was that Rutherford and Wells went to her grandson Sir John of Traquair. He was killed at Flodden. James (16th C.) resident of Whithope recorded in 1549, among a list of the tenants and servants of Sir Walter Scott of Bruxholme who complained about the Kers ravaging their farms. He may have been related to the tenant there, Philip, or to Helen who was listed after him. James (c.1531–70) an illegitimate son of James V, his mother being Margaret Erskine. He was also known as ‘the Regent Moray’ and sometimes ‘the Earl of Mar’. He became chief advisor to his half-sister Mary Queen of Scots on her return to Scotland in 1561, and was one of the leaders of the Scottish Reformation. In 1561 (or 1562) he commanded an expedition against freebooting Borderers. This included surrounding Hawick on market day to surprise people reselling stolen goods. 53 men were captured and 18 of them drowned in the Slitrig, ‘for lack of trees and halters’, while another 6 were hanged later in Edinburgh. In 1567 he repeated the exercise on Hallowe’en, attended by Lords Morton, Howe and Lindsay and their followers. In preparation for their visit, Hawick was among towns who were charged to ‘have in reddines bakin breid, browin aill, hors met, mannis met and uther neidfull fudgeing and provisioun’. They then captured 34 thieves, including 22 Elliots and 6 Croziers, having 11 of them immediately hanged and 7 drowned in Hawick. It is said (by Robert Wilson) that the hangings happened on 2 beams laid across the Auld Brig. 10 of these men were held in Edinburgh Tolbooth and we have a record of their names (5 were called Robert Elliot!). He may also have revisited Hawick in 1569, and certainly in that year led an assault on Liddesdale, blowing up the tower of Mangerton, burning Whitaugh, etc. There was an order from the Privy Council for a large number of men (from all over southern Scotland) to muster in Hawick to meet him on 8th October (moved by 2 days to coincide with the full Moon), ‘weill bodon in feir of weir, with xx dayis victuallis and provisioun’, in order to subdue the ‘rebellious subjects’ of the Middle and West Marches. He was Regent from 1567, but fell from favour after failing in a bid to seize the crown from Mary. He was assassinated in Linlithgow by his old rivals the Hamiltons. He was succeeded by his daughter Elisabeth, who married her kinsman James Stewart. James (d.1557) illegitimate son of James V. His half-siblings included Mary (Queen of Scots), James (Earl of Moray, later Regent), Robert (Prior of Whithorn), Robert (Earl of Orkney), Adam (Prior of Charter House) and John (Lord Darnley, Commendator of Coldingham). He was the Commendator of Melrose and probably lived in the Commendator’s House. He gave the ‘Monk’s Tower’ at Hassendean to Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1546/7 and gave a charter of Cockerheugh to Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1556. James of Bothwellhaugh (16th C.) in 1581 he received the Earldom of Arran from James Hamilton, who was considered insane, but these titles were restored to Hamilton in 1586. In 1584 he was appointed Lord Warden General of all the Marches, but this only lasted 1 or 2 years. James of Shillinglaw (d.1607) 6th of the Barony of Traquair and also Laird of Wells in Rulewater. He succeeded his father William in 1605, his 3 elder brothers all having died without issue. As well as inheriting several lands, he had the right of patronage of Bedrule Kirk. However, he only enjoyed his position for a couple of years before dying and being succeeded by his grandson, Sir John, the 1st Earl. He married Catherine Kerr and their children were John (whose son succeeded), Robert of Shillinglaw, William, Margaret, Janet (who married John Veitch of Dawyck), Gelis, Walter, Isobel and Mary. James of Nether Horsburgh (16th/17th C.) son of Robert of Shillinglaw. In 1634 he was served heir to his father’s lands of ‘Helme et Middill’, with grain mill and fuller’s mill called ‘Dowishanch’, comprising a 3 merk land in the Barony of Cavers. He was separately served heir to his father in the lands of ‘Roulwood’, ‘Majorwellis et Westlies’, extending to a 6-pound land of old extent, lying in the Barony of ‘Hareis’ by annexation. James (17th C.) described as a cordiner when he was a witness at a trial of Hawick Magistrates Court in 1642. He was deceased in 1666 when his son Walter gave evidence for a case involving a fight in St. Mary’s Kirk. He could be the John, married to Manie Scott, whose children baptised in Hawick included John (b.1643), Walter (b.1646) and an unnamed son (b.1648). Probably the same James witnessed baptisms in 1648 for George Hope and for James Lunn. James 4th Duke of Lennox, 1st Duke of Richmond (1612–55) eldest son of Esmé and Katherine Clifton. He was a key Royalist supporter in the Civil War and is buried in Westminster Abbey. Among his many titles and properties were the Baronies of Ancrum, Ashkirk and Lilliesleaf, being granted these by Charles I in 1641. In 1643 he is listed as holder of feudal duties for Headshaw in Ashkirk Parish, valued at £18 5s. He still held superiority over Barnhills in 1653. He was succeeded by his young son Esmé. James (17th C.) recorded as resident of a parish in Clydesdale. He married Margaret Hutchison. Their twins Susanna and Janet were baptised in Hawick in 1668, with witnesses William Scott of Brieryyards and John Scott of Whitehaugh. James Francis Edward ‘the Old Pretender’ (1688–1766) son of King James VII (or II), he was forced to move to France when he was an infant and his father was ousted from the throne for being a Catholic. He this became the de facto leader of the ‘Jacobite’ movement. He led the Jacobite Rebellion of 1715, and escaped back to France when the attempt to take over from George I failed. In October of 1715 about 200 horsemen past through Hawick and proclaimed ‘the Chevalier’. About 2 weeks later the Highlander army camped at Hawick Moor. There are many stories told relating to what happened during those few weeks. His son Charles, ‘Bonnie Prince Chairlie’, also led an unsuccessful revolt 30 years later. James (17th C.) resident of Chesters according to the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. James (17th/18th C.) smith at Falnash. His children included: Janet (b.1701); and James (b.1703). Margaret (b.1691) and David (b.1693), baptised in Hawick, may have also been his children. The witnesses in 1703 were John Scott in Falnash and Robert Riddell, miller in Falnash. Sir James of Coltness (1713–80) also referred to as 2nd Bart of Goodtrees. He was eldest son of Sir James and Anne Dalrymple. He married Frances, daughter of James, Earl of Wemyss and was succeeded by his son, also Sir James. This branch of the family often spelled their name ‘Steuart’. He owned the Chisholme estate in the mid-18th century, being involved in a dispute with John Elliot of Borthwickbrae over Branxholme Muir in the period 1743–60 and with Henry, Duke of Buccleuch in 1763–67. James (18th/19th C.) listed as owner of a horse in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick. James (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Stonedge according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. James (18th/19th C.) earthenware dealer James (b.1815) son of Robert, farmer at Hawthornside. He excelled at wrestling and jumping and took part in the Hobkirk Baa along with his brothers. At the 1840 Common Riding Games he won prizes for wrestling, the standing and running hop-step-and-leap and the hitch-and-kick. He married Margaret (1827–1901), daughter of William of Netherwells (who had the distinction of being born after her father's death in a riding accident). Their children were Robert (who was born at Town-o'-Rule and married Elizabeth Forster), William Glass, Alexander, Penelope and Mary. James (19th C.) from Wilton Dean. His children included Mary Ann (who married George Richardson), Margaret (who married James Hood) and James (who worked for the Manchester Guardian and was proprietor of 'Gas World'). Rev. James (1821–86) born in Stirling, 2nd son of David and Janet Galloway. He was educated in Stirling and at Glasgow University. He was licensed by Stirling Presbytery, became assistant at Largs and was first ordained as minister at St. Mary's, Dumfries in 1849. He was translated to Wilton Parish Church in 1851 and remained until his death. During his ministry the present Wilton Church was built, Mansfield Glebe and Old Manse were acquired by the town, and Wilton Hill and Stewartfield were feued for building purposes. East and West Stewart Place are named after him. A large cross in his memory stands near the main entrance to Wilton Church. He married Isabella, daughter of James Reid of Wellfield. Their children were Elizabeth White-man, Isabella Reid, David Charles, James Reid, Catherine, John and Eleanora. He published 'Wilton Sabbath School Hymnal' (Hawick, 1877) and ‘Last Sermon preached in Wilton Church, 12th Sept. 1886’ (Hawick, 1886). His funeral sermon was given by Dr. John Mair and published in 1886. James (b.1828/9) from Langholm, he was schoolmaster at Clarilaw in Wilton Parish in 1861. Jean (17th C.) recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 among those ‘Payed but not listed in Hauick Toun’. She was probably from the west side. She could have been related to the dyker John, who was also listed. Sir John (d.1419) son of Sir William of Jedworth and Minto. He was referred to as being 'of Teviotdale or Jedworth' and also became the 1st of Garlies. In 1406-09 he had an annuity from the customs of Edinburgh. In 1396 he married Marion, the only daughter (and heiress) of Sir Walter of Dalswinton. He was succeeded by his son Sir William of Minto. His wife resigned the Barony of Dalswinton in 1420 (when he was presumably deceased) to be granted to Sir Herbert Maxwell. His widow married Sir John Forrester of Corstorphine in 1422. Sir John of Minto (d.bef. 1512) son of Sir Thomas, who had given up the lands in Minto, even although the family kept the designation. In 1477 he was the eldest son of Sir Thomas when he witnessed a charter for his father and mother. He also served as Provost of Glasgow. He is mentioned as being 'now Marshall' and son of Thomas in the 1501 Exchequer Rolls, in relation to superiority of Minto. In 1502/3 he and his wife had a charter for the lands and Barony of Minto, as well as other lands. He witnessed a couple of charters in Edinburgh in 1508. He married Janet Fleming and was succeeded by Robert (who married Janet, daughter of John, 'the Outlaw Murray'). He is sometimes said to have died at Flodden. John (c.1484–1536) son of Alexander, Duke of Albany and nephew of King James III. He inherited the titles of Duke of Albany and Earl of March from his father. He acted as Regent during the minority of his cousin’s son, James V. In 1516 he granted a new infeftment of the Barony of Branxholme to Sir Walter Scott. Ousted from power in 1524, he spent most of the rest of his life in France. John of Traquair (16th C.) recorded as Parson of Bedrule in 1562. He probably succeeded from William Kerr, but was himself succeeded by Sir John Douglas (however, this may simply have been because of disputes over the patronage). He could have been the same as Sir John, 4th Laird of Traquair. He witnessed a document for Sir Walter Ker of Cessford in 1555. John (16th C.) listed along with George Wilson as ‘servants and ministers for the time to William Ryddaill’, brother to the Laird of Riddell. This was in a transaction signed in Lilliesleaf Kirk, suggesting that he may have been associated with that church. Sir John of Minto (d.1583) son of Robert. He came from the family that had previously been Barons of Minto, and continued to use the designation. He still held part of the superiority of the Barony of Minto, which was inherited by his grandson Walter in 1614. Like his father he was Provost of Glasgow. In 1556 he renounced his 3-pound land in Langnewton (called 'Stuart Lands') to Sir William Douglas of Lochleven. His name is recorded as witness to many documents, e.g. he was among the prominent men of the nation who declared James as King in place of Mary in 1567. He served as surety for Borderers in 1573. He married Joanna Hepburn and was succeeded by his son Matthew, who was also Provost of Glasgow. His seal bore a horizontal band surmounted by a ‘bend engrailed’ and a cinquefoil on the left. He may be the ‘Lard of Mynto, Collectour to the Comptrollar’ recorded in relation to a case in Glasgow in 1566/7. Sir John (d.1591) 2nd son of William, he was the 4th Laird of Traquair. In 1549 he was served heir to his brother Robert, who died in 1548. In 1553 he settled the family disputes over succession, signing confirmation with his cousin Richard Rutherford of the lands of Edgerston, while he kept Wells (in Rulewater), as well as superiority of Edgerston. In 1564 he was listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the warden, Ker of Cessford. In 1564/5 he was a witness to the bond to end the feud between the Scotts and the Kerrs. He was knighted in 1565. In 1574 he was on the retours for Walter Scott of Branxholme as heir to his great-uncle David Scott, as well as his great-grandfather Sir Walter Scott. In 1581 it was confirmed that he had the ‘half merk land of Kirklandis of Bedrowll’, including the patronage etc., which had belonged to Kerr of Ferniehirst. He was among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. He died without issue and was succeeded by his brother Sir William. Sir John of Traquair (c.1600–59) son of John. He succeeded to the Barony of Traquair from his grandfather James, 6th of Traquair, being served heir in 1606. He was also Laird of Wells in Rulewater, and probably the Earl who purchased adjoining lands from John, Lord Balernino. In 1619 he complained that a group of Turnbulls had cut down a large quantity of timber from his lands at Huntliehill. He was apparently a favourite in the court of Charles I and was made an Earl in 1633. However, he supported the wrong side in the Civil War, being taken prisoner at Preston, and living in poverty after he was released. In 1634 he resigned the superiority of Edgerston to John Rutherford of Edgerston. In 1643 he was recorded as owner of lands valued at £210 10s in Cavers Parish, £409 10s in Hobkirk Parish (these both being for the Wells estate) and £108 for lands in Ruecastle in Bedrule Parish, as well as the teinds of Bedrule, duties in Roxburgh and a large fraction of lands in Maxton Parish. His lands included Fastcastle, where 2 residents were cited in 1644 for not subscribing to the Covenant, saying that ‘they would ken no session nor minister, but follow the command of their master, my Lord Traquair’ (suggesting that he himself was a dissenter). He married Catherine, daughter of David Carnegie, Earl of Southesk. Their children were John (2nd Earl), Margaret (who married James Douglas, 2nd Earl of Queensberry), Elizabeth Stewart (who married Patrick Murray, 2nd Lord of Elibank), Catherine and Magdalene. John (1622–66) 2nd Earl of Traquair and also Laird of Wells, eldest son of the 1st Earl. He served with the Marquess of Montrose and then the Duke of Hamilton. He paid the land tax on property in Cavers, Hobkirk and Bedrule Parishes in 1663. He married Henrietta Gordon, daughter of George, 2nd Marquess of Huntly and second Anne, daughter of George Seton, 3rd Earl of Winton. Their children included William (3rd Earl), George, Charles (4th Earl), John, Elizabeth, Isabel and Lucy. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He is probably the John who, along with William, witnessed a baptism in 1661 for James Scott and Agnes Stewart. He married Janet Renwick and their children included: Margaret (b.1651); George (b.1653); and Margaret (again, b.1656). Isobel (b.1648), with no mother’s name given, is probably also his child. The witnesses in 1651 were William Laidlaw and Robert Paterson and in 1656 were William Donaldson and Thomas Currie. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Iobel Scott and their children included Margaret (b.1658) and James (b.1661). John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Veitch and their children included: Jean (b.1649); Marion (b.1651); and Jean (again, b.1653). The witnesses in 1651 were John Scott and James Lidell. John (17th C.) listed as being ‘in Cavers’ in the 1684 list of those who were declared fugitives for religious non-conformity. John (17th C.) recorded at Greenhouse in Lilliesleaf Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (d.c.1696) Burgh Officer for many years in the latter part of the 17th century. Following his death, Alex Scott was appointed in his place. He was probably the ‘John Stuart’ who witnessed baptisms in 1685, 1687, 1688 and 1689, being ‘officer’ in one record, and was probably the man of that name listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. Probably the same John was a weaver who married Marion Scott and had children: twins Janet and Jane (b.1680); Marion (b.1682); James (b.1684); Jane (b.1686); and William (b.1688). The witnesses in 1680 were

William Purdom and Mr. Walter Gledstains (the Town Clerk, suggesting that he may indeed have been the Burgh Officer), and in 1688 were Mr. Walter Gledstains and ‘litster’ George Young. He may have been related to the John Stewart who was a Burgh Officer in about 1740. John (17th C.) recorded as ‘caliario’ when he witnessed a Hawick sasine in 1687. The meaning of the description is unclear, but might suggest that he was a shoemaker perhaps (or he could be the same man as the Burgh Officer). John (17th C.) dyker listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. It is unclear whether he lived in the town or outside. He is probably the John ‘dyker to Irland’ listed among the ‘Deficients in Hauick Parich’ in 1694; he may have worked as a dyker for Thomas Ireland. Perhaps the same dyker John was recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 among those ‘Payed but not listed in Hauick Town’. He was probably from the west side. John (17th C.) resident of Woll in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll. He could be the John who in 1694 witnessed baptisms for John Williamson, for James Rutherford and for William Scott. John (17th C.) listed as a merchant on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He could be the John, son of James and Janet Scott, who was born in Hawick in 1652. He could also be the John who was married to Grizel Thomson, and whose son John was born in 1680.

Rev. John (d.bef. 1706) minister of Wilton. He studied at St. Leonard’s College and graduated from St. Andrews University in 1670. He became minister of Wilton in 1683, the first Episcopalian since before the Reformation. There is an existing letter referring to him in 1683, following a complaint from the Archbishop of Glasgow that John Langlands had not preached for several Sundays; the precise nature of his appointment is unclear. He was also presented to Borthwick in 1683 (and recorded as former liferenter in 1811). His lands were those that had been earlier known as Craigend and Minto Mill farms, including Minto Craigs, Millbank, Craigend Haugh, Millhaugh and a haugh by the Spittal road. He was one of 6 men who had been given life-rent of lands in Minto Parish in 1779 and a haugh by the Spittal road. He was one of 6 men who had been given life-rent of parts of Minto by Sir Gilbert Elliot as a tactic to increase his support among the voters of Roxburghshire. There is no evidence that he had any other local connection. He married Margaret Agnes Smith and was succeeded by his son, Sir John. Rev. William Brown was chaplain to his family before becoming minister of Bedrule. John (18th C.) watchmaker in Hawick. He married Catharine Hall and their children included: William (b.1786); and Douglas (b.1788). The witnesses in 1786 were butcher Andrew Waugh and Kirk Officer Thomas Miller and in 1788 were wigmaker Francis McKenzie and Kirk Officer Thomas Miller. John (18th C.) watchmaker in Hawick. He was on the subscription list for Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784).

John Govan of Hermiston (d.c.1861) lived at Cotfield in Lilliesleaf Parish in the mid-19th century. He became a member of the Peeblesshire Society in 1827. In 1835 he was involved in a dispute over closing off an old drove road on his property at Hermiston. In 1851 he was listed as a landed proprietor at Cotfield, farming 97 acres. He was listed at Cotfield in Slater’s 1852 directory and was still at Cotfield on the 1861 census, living with his nephew Peter and 3 servants. By 1874 he was owner of the lands of Bewlie Moor. His wife was Anna and her ‘Lady’s Companion’ was Maria Thomas was born in 1720. John (17th/18th C.) recorded as ‘officer’ in Hawick in 1723. Probably the same John was recorded in the Town Treasurer’s book receiving payments in 1731 and 1732. He was probably a Burgh Officer, and is likely to be the same John recorded as Burgh Officer around 1743 along with Francis Turnbull; after the Town Herd, Mungo Armstrong, complained the to the Magistrates about neighbouring tenants keeping their livestock on the Common, the pair were ordered to bring in these animals, and managed to bring several black cattle to the West Port. He was probably related to the Burgh officer of the same name who died about 1698. John (18th C.) gamekeeper at Cavers in 1779, when he was working for James Douglas. Sir John of Allanbank (1714–96) from the Berwickshire family, he was Sheriff of that county. He became an Advocate in 1737 and was appointed Solicitor of the Stamp Duties in 1767. He is listed as being life-renter of lands in Minto Parish in 1779 (and recorded as former liferenter in 1811). His lands were those that had been earlier known as Craigend and Minto Mill farms, including Minto Craigs, Millbank, Craigend Haugh, Millhaugh and a haugh by the Spittal road.
Mackintosh from Kensington, who appears to have been listed at Cotfield in a directory of 1868. He is buried in his family enclosure in Lilliesleaf Kirkyard. John (b.c.1820) son of Robert, farmer at Hawthornside. He took part in the Hobkirk Baa along with his brothers and was described as ‘a very tall and powerful man and whom no one dared tackle’. He married Margaret Grieve from Buccleuch. John Thomson (1830/1–71) stockingermaker of 1 Loan. He later worked as a carrier. He married Jane Paterson in 1852. Their children included James, John, Agnes and another John (who all died in infancy) and Jane (who died aged 18). John (b.1830/1) farmer at Hermiston in 1861. He was probably son of the previous John. He married Agnes Marshall. Rev. John (1865–1930) born in Fife-Keith, son of John Macpherson and Elizabeth Wright. He was educated in Aberdeen, graduated M.A. in 1887 and B.D. in 1890, and was licensed by the Presbytery there the same year. He became assistant at St. Clement’s Parish (Aberdeen) and then at Selkirk before becoming minister of Kirkton in 1892, where he remained until his death. He acted as Chaplain for Stobs Military Camp 1903–12. He was also Chaplain to Stobs Military Camp 1903–12 (usually written ‘Stuart’). John Livingstone (1894–1971) born in Hawick, he was educated at Edinburgh Academy and at the Royal Dick Vetinary College. In WWI he served in the Scottish Horse and the Argyll & Southern Highlanders. He played flanker for Scotland Rugby team in 1921. He served in the Colonial Veterinary Service 1923–9 and became a Fellow of the Royal Society of Edinburgh. Maj. John Ross (1918–2015) from Loganswell in Renfrewshire, he moved to the Borders with his mother, who was a teacher at Yetholm and then Denholm. He worked as a tailor, but joined the Army Reserves in 1939. He was a survivor of Dunkirk and was then commissioned with the K.O.S.B., serving in India and Burma, and retiring with the rank of Major. He then became a tailor in North Berwick and ran a guest house there. He joined the Hawick Archaeological Society in 1981, serving on the Committee and as Syllabus Secretary. He wrote ‘Borderers in Battle’, which describes the Burma campaign of the K.O.S.B. Rev. John T, ex-army chaplain who was minister of Denholm, Minto and Bedrule 1978–84. Katherine (15th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1493. She was a resident of Minto when Adam Turnbull in Hornshole was able to ‘compone’ for stealing from her, specifically 6 ‘chattels’. In 1494/5 the same Adam Turnbull had remission for several crimes, including stealing 6 cows and oxen and 2 bullocks from her in Minto. Kathleen W. née Scott (1928/9–) growing up at Milsington, she married Sandy and later moved to Aberdeenshire. Her son James continued to own Milsington. She was a founder member of the Borders Family History Society and helped organise the first Hawick High School reunion in 1980. She wrote ‘An Historical Record of Borthwick Wa’s Burial Ground’ (1987), ‘Borthwick Water: two centuries of life in the parish of Robertson’ (1991), ‘Redfordgreen School, 1885–1955’ (1995) and ‘History of the Scotts of Milsington’ (3 volumes, 1993, 1996, 1998). Ludovic (1574–1624) 2nd Duke of Lennox and 1st Duke of Richmond, son of Esmé the 1st Duke of Lennox. He was the next in line to the throne of Scotland after James VI. He was made Lord High Admiral in 1591 and in 1592 was appointed Warden of the Middle March. In that year he and the Laird of Cessford were directed by the King to deal with the Armstrongs of Whithaugh and Roan. He gave a charter to Robert Scott for the lands of Headshaw and Easter Essenside, probably in 1593 (although transcribed as 1553); he must have been Baron of Ashkirk then. In 1594 he resigned into the hands of the King (for later infeftment) the Earldom of Bothwell, including his Lordships and Baronies, such as Liddesdale, Longnewton, Wilton and Chamberlain Newton, lands of Teindside, Harwood, Slaidhills, Carnipool and Alemoor and patronage of the Kirk of Hawick. In 1603 he had a charter for the lands and baronies formerly belonging to the Archbishop of Glasgow, which included the Baronies of Ashkirk, Lilliesleaf and Ancrum. He married 3 times. He was buried in Westminster Abbey and was succeeded by his brother Esmé.

Margaret (b.c.1775) recorded as ‘Independent’ in 1841, when she was living as a widow at the Sandbed. Her children included Mary, Margaret, Wilson, Beatrice and Margaret. Margaret (19th C.) daughter of Robert, farmer at Hawthornside. She was known as an attractive girl with a charming personality. She married civil engineer William Blood of Cranagher, and their children were Blindon (who became Gen. Sir Blindon, K.C.B.), Bagot, Robert and Margaret. Mary see Mary Queen o Scots Matthew (1516–71) 4th Earl of Lennox, son of John, 3rd Earl. He was assigned the rentals of the Lordship of Ettrick Forest. After his death in 1575/6 there were complaints to the Privy Council on behalf of 2 Burgesses of Edinburgh and a large number of Borderers regarding payment of the ‘mails’. He married Margaret, daughter of Archibald Douglas, 6th Earl of Angus. Sir Matthew of Minto (d.1610) son of John. His family still held part of the superiority of the Barony of Minto, although it is unclear if they played any direct role in the district. Like his father he was Provost of Glasgow. He was among those appointed as commissioners to keep the peace in Lanarkshire in 1610. He firstly married Janet Stewart and their children were Sir Walter of Minto (who succeeded) and Janet. He secondly married Jean Colquhoun and had a son, Robert. He witnessed a document for the Duke of Lennox in 1594. Matthew of Barnhills (d.c.1796) son of Rev. Walter, minister of Ashkirk. He was served as heir to his father in 1750, but was not infested in the lands of Barnhills until 1780. He had a ‘decret of excambion’ with Robert Bennet in 1775. In 1780 he appears to have sold Barnhills to Cornelius Elliot and bought it back the following year. In 1780 he had a sasine for the lands of Wester Barnhills ‘in fee’ (with Alexander Alison holding them ‘in liferent’). He was listed on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. His sisters Mary, Helen and Isabel inherited the lands in 1796. Robert 1st Duke of Albany (c.1340–1420) 3rd and illegitimate son of King Robert II, brother of ‘John’ who became King Robert III. He functioned as Regent during his father’s infirmity, and also after his brother’s death during the minority of his nephew James I. He was thus involved in internal power struggles in Scotland, as well as in leading military expeditions into England. This included indirect involvement in the ‘Siege of Cocklaw’ in 1403. He was captured at Homildon Hill in 1402, his son Murdoch was exchanged with Henry Percy, and he besieged Roxburgh Castle in 1417. Andrew ‘de Hawick’ served as his Secretary from 1406. He married firstly Margaret Graham, Countess of Menteith, and secondly Harriet, daughter of Sir William Keith. His children were: Murdoch, who became the 2nd Duke of Albany and was beheaded; Isabel, who married Alexander Leslie, Earl of Ross and Walter Haliburton of Dirleton; Margaret, who married Sir John Swinton; Marjory, who married Sir Duncan Campbell of Lochow; Elizabeth, who married Sir Malcolm Fleming of Cumbernauld; Joan, who married Robert Stewart, Lord of Lorn; Beatrix, who married James, 7th Earl of Douglas; a daughter who married an Abernethy of Salton; John, Chamberlain of Scotland, who married Elizabeth, daughter of Archibald Earl of Douglas; Andrew; Robert; and (a second) Elizabeth, who married Malcolm Fleming of Biggar. Robert of Traquair (d.1548) eldest son of William. In 1547/8 he is listed among the supporters of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in a bond of loyalty to the Crown, along with the Kerrs. He was succeeded by his brother John. Sir Robert of Minto (d.1553) son of Sir John. In 1529 King James V granted him and his wife the Barony and lands of Minto. In 1533 he was appointed as his representative by William, son of the deceased John Turnbull. William Turnbull offered ‘kindly service’ to him, and he delivered an old version relating to Thomas Turnbull of Rawflat. He was Provost of Glasgow 1526–36. He married Janet, daughter of John, ‘the Outlaw Murray’. His children included John of Minto (also Provost of Glasgow), Agnes (who married John Wallace, 1st of Auchams and Dundenald) and Elizabeth (who married John Maxwell of Calderwood). Sir Robert of Shillinglaw (16th/17th C.) 2nd son of James of Traquair. His lands of Shillinglaw lay close to Traquair in Peeblesshire. However, he also had charters in 1614 and 1617 for the Barony of Horsburgh and lands elsewhere, probably including lands in Cavers Parish. He served as tutor to his nephew John, who became the 1st Earl of Traquair. He was a member of the Commission for the Middle Shires around 1618. In 1634 his son James of Nether Horsburgh was served as his heir. Robert (17th C.) resident of the former Hassendean Parish. He married Mary ‘Malkye’ (Mackie) in Roberton Parish in 1684 and their children included: Elizabeth (b.1685) and Robert (b.1687), baptised in Roberton; and William (b.1694) and George (b.1698), baptised in Wilton. The witnesses in 1687 were George Scott (probably the one associated with Easter Groundistone) and Thomas Cowan. The witnesses in 1694 were John Scott and John Glendinning, and this is the earliest existing entry in the Wilton Parish records. He is probably the James recorded at Easter Groundistone in the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Robert (18th C.) servant of Francis Coltart in Woodburn (in the Borthwick valley). He is recorded in 1729 in the Roberton session books, having an altercation with William Bell, farmer at Broadlee. Robert (18th C.) schoolmaster at Caerlenrig from 1763. It is possible that the same man was ‘Mr Robert Stuart, schoolmaster, Wilton’ on the subscription list for Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret (‘Peggie’) Collier and their children included: Andrew (b.1773); Agnes (b.1776); Janet (b.1777); Robert (b.1779); James (b.1781); and Charters (b.1786). The witnesses in 1776 were the Associate Congregation. Robert (18th C.) resident of Damside in Wilton. He married Janet Cunningham and their children included: Janet (b.1772); Mary (b.1775); Mary (again, b.1777); and Anne (b.1784). The witnesses in 1775 were James Knox (probably the gardener at Damside) and John Lorraine. Robert (18th/19th C.) recorded at ‘Back of the Woods’ in Hawick Parish on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was probably farmer at this house near Crawbyres. Robert (b.c.1790) son of Alexander and Mary Colquhoun. The origins of the family probably lies in the north, perhaps related to the Stewarts of Appin who lost their lands after supporting the 1715 and 1745 rebellions. He was tenant of Hawthornside farm 1834–47. He then rented a farmhouse for another couple of years, but then left the district. He had a sister, Mary, and a brother, Alexander, who died young. He married Margaret Burnet and their children were: Alexander (b.c.1815), who died unmarried; Margaret (b.c.1825), who married William Blood of Cranagher, and whose son was Sir Bindon Blood; Robert (b.c.1820), who married Isabella Smith, daughter of the factor of Wolfelee and secondly married Esther Hudson; John (b.c.1820), who married Margaret Grieve from Buccleuch; Annie, who married John Wallace; Thomas (b.1816/7), who married Annie Donkin of Newcastle; Mary (b.c.1825), who married Daniel McPherson; and William Colquhoun (b.1828/9), who married Helen Smith. His sons James, Robert and John were prominent for the ‘uppies’ in Hobkirk Baa; however, the youngest son, William, was considered the best runner in the Borders in his day. Sir Thomas of Minto (d.1500) son of Sir William of Garlies. His brother Alexander married Elizabeth Douglas of Cavers and at one point held the lands of Howpasley. The family clearly had a local connection, including land in Minto Parish. His great-grandfather was Sir William of Jedworth, whose mother was a sister of Sir John Turnbull of Walter. He became Provost of Glasgow. In 1476 he had a charter of a third of the lands in the Barony of Minto, as well as superiority over the whole of the Barony, which had been resigned by his father, Sir William (and with the consent of his older brother Alexander). He had a further charter for the lands of Sunlaws and Morebattle in 1476, resigned by his brother and attached to the Barony of Minto. In 1477 he and his wife had a charter for lands in Renfrew. He witnessed a charter in Edinburgh in 1486. In 1488 he was granted a fee by the Crown, for his service as Marshal. He also had a lease of the lands of ‘Dunrod and Fintelauach’ for his fee, and continued in this position until at least 1492. In 1490 he granted the lands of Nether Crailing called ‘Stewartlandis’, which had been annexed to Minto, to Bartholomew Rutherford. In 1491/2 he resigned the lands of Sunlaws, which were granted to Robert Ramsay and his wife Agnes Haitlie. He married Isabel, daughter of Walter Stewart of Arthurlie. Their children were Sir John of Minto (also Provost of Glasgow), William (who became Bishop of Aberdeen and High Treasurer of Scotland), Archibald, Agnes, Marion (married Adam Maxwell of Southbar), Margaret, James, Nicolas, Robert and John. The family kept the ‘of Minto’ designation for several generations (including 5 Provosts of Glasgow), although they appear to have had no continuing local presence. Thomas (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. Thomas (b.c.1800) publican on the Loan. He is recorded as vintner at the Nag’s Head in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 he was living with his wife Elizabeth at about the first house on the Loan. Walter (12th C.) see Walter Fitz Alan. Sir Walter (1293–1327) son of James, who he succeeded as 6th High Steward of Scotland. He was knighted after Bannockburn. In about 1320 he was ‘Walteri Senescalli Scotie’ when he was granted lands in Roxburghshire that had been forfeited by Sir John de Soulis and others. This included Eckford, Nisbet, Langnewton, Maxton and Caverton. He was Governor of Berwick, commanding there when there was a siege by the English in 1319. He was a signatory of the Declaration of Arbroath in 1320. He married Marjory, daughter of Robert the Bruce; she died possibly after a fall from a horse, with their son John (who became King Robert II) said by some to have been born by Caesarian section. He had earlier married Alice, daughter of Sir John Erskine of that Ilk, and later married Isabel, sister of Sir John Graham of Abercorn. He had a son, Sir John, who died without issue. He also had a daughter who married Sir William Graham of Kincardine, and another daughter, Egidia, who married Sir James Lindsay of Crawford, secondly married Sir Hew Eglinton and thirdly married Sir James Douglas of Dalkeith. Walter (16th C.) recorded as Rector of Minto in 1542 and 1544. He was presumably a member of the Stewarts of...
Minto family. Sir Walter of Minto (d.1640s) son of Sir Matthew. In 1606 he was involved in some kind of fight with a group supporting Sir George Elphinstone in Glasgow, being held in Dumbarton Castle for a while. In 1614 he was served heir to his grandfather Sir John in 2/3 of the superiority of the Barony of Minto (as well as lands in Morebattle). Apart from the title, he had no direct local connection and lived in Glasgow, being Bailie to the Regality there (but not Provost, like several of his ancestors). He was also keeper of Dumbarton Castle. He married Christian Crawford in 1598/9. Their daughter Mrs. Lilias Stewart was buried in Greyfriars Cemetery in 1663. The family fortunes dwindled at this time and he probably sold off the ancient family rights in the Barony of Minto, but it is unclear exactly when or to whom. He also had to mortgage his property in Easter and Wester Craigs in Glasgow, which was sold off by his son, Sir Ludovic. Sir Ludovic was succeeded by Sir John, who was even more impoverished (it is said he was a pauper who was sent barefoot to Edinburgh to beg a favour from one of his rich Stewart relatives) and died on a voyage out to the colony at Darien.

Walter (17th C.) mentioned in one of the first existing entries in the Town book of 1638 as an officer of the Town (along with James Kinnaird). They were presumably the 2 Burgh Officers of the time, corresponding to the Halberdiers of today. Walter (17th C.) son of cordner James. In 1666 he was a witness to the fight in St. Mary’s Kirk between William Turnbull and James Chisholme. He could be the Walter baptised in Hawick in 1646, son of James and Manie Scott. Walter (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Craik in 1733. His children included: Robert (b.1733); Janet (b.1735); Walter (b.1739); Walter (again, b.1741); and Mary (b.1745). Rev. Walter (1706-62) son of Bailie Matthew Stewart in Newton of Mearns, he was baptised in Canongate, Edinburgh. He studied at the Universities of Edinburgh and Leiden and was presented to Ashkirk Parish in 1730 by Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto, one of the Lords of Session at the time. He paid the window tax at ‘the mance’ in Ashkirk Parish in 1748 and again in 1753. In 1742 he was recorded in Selkirk as minister of the Gospel at Ashkirk for victual supplied for the poor’. He also bought (from John Mackenzie of Devlin) the land at Barnhills in 1749 and hence is sometimes described as ‘of Barnhill’ (or ‘Barnhills’). He was thus designated among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761. In 1750 in Edinburgh he married Mrs. Mary Duncanson (who died in 1793) of Garshake. Their children included: Mary (b.1751); Matthew (1752–82) of Barnhills; Helen (1754–1815); Margaret, who died in infancy; James (b.1756), died young; and Isabel (b.1759, or Isabella). Matthew inherited the lands of Barnhills from him and after Matthew’s death they passed to Mary, Helen and Isabel. Walter (18th C.) resident of Robertson and Wilton Parishes. He was at Greenbank in 1780 and Stirches in 1792. He married Betty Miller in Robertson in 1774. Their children included: Betty (b.1780); Janet (b.1782); and Walter (b.1792). Isabel (b.1776) and Marion (b.1778), baptised in Robertson, with no mother’s name listed, were probably also his children. The witnesses in 1792 were Gilbert Smith and Thomas Ferguson (both servants of Chisholme of that Ilk, suggesting that he also worked for the laird of Stirches). Sir William of Jedworth (d.1402) 2nd son of Sir Alexander of Darnley and Crookston or perhaps son of Sir John of Jedworth, his mother being a sister of Sir John Turnbull of Minto. He was probably grandson (or other descendant) of ‘John Senescal de Jedwith’ who signed the Ragman Rolls. He was also known as ‘of Teviotdale’. He may have been an ally of the English until 1384 when Teviotdale was recaptured for Scotland, then fighting on the Scottish side and being rewarded by Robert II with lands in Roxburghshire. He received money from the French to support the war against England in 1385 and was present at Otterburn in 1388. He was knighted around this time and in the 1390s served as auditor of the exchequer, as well as commissioner at march days. He was additionally appointed as Sheriff of Roxburghshire, although the extent of the appointment is not known. In the period 1390–1402 he acted as Clerk of Audit according to the Exchequer Rolls. In 1390 he was granted lands within Minto by John Turnbull (‘Out with the sword’), who was his uncle. This was confirmed by Robert II in 1390/1, and included the patronage of the church, which had been resigned by George Abernethy. He was thus probably the first of the Stewarts to own lands in Minto. He was probably the Sir William who witnessed a Lindsay charter for Stouslie and Groundistone about 1390. An updated charter of Robert III (probably around 1400) grants him 1/3 of the lands of Minto. In the late 1390s he accompanied Archibald Douglas (later 4th Earl of Douglas) in an attack on the English-held Roxburgh Castle. He led an unsuccessful raid into Northumberland in 1400 and was at the battle of Homildon Hill.
in 1402. There he was captured, tried and executed at the instigation of Sir Henry Percy, his body being quartered and displayed on the gates of York. He married Isabel, who was widow of Sir Richard Oliver, although her maiden name is unknown. He was succeeded by his son Sir John, 1st of Garlies, and had at least one other son. His widow Elizabeth remarried to Walter of Bickerton and received some of the customs duties of Edinburgh and Linlithgow in the period 1407–20.

Sir William of Dalswinton (15th C.) son of Sir John, 1st of Garlies. In 1429 he succeeded to the Barony of Minto, but this was disputed by Walter Turnbull. As a result it seems that the barony was split, so that his family held the half barony. He was knighted by James III in about 1443 and sat in Parliament in 1467. He married more than once, with his last wife being Euphame Graham. His children included: Andrew, his heir, who predeceased him; Sir Alexander of Garlies, who fought at Sauchieburn and married Elizabeth, daughter of Archibald Douglas of Cavers; Sir Thomas, who succeeded to Minto; and Walter of Tonderghie. William of Traquair (16th C.) son of James. In 1526 he was listed in the remission for a large number of Borderers who attacked the Earl of Arran’s forces. His brother James was also listed. He became heir to the lands of Rutherford and Wells through his aunt Helen Rutherford. In 1533/4 he was involved in a bond in Selkirk with Patrick Murray of Falahill. In 1538 he had a regranting of his lands of Traquair. In 1541 he is recorded as occupier of Garlawcleuch, Blackhouse and Douglascroft in Yarrow; he may also be the William who was occupier of Berynbush and half of Phaup in Ettrick. Also in 1541 he was involved in a dispute with the Dicksons of Ormiston. He married married Christina, 2nd daughter of John, 2nd Lord Hay of Yester. Their children were: Robert, who succeeded; John, who succeeded Robert; William, who succeeded John; James, who succeeded William; Margaret, who married James Murray of Falahill and George Douglas, younger of Bouiedward; and a daughter who married William Sinclair of Blans. William (16th C.) holder of a particate of land on the north side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. Sir William (d.1605) 5th Laird of Traquair. He succeeded to his brother Sir John, also inheriting the lands of Wells in Rulewater. In 1567 he was listed as brother-german of Sir John of Traquair when he witnessed the wedding contract for Elizabeth, sister of Sir Walter Scott of Bucceuch. He was a ‘gentleman of the bed-chamber’ of James VI and was made Governor of Dumbarton Castle in 1582. He witnessed a document for the Earl of Lennox in 1594. He died unmarried and was succeeded by his brother James of Shillinglaw. William (16th/17th C.) servant of James Douglas of Cavers. In 1612 he, along with William Douglas of Whitriggs and his brother Robert, was accused by Gavin Elliot of Brugh of attacking his family on their way home from Cavers Kirk. However, the group were acquitted after swearing that the claim was untrue.

William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1661 he, along with John, witnessed a baptism for James Scott and Agnes Stewart. He could be the William ‘Stewart’ who married Marion Henderson and whose son John was baptised in 1661, with witnesses John and Robert Henderson. Alternatively he could be the William ‘Stevert’ who married Agnes Scott and whose son Walter was baptised in 1661, with witnesses Adam Ogilvie and James Dunlop. William (b.1657) 3rd Earl of Traquair, son of John, 2nd Earl, whom he succeeded in 1666. He was also Laird of Wells in Rulewater. He died unmarried and was succeeded by his brother Charles. William (17th C.) listed as resident at Harden in Wilton Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the weaver in Heap who witnessed a baptism for fellow weaver John Cairns in Wilton in 1711. William (17th C.) tailor listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He is also listed in 1694 on the west-side of Hawick on the Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the William born in Hawick in 1637, son of Francis and Helen Muir. He could also be the William who married Margaret Scott and whose children baptised in Hawick included: Margaret (b.1669); Charles (b.1673); and Francis (b.1677). William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He is probably the William who witnessed a baptism for Walter Wilson in 1690. He married ‘Mals’ Hastie and their daughter Isobel was baptised in 1690. The witnesses were John and James Stewart (who were surely related). William (1695/6–1760) tenant farmer in Gillfoot. He is buried in Etleton Cemetery. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Agnes Elliot in 1720. Their children included Robert (b.1723) and Agnes (b.1726). He may be the William ‘Steward’ who witnessed the baptism of an illegitimate child for George Langlands of that Ilk in 1724. He also witnessed a baptism for Robert Scott, resident of Tandlaw, in 1729. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Stouslie in 1770 and 1780. He married Margaret Ormiston in Wilton in 1764. Their children included: Helen (b.1765); Mary (b.1767); Isabel (b.1770); and George (b.1771). Probably the same William secondly married Jean Scott in 1777, with children: George (b.1778); and James (b.1780). The witnesses in 1770 were James Dryden and Thomas Reid. The baptism in 1780 was performed by Rev. John Young (meaning that he was a member of the Green Kirk), with witnesses James Scott and George Turnbull. William Colquhoun (b.1828/9) youngest son of Robert, farmer at Hawthornside. He took part in Hobkirk Baa along with his brothers. He was known as one of the best runners in the Borders and was unbeaten over about 30 races. On one occasion he was dancing and playing the fiddle at Billerwell until 2 a.m., set out an hour later to meet his brother in Newcastle, arriving at 4 p.m., and then won a sprint race that his brother had put him up to. He ran against Willie Scott from Martinhouse, in a specially arranged match over half a mile near Stobs, and won. He married Helen, daughter of William Smith in 1853 and moved to Newcastle (also spelled ‘Stuart’, ‘Stuert’ etc. and in earlier times interchangeable with ‘Stuart’ as well as ‘Steward’).

Stey (sti) adj., arch. steep, stiff, difficult to climb – ‘... set a stour heart to a stae brae’, and climb to the top of the Wisp’ [HAST1875], ‘It hed been a stey climm up tu Dunion-heed ...’ [ECS], ‘...And lift us up the steyest brae, And o’er the plantin’ stiles’ [JT], ‘...He finds a stey upended brae, That mony a sprawl hae dealt ’im’ [WP], ‘...A hert to face the steyest brae’ [WL] (also written ‘Steyl’ in 1420).

Steyll (stil) n. former name for lands near Branxholme, mentioned in the 1420 charter when half of the lands of Branxholme were granted to Robert Scott of Rankilburn. The description is of ‘the lands and houses of Steyll, and the half of the broad meadow towards the lands of Steyll ... on the west side of the Syke’; the exact location is uncertain. Somewhere around Branxholme Town seems feasible, but a location much further west, near the hill called ‘The Steel’, is also possible (also written ‘Steyl’ in 1420).

Steyls (stiz) n., pl. stays, a corset, girdle – ‘...sellin a thing frae household goods ti back-lacin steys’ [IWL].

St. George’s Kirk (sin’-jor-jeez-kirk) n. church in St. George’s Lane, built in 1843–44 after the Disruption as the Free or Protesting Church. The land was purchased by the new congregation from James Anderson of Wilton Lodge. The original building was designed by Andrew Thomson of Glasgow and John Smith of Darnick. Several articles were placed in the foundation stone (and could not be found when the church was rebuilt). A manse was built on Wilton Path in 1846, designed by Smith of Darnick. The church was known as ‘Hawick Free Kirk’ for more than 50 years. It changed its name to ‘St. George’s United Free Church’ in 1900 (after the union of the Free and United Presbyterian Churches); the reasons for the choice of the new name are uncertain. After purchase of the house and grounds of ‘Ellabank’ next door the church was rebuilt in 1913–16 using Doddington stone, but with parts of the original walls and a lintel inserted from the old building. The austere Gothic design is by architect J.P. Alison. It is a grade C listed building. An adjoining hall was built a few years later. It was re-named simply ‘St. George’s Church’ in 1929 (after the union of the United Free Church and the Church of Scotland). It contains an east-end window, commemorating the 1929 reunion (possibly the only such window in Scotland), by Lilian J. Pocock of London. The organ was added in 1920 in memory of Bessie Scott (a gift of Peter Scott & Co.). A separate West End ‘Free’ congregation had been established in 1855, and after that church closed in 1956, St. George’s was renamed ‘St. George’s West’. Since 1988 it has been known as Teviot Parish Church, with links to Robertson Parish. Kirk Session records for 1842–82 and 1900–14 are in the National Archives. A roll of the ministers is: John Aikman Wallace 1843–70; William H. Gaultier, assistant 1859–64; John MacGregor 1865–73; M.P. Johnstone 1873–79; W.A.P. Johnman 1880–1923; Donald G. Ross 1911–35 (assistant until 1923); C. Sydney Finch 1936–1967; Thomas N. Hood 1967–82; Neil Combe 1984– .

Stirches  (stir-cheez)  n. area to the north of Silverbuthall, reached via Dickson Street. The name is now mainly identified with the council housing scheme, was developed after the property was purchased in 1971, with building commencing in 1973. The housing comprising a series of streets bounded by Stirches Road and Guthrie Drive, and contains a primary school, but no businesses. The main road to Selkirk and the north once went through here. The name goes back at least to the 16th century, and was formerly ‘Stirkshaw’ or ‘Stirkshaws’. There were sons of the Scotts of Synton (or Whitslade) there in the 16th and 17th centuries, who sold it to the Chisholmes around 1660. About that time Thomas Scott of Whitslade paid tax on £214 for the land there. William Chisholme was owner in 1678 and it was still recorded with the same value in 1788 and 1811. William Cavars was living there in 1682 and William Telfer in 1683. The lands were part of Hasseendean Parish until 1690 when that parish was suppressed and that part allocated to Wilton. In 1694 tax was paid on 4 hearths for ‘Stirkshaus’ households there, one the Curries and the other housing a variety of people. In 1851 Thomas Smith and family were in one house and the Campbell brothers in the other. In 1861 labourer William Thomson and family were at the cottage with James Gledstains and family at ‘Stin-tyknows Far House’. The hill there was originally the ‘stenting knowe’, where Wilton Common was stented, prior to its division in 1764. In other words this site was the Wilton equivalent of the Caa Knowe – ‘Stinty Knowe then the Ca Burn There isna a walk mair pleasant No on oor the Whitehaugh Road And in front o’ e a pheasant’ [AY] (also written ‘Stintie Knowe’, Stintyknowes, ‘Stinty Knowes’, etc.).

his house’, and Janet Lamb was listed among the poor. James Ormiston was there in 1721, Walter Lorraine in 1724–29, John Blyth in 1728 and William Lamb in 1729. Walter Stewart was living there in 1792. The estate was bought by James Farrar Blenkhorn in 1898, who was already renting the house. The house was redesigned and eventually passed to the Sisters of St. Augustine, and used as a private nursing home. The estate was sold off in parts, following Minnie Blenkhorn’s death in 1922. The lower area was developed as the Stirches housing estate in the mid-1970s – ‘Coming in by Stirches hill, I saw auld Hawick a dreaming still’ [IJ], ‘Wi’ halting’ step by Stirches brae To roam the Heap Hills ower ....’ [WFC], ‘A gentle walk up the Stirches road Then, when ee look around Ee think wi’ awe this is hame And it feels like hallowed ground’ [AY] (the name occurs regularly from 1481 until the early 18th century as ‘Stirkshaw’, ‘Stirkshawis’, ‘Styrkshaw’, ‘Styrkshaw’ and similar spellings; the modern ‘Stirches’ is first recorded in 1713, but it is still ‘Stirkshaw’ in Hawick Burgh records of 1728; it is ‘Styrkshaw’ in 1500, ‘Stirkschaw’ in 1501/2, ‘Styrkschawis’ in 1502, ‘Styrschaw’ in 1504/5, ‘Stirkschaw’ in 1512, ‘Styrkschawis’ in 1579, ‘Styrk Schawis’ in 1579/80, ‘Styrkschaw’ in 1580/1, ‘Styrkschawis’ in 1590, ‘Stirkshawes’ in 1694, ‘Stirkshawes’ in 1678, ‘Stirkschaw’ in 1505, ‘Stokschawis’ in 1502, ‘Styrkschaw’ in 1579, ‘Styrk Schawis’ in 1501/2, ‘Styrkschaw’ in 1502, ‘Styrkshaw’ in 1579, ‘Styrk Schawis’ in 1501/2, and ‘Stirkschaw’ in 1502; the origin is clearly from Old English ‘styrc’ plus ‘sceaga’ or Scots ‘shaw’, meaning a wooded area with young bullocks).

Stirches Band (stir-cheez-bawnd) n. popular name for the military band of the Upper Teviotdale Rifle Corps at the end of the 19th century, whose Captain was John Scott Chisholme of Stirches.

Stirches Brick Works (stir-cheez-brik-wurks) n. works set up by Capt. Chisholme of Stirches, which produced bricks, tiles and pottery between about 1850 and 1870, mainly used in local building projects. The original idea had been to establish a pottery works, until it was found that the local clay was unsuitable. The works were abandoned when the price of transportation and coal became too expensive. The buildings were used by the shepherd when the estate was purchased by Blenkhorn in 1890. Some ruined remains can be seen on the right of the road leading from the Convent to Stouslie.

Stirches Burn (stir-cheez-burn) n. stream that rises perhaps near Priestrig and flows through Stirches and then partially underground to become the Howden Burn.

Stirches Croft (stir-cheez-croft) n. former farm on Stirches estate, where??.

Stirches House (stir-cheez-hoos) n. Stirches House, an extensive mansion above Stirches housing scheme. A previously existing house was the residence of the Chisholms for about 200 years, being built on top of a mediaeval tower in the mid-17th century by Walter Chisholm. The original tower was square (perhaps similar to Goldielands) and had a protecting courtyard wall. It was built by Scott of Whitslade, after he became Laird in the late 15th century. Above the doorway was a Latin inscription ‘Christus Rex Regum qui non dormitat in aevum proteget hanc sedem necnon sine crimini plebem 1503’ (‘Christ the King of Kings, who never sleeps in heaven, protect this house and the people guiltless of crime’); a copy is still above the door of the present house (an extra ‘b’ on the end of ‘crimini’ suggests it is an imperfect copy). The lower floor had a vaulted ceiling, with the upper floors reached via a staircase in the roughly 6 foot thick walls. The second level held a public room about 30 feet by 18 feet, with a fireplace at each end, and there were sleeping rooms above. The upper stories were demolished in about 1666, with new accommodations built on either side and the south front added to the house. The initials ‘W.C. M.B. 1666’ were carved above one of the windows (Walter Chisholme and his wife Margaret Balderstone), this panel now in the north-east gable. Tax was paid on 19 windows there in 1748. The main house was added to and altered over the years, becoming a whitewashed cluster of buildings. The main building was in turn largely demolished in 1899/1900 for John Blenkhorn, and rebuilt to the designs of J.P. Alison. This included a fabricated Blenkhorn coat-of-arms in stained glass on the staircase and a stable for 12 horses. The only mediaeval parts surviving are sections of the south gable and west wall. After it was finally completed in 1904, James Blenkhorn lived there for only another 5 years before his death. There are photographs of how the house looked during his time there. After Minnie Blenkhorn’s death in 1922 the house went on the market and since 1926 has been run by the Augustinian Sisters as St. Andrew’s Nursing Home, better known as ‘the Convent’. An intricately carved slab from the old house, bearing the Chisholm crest, is in the Museum.

Stirches Ludge (stir-cheez-luj, -loj) n. small house near the entrance to the drive-way of the former Stirches House, there since at least the mid-19th century.

Stirches Mains (stir-cheez-mänz) n. farm in the Stirches area, to the left of the road just after the Convent. The farmer there recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax and Dog Tax Rolls was Mrs. Scott. In the early 19th century was James Buryan and in 1841 was Walter Knox – ‘Ower the lang brae frae Stouslie; Frae the mains o’ Stirches doun; How micht I come at the day’s end To the bonny Border toun?’ [WL] (presumably once the home farm for Stirches).

Stirches Mains Hill (stir-cheez-mänz-hil) n. name sometimes given to the hill near Stirches Mains, reaching a height of 266 m.

Stirches Quarry (stir-cheez-kwa-ree) n. former quarry on the opposite side of the road from Stirches Mains.

Stirches Road (stir-cheez-rod) n. the main road from Dickson Street to Stirches House, and also once the main road to Selkirk and points north. It now provides access to much of the Stirches housing estate.

Stirches Schuil (stir-cheez-skil) n. primary school in the Stirches housing scheme, built in 1976 on Roxburgh Drive. It’s characteristic feature is a forest of pyramidal roof lights.

stirk (stirk) n., arch. a young bovine animal after weaning, generally those kept for slaughter rather than breeding, usually referring to bullocks or steers, but also sometimes heifers – ‘…also from James Wardlaw, in Riccarton, was bought for 23s ‘an ox stirk of the guidwife’s at the mill’’ [JaT], ‘Transform’d may I be to a stirk, If bonny Meggy’s wanton smirk …’ [JR], ‘His time is up, he comes a hornless sirk – For faith! his sca’p’s sae soft that horns won’t grow on’t’ [JoHa], ‘…I know not if the stirks grew tired before the stars were set’ [WHO], ‘…And whiles I feel like tethered stirk Stuck here amang it a’’ [WL] (also sometimes ‘stark’; from Old English; the word occurs in several local placenames, e.g. ‘Stirches’).

Stirkleuch Height (stirk-kloo-ch-hi) n. hill that is the north-eastern spur of the Pike, between Penchrise Pen and the Maidens. It reaches a height of 443 m. Further to the north-east is Burnt Craig.

stirkie (stir-kee) n., arch. diminutive form for a young bovine animal – ‘Each ‘eer, as Januar’ – end returns, Ilk yowe and stirkie waefu’ murns …’ [DH].

Stirk-rigg (stirk-rig) n. small hill about 1 km north of Bedrule farm, reaching only about 160 m in height. Just to the west of the summit are the remains of a circular earthwork, about 45 m in diameter, probably a settlement. It was said (in the New Statistical Account) to have been removed by cultivation in the 18th century, but is still visible in aerial photographs. This was the former site of a farm, which was incorporated into the farm of Newton, with all signs of the farm-house disappearing. ‘Stirkrig’ and ‘Stirkrigg-hill’ were listed as part of Newton according to the Land Tax Rolls of 1811 (also ‘Stirkrigg’).

Stirkshaw (stir-shaw) n. early name for Stirches, after the stirs which grazed there. It changed to ‘Stirches’ in the early 18th century. The Chisholms were Lairds of Stirkshaw for about 250 years (also ‘Stirkschaw’, ‘Stirkschaws’, ‘Stirkshaw’, etc.; incorrectly written ‘Strikshaws’ by Keith Scott).

Stirkshielhope (stirk-sheel-hop) n. former farm in Liddesdale, listed as ‘Styrkschelhope’ in a c.1376 rental roll of Liddesdale. It was valued at 8 merks and listed under ‘Forest’ (which seems to have been the northern part, including the Hermitage valley). It is recorded as ‘Streichtelhope’ on the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale, and still valued at 8 merks; the tenants were Robert Elliot in Ramsiegill, John of the Hill, Adam Elliot of Lees, ‘Old’ Robert Elliot of Ramsiegill, John Elliot and John’s son James called ‘Nelis Jok’. It could be related to ‘Stitchel Hill’ near Riccarton.

Stirk Sike (stirk-sik) n. small stream that joins the west side of Dawston Burn to the north of Saughtree. It is between Watch Sike and March Sike and is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map.

Stirling (stir-ling) n. Benjamin (b.1805/6) resident of Lilliesleaf. In 1851 he is recorded as ‘Pau- per (formerly Tinsmith); Deaf & Dumb’. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. James ‘Jim’ (1924/5– ) from Cumnock, he volunteered for the Royal Navy at the age of 18. He was a telegraphist and then served on minesweepers. He was on a ship the cleared mines for the D-Day landings and later his ship was sunk and the crew spent hours in the water before being rescued. After the war he joined the police, serving in Duns, Coldstream, Yetholm, Jedburgh and Hawick. He retired as a sergeant. He is Hawick’s last surviving link with D-Day. Peter (b.1812/3) from Newtown, he was a tailor in Lilliesleaf, listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. He was living on the north side of Main Street in 1851. His wife was Agnes. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf, who paid the 1785 cart tax there and is also recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He is surely related to James, who is also listed in 1797. He was an innkeeper in Lilliesleaf, who subscribed to Andrew Scott’s book of poetry, published in Kelso in 1811.

stishie (sti-shee) n., poet. bustle, uproar – ‘When the stishie has smoored oot my rest . . .’ [WL] (cf. strooshie).

stitch (stich) n., arch. a furrow or drill of potatoes, turnips, etc. (see also tatti-stitch).

stitcher (sti-chur) n. a worker who stitches final trimmings (e.g. ribbons or pockets) on garments in the knitwear industry, using a sewing machine, this traditionally being a woman’s job.

Stitchel Hill (sti-chul-hil) n. hill just to the north-east of Riccarton junction, rising to 318 m. There was formerly a fortified house near here (it is ‘Stitchelhill’ in 1694 and 1736; it is marked as ‘Stritcher-hils’ on Gordon’s c. 1650 map and Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Stitchelhill (sti-chul-hil) n. farmstead in northern Castleton Parish, near the hill of the same name. It could be related to the lands of ‘Stryrkshellhope’ listed in northern Liddesdale in a rental roll c.1376 and ‘Stryechelhope’ recorded in a rental roll of 1541. ‘Willie’s Airchie’ Elliot ‘of Strychill hill’ is recorded in 1590. In 1632 it was owned by Gilbert Elliott of Stobs and listed as ‘Struchehill alias Stitchelhill’ (and listed among rentals of Kelso Abbey). It was surveyed for the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1718, when it was combined with Laidlawhope and Whitrope, and extended to 1990 acres, bounded by Laws, Dawstonburn, Millburnholm and Roughley. The lands were rented by John Laing from the Duke of Buccleuch in 1736. John Oliver was farmer there in the 1830s. William Roxburgh was shepherd in 1835. There was a lime works there according to the 1830s. William Roxburgh was shepherd in 1835. There was a lime works there according to the 1841 census, with 7 quarrymen working there (it is ‘Stitchhill’ in 1694 and 1736; it is marked as ‘Stichhill’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

stithy (sti-thee) n., arch. an anvil – ‘...While block and stithy rang wi’ our daffin’ an’ our mirth’ [JT].

Stiven (sti-vin) n. Rev. David Sime (d.1986) son of David Russell and Jeannie Sime, he was born near Dundee, where he was school Dux. He served with the Royal Scots, was awarded the Military Cross and returned to Britain wounded (with a missing leg, and an obituary having been written about him after being reported killed in action). He graduated from St. Andrews in 1919 and received his B.D. there in 1922, having a special interest in Hebrew and Biblical Criticism. He spent some time in Jerusalem, then became assistant at St. Cuthebert’s in Edinburgh before being appointed as minister of Teviothead Kirk in 1925. He was translated to Gilcomiston, Aberdeen in 1929 and Inveresk in 1937. He was minister of Iona Parish 1958–66 and received a Doctorate of Divinity. He married Margaret (‘Peggy’) McIntosh in 1923 and they had several children (his surname is sometimes given as ‘Steven’).

stivet (sti-vi’) n., arch. a stupid or obstinate person – ‘He’s an auld stivet!’ [GW].

St. James’ Fair (sin’-jäm-zeez-färr) n. traditional fair held near Kelso, formerly on 5th August, and now in September. Its origins go back to the days when Roxburgh was a town, and the traditional location at Friar’s Holm, where the Teviot meets the Tweed, is near the site of the old castle. It was probably for a long time the biggest fair in Roxburgshire.

St. James’ Field (sin’-jäm-zeez-fiid) n. name sometimes given to the flood of 9th August 1806, so called because it happened just a few days after St. James’ Fair. It was particularly devastating in Rulewater, with much property at Boucheridge being swept away. Sir Walter Scott described how the lower floor of Minto House was filled with water and trees and livestock sailed past his own house. It also took away the bridge over the Dean Burn at Denholm.

St. James’ Hall (sin’-jäm-zeez-hal) n. the Masonic Hall on Union Street, formerly used as a dance venue.

St. John’s Kirk (sin’-jönz-kirk) n. the former St. John’s Church on Oliver Crescent. It was built as an additional Hawick church in 1878–80, largely by donations from Rev. John Thomson and his wife (who had inherited a large sum). The builder was Alexander Ferguson. It had the town’s tallest steeple at 32 m or over 100 feet, and an adjacent church hall was also constructed in 1885. It also had magnificent stained glass windows by Wailes & Strang of Newcastle. It received its official status as a ‘quoad sacra’ parish by Decree of the Court of Teinds in mid-1881. The church survived for about 80 years, but in 1958 the congregation merged with those of St. Andrew’s and East Bank to form the new Trinity
The church itself was sold and partially demolished in 1960, but re-opened as Arthur Armstrong’s department store in 1962, later becoming Almstrong’s. The steeple was removed and some of the stained glass (by Wailes & Strang of Newcastle) was rescued by R.E. Scott and the Brothers of Charity, a monastic order from Gattonside, where they were installed. The buildings are now listed on the Buildings at Risk Register for Scotland and although approval was given for conversion into accommodation units, no work has been done. A roll of the ministry is: John Thomson 1881–89; Alexander Thomson 1889–94; William Brown 1894–1902; Robert Dickson 1902–05; William Lindsay 1906–13; Arthur Dumett 1913–20; Walter Carter 1920–29; ??; William Wood 1958–59.

St. Jude’s Fair (sin’-joodz-fair) n. name used for a fair held at Hawick in the 17th century, specifically mentioned in 1673. In that year the Baron (the Earl of Queensberry) complained to the Privy Council that the Bailies and others in Hawick stopped his officers from ‘riding the fair’ (i.e. collecting duties); this was probably part of a feud between the 2 parties over the use of the Common. It was also known as the ‘St. Simon and St. Jude Fair’. St. Jude’s feast day was 28th October, which was only a week or so before the date of Hawick’s Winter Fair in the 18th century. Hence it seems likely that this was an alternative name for the Winter Fair, perhaps with the date being moved at some point and hence the association with St. Jude being dropped.

St. Leonard’s see St. Leonards

St. Leonard (sin’-le-nurd) n. Christian saint, believed to have been a 6th century hermit, although his historical existence is not certain. He became one of the most popular saints in Western Europe in the late middle ages. He is Patron of pregnant women, captives and prisoners of war, based on a version of his life from the 11th century, and an event involving the release of a Prince of Antioch from a Muslim prison in the 12th century. He is supposed to have created an Abbey of Antioch from a Muslim prison in the 12th century, and an event involving the release of a Prince of Antioch from a Muslim prison in the 12th century. It is unclear when and for what reason his name became attached to parts of Hawick Common. He is now regarded as patron saint of the Hut.

St. Leonards (sin’-le-nurdz, sin’-lee-nurdz) n. general name for the farm and neighbouring area lying on the Common at the top of the Vertish. The tenant of the farm plays host to the Cornet and his supporters during the Chases before the Common Riding, and officially serves the curds and cream breakfast on the Friday. It is traditional that the Flag is displayed outside the farmhouse during the Thursday and Friday morning Huts. The Hut is effectively a barn at the farm, which replaced a temporary marquee in 1924. The singing of ‘Teribus’ outside the farmhouse after the Friday morning ‘Hut’ was started in 1890. The tenant was Thomas Reid in the late 19th century. A stone axe found near there is in the Museum. It is unclear when the name was attached to the farm; it is labelled ‘Hawick Townhead’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map – ‘And lang may St. Leonard’s retain the power To feast the sterling Teri; And lang may the flag Owre a cornet wag, And lang may we a’ be cheery’ [JEDM], ‘In front of old St. Leonard’s now the throng With one accord assemble, old and young All share the duties that to them belong – Again the Common Riding Song is sung’ [JCG] (named after Christian Saint Leonard, the reasons for which, and era being unknown; also written ‘St. Leonard’s’).

St. Leonard’s Handicap (sin’-le-nurdz-hawn-dee-kawp) n. former race taking place at the Common Riding. It is recorded in 1875 on the Saturday, being run over 1½ miles.

St. Leonard’s Moor (sin’-le-nurdz-moor, -mair) n. another name for Hawick Moor – ‘...Then in the breast alike of rich and poor There rises up a sense of joy refined, As on they journey to St. Leonard’s Moor’ [JCG].

St. Leonard’s Moss (sin’-le-nurdz-mos) n. another name used generally for Hawick Moss, for the marshy land behind St. Leonard’s farm or more specifically applied to the boggy land near to the north of Pilmuir Rig farm, in the middle of the Dipper Field. It is marked near Pilmuir Rig on J.P. Alison’s map of the Common in 1777. In 1713 the Council granted the right to ‘cast bakes’ anywhere on the mosses of the Common, except for here. Wininnington Moss or Whitchesters Moss. Burgess were told they could cut their peat on the moss here in 1733.

St. Leonard’s Park (sin’-le-nurdz-pawrk) n. race-course at the Mair, opened in 1854, and used exclusively for the Common Riding races since
St. Leonard’s Vaults

1855. It is one of the highest race courses in Britain, and also used for a few ‘flapping’ meetings every year. The paddock was extended in 1889 and offices erected in 1894.

St. Leonard’s Vaults (sin’-le-nurdz-vawlts) n. former name for the Ewe & Lamb pub in the late 19th century, at the Sandbed/Orrock Place (also sometimes ‘St. Leonard’s Spirit Vaults’ and ‘the St. Leonard’s Bar’).

the St. Leonard’s Stakes (thu-sin’-le-nurdz-stäks) n. race formerly run on the Saturday of the Common Riding, from at least 1887. It was at one time a ‘selling stakes’, with the winner to be sold for 50 sovereigns. The 1888 race was declared void after the leading horse slowed before the post to allow the second horse to win, while another horse had jockeys of different weight switched.

St. Leonard’s Well (sin’-le-nurdz-wel) n. spring just to the south of St. Leonard’s Moss, between Pilmuir farm and Pilmuir Rig farmstead. It seems possible that this was the first local place to be associated with the saint, with the farm name following later. It may be the same as ‘Lurgie’s Well’ (if that was not nearer to St. Leonard’s farm).

St. Malachy (sin’-mawr-la-chee) n. (1094–1148) Archbishop of Armagh, baptised ‘Maelmhaedhoc O’Morgair’, who was the first Irishman to be canonised, and is known for his vision of the identity of the last 112 Popes. In 1139 he journeyed to Rome via Scotland, England and France. The chaplainry of ‘Malachi and meadow lying within steads of Stobycot and Staneholm’ was mentioned in 1500 as part of the lands of Ringwoodfield excepted from the lease to Walter Scott of Branxholme. This may have been the early chapel near Northhouse.

St. Margaret (sin’-mawr-gritri) n. (d.1093) born in Hungary, her family fled William the Conqueror, were shipwrecked off Scotland, and then befriended by King Malcolm, who married her in 1070. She was brother of Edgar Ætheling, and daughter of the exiled English Prince Edward. Probably because of her familial influence, the Scottish King made many incursions into Northumbria. She had 6 sons and 2 daughters. She died a few days after her husband and son were killed at Alnwick Castle. She was canonised in 1251 and her feast day was 10th June (recently moved to 16th November). Another St. Margaret of Antioch was an early Christian martyr, and there are also other saints of the same name.

St. Margaret’s Drive

St. Margaret’s an Wulton Sooth (sin’-mawr-gritri-an-wul’in-sooth) n. former church near the top of Commercial Road (No. 34), built in 1894 to plans drawn up jointly by J.P. Alison and J. Chalmers of Glasgow. This replaced a temporary iron structure, and used red sandstone from Langtown Quarries. Originally called Wilton South Church, it was built for a new congregation established by the United Presbyterian Church in 1888. Wilton South merged with St. Margaret’s Church in 1940 and was linked to the charge of St. George’s West and Roberton churches in 1984. The building fell into disrepair towards the end of the 20th century, and the last service was in 1987. The congregation merged with that of St. George’s and the building was demolished in 2001.

St. Margaret’s Convent (sin’-mawr-gritri-kon-vin’) n. convent in the West End, built 1910–12, for sisters belonging to the ‘Third Order’ of St. Dominic (being free to engage in pastoral work outside the convent), the first of its kind in Scotland. They originally came from Stone in Staffordshire. The first 4 sisters arrived in Hawick in 1909 (to a rather mixed welcome), setting up temporarily at 14 Buccleuch Street, opposite the Catholic Church. They included Sister Mary Antoininus, Sister Margaret Mary and Sister Theresa Margaret. A resident chaplin followed in 1912. They took immediate charge of the Guilds associated with S.S. Mary & David’s, as well as teaching at the school. They also formed a Women’s section of the Sacred Heart Confraternity. They moved to Myreslawgreen in 1912, the foundation stone having been laid there the previous year. A hall was used as the Church Hall for S.S. Mary & David’s until the new halls were opened on Buccleuch Street in 1930. The building is believed to be the last in Hawick built using the red sandstone from Denholm Quarries, with architect Reginald Fairlie from Edinburgh. From 1934 the sisters ran the St. Margaret’s Home hospice, which was built on the grounds of the Convent. The Hall was demolished in 1970, with Myreslaw-court built on part of the site. The last nuns left the town in 1987, with the Convent building being taken over as part of the old-age Home. Chaplains at the Convent included: Michael A. Payne 1936–43; William Grant 1948–60; and Thomas Kelly 1961–63.

St. Margaret’s Drive (sin’-mawr-gritri-driv) n. dead-end road off Bright Street, formerly being on the grounds of St. Margaret’s Convent. It was named in 1990.
St. Margaret’s Home

St. Margaret’s Home (sin’-mawr-gritz-hôm) n. residential facility for the sick and aged, off Myreslaw Green. It was developed on the grounds of St. Margaret’s Convent from 1934, with considerable extensions being made since. It was opened by Archbishop McDonald and was founded as a ‘Home for Incurables’, with accommodation for 45 patients. In 1987 the nuns left the town, and the Home was taken over by a voluntary committee. Since 1999 it has been run privately.

St. Margaret’s Kirk (sin’-mawr-gritz-kirk) n. church on Wellington Road in Wilton, originally called Wellington Church. It was built in 1886 to house a congregation that had followed Rev. J.A. Birrell out of Hawick Parish Church following some internal disagreements. It was erected as a separate parish by a Decree of the Court of Teinds in 1896. In 1940 the congregation merged with Wilton South to become St. Margaret’s and Wilton South, with the abandoned building being used for commercial purposes until demolished in 1975. New housing was built on the site in 1977. A roll of the ministry is: William Miller 1886–98; Charles Brownlie 1898–1904; William McCullough 1905–35; ....

St. Margaret’s Schuil (sin’-mawr-gritz-skil) n. Roman Catholic primary school, originally established in 1854 by Fr. Taggart in 1854, with the financial assistance of Fr. Wallace of Traquair. Within a couple of years it had 50 pupils enrolled. A new building was constructed on the present site on Buccleuch Terrace in 1878, and later extended. The staffing problems were largely solved when the Dominican Sisters arrived in Hawick and supplied 2 teachers. A more modern building was erected in 1965 to accommodate 140 pupils, and was opened by Cardinal Gray. School Inspectors’ Reports for 1867–1951 are in the National Archives.

St. Mary see sin’-mă-reee n. title sometimes used for the Virgin Mary, the mother of Jesus of Nazareth and wife of Joseph. The church in Hawick was dedicated to her in 1214 (and this may have been a rededication). A spring in Castle Cary (the main seat of the Lovels) was also dedicated to her, there possibly being a connection here. The celebration of her Assumption (i.e. the apparent taking up of her body) on 15th August was of local importance, being mentioned in the 1511 Charter as the date on which the token payment was to be made to the Baron, as well as in the earlier charter of 1407 when the Barony was granted to Douglas of Drumlanrig, and in the 1420 charter of half of Branxholme to the Scots of Buccleuch. There were several other feast days associated with Mary, e.g. 1st January, 2nd July (Visititation), 8th September (Nativity) and 8th December (Immaculate Conception), which may also have been important in Hawick at one time. The entire month of May was also specially dedicated to Mary. James Wilson suggests that the date towards the end of May, mentioned in 1214, when the townspeople paid tribute to their church’s saint, may have led to the Common Riding taking place at that time of year.

St. Mary’s see St. Mary’s Kirk

St. Mary’s Kirk (sin’-mă-reee-kirk) n. St. Mary’s Church, occupying an eminence above the confluence of the Slitrig and Teviot. The existence of a church in Hawick is first recorded in 1183, and it was dedicated to St. Mary in 1214 by Adam, Bishop of Caithness (as recorded in the Chronicle of Melrose Abbey, ‘Dedicata est ecclesia Sanctae Mariae de Hawic a dompno A. Episcopo Cathenensi iiij, Kal. Junii’, i.e. ‘the Church of St. Mary of Hawick was dedicated by Lord Adam, Bishop of Caithness, May 29’). The original was probably at least as early as the coming of the Normans to the area, and may have been much earlier and Saxon. It contained ornate stonework (a few pieces of which survive in the Museum, including pillars surmounted by capitals and also a pattern of carved foliage, which was probably painted). The original may have been roofed with red flagstones. It was reslated and repaired in 1670. For centuries the church bell was rung to mark the passing of a resident of the Parish. Tradition says that a bell and clock were brought from Melrose Abbey when it was suppressed. The bell broke in 1693 and was melted and recast the following year (the Council enacting that it was only to be rung for deaths in those families that had contributed to the cost). In 1717 the charge for non-Burgesses was 2 shillings Scots (6 shillings for those outside the Burgh). The clock is recorded as early as 1701, when mention is made of it being broken for the last 12 years! In 1718 the Council asked for contributions for providing a new clock, and it was repaired in 1747, with new dial-plates made on the west and east sides; it was repaired again in 1761 at great expense, a clockmaker being brought in from Redpath for the purpose and a stent being raised to pay for it. The current clock dates from only 1873. The old steeple may have been turretted with a flat roof and a belfry at one of the corners; this ‘bell-house’ was rebuilt in 1723,
St. Mary’s Kirk

since its ashlar work was in danger of falling. In 1729 it is recorded that the bell was rung daily at 6 a.m. and 10 p.m.; by the early 19th century the times were 5.30 a.m. and 8 p.m. Stone stairs were built up to the steeple loft around 1714, and the ladder to the steeple was mended in 1727. The bell was also taken down (and presumably replaced) and the steeple mended in 1747. The main floor of the church was still not fitted with seats in 1718, when the Session records describe a dispute over space for stools. Already in 1723 there were calls for an extension to accommodate the congregation, with the Minister expressing his disappointment in 1724 at failing to convince the Session to act. In 1733 there was an appeal to the Duke of Buccleuch’s commissioners to repair and extend the church. It was largely demolished in 1763, apparently being too solid to bring down easily. The church was rebuilt in 1763/4, in a much more plain style and a new bell was obtained at that time (at a cost of £50, weighing 560 pounds and made by Lester & Pack of Whitechapel); the cost was £497 (exclusive of the bell), the money coming from the heritors, the Trustees of Alexander Orrock, the weavers incorporation, the rural tenancy (who carted the materials) and the Burgh (who supplied the bell). Some of the original stone was used, but all previous ornamentation was hidden. The T-shaped plan used the long wall for gathering the congregation around both the communion table and pulpit, which was the common design after the Reformation. The steeple was also rebuilt at that time, John Purves, wright in Kelso, being the main contractor. The upper gallery of the kirk was then reserved for members of the incorporation of Weavers, with the front row kept for the Magistrates. Most of the other seats were reserved for heritors, farmers and members of the session, with very few for the ordinary townspeople (who had to stand). In 1826 it is recorded that some people were paying 6 shillings (presumably annually) for the use of a seat, and there was an appeal to the Duke of Buccleuch for a larger church (which could seat 700 for a population of around 5000). Internal renovations were carried out around 1863 by mason’s Marshall & Ballantyne and joiner’s Scott & Wright. This work revealed the memorial stones of Walter Scott of Goldielands and some later family members (concealed under wood on the west-side of the aisle, where a furnace was installed), as well as some carved stonework from the earlier church. Severe damage was inflicted in a fire of 1880, it was substantially renovated in 1882/3 by the Edinburgh firm Wardrop & Reid, essentially as a replica of the one that burned down. The main changes were the addition of 2 circular windows in the gables as well as dormer windows, a move of the entrance from the south to the north side, and the building of 2 internal staircases instead of 3. The 18th century tower survived the fire, and is built in rubble of 5 stages, being topped with an ogival slated roof and a wrought-iron weather vane. There has been some dispute over the ownership of the tower, with the Town Council regarding itself as the owners in the 19th century (and being responsible for its upkeep, as well as that of the clock contained within it); however, the legal status of such ownership was not established. The Kirk had its exterior refurbished in 1973, when floodlights were also installed to illuminate it on special occasions. It is currently a Category B listed building. The church contains the Buccleuch Vault, resting place of many of the earliest Scotts of Buccleuch, which has been sealed since the 1763 re-building. The churchyard has been in use since at least the 13th century, and was in earlier times used for many civic functions, e.g. for the election of bailies. The permission to erect ‘through-stones’ appears only to have been given in 1712, following an Act of 1708. Although a proposal for enclosing the kirkyard was made in 1723, the surrounding wall was only built in 1811, and repaired in 1857. The churchyard was closed to burials in 1864. The iron gates were added in 1937 to mark the 400th anniversary of the granting of the 1537 Charter, and in 1973 the churchyard was extensively landscaped and tidied up. The 700th anniversary of its consecration in 1914 attracted an estimated crowd of 4,000. It was used for a while as a Red Cross Military Hospital in WWI. Before the Reformation (i.e. the late 16th century) St. Mary’s was, of course, Catholic, like other churches in Scotland. It was part of the Archdiocese of Glasgow, and in 1447/8 was made a canonry and prebend of the Collegiate Church of Bothwell. Patronage of the church was vested in the Earls of Bothwell, and in the early 15th and early 16th centuries. The church became insufficient for Hawick’s population in the later part of the 18th century, when other churches began to be set up. It was the Parish Church until 1844 (when the Old Parish Church was built), becoming a ‘quoad sacra’ church in 1860, and reverting to the main parish church again in 1887. Also in 1987 the interior was refurbished. After it was separated from ‘Old Parish’ the new Manse was off the Braid Road. From 1997 it was linked to the churches of Cavers and Kirkton. Kirk Session records exist from 1700. The oldest recorded communion token bear the mark ‘M.A.K.’ for ‘Master Alexander Kynneir’. Other existing tokens date from 1843 and 1860. A ‘gaufre’, or utensil for baking sacramental wafers, exists, and may be pre-Reformation. The National Archives contain records relating to the quoad sacra parish dating from 1833. A roll of the meenisters while it was the Parish Kirk is given elsewhere. The subsequent roll of the ministry is: John Thomson 1860–79; Stewart Burns 1880–1925; Eric Raff 1926–27; William Simpson 1927–33; Walter Calderwood 1933–53; J.P. Wilson 1959–66; . . . Duncan Clark 1976–83??; David Burt 1996–98; William Taylor 1998–??; Marina D. Brown 2010– . . . ‘While, as up yonder Sacred Mount I looke; On which the temple that’s sует on high, Stands much admired by strangers passing by’ [RRC], ‘Hark! the bell of old St. Mary Finds us armed alert and wary’ [RSC], ‘I sei the Slitrig whirlin’ doon, and I hear St. Mary’s clock’ [JEDM], ‘Where stands St. Mary’s pointing to the sky, Encircled round its walls in peaceful rest And with the dust of ages intrepressed The ashes of the dead forgotten lie (The while the living pass unheeding by)’ [TK], ‘. . . And the jowe o’ St. Mary’s bell’ [WL] (usually referred to as just ‘St. Mary’s’ or in earlier times as ‘the Kirk’ or ‘Hawick Kirk’ or ‘the Pairish Kirk’ to distinguish it from the other churches).

St. Mary’s Knot (sin’-mā-reez-no’) n., arch. a knotted triply, so that it is hard to undo – ‘He has tied them a’ wi’ St. Mary Knot, A’ these horse but barely three. Fala, &c.’ [CPM] (the note in Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ suggests that the line refers to ham-stringing a horse, but this is inconsistent with the following verses).

St. Mary’s Loch (sin’-mā-reez-loc’h) n. loch lying in the central southern uplands, about half-way between Hawick and Moffat. It is the largest body of water in the Borders, about 4 miles long, 7¼ miles in circumference and 30 fathoms deep in places. It has the smaller Loch o the Lowes at its head. There was a dispute over right to the Loch between Lord Napier and Scott of Rodono in the mid-19th century. It is famous for its picturesque views and as the haunt of the Ettrick Shepherd – ‘Long, long ago, ere the Yarrow wound Or the rainclouds filled St. Mary’s, Long, long ago, when on Ettrick ground The only folk were the fairies’ [WHO].

St. Mary’s Place (sin’-mā-reez-plis) n. name adopted by the Council in 1946 for what was formerly Old Churchyard or Auld Kirkyard. The house at the corner with the Kirk Wynd, No. 1 St. Mary’s Place and 31 Drumlanrig Square was designed in 1891 by J.P. Alison and built for Miss Lamb; it is a grade C listed building. Most of the other houses in the street are quite old.

St. Mary’s Schuil (sin’-mā-reez-skil) n. St. Mary’s Infant School, gifted by the 5th Duke of Buccleuch in the latter part of the 19th century. The buildings were at the top of Brougham Place, behind Trinity Church. It was set up through the efforts of Rev. John Thomson as the Parish School for St. Mary’s, and hence was also called ‘St. Mary’s Quoad Sacra School’. The first master was William Murray, who had been running a private school at 8 Kirkgate (i.e. St. Mary’s Place) since 1850. When the new school opened Murray marched all his students there in a body. The school became connected with the government so it could have student teachers, and after the passing of the Education Act it became the responsibility of the new School Board. A wooden building was built to house the infant department. Eventually the school became specialised as an infant department, with the older primary pupils attending Trinity. It closed in 1967, the pupils being split among the neighbouring schools. The main building was later used by a knitwear firm before being converted into 2 houses, with the outbuildings demolished. School Inspectors’ Reports for 1852–1951 are in the National Archives. The Borders Archive holds registers for 1898–1967 and log books for 1874–1967.

St. Mary’s Shiel (sin’-mā-reez-sheel) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded in 1541 as ‘Sant-Marie Scheillis’, and there being no tenant at that time. The location is unknown, but the name suggests it could have been associated with Hermitage Chapel.

St. Mary’s Steps (sin’-mā-reez-stepz) n. common name for the main staircase leading to St. Mary’s Kirk from the Kirkstile. There are 33 steps in all.

St. Mary’s Well (sin’-mā-reez-wel) n. spring on the north-north-west side of Ruberslaw. It was probably a ‘holy well’, i.e. at one point having some religious significance. A former spring near Hawthornside was known by the same name, or perhaps just Mary’s Well.

St. Michael (sin’-mi-kul) n. David (12th C.) witness to a charter for Richard Lovel to the Priory of St. Andrews about the 1190s. His name is given as ‘Dauid de sco michaele’. John was also a witness and they were both presumably part of the family that held lands at Whitchesters and elsewhere nearby. Elmeras (13th C.) son of Robert. In about 1240 he resigned his lands of ‘Ylistoun’ (Elliston near St. Boswells) to be granted to Dryburgh Abbey. John (12th C.) first witness listed in about the 1190s when Richard Lovel granted lands near Brauxholme to the Priory of St. Andrews. David is also listed and so probably his son or brother. It seems likely he is descended from Walter, who is mentioned a generation earlier. John (13th C.) witness in 1249 to a charter granted by Agnes ‘de Illifistun’ (i.e. Elliston) to Dryburgh Abbey. He may have well related to this Agnes. He is probably the same Sir John who witnessed a grant by Henry of Ashkirk about 1250: he is there ‘Johanne de Sancto Micaele’. Sir John (13th/14th C.) listed on the Ragman Rolls of 1296 as ‘Sire Johan de Seint Michel del Counte de Rokesburgh’. Presumably the same man is listed separately as ‘Dominus Johannes de Seint Michel, miles’. His seal consists of an oval showing St. Michael slaying the dragn and a man with a hawk on his wrist, together with the name ‘S:JOHANIS DE SCO MICHALE’. He probably held lands at Whitchesters and elsewhere in the county. Another ‘Johan’ is also listed, presumably his son, along with ‘Renaud de Seint Michel, clerk’ (i.e. Reginald), possibly another son. In 1311 he is listed among Scotsmen whose lands had been taken by Edward II, but were now returned (specifically his lands of ‘Heveside’) because they ‘came to his peace’. This is said to be an old Cumberland family and may be the same family who are recorded holding lands at Reban, Kildare in Ireland around 1300. John (13th C.) son of John of St. Michael. In 1278/9 he was accused of slaying Richard Bullock at ‘Cambok’, in a group along with 3 others. He was stated to be already dead, and so not declared an outlaw. He also witnessed a document for Swinton of that Ilk in 1432. He was succeeded by his son John. John ‘of St. Michael’ (15th C.), son of John. He was probably the last of his family to hold local lands. He is probably the ‘Johanne de Sancto Michaeli juniore’ who witnessed a charter between Margaret Cusing (wife of Hawick Burgess Simon Routledge) and Walter Scott of Bucleuch in 1447. A ‘retour’ of 1452 confirms to him the lands of ‘Qwitchester’, on annual payment to the Baron, the Earl of Douglas, of a white or red rose at the feast of St. John the Baptist. In 1455 John of Langlands attested in a notorised document (made at St. Mary’s Kirkyard) that he had inherited his father’s lands of Whitchesters. In 1455 King James II granted Whitchesters to David Scott, heir to Bucleuch for services to the King, the lands having been forfeited by ‘John of St. Michael, traitor’ (probably his father). In 1456 there was a further notorial instrument attesting that he had inherited Whitchesters from his father; by this time his is described as ‘quondam Johanni de Sancti Michaeliae, filio quondam Johannis de Sancto Michaelae’, suggesting that he was also deceased. The family, originally Norman, but settling in Ireland, had apparently held Whitchesters since before 1183, but forfeited them before 1455. Robert (12th/13th C.) probably related to the local family. In about 1180 he witnessed a confirmation of the grant of lands in Eskdale to Melrose Abbey by the Avenels. He witnessed a marriage contract for Philip de Valognes in about 1200; he was recorded as ‘Roberto de Sancto Michaele’, and other witnesses included John of Wilton and Simon of Hawick. His son ‘Elmeras’ is recorded in about 1240. Walter (12th C.) referred to in a charter sometime in the period 1163 to 1183. Henry Lovel granted the Priory of St. Andrews 2 oxgangs of land in Brauxholme, which was half of the lands formerly held by him (also written ‘de St. Michael’; it is possible there is a connection with the Carmichaels). He also witnessed a document for Swinton of that Ilk in 1432. He was succeeded by his son John. John ‘of St. Michael’ (15th C.), son of John. He was probably the last of his family to hold local lands. He is probably the ‘Johanne de Sancto Michaeli juniore’ who witnessed a charter between Margaret Cusing (wife of Hawick Burgess Simon Routledge) and Walter Scott of Bucleuch in 1447. A ‘retour’ of 1452 confirms to him the lands of ‘Qwitchester’, on annual payment to the Baron, the Earl of Douglas, of a white or red rose at the feast of St. John the Baptist. The family, originally Norman, but settling in Ireland, had apparently held Whitchesters since before 1183, but forfeited them before 1455. Robert (12th/13th C.) probably related to the local family. In about 1180 he witnessed a confirmation of the grant of lands in Eskdale to Melrose Abbey by the Avenels. He witnessed a marriage contract for Philip de Valognes in about 1200; he was recorded as ‘Roberto de Sancto Michaele’, and other witnesses included John of Wilton and Simon of Hawick. Henry Lovel granted the Priory of St. Andrews 2 oxgangs of land in Brauxholme, which was half of the lands formerly held by him (also written ‘de St. Michael’; it is possible there is a connection with the Carmichaels).

St. Mungo’s Day  (sin-‘mung-göz-dä) n. Saint’s feast day celebrated on 13th January, the anniversary of the death of St. Mungo in the year 613. He was Bishop of Glasgow and sometimes credited as founding the city. His day was celebrated before the Reformation and still referred to in the 1622 records of the local Commissioners’ Court. Also sometimes known as St. Kentigern, his image is included on the Founder’s Window of St. Cuthbert’s Kirk.

St. Ninian’s Road  (sin-‘ni-neu-inz-röd) n. street in the Terraces, named in 1931. The name was suggested by J.P. Alison, after St. Ninian (who died in 432), since he was one of the people to whom Trinity Church in Edinburgh was dedicated, this being connected to the Trinity lands in Hawick, near which the street was built.
St. Ninian’s Well

St. Ninian’s Well (sin’-ni-nee-inz-wel) n. former name for a spring on the Woll estate at Ashkirk. It is about 220 m to the west-south-west of the Parish Kirk, on a steep slope. This is one of a large number of sites throughout Scotland connected in name with this early Scottish Christian missionary. Ashkirk Kirk, which lies to the north-east of the spring, was originally dedicated to this saint. It has been suggested that the spring could have been so-named because it was used for baptisms.

stob (stob) n., arch. a stake, fence post – ‘...Of drystone dykes or fence stobs And far the eye can see’ [WL], ‘Compared wi’ a nibbie, a walkin’-stick’s nea better than a palin’-stob’ [DH], a coarse nail (the first meaning is probably the origin for ‘Stobs’ and ‘Stobi Hill’, while the second may apply to ‘Stobicote’).

Stob Cleuch (stōb-klooch) n. small stream that rises on Stob-cleuch Edge and runs eastwards to join the Gorrenberry Burn.

Stobedge Wud (stōb-ej-wud) n. plantation to the north of Minto Crags. In 1780 it is recorded that ‘Stobedge planting dyke’ formed part of the western boundary of Crigend and Minto Mill farms. An unrelated farmstead called ‘Stobedge’ was in Ancrum Parish and once part of the Chesters estate.

Stob Fell (stōb-fel) n. hill in the upper Hermitage valley, north of Billhope. It reaches a height of 518 m.

Stobicote (stō-bee-ko’) n. farm between Southfield and Old Northhouse. The lands were leased to Walter Scott of Branxholme by the Abbot of Melrose in 1500 along with other lands in the ‘Lordship of Ryngwodfeild’. In 1540 the King’s shepherd William Henderson is recorded being paid for oats there. The first owner may have been David Scott, son of ‘Wicked Wat’. In about 1557 it was rented from Melrose Abbey by Simon and John Scott, sons of the Laird of Allanhaugh: it was valued at £6 at that time. It was listed as ‘Stobbit, Coitbrugh’ in 1634. ‘Stobbit, Coitburgh’ in 1653, similarly in 1661 and ‘Stobitcoat-burgh’ in 1663 (i.e. merged with Brugh in the transcription), when still part of the lands of Ringwoodfield in the Lordship of Melrose held by the Scotts of Buccleuch. It was valued at £260 in 1643. In 1684 tenants James Glendingining and John Simpson were declared as fugitives for being Covenanters. 7 people were recorded there on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James Scott ‘Drover’ was tenant there at least in the period 1712–29. John Elliot was living there in 1716–22, Thomas Davidson was there in 1716, James Jackson in 1717 and William Telfer in 1720–23. When surveyed in 1718 it consisted of the combined farms of Over and Nether Stobicote, covering 694 acres, bounded by Allan Water, Brugh, Doecluch, Northhouse and Braidhaugh. William Edmondson was there in 1727, James Jackson and John Elliot in 1728, Walter Henderson in 1729 and William Scott in 1738. It was also the birth-place in 1765 of Gideon Scott, millwright. William Wilson was there in 1772. James Anderson was farmer there between at least 1763 and 1797. In 1788 the lands were valued at £260, and by then owned by the Duke of Buccleuch. George Hobkirk and family lived there in 1841. The route for the Mossopaul ride-out passes near here (also known as ‘Stobiescot’, ‘Stobicote’ etc., and is ‘Stobitcote’ on the Ordnance Survey map; it is ‘Stobycot’ in 1500, transcribed ‘Stoble-Tait’ in 1540, ‘Stobe-coit’ in 1557 and 1564, ‘Stobitcote’ in 1643, ‘Stobbitcoat’ in 1660, transcribed ‘Stobatcote’ in 1684, ‘Stobitcoat’ in 1694, ‘Stobbitcoat’ in 1712 and 1716, ‘Stobitcott’ in 1717 and 1723, ‘Stobitcoats’ in 1718, ‘Stobit Cott’ in 1724, and ‘Stobbitcot’ in 1718; it appeared as ‘Stobbycott’ on Blaenu’s 1654 map and on de Wit’s c. 1680 map of Scotland, while Stobie’s 1770 map has ‘Stobbitcot’; the name probably means ‘cottage made with nails’).

Stobie Cote see Stobicote

Stobie Cleuch (stō-bée-klooch) n. small stream joining the Hermitage Water from the west near Leaugh Cottage, just north of Redheugh. On the lower banks of the stream there are the remains of 4 circular turf stells.

Stobie Rig (stō-bée-rig) n. small ridge of land between the Liddel Water and Foulshiels farmhouse, just south of Stobie Cleuch.

Stobie’s map (stō-beez-map) n. map of Roxburghshire prepared by Matthew Stobie and published in 1770. Although this map is useful, it was prepared for the gentry and hence began the insidious process of anglicising our local place names.

Stobie Hill (stō-bée-hil) n. hill in the Ale valley, between Whitslade farm and Todrig farm, with Whitslaid Hill being the southern spur. There is a linear earthwork, an old field-bank, running from the hollow between this hill and Whitslaid Hill north towards Todrig (it is marked ‘Stobiehill on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Stobi Meadi (stö-bé-me-di) n. former lands in Lilliesleaf granted by Walter of Riddell to Melrose Abbey in the early 13th century and recorded as ‘Stobimedue’.

Stobitcote see Stobicote

Stobo (stö-bö) n. John (17th C.) traveller from Kelso. In 1659 the Hawick Council decreed that the would not ‘trouble nor molest our market, in buying either butter or cheese before the bell ring for that effect’ [BR1659].

Stobs (stöbz) n. estate and former hamlet about 4 miles south of Hawick, along the Slitrig. In the 19th century it had about half a dozen homes, as well as a post office, blacksmith’s shop and joiners (mostly in a long row of cottages), although there is now little trace of these buildings. It was also a station on the Waverley Line, converted into a house after the 1969 closure of the railway, with extensive sidings linking it with the military camp. The estate is heavily wooded, with sitka spruce and other conifers dominating. The name is recorded in the early 14th century, and gave rise to a surname. Thomas Cranston was granted the barony of Stobs by David II, sometime previous to 1370. A grant sometime before 1375 has Thomas, Earl of Mar and Lord of Cavers, granting parts of Cavers to Thomas Cranston, with his lands of Stobs being excepted. In 1458/9 the lands were among those held by Thomas Cranston of that Ilk. In 1509/10 it was listed as part of the holdings of Douglas of Cavers since the time of King David. In 1544 the lands were owned by Clement Crozier, and then passed to the Gledstains family. The superiority of the lands of Stobs was held by the Cranstons as part of the Lordship of Denholm according to a discharge of 1574. Gavin Gledstains inherited the lands from his deceased brother George in 1580. They were sold before 1584 to Gavin Elliot of Baillielie, who then became the first Eliott of Stobs. On his death they were inherited briefly by his surviving daughters and a grand-daughter, but sold in 1607 to ‘Gibbie wi the Gowden Garters’, who took full possession of it in 1614 (with the superior at that time being Sir John Cranston of that Ilk). In 1608 it was attacked by William Scott of Northhouse and a party armed with ‘swords, gauntlets and plate-sleeves’ threatening to burn ‘all the evidents and wriits of the said lands’ unless they got what they wanted; 2 years later the same William and his brother Robert Scott attacked Gilbert Eliott of Stobs on the streets of Hawick. Beginning with this Gilbert, ‘Gibbie wi the Gowden Gainers’, the estate became the seat of the Eliott family for many generations. The superiors of the lands were the Lords Cranston in the 17th century. In 1678 it (along with Langside, Penchrise, Stanishope, Harwood Burn and William’s Rig) was valued at £1633 6s 8d, and owned by the Eliotts of Stobs.

In 1694 ‘The place & office houses’ of Stobs was taxed for 13 hearths, while ‘Stobs his cooks wife’ was taxed for a hearth in Hawick. John Henderson was recorded living there in at least 1726–30 and Andrew Lillico in 1736–41. Sir Gilbert Eliott paid tax for 14 windows there in 1748 and 15 in 1753. In 1788 (and in the Land Tax Rolls of 1811) it was valued at £1633 6s 8d, with the teinds having been purchased from Douglas of Cavers and valued at £400. The estate was sold to the War Office in 1902, apparently partly because the terrain resembled the South African veldt. Over the next 5 decades it was used extensively as an army training camp and also prisoner of war camp. It was broken up and sold after WWII. A memorial stone cross was erected after WWI. A plan of the estate from 1779 is in the National Archives (also spelled ‘Stobbs’, ‘Stob’, ‘Stobbes’, ‘Stobbs’, etc.; the name is recorded in 1309 as ‘Stobbs’ and in 1370 as ‘stokis’, perhaps in error, with ‘the Stobbs’ appearing in 1458/9, ‘Stobis’ in 1509/10, ‘Stobbis’ in 1511 and ‘Stobbs’ in 1643; the modern spelling dates to at least Gordon’s c. 1650 map, but is ‘Stobbs’ on Blaeni’s 1654 map; it may be from the Gaelic, Old Norse or Old English for ‘stakes’ or ‘stumps’, perhaps meaning that it was a place marked by tree stumps).

Stobs (stöbz) n. David (16th C.) recorded as tenant in Mervinslaw in a rental roll of 1541. His steadings was valued at 12s 6d. His surname is recorded as ‘Stobis’.

Stobs Camp (stöbz-kawmp) n. army camp, about 4 miles south of Hawick, established in 1903 as a summer training ground, with the officers stationed in Stobs Castle. The camp was based at the former estate of Stobs, including adjoining farms, covering about 10,000 acres. A small gauge railway track went from the Waverley Line right up to the camp, this tramway being dismantled when the camp expanded during WWII. Used initially by volunteer units as a summer training ground, it saw increased use around the time of the two World Wars and grew to be so large that it was referred to as ‘the Scottish Aldershot’. At its peak in 1915 there may have been as many as 15,000 men stationed there. It was also used as a prisoner of war camp, with about 6,000 German troops interred there in WWI, and a small number in WWII. After the war it was used for the repatriation of Polish troops, and then reverted to use as a summer training camp until it closed in 1956 and was sold in 1959. Horst Rossberg wrote his recollections as a prisoner of war in the 1991 Transactions. A couple of wooden buildings survive, along with concrete foundations, steps and terracing, showing the location of many more. The training ground stretched all the way to Penchrise Pen. A small cemetery, just inside the camp, was used to bury the 36 prisoners of war and 6 internees who died in the camp, the bodies being reinterred in 1962. 2 interpretation boards were installed in 2020.

Stobs Castle (stōbz-kaw-sul) n. family seat of the Elliots, destroyed in a fire in 1712, resulting in the loss of many of the family’s early documents. A tradition is that people from Hawick were blamed for setting the fire. The original tower stood in a plantation about 400 yards south-east of the present structure, but there are no remains to be seen (it is marked as the site on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map). A new mansion was built on the same site in 1719, but in 1764 it also burned down. It was said to be ‘a twae storey heigh thack-house’ [WaD]. It is said that many of the foundation stones were removed from the old castle in 1797. The house was rebuilt by Sir William Elliot from around 1793, as a gothic-style residence. After that it was always referred to as ‘Stobs Castle’ rather than ‘Stobs Hoose’. The builder was John Laing of Hawick, and the architect was Robert Adam, this being his last castle. It narrowly escaped burning down again in 1824, being saved by the actions of the servants. There were also later Victorian alterations, around 1865, probably by James Anderson Hamilton. A carved family coat of arms hangs over the north entrance. 50 High Street has a freestone cornice salvaged from the Castle at the beginning of the 19th century. When the estate was sold to the War Office in 1902 the house was used as officers quarters. The gothic single-arched bridge approach also survives, along with the Grecian-style gateway to the approach road. And along the track south of the house is the stable block. The gothic single-arched bridge approach in 1902 the house was used as officers quarters. The gothic single-arched bridge approach in 1902 the house was used as officers quarters. the Stobs Castle Stakes (thn-stōbz-kaw-sul-stāks) n. race run over 2 miles on the Saturday of the Common Riding in the late 19th century.

Stobs Ceemetry (stōbz-see-mi’-ree) n. small cemetery situated just inside Stobs Camp, south of the former station. This was where 36 prisoners of war and 6 civilian internees were buried. A memorial was built from stones carried up from the Slitrig by Mr. Oliver, farmer at Winningtonrig. The names of those buried there were recorded along with an inscription: ‘To our comrades who died far away from their country’. The site was maintained by locals until 1962, when the bodies were reinterred at Cannock Chase German Military Cemetery in Staffordshire. A few remains of the memorial can still be seen today.

Stobs Cottage (stōbz-ko’-ej) n. former name for a cottage on the Stobs estate. The estate manager lived there in the 1860s.

Stobs Crater (stōbz-krā’-ur) n. crater on Mars, named after the area of Stobs in 1976. It is roughly 12 km in size, and situated at about 5° S, 321.6° E.

Stobside Hill (stob-shaw-hil) n. hill just to the west of Headshaw. It reaches a height of 298 m and may correspond to the ‘Stobsidehill’ recorded in a description of boundaries in Headshaw in 1780.

Stobs Hoose (stōbz-hoos) n. name sometimes used for Stobs Castle, particularly before the baronial style mansion was built in the late 18th century. The estate was owned from the late 16th century by the Eliotts of Stobs, who built a fortified house there, which was destroyed in 1712. The new house was built in 1719, but was largely replaced by 1800. There were also additions around 1865.

Stobsiade (stōbz-zee-ad) n. newspaper produced by German prisoners of war at Stobs during WWI, with 26 issues being produced in the period 1915–19. At first it was produced by civilian internees, but by late 1916 (when the civilians were moved to the Isle of Man) it was continued by the military prisoners. It contained advertisements, news, poetry, puzzles and short stories. About 4,000 copies of each issue were printed (by Scott & Paterson in Hawick). The name means ‘news from Stobs’ in German, but is a play on the popular 18th-century epic poem ‘Jobsiade’. Despite censorship and other restrictions, the publication contains remarkable creativity and humour.

Stobside Hill (stob-sd-hil) n. former name for a hill on the farm of Dryden. It is recorded as ‘Stobsidehill’ in 1780 and probably corresponds to the modern Stobshaw Hill.

Stobs Limery (stōbz-l-mu-ree) n. name used for the lime works at Limekilnedge. It started production in the 1790s and ran into the latter part of the 19th century.
Stobs Lodge

Stobs Lodge (stōbz-loj) n. former lodge house at Woodfoot, near the beginning of the drive to Stobs Castle, on the west side of the Slitrig.

Stobs Loch (stōbz-loch) n. another name for Barnes Loch.

Stobs Park (stōbz-pawrk) n. former name for a farm near Stobs.

Stobs Sidins (stōbz-sī-dīnz) n. railway sidings built for Stobs Military Camp at Acreknowe farm. This made a connection to the Stobs Camp internal tramway via a transfer platform. The tramway connected various parts of the camp at different times, e.g. it once ran to the rifle range on Penchrise Pen, and also to the ‘Meldrum Destructor’ (i.e. incinerator).

Stobs Station (stōbz-stāshhin) n. former railway station at Stobs, once much used by the military. It was originally called Barnes, but renamed almost right away to Stobs. It had an ‘up’ platform (to London) and a ‘down’ platform (to Edinburgh) as well as a bay platform on the west side. The station building was built in a baronial style. Just south of the station was the cemetery side. The station building was built in a baronial form (to London) and a ‘down’ platform (to Edinburgh) as well as a bay platform on the west side. The station building was built in a baronial style. Just south of the station was the cemetery.

stockyard (stok-yard) n. a stockyard, area where livestock is kept on a farm, typically close to a slaughterhouse – ‘...and convey the chests containin the plate ti Caverton Mill where it was buried in the stockyard where it lay until the danger was passed’ [IWL].

Stoddart (sto-dur') n. Archibald ‘Aarchie’ (16th/17th C.) listed along with John and Gilbert, servants to the ‘Laird’s Jock’ (probably Armstrong) in 1595, when accused of stealing cattle from England. Archibald (17th C.) resident at Barnes in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. David (14th C.) owner of lands in ‘Er-mildon’ (i.e. somewhere around Aroch Fell) in Liddlesdale according to a 1.376 rental roll. ‘Locus Daviid Stodhirde’ is listed there with a value of 33 shillings and 4 pence. Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (17th C.) recorded in 1643 as ‘gudewife of Great-law’ in Lilliesleaf Parish. Her lands there were valued at £104. She was presumably widow of the former owner of Greatlaws and may have been connected with the Riddell family. Gilbert ‘Gib’ (16th/17th C.) listed along with Archibald and John, servants to the ‘Laird’s Jock’ (probably Armstrong) in 1595, when accused of stealing cattle from England. James (17th C.) listed at Flex among ‘The poor in Hauick Par-i-och’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the John who married Grizell Elliot and whose daughter Malie (b.1674) was baptised in Hawick Parish. James (18th C.) recorded in Ormiston in 1726 and 1727. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included Walter (b.1726) and Walter (again, b.1727). James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jane Armstrong and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1772. The witnesses were wright James Roger and merchant John Scott. James (19th C.) mason of Deanburnhaugh. He was one of the earliest Trustees of the Congregational (then Evangelical Union) Kirk. John (15th C.) recorded as ‘Joanne Stoddird’ in the 1447 sasine for the Cousinlands, purchased by Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. The witnesses are Scotts, except for the last 2, who are this man and Patrick Turnbull; it is possible that they were the Hawick Bailies at that time. John (16th C.) described as ‘Johnne Stoddart, cobilman to the lard of Langlands’ in 1576. This was in a pledge made for him (and George Elliot) to the Privy Council by Walter Scott of Goldielands, James Gledstains of Cocklaw and James Langlands of that Ilk. He was listed in 1578/9 among Borderers deemed to have continued in thieving and hence declared as fugitives. He was stated to have been ‘enterit’ and ‘deliverit in the sheref of Roxburch his handis’. Perhaps the same man (or else his son) was ‘Johnne Stoddart, cobileman at Hawick’ when listed among those declared as fugitives for not appearing at a Borders Commissioners’ court in Jedburgh in 1605. What happened to him is not recorded, but it seems likely he would have been hanged or fled the area. His existence shows that there was a man employed to ferry people across the Coble Pool from at least the latter part of the 16th century. John (16th/17th C.) listed along with Archibald and Gilbert, servants to the ‘Laird’s Jock’ (probably Armstrong) in 1595, when accused of stealing cattle from England. John (18th C.) recorded in ‘Borthwickburnfoot’ in 1764, 1766 and 1772 when 3 of his children were baptised in Robertson Parish. He married Mary Anderson in Robertson in 1762. Probably the same John was father of Isabel (b.1764), Betty (b.1766), Mary (b.1768), Jean (b.1770) and Margaret (b.1772). Kenneth (1644-) born in Hawick, he qualified as a music teacher then became a hairdresser and moved to Australia. He was awarded the title of ‘Australi-an Hairdresser of the Year’ in 2005 and has styled hair for stars such as Kylie Minogue, Jerry Hall and Nicole Kidman. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, living at the Flex. He married Jean Little and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1674. The witnesses were William Henderson (also in Flex) and Walter Martin. Robert (17th/18th C.) tenant at the Flex, probably related to the earlier Robert who was there. In 1708 he witnessed a baptism for William Henderson ‘younger in Flex’. His son Francis was baptised in 1704, with witnesses William Henderson (also in the Flex) and Andrew Riddell (in Goldielands). Robert (d.1759) resident of Ewes Parish. He married Margaret Laidlaw, probably in 1756. Their children included: John (b.1757); and Robert (b.1759), baptised after he had already died. The witnesses in 1759 were John Turnbull and Patrick Maxwell. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Stouslie in 1729. He married Elspeth Turnbull and their children included James (b.1727), Margaret (b.1729), Thomas (b.1732) and James (again, b.1737). The witnesses in 1729 were William Grieve and John Scott. Thomas (1828–1905) born in Roxburgh, he attended school in Hawick, being apprenticed as a joiner at 16. He joined the army at 20 and left for Australia in 1853. In the Ballaarat area (near Melbourne) he worked as a miner, becoming a speculator and director of many mining companies. By 1880 he was a wealthy man, purchasing statues, and inspiring a local zeal that has led to Ballarat being called the ‘City of Statues’. His bust sits in the local Town Hall. He is recorded subscribing to Hawick Common Riding in the 1880s Walter (17th/18th C.) married Janet Redford in Ashkirk Parish in 1689. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was heir at Harwood in 1711. He married Jean Scott and their children included Isobella (b.1711) and Margaret (b.1713). The witnesses in 1711 were Gideon Scott of Falnash and Bailie Walter Elliot. Perhaps the same Walter had children Christian (b.1707) and Walter (b.1710) baptised in Roberton Parish. He may therefore be the same man as the Walter recorded at Meadow in 1710. Walter (18th/19th C.) servant of Robert Simpson at West Riddell in about 1823. William (17th/18th C.) workman in Hawick. In 1719 he was ‘servant to David Gray tenant in Weensland’. He was living at the Sandbed in 1724. He married Helen Wilson (also from Hawick) in 1719 and their children included: Archibald (b.1720); Robert (b.1722); and Janet (b.1724), baptised in Wilton. The witnesses in 1720 were David Gray in Weensland and merchant John Johnston. The witnesses in 1724 were Walter and John Scott. William (17th/18th C.) ‘casaer’ (i.e. road-layer) in Hawick. In 1719 he was ‘Casaer in Flex’ when he married Marion, daughter of tailor Walter Gledstains. Their children included: John (b.1723); Bessie (b.1725); Janet (b.1727); and Jean (b.1730). Robert (b.1720), with the mother’s name given as Agnes Gledstains, was probably also his son. The witnesses in 1730 were Will Stoddart (surely related) and John Telfer. William (19th C.) woolsorter who was Cornet in 1873. He acted as Right-Hand man again in 1875, since the previous year’s Cornet was unable to attend. William ‘Willie’ (20th C.) mill worker in Hawick. He spent some time working in Canada as a teenager and served in WWI. In 1937 he became Hawick’s only Communist Town Councillor, but within a few months joined the Labour Party. He was involved in setting up the Hawick Workers’ Mill, which supplied woollen goods to anti-Fascist forces in Spain, as well as helping provide jobs for unemployed mill-workers in Hawick (formerly spelled ‘Stoddert’, ‘Stodert’, ‘Stotherd’ and other variants; also Stothart).

Stodge (støj) v., arch. to trudge, walk heavily, deliberately or unsteadily.

Stonedge (stödʒ) v., arch. to walk heavily, stride sturdily, stump – ‘By the policies o Ancrum Hoose ... A staogget-on on the shadleet seide’ [ECS].

Stog (stög) v., arch. to stab, pierce, jab – ‘I have stoged myself in the leg’ [HAST1922].

Stoggit *(stō-gee’, -gi’) pp., poet. stabbed, thrust – ‘Thou hest stogget sair t me, that I micht fa’...’ [HSR].

Stohill (stō-hil) n. former name for lands near Commonside in upper Teviodale. In 1591 these lands, along with Commonsid, Northcroft and Hillend were already occupied by Gilbert Elliot when leased to him by Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. It is unclear if the name is a variant of something more familiar.

Stoit *(stoi’; stōit) n., poet. a clumsy person – ‘Auld stoit’, said Mrs. Blearie, sharp, Then quickly she calmed doon ...’ [WFC], arch. a bounce by a ball.

Stoiter *(stoi-tur) v., arch. to stagger, stumble – ‘The step may stoiter, the eyne be dim ...’ [WL], ‘...But byways for the likes o’ me Although the step may stoiter’ [WL] (cf. the more common stotter).

Stonedge (sten-leej; stō-nej) n. farm west of Wolfelee above Howaill, once part of one of the main estates of Hobkirk Parish, also formerly known as ‘Stanledge’. It was also once a barony in its own right. It is probably the seat of John ‘de Stonesleighe’ who signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296 and is ‘de Stonseleighe’ in 1303/4 on an inquest for inheritance of the half barony of Wilton. The lands were bestowed on David Home of Wedderburn by Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus in 1464. It could be the ‘Stanleche’ in Ettrick Forest, whose ‘grassum’ was mentioned in the Exchequer Rolls of 1477 (although this could be confusion with Crown lands of the same name in Stirlingshire). James Turnbull was recorded there in 1590. Walter Scott was tenant there in about 1600. The size and ownership of parts of lands referred to as ‘Stonedge’ are complicated. The Earl of Angus sold off his superiority of these and other Rulewater lands to Sir William Cranston in 1605. The estate is recorded belonging to Hector Turnbull in at least 1603–09, part sold to Gibbie Elliott of Stobs in 1609 and part still owned by Andrew Turnbull in 1610. Andrew and Cuthbert ‘McDowall’ were there in 1616. It was sold by William, Earl of Lothian to Sir Thomas Ker of Cavers in 1647, but given back the following year. Then in 1651 it was sold by William, Lord Cranstoun to William Elliott of Stobs (tradition says that Cranston did this to secure them against being forfeited before his joined attempts to rescue Charles I). In 1671 the lands of Over and Nether Woollee, Stonedge, Unthank, Howa, Sneep, Hobsburn and Little Gedstains were separated off from those of Stobs to become the new estate of Stonedge; this was disposed to Thomas, the eldest son of Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs with his 2nd wife Magdelan Nicolson, and when Thomas died it went to his brother Gilbert. In 1694 the residents were John Mair, elder, Agnes John, Robert Mair, younger and Robert Oliver. In 1718 the western part was sold to Adam Scott (tenant farmer at Wauchope), and passed to his brother William, who later purchased the eastern part and became the new Laird of Stonedge. Along with Howa, Scott’s part was valued at £856 12s, with Elliot of Stonedge holding lands at the same time that were valued at £676 14s 8d. In 1676 the eastern part was valued at £412 19s 6d, with the superiority liferented by Elliot of Borthwickbrae, while the western part was valued at £842 6s. Adam Scott’s son Thomas sold his lands to Robert Lisle. Part (including Unthank) was also sold to Elliot of Woollee. In about 1788 it was listed as being disjoined from the Stobs estate and valued at £1300 in total, Elliot of Wolfelee holding lands in Stonedge valued at £112 5s 7d, while Robert Lisle’s part was valued at £1187 14s 5d, and Cornelius Elliot of Wolfelee also owned small parts valued (along with Unthank) at £110 17s 2d. Lisle sold his lands in 1793 to James Chisholme before the previous purchase had really been completed. In 1811 it was listed as being owned by Robert Lisle and valued at about £1200. It passed through marriage to the Sinclairs, being owned by Lord Sinclair by about 1874. Robert Grieve (who died in 1785) was tenant farmer there. James Stewart was shepherd of Stonedge Hill in 1874. Robert Grieve (who died in 1785) was tenant farmer at Wauchope, and when Thomas died it went to his brother Gilbert. In 1694 the residents were John Mair, elder, Agnes John, Robert Mair, younger and Robert Oliver. In 1718 the western part was sold to Adam Scott (tenant farmer at Wauchope), and passed to his brother William, who later purchased the eastern part and became the new Laird of Stonedge. Along with Howa, Scott’s part was valued at £856 12s, with Elliot of Stonedge holding lands at the same time that were valued at £676 14s 8d. In 1676 the eastern part was valued at £412 19s 6d, with the superiority liferented by Elliot of Borthwickbrae, while the western part was valued at £842 6s. Adam Scott’s son Thomas sold his lands to Robert Lisle. Part (including Unthank) was also sold to Elliot of Woollee. In about 1788 it was listed as being disjoined from the Stobs estate and valued at £1300 in total, Elliot of Wolfelee holding lands in Stonedge valued at £112 5s 7d, while Robert Lisle’s part was valued at £1187 14s 5d, and Cornelius Elliot of Wolfelee also owned small parts valued (along with Unthank) at £110 17s 2d. Lisle sold his lands in 1793 to James Chisholme before the previous purchase had really been completed. In 1811 it was listed as being owned by Robert Lisle and valued at about £1200. It passed through marriage to the Sinclairs, being owned by Lord Sinclair by about 1874. Robert Grieve (who died in 1785) was tenant farmer there. James Stewart was shepherd there in 1797. Lands formerly in Stonedge (including Unthank) were listed among the properties of Cornelius Elliott of Woollee in 1811, valued at £112 5s 7d. The farm was tenanted by Thorburns through much of the 19th century and by the Barrie family into the 20th century. The original house was a strong tower situated on a rocky ledge, said to be surrounded by a very thick wall. All sign of this was already gone by the 19th century, although it is said that Mr. Barrie (who lived at Harden) picked up the old key to the peel and passed it on to the Marquis of Lothian. It was stated in the 19th century that there is a stone circle near here, in the direction towards Shankend, although if it existed it is now lost (many spelling variants exist in earlier documents, including ‘Stainleath’; it is ‘Stainleiche’ in 1562, ‘Stenichtle’ in 1567, ‘Stonyleachie’ and ‘Stonyletche’ in 1590, ‘Stanyleche’ and ‘Stannie-loche’ in 1603, ‘Stanyledge’ in 1604, ‘Stanyledge’ and ‘Steneledrig’ in 1606, ‘Stennyle’ and ‘Staneleiche’ in 1607, ‘Staneleche’ and ‘Sten-letch’ in 1609, ‘Stanielege’ in 1611, ‘Stanyledge’ in 1612 and 1615, ‘Stanyledge’ in 1616, ‘Stanyle’ in 1647, ‘Stainledge’ in 1648, ‘Stennyledge’ in 1677, ‘Stenilodge’ in 1682, ‘Stennylege’ in 1692, ‘Stennilege’ in 1694, ‘Staneledge’ in 1704 and ‘Standldige’ in 1748; it is marked as ‘Stemmaleuch’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; note that the l has persisted in the local pronunciation despite the official spelling, and that the pronunciation is never stän- ; the meaning is probably ‘stane leche’, meaning ‘stony stream’).

Stonedge (sten-leag, stō-nej) n. John (13th/14th C.) recorded as being ‘de Stonesleghe’ when he signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. Although his name has also been transcribed as ‘Scouneslegh’, the more modern transcription makes the connection with the lands in Hobkirk Parish clear. His seal bore a ‘cabossed’ stag’s head with a cross between the antlers and the name ‘S’. . . OHIS DE STYKSY’; William of Yetholm had a similar seal. He is ‘de Stounesleigh’ in 1303/4 on an inquest for inheritance of the half barony of Wiltun.

Stonedge Hill (stō-nej-hil) n. hill lying to the south-west of Stonedge farm, reaching a height of 369 m. On its western side is a linear earthwork, some 330 m in length, probably an agricultural boundary, now obscured by the forestry plantation. Near the top of the hill there was previously a cairn, probably quite ancient, but now obliterated by forestry ploughing.

the Store (thu-stor) n. Hawick Cooperative Store, which opened in 1839 as ‘the Chartist Store’ with a small shop in Silver Street. It grew into a set of around half a dozen general stores, 5 butchers, a baker’s shop (from 1851), shoe shop (1859), coal branch (1865), drapery (1873), carting (1874), van service to the country (1884) and penny savings bank (1887). The firm also ran its own stock-making at the old Tabernacle building in the years 1874–81. The stableyards

and dairy were built on Orchard Terrace in 1891 (designed by J.P. Alison). The main shop, usually the one referred to as ‘the Store’, stretched from Tannage Close to Baker Street and from the High Street to Teviot Crescent. It contained many departments, including clothing, electrical, shoes, furniture, toys, ladies hairdressing and a tea room. This main building was constructed in 1885 at 65, 67, 69 and 71 High Street, with the surviving upper level frontage at 65–67 designed by local architect Michael Brodie in a French Renaissance style, with the first and second floor windows having arched heads, each with a different carving; this is a category B listed building. This was Hawick’s biggest department store, with smaller shops elsewhere in town. Shoppers collected stamps that could be redeemed for goods, and departments within the ‘Store’ communicated via characteristic pneumatic tubes. The main shop closed in 1987, with the property sold off to several developers. The Co-op at Burnfoot remains, however. A history was published in 1889 – ‘There er peis, peis, Thit come up ti yer kneis, In the Store, in the Store, There are peis, peis, This come up ti yer kneis, In the Hawick Co-operative Store!’ [T], ‘...waitin eer turn at the Store’ [ECS], ‘In Hawick in days lang syne When the world and huz were younger Oo dune oor messages at the Store A still can mind ma number’ [IWL].

the Store Dairy (thu-stor-dä-ree) n. building and yard on Orchard Terrace and Elm Grove, constructed for use by Hawick Cooperative Society. It was built in 1891, designed by ??, and used to run the Store’s dairy operations through most of the 20th century. The buildings were converted into Elm Court housing.

the Store Field (thu-stor-fueld) n. field once grazed by the Hawick Co-op cows, situated behind Wester Braid Road, near the Miller’s Knowes. The Co-op employees used to organise an annual sports day and picnic there, as a sort of forerunner to the Vertish Hill Sports – ‘The picnic up at the Store Field The whole o’ Hawick was there’ [AY].

the Store van (thu-stor-vawn) n. van that used to sell grocery items around the town. The vans started as a country delivery service in 1884 and continued into the latter part of the 20th century – ‘...wi’ a biscuit in my hand Fresh frae the lang mysterious spicy drawer O’ the Store van’ [DH].

Storff Burn (storf-burn) n. small stream in upper Liddesdale, rising on Larriston Fells and flowing roughly north-west to join Great Warrington Sike, before eventually running into Larriston Burn.

Storff Sike (storf-sik) n. small stream in upper Liddesdale, which rises on Larriston Fells and is joined by Little Warrington Sike. Note that it distinct from Storff Burn, which lies further south.

storfully (stör-fu-lee) ade., arch. excactly, in an agitated way – ‘...and then if she carries on storfully, as she’s amaist shure to do, throw half-a-dozen o’ plates or sae doon i’ the floor ...’ [HAST1868] (cf. stoor and stour).

Storie (stö-ree) n. Adam (17th C.) tenant in Chester-house in Rulewater. In 1684 he was listed among men declared as fugitives for attending field conventicles. Adam (17th/18th C.) wright in Denholm. His children included: Marion (b.1723); Robert (b.1728); and Marion (b.1730). Andrew ‘Dand’ (15th/16th C.) resident of Newcastle. In 1502 Robert Rule (from the same place) was surety for him, and he was also surety for himself, with the pair fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh.

Cuthbert (17th C.) recorded in 1627 as ‘Cuthbert Storey of Hawicke’ in a presentment where 13 sheep were stolen from him. This is Hawick in Northumberland. David (b.1809/10) born in Morebattle, he was an agricultural labourer. In 1841 he was at Howceuchshiel, in 1851 at Clarilaw in Bowden and in 1861 was shepherd at Nether Tofts in Kirkton Parish. He married Janet Lunn in 1833. Their children included: Margaret (b.1834); Elizabeth (b.1836); Euphemia (b.1839); William (b.1841); Fanny (b.1844); Janet (b.c.1848); Joan (b.c.1849); Mary (b.c.1851); Ellen (b.c.1854); Robina (b.c.1855); and David (b.c.1857). Gideon (18th C.) from Ashkirk Parish, he was recorded at Roughheugh in Wilton in 1735. In 1727 he married Isobel Brown, who was also from Ashkirk. Their children (baptised in Wilton) included: John (b.1731); and Elspeth (b.1735). The witnesses in 1735 were Robert Scott and Robert Storie (who was surely related). Harry (?–?) Common Riding Song Singer 1950s??–1972. Apparently there were some complaints about his over-gesticulating! Helen (15th C.) listed at the 1493 Justice-aire in Jedburgh when William Douglas of Cavers was fined for her non-appearance. She was listed again in 1494/5. Other people who were not entered by the Sheriff were fairly local (but she is one of the only women). James (16th C.) holder of a particate of land on the north side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. He may have been related to William.
James (16th C.) servant of Gavin Eliott of Stobs and Jean Scott. In 1573 he was placed on their recently purchased 6 merk land of Chamberlain Newton. However, he was attacked by Walter and John Scott (sons of Margaret Turnbull, who was widow of David Elliot in Chamberlain Newton), who possessed the other half of the farm. They ‘crewellie sett upoun him, hurt and voundit him in sindrie partis of his body, and left him for deid; of the quhilkis hurt as yit he is in danger of his lyfe’. It is unknown whether or not he survived.

James (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He probably farmed near Newton. He may be the James ‘in Spittle’ whose will was recorded in 1681 (if he made a testament long before he died), or else ‘in Spittell’ (i.e. Spittal-on-Rule). In 1605 Robert Scott of Thirlestane was caution for Walter Scott of Dykes in a bond not to harm him. Robert (17th C.) resident of the old Hassendean Parish. He was recorded at Over Boonraw in 1688. He married Isobel Wright in 1679 and their children (baptised in Roberton Parish) included: Isobel (b.1680); Margaret (b.1682); Bessie (b.1684); Walter (b.1686); and Robert (b.1688). The witnesses in 1684 were Robert and George Ormiston (who lived at Boonraw), in 1686 were William Nichol and Adam Scott and in 1688 were again George and Robert Ormiston. He witnessed a baptism for Robert Ormiston in 1684. Along with Robert Ormiston, he witnessed a baptism for William Nichol in Boonraw in 1696. Robert (17th C.) recorded as tenant in Roughlee in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. John was also tenant there and so presumably related. Robert (17th C.) resident of Denholm on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Elizabeth Cavers in Wilton in 1720 and their children included: Christian (b.1723); and John (b.1726). He was probably the Robert who witnessed baptisms in 1725 for William Scott in Newton and in 1735 for Gideon in Roughheugh. Robert (b.c.1805) joiner at Branxholme Woodfoot. His wife was Betty and their children included Jean, Thomas, Margaret, Robert, Janet and George. Robert (b.1812/3) born in Lilliesleaf, he was a groom who lived at Falnash. His wife was Janet Middlemas, and already dead by 1861. His children included Helen, George and Robert, and he had a nephew, William Easton. Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 when Thomas Scott in Branxholme and John Scott in Spittal were convicted of a crimes... against him. They came ‘across him in villa de spittale Inter aqueduct de damys’. Thomas (d.bef. 1632) described as ‘in Roucastle’ in 1632 when his widow Bessie Craik feued lands in Rue-castle from Thomas Hamilton, Lord Binning. Thomas (17th C.) tenant at Acreknowe (along with William Armstrong) recorded on the 1684 list of men declared fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He is surely descended from the ‘Laird Storie’ who in 1643 owned the same piece of land, which later became part of the Knowesouth estate. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. He owned part of the old lands of Rue-castle, as recorded in 1788, with value £18 (plus teinds). Probably the same Thomas was recorded paying the Land Tax for part of Rue-castle in 1811. Thomas (b.1793/4) blacksmith in Newcastleton, at about 40 South Hermitage Street. He was listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories and Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Janet, and their children included William, Walter, Helen, Matthew, Nichol and Janet. William (16th C.) holder of a particate of land on the north side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. William (16th C.) recorded in 1551 as then occupier of an acre of arable land in the lands of Spittal-on-Rule, specifically on ‘lie Harparhill’ (whose location is unknown), which was granted by the Baron of Cavers to Archibald Elliot in Gorrenberry. He witnessed the associated notorial instrument and letter of reversion, along with 2 men called Alexander ‘Wreth’, one of whom was a miller. William (17th C.) recorded as ‘in Weynis’ (probably Weens in Rulewater) when he witnessed a Rulewater sasine in 1631. William (17th C.) listed at Wadeshill among the poor of Southdean Parish in the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls (also formerly spelled ‘Storey’, ‘Storrie’, ‘Story’ and ‘Storry’).

Storiesteed (stō-ree-steed) n. former name for lands in Liddesdale, recorded in the 1541 rental roll, listed before Byreholm, and so presumably somewhere near Castleton. It appears as ‘Storeis- steid alias Gudelland’, with a value of 5 shillings and tenanted by Christopher Armstrong.

storm (stōrm) v., arch. to beset or cover with snow or otherwise deprive livestock of pasture – ‘The term ‘being stormed’ was originally used to express the want of food suffered by sheep when the ground was covered with snow’ [RB].

storm-staad (stōrm-stawd) adj., arch. delayed because of a storm – ‘Storm-staad (stawd) = starom-stayed; delayed by stormy weather whilst on a journey or errand’ [ECS] (see also staa).

stot (sto’t) v. to bounce, rebound – ‘wull ee stop stottin yer baa off ma waa?’, ‘Item ane stot of twa yeir auld or thairby price 30s’ [SPB1579], ‘And the star beame stotted out of the way. When it saw the ryders come’ [JTe], ‘The rain hed been fair stottin at Jethart an it wasneh muckle better at Selkirk or Galem’ [BW1978], ‘The rain was fairly stottin As I’d never seen’t afore’ [WL], ‘...Stottin’t on Drummond’s gable waa’ [WL], to stagger, reel, walk unsteadily – ‘hei was stottin drunk’, to walk with a deliberate bounce, bustle – ‘Farmer bodies, awfu’ rude. In wrath aboot were stottin’' [WL], n. a bounce, rebound, a buff et – ‘A stot i’ the moonth’ [GW] (also sometimes ‘stoat’).

stot (sto’t) n., arch. a bullock, castrated bull, usually in its second or later year – ‘Item, nyne stotis and queyis of tua zeir auldis, price of the pece ourheid, x1 s.’ [SB1574], ‘...stotis and queyis of twa yeir auldis, 3s. 4.d’ [JW], ‘God send the land deliverance Frae every reaving, riding Scot: We’ll sure hae neither cow nor ewe, We’ll sure hae neither staig nor stot’ [LHTB], ‘I wull tak’ nae stot o’ thy hous ’...’ [HSR], ‘This alsua sall plesse the Lord mair nor ane stot or bullok that heth cluts an’ hoorns’ [HSR], ‘Doddies an stirs an queyis an stots’ [ECS], ‘A muckle jet-black Angus stot – I gey near fainted on the spot’ [TD], ‘And this ye may take as Wat Harden’s word: Each stot they ha’ stolen comes hame wi’ a herd!’ [WHO], ‘We met wi’ a rush i’ the pass, Wi’ a clash made.
the steel-fire fleece, But he fell like a stot on the grass; And wha daur meddle wi' me?' [T].

Stot (sto') n., arch. James (18th C.) Hawick resident, married to Margaret Lyden. Their children included Charles (b.1723) and probably Margaret (b.1719). James (18th C.) Hawick resident. His wife was Margaret Cavers and their children included John (b.1730). James (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He is recorded at Highcesters in 1753. His children, baptised in Roberton Parish, included: Magdalen (b.1745); Margaret (again, b.1749); Agnes (b.1752); William (b.1753); and James (b.1755).

Walter (18th C.) Hawick resident. His son James was born in 1734 (also written ‘Stott’; it is possible that some of these may be errors for ‘Scot’).

Stot Cleuch (sto'-klooch) n. small stream in southern Liddesdale, which flows roughly north-east to meet Tinnis Burn.

Stotfield (sto'-feild) n. lands that were part of Lilliesleaf Common. Along with Nolt-lair, it was described in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls that it was feuded by John Scott in Bewlie Mains from William Riddell of Camieston.

Stothart (sto'-dur) n. David (1772/3–1841) resident of Deanburnhaugh. He married Christian Jackson, who died at Doecleuch in 1851, aged 70. Their daughter Jane died at Deanburnhaugh in 1841, aged 33. They are buried at Borthwick Hall and then by George Davies (junior). Joseph Stothart took over in the 1880s, continuing the saddler’s business and eventually it passed to his son David, who moved out of saddlery into sports equipment, fishing tackle and toys. Len Elliot took over the business in 1971 and it closed for good in 1989.

Stotter (sto'-ur) n. something that is an exceptional example of its kind, particularly used of an attractive person – ‘ee’re a wee stotter’.

Stotter (sto'-ur) v. to stagger, stumble, totter – ‘he was stotterin hame as yaisual’, ‘...with a sort of nervous excitement which made it stotter’[HSR], ‘Thaye reel bak-an-forward, an’ stotter like ane drunken man ...’[HSR] (cf. steiter and stotier).

Stotting (sto'-in) adj. extremely drunk, so as to stagger about, raining so heavily that the drops are bouncing.

Stoure see stoor

Stourie (stow-, stoo-ree) adj., poet. active, restless, excitable (said of a young child) – ‘Cuddle doon ye stoorie loon – Ye wee croodlin’ doo’[JT] (see also stoorie).
Stouslie (stooz-lee) n. farm and cottages out beyond Stirches, reached by the left hand road at the ‘Fower Road Ends’. The Lindsays held these lands as Barons of Chamberlain Newton from the time of David II (late 14th century). There were Turnbulls here in the late 1400s, when the lands were a Lairdship. Thomas ‘Trumbul’ of Stouslie was witness to a sasine in 1488. George Turnbull was recorded there in 1493 and Walter Turnbull in 1494/5. In 1494/5 Thomas and Adam Graham from Newton ‘came in the King’s will’ for stealing 60 sheep from here; these belonged to Walter Scott of Howpasley and Walter Turnbull of Stouslie, but were also said to pertain to the King. There were Scotts living here in the 1500s. In the 16th century it was still part of the Barony of Chamberlain Newton, with superior being the Earls of Bothwell and then the Lords of Home. Scott of Satchells lists ‘John Scott in Stowslie’ as one of the 24 ‘Pensioners’ of Buccleuch. In 1643 it was valued at £67 3s 4d, along with Boonraw (‘but disjoined’) and recorded as ‘Stoonglie [probably a transcription error for ‘Stoulzie’], or Stouslie, formerly in Hassendean Parish’. It was part of the estates of the Duchess of Buccleuch by the end of the 17th century. Mary Gledstains was liferenter of this farm and another (probably Boonraw) in 1643; she was probably widow of George Scott of Boonraw. Archibald Scott was liferenter there in about 1663, when he paid tax on £91 for the land. In 1678 George Scott paid land tax on £291 for these lands, along with Boonraw. John Henderson was living there in 1682. It was leased by George Scott of Boonraw and continued by his heirs in 1692. In 1690 the lands became part of Wilton Parish when Hassendean was suppressed. David Gray was recorded there in 1694. William Henderson was there in 1706. It was surveyed in 1718 along with other properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch, when it consisted of 101 acres, bounded by Boonraw, Heap, Wilton Common and Coldhouse. Thomas Stoddart was there in 1729 and William Nichol in 1735–37. Robert Scott died there in 1750. William Stewart was there in 1770–80. By 1788 it had been disjoined from Boonraw and was valued at £67 3s 4d. William Stewart was recorded there in 1770. The Cala Burn was the western boundary of the farm, with the farmhouse on the burns eastern side. One of the cottages was formerly a school administered by Wilton Parish. The Town Dump is nearby – ‘...His staghounds still in the leash are led, As he turns his eye to the Stowhouselea’ [BCM1880], ‘Owere the lang brae frae Stouslie; Frae the mains o’ Stirches doun; How micht I come at the day’s end ‘To the bonny Border toun?’ [WL] (also spelled ‘Stouslie’, ‘Stouslea’, etc.; the origin of the name is possibly ‘Stuf’s wood’ from the rare Old English personal name ‘Stuf’, plus ‘leah’, a wood, or perhaps from the Old English ‘stybb’, a tree stump; the name first appears as ‘Stowisle’ in about 1390; it is also ‘Stowisle’ in 1468, ‘Stowisle’ in 1488, ‘stowisle’ in 1493 and 1494/5, ‘stowisle’ in 1502, ‘Stoueslie’ in 1525, ‘Stowisle’ in 1551, ‘Stouie’ in 1552, ‘Stouisle’ in 1643 and 1663, ‘Stoislie’ in 1678, ‘Stousley’ in 1692, ‘Stuslie’ in 1729, ‘Stuslie’ in 1737, ‘stoneslie’ in 1750 and it is still ‘Stouslea’ in 1841; it is marked ‘Stously’ on Stobie’s 1770 map and ‘Stowisle’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Stouslie Schuil (stooz-lee-skil) n. former school at Stouslie, run as a country school by the Parish of Wilton, and later by Hawick. It was founded in 1789 and a small private endowment was set up by a few of the heritors in 1838. In the 1830s it had about 50 pupils. The school was also sometimes referred to as Priestrig Schuil. Schoolmasters included William Lockie 1806–43 and David Wells in the mid-19th century. The National Archive has records relating to the period 1874–1920.

stouth (stooth, stowth) n., arch. theft, robbery – ‘A party convicted of stealing peats, is ordained to pay the bailies £10 for each of the three ‘stouths’ and to go to the stocks’ [BR1648], ‘...and stouth committ by him out of the purse of William Elliot ...’ [BR] (also spelled ‘stooth’).

stouthfully (stowth-fu-lee) adv., arch. in a thieving manner – ‘John Hardie ...being ac cusit ...for taking stouthfulie ...ane boull of beir’ [BR1658].

stoutlier (stowt-lee-ur) adj., poet. boldlier, more courageously, more fiercely – ‘...Nae stoutlier studie out for their laird, Nor did the lads o’ Liddesdale’ [CPM].

stove (stöv) n., pl. to stew or steam, especially potatoes steamed in dripping after being boiled – ‘Ti stove taatihs is to treat them, after they have been boiled, by ‘steaming’ them in dripping’ [ECS], ‘Kitcheen-fei was especially used when ‘stoavin taatihs’’ [ECS].
stovie tattis

stovie tattis (stō-vee-ta’-iz) n., pl. stoved potatoes, also known as stovies – ‘...A plate o’ stovie tatties birstled broon, A kail pot steamin’ owre the fire’ [WL].

stovies (stō-veez) n., pl. a dish made of sliced potatoes stewed with onions, occasionally with dripping or small pieces of meat added – ‘oo aye liked ti hev stovies wi oor haggis’ (short for ‘stoved potatoes”).

Stow (stō) n. John (c.1525–1605) English historian. From humble beginnings he published several influential works, including editions of Chaucer, Chronicles of England and a Survey of London, although he remained poor all his life. His Chronicle contains the story of Hawick’s residence burning the thatch from their roofs before a visit by Sussex and his men in 1570.

stowe (stō) v. to stow, store, fill, pack (also spelled ‘stow’, but note the pronunciation).

stoun (stōn) pp., poet. stolen – ‘He hadn’ been awa’ a week but only twa, When my mither she fell sick, and the cow was stoun awa’ [CPM], ‘...which, says my narrator, ‘nae doubt they had stoun out o’ some honest laird’s cellar’ [EM1820], ‘They’ve stown the bridie off his steed, And they’ve put water in his lang gun; They’ve fixed his sword within the sheath, That out again it winna come’ [LHTB], ‘She stole my heart, she broke her vow, And love has stown my wits away ... ’ [JTe], ‘Oh, waefu’ and sad was the tale he did tell – How that he had been stoun frae his daddie’ [JT], ‘At Wheel-Kirk, within the Catrail, Priest David had thirty-and-three Gude nowt that were stown head and tail By Percy o’ Keelarstanelee’ [T].

stowp (stowp) n., arch. a tankard, flaggon, jug, liquid measure, bucket, particularly a deep wooden vessel, narrowing towards the top, crossed by a fixed wooden handle, and used for fetching water from public wells – ‘For taking up of ane pint stope ... and offering to throw it att James Newbie’ [BR], ‘...and ilk ane of them wantit 4 stoupis’ [BR1656], ‘The inhabitants were enjoined to keep their ‘water stoups’ well filled ... ’ [V&M], ‘An whiles think that life in this grey auld toon o’ Hawick Micht weel be compared to a river ... ’ [DH], ‘May ill befa’ the cankered loon, That winna mak’ the pint stout clatter’ [GW], (also spelled ‘stoup’ and formerly ‘stope’, etc.; they were used locally well into the 19th century).

Stow strunten (stow-stun-tin) n. a kind of narrow worsted tape, originally made in Stow – ‘Stow-strunten, a species of coarse garters, which the inhabitants of a village called Stow were famous for manufacturing’ [JR].

St. Quineteurn’s Fountain (sin’-kin-ti-gernz-fown-tin) n. former name for a spring in Lilliesleaf recorded in the Register of Sasines in 1816. Given that the kirk there appears to have been dedicated to St. Mungo (also called ‘Kentigern’) it seems likely this was a spring near the church, perhaps one of the springs marked in Lilliesleaf Moss on modern maps. It may also be the place once known as the ‘Kirsekin Well’.

Strachan (straw-chin) n. Henry (15th C.) witness to the charter of James Scott of Kirkurd, granting Galalaw to his son David in 1494. He is recorded as ‘Henrico Strathauchin’. Rev. Straiton (strä’in) n. John (18th/19th C.) currier in Hawick. In 1795 he witnessed a baptism for William Wilson, his brother-in-law. In 1790 he married Agnes, younger daughter of Walter Wilson. Their children included: John (b.1791), who was a teacher in Haddington; Walter (b.1793); Oliver (b.1794), who had a hat shop in Dalkeith and lived for a while in Hawick; Catherine (b.1796); Margaret (b.1798); Betty (b.1799); Ann (b.1801); and William. The witnesses in 1795 were merchants William Wilson (his brother-in-law) and George Turnbull (who was married to his wife’s sister). He could be the John, son of Peter ‘Straiten’, born in Lilliesleaf in 1762. Oliver (b.1794) son of John and Agnes Wilson. He ran a hat shop in Dalkeith, and it is said he would regularly walk from there to Hawick, where he visited his relatives and may have purchased hats from William and James Wilson.

He who lost his money through bank failure and later moved to Hawick, living in the house of William Wilson. It was said that he ‘had a scientific and literary turn of mind, and although most attentive and industrious, and very methodical in his habits, he did not possess much business aptitude’. Peter (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. He married Elizabeth Oliver, and their children included: Peter (b.1759); John (b.1762); William (b.1764); Janet (b.1766); a son with indecipherable name (b.1768); and Elizabeth (b.1771). Peter (18th C.) paid the cart tax in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1785, when his name is listed as ‘Straton’. He is probably the Peter, son of Peter, born in Lilliesleaf in 1759 (also written ‘Stratton’).

Sunderland (sun-dur-lind) n. Mark (18th C.) stockinger-maker in Hawick. He married Margaret Fleming and their children included: Margaret (b.1787); Joanna (b.1787); Ann (b.1793); and Alexander (b.1798). His son William died in Hawick in 1798. Perhaps the same Mark secondly married Janet Crow in Hawick in 1800.

Sunderland Hall (sun-dur-lind-hawl) n. mansion on the south side of the Tweed, near where it meets the Ettrick. The Shaws, schoolmaster and minister of Selkirk held the annual rent in the early 17th century. It was the home of the Kerrs, later the Plummers, and then the Scott-Plummers, who were descended from the Scotts of Woll.

sundert (sun-dur’) pp., adj. sundered – ‘We’ve wandert mony a mile And fer oor steps hae sundert ...’ [DH] (also sindert).

Sundhope (sun-dup) n. former farmstead on the Sundhope Burn, above Whitropefoot. It was valued at 8 merks according to a rental roll of c.1376 and still 8 merks on the 1541 roll, when ‘Leoni Elwald’ and his brothers were tenants. The farm was owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch from at least 1613. Robert ‘Houiton’ and Adam ‘Houitone’ are listed there in 1694, as well as George Nichol. It was surveyed for the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1718, when it extended to 1654 acres, bounded by Stitchelhill, Millburnholm and lands held by the Laird of Gorrenberry and others. At that time the farmhouse is shown in the same position as the modern one. It was tenanted by the Grieves of Branxholme Park for several generations. Robert Elliot was tenant in 1748 and Robert Hutton also lived there. John Anderson was farmer there in 1785. James Jackson was shepherd there in 1797, James Elliot in the early 1800s, Walter Anderson in 1835 and Andrew Rodger in 1851. It was held by James Raymond Johnstone of Alva in 1802, when valued at about £200 (including Hollandrig and ‘Sandbed of Sundhope’. There are waterfalls on the burn there. 5 flints found nearby are in Hawick Museum. North of the farmstead, towards Sundhope Rig, there is a linear earthwork, about 130 m long – ‘Whut’rope and Sundhope They ken the sound weel; It’s nae news to thaim That he troks wi the deil’ [DH] (it first appears as ‘Sondhop’ in c.1376, is ‘Sondhope’ in 1510, ‘Sandhop’ in 1516, ‘Soundhop’ in 1541 and ‘Soundhope’ in 1613; the stream is marked ‘Soundhopp’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, and the farm is ‘Sandhope’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Sundhope (sun-dup) n. farm in the Yarrow valley, where the burn of the same name meets the Yarrow from the south, just to the west of Yarrow Feus. It was a Crown property from about 1456, with the lease to the Laird of Alemoor being given up in 1488, when it was let to ‘Robert domino Lile’ in 1488. Then it was let half to William Murray and half to Roger Murray from at least 1490 until 1499. In 1493 Alexander, brother of Robert Scott of Whames, was accused of stealing livestock from there, and John Waugh also stole a large number of sheep from the Murrays. In 1494/5 Robert Turnbull in Castlehill (near Branxholme) was charged with stealing 15 score sheep from the Murrays there. It remained Crown property until at least 1502. In 1512 it was feued to Gavin Murray. In 1541 William Scott was tenant there, paying £14, while William and James Murray also appear to have occupied it, paying £24. William Scott was tenant there in the first half of the 18th century. There were Andersons and Laidlaws there in the 19th century. It was said to be the site of the slaying of Scott of Harden’s younger son, Scott of Gilmanseleh – ‘But, low, low down, on Sundhop broom, My brother Harden spyd: And, with a stern and furious look, He up to him did ride’ [ES]; ‘Ere all is done, our blood may soak Our Scottish houms, and leave a stain – A stain like that on Sundup’s cloak, Which never will wash out again’ [ES] (it is ‘Sundhop’ in 1456 and 1468, ‘Sondhoip’ in 1490, ‘Sundhop’ in 1496, ‘Sondhop’ and ‘Sondhoip’ in 1499 and ‘Soundhope’ in 1541).

Sundhope Burn (sun-dup-burn) n. stream in Castleton Parish. It rises on Sundhope Rig and Greatmoor and flows roughly southwards to join the Whitrope Burn near Whitropefoot.

Sundhope Faas (sun-dup-fawz) n. waterfall on the Sundhope Burn, near where it meets the Whitrope Burn on the Newcastleton road, about 12 miles south of Hawick. It has been a favourite picnic spot. It is also known as the Laird’s Linn.

Sunday (sun-di) n. Sunday. Formerly there were strict rules about what behaviour was deemed suitable for the Sabbath. Work of any sort was banned, and there are fines frequently recorded in the parish records for transactions such as pulling vegetables. Certainly non-attendance at church was considered disreputable until fairly recent times, and regular non-attendance was a serious matter in the 18th century. Up until the mid-19th century even walking on Sundays was considered an offence (also spelled ‘Sundi’ etc.).

sundials (sun-dialz) n., pl. devices that use the shadow of a gnomon, cast by the Sun, to tell the time of day. These were common ornamentation on buildings or in gardens around the 17th and 18th centuries. The Museum has 3 local specimens, which have been saved from demolitions, labelled: ‘17 WK 48’; ‘1823’, from Dickson Street; and ‘BC BT 1756’. There was also one from Francis Gledstains of Whitlaw, dated 1693. In addition there are (or were) sundials at Harden, Lilliesleaf Kirk, Synton Parkhead, Weens, Wells and Yarrow Kirk.

Sundi-mense (sun-di-mens) n., arch. ‘ti gie yin’s claes Sundi-mense’ is to attend church in one’s new clothes on the first Sunday after one gets them (also kirk-mense).

Sundi Schuil (sun-di-skil) n. Sunday School, i.e. religious instruction for school children taking place on Sundays. Hawick already had 2 such institutions in 1786 and was among the first to establish them in Scotland. The first was probably introduced by Rev. Charters of Wilton, followed shortly afterwards by Rev. Sharp of Hawick (however, it is sometimes also stated that William Crawford of Wilton introduced the first Sunday School in the 1730s). Around 1817 the town became well-known in the Borders for very popular Sunday Schools, which had been set up by Rev. James Henderson of the East-End Burgher congregation. David Russell of the Relief Kirk also set one up at about the same time. These early examples often lasted for many hours, but were about the only chance to learn reading, which many local children benefited from. Henderson’s Sunday School is sometimes said to have been the first in Scotland, and although this is clearly not correct, it may have been an early example of an ambitious educational programme on Sundays (rather than a shorter event aimed at children). Sunday Schools have continued in most of the town’s churches down to the present time – ‘Sunday Schule picnics then Horse and cairt ti Harden Glen . . .’[IWL].

sung (sung) adj., pp., arch. singed – ‘. . . Brunt broun in the sun and near sung’[WL].

Sun Hope (sun-hop) n. small stream that rises on Sunhope Hass, Bye Hill and Little Tudhope Hill on the Roxburghshire border with Dumfriesshire and forms some of the headwaters of the Frostlie Burn.

Sunlaws (sun-lawz) n. settlement on the Teviot south of Kelso, containing the Jacobean-style mansion called Sunlaws House Hotel (or Roxburghie Hotel), with adjacent golf course, an abandoned Mill and nearby caves. As part of the English invasion of 1544 there was ‘a town called Sunlawes, whereat divers bastel houses were destroyed, eight Scots taken, and 60 oxen brought away’, with at least 6 men killed in attempting to pursue the raiders. The estate of Sunlaws was home of the Kerrs of Chatto and Sunlaws. The house burned down in 1720 (the origin is probably ‘the look-out hill’; it is ‘Sunlaes’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map).

sunlicht (sun-light) n., arch. sunlight – ‘Sunlight at last, and the dancin’ day, and a quick eyed lass to see’[JYH], ‘Oh, laddie! when sunlicht Is ower your young way, Fu’ bricht wi’ sweet promise O’ manhood’s fair day’[MNR], ‘. . . Wi’ rowth o’ callants in her train And sunlicht in her hair’[WL].

Sunnybank (su-nee-bawngk) n. cottage in Wilton Parish, just north of Tandlaw. Walter Blake, thatcher, lived there in 1841, as well as farm worker Richard Turnbull and his family. Walter Scott was there in at least 1835–41, Henry Paterson in 1851 and William Scott in 1861.

Sunnyfield (su-nee-feeld) n. bungalow on Sunnyhill Road, built in 1955.

Sunnyhill (su-nee-hil) n. area between Wilton and the Dean, consisting of Sunnyhill Road and surrounding region, containing mainly larger houses. The name was earlier also applied to the Rosal ee Brae area. It was named apparently for its aspect with respect to the Sun. The area was feued in the latter part of the 19th century under the supervision of John Guthrie. Langlands was the first house about 1878, followed quickly by Deanfield, Kilmeny and Westwood – ‘Here the tree-clad slopes rise upward From the water’s sparkling rill, Where clematis and laburnum Deck the homes on Sunnyhill’[WL], ‘. . . in the days afore the nouveau riche manufacturers became upwardly mobile in mair ways than yin and built their mansions on Sunnyhill’[IWL].

Surrey (su-ree) n. name often used for Thomas Howard, Earl of Surrey (1473–1554) English nobleman who fought at Flodden and was later made Duke of Norfolk. After his victory, and knowing that the Borders forces had been devastated, he split up his troops to carry out raids, with Lord Dacre plundering and killing across Teviotdale. In a bizarre coincidence, at Queen Victoria’s Diamond Jubilee in London, the Hawick Volunteers were met by the Surrey Rifles, whose headquarters was in Flodden Road! – ‘After Flodden was decided, Surrey half his troops divided’ [JH], ‘When the spirit, bruised and bleeding From the shock of Surrey’s blow ...’ [TK] (note that the force that devastated Teviotdale in 1570 is sometimes erroneously connected with ‘Surrey’, while in fact it was led by ‘Sussex’).

surroond (su-roon) v. to surround – ‘...as another young callant surroonded be excited bairns heided for the ferthest tollbar frae his hoose on Pickin’ Night’ [BW1995].

Harriers, being Border Champion over 100 and 220 yards, and was part of the team that won the 1 mile relay at the Common Riding Games of 1910. He also won the Scottish Amateur Athletic Association 220 yards title and represented Scotland. He played wing for Hawick R.F.C. from the age of 17, his first game being against Gala. He excelled at Sevens, being part of the 1912 team that won all 5 Border tournaments. He went on to become Captain of Hawick. He played for Scotland from the age of 18, his first cap being Willie Kyle’s last, and went on to be capped 13 times.
On the outbreak of WWI he joined the Lothian and Border Horse, transferring to the Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders and later to the Seaforth Highlanders, where he became 2nd Lieutenant.
He was killed by a stray shell in October 1918, in the last days of the War. Afterwards his position on the Scotland team was taken by Eric Liddle

Swamp Field (swawmp-field) n. name for the field on the Common just to the south of the race-course.

Swan (swawn) n. Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (17th C.) listed as merchant among those contributing to the new Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. She was also on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. She seems likely to have been a shopkeeper (or similar) on the High Street. She could be the daughter of George and Margaret Bridges born in Hawick in 1642 or the daughter of Mungo and Helen Bridges born in 1672. George (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who was married to Margaret Bridges. Their son John was born in 1643. George (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He married Rebecca Scott. Their children included: Jean (b.1735); John (b.1737); and Rebecca (b.1741), who was the 2nd wife of Bailie John Hardie. The witnesses in 1737 were merchant James Sanderson and writer Thomas Watson and in 1741 were Thomas Watson and merchant Charles Tudhope. He witnessed baptisms in 1757 for weaver John Thorburn, in 1764 for John Hardie and his daughter Rebecca and in 1768 for mason William Ekron and Betty Dobie. He could be the George Swan who witnessed a baptism for Francis Cairns in 1783. Isabel (b.c.1760) listed as a shopkeeper in Pigot’s 1837 directory. By 1841 she was a pauper, living around Eastgate. James (19th C.) grocer and spirit merchant at 29 (later 27) High Street. He emigrated with his family to Detroit, where his son Andrew was involved with the Detroit Gas Company and his son James was a successful lawyer. John (16th C.) listed in 1534 when he was a witness at Hassendean Kirk for the sealing of a letter of reversion when Gavin Elliot sold the lands of Nether Galalaw to William Scott. It is unclear if he was from Hawick, Hassendean or Selkirk (in whose Protocol Books the record appeared). John (16th C.) recorded in Hassendeanburn in 1580, when he acted as cautioner for Robert Scott of Alton when he borrowed money from the servant of Margaret Douglas, Countess of Bothwell. He may have been related to the earlier John. John (17th C.) married to Margaret Scott. Their children born in Hawick Parish included: Jane (b.1676); Mungo (b.1682); and Helen (b.1685). In 1676 he was listed being ‘in Cavers’ (suggesting he lived in the Teviothead area perhaps), with witnesses William and Mungo (who were surely close relatives). He may be the same as John ‘Elder’. John (17th C.) listed as ‘Elder’ in 1694 among those ‘uest the water’ in Hawick on the Hearth Tax rolls. The younger John was also listed, suggesting that they were father and son. The pair were also weavers ‘younger’ and ‘elder’ recorded among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was ‘older’ in 1700 when he witnessed a baptism for weaver John Jolly. John ‘Nuckle‘ (18th C.) Hawick weaver on the 1693/4 subscribers’ list for the new Kirk bell. He must have been separate from the elder and younger weavers who were also listed. It is unclear what his nickname meant. John (17th/18th C.) quartermaster of the Hawick weavers. In 1697 there was a case before the Magistrates dealing with Robert Tinlin, a young weaver, who had insulted him publicly, and refused to pay a fine imposed by the incorporation of weavers. He was still quartermaster in 1716 (along with the same Robert Tinlin) when he and other complained about people who were not part of the incorporated trades taking their seats in St. Mary’s Kirk. He may be the ‘John Swan younger’ listed in 1694 among those on the west-side of Hawick who paid the Hearth Tax and the ‘younger’ weaver listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He may be the John who (along with Mungo) witnessed a baptism for weaver William in 1700. He was probably the weaver who witnessed baptisms for gardener Robert Roger in 1701, workman Archibald Elliot and shoemaker William Halliwell in 1704, and shoemaker Adam Kersel in 1725. He may be the John who, along with William, witnessed a baptism in 1704 for Walter Paisley at Weensland Mill. He is probably one of the 2 John Swans who in 1709 witnessed a baptism for John Scott ‘att ye port’. He was one of the ‘two John Swans’ (possibly ‘Black John’ and ‘White John’ or father and son) who was a Hawick elder recorded as one of the men asked in 1711 to ‘perlustrate’ the town to look for people still drinking after 8 ‘clock at night. In 1718 he (or the other John) was among those charged by the Session with trying to resolve the dispute between Bailies Ruecastle and Graham. There was a John Swan whose son John was born in Hawick in 1693 and another in 1696. John ‘Black John’ (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, with a nickname to distinguish him from ‘White John’. One of them was probably the quartermaster of the weavers. He married Elspeth Clerk and their children included: Mary (b.1700); George (b.1702); Mary (b.1703); Jean (b.1704); Anna (b.1706); and Elspeth (b.1707). In 1700 and 1704 he was entered in the baptismal register as ‘distinctionis causa called black John’. The witnesses in 1700 were weaver John Lunn and James Scott ‘Laird’, in 1704 were James Scott ‘Doctor’ and John Scott ‘Laird’, in 1706 were Andrew Clerk and another John Swan, and in 1707 were weaver James Lunn and shoemaker John Scott. He is probably the John who was witness for a baptism for John Lunn in 1705. John ‘White John’ (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1701 he is recorded being ‘distinctionis cuasa called white John’. He is probably the John who witnessed a baptism for a different John in 1706. He married Janet Allan and their children included: Mungo (b.1701); and Mary (b.1703). This suggests that he may have been son of Mungo. The witnesses in 1701 were Mungo (perhaps his brother) and weaver Thomas Turnbull (possibly his brother-in-law). Other children of either this or the other John are: William (b.1692); John (b.1693); Jean (b.1695); John (again, b.1696); and Janet (b.1706). Mungo (17th C.) Hawick resident who married Helen Briggs, who was probably daughter of William and Bessie Brown. In 1665 (although this date may an error, e.g. for 1685) his son-in-law, Thomas Turnbull, was accused of throwing his wife (Helen) down some stairs when she attempted to visit her sick daughter. The families are probably inter-related through George and Margaret ‘Bridges’ who are recorded having children in the 1640s. His children included: Helen (b.1657); and Bessie (b.1672). He is probably the Mungo who witnessed a baptism for John (who could have been his brother) in 1676 and 1680 2 others (along with William, who was surely therefore also related) for William Bridges. It seems likely he was father of ‘White John’. Mungo (17th/18th C.) Hawick resident who married Jean Briggs in 1702. Their children included Jean (b.1702). Other probably children, with no mother’s name given are Thomas (b.1705), William (b.1708) and Mungo (b.1710). The witnesses in 1708 were Michael Bridges and James Scott, Laird. His wife probably Secondly married weaver Robert Wight in 1715, suggesting he was deceased by then. He is probably the Mungo who (along with John) witnessed baptisms for weaver William in 1700, (along with Thomas Turnbull) for weaver John Lunn in 1701, for James Beattie in 1704 and for Town Herd William Palmer in 1707. Richard (15th C.) witness to a sasine in 1483 relating to lands in Hassendean, given by William Douglas, Laird of Cavers. He was also a witness in 1484 to a sasine relating to lands in the town of Hawick. William (d.bef. 1694) weaver in Hawick. In 1689 he witnessed baptisms for fellow weavers William Brown and James Lunn. His widow ‘Joan Bennet’ was listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He is probably the William recorded as ‘Wm Swan Elder’ in the 1694 list (but likely drawn up 2 or 3 years earlier) among those on the west-side of Hawick who paid the Hearth Tax. He could be the William, son of George and Margaret Bridges who was born in Hawick in 1635. He married Helen (or Jane) Bennet, and their children included: Thomas (b.1669); George (b.1672); Margaret (b.1673); Mungo (b.1677); Jane (b.1680); and Walter (b.1683). The witnesses in 1680 were Walter Purdom and William Scott. He could be the William who witnessed baptisms in Hawick for William Bridges and Andrew Dodd in 1673, Thomas Lunn in 1675, John in Cavers in 1676 (with Mungo being the other witness, suggesting that all 3 were closely related), Patrick Bridges, William Bridges (along with Mungo again), Francis Scott plus Isobel Bridges in 1678 and Andrew Jardine in 1684. in 1680 he witnessed baptisms for William Bridges (again), Francis Scott, James Lunn, John Scott (of Cavers) and Margaret Scott and Andrew Jardine and Janet Bridges. He may also be the William who (along with Patrick Bridges) witnessed a baptism in 1689 for Adam Lamb. William (17th C.) recorded as ‘William Suan, younger’ in 1687 among a group of men fined for clandestinely removing their sheep from the Town’s flock, without paying the Town Herd. He could be the same as the weaver of the same name. William (17th C.) weaver in Hawick, on the 1693/4 subscribers’ list for the new Kirk bell. He must be different from the William whose widow is also recorded on the same list, but could be their son. He may be the William who married Margaret Paisley and whose children, baptised in Hawick, included William (b.1692), Walter (b.1698), Agnes (b.1700), William (again, b.1703) and Mungo (b.1706); the witnesses in 1696 were Henry Orrock and John Hart and in 1700 were weavers John and Mungo Swan. He is probably the William who witnessed baptism for Andrew Turnbull in 1698, for weaver James Jolly (along with John, perhaps his brother) in 1700 and for Walter Paisley at Weensland Mill (also along with John). He is probably the weaver of that name who was a member of the Council when it granted a bond (dated 1710, but recorded in the Town Book in 1711) to provide money for the Master of the new Grammar School. William (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He is recorded in the records of the Presbytery of Melrose in 1726 when Christian Bunzie confessed that she had ‘seen him playing at the kails in her father’s garden’. He was ‘a single, unmarried man, landlord of the house wherein Henry Gibson’s relict

1790 he was working as a 'drawer' for vintner
Robert Armstrong and was recorded as a waiter for Robert Armstrong in 1797. He was apparently very familiar with the customers of the hoetel, of all ranks. One of his favourite phrases was 'Stick by cauld whisky, but never drink toddy, when ye're gaun a journey'. It is said that he was at some point dismissed by Armstrong, but reappointed after the Duke of Buccleuch inter-ceded on his behalf. He had several children including: James, who became a ship's surgeon;
and a daughter, who married weaver Tom Lunn.

James (1779/80–1803) son of James, who was a waiter at the Tower Hotel. He was apprenticed to Dr. Walter Graham in Hawick. In 1797 he was experimenting with concoctions and left a bowl on the window-sill, which was drunk by his niece, who unfortunately died. He left Hawick in 1798 to be a surgeon on a slave ship, sailing on 3 voyages. In 1802 or 1803 he was given command of Swansdale (swanz-däl) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded as 'Swansdale' in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. It was valued at 12 shillings and tenanted by Jeffrey Crozier. The location is uncertain, but perhaps around Larris-ton.

Swanshieil (swan-sheel) n. farm just to the west of Hobkirk, situated on the north side of the Blackhall Burn. The farmhouse now called Nether Swanshieil. The lands were formerly split into Easter and Wester Swanshieils, which were recorded as once owned by the monks of Jedburgh Abbey. At the Reformation the lands were valued at £1 6s. 8d. The Abbey's tenants were Turnbuls, who later became owners of the lands.
Robert Turnbull is recorded as tenant in 1567 and James Turnbull in 1580. In 1643 Adam Turnbull 'in Swanshieil' owned land valued at £66 13s 4d, and another (or the same) Adam Turnbull

'of Swanshieil' had lands valued at £32 10s. In 1678 the Easter and Wester parts were valued at £66 13s 4d and £33 6s 8d, respectively. The lands (or perhaps just superiority) were among those inherited by William Kerr of Abbotrule in 1680. Wester Swanshieil was owned (along with Hartshaugh earlier) by the same branch of the Turnbull family for about 300 years until 1778.
John Donaldson was tenant in 1797. Earthworks from some ancient settlement were still visible a century ago. There was also once a joiner's shop there (it was 'Swansheil' in 1567, appears as 'Sironscheil' in 1581, was 'Swoonshield' in 1604, 'Swansheil' in 1643, 'Swan-sheil' in 1684 and 'Swanhill' on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls; it is marked 'Suaneshells' on Blaue's 1654 map, but has the modern spelling by Stobie's 1770 map;
Walter Deans says that it was formerly 'Suin Shieles' and 'Soneshells' and suggests it meant the land facing the Sun, however 'swain scheil', meaning 'herdsman's hut' is more likely).

‘the Prudence’, which sailed to the Upper Guinea coast, returning to Liverpool with half his crew, a number of slaves, and also Tom Jenkins, who he brought to Hawick after a few weeks. It is said that attempts by the young African to say his (Swanson’s) name sounded to the sailors like ‘Tom Jenkins’, which was then what they called him. He died in the Tower Hotel a few days after returning to Hawick, perhaps either from a lingering disease or from delirium tremens. He died at the age of 23 (coincidentally the day before Sir Walter Scott and the Wordsworths stayed in the Tower Hotel). He left behind an illegitimate son, who is probably the James, born to James and Betty Cairns in Hawick in 1797 (she may have been the Betty born in Wilton to Thomas Cairns in 1779). Note that a version of his life is told as part of the novel ‘Alexander Hope: A Hawick Story’; this fictionalised accounts bears only passing resemblance to reality, but perhaps the part about him being found wandering round and round in a field and then collapsing may be true. James (1797–1856) son of James and Betty Cairns. His father trained as a surgeon and became Captain of a slaving ship, returning to Hawick with Tom Jenkins, but promptly dying. He and Tom were raised by his father’s sister and her husband Tom Lunn, who lived at Shuttlehaa in Teviothead. He must therefore have been the closest thing that Jenkins had to a brother. He worked as a shepherd for James Scott of Allan-shaws and then moved to Salisbury Craig in Edinburgh. He is recorded as a shepherd at Queen’s Park in 1841 and on St. Leonard’s St., Edinburgh in 1851. In May 1820 he married Sophia Glendinning (c.1802–70), the marriage being recorded in both Cavers and Ettrick Parishes; it is tempting to imagine that Tom Jenkins attended this wedding on his last trip back to Scotland before he left Britain for good. Their children included: Janet (b.c.1821); Elizabeth (b.c.1825); John (b.c.1827); Sophia (b.c.1829), who married Andrew Gunn in Edinburgh in 1851; Mary (b.c.1830), who probably had a child Sophia in 1862; Christina (b.1832), who probably died young: Walter (b.1833), who married Barbara Kay; Isabella (b.1835), who married James Reekie; and Adam (b.1837), who married Isabella Barrie. Their last 4 children were baptised in Cammogate Parish. He died in Carnegie Street Edinburgh. William (18th C.) from Southdean Parish. He was ordered to be transported to America in 1679 for being a Covenanter (probably after being captured at Bothwell Bridge), and escaped the shipwreck in the Orkneys which killed about 200 men. Most of the survivors were recaptured and sold as slaves in Jamaica and New Jersey. William (b.c.1780) recorded as miller of Doveshaugh Mill in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. In the 1841 census he was miller at Bedrule Mill. William (19th C.) recorded as labourer at Dovemount in 1835 (also formerly written ‘Swanston’, ‘Swanstone’, ‘Swanstoun’, etc.).

swek (sweck) v., arch. to fiddle, swindle – ‘Hei swecked his age ti join the Haim Guard’ [IWL].

swellit (swee-lee’, -lí’) pp., poet. swelled – ‘Recalling alie her byter greifis, Thye swellit the byde of woe ... ’ [JE].

swey (swi) v., arch. to sway.

swey (swì) n., arch. a horizontal bar swings across a fireplace, used for hanging pots etc. – ‘Come haste and mak’ a clean heath-stane, Gar shine the crook and swey’ [DA].

Swin (swin) n. former farm in Kirkton Parish, where Robert Smith is recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. It may be the same as the place recorded earlier as Swinsteid.

Swine Acre (swi-nee-kur) n. lands once attached to the estate of Mangerton. ‘Sweye Acre’ was listed as a 3-shilling land in the c.1376 rental roll of Liddesdale (the name presumably relates to pigs).

swinge (swinj) v., poet. to beat, belabour – ‘I’ll thee obey, – or sorrow swinge me, I gie my aith’ [JR].

Swingill (swin-gil) n. remote farmstead in Ewes Parish. It is located where the Swin Gill meets the Meikledale Burn. Henry Oliver and family were there in 1841.

swingle (swing-ul, -gul) v., arch. to beat lint or flax in order to separate the fibres from the woody parts (from Old English ‘swinclge’, to beat or whip).

swinger (swin-jur) n., arch. a person who beats flax, or an instrument used for beating flax.

swingle-trei (swing-ul-trî) n., arch. the swinging part of a flail, particularly used for threshing flax.

swinglin (swing-lin) n., arch. the process of beating lint or flax, using a swingling-stock and swingling-hand to separate the flax from the stalk and to extract the finest fibres. The carrying out of this operation was formerly an occasion for social gathering in the countryside – ‘The next operation was the famous swingling, which broke up and enlivened the dullness of the winter nights so merrily in the generations by-gone’ [JAHM].

swinglin-haund (swing-lin-hawnd) n., arch. a sharp-edged wooden lath for dressing flax, also known as a ‘swingling sword’ – ‘...and beaten with a sword-shaped stick called a swingling-hand’ [JAHM], ‘They laid sae fast upon the boards, The swinglinds gaed like horseman’s swords’ [JoHo] (also ‘swinglind’ and ‘swinglint’).

swinglin-stock (swing-lin-stok) n., arch. an upright board, over which flax was held while it was beaten – ‘The operation was performed by means of a swingling-stock a board fastened uprightly to another peice upon which the foot was placed to keep it steady’ [JAHM].

swinglin-sword (swing-lin-sörd) n., arch. a sword-shaped, wooden lath used for dressing flax.

There are some old local examples in the Museum.

the swings (thu-swingez) n. general term for a playground – ‘grannie, can oo gaun ti the swings’.

swing ticket (swing-ti-ki’) n. a hanging tag attached to a garment (e.g. in the knitwear industry) when it is finished.

Swinnie (swi-nee) n. hamlet and farm off the A68 on the B6357 towards Hallrule. Thomas Oliver ‘de Swayne’, who witnessed a sasine in Rulewater in 1436 may have been from here. Robert Oliver was there in 1502. It was listed along with Clarilee in 1538 among lands in Jedforest that had passed to the Crown, but the lands were ‘claimed by the laird thereof’; at that time they were valued at £4 6s 8d. In 1557 Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst complained to the Queen that a force led by the Laird of Bedrule had terrorised the tenant, Adam Kirkton; this was presumably part of land dispute. It was owned by the Marquis of Douglas in 1643 and 1678, when valued at £400 (along with Old Jedburgh and ‘Standalane’); the Earl of Lothian owned the teinds. There were 10 separate households listed there on the Hearth Tax Rolls of 1694. Archibald Douglas of Douglas was recorded as owner in 1788. John Goodfellow was there in 1797. Richard Davidson was farmer there in the mid-to-late 19th century. There was formerly a toll-bar there. In about 1833 a horn was found here, containing silver coins from the reign of James I of Scotland and around 1845 a set of 300–400 silver coins were ploughed up on the farm, these being from the reigns of Henry VIII and Queen Mary. There is a linear earthwork to the west of the farm, which runs about a mile and is probably an old agricultural boundary (also written ‘Swiney’ and ‘Swinny’, it is ‘Swynny’ in 1502, ‘Swyne’ and ‘Swinne’ in 1538, ‘Swynnee’ in 1539, ‘Swynne’ in 1557 and ‘Swynie’ in 1694; it is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Sownie’).

Swinnie Moor (swin-nee-moor) n. moorland area between Bonchester and Jedburgh, around the B6357, near the hamlet of Swinnie and Swinny Plantation. An area called Swinnie Dyke was once the supposed haunting ground of a ‘bogle’ (the origin of the name is possibly from Old Norse ‘svithningr’, meaning ‘the place cleared by burning’ and first occurs as ‘Svlynny’ in 1528).

Swinstead (swin-steed) n. Swinsteid, former lands in Kirkton Parish, once held by the Elliots. This could be the ‘Swintries’ held by the young Robert Elliot of Redheugh and managed for him (along with Skelfhill, Peelbrae and Priesthaugh) by his step-father Gavin Elliot of Stobs in about the 1560s. James Murray and Hector Jardine were there in 1581. ‘Gavin Elliot of Swinsteidis’ is listed in 1583/4 among Border Lairds who were summoned to appear before the Privy Council.

It is probably the ‘Swenesteidis’ where the fugitive Martin Burn was tenant in 1606. In 1610 it was listed as part of the Lordship of Winnington, possessed by 3 sisters called Hamilton, heirs of their great-grandfather Patrick Hepburn. In 1622 Gilbert of Stobs purchased the 15 merk land of Over and Nether ‘Swynsteid’ from Robert Elliot of Redheugh along with the rest of the lands of Winnington; it was described as ‘now commonly called the lands of Hilend Barnes and Newton’. It then formed part of the estate of the Eliotts of Stobs in the 17th century. It may be the same as the farm of ‘Swin’ in Kirkton Parish where Robert Smith is recorded as farmer in 1797 (it is probably ‘Swinsteinis’ in 1574, ‘Swinteiis’ in 1576, ‘Swynsteidis’ in 1581, ‘Swynsteid’ in 1610, ‘Over and Nether Swynsteid’ in 1657, ‘Swinsteide Ovir et Nethir’ in 1670 and ‘Over and Nether Swynstead’ in 1681).

Swinton (swin’in, swin-tin) n. village in Berwickshire on the Leet Water, set out around the green with its 18th century cross. It is the original home of the Swinton family, who claim the oldest charters of any family in Scotland. Swinton House was built around 1800 to replace an earlier house destroyed by fire and also has a tower-shaped dovecote, still occupied by pigeons. The surrounding Parish absorbed the parish of Simprin in 1761, where Thomas Boston was minister. The Wheatsheaf Hotel has won awards for its restaurant.

Swinton (swin’in, swin-tin) n. Charles (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1822 he married Margaret Douglas, who was also from Hawick. Their children included: Isabella (b.1823); Thomas (b.1825); Anne (b.1829); John (b.1832); Charles (b.1835); James (b.1839); and William (b.1839). John (1832–c.1913) son of Charles and Margaret Douglas. He was a shoemaker in Hawick. He was one of the founding members of the Common Riding Ceremonial Committee. He also helped secure a Cornet in 1856, when the man elected by the Council refused to accept. He celebrated the Common Riding along with other exiles in 1858 in Galt, Canada. He also acted as starter for the Common Riding Races. He remained on the Ceremonial Committee from 1887–95. In 1861 he married Elizabeth (‘Betsy’) Scott. Their children included Charles, Margaret, Ann and Elizabeth. Marion (18th C.) housemaid at Woll in 1791, when she was working for Charles Scott.

swire (swîr, swîr) n. a hollow between hills or flat area near the top of a hill, frequently having a road through it, a hill pass – ‘we rode the Swine’ [JS], ‘and the Swine, suteide Black Law . . .’ [ECS] (existing in place names, such as ‘Priesthaugh Swire’, ‘Redeswire’, ‘Swire Knowe’, the use of this word is mainly restricted to the Borders).

the Swire (thu-swîr-ur) n. Swire Knowe, a hill between Caldcleuch and Greatmoor, reaching a height of 459m. Just to the west is Windy Swire and south-east is Swire Rig – ‘As I manage my steed on the slope of the Swire, I would sing thee a song of my heart’s desire’ [WHO].

Swirefoot (swîr-foot) n. Swirefoot, former name for lands on Hyndlee farm, at the foot of the ridge between the Jed Water and the Catlee Burn. The Hare Cairn once existed there and a shepherd’s cottage was built there later. A story is told about an old shepherd seeing fairies near here (also written ‘Sweirefoot’).

the Swires (thu-swîr-urz) n. former name for the Borders, or perhaps some broad region within it. The phrase is used in the Register of the Privy Council in 1574 to refer to an area that certain local Croziers and others were to remove themselves from – ‘...they should be permittit to remove and transport thame selfis, thair wyffis, cornis and guidis outwith the Swyris, ...on condition that that never returnit agane to dwell within the saidis Swyris thairefter, except befoir thair returning and duelling thay fand responsall and sufficient suirteis, inlandis men ...’.

And a’body swithered and thocht ‘What’s adae?’’ [DH], n. a state of indecision, hesitation over choice, anxious agitation – ‘The way they learn’d it frae their mither, Or some auld aunt’s loquacious swither O’ with and glee’ [JR], – ‘...But whaur he got his hear Fair pins me in a swither’ [WL], ‘...But no alane for the love o’ his mither Did Wull gang reivin’ without a swither’ [WL] (cf. the locally more common swuther).

swither (sî-thur) n., arch. a trial of strength, competitive effort – ‘Then we’ll at crambo hae a swither In hame spin dress ... Or some auld aunt’s loquacious swither O’ wit an’ glee’ [JR], v., arch. to exert oneself in competition – ‘To wark they fell, what they could swither. The lint flew fast frae ane anither’ [JoHo].

swiz (swiz) n. a swindle, rip off, scam – ‘they greyhoonds it the shows er a right swiz’ v.? to swindle (from Old English).

Sword (sîrd) n. Andrew (17th C.) Hawick’s first schoolmaster on record, according to deeds of about 1592 and also in 1616. Perhaps the same Andrew was also Hawick’s second recorded Town Clerk, from about 1620 until some time in the 1630s. He was also recorded as a notary public in Hawick in 1627 (for the Hawick Parish valuation).

James (1786/7–bef. 1861) born in Stichill Parish, he was a master carpenter at Brieryshaw in the Eves valley. He was listed there in 1841 and 1851. His wife was Helen and they had children Jessie, James and Helen. His wife was a widow and ‘Fundi Holder’ in 1861. John (17th C.) witness to the Hawick Parish valuation of 1627. It seems likely he was closely related to Andrew, who was notary for the document. John (b.c.1779) shepherd from Selkirkshire. He he was living at Ettrick House in 1841 and 1851. In 1801 at Gamescleuch he married Janet, daughter of Walter Lunn and Betty Turnbull, who lived at Colterscleuch. His children were born at Eilrig, Nether Dalgleish and Ettrick House. In 1861 his widow was living with their daughter Margaret Anderson at Easter Alemoor, where she died a year later. Their children included: Elizabeth (Betty, 1802–82), who married Adam Beattie, and died in Annan, Ontario; John (1807–79), who married Jean Colthard and died at Easter Alemoor; Margaret (b.1804), who married James Anderson, farmer at Easter Alemoor; Walter (b.1810), who married Bella Hislop; James (b.1812), who married Helen Rieve; Janet (1813–19); William (b.1814), who married Isabella Hardie; and Robert (1821–84), who married Margaret Nichol and died in Annan, Ontario. Thomas (18th C.) recorded in Hawick.
in 1743 as ‘Officer’, meaning that he was either Burgh Officer or Kirk Officer (probably the former). He was paid one shilling for guiding a troop of dragoons from Hawick to Langholm in 1740. He is also recorded in the Kirk Session records being paid ‘for summonming the Parish’ about the same time. In 1743 he witnessed a baptism for workman William Noble. Probably the same Thomas is recorded in 1756 when the Council paid 1 shilling for his ‘sentence money’.

He is probably the Thomas, married to Margaret Brown, whose children included John (b.1737) and Thomas (b.1739). Thomas (b.1813/4) born in Southdean Parish, he was shepherd at Tytheast in 1861. His wife was Janet and their children included John and David B.D. (also spelled ‘Sowrd’ and ‘Sword’).

syne (sīn) v. to rinse, wash superficially, swill, n. a quick rinse, superficial wash – ‘gie that gless a wee syne oot afore ee pour yer drink’ (cf. synde).

Synton (sī-tīn, sīn-tīn) n. area just before Ashkirk, including several farms, formerly a large estate and separate barony, forming a disjoint part of Selkirkshire. The land was owned by the ‘de Sinton’ family for at least 4 generations. In the reign of William the Lion, Andrew de Sinton was appointed Sheriff of Selkirk, and gave up some reign of William the Lion, Andrew de Sinton was appointed Sheriff of Selkirk, and gave up some was held by the Erskines, with some lands possessed by the Scotts in the 15th century, and with the Scotts being more or less permanent tenants from at least 1509. In 1494 the lands were valued at 40 merks, but in times of peace were worth £20; they were held for payment of a pair of gilt spurs at Whitby, if asked. The Barony may at one point have included the lands of Whitelade and Dalglish, while part, owned by the Veitches, was annexed to the Barony of Dawyck. In 1502 the estate was attacked by David Scott ‘in Stirkshawes’ (i.e. Strices) and some Armstrongs, as well as Adam Turnbull of Hornshole, when many sheep and cattle were stolen. In 1510 the Baron, Lord Robert Erskine, and his son Sir John Erskine, had an indenture with Ralph Ker of Primside Loch and Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst. Details are complicated, but basically for 400 ‘merks’ the Kerrs were sold a 20 merk land in Synton Mains (adjacent to the 5 merk land of Walter Scott), and another piece of land of equivalent value within Synton, together with the option to take over the Scott lands after a few years. In 1537 Gilbert Ker had sasine for a 20 merk land in ‘South Syntoun’. The lands were also raided in 1562, according to a decree made for Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst. The Barony was granted to Walter, Earl of Buccleuch in 1621. George Scott, said to be 14th Laird of Synton sold the lands to Sir William Scott of Harden in about 1627. The Lairdship was revived by Sir William’s younger brother Francis. At some early time the lands were split into South and North Synton (on opposite sides of the Ale Water), as well as Synton Mill, Synton Parkhead and Syntonshiel farms. The main estate was South Synton, with North Synton owned by the Veitches from at least 1407 until 1641, when it was sold to Francis Scott of South Synton. The estate passed from Sir John Edmondston of that Ilk to John, Earl of Mar in 1593, and was bought outright by the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1619. The Barony and lands were listed among the possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1653, 1661, 1663, including ‘the toure, fortalice, manor-place, housis, bigings, yairdis, mylnes, mylnelandis, multoris, and sequellis thairof’. The estate was valued at £946 in about 1663. George Turnbull was living there in 1698, and James Veitch was a servant there at the same time. Thomas Bournhill was gardener there in 1717. In 1785 and 1803 the lands of Synton and Synton Mill were valued at £1600. The arms of the original Scotts of Synton has 2 stars and a crescent and their motto ‘Reparabit Cornua Phœbe’. The Harden-derived Scotts of Synton (and later the Corse Scotts) were important local lairds for many generations. Their arms are a ‘bend azure’ with a star and 2 crescents and their motto ‘Crescendo prosim’. Since the estate was the site for the hereditary sheriffsdom of Selkirk, there must have once been at least a fortified house there, but its precise location is unknown. It seems likely to have been near to where the 18th century house was built, this having stones built into it dating from 1570. This house was demolished in the latter half of the 20th century (also spelled ‘Sinton’, ‘Sintone’, ‘Sintonne’, ‘Sintoun’, ‘Sintoune’, ‘Sintun’, ‘Suyntoun’, ‘Syntoun’, ‘Syntone’, ‘Syntoun’, ‘Syntoune’, etc.: it is mentioned from at least the early 13th century; Blaeu’s 1654 map shows ‘South Syntoun’ and ‘North Sintoun’, while Adair’s c. 1688 map shows ‘Syntoun’; an early connection with ‘Swinton’ is not impossible).

Syntoncorses (sin’-in-kö-r-sez) n. farmstead between Synton and Synton Mains. About 140 m to the east are the remains of a ‘burnt mound’, at least 3 m in diameter. Robert Scott was shepherd there in 1851.

Synton Cottage (sin’-in-kö-eej) n. cottage that is to the west of Synton farm. About 160 m to the north are the remains of a farmstead, with a building, 2 enclosures and traces of rig-and-furrow cultivation. About 190 m to the north-east are the remains of a plantation bank.

Synton Hoose (sin’-in-hoos) n. house on the estate at Synton. It was rebuilt in about 1775 by Alexander Scott of Synton, probably on the site of the earlier house. It was located where modern maps mark ‘Synton’, although it was demolished after WWII and there is now little sign of where it was. The stables are inscribed with the date 1777, and it seems likely the main house was rebuilt at this time. Reset within the walls were 2 stones from the older house, which together read ‘GEORGE SCOT IN SYNOTVN AND MARG/RET EDMSTOVN HIS SP(OVS IN THE) / ZER OF GOD 1570 THE HEAR T(O WALTER SCOT). . .’.

Synton Loch (sin’-in-loch) n. small lake to the left of the A7 before coming to the main Synton area. It covers about 6 acres and is stocked for fishing. It is what is left of the much larger area of Synton Moss, which was largely drained in the 18th and 19th centuries. To the southwest some bones of an aurochs was discovered there in 1979. On a ridge about 300 m to the south lie the remains of a settlement, trapezoidal in shape, about Synton Mossend (sin'-in-monz) n. farm just off the A7 opposite Ashkirk, with holiday cottages and a private loch. In 1510 the Barons of Synton, the Erskines, had an indenture with Ralph Ker of Primside Loch and Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst over a 20 ‘merk’ land within this farm, adjacent to the lands held by Walter Scott, and another 20 merk land where they please. In 1609 Walter Veitch was served as heir to his grandfather in the lands of North Synton, including ‘lie Maynes’ there. John Scott was tenant there in 1709. Charles Scott was tenant in 1786 (presumably once the home farm for Synton; it is ‘the Manys of Santoun’ in 1510 and ‘Sintownmill’ in 1755; is marked ‘Mains’ on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Synton Mill (sin'-in-mil) n. farm and former corn mill on the south side of the A7 north of Synton. Isobel Scott was there in 1635, according to a court case at Ashkirk Session, with Thomas Nichol and Andrew Nichol also mentioned as tenants. Tax was paid for 6 hearths there in 1694. Andrew Fletcher was miller there in at least 1689–98. Robert Foster was miller there in 1703 and William Henderson in 1715. William Tait was cottar there in 1717 and Thomas Scott was there in 1719. John Redford was tenant there in at least 1755–65. John Rutherford was tenant there in 1797, when there were 4 work horses on the farm. Adam Neil was miller there in 1851 (also written ‘Syntonmill’, it is ‘Sin'toun Mill’ in 1689 and ‘sintoune milne’ in 1694; there in 1797, when there were 4 work horses on the farm. Adam Neil was miller there in 1851; it is ‘Sin'toun Mill’ in 1689 and ‘sintoune milne’ in 1694; it is marked as ‘Sinntoun Mill’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Sintown Mill’ on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Synton Moss (sin’-in-mos) n. land near Synton farm on the high ground just before Ashkirk. It was formerly a fairly extensive lake, but drained in the late 18th and early 19th centuries to obtain marl and peat. The remaining part is now a 25 m by 65 m, with entrance near the east corner. It contains 2 sets of banks and inside are what might be 4 hut platforms. An Iron Age sword, as well as shards of pottery, found there are in the Royal Museum of Scotland. These suggest earlier occupation of the site.

Synton Mains (sin’-in-manz) n. farm just off the A7 opposite Ashkirk, with holiday cottages and a private loch. In 1510 the Barons of Synton, the Erskines, had an indenture with Ralph Ker of Primside Loch and Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst over a 20 ‘merk’ land within this farm, adjacent to the lands held by Walter Scott, and another 20 merk land where they please. Synton Parkhead, farm on the road to Synton, off to the right of the A7. It is known locally as simply ‘Parkheid’. William Inglis was there in 1581. Thomas Lockie was a wright there in 1715. A bronze sundial there, on a modern pedestal, is inscribed ‘SEIZE THE PRESENT MOMENT THE EVENING HOUR IS NIGH’, and ‘1705 / THOMAS GRICE’. A Bronze Age spearhead found there is in the Hunterian Museum, Glasgow (it is ‘Parkheid in Syntoun’ in 1581).

Syntonshiel (sin’-in-sheel) n. former farmstead in the south part of Synton estate. It is marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map between the main road and Synton Loch, corresponding roughly to the position of Synton Mossend.

Taddei’s (taw-deez) n. cafe run by the Taddei family (brothers Ernie, Jimmie and Guido), located on North Bridge Street since before WWII. Ernesto Taddei turned it into Hawick’s perni-er billiard’s venue after the War, with 7 tables up-stairs and 6 downstairs. It converted to a bingo hall by the early 1970s, with an adjoining shop. The family also once ran a chip shop on Oliver Place and the Cadora Cafe on the High Street. The family once sponsored a football team, which played in black.

tail (tāl) n., arch. a small portion of land attached to a larger piece, like a tail, especially a piece of lower ground or far end of the land. The word occurs in the 1609 service of heirs for James, son of Hawick minister William Auchmowty – ‘Anmo redditu 10 m. de turre lie toure cum cauda lie tail ejusdem’, presumably a piece of land attached to fields farmed by a tenant at the Tower in Hawick (with ‘cauda’ meaning ‘tail’, and so it was ‘with tail called the Tail’).

the Tail ( thu-tāl) n. former name for a piece of additional land farmed along with the tenancy of the Tower in Hawick (recorded in 1609).

the Tail Burn ( thu-tāl-burn) n. stream connecting Loch Sween with the Grey Mare’s Tail – ‘The Tail Burn from the marshland leads madcap down the brae, While Skene reflects in splendour, the late sun’s blinding ray’ [WL].

tailit (tā-lee’, lī’) adj. tailed, having a tail – ‘...having apprehendit ane foiir meir, quhyt mainet and quhyt taillet ... ’ [BR1641].

Tailleycleuch ( tā-lee-clooch) n. fortified house marked on Blaen’s 1654 map, roughly near the modern Steelroad-end. The stream there is marked Taylor’s Cleuch on modern maps. There is no sign of where the house may have been. A circular enclosure near there, and close to the railway line, was excavated in 1977; it is about 40 m in diameter, and seems to be a prehistoric settlement with later occupation, probably unrelated to the tower-house. It may be associated with the ‘Tailside’ recorded in 1632, which was probably close to there.

Taillyard ( tāl-yārd) n. name for former lands within Crook, i.e. near the Kirkton Burn in Cavers Parish. It is recorded in 1581 as a ‘hortulo herbario vulgo vocat taillzard’, i.e. a small herb garden commonly called Taillyard, on the west side of the lands of Crook (note that the transcription of the name is unclear; ‘Tail’ probably refers to a small piece of land attached to a larger area).

tailors (tā-lurz) n. once one of the 7 incorporated trades in Hawick, which until 1861 had two representatives on the Town Council. They were probably incorporated towards the end of the 17th century. In 1679 their quartermasters were fined for ‘making an act not to work out of their own houses’. They are recorded taking the Test in 1684. In 1734 the Council allowed a petition from them ‘to convene at six o’clock to their work, and leave at eight o’clock at night’. The first female dressmaker in Hawick was in about 1793, with dresses before this period being made by the tailors.

Tailor’s Slack ( tā-lurz-slawk) n. short stream in Liddesdale, running into Greenshiel Sike, which becomes part of Ryedale Burn.

Tails Day ( tāl-zā) n. former tradition on the day after ‘Huntie Gowk’, i.e. 2nd April, in which children (particularly at school) would try to pin paper tails on unsuspecting victims (this survived until around WWII).

Tailside ( tāl-sid) n. former farmstead in Liddesdale, probably close to Steeleroad-end. It is listed in 1632 among lands possessed by Hab Hender- son, along with Todscleuch, Fairside and Cleuchside. It may be associated with the modern Taylor’s Cleuch and the fortified house of ‘Taillycleuch’.

tailzie ( tāl-yee) n., arch. term in Scots law, an entailment, whereby the legal succession of an estate is restricted to designated heirs – ‘Free the gates ye thowless bailies! Leave for once your wads and tailzies!’ [RSC], poet. a covenant – ‘Til sic as keepe his tailzie, an’ til thae that beare in mind his commandements til do thame’ [HSR].

Tait (tä’) n. Adam (15th C.) on the panel for James Douglas of Drumlanrig inheriting the Barony of Hawick in 1484. Adam (17th C.) resident of Shielwood in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor’. Alexander (d.aft. 1595) recorded as ‘Vicar-pensioner and Reader’ at Traquair 1567–80. He was then deprieved, living afterwards at St. Bride’s Kirk, Traquair. He became minister of Bedrule in 1585, but was ordered to demit this in 1591. He is mentioned as still living in 1595. Alexander (1782– 1851) youngest son of miller George and Agnes Scott. In 1841 he was recorded as an agricultural labourer at Burnfoot Mill and his widow was living there in 1851. He died at Burnfoot in the 44th year of his service there. He mar-rried Margaret Younger, who died in 1858, aged 77. Their children included William and Margaret. They are buried in Wilton. Andrew (1778–1861) originally from Luder, son of Andrew and Ann, he was a stockingmaker of the Green Wynd. He was one of the founders of the Relief Kirk. There is a record of him being granted money by the Board of Trustees for Manufactures in 1817 for a broad frame, after he had demonstrated that he had discovered how to make down tippets and muffs on the frame. He managed to make white feathered muffs, but when taste changed to coloured muffs, he was unable to get the feathers to dye properly. He was living on the Back Row in 1832, adjacent to where there were cholera victims. He is recorded as a widower living with the Kyle family on the Green Wynd in 1841 and 1851. Archibald (b.1705) farmer near Borthaugh. He was father of George, tenant of Borthaugh Mill. He is said to have lived into his late 90s, has married twice and had 19 children.
He may be the tenant in Whitehillbrae whose wife Margaret Turnbull died in 1760, with her funeral recorded in Hobkirk Parish. His children probably included Archibald (b.1741) and George (b.1743), both baptised in Hobkirk Parish. Archibald (d.1824) agricultural labourer in the Hawick area. He is probably the Archibald, son of Archibald and Margaret Turnbull, who was baptised in Hobkirk Parish in 1741. He married Isabella Geddes, who died in 1822, aged 84. In her death record he is listed as ‘Egglar’, meaning a peddler who collected eggs from outlying farms to sell at markets. Their children included: Janet (b.1773); Margaret (b.1777), who married carrier
James Paterson; and William (b.1782), who was a carrier. His children were baptised in Hawick and Wilton Parishes; he was at Fenwick in 1777 and Borthaugh in 1782. The 1782 baptism was witnessed by George Tait (probably his brother) and Margaret Cowan; in an adjacent baptismal entry he was witness for George. He was proba-ably son of the earlier Archibald and brother of George, tenant of Borthaugh Mill. He may be the Archibald who was charged with theft in Hawick in 1776. Archibald (1820–79) son of William and Elizabeth Forsyth. He was proprietor of the Ewe and Lamb Hotel in Melrose. He married Elizabeth Naylor. He died in Hawick. David (19th C.) shepherd near Addestoneshie. In 1863 he presented to the Museum an otter that had been shot on Addestoneshie Moss. He is probably the ‘D.
Tait’ recorded at Adderstonelee in 1868. Ernest E., O.B.E., J.P. (??– ) accountant in Pringle’s, he was President of the Callants’ Club in 1966.
He became Secretary at Pringle’s in 1939, taking over from James Watherston. In 1947 he was made a Director of Pringle’s. George of Pirn (15th C.) listed on the panel to decide on the disputed lands of Kirkton Mains and the Flex in 1464/5. He is recorded as being ‘of the Pren’, his lands being in Tweeddale (near Stow). The David ‘de pryn’ recorded in the Justice-aire in Selkirk in 1494/5 is probably his son (and his son George is recorded in 1498). It is said that the Taits of Pirm died out in the male line and were continued by a daughter who married Horsburgh of that Ilk; they may be the oldest known Taits. George (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 when James Gray in Fawhope had permission for stealing livestock from his farms of ‘pyrne’ (i.e., Pirn), Gatehope, Seatheope and Innerleithen. He was probably son of the previous George of Pirn. Gray had also been accused of killing Anthony when James Gray in Fawhope had remission for stealing from Patrick and Margaret, all of whom were probably related to him. George (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet ‘Caidyea’ (i.e. Kedie) in 1654. Their children included: William (b.1656); John (b.1658); Isobel (b.1659); and John (b.1661). The witnesses in 1656 were Thomas Vogan and John Fraiter. George (d.c.1693) tenant in ‘Newtoun’ in 1689 when his will was recorded. It is unclear which Newton this may have been (in the counties of Peebles, Roxburgh and Selkirk). George (17th C.) resident of North Synton in 1693 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll there. He may have witnessed a baptism in 1691 (but it is hard to read). George (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Roberton itself in 1731 and at Highchesters in 1742. Children baptised in Roberton who are probably his include Margaret (b.1731), Isabel (b.1738), Helen (b.1742), John (b.1748) and James (b.1754). George (1743–1812) son of Archibald, he was baptised in Hobkirk Parish. He was tenant at Borthaugh Mill, being the last miller there. He married Agnes Scott, who died in 1812, aged 70. Their children included: John; Isabel (b.1773); Archibald (b.1776); George (b.1778), builder in Hawick; William (b.1780); and Alexander (1782–1851). The 1782 baptism was witnessed by Archibald Tait (probably his brother), while he witnessed the baptism of William, son of Archibald Tait. He was buried in Wilton Old Kirkyard. George (1778–1853) son of George, who was tenant at Borthaugh Mill, he was born in Wilton Parish. He was a builder in Hawick, whose son (also a mason) had the same name. He served on the ‘Eternal Coonsul’ as a representative of the hammermen; he was certainly there as early as 1827. He lived on the Punch Bowl Close at 27 High Street, owning the property there; his son George later rebuilt the front, while another son James ran a druggists in one of the 2 front shops and had a school in the back. He is probably the George listed as a builder on the Fore Row on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory and on the High Street in 1837. ‘Geo. Tait & Sons’ is listed on Punch Bowl Close in Slater’s 1852 directory. On the 1841 and 1851 censuses he is at Punch Bowl Close with his son James (druggist), with his other son George next door. He married Margaret Scott, who died in 1818, aged 38. Their children included: Margaret (b.1804); John (b.1808), also a builder; George (b.1812), who continued with his builder’s business; and James (b.1815). A portrait of him exists. The family (including 3 children who died in infancy) are buried in St. Mary’s. George (1812–97) son of builder George. He was also a mason and the 3rd George in a row in this family (his grandfather being miller at Borthaugh). Like his father before him, he was a member of the ‘Eternal Coonsul’, representing the hammermen for several years from 1846. The Tait builders (including his father and brother John) between them erected many of the Town’s buildings, including much of North Bridge Street and a large number of local mansions, including Silverbuthall, Mayfield, East Bank Meeting House, St. Andrew’s Church and Orrock Place Church. In 1841 he is recorded on Punch Bowl Close, listed at 76 High Street in 1851 and 1861, and still there in 1875. He rebuilt the front of the property that had been owned by his father; however, the building was later demolished (along with the one next door) to make way for the Pavillion Theatre. He was a nearly life-long member (and later an Elder) of Orrock Kirk. He donated some fossils to the Museum in 1863. He was described as having ‘a fine portly form’ and was latterly very deaf. In 1836 he married Beatrice Wilson, who died in 1862, aged 51. Their children included: Margaret (b.1838/9), who married James Turnbull of Galalaw; Beatrice (b.1839), who died in infancy; Beatrice (again, b.1845), who died young; George (b.1847), also died young; and Elizabeth (b.1851/2), who married Alexander Welsh from Coldstream. George (b.1829/30) son of grocer John. He was listed as a shoemaker at Wilton Place in Slater’s 1852 directory. In the 1851 census he was living with his parents on Wilton Kirkstyle and listed as ‘Deaf & Dumb’. Gilbert (b.1803/4) gamekeeper at Whitehaugh in Castleton Parish. His wife was Jane and their children included Christian and William. James (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Crozier and their children included Andrew (b.1689). James (d.1815) tenant farmer at Eilrig. He is recorded there on the 1787–97 Horse Tax Rolls. In 1797 he was owner of 4 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid the dog tax there in the same year. He is recorded as ‘Mr James Tait’ at Eilrig in 1798 when his daughter was baptised in Roberton Parish. He married Janet Scott in 1795, the marriage being recorded in both Roberton and Ettrick Parishes. Their children included: Janet (b.1798); Helen (b.1803); Henry (b.1806); and Georgine (b.1810). His death is recorded in Hawick in 1815, with the words ‘Died suddenly’. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1797 he married Helen Leithead from Hawick Parish. James (b.1805/6) coal agent in Denholm. His wife was Helen. James (1815-63) son of builder George, he was a chemist at 27 High Street in the mid-19th century. He also had a school in the back premises. He was said to be a ‘cripple and walked very lame’. He married Catherine Anderson, from Jedburgh. James (19th C.) editor of the Kelso Chronicle. He wrote the 2 volume study ‘Two Centuries of Border Church Life: with Biographies of Leading Men and Sketches of the Social Conditions of the People’ (1889, 1891). It principally contains details of churches associated with Kelso Presbytery, encompassing several areas around Hawick, including Lilliesleaf and Liddlesdale. He also edited Walter Riddell Carre’s work ‘Border Memories, or, Sketches of Prominent men and women of the Border’ (1876) and ‘Wilson’s Tales of the Borders’ (1881, 1884). James (19th C.) local artist. His painting ‘Hawick Common Riding Procession at Tower Knowe 1890’ is in the Museum collection. He is probably also the James who painted a portrait of Provost George Wilson and possibly a picture of Minto Pond. John (17th C.) piper, named by the Hawick Bailie in 1627, among 15 other ‘idle and masterless men’ as fit to be sent to the wars in Germany. While in Edinburgh Tolbooth he was among 7 of them who complained that they were not in fact the sorts of men who should be pressed into military service, but nevertheless were transported to the wars in Germany. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Agnes Henderson and their children included George (b.1691), John (b.1693), unnamed (b.1694), Margaret (b.1697), James (b.1699), Agnes (b.1703), and Andrew (b.1705). The witnesses in 1691 were William Easton and James Veitch. John (d.bef. 1721) gardener listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. Probably the same John was resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. In 1715 he was fined ‘for breaking the marches between the Common and the property of the Dutchess of B. at the Wolligate’. He was described as the deceased ‘some times gardner’ in 1721 when his daughter Isobel married flesher Robert Hardie in Hawick. The later gardener John was surely related to him. John (17th/18th C.) tenant in Adderstoneshiel. In 1719 his servant Bessie Anderson got married in Hawick and in 1720 his ‘servitor’ John Scott had a child baptised in Kirkton Parish. John (17th/18th C.) gardener in Hawick Parish, perhaps son of the earlier gardener John. He was ‘gardener att ye Cross wynd’ in 1716. He is probably the John who witnessed a baptism for James Henderson in 1730. In 1716 he married Jean, daughter to Adam Armstrong in Barnes. Their children included: Isobel (b.1719); Beatrice (b.1721); Agnes (b.1723); John (b.1726); Bessie (b.1729); and Jean (b.1739). William (b.1732), with the mother’s name given as ‘Margaret’ Armstrong, was probably also his child. The witnesses in 1719 were wright Francis Gledstained and carrier William Miller, in 1723 were smith John Scott and James Chisholme ‘Laird’, and in 1726 were Bailie Martin and ‘Dand’ Gray. John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1724 he married Margaret Turnbull in Wilton Parish. He could be the John ‘Teat’ recorded at Borthwickshiel in 1725 when his son John was baptised and the John ‘Tat’ recorded in 1735 at Girnwood when his son John was baptised. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded at Ornston in 1727. His children included: William (b.1725); and Helen (b.1727). John (18th C.) footman at Knowe in Minto Parish in 1778, when he was working for Thomas Turnbull. In 1779 he was listed as a house and riding servant. John (18th C.) tenant farmer in Fenwick in about the 1750s, when Robert Hobkirk was Town Herd. He was said to have ‘came and drunk with Bailie Ker’ in order to solve a dispute with the Town Herd over the use of the Common. John (18th C.) recorded at Winnington Rig on the 1787 Horse Tax Rolls. John (1768/9-1812) road contractor who died at Abbotrule Lodge. His wife Elizabeth Bell died in Edinburgh in 1851, aged 82. Their youngest son Adam (born in Southdean Parish) died in Edinburgh, aged 30. The family were recorded on a tombstone in Abbotrule Kirkyard. John (1771-1851) son of George, he was born at Borthaugh Mill. In 1794 he married Agnes, daughter of Gilbert Amos, and she died in 1815. The marriage was against the wishes of her family, and so was carried off from Adderstonelee at midnight! He then moved to Cavers, where he acted as a forester on Cavers estate. Their children included: Gilbert, George (b.1796), John, James and Margaret. In 1819 he emigrated to New York state with 5 children. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Catherine Welsh and their children included Archibald (b.1800), Helen (b.1803) and John (b.1805). These were all entered at the same time in the register, with witnesses being George Helm and John Scoon. John (18th/19th C.) spinner in Hawick. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. John (b.1791/2) stone-cutter in Denholm, where he was a registered voter in the 1860s. In 1861 he lived at around the Canongate. He married Margaret Biggar and they had a son Thomas. John (19th C.) tenant farmer at Wolfehopelee and Braiddhaugh in the mid-1800s. His daughter married farmer Thomas Grierson. John (b.1801/2) from Watten in Caithness, he was a grocer in Wilton. In 1851 he was living at Wilton Kirkstyle and he was listed as a shopkeeper at Wilton Place in Slater’s 1852 directory. John (b.1801/2) born in Chany, son of carrier William Thomas. John (b.1808) son of builder George, he was a mason on the Cross Wynd. Like his father and brother George, he sat on the ‘Eternal Council’, representing the hammermen from 1848. He and his brother built a good fraction of North Bridge Street, as well as several large mansions in the Hawick area. In 1851 he is listed as a builder, with 2 partners, employing 12 people, and residing at about 13 Cross Wynd. His wife was Agnes Reid from Langholm, and their children included Margaret, Isabella, Agnes, John, Helen, George and James. John (b.1829) son of carrier William, who died when he was young. He probably served in the army during the Crimean War. In 1863 in Wilton Parish he married Helen, daughter of mason Walter Cranston; she died in 1913. He was at that time described as a frameworker and Chelsea Pensioner and the witnesses were Archibald Brown and Agnes Cranston. Their children included: William Walter (b.1865); and Walter (b.1866). He also appears to have had an illegitimate son George with Mary Smith (nee Middlemas) in 1860. John G. (b.1830/1) head gardener at Cavers. In 1861 he was living at ‘Cavers Garden’, which was presumably the gardener’s house on the estate. Rev. ?? (17th/18th C.) chaplain at Thorlieshope. He was one of the local clergymen who gave sermons in Hawick in 1721 when Rev. Cunningham was ill. Robert (17th C.) tenant in Honeyburn. In 1684 he was among men declared as a fugitive for attending field conventicles. He is listed separately from Robert in Hagburn. Robert (17th C.) tenant in Hagburn (in Rulewater). He is listed in 1684 among men declared fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. Thomas (b.1801/2) born in Chankelkirk Parish, he was a gardener at Wells and then farmer at Denholm Mill. He is still recorded as farmer at Denholm Mill in 1868. He married Isabella Gray, who was from Crailing. Their children included: James (b.1828); John Gray (b.1830); David (b.1832); Margaret (b.1834); William (b.1835); William (again, b.1837), who was a shepherd; Peter (b.1839); Robert (b.1840); Charles Anderson Gray (b.1846); and Thomas (b.1843). Their children were born in Jedburgh and Southdean Parishes. Thomas (1833/4–1923) son of stone-cutter John. He married Christina Black, who died in 1908, aged 70. Their children included Rule (1866/7/9). Probably the same Thomas was tenant at Denholm Mill, recorded in the 1860s. Walter (18th/19th C.) farmer at Adderstoneshiel, recorded on the 1788–92 Horse Tax Rolls. On the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls he was owner of 5 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid tax in 1797 on 3 non-working dogs. His son James was baptised in Kirkton Parish in 1786. Betty (b.1784), John Caverhill (b.1787), Caverhill (b.1788), Margaret (b.1790) and Susan (b.1792) were probably also his children. William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed among the ‘Cottars’ on the Hearth Tax roll there. In 1697 he was ‘cottar in Sinto’ (presumably Synton). He married Agnes Beattie (sometimes written ‘Brattie’ or ‘Brattine’) and their children included James (b.1689), John (b.1691), Janet (b.1694), Marion (b.1697), William (b.1702), John (b.1705) and Robert (b.1705). When rowing on the Thames as a boy, he mangled his hand and lost part of a thumb. He joined the East India Company at age 19 and became an ensign in the 43rd Bengal Native Infantry, caught an almost fatal illness and was sent to Simla to recover. He then moved to Kashmir, when he became ill again with dysentery and returned to England in 1853. There he joined the West York Militia, purchased a commission with the 17th Lancers, and was transferred to the Scots Greys, where he became Captain, spending time in various parts of England and also Ireland. He retired from the army in 1866. He was a keen shooter, bragging that over a year he (and some friends) killed about 1000 patridges, 400 pheasants and 60 grouse. He succeeded his father in 1855, and was known as ‘Cleghorn of Weens’ for 30 years. However, he assumed the name and arms of Tancred in 1885 following the death of Charles Tancred of Arden Hall, Yorkshire, according to the conditions of succession to his estate. He substantially improved the house at Weens in the early years of the 20th century. He took possession of the ‘key of Gibraltar’ which had been taken from ‘the Rock’ by Lord Heathfield, who was born at Wells. He was a member of the Roxburghshire County Council, Chairman of Hobkirk Parish Council, Deputy-Lieutenant for Roxburghshire and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire, as well as the Tandlaw

North Riding of Yorkshire. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1862. He was also a Vice-President of Rulewater Miniature Rifle Club from 1905. He wrote ‘Historical Record of Medals and Honorary Distinctions’ (1891), ‘The Annals of a Border Club, the Jedforest’ (1899) and ‘Rulewater and its People: an Account of the Valley of the Rule and its Inhabitants’ (1907, reprinted in facsimile 1992). This last book is an extremely valuable account of the histories of families the Rule valley (and neighbouring areas), particularly in the 18th and 19th centuries, and including ordinary people as well as the landed gentry. And the Jedforest Club book is actually an excuse for him to present the histories of a large fraction of the local land-owning families. He was said to be working on another book when he died, ‘Old Border Lairds and their Tenants’; it is not clear how far he had progressed and no manuscript survives. In 1862 he married Mary Anne Hay (who died in 1914), 3rd daughter of Col. Thomas Lumsden, from Aberdeenshire. They had 11 children: George Harry Lumsden (1863–1935), who served in South Africa, married Sarah Ann Gillespie and died in New Zealand; James Charles (b.1864), who was a Royal Navy Commander and married Cecile Margaret, only daughter of Walter Macmillan-Scott of Wauchope; Thomas Angus (b.1867), Major in the Royal Artillery; Richard Fairfax (b.1875), moved to Queensland; Edward Meynell (b.1877), also Queensland; John Yule (b.1879), with the Indian Staff Corps; Walter Cecil (b.1885), born at Weens, Lieutenant in the Royal Navy; Mary Norcliffe; Katherine Wray (b.1869), born at Weens, who married Alexander Ormiston Curle, W.S.; Frances Madeline (b.1871), also born at Weens; and Edith Dalton (1873–90). A plaque in his memory was erected on the wall of Weens House in 1981 (also known as ‘George Cleghorn’ and ‘Captain Cleghorn’).

Tandlaw (tawnd-law) n. farm just out past the ‘Fower Road Ends’, with a small loch nearby, Tandlaw Moss. It appears to have been part of the estate of Robert Scott of Alton in 1643. Robert Scott of Tandlaw paid the land tax on £40 in Hassendean Parish in 1678. It was contained within Hassendean Parish until 1690 when it fell within the new Wilton Parish boundaries. Robert Scott was recorded there in 1702 and mason William Gibson in 1708. Another Robert Scott was there in 1729, Walter Scott in 1758 and Adam Armstrong in 1791. Rev. Robert Scott of Innerleithen is recorded as owner in 1788 (continued in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls), when it was valued at £40 and recorded as ‘Tanlaw, or Tandlaw’. In 1851 it consisted of 200 acres. Robert Symton was farmer there in 1797 and Adam Nichol in 1841 and 1851 (also sometimes ‘Tanlaw’; it is ‘Tandla’ in 1673, ‘Taandlaw’ in 1682, ‘Tanlida’ in 1702 and ‘Tanlaw or Tandlaw’ in 1813; not to be confused with ‘Tanlaw Naze’ near Teviothead or ‘Tanlawhill’ etc. near Eskdalemuir).

Tandlaw Moss (tawnd-law-mos) n. marshy area and small loch to the west of Tandlaw farm. It is the source of the Boonraw Burn (also sometimes ‘Tanlaw Moss’).

Tanlaw Naze (tan-law-naz) n. hill between Falnash and Caerlenrig, reaching a height of 310 m, called ‘Tanlawnesse’ in earlier documents. Along with the lands of Falnash and ‘Cawsya’ it was confirmed by James IV in a 1511 charter to Simon Dalgleish, with the consent of his son Kentigern Dalgleish. Along with Falnash and ‘Cawsya’ it was inherited by Archibald Elliot of Falnash from his great-great-grandfather Archibald in 1647. It was inherited by Walter Scott of Langshaw from his father Francis in 1690 (the name probably derives from Scots ‘tandle’, meaning a bonfire, and Middle English ‘nese’ for a projecting nose of land; it is ‘Tandilnes’ in 1511 and 1647, ‘Tandlaneis’ in 1675 and transcribed ‘Tabdanerse’ in 1690).

Tannage Close (taw-neej-klös) n. passageway off the middle of the west side of the High Street, between Nos. 61 and 63. It was named after the tanning pits at the bottom of the close, with the business carried out by John & Walter Wilson from 1800. In the early 1800s it was called Ewen’s Court, then was known as Moncrieff’s Close until Tannage Close was adopted about 1857 (although the 1858 Ordnance Survey map shows the bottom part called Tannage Close, with the upper part labelled Moncrieff’s Close). The Moncrieff family used to live on the east side of the close. The name ‘Guthrie’s Close’ has also been used (from the plumber and slater’s business on the west side). It was once an area of over-crowded housing, with re-development happening between the two world wars.

tanner (taw-nur) n., arch. a sixpenny coin, sixpence – ‘Ee got intae Stan Reid’s for a tanner …’ [AY]. ‘Thrippences, tanners, bobs, florins, The old halfcrown Come floatin’ doon’ [DH].

the Tanner’s Pool (thu-taw-nurz-pool) n. former name for a pool in the Teviot near the foot of Tannage Close, which was used for tanning. The base of the old Mercat Cross was once located here (and the iron ring in it used for securing skins), but removed when Teviot Road was built.

tannin (taw-nin) n. the act of converting hides into leather by soaking in an infusion of barks containing tannic acid. The tanning of leather into leather by soaking in an infusion of barks of this occupation.

Tantledie (tawnt-le-dee??) n. nickname for someone in the late 18th or early 19th centuries.

the Target Hills see the Targets

Target Pond (tawr-, tār-gi’-pōnd) n. small pond in the Target hills, behind the Braid Road and near Black Quarries, also known as Mosshills Loch.

the Targets (thu-tawr-gits, -tār-gits) n. hilly area above the Braid Road, named after the former Boozieburn Rifle Range on the northern slope. It is also known as ‘Target Hill’ or ‘Target Hills’, and was formerly ‘Moss Hill’. The area includes Target Pond and the disused Black Quarries, and was recently the site of a greyhound racing track – ‘The summer sun shines as I sit in the silence Looking doon on ma hame frae the Target Hill’s crest, Weel-kent are the streets and familiar the places Of this old mill town that I’ll aye like the best’ [IWL].

Tarras (taw-ris) n. lands lying between the Liddesdale and Eskdale. The farm was listed in the c.1376 rental roll of Liddesdale, in the section labelled ‘Foresta’, ‘The Laird’s Rowie’ (i.e. Roland) Armstrong was recorded dwelling at ‘Tarrassyde’ in 1583. The lands there passed to William Scott
Tarras Moss

Tarras Moss (taw-ris-mos) n. high area near the Border in a side valley between the Liddel and the Esk, notorious in riving days. The lands were recorded as early as the late 14th century. The area was also known as 'Black Tarras' – 'We stabled them sure on the Tarras muir We stabled them sure', quoht he: 'Before we could cross that quaking moss, They all were lost but me' [JL], 'A stark moss-trooping Scott was he, As e'er couch'd Border lane by knee: Through Solway sands, through Tarras moss, Blindfold, he knew the paths to cross' [SWS], 'And sae, as the cryin' gangs up i' the Border Bi Tarras and Hermitage, Ettrick and Yill ...' [DH] (it is 'Tarras' on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Tarras Shank (taw-ris-shawngk) n. hill ridge lying between the Twiselhope Burn and Tarras Sike, in the upper headwaters of the Hermitage valley (it is marked on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

The verrich taatih = the very thing. No the rael taatih, no the cleen (clean) taatih = not sincere, not genuine'[ECS]. It should be remembered that this plant has not always formed part of the staple of the local diet. Potatoes are first noted in Scotland in a household book of the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1701. There is a record that Dickson of Hasendenburn paid William Turnbull, a Denholm carrier, 1 shilling for a peck of potatoes in 1729; this may imply one of the earliest examples of potato cultivation in Scotland. They were still a relative rarity in the 1740s and there was apparently much opposition to eting them to begin with. In about 1760 William Scott of Woll was among the first to plant them far apart in drills. It did not become a staple of the local diet until the late 18th century (also spelled 'taatih', 'tattih', 'tatteh', 'tattie', 'tata', 'tatae', etc.).
tatti-bloom (ta-i-bllom) n., arch. the potato flower (noted by E.C. Smith).

taxt (takst) n., arch. a tax, levy – ‘...and to frie and eexeem us from any proportione of the taxt to be laid on by the royall burrows upon burghs ...’ [BR1699].

Taylor (ta-lur) n. Andrew (16th/17th C.) listed after Simon Armstrong of Calfield and his servant in a 1601 list of Armstrongs and others who were said by the English to be outlaws under the Laird of Buccleuch. He thus presumably lived in Liddesdale and was an associate of the Armstrongs. He could be the ‘Andro Taillour’ listed ‘in Schortburtholme’ among Liddesdale and Eskdale men declared as fugitives for not appearing in a court in Hawick in 1605. Archibald ‘Aircie’ (17th C.) recorded in 1632 as possessor of the lands of ‘Zairdhous’ in Liddesdale. Since this is listed by other farms near Newcastleton, it could be that Yethouse is meant. Charles (19th C.) teacher, who was one of the three people who met in 1877 to plan the Hawick Golf Club. He was also part of the first committee and later Club Captain. He was conductor of the Hawick Choral Union in at least the 1870s. David (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1706 he witnessed a baptism for a child of Thomas Barrie. His children included Helen (b.1704) and David (b.1707). The baptism in 1704 was witnessed by weavers John Taylor (surely related) and David Miller. In 1711 he was a weaver at Roughheugh when his son Walter was baptised in Wilton Parish. He is probably the David who witnessed baptisms in 1724 for John Scott from Brierhill and John Miller from Roughheugh. David (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was living at Todshawhill in 1756 and 1762. His children included John (b.1754), William (b.1756), Isobel (b.1759) and Walter (b.1762). Agnes (b.1748 and Thomas (b.1749), baptised in Minto, may also have been his children. David (19th/20th C.) joiner at Damfoot, Newmill. He was responsible for the original wooden Lawson Bridge, as well as the ‘Joogly Brig’. Douglas (1823–87) son of John. He was an apprentice joiner with James Rutherford at Bonchester, and his first job was to remove the thatch from the 3 ‘Sclenty houses’ in 1839. He was then a joiner on the Weens estate at Bonchester Bridge. He was the first in the area to erect wire fences, and developed a business supplying these. Henry Anderson worked for him in the late 1870s. In 1882 his joiner’s business was taken over by Walter Turnbull. In 1846 he married Elizabeth (‘Betsy’), daughter of John Thorburn, farmer at Stonedge. They had several children, including Walter. He died at Wilton Hill in Hawick and was buried at Hobkirk. Edmond (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as ‘ewmund talzor’. James Scott in Ashkirk had remission for accompanying him to steal cattle from the farm of Cauldshielis. Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (17th/18th C.) recorded receiving money from Ashkirk Parish in 1727. George (16th C.) listed in 1579 among people who owed money to Isabel Donald, widow of Robert of Palace. He was probably from the Ashkirk area. George (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish who married Margaret Hislop. Their son George was baptised in 1690, with witnesses Robert Taylor and William Hislop (who were surely related to the couple). James (15th C.) had a sasine for a merk land in ‘Betheruill’ (i.e. Bedrule) in 1473. It is unclear how long he held lands in Rulewater. James (18th C.) Hawick resident. He married Betty Turnbull and their children included: Margaret (b.1761); Margaret (again, b.1763); and Peter (b.1766). The 1766 witnesses were weaver Robert Turnbull and John ‘Kerswell’. James (18th/19th C.) fined in Cavers Parish in 1792 for an ‘irregular marriage’. James (b.1821/2) from Jedburgh, he was a spinner in Hawick. In 1842 he married Elizabeth Best, who was from Bedrule. Their children included: Margaret (b.1842); John (b.1845/6); Catherine (b.1848/9); Agnes A.J. (b.1854/5); and Elizabeth Jane Boston (b.1856). They were living at about 62 High Street in 1851. In 1861 his widow had remarried to grocer William Brown and the family were living on the Mid Raw. Janet (b.1780/1) born in Hawick Parish, she was recorded as ‘Independent’ at Highend in Hobkirk Parish in 1841. She was listed there as farmer’s widow in 1851 and 1861 and was still recorded there in 1868. She had a daughter Margaret. John (16th C.) tenant in Alemoor. He is recorded in 1573 when he was to be entered at Edinburgh Tolbooth by David ‘of Ailmure’. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their daughter Elizabeth was baptised in 1690. The witnesses were John Brown and William Allan. John (17th C.) recorded on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls at Borthaugh. John (17th C.) cottar at Newton in Hassendean Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1704 he witnessed a baptism for David, who was probably his son or brother. John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1725 and 1726 he was at Roberton Burnfoot and in 1729, 1733 and 1736 he was at Mains. His children included: David (b.1725); Bessie (b.1726); Helen (b.1729); Walter (b.1731); Bessie (again, b.1733); James (b.1736); Helen (again, b.1741); and Marion (b.1746). John (18th C.) farmer at Langraw in Rulewater. In 1771 he married Betty Amos and had a son, also John, later that year. John (b.1770s) tenant farmer at Uthank, brother of Walter. He may be the John who was recorded as tenant at Blackcleughmound in 1797. He married Elizabeth Renwick of Forkins. In 1800 they had a daughter called Betty (who married Douglas Lillico), followed by a son, John. They then moved to Swanshiel, where they had sons.
Robert (farm steward at Wauchope, before emigrating to America) and Walter (who married Margaret Gow). In later life he moved to Blacklee farm with his eldest son John (where they were in 1841). A few years after his death the farmhouse at Blacklee was allowed to fall to ruin. Joshua Joseph Henry (1831–1910) composer of music for ‘The Banner Blue’. Born in the Huddersfield area, he came to Hawick in 1884 to work as a worsted designer with the tweed manufacturers Blenkhorn & Richardson’s, and later became their mill manager. Musically talented, before coming to Hawick he wrote several short choral anthems, including ‘Blow Ye the Trumpets in Zion’, ‘Come, Ye Children’ and ‘Rend Your Hearts’, as well as a full Church of England Service. While in Hawick he wrote a new ‘Te Deum’, performed in Wilton Church in 1891, as well as his last anthem ‘If, With All Your Hearts’. He was honorary organist at Wilton for about a year, after it installed a pipe organ in 1886. He was said to be ‘a modest, retiring man’. He died at 2 Wilton Hill and was buried in Wilton Cemetery. Neil (b.1812/3) from Dunoon in Argyll, he was schoolmaster at Chesters, Southdean Parish around the 1840s to 1860s. He is listed as master of Southdean Parish School in Slater’s 1852 directory. He married Mary Shiel, who was sister of William Shiel, and they had a son Malcom T.S. He is recorded in 1866 as Registrar, Session Clerk and Inspector of Poor and still Inspector of Poor for the Parish in 1868. He also acted as postmaster for Chesters. He was a Fellow of the Educational Institute of Scotland. Patrick (15th C.) recorded among many men from Liddesdale who did not appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. Peter (b.1766) son of James and Betty Turnbull. He was a mason in Hawick. He lived at 19 Howegate in 1841 and 1851. He was probably the Peter who was one of the founders of the Independent Kirk in about 1798. Ronald (20th C.) published ‘Teviot Reaches’ in 1951, containing sketches and etchings around the Teviot. Robert (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as being once in Longnewton, then in Sansystanes. His surety was Archibald Heriot, Captain of Ancrum. He was convicted for intercommuning with Adam and Thomas Turnbull, who had been declared rebels for the slaughter of Patrick Hepburn. Robert (17th C.) recorded in 1676 among a group of Hawick people found guilty of using faulty measures; along with John Scott of Wyndheid, he was specifically found to have a half-peck that was ‘ane half-fourpitt short’. He was presumably a merchant or shopkeeper of some sort. Robert (17th C.) recorded in Ashkirk in 1691 when he witnessed a baptism for William Scott and Isobel Renwick. Robert (17th/18th C.) married Janet Oliver in Hawick Parish in 1702. They were both from Hawick Parish. Their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1706. Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Isobel Brown and their children included Janet (b.1722). In 1723 he witnessed a baptism for John Easton in Galalaw. Robert (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He may be the Robert, son of John, born in 1703 in Hawick. In 1742 he was ‘Tobacconist’ when he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for merchant James Douglas; this may be one of the earliest recorded instances of this word being used as an occupation. He was involved in a court case in 1748, in which he had taken £29 from his aunt Jean Taylor, getting Robert Tudhope to pretend to have borrowed it, but in fact he used it to pay a bill to merchant Thomas Turnbull; there he was stated to be a ‘writer’ (but that may be in error); he was stated to be a tobacconist in the related court case brought by Turnbull against Tudhope. He is stated to be a merchant when he witnessed a baptism for Walter Turnbull (from Hawick Shiel) in 1745. He married Margaret Douglas (proclaimed in Cavers and Wilton Parishes) in 1730, and their children included: Thomas (b.1739); Robert (b.1742); and Margaret (b.1745). The witnesses in 1742 were merchant James Douglas (surely related to his wife) and gardener Robert Turnbull, and in 1745 were Walter Turnbull from Hawick Shiel (whose own baptism he had witnessed on the same day) and William Scoon, servant to Rev. Somerville. Robert (b.1847) emigrated from Hawick to Pennsylvania at age 18. He sheered sheep for a living in California, then moved to Wyoming and ended up with a 75,000 acre farm near Grand Island, Nebraska. Ronald ‘Ron’ (??– ) headmaster at Burnfoot Primary School who wrote the booklet ‘Hawick Common Riding’, with the help of the Callants’ Club in 1983. He was unfortunately to later become Headmaster at Dunblane Primary School and witness the terrible aftermath of the shootings in 1996. He returned to Hawick as Common Riding Chief Guest in 1997. Thomas (16th C.) witness in 1531 to a sasine for the lands of Harwood and Hawthornside being inherited by Hector Lorraine. He was probably local, like the other witnesses. Thomas (b.1829/30) born in Holywood, Dumfriesshire, he was a surgeon in Taylorcleuchhead

Newcastleleon. In 1861 he was living on Douglas Square. His wife was Mary Ann and their children included John T.E., James Joseph and Mary. Walter (17th C.) recorded as ‘Walterus Talzour Baron de Hassindene’ in 1493. He is otherwise unknown as Baron there, so perhaps the translation should be ‘of the Barony’. He was allowed to ‘compone’ for ‘communing with the English’, the Laird of Buccleuch serving as his surety. It is unclear how he might have been related to any other Taylors. Walter Noble (17th C.) tenant at Effedge who was among those declared as fugitives in 1684 for being a Covenantter. Walter (17th C.) resident in Ashkirk Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. Walter (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Orchard in 1733 when he married Bessie Blyth. Walter (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish who married Janet Nichols in 1758. He was at Whihope in 1761. His children included: John (b.1758); and Margaret (1761). Walter (b.1809) born at Swanshiel, he was a younger son of John, who had farmed at Unthank. He worked on the farm at Howahill, becoming tenant there. In 1849 he was listed on the original congregation of Wolfelee Free Kirk. He was still there in the 1860s, being listed as a widower in 1861. In 1834 he married Margaret Gow (whose mother was Margaret Barry). She was said to be a very beautiful woman, who died in childbirth in 1848. Their children were: John, who worked on the farm at Howahill; Isabella; George, who emigrated to New Zealand; Thomas, who lived at Howahill and died there from blood-poisoning, caused by an axe cut; William, who went to Australia, but returned to Howahill; Margaret; and Walter. Walter (18th/19th C.) brother of John. He farmed at Highend in Rulewater. His children were John (b.1805), Agnes (b.1806) and Betty (b.1809). Walter (19th/20th C.) son of William, with his mother being a daughter of Dr. Pringle. William (16th C.) recorded in Hassendeanburn in 1580, when he acted as cautioner for Robert Scott of Alton when he borrowed money from the servant of Margaret Douglas, Countess of Bothwell. William (17th C.) tenant in Groundstone. He was mentioned in a session record in Ashkirk in 1635. William (17th C.) carter in Hawick, on the 1693/4 subscribers’ list for the new Kirk bell. He was listed as ‘Wm Tyler’ on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. It is possible he is the William, son of James and Bessie Scott, born in Hawick in 1644. He could be the William, married to Isobel Scott, whose children baptised in Hawick were Bessie (b.1674), Elspeth (b.1677), Helen (b.1680), Marion (b.1682), Janet (b.1685) and Isobel (b.1687); the 1680 baptism was witnessed by Walter Purdom and William Haswell, the 1682 baptism by Walter Purdom and Andrew Hart and the 1685 baptism by Walter Paisley and James Gray. He is probably the William who witnessed a baptism for James Gray in 1684. William (18th C.) resident of Roberton and Wilton Parishes. He was at Todshawhill in 1781. He married Betty Laidlaw in Roberton in 1778 and their children included: James (b.1781); Janet (b.1778); and Betty (b.1792). He is probably the son of David (who lived at Todshawhill) baptised in Roberton in 1756. William (b.c.1780) from England, he was a farmer at Newstead in Wilton Parish. He is recorded there in 1841. His wife was Margaret and they had a daughter Anne. He could be the William recorded as a labourer at Appletreehall in 1840 and 1841. William (b.1821) son of Walter (although which one is unclear), he was born in Hobkirk Parish. He was a farm labourer living at Howahill Cottage (while Walter was farmer at Howahill itself). He married Mary Crozier in 1847. Their children included: Margaret; Janet; and Walter. In 1849 he was among the original congregation of Wolfelee Free Kirk and was a trustee. William (b.1840s) son of Walter and Margaret Gow. He went to Australia in his early life, but returned to the family farm at Howahill. He was a County Councillor for Hobkirk Parish. In 1886 he married a daughter of Dr. Pringle in Dundee and they had 5 children. William (1847/8–1916) from the Newhouses family, he was farmer at Ashybank. He was also a cattle dealer in Hawick and owned 10 Teviot Crescent. He married Barbara, daughter of blacksmith James Murray, and she died in 1911, aged 62. Their children included: George B. (d.1917), killed at Mahiwa, British East Africa; Christian R. (d.1926); William (d.1954); James (d.1955); Isabella Murray (d.1955); Eliza Litster (d.1958); Robert (d.1959) The family are buried in Denholm. Rev. William minister of St. Mary’s, Cavers and Kirkton 1998–2004 (formerly ‘Talzour’, ‘Talzour’, ‘Talzor’, ‘Tylear’, ‘Tyler’ and variants).

Taylorcleuchhead (tay-lur-klooch-head) n.
Taylorcleuchhead, former farm in Liddesdale, situated around the stream marked Taylor’s Cleuch on modern maps. It was surveyed in 1718 along with other properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch. It consisted of 217 acres, bounded by Riccarton, Cleuchhead, lands held by the Laird of Dinlabyre.
Taylor’s Cleuch

and Roughley. The farmhouse was shown on the west side of a stream, possibly Todshaw Sike, and this could be the place where post-medieval remains were discovered in 1977 (see also Taylor’s Cleuch).

Taylor’s Cleuch (tā-lurz-klootch) n. stream that runs roughly eastward to join the Liddel Water south of Larriston. There are remains of an enclosure between here and the old railway line. It was partly excavated in 1977 before being surrounded by forest. It appears to be prehistoric with later occupation. There are also some mediaval and post-mediaval remains a little to the east by Todshaw Sike. It may have been called ‘Tailorcleuchside’ or Tayotcleuchheid.

Tayot (tā-yō’; -yot) n. occasional spelling meant to denote the former pronunciation of ‘Teviot’.

TD9 (tee-dee-nīn) n. postcode district for Hawick. ‘TD’ is the area designation for Teviotdale, with ‘TD9’ being the district including Hawick, which is divided into sectors 0, 7, 8 and 9. The postcode system was introduced in 1966.

teesh (teesh) interj., adj. great, terrific – ‘A hink the Bay City Rollers ur teesh, mei’, ‘...A’ve fund ma niche and life is teesh A’n glad that a’ve come hame’ [IW], (seems to have been around in Hawick at least since WWII; originally restricted mainly to use by children, it was re-popularised by the band Scocha in the 1990s; it is unclear how widespread it has been beyond Hawick; one theory of its origin is that it was a deliberate joke on being ‘sheet’ backwards).

Tefe (te-fee) n. form of ‘Teviot’ recorded around the year 800.

teh (te) prep. to – ‘wull ee come teh ma bit the day?’ , ‘Sae Aw’ll promise teh join the Total ...’ [RM], ‘...though when lengthened as in the remark : Whae ti?’ (i.e. To whom?) the vowels sound inclines slightly towards that of e in ten’ [ECS] (this pronunciation is preferred in some phrases, cf. ti).

teh’d (ted) contr. to it – ‘ee could gaun right up teh’d’, ‘...bit ee can pit a variety o things teh’d an aa like’ [DaS] (variant of ti’d; note long e sound).

teh-teh (te-te) interj. ta-ta, used as a parting greeting – ‘teh-teh the now then’.

tei (ti) n. tea, a hot beverage made using crushed leaves from the far corners of the Empire – ‘go’an make is a cup o tei wull ee?’, ‘coffee’s no ma cup o tei’, ‘Ee got pies and tei at the muckle tent’ [JHH], ‘Ee’d better watch eer-sul, lass, Here’s the night?’, ‘...ee’re in an awfu’ hurry. At least no until it was time ti gaun hame for yer tei’ [We], ‘I’ll tak’ my aith, ye’ve hed nae tei, So’s ye could fill your wames wi’ mei ...’ [DH]. Tea did not start being drunk locally until about the 1760s, and was quite expensive for some time. In 1768 someone in Hawick was convicted for selling thorn leaves in place of tea leaves and was ‘pinioned’ as punishment (sometimes spelled ‘tey’).

tei leafs (ti-leeoks) n., pl. tea leaves.

teind (tiind) n., arch. Scottish equivalent of the English tithe, a tenth part of one’s income or produce from land, or a tenth of the value of the livestock born on a farm. This originally went to support the Church, but after the Reformation typically went to the local landowner. Such payments were split into ‘vicarage teinds’, which were minor tithes, often paid in kind – ‘The Earle Bukeleugh is patrone, who payis to ye minister 800 merks yeirlie, and leidis ye teynl’ [PR1627] (and originally to the vicar rather than parson) and ‘parsonage teinds’ which were the more major tithes.

teind barn (tiind-bawrn) n., arch. a barn used for storing the grain that was collected as a ‘teind’, called a ‘tithe-barn’ in England. The ruins of the old example in Spittal-on-Rule can still be seen.

the Teind Barn (thu-tiind-bawrn) n. ruined building in Spittal-on-Rule. It was still thatched until the early 1900s, and was said by Tancred to be the oldest building in the parish.

the Teind Court (thu-tiind-kör) n. court set up after the Reformation, to deal with the value and sale of teinds, and the adequate provision for local ministers. It was a court within the Court of Session, set up to decide on matters of valuation of teinds, stipends for ministers, etc. After 1707 its powers passed to the Court of Session.

teinder an thirdier (tiind-au-thir-dur) n., arch. a person who occupies arable land at a rent equal to 1/10th of the produce (1 tenth and another 3 tenths) – ‘...the damage done to the corn at Whitlaw was comprised, and that Patrick Scott and John Gladstains paid the damage to the teinder and the thirdier out of their own pocket ...’[C&L].

Teindside (tiind-, teendid-siid) n. farm on the A7 south of Newmill, as well as the name for the general area, also referred to as ‘Teinside’. The lands were owned by a branch of the Abernethy family from at least the late 14th century, passing from Sir William to his older brother James in 1393; they were at that time described as lying in the Barony of Hawick, with Archibald, Earl of Douglas as superior. The Abernethys sold the lands to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell in 1494. In 1446/7 Oswald Abernethy appeared before William, Earl of Douglas at Newark and publicly asserted that his only superior of these lands was the Baron of Hawick. The lands were recorded belonging to Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1502. In 1511 the lands were listed among those held ‘in tenandry’ by the Baron of Hawick. However, in 1572 they Teindside Brig (teind-süd-brig) n. bridge across the Teviot just after Teindside. It was built as part of the development of the toll road, which became the A7, perhaps around 1762. At the same time as it was built the road was improved from the bridge to Teindside farm, past the Horse Pool. A new bridge was built around the 1930s. A farm adjacent to the bridge was formerly known by the same name and also called ‘Teindsidebrae’. Walter Hogg was living there in 1779-84 and William Gledstains in 1784. Alexander Miller was tenant there in 1797, when it is ‘Teindside Bridge’. Hugh Johnstone and John Cairns and families lived there in 1841 and 1851 (it is ‘Teenside bridgebridgend’ in 1781 and ‘Tiendside-brigend’ in 1783).

Teindside Burn (tünd-süß-burn) n. stream that joins the Teviot (from roughly the north-west) near Teindside. It forms part of the probable boundary line of the Catrail. The lands there are listed along with Teinside among the lands inherited by the Baron of Hawick in 1615. The lands there were purchased by the Scotts of Buccleuch about 1660. As it runs down from Slaidhills there is a waterfall in a ravine. A little further down there was once a cottage, marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map. Walter Hogg was farmer there in 1797 (it is ‘Tynessydburne’ in 1615, ‘Teyndsideburne’ in the mid-17th century, ‘Teindsideburn’ about 1755 and ‘Teindsideburn’ in 1797; ‘Teindburnfoot’ is marked on Stobie’s map of 1770).

Teindside Hill (tünd-süß-hil) n. hill lying on the north side of the upper Teviot valley, north of Teindside Lodge. Its contains the remains of 2 hill-forts, almost obliterated by cultivation. The one near the summit probably measured about 120 m by 65 m, while the one to the south sits on a rocky knoll, measuring about 60 m by 20 m, with a deep ditch on the north side. There were local excavations there by Mr. Govenlock in 1873, finding a ‘hut eight feet square’. There is a further fort just to the north-west near Slaidhill. Additionally, there is a modern cairn, called ‘Bert’s Cairn’, with an inscribed stone.

Teindside Ludge (tünd-süß-luj, -loj) n. house in Teviothead, also known as Commonside Cottage, situated on the side road to Commonside. It was once a farmhouse on the Buccleuch estate. Recently and part of the house has been let out for holiday accommodation. Just inside the entrance gate is a turf-covered cairn about 15 m in diameter.

Teindside slopes (tünd-süß-slöp) n. former farmstead near Teindside. In the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls John Irvine is recorded as farmer there, with 3 working horses. David Cairns and Robert Walker lived there in 1841 and Constable Michael Oliver in 1851 (also written as ‘Teindside Slope’; it is ‘Teindsideslop’ in 1797).

Teind yaird (tünd-yärđ-) n., arch. a yard used to store the produce collected as tithes – ‘Item, to James Scott, servant, for keipin of the teynd yaird of Hawik, biggin the dykes therof, and heidin the stakes of the samyn the said year, eighteine pundes’ [SB1633].

Andrew

Andrew (1734–1804) from Southdean Parish. In 1761 he married Christian Lillico (1736–1815) in Hobkirk Parish. His children, baptised in Southdean Parish, in-included: George (b.1762); James (b.1765); Marion (b.1767); William (b.1769); Elizabeth (b.1771); Isabel (b.1773); and John (b.1781), father of James ‘the poetic schoolmaster’ of Saughtree.

Andrew (b.1784/5) from Crailing Parish, he was farmer at Roundabouts in Chesters in 1851. His wife was Euphemia and their children included Jessie and William (who took over running the farm). His widow was recorded at Roundabouts around the year 600.

Telfer (tel-fur, tal-fur) n. Andrew (1734–1804) from Southdean Parish. In 1761 he married Christian Lillico (1736–1815) in Hobkirk Parish. His children, baptised in Southdean Parish, in-cluded: George (b.1762); James (b.1765); Marion (b.1767); William (b.1769); Elizabeth (b.1771); Isabel (b.1773); and John (b.1781), father of James ‘the poetic schoolmaster’ of Saughtree.

Andrew (b.1784/5) from Crailing Parish, he was farmer at Roundabouts in Chesters in 1851. His wife was Euphemia and their children included Jessie and William (who took over running the farm). His widow was recorded at Roundabouts in 1861. Andrew (b.1808/9) from Hownam he was a shepherd at Jedhead in Southdean Parish. His wife was Mina and their children included John, Helen and Anne. Rev. Charles (1693–1731) minister of Hawick Parish 1723–31. He was the son of an Edinburgh Magistrate, also Charles, who was Captain of the Trained Band. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1712, was li-icensed by Edinburgh Presbytery in 1719 (after reluctantly signing the Confession of Faith) and came to Hawick in 1721 as an assistant to Robert Cunningham. He helped lead sermons in Hawick while the minister was in ill-health. He was presented as the new Minister by Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch at the end of 1722 and ordained early the following year (after the Hawick elders petitioned the Presbytery ‘for putting a quick end of Mr Talefer’s tryals’). He is said to have bor-rowed heavily from Shaftsbury’s ‘Characteristics’ and other essayists for his sermons, and to have had an ascetic temper and a high opinion of him-self. He witnessed baptisms in 1723 for surgeon Walter Scott in 1724 for workman Robert ‘Huis-son’ and in 1725 for merchant Thomas Thom-son, for William Cathrae in Closses and for merchant Andrew Turnbull (it was unusual for the serving minister to be a witness). In 1724 he complained about drunkenness at the Common Riding and in 1725 he proposed that 2 members of the Kirk Session should inspect ‘the families on this town who give ale or brandie, either at the outgoing or incoming of the horsemen and footmen’. But, surprisingly, he reported afterwards that ‘he was well pleased with the deportment and behaviour of those who were at the riding of the Common’. He is recorded preaching before the Lord High Commissioner in 1730 and was called before the Committee on Overtures the next day ‘for certain comparisons which he had used’, but the objections were dropped without censure. He married Katherine Elliot of Arkleton (widow of David Laing of Westerkirk) in 1727 in Hawick, and she lived until at least 1746. They hd a daughter Christian Ann baptised in 1730, with witnesses Rev. Craw-ford (of Wilton) and ‘Mr Cunninghame’ (prob-ably Patrick). Christian Lillico (1835–1909) daughter of James, Schoolmaster at Saughtree. She ran a small school near Sandholm, at the junction of the Liddel and Hermitage Waters, also known as the ‘Brig End Schuil’. She was teacher there in at least the 1860s. Confusingly, she was known as ‘Catherine’, as well as ‘Christina’. She died in Newcastle-ton. Christina (b.1796/7) toll-house keeper at the Townhead Toll in Newcastle-ton. She was a widow in 1861, with daughter Elspeth and grand-daughter Christina. David (b.1824/5) son of John, he was farmer at Braid-haugh in Hobkirk Parish in the 1860s. In 1861 he was farmer of 500 acres there, employing 4 labourers. David (1945/6–2010) from Hawick, he joined Aberdeen Journals in 1973, becom-ing motoring correspondent, business correspon-dent, industrial correspondent and business ed-itor. He was then editor of North of Scotland Publications, before returning to the position of business reporter. He married Moira and had children Ross, Robbie, Colin and Lesley. Elizabeth ‘Betsy’ (b.1828/9) born in Hawick Parish, she was daughter of Jane, who was teacher at the girls’ school set up in Cavers in the mid-19th century. By 1861 she was the main teacher at Cavers Cottages, with Margaret Grierson as assistant teacher. George (16th C.) recorded in Dodhead in 1579 when he made an agreement with John Lauder in Singlie to exchange their lands at the end of a year. He promised, along with Adam Scott of Bonnington, to pay Lauder for tack of a quarter of the ‘rowme’. There is surely a connection with the ballad ‘Jamie Telfer o the Fair Dodhead’. George (17th C.) tenant near Adderstoneshiel listed in 1684 among those declared as fugitives for being a Covenanter. He could be the George ‘Telfoord’ listed as shepherd at Addeerstoneshiel among the ‘deficient’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. George (18th C.) herd at Nether Southfield. He married Mary Thomson and their daughter Euphan was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1740. George (18th C.) merchant in Hawick who subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ in 1784. He is probably the George who witnessed a baptism for merchant James Ekron in 1758. George (18th/19th C.) master of the English School in Hawick until 1822. James (16th C.) tenant in Hounty and servant to the Laird of Buccleuch in 1579. There was a complaint that the neighbouring tenant in Hutlerburn had taken his horse, claiming that it had crossed the march dyke and was pasturing on Hutlerburn. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish, son of William in North Synton. He married Bessie ‘Hutson’ and their son William was baptised in 1698. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Wiltonburn in 1705. In 1724 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Veitch in Galalaw. His children included Agnes (b.1704) and Margaret (b.1705). The witnesses in 1705 were Adam and William Scott. He could be the James who married Bessie ‘Hutson’ in Ashkirk in 1696. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Thomson and their children included: Jean (b.1716); and Isobel (b.1722). Perhaps the same James had a son William baptised in 1718 (with his wife’s name recorded as ‘Jean’). James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Lymiecleuch in 1716 when he married Jane Stewart and at Deanhead in 1722. His children included: Jenet (b.1719); and Thomas (b.1722). James (18th C.) recorded in Chapelhill in 1726 when his daughter Christian was baptised in Robertson Parish. He may be the James who married Isobel Bell in Robertson in 1718. James (18th C.) recorded being in Southdean Parish in 1747 when his marriage to Anne Maxwell was announced in Melrose Parish, with John Young as cautioner. James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1761 he married Isabel Howison from Hawick Parish. James (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Dinhalyre. He was taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. James (d.1824) dyker whose death is recorded in Hawick Parish. James (18th/19th C.) baker on the High Street, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. James (b.1797/8) from Langholm, he was an inn-keeper in Newcastleton. In the 1850s he was proprietor of the Buccleuch Arms on North Hermitage Street. His wife was Janet and they had a daughter Mary. In 1851 his name was given as ‘Telford’. James (1800–62) son of shepherd John and Isabella Taylor, with his step-mother being Anne Davidson. He was born in Southdean Parish, although the census records of 1851 and 1861 state he was born in Oxnam Parish. He had 2 aunts who lived in a cottage near Battlingburn in Southdean Parish, and a story is told of one of them seeing a ‘spunkie’ (i.e. ‘will-o’-the-wisp’) the night the other one died. He was a great admirer of the James Hogg, the ‘Ettrick Shepherd’, who he got to know in his youth and who inspired and encouraged him to write poetry. He was self-taught, becoming schoolmaster in Castleton in 1827 and was at Saughtree from 1834 until he died. He was listed at Saughtree among heads of households in 1835–41. He was recorded as master of the auxiliary parochial school at Saughtree in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. He was referred to as ‘the poetic schoolmaster’ of Saughtree in Liddesdale, since he wrote several ballads, including the long ‘The Gloamyne Buchte’ about an encounter between a shepherdess and a fairy. A version of the ballad ‘The Death of Parcy Reed’ was transcribed by him from an old woman called Kitty Hall (who lived at Fairloms near the head of the Kale). He published poems in the Newcastle Magazine, among other places. His first book was ‘Border Ballads and other Miscellaneous Poems’ (1824, republished in 1852), which was dedicated to the Ettrick Shepherd; although it contains language that is rather pastoral (i.e. flowery), nevertheless it contains many dialect words that were probably common at the time and would otherwise be unrecorded. ‘The Gloamyne Buchte’ was published on its own in 1843 and was additionally contained within Vol. II of ‘Local Historian’s Tablebook’ in 1844. He also contributed.

to Wilson’s ‘Tales of the Borders’. Additionally, he wrote a novel ‘Barbara Gray, or the Widow’s Daughter: A Narrative of Humble Life’ (1835). It is said that he never earned more than £20 per year, and so must have struggled to raise a family. His house was a simple ‘but and ben’, with the ‘but’ being where his family stayed, and the ‘ben’ being the schoolroom. It was described how he would sometimes tell his class ‘in a quiet, conversational way, and in the pure Border doric, of what he had been reading’, including treating them to ‘a captivating lecture on the tales and traditions of our Borderland’. He is probably the ‘schoolmaster, likewise a poet’ mentioned being antagonistic to John Halliday publishing his own verses in 1847. He married Janet Beattie (1802–89); she is recorded living at Saughtree in 1841 along with their children Margaret, Christian and Janet (he himself being absent). In 1851 the family were at Saughtree Schoolhouse (with Margaret having moved away by then). In 1861 his daughter Christian was living with them and described as a teacher; she ran a small school near Sandholm, at the junction of the Liddel and Hermitage Waters. They also had a train driver lodging with them in 1861. His children included: Margaret (b.1833); Catherine Lillico (1835–1911), who died in Liverpool. One of his daughters had a son, Telfer John Telfer, who died in 1889, aged 25. His wife Janet died at Bankend. The family are buried in Old Castleton Cemetery. James (b.1821/2) shepherd at Wormscleuch in Castleton Parish. His wife was Christian and their children included Andrew, Margaret, John, James, Mary and Thomas. James ‘Jim’ (1941– ) born between Gala and Melrose, he played rugby for Melrose and gained 25 caps for Scotland. He became Scottish Coach, leading the team to the 1984 Grand Slam. He trained as a teacher, eventually becoming Rector of the High School 1984–93. During some of this time the school was nicknamed ‘the Rugby Academy’. He left to become the Scottish Rugby Union’s Director of Rugby. Jane nee Bumyan (b.1805) daughter of Thomas, she was born in Cavers Parish, where she married James in 1827. By 1841 she was a widow, working as a dressmaker at West Middle. By 1851 she was teacher at a school for girls in Cavers. Her daughter Elizabeth (‘Betsy’) and Jemima assisted at the school, with another relative Catherine Rutherford also being an assistant teacher. She was presumably dead by 1861, when Elizabeth was the main teacher at the school. John (17th C.) resident of Peelbrae listed among the ‘deficient’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He may be the John ‘Telfert’ who witnessed a baptism for Robert Cook in 1685. John (17th C.) recorded as a householder at Branxholme Park on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Perhaps the same John, ‘Coater’ at Branxholme, witnessed a baptism for Walter Cook (gardener at Branxholme) in 1740. John (18th C.) Beadle at Hawick Kirk in the 1740s. He is probably the John who witnessed baptisms for flesher Robert Wilson in 1730, for William Helm and for George Oliver in 1731 and for Robert Riddell in 1733. He is recorded as ‘Officer’ or ‘Kirk Officer’ when he witnessed further baptisms in 1737, 1738, 1741, 1742, 1743, 1745 and 1747. He may also be the John who witnessed other baptisms in 1738 and 1746. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, recorded at Merrylaw in 1755. He married Helen Learmonth and their son William was baptised in 1755. John (18th C.) shepherd at Braehead on Hermitage Water in about 1750. He married Agnes Main and was recorded at Braehead in 1777 when his daughter Mary was baptised in Castle- ton Parish. John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Howpasley in 1766 when his son George was baptised. He may be the John who married Janet Pringle in Roberton in 1765. His name is written ‘Telford’, although he is probably related to the earlier Telfers who were at Howpasley. John (18th C.) listed along with Thomas as owner of lands in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1788, valued at £10. These were among the lands formerly held by the feuers of Lilliesleaf. They were still recorded as owners in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Whitehaugh in Castleton Parish, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses. John (1781–60) shepherd from Southdean Parish, son of Andrew and Christian Lillico. He was shepherd at Carewoodrig in 1851, living there with his wife Ann, daughters Isabella and Mary, son-in-law John Scott and 2 grandchildren. He married Isabella Taylor and secondly married Anne Davidson (1784–1862). With his first wife he had James (1800–62), the ‘poetic schoolmaster’ of Saughtree. Later children (born in Hownam Parish) were: Andrew (1808–86); William (1810–82); Margaret (1812–71), who died at Flatt; Christian (b.1814); Thomas (1817–84); Isobel (b.1819); and John (1822–38), who died at Todlaw. He died at Dykeraw and the family are buried in Chesters Kirk- yard. John (b.1789/90) from Westerkirk Parish, he was farmer at Braehead in Hob Kirk Parish. In 1851 he was farmer there of 150 arable acres and 400 acres of pasture, employing 5 people. He was deceased by 1861, with his sons David and Walter taking over the farm. His wife was Isabella and their children included David, Walter, Betsy, Mina and Agnes. John (b.1834) son of William and Catherine Hume, he was born in Southdean Parish. In 1861 he was shepherd at Carewoodrig. He was living there with his wife Jane, daughter Janet, a domestic servant and 2 assistant shepherds. He was surely related to the earlier John who was at Carewoodrig. Mark (b.1826/7) from Nichol Forest in Cumberland, he was a carrier in Newcastle. In 1861 he was on Whitchester Street. His wife was Ann and he had a niece Betsy. Patrick (18th C.) tenant in Hassendean listed in 1684 among those declared as fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. Richard (19th C.) farmer at Gillbraehead in 1868. Robert (18th C.) blacksmith in Hawick. He witnessed baptisms in 1757 and 1760 for shoemaker John Oliver and in 1766 for wright Gideon Easton. He is probably the Robert who witnessed a baptism in 1778 for ex-Bailie Andrew Scott. He may be the Robert who was paid by the Council in 1755 for the use of his horse ‘to Kelso, pressed by Bailie Turnbull, with a shoulder [soldier] and his wife’. Robert (18th/19th C.) wright in Hawick. His unnamed child died in Hawick in 1797. He may be the same man as the blacksmith. Robert (b.1803/4) clogger living on North Hemitage Street in Newcastle. In 1851 and 1861. He was listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Elizabeth and they had a son, John. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Appletreehall in 1696. He married Margaret Scott and their children included William (b.1696); and Walter (b.1699). The witnesses in 1696 were Adam Scott and William Turnbull. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1708 he was a workman at Blackcleuch when his daughter Mary was baptised, with witnesses John Scott ‘Uncle John’ and Walter Elliot in Commonbrae. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Earlside in 1733. His children included William (b.1731) and Helen (b.1733). Thomas (18th C.) listed along with John as owner of lands in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1788, valued at £10. These were among the lands formerly held by the feuars of Lilliesleaf. They were still recorded as owners in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. Walter (17th C.) shepherd in Ormiston listed among the ‘deficient’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Tax Rolls. Thomas (1757–1834) engineer born at Glendinning on the Meggat Water, in Westerkirk Parish, not far from Langholm. He was famous for road, canal and bridge construction, including the Menai Suspension Bridge in Wales. He worked on the Langholm Bridge over the Esk as an apprentice stonemason, and gave a bequest to keep the Westerkirk Library going in Bentpark and another to establish a library in Langholm. He was one of the first to suggest a Borders railway line, specifically a horse-drawn railway running from Berwick to Glasgow. He also published a poem ‘Eskdale’, which was printed in Hawick in the ‘Poetical Museum’ in 1784. Locally he was sometimes known as ‘Laughing Tom’. He was buried in Westminster Abbey. William (b.1810/1) from Langholm, he was recorded as steward at Todshawhill in Roberton Parish in 1861. His wife was sometimes known as ‘Telling Tom’. He was a stone-cutter and a teacher, later becoming a banker. He was elected a member of the Canadian House of Commons for Grey North in 1904, but was defeated in 1908. His son, William Pattison, Junior, was also a Canadian Member of Parliament (formerly spelled ‘Talfford’, ‘Talffourd’, ‘Talliefeir’, ‘Tylfoord’, etc., and once probably the same as ‘Telfer’).

Telio’s (tee-lee-öz) n. cafe, chip shop, and ice-cream shop run by Telio Gonella (apparently he was named after the village the family came from) in the mid-20th century on Dickson Street. There was another shop for a while on Green Terrace, and Telio also ran the hut near the top of the Loan as a fish and chip shop.

teld (teld) pp. told – ‘In doomig Meggy down to h–l door, By vote o’ session; For that which I have oftentelle’d her Was nae transgression?’ [JR], ‘A was teltl that if A was for a richt denner A wad need ti trodge on ti Jethart’ [ECS], ‘...A Wasna boas, – if the truth be telll, A was riftin-fowei!’ [ECS], (also written ‘teld’; this is a less common variant of tell).
tell (tel) v. po.et. to count out money – ‘...Aye, and tell me the monie on my cloak lap; For there’s no ae fardin i’ll trust thee. Fala, &c.’ [CPM].

tellin (te-lin) n. a warning or scolding, usually in the phrase ‘to take a tellin’, meaning to heed an instruction – ‘wull ee no take a tellin laddie?’.

tell ower (tel-ow-ur) v. arch. to recount, narrate, tell again – ‘Jethart Castle! A body was tellin’ the story to aboon half-a-dozen folk in ma life’ [BCM1880], ‘I telt ye sae’, is aye his grim and deevilish choice’ [WL] (sometimes written ‘tell’t’ or ‘tell’it’; cf. the less common teld; it is always ‘told’ in standard English).

temp (temp) v., arch. to tempt.

Temperance Hall (tem-pu-rins-hal, temp-rins-haw) n. former meeting hall at 6 Croft Road, the site now occupied by the Salvation Army Citadel. It was constructed in 1879 and initially run by Miss Thomson, a daughter of the local minister. In about 1900 it was converted into a picture house, ‘The Theatre’.

Temperance Hotels (tem-pu-rins-hô-tel) n. alcohol-free hotels, which were popular in the latter 19th century, some lasting until WWII. In Hawick the Douglas Temperance Hotel was situated on the Tower Knowe, where the Office Bar is now, Gibson’s was on Bridge Street, Inglis’s on Teviotside Terrace, Pringle’s on Union Street, and the Washington Hotel at the ‘Coffin End’. The Bucleurch and Victoria Hotels were also temperance for a time, and there were others, such as Blaikie’s Temperance Hotel.

the Temperance Movement (thu-tem-pu-rins-moov-min) n. a social trend to recognise the evils of alcohol, which flourished towards the end of the 19th century, and died out between the Wars. The British Association for the Promotion of Temperance was formed in 1835 and, supported by some of the churches, it led to organised signing of teetotal declarations and the setting up of rigorously teetotal establishments. Locally the first such organisation was started in 1832, but still allowed the drinking of beers. The Hawick Total Abstinence Society was founded in 1838, with members pledging to avoid all intoxicating beverages. They lasted into the early 20th century, and had a popular annual soiree. There were also the Temperance Hotels (some lasting until WWII), the Temperance Burns Club, and even Temperance tents up the Muir. In 1920 a referendum to have alcohol banned in Hawick was opposed by a majority – ‘Ye’ve been the cause o’ muckle wae, O’ meikle scath and scorn; I’ll sign the pledge this very day! Fareweel, John Barleycorn!’ [JT].

Tempest (tem-pist) n. Sir John of Hertford (d.bef. 1379) son of Sir John of Bracewell, and younger brother of the next Sir John of Bracewell. His brother Peter married Mary Douglas of Liddesdale. He was English Sheriff of Roxburgh and Berwick, as well as Governor of the Castles of Berwick, Roxburgh and Scarborough in the period 1351–75. He married 3 times. Sir Thomas (c.1476–1543/4) son of Robert of Holmside, he served in many positions in the north of England. He was in joint charge, along with Sir William Bulmer, of the force that burned Jedburgh in 1523. This raid led to his knighthood. His children included: James (b.1733); and David (b.1737).

Perhaps the same Robert had children William (b.1724), Isabel (b.1726) and Janet (b.1728) baptised in Jedburgh and a son Robert (b.1731) baptised in Ancrum. Robert (1771/2–1827) surgeon in Newcastle upon Tyne. He subscribed to (to 2 copies of) William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He was also listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He married Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’) Elliot (1777/8–c.1858). She is recorded in 1841 as ‘Ind’ at about 2 South Hermitage Street; in 1851 she was listed as a grocer, maiden name Elliot, living with her widowed daughter Kitty Scott (nee Temple) and grand-daughter Helen Scott. His daughter Catherine (or ‘Kitty’) married Matthew Scott in 1836 and secondly married James Crosby in 1851. He was recorded as a surgeon at Nether Stone in Bewcastle Parish at the end of the 18th century, when he had children baptised there. His children included: Helen (b.1797), who married and moved to Canada; and Janet (b.1799), also known as ‘Jessie’, who married (probably a Robinson) in Newcastle upon Tyne. He was buried at Ettleton. Thomas (b.1805/6) born in Minto Parish, he was toll-keeper at Spittal. He was recorded at Spittal Bar in 1851 and in 1861 was a miller living at 10 Allars Crescent. Temple Croft (tem-pul-kroft) n. former name for a piece of land on Minto estate. It was among lands whose liferent was held by Rev. Robert Elliot from 1779. It was listed in 1779 and 1811, along with ‘Notman-shot’, with a joint value of £76 16s 8d (it was ‘Templecrofts’ in 1780).

Templehaa (tem-pul-haw, -hal) n. Templehall, farm east of Harwood, near Wauchope. David Crozier ‘at the Tempilhall’ is recorded among men of Liddesdale in 1494/5 and 1500, although whether this was the same place is uncertain. It was for a long time part of the Harwood estate. In 1538 and 1539 the lands were valued along with Wauchopebank at 40 shillings, and occupied by Patrick Turnbull. There is a 1567 charter of the lands, together with Brewlands, granted by James Sandilands (Lord Torphichen) to Andrew Turnbull (son of David of Wauchope). In 1605 there was an action by Jean and Beatrix, daughters of the deceased Walter Turnbull of Wauchope, to remove their mother Marion Lorraine and several Turnbulls from their lands of Templehall and Brewlands. They later passed to George Turnbull of Wauchope, then to Sir James Douglas of Mordington in 1627 and later to the Earl of Lothian. The Earl of Lothian paid tax on £300 for his lands there in about 1663. It was listed as a 4-pound land in 1678, when inherited by William Kerr of Abbotrule. At about that time it must have been valued at £229 15s 4d (based on Kerr of Abbotrules other lands). Adam Murray was tenant there in 1694. The farm then passed from William Kerr of Abbotrule to William Elliot of Wolvelee in 1751 and then immediately to Henry Elliot of Harwood. In 1794 and 1797 the tenants were John and Thomas Clerk. In 1788 the farm was listed among those owned by William Elliot of Harwood and valued at £229 15s 4d. In about 1811 it was still part of the Harwood estate and valued at £262 10s. John Elliot was there in the early part of the 19th century and James Smith was farmer there in the 1860s. It is also the name of a hill to the south-west, between the Lurgies Burn and the Wauchope Burn. Just north-west of the farm are the remains of a settlement, with the most visible feature being a 75-m long crescent-shaped ridge. On the slope to the south are the remains of an ancient cairn. There is also a place of the same name near Lilliesleaf that is suggested to have had connections with the Knight’s Templar, with a ‘Temple’ near St. Boswells perhaps having a similar origin (it is ‘Templhall’ in 1538, 1539 and 1604 and ‘Timpilhall’ in 1663; it is marked ‘Templ hall’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and has its modern spelling by Stobie’s 1770 map).

Templehaa Common (tem-pul-haw-ko-min) n. Templehall Common, the commonty associated with the neighbouring lands, with uncertain history. Its division was discussed at least as early as 1719, and in 1734 it was arranged by James, Lord Cranstoun, and William Kerr of Abbotrule. At that point it was possessed by the tenants of Wauchope and Templehall. It could be the same place marked ‘Tempel hall’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and has its modern spelling by Stobie’s 1770 map).

Templehaa Hill (tem-pul-haw-hil) n. Templehill Hill, hill in the southern part of Hobkirk Parish, south-west of Templehall and to the east of Lurgiescleuch. It reaches a height of 342 m. Near the summit is an old cairn about 10 m across and on the southern ridge there is another almost twice as big, now quite denuded and within the forest.

Templehaashiel (tem-pul-haw-sheel) n. Templehallshiel, former farmstead in Hobkirk Parish, on the western banks of the Wauchope Burn, near Templehall Hill. William Elliot was shepherd there in the mid-to-late 18th century, Alexander Lillico shortly before 1788 and John Elliot lived there in the 1810s (it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Templelands (tem-pul-lawndz) n. former lands in Liddesdale, listed as ‘Tempyllandys’ in the c.1376 rental roll. They were part of the lands owned by the church, but their precise location is uncertain (there is a place of the same name in Oxnam Parish).

the Temple o the Muses (thu-tem-pul-Ô-thu-mew-zeez) n. monument in the form of a classical Greek pavillion, erected in 1817 by David Erskine as a memorial to the poet James Thomson (of ‘The Seasons’ and ‘Rule Britannia” fame). It is situated on Bass Hill beside the Tweed, and near to Erskine’s house at Dryburgh. It contains a bust of Thomson, and the original statue of Apollo having long since disappeared a new statue by Siobhan O’Hehir replaced it.

tenand (te-nand) n., arch. a tenant – ‘...and to becum tenammad to me and thaim of the sammyn’ [SB1470].

tenandry (te-nandree) n., arch. land that is leased from a superior, the condition of being a tenant, tenancy – ‘...tenandry of lande if Harden-wod with the pertinentis lyande within the soyleze of Borthwicsheillis ...’[DoR1445], ‘...with tenentis, tenandrijs and service of frie tentennitis of the samyn, with the pertinentis, liand within the baronie of Branxhelme ...’[SB1569].

tenement (te-ne-min) n., arch. a piece of land in a town held under some form of tenure and often built upon – ‘...upon ane tenement of land of his in Hawick, lyand betwixt the land of James Brown on the north part ...’[JW1558], ‘...befor ane of the baillies of the burcht of Hawik and thair purellie and sempilie resigne the said tenement of land’ [PR1571].

Tennant (te-nin) n. Hugh (19th C.) married Mary Halliday in Hawick in 1840. Rev. Joseph (c.1575–c.1633) from Listonshiel, he was son of John of Cairns, Mid-Calder. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1595, was licensed in 1598 and ordained at Traquair in 1599. He was translated to Bedrule in 1601/2. He added responsibility for Abbotrule in 1605, when he is recorded being presented to the parsonage and vicarage on the death of Alexander Crichton. He appears to have been translated back to Bedrule again in 1608/9 and the reality appears to be that he held both benefices simultaneously for about 15 years. In 1616 he had a bond with Robert Turnbull in Bedrule. He witnessed a bond for Walter Turnbull of Bedrule in 1623 (also said by Tancred to have been witnessed by Thomas Tennant in Rueceastle, but this may be an error for Thomas Turnbull). He appears to have been deprived in about 1621, when Abbotrule was again disjoined from Bedrule. He is still recorded as a resident in Bedrule in mid-1632 (leasing ‘Roullis land’). He died before the end of 1633 (probably unmarried), when his brother John of Cairnes became heir to a tenement in Edinburgh and land at ‘Listounschellis’. Katharine see Katharine Elliot (also spelled ‘Tennent’).

Tennant’s Map (te-nints-map) n. map of Roxburghshire published in 1840 and surveyed by N. Tennant. It was the most detailed map of the county before the Ordnance Survey. This can also refer to Walter Tennant’s ‘Plan of the Town of Hawick and Environs’, which was published in 1850, and again is the best record of the layout of Hawick streets and buildings before the large-scale Ordnance Survey maps.

tennis (te-nis) n. raquet ball game traditionally played by people in white outfits near Langlands Bridge. The game was played informally in the mid-19th century, with later tournaments on the cricket field. Early enthusiasts included J.R. Carmichael, J.B. Sime, G.C. Glenny, C.J. Glenny, James Barrie, George Murray Wilson, Elliot Oliver, George Grier, James Locke, and T. Lindsay Watson. A club was formed in the 1880s, and cinder courts laid down at the site below the cottage hospital. The club wound up in 1893, with many of the members having switched allegiance to golf, and the courts were abandoned. George Heron Wilson gifted the courts beside the cricket field to the High School in the 1920s, and the courts in Wilton Lodge Park were built much more recently.

tent (ten’, tent) n., arch. heed, attention, care – ‘Take tent o’ time, ere time be tint’ (inscription at 25 High Street), ‘I said, I wull tak tent til my wayses . . . ’[HSR], ‘Hear the richt, O Lord; tent weel my crye’[HSR], ‘A planteet masel i the machine, takin tent no ti crack ma cantel as A claam in’[ECS], ‘. . . only take tent! aw was as sober as aw am enow’[BCM1880], v. to tend, attend, watch over – ‘Where tenting ewes is a’ the trade, The browest dress the tartan plaid’[DA] (from Middle English).

tenter (ten-tur) n., arch. a frame for stretching cloth, specifically rails with hooks set up outside to dry and evenly stretch cloth after fulling. Large tracts of land around the centre of Hawick were once used for this purpose, e.g. the Commercial Road, Laing Terrace and Rosalee areas, as shown on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map – ‘The tenter grounds of Messrs. Laidlaw & Sons were almost all swept away . . . ’[BM1997], ‘. . . with its tenter-field for the drying of blankets scoured at the Under Damside . . . ’[WAPJ] (this gave rise to the phrase ‘on tenterhooks’).

tenţi (tent-i) adj., poet. heedful, attentive – ‘. . . let thine er be tentfu’ til the vouce o’ my supplications’[HSR].

tentie see tenty

tentifutie see Tentyfit

tenty (ten-e, ten-tee) adj., arch. heedful, attentive, careful – ‘I mankind’s ways hae marked weel, Wi’ tentie, watchfu’ e’e’[JoHa], ‘Come awa’, my little lambie, Toddle tentie, come to me; Weel ye like to get a hobble On yer auld grandfather’s knee’[TCh], ‘Oh, cruel death! how could ye slay The tentie herd, sae auld and grey . . . ’[TCh] (also written ‘tentine’).

Tentyfit (ten-tee-fi) n. Tentyfoot, the local name for an old tower at Brauxholme. It is the only remaining part of the former courtyard of walls and buildings around the Castle, the fragment now standing being about 15 feet high. It is a grade A listed building (also spelled ‘Tentifutie’ and variants).

ter (ter) n. tar – ‘ee’ve got ter aa ower yer new breeks’, ‘. . . and in summer, whan the smuists are waist an the pluiffin ter froes up atween the causa-stanes’[ECS], note that the English phrase ‘tarred with the same brush’ more often involved a stick in Scotland – ‘. . . the sister. who was tarred with the same stick’ . . . soon severed the troublesome foot from her leg’[EM1820].

terce (ters) n., arch. the right of a widow to one third of the rents of her husband’s property, this right being by default until 1681. A document of 1553/4 shows a dispute over the right of ‘terce’ between Janet Ker, 2nd (and divorced) wife of the late Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Buchcleuch and his grandson, the new Sir Walter.

Teri (tee-ree) n. someone from Hawick – ‘Then rally, Teries, yin and a’, Let this year be the best o’ a’’[RH], ‘Hark again the stirring strains!’ Rouse ye Teries from your slumber[s]’[RH], ‘. . . They’ll wish that they had ne’er been born Or else been born a Teri’[JT], ‘. . . For Teries the wide world over Are Teries ever more’[TK], ‘There’s a welcome and a greeting from the Teri in the street, And a gladness in the knowledge that old Hawick’s hard to beat’[WFC] (also occasionally written ‘Teerie’; deriving from an abbreviation of the ancient Hawick slogan; the plural is Teries).
Termibus

Termibus (tee-ree-bus) interj. short form of the Hawick slogan and battle-cry, ‘Termibus ye Teri-Odin’ – ‘O Termibus! thy magic spell, Thy sons shall own where’er they dwell’ [RH], ‘... And while the strains of Termibus float on the air Within each breast the life-blood proudly runs’ [JCG], ‘...For it still sticks close to us In the town of Teri-bus. Rally round, rally round, rally round’ [AW], ‘Cry aloud, ‘Termibus’, conquering terror’ [IWS] (various spellings exist).

Termibus (tee-ree-bus) n. the main Common Riding song, written by James Hogg in 1819, to a tune that is surely much older and effectively replacing the slightly earlier words of Arthur Balbirnie. It was originally called ‘The Colour’, and is distinguished from Hogg’s other main song ‘Flodden Field’, which has the same chorus (and is about the events of 1513, rather than 1514). The words were reprinted in 1824, 1829 and 1836, with several changes. The melody bears some similarity with tunes derived from Border (or Northumbrian) pipe music (e.g. ‘Bobby Shaftoe’ and the essentially identical tune called ‘Brave Wully Forster’ that exists in a 1694 manuscript, as well as the beginning of a piece of music attributed to Praetorius, but believed to have been originally by Caroubel around 1600). However, it is unclear whether this gives any hint as to its age or origin. The version played by the Drums and Fifes also has several variations compared with the tune that is sung. An older version of the tune survives (on a manuscript page in the Museum), and said to be the one played by Walter Ballantyne, town piper in 1777; it is a variant of the better known tune, seeming more like a pipe tune, and perhaps fitting the words to Balbirnie’s song better. Hogg’s words were first published in Kelso (partly because of the two satirical verses); it is sometimes also referred to as ‘The New Common Riding Song’, to distinguish it from Balbirnie’s song (the ‘Auld Sang’) of perhaps a generation earlier, which had the same tune. Hogg’s words were clearly influenced by Balbirnie’s (although perhaps they were both using phrases from even older lyrics). A version preceding Balbirnie’s c.1800 verses had as the chorus ‘T for Teri, O for Odin, H for Hawick and C for Common’, but none of the rest survives. It may be that the song was also once called ‘Drumlanrig’s March’. Hogg’s words are not entirely historically accurate, but that has not dampened their popularity. There were at one time suggestions for ‘improving’ the words to make them more factually correct, but this never caught on (it is unclear who wrote these improved words in the latter part of the 19th century, but they are now lost). Hogg’s full version contains 24 verses, although only a subset of 14 of them are commonly sung, and 2 of the more controversial verses were not printed along with the rest until significantly later. There are also 2 additional verses attributed to Hogg that are never included: one referring to Henry Scott ‘the Hero of Quebec’; and the other commemorating the tricentenary of 1814. A shorter 5 verse version of the song is sung at each Ride-out by the ‘Big 4’, after they have mounted for the ride back to Hawick, as well as on other occasions, such as at the Overseas Night on the Wednesday and in the Avenue on the Saturday; these verses begin ‘Scotia felt ... ’, ‘After Flodden ... ’, ‘Down they threw ... ’, ‘Magistrates ...’ and ‘Peace by thy portion ... ’. It is sung at St. Leonard’s after the Thursday night Chase, and in the same place after the Thursday and Friday morning Chases of Common Riding Week. Its singing also marks the end of the Colour Bussing on the Thursday. At the ‘Sang Singin’ on the Friday (after the return from the Mair) the Sang Singer sings the complete version. The verse beginning ‘Annual since our flag’s been carried ... ’ is used for toasts to the Cornet, ‘High the trump of fame did raise them’ for the Right- and Left-Hand Men (only relatively recently) and ‘Magistrates be faithful trustees ... ’ for the Acting Father. The Drums and Fifes also play the tune numerous times, such as when the Cornet is presented the letter on Pickin Night, on the site of the Auld Brig on the night of the Orderin o the Curds an Cream, at the Kirk Wynd at the start of proceedings on the Friday, as the official party march from the top of the Mill Path to the Song Singing, and on the Saturday when the mounted procession passes them at Drumlanrig Place, and at the Handing-Back ceremony – ‘Terie buss and teerie heather, Aye the ewe lap o’er the heather’ [JR], ‘... Sings ‘Termibus’ wi’ right goodwill On pyramid or steeple’ [MG], ‘A’ man, if ye was to play any other tune enow but ‘Termibus’, the toun o’ Hawick wad rise’ [RM].

Termibus (tee-ree-bus) n. pipe march (in 2/4 time and D Major), which is similar, although quite distinct from the traditional Hawick song. The tune is very similar to ‘Bobby Shaftoe’ (otherwise known as ‘In and out the dusty bluebells’), much moreso than the familiar Hawick song. Although it is a standard of many pipe tune compilations, it is not generally known to be associated with Hawick, although the name surely means there is some connection. It is unclear when it was first published, and hence it is possible that both it and the ‘Auld Sang’ derive from the same basic tune sometime pre-1800. However, the first definite appearance is in the ‘Scots Guards’ collection of 1954, and so it is also possible that this was merely a personal version from an unknown piper of the early 20th century, or simply an error in the naming of the tune. Note that some web-sites and published discussions erroneously assume this is exactly the same as the Common Riding tune. To further confuse matters there is an earlier version of the tune for the song ‘Teribus’ known, this being in 4/4 time and being a variant of the modern melody, but again with only a passing similarity to this pipe tune.

Teribus (te-ri-boos) n. Sir John (14th C.) listed as ‘John de Teribus’ when he witnessed a charter confirming the church of Cavers to Melrose Abbey in 1384. He also witnessed a document relating to the lands of Penangushope and Cauldcleuch in about 1360. It is presumably a coincidence that his name is similar to Hawick’s slogan.

the Teri Bus (thu-tee-ree-bus) n. name of a mini-bus used for transporting old folk in Hawick.

the Teribus Arms (thu-tee-ree-bus-armz) n.
public house in the Fore Raw in the mid-19th century, opening around 1840. The early proprietor was Michael Wintrup. A glass gin bottle labelled ‘Teribus Arms’ is in the Museum.

the Teribus Altar (thu-tee-ree-busawl-tur) n.
Roman altar stone at Chesters Museum on Hadrian’s Wall. It appears to contain the word ‘TERIBVS’, and since it has been labelled with a reference to the ‘old gods’, some Teries have suggested that it relates to the Hawick slogan.
However, when it is realised that ‘ibus’ is a common Latin ending, other, more mundane explanations suggest themselves. Most likely the part visible reads together as ‘DIBVS VI·TERIBVS’, meaning ‘to the gods named Viteri’ (or alternatively the broken stone contains only part of an inscription), since there are many other examples of similar words on other altar stones.

the Teribus Clock (thu-tee-ree-bus-klok) n. unique ornamental clock outside Hamish Smith’s jeweller’s shop at the Horse since 1996. It was designed and constructed locally by Hamish Smith, Tosh Scott and other tradesmen. It features 3 horses with riders in Common Riding regalia, which appear every quarter hour, while the chimes play ‘Teribus’.

teribus.com (tee-ree-bus-do’-kom) n. web-site dedicated to all things Hawick, set up by Cameron

Teribus ye Teri-Odin

the Teribus Spitfire (thu-tee-ree-bus-spi’-fir) n. presentation Spitfire fighter aircraft, funded from £5,325 raised by townspeople during ‘Spitfire Week’ in August 1940. It was probably a Mark I Spitfire, identity number R7128, and possibly shot down on 8th July 1941.

Teribus ye Teri-Odin (tee-ree-bus-see-tee-ree-øy-din) interj. the Hawick slogan, whose origin is lost in the mists of time. A popular theory is that it derives from the Anglian ‘Tyr haeb us, ye Tyr ye Odin’ meaning ‘Thor keep us, both Thor and Odin’. However, there is no evidence that Norse gods were ever worshipped in the Borders, and moreover, the period in which the area around Hawick was under the dominance of the Anglians of Northumbria (and hence speaking a version of Anglo-Saxon) but before it was Chris-tianised (and hence not worshipping Anglo-Saxon gods) was quite short. This theory appears to have first been suggested by Jamieson around 1825, and was accepted by Sir James Murray.
However, it is not supported by normal phonological development either (where one would have started with the Old English forms ‘Tiw’ and ‘Wōdan’ and these could not have conceivably developed into the Old Norse forms for the gods).
Another idea is that the slogan derives from the Celtic ‘Tir a buidh’s, tir a dion’ meaning ‘Land of Victory, Land of Defence’. This is perhaps more likely, since Hawick people spoke a version of ancient Northumbrian (related to other ‘Brythonic’ languages, like modern Welsh) until perhaps the 8th century. A third, and least romantic theory is that the phrase is essentially a set of nonsense syllables used to sing along to the song (analogous perhaps to ‘Hey tutti tatie’, the former name for the tune used by Burns for ‘Scots Wha Hae’, said to have been the march used by Robert the Bruce’s men at Bannockburn). However, it should be stressed that all of these ideas are based on guesswork, and the truth could be something else entirely. In any case it appears that Ha-wick’s slogan is quite ancient, perhaps over 1,000 years old, and it is intriguing that it has survived through the Reformation and other political and social changes. Its survival is even more curious when one realises that, although familiar to ev-everyone from Hawick, no one knows its meaning!

‘Teribus ye Teriodin! By our sires who fell at Flodden, Muster swift and rouse the river! Strike for Hawick, and Hawick for ever’ [RSC], ‘Hawick heart’s shall e’er be proud. ‘Teribus y Teriodin!’ Sing the slogan long and loud’ [IWS] (the spelling is entirely subjective).
Teridom (tee-ree-dum) n. the state of being a Teri, the area around Hawick – ‘He burns to clasp the callant’s hand That’s come from some far distant land, Aince mair in Teridom to stand The nicht afore the morn’ [JMS].

Teries (tee-reez) n., pl. plural of Teri – ‘Hail! Hail to the Teries, True, dauntless and cheerful – Laings, Watsons, and Wilsons, Scotts, Elliots, Laidlaws’ [T].

Terie-ess (tee-rees) n. word sometimes used to refer to female Teries (e.g. by George Luff when referring to his waitresses at the 1899 Common Riding dinner.

the Teri-hub (thu-tee-ree-hub) n. Hawick-based email news-group, set up by Graham Peacock in 1999, providing information and entertainment for Teries at home and abroad. It grew out of the old Hawick News web-site list, which was one of the first Hawick-based web-sites. It later moved to being a Yahoo group (also written ‘Teri Hub’).

Teriland (tee-ree-land) n., poet. the area around Hawick – ‘There was a priest in Teriland, An’ had he leaved lang syne He’d been a brave Crusader, An’ gaen to Palestine’ [FL].

Teri Oden (tee-ree-o-din) n. another variant of part of the Hawick slogan – ‘Unfold the Teri Oden flag. To kiss the breeze o’ Summer … ’ [JT].

Teriodin (tee-reed-in) n. the second half of the Hawick town slogan – ‘…Join in the old refrain Shout Teriodin again and again’ [JT], ‘They ha’e nae Teri-Odin flag … ’ [JT], ‘Teri Odin’s strain entrancing Through the air triumphant soared … ’ [TK], ‘Though names be forgotten, as time passes by, Teri-Odin for ever – united the cry’ [WFC].

the Teri-Optimists (thu-tee-ree-op-ti-mists) n. theatrical group who performed songs, dances and sketches in the Town Hall in the 1930s. Prominent members included Bay Armstrong, Eileen Bannerman, Cameron Conn, Jimmy Gleny and Ian Macすぎ.

the Teri Stakes (thu-tee-ree-stäks) n. prize race at the Common Riding, held on the Saturday, but dropped in 1979.

term-days (term-, te-rum-däz) n., pl. the four days on which rents and other payments were traditionally due in Scotland, also known as quarter days. These days were once very prominent in the yearly calendar, particularly those in May and November; servants were hired by the year or half-year and leases by the year or longer, almost always on those days. The names, as well as the dates, were different in Scotland than in England. Called Candelmas, Whitsun, Lammas and Martinmas, they were originally on 2nd February, 26th May, 1st August and 11th November, respectively. However, Whitsun moved to 15th May when the Gregorian Calendar was formally adopted in 1752. But in 1886 the term days for hiring and renewing domestic and agricultural workers was changed in Scotland to 28th February, 28th May, 28th August and 28th November, and this was confirmed by an Act of 1990. Until well into the 20th century it was common to see the families of shepherds and other farm labourers moving from one farm to another on 28th May.

termigrant (ter-ni-gin’) n., arch. a violent, quarrelsome person – ‘Termigrants have been rife in this same month … ’ [RM].

Term Thursdi (term-thurz-di) n. popular name for the first Thursday after Martinmas term, in November. It was formerly an important day in Hawick, which was treated as a fair day by the country residents. It was a day for settling accounts in Town, and for preparing for the Winter. The ‘mairt’ (usually a fattened sheep) would be bought for the Winter’s meat supply and there would be a generally festive atmosphere. The practice stopped towards the end of the 19th century.

the Terraces (thu-te-ri-seez) n. popular name for streets in the Wellogate, largely built through the Hawick Working Men’s Building & Investment Company starting in 1866 and continuing to roughly the end of the 19th century. The land was petitioned for from the Duke of Buccleuch, partly as a result of the 1849 cholera epidemic. The grid-like layout gives little concession to the contours of the land.

terrier (te-ree-ur) n. nickname for a Territorial Army soldier. The T.A. headquarters is on Union Street.

terrin (te-rin) n. the act of applying tar, particularly to sheep. This was formerly a common practice locally, used to prevent infection in cuts and for identifying the sheep from a distance. However, the benefits were never entirely clear and it became less common by the mid-19th century as the preference for white woollens grew.

the Territorial Kirk (thu-te-ri-tö-ree-ul-kirk) n. name used in the early days of West Port Kirk.

Terrona (te-rö-nu) n. farm in Ewesdale, off the left-hand side of the A7 a couple of miles before Langholm. There are multiple spellings in older records. It was a 5-merk land when the superiority was inherited by Robert, Lord Maxwell, in 1550, by John, Lord Maxwell in 1604, by Robert Maxwell in 1619 and still held by John, Earl of Nithsdale in 1670 and William, Earl of Nithsdale in 1696. The farm was surveyed in 1718 along with other properties of the Duchess of Buccleuch, when it covered 457 acres and was bounded by Cooms, Whitsiels, Arkin, Nether Wrae and Flask. James Little was there in 1797. James Paterson was farmer there in 1841 until at least the 1860s. There are remains of an ancient walled settlement to the southeast of the farmhouse (there are many spelling variants; it is `Torronna' on Blaeu's 1654 map, `Toroun' on Gordon's c.1650 map and `Tareona' on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

tersy-versy (ter-see-ver-see) adj., arch. topsyturvey, in a confused state.
tertan (ter'-in) n. tartan, a distinctive pattern of coloured lines and bands for cloth, traditionally worn in the Highlands, with specific designs attached to clans, often spuriously. Hawick District Corporate tartan was launched in 1996, with a dress version in addition. There is no indication that locals historically wore tartan clothing – `There's the spot where we were lyin' Roved within your tartan plaid!' [JT].

the Test (thu-test) n. one of a number of oaths of allegiance introduced, particularly in the 17th century, to differentiate between Protestants and Catholics in England or adherence to Presbyterianism versus Episcopalianism in Scotland. The most important `test' was probably that of the Test Act of 1681, which enforced episcopacy and to convocate, convene, or assemble in any council, convenction, or assemblies, to treat, consult, or determine in any matter of state, civil or ecclesiastical, without His Majesty's special command'. The tailors and weavers took the Test in 1684.

testamentar (tes-ta-men-tar) adj., arch. pertaining to a testament, nominated in a will, especially in the phrase `testament testamentar', meaning a testament in which the details are specified by the person whose testament it is – `The testament testamentar, and inventar of the gudis, geir, soumes of money, and dettis pertening to vmquhile Walter Scot of Branxholme ...' [SB1574].
testificate (tes-ti-fee-ki') n., arch. a testimonial, solemn declaration, evidence, specifically a document issued by a Kirk Session for someone moving to a new parish, describing whether they were married or unmarried and whether or not they were free of scandal; the requirement to produce such a document was prescribed in an Act of Assembly of 1648 – `...by reason of our being vagrant and vagabond persons wanting testificatts ...' [BR], `To a man that had a testificate'[PR], `...and the beadle was further ordered to make inquiry anent the rest of the testificates' [PR1713].
testit (tes-ti', -ta') adj., arch. testate, mentioned as part of a will – `...nor pursue ...but before the Bailies of this Bruch in ther awin Court, except for testat geir, under the pane of £5, toties quoties'[BR1640], `Freemen prohibited from instituting prosecution for debts in any other than the Bailie Court, except testat goods'[JW1701] (also spelled `testat').
tethert (te-thur') pp., adj. tethered – `...and that nane keippe any in the day fra the 15th of April till harvest, except they be tetherit, under the lyik pane'[BR1640], `...The cranes stand out at the Port o' Leith Whaur the boats lie trigly tethert'[WL].
tethery-methery (te-thu-ree-me-thu-ree) n., arch. an untidy mess, confused state (noted as `tetherie-metherie' by E.C. Smith; related to the children’s counting rhyme, see eendy-teendy).
teuch (tewch) adj., arch. tough – `They're teuch sauchs grovin' i' the Reuch Hauch'[JAHM], `...thin Than a robin's leg And twice as teuch'[DH], `Glooms and glints, sudden flashes of gold across the fields – teuch and smooth on grass . . .'[DH] (the pronunciation formerly had a long diphthong merging u and oo).
teuchter (choo-ch-tur) n., ins. mildly derogatory lowland name for a Highlander.
Teueot (tee-ee-i') n. another early spelling of `Teviot' (e.g. on Mercator’s 1595 map of Scotland).
Teuiot (tee-ee-i') n. early form of `Teviot', recorded in 1160 (the pronunciation of the time is of course unknown, but it seems that the v sound may have come later).
Tevidale (te-vee-dail) n. former name for Teviotdale, used around the 15th and 16th centuries.
Tevidalenses (te-vee-da-len-seez) n. former name for the people of Teviotdale. At the Battle of the Standard in 1130 the second division of King David’s army consisted of them along with the Cumbrenses.
the Teviot (\textit{thu-tee-vee-i', -teev-yi'}) \textit{n.} major river running through Hawick, having its source at Teviot Stone and joining the Tweed 37 miles later. Its main tributaries are the Borthwick, Slitrig, Rule, Ale, Jed and Kale Waters. Other minor watercourses joining it include: Lang Grain; Rashie Grain; Rams Cleuch Burn; Mare Sike; Giddens Cleuch Burn; Commonbrae Sike; Hare Sike; Black Cleuch Burn; Frostlie Burn; Falnash Burn; Dryden Burn; Nest Burn; Weens Sike; Teindside Burn; Northhouse Burn; Howden Cleuch; Harwood Sike; Vales Burn; the Allan Water; Fenwick Burn; Wilton Burn; Dean Burn; Howden Burn; Boonaw Burn; Kirkton Burn; Hassendale Burn; Honey Burn; Dean Burn; Gridding Burn; Ale Water; Oxnam Water and Kale Water. The river has always played a significant role in the life of Hawick. In the town it used to be crossed by a ford at the foot of Walter’s Wynd, or by boat at the Coble, until the Teviot Bridge was built in 1741. The river was harnessed (and much polluted) by manufacturers in the 19th century. The river is prone to flooding, some historical floods being very dramatic. It also has the potential to dry up almost entirely in hot summers, and also sometimes in the winter (as in January 1748, March 1785, January 1787, winter of 1803/4 and November 1838), presumably due to blockage by ice. Some stone artefacts found around the river in Hawick are in the Museum – ‘...And Teviot’s banks, where flowers of fairy blow, – Couldst thou with cold unraur’tur’d eye survey, Nor wake to bardish notes the bosom-thrilling lay?’ [JL], ‘Ah! when shall I by Teviot’s stream The haunts of youth again explore? And muse in melancholy dream On days that shall return no more?’ [JL], ‘O swiftly gae speed the berry-brown steed That drinks o’ the Teviot clear’ [JL], ‘Where nature’s lavish hand profuse has strew’d Luxuriant beauties. Here the Teviot winds Her easy course, meand’ring round the vales’ [JR], ‘There’s ae auld toon by Teviot’s side, That’s famed in days o’ yore’ [JT], ‘There’s a toon, by hills surrounded, stands by bonnie Teviot’s side’ [TC], ‘River of dreams, you are dear to us ever, Dear where the broad haughs invite you to Tweed; Dear where the willows dip low to your crooning Songs that you murmur through valley and mead’ [WL], ‘The Teviot babbles on its way; The clash of steel has passed away’ [IWS] (origin uncertain, although the name is very old, possibly Celtic, and perhaps even older, with a suggestion that it is derived from the Sanskrit root ‘taváss’, perhaps meaning ‘surging’, which curiously may also be the same root as for the Tweed; it seems that the pre-Celtic hydronym gained the Cumbric suffix ‘ed’, probably later than the 8th century; it is ‘Teuieit’ in charters around 1200, ‘aqua de Teuyoth’ in 1279, ‘aqua de Teveiot’ in 1420, ‘Theviot’ in 1547/8 and ‘Teueot’ in 1579, with other spellings including ‘Teviott’, ‘Teviit’, etc.; it is ‘Tiot fl.’ on Gordon’s c.1650 map, and ‘Teatt fl.’ on Gordon’s map of Scotland in Blaen’s 1654 atlas).

Teviot (\textit{teev-yi'}) \textit{n.} Ninian (16th C.) listed in 1579 among men accused by the Bailie of Hexham of stealing 2 horses from near there. He was ‘of the Hillhous’, and his lands were probably the Hillhouse near Newcastleton. The other men named were Mungo Armstrong ‘Flie the Gaist’, Alexander Bell ‘Crat Bell’ and Ninian Armstrong ‘Gawdie’.

Teviotbank (\textit{tee-vi-i’-bawngk}) \textit{n.} merchant ship, built in 1938 by J. Readhead & Sons Ltd. for the Bank Line (Andrew Weir Shipping & Trading Co. Ltd.) and sold off to a company registered in Panama in 1955. It may have been used to lay mines during WWII.

Teviot Bank (\textit{tee-vi-i’-bawngk}) \textit{n.} villa overlooking the north banks of the Teviot, about a mile before Denholm. A house was built there about 1791 for David Simpson, designed by Robert Burn. It was rebuilt in 1833 with designs by William Burn (son of the previous architect). There was also a stable building to the west and a walled garden with gardener’s cottage to the east. It was the residence of William Scott, grandson of William Scott of Woll, then J.S. Heron-Maxwell, followed by Edward Heron-Maxwell. To the north were cropmarks, indicating a possible ancient enclosure (sometimes written ‘Teviotbank’; possibly also known earlier as ‘The Knowes’).

Teviotbank Gairdens (\textit{tee-vi-i’-bawngk-gär-dinz}) \textit{n.} street in Denholm off the north end of Canongate.

Teviot Brig (\textit{tee-vi-i’-brig}) \textit{n.} bridge across the Teviot, connecting the Sandbed with Wilton, built 1738–1741 with stone from Spittal quarry. This was the first bridge over the Teviot at Hawick, and it meant that traffic from the north no longer had to ford the river at Walter’s Wynd, or travel all the way down-river to Ancrum. There had been some debate about whether to put it at the Sandbed or the foot of Walter’s Wynd, the question being resolved by a group of local landowners. There was also a great deal of trouble raising the money (£450 total cost) and paying off the original bond (£250 from the Duke of Buccleuch’s commissioners), this being probably the largest municipal project undertaken by the town. The bridge was completed when ‘the kistone was perfected and close’ on 29th July 1741, but the debt took about 20 years to clear; this is despite other towns being asked to contribute (e.g. Glasgow contributed £5). During construction the animals used to transport materials were pastured on the Common Haugh and Myreslawgreen (with no other animals allowed there during that time). The original bridge was too narrow for carts to pass in the middle (sometimes causing arguments), and was very steep on each side. The piers were strengthened around 1751 (along with drains being added) and after many other repairs it was removed in 1865 and replaced with a less steep and contracted bridge. The architect was Andrew Wilson and the builder was John Marshall. During excavations for the new bridge the trunk of an oak tree was found embedded in the gravel, presumably left there in some long ago flood. The original bridge can be seen in paintings of 1800, 1808 and 1812. The new bridge has 3 arches and was designed by A. Wilson. The bridge was also popularly known as ‘the Haugh Brig’ and has subsequently become known as the Albert Bridge, possibly because of an error in the Ordnance Survey map of 1898. The name ‘Teviot Brig’ is also used for other bridges across the river, including the one built at Denholm in 1864.
Teviot Brig Road

Teviot Brig Road (tee-vee-i’-brig-rōd) n. name sometimes used for Albert Road, or the street between the Sandbed and the Teviot Bridge (i.e. Orrock Place).

Teviot Court (tee-vee-i’-kōr’) n. sheltered housing development built by Eildon Housing Association in 1989–91 on the Tannage Close property previously belonging to the Co-operative Store.

Teviot Crescent (tee-vee-i’-kre-sin’) n. street between the High Street and the river, originally part of the Common, with lands feudal after the Division of 1777, and the Wee Haugh being the sole remaining piece of public land. The area was used as nurseries by Dickson’s. The houses were built around 1832 as skilled, middle-class workers’ residences, and are now listed for preservation. They are 2 storeys, but most have attic extensions with dormer windows. The street was obviously named after the river. William Laidlaw & Sons had their Teviot Crescent Mills here. A mill lade used to run from Laidlaw’s Cauld along the side of Teviot Crescent and through the Mills. It was filled in in 1914. The Drums and Fifes walk along this street as part of their march around the old tolls on ‘the Nicht Afore the Morn’.

Teviot Crescent Mills (tee-vee-i’-kre-sin’-mīlz) n. hosiery and tweed factory built by William Laidlaw in 1834 on Teviot Crescent and later extended. The suitability of the site (owing to the drop in the Teviot) was first suggested by millwright Gideon Scott. The factory was once very large, extending along the Teviot from the Little Haugh until almost the foot of Dovecote Street. The footpath along the riverside was popularly known as ‘the Back o the Mill’. The factory was also referred to as ‘Laidlaw’s’. It was eventually demolished.

Teviotdale (tee-vee-i’-dāl) n. the valley of the Teviot, in which Hawick is nestled. The word is sometimes synonymous with Roxburghshire, i.e. extending beyond the boundaries of the river valley itself. It was also the name used for the local arch-deaconry in early church organisation. This area was part of the Diocese of Durham in the 11th century, but was transferred to the See of Glasgow by the end of the 12th century. The region was occupied by the English in the 14th century, reining recovered in 1383–4 – ‘My native stream, my native vale, And you green meads of Teviotdale …’ [JL], ‘When morn’s first rays fall quivering on the strand, Then is the time to stretch the daring hand, And snatch it from the bending poplar pale, The magic harp of ancient Teviotdale’ [JLG], ‘And for the world I wadna’ leave My Bonnie Teviotdale’ [J0H], ‘Young Mary was the loveliest lass In all green Teviotdale; Her cheek outvied the budding rose, Her breath the rosy gale’ [JTe], ‘Oh, Teviotdale! loved land of song, What memories to thee belong’ [JCG], ‘…Where nature’s voices join to speak In praise of glorious Teviotdale’ [RHL], ‘O sing me songs of Teviotdale That tell an old familiar tale’ [WIS] (called ‘Teudallia’ by the Romans; it was ‘Teugeteledale’ in about 1117, ‘Theiudall’ around 1147, ‘Theviedeledal’ about 1165, ‘Tevietedaled in about 1170, ‘Teugetesdale’ in the early 13th century, ‘Tevidall’ in Bagmond’s Roll of 1275, ‘Thevidat’ in a Scottish record of 1297, ‘Tevydalle’ in an English document of 1391 and ‘Tevidalia’ in the 1407 charter for the Barony of Hawick; the early spelling varies wildly, e.g. ‘Thevydalía’ in about 1360, ‘Teuidalie’ in 1415, ‘Thevidalle’ in 1427, ‘Teuvidayl’ in 1431, ‘Teuidalle’ in 1433/4, ‘Tevidal’ in 1448, ‘Tevidalia’ in 1453, ‘Thevidailie’ in about 1452, ‘tevidalle’ in 1498, ‘Tevidall’ in 1501, ‘Tavidale’ in 1516, ‘Tevidale’ in 1479, 1500 and 1525, ‘Tyvidalie’ in 1525, ‘Tevidail’ in 1530,
Teviotdale

Teviotdale (tee-vee-i’-däl) n. song with words by Robert H. Laidlaw and music by Frank Simpson. The words were published in the Hawick Express in 1934 and reprinted in 1950 when the music had been written. It was first sung publicly at the Glasgow Hawick Association’s Common Riding Night, the singer being Mrs. Margaret Turnbull (a niece of Francis George Scott). The original key of D major was later lowered to B flat major. It has no chorus, and is probably a little too complex to be sung regularly.

Teviotdale (tee-vee-i’-däl) n. blend of pipe tobacco sold by D. Simpson Ltd., from about the War years until the 1960s.

Teviotdale (tee-vee-i’-däl) n. Thomas (16th C.) Englishman, who was tenant in Ingram and had a local surname. He was recorded in 1590 as ‘Thomas Tevidaile’ when it is claimed that he was wounded by a group of Scottish raiders, specifically Burns, Youngs and others.

Teviotdale Amateur Bicycle Club (tee-vee-i’-däl-am-eev-i’-ur-bi-see-kul-klub) n. earliest known cycling organisation in Hawick, also known as Teviotdale Cycling Club. It was formed before 1881, when the Hawick Bicycle Club (to become the Hawick Cycling Club) was formed, and some competitive events were held between them in the 1880s. The club ceased to be active in about 1889.

Teviotdale Bakery (tee-vee-i’-däl-ba-ku-ree) n. former bakery at 2 Princes Street. It was run by Martin P. Baillie, father of singer Isobel.

the Teviotdale Club (thu-tee-vee-i’-däl-kluhb) n. former social club near the foot of Beaconsfield Terrace, also known as ‘Hawick Billiard Club’. The building was constructed in 1877, and has had many subsequent uses, including as a milliners, the office for Bonsor’s factory and the Jehovah’s Witnesses Kingdom Hall.

Teviotdale Court (tee-vee-i’-däl-kor’) n. part of the Meadows, built in 1964 and refurbished as luxury flats in 1986.

Teviotdale Crescent (tee-vee-i’-däl-kre-sin’) n. ??.

Teviotdale Cyclin Club (tee-vee-i’-däl-si-klun-klub) n. alternative name for Teviotdale Amateur Bicycle Club.

Teviotdale Dairy (tee-vee-i’-däl-da-ree) n. former dairy at 49 North Bridge Street, next to the Buccleuch Memorial. The buildings were designed in about 1899 by J.P. Alison as a symmetrical, 2-stotey, 3-bay block in red sandstone, with Dutch influence in the detailing. The company was set up in the late 19th century and continued in the 1930s as ‘Honeyburn and Teviotdale Dairy Company’ by Andrew Haddon and his son Andrew. Other partners were Jimmy Taddei and Mr. Collier the grocer. The company delivered certified (i.e. Brucellosis and T.B. free) milk to the local region. It was later owned by the Butercup Dairy Company. It finally folded in 1982, with the building surviving (with monogrammed gable still visible) as a shop, although the bottling plant at the back was demolished.

Teviotdale Fermeres’ Club (tee-vee-i’-däl-frurz-klub) n. organisation formed in 1859 to be a forum for discussion and to represent the interests of local farmers. The first President was William Aitchison from 1859–73, with James Oliver being secretary from 1859–1905. It used to meet in a room in the Tower Hotel, where portraits of several ex-Presidents hung through much of the 19th century. It grew out of the Agricultural society for the west of Teviotdale, formed by James Douglas of Cavers in 1835 (although both existed together for several decades). The Oliver family were Honorary Secretaries for the Club 1859–1994. The regular meeting time has been Thursday nights during the winter months. The club is still going strong.

Teviotdaleheid (tee-vee-i’-däl-heed) n. name formerly used for the upper Teviot valley, particularly to refer to the Buccleuch estates there in the 17th and 18th centuries. It was once included in the lands formerly known as Ringwoodfield. It is referred to in 1551 as part of the bounds described when Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme was appointed Justiciar of Liddesdale (it is already ‘Teviotdaleheid’ in 1551 and ‘Teviotsdaleheid’ in 1633).

Teviotdale Herriers (tee-vee-i’-däl-hee-urz) n. Teviotdale Harriers, the local amateur running club. It was formed in 1889 as a cross-country club by several local merchants and professionals, including George Heron Wilson. It is said to be the third oldest in Scotland in continual existence. The inclusion of track competitions came a few years after the club started. The club’s Challenge Cup was first presented in 1894. Rob Barton was an early success for the club, representing Britain at 800 m in the 1908 Olympics. A Junior Section was formed in 1907 and then suffered huge losses at the Battle of Auldearn. The Regiment continued to exist for about the next 40 years.

the Teviotdale Rifles (thu-tee-vii'-däl-rif-fuls) n. alternative name for the Roxburghshire Rifle Volunteers, also known as the Border Rifles.

Teviot (tee-vii'-teks) n. textile company based at 15 Commercial Road, weaving country tweeds and luxury cloths at Lovat Mill.

Teviot Grove Academy (tee-vii'-groi-aw-ka-du-mee) n. seminary run towards the end of the 19th century at 10 Union Street by James Brand, also known as 'Brand’s Schuil’. It was taken over in 1895 by the School Board and run as the town’s Secondary School. Pupils were transferred to the new school from Buccleuch Street along with the teacher A.S. Williams. The Science and Arts classes were held in the Buccleuch Memorial, and James Brand was the Rector. The secondary school transferred back to Buccleuch Street in the early 20th century. School Inspectors' Reports from 1896–1904 are in the National Archives.

Teviothaugh (tee-vii'-hauf) n. farm near Denholm, on the north side of the Teviot, just beyond the north end of Denholm and to the south of Minto. It was once part of the Minto estate. Nailer John Oliver was living there in 1815. Christopher Hislop was farmer there in 1841. It was farmed by James Young in the 1860s and by the Miller family in the late 19th century, until the 1920s.

Teviot Grove Academy (tee-vii'-groi-aw-ka-du-mee) n. seminary run towards the end of the 19th century at 10 Union Street by James Brand, also known as 'Brand’s Schuil’. It was taken over in 1895 by the School Board and run as the town’s Secondary School. Pupils were transferred to the new school from Buccleuch Street along with the teacher A.S. Williams. School Inspectors’ Reports from 1896–1904 are in the National Archives. and commemorative plaque are there. The village long had its own primary school, but it was closed in 2004. It also had its own library from at least the 1830s. A stone war memorial (designed by J.P. Alison) was erected after WWI – “There is no men of all the men in this grey troop of mine But blind might ride the Borderside from Teviothead to Tyne‘ [WHO], ‘At Teviothead there stand three stones, If ever you’re that way, Take time to seek them out And read the words they have to say. One man was called to fight a fight And one to win a race And one to write a special song To mark his time and place’ [IWL] (the place name appears as ‘Teviotheid’ in 1623 and is used regularly from the 1660s).

Teviothead Cottage (tee-vee-i’-heed-ko’-eej)

n. home of Henry Scott Riddell at Teviothead, built for him about 1840 by the Duke of Buccleuch, and also known as Dryden Cottage, Caerlenrig Manse and Dryden Burnfoot. It still exists and has a commemorative plaque. About 100 yards to the east there were 2 ancient cairns that were excavated in 1869, an iron spearhead being found, which is now in Hawick Museum. The 1863 Ordnance Survey map shows an additional ruined building that is now gone.

Teviothead Haa (tee-vee-i’-heed-haw)

Teviothead Hall, village hall in Teviothead, used for various community events.

Teviothead Kirk (tee-vee-i’-heed-kirk)

n. church in Teviothead Parish. The site of the ancient Chapel of St. Mary’s of Caerlenrig lies within the old churchyard, and contains an ancient stone, as well as the burial site of Johnnie Armstrong, with the memorial stone of 1897. ‘Mr’ Thomas Hume was recorded witnessing baptisms in the area in 1713 and 1714, suggesting he was acting as preacher there. There was a ‘chapel of ease’ near there around 1715, as part of Hawick and Cavers Parishes, built on the Thornyhaugh by Falnash, with regular services commencing in about 1721. A collection was made in Hawick Parish to raise money to repair the masonry of the meeting house in 1722. A petition of 1725, signed by about 100 locals, requested the Duchess of Buccleuch to supply an allowance for a preacher. In the 1752 Hawick Parish records the church is referred to as ‘Meeting House at Thorny Hall’. A new building constructed on the other side of the stream in 1790 (later converted into the village school). The Parish was created in 1850 from the more distant parts of Hawick and Cavers, repaired in about 1821 when a new preacher was installed. The church was built in 1855/6, and designed by Mr. Cowan, the Duke of Buccleuch’s Clerk of Works. It is a plain rectangular building of whinstone, with freestone edges and buttresses. Some alterations were designed by J.P. Alison around 1900. The church was linked with Hawick Old Parish 1972–89 and with Wilton from 1989. It celebrated its 150th anniversary in 2005, with the present Duke of Buccleuch in attendance. A communion token exists from 1854, oval in shape. A roll of the ministry is: Thomas Hume, at least 1713–14; David Graham, from 1714; John Chisholme, from 1720; John Laurie 1738–c.45; Andrew Walker 1745–50; Robert Rutherford 1750–56; Patrick Kerr, from 1757; James Erskine 1763–64; John Riccarton 1764–65; Charles Paton, from 1780; James Sanson 1785–c.88; Thomas Dyce 1792–c.1804; Robert Shaw 1804–16; Joseph Thomson 1817–19; Gavin Turnbull 1821–c.31; John Dobbie, about 1831; Henry Scott Riddell, 1832–42; William Lamb 1843–44; Daniel MacNee, from 1847; James Duncan 1850–53; Robert Young 1854–84; Robert F. Colvin 1884–87; Archibald H. Dinwoodie 1887–1919; Arthur H. Dunnett 1920–24; David S. Steven 1925–29; James Livingston 1929–40; James Hill 1940–63; Robert McConnell 1966–72; David L. Wright 1972–86; George Watson 1989–91; Brian Hendrie 1992–97; John Shedden 1998–.

Teviothead Library (tee-vee-i’-heed-il-bru-ree)

n. former library in Teviothead Parish, also called the Caerlenrig Chapel Library. It was probably established in the early 1800s and mentioned in the New Statistical Account in 1839.

Teviothead Pairish (tee-vee-i’-heed-pa-reesh)

n. Teviothead Parish, formed in 1850 from the outlying parts of Hawick and Cavers parishes, centred on the village of the same name. It is bounded on the south by Dumfriesshire, and on the other sides by the parishes of Roberton, Hawick, Cavers and Castleton. There was a chapel at Caerlenrig from early times and a ‘Chapel of Ease’ here from long before the Parish was created. Parish records exist from 1824.

Teviothead Schuil (tee-vee-i’-heed-skil)

n. primary school in Teviothead, which taught pupils up to the end of Primary 5. There was informal teaching there earlier, but the teacher’s salary was not established until 1803. Mr. Armstrong ‘the Tailor’ (brother of Hawick schoolmaster Christopher) was master there in the early 1800s. When the Presbytery refused to allow Tom Jenkins to take over as teacher, the smiddy was converted for his use (about 1815–18), with him having as many as 45 pupils and the official school just 4. The parish-appointed schoolmaster at that time was a Mr. Elliot. When Jenkins left, the new schoolmaster for the district was Simon Little, who was there until at least 1861. It was referred to as a ‘side-parochial school’ in 1839 and was run by Hawick and Cavers Parishes together. There were more than 30 pupils in the 1830s. The school closed in 2004, with the pupils being transferred to Drumlanrig.

Teviot Kirk (tee-vee-i’-kirk) n. Teviot Parish Church, being a new name for St. George’s, adopted in 1888, and having links with Roberton.

Teviot Lodge (tee-vee-i’-loj, -luj) n. house that stood on the eastern part of the site of the present High School until shortly after WWII. It was built for the Dickson family, Miss Dickson being owner in 1824 and William Dickson living there in the mid-19th century. It was later the home of Col. William Scott Elliot. It was the first house in Hawick with electric lighting, installed by William Elliot (with the assistance of William Melrose), using 2 copper wires in porcelain insulators, running all the way from his factory at Tower Mill (across the roofs of houses, etc.). An ingenious mechanism allowed Elliot to operate a sluice at the mill so that the lights went off when he was ready for bed. And it was also arranged for signals to be sent by morse code between the house to the mill. A billiard room was added to make way for the High School science building in the 1950s and 1960s there was extensive demolition of old buildings and closes around the bottom of the Round Close, with replacement by the path and steps. After Rodono was demolished the ground was cleared in 1980, part being grassed over and part being used as a car park. The Health Centre was built there in 1989.

Teviotside (tee-vee-i’-síd) n. poetic name for the banks of the Teviot – ‘As I came in by Tiviotside, And by the Braes of Braxzhoml, There I spied a bonny lass; She was both neat and handsome’ [CPM], ‘By Teviotside they took this Colour, A dear memorial of their valour’ [AB], ‘No pen or brush can e’er describe The beauty of the Teviotside’ [JCa], ‘A love ti walk be Tiviotside And sei its ripplin witters glide’ [IWL].

Teviotside Foondry (tee-vee-i’-foon-dree) n. former premises of James Melrose & Sons on the east side of Commercial Road, adjacent to the Victoria Laundry.

Teviotside House (tee-vee-i’-síd-hoos) n. former private school at 1 Teviotside Terrace (then a corner house on North Bridge Street), run by Mrs. Dumbreck from 1865 until the 1870s. It was a school for girls, but also took in small boys, one of them being Sir Thomas Henderson. It was continued by her daughters, Euphemia and Katherine, and perhaps also by the Misses Mitchell into the 1880s.
Teviotside Road

Teviotside Road (tee-vee-i’-sīd-rōd) n. name used for the south side of Commercial Road before it was officially named in 1884.

Teviotside Terrace (tee-vee-i’-sīd-te-rīs) n. short one-sided street off North Bridge Street, being the back of some houses on Dovecote Street, built around 1875. The Dumbrecks had a school for girls here on the corner from about 1865, called ‘Teviotside House’, which was presumably the origin of the name.

Teviot Square (tee-vee-i’-skwār) n. former name for the Sandbed, or the western or central parts, in use between about 1847–57 (e.g. in Slater’s 1852 directory). The name had been officially changed by the Council, but was never very popular – ‘...An’ divots an’ rough-heads gotten where the modern’s now ca’ Teviot Square’ [WNK].

Teviot Stane (tee-vee-i’-stān) n. source of the Teviot, reached by walking about 2½ miles over the moorland from where the road ends at Merrylaw farm. It was once the extremity of Cavers Parish, before being transferred to Teviothead in 1850. An inscribed boulder was erected there by the Callants’ Club in 1931 – ‘...And Teviot Stane pinpointed wi a thack to the bare bougars’ [EM1820] (cf. ‘th’ other yin’).

thiefs (theefz) n., pl. thieves (an example of the use of a different plural form in Hawick).

the Thief’s Hole  (thu-theefs-höl) n. name used to describe Hawick jail, which was a room in the old tollbooth, partly below ground level (also known as the Rogues’ Hole; see Hawick Jail).

Thief’s Hole Sike  (theefs-hól-sik) n. stream that rises to the west of Barnes Loch and joins the Gate Burn just before it crosses the road at the Troutlawford (the origin of the name is unclear; it is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

the Thief’s Road  (thu-theefs-rød) n. popular name for an ancient hill track, part of which leads from Dod farm over to Hermitage Castle and was used by Mary Queen of Scots when she visited Boswell. It was also the name for the road leading across Woll Rig, perhaps a continuation of the same trail. Note that ‘the Maiden’s Way’ may have been essentially the same route from the Dod Burn to Liddesdale, and this was also used as a drove road – ‘The Thieves Road, and a route owre the hags o’ The Roan Scartit in wi’ a pencil’ [DH] (also called the ‘Theif Road’; it may be the ‘Thewesrode’ mentioned in an English document of 1255 listing the boundary of lands in the Cheviots).

Thief’s Sike  (theefs-sik) n. stream that rises on Thiefscie Head, to the south of Hermitage Castle, and flows near Hartsghart to join the Hermitage Water. On the west bank there is a turf building with a knocking-stone. On the eastern side there are the remains of a township, containing about 10 buildings, along with field systems and rig lines. This is probably the settlement of ‘Brocol’ shown on Blaeu’s c.1654 atlas, which was abandoned by the early 17th century. A little higher up are the remains of shieling huts, as well as cairns and cultivation terraces (also written ‘Thief Sike’).

thieftously  (theef-tis-lee) adv., arch. thievously, clandestinely, by stealth – ‘...and theiftu-sleful stealing and away taking out of her house ...’ [BR], ‘Item, that na persone nor personnis schein medowis, balkis, or haynit gers thieftousie ...’ [BR1640] (also theeftously).

thift  (thift) n., arch. theft – ‘...or that committs greitere thift, sal be banyshit the town, and lose thir freedom for ever’ [BR1640], ‘...that the said Bailie Ruecastle was guiltie of Sacriledge, Thift, and with most opprobrious speeches and names ...’ [PR1718].

Thilestane  (thil-stān) n. former lands listed in the charter to James Scott, Earl of Dalkeith in 1693. It is listed among the lands in upper Teviotdale that were once part of the Lordship of Ringwoodfield, hence presumably this is not ‘Thistlestone’.

thi’ll  (thil) contr. they’ll, they will (note pronunciation).

thi’ll’ve  (thi-luv) contr. they’ll’ve, they will have.
thim

(Thin) pron., arch. them (noted by E.C. Smith; thaim and thum are more common).

thimble (thin-blur) n., arch. a thimble-rigger, someone who runs a shell game – ‘A fiddler is here, and a thimbler is there, Wi’ nut-men and spice-men at Copshawholm Fair’ [DA].

Thimble Hill

(thin-sid-hil) n. hilly region in Liddesdale, just to the north of Hartsgarth.

There are many enclosures and some springs marked there.

thir (thir) pron. there – ‘thir’s only the twae o oo left’, ‘thir must be somethin guid aboot Gala, shairly?’ (something closer to the standard English pronunciation is used for the adv., adj. and interj. forms).

Thirmeel Haa

(th-mul-haw) n. former name of a building in Hawick, also known as ‘Tummel Haa’ (noted by G. Watson).

Thirmlefi

(th-mul-fi) n. a thimbleful – ‘No, no, just a thimblefu’. It manna gaun tae ma heid or Aw’ll no’ can tell ma story’ [JEDM].

thing-a-bee

thing-a-beed

(thing-u-beed) n. a thingum-abob, someone or something temporarily forgotten (thingubby and thingummy are also used, as well as the English ‘thingummy’).

(thing-u-bee) n. something whose name is not known or forgotten, a thingummy, thingumajig, whatsit – ‘A hink what’s ‘ei’s name din eet, thingubby, frae the Loan’, ‘Thing-a-bee, thing-a-beet, thing-a-meet, etc., is a substitute for the name of a person or thing unknown or temporarily forgotten. Cf. Gen. Scottish thingumobob, thingiment, etc.; English thingummy’ [ECS].

(there) n., arch. teinder an thirder

Thirat

(th-e-rat) n. a thirder (18th/19th C.) French Napoleonic prisoner of war located in Hawick. He painted ‘View of St. Mary’s’ (1813) among other local scenes (unclear whether this is ‘Monsieur’ or his first initial).

thirder

thir

(thir) v., arch. to bind in servitude, to be bound or under obligation – ‘they were thirled ti the mill, meanin they hed ti git their corn ground there’, ‘Langsyne, when mills were few, The district roon Was thirled to ane, an’ a’ within The legal boond ...’ [FL].

to his tenants. It was part of the feudal structure which tied a farmer to a particular mill – ‘...whereby these Baillies created a sort of thirlage that drew all the drinking to their own houses’ [C&L:1780].

Thirlestane (thi-rul-stān) n. ruined tower and surrounding area in the Ettrick valley, a mile or so north-east of the village of Ettrick. It was once the seat of the Scotts of Thirlestane, who became the Lords Napier of Merchiston and Ettrick, which included the Lord Napier who once resided at Wilton Lodge. They gained the lands in the early 1500s from the Laird of Cranston-Riddell, although there is a John Scott of Thirlestane mentioned in 1483 (when he became Baron of the half barony of Wilton). There is a record in 1493 of cattle and horses being stolen from Thirlestan Mains. The lands were formerly held by Melrose Abbey; in 1524, when Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme was regranted the office of Bailie of the lands of the same name west of Wilton. The lands were formerly held by Melrose Abbey, he was given this farm and that of Northhouse for his fee. This continued in the inheritance of the lands and titles of his grandfather by Walter Scott in 1553/4 (and at that time the lands were jointly valued with Northhouse at £20 Scots), as well as his grandson Sir Walter in 1564 and the next Sir Walter in 1574. These lands were raided by a group of 160 Armstrongs in 1543. The precedence of the Thirlestane branch of the Scotts and ownership of the lands has a complex (and debated) history through the 17th century; the designation ‘of Thirlestane’ was used by 3 separate families (one probably for the lands of the same name west of Yetholm). Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane had a charter for these lands from the Commendator of Melrose in about 1620 and granted them to William Scott of Harden in about 1622. It was still listed as part of the Lordship of Melrose in 1634, 1653 and 1661, when held (perhaps just the superiority) by the Scotts of Buccleuch. The Laird of Thirlestane’s lands in Selkirkshire were valued at more than £3000 in 1678. The L-plan tower stood on the left-bank of the Thirlestane Burn, north-west of the later farmhouse. The tower was burned by the English in 1544, although rebuilt. It contains a lintel stone with the initials ‘R. S. M. C.’ for Robert Scott and Margaret Cranston. The nearby house was built by the Napiers, partly using stones from the tower; however, it was demolished in the 1960s to avoid death duties. The estate passed to George Walker in the late 18th century and then to Richard Brack. It should not be confused with the castle near Lauder of the same name, or the area near Yetholm – ‘Proud she looked round, applause to claim – Then lightened Thirlestane’s eye of flame: His bugle Watt of Harden blew, Pensiis and pennons wide were flung, To Heav’n the Border slogan rung, ‘Saint Mary for the young Buccleuch!’ [SWS], ‘Wber Ettrick wandirs down a plain, With lofty hills belay’t,’ The staitly towirs of Thirlestane With wundir hee surveyt’ [ES] (also written ‘Thirlestane’; ‘Thyrlestan maiori’ stream and ‘Thyrlestangate’ are recorded in a charter around 1236; it is ‘Thiristine’ in 1524, ‘Thyrlestone’ in 1533, ‘Thiristine’ in 1550 and 1553/4, ‘Thristleine’ in 1557, ‘Thiristine’ in 1564, ‘Thyrlestone’ in 1599, ‘Thiristaine’ in 1641, ‘Thirstoun’ and ‘Thresteene’ in 1670, ‘Thristaine’ in 1690 and ‘Thirstoume’ in 1695; it is marked ‘Thirrllstaine’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and is ‘Thiristaine’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey; the origin is presumably a reference to the ‘mill-stone’ to which tenants were ‘thirled’, the lade there was still visible in the late 19th century).

Thirlestane (thi-rul-stān) n. Thirlestane Castle, a turreted edifice of red sandstone, near Lauder, overlooking the Leader Water. The central section was built about 1590, then rebuilt in the 17th century and enhanced around 1840. It was the seat of the Maitland family, Earls of Lauderdale, and is now owned by a charitable trust and open to the public (the only connection with ‘Thirlestane’ in the Ettrick valley was the origin of the name).

Thirwall (thi-rul-wal) n. John ‘the elder’ (14th C.) recorded as owner of the lands of Roughley and ‘Grenhowe’ (possibly Greenholm) in Liddesdale in 1365, when Edward III bestowed protection on his tenants there. The suggestion is that he had acquired lands that had once been part of the Comyn holdings in southern Scotland. His seat was at Thirwall Castle in Northumbria, near the eastern end of Hadrian’s Wall.

thirs see thir

thirsel (thi-rsel) pron., pl. themselves – ‘Keep thum be thirsel’ [ECS] (used as a collective plural; cf. theirselves).

the Thirteen Drifty Days (thu-ther-teen-drift-tee-dăz) n. popular name for a great snowstorm of early 1674 in which the snow fell continuously for 13 days. In the higher parts of southern Scotland whole flocks of sheep were lost, as related by the Ettrick Shepherd. It is said that many shepherds made walls from piles up the dead sheep in order to give some shelter to the living. As much as 90/Scotland perished.
winter weather began in January, and never really let up until the end of March, with the 13 days themselves beginning on 20th February (although there is some confusion over the dates). The Duke of Monmouth and Buccleuch obtained a special licence in 1675 to import 4800 cattle and 200 horses from Ireland to restock their farms in southern Scotland.

the Thirty Shillin Haugh (Thi-ther’-ee-shi-lin-hawf) n. former name for an area of flat ground around the Hermitage Water near the old tower of Park.

day . . . (this-dá) pron., arch. phrases such as ‘this day ten days’ mean ‘10 days from today’ – ‘The minister told us that God willing he intended to administer the Sacrament of ye Supper of our Lord this day twenty dayes, being the thirs Sabbath of October . . . ’[PR1720].

efternin (Thu-sef-tur-nin) n., adv. this afternoon – ‘where er oo gaan this efternin?’ (treated as though it is the sefternin in analogy with ‘the night’, ‘the day’, ‘the morn’, etc.; sometimes shortened to the sef).

This is no my ain Hoose (Thi-is-nó-mi-an-hoos) n. tune that is in the repertoire of the Drums and Fifes, and sometimes played on picking night. The tune is also known as ‘Colonel David Stewart of Garth’s Reel’ and is played in the Thochtless, and sometimes played on pick-night. The tune is also known as ‘Colonel David Stewart of Garth’s Reel’ and is played as a strathspey reel throughout Scotland. It is recorded from at least the early 18th century and as a strathspey reel throughout Scotland. It is recorded from at least the early 18th century and Bonnie Prince Charlie is supposed to have danced to it before the Battle of Prestonpans (also called ‘Oh! This is no my Hoose’).

Thoftcotsys (Thoft-kots) n. former place name in the Borthwick valley, occurring in a document of 1410, when the Regent Albany conferred lands there and at ‘Borthwic’ on Sir William of Borthwick, on their resignation by Robert Scott. The lands are suggested to be at Hoscote, perhaps being an earlier version of the name, or just part of those lands (the name may be a rare local example of the Middle English root ‘toft’, meaning thole

a homestead, unless it is the same as the earlier Yrostilcotis; it seems likely that this was a variant of Hosocate, with the transcription of the ‘s’ for ‘f’).

Thom (töm, tom) n. James (d.1874) Superintendent of police in Hawick 1854–61. He was a founder member of the Hawick Archaeological Society, was also involved in the Hawick Volunteer Corps and helped found the Lodge St. James. He was appointed as Curator of the Society’s Muciety, was also involved in the Hawick Volunteer founder member of the Hawick Archological So-tendent of police in Hawick 1854–61. He was a

Thomas the Rhymer (to-mis-thu-rí-nur) n.
(c.1210–c.1290) Thomas Learmonth, Laird of Ercludone (an old name for Earlston). Although he certainly existed, little detail is known of his life, which has been heavily romanticised. He may have been born in Earlston, where a fragment of his tower remains. He possibly retired to the priory of Fail in Ayrshire, and his lands were transferred to the house of Soutra in 1294. He made many prophecies, often in rhyme, supposedly predicting the accidental death of Alexander III in 1285. He is also meant to have gone off with the Queen of the fairies for 7 years (but actually seems to have been in Aberdeenshire!). His son Thomas is recorded resigning lands to Soutra Hospital in 1294. After his death his reputation as a prophet became legendary, with predictions of the defeat at Flodden, the Union of the Crowns, Bannockburn and the Jacobite risings all being attributed to him – ‘True Thomas lay on Huntlie bank, a ferlie he spied wi’ his ee; And there he saw a ladye bright come riding down by the Eil-don Tree’ [SWS], ‘. . . Where Rymour, long of yore, the nymph embrac’d, The first of men unearthly

Thomline (tom-lin) n. Alexander (1781–1827) born in Wilton Parish, son of William and Jean Smith. He was a Slater and Glazier on the Cross Wyd, listed there in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He married Janet Crawford and their children included: William (d.1808); Robert (b.1806); Elizabeth (b.1808); William (again, b.1811); and Alexander (b.1812). His wife could be the widow ‘Tomline’ recorded keeping lodgings on the Cross Wyd according to Pigot’s 1837 directory.

Alexander ‘Alex’ (19th C.) first Treasurer of the Hawick Home Mission when it was founded in 1873. Andrew (b.1792/3) stocking-maker in Wilton. On the 1841 census he was living on Un-derdamside with ‘Tibby’, who was probably his mother. George (d.1815) recorded in the Hawick death register. James (19th C.) inspector of the poor in Hawick in the late 1800s. He also served as a student teacher in St. Mary’s School.
He was also Registrar in Hawick in the early years of the 20th century. John (18th C.) woollen manufacturer of Hawick, in partnership with William. Since his name is given first he was presumably the older brother. They are described in David Loch’s 1778 book on Scottish trade as dyers and clothiers’ who ‘have considerable business at present, and they have a brother in Glasgow instructing as to the making of cloths fit for that market, and how to use woad in dying of blues & c.’ There are records of help given to them in 1779 by the Board of Trade for Manufactures, instructing them how to use a woad vat. In 1780 he and William were witnesses for a baptism for John Clerk, who was at Roughheugh. The company operated as dyers and finishers in the old Roughheugh waulk mill until they sold it to the Inkle Company in 1797. In 1764 they loaned money to Francis Scott, with 9 High Street as collateral, in a sasine that still exists. In 1788 he was recorded as owner of ‘Waulkmill of Roughheugh’ in Wilton Parish, valued at £22 6s, and another piece of Roughheugh valued at £9. He and William were still recorded as owners of the ‘Waulkmill of Roughheugh, acquired from Langlands’ on the Land Tax Rolls of 1811. The family had been known as ‘Thomline of that Ilk’ and had long resided in Wilton, with their main residence near ‘the Nitton’. However, all trace of the family and its original home had disappeared by the 20th century. He is probably the John who married Mary Ekron in Wilton in 1772 and whose children included: Isabel (b.1773); Andrew (b.1775); James (b.1776); Jean (b.1778); John (b.1784); Andrew (again, b.1786); and William (b.1788). His wife was probably daughter of James Ekron and Isobel Betty Richardson. John (d.1849) Hawick stockmaking who was presumably related to the old Wilton family. He is probably the John recorded on the 1841 census at the Cross Wynd, with wife Helen and children John and George. He may be the John who witnessed a baptism for James Murray (whose son was born at Damside) in 1810. He married Helen Scott and their son George was baptised in Hawick in 1825 Thomas (b.c.1815) shoemaker in Hawick. In 1841 he was at Kirkyard, on Silver Street in 1851 and by 1861 was at 48 Loan. His wife was Isobel and children included Jean (or Janet), James, Alexander, Robert, John, Ralph, Christian and James (again). Walter (b.c.1770) dyer in Wilton. He married Elizabeth (‘Betty’) Hinsleshadow (or ‘Hanselwood’). In 1841 he was living at Underdamside with his wife Betty. Their children included: Jane (b.1793); and Nancy (b.1807). He is probably the ‘Walter Tomlin’ whose child died in Hawick in 1798. In 1851 his widow Betty and son William were living on Underdamside with the family of John Peacock, his son-in-law. William (18th C.) partner with John in an early wool dying business at the Waulk Mill in Wilton. He was probably younger brother of John. In 1780 he and John were witnesses for a baptism for John Clerk, who was at Roughheugh. He and John were recorded as owners of the ‘Waulkmill of Roughheugh, acquired from Langlands’ according to the Land Tax Rolls of 1811. He married Margaret Scott in Wilton in 1766. Their children included: Agnes (b.1767); Jean (b.1769); Andrew (b.1770); and Walter (b.1771). He was recorded at Roughheugh in 1770, with the witnesses being Gavin Turnbull and Thomas Turnbull (perhaps their employees in the mill). He may also be the William who married Jean Smith in 1778. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1778 he married Jean Smith and their children included: Alison (b.1779); Alexander (b.1781); Robert (b.1786); William (b.1789); and Jane (b.1794). William (b.c.1800) born in Innerleithen, he was a stocking-maker in Wilton. He was probably son of Walter and Elizabeth. In 1841 he was living in the same residence as the Lockie family on Damside. In 1851 he was living with his brother-in-law, John Peacock, as well as his mother Betty (also formerly spelled ‘Thomlin’, ‘Thomlins’, ‘Tomlin’, ‘Tomlins’, etc.).

Thomson (tom-sin) n. John Riddle (19th C.) married Jessie T., daughter of Walter Wilson and Isabella Richardson. He had sons Robert Riddle (b.1860) and Walter Wilson (b.1862). Mark Hawick-born power lifter. He won the British Weightlifting Association Bench Press Championship in the 110 kg division in 2005. Robert Riddle (19th C.) son of John Riddle and Jessie Wilson. He was a baker and later insurance inspector in Hawick. He firstly married Margaret, daughter of baker Robert Young, and they had children Aggie Lamb Dryden, Jessie W., Walter W., Robert Young, Elizabeth Margaret and Thomas Dryden (who died in 1917 and is commemorated on the Mikra Memorial). He secondly married Annie, daughter of Joseph Smith, gas manager. Richard (18th/19th C.) from Hawick Parish. He is referred to as being at Woodfoot in 1808 when his sister Janet died. Thomas ‘Tommy’, ‘Tufty’ Cornet of 1955. He rode on the Friday in his jubilee year. William Lindsay (19th/20th C.) from Allan Glen’s School in Glasgow, he became High School Rector in 1908, and remained in the position until 1919 (see also Thomson).

Thomson (tom-, tam-sin) n. Adam (15th C.) recorded as a resident of ‘est grange’ at the 1494/5 Justice-aire in Jedburgh. Thomas Clommell in Minto was charged with stealing a pig from him. He probably lived at Grange in Ancrum Parish. Adam (17th C.) tenant in Singdean in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Rev. Adam (1813-74) born in Coldstream, he was son of Dr. Adam, minister there, who was instrumental in abolishing the monopoly on publication of the bible in Scotland. In 1833 he became assistant and successor of Rev. Henderson at the East Bank Church in Hawick, having also been called to Dunoon. He was recorded living at the East Port in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He suffered from ill-health, spending 6 month periods in Europe in both 1852 and 1856. However, he remained as minister for 28 years, resigning in 1860 and leaving for Sydney, Australia the following year. There he became the first Moderator of the General Assembly of New South Wales. Before his departure there was a special soiree was held, attended by almost all the local ministers. He was there presented with an illuminated address bearing the Burgh Seal, signed by the Magistrates and about 800 others, as well as other gifts, including a copy of the Encyclopaedia Britannica from J.A.H. Murray on behalf of the citizens of Hawick. For the last 2 years of his life he was Principal of St. Andrew’s College in Sydney. He published several sermons while minister in Hawick, including ‘A pastoral memorial: discourses . . . ’ (1860). His sister Elizabeth married John Wilson, manufacturer of Ladylaw, while another sister, Isabella, married Army Paymaster James M. Green and has a memorial obelisk in Wellowgate Cemetery. He married Helen Ritchie Wilson (1819–53), daughter of hosiery manufacturer Peter. Their children were Adam, Mary (who married James Hogg) and Helen (who married James Fell). He later remarried. A memoir ‘Life and Ministry of Rev. Adam Thomson, D.D.’ was written by his son-in-law Rev. P. Landreth. A portrait of him exists. Alexander (15th/16th C.) listed among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Branxholme) pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran. Alexander (17th/18th C.) tenant farmer at Whitchesters. He is listed there on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls and is also recorded there in the early 1700s. In 1706 he witnessed a baptism for William Scott, who was also tenant in Whitchesters (as well as Robert Scott, the other witness). He was attested to be tenant in about 1710 in the evidence given regarding the state of Hawick’s Common in 1767. William Wilson was his servitor in 1712 when rebuked by the Hawick Parish Session. He witnessed a baptism for tailor John Wilson in 1713. He is probably the Alexander, married to Marion Armstrong, whose children born in Hawick included an unnamed son (b.1683) and John (b.1685). He was deceased in 1719 and ‘sometimes tenent in Whitchesters’ when his daughter Agnes married John Scott (tenant in Hawickshiel). Alexander (d.bef. 1777) resident of Hawick. He married Agnes Cathræ, who died in Hawick in 1777. Rev. Alexander McInroy (d.1897) licensed by Edinburgh Presbytery in 1888, he was assistant at St. Clement’s in Dundee and then ordained as minister of St. John’s in Hawick in 1889. He resigned his position in 1894. Allan (16th/17th C.) described as ‘in Clarelaw’ in a 1612 document, where a number of people were accused of over-charging interest on loans. Andrew (b.1716/7) workman of Hawick, chosen as one of the 6 representative Burgesses in 1767 to define the boundaries of the Common. He may be the Andrew, son of John, born in Wilton Parish in 1715. He could be the Andrew who in 1772 witnessed a baptism for Andrew Leithhead and Marjory Thomson. He could be the Andrew who married Margaret Riddell (who died in Hawick in 1781), with their daughter Betty baptised in 1758. Andrew (18th C.) cottar at Ashkirk Mill. He married Bessie Riddell and their included: Robert (b.1745); and James (b.1749). Andrew (18th C.) recorded at Burnfoot in Ashkirk Parish on the 1794 Horse Tax Rolls. Andrew (b.1763/4) farmer at Bewlie, recorded on the 1787–97 Horse Tax Rolls. He also had 6 farm horses in 1797 and paid the dog tax at Bewlie in the same year. He was probably the Andrew recorded being in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1787 when his marriage to Christian Usher was announced in Melrose Parish, with Andrew ‘Heiton’ as cautioner; she was daughter of John Usher of Toftfield. He was at Bewlie on the subscription list for Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. He was recorded as deceased in 1828 in a letter from James Usher, writer in Edinburgh, preservated in the Walter Mason Collection; this was either an error, or referred to his father perhaps. He was at Bewlie in 1841, along with children John, Jessie and Betsy. He was at Bewlie in 1841, along with children John, Jessie and Betsy. In 1851 he was a retired farmer at Bewlie Mains, where his son John was farmer. His children probably included: Robert (b.1788); John (b.1789); Janet (b.1794); Thomas (b.1796); Betsy (b.1798); James (b.1800); William (b.1803); and Andrew (b.1806). Andrew (b.c.1780) recorded as ‘Independent’ in 1841 when he was living in Lilliesleaf, probably on the north side of Main Street. He was there with his children Helen, George, Esther and Andrew. He married Jean Harvey and their children included: Helen (b.1810); George (b.1817); and Andrew (b.1826), who farmed at Billerwell. Andrew (1788/9–bef. 1861) born in Ashkirk Parish, he was a road surveyor in Ewesdale. He was living at Brieryshaw in 1841 and 1851. He was unmarried and lived with his sister Mary Riddell; she was a widow in 1851, and listed as ‘Fund Holder’ in 1861. Andrew (19th C.) architect who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. Probably the same Andrew was involved with the building of St. George’s Church in Hawick. Andrew (b.1826) born in Lilliesleaf Parish, son of Andrew and Jean Harvey. He was tenant of Billerwell farm for about 40 years in the latter part of the 19th century. He was at Billerwell in 1861 as farmer of 300 acres, employing 5 people. His wife was Janet and their children included Margaret, Jane, Andrew and Mina. He had a brother George and a sister Helen. Andrew (b.1834/5) son of shepherd Robert, he was born in Southdean Parish. He became shepherd at Wigg on Wauchope farm. Like his father he was a strong supporter of Wolfelee Free Kirk. His children included: William, who was also a shepherd at Wigg; and Marianne. His wife died in 1904. Andrew (19th C.) framesmith at Robert Ewen’s factory, who left for Nottingham. He was a popular local singer. He is probably the Andrew listed as a millwright journeyman at Melgund Place in 1841, with wife Agnes and children Walter and Elizabeth. Ann (18th C.) housemaid at Wells in 1785, when she was working for Gilbert Elliott. Archibald ‘Archie’ (16th C.) listed in 1576 as a servant of Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule. There was a promise that he, as well as Martin Crozier in Bedrule, and Martin’s son Martin, should all refrain from theft. However, they were all declares rebels in 1578/9. Archibald (18th C.) foreman at Dickson’s Hassendeanburn nurseries around 1770. Rev. Charles (1795–1871) born in Dalserf in 1795, he was educated at Edinburgh University. He came to Hawick in 1821 to be assistant for Rev. James Arkle of Hawick Parish. There appears to have been some dispute with the Duke of Buccleuch about his appointment, and he did not become Arkle’s successor. He was ordained at North Shields in 1823 and became minister of Wick in 1840, then went to the Free Church at the Disruption of 1843, serving at Wick until his retirement. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. In 1825 in Hawick he married Janet, daughter of merchant Francis Ballantyne, and had 11 children. He visited Hawick in 1837, during the contested election, and gave evidence at the later investigation. He was mentioned in a poem by David Waters, suggesting he was locally an unpopular anti-Reform minister, and also claiming that involvement in vote rigging was the reason he failed to get support from the local aristocracy for a living – ‘...Or, maybe for a daintie kirk, As did his Reverend Frien’ o’ Shiels. – (Thae Tory priests are very diels For mischief, rogery and cunnin’ ...)[RDW]. It was also said that by marrying the daughter of Ballantyne, he took some of the spoils that had been fraudulently extracted from Ballantyne’s former partner, ‘Auld Cash’ – ‘A black robed son of light – yclepd a priest, Removed a load of guilt from off his breast, He wed his daughter and then shared the spoil Which half-way went to save Francisco’s soul’[RDW]. David (16th C.) recorded in North Synton in 1581/2. George Caverhill in Whitehaughbrae resigned to him a tenement in Selkirk. David L. son of Rev. Lyndsay, he was educated at Hawick High School. He then attended Aberdeen and Glasgow Universities. He is an evolutionary and environmental biologist and is Associate Professor at the University of Hong Kong. Elizabeth (15th C.) mentioned in 1494/5 when she was allowed to ‘compound’ for resetting ‘Joiffe Glenquin’ (possible Geoffrey Glenholm), who had been involved in the murder of the Laird of Alemoor. She is referred to as ‘in Corrisheuch’, which may be Corrie Sike in upper Teviotdale. However, it is unclear where she came from or how she may have been related to other Thomsons. She is recorded as ‘Besse Thomson’ in the Treasurer’s accounts for 1494/5 having obtained remission from the King. Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (17th/18th C.) Hawick parishioner who died in the early 1700s. She left a ‘mortification’ to help the poor. The Session decided to enter her name in gilt letters on a big black board in the church, as a way of encouraging other donations; unfortunately this project used up all the money she had left! Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (19th C.) baker in Newcastle upon Tyne according to Pigot’s 1837 directory. She could be the Betty Thomson (or Little) who was a widow at about 17 North Hermitage Street in 1841 and 1851. Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (b.c.1800) baker on the Fore Raw, recorded on the 1841 census. George (15th/16th C.) resident of Spittal. In 1502 it is recorded that he had 2 pigs stolen from him there, by Adam Grahamslaw, son of the Laird of Little Newton. George (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, when it included Hassendean. The baptism of his daughter Bessie is recorded in Roberton in 1680, ‘begotten in fornication with Isobell hendersen’: the witnesses were Robert and James Thomson (presumably close relatives, perhaps his brothers). He married Isobel Turnbull in Roberton in 1684 and had children including Isobel (b.1685) and Robert (b.1688). The witnesses in 1688 were Robert and James. Along with Robert he witnessed a baptism for James in 1686. George (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He probably farmed near Newton. George of Fodderlee (18th C.) husband of Margaret Kerr, from whom he probably inherited the half lands of Fodderlee. In 1788 (and continued in 1811) he is recorded as owner of the lands of Easter Fodderlee, valued at £80. His son was Robert. George (18th C.) house servant at Weens in 1791, when he was working for William Oliver of Dinlabyre. Perhaps the same George was also listed as groom at Borthwickbrae in the same year. He was still a servants at Weens in 1792. In 1794 he was a house servant at Larriston, still working for William Oliver. George (18th/19th C.) farmer at Chapel in the 1787–1789 Horse Tax Rolls for Lilliesleaf Parish. In 1797 he owned 5 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. George (b.1788/9) born in Cavers Parish. He was farmer at Cavers Knowes in 1841. In 1851 he was a gardener in Wilton, living at Wilton Kirk Style. He was a member of Al-lars Kirk in about the 1830s. His wife was Isabella (from Roberton) and their children included Helen, George, Walter, Margaret, Isabella and Elizabeth.

Dr. George William (b.1818) son of Thomas and Anna Drummond from Midlothian. He was brother of Wyville Smith Thomson, who was minister at Cardross, Dunbartonshire. He was minister at Hassendean Parish. In Slater’s 1852 directory he is listed as a druggist on ‘Market pl’ and as part of the partnership of ‘Graham & Thomsp’, physicians on Buccleuch Street. However, in 1861 he is recorded living at 10 Buccleuch Street. In 1841 he married Margaret Lang from Dumfriesshire. His children included: George William; Margaret Cadenhead, who married William Scott Elliot; Walter Gowdie; John Lang; Thomas Drummond; Anna Drummond, who married John Turnbull Laing; Emma M.; and Wyville Smyth. He lived at 10 Buccleuch Street and at Northville, Bridge Street. George (b.1820/1) from Lilliesleaf, he was farmer at Newhouses in Wilton Parish. He is recorded there in 1851 with his brother Andrew and sister Helen. George (19th C.) left Hawick in about 1869 and later became Provost in Johnstone in Renfrewshire. He was Provost there 1893–99. In 1897 he gifted to the Town an ornamental fountain, which was sited in Drumlanrig Square, to be replaced about 1910 with the more elaborate Brown Fountain. He attended the 1899 Common Riding, but was reported being in ill health later that year. Gideon (b.1684) son of Robert. In 1707 he and his father were witnesses for a baptism for James Renwick, under-miller at Newmill. Helen ‘Nelly’ (18th C.) laundry maid at Minto in 1789 when she was working for Sir Gilbert Elliot. Isobel (17th/18th C.) recorded receiving money from Ashkirk Parish in 1727. Isobel ‘Tibbie Tamson’ (d.1790) resident of Selkirk, said to be of weak intellect. She was accused of stealing yarn and hanged herself. According to local custom suicides could not be buried in consecrated ground, so her coffin was dragged to a place ‘where 3 lairds’ lands meet’, specifically the Lairds of Philiphaugh and Bowhill and the Burgh of Selkirk, just to the north of Selkirk on Foulshiels Hill. She was interred there, with a rough gravestone placed there later to mark the spot. At Selkirk Common Riding a wreath is placed on her grave, which was marked with a plaque in 1990. There are similarities with the story of ‘Jenny Saut Haa’ in Wilton. J. (18th/19th C.) resident of Westburnflat. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. James (16th C.) recorded in 1541 on a list of tenants and other associates of James Douglas of Cavers when he complained about his farm of Whittriggs being burned by Walter Scott of Branxholme. James (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish (the part corresponding to Hassendean). He married Margaret Riddell and their children included: Robert (b.1679); James (b.1680); Christian (b.1683); Bessie (b.1686); and Andrew (b.1688). The witnesses in 1680 were William Gray and Robert Graham and in 1686 were Robert and George (who were probably related). He is probably the James who (along with Robert) witnessed baptisms for George in 1680 and 1688, who witnessed a baptism for Robert in 1687 and who witnessed another for Andrew Leyden in 1683. He is probably one of the Jameses recorded at Hassendean on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th C.) resident at Easter Highchesters according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. James (17th C.) resident of ‘the netherend’ of Hassendean Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th C.) resident at Hassendean Townhead according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, living at Weensland in 1704. He married Agnes Thorbrand and their children included: David (b.1689), baptised in Ashkirk; and Alexander (b.1704), baptised in Hawick. The witnesses in 1704 were David Miller and Walter Paisley. James (17th/18th C.) married Elspeth Scott in Bedrule in 1715. James (18th C.) married...
Jean Phaup in Minto in 1722. James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Ashybank in 1726 when his daughter Janet was baptised. Ann (b.1727), baptised in Cavers, was probably also his child. James (18th C.) tenant at Midshiels. His daughter Christian married nursery-man Archibald Dickson. He could be the James who in 1729 witnessed a baptism for Richard Turnbull, resident of Midshiels. James (1700–48) poet born at Ednam. He grew up at Southdean, 3rd son of Thomas, who was Minister there (and who apparently died during an exorcism at Wolfelee). He should not be confused with his more famous Hawick namesake! He attended Jedburgh Grammar School and had a Presbytery Bursary in Arts and Divinity at Edinburgh University 1715–24; he was ‘Lowland Bursar’ for Hawick Parish for the last 4 of these years. He was patronised by Sir Gilbert Elliott of Minto, among other men, and spent some vacations at Minto. He also held lands at Wideopen, near Morebattle, inherited via his mother. He moved to London in about 1725. He wrote the words for ‘Rule Britannia’ and the epic poem ‘The Seasons’ (used by Handel as text for his oratorio), as well as the highly successful play ‘Tancred and Sigismunda’ amongst other things. Scenes from ‘the Seasons’ are inspired by areas around Jedburgh and Southdean, with the description of a storm collecting over mountain cliffs said to have been based on Ruberslaw. A cave near Ancrum, popularly known as ‘Thomson’s Cave’ was supposed to have been a popular spot for him to visit, and to have his name carved on its roof. He retired to Richmond, Surrey, where he is buried. The armchair in which he composed the ‘Castle of Indolence’ (being high-backed and made of beechwood, with a burn on one arm where it is said a candle fell while he was absorbed in his writing) was acquired by Gilbert Elliott of Otterburn, factor at Wells; Elliott insisted that Burns sit in the chair during his brief visit to Wells House in 1787. A large hawthorn bush in a garden in Southdean was long regarded as being associated with the poet. There is a memorial obelisk to him overlooking Ednam, another memorial (‘Temple of the Muses’) on the Bass Hill of Dryburgh, erected by David Stuart Erskine, and a memorial window at Southdean Kirk. Erskine organised a memorial celebration to which Burns was invited but sent lines of apology – ‘So long, sweet poet of the year, Shall bloom that wreath thou well hast sown While Scotia, with exulting tear Proclaims that Thomson was her son’. A bi-centenary celebration with speeches etc. was held at Southdean kirk in 1900 – ‘To thee, fair Jed! a holier wreath is due, Who gav’st thy Thomson all thy scenes to view, Bad’st forms of beauty on his vision roll, And mould to harmony his ductile soul’ [JL], ‘And Ednam’s Bard, whose moral strain, I ween, Shall run coeval with the tide of time, While love and taste and genius shall the soul sublime’ [JTe]. James (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Todd-shawhillshiel in 1721 and 1726. His children, baptised in Robertson, included: ‘Maury’ (b.1721); James (b.1724); and Jean (b.1726). James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Agnes Turnbull and their children included Christian (b.1718), William (b.1721), Walter (b.1723) and Margaret (b.1726). James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Isobel Deans and their children included Isobel (b.1726), George (b.1728), Robert (b.1730) and James (b.1732). James (18th C.) married Mary Elliot in Hawick in 1727. James (18th C.) married Rachel Douglas in Wilton in 1731. James (18th C.) married Helen Turnbull in Wilton in 1747. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Jean Turnbull and their children included Andrew (b.1752). James (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Howcleuch in 1764. His children, baptised in Robertson, included Betty (b.1750), Helen (b.1755), James (b.1758), John (b.1760) and Robert (b.1764). James (18th C.) tenant farmer at Nether Ancrum. In 1778 he had a sasine for the lands of Fodderlee, following a disposition by Robert of Fodderlee, who must have been a near relative. In 1784 East Fodderlee was sold to William Riddell, and along with Riddell he granted a disposition for the lands to John Thomson; this may have been the John born to a James Thomson in Minto Parish in 1783. He was surely related to George, who was recorded as owner of East Fodderlee in 1788 (unless there is an error in forenames). James (1752–1831) born in Hawick. In 1785 he emigrated to the Niagara district of what was then called Upper Canada. There he married Margaret Emerick and they had 10 children; this included David, who rose to the rank of Major in the Canadian militia, a founding member of the Grand River Navigation Company and owner of several mills and Canadian Member of Parliament. He and his sons built their brick house, baking the bricks themselves. He was described as ‘a stern old Presbyterian’. James (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He was at Dinlabyre in 1778. He married Janet Shiel and their son Duncan was baptised in 1778. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Outerside in 1793, in 1794 was ‘late in Broadlee’ and in 1798 was at Unthank in Ewes Parish. He married Isobel Graham in 1792 and their children included: Jane (b.1793), James (b.1794), Isobel (b.1796) and Janet (b.1799), all baptised in Robertson; and Mary (b.1802), John (b.1803), Edward Aitchison (b.1805), Robert (b.1807), William (b.1808), Christian Aitchison (b.1810) and Edward (b.1811), all born in Ewes. James (b.1776/7) born at Over Huntly, son of James and Mary Stirling. He was surveyor of roads on the Loan, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He may be the ‘Mr. Thomson’ whose land is marked on the left side of the Loan, just before the Moat, on Wood’s 1824 map. He was listed as a road-surveyor on the subscription list for Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. In 1841 he was living on the Loan with his wife Rachel and children Robert, William, Mary and Rachel. He was still living on the Loan in 1851, as a retired surveyor. He married Rachel Wilkie from Midlem and their children (all born in Ashkirk Parish) included: Andrew (b.1800); John (b.1804); Robert (b.1806), grocer; Janet (b.1808); William (b.1810), hosier; Mary (b.1814); Rachel (b.1817); and Margaret (b.1821). James (b.1781) born in Minto Parish, son of James. He was a forester in Castleton Parish, living at Sandholm. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He was listed as a ‘Woodforester’ at Sandholm in 1835–41. He married Margaret Common. Their children included: Janet (b.c.1816), who married Andrew Elliot; Richard (b.1817); Andrew (b.1819); Jane (b.c.1822) and Mary (b.c.1825). Either he or his father was recorded as forester for the Buccleuch estates in Liddesdale in at least the period 1798–1807. He is probably the Thomson from Sandholm who was on the Committee of the Proprietors of Castleton Library. James (18th/19th C.) listed at ‘Pingle’ on the subscription list for William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He probably lived at Pingle south of Langholm, but it could have been Pinglehole. James (18th/19th C.) from Hawick, recorded in a document related to the Haremoss Toll, preserved in the Walter Mason Collection in Selkirk. James (18th/19th C.) servant at Shaws in Castleton Parish. He was listed as male head of his family in 1835. He married Janet Jackson, but they were rebuked for ‘antenuptial fornication’ in 1832. James (b.c.1805) born at Appletreehall. He was a joiner in Jedburgh. His wife was Jane and their children included Mary Ann, John, Elizabeth, Isabella, James and Thomasina. James ‘Jimmy’ or ‘Jamie Tamson’ (1827–1888) poet and song-writer, born in Bowden. He had a maternal uncle, Dr. Wilkie of Innerleithen, who was an archeologist and friend of Sir Walter Scott, James Hogg and Dr. Jamieson. He was also a cousin of poet Thomas Aird. He had a sister who became Mrs. Drummond of Tranent. He herded cows in the Eildons, where he got to know the poet Andrew Scott. From age 16 he served an apprenticeship as a wood-turner and cabinet-maker in Selkirk. He worked there for a while, before moving to Hawick, where he spent more than 30 years. His first compositions appeared in the Dumfries Herald. He was writer of ‘Up wi’ the Banner’, ‘The Border Queen’, ‘Hawick Volunteers’ and ‘The Star o’ Robbie Burns’, as well as poems such as ‘The Auld Mid Raw’, ‘The Mither Tongue’, ‘The Wee Croodlin’ Doo’ and ‘Hairst’, many contained in his book ‘Doric Lays & Lyrics’ (1870). ‘Our Robin’ was one of his first poems, being published in the late 1850s, with his ‘Hogmanay’ sung at the New Year of 1860 at the Ewan’s Mill gathering. A great admirer of Burns, he helped found the Burns Club in Hawick; it is said that Burns’ ‘Kilmarnock Edition’ was his constant companion while he was a herdsman. He was Masonic Provincial Grand Bard for Peebles and Selkirk, as well as Bard for Lodge 424. He was said to have lived in the auld Mid Raw and later at 54 High Street, where a commemorative plaque was erected in 1995. In the 1861 census he is listed on Wilton Terrace, living with a housekeeper Mary Riddell, and her children Mary and Catherine, as well as their children together, John and Helen. In poor health in later life, he moved back to Bowden in 1886, but returned to Hawick a few months later and was supported by his Masonic brethren. In 1887 he presented ‘Up wi’ the Banner’ to the Cornet, this being only about a year and a half before his death. He died in the Cottage Hospital and is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery, where Lodge 424 erected a memorial obelisk. A wooden cup he made from material salvaged from the Mid Raw is in the Museum. The Hawick Burns Club unveiled his portrait at their clubrooms in 1924. In 2005 the new bridge across the Teviot was named after him, and an adjacent statue (by Bill Landles) unveiled in 2006. James (d.1939) son of John, farmer at Synton Mains. He became a saddler of 6 High Street, taking over the butcher’s premises.

of George Davies. His brothers William and John were both farmers. He was secretary of the Border Oddfellows for 30 years and was for many years Session Clerk for East Bank Church. Janet (b.c.1790) confectioner at the Sandbed. In Pigot’s 1837 directory she is listed as a baker and confectioner on the High Street. She was recorded at about No. 12 Sandbed on the 1841 census. John (15th/16th C.) witness to a sasine for the Erskines in their lands of Synton in 1508, where he is ‘John Thomesoun’. Judging by the other witnesses, he may have been local. John (16th C.) recorded in 1539 as a subtenant of Margaret Falside and Walter Scott in their lands in either Ashkirk or Falside. John (16th C.) servant to Walter Scott of Headshaw. He was recorded in Headshaw in 1580 when he and Richard Brown acted as cautioners for Walter Scott of Headshaw to make payment to Thomas Ker of Kippielaw. In 1583/4 he was among a number of men from the area who were denounced for failing to appear to give evidence in a case against the Turnbulls of Bedrule. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Caverhill and their children included James (b.1649). John (17th C.) tenant in ‘Mabinslaw’ on a 1684 list of Roxburghshire men declared as fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. He probably farmed at Mabonlaw. John (d.c.1687) tenant in Flatt when his will was recorded in 1687. It is unclear if this was the Flatt in Castleton Parish. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Isobel Whillans and their children included James (b.1674), Isobel (b.1684) and Bessie (b.1687). The baptism of Bessie was witnessed by Stephen Greenshields and Michael Turnbull. John (17th C.) tenant in Lethem in Southdean Parish according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick, living near the East Port. In 1706 he was one of the people who were disturbed at night by a group who were involved in drunken revelry, and later charged. He was apparently forced to ‘ryse naked out of his bed’ and threatened with being taken away by the pretend officers. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Drinkstone in 1722. He married Isobel Gray in 1714. Their children included: Andrew (b.1715); Andrew (again, b.1718); and Isobel (b.1722). The witnesses in 1722 were William Riddell and John Scott and in the same year he (along with John Scott) witnessed a baptism for William Riddell, who lived at Appletreehall. He may be the John in ‘Brihool’ (probably Briery-hill) whose funeral is recorded in 1750. John (18th C.) resident of Giddenschleuch. His son William was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1724. John (18th C.) resident of the Flex. He married Mary Miller and their children included Mary (b.1721), Gideon (b.1722) and James (b.1726). The witnesses in 1726 were George Gibson and James Gledstains. John (d.bef. 1776) grocer in Hawick, mentioned in an Edinburgh marriage record of 1776, when his daughter Christian married David Brown. John (18th C.) farmer at Wester Essenside. He was recorded there on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1789-94. He is probably the John who married Mary Gray and whose children included: Andrew (b.1759); Margaret (b.1760); Agnes (b.1761); Robert (b.1763), who probably took over the farm of Wester Essenside; Jane (b.1765); James (b.1768); Thomas (b.1774); and Mary (b.1776). John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Betty Paterson and their children included Robert (b.1771). John (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Margaret Boyd in 1789. Their children included: Thomas (b.1792); and John (b.1794). The 1792 baptism was carried out ‘In presence of the Congregation’ and the 1794 baptism witnessed ‘by the Burgher Congregation’. John (18th/19th C.) tailor in Roberton Parish. In 1795 he is recorded at Greenbank. He married Helen Chisholme in Roberton in 1794 and their children included William (b.1795). John (18th/19th C.) Hawick carrier who owned 2 horses according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Deanbrae, recorded as owner of 4 horses on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John (18th/19th C.) gardener at Teviotbank in 1797, when he was working for David Simpson. John (18th/19th C.) possibly son of James, who owned Fodderlee and farmed at Nether Ancrum. He was granted a disposition for East Fodderlee in 1784 and in 1802 sold the lands to Thomas Gregson, farmer at Whitchesters. John (18th/19th C.) tenant of Billerwell farm, in the Rule valley. After the Teviot flood swept away much of Hassendean churchyard (where his ancestors were buried) he moved the tombstone to Billerwell. John (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Janet Reid and their children included: Janet and Jean (b.1803); and Cicely (b.1806). John (18th/19th C.) farmer in the Hawick area. He married Agnes Lambert and their children included John (b.1834/5), who was a mason. John (b.1789) son of Andrew, who farmed at Bewlie. He himself is recorded in 1851 at Bewlie Mains, farming 1035 acres and employing 35 labourers. He was unmarried at that time and living with his retired father and sister Betsy. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Rachel Scott and their son John was born in 1814, with witness appearing to be Jane Scott. John (19th C.) member of East Bank Kirk. He married Margaret Preston and their daughter Violet was baptised in 1832. Rev. John (1823–1889) born in Over-Roxburgh, son of farmer William and Margaret Shiel. He was educated at Ancrum School and Edinburgh University. He was licensed by Kelso Presbytery in 1854 and became assistant minister at Selkirk. He was ordained as minister of St. Mary’s after it had become a ‘quoad sacra’ church in 1860. He lived at 9 Buccleuch Street and later built Rosalee when his wife inherited a small fortune. He also owned Allanshaws in Kelso. Together they founded St. John’s Church in 1880, and he formally became its first minister in 1881 (having resigned his position at St. Mary’s in 1879). He was Chaplain to the Cornet several times in the 1880s and supported the Common Riding at a time when many of the other local ministers railed against it. His acceptance of an invitation to the Cornet’s Breakfast in 1887 was the start of that event becoming a formal part of the proceedings, and his reciprocation to invite the supporters to his church the following Sunday was the beginning of the ‘Kirkin’.

The lands that he purchased included some parts of what had previously been Roughheugh (and owned by Walter Scott). He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1877. He also served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. His wife was Mary Ann, daughter of James Scott of Allanshaws and Mary Brown. Mrs. Thomson also paid for the new iron pump at the Verter Well (she later married William Ludovic Mair, Sheriff-Substitute of Lanarkshire, and died in 1891). Their children were Margaret Shiel (who married Robert Grierson Laidlaw of Hazelwood, Hawick), and 5 others who died young. He wrote several books including ‘Address to Ploughmen’ (also called ‘Address on the Evils of the Bondage System’, published in Hawick, 1866), ‘The art of weaving spiritualised’ (Hawick, 1869 and 1874), ‘Voices from the Plough’ (Hawick, 1869), ‘History of Peter Plough’ (Hawick, 1872), ‘Life and times of William Thomson’ (1875 and 1879), ‘Alexander Hope: a Hawick story’ (1878, perhaps with a 2nd part in 1879), ‘The Life of James Scott of Allanshaws’ (1879), ‘The Art of Ploughing Spiritualised’, plus at least one other sermon and ‘Speeches delivered on Different Occasions’ (Hawick, 1882). Although ‘Alexander Hope’ was a work of fiction (with a strong moralistic message, particularly against the evils of drink), it contains several local anecdotes that are still of interest. John (19th/20th C.) farmer at Greensidehall and later Sinton Mains. He was brother of saddler James and farmer William. His son John was Secretary of the Oddfellows. John (19th/20th C.) commercial traveller of Hawick, he served as Session Clerk for St. George’s Kirk 1915–24. Rev. John Archibald Glover (b.1883) son of John Cornwallis, minister in Edinburgh and Anne Dundas Glover. His brother was James C. He was born in Sanquhar, Dumfriesshire and educated at George Watson’s College, Glasgow Academy and Glasgow University. He was licensed to preach by Glasgow Presbytery in 1906, became an assistant at St. Andrew’s in Edinburgh, and in 1910 was ordained at Wallacetown, Ayr. He moved to the Tron Kirk, Edinburgh, in 1916 and served with the R.A. Chaplains’ Department 1917–18. He became minister of Hawick Parish in 1925. He also stood in as ‘interim-moderator’ for St. George’s Kirk when it was without a minister in 1936/7. He wrote ‘Roll of the Parish Ministry of Hawick, A.D. 1183–1929’ (1936), which he had made into a fine manuscript volume, preserved in the church.

He married Ethel Maud Richardson and they had a son Aiden (b.1911). Rev. Joseph (1791/2–65) son of John, the Town Clerk of Jedburgh. He was licensed by Jedburgh Presbytery in 1814 and appointed preacher at Caerenlrig (Teviothead) ‘chapel-of-ease’ in 1817. However, 2 years later he was ordained as minister at Ednam, then translated to Morebattle in 1844. He married Margaret (who died in 1844, aged 43), daughter of Thomas S. Hardie, minister of Ashkirk. He later married Elizabeth F. Robson. He wrote an account of Ednam Parish. Rev. Lindsay (1938–2014) born in Edinburgh and brought up in Stow, he studied at Edinburgh University and served as Assistant Minister at Palmerston Church in Edinburgh from 1962. He was ordained as Minister of Balnornock North in Glasgow in 1964 and appointed preacher at Caerenlrig (Teviothead) ‘chapel-of-ease’ in 1817. However, 2 years later he was ordained as minister at Ednam, then translated to Morebattle in 1844. He married Margaret (who died in 1844, aged 43), daughter of Thomas S. Hardie, minister of Ashkirk. He later married Elizabeth F. Robson. He wrote an account of Ednam Parish. Rev. Lindsay (1938–2014) born in Edinburgh and brought up in Stow, he studied at Edinburgh University and served as Assistant Minister at Palmerston Church in Edinburgh from 1962. He was ordained as Minister of Balnornock North in Glasgow in 1964 and then moved to Hawick in 1972 as Minister of Trinity Kirk. He became a well-known and active member of the local community, growing to love its traditions and institutions. He acted as Callants’ Club Chaplain and was also involved with the Probus Club. He was Common Riding Chief Guest in 2008 and retired that year after 36 years of service. Despite being advised to move away from his charge in order to enjoy a peaceful retirement, he insisted on staying on in Hawick. He married Brenda Shanks and their children are Stuart, David and Helen. Lisa (1997–) attended Trinity and Hawick High Schools and then Edinburgh University. She played for Melrose Ladies, Edinburgh University, French side Lille Metropole and D.M.P. Durham Sharks. She made her international debut against England in 2016 and was Scottish team Captain for the 2018/9 season. Patrick (15th C.) listed at the 1493 Justice-aine in Jedburgh when William Douglas of Cavers was fined for his non-appearance. He was recorded being ‘i dēnū’, which is probably an abbreviation for ‘in dennum’, i.e. he lived in Denholm. Richard (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick Parish. He married Martha Norval and their children included: John (b.1758); and Margaret (b.1760). His wife was probably recorded in 1787 when ‘Martha Novels Grandchild’ died in Hawick.

Richard (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1778 he married Euphan Cairns and their children included: James (b.1779); Janet (b.1781); John (b.1783); and Archibald (b.1785). The witnesses in 1779 were ‘The Associate Congregation’. Richard (18th/19th C.) recorded at Woodfoot in Hawick Parish on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was probably farmer at Borthaugh Woodfoot. He is probably the Richard whose daughter Isabel died in Hawick in 1815. Robert (16th C.) farmer at Hawthornside ‘Newtown’. His barn and yard are recorded in 1562 in the document dealing with the Baronial land dispute in Feu-Rule. Robert (d.c.1606) minister of Ratho who was presented as minister of Castleton Parish at the end of 1604. He may have held both at the same time, but not for long, since he was dead within less than 2 years. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Dobie and their daughter Janet was baptised in 1646. Robert (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish (the part corresponding to Hassendean). Along with James he witnessed baptisms for George in 1680 and 1688, and along with George he witnessed a baptism for James in 1686. It seems likely that he was father or brother of both George and James. He also witnessed a baptism for John Hope in 1681 and Andrew Leyden in 1683. He married Margaret Gray in Roberton Parish in 1679 and their children included: Helen (b.1680); Dand (b.1682); Robert (b.1684); and Janet (b.1687). He was probably also the Robert recorded in Burnfoot in 1697 when his son Robert was baptised in Wilton Parish. The witnesses in 1687 were James (perhaps his brother) and Thomas Caldwell. The witnesses in 1697 were Adam Scott of Burnfoot and James White. Robert (18th C.) tenant in Hawick Shiel mentioned in 1679 when Robert Wright was fined for destroying a load of peat that he had cut, and he himself was fined for ‘ane ryott committ upon the said Robert Wright’. He may be the Robert who witnessed a baptism for John Dryden in 1675. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (d.bef. 1720) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Janet Dickson. Their son George was born in 1687, with Gideon Scott of Outerside and Rev. Thomas Shiel as witnesses (suggesting he was from the countryside to the south of Hawick). His children included: Helen (b.1675); Gideon (b.1684); Isobel (b.1685), who married Robert Nichol in Hawick in 1720; and George (b.1687). In 1707 he and his son Gideon witnessed a baptism for James Renwick, undermiller at Newmill. This suggests he may be the same man as the tenant in Castlehill and Newmill. Robert (1668/9–1740) tenant in Greens in Castleton Parish. He married Betty Scott, who died in 1739, aged 73 years. He may have had a son William (also tenant in Greens), whose wife Isabella Armstrong died in 1748, aged 40. They are buried in Etterton. Robert (17th/18th C.) tenant at Castlehill (near Newmill) in 1690. He is listed as ‘Rot. Thomsono officer’, but it is unclear what ‘officer’ meant. He is probably the same Robert listed as tenant at Newmill on Teviot on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, where he was ‘wt tuo kilns’ and paid tax for 4 hearths. He was in ‘Newmilne’ in 1696 when his son Walter was baptised. He may be the Robert who witnessed a baptism for James Storie in 1698 and for smith John Dryden in 1700. He was also in Newmill when he witnessed baptisms in 1700 for William Bell in Whitchesters and Walter Wilson in Castlehill, in 1701 for smith John Dryden (whose wife was a Thomson), in 1702 for Gilbert Elliot in Nether Southfield, in 1704 for Walter Wilson in Castlehill, in 1705 twice (one at Branxholmowntown), in 1706 for Robert Henderson, in 1707 for Walter Wilson again and for Walter Craw in Branxholme Town, in 1708 for James Stevenson in Harwood, in 1709 for James Scott, tenant in Nether Southfield, in 1712 for Robert Scoon in Branxholme Town, for William Allan (in ‘Park’) and for James Scott in Stob icote (husband of his step-daughter), and in 1713 for John Riddell in Branxholme Town. Given all the baptisms that he witnessed, it is likely he was a Kirk Elder, acting for the Newmill area. He was recorded in Newmill in 1709 when his ‘servitor’ John Nichol had a child baptised. Probably the same Robert was in Newmill in 1723 when (along with William) he witnessed a baptism for smith James Dryden and in 1726 other baptisms (also along with William) for John Scott, for John Riddell and for Walter Scott in Newmill. In 1731 he witnessed a further baptism for William (who was also at Newmill). He may have been ancestor of the later Robert at Newmill on Slitrig (although maybe that is just a coincidence). He is probably the Robert who married Margaret Falside, and whose children baptised in Hawick included William (b.1694), Walter (b.1698) and Robert (b.1701). The witnesses in 1698 were John Dryden and Thomas Elliot. He is probably the Robert ‘in New milne’ whose step-daughters included: Margaret Scott, who married Walter Hume in 1707; and Anne Scott, who married James Scott (tenant in Stobicote) in 1712. It seems likely that his wife Margaret Falsyde was widow of William Scott, and that he took her children into his family. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded in Burnfoot in 1697. He married a Gray and their children included Robert (b.1697). He may be the Robert in Appletreehall who had a process against James Laing, maltman of Selkirk in 1723. Robert (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish who married Anna Henderson. Their children included: Margaret Armstrong, from Inverness-shire. Their children included: Andrew (b.1834/5), shepherd at Wigg; Helen (b.1836); Janet (b.1838); Esther (b.1840); Jane (b.1843), born at the Rig, who married carter James Moore; Thomas Armstrong (b.1845); John; and Euphemia. Robert ‘Bob' son George had a sasine for the ‘liferent’ of Forderlee in 1764. However, he had another sasine for these lands in 1766, along with Isobel Kerr. She was presumably either a second wife, or a relative of his mother. In 1778 the lands went to James, who may have been another son. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Wester Essenside, perhaps son of John. He is probably the Robert recorded at Burnfoot in Ashkirk Parish on the 1791 Horse Tax Rolls. He is recorded at Wester Essenside as owner of 5 farm horses and 1 saddle horse on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was probably also the farmer at Essenside taxed for having 3 non-working dogs in 1797. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident at Newcastleton, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Robert (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Nelly Oliver and their children included Nelly (b.1808). Robert (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Mary Laidlaw and their children included John (b.1809), William (b.1811), Margaret (b.1813) and Jeany (b.1815). Robert (1806–70s) born in Ashkirk, son of surveyor James and Rachel Wilkie. He was listed as a grocer on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1841 and 1851 he was living with his parents and siblings at 27 Loan. His grocer’s and spirit merchant’s shop was at 9 High Street, on the ground floor of the house owned by joiner Walter Wilson. He later became factor for the Cavers estate. In 1861 he was listed as a land factor, still living with his mother and sister at 27 Loan. He also served as Chairman of the Cavers Parochial Board. Robert (b.1810/1) son of a shepherd at Bellsrigg in Deadwater. He was a shepherd in Rulewater, living at Blackburn Cottage in Southdean Parish. In the 1841 census he is recorded as ‘Skyehead’ and at Southdean Rig in 1851. He was one of the main early supporters of the Free Kirk at Wolfelee, being the first elder, one of the first two elders appointed in 1850 and one of the trustees. He married Margaret Armstrong, from Inverness-shire. Their children included: Andrew (b.1834/5), shepherd at Wigg; Helen (b.1836); Janet (b.1838); Esther (b.1840); Jane (b.1843), born at the Rig, who married carter James Moore; Thomas Armstrong (b.1845); John; and Euphemia. Robert ‘Bob' (19th C.) son of Adam and Janet Cairns from around Newtown St. Boswells. When young he worked on a farm, but an accident injured his arm. He was appointed as postman in the Rulewater district, succeeding George Nichol about 1873. Starting on foot, he later got a horse and trap. In 1900 he was transferred to Newtown St. Boswells, and received a long-service medal from the King. He lived at Weens Cottages, was a keen gardener, librarian for Hobkirk, active member of the Total Abstinence Society and deacon of Wolfelee Kirk. In 1873 he married Mary, daughter of shepherd Robert Hume.

His children were: Adam, assistant gardener at Wolfelee, who married Martha Dalgleish; Robert, gardener at Huntihill, who married Margaret Eunson; James, blacksmith at Wark-on-Tweed, who married Euphemia Hope; George, footman at Kippilaw House; John, grocer; William, tailor; Charles, gardener; Helen; and Janet. Thomas (15th C.) recorded ‘in quhithalch braa’ in 1494/5. He contributed ‘1 nag’ to the itinerant court held in Selkirk. His lands could be Whitehaugh Brae near Hawick. Thomas (15th/16th C.) witness to the sasine for Wolfelee and Wolfehopelee in 1522, for the Homes of Wedderburn. Rev. Thomas (c.1577–1626) graduating from St. Andrews University in 1597, he became minister of Soutra in 1605 and was translated to Hobkirk in 1609. He died sometime in the first half of 1626, with William Weir becoming Hobkirk’s next minister. He married Janet Sinclair (who was buried in Greyfriars Churchyard in Edinburgh in 1667), widow of James Brydon. Their son John became a tailor’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1629, while another son was probably the Thomas who was minister to the garrison of the Earl of Callendar in 1645, then to a congregation in Hartlepoo and finally to Slamannan. Rev. Thomas (c.1666–1716) minister at Southdean. He was son of Thomas, gardener to Andrew Edmonston of Ednam and descended from the family of Rousland, near Kinneil. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1686, was licensed by Kelso Presbytery in 1691 and became minister at Ednam in 1692. He was translated to Southdean in 1700 and remained there until his death. He is said to have died after being struck by lightning while exorcising a ghost from a building at Wolfelee (there seems to be some truth in this story, with a tradition that the main house there was haunted by a brownie, and evidence that he was buried quickly after his death, but few details are certain). He was a quiet man, little known beyond his congregation, but respected for his piety and pastoral duty. In about 1693 he married Beatrix Trotter of Wideopen (on Kaul), daughter of Alexander Trotter of Fogo and Margaret Home of Bassendean, and she died in Edinburgh in 1725. Their children were: Andrew (b.1695); Alexander (b.1697); Isobel (b.1699); James (1700–48), well known as a poet, author of ‘The Seasons’; Margaret; Mary (d.1790) who married William Craig in Edinburgh and whose son James planned Edinburgh’s New Town; Elizabeth (d.c.1746), who married Robert Bell, minister at Strathaven, in Edinburgh in 1740; Jean (d.1781), who married Robert Thompsom, Master of Lanark Grammar School; and John (d.1735), who acted as dictator for his brother James. A brass plaque was added to his gravestone at Chesters in 1867. Thomas (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He married Agnes Turnbull, daughter of the Laird of Knowe in Minto Parish in 1721. He was rebuked by the Hawick Session for this ‘irregular marriage’, which took place in England. Their daughter Marion was baptised in Hawick in 1725, with witnesses Rev. Charles Telfer and weaver James Roger. Perhaps the same Thomas also married Mary Elliot and had a daughter Elizabeth (b.1729). Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Isabel Dryden in 1718 and their children included Adam (b.1722). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, recorded at Deanbrae in 1726. His children included Janet (b.1724) and James (b.1726). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Denholm. He is probably the Thomas who married Marion Tudhope in Cavers Parish in 1728. He was recorded at Denholm in 1729 and 1730 (when he was a herd). His children included Bessie (b.1729), Helen (b.1730) and Adam (b.1734). He is probably also father of some of these children baptised in Cavers Parish (with the others being part of the other Thomas; family): Helen (b.1728); Alison (b.1732); George (b.1732); and an unnamed child (b.1739). Thomas (18th C.) carrier in Hawick. He married Isabel Hardie and their children included: Peter (b.1756); Isabel (b.1759); Agnes (b.1762); and Robert (b.1764). The witnesses in 1759 were flesher Robert Hardie and Kirk Officer Alexander Bunyan. He is probably the carrier of that name who witnessed a baptism for John Hardie in Hawick in 1768. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Mary Coltart and their children included James (b.1765), Walter (b.1766) and Agnes (b.1768).
He may be the workman who witnessed a baptism for stockingmaker Mark Sutherland in 1787. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Oliver and their son Thomas was baptised in 1773. He may be the deceased Thomas whose son Andrew died in Hawick in 1781. Thomas (18th C.) farmer in Minto Parish. In 1780 he was listed as holding part of Minto Hills farm ‘in tack’, the other part being held by Andrew Nichol. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Parkhill in 1787. He married Margaret Elliot in 1785 and they had an unnamed son in 1787. Thomas (18th/19th C.) Hawick resident recorded as owner of a horse in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He may be the Thomas who was already deceased when his daughter Marion died in Hawick in 1815; in that record the word ‘Slorige’ or ‘Slorage’ appears after his name. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer recorded at Mervinslaw Mains on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Thomas (18th/19th C.) members of the East Bank Kirk. He married Jean Laidlaw and their children included John (b.1821). Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident at Roan. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Bessie Dunlop and their daughter Janet was baptised in 1651, with witnesses Walter (surely related) and John Wilson. William (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. William (17th C.) tenant in Side in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. William (17th/18th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He may be the same as one of the other Williams. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1702 he was listed as servitor to Gideon Scott of Falnash. His children, baptised in Hawick Parish, included William (b.1702) and Margaret (b.1707). The witnesses in 1702 were smith John Dryden and Robert Riddell, miller at Newmiln. He is probably the William ‘elder’ in Newmiln, who (along with William ‘younger’) witnessed baptisms in 1716 and 1718 for James Scott in Stobicote and in 1719 for William Clerk, workman in Castlehill. Perhaps the same William witnessed a baptism for smith James Dryden in 1723. He may be the William who witnessed baptisms in 1726 (along with Robert) for John Scott, for John Riddell and for Walter Scott in Newmiln. His servant Robert Deans witnessed a baptism in 1742 for William Anderson in Raesknowe; this was the same day as the baptism of one of his own children in Hawick Parish. He married Janet Elliot in 1729, the marriage being proclaimed in Roberton. Probably the same William in Newmiln secondly married Isobel Scott (with whom he had children baptised in 1738 and 1740), with her name being recorded as ‘Margaret’ in 1742. His children included: Elizabeth (b.1729); Nichol (b.1731); Margaret (b.1733), Katherine (b.1735); Janet (b.1738); Helen (b.1740); and Margaret (again, b.1742). All the baptisms were recorded in Hawick, except the first Margaret, who was baptised in Roberton Parish. Janet (b.1736), with no mother’s name given, may also have been his daughter. The witnesses in 1731 were Walter Scott and Robert Thomson, in 1740 were blacksmiths James Dryden, elder and younger, and in 1742 were his servant Robert Deans and Kirk Officer John Telfer. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Scott and their daughter Helen was baptised in 1740. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1740. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Doecleuch in 1749 when his son Thomas was baptised. William (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Elizabeth Scott and their daughter Elizabeth was baptised in 1750. William (d bef. 1791) tailor in Hawick Parish. He married Beatrix Scott and she died in 1791. William (18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. He is listed in 1780 as possessor (probably tenant) of the lands of Horse Park, with rent of £9 9s. William (18th C.) stockmaker in Hawick. In 1784 he witnessed a baptism for miller John Scott and Betty (who may have been his daughter or sister). William (18th C.) recorded as ‘Servant to Capt. Douglas of Cavers’ in 1784. He was listed as footman at Cavers in 1785, when he was working for Capt. John Douglas. In 1791–73 he was still footman at Cavers for George Douglas and in 1794 and 1797 was a house servant at Cavers. His son could be the ‘William Thomson, Jun. Cavers’ who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish included: Tibby (b.1778); Nelly (b.1784); William (b.1787); and George (b.1788). Additional children, also baptised in Cavers, may include: Walter (b.1779); and James (b.1792). William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Netherraw according to the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 7 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. William (18th/19th C.) listed at Gatehousecote on the subscription list for Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. William (18th/19th C.) member of East Bank Kirk. He married Jean Knox (or perhaps King) and their children included John (b.1813), David (b.1815), Isobel (b.1817), (or perhaps King) and their children included: Tibby (b.1778); Nelly (b.1784); William, Ann and Jemima. William (b.1810) mason in Denholm in the 1860s. He was a registered voter at that time. William (19th/20th C.) farmer at Hummelknowes and later Coliforthill. William Lyndsay (19th/20th C.) High School Rector 1908–19. William ‘Bill’ or ‘Jimpy’ (1936–) worked in various mills in Hawick, and long involved with the British Legion, he was Common Riding Secretary 2001–05 (formerly spelled ‘Thomison’, ‘Thomesoun’, ‘Thompsone’, ‘Thomsone’, ‘Thomsonne’, ‘Thomsoun’, ‘Thomsoune’, etc.; also pronounced as in ‘Tamson’ or ‘Thomson’).

Thomson’s Cave *(tom-sin-zawai) n. name given to a particular cave on the bank of the Teviot near Ancrum. This is said to have been a popular haunt of for the poet James Thomson (of ‘The Seasons’), who wrote his name on the roof.

the Thomson Well *(thu-tom-sin-wel) n. small ornamental iron drinking fountain on the site of the Mid Raw before the Brown Fountain was built. It was provided by Provost Thomson of Johnstone, Renfrewshire and handed over to the town in late 1897. It can be seen in a photograph of Drumlanrig Square taken in about 1898. It apparently bore the inscription ‘Presented by Provost Thomson of Johnstone, to his native town in commemoration of Queen Victoria’s record reign, 1897 . . . It’s yer ain; protect it’. However, it was only in place for a few years and its whereabouts are unknown.

thou (thon, thonh) pron. that, those, yon, yonder – ‘This is mine, that’s yours, but whae’s aucht thou?’ [JAHM], ‘Yiddie’s a bleith fallih, bit A dinna leike thon Jock yin!’ [ECS], ‘And thon’s jist the stert. What aboot the audience etc.; also pronounced as in ‘Tamson’ or ‘Thomson’.

thonder (thon-dur) adv., adj., pron. yonder, over there – if ee’r lookin for yer fither heis ower thonder’, ‘Thonder was the monument A jaloozed ti be the Lilliard’s Edge Memorial’ [ECS], ‘Guid-nicht to my freend owre thonder’ [DH], ‘Away up thonder abune the Wusp ti be the ‘Lilliard’s Edge Memorial’ [ECS], ‘Guid-nicht to my freend owre thonder’ [DH], ‘Away up thonder abune the Wusp . . . at Westminster . . . ’ [DH].
thone (thōn) adv., adj., pron. that, those – ‘A fair likeet Nardini’s ice cream. Was thone no the best?’ [We] (also thoon).

thoom (thoorn) n. a thumb – ‘heis aa fingers an thooms’, ‘A ken ma thoorn’s beelin, ’cause it’s putt, puttn (throb, throbbing)’ [ECS], ‘…Wi’ tea, an’ crackers no’ the size O’ even ane’s thoorn nail’ [WFC] (also spelled ‘thommb’ or ‘thourn’).

thoom-steel (thoom-steel) n., arch. a stall or covering for an injured thumb.

thoosand (thoo-zind) n. a thousand – ‘Thoosands, gude kens how mony, to the breeder, An’ hauf as muckle for a cock to tread her’ [JoHa], ‘…but A’d a thoosand rather be sair hackin’ treis than hing about like this daein’ nocht’ [JEDM], ‘Ten thoosand hands were raised on high, Wavin’ an’ raxin’ towards the sky’ [WP], ‘A thoosand buttercups waited to confirm Yin’s on high, Wavin’ an’ raxin’ towards the sky’ [WP], ‘What sacrifice To gie a pound Gin I’ve a thoosand mair?’ [WL], ‘Weary an’ dowie, aye mysel A thoosand times I’ve tried an’ dowie, aye mysel A thoosand times I’ve tried’ [IWL] (cf. thoosant).

thoosant (thoo-sin’, thoozint) n. thousand (also spelled ‘thousant’ and ‘thoosint’; used interchangeably with thoosand).

thoot (thoo’, thoot) prep., poet. without – ‘…An’, holy beacons, glow ‘thoot flaw or wane’ [JoHa].

Thor (thōr) n. Norse god of thunder, rain and farming. Son of Odin, he is traditionally thought of as one of the gods in the Hawick battle cry ‘Teribus ye Teri-Odin’. It is unclear how old the tradition is of associating Thor with the Hawick slogan, but there appears to be little evidence that it precedes Victorian attempts to explain its origin. There is certainly no mention in Hogg’s song of 1819 (which does mention Odin), or in anything published earlier than that – ‘The spirit still lies on the Border side – The spirit of Thor and Odin’ [JB], ‘With spirit rapt, and, full of kith and kin, Pray Thor of Holy Church exalt her horn’ [JBSS].

Thorbrand (thor-brawnd) n. Adam (17th/18th C.) recorded in 1707 when Walter Deans was fined by the Council for summoning him to the Court in Jedburgh when the case was already being considered by the Court in Hawick. He is probably the Adam who married Elspeth Stevenson and whose daughter Jean was baptised in Hawick in 1703. He is probably also the wright who witnessed a baptism in 1725 for carrier Walter Bryson. George (17th C.) son of wright James. He was witness to the document describing his father’s work on the ‘steiple-loft’ in St. Mary’s Kirk in 1684; he is referred to as ‘my sone wryter thereof’. He was probably son of the James who married Jane Veitch. James (16th C.) recorded as ‘Jacobum Thronbrand in Wiltoun’ in 1553/4 when he was on the panel for Sir Walter Scott inheriting his grandfather’s lands of Branxholme and Buccleuch. It is not known where in Wilton he was tenant or whether he was related to later local Thorbranders. Bailie James (17th C.) recorded in 1660 when Bailie Walter Chisholme promised that he would not disobey the Burgh’s rules regarding ‘the question of neighbourhood for theiking’ between them. He could be the James who was one of Hawick’s Commissioners in Kelso who were insulted in 1657 by Robert Hardie (who was fined by the Magistrates). He was listed as Councillor in 1668 and Bailie in 1673. In 1669 a woman was fined for saying that ‘the jogges was mair fitting for him nor hir’; he was probably Bailie at that time. He was described as a ‘late bailie’ when he was part of the Commission to discuss the division of the Common with agents of the Lord of Queensberry in 1672. He may be the wright on the list of Hawick men named in the 1673 trial following the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. Also in 1673 he was witness to baptisms for John Chalmers, Thomas Cowan and James Newbie. In 1683 wright Francis Gledstains was fined for attcking him and for stealing the 4 ducks that he had caught. Also in 1683 he was the wright who was late ‘baylea in Havice’ when charged with the task of constructing the first gallery in St. Mary’s Kirk. This was the ‘Steeple (or Middle) Loft’ in St. Mary’s in 1684. He was married to ‘Jeane Wetch’ (presumably Veitch). His sons included: Thomas (b.1652); and George (b.1654), who married Margaret Scott. Jane, who married William Laing, may have been his daughter. Given the confusion between the names he may well be the ‘Baillyea Thorburne’ listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. In 1675 he witnessed a baptism for William Welch (or ‘Wetch’), who may have been related to his wife. James (19th C.) farmer at Stonedge in the 1860s. John (17th/18th C.) wright in the early 1700s. He is recorded in the Parish Records as ‘wright in Hawick, and this, with what Bailife Purdem pay’d him, is all he gote for placing about the palling rail about Mr Elliott’s grave stone, £12’. He may be the John who was listed as ‘student’ in 1704 when he witnessed a baptism for Adam Elliot in Whitchesters. Robert (16th C.) witness to an instrument of sasine for the lands of Crook in 1592. Simon Routledge was ‘in Cruik’, while he described as being ‘there’, presumably meaning he was a resident of Crook, but not a tenant. William ‘Will’ (16th C.) recorded in 1562 as a tenant in Greatlaw. Robert Hastie acting as factor in Lilliesleaf acknowledged receipt of the teinds from him and other tenants of ‘Grett Law’ and Clerklands. His name is listed as ‘Volle Thurbrand’ (formerly ‘Thronbrand’ and ‘Thurbrand’; note that in early records it may be the same as Thorburn).
Thorburn

Thorburn (thor-burn) n. Adam (d.bef. 1799) resident of Hawick Parish. The death of his wife Janet Miller is recorded in 1799. Adam (18th/19th C.) carrier in Hawick according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. His property may be the ‘Thorburn’ marked on Buccleuch Street on Wood’s 1824 map. He had an unnamed child who died in 1798 and another who died in 1811 (where he is recorded as ‘Berwick Carrier’). He is probably the Adam who married Janet Paterson and whose children included: Agnes (b.1796); John (b.1797); Adam (b.1799); Catherine (b.1801); Janet (b.1803); George (b.1805); William (b.1807); and James (b.1815). The witnesses in 1796 and 1797 were Robert Tinlin and Michael Anderson. Adam (1764–1837) born in Hawick, he emigrated to America, settling in Bovina, New York. He married Janet Patterson and their children were Adam, William, Catherine, Janet, George, Nancy and James. Andrew (19th C.) son of George, farmer at Stonedge. He is said to have gone out to the New Zealand gold rush with local builder John Eckford, and to have died in New York at the age of 99. Both his sister Janet and brother George are also said to have died at an advanced age. David (18th C.) resident of Hawick as recorded in a letter from him in 1791, preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. He may also be the David from ‘Broommohrighth’ recorded in another letter. He married Sarah Thomson and their son David was baptised in Hawick in 1790. George (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish, recorded in 1694 when he was listed among the ‘Cottars’ on the Hearth Tax roll there. He could be the George who married Helen Tailor in Ashkirk in 1707. George (18th C.) smith in Ashkirk. He was said to have married Jean, daughter of James Anderson and Helen Lithgow; their daughter Jean married John Anderson, tenant at Newton, Wilton Parish, and whose daughter Jean married John Eckford, who later claimed the remains of the fortune of his ancestor Hector Lithgow. Another daughter, Betty, married John Russell in Ashkirk in 1760. Assuming that the genealogy is essentially correct, then he would have been born around 1725 and could have been son or grandson of the earlier George from Ashkirk. George (b.c.1755) farmer at Stonedge. He was listed there in 1841, along with his son John and his family. His children included: John (b.c.1790), who farmed Stonedge after him; Thomas (b.c.1800), born in Ashkirk Parish, who helped his brother John on the farm; Janet, who married farmer William Little and lived to be 99; Andrew, who went to New Zealand and died in New York, aged 99; and George, shepherd at Harwood and Ormiston, who died at over age 80. He is easy to confuse with a contemporary man from Ashkirk; the forenames used are similar enough that the 2 families are surely related (or are being confused here). George (18th/19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Jeanie Henderson in Wilton Parish in 1786. Their children included: Jeanie (b.1788); John (b.1789); Anne (b.1791); George (b.1793), who was a carrier in Newcastleton; Thomas (b.1795); and James (b.1797). George (18th/19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included John (b.1828). He may be the same man as George from Castleton Parish. George (1793–1884) born in Ashkirk Parish, son of farmer George. He was a carrier in Newcastleton, operating a weekly service to Hawick according to Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. In 1841 and 1851 he was listed at about 4 Stopford Street. He could be the George of Castleton who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He married Janet Geddes, who died at Stonedge in 1832, aged 33. He secondly married Mary Inglis, who died in 1889, aged 88. His children included: George (b.1818), who died in infancy; Andrew (b.1819); Jean (b.1821); Jane (b.1822); and Lieut. James (1824–58), who died at Aldershot Camp; John (b.c.1828); William (b.c.1840); Margaret; Isabella; and George (again). George (19th C.) said (by J.H. Haining) to have been son of George, farmer at Stonedge. He was shepherd at Harwood and Ormiston and claimed to have died at over the age of 80, like his sister Janet and brother Andrew. 2 of his daughters were: Kate, farmer at Harwood; and Jane, widow of wool agent William Dalgleish. However, there is no record of him on the local census records of the mid-1800s. George (b.c.1820) son of John. Like his father, he farmed at Stonedge. He was one of the 18 founders of the Relief Kirk in Hawick. He was tenant there in the 1860s. George Cumming (1950/1 –) son of Park gardener Jack and brother of Hawick R.F.C. Secretary John. He worked at Forbes Nursery as a schoolboy, and was educated at Edinburgh University, where he received a Ph.D. in horticulture. He was founder and Managing Director of Global Horticulture Limited. He was speaker at the 2005 Callants’ Club dinner and Chief Guest of the 2009 Common Riding. James (18th C.) footman at Cavers in 1778 and 1779, when he was working for James Douglas of Cavers. James (19th C.) local schoolmaster of whom a portrait exists. James (b.1824) born in Hobkirk Parish, son of John. In 1861 he was listed as ‘Probationer M.A. of U P Church’ when visiting the house of John Governlock in Ewesdale. He may be related to Rev. John, who was also from Hobkirk. Janet (18th/19th C.) daughter of George, farmer at Stonedge. She married William Little, farmer at Selenside. They are said (by J.H. Haining) to have ‘lived to be 99, got second sight and a third set of teeth, although they decayed very quickly’. She has a brother Andrew who also lived to 99, and another brother George, who lived beyond 80. Jean (18th C.) cook and chambermaid at Knowe in Minto Parish in 1785, when she was working for Thomas Turnbull. Probably the same person was a female servant at Borthwickbrae in 1791. Jock (1926/7– ) came to Hawick as a refugee in 1939. He worked as foreman at the Walled Gardens and had a long association with boxing in Hawick. He married Teri Jean Cumming. They had sons George and John. The couple celebrated their diamond wedding anniversary in 2019. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He was married to Janet Gillis and their children included John (b.1703). John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elizabeth Moss and their daughter Helen was baptised in 1727. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Margaret Inglis in 1754. John (18th C.) weaver in Hawick Parish. He married Helen Bulloch in 1756 and their children included: Jean (b.1757); Robert (b.1759); and Elizabeth (b.1761). The witnesses in 1757 were mason Andrew Turnbull ‘junior’ and weaver George Swan. John (d.1794) carrier. His death is recorded in Hawick Parish. He was ‘killed by his own cart at Drydoun’. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Minto Kames. He may have been son of Thomas, who was farmer there before him. He was recorded at Kames in the 1789–1797 Horse Tax Rolls. In 1797 he was owner of 12 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid the dog tax at Kames in 1797. He is probably the John who married Betty Horsburgh in Minto Parish in 1785 and whose children included Isabella (b.1786), Nelly (b.1789), Margaret (b.1790), Betty (b.1792), Jane (b.1797) and Robert (b.1798). John (18th/19th C.) proprietor of a public house and grocer on the High Street, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He could be the same man as the carter and farmer. John (b.1784/5) farmer at Stonedge, son of George. His wife was Elizabeth and children included: George (b.c.1821); Eliza; Isabella (b.c.1835) and Jane (b.c.1837). He was at Stonedge in 1841 along with his elderly father. He was still living at Stonedge in 1851, along with his brother Thomas; he was then employing 4 men and farming 50 acres of arable land and 1250 acres of pasture. By 1861 his wife was a widow, and his son George had taken over Stonedge. John (b.1790/1) farmer up the Loan and also a carter. In 1841 he is listed at Green Wynd as a farmer, and in 1851 is a carter on the Loan and farmer of 10 acres. In 1861 he was a ‘House Proprietor’ at 32 Loan. He married Agnes (or Nancy) Beck, and their children included: Margaret Wilson (b.1819); Isabella (b.1821); John (or ‘Jack’, b.1827), also a carter; William (b.1829); and Agnes (b.1835), who married Galashiels mason Adam Thomson in 1859. He is probably the John born to Robert and Isabella Hall in Hawick in 1791. John (19th C.) born in Hobkirk Parish, he was associated with Allars Kirk in Hawick. He became 3rd minister of St. Paul’s Relief Kirk (in Aberdeen) in 1841. The church had financial difficulties, closed in 1842, to reopen in a new building, and in 1845 he resigned amid controversy. However, within a few months he was minister of the Relief Kirk at Dumming. He became minister at Gatehouse of Fleet in 1851, leaving in 1859 and dying in Glasgow. He married Jessie Walker and their children included John, Susanna, George and Elizabeth. John (b.1827) son of carter John. Like his father he worked as a carrier in Hawick. In 1861 he was living at 32 Loan along with his elderly father. He married Margaret Rae (from England) and their children included Agnes, Susan Wright (b.1854), John and William J. John (19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His wife was Elizabeth and they had a son Douglas in 1846. John (b.1829/30) born in Hobkirk Parish, he was a ploughman.

In 1861 he was living at Easter Essenside Cottage. His wife was Helen and their children included Margaret, Andrew and Jessie. John son of Jock and younger brother of George. He works for the Bill McLaren Foundation and has been Secretary of both Hawick R.F.C. and the 1514 Club. Mungo (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. He was at Friarshaw in the 1780s and 90s according to the Horse Tax Rolls. He married Isabel Redford and their children included: Robert (b.1791); Andrew (b.1793); Mungo (b.1795); William (b.1797); James (b.1799); and John (b.1803). Mungo (b.1794/5) born in Lilliesleaf Parish, he was farmer at Nether Bowerhouse in Berwickshire in 1861. Probably the same Mungo was at Headshaw in 1868. His wife was Margaret and their children included Robert and Andrew. Robert (18th C.) wheelwright in Hawick. He married Elizabeth Rae and their children included Thomas (b.1740), Jean (b.1743) and Margaret (b.1743). He could be the Robert who hired the Hawick mortcloth in 1760. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isabel Hall and their children included Agnes (b.1789) and John (b.1791). Robert (18th/19th C.) tailor in Hawick. His daughter Nelly died in 1800. Robert (18th/19th C.) farmer in Hawick recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Where he farmed is unclear. Thomas (18th C.) farmer at Kames in Minto Parish according to the Horse Tax Rolls of 1787-88. He was surely related to John, who farmed there immediately afterwards. Thomas (b.1798/9) son of George, farmer at Stonedge, he was born in Ashkirk Parish. In 1841 he was an agricultural labourer living at ‘Stonedge Stable’. In 1851 he was at Stonedge helping his brother John with the farm and in 1861 was a ‘Barnman’, helping his sister-in-law Elizabeth. He died unmarried. Walter (17th C.) tenant in Wooplaw in Southdean Parish according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. He was probably related to John, who farmed at the neighbouring Lethem. Walter (18th C.) tailor of Hawick Parish. In 1762 he married Christian Ballantyne, who was also from Hawick Parish. Their children included: Robert (b.1763); Walter (b.1765); Adam (b.1766); William (b.1768); Janet (b.1771); and an unnamed child (b.1773). The witnesses in 1763 were John Thorburn and Walter Ballantyne, in 1766 were Robert and Adam Thorburn (who were surely related) and in 1771 were the whole congregation. He may be the Walter who paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1791. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Mary (or Marion) Ekron and their children included: Mary (b.1761); Isabel (b.1766); and Elizabeth (b.1770). He is probably the Walter from Hawick recorded in a letter to a Selkirk lawyer in 1791. Walter (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Parkhill in 1780 and 1785. His children included: Janet (b.1780); Thomas (b.1784); and Walter (b.1785). Walter (18th/19th C.) farmer at Langton in Ashkirk Parish. In 1797 he paid tax on 4 work horses and 1 saddle horse there. Walter (19th C.) hosiery manufacturer of 21 Buccleuch Street. His family’s land there is marked ‘Thorburn’ on Wood’s 1824 map. He was nephew of William of William Lockie & Co. He married Betsy Stevenson Huggan, daughter of hosiery worker Thomas. Their children were William Lockie (Cornet in 1911), Bessie and Mary Hall (who married Robert Laidlaw). Walter (b.1822/3) resident of Robertson Parish. He was an agricultural labourer living at Harden in 1841, was living with his mother Janet Lockie at Borthwickbrae Haugh in 1851 and was at Borthwick-brae Burnfoot in 1861. He married Beatrice Scott from Newcastleton. Their children included Wilhemiina (b.1850), William, Henry, James, Janet and Marion. Walter Lockie (20th C.) Cornet in 1937, who was Right-Hand Man for a second time after WWII in 1946. He was usually referred to as ‘W. Lockie’. William (d.1836) tailor on the Howeigate. He was one of the founders of the Independent Kirk in Hawick in the late 1790s. He was possibly the son of Walter and Christine Ballantyne, who was born in Hawick in 1768. He is recorded as tailor and ‘furnishing’ on the Howeigate in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Like some of the Independents, he later became a confirmed Baptist, and was effectively leader of that group in Hawick until his death. He married Margaret Renwick in 1792 and their son Walter was baptised later the same year. The witnesses were weaver Robert Renwick (probably related to his wife) and tobacconist William Brown. They may have married Margaret Lunn in 1800. William Lockie (19th/20th C.) son of Walter. He worked as a hosiery manager and was Cornet in 1911. He married Agnes, daughter of coal merchant Andrew Robson. Their son W. Lockie was Cornet in 1937 and farmed at Kidshielhaugh, near Duns (also written ‘Thorburn’; note that in early records it may be the same as Thorbrand). Thorlieshope (thör-leez-höp) n. farm in the Liddel valley near Saughtree, once a seat of the Thorlieshope Burnfoot

Elliot. The house is situated in a glen, with similarities with the location of Harden. It is ‘Thorl leshope’ in the c.1376 rental roll of Liddesdale. ‘Robert Elwald’ was Laird in 1488 and ‘John El wald in Thorlleshope’ is recorded in 1498, along with other Elliot Lairds through the 16th cen tury. It is probably the ‘Thornyshope’ recorded in the 1451 rental roll, with a value of 2 merks and with Robert Elliot as tenant. The house of ‘Thirleshope’ belonging to ‘Arche Elwode’ was burned by the English in 1541. Probably the same ‘Arche Elliot of Thirlishoup’ rented Southdean rig and Caldecleuch from Melrose Abbey in 1557. Robert Elliot, called ‘Rob of Thorlieshope’ was among the 34 thieves who were captured in Ha wick in 1567 by the Regent Moray. John of Thorlieshope is listed among the Elliots of the Braid dle branch in 1583, while John ‘of Thorllesope’ signed a bond of assurance in 1584, on behal of the Elliots of Thorlieshope. Adam ‘Rakkis’ was recorded there in 1611. The lands were al ready owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch by 1613.

John Elliot ‘callit Dods’ was tenant in 1623, as well as Robert Routledge. The lands appear to have part of the estate of Scott of Mangerton in 1643 and were valued at £520 in 1678, when John Elliot owned them. John Graham of Claverhouse (‘Bluidy Clavers’) wrote a letter from there to the Marquess of Queensberry on 3rd July 1685. Tax was paid on 5 hearths at ‘Thorlishopes hous’ in 1694. Thomas Hall was Laird in 1761 and Wil liam Walker by 1788 and still in 1811, when it was valued at £520. William Nichol was stew ward there in 1841. John Wilson lived there in the 1860s. It was farmed by the Jardines in the 19th century. It is said that the tower stood where the current garden is. A former house (per haps the tower) was once described as being a ru ined 2-storey building, with lintel dated 1682 and monograms ‘DME’ and ‘WEAC’ (surely related to William Elliot of Thorlieshope and Christian Ainslie, since this is the year of their marriage).
This lintel and some other stonework was built into the new farmhouse, erected in the 19th cen tury. A mineral spring on the farm, up in Dead water, was once regarded as having healing prop erties. There is also a disused lime kiln and quarry near the house, while further to the east, the Thorlieshope Lime Works and Fairloans Quarries operated until at least the end of the 19th cen tury. Thorlieshope Pike is a nearby hill reaching 1,180 feet. A ‘decorated stone disc, smoked on one side, whole surface polished’ from here is in Hawick Museum. Sir Walter Scott used the name as the basis for ‘Charlieshope’ in ‘Guy Mannering’ (the name probably means ‘valley with the thorny clearing’; it is ‘Thorleshop’ in 1488, ‘thornlaw ishop’ in 1494/5, ‘Thorleshope’ in 1498, ‘Thor leshope’ in 1500 and 1516, ‘Thirlleshope’, ‘Tho rlieshope’ and ‘Thorlishopp’ in 1541, ‘Thorlyshop’ and ‘Thorlyshope’ in 1546, transcribed as ‘Thorl showp’ in 1547, ‘Thorisloip’ and ‘Thorlshope’ in 1569, ‘Thonesope’ in 1583, Thoirlishop’ in 1594, leishoip’ in 1623, ‘Chorlesoip’ in 1623, ‘Thorlish

-ope’ in 1648, ‘thorlishope’ in 1678, ‘Thorlishope
’ in 1690, ‘Thorleshope’ in 1692, ‘Thorlshop’ in 1704 and ‘Thorlishope’ in 1811; it is ‘Thorlispo
’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and ‘Thorlishope
’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Thorlieshope Burnfoot (thør-leez-hōpburn-ˌf) n. former steading in Castleton Parish, where Thorlieshope Burn meets the Liddel. Labou r David Jackson and his family were there in 1851 and 1861.

Thorlieshope Heights (thør-leez-hōp-ˌhīts) n. gener al name for hilly area to the east of Thorli shope farm, south of Thorlieshope Pike. A tri angulation pillar with a height of 396 m lies to the south, between here and Foumire Heights.

Thorlieshope Pike (thør-leez-hōp-ˌpīk) n. hill on the eastern border of Castleton Parish, reaching a height of 360 m. The farm of Thorlieshope is located to the west, and Thorlieshope Heights to the south. George Watson writes in 1921 of a small stone cross lying in a quarry near there, possibly part of a boundary marker; there is no sign of it today.

thorn (thørn) n., arch. the hawthorn tree (used in place names, e.g. Thorniewhats, Thorynbank and Thornyhaug).

Thornebogg (thør-nee-ˌbōg) n. former lands in the Slitrig valley, listed in 1547/8 in an En lish communication about farms they had burned.

They were the property of Martin Crozier, how ever, the exact location and pronunciation are un known.

Thornhill (thørn-hil) n. town in Dumfriesshire, the nearest major settlement to Drumlanrig Cast
tle. This is where the Baron’s Head Courts were held, which the landowners in Hawick were ac customed to attend twice a year. In 1670 they were explicitly excused from attending the Mich elmas Court on account of the poor state of their

Thorniewhats (thør-nee-whats) n. farm

Thornton (thôrn’-in) n. former name for piece of land on the farm of Braidhaugh near Hobkirk, probably near to the Rule Water and ‘Thornton Pool’ (also ‘Thornton Pool’ also ‘Thorniecleuch’ map, to the north of Crooke Loch on the Bel-

Thornton Pool (thôrn’-in-pool) n. deep pool in the Rule Water near the farm of Braidhaugh. The name was still in use in the early 20th century.

Thornewood Avenue (thôrn-wud-aw-vi-new) n. Thornwood Avenue, a street in Weensland, named for its proximity to the former Thornwood House and constructed in 1976.

Thornewood House (thôrn-wud-hoos) n. mansion built by James Oliver in 1870, which eventually became the Mansfield House Hotel. The name probably derived from being ‘on a bleak hill side covered with whins and thorns’, according to a contemporary newspaper report. The original design, in a Greek Revival style (with Italian elements), was by Glasgow-based architect John T. Rochead in 1867. The house was sold to Lt.-Col. Mudie in 1936 and by the 1950s it had become a hotel (see also Mansfield House).

Thornewood Park (thôrn-wud-pawrk) n. Thornwood Park, a street in Weensland, part of Daykins Drive. The whole street was called Daykins Drive when built in 1982, but this name was favoured by many residents and later made official. It derives from the proximity to Thornwood House.

Thornybank (thôrn-nee-bawngk) n. former name for lands in Hobkirk Parish, probably located between the lands of Harwood and Fairnieles. This could be the same as ‘Thornydykes’, where Robert French is recorded in 1603 (‘Thorniebankis’ in 1562).

Thornacleugh (thôrn-kee-klooch) n. former farmstead to the west of Bellendean and south of Redfordgreen, in the far corner of what was once Roberton Parish. William Little ‘in thornacleuch’ is recorded in 1494/5 when his son-in-law John Scott was fined. It is marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map, to the north of Crooke Loch on the Bellendean Burn. The stream called ‘Thorniecleuch Burn’ is curiously on the other side of the B711, flowing into Clearburn Loch.

Thornhaugh (thôr-nee-hawgh, -haw) n. flat land by the stream near Falnash. The ‘Chapel of Ease’ for the outlying parts of Cavers and Hawick Parishes was built here some time around 1715. It was repaired in 1722 and used until 1789, when a new church was built on the other side of the stream. There are now no signs of this building. The area had a teacher appointed in the 18th century. The farm there was occupied by Robert Scott in 1738 and Robert Laidlaw was there in 1741. John Hume was there in 1781–85 and was tenant in 1797. Peter Hume was there in 1795. (it is ‘Thornhaugh’ in 1738 and 1741 and ‘Thorniehall’ in 1781 and 1785; also written ‘Thorny Hall’ and ‘Thorniehall’, perhaps erroneously).

Thorsday (thôrz-dâ, -di) n., arch. Thursday (cf. the more modern Thursdi).

thor-ter (thor-tur) prep., arch. across, over.

Thorterdykes (thôr-tur-, thor-tur-diks) n. old name for the land between roughly the Mote and the south side of Rosebank Road. It largely overlapped with what was also called Moat Croft, and probably also included the areas of Easterdykeback and Westerdykeback. It may also have been pronounced ‘Whirter Dykes’ in the 19th century. In the early 1760s there were sometimes open air services here for the newly established secession congregation, before the Green Kirk was built. The name is now in use for ‘Thorterdykes Roadhouse’, the pub there (it appears in 1666 as ‘the thor dikes’, its origin is uncertain, but probably Old English for ‘land lying athwart the Mote or a ditch’).

Thorterdykes Roadhouse (thôr-ur-diks-rôd-hoos) n. public house at Thorterdykes. It is based in the house that was constructed as a villa on Rosebank Road in 1882 for manufacturer Thomas Scott and lived in by the Bonsors.

thor-ter-ill (thor-tur-il) n., arch. a disease paralysing the necks of sheep.

Thorter Rig (thôr-ur-rig) n. ridge just south of Crooked Loch in the headwaters of the Ale.

Thorter Villa (thôr-’vi-la) n. name used in the early days for the house at Thorterdykes, e.g. in the 1897 valuation rolls.

Thorterwud (thôr-ur-wud) n. Thorterwood, former farm on the western side of the Jed valley, just south of Bairnkine and west of Woodhouse. John Laidlaw was there in 1694 (marked on BLaeu’s 1654 map and Stobie’s 1770 map).

It is played in a different manner in Teviotdale. Two stand together, facing each other, having their hands clinched, and lifted above their breath, so as to form an arch. Under this perhaps twenty or thirty children pass, holding each other by their clothes. When all have passed save one, the arms of the two, like a portcullis, fall down and detain this individual as prisoner. He, or she, is asked in a whisper, ‘Will ye be Tod or Fern-buss?’ If Tod is the answer, the person takes one side, and must wait till all are caught one by one. This being done, the Tod draws one way, and the Ferns another, the two candidates still keeping hold of each other’s hands; and he, who can draw the other and his party to the opposite side of the street, and separate their hands gains the victory’ JoJ.

Thursdi (thurz-di) n. Thursday. This was formerly market day in Hawick (also spelled ‘Thurs-dil’; cf. the older Thorsday).

the Thursdi (thu-thurz-di) n. common name for the Thursday before Common Riding weekend. It begins with a Chase up the Nip Knowes, with the Cornet carrying the (unbussed) flag for the first time. After the ‘Hut’ there is a ceremonial singing of ‘Teribus’ in front of the farmhouse at St. Leonard’s and a ride around the racecourse at the Moor. Then the Principals visit local schools, requesting that the pupils be given the rest of the day and the next off school. In the evening is the Drum and Fife procession round the tolls, the Colour Bussing, the Burgh Officer’s Proclamation, the tying of the ribbons at the Horse monument and the Cornet’s Walk. The evening is the first time that the ‘Bg Threi’ wear their traditional Cornet’s uniforms of green jackets and tile hats. In early times the Halberdiers and musicians would visit the house of the Minister, Senior Bailie, Cornet and also various inns where the participants would dine on Friday. At each location they would be greeted with refreshments, and they would also stop on the Auld Brig for snuff, with the bussing of the Flag itself being quite an informal affair. Until the 1880s the Flag used to fly from the Chief Magistrate’s house after the morning Chase until it was bussed in the evening. Until 1886 the Cornet and his followers used to call at the houses of his supporters for refreshments after returning from the Thursday morning Chase. In the late 19th century there used to be a canter round the racecourse after ‘the Hut’ and then proceeded round by Wilton. In the years 1900-04 and in 1921 the Riding of the Marches and the Cutting of the Sod were tried out on the Thursday morning after the Chase. The striking up of the Drums and Fifes at 6 p.m. on the Kirk Wynd is considered by many people to be the start of the Common Riding proper.

the Thursdi Mornin Chase (thu-thurz-di-mör-neen-chäis) n. phrase used to distinguish the Chase of the Thursday morning of Common Riding week from the other Chases. It is in a sense a rehearsal for the events of the following day. It begins with the usual muster in the Backdamgate, but at 6.m. the Cornet now has the (unbussed) Flag for the first time. As usual the married men go first, led by the Acting Father, followed by the Cornet and his unmarried supporters. There is usually a large crowd at the Vertish, to see the Flag again. The Acting Father takes the Flag at the top of the Nipknowes and carries it to St. Leonards, where it is displayed outside the farmhouse while the Cornet and his supporters attend the Hut. Afterwards the Song Singer sings Teribus outside the farmhouse and the riders remount. They proceed via Pilmuir field to the Moor, where they ride round the racecourse, the Cornet leading with the Flag. The return is via Crumhaughhill and the Loan, passing the children arriving at Drumlanrig School. The route then takes the cavalcade along the High Street, over the North Bridge, along Dovemount and turning onto Princes Street, down Wilton Path, through the Sandbed and so back to the

Ti Hexham (ti-heks-um) interj., arch. expression of surprise, anger or bewilderment, go to Tillieleee (ti-lee-lee) n. former name for the farm at Peelbrae. It was owned by the Elliots of Redheugh before 1497/8, when it is recorded as 'Tellile', along with 'Caldcluch', in the Douglas of Cavers papers. There was a 'retour of inquest' held at Cavers to rule on the inheritance of these lands by Robert 'Elvalde', grandson of the former Robert. It may also have been written 'Tilloy', and the name was mostly lost in the 17th century, although it may be related to the Tinlee Stone. It was still recorded in the Barony of Cavers when inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687 and by his brother Archibald in 1698. The lands had a boundary with Dod, passing along the Dod Burn and then the Rowan tree dyke to the boundary with Priesthaugh, the line being partly marked with stones (it is ‘Tillieleee’ in 1511, ‘Tillielee’ in 1687 and transcribed ‘Tilbie’ in 1698).

Tillieleehope (ti-lee-lee-up) n. alternative name for the steading of Peelbrae, recorded as ‘Tillieleehope’ in 1660.

Timpendale

(Tim-pen-deen) n. ruined 16th century tower near Lanton, stronghold of the Douglases. It was burned by Hertford’s men in 1545. The tower is high above the south side of the road, opposite the farm of Timpendean, which is on the other side of the A698. The area was referred to by Jedburgh residents as ‘Timp’. It can be reached via a farm track, and is surrounded by older earthworks. The land here was long owned by the Douglases, originally being part of the lands of Bonjedward, but granted to a 2nd son, Andrew Douglas, in 1479. In 1643 the widow of John Douglas held the lands in liferent, and the total value was £418. William Douglas paid the land tax there in 1663 and they still had the same value in 1678. The lands (or perhaps just their superiority) were among those inherited by William Kerr of Abbotrule in 1680. By 1707 the estate was valued at £567, with Douglas of Timpendean having acquired additional land in Lanton. ‘Lady Ferninton’ (probably a Rutherford) paid tax for

TINGS (TINGZ) n., pl. arch. TONGS (also TAINGS and TYNGS).

TINK (TINK) n., ins. short for ‘tinker’, a somewhat derogatory name for a Traveller, someone who moves from place to place doing casual work and buying and selling things – ‘the right gypsies were fine, it was they tinks that aye left a mess ahint them’, more generally a mischievous child (see also gypsy).

TINKERS’ KNOWE (TING-KURZ-NOW) n. hill on the north side of the upper Teviot valley, between the Teindside and Back Burns and east of Commonside Moor. It reaches a height of 301 m.

TINKLER (TINK-LUR) n., arch. a tinker, metal-worker, itinerant pedlar – ‘And on 4th July of the same year a tinkler is fined for giving ‘insolent and irreverent language to the two present b'layveas . . .’ ’[DMW].

THE TINKLER (THU-TINK-LUR) n., arch. nickname for John Scott, tenant in Harwood.

THE TINLEE STANE (THU-TIN-LEE-STAN) n. the Tinlee Stone, near Peelbraehope. It is an upright stone over 4 feet high, about 3 feet broad at the base, and tapering towards the top. It has been used as a boundary marker, but its original purpose is uncertain. It may be significant that it is situated close to a section of the Catrail. An archaeological report of 1981 describes ‘a stone with a badly weathered inscription’ found nearby.

TINLIN (TIN-LIN) n. supposed name of the first Cornet, who carried the flag back from Horns-hole. This is possibly a confusion with the tales of Watt Tinlin, as further romanticised by Sir Walter Scott.

TINLIN (TIN-LIN) n. John (17th C.) weaver in Hawick, mentioned from 1669. In 1693/4 he donated money towards a town bell. Also in 1694 he was ‘John Tinling weaver’ among those on the west-side of Hawick who paid the Hearth Tax. In 1697 he was fined for publicly lying to John Swan, the quartermaster of the weavers, and then refusing to go to prison. He married Agnes Broun and their children were: Robert; Thomas (b.1677); George (b.1679); Agnes (b.1682); and probably Walter, father of ‘Rob the Naig’; as well as 2 daughters who died in infancy (probably including the unnamed baptism in 1684). The witnesses in 1684 were George Young and William Purdom. He may be the John who witnessed a baptism for James Halliday in 1675 and another for William Bryson in 1680. John (c.1775–1844) son of Robert. He was William Wilson’s first apprentice in 1790. He may be the same John who was recorded as being a constable in 1801. He later 23 windows there in 1748. In 1788 the estate consisted of ‘six husband-lands of Timpeandean’ (valued at £158), addition lands that had been liberented in 1643 to the widow of John Douglas (valued at £260), part of Lanton acquired between 1678 and 1707 (valued at £149) and another part of Lanton purchased from Capt. Scott (valued at £299). There is a plan of the farm drawn up in 1791. The lands were sold off by George Douglas, 12th of Timpendean to the Marquess of Lothian in 1843. It was tenanted by Scotts in the latter part of the 19th century. There are several circular structures and ramparts on a hill just to the south, presumably older than the tower. The tower is about 29 ft by 24 ft, with an addition made in the 17th century, in the direction of the earthwork. A polished stone axe found at the tower is in Hawick Museum and a bronze axe is in the National Museum of Antiquities – ‘Hear the melody begin At the door of Cleikiminn, East a mile or so of Timpendean. Drown the echo of your grief In the joy of Lilliesleaf, Or the meriment of Redfordgreen’ [WL] (the origin of the tower is in Hawick Museum and a bronze axe is probably Old Welsh ‘din pen’ and Old English ‘denu’, together meaning ‘the valley by the hill with the fort’; it first occurs as ‘Tympyn-lur’. Drown the echo of your grief In the joy of Lilliesleaf, Or the meriment of Redfordgreen’ [WL] (the origin of the tower is in Hawick Museum and a bronze axe is probably Old Welsh ‘din pen’ and Old English ‘denu’, together meaning ‘the valley by the hill with the fort’; it first occurs as ‘Tympyn-lur’.

TINN see TUIN.

TINDALL (TIN-DAL) n. Robert (15th/16th C.) listed among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Branxholme) pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran. His surname is recorded as ‘Tyndale’.

tine (TIN) v., arch., poet. to lose, suffer loss, mislay, forget – ‘Farewell, he cry’d, I maun gae o’er the hill, But I will see ye soon, or tyne my skill’ [CPM], ‘Come on, come on’, cried Lucky Skrae, And dinna tyne the waye’ [JTe], ‘... Or find a midge ‘mang dockens tyne’d, An’ darkness fa’n’ ’ [JoHa], ‘I gat aene frae the priest, nor is it tyn’d yet, Sae lang time syn, guidfaith! lived in the Fore Row. He was there in 1841, with his sister Ann, and recorded as a woollen hose sorter. Joyce nee Cavers, known locally for her beautiful singing voice, making ‘The Fairest Spot o’ a’’ her own. She has served as President of Wilton Dean Women’s Institute and Chair of Hawick Saxhorn Band, and has been involved with the Bright Eyed Daughters. In 2015 she became the first woman to propose one of the main toasts at the Common Riding Dinner. She sings ‘The Fairest Spot o’ a’’ on ‘Hawick and Teviotdale in Song and Poetry’ (2006) and ‘Soft Lowland Tongue of the Borders’ on ‘Sounds of the Borders’ (2012). Robert (1672–aft. 1725) eldest son of John and Agnes Brown. He was a weaver in Hawick. In 1702, 1704 and 1705 he witnessed baptisms for his brother Thomas. In 1697 he was fined by the Magistrates for publicly insulting John Swan, the quartermaster of the weavers, resisting the payment of a fine to the incorporation, and refusing to go to the Tolbooth. In 1703 he witnessed a baptism for Janet Brunfield (wife of Walter Laing). In 1714 he witnessed a baptism for Alexander Stewart, dyker in Hawick. He was later quartermaster of the weavers himself along with Swan, as recorded in 1716 (when they complained about other people using their assigned seats in St. Mary’s). In 1721 he was recorded as a weaver when he witnessed a baptism for fellow weaver Andrew Jardine. He married Christine Purdom, and their children included: Thomas (b.1702), who married Janet Riddell; James (b.1704); Christian (b.1707); and possibly Robert who moved to Kirkwhelpington. The witnesses in 1704 were Walter Purdom (surely related to his wife, perhaps her brother) and carrier John Aitkin. Robert ‘Rob the Naig’ (1737–1815) son of Walter and Anne Tinlin. He was known as an outspoken and independent individual, said (just a few decades later) to belong ‘to a class now extinct’. He was Burgh Officer, hence acting as half the town’s police force. He was also Beadle at Hawick Kirk, and in that capacity would sit directly in front of the pulpit; he would shake his head when he thought that a visiting preacher had gone on too long, and if the sermon continued he would eventually proclaim ‘hae dune’. Claimed to be a descendant of Watt, his more immediate forebears were said to be from Old Crumhaugh. He used to openly give his views on matters such as the election of Bailies, and always ended his proclamations with ‘Hawick for ever and independent’ (James Wilson suggesting that this custom may have been handed down from earlier Halberdiers). He was also said to be extremely loyal to the Crown and Government, perhaps on account of being the same age as the King; he would refer to anyone who did not support the Government as a ‘blackneb’. He is probably one of the two men (likely Burgh Officers) ‘Tinlin & Hardie’ paid during the 1767 flood for watching the Auld Brig. In 1771 he was paid by the Council for mending his halberd (confirming definitively that he was a Halberdier). In 1773 he was paid for ‘watching the town after fire’. He was the last Burgh Officer who collected the ‘yule fees’. He is probably the Robert recorded in 1791 in a letter preserved in Selkirk in the Walter Mason Collection. In 1796 and 1797 he witnessed baptisms for Adam Thorburn and in 1797 another for James Mein. He also witnessed a couple of baptisms in 1804 and 1811. He married Margaret Turnbull in 1760 and she died in 1816. Their children were: Ann (b.1761), who married John Kersel; William (b.1763), called ‘Wull the Naig’; Walter (b.1766), who died in infancy; another Walter (b.1767), who served as his assistant; and John (b.1775). He is probably the weaver Robert who witnessed a baptism in 1766 for Isabel (most likely his sister) and John Grierson. A story is told of an encounter between him and Wull Craw – ‘Sic a sight I never saw. A Naig sent up to herd a Craw’ [WiS]. Robert (19th/20th C.) farm worker, who moved to Rulewater about 1879, working at Cleuchhead and then becoming hedger at Wolfelee estate. He married Jessie, daughter of Robert Minto, gamekeeper at Wolfelee. Thomas (b.1677) son of John and Agnes Brown and brother of Robert. He was a weaver like other members of his family. He married Bessie Dryden in 1701 and their children were: Jean (b.1702); Nicholas (b.1704), a daughter; Euphan (b.1705); Anna (b.1707); Margaret (b.1710); and Robert (b.1713). The witnesses in 1702 included his brother Robert, in 1704 were his brother Robert along with merchant Robert Brown and in 1705 were Robert again along with Adam Brown ‘head-hous elder’. Thomas (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He may be the Thomas who witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Adam Kersel in 1720. In 1719 he married Janet Liddell, who was ‘servant to ye Lady Burnfoot’. Their children included: Isobel (b.1720); and Euphan (b.1725). The witnesses in 1720 were Archibald Scott of Bonnraw and Robert Scott of Burnhead. Walter ‘Watt’ (c.16th C.) said to be a retainer of the Scotts of Buccleuch, holding a small tower in Liddesdale.
He was a shoemaker by trade, but became famous as an expert archer, and supposedly shot the Captain of Bewcastle through the thigh. He was the inspiration for the fictional ‘Watt Tinlin’ in Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Lay of the Last Minstrel’, and hence fact and fiction are hard to separate – ‘If I cannot sew’, retorted Tinlinn, discharging a shaft, which nailed the captain’s thigh to the saddle, ‘if I cannot sew I can yerk’ [SWS]. Walter (d.1761) probably son of John and Agnes Brown, although possibly a grandson. He was a weaver in Hawick from at least 1715. In 1723 he married Anne, daughter of John Tinlin of Kirklands, Ancrum. Their children were: Christian (b.1725), who married a Langlands; John (b.1727); Ann (b.1729), who may have married Robert Farquharson; Robert (b.1737), ‘Rob the Naig’; and Agnes (b.1744), who may have been the mother of Robert ‘Lurgie’ Wilson. Isabel, who married John Grierson, may have been another daughter. Witnesses to the 1737 baptism of his son Robert were merchant William Tudhope and surgeon James Scott. Walter ‘Wat’ (b.1767) son of ‘Rob the Naig’ and brother of ‘Wull the Naig’. He was assistant to his father and a shoemaker by trade. He was known for his strength of character and quick temper, which ran in his family; it was said that his ‘angry word, like his father’s, was quickly followed by a blow’. He liked to claim the it was his ‘forfadder yat fetched the nag off Flowden Field’. He may be the Walter who witnessed a baptism for Thomas Laidlaw in 1796. William ‘Wull the Naig’ (c.1763–1836) another member of the family of Burgh and church officers. He was probably a son of ‘Rob the Naig’, and was a cousin of Robert ‘Lurgie’ Wilson. He may have been Beadle at St. Mary’s for a while. However, he was known as a half-wit, who was tormented by youngsters with shouts of ‘Naig, Naig’ or ‘splonsters’. He became a beggar, but had the same blunt, outspoken nature as his ancestors, and was often involved in street skirmishes. He was a common figure around the town in the early 1800s, living near the bottom of the Fore Row. He is listed as ‘Will the Nag’ in the death register (also ‘Tindlin’, ‘Tinlan’, ‘Tinline’, ‘Tinling’, ‘Tinlinn’, ‘Tylin’, ‘Tylin’ and other variants).

Tinlin (ti-nis) n. lands in the Yarrow valley, between Hangingshaw and Yarrow. Modern maps show ‘Old Tinlin’ and ‘Tinlin Farm’. There were Crown lands here from around 1456, held by Sir James Liddell for his fee as Ranger of Yarrow, then John Murray from 1488, with Alexander, Lord Home thereafter. In 1494/5 Thomas, George and Robert Mark and David Pringle were recorded there. It contained some of the King’s flocks in 1502. James Pringle held the lands in feu according to a rental roll of 1541, with rental of £50. A branch of the Pringles held these lands in the late 15th and early 16th centuries. The Scotts of Buccleuch possessed the lands there in 1653 and according to the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch. There were Ballantynes there in the 19th century (also written ‘Tinmis’, ‘Tinmes’, ‘Tynis’, ‘Tynes’ and variants, as well as ‘Tunmis’, ‘Tynmes’, etc.; the origin may be the Cumbric ‘din’ for ‘fort’ or ‘refuge’).

Tinnisburn (ti-nis-burn) n. former lands in Liddesdale. ‘Over and Neather Tyneisburne’ are listed among the lands possessed by Thomas Kerr of Ancrum in 1632 (it is ‘Tenissburn’ on a map of Liddesdale drawn up by Sir William Cecil, c.1561., is ‘Tyneisburne’ in 1580, ‘Tyneisburne’ in 1599 and ‘Tynnesburne’ in 1605).

Tinlinn see Tinlinn Witter

Tinnisburnfit (ti-nis-burn-fi) n. former farmstead in lower Castleton Parish, on the north side of the Tinnis Burn, where it meets the Liddel Water. It is marked ‘Tinnisburnfoot’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Tinnisburnheid (ti-nis-burn-heed) n. former farm in Liddesdale, presumably on the Tinnis Water. It is ‘Tynneisburnheid’ in 1632 when listed among the Liddesdale possessions of the Sheriff of Teviotdale.

Tinlin (ti-nihl) n. hill south-west of Newcastleton, on the border with Dumfries & Galloway. It reaches a height of 404m, has a triangulation pillar and some remains of ancient cairns, sheepfolds and terraces. A wooden bowl found there, possibly neolithic, is in the Museum. There are cairns and standing stones to the south of the hill. The lands there were formerly a farm, valued at 6 pounds in 1541, and vacant at that time. There is another Tinnis on the Yarrow (including Tinnis Farm and Old Tinnis), another in Southdean Parish, east of Chesters (with an ancient settlement) and one more (with an ancient castle), near Drumelzier, between Peebles and Biggar – ‘High Tinnis is crested with flame as of yore, And flings its broad glare down the Solway’s red tide’ [Fi] (it is ‘Tynneshill’ in 1541;
Tinnis Hill

It is ‘Tinnise hill’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and is also marked on Stobie’s 1770 map.

Tinnis Witter (ti-nis-wi’-ur) n. Tinnis Water, also known as Tinnis Burn, stream that rises on the eastern slopes of Tinnis Hill and meets the Liddel near Kershope. It is said to have once been heavily wooded and ‘the residence of freebooters’ – ‘Tarras and Dod and Douglas, Tinnis Water and Trow; To the drone of bees On the clovered leas, / Would sing me a welcome now’ [WL] (it is ‘Tinsburne’ on Sandison’s c.1590 map; the origin may be the same as ‘Tinnis’ in Selkirkshire, namely the Cumbric ‘dín’, meaning ‘fort’).

Tinniswood (ti-nis-wood) n. T. (19th/20th C.) composer of the piano tunes ‘Cornet’s Lancers’ and ‘Cornet’s Schottische’. He also organised a local orchestra in the early 20th century.

Tinniswud (ti-nis-wud) n. former name for lands in Liddesdale, recorded as ‘Tenaswd’ in the c.1376 rental roll of the area. They were valued at 9 merks. ‘Tynneswoodgrene’ is listed c.1376 rental roll of the area. They were there in 1541, with a value of 5 merks and tenanted by Simon Armstrong. It must have been somewhere in Liddesdale, recorded as ‘Tenaswd’ in the local orchestra in the early 20th century.

Tinnis Hill

Left-hand men get ‘They are Jolly Good Fellows’. The toast to the memory of Drumlanrig is always pledged in solemn silence. Other toasts might include ‘the Provost’, ‘the Council’, ‘the Lasses’, ‘Absent Teriess’ and ‘Safe Oot, Safe In’. Dinners typically end with ‘Cornet’s Up’.

Tobacco, plants of the genus Nicotiana, brought back from the New World from the 16th century and prepared for smoking or taking as snuff, originally believed to have remarkable medicinal properties. Like elsewhere in Europe, social customs were to change utterly with the arrival of these dried leaves. The first record in Hawick is in 1652 – ‘Persewit be John Scott, merchant, for payment to him of £6 10s. worth of tobacco pypis, broken be him in carrying of thame out of Edinburgh’ [BR1652] (also bacce).

money given as a dowry – ‘…five hundred merkis for the marriage and tocher of James of Douglas, my sone and apperand are, wyth Jonet, the dochter of the said Dauid …’ [SB1470], ‘…the said Waltyr Scot, knich, payand the toquhir to the said James …’ [SB1519], ‘…That tell the tocher o’ a leal Scots lass, The oot-gleam o’ a hert that’s true’ [WL].

money given as a dowry – ‘Item, to the Laird of Johnestoun for the rest of his tocher gud, ane thousand and foure hundreth merkis. Item, to the Laird of Phairnyhirst for the rest of his tocher gude, marriage money’ [SB1574].

place names, e.g. Todholes, Todrig, Todcleuch, Todshaw and Todshawhaugh).

Tod (tod)n. Thomas of Drygrange (1726–1800), W.S., son of Archibald, writer in Edinburgh. His family were from Melrose. He was an advocate, who was one of the trustees for Dr. Robert Lang-lands when he sold off his estate to satisfy creditors in about 1780. He was on the roll of electors in Roxburghshire in 1780. In 1788 he was recorded as lifierent of the lands of Langnew-ton Mill, as well as lands in Newstead. He was also recorded in 1811 as owner of the feu-duties from Charles Kerr of Abbotrule. By 1875 these duties were among the possessions of Sir Walter Elliot of Wolfelee. Walter (18th/19th C.) res-dent of Langhope in Ashkirk Parish. He finished editing the 1837 description of that parish for the New Statistical Account, since the minister, Rev. Hamilton, died before publication. He also wrote ‘The obligation of civil rulers to esablish the means of religious knowledge and instruction: deduced from the universal moral government of God’ (1836) and an essay describing a device for compressing peat into fuel, published in the Transactions of the Highland and Agricultural Society in 1832 (see also Todd).

Todcleuch see Todcleuch

Todd (tod)n. Francis (1857/8–1910) came to Hawick in 1889 as choirmaster at St. Andrew’s Church, remaining for 15 years. He conducted the Hawick Select Choir and others throughout the Borders and was also a music teacher. Gladys Ruth (1901–2002) born in Hawick, she became a school teacher, returning to town in 1925. She spent 30 years at Drumlanrig School and then 4 years at Wilton, retiring in 1959. Always known as ‘Miss Todd’, she was fondly remembered by ex-pupils. A supporter of the Border Music Festival and lover of the Hawick songs, she lived to celebrate her 100th birthday. James (19th C.)
stationmaster at Stobs in the 1860s. William (15th C.) witness to the 1469 sasine for Wolfelee.
It seems likely that he was local to Rulewater.
His surname is recorded as ‘Tode’. Sir William (d.bef. 1564) associated with Bedrule Kirk from 1541. He was recorded as Parson and Vicar of Bedrule in November 1557. It is feasible that this is a transcription error for ‘Ker’, who was a cleri-gymn there soon afterwards; however, it seems that he resigned in 1557 and was replaced by William Ker. His ‘tack’ of 1557 was used by Kerr of Ferniehirst to support their 1564 claim against the parishioners of Bedrule that they had rights to the parish teinds (formerly spelled ‘Tod’ and ‘Tode’).

toddie scone *(to-dee-skôn)n., arch. a small, round scone – ‘. . . an old lady called Porter stayed in the bottom flat and sold pies and toddie scones’ [JRa] (perhaps tatti-scone is meant; see also scone).

toddle *(to-dul)n. to walk with unsteady steps, walk jauntily – ‘Some playfu’ toddlin’ sweet wee bairn’; Some lovely youth, or maiden dear
. . . ’ [AD], ‘Come awa’, my little lambie, Toddle tentie, come to me . . . ’ [TCh], ‘Lang about Et-trick may ye toddle’ [JR].

Todds *(todz)n. William (18th C.). In 1693 his children Thomas, Robert, Archibald and Oliver had a decree against Adam Scott of Bowhill and William Scott in Langhope. He was probably a tenant on Langhope (near Ashkirk).

Todgiehill *(to-jee-hil)n. former name for Tod-shawhill.

Todholes *(tod-hólz)n. former lands in Liddes-dale, recorded as ‘Todholys’ in c.1376, with rental value at 4 shillings. It is probably the ‘Toddeldale, recorded as ‘Todholys’ in c.1376, with rental value at 4 shillings. It is probably the ‘Toddel-shill, as also having a mill. It is inherited by his brother Archibald in 1698. The lands were described as also having a mill. It is unclear where these lands were, although possiibly the same as ‘Todlaw’ on the Dean Burn (it is transcribed ‘Todhold’ in 1687 and 1698).

Todholes *(tod-hólz)n. former lands in the Barony of Cavers, listed in the 1511 charter of the Douglases of Cavers, as ‘Denummains, called Todholis’ (or ‘Todeholis’). It was listed as the principle ‘messuage’ of the demesne lands of Den-holm in 1687 when part of the Barony of Cavers when inherited by Sir William Douglas and when inherited by his brother Archibald in 1698. The lands were described as also having a mill. It is unclear where these lands were, although possibly the same as ‘Todlaw’ on the Dean Burn (it is transcribed ‘Todhold’ in 1687 and 1698).

Todholeside *(tod-hól-sid)n. former lands in Lilliesleaf. Along with ‘Standestanerg’ these lands were sold by Adam, son of Adam of Durham to the monks of Melrose in the early 1200s, sometime between 1214 and 1249. The precise location is unknown, but it lay between Clerklands and the part of Lilliesleaf held by William, son of Alexander of Lilliesleaf (spelled ‘Thodholesid’).
Todhunter Grain

stream in Castleton Parish which rises on Windy Edge and flows into the Tinnis Burn near Whisgills. There are old sheepfolds along its banks. The former farmstead of Grainfoot may have been at the foot of this stream – ‘Sad thoughts of the past often steal through my brain, As I fancy I see him on the ‘Todhunter-grain’’ [DA].

Todlaw (tod-law) n. farmstead in Cavers Parish, on the Dean Burn, lying between East Middle and Denholmhill. The farmer there in 1797 was Michael Anderson and in 1851 it was Robert Scott. The 1863 Ordnance Survey ‘Name Book’ describes it as ‘a one storey house with garden attached’. This could be the ‘Todha’ near the head of Denholm Dean mentioned in a story related in 1830 (and printed in the Border Counties Magazine of 1881).

Todlaw Wells (tod-law-welz) n. plantation in Bedrule Parish, to the south-east of the Dunion, lying on the route of the Borders Abbey Way. There is an enclosure, rig and furrow lines and a possible settlement in the area.

Todrick (tod-rik) n. older variant of Todrig.

Todrig (tod-rik, tōd-rik, -rij) n. farm near the confluence of the Todrig Burn with the Langhope Burn (which flows into the Ale). Some time in the period 1248–58 Henry of Ashkirk gifted the lands to Coldstream Priory. In about 1260 there is a charter from Aymer de Maxwell granting the lands to Alexander de Synton. ‘Hector Laudir’ brother of the Laird is recorded in 1494/5. Cuthbert Lauder from there was convicted of resent, comming with rebels and other crimes in 1508. There is a charter of 1511/12 confirming the superiority of the lands to John Lord Hay of Yester, which had previously belonged to his father. John Hay granted the lands to Stephen Lauder in about 1512; it was then in the Barony of Olivercastle through annexation. William Lauder inherited the Lairdship as heir of Stephen and in 1555 he announced that his tenant William Scott should be ejected from the lands. Katherine Gray had the right in 1538 to remove the sheep of Thomas and George Lauder. The Hays continued to hold the lands (or perhaps part of them) at least up until inherited by John, Lord Hay of Yester in 1610. The lands were held by the Scotts of Harden, with George of Todrig being the 3rd son of the first William of Harden. The family arms of this old branch of Scott of Todrig were cut into their seat in the old Ashkirk church in 1622. However, sometime around 1622 George’s son Walter sold the property to Thomas, younger brother of Sir Walter Scott, 2nd Laird of Whitslade. For more than a century it belonged to this new branch of Scotts of Todrig or ‘Toderick’. The motto of this branch was ‘Pro aris et focis’. Tax was paid for 13 hearths on the estate in 1694. Thomas Scott’s lands in Roxburghshire were valued at £552 in 1678 (this being for Wester Essenside, Leaphill and their associated teinds). Thomas Cowan was gardener there in 1709. John Hendry was living there in 1710. The estate was sold off by Thomas Scott in 1746. George Pott was the proprietor on Ainslie’s 1773 map. Robert Brown was living there in 1787–89. The estate was valued at £576 in 1785 and 1802. The main house dates from at least the 17th century on the eastern side, with alterations from 1802 converting it to a more modern farmhouse. The original entrance can still be made out on the south wall. Adjacent farm buildings contain 2 stone panels, one with the date ‘1698’, the other having the initials ‘G P’ (probably for George Pott), together with a lozenge and inscription ‘REBUILT 1833’. A mill is marked nearby, on the opposite side of the Todrig Burn, on Ainslie’s 1773 map. A bronze tripod pot found there in 1956 is in the Royal Museum of Scotland. There is a farm of the same name south of Greenlaw, and another east of Eccles. One of these places (or more than one perhaps) gave rise to the surname ‘Todrick’. The arms of Scott of Todrig bore a star and 2 crescents and the family motto was ‘Pro aris et focis’ – ‘First came Todrig, Then came Woll, Last came Whitslade, The Chief of the Water Ail’ [CWS] (the name occurs as ‘Todholerig’ in a charter of the late 12th century; the house is marked as ‘Toodrrig’ on Gordon’s c. 1650 map and Blaeu’s 1654 map, ‘Todrig’ on Adair’s c. 1688 map and ‘Toodrigg’ on Ainslie’s 1773 map; also formerly spelled ‘Todrick’, ‘Todrik’, ‘Toderick’, etc., it was ‘Toderig’ in about 1250, ‘Toddryk’ in 1535, ‘Todryk’ in 1540, ‘Todryge’ in 1638, ‘Toodrigge’ in 1644, ‘Todrigge’ in 1678 and 1682, ‘Todrigg’ in 1694 and 1710, ‘Todridge’ in 1720, ‘Todrice’ in 1761 and ‘Todridge’ in 1785 and 1787; whether the origin is ‘fox ridge’, or something else, is unknown).

Todrig (tod-rik) n. Alexander (15th C.) priest who witnessed an Edinburgh document in 1488. His name was spelled ‘Todrick’, and he may have had a connection to the local estate. Archibald (15th C.) described as ‘of Todrick’ when he was witness to a document made at St. Giles in Edinburgh in 1477. Probably the same ‘Archibaldus Todryk’ who was a Bailie of Edinburgh according to a charter of 1482. He may be the earliest recorded person of this surname. Probably the same Archibald was ‘Archibaldi Tothrik’, Burgess of Edinburgh in a charter of the Collegiate Church of Dalkeith in 1504, where his son and heir William is also mentioned. David (16th C.) son of Robert, Burgess of Selkirk. He is recorded as witness to several documents in Selkirk in the period 1528–44. In 1536/7 he had a marriage contract with Helen, daughter of Stephen Wilkinson. In 1542 he was listed as ‘serjeant’ and in 1543 he complained about a transaction with Simon Fairley. He was witness to a transaction in 1544. David (16th C.) resident of Selkirk. He may be the David recorded in 1561 in Selkirk when he made an agreement with Robert Robson ‘in Hauyk’. A tenement formerly pertaining to him is recorded in Selkirk in 1579 and he was a Burgess in 1580 when he witnessed another transaction in Selkirk. In 1581/2 he witnessed a dispute between Bailies in Selkirk. George (16th C.) Burgess of Edinburgh recorded as ‘Todrik’ in 1552. John (15th/16th C.) witness to an Edinburgh document of 1501/2, where his name is spelled ‘Todrik’. Robert (d.bef. 1537) witnessed a document in Selkirk in 1527. In 1528 and 1534 he witnessed documents in Selkirk, along with his son David. Also in 1528 and 1534 he was recorded as owner of a tenement in Selkirk. In 1532/3 he was a ‘special tenant’ in the 20 shillingland of East Haining, wedset to John Scott, Burgess of Selkirk. He was deceased in 1536/7 when his son an heir David succeeded to his lands and money in Selkirk. Thomas (15th C.) listed as resident of lands in Linlithgow in a charter of 1496. Thomas (16th C.) described as ‘Thomas Todrik, serjeand’ in an Edinburgh document of 1548. Perhaps the same Thomas was a traveller when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk in 1551. William (15th C.) recorded as ‘Wil. Tothrik’ in a charter of 1428 when he held lands in Edinburgh. He may be the earliest recorded person of this surname. William (15th/16th C.) referred to as ‘of Todrig’ in 1505 when he was a Burgess of Edinburgh and gained houses on Edinburgh High Street. He is also mentioned (as ‘Willelmi Todryk’) in a charter of Trinity Collegiate Church in 1511. It is unclear whether he had a local connection. Probably the same William was described as a Bailie of Edinburgh (and spelled ‘Todrick’ and ‘Tothrik’) in the period 1501–07 and witnessed another charter in Edinburgh in 1502. He married the King’s cousin Margaret Crichton and was given an exemption from customs for life.

Tod Rig (tod-rig) n. ridge to the north-west of Todrig farm and to the north-east of Langhope farm.

Todrig Burn (tod-rig-burn) n. stream that flows to the east out of Shaws Loch and past Todrig, before joining the Ale Water (it is ‘Todrigg-burn’ on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Todrig Mill (tod-rig-mill) n. former mill near Todrig farm. Walter Nichol was there in 1763 and John Glendinning in 1781 (it is ‘Todrigg Miln’ in 1763 and ‘Todrigg mln’ in 1781; it is marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Todrig Shank (tod-rig-shawng) n. former name for a place, presumably close to Todrig. It is ‘Todrik Schank’ in 1581 when it was the location where an agreement was signed by Walter Scot of Goldielands, Walter Chisholme of that Ilk, John Scot of Robertson and William Dalgleish in Crookston, relating to a dispute between Adam Scott in Bonnington and Robert Scott of Haining.

Todscluech (todz-klooch) n. former fortified house in the Liddel valley, near the present Steeleeproad-end. It is probably related to Todshaw Sike, which is marked near there on modern maps. The farm is recorded as ‘Todcleuche alias Todcleuchides’ in 1632, among the lands possessed by Hab Henderson. Ninian Wigham was tenant there in 1694, with Andrew Pott, weaver, also a resident. Michael Dang was recorded as farmer at ‘Todscleughside’ in 1797 (marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map, with ‘Todscleughside’ appearing on Stobie’s 1770 map; ‘Todiscluechside’ is recorded in 1659 and is is ‘Todscleughside’ in 1694: the name is presumably related to the fox; note that there is an unrelated ‘Todcluech’ near Canonbie).

Todshaw (tod-shaw) n. former farm in the Borthwick valley. It is unclear how far back the name goes, because of confusion with Todshawhaugh. However, it may be that this general name came first and the ‘haugh’ was added to the nearby farm later. In any case ‘Todshaw’ is listed among those lands granted to Sir William Wardlaw of Wilton in about 1400. The farm was part of the Harden estates in the 17th century. There were 18 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650, namely George Turnbull, Isobel Renwick, John Turnbull, Janet Turnbull, Walter Fairgrieve, William Henderson, Sarah Rule, Michael Renwick, John Aitichison, Janet Scott, Mark Coltart, Janet Paterson, William Grierson, Mungo Brand, Isobel Shortreed, Marion Scott, Marion Brand and Grisel Hall. It was included within Hawick Parish (according to a valuation of 1678) and along with Todshawhaugh, Todshawhill, Whithope and Whithope Mill was valued at £1658 when disjoined to the new Roberton Parish. It was included among lands inherited by Gideon Scott of Highchester from his father Walter, Earl of Tarras in 1694. Mungo Scott, John Mowat and John Rule were listed as residents there in 1694. The lands were part of a legal dispute between Gideon Scott of Highchester and Walter Scott of Woll in the early years of the 18th century. William Miller was there in 1703, Walter Scott in 1710–15, John Jackson in 1711, William Helm in 1720. John Stavert in 1720–26, Patrick Blaikie in 1722 and John Scott in 1725. It was sold by William Scott of Thirlstane about 1750 and was owned by John Murray of Philiphaw in 1757 when its head lands were divided from those of Mabonlaw. Until 1689 when Roberton was formed, it was part of Wilton Parish, while the separate farm of Todshawhaugh was in Hawick Parish. William Purdie was there in 1763–67, George Coltart in 1767 and Walter Armstrong in 1789. In 1788 the owner is recorded as John Johnstone of Alva, when it was valued at £113 15s 3d and it was £130 in 1811 with the same owner. In about 1874 the owner was Capt. George William Hutton Riddell. It lay between Mabonlaw and Mervinslaw, as marked on Stobie’s 1770 map (while Blaeu’s 1654 map shows it between Mabonlaw and Harden, but this map is not always accurate). The geography is somewhat confused by the existence of several places of similar name stretching over about 2 miles. Todshaw Hill (268 m) lies behind Highchesters Hill, on the north side of the Borthwick valley, with Todshaw Sike and Todshaw Dean being in the upper reaches of the Wilton Burn. Todshawhaugh farm is on the south side of the Borthwick valley, near where Todshaw Cleugh joins the river, and below Todshawhaugh Hill. And a higher Todshaw Hill (288 m) and the farm of Todshawhill lie about another mile to the south, near Chapelhill farm (recorded as ‘Todschaw’ in a 1588 contract and again in 1643; the name is presumably related to the fox).

Todshaw (tod-shaw) n. James (17th C.) witnessed a baptism for John Turnbull in Roberton Parish in 1681. William (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, when it contained Hassendean. He married Jean Kinnear in 1683 and their children included: John (b.1684); John (b.1685); and Elizabeth (b.1688). The witnesses in 1688 were James Scott and George Riddell. In 1687 he witnessed a baptism in Roberton for James Scott and Janet Elliot (formerly ‘Totchaw’).
Todshaw Haugh

(also son of the minister) was tenant in 1696 and 1698. James Grieve was recorded there in 1716-23, James Brydon in 1725 and Robert Govenlock in 1727. It was also the site of a blacksmiths in the 18th and 19th centuries. James Grieve was tenant there in the early 18th century (from about 1712) and Walter Grieve (of Branxholme Park) farmed there in the late 18th century, until he died in 1800. The farm was then leased to Robert Scott of Single. Walter Armstrong was living there in 1800. In 1841 Walter Scott was farm steward there and the residents at the cottages were Turnbuls and Millers. The flat land on the south side of the Borthwick there is known as Todshaw Haugh, and the hill to the west is Todshawhaugh Hill (also spelled ‘Todshawauche’, etc., it first appears as ‘Todgishalch’ in 1426, is ‘Todschawhauch’ in 1446, ‘Togehawch’ in 1484/5, ‘Todschawhauch’ in 1486, ‘Todshawhauch’ in 1492, ‘Todschawhauch’ in 1549, ‘Todshawhauch’ in 1580/1, 1591 and 1594, ‘Todschawhaucht’ in 1581, ‘Todschahauoch’ in 1627, ‘Todshahauche’ in 1628, ‘Todschawhauch’ in 1648, ‘Todshaw-haugh’ in 1678, ‘Todschawhauch’ in 1692, ‘Toitcha-hauoch’ in 1694, ‘Todshahauoch’ in 1721 and ‘Todziehaugh’ in 1757; it is ‘Todshauche’ on a 1650 parish map, appears to be marked simply ‘Hauch’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Todshaw Haugh (tod-shaw-hawf, -hawch) n. flat land on the south side of the Borthwick Water, just to the east of Todshawhaugh farm.

Todshawhaugh Hill (tod-shaw-hawf-hil) n. hill on the southern side of the Borthwick valley, south of Harden Bridge, and to the south-west of Todshawhaugh farm. There are remains of a hill-fort and earthworks on the northern spur. The nearly circular earthwork, about 45 m in diameter has been almost obliterated by ploughing on the eastern side. The ditch of the ridge-fort appears to connect with this and runs for about 20 m to the south-west, with traces of a rampart along its inner side. A little further south is a peak called Ladies’ Seat, which is a little higher.

Todshaw Hill (tod-shaw-hil, -jee-hil) n. hill above Chapelhill and Todshawhill farms, between the Teviot and Borthwick valleys. It reaches a height of 288 m and has a fort on its summit and settlement a little to the north, as well as some small ponds. The former farm of Todshawhill stood here. To confuse things, another hill of the same name, reaching 268 m, stands on the northern side of the Borthwick valley, near Mabonlaw farm. This (southern) one has a fort on its summit, and the farm of Todshawhill is adjacent. Between these 2 hills is the lower Todshawhaugh Hill. The fort is on a ridge near the summit, about 90 m by 70 m in size, surrounded by 3 ramparts, with an entrance on the west. A crescent-shaped depression inside is probably a hut floor. The other archaeological site on this hill lies on the northern spur, covering an area of about 55 m by 40 m, surrounded by a single rampart, but much denuded by ploughing. There may be an entrance to the north-east and a scooped area inside could be a hut site. Note that there are several forts and settlements on the neighbouring Whitsail Hill. There is yet another hill of the same name north of Alemoor Loch, which is 352 m high.

Todshaw Hill (tod-shaw-hil) n. hill on the north of Alemoor Loch, which is 352 m high.

Todshawhill (tod-shaw-, to-ja-, -jee-hil) n. former farm near Chapelhill, about 2½ miles west of Hawick. Its early history is closely related with that of Todshawhaugh, with which it can sometimes be confused. It was surveyed in 1718 along with other Buccleuch properties, when it consisted of 251 acres, bounded by the Todshawhaugh, Branxholme Mains, Branxholme Muir, Whithope and Whames. It was among the lands that passed from the Inglis family to the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1446. From at least the mid-16th century it was another home of a local branch of the Scotts. The farm was among those belonging to Scott of Buccleuch that were burned by a band of Englishmen and Kers in late 1548. Philip Scott is recorded as tenant in 1549. Andrew Scott of ‘Totchaill, from the family of Robertoun’ is listed by Scott of Satchells as one of the 24 ‘pensioners’ of Buccleuch. It is described in a 1627 valuation as paying ‘21 bolls stock and teynd; estimat to pay in stock 12 bolls, parsonage 3 bolls, 3 lbs. vicarage’. The Land Tax Rolls of 1643 lists the value of the farm at £133 6s 8d, owned by John Scott of Todshawhill. There were 12 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650, namely Agnes Scott, Euphan Haliburton, Helen Haliburton, Joan Scott, Agnes Scott, John Renwick, Isabel Kedie, Robert Renwick, John Renwick, Bessie Hendry, Robert Scott and Margaret...
Todshawhillshiel

Todman. Adam and William Scott were tenants from 1632 until about 1671. James Nichol was listed as a tenant in 1671 and Ninian Elliot in 1672 and 1673. James Carruthers was also recorded as tenant in 1673. Walter Scott of Harwood was leasing the farm in 1677. It was part of Hawick Parish until becoming part of the new Parish of Robertin in 1689/90. In 1691 it was leased to William Ogilvie and in 1693 to James Moffat, William Nichol and Robert Anderson. In 1694 the householders listed there were William Ogilvie, William Young (ploughman), Robert Blaik (shepherd) and James Scott, with Robert Scott listed there among the ‘poor’. William Ogilvie was tenant again in 1696 and Capt. Francis Scott in 1697. Thomas Shiel was tenant there from at least 1699, when he had the farmhouse rebuilt on a more convenient site at about that time. 2 houses were built, each 42 feet long, one having 2 stone chimneys and 8 windows; it is unclear if anything survives from this time. This is probably the ‘Todschill’ where William Pott is recorded in 1702. John Douglas was living there in at least 1711–18 and James Leithead in 1722. Thomas Shiel was still recorded as tenant in 1735. It was tenanted by several generations of the Scoon family, starting with John in about 1748, with Robert being the last Scoon tenant, who emigrated to the U.S.A. in about 1842 after defaulting on the lease. The farm was then amalgamated with Chapelhill. David Taylor was living there in 1762, James Scott in 1765 and 1771, James Crow in 1766, Andrew Henderson in 1771 and William Taylor in 1781. Robert Scoon is recorded as farmer there in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. In 1841 the residents of the cottages there were the Hoggs and the Grahams (‘The Hoggs and the Grahams’). In 1819 it was purchased by John Usher in 1753, then held by his son James and grandson John. In 1819 it was bought from the Ushers by Sir Walter Scott, who changed the name to Huntlyburn and improved the simple two storey house there. It seems that it was formerly called ‘Tylehouse’, perhaps related to the Tyle manufacturing for Melrose Abbey (the 1574 will of Gibbie Hatley of Gattonside refers to a ‘Tyleholdings’). Todshaw Sike (tod-shaw-sik) n. small stream that joins Taylor’s Cleuch and flows into the Liddel Water just south of Larriston. There is a complex of medieval and post-medieval buildings nearby. This may be the settlement once called ‘Todscleuchside’.

Todknie (tod-knie) n. small stream that rises on Cockplay Hill and joins the Twislehope Burn just to the west of Twislehope farm.

Todstead (tod-steed) n. Todstead, former farm in Liddesdale, recorded as ‘Todistede’ and with a value of 4 shillings in a rental roll of c.1376. It is unclear where this was located.

toff (tof) n., ins. a member of the upper classes, or more generally someone with a strong ‘proper’ English accent – ‘... A toff cam in wi’ bulging pack And dumped it in the pend’[WL].

toft (toft) n., arch. a homestead, farmstead and attached land (the word survives in the names of several farms, e.g. Tofts, Toftfield, Toftholm and Kirkton Tofts).

toft an croft (toft-in-kroft) n., arch. an entire holding, land and buildings – ‘... to enter the said Walter in Eidschaw to his husbandland with onset, toft and croft and pertinents’[SPB1581].

Toftfield (toft-field) n. former name of an estate near Melrose, adjacent to Abbotsford. It was purchased by John Usher in 1753, then held by his son James and grandson John. In 1819 it was bought from the Ushers by Sir Walter Scott, who changed the name to Huntlyburn and improved the simple two storey house there. It seems that it was formerly called ‘Tylehouse’, perhaps related to tile manufacturing for Melrose Abbey (the 1574 will of Gibbie Hatley of Gattonside refers to a ‘Faften field’ which may be the same place).

Toftholm (toft-hòm) n. farm in the Hermitage valley, opposite Shaws. It was surveyed in 1718, along with other properties owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch. At this time it was combined with Tofts, covering 329 acres, bounded by Shaws,
Tofts

Overraw, the lands of the Laird of Hoscote, Graystonehaugh and the Hermitage Water. Andrew Crozier was there in 1623. James Crozier was tenant in 1694 and William Crozier was also listed there. Thomas Pott was recorded as farmer there in 1797. Adam Scott was shepherd there in the late 19th and early 20th centuries. A sandstone axe-hammer found near here is in Hawick Museum. On the edge of a terrace just to the south-west there is an ancient enclosure and further south-west, on a small terrace, are the remains of a farmstead, named ‘Upper Row’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map. There is also a field system and rig lines there (marked as ‘Toftshome’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Toftsholme’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey, it has its modern name on Stobie’s 1770 map; also called ‘Toftsholm’, it is ‘Toftsholme’ in 1694; this is probably from ‘howm’, meaning low-lying land beside a river; see also Toftsholm Sike).

Tofts (tofts) n. farm in Kirkton Parish, in modern times split into Nether Tofts and Upper Tofts. The place name is quite old, with ‘William of Tofts’ being recorded as Parson of Cavers in 1333, and possibly the Ingram, Robert and William ‘de Toftes’ recorded on the Ragman Rolls of 1296 also being connected with this location. Hence it may have given rise to a surname. There are deeds from 1550, 1554 and 1639 in the Douglas of Cavers papers. John Turnbull ‘in tofts’ is recorded in 1493. It was owned by the Turnbulls ‘of Tofts’ in the 16th and 17th centuries. Martin Douglas of Tofts inherited lands from his uncle Archibald (presumably the lands of Tofts) in 1608. Martin Douglas ‘of Toftis’ is also recorded in 1615 and John Douglas, ‘called of Toftis’ in 1619. It was valued at £300 in 1643 (when owned by ‘Laird of Tofts’, who also held £ of land in Abbotrule Parish) and in 1678 (when owned by an unnamed Turnbull). William Turnbull of Tofts inherited the 2 farms from his father Thomas in 1695. William Turnbull paid tax for 11 windows there in 1748. Anthony Turnbull was there in 1788 and still in about 1813, when still valued at £300. William Richardson Dickson of Alton were there in the 1870s. George and Robert Deans were farmers there in the 1860s (the origin is probably just ‘the homestead’ in Middle English, deriving from the Old Norse ‘topt’; it has its modern spelling at least by Gordon’s c. 1650 map, while Blaeu’s 1654 map already shows ‘N. Tofts’ and ‘O. Tofts’).

Tofts (tofts) n. possible former name for Kirkton Tofts (it is unclear whether this is the same place or not).

Toftsholm Sike

Tofts (tofts) n. Adam of Norwich (13th C.) listed in 1291 among men who had letters of protection from Edward I. He was serving the English King at Roxburgh Castle. It is unclear whether he was related to the Roxburghshire Tofts family. Ingram (13th C.) signatory of the Ragman Rolls in 1296 along with William and Robert ‘de Toftes’. His name was listed first, so he may have been the senior member of the family. His seal consisted of a large fleur-de-lis and the name ‘S’INGRAMI D’TOFTIS’. Robert (13th C.) listed as ‘de Toftes’ when he signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. His seal shows an 8-rayed figure and the name ‘S’ROBERTI D’TOFTIS’.

William (13th C.) swore fealty to Edward I in 1296, along with Ingram and William. William (14th C.) recorded as ‘Willelmo de Toftys’ in 1363 when he was Rector of ‘magna Cauers’. He was most likely associated with the lands of Tofts in Kirkton Parish, and parson of the neighbouring parish of Cavers. He was probably a descendant of the earlier ‘of Tofts’ family.

the Tofts (thu-tofts) n. former farm in the Hermitage valley, just to the north of Toftsholm. It is probably the ‘Toftys’ recorded as being in the ‘Quarterium de Ludne’ in a rental roll of Liddesdale c.1376, with a value of 5 merks. It is shown on Blaeu’s 1654 map on the southern side of the valley, roughly opposite the present village of Hermitage. It was surveyed in 1718, along with other properties owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch. At this time it was combined with Toftsholm into a farm covering 329 acres, bounded by Shaws, Overraw, the lands of the Laird of Hoscote, Graystonehaugh and the Hermitage Water. It probably included the area marked as Tofts Knowes on the modern Ordnance Survey map.

Tofts Hill (tofts-hill) n. hill in Kirkton Parish, just south of Upper Tofts farm. It reaches a height of about 250 m. There is a small pond on the north side and a quarry on the south side. Aerial photography has a slo shown 2 rectangular enclosures, some field banks and some rig lines to the south west of there.

Toftsholm Sike (tofts-hôm-sîk) n. small stream that rises at Thiefsike Head and runs roughly parallel to the Hermitage Water, to join that river at Toftsholm. There is the ruin of a cottage on its north side, and the remains of 2 shieling-huts in its headwaters, as well as old remains of sheepfolds and dykes (see also Toftsholm).
Tofts Knowes (tofts-nowz) n. area of terrace on the southern side of the Hermitage Water, opposite Hermitage Castle. There are the remains of an old settlement there, with a farmstead, an extensive field system, rig lines and quarry pits.

togedder (to-go-dur) adv., arch. together – ‘...were outlawed for being found togedder by the church censers, after the tenn hour bell was rung’ [BR1702], ‘...the present Bayleys, Robert Hardie and Robert Brown, haweving conveined and calle togidder the towne Counsell ...’ [BR1706] (also written ‘togidder’; cf. the more modern the-gither).

toilets (toi-litz) n., pl. there have been many public toilets over the years in Hawick. Present conveniences include those in the Haugh, Howgate, the Cross Wynd and Museum. The Burns Club was built on an 1843 ‘necessary’ and the one at the end of Bourtree Place was demolished along with the railway bridge in the 1970s. Other toilets were at Torderyneside, at the south end of the Little Haugh and by the McDonald Shelter (top of Mansfield Road). The first facilities were installed at the Moor in 1889. Two 1 penny locks were added to the closet doors in 1913 and a new urinal was built in 1925. The first Ladies toilets were built at the Paddock in 1963.

Tojo (tō-jo) n. nickname for High School teacher J. Anderson in the years after WWII.

Tokeley (tōk-lee) n. Albert Victor ‘Vic’ (1928/9–2003) born and raised in Yetholm, he lived most of his life in Hawick, working as an accountant and becoming Managing Director of Croll, Bryson. He was an all-round sportsman in his youth. He became President of the Rotary Club, was President and long-time committee member of the Archaeological Society, and was a Tweed Commissioner for 34 years. He was well known as an expert on the Yetholm gypsies and on angling, writing ‘The Kirk Yetholm Gypsies’ (2002). A memorial stone was erected on Yetholm Green.

token (tō-kin) n., arch. a communion token in the post-Reformation church – ‘Andrew Riddel and Walter Nickson to gather the Tokens’ [PR1718] (sometimes capitalised; see communion token).

tolbooth (tōl-booth) n., arch. a small building where tolls are collected, a place where goods are weighed to determine payable duties, a town prison.

the Tolbooth (thu-tōl-booth) n. Tolbooths were generally the place where traders paid their fees on market days and where goods were weighed, as well as acting as the town jail. Hawick’s former Tolbooth was on the site of the previous Town Hall, before being demolished in 1781 (with the timber being sold for £1 6s.). It was said to be a ‘humble and primitive erection’ with a thatched roof of heather and a rough barn-like interior. It would have served many municipal functions in its day, including as the local court and town prison. The building was sold to the town by William Scott of Horsleyhill in 1657, although there was probably a building with a similar function before that, somewhere else on the High Street. In fact there is a mention in 1612 of the Town being in debt for a number of reasons, including ‘bigging of their tolbuith’. The building was said to be in a ruinous condition in 1693 and was rebuilt around 1694. Its use by the Council for meetings is recorded in the Town Book in 1638 and 1660. There was some dispute in the 17th century over the rights of the agents of the Baron to use it for particular purposes. In 1704 it is recorded that it needed to be thatched. In 1724 the Council resolved to demolish the old building and rebuild it, ‘set out to the south corner of Horsliehills House’ (probably on the other side of the High Street), at a cost of 600 merks. In 1727 the Council decreed that the weigh-house ‘or under tolbooth’ should be leased. A staircase was erected there in 1732. In 1737 the stair was mended and the building re-limed. 2 panes of glass were purchased for it in 1755. A man paid the Council for keeping ‘wild beasts’ in it in 1768. The lock of the old jail door is in the Museum. The word ‘Tolbooth’ was also later applied to the building at the Loan Toll, where the tolls were collected, as well as sometimes being used for other houses at toll-bars on the roads around Hawick – ‘The Court of the bruche of Hawick, halden within the Tolbuith thereof ...’[BR1638], ‘Item, whatsomever person that sall be committed in waird, and brekis the Tolbuith, or cumes furth thereof without license of the bailies, or ane of them, sal pay £10 money, and wardit during the bailies’ will’ [BR1640], ‘Walter Scott ... bailie of the regality of Hawick, under William Lord Drumlanrig, craves of the bailies of Hawick the key of the tolbuith ...’[BR] (also spelled ‘Tolbooth’ and ‘Tolbuith’).

tolerat (to-le-ri’) pp., arch. tolerated – ‘...was ordered to bring a testimonie from Mr. Douglas, Minister of Kirktone, failing which he would not be tolerate to stay in ye towne’ [PR1717].
the Toleration

the Toleration (thu-to-le-rā-shin) n. name sometimes used to refer to the 1689 Act of Toleration. This permitted freedom of worship for Protestant dissenters, but not for Catholics.

toll  (tōl) n. a system of charging for the use of a road, introduced in the 18th century to fund major road improvements, but enormously unpopular with the general public.

the Toll  (* thu-tōl*) n. name sometimes given to any of the former tolls, particularly the Loan Toll.

toll-bar  (tōl-bawr) n. a beam placed across a road at a toll house, to prevent carriages from passing without paying the toll, also used to refer to the adjacent house itself. It was also sometimes also called a ‘turnpike bar’. There were toll bars every few miles along the main roads, following the Turnpike Acts of the mid-18th century. These toll houses were usually licensed for the sale of alcohol, and used as resting points by travellers. Hawick also had toll bars at the main entrances to town, specifically the Wester Toll, Loan Toll (or ‘Auld Wester Toll’), Easter Toll, Dovemount Toll (or ‘North Toll’) and those at Crumhaugh and at the Common Haugh (also written ‘toll bar’).

toll-house  (tōl-hoos) n., arch. a toll-house, building in which a toll-keeper lived. These were built every few miles along the main turnpike roads in the 18th and early 19th centuries, as well as at the main entrances to towns. Many are still in use as dwellings today and are easily distinguished because they have a window which seems perilously close to traffic. Existing examples include those at the Wester Toll, Greenbank (Roberton), Coltersleuch, Fiddelton, Langholm and Heriot. The former toll-house near the end of what became Commercial Road can be seen in the 1846 painting of the Common Riding Races.

the Toll House  (* thu-tōl-hoos*) n. name used for any of the local buildings where tolls were collected. The name was particularly used in the 19th century for one near the corner of what became Albert Road and Commercial Road.

tolls  (tōlz) n., pl. one of several toll-bars at the entrances to Hawick or on the neighbouring roads. In the 17th century even the main roads were in appalling condition. There was a Highway Act of 1669, and another of 1691, which led to little genuine improvement. General Wade’s roads, built in the Highlands in the 1720s and 30s, led to further calls for general improvement and the Turnpike Act of 1756. This made construction of improved roads compulsory, paid for by collection at toll-bars, typically located every 6–8 miles. Hawick was on the Scotch Dyke to Hare Moss toll road, which is now part of the A7. This was established by a special Act of 1764, published in 1770. There were also acts to regulate maintenance of local roads under the statutory Labour system. The highway toll acts were repealed in 1807, but already astonishing progress had been made locally. As well as toll-bars across the main roads, there were also tolls at the entrances to towns, Hawick having 4 of these at one point. They were: the Wester Toll (on the New Road, outside the present High School); the Loan Toll (in the middle of the Loan, for the old road South); the Easter Toll (on Bourtree Place near the old Con Club); and Dovemount Toll (at Dovemount on the road to Edinburgh). Plaques mark their positions. There were additional tolls at other times, e.g. across the Teviot Bridge by the Common Haugh, and another at Crumhaugh.

Tolm  (tōm) n. former place name in Liddesdale. On the 1863 Ordnance Survey map a small plantation in the middle of ‘The Steel’ is marked ‘Tolm Tourick’ (presumably meaning a little tower). Perhaps this was the claimed site of the former tower-house of Steele.

tomato  (to-ma’i) n. a tomato – ‘You say ‘tomato’ and I say ‘tomati’, You say ‘potato’ and I say ‘potati’’.

tombolo  (tōm-bō-lō) n. former name for bingo, in use around the 1950s.

tombstone  (toom-stān) n. a tombstone – ‘...but also named on the family tombstone in Duns Kirkyard’ [IWL].

tome  (tōm) v., arch. to draw out into a thin line – ‘ti toam taffie’ [ECS] (also written ‘toam’; cf. taw).

Tomes  (tōmz) n. Alan ‘Toomba’ (?) rugby player, born in Hawick, but grew up in the Newcastl area, he worked for banks and the gas board. At about 6ft 5 inches, he playing as a lock, and was known for his large stature. He played for Hawick R.F.C. from 1973, winning 48 caps in 1976–87, a record for a middle row player, and he also played for the British Lions in 1980.

Tomscotsteed  (tōm-skō’-sted) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded in the 1541 rental roll as ‘Thomscotsteid’, and listed along with the other lands of ‘Cleirlandis, Robsteid, Cranswat, Gusbank, Hurklebuss’, with tenants William Elliot, David Elliot, Bartholomew Nixon and Ninian Elliot, valued at 5 merks. They were presumably a set of adjacent small steadings, but their location is uncertain.

the Tongue (thu-tung) n. narrow strip of land on the former boundary between Tofts and Hall-rule. It was said to have been given by Turnbull of High Tofts to Douglas of Cavers as a way of protecting him from any attempts by Elliott of Stobs to force him off his land (as he had done to Turnbull of Deneside). The field still survives, just east of the Dean Burn, to the left of the A6088 a little before Hawthornside.

the Tongue (thu-tung) n. spur of land in Castleton Parish, between the Green Burn and an unnamed tributary, situated north-west of Kirk Hill. There are the remains of a farmstead, a cottage and a sheepfold there. The farmstead may be 18th century; the cottage was known as Greenburn, and probably the farmstead also. At the southern end of the spur are further enclosures and ‘lazy-beds’.

the Tongue Burn (thu-tung-burn) n. small stream that joins the Braehead Burn a little to the north-east of Gorrenberry, on the north side of the Hermitage valley.

tongue-ruits (tung-ritz) n., pl., arch. roots of the tongue, especially in the phrase ‘at one’s tongue-ruits’, meaning ‘on the tip of one’s tongue’ or about to be said – ‘It was at na tung-ruits ti cry on the hoaterry affair’ [ECS].

tongue-tackit (tung-taw-kee’) adj., arch. tongue-tied, mumbling, inarticulate because of drunkenness or having something in one’s mouth.

Tonke (tongk) n. Walter (13th C.) recorded as Sheriff of Roxburgh Castle in 1296. He was probably a clerk of the English King’s household.

the Too’er see the Toor took (took) n., arch. a tuck, pleat, a tug, pull, an excess of food or work, surfeit – ‘A’m deed-teird: A hev hed a richt took o woorak’ [ECS].

toom (toom) adj., arch., poet. empty, unoccupied, vacant – ‘But, let me tell ye, gin yer pouch be toom, sirs . . . ’ [JoHa], ‘. . . Mr. Spunk’ll be lyin’ lookin’ up at St. Mary’s Kirk wi’ a green blanket ower his toom ribs . . . ’ [JEDM], ‘He was tired and wat and the big creel was toom’ [UB], ‘We view them now baith toom and bare Wi’ empty pouches’ [RF], ‘. . . Toomba (toom-ba) n. nickname for Alan Tomes.

Toona (toon) n. town – ‘There’s a toon, o’ toons the pride That stands on bonnie Teviot side’ [JLH], ‘. . . Frae the silent slopes on my native toon’ [TC], ‘. . . On earth, Hawick is the only toon The nicht afore the morn’ [JMS], formerly any settlement situated at a major farm – ‘John Glendinen and Andrew were ordered to gather in the townes following, in ye landward part of ye parish, viz., Crumhaugh, Goldielands, Fenwick, Alton Crofts, and Whitcheisters, together with Closses’ [PR1717], adj. relating to the town – ‘. . . that no other toune or landward heritor of tenements and houses within the said burgh . . . ’ [BR1699], ‘But the toum-clerk cheery chimes owre a’’ [WL] (also spelled ‘toun’).

the Toon Book (thu-toon-book) n. the official record book kept by the Town Clerk, essentially synonymous with the Burgh Records. The first such book that still exists was begun by Gilbert Watt on 1st October 1638 and was continued by 4 successive Town Clerks until 8th October 1681. Many other books followed, listing the official business of the Town, including details of cases before the Magistrates’ Court, etc. They are crucial pieces of early historical information about events and people in Hawick, as well as the language – ‘. . . quhilkis premises the said Adam Gowanlock desirit to be insert in the common toum-buik of Hawick’ [BR1641].

the Toon Clerk (thu-toon-klerek) n. the Town Clerk of Hawick. Originally he was appointed by the citizens to keep the town records and to perform other legal duties. He was chosen by the Burgesses every 2 years, the only official to be elected rather than appointed by the Council. The first recorded one was ‘Hew Counston’ or ‘Cowstoun’ in a single Privy Council document of 1612, and then Andrew Sword is recorded in 1630. The earliest existing ‘Town Book’, recorded by the Town Clerk, has its first entries in 1638. The Gladstains and Purdom families gave many decades of service to this office. The Town Clerk used to lead the march around the Burgh boundaries when the riders returned from Riding the Common. It was said in 1711 that he was ‘now and then in custom to get ane burgess complimented over to him' (i.e. had his income supplemented by the occasional burgess fee). In 1720 he was awarded 10 shillings yearly for pen, paper and ink. The first full time appointment was not until 1937, and the position was dissolved along with Reorganisation in 1975. An approximate list follows (although some dates are far from certain): Hugh Cowston 1610s; Andrew Sword c.1620–1630s; John Richardson 1630s–1638; Gilbert Watt 1638–1650s; James Liddell 1658–1659; Andrew Tunno 1659–70; Andrew Rutherford 1670–c.73; Walter Gladstains 1673–96; William Rutherford 1696; Walter Gladstains c.1696–1710; Walter Gladstains and Walter Gladstains (second) 1710–18; Walter Gladstains (second) 1718–39; James Weir c.1732–61; John Gladstains c.1763–70; James Winthorpe 1760s (jointly with John Gladstains); James Weir (second) 1770; John Gladstains 1770–83; James Winthorpe c.1783 (possibly); James Inglis 1790–1810; John Oliver 1810–41; James Wilson 1841–62; Thomas Purdom 1862–86; Robert Purdom 1886–1924; John Purdom 1924–1936; Robert F. Pollock 1937–38; Robert Barbour 1938–68; and William Hogg 1968–75. Bill Hogg was the last Hawick Town Clerk, moving to Roxburgh District in 1975.

the Toon Council (thu-toon-koon-sul) n. Hawick’s Town Council. The earliest recorded composition of the Council was 12, plus 2 Bailies, the Clerk and the Treasurer. In 1701 the number was increased by 6 to 18. The Deacon Convenor from each of the Trades also sat on the Council. In 1759 it was decreed that all Councillors had to go on the Common Riding or else forfeit their place on the Council. By 1780 the Council consisted of 31 members, being the 2 Magistrates elected annually, 15 councillors (for life) elected by the sitting members, and 2 representatives (quartermasters) from each of the 7 incorporated trades. This was fixed by a ruling of the Court of Session in 1781, following an action raised by William Freeman and others. During the 19th century the Council met twice a month. The make-up of the body led to it being called ‘the Eternal Council’. The newer Town Council was constituted after the Police Act of 1861, with wider representation by all men paying a rent of £10 or over. The Council saw many changes over the years, particularly with the setting up of the County Council in 1889, and its extension in 1929, and the associated transfer of responsibility. It was disbanded in May 1975, following local government Reorganisation, when power was removed from the burghs and centralised. A minority of people claim things improved.

Toon end (toon-end) n., arch. part of a town, neighbourhood – ‘...For weel I ken’d bout yon toon end I’d mony a glowerin’ foe’ [WaD].

the Toonfit Kirk (thu-toon-fi’-kirk) n. the Townfoot Church in Newcastleton, the first to be built in the village. It was erected in 1803/4 for the Burgher congregation, which would become the United Presbyterian Kirk.

the Toon Guard (thu-toon-gard) n. another name for the Watch.

the Toon Hall (thu-toon-hall) n. the original Town Hall, sometimes called the ‘Town House’ was built in 1781 and demolished in 1884. It itself replaced the Tolbooth, which dated from about 1694, and earlier buildings before that. The current building was erected on the same site, 36 High Street, in 1884–86 at a cost of £16,000, with architect James Campbell Walker of Edinburgh, selected in an 1883 competition. The design is said to be Scottish Baronial with French elements, and is reminiscent of the work of David Bryce (with whom Walker had worked). The memorial stone was laid by the Duchess of Buccleuch, and the builders were John & William Marshall. It contains the Council offices, as well as the old Council Chambers, the Magistrate’s Courtroom, the main Hall and the Lesser Town Hall. It is used for many municipal purposes, including council administration, concerts and shows, the Colour Bussing, dances, etc. It currently stretches over 34–44 High Street and is a grade A listed building. Outside is a datum level of 352.9 ft elevation marked and another plaque commemorates the former site of the South Port – ‘In the Town Hall all things are ready, Knives and forks we’ll ply them steady’[AB], ‘There’s the Town Hall tower wi’ its clock tickin’ ower’ [IWS].

the Toonhead (thu-toon-heed) n. Townhead, former name for the top of the town, i.e. an area around the West Port. It was used as a location in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory (e.g. for slater Robert Elliot). The Ordnance Survey map of 1863 marks St. Leonard’s farm as ‘Hawick Townhead’.

Toonhead (thu-toon-head) n. former name used for the top part of Denholm village, at the west end.

Toonhead (toon-head) n. Townhead, name used for lands in Hassendean Parish, probably the same as the modern Knowetownhead. It was also known alternatively as ‘East Mains’. In 1692 Thomas Gray paid the vicarage teinds for the lands there. Thomas Gray, James Thomson and Toonheid

John Hood were there in 1694 (it is ‘Tounheid’ in 1601 and ‘Tounhead’ in 1692 and 1694; it is ‘Toone head’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Toonheid (toon-heed) n. former farmstead in Southdean Parish near Chesters. George Oliver was the tenant there in 1669.

the Toonheid Port (thu-toon-heed-pör’) n. the Townhead Port, name given at one time to the West Port.

the Toonheid Toll (thu-toon-heed-tōl) n. the Townhead Toll Bar in Newcastleton. It was located on North Hermitage Street. Christina Telfer was toll-keeper there in 1861. The house still exists, on the right-hand side of the road coming out of the village.

the Toon Herd (thu-toon-herd) n. former Burgh employee, with responsibility for collecting the town’s cattle in the morning, taking them to the Common to graze and returning them by nightfall. In the early 19th century he also had the privilege of setting up a drinks tent on the Moor at the Common Riding. He may have lived at St. Leonard’s farm during some periods and in the cottage at Hawickmoor at others. In 1733 it is recorded that a herd was selected for horses pasturing on the Common, which was presumably a different person than the main Herd. In 1755 the building of a ‘herd’s house’ is recorded, this presumably being somewhere on the Common. In the following year 1 shilling was ‘given the herd when his child was almost burnt to death’, and so there was perhaps a fire in the house. It is unclear when the first Herd was appointed. Those filling the appointment included: William Palmer (recorded in 1707); Adam Hobkirk (recorded in 1713); Walter Scott ‘Crooked Wat’ (early 18th C.); Mungo Armstrong (c.1720–c.44); James Armstrong (recorded in 1740); Robert Hobkirk (c.1752–c.57); James Wilson (late 18th C.); William Elliot (from at least 1800); Andrew Ormiston (until 1853); and James Cairns (from about 1853) – ‘About the year seventeen hundred and ten, Walter Scot was Town Herd of Hawick’ [C&L] (also ‘Toon Hird’).

the Toon Hoose (thu-toon-hoos) n. name sometimes used for Hawick’s previous Town Hall, also sometimes called the ‘Council House’. It was built around 1781 on the site of the old Tolbooth, and was an unpretentious building with a tall steeple and an outside staircase. It had a thatched roof and was ‘of a homely description, the rafters, visible from beneath, giving it the appearance of a common barn’. It incorporated a bell (at a cost of £24, 14s.), to complement the one at St. Mary’s in order to call the curfew. Part of it was rented out for dancing lessons, singing lessons and lectures in the late part of the 18th century. One of the 6 wells fed from the Slild Springs stood beside it from 1797. In one of the last vestiges of feudalism the weight house on the ground floor was owned by a tenant of the Duke of Buccleuch (‘tacksman of his Grace’s customs); the Duke contributed £100 to the cost of the building, plus half the cost of paving the streets at the time. There were considerable additions to the steeple in 1806 and a clock was inserted in 1809. The top of the steeple also held a weather cock. The door in the steeple at the first floor level, with its projecting ledge, was known as the ‘Oyes door’ and was used for the reading of proclamations. The ground floor on the Cross Wynd side had open arches, which were closed at night with iron gates. This was the location for meal and butter markets. The Council Chambers were upstairs. There is a single surviving photograph from about 1880. The building was demolished in 1884 to make way for the new Town Hall.

the Toon Litter (thu-toon-li’-ur) n. carrier for bodies, hired out by the town, acting effectively as a hearse. It is referred to in 1722, when the charge was half a crown for those outside the Burgh or those not paying ‘stent nor lott’. It is also mentioned in the Treasurer’s Book in 1732. It is unclear when this stopped being used, or what form this took, but it was probably little more than a large wheel-barrow.

Toon-o-Rule (toon-ō-tool) n. Town-o-Rule, a farm north of Bonchester Bridge, formerly a significant settlement in the area, once one of the major estates of Hobkirk Parish, and later being a large part of the barony of Feu-Rule. There were houses along the left side of the syke there (according to Tancred), but there are no sign of where exactly they were. It has also been suggested (by Jeffreys) that the original parish church of Hobkirk was situated here. In 1535 there is a record of ‘Thome Turnboll et Andree alias Dauid Turnbull’ who were tenants there. This could be the ‘towne in Tevedall caulyd Rowlle’ burned by John Musgrave’s men in 1542. The ‘town’ was burned again during the English invasion of 1545. The lands are described in 1562 as lying between the Mains of Hallrule and Plewlandhull on the east and those of Hawthornside and Hoilhouse on the west. ‘Gibbie wi the Gowden Garters’ obtained a charter of the lands in 1632. William Elliot was tenant in the mid-18th
Toon-o-Rule Burn

Toon-o-Rule Burn (toon-ō-rool-burn) n.
Town-o’-Rule Burn, stream, running to the north-west of Weensmuir and Heathfield farms, and well marked to the north of the farm buildings on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map. The residents there used to use the Sun’s reflection off ‘Cloon Craig’ on Ruberslaw to tell the approximate time of day. An ancient oval-shaped earthwork once stood close to the farmhouse, but was largely obliterated by agricultural improvements before the mid-19th century. A prehistoric stone axe-head was found in one of the outfields in the 19th century (formerly spelled ‘Toun o’ Roull’ and variants; the name appears in the records of Jedburgh Abbey; it is ‘villa de Rowle’ in 1535 and ‘Toun of Roull’ in 1694; it appears as ‘Toou of Roull’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Toon Piper (toon-pī-pur) n. official player of the pipes, probably the bagpipes. However, in earlier documents it is unclear precisely what kind of musical instrument is meant, with perhaps the Border pipes being used at some times and it is also possible the word ‘piper’ was also synonymous with ‘fifer’ in earlier times. Pipers are mentioned in connection with Hawick in the early 17th century, e.g. John Tait and John Laing were both ‘pyper’ in 1627. Adam Moffat was rebuked by Ashkirk Parish in 1638 for ‘pyping at bridals’ and was probably associated with Hawick or one of the other neighbouring towns. William Turnbull was appointed as Hawick’s piper in 1674. Thomas Beattie is recorded as piper in 1693/4. In 1700 the town’s piper was fined for playing through the town after the fair; it is recorded that he played the ‘great pipe’, which is unambiguously the Highland-style bagpipes. In 1703 the town’s ‘officers, pyper, and drummers’ were to be paid for ‘coatts att the Common rydeing in anno 1702’ and were also allowed ‘to have coatts att Common-Ryding this year, 1703, as formerly: this makes it clear that the piper and drummer (or drummers) were separate from the Burgh Officers at that time. James Oliver, ‘Jafra the Piper’, is mentioned several times in the Parish records of the 1710s (in connection with misbehaviour!). A man called ‘Fouller’ was paid to be piper in 1721; he was Robert Fowler, piper in about 1721–32. John ‘Meader’ (probably the same as Mather) was perhaps piper 1732–41. William Brown is recorded as Town Piper in 1745 and Walter Ballantyne in the 1770s, the last man whose name we know. Hawick had a town piper (along with a drummer and bellman, although they may well have shared duties) for probably a couple of centuries until the late 1700s, when he was replaced by a fifer (first mentioned in 1797). In 1803 the Council resolved ‘that the piper shall not be any longer continued’, and that was the last official mention. One of the last pipers may have been John Douglas, who is recorded as ‘late piper Hawick’ when his daughter died in 1810. However, there is a reference to him playing the riders back into town in Balbirnie’s version of ‘Teribus’. The Common Riding Procession of 1894 is reported to have been led by the brass band, the drums and fifes ‘and the pipers’. ‘Hawick Pipe Band’ traces its roots to 1937—‘…the pyper is only allowed four pounds Scotts to buy him ane coatt’[BR], ‘The town’s piper, for his nicht revelling, on going on the fair nicht playing with the great pipe tho the halll town, is fined £100 Scots’[BR1700], ‘Now Teri Odin blaws the chanter As rank and file the town we enter’[AB].

Toonrig (toon-rig) n. former fortified house on the Hermitage Water, on the north bank of the valley just east of Gorrenberry (marked on Gordon’s c. 1650 map as ‘Tounrig’ and on Blaeu’s 1654 map and Visscher’s 1689 map as ‘Tounrig’).

Toonsfolk (toonz-fok) n., pl. townsfolk, townspeople—‘No’ sae lang syne a guid wheen o’ the toonsfolk didna’ hesitate tae condemn the annual festival wi’ a’ the invites the could command’[BW1939].

toonsmen (toonz-men) n., pl. townsman —‘I canna schule mysel’ to fit Wi toonsmen, drawn sae keen the bricht Upon each other’s avarice’[DH].

toon’s officer (toonz-o-lee-sur) n., arch. an officer of a burgh — ‘…and James Olifer, toun officer, playing before him’ [PR1718], ‘Rob Tinlin whae was the toon’s officer an the pairish beadle’[HEx1965] (see Burgh Officer).

the Toon’s Purse (thin-toonz-purs) n. former prize race at the Common Riding. It was the opening event of the 1834–36 Friday Races.
the Toon Steel-yaird

the Toon Steel-yaird (thu-toon-steel-yard)
n. former steel-yard in Hawick, located on the High Street. It is recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory, when James Kennedy was ‘collector’.

the Toon Subscription Purse (thu-toon-sub-skip-shin-purs)
n. race run at the Common Riding in at least the 1840s to 1860s. It took place on the Friday on the Moor in many years, but in some years there was a race with this title on both days. Presumably the prize money was raised by subscription in Hawick.

the Toon Treasurer (thu-toon-tre-shoo-rur)
n. former position on the Council, charged with gathering the money from Burgesses and others.

The first record of the election of a person to this office is in 1655. The position was later named Burgh Chamberlain. The Treasurer kept records of the financial transactions of the Burgh, which provide valuable information about what went on in Hawick in the 17th and 18th centuries. In 1739 the amounts started to be written in sterling rather than in Scots money. The Treasurer was elected annually on the same day as the Bailies, i.e. the 2nd Friday in October. Extracts from the Town Treasurer’s books in the period 1721–1805 are given in James Wilson’s ‘Hawick and its Old Memories’ (1858). People who have held the office include: John Scott, around 1734; William Scott, at least 1763–69; William Wilson, early 1800s; Walter Wilson, early 1800s; James Scott, early 1800s; James Oliver, 1820s; James D. Kenney, mid-1800s; John Murray, 1880s; A.S. Lawson, late 1800s; Adam Laing, early 1900s; George Gass, early 1900s.

toonty (too'-ee, tooon'-ee, toon-tee)
n. twenty – ‘if ee’re no in bed be the time A coont ti toonty ...’, ‘Look ... Owre yonder, D’ye see him? Teh, toonty pund, I’m shair. Fish rinnin, fish rinnin Enough and to spare!’ [DHI], ‘...an oot o’ the toonty-fower entered the wunner was Dick Wright threth Langtoon’ [BW1974], ‘Last night A hed a dream, And wi’ this A end ma ditty, It was toonty year frae now, Hawick hed been renamed Safe- way City’ [IWL], ‘Teribus is an amazing piece o wark, toonty fower versus o pure poeticus genius ...’ [IHS] (cf. the rarer toanty).

the Toonty-Five Year Cornet (thu-toon'- ee-fly-veer-kör-ni)
n. designation for the returning Cornet of 25 years previously.

the Toor Hotel

the Toor (thu-toor)
n. popular name for Drumlanrig’s Toor, for centuries the most imposing building and de facto geographical centre of Hawick. The word is also used generally for this area of Hawick (also spelled ‘Too’er’ etc.).

Toor (toor)
n. former name for Spittal Toor (also written ‘Tour’; also see Tower).

Toor Brig (toor-brig)
n. occasional name used for the Drumlanrig Bridge over the Slitrig near the Tower Knowe.

the Toor Burn (thu-toor-burn)
n. stream that runs from above Spittal Tower to join the Rule Water at Spittal-on-Rule.

the Toor Close (thu-toor-klöś)
n. former name for a passageway next to Drumlanrig’s Tower, giving access to the area behind. In 1767 it is said that ‘trees, packs of wool, couples, joists, and household furniture’ were all deposited there by the flood. The close is wide enough to allow the cavalcade to emerge at the Common Riding, and the wall contains the Cornets’ Board.

Toordykeside see Toor Dykeside

Toor Dykeside (toor-dik-sid, tow-ur-dik-sid)
n. Tower Dykeside, short street linking Slitrig Crescent with the Tower Knowe. The name derives from the wall which once encircled the Tower on the south side. It is a relatively new street, since the Tower is believed to have sloped down to the Slitrig perhaps as recently as the 18th century. Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 4 are all parts of the former Tower Hotel, which is grade B listed. The wall along by the Slitrig was mostly swept away in the flood of 1846 – ‘And though the matin bells have not yet rung Their usual peal unto the world wide, Alert with joyous life both old and young Their steps are wending to the Tower Dykeside’ [JCG] (sometimes ‘the’ Tower Dykeside, occasionally one word, and also formerly ‘Toor-gate-side’; it is ‘Tower Dyke side’ on Wood’s 1824 map).

Toorgateside (toor-gä'-sid)
n. former name for Tower Dykeside. Before the wall was built the ground at the foot of the Tower sloped into the Slitrig (also written ‘Toor-gate-side’ or ‘Tow-ergateside’).

the Toor Hotel (thu-toor-hö'-tel)
n. Drumlanrig’s Tower, during the days it was used as a hotel, also known as ‘the Tower Inn’. This phase of the building’s history started in 1773, and continued until 1981. The landlords used to farm fields at the Wellogate, with an onestead in Bourtree Place (which became the Con Club site).
The ballroom inside was used for dances, theatrical performances and other social functions in the late 18th and early 19th centuries.

toorick (too-rik) n., arch. a small tower.
toorickie (too-ri-kee) n., arch. a small tower, turret.

the Toor Inn (thu-toor-in) n. usual name for the Toor Hotel in the 18th and early 19th centuries. The first landlord was Michael Stevenson, from 1773, followed by Robert Armstrong for about a decade. William Brown (‘Billy’, d.1839) was landlord in the early part of the 19th century, then John Fenwick (with William Crozier as long time hostler) and later Frank Fenwick. The landlord farmed some land up the Wellogate and had some space for stabling where the Con Club was later built. A coachhouse for the inn stood where the Exchange Buildings were built in the 1860s. Wordsworth stayed here in 1803 and the first Burns supper in Hawick was held here in 1815. In the 1830s, being the Town’s polling station, it was the focus of troubles during several elections.

the Toor Knowe (thu-toor-now) n. area in front of Drumlanrig’s Tower, so-called because it was a few feet above street level into the 19th century. It would have seemed higher relative to the surroundings before all the houses were built, and it must have once had the mill lade crossing its northern side, isolating it from the rest of the Town. It has been used as a street address since the late 19th century. It was formerly a small green hill, is said to have once had the ‘deuil tree’ upon it, and still had a few trees in the late 18th century. In the 18th century there were 2 small clay-built houses to the west of the river bank, the proprietors of which owned the Knowe itself. There was also formerly a row of single-storey houses extending for about 50 yards at the eastern end, which split the High Street in half at this point (running from roughly opposite 2 Tower Knowe to a point in line with 18 High Street). For a century from about 1760 it held the daily spectacle of arrivals and departures of the stage-coaches passing through the town. It was also where the Town Herd used to collect the cattle. It was formerly used as a marketplace and for annual hiring fairs, as well as being where bonfires would be lit to mark special occasions. No. 7 was formerly known as ‘Kedie’s Buildin’, but rebuilt by James Harkness, with a cantilevered section sticking out over the Slitrig. Essentially the entire street is composed of grade C listed buildings – ‘I wish tae guidness ee wad get along the road tae the Too’r Knowe and no bother mei wi’ eer blethers’ [JEDM].

toormill-dam (thu-toor-mil-dam) n. Tower Mill Dam, name sometimes used for one of two short mill lades in the centre of Hawick. One fed Tower Mill from the Slitrig, with the cauld being at the foot of Slitrig Crescent. The other was effectively the Toor Knowe Brig (thu-toor-now-brig) n. Tower Knowe Bridge, another name used for Drumlanrig Brig.

Toor Mill (toor-mil) n. Tower Mill, built over the Slitrig approximately where the ‘Auld Brig’ once stood. It was constructed on the site of an earlier mill by William Elliot & Sons in 1852. The building is 3½ stories in whinstone with sandstone dressings, built over a flat-arched bridge, and is currently listed Category A. The magnificent arch over the river makes its design quite unique. It was water-powered originally, and provided the first electric lighting in the town (conveyed all the way to the house of Col. William Scott Elliot at Teviot Lodge). The water wheel still exists in the basement, and is the largest of its kind in Scotland. When the water was low it was supplemented by a steam engine, installed in 1882. At its height the workforce of the factory was 660. In the late 19th and early 20th centuries it operated as a carding and spinning mill, run by Col. Walter Elliot and then his son, Col. William Scott Elliot. Between the wars it was switched to hosiery production. During WWII the building was used as a grain and sugar store and then for several decades as a warehouse for Murray Brothers mail-order knitwear firm. The building fell into disrepair and ownership was transferred to the Scottish Historic Buildings Trust in 1995. There was strong disagreement about whether to demolish or renovate the building, but it was saved by the Hawick Townscape Heritage Initiative in 1998. With funding from the European Union rural development funding, Scottish Borders Council and the Scottish Arts Council, it was refurbished to accommodate visitor facilities and commercial space, as part of the Heart of Hawick initiative. The architects for the conversion were Gray, Marshall & Associates. The ‘Bean Scene’ opened in 2007, with a glassed section overlooking the Slitrig, and the old water wheel visible underneath. The rest of the building includes a small cinema and creative workspace (also sometimes called ‘Toor Knowe Mill’ or ‘Elliot’s Mill’).

Toronto (to-ron-tö) n. largest city in Canada, in the province of Ontario. Many exiled Teries have settled in the area. In 1921 a number of them gathered at the home of James H. Ross and organ-sised a Common Riding celebration of their own.
It took place on 1st July (Canada Day) in High Park, with W. Matherston (who had lost a leg at Flanders) as Cornet and C. Ingles and W. Corbett as Right- and Left-Hand men, respectively. There was a replica flag, which was bussed, pipe music, a ‘snuffin’, Hawick songs, (non-alcoholic) beverages, races, a speech by Alex Craighead (from Galashiels), and all in over 30°C temperatures.
Matthew Leydon probably served as Cornet in 1925. In 1926 the Cornet at High Park was Telfer Anderson Huggan, and the replica 1514 flag was bussed by Edith Whillans. In 1927 the Cornet was James Miller and the Lass was Annie Steele.

Torsonce (tor-sins) n. area on the Gala Water to the south of Stow, for long an important seat of the Pringle family. The last Clan Chief was John Hoppringle of that Ilk and Torsonce, who died in 1737. The mansion is built on the foundations of the older peel. Nearby are the ancient ‘Our Lady’s Well’ as well as the remains of a chapel.

been a local man.

Torwoodlee (tor-wood-lee) n. Georgian house north-west of Galashiels, built near to some older ruins, which were home to the Pringles. The tower dates from 1601 and replaces the one that was sacked in 1568. This was an attack by John Elliot of Copshaw and perhaps as many as 300
other Elliots, Armstrongs, Beatties and Grahams, when the master of the house (George Pringle)
was murdered and a huge amount of loot stolen, including silverware and 17 horses. In the latter part of the 15th century the lease of the farm was granted to the Ranger of Tweed Ward for his fee. It was supposedly home of the Pringle who married Mary Scott in the ballad of that name.
The house was used as a temporary refuge in 1681, by Covenanters the Earl of Argyll and John Scott (ousted minister of Hawick) on their escape from imprisonment. There are efforts underway to stabilize the crumbling structure. There is a golf course on the estate. A bridge nearby was built in 1808 and the modern house in 1783.
The remains of Torwoodlee Broch (not to be confused with Torwood Broch, near Falkirk), perhaps 2,000 years old, is also nearby; it is similar to the better preserved one at Edin’s Hall – ‘The Leader, rolling to the Tweed, Resounds the en-senzie; They roused the deer from Caddenhead, the Pringle family. The last Clan Chief was John Hoppringle of that Ilk and Torsonce, who died in

The weavers and cordiniers existed from before the earliest Burgh records, with the hammermen incorporated in 1686 and the skinners in 1699. About the beginning of the 18th century it is recorded that the Burgessess of Hawick included 26 merchants, 18 carriers, 20 weavers, 10 tailors, 8 cordiniers and shoemakers, 10 wrights, 5 gardeners, 2 bakers and 2 candle-makers, as well as glovers, fishemen, thatchers, dykers, cooperers, cassayers, brewers, pipers and pedees.

the Trades (thu-trädz) n. Hawick Trades, a ‘junior’ rugby team, playing in the Borders District League. It was formed in 1946, with first President Jimmy Murray, other founding members being Tom Wright and Andrew Middlemas, and with Jock Imrie and Tom Reid being long-time club stalwarts. Minute books and accounts exist from 1946. The club grew out of efforts in the War years to keep rugby going, with teams from the B.B.’s, local mills, High School and the ‘Combined Trades’. After the War this latter team joined the South District League as ‘Hawick Trades’. The team used to change in the old Baths, and later established clubrooms behind the Waverley Bar. They joined the Linden in 1963 in renting the facilities at the Volunteer Park. The team has had an annual tradition of playing Welsh club Glynneath since 1956. They were also the first local junior team to tour abroad, at Pesaro in Italy. They play in sky blue tops with white shorts and navy socks. A history, ‘The First Fifty’, was published in 1995.

His ‘Cheviet Chase’ (1953), set in the 1930s and 40s, is about a modern enmity between the towns of Hawick and Hexham caused by the Hornshole events, ‘Balefire’ (1958) is set in the Borders right after Flodden, while ‘Portrait of the Border Country’ is a useful work of non-fiction. He was an honorary member of the Hawick Archaeological Society and Common Riding Chief Guest in 1957.

Trantfille (trawn-lee?) n. former name for lands in Ewesdale, recorded in a 1525 ‘letter of reversion’ between Simon Armstrong and George, Lord Home. The name occurs in a list between Unthank and Fiddleton, although the precise location is unknown (the origin may be related to that of ‘Tranty-fit’ etc.).
trantie  (trawn-tee) n., arch. a person who is intelligent above his or her station (once a common term, cf. the Tranties, Tranty-fit, and possibly Tibbie Tantry; origin uncertain, but perhaps related to Middle English ‘trant’, a trick, or the provincial ‘tranter’, a pedlar; the word seems to be peculiarly local, but was already obsolete by the 1850s).

the Tranties  (thu-trawn-tees) n., pl., arch. popular name for two sisters from Hawick who died about 1814 (according to James Wilson), Marjory and Isobel Hume. For about 30 years they kept a lodging house for beggars, near to the Auld Brig. They were said to be ‘rather more intelligent than their neighbours in a similar humble condition of life’. They are also mentioned in Agnes Douglas’ prize poem about the ‘Alud Brig’ – ‘Even in the Tranties, wi’ their beggars, The spoilers had found fearfu’ feggars’ [AD].

Tranty-fit  (trawn-tee-fi’) n. Tranty-foot, supposedly a witch, sister of ‘Speed-o’-foot’ who lived at Goldielands. It may also have been a name for one of the two towers of Goldielands – ‘...The wonder-working witches Tranty-foot and Speed-one of the two towers of Goldielands...’ at Goldielands. It may also have been a name for posedly a witch, sister of ‘Speed-o’-foot’ who lived spoilers had found fearfu’ eggars’ [AD].

Traquair  (tru-kwær) n. house south of Innerleithen, in a secluded valley of the Quair Water. It is reputed to be the oldest home in Scotland, being lived in continuously since 1107. It is associated with several Scottish Kings of the 12th and 13th centuries, as well as with the Stuarts and the Jacobite cause. Prince Charlie was entertained there by the 7th Earl in 1745. ‘The Bear Gates’ (or ‘steekit Yetts’) were reputedly closed at that time, never to be reopened until a Stuart sits again on the throne (although there are other stories). Mary Queen of Scots also stayed here in 1566. The present structure is probably a 15th century core with alterations through to the 18th century. It is owned by the Maxwell-Stuarts, and now open to the public. The brewery in one of the wings of the house was built around 1700, although brewing on the site is even older. Brewing ended there in the late 19th century, but was restarted in 1965 (the first record of the name is ‘Treverquyrd’ about 1124; it is ‘Tracquair’ in 1507/8, ‘Tracquar’ in 1527, ‘Trocquair’ in 1564/5 and ‘Trakwair’ in 1574; the first element may be the old p-Celtic ‘tref’ for ‘farm on the Quair’).

Trevelyan (tre-vel-yin) n. Sir George Otto (1838–1928) historian and Liberal M.P. for the Hawick (or Border) Burghs 1868–86. He was the first such M.P. in 1868, winning subsequent elections in 1869, 1874, 1880, 1882, 1885 and 1886 (three of which were bye-elections on account of his appointment to senior government posts). Later in 1886 he lost to A.L. Brown by only 30 votes, the election campaign being focussed on the issue of Home Rule. By this time he was a Unionist, rather than a Liberal. There are existing letters from him regarding subscriptions to Selkirk Races in 1872 and 1877. He held appointments as Secretary to the Admiralty, Chief Secretary for Ireland and also Scottish Secretary. He is perhaps best known as biographer of his uncle Lord Thomas Macaulay, and for his more famous sons George and Charles. Trevelyan Terrace is named after him.

Trevelyan Terrace (tre-vel-yin-te-ris) n. street in the West-end, originally built in 1879, but demolished and rebuilt in 1974–76. It was named after Sir George Trevelyan. The first houses were built there by joiners Riddle & Graham and Eckford the builder.

trews (trewz) n. trousers, the traditional male dress in the Borders – ‘hei was resplendent in his tartan tres’ (from Gaelic).

trial (tr-nil) n., arch. inquiry, investigation – ‘... whillk Samuel desirit the said bailies to the tryell anent the said purs ... ’ [BR1642], ‘... the weights of the persons respectively under written, being by the bayleyes put to ane exact trial ... ’ [BR1676] (there are spelling variants).

the Trial Stakes (thu-tri-ul-staks) n. race run on the Friday of the Common Riding, beginning in the 1880s. In 1894 it became for horses which have followed one of the local hunts. It is run over about 2 miles (also called ‘the Trial Selling Stakes’).

trig (trig) adj., arch. neat, tidy, smart, quick, active, nimble, brisk – ‘... Sae weel’s ye’re harriess’d, and sae trig, In troth ye sit like ony bride. With my fa ding, &c.’ [CPM], ‘... trig points (trig-points) n., pl. triangulation stations, consisting of white concrete pillars, placed on high points (generally in the 1950s) by the Ordnance Survey for the purposes of geodetic surveying. Those within 10 km of Hawick, in approximate distance order (with station numbers included) are: Hardie’s Hill (T042); Orchard Hill (T076); Galalaw Hill (T036); Wiltonburn Hill (T113); White Hill (or Hummelknewes, 019); Branxholme park Hill (T012); Drinkstone Hill (T028); Hawthornside Hill (T046); Muirfield.
Trimontium (trI-mon-tee-um) n. Roman name for the Eildons, where there was a substantial fort, occupied from the late 1st through 2nd centuries. It was one of the most important sites on the northern frontier of the Roman Empire in those times, and guarded an important crossing of the Tweed. It was probably built around the year 200 and abandoned around the year 200 and not rediscovered until the building of the railway line in 1860. The fort itself covered about 15 acres, with an area of as much as 200 acres occupied. At one time it probably held about 1500 men from the 20th Legion ‘Valeria Victrix’ (Valiant and Victorious), with perhaps 1500 civilians living outside the fort. Many of the items recovered in the excavations are in the National Museums of Scotland, but some are in the Trimontium Museum at Newstead. The Trimontium Stone, a granite monument, was erected by the Edinburgh Border Counties Association in 1928.

Trinity Kirk

the Trim Track (thu-trim-trawk) n. fitness course established in Wilton Lodge Park in 1978, made possible by a grant from the Silver Jubilee Fund.

Trinity (trI-ni’-ee) n. name for the area between the Bourtrees and Weensland, being called ‘the Trinity Lands’ from early times. These lands were part of the endowment of the Hospital Church of Soutra in the 14th and 15th centuries. Soutra was dedicated to the Holy Trinity and also known as ‘Trinity Hospital’, with a well there, also dedicated to the Holy Trinity, being known as the ‘Tarnity Well’. This hospital was annexed in 1462 to Trinity College Church and Hospital, Edinburgh, which had been founded by Mary of Gueldres (widow of James II); the church lay at the foot of Calton Hill, and was demolished in 1848 because of railway development. The Hawick lands appear to have been among those owned by the Scotts of Crumhaugh in the 17th century. They gave their name to Trinity Street and Trinity School, as well as later (indirectly) to St. Ninian’s Road. The naming of the new Trinity Church (not in the old Trinity area) has somewhat confused the geography.

Trinity Gairdens (trI-ni’-ee-gard-inz) n. Trinity Gardens, public gardens below Trinity Church, near the Horse. It is a popular hang-out spot for youngsters. The gardens were renovated and a new band-stand built in 1999. The land was once known as the Wheatole, and was later the site of the East Bank Kirk – ‘Doon at the Horse, on a sunny day Sittin’ on a Trinity sate Or lookin’ up at Wulton Kirk Man it’s hard tae bate’ [AY].

Trinity Haugh (trI-ni’-ee-hawg, -hawf) n. former name used for flat area by the river associated with the ‘Trinity lands’. This land was owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch and was drained and feued in 1875.

Trinity Kilnhill (trI-ni’-ee-kiln-hil) n. former name for an area south of Weensland Road, roughly opposite Trinity steps, and also known as ‘Kilnhill’.

Trinity Kirk (trI-ni’-ee-kirk) n. Trinity Church, off Brougham Place. It was built in 1843 to replace the old East Bank United Free Church meeting house, which stood lower down. In 1958 the three congregations of St. John’s, St. Andrew’s and East Bank joined together to become Trinity, when East Bank was renamed and the other two closed. The congregation was linked with Cavers and Kirkton in 2004. The building is set within its own grounds and has a session house and vestry at the south-west corner. The design is relatively plain and the architect is unknown (sometimes wrongly attributed to William Burn). It was extended to form a T-plan in 1872 and re-decorated by William Jardine in 1892, with halls added in 1896. A pulpit and organ case, designed by Alexander Inglis, was added in the early years of the 20th century. The church, session house, vestry and halls are grade C listed building (the name comes from the 3 churches, and is unrelated to the Trinitylands to the east).

Trinitylands (tri-ni’-ee-lawdz) n. older name for the Trinity area of Hawick, dating back probably to the 14th century, and a connection with Soutra, also known as the ‘Trinity Hospital’. The same lands were also known as the ‘Soutralands’, since they were originally part of the endowment of Soutra, although the reason for this is not known. The boundaries and full extent of the lands are also unclear. In 1472 there was a court action brought by Sir Edward Bonkle, Provost of Trinity Collegiate Church, against Thomas Blair, for rent on the lands. They were confirmed to Trinity Collegiate Church by Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1507. They are described (as ‘Soltracroft’) in a 1557 charter, as lying between ‘Ladyland’ to the east, the lands of the town of Hawick to the west, the highway to the south and the lands of West Mains to the north. In 1565/6 they were again leased to William Scott ‘in Hawik’ and his son and heir Robert; they are there described as lying between Ladyland, lands pertaining to the town of Hawick, and the West Mains. At least some of the lands were gained by Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig, since the inventory drawn up after his death in 1578 states that he ‘conqueist the Sowtre landis in Hawik’. In 1627 it was a ‘three merk land called Trinity land’ estimated as ‘paying presentlie 20 bolls’ and possessed by the Lord of Buccleuch and Walter Gledstains of Dod. In 1628 Walter Scott, Earl of Buccleuch complained that several Hawick men had cut down trees on ‘his lands and barony of Braxholmne and Trinitie lands of Hawick’. In 1692 the lands were leased by the Duchess of Buccleuch to Robert Scott of Horsleyhill. In 1696, it is included in a list of lands owned by the Scotts of Crumhaugh; this could refer to part of the lands, perhaps the same as ‘Ladyland’, which was owned by the Scotts of Goldie lands and Crumhaugh in 1627. In 1748 a small part lying on the Wilton side of the Teviot was exchanged with the minister of Wilton for a part of his lands which the Duke wanted for carrying water to Burnfoot Mill. The name was still used as late as 1907 in plans for the location of new houses in the area (written ‘Trinity Land’, ‘Trinity Lands’, etc.).

Trinity Mills (tri-ni’-ee-nilz) n. main factory of Hawick Hosiery Company on Earl and Duke Streets (and not Trinity Street, as the name might suggest), now the home of Hawick Cashmere Company, or ‘Hawico’. It was built in at least 1888, when it was occupied by Renwick & Raeburn, then the Raeburn brothers 1889–97. It was occupied by Messrs. F. Knox Cowie & Co. 1906, but that collapsed after about a year. Hawick Hosiery Company moved in in 1911 and was rebranded as Hawick Cashmere in 1990.

Trinity Schuil (tri-ni’-ee-skil) n. Trinity Primary School, previously situated near the top of the steps on the south side of Weensland Road, to the east of the entrance to the Miller’s Knowes. It was built in 1876, and apparently originally called ‘St. Mary’s’, but changed its name when the new St. Mary’s School was built at the top of Brougham Place. It took the older pupils from St. Mary’s Parish School and another school which formerly existed in Weensland. The school moved to its present location in 1935/36, the architects for the new building being Reid & Forbes of Edinburgh. It was constructed with a raised ground floor to protect against flooding. The former building was demolished and council houses built on the site in 1955. School Inspectors’ Reports for 1915–53 are in the National Archive and log books for 1873–1906 in the Borders Archive. William Murray was first Headmaster, from 1876 and Bill Scrimgeour from 1950.

Trinity Steps (tri-ni’-ee-steps) n. Trinity Steps, unofficial name for steps leading from Weensland Road down to the bottom of Trinity Street. There are 56 steps.

Trinity Street (tri-ni’-ee-stree’) n. street running off Weensland Road, named after the Trinitylands, the former name for the area, relating to lands once owned by the church at Soutra. The main houses were built in 1885. It has long had a hotel at the top, and the primary school is at the bottom.

Trinity Thistle (tri-ni’-ee-thi-sul) n. Trinity Thistle Football Club, a rugby club from the Trinity area, existing before WWI. It may also have been referred to as ‘Trinity Union’.

trinkle (tring-kul) v., arch. to trickle – ‘Yill Waeter … trinklin ti its treist wui Teiot’ [ECS].

trinnle (tri-nul) v. to trundle, roll, spin, waddle, trickle – ‘…trinnlin alang owre its staney trinnly (trin-lee) adj., arch. suitable for rolling, small and roundish – ‘Trinnly bits o’ coal’ [GW].

tripe (trip-lee) n. cow innards, traditionally served when there’s an ‘R’ in the month (because it went off in summer). It can be boiled with onion and other ingredients, fried, or served in a white sauce. There were formerly several well known purveyors of tripe in town, including Jen McVitie, Mag Burns and Teenie Balmer.

trippin (tri-pin) adj., pres. part. having a rejected or miserable look – ‘his face was trippin him after they were bate toonty ti nithin’.

trippit (tri-pee’, -pi’) pp. tripped – ‘A neater messin ne’er was tippet, Nor on a parlour carpet tripet’ [JR], ‘…But he trippit in the straw As a wheelin’ maul came roond like a herd o’ kye’ [DH].

Trip ti Hawick Jig (trip-ti-hik-jig) n. composition by Scottish accordion maestro Jimmy Shand, in 6/8 time.

trock (trok) v., arch., poet. to barter, peddle, deal with – ‘Trocked, whiles, wi’ smuggled brandy – Unless I dae him wrang’ [DH], ‘Now Wattie neither begs nor buys. Nor steals, nor sells, nor does he trock …’ [WP], ‘Whut’rope and Sundhope They ken the soond weel; It’s nac news to thaim That he troks wi the deil’ [DH], ‘With my fa ding, &c.’ [CPM], ‘An’ muckle of my fa dụng, &c.’ [IWL], ‘Now a man that would net baith the fish and the troots Of his honesty, trowth, we may well have a wumin can rin fer faster wae ir skirt up than a man can wae iz troosers doon’ [MB].

trodeo (troo’-ee’), tro-ti’ pp. trotted – ‘…As he trottit aboot on his short bit legs, Watchin’ the rin o’ play!’ [DH].

Trotter (troo’-ur) n. George (18th/19th C.) grocer and spirit merchant on the High Street according to Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He married Sarah, daughter of William Beck. Their children were: Margaret (b.1806); Thomas (b.1809); William (b.1816); George (b.1818); Ann (b.1820); and Agnes Fulton (b.1822). James (18th C.) wright in Minto. He is listed among the subscribers to the reprinted Buchanan’s ‘History of Scotland’ (1752). James (18th C.) farmer at Hermiston in Lilliesleaf Parish, recorded on the 1787–92 Horse Tax Rolls. Robert of Bush (18th C.) listed in 1779 as liferenter of a set of lands in Minto Parish, valued together at £433 17s 10s. The lands probably corresponded with what was previously called Deanfoot. In the 1811 Land Tax Rolls he is listed as having formerly been liferenter of these lands. The liferent of parts of Minto was perhaps just to get friends of Lord Minto onto the voters list in Roxburghshire. He was Postmaster General for Scotland. His wife’s portrait was painted by George Romney. William (1816–1904) stockmaker who was long Secretary of the Hawick Stockmakers’ Association (or Hawick Framework-Knitters’ Society). He was son of George and Sarah Beck. He was a second cousin of Provost Edward Wilson and manufacturer Charles John Wilson as well as a grand-son of William Beck. He may be the William recorded in Selkirk in 1856 in a receipt for furnishings for the Charity School. He married Elizabeth Revell in 1837. They were on the High Street in 1841 and at Howdenburn in 1851. Their children included Elizabeth, Sarah, William, Margaret and George.

the Trough Inn (thu-trof-in) n. former inn on the right side of Weensland Road, by the old stone watering trough that remains there. A stockmaking called Grey is recorded there when he died in 1840.

Trough Sike (trot-sik) n. stream in Liddesdale, rising on the eastern slopes of Roan Fell and flowing into the Hartsghart Burn. Near the head of the burn, on the south side is a circular sheepfold, with a carved stone inscribed ‘James Elliot, Shepherd Sept 30’, and a second stone inscribed ‘William Elliot Builder 1820’. Peden’s stone is just south of here.

Troutlawford (trow-law-ford) n. point that formed the western boundary of the Common in the 1537 charter, remaining so until the Division of the Common in 1777. According to the 1767 description of the old boundaries of the Common, and the map drawn up by J.P. Alison, the Common came to a point here, between the road and the Gate Burn. Given the strange shape of the Common here, and the possibility that the farm of Hawickshiels may have once been within the boundaries of a larger Common, it seems likely that the ford had some special significance, so that it remained within the boundaries. The site is now where the Gate Burn crosses under the road, presumably being a ford in earlier times, and is marked by a plaque. There is an illustration ‘The Troutlawford: Hawick Burgess on the Trail of Reivers, 1546’ by Tom Scott ‘...the Common Haugh and Common Muir of Hawick, lying betwixt the Burnfoord upon the east, Troutlawford upon the west, the dykes of Goldielands and Fenwick upon the north, and the syke of Winding-Toun Moss upon the South’ [BR1734] (marked ‘Troutling Ford’ on some earlier maps, it is also sometimes ‘the Troutlawford’; it is ‘Trowford’ in 1767).

Troutling Ford see Troutlawford

trow (trow) v., arch., poet. to trust, believe, feel sure – ‘Sae did I trow, because I wiss’d it se; Wi’ hopes, alake! we ait oursels betray’ [CPM], ‘He tends me weel I trow [?]’, ‘But gin they saw him when they trow he’s sleepin’, They’d fin’ him fou, an’, for ye ken what, greapin’ ’[JoHa], ‘...And who, if here at this same hour, I trow would little praise the poor’ [AD], ‘But I’l gie him his gilded ha’, – I trow he’s little skill ... ’[JT], ‘They’re some beauty-spots, aw trow, Where the Slitrig wipples throw’ [TK], ‘Baith auld and young are mixed I trow – Rob Lurgie lingers wi’ the lave, Caleb and Clinty seem cronies now Wi’ Hornie Robbie and Cannie Dave’ [HI].

trow (trow) v., arch. to troll, to fish by dragging a line through the water – ‘Heels up, [he] trow in the dam outright’ [HSR], to waddle – ‘Lang may you row, trow, guzzle, swatter’ [JoHa], ‘It rows about, it trows aboot, Baith near and far awa’; While it is on the Maiden’s Paps, And whiles on Ruberslaw’ [TCI].

trow (trow) n., arch. a small flat-bottomed boat, usually with an opening towards the centre, used for spearing fish, a confined river channel (see also trows).

trowant (trow-in’) n., adj., arch. truant.

Trow Brig (trow-brig) n. name sometimes used for the bridge over the Teviot at Hornshole.

Trow Burn (trow-burn) n. stream that joins the Teviot from the south near Hornshole, essentially a name for the lower part of the Kirkton Burn – ‘’Twas then the plunderers found a grave where Trow goes purling down; And hence this trophy cherished still, of those Callants who saved the town’ [JEM], ‘...it was nae teime owregane or Trowburn Cottage (trow-burn-ko’-eej) n. cottage on the opposite side of the A6088, roughly opposite Beechurst, just outside of Hawick. The Trow Burn passes here. In a field to the west is a sand pit, seen as parchmarks in aerial photographs.

Trowhaugh (trow-hawch) n. lands listed among those held by the Baron of Hawick in 1615. They are also described in the 1627 valuation of Hawick Parish. They were presumably the same as the Trows, or situated nearby. The description is of ‘ane land’ (presumably meaning a husbandland) ‘estimat to 4 bolls in stok, i boll teynd’ (it is transcribed ‘Troinhauch’ in 1615).

Trow Knowes (trow-nowz) n. farm just outside Hawick beyond Weensland, above Trow Mill. Andrew Nichol was there about 1880.

Trownmill see Trow Mill

Trow Mill (trow-mil) n. small woollen mill at ‘the Trows’, on the Teviot, about 2 miles down from Hawick. The factory was built in 1885, and was latterly run by Wrights of Trownmill Ltd. The area formerly held one of the corn mills of the Cavers estate, active up until the late 18th century. William Aitkin and William Borthwick were there in 1684. Archibald Aitkin was there in 1694 when tax was paid on 7 hearths for ‘himself undermillers & kilns’. James Scott was living there in 1724–37, Walter Stevenson in 1744 and Robert Waugh in 1753. William Ferguson was there in at least 1787–92. James Curle was tenant there in 1797 and the millers in 1841 were William Cranston and James Black. Alexander Goodfellow was miller there in the 1850s and Hugh Goodfellow was farmer in the 1860s. Known in the latter part of the 20th century for its mill shop and factory tours, it closed, with the site being cleared and redeveloped as housing – ‘The waters o’ the Teviot Are drumlie at Trownmill. . . . ’ [WL] (also written ‘Trownmill’, it is ‘Trown-miln’ in 1684, ‘Troumilne’ in 1694 and ‘Trowmiln’ in 1797; it is marked ‘Trowsmill’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Trow Mill Cauld (trow-mill-kawld) n. weir upstream of Trow Mill (near the island in the Teviot there) supplying the former mill lade.

trows (trowz) n., arch. a former small boat used for fishing in local rivers – ‘The ‘trows’ were shaped something like this, Λ. The man stood with a foot on each leg of the ‘trows’, and steered and propelled it with the leister. When the ‘trows’ were not in the water there was a movable wheel attached to its point, and it was pushed along the road like a wheelbarrow’ [JTu] (presumably related to both trow and trews).

Trows (trowz) n. hamlet on the south bank of the Tweed, between Roxburgh Newtown and Roxburgh Barns. It is also known as Makerstoun Trows. There is another place of the same name, and also a stream just south of Windy Gyle in Northumberland (the name perhaps derives from the narrow ‘troughs’ on the bed of the Tweed here, although another possibility is the old Celtic ‘tros’, suggesting a river crossing; it may have the same origin as for the more local area the Trows; it occurs on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Trowis’).

the Trows (thu-trowz) n., pl. popular name for the area surrounding the Teviot near Trow Mill, and for the farm also called Trow Knowes. Simon Routledge is recorded there in 1494. George Douglas was recorded there in 1502. ‘Trows’ was one of the farms of the Cavers estate, listed as such in 1511. The name is also used in the earliest account of the 1514 incident (Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’) to describe the general location, rather than the word ‘Hornshole’, this being more correct if the skirmish took place on the south side of the Teviot. George Douglas of Trows is recorded in 1517. It was still part of the Cavers lands in 1558. The area was said to have been used for secret Covenanters’ sermons in the 17th century. It was inherited by Sir William Douglas of Cavers in 1687 and by his brother Archibald in 1698, with the mill. James Douglas was there in at least 1694–1705, Archibald Douglas in 1747 and Alexander Douglas in 1791–96. The precise site of the former house is unknown, although it is marked between the Crook and Westcote on Stobie’s 1770 map, and with Trownmill down by the Teviot at the same time – ‘Little Cot, Muckle Cot, Crook and the Trows, Worchart, Wormston and Cavers Knowes’ [T], ‘The lazy Griersons o’ the Crook, An’ Douglas o’ the Trows, An’ Cadon wi’ his bluddie shears, Fra’ clippin’ o’ his yowes’ [T], ‘Hawick better lo’ed sic needfu’ rows As cowed the English band at Trowes’ [AD] (often written ‘Trowes’, it is ‘le Trowsis’ and ‘trowsis’ in 1502. ‘Trows’ in 1511 and 1517 and ‘Trones’ in 1694; it appears as ‘Trows’ on Pont’s c.1590 map, is still ‘Trows’ on Gordon’s c. 1650 map, and ‘Trowes’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; the origin of the name is unclear, but one suggestion is the Old Welsh ‘tros’, which means ‘across’ something, and occurs in other place names associated with river.

crossings, while another suggestion is ‘trowch’ for a channel in a river bed, or a mill trough.

trowth (trowth) n., arch., poet. truth, troth – ‘Tweel ye hae walth to wale on if it’s sae; Sae sigh nae mair, for trowth ye mak me waecer’ [CPM], ‘...Of his honesty, trowth, we may well have oor doots’ [UB], ‘Thay stan’ siccer forevir an’ evir, an’ ar dune in trowth an’ uprichtness’ [HSR], ‘Trowth sae spring owt o’ the yirth...’ [HSR] (also written ‘trolloch’; cf. troth).

truck (truk) n., arch. goods, barter, especially used to refer to the goods formerly received for part payment of wages in the hosiery trade (see also trock and troke).

The True State ... (th-troo-stä) n. possibly the first book published in Hawick, full title ‘The True State of the unhappy controversy about the Burgess Oath, being a discourse delivered before the Associate Presbytery of Earlston, at Kelso, the 8th day of October 1782, etc.’, published in 1783, written by John Young and printed by George Caw.

True Thomas (troo-to-mis) n. popular name for Thomas the Rhymer – ‘Then up bespake him true Thomas, He was the lord of Ersyltoun: “The wizard’s spell no steel can quell, Till once the wizard true Thomas, He was the lord of Ersyltoun: “The wizard’s spell no steel can quell, Till once Tudhope (tu-dup) n. farm just to the west of Jedburgh, presumably the origin of the surname. There is a holy well on the farm. ‘Jhone of Towdrop’ is recorded in the Burgh Court Book of Selkirk in 1523 and ‘William Tudhoip’ in the following decade.

Tudhope (tu-dup) n. Adam (16th C.) recorded in Hermiston in 1580 when he witnessed a transaction between John Johnstone of Hermiston and Patrick Johnstone. Adam (17th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married ‘Gellan’ Dryden, probably about 1675. He may be the Adam who is listed as a resident at Ormiston in Cavers Parish in 1694. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Janet Clerk there in 1699. He may have been brother of Thomas as well as Janet, who married John Douglas in Cavers in 1707. Adam (17th/18th C.) married Isabell Stewart in Bedrule Parish in 1716. Helen who married John Rutherford in Bedrule Parish in 1721, and Bessie who married William Mill in 1725 may have been his sisters. Adam (17th/18th C.) workman in Hawick Parish. He married Marion Oliver in Hawick in 1722. They had a daughter Isabel (b.1723), with baptismal witnesses carrier Robert Aitken and mason Robert Mein. Adam (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick. In 1798 he married Agnes Scott, who was from Westerkirk. Their son James was baptised in 1799. Alexander (17th/18th C.) recorded in Selkirk in 1702 in a case brought by John Turnbull for assault. Bailie Charles (18th C.) merchant of Hawick, he was Magistrate in the 1750s. He witnessed baptisms in 1741, 1742, 1743, 1745, 1747 and 1757, suggesting that he may have been an elder of the Kirk. He is listed among the subscribers to the reprinted the Tryst Grund (thu-tri-ist -trist-grund) n. part of the Common used for the annual horse fair in the Autumn, being in the Thorterdykes, with an area of 1 acre and 31 poles, and also being referred to as ‘Hawick Loanin’ or ‘the Green Gress’. The fair was established by the Magistrates in October in 1785. There was also a cattle fair established in the same year (in November), to encourage drovers to stop off in Hawick.

Trystin Sike (tris-, tris-tin-sik) n. Trysting Sike, stream that rises on Kirk Hill and runs roughly south-east to join the Liddel Water near Thistlesike, south of Mangerton.

Tudhope

Buchanan’s ‘History of Scotland’ (1752). David (15th/16th C.) recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books for 1536. William Douglas allowed him to grow oats and pasture cattle on the meadow of Friarshaw for the rest of his life. He was presumably a former tenant of the Douglasses of Friarshaw. He also witnessed transactions in the period 1538–42. In 1562 he was appointed as executor for Janet Scott (who appears to have been someone else’s wife, rather than his), leaving her goods and land in Peebles. Probably the same David was recorded in 1563 leasing part of the lands of Hermiston in Lilliesleaf Parish.

Francis (18th/19th C.) paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1785–91. He was listed as a carrier on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick. He is probably the Francis who married Betty Miller in 1767, and whose children were: John (b.1770); Walter (b.1772); Isabella (b.1774), who may have married Joseph Henderson in 1794; Beatrice (b.1779); and Janet (b.1781). The witnesses in 1772 were the whole congregation. He is probably the Francis who paid for the use of the Parish ‘mortcloth’ in 1773. Francis (1805–70) born in Hawick, son of John and Isabella Dryden. He married Margaret Nutter from London. In 1840 he was selected as a teacher at Grahamstown in the Cape Colony, and went out to South Africa with his wife and 3 young sons, John, James and Francis.

Gavin (b.1807) son of John and Isabella Dryden. He married Janet Watson (from Galashiels) in Wilton Parish in 1832. He worked as a wool-spinner in Selkirk (according to the 1851 census), and had at least one child, Ann (b.1842). He was listed as a spinner at Damside among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835. James (17th C.) named on a list of men suggested by the Hawick Bailie as fit to be sent to the war in Germany in 1627, specifically they were said to be ‘fitter to be employed in his Majesties service nor to be suffered loyttering at hame’. While in Edinburgh Tolbooth he was among 7 of them who complained that they were not in fact the sorts of men who should be pressed into military service, but nevertheless were transported to the wars in Germany. James (17th C.) recorded as one of 3 men fined for the oats of Gilbert Watt (the Town Clerk) that their livestock ate in 1642. He may be the same James who was recorded in 1644 when his horse was valued at 40 merks when provided for the Covenanting army ‘in case the horses come nocht back again or be lost’. He may be the James, married to Margaret Scott, whose children baptised in Hawick included: Margaret (b.1642); William (b.1643); Alexander (b.1645); Walter (b.1647); Christian (b.1650); and William (again, b.1652). Alternatively he could be the James, married to Helen Clapperton, whose son Robert was baptised in 1635, or the James, married to Janet Falla, whose daughter Janet was baptised in 1639. James (17th/18th C.) brother of Robert. He was called before the Hawick Session in 1717, but excused because he was ‘att Newcastle upon his brother’s service and business’. He could be the James listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. James (18th C.) married Margaret ‘Badie’ in Hawick Parish in 1726. James (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. In 1718 he married Agnes, sister to gardener Walter Turnbull. Their children included: Walter (b.1720); Janet (b.1723); William (b.1724); and Elizabeth (b.1729), who may have married Robert Balmour in 1762. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Marion (or May) Littlejohn and their children included: Charles (b.1737); and Agnes (b.1740).

James (18th C.) Hawick resident who married Janet Palmer in 1758. Their daughter Helen was born in 1760. It is possible he was the same James who married Margaret Henderson a year later. He may be the deceased James whose daughter Helen died in Hawick in 1798. James (18th C.) carrier in Hawick. He married Margaret Henderson in 1761. Their children included: William (b.1762); Adam (b.1765), mother’s Christian name given as ‘Isabel’; John (b.1767); Adam (b.1769); Charles (b.1773); and Elspeth (b.1774). The witnesses in 1762 were possibly George Turnbull and Robert Young (but hard to read), in 1765 were smith Robert Young and carrier Robert Chisholme and in 1767 were Robert Leithead and another James Tudhope. He may be the James ‘Tuleup’ whose use of the Parish ‘mortcloth’ is recorded twice in 1773. He may be the James who in 1773 witnessed a baptism for miller John Scott. James (18th C.) married Janet Mason in Wilton Parish in 1767. James (18th C.) married Betty Davidson in Hawick in 1784. James (d.1797) paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1785–91. He was presumably a carrier, and the same as one of the contemporary Jameses, perhaps the carrier married to Margaret Henderson. He is probably the carrier whose son William died in 1797. His death is recorded in Hawick, where he is stated to be ‘late Langholm Carrier’. James (b.1823) born in Hawick, probably son of Thomas. He was a tobacconist and china merchant at 10 Sandbed. In 1861 he lived with his sister Janet, and his housekeeper was Agnes Huggan. John (17th C.) described as maltman in Cavers in a Hawick magistrates court case of 1642, when Douglas of Cavers' servant accused him and several other people of stealing his wallet in Hawick. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1661 he (along with Adam Ogilvie) witnessed a baptism for James E. . . . He married 'mellie' Cowan and their children included Adam (b.1661). The witnesses in 1661 were Adam Ogilvie and Thomas Scott. John (17th C.) wright in Hawick. In 1686 he was appointed, along with James Boyd, as 'marchers of the toune betwixt neighbour and neighbour anment the marching of yr. yards and gavell, being joyned to John Hardie, William Purdome, and William Paysley, who were former marchers'. He was listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4 and was listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water’ in 1694. He could be the John who married Isobell Huntly and whose children born in Hawick included Walter (b.1670), Margaret (b.1672), Marion (b.1677) and Jane (b.1679). John (17th C.) flesher on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He was also listed as a flesher among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was listed as a flesher when he witnessed a baptism for wright Andrew Scott in 1704. He married Helen Gilespie and their children included: Robert (b.1693); John (b.1696); and Alexander (b.1702). The witnesses in 1702 were miller James Paterson and Bailie Patrick Richardson. He witnessed a baptism in 1714 for shoemaker Robert Elliot and in 1716 for Thomas Waugh (along with fellow flesher Thomas Wilson). John (18th C.) merchant in Selkirk. In 1733 his servant Isobel Wilson complained that someone had tried to drown her at the Cross Well in Selkirk. Probably the same John was recorded in Selkirk in 1717 and 1718, charged with debts and with assault in 1727 and in a further cases for his debts and against someone for non-payment of rent in 1736. It was probably his son who was the John 'younger' recorded when accused of assault in 1719 and a claim against debtors in 1720. John (18th C.) carrier in Hawick who married Isabel Ker. Their children included: Robert (b.1735); Andrew (b.1739); Francis (b.1742); and Walter (b.1744). The witnesses in 1744 were merchant John Ruecastle and William Scoon, servant to Rev. William Somerville; fellow carrier James Paterson and his wife Helen Ruecastle had a child baptised on the same day. He could be the John, from Hawick, who is on the list of subscribers for Caw's ‘Poetical Museum’ in 1784. He may be the John who witnessed a baptism for Joseph Henderson and Isabel Tudhope in 1794 and the John who (along with Walter) witnessed another for the same couple in 1798. John (18th/19th C.) Hawick resident married to Isabel Dryden. His wife may have been the Isabel (b.1781), daughter of Gavin Dryden, born in Hobkirk Parish. Their children included: Francis (b.1805), teacher in South Africa; and Gavin (b.1807), who married Janet Watson. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Selkirk Parish. He married Margaret Wood and their children included: James (b.1698); Margaret (b.1700); John (b.1703); Robert (b.1705); Isabel (b.1708); and John (b.1710). Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was living at Raesknowe in 1704 and was herd at Over Southfield in 1709. He married Jean (or Janet) Scott and their children included Mary (b.1701), William (b.1704), Robert (b.1707) and John (b.1709). The witnesses in 1704 were John Graham (also in Raesknowe) and Robert Riddell in Allanhaugh Mill. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was 'servant to Fullness' in 1708. He married Esther Elliot and their daughter Marion was baptised in 1708, with witnesses Walter Nixon in Hawick Shiel and James Falsyde. Robert (18th C.) brother of James, mentioned in 1717. Possibly the same Robert was married to Helen Scott and had children: Helen (b.1727); Robert (b.1733); and Betty (b.1735). Robert (18th C.) Hawick resident married to Helen Hardie. Their children included: John (b.1730); Janet (b.1737), who may have married Robert Renwick in 1766; and Anne (b.1741). The witnesses in 1730 were John (who was surely related) and Walter . . . He could be the flesher who witnessed baptisms for skinner John Currier in 1743 and 1745. This same flesher was involved in a pair of court cases in 1748, involving the payment of a debt by Robert Taylor to Thomas Turnbull, in which he was an intermediary. Robert (18th C.) married Margaret Davidson in Hawick in 1760. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1767 he married Jean, daughter of John Ekron and Jean ‘Dinlap’ (i.e. Dunlop); she died in 1775. He is probably the Robert who in 1768 witnessed a baptism for mason William Ekron (perhaps his brother-in-law). Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Selkirk Parish. He is recorded in a complaint in Selkirk in 1787. He married Margaret Fairbairn and their children included: Alexander (b.1768); Nelly and Tudhope Hill

John (b.1770); Robert (b.1773); and Margaret (b.1778). Perhaps the same Robert is recorded being in debt in documents of 1813, 1814 and 1817. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1777 he married Marion Pott, who was from Cavers Parish. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He may have been brother of Adam and Janet. His children included: Marion (b.1699), who probably married Thomas Thomson in 1728; and Thomas (b.1706). Thomas ‘Tammy’ (18th/19th C.) trader in toys and other items at local fairs. He was long remembered in Denholm by a phrase repeated by children, ‘Tammy Tudhope the toy-man!’ and the cry ‘The fair’s begun, yonder’s Tammie Tudhope’. It is unclear where he came from. Thomas (b.1791/2) tobacconist at the Sandbed in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories and Slater’s 1852 directory. He was probably part of the business marked ‘Tudhope & Scott’ on Wood’s 1824 map. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. In 1841 he was listed on the Sandbed and at Teviot Square (probably about 10 Sandbed) in 1851, when he was listed as a master tobacco manufacturer, employing 1 man and 1 boy. He married Isabel Murray in 1816 and their children included: Mary (b.1817), who may have married George Porteous in 1848; Elizabeth (b.1819), who probably married Robert Biggar in 1846; Agnes (b.1821), who may have married Joseph Park in 1845; James (b.1823); John (b.1825); Thomas (b.1831); Janet (b.1835); and William (b.1837). Perhaps the same Thomas was one of the original deacons of Hawick Free Kirk from 1844. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick, married to Marion ‘Thor’. Their son John was born in 1634. Walter (18th C.) Hawick resident who married Janet Graham in 1722. She was daughter of Walter Graham (perhaps the Bailie) and died in 1777. Their children included: Walter (b.1727); William (b.1729); Jean (b.1732); and John (b.1737). Widow (17th C.) listed among the subscribers for the new Kirk bell in 1693/4. It is unclear who her husband was. William (16th C.) farmer at Hallrule. ‘William Tudopis dwelling hous and yaird’ are recorded in the 1562 Barony. He witnessed a baptism for the Kirk Session about 1711 and becoming an elder in 1723. Also in 1723 he witnessed a baptism for wright Richard Turnbull and was probably the William ‘Thowdup’ who witnessed another in 1726. He is probably the William who (along with Robert Boyd) witnessed baptisms for William Davidson and for Robert Ker in Hawick in 1731. He was elected Magistrate in 1737, although Bailie Burn complained that many of the voters were his servants or were minors. He was Bailie in 1738 when plans started for the building of the Teviot Bridge. He witnessed a baptism for weaver David Miller and another for shoemaker George Gardner. He is probably the merchant William who witnessed the baptisms of children of Walter Tinlin and William Oliver in 1737. In 1743 he witnessed a baptism for druggist Gideon Scott and was ‘late Bailie’ in 1743 when he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker George Gardner. He paid tax for 19 windows in Hawick in 1748. In 1716 he married Elizabeth (or Elspeth), daughter of Robert Scott in Drinkstone. Their children were: Walter (b.1717); Robert (b.1719); Charles (b.1722); James (b.1723); Anne (b.1725); May (b.1728); May (again, b.1730); and William (b.1732). The baptismal witnesses in 1723 were schoolmaster James Anderson and surgeon James Scott, in 1725 were James Anderson (again) and ‘Tacksman’ Robert Elliot, and in 1728 baptism were ‘Mr. Anderson’ and Robert ‘Pote’. He is probably the William who was former owner of lands (in Wilton Parish) that George Hailburton owned in 1788, having been purchased from Langlands of that Ilk. William (18th C.) married to Isobel Riddell. Their daughter Anne was born in 1739. William (18th/19th C.) Hawick resident recorded as owner of a horse in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He could be the ‘Hair Merchant’ who died in Hawick in 1808 and whose sister Janet died in 1811 (also spelled ‘Toudhop’, ‘Toudhope’, ‘Towdop’, ‘Tudhoup’, ‘Tudup’, ‘Tudwp’, ‘Tutop’, etc.).

Tulloch (tu-loch) n. John (19th C.) fishmonger at 30 High Street in the late 19th century. He was noted as a bass singer and was precentor of Allars Kirk. He moved to Campbelltown in 1899.

Tullochgariec (tu-loch-ga-re-arch) n., poet. word of uncertain meaning – ‘Ye’ll no forget to send an answer, An’, harkye, Wattie, gie’s a dancer, An’ ootright Tullochgariec prancer, To mak me start’ [JoHa].

tully (tu-lee) n., arch. a quarrel, fight, struggle – ‘If it was het, the langkail gully, Play’d smash amang’t to end the tulzie’ [JR] (also written ‘tulzie’).

Tully (tu-lee) n. David (b.1787/8) local farmer, who gave his name to the phrase ‘Tully’s Mill’ when he was dragged into the Slitrig at the Mill Port and had the upper half of his clothing torn off by the mob for being a Tory voter. This was during the election of 1837; 5 men were tried for mobbing and rioting and assault, against 7 victims. He may have been one of the Hawick men who went down to London to be witnesses in the investigation. The family lived at the Millpath, in a house that was removed to make way for the railway. His wife was Janet, and their children included James and Janet. The death of a child of his is recorded in Hawick in 1824. In 1861 he was living at 25 High Street with grandchildren Agnes Murray, David Murray, James Tully and Jessie Tully; he was then described as a farmer of 75 acres. James (b.1816/7) son of David. In 1861 he was living at 17 Howegate and listed as a farmer of 30 acres. His wife was Margaret and their children included James and David. John (18th/19th C.) Hawick resident who owned a horse according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John (18th/19th C.) mason who was chosen as ‘rebel’ Cornet in the ‘Disputed Common Riding’ of 1809 in opposition to the Council’s choice of John Kyle. The dispute was over new regulations regarding invitations to supporters. He was the second choice of the ‘Wesla Water’ group, after Henry Halliburton had declined. He rode the Common on the Friday, behind the ‘royalist’ Cornet, although he had more supporters. He also entered the Haugh, although with some obstruction – ‘If you love your ancient freedom, Their new Cornet never heed him; From among you choose a Cornet, Hand it down to sons unborn yet’ [JH], ‘The Westla’ Lads waur Rebels ca’d, John Tully led them on a yaw’d’ [MB]. Margaret (17th C.) recorded in Ashkirk Parish in 1635. Isobel Scott in Synton Mill complained that she had called her a witch and a thief; she denied the first, but claimed she could prove that Scott had stolen money from Andrew Nichol. However, after several witnesses were called there was no proof of theft, and so she had to sit in the place of repentance ‘in her linen sheitts, and to sit all the tyme of preaching’, then ask the congregation for forgiveness. William (18th C.) local wigmaker immortalised in a rhyme – ‘Robert Miles the barber, and Michael up the stair, Willie Tully makes the wigs, and Jenny buys the hair’ [T] (also spelled ‘Tullie’ interchangeably in early times, as well as ‘Tulley’).

Tully’s Mill (tu-kem-mil) n., arch. term meaning rough treatment at the hands of a mob, or more specifically being thrown into the Slitrig at the Mill Port. The term came from David Tully, known as a Tory supporter, who received such treatment during the election of 1837. Similar treatment was common during the elections of the 1830s. David Waters wrote a facetious poem called ‘Holy Tammie’s Prayer, and thanking for his marvellous escape from ‘Tully’s Mill’ at the late election’, published in 1838 – ‘...he got ‘Tully’s Mill’ in the Slitrig under the Tower Knowe bridge’ [JT] (also written ‘Tuillie’s Mill’).

tummelt (tu-nul) pp. tumbled – ‘Whilk dang puir Yeddie’s head agee, Till drunk he tummelt, An’, as oor sacred authors gree, Life’s garden bummelt’ [JoHa], ‘O! Mony’s the mirry mile I’ve raiked, And mony a wainch in hey tummelt’ ...

tummle (tu-nul) v. to tumble – ‘...Losh he wammelt and tummleted ower on to the floor’ [UB], ‘Wha toss an’ tum’le, waupit a’ through ither, Until the grun’ they tread on seems alive’ [JoHa], ‘Sweat, pech, an’ stacher up Parnassus’ brae, An’ though thou tum’le, tryt’ an’ tryt’ again’ [JoHa], ‘When a’ the world looks cauld an’ grey, An’ a’ things tum’lin under ...’ [BP], ‘...Here they come at the spring-cleaning’, Tummelm’ oot o’ the derk again ...’ [DH], ‘Syne aff frae his shouter’ll tummle his pack ...’ [WL], ‘...And crystal rivers tummle doon’ [IWL], n. a tumble – ‘hei took a right tummle doon they stair’.

tummle-car (tu-nul-kawr) n., arch. a kind of primitive box cart with wheels that revolved with the axle, and hence moved with a jolting motion – ‘...Roostit horseshoon, an queer wheel-rings O’ tumle cars, The swords o’ ancient knights an’ kings, Lost i’ their wars’ [JoHa].

tumshie (tu-shi) n. a turnip – ‘oo made tumshie lanterns it Hallow’een’.

tundle (tu-dul) n., arch. tinder, especially in the phrase ‘as dry as tundle’ (also written ‘tundl’; noted by E.C. Smith).

Tungrig (tu-nig) n. farm probably in upper Liddesdale, recorded in 1613 and 1622, relating to branches of the Scotts.

the Tunnel (tu-nu-nul) n. name used in the 19th century for a long, dark close leading to Backdamgate from around 12 or 14 High Street. It contained several badly illuminated houses and was demolished around 1857 when the Royal Bank was built.

the Tunnel (tu-tu-nul) n. epithet for the road between Hawick and Langholm, referring to the steep pass between upper Teviotdale and upper Ewesdale.

Tunno (tu-nu) n. Andrew (16th/17th C.) notary in Melrose. In 1612 he is recorded as schoolmaster in Melrose. He is recorded in making an extract of the 1615 sasine of Robert Scott of Alton from Gilbert Watt’s Protocol Book, with the precise date is unknown. He is listed as procurator for some cases in the records of the Regality of Melrose in 1638–51. In 1642 his son Andrew is mentioned as a witness in Melrose and by the late 1640s was ‘younger’ and already a writer. His son was probably Town Clerk of Hawick (unless this was in fact him, rather than his son). Andrew (17th C.) Town Clerk of Hawick. It seems reasonable to presume that this man was son of the Melrose notary, who was described as a student in Melrose in 1642, and already a writer in 1643. In 1659 he is described as ‘notary in Melrose, now at Hawick’, in a bond referred to in a complaint against his tenant. He served as Town Clerk of Hawick 1659–70. In 1670 a case was raised against him by Walter Scott of Goldielands in the Melrose court of Regality (in which he is described as ‘portioner of Melrose’), complaining that he held the ‘protocol book’ of Gilbert Watt, notary, which contained 2 instruments of sasine relating to succession of the lands of Goldielands. He agreed to make copies, although they do not appear to have survived. Christian (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor’. Men and women are listed, and so it is unclear if this was a male or female name. William (17th C.) servitor of Walter Scott, Earl of Buccleuch. He witnessed the Earl’s last will and testament in 1633.

Tunny (tu-nee) n. James Good (d.1887) proprietor of the photography business J.G. Tunny & Co., which continued long after his death. The company had several studios in Edinburgh and also opened one at 47 High Street Hawick in the period 1903–06.

tup (tup) n. a ram, male sheep – ‘The skulls o’ elk-deer, bison, tup, Fund i’ the mosses …’ [JoHa], ‘A large and powerful tup turned on Jock and attacked him’ [RM], ‘I’m no acquaintance wi’ mealy pows; I was brought up wi’ tusps and ewes …’ [JR], ‘Your credit with us rises up each time you turn a stubborn tup …’ [TD] (this was formerly tuip).

the Tup Fair (thu-tup-fair) n. name sometimes used for Hawick’s main ‘tup’ market, held on September 20th and 21st during parts of the 18th and 19th centuries. It was also for a while a major lamb fair.

Tup Knowes (tup-nowz) n. former name for lands near Hawick. They are mentioned among lost placenames by James Wilson in 1850, and may be part of the old Common.

turn (turn) v. to become, grow – ‘Him and mei turned fast freends and Aw hev him in New York now …’ [JEDM], ‘Ee’re denner’s turnin cauld’ [ECS], (more common than in standard English, and often with the participle coming after the noun; see also turnt).

turn (turn) n. the middle of something, particularly a night – ‘…the turn o the nicht’ [ECS], the act or process of changing – ‘…a turn for the better; …the turn o the eer’ [ECS], a bout of illness, especially in the phrase ‘a bad turn’, a favour – ‘…ee’ve duine iz a guid turn wui that’ [ECS], a walk, stroll – ‘A’m duist oot for a bit turn afore A gaan ti bed’ [ECS] (these senses all more common than in standard English).

Turn (turn) n. former name of a farm near Stobs, roughly between Woodfoot Cottage and Railway Cottages. It could be the ‘turni’ where James Crozier was located in 1494/5. It is probably the ‘Torne’ listed along with ‘Wenerton’ and ‘Fowler-awe’ as farms on the Slitrig belonging to the Laird of Gledstains, which were burned by the English in 1547/8. It was among the lands of Winnington purchased by Gilbert Elliott of Stobs from Robert Elliot of Redheugh in 1622. It was still listed as part of the Barony of Winnington at the end of the 17th century. It was among lands whose superiority was inherited by daughters of George Scott (brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade) in 1670. William Turnbull was there in 1708 and James Nichol in 1720. George Fletcher was tenant there in the 1750s. When a valuation of the separate lands in the Stobs estate was made in 1779 an entry read ‘Part of Te-ourn or Turn, possessed by William Elliot and Robert Potts in 1779’, valued at £178 5s 5d, with the other part being Smithfieldhaugh and valued at £15 10s. In the 1811 Land Tax Rolls, Sir William Elliott of Stobs owned part of ‘Te-ourn, or Turn’, a small part of which was called Smithfield-haugh; together they were still valued at about £194. It was also referred to as ‘Acreknowe Turn’ and housed 2 separate families until about the early 1900s (also written ‘Turne’; it is marked as ‘Turns’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and still there on Stobie’s 1770 map; it is clearly marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, but there is no sign of it today).

turn aboot (turn-a-boo’) adv. by turns, alternately – ‘oo only hed yin bike, so oo hed ti play wi’d turn aboot’.

the Turn Again Stane (thu-turn-a-gän-stän) n. standing stone on the farm of Kaeside, overlooking Tweedbank, traditionally said to have been erected to commemorate the place where Elliot turned and speared Ker of Cessford to death at the battle of Skirmish Feild in 1526. In fact the stone lies beside an ancient pathway, and probably predates the 16th century.

Turnbull (tur-bul, tru-mul) n. Adam of Whithope (14th/15th C.) recorded in 1390 as a witness to the charter by John Turnbull of Minto, granting Minto to Sir William Stewart of Jedburgh. In a charter of 1409 as ‘ade turnebule de quithope’ (i.e. Whithope) when his son John was granted lands at Hassendeanbank. Adam of Fulton (14th C.) listed among the witnesses to the 1390 charter where John Turnbull of Minto granted Minto to William Stewart of Jedburgh. Adam (15th C.) listed as one of the witnesses to the sasine giving the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffdom of Roxburghshire to William Douglas in 1432. It is unclear how he was related to other contemporary Turnbulls, but John of Bedrule and William of Hassendeanbank are also listed. He may be the Adam who witnessed a charter for lands in Sprouston in 1433/4. Adam of Wauchope (15th C.) described as ‘Adam de Wauchhop’ (and listed after several Turnbulls) when part of an inquest into lands in Jedburgh in 1440. He may be the same Adam who was on a ‘retour’ panel for Ker of Altonburn in 1446/7. Adam (15th C.) granted the lands of Greenwood in 1439 by charter of James II. These lands had previously been held by Walter Dalgleish of Greenwood and are probably the same as Girnwood on the Borthwick Water. He was probably father or grandfather of Thomas of Greenwood, recorded in 1488, and also related to the Turnbulls of Minto. Adam (15th C.) recorded as ‘Ade’ in 1471 when he and George Cranston had remission for 2 ‘schelis’ in Ettrick Forest. Adam of Philiphaugh (15th C.) recorded in 1484 when James Turnbull claimed compensation from him for disturbing him in his lands of Westfield and spoliation of his cow at his lands of Kirkhope. In 1504 he was among a number of men who had remission for any involvement in the slaughter of Thomas Rutherford in Jedburgh Abbey. He is listed right after Mark, who may have been related, and before his son and heir William, followed by James in Kirkhope and James in Gargunnock. He is also listed in the 1506 remission for the same crime. His son and heir William is also recorded in 1504 as a procurator for Helen Rutherford, heiress to Rutherford of that Ilk. Probably the same Adam of Philiphaugh was on the panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting Alemoor in 1509. Janet, who was granted a charter for part of Philiphaugh in 1509 was surely related to him, as well as Ralph, who held the same third of Philiphaugh shortly afterwards. Adam (d.bef. 1509) resident of Hornshole recorded at the 1493 Justice-aire held in Jedburgh. He was allowed to ‘compone’ for several crimes, specifically: stealing 2 bolls of barley; a horse, linens and sheets and diverse tools from John and Thomas Young of Minto; stealing ‘catallorum’ from Katherine Stewart from Minto; common theft and pilage; stealing 36 ewes from the Murrays in Sundhope; stealing 56 ells of cloth and 2 horses from Lauders; stealing 40 sheep from Philiphaugh; and stealing 12 sheep from Thomas Williamson from the Kirkland of Wilton. Additionally he and Walter, also in Hornshole, were allowed to compone for a series of other crimes: stealing livestock from 3 separate men in Minto; bringing in Englishmen from Tynedale to plunder Minto; and for common theft. Their surety was Robert Scott of Howpasley. In 1494/5 he had remission for several related crimes: stealing sheep, cows and a horse from John Sinton in Synton, in the company of James Elliot; stealing further horses from Torwoodlee, Fairnilee and Lauders; stealing sheep from Glencrath; stealing an ox from Heartside and ‘chattels’ from Hugh Douglas; stealing cattle from Katherine Stewart in Minto; bringing in men from Tynedale to plunder from Thomas Wilkinson; and for common theft and delivery of stolen goods. His surety was Walter Scott of Howpasley. He was also described as ‘in Hornshole’ (i.e. tenant there) in 1502 when he was indicted for stealing 200 oxen and 80 horses from James Newton, tenant of Synton. David Scott (called ‘the Lady’) tenant of Stiches was involved in the same or a similar incident at Synton. Later in 1502 he was ‘in Hornshole, now in chalmelane newtoun’ when he had remission for a series of crimes: stealing 80 sheep from Breadmeadows (probably also involving David ‘the Lady’ Scott in Stiches); bringing in Englishman Sir John Musgrave; stealing 2 horses from Lauders; stealing 3 oxen and a cow from Muircleuch; stealing 4 cattle from Hermiston; stealing 7 cows from Whitmnr; stealing 160 sheep from Hundlehope; stealing 25 sheep from George Bonnington; stealing 28 sheep from the ‘cauldshelhous’; stealing 30 sheep from Philiphaugh; stealing 100 sheep from William Turnbull at Oakwood; stealing 60 sheep from Cauldshielis; bringing in Archibald and Ninian Armstrong to raid Synton, stealing 200 cattle abd 80 horses from James Newton there; and stealing 17 cows, 2 horses, 100 sheep, a doublet, a sword and 40 shillings from St. Leonard’s Hospital near Peebles. James Newton in Synton and Walter Scott of Howpasley were sureties for him and Walter (son of Walter Scott of Headshaw) appears to have been involved in 2 of the same incidents. Musgrave’s men burned Selkirk and stole 1000 merks worth of goods from the inhabitants; he also had remission for his role in this raid; George of Hallrule and Bartholomew in Rawflat acted as sureties for him. In 1509 Andrew Crozier was hanged for several crimes, including his murder, along with the murder of another Adam, called ‘Gabrilenziis’. There are no details given for the events leading to his death. He may be an ancestor of later Turnbulls who were tenants of Hornshole. He may be the ‘Ade Turnbull’ listed in the Exchequer Rolls in 1501, along with David and Robert, when they were fined, with George Douglas, Master of Angus responsible for their pledges. Adam (15th C.) member of the panel for the inheritance of the lands of Bronxholme and Bucelleuch in 1492. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Adams. Adam ‘Gaberlunzie’ (d.bef. 1509) killed along with Adam in Chamberlain Newton (so they may have been related). Andrew Crozier was hanged in 1509 for this and other crimes. No information is given about this incident and no clues as to the reason for his nickname, which is recorded as ‘Gabrilenziis’. He was surely related to Walter, ‘gabirlenze’. Adam (15th/16th C.) son of William. He was listed in the Exchequer Rolls in 1501 among mostly local men who had been fined. The other 15 men listed were mostly from the area immediately around Hawick. Note that there was also a separate Adam listed, but neither had another designation, and so it is impossible to know if they were the same as any of the other contemporary Adam’s. Adam (15th/16th C.) witness to the notorial instrument of 1501/2 for the Kerrs of Ferniehirst, relating to their lands of Feu-Rule in the Barony of Cavers. It is unclear if he was the same as one of the other contemporary Adams. Adam (15th/16th C.) son of Walter in Stouslie. In 1502 William in Crumhaugh was surety for him at the Justice-aire, and was fined for his non-appearance. Adam (15th/16th C.) recorded among the men who were put to the horn in 1502 for involvement in the murder of Robert Oliver. The person called to enter him was Mark Ker of Dolphinton, George of Hallrule, while John in Wells was also listed and so surely related. Adam (15th/16th C.) described as ‘of Billerwell’ in 1502. In 1502 he was ‘de bullirwell’ when he was fined for failing to produce Ninian in court among a group of men charged with the murder if Robert Oliver. Also in 1502 he served as surety for Peter Turnbull in Bonchester. In 1506 he had remission for ‘resetting, supplying and intercommuning’ with William Turnbull of Minto, as well as with his accomplices, the rebels Mark, Edward and Walter Turnbull. In 1508 he was on the panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting the Lordship of Liddesdale; he was there recorded as being ‘in Bullerwell’. George Turnbull was Laird of Billerwell in 1589, so presumably a descendant. Adam (15th/16th C.) listed as tenant of Fulton in 1516, along with George and Andrew (hence possibly his brothers). They were among Turnbulls to receive remission for their part in assisting Alexander, Lord Home. Adam (15th/16th C.) tenant in Wolfelee who was listed among the many Turnbulls given remission in 1516 for assisting the traitorous Homes; James was also listed there as tenants of ‘Wolfelee’, and so may have been traitorous. Adam of `Bullerwell’ is recorded in 1571 when he was Laird of Billerwell in 1589, so presumably a descendant. Adam (16th C.) son of Sandy. He was recorded in 1567, along with Hector ‘in Turnbull’ (which seems likely to be a transcription error), brother to George, as well as ‘Isobel’s Robin’, `Part Purcell’ and 2 Olivers. David Home of Wedderburn was instructed to enter them to answer charges of raiding into England.

Adam (d.bef. 1578) recorded as ‘in Belis’ when he witnessed a charter in 1549, hence he was presumably tenant of Belses. The charter was for Robert Scott of Howpasley granting Appletreedhall to Hector, brother of David Turnbull of Wauchope. In 1576 he was recorded among a group of Turnbulls and others (from Barnhills, Howden, Hallrule, Billerwell and Chesters) who had a bond with another group of Turnbulls (from Minto, Bewlie, Kames and Troneyhill), not to harm each other. Also in 1576 there was a pledge made before the Privy Council, that his sons ‘Hekie’, David, George and John would refrain from thieving. In 1576/7 his servant Patrick Bennet was attacked by Walter in Firth, servant of John of Minto (despite the bond that had been signed between the feuding Turnbull branches); his son Hector was also mentioned, with the pair appearing personally. His sons were all declared fugitives in 1578/9. Hector is recorded in 1580 having a couple of decades later.

Adam (16th C.) described as a ‘clerk’ at Hallrule in 1562, when his house and yard were part of the Baronial land dispute in Feu-Rule. The Adam of half a century later must be a descendant. Adam of `Yaton Scott’ (16th C.) listed in 1581 among 10 men accused of the murder of Walter, son of Wat Turnbull of Bewlie. Andrew was also listed as being at the same location, and although it is unclear where this was, most of the others were Turnbulls of Rulewater. Adam ‘Reid Adie’ (16th C.) tenant in Over Hassendean. He is recorded in 1576 when Sir Thomas of Bedrule was surety for him, promising that he would refrain from theft; the pledge was stated to have been broken in 1578/9. He is also recorded in 1583/4 among men of that area cited for failing to appear to give evidence relating to charges against sons of Sir Thomas of Bedrule. Adam (16th/17th C.) son of Stephen, from whom he inherited the right of rental of the lands of ‘Wowlie and Wowahoplie’ (i.e. ‘Wolefelee’ and ‘Wolfehopelee’) in 1590. He resigned the rental in favour of Sir William Cranston in 1607. In 1616 he was witness to a bond between William Scott of Todrig and Mark, son of Hector Turnbull in Hartshaugh, where he is referred to as Adam ‘called of the Wowyli’. He was surely related to the Adam in Woollee of the 1550s. Adam (16th/17th C.) referred to as ‘sumtyme servand to the said Walter Trumbill of Raffat’ in the 1603 trial of George Turnbull of Belses. George was accused of killing a son of Walter of Rawflat, and shooting another son, and also of capturing him ‘binding him with fetteris, and hinging him be the feit and schouderis, ouer ane balk [beam], for the space of xij [12] dayis, qhaiarthrow his feit rottit fra him’. What became of him is unrecorded. It is possible he was the brother of David in Belses (with other brothers George and John) recorded in 1581 and 1583, when they were accused of attacking the farm of Rawflat. Adam (16th/17th C.) tenant of Wauchope in Rulewater, recorded in a court case of 1605. He may have been related to the George who was also a tenant there, and perhaps more distantly related to the Turnbuls of Wauchope themselves. Adam of Billerwell (16th/17th C.) one of the members of an inquest of 1610 to judge the proper succession to James Hamilton’s lands of Appotside and Tytchhouse. In 1619 he had a bond, along with his son George, with John Haliburton of Mertoun, and this was witnessed by ‘my brother’ Andrew Turnbull. His son George was witness to a sasine of 1612. Probably the same Adam ‘in Bullerwall’ was one of the men accused in 1606 of raiding and burning Appotside and Harwood in 1598–1605, when his brother Andrew was also listed; both were ‘past fra’, i.e. the case was not pursued. He then served as surety for the other Turnbuls. Adam of Abbotrule (16th/17th C.) involved in a dispute in 1610, where Andrew Turnbull accused him and others of grazing their animals on his lands at Stonedge and Harwoodtown. He is probably the Adam, called ‘of Tounheid of Abbotreull’, who had a bond with Walter of Bedrule in 1617/8. He had a bond with John, son of Walter Scott of Chamberlain Newton, signed in Hawick in 1619 and registered in 1624. Adam (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘in Bonechester tounhead’ (i.e. Bonchester Townhead) in 1618 when he witnessed a bond between Walter of Bedrule and Adam of Abbotrule Townhead. In 1619 he had a bond with ‘his good friend, Walter Lorane in Gattascot’. Perhaps the same Adam is recorded being in ‘...head’, among Bonchester landowners, in the 1643 valuation for Abbotrule Parish; his lands were valued at £25. Adam ‘Adie’ (16th/17th C.) son of Thomas of Hartshaugh, the Kirklands and Swanshiel. However, there may have been other Adams in the same family (uncles and cousins) at the same time, so it is uncertain this is all the same man. In 1623 he was served heir to his grandfather Hector of Hartshaugh in the lands of ‘Viccarislandis’ (i.e. Kirklands) in Hobkirk, as well as Wester Swanshiel and ‘Clerksbankis’. He is recorded as ‘in Hartshaugh’ in the Circuit Court of 1622 when (along with another Adam Turnbull!) he was caution for James Turnbull of Braidhaugh, who was found guilty of stealing 24 sheep from ‘Hairrlesyd’. In 1623 he was recorded as the miller ‘in Hartshauchmyyne’ when Lyle Turnbull gave security for him and when he was acquitted of stealing cattle from Gilbert Elliott’s land at ‘Leisburne’. It is unclear when he succeeded his father in the lands that had been in the family for many generations. However, it appears that he neglected to ‘enter’ with his superior and so in 1630 he lost Hartshaugh and the Kirklands of Hobkirk (to Gilbert Elliott of Stobs), although he held on to Wester Swanshiel. He is still recorded as owner of Wester Swanshiel in 1643, when it was valued at £32 10s; he may also have been the Adam ‘in Swansheil’ who was tenant in the other part of Swanshiel, valued at £66 13s 4d. It is likely he is the same Adam recorded in Easter Swanshiel and Wester Swanshiel on the 1663 Land Tax Rolls (even although he may have been deposed by then). Adam (17th C.) recorded in 1643 along with David as owner of land in Abbotrule valued at £30. This was probably part of Bonchester Townhead, where a separate Adam, as well as William, also lived. Adam ‘Clerk’ (17th C.) tenant in Bonchester according to the 1643 county valuation. His lands were valued at £25. He was distinct from the 2 Adams recorded at Bonchester Townhead, but could be the same as the Adam recorded in Hobkirk Parish in 1663. He could be related to Thomas ‘called Clack’ who is recorded as a landowner in Abbotrule in 1663. Adam (17th C.) tenant in Ruletownhead along with Walter in 1643. The lands were valued at £140. Adam of Ruletownfoot (17th C.) recorded in 1643 in the valuation of Abbotrule Parish. His lands were valued at £10. Adam (17th C.) listed in the 1643 county valuation, with his lands in Raperlaw being valued at £104. He may have been related to Walter and William who also held Raperlaw lands at the same time. Adam (17th C.) recorded on the Land Tax Rolls for Hobkirk Parish in about 1663. Although difficult to transcribe it appears that he also paid for his part of Hallrule in 1663. Perhaps the same Adam ‘in Roull’ was listed on the 1663 Land Tax Rolls for Abbotrule Parish when he paid tax on £70. Adam (17th C.) resident of Hawick in 1673 when a woman was fined for telling him to hang himself and calling him ‘ane land llopped llowne’. Adam (17th C.) tenant in Nether Tofts. His will and that of his wife, Margaret Douglas, are recorded in 1682. Adam (17th C.) tenant in Hawthornside. In 1678 he paid tax on £40 at Hawthornside. In 1684 his son (whose name is not legible) was listed among people declared as fugitives for attending field conventicles. The will of his wife Isobel Shiel is recorded in 1688. Adam (17th C.) tenant in Elfaugh in Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Adam (17th C.) tailor listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He is probably the resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He could be the Adam married to Jane Turnbull, whose children baptised in Hawick included: Janet (b.1670); Thomas (b.1673); Robert (b.1681); Michael (b.1683); and Agnes (b.1687). Adam (1653/4–1732) son of William of Bonchester. He was tenant farmer at Doorpool. He married Margaret Turnbull, who died in 1731, aged 75. His only daughter Helen married Walter Scott, 4th Laird of Nether Bonchester. Along with his father and wife, he was buried in Abbotrule Kirkyard. Adam (d.1716) merchant at the Westport in Hawick. He witnessed a baptism for wright George Haliburton in 1704. He married Margaret Scott and their children included Bessie (b.1701) and Elspeth (b.1704). The witnesses in 1704 were carrier Andrew Clerk and innkeeper Francis Elliot. Probably the same merchant Adam married Janet Rae in Hawick in 1714. In 1716 his widow presented their son Adam for baptism in Hawick, with witnesses ‘student’ Patrick Cunningham and Beadle Walter Scott. Adam (17th/18th C.) tenant in Hassendeanbank. He may have been son of William of Cockerheugh. He was succeeded in the tenancy by his son James and then his grandson, who was also Adam. Adam (17th/18th C.) married Janet Rae in Hawick in 1714. Adam (17th/18th C.) married Helen Nichol in Minto in 1716. Adam (17th/18th C.) miller at Mangerton Mill. His children included: Christian (1718/9–35); and John (1723/4–45). Andrew, who was also miller at Mangerton Mill, was probably also his son. They are buried at Ettleton. Adam of Denesyde (17th/18th C,) last Turnbull Laird of Denesyde (also called ‘Nether Hawthornside’). He is said to have been a Jacobite supporter in the rebellion of 1715, probably accompanying William Kerr (‘Bitterbeard’) in fighting with the Old Pretender. As a consequence he was encouraged to leave (or possibly run out of) the area by Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs, who bought up all the ‘wadsets’ which the estate was under and advised him to leave the country. Elliott agreed to keep ‘St. Mary’s Well’ as a roadside watering place, and also gave him some money for his journey. He went south with his family, first to Tarset-foot in Tyneside. His son Thomas was a weaver there, but some of his grandchildren returned to the local area. He may be the same Adam of Hawthornside whose son (first name not given) was among those listed as fugitives in 1684 for refusing to conform to Episcopalanism. Adam (18th C.) mason in Hawick. In 1745 he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker George Oliver. Adam (18th C.) resident of Kilnknowe. His wife Christian Lorraine died in 1762 and was buried in Hobkirk Cemetery. Adam (d.bef. 1769) schoolmaster at Abbotrule, recorded in 1769 when his daughter Elizabeth married Finlay Stewart in Edinburgh. Adam (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Stevenson and their children included: Helen (b.1768); and Walter (b.1770). Adam (1766–1810) tenant of Hassendeanbank. His father was James, who also farmed there, with his grandfather being Adam and great-grandfather probably William, tenant of Cockerheugh. He is probably the Adam recorded at Hassendean on the 1787–94 Horse Tax Rolls and also in 1797, where he is listed as owner of 8 farm horses. He also paid the dog tax at Hassendean in the same year. In 1788 he married Betty, daughter of James Scott of Skelfhill. They had at least 12 children, including: Jean (1790–1874); James (1791–1854); Robert (1792–1822); William (b.1794), who farmed at Falnash and Merrylaw; Adam Ogilvie (1796–1835), who became an architect; Gideon Pott (1797–1841), who died in Berbice (Guyana); Agnes (1799–1829), who married Pater Brodie; Gavin (b.1800–54); Thomas (1802–81); Helen (1803–79); Betsy (1805–63); and John Robson (1807–66), Master of Works at Windsor Castle. Adam (1760/1–1851) eldest son of Thomas and grandson of Adam of Deneside. He was a shepherd in Tyneside, but joined his younger brother Thomas on the farm at Grange, on the Abbotsrule estate. He leased Midburn (also called ‘Africa’) in about 1823, and renewed the lease along with his eldest son Thomas in 1848. He is listed at ‘Africa’ in 1851, but must have died soon after the census was taken. At that time the farm consisted of 50 acres of arable land, 100 acres of pasture and employed 3 people. He married in Tyneside and had a daughter Margaret (who was brought up by her aunt at East Fodderlee and married James Stewart) and another daughter who died young. He secondly married Mary, daughter of John Turnbull, farm worker at Stonedge, and she died in 1852, aged 74. His children with his 2nd wife included Thomas (who farmed at Midburn), John (who married Jane Nichol and moved to Selkirk) and Michael (who married Beatrice Nichol, sister of his brother’s wife). Adam (18th/19th C.) tailor in Newcastleton, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He could be the Adam from Castleton who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. Adam Ogilvie (1796–1835) son of Adam and Betsy Scott. Like his brother John Robson, he attended Minto School and trained to be an architect. He was a builder in Edinburgh and died there. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. His son James Somerville became a doctor and emigrated to New Zealand. Adam (b.1817/8) grocer and spirit deal on the Mid Row. He was at about No. 4 in 1851 and was listed as a grocer on the Back Row in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Helen and their children included William, Robert, James and Alexander. Bailie Adam (1867–1946) son of Robert and Margaret Wilson. He was a teacher in Hawick. He was also well known on both the rugby and cricket fields. He played full back for Hawick R.F.C. in the 1880s. He was on both the South of Scotland teams in Rugby Union and Cricket. He took over from George Wilson as the second Secretary of Hawick R.F.C. He also refereed at least 7 international rugby matches. He also acted as Session Clerk to Hawick Parish. He was a member of the committee of the Roxburgh and Selkirkshire Unionist Association. He married Helen Paterson (1867–1942), and they had 4 children, including Rev. Robert Wilson (b.1893) and Helen (b.1895). He became blind 11 years before his death. Adam (19th/20th C.) stood in as Left-Hand Man in 1897, perhaps the only time this honour was given to someone who had not already been Cornet. It is said that he was meant to be Cornet in 1898, but either fell out with the organisers, or turned it down because his sister died about then. In any case he refused to act as Left-Hand Man again in 1898. Agnes (16th C.) daughter and heiress of Walter in Dalkeith. She married Thomas Home, also from Dalkeith, and in about 1567 she inherited the lands of Templehall and Brewwells in Rulewater. She passed them to Andrew, son of David Turnbull of Wauchope, who may have been a relative. Agnes (16th C.) listed in 1579 among people who owed money to Isabel Donald, widow of Robert of Palace. She was probably from the Ashkirk area. Agnes ‘White Erse Nannie’ (d.1805) her death is recorded in the Hawick parish records (along with her nickname!). There are several possible births of Agneses that could be her. Agnes (b.c.1790) keeper of a lodging-house at 36 High Street. She was married to William, also known as ‘Wull the Bellman’. Their children included Mary, William and Isabella. In 1861 she was a widow, still running the lodging house. Agnes (b.1814) daughter of Wilton Schoolmaster James and Margaret Dalgleish. She was teacher at the ‘Image Garden’ school in the 1840s, probably assisted by her mother, her father having died in 1834. She may have married David Host. The school building can be seen in the 1846 painting of the Common Riding Races, but probably did not last more than a few years. In Slater’s 1852 directory, she is listed as teacher at Wilton Cottage. Alexander (15th C.) notary public in the Fife area in 1488/9. It is unclear how he might have been related to local Turnbulls. He may be the same ‘Alexandro Turnbull’ among the witnesses to the charter granting Harden to John Turnbull in 1482, made at Kirkcaldy by Henry Wardlaw of Wilton. He was notary public for the diocese of St. Andrews in 1506, when there was a document relating to the lands of Allanshaws (in Lauderdale) held by Melrose Abbey. Alexander (15th C.) recorded in 1493 being ‘in Wowlee’, i.e. resident of Wolfelee. He was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. The next entry was for Robert, also in Wolfelee. Alexander (15th C.) listed at the 1493 Justice-aire in Jedburgh when William Douglas of Cavers was fined for his non-appearance.

He was recorded being in Unthank, which is presumably the farm in Rulewater. He was cited again at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. He was probably related to Henry, who was also recorded in Unthank in 1494/5. Alexander (15th C.) son of Andrew of Dryden. In 1494/5 he had remission for resetting Adam ‘howatson’ and Robert Jackson, who had stolen sheep from James Ker in Fastheugh and helped the ‘Thieves and Traitors of Levy’n’ in killing the wife and 2 sons of Thomas Middlemas of Ploro, as well as stealing a long (and very detailed) list of his goods. He could perhaps be the same man as Alexander in Commonside, who served as surety for Adam Howison in Commonside, also in 1494/5; Alexander in Commonside was also recorded in 1502 when he was surety (along with John in Dryden) for Philip in Whithope and David in Carlinpool. He is recorded in the Treasurer’s accounts for 1494/5 having obtained remission from the King. Alexander (15th C.) recorded in ‘bellentyne’ at the 1494/5 Justice-aire in Jedburgh. He probably lived at Bellendean. He was allowed to ‘compone’ for communing with ‘the traitors of Leven’. His brother ‘Blinnd John’ was also recorded as ‘sande turnbulis brother of bellentyyn’ in 1494/5, when he contributed 2 cows for the expenses of the Justicecc-aire. Alexander (15th C.) son of Robert. He was recorded in 1494/5 when Thomas Lauder of Todrig had remission for several crimes, including resetting him. He had apparently stolen cattle from Thomas Yair in ‘laudoma’. Alexander (15th/16th C.) tenant in ‘dodrik’, which is probably Dodrig to the south of Hawick. In 1502 Patrick, son of Adam Scott in Harwoodhill, had remission for stealing 15 sheep from him. Alexander (15th/16th C.) tenant at Braiddie in 1508 when Cuthbert Lauder of Todrig was convicted of stealing 2 horses from him. It is unclear whether his farm was the one on the Borthwick, the Hermitage or near Ashkirk. Alexander ‘Sandy’ (16th C.) recorded in 1567 when his son Adam was among men who David Home of Wedderburn had to present to answer charges brought by Englishmen. Alexander of Howa (16th C.). In 1587 he was accused of being involved with taking sheep from Sir William Sinclair of Herdmendstoun, or at least of resetting the sheep stolen by his son Gavín. Sir Thomas of Bedrule appeared in his name, but he was found guilty and order to be confined until Sinclair received recompense. Alexander (d.c.1600) farmer at Crosscleuch, near Fulton in Bedrule Parish. He is listed as deceased in a letter of 1602 which states that ‘the ferme hes beine waist sen the pest tymce’, suggesting that he had died of the Plague. His wife was Margaret Cockburn. Alexander (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. The baptism of his son Walter with Isobell Scott is recorded in 1650, with the label ‘for:’. The witnesses were George Turnbull and Andrew Routledge. Alexander (1691/2–1761) married to Helen Murray, who died in 1750, aged 66. His son Thomas was a merchant in Denholm and is buried in Bedrule kirkyard. Alexander (18th C.) tenant in Langraw. His son was baptised in Hobbirk Parish in 1738. Alexander (d.1810) recorded as ‘Brother to the Laird of Tofts’ when he died in Hawick. It is unclear who his brother might have been, but perhaps Anthony. Alexander (18th/19th C.) baker and keeper of a public house in Denholm, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. In the 1834 electoral roll he was also joint proprietor of houses with joiner John Turnbull. Alexander ‘Auld Sandy’ (1791–1859) 5th son of James and Betty Adamson and brother of the schoolmasters of Wilton and Hobbirk. He was a carrier, based at Nursery House, Bonchester Bridge, initially helping his grandfather George Adamson. In 1851 he is listed as ‘Carrier & Grocer’ at ‘1 Woodside’ in Bonchester. In later life he moved to Kirkton, where he died. In 1817 he married Elspeth (‘Betty’), daughter of George Alexander, farmer at Bonchester farm. Their children were: James (b.1817); Helen (b.1819); and George (b.1822), who emigrated to New Zealand and died in Dunedin; Agnes (b.1824); Isobel (b.1826); Elizabeth (b.1829); Ebenezer Alexander (1831–93), who died in Leith; and Margaret (b.1834). Alexander Rutherford (1835–97) of the firm Turnbull the dyers. He was son of the company’s founder, John. In 1861 he was master dyer, employing 30 people. He married Janet Armstrong Hume and their children were: Annie Hume (b.1865), who married Town Clerk John Ritchie Purdon; John Elliot (b.1868); James Armstrong (b.1871); and Arthur Rutherford (b.1873). Alexander Dobson (1853–1932) hosiery manager, he was son of George and Jessie Mark. He was cashier at Innes, Chambers & Co. He had both Wellogate Villa and Woodside built for him by David and Peter Dalgleish (Galashiels builders, who were his brothers-in-law). He was a member of the Hawick Archological Society. He is recorded as ‘Alex. D.’, cashier at 2 Teviotside Terrace, where he died. He married his second cousin Mary Warwick. They had 8 children, including: William Dickson of the Crescent Cleaning Co., George, law clerk in Edinburgh; Keith; and Mary (b.1881), who married Provost James D. Lawson of Pittenweem. Alexander (b.1867) born at Newton, Jedburgh. He worked as a servant on the Wolfelee estate. In 1893 he married Margaret, daughter of Andrew Little, shepherd at Gorrenberry. Their children included John, Andrew, Helen and Alexander. Alison (16th C.) daughter and heir of John, Burgess of Selkirk. She is recorded in 1544 and 1545 when served as matron with Margaret, another heir (whose relationship is not stated). She immediately sold her share to William Elliot. Andrew of Dryden (15th C.) witness to a notorial instrument for the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1456. He is recorded as ‘Andrea Turnbule de Driden’, his lands probably being in upper Teviotdale. The Andrew of Dryden recorded 4 decades later may be the same man, but is more likely to be his son. Andrew (15th C.) listed in 1463/4 among the local men who were rewarded by the King for assisting in the capture of John Douglas of Balveny. He is surely related to other Turnbulls who were named (Stephen and John, who directly follow him, or Richard), but it is unclear how. He is recorded as ‘Andreas Turnebule’. It is possible he is the same as Andrew of Dryden. Andrew (15th C.) witness to the sasine of 1488 in which Girnwood (i.e. Girnwood) and the Lyne were leased by Robert Scott of Allanhaugh. He is recorded as being ‘of Hawick’ and Thomas of Stouslie was another witness. It is possible he is the same man as Andrew of Stouslie. Andrew (15th C.) one of the witnesses to the 1490 sasine in which Robert Scott purchased a ‘tenement’ of land in Hawick from Robert Cessford. He is described as ‘Andrew Turnbule of Stowisle’, which is presumably Stouslie. He must be related to the Thomas of Stouslie recorded in 1488. Andrew (15th C.) recorded at the 1493 Justice-ai-re in Jedburgh as being at Bonchester. George, son of Walter in Bonchester, was surety for him, and he also served as surety for himself, being fined for non-appearance. Andrew of Dryden (15th C.) recorded as being ‘of Dridane’ in 1494/5 when his son Alexander had a remission for raids on Ker at Fastheugh and Midlemas at Ploro. He was also recorded in that same year when his son John was named among men who John Scott of Deloraine was accused of associating with. This is probably the Dryden in upper Teviotdale. He was surely related to John of Dryden, recorded in 1498, and probably a descendant of the earlier Andrew of Dryden. Andrew (15th C.) recorded as being called ‘calvus’ (i.e. ‘bald’) in 1494/5 when he had remission for burning and stealing from Fastheugh, for resetting the ‘Traitors of Levyn’ (i.e. Englishmen) and helping them in a raid on Hangingshaw. The Laird of Whithope acted as surety. Andrew (15th/16th C.) tenant at Gatehousecote. In 1502 he was among the men who were put to the horn for involvement in the murder of Robert Oliver. The person called to enter him was George of Hallrule, while John and William in Gatehousecote were also mentioned and so surely related. Presumably the same Andrew in Gatehousecote is also listed on the 1516 remission that a number of Turnbulls had for assisting Alexander, Lord Home. His brother William is also listed, as well as Thomas, Patrick and David, who were also at Gatehousecote, and so possibly related. Andrew (15th/16th C.) recorded as tenant in Bedrule in 1502, when he was listed among Turnbulls and others who failed to appear in court to answer to the charge of murdering Robert Oliver. Andrew in Gatehousecote was listed separately and hence was a different man. It is unclear how he might have been related to Thomas, Laird of Bedrule at the time. His surety was Mark Ker of Dolphinton. Also in 1502 he was ‘in bethroull’ when he served as surety for David, brother of the Laird of Bedrule at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. Andrew (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 he was among the men who were put to the horn for involvement in the murder of Robert Oliver. The person called to enter him was Mark Ker of Dolphinton. He was separate from Andrew in Gatehousecote and Andrew in Bedrule, who were also listed. Andrew (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Sir Andrew’, chaplain, in 1512 when he was witness to a charter where Roger Langlands of Wilton sold Mervinslaw to William Inglis of Langlandshill. He was thus probably the Chaplain of Wilton. Possibly the same ‘Sir Andrew’ was witness to a document at Kelso Abbey in about 1520. Andrew (15th/16th C.) listed as tenant of Fulton in 1516, along with Adam and George (hence possibly his brothers). They were among Turnbulls to receive remission for their part in assisting Alexander, Lord Home. Andrew (15th/16th C.) tenant at Overchester, listed in the 1516 pardon that many Turnbulls had for involvement with the traitorous Homes. His son Thomas was also listed. Other tenants there were Mark, Archibald, Mark younger, Richard, David and Ninian.

Andrew (15th/16th C.) brother of David, tenant of Hassendeanbank. He is on the 1516 remission for Turnbulls and others who may have assisted the Homes. Andrew (15th/16th C.) tenant at Rule, listed in the 1516 remission for several Turnbells for providing assistance to Alexander, Lord Home in plotting against the King. Ninian was also a tenant there, so possibly related. Andrew (d.bef. 1535) recorded in 1535 as ‘Andree alias Daud Turnbull’ in the trial of Robert Scott of Allanhaugh. Along with Thomas, he was tenant in Town-of-Rule and said to have been cruelly killed by Scott and the men he brought in from Liddesdale. Andrew (16th C.) recorded as being ‘in Hornishill’ (presumably Hornshole) in 1562/3 when Alexander Lord Home tried to have several men removed as ‘pretended tenants’ from the local lands for which he was superior. He may be related to other Turnbulls who were connected with this place. Andrew (16th C.) tenant of Gavin of Elliot of Falnash in 1569. Elliot acted as cautioner for his tenants at a meeting in Hawick, assuring that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. His name is recorded as ‘Andro’, and he is listed after George, to whom he was surely related. Andrew ‘Dand’ (16th C.) son of Eckie (i.e. Hector) of Belses. In 1580 he, his father, and his father’s brother-in-law Patrick Richardson were accused by Jean Hepburn, Lady Wedderburn, of murdering her husband John Hamilton and were denounced as rebels. In a separate record of 1580, he was convicted, along with John Young ‘in the Cames’ of murdering and stealing from John Hamilton of ‘Benestoun’. Young was hanged, but being still a minor he was delivered to Andrew Lindsay to be kept in ward. His name is given as ‘Andro Turnbull’ and also as ‘Dand Turnbull, sone naturall’ to Hector. Andrew (16th C.) son of David of Wauchope. He is recorded in a charter of 1567 when the lands of Templehall and Brewwlands were feued to him by the superior James Sandilands (Lord Torphichen) on resignation by Agnes Turnbull and her husband Thomas Home. The feu was extended to his nieces Jean and Beatrix Turnbull in 1604, daughter of his brother Walter of Templehall. Andrew ‘Spangand Andro’ (16th C.) listed as one of the 10 men accused in 1581 of the murder of Walter, son of Wat Turnbull of Bewlie. His nickname may refer to ‘springing’ an arrow. There is no information about which branch of the Turnbulls he belonged to. Andrew (16th C.) tenant in ‘Yatton Scott’, listed in 1581 (along with Adam of the same place) among 10 men accused of the murder of Walter, son of Wat Turnbull of Bewlie. It is unclear where this location was, but presumably in Rulewater. Andrew (16th C.) son of John of Philiphaugh and brother of Mark. In 1579/80 he was brother to Mark, ‘apparent heir of Philiphauch’, when he witnessed a transaction involving land in Lilliesleaf. Also in 1570/80 he was son of John of Philiphaugh when he witnessed a promise and brother of Mark when he witnessed another declaration. Sir Andrew of Bedrule, ‘Auld Bedrule’ (16th C.) mentioned in the ‘Raid of the Redeswire’, so presumably Laird in the late 1500s. However, his relationship with other near contemporary Lairds of Bedrule is unclear, and it is possible that he never existed – ‘But little harness had we there; But auld Badreule had on a jack, And did right weel, I you declare, With all his Turnbills at his back’ [T]. He was supposed to be such a notorious thief that Home and Kerr refused to sign a bond of alliance with the Turnbells and Rutherfords, claiming that he had stolen cattle from Home of Wedderburn. Andrew ‘Dand’ (16th C.) tenant in Troneyhill. He is recorded in 1576 among a group of Turnbulls and others (from Minto, Bewlie and Kames), who swore not to harm another group of Turnbulls (from Barnhills, Billerwell, Belses and Chesters). Watt from there is also listed and hence surely related. Andrew (16th C.) uncle of William of Barnhills. He is listed in 1584/5 as ‘Andro Turnbull of the Bernhills’ along with his nephews William, Robert, Gavin and Hector, among Borderers who were summoned to appear before the Privy Council. Andrew of Howden (16th C.) listed among the Border Liards who were summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1584/5. His brothers George and Robert are also listed. Probably the same Andrew ‘in Howdene’ is listed in 1579 as a debtor to the deceased James Liddesdale, Burgess of Selkirk. He also witnessed a transaction in Selkirk in 1579/80, along with his brother Robert and was a witness in 1581 and 1582. Andrew ‘Andro’ (d.1601) brother of Robert of Bewlie and probably son of Walter. He was probably among the group of Turnbulls accused of harassing the widow and children of the murdered Walter Turnbull of Rawflat in 1581. He was beheaded at the Market Cross of Edinburgh for his role in the murder of Thomas Ker and George Glaidner in Jedburgh. This was part of a feud between Turnbulls and Kerrs, in which 30 ‘Turnbells and associates attacked specific Kerrs on Jedburgh Fair Day, perhaps in retaliation for the earlier murder of Henry Oliver.
He lost ‘the lytill fingar of his left hand’ in the fight. The court case was long and complicated, and it seems that the legal system was stacked in favour of the Kerrs. Andrew (16th/17th C.) brother of Adam of Bilerwell. In 1606 he was one of the Turnbulls accused of raiding and burning Appotside and Harwood in the period 1598–1605. However, the case against him and some of the others was dropped, with the main Turnbulls of Wauchope being pursued instead. Andrew (16th/17th C.) heir to Hector of Stonedge. In 1610 he is recorded in a legal dispute with Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst, Adam Turnbull of Abbotrule and others for having their animals graze his lands at Stonedge and Harwoodtown. In 1611 he was ‘Andro Turnbull of Stanielege’ when John Riddell, younger of that ilk was cautions for him in Jedburgh Court.

Andrew (16th/17th C.) tenant in Bonchester. In 1612 he and his sons Thomas and John, along with John ‘in Elscheuch’ complained to the Privy Council that John, Lord Ker of Jedburgh, had unfairly imprisoned them, and they were ordered to be released. He may be the same as one of the other Andrews. Andrew (16th/17th C.) son of Walter of Bedrule, he was also known as David. He was a butcher and Burgess of Jedburgh. In 1616 he had a bond with James ‘called of Bedrule’ (probably his uncle) and Mark in Hartshaugh. In 1619 he witnessed a bond for Walter of Bedrule and George Ker of Cavers Carre. Andrew (d.1622) recorded as ‘Andro in Belsches’ when he was tried for perjury and bribing witnesses Robert Ker, David Turnbull and James Young. They had apparently all lied in a case of theft brought by him against William and Walter Middlemas. He was sentenced to execution in Edinburgh. Andrew of Bewlie (17th C.) married Marion, daughter of Thomas Turnbull of Knowe, according to a marriage contract of 1627. In 1628 there was caution paid for him by Thomas of Knowe to ensure that he did not molest Adam Scott of Burnfoot, Walter Scott of Midshielis, or their tenants and servants. In 1640 he paid off a debt to his stepfather and wife (probably part of the marriage contract). He was recorded as owner of Bewlie, valued at ‘56 bolls victual, half bear meal, bear £6, meal £8 [actually £7] the boll’, corresponding to £364. Either he or his descendant was recorded as Andrew of Bewlie in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls when he paid tax on £367. Andrew (17th C.) owner of lands in Ruecastle in Bedrule Parish. In 1643 his lands were valued at £54. He could be the same as one of the other Andrews. Andrew (17th C.) miller at Appotside Mill. He witnessed a Rulewater sasine of 1654, and may have been related to the Turnbull tenants of Harwood and Templehall who were also witnesses. It is also likely he was related to the man of the same name who was miller at Wollie Mill in the 1680s and 90s. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Hawick who married Janet Miller. Their children included Thomas (b.1648), Isobel (b.1651) and John (b.1654). The witnesses in 1648 were David ‘Badie’ and William Briggs. Andrew (17th C.) mason in Hawick. In 1676 Samuel Newbie was found guilty of assaulting him and another mason, Andrew Wilson. Andrew (d.1691) tenant at ‘Wollie-mill’ (i.e. Wolfelee Mill) in 1684 when his servant John Hall was listed among those declared as fugitives for religious non-conformity. His was one of the oldest gravestones in Hobkirk Kirkyard, the inscription being ‘Here lys Andrew Turnbull, miller in Wollie Mlhn’. His wife Elizabeth Lillie died in 1719. He could have been father of Robert, who was tenant at Wolfelee Mill later. His descendants were tenants of Hallrule Mill for 3 generations. Andrew (17th C.) resident at Hartshaugh in Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Andrew (17th C.) cooper in Hawick, on the 1693/4 subscribers’ list for the new Kirk bell. He was living on the west-side of Hawick, according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. He could be the Andrew, married to Margaret Chisholme, whose children baptised in Hawick included: Robert (b.1670); an unnamed son (b.1676); John (b.1679); Andrew (b.1681); and Walter (b.1686). He could be the Andrew whose son Adam was baptised in Hawick in 1698, with witnesses William Swan and John Turnbull. Andrew (d.c.1688) tenant in Belses whose will was recorded in 1688. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, when it contained Has sendean. In 1681 he married Isobel Scott and their children included: Bessie (b.1681); Janet (b.1684); and Andrew (b.1686). The witnesses in 1686 were George Scott and James (who may have been related to him). Andrew (1667–1747) son of Thomas, he is sometimes described as the last Laird of Bedrule, although he did not actually possess any of the ancestral lands. He farmed at Minto Cleuchhead. He married Jean Scott, who died in 1712, aged 32. He secondly married Agnes Turnbull, and she died in 1732, aged 39. His is the first name included on a memorial tablet to the Turnbulls of Bedrule in Bedrule Kirk. His children with his 1st wife were: Agnes; Thomas, of the Hawick carpet factory; and William tenant of Ancrum Woodhead. And with his second wife: Jean, who died unmarried; Margaret, died aged 16; Helen (Nellie); Stephen; and John. His brother William was probably tenant at Bedrule Mill. Andrew (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living in Denholm in 1702 when he married Helen Paterson. Their children probably included Marion (b.1703). Other possible children are: Jean, daughter of William, who married William Fletcher in Minto in 1732; and Jean, daughter of William, who married Jean Paterson in Minto in 1735. Andrew (17th/18th C.) Hawick mason. He was listed as a mason among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was one of the tradesmen chosen in 1713 by the minister and heritors to report to the Presbytery on the state of the Manse in Hawick. He was also charged with valuing Andrew Rodger’s house for the Kirk Session, perhaps for the same purpose. Around the same time it was presumably the same Andrew who was paid by the Session for erecting a large sign with the name of Betty Thomson, who bequeathed money to the poor of the Parish. In 1715 he was the ‘younger’ mason (suggesting his father was also Andrew) when he witnessed a baptism for mason John. In 1720 he (along with mason John) witnessed a baptism for gardener Andrew Colwart. Either he (or possibly his son) was the mason Andrew whose illegitimate child Andrew, born to Margaret Aitken, was baptised in 1723: the witnesses were merchant James Aitken (probably Margaret’s brother) and Beadle John Scott. In 1725 he witnessed a baptism for John Hardie and Isobel Aitken. He married the same Margaret, youngest daughter to William Aitken (tenant in Hawick) in 1724. He witnessed an irregular marriage between merchant John Scott and Anna Laing in 1724. Along with John (also a mason), he witnessed a baptism for smith William Young in 1725. Also in 1725 he was a candidate for Session Treasurer. Probably the same Andrew, along with mason John, witnessed baptisms for shoemaker Andrew Scott and Janet Turnbull in 1721 and 1726 and for smith Robert Turnbull in 1726. He witnessed a baptism for mason James Harkness in 1742, when he is ‘elder’ and another in 1743 for former Bailie Depute Walter Scott, when he was described as ‘Senior’. He also witnessed a baptism for shoemaker George Gardner in 1743. He was probably related to the earlier mason of the same name, recorded in the 1670s (however, there may be more than 2 generations here). The mason called Andrew who is recorded in the 1740s and 50s seems likely to have been his son. Andrew (17th/18th C.) tenant in Drydenburn. His wife was Helen Beattie and their daughter Helen was born in 1725. Also in 1725 (on the same day) he witnessed a baptism for John Graham in Allanhaugh Mill. Andrew (17th/18th C.) servant of Rev. Robert Cunningham. In 1714 he witnessed a baptism for John Ekron. Andrew (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. In 1725 he witnessed a baptism for weaver James Weens. In 1719 he was described as ‘merchant att ye Damme bridge’ when he married Marion, daughter of gardener James Falsyde. Their children included: James (b.1720); Andrew (b.1721); Margaret (b.1723); Robert (b.1725); James (again, b.1727); and Marion (b.1737). The witnesses in 1721 were baxters William Hodge and William Mitchel and in 1725 were Rev. Charles Telfer and John Scott. Andrew (17th/18th C.) carrier in Hawick. In 1742 he was ‘Elder Carrier’ when he witnessed a baptism for Andrew ‘Younger, Town Post’. He was thus probably father of Hawick’s letter deliverer. Andrew (18th C.) recorded as ‘Town Post’ in 1738 when he witnessed a baptism in Hawick. It is unclear what this meant, but one possibility is that he was a Burgh Officer (since the Town courier seems unlikely). He was also ‘Town Post’ in 1742 when one of his children was baptised. He was additionally ‘younger’ in 1742, suggesting he was son of the ‘elder’ carrier (and not the same as the family of masons). He married Esther Porteous and their son Andrew was baptised in 1742, with witnesses merchant Robert Scott and carrier Andrew ‘Elder’ (presumably his father). Andrew ‘Little Andrew’ (d.1776) mason in Hawick, probably son (or other close relative) of the earlier Andrew. He may be the Andrew ‘jun’ who witnessed baptisms for workman Alexander Burnet in 1738, for shoemaker Thomas Scott and for gardener Robert Kerr in 1742, for weaver John Thorburn in 1757 and for James Dodds in 1758. Perhaps the same man was listed as Andrew ‘senior’, mason, when he witnessed a baptism in 1745. Probably the same Andrew, described as ‘elder’, was paid for fixing part of the steeple of St. Mary’s in 1755. Probably the same Andrew was among the men paid in 1755 ‘for the herd’s house building’. In 1757 and 1765 he witnessed baptisms for glazier William Turnbull and his wife Isobel Turnbull (one of whom was probably his relative). In 1759 he was ‘mason, senior’ when he witnessed a baptism for William Scoon. In 1765 he was ‘Sen’ when he witnessed a baptism (along with glazier William) for James Clerk. He may be the mason of that name who witnessed baptisms for mason Andrew (probably his son) in 1764, 1765 and 1767, as well as for for William Burnet in 1766. Probably the later masons of the same name were his descendants. He is probably the ‘old Mason’ of this name who died in Hawick in 1776. His son Andrew was also a mason, who died in Hawick in 1810. Andrew (18th C.) miller at Mangerton Mill. His wife Agnes Armstrong died in 1757, aged 39 years, and is buried at Etterston. He was probably son of Adam, who was earlier miller of Margerton Mill. Andrew (18th C.) farmer near Hawick. He is recorded in 1789 buying 600 hawthorn plants for a hedge. Andrew (d.1810) mason in Hawick, who was son of Andrew. His father had the nickname ‘Little Andrew’ on the death register. He could have been the mason Andrew recorded earlier in the 18th century, but there is likely to have been another generation there. In 1763 he married Agnes Deans, who was also from Hawick Parish; in the record he is described as a mason. She may be the daughter of flesher George Deans born in 1735. Their children included: Andrew (b.1764); Margaret (b.1765); Andrew (again, b.1767); and Nichol (b.1769). The witnesses in 1764 were Andrew (probably his father) and Robert Thorburn and in both 1765 and 1767 were Andrew (again) and George Deans (probably his wife’s father or brother). He is probably also the Andrew who witnessed a baptism for George Deans (probably his brother-in-law) and the mason Andrew who witnessed another for William Philip, both in 1777. He is probably the deceased mason whose daughter Janet died in 1811. Andrew (18th C.) married Beatrice Turnbull (both from Hawick Parish) in 1761. He may be the same as one of the other Turnbulls. Andrew (d.bef. 1811) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1811 it is recorded that his daughter ‘Menie’ (probably Wilhelmina) ‘Burnt to Death’. He is probably the same as one of the other Andrews. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Margaret Veitch. Their children included Andrew (b.1770). Andrew (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their children included Alison (b.1777); Mary (b.1780); and Agnes (b.1786). He is probably the man recorded as ‘Anne’, married to Margaret Scott, whose son Walter was baptised in 1772, with witnesses merchants Andrew and Walter (possible relatives). He is probably the Andrew whose daughter ‘Ailey’ died in 1776. Andrew (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Hislop and their children included: Thomas (b.1806); Janet (b.1808); Margaret (b.1810); William (b.1812); Oliver (b.1816); and Isabella (b.1817). The witnesses in 1808, 1810 and 1812 were wright William Hislop and Janet Paisley; these 3 baptismal entries were recorded together, suggesting that the family were members of one of the secession churches. Andrew (18th/19th C.) hosier manufacter based on the High Street, recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He may be the stocking-maker called Andrew whose young daughter died in Hawick in 1823. He may also be the stocking-maker whose ‘bastard’ child died in Hawick in 1800. Andrew (1795/6–1827) from Jedburgh, he was Procurator Fiscal for Roxburghshire. He is recorded in letters of 1826 and 1827 preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. He married Isabella Mein, who died in 1833, aged 35. Andrew (18th/19th C.) grocer and spirit dealer on the High Street, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. Anna (17th C.) served heir to her brother James of Wauchope in 1674. Anne (b.1812/3) sewing teacher in Minto Parish. In 1841 and 1851 she was living in Minto village with her mother Jane and brothers John and William, who were agricultural labourers. In 1861 she was ‘Annie’, living with her brother John. Anthony of Knowe (18th C.) probably son of Thomas. He became a Burgess of Selkirk in 1712 when he was ‘younger of Knowe’. In 1737 he was the ruling elder of Jedburgh Presbytery at the 1737 General Assembly. He is recorded in a discharge of 1741 for rents paid to Thomas Thomson and in a bill dispute in 1743 with Walter Scott, late of Cockernheugh. In 1741 he witnessed the baptism of Walter Scott, last of Crumhaugh. He paid the window tax in Minto Parish in 1748. Letters of 1748 exists that he wrote to William Elliot of Wolfelee (lawyer in Edinburgh) concerning rents at Huntlaw and in Selkirk. He was probably succeeded by Thomas, who was probably his son, making Thomas’s sister Isabella his daughter. Anthony of Tofts (d.1811) recorded as owner of Tofts in 1788. These lands in Kirkton Parish were valued at £300, and still listed being owned by him in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1813. He is listed among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. It is unclear how he was related to earlier Turnbulls of Tofts. He is probably the ‘Laird of Tofts’ whose brother Alexander died in Hawick in 1810. His own death is also recorded.
in Hawick. Archibald (15th C.) part of the ‘return of inquest’ for Ker of Altonburn in 1438. It is unclear which branch of the Turnbulls he belonged to, but he is listed right before Lawrence, and John of Fulton is also mentioned. Archibald (15th/16th C.) son of the deceased John, he is recorded in 1499 along with William of Minto having remission from the Privy Council for the murder of ‘Johne of Rutherfurde’ and for fleeing to England. Archibald (15th/16th C.) brother of Mark, who was tenant in Overchester. They were listed among several Turnbulls who had remission in 1516 for assisting the Homes against the King. Archibald (15th/16th C.) witness to the sasine for Wolfelee in 1522. Hector is listed before him and possibly related. Archibald (16th C.) occupier of land in Ednholm in 1535, along with William Davidson and James Hobkirk. These lands were inherited by Janet Scott, widow of Walter Scott. Archibald ‘Airchie’ (16th C.) son and heir of Wat of ‘Howatt’. This seems likely to be Howa in Hobkirk Parish. In 1553/4 he pledge for his father, as part of an assurance given by the Rutherfords and Turnbulls. His son George was recorded in the inventory of goods and finances for Mark Ker of Kippiew (1579). Archibald ‘Airchie’ (16th C.) son of Thomas in Hartshaugh. In 1567 Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst was ordered to present him to answer changes of raiding into England. Archibald (16th C.) recorded in 1586 as proprietor of the family grocer’s business at 51 High Street. His son John took over the business after he fell seriously ill. Bartholomew (15th/16th C.) tenant at Rawflat in 1502 when he (along with George of Hallrule) was surety for Adam, in Hornshole and Chamberlain Newton. Possibly the same ‘Bertholomeum Trumbull’ was on the 1508 panel for Adam Helpburn inheriting the Lordship of Liddesdale. Beatrice (1908–86) wife of Sir Richard, born in Armadale and died in Jedburgh. She is buried in Bedrule churchyard. Beatrix (16th/17th C.) daughter of Walter of Templehall (also called ‘Wat o Wauchope’). Along with her sister Jean she inherited the lands of Templehall and Brewoods (in Rulewater) from her uncle Andrew (son of David of Wauchope). In 1605 she was represented by her ‘tutor’ George Turnbull, suggesting she was still a minor at this point. In 1632 she claimed the other half of the lands that had belonged to her by then deceased sister. Charles (b.1736) son of Robert and Euphan Douglas, born in Cavers Parish. He lived in both Wilton and Hawick, working as a gardener. He married Elizabeth Scott and their children included: Euphan (b.1761); Robert and an unnamed child (b.1764); Elizabeth (b.1766); Janet (b.1768); and Helen (b.1770). The witness in 1678 were Robert Scott (probably a relative of his wife) and Alexander Bunyan. His wife may be the ‘Lizzy’, spouse of Charles ‘now in America’, who died in Hawick in 1809. Charles (b.1809/10) from Denholm, he was a joiner in Hawick. He lived at about 20 Kirk Wynd in 1841 and 1851, moving later to Drumlanrig Place. His wife was Isabella and their children included Thomas, Euphemia, Jane, Charles, Mary, Jessie and Isabella. Charles ‘Charlie’ (1939–2019) born at Crown Lane, son of baker George. He started his 60 year association with the Scouting movement in 1945 and joined the pipe band at the age of 12. He enlisted in the Royal Marines at the age of 18, serving for 19 years and being Pipe Major of the regimental band. He lived in Portsmouth for many years, but returned to Hawick to take over his father's 2 bakery shops. He renewed his association with the Hawick Scouts and was their band's Pipe Major 1975–2005. He wrote a history of the band for their 100th anniversary in 2017. He married Elizabeth Hunt and later Frances Scott, and had 5 sons. Christian (17th C.) resident of Ashybank who was listed in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Christian (b.1805) daughter of Thomas and Mary Oliver. She is recorded along with Eleanor in Pigot’s 1837 directory as milliners and dressmakers on the High Street. She and her sister Esther were living with their mother Mary on Buccleuch Street in 1841. In 1851 she was a ‘Woollen Seamstress & An-nuant’ living on Allars Crescent. Cock (15th C.) son of John in Tofts. He was recorded at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1493 when he had remission for stealing an ox belonging to William Rennie (or perhaps Rae), from the house of Robert Aitkin in Minto. His surety was John, who may be the same man as his father. His name is given as ‘Cok turnbule’, but it is unclear if ‘Cock’ was a nickname or a short form of a fore-name. In 1494/5 Walter Rutherford was allowed to compone for several crimes, including assisting and resetting him after this same theft from Minto. Probably the same Cock ‘of Fulton’ was recorded in 1494/5 when George Shiel in Bedrule had remission for stealing and ox of his. Colin (1975–6– ) played football with the Legion and rugby with the P.S.A. and the Harlequins before debuting for Hawick R.F.C. at the age of 19. He also played for the South of Scotland and professionally for the Border Reivers, as well as for club sides in New Zealand, Australia and Canada. He moved to County Durham and works as a kitchen fitter. Cuthbert (d.bef. 1530) recorded as already deceased in 1530 when his tenement of land in Selkirk is mentioned in relation to lands of Patrick Murray of Falahill. He witnessed a document in Selkirk in 1496. He may be the Cuthbert recorded in 1579 as once being owner of land in Selkirk, which later was owned by his daughter Janet, who married Cuthbert Brydon. David (15th C.) part of a ‘retour of inquest’ for the lands of Eilrig in 1426 and for the Barony of Hawick in 1427. Perhaps the same David was on a retour in 1439 for Douglas of Bonixedward. It is unclear how he was related to other contemporary Turnbells. David (15th C.) witness to a sasine in 1484/5 for lands in Mangerton, involving the Scotts of Brauxholme. 2 other signatories were Turnbells of Rule Water. He may be the ‘Dauid Trumbull’ who was among the witnessed for the last will of Sir David Scott of Brauxholme in 1491/2 (and possibly the David who received 10 sheep in the will). Perhaps the same David was listed among men of Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5; he was explicit-ly listed with George of Hawick. He may be the same as ‘David Trumbull with George Trumbull’ listed along with a large number of men from Liddesdale and elsewhere pledging good behaviour to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell in 1498. It is possible that he is the same as David of Wauchope. David (15th C.) son of the Laird of Whithope, probably the one in the Borthwick valley (where Philip, son of William was recorded 40 years earlier). In 1494/5 he was recorded as being ‘in Ernheuch’ (probably adjacent to Singlie in the Ettrick valley) when he had remission for stealing 14 ewes from Ninian Murray at Kershope and for stealing a white horse from Thomas Forest at Innerleithen; his surety was Walter Scott of Tushielaw. Philip in Whithope was recorded in 1502, and may have been his son or brother. He was probably related to the John of Ern Cleuch recorded in 1464/5. David (15th C.) recorded being ‘In hoscot[i]s’ (i.e. Hoscote) in the 1494/5 Justice-aire. In the accounts for the court held in Selkirk he contributed 1 horse. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Davids. David (15th/16th C.) listed in the 1501 Exchequer Rolls, along with Robert, 2 Johns, Ninian and George. Their £40 fine was granted to Thomas, son and heir of George of Bedrule. He could be the same as one of the contemporary Davids. David (15th/16th C.) brother of the Laird of Bedrule (probably Thomas). He is recorded in 1502 at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh when Andrew in Bedrule was surety for him (and he was additionally surety for himself), but fined for non-appearance. David of Bonchester (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 when David Scott (called ‘Lady’) in Stirkshaws had a remission for several crimes, including being part of a raid with him on the farms at Minto Craigend. Other participants of the raid were Archibald Armstrong, Ninian Armstrong and ‘other Traitors of Levin and Liddalisdale’. They burned the farms, including 7 horses (presumably in a barn), as well as stealing 16 oxen and cows, 4 horses and sundry other goods. Perhaps the same David ‘in bonechestir’ was mentioned in 1493 as surety for George Turnbull (there and in Stousslie), who was fined for his non-appearance. He was surely related to the John in Nether Bongeche, who is recorded in 1494/5. Probably the same David ‘in bonechestir’ was recorded in 1502 among many Turnbulls and others who were declared as fugitives for their part in the murder of Robert Oliver. The people who were supposed to enter him into the court were George of Hallrule and Robert Elliot in Redheugh, who were fined for his non-appearance. William in Bongeche was also recorded in the same 1502 case, as well as William’s son Lawrence, and were presumably related. David (15th/16th C.) tenant in Carlinpool in 1502 when he and Philip Turnbull in Whithope had remission for bringing in the ‘Traitors of Levin’ to raid Fastheugh and Hanginshaw. Their sureties were John in Dryden and Alexander in Commonside. David (15th/16th C.) listed as witness to a charter signed in Edinburgh in 1506. He may be the same as one of the other Davids. David of Wauchope (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 when the Laird of Cranston was fined for failing to arrest him. Also in 1502 he served as surety for several men at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh, including George called ‘Hawick’, Thomas Dunbar and himself. He is also listed in 1504 among men who were given remission for involvement in the murder of Thomas Rutherford in Jedburgh Abbey; David, listed after him, may have been his son. He is also recorded in 1508 as ‘David Trumbull de Wauchhop’ when he was on the panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting the Lordship of Liddesdale. He may be the same Laird of Wauchhope who was injured by an arrow at the skirmish at Slaterford in 1513. He probably had a son of the same name, since David of Wauchope is recorded in 1530 and 1567. David (15th/16th C.) tenant of Hassendeanbank recorded on the 1516 list of Turnbulls and others who had remission for any part in assisting Alexander, Lord Home. His brother Andrew is also listed. David (15th/16th C.) tenant in Overchester, listed among many Turnbulls who had remission in 1516 for assisting the Homes against the King. Several other Turnbulls are also listed there, and so probably related, with Mark apparently the main tenant, and William and John his sons. David (15th/16th C.) tenant at Gatehousecote, listed in the 1516 pardon that many Turnbulls had for involvement with the traitorous Homes. Other tenants there were Andrew and his brother William, as well as Thomas and Patrick. David of Wauchope (16th C.) denounced as a rebel in 1530, along with Walter Turnbull of ‘Howay’, Philip Nesbit of that Ilk, Robert Haig of Bemersyde and others. He is recorded in 1549 when his brother Hector was granted 2 husband lands in Appitreehall by Robert Scott of Howpasil. In 1551 he signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’. In 1553/4 he was listed among the Rutherfords and others in an assurance not to harm the Kers. Thomas (possibly his brother or other close relative) was pledge for him in 1553/4. Also in 1553/4 he was on the panel for Sir Walter Scott inheriting his grandfather’s lands of Branxholme and Buccleuch. Around the late 1550s he was one of the men on the panel to resolve the conflict over the lands of Newbigging (in Hassendean) between the children of Gavin Elliot of Horsleyhill. He is probably the David of Wauchope among those who appeared before the Queen in 1561, promising to provide lists of thieves and then required by the Queen to appear later in Jedburgh to answer for their failure to apprehend fugitives; his brother Thomas also appeared. In 1564 he is probably the ‘Lard of Wauchop’ listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. He is probably the same David who was recorded in 1567 when his son Andrew was granted the lands of Templehall and Braewoods in Rulewater; another son, Robert, was a witness to the charter. He is probably the David of Wauchope whose brother Walter of Hobbsburn is listed among men ordered to appear in 1567 to answer accusations of raiding into England; he was also ordered to appear himself and to present his ‘man and servand’ Adam Lyle, while another brother of his, Thomas of Harwoodtown, was also instructed to present a servant. He signed the ‘Band of Roxburgh’ in 1573 along with his son and heir Hector, both ‘with our handis at the pen’. His son and heir Hector is recorded in 1572/3, when he swore allegiance to the Crown. David (16th C.) tenant in the farm of Rouchhope according to a rental roll of 1541. Perhaps the same David was also tenant in the neighbouring farms of Wauchopehead and Wauchopebank. It is possible he is the same as one of the other contemporary Davids, perhaps even David of Wauchope. David (d.1576/7) presented to the Parish of Hobkirk in 1550, replacing James Bennet as priest there. He was referred to as ‘Sir’ David of Minto in 1569, when he was among a number of Borders clerics who were called before the Regent and Privy Council for adhering to pre-Reformation sacraments. He was recorded as the deceased Sir David in about 1577 when John Douglas replaced him as Vicar of Hobkirk. His designation ‘in Minto’ when he was called before the Privy Council suggests that he was from the family of Turnbuls of Minto (rather than being minister at Minto). David (16th C.) recorded being ‘called David of Crawden’ in 1583/4 when he was listed among some Borderers denounced for failing to appear before the Privy Council. David (16th C.) tenant in Belses. He was listed along with his brother George among a group of Turnbuls accused of performing a raid into England in 1579. He was also leader of a group of Turnbuls who attacked the farm of Rawflat in 1581, killing Walter of Rawflat there. The others in the group were his brothers George, John and Adam, as well as Thomas of Billerwell; the complaint was made again by the widow of Walter of Rawflat in 1583. George was in 1603 found guilty of several related crimes. This was all presumably part of some family feud. David (16th C.) listed among the Turnbuls who were accused of harassing the widow and children of the murdered Walter Turnbull of Rawflat in 1581. He is transcribed as being ‘of the Cronyhill’, which was probably Troneyhill (and hence he may have been son of Thomas of Troneyhill). Failing to appear before the Privy Council, he was denounced as a rebel in 1583 (mis-transcribed as ‘Andro Turnebill in Cronyhill’ in part of the citation). His son Thomas was listed in 1610 amongst Turnbuls who were to be apprehended for not finding caution following being found guilty of the murder of Thomas Ker of Crailinghall and 6 Grahamslaw brothers. David of Wauchope (d.1598) son and heir of Hector of Wauchope. He married Margaret, daughter of James Gledstains of Cocklaw in 1593 (not 1567 as recorded in Tancred’s ‘Rulewater’). He may be the unnamed Turnbull of Wauchope who was on the 1584/5 list of Borderers summoned to appear before the Privy Council in order to keep peace on the Border. He and his bride were infested in the lands of Langhaugh in Rulewater. He appears to have owned the lands of Wauchope still in 1604 when his son Andrew’s nieces inherited Templehall and Brewlands to the west of Wauchope. He was probably the same David of Wauchope who was slaughtered near his house in 1598, with his neighbour James Lorraine of Appotside being one of those implicated, along with Gilbert and Hector, uncles of Hector Lorraine of Harwood. David (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘in Fowltoon’ in a letter of 1602 listing the tenants of the lands of Fulton in Bedrule Parish. Other tenants of Fulton farm were Pate Clerk, Walter Turnbull, David Turnbull (son of Adam), Willie Turnbull (the ‘Guidman’) and Thomas Turnbull. David (16th/17th C.) tenant in Mackside. In 1611 his son ‘Hob’ was convicted and executed in Jedburgh. David (16th/17th C.) brother of Robert, who was tenant in Denesyde. In 1611 his brother acted as cautioner for his appearance in court in Jedburgh. David (16th/17th C.) tenant in Lustruther. In 1622 he was found guilty of perjury, apparently having been bribed by Andrew in Belses to lie in the case of theft he brought against William and Walter Middlemas. He was sentenced to have his ‘toung pearcet with ane hett boitkyn; and thaireftir Banischet this realme’. David (17th C.) tenant of Unthank in Hobkirk Parish, along with Robert, recorded in 1643. They were probably related to the earlier Archibald. David (17th C.) recorded in 1643 along with Adam as owner of land in Abbotrule valued at £30. This was probably part of Bonchester Townhead, where a separate Adam, as well as William, also lived. David ‘Millinaire Turnbull’ (18th/19th C.) younger son of Thomas of Fenwick and Brieryyards. He left for India in 1799 as part of the medical service, became an indigo planter there and also speculated in cotton. In 1818 he was a civil assistant surgeon at Mirzapore, but retired some time after that. His nickname came from the large fortune he made in India as an indigo planter and cotton speculator. His son was William, who became Deputy Lieutenant for Selkirkshire and inherited Fenwick from his cousin. He died in India, during his father’s lifetime (probably 1820s). David of Fenwick and Brieryyards (b.1837) son of William. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1875. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1878. He was involved with the Upper Teviotdale Fisheries Association in the 1880s. He succeeded to all of the family lands in 1891 (except Palace, which had been sold). He had the house at Brieryyards renovated. However, he later sold all his property and left the country. In 1875 he married Christian, daughter of Hawick lawyer George Oliver. They had 1 daughter and 6 sons: William, who worked in the nitrate business in Chile and married Marie Salmon; David Oliver, a vet in Zomba, Nyasaland, who married Muriel MacKinnon; Margaret Lindsay, who married Hal Worke and had a son who went to British Columbia; George Archibald, who worked for the Cape Civil Service and was killed in the Boer War; Harry, who married Flossie Salmon; John MacLeod MacKinnon, who worked for the South African Forestry Service and wrote for Cornhill magazine; and James, who married Violet MacKinnon and died in East South Africa in WWI. Ebenezer (19th C.) recorded in 1837 as an apprentice to James Wilson, writer in Hawick. He could be the Ebenezer whose infant daughter’s death was recorded in Hawick in 1822. Edward (15th C.) resident of Bedrule. In 1493 he had remission for stealing a cow from Robert Davidson in Newton, with the Laird of Bedrule acting as surety. Eleanor (1785–1853) daughter of William of Burnfoot. She lived at 5 Slitrig Bank with her younger sister Jane. In 1851 she was described as an ‘Annuitant’, showing that she had been set up with an allowance from her father. Elizabeth (15th/16th C.) received sasine of the lands of Lanton in Roxburghshire in 1506. This was along with Margaret, who was probably her sister. Elizabeth (15th/16th C.) had a sasine for Gargunnock and other lands in Stirlingshier, along with Janet (perhaps her sister). Elizabeth (16th C.) resident at Haining Castle in 1580 when an inventory of her possessions was recorded. Robert Scott of Haining and his wife Janet Scott were her executors, and she left everything to them, except for a gown and ‘paitlot’ to be given to each of her daughters when they came of age, plus a share of her goods, at the discretion of her executors. It seems likely that she was the mother or stepmother of Robert Scott of Haining and hence wife of Thomas Scott of Haining). Her goods (some in the houses of other people) included several gowns and petticoats, a feather bed, a bolster, several pairs of sheets, blankets, towels, cushions, curtains, and some gold jewellery. She also had debts owing from Grizel Scott, Lady Borthwick, from William Crichton in Fala, from Patrick Murray of Falkhill, from John, son to Patrick Turnbull, and from several people in Cranston. Elizabeth nee Elliot (16th/17th C.) daughter of Gilbert Elliott of Stobs, she married John Turnbull of Minto. Her husband died in 1641 while on army service in Newcastle, and her son John succeeded while still a minor. She and her brother-in-law Rev. William of Makerstoun appear to have acted as guardians for the young Laird of Minto; in 1643 she was listed along with her son and Rev. William as owner of the Minto estate. Other children of hers included William and Robert, who became merchants’ apprentices in Edinburgh in 1650 and 1651, respectively, and probably Alison, who married William Douglas of Timpendean in 1655. Elizabeth (d.1698) resident of Minto Parish, possibly related to the Turnbulls of Minto or of Knowe, who are buried there. Her small headstone marked ‘Besie Turnbul’ is still in the old graveyard, but her husband’s name is illegible. Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (17th C.) cottar at Horsleyhill according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (b.c.1770) listed as a flesher in Denholm on Pigot’s 1837 directory. She was living on Main Street in 1841, with surname Leyden, with Robert Laidlaw (probably her grandson) being a flesher. Elizabeth nee Wilson (1753–1828) eldest daughter of Walter Wilson, ‘Haunless Wat’. She married draper George Turnbull and worked in the draper’s shop at 14 High Street. She is said to have ahd 15 children, 10 of whom survived infancy. Several of her children died of consumption, and it is said that ‘when the last one was reported to her as being about to die, she would not even go to visit the sick one, so much had her motherly instincts been blunted by the constant visit of death to her children’. She was known in later life as ‘Auld Betty Turnbull’. Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (19th C.) daughter of inn-keeper John. She took over as Bonchester post-mistress from her brother John and also ran the public house at Bridgend after her father died in 1838. However she soon afterwards moved to another public house in Moffat. Elliot (b.1794/5–1857) labourer living at Whisgills Edge in Castleton Parish in 1841. By 1851 he was living near Canonbie and farming 3 acres. He may be the man of that name listed at ‘Sorbies’ in 1821 among the subscribers to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’. He married Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’), who died in 1873, aged 62. Their children included: Betty; Janet; Elspeth; Robert; Agnes (1847/8–1900), who died at Newcastle; and Mary (1851/2–97), who died at Southfield. He died at Gillfoot and his wife in Newcastle. The family are buried at Ettleton. Elspeth (17th C.) servant to Bailie Scott of Ormiston. In 1683 she was struck by stones thrown across the Teviot by a group of men, wounding her, when she and Isabel Hardie (daughter to cooper Robert Hardie) were watching linen clothing that was being bleached there. Elspeth (17th C.) tenant in Flatt in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Elspeth (19th C.) listed as a straw hat maker in Newcastle on Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 she was living in the house of Rev. John Black. Esther (b.1809) daughter of Thomas and Mary Oliver. She is recorded along with Christian in Pigot’s 1837 directory as milliners and dressmakers on the High Street.

Street. She and her sister Christian were living with their mother Mary on Buccleuch Street in 1841. In 1851 she was a ‘Woolen Seamstress & Annuitant’ living on Allars Crescent, in a separate household to her older sister. Fergus (15th/16th C.) tenant of Hillhouse, listed after James, also there, in the 1516 pardon for Turnbulls who might have assisted the Homes in actions against the King. This is not a common local name. Francis (b.1700/1) Burgh Officer of Hawick. He gave evidence during proceedings for the Division of the Common in 1767, when he was described as being married. He was also a Burgess, on which account his evidence was objected to by the Duke of Buccleuch’s lawyers. He became a Burgh Officer in 1733, and remained until at least 1767. He described how he and fellow Officer John Stewart once managed to drive cattle belonging to neighbouring tenants (which were being pastured on the Common, against the orders of the Magistrates) to the West Port; this was probably around 1743. He was recorded as ‘Town Officer’ in a baptismal record of 1743. In 1753 he was one of the 2 Burgh Officers who were granted a yearly salary of 10 shillings ‘on account of their age and infirmity’. He may be the Francis, son of William, born in Hawick in 1703. He married Elizabeth Gibson and their children baptised in Hawick, included: Isobel (b.1732); Isobel (again, b.1739); James (b.1740); and Gideon (b.1743). The witnesses in 1743 were Bailie Gideon Ruecastle and shoemaker John Scott. Francis (18th/19th C.) mason at Yethouse. He was among the subscribers to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’. At Yethouse in 1841 were Janet Brydon (aged about 70) and mason Francis (aged about 40), who were probably his widow and son. Francis (b.1797/8) stone mason at Yethouse. His mother was probably Elizabeth Brydon, who was there in 1841. It seems likely that his father was Francis, the mason at Yethouse recorded in 1821. He was still at Yethouse in 1851, but by 1861 his name appears as Francis Armstrong. Francis ‘Frank’ (19th C.) shepherd at a farm near Saughtree. He was a collector of local antiquities, including coins, flints, an iron sword, which were examined by the Berwickshire Naturalists’ Club when they visited in 1889. Gavin (16th C.) listed along with Adam in 1534 when they were entered into ward in Blackness Castle, with Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme being discharged of the bond he had made to the King for their good behaviour. It seems likely they were either father and son or brothers, but it is not clear where they were from exactly. Gavin (16th C.) recorded as ‘Gawenn Trumble of the Wowley’ among men complained about by the English Warden for a raid into England in 1587. The other men named included James of Stonedge as well as Oliver of Westerhouses. He presumably lived at Wolfelee in Rulewater. Gavin (16th C.) recorded as ‘called of Bullerwell’ when he witnessed a marriage contract between Gledstains of Cocklaw and Turnbull of Wauchope in 1593. The designation suggests that he no longer resided at Billerwell. He must have been related to the slightly earlier and late Adams. He may be the same ‘Gawin Turnbull in Bullerwall’ listed in a court case of 1605. Gavin in Howa (16th/17th C.) brother of Robert in Hallrule and Hector in Stanedge, as well as uncle of Hector of Barnhills. He is recorded in 1604, along with his nephews Hector and George, as well as Hector of Stanedge, being tried for the murder of 6 sons of John Grahamslaw of Little Newton. In 1606 he is recorded as ‘Gawin Turnbull in Howe’, brother of Hector in Stanedge and the deceased Robert in Hallrule, when there was a summons for them to prosecute the sons of Harry Grahamslaw who had been accused of the murder of Robert in Hallrule. There was clearly an ongoing feud between the 2 families. He is probably the ‘Gawen’, brother of William of Barnhills, who is listed among the Borderers summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1584/5. Gavin (16th/17th C.) son of the Laird of Bedrule. He is listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a Borders Commissioners’ court in Jedburgh in 1605. Gavin (17th C.) recorded in 1643 as owner of lands in ‘…side’ in Abbotrule Parish. This was probably Mackside, with his land being valued at £24. He may have been related to the Laird of Tofts, who held the bulk of the property in 1643 as well as £102 worth of land in Minto. Gavin of Clarilaw (17th C.) recorded in a record of 1666 relating to Hassendean Parish. He was also listed in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls for Hassendean Parish, paying tax on £273. He was presumably related to the earlier Hector of Clarilaw. He could be the same Gavin who had a charter for ‘Kerswell’ in Hassendean from the Commendator of Melrose in about 1621. Gavin (17th C.) recorded in Robertson Parish (when it included Hassendean) in 1684. A ‘bastard child’ of his was baptised, with witnesses John, who was surely related, perhaps his father) and Andrew Leyden. Gavin (18th C.) clothier in Hawick. He was listed along with Thomas as witness to a baptism for weaver John Smith in 1764. It seems likely he was either father or brother of Thomas (who was a clothier and dyer, and father of poet Gavin). He may be the Gavin who witnessed a baptism for John Cavers in Wilton in 1769. He and Thomas were witnesses to a baptism for William Thomline (who may have been their employer at Roughheugh Mill) in 1770. It is possible that he was the Gavin, son of William, born in Kirkton Parish in 1731 (but this would be too late if he was indeed the father of Thomas). Gavin (d.c.1800) school friend of John Leyden's. He was the first of his cohort to go off abroad, travelling to India, but dying soon after he arrived. He is mentioned in John Leyden's poem 'To Mr. James Purvis' – 'The first that tried the eastern sea Was Gavin, gentle youth, was he! His yellow locks fann'd by the breeze, Gleam'd golden on the orient seas: But never shall his steps be seen Bounding again on Denholm's pleasant green' [JL]. It is possible that he is the Dr. Gavin who was listed at Wiltonhall (in Wilton Parish) in the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Gavin (1764–1816) born in Hawick, son of 'Tammy Trumble' and Beat- rix Ruecastle. He moved from Hawick when he was about 10, with his father seeking work in factories elsewhere, including Galashiels and being a dyer in a factory in Kilmarnock. Although his parents were once fairly well-off, their circumstances changed and he was forced to abandon his education and become an apprentice in a carpet factory (Gregory & Thomson) in Kilmarnock; he writes of himself that he was 'deprived early in life, by unforeseen misfortunes, of the means of pursuing that liberal plan of education he once had a prospect of'. He was said to be small in stature and of a dark complexion. It is also said that he spent more time thinking about poetry than weaving and as a result lived in poverty in a small garret, where 'the poverty of Burns, of which there has been much talk in the world, was opulence compared to it!' In Kilmarnock he became a friend of Robert Burns (whose poetry style he imitated, and they both had many of the same influences). It has been suggested that he may have told Burns the story of the giant pin of the haggis served at Haggishaa, which inspired the lines in 'Address to a Haggis'. He moved with his family to Glasgow, where he worked as a labourer, and it was there that his first volume of verse was published. He later became an actor with George Sutherland's Company in Dumfries and wrote at least one short play, 'The Recruit'. In Dumfries he became reacquainted with Burns. However, the acting company in Dumfries broke up (at least in part because of it's revolutionary politics, which made it unpopular with the authorities). He married an actress (who appeared with him in 'The Recruit' in 1794) and in 1795 emigrated to America, settling in Charleston, South Carolina. There he joined a theatre company and contributed poems to the local newspapers. He lived in modest addresses in downtown Charleston and taught part time. In 1813 he became an American citizen. He had a brother, Thomas, who also emigrated to America, and has surviving relatives. His publications are 'Poetical Essays' (1788) and 'Poems, by Gavin Turnbull, Comedian' (1794). Many of his verses are elegies and pastorals, in the tradition of the late 18th century, with one known as 'Silvanus, or The Genius of Tiviot' and another ode to the Tweed (as well as several to Irvine Water); however, the most interesting are in Scots dialect and in a similar style to Burns' best-known poetry. Note that the suggested years of his birth are given in some works as being as early as 1758 and as late as 1770, while the year of his death is sometimes suggested to have been much earlier than it was; in fact his death is recorded in a Charleston newspaper in 1816, where he is described as 'late Comedian, whose talents as a performer on the stage, will long be remembered by many of the inhabitants of this city'. Shortly afterwards a notice appeared in a South Carolina newspaper asking for sub- scriptions to a volume of poems to support his widow (however, no such volume ever appeared). The project 'The Collected Poems of Gavin Turnbull Online' was completed in 2015. He is buried in the cemetery of the First Presbyterian Scots Church in Charleston. Gavin (18th/19th C.) res-Parish. George of Bedrule (15th C.) witnessed a charter for Stephen Scott of Castlelaw in 1448. He may have been son of John of Bedrule, who was recorded in 1432. In 1461 he was witness to a sasine for lands near Branxholme, where he is recorded as ‘of Bethroull’; William of Minto was also a witness, so he may have been a close relative. He may be the George who (along with Hector, John and William of Minto) was on the 1464/5 panel to rule on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers. He was also witness to a sasine of Denholm Mains involving the Cranstons in 1465/6. Probably the same George ‘of Bethroull’ witnessed a sasine of 1484/5 for Walter Scott of Branxholme for lands in Mangerton. He may be the George who witnessed a sasine for Wolfelee in 1479. He may be the George ‘de bethroull’ who had remission in 1493 (along with David Waugh, also from Bedrule, and weaver William White), their crimes being stealing cattle from Pringle in Pilmuir, associating with John of Gatehousecote, communing with the ‘traitors of Leven’ and accompanying the former Duke of Albany; his surety was Walter Ker of Cessford, while he himself served as surety for the other 2 men. He may be the Laird of Bedrule who was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1494/5. ‘Thomas turnbule Junior dominus de bethroull’ served as surety for several Turnbulls in 1494/5; this suggests that he was still alive, but perhaps old and infirm, so that his son Thomas was effectively acting as chief of the Turnbulls at that time. He was probably succeeded by his son Thomas, mentioned as his heir apparent in 1501 and already mentioned several times in the previous decade. Thomas had a brother William, who was thus also his son. George (15th/16th C.) infested by Walter Turnbull (probably Baron of Hassendeancbank in the lands of Hassendeancbank in 1493. He may have been a relative of Walter. He was deceased by 1534 when his son an heir John was recorded in 1493 (in the very next case) for crimes before the date of his previous remission. George of Hallrule (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘of Haw of Roull’ when he was witness to a charter of 1484/5, along with George of Bedrule and others. He was appointed as Captain of Hermitage by Patrick Hepburn, Earl of Bothwell, probably around 1492. In 1493 he was ‘de aula de roule’ when he was surety for Archibald Penderleith in Bedrule, as well as Simon in Clarilaw. Also in 1493 he had remission for a series of crimes: stealing sheep from Nettleflat on Gala Water; separately stealing a horse and tools from Nettleflat; plundering from Thomas Rutherford at Bonjedward; and involvement in the slaughter of Archibald Rutherford. His surety was Sir Robert Ker. In 1494/5 he and Patrick Earl of Bothwell (Lord of Liddesdale) were fined £10 Scots for the non-appearance of William Elliot and each of 85 other Borderers; he was there recorded as Captain of Hermitage. Also in 1494/5 he was also surety for Thomas Turnbull in Gatehousecote. He is probably the George ‘in the Hermitage’ who pledged good behaviour to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell in 1498, along with a large number of men from Liddesdale and elsewhere. Probably the same George of ‘Hawroull’ was listed in 1502 among about 20 Turnbulls and others who were fined for failing to appear to answer for the murder of Robert Oliver; he was supposed to enter into the court John, Andrew and William in Gatehousecote, William in Bonchester and his son Lawrence, David in Bonchester, and David, Andrew and Hugh Shiel. Also in 1502 he was surety (along with Bartholomew in Rawflat) for Adam, tenant in Hornshole and Chamberlain Newton, who had brought Englishman Sir John Musgrave to burn and plunder Selkirk. That year he was also surety (along with Robert Scott in Stirches) for Walter Turnbull in Branxholme, as well as for Hector Shiel. In 1508 he was on the panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting the Lordship of Liddesdale. All of these records together show that he was a prominent man in Rulewater at the time. George ‘Hwick’ (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 being called ‘hawic’ and living at ‘turri de wauchop’ (presumably Wauchope Tower). David of Wauchope was surety for him and they were fined for non-appearance. Perhaps the same man was ‘georgii turnbule de hauik’ and explicitly listed with along with David (who was probably a close relative and perhaps the same David of Wauchope), among men of Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. He presumably lived at or came from Hawick. George (15th/16th C.) listed in the 1501 Exchequer Rolls, along with Robert, 2 Johns, Ninian and David. Their £40 fine was granted to Thomas, son and heir of George of Bedrule. He could be the same as one of the other contemporary Georges. George (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as ‘in Wyndis’ (probably Weens in Rulewater) when along with about 20 Turnbuls and others he failed to appear to answer for the murder of Robert Oliver. Walter Scott in Newhall Burnhead and Thomas Brown in Cavers were called to enter him, with his surety being the Sheriff of Roxburgh. Failing to appear, he was put to the horn and forfeited his goods. George (15th/16th C.) recorded ‘in Tofts’ in 1502 when he was allowed to pay a fine for his crimes of assisting rebel Robert Turnbull, called ‘Muriale’ in the burning of Riddell and stealing of 480 sheep, 2 cows and goods. John Turnbull of Tofts served as surety, so was presumably his close relative. Note that Pitcairn appears to have mistakenly called him ‘David’. George (15th/16th C.) tenant in Bedrule, recorded in the 1516 remission for Turnbuls and others who may have given assistance to Alexander, Lord Home. It is possible that he was the Laird of Bedrule, but he is clearly listed as being ‘in Bethroule’. He may be the same George ‘in Bedrule’ mentioned in 1523. George of Bedrule (d.bef. 1528) possibly son of Thomas of Bedrule, who is recorded in 1502. He is not mentioned on the 1516 remission for a large number of Turnbuls, suggesting perhaps that he was a minor, or elsewhere at the time (William of Minto is named first and is clearly the head of the family at that time). He was on an inquest in Jedburgh in 1523, along with George ‘in Bedrule’ (therefore possibly related). He may have been the Laird who was present at the signing of the bond among Border Lairds to help the Warden (Earl of Angus) in 1524/5. It is also possible that he was the George, son of Thomas, who was wounded by William Scott, son of Robert Scott in Allanhaugh. It is unclear exactly when this happened, but Scott had remission in 1535. He married Janet, daughter of Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst in 1519 and was succeeded by his son Thomas. In 1528 Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme had a gift from King James V of the ‘ward, relief and non-entry’ of his lands, as well as the marriage of his heir, Thomas (then still a minor). He must have had other children, since Sir Walter Scott also had rights to the marriage of ‘ony vther aire or airis male, or female, of the said vmquhile George’. In 1553 Robert ‘brother german of the lord of Bedroull’ is recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books and presumably his son. In 1578/9 there is a record of John, ‘broder sone to the said Sir Thomas’, who must have been his grandson (although the son’s name is unknown). Sir Walter Scott married his widow in 1530/1. George (15th/16th C.) recorded as being at Minto and listed right after William of Minto among a large number of Turnbuls pardoned in 1516 for assisting Alexander, Lord Home. He may be the same as one of the other Turnbuls. George (15th/16th C.) listed as tenant of Fulton in 1516, along with Adam and Andrew (hence possibly his brothers). They were among Turnbuls to receive remission for their part in assisting Alexander, Lord Home. He may be same as George ‘in Foultoun’ who was part of an inquest into the ownership of the lands of Longnewton held in Jedburgh in 1533. George (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘layman of the diocese of Glasgow’ in 1526 when he had permission to marry Christian Ker, despite being within the 3rd and 4th degrees of consanguinity. This is preserved in the Selkirk Protocol Books. George (16th C.) son and heir of Thomas ‘in Rawflat’. He is described in 1540 in a court case involving a dispute between his father Thomas and William Scott, tenant of Hasseundean. Part of the dispute is over a 1536 marriage contract he had with William Scott’s eldest daughter and heir, Elizabeth. George (16th C.) listed as ‘in Bullorwell’ (i.e. Billerwell) when part of a panel deciding on disputed lands, held in Jedburgh in 1533. In 1541 he is recorded as tenant of half the lands of Hyndlee in Jedforest. George of Standhill (16th C.) listed as pledge for the Laird of Minto in 1553/4. This was in the assurance given to keep peace with the Rutherfords and others. He and George ‘of the Tour’ were to remain in ward in Edinburgh, as pledges for Sir Thomas of Bedrule, Hector, Tutor of Minto and David of Wauchope. George (16th C.) farmer at Town-o-Rule. His yard there is listed among the lands disputed by the Barons of Feu-Rule in 1562. He may be related to the earlier Andrew and Thomas who are recorded as tenants there. George of Barnhills (16th C.) recorded in 1541 when he witnessed a dispute over a sum of money... involving James Douglas of Cavers and William ‘Familtonne’. He was also recorded in 1562 when he was ordered to be warded in Dunbar Castle. George Douglas, younger of Bonjedward was his surety. He was also listed in 1564 among Border lairds who were ordered to support the warden, Ker of Cessford. It is unclear how he was related to other Turnbulls of Barnhills. George (16th C.) holder of quarter of the lands of Raperlaw. In 1564 his lands there were leased to William Gray and William Redford. George of Chamberlain Newton and Woollee (16th C.) Burgess of Jedburgh. He was recorded as Laird of Chamberlain Newton in 1563 when he witnessed a notarial instrument between Robert Michelson and David Home of Wedderburn regarding the lands of Blackhaugh (near Clovenfords). There were Turnbulls at Chamberlain Newton earlier, but it is seems that this George no longer lived in the Hawick area, and hence it is unclear how he was related to other local Turnbulls. He may be the George who witnessed a charter in 1549, when Robert Scott of Howpasley granted Appletreehall to Hector, brother of David Turnbull of Wauchope. In 1567 he was ‘of Wowlie’ when he tried to eject David Elliot as tenant in his 6 merk land of Chamberlain Newton. In 1572 he sold half of Chamberlain Newton to Gavin Elliott of Bailielee (and later Stobs) and his wife Jean Scott; they complained to the Privy Council that David Elliots’ widow Margaret Turnbull (who is not stated to be a relative, but that is unclear), who possessed the other half of Chamberlain Newton, encouraged her sons Walter and John Scott to attack Gavin Elliott’s servant there. George (16th C.) tenant in Catlie. In 1567 Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst was ordered to present him to an-other group of Turnbulls (from Minto, Bewlie, Kames and Troneyhill) and others, not to harm each other. Probably the same man was ‘in Hal-roule’ in 1581 when he and others were denounced as rebels for refusing to obey the charge to restore Sir Thomas Ferniehirst to the living of Bedrule parish. Also in 1581 he was listed among 10 men implicated in the murder of Walter, son of Wat Turnbull of Bewlie. In 1581/2 there was a charge to remove him and others from their lands for not complying. And in 1583/4 Sir Thomas Kerr had an ‘escheat’ to take his goods, along with those of John and Walter, farmers at ‘Roull’ and Hobsburn, respectively, who may have been close relations. He may be the George of Hallrule named in 1587 as one of the 13 main Lairds of the Middle March who were charged to keep thieves in check. He may be the ‘Turnble of Halroule’ listed on the ‘Roll of the Clans’ of about 1590, and is the George ‘of Halreuill’ listed among Border Lairds by Monipennie in 1597. The George of later decades may still have been him, but is more likely his son. George (16th C.) brother of James ‘of the Toure’. Along with his brother he was listed in 1579/80 among men accused of raiding into England. He is probably the ‘George Trumbill in Tour’ who signed the 1560 bond (‘at the pen led by the notar’) to settle the feud between the Rutherfords and the Kers. He may be the George ‘of the Toure’ who signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’ in 1551 and who was one of the pledges for the Laird of Bedrule in 1553/4; he and George of Standhill were to remain in ward in Edinburgh. He is probably the George ‘of the Tour’ listed in 1564 among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. George (16th C.) Laird of Billerwell in 1589, presumably a descendant of the earlier George and Adam. He was among men complained about by the English Warden in 1590 for a raid into England 3 years earlier; it was claimed that 200 men raided Doottrees and Stobs, taking 80 cows, 240 sheep, 10 horses, goods and 6 prisoners. The later Adam of Bilerwelle (whose son and heir was also George) may have been his son. If so he also had a son Andrew. He is probably also the ‘Turnble of Bullerwell’ listed on the ‘Roll of the Clans’ of about 1590. He is probably the Laird in 1598 who was among some Scottish prisoners taken from a large group who went into England to go hunting; he was released soon afterwards. He may be the ‘goodman of Bullerwell’ who complained in 1601 about Englishmen stealing his cattle, sheep and horses. George of the Tofts (16th C.) listed among landed men of the Borders in the ‘Roll of the Clans’ of about 1590. He is probably the George ‘of the Tofts’ who was ordered to appear personally in 1567 to answer accusations about raiding into England. George ‘the Creeelman’ (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘callit the creelman in Crocecleucht’ (i.e. ‘Crosscleuch’) in a letter of 1602 listing the tenants of the lands of Fulton. George (16th/17th C.) farmer at Crosscleuch, recorded in 1602 (and separate from George ‘the Creeelman’). He was son of the deceased John. George (d.1601) recorded as George ‘Trimull in Philhophaucht’ when he was witness to transactions in Selkirk in 1579 when he purchased land in Midlem in 1579/80. He is probably the George of Philhophaucht involved in a transaction in Selkirk in 1580. He was recorded in Philhophaucht in 1581 when he had a marriage contract between his son John and Katherine, daughter of Adam Hislop in Ashiestiel; his wife Isabel Murray is also mentioned. He witnessed a transaction in 1581 for James Ker in Yair. Also in 1581 he and his wife gave sasine of 2½ acres of land to Katherine, daughter of Adam Hislop in Ashiestiel. His son James witnessed him granting a sasine in 1581. In 1581 he represented the Sheriff of Selkirkshire and his tenants in an agreement to pay the minister of Selkirk. In 1581/2 he witnessed other transactions in Selkirk in 1581/2, including an agreement between the widow and son (Mark) of John of Philhophaucht. He is probably the George who witnessed a transaction for his brother Mark in Philhophaucht in 1581/2. In 1582 he witnessed another transaction in Selkirk. He is described as ‘in Philhophaucht’ in 1601, when his son John was served heir to his 5-merk land in Philhophaucht, called ‘Bairborisland’. He may have been son of John, who inherited these lands from his mother in 1558. George of Belses (d.1603) brother of David in Belses, with other brothers being John and Adam. He was listed among a group of Turnbulls (led by sons of the Laird of Bedrule) who were accused in 1579 of raiding the lands of ‘Pansoun’ in England, stealing cattle and taking the Laird there prisoner; his brother David was also listed. The brothers were also recorded in 1581 when accused of attacking the farm at Rawflat and killing Walter of Rawflat. He was denounced in 1583/4 for failing to appear before the Privy Council; he was listed along with Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule and others. He was tried in 1603 for a long string of crimes, including: murdering John Hamilton of Cumnock; murdering William, son of Walter Turnbull of Rawflat; capturing and torturing Walter Turnbull’s servant Adam Turnbull (it is said that he had him hung by the feet and shoulders for 13 days, causing his feet to rot off); illegally carrying guns; shooting Walter Turnbull, younger of Rawflat; stealing 4 cows from John Donaldson in Melrose; stealing 6 cows, 20 sheep, 2 horses and goods from David Riddell in St. Boswells; stealing 16 cows from the Laird of Bemersye; stealing 20 sheep from the Lady of Newton; stealing 5 sheep from George Davidson in Belses; stealing a horse from George Wilson in Langnewton; and being ‘a com-mone briggane and notorious cowmone theif’. He claimed to have killed William Turnbull in self defence (suggesting some intra-family feud). He also appears to have killed the elder Walter of Rawflat, after he was pronounced a rebel for refusing to leave the lands of Rawflat and part of Belses in 1581. He was acquitted of most of the offences, but nevertheless convicted of illegally carrying fire-arms and had his right hand cut off at the Market Cross of Edinburgh. Later the same year he appeared on charges of ‘the filthie cryme of Incest and Adulterie’ with his brother Jock’s wife Marion. At the same time he was accused of stealing a horse from Walter Turnbull of Rawflat in 1577, stealing 20 cows from Rawflat in 1579, stealing 4 horses from 4 millers in Jedburgh about 1600 and stealing a horse from the younger Walter of Rawflat. This time he was convicted of all charges, and hanged in Edinburgh, with all his lands and goods confiscated. He is probably the ‘Turnble of Belses’ listed on the ‘Roll of the Clans’ of about 1590. He is surely related to the slightly later George of Belses, possibly his son, as well as the Hector of Belses recorded in 1604. George of Hallrule (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1597 when his daughter Isobel had a marriage contract with John, eldest son of Hector Turnbull of Barnhills. In 1603, as part of the marriage contract, he rented the half lands of Hallrule to the Turnbulls of Barnhills. George (16th/17th C.) tenant of the lands of Fulton, recorded in a 1602 letter, which lists 2 other George Turnbulls! He is distinguished with the appellation ‘callit of Crawden’. He was probably related to ‘David of Crawden’ recorded in 1583/4. George (16th/17th C.) brother of Hector of Barnhills. In 1604 he was denounced as a rebel (along with his brother Hector, uncle Gavin and also Hector of Stunedge) for failing to appear on the charge of murdering 6 sons of John Grahamslaw of Little Newton. He could be the George ‘called of Howden’ who was named by the Privy Council when a commission was appointed to apprehend him and 7 other Turnbulls (plus 2 Davidsions), for not finding caution follow-being found guilty of the murder of Thomas Ker of Claylinghall and 6 Grahamslaw brothers.

George (16th/17th C.) described as being ‘in Hova’ in 1606 when he was one of the Turnbull clan accused of laying waste to Appotside and Harwood in 1598–1605. The action against him was not pursued, although the Turnbulls of Wauchope were tried and Thomas Turnbull convicted. He was probably the George in ‘Howay’, brother of Hector of Barnhill, who resigned a tenement of land off the Kirkwynd in Hawick in 1610.
He could be the George, son to ‘Archie of Hova’ recorded in the inventory of Mark Ker of Kipp-ielaw in 1579. George (16th/17th C.) son of Adam of Billerwell. He witnessed a sasine in 1612 and was part of a bond with his father in 1619, with John Haliburton of Mertoun. George d.(d.c.1637) 2nd son of Hector of Wauchope. In 1605 he was ‘tutor’ to his relatives Jean and Beatrix Turnbull, daughters of Walter of Wauchope.
He is also mentioned as 2nd son of Hector in a court case of 1605, where a separate George is also listed in Wauchope. In 1606 he was one of the men charged with stealing from and burning Appotside and Harwood, killing 3 men and cutting down Appotside woods in the period 1598–1605.
Although he was tried (and probably involved),
he was acquitted, with his older brother Thomas being the only one convicted. He is recorded in a ‘contract of wadset’ with Sir Andrew Kerr of Ox-nam in 1612. He held the lands of Templehall (in the Rule valley) in exchange for advancing money to Sir Andrew. He must have gained a portion of the lands, since in 1627 he granted them to Sir James Douglas of Mordington. In 1632 Temple-hall and Brewlands are described as ‘possessed by George Turnbull of Wauchope and his tenants’, but the feu of the lands were held by Jean Turnbull, niece and heir of Andrew, son of David of Wauchope (hence presumably a distant cousin).
However, his son James renounced all rights to the lands to William Earl of Lothian in 1655. He may have been the George describe as ‘there’ in relation to Templehall in a sasine of 1604. In 1637 he was described as ‘called of Wauchope’ when the guardianship of his son James was given to Hector in Clarilaw, as his closest male relative; it seems likely that this Hector was his cousin (since the record would have stated if they were brothers). George (16th/17th C.) tenant at Wau-chope, recorded in a court case of 1605 in which John Elliot of Copshaw and others were accused of stealing livestock from Wauchope. He is separate from the 2nd son of Hector of Wauchope, who is also listed there, but could be related to the Adam, also tenant of Wauchope. George (16th/17th C.) son of James of West Lees. He was listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a Borders Commissioners’ court in Jedburgh in 1605. George (16th/17th C.) son of Walter of Bedrule. In 1618 he was witness to a bond between his father and George Rutherford, younger in Abbotrule. George (16th/17th C.)
acted as Chamberlain to the Scotts of Bucce for ‘the Forest’ in the period 1617–21. George of Belses (16th/17th C.) possibly son of the ear-er George of Belses, who was hanged in 1603.
Andrew Ker of Roxburgh had a bond for him in 1622. He is later described in the Commissioners’ Court as ‘Geordie in Belsches’, when he is accused of having stolen 11 sheep from the lands of ‘Rafli’ (e.e. Rawli) belonging to the Davidsions, in about 1612. He was sentenced to be hanged. Robert owned Templehall in 1647 and may have been his son. George (17th C.) proprietor of Todshaw in a list of communicants of the Borthwick valley in 1650. George (17th C.) recorded as ‘near Edderstonesheils’ (i.e. Ader-stonesheil) in 1684 when he was listed among people declared as fugitives for being a Covenan-ter. George (d.c.1685) tenant in Birkhill when his will was recorded in 1685. It is possible this was the place of that name in Hobkirk Parish, where Walter and Robert were in 1694. George (17th C.) tenant in Doxshaugh. In 1686 he was fined in Hawick ‘for having seedie and insufficient meale in the market, being about ane gouping of seed sived out of half ane pecke of his full sacke’. George (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. There are 2 men of this name listed, and Turnbull

Turnbull

given how common the surname was locally, there is probably no way of determining who they were. George (17th C.) resident at Blakleemouth according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. George (1661/2–1728) tenant in Upper Bonchester, probably son of William of Upper Bonchester. He is buried in Abbotrule Kirkyard, as recorded on an old headstone there. He was probably related to William Turnbull, miller of Harestane, whose daughter Susan is recorded on the same stone. He appears to have been the last Turnbull of Bonchester. His daughter Margaret married William Turnbull, tenant of Hartshaugh Mill. He is probably the George listed as ‘his sone’ after William ‘in ye midle of ye toun’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls; both of them are listed after William ‘in Boonchater’. George (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish, living at Synton in 1698. He married Janet Scott and their children included Helen (b.1695), William (b.1698) and Robert (b.1700). George (17th/18th C.) candlemaker in Hawick. In 1716 he gave in a bond of £60 Scots granted to Margaret Waugh (widow of Thomas), which she had bequeathed for the poor of the town. Presumably this was some loan between him and Waugh, which Waugh’s widow decided to donate to charity. In 1712 he married Janet Cavers, who was also from Hawick and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1713. The witnesses were Bailie Robert Hardie and shoemaker Walter Scott. He later married Isobell Scott and their children included John (b.1717), William (b.1718), Margaret (b.1720), George (b.1721) and Gilbert (b.1727). The witnesses in 1718 were merchant Adam Elliot and tailor James Boston. George (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Spittal in 1717 when his daughter Betty was baptised. He may be the George who married Betty Scott in Cavers in 1714. George ‘Young Whitegates’ (18th C.) married Elizabeth Dalglish in Hawick in 1720. His wife was daughter of John Dalglish, wright at Alton Croft. Perhaps the same George and Elizabeth had a son John in Craulling Parish in 1724. The meaning of his nickname is unclear, but it may be related to the Scotts who were called ‘Whiteyetts’. George (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Alemoor in 1723 when his son William was baptised. Perhaps the same George was at Mains in 1731 when his daughter Elizabeth was baptised. George (18th C.) resident of Ashybank in 1735, 1741 and 1747. He was recorded as a gardener in 1747. Children, baptised in Cavers, who are probably his include: William (b.1735); John (b.1736); Ann and Archibald (b.1738); William (b.1741); Robert (b.1743); Margaret (b.1744); Walter (b.1747); and George (b.1749). He was surely related to Walter, who was at Ashybank at the same time. George (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1759 he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Robert Oliver. He married Isabel Henderson in 1754 and their son Adam was born in 1757. The witnesses were tailor John Turnbull (who was probably related) and shoemaker Robert Oliver. George (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He is recorded at Appletreethall in 1772. He married Jean King in 1767 and their children included: Margaret (b.1768); George (b.1769); William (b.1772); John (b.1776); Betty (b.1778); John (b.1781); and Helen (b.1786). In 1769 the witnesses were Andrew Turner and Thomas Reid and in 1772 Andrew Turner and John Mathieson. George (18th C.) resident at Roberton Parish. He was at Deanburnhaugh in 1773 and 1775 and Greenbank in 1781. His children included William (b.1773), Isobel (b.1775), Robert (b.1776), John (b.1779), Margaret (b.1781) and James (b.1783). George (18th C.) married Isobel Kedie in Ashkirk in 1767. George (18th C.) Hawick resident. He is probably the George ‘Senr.’ recorded on the 1785–92 Horse Tax Rolls, and hence father of George junior. He is recorded as ‘senior’ when he (along with Walter Wilson) witnessed baptisms for George ‘Junior’ in 1776 and 1777. He may also be the same man as ‘George Turnbull Senr. Vintner’ in Hawick, who is recorded in the Carriage Tax Rolls for 1794/5. He may be the George who hired the Hawick Parish mortcloth in 1758. George (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Hardie and their children included: John (b.1774); John (again, b.1777); and William (b.1791). The witnesses in 1777 were Bailie John Hardie (perhaps his wife’s father) and ex-Bailie William Elliot. He is probably the George who witnessed baptisms for Bailie John Hardie in Hawick in 1768, 1772 and 1774. George (18th/19th C.) draper in Hawick, with his shop at 14 High Street. He was sometimes referred to as ‘Junior Merchant’, and was hence son of another George, who had been a merchant before him. Note that the somewhat later drapers, William and James (at 11 High Street), were not closely related. He is recorded as George ‘Junior’ on the Horse Tax Rolls in Hawick in 1785-87 and 1791–97. He is probably the merchant George who witnessed a baptism for Archibald Paterson and Isabel Turnbull (perhaps a relative) in 1780 and the merchant who witnessed a baptism for Walter Wilson in 1798. He is probably the 'George Turnbull, jun. Hawick' on the subscribers list for 'Caw's Poetical Museum' in 1784. He is probably the George who paid the Shop Tax in Hawick in 1785. He is probably the junior merchant of that name who was among the creditors of Walter Lunn in the court case for bankruptcy against Lunn in the years 1799–1803. He is still 'Jun Mercht' in 1791 and in 1795 when he witnessed a baptism for John Straiton and Agnes Wilson (his sister-in-law). In 1774 he married Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’) Wilson, eldest eldest daughter of 'Haunless Wat'; she died in 1829. Their children included: George (1776–1809); Katherine (b.1777), who married William Oliver; Janet (b.1778), who died unmarried; Betty (b.1779–81); Walter (1780–1809); Betty or Elizabeth (again, b.1781), who married tobacconist James Scott; William (b.1783); Jane (b.1784); Agnes (or Nancy, 1785–1827), who was unmarried; William (again, 1786–1806); Margaret (b.1787); Thomas (b.1788), who married Jane Veitch; and Isabel (b.1791), who died young. The witnesses in 1776, 1777 and 1784 were George Turnbull senior and Walter Wilson (presumably his father and father-in-law), in 1778 and 1779 were weaver George (perhaps also his father) and merchant Walter Wilson (again) and in 1788 were merchant James Dickson and manufacturer Thomas Turnbull (perhaps a relative). In 1791 the witnesses were merchants Walter Wilson and William Wilson (probably his father-in-law and brother-in-law). In 1809 he was already deceased when his daughter Elizabeth married Hawick tobacconist James Scott. George (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1794 he married Helen Laidlaw, who was also from Hawick. George (1776–1809) eldest son of draper George. He may be the 'Jun. Mercht.' listed in Hawick on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. It seems likely he was the George, son of George 'Junior', who was on the short-list for Cornet in 1794 (along with John, son of George 'Senior') and who was listed as a merchant when he was elected Cornet in 1795. George (18th/19th C.) resident of Larriston. He subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. George (18th/19th C.) recorded as proprietor of the Cross Keys in Hawick on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He had 3 work horses at that time. It is unclear whether this was the Cross Keys on the High Street or at the Sandbed. He was surely related to the John of the Cross Keys whose son Walter died in 1808. He could be the George ‘Senior’, whose son John was among those on the short-list for Cornet in 1794 (along with George, son of George ‘Junior’), and who was probably the John of the Cross Keys who was Cornet in 1796. George (1783–1861) eldest son of James and Betty Adamson. He was born at Hillshaugh and became a carrier in the Rulewater district, like his grandfather, George Adamson. It is said he frequently acted as the disseminator of news. In later life he moved to Newcastle and was a grocer and meal-dealer at about 41 North Hermitage Street. He was listed there on Slater’s 1852 directory. He married Margaret Scott (from Wilton Parish), who died in 1860, aged 89. Their children were: James, born at Kirkno; Thomas, born at Unthank; Betty; and an unnamed child. He and his wife were buried at Ettleton. George (b.c.1810) resident of Deanburnhaugh. In 1841 he was recorded as a male servant. He married Rachel Clyde and their children included: George (b.1832); David (b.1834), labourer; James (b.1837), miller; Christian (or Christina, b.1841); and Margaret (b.1845). His wife was still recorded in Deanburnhaugh in 1851 and 1861 (but he was absent, and so presumably deceased). George (b.1809/10) joiner at Appletreehall. He was listed as wright there among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835–41. He was living there in 1841 with his siblings Betsy and William. His wife was Agnes and their children included: Agnes, William, John, James, George and Isabella. George (19th C.) son of the gardener at Borthwickbrae and grandson of George, carrier in Rulewater. He was coachman to Hawick’s Provost Wilson. George (b.1819) son of weaver William and brother of John S. He was an accountant, for a long time cashier for Nixon & MacKie, then in business for himself, later moving to Edinburgh. In 1861 he was a Commercial Accountant, living at 57 High Street. He married Jessie Allan Mark in 1843; her brother founded the wool merchant’s firm W.D. Mark & Sons of Newcastle. Their children included: William (b.1844); John Mark (b.1846); George (b.1849); Christina Dobson (b.1850), who probably died young; Alexander Dobson (b.1853), cashier at Innes, Chambers & Co.; Margaret Ogilvie (b.1856); and Christina Dobson (again, b.1859). George (1821–72) seed merchant, who was Cornet in 1841. He came from the Turnbulls of Allars House, and was son of John. In 1851 he was a seedsman and merchant at 4 Bourtree Place. He set up a partnership with the Dicksons, with office at 18 High Street, and nursery grounds where Teviot Crescent and North Bridge...
Street were later built. He donated coins to the Museum in the 1860s. He married Agnes, daughter of Peter Amos, farmer at Earlside. Their children included: Margaret, who married John Brown; Violet, who married Frank Wilson; Helen (d.1910), who married Thomas Teller Charlton; Euphemia, who married her cousin Peter Amos (b.1860); Jane, who married Gilbert Davidson; John, unmarried; Agnes, also unmarried; Peter, also unmarried; Jessie, who married Rev. Peter Brice Gunn; Alice, who married Thomas Brice Gunn; and George, who married Nancy Brown. He was said to resemble ‘John Bull’ in later years. George (1826–66) 2nd son of John and Wilhelmina (‘Mina’) Scott. His uncles were schoolmasters at Wilton and at Hobkirk. George Purvis (b.1861) son of James, tenant farmer at Billerwell. He had a twin sister Mary. He emigrated to Canada, where he raised cattle. An earlier man of the same name (b.1821) was his uncle. Gideon (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, recorded at Newton in 1718 and Clarilaw in 1724, 1726, 1729 and 1733. He witnessed a baptism in 1724 for James Ormiston, resident of Boonraw. He married Helen Scott in 1718 and their children included: Thomas (b.1719); Robert (b.1721); James (b.1724); James (again, b.1726); Janet (b.1729); Helen (b.1733); and William (b.1739). The witnesses in 1724 were James Ormiston and John Huntlie, in 1726 were Robert Scott and another Scott (probably William), perhaps relatives of his wife, in 1729 were Walter and William Scott and in 1733 were Robert Scott and Thomas Turnbull (who may have been related). Gilbert (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 along with Patrick. They were both stated to be ‘at the horn’ when John in Dryden was allowed to ‘compone’ for associating with them. Gilbert (b.1742) son of Thomas, who was one of the instigators of Hawick’s carpet trade. He was born in Minto Parish. In 1758 he became a surgeon’s apprentice in Edinburgh. He joined the Honourbare East India Company. It is said that he had extravagant habits and would send his bills Grisel (d.c.1685) described as ‘in Roull’ when her will was recorded in 1685. It is unclear where in Rulewater she may have lived. Hector (15th C.) member of the inquest panel for Archibald Douglas inheriting the Barony of Cavers in 1464/5. Other men listed included George, John and William of Minto. Hector (15th/16th C.) witness to the sasine for Wolfelee in 1522 for the Homes of Wedderburn. Archibald is listed right after him, and possibly related. Hector of Barnhills (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1531 as ‘Bailie in that part’, along with John Turnbull, in a sasine for William, Lord Herries of Terregles, Baron of Feu-Rule for Hector Lorraine of Harwood. Hector (16th C.) brother of David of Wauchope. In 1549 he was granted the 2 husband lands in Appletreehall belonging to Robert Scott of Howpasley. Along with his brother David and Patrick Gordon, he was already tenant of these lands at the time. In 1551 he signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’. Hector of Barnhills (16th C.) probably son of the previous Hector. In 1553/4 he was on the panel for Sir Walter Scott inheriting his grandfather’s lands of Branxholme and Buccleuch. He had a sasine for the lands of Barnhills in 1554. He may have been succeeded by William (recorded in 1584/5) and then the Hector recorded in about 1590. Hector (16th C.) recorded as ‘tutour of Mynto’ in 1551 when he signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’. In 1553/4 he was listed among the Rutherfords and others in an assurance not to harm the Kers; his pledge was George of Standhill. Also in 1553/4 he was a member of the panel of ‘retour’ for Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch, where he is recorded as ‘tutour de Mynto’. Hector of Barnhills was also listed, proving he was a different man, although it is unclear to which branch of the Turnbulls he did belong (but presumably associated with the Turnbulls of Minto). He was simple ‘of Mynto’ in 1561, when listed among Border Lairds who appeared before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft. He was ‘The Tutour of Mynto’ listed in 1564 among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. He was ‘Tutor of Mynto’ when he signed the 1569 bond to suppress Border thieves, also signed by several other men of Roxburghshire and neighbouring areas. Hector (16th C.) listed among men who Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst was ordered to present in 1567 to answer changes of raiding into England. He was recorded being of ‘Vowley’, which is probably Woollee. Hector (16th C.) listed in 1567 when he was among men to be entered by David Home of Wedderburn. He is recorded being ‘in Turnbull’ (although it seems likely this is a transcription error, perhaps for Town-o-Rule) and brother to George. ‘Isisbellis Robene’, as well as Adam, son to Sandie Turnbull, ‘Part Pursell’ and 2 Olivers were also to be entered from there. Hector ‘Heckie’ of Belses (16th C.) son of Adam in Belses. He was recorded in 1579 when his son Thomas was listed among men accused of raiding cattle from the Laird of ‘Pansoun’ in England. He was ‘Hekie’, son of Adam in Belse, for whom there was a pledge to stop stealing in 1576, along with his brothers David, George and John. Since his name was given first, he may have been the eldest son. The joint cautioners were Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule and William Turnbull of Barnhills. He was also ‘Ekkie Trumbill of Belsis’ in 1580 when his son Andrew (then a minor) was convicted of murder. This was probably the murder of John Hamilton of Cumnock who was slain ‘vnder silence of nycht in his bed within ane laych chalmer in the place of Polwart’. In 1580 there was a further complaint by Jean Hepburn, Lady Wedderburn, that he, his son Dand, and brother-in-law Patrick Richard- son, killed her husband (John Hamilton of ‘Ben- estoun’, presumably the same man) at his home in Polwarth; they were all denounced as rebels. Sir George Home of Wedderburn received the ‘es- cheeat’ of his (Hector’s) estate, as well as that of the other convicted man, John Young in ‘Camys’. At the end of 1580 he gave sasine to his daughter and heir Katherine for the ‘ten librates of land of old extent of Belses’. His brother John was a witness, as well as several men who lived in Belses. He was probably either deceased or exiled by 1581 when his brothers David, George, John and Adam were recorded. Hector (16th C.) recorded in Hassendeanburn in 1581 when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk. He may be the same as one of the other Hectors. Hector of Wauchope (d.bef. 1612) son of David. In 1571/2 he joined several Borders lairds in signing a bond to act against thieves. In 1572/3 he was recorded as son and heir apparent of David of Wauchope, when he swore allegiance to the Crown, with William Ker of Caverton as surety. In 1573 he and his father signed the ‘Band of Roxburgh’. In 1580 he and Walter of Hobbsburn were cautioned to appear before the Privy Council, with Henry, heir of John Stewart of Craighall as surety. Also in 1580 he was in a group of Turnbuls of Minto, Wauchope, Bewlie and Hobsburn, who had a band to keep the peace with the Turnbuls of Bedrule and others. He was among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. About 1590 he was listed among the landed men of the Borders. In 1591 he was among local chiefs who signed a bond to support the King against the Earl of Bothwell and Alexander, Lord Home. It is unclear how he was related to Thomas, who was declared a rebel in the 1590s. He was a signatory for the assurance of good behaviour of the Turnbulls descended from the house of Wauchope (separate from those derived from Minto) in 1595; he signed by ‘touching the pen of the notary’. He is probably ‘the old Laird of Vaughopp’ recorded in 1601 when and Englishman complained that he had stolen cattle from him. His 2nd son George was recorded in 1604 in a sasine for lands of Templehall. In 1605 he accused John Elliot of Copshaw of leading a group of about 100 riders who stole 80 cows, 100 sheep and 1 horses from Wauchope in 1602. His eldest son Thomas, 2nd son George and several other neighbouring tenants are also recorded; Elliot was found not guilty, however. His surety in this case was Robert Home, younger of ‘the Heuchi’. In 1606 he was the most senior of the men accused of raiding and burning Appotside and Harwood in the period 1598–1605; his sons George and John are also listed. They were accused of stealing a huge number of livestock, cutting down virtually the whole wood at Appotside and killing the young Laird of Harwood and his younger brother, as well as a servant of their mother, Lady Appotside. It is unclear exactly what Margaret (herself a daughter of the Laird of Bedrule) had done to invoke the ire of her neighbours and distant kin. Although he and the others were eventually acquitted, his son Thomas was separately found guilty of the same crimes. Probably the same Hector is recorded in 1612, when his son George was involved in a contract with Sir Andrew Kerr of Oxnam relating to Templehall (in the Rule valley). His son and heir David married Margaret, daughter of James Gledstains of Cocklaw in 1593, but was killed before 1599; those involved in his death included Gilbert and Hector (uncles of Hector Lorraine of Harwood), as well as James Lorraine of Appotside; this was presumably part of the same family feud. Thomas was heir afterwards, with George being the next son. Hector of Clarilaw (16th/17th C.) listed in a bond of March 1594/5, along with Richard Turnbull, subscribed by James Gledstains of Cocklaw, that they would not harm Gavin Elliott of Stobs or William Elliot of Horsleyhill. In 1606 he was one of the Turnbuls accused of raiding and burning Appotside and Harwood in the period 1598–1605. As well as other crimes, he was singled out for his involvement with stealing livestock from and burning Appotside in 1598. However, he was cleared of all charges. He was surely related to the slightly later Hector of Clarilaw. Either he or his son was the Hector of Clarilaw who was on the 1616 jury that convicted Jock Scott ‘the Suckler’ of sheep stealing. He may be related to the Hector who had a charter for Pinnacle and Broomlands in 1550. Hector (d.aft. 1610) probably son of Thomas of Hartshaugh (although some accounts suggest he was the youngest son of Sir Thomas of Bedrule). In 1580 he was a ‘kindlie tenant’ in possession of the lands of Kirklands of Hobkirk. His ancestors had probably been ‘kindly tenants’ of Jedburgh Abbey for several generations. In 1581 he was listed (along with his son Thomas) as ‘in Hartishauch’ among the 10 men accused of being involved with the murder of Walter, son of Wat Turnbull of Bewlie. He had a charter to lands of Hartshaugh and Swanshiel in 1604, specifically the lands and mill of ‘Hartishaugh’, the lands of ‘Wester Swooshie’, including the wood called ‘Clerksbank’, and the ‘kirk lands called Vicar’s Lands of the kirk of Hobkirk’, except for the manse and glebe. These lands were in the Barony of Abbotrule. He is stated as having been tenant in Hartshaugh beyond the memory of man’. In 1610 he is recorded as ‘in Hartshauch’ when he was part of an inquest for succession to lands in Rulewater. His son Mark had a bond in 1616 (when he was presumably still alive) with William Scott of Todrig. He married twice, and his children (to his 2nd wife) were James, Mark and William. ‘Leonall’ (possibly Lyle) may have been another child. His grandson Adam was served heir to his lands of ‘Viccarislandis’ in Hobkirk, as well as Wester Swanshiel and ‘Clerksbankis’. It is unclear whether he is the same as any of the other contemporary Hectors. Hector of Barnhills (16th/17th C.) surely directly related to the earlier Hector of Barnhills, and possibly son or brother of William of Barnhills. He had a charter of confirmation issued by James VI for the lands of Barnhills. He may be the Hector, brother of ‘[blank] Trumbill of Barnehills’ recorded as in 1581/2 in Selkirk to 2 transactions (one along with James in Selkirk, who may have been related, and another along with Mark, heir of Howden); he was also recorded explicitly as brother of William of Barnhills in several other transactions in 1581/2. He witnessed a further transaction in 1582. He is also listed among landed men in the Borders in about 1590. He is recorded in a marriage contract of 1597 and a following grant of lands of Hallrule and others in 1603. In 1602 he was recorded along with Thomas, younger of Minto and Mark of Bewlie, when they were accused of robbing a hunting party sent out by the Laird of Gretna, with permission to hunt for venison in Tynedale; they were found guilty of robbery and fined for the value of 3 horses. His eldest son John married Isobel, daughter of George of Hallrule. He is probably the Hector of Barnhills who was tried in 1604 for the murder of 6 sons of John Grahamslaw of Little Newton; also tried were his brother George, their uncle Gavin and Hector of Stanedge. They were denounced as rebels for not appearing; however, they were probably rehabilitated, since his he and his son and heir John were taken to court in 1609 by David, son of the late John Scott ‘called of the Tour in Hawick’ for not paying what they had borrowed. In 1607 he and Thomas of Wauchope brought a complaint against James, son of Edward Lorraine, ‘for presenting bended pistolets to their breasts for their slaughter’. In 1610 his brother George ‘in Howay’ is recorded resigning a tenement of land in Hawick. Hector of Bewlie (d.1604) recorded in 1601 in a document to capture him and William Middlemas for the slaugher of Thomas Ker of Crailing. This was the outcome of a serious fight between Kers and Turnbulls at Jedburgh Fair that year, which included Mark of Bewlie and his brother Robert (who was killed there); these 2 may well have also been his brothers. He was declared a rebel and there is a Commission of 1603 for the Provost of Jedburgh to gather men to apprehend him. He was killed at Lilliesleaf around Martinmas 1604 by Sir Andrew Ker of Oxnam. Ker had remission for this and other crimes in 1615. This was all part of an ongoing feud between the Turnbulls and the Kers, but the exact circumstances surrounding the events of these times are impossible to guess. Hector of Lilliesleaf (16th/17th C.) declared a rebel in 1604 for failing to appear to answer the charge of murdering Thomas Ker of Crailing and his servant George Glaidner. Hector of Belses acted as cautioner. It is possible he is the same man as Hector of Bewlie. Hector of Stanedge (d.1611) recorded in 1596 as ‘Hector Trumble of Stoney letch’ when he was accused of crimes by Englishman Thomas Selbie and fined ‘for lack of answer’. He is recorded as ‘in Stanileche’ in a bond of 1603 when he gave all his goods to Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst for being unable to pay his debts and also apparently because Sir Andrew had saved his life. In 1604 he was one of the Turnbulls involved with slaughter and burning at Appotside and Harwood. Also in 1604 he was tried, along with 3 Turnbulls of Barhills, with the murder of 6 sons of John Grahamslaw of Little Newton; they were denounced as rebels for non-entry, with their cautioners being Robert Home.
of Carlside, Hector Turnbull of Belses and James Douglas of Cavers. In 1606 he is recorded as ‘Hec- tor Turnbull in Steneledrig’, brother of Gavin in Howe and the deceased Robert in Hallrule, when there was a summons for them to prosecute the sons of Harry Grahamslaw who had been accused of the murder of Robert in Hallrule; there was clearly a feud between the 2 families. In 1606 he was one of the Turnbulls accused of raiding and burning Appotside and Harwood in the period 1598–1605; however, the case against him was not pursued. In 1607 he sold the lands of ‘Carlinghall, Lailsell, Brunnishall, Brumesclewis and Roberthill’ to Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. Also in 1607 he brought a court case against Robert Scott in Northhouse. Additionally in 1607 he was caution- er for John Maxwell, Lord Herries. He is also recorded as ‘of Steinieleche’ in a set of documents in 1609 relating to the lands of ‘Hardwodtown’, ‘Fairneleyis’ and ‘Staineleche’. Andrew held these lands in 1610, and so was probably his son. This also suggests that he had been declared a rebel by then. In 1610 he was named by the Privy Council when a commission was made to apprehend him, along with 7 other Turnbulls and 2 Davidsons, since they were ‘unrelaxed from hornings’ following the murder of Thomas Ker of Crailinghall and 6 Grahamslaw brothers. He was killed by Sir Andrew Ker of Oxnam, but whether this was an ‘offi- cial’ act or part of a feud is unclear. Hector of Firth (16th/17th C.) took part on the affray at Jedburgh Rood Fair in 1601, when a large group of Turnbulls drew Thomas Ker (brother of the Jedburgh Provost) out of his house and killed him along with his servants. This was part of some on- going feud between Turnbulls and Kerrs. He was one of 4 Turnbulls who were found guilty of the crime of murder and illegally carrying pistols. In 1610 he was named by the Privy Council when a commission was made to apprehend him, along with 7 other Turnbulls and 2 Davidsons, since they were ‘unrelaxed from hornings’ following the murder of Thomas Ker of Crailinghall and 6 Grahamslaw brothers. Hector of Belses (16th/17th C.) acted as cautioner in 1604 for a group of Turn- bulls from Stanedge and Barnhills (including 2 other Hectors!) accused of killing 6 sons of Gra- hamslaw of Newton. Also in 1604 he was caution- er for Hector of Lilliesleaf, charged with the murder of Thomas Ker of Crailing. He must have been related to the George of Belses who was executed in 1603. Hector (16th/17th C.) had a charter of ‘feu farm’ for the lands of Standhill in 1610. He was probably ancestor of the later Turn- bulls of Standhill. Hector of Clarlaw (17th C.) possibly son of the earlier Hector. In 1637 he was appointed (as closest relative on his father’s side) as tutor to James, son of George ‘called of Wauchope’. In 1643 he was recorded as owner of lands in Hassendean Parish valued at £273. In 1643 his daughter Elizabeth married Robert Scott of Burnhead. He probably had no sons, since Clar- law appears to have gone to the Scotts of Burn- head after that. Hector of Firth (17th C.) feuded Firth from Thomas Hamilton, Lord Binning in 1632. He was probably the son of the earlier Hec- tor of Firth. John and Walter leased Firth later in the later 1600s, and must have been his de- scendants. He is recorded in a marriage contract of 1637 of his daughter with George Clerk. In 1643 his lands in Lilliesleaf Parish were valued at £195. Hector (17th C.) recorded in ‘Rule’ in the 1643 valuation of Abbotrule Parish. His lands were valued at £10. Hector (d.c.1683) tenant in Grundistone whose will was recorded in 1683. Hector of Wester Swanshie (18th C.) son of William. He was succeeded by his son James. Helen of Fodderlee (17th C.) recorded as owner of £80 of land in Abbotrule Parish in 1643. She was probably related to James, who was also recorded at Fodderlee in 1643. Helen (17th/18th C.) see Helen Chisholme. Henry of Craik (15th C.) one of the witnesses to the 1431 ‘letter of transumpt’ of the earlier charter granting half of the barony of Branxholme to the Scots of Buccleuch. He is recorded as ‘Henrico Turnbull de Crak’. Henry (15th C.) leased a quarter of the lands of Appletreehall according to a document of 1470, with Alexander Scott of Howpasley having the other parts. He was probably related to Walter, who is recorded holding the lands of East Mains (of Hassendean) in 1493/4. He may be the Henry who witnessed a sasine for lands in Linton in 1509. Henry (15th C.) listed at the 1493 Justice-aine in Jedburgh when William Douglas of Cavers was fined for his non-appearance. He was recorded being ‘in deùi’, which is probably an abbreviation for ‘dennum’, i.e. he lived in Denholm. He was cited again in 1494/5 for failure to appear. Henry (15th C.) tenant in Unthank, listed at the 1494/5 Justice-aine in Jed- burgh. He was indicted and did not appear, with his surety, Matthew Hobkirk being fined. He was probably related to Alexander, recorded in Unthank in 1493. Henry ‘Harry’ (16th/17th C.) tenant in Wauchope in Rulewater, recorded in a court case of 1605. He is listed as ‘Harie Trum- bill’. Henry ‘Harie’ (17th C.) holder of part of the lands of Westwood near Bonchester in 1643. His lands were valued at £12 Scots, while those of Thomas (presumably his father or brother) were worth £40 Scots. Henry (18th/19th C.) farmer at Whitriggs in Kirkton Parish, recorded on the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was owner of a total of 7 farm horses and 1 saddle horse in 1797. He married Betty Stavert in Kirkton in 1789; she was born in Hawick in 1766, daughter of George. Their children included: Henrietta (b.1791); Elizabeth (b.1793); and John (b.1795).

Herman (15th C.) witness to a sasine in 1479 for the lands of Wolfelee for the Homes of Wedderburn. It could be that this is a transcription error for ‘Hector’. Isabel (16th C.) recorded in 1579 as ‘gudwif of Woll’ among people who owed money to Isabel Donald, widow of Robert of Palace. The name of her husband is not recorded; it is possible he was a missing first generation of the Scotts of Woll, perhaps father of Walter, who is noted in 1606. It is also possible that she was mother (perhaps if she married twice) of John Turnbull, half-brother of Walter Scott of Woll, who is recorded in 1608.

Isobel (16th/17th C.) daughter of Walter of Rawflat, sister of William and Walter. In 1603 she was one of the ‘persewaris’ of the case against George Turnbull of Belses, for a list of crimes, including killing her brother William and shooting her brother Walter. Another of the persuers was George Rutherford ‘as kinsman’, so he was either her husband or married to one of her relatives. In 1632 probably the same ‘Isobella’ was ‘heir portioner’, along with her sister Margaret, to their brother in the lands of the Mains of Further.

Isobel (17th C.) resident of ‘Crawknow’ in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor’. Isobel (17th C.) resident of North Synton in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor’. Isobel (17th C.) recorded as resident of Kirknowe in Hobkirk Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Isobel (17th C.) listed among the poor living at Hassendean on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Isobel (18th C.) cook at Stirches in 1791, when she was working for Gilbert Chisholme. Sir James (1320–55) son of William, the first Turnbull. He married Mary Haliburton and died at Nisbet Moor. James (15th C.) listed among the squires who witnessed an agreement in 1432 between the Rules of Primside and the Kers of Alstonburn. James of Hornshole (15th C.) witness in 1456 to an instrument relating to the lands of Whitchesters, made at Branxholme. He is recorded as ‘Jacobo Turnbule de Hornshole’. He may have been an ancestor of the later Turnbulls who were at Hornshole. James (15th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1493. He was described as a ‘common thief’, who had stolen things with John Davidson, resident of Minto. Davidson was allowed to ‘compone’ for his crimes, including stealing a horse from him. He may be the same as one of the other Jameses. James (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 as the brother of the Laird of Whithope (probably the one near Harden in the Borthwick valley). He had remission for stealing 18 ewes from Bowhill, with the help of Walter Dalgleish. His crimes also included stealing iron windows, doors and ‘crukis’ from the tower of Howpasley. His brother the Laird of Whithope was surety for him. James (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1484 when he claimed compensation from Adam of Philiphaugh for the ‘wrangwis vexacioun and disturblance’ of him in his lands of Westfield and ‘wrangwis spoliaciou of a kow’ at his lands of Kirkhope. Probably the same James ‘in Kirkhop’ is listed among the many men given remission in 1504 for any part in the slaughter of Thomas Rutherford in Jedburgh Abbey. James (15th/16th C.) recorded as brother of Mark in Bonchester in 1494/5. He failed to appear and so his brother, serving as his surety, was fined. He was also recorded as brother of Mark in 1501 among 10 men whose fines were remitted; as well as his brother, there were Turnbuls of Fulton, Bonchester and elsewhere also listed. James (15th/16th C.) tenant in Hornshole listed in the Exchequer Rolls of 1501, among mostly local men who had been fined. He was probably related to Adam, who was tenant at Hornshole in 1502 and John in 1516. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Jameses. James (15th/16th C.) tenant in Fulton. In 1502 his son Thomas served as surety for himself and was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. James (15th/16th C.) tenant in Gargunnock. In 1504 he was among a number of men who had remission for any involvement in the slaughter of Thomas Rutherford in Jedburgh Abbey. Perhaps the same James of Gargunnock gave up his liferent of a tenement in Selkirk in 1538 in favour of his cousin John; his... own son John was a witness. He may be related to the contemporary Walter of Gargunnock and Hassendean. James (15th/16th C.) witness to a charter for John Stirling for lands in Dumbarton, signed in Edinburgh in 1508. James (15th/16th C.) recorded as tenant of Wolfelee in 1516 on a list of many Turnbulls pardoned for any role in assisting Alexander, Lord Home. James (15th/16th C.) tenant in the lands of Hillhouse, listed among the men who had remission in 1516 for any assistance given to the Homes. Fergus is also noted as being there, and so presumably related. It is unclear if these were the lands in Liddesdale or other lands in Rulewater. James (16th C.) recorded as ‘Jame Trumbill, young Pait’s brother’ on a list of Scotsmen reset in England in 1540. He was probably son of Peter (or perhaps Patrick) of Catlee. James (16th C.) recorded in Philiphaugh in 1540/1 when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk. James (16th C.) recorded ‘in Cavers’ in 1579, this probably being Cavers Carre. He represented his son Thomas in a transaction in Selkirk, where a piece of land was purchased in Midlem. Perhaps the same James set a tack for his lands called ‘Scottis Yard’ in Selkirk in 1581. James of Abbotrule (16th C.) recorded as ‘Jame’ in 1565 when there was a bond with Walter Turnbull, tenant of Howe (in Rulewater) to present him to Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst. He may be one of the unidentified James Turnbulls who are on the list of Borderers summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1584/5. James (16th C.) listed as tenant in ‘Sironscheill’ (probably Swanshiel) in 1581 among 10 men (mostly Turnbulls of Rulewater) accused of the murder of Walter, son of Wat Turnbull of Bewlie. James of the Toor (16th C.) recorded as ‘of the Toure’, along with his brother George, in a 1579/80 case of men accused of raiding into England. They were asked to pay recompense to the Laird of ‘Panstoun’, from whom they had presumably been accused of stealing. He is also listed among the men who were asked to appear before the Privy Council in 1584/5 to explain how they had been helping to quiet the Border. He was also listed as one of the landed men of the Borders in about 1590. He was probably related to William ‘of the Tour of Roulwode’ recorded in 1622. His lands were presumably at Spittal Tower. James (16th C.) tenant in ‘Stenleche’ (i.e. Stonedge) in 1567 when Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst was ordered to present him to answer charges of raiding into England. He was recorded being ‘of Stonyletche’ and ‘of Stonyleache’ among men complained about by the English Warden in 1590 for 2 separate raids into England in 1587. In one raid he is listed first and there were more than 40 other men involved, including his servant ‘Jocke Weittie’. In the other raid there are several Turnbulls listed, among a group of about 200. James ‘Baneist James’ (16th/17th C.) one of a group of Turnbulls involved in a melee at Jedburgh Rood Fair in 1601. This resulted in the death of Thomas Ker and his servant, and the wounding of many men. As a consequence several Turnbulls were later convicted and hanged. Although he was one of those found guilty of murder and illegally carrying pistols, it is unclear whether or not he was executed. In 1610 he was named (as ‘called Baneisht James’) by the Privy Council when a commission was appointed to apprehend him and 7 other Turnbulls (plus 2 Davidsons), for not finding caution following being found guilty of the murder of Thomas Ker of Crailingham and 6 Grahamswal brothe. It is not stated to which Turnbull branch he belonged, but probably somewhere around Minto. His nickname is presumably Scots for ‘banished’. James (16th/17th C.) younger son of Sir Thomas of Bedrule. In 1616 he is described as ‘called of Bedrule’ when along with David (or Andrew, probably his nephew), butcher and Burgess of Jedburgh, he had a bond with Mark in Hartshaugh. And in 1618 he is ‘brother german to Walter of Bedderreull’ when he had a bond with James Jamieson of Lessuden. James (d.bef. 1619) eldest son of Hector of Hartshaugh. In 1608 he had a charter of the lands of Wester Swanshiel, granted by his father to be held in feu for rental. He was also the successor to the lands of Hartshaugh and the Kirklands. However, he could only have been Laird for a very short time after his father’s death, before his own son Thomas succeeded in 1619. He must also have been related to the contemporary Adam and Lyle (probably either brothers or sons). James ‘Jamie’ of West Lees (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1605 when his son George was listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a Borders Commissioners’ court in Jedburgh. He was also recorded in 1617 in a bond with James Haswell, surgeon of Jedburgh; his son and heir William was also mentioned. James (16th/17th C.) son of ‘Willie of Braidhauchie’, he is recorded in the 1622 Circuit Court, where he was found guilty of stealing 24 sheep from ‘Hairrlesyd’, this being possessed by the ‘fear of Cavers (William Douglas) and his tennentis’ (hence probably Earlside). He was ‘clengit’, i.e. found not guilty. His cautioners were Adam in Hartshaugh and another Adam, who were perhaps related. In 1628 there was a complaint by Robert Kerr of Cavers against him and his father, for opposing his apprehension after he was declared ‘an idle and masterless man’ (i.e. fit for military service). Also in 1628 he is named when his father William paid caution to the Privy Council, promising to atone for the disturbance they had caused at Abbotrule Kirk. James (d.bef. 1632) described as ‘in Hassidbanke’ and already deceased in 1632 when his son Walter feued part of Raperlaw. Probably the same James ‘of Hassindanebank’ was complained about in 1607 by George Scott in Castleside, with his surety being Thomas Ker of Cavers. James (17th C.) recorded as owner of £180 of land at Fodderlee in Abbotrule Parish in 1643. He was probably related to Helen ‘of Fodderlie’, who was also recorded in 1643. They are presumably distinct from the people with the same names who were at Bowshot Hill at the same time. James (17th C.) recorded at ‘Bossithill’ (i.e. Bowshot Hill) in Abbotrule Parish in a valuation roll of 1643. He was there with Helen, who was presumably his wife. Their land was valued at £33 6s 8d. James of Wauchope (d.c.1674) only son of George of Wauchope. In 1653 he inherited the 20-pound land of Wauchope in Jedforest from his uncle Thomas of Wauchope. In 1655 he renounced all claims to the lands of Templehall (in the Rule valley) to William Earl of Lothian. His sister Anna was served as his heir in 1674. James (17th C.) tenant of West Lees (17th C.) probably a descendant of the earlier James. In about 1663 he was recorded paying £66 13s 4d on the Land Tax Rolls. James (17th C.) tenant in Fenwick. He married Isobell Margaret Stoddart and their children included Robert (b.1682), James (b.1685) and an unnamed son (b.1688). The 1682 baptism was witnessed by John Law and Robert Turnbull (who was presumably closely related). James (17th C.) tenant in Kirkton. In 1684 he was among a group of tenants of the Cavers estate who complained about the burden placed upon them by the huge fines imposed on Lady Cavers. They would have been forced into ruin had not the young Laird of Cavers, William Douglas, returned from the Continent to take charge of matters. James (d.1686) tenant farmer who also served as ‘pyper’ for the Parish of Abbotrule. His will is recorded in 1687 when he was ‘piper, in Abotroull’. He left a reasonably sum of money to his only daughter. James (17th C.) tenant in Hartshaugh. The will of his wife Agnes Turnbull was recorded in 1688. James (d.c.1688) tenant in ‘Caverspark’ when his will was recorded in 1688. It is unclear if this was associated with Cavers Parish or Cavers Carre or elsewhere. James (17th C.) referred to as ‘James Trumble’ in 1688 when he was fined for assaulting the Bailie and Town Officers. They were trying to take him to the tollbooth ‘for certain riots and bluids’ and threatened ‘to take yr lives wt ane drawn penknife in his hand’. James (17th C.) recorded as ‘servitor of said Dame Magdalene’ in 1690 when he witnessed a bond. He was thus some sort of employee of the widow of Stobs. James (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Jameses. He may be the James who married Margaret Lillico in Bedrule in 1694. James (17th C.) resident of Acreknowe on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th C.) tenant in Hobsburn according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. James (17th C.) tenant at Doorpool in Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to Adam, who was tenant there at about the same time. James (17th C.) cottar at Rule-townfoot according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th C.) resident at Roan in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. James (17th C.) tenant in Hudshouse in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. James (17th C.) recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 among those ‘Payed but not listed in Hauick Toun’. He was probably from the west side. James (17th/18th C.) tenant in New Headshaw in Ashkirk Parish. He married Catherine Minto and their children included Janet (b.1701), Isobel (b.1705), Andrew (b.1707) and Margaret (b.1709). James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living in Cavers itself in 1715 when his daughter Helen was baptised. Perhaps the same James was in Denholm in 1720 when his son John was baptised. James (17th/18th C.) tenant in Tofts in Kirkton Parish. It is unclear if he was related to the Turnbulls of Tofts. His children included: James (b.1716) and Margaret (b.1718). He was recorded at Nether Tofts in 1718. James (d.c.1724) son of Adam and grandson of Thomas. His father had lost the lands of Hartshaugh and the Kirklands of Kirkton through ‘non-entry’. In 1682 he was entered with his superior in the lands of Wester Swanshield as successor to his grandfather. He was at that time already married to Elizabeth Scott. He may be the same James ‘portioner of Swan-sheil’ who was among those declared as fugitives in 1684 for not conforming to Episcopalianism. He was probably the James recorded as resident at Easter Swanshield in 1694. His son and successor Walter was born about 1700. He was succeeded by Walter (called William in Walter Deans’ history). James (17th/18th C.) candlemaker in Hawick Parish. In 1708 he witnessed a baptism for William Aitken, ‘younger carier’. He married Agnes Henry, who is recorded in 1721 as a teacher of poor children. Probably the same candlemaker James is listed on the west-side of Hawick on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He is recorded as a candlemaker in 1685, and his wife as ‘Isobell hewie’, when their daughter Janet was baptised; the witnesses were William Elliot and Thomas (perhaps a relative). James (17th/18th C.) tailor in Hawick. He is listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He is probably the tailor recorded in the Kirk Session records paying 18s ‘for 3 sticks lost from the quire’. He witnessed baptisms for fellow tailor Alexander Hislop in 1705, for tailor Archibald Scott (along with fellow tailor George Scott) in 1714, and for carrier Simon Mark in 1719. He married Margaret Forrest in 1703; both were from Hawick Parish. Their children included: James (b.1705); and Isobel (b.1709). The witnesses in 1709 were baker John Whillans and tailor William Gledstains. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He is recorded at Wester Parkhill in 1714 when his daughter Janet was baptised. Other children who could be his include: Adam (b.1702); Anna (b.1706); and Mitchell (b.1712). James (17th/18th C.) wright in Cavers. His daughter Helen was baptised in 1722. Some of these children, baptised in Cavers Parish, could also be his: Helen (b.1715); Rachel (b.1716); Margaret (b.1719); John (b.1720); Thomas (b.1725); and Isabel (b.1728). James (17th/18th C.) schoolmaster in Hawick Parish, who probably also acted as Session Clerk. According to the handwriting in the baptismal records, he probably took over in the latter part of 1726, following the death of John Purdom, and perhaps after some interim person. His wife was Margaret Henderson. In 1726 he is ‘schoolmaster in this toun’ when his son Charles was baptised in Hawick, with witnesses John Turnbull (perhaps related) and John Scott. It is unclear how long he served. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Cawfaulds in 1728. He married Elspeth Martin and their children included: Margaret (b.1718); and Archibald (b.1728). The witnesses in 1728 were Thomas and Walter Turnbull (who may have been related). He may be the James who witnessed a baptism (along with Andrew Martin) for James Dryden in 1737. James (b.1709) son of William, he was born at Bedrule Mill, and the family claimed descent from the Turnbulls of Bedrule. He became tenant farmer at the Dykes, where he was recorded in 1742. He married Helen Spindie in Cavers Parish in 1739 and their children included: Thomas (b.1740); James (b.1742); Agnes (b.1744); and William (b.1755). James (18th C.) carrier in Hawick. He married Margaret Currie in 1758 and their children included Robert (b.1758), Janet (b.1760) and Thomas (b.1762). James (b.1736) tenant farmer at Hassendean Bank, son of Adam, who was also tenant there. He could be the James who in July 1774 was paid 2s 5d for ‘sharpening Picks’ as part of a boundary dyke at Hassendean and who in 1782 was tenant of the ‘East end farm of Hassendean’. He was recorded at Hassendean Bank in the Horse Tax Rolls 1785–94. He was still tenant of Hassendean in 1793, when part of the farm was enclosed. He married Agnes, daughter of Thomas Turnbull (of Burnfoot and the Hawick carpet factory). Their children included Adam, who married Betty, daughter of James Scott of Skelfhill. He was the ancestor of the Turnbulls of Merrylaw. James ‘Auld Meldrum’ (d.1781) recorded in the list of deaths in Hawick. He may be the same man as one of the other Jamess. He was surely related to John, who was also recorded as ‘Meldrum’ in 1787 when his daughter Lizzy died. James (18th C.) tailor in Hawick. He may have been related to the earlier tailor of the same name. He married Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’) ‘Norval’ and their children included: Margaret (b.1735); James (b.1739); John (b.1741); and William (b.1745). The witnesses in 1743 were ex-Bailie Robert Howison and wright Walter Scott. James (d.1787) wright in Bedrule. He married Euphan Peden, who died in 1792, aged 62. Their children included: Mary, who died aged 9; James, who died at 16; and William, who lived at Lanton East Park. James (18th C.) resident of Scawmill. He married Margaret Turnbull in Wilton Parish in 1764 and their children included: John (b.1766); George (b.1767); William (b.1769); Elizabeth (b.1770); Margaret (b.1772); and Ann (b.1774). The witnesses in 1770 were Thomas Reid and Robert Ormiston. James (18th C.) resident of Courthill. He married Jean Douglas and their children, baptised in Wilton Parish, included: Janet (b.1760); Margaret (b.1762); Esther (b.1764); Isabel (b.1766);
James (b.1768); William (b.1770); Jean (b.1771); Helen (b.1774); and Rebecca (b.1776). The witnesses in 1770 were John Mathieson and Andrew Turner. He may be the James who witnessed a baptism for James Black at Packhouses in 1774. James (d.1797) resident of Hawick Parish. His death record states he was ‘Schoolmr. Bitlomaster & dean of the guild’. Presumably he held the position of Dean of Guild in Hawick, and was also a teacher somewhere. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, described as ‘Strong man’. His wife Agnes Thomson died in 1787. James (18th C.) farmer at East Middle in Cavers Parish according to the Horse Tax Rolls of 1785. He may be the James whose son Andrew was baptised in Cavers in 1786. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was recorded as an ‘eggger’, i.e. a peddler who collected eggs to sell at markets. In 1794 the death of his daughter and also another child are recorded, with his wife Nelly Wilson dying in 1795. James (1752-1844) younger son of Walter, portioner of Ancrum. In 1787 in Cavers Parish he married Helen (also called Agnes) Rutherford (1761–1821), daughter of the farmer at Knowesouth Orchard. He farmed at Broomhall near Ancrum and later at Newcastle (probably not Newcastleton, as reported by some sources). He may be the James, grandfather of William G. about whom a story is told regarding a smuggler dropping 2 kegs from his horse as he rode past the farm, which he managed to conceal while pointing the excisemen in the direction the smuggler had gone. His children included: John, farmer at Spittal-on-Rule; James (b.1789); Elizabeth Rutherford (b.1791); Betty (b.1793); Helen (b.1795); Isabella (b.1797); and Agnes (b.1799). He was recorded as ‘Independent’ at ‘Honeytown’ (i.e. Honeyburn farm) in 1841, and he died there. James (b.1754/5–1825) ancestor of the Turnbells of Bonchester Bridge and the Hawick grocers. It is unclear precisely where he was born and who his parents were. He lived at Hoddleswoodie and other places near Bonchester. He married Betty, daughter of George and Catherine Adamson (possibly the Betty born to George Adamson in Hobkirk in 1760); she died in 1828, aged 77. Their son James (b.1786) was schoolmaster at Denholm and Wilton. Their other children included: George (1783–1861), carrier in Rulewater; William (b.1787), schoolmaster at Hobkirk; Adam, who died in Edinburgh; Alexander, carrier; Thomas, carrier in Newcastleton; and John, grocer in Newcastleton. He and some of his family are buried in Ettleton Cemetery. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1791 he married Margaret Taylor, from Roberton Parish. James (18th/19th C.) soldier in Dalkeith Parish. In 1791 he married Alice Oliver, who was from Hawick. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. In 1792 he married Martha Hogg, who was from Hawick. James (18th/19th C.) carrier recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick. James (18th/19th C.) tenant at Hobkirk Manse lands, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at ‘Hightofts’ (i.e. Upper Tofts), recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 3 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid tax on 2 non-working dogs in 1797. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at Greenhouse in Lilliesleaf Parish. He is listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Lilliesleaf as owner of 7 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid the dog tax at Greenhouse at 1797. James (18th/19th C.) recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as farmer at Highchesters, when he owned 3 horses. He also paid tax for having 2 non-working dogs at Highchesters in the same year. Probably the same James at ‘Haychesters’ was on the 1821 subscription list for William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’. James (b.1774) son of John of Wester Swanshiel. He was born in Hobkirk Parish and became a tenant farmer. In 1799 he was tenant at Philhope when his son was baptised in Robertson parish. He was later tenant farmer at Galalaw outside Hawick, the lands being purchased by his elder brother Robert. He is recorded in the 1841 census at Galalaw Braefoot. He married Mary Stavert in 1798, the marriage being recorded in Yarrow and Robertson Parishes. Their earlier children were baptised in Robertson. They included: John (b.1799), Mary (b.1809), James (b.1812) and Helen (b.1815), all baptised in Robertson; Eliza (b.1801), Catherine (b.1803), Mary (b.1805), Robert (b.1807), Ann (b.1808), Walter (b.1811), Agnes (b.1814), Margaret (b.1816), Margaret (again, b.1818) all baptised in Yarrow; and William (b.1821), baptised in Wilton. James (18th/19th C.) married Annie ‘Maire’ in Robertson Parish in 1800. James (18th/19th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. In 1798 he married Margaret Ainslie, who was also from Hawick. Their children included: Walter (b.1801); an unnamed child who died in 1816; and Janet, who married coal carrier William Graham. James (1773–1858) son of Walter of Chesterhall near Ancrum. He became farmer at Billerwell in the Rule valley, along with his sons. He married Margaret, daughter of Mark Turnbull, tenant of Ancrum Mill, and she died in 1862, aged 78. His wife’s brother was also Mark Turnbull, tenant of Lanton Mill, whose grandson was Provost of Melrose. Their children were: Walter (1805–64, who was the last of Chesterhall); Thomas (b.1809); James (b.1815); John (b.1817); Robert (b.1819); George Purvis (b.1821); Margaret (1824/5–63), who died unmarried; and Mary (1812/3–60), who married John Laidlaw in Jedburgh. His daughter Elizabeth married Robert, son of John Grieve in 1853. William may have been another son.

James (b.1782/3) stock-making in Wilton. He was listed among heads of households in Wilton in 1835, when he was at Damside, and in 1840 and 1841, when he was at Roadhead. His wife was Mary and their children included William, James and Mary. He may be the stockmaker James whose infant child’s death is recorded in 1822. James (18th/19th C.) listed at Wilton among subscribers to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. James (b.c.1780) thatcher living at Firth in Lilliesleaf Parish. He was there in 1851 with family members Janet and Andrew. James (1786–1834) son of James and Betty Adamson (not Anderson, as stated in one source). He was born in Hobkirk Parish, being baptised at Hoddeswoodie, and came from the Nursery House Turnbulls. He was schoolmaster at Denholm and then became the successor to James Elliot at Wilton School in the 1810s. His brother William was schoolmaster at Hobkirk. He was said to have a reputation for being an excellent teacher. He married Margaret Dalgleish (cousin of William Dalgleish, who established the ‘Coutard Fund’) in Cavers Parish in 1808 and they had 12 children, including: James, Clerk of Session in Edinburgh; John, who died in London; Agnes (who was also a teacher); Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’), who married James Dalgleish; Jane or Janet; Charters, who married Elliot Armstrong; Elspeth; George; Jane; Mary Scott; and William, auctioneer in Edinburgh. His wife and eldest daughter ran the ‘Image Garden’ school around the 1840s, and she survived him by about 50 years. James (18th/19th C.) son of Mark and an Elliot. He was descended from the Chesterhall, Ancrum branch of the Turnbulls. He was a shepherd at Minto Kames, then at Barnes and later at Old Fodderlee. His children include Robert (also a shepherd), Mark (a joiner in Peebles), James (a shepherd in Kingledoors) and a daughter (who kept house for him at Old Fodderlee). James ‘Wiggam’ (18th/19th C.) Denholm tailor who was described as ‘half-witted’. He also acted as the village crier, ringing the Dead Bell, announcing the name, and time and place of the burial and usually adding ‘and ye’re a’ invited to the funeral’. James (b.1799/1800) originally from Bowden, he was a blacksmith, grocer and spirit dealer at Appletreehall. He was listed as blacksmith at Appletreehall among heads of households in Wilton Parish 1835–41. In 1851 he was farming at Fenwick, having 140 acres and employing 2 servants. His wife was Margaret and their children included Jane, Jessie, Agnes, James and Thomas. He is recorded at Appletreehall in 1861 as a grocer and widower, with children Agnes and Thomas.

James ‘Jimmie Springkie’ (b.1800) Hawick shoemaker who lived to an old age. His nickname derived from that of his father, ‘Auld Springkell’. In Slater’s 1852 directory he is listed as a shoemaker on the Cross Wynd. He is probably the James recorded at 4 Cross Wynd in the 1851 and 1861 censuses, employing a handful of men in his shoemaker’s business. He lived with his sister Margaret. He could be the son of Robert and Mary Laidlaw, born in Hawick in 1798, with sister Margaret born in 1793. He probably married Martha Blythe, who died in 1826, aged just 21. James (19th C.) son of Hawick stockmaker William. He was one of 5 men charged for mobbing Tory supporters during the 1837 election. He was found guilty and imprisoned for 12 months. James (b.1800/1) born in Southdean Parish, he was farmer at Harelaw in Lilliesleaf Parish. In 1851 he was farmer of 11 acres. His wife was Allison and their children included William, James, Isobella, Eliza, Jane and Christina. James (1801–77) born in Minto Parish, he was forester at Cavers estate for almost 50 years. In 1828 he married Jane Weir, who appears to have already been deceased by 1841. He was living at ‘Cavers Cottage’ in 1851 and at ‘Cavers Wood’ in 1861. The family belonged to the Associate congregation in Jedburgh. He had a family of 2 daughters and 3 sons: John (b.c.1829), the eldest; Margaret (b.c.1830); Robert (b.1832), clothier in Denholm; James (b.c.1837); and Jean (b.c.1840). James (19th C.) recorded being ‘in Gillbraehead’ in 1832 when accused of fathering a child with Janet Scott from Gillfoot. However, he denied it. He was surely related to the blacksmiths of Gillbraehead.

James (1814–74) son of Robert and Ann Mathieson. He was a Hawick draper, conducting the town’s highest class drapery business of the time at 11 High Street. This is listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1841 he was living with his parents on the Cross Wynd. In 1851 he was listed as a Master Draper, employing 4 apprentices, 5 women and 4 girls. In 1861 he was employing 2 men, 2 boys and 5 women. He was on the 'Eternal Council' and was twice Senior Bailie. He was probably the Turnbull who was Junior Bailie in 1859, when he was crouper for the centenary Burns night. He was also Treasurer of East Bank Kirk, succeeding his father, was appointed Session Clerk in 1851 and was presented with a plate service by the congregation in 1865. He married Wilhelmina, daughter of Walter John Grieve, farmer in Southfield; she died in 1878, aged 58. Their children included: Robert (1850–53); Ann (c.1855–61); and Christina Mary, who married John Wield. He died at Wilton Grove (his son-in-law’s house) and is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. James (1815–88) son of James, farmer at Billerwell. He was joint tenant of Billerwell with his brothers, and also of Prieston. He also farmed for a while at Ashkirk Mill. He is probably the James recorded as farmer at Wester Fodderlee in the 1860s. He married Mary, daughter of William Scott. Their children were: James Robert, who emigrated to Edmonton; William Scott, farmer at Tythehouse; Annie; George Purvis, who emigrated to Canada; Mary; twin to George Purvis; Walter, farmer at Hartshaugh Mill; Mark, twin of Walter; Elizabeth, 'Betsy', married Samuel White from Stow; Janet; Thomas, farmer at Greenholm, near Newcastleton; and Andrew, also farmer at Greenholm. He died at Midburn in Hobkirk Parish. James (b.1819) eldest son of James, Wilton Schoolmaster, and Margaret Dalgleish, he was born in Wilton. He became Clerk of Session in Edinburgh. It is said that he knew the law so well that he was often consulted by the professional lawyers. He married Jessie, sister of banker Archibald Douglas. Their children were Catherine (who married Henry Bunge) and James (a clerk in Register House). James (b.1822/3) born in Ancrum Parish, he was a blacksmith and shepherd at Spittal-on-Rule. He was recorded there in 1851 and 1861. His wife was Jane Scott, daughter of a Hawick joiner, with his mother-in-law being Agnes Scott. Their children included George B. and Adam. James (b.1823) eldest son of John. He took over the tenancy of Spittal farm. He was miller at Spittal Mill on the 1852 directory. He is recorded there in 1861, as farmer of 500 acres, employing 17 labourers. He was living there with his step-mother Anne E. James (1825–78) eldest son of John, grocer of Newcastleton, and descended from a Hobkirk branch of the Turnbulls. His uncle James was schoolmaster at Wilton. In 1855 he acquired the old-established grocery and wine merchants at 51 High Street, and it lasted for more than a century. He also ran a cart out to Whitrope when the tunnel was being built there. Accounts for the period 1889–1964 are listed in the National Register of Archives. In 1854 he married Anne, eldest daughter of James Robson, a Jedburgh shoemaker; she died in 1890, aged 65. Their children were: Isabella Young, who married Charles Firth of Fell Grove, Yorkshire; Mina, who married William Cunningham of Brisbane, Australia; James Robson, who died unmarried; John; William, who emigrated to Toowoomba, Queensland; Mary, who married Frederick William Sykes from Leeds; Margaret; and Robert, who moved to Brisbane, Australia. He is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. James (19th C.) recorded in 1852 as saddler and ironmonger in Lilliesleaf. If this was not an error for 'Thomas', then they must as least have been closely related. It is also possible he was the same James who ran the Subscription Library in Lilliesleaf in 1852. James (b.1824/5) shepherd at Blawearie in Cavers Parish in 1861. His wife was Jane Scott and their children included George B. and Adam. James Douglas (b.1833) son of Thomas and Mary Beattie. He emigrated to Australia, where he farmed at Mount Prospect, Leichhardt and Kotupna in Victoria, and in 1885 settled at Guy Fawkes (now called 'Ebor') in New South Wales. Robyn Crossle wrote a book ‘Turnbull: lives and letters’ (c.1994) about him, containing extracts of many family letters, especially from his brother Gen. Peter Stephenson. He married Esther Rathie, daughter of his cousin Barbara Andison and James Rathie. Their children were Thomas Scott, Barbara, James Douglas, Mary, Archibald, Esther, John, William, Adam Robert and Barbara Esther Mabel. James (b.1836) son of Robert, he was farmer at Galalaw. He married Margaret, daughter of builder George Tait. Their children were: Robert, who was an engineer in Toronto; James, who later farmed at Galalaw and married his cousin Amy, daughter of draper and tobacconist J.A. Turnbull; John, a science teacher in Kilwinning; and George, town missionary in Kirkintilloch. James (19th C.) schoolmaster at St. Cuthbert’s School during part of 1893, between Mr. Jay and Mr. Inglis. James (19th C.) resident at East Bank House. He was one of the executors for the firm of Dickson & Turnbull when it folded in about 1876. He may have been a brother of George, the main Turnbull partner. James (1846–1923) engineer born in Hawick, who was long involved with Allars Kirk. His father died during the cholera outbreak of 1849. He wrote a memoir, which was published (at the insistence of John R. Purdom) as ‘Hawick in Bygone Days’ (1927), which contains an invaluable record of Hawick shops, businesses, people and customs of the mid-1800s. James Robert (b.1852) eldest son of James, tenant at Billerwell. He emigrated to Canada and worked as an auctioneer in Edmonton. James (19th/20th C.) son of James, he was farmer at Galalaw like his father. He married his cousin Amy, daughter of draper and tobacconist J.A. Turnbull. Jane (b.c.1775) originally from England, she was listed as grocer and spirit dealer at Bonchester Bridge in 1841. She was probably proprietor of the Horse and Hounds Inn. She lived there with Thomas and John, who were probably her sons. Jane née Scott (b.1777/8) postmistress in Denholm in the mid-19th century. She is probably the vintner of that name recorded in Denholm in 1837 and 1852. She married Alexander. In 1841 she was ‘Jeany Turnbul Sear.’ living at the Cross Keys Inn with her joiner son John, daughter Jeany and nephew John Scott. She was listed as postmistress in 1851, with her daughter Jane as assistant. Jane (1792–1866) daughter of William of Burnfoot. She lived at 5 Slitrig Crescent with her older sister Eleanor. They were referred to as ‘the Misses Turnbull’ among the gentry of Hawick in Slater’s 1852 directory. By 1861 she was living at the same address with her niece, also Eleanor Turnbull. Janet (15th/16th C.) daughter and co-heiress of Walter Turnbull of Gargunnock. In 1501, along with her sister Margaret, she was infefted in the lands of Hассendeanbank. In 1509 she and Elizabeth (perhaps another sister) had sasines for Gargunnock and other lands in Stirlingshire. She probably married Thomas Elphinstone, who had a charter for half the lands of Hассendeanbank (along with her) from Cuthbert Cunningham, Earl of Glencairn in 1512. And she may later have been the Mrs. Janet Seton (nee Turnbull) who infefted Archibald Douglas of Timpedean in Hассendeanbank. She may be the Janet who had a sasine for Lanton in 1502 (with Elizabeth and Margaret having the sasine in 1506). Janet (d.bef. 1526) granted a charter for part of Philiphaugh in 1509. She may have been daughter or wife of Adam of Philiphaugh. She is probably the deceased Janet described in 1526 as having possessing a third of Philiphaugh. This piece of land reverted to Ralph, whose widow Margaret Ker gained them according to the 1526 document. It is unclear how she was related to the Janet recorded possessing Philiphaugh in 1555. Jannet (16th C.) recorded in 1555 when her son John was served heir to her lands of Philiphaugh. She could have been wife of Robert of Philiphaugh, who is recorded in the 1530s. Jean (d.bef.1632) daughter of Walter of Templehall. Along with her sister Beatrix she inherited the lands of Templehall and Brewlands from her uncle Andrew (son of David of Wauchope) in 1604. She must have been a minor then, since in 1605 her ‘tutor’ George Turnbull (2nd son of Hector) acted on their behalf to removed several people from their lands. In 1632, by which time she was deceased, her sister claimed the other half of their inherited lands. Jean (b.1819) daughter of Alexander and Jane Scott. Her mother was postmistress in Denholm, and her brother John was a joiner. They lived at the Cross Keys Inn, where she was also a spirit dealer. John (14th C.) had a charter for the lands of ‘Hundallwalschop’, i.e. Hundleshope in Peeblesshire. This was given by King David II in 1357, as documented in a transumpt of 1534, with his surname recorded as ‘Trumbull’. His daughter and heiress Margaret married William Gledstains of that Ilk. Margaret later resigned her lands of Roberton to her son John; this suggests that this John of Hundleshope was from the Borthwick Water Turnbuls. John (14th C.) granted lands in Dumfriesshire by Dougal McDougall in the reign of David II. The lands were ‘Litlegrewy’, ‘Glen-garg’ and ‘Glencraig’. John (14th C.) Sheriff of Selkirkshire according to the Exchequer Rolls of 1360. He was also recorded as Deputy to the Sheriff in 1364. It is unclear how he was related to other Turnbuls in Selkirkshire. John (14th/15th C.) granted the lands of Wauchopehead in a charter of Robert III in 1404. The lands had been forfeited by ‘John Bour’. John (14th/15th C.) son of Adam ‘of Whytehope’, i.e. Whithope in the Borthwick valley. He was granted lands at Hассendeanbank in 1409 by the Baron, William Cunningham of Kilmaurs. Several generations of Johns subsequently held these lands. John of Falshope (14th/15th C.) said to have had a daughter who married George Scott, 2nd Laird of Synton. His lands were either Phawhope near the head of the Ettrick or Fauldshope opposite Oakwood. He may have been ancestor of Sir Thomas who held the same lands in the late 15th century. John of Minto (d.1423), nicknamed ‘out with the spear’ for his fiery temperament. In 1390 he granted part of the Barony of Minto to Sir William Stewart of Jedworth, probably his nephew. He was captured by the English in 1399 (along with Sir Richard Rutherford) and imprisoned in the Tower of London until 1413. Thereafter he took part in the Battle of Cravant (part of the Hundred Years War), supporting the French, at which perhaps as many as 3,000 Scots fell. He appears to have died there, although it is also alleged that he died later of leprosy, causing dispute over the title to his lands. He was succeeded by his son Walter. There was an inquiry in 1424 into whether the grant to Sir William Stewart was legal, because of his supposed leprosy. His sister may have married Sir Alexander Stewart of Darnley. John of Fulton (15th C.) part of the investigation into the leprosy of John of Minto in 1425/6. About the same time he also witnessed a retour of Walter Scott in the lands of Eilrig, and is there recorded as ‘Johannem Turnbull de Foul- toune’, along with David Turnbull. He may be the John who was on the 1429/30 ‘retour’ panel for Ker of Altonburn. It is surely related to the William of Hassendeanbank who is recorded in 1432. John (15th C.) listed in 1463/4 among the local men who were rewarded by the King for assisting in the capture of John Douglas of Balveny. He is surely related to other Turnbulls who were named (Andrew, Stephen and Richard), but it is unclear how. He is recorded as ‘Johannes Turnebule’. It is possible he is the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John of Ern Cleuch (15th C.) member of the panel that met in Jedburgh to rule on the dispute over the lands of Kirkton Mains and the Flex in 1464/5. Probably the same John ‘Turnebull’ was on the inquest panel to decide on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers in 1464/5 (along with Hector, George and William of Minto). He is probably related to the David of Ern Cleuch who is recorded 30 years later. John (15th C.) granted the lands of ‘Stowislee’ (i.e. Stouslie) in the Barony of Chamberlain Newton, resigned by William Lindsay of Garmiton. He is described as dwelling in Borthwick (presumably the Borthwick Water). In a document of 1468 he binds himself on payment of 100 merks Scots on 40 days notice to resign the lands in favour of John Lord Lindsay of the Byres. John (15th C.) recorded in 1468 when he was one of 2 men appointed to represent Selkirkshire on a Parliamentary inquiry to assess the tax on barons. It is unclear whether the is the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John of Harden (15th C.) probably the last Turnbull of Harden, son of Walter (who is recorded in 1468). He had a charter for the lands of Harden in 1482, granted by the Baron of Wilton, Henry Wardlaw. A letter under the seal of James IV in 1491 requires John Scott, Baron of Wilton to receive Alexander, Lord Home as tenant in the lands of Harden, which had fallen into the King’s hands because he had ‘died a bastard without lawful heirs’. He could be the same John who held the lands of Stouslie. He may be the John who acted as one of the Earl of Angus’ Bailies for infefting David Scott of Brauchholme in the lands of Mangerton in 1482. John (15th C.) listed in 1476 as being ‘of Phirth’, which could possibly be Firth in Lilliesleaf Parish. He is among a number of Border Lairds involved in an action over lands in Linton Parish, registered with Parliament. He is probably the John ‘duellands in the Fithe’ who in 1479 was ordered (along with James Alemoor of that Ilk) to pay rentals of lands in Cavers Parish to Robert of ‘Murheid’. John (15th C.) son of Thomas of Phaup. He leased Phaup at least in the period 1483–7. He was listed as son and heir of Thomas ‘of Fawlishop’ in 1486 when he leased the lands of Huntly. John (15th C.) witness to the document of 1488 in which Greenwood (i.e. Girnwood) and the Lyne were leased by Sir Thomas of Greenwood to Robert Scott of Allanhaugh. It was signed at St. Mary’s Church in Ettrick Forest and his name appears as ‘Johanne Turnbull’. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John (15th C.) recorded in 1490 when he was assigned the lands of ‘Corscleuch’ (i.e. Crosscleuch) by James IV. He may thus have been the first of the ‘Turnbulls of Crosscleuch. John (15th C.) son of Robert in Wolfelee. He was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493. John (15th C.) tenant in Ruecastle, recorded in 1493. He had remission for stealing 6 oxen, 2 horses and 12 cows from tenants ‘de sitir’ in the accounts for the Jedburgh Justice Aire when William Douglas of Cavers was fined for his non-appearance; his nickname there is given as ‘casy’. He is also recorded as ‘Johne Turnbule, callit Case, in Nethir Bonechestir’ in the accounts for the Jedburgh Justice Aire in 1495; he contributed 4 cows. He was probably related to the David of Bonchester recorded in 1502. John (15th C.) recorded as being in Minto in 1493 when, along with 4 others, he ‘came in the King’s Will for treasonably concealing and Stouthref of ten score pas-pennys pertaining to the King, found in the Kirk of Mynto’. His surety was the Laird of Bedrule. It is possible he is the same John of Minto, who was recorded in the early 16th century. Perhaps the same man was recorded in 1498 as ‘Suer[?] Johannes turnbul’; along with William of Minto, Ralph Ker and others, he was part of a bond to act upon men who were already declared as fugitives. He may also be the John who was recorded as father-in-law to William Young in Minto, for who William of Minto served as surety in 1502. John (15th C.) resident of Bedrule, recorded at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1493. He had remission for committing theft before the time of his previous remission and also for involvement with the Duke of Albany during the earlier revolt. John ‘Blinnd John’ (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 as ‘Sande Turnbulis brothir of Ballentyn, callit blind Johne’ in the accounts of the Justice-aire of Jedburgh, when he contributed 2 cows (for the expenses of the court, presumably in lieu of a fine). This is probably Bellendean near Roberton, but other places may be possible. His brother was clearly Alexander. John (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1494/5 as resident of Dryden. He was allowed to compound for the crimes of commuting with rebels who were at the horn, specifically Patrick and Gilbert. Probably the same John, son of Andrew of Dryden was recorded in 1494/5 among men who John Scott of Deloraine was allowed to compound for associating with; they were said to have stolen 60 sheep belonging to William Murray from Sundhope. In the Register of the Privy Seal in 1498 he is listed being ‘in Dridane’, presumably meaning he farmed at Dryden, near Teviothead. Along with John Scott from Northhouse, he received a pardon for his crimes of assisting the English. In 1502 he was surety (along with Alexander in Commonside) for Philip in Whithope and David in Carlinpool. Probably the same John in Dryden was surety in 1502 for William Anderson and fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. John (15th C.) son of Matthew in Hassendean. In 1494/5 he and his brother Nicholas had remission for the murder of Robert Redford, with John Gledstains as surety. They are recorded in the Treasurer’s accounts for 1494/5 having obtained remission from the King. John (15th/16th C.) name of 2 men listed in the 1501 Exchequer Rolls, along with Robert, Ninian, George and David. Their £40 fine was granted to Thomas, son and heir of George of Bedrule. John (15th/16th C.) son of Philip, probably the Laird of Whithope. He is mentioned in 1494/5 when the Laird of Bedrule acted as his surety and was fined for his non-appearance at the Justice-aire. He was also recorded in 1501 among 10 men whose fines were remitted, including Turnbulls of Fulton and Bonchester; his name is recorded as ‘Johannis Turnbull Philipson’. John ‘Blue John’ (15th/16th C.) one of the Turnbulls and others who were failing to appear in court in Jedburgh in 1502 to answer for the murder of Robert Oliver. Many of the others were from Rulewater, suggesting he was also. His nickname was recorded as ‘blew Johme’, and he was distinct from John in Ruecastle, John in Jedburgh and John in Wells, who were also listed. John (15th/16th C.) recorded in Jedburgh in 1502 when he was among a large group of men who failed to appear to the charge of murder of Robert Oliver and were declared as fugitives. Mark Ker of Dolphinston was fined for his non-appearance. John (15th/16th C.) recorded as tenant in Wells in 1502. Along with about 20 Turnbulls and others he failed to appear to answer for the murder of Robert Oliver. Mark Ker in Dolphinston was called to enter him, and subsequently fined; while he was put to the horn and forfeited his goods; the Sheriff of Roxburgh served as his surety (unlike for most of the other men). He was probably related to Adam in Wells, who was also listed. John of Tofts (15th/16th C.) served as surety in 1502 for George, described as ‘in Toftis’, who was surely a close relative. George, along with Robert, called ‘Muriale’ had been involved in a raiding party that burned and stole livestock from Riddell. Probably the same John ‘in toftis’ is mentioned in 1493 when his son Cock had remission for theft of an ox from Minto. John (15th/16th C.) recorded in Belses in 1502. James Davidson ‘in canmys’ (perhaps Camieston) was surety for him, and he was also surety for himself, and fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. John (15th/16th C.) recorded being ‘de france’ in 1502 at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh. The Master of Angus (George Douglas) was fined for failing to arrest him. It is unclear where ‘France’ was located. John of Minto (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as an associate of Peter in Bonchester. Along with his accomplices, they had burned grain belonging to George Rutherford at ‘Sandystannis’. He may be the same as one of the 2 men called John ‘in Mynto’ who were listed on the 1516 pardon for Turnbulls who assisted Alexander, Lord Home; one of these men is stated to be a cousin of William of Minto. John (15th/16th C.) Abbot of Newbattle 1503–20. It is unclear how he might be related to other Turnbulls. John (15th/16th C.) recorded along with Robert as witness to a document relating to the lands of Allanshaws (in Lauderdale) and Melrose Abbey. John (15th/16th C.) recorded as tenant of Hornshole in 1516, on a long list of Turnbulls given remission for any role in helping the treasonous Homes. He was probably related to James and Adam, recorded as tenants at Hornshole in 1501 and 1502, respectively John (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1527 as owner of a tenement of land in Selkirk, lying between the main street and the Ettrick. Probably the same John is recorded in Selkirk in 1532. John ‘Black Sow’ (d.1531) hanged for ‘Common Theft, outputting and inputting thereof’. There is no information about his relationship to other Turnbulls. John (16th C.) recorded as ‘Bailie in that part’ along with Hector of Barnhills in a sasine in the Barony of Feu-Rule in 1531. John (16th C.) listed in 1531 as ‘tutor of the lord of Phillophaucht’ and grandson of Robert ‘Trumbill’ when an acknowledgement was made in Selkirk for a tack being given to Mark Ker (Burgess of Selkirk) for 5 years for lands in Philiphaugh. Probably the same John ‘of Phillophaucht’ witnessed a document in 1530/1. Robert was also recorded as tutor of Philhiaugh in 1531 and surely related. He was presumably tutor for John, who was son of Ralph. John of Hassendeanbank (d.c. 1540) son and heir of George of Hassendeanbank. In 1533 he made a declaration in Selkirk that he had tried to pay Andrew Davidson for the redemption of a tenement there. He was also recorded in a court case of 1540 involving a dispute between Thomas Turnbull, tenant of Rawfalt, with William Scott of Hassendean, over a ‘wadset’ of his (as well as other issues) for the lands of ‘Nether Copit Rig’ and ‘Easter Mains, called Copit Rig’. He is probably the John ‘of Hassendene’ recorded in 1538 when he discharged Andrew Ker and his wife Marion Pringle for all previous fees on the lands of ‘Mablylynflat’.

Turnbull

In 1540 he sold a tenement in Selkirk to John Thomson. He is probably the John ‘of Hassindene burn or bank’ who sold land in Selkirk to Adam Vogan in 1544; Henry was one of the witnesses and may have been related. His family appear to have held the lands of Hassendeanbank since 1409. John (16th C.) early example of a Turnbull not directly associated with the Borders. He was Deacon of the Guild of Wrights in Cupar, Fife. In 1554 he and others were imprisoned for leading the Craftsman of Cupar in a revolt against their Provost and Bailies. John (16th C.) recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books in 1535. He was chaplain and ‘vicar pensionary of le barechy Benedochy’ (i.e. the parish of Benedochy). His testament was read out in Selkirk, whereby he left everything to his servants and the poor, appointing as executors John Brydon (probably the notary in Selkirk) and his sister (perhaps wife of Brydon). John (16th C.) recorded in 1541 on a list of tenants and other associates of James Douglas of Cavers when he complained about his farm of Whittriggs being burned by Walter Scott of Branzholme. John (d.beef. 1544) Burgess of Selkirk. In 1544 his daughter and sole heir Alison was given sasine of his tenement there. However, confusingly she seems to have shared a tenement with another heir, Margaret. She immediately sold her half tenement to William Elliot. John (16th C.) recorded in 1559 as Clerk of Minto Parish. It is unclear how he was related to other Turnbulls. It is possible that he is the same as ‘Johanne Trummill’, who acted as a witness for the inventory after the death of William Scott of Kirkurd in 1552.

John of Philiphaugh (c.1505–bef. 1582) son and heir of Ralph, Laird of Philiphaugh. He may be the John ‘heir of Phillophaucht’ who witnessed a document in Selkirk in 1535. In 1535 he was ‘of Phiphop’ (but Philiphaugh is probably meant) when his wardship was held jointly by Mark Ker of Kippielaw (his uncle) and Robert (probably an uncle or grandfather). The pair agreed to each hold half of his lands until he came of age. However, in 1536 Robert gave over his half to Mark Ker. He came of age in 1536/7 when described as ‘[illegible] of Philop and lord of the lands of Holdene and Philohphauch’; it seems likely that ‘Phiolph’ refers to land near Philiphaugh and not Philhope in the Borthwick valley. He then appointed his uncle Mark Ker as curator for his lands, failing which Andrew Ker of Auld Roxburgh. In 1539 he was on the inquest panel for Alexander Lauder succeeding to Todrig. Probably the same John of Philiphaugh is recorded in 1558 when he was served heir to his mother Janet, in her 5-acre lands of Philiphaugh. He was also recorded as witness to the 1560 bond between the Rutherfords and the Kers. He is probably the ‘Lard of Phillophaucht’ listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. Perhaps the same John of Philiphaugh in 1579/80 served as an arbitrator on behalf of Thomas Dalgleish of Deuchar and Simon Scott of Gamescleuch in a case against Robert of Burnfoot and Robert of Burnhead and in the same year witnessed the installation of the new Parson and Vicar in Ashkirk. He is probably the Laird of Philiphaugh whose son and heir Mark and other son Robert both witnessed a transaction involving land in Lilliesleaf. Additionally in 1579/80 he and his son and heir Mark witnessed a transaction for lands near Melrose. In 1580 he was deceased when Patrick Murray of Falahill gave sasine of 4 acres of land, with mansion, houses, etc., to his daughters Janet, Agnes, Margaret and Marion (alias ‘Mawsie’); his eldest daughter Elizabeth complained that this sasine should not prejudice her, while Janet and Agnes promised not to sell their parts without the consent of their mother’s brother John Scott in Catslack. The witnesses included John Scott in Catslack, John Murray in Philiphaugh and James Ker in Yair. In 1580/1 he witnessed an agreement involving lands in Hassendeanburn. In 1581 he witnessed a dispute involving Scots in Hundlehope. He was deceased in 1581/2 when his widow Isobel Douglas resigned her thirds and liferents of lands to his son and heir Mark; George in Philiphaugh and William, Burgess of Selkirk, were witnesses. John (16th C.) tenant farmer at Hallrule. His house and yard are referred to in the 1562 Baronial dispute over the lands of Feu-Rule. This could have been the same as John ‘in Roull’ recorded in 1583/4 along with George in Hallrule and Walter in Hobburn, when Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst had an ‘escheat’ to seize their goods for not vacating their lands. John of Hassendeanburn (16th C.) recorded in 1564 when he accused David Elliot (son of Gavin Elliot of Horsleyhill) of stealing 80 sheep from his lands of Hassendean Kirk. It is unclear how he was related to the Turnbuls of Hassendeanbank. John (16th C.) son of Adam in Belses and brother of Hector of Belses. In 1576 Adam had a pledge before the Privy Council that his sons would refrain from thieving; this included him, as well as his brothers ‘Hekie’, David and George. In 1580 he was a witness when his brother Hector gave sasine to his daughter and heir Katherine for his lands in Belses. John of Gatehousecote (16th C.) recorded in 1567 among the list of men accused of treason for assisting James Hepburn, Earl of Bothwell. Probably the same ‘Jok Turnbull in Gaithous Cott’ was listed in 1575 he was among men asked to decide whether Robert Fraser was responsible for stealing some English horses. John (16th C.) tenant in Abbotrule. In 1569 he was warded within the Sheriffdom of Perth, with his sureties being Andrew Home, Commendator of Jedburgh, Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst, Sir Nicholas Rutherford of Hundaloe and Robert Kerr of Woodhead. He could be the same as one of the other Johns. John of Denesyde (16th C.) described as holding a peel house. He was probably a direct ancestor of Adam, who left Denesyde in 1715. He may have been descended from Robert and David who were recorded in 1611. John of Howden (16th C.) recorded in 1576 among a group of Turnbuls and others (from Barnhills, Hallrule, Billerwell, Belses and Chesters) who had a bond with another group of Turnbuls (from Minto, Bewlie, Kames and Troneyhill) and others, not to harm each other. He is surely related to the later John of Howden. In 1580 he was listed among men who owed money to John Dawson in Selkirk. John (16th C.) recorded as Reader of Bedrule 1576–78. George was Reader right after this, so it is possible that one of the names is an error. He also appears to have served as Reader at Abbottrule and Lessuden. It is possible that he was an ex-monk of Dryburgh Abbey. John (16th C.) nephew of Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule, with his father perhaps being Robert. He was listed in 1578/9 as ‘broder sone to the said Sir Thomas’ when members of the family were asked to appear before the Privy Council to answer for the murder of Thomas Shiel. John (16th C.) recorded as tenant in Hutlerburn in 1579 when there was a dispute over a horse with neighbouring tenants in Huntly. John (16th C.) gave a sasine in 1579 of his 10 poundland of ‘Reuhop or Philop’, in the Barony of Hawick and Sheriffdom of Selkirk, to Martin Elliot. This was surely Martin of Braudlie, whose son was Simon of Philhope. He did this with the consent of his son, whose forename is not given. It is possible he is the same as John of Howden, and possibly also John of Philiphaugh. John (16th C.) recorded in 1580 as occupier of 2 rigs in Lilliesleaf. These lay to the east of Porteous Croft, where William Middlemans held lands. John ‘Jock’ (16th C.) tenant of Nether Bonchester. In 1581 he was listed among the 10 men accused of the murder of Walter, son of Wat Turnbull of Bewlie. He could be the brother of David in Belses (with other brothers being Adam and George) accused of harassing the widow of Walter of Rawflat in 1583. John of Minto (16th/17th C.) possibly son of John. He may have been a minor when he succeeded, since Hector Turnbull ‘tutor of Minto’ is recorded in 1553/4 and in 1569. In 1571 he was one of the sureties for the leaders of the Olivers, along with Sir Thomas and 2 Rutherfords. In 1571/2 he signed a bond to act against Borders thieves and signed the ‘Band of Roxburgh’ in 1573. In 1573 he was among men from the Jedburgh area accused by Robert Kerr of Woodhead of raiding his house and farm, although they were acquitted because Kerr had reset the fugitive Kerr of Ferniehirst. In 1575 he was one of the arbitrators for the Elliot in their feud with the Pringles. He also served as surety in 1576. In 1576 he was listed among a group of Turnbuls and others (from Bewlie, Kames and Troneyhill), who had a bond not to harm another group of Turnbuls (from Barnhills, Billerwell, Belses and Chesters); however, there was a complaint a few months later that his ‘servand and dependar’ Walter in Firth attacked Patrick Bennet, servant to Adam of Belses. In about 1578 he signed a bond with other Rutherfords and Turnbuls and another bond between the Kers and the Rutherfords. In 1578/9 he was among 22 Border Lairds who did not appear before the Privy Council when summoned. In 1580 he was ordered, along with Sir Thomas of Bedrule and Wat of Bewlie, to enter pledges into ward in Edinburgh Castle (which apparently he did) or be declared a rebel. He and Wat of Bewlie had a caution for £2000 that they would appear before the Privy Council, with William Redpath of Greenlaw as surety. Also in 1580 he was head of a group of Turnbuls of Minto, Wauchope, Bewlie and Hobsburn who had a bond to keep the peace with the Turnbuls of Bedrule and others. In 1581 he and Martin Elliot of Braithlie were caution for the re-entry of Hob Elliot of Braithlie, as pledge for the Elliots of Gorrenberry. In the same year he was among a large group denounced as rebels for failing to present men to answer their riving crimes and additionally among Border Lairds who denounced their bonds with Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus. Also in 1581 he was accused of being head of a group of Turnbuls who came to the farm of Rawflat and there harassed the widow and children of the murdered Walter Turnbull, then stole the cattle and goods from the farm. In 1583 the Kerrs of Ancrum paid surety for him not to harm Agnes, widow of Walter of Rawflat and her tenants and servants; the document was signed for him, because he could not write. He was among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. And he is recorded in 1584/5 as the first name on a list of Turnbuls, Douglases and others who were to appear before the Privy Council ‘concerning their obedience to his Majesty andquieting of the country’. He is also listed about 1590 among landed men of the Borders and in 1591 when he was among the Barons who pledged their support for the King against the Earl of Bothwell. He is also recorded in 1595 when he was one of the main signatories of a letter of assurance for the behaviour of the Turnbuls descended from the house of Minto; this included the Turnbuls of Hallrule, Barnhills, Gatehousecote and ‘David Daviesoume of the Campes’. In 1599 he served as cautioner for entering the Lorraines who were accused of the murder of David Turnbull, heir of Wauchope. His name is recorded in 1603 on a long list of local landowners whom the Baron of Hassenden (James Cunningham, Earl of Glencairn) was trying to remove. In 1603 his son Thomas was served heir to his lands in Minto (suggesting he was deceased by then). John ‘Jock’ (16th/17th C.) nephew of George of Belses. In 1603 he was recorded as ‘Jok Trumbill in Belsis’ when his uncle George was convicted of ‘the filthie cryme of Incest and Adulterie’ with his wife Marion. John (16th/17th C.) from Braidhaugh. He is recorded in 1601 among a group of Turnbuls and Lorraines accused by Englishman Gray of Morpeth of stealing from him. William ‘of Brodehaugh’ is listed after him and so presumably his brother or son. John (16th/17th C.) tenant in Mackside. He is recorded in 1601 when he was accuses by Mr. Gray of Morpeth of being part of a group of Scotsmen of stealing from him. The others were Lorraines of Appotside and Turnbuls of Braidhaugh. He is also recorded as ‘in Maksyd’ in 1605 when he was pledged to appear at court in Edinburgh. John (16th/17th C.) described as ‘in Tempilhall’ in 1604 when he was ‘Bailie in that part’ for James Sandilands, Baron of Feurule. In 1605 he was one of the people asked to remove themselves from the lands of Templehall and Brewlands. Another John, also tenant at Templehall or Brewlands, is also mentione in the same action. John of Barnhills (d.c.1628) eldest son of Hector of Barnhills. He had a marriage contract of 1597 with Isobel, daughter of George Turnbull of Hallrule. This was followed by a grant of the half lands of Hallrule in 1603, when he was still a minor. He had a charter for the lands of Barnhills in 1607, and a charter of confirmation in 1618. In 1609 he and his father Hector were part of an action brought by David, son of John Scott ‘of the Tour in Hawick’, for not paying what they had borrowed from him. In 1613 he sold ‘10 acres of Easter Barnhills’ to Ragwell Bennet. In 1617 there was a ‘renunciation’ to him from James and George Scott (which branch of the Scotts is unclear). He had a ‘wadset’ with Gilbert Eliott (both elder and younger) of Stobs in 1617, and some kind of financial arrangement with Ragwell Bennet in 1618. His brother William in Langraw succeeded to the lands of Barnhills in 1628. John (16th/17th C.) one of the Turnbuls who were accuse in 1606 of raiding and burning Appotside and Harwood in the period 1598–1605. He is recorded as ‘Johnne Trumbill, sone to Hectour of Wauchope’. His brothers included George (also accused in this trial), Thomas (who succeeded to Wauchope) and probably David (who was originally the heir). He was acquitted, although his brother Thomas was found guilty. John (16th/17th C.) son of Robert and grandson of Sir Thomas of Bedrule. He married Judith Forster, probably in the 1590s. John (17th C.) son of George in Philiphaugh. In 1601 he was served heir to his father’s 5-merk land there, called ‘Bairborisland’. He could be the same man as John of Philiphaugh, who was among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. He was in turn succeeded by his son William in 1606. John of Howden (17th C.) member of the ‘assyse’ in Dumfries in 1622 and 1623. Also in 1623 he is recorded in a letter of inhibition in Selkirk, for non-payment to Sir John Stewart of Traquair. He could be the Turnbull of Howden who held half the lands of Philliphaugh in the early 1600s, succeeding his father George in the 5-merk land there, called ‘Bairborisland’. He could be the same man as John of Philiphaugh, who was among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. In 1627 he concedes some lands in Philiphaugh to Douglas of Timpendean in 1655. John of Minto (b.1620s) son of John and Elizabeth Eliott. He was brother of William and Robert. He married Rachel Inglis in 1641, even although he was technically too young; this was because his father had died while in military service (and also through the help of his uncle William Turnbull, minister of Makerstoun). In the 1643 Land Tax Rolls he was owner of the main part of Minto, along with ‘Mr. William Turnbull’ (his uncle) and Elizabeth Elliott (his mother), valued at £2006 13s 4d. He was also listed as holding the ‘Minister of Makerston’s Lands, being Hornshole’, valued at £100. He is probably the John who was in 1655 served heir to his father John of Minto in 1/3 of the lands and Barony of Minto, including a half merk of land in Minto, with advowson of the church, ‘2 parts of the said lands undispos’d’. At the same time he also inherited 1 merkland of Hornshole. It is unclear what his relationship was with John of Knowe, but it seems easy to mix them up; in 1655 he received from John of Knowe his third of the rent of Hyndlee and Rouchhope and in 1656 rented Minto Craig to him (definitively proving they were not one and the same man). In 1657 he was the heritable proprietor of the lands of Hornshole when he had a ‘wadset’ for them with John Scott of Brieryyards, with the consent of William Turnbull, minister of Makerstoun. He appears to have owned part of Standhill in 1660 and could be the John in Standhill recorded in the 1643, 1663 and 1678 Land Tax Rolls. Payments to Lord Lyon in 1662 suggest this is when the family matriculated their arms. He was renewed as a Roxburghshire J.P. in 1663. He was probably the Laird of Minto recorded in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1663 paying £2006 13s 4d. His wife may be the ‘Lady Minto’ who paid tax on £200 for lands in Southdean Parish in 1663. He had one child, also John, and father and son are also easy to confuse. It was probably his son John who sold off the Minto estate. John (17th C.) described as ‘indweller in Machsyde’ when he was witness to a sasine in Rulewater in 1653. John of Minto (d.bef. 1684) son of John. He was involved in a bond with John Turnbull of Knowe, partly paid off in 1668. He was probably the John, recorded along with William in James Wilson’s list of local landowners of the mid-to-late 17th century. He was probably also the same John of Minto who was later married to Rachel, daughter of Cornelius Ingles of ‘Eastbarnes’ (she is recorded as his wife in 1681). In 1672 he had a charter of the Barony of Minto, which was ratified in 1681. In 1673 they were involved in a land deal with Walter Scott of Harwood, selling off the Minto estate, and ending its connection with his family, which had lasted many generations. He also sold about a third of the lands of Minto to Gilbert Elliott of Craigend (who was probably his maternal uncle, and not the same man as Sir Gilbert Elliott, who would unite them into the Barony of Minto in 1706). It seems likely that he was forced to sell off his lands to clear debts (but it may be that the arrangements in the 1670s were only wadsets, and he lost the lands for good in the 1690s). In 1674 he became a Burgess of Edinburgh in right of his wife Rachel (so her father must have been a Burgess too). His wife is recorded recovering the ‘wadset’ with the Earl of Tarras over lands in the Barony of Minto in the period 1682-94. This must be the same John of Minto described as deceased in 1684 when his son John was entered as a Burgess of Edinburgh in his right. He had unnamed children buried in Greyfriars Cemetery in 1670 and 1674. John of Langshaw (17th C.) appointed one of the Commissioners for Roxburghshire (along with Harry McDougall of Makerstown) in 1665. John of Knowe (d.1675/6) probably eldest son and successor as Laird to Thomas. In 1652 his brother William was appointed as tutor to the children of their relative Thomas in ‘Chesterhouse’ (probably Chesterhall near Ancrum). He appears to have rented Hyndlee and Rouchhope (along with other farmers) from John of Minto in 1655, and he rented Minto Craig from John of Minto in 1656. There is an account relating to him from 1664 among records in Selkirk. In 1655 he is recorded in a ‘tack’ with Thomas Turnbull, farmer at Hassendeanbank, and in 1657 in an ‘inhibition’ against Robert Turnbull, son of a Jedburgh merchant. In a discharge of 1658 he is listed along with other Turnbulls, suggesting that he was son of Thomas and brother of William. He is recorded in a bond with James Scott in 1658. He was fined £2,000 in 1662, after the Restoration. He was recorded on the Land Tax Rolls of 1663, paying £227. He was on a list of landowners of Hassendean Parish in 1666, and he complained against the planned division of that parish in the same year. He paid annual rent to the treasurer of Selkirk in 1667. In 1668 he is mentioned as cautioner for John of Minto (making it clear that they were not the same person, although their relationship is unclear). It was established in 1670 that he owned the burial place within the bellhouse of Hassendean Kirk. His wife Agnes Liddell died in 1648. He was probably succeeded by another John, who may have been the John (son of John) who became an apprentice surgeon with Walter Turnbull in Edinburgh in 1675. His daughter Helen married Thomas Turnbull of Tofts in 1669. In 1678 Grizel (sister of Thomas of Knowe), who married Adam Scott of Burnhead, was probably his daughter. His children John, Alexander and Isobel are recorded in 1679 receiving money from his estate. Two wills (one dated 1661, while he was still alive, and another in 1676, possibly after he died) are among the papers of the Horsburgh family in the National Archives. His death is recorded on a table tomb in the old Minto graveyard, along with Thomas of Knowe (d.1646). John of Firth (17th C.) recorded receiving land from Walter Riddell in 1645. He paid tax on £200 according to the Land Tax Rolls of 1664. In 1675 he led a ‘poinding’ against Bessie Murray, widow of James ‘Bucholme’. In 1678 he paid the land tax in Lilliesleaf Parish for his lands of Firth. John (17th C.) recorded in 1676 among a number of local people fined for using weights that were lighter than the standards. Specifically his ‘quarter wanted ane drop’. It is unclear if he was from Hawick or elsewhere, but he must have been a trader at the market in Hawick. He may be the merchant John recorded in 1673 on the list of men named in the trial for the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. John (17th C.) tenant in Cavers. He is recorded in 1684 when his former servant James Johnston was among those declared as fugitives for being a Covenantanter. John (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their children included George (b.1680). John (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He married Helen Rutherford and their children included Agnes (b.1682). John (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He married Margaret Fowler and their children included William (b.1679), Margaret (b.1681) and John (b.1683). The witnesses in 1681 were James Todshaw and John Armstrong. John (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, when it contained Hassendean. He married Agnes Brown and their children included William (b.1683), Thomas (b.1685) and Isobel (b.1688). The witnesses in 1688 were Thomas Henderson and Andrew Rodger. John (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, when it contained Hassendean. He married Margaret Dodds and their children included Robert (b.1686) and Patrick (b.1688). The witnesses in 1686 were Patrick Dodds (who was surely related to his wife) and Thomas Robson and in 1688 were Patrick and John Dodds. He is probably the John who witnessed a baptism for Walter in 1687. John (17th C.) candlemaker in Hawick. His wife was Margaret Turnbull and they had children included Agnes (b.1671). The baptism witnesses were John Scott and John Aitkin. In 1684 he was listed among many people declared fugitives for refusing to take ‘the Test’. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Marion Aitken and their children included John (b.1689). The witnesses in 1689 were George Johnstone and Andrew Fletcher. John (17th C.) candlemaker in Hawick. He was fined in 1689 for his ‘exhorbitant’ marriage with Christian Scott. He may be the same man as the John declared a fugitive in 1684. He was ‘John Trumble, candlemaker’ on the list of subscribers for the Kirk bell in 1693. He was also listed as a candlemaker on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694, when he paid tax on 2 hearths. John (17th C.) servitor of Gilbert Elliott of Stanedge who is recorded as witness to a bond of 1691 and again in 1693. Possibly the same John is described in 1694 as servitor of ‘Mr Harie Mauld of Kellie’ in another document relating to a bond of 1691 with Gilbert Elliott of Stanedge and Gavin Elliott, his uncle. John (17th C.) resident of Minto Parish who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. John (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He probably farmed near Newton, and ‘The malt kilne’ is listed after him, suggesting he may have been maltman at Newton. John (17th C.) resident of Cavers who was listed in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th C.) carrier at Tofts according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th C.) tenant in West Middle on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He is probably related to the later John in West Middle. John (17th C.) tenant in Foldedlee according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th C.) tenant in Mackside in Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th C.) resident at Easter Highchesters according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. John (17th C.) resident of Raperlaw according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He is listed among the ‘deficients’ of the Parish. John (17th C.) resident of Appletreehall according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th C.) shepherd at Clarilaw according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th C.) resident at Horsleyhill on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th C.) listed ‘in Hawick’ when his wife’s will was recorded in 1690. He may be the same as one of the other Johns. He may be the weaver who witnessed a baptism in Hawick for James Miller in 1689. John of Knowe (17th/18th C.) probably succeeded John. He may have been the John who became a surgeon’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1675. He is recorded in 1689 bringing an action against Rev. Francis Scott, after he had been removed by the Privy Council. John of Minto (17th/18th C.) son of John and Elisabeth Elliott of Stobs. He sold the Minto estate in 1703 to his cousin, Sir Gilbert Elliot of Headshaw, ancestor of the Earls of Minto; it is also stated that he sold it to Walter Scott of Harwood in 1673, but perhaps this was a wadset only. His connection with the other Turnbulls (of Minto and/or Knowe) seems unclear, but he was probably the John (described as a merchant) who became a Burgess and Guild brother of Edinburgh in right of his father in 1684. It may have been his son Patrick who became a Burgess and Guild brother of Edinburgh in 1704, in right of his deceased father (in which case he died about 1703). John (17th/18th C.) cooper of Hawick, brother of Michael and Robert, who were also cooperers. All 3 brothers were involved in a case before the Bailies in 1678. In 1689 he witnessed a baptism for weaver Andrew Dodds. He was listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was also listed as cooper on the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. In 1700 he was a witness for a baptism for flesher Robert Reuwick. He was a cooper in 1709 when one of his children was baptised and when he witnessed a baptism for carrier Henry Paterson. He was an elder of the Kirk, and in 1717 charged with collecting money ‘from ye foot of ye play la to the west end of ye toun’, suggesting he lived in this area perhaps. He was still an Elder in 1718. In 1719 he was ‘cuper elder’ when he witnessed a baptism for weaver Robert Riddell. He was recorded as a cooper in 1699 when his son Andrew was baptised, with witnesses shoemakers Robert and George Oliver. It seems likely he was father of the cooper John who was on the short-list for Cornet in 1710; if so his wife may have been Agnes Moffat and other children were James (b.1684) and Elspeth (b.1688). He married Helen ‘Junk’ in 1706 and had children including: James (b.1707); Michael (b.1709); Isobel (b.1712); Helen (b.1714); Mary (b.1716); and John (b.1719). The witnesses in 1709 and 1712 were cooper Michael and weaver Robert (his brothers) and in 1716 were ‘Mr’ Thomas Douglas (brother to the Laird of Cavers) and mason John Napier. John (17th C.) carter in Hawick, on the 1693/4 subscribers’ list for the new Kirk bell. He was separate from the contemporary cooper of the same name. John (17th/18th C.) listed as ‘oye to Mr James Ker Sometimes Minister att Abbotroule’ in 1704 and 1707. His children, baptised in Hawick, included Thomas (b.1707) and Mary (b.1707). The witnesses in 1704 were were Bailie George Martin and Patrick McLellan and in 1707 were William Cunningham and apothecary Walter Scott. He was presumably either nephew or grandson of James Ker, but the precise relationship is unclear. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. His son Walter was baptised in Cavers in 1696. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was shepherd in Whitriggs in Kirkton Parish. He was at Mossbrae in 1718 when his daughter Isobel was baptised. Other children, baptised in Roberton Parish, who may be his (although some are probably children of John at Roberton) include: Michael (b.1703); Margaret (b.1707); Isobel (b.1709); Mary (b.1709); William (b.1712); Janet (b.1713); Margaret (b.1715); and James (b.1715). John (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Mossbrae in 1718 when his daughter Isobel was baptised. Other children, baptised in Roberton Parish, who may be his (although some are probably children of John at Roberton) include: Michael (b.1703); Margaret (b.1707); Isobel (b.1709); Mary (b.1709); William (b.1712); Janet (b.1713); Margaret (b.1715); and James (b.1715). John (17th/18th C.) described as ‘servitor to Walter Elliott, bailie-deput of the regality of Hawick’ in 1718 when he was rebuked for having a horse race with Thomas Porteous on the Common Haugh on a Sunday. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Whitriggs in Kirkton Parish. His son James was baptised in 1721. James (b.1724), Margaret (b.1728) and Anne (b.1732), also baptised in Kirkton, may also have been his children. John (17th/18th C.) Hawick man who was paid in 1721 for gilding the hands of the Kirk clock. He may thus have been a clockmaker or other tradesman. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at West Middle in 1723 when his son John was baptised. He is probably related to the earlier John in West Middle. John (1712/3–87) tenant in Mackside. His family were recorded on an old tombstone in Abbotrule Kirkyard (although he appears to also be referred to there as Thomas). His wife Isabel died in 1756, aged 41. Their children included Betty, James and Thomas (who probably carried on as tenant of Mackside), as well as William, Mary, Elspeth and Margaret, who died in infancy. John (18th C.) resident of Parkhill recorded in 1725, 1728, 1733 and 1743 when children of his were baptised. He may have been brother of Walter who also had children baptised at Parkhill around the same time. They could both be descended from James who was at Parkhill a couple decades earlier. His children included: Robert (b.1725); Margaret (b.1728); Janet (b.1733); and Robert (again, b.1743). Several other children baptised in Robertson could also be his. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Timbersidemill in 1747. He married Margaret Easton in 1737 and their children included: Mary (b.1738); James (b.1741); William (b.1743); Thomas (b.1747); John (b.1749); Helen (b.1752); and Robert (b.1755). The witnesses in 1747 were James Dryden and Walter Scott. John (18th C.) tanner in Hawick. He paid the tax for 15 windows in Hawick in 1748. It is unclear how he was related to other Turnbulls. John (18th C.) tailor in Hawick. In 1757 he witnessed a baptism for weaver George, who was probably related to him. John (1723–81) son of William, he was born at Whitriggs in Kirkton Parish. Around 1744 he was schoolmaster at Kirkton School, also serving as Session Clerk. That year he married Isabel Scott in Wilton. By 1750 he was at Eves, where he was also Session Clerk. He married Bridget Monet in Hawick in 1759. His children (with his 1st wife) were: William; Betty; and John. With his 2nd wife he had at least one child: Janet. He died in Hawick. John of Wester Swanshiel (b.1729–1820/1) son of Walter, whom he succeeded in 1750 (note there is some confusion here, since Walter Deans says he was son of James). In 1778 he sold Wester Swanshiel to Cornelius Elliot of Woollee, in order to lease a bigger farm (although he is recorded as still being the owner in 1788, so perhaps the sale had not gone through yet). This ended an association of those lands with his family for perhaps 300 years. In 1780 he occupied the farm of Berryfell and also rented Howashiel. He was a major heritor of Hobkirk Parish along with Henry Elliot of Harwood and Thomas Scott of Stonedge. He is recorded as farmer at Berryfell on the 1787–97 Horse Tax Rolls and on the 1797 Dog Tax Rolls. He later farmed at Whitehill Brae, where he died. He married Esther Douglas, a relative of Douglas of Trows. Their children were: Janet; Walter, who used to write songs and sonnets, entered the army, moved to England and had a single daughter; Esther; John, who was tenant at Brieryhill and later Minto Kames; Robert, who purchased Galalaw; Betty; and James, tenant farmer at Galalaw. The combined age of he and his wife on their Hobkirk tombstone is 184 (he being 91 and his wife 93). His descendants included Mr. Turnbull of 2 Tower Knowe in the early 1900s. John (d.1772) mason in Minto. He is buried in Bedrule kirkyard. It is possible he is the mason in Denholm whose unnamed child was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1748 and the mason in Denholm, married to Marion Smith, whose son John was baptised in 1753. John (18th C.) cooper in Hawick, probably related to the earlier cooper of the same name. He married Christian Veitch and their children included Agnes (b.1756) and Elizabeth (b.1760). John ‘Garleek Jock’ (18th C.) gardener in Hawick. He was Cornet in 1762. Later that year he married Margaret Storie (who died in 1806), the couple being rebuked for their ‘irregular marriage’. Their children included: William (b.1763); Robert (b.1763); Elizabeth (b.1766); and Margaret (1770–1808), who died in Hawick. The 1766 witnesses were Robert Turnbull and Thomas Pringle. He is recorded as ‘garlic jock’ when his wife died. John (18th C.) listed as owner of a ‘House and Yard’ in Minto Parish in 1779, valued at £1 16s 7d. It was owned by Lord Minto in 1811. He could be the same as one of the other Johns. John (d.bef. 1799) resident of Hawick Parish. The death of his wife Elizabeth Scott is recorded in 1799. John (1743/4–1816) probably son of Thomas. He was tenant farmer at Mackside. He is recorded there on the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 5 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid the dog tax at Mackside in the same year. He married Ann Common, and she died in 1803, aged 41. They had a daughter who died in infancy. The family are recorded on an old tombstone in Abbotrule Kirkyard (although some of the names and generations may be confused). John (b.c.1745) farm worker at Stonedge. By his first wife he had sons William (a forester in Jedforest) and James (farm worker at Unthank, who died at Midburn). He secondly married Christian Grieve, and their children were: Robert, shepherd at Philiphaugh and elsewhere; Kate, who married and moved to London; Margaret, who married George Henderson, weaver at Kilnowe and was great-grandmother of Euphemia Henderson who lived at Weens Lodge; Mary, second wife of Adam Turnbull, farmer at Midburn; and Jane, who married Andrew Turnbull, gardener at Weens. John (d.bef. 1815) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen (or ‘Nelly’) Dryden, who died in 1815. Their children included Betty (b.1775), Jane (b.1776), William (b.1787) and John (b.1788). John ‘Meldrum’ (18th C.) recorded in 1787 when his daughter Lizzy died in Hawick. He is surely related to James, ‘Auld Meldrum’, who died in 1781. James ‘Auld Meldrum’ (d.1781) recorded in the list of deaths in Hawick. He may be the same man as one of the other Jameses. He was surely related to John, who was also recorded as ‘Meldrum’ in 1787 when his daughter Lizzy died. John (18th C.) baker in Hawick. He married Helen (or Agnes) Scott and their children included: John (b.1784); and Elionora (b.1789). The witnesses in 1784 were merchant George (surely a relative) and James Scott (probably related to his wife). John (18th C.) groom at Branhcolm in 1785–88, when he was working for Adam Ogilvie, Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch. He was listed as house servant at Branhcolm in 1791. In 1794 possibly the same John was gamekeeper at Stobs for Sir William Elliott. However, in 1797 he was a house servant at Branhcolm again. John (1762/3–1841) weaver in Hawick. In 1841 he was living on the Howegate with his brother James, who was also a weaver. He is buried in St. Mary’s along with his siblings Robert, James and Janet. John (b.bef. 1770) served as an officer in Stuart’s Regiment of the Scots Brigade in Holland before turning to medicine. He was apprenticed to Benjamin Bell in Edinburgh and studied at Edinburgh University, receiving the Diploma of the Royal College of Surgeons of Edinburgh in 1793. He practised at Belford, Northumberland and then in Hawick. He received his M.A. and M.D. from St. Andrews University in 1796. John (18th C.) recorded at ‘Cleughhead’ in 1784 and 1787. His children Mary (b.1784) and Helen (b.1787) were baptised in Cavers Parish. It is unclear which Cleughhead this may have been. Perhaps the same John had other children baptised in Cavers Parish, including John (b.1786). John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was herd in Southdeanrig in 1785–97 when his children were baptised: John (b.1785); James (b.1791); Francis (b.1793); and Elspeth (b.1797). John (d.bef. 1816) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Mary Scott in 1773 and she died in Hawick in 1816. Their children included: John (b.1774); Margaret (b.1776); Christy (b.1778); Christian (b.1782); William (b.1785); Margaret (again, b.1787); and Robert (b.1788). The first child was baptised in Hawick and the rest in Wilton. He may be the John who witnessed a baptism for Walter Scott and Catherine Turnbull in Wilton in 1770. John (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Euphemia Turnbull and their children included: Agnes (b.1780); Isabel (b.1781); Margaret (b.1783); and James (b.1784). John (18th C.) wright in Lilliesleaf Parish. His son William was baptised in 1790. Betty (b.1787) may also have been his child. John (18th C.) listed as servant at Cavers in 1793 and 1794, when he was working for George Douglas. It may just be a coincidence that there was a servant with the same name earlier at Branhcolm and at the same time at Stobs. John (18th/19th C.) mason in Roberton and Wilton Parishes. He was living at Harden in 1787, 1789 and 1794 and at Langlands Dean in 1797. He married Isobel Gray in 1786 and their children included: John (b.1787); Thomas (b.1789); Isobel (b.1792); Walter (b.1794); William (b.1797); and William (again, b.1800). John ‘Jock’ (18th/19th C.) said to be son of Robert, who was farmer at Hallrule Mill. A story is recounted by Walter Deans in 1887, who said that he was ‘imbued with the ancient spirit and daring of the Turnbuls’, and that he would regularly settle disputes with his enemies by picking fights at local fairs; on one occasion after he had dispatched a large group of enemies at Jedburgh, his mother, ‘Tibbie Donaldson, said ‘ma heart was wae to see them a’ gushin’ an’ bluidin’, and oor Jock knockin’ them doon’. John (18th/19th C.) resident at Hudshouse. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. John (d.1827) Hawick clockmaker. His property immediately to the east of the old Town House was bought by the Council in 1827 and later used to build part of the new Town Hall. His niece, Anna Maria Brown, wife of C. Brown, traveller of London, was served as his heir in 1827. He may have been related to the John who was paid for gilding the hands of the Kirk clock in 1721. John (1761/2–1803) probably son of Thomas, he was tenant in Mackside, like at least 3 generations before him. The family are recorded on an old tombstone in Abbotsrule Kirkyard. John (18th/19th C.) son of George of the Cross Keys. He was recorded as son of George ‘Senior’ on the 1794 short-list for Cornet. He was elected Cornet in 1796, when he was stated to be of the Cross Keys. He was also recorded at the Cross Keys in 1808 when his son Walter died. This is probably the Cross Keys on the High Street (rather than the Sandbed), although this is unclear. John (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Colterscleuch, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was additionally taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. John (18th/19th C.) recorded at Denholm on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. No information such as occupation is given about him. John (18th/19th C.) wright in Denholm, recorded in 1795 and 1797. He is listed as a wright on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, separate from the other John in Denholm who is also listed there. His children included: Thomas (b.1795); and twins Andrew and Joshua (b.1797). John (18th/19th C.) recorded at Grange in Castleton Parish on the 1797 Dog Tax Rolls. John (1762–c.1850) 2nd son of John, who was the last Turnbull Laird of Wester Swanshiel. His brother Walter moved to England, and so he became the local representative of the Turnbulls of Hartshaugh and Swanshiel. He was tenant at Brieryhill and later at Minto Kames. He is probably the John who was listed as owner of Wester Swanshiel in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. He married and his children included John, Thomas, Walter and Margaret. He lived to an old age, being still at Minto Kames at the 1841 census. He could be father of Gavin, who was minister at Teviothead. John (18th/19th C.) in charge of wood management at Branxholme in at least the years 1814/5, when he is recorded supervising and paying labourers for ‘upholding the plantation dikes’. He may be the same John recorded conveying a letter for Adam Ogilvie at Branxholme in 1790. He may also be the John who was a farm worker, about 75 years old, at Branxholme in 1841. John (b.c.1765) merchant on the south side of Main Street in Lilliesleaf in 1841. He is probably the draper or grocer recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory. John (b.c.1780) mason in Lilliesleaf, as recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He probably lived on Main Street in 1841. His wife’s name was Elizabeth. John (18th/19th C.) tailor in Lilliesleaf, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. John (b.c.1780) joiner on the High Street, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. In the 1836 electoral roll he was listed as joint proprietor with John junior. He is probably the ‘John & Son’ listed as joiner on the Round Close in 1837. His wife was Margaret. He is probably the John recorded along with his wife Margaret as a joiner on the 1841 census, around 10 High Street. John (b.1780/1) born in Wilton Parish, he was a servant at Stirches. He was listed as servant at Stirches among heads of households in Wilton Parish 1835–41. He was footman at Stirches House on the 1851 census. His wife was Isabella and they had a daughter, Ann. John (b.1780/1) stocking-maker in Wilton Parish. He was listed as stocking-maker at Crawhill Park among heads of households in Wilton Parish 1835–41. He was also an elder in Wilton Kirk. His wife was Janet and their children included Isabella and George. In 1851 the family were living on Wilton Place. John (b.c.1784/5) agricultural labourer, both in Southdean Parish. He was living at Todshawhaugh Cottages in 1841 and 1851. His wife was Beatrix and their children included Robert, Janet and John. John (b.1786/7) shepherd at Burgh in Wilton Parish. He is recorded there in 1841 and 1851. His wife was Mary and they had a daughter Isabella. John (1787–1857) 2nd son of James, who farmed at Ruecastle. In 1811 he became tenant farmer at Spittal-on-Rule. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. He was recorded at Spittal in 1841 and 1851. He is probably the ‘Mr. Turnbull in Spittal-on-Rule’ who was said to take a keen interest in the Sclenty Schuil. In 1827 in Wilton Parish he married Isabella Lockie. Their children included: Janet (b.1820); Helen Rutherford (b.1822); James (b.1823), who took over the tenancy of Spittal; Mary (b.1825) and Isabella A.G. (b.1830). He secondly married Ann Euphemia Burnett (from Edinburgh) and further children included: John Rutherford (b.1838); Margaret Cather (b.1840); Elizabeth Rutherford (b.1842); William George (b.1844); Alexander Jamieson (b.1846); Agnes R. (b.1847); Walter Douglas (b.1849); Anne Euphemia (b.1851); and Jessie Catherine (b.1856). Ann is recorded as ‘Late Farmer’s Widow’ in the 1861 census. John (b.c.1787/8) eldest son of John, farmer at Brieryhill and Minto Kames. He carried on the tenancy of Minto Kames when his father retired. He married Esther Turnbull. His children included John, Isabel, Thomas, James, Agnes, Robert (who became a solicitor) and Walter (a stone mason). In 1851 he is listed as retired and living at Newton in Wilton Parish with his wife Esther and children Margaret, Robert, Walter, Esther and Mary, plus his brother Thomas. In 1861 he was at Wilton Dean. He retired from farming and lived to the age of 88. John (1788–1849) son of Thomas (‘Bailie Tammy’) and Margaret Darling. He may also have been a Bailie. He was a dyer on the

Crescent, carrying on some of his father's business and founding the company John Turnbull & Son, Slitrig Dyeworks in 1819. He is recorded as dyer in Pigot's 1825/6 directory and as a dyer and carpet manufacturer in the 1837 directory. He maintained the Baptists within Hawick after the death of their local leader William Thorburn; he helped the congregation acquire a room for worship on the ground floor of 8 Allars Crescent. He married Isabella Rutherford in Jedburgh in 1831. His children were: Thomas (b.1833); Alexander (b.1835); John D. (b.1838); Catherine (b.1840); and Margaret Darling (b.1842/3), who married Thomas Bell, and whose daughter Isabella R. was the first person baptised in the new Baptist Kirk on Bourtree Place. In 1841 he was living on the Crescent with his wife Isabell and 4 children, but by 1851 his wife was a widow there. He is probably the John, dyer on the Crescent listed in Slater's 1852 directory, even although he was deceased by then (since the firm continued). A portrait of him exists. John (b.c.1795) born in Minto Parish, he was a seedsmen and spirit dealer on Allars Bank. In 1851 he was living at Allars Bank and listed as a farmer of 130 acres (employing 5 labourers) and a nursery and seedman (employing 42 people). In 1861 he was at the corner of Bourtree Place and North Bridge Street and listed as ‘Nursery & Seedsmen’. His wife was Violet H. Thorburn, and their children included: George (b.1820); Euphemia; Jessie; William; John; Isabella (b.1830); and James (b.c.1838), who worked in the nursery business. In 1851 he was listed as a farmer. By 1861 he had moved to the east side of Bridge Street. John (18th/19th C.) married Helen Goodfellow in Lilliesleaf in 1825. Their children included Robert (b.1826) and George (b.1830). John (1796–1875) youngest son of William of Burnfoot and Eleanor Stephenson. He succeeded his father as farmer at Burnfoot and West Buccleuch. He also carried on his father’s reputation as a breeder of short-horn cattle at Burnfoot. In his younger days he was a keen follower of the Buccleuch Hunt. He was probably the John listed at Burnfoot among the subscribers to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. He is listed as farmer at Burnfoot in 1835–41, among heads of households in Wilton Parish. He is recorded in 1851 and 1861 as farmer of 200 acres, employing 9 labourers and was still farmer at Burnfoot in 1868. He married Mary Killner Anderson, who was from Huddersfield. Their children included: William (b.1833); Betsy Anderson (b.1836); Eleanor Stephenson (b.1833); Thomas Anderson (b.1839); and Mary (b.1841). His last 20 years were spent in failing health, and he was seldom seen in public. He died at Burnfoot. John (19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Helen Goodfellow and their children included Robert (b.1826) and George (b.1830). John (b.1803) youngest of 7 sons of James and Betty Adamson, he was born at Hobkirk Kirkstile. He had brothers who were schoolmasters of Wilton and Hobkirk. He became a grocer in Newcastle. He was listed as a grocer and spirit dealer in Newcastle. He may be the carter in Newcastle listed as male head of his family in 1835. In 1824 he married Wilhelmina (or ‘Mina’), daughter of George Scott, shepherd at Lodgell. They had a family of 10: James (1825–78), grocer in Hawick; George (1826–86), who died in Edinburgh and had a daughter Elizabeth Lawrie who was also a teacher; Elizabeth (b.1828), who married Jedburgh baker W. Hollands; Thomas (1830–60), who died at Morebattle, and had a son Dr. Adam Robert, who was medical superintendent at the Fife and Kinross Lunatic Asylum; Robert (1832–64), who died unmarried at Saratoga Springs, U.S.A.; William (b.1834), who died in infancy; William again, who also died (d.1836); William Elliot (1838–68), clerk at Register House; Walter Hall (b.1841) provision merchant in Edinburgh; and Margaret (b.1842), married Linlithgow paper merchant John Lovell. He is buried with his wife at Rosebank cemetery in Edinburgh. John (1807–c.49) son of John and Margaret Murray, he was born in Hawick Parish. In 1833 he married Helen (1808–98), daughter of William Laidlaw and Helen Douglas. In 1841 he was a joiner living on the Round Close, but emigrated soon afterwards, settling in Galt, Ontario. His children (the first 3 born in Hawick) were: John (b.1835); William (b.1836); Helen (b.1841); and Thomas (b.1850). John Robson (1807–66) youngest son of Adam, farmer at Hassendeanbank, and Betty Scott, from Skellhill. He attended Minto School and Edinburgh University and became an architect. He was Master of Works at Windsor Castle in the period 1845–66. He married Ann Oliver from Middlesex and they had 5 children. He is buried at Windsor Castle. John (b.1808) son of Alexander and Jean Scott. He was a joiner and innkeeper in Denholm. He is probably the joiner recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was proprietor of the Cross Keys on Main Street. In 1851 he was living with his mother Jane, who was postmistress, his sister Jane and his nephew John. In 1861 he was with his sister Jean and cousin Agnes Scott. John (19th C.) educated in Selkirk, he became schoolmaster at Millburn (otherwise known as Hermitage) in Castleton Parish in 1838. It seems unlikely that he was there for long. John (b.c.1810) joiner in Hawick, listed at the Round Close in 1841. He is probably son of John, who was also a joiner, and was part of the ‘John & Son’ listed as joiners on the Round Close in Pigot’s 1837 directory. His wife was Helen, and their children included John, William and Andrew. John (19th C.) farmer at East Middle, probably son of Thomas. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1863. John (19th C.) son of Robert. He was a grocer to trade, with his shop at Bonchester Bridge. In 1835 he became the first postmaster of the Rule valley, however he died not long afterwards and was succeeded by his sister Betty. John (19th C.) resident of Appletreechall. In 1863 he donated a Roman bronze fibula to the Museum. It is possible this was the ‘fibula, made apparently either of jet or cannel coal and bearing a fine polish’ found on the borders of Hawick Parish and described in 1839. John (b.1803/4) shepherd and agricultural labourer in Florida in Liddesdale. He was listed there among heads of households in Castleton in 1836-41. The 80 year-old James who lived with him in 1841 was probably his father. By 1851 and 1861 he was a shepherd and he is recorded as farmer at Florida in 1868. His wife was Jane, and their children included James, Janet, Walter, Elizabeth, John, William and Andrew. John (c.1818-c.1905) 2nd son of Adam and great-grandson of Adam of Denesyde, he was born at Old Fodderlee. He married Jane, daughter of William Nichol, farmer at Newlands, Minto, and she died in 1896. He later lived in the Back Row, Selkirk. He had 2 sons and 3 daughters. John (19th C.) coachman at Weens estate. He married Helen, daughter of Walter Amos. Their son Walter Amos was carpenter at Bonchester Bridge and married his cousin Janet Kerr Amos in 1881. John (1825/6-75) eldest son of Alexander, who was forester at Cavers. He married Helen, daughter of James Stoddart, shepherd at Falahill. Their family consisted of 6 sons (including Alexander, servant at Wolfelee) and 5 daughters. He died at Westerhouses. John (19th C.) mason in Denholm. In 1863 he donated an old coin to the Museum. John (19th C.) son of Thomas, who was shepherd on Templehall. He married Agnes, daughter of shepherd Robert Telfer. Among their children was John, who was shepherd at several farms in Rulewater. John (19th C.) eldest son of John, farmer at Minto Kames. Along with his brother Thomas he went out to Australia when gold was discovered near Melbourne in the 1850s. He returned to Hawick and married Mary, sister of builder Adam Scott in 1866. He farmed at Priestrig. His children were John, Thomas, Christina (who married Rev. John Stevenson of Bedrule) and Esther (who kept house for her 2 brothers at Bonchester). John (19th C.) Race Judge at the Common Riding in the 1840s. John (b.1826/7) shepherd in Rulewater, son of John and grandson of Thomas who was shepherd on Templehall farm. He was born in Hawick Parish and was related to the Turnbulls of Hartshaugh and Swanshiel and also coachman John. He worked for Henry Elliot, senior and junior, then at Town-o-Rule, Westerhouses and finally Weens East Lodge. In 1861 he was shepherd at Westerhouses. He married Margaret Elliot from Newcastleton. They had 2 sons and 4 daughters: Janet, who was laundress at Weens; Isabella; Agnes; John; Elizabeth; and Thomas. John (b.1828) son of tobacconist William, he was a baker in Hawick. In 1851 he and his father were both living at about 3 Howe gate, and he was employing 2 men in his baker’s business. In Slater’s 1852 directory he is listed on the Howegate. John Struthers (b.1829) son of weaver William. He was a bank accountant, working in Jedburgh by the time of the 1861 census. His wife was Janet and their children included Ellen L., William and John W. (who was with Thomas Purdom & Sons). John (d.1891) related to the Turnbulls of Hartshaugh and Swanshiel. He took over driving the Hawick to Carlisle coach from Sandy Elder for the last few years that it operated. He later farmed at Wiltonburn along with his brother William. John Anderson (19th C.) solicitor in Hawick. He was one of the members of the first committee of Hawick Golf Club in 1878, and was later Club Captain. He was also one of the founder members of the Hawick Billiards Club. John (19th C.) clerk at William Watson & Sons, he was an influential early member of the Hawick R.F.C. committee. John (19th/20th C.) wine merchant at 51 High Street. He was probably son of the founder of the grocery and wine store. John A. (19th C.) draper on the Howegate. He was later a tobacconist. His daughter Amy married her cousin James Turnbull, farmer at Galalaw. John (1836-1915) from the family of Bedrule, he was born in Jedburgh, where he worked at the Procurator Fiscal’s Office before becoming the first accountant of the Hawick Branch of the Royal Bank of Scotland. After holding this position for 15 years he moved to the Gala branch where he was appointed Agent in 1902 and retired in 1909. He was also actuary for the Gala branch of the Trustee Savings Bank for almost 40 years. He married Isabella Ewen Turnbull (1834–1917) and their children were James Brydon, John William, Gilbert Kilpatrick, Helen, Robert John (killed on a train in the U.S.A.), Douglas (of the Imperial Yeomanry, died at Pretoria), George Hector (died in Nashville, Tennessee) and E.J. (of Dayton, Ohio).

John (1838–1910) son of John and grandson of ‘Bailie Tammy’. He worked in the family dyers business. He lived at Kirkton House, which in 1901 had 9 rooms and 2 servants. He married Sarah Hall, who was from England. Their children included: Sarah Thompson (1862–78); John D. (b.1865); and Williamina Thompson (b.1869), who married James Boyd Sime. John (b.1859) son of grocer James and Annie Robson. In 1889 he married Mary Stewart at Ilkley. Their children were James Stewart; Charles Stewart; Isabell Young Firth; Donald MacLeod Victor; Frederick William Barrie; and Douglas Elliot Scott.

John Turnbull (b.1868) son of John, farmer at Priestrig and Mary Scott. He was born in Wilton Parish. He became joint tenant at Bonchester with his brother Thomas. John Weir (b.1870) clothier in Denholm, son of clothier and tailor James. He was educated in Denholm until the age of 16, acting as pupil-teacher there. He was an apprentice with his father until 1890 then worked in Glasgow for 2 years, returning to Denholm to join his father in ‘R. Turnbull & Son’, later becoming the sole partner. He acted as local Registrar in Denholm and lived at Rosebank. In 1895 he married his cousin Isabella Macdonald; she was daughter of Jessie Scott, daughter of Robert Scott, farmer at Todlaw. John (19th/20th C.) cashier with Wilson & Armstrong at Weensland Mills. He later became a partner in Turnbull & Hodgson, coal merchants, then had his own coal business and finally was involved with Teviot Tweed Co. He married Barbara Scott Davidson, daughter of James. John (19th/20th C.) became Managing Director of Pringle’s in 1929, following J. Boyd Sime’s resignation. He himself resigned in 1933, to be replaced by Arthur Oddy and Wullie Mactaggart. John Fisher ‘Guttie’ or ‘Gutty’ (1932–82) son of Barrie, he was a local grocery merchant and Town Councillor, as well as husband of Myra. He attended George Watson’s College in Edinburgh and served an apprenticeship with Wilson & Glenny before taking over the family business in 1954, based at 51 High Street. His business also sold a blended whisky called ‘Teviotdale’. He revived the Turnbull clan in 1977, after effectively being dormant for centuries. He was a Town Councillor for 11 years, starting in 1969 and later served as Roxburgh District Councillor for Teviot South. He was also heavily involved in events twinning Hawick with Bailleul. He married Myra in 1956 and they made their home at 14 Rosebank Road, later moving to St. Ables, Wilton Park Road. His children were Barrie (b.1957), Deborah (b.1959) and Hamish (b.1961). The Turnbull Clan named their lifetime achievement award after him. Joseph (19th C.) postman in the Denholm area in the 1860s. Katherine (16th C.) daughter and heiress of Hector of Belses. In 1580 her father gave her sasine for his ‘ten librates of land of old extent of Belses’. Her uncle John was one of the witnesses. Lawrence (15th C.) part of the ‘retour of inquest’ for Ker of Altonburn in 1438. It is unclear which branch of the Turnbulls he belonged to, but he is listed right after Archibald, and John of Fulton is also mentioned. Lawrence (15th/16th C.) son of William in Bonchester. In 1502 he was listed among many Turnbulls and others who were declared as fugitives for their part in the murder of Robert Oliver. The person who was supposed to enter him into the court was George of Hallrule, who was fined for his non-appearance. His father William was also recorded in the same 1502 case, as well as David in Bonchester, who was probably related. Lawrence ‘Laurie in Maxsysde’ (16th/17th C.) found guilty at the 1622 Commissioners’ Court of stealing 2 cows from William Douglas of Cavers’ land at Langside about 1614 and 2 sheep from elsewhere in 1619, and sentenced to be hung. He is also referred to as ‘Lancie’. Lawrence ‘Lawrie’ of Hartshaugh (17th C.) recorded on the valuation for Abbotrule Parish in 1643. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Turnbulls who lived at Hartshaugh. Leo (15th/16th C.) tenant in Unthank listed among Turnbulls given remission in 1516 for any role they played in assisting the Homes. Presumably these are the lands of Unthank in Rulewater. Lyle (16th/17th C.) described as ‘Lyell Turnbull in Hartishauch’ (presumably Hartshaugh) in 1618 (registered in 1623) for a ‘wadset’ of lands in Hobkirk Parish.
He was also recorded in the 1623 Commissioners’ Court when he was surety for Adam Turnbull in Hartshaugh Mill. He was surely related to Adam. He may be the ‘Leonall’ who was possibly a younger son of Hector of Hartshaugh, who witnessed a bond between Walter of Bedrule and George Rutherford (younger in Abbotrule) in 1618. Malcolm (17th C.) recorded as a Burgess of Selkirk in 1630, when he sold his tenement there. His son William witnessed another transaction in 1630. Margaret (14th C.) forfeited lands in Eyemouth (in Coldingham) which were granted to ‘Ade Corfour’. This was during the reign of David II. It is unclear how she was related to other Turnbulls. Margaret (14th/15th C.) daughter and heiress of John, who was granted Hundlehope in Peeblesshire by David II in 1357. She also held lands in Roberton and in the town of Selkirk, suggesting that her father was from the Borthwick Water and Selkirkshire Turnbulls. She married William Gledstains of that Ilk. They had a son John, to whom she resigned the lands of Hundlehope in her lifetime, probably around 1400. During the reign of Robert III she also resigned to her son John the lands in Roberton and in Selkirk. It may be that the lands the Gledstains family soon possessed near Havig (Orniston, Orchard, Hummelknowes, etc.) also came from her and the Turnbulls. Margaret (15th/16th C.) daughter and co-heiress of Walter of Gargunnock. Along with her sister Janet she was infefted in the lands of Hassendeanbank in 1501 (her brother William probably dying before then). Margaret (15th/16th C.) received sasine of the lands of Lanton in Roxburghshire in 1506. This was along with Elizabeth, who was probably her sister. Margaret see Lady Margaret Lorraine. Margaret (16th C.) daughter of Robert. In 1536 she presented proof that her deceased father had held the tenancy of the lands of ‘Uterall Burne’ in Selkirkshire. Margaret (16th C.) wife of David Elliot, who was tenant in Chamberlain Newton. It is unclear which branch of the Turnbulls she came from. There was a court case to get her husband removed from the other half of the farm (owned at tht time by George Turnbull, Burgess of Jedburgh) in 1567. There appears to have been an ongoing dispute over this half of the lands, since in 1573 Gavin Eliott of Baielele and Stobs (who purchased the half from George Turnbull) complained that she had ordered her sons, Walter and John Scott, to attack his servant there. By this time she was widow of David Eliott (who was also from the Horsleyhill branch, like Gavin Eliott of Stobs), and must have married a Scott. She claimed that although she had no title for the lands, she had possession ‘be virtew of tak and assedatious’, although her accusers claimed these ‘ar of lang tyne bigane outrunin’. She was represented before the Privy Council by Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme (perhaps therefore a relative of her husband) and was ‘visiit with seiknes’ and did not attend herself. Her son John Scott did not appear and was declared a fugitive, while she and her son Walter were declared fugitives later in 1573, but then bound to Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and John Tweedy, tutor of Drumelzier, not to molest Gavin Eliott, his wife Jean Scott, their children or servants. It seems likely that Walter and John were sons from her first marriage, perhaps to a Scott of Newton (but it this unclear). Walter and John also had a brother David, recorded in 1588, who was presumably also her son. Margaret (d.1593) daughter and heiress of William (younger of Bedrule) and Margaret Home. On the death of William, her lands and gift of marriage then came into the hands of the Crown, who appointed her uncle Sir James Home of Cowdenknowes and her grandfather Sir Thomas of Bedrule as tutors. However, Sir Thomas was declared a fugitive, leading to a lack of clarity over her future. In 1584 she was recorded as ‘oy’ (i.e. granddaughter) of Sir Thomas of Bedrule and also niece of Alexander Home of Huttonhall when there was a claim by Sir James Home of Cowdenknowes (her ‘moder broder’, i.e. another uncle) over ‘the exhibitioun of the said Margaret’, but the Privy Council decreed that control over her should remain with her ‘keeper’ Alexander Home. It was then ruled that she should stay in the house of Alexander Clerk of Balbirny, Provost of Edinburgh, until a decision about her future was made. She later married Robert French, Laird of Thornydykes and Abbotrule, but had no children. Margaret (17th C.) sister of Walter of Rawflat. In 1632 she and her sister Isobella were ‘heirs portioner’ to their brother in the lands of the Mains of Feu-Rule. Margaret (17th C.) along with Mary Chisholme she was accused of witchcraft in Lilliesleaf in 1650. It was reported that they went to Selkirk for trial by the ministers and elders ‘quhairupon markis of Satan was found upon them both’. Their fate is not recorded. Margaret (17th C.) widow who was jointly responsible, along with James Scott of Whitlslade, for lands in Hassendean Parish in 1663 according to the Land Tax Rolls. She was ‘relict of Alton’, this probably being Robert of

Alton, who died in about 1650. Margaret (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. Margaret nee Dalgleish (b.1789) son of John Dalgleish, she was born in Hob Kirk Parish. She married Schoolmaster James in 1808, probably when he was teacher at Denholm. They later moved to Hawick, where he was Schoolmaster at Wilton. Her husband died in 1834 and later she ran her own school, along with her daughter Agnes, this being known as the ‘Image Garden’. The 1841 census records her living at ‘Wilton Cottage’ with children Agnes, Elspeth, Jane, Mary and William. In 1851 she was still there, with Agnes, Mary and Margaret and in 1861 just with Mary. Margaret (b.1819/20) born in Minto Parish, daughter of Janet Deans. She was listed as a teacher in Lilliesleaf in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 she was a teacher of ‘Female School teacher (of Sewing &c)’ in Lilliesleaf, along with her mother. They lived on the north side of Main Street. Marie (17th C.) recorded in 1643 when she owned £40 in Hob Kirk Parish. She is listed being in the same place as Mary Rutherford ‘of Rydvell’; however, it is unclear where this was. Marion nee Lorraine (16th/17th C.) wife of Walter, called ‘of Wauchope’, whose daughters Jean and Beatrix inherited Templehall and Brewlands from him in about 1604. In 1605 their ‘tutor’ George Turnbull (2nd son of Hector of Wauchope) had her and several others removed from the lands there. This must have been part of some family feud. She was perhaps daughter of Hector of Harwood (although there is no proof for this). Marion (17th C.) listed as a a widow living at Efledge on the 1694 Hearth Tax roll. Her name appears just after William, to whom she was probably related. Mark (15th/16th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1502. Walter Aitkin in Minto was convicted of associating with him and William, while they were ‘at the horn’. His location is not given. Mark (15th/16th C.) tenant in Boucher, recorded at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1494/5, when he served as surety for his brother James. He was also surety for himself, and was fined for the non-appearance of both of them. He is also recorded in 1501 among 10 men whose fines were remitted, with his name recorded there as ‘Marc Trumbull’; his brother James is also listed, as well as Turnbulls of Fulton, Boucher and elsewhere. Mark (15th/16th C.) listed among the many men connected with the Archbishop of Glasgow who had remission in 1504 for any involvement in the slaughter of Thomas Rutherford in Jedburgh Abbey. He is listed before Adam of Philiphaugh, who may have been related. In a separate list his name is right before David of Wauchope. Perhaps the same Mark was one of the witnesses to a document in Selkirk involving Robert, tutor of Philiphaugh. Mark (15th/16th C.) tenant of Over Chester when he was listed in the 1516 remission for several Turnbulls for assisting Alexander, Lord Home. His brother Archibald is also listed, along with ‘Marc younger’, presumably his son, as well as ‘Richard Turnbull with Marc Turnbull in Overchester, David Turnbull with the same Marc, William Turnbull. John Turnbull his sons’. Presumably they were all related. Mark (16th C.) Burgess of Jedburgh. He was Provost in 1561 and in 1565 (when his name is given as ‘Marcus’), during a dispute with Sir Nicholas Rutherford of Hundalee. It is unclear how he was related to other Turnbulls. Mark of Philiphaugh (16th C.) recorded as witness to a transaction in Selkirk in 1579. In 1579/80 he was ‘apparent heir of Philiphauch’ when he (and his brother Andrew) witnessed a transaction involving land in Lilliesleaf and another for lands near Melrose when he was clearly son of John of Philiphaugh. He witnessed other transactions in 1579/80. He was still heir apparent in early 1581 when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk, but later that year he was ‘of Philiphauch’. Also in 1581 he witnessed an arrangement where Katherine Scott, widow of Robert of Colifort, resigned her lands of Hundleshope to her son Thomas. In 1581/2 his father was already deceased when his mother (Isabel Douglas) resigned her lands to him, in return for a promise of 8 bolls of grain annually from his lands of Howden. Also in 1581/2 he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk and set a tack for his lands in Howden, with his brother George as a witness. Mark of Bewlie (16th/17th C.) brother of Robert and probably son of Walter. He was probably among the Turnbulls who were accused of harassing the widow and children of the murdered Walter Turnbull of Rawlat in 1581. He was one of a group of about 30 Turnbulls who entered Jedburgh on Rood Fair Day in 1601, as part of a feud with the Kers. At the end of the fight Thomas Ker (brother of the Provost) and his servant were dead, along with 2 Turnbulls, one of whom was his brother Robert. There were also several serious injuries, and he himself lost ‘the thowme of his left hand’ in the fight. Another brother, Andrew, was also involved in the raid and lost his little finger. In 1602 he was recorded along with Thomas, younger of Minto and Hector of Barnhills, when they were accused of robbing a hunting party sent out by the Laird of Gretna, with permission to hunt for venison in Tynedale; they were found guilty of robbery and fined for the value of 3 horses. He must also have been related to Hector of Bewlie, who was killed by the Kers in 1604 for his part in these events. He was convicted in late 1601, but it is unclear whether or not he was executed. He was also one of the ‘pursuers’ of the case against the Kers for the murder and maiming of several men in his party. He is probably the Mark listed in 1606 in letters of apology by the men responsible for the death of William Kerr of Ancrum. He is probably the Mark, brother of William ‘called of Beulie’ who was named by the Privy Council when a commission was appointed to apprehend them and 6 other Turnbulls (plus 2 Davidsons), for not finding caution following being found guilty of the murder of Thomas Ker of Cralinghall and 6 Grahamistslaw brothers. Mark (16th/17th C.) tenant in Nether Bonchester. He was recorded as being ‘in Nethir Bunecheste’ in 1605 when he was pledged to appear in court in Edinburgh, along with 2 other Turnbulls. In 1606 he was the occupier of the lands of Weens and Hobsburn when they were sold by Thomas Turnbull to John Scott. He could be the Mark listed along with Turnbulls of Braidhaugh and Mackside and Lorraines of Appotside, accused of stealing from an Englishman in 1601. Mark of Howden (d.bef. 1631) probably the Mark ‘apparent of Howdene’ who in 1581/2 witnessed a transaction in Selkirk involving Walter in Belses. He is recorded in 1612 among local men accused by the Privy Council of charging more than the allowed amount of interest. He was surely related to other Turnbulls of Howden. He failed to appear to answer the charge and was denounced as a rebel. In 1631 his son John of Howden was served heir to his lands of Philhope in the Barony of Hawick. Mark (16th/17th C.) son of Sir Thomas of Bedrule. He is probably the Mark in Bedrule who witnessed the bond between Robert in Bedrule and Joseph Tennant, minister of Bedrule in 1614. Mark (16th/17th C.) son of Hector in Hartshaugh (who appears to have lived to an old age) and younger brother of James. In 1616 he had a bond with William Scott of Todrig, and another with James (called of Bedrule) and David (or Andrew), butcher of Jedburgh. He is recorded as ‘in Hairtishaugh’ in 1619 when he was cautioner for Thomas Turnbull ‘in Rowllspittle’. Mark (d.1689) described as ‘portioner of fotherlie’, it is unclear which Turnbulls he was related to. However, it seems likely he was related to John, who was at Fodderlee in 1694. He is recorded in 1678 when he paid the land tax at Fodderlee for land valued at £100 (in one transcript of the valuation the name is given as ‘Margaret’, but that is clearly an error). He married Bessie Kerr, who was surely related to the Kers of Fodderlee; their only child (and heir) was Helen. The testament of him and his wife Bessie Kerr was recorded at Peebles in 1690, by Walter Chisholme, whose wife was Helen, his daughter. When he died the assets of him and his wife consisted of 2 cows, 31 sheep, half a boll of sewn barley and ‘insight and plenishing’ of their house, valued at £30 Scots. Additionally William Turnbull, shoemaker in Jedburgh (who was surely related to him, perhaps his brother), acted as cautioner for the list of people who owed him money, namely: Robert Bonnar in Knowesouth; Adam Young in Hassendeanbank; Andrew Oliver in Bairnkine; William Scott in Birkhill; William Turnbull in Fulton; Andrew Rutherford in Rule; James [blank] in Earlsdie; and John Ker of Fodderlee. When no one appeared, Adam Chisholme in Newton became cautioner instead. Mark (18th/19th C.) related to the Turnbulls of Chesterhall, Ancrum. He married an Elliot. His children included James (shepherd at Minto Kames) and William (who emigrated to New Zealand). Mark (b.1806/7) from Ancrum, he was land steward at Menslaw farm. He was recorded there in 1851, with his wife Betsy (from Wilton) and their children Janet, William, Margaret, Mark, Helen and Betsy. Mark (19th C.) one of the local Tory supporters who was stripped almost naked and beaten up by the Radical mob at the 1837 election. 5 men were tried for rioting, with 7 victims named. He lived at Spittal Mill. He could have been the same Mark who married Margaret Govenlock, daughter of Robert Govenlock (‘Gloomy Wunter’) and Margaret Ruickbie. Mark (b.1862) son of James, farmer at Bilerwell. His twin brother was Walter, farmer at Hartshaughe. He farmed at Midburn, where his mother Mary Scott lived with him. Mary (d.1816) recorded dying in Hawick, when she was listed as ‘sister to Andrew Turnbull from Jamaica’. It is unclear who this Andrew might have been or how she was related to other Turnbulls. Mary Shortreed ‘Myra’ nee Sim (1932–2020), J.P., M.B.E., daughter of George and Jessie Sim, she was born in the Haig and bred in the West End. She was entirely educated at Hawick High School and was one of the children who contracted typhoid fever in the 1938 outbreak. She worked in Wilson & Glenny’s office and married local merchant and councillor John F. Following the sudden death of her husband she wound up the Turnbull family business and moved home to the bungalow Coblestanes. She then decided to enter politics herself and was elected to the District Council in 1984, serving for 12 years, including 4 as chairperson. She was Hawick Provost 1988–1996 and was described at the time as ‘the best wumman Provost Hawick has ever hed’. Her appointment was not without controversy, however, with her withdrawing her original nomination in 1986, considering Hawick not to be ready, and then getting in unopposed 2 years later. There were some serious hiccups over traditionally all-male events, e.g. she was not invited to attend the annual Callants’ Club dinner and initially not allowed to attend the Common Riding Dinner, despite being Provost. Nevertheless, she was able slowly to break barriers, being the first woman to speak at the Jethart Callants’ Club smoker, the Galashields Manufacturers’ Association Michaelmas dinner and the Peebles ex-Cornets’ Committee dinner. She was also on the board of Eildon Housing Association for 24 years, stepping down in 2017. She received an M.B.E. in 1996 for her public service. Her children were Barrie (an architect), Deborah (manager at Borders Pet Rescue) and Hamish (who runs a knitwear agency). Matthew (15th C.) tenant in Hassendean. In 1494/5 his sons Nicholas and John had remission for the murder of Robert Redford, with John Gledstains acting as surety. Maurice made a Director of Pringle’s in 1947. There is a seat to his memory at the 15th tee on the Vertish. Michael (15th/16th C.) tenant in Abbotrule in 1502. At the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh his surety was Patrick (an architect), Deborah (manager at Borders Pet Rescue) and Hamish (who runs a knitwear agency). Matthew (15th C.) recorded as witness to a baptism in the Hassendean part of Roberton Parish in 1686. This was for William (who was surely a relative), with the other witness being Thomas. Michael (17th C.) described as ‘victore’ when he witnessed a Hawick sasine in 1687. The description is probably an occupation of some sort (perhaps ‘vintner’ or ‘vintualer’ is meant). Probably the same Michael witnessed baptisms in Hawick for Andrew Porteous in 1684, James Davidson and John Thomson in 1687, Andrew Porteous and Robert Turnbull in 1688 and William Bryson in 1689. Michael (17th/18th C.) cooper in Hawick, who had brothers John and Robert. In 1678 all 3 were involved in a case before the Bailies involving a fight with Robert Brown, whose wife they called ‘witches-gate’, with him responding that ‘their sister was ane of that sort’. He was referred to as a wright on the list of Hawick men named in the 1673 trial following the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. He may be the Michael ‘Trumble’ recorded in 1683 when fleshers John Briggs was found guilty of insulting him and William Paisley, ‘calling of them two drunken elders’. Probably the same cooper Michael in Hawick was listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He is probably the Michael listed in 1694 among those on the west-side of Hawick who paid the Hearth Tax. He was senior Deacon of the hammermen in Hawick. He is probably the cooper who in 1704 witnessed a baptism in Hawick for James Beattie. In 1709 and 1712 he and Robert witnessed baptisms for cooper John (probably all 3 were brothers). In 1715 there was a dispute between the hammermen and the weavers over seating precedence in the gallery in St. Mary’s Kirk. The Session determined that ‘for his lifetime, [he] should have ye head of ye fore seat of ye loft, conform to ye desire of ye other two hammermen concerned’. To take this prized seat he had to be waiting at the Loft door when it was opened, and was not allowed to pass anyone else on the way to his seat. This right was not to carry on to his descendants. He may be the same Michael who, in 1714, was ‘creat burgess upon the accoumt that he built the stone stair that goes up to the steiple’ (of St. Mary’s). He could be the Michael, son of Robert and Janet Scott, born in Haick in 1645. It seems likely he was the Michael married to Bessie Bridges, whose children baptised in Hawick included an unnamed son (b.1672), John (b.1676) and Helen (b.1679). Michael (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. In 1704 he had a son John baptised in Hawick Parish, with witnesses Patrick Angus and Bailie George Michael (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Parkhill in 1731 when his daughter Mary was baptised. Michael (18th/19th C.) hosier at Appletreehall. He was declared bankrupt in 1821. Michael (1787–1849) son of William of Burnfoot. He inherited the Great Seal of the Turnbulls after his elder brother was effectively disinherited. He married Mary (possibly sister of Dr. Walter Graham of Hawick, who died in 1832), and after her death emigrated to Canada with his 5 children in 1842. Their children (baptised in Hawick) were: Margaret Scott (1818–1908); Walter

(1821–49); William (b.1822), who died young; Peter Stephenson (1826–89); Mary (1829–80); and William (1828–1901). He died at Woodside in Brantford, Ontario. Michael (18th/19th C.) grocer and spirit dealer of the High Street, recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He could be the Turnbull marked at No. 31 or around No. 66 on Wood’s map. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. He could be the same as Michael, son of William of Burnfoot. Michael (d.1894) 3rd son of Adam and great-grandson of Adam of Denesyde. He helped his brother Thomas farm at Midburn (or ‘Africa’). He married Beatrice Nichol (known as a great beauty), sister of his brother John’s wife. He died at the old schoolhouse, Wolfelee. Myra see Mary Shortreed. Nichol (15th C.) recorded in 1488/9 as witness to an agreement between the Vicar of Hassendean and the Abbot of Melrose. Most of the other witnesses were local clergy-men, and so the same was probably true for him. Nichol (17th/18th C.) mason in Hawick. In 1711 he witnessed (along with mason John) a baptism for fellow mason Peter Mitchell. He is recorded as a witness at Hawick Parish Session in 1718, inquired about whether he saw Andrew Jardine coming out of the Beadle’s house at a very late hour. He was probably related to mason John, who had a son called Nichol baptised in Hawick in 1705. Nichol (d.1840) stocking-maker in Hawick. He married Margaret Laidlaw, who died in 1819, aged 56. They had a son Andrew (d.1804), who married Jean Ormiston (d.1838). Nicholas (15th C.) son of Matthew in Hassendean. In 1494/5 he and his brother John had remission for the murder of Robert Redford, with John Gledstains as surety. They are recorded in the Treasurer’s accounts for 1494/5 having obtained remission from the King (where his name is ‘Nichol’). Ninian (15th C.) son of William. He is recorded at the 1494/5 Justice-ai-re held in Jedburgh when he failed to appear and the Thomas, Laird of Bedrule was fined. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Turnbuls. Ninian (15th/16th C.) listed in the 1501 Exchequer Rolls, along with Robert, 2 Johns, George and David. Their £40 fine was granted to Thomas, son and heir of George of Bedrule. Perhaps the same Ninian was also listed in 1501 among 10 men, mostly Turnbuls, whose fines were remitted. In 1502 he was among more than 20 Turnbuls and others who failed to appear at the Justice-ai-re in Jedburgh for the charge of murdering Robert Oliver; Adam of Billerwell was fined for his non-appearance. He may be the same Ninian, son of William, recorded in 1494/5. Ninian (15th/16th C.) tenant at Overchester, listed in the 1516 pardon that many Turnbuls had for involvement with the traitorous Homes. Other tenants there were Mark, Mark’s brother Archibald, Mark younger, Richard, David, Andrew, and Andrew’s son Thomas. He was probably related to some of these men. Ninian (15th/16th C.) tenant at Rule, listed in the 1516 remission for several Turnbuls for providing assistance to Alexander, Lord Home in plotting against the King. His lands were referred to as ‘Roule’, which could be the same as Town-o-rule perhaps. Andrew was also listed as a tenant there. Norman (1942–2014) born in Edinburgh, he grew up on a farm and served in the R.A.F. He then ran a garage, before becoming a shepherd in the Hawick area. After retirement he became record-keeper for the Turnbull Clan Association. In 2012 he married Terri Booth. The Clan awarded him their lifetime achievement award in 2014. Norman High School history teacher. He was Acting Father in 1997. He was President of the 1514 Club in 1982, the Mosstroopers’ Club in 1990 and the Callants’ Club in 2007, becoming the first person to have held the chair of office of all 3 clubs. Patrick (15th C.) recorded as ‘Patricio Turnbull’ in 1447 when he witnessed the sasine for Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch’s purchase of the Cousinlands. This was signed in Hawick, so he must have been a local man. His name appears at the end along with John Stoddart, so they may have been the Bailie’s of the time. Patrick (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 along with Gilbert. They were both stated to be ‘at the horn’ when John in Dryden was allowed to ‘compone’ for associating with them. Patrick (15th/16th C.) recorded at Wauchope Tower at the Justice-ai-re held in Jedburgh 1494/5. He was allowed to ‘compone’ for associating with Turnbuls who were ‘at the horn’ for the murder of James Rutherford. He is recorded in the Treasurer’s accounts for 1494/5 having obtained remission from the King. He was also recorded in 1502 as ‘in Walchope’ (i.e. Wauchope) when he had remission for associating with Archibald and Ninian Armstrong and William, son of David Scott of Tushielaw. He was recorded being absent from the indictment when summoned by the sergeant in Jedburgh. Patrick (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 among the men who were put to the horn in for involvement in the murder of Robert Oliver. The person called to enter him was Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst, who was fined for his non-appearance. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Patricks. Patrick (15th/16th C.) tenant at Gatehousecote, listed in the 1516 pardon that many Turnbulls had for involvement with the traitorous Homes. Other tenants there were Andrew and his brother William, as well as Thomas and David. Patrick (16th C.) witness to a Lorraine susine for the lands of Harwood and Hawthornside in 1531. He is listed beside Robert, so they may have been related, as well as possibly related to the Lorraine family. Patrick (16th C.) recorded in the 1538 Exchequer Rolls as occupier of the lands of Wauchopebank and Templehall, which were at that time owned by the Crown. He is probably related to earlier and later Patricks of associated with these same places. Patrick ‘Pate’ (16th/17th C.) tenant at Wauchope in Rulewater. He is recorded as ‘Pait Trumbill’ in a 1605 court case. He may be a descendant of the earlier Patrick in Wauchope. Patrick (16th/17th C.) tenant at Templehall and Brewalls, along with Walter Scott, recorded in a contract of ‘wadset’ for the lands in 1612. In 1614 (registered in 1616) he is ‘of Templehall’ of marriage between his daughter Margaret and William, son of John Ainslie, Burgess of Edinburgh. His son Thomas was cautioner, while witnesses were William ‘fiae of Bedrule’ (probably his brother), Robert (possibly his uncle), and George also ‘there’ (in Bedrule or Templehall). (and probably another relative). Along with Walter Scott, he is also recorded as sometimes occupier of Templehall in 1627. He is probably the Patrick who was son of Sir Thomas of Bedrule. His children included Thomas and Margaret (who married William Ainslie in 1614). Patrick (16th/17th C.) recorded in Macksid in 1618 when he was witness to a bond between Walter of Bedrule and Adam in Abbotrule Townhead. Patrick (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1717 he married Anna, daughter of William Douglas. Paul (16th C.) tenant of one of the farms of Midshiels, Appletreehal, Broadale, Cottilaw or ‘Burnside’ in 1562/3 when Lord Alexander Home tried to remove his ‘pretended tenants’. Andrew Turnbull in Hornshole is also listed among others. Percy (16th/17th C.) recorded being ‘of the Stonylethe’ (i.e. Stonedge) in 1601, when 2 Englishmen accused him of stealing their livestock. He was fined ‘for lack of answer’. ‘Percy’ is not a common Scottish name, and so it is possible that this was an error and he is the same as one of the other Turnbulls associated with Stonedge. Peter (15th C.) son of the Laird of Bedrule. In 1493 he served as surety for John Waugh, who had remission for stealing sheep from the Murrays in Sundhope and for associating with the Duke of Albany. Peter (15th/16th C.) tenant in Bonchester who had remission for his involvement in a long list of crimes in 1502. This included the murder of James Rutherford at the Kirk of Hawick, burning and stealing goods from George Rutherford of Longnewton at Barnhill, stealing livestock from John Grahamslaw at ‘Camys’ (probably Minto Kames) with Turnbulls who were ‘at the horn’, bringing a party of English to raid from the lands of Robert Lauder at ‘Merch-cluche’ and capturing him for ransom, stealing sheep from George Tait and his tenants at ‘Fichop’, stealing sheep from John and William Cleghorn at ‘Lethanhope’, burning grain and stealing sheep from George Rutherford at ‘Sandyestanis’, with the help of John of Minto and others, and for associating with the rebels Mark and John. Adam of Billerwell served as surety. Peter (15th/16th C.) tenant in Mackside in 1502. At the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh he was surety for Michael in Abbotrule and was fined for his non-appearance. Peter (15th/16th C.) feued the lands of the east steadying of Gildhouse, also called Baillelee in 1510. Peter ‘Pait’ (16th C.) recorded in 1540 as ‘Pait Trumbill called Cattle’ on a list of ‘Scottesmen rebels resete within England’. His son ‘Pait’ called ‘Cattle younger’ and another son ‘Jame’ are also listed. They presumably came from Catlee near Wauchope. Peter ‘the Monk’ (d.1561) listed in 1540 among Scottish rebels who were hiding out in England. He is recorded as ‘Peter Trumbill called the Monk’, and he is listed among Turnbulls from Catlee and Cragwood (several of whom were also called Peter). He was hanged for theft and reset, along with William Elliot ‘callit Woddir-nek’ and Henry Black in Softlaw. It is unclear where he came from. Peter Stephenson (1836–1921) 14th son of Thomas Scott of East Middle farm, and direct descendant of the Turnbulls of Bedrule. He was said to have been born at ‘Deneburn’ near Denholm, but his baptism was registered in Kirkton. He studied at Glasgow University, graduating M.D. in 1859, then studying briefly at Edinburgh Medical School before entering the army. He received a medal for serving during the Abyssinian campaign in 1867–68. In 1893 he became Surgeon Major General of the Indian Medical Service in Bombay. He was a fellow of the University of Bombay and Surgeon General with the Government of Bombay. In 1896 he returned to Britain, receiving a good-service pension, and was appointed honorary surgeon to the King. In 1870 he married Mary Oliver, daughter of George Oliver the Hawick solicitor, and she died in 1902. Their children were: Thomas (1871–72); Margaret Lindsay ‘Meta’ (b.1873) who married Maj. W.G. Cooper of the 34th Poona Horse; Mary (b.1874); Evelyn Jane (1875–76); George Oliver (b.1877), who served with the Indian Army; Nora Christian (1879–1974), married Rev. John Robert Paterson Sclater of New North Church, Edinburgh; Bruce (b.1880), Lieut. in the 23rd Sikh Pioneers; Hugh Stephenson (b.1882), who became a 2nd-Lieut. in the 57th Rifles; Percy Douglas (b.1886); and Dorothy Lillian (b.1887). He is named on the memorial tablet to the Turnbulls of Bedrule in Bedrule Kirk, which his 4 surviving children had put up in 1955. He is buried in Grange Cemetery in Edinburgh. Many of his letters are incorporated into the book ‘Turnbull: lives and letters’ (c.1994).

Philip (15th C.) son and heir of Richard of Harden. He inherited the lands in 1448 through a charter by Henry Wardlaw, Baron of Wilton. He was probably succeeded by Walter, who resigned the lands to the Lady of the Barony in 1468. Philip (15th C.) son and heir of William of Whithope. He witnessed a charter for ‘Irelandis lands’ in the Barony of Wilton in 1454. Probably the same Philip witnessed a document in 1455 attesting that John of St. Michael inherited the lands of Whitchesters from his father. A charter of 1456 from William Douglas of Drumlanrig grants him the lands of Whithope in the Barony of Hawick. He may have been related to the neighbouring contemporary Philip (at Harden). Philip of Whithope (15th/16th C.) member of the panel for James Douglas of Drumlanrig inheriting the Barony of Hawick in 1484. In 1488 he was one of the bailies appointed by Sir Thomas Turnbull for the precept leasing Greenwood and Lyne to Robert Scott. In 1494/5 Thomas, Junior, Laird of Bedrule, served as surety for his son John (unless there was another contemporary Philip). He also served as surety for his brother, Stephen, who had raided the lands of John and Ninian Murray at Kereshope. He was probably the Laird of Whithope ‘in Ernieuch’ who was surety for David Craik in 1494/5, who had remission for pillaging from Harthern. In 1500 he had 4 oxen taken from him, appraised and then given to Walter Scott of Branxholme, assignee for the Murrays; since no other goods could be found, he also lost his lands of Whithope to Scott of Branxholme. In 1500 he was witness to the instrument of sasine for Walter Scott of Branxholme inheriting lands from his grandfather. Probably the same Philip is described as ‘in Quhithop’ in 1502 when he and David in Carlinpool had remission for bringing in the ‘Traitors of Levin’ to raid the farms of Fastheugh and Hangingshaw; their sureties were John in Dryden and Alexander in Commonside. He was surely related to David, son of the Laird of Whithope recorded in 1494/5, may have been his son. It also seems likely he was related to the earlier Philip of Harden. Philip (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 among the men who were put to the horn in for involvement in the murder of Robert Oliver. The person called to enter him was Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst, who was fined for his non-appearance. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Turnbulls.

Ralph (d.bef. 1526) recorded in a document of 1526 in the Selkirk Protocol Books. He held part of the lands of Philiphaugh. A third of those lands had been held by Janet Turnbull (perhaps related, or perhaps a first wife) and were in 1526 gained by his widow Margaret Ker. The attorney acting for his wife was Mark Ker (who was probably his brother-in-law). He was probably a descendant of Adam of Philiphaugh. In 1535 Robert declared that he (Ralph) was never given sasine of 10 shillings of rent on a tenement of William in Selkirk (all 3 men possibly related). Also in 1535 he was ‘deceased lord of the said lands of Philiphaugh’ (Philiphaugh is probably meant) when Mark Ker of Kippielaw and Robert Turnbull agreed to each hold half of these lands until his son and heir John came of age. Chaplain Mark was one of the witnesses and may also have been related. His wife was Margaret, sister of Mark Ker of Kippielaw. He was succeeded by his son John (who may have been son of Janet Turnbull), who was a minor (with tutors Robert and Mar Ker of Kippielaw). Richard of Harden (15th C.) recorded in 1431 when he was among a number of witnesses who attested to being at the transfer of the lands of Heap between James Langlands of that Ilk and Walter Scott of Buccleuch; John and David are also listed beside him (although with no designation) and so may be related. He was possibly dead by 1448 when his son Philip inherited the lands of Harden in the Barony of Wilton. This family is probably related to the Turnbulls of Whithope. He may be the same Richard who was on a ‘retour of inquest’ made in Hawick in 1424 for lands in Hownam. Richard (15th C.) listed in 1463/4 among the local men who were rewarded.
by the King for assisting in the capture of John Douglas of Balveny. He is surely related to other Turnbulls who were named (Andrew, Stephen and John) and may be the same as Richard of Harden. He is recorded as ‘Ricardus Turnebule’.

Richard (15th/16th C.) tenant in Overchester, listed among several Turnbulls who had remission in 1516 for assisting the Homes against the King. Several other men are also listed there, and so probably related. Richard (16th C.) listed along with Hector of Clarilaw (so presumably his son or brother), in a pledge made by James Gedstains of that Ilk in 1594/5, that they would not harm Gavin Eliott of Stobs or William Elliot of Horsleyhill. Richard (17th C.) resident at Has Sandybank according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to William, who was also listed there. He is probably the Richard who witnessed a baptism for William (probably a relative) and Christian Oliver in Robertson Parish in 1688. He may be the Richard whose son William was in Minto in 1718 when he got married.

Richard (17th/18th C.) wright in Hawick. He is recorded in 1722 when he was paid for a joist for the steeple in St. Mary’s Kirk. He married Janet Porteous in Hawick in 1714 and their children included: William (b.1716); Mary (b.1717); Janet (b.1719); Mary (again, b.1721); John (b.1723); Janet (again, b.1726); and Robert (b.1729). The witnesses in 1723 were merchants Adam Elliot and William Tudhope and in 1726 were William ‘Thowdup’ and John Scott. Richard (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Midshiels in 1729 and surely related to Robert, who was there at the same time. He married Helen Turnbull in 1726, the marriage being proclaimed in both Wilton and Minto Parishes. Their children included Robert (b.1729), with witnesses James Thomson and William Turnbull. He is probably the Richard who witnessed a baptism in Wilton in 1729 for George Scott, resident at Wester Burnfoot. Sir Richard of Ferniehirst (1908–98), G.C.M.G. Career diplomat, he was Governor of Tanganyika during its hand-over and later Governor of Aden. His wife Beatrice is buried in Bedrule churchyard. His twin children are Alison and Julian. He is supposed to have remarked to Denis Healey, then Defense Secretary, that the British Empire would be remembered for only 2 things: ‘the popularization of Association Football and the term ‘f...off’.’ Robert (15th C.) Presbyter of the Diocese of Glasgow. In 1431 he was the notary for the ‘letter of transumpt’ for the 1420 charter of half the lands of Branxholme being granted to Robert Scott of Rankilburn. This letter was made in the church of Cavers. Hence he was probably a local church official. Robert (15th C.) Rector of Lilliesleaf from about 1460. In 1440 the Pope revoked the gift to the Bishop of Glasgow and attached the advowson to the Holy See. It was later given to him, and he resigned it back to the Pope in 1480. Robert (15th C.) Abbot of Jedburgh 1476–78. In 1478 he is recorded as witness to a charter granting David Scott rights in Selkirk. Also in 1478 he was involved in a case registered with Parliament involving ‘mails’ on Stewartland, belonging to the Stewarts. It is unclear how he was related to other Turnbulls. Robert of Hoscoat (15th C.) resigned the lands of Hoscoat into the hands of their superior, William Lord Borthwick. They were then conferred upon Alexander, Master of Home. He is referred to as being of ‘Thoscot’. It is unclear how long these lands in the Borthwick valley belonged to his family. Robert of Broadlee (15th C.) resigned his lands of ‘Bradelee’ in the Baron of Hawick into the hands of the superior, William Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1479. Presumably this was to have these lands regranted. Either the same Robert, or perhaps his son is recorded in 1498 as being ‘of Bradle’ when he had remission, along with Alexander and John, son of Robert, for commuting with Englishmen. Robert (15th C.) listed in 1482/3 among some Borderers who were captured by Patrick Dickson, Bailie of Peebles. The others were several Elliotts and Robert Dalgleish. He may be the same as one of the Roberts who was later declared to be a rebel. Robert (15th C.) recorded in 1493 being ‘in Wowlee’, i.e. resident of Wolfelee. He was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-airo in Jedburgh. The previous entry was for Alexander, also in Wolfelee and a later entry was for his son John. Robert (15th C.) recorded being ‘in laris’ at the Justice-airo in Jedburgh in 1493. His lands may have been Lairhope above Falnash. He was allowed to ‘compone’ for the crimes of: stealing livestock from Blackhope in Eddleston Parish; stealing 2 cows from Shieldgreen; stealing 4 cows from Matthew Gotterson in the Forest of Lauder; and common theft. His surety was George, Master of Angus. In 1494/5 he had remission for stealing a horse, a dagger and other items from John Smith, with surety being John Murray ‘in the Forest’; he was again described as being ‘in laris’. Robert (15th C.) resident of Wells. He is listed at the 1493 Justiceaire in Jedburgh when William Douglas of Cavers was fined for his non-appearance. He was again cited for non-appearance in 1494/5. Robert of Mudlaw (15th C.) possibly son of Sir Thomas of Phaup. He is mentioned in the royal pardon for Sir Thomas in 1494/5, whose crimes involved receiving stolen sheep from him and other men, namely John 'de Newhalburn', Thomas Newton and Alex Gray; either he or John appear to have been son of Sir Thomas (but the Latin in ambiguous). He is also recorded in the Justice-aire held in Selkirk in 1494/5 when he was fined for failure to appear (with Thomas of Phaup listed just after him). His lands were probably near where Moodlaw Loch is, on the boundary between Selkirkshire and Dunfriesshire. He is probably also the Robert listed along with Alexander in 1494/5 when Edward Dunn in Phaup had remission for stealing more than 100 sheep from them, from the Waters of Yarrow and Tweed; Thomas in Phaup was surety for Dunn. Robert (15th C.) recorded as brother to the Laird of Bedrule in 1494/5. Thomas Turnbull, 'Junior' Laird of Bedrule served as his surety; it is unclear if this means he was brother of Thomas or uncle of Thomas (i.e. brother of George, the elder Laird). Robert (15th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1494/5. He was tenant 'in le castel hil de braxane', i.e. Castlehill near Branxholme. He 'came in the King's will' for stealing 15 score sheep from the Murrays in Sundhope, with his surety being Lord Home. Robert (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 when Walter Rutherford was allowed to 'compone' for several crimes, including stealing from him. The theft was of 14 sheep from 'sowdane braa' (presumably Souden Brae). Robert (15th/16th C.) listed in the Exchequer Rolls in 1501, along with Adam and David, when they were fined, with George Douglas, Master of Angus, responsible for their pledges. He is probably the same as one of the contemporary Roberts. Robert (15th/16th C.) listed in the 1501 Exchequer Rolls, along with 2 Johns, Ninian, George and David. Their £40 fine was granted to Thomas, son and heir of George of Bedrule. Robert (15th/16th C.) recorded being 'de bonechester' at the 1494/5 Justice-aire held in Jedburgh. He was surety for himself and fined for not appearing. Probably the same Robert was also recorded as tenant in Bonchester in 1501 among 10 men, mostly Turnbells, whose fines were remitted. In 1502 he was surety for himself at the Justice-aire; he was fined for non-appearance, denounced as a fugitive and had his goods escheated. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Turnbells from Bonchester. Robert 'Muriale' (15th/16th C.) described as one of the King's rebels and already 'at the horn' in 1502 when George Turnbull in Tofts was allowed to pay a fine for associating with him. They had burned Riddell, as well as stealing 480 sheep, 2 cows and sundry goods. On the same raid they killed a black mare belonging to Robert Scott. Robert (15th/16th C.) tenant in 'blindhalch', which is probably Blindhaugh near Ashkirk. In 1502 he was surety for Walter Wilson, in the same place, and fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. Robert (15th/16th C.) witness to a charter for Alexander, Lord Home, signed in Edinburgh in 1506. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (15th/16th C.) listed in the Exchequer Rolls for Ettrick Ward in 1507, when he had an obligation for a payment. He may be the same Robert who was aid for a silver cup in 1513 in association with Yarrow. Robert (15th/16th C.) recorded along with John as witness to a document relating to the lands of Allanshaws (in Lauderdale) and Melrose Abbey. Robert (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1507 as a rebel, along with Simon, when several Dalgleishes (tenants of Braidhaugh) were given remission for associating with them. He was probably from somewhere in the Rule valley. His name is written 'Roberto Turnebule'. Robert (15th/16th C.) feuded the east stead of 'Warmwood', also called Langcleuchhead in Ettrick in 1510. Either the same Robert or a descendant was tenant in 1541 of the Crown lands of 'Est Syde of Warmwod, alias Huitralbum' in Ettrick. Robert (15th/16th C.) tenant in Hassendeanbank, listed on the 1516 pardon for Turnbells and others who may have assisted Alexander, Lord Home. David is also listed as tenant at Hassendeanbank. Robert (15th/16th C.) tenant in Hallrule who was listed among the many Turnbulls given remission in 1516 for assisting the traitorous Homes; William and Thomas were also listed there as tenants of Hallrule, and so may have been related. Probably the same man was also listed among the Borderers who were pardoned in 1526 for their role in marching against the Earl of Arran. Also on the list are his 'brethir sonnis' (i.e. nephews) David and George. He was also among the local lairds who had remission in 1527 for their part in the Battle of Skirmish Field and at Linlithgow. He was thus presumably a supporter of Scott of Branxholme. Robert of Howden (15th/16th C.) recorded in Selkirk in 1527 when he renounced his claims of wardship, relief and marriage against James, his cousin in Philiphaugh. This was done in the house of William (who was probably related). In 1528 he quite claimed a piece of land in Selkirk called Ladylands and also witnessed documents. He was also recorded in documents in 1528/9 and 1531. He was probably the Robert ‘tutor of Holdene’ who witnessed a transaction between John Scott in Myres and Walter Scott, tutor of Howden. In 1534 he demitted his lands of Howden to George and John Murray. In 1535 he was ‘tutor of Holdene’ when he witnessed a document in Selkirk for Walter Scott of Roberton. Probably the same Robert is recorded in 1536 when he sold parts of Ladylands in Selkirk to James Crawford, to James Minto and to Thomas Forest. He may be the Robert who witnessed a marriage contract for Walter, son of Robert Scott in Howford in 1539. Robert of Philiphaugh (16th C.) recorded in 1530 as ‘superior lord of Philiphaugh’ when he assigned half of Ladylands to Thomas Forest. He was listed in 1530 as ‘Tutour of Philiphauche’ when he was one of the Border Lairds who submitted themselves to James V to keep the rievers under better control. In 1531 he was still ‘tutor’ there when Mark Ker gave up any claims to Philiphaugh in his favour. In 1531 he is probably the Robert who formally acknowledged to his grandson John, ‘tutor of the lord of Philiphauch’, that a tack had been given to Mark Ker (Burgess of Selkirk) for 5 years for lands in Philiphaugh. In 1531/2 he was part of an inquest to rule on a land arrangement in Selkirk. In 1532/3 he was superior of lands in ‘the Ladyland’ in Selkirk that he resigned to James Crawford and Christian Turnbull. He could have been married to Janet and father of John, who was served heir to his mother’s lands of Philiphaugh in 1558. He may be the Robert recorded in 1526/7 (in the Selkirk Protocol Books) attesting to a royal letter that he should be in possession of the rents previously held by Janet Hunter, widow of Thomas Turnbull, who lived at Coldingham. He may also have witnessed a baptism in Selkirk in 1527. He could be Robert complaining in 1535 that Ralph was never given sasine of 10 shillings rent for a tenement in Selkirk belonging to William. He is probably the Robert recorded in 1535 when he and Mark Ker of Kippielaw agreed to each hold half of the lands of ‘Philhop’ (although Philiphaugh is surely meant) until their ward John (son and heir of the deceased Ralph) came into entry of the lands; in 1536 he yielded up his half of the wardship. Robert (16th C.) Burgess of Selkirk. He witnessed a transaction there in 1532/3 and was probably distinct from the tutor of Philiphaugh. Robert (16th C.) witness in 1531 to a Lorraine sasine for Harwood and Hawthornside. Other witnesses were Patrick (possibly a relative) and 2 Lorraines. He could be the same as Robert in Hallrule. Robert (16th C.) recorded in Hutlerburn when he witnessed an agreement in Selkirk for John Scott being responsible for the death of Walter Down in 1540/1. He witnessed another transaction in Selkirk for Alexander Scott in 1541/2, Robert (16th C.) recorded as ‘incola’ (i.e. resident) in 1563 when he was witness to the transfer of Spittal-on-Rule from Douglas of Cavers to Ker of Primside. Robert ‘Feesble Hob’ (16th C.) denounced as a rebel in 1537 for stealing from Sir Walter Ogilvie of ‘Dunlugus’ at ‘Colbrandispethe’. It is unclear how he was related to other Turnbells. His nickname is listed as ‘Febill Hob’. Robert (16th C.) brother of the Laird of Bedrule, recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books in 1553. His brother was presumably Sir Thomas of Bedrule and hence he was a younger son of George of Bedrule. He claimed on behalf of Chaplain William Todd, possessor of the lands of ‘Fentoun’ that Andrew Ker of Faldonside was wrongfully keeping his cows on the land. Robert (16th C.) probably farmer at Hobsburn. ‘Robert Turnbullis hous callit the auld hous and yaird thairof’ are listed among the disputed lands in the 1562 Baronial dispute in Feu-Rule. His rig lay at the ‘schadow’, i.e. west side of the lands, adjacent to Hawthornside Wood, and were assigned to Agnes Herries as superior. He may have been father of Walter, who is recorded as Laird there in 1568 and 1574. Robert (16th C.) tenant in ‘Siron Shiell’, i.e. Swanshied, recorded in 1567 among men charged to appear before the Regent Moray. He was also listed in 1567 among men who Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst was ordered to present him to answer charges of raiding into England. Robert ‘Isobel’s Robin’ (16th C.) recorded in 1567, along with Hector ‘in Turnbull’ (which seems likely to be a transcription error), brother to George, as well as Adam, son to Sandie Turnbull, ‘Part Pursell’ and 2 Olivers. David Home of Wedderburn was instructed to enter them to answer charges of raiding into England. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th C.) listed in 1579 among a group of Turnbells accused of stealing cattle from the Laird of ‘Pansoun’. Robert (16th C.) recorded in Wauchope in 1581 when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk for Kers. Robert...

(16th C.) listed as ‘Robert Trumbill, sometime tutor of Barnhills’ among a large number of men in a summons of treason of 1592. The list was started with Dame Margaret Douglas, Countess of Bothwell, and Francis Stewart, sometime Earl of Bothwell (and presumably the rest were their supporters). He is probably the Robert, brother of William of Barnhills (as well as Gavin and Hector) who was listed in 1584/5 among Borderers summoned to appear before the Privy Council. Probably the same Robert ‘of the Barnhill’ was among men complained about in 1590 by the English Warden for a raid into England. He is probably the ‘Robert Trumble of Barnhill’ recorded in 1601, along with James Douglas of Cavers and William Douglas of Whitriggs, when Henry Woodrington accused them of stealing his cattle. Robert (16th/17th C.) Sheriff Clerk of Roxburghshire. He took over after the death of George Douglas, as recorded in the Ker-Turnbull feud case of 1601. Probably the same Robert was Sheriff Depute in 1600 for the ‘retour’ for the Kers of Cessford. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Roberts. Robert of Bewlie (d.1601) probably son of Walter, and among the Turnbulls who were accused of harassing the widow and children of the murdered Walter Turnbull of Rawflat in 1581. He had brothers William, Mark and Andrew. He was murdered in Jedburgh at the same time as John Middlemas (from Lilliesleaf), as well as ‘Henry Davidsoun of Combes’ and others were mutilated. There was a remission for Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst (Provost of Jedburgh), Sir James Kerr of Crailing and George Moscrop, for these and other crimes, with many other Kerrs, Ainslies, Robsons and Rutherfords implicated. This was the result of some ongoing feud between the Turnbulls of the Minto area and the Kers of Jedburgh; a gang of about 30 Turnbulls entered Jedburgh on Fair Day seeking Thomas Ker, brother of the Provost. They eventually killed him and his servant, with John Middlemas also being killed, and many other men being wounded. Several Turnbulls were late convicted and hanged for their involvement, including his brother Andrew. His brother William was appointed tutor for his son Andrew in 1603 and Andrew was served as his heir in 1607. Robert (d.c.1605) tenant in Hallrule. He was brother of William in Barnhills, Gavin in Howa and Hector in Stanedge. In 1606 the Bailies of Hawick apprehended William and George Grahamslaw for his murder. They were sons of Adam Grahamslaw of Little Newton, and were transferred to the Edinburgh Tolbooth. His widow, children and brothers were accused of trying to ruin the 2 accused, rather than prosecute them. The summons mentions his widow Grizel, as well as his brothers Gavin and Hector, and his eldest son Robert. Robert (16th/17th C.) probably brother of Sir Thomas of Bedrule. He is probably the Robert ‘son of the Laird of Beddroule’ who was among Turnbulls and others charged to appear before the Privy Council in 1584/5. In 1614 he was witness to the marriage of the daughter of Patrick of Templehall, probably his nephew. Also that year he was probably the Robert in Bedrule who had a bond with Joseph Tennant, minister of Bedrule. And in 1618 he was witness to a bond between Walter of Bedrule and George Rutherford, younger in Abbotrule. However, he is easily confused with Sir Thomas’ son Robert (his nephew). It is probably his son John who is listed in 1578/9 as ‘broder sone to the said Sir Thomas’. Robert (16th/17th C.) eldest son of Robert in Hallrule, with his mother being Grizel. He is recorded in a summons of 1606, in which the family are directed to prosecute the men accused of murdering his father within 15 days, or else they would be released from the Edinburgh Tolbooth. Robert (d.1611) son of David in Mackside. He was convicted and educated in Jedburgh in 1611. Robert (16th/17th C.) tenant in Deneside. In 1611 he acted as cautioner for the appearance of his brother David in court in Jedburgh. Robert (16th/17th C.) son of Sir Thomas of Bedrule and brother of Walter of Bedrule. In 1618 he witnessed a bond of his brother Walter. He was witness to a bond of 1620 between Thomas Turnbull ‘in Rowlspittle’ (probably his brother) with Robert Pringle (probably later of Stichell). Also in 1620 he was probably the Robert called ‘of Bedroull’ whose son Thomas had a bond with Sir Walter Scott of Whitslade. He married Margaret Erskine and their children included John and Thomas. He is difficult to distinguish from his uncle Robert, who lived at a similar time. He is probably the Robert ‘son of the Laird of Beddroule’ who was listed among the Borderers summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1584/5. Robert (17th C.) tenant farmer at Templehall in Rulewater, recorded in a contract of ‘wadset’ of 1647 and another of 1642, and witness to a sasine of 1654. He was also named in a disposition of 1652. His brother was Thomas, tenant at Harwood. And he must have been related to George and to James. He could be the Robert in ‘Rouletoun’ recorded in 1643, with his lands being valued at £104, and Thomas also listed there. Robert (17th C.) tenant of Unthank in Hobkirk Parish, along with David, recorded in 1643. Their lands were valued at £66 13s 4d. Robert (d.c.1662) tenant in Swanshiel. His daughter ‘Mariota’ (probably Marion) was served as his heir in 1662. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Scott and their children included Andrew (b.1643), Michael (b.1645) and Robert (b.1648). He could be the father of weaver Michael (recorded from the 1670s until the 1710s), who also had brothers Robert and William, as well as a sister. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Leyden and their daughter Isobel was baptised in 1654. The witnesses were John Scott and Walter Purdom. Robert (d.c.1682) listed in Hawthornside when his will was recorded in 1682. He was surely related to William, whose will was also recorded on the same day, as well as Adam who was recorded there in 1688. Robert (d.c.1682) tenant in ‘Horslie’ when his will was recorded in 1682. These are probably the lands in the Slitrig valley. Robert (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, probably the part that was Hasseendean. He married Agnes Renwick and their children included Agnes (b.1689). He could be the Robert who witnessed a baptism for Robert Scott in Roberton in 1681, another for William in 1686, one for William Scott and Bessie (who may have been related) in 1687, one for George Hood in 1687 and one for John Renwick in Horsleyhill in 1688. Robert (17th C.) recorded being ‘in Repertslaw’ in a 1684 list of Roxburghshire men declared as fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalism; this was probably Raperlaw. His name is given in another version of the record as ‘Thomas’. Robert (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. Robert (17th C.) resident of Orchard on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert (17th C.) resident of Birkhill in Hobkirk Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He may have been related to Walter, who was tenant there. Robert (17th C.) tenant in Bonchester according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert (17th C.) resident at Chapelhill according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert (17th C.) resident at Cockerheugh on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls for Hassendeane Parish. He may have been son of Thomas, who was at Cockerheugh about a gernation earlier. Robert (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Helen Rathie and their children included: Isabel (b.1688); Jean (b.1691); and Helen (b.1694). His wife’s name is ‘Margaret’ in 1691, when the witnesses were William Easton and James Veitch. The witnesses in 1694 were James and William Dunlop (who lived at Birkwood). Robert (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He was listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He may be the same Robert listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. In 1712 he appears to have been the first person to be allowed to plan for the erection of a ‘through-stone’ over his grave in St. Mary’s Kirkyard. This followed the reading of an Act of 1708. He was allowed permission, but asked to contribute to the poor box. He may be the same weaver who was recorded in a sasine of 1687 disposing a West End tenement to his wife Helen Paisley, and whose daughter Isobel was born in 1688 (with witnesses Robert Allan and Michael Turnbull). He may be the weaver Robert who witnessed a baptism for weaver David Reid in 1713 and another for George Hood in 1688. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Whitlaw. He married Janet Donaldson in 1710. Their children included: John (b.1713); Robert (b.1719); James (b.1722); and Janet (b.1725). The 1725 baptism was witnessed by Archibald Paterson and James Johnstone. Robert (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He is probably the ‘younger weaver in ye Howgate bewest ye water in Hawick’ recorded in a baptismal record of 1708, and hence son of the older Robert; the child was called William, and the witnesses were weaver Robert Turnbull and Andrew Riddell, tenant in Goldielands. He is probably the weaver Robert who witnessed a baptism for weaver David Reid in 1713 and another in 1716 for an illegitimate child of Walter Scott, brother of the Laird of Whitslade. He was also ‘younger weaver in Hawick’ in 1716. In 1717 he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Robert Elliot. He may be the weaver who witnessed a baptism for butcher Robert Hardie in 1723. He married Margaret Elliot (perhaps the Margaret, daughter of William Elliot, who married a Robert in Hawick in 1707). Their children included: Margaret (b.1716); Janet (b.1718); Walter (b.1721); Mary (b.1723); Isobel (b.1725); and Michael (b.1727). The witnesses in 1716 were Bailie Robert Ruecastle and shoemaker Robert Elliot. Robert (17th/18th C.) tenant in ‘Woollee Miiln’, i.e. Wolfelee Mill. His children included: Isabel (b.1718); Janet (b.1719); Thomas; and William. Probably the same ‘Miller in Woollemiln’ had a son Robert baptised in Hobkirk Parish in 1737. Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Midshiels in 1729 and surely related to Richard, who was there at the same time. He married Elspeth Douglas and their children included Margaret (b.1729) and John (b.1738). The witnesses in 1729 were Andrew Stewart and William Douglas (who was surely related to his wife). Robert (18th C.) smith in Hawick Parish. He married Christian Turnbull and their children included James (b.1726) and Isabel (b.1730). The witnesses in 1726 were masons John and Andrew Turnbull. Robert (18th C.) Hawick resident, married to Isobel Kedie. Their children included: John (b.1737); Janet (b.1738); Isobel (b.1740); and Thomas (b.1741). Robert (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Cavers itself in 1722 when his son William was baptised and in 1730 when his daughter Euphan was baptised. There are several other children, baptised in Cavers, who could be his. Robert (18th C.) gardener in the Hawick area. He could be the gardener recorded at Whitriggs in 1727 when his son William was baptised in Cavers Parish. In 1733 and 1736 he was living at Midshiels. In 1742 he witnessed a baptism (along with James Douglas) for merchant Robert Taylor and Margaret Douglas (probably related to his wife). His wife was Euphan Douglas and their children included: Janet (b.1731), Helen (b.1733) and Charles (b.1736), baptised in Wilton; and Robert (b.1743) and and George (b.1745), baptised in Hawick. The witnesses in 1733 were James Dryden and Andrew Douglas (perhaps related to his wife), in 1736 were John and James Dryden and in 1743 were merchants Robert Taylor and James Douglas (who was probably related to his wife). Robert (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He married Janet Kersel and their children included: Adam (b.1760); John (b.1762); Isabel (b.1765); and James (b.1768). The baptism in 1768 was witnessed by the ‘whole congregation’. Probably the same weaver Robert witnessed a baptism in 1761 and another in 1766 for James Taylor. He was already deceased in 1803 when his wife died. Robert of Standhill (18th C.) recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He may be the ‘Captain Turnbull Standhill’ listed in the Window Tax Rolls for Ancrum Parish in 1748. In 1737 his daughter Ann became the 2nd wife of Andrew Bennet of Chesters. It is unclear how he was related to other Turnbuls of Standhill. Robert (18th C.) recorded at Whitecleughside in 1761 when his son Archibald was baptised in Roberton Parish and at Mabonlaw in 1763 and 1766 when his sons William and John were baptised. Other children baptised at a similar time to a Robert include Walter (b.1759) and Robert and Janet (b.1768). Robert (d.1766) miller at Hallrule Mill. He married Helen and their sons were Thomas and Walter (who were millers at Southdean Mill, along with another Robert). In 1774, by which time he was deceased, his widow rented the farm of Doorpool. He was buried in Hobkirk kirkyard. Robert (1738/9-99) blacksmith at Gillbraehead. He married Margaret Little, who died in 1797, aged 55. They are buried in Ettleton Cemetery along with 5 of their children and Elspeth (1760/1-1833). Thomas (1770/1-1854), also blacksmith at Gillbraehead, was probably his son, as well as William (1777-8-1851), who married Isabella Young. Robert (18th C.) miller at Southdean Mill. In 1773 his co-tenants William and Robert were cautioners for the rental of Doorpool by Helen Turnbull, their mother, who was widow of Robert, miller at Hallrule Mill. It seems likely that the 2 Roberts were related to each other. He may be the same Robert who was recorded as tenant of Hallrule Mill on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Robert (18th C.) tenant of Hallrule Mill. He was married to Tibbie Donaldson, and their son John was said to have been prone to fighting at local fairs. It is unclear how he might have been related to the miller of Hallrule who died in 1766. Robert (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Whithope Mill in 1780 when his son John was baptised. Robert (18th C.) farm labourer in the late 1700s. He is recorded planting trees at Whitchesters in 1790-91, cutting the foundation for a dyke in upper Teviotdale in 1792 and quarrying stones for a dyke in Liddesdale about 1793. Robert (18th C.) gardener at Synton in 1778 and 1779, when he was working for Alexander Scott. Robert (d.bef. 1809) mason on the Cross Wynd. His daughter Margaret died in 1809. He could be the workman Robert who witnessed a baptism for Robert Johnston in 1784. Robert (b.1765) 3rd son of John of Wester Swanshie. He purchased Galalaw, just outside Hawick, probably from Robert Pott around 1815. In 1821 he was a witness to the birth of William Turnbull to James (his brother) and Mary Stavert. He is listed as ‘Turnbull, R. Esq. Gallawlaw’ in 1821 on the subscription list for William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’. Wood’s 1824 map shows him as owner of a piece of land at Dovemount. He may be the Laird of Galalaw who acquired a part of the lands of Silverbuthall from James Scott. Elizabeth, a widow (aged 83) recorded at Galalaw in 1851 may have been his wife and Robert who farmed a widow (aged 86) was recorded at Galalaw in 1851. He may be the same Robert who purchased Hobkirk Kirkstile in 1807. Robert (1802/3{1841) farmer at Bewliehill in Lilliesleaf Parish, listed in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 4 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. Probably the same Robert paid the cart tax in Lilliesleaf in 1787–91. Robert (1755/6–1832) weaver in Hawick. He is buried in St. Mary’s, along with his siblings John (1762/3–1841), James (d.1846) and Janet (who died aged 84). Robert (1756/7–1847) shoemaker on the Loan. He could be the Robert, son of Robert and Margaret Riddell, born in Walton in 1757. He is probably the man known as ‘Auld Springkell’. He could be the ‘R. Turnbull’ whose property is shown in the middle of the west side of the Howegate in Wood’s 1824 map. In 1841 he was living at about 21 Loan with his wife Mary, together with Margaret and Robert, probably their children. In 1789 he married Mary Laidlaw, and she died in 1848, aged 86. Their children included: Janet (1789–1821); Margaret (b.1793); James (b.1798), ‘Jimmie Springkie’; Mary (1805–1817); and Robert (1805/6–47). The witnesses in 1789 were shoemakers Robert Oliver and Adam Kersel. The family are buried in Wilton Old Churchyard, including his grandson Robert Sibbald (d.1840) and Martha Blythe (d.1826), wife of shoemaker James Turnbull. He could also be the shoemaker Turnbull whose son James was born in the 1770s (with the entry hard to read). Robert (18th/19th C.) ‘gauger’, i.e. exciseman, in Hawick. The death of his unnamed child is recorded in 1811. In 1815 he (along with his wife) witnessed a baptism for David Hill and his wife Elizabeth Scott. He married Ann Scott. Robert (18th/19th C.) saddler in Lilliesleaf, as recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Robert (b.c.1775) tailor in Lilliesleaf, as recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 he was on the south side of Main Street with Jean, probably his wife. He may be the same as the saddler recorded in Lilliesleaf in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Robert (18th/19th C.) draper in Hawick. Robert & Son is listed on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. Robert ‘Robbie’ (d.1838) innkeeper at Bridgend, in Hobkirk Parish in the early 1800s. He was also a joiner in the late 1700s, the house there being rebuilt as a joiner’s shop, but turned into a pub. He married Jane Chisholme, whose sister Bella married Walter Amos. His son John was a grocer in the same building. He also had a daughter Betty, who took over as postmaster from her brother, and also kept the public house after his death. Robert (18th/19th C.) mason in Castleton. He was among the subscribers to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. Robert (18th/19th C.) butcher of the High Street, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He could be the same Robert who was a flesher on the Howegate on the 1841 census, married to Isabel and with children Elizabeth, John and William. Robert (1802–73) married Margaret Lillico in Wilton in 1825. Their children included: James (b.1825), baptised in Wilton; Agnes (b.1832) and Lizzie (b.1834), baptised in Yarrow; Maggie (1839–1905), Esther (b.1841), Ellen (b.1841) and Jean (b.1842), born somewhere in Scotland; and Jane (b.1845) and Mary (b.1849), born in Ontario, Canada. The family emigrated to Canada, settling in North Dumfries Township, Ontario. His wife died in 1864, aged 60 and they are buried in Mount View Cemetery, Waterloo, Ontario. Robert (b.1800/1) farmer at Galalaw, probably son of Robert. He was listed among the heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1840 and 1841. In 1851 he was farming 150 acres and employing 4 labourers and in 1861 was listed as proprietor and farmer of 200 acres, employing 4 people. He was still recorded at Galalaw in 1868 and listed as owner on the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874. He served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire.

He married Agnes Anderson in Wilton Parish in 1832. Their children included: Margaret (b.1832) and Robert (b.1834), who probably died young; James (b.1836), who was probably the later farmer at Galalaw; John (b.1838); John (again, b.1839); Margaret Scott (b.1841); Robert (b.1842); Thomas (b.1846); and Andrew Anderson (b.1848). Bailie Robert (b.1785) Magistrate of the mid-19th century, who was known as a tenor singer. He may have been the same Robert described as ‘Officer’ for the Excise Office in Hawick in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He was also Treasurer of East Bank Kirk. He is listed in the 1841 census as a farmer on the Cross Wynd. He married Ann Matthison, and their children included: Ann Scott (b.1808); Elizabeth (b.1812); and James (b.1814), who was a draper. He is buried in Wilton Old Cemetery. Robert (b.c.1815) blacksmith at Stirches Croft in 1841. His wife was Elizabeth and their children included John, Christian and Andrew. He may have been related to Walter, who was joiner there at the same time. Robert (1832–97) son of James, forester in Cavers. He was a tailor and clothier in Denholm. In 1859 he married Margaret (1833–96), daughter of Robert Scott, farmer and Elizabeth Wilson. Their children were: Robert Scott (b.1860); James (b.1862); David Wilson (b.1866); John Weir (b.1870); Elizabeth Wilson (b.1874), who died young; Thomas Mungo (b.1876), also died young; Thomas Mungo (again, b.1878); and Elizabeth Jane (b.1880), died young. The first 2 children were born at Todlaw. He and his wife are buried in Denholm Cemetery. Robert Laidlaw (1830–74) son of William and Margaret Scott, he was from the Merrylaw family, and presumably named after the proprietor of Falnash. He attended St. Andrews University 1847–9. He was recorded as farmer at Falnash in 1868. He was owner of Merrylaw according to the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874. In 1867 he married Apalina Christina Hogarth, daughter of Alexander Pott in Teviothead Parish in 1867. Their children included: Apalina Margaret Scott (b.1869); William Laidlaw (b.1870); Jean Elliot (b.1871); and Alexander Pott (b.1872). He died aged 44. Robert (19th/20th C.) son of James, he was descended from the Charterhall, Ancrum branch of the Turnbulls. He was a shepherd and then a farmer. In 1886 he married Isabella Gutterson, whose father had been a servant of Athol Hay. They had a son James, and 3 daughters. Robert (19th/20th C.) Bailie of Hawick. He was on the Council 1890–1900. Robert (1864–1932) gamekeeper at Arden Hall in Yorkshire, he was tenant farmer at Weensmoor around 1910. He married Isabel Gotterson and their children were Jim, Cecilia and Tib. Rev. Robert Wilson (b.1893) born in Hawick, son of schoolmaster Adam and Helen Paterson. He was educated at Hawick High School and Edinburgh University. He served as a Lieutenant in the Black Watch and the Royal Fusiliers. He was licensed to preach in 1915, was then assistant at the Tron Church in Edinburgh and also in Hawick from 1919. He was ordained as minister of Dunsyre in 1921. He married Catherine Russell, daughter of Joseph Strang. Their children were: Helen Blair Paterson (b.1920); Katherine Margaret Strang (b.1922); Dorothy Annie Wilson (b.1925); Evelyn Josephine Cathels (b.1929); and Adam Michael Gordon (b.1935). Roland (15th C.) resident of Edinburgh. In 1476 he and his wife Peronell summoned Henry Liberton to appear before the Lords Auditors over a claim for rental on a tenement in Edinburgh. It is unclear how he was related to other Turnbulls. Roland (15th C.) tenant in Fulton. He was recorded in 1493 when he and Thomas had remission for the theft of sheep from ‘prynadotis in Weddale’; their surety was the Laird of Bedrule. Simon (15th C.) tenant in Clarilaw. In 1493 he had remission for associating with the ‘rebels of Leven’ (i.e. Englishmen). His surety was George of Hallrule. Simon (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Simone Turnbule’ in 1507. Several Dalgleishes of Braidhaugh (probably in Rulewater) received remission for receiving and communing with him and others. Robert Turnbull was also mentioned, and so presumably a relative. They must have been declared rebels for some rieving activity. He and Robert were also recorded in 1508 when Cuthbert Lauder of Todrig was hanged for associating with them. And in 1510 John Dalgleish was convicted of several crimes including ‘Intercommuning with Symon Turnbull and his accomplices, Englishmen’. Simon (16th C.) holder of the lands of Chamberlain Newton according to a ‘discharge’ of 1528/9 relating to ‘non-entries’ and other fees of the local Scotts. He is there described as the ‘grantor’s servant’ (i.e. servant to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell). Stephen (15th C.) listed in 1463/4 among the local men who were rewarded by the King for assisting in the capture of John Douglas of Balvay. He is surely related to other Turnbulls who were named (Andrew, John and Richard), but it is unclear how. He is recorded as ‘Stephanus Turnebule’. Stephen (15th/16th C.) brother of Philip of Whithope. He was recorded in 1494/5 as ‘Stephanus turnbule frater domini quihithop’ when he had remission for bringing in ‘traitors of Leven’ for the plundering and burning of Kerhope, stealing 80 cows and slaughtering John Murray; his brother the Laird of Whithope served as his surety. In 1500 Philip was assessed for payment due to Murray, with 4 oxen being taken, appraised and given to Walter Scott of Braxholme. Where he himself lived is not recorded. Stephen (16th C.) son of Watt in Howa. In 1567 Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst was ordered to present him to answer changes of raiding into England. Stephen (d.c.1590) recorded as ‘of Wowlie and Wowahoplie’ (i.e. ‘Wolfelee’ and ‘Wolfehopelee’) in 1590 when he was succeeded by his son Adam. The family possessed the right of rental of the lands, which were still owned by the Homes of Wedderburn. He may have been son of the previous Adam. Stephen (17th C.) recorded as ‘in Appothsyd’ when he witnessed a sasine for Appotside in 1632. Stephen (17th C.) became an elder of Bedrule Parish in 1691 and was probably connected directly with the Turnbulls of Bedrule through his grandfather, who was also Stephen. He may be the ‘Stiphan’ who was listed on the Hearth Tax records for Bedrule. Where he himself lived is not recorded. Stephen (17th C.) tenant in Minto Cleuchhead. In 1692 he represented Isobel Wright, widow of Robert Paterson, in a discharge in Selkirk. Stephen (17th/18th C.) resident of Braxholme. He was recorded in 1703 when the Parish Session collected money for ‘his numerous family of motherless children’. He was called to the Session as a witness, but could not attend because ‘the water was not passable’. Thomas (14th C.) witness in 1390 to the charter by John Turnbull of Minto, granting Minto to Sir William Stewart of Jedburgh. His designation is not given, but other Turnbulls listed were Adam of Whithope and Adam of Fulton. Thomas of Penchrise (15th C.) recorded in 1464/5 as witness to the sasine granting the lands of Kirkton Mains and Flex to William Douglas of Drumlanrig. Thomas (15th C.) recorded in 1471 as being ‘of Faulishope’, which could be ‘Fulnash’, but seems more likely to be the same as ‘Fawlishope’ (as recorded the following year). He was ordered to pay 3 year’s worth of taxes for the lands of Chamberlain Newton pertaining to Lord Lindsay, but failed to appear. He is probably related to the John who was connected with Stouslie (in the same Barony) in 1468. Sir Thomas of Greenwood and the Lyne (15th C.) had a sasine for the lands of Greenwood in 1461. He leased the lands of Greenwood and the Lyne, in the Barony of Minto, to Robert, son of David Scott of Buccleuch in 1488. This corresponds to the modern Girnwood. He kept 1 acre of the lands of Greenwood and 1 acre of the lands of Lyne, both in the north part, presumably for himself. He is probably son or grandson of the Adam who was granted Greenwood (or Girnwood) in 1439. In 1488 he also had a charter from James III for the lands of ‘Traringzeane’ in Ayrshire; this was for his service to the King at Blackness. He is also mentioned as resigning the same lands to Alexander, Lord Home in a charter of 1492/3. He may have been part of the family of the Turnbulls of Minto, who sold the lands about half a century later. He is probably the Sir Thomas who witnessed a confirming charter for the Barony of Wilton in 1494/5. He may be the Thomas of ‘Grynwald’ who in 1462 witnessed the copying of a discharge made a few years earlier between Cranston of that Ilk and Douglas of Cavers. He may be the Thomas who gave a pledge for James Rutherford in 1471. Thomas of Stouslie (15th C.) witness to the 1488 sasine in which the lands of Greenwood (i.e. Girnwood) and the Lyne were leased by Robert Scott of Allonhaugh. He is surely related to the Andrew of Stouslie who is recorded in 1490. Andrew Turnbull of Hawick was also a witness to the same sasine, and so probably related. Thomas (15th C.) recorded as ‘in Gaithous cot’ in 1493 when he had remission for being at the Boroughmuir of Edinburgh with the Duke of Albany. In 1494/5 he had remission for stealing sheep and a horse from John Sinclair in Lauderdale, with George in Hallrule acting as his surety. He was surely related to John, who was recorded in Gatehousecote at the same time. In 1502 he and his brother John in Gatehousecote were fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. Perhaps the same Thomas, tenant at Gatehousecote, was listed in the 1516 pardon that many Turnbulls had for involvement with the traitorous Homes. Other tenants there were Andrew and his brother William, as well as Patrick and David. Sir Thomas (15th C.) recorded in 1490 when the lease of ‘Faulishope’ was granted to him without ‘grassum’, and granted to him again in 1492. He is also recorded in 1494/5 when he had a precept from King James IV for any crimes he might be accused of committing before the King’s coronation seven years earlier. It is unclear whether he was a Turnbull of Bedrule or from another branch; however it is possible that he was the same man as Thomas of Bedrule. He is recorded as being ‘in Fawlishop’, which seems likely to be Phaup near the head of the Ettrick (although it could be Fauldshope farther down the Ettrick). The crimes included stealing many sheep, cattle and horses from Patrick Murray at ‘Skaddammess’ (probably Scaddaw Ness or Rig) and Lewenshope, and stealing from David and George Tait ‘de Pryn’ (i.e. Pirn, near Stow), John and William Cleghorn at ‘Lechtanchop’ and John Scott at ‘Glensax’, as well as resetting Robert of ‘Mudlaw’ and John of ‘Newhalburn’; one of these Turnbulls was his son (the Latin making it unclear which one is meant). His son and heir John leased the lands of Phaup in the period 1483–87 and Huntly in 1486. In 1494/5 he was surety for Edward Dunn in Phaup, who had remission for stealing more than 100 sheep from Alexander and Robert Turnbull (who may have been his sons or other near relatives) from the Waters of Yarrow and Tweed. In 1495 he was recorded as a controller of some sort for the Crown lands in Ettrick. In 1499 and 1501 half of the lands of ‘Faulkishop’ in Ettrick were let to his wife, Janet Scott. In 1471 probably the same ‘Thomas Turnebull of Fawlshope’ was ordered to repay Thomas ‘Folkert’ for 2 sacks of wool. Thomas (15th/16th C.) tenant in Fulton. He was recorded in 1493 when he and Roland had remission for the theft of sheep from ‘pryndadotis in Weddale’; his surety was the Laird of Bedrule. He was also recorded in 1494/5, when he was surety for himself and was fined for non-appearance. He is also listed in the 1501 Exchequer Rolls among a group of Turnbulls and others whose fines were remitted; ‘Thome Turnbull junioris’, listed before him may have been his son. He may be the same Thomas, son of James in Fulton, who served as surety for himself in 1502 and was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aires in Jedburgh. Thomas of Bedrule (15th/16th C.) son and heir of George Turnbull. It is possible he is the same man as the Sir Thomas who was tenant in Phaup in Selkirkshire (and fined at the Justice-aire in Selkirk in 1494/5). In 1493 Peter, ‘filo domini thome militis’, served as surety at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493; this suggests that Sir Thomas was indeed the Turnbull Laird (although ‘Bedrule’ is not explicitly mentioned). He is probably the Laird of Bedrule also recorded in the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493, when Walter Ker of Cessford served as surety for ensuring that he and his attendants would not harm James Dunn in Jedburgh (suggested some sort of feud). He is probably also the Laird of Bedrule who served as surety for David Waugh in Bedrule and Hawick in 1494/5. He may be the Laird of Bedrule who served as surety (along with William Langlands) for John Sinclair in Minto, John in Ruecastle and the Turnbulls in Fulton in 1493, as well as for Gilbert Shiel in Minto in 1494/5. In 1494/5 he was also ‘Junior dominus de bethroul’ when he served as surety for himself and was fined for not appearing at the Justice-aire; the ‘Junior’ appellation suggests that his father was still alive, but that he was serving as the effective chief of the Turnbulls. In 1494/5 he additionally served as surety for: John, son of Philip; Ninian, son of William; and Robert, brother of the Laird of Bedrule (who was therefore presumably either his brother or uncle). He was recorded in 1501 when a fine of £40 imposed on 6 Turnbulls was granted to him. He was also recorded in 1502 as being ‘of Bethroull’ when he was one of about 20 Turnbulls and others who failed to appear to answer for the murder of Robert Oliver; Ralph Ker in Greenhead was fined for failing to enter him in the court, and was fined £100 (considerably more than for the other men, indicative of his standing). His brother William was also listed, as well as Andrew in Bedrule, who may have been related. Additionally he was fined for failing to produce John in Ruecastle to answer for the same crime. He is probably also the Laird of Bedrule whose brother David was recorded at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1502, with Andrew in Bedrule as his surety. He had a sasine for the lands of Bedrule in 1502 and is probably the Laird who served as surety for Robert Shiel in Bedrule in that year. He may have been son of George of Bedrule, who is recorded about a generation earlier, and must have been related to the George of Bedrule who is recorded in the next decade. He is probably the same Thomas, son and heir of George, who is recorded in the Exchequer Rolls in 1501 and perhaps 1528. He is probably the Laird of Bedrule from whom 10 sheep were stolen by the Olivers in Strange before 1502. Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘junior’ in 1501 among 10 men whose fines were remitted. Turnbulls of Fulton and Bonchester were also listed, and so he was probably from this area, and from his name was likely to have been son of another Thomas. Thomas in Fulton is listed directly after him. Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘le langhauch’ in 1502, this probably being Langhaugh in the Rule valley. George, Master of Angus served as surety for him in his non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. Thomas (15th/16th C.) tenant in Hallrule who was listed among the many Turnbulls given remission in 1516 for assisting the traitorous Homes; Robert and William were also listed there as tenants of Hallrule, and so may have been related. Thomas (d.bef. 1535) tenant in Town-of-Rule. Along with ‘Andree alias Dauid’ he was recorded in 1535 when Robert Scott of Allanhaugh was accused (but found not guilty) of their cruel murder. Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1533 being ‘in Rauflat’ (i.e. Rawflat) when Robert Stewart, on behalf of William Turnbull, delivered an old reversion relating to him. Thomas (16th C.) recorded in 1541 when accused of having been on a raid into England. He and George Rutherford, along with 100 other men were said to be responsible for the deaths of John Routledge and Robert Noble. He may be the same as one of the other Thomases. Sir Thomas of Bedrule (c.1520–c.85) son of George. In 1528 there was a gift of the ‘ward, relief and non-entry’ of his late father’s lands, to Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. Included in the gift was the right to arrange his marriage, since he was then still a minor. He may be the ‘Trumble of Bedroule’ who was listed among lairds in Teviotdale who signed a bond to settle feuds in 1545. In 1550/1 he gave a ‘precept of clare constat’ involving Robert Scott, heir of Adam Scott in the lands of Little Drinkstone. He signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’ in 1551. In 1553 his brother Robert is recorded in a transaction in Selkirk. In 1553/4 he was listed among the Rutherfords and others in an assurance not to harm the Kers; his pledge was either William of Hassendean Kirk or George of the Toor. Also in 1553/4 he was on the panel for the inheritance of Branxholme etc. by his son Walter Scott. There was a complaint against ‘the molestations’ committed by him and George in Hallrule, made by Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst in 1557, and he had to appear to answer these charges (the resolution is unrecorded, however). In 1560 he was named on the bond to settle the feud between the Kers and the Rutherfords. In 1561 he was among Border Lairds who appeared before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft. In 1561/2 Sir John Stewart of Traquair was surety for him to answer to an accusation of stealing 3 horses from Lord Gray. In 1563, along with the parishioners of Bedrule he brought an action against Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst, William Kerr (the Parson) and Sir John Allan, demanding that they produce the proof that they had the rights to the benefices of Bedrule; Kerr won the legal battle in 1564. There is a ‘certificate of relaxation’ for the teinds of Bedrule between him and Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst in 1564/5, and a bond between them in the same year. Also in 1564 he was listed as ‘The Lard of Badrewell’ among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. He signed the ‘Band of Teviotdale’ in 1565. Also in 1565 he was one of the sureties for Robert Kerr of Woodhead. He was recorded as being at Mary Queen of Scots’ wedding to Darnley in 1566. He was among men re-ordered to appear before the Privy Council in 1567 regarding order in the Middle Marches. He had a bond of 1567 with the Warden, Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst to present ‘Rengen Foster called Can’. A few years afterwards he assisted in stopping the Regent Moray from seizing the Crown. He later supported the Regent Morton, along with the Rutherfords, but against the Scotts and Kers. In 1569 he signed the bond to suppress the thieves on the Border. Also in 1569 he was on the panel of inquest for Grizel Borthwick inheriting superiority of her father’s lands in Wilton. Along with his sons Walter and Thomas he was put to ‘escheat’ as a perjured rebel at one point. Additionally in 1569 John Rutherford of Hunthill was surety for him, while he was surety for Adie Elliot ‘of the Cowlcys’ and John Elliot of Thorlieshope. He was one of the ‘curators’ for the young Robert Scott of Thirlestane around the 1570s. In 1571/2 he was one of the sureties for the leaders of the Oliv- ers as well as for Andrew Hall of ‘the Sykis’ and some Robsons of Hownam. Also in 1571/2 he signed the bond to act against Borders thieves. In 1572/3 he was cautioner (along with Richard Rutherford of Edgerston) for several men from Southdean. Also in 1572/3 he was surety for William, Burgess of Edinburgh (who was thus probably a close relative). In 1573 he (and his son and heir William, and other son Walter) were among the men from the Jedburgh area accused by Robert Kerr of Woodhead of raiding his house and farm; however, the group claimed they did it because Kerr had reset the fugitive Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst and were acquitted. Also in 1573 he signed the ‘Band of Roxburgh’. In 1575 he was among men asked to decide whether Robert Fraser was responsible for stealing some English horses. In 1576 he was involved in a dispute with William Ker, younger of Cessford, over lands in Nether Ancrum; also on his side were his son Walter, William in Barnhills and Mungo Bennet in Chesters. Also in 1576 he was cautioner for the Turnbulls of Howden, Hallrule, Billerwell and Belses in their bond not to harm other Turnbulls.

In about 1578 (perhaps earlier) he signed a bond with other Turnbulls and Rutherfords, and another between the Kers and the Rutherfords. In 1577/8 his sons Thomas and Walter were acquitted of the murder of John Forbes. He was also one of the ‘curators’ of the young Robert Scott of Thistlestane. In 1576 he was a cautioner for some Borderers who were accused of riving, and in 1578/9 he was among 22 Border Lairds who did not appear before the Privy Council when summoned (in his case as pledge for Adam of Over Hassendeane and also Sim Armstrong). He was then declared to be liable for the fines, or the amounts would be made from his ‘movabill guidis and geir, and, failyeing of thair movabill guidis, to appryse thair landis’. However, he appeared personally, and was let off, provided that the Davidsions for whom he stood as caution appeared before the Justice Court of Roxburgh. Also in 1578/9 John Johnstone of that Ilk was caution for his appearance, as well as his sons Walter and Thomas, his nephew John and his son-in-law Edward Lorraine; this was for the slaughter of ‘Thomas Schevill’. Also in 1578/9 there is mention at the Privy Council of an agreement to stop a feud between him (along with several Rutherfords and Douglas of Bonjedward) and the Kers of Cessford; there was also another agreement between him and George Douglas, younger of Bonjedward. Kimmont Willie Armstrong appeared before the Privy Council in 1579 because of a feud between their families, and also Christie Armstrong of Barnglies, for the same reason. In 1579 his sons Walter and Thomas were on a list of men accused of raiding into England; also listed were ‘Hobbat Hall and Mekie Hall, banished Englishmen, and servants to the Laird of Beddroule’. In 1580 he is listed as head of a group of Turnbulls who were bound over to keep the peace with John Turnbull of Minto and his followers; his group included his son Walter, as well as William of Barnhills and Edward Lorraine, younger of Harwood. Also in 1580 he was ordered along with John of Minto and Wat of Bewlie, to enter wards in Edinburgh Castle or be declared a rebel; later he was said to have disobeyed and was denounced as a rebel. In 1581 he was cautioned for men of the Jedburgh area and was among a large group denounced as rebels for failing to present men to answer their riving crimes. Also in 1581 he was among Border Lairds who denounced their bonds with Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus. He was denounced in 1583/4 for not appearing before the Privy Council; he and his sons Walter and Thomas were denounced as rebels for taking ‘the cumpany of utheris thevis and rebellis, intending to continew in thift and oppression’. He was also the Laird of Bedrule whose sons are mentioned in a letter by the King in 1584 ‘for ane attemptat committ be thame at Preswen in England’ for which they were found guilty. In about 1584 he lost his position as one of the tutors to his niece Margaret (daughter and heiress of William), since he had been declared a rebel. He was probably the Laird of Bedrule referred to in 1584/5 when his son Robert was one of the Borderers summoned to appear before the Privy Council to explain how they were helping to keep peace on the Border. He is also recorded in 1587 representing Alexander of Howa; either the date is an error or this is his son Thomas. He married Mary Ker and secondly Janet Turnbull, widow of Philip Bennet of Chesters. A marriage contract of 1542 also exists between him and Margaret, daughter of George Home of Spott. He had at least 9 children: William, who probably pre-deceased him; Walter of Fulton, who succeeded to Bedrule; Thomas, probably tenant at Spittal-on-Rule; Robert; Margaret, who married Edward Lorraine, this union apparently being unpopular with the Rulewater Turnbulls; Patrick, probably tenant at Templehall; Mark, tenant at Hartshaugh; James; and Hector, who owned Hartshaugh and Swanshiel, although this may be a confusion with the son of Thomas of Hartshaugh. Another daughter Agnes is recorded in an undated marriage contract with Robert, son of deceased Robert Scott of Raesknowe. Although some genealogies have him dying in 1572, it seems this is wrong (or else 2 Thomases are hopelessly confounded). Thomas (16th C.) described as being ‘in Rawflat’ in a court case of 1540 when he disputed a ‘wadset’ with William Scott of Hassendeane. Another case heard at the same time involved a marriage contract of 1536 between his son and heir George and Elizabeth, eldest daughter and heir of the same William Scott. Curiously in 1538 he had remission for the crime of stealing letters of reversion for the lands of ‘Coppitrig’ from a box belonging to William Scott of Hassendeane in Nicholas Rutherford’s house in Edinburgh. Thomas (16th C.) described as ‘in the Tronyhill’ in a charter of 1536, where William Scott of Hassendeane gave him ‘two husbandlands’ in ‘le Easter Hassendeane’ described ambiguously. It is possible he is the same Thomas who farmed at Rawflat 4 years later. He may have been father of David of Troneyhull, who is recorded later in the 1500. Thomas (16th

C.) recorded as ‘Thomas Trumble of the Gaittuscott’ in a document of 1550. Thomas (16th C.) farmer at Hartshaugh or possibly Laird there. He is recorded in 1557 when he signed a bond (along with others) with the Warden John Kerr of Ferniehirst to bring in the thief William Nixon (‘Clement’s Will’). Hector was probably his son. Thomas in Abbotrule was another son. His son Airchie was recorded in 1567. Thomas (16th C.) brother of David of Wauchope. In 1561 he and his brother were among Border Lairds who appeared before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Thomases. He may be the Thomas who was pledge for the Laird of Wauchope in 1553/4. Thomas (16th C.) farmer at Harwoodtown, brother of David of Wauchope. ‘Thomas Turnbullis byr and barrenaird’ are listed among the lands in the Barony of Feu-Rule under dispute in 1562. He is listed as brother of David in 1567 when he was instructed to present his servant Ingram Oliver to answer charges relating to raids into England. It was either him or (more likely) his son who was hanged during the period when Sir William Cranston was a Border Commissioner, i.e. shortly after 1605. Thomas (16th C.) recorded being ‘of Hassindanbank’ in 1567 when James Heriot of Trabroun was surety for entering him into ward in Edinburgh. He was recorded as tenant in Hassendeanbank in 1571 when he and his wife, Margaret Scott, had a charter in Melrose for lands in Darnick. Their eldest son William was also mentioned, and the witnesses included Robert Scott of Over Hassendean, who may well have been his father-in-law. This charter was confirmed in 1616. The Thomas, younger, listed in 1579 was probably a son of his. He could be the same man as one of the contemporary Thomases. Thomas ‘Blue Tom’ (16th C.) recorded in 1567 among men who Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst had to present to answer accusations of raiding into England. His is listed being ‘callit blew Thome’, but it is unclear what this nickname might have meant. Thomas (16th C.) recorded ‘in Cavers’ in 1579, this probably being Cavers Carre. He was son of James who represented him in a transaction in Selkirk, where a piece of land was purchased in Midlem. Thomas (16th/17th C.) son of Sir Thomas of Bedrule. In 1577/8 he and his brother Walter were acquitted of the murder of John, son of John Forbes of Ard-murdoch. In 1578/9 he was among members of the Turnbull family who were ordered to appear before the Privy Council to answer for slaughter of Thomas ‘Schevill’. In 1579/80 he and Walter were on a list of men accused of raiding into England. He and his brother Walter were accused of stealing 19 cows from Englishman Edward Grays in 1582. In 1583 he and Walter were supposed to be turned over to the English Warden, but William Ker of Cessford (a relative of some sort) sent them back to Scotland and they were acquitted. Ker gave caution for the pair in 1583/4 and John Cranston of that Ilk paid the £2000 penalty. He became tenant at Spittal-on-Rule in 1612. He is recorded as ‘in Rowllspittle’ recorded in a bond of 1619 with Robert Pringle (probably later of Stichill), servitor to Sir Gideon Murray of Elibank, with cautioners being Mark Turnbull ‘in Hairtishaugh’ and Thomas ‘Allensone’ Bailie of Jedburgh. There may also be some confusion between him and Thomas of Minto, who lived about the same time. Thomas (16th/17th C.) son of Thomas of Hartshaugh, he was recorded as tenant in Abbotrule in 1579, when listed among Scotsmen accused of committing raids into England. He was said to have been in a party of about 40 men, led by the sons of the Laird of Bedrule, who stole 40 cows, and took the Laird there prisoner. Thomas (16th/17th C.) son of ‘Hekie of Hartishaugh’. In 1579 he was listed along with several Turnbuls and others of raiding cattle from the Laird of ‘Pansoun’ in England. Thomas ‘the Tutor’ (16th/17th C.) listed in 1579 as ‘Thome Turnbull, younger in Hassindeanbank, alias called the Tutor’, when he was among a group of Turnbuls accused of stealing cattle from the Laird of ‘Pansoun’ in England. The group was led by sons of the Laird of Bedrule. He may have been son of the previous Thomas in Hassendeanbank. Thomas of Billerwell (16th C.) listed in 1581 among men accused of murdering Walter of Rawflat. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Turnbuls, but the Belses branch were also named in the accusation. Thomas of Hobsburn (16th/17th C.) accused in 1590 of raiding Middleton Hall in England in the previous year. His name is recorded as ‘Thomas Trumble of Hoppesburn the younger’, and others named were Douglasses, Laidlaws and Shiels. He is probably the ‘Thomas Trumble of Hoppesborne’ listed along with Douglasses, Laidlaws, Shiels and others who were accused of stealing livestock and goods from the tenants of Middleton in 1590. He was also listed among Elliots, Armstrongs, Laidlaws and Croziers, accused in 1590 of rieving from the Laird of ‘Troghwen’ and Hedley of ‘Garret

Sheills; he was there ‘Thome Trumble of Hoppisburne’. He was also one of the Turnbulls accused in 1606 of raiding and burning Appotside. He was probably related to some of the others who were on trial (from Wauchope, Billerwell, etc.), but the exact relationships are not clear. He is referred to as ‘houeshold man to Thomas Trumbill younger of Wauchope’. He was eventually acquitted of the crimes. Either he or his son was ‘younger of Hoppisburn’ in 1606 when he sold Hobsburn and Weens to John, brother of Walter Scott of Allanmouth. Thomas (16th/17th C.) son of David of Troneyhill. In 1610 he was named along with 7 other Turnbulls (and 2 Davidsons) for continuing as rebels following being found guilty of the murder of Thomas Ker of Crailinghall and 6 Grahamslaw brothers. Thomas (16th/17th C.) son of Walter, tenant in Fulton. Along with his father and several other Turnbulls, he was accused by the Laird of Traquair of cutting down and removing wood from his lands at Huntliehill in 1619. He was denounced as a rebel for failing to appear. This may be the last record of a Turnbull of Fulton. Thomas (16th/17th C.) servant to James Home, son of the historian David Home of Godscoft (in Berwickshire). He witnessed a bond for Home of Godscoft in 1627. Thomas of Bedrule (b.c.1585) son of William and probably grandson of Sir Thomas (although these generations are uncertain, and he could have been great-grandson of Sir Thomas). He is probably the Thomas ‘son of William Turnbull, fir of Bedreull’ who was a witness in 1618/9 to a bond by Walter of Bedrule to Adam of Abbotrule Townhead. By the time he succeeded, the castle was long destroyed, and the Kers had taken possession in 1623. It is unclear who he married, but he seems to have been succeeded by William and then another Thomas (last of the Lairds of Bedrule). Thomas of Wauchope (16th/17th C.) eldest son of Hector. In a court case of 1605 (in which they accused John Elliot of Copshaw of stealing livestock from their farms) he was still ‘younger of Wauchope’; his brother George and other neighbouring tenants are also mentioned. He was perhaps the leader of a band of Turnbulls who systematically raided the estates of Appotside and Harwood over the period 1598–1605. Although the rest of his family and associates were acquitted, he was separately brought to justice in 1606, but failed to appear and was declared a rebel. James Gledstains, younger of Cocklaw, acted as his surety. Willie Scott ‘man to Young Wauchop’ may have been his servant, when declared a fugitive in 1605. In 1607 he and Hector of Barnhills brought a complaint against James, son of Edward Lorraine, ‘for presenting bended pistolets to their breasts for their slaughter’. Hector of Wauchope may have been his son, with Thomas his grandson. However, in 1653 his nephew James (son of his brother George) was served heir to his 20-pound land of Wauchope. Thomas of Minto (16th/17th C.) son of John. In 1601 he was ‘Tho. Trumble the younger layrd of Myntaw’ who, along with another Thomas, as well as James Douglas of Cavers, was accused by several Englishmen of stealing their livestock from the Stobs and the Crag. He is probably the Thomas of Minto who was one of a large band of Turnbulls who were involved in a serious fight in Jedburgh on Rood Fair Day in 1601. About 30 Turnbulls entered Jedburgh and tried to get Thomas Ker (brother of the Provost) to come out of his house, whereupon the men of Jedburgh took up arms. The fight left Thomas Ker, his servant and 2 of the Turnbulls dead and many men injured, and as a result several Turnbulls were later convicted and hanged. In 1602 he was recorded as younger of Minto when, along with Hector of Barnhills and Mark of Bewlie, he robbed a hunting party sent out by the Laird of Gretna, with permission to hunt for venison in Tynedale; they were found guilty of robbery and fined for the value of 3 horses. In 1603 he was served heir to his father in the half Barony of Minto, including 5 husbandlands in the town of Minto. In 1604 he acted as cautioner for William Middlemas and his son James, charged with the crimes related to the 1601 skirmish. He is probably the Laird of Minto who was named as a Commissioner for keeping peace in Roxburghshire in 1610. Also in 1610 he acted as cautioner for James Douglas of Cavers and his son William, that they would not harm Alexander Horsburgh of that Ilk or his colleagues. In 1611 he had licence to travel abroad for 5 years. In 1618 he was among 4 prominent local men selected to try 2 murderers in Jedburgh. He is also mentioned in 1622 when his son Walter became a tailor’s apprentice in Edinburgh. He witnessed a report by the Justices of the Peace of Roxburghshire in 1627. In 1627 he paid caution for William of Braidhaugh and his son James. He is also recorded in 1628 when the major landowners of Roxburghshire convened to elect M.Ps. He is there listed as ‘Thomas Trumble of Minto’. His 2nd son was Thomas, recorded in a charter for Hornshole in 1619; his 1st son may have been John. Thomas (16th/17th C.) 2nd son of Thomas of Minto. In 1619 he was granted the lands of ‘Horneshoill’ by the Earl of Melrose. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Thomases. Thomas (16th/17th C.) son of James of Hartshaugh, the Kirklands and Swanshiel. He succeeded his father in 1619. He was in turn succeeded by his son Adam. Thomas (16th/17th C.) son of Robert called ‘of Bedroull’ who had a bond in 1620 with Sir Walter Scott of Whitslade. The bond was witnessed by his father Robert, who was probably a son of Sir Thomas, but these generations are difficult to sort out. Thomas ‘in Rewcastill’ and his son John (certainly close relatives) were cautioners. Thomas (16th/17th C.) recorded in 2 deeds of 1620 as schoolmaster in Southdean Parish, the first person on record to hold such a position. There is nothing else known about him. Thomas (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1620 when he was a cautioner for a bond between Thomas, son of Robert called ‘of Bedroull’ and Sir Walter Scott of Whitslade. He is probably the Thomas ‘in Rowcastell’ who witnessed a bond for Walter of Bedrule in 1623. He is also described as ‘in Rowcastell’ in 1632 when he feuded lands in Ruecastle from Thomas Hamilton, Lord Binning. He was possibly a son of Sir Thomas of Bedrule, brother of Walter of Bedrule, making the other Thomas (son of Robert) his nephew. Thomas of Knowe (d.1647) probably the Thomas included in 1603 on a long list of local men that the Baron of Hassendean was trying to remove from their lands; his son Walter (perhaps William) is also listed. He was Laird of Hassendean Knowe. In 1613 Sir George Ramsay paid him the teinds for the lands of Knowe. In 1619 he raised ‘letters of horning an poinding’ against William Turnbull, brother of the deceased Robert. He was also a juror at the 1623 Commissioners’ Court. His relationship with Thomas of Minto is unclear (but the families seemed to use the same names John and Thomas for the next few generations!). There are several bonds and discharges in the archives of the Horsburgh family that mention him in the early 1600s. In 1626 he and Walter Scott of Ancrum had a ‘letter of deliverance’ (probably related to a debt) against Rev. Alexander Forrest of Hassendean. In 1628 he was Thomas ‘in Know’, who, along with Walter, were charged by the Privy Council to keep the peace with Walter Scott of Midshiels and other Scotts. He paid the caution in 1628 for Andrew of Bewlie not to molest the Scotts in Burnfoot and Midshiels. In 1638 he signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick. He is further recorded in 1640 in dealings with Walter Gledstains, factor to the Earl of Buccleuch. In 1643 he is recorded as owner of Knowe in Hassendean Parish, valued at £279 10s. The name of his wife does not appear to be recorded, however a carved panel on the house at Knowetownhead has ‘T.T.’ and ‘H.T.’ and the year 1628, suggesting that he married another Turnbull (probably Helen, which was the name of one of his granddaughters). His daughter Marion married Andrew Turnbull of Bewlie about 1640. Another daughter Elizabeth married Walter Scott (subject of a legal dispute against Walter and Janet Scott in 1644); she is the ‘Bessie’ who secondly married Andrew Riddell in 1652, tenant at Over Whitton. He was deceased by 1649 when his daughter Barbara married John Grierson (son of the deceased Andrew), and she appears to have put an ‘inhibition’ on her husband in 1657. One of his sons was William (recorded in 1658), while John (who appears to have succeeded as Laird) was probably his eldest son. His death is recorded on a table tomb in Minto old churchyard, along with that of John of Knowe (d.1676). Thomas of Westwood (17th C.) holder of lands near Bonchester in 1643, along with ‘Harie’, who must have been his brother or son. They appear to have held separate lands, with his valued at £40 Scots. Thomas (17th C.) described as ‘in Templinah’ when he witnessed a Rulewater sasine of 1654. He was brother of Robert, the tenant at Templehall. He could be the Thomas in ‘Rouletoun’ recorded in 1643, with his lands being valued at £40, and Robert also listed there. Thomas (d.c.1655) son of William, from whom he inherited the lands of Cockerheugh (part of Hassendeanbank) in 1622. He is probably the Thomas who was infested in the lands of Hassendeanbank by the Commandator of Melrose in about 1622. He is recorded as possessor of the lands of Hassendean Bank in the tax roll of the Abbacy of Jedburgh in 1626. His son Thomas succeeded to the lands in 1655. Thomas of Upper Bonchester (17th C.) Laird in 1643, and probably father of William (d.1686); this is according to Walter Deans, writing in 1887. He is probably the Thomas of Bonchester whose lands were valued at £30 in 1643. He could be the same as Thomas ‘called Clack’ who is listed in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls among landowners in Abbotrule Parish; it is unclear what that name meant, or whether he was related to the Scotts who shared a similar appellation, or Adam ‘callit Clerk in Bonchester’ recorded in 1643. He may have been progenitor of the Bonchester Turnbulls who were later tenants at Wolfelee Mill, Hartshaugh Mill, Harwood Mill and Hallrule Mill. Thomas of Tower (17th C.) listed by James Wilson among the list of local landowners of the mid-to-late 17th century. He is recorded being of ‘Tour’, which probably meant Spittal Tower. He paid the land tax of £104 in Cavers Parish in 1643. He may be the same as one of the other Thomases. Thomas of Tofts (d.c.1690) son of William of ‘Weddellis-walls’. In 1647 he was served heir to his father’s 5 husbandlands of Minto. He was recorded in a marriage agreement in 1669 between him and Helen, daughter of John Turnbull of Knowe. This may have been for one of his sons, since he himself married a daughter of Rev. Robert Brownlie of Kirkton. He was listed by James Wilson as one of the main local landed proprietors of the mid-17th century. He was recorded as being ‘of Tofts in Kirktoone paroch’ when he paid land tax on £402 in 1663. He may be the unnamed Turnbull who paid the land tax on Tofts, valued at £300 in 1678. He is probably the Thomas in Tofts whose testaments were recorded in 1686 and 1689. His son William was served as his heir in 1695, in the lands of ‘Over et Nether Tofts’. Thomas of Bedrule (17th C.) son of William of Bedrule. He is probably the Thomas who is recording owning half of the Mains of Bedrule in 1643 (the other half being owned by William of Bedrule). In 1668 he was served heir to his father in the lands and Barony of Bedrule. He was the last Turnbull Laird of Bedrule, although by the time he inherited the family had already lost most of its lands. There was a final instrument of resignation of the Barony to Ker of Cavers in 1668. He was nevertheless allowed to remain in Bedrule Mill (where he is recorded in 1673) and part of the Mains of Bedrule. His wife’s name is not recorded, but he was succeeded by his son Andrew, and was grandfather of Thomas of the Hawick carpet factory. His other son was William, tenant at Bedrule Mill. There was also a tradition that his eldest son died in India leaving a great fortune that was taken by the government. Thomas (17th C.) brother of William, who was a mason in Newton (probably in Bedrule Parish, but possibly on Slitrig). He was one of those accused by a servant of Douglas of Cavers of stealing his wallet in a Hawick inn in 1642. He gave evidence to the Magistrates at the trial. Thomas (17th C.) brother of John of Knowe. In 1652 he was appointed as the tutor to the children of the deceased Thomas in ‘Chesterhouse’ (probably Charterhall near Ancrum). Thomas, William, Helen, Jean and Margaret. He was the nearest male relative, probably their uncle. Thomas (17th C.) son of Thomas, from whom he inherited the lands of Cockerheugh in 1655. He is recorded as ‘in Hassendeanbank’ in 1655 in a ‘tack’ with John Turnbull of Knowe for ‘Cosier’s Acre’ in Cockersyk, at the east end of Hassendean Knowe meadow (it seems likely that he was distantly related to the Turnbuls of Knowe). He had a ‘wadset’ with John Scott of Brieryyards and his sons in 1656, also involving the ‘merk land of Hassendeanbank’ (i.e. Cockerheugh). In 1658 he had a further bond with John Scott of Brieryyards. His eldest son was probably John (according to an undated document). He could be the Thomas, tenant in Hassendean, who is recorded paying the land tax for £52 in 1663. Robert, who is recorded at Cockerheugh in 1694, seems likely to have been his descendant. Thomas (17th C.) recorded in 1662 as ‘in Roultounfute’. He was ‘Bailie in that part’ for the Earl of Lothian or perhaps to Walter Ridell. He may have been the same as Thomas, tenant of Templehall. Thomas ‘Captain’ (17th C.) tenant of Swanshiel. He is named (along with 7 others) in a proclamation fixed to the Mercat Cross in the early 1680s, accused of frequenting Conventicles. He is also on the long list of fugitives proclaimed in 1684. Thomas (17th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1665 (although this would make more sense as 1685) he was accused of throwing his mother-in-law Helen Briggs (wife of Mungo Swan) downstairs, when ‘coming to see his spouse, her daughter then att the poyn of death’. His wife was probably Helen (b.1657), with whom he had a daughter Helen in 1681. He may be the Thomas who witnessed a baptism for fellow weaver William Brown in 1687 and another for William Lethem in 1684. He is probably the Thomas who witnessed a baptism for weaver ‘White John’ (perhaps his brother-in-law) in 1701. Thomas of Allerton (17th C.) resigned the lands of ‘East Mains of Hassindene called the Know’ to his cousin Thomas Turnbull of Knowe in 1690. How this relates to the history and political fortunes of the Turnbuls of Knowe is unclear. Thomas of Standhill (d. bef. 1658) recorded in a discharge of 1658 between Thomas of Knowe’s son William (‘tutor’ to his son Thomas) and John of Knowe. It seems likely that he was a close relative of the Laird of Knowe. He may be the Thomas of Chesterhouse (near Hownam) whose widow made an agreement in 1664 with his younger brother William (and tutor to his children Thomas, William, Helen, Joan and Margaret) to resign the lands of Standhill to their superior Sir Walter.
Riddell. Thomas of Knowe (1651/2–1730) probably son of John. He was a Covenanter supporter. Note that some of these events may refer to 2 different generations. In 1678 he paid land tax on £227 8s in Hassendean Parish (presumably for Knowe). In 1680, along with others, he was declared a rebel by Adam Urquhart of Meldrum, with the implication that he was involved in the uprising at Bothwell Brig. In 1681 he was summoned to appear before the Lords of Council and Session in Edinburgh for failure to answer to a ‘decret of horning’. The same years his property was confiscated by Adam Urquhart of Meldrum. But he had a ‘decret of absolution’ in 1681 and in 1683 he is recorded raising ‘letters of horning’ against the minister and several officials of Selkirk. And in 1684 he is listed among men declared as fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism, his crime being ‘for rest’. In 1678 his sister Grizel married Adam Scott of Burnhead. He is probably the Thomas ‘of Hazintonn Know’ recorded in a bond of 1679 with his brother John and sisters Margaret, Marion and Elizabeth. He is also recorded in 1690 as one of the heritors accused of inciting the riot at the de-roofing of Hassendean Kirk in that year, for which he was arrested. Also in 1690 there is a record of Thomas Turnbull of Allerton resigning the lands of the ‘East Mains of Hassindene called the Know’ to him; it is unclear whether this was just some legal manoeuvre. He appears to have acted as a collector of the Hearth Tax for Roxburghshire in 1694. He also served as an elder for Minto Kirk. He was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1698. He rented Huntlaw from Archibald Forrest of Huntlaw in 1703 and was still renting it in 1715. He bought Hassendean Townhead from William Little the same year. A bill for William Little from Gideon Scott of Highchester was passed on to him by Bailie Robert Hardie of Hawick in 1705. He paid a similar bill for William Little according to a discharge by Gideon Scott of Falnash in 1705. In 1716 he brought a libel case against James Elliot, an Edinburgh waiter. About 1720 he is recorded in a document relating to teinds in Wilton Parish (the part that had been in Hassendean). A letter of 1724 from James Clerk suggests that they were brothers-in-law to each other. His will of 1682 (while he was still alive) is in the National Archives. He married Agnes Mackie, who died in 1716 in her 58th year. He was probably succeeded by his son Anthony and in 1721 his daughter Agnes married Thomas Thomson, merchant in Hawick. He and his wife were buried in Minto Kirkyard. Thomas (17th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He witnessed a baptism for wright Francis Gledstains in 1682. He is probably one of the Thomases recorded on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Ben-net and their children included: Bessie (b.1677); Bessie (again, b.1685); and Walter (b.1686). His wife’s name is given as ‘Bessie’ in 1677 (perhaps in error). The witnesses in 1685 were Robert Cowan and John Binnie. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Bessie John-ston and their children included James (b.1688). Thomas (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish, when it contained Hassendean. His children included John (b.1688). He could be the Thomas whose daughter Jean married William Beattie in Robertson in 1705. He is probably the Thomas who (along with Michael) witnessed a baptism for William in Robertson in 1686. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Cavers who was listed in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Thomas (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the wa- ter’ in 1694. He may be the same as one of the other Thomases. Thomas (17th C.) listed in 1694 among those on the west-side of Hawick who paid the Hearth Tax. Thomas (17th C.) resident at Todshawhaugh according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Thomas (1644/5–1729) tenant in Dyke farm, son of Thomas, who was also tenant there. The family are buried in Bedrule kirkyard. He is probably one of the 3 men of that name who are listed in the Hearth Tax records for Bedrule Parish in 1694. Thomas of Stand-hill (d.c.1695) son of Thomas. He is recorded in a discharge of 1658 when Thomas of Knowe’s son William was his ‘tutor’. He was known as a leading local supporter of the Covenanting cause, being converted by John Livingstone, who preached at Ancrum. In 1676 he helped John Blackadder escape after the Sheriff broke up a meeting near Selkirk. He paid the land tax in Ancrum Parish in 1678. He fought at Bothwell Bridge in 1679, and escaped the battlefield along with Walter of Bewlie. He was persecuted, had his possessions removed from him, and was sentenced to execution, but escaped capture and eventually returned to his estate at Standhill. He is probably the Turnbull ‘of Stainhall’ listed among those named as officers of the militia to defend against ‘the papists’ in 1689. He is listed among those appointed to visit schools in the Act of Parliament established in 1690 after the Revolution. In 1698
he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire (but may have already been deceased). He had 2 sons: one was a soldier; the other was Deputy-Governor of Dumbarton Castle. One of them must have been the Thomas who was served heir to Thomas of Standhill in 1695. Thomas (17th C.) resident at Wester Swanshiel according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. Thomas (17th C.) listed as being ‘called tounfoott’ in Abbotrule Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, when he was taxed for having 2 hearths. He was probably associated with the lands of Abbotrule Townfoot. Thomas (17th C.) tenant in Ruletownfoot, listed on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He is listed right after Thomas ‘called tounfoott’, who was probably associated with Abbotrule Townfoot (rather than Ruletownfoot), but may well have been closely related. Thomas (17th C.) cottar at Mackside in Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Thomas (17th C.) resident at Greatlaws in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Thomas (17th C.) gardener at Newhouse in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Hassendean Mains according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He was probably related to Walter, who was also listed there. Thomas (17th C.) smith listed among the ‘Cottars in Hassenden’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He paid tax for 2 hearths. A separate Thomas appears on the same list of cottars. Thomas (17th/18th C.) son of Thomas of Standhill. He was served heir to his father in 1695. It was said that his father had 2 sons, one of whom was a soldier and the other was Deputy-Governor of Dumbarton Castle. Thomas (17th/18th C.) servant in Commonside. In 1706 he married Mary Hislop, who was also a servant in Commonside. Perhaps the same Thomas was recorded as a herd at Nether Southfield in 1708; his wife was Margaret Hislop and their daughter Isobel was baptised. Thomas (17th/18th C.) tenant in Ruletownfoot, listed on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He is listed right after Thomas ‘called tounfoott’, who was probably associated with Abbotrule Townfoot (rather than Ruletownfoot), but may well have been closely related. Thomas (17th C.) cottar at Mackside in Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Thomas (17th C.) resident at Greatlaws in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He was probably related to Walter, who was also listed there. Thomas (17th C.) smith listed among the ‘Cottars in Hassenden’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He paid tax for 2 hearths. A separate Thomas appears on the same list of cottars. Thomas (17th/18th C.) son of Thomas of Standhill. He was served heir to his father in 1695. It was said that his father had 2 sons, one of whom was a soldier and the other was Deputy-Governor of Dumbarton Castle. Thomas (17th/18th C.) servant in Commonside. In 1706 he married Mary Hislop, who was also a servant in Commonside. Perhaps the same Thomas was recorded as a herd at Nether Southfield in 1708; his wife was Margaret Hislop and their daughter Isobel was baptised in Hawick Parish. The witnesses were Robert Scott in Newbigging and Andrew Riddell in Goldielands. Other children, baptised in Hawick Parish, which could be his, include John (b.1705), Jean (b.1708), Margaret (b.1709) and John (b.1709). Thomas (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1700 he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Robert Gledstains. His son John was baptised in 1705, with witnesses weavers Robert Jolly and Robert Greenshields. His daughter Jean was baptised in 1708 with witnesses Michael Bridges and James Scott ‘Laird’. He may be related to the earlier weaver Thomas. Thomas (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick on the short-list of candidates for Cornet in 1711 and 1712. It is unclear how he was related to other Turnbulls. He may be the same man as the merchant involved in a court case in 1748, in which writer Robert Taylor paid his bill with money that perhaps did not really belong to him; he also took Taylor to court to recover his money. He may be the Thomas whose mother was given money by the Hawick Session in 1723 for teaching poor children. Thomas (17th/18th C.) married Bessie Turnbull in Wilton in 1714. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living in Denholm in 1717 when he married Janet Dryden, the marriage also being proclaimed in Jedburgh. Thomas (1680/1–1753) son of Thomas, tenant in Dykes farm. His wife Marion Brown died in 1743, and their son Thomas died in 1752, aged 25. The family are buried in Bedrule kirkyard. Thomas (1691/2–1768) resident of Hawick Parish who married Betty Scott, who died in 1777, aged 72. Their children included: James (b.1725); ‘Beatie’ (b.1726); James (b.1727); Isabel (b.1728); Thomas (b.1731); James (again, b.1737); Walter (b.1738); Betty (b.1739); and Anne (b.1741). He may be the same man as Bailie Thomas. He was buried under a tablestone at St. Mary’s. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1725 he was living at Mabonlaw when his daughter Mary was baptised. Thomas (17th/18th C.) married Helen Telfer in Wilton in 1729. Bailie Thomas (18th C.) father of Bailie Thomas of Fenwick. It is unclear how he was related to other Turnbulls. He may be the Thomas who sold East Mains (of Hawick) to the Duke of Buccleuch, along with John Scott and Rev. Patrick Cunningham in the 1740s. He was probably the Thomas who was a Bailie in the 1730s, 40s and 50s. He witnessed a baptism for skinner Walter Scott in 1746. He was ‘Bailie Thomas Turnbull, elder’ when he served as Magistrate in 1757. In that year there was a dispute over residents of farms near the Common making ‘bakes’ at Blackgrain Moss, which were broken up on the orders of the Council (when he was visiting Newcastle) and the offenders fined, with him settling with them in opposition to the other Bailie, Robert Scott. He is probably the Bailie Thomas who purchased Fenwick in 1762 and other properties in 1771, including Rashigrean and Commonbrae. In 1763 he was engaged in business in London.
when his son (also an ex-Bailie by then) was commissioned by the Hawick Town Council to write to him to arrange for an exchange of a new bell for St. Mary's. Also in 1763 he was ‘Bailie Thomas Turnbull of Fenwick’ when he witnessed a baptism for his son Thomas. In 1765 he is probably the Thomas ‘senior’ who witnessed a baptism for glazier William and the ‘Bailie Turnbull Senr’ who witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Andrew Scott. In 1767 he was described as ‘Thomas Turnbull, elder of Fenwick, Merchant in Hawick’ when he produced the Hawick Town Charters at the court case for the Division of the Common. In 1777 he was one of the claimants for a share of a farm of Hawick Common, when it was divided, gaining more than 15 acres. He is said to have left 2 sons and 2 daughters (although these generations seem confused by multiple Thomases!). He was succeeded by his son, also Bailie Thomas. In 1758 he witnessed a baptism for glazier William (who was probably related to him) and in 1764 witnessed a baptism for his son Thomas (called ‘Junior’ at that point). In 1764 (when described as ‘late Bailie here’) and 1766 he witnessed baptisms for Walter (probably a relative) and Catherine, daughter of schoolmaster William Dyce. In 1764 ‘Bailies Turnbull older and younger’ and in 1766 both ‘Bailie Turnbull Senior’ and ‘Junior’ witnessed baptisms for baker John Osburn. In 1772 he is probably the Bailie of Fenwick who witnessed a baptism (along with Bailie William Elliot) for Bailie Andrew Scott and another for John Osburn. Thomas (18th C.) recorded at Denholm Dean in 1741 when his son John was baptised in Cavers Parish. Probably the same Thomas was in Denholm in 1749 when his son Thomas was baptised. Some of these other children, baptised in Cavers, may also have been his, James (b.1736), Margaret (b.1737), Thomas (b.1738), Walter (b.1739), Patrick (b.1744) and William (b.1745). Thomas (b.c.1730) son of Adam of Denesdyke. After the family were forced to leave the Rule valley he became a weaver in Tarset-foot, Tyneside. His sons Adam and William returned to the Rule area, but he could not be convinced to move. He also had a son Michael (who died young), and daughters Isabella (who married William Walker, farmer at East Fodderlee) and Mary (who married Thomas Telfer). He lived to be 99. Thomas ‘Tammy’ of Knowe (d.c.1770) probably succeeded from Anthony, who may have been his father. He is recorded in a discharge of 1758 and in 1763 when he leased Appletreehall, Townhead and part of Clarilaw. He is easily confused with Thomas of Minto, who was probably a distant cousin. He was involved in an action against the Duke of Buccleuch over teinds in the parishes of Minto and Hassendean in the period 1749–65. He is probably the Turnbull of Knowe recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He was one of those who raised an action against Henry, Duke of Buccleuch, over the division of Hassendean Common in 1762. In 1769 he had a marriage bond for his son John with Agnes, daughter of Walter Riddell of Muselee. He married Sussana Scott, daughter of Robert Scott of Fahnash in Edinburgh in 1755 (and she made a disposition in 1789). He was succeeded by his son Thomas. His daughter Violet married Alexander Horsburgh of that Ilk in 1778, and the titles and lands probably passed to the Horsburgh family thereafter. Another daughter, Elizabeth, married Dr. James Watson in Kelso, and was also an heiress of his lands. His will from 1764 (when he was still alive) is in the National Archives. Some of his correspondence also survives (in the Horsburgh family collection) including letters from his cousin Patrick Heron, brother-in-law James Holt and sister Isabella. Thomas of Knowe (d.c.1788) son of Thomas. He is recorded as part of the bond for his brother John’s marriage to Agnes, daughter of Walter Riddell of Muselee in 1769. He is recorded in an ‘assignation in trust’ with Robert Scott, cashier in Jedburgh in 1774. He was listed on the roll of elector for Roxburghshire in 1780. He is still recorded in 1786, although it appears that the estates passed to the Horsburgh family through marriage to his sister Violet. He was taxed for having a gardener and a footman in the period 1778–86. He was recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls in 1785–86, when he had 3 carriage horses, and 2 in 1787. He was taxed for owning a carriage in 1786 and 1787 and for having a female servant in 1785–87. The ‘Mrs Turnbull of Know’ who paid the female servant tax in Hawick in 1790 is probably his widow. There is a disposition by him (among the Scott of Raeburn papers) in 1787, and another to Alexander Horsburgh (among the Elliot of Minto papers) in 1788 relating to Clarilaw and Hassendean. His trustees were recorded as owners of Alton, parts of Wester Clarilaw and Appletreehall Townhead in the 1788 county valuation (and 1811 Land Tax Rolls). Thomas (1706–74) of Burnfoot, and also described as ‘of Catshill’ (i.e. Catshawhill). He was son of Andrew and Jean Scott. He was factor to the Minto estate in 1738 (and hence sometimes confused with the Turnbulls of Minto) and farmed at Minto Cleuchhead. He also managed the estate of Haining and the farm of North Synton for Lord Alemoor, where he planted numerous hedges and plantations. He bought the farm of Catshawhill, but sold it after a few years (for a large profit). He was involved in the beginnings of the local carpet trade about 1753. There is a record (from the Board of Trustees for Manufactures) of Thomas Turnbull & Company, Hawick, manufacturing woollen articles (presumably carpets) in 1763. He joined with others in 1769 (or perhaps 1759) to form a partnership in the main carpet factory in Hawick. He obtained the lease for Burnfoot and also West Buccleuch in 1760. He also acted as a local money lender before there were banks; he loaned money to William Kerr of Abbotrule, Thomas Scott of Stonedge, Henry Elliot of Harwood, Gideon Scott of Falnash, Douglas of Cavers and Lord Minto. He was appointed as an arbiter for the process of deciding on the division of the Common (one of a group of 2 lawyers and 2 country gentlemen), but died before the process was completed.

In 1735 he married Nellie (or Nelly) Thomson, who was said to be from Whitelee, Redewater, and she died in 1747, aged 34. In 1753 he secondly married Esther, daughter of James Douglas (farmer at the Trows); she was widow of Alexander Ogilvie and aged 38 when she remarried, but still had 3 children. He was recorded as factor to Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto in 1758, when his son Gilbert became a surgeon’s apprentice in Edinburgh. This son joined the Honourable East India Company, was inclined to be extravagant, and it is said he eventually refused to pay his bills. His children with his first wife were: Andrew (b.1736), who died in infancy; Agnes (b.1737), who married James Turnbull, tenant of Hassendeanbank; Jean (b.1739); Andrew (again, b.1740/1), who also died young; Gilbert (b.1741/2) who was a surgeon in the East India Company and died unmarried; an unnamed son (b.1743); William (1745–1825), who inherited Burnfoot; and Marion (b.1747), who died young. With his second wife he had: Nelly, who married George Thomson, farmer at Bught-Rig; Esther, who married Thomas Scott of Peel; and Thomas, who became a manufacturer in Hawick. He died at Burnfoot. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Deanhead in 1736 and 1737 when his son James was baptised. Some of these children, baptised in Cavers Parish, are probably his: James (b.1736); Margaret (b.1737); Thomas (b.1738); Walter (b.1739); John (b.1741); Patrick (b.1744); William (b.1745); and Thomas (b.1749).

Thomas (1730/1–1825) of Fenwick, merchant in Hawick. He was eldest son of Bailie Thomas, and is easy to confuse with his father. He may have been the Thomas born in Hawick to Thomas and Betty Scott in 1731. He was Cornet in 1753. In 1758 he was recorded as a skinner. He was already a Bailie by 1763, when he is described as ‘younger of Fenwick’. Also in 1763 he was described as ‘junior’ when asked to write to his father in London to arrange for an exchange of the great bell of St. Mary’s for a new one; they are described as ‘Thomas Turnbulls, late Baillies, Senr. and Jun.’ In 1763 he was ‘junior late Bailie in Hawick’ when he received from the Town Treasurer the money to pay for the new bell. Both he and his father witnessed baptisms for baker John Osburn in 1764 and 1766. He was one of the Magistrates during the dispute over the Division of the Common, and also a neighbouring landowner, getting 15 acres himself. He may be the Bailie Turnbull whose garden wall formed part of the boundary of the Little Haugh in 1767. He is probably the Thomas of Fenwick who gained 15 Scots acres in the Division of the Common in 1777. He is probably the Thomas who was a Bailie in the 1770s and 80s. In 1788 he is recorded as owner of Fenwick (valued at £100), land in Weensland (valued at £35 18s 7d), as well as owner of two parcels of lands (valued at £31 19s 4d and £31 19s 4d, possibly near Burnflat) that had belonged to Patrick Cunningham. He paid tax in Hawick Parish for having a female servant in 1788–91 and also paid the Horse Tax in Hawick in 1785. He was ‘of Fenick’ in 1787–97 when he paid the horse tax, being called ‘Mercht.’ in 1794 and 1797. In 1797 he was probably the Thomas who was ‘Esq.’ on the Horse Tax Rolls, having 3 work horses and the merchant who paid tax on a saddle horse in Hawick, as well as paying the dog tax. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and in 1819 (along with his son William). In the 1811 Land Tax Rolls he is listed as owner of Fenwick, Brieryyards, Hornshole, part of Weensland, part of ‘Mr. Patrick Cunningham’s Lands in Hawick’ and ‘Part of Particot Lands in Hawick’. He was the largest owner of land within the Burgh of Hawick on Wood’s 1824 map, although he must have been extremely old by this time; he was therefore an important heritor in the Parish. His lands included: the area later named Fenwick Park; a large section of the Terraces; fields on the north side of the Loan; and Wylie’s Dub. In 1806 the farms of Palace and Shortacres were added.
Turnbull

(and they would later own the Rodono Estate in Yarrow as well). In 1757 he married Martha, daughter of David Ogilvie of Brieryyards, through which his family gained Brieryyards in 1783; she died in 1806. Their children included: Thomas (b.1758), who died young; Martha (b.1759); William, who succeeded (b.1760); Thomas, again (b.1763); Elizabeth (b.1764); and David, who died in India before his father. In 1758 and 1759 the witnesses were David Ogilvie of Brieryyards (his father-in-law) and James Weir. For the 1763 baptism he was described as ‘late Bailie’ and the witnesses were Bailie Thomas of Fenwick (his father) and Bailie John Scott. The witnesses in 1764 were ‘Bailie Turnbull Senior’ (his father) and Andrew Scott. It is possible he is the Thomas whose daughter Betty died in Hawick in 1777. A portrait of him, painted by Scott of Edinburgh, is in the Museum (and donated by Andrew Kennedy). He died at the venerable age of 94. Thomas (1731/2–95) merchant in Denholm, son of Alexander (d.1761) and Helen Murray (d.1780). He was recorded as a merchant in Denholm in 1783, when his son Alexander was baptised. His wife Agnes Rutherford also died in 1783, aged 29. The family are buried in Bedrule kirkyard. Alexander (b.1783), baptised in Cavers Parish, was probably also his son. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Martha Ogilvie and their children included: Thomas (b.1758); Martha (b.1759); William (b.1760); Thomas (again, b.1763); and Elizabeth (b.1764). It is possible he is the smith whose son William died in Hawick in 1716. Thomas ‘Tammy Trumble’ (18th C.) clothier and dyer in Hawick. It is said that the family were once quite well off, but their fortunes changed and he had to move to find work, including as a dyer in a factory in Kilmarnock. It was also said that he ‘was rather an eccentric in his way’, being a frequenter of ale-houses and ‘fond of singing songs, not always of the most delicate character’. He may be the same as Thomas the dyer in Hawick who was paid in 1757 for ‘dyeing and dressing officer’s clothes’. He was listed (as a clothier) along with Gavin as witness to a baptism for weaver John Smith in 1764; he was probably son or younger brother of Gavin. He was also recorded as a dyer in 1764 when he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for George Scoon. In 1770 he was living at Roughheugh and recorded as a parishioner of Wilton, and in 1772 was at Dampside. In 1770 he and Gavin were witnesses to a baptism for William Thomline (who may have been their employer at Roughheugh Mill). By 1774 the family were in Galashiels and in 1778 were in Portsburgh, St. Cuthbert’s Parish, Edinburgh. He married Beatrix Ruecastle in Hawick in 1762; she is probably the Beatrix, daughter of Bailie John Ruecastle, who was baptised in Hawick in 1742. Their children were: Jane (b.1763), who probably married Ebenezer McLellan in Hawick in 1794; Gavin (b.1764), baptised in Hawick, poet and actor; Betty (b.1766), baptised in Hawick; John (b.1768), baptised in Hawick; Walter (b.1770), baptised in Wilton; Thomas (b.1772), baptised in Wilton, who later emigrated to America; Euphemia (b.1775), baptised in Galashiels; Henry (b.1778), baptised in Edinburgh; and Walter (again, b.1781), baptised in Kilmarnock, who was a weaver and died in Glasgow. The record in 1781 states that Walter was the 6th son and 9th child, and that this was the first marriage for both parents. The baptismal witnesses recorded are: in 1763, John Ruecastle (probably his father-in-law) and Gavin Turnbull (perhaps his father); in 1764 and 1766, the whole congregation; in 1768, ‘present Magistrates’ Walter Ruecastle (probably his brother-in-law) and William Elliot; in 1770 Robert Scott (perhaps the miller at Roughheugh) and Thomas Scott; in 1772 James Scott and John Mathieson; and in 1778 Edinburgh dyers Henry Duncan and James Fairney. Based on the children, his parents names were probably Gavin and either Jane or Euphemia. He may have been related to the later dyers. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at Heap in 1770. He married Margaret Henderson and their children included: John (b.1770); and Robert (b.1772). The witnesses in 1770 were James Dryden and Thomas Scott. Thomas (b.1740) eldest son of James, farmer at Dykes, and Helen Spindie. He was born at Dykes in Cavers Parish. He was locally very well-known in his day as a writer of poetry. He wrote a piece about the old village of Bedrule called ‘the Deserted Village’ and he also put the Shorter Catechism into verse. He was grand-uncle to John Turnbull of Sunlawhill farm. It is said that he made a lock for the old burial ground at Spittal-on-Rule, which was preserved at Weens in the early part of the 20th century. He is probably the Thomas recorded as farmer at Dykes on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 4 horses. Additionally he was taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Betty Harkness and their children included: Elizabeth (b.1774); and John (b.1779). The witnesses in 1774 were Andrew Burnet and Alexander Bunyan. Thomas (1756–97) son of Thomas and sister of Janet. He was probably grandson of John and brother of John, who farmed at Mackside. The family were recorded on an old tombstone in Abbotrule Kirkyard. Thomas (18th C.) recorded at Dodburn in 1789 when his daughter Isabel was baptised in Kirkton Parish. Bailie Thomas ‘Bailie Tammy’ (1758–1823) local businessman and Magistrate. He is easy to confuse with the contemporary Thomases of Fenwick. He was the youngest son of Thomas of Minto and his 2nd wife Esther Douglas, and was father of John Turnbull of the Dyeworks. He became a partner in the Hawick Carpet Company in 1779. He later carried on the dyeing department as a separate business, for a while situated where Bridge House was later located. This business ultimately led to ‘Turnbull’s the Dyers’. He was involved in a large number of local business enterprises in the late 18th and early 19th centuries. He is probably the manufacturer who in 1788 (along with merchant James Dickson) witnessed a baptism for merchant George (who was probably a relative). He was listed as a manufacturer in Hawick on the Horse Tax Rolls in 1794 and 1797 and on the Dog Tax Rolls in 1797, as well as the manufacturer of that name on the subscriber list for Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ in 1784. He was also the first agent for the British Linen Bank in Hawick, his appointment lasting until 1806. He was known for being an independent thinker and having a caustic manner, e.g. when he ordered Warren Hastings off his land at Wilton Glebe. He was listed as a bankrupt carpet manufacturer in 1820, and hence it appears that his business did not go so well in the latter part of his life. He appears to have married 3 times: Margaret Darling (d.1829); Isabella Aitkin; and Mary, sister of John Oliver, Town Clerk of Hawick. His children (with his first 2 wives) were: John (1778); Isabella (1805–83), who married James Ormiston and David Miller; Christina (b.1815); Ester (b.1817); and Margaret (b.1818). He is probably the Bailie Thomas of the Sandbed whose son Thomas died in Hawick in 1811. The death of one of his daughter is recorded in 1838 as ‘Miss Turnbull daughter of Bailie Turnbull Carpet Manufacturer’. Thomas (18th/19th C.) blacksmith in the Hawick area. His son William, stockmaking, died in Hawick in 1816. Thomas (1770/1–1854) blacksmith at Gillbraehead, probably son of Robert, who was previously blacksmith there. He is listed among the subscribers to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He married Isabella Elliot, who died in 1815, aged 44. Their children included: Robert (1799/1800–23); and Isabella, who died age 14. They are buried in Ettleton Cemetery. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at Crosshall in Wilton Parish, according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Thomas (18th/19th C.) manufacturer in Hawick, who was on the short-list for Cornet in 1794. It is possible this could be the same man later known as ‘Bailie Tammy’, although that Thomas appears to have been married by 1794. Thomas Scott (1784–1867) eldest son of William of Burnfoot. He was effectively disowned after his mother disapproved of his marriage to Margaret Goodfellow about 1810. He was at East Middle when he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. He farmed at East Middle from at least 1841. In 1851 he is recorded as farmer of 400 acres and employer of 7 people, while in 1861 he farmed 380 acres, employing 9 men and 3 boys. He is listed on the tablet to the Turnbulls of Bedrule in Bedrule Kirk. He was a registered voter in Cavers Parish. In politics he was firmly a Tory and took a leading part in local events surrounding the Reform Bill and the disruptions at the local elections in the 1830s. In 1837 he was one of those who were besieged in the Tower Hotel (possibly for several days), and he was one of the witnesses who travelled to London for the Parliamentary inquiry. His first wife died in 1823 and about a year later he married Mary Beattie (who died in 1880). His children with his 1st wife were: William (1812–47), whose twin brother died at birth; Thomas (1814–76); Michael (1816–92), died at Southsea; Elizabeth (b.1818); Eleanor (b.1820); and Agnes (b.1822). And with his 2nd wife: Agnes; Archibald Oliver (1825–69), who became a lawyer in Jedburgh; Peter (1826–27), who died young; John (1828–84); Margaret (b.1829); Peter, again (1831–34), also died young; James Douglas (b.1833); Jane (b.1834); Peter Stephenson (1836–1921), who was Surgeon General; Robert Dempster (1838–93); Scott (1839–59); and Adam (1841–80). It was said that he was heir to a fortune that had been left by a son of the last Laird of Bedrule, who died in India; he apparently told the Rev. Craig of Bedrule that if the money could be recovered he could take half himself. Thomas (1788–1883) younger son of Thomas and grandson of Adam of Denesyde. He farmed at Broombalks and then for a while at Tandlaw. About 1810 he married Ellen Chisholm and had 9 children. He emigrated to Huron, Canada in 1860, following his son Andrew. Thomas (1795–1856) 6th son of James and Betty Adamson. He had 6 brothers, including the Schoolmasters of Wilton and Hobkirk. He was born at Hobkirk Kirkstile. He moved to Newcastleton and became a carrier there. He was listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory operating to Edinburgh once a fortnight. His cart also left the Nag’s Head in Hawick every Saturday, bound for Newcastleton. In 1851 he was at about 1 Whitchester Street. In 1852 he was listed leaving the Coach & Horses bound for Jedburgh and Kelso every Wednesday, and to Newcastleton on Thursdays from the Bull & Butcher. He married Elspeth Anderson, who died in 1873, aged 76. Their children included: James (b.1817), who died in infancy; Elizabeth (1821/2–55); Henry; John B.; Thomas; and Agnes. In 1852 he is recorded operating a twice-weekly service between Newcastleton and Hawick. He may the Thomas from Newcastleton who was listed among subscribers to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. Thomas (18th/19th C.) from the Turnbuls of Hartshaugh and Swanshiel. He was a shepherd on Templehall farm. His son John was also a shepherd, who married Agnes Telfer. Thomas (18th/19th C.) merchant in Hawick. He was son of draper George and Betty Wilson (daughter of ‘ Haunless Wat’). In 1811 he witnessed a baptism for James Scott and Elizabeth Turnbull (his sister). He married Jean, daughter of John Veitch and Jean Elliot in 1813. Their children were: Elizabeth, who died at Lanton; Jean or Jane (b.1815), who also died at Lanton; George (b.1818), who emigrated to Australia and married Margaret Watt; Jane (b.1820), who married: Margaret, unmarried; and Georgina, also unmarried. Jean, who died in Hawick in 1816, recorded as daughter of merchant Thomas, may have been his daughter. Thomas of Fenwick (1799–1874) only son of William of Fenwick. He was said to be ‘ of weak intellect’ and his estates were placed in the charge of trustees, under whom they prospered and expanded. This included the purchase of Midshiels in 1852 and the Barony of Rodono and farm of Over Kirkhope. He was probably the Thomas ‘ Esq. Younger of Fenwick’ who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘ History of Hawick’. In Pigot’s 1837 directory he is recorded as Thomas ‘ esq. (of Palace’) and residing at Brieryyards along with his father, who died in 1840. In 1841 he was recorded as ‘ Independent’ at Brieryyards, with Alison (his mother) and Martha (probably his aunt), plus 3 servants. In 1861 he was living at Briery Yards along with his head trustee David D. Scott; he is described as ‘incapable’. Nevertheless he was still formally a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. He was succeeded by his cousin William. Thomas (b.1800/1) frame-worker in Hawick. In 1841 he was living on the Back Row and in 1851 on Teviot Square. His wife was Margaret. It is possible he was the same man as ‘ Tam-a-Linkin’. Thomas ‘Tam-a-Linkin’ (1801/2–61) town crier. Orphaned at an early age, he became a Town officer, using both bell and drum, serving as Halberdier at the Common Riding and crier at public meetings etc. For a while his fellow Officer was Jamie Smith. He was known as a wit and used to refer to the Common Riding as ‘ the coming struggle’. He died suddenly after becoming ill on the street, and was buried in an unmarked grave in the Wellogate. A cairn was placed there in the 1980s. A portrait of him exists (painted by ‘ Scott’), and he has been immortalised in a poem by J.C. Goodfellow – ‘ Nae mair ‘ sheepheads an’ plucks’ he’ll cry, Sae much a head; his drum and bell are baith laid by – Tam-a-Linkin’s dead’ [JCG] (there are various spellings of his nickname). Thomas (1802–81) younger son of Adam, tenant in Hassendeanbank. He was baptised in Minto Kirk. He is recorded as farmer at Brieryhill in 1835, among heads of households in Wilton Parish. In Perth in 1837 he married Margaret Oliver and they had 6 children. He farmed at Brieryhill but later emigrated to Guelph in Canada and died in Bosworth, Ontario. He is probably the Thomas recorded as farmer at Brieryhill in 1835, among heads of households in Wilton Parish. Thomas (19th C.) listed in 1852 as carrier between Denholm, Hawick and Jedburgh once a week. He left for Hawick from Abbey Place in Jedburgh, every Wednesday. Thomas (b.1806/7) farmer at Lees in Wilton Parish, recorded in 1861. His wife was Isabella and their children included George, Mary, Thomas and Robert. Thomas (b.1809) son of Walter and Helen Oliver, he was smith at Stobs Woodfoot, like his father before him. In 1856 he presented to the Archaeological Society a walking stick owned by Gen. Elliot, who defended Gibraltar, and a lock from Fast Castle. In 1857 he read a paper at the Society, on ‘Certain phases of the Great Exhibition of 1851’. He is recorded at Stobs Woodfoot in the 1861 census, living with his mother Helen. Thomas ‘Tommy’ (1811/2–77) eldest son of Adam, descended from the Turnbuls of Deneside. He farmed with his father and brother Michael at Midburn (or ‘Africa’). They Turnbull worked hard to improve the land and ended up fairly well off. He is recorded as farmer there in the 1860s. He died unmarried. Thomas (b.1816/7) shepherd at Newton (‘the Nitton’) in Wilton Parish. He is recorded there in 1861. His wife was Margaret and their children included Thomas, William, Janet and James. Thomas (b.1818/9) from Jedburgh, he was saddler and post-master in Lillieslea, recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In Slater’s 1852 directory he is listed as the postmaster (and perhaps listed in error as ‘John’ as saddler and ironmonger, as well as librarian). He may have been son of the earlier saddler Robert. In 1841 he was living with Margaret, George and Robert, probably his siblings. In 1851 he was living with his sister Betsy and brother Robert. In 1861 he was living on Main Street, as postmaster and saddler (employing 2 men). His wife was Agnes F. and they had daughters Agnes M. and Margaret P. Thomas (19th C.) teacher at Glendouglas School in the 1860s. Thomas (b.1822/3) born in Wilton Parish, he was farmer at Whitlaw and then at Newmill on Slitrig. He is recorded there in 1856 and in 1861 was farming 100 acres and employed 2 men and 2 women. He married Jane Knox and their children included Walter, James, Ina Elliot, Robert, David and Euphemia. Thomas (b.1823/4) born in Ancrum Parish he was farm steward at Spittal-on-Rule in 1851 and 1861. His wife was Elizabeth S., and their children included Sarah, Margaret, James and John. Thomas (1824–1907) born in Glasgow, son of solicitor Joshua and Jeanie Marshal. He is said to have been raised by a relative in Denholm after being orphaned. He became an architect in Edinburgh, then emigrated to Australia and later moved to California and then New Zealand. He is responsible for the designs of several churches and other buildings, particularly in Wellington. Thomas (b.1828/9) born in Wilton Parish. He was recorded as ‘fundholder’ on the 1861 census, when he was living at 13 Kirkwynd. He married Mary Hardie in 1858 and their children included: John (b.1859); Margaret (b.1861); Jane (b.1864); Mary (b.1866); Esther (b.1868); and James (b.1871). Thomas (d.1890) Hawick solicitor of the late 19th century. His parents lived in Appletreehall. He was in partnership with Walter Haddon from 1880. He was a supporter of the Common Riding. He was also a prominent member of the St. John’s Lodge and was buried with Masonic honours. Thomas Scott (1836/7–77) from Hawick. He was recorded dying of consumption at Stirling East in Australia. Thomas (19th/20th C.) 2nd son of John, farmer at Minto Kames. He went to Australia with his brother John when gold was discovered there (probably in the early 1850s). After returning he farmed at Easter Boonraw, then moved to Greenhouse in Minto Parish. In 1858 he married Mary Hardie, daughter of a Hawick farmer. Their children were John (b.1859, who farmed Boonraw and Stouslie), Margaret (b.1861), Jane (b.1864), Mary (b.1866), Esther (b.1868, who died young) and James (b.1871, who farmed at Greenhouse). Thomas (19th/20th C.) resident of Bonchester. He was on the Committee of Rulewater Miniature Rifle Club from 1905. Walter of Minto (14th C.) possibly a son of the original William of Rule. He held the lands of Minto, perhaps from 1329, being confirmed by David II before 1370. Perhaps the same ‘Waltero Tornbol’ was the witness to a charter of Adam of Roule, for the lands of Altonburn, in about 1354. Also in 1354 he witnessed a charter of Robert of Alton relating to the chantry at the Church of Roxburgh. About the same time he witnessed a grant of lands in Lessuden for Melrose Abbey; he is recorded there as ‘Waltero Tornbol’. Walter of Minto (15th C.) son of John. He instituted an inquiry in 1424 in order to try to invalidate the grant his father had made to Sir William Stewart of Jedworth in 1390. This was on account of John Turnbull having leprosy at the time (making the transaction void under Scots law), together with the rumour at the time that Sir William Stewart had died in France. However, the Stewarts continued to hold the half barony of Minto. It was said that in 1429 he interrupted the sasine ceremony to invest Sir William Stewart in Minto, again claiming his hereditary right. As a result it seems that the barony of Minto was split, so that thereafter there were 2 families who were ‘of Minto’. Walter (15th C.) on a ‘retour d’inquest’ made in Hawick in 1424 for lands in Howman and another for the Barony of Hawick in 1427. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Walters. Walter (15th C.) Bailie of Selkirk recorded in the Exchequer Rolls for 1451. Walter of Minto (15th C.) son of William. In 1458/9 he was granted the lands in the Barony of Minto that had belonged to his father. Walter of Harden (d.bef. 1482) recorded in 1468 when he resigned the lands of Harden to Margaret Wardlaw, Lady of the half Barony of Wilton. His son John had a charter for Harden in 1482, suggesting he either died just before this, or John reached maturity then. It is possible he was the same Walter who witnessed a charter for Thomas Middlemas for lands in Peeblesshire in 1476. Walter (15th C.) mentioned at the 1493 Justice-aire in Jedburgh as tenant in Bonchester, when his son George was surety for Andrew (in the same place), who was fined for non-appearance. Walter (15th C.) resident of Hornshole. He is recorded in 1493 along with Adam, also in Hornshole, when they were allowed to 'compone' for a series of crimes: stealing livestock from 3 separate men in Minto; bringing in Englishmen from Tynedale to plunder Minto; and for common theft. Their surety was Robert Scott of Howpasley. Walter (15th C.) recorded in a 'letter of reversion' for the lands of East Mains of Hassendean, which are probably the same as 'Knowe'. This letter was transferred from the old baron to the new baron in 1493/4. He may be an ancestor of the later Turnbells of Knowe. It is also possible that he was related to the Henry who held a quarter of Appletreehall in 1470. Walter (15th C.) member of the household staff of James IV. In 1490 he was given cloth and in 1497 when he was given a horse. He is recorded being in the King's Chamber in 1492 when he was given his fee for the term. It is not known what branch of the Armstrongs he was from. Walter 'Gaberlunzie' (15th C.) recorded in 1493 when he was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. In 1494/5 he was again fined for non-appearance, serving as his own surety, with his nickname given as 'gabirlenze'. He was surely related to Adam 'Gabilstenzies', who was killed in 1509. Walter of Gargunnock (d.c.1527) recorded in 1482 when William Douglas, Sheriff of Teviotdale protested that he had caused him (the Sheriff) to be summoned, but had not himself appeared. In 1482 he was on the panel for Elizabeth Cunningham inheriting the lands of Appletreehall and the eastern part of Hassendean. He also had a 1482 action against Walter Bertram, Burgess of Edinburgh for money owed, and a 1483 action against Elizabeth Somerville and others. In the judicial proceedings of Parliament in 1484 he had to prove that his neighbour stole cattle from his lands of Gargunnock (in Stirlingshire). Also in 1484 he leased the Crown lands of Singlie and Ernclench. In 1479 and 1486 his son William had a lease for the 'Weststeid of Hartwod' in Ettrick. In 1492 he gave a charter infesting Andrew Douglas in the lands of Hassendeanbank. His son William is also mentioned. In 1493 he had a precept of sasine to George Turnbull (probably also a relative) for the lands of Hassendeanbank. And in 1501 there was a sasine to his heirs Margaret and Janet Turnbull for Hassendeanbank. He may be the 'Waltero Turnbulle' who witnessed a sasine for Scott of Brannxholme in 1500. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Walters, and appears to have been Baron of Hassendean. Walter of Stoulsie (15th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1494/5. He served as surety for himself and was fined for not appearing. He was listed as 'Walterus turnbule de stowislee'. He was also listed in 1494/5 as owner (along with Walter Scott of Howpasley) of sheep that were stolen from Stoulsie by the Grahamslaws of Newton. He was surely related to George, who was recorded in Stoulsie in 1493. In 1502 his son Adam failed to appear at the Justice-aire and his surety, William in Crumhaugh, was fined. Walter (15th/16th C.) name of 2 men recorded in 1501, among 10 men whose fines were remitted. There were several other Turnbells listed, including from Fulton and Bonchester. Walter (15th/16th C.) tenant of Braxholme. In 1502 he had remission for stealing 168 cows and sundry goods from the Murrays at Carterhaugh, as well as stealing 2 horses from there 'in company with the Traitors of Levin'. George Turnbull of Hallrule and Robert Scott in Stirches were sureties. Walter (15th/16th C.) recorded as one of the King's ministrels in 1504. His name is listed as 'Watte Trumbull'. Walter of Minto (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1520 when he witnessed a document for Andrew Ker of Primside Loch. It is unclear how he was related to the other Turnbells of Minto, or if this was an error for William. Walter (16th C.) tenant in 'Wollei' (i.e. Wolfelee). In 1526 he was among the Borders men who accompanied the Homes on attacks against the Earl of Arran. Adam 'there' is also listed, so probably a son or brother. Walter Wat of Howa (16th C.) denounced as a rebel in 1530 along with David of Wauchope and others, for 'assistance given and afforded to Thieves and Malefactors in violation of their Bonds'. He was recorded there as being 'of Howay'. He could be the 'Watt Trumbill of Howatt' whose son and heir Archie was pledge in 1553/4, as part of an assurance given by the Rutherfords and Turnbells. He is probably the Wat recorded 'in Howa' in 1565 when he had to 'enter' James Turnbull of Abbotrule to Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst. He is probably the Watt 'in Hova' whose son was among men who Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst was ordered to present in 1567 to answer charges of raiding into England. It is possible that 2 generations are represented here. He was presumably an ancestor of the later Turnbulls of Howa. Walter (16th C.) owner of 1 particate of land on the south side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Walters. Walter (16th C.) recorded in 1537 when he sold his tenement in Selkirk to Peter Moffat. Walter ‘the Floorer’ (16th C.) recorded in 1567 among men who Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst had to present to answer accusations of raiding into England. His is listed being ‘callit the Flour’, but it is unclear what this nickname might have meant. Walter (d.bef. 1567) described as ‘in Dalkeith’ in 1567 when his eldest daughter Agnes became heir to his lands of ‘Templillandes and Browlandes’ at the head of the Rule. Walter (16th C.) recorded as ‘Walter Turnbill in Caversis’ when he witnessed a Melrose Abbey charter relating to the lands of Crook in 1569. There is no way to know where in Cavers he may have been tenant. Walter ‘Watt’ of Bewlie (16th C.) recorded being ‘in Bewly’ in 1576 among a group of Turnbulls and others (from Minto, Kames and Troneyhill), who swore not to harm another group of Turnbulls (from Barnhills, Billerwell, Belses and Chesters). In 1573 he was among men from the Jedburgh area accused by Robert Kerr of Woodhead of raiding his house and farm, although they were acquitted because Kerr had reset the fugitive Kerr of Ferniehirst. He was listed along with John of Minto, Hector of Wauchope and Wat of Hobsburn in a bond of 1580 to keep the peace with the Turnbulls of Bedrule and others. Also in 1580 he was ordered, along with Sir Thomas of Bedrule and John of Minto, to enter persons into ward in Edinburgh Castle (which he apparently did) or be declared a rebel. William Redpath of Greenlaw was his surety (for 1000 merks) that he would appear before the Privy Council. In 1580/1 he loaned 100 merks to Andrew Davidson in Kames, for which he received annual rent on Davidson’s lands in Belses. In 1581 he was accused of being in a group of Turnbulls who came to the farm of Rawflat and there harassed the widow and children of the murdered Walter Turnbull, then stole the cattle and goods from the farm; his sons Robert, William, Mark and Andrew were also listed. This accusation was repeated in 1583, and in that year Robert Kerr of Auncrum and his son William Kerr were caution for him not to harm Agnes, widow of Walter of Rawflat, and her tenants and servants; John Andrew signed for him ‘beacaus I can not wret’. In 1583/4 he was granted half of the meadow of Belses by Andrew Home. He was listed in 1584/5 among Border Lairds who were to appear before the Privy Council to explain how they had been helping to quiet the Borders. His son Walter was killed in 1580. About 1590 he was listed among the landed men of the Borders. Walter ‘Watt’ (16th C.) tenant in Troneyhill. He is recorded in 1576 among a group of Turnbulls and others (from Minto, Bewlie and Kames), who had a bond with another group of Turnbulls (from Barnhills, Billerwell, Belses and Chesters), not to harm each other. Dand from there is also listed and hence surely related. Walter ‘in Rafflatt’ is recorded in 1576/7 in a complaint that the bond of 1576 had been broken; hence he may be the same man as Walter of Rawflat. Walter (d.1580) son of ‘Watt of Bewlye’, recorded in 1581 when Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst made a list of 10 men who were called to account for his murder in the previous year. He may have been the Walter whose son Hector was killed at Lilliesleif by Sir Andrew Ker of Oxnam in 1604. Robert, who was killed in 1601 was presumably either his brother or son, and Robert’s brother Mark must have been similarly related. Walter ‘Wat’ of Templehall (16th C.) witness in 1593 to the marriage contract between a daughter of James Gledstains of Cocklaw and a son of Hector Turnbull of Wauchope. He was deceased by 1604 when his daughters Jean and Beatrix inherited Templehall and Brewlands. He was also called ‘of Vauchope’, suggesting he was probably a son of the Laird of Wauchope. His widow Marion Lorraine (along with several Turnbulls) was forced to leave Templehall and Brewlands, following a court case of 1605. It has been suggested that she might have been a daughter of Hector Lorraine of Harwood. Walter ‘Wat’ of Bedrule (1560–c.1623) son of Sir Thomas and Janet Turnbull. He was listed along with his father and brother William among the group of men accused in 1573 of raiding the farm of Auncrum Woodhead. In 1576 he was listed along with his father, William in Barnhills and Mungo Bennet in Chester in a dispute with William Ker, younger of Cessford, over lands in Nether Auncrum; he was by then listed as son and heir of Sir Thomas. It appears that by the time he succeeded the Turnbulls of Bedrule were no longer very powerful, with the Castle in ruins and much of their Barony lost through defaulted ‘wadsets’. In 1577/8 he and his brother Thomas were acquitted of the murder of John, son of John Forbes of Ardmurdoch. In 1578/9 he was among members of the Turnbull family who were asked to appear before the Privy

Council to answer for ‘the slaughter of unquhile Thomas Schevill’. In 1579/80 he and Thomas were on a list of men accused of raiding into England. He was included along with his father and others in a bond of 1580 to keep peace with the Turnbulls of Minto and others. In 1583 he and his brother Thomas were charged with offences against an Englishman (Edward Grays), but the Warden, William Ker of Cessford, ‘in respect of the nearnes of kin with him’, delivered them back to Scotland, instead of to the English Warden. At that time he was refused to as being ‘of Fulton’. In 1583/4 several men of Hassendean were cited for failing to appear to give evidence against him and his brother; it was later confirmed that they were all declared as rebels, although this situation must have been resolved. About 1590 he was listed as ‘in Bedroule’ among landed men of the Borders. In 1591 James Douglas of Cavers was surety for him, probably for failing to keep good order. Also in 1591 he was one of the local Barons who signed a pledge to support the King against the Earl of Bothwell. In 1607 a case was brought against him by William Alanson, Bailie of Jedburgh. In 1618 he had a bond with George Rutherford, younger in Abbotrule, for which the witnesses were his son George, Robert in Bedrule (probably his brother) and Lionel in Hartshaugh. And also in 1618 he had a bond with Adam Turnbull of Abbotrule Townhead; his wife Helen Lillico is also mentioned. He had a bond in 1619 with Robert Ker of Fairnington, and another with George Ker, heir of Cavers Carre relating to the good behaviour of his son William. Also in 1619 he was among the Turnbulls who were accused by Sir John Stewart of Traquair of cutting down timber on his lands at Huntliehill, and was denounced as a rebel. However, he must have received remission, because in 1623 he had a bond for the good service of his friend George Deans, servitor to Thomas Nicholson, advocate in Edinburgh. In 1623 he served as cautioner to David Turnbull, Burgess of Jedburgh. Also in 1623 he testiﬁed that he had seen Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst’s flocks grazing on certain lands for ‘ﬁftie yeir syne and mair’. In his old age he is said to have been quite a nuisance, along with his sons and grandsons, and they were denounced as rebels for several crimes, including injuries done to Stewart of Traquair, owner of Wells. Lord Cranstoun the Border Commissioner tried to remove him from ‘the waste ground’ he occupied, although this attempt failed. He married twice, his ﬁrst wife’s name being unrecorded. His second marriage was to Helen Lillico by 1618. He had at least sons, Andrew, Adam, George and William (who succeeded). In 1587 it is stated (by English Warden Lord Hunsdon) that ‘a sunne of Bedrooles’ was slain in the encounter between Borderers and Englishmen under Sir Cuthbert Collingwood. He was probably also father of ‘Gawin Turnbull, son of the Laird of Bedroull’, who was declared a fugitive in 1605. Walter ‘Wat’ of Hobsburn (16th C.) possibly son of Robert. He is recorded in 1567 being ‘of Hopisburne’ and brother of David of Wauchope; he was among men ordered answer accusations of raiding into England, with his servant David Scott also listed. He is also recorded at Hobsburn in 1568. In 1574 he had to appear before the Privy Council, with Henry, heir of John Stewart of Craighall as surety. He is listed along with John of Minto, Hector of Wauchope and Wat of Bewlie in a bond of 1580 to keep the peace with the Turnbulls of Bedrule and others. He is probably the Walter recorded as ‘in Hoppisburne’ in 1582 when he was ordered to restore Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst to his lands in Feu-Rule. Kerr had an ‘escheat’ for his goods in 1583/4, along with George and John (in Hallrule and ‘Roull’), who may have been close relatives. There is another charge in 1585 for witnesses to appear to decide the ongoing court dispute. He is ‘Watt Trumble of Hoppesborne’ among men complained about by the English Warden for a raid into England in 1590. Walter (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘callit Sir Davids Wattie’ in 1601 when he was part of the band of Turnbulls who attacked Kers in Jedburgh. Walter of Rawflat (d.1581) recorded in 1579, along with his son and heir Walter. He had borrowed £80 from Alan Deans of Hawick and made an arrangement to pay him back, including that he convey to Deans’ house annually 4 bolls of malt, as well as the expenses of half his land of Rawflat. His land there is described as ‘lying in Ryndaill through the ﬁeld from the Lonyng east of the said lands with the tower and fortalice, occupied by the said Walter, in the town and territory of Rawflatt in the barony of Prumside, sheriffdom of Roxburgh’. He was recorded as a tenant in 1581 who was declared a rebel and asked to remove himself and his servants from the lands of Rawflat and part of Belses.
Turnbull

He was later that year killed by a group of Turnbulls, including David of Belses and his brothers George, John and Adam, as well as Thomas of Billerwell. In 1583 his wife Agnes complained to the Privy Council about this and also how another group of Turnbulls, led John of Minto, harassed her and her children by coming to Rawflat, ‘bodin in armes, with hagbuttes and pistolettis’, stole goods and livestock, and shot at them. The excuse given was that he himself was already declared a rebel, but clearly there was some family feud involved here. In 1583 Robert and William Kerr of Ancrum paid caution for Walter of Bewlie not harming his widow, or her tenants and servants. More details were recorded in the 1603 trial of George Turnbull of Belses for a long list of crimes. This included killing him, as well as his son William in 1600, capturing and torturing his servant Adam Turnbull, and shooting his son Walter. His daughter Isobel was one of the pursuers of the case. George Turnbull was acquitted of most of the crimes, but had his right hand cut off for illegally carrying fire-arms, and was later executed for other crimes, including stealing a horse from Rawflat in 1577 and 20 cows in 1579 (as well as adultery with his nephew’s wife). Walter (16th C.) recorded in Belses in 1581/2 when he became ‘cessioner and assignee’ to recover the debt of £24 owed by Thomas Smail in Lilliesleaf to Richard Wilson in Howford. The witnesses included Mark, heir of Howden and Hector, brother of the Laird of Barnhills. He may be the same as one of the other Walters. Walter (16th/17th C.) tenant in Fulton in 1619 when he was denounced as a rebel for failing to appear in court along with several other Turnbulls. Their crime was taking wood from the Laird of Traquair’s land at Huntliehill. His son Thomas is also mentioned. He was presumably related to the Turnbulls of Bedrule. Walter (16th/17th C.) described as being in Skelfhill in the Commissioners’ Court in 1622 when he was cleared, along with Geordie Morton in ‘Harrett’, of stealing 2 sheep from ‘Laird Swarley’ (an Englishman). Walter of Rawflat (16th/17th C.) sold Rawflat, Ryeknow and Abbotsmeadow to Ragwell Bennet of Chesters in 1623. He is probably the ‘Walter Trumbill, younger of Raflat’ who was shot in the arm and thigh in 1602 by George Turnbull of Belses, this taking place between Jedburgh and Belses. He also had a horse stolen from him by George of Belses about the same time, this being included in George’s final trial before his execution. In 1632 his sister Margaret was served as ‘heir portioner’ to him in the 10-pound lands of the Mains of Feu-Rule. Walter (16th/17th C.) recorded as being a resident in Know in 1628, when he was charged along with Thomas in Know to keep the peace with Walter Scott of Midshields, Adam Scott of Burnfoot and others. Walter (17th C.) tenant in Rule-townhead along with Adam in 1643. The lands were valued at £140. Walter (17th C.) son of James ‘in Hassiden bank’. In 1632 he feued part of Raperlaw from Thomas Hamilton, Lord Binning. He is probably the Walter listed on the 1643 county valuation ‘for his lands in Raperlaw, 17 bulls half mean half bear, £110, should be £110 10s’. He is probably also the could be the Walter of ‘Rapparlaw’ listed in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls for Lilliesleaf Parish, with the same value. Walter (17th C.) from Nether Ancrum, he is recorded in a valuation of 1643. He was part of the Chester-hall branch and ancestor of the Turnbulls who farmed Spittal-on-Rule through the 19th century. He probably had sons Walter and William. He was probably related to Andrew in Nether Ancrum (son of Andrew), who was served heir to his mother ‘Malie Krinklaw’ in 1636. Walter (d.c.1682) tenant in Strange when his will was recorded in 1682. His farm was presumably the one in Abbotrule Parish. Walter of Bewlie (17th C.) appears to have sold Bewlie to Thomas Elliot, tenant in Borthwickshiel, in 1672. However, this may have been only part of the lands (or else he retained the designation ‘of Bewlie’ after selling the family lands). He was recorded as ‘portioner of bewlie’ in 1678 when he paid the land tax in Lilliesleaf Parish for part of Bewlie, valued at £390. He was declared a fugitive for being present at the Bothwell Brig uprising in 1679. He was Laird in 1684 when the Laird’s brother William was listed among the men declared as fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. However, it is unclear what happened to him, and he may have been rehabilitated at the Revolution of 1689. He was recorded in the 1690 Act of Parliament for the visitation of schools. Walter (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, when it contained Hassendean. He married Janet Knox in 1686. They had daughters Bessie (b.1687) and Margaret (b.1689). The witnesses in 1687 were William Young and John Turnbull (who was probably related). Walter (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, or more likely the part that was once Hassendean. He married Janet Welsh in 1679 and their children included: Mary (b.1680); Janet (b.1684); and Bessie (b.1687). The witnesses in 1684 were Thomas Scott and William Young and in 1687 were Thomas Scott and John Dodds. Walter (17th C.) married Janet Martin in Robertson parish in 1687. Walter (17th C.) listed as a resident of Whitriggs on the 1694 Hearth Tax roll. Walter (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. There are 2 men of this name listed, and given how common the surname was locally, there is probably no way of determining who they were. Walter (17th C.) tenant in Birkhill on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to Robert, who was also there at that time, as well as possibly George, recorded in 1685. Walter (17th C.) resident of Deanbrae according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Walter (17th C.) recorded as tenant at ‘mynholmne’ in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. It is unclear whether this was ‘Millholm’ (or Millburn) near Hermitage village or the much further south Millholm. Walter (17th C.) tenant in Foulshiels in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records.

Walter (17th C.) resident of the east-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He could be the ‘Walter Trumble, at the East Port’ listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. Walter (17th C.) tailor on the east-side of Hawick, according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. He may be the same as the Walter at the East Port. He may be the Walter who witnessed a baptism for weaver David Miller in Hawick in 1700. He married Helen Elliot and their children included: Hugh (b.1671); Margaret (b.1673); Agnes (b.1685); and Walter (b.1686). The witnesses in 1685 were Bailie James Gledstains and carrier John Scott. Walter (17th C.) resident at Hassendean Mains according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He was probably related to Thomas, who was also listed there. Walter (17th C.) resident of ‘the netherend’ of Hassendean Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Walter (17th C.) resident at Clarilaw on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was also recorded there in 1696. He married Agnes Cowan and their children included William (b.1696). The witnesses were John Armstrong and Andrew Rodger. Walter (17th C.) resident at Swinnie according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the deceased farmer in Southdean Parish recorded in 1714 when his daughter Margaret married mason John Harrower in Edinburgh. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Borthwickbrae in 1711 when his daughter Janet was baptised. He could be the same as one of the other Walters. Walter (17th/18th C.) gardener of Hawick Parish. In 1718 he witnessed a baptism for John Napier and in the same year his sister Agnes married merchant James Tudhope. In 1717 he married Mary Simpson, ‘late servant to ye Laird of Gorrenberrie’. Their children included: George (b.1717); Helen (b.1719); and Barbara (b.1721). Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Isobel Lamb in 1719. Walter (d.c.1743) portioner of Ancrum, part of the Chesterhall branch. In 1707 he had a son Walter and in 1710 a daughter Ann. His son Walter was still ‘younger’ in 1742, but not in 1743, suggesting the year of his death. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Deanhead in 1717, when his daughter Margaret was baptised. He may be the Walter who married Helen Huntly in 1714. John (b.1715) and Margaret (b.1722) may have been his children. Walter (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, he was recorded in Cavers itself when he got married in 1727; his wife’s name was Janet, but no surname is recorded. Janet (b.1728), John (b.1731) and Walter (b.1733), baptised in Cavers Parish, were probably his children. Walter of Wester Swanshiel (c.1700-c.50) son of James and Elizabeth Scott. He succeeded his father in the lands of Wester Swanshiel in 1724. His children included Helen (b.1726), Magdalene (b.1727), John (b.1729, who succeeded), William (b.1729, probably a twin of John, who did not long survive), James (b.1731) and William (again, b.1733). He may also have been father of George (b.1739) and Walter (b.1741) who were baptised at Lilliesleaf. Walter (18th C.) Schoolmaster at Minto in the early 1700s. He may have been the same as the Schoolmaster at Hawick slightly later. In 1725 he raised ‘letters of horning and poinding’ (to try to recover a debt) against ‘John Mekell’ tenant in Hassendean Townhead. And in 1733 his son Gilbert became a barber’s apprentice in Edinburgh. Walter ‘the Little Maister’ (d.c.1756) Schoolmaster in Hawick in the mid-to-late 1700s. He was master of the Parish or ‘English’ school (in distinction to the Grammar School). He was ‘English School Master’ in 1743 when one of his children was baptised. His office and school were down the Punch Bowl Close. He was also Dean of Guild as well as Session Clerk in the 1730s. He served as one of the first postmasters in Hawick, but was found not to be suitable after a short trial. His nickname came from his diminutive stature. He had very brittle legs that were constantly being fractured and became curved.

into ‘S’-shapes. Apparently some bones of this description were once kept in St. Mary’s steeple after being found by the grave-digger! In 1737 he was admitted as a Burgess of Hawick ‘for his service to the place’. He is recorded as Schoolmaster in 1739, when his daughter Margaret married William Easton (Schoolmaster at Ewes) in Edinburgh, while when his daughter Ann married Alexander Ogilvie in Edinburgh in 1758, he was already deceased. It is known that James Inglis became Schoolmaster of the Parish School in 1756. Assuming there were not two local schoolmasters called Turnbull at the same time, then he is probably the same Walter recorded as Schoolmaster at Minto in 1733. The same Walter was probably the collector for the poor in Hawick, recorded in the 1740s. It is possible that Maizie (d.1808), recorded as daughter of the deceased schoolmaster Mr. Turnbull, was his daughter. He married Marjory Cunningham (probably as his 2nd wife) and their children included: Patrick (b.1737); Margaret (b.1739); Agnes (b.1741); Janet (b.1743); Elspeth (b.1744); and Violet (b.1746). The witnesses in 1743 were merchants John Ruecastle and William Oliver, junior. Walter (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1723 and 1724 he was at Highchesters. His children included Agnes (b.1723) and Janet (b.1724). Perhaps the same Walter was at Borthwick Mains in 1727. Walter (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1729 he was at Howcleeuch when his daughter Janet was baptised. There are several other children born in Roberton around this time who could be his. Walter (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Parkhill in 1721, 1731, 1734, 1736 and 1743 (although it is possible there are 2 generations here). His children, baptised in Roberton included: Bessie (b.1721); Walter (b.1731); Walter (again, b.1733); Jean (b.1734); Ann (b.1735); Robert (b.1736); John (b.1739); Thomas (b.1741); Bessie (b.1743); and Thomas (again, b.1745). He may have been brother of John who was also at Parkhill. Walter (1702–73) farmer at Firth in Lilliesleaf Parish. His connection to other local Turnbuls is unclear. He paid the window tax for Firth in 1748. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. His first wife may have been Isobel, sister of Walter Elliot of Ormiston, the marriage being in Roberton Parish in 1738. Children of this marriage may have included George (b.1739) and Walter (b.1741), baptised in Lilliesleaf, with no mother’s name recorded. He married as his second wife Dorothea, daughter of Mark Chisholme and Barbara Benett. He had 3 daughters: Barbara (1754–1821), who married George Pott of Todrig; Isabella (1757–1835), who married John Grieve of Hoscoe and Craik; and an unnamed daughter who may have been Dorothea (b.1761), who married Robert Laidlaw from Drumelzier. He also had a son, whose name is unknown, but whose children included Christian and John, who moved to Ontario. The payment for ‘ye bells to Lady Firth’s borile’ (i.e. announcement of the burial with St. Mary’s bell) recorded in Hawick in 1731 probably refers to his mother. Possibly the same Walter of Firth purchased the farm of Greenhouse (in Minto Parish) from Andrew Davidson in 1769. The ‘Mrs Turnbull of Firth’ who paid the female servant tax in Hawick in 1789 and 1790 is probably his widow. He is buried in Lilliesleaf Cemetery along with his 2 wives and daughter Barbara; he may have died in 1777, aged 74, his 2nd wife dying in 1804. Walter (1707–97) son of Walter, he was a portioner of Ancrum. He married Betty Dun (1718–88). Their children included: Isabel (1742–98); Walter (1743–1822); Janet (1745–48); John (1747–80); James (1751–1844, ancestor of the Turnbuls of Spittal-on-Rule); and Agnes (b.1754). Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Shiels. He married Mary Scott and their children included: ‘Somervel’ (b.1737), clearly named after the minister; William (b.1740); and Alexander (b.1745). The witnesses in 1745 were merchant Robert Taylor and William Scoon, servant to Rev. Somerville. Walter (18th C.) resident of ‘Mainse’ (presumably Borthwick Mains) when his daughter Ann was baptised. It is probable the same Walter purchased the farm from Andrew Davidson in 1769. Walter (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. In 1764 he married Katherine Dyce, as registered in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. She was probably the daughter of schoolmaster William Dyce born in 1737. Their children included: Thomas (b.1764); William (b.1766); William (again, b.1767); James (b.1772); and Robert (b.1774). The witnesses in 1764 and 1766 were Bailie Thomas Turnbull (perhaps a relative) and William Dyce (probably his father-in-law). Walter (18th C.) rented Easter Swanshie from Charles Kerr of Abbotrule in 1767. Walter (18th C.) of Rashiegrain, Hawick Parish heritor around the 1770s. He was probably connected with the Turnbuls of Fenwick, who owned Rashiegrain a little later. He may be the ‘Turnbull, Esq; of Rashiegrain’ (with no first name given) listed in the 1788 county valuation as owner of Rashiegrain and Commonbrae, valued at £260 19s 4d. The lack of name may mean he was deceased at about that time and succession was unclear. It is also possible he is confused with William of Rashiegrain. Walter (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Margaret Rodger and their children included: Janet (b.1769); James (b.1771); and Walter (b.1773). Margaret and Mary (b.1765), as well as Agnes (b.1771), with no mother’s name given, may also be his children. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He witnessed a baptism for James Black at Packhouses in 1776. Walter (d.1776) resident of Hawick Parish who married Mary Wilson in 1773. 3 years later his death is recorded as ‘Husband to Mary Wilson’. Walter (18th C.) tradesman in Hawick, being a carpenter, wheelwright and agricultural instrument maker. Gideon Scott was apprentice to him around the 1780s. Walter (1743–1822) son of Walter, he was portioner of Ancrum, like several generations of Walters before him. By 1781 he was ‘of Chesterhall’ rather than ‘younger, portioner of Ancrum’. He was listed as owner of part of Nether Ancrum in the Land Tax Rolls of 1811. He married Elizabeth Borthwick, and she died in 1827, aged 70. Their children included: Margaret (b.1771); Walter (b.1774); Mary (1781–1812) and James (b.1781, who farmed at Billerwell). Walter (18th C.) carrier of Belses, mentioned in an Edinburgh marriage record of 1794, when his daughter Catharine married James Allan. She could have been the ‘Kathrine’ born to Walter in Ancrum in 1768. Walter (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded as a herd in Tower in 1778 when his son George was baptised. Walter (18th C.) resident of Denholm in 1776 when his son Thomas was baptised. Walter (b.c.1765) wright in Denholm, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He was probably living on Canongate in 1841. Walter (18th/19th C.) from Cavers Parish, in 1789 he married Janet Hogg, from Kirkton Parish. Walter (18th/19th C.) tenant at Harwood Mill, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 3 horses. He is probably the tenant who was said (by Walter Deans, writing in 1887) ‘to have been a man of great strength and agility, and a famed player at the Hobkirk Ba’. Walter (18th/19th C.) schoolmaster in Melrose. In 1796 he was recorded as ‘Mr’ when he married Euphan Dickson, who was at that time described as being from Hawick Parish; she was the only surviving daughter of William Dickson, portioner of Darnick, and held the lands of Cartlyhole, which later was where Sir Walter Scott built his mansion of Abbotsford. Their children included Isabel (b.1797), James (b.1798), Euphemia (b.1800), Nelly (b.1802) and William (b.1804). Walter (b.1776) son of Thomas, he was blacksmith at Stobs Woodfoot in Kirkton Parish. In 1841 he was at ‘Birkwood Foot’. He is probably the Walter listed at Woodfoot among the subscribers to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. His married Helen or ‘Nelly’ Oliver in 1806. Their children included: Mary (b.1807); Thomas (b.1809), was also a blacksmith; Francis (b.1811); Walter (b.1813); William (b.1815); Eliza (b.1818); and Helen (b.1819). Walter (18th/19th C.) doctor in Hawick from 1800, also acting as a ‘man-midwife’. Walter (b.1787/8) joiner at Stirches Croft. His wife was Margaret, and their children included Walter, James, Mather, Ann and George. Walter (b.1794/5) born in Roberton Parish, he was a farmer. In 1851 he lived at No. 4 Burn Row in Wilton Dean, and was a ‘Proprietor of Houses formerly Farmer’. By 1861 he was farming 380 acres and employing 6 people at Acreknowe. His wife was Margaret and their children included Williamina, John and Ann. Walter (18th/19th C.) listed as vintner on the Howegate in Pigot’s 1837 directory. Walter (1805–64) eldest son of James of Chesterhall, who later farmed at Billerwell. He was the last of the Walters of Chesterhall. Bailie Walter (19th/20th C.) corn merchant who was in Hawick Mill for a while. His mother was Janet Knox, daughter of the tenant at Little Whitlaw. He was probably the Councillor of that name who was one of those who turned out for the Common Riding in the late 1800s, adding to its popularity among respectable men of the Town. Walter (b.1861) son of James, tenant farmer at Billerwell. In 1896 he married Georgina Louisa, on ly child of Rev. A.C. McPhail of Hobkirk. He farmed Hartshaugh Mill, which included Kirknow, Swanshield, the eastern part of Langraw, plus Hartshaugh and Unthank. Walter A. (19th/20th C.) joiner at Bonchester Bridge. He took over the business of Douglas Taylor in 1882. He firstly married a daughter of his cousin Robert Amos, and they had a daughter Maggie. He secondly married Janet, daughter of Bonchester tailor James Grieve. William ‘de Rule’ (c.1289–1333) the first Turnbull, suppos edly named for turning a bull from King Robert. He is recorded in a charter of 1313 for a piece of land at Philiphaugh. He may have married

Margaret, daughter of the Earl of Douglas, and is probably the direct ancestor of many local Turnbuls. His name is sometimes written ‘Turnbull’. It is possible that he is the same man as William of Rule, recorded several times around 1300. He is said to have met a grisly death at the Battle of Halidon Hill, challenging the English to hand-to-hand combat before the battle commenced, but being killed along with his dog by Sir Robert Benhale, with Benhale carrying his head back to England as a trophy – ‘With writhing

Robert Benhale, with Benhale carrying his head menced, but being killed along with his dog by Sir William of Rule, recorded several times around 1429/30.

William Bemersyde in 1425 and the ‘retour’ panel for the 1431 document for the lands of Heap. Possibly the same William was on the assize for lands in Bemersyde in 1425 and the ‘retour’ panel for the lands of Caverton in 1429/30. William (c.1400–54) founder of Glasgow University. He was reported to have been a younger son of the Laird of Bedrule and noble on both sides (his mother perhaps being a Stewart of Minto). It is unclear who his father was, although he was surely closely related to John of Bedrule who is recorded in 1432. He was probably born in Bedrule Parish and baptised in the old church. He graduated from St. Andrews in 1420 and spent the early 1430s as a canon law student at Louvain in Belgium. He was also for a while Parson in or near Hawick, being described as ‘Rector of Hawick’ in 1430 when appointed as Dean of the Arts Faculty at St. Andrews. He was witness to a local charter (swapping Heap between the Langlands’ and the Scotts) in 1431, where he is ‘Magistro Willelmo Turnbule rectore de Havic’. He also wrote a letter testifying to being a witness to this, where he is ‘persone off Hawye’ (i.e. Parson). Sometime before 1434 he was presented by James I to the benefices of the deceased Walter Stewart, Dean of Moray, although he already held ‘the parish church of Haroyk (rectius Hawyk) in the diocese of Glasgow’; he is described as being ‘a chamberlain of the pope, a bachelor of canon law, and the said king’s proctor in the Roman court, and who is related to divers barons in the third and fourth degrees of kindred’. He was in Florence afterwards and in 1439 graduated as Doctor of Canon Law at the University of Pavia. He had privileges bestowed upon him by Pope Eugenius IV, including Archdeacon of Lothian and appointment to the See of Dunkeld in 1447. He was Vicar of Edinburgh around 1446 and became Bishop of Glasgow in late 1447 or early 1448. He was also important in the Scottish court, becoming Keeper of the Privy Seal, and as such witnessing many documents for James II (e.g. in 1444 and 1446 for the Earl of Athole and in the Exchequer Rolls through the 1440s and 50s). He obtained a Papal Bull that led to the founding of Glasgow University in 1451, based on the granting of a tenement and 4 acres of land in the city. However, his plans for developing the new University were derailed following his death only a few years later. In 1450 he was witness the a charter of Sir Walter Scott of Kirkurd and Branxholme. In about 1452 he witnessed a document for the Archdeaconry of Teviotdale. It was stated by a later chronicler that he played a part in the downfall of William, Earl of Douglas (superior of the Barony of Hawick), who was killed by James II in 1452. He certainly loaned the King money, and earned special treatment for himself, his see and his newly adopted town (which became a regality). A tradition states that he founded Jedburgh Grammar School (although there is no evidence to support this). He probably died in Glasgow. There is a memorial to him in Bedrule Church, unveiled in 1954. A school in Bishopbriggs is named after him, as well as the Catholic Chaplaincy at Glasgow University. William of Hassendeanbank (15th C.) recorded as a witness in 1432 to the sasine giving the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffdom of Roxburghshire to Archibald Douglas. He is probably related to the later William of Hassendeanbank. William of Whithope (d.bef. 1456) witness in 1431 to the transfer of the lands of Heap from Langlands to Scott. In his letter of ‘attestation’ he is ‘Wylliam Turnbule of Qwythope’. He was recorded as witness to the 1447 charter by Margaret Cusing to Walter Scott of Buccleuch for the ‘Cusingland’. His son Philip received a charter of the lands of Whithope in the Barony of Hawick in 1456. William (15th C.) Chamberlain of the Bishop of Glasgow. He was recorded in the Exchequer Rolls in 1453, 1454 and 1455, and appears to be different from William, Bishop of Glasgow. William of Minto (15th C.) recorded in 1456 as ‘Willelmus Turnbule de Mynto’ in a document regarding the lands of Whitchesters; it is possible that this refers to his being witness to the retour for John of St. Michael a few years earlier. In 1458/9 his son Walter had a confirming charter for his lands in the Barony of Minto. He was witness to a sasine of lands near Branxholme in 1461, given by Sir Walter Scott to Katherine Inglis. He is recorded there as ‘Wyl Turnbull of Myntow’, while George of Bedrule was also a witness. In 1464/5 he was ‘William Turnebull of Mynto’ when he was on the panel to rule on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers. Given that there was a suggestion that Bishop William Turnbull’s mother was a Stewart of Minto, there may be a close family connection. William (15th C.) appointed as Vicar of Innerleithen in 1475. He was said to be ‘of noble race’. By 1482 he was also perpetual Vicar of ‘Cowin’ and Canon and Prebend of Dunkeld. In that year ‘in his infirmity’ he requested that his nephew James be granted the Canonry and Prebendary, his nephew Adam Glendinning to the Vicarage of Cowin (although not wearing clerical dress on account of his illegitimate birth) and Adam Glendinning to the Vicarage of Innerleithen. William (15th C.) recorded as Rector of Annan when he witnessed a charter for the Church of Carlaverock in 1492/3. He may be the Master William recorded in 1490 when he was given lambs on the Crown lands of ‘Gildhouse’, because of the wars. William (15th C.) recorded as resident in ‘langhop’ in proceedings of the Justice- aire held in Jedburgh in 1494/5. Hector Lauder, brother of the Laird of Todrig, had remission for several crimes, including stealing from him: 3 cows and an ox; a cow and an ox on another occasion; a grey horse; one other horse; and 60 sheep at different times. It is unclear where ‘langhop’ was, presumably Langhope, possibly the one near Todrig, but perhaps one elsewhere (or a transcription error). He may be the same William who had something stolen from him at Shielswood Meadow by Thomas Lauder of Todrig. William of Hassendean (15th/16th C.) son of Walter. He is listed as son and heir of Walter in 1479 when he leased the western part of Hartwood (which probably corresponds to Hartwoodburn). He was also son of Walter of Gargunnock in 1486, when he leased ‘Weststeid of Hartwid’ in Ettrick Ward. In 1492 he was listed as son of Walter of Gargunnock when he infefted Andrew Douglas in the lands of Hassendeanbank. In 1493 he is the ‘unquhile Wilzam Turnboll of Cargunnok’ when the ward for his daughters and heirs was given to Alexander Lord Home and Duncan Forrester (although whether he was already deceased then is unclear). He could be the William ‘White’ Turnbull recorded in 1494/5 when sheep were stolen from him in Harwood. He is recorded as ‘William Turnboll of Hassindene’ in a peculiar marriage contract of 1498. His 3 daughters and heirs, along with the 3 sisters and heirs of Alexander Hepburne of ‘Garrunnek’, were contracted, to John, Lord Drummond, Sir Duncan Forrester of ‘Skypymche’ and John Elphinstone of ‘Erth’; each of the 3 men to have rights over 2 of the heiresses and 1/3 of their lands. He appears to have been dead by 1501, when his father’s heirs are listed as being his sisters Margaret and Janet. Possibly the same William was on the panel for Elizabeth Cunningham inheriting the lands of Appletreehall and the eastern part of Hassendean in 1482. William (15th C.) recorded at the Justice- aire held in Selkirk in 1494/5. He and James Hall had remission for the premedidated crimes perpetrated upon Jack Brydon, with William Ker of Yair as surety. William of Minto (15th/16th C.) mentioned in the last will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme in 1491/2, when Robert Scott of Al lanhaugh and Walter (heir to Branxholme) were appointed as his ‘tutors’. This suggests he was still a minor at this point, and that his superior was Scott of Branxholme. He is probably the William of Minto who is recorded at the Justice- aire in 1498, apparently entering into a bond with Kers and others, that they would pursue men who were already declared as fugitives. He is listed among several men who were entered to the King at Stirling as caution for their crimes in 1499. This included the murder of John of Rutherford, for which he had remission, as well as the crime of ‘tressonable passing and remayneyng in Ingland’. He is recorded as ‘Wilzame Turnboll of Myntow’, along with 6 other Turnbulls (including Archibald, son of John), who could have been close relatives. In 1501 money was paid according to the Exchequer Rolls for his lands of Minto, which had been in the King’s hands for 17 years (suggesting that he had been a minor for that time). He had sasine for 2/3 of the land in...

1501 (with the other 1/3 being held by Alexander Stewart). At the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1502 he served as surety for George Young, resident of Minto, as well as for Robert Young, son-in-law of John Turnbull, and John Young, and was fined for their non-appearance. He was also surety for David Scott, ‘Lady’ (who had remission for raiding farms at Minto, among other crimes). Also in 1502 he was recorded at the Jedburgh Justice-aire as having stolen 120 sheep from George Rutherford at Longnewton (which were reset by Adam Scott in Highchesters). Additionally in 1502 he served as surety for David Scott called ‘Lady’, in Stichers, who had a remission for his part in several different raids, including burning and stealing from the tenants at Minto and also stealing livestock from Broadmeadows and from Haining. Furthermore, he was fined for failing to enter Walter Aitkin in the court and was surety for Thomas Young. And in 1506 Adam of Billerwell had remission for associating with him and his accomplices, the rebels Mark, Edward and Walter Turnbull. In 1506 he was on an inquest in Jedburgh for lands relating to the Lords Home. He was also in 1506 recorded as superior of the lands of Greenwood (i.e. Girnwood). In 1508 he was on the panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting the Lordship of Liddesdale. In 1510 he was a witness to an indenture between the Erskines and the Kerrs for lands in Synton. He may be the William of Minto who was the first in a long list of Turnbulls who had remission in 1516 for assisting the Homes against the King; George Turnbull ‘there’ is also listed, as well as John ‘in Mynto’ and another John ‘in Mynto’, cousin of William of Minto. He may be the same William of Minto who is recorded in 1522 being asked by James V to receive George Lord Home as tenant in his lands of Greenwood (probably Girnwood), with a precept of sasine following in 1525. In 1526 he was listed among the large number of Borderers who had remission for rising up against the Earl of Arran; he is there the first listed of several Turnbulls (and the ‘William Turnbull in Mynto’ also listed may be his son). And in 1527 he was among the local lairds given remission for mustering their supporters at Melrose (i.e. Skirmish Field) and Linlithgow. In 1528 he had a royal pardon for crimes of treason (presumably assisting the Laird of Braxholme at Skirmish Field), along with Scott of Howpasley, Scott of Allanhaugh and Scott of Hassendean; there he was described as ‘frankentenemartar of Mynto’ (i.e. freeholder). In 1531 he and his son and heir William gave the ‘non-entry’ of a piece of land called ‘Nukland’ (probably Nut Bank) to his brother-in-law Ralph Davidson, and also another piece of land called ‘Chames’. He may be the William who was listed among the bailies of the Sheriff of Roxburgh on the Precept of Chancery (probably in 1532) for William Scott of Hassendean retaining his properties. He was also listed among the Border Lairds who submitted themselves to James V to keep better order. Also that year he was fined for being responsible for certain Turnbulls from Rulewater, particularly a Turnbull of Catlee who had stolen horses and goods from Alexander ‘Bertilhmow’; he had to pay for the stolen goods or else the penalty would be to ‘byrne his house, expell and hald him furth of ye cuntre’. He was recorded in 1532/3 when his son and heir William sold the lands of Greenwood (probably Girnwood) and the Lyne in the Barony of Minto to Walter Scott of Braxholme. He may be the Willim ‘of Mynto’ who witnessed a document for a young William (son of John) in Selkirk in 1533. He may also be the William of Minto who witnessed a transaction in Selkirk for John Veitch of North Synton in 1535. He was succeeded by his son William, who was ‘fiar’ of Minto in the 1530s. William (15th/16th C.) tenant in Crumhaugh. At the Justice-aire in 1502 he was surety for Adam son of Walter in Stouslie, who failed to appear, and so he was fined. William (15th/16th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1502. Walter Aitkin in Minto was convicted of associating with him and Mark, while they were ‘at the horn’. His location is not given. William (15th/16th C.) tenant in Gatehousecote. He was recorded in 1502 among the men who were put to the horn for involvement in the murder of Robert Oliver; the person called to enter him was George of Hallrule, while Andrew and John in Gatehousecote were also mentioned and so surely related. William (15th/16th C.) tenant in Bonchester. He was recorded in 1502 among men who were put to the horn for involvement in the murder of Robert Oliver; the people called to enter him were George of Hallrule and John Rutherford of Hundalee. His son Laurence was also mentioned in the same case at the 1502 Justice-aire held in Jedburgh, as well as David in Bonchester. William (15th/16th C.) brother of Thomas, Laird of Bedrule. He was recorded in 1502, when he was listed among Turnbulls and others who failed to appear in court to answer to the charge of murdering Robert Oliver. His surety was Mark Ker of Dolphinton. He was distinct from William in Gatehousecote and William in Bonchester, who were also listed, but he may be the same as one of the other contemporary Williams. William (15th/16th C.) Abbot of Melrose 1503-07, as a rival to David Brown. The disputes of the time were resolved when he was transferred to become Abbot of Coupar in Angus, where he served until 1524. It is unclear how he was related to other Turnbulls. William (15th/16th C.) son and heir of Adam of Philiphaugh who was listed among the many men given remission in 1504 for any involvement in the death of Thomas Rutherford in Jedburgh Abbey. Also in 1504 he was recorded as son and heir of Adam of Philiphaugh when he had a sasine for the lands of Maxton Craig, as a procurator of Helen Rutherford, heiress of Rutherford of that Ilk. He is probably the William who had a sasine for ‘Barbourisland’ (part of Philiphaugh) in Selkirkshire in 1503. He may be the William recorded as witness to documents in Selkirk in 1527, 1530 and 1532, and owner of a tenement in 1530/1 and 1535, which he resigned in 1540. He could be the Burgess William recorded in Selkirk in 1542. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Williams. William (15th/16th C.) recorded as tenant ‘in Crag’ in 1516, when he had remission, along with several other Turnbulls, for their assistance given to Alexander, Lord Home. This was presumably Minto Craig. William (15th/16th C.) tenant of Hallrule, listed there along with Robert and Thomas in a 1516 pardon for a large number of Turnbulls for assisting the Homes against the King. William (16th C.) tenant of Rulewood recorded in the 1516 pardon for Turnbulls who may have assisted Alexander, Lord Home. He is also listed as ‘in Rowlewod’ on the pardon granted in 1526 to a large number of Scots, Turnbulls and other Borderers who had assisted the Homes in attacking the Earl of Arran. He is also recorded as ‘in Rowlewod’ when part of a panel deciding on disputed lands, held in Jedburgh in 1533. He was probably the tenant of John Gourlay of Rulewood, and possibly related to the later William of Rulewood. William (16th C.) recorded in Selkirk in 1533 as son and heir of the deceased John. He appointed Robert Stewart of Minto ‘as his master’ and promised to be ‘in kindly service’ to him. Stewart also promised to honour an old reversion from Thomas of Raffat to an earlier William (perhaps grandfather of this William), so that those lands would go to him or failing that to his brothers. William of Minto was one of the witnesses. Perhaps the same William witnessed a document in Selkirk in 1539. William of Hassendeanbank (16th C.) recorded in 1550 in a bond of obligation with Thomas Turnbull of Bothwell. He may be the William in Hassendeanbank who is recorded in a contract with John Gourlay of Rulewood in 1540 (probably not 1640, as recorded). Probably the same William had a sasine for a piece of land at Hassendeanbank in 1536 and sasine for a ‘merk land’ in Hassendean called Cockerheugh in 1556; this William’s son and heir was Thomas, who inherited Cockerheugh in 1622 (or perhaps there was another William between). He may be the ‘William Trumbill of Hassindane Kirk’ listed as one of the pledges for the Laird of Bedrule in 1553/4. It seems likely he was related to the Turnbulls of Knowe and he was probably related to John of Hassendeanbank who is recorded in 1564. It is possible he was the William who was son to Thomas and Margaret Scott, recorded in a charter for lands in Darnick in 1571, confirmed in 1616. William ‘Proffit’ (16th C.) part of the panel for trying John Gledstaines of Cocklaw with murder in 1561. It seems likely that he was relatively local. William of Minto (16th C.) son of William of Minto. He may be the ‘William Turnbull in Mynuto’ listed along with William of Minto and many other Borders men in a 1526 pardon for acting against the Earl of Arran; David ‘there’ is listed afterwards, and hence perhaps his brother. He was recorded in 1532/3 as son and heir of William when he sold the lands of Greenwood (probably Girnwood) and the Lyne in the Barony of Minto to Walter Scott of Branxholme. He was described as ‘fiar of Mynuto’ in 1533 when he was part of an inquest held at Jedburgh into the ownership of lands at Longnewton. In 1545 he was among lairds in Teviotdale who signed a bond to settle feuds. It seems likely he was the deceased Laird of Minto mentioned in 1548 when Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme was given ward of his lands until such time as his heir became of age. His heir (possibly the John recorded from the 1590s) was presumably the Turnbull of Minto who was recorded as superior of the lands of Greenwood (i.e. Girnwood) in 1551 and for whom Hector Turnbull was recorded as ‘tutor’ in 1553/4. William ‘Will’ (16th C.) tenant of Sir Walter Scott of Howpasley in the lands of Outersideig in 1569. Sir Walter acted as cautioner for his tenants at a meeting in Hawick, assuring that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. William (16th C.) Burgess of Edinburgh. In 1565/6 he brought a case against Robert Kerr of Woodhead, over his lands of Over Ancrum. Probably the same William, Burgess of Edinburgh, was obliged in 1572/3 to remove himself from that city, on the orders of the Regent; Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule was his surety, and hence he was probably related. William (16th C.) recorded as Burgess of Selkirk when he stood as caution for someone in 1579. He also witnessed other transactions about the same time. In 1580/1 he was cautioner in Selkirk for John Scott in Darnick and witness for another transaction for him in 1581. He witnessed additional agreements in Selkirk in 1581. In 1581/2 he and George in Philiphaugh witnessed an agreement between the widow (Isabel Douglas) and son (Mark) of the deceased John in Philiphaugh (suggesting that the may have been related). He also witnessed a transaction in Selkirk in 1582. William (16th C.) tenant in Bonchester. In 1581 he was declared a rebel for failing to appear to answer to the charge that he stole a horse from Archie Elliot of the Hill. William (16th C.) described as a wright and Burgess of Jedburgh. He was tenant of Spittal-on-Rule from 1586. William (c.1541–c.75) eldest son of Sir Thomas of Bedrule. He had a charter granting him Bedrule in 1570/1, but probably predeceased his father. In 1573 he was recorded as ‘sone and apparend air’ of Sir Thomas, when they were listed among the men from the Jedburgh area accused by Robert Kerr of Woodhead of raiding his house and farm; however, the group claimed they did it because Kerr had reset the fugitive Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst and were acquitted. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir John Home of Cowdenknowes. He appears to have been deceased by 1576 when his brother Walter was described as son and heir of Sir Thomas. He was deceased by 1584 when the Privy Council let her uncle Alexander Home continue to have the right of choosing the husband of his daughter (and perhaps only child) Margaret, rather than yield to the claim of another uncle, Sir James Home of Cowdenknowes. In fact Margaret eventually married Robert French, Laird of Thornydykes and Abbotrule, but died in 1593. William of Barnhills (16th C.) recorded in 1571/2 when he signed a bond to act against Borders thieves. In 1573 he was among the men from the Jedburgh area accused by Robert Kerr of Woodhead of raiding his house and farm; however, the group claimed they did it because Kerr had reset the fugitive Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst and were acquitted. In 1576 he was listed along with Sir Thomas, Walter (son of Sir Thomas) and Mungo Bennet in Chesters, in a dispute with William Ker, younger of Cessford, over lands in Nether Ancrum. He was also listed in 1576 as joint cautioner, along with Sir Thomas of Bedrule, for Hector, David, George and John, sons of Adam in Belses. Additionally in 1576 he was recorded among a group of Turnbulls and others (from Hallrule, Billerwell, Belses and Chesters) who has a bond with another group of Turnbulls (from Minto, Bellow, Kames and Trowe) and others, not to harm each other; he was one of the cautioners for John Turnbull of Howden and others. In 1578/9 he was among 22 Border Lairds who did not appear before the Privy Council when summoned. He was then found liable for the fines imposed. He was also listed in 1580 along with Sir Thomas of Bedrule, Thomas’ son Walter and Edward Lorraine, younger of Harwood, in a bond to keep the peace with the Turnbulls of Minto; he signed with ‘my hand at the pen’, meaning he was unable to write. In 1581 he was among a large group denounced as rebels for failing to present men to answer their rieving crimes. He may be the ‘[blank] Trumbill of Barnehills’ whose brother is recorded as witness in Selkirk to 2 transactions in 1581/2 (one along with James in Selkirk, who may have been related and another along with Mark, heir of Howden); he is explicitly named in another transaction in 1581/2. He was listed among the Borderers who were summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1584/5. His brothers Robert, Gavin and Hector, and uncle Andrew of Barnhills were also listed. He is also recorded on Monipennie’s c.1597 (but drawn up earlier) list of Lairds in the Borders. William ‘Will the Lad’ (16th C.) recorded among Scotsmen accused in 1590 of being involved in a raid on farm across the Border in 1588. He is cited along with David Laidlaw of Antroch and Adie Laidlaw ‘Great Legs’. William (d.1600) son of Walter of Rawflat. In 1603 George Turnbull of Belses was denounced as a rebel for a long list of crimes, including his murder, and although acquitted of the new charges, he was later executed for similar crimes. This may point to some sort of feud among the Turnbulls of the Lilliesleaf area about that time. William of Knowe (16th/17th C.) one of a group of about 30 Turnbulls who were involved in a skirmish in Jedburgh in 1601, part of an ongoing feud with the Kers. He was also referred to as being ‘in Tounheid’. In the skirmish 4 men were left dead and many were wounded, including himself being shot ‘in the wambe, be the schot of ane pistolet with twa bulletis’. It is unclear how he was related to the later Turnbuls of Knowe. He is probably the William ‘in Munto-tounheid’ recorded in 1610 when a commission was appointed to apprehend him and 7 other Turnbuls (plus 2 Davidsouns) for not having found caution following being found guilty for the murder of Thomas Ker of Crailinghall and 6 Grahamslaw brothers. William of Bedrule (c.1580–c.1625) son of Walter. He was probably the William whose letter of 1602 to Thomas Ker of Cavers (his father-in-law and presumably his superior) still exists, detailing how he took over possesion of Fulton, and listing the tenants there. In 1612 he was William of Bedrule, who, along with William of Hawthorns, were complained about to the Privy Council by William (perhaps a distant relative), merchant in Edinburgh, for not paying him. He is probably the William ‘fear of Bedrule’ who witnessed the marriage of the daughter of William of Templehall (probably his brother) in 1614. He may have been the ‘fear of Bedreull’ whose son Thomas witnessed a bond for Walter of Bedrule in 1618 (however, these men could also be his uncle, son of Sir Thomas, and brother of Walter). In 1619 he was ‘fear of Bedreull’ when his father Walter had a bond for him with George Ker, heir of Cavers Carre, for not ‘finding caution of lawburrows to him’. He probably only succeeded his father Walter in about 1620, and although he was still called ‘Laird of Bedrule’, he lost most of his family’s hereditary possessions. He gave caution for David Turnbull of Jedburgh at the Commissioners’ Court of 1623, and probably died shortly afterwards. He married a daughter of Thomas Ker of Cavers and was succeeded by his son Thomas. He may have been the William whose only daughter Margaret married Robert French of Throndykes and Abbotrule; however, the dates do not work out, since she died in 1593, and her mother was supposed to be Margaret, daughter of Sir John Home of Cowdenknowes. William (16th/17th C.) brother of Robert of Bewlie, who was killed in Jedburgh in 1601. He also had brothers Mark and Andrew. In 1603 he was appointed as tutor to his nephew Andrew, who was served heir to Robert in 1607. William ‘Willie’ (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘Wille Turnbull, callit the guidman’ in a letter listing the tenants of the lands of Fulton in 1602. William (16th/17th C.) recorded as William ‘called of Beulie’ in 1610. He was named among 8 Turnbuls and 2 Davidsouns when a commission was appointed by the Privy Council to apprehend them for failing to find caution following being found guilty of the murder of Thomas Ker of Crailinghall and 6 Grahamslaw brothers; his brother Mark was also listed. He could be the same as one of the contemporary Williams. William of Hawthorns (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1612 along with William of Bedrule when there was a complaint to the Privy Council by William (perhaps a distant relative), merchant in Edinburgh, for not paying him. It is unclear how he was related to other Turnbuls. William ‘Will’ of Braidhaugh (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1601 among a group of Turnbuls and Lorraines accused by Englishman Gray of Morpeth of stealing from him. John ‘of Brodehaugh’ is also listed and so presumably his father or brother. He is also described as ‘in Braidhawche’ in 1605 when he was pledged to appear at court in Edinburgh. In 1606 James, son of Edward Lorraine of Harwood was declared a fugitive for resisting a messenger that came to apprehend him, after he had been declared a fugitive for theft and slaughter. William Turnbull of Braidhaugh. He was recorded in 1611 when Robert Home of ‘Carrolsyd’ was cautioner for him in Jedburgh Court; however, he was acquitted. His son James was found not guilty of stealing sheep from ‘Hairrlesyd’ (probably Earlside) in 1622. In 1622 Robert Kerr of Cavers complained that he had acted to resist the apprehension of his son James (who had been declared fit for military duty), and hence should be held in Edinburgh Tolbooth until James was produced. Also in 1627 he paid caution to the Privy Council, promising that he and his son James would satisfy the minister and session of Abbotrule Kirk ‘for the insolence committit be him at the said kirk upoun Sonday the tyme Divine service’. William (16th/17th C.) tenant in Crosscleuch in Bedrule Parish, along with John. With several other Turnbuls, he was accused by the Laird of Traquair of cutting down and removing wood from his lands at Huntliehill in 1619. They were denounced as rebels for failing to appear. William of Tour (16th/17th C.) cautioner for Adam Turnbull in a bond he had with John, son of Walter Scott of Chamberlain Newton in 1619 (registered in 1624). In 1622 he was ‘in Tour’ when he sat on the assize at the Justice Court held in Jedburgh. He is also recorded in 1622 as ‘of the Tour of Roulwode’ (i.e. Rulewood) when he had a ‘letter of apprising’ against John Elphinston of Henderstoun (in Peebleshire) for non-payment of several bonds. He thereby obtained the Barony of Henderstoun and half of the lands of Glen.sax, but sold them in 1628. He was probably son of James 'of the Toure', recorded in 1579/80. William (16th/17th C.) served heir to his father John in Philiphaugh in 1606, inheriting the 5 acres there called 'Barbourisland'. He is probably the William in Philiphaugh who was attacked by William Elliot (formerly Laird of Horsleyhill) in 1619, with Elliot attempting to stab him with a 'whinger' after he had loaned a plough to Sarah Lough in Selkirk, to till a piece of land that Elliot wanted for himself. Probably the same William was recorded as 'portionar of Phillophauch' when he was on the assize at the Commissioners' Court in 1623. William (16th/17th C.) son and heir of James of West Lees in Hobkirk Parish. He was mentioned along with his father in 1617 in a bond with James Haswell, surgeon of Jedburgh. He was owner of West Lees in 1643, when it was valued at £66 13s 4d. William (d.bef. 1647) recorded as being of 'Weddellis-wallis' in 1647, when his son Thomas of Tofts was served heir to his 5 husbandlands in Minto. It is unclear where 'Weddellis-wallis' might have been or if he was the same as one of the contemporary Williams. He may have been the Laird of Tofts whose death before 1643 meant that the family lands in Kirkton and Abbotrule Parishes were just ascribed to 'Laird of Tofts Turnbull', with no forename. Also in 1643 there were £102 of lands in Minto owned by 'Turnbull of Tofts'. Given that most of the rest of Minto was owned by the Turnbulls of Minto, it is possible that he was related to them. William of Barnhills (17th C.) brother of John of Barnhills who succeeded to the lands in 1628 and immediately sold them to William Bennet. William (17th C.) described as 'mason in Newton' in 1642, when, along with his brother Thomas and several other people, he was accused by Douglas of Cavers' servant of stealing his wallet in Hawick. He gave evidence, saying that he never saw the wallet. William of Langraw (17th C.) signed the 'Confessions of Faith' in Hawick in 1638. He was 'in Langraw' in 1628 when served heir to his brother John of Barnhills. In 1643 he was recorded as owner of lands valued at £104. He may have been father of the William of Langraw recorded in the late 1600s. Rev. William (c.1606-c.67) son of Thomas of Minto, he had 3 other brothers who were also ministers. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1626 and became minister of Makerstoun in 1635, continuing there until his death. In 1632 he feued lands in Raperlaw from Thomas Hamilton, Lord Binning. When his brother John of Minto died, he helped arrange for his nephew John to marry (Elizabeth Elliott of Stobs), even although he was under age. He probably acted as legal guardian for this nephew, and continued to have some rights over his estates later. He was recorded as owner of Hornshole in 1643, with John (probably his nephew, or just an error in the name) holding them in his stead. Also in 1643 he is probably the 'Mr. William Turnbull' who was listed as owner of most of Minto (along with John, his nephew, and Elizabeth Elliot). He may be the William listed in the 1643 county valuation, with his lands in Raperlaw being valued at £104. He may be the William of Minto, listed along with John in James Wilson's list of local landowners of the mid-to-late 17th century. He was a member of the Assembly in 1645. In 1657 he gave his consent to a 'wadset' between John of Minto (his nephew) and John Scott of Brieryyards for the lands of Hornshole. He is probably the 'Mr William Turnbull' recorded in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls for Hornshole, as well as in Lilliesleaf Parish. His son William became minister of Eckford, and is recorded giving his permission to a dispotion of 1671 relating to Hornshole. William of Bedrule (d.c.1667) perhaps son of Thomas and grandson of the William who died about 40 years earlier. He is recorded in the 1643 valuation of the county, as owner of half of the Mains of Bedrule, valued at £130, and Bedrule Mill, valued at £200. In 1668 his son Thomas was served as his heir in the lands and Barony of Bedrule. This Thomas would be the last Turnbull Laird of Bedrule. William (17th C.) recorded in 1643 as owner of land in Abbotrule valued at £44. This was probably part of Bonchester Townhead, where 2 Adams and a William also held lands. William (17th C.) married Janet Hobkirk in Ashkirk Parish in 1645. William of Bonchester (1624/5–86) recorded on a tombstone in Abbotrule Kirkyard along with his son Adam (tenant of Doorpool) and Adam's wife. He may have been son of Thomas of Upper Bonchester. He was probably succeeded in Upper Bonchester by his son George. Bonchester Turnbulls also later tenanted Wolfelee Mill, Hartshaugh Mill, Harwood Mill and Hallrule Mill. It was said that the Turnbulls who farmed Doorpool were descended from the Turnbulls of Bedrule. William (17th C.) son of Thomas of Knowe, he is recorded in a discharge of 1658 in which he was 'tutor' for Thomas Turnbull of Standhill. He was probably brother of John of Knowe, and it is also possible that Thomas of Standhill was another brother, in which case he was also tutor to the children.
(Thomas, William, Helen, Joan and Margaret) of the same Thomas 'of Chesterhouse' in 1664 when his lands were resigned to their superior Sir Walter Riddell. William (17th C.) tenant in Newmill on Slitrig. In 1666 James Chisholme was accused of fighting with him in St. Mary’s Kirk. He pulled on Chisholme’s bonnet when he was asleep in church, and after Chisholme fell off his seat he struck at him, whereupon Chisholme pulled out a knife and cut his leg. The corn mill where he was miller was listed as ‘the Newemilne of Slitrig’. William (17th C.) elected town piper in 1674. He was ‘directed at even and morn and other solemn occasions, to go through the town with the drum’. This suggested that he was Burgh Officer, with duties including both pipes and drums. His salary was £13, 6s, 8d Scots. If he was not the same man as the piper recorded in 1702, then they were surely related. William (17th C.) brother of Walter, Laird of Beowie. He is recorded on a 1684 list of men declared fugitives for religious non-conformity. They were probably arrested in 1678 and condemned to be sold as slaves to the plantations. Whether he was among the men who escaped from their ship in London and returned to Scotland, is unknown. William (d.c.1682) listed in Hawthornside when his will was recorded in 1682. He was surely related to Robert, whose will was also recorded on the same day, as well as Adam who was recorded there in 1688. William (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish (or the part corresponding to Hassendean). He married Margaret Scott and their children included: Janet (b.1680); Robert (b.1683); Janet (again, b.1685); and George (b.1687). The witnesses in 1683 were Thomas Robson and John Brown and in 1687 were William Rodger and John Turnbull (who may have been related). He is probably the William who (in turn) witnessed a baptism for Thomas Robson and Isobel Turnbull (probably related to him) in 1684. He may also be the William who witnessed a baptism for Andrew Leyden in 1681. He may be one of the 2 Williams who witnessed a baptism for William Rodger in 1687. William (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, probably in the Hassendean area. He married Christian Oliver in Robertson in 1683 and their children included: Margaret (b.1686); and Agnes (b.1688). The witnesses in 1686 were Thomas Brown and Robert Turnbull (probably a relative) and in 1688 were James Redford and Richard Turnbull. William (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish who married Margaret Clerk in 1685. William (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, when it contained Hassendean. He married Margaret Hislop and their children included: Bessie (b.1686). The witnesses were Michael and Thomas, who were probably relatives. William (17th C.) merchant in Hawick. He is on a 1684 list of men declared as a fugitive for frequenting conventicles. If he was later exonerated then he could be the merchant listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. William of Langraw (17th/18th C.) probably the Turnbull of Langraw who paid the land tax in Hobkirk Parish in 1678. He is recorded in 1693 when he witnessed a bond between Gilbert Eliott of Stanedge and Sir John Pringle of Stichill. His eldest son William was also a witness. He was also ‘of Langraw’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, when he was taxed for having 2 hearths. He was a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1695. He was also Provost of Jedburgh. He was the last Turnbull of Langraw, his heirs selling off the lands in 1801. William (17th/18th C.) recorded at ‘fioulton’ (i.e. Fulton) in 1690 when listed among people owing money to the deceased Mark Turnbull (portioner of Fodderlee) and Bessie Kerr. William (17th C.) listed as a resident of Effledge on the 1694 Hearth Tax roll. William (17th C.) resident of Cavers who was listed in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (17th C.) listed as cottar at Ruthetown on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (17th C.) tenant in Westwood in Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to the earlier Lairds of Westwood. William (17th C.) resident of Gatehousecote according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (17th C.) tenant in Bonchester in Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to the earlier William of Bonchester. William (17th C.) listed in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls right after William in Bonchester. He is listed as ‘in ye midle of ye town’, this presumably meaning Bonchester. His son George is listed after him. William (17th C.) resident at Midshiels according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Probably the same William was gardner in Midshiels when his daughter Janet was baptised in Wilton in 1711. He may be the William who married Jean Scott in Wilton in 1708. William (17th C.) resident at Hassendeanbank according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to Richard, who was also listed there. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at Galalaw in 1697 when his son Thomas was baptised. The

Will- in Cavers Parish in 1708. It is unclear if he was tenant in Crook. His son Andrew was baptised Kirkton Parish in 1708. William (b.1715). William of Tofts (17th/18th C.) son of Thomas of Tofts. He was served heir to his father in 1695, in the lands of ‘Over et Nether Tofts’ in the Barony of Hawick and Regality of Drumlan- rig. He is listed as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1698 and 1704. He was probably Laird of Tofts in 1694 when ‘Tafts his houz’ was taxed for having 2 hearths there. His children baptised in Kirkton Parish included: Thomas (b.1708); Ann (b.1709); Euphan (b.1712); and William (b.1715). William (17th/18th C.) tenant in Cavers Parish in 1708. It is unclear if he was related to the earlier Douglasses of Crook. William (17th/18th C.) tenant in Bedrule Mill whose son James was buried in Bedrule churchyard in 1711, aged 32. He must have been a descendant of the Turnbulls of Bedrule, and was probably a son of Thomas and brother of Andrew (the last Laird of Bedrule). He is probably one of the 3 men of that name listed in the Hearth Tax records for Bedrule Parish in 1694. He is probably the William ‘in Bedroull’ whose wife Helen Scott’s will is recorded in 1685. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Ballantyne and their children included: Jean (b.1704); Rachel (b.1714); and Robert (b.1717). William (17th/18th C.) cooper of Hawick Parish. In 1712 his daughter Janet was baptised in Hawick, having been born in ‘fornic- cat’; with Elspeth Stoddart. The witnesses were James Falsyde and ‘Mr’ Thomas Falsyde. William (17th/18th C.) merchant in Bedrule. His son Robert was buried in Bedrule kirkyard in 1722, aged 2. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Turnbulls of the area. He may have been the William whose son James was born at Bedrule Mill in 1709, and claimed de- scent from the Turnbulls of Bedrule. William (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1719 he was described as ‘weaver without ye westport’ when he married Margaret, daughter of the de- ceased Gideon Gardner. Their children included: Margaret (b.1720); and Gideon (b.1724); Adam (b.1727); Isobel (b.1732); Isobel (again, b.1735); and John (b.1743). The witnesses in 1724 were weaver Adam Brown and mason John Common. He was probably the weaver who witnessed a baptism for Thomas Waddell in 1725. William (17th/18th C.) tenant of Hassendeanbank. In 1723 his daughter Bessie married Andrew, son of Thomas Irving in Westerhouses. His son Adam took over the farm. William (17th/18th C.) son of Richard, he lived at Minto. He got married in 1718, as recorded in Wilton and Minto Parishes (but with no wife’s name listed). William of Wester Swanshill (d.1731) successor to James, who was probably his father or brother. He was succeeded by his son Hector and was buried in Hobkirk. William (18th C.) shepherd in Over Southfield. He is recorded there in 1725 when he witnessed a baptism for wright Walter Dal- gleish in Alton Croft. He married Jean Byers and their children included Katherine (b.1725) and Ann (b.1729). The witnesses in 1725 were Walter Dalglish (whose own child’s baptism he witnessed on the same day) and Robert Grieve (probably in Fenwick). William (18th C.) mason in Cavers. In 1726 his twins Hugh and Isobel were baptised. There are several other children baptised in Cavers Parish at about the same time who could be his. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, recorded at Midshiels in 1733. He married Grissel Elizabeth Morton (or perhaps Martin) in Minto, apprently in 1736 (but that Their daughter Grissel was baptised in 1733, with witnesses James Thomson and Andrew Stewart. He could be the William who in 1729 witnessed a baptism for Richard, resident of Midshields. Rev. William (1703–64) son of George, minister of Tynningham (or another account says son of Adam of Doorpool and Margaret Turnbull). It was claimed (in a history of the Scotts of Bonchester written in 1834) that he was a direct descendant of the Turnbulls of Bedrule, but that there was no documentable proof of this. He was licensed by Jedburgh Presbytery in 1729 and became minister of Abbotrule in 1730, where he remained until his death. He paid window tax at 'the mance' in Abbotrule Parish in 1748 and 1753. He died unmarried. His sister Helen, married Walter Scott of Bonchester. William (1708–64) son of Andrew and Jean Scott, was born in Minto Parish. His father was tenant at Minto Cleuchhead, and sometimes described as the last Turnbull Laird of Bedrule. He became tenant at Ancrum Woodhead. He married and had children, including Andrew and Thomas, who died young. He is buried in Bedrule kirkyard. William 'Will' (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Rae in 1730. Their daughter Janet was baptised in 1730, with witnesses John Langlands and John Scott. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, recorded as 'Broadlees' in 1735. It is unclear if this is the farm in Ashkirk Parish or the one in Roberton Parish. He married Margaret Shiel and their daughter Beatrix was baptised in 1735 with witnesses Robert Scott and James Dryden. William (18th C.) servant of Robert Buckham of West Lees in Hobkirk Parish. His daughter Agnes was baptised in 1738. William (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1743 he witnessed a baptism for workman Thomas Oliver. Perhaps the same William was 'junior w...' in 1742 when he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker John Brown. He may be the weaver who witnessed a baptism for carrier Walter Scott in 1747. He was probably related to the earlier weaver of the same name. William of Langraw (d.1787) last Turnbull Laird of Langraw. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He was appointed as one of the trustees for Thomas Scott of Nether Bonchester when he got into financial difficulties; the trustees sold off that farm in 1779. In 1786 he let the lands of Langraw to George and Walter Barry for 15 years, but died before the lease was up. He was succeeded by his closest relative, Mrs. Janet Rutherford, who had married Mr. Easton, an American settler, who sold the farm. He is listed in the 1788 county valuation as owner of Langraw (valued at £104), as well as 'Sheil's lands, and Boston's half of Kirk-know, exclusive of that part belonging to Mr Elliot of Woollie' (valued at £68 5s). His through-stone was on Cowdie's Knowe by Hobkirk Kirkyard. William (18th C.) glazier in Hawick, probably one of the first men of that occupation on record. In 1765 he (along with Andrew, senior) witnessed a baptism for James Clerk. His wife was Isobel Turnbull and their children included: Thomas (b.1758); Margaret (b.1759); Andrew (b.1761); Martha (b.1763); Walter (b.1765); and Isobel (b.1767). The witnesses to the 1758 baptism were Bailie Thomas and mason Andrew, senior (who were surely related to him or his wife) and in 1765 were Bailie (probably Thomas) Turnbull, senior, and Andrew Turnbull, senior. Dr. William (c.1729–96) born in Hawick, from the family of Turnbull of Bedrule, who were dissenters. He was educated in Hawick and at Edinburgh University (where he obtained his M.D.) and then at Glasgow. He settled in Wooler around 1752, where he was known for his care of the poor, and had patients sent to him from as far away as Edinburgh. He became Physician at the Bamburgh Infirmary. In 1777 he moved to London, where he lived at Well Close Square in Whitechapel and was a physician with the Eastern Medical Dispensary. While in Wooler he contributed medical articles to the 'Ladies' Magazine' and the 'Scots' Magazine' and also acted as medical editor for 'Middleton's Universal Magazine'. These included discussions of croup and diseases of women and children. He wrote medical articles for the 'New and Complete Dictionary of Arts and Sciences' (1778). He was preparing the publication of a practical system of medicine when he suffered a short and severe illness and died in London. His wife's name is unknown, but her first name may have been Ann. Their children included: an eldest son, who died in the prime of life (possibly John Strother, b.1754); William, who became a surgeon with the Eastern Medical Dispensary and may be the same as the ex-naval doctor who wrote 'The Naval Surgeon' (1806); and a married daughter, possibly Anne. His son William posthumously published the first volume of 'The Medical Works Containing a Popular Treatise on Health and the Means of Preserving it' (1805). There is a portrait of him in the form of an engraving. William of Tofts (18th C.) paid the window tax at 'Toftshouse' in Kirkton Parish in 1748. He is listed among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761. He was also recorded in an account of Lady Cavers in 1769. He was probably tenant farmer at Tofts in Kirkton Parish, and may have been related to the later James. He could be the ‘Toftes Son Will’ who was baptised in Kirkton Parish in 1715. William (18th C.) resident at Damside in 1751 and 1759. He married Agnes Robson in 1749 and their children included: Christian (b.1751); Robert (b.1752); George (b.1754); Euphan (b.1756); John (b.1758); Euphan (again, b.1759); and Agnes (b.1763). The witnesses in 1751 were John and Robert Scott and in 1759 were Thomas Scott and John Anderson (probably a relation). William (18th C.) mason in Hawick Parish. He married Mary Richardson and their daughter Isabel was baptised in 1757, with the whole congregation as witnesses. He may be the William who witnessed a baptism for mason William Ekron in 1757. William (18th C.) Town Piper, recorded in Selkirk in 1758. William ‘Forfar’ (d.1815) tailor in Hawick. He owned property at 66 High Street, as well as the buildings behind No. 66 and 68. These were bequeathed to a relative, stockingmaker Walter Murray, and later known as Murray Place. His death is recorded in Hawick, along with his nickname, whose meaning is unclear. William (1739/40–1820) tenant in Minto Townhead. His son Archibald died in 1832 and they are buried in Bedrule kirkyard, adjacent to the families of Andrew (tenant in Minto Cleuchhead) and William (tenant in Woodhead), who are probably closely related. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Ann Park, and their son Andrew was baptised in 1772. The witnesses were James Waugh and William Riddell. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Bruce and their son Robert was baptised in 1774. The witnesses were Andrew ‘Birinet’ and Alexander Bunyan. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Mary Swan, who died in 1778. William of Burnfoot (1745–1825), son of Thomas of Burnfoot (and sometimes called ‘of Minto’), he was born in Minto Parish. He ran the farms of Burnfoot and West Buccleuch and also managed the properties of Wilton Lodge and Tofts. He also spent a few years as joint tenant (with Charles Scott of Wauchope) of Mervinslaw; they are recorded as such on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He is recorded at Burnfoot on the Horse Tax Rolls from 1785–86 and in 1788–94. He was recorded as being ‘in Burnfoot’ in 1788 on a list of voters within Roxburghshire. He is recorded at Burnfoot on the 1797 Dog Tax Rolls. He was a successful breeder of short-horn cattle before that was common. He was first President of the old Hawick Farmers’ Club, perhaps the first club of its kind in Scotland. An oil portrait of him was painted by John Watson-Gordon in 1821, at the expense of the Hawick Farmers’ Club, and once hung in the Tower Inn where the Club met; it was returned to the family in 1869. He leased the limestone quarry at ‘Slitrighead’ from Elliot of Harwood. He also carried out some money-lending, like his father before him. He is probably the William who was paid ‘for leading wood’ to help repair fences and for ‘banking the water’ of the Teviot at Hawick in 1785. In 1789 he and Robert Dickson were arbitrers for judging the value of a boundary dyke near Hawick. In 1797 he is recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls at Burnfoot, with 4 work horses and 10 other horses. He married Eleanor (or Helen) Stephenson (of Kethorn, Durham) in Hawick in 1782 and she died in 1840, aged 84. Their children were: Elizabeth (1783–1831), who married John Renwick in 1814; Thomas Scott (1784–1867), who farmed at East Middle; Eleanor (1785–1853), who lived at 5 Slitrig Crescent with her sister Jane and died unmarried; Michael (1787–1849), who emigrated to Canada and died at Woodside, Brantford; Agnes (1788–1836), who also died unmarried in Hawick; William Ogilvie (b.1790), who died in infancy; Jean or Jane (1792–1866), who also died unmarried in Hawick; William (b.1794), who became a doctor; and John (1796–1875), who farmed at Burnfoot and West Buccleuch. They are mainly buried at Bedrule cemetery. William (18th C.) servant on the Cavers estate. He is listed as a gardener in 1778 and coachman in 1779. He could be the William recorded at East Mains in 1782 and married to Magdalen Dryden, when their daughter Margaret was baptised in Cavers Parish. Several other children baptised in caves at around the same time could be his, e.g. William (b.1784). William (18th C.) tenant at Branxholme Town and Castlehill farms, where he was replaced by James Grieve in about 1792. William (1761/2–1842) 2nd son of Thomas, and grandson of Adam of Denesyde. He was the first of the family to return to the local area, after his grandfather had been driven away, partly for being a Jacobite supporter. He farmed near Camptown, then at Grange on the Abbotrule estate, where he was joined by his brother Adam. He married Agnes Pott, who died in 1841, aged 80. Their children included: Mary, who was born in

Turnbull

William (1787–1846) 3rd son of James and Betty Adamson and brother of Wilton Schoolmaster James. He was born at Hoddleswoodie, Bunchester. In 1821 he became master of Hobkirk School, and served there until a few weeks before his death. He was very fond of books and collected a small library at the school. He is probably the William listed at Hobkirk among subscribers to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. He is recorded as Schoolmaster at Hobkirk in Pigot’s 1837 directory and on the 1841 census. He is buried in Hobkirk Kirkyard. William (1794–1870) 3rd son of Adam and Betty Scott, he was born in Minto Parish. He farmed at Merrylaw and Falnash. He was left the lease of Hassendeanbank when his father died in 1810. He also took on the lease of Skelfhill, which had been in his mother’s side of the family. He was recorded at Falnash in 1841, 1851 and 1861. In 1851 he is listed as farmer of 4500 acres, employing 17 labourers. He is probably the William of Merrylaw who acted as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. He is probably also the William of Hassendean who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. He married Margaret Scott (1810–45, who was probably born at Todshawhaugh). Their children included: Robert Laidlaw (1833–70), who died in New South Wales; James (1836–88), who died in Melrose; Thomas Scott (1837–77), who died in Adelaide; and Gideon Pott (b.1840). He secondly married Elizabeth Elliot, probably daughter of John Elliot of Binks. William ‘Wull the Bellman’ (c.1785–1859) Burgh Officer and bellman in roughly the 1820s to early 50s, being Halberdier along with ‘Tufty’ Wilson. He was born in Melrose. He lived in a house at the end of a close beside the old Town Hall, depicted in ‘An Old Hawick Close’. It is labelled ‘Mr. Turnbull’ on Wood’s 1824 map, and would be at about No. 36. In 1841 he was living on the High Street with his wife Agnes and children Mary, Isabel and William. In 1851 he was at about 36 High Street and still listed as Town Officer. He was listed as ‘bellman, High Street’ in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1861 his widow Agnes was a lodging house keeper at 36 High Street. William (b.1785/6) originally from Southdean, he was a weaver in Hawick. He married Margaret Ogilvie, who may have been related to the family of Thomas Ogilvie & Sons, woollen merchants in Aberdeen. In 1841 he was on Brougham Place and listed at No. 4 there in 1851, when he was a widower. His children included: George (b.1819), cashier with Nixon's; Joseph (b.c.1826); John Struthers (b.1829), who was a bank accountant; and Mary (b.c.1832). William (b.1794) 4th son of William of Burnfoot and Eleanor Stephen, he was born in Wilton Parish. He trained as a doctor and became Senior Physician of Huddersfield Infirmary (where his portrait hangs). His choice of location was probably influenced by the connections with his father's wool sales. One of his sons was Vicar of Penniston in Yorkshire and Canon of Wakefield Cathedral. He died in Huddersfield. William of Menslaws (1794/5–1886) Accountant at the Royal Bank of Scotland in Edinburgh. He could be the William, merchant in Edinburgh who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. William (b.1799/1800) born in Wilton Parish, he was a tobacco manufacturer and grocer on the Howegate. In Pigot’s 1825/6 directory William (18th/19th C.) hosier manufacturer on Backdamgate, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1836 he was assigned the tack of the Waulk Mill in Selkirk. It is unclear if he is the same as one of the other contemporary Williams. William of Menslaws (1794/5–1886) Accountant at the Royal Bank of Scotland in Edinburgh. He could be the William, merchant in Edinburgh who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. William (b.1799/1800) born in Wilton Parish, he was a tobacco manufacturer and grocer on the Howegate. In Pigot’s 1825/6 directory his partnership is listed as ‘Irvine & Turnbull’, although it is unclear who the Irvine was. In the 1837 directory he was listed as a tobacconist himself on the Howegate, and is probably also the same man listed as a grocer and ‘virtual dealer’ there. He was also listed as a Howegate tobacconist and grocer in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Jessie. In 1841 and 1851 he was a widower living at about No. 3 Howegate with his 4 children: John (b.1828), a baker; Andrew (b.1830), millwright; Margaret (b.1832); and William (b.1835). William (19th C.) farmer at Minto Townhead in the 1860s. He is surely related to the earlier farmer of the same place with the same name. William (b.c.1810) draper who was living at about 10 Slitrig Crescent on the 1841 census. His wife was Jean. William (b.1816/7) wood merchant on Havelock Street. In 1861 he is recorded employing 3 men, and was at about No. 12. His wife was Isabella and their children included William, Agnes, George and Isabella. William (b.1817/8) from Edinburgh, he was a grocer in Hawick. In 1851 he was living on Orrock Place and listed as a journeyman grocer. In Slater’s 1852 directory he is a greengrocer on the High Street. His wife was Janet and their children included Robert, William, John and Margaret. William (b.1819/20) head grocer on the Minto estate in the 1860s. He was a non-resident voter of Cavers Parish. His wife was Elisabeth and their children included William, Isabella, Janet and John. William (1830–1906) youngest son of James, Schoolmaster in Wilton, with his mother being Margaret Dalgleish, who later ran the ‘Image Garden’ school. In 1864 he co-founded the Edinburgh auctioneering firm Lyon and Turnbull. He married Jane Barbour and their children were William James, George Barbour, Charles Henry, Dr. Frederick John, Isabella Barbour, Margaret Mary and Jane Barbour. William Scott (1833–70) son William, farmer at Falnash and Merrylaw, his mother being Margaret Scott. He studied at St. Andrews University 1847–9. He died in New South Wales. William (d.1891) son of David (who made his fortune in India) and grandson of Thomas of Fenwick. He was born in India and lived for a while with his uncle William at Brieryyards. He leased the farm of Muirdean, near Kelso, then moved to the Channel Islands. In 1874 he returned to the Hawick area to deal with the family estates when his cousin Thomas died. He lived at Briery-yards and was a Justice of the Peace and Deputy Lieutenant for Selkirkshire. He also became a member of the Borders dining and coursing club, the Forest Club. In 1873 he was ‘Treades’ Steward’ at the Common Riding Races and was again a Steward in 1875 (when listed as ‘junior’ of Brieryyards). He later moved back to the Channel Islands, where he promoted the Presbyterian Church. He sold the Rodono estate and other lands in 1890. In 1836 he married Christian Hogarth, who pre-deceased him. His sons (all born at Makerston) were: David, who succeeded; William of Kilburn, Guernsey; and Dr. George Hogarth of Kelso. William (19th C.) farmer at Ormiston Parkhead, recorded in relation to Stobs estate in the 1850s. He was probably related to James, farmer at Billerwell. William (19th C.) shepherd at the Pietsnest in Hobkirk Parish. He was one of the original congregation of Wolfelee Free Kirk, along with his wife, Euphemia Armstrong. He was also made an elder in 1851. William George (b.1844) son of John, farmer at Spittal-on-Rule. He continued the tenancy in Spittal-on-Rule after the death of his father. He was recorded as farmer there in 1868. He married Mary Mitchell, daughter of George Greig of Eccles in 1894. They had 4 children. William Scott (b.1856) son of James, who was tenant at Billerwell. He was educated as a chemist, but preferred the life of a farmer. He was tenant at Tythhouse in Rulewater. He married and had 3 children. William (19th C.) stocking-maker, who was elder of the Hawick Free Church around 1875. William (b.1854/5) son of John Struthers and grandson of weaver William. He worked for a long time with Thomas Purdom & Sons and later moved to Edinburgh. He married his cousin, daughter of his father’s brother George. William (19th/20th C.) original singer of ‘Clinty’. He may be the same as one of the other Williams. William ‘Blinnd Wullie’ (? – ??) Hawick man who was blind from his earliest days, but notable for his astonishing memory (remembering everyone’s birthday, for example), love for music and singing, and lack of self-pity. He was an accompanist at Common Riding events for several decades – ‘Whenever I meet Willie, I’m humbler as we part; God give me his contentment. His brave ungrudging heart’ [WL]. William (d.2002) Hawick born production director at Pesco’s, also known as leader of the Border Orchestra, and founding member of the Hawick Music Club. In addition he was involved with the Church of Scotland, Vertish Hill Sports Committee, Callants’ Club and Hawick Chamber of Commerce (also formerly spelled ‘Tornebole’, ‘Trombull’, ‘Trumbill’, ‘Trumble’, ‘Trumbuel’, ‘Trumbull’, ‘Trummill’, ‘Trumbul’, ‘Turnbel’, ‘Turnbill’, ‘Turnble’, ‘Turnbul’, ‘Turnbule’, ‘Turnbule’, ‘Turnbule’, ‘Turnebull’, ‘Turnebull’, ‘Turnebull’, ‘Turnebull’, and other variants).

Turnbull an Scott’s (turn-bul-an-skots) n. engineering firm based at 16, 18 and 20 Commercial Road. They moved into these buildings (previously the Urban Electric Company) when the company was established in 1933. The main office block is unusual in Hawick in having a Tudor style. The company were originally millwrights, but now specialise in custom-built heating systems. It started as Turnbull & Aitkin, later becoming Turnbull, Aitkin & Scott, and changing to Turnbull & Scott in 1955. More recently the firm moved to Burnfoot.

Turnbull an Sons (turn-bul-an-sunz) n. Charles Turnbull & Sons, a photography company of the latter part of the 19th century. Based on Jamaica Street in Glasgow, the firm branched out to Greenock, Kilmarnock, Hawick and elsewhere. In Hawick they set up their studio at 7 North Bridge Street in 1886, but only lasted until 1889.

The building may have continued as a photography studio (under the name Torrance) until 1893.

Turnbull-Robertson (turn-bul-ro-burt-sin) n. main carpet manufacturing company in Hawick, operating in the second half of the 18th century in Orrock Place. It was founded by William Robertson in 1752, with Thomas Turnbull and others joining in 1769. They feued the land in the middle of the Sandbed in 1791, and the houses they built there were demolished in 1987. The Carpet Close is the one reminder of their existence.

the Turnbulls (thu-turn-bulz) n. local family, powerful during rieving days. The name is traditionally ascribed to when William de Rule saved King Robert from a bull, being rewarded with lands and the name of ‘Turnebull’. The first recorded instance of the name is a William Turnebull of Philiphaug (possibly the same ‘William de Rule’) in 1313. Other lands in the Ettrick valley followed, as well as Minto and Bedrule in the 14th century. By the 15th century the family controlled much of the Rule valley and also held lands around Denholm and in the Borthwick valley. Closest to Hawick, there were Turnebulls Lairds at Whithope in 1454, Hornshole in 1456, Penchire in 1464/5, Harden until 1468 and at Hassendeanbank through the 15th century. In a panel to decide on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers in 1464/5, out of 21 prominent local landowners there were 4 of the surname Turnebull. Although no Turnebull collected a peerage, at the height of their influence they were as powerful as the Douglasses, Scotts, Kerrs, Elliot and Armstrongs. Like other Border clans they played an important role in frustrating the English, but were also involved in feuds and power struggles on the Scottish side of the Border. A feud in Teviotdale with the Rutherfords was noted in Parliament in 1479. Probably because they never rose to the nobility, their strength was challenged, their lands lost and the family eventually dispersed. In one incident in 1510 James IV publicly humiliated 200 Turnebulls at the ‘Deed Haugh’ near Rulemouth, and it is said that as many as 20 were hanged. In 1516 about 45 Turnebulls (and a few others) were pardoned for any role in assisting Alexander, Lord Home in plotting against the King (the document survives among the papers of the Dukes of Roxburgh and gives a valuable record of the main family branches at that time). They are said to have sided with the English in some raids, but they fought for the Scots at Ancrum Moor in 1545, and were probably at the Redeswire in 1575. They once held towers at Minto, Barnhills (base of Minto Crags), Bedrule and Fulton, much of which passed to the Elliots and others. The Turnbulls of Bedrule and the Turnbulls of Minto appear to have been the most powerful branches in the 16th century, but their power waned in the early 17th century, with the Minto branch being involved in a serious feud with the Kerrs of the Jedburgh area in the years around 1600. Both of the main baronies were sold off before the last quarter of the 17th century.

However, a related branch, the Turnbulls of (Hass-sendean) Knowe were important local landowners until well into the 18th century. Descendants of the Turnbulls of Minto moved to Burnfoot, and were among the founders of the textile trade in Hawick. The Great Seal of the Turnbulls used to be in the possession of the Turnbulls of Burnfoot, before it moved to Canada when Michael Turnbull emigrated. There have been at least 18 Hawick Cornets with this surname. It seems likely that the roots of all Turnbulls can be traced back to an area within 20 miles of Hawick. Trumbles are probably derived from this family, through the early local pronunciation, and the French and French-Canadian family Tremblay may also come from Turnbulls who fought in France during the Hundred Years War. The clan as a family association was revived in 1977 by Hawick man John Turnbull. A book ‘I Saved the King: the Story of the Turnbulls’ was written by R.E. Scott in 1977.
A statue, commemorating the turning of the bull and sculpted by Angela Hunter, was unveiled near the Heritage Hub in 2009 – ‘But little harness had we there But auld Baddrule had on a jack, And did right weel, I you declare, Wi’ a the Turnbulls at his back’[CPM], ‘Between red ezlar banks, that frightful scowl, Fringed with grey hazel, roars the mining Roul; Where Turnbulls once, a race no power could awe, Lin’d the rough skirts of stormy Ruberslaw’[JL].

Turnbull’s (turn-bulz) n. John Turnbull & Sons, dyers and finishers, founded in 1819, with their main premises at 1–4 Slitrig Crescent and also later on Victoria Road/Carnarvon Street.
The Slitrig Crescent premises were on Slitrig Dam, from which water was taken (and polluted water returned). In 1871 the firm employed 40 people. There was a major fire at the Slitrig Crescent works in 1940. The Victoria Road cleaning dyeing works was to the west of Albert Mills, just over the mill lade, built in the early years of the 20th century. The central office block had a 70 ft high chimney tower, emblazoned with a distinctive ‘T’; it was all was demolished in 1990.
The surviving administration building was constructed in 1911, with designs by Alexander Inglis. It has a harled facade with red sandstone details, making it quite unique among Hawick factory buildings. The corner water tower is particularly distinctive, with architectural elements of the Modern Movement. An additional concrete building was constructed in 1920, and also demolished in 1990. The company had the largest dyeworks in the Borders, but went into liquidation in 2000. Part of the buildings were occupied by N. Peal, cashmere manufacturers from 1990 until 2006.

Turnbull’s (turn-bulz) n. Turnbull’s grocery and wine shop at 51 High Street. It was established in 1855 and kept in the same family for 4 generations. The firm also made its own blended whisky, which they stored in a bonded warehouse on Walter’s Wynd. There was also a specially brewed ginger beer and other Turnbull-labelled products. Although the shop closed in the 1980, the firm continued with personalised whisky labelling before closing entirely. However, it was re-established by the 6th generation in 2008 at 4 Oliver Place.

Turnbull’s the Dyers (turn-bulz-thn-dll urz)
n. popular name for John Turnbull & Sons, dyers and finishers, also shortened to Turnbull’s.

the Turnbull Statue (thn-turn-bul-statw-ew)
n. larger-than-life statue outside the Heritage Hub on the site of the former Exchange Buildings. It was sculpted by Galashiels artist Angela Hunter, funded by the Turnbull Clan Association and depicts William of Rule ‘turning the bull’. It was unveiled in 2009.

Turneep (tur-neep) n. turnip – ‘Hei’s ootby the day, shawin turneeps’[ECS] (see also neeps).

Turneep-callant (tur-neek-kaw-lin) n., arch.
a boy doing odd-jobs on a farm.

Turneep-heid (tur-neek-heed) n. an idiot, dolt, silly or stupid person.

Turneepy (tur-neek-pe) adj., arch. having a flavour suggesting the cow was fed on turnips, particularly said of butter.

Turner (tur-mur) n. Alan (1939–2020) artist who lived at Bairnkine near Jedburgh. In 2007 he starred in a short film shot around Hawick, called ‘Jess (alien sheep dog)’. Alexander (16th/17th C.) described as ‘in Quhytlawhouse’ (presumably either Whittlaw or Whiltlaw Haugh) in a 1612 document where many people were accused of charging more than the allowed percentage on loans.
Andrew (18th C.) gardener in Hawick. He is Turner an Rutherford’s turnin hook

mentioned in 1767 as possessor of a garden and ground in Hawick; he was probably father of William, who owned the Wheathole at the same time, both men being Burgess of Hawick. He witnessed baptisms in Hawick in 1760 and 1772 for William (probably his son) and in 1761 for gardener John Lamb and Janet Turner (probably his daughter). He is probably also the Andrew who witnessed 2 baptisms in Wilton in 1769, 3 others in 1770 and another in 1772 (suggesting that he may have been an Elder in the Kirk or similar). He is probably the Andrew who was married to Isobel (or Agnes) Aitkin, with children baptised in Hawick including: Janet (b.1736), probably married gardener John Lamb; William (b.1738); and Betty (b.1744). Francis (b.1778/9) born in Dumfriesshire, he worked at Whitfield farm. In 1835–41 he is listed as labourer and overseer at Whitfield among heads of households in Wilton Parish. He is recorded as farm overseer at Whitfield in 1841. In 1851 he is listed there as a shepherd. He lived with his sister Margaret. George (18th C.) recorded as ‘Junior’ in Hawick when he paid the cart tax in 1788. James (18th/19th C.) carrier who operated between Galashiels and Hawick according to Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. In 1837 he is listed leaving from the Grapes every Saturday, bound for Galashiels. John (16th C.) tenant of Gavin of Elliot of Falnash in 1569. Elliot acted as cautioner for his tenants at a meeting in Hawick, assuring that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. His name is recorded as ‘Johnne Turnair’. John (18th C.) grooms at Midshiels in 1793 and 1794, when he was working for Archibald Douglas. J.S. (19th C.) prominent member of Hawick Golf Club in the late 19th century, being Club Captain. He may have been the first person to achieve a hole in one on the Vertish course. Richard (17th C.) tenant in Lilliesleaf Mill. He is recorded in 1684 when his son John is listed among those declared as fugitives for religious non-conformity. In another version of the list he is recorded as John. Thomas (17th C.) cottar at Gatehousecote according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (18th C.) tailor in Hawick. He married Euphan Lamb. Their twins William and Betty were baptised in 1766. The witnesses were shoemaker Andrew Scott and gardener William Scott. William (d.1799) recorded in the register of deaths in Hawick Parish as ‘late Kendal Carrier’. William (d.bef. 1815) gardener in Hawick. He paid the cart tax in 1785 and 1787. He is probably the William recorded as owner of the Wheathole in 1767. He could be the William born to Andrew and Isobel Aitkin in Hawick in 1738. He is probably the William who married Agnes (also called Janet) Lamb in 1757 in Wilton Parish and had children baptised in Hawick: Janet (b.1758); Agnes (b.1760); Margaret (b.1761); Elizabeth (b.1765); Jane (b.1767); Margaret (again, b.1770); Rebecca (b.1772); Mary (b.1773); and John (1778–1997). The witnesses to the 1760 baptism were gardeners Andrew Turner (perhaps his father) and William Aitkin, in 1767 were the whole congregation and in 1772 were Andrew (again) and John Lamb (perhaps his wife’s brother, whose own wife was Janet Turner). The death of his wife Agnes Lamb is recorded in Hawick in 1815. William (19th C.) grocer on the High Street, listed in Slater’s 1852 directory (formerly ‘Turnair’ and variants).

Turner an Rutherford’s (tur-nur-in-ru-thur-fordz) n. hosiery manufacturers that operated at least from 1885 until 1955, based at Mansfield Mills. The partnership was between Mr. Turner and John Rutherford, and they moved to Mansfield Mills in 1891. It may be that the firm never recovered from the 1955 fire, which destroyed part of the older buildings; at that time they employed 300 people. Their minute books and ledgers are stored in the Museum. Braemar took over the factory about 1969 and it later became Jaeger before being converted into flats.

Turner’s Corner (tur-nurz-kör-nur) n. former popular name for the sharp corner on Liddesdale Road by Lynnwood Cottage. It was named for the manufacturer who owned the property there. It was later also known as ‘Fraser’s Corner’. The road was eventually straightened to accommodate the passage of tanks from Stobs.

Turner’s Holm (tur-nurz-höm) n. area near where the Kershope Burn meets the Liddel Water. This was traditionally the site of the duel between William Armstrong of Greena and Forster of Stanegarthside (according to Sir Walter Scott, the name came from ‘tourney’, since games of chivalry were formerly practised here.

Turning Back the Clock (tur-nin-bawk-thu-klok) n. musical play written by J.E.D. Murray and Adam Grant, performed in the Exchange Hall in September 1912 for a Cricket Club fundraising bazaar. It was described as ‘A pathetic burlesque comedy in two acts’.

turnin hook (tur-nin-hook) n. a hand-held implement used in the knitwear industry, similar to a crochet hook, specifically used for turning up ‘run down’ stitches on a knitted garment.
Turnpikeside (tur-nee’, -ni’) pp., arch. turned – ‘Thou hest turnet for me my murrin’ intil dancin’ . . . ’ [HSR], ‘. . . yis, monie ane time turnet he his angir awa, an’ didna stur up a’ his wræth’ [HSR], the Turnpike Act (thon-turn-pik-awk’t) n. parliamentary act of 1768 which improved the roads in the Borders, specifically between Kelso and Hawick (now the A698), Jedburgh and Lauder (now the A68) and Hawick and Galashiels (now the A7). The Scotch-Dyke to Haremoss road (sometimes referred to as Mosspauglleen to Haremoss) was also part of this general improvement. The work was paid for by landowning subscribers, who recouped their money through the tolls. This led to Toll-bars being set up at all the major routes out of Hawick.

the Turnpike Bar (thon-turn-pik-bawr) n. name sometimes used for the toll gate over the main road in one of the directions in and out of Hawick. It is explicitly used in the 1767 description of the Common to refer to the toll-bar at the top of the Loan – ‘. . . and from the Ford by the north dykes of the Common Loan into the Turnpyke Bar and the West Port of Hawick’ [C&L1767].

Turnpikeheid (turn-pik-heed) n. Turnpikehead, former name for a farm near Bonchester Bridge. William Telfer was there in 1868. It may be the same place known earlier as Roundabouts, near Chesters.

Turnpikeside (turn-pik-sid) n. former cottage in Southdean Parish, presumably beside the turnpike. Thomas Oliver was farmer there in 1797.

turnt (turn) pp. turned, became – ‘Ferrr on, the road turnt bideleet o baith seides . . . ’ [ECS], ‘. . . for A’ll owun A was dry again, turnt, lang or this!’ [ECS], Sic a muckle man ee herv turnt!’ [ECS] (see also turn).

turse (turs) n., arch. a bundle truss – ‘A mighty turse, O’ moral ills, is spued by thee – An empty purse’ [JoHa], a large bundle tied up like sticks or straw – ‘The quantity of broom to complete the thatching amounted to 290 turses, and a turse was probably a large bunch tied up like straw’ [WaD], v., arch. to truss, bundle.

Turvill (tur-vil) n. John ‘Jack’ (19th C.) stockingmaker from England who came to Hawick in the mid-1800s. Along with his brother Henry, and several other Englishmen, he helped introduce cricket to the Town. In 1841 he is recorded at about 57 High Street, along with Sibbald, who may have been his wife (also written ‘Turville’).

Tushielaw (too-, tu-shee-law??) n. hill at the western end of the B711, reaching a height of 435 m. Tushielaw Inn is at its base, and nearby on the hillside is the ruined Tushielaw Tower (dating from about 1600, but built on an earlier house). This was home of the Scotts of Tushielaw, from at least the mid-15th century. It was owned by the Crown from at least 1456, being part of Ettrick Forest that was forfeited by the Earl of Douglas. William Scott held the lease in 1484 and Walter Scott (also of Howpasley) in 1488. John Burnet was recorded there in 1494/5 and recorded stealing 71 sheep from William Hall, who was also there. It remained Crown property until at least 1502. The Scotts of Tushielaw branch later included Mary (of the ballad ‘Mary Scott’) and Adam ‘the King of Thieves’. William Scott was tenant there in 1541, paying £24 yearly. There was a feud between the Scotts of Tushielaw and Thirlestane in the 17th century. The lands were once part of the parish of Rankilburn. The lands of the Laird in Selkirkshire were valued at £1615 in 1678. The lands were sold to Michael Anderson in 1688, and Andersons continued as Lairds until the mid-19th century, with the Chisholmes of Stirches also often living there. There was a fire there in the 1760s – ‘Ilk petty robber, through the lands, They taucht to stand in awe; And affen checked the plun-drin’ bands Of famous Tushilaw’ [ES] (variously written as ‘Tischelaw’, ‘Tischellaw’, ‘Tushelaw’, ‘Tushielaw’, etc.; it appears as ‘Torschelelaw’ in 1455, ‘Torschelelaw’ in 1456, ‘Turneschelelaw’ in 1468, ‘Tureschelaw’ in 1471, ‘Turfschelaw’ in 1477, ‘Trusschelaw’ in 1484, ‘Tuschelaw’ in 1488, ‘Tuschelelaw’ in 1490, 1494/5 and 1503, ‘Turschelaw’ in 1501 and 1502, ‘Truschelaw’ in 1507, ‘Tuschelaw’ in 1513, ‘Tuschelaw’ in 1524/5, ‘Tuschelelaw’ in 1526, ‘Tussylaw’ and ‘Tuschellaw’ in 1528, ‘Tischelaw’ in 1530, ‘Tuschelaw’ in 1541, 1564 and 1573, ‘Tweshelaw’ in 1574, ‘Tuchellaw’ in 1579/80 and 1580, ‘Tuschelaw’ and ‘Tuchel’ in 1581, ‘Tuschelaw’ in 1583/4, ‘Tuschelaw’ in 1607, ‘Tuschelaw’ in 1619, ‘Tuschelaw’ in 1633, ‘Tuschillaw’ in 1636, ‘Tuschelaw’ in 1649, ‘Tushillaw’ in 1662, ‘Tushellaw’ in 1676, ‘Tushallaw’ in 1687 and ‘Tushalaw’ in 1690; it is ‘Tusshyla’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; the origin is obscure, with theories including ‘tor-schele-law’, i.e. ‘rock sheiling law’ and ‘throssil-law’, i.e. ‘thrush law’).
Tushielaw Inn

Tushielaw Inn (too-shee-law-in) n. inn in the Ettrick valley, at the road junction of the B711 from the Borthwick valley to the B709. It was once an important coach house.

Tutor see Tudhope tweed (tweed) n. generic name for fabrics made by twill weaves of coarse but soft wool, or products made from such fabrics, for which the Borders is famous. It began in Hawick probably with Wilson & Watson manufacturing 'Scotch plaiding' in 1817, followed by blankets, flannel and twill. The origin of the word is apparently due to an order from William Watson & Sons' clients Messrs. Harvey in London in around 1832, with 'tweed' (or perhaps 'tweel', meaning 'tweeled') being misread as 'tweed' when the customer reordered. Alternatively it is suggested that essentially the same story came from William Wilson & Sons, with client James Locke of London in 1826 (and yet another account suggested it was Watson and Locke). We shall probably never know which of these versions is correct, but it seems likely that it was due to a misreading of an order from a firm in Hawick, probably with an influence of association with the River Tweed. By 1850 it was estimated that the weight of yarn used annually in Hawick to spin tweed and other woollen cloth was about 1,250,000 pounds.

the Tweed (thu-tweed) n. Tweed River, principal river of the Borders, being 97 miles (155 km) long and the 4th largest in Scotland. Its source is Tweed's Well north of Moffat (interestingly only about a mile from the sources of both the Clyde and the Annan) and flows into the North Sea at Berwick, forming part of the line of the Border in its course. Internationally renowned for salmon fishing, its main tributaries are the Ettrick, Gala, Leader, and of course the Teviot - '...I bid your pleasing haunts adieu! Yet, fableing fancy oft shall lead My footsteps to the silver Tweed, Through scenes that I no more must view' [JL], 'Silrig, Borthwick, and the Teviot swell Tweed's praises to the sea, Blending all the Border's music in a glorious harmony' [GHB], '...The sunny smile of an auld, auld toon where the Teviot twines to Tweed' [JYH], 'Three crests against the saffron sky, Beyond the purple plain, The kind remembered melody Of Tweed once more again' [ALg], 'Then no dirge be mine when my brief days dwine, But this be the tune for me - Tweed's glorious song, as she rolls along To her tryst with the grey North Sea' [WL] (the name is very old and its origin obscure although it could be related to the Sanskit root 'tavás' to surge, the same a the Teviot perhaps).

Tweedbank (tweed-bawngk) n. town constructed as urban expansion after the 1968 Johnson-Marshall Report. Its construction was resisted for years by locals before it was built. It never reached the targeted population levels, and as a community it has few services of its own, being essentially a suburb of Galashiels.

Tweed Commissioners (tweed-ko-mi-shi-nurz) n., pl. the River Tweed Commissioners, a body set up by private Acts of Parliament of 1857 and 1859 to manage salmon fishing on the Tweed and its tributaries. Another Act of 1969 extended their responsibilities to include all freshwater fish. Their activities are funded from levies on owners of fisheries. The current Council is the ruling body, with 81 members, 43 of whom are appointed by the local authorities to represent angling clubs and other community groups.

Tweeddale (tweed-däl) n. valley of the River Tweed, often referring to the upper part of the valley specifically, lying between the Yarrow and Gala watersheds. Historically the word was used to refer collectively to Peeblesshire and Selkirkshire. It was later a district of the Borders region, essentially the same as Peeblesshire (it is 'Tued-dail' in 1519/20).

Tweeddale (tweed-däl) n. William (17th C.) recorded as a merchant and Burgess of Hawick when his son David became a painter’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1633.

Tweedden (twee-din) n. former seat of the Arm-
Tweedbank

Ector Armstrong was there in 1541, when he reset some other Armstrongs, referred to as English rebels. It is recorded as ‘Twyde’ on a map of Liddesdale drawn up by Sir William Cecil, c.1561. Ringan, Hector and Jock of Tweeden are recorded in 1583 and Ninian of Tweeden in 1606. William and John Armstrong ‘of Tueden’ are recorded in 1611. ‘Johne Armstrong, callit of Tueden’ is recorded in 1622 and Francie ‘callit Tueden’ in 1623. It may be the same place that is on the list of parts of the Lordship of Liddesdale in 1632 as ‘Helene Tweidmes lands’. In the same document is recorded the farm of ‘Megie Tweedmes’, whose meaning is also obscure (it is ‘Tweed’ in 1541, ‘Tweedane’ in 1576, ‘Tweedon’ in 1580, ‘Tuedon’ in 1583 and ‘Tueden’ in 1599 and 1622).

Tweedbank (tweed-bawngk) n. former farmstead in Liddesdale, close to (or perhaps the same as) Hillhouse. Labourers Francis Nichol and Joha Armstrong lived there in 1841 and William Jardine and family in 1851 (it was ‘Twyden Bank’ in 1841).

Tweed Burn (tweed-burn) n. stream in Liddesdale that runs to the west to join the Liddel Water north of Mangerton. There was once a spring here, said to famous for its ‘petrifying qualities’, with calcified formations on the moss around it. The stream also contains some waterfalls – ‘An’ bauld wi’ hindberries frae the syke, I lap an’ ran a turn Alang the divots on the dyke, Doon to the Tweeden burn’ [ECB] (the name is said to derive from it being a boundary between Mangerton and Whithaugh).

Tweedenhed (tweed-heed) n. farmstead in eastern Liddesdale, near the head of the Tweeden Burn, a mile or so north of Scotch Kershope. Andrew Pott was shepherd there in 1797 and John Crozier in 1835.

Tweedenside (tweed-sid) n. former farmstead in Castleton Parish, situated on the south bank of the Tweeden Burn. Stobie’s 1770 map shows it to the west of the farmsteads of Catheugh and Spoutgills.

Tweedie (tweed-dee) n. Mary (1768–1845) born in Lasswade, she married Arbroath merchant William Renny. She was grandmother of Sir William Renny. She was buried in Old Wilton Cemetery.

Tweedmouth (tweed-mouth) n. town that is effectively the industrial part of Berwick, but on the English side of the Tweed.

Tweedside (tweed-sid) n. pipe tune dating from at least the late 17th century, with several alternative sets of words – ‘From Teviot’s banks I see them wind their way: ‘Tweedside’, in sad farewell, I hear them play’ [JL].

Tweed Valley Mountain Rescue Team (tweed-vaw-lee-mown-in-res-kew-teem) n. organisation formed as a volunteer group in 1966 and is now a registered charity. It has helped in many search and rescue operations in the Border hills. The organisation grew out of the Cheviot Walking Club in the early 1950s, with the first search and rescue team set up in 1963 and named the Borders Search and Rescue Unit. This was in response to the growing number of inexperienced hikers walking the Cheviots. This outfit split into 3 sections (based at Yetholm, Duns and Gala), with the Gala-based section being renamed Tweed Valley Mountain Rescue Team, with police officer Tony Robinson as its first Team Leader. From humble beginnings, the group has grown into a well organised and experienced group, which works closely with other organisations. In 1988 they helped with the Lockerbie disaster as well as countless less serious incidents. The Team trains every Wednesday night.

Tweedy (tweed-dee) n. Lawrence (15th C.) sub-Prior of Melrose Abbey. In 1484 he gave a grant of bailiary to David Scott of Branxholme and his son Robert, covering the Abbeys many lands, including Melroseland, Ettrick, Rodono, Eskdale, Ringwoodfield and East Teviotdale (formerly ‘Tuedy’ and variants).

tweel (tweel) n., arch. twill, a fabric having diagonal parallel ribs, which was abundantly manufactured in Hawick in the late 18th and early 19th centuries before a clerical error changed the name to ‘tweed’.

tweel (tweel) adv., poet. certainly, indeed – ‘Tweel ye hae walth to wale on if it’s sae; Sae sigh nae mair, for trowth ye mak me wae’ [CPM] (contracted form of ‘I wat weel!’).

tweetch (tweetch) v., poet. to twitch – ‘He’ll snap an’ tweetch frae haunted dreams An’ loupin’ her’t consumed wi’ fear’ [WFC].

twel see twal

twenty (ten-tee) adj., arch. twentieth – ‘The twenty day of the moneth of Maj, in the zer of God a thowsande fyf hundreth … ’ [SB1500].

twilicht (twI-lich) n., poet. twilight – ‘…when the licht never fades beyond the under-water twilicht o a clear-rimin burn’ [DH].

twiner (twi-nur) n. someone who twists wool into thicker yarn – ‘There are about 30 twiners in our works. There were other twiners working at the same kind of yarn’ [HAD1868].
twinset (twin-, twun-set) n. a knitwear garment consisting of a cardigan worn over a short-sleeved, tight-fitting sweater. The style appears to have originated at Pringle’s around the 1940s, helping launch the company into the heights of fashion. Pringle’s designer Otto Weisz is said to have thought of the name after seeing a woman pushing twins on Hawick High Street (also written ‘twinset’ and ‘twin set’).

the Twirlees (thu-twir-leez) n. former name for an ill-defined area of the Wellogate, being associated with the approach to open country on the east side. The name is believed to have originated from a turnstile which was at the end of a straight lane running roughly from the end of the present Park Street to the Braid Road. The turnstile was there up until around 1885, and was a simple cross-wise pattern of two bars revolving on a post, probably installed to protect the town from horse traffic or straying cattle in that direction (there is no evidence to support a suggestion that the origin may be a corruption of ‘Tuileries’ from the Napoleon War prisoners quartered in Hawick).

Twirlees Road (twir-leez-rőd) n. street in the Wellogate running from the top of Brougham Place to Orchard Terrace, named in 1908. It follows the line of the former path leading to the Braid Road with a turnstile at the end, which is believed to have given its name to the area. The path ran roughly from the top of the present Park Street to near the top of the steps at Braid Road. The turnstile was there until the mid-19th century, and consisted of two wooden bars fixed cross-wise onto a strong post.

Twirlees Steps (twir-leez-steps) n. name sometimes used for the stairs between the end of Twirlees Road and the Braid Road.

Twirlees Terrace (twir-leez-te-ris) n. street in the Wellogate between Twirlees Road and Douglas Road East, named in 1915, and taking its name from the name already in use for the general area.

Twislehope (twiz-lup) n. farm just to the south off the Hermitage Water road, where the Twislehope Burn meets the Chapel Grain. The lands were valued at 8 merks in 1541. It was owned by the Earl of Buccleuch by 1632. Archibald Goodfellow was tenant there in 1694. There were Elliots there in the 17th century, when it was sometimes referred to as ‘Castlehope’ (although that may just be an error). It was surveyed in 1718 along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties, when it covered 2225 acres, bounded by Billhope, Carewoodrig, Dinlees, lands held by the Laird of Hoscote, Tarras, Unthank and Blackhall. It is stated that ‘here is but little corn land or meadow for this farm is very mountainous’. In 1792 Sir Walter Scott and Robert Shortreed visited ‘auld Thomas o’ Twizzlehope’, who was known for his skill on the Border pipe, and was said to have the original tune for ‘Dick o’ the Cow’. Thomas Elliot was recorded there in 1797. Alexander Easton was there in 1821. Andrew Elliot was tenant there in the mid-19th century and Andrew Scott was shepherd there in the mid-to-late 19th century. Walter Elliot is recorded at ‘Cawslip’ in a directory of 1868 (also written ‘Twizelhope’ and variants; the name probably derives from the Old English ‘twisla hop’, meaning ‘valley where two streams fork’; it is first recorded as ‘Cwyslehop’ in 1376 and is ‘Twylishop’ in 1541, ‘Twisliehope’ in 1632 and ‘Tuilshope’ in 1694; ‘Tuisloppq’ appears to be the spelling on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Tuislehope’ and ‘Tuilshope’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey, with the modern spelling appearing on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Twislehope Hope (twiz-lup-hôp) n. farmstead in the Hermitage valley, up the Twislehope Burn from Twislehope itself. There were Scotts there in 1841 (note the double use of ‘hope’).

Twizel (twi-zul) n. village near where the Till flows into the Tweed. The 15th century bridge there has a single-arched span of about 27m, the longest in Britain at the time. This was a significant crossing point, where Surrey’s men crossed behind the Scots at the Battle of Flodden (also spelled ‘Twizell’).

twun (twun) n., adj. twin – ‘...his twun brother whae’s his absolute double’ [IWL], v. to twin – ‘Hawick was twunned wi Bailleul’.

twyne (twîn) v., poet. to spin, draw – ‘...wult thou twyne owt thine angir til a’ ganæratians?’ [HSR].

tyed see tied

tyke (tik) n., arch. a tick, cover of a bed or mattress that contains the filling, a light mattress – ‘Lift the tyke, that’s filled wi’ flocks ...’ [IJ].

tyke-a-bed (tî-ka-bed) n., arch. a cloth case for a mattress, bed tick, a light mattress, a very squat or fat person, particularly a woman (also written ‘teik-a-bed’; noted by E.C. Smith).

the Tyne (thu-tîn) n. river in Northumberland, formed from the confluence of the North Tyne and the South Tyne near Hexham, then flowing through the county of Tyne and Wear to reach the sea between Newcastle and Gateshead. The North Tyne rises near the Border, north of Kielder Water and passes through Bellingham and Hexham – ... Then seeking the South that held his shrine, Heard the low hills echo ‘To Tyne! To Tyne!’ [WHO].

typhoid (ti-foid) n. disease marked by fever accompanied by intestinal inflammation and ulceration. There was a major outbreak in Hawick in 1938, leading to the town being temporarily ostracised by industrialists and visitors. Many services, such as laundry and the Library were suspended and public events were cancelled. Hospitals were repurposed and laboratories were set up. The epidemic lasted for 6 weeks, with 105 cases being treated in hospital and 5 people died. It was eventually discovered that there was a probable single carrier of the disease, who worked in the Store bakery (although how they brought it to the Town is not documented).

tyre (ti-ur) v. to tire – ‘did ee tyre um oot?’; ‘...O’er the Vertish hill nor tire’ [AB], ‘Though oo’ve been apairt a while again, Though oo’r gei tei’rd n’ teary, What’s ne’er been lost can aye be fund, On the hill abin Blawearie’ [IHS/GM] (often spelled ‘tire’ even although the hard i pronunciation is implied).

tyred (ti-ur) adj., pp. tired – ‘A’m ower tyred ti gaun ou’, ‘A’m no seek, A’m juist tyred’ (note the pronunciation with the hard i and the glottal stop).

Tyr-ibus Ye Tyr Ye Odin (tee-ree-bu-see-tee-ree-o-din) n. town slogan, also spelled ‘Teribus ye Teri-Odin’ and other variants. This particular version is the one that appears on the town coat of arms (the origin, meaning and age of this phrase are all uncertain).

Tyr hœbbe us ye tyr ye Odin (tee-ree-bus-cee-tee-ree-o-din) n. another version of the slogan, displayed at the Colour Bussing in the early 20th century. This spelling is inspired by one suggestion for the slogan’s meaning, ‘Thor keep us, both Thor and Odin’, from the Anglo-Saxon.

Tythehouse, farm in Hobkirks Parish, on the road between Forkins and Harwood. It was for a long time part of the Harwood estate, being in 1637 described as the ‘2 merkland’ which is a ‘pendicle’ of Harwood. It passed (along with Harwood) from William Lord Herries to James Hamilton in 1602 and confirmed to Francis Hamilton in 1610. Not long afterwards it was part of the estate of the Lornaines and then sold to the Elliots along with Harwood in 1637. ‘Tithous with 4th part of the lands of Fernlie’ were listed among the properties of Sir William Elliott of Stobs in the Barony of Feu-Rule in the late 17th century. William Dalgleish was tenant there in 1797, Thomas E. Boog and W. Maben in the 1860s and Tom Smith in the late 19th century. The 1863 Ordnance Survey map shows a building and enclosure near the Harwood Burn, to the south-west of the farm, as well as a cottage and garden just north-east of the farm, neither of which are extant. There was also formerly a mill lade running to the 2 mill ponds to the south-west, which probably powered a threshing mill (it may be the place transcribed as ‘Tytos Renis’ in a bounding charter of 1567 and ‘Titois Renis’ in 1604; it is spelled ‘Tythhus’ in 1602, ‘Tytus’ in 1609, 1610, 1630 and 1631, ‘Tytteous’, ‘Tittoous’ in 1632, ‘Tythous in 1633 and 1637, ‘Tythas’ in 1655, ‘Tithhouse’ in 1656 and 1694, ‘Tytehouse’ in 1699, ‘Titehous’ about 1700, ‘Tytehouse’ in 1769 and ‘Titus’ in 1797; it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map as ‘Tyth house’).
Ulston (ul-stin) n. farm about a mile east of Jedburgh, formerly a barony connected with the steward of Jedburgh Abbey. It was owned by the Haswells in the 17th century and tenanted by the Caverhills in the 18th and 19th centuries. The farm was later split into Wester Ulston, Easter Ulston and Mount Ulston. Wester Ulston contains a triangulation pillar at a height of 174 m (the origin of the name is probably the Old Norse personal name ‘Ulf’ and Old English ‘tun’ for ‘farm’; it first occurs as ‘Ulveston’ and ‘Ulmerstoun’ in the mid-12th century).

Umm (um) pron. him – ‘A’ll tell um’, ‘his brother persuaded um ti ride ti Mosspaul’, ‘she’ll sort um oot’, ‘...gie um a gude Hawick gill; it’ll dae um nae harm’ [JEDM], ‘...A snuived steevaly on about thirty yards ahint um’ [ECS], ‘Now oo’ve tae hide the thing frae um ...’ [AY].

umbrella (um-bu-re-la) n. umbrella (note the extra syllable in the pronunciation).

the Umbrella Shop (thu-um-bu-re-la-shop) n. former umbrella shop at the corner of North Bridge Street and Dovecote Street.

Umfraville (um-fra-vil) n. Gilbert (c.1244–1307) Warden of the Marches in the late 13th century. He was created Baron Umfraville and was 2nd Earl of Angus. He was recorded in 1265/6 in regard to lands in England, swore fealty to Henry III in 1266/7. Also in 1266/7 he was granted free warrant of his lands in Northumberland and granted a market at his lands in Rutland. In England he held the title of Lord of Redesdale. In 1269 he was in dispute with William Douglas over the lands of Faudon in Northumberland. He signed the Ragman Rolls in 1291. He lived at Prudhoe Castle in Northumberland, married Elizabeth Comyn and was succeeded by his son Robert. Sir Ingram (c.1321) son of Robert. He inherited the English and Scottish estates of Ingram Baliol. As an ambassador he helped establish the ‘Auld Alliance’ in 1295. In 1296 he was on the English side at the siege of Berwick and fought on the English side at the Battle of Falkirk in 1298, but was on the Scottish side at the siege of Stirling Castle in 1299. In 1300 he was appointed as a Guardian of Scotland, but resigned after a year, to be replaced by John de Soulis. He was involved in the siege of Lochmaben Castle in 1301, was made Sheriff of Jedburgh Castle in 1302 (possibly acting as Sheriff for the county) and was an ambassador to France again in 1303. Forfeiting his lands to the Englishman Sir Henry Percy in 1304, he had them reinstated by Robert the Bruce in 1306. However, he switched to the English side again in 1307, being made Guardian of South and West Scotland by Edward II. He also fought with the English at Bannockburn, being captured and ransomed.

Underayll (un-dur-Il) n. Thomas witness to a sasine of 1436 for lands of ‘Silwynislandis’, probably near Jedburgh. He is described as ‘burgess of Hawyc’, and he appears as witness with Richard ‘of Aynisle’, Patrick ‘Hangatsyd’ and notary Simon ‘of Dalges’. Since 2 of them have local connections, it is reasonable to assume that he really was a Burgess of Hawick, hence demonstrating the Burgh status in 1436, 3 years after Simon of Roulle is the first Hawick Burgess on record.

Underchesters (un-dur-ches-turz) n. former name for lands in the western part of Wilton Parish, possibly associated with ‘Highchesters’ It is referred to as a ‘3 merklands of lands of Underchesters’ in a charter transferring it from Henry Wardlaw to Robert Scott of Muirhouse in 1482.

Underdamside (un-dur-dawn-sid) n. street named after its proximity to Wilton Dam, and to distinguish it from Damside (Victoria Road). The area can be seen in a sketch from the early 19th century. It is sometimes also ‘Lower Damside’. The row of houses was originally reached by a footpath, which was turned into Bath Street in the early years of the 20th century. The houses became uninhabitable and were demolished after the Wilson & Glenny’s fire of 1959. The site was rebuilt as part of the mill in 1961, the buildings later being used for educational training purposes. All that remains of the former street is a footpath connecting to Wilton Path.

dergone (un-dur-gän) pp. undergone – ‘Even oor mainner o’ celebratin’ the Common-Ridin’ has undergone certain modifications …’ [BW1939].

the Under Haugh (thu-un-dur-hawch, -hawf) n. formerly part of the Common Haugh, lying to the north of the main road from Hawick to Wilton (now Albert Road), which separated it from the Upper Haugh. It extended approximately to where the Baths were later built and covered a little over 7 acres. It was once the site of the Bleachfield, and also formerly used for some Common Riding events. Part of it (7424/1000 acres around where the Burns Club is now) was sold to the North British Railway Company in 1847 and passed into local business hands in 1854. For the Friday afternoon and Saturday Common Riding Races, there were 4 pieces of movable fence separating the Under from the Upper Haugh, so that both could be used together. The selling of the Under Haugh probably contributed to the decline in the popularity of the Common Riding in the 1860s and 1870s. But soon afterwards the area was used in the industrial development of the town and the raising of feus for the Council on Commercial Road (note this is sometimes mistakenly identified with the Little Haugh, which is sometimes called the Lower Haugh).

underlie (un-dur-II) v., arch. to submit to the process of law, have the judgment of a court imposed, undergo – ‘…Janet Scott …shall compear personally …and underly the law, for all causes of witchcraft …’ [BR1644], ‘…and order them to underlie the punishment …which is to stand at the cross for a season, and be banished the town and liberties thereof’ [BR1700].

unheelin (un-hee-lin) adj., arch. unpleasing to the eye, clumsy looking – ‘That hymm-made ruffie o yoors looks nane sae unheelin’ [ECS] – ‘Note this Hawick usage of unheelin when the General Scottish term might be hielant (= highland, clumsy, silly)’ [ECS] (cf. heelin).
unhonest  (un-o-nist) adj., arch. dishonest – ‘...in calling of him ane twa facet thief, and ane runnigat beggar fra toune to toune, and false unhonest thief’ [BR1645].

the Union Flag  ( thu-yoon-yin-flawg) n. name sometimes given to the earliest existing Common Riding flag, of 1707, from the erroneous assumption that it was made to commemorate the Union between Scotland and England. The flag still exists in the Museum. It measures about 34 inches along the staff and was pennon-shaped, bearing the date 1707, and the much faded yellow and blue colours. It was made to replace an earlier flag, which had deteriorated too much to use, and which some have suggested may even have been the original of 1514. The connection to the ‘Union’ appears to have been made by James Wilson and then William Norman Kennedy, presumably just because of the date. It is now on display in Drumlanrig’s Tower, having undergone restoration work in 1992.

Union Haa  (yoon-yin-haw) n. Union Hall, former property that was part of the Linthill estate, the mansion house standing on the south side of the Ale Water. In the early 18th century it was owned by Rev. William Hunter of Lilliesleaf. John Harvey was tenant there in 1731. The lands there were valued at £121 10s in 1788 (it is ‘Unionhall’ in 1731 and 1788).

the Union Inn  ( thu-yoon-yin-in) n. public house behind 28 High Street in the early 19th century.

the Unionist Club  ( thu-yoon-yin-ist-klub) n. the Unionists, or Liberal Unionists, supporters of a united Britain and Ireland, split from the Liberals in the 1880s, became allied with the Tories and merged with the Conservative Party in the 1910s. Hawick Unionists had a separate club from the 1880s to 1912. A company was formed to run the Club, the Hawick Unionist Club Company Limited, existing 1896-1901 and with records in the National Archive.

the Union o the Croons  ( thu-yoon-yin-ô-thu-kroonz) n. the coronation of James VI of Scotland as James I of England. This effectively ended 3 centuries of warfare in the Borders.

Union Pairhoose  (yoon-yin-pair-hoos) n. the Union Poorhouse, another name for the Combination Pairhoose.

Union Street  (yoon-yin-stree’) n. street winding between North Bridge Street and Bourtree Place, built around 1865 as a useful bypass from the Jedburgh to Edinburgh roads. The name was chosen before any building started, with the houses built soon afterwards. At the end of the 19th century the Procession on the Friday of the Common Riding would pass along this street and then stop at the Bourtree Place end while the Cornet and supporters went to Bogliebarns. This street is still used on the route to loop back to the High Street on the evening after the Thursday Night Chase. A pet shop stood at No. 1 for a long time and Lodge No. 424 is at No. 8 (the name probably comes from the Union of the two main roads, but there may also be a connection with the Border Union Railway).

Union Street  (yoon-yin-stree’) n. street in Newcastle, off the main B6357 near Douglas Square.

Union Street Hall  (yoon-yin-stree’-hal) n. name sometimes used for the public hall on Union Street, next to the Masonic Lodge.

Unshank (un-shawngk) n. name for lands that were once in Liddesdale. It is listed in a rental roll of 1541 as ‘Unshank’, when it was vacant. This could be the same place as John Armstrong called ‘Unschanck’ on a list of thieves to be apprehended in 1642. It is possible this was Unthank in Ewesdale.

Unshope (unz-höp) n. probably name for lands in the Barony of Cavers, recorded as ‘Vnishop’. In 1519/20 they were promised from James Gledstains as part of the marriage contract for his son James, and a daughter of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. It is unclear where exactly these lands were, but the other lands listed were Giddenscleuch, Binks and ‘Langbittis’.

unsonsoy (un-son-see) adj., arch. unpleasant, unfortunate, bringing bad luck – ‘Crowing Hen. This is reckoned very unsonsie or uncannie about a house, Teviotdale’ [JoJ].

Unthank (un-thawngk) n. farm in Ewesdale, on the east side of the A7, about a mile south of Fiddleton Toll. Here are the remains of the pre-Reformation Over Kirk of Ewes, dedicated to St. Mark, with its ancient churchyard. Also nearby was a medieval settlement owned by the Lovels, and a former farmstead further up the Unthank Burn. On the opposite side of the A7 there are the remains of another former settlement. The superiority of the lands was held by the Homes in the early 16th century and the name is recorded in a list of Ewesdale lands from at least as early as 1506 when the superiority was granted to Alexander, Lord Home. Hob Elliot was ‘callit Hob of Unthank’ in 1569. The lands were listed in 1663 among those owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch in the Lordship of Ewesdale.

Franklin D. Roosevelt was descended from James Murray who was born and farmed here, and emgrated to North Carolina in 1735. Miss Elliot was recorded there in 1787, Charles Aitchison in 1792 and Mrs. Aitchison was in 1797 and James Thomson in 1799. Edward Aitchison was farmer there in 1841, and teacher John Little was also living there. David Scott was farmer there in the 1860s (unrelated to the place of the same name in Hob Kirk Parish; it was ‘Unthank’ in 1535 and 1663; the origin may be Old English ‘unthances’, meaning ‘without leave’, i.e. referring to a squatter’s farm, or it may refer to lands with ‘ungrateful’ soil).

Unthank (un-thawnk) n. former farm in Hob Kirk Parish, located between Hob Kirk Kirk and Forkins, on the west side of the Rule val-eyard. Forkins was sometimes formerly known as ‘Forkins of Unthank’. Alexander Turnbull was recorded there in 1493 and both he and Henry Turnbull in 1494/5. Leo Turnbull was tenant there in 1516. At the reformation the teind sheaves were valued at 1 boll and held by the Earl of Lothian. Archibald Turnbull is recorded there in 1586. In 1643 the proprietors were Robert and David Turnbull, and it was valued at £66 13s 4d.
In the late 17th century it was part of the lands of Stobs whose rents were assigned to the widow of Sir Gilbert Elliot, Magdelen Nicolson, and her surviving children. It was separated from Stobs to become part of the estate of Stonedge in 1671.
In the early 18th century it was owned by Gilbert Elliott of Stonedge and valued at £66 13s 4d. He sold it to Thomas Scott of Stonedge, who had the lands enclosed in a turf dyke, with a double thorn hedge and a row of bee chests (some of which survive).

Upper Bonchester see Ower Bonchester

Upper Burnmooth (u-pur-burn-mooth) n. former farm at Burnmooth in Castleton Parish (see Burnmooth).

Upper Calaburn (u-pur-kaw-la-burn) n. former name for part of the farm of Calaburn. Agricultural labourer James Stevenson was there in 1841, as well as spinster Margaret Scott and ‘Independent’ Nelly Scott. However, it appears to have been abandoned by 1851.

the Upper Common Haugh (thnu-u-pur-ko-min-hawch, -hawf) n. another name for the Big Haugh.

Upper Damside (u-pur-dawm-sid) n. another name for Damside, which became Victoria Road.

the Upper Haugh (thnu-u-pur-hawch, -hawf) n. the Upper Common Haugh, or Big Haugh, now largely a car park. The Upper and Under Haughs were separated by the main road from Hawick to Wilton (now Albert Road). This was the location of the afternoon races of the Common Riding until 1854 (‘the Nugget year’), when the persistence of accidents there caused the races to be moved to St. Leonard’s Park.
Upper Larriston

Upper Larriston (u-pur-law-ris-tin) n. farmstead near the Larriston Burn, far to the south-east of the present main house at Larriston. It has been suggested that somewhere near here was the original site of the tower of the Elliots. It may have corresponded to the former farm of Over Larriston. A late 18th century cottage there has a carved stone built into it, with the date 1677 and an Elliot monogram. There is also a disused lime works near there, with evidence of an old field system to the south (this is roughly where ‘Larristown’ is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

uppermaist (u-pur-mäist) adj. uppermost – ‘...and there werni mony Border witter-gates whase upper-maist reaches they didni explore’ [HWL].

Upper Raw (u-pur-raw) n. Upper Row, former name for a row of houses in Wilton Dean. It is used in the 1841 census to distinguish it from Fore Row and Burn Row. It probably corresponded to the houses on the track running uphill from the green in the main part of the village. The name was probably never in general use and disappeared by the time of the 1861 census.

Upper Raw (u-pur-raw) n. Upper Row, farmstead in Castleton Parish, marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, lying to the north-west of Netherraw and south-west of Toftsholm, also known as ‘Over Raw’. Gavin Beattie was tenant there in 1694. It was surveyed for the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1718, when it extended to 193 acres, bounded by Toftsholm, Nether Raw, and lands of the Laird of Hoscote. The farmhouse is shown to the south of Toftsholm Sike, where there is no sign of habitation on modern maps. James and William Scott were tenants there in 1797. There are remains of buildings, a field system and rig lines there (it is ‘Overraw’ in 1632 and ‘overraw’ in 1694; it is probably the ‘O. raa’ marked on Blaeu’s c.1654 map, ‘Ouer Raw’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and is ‘Upperraw’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Upper Rig (u-pur-rig) n. name for the field on Hawick Common that is to the east of Pilmuir Rig and north of Bottom Rig (‘rig’ here presumably refers to a strip of ploughed land).

Upper Soothfield (u-pur-sooth-field) n. former name for part of Southfield farm, probably the same as Ower Soothfield.

Upper Teviotdale (u-pur-teev-yi’-däl) n. name generally applied to the Teviot above (and sometimes including) Hawick, much of which later became the Parish of Teviothead. The area was burned by the English around May 1514, when it was described as ‘the hede of the Watter of Tevoyte, from Branksholme up unto Ewse Doors, within the same Marche, beyng 8 miles in lienth, wherupon was 24 pleughes’.

Upper Teviotdale and the Scots of Buccleuch (u-pur-teev-yi’-däl-and-thu-skots-ov-bu-kloo) n. history book written by Mrs. J.R. Oliver and published in Hawick in 1887. Its full title is ‘Upper Teviotdale and the Scots of Buccleuch. A local and family history’. The book is, as the title suggests, a combination of Buccleuch family and local history. Each chapter focuses on a particular chief of the house of Buccleuch (in Victorian sycophantic tones), as well as containing a large amount of scholarly description of what was happening in the Hawick area at the time.

Upper Teviotdale Fisheries Association (u-pur-teev-yi’-däl-fi-shu-teez-aw-so-see-a-shin) n. fishing control body of the late 19th century, made up primarily of the local landowners. It was founded in 1881, following a meeting in Hawick the previous year, and haxids as its objects the prevention of illegal fishing, promotion of sportsman-like angling, and protection of fish stocks. However, there were complaints from the Border Association for the Reform of Fishery Laws and others, that it existed to exclude working class anglers. Its President was the Duke of Buccleuch, and other committee members included Sir Walter Elliot of Wolfelee and William Lockhart of Borthwickbrae. In 1911 the Association agreed to allow Hawick to have its own Angling Club, and since then has worked in cooperation with that Club in the issuing of licenses and the policing of the waterways.

Upper Teviotdale Rifle Corps (u-pur-teev-yi’-däl-r-i-ful-kör) n. Volunteer company set up in 1860 at the instigation of William Elliot, with the Patronage of the Duke of Buccleuch, motivated by the perceived threat from France. The uniforms were grey, and it was the 4th Corps in Roxburghshire, with John Scott Chisholme of Stiches becoming Captain. A second company was formed in 1864 and a drill hall built at the foot of the Mill Path, which became St. Mary’s Church Hall. Some members left in an early dispute to form the Hawick Volunteer Corps later in 1860. The Corps evolved into the Border Rifles in 1868, and after several other changes became the 4th Battalion of the K.O.S.B. in 1908. Their ‘armoury’ or drill hall was at the corner of Allars
Upper Tofts

Crescent and the Mill Path in the late 19th century and later became the Salvation Army headquarters.

Upper Tofts (u-pur-tofts) n. farm beside Kirkton, about 4 miles east of Hawick, and south-west of Nether Tofts. It was formerly also known as ‘High Tofts’ and ‘Over Tofts’. There were Turnbuls there for many generations. The lands were inherited by William, son of Thomas Turnbull of Tofts in 1695. John Lorraine was there in 1722. Thomas Hall was there in 1794 and James Turnbull in 1797. It was farmed by George and Robert Deans (Hawick butchers) in the mid-19th century. The 1863 Ordnance Survey map shows a building to the west that is now gone. There are a couple of disused quarries on Tofts Hill nearby.

Upper Village (u-pur-vi-leej) n. former name for the upper part of the Village, distinct from the Under Village. It was first developed between 1824 and 1828 with the erection of the ‘Hen’s Nest’, on a site later occupied by ‘Woodlands’.

uppie (u-pee) n. someone who plays towards the lower ‘hail’ in a game of ‘baa’ – ‘On nearing the uppies’ hail the leather found its way into the water and was carried across by an uppie who took it away’ [HNe1906].

uppy-roads (u-pee-rödz) adv. upwards – ‘in instead o hingin doon it went uppy-roads’, ‘If this line went ‘uppyroads’ an oo a’ stood on each others shoulders, oo wad be aboot high enough tae reach the Toon Hall clock’ [CT].

upricht (up-right) adj., arch. upright – ‘My saufgaird is in God, which saufes the upricht in hait’ [HSR], ‘Thaye ar brung dowm, an’ fa’n; we are risen an’ stan’ upricht’ [HSR], someone who is upricht – ‘...the upricht sall dwall in thy presince’ [HSR].

uprichtness (up-right-nis) n., poet. uprightness – ‘Thaye stan’ siccer forevir an’ evir, an’ ar dune in trouth an’ uprichtness’ [HSR], ‘I wull praye thee wi’ uprichtness o’ hairt when I lernen thy richeous juudgemints’ [HSR].

uprightly (up-right-lee) adv., poet. uprightly – ‘...do ye juudge uprichtlie, O ye sons o’ men?’ [HSR], ‘He that gangs uprichtlie, an’ wurks richeousniss, an’ speiks the trough in his hairt’ [HSR].

Up wi’ the Banner (up-wi-thu-baw-nur) n. song written for local singer John Bell, with words by Thomas Caldwell and music by Adam Grant. It was first sung at the 1902 Colour Bussing by Colin Jardine, and then at the following 3 Colour Bussings by John Bell. It is the only song of Grant’s with the verses and chorus having different rhythms (the change is from 4/4 time to 3/4). The tune of the verses may have been influenced by Charles Darnton’s ‘The Rescue of Lot’ (1895), while the chorus bears a similarity to part of Elgar’s ‘Pomp and Circumstance March’. However, the song is very much Grant’s own, setting it to Caldwell’s words, which had been written about 1900. Part of the enduring popularity of the song is because it is traditionally the ‘hugging song’, where during the chorus everyone links arms with their neighbours and sways to the waltz beat. Whether this practice originated with the song, or was added later, is unknown; however, such audience participation was popular in Victorian and Edwardian music halls. As sung there is usually a change to the last note in each verse, as well as an inclination to sing ‘she’s Queen’ rather than ‘the Queen’ in the chorus.

Up wi’ the Banner (up-wi-thu-baw-nur) n. song written by James Thomson, with music by William Inglis Robson. The words were written by Thomson only about a year and a half before his death. It was dedicated to Cornet Tom Scott and sung at the 1887 Colour Bussing by Robert Paterson to the tune of ‘Hail to the Chief’. Thomson’s words are clearly inspired by that earlier song (written by Albert Gamse, with music by James Sanderson), which became associated with the President of the United States. These words were themselves loosely based on the ‘Boat Song’ (Canto II XIX) from Sir Walter Scott’s ‘The Lady of the Lake’. Hence Thomson’s first line ‘Hail to the banner that proudly floats o’er us’ derives from Scott’s first line ‘Hail to the chief, who in triumph advances’, and ‘Join in the old refrain – Shout Teriodin again and again’ is inspired by the end of Scott’s first verse ‘Sends our shout back again, ‘Roderigh Vich Alpine Dhu, ho! i-e-roe!’’. In any case, Robson’s tune was composed in late 1887 and published early the following year. The new version was presented at the Colour Bussing of 1888, again sung by Paterson. It has been sung at almost every Colour Bussing ever since. Its popularity at that event is presumably partly because it is such a rousing song, but also because it is a triumphant song in which the Flag is prominent. Note that Thomson originally wrote ‘Boast, Scotland, boast of the deeds of your fathers’, but that quickly became ‘Boast, Hawick, boast!’ The original version also had the chorus after the first 2 verses being ‘Fling out the standard high . . .’, but that is no longer sung. Robson’s tune has an introductory fanfare, which is seldom played. Adam Inglis took the key down a tone for the introductory fanfare, which is seldom played.

ur (ur) v. are – ‘ur ee no Hawick then?’; ‘the Greens ur gaun ti wun the Seevins’ (er and ir are also used).

Urban Electric (ur-bin-ee-lek-treek) n. Urban Electric Supply Company, based at 18–20 Commercial Road. It was the first supplier of electricity in Hawick, starting in 1901 with The Theatre and then the Co-operative Society store. In 1945/46 the electricity supply was changed from locally generated D.C. to A.C. from the national grid. The building was sold to the council in 1968 and now houses an engineering firm.

Ure (yoor) n. Rev. Neil Shaw (1828–84) born in Renfrewshire, son of William and Margaret Brown. He studied at Glasgow University and was licensed to preach by the Free Kirk Presbytery of Lanark in 1858. He was minister of Newcastle Free Kirk 1861–75. There was a case of libel brought against him in 1875, which appears to have led to his resignation. He appears to have failed in a draper’s business in Manchester 1877 and then lived in Largs, Ayrshire, where he died. He married Jessie Simpson in 1877. Their children were: William Simpson (1879–1940), who was killed when a U-boat sunk his ship; and Annie Williamson (1881–84).

Urquhart (ur-kur’) n. Adam of Meldrum (1635–84) from an Aberdeenshire family, he was made a Justice of the Peace in Roxburghshire in 1679 in order to assist Henry Ker (Sheriff-Depute of the county) in prosecuting Covenanters. He was zealous in his duties, and subsequently hated in the district. He brought an action against Thomas Turnbull of Knowe and against the young William Douglas of Cavers and his tutors. He married Mary Gordon, daughter of the Marquess of Huntly and was succeeded by his son John. Rev. George minister at Southdean (linked with Edgerston) 1966–72. William (18th/19th C.) recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory as ‘William, esq. Crescent’. His house on Slitrig Crescent (around No. 2) is marked on Wood’s 1824 map. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’.

use (yoos, yis) n., arch. tradition, custom, particularly in the phrase ‘as use is’ – ‘. . . to be bailies within the said bruche for ane yeir to cum, wha all maid faith and acceptit the said office upon thame as use is’ [BR1638], ‘This tax . . . by the Law of ‘use and wont’ . . . has become part and parcel of the system’ [RW], ‘to be in use of’ meant to be accustomed to – ‘. . . whereas Master John Purdom their Clerk had been in use to have an house rent allowed him by the toum for teaching English Schollars . . .’ [PR1724], v. to enjoy the use of, be accustomed to – ‘. . . that none should come in till the said loft till once the persons that use ane right . . . be once setled in their seats’ [BR1710].

usefæi (yoos-fi) adj. useful (cf. yissfi).

Usher (u-shur) n. Adam ‘Adie’ (d.1624) born in ‘Birkinhanch’ in Liddesdale. He was a servant of Robert Elliot of Redheugh. In 1624 he was convicted of several instances of sheep and cattle stealing, along with his son William, and sentenced to hanging, with his son being banished. The chief of the Elliots escaped punishment for his part in the incident. He and his son were recorded as ‘Adie and Will Vshearis’; the 2 cows and an ox stolen from William Charlton of ‘Islysye’ were said to have been eaten in the house of Robert Elliot of Redheugh. Alexander Balmer ‘Sandy’ (1902–40) son of Sir Robert,
Usher

2nd Baronet. In about 1921 he took over running Bedrule on the family estate. He was a Major in the Lothian and Border Horse, and was killed during the Dunkirk retreat. His tombstone is at St. Valery-en-Caux, while there is a memorial plaque in Bedrule Kirk. Andrew (c. 1782–1855) son of James of Toftfield. His uncle Thomas of Courthill arranged for him to be employed as a retail apprentice for 1 year at Nixon’s hosiery manufacturers in Hawick when he was about 20. He started his own hosiery shop in Edinburgh in 1803, but after a few years had moved into the spirit trade. In 1813 he founded Andrew Usher & Co., whisky distillers and blenders and the Usher Brewery of Edinburgh. He introduced the Glenlivet blend in 1853, had a distillery at Sciennes in Edinburgh and is credited with producing the first mass-produced blended whiskies. He married Margaret, daughter of Thomas Balmer of Ettrickbrae, and she died in 1860. They had 13 children, including Andrew and John, who continued the family firm, and James and Thomas who set up the brewery. Sir Andrew John (1963– ) 8th and present Baronet, eldest son of Sir William John Tevenar. He married Charlotte Louise Alexandra Eldridge and their children are Rory James Andrew and Callum William Edward. Charles Cogan (1884–1959) born in Witton, son of Thomas, he emigrated to Canada in 1903, where he farmed in Alberta with his brother Thomas. He returned to Scotland to enlist in the K.O.S.B. and was awarded the Military Cross in WWI. He married Harriet Helen Jones and they had 3 children. Charles F.J. (b. 1910s) worked under Hawick architect Alexander Inglis, from 1936. In 1950 he was taken into partnership with Inglis, and in 1957 he also became a partner in the Galashiels practice of Elder & Cairns. In 1959 he formed a partnership with J. Murray Aitken, this becoming ‘Aitken & Turnbull’s’. He emigrated to New Zealand in 1965. Harry, J.P. (1886–1975) youngest son of Thomas of Courthill. He served as a Major in the Home Guard during WWII. He ran Bedrule farm, among others. He married Edith (Nancy) Agnes Scott Oliver (daughter of solicitor James John Oliver) and their children were Harry James, Christian Agnes and Charles ‘John’. He was buried in Wilton Cemetery. James of Toftfield (1738–1816) son of John of Toftfield. He married Margaret Grieve in 1765; she was daughter of Hugh and Margaret Darling. Their children included John of Toftfield, Margaret (who married Dr. James Moffat), James, Thomas (who moved to Jamaica), George (also went to Jamaica), William, Andrew (the successful whisky merchant), another Janet (who married William Dunlop) and another James. James (1796–1821) son of Thomas of Courthill and brother of lawyer John and farmer Thomas. He is listed as being at Courthill in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821, the same year that he died. He is buried in Wilton Kirk. James (1796–1839) W.S., solicitor to the Supreme Court in Edinburgh. He was son of John of Toftfield and Janet Oliver. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He represented the trustees of the deceased Andrew Thomson (who married an Usher) in 1828. Jane (1816–62) daughter of Andrew, wine and spirit merchant of Edinburgh. She married her cousin Thomas Usher of Courthill. A photograph of her exists. John of Toftfield (1766–1847) born in Melrose, son of James of Toftfield. He was the 3rd and last Laird of Toftfield, selling the estate to Sir Walter Scott in 1819, and moving to Leaderfoot and Quarryford in Haddingtonshire. Toftfield had been purchased by his grandfather, also John, in 1753. He married Janet Oliver of Chesters and later Agnes Blaikie of Melrose. Altogether he had 14 children, including James, S.S.C., John (Makerstoun) and Jane (last surviving member of the family, dying in 1897). John (1794–1864) W.S., son of Thomas and Isabella Pott. He trained as a lawyer in Edinburgh and became Writer to the Signet in 1822. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. He died unmarried. John (1809–96) son of John of Toftfield, he was a farmer at Stodrig and also known as a poet, as well as being a great horse lover and authority on Border sheep. He was Honorary Secretary of the Border Coursing Club. It is said that he was rewarded with a pony for singing to Sir Walter Scott when a boy. In his day he was called ‘the Laureate of the Borders’ and known around Kelso as ‘Auld Usher’. He wrote ‘Border breeds of sheep’ (1875) and ‘Poems and songs’ (1894). He also acted as Clerk of the Course at Kelso Races. He married Margaret Warwick Morton, who died in 1877. Their children were John (farmer at Gatehousecote), Emily Gordon and Samuel Morton who died in infancy. John (1840–1892) son of John of Stodrig, Makerstoun and grandson of John Usher of Toftfield. He was educated in St. Andrews and at Edinburgh University. He became tenant at Gatehousecote in 1863 and remained there until he died. In 1868 he was referred to ‘junior' when he was farmer at Gatehousecote. He was known as an all-round sportsman, being a keen horse-rider, fisherman, shooter and follower of the Jedforest Hunt, although apparently not such a good farmer. He joined the Border Mounted Rifles at their inaugural meeting in Hawick in 1872, where he became Colour-Sergeant. He was also a member of the Lothian Yeomanry. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1872. In 1875 he was a Steward at the Common Riding Races. He was Whip of the Jedforest Hounds 1885–92. He married Isabella, daughter of William Aitcheson of Brieryhill. They had only one child, a son who died in infancy. He died of influenza after a period of ill-health (it is said he died of a chill contracted at the Derby). Sir John (1828–1904) 1st Baronet of Norton and Wells, youngest son of Sir Robert. Along with his brother Andrew he carried on the family whisky distilling business in Edinburgh. He gifted the ‘John Usher Institute of Public Health’ to Edinburgh (while Andrew gifted the Usher Hall to the city). He purchased the farms and estates of Hallrule, Bedrule (including Fulton) and Wells (including East Fodderlee) from Elliott of Stobs in 1895/6; these also came with associated baronies. He also owned Norton (near Edinburgh Airport), Pitticglis Castle (near Perth) and land in Caithness. He said to be a keen fox-hunter, enjoying riding with the hounds till his last days. He served as Whip for the Jedforest Hounds in the period 1885–92. A keen Liberal in his youth, he transferred his allegiance to the Unionists after 1886, becoming the first Treasurer of the East and North of Scotland Liberal Unionist Association and later being Chairman of the Liberal Unionist Committee of Midlothian. He was also a benefactor of the Free Church. He married his cousin Mary Anne, daughter of James Turner of Courthill (1755–1824), son of John of Toftfield, near Melrose. He was ‘writer’ in Hawick and in the Royal Pioneer Corps in WWII, and had a reputation for being eccentric, usually carrying a shepherd’s crook and wearing a monocle. He was a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He married Jean Elspeth Usher, daughter of Harry and grand-daughter of the brewer Thomas. Their children were Katherine Alice and Jacquelin. He was succeeded by his brother Sir R. Stuart. Mary Anne (1868–1955) wife of Thomas Leadbetter. She was President of Bedrule Women’s Guild 1944–53. There is a memorial plaque to her and her husband inside Bedrule Kirk. Sir Peter Lionel of Norton and Wells (1931–90) created 5th Baronet after the sudden death of his father. Along with his brother Robert, he had Downe’s Syndrome, and was brought up in Argentina to avoid family shame. His appointment as Baronet caused great consternation in the Usher family and ultimately led to the estates being sold off. Sir Robert of Norton and Wells (1860–1933) 2nd Baronet, son of Sir John. He earned the title of the ‘Whisky King’, with his huge warehouse at St. Leonard’s in Edinburgh. He found the old house at Wells to be unsuitable and so had it demolished, with the new Edwardian house built there in 1906. He also funded the enlargement of Bedrule Kirk in 1914 (with a memorial plaque to his parents placed in the church). He was the first President of Rulewater Miniature Rifle Club in 1905. He married Katherine Scott Turnbull, who died in 1948 and was daughter of James Turnbull of Abbey St. Bathans. They had 6 sons: Sir John Turnbull, who succeeded; Ronald James, who died young; Sir R. Stuart; Maj. Alexander Balmer; William Dove; and Brig. Thomas Clive. His daughters were Jean and Grizel Mary, who both died as infants. He is buried in Bedrule churchyard. Sir Robert Stuart ‘Stuart’ of Norton and Wells (1898–1963), brother of Sir John and son of Sir Robert, he was the 4th Baronet. Note that his name was also written ‘Stewart’. He was a keen country sportsman and died at a meeting of the Buccleuch Hunt. He married Gertrude Marta (who died in 1984), and their sons Peter and Robert both suffered from Downe’s Syndrome. Robert Edward of Norton and Wells (1934–94) 6th Baronet and last of the Ushers to reside at either Norton or Wells. He suffered from Downe’s Syndrome, like his brother Peter, who he succeeded. Since he could not make a will, the estates were liquidated on his death. He is the last Usher to be buried at Bedrule. Thomas of Courtthill (1755–1824), son of John of Toftfield, near Melrose. He was a ‘writer’ in Hawick and Sheriff Substitute of Roxburghshire. He served as 'deponent' for the estate of William Oliver 'Old Cash', after his death in 1808. He was a writer and bachelor in Hawick in 1787 when he paid tax for having a female servant. He also paid the same tax in Hawick in 1789, but in 1791 in Jedburgh. He was in Jedburgh in 1791 when he subscribed to John Learmont's book of poetry in 1791. He was a writer in Jedburgh in 1794 when he paid the Horse Tax there. He paid the Horse Tax in Hawick in 1785–89 and in Jedburgh from 1790. He is probably the Thomas who was recorded at Burnhead in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Wilton; he owned 9 farm horses at that time, as well as 1 saddle horse. He also paid the dog tax at Burnhead in 1797. He married Isabella Pott of Penchrise (of whom an oil painting exists). The couple resided at Courthill and were highly regarded in their day. When Dr. Chalmers was Minister at Cavers he was a frequent visitor. He was associated with Chalmers publication 'Sermon on the duty of making a testament, to which is added the form of a testament', published in Hawick in 1812, and where he is referred to as a notable public. He is recorded as a subscriber to many literary works of his day, including 'The Poetical Museum' (published in Hawick in 1784) and Robert Burns 'Poems, chiefly in the Scottish Dialect' of 1787, as well as Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' (published in 1825). He was among the first to be listed on the 'Donations' page for the Hawick Savings Bank in 1815. His children were: John (b.1794), W.S. in Edinburgh; James (b.1796), died aged 25; Janet (or Jean, b.1797), married John Elliot, banker of Jedburgh; and Thomas (b.1803) of Courthill, who married his cousin Jane Usher. He is buried in old Wilton cemetery. Thomas of Courthill (1803–82) son of Thomas. He farmed at Courthill, like his father. He was listed at Courthill among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835–41. In 1851 he is recorded as farmer of 399 acres, employing 19 labourers and a factor, and in 1861 was farming 363 acres and employing 14 people. He was an elder of the Hawick Free Kirk for 32 years, and served as a Commissioner at the 1865 General Assembly. He also served as a Commissioner for the county of Roxburghshire. He married Jane Usher of Edinburgh. Their children were Thomas and Margaret. He became blind in later life. A photograph of him exists. Thomas (1819–94) son of Thomas and Helen Ewart. He was the 13th Usher to be feuar of lands at Eildon. His brother John trained for the ministry, but died aged 19. He was a shepherd at several farms, including Hawthornside. He married Ann Murray in 1854, and their children included: Elizabeth Colcleuch, who married Thomas Carruthers; Helen Anne, who died at Mansfield Square in Hawick; and Margaret Murray, who also died at Mansfield Square. He later lived at Weensmoor with his sister Mrs. Renwick. Thomas (1826–1902) born in Edinburgh, son of James S.S.C., he worked as a law clerk. He married Eliza Dickson McFarlane and they had 6 children. He was founder and for a long time Acting Secretary of the Edinburgh Border Counties Association. He also wrote an account of 'The Usher Family of Darnick' in 1893. Thomas (1850–1910) farmer at Courthill, son of Thomas. He married his cousin Gretrude Usher of Edinburgh (daughter of brewer Thomas). He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1872. In 1897 he journeyed around the world, visiting Africa, Australia, New Zealand and Canada, to find opportunities for his sons. His children were Eliza Jane, Gretrude, Thomas, Charles Cogan and Harry. Thomas (1882–1972) born in Wilton, son of Thomas of Courthill. He married Margaret Dorothy, a distant cousin (keeping up the tradition of marrying into the family, being the 3rd successive Thomas to marry his cousin!). He emigrated to Calgary, Canada in 1902, building up the Usher Brother's ranch with his brother Charles. He had 5 surviving children. Thomas Clive (1907–82) career soldier. He was Military Advisor to the British High Commissioner in India 1955–57, Commanded the 18th Training Brigade of the Royal Artillery Scottish Command, retiring to the British High Commissioner in India 1955–57, was Aide-de-Camp to the Queen in 1958 and in 1958 became Brigadier of the Royal Artillery Scottish Command, retiring later that year. He is buried in Bedrule churchyard. William ‘Will’ (17th C.) son of Adie. In 1624 they were both convicted of a series of thefts of cattle, sheep and goats. His father was hanged in Edinburgh, but given his minority he was banished from the United Kingdom. William Dove (1904–69) son of Sir Robert and Katherine Scott Turnbull. He married Christa Elizabeth von Tevenar and their sons were William John Tevenar and Stuart Alexander. Sir William John Tevenar (1940–98) 7th Baronet. He married Rosemary Margaret Houldsworth. His eldest son Sir Andrew John is the 8th and present Baronet.

The family is mentioned in the Peebles area in the 15th century, then in the Bridgend, Darnick and Melrose areas from the 17th century. Originally weavers and small-holders, Toffield was the first family seat, from which sprang the Courthill, Leaderfoot, Stodrig and Edinburgh branches. This last diverged into brewing and whisky blending (leaving the Usher Hall to the city, for example) and gaining several large estates, including those at Hallrule, Hyndhope, Norton and Wells — ‘The Ushers o’ Courthill, They’re a’ sae kind to me, Whiles they send me tatties And whiles a pickle tea’ [RM].

usqueba (ooz-kwe-ba) n., poet. whisky — ‘The usqueba, our gabs shall weet, By water chrest’ned duly’ [JoHa].

Usuch Haugh see Usuch Haugh

Usuch Haugh (oo-such-lawch) n. part of the original Common at the southern end of town. Its precise location is not known, but it seems likely that it corresponds to the Brewery Haugh. Whisky Houses is probably also the same place and a corruption of the name. It is recorded in 1737 that the Bailies and Council ‘marched that part of the Common called Usuch Haugh, adjacent to the Duke of Buccleuch’s interest, by setting down 8 marchstones on the east side, and one on the west side of the Water of Slitrig’ (origin uncertain, but perhaps derived from Gaelic ‘watery’ plus haugh).

uther (u-thur) n., arch. an udder.

Utnomound (ut-nou-mound) n. possible name of lands in southern Liddesdale, listed along with Whisgills and Purvinen in the 1541 rental roll. The name is transcribed as ‘Vtnomound’, and it does not appear to correspond with any place on contemporary or modern maps. It is also transscribed as ‘Burnmouth’ and so it is possible the name is just an error.

uttermaist (u-tur-mast) adj., arch. utmost, greatest — ‘...at the vternest of our powaros, as an gentillmann aucth to do to thair cheif’ [SB1585], ‘A party, admitted burgess, makes oath to defend the religion professed, and maintain and assist the bailies, officers, and the town to his uttermost’ [BR1640].

Vair (vair) n. Andrew (17th/18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His children Agnes (b.1719) and Isabel (b.1722) were baptised there. James T. (1840–1908) reporter and publisher who launched the Hawick News along with John McNairn in 1882. He was born in Selkirk and worked on the Southern Reporter and elsewhere before coming to Hawick to work on the Hawick Advertiser. He died from complications following a collision on his bicycle on the High Street and is buried in the Wellogate. John (17th/18th C.) gardener in Hawick. His surname is written both ‘Vare’ and ‘Vayre’. He married Agnes Nichol and their son James was baptised in 1703, with witnesses Patrick McLellan and William Gardner, also gardeners (also written ‘Vare’ and ‘Vayre’).

vairse (vais) n., arch. a verse, v. to verse — ‘he’s weel vaired in his local history’.

vairy (vai-ree) v., arch. to show the first symptoms of dilirium (noted by E.C. Smith; also written ‘vairy’).

vaise (vais) n. a vase — ‘A think A’ll gang an buy that vaiz; it nate neebers thon yin on the brace at hyimm’ [ECS] (also written ‘vaiz’).

vale (vail) n., poet. a valley — ‘A sigh on every breeze is borne, That whispers through the vale ...’ [JT], ‘Fornent iz, aitht the fer seide o Teiot’s flooery vale ...’ [ECS].

Valence (vaw-lins) n. Aymer 2nd Earl of Pembroke (c.1275–1324) 3rd son of William and Isabell of Angouleme. He held extensive lands in England, as well as France and was extremely powerful in the time of Edward II. In 1300 he was responsible to Edward I for provisioning Selkirk Castle. He served as a commander on the Ed-
in 1306 and being beaten at Louden Hill in 1307. In 1306 he received a gift of Selkirk Castle, with forest and lands, as well as the heritable Sheriffdoms of Selkirk and Peebles. He was Edward II’s Lieutenant in Scotland, and was present at Bannockburn in 1314. He also served as Sheriff of Roxburgh. He married Beatrice, daughter of Raoul de Clermont, and secondly married Marie de St. Pol, daughter of Gui de Châtillon, who founded Pembroke College in Cambridge. He had one (illegitimate) son, Henry. He died while travelling to France. Andrew (15th C.) listed among local men as witness to the 1464/5 sasine for the lands of Kirkton Mains and Flex. His name is recorded as ‘Andrea Valance’.

Valentine (vaw-lin-tyn) n. Alec Richard (b.1928) from Hawick, he played flanker for Hawick R.F.C. He was capped 3 times for Scotland in 1953. His younger brothers Dave and Rob also played for Scotland. David ‘Dave’ (1926–) born in Hawick, he played rugby locally, then was capped for Scotland in 1947. Later that year he signed for English Rugby League side Huddersfield and eventually played for Great Britain, including leading the team to victory in the 1954 World Cup.

Vales see Valesburn

Vales Brig (välz-brig) n. bridge taking the A7 over the Valesburn, just after Newmill. There were the remains of an earthwork on the opposite side of the Teviot from here, but now almost totally obliterated by ploughing.

the Vales Burn (thâu-välz-burn) n. stream that joins the Teviot from roughly the west at Newmill, rising near Slaidhills Moss. It marks the boundary between Hawick Parish and Teviothead Parish. A farm near here had the same name. An aqueduct is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, conveying the mill lade for Newmill across the burn.

Valesburn (välz-burn) n. farm just to the west of Newmill, where the Valesburn joins the Teviot. It is ‘Vailles’ in the 1627 valuation of Hawick Parish. It is probably the ‘vaills’ adjacent to Newmill where John Laidlaw was listed as tenant in 1694 and the ‘vaills’ where William Nichiol was listed among the poor of the parish. It was surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718, consisting of 36 acres and bounded by Branxholme Moor, Hott and Harwood. The name ‘Valesburn’ is recorded on the 1841 census and the 1853 Ordnance Survey map, to the left of the A7 just after Newmill. James Elliot was shepherd there in the early 19th century. Riddells and Millers lived there in 1841 (also written ‘Vales Burn’, it is ‘Vailles’ in 1718).

valetudinary (və-li-chew-di-nu-ree) adj., arch. in poor health, sickly, ill, feeble – ‘...in regard he is become valetudinarie and troubled with an uneasiness in his hough and feet whereby he is not able to go up to the usual place of repentance’ [PR1721], ‘...and the other of them is not so, his wife being valetudinary, and can make no shift for a livelihood’ [PR1725].

Valley View (vaw-lee-vev) n. name of a house in Sunnyhill.

Valognes (va-lo-nes) n. Philip (d.1215) 3rd son of Roger de Valognes, and Agnes, daughter of John Fitz Richard. He became Chamberlain of Scotland under William the Lion, serving about 1165–1171 and again about 1193–1214. He was reappointed Chamberlain under Alexander II, but died soon afterwards. The family lands were in Hertfordshire, however, he also held Bennie and Pannmore in Angus, Torphenhoe in Cumberland and Ringwood in Roxburghshire. Some time in the period 1165–71 he granted the lands of Ringwood to Melrose Abbey, confirming the earlier grant by Oswulf. He was Chamberlain some time in the period 1173–82 when Walter of Berkeley was granted the lands of ‘Neutun’ by King William. In about 1185 he witnessed a confirmation of the grant of lands in Eskdale to Melrose Abbey by the Avenels. His son William became Chamberlain after him. His daughter Sibyl married Robert de Stuteville, who held the lands of Liddell in Cumberland. He was buried in the chapter house of Melrose Abbey.

valuation roll (vawl-yoo-ə-shin-ról) n. a list of rateable values in a city, burgh or distract, along with the name of the owner and tenant. These are useful documents for tracing the history of specific properties. Hawick valuation rolls from 1868 (when Hawick became a Parliamentary Burgh) are in the National Archives, before that the Town’s roll was included in that for Roxburghshire.

van (vawn) n., poet. abbreviated form of ‘vanguard’, the forefront – ‘So I like auld Hawick and her spirit I like, That leaps still forth to the van’ [FH], ‘The first and foremost in the van Where truant ladies flock; The leader o’ the ranger clan Is our little Jock’ [JT], ‘When drum and fife went through the town On Common Riding morn, Wi’ deadly halberts in the van, By burgh beagles borne’ [??].

Vancouver (vaw-koo-vur) n. largest city in British Columbia, and area to which many locals emigrated in the late 19th and early 20th centuries. A Hawick Callants’ Club was formed in Vancouver in 1913 with over 30 members. They held their own Common Riding for many years, with an elected Council. About 60 people apparently enjoyed the celebration in 1920, and there are photographs of the ‘Hawick Common Riding Annual Picnic’ on Bowen Island in c.1919, 1921, 1922 and 1923, some showing around 150 people gathered there.

Van den Biesen (van-din-bee-sin) n. Fr. (19th/20th C.) chaplain at St. Margaret’s Convent from 1914.

Vass (vaws) n. Henry (b.1730) son of William, he was born in Hob Kirk Parish and lived in Abbotrule. In 1762 he married Isobel Scott, the marriage being recorded in both Hawick and Southdean Parishes. Their children included: William (b.1763); Walter (b.1768); Nelly (b.1770); Walter (again, b.1772); Henry (b.1772); an unnamed child (b.1776); and Isobel (b.1779). In 1776 he is listed in Tidlerhill. His surname may be a variant of some more common name.

Vassal (vaw-sul) n. Col. Rawdon John Popham (c.1801–84) son of Spencer Thomas, who died in the assault on Monte Video in 1807. He was younger brother of Sir Spencer Lambert Hunter, naval captain. He was Major in the 78th Regiment of Highlanders. He married Margaret Emily Boswell in 1848; she was sister of Theresa, wife of Sir William Eliott of Stobs and Wells. He lived for a while at Wells House, possibly only during the summer months for the ‘shooting’; he is also referred to as ‘of Stobs’, and seems also to have similarly taken Stobs Castle. Many transactions involving him are recorded in the diary of Robert Grieve in the late 1850s. Along with his wife he presented a silver flagon to St. Cuthbert’s Kirk, and they were also present at its consecration in 1858. His wife presented the Crowbyres Kirk, and they were also present at its consecration in 1858. His wife presented the Crowbyres Vassie (vaw-see) n. Rev. William (1856–1917) born at Croftonhill in Lanarkshire, 3rd son of John and Mary Lamb Murray. He graduated M.A. from Edinburgh University in 1878 and B.D. in 1881, and was licensed by Lanark Presbytery. His first charge was as assistant at Govan. Then in 1883 he was ordained as minister of Castleton Parish Kirk. In 1885 he married Cecilia Pitcairn, daughter of David Playfair, minister of Abercorn. Their children included: John (b.1887), who was a sales manager in Tacoma, U.S.A.; Jane Kincaid (b.1888); Ethel Mary (b.1890); William Playfair (d.1895); and William (1896–). He died at Kingussie and his wife died 3 weeks later.

He moved to Ashby-de-la-Zouch in 1955 and Bethany, Glasgow in 1958. He was then minister of Newcastle Congregational Kirk 1965–71. In 1971 he moved to New Maria, Neath in Glamorgan. He was later a missionary in Nigeria. He published a Masters thesis about his life in Nigeria, ‘Pilgrim with a Limp’ (1983) and a history of the British Apostolic mission in Nigeria in 1991, at the age of 90.

V-bed (vee-bed) n. a knitting machine in which there are 2 beds of needles arranged at roughly 90° to each other.

V.E. Day (vee-ce-da) n. day marking the end of WWII hostilities in Europe, held on 7th May 1945. Festivities in and around Hawick were fairly muted compared with V.J. Day, although there was some dancing in the streets and although there was little evidence of celebrations along the High Street, other areas, such as Dickson Street and the West End were festooned with flags and bunting. There were also many bonfires lit, e.g. a large one built by soldiers at Weensland, which burned for 3 days, and some had effigies of Hitler in place of Guy Fawkes. A group of about 200 people gathered on the Miller’s Knowes in the evening to watch the fires on the town and nearby Border hills. There was a 50th anniversary ceremony in the Haugh on May 7th 1995.

Veeious (vee-shis, veesh-yis) adj. vicious – ‘An sic veeshyis fechteen as it was, tui!’ [ECS] (there are spelling variants).

Veitch (veech) n. Adam (16th C.) listed as ‘Adam Vache’ in 1526 when he was among the Borders men pardoned for accompanying the Homes on an attack on the Earl of Arran. It is unclear to which branch of the Veitches or Waughs he belonged. Alexander and George are listed later in the same 1526 document. Perhaps the same Adam is recorded in Selkirk in 1528 when he witnessed a document for the lands of Leweshope. Adam (d.1801) ‘under miller’ of Hawick (i.e. an assistant to the miller). He had 2 children (one illegitimate) die in 1799, and another in 1801. He could be the Adam from Hawick who in 1798 married Janet Brown, who was from Langholm. Agnes (17th/18th C.) recorded receiving money from Ashkirk Parish in 1727.

Alexander (13th C.) recorded in Ashkirk Parish in 1319 when he witnessed a charter for the Hays of Yester. He was a witness to the charter of the granting of half of Bransholme from the Inglis’s to the Scotts; he is there ‘Bernaba de Wache’. In 1420 he was witness to the charter of the granting of half of Ashkirk Parish. In 1420 he was witness to the charter of the granting of half of Ashkirk Parish. In 1420 he was witness to the charter of the granting of half of Bransholme from the Inglis’s to the Scotts; he is there ‘Bernaba de Wache’. In 1434/5 he witnessed charter for the Hays of Yester. He was succeeded by his son Paul. Capt. ?? (17th/18th C.) served with the 21st Fusiliers. He was said to be a brother of Lord Bowhill (John Murray), so presumably a brother-in-law. He married the widow of a private in his regiment, and she was a Gledstains, related to the Gledstains of Dod. sometime in the early 1700s his wife inherited the lands of Dod. However, he is said to have been extravagant and fairly quickly sold the lands to James Pott. Christian (18th C.) recorded at Falnash Mill in 1757 when her son James was baptised in Hawick Parish. No father’s name was given. Douglas ‘Champion Doug Veitch’ (1960–) born in Hawick, he worked as a house-painter, but turned temporary pop star, being referred to as ‘the King of Caledonian Cajun Swing’. He made several records in the 1980s and had his own minor record label, ‘Disc Afrique’, which was one of the first in Britain to promote African music. His hit ‘One Black Night’ reached No. 45 in the U.K. charts in 1985, ‘Jumping Into Love’ made the NME top-50 list for the same year, and he holds the record for the most consecutive singles (6) to make the NME single of the week. His other singles are: ‘Lumiere Urban’, ‘Another place, another time’, ‘Not the Heart’, ‘Gone Train’ and ‘Margarita’. He was also involved in bringing the Bhundu Boys to Britain (and Hawick!), which helped fuel the World Music fashion of the mid-1980s. He released an album of Scottish dance music in 1989 under the

William James of North Synton (1552). However, the ownership of North Synton estates passed to James Cockburn of Skirling in lands forfeited, the superiority of the Cockburn after her brother was hanged in 1530 and his father acquired the lands of North Synton. About 1510 he served heir to her father's lands of Clerklands in 1641/2. His daughter Helen married James, son of Walter Veitch of North Synton. She was served heir to his lands of Clerklands in 1641/2. Helen (17th C.) daughter of George of Clerklands. She was served heir to her father's lands of Clerklands in 1641/2. James of Dawyck (d.c.1552) received the estates from his father William in 1536. This included the lands at North Synton. About 1510 he married Margaret Cockburn, sister of the reiver William Cockburn of Henderland, and probably through her acquired the lands of North Synton. After her brother was hanged in 1530 and his lands forfeited, the superiority of the Cockburn estates passed to James Cockburn of Skirling in 1552. However, the ownership of North Synton (as well as Dawyck) passed to his son and heir William. James of North Synton (16th/17th C.) son of Walter of North Synton. In 1550 he was son and heir of Walter when the pair witnessed a marriage contract in Selkirk between James Scott in Whitslade and Elizabeth, sister of Robert Scott in Aikwood. Also in 1580 he witnessed a sale of woods by Robert Scott of Aikwood. In 1582/3 he was a cautioner for Gilbert Ker of Primside Loch (and someone else subscribed for him 'because I can not wrett'). He was probably the James, 'younger of North Synton' who, along with Andrew Veitch (brother of the Laird of Tourhope) killed John Tweedie (tutor of Drummelzier) on Edinburgh High Street in 1590. This was in revenge for the murder 4 days earlier of Patrick Veitch (son of William of Dawyck) by James Tweedie of Drummelzier among others. The feud continued between the families until at least 1611 when King James issued a proclamation on the matter. The 2 Veitches were eventually pardoned by the King; however, the family feud continued for at least another couple of decades. He was served heir to his father Walter in 1601; the lands were described as having 'tower and fortalice' and being annexed within the Barony of Dawyck. In 1604 he held a charter of the lands of Corslie in Ettrick Forest (on Gala Water) and was said to also be the tenant there. He was succeeded by his son Walter in 1609. James (17th C.) eldest son of Walter of North Synton, who had sold off most of the family estates in 1641. He and John are recorded in 1643 as owners of Clerklands in Ashkirk Parish, valued at £182. He married Helen, daughter of George Veitch of Clerklands, who must have been a close cousin. James (17th C.) resident of Robertson, when it contained Hassendean. He married Helen Turnbull in 1684 and their son Robert was baptised in 1686. The witnesses were James Turnbull (perhaps related to his wife) and George Scott. He witnessed baptisms for John Cochrane and John Rule in Robertson in 1686. James (17th C.) listed as resident at Whitfield in Wilton Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th/18th C.) listed among the residents of North Synton estate in the Hearth Tax roll of 1694: John is listed after him and so presumably related. He is probably a descendant of the earlier James who lived at North Synton. Probably the same John married Agnes Scott and their children included: Christian (b.1679); Margaret (b.1687); Francis (b.1690); and William (b.1694). The witnesses in 1690 were William Easton (who also lived at North Synton) and George Scott; also in 1690 he and George Scott witnessed a baptism for William Easton. In 1691 he (along with William Easton) witnessed baptisms for John Tait and for Robert Turnbull. The witnesses to the 1694 of his son were John and Robert, who were probably related. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Elspeth Stavert and their children included John (b.1696), James (b.1699) and Isobel (b.1704). James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish, recorded in 1698 as a servant in Synton. In 1698 he married Helen Dickson, who was a servant in Woll. Their unnamed child was baptised in 1700. James (1672/3–1766) blacksmith at Falnash. He married Mary Riddell in Hawick in 1706 and she died in 1743, aged 66. Their children included: Margaret and Jean, who Probably married young; and James (1721/2–1807), who married Helen Elliot, who died at Binks. He died at Falnash Mill. James (1695–1775) 2nd son of wright John. He is the progenitor of the Inchbonny branch of the family. He lived at Mossburnford, working as a joiner and wood merchant. He purchased Inchbonny Braes from Sir John Rutherford in 1738. He married (possibly Isobell Richardson in 1722) and his sons were John (who carried on the business, but died unmarried), James (who farmed at Inchbonny and is the ancestor of the Jedburgh and Rulewater Veitches) and William (who was a wright at Inchbonny).
Veitch

James (1727–92) tenant farmer at Spittal Mill, son of John. He married Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’), daughter of John Murray, farmer at Spittal-on-Rule; she died in 1809, aged 73. Their children were: Jean, who died in childhood; Andrew, who died young; Thomas, also died young; John, who succeeded his father in the farm; James, who was a doctor in Jamaica and died at Montego Bay in 1800; William (d.1786); Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’), who married her neighbour Thomas Bunyan; and George (d.1821). Most of the family are buried in Bedrule kirkyard. James (1762–1800) 2nd son of James and Betty Murray, born in Cavers Parish. He was educated as a doctor and practised in Montego Bay, Jamaica, where he died.

James (d.c.1833) farmer at Binks, listed there in 1791 when he paid the cart tax. He was also on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He could be the James who in 1802 witnessed a baptism for John Helm. He left Binks farm in about 1822, setting up as a grocer and meal dealer in Langholm. He is probably the James listed at Langholm in the subscription list for William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He does not appear on the 1841 census, and so presumably was deceased by then. He is probably the Teviothead resident, married to Isabel Brydon, whose children included: James (b.1795), a labourer in Langholm in 1841; Walter (b.1796); Thomas (b.1800), who drove meal etc. from Hawick for his father; and Margaret (b.1803), who married Francis Scoon. James (1771–1838) eldest son of wright William. He farmed at Inchbonny. He was described by Sir Walter Scott as a ‘self-taught philosopher, astronomer and mathematician’, and had a strong influence on the young David Brewster. He was said to be a great maker of telescopes, which he used to observe the heavens; he was the first person in Britain to see the great comet of 1811. He also made clocks and a new plough design. He is supposed to have preserved the sword of the famed Ringan Oliver, whose sister was his own great-grandmother (this was among historical artefacts shown by his descendant James in 1924). He is listed as a maker of telescopes, microscopes, etc., in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He was a great friend of Hawick millwright and amateur astronomer Gideon Scott. His children were William (millwright at Inchbonny, who married Agnes Barrie from Hawthornside), John (who died young), James (who became minister of St. Cuthbert’s in Edinburgh), Betty (who lived to her 90s, and was one of the last people living to have spoken with Sir Walter Scott) and other daughters. James (19th/20th C.) tenant of Harwood Mill. He was Secretary of Rulewater Miniature Rifle Club from 1905. Janet (17th C.) resident of North Synton in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor’. John (15th/16th C.) 3rd son of William of Dawyck. In 1481 he was granted a charter of the Mains of Synton (possibly North Synton) by his brother Alexander, in exchange for Easter Dawyck. He thus started the branch of the Veitches of North Synton (although the lands were held by the family since at least 1407). He and his father William were granted the lease of Crosslee (in Ettrick) in 1488, until at least 1492. He is probably the ‘Johanne Waych de Syntoun’ who witnessed the document relating to the tower in Hawick ‘between the bridges’ for Scott of Whitchesters in 1507/8, and probably the ‘Johannem Vaiche’ on the panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting Alemoor in 1509. In 1531 he and William, and their ‘brothers german’ were involved in a dispute over the lands of Synton and Crosslee with Walter Scott in Synton, Adam Scott (brother-in-law of Walter Scott) and Walter, son of George (and nephew of Adam Scott); they were pleading to have the tutorship of Walter (and hence rights to his lands, marriage, etc.). He was probably the same man later known as John of North Synton, possessing the estate from at least 1533, when he was part of an inquest in Jedburgh over lands in Longnewton. The next owner appears to have been Walter, probably the young son of George. In 1535 there was a dispute with William Veitch of Dawyck, his superior, which ended with him giving up Corslee (on the Gala Water) in return for keeping North Synton. He could be the ‘Johne Vachte’ who was listed among the Border Lairds of Selkirkshire who submitted themselves to James V in 1530, to keep better order. He was probably the ‘Johanne Waithe’ who had 5 cows stolen from ‘Corsle’, as...

The witnesses in 1656 were Robert (surely a relative) and John Hislop. Robert (16th C.) son of Walter of North Synton. In 1580/1 he paid the agent of Margaret Douglas of Bothwell the sum of £30 for part of the annual rent on the lands of ‘Over Maines of Hassindaneburne’, which had been wadset by Robert Scott of Alton. Robert (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1694 (along with John) he witnessed a baptism for James (who lived at North Synton). He married Janet Coltart and their children included: John (b.1689); James (b.1691); Gideon (b.1693); Janet (b.1695); Margaret (b.1697); James (b.1701); and Robert (b.1703). Robert (17th/18th C.) resident in Philhope in 1715 and 1718 and Broadlee in 1722. His surname is written ‘Veatch’. He is probably the son of James and Helen Turnbull, born in Robertson Parish in 1686. His children included: Jean (b.1713); Helen (b.1715); Mary (b.1718); William (b.1719); and Christian (b.1722). Thomas (17th C.) recorded in Ashkirk Parish in 1661 when he witnessed a baptism for John Hislop and Isobel Veitch. Thomas (17th C.) recorded as ‘mealmaker’ at Newton Mill, Bedrule Parish in 1691, probably related to John the wright at Bedrule. He was also listed on the Hearth Tax roll in 1694, with ‘The Kilne’ listed right after him. He is probably the Thomas whose children, baptised in Bedrule, included William (b.1691) and Isabel (b.1694). Thomas (b.1692) son of wright John. He was shepherd at Spittal Tower. His children included: Thomas (b.1714), baptised in Bedrule; Walter (b.1716), baptised in Cavers; and William (b.1719), baptised in Bedrule. Helen (b.1728), baptised in Cavers, may have been his daughter, if he was living at Dykes at that point. Thomas (17th/18th C.) recorded receiving money from Ashkirk Parish in 1727. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His children included William (b.1737). Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His children included Agnes (b.1764). Thomas (1720/1–1807) gardener in Edgerston. His wife, Mary (or Mariane) Scott, died in 1780, aged 50. Their son Archibald (1777/8–1836) lived for a while in Jamaica. They had an unnamed son baptised in Jedburgh in 1767. They are buried in Bedrule kirkyard and must be related to the Spittal Mill family. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His wife was Jane Cockburn and their son James was baptised in 1761. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. His wife was Agnes Hall and their son Adam was baptised in 1773. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at Unthank in Hobkirk Parish, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He probably also farmed at Wester Swanshiel, and other nearby lands, which were at that time let along with Unthank. ‘T. Veitch’s wife’ who died in Hobkirk Parish in 1812 could have been his wife. Helen (b.1773), Margaret (b.1775), Ann (b.1777) and Betty (b.1782), baptised in Hobkirk, could be his daughters. Thomas (b.1800) son of James. He drove meal etc. between Langholm and Hawick for his father, who had farmed at Binks and then moved to Langholm. He is listed at Binks in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’. Walter (16th C.) son of George of North Synton. He was given these lands in a sasine of 1526. In 1531 he was involved in a dispute over the succession to Synton (and the ‘kyndness’ of Corslie) along with Walter Scott in Synton and Adam Scott, his brother-in-law, against John, William and their brothers. By 1535 the lands of North Synton were owned by John. He is probably the Walter ‘Vauch’ listed in 1538 along with George Robson, John Robson, David Do[wne?] and Walter Scott, when Andrew Lough forced them off his lands at Synton. In 1541 he witnessed a transaction for the Scotts of Headshaw. Walter ‘Wat’ (16th C.) recorded in 1562 as a tenant in Greatlaws. Robert Hastie acting as factor in Lilliesleaf acknowledged receipt of the teinds from him and other tenants of ‘Grett Law’ and Clerklands. His name is listed as ‘Watt Vaich’. Walter of North Synton (d.c.1600) probably son of John, although these generations are uncertain. He may be the ‘Walter Vache of Syntoun’ who is recorded as a supporter of Scott of Buccleuch in the 1564/5 contract between the Scotts and the Kerrs. In 1575/6 he was a complainant regarding ‘mails’ for his steading of ‘Corsley’. He was listed among many Scotts and their allies in a 1581 summons to appear before the Privy Council regarding the feud with the Elliots and Armstrongs. He may have been involved in the attack by the Scotts of Headshaw on 2 sons of Martin Elliot of Braiddie. In 1580 he and his son and heir James witnessed a marriage contract in Selkirk between James Scott in Whitslade and Elizabeth, sister of Robert Scott in Aikwood. Also in 1580 he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk for the Cairncrosses. In 1580/1 his son Robert took over some of the annual rent of the half lands of ‘Over Maines of Hassindaneburne’. In 1581 he witnessed an agreement in Selkirk where James Langlands of that Ilk resigned his lands to his son Robert Langlands. He witnessed other transactions in Selkirk in 1581. He failed to appear for the first summons to the Privy Council in 1581. He was probably succeeded by his son John or perhaps James. He may also be the ‘Walter Vaitch of North syntoun’ listed among landed men in the Borders in about 1590 and as ‘Walter Vaitch of Northsinnton’ in Monipennie’s list of about 1597. His grandson Walter inherited North Synton from him in 1609. Walter of North Synton (16th/17th C.) son of James. He was served heir to his grandfather Walter in the lands of North Synton in 1609. His father resided at Corslie, which also inherited in 1609. He married Jean Cairncross, and with her permission sold Corslie to George Pringle of Torwoodlee in 1625. He later married Janet Ker; with her permission and that of his eldest son James, he sold North Synton (with the exception of Clerklands) to Francis Scott of South Synton in 1641. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included: Nicholas (b.1708); and James (b.1711). Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was in Appletreehall in 1718 when he married Margaret (or Marion) Turnbull. They were living at Galalaw in 1724. Their children included: Isabel (b.1724); and Martha (b.1728). The witnesses in 1724 were John Easton and James Teller. Walter (17th/18th C.) tailor in ‘Longtown’ (probably Langtonheight) in Ashkirk Parish. He is recorded there in 1715, 1718 and 1719. He married Margaret Archibald and their children included William (b.1712), Janet (b.1713), Robert (b.1716), Helen (b.1715), John (b.1718) and Margaret (b.1719). Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Neil and their children included Jean (b.1708), John (b.1710), Janet (b.1717), Agnes (b.1722) and Andrew (b.1726). Janet (b.1705), with no mother’s name given, may also have been his child. William of Dawyck (d.c.1502) probably son of Paul. He and his son John were granted a lease of the lands of Crosslee in Ettrick in the period 1488–92. His children included Alexander, William and John. He could be the William who had a sasine for North Synton in 1475. There was a dispute in 1531 between his sons John and William (and their ‘brothers german’, suggesting he had more sons, perhaps including Thomas) and the Scotts of Synton, aligned with the young Walter (son of George). William of Dawyck (d.c.1545) 2nd son of William. He had a charter for North Synton in 1509. He held the family estates in Peeblesshire, succeeding to his brother Alexander. He was also superior of the lands of North Synton, granting a charter to his nephew George in 1525 and a ‘precept of sasine’ to George’s son Walter in 1526. In 1530 he was one of the Border Lairds who submitted to James V to keep better order. He could be the William who served as officer for Thomas Ker of Yair in 1531 in a dispute with Patrick Murray of Falahill. He purchased letters to declare Adam Scott in Synton as heir to the tutorship of his (Adam’s) nephew Walter; he was at that time referred to as ‘William Vaych in the Yair’. In 1535 he had a debate over these lands with John Veitch, but received Corslee (on the Gala Water) in return for John retaining North Synton. William of Dawyck (d.1602) son of James. He was known as ‘the Deil of Dawyck’. He inherited the family lands, which included acting as superior for North Synton, as embodied in a crown charter of 1564. In 1574 he was on the returns for Walter Scott of Branxholme as heir to his great-uncle David Scott, as well as his great-grandfather Sir Walter Scott. He married Marion Fleming and his sons included: John, who succeeded; Patrick, killed by the Tweedies in 1590; and William. William (16th/17th C.) eldest son of John. In 1606 he is recorded as being served as heir to his father John in the lands of North Synton, including the advowson of the church. William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Mill in 1693 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll there. His surname is written ‘Vaith’. He could be the William who married Agnes Bowie and had children (baptised in Ashkirk): Jean (b.1690); and William (b.1692). The witnesses in 1690 were James Kennedy (who was probably also at Ashkirk Mill) and John Bowie (who was probably related to his wife). William (17th C.) wright listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was also listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. William (18th C.) resident of Spittal in 1729 and 1730. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included John (b.1729) and Bessie (b.1730). He was surely related to other Vietches of Spittal-on-Rule. William (18th C.) gardener at Branxholme. In 1740 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Cook (gardener at Branxholme). He is listed as ‘Gardiner to Midlamlin at Braxnolm’, i.e. he worked for Robert Elliot of Midlem Mill, who was Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch, living at Branxholme. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Whitriggs in 1761 when his daughter Isabel was baptised. He married Nelly Scott and their children included: an unnamed child (b.1756); Janet (b.1757); and Isabel (b.1761). William (d.bef. 1787) merchant in Hawick. In 1758 he was witness to a baptism for Walter Rae and in both 1758 and 1762 he witnessed baptisms (along with shoemaker John Oliver) for merchant Andrew Scott. He married Christian Scott in 1753. Their children included: Agnes (1757–87); Elizabeth (b.1759); Andrew (b.1761); William (b.1763); Elizabeth (again, b.1765); Alison (b.1768); James (b.1768); and Andrew (again, b.1768). The witnesses in 1757, 1759 and 1765 were merchant Andrew Scott (possibly related to his wife) and shoemaker John Oliver. William (b.1738) 3rd son of James of Inchbonny. He was a wright at Inchbonny, inheriting part of the property on the death of his father, his descendants later becoming sole owners. His eldest son James was well known as a self-taught philosopher and astronomer and his 2nd son William became a millwright in Jedburgh. He could be the William listed among the subscribers to Caw’s 'Poetical Museum' in 1784. William (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. His daughter Agnes died in 1787. William (b.1800/1) born in Linton, he was farmer at Dykes in Cavers Parish. He is recorded there in 1861 as farmer of 290 acres and was still recorded there in a directory of 1868. He married Janet Davidson. Rev. William (1794–1885) son of John Veitch and Jean Elliot, he was probably born at Spittal-on-Rule. Like 2 of his brothers (and his cousin James Veitch, D.D.) he trained for the ministry. He was educated in Jedburgh and then at Edinburgh University. He was a seceder, with severe Presbyterian views and although trained for the ministry, he never took charge of any parish. Instead he devoted much of his life to teaching Greek in Edinburgh and wrote ‘Greek verbs, irregular and defective’ (1848), which was reprinted several times. As a result he was made LL.D. In late life he lived in a cottage at Lanton. He was said to be ‘esteemed in his select private circle for genial humour and familiarity with border story’. He is buried in Dean Cemetery in Edinburgh (also formerly written ‘Vache’, ‘Vaiache’, ‘Vaiitch’, ‘Vaitche’, ‘Veatch’, ‘Vetch’, ‘Veitch’, ‘vitch’, ‘Wache’, ‘Wauch’, ‘Weache’, ‘Weche’, ‘Weich’, ‘Wetch’, etc., and with the modern Waugh also possibly being a variant).

Veltoun (vel-tin) n., old form of Wulton, used on a Church of Scotland register of 1586.

Velvet Heels (vel-vi’-heelz) n., nickname sometimes used for Rev. John Aikman Wallace.

Vernon (ve-nor) n., arch. Another ribbon, – verder-cled, rinnin eassla-wassla – told the coorse o bonnie Teviot [ECS].

verneesh [DH] (also written ‘verneesh’).

vernishe [IWL] (also written ‘verner’,

vennel (ve-nul) n., arch. an alley, small lane, narrow thoroughfare in a town – ‘...the common vennel that leads from the town head to the back dam of the mill’ [BR] (early Hawick documents speak about the ‘Common Vennel’ and the ‘Back Vennel’; from French).

the Vennel (thu-ve-nul) n., name sometimes used for the ‘Common Vennel’ running from Myreslawgreen down to the Cobble Pool, which marked part of the town boundary in the 1537 Charter.

Venner (ve-nur) n. Corbyyn Morris (d.1803) Captain in the East India Company. His first name is also written ‘Corrybine’. He was Captain of the ‘Queen’ in 1796 and the ‘Walpole’ 1797/8, which ship he purchased in 1803. In 1800 he was served heir to his uncle James Lauder of Whitslade. As well as gaining the lands of Whitslade, he also got Redfordgreen and Drycleuchshielis. The 1802 Land Tax Rolls lists him paying tax on £109 for those farms and £266 13s 4d for Whitslade. His will describes him as ‘of Inner Temple, City of London’. John (18th/19th C.) succeeded his brother Corbyn in 1805, gaining half of the lands of Whitslade, Redfordgreen and Drycleuchshielis. He also gained the other half of the lands that had previously belonged to his great-uncle John Adam of Whitslade (also written ‘Vennor’).

venterlokist (ven-ter-lo-kist) n., arch. a ventriloquist – ‘Wull the Bellman duly announced the entertainment which he said was to be given by a ‘venterlockest’’ [RM] (note the accent on the 3rd syllable, rather than the 2nd).

ventur (ven-tur, ven’tur) v., arch. to venture – ‘But some was ventur a wee thing strauchter Wi’ frank opinions o’ Juden’s douchter’ [WL].
Kirk of Hawick, 1711–1725' (1900) and the text for ‘Pictures from the Past of Auld Hawick’ (1911) with J. McNairn. He was one of the earlier writers to insist that the Mote was the remains of a Norman palisaded stronghold. He was Exhibition Secretary for the Hawick Fine Arts Association and also wrote 33 articles for the Transactions. He also helped James Sinton compile his Hawick-related bibliography. He was a Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland. In 1874 he married Isabella Douglas, daughter of butcher William Nisbet. His second wife's name was Mary Jamieson.

verra (ver-ru, -re, -ri) adj., adv. very – ‘His vera heart was like to burste, Aft he was hafflings on the Bank’ [RDW], ‘...An' nane sae vera far from the Vertew and strenth of his office’ [JW1558].

vella see verra

verter (ver-tur) n., arch. virtue, efficacy in healing certain diseases.

the Verter (thu-ver-tur) n. shortened form of the Verter Well – ‘Thus keep it intact frae the rude ruthless hand, And protect the famed well o’ the Verter’ [RF].

the Verter Well (thu-ver-tur-wel) n. spring that entered the Teviot near the Dunk, about 350 yards upriver from the Pipleheugh Well. It supposedly had healing powers, and even had its mineral properties tested once. A pipe was fitted in the 1860s and an iron fountain was erected on the river bank in 1874, with its position moved to the other side of the road in 1888. There was a poetry competition inspired by the Verter Well in 1888, with the best entries published in a booklet. The iron fountain, paid for by the wife of Rev. Thomson of Rosalee, had a Latin inscription which translated as ‘Drink, pass on, give thanks to God’. However, the supply was never the same after being interfered with. Before the end of the 19th century the spring had found another channel and the well dried up – ‘From Hawick Verter Well shall spring A cure for every evil thing’ [T], ‘Ne’er mix it wi’ spirits, but take it itself’, There’s a pure healing virtue in our grand Verter Well’ [VW], ‘Or aiblins gin we will’d it how we’d scamper aff sae fell To play the truant laddies at the auld Verter Well’ [VW] (the origin is from the word ‘verter’ or virtue, but note there was a more famous Verter Well near Airdrie, popular in the 18th century).

vertew (ver-too) n., arch. virtue, moral excellence – ‘...the quhilk Adam Cessfurde, baizlie, through the vertew and streth of his office’ [JW1558].

the Vertish (thu-ver-’eesh, -teesh, -tish) n. popular name for the Vertish Hill, which extends from Burnflat to the Nip Knowes. Long in use as a recreational part of the Common, it was the location for horse racing at the Common Riding until 1819. It is now home of the Hawick Golf Club, venue for the Vertish Hill Sports, well trodden during the Chases, and offers a glorious panorama of the Borders – ‘Sune we maun climb the Vertish heicht To watch the honoured emblem waving’ [RH], ‘Fit yet to face the Nipknowes or storm the Vertish high, For the drums and fifes are calling, and the Cornet’s riding by’ [JYH], ‘But hei has the Vertish to bield his back...’ [DH] (in older documents it is ‘Fertish’, suggesting an origin in the Gaelic ‘fair tais’, meaning a damp ridge).

the Vertish Brae (thu-ver-’eesh-brä) n. occasional name for the Vertish Hill, or the Nip Knowes – ‘...Nae gallop up the Vertish Brae, Nae rider, horse nor goal’ [WP].

the Vertish Hill (thu-ver-’eesh-hil) n. part of the Common, let to the Golf Club for a nominal rent, and used annually for the Vertish Hill Sports since 1881. Up until 1803 the riders at the Common Riding used to go over the hill on their way to the Moor. The hill reaches a height of 856 feet and the land covers an area of 68 acres.
the Vertish Hill Sports

It is more commonly known simply as the Vertish — ‘...O’er the Vertish hill nor tire’ [AB], ‘But I’m fain for a sicht o’ the Vertish Hill Wi’ his plaid flung owre his shooder’ [DH], ‘...For there’s never a hill like the Vertish Hill To a gutter-bluid Wast-ender!’ [DH], ‘But when A stand on the thirteenth tee The view ma hert diz thrill Lookin’ sooth owre God’s ain country Frae the Vertish Hill’ [IWL] (it is still ‘Fertish Hill’ in 1863).

the Vertish Hill Sports (thu-ver’-eesh-hilspörtz) n. the children’s Annual Festival and Sports, held on a specially levelled part of the Vertish Hill. It includes races for primary school children, preceeded by a procession, latterly from the Evergreen Hall (formerly from the Buccleuch Memorial) to the Vertish Hill, where the children receive a gift of money (or sometimes another item). Started in 1882 as a kite flying contest for boys under 16, other games and races were soon added. At the special sports for the Queen’s Diamond Jubilee in 1897 it is estimated that the crowd was 12,000. It was moved to the Park for a couple of years, but returned to the Vertish in 1906. There is film of the procession to the sports and some of the competitions in 1909/10. There was a special Vertish Hill Sports in 1914 on the Saturday before the Common Riding, as part of the Quater-Centenary celebrations. The procession was led by the Cornet and 25 mounted supporters and included 3,600 children, each of whom was given a ceremonial enamelled mug. In 1915 the Sports were held on the Friday of the Common Riding in place of traditional events, and more than 2,800 children received a box of chocolates. In 1919 a special Victory Vertish Hill Sports were held. There have also been other special celebratory Sports over the years. The precise day has varied, but it is usually held on a Saturday near the end of June, at earlier times being in July. At one point the cost of the Games was underwritten by the Town Council, but for a long time has relied entirely on donations and administered by a voluntary committee. The providing of tea to the public has long been a tradition.

Vertish Hill Sports 2000 (ver’-eesh-hilspörtz-twā-thoo-zind) n. video made by members of the Hawick Film and Video Group at the request of the Vertish Hill Sports Committee to commemorate the special millennium Vertish Hill Sports. It runs for approximately 37 minutes.

the Vertish Stakes (thu-ver’-eesh-stäks) n. race during the Common Riding.

Vesey see Vesey

Vesey (vee-see) n. Agnes (d.1301/2) mother of William ‘de Chartres’, and probably wife of Henry Charteris. She died at ‘Appletiger’ (probably Appletreehall, although stated to be in the regality of Sprouston) at Martinmas in 1301 and the lands there were inherited by her son William. Lady Jane (13th C.) probably heiress of the half-barony of Wilton, her name is also given as ‘Joan’. It seems reasonable to suppose that she was daughter of John, Lord of Alnwick. Her husband was Sir Thomas de Charteris, with whom she jointly held the half-barony in a grant by Alexander III, after having previously resigned them into the King’s hands. According to an inquest of 1303/4 these lands were inherited by William de Charteris, son of Andrew and Agnes de Vesci (who may well have been her sister). It was said at the 1303/4 inquest that the jurors ‘know nothing about the manner of such enfeoffment ...they know there was such, but not its tenor’; hence there is some mystery surrounding how she came to hold the half-barony. Note that an earlier member of her family, Margaret, married Sir Patrick of Riddell, and an even earlier member, Sybil, married Walter Bombeck, who gifted the original ‘Hermitage’ in Liddesdale. Her husband Thomas died in 1302 and she died earlier, ‘long before the Scots war’. To further complicate matters, the Barony had earlier passed through Walter de Percehay, from his mother Joan de Wilton, except that Walter de Percehay’s mother appears to have been Joan (or Jane) de Vesey; the names cannot be coincidental, but it is unclear what the relationships were (also ‘Vesey’, ‘de Vesey’, ‘de Vesci’, etc.).

veshel (ve-shel) n., poet. a vessel — ‘...I am like ane brokin veshell’ [HSR].

vesit (ve-zit) pp., arch. visited, inspected — ‘...after thai war sworne, passit and wesit the saidis landis ...’ [SB1500].

Vetch see Veitch

vex (veks) n. a worry, concern, annoyance, regret — ‘A was seek on Thursdi an hed ti miss the Colour Bussin, which was a right vex’, ‘A war is an awfih vex’ [ECS], ‘...fair leike ti faa off the spake wui the wuddles an the vexes o woark ...’ [ECS] (only used as a verb in standard English).

vexed (vekad) adj. concerned, troubled, distressed, annoyed, sorry — ‘A’m awfih vexed for um’, ‘An’ ee felt sae vexed when his team got bate’, ‘A was vext A’d naebody nerr iz ti speak ti ...’ [ECS], ‘A war is an awfih vex’ [ECS], ‘...But lookit sae vexed when his team got bate That ye gied him half your pie’ [DH] (also written ‘vext’; this word is used more commonly in Hawick than in standard English, and with a slightly different meaning).

the Vic (\textit{thu-vik}) \textit{n.} the Victoria Hotel, existing from the 19th century at 52 High Street. It was designed by J.P. Alison around 1893 and built on premises formerly occupied by Nixon’s hosiery factory. The hotel closed in the 1970s and was demolished in 1980.

vicarage (\textit{vi-ku-reej}) \textit{n.}, arch. a minor tithe, originally payable to the local vicar (rather than parson), also referred to as ‘vicarage teind’ – ‘All thir 51 lands adjacent to ye toune are estimat to pay nyne scoir 15 bolls in stok, 49 bolls in great tynd, laik ane firlot, and 20 lbs of vicarage’ [PR1627], ‘Thomas Gray peyed formerly for the viccorage of Hassindeane alias Tounhead 13s 4d’ [Buc1692].

Vicar’s Hill (\textit{vi-kurz-hil}) \textit{n.} former name for lands near Hobkirk Kirk, long owned by the church and later called Kirknowe. This is probably the ‘Vicarie-hill’ referred to in the documents relating to Rev. George Douglas in 1602. It could be the ‘Viccars Hall’ mentioned along with ‘Viccars land’ of Hobkirk Kirk when inherited by Gilbert Elliott from his father Archibald of Craigend in 1683.

Vicar’s Land (\textit{vi-kurz-lawnd}) \textit{n.} former name for lands attached to Hopkirk Kirk. They are mentioned as ‘Viccars land’ in 1683, along with ‘Viccars Hall’ and Wester Swanshiel, among lands inherited by Gilbert Elliott from his father Archibald of Craigend.

Vicar’s Rob (\textit{vi-kurz-rohb}) \textit{n.} nickname of Robert Elliot, one of the thieves captured at Hawick market in October 1567. He may be the same man as ‘Vicar’s Hobb’ recorded in 1589.

Vicar’s Waas (\textit{vi-kurz-wawz}) \textit{n.} former name for a field near Hobkirk Church, which had been the site of the old vicarage lands, a little to the west of the steading of Kirknowe.

vicker (\textit{vi-kur}) \textit{n.} a chestnut that has won a game of ‘conkers’, being referred to as a ‘yin vicker’, ‘twae vicker’ etc., depending on how many games it has won, and the surviving chestnut inheriting the score of its opponent – ‘if ma cheggy baits your ecleeven vicker, then mine’ll be a twal vicker’ (presumably from ‘victor’).

Victoria (\textit{vik-tö-ree-u}) \textit{n.} Alexandrina Victoria (1819–1901), grand-daughter of George III, she was Queen of the United Kingdom 1837–1901, during a time of great political change in Britain and the building of the Empire. In Hawick she gave her name to a street, a hotel, a bridge and a laundry, amongst other things. She was a frequent visitor to Scotland in 1842, she was a guest of the Duke of Buccleuch at Dikeith. On another royal visit to the Borders, the train passed through Hawick at a walking pace, with crowds lining the railway.

Victoria Baths (\textit{vik-tö-ree-u-bawths}) \textit{n.} former name for the Victoria Laundry, operating on Commercial Road in the latter part of the 19th century, run by John Saunderson. It may have originally operated as a public bathing facility, but became a laundry when the ‘Baths’ opened nearby in 1912.

Victoria Brig (\textit{vik-tö-ree-u-brig}) \textit{n.} footbridge from the Little Haugh to Commercial Road. The first wooden trellis bridge was built in 1851/2, by Walter Scott the builders (Buccleuch Street) and painted by Andrew Kennedy in white, blue and yellow (imitating the Crystal Palace). It was situated a few yards further down the river than today’s and was built by subscription (with the final debt cleared by the Road Trustees) to provide a link to the High Street area from near William Watson’s factory. The bridge was named in honour of Queen Victoria by the Bridge Committee. It was replaced in 1873/4 by a narrow iron bridge, which was widened in 1910, but destroyed in a flood of 1938. The bridge was rebuilt in 1939 and then again in 1991. Before the bridge existed there were stepping stones across the river there, and some of Watson’s workers used stilts to cross at the same general location.

Victoria Hotel (\textit{vik-tö-ree-u-hö-tel}) \textit{n.} hotel formerly at 52 High Street, which held dances and other social events. It was for a time a temperance hotel. The building was of red sandstone in an Elizabethan style, with 2 half-timbered gables (which were very distinctive on this part of the street). It was built on the former site of Nixon’s hosiery premises, which from 1831–61 was the residence of Dr. John Douglas. James Scott was proprietor in 1868. It was remodelled sometime around 1900, with designs by J.P. Alison dated 1893. The hotel was demolished in 1980 (also known as the Vic).

Victoria Laundry (\textit{vik-tö-ree-u-lawn-dree}) \textit{n.} the Victoria Steam Laundry on the Teviot side of Commercial Road, which operated through much of the 20th century, closing in the 1970s. It also contained baths in earlier times, but developed into a laundry, presumably when the public swimming baths opened nearby. It was used by many local hotels etc., and also by householders for their special linens. Items were deposited there for washing (in distinction to ‘the Steam’, where one had to do it oneself) and it also had dry cleaning facilities. The last manager was Mr. Stanger. The building was later used as a warehouse, but has been empty for many years.

Victoria Mills (vik-tö-ree-u-nilz) n. the main knitwear manufacturing factory of Innes, Henderson & Co., situated on Victoria Road, and later becoming Braemar Knitwear. The firm had started in modest premises at Wilton Grove, building this new Mill in 1875. Innes & Co. split from Henderson & Co. in 1885, with Henderson in the front and Innes in the rear. There was an extension in 1891 and a further 2 storeys were added to the front building by 1912. Because of the split between Innes and Henderson, the mill had 2 separate boilers and hence 2 chimneys. Innes-Henderson reamalgamated in 1920 and later bought the adjacent Howlands Mill. This meant that precisely what was known as ‘Victoria Mills’ changed over the years. In 1976, with the closure of Rodono Mills, the administration department of Pringle’s was moved there. The factory closed in the 1990s and was demolished in 2004, along with the neighbouring Howlands Mill (also sometimes singular ‘Mill’).

Victoria Road (vik-tö-ree-u-rōd) n. street alongside the Common Haugh, originally called Damside, then Upper Damside (after Wilton Dam) before being renamed after Queen Victoria about 1864. There were a few houses there (some thatched) from at least the early 19th century, with fruit gardens where the factories were later built. The development of the area for hosiery mills started in the late 19th century. The former offices of Turnbulls are a grade C listed building.

victual (vik-twal) n., arch. produce, foodstuff, particularly grain or other crops – ‘The lands of Clarilaw sett to James dryden and Thomas Henderson in tack for 26 bols victuall half meall & half bear’ [Buc1692] (spelling and probably punctuation varied).

violence (vee-lins) n., poet. violence – ‘He sail redeem their sauls frae deceite an’ violence ...’ [HSR], ‘Deliver me, O Lord, frae the ill man: preserfe me frae the man o’ violence’ [HSR].

violet (vı-lı́t) adj., poet. violent – ‘...an’ the assemblies o’ violent men hae soucht efter my saul ...’ [HSR].

Viewforth (vew-forth) n. former name of a house on West Stewart Place, built for hatter George Porteous in 1878. It was then the home of I. Washington Wallis of Braemar, and later became Kirklands Hotel.

the Vikings (thu-vi-kinz) n., pl. Norse people who plundered the coats of Northern Europe in the 8th–10th centuries. Groups mainly from Denmark started a conquest of Northumbria from 867, establishing their capital at York in 876. Whether the Hawick area was ruled from here is uncertain, but in general Bernicia was largely unaffected by the Viking presence (and you can’t get very close to Hawick by boat!). Vikings settled and presumably inter-married with the natives, but their political influence in Scotland ended with the Battle of Largs in 1263. Hawick’s Thor and Odin myth may relate to a pre-Christian Anglian past, but almost certainly has nothing directly to do with the Vikings. However, some words and place names of Norse origin survive (although they may well have come only indirectly from the Vikings). Hog-back gravestones (symbolic of a longhouse) usually indicate Viking influence; two fragments are in the church porch at Bedrule, plus one at Ancrum and another at Nisbet (not in the Museum).

the Village (thu-vi-keej) n. group of houses by the Slitrig, to the west of the Kirkwynd, presumably named for their former relative isolation from other parts of the town. The separate names Under Village and Upper Village appear in the early 19th century, with the houses renumbered as simply ‘the Village’ in 1904. The land was formerly known as Matthew Henderson’s Croft and then as Nichol’s Croft. The large tenement there was erected by Messrs. R. Elliot & Co. in about 1879. A white briar bush that grew there was supposed to have been planted by some supporters of Prince Charlie around 1745.

Viltone (wil-ton) n. former spelling for Wulton (e.g. used in a 1508 ‘retour’ of Adam Hepburne, Earl of Bothwell.

Vilton (wil-toon) n. former spelling for Wulton (e.g. in the testament of William, son of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1552.

violent (vıl-leen) adj., arch. relating to the taking of land by force and without paying rent – ‘...and grantit to the said Robert Elliot ane heretabill richt of the saidis landis, with ane dischairg of all bygaine violebt proffeittis’ [SB1624].

the Violet Wuds (thu-vI-li-wudz) n. also known as the Violet Wood, popular name for the picturesque wooded glen in the Netherhall wood of Wilton Park, just by Wilton Dean. It forms part of the boundaries of the town, and a path through the woods offers a popular walk. On the hill to the north are the remains...
Virgin Kate

of an earthwork and possible homestead – ‘My thoughts serene in Violet Woods I gaze on Teviotdale’ [JCa]. ‘...Where the gentle breezes rustle Through the Violet Woods serene’ [WL] (named after the wood dog-violet that grows there).

Virgin Kate (vir-jin-kā) n. nickname for a Hawick resident in the mid-1800s – ‘Here’s Tib the Virgin and Virgin Kate, Here’s baith Robbie and Babbie the Cow; Auld Chairlie Hardie gangs east o’ the gate, While Dunnerum danders ower the knowe’ [HI].

virle (vi-rul) n., arch. a ferule, switch, cane, v., arch. to punish with a ferule.

Viscount Hermitage (vi-koon’-her-mi’-eej) n. title created in 1706 for Henry, 2nd surviving son of Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch and James, Duke of Buccleuch and Monmouth. The lands of Hermitage had been in the hands of the Scotts of Buccleuch for more than a century. The title (along with Earl of Deloraine and Lord Goldiels) was used by descendants until the death of the 4th Earl in 1807.

Vision 2014 (vi-shin-twā-thoo-zind-in-fow-ur-teen) n. umbrella term for a series of events in the years leading up to the quincentennial. Originally suggested by Kate Houston and Janice Chapman, the idea grew from an event to celebrate the 2012 London Olympics to encompass the 2014 quincentenary and celebrate several aspects of life in the Town. 2011 was the year of Arts and Culture, with the focal event being the Big Sing. 2012 was the year of Sport, with several events, including the use of the Hawick Torch in the Big Parade. 2013 was the year of Industry, with the Big Show in the High Street. Finally, 2014 was the Year of Heritage, culminating in the Big Return.

the Visit (thu-vi-x’) n. Hawick-based pop band of the early 1980s, with single ‘City Lights’. They won an award from the Prince’s Trust, ??.

visy (vi-zee) n., arch. to visit, communicate with by letter – ‘...I haue taine the hardiess heirby till visy zou in my ain absence ...as ane messager quha sall assur zou ...’ [SB1584].

vitiat (vi-tee-at) n., arch. to spoil, impair the legal validity of something – ‘...ploittit againis the said Erle of Buccleugh ane manifest falsit, and causit vitiat the said disposiition and chairtour ...’ [SB1624].

vizzy (vi-zee) n., arch. a look, scrutiny, survey – ‘Afore they were oot o’ ma sicht, as I ran for ma part, I took another vizzy, an’ I was mortified to see them rather losing grund’ [BCM1881].

V.J. Day (vee-jā-dā) n. official end to WWII hostilities, on 15th August 1945. On this evening in Hawick there were spontaneous celebrations, with sirens going off, houses lighting up, the gas company’s hooter, etc., and people pouring into the street. On the following day there was a parade by the massed pipe bands and Saxhorn Band in the High Street, as well as Reid’s radio van, an address by the Provost from the Town Hall balcony, fireworks and bonfires at the top of the Loan and on the Miller’s Knowes, as well as in the hills around Stobs Camp.

Vogan (vō-gin) n. man listed in 1543 as one of those people who failed to appear to answer charges that they had assisted the English in their raids that year. He was recorded as being a tenant in Borthwickshiel, but his full name is not given.

Vogan (vō-gin) n. George (18th C.) gardener at Minto in 1778 and 1779, when he was working for Sir Gilbert Elliot. James (16th C.) recorded as occupier of a husbandland in Blindhaugh in 1581 when the liferent was transferred to Walter, son of the deceased John Scott in Blindhaugh. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isobel Easton and their children included John (b.1650), Janet (b.1651) and James (b.1653). The witnesses in 1651 were John White and James Henderson. Margaret (b.1646), with no mother’s name given, was probably also his child. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Henderson and their daughter Marion was baptised in 1656. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Dickson and their children included ‘Hellisoun’ (i.e. Alison, b.1657) and Walter (b.1658). James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Agnes Nichol and their daughter Jean was baptised in 1661. He may be the James who in 1661 witnessed a baptism for Walter Nichol and Helen Black. Robert (16th C.) recorded in 1539 as a subtenant of Margaret Falside and Walter Scott in their lands in either Ashkirk or Falside. He may be related to Simon, who was also listed. Simon (16th C.) recorded in 1539 as a subtenant of Margaret Falside and Walter Scott in their lands in either Ashkirk or Falside. He may be related to Robert, who was also listed. Simon (16th C.) recorded in 1581 being in Ashkirk. He was sometime occupier of an ‘onset, yard and pertinent’ in Salenside that was being assigned by Walter Scott in Ashkirk to John Scott in Kirkhouses. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1652 he witnessed a baptism for William Bowie and in 1656 another for George Tait.
He married Margaret Shiel and their children included John (b.1650) and Isobel (b.1653). Bessie (b.1635), Bessie (again, b.1639), John (b.1641), Agnes (b.1645) and Robert (b.1646), with no mother's name given, are probably also his children. William (15th/16th C.) listed in the Exchequer Rolls in 1501 among mostly local men who had been fined. His name is given as ‘Willelmus Vogane in Schilbond’. It is unclear where he was from, but the other 15 men listed were mostly from the area immediately around Hawick (also written ‘Vogane’, ‘Vogen’ and ‘Wogane’).

voit (voit) n., arch. a vote – ‘... and after mauniest voititis, all electit and choisit the Robert Scott, callit of Goldielands, and William Scott, to be bailies ...’ [BR1638].

the Volunteer (tha-vo-lun-teer) n. Volunteer Park, on Buccleuch Road, it was purchased by the Common-Riding Committee from the Duke of Buccleuch in 1920. It has been extensively used for the Common Riding Games since 1893, as well as High School sporting events, junior rugby, etc., and has clubrooms behind the grandstand. A shed was erected for use at the Games in 1908 and a new stand opened by Mrs. Renwick, wife of the Provost, in 1923. The facilities there have been used jointly by the Linden and the Trades since 1963. Administration of the Park was handed over to the Common Good in 2003. In 2005 an all-weather sports pitch was opened further to the south, on what was formerly called ‘The Playin Fields’, and is also now known as Volunteer Park.

volunteers (vo-lun-teerz) n. voluntary members of military units who are civilians subject to military regulations when in service. In Hawick there were several units formed in response to perceived threats of French invasion, each unit lasting for typically a few years. The first units appeared following the Volunteer Act of 1794, with large numbers formed by landowners in 1798. Officers were typically local landowners and their military titles were often used long afterwards. Many of the wealthier citizens, or those with access to a horse, were in the yeomanry cavalry. The Hawick Military Association operated from 1798–1802, followed by the Light Company of the Roxburgh Volunteers 1803–09. During the False Alarm of 1804 the local men were mobilised and commended for their readiness. Their uniforms then consisted of red coat, white buckskin breeches and leggings and a feathered hat. These volunteer units were disbanded after Waterloo, but following other invasion scares units were formed again from about 1859. Later local volunteers were the Upper Teviotdale Rifle Corps (4th Roxburgh) 1860–68 (ultimately becoming the 4th Battalion of the K.O.S.B.) and Hawick Volunteer Corps (5th Roxburgh) 1861–63. Note that the Volunteers were technically distinct from the Militia (usually formed by ballot in each county) and the Yeomanry, but all were inter-related and together were the forerunners of today’s Territorial Army – ‘... And ‘Teribus’ the battle cry O’ Hawick Volunteers’ [JT].

Von Holbein (fon-hol-bin) n. Baron (18th/19th C.) prisoner of war in Hawick during the Napoleonic Wars. He stayed with James Elliot of Goldielands in the period 1812–14.

the Voo (tha-vo) n. nickname of Jackie Robertson and his brother Wullie Robertson, as well as subsequent generations.

voochsauf (vooch-sawf) v., poet. to vouchsafe, grant – ‘Remuve free me the waye o’ leein’; an’ graciouslie voochsauf me thy law’ [HSR].

the Votadini (thu-vö-ta-dee-nee) n., pl. Bronze Age or Iron Age tribe, with their centre at Edinburgh and boundaries covering much of the Lothians, Borders and Northumberland. The original capital may have been at the Traprain Law hill-fort. Hawick was surely within their territory, and many local hill-forts would have been Votadini outposts. They were essentially the same people who were referred to as the Goddodin in Roman and post-Roman times. The Romans recorded them as a British tribe, coming under Roman occupation in the area between the Antonine and Hadrian’s Walls; they may later have had some sort of alliance with the Romans. The Goddodin kingdom was formed around 470, although the southern part of the Votadini territory became a new kingdom of Brynaich (or Bernicia). The Votadini/Goddodin occupied land to the north and east of the Selgовae (the tribe of the upper Tweed and Teviot valleys): whether Hawick was inside or outside its boundaries at this time is unclear. A sub-tribe under Prince Cunedda is supposed to have migrated to Wales, driving out the Irish settlers there, and establishing a direct connection between the Lothian/Borders Scots and the modern Welsh.

Waddell (wa-díl) n. James (17th C.) glover in Hawick who witnessed a sasine in 1688. He was listed among those contributing to the new Kirk bell in 1693/4 and is probably the same James listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. In 1723 he witnessed the baptism of an illegitimate child of Agnes (perhaps his daughter) and John Richardson. John (16th C.) recorded as chaplain in 1541 when he witnessed a dispute over a sum of money involving James Douglas of Cavers and William ‘Familtonne’. He may have been chaplain at Cavers. John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Borthwickbrae Parkhead in 1786 and Borthwickbrae in 1788. He married Nelly Paisley in 1785 and their children included Margaret (b.1786) and Agnes (b.1788). Thomas (17th/18th C.) servant to William Gardner, merchant in Hawick. In 1721 he was rebuked for fighting with Robert Kay on the Sabbath and rebuked again in 1724 for breaking the Sabbath along with John ‘Young Sodger’ Scott. In 1725 he was recorded as ‘tenant in Hawick’. He married Jean Clerk and their children included: Marion (b.1724); James (b.1725); and Margaret (b.1727). The witnesses in 1725 were smith William Young and weaver William Turnbull (also written ‘Waddel’ and ‘Woddel’).

waddin (waw-din) n. wedding – ‘Did the deed-raap soond … i the nicht efter guid King Alisaun-der’s waddeen-foy’ [ECS], ‘Ai heather! sic a yooky waddeen; nae streiv! Set thum up wui ther cair-rege an perr!’ [ECS], ‘An’ then the very last o’ the water’ in 1694. In 1723 he witnessed the baptism of an illegitimate child of Agnes (perhaps his daughter) and John Richardson. John (16th C.) recorded as chaplain in 1541 when he witnessed a dispute over a sum of money involving James Douglas of Cavers and William ‘Familtonne’. He may have been chaplain at Cavers. John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Borthwickbrae Parkhead in 1786 and Borthwickbrae in 1788. He married Nelly Paisley in 1785 and their children included Margaret (b.1786) and Agnes (b.1788). Thomas (17th/18th C.) servant to William Gardner, merchant in Hawick. In 1721 he was rebuked for fighting with Robert Kay on the Sabbath and rebuked again in 1724 for breaking the Sabbath along with John ‘Young Sodger’ Scott. In 1725 he was recorded as ‘tenant in Hawick’. He married Jean Clerk and their children included: Marion (b.1724); James (b.1725); and Margaret (b.1727). Wadeshill (wa’dz-hiil) n. former farmstead in Southdean Parish, between Slack and Northbank. Andrew Laidlaw was tenant in 1541, paying 22s yearly. Andrew Waugh is recorded there in 1590. The tenant there in 1669 was John Laidlaw, with James Laidlaw at ‘Wadsholm’, which was probably nearby. Robert Laidlaw and Robert Oliver were there in 1694, with William Storie and Isabel Young listed among the poor of the Parish. Judging by the location, it could correspond to the more modern farmstead of ‘Waterside’, even although the older Waterside may have been further to the west (it is ‘Waldosiheil’ in 1541, ‘Wal dosheil’ in 1571/2, ‘Wadisheil’ in 1590, ‘Wadshell’ in 1669 and ‘waddest hill’ and ‘wadisheil’ in 1694; it is marked ‘Wadeshill’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; note that there could be confusion with ‘Wattie’s Spindles’ to the south-east, marked ‘Wadespin-nells’ on Blaeu’s map).

Waldie (waul-dee) n. Andrew (19th C.) wright recorded in Ashkirk in Pigot’s 1837 directory.

George (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elizabeth Henderson and their children included John (b.1765), William (b.1767) and James (b.1769). The witnesses in 1767 were carrier James Henderson (possibly his wife’s father) and merchant John Hardie. He is probably the carrier George who in 1789 witnessed a baptism for John (probably his son). George (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Wilson and their children included James (b.1776), Margaret (b.1778) and Thomas (b.1783). Perhaps the same George paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1785–91. The later George was probably his son. He is probably the George, carrier in Hawick who in 1794 was involved with a dispute over non-payment with William Allwood in Selkirk, who was formerly of Hawick. He may be the merchant George who witnessed a baptism in 1797 for Thomas Stevenson. He may also be the merchant whose son George died in Hawick in 1799. George (18th/19th C.) paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1797, when he was listed as ‘George Waldy Junior’. He may be the George who married Jean Irvine in Hawick in 1794, with children including Betty (b.1797) and George (b.1802), or the George who married Betty Cowan in Hawick in 1797. He was a carrier recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick. The George who was a carrier at Walter’s Wynd on the 1841 census is probably his son. George (18th/19th C.) draper on the High Street, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’, published in 1825. He could be the merchant of Hawick who died in 1824. George (b.c.1795) carrier, probably son of George. He was based on Walter’s Wynd in 1841 and the Village in 1851. He married Mary Leith-head, and their children included: William; Elizabeth (1835–87); Richard; George; and Robert (1846–1921). Helen (b.1787) daughter of John and Helen Scott. She is recorded as ‘Ind.’ at about 20 Buccleuch Street in 1841 and ‘Amniant’ in 1851. And in 1852 she is listed as ‘Miss Helen’ at Teviot Square, among the gentry of Hawick. She is probably the ‘Miss Waldie’ who ran a ladies’ boarding school on Buccleuch Street according to Pigot’s 1837 directory. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish whose son Walter died in 1776. James (b.1810/11) tailor on the High Street, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. His wife was Jessie and their children included John and Ann. He could be the James who married Jessie Caruthers in Langholm in 1831. James (b.1820/1) farm servant in Rulewater and then at Wilton, serving mainly as a coachman. He was born in Midlothian. He was factotum for John Henderson at Abbotrule until Henderson died in 1861, then became coachman for David Pringle of Wilton Lodge. His wife Margaret was from Morebattle. Their children included Mary, Agnes, James and Andrew. John (18th C.) factor for Walter Scott of Harden in at least the period 1764–72. He could be the writer of that name who was in Kelso at about the same time. John (18th C.) carrier from Hawick to Edinburgh recorded in a ‘Process of Scandal’ with Robert Scott, merchant of Lasswade, in 1790. He paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1785–91. He was probably closely related to carrier George. John (d.c.1825) hosiery manufacturer based in Slitrig Crescent. He is probably the son of George baptised in 1765. He went into partnership with Robert Pringle and Peter Wilson at the Whiskyhouse Mill in 1815. By the time of Wood’s 1824 map the factory belonged solely to him; it is marked ‘Wool Manufactory’ and straddled the mill lade, near the north end of the modern Stonefield Place. He could also be the ‘Mr, Waldie’ who owned property on the Tower Knowe on Wood’s map. He is listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory as a manufacturer of stockings and woollen cloth. He lived near the corner of Silver Street and the Howgate, the well near there being known as ‘Waldy’s Well’. He married Helen Scott, and their children included: Helen (b.1787); Betty (b.1789), who married postmaster Robert Armstrong; George (b.1791); and Adam (b.1793). The witnesses in 1789 were baker Thomas Kedie and George (probably his father). His daughter Helen was living in the family property in the 1840s and 50s, and appears to have been his heiress. John (b.1792/3) dyer who lived on Slitrig Crescent. His wife was Agnes and their children included William, Charles, Janet and Mary. He was probably son of Thomas. John (b.1844) son of John, he was born at Roxburgh, with his mother coming from Maxton. He worked with John Robson Scott at Newton and then became tenant farmer at Braithwaugh in the Rule valley, He was a member of the Hobkirk School Board and Parish Council. He married Christina Laidlaw (daughter of a shepherd from Eskdalemuir and Rachel Scott from Deloraine) at Mervinslaw in 1868. His wife was known as a great butter-maker. His nephew William Douglas worked at Weens. John (19th/20th C.) Burgh Officer of the early 1900s. He also served as manager of the municipal buildings. The same John may have been one of the early members of the committee of Hawick R.F.C. Peter (18th/19th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Borthwickbrae Parkhead in 1792 and Highchesters in 1795 and 1798. Wale oot (wäl-oo’) v., arch. to pick out – ‘A cood wale oot Rule Waeter’s coorse feine, – merket wui raws on raws o treis’ [ECS].

Wales (wälz) n. Patrick (15th C.) Chaplain recorded in a sasine of 1465/6 for Denholm Mains in the Barony of Cavers. He may thus have been associate with Cavers Kirk. Note that ‘Debe Philip Waleyss, Suprior of our Closter’ was recorded at Jedburgh Abbey in 1464 and may be the same man or closely related. Thomas (18th/19th C.) butler at Riddell in 1797, when he was working for Sir John Riddell. He is probably the ‘T. Wales, Minto-house who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’, published in 1825.

Walit (wā-lee’, -li’) pp., poet. chosen – ‘. . . I hae eksaltet ane walet owt frae mang the peele’ [HSR].

Walker (waw-kur) n. Adam (16th C.) recorded in Langnewton in 1580 when he witnessed a marriage contract involving people from Langnewton and Standhill. John in Belses was also a witness and could have been related. Alexander (b.1835/6) from Dysart in Fife, he was a tutor to the Elliots of Minto. In 1861 he is... recorded as ‘Preceptor’ at Minto House. Andrew (18th C.) elder of Hobkirk Parish, recorded in 1725. Rev. Andrew (1722/3–1772) assistant minister at Crailing, he became preacher at Teviothead ‘chapel-of-ease’ from 1745 until probably 1750. That year he was translated to Etrick, and moved again to Canonbie in 1765. He married Martha, daughter of John Stoddart of Williamshope. She later married Capt. William Elliot and died in 1806. Andrew (18th/19th C.) cooper of Damside, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Andrew sprinter from Hawick. He won the 1982 ‘Powderhall’ New Year Sprint. Charles (d.1955) headmaster of St. Cuthbert’s School from 1948 until his death, being the last head of that school. He came to Hawick from Alyth. Gareth (1976/7 – ) from Hawick, he played rugby for the Albion, the P.S.A. and the Linden. He represented the South and Scotland at the junior level and at age 17 played his first game for Hawick R.F.C. He briefly played rugby league and coached the P.S.A. for 2 seasons, before turning to boxing. At the age of 39 he tried out bare-knuckle boxing, becoming U.B.K.B. heavyweight champion in 2019. George (17th C.) recorded in Ashkirk in 1661 when he witnessed baptisms for John Dykes and William Nichol. George (17th/18th C.) smith at Headshaw. He married Marion Neil and their children, baptised in Ashkirk Parish, included John (b.1698), William (b.1700), Margaret (b.1703), William (again, b.1706), George (b.1708), Janet (b.1713), Marion (b.1714) and Robert (b.1714). George (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1702 he was recorded as a ‘Meal-maker in Kirkhouses’. He married Janet Thomson and their children included: James (b.1697); Helen (b.1700); Thomas (b.1702). George (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Ann Borrowman and their children included Christian (b.1707) and Jean (b.1710). Col. George (1830–97) of Crawforddon, Captain in charge of the Dumfries Militia for a while in Hawick, he later became M.P. for Dumfriesshire 1865–68 and 1869–74. Rev. George Arthur Everett (b.1875) born in Selkirk, he trained in the Presbyterian College in Manitoba, Canada. He was licensed by the Presbytery of Winnipeg and was minister at Lenburg Church there in 1906–07. In 1908 he became minister at Newcastleton Congregational Kirk. He remained until 1912, when he moved to Catrine in Ayrshire. He was later minister at Westray United Free Church, then Deerness, then Corgarff and finally Benholme. He married Edith Gibson Donaldson and secondly Annie Webster Japp Henderson. Helen hockey player from Hawick. She was educated at Drumlanrig and the High School and trained as a P.E. teacher at Heriot-Watt. She captained Heriot-Watt to victory at the British Universities Championships. She then played for Edinburgh Ladies and Glasgow Western. She was capped more than 100 times for Scotland, and also served as co-Captain. She has also coached the under-18 Scottish team. Horace (1910–94) born in Aberdeen, he graduated from university there, studying English and then Divinity. He was ordained in 1935, worked for 3 years for the Student Christian Movement, then was assistant minister at St. Mary’s in Dundee before being ordained as minister at West Port Kirk in Hawick about the time WWII broke out. He remained in Hawick through most of the War years, also being seconded to Orkney to serve the forces there for a while. In 1944 he moved back to Aberdeen and in 1948 became Secretary-Depute of the Church of Scotland’s Home Board, later becoming Secretary, Managing Co-ordinator and Executive Director. He helped establish new parishes and extend the work of the Church through the 1950s, when attendance across Scotland was probably at its peak. He retired in 1977 and was then Chairman of the ecumenical Scottish Churches Council for 4 years. He received an honorary D.D. from Aberdeen University in 1967 and an O.B.E. in 1978. In 1945 he married Annie Wyles Duncan (b.1918), who he met in Hawick, and they had 2 daughters. James (1762–1840) stockingmaker of Hawick, who was one of the 18 founders of the Relief Kirk. James (18th/19th C.) married Janet Graham in Hawick Parish in 1796. Their son Irvine was baptised in Bowden in 1797. James (18th/19th C.) house servant at Teviotbank in 1797, when he was working for David Simpson. James (b.c.1795) tailor in Lilliesleaf, as recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. In 1841 he was on the South side of Main Street. He had a daughter, Mary. It may be his father who was the Lilliesleaf tailor who subscribed to Andrew Scott’s book of poetry, published in Kelso in 1811. James (c.1795–bef. 1864) nephew of William. In 1832 he inherited the farm of East Fodderlee from his uncle. He was listed at East Fodderlee among the gentry of the Jedburgh area in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1864 the farm was sold to Sir William Francis Elliott of Stobs by his son James, when it was heavily burdened by debt. He served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire.
His wife was Jane and their children included James, Isabella, Jane, Agnes, John, Thomas and Margaret. His daughter married Dr. A.B. Bruce, Professor of New Testament Theology in the Free Church College in Glasgow. James (19th C.) son of James, from whom he inherited East Fodderlee. Since there were many debts, the farm was placed in the hands of the Crown and sold in 1864 to Sir William Francis Elliott of Stobs. He was said to be a great lover of books, and after the farm was sold he moved with his books to Edinburgh, where he worked as a book-seller. However, his health was never very robust and he died fairly young. James Campbell (1821–88) architect from Auchtermuchty, who designed the first Carnegie Library in Dunfermline, built 1881–83, as well as Hawick Town Hall, 1884–86. Dunfermline Town Hall is probably his other building that most closely resembles Hawick Town Hall. Other local contributions include Galashiels Poorhouse, Langlee and Netherby (near Galashiels), Waverley Hydropathic (Melrose), enlargement of Lilliesleaf Kirk and Ancrum Police Station. He trained in the office of William Burn and David Bryce and set up on his own in 1856/7. John (15th C.) listed in 1463/4 among the men who were rewarded by the King for assisting in the capture of John Douglas of Balveny, probably part of the force led by Scott of Buccleuch. He is recorded as ‘Johannes Walcæ’. The other men were Scotts, Turnbulls, a Gledstain, a Langlands, a Dalgleish etc., and so he is probably local. John (d.bef. 1532) recorded in 1532 when his nephew and heir William sold a croft and tenement in Hawick to John Morlaw. John (16th C.) recorded in Belveses in 1580 when he witnessed a marriage contract for people in Langnewton and Standhill. Adam in Langnewton was also a witness and could have been related. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Ruletownhead, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 6 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid the dog tax there in the same year. In the Land Tax Rolls for about 1874, David Henderson is listed as owner of ‘Part of Ruletownhead formerly belonging to Walter Turnbull’. Nikki (1982– ) winger with Hawick R.F.C. in 2000–02, scoring a try in the 2002 Scottish Cup Final. He then played for the Border Reivers, Ospreys, Worcester Warriors and Edinburgh Rugby. He was capped 24 times for Scotland and served as head coach in Hawick 2014–17. He works as a lecturer at Borders College. Norman member of the Hawick Saxhorn Band for over 60 years. Robert (18th C.) tenant in Belveses. He is recorded in 1731 when he had a libel case for debt against William Tunno in Selkirk. Robert (18th/19th C.) farmer at Cockleootie, recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Robert (1813/4–61) from Jedburgh, his mother was Margaret Douglas. He was a baker in Hawick, with his shop at Orrock Place. In 1851 and 1861 he was listed at 2 Orrock Place and in Slater’s 1852 directory he was a baker on Central Square. His wife was Isabella and their children included Elizabeth Douglas and Margaret Hall (1850–68). His widow later moved to Bonjedward, where she died. Robert (19th C.) stocking frame-worker in Hawick. In 1861 he was living at 25 Loan. In 1852 he married Elizabeth (c.1824–1900), daughter of Adam Kersel. Their children included: Margaret (b.c.1852); Mary (b.c.1854); and Robert (b.1855). Robert (19th C.) smith who owned 72 High Street in 1875. Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded in Belveses in 1502. He was surety for William Waugh, who was also in Belveses. Thomas (17th C.) recorded at Mervinslaw on the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. William (16th C.) recorded as ‘William Walker of Hawyk’, nephew and heir of John Walker, in the Selkirk Protocol Books of 1532, when he sold a croft and a tenement in Hawick to John Morlaw. The ‘certain croft in the bounds of the lordship of Hawyk’ was presumably Morlaw’s Croft, while the tenement was on the north side of the High Street, bordering on the Slitrig, i.e. was at the Tower Knowe. The sale included an agreement that he would pay 40 shillings Scots if necessary to rebuild the tenement there in ‘better form than now’. His name does not appear as an owner of any particates of land on Hawick’s 1537 Charter; this suggests that his uncle John had owned the lands in Hawick, but he himself lived elsewhere (maybe Selkirk) and sold off all the Hawick property he inherited. William (18th C.) recorded in 1788 as tenant in Clerklands, ‘now in Roanyhill’ in a legal case in Selkirk. William (18th/19th C.) owner of Thollieshope according to the 1788 county valuation and the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. He may be the same man as the farmer in Mervinslaw. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Mervinslaw. In 1815 he purchased East Fodderlee from Charles Kerr of Abbotrule. He married Isabella, daughter of Thomas Turnbull, and grand-daughter of Adam Turnbull of Denesyde. His wife died in 1857, aged 76. Having no children, his nephew James inherited the lands. William (19th C.) early photographer in Fife and Edinburgh who also ran a studio somewhere in Wilton in 1866–67. It may be that J.B. Cartlidge was acting as his manager, and that he never himself worked in Hawick. Rev. William Lowe (1845–1930) born in Inverarity and Methy Parish, Angus. He trained at Edinburgh Theological Hall and became minister of Hawick Congregational Union Kirk in the period 1873–76, taking over from William Munro. Note that this was the diminishing original Congregational Church, and not the Evangelical Union Church, which later changed its name to become today’s Congregational Kirk. He left to become minister at Thurso and then of a Unitarian church in Great Hamilton Street, Glasgow. He was finally a minister at Laurencekirk. He married Janet Rutherford in Edinburgh in 1870 and their children included Mary Louisa (b.1871) and Agnes Margaret (b.1873) (formerly written ‘Waker’).

Walkerburn (waw-kur-burn) n. village about 20 miles north of Hawick, between Galashiels and Innerleithen, on the A72. It was effectively founded to house workers after the construction of Henry Ballantyne’s Tweedvale mill around 1850. In the 1920s a novel system for powering mills was built here, with water pumped up to a reservoir and used to drive turbines. The town has a Museum of Textiles in the converted Ballantyne’s Mill, and the unusually patterned sandstone house, the Kirna, dating from 1867. Population (1991) 658 (from ‘Wauker’s Burn’).

Walker’s (waw-kurz) n. general store on Wellington Street in the early-to-mid 20th century.

the Walker’s Road (thu-waw-kurz-rōd) n. former name for the road that connects the A698 with the Rule valley, between Denholm and Spittal, also known as ‘Jenny Walker’s Brae’. It was said to have been given the name because people would get off their horses or carts to make the pull up the steep hill easier.

Walkingshaw (waw-kin-shaw) n. William (1840–1927) married Martha Lyon, who was daughter of Andrew Lyon and Joan Inglis and died in 1914, aged 73. His grandmother was Peggy Leggat, probably daughter of Wilton coachman Andrew. Their children were Jessie and Jenima.

walkit (waw-koe’, -ki’) pp. walked – ‘...but naither him nor his doug tuik the least notice o’ mey, but wawkit on ...’ [BCM1880], ‘Lang-syne, Aa walkit up the waitterside And owre the Station Brig, efter a game ...’ [DH].

wall (wawl) n., arch. a well, spring, drinking fountain – ‘The wall news was generally much more interesting to them than the contents of a newspaper’ [V&M], ‘Ane funtun o’ gairdens, ane wal o’ leevin’ waters ... ‘ [HSR], ‘He turns the wildirniss intil ane stannin’ water, an’ drye grund intil wals o’ water’ [HSR], ‘Is’t waeter-waeter or waal-waeter? i.e., Is it water from a river or stream, or from a well, spring, tap, or drinking-fountain, etc.? ’ [ECS] (also written ‘waal’; also well and see wells).

wall (wawl) v., arch. to roll the eyes, look with wide eyes, stare wildly – ‘He fair wall’d’ [GW], ‘His e’en fair wall’d in ’is heid’ [GW], ‘...an aamaist the whole road-end cam oot-ther-oot ti waal an glowr at the unordnar munsie’ [ECS], ‘Big wullen een or a floon-oot mouth’ [HAST1958] (also written ‘waal’ and ‘waul’; from Middle English).

Wallace see William Wallace

Wallace (waw-lis) n. Bartholomew ‘Bartie’ (16th C.) servant of Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst at the Kirklands of Bedrule in 1557. There was a complaint made to the Queen that Kerr’s servants there were attacked by a group including Turnbulls of Bedrule and others. His name is given as ‘Wallanche’. Sir David James (1945– ) born in Hawick, son of Robert and Jenny of Silverbuthall, he was a pupil at the High School and then studied at Edinburgh University, where his Ph.D. was supervised by Nobel Laureate Peter Higgs. He had a fellowship at Princeton before taking up a lectureship in Physics at Edinburgh University in 1972. After a brief interlude at the University of Southampton, he became Tait Professor of Mathematical Physics at Edinburgh University 1979–93, Head of Physics 1984–87 and Director of the Edinburgh Parallel Computing Centre 1990–93. His interests developed from a variety of topics in theoretical physics to applications of parallel computing, for services to which he received the C.B.E. in 1996. He was Vice Chancellor of Loughborough University 1994–2005, is a Fellow of the Royal Society and has served on several national education and science committees. He was Director of the Isaac Newton Institute for Mathematical Sciences in Cambridge in 2005–11, and Master of Churchill College, Cambridge 2006–14. He has also been Chair of the Council for Mathematical Sciences, President of the Institute of Physics, Deputy Lieutenant of Leicestershire and Vice-President of the Royal Society of Edinburgh. He was Common Riding Chief guest in 1987 and was knighted in 2004 for services to U.K. science, technology and engineering. His wife is Elizabeth. and they have a daughter, Sara. Eric (1938–9–2004) presenter on Border Television from 1968 until he retired in 1998. He was probably the most recognisable news reader during that time.

Gavin (18th C.) witnessed a baptism in Wilton Parish in 1770 for Anthony Haig. George (18th C.) wool-comber who was admitted as a Burgess of Hawick in 1741. He may have come from outside the Town, as part of efforts to encourage the wool trade. He may be the George, married to Margaret Waugh (probably in 1736 in Wilton, with no wife’s name given), whose children, baptised in Wilton, included James (b.1737), an unnamed son (b.1739) and Anne (b.1741). He was recorded at Roughheugh in 1737, when the baptismal witnesses were John Lockie and James (who was surely related). George (18th/19th C.) witnessed a baptism for James Murray (whose son was born at Damside) in 1810, along with John Thomline. He may be the 75-year old ‘Parish Pauper’ recorded at Wilton Pathhead on the 1841 census. James (18th C.) witnessed a baptism in Ashkirk in 1661 for James Miller. James (18th C.) tailor in Hawick. He married Isobel Tait and their children included: Margaret (b.1767); George (b.1769); and William (b.1772). Rev. James Nisbet (b.1842) son of John A., he must have grown up in Hawick. He was himself ordained as a minister in 1867 and served for a long time in Swindon, and then in Torquay. He returned to Hawick for the jubilee celebrations of Hawick Free Kirk in 1893. His son was Vicar of St. Matthew’s in Nottingham. Rev. John Aikman (1802–70) born in Edinburgh, son of James, a gunmaker, and Janet Clapperton. He was educated at Edinburgh University, licensed by the Presbytery there in 1825 and became assistant minister at Burntisland in 1827. He was minister of the Parish of Hawick from 1833, being presented by Walter Francis, Duke of Buccleuch on April 1st, following the suggestion of Dr. Chalmers. Early in his ministry he made a useful record of the number of people living in each street in Hawick. He was nominated as a trustee of the Orrock Bequest in 1834. He was residing at Hawick Manse in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1840/1 he was called to Gala, but his translation was refused by the Presbytery, after considering the petition signed by 815 Hawick communicants. During the Disruption of 1843 he walked out with about 3/4 (close to 600) of the congregation to form the Hawick Free Kirk (which later became St. George’s). He was thus the first local Free Church minister, and served until 1864. In 1858 he became senior minister (of the Presbytery presumably). As a result of leaving the established church his annual salary dropped dramatically. He lived on Wilton Path. There are several letters preserved in the National Archives relating to his subsequent disputes with the Duke of Buccleuch (his former patron). He was also a skilled woodworker and much of the pulpit and other ornaments of the original Free Kirk were carved by himself. He was sometimes nicknamed ‘Velvet Heels’ or ‘The Pope o Hawick’ by his opponents. He gifted a bell to the new Free Kirk in Kelso. He wrote a description of the Parish in 1839 for the New Statistical Account of Scotland, including in it a detailed list of the insect and plant species found in the Parish, as well as descriptions of the Auld Brig, the excavation at the Caa Knowe, the local prevalence of nicknames, etc. He also wrote ‘Statistics having reference to the ravages of Cholera in the town and neighbourhood of Hawick in 1849’ (1850). His other publications included ‘The Death of the Righteous’ (in ‘The Protestant Pulpit’, 1830), ‘The Church built by Human Agency’ (1831), ‘Sermons’ (1838), ‘The Seven Churches of Asia’ (1842), ‘Reasons for concurring in the Resolutions of the Convocation’ (1843), ‘Pastoral Recollections’ (1843, 1854 and 1864), ‘Testimonies in Favour of the Principles and Procedure of the Free Church of Scotland’ (1844), ‘The Chariot of Israel, and the Horsemen thereof, a discourse’ (1847), ‘The Railway Guide’ (1847), ‘A Pastors Legacy’ (extracts from manuscripts of Rev. Robert Nichol of Gala, 1864), ‘Jewels for the Crown of Glory’ (1864), ‘Attributes and Aspects of the Divine Redeemer’ (1864), ‘Communion Services according to the Presbyterian Form’ (1865), ‘Waymarks for the Guiding of Little Feet’ (1866), ‘Lessons from the Life of James Nisbet’ (1867) and ‘Farewell Addresses’ (1870). He also wrote a hymn, entitled ‘The Power of Prayer’, which has sometimes been attributed to other writers. In 1857–59 he took a 2 year rest, travelling on the continent, and was assisted as minister by William Gaulter 1858–64. He was presented with a silver epergne by his congregation. He married Isabella, daughter of James Nisbet, a London bookseller; she died in 1859 and is buried in Highgate Cemetery. Their son James Nisbet also became a minister at Woolwich in England. Their other children were: James Nisbet, who died young; Jeanetta Nisbet; Wilhelmina Hepburn, married Rev. John Macgregor of Hawick Free Kirk; Isabella Duncan; Catherine Nisbet;

Hamilton Gordon, Captain in the African Mail S.S. Co.; Alexander Duff Leadbetter, Edinburgh Bookseller; and Amy Jeanetta. He retired when Rev. Gaulter was translated, moving to Trinity in Edinburgh, where he died. He is buried at Rosebank Cemetery in Leith, but there is also a family obelisk in Wellogate Cemetery to which his name was added about 1930. A portrait of him still exists in St. George’s. John (b.1811/2) born in Wilton Parish, he was a butcher on the High Street. He is listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 he was at about 79 High Street. In 1833 in Jedburgh he married Jean, daughter of shepherd William Oliver (from Chesters); she died in 1855, ged 42. Their children included: David (d.1834); William (b.1835/6); John (b.1840/1); David (d.1847); and Andrew Oliver (b.1844/5).

Thomas (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He witnessed baptisms in 1689 for John Scott, in 1690 for Thomas Scott and for William Scott, in 1691 for George Robison, for someone (with the page damaged, but along with George Tait), for Robert Gledstains and for William Scott, and in 1694 for William Palmer. Probably the same Thomas married Janet Tait and had children Helen (b.1703) and Janet (b.1705). Thomas (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He was listed among the subscribers to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). In 1786 he witnessed a baptism for fellow shoemaker Robert Oliver. Probably the same Thomas was witness to a baptism for William Jackson in 1793. Sir William (c.1270–1305) from humble birth in the West of Scotland he sought to regain independence for the nation. He is often referred to simply as ‘Wallace’. He was declared Guardian of the Kingdom of Scotland at Selkirk in 1298. He is said to have visited Langlands around 1297 and tethered his horse to a thorn bush behind the Lodge (now Museum). A stone marks the site, but there is no evidence to support the story, although there is a connection between him and the Longueville/Charters family who were connected with the early Barons of Langlands. A large boulder on Meigle Hill near Galashiels is known as ‘Wallace’s Putting Stone’ and a boundary line on Minchmoor (north of Yarrowford) is ‘Wallace’s Trench’. He was barbarically executed by the soldiers of Edward I. An imposing 31 foot high red sandstone statue was erected near Dryburgh Abbey in 1814, and in Hawick Wallace Court was named after him in 1970 – ‘O Wallace! that Scotchman is not worth his room Who weeps not when he remembers thy doom’ [JR], ‘...Banners waved by Bruce and Wallace! What would future ages call us?’ [JH], ‘What need we say how Wallace fought, And how his foemen fell? Or how on glorious Bannockburn The work went wild and well?’ [HSR].

Fr. William (1768–1854) born near Huntry, he was educated in Banffshire and the Scots College of Douay, escaping back to Scotland at the outbreak of the French Revolution. Ordained at the Scots College of Valladolid in 1798, he remained there for 10 years, but had to flee Spain when Napoleon’s soldiers arrived. He then worked in Perthshire, back in Spain, then at the Edinburgh Mission, before becoming Chaplain at Traquair House. After deciding that there should be a chapel somewhere in the Scottish Borders, he ‘discovered’ a group of Catholics in Hawick in the summer of 1837. In an 1840 appeal for funds to build a Chapel in Hawick he states ‘it is remarkable that the seeds of religious animosity seem never to have been sown here, and that if attempted to be sown now, they would not prosper in a soil so adverse to their growth’. He sought out the help of the Magistrates and Council of Hawick and after raising the money (including his own savings) purchased the land (from William Wilson). He officiated at the foundation stone laying ceremony, and lived to see the chapel flourish, as well as providing additional financial help to establish a Catholic school in Hawick. He is buried at Traquair. He wrote some lines as a tribute to the new chapel – ‘Now’s the day when exiled truth Returns to galden Hawick’s youth; It fears no gag to gall its mouth; It heeds no Border foray. To bid the light of truth to shine, Our hearts and morals to refine, And wing our hopes to joys devine, Such is its peaceful story’. William (b.1806/7) born in Earlston, he was a butcher on the Howegate. He is listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 he was at about 8 Howegate. He married Margaret McLean and their children included Jane, William, David, Margaret, Robert, Mary Ann and John. William (19th C.) local shepherd. At one of the earliest recorded sheepdog trials, the Hawick trial of 1883, this gentleman astonished everyone by his ability to control his dog with quiet hisses and whistles, influencing other shepherds with his methods (formerly written ‘Wallas’).

Wallace Court (waw-lis-kör’) n. part of Mayfield, built in 1970 and named after William Wallace.

the Wallace Statue (thu-waw-lis-sta’-ew) n. statue of William Wallace near Dryburgh, built in red sandstone and standing about 7 m high, with saltire shield and double-handed sword. It was erected in 1814, carved by John Smith (of Darnick) for landowner the Earl of Buchan, and repaired in 1991.

the Wallace Thorn (thu-waw-lis-thörn) n. thorn tree where William Wallace is reputed to have tied his horse when he visited the Langlands estate about 1297. The tradition can be traced back at least to the mid-18th century (appearing in James Wilson’s ‘Annals of Hawick’). Despite there being little evidence to support this story, a memorial stone (actually the weight from an old cheese press) marks the site on the driveway behind the Museum. It was placed there in 1899 shortly after the tree was destroyed in a storm. An old well, presumably once a water supply for the Lodge, is also nearby. The story may have started through confusion of the name ‘Langlands’ with Sir Thomas (or Robert) de Longueville, a friend of Wallace, who is sometimes also said to have been a French pirate, the ‘Red Rover’. However, the connection with the Langlands estate is confused by the romaticised version of history and the identity of this Longueville. Nevertheless, there may be a connection between him and the Langlands family, although this does not lend any support the idea that Wallace visited Wilton. A piece of wood from the tree is in the Museum – ‘These words prophetic uttered then Wilton. A piece of wood from the tree is in the Museum – ‘These words prophetic uttered then When the slogan ‘A waller o’ birds’ [GW], v., arch. to wallow, swarm, heave, surge – ‘A muck-midden wallerin’ wi’ worms’ [GW] (also written ‘wailer’ and ‘wauler’).

wallie (waw-lee) n., poet. a small spring – ‘Rivers he turns intill ane wilderniss, an’ the wallies intill the gruund’ [HSR].

the Walligate (thu-waw-lee-gä) n. another version of the name for the Wellogate – ‘Yet their mirry memorials Where they stand their state Arena in modest stones In Wultan and Walligate …’ [DH], ‘And I couldna fancy the Walligate: It’s fer owre fer ootbye …’ [DH] (also written ‘Walligate’).

Wallis (waw-lis) n. 1. Washington (?–??) of Innes-Henderson in the late 19th and early 20th centuries, ??.. Isaac Grey (b.1879) born in Wakefield, Yorkshire. From a Quaker family, he was son of Robert, hosiery manufacturer in Wakefield, with his grandfather also being Isaac Grey and having a hosiery shop in Wakefield. At some point he moved to Hawick, becoming a manger for Innes-Henderson, later Braemar. He was sometimes referred to as ‘Ikie’ by his workers, although his family called him ‘Grey’. He lived at Woodside in Sunnyhill. He was a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire and was President of the Scottish Cricket Union in 1931. He can be seen in a pin-stripe suit in a photograph of the firm’s picnic of 1924. He married Margaret Frances Lindsay, daughter of manufacturer Patrick Anderson Laing, and she died in 1917. He secondly married Helen Scott.

the Walled Gairdens (thu-wawld-gär-dinz) n. ornamental and show garden, which is the pride of Wilton Lodge Park, and winner of many competitions. It lies on the road above the western side of the Park, and was formerly part of the Wilton Lodge Estate. Originally the gardens had been near the public bowling greens, but were moved to their present location by David Pringle in the 1850s. For a while the town let them as a market garden, before the Parks Department took them over as a showcase for the public and a nursery for plants in the Park and elsewhere. It contains floral displays, and a tropical greenhouse, as well as a scented garden and an aviary. The range of plants is beyond compare in the Borders. A sports changing facility was built adjacent to it in 1978.

waller (waw-lur) n., arch. a confused crowd, large number of living creatures, especially a flock in motion, swarm – ‘A waaller o’ bairns = a numerious family of children’ [ECS], ‘…a waaller o barefit gets; a wuman wui a bairn cairryin i the shawl’ [ECS], ‘…threwh when the slogan

Wallshaw (wawl-shaw) n. former farmstead in Castleton Parish. It was included along with Over Closs, Millburn and several adjacent farmsteads when surveyed for the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1718. It was presumably somewhere between the Whitrope and Roughley Burns, but its precise location is uncertain.

the Wallygate see the Wellogate

Walrig Park (wawd-rig-pawrk) n. former name for lands near Minto Kames farm. In 1780 there was a description of the lands of Minto Muir Parks, describing that ‘Walrigpark’ was part of the northern boundary, adjacent to ‘Crowsnoss’ and near the road connecting Lilliesleaf and Jedburgh. It is probably associated with the modern ‘Wellrig Strip’.

Walsingham (wawl-sing-hum) n. Francis (1577–1647) born in Hawick in Northumberland, he was an English Jesuit priest, also known as John Fennell. Despite appearing on the wikipedia page for Hawick, there is no connection whatsoever with our town.

walt (wawl-t) n., arch. welt, strengthened border of a garment, selvedge, usually the first four rows of knitting at the beginning of cuffs or shirts, knitted in an inter-locked way to stop the stitches from running – ‘To the ribs’ lood chorus cuissen off the wanted waltys’ [WL].

Walter (wawl-tur) n. (12th C.) name of the Chaplain of ‘Lillesclive’ (i.e. Lilliesleaf) who was witness at Linton in 1174 to a grant of land from William the Lion to William de Somerville. He also witnessed a charter from the Bishop of St. Andrews in about 1150 (although this has been suggested to be a fabrication). He may have been related to the later John of Lilliesleaf. He is probably also the ‘Gauterio de Lilleschive’ who was a Clerk of the Bishop of Glasgow in 1177.

Walter (wawl-tur) n. (13th C.) Dean of Teviotdale recorded sometime in the period between 1227 and 1238. His surname is unknown.

Walter, James see James Watson

the Walter Mason Collection (thu-wal'-ur-mä-sin-ko-lek-shin) n. collection of old documents relating to Selkirk and surrounding area, including some that date back to the 16th century. This included the ‘protocol books’ of clergymen and notaries, particularly Brydons and Chappmans. They were stored in the attic of the Commercial Bank in Selkirk, but ordered to be burned during WWII, along with other documents kept in storage spaces and vaults, which were regarded as fire hazard. Walter Mason, baker in Selkirk (and his brother Bruce), stole into the garden of the bank next door and rescued several bags of ancient documents. Fearful of prosecution Mason kept the existence of the documents secret until shortly before his death in the early 1970s. He handed them over to Walter Elliot, who set up a trust and deposited the documents in Selkirk Library for safe keeping. With the help of Teresa Maley a large fraction of the earlier documents were transcribed and published. They provide a fascinating insight into the lives of inhabitants of Selkirk and surrounding area, including many transactions relating to Hawick, as well as Ashkirk, Lilliesleaf, etc.

Walter’s Wynd (Wal’-urz-wünd) n. narrow street running from the middle of the High Street (between nos. 47 and 49) to the Teviot, once an area of very over-crowded housing. Before about the middle of the 18th century it was known as Horsleyhill’s Wynd, and renamed after Walter Scott, tailor (‘Wattie o the Wyndheid’), whose shop was there. The name certainly was fixed by 1790. The North Port stood at the top of the road, which was one of the old entrances to the town, and to mark this the drums and fifes march here on the Thursday night. There was formerly a pended house at the top of the Wynd, and in the early 19th century there was a public house in the Wynd. The foot of the street was once the site of the main ford used to enter the town through this gate, and the main route towards Selkirk and Edinburgh until the Teviot Bridge was built in 1741. John Nixon’s hosiery factory was here, later becoming Pringle’s, and renamed Rodono. The Drums and Fifes walk up this street as part of their march around town on ‘the Nicht Afore the Morn’.

Walter Wilson’s (wawl’-ur-wul-sinz) n. Walter Wilson’s factory, on Allars Crescent (No. 7) at the foot of the Mill Path, and at Teviot Mills in Weensland, in the latter part of the 19th century. Walter Wilson & Sons began in 1851, as part of the split up business of William Wilson & Sons, when Walter’s share was the mill on Allars Crescent, the property at 13 High Street and a piece of land in Weensland, on which he had Teviot Mill built. The firm manufactured tweeds at Teviot Mill and hosiery on Allars Crescent. After Walter the company was run by his sons Francis Elliot and Edward.

ward (wawrd) n. former division of a district, e.g. Teviotdale was split into an Easter Ward and Wester Ward, while Selkirkshire was composed of the wards of Tweed, Ettrick and Yarrow, more recently an electoral division within a town or district. In Hawick there were 5 wards established after the Police Act of 1861: North High Street; South High Street; Slitrig; Teviot; and Wilton. This number grew to 8 wards in more recent times: Teviot North; Teviot South; Burnfoot East; Burnfoot West; Wilton North; Wilton South; Slitrig; and Weensgate (see also waird).

Ward (wawrd) n. Miss (19th C.) English governess at Weens House. She taught the Cleghorn girls there and also took an interest in the young Walter Deans.

Warden (war-din) n., arch. an official charged with the enforcement of certain laws, particularly applied to the Wardens of the Marches on both sides of the Border in the 15th and 16th centuries. There were 3 Wardens on each side (West, Middle and East), often a powerful local chief, who held warden-court for the settlement of disputes and breaches of the March laws (see also Lord Warden).

Ward Law (wawrd-law) n. farm in the Ettrick Yarrow just south of Tushielaw. Also a hill in the Ettrick valley lying north of Ettrickhill, reaching 594 m, and another in the Yarrow valley north of Dryhope, reaching 421 m. A charter of 1618 records transfer of the lands of ‘Wairdlawrig’ from John Lord Hay of Yester to Robert Scott of Tushielaw. There is also a hill of the same name near Caerlavock Castle in Dumfries & Galloway, which was the rallying place of the Maxwells (‘Wairdla hill’ is on Blaeu’s 1654 map; the name is related to a ‘ward’ or ‘watch’ hill, and probably has no direct connection with the Barons of Wilton).

Wardlaw (wawrd-law) n. Adam (14th C.) recorded as collector of the contributions from the Sheriffdom of Roxburgh in 1360. Andrew (b.c.1417) probably son of Sir William (although possibly his younger brother), he was the 4th Baron of Wilton and 1st of Torrie. He married Christian, daughter of Sir James de Valonis (or Vallance), through whom he succeeded to the Torrie estates. He was succeeded by his son Sir Henry. George may have been another son.

Henry ‘Henrico de Wardlaw’ (d.1329) granted the western half of the Barony of Wilton (with Gilbert Maxwell being granted the other half) by King Robert the Bruce, about 1306, presumably as a reward for services to Scotland’s liberator. However, it may be that he could not take possession of the lands until after Bannockburn and other events ended English control of Teviotdale. There appears to be a confirming charter in about 1321 (in ‘Robertson’s Index’), stating that the lands had previously belonged to William de Charteris and Walter de Pertchay. The ‘reddendo’ for this grant was the fifth part of the service of one soldier, along with 3 suits yearly at the King’s Court in Roxburgh. The family later gained land in Fife, and were known as ‘Wardlaw of Torrie’, probably being the descendants of all the Wardlaws in Scotland, including the later Henry who was Bishop of St. Andrews. He was the first of the Wardlaws of Wilton, a family connection that lasted for over a century. He married a Stewart (possibly Mary, daughter of Sir James Stewart of Durrisdeer) and their children may have included Ellen, Henry (who succeeded), Walter (who became Cardinal of Scotland), William, Gilbert, Christian and at least one other daughter. Henry 2nd of Wilton (c.1318 – c.98) son of Henry and brother of Bishop Walter. He married a daughter of Halket of Pitfirrane. He is mentioned in a record of around 1365. It may be that he died soon after, since his brother Walter is said to have held lands in Wilton in 1367. His children were Sir William, Alexander, Walter, Henry (Bishop of St. Andrews) and a daughter (who married Sir John Carmichael). These generations are confused, since it is also said in some accounts that Andrew was his son. Henry (d.c.1440) son of Sir Andrew (although some accounts suggest he was the youngest son of Henry of Wilton) and nephew of of Walter, Bishop of Glasgow. He is also sometimes confused with the later son of Sir Andrew. He was educated at Oxford and Paris, returned to Scotland in 1385 and received many benefices. Included among these was Cavers in 1389. He was Precentor of Glasgow from about 1388 until 1403 and was then Archdeacon of Glasgow; John de Hawick succeeded him as Precentor. He still held Cavers in 1389 when he was given the Canonry of Aberdeen and Prebend of ‘Balhelvi’. He became Bishop of St. Andrews 1403–40 and founded the university there. He was also tutor to the young James I, helped arrange his release from English captivity, crowned him at Scone in 1424 and then acted as one of his most trusted advisors. In 1433/4 he witnessed an ecclesiastic gift by Archibald, Earl of Douglas. He was buried at St. Andrews Cathedral, which he had helped restore. He is also credited with founding St. Andrews University in 1411. Sir Henry (15th C.) son of Andrew. He was 5th of Wilton and 2nd of Torrie. An indenture of 1435 records him inheriting all the lands and rights from his mother Christian of Valance in return for some other lands in Fife for her and her second husband, John of Cockburn. In 1448, as Laird of the half Barony of Wilton he granted lands of Harden to Philip Turnbull. He witnessed a charter in Edinburgh in 1452. In 1454 he was Baron when the Irelands-lands were granted to David Scott. He may be the Henry who had a sasine for Hownam in 1458. He married Christian Lander (or perhaps Lauder) and was succeeded by his son Henry. His daughter Isobel married Sir Laurence Mercer of Aldie (as recorded in a charters of 1497 and 1511) and then Patrick Mercer of Inchbrakie. Other children included Walter, Sir Robert and Sir John. Henry (15th C.) son of Sir Henry, he was 6th of Wilton and 3rd of Torrie. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir John Oliphant of Aberdalgie. In 1468 she had the lands of Harden resigned to her, with Robert of Wardlaw as a witness (so possibly a son). In a 1468 document for Sir Alexander Home of that Ilk it is recorded that Andrew Ker of Cessford and his son Walter acted as procurators for him. Also in 1468 he witnessed a charter for lands in Kincardine. He is probably the Henry ‘of Torry’ who received money from the Kers of Cessford for lands in Hownam in 1468. His children were Sir Henry and Isabella (who married George Durie of that Ilk of Balcurrogal). Sir Henry (d.c.1513) son of Henry. He was the last Wardlaw of Wilton, being usually designated as the 7th Baron of Wilton and also of Torrie. In 1477 he had a charter for lands in Fife. In 1479 he had a sasine for Wilton. He is recorded in 1482 transferring lands at ‘Underchesteris’ (in the Barony of Wilton) to Robert Scott of Muirhouse. Also in 1482 he was Baron when he gave a charter for Harden to John Turnbull. In 1483 he appears to have transferred all the lands of Wilton (including advocation of the parish church) to John Scott of Thirlestane, thus ending his family’s direct connection with the area. He was knighted in 1506. In 1511 and 1512 he had charters for lands in Fife, witnessed by his son Robert. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir John Lindsay, 1st Lord of the Byres. Their children were William, Robert of Torrie and Balmule, Andrew, James, Nicholas, Herbert, Isobel, John (8th Laird of Torrie) and Helen (who married Sir John Makgill, Provost of Edinburgh). Given the year of his death, he may have died at Flodden. James (18th C.) farmer in Riccarton, recorded in 1748. Simon (15th C.) recorded as Rector of Wilton when he was witness to a charter in 1432, along with Henry Wardlaw of Sprot and Sir William Wardlaw, Chaplain. He was probably a younger son of the Baron of Wilton. Probably the same ‘Symon de Wardlaw’, presbyter of Glasgow Diocese, was the notary for the instrument of sasine in 1464 whereby Archibald Douglas took possession of the Barony of Cavers. Walter (c.1317 – 1387) son of Henry, he is recorded as holding part of the Barony of Wilton in 1367, and was the 2nd (or possibly 3rd, the confusion probably being because both his father and elder brother were Henrys) Wardlaw of Wilton. However, it may be that he simply held part of the lands, or held them while his brother’s son was in his minority. He attended Paris University and had a doctorate of theology by 1358.
Wardle

In 1361 he had passage for going to London and York. By 1359 he became Archdeacon of Lothian within the Diocese of St. Andrews and was elevated to Bishop of Glasgow in 1367, on the death of William Rae. He was also Secretary to the King and auditor in at least 1364–66 and was part of an envoy to England in that period. He received many benefices, partly due to the support of William Landels, Bishop of St. Andrews, whose family also had a Roxburghshire connection. He was also appointed Royal Secretary to David II in the 1360s. However, he had a less close connection with Robert II, and spent many years away from Scotland during his reign. In fact in 1374 he was rumoured to be dead and his assets in Scotland were seized. In 1383 he was appointed as the first ever Cardinal from Scotland. He helped negotiate the Anglo-Scottish truce at Berwick in 1380 and the Franco-Scottish alliance at Vincennes in 1383. His nephew Henry was Rector of Cavers and Bishop of St. Andrews. Sir William (d.c.1417) probably son of Henry, he was the 3rd Baron of Wilton (although these early generations are confused). A charter of Robert III (probably around 1405) granted him the lands of ‘Uchterseatmylne, Sametoun, Todshaw’ in the Barony of Wilton. He married Margaret Wardlaw and their children included Andrew and probably Henry, although other accounts suggest he died childless, with Andrew and Henry being his brothers (formerly written ‘Vardlaw’ and variants).

Wardle (war-dul) n. Joseph (b.c.1790) from England, he was a framesmith in Hawick, being listed on Back Damgate in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 he was at about 15 Back Damgate with his wife Mary and daughter Charlotte.

Wardmoor Hill (wawrd-moor-hil) n. hill at the south-western corner of Southdean Parish, just to the south-east of Black Hill, reaching a height of 365 m. On its southern slopes are 2 hollow tracks, which are part of an old road, possibly associated with the Wheel Causeway.

Wat Grieve’s Well

Rev. David (1813–89) a native of Hawick who only got 1/4 year’s schooling, becoming a spinner at Lynnwood Mill and later a Minister elsewhere. In 1841 he was living at Nixon’s Mill, with his wife Ann and children Margaret, Janet and William. He was active in the temperance movement and wrote some poetry, much of which he later disapproved of. This included the publication of ‘The Twa Frien’s: or, The Ghost o’ Cofer-Ha’’, published in 1838 (in a booklet, along with 2 other poems). This was about the story, popular in Hawick at the time, that Franky Ballantyne had swindled his boss ‘Auld Cash’ (William Oliver), whose ghost haunted him afterwards. He died in Shipley, near Bradford – ‘Yonder’s David wi’ his een glentin’ like brass tacks in his heid’ [RMi].

Charles (1816/7–c.1860) from Musselburgh, he was a local artist, who had a painter’s business in the back of 10 High Street in the mid-19th century. He is listed on the High Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. Some of his paintings of local characters, e.g. Rachel Anderson, are in the Museum. In 1844 he married Margaret Tod, who was from Prestonpans. Their children were: Isabella Hutton (b.1844); Jane (b.1846); Margaret (b.1848), who died young; Rachel Tod (b.1850); Charles, also died young (b.1852); Mary (b.1854); another Charles, commission agent; John William (b.1856), grocer of Edinburgh; and Nancy Tod (b.1860). David McBurnie (1838–1902) commission agent in Hawick. He was son of Robert and Isabella, and brought up at the Commercial Inn on Buccleuch Street. He worked for William Laidlaw & Sons for about 30 years, latterly as cashier. In the early 1880s he set himself up as a commission agent. In 1861 he was a woollen manufacturer’s clerk, living at 6 Bridge Street. He was a lifelong promoter of Hawick Public Library, for which he served as Secretary to the Committee, and collected antiquarian books for the reference room. He was also a member of the Library Association of the United Kingdom and of the Scottish History Society. He was a founder member of the Hawick Parliamentary Debating Society and active in local Liberal politics. Joining the Archaeological Society in 1857, he served as Secretary and Treasurer, as well as President 1874–75. He was a frequent contributor to the Transactions in the late 19th century, specialising in well-researched articles on early Hawick history. Of particular value are the articles he wrote about extracts from the Burgh Records of Hawick, which he had trawled through personally. He also acted as Secretary for the Science and Technical School. He married Margaret Kennedy (who was related to Bailie James Kennedy), and she died in 1892. Their children were John (said to be a clever student, who died at Glenmoral, Queensland, aged 29), Robert (bank teller in Hawick, who died aged 31) and Mary (2nd wife of Alexander Steven, newspaper proprietor in Berwick), as well as another Robert who died in infancy. He secondly married Marjorie, daughter of mason Adam Laidlaw; she was the first librarian of Hawick Public Library. He lived at Hillside Cottage and is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. A portrait of him was painted by Frank Watson Wood. George (b.c.1785) skinner on Buccleuch Street. George Bruce Scoular (1843–1923) born in Methven, son of George Bruce, minister there and Jane Scoular. He had brothers who were ministers at Lauderdale, in South Melford, Yorkshire, and at Maidstone Prison, Kent. He was educated in Edinburgh and licensed by the Presbytery there in 1874. He was ordained as minister at Logie (Dundee) that year, but translated to Cavers in 1876. He married Elizabeth Whitson Fleming and their children were: Dorothea Margaret Fleming, who married Robert Calvert Sibbald; and Mabel Jane, who married John James Scott Morrison, minister of John Knox in Aberdeen. He remained minister until his death at the very end of 1923. George Marr (1876–1950) native of Jedburgh, son of Peter and Elizabeth Marr. He had an early interest in local history, being appointed Curator of Jedburgh Museum in 1901. He then became a lexicographer on the staff of the Oxford English Dictionary. He worked there 1907–1927 under the main editor of the time, William Craigie, having special responsibility for the letter ‘U’. He served with the Devonshire Regiment from early 1917 (when married conscription came in) and is said to have edited dictionary proofs at the front, and even for a while in a captured German dugout. He wrote the extraordinarily comprehensive ‘Roxburghshire Word-Book’ (1923), research for which included reading virtually all sources of dialect literature available at the time, and corresponding with a veritable army of helpers over many years. He also contributed extensively to the Archaeological Society Transactions throughout the first half of the 20th century, having joined the Society in 1900. Additionally he helped with the proofs for James Sinton’s Hawick-related bibliography in 1908. He moved to Chicago in 1927 to join Craigie to work on the ‘Dictionary of American English’. He received an honorary M.A. from Oxford University. He returned to Oxford in 1937, but remained on the staff of the University of Chicago (teaching a proof-reading course by correspondence) until 1946. His last contribution to the Archaeological Society Transactions appeared only a few months before he died. Rev. George (1925–98) a native of Dundee, he served with the Reconnaissance Corps during WWII and afterwards in the Black Watch. He then obtained his M.A. from St. Andrews University in 1950 and B.D. in 1953. He was licensed by Dundee Presbytery in 1953 and immediately became minister of Brechin Maisone Dieu Church. He moved to Wilton Church in 1960, soon becoming an adopted Teri. He earned his Mosstroopers badge in 1963 and was Chief Guest at the 1979 Common Riding. He was active in the Masons, becoming Senior Grand Chaplain to the Grand Lodge of Scotland as well as Provincial Grand Chaplain for Roxburgh, Peebles and Selkirk. In addition he was Chaplain to Wilton School, Industrial Chaplain to Turner & Rutherfords and Honorary Chaplain to the Callants’ Club. He also had responsibility for Teviothead Kirk 1989–91. He acted as Clerk to Hawick Presbytery 1965–72 and to Jedburgh Presbytery 1972–85. He was also involved with the Weens House Committee and the R.S.S.P.C.C., becoming Chairman of the local committee. An accomplished cross-country runner as a youth, he later became a keen hill walker. His wife Betty was first Captain of the 3rd Hawick Girls’ Brigade. He retired in 1991, having been minister for 31 years, and moved to the Dean with his wife Betty. Isabella nee McBurnie (b.1815/6) from Kirkpatrick in Kirkcudbrightshire, she married Robert. Her husband was innkeeper of the Commercial Inn on Buccleuch Street, and their children were David McBurnie (of the Archæological Society) and Mary. By 1851 she was a widow, listed as the innkeeper herself. Her uncle David McBurnie, a retired innkeeper from Holywood, Dumfriesshire, was also living with her. James (d.1418) clerk of Glasgow Diocese. He was Archdeacon of Teviotdale from 1408 until his death. He witnessed a charter of James Douglas of Dalkeith in the 1410s. In 1414 the name of the Archdeacon is given in Latin as ‘Jacobi Walteri’ and in 1415 as ‘Walteri Jacobi’, and so there appears to be some confusion about his name. James (18th C.) recorded at Harden in 1771 and Threiphead in 1773 when children of his were baptised in Roberton Parish. He may be the James who married Mary Thomson in 1770 and whose children included Betty (b.1771) and Nelly (b.1773). Dr. James (18th/19th C.). He purchased the farm of Muirfield (formerly part of Hassendean Common) in 1789 from the trustees of Thomas Turnbull. His son was Thomas. He was probably the Kelso doctor who paid taxes for having servants and horses in at least the period 1789–94. James (1810–61) younger son of manufacturer William. He became a draper in Tyneside. He lived at North Shields, Tynemouth and Newcastle. In 1835 (in the Friends’ Meeting House in North Shields) he married Mary, daughter of Robert Spence, and she died in 1871. Their children were William Lindsay, Margaret, Robert Foster, Emma, Edith, Alice, Anna, James, Ernest and Emma Lindsay. James (1836–98) son of weaver Andrew, he was born in Jedburgh. He worked as a soda factory manager, grocer and newspaper reporter. However, he became known as the pre-eminent Jedburgh historian, writing ‘Jedburgh Abbey: Historical and Descriptive’ (1877) and ‘Living Bards of the Border’ (1859). James (19th C.) letter carrier in Rulewater, recorded in the early 1860s. He operated between Hawick and Hobkirk Parish. Due to some irregularity with the deliveries both he and Miss Renwick (the postmistress at Bonnyton) were relieved of their positions. This was probably in the late 1860s. Rev. James minister of Lilliesleaf Kirk, linked with Bowden, 1888–94. Jessie (b.1802/3) from Selkirk, she was a grocer on the Howegate, listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 she is listed as a ‘Provision dealer’ at about 14 Howegate. She was unmarried and living with her sister Elizabeth. Jessie (19th/20th C.) sister of Provost Robert Fraser, she bussed the Flag at the 1887 Colour Bussing ceremony, the first to be held in the Town Hall. John (16th C.) recorded in 1539 as a subtenant of Margaret Falside and Walter Scott in their lands in either Ashkirk or Falside. He may be related to William, who was also listed. Rev. John (16th/17th C.) son of Peter, minister of Fisk, and Christian Stanehouse. He is recorded as Reader at Kirkton in 1588 and as Dean at Cavers in the 1580s. He may have been the same John connected with Kirkmichael 1579–86 or with Melrose in 1569. He demitted the vicarage of Cavers in 1601 (in favour of the Parson there, William Clerk), when he is described as ‘portioner of Melrose’. He may thus have been Cavers minister from the early 1580s until about 1599, but held on to some of the ‘living’ of the parish for another couple of years. It is possible he was the ‘Dene Jhone Watsone’ recorded along with Walter Chisholme of that Ilk deputes of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in the Regality of Melrose. Note that the minister of Melrose was one of the witnesses to the 1568/9 bond between the Scotts and Kers, signed in Melrose. John (16th C.) recorded in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme as being the collector of the crops and other rents for the farms around Hawick. He also held money for a land deal between John Scott of Drinkstone and Robert Scott of Over Hassendean. Additionally he was left ‘fortie bollis beir’ in the will and was one of the witnesses to the will. He could be an ancestor of the Clerk to the Regality of Hawick recorded more than a century later. John (17th/18th C.) recorded in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when, along with John Minto, he witnessed a baptism for Andrew Raither. Perhaps the same John married Bessie Kedie in Ashkirk in 1701. John (d.1720) writer who was Clerk to the Regality of Hawick. He was recorded as Clerk to the Bailie of Regality in 1710 and was made a Burgess of Hawick in 1713. He was ‘Clerk of ye Regalitie’ when he witnessed baptisms in 1713 for weaver John Briggs and in 1714 for Archibald Aitkin, undermiller in Hawick. In 1716 he was rebuked by the Hawick Session for being at a late night drinking session that turned into a brawl. Also in 1716 he witnessed a baptism for flesher George Renwick and in 1718 another (along with ex-Bailie William Laing (his father-in-law) for William Ogilvie. In 1719 he witnessed a baptism for ‘apothecarie’ Walter Scott. He married Anna Laing in Hawick in 1709; she was born in Hawick in 1688, daughter of Bailie William Laing and Jane Thorbrand. They had 6 daughters, Jean (b.1710), May (b.1711), Margaret (b.1713), Anne (b.1715), Agnes (b.1717) and Christian (b.1718). In 1724 his widow married John Scott in an ‘irregular marriage’. He is surely related to Thomas, who succeeded him as Clerk to the Regality of Hawick; but the precise relationship is unclear (perhaps a son from an earlier marriage). John (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. His irregular marriage in Edinburgh to Helen Scott is recorded in 1720. He could be the John recorded at Borthwickbrae in 1721 when his son Walter was baptised in Roberton and the John at Parkhill in 1725 when his daughter Janet was baptised. John (18th C.) resident at Roberton Parish. He was at Hoscote in 1737 and Craik in 1743. His children were Thomas (b.1737), William (b.1739), Helen (b.1741), Isabel (b.1743) and James (b.1747). He could be the John of ‘Castledean’ Parish who married Jean Bennet in Ancrum Parish in 1735. John (18th C.) recorded at Mabonlaw in 1773 when his son John was baptised in Roberton Parish. John (18th C.) grooms at Weens in 1778, when he was working for William Oliver of Dinlabyre. By 1785–92 he was listed as ‘Stable Servant’ or ‘Groom’ at Weens. He was probably related to Walter, who was a house servant for Oliver of Dinlabyre. He was Overseer at Dinlabyre when listed as male head of household in 1835. He is probably the John who died at Dinlabyre in 1837, aged 80, and is buried in Castleton along with his daughter Mary (d.1809). John (b.c.1810) carter in Newcastleton. In 1841 he was at about 1 Doncaster Street. He may be the same John who was proprietor of the Buck Inn in Newcastleton in 1837. John Edward (1821–85) born in Hawick. He was articled to John & Benjamin Green in Newcastle as an architect in 1840, leaving in 1852 to set up his own business. He entered a design for the Great Exhibition, for which he was commended by Prince Albert. In 1869 he became President of the Northern Architects Association and became F.R.I.B.A. in 1877. He worked on Bowes Estate, at Barnard Castle and at Streatham Castle. He died at Newcastle.

Lancelot (19th C.) native of Hawick who moved to Waco, Texas, and painted an 1889 portrait of Henry Scott Riddell that hangs in the Museum. He was a guest at the 1887 Colour Bussing. He may have been the ‘Lancelot’ who was born in 1825/6, son of skinner George. Margaret ‘Meg the Manty’ or ‘Meg the Mantua’ (1808/9–66) 19th century character who came to Hawick from Minto Parish with her mother, and referred to herself as ‘Miss Walker’ (although this might be an error for ‘Watson’). In the 1841 census she was living with her mother Eleanor, a ‘mantua-maker’ in Minto village. She was a tenant at 70 High Street (and also 5 Melgund Place) and was eccentric but harmless, her great weakness being for extravagant dress, particularly hats. She affected the manners of the upper classes and was regularly taunted by the youth of Hawick. She became the most expensive pauper for Hawick Parish, because of the extended legal wrangling with Minto. She met with an accident in the Spring of 1866 and died 2 months later – ‘Braw news has come to the toon, Braw news has carried; Braw news has come to the toon, Meg the Manty’s married’ [T] (the name derived from ‘manty’ meaning a mantle or woman’s gown). Ninian (16th/17th C.) listed in 1605 among men of Eskdale, Ewesdale, etc., declared fugitives at a court in Peebles. He was said to be ‘sometime in Tynnesburne, now in Quhittleyse’. R. (d.bef. 1707) landowner in Abbotrule Parish. In the 1707 county valuation, ‘Grange’s lands’ were held by ‘Airs of R. Watson’ and valued at £396. He presumably purchased part of the former estate of Kerr of Abbotrule, or perhaps was related to the daughters of George Scott, who inherited Grange and other lands in 1670. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Watsons. Robert (b.c.1795) innkeeper on Buccleuch Street according to the 1841 census. This was the Commercial Inn at about No. 13. He married Isabella McBurnie, and she carried on as innkeeper after his death. His children were: David McBurnie (b.1838), who became a local historian; and Mary (b.1841). Robert (b.1803) eldest son of manufacturer William Watson. He attended Ackworth School in Yorkshire. He moved to North America about 1834, settling near Guelph. Robert (b.1818/9) from Chirnside, he was stationmaster at Hassendean Station in the 1860s. His wife was Margaret and their children included James, George P. and Robert. Robert Fraser (1839–1904) born at Wilton Bank, he was son of William Lindsay and brother of Thomas. He became senior partner of William Watson & Sons, Dangerfield Mills, tweed manufacturers. He was a councillor for Wilton Ward for 18 years from 1869 and Provost for 3 full terms, 1878–87. A Liberal in politics, he was President of the Hawick Liberal Association. There were many town improvements under his Provostship, including the Dodburn water scheme, the new Town Hall, widening of North Bridge Street, Duke Street built, and Pilmuir divided into two farms. He was the first to have the Provost’s Lamp outside his house.
from 1882. He was an ardent advocate for the Liddesdale railway line, a follower of the Buccleuch hounds, an ensign in the Hawick Volunteer Corps, and the first Captain of Hawick Golf Club in 1878. He was a strong Common Riding supporter, inducing members of the Council to patronise the Common Riding again after a period of much debate over Council involvement. This was effectively the start of the period of revitalization of the Common Riding. He inaugurated the Provost's breakfast in 1885 (at Wilton Bank), and led the Councillors in the Procession to the Mair, as well as organising the first Colour Bussing in the Council Chambers in 1887, with the Provost Presiding. He was also President of the Archaeological Society, Governor of Hawick Savings Bank, a director of Hawick Gas Company and involved with the Library, Cottage Hospital, Buccleuch Memorial Science and Art Institute and Sacred Harmonic Society. In 1887 he represented Hawick a function in London to celebrate Queen Victoria's Jubilee and can be seen in his court dress in a photograph from that time. In 1892 he stood as Liberal candidate for the Hawick Burghs, being defeated by Thomas Shaw. In later life he lived at Brieryards and Hassendeanburn, and never married. He purchased the writing desk that Napoleon had used on St. Helena (from the estate of the former island Governor Gen. Walker of Bowland, near Galashiels). He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery and his portrait hangs in the Town Hall (painted by Knighton Warren in 1888). He can also be seen riding near the head of the Procession in 1899, the first year the Common Riding is recorded on film. Robert (1868/9–1900) elder son of D. McBurnie. He worked as a bank teller with the National Bank of Scotland in Hawick. He died of consumption, like his younger brother John the year before. Robert Hamilton Lindsay (1886–1956) son of Thomas, from whom he took over the family manufacturing firm. He was educated at Cambridge University, which he represented in the sports of hammer and billiards. He played rugby for Hawick and was capped by Scotland in 1909. He also represented Britain in the hammer throw in the 1908 Olympics, finishing 10th overall. He was clearly an all-round sportman. He was a Lieutenant in WWI, losing 2 fingers at the Battle of Loos, and never played rugby again. He took over the family firm of William Watson & Sons after the death of his father in 1925, and oversaw its gradual decline during the depression of the 1930s. His name is sometimes given as 'Lindsay-Watson'. He married Norna Isabella, daughter of local solicitor Thomas Armstrong. Thomas (18th C.) writer (i.e. lawyer) who lived at Burnfoot in Wilton Parish. He was recorded as Clerk to the Regality of Hawick in 1720 when he witnessed a baptism for merchant John Little. He was also Clerk to the Regality in 1721. He took over as Clerk from John, who was surely related (perhaps his father) and died in 1720. He was appointed one of the Commissioners overseeing the construction of the Teviot Bridge in Hawick. In 1724 and 1727 he witnessed baptisms for Robert Scott of Burnhead and in 1731 another for Robert Scott of Falnash. He was recorded as a writer in Hawick in 1735. He was one of 4 men who proposed building a stillhouse and brewery (probably in Hawick) in 1737, possibly becoming the original 'Whisky Hooses' on Slitrig Crescent. He witnessed baptisms for weaver George Swan in 1737 for shoemaker Robert Oliver in 1738, and for Bailie Gideon Ruecastle and Jean Watson (probably a relative) in 1740. In 1744 he leased from the Buccleuch Estates the lands of 'Reidmoss' and others in Castleton, plus Gerwald and others in Eskdalemuir Parish. He is mentioned in an Edinburgh marriage record of 1750 when his daughter Marion (possibly born in Hawick in 1726) married Thomas Weir, Commissary of Lanark. He is described as 'clerk to the regality of Hawick' (i.e. the Baron’s agent in the Town) when his son Robert became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1742 and still has the same title in 1757 when John Horsburgh of that Ilk tried to recover a debt from him. He notarised a sasine relating to lands in Hobkirk Parish in 1757. In 1720 he married Eupham (or ‘Euphan’), daughter of William Scott of Burnhead, and sister of Robert of Burnhead. This was an ‘irregular marriage’ at Kirk Arthur, with a licence being given by the Bishop of Carlisle, which suggests that he was a supporter of the Episcopalian church. Their children included: Agnes (b.1721); James (b.1722); William (b.1724), who became heir of Burnhead when his cousin Margaret (wife of Rev. Dr. Charters) died without any children; Marion (b.1726); Robert (b.1729); John (b.1730); and Thomas (b.1732). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Langnewton, recorded in a letter to a Selkirk lawyer in 1792. Thomas (18th/19th C.) son of Dr. James. In 1804 there was a ‘retour’ determining him as the legitimate son of James.
He inherited the farm of Muirfield in the same year, and also purchased parts of the old Common that had been allocated to William Scott of Burnhead. He appears to have sold these to Lord Minto in 1808, but perhaps bought them back, since he still held the lands in 1814. Thomas (1807–42) 3rd son of William and brother of William Lindsay. In the electoral roll of 1834 he is listed along with his brother as joint proprietor of the Hawick spinning mill left to them by their father. He lived on Slitrig Crescent according to the 1841 census. He married Mary Renny and their children included: William Renny (b.1837); and Mary, who married Spencer Shelley. Thomas Lindsay (d.1925) son of William Lindsay and brother of Robert Fraser. He lived at Brieryyards and was prominent in local Liberal and Unionist politics. He also had a town-house at Leaburn. In about 1874 he and his mother were listed each as half owners of John Hardie’s former lands in Weensland. He played for Hawick R.F.C. in the 1890s, scoring the winning try in 1896 which won Hawick its first Scottish Championship. He was also Captain of the Golf Club at one time, and an early player of tennis. He was also a contributor to the Common Riding in the 1880s. He was long connected with St. Cuthbert’s Kirk, being a Churchwarden and Lay Elector there, and unveiling the War Memorial plaque in 1921. The firm was taken over by his son Robert Hamilton Lindsay. Walter (16th C.) occupier of the lands of Langhope and Leap Hill in Ashkirk Parish in 1544. These lands were owned by George Scott of Blindhaugh, with superiority held by the Bishop of Glasgow. Walter (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed among the ‘Cottars’ on the Hearth Tax roll there. Walter (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Borthwickbrae in 1723, 1725, 1726, 1728, 1729 and 1734. He married Agnes Easton in 1722 and their children included: Margaret (b.1723); William (b.1724); twins George and Agnes (b.1725); Margaret (b.1726); Helen (b.1728); John (b.1729); Janet (b.1732); and Walter (b.1734). Walter (18th C.) tenant in Harwood on Teviot. He married Bettie Birnie in 1755 and their children included: Margaret (b.1756); an unnamed child (b.1758); Elizabeth (b.1760); and Walter (b.1760). Walter (18th C.) house servant at Weens in 1785–88, when he was working for William Oliver of Dinlabyre. Walter (18th C.) resident of ‘Dickshall’ in Kirkton Parish. His daughter Jean was baptised in 1788. William (15th C.) recorded as late Vicar of Ashkirk in the Protocol Book of Glasgow Diocese in 1508. It appears that David Scott filled the vacancy, at least temporarily. William (16th C.) recorded as ‘sub-tenant’ in Ashkirk in 1539. He acted on behalf of the tenants there in a legal action with Margaret Falside, widow of Walter Scott in Ashkirk. He may be related to John, who is also listed. He may be the Watson (forename illegible) in Ashkirk recorded in 1579/80 as witness to an agreement between Dalgleish and Scotts, done at Kirkhouses. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Malie Bennet and their children included John (b.1654). William (17th C.) resident at Shaws in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. William of Burnhead (d.1818) son of Thomas and Eupham Scott of Burnhead. He succeeded to Burnhead after the death of his cousin Margaret Scott (daughter of Robert Scott of Burnhead) in 1815. He married Rebecca Peters in Naussau, Island of New Providence (modern Bahamas) in 1785. They had 1 son and 2 daughters. He died only 3 years after he succeeded to Burnhead and was succeeded by his son William. William (1773–1843) hosiery manufacturer, originally from Dalkeith, he was son of Robert and Agnes Brown and grandfather of Provost Robert Fraser. He was a dyer in Dalkeith, moving to Glasgow in the 1790s, where he became a retail draper. He became a customer of William Wilson, hosier in Hawick. On account of asthma, Wilson found it hard to travel and so was looking for a partner. He married Margaret Brown and the couple became Quakers, settling in Hawick in 1804. In that year he started his partnership with William Wilson, forming Wilson & Watson and building Dangerfield Mills. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’, published in 1825. He probably had the villa Wilton Bank (also called ‘Old Wilton Bank’, or No. 2 Wilton Bank) built for him on the modern Princes Street; he was living there in 1841 with his wife and 2 servants. The partnership at Dangerfield effectively began the factory system in Hawick. The firm was split in 1819 with Dangerfield Mills remaining with William Watson & Sons, which then became known as Watson’s. As well as manufacturing hosiery, his firm also spun yarn and made blankets. He was a Liberal in politics. In 1818 he wrote to the British and Foreign School Society regarding Tom Jenkins and his suitability for a missionary post. His wife Margaret died at Deanfield, Perthshire in 1850, aged 76. His children included: Robert (b.1803), who emigrated to America; William Lindsay (b.1805), who took over the hosiery firm; Thomas (b.1807); James (1810–61), who married Mary Spence and became a draper in North Shields; Agnes (b.1812), who died in infancy; George (b.1814), the youngest son, who died in Canada in 1846; and Margaret (b.1816). A portrait of him exists. He is buried in Wilton Old Churchyard. William of Burnhead (1787–1870) son of William and Rebecca Peters. He became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1840. In 1841 he is recorded as an ‘Independent Gentleman’ at ‘Burgenvale’ (i.e. Bucklands). He served as a Commissioner of Supply, Justice of the Peace and member of the Police Board for Roxburghshire. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1863. He held parts of Wester Clarilaw and Pinnacle, as well as Appletreehall Townfoot, Crawhill and Lees. In 1818 he married Bridget, daughter of William Abraham Bowles of Bath. They had 3 sons and 1 daughter, Margaret, who married John Stavert of Hoscote. He was succeeded by his eldest son, William Scott. William Lindsay (1805–49) 2nd son of William and father of Provost Robert Fraser. He married Janet (or Jessie) Fraser, sister of Provost Fraser, and worked in the family hosiery and tweed firm. He is listed on the 1834 electoral roll, along with his brother Thomas, as joint proprietor of the spinning mill left to them by their father. In 1841 he was at about 16 High Street. His children included William, Robert Fraser, Rebecca and Thomas Lindsay. He lived on the High Street, possibly No. 16. He did not live for many years after his father’s death in 1843; the firm was managed by John Paterson until his sons Robert Fraser and Thomas Lindsay took over in 1864. He died at Wiltonbank and was buried in Wilton Old Cemetery. His wife was listed in about 1874 living at Wilton Bank and owning half of John Hardie’s former lands in Weensland (the other half being owned by his son Thomas Lindsay).

Dr. William Scott of Burnhead (1819–85) eldest son of William and Bridget Bowles. He was educated under Dr. Arnold at Rugby and then studied medicine at Edinburgh University. He became a member of the Royal College of Surgeons in 1842, practised in Brighton, but gave up when he married in 1851. He then lived in Edinburgh and Melrose until 1860 when his father gave him Bucklands House, where he is recorded in 1868. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1873 and was also a member of the Ettrick Forest Club. He became a Lieutenant in the Upper Teviotdale Rifle Corps (Volunteers) when it formed in 1860. He later became Captain-Commandant of the 2nd Company. He also served as Justice of the Peace, member of the first School Board, Commissioner of Supply and Tax Commissioner for Roxburghshire. He was listed as owner of Burnhead, part of Wester Clarilaw and Pinnacle, Apple tree hall Townfoot, Crawhill, Lees and Hummelknowes in about 1874. In 1851 he married Louisa Sarah, daughter of Thomas Dennis of Pilton. They had a large family: William Scott (1855–1929), who succeeded; Thomas John (1859–60); Charles Abraham (1861–1902), who died in Australia; Bridget Sarah (1852–85); Anna Louisa Elizabeth (1853–74), who died in a riding accident; Louisa Margaret (1856–88); Susan Harriet (1858–75); and Frances Emmeline (1863–1905), who married Ernest Leonard Mahon. Sir William Renny (1838–1900) born on Slitrig Crescent in Hawick, son of Thomas and Mary Renny. He became an engineer and bank director, being partner in Watson & Tait, later Mirrlees, Watson & Yaryan Co., who manufactured cane sugar machinery in Glasgow. He was Chairman of the Glasgow and South Western Railway Company. He was a Director of the National Bank of Scotland, served for a few years as Councillor in Glasgow and was a member of the Clyde Trust. Having a keen interest in the arts and sciences, he was President of a local branch of the Royal Geographical Society. In later life he devoted efforts to charitable work, for example serving as Director of the Glasgow Workmen’s Dwellings Company and Chairman of Governors of the Victoria Infirmary. He lived at Braco Castle in Perthshire and was knighted in 1892. He gifted a large cup to Hawick Golf Club. In 1866 he married Mary Ann Caird (d.1925).

William Scott of Burnhead, J.P. (1855–1929) son of William Scott and Louisa Sarah Dennis. Educated at Cambridge, he was Captain in the 1st Essex Regiment. He sold Bucklands House in 1887. He was a speaker at the Common Riding in 1889. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1898. In 1892 he married Mabel Agnes, 4th daughter of Lieut.-Col. Thomas Mahon. Their son William was born in 1893 and appeared to have ‘Scott Watson’ as a surname (also formerly ‘Watsone’, ‘Watson’, ‘Watsou’ and ‘Watsonson’).

Watsonians (wats-ön-eë-inz) n. rugby football club, established in 1875 for ex-pupils of George Watson’s College in Edinburgh. The club lost the first Scottish Cup final in 1996 with a score of 15 to Hawick’s 17.

Founded in 1819, after William Wilson and William Watson split their partnership, it occupied the large mill at Dangerfield. The name was usually applied to the main Dangerfield mill, or collectively to the group of buildings there. It is labelled ‘Spinning Mill, Mr. Watson’ on Wood’s 1824 map. It was an apparent error in reading an invoice from this firm that led to the word ‘tweed’ being coined in about 1832 (although other accounts connect it with Wilson’s). The company is listed as both a woollen and hosiery manufacturer in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In Slater’s 1852 directory it was listed at Dangerfield Mills and Selkirk. From about 1863 the hosiery part of the business was carried on by George Hogg. The tweed business was carried on by the sons and then grandsons of William Watson. In 1874 the firm was employing 250 people, manufacturing over 170,000 pounds of goods yearly and dying 100,000 pounds. The company suffered during the depression and in 1939 needed a bond from the British Linen Bank for £10,000. Later the firm turned away from tweeds and back to hosiery. In 1982 the last Lindsay-Watson retired and the company was sold to Thiuleknit Ltd. In 1986 a fire in the offices destroyed most of the firm’s records, including pattern books and the letter establishing the word ‘tweed’. The firm finally went into liquidation in 1991, although the mill was used from 1996 by International Knitwear. The carding shed off Bath Street burned down on Common Riding Friday 2003, followed by the main mill a month later. Company records from the period 1847–1950 are stored at Edinburgh University, and a single pattern book for the years 1924–30 survives.

Watt (waw) n. Adam, W.S. (d.bef. 1674) recorded in a discharge by his 2nd son Patrick in 1674, when his lands within the Barony of Hawick were sold to the Duke and Duchess of Buccleuch. It is unclear what his Hawick connection was. Allan (19th/20th C.) born in Dundee, he became a journeyman printer. Travelling as far as London and Ireland for work, he spent some time in Hawick, where he met and married Margaret Shiell Smith, daughter of James Smith, Cornet in 1846. He became Foreman Printer with the Hawick Advertiser, but in 1880 rented a wooden hut near the station. There he started a newsagent and printers of Station Road. This firm, Allan Watt & Son, lasted for more than a century, being run in turn by Allan junior, and then by a third Allan. The tenement built at the corner of Station Road and Commercial Road in about 1894 was designed by J.P. Alison. He married Margaret (‘Maggie’) Smith in 1875. Their children included Allan S. (b.c.1877) and Helen Sutherland (b.1881). Gilbert (17th C.) Town Clerk from 1638 until about 1658. He had previously been Clerk of Circuit for the Court of the Sheriffs of Roxburgh, Berwick, Selkirk, Peebles and Dumfries and the Stewartries of Kirkcudbright and Annandale (also known as the Commissioners’ Court), which included some cases relevant to the Hawick area. He was Clerk of Circuit for 1622 and 1623, the records from that time being preserved in the Hawick Burgh archives and transcribed in James Wilson’s ‘Annals of Hawick’. It is unclear when he first had an association with Hawick, but he is probably the Gilbert in Hawick who was accused by the Earl of Buccleuch in 1628 of cutting down trees on his lands at Branhholme or Trinitylands. Probably the same Gilbert wrote to the Earl of Buccleuch in 1619, with a summons to Alexander Scott of Northhouse and other matters. He may be the same assistant of advocate Lawrence Scott recorded in a charter of lands in Ashkirk Parish in 1609. He was witness to the signing of the ‘Confessions of Faith and Bond of Union’ (Covenant) in 1638. He was also described as a notary in 1638, along with John Richardson, when the 2 were on the short-list for selection of the Town Clerk. He must have been involved with drafting the 1640 ‘Act of Bailies and Council’, and signed it as ‘Clk.’. He had a ‘protocol book’ which sadly does not survive, but is referred to in the existing extract of Robert Scott of Alton’s sasine of 1615, which was copied from it; it is also referred to in a case brought in 1670 in Melrose against Andrew Tunno (Hawick’s new Town Clerk) who held the book, from which Walter Scott of Goldielands demanded copies of sasines of Goldielands. In 1643 his lands in Hawick were valued at £13 6s 8d. In 1645 he complained to the Bailies that James Scott, lorrimer, had called him several names, including being a ‘runnigat beggar fra toune to toune’ (suggesting perhaps that he was not popular with everyone in Hawick because of being Clerk of Circuit). In 1650 someone was fined by the Council for calling him ‘and suckler, and for other injurious words’. He witnessed a baptism for John Scott ‘Westport’ in 1656. James (18th/19th C.) grocer and spirit merchant of the Howegate, recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’, published in 1825. James (b.c.1800) recorded as ‘Messenger

Wattie Scott the Cairrier (waw’-ee-skor-th-thu-kah-ree-ur) n. usual name given to Walter Scott of the early 19th century.

Wattie’s Hill (waw’-eez-hil) n. former name for lands in Jedforest. It was described in the 1538 and 1539 Exchequer Rolls as 2 steadings valued at 44 shillings. It is distinct from ‘Wattie’s Spinnels’, which is also recorded in the same lists (it is ‘Wawdoshill’ in 1538).

Wattie’s Spinnels (waw’-eez-spi-nulz) n. Wattie’s Spindles, former settlement in South-dean Parish, just west of Lethem. The remains are at the top of a small hill of that name, which is also known locally as Kately’s Croft. They consist of the turf-covered walls of 2 long rectangular buildings and a third to the west. A peel house was at the centre, but has been so robbed of stones that it is hard to make out anything other than its size, about 5 m by 4 m. There are other enclosures, boundary banks and rig lines nearby; the rig extends over at least 12 hectares, going west to the Windy Cleuch. In 1538 and 1539 it was described as 3 steadings and was valued at £3 6 shillings. John Laidlaw was tenant there in 1541, paying 44s yearly. The 1694 Hearth Tax return lists a single occupant with hearth there (Alexander Stenson), but the place is not marked on maps of the 18th century. The 1724 will of Alexander Stevenson, shepherd in ‘Wadiespinnells’ is in the Douglas of Cavers papers (it is ‘Wawdospyndillis’ in 1538, ‘Wawdosynilis’ in 1539, ‘Waldospendillis’ in 1541, ‘Wadispindillis’ in 1684, ‘wadispindels’ in 1694 and ‘Wadespinnells on Blaen’s c.1654 map’.

Wattie Wilson’s (waw’-ee-wul-sinz) n. popular name for the factories of Walter Wilson & Co., particularly the one at the corner of Teviot Road and Mill Port, which was latterly used by Glennac – ‘...We lairned oor bible in the Templar’s Hall Aback o’ Wattie Wilson’s Mill’ [WL].

Watts (wats) n. Reuben pseudonym for Daniel Marriot.

Watt’s Burn (wats-burn) n. small stream in Liddesdale, just to the east of Thorlieshope farm (it is unclear who the ‘Watt’ was, but the fact that this is a ‘Burn’ rather than a ‘Sike’ might suggest the name is relatively modern).

Watt’s Burn (wats-burn) n. small stream in Liddesdale, rising on the western slopes of Arnton Fell and running approximately south-west to join Roughley Burn. It is unclear who the Watt would have been. It is presumably unassociated with the other stream of the same name in the same Parish.

Watt’s Jock (wats-jok) n. nickname for John Scott in Hawick around 1600.

Watt Tinlinn (waw’-tin-lin) n. fictional character in Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Lay of the Last Minstrel’, who brings the first news of the approach of the English to Branxholme. Based on a probably historical figure (see Tinlin) of which firesides tales were told in Scott’s youth — And Wat of Tinlinn, much aghast, Rode back to Branksome fiery fast’ [SWS].

Wat Wat Sail (wa’-wa’-säl) n. nickname for a Hawick character in the 19th century — ‘The Sootie Kittlin’ and Bumma Rae, Jenny Tranlquets and auld Cauld Kail, Jamie Sprinkie, Kessy, the Kay, Doctor H’Yiggs and the Wat Wat Sail’ [HI] (origin obscure).

wauch (wawch) adj., arch. insipid, unpalatable — ?? [JAHM].

Wauchope (waw-chuip) n. area in Hobkirk Parish by the Wauchope Burn, with a farm and other cottages, and once a major estate. A tower there is mentioned in 1494/5 and was burned by the English in 1545. The site of this tower and foundations of cottages in the adjacent settlement could still be made out in the early 20th century; this was referred to as ‘the old town’ on a map of 1772 (this map, drawn by William Scott, also shows other forgotten features). It was in the wood to the south west of the modern farm. The family who took their names from the lands are first recorded in the late 12th and early 13th centuries, establishing that the original estate was in Roxburghshire. It appears that William ‘de Wallhope’ exchanged his lands in Ireland with the lands of Wolfelee and Rouchhope in the early 1300s. Alexander ‘de Walchope’ was confirmed in the lands in 1389. The Tower was originally held by the Wauchope, followed by the Glendinnings. ‘turri de wauchop’ is recorded in 1502 when George Turnbull called ‘Hawick’ was there (presumably the associated farm), with David Turnbull of Wauchope also recorded at the same time. David Turnbull was still Laird in 1508. Later the superiority of the lands were held by the Homes of Wedderburn, who sold them to Sir William Cranston shortly after 1605. At that time the tenants were Turnbulls, who held them on feudal tenure from the Douglasses, this going back to at least 1530. The Laird of Wauchope (probably a Turnbull) is recorded as being hurt by an arrow and his horse slain during pursuit of Lord Dacre’s force in Rule Water in late 1513. It was listed in 1538 among lands in Jedforest that had passed to the Crown, but the lands were ‘claimed by the laird thereof’; at that time it was valued at £20. A local tradition says that Mary Queen of Scott’s horse drank at the well by the old tower on her return ride from Hermitage Castle in 1566. David Turnbull of Wauchope is recorded in 1567, Hector Turnbull was recorded there in 1580 and another David Turnbull of Wauchope was slaughtered near his house in the early 17th century. In 1602 Hector Turnbull of Wauchope accused John Elliot of Copshaw of leading a band of about 100 men to steal 80 cows, 100 sheep and 12 horses from Wauchope. In 1653 the 20-pound land there was inherited by James Turnbull, as heir of his uncle Thomas of Wauchope. The superiority of the lands passed from the Cranstons of that Ilk to the Eliotts of Stobs in the 1650s, and are described in 1677 as the ‘twenty pound land of Wauchope with pertinents called Catley and Cattleyschaw’. There were Scott tenants there in the latter part of the 17th century, e.g. Walter in 1681. In 1678 the lands are valued at £1433 6s 8d. Walter Scott was there in 1694 when he paid the Hearth Tax for 3 hearths at the main house and 2 for his shepherds. In 1767 it was ‘the Twenty pound land of Waughope and Longhaugh of the old extent with the Castle, Tower, Fortalice, Miln thereof, Miln-lands’. In that year Walter Scott (a descendant of the Scotts of Goldielands and Crumhaugh) purchased the estate from James Cranston. The estate was passed to his descendants, down to the Macmillan-Scotts into the 20th century. In 1811 Walter Scott of Wauchope is recorded as owner of Wauchope Common, Wauchope-head, Wauchope-rig, Wauchope House and Wigg; the whole was valued at £1433 6s 8d, with Walter being superior of part of the lands, holding them directly of the Crown. In 1797 the shepherds there were John Wilson, James Scott, Walter Riddell and Alexander Lillico. The moots of this branch of the Scot family are ‘Miseris Succuro’ and ‘Ar denter Amo’. A new mansion was built in 1875/6 to replace the house visited in by Burns. But even that new Wauchope House is no more, the ruin being purchased by a religious order, pulled down and the stone used to build their Seminary at St. Boswells. There are now self-catering cottages on the former grounds. An old piece of pottery found on the farm is in the Museum. The house was visited by Burns on his Border Tour of 1787, perhaps the closest he came to Hawick.
Wauchope

A cairn was built there (by Henry Brown) using some stones from the former house; this is visited annually by the Burns Club and a pipe tune (written by Brian Gillis) called ‘Wauchope Cairn’ is played – ‘All Rule Water, east and west, Bowed to the spell of Turnbull’s name, And among the proud of the Border’s best There was none so proud as the Wauchope dame’ [WHO], ‘And with sigh for the oak and sob for the flower Rule ran slowly by Wauchope Tower’ [WHO] (also spelled ‘Waughope’, ‘Wawchop’, ‘Wauchup’, ‘Waltchop’, ‘Walchope’, ‘Wauchhop’, ‘Wauchope’, ‘Waughope’, ‘Waughop’, ‘Waughope’, ‘Wauchop’ and ‘Waupchope’; the origin may be a family name, although there is a suggestion that if it is very old it may be ‘valley of the strangers’, since the Anglians referred to the native Celts as ‘Waugh’, meaning ‘Welsh’; it occurs as ‘Wachope’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, and is ‘Wouchope’ on Stobie’s 1770 map; it should not be confused with the area of the same name near Langholm, although the name was probably transplanted to there).

Wauchope (waw-chup) n. area around the Wauchope Water, just west of Langholm. It is easily confused with the place of the same name in Hobkirk Parish, both sites probably being connected with the Wauchope family. It was later the seat of the Lindseys. The parish of Wauchope was united with Canonbie about 1609, and in 1672 (along with other eastern Dumfriesshire parishes) was attached to Roxburghshire, although probably not for long. It was finally united with Staple Gordon in 1702.

Wauchope (waw-chup) n. Adam (12th/13th C.) witness of a charter by Simon de Lindsay of lands in Molle to Melrose Abbey in the reign of William the Lion. His name was recorded there as ‘Ada de Waleuhope’. He also witnessed another charter for lands in Whitton to Melrose Abbey about the same time. He was also witness to a charter of lands in Elliston to Melrose Abbey sometime in the period 1220 to 1243; he is there ‘Ada de Walchope’. Given that the other witnesses were mainly connected with Roxburghshire, it is likely that his lands were those in Hobkirk Parish. Adam of Techmuiry (16th C.) witness to the marriage of William Scott of Harden and Agnes Murry, ‘Muckle Mou’d Meg’, in 1544. Alan (12th/13th C.) listed as ‘Alano de Walchope’ when he witnessed a charter in Kincardineshire sometime in the period 1203–13.

It is unclear how he was related to other Wauchope. He may have been father of the Robert recorded in 1247 as son of Alan. Alan (13th C.) Chamberlain to Donald, Earl of Mar. He is recorded in transactions in 1291 and 1292 as well as 2 undated documents. Alexander (14th C.) recorded as ‘de Walchope’ in 1389 when the lands of Wauchope (probably in Eskdale) were confirmed to him by James, Earl of Douglas. His daughter married Adam ‘de Glendowin’, whose family eventually acquired Wauchope. George of Pinnacle (17th C.) recorded as owner of Pinnacle in 1678, with the lands valued at £500. He was listed as ‘George Wauchop of Pendicle’ and was probably son of Gideon, owner in the 1660s. Gideon of Pinnacle (17th C.) described as ‘of Pinacle’ when he witnessed a contract involving lands in Hobkirk Parish in 1652. He is probably the ‘Jedeon Wauchope’ who was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire in 1644, 1646 and 1649. He was fined £2400 in 1662, after the Restoration, for being a Covenant supporter; he was there described as brother to the Laird. He was taxed for Pinnacle in about 1663. Gideon (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1761 he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Walter Cavers. His children, baptised in Roberton, included Margaret (b.1758) and John (b.1759). John (13th C.) recorded receiving a grant in Inverness-shire in 1263. John (d.c.1280s) granted lands in Ireland by Edward I in 1278. These lands were in ‘Ballihaulis’, ‘Baliotyre’ and ‘Ballimachiors’, and this was probably the start of the connection between this family and Ireland. He left a widow, Margery and 2 daughters, Alienor and Margaret. In 1300 the Irish lands were passed to his brother William. John (14th C.) recorded as ‘de Walchope’ in a charter of 1359, confirming the lands of ‘Tullibotil’ and ‘Little Culter’ to Alexander Burnard, which had formerly belonged to him. Sir Robert (13th C.) recorded in several charters in the period from about 1240 until 1271 in the counties of Aberdeen, Fife, Angus and Perth. His name is given as ‘Roberto de Walchope’ and variants. He is probably the Robert, son of Alan, who had the lands of Culter in Aberdeenshire confirmed to him in 1247. Robert (13th C.) listed as ‘Robertus de Walghop’ when he paid homage to Edward I in 1296. It is unclear where he came from. There was a separate Robert ‘de Waghope’ from Fife, although this could be the same man entered twice. If so he was surely related to the earlier Sir Robert. There was also a Thomas Walghop, tenant of the Bishop of St. Andrews in Edinburgh, listed in the Ragman Rolls. Roger (13th C.) witness to some documents in Fife in the period 1260–62. Thomas (13th C.) recorded as ‘Thomas Walchope’ in the Ragman Rolls in 1296. His seal shows a hawk killing a bird. Thomas (d.1389) Bailie for the lands of Queen Margaret, wife of David II in the Sheriffdom of Perth in 1368 and 1373. His name was listed as ‘Thome Valchope’ and ‘de Walchop’. He appears to have been Deputy Sheriff of Perth, and was given annuities in the 1380s. In 1380 he was auditor of accounts for Strathearn and had an annuity paid to him in the years 1381–88. Perhaps the same Thomas ‘de Wauchope’ is recorded in 1371 when he witnessed a charter relating to lands in the county of Edinburgh. It is unclear how he was related to other Wauchope. William (13th/14th C.) probably brother of John, who was granted lands in Ireland by Edward I in 1278. After the lands were lost to the Crown, on the death of his brother, he recovered them again in 1300. He petitioned the King sometime in the period 1300–07 to exchange his lands in Ireland for 20-pound lands in Jedforest, then yielding 34 marks yearly to the King. These were specifically the lands of ‘Wilies’ (probably Wolfelee) and ‘Rughope’ (Rouchhope), which would become the lands of Wauchope. The lands were bounded by lands held by Jedburgh Abbey, by William de Soulis and by Sir Alexander de Baliol. His request was because he was in the King’s service at the ‘conquest of Berwick’, at Dunbar, at Falkirk, at Melrose and at ‘many other journeys’. William (14th C.) Constable of Edinburgh in 1382.
Wauchopebank

Wauchopebank (waw-chup-bawngk) n. former name for lands lying to the west of Wauchope. In 1538 and 1539 the lands were valued along with Templehall at 40 shillings, and occupied by Patrick Turnbull. In 1541 the tenant was David Turnbull, paying 25s yearly. The lands are described in a bounding charter of 1567 (it is ‘Wauhopbank’ in 1538 and 1539, ‘Wauchope Bank’ in 1541 and ‘Wauchope bank’ in 1604).

Wauchope Burn (waw-chup-burn) n. stream in the upper Rule valley. It rises on Wyndburgh Hill and Fanna Hill and flows in a northerly direction to join the Harwood Burn at Tythehouse – ‘The storm in the night had twisted the fern, And the rain had flooded the Wauchope Burn’ [WHO].

Wauchope Cairn (waw-chup-kärn) n. commemorative cairn erected at the site of old Wauchope House, using some of the house’s stones. It was erected in 1985 by local Burns Clubs to mark the visit of Robbie Burns visit to Wauchope House in 1787, the nearest he came to Hawick. It has been visited annually (in July) since it was built. A stone tablet in the ground by the cairn reads ‘F.S. + E.C. WAUCHOPE’.

Wauchope Castle (waw-chup-kaw-sul) n. ruined castle south-west of Langholm, on the Wauchope Water, formerly home of the Lindsay’s. It was once a very impressive fortress, built in the late 13th century and ruined by the late 16th.

Wauchope Common (waw-chup-koom-n) n. former name for part of the lands of Wauchope in upper Rulewater. In 1811 it is ‘those parts and portions of the Lands of Wauchope called Common’ on the Land Tax Rolls when it was part of the estate owned by Walter Scott of Wauchope.

Wauchope Forest (waw-chup-for-rist) n. large commercial forest to the south-east of Hawick. It combines with Kielder Forest to form the Border Forest Park and was named after the area at the head of the Rule valley.

Wauchopeheid (waw-chup-heed) n. Wauchopehead, former farmstead in Hobkirk Parish in the upper reaches of the Wauchope Burn. In 1404 it was granted to John Turnbull after being forfeited by John ‘Bour’. The farm is one of those that passed from Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus, to the Crown in about 1537, with Walter Scott of Buccleuch being accused of occupying the lands, which had been in waste for the previous 20 years. In 1541 the tenant was David Turnbull, paying 25s. It is recorded in 1562 in the document describing lands disputed by the Barons of Foul Rule. In the 1811 Land Tax Rolls it was ‘part of that called Hawkleytongues, or Wauchope-head, now known by the name of the North-west division of the said Lands of Wauchope’ (marked on Stobie’s 1770 map; it is ‘Wauchopeheid’ in 1404 and ‘Wauchopeheid’ in 1538, ‘Wauchopeheid’ in 1539 and ‘Wauchopeheid’ and ‘Wauchopeheid’ in 1541).

Wauchope Hoose (waw-chup-hooz) n. former house at Wauchope. It was originally a tower, owned by the Wauchope, then the Turnbulls and then the Scotts. The site of this old tower could still be made out in the early 20th century, with foundations of cottage nearby marking the former settlement. In 1694 the tax was paid on 3 hearths there by Walter Scott. The newer house was developed in the 18th century, and was famously visited by Burns in May 1787. His hostess was Mrs. Scott who was known as an artist and poet in her own right, writing the epistle ‘The guid-wife of Wauchope to Burns’. The tumbler out of which Burns drank was long preserved by the family.
Wauchope Rig

There is a sketch of the house by Mrs. Macmillan Scott in 1848, and was still there in the 1890s when the Berwickshire Naturalists’ Club visited. Situated beside the public road, it was of the typical farmhouse construction, being of 2 1/2 storeys, with large, white-sashed windows, and two lateral wings of a single storey. The house was rebuilt in 1875/6 by Walter Macmillan-Scott, 6th Laird, to plans by Peddie, Kinnear & Co, built of red sandstone. It survived into the mid-20th century, but was torn down in 1936 after being purchased by a religious group, and most of the stones used to construct their college in St. Boswells. However, some of the stones were also used to build a cairn in the house’s location, which is visited annually by the Burns Club. The site now has some shingles-clad holiday cottages.

Wauchope Rig (waw-chup-rig) n. hill above Wauchope in the Rule valley, to the west of the main road between Wolvehopelee and Hyndlee. Part of the lands here were where the house was built; the 1811 Land Tax Rolls lists ‘Wauchope-rig, now known by the name of the House, or middle division of the Lands of Wughope’. An ancient earthwork situated, on the north-east spur, has been used as a quarry. It is said that some Roman coins were found there. The earthwork was probably a small settlement, and unlikely to be Roman; it is now within the forest. The sides of the Rig also have signs of old terracing.

Wauchope Waas (waw-chup-wawz) n. another name for Langhaugh Waas.

Wauchope Witter (waw-chup-wi’-ur) n. river that meets the Esk at Langholm. The valley is sometimes known as Wauchopeadale, and its history is wrapped up with that of the Wauchope family. It should not be confused with the Wauchope Burn, which flows through Wauchope Forest to meet the Rule Water (although the names may of course be related).

waucht (waw-chut) n., poet. A draught of liquid, long drink, swig – ‘A waucht o waeter’ [ECS], ‘…an slokent ma drooth …wui a lang waucht that garrd iz sicht’ [ECS], a draught, breeze – ‘Up! up yet higher on the slippery mount, Another waucht frae strengthening Helicon’ [JoHa] (also written ‘waught’).

wauf (wawf) n., arch. A waft – ‘For ilka wauf o’ wind that blaws dings dauds o’t on the lea …’ [JoHa] (also spelled ‘woff’).

wauf (wawf) adj., arch. Wayward, like a vagrant, disreputable – ‘They’Il plan the wauf aboon the wise, The false o’ heart aboon the true’ [HSR], feeble in mind or body, ineffectual – ‘The heat turns leify folk dawallt an wauf’ [ECS], ‘When a popular preacher mounted the rostrum, the people all flocked to the tent; when a wauf hand turned up, the tide was all the other way’ [RJR], lacking strength, paltry, weakened – ‘Our wa’s atweel are waff enough’ [HSR], ‘My strencht he mde waff bie the waye; he shortenet my dayes’ [HSR], ‘It’s just about the richt thickness; neither owre wauf nor owre solid’ [DH], n., arch. A wastrel, worthless person – ‘(also spelled ‘waaf’ and ‘waff’).

in 1799. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Scott and their children included: William (b.1779); Janet (b.1780); Andrew (b.1782); Violet (b.1786); Marjory (b.1787); unnamed (b.1789); and Helen (b.1791). Andrew (18th C.) butcher in Hawick. He witnessed a baptism (along with Kirk Officer Thomas Miller) in 1786 for John Stewart. Andrew (1784–1836) probably father of Bailie Andrew, he was a clothier on the High Street, and one of the founders of the Relief (Allars) Kirk in 1810. He was recorded as a High Street tailor in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. ‘Andrew & David’ were recorded as High Street tailors in 1837, probably referring to him and a son. His premises at around 38 High Street are marked on Wood’s 1824 map. His wife may have been Janet (who was living there in 1841). Andrew (b.c.1785) music teacher in Denholm. His wife was Martha, and their children included Mary and Betty. Bailie Andrew (1813–85) tailor and clothier at 38 High Street. In 1841 he was there with his wife Euphemia and brothers William and Robert. In 1851 he was employing 4 men and 2 apprentices. He was listed as a High Street tailor in Slater’s 1852 directory. He was the last Senior Magistrate of the town in 1861. He presented a coin to the Museum in 1863. He was a long time manager of Allars Kirk and Treasurer for 26 years. He married Euphemia Kerr, and their children included: Euphemia (b.1842); Janet (b.1844); Mary Kerr (b.1846), who probably died young; Andrew (b.1849); Jane (b.1851); Thomas (b.1853); Robert (b.1855); and Georgina (b.1861). Andrew (b.1839) builder who lived on the Wolfelee estate at Blackcleugh Cottage and later at Wolfelee School Cottage. He was son of Thomas, mason at Denholm and his grandfather had been a music teacher who went from house to house. He is probably the journeyman mason recorded in 1861 at 61 High St., Hawick. He could be the Andrew who is recorded as a supporter of the Jedforest Hunt in the latter part of the 19th century. He married Agnes Purdom at Bonchester farmhouse. Their children were: Mary, who was nurse at Weens and married Will Robson; Thomas Waugh, mason who married Agnes Goodfellow; John, mason who married Jane Moore; Janet, who married William Mackay; Agnes, who married James Renwick; Robert, who married Jane McQueen; Andrew; William, who emigrated to America; and Arthur Young. He became deaf later in life, but kept up his business as well as an association with the Jedforest Hounds until late in life. Andrew (d.1924) third generation clothier of the same name. He was a Trustee and Manager of Allars Kirk. He was known for being ambidextrous. He is probably the Andrew from Hawick who was a collector of local fossils. Andrew (19th/20th C.) barber in Hawick. He was an enthusiastic supporter of the Hawick Home Mission. He served as President of the organisation at the times of its 40th, 50th and 70th anniversaries. Archibald (18th C.) tailor in Hawick. He married Isabel Farquharson and their daughter Isabel was baptised in 1757, with the whole congregation as witnesses. The death of his boarder is recorded in Hawick in 1777. David (15th C.) resident of Bedrule recorded at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493. Along with George Turnbull of Bedrule and weaver William White they had remission for stealing cattle from Pringle in Pilmuir, associating with John Turnbull of Gatehousecote, comming with the ‘traitors of Leven’ and accompanying the former Duke of Albany; his surety was George Turnbull of Bedrule. In 1494/5 he was ‘in Bedrule or in Hawick’ when he had further remission for several crimes, including: stealing 24 sheep from Thomas Scott of Bowerhouse; stealing 26 cows from James Pringle of Pilmuir; stealing 85 cows, 3 heifers, 13 horses and tools from John Borthwick of Crookston and his tenants; and for common theft before his previous remission. His sureties were the Laird of Bedrule and Robert Scott of Whitchester. His surname was given as ‘Walch’. Edward (16th C.) tenant in part of the farm of ‘Burwinyet’ in Jedforest in 1541. William and George were tenants of the other part and surely related. Evelyn Arthur St. John (1903–66) writer, born in London and educated at Oxford University, he was already a fairly established author when WWII broke out and he joined the Royal Marine Infantry Brigade, being their oldest recruit at age 36. He transferred to the Commandos, and saw some active service, but disputes with senior officers led to several other transfers, and him spending much of his time in training. This included a move to Hawick where he trained as part of ‘5RM’, in the latter part of 1941. His most famous novel ‘Brideshead Revisited’ was written while on medical leave (after breaking his leg in parachute training) in the first half of 1944. George (15th C.) mentioned as one of the witnesses to the sasine of 1490 when Robert Scott purchased land in Hawick from Robert Cessford. He is probably the same man as ‘Georgius Walch in hawic’ who was surety for John Liddersdale in Hawick, who was fined at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493. Additionally in 1493 he was allowed to 'compone' for: resetting John Tunbull of Gatehousecot, who had been declared a rebel for the murder of Archibald Rutherford; stealing 4 cows from Matthew Gotterson in the Forest of Launder; stealing 22 sheep from Thomas Scott in Bowerhouse; and common theft. His surety was Robert Scott of Whitchester. George (16th C.) tenant along with William in part of the farm of 'Burwynyet' in Jedforest in 1541. Edward was tenant of the other part and surely related. George (16th C.) English fugitive recorded in 1541. He was reset by Alexander Armstrong in Monkbehirst, along with Thomas, as well as 2 Purdoms. George (16th C.) recorded in Kirkhouses in Ashkirk Parish in 1579. He was a witness to the making of the inventory of Isabel Donald, widow of Robert of Palace, in 1579. Additionally in 1579/80 he was recorded in Crawknowe when he was a witness in Kirkhouses for a case between Dalgieishes and Scotts. Perhaps the same George was recorded in Kirkhouses in 1580 when he was witness to a double marriage contract for the widow and daughter of the deceased Robert in Ashkirk (who was probably a relative). Perhaps he was the George in Blindhaugh recorded in 1580/1 as witness to a wadset between Andrew Davidson of Kames and Walter Turnbull of Bewlie. George (17th C.) resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. Gilbert (17th/18th C.) recorded ‘of Schaw’ in 1724. His factor William (who was also Sheriff-Clerk of Selkirk) had a receipt from Selkirk for rent of a seat in the kirk there. He may have been related to Andrew of Shaw. Henry (16th C.) recorded in 1579 as servant to Walter Riddell of that Ilk. He was witness to a transaction done at Riddell, between Robert Scott of Allanhaugh and Walter Scott of Todrig. Isabel (17th/18th C.) recorded in Wilton Parish in 1705. She confessed in front of the Session that she was having the child of Walter, son of John Scott of Cockerheugh. She stood ‘in the publick plais of repentance’, probably for several Sundays, and then had to pay 10 groats into the poor box. The father, Walter, was fined £4 Scots, but there is no record of him sitting on the stool of repentance. Isabel (18th/19th C.) one of the Waugh's of Luggage Hall. The death of her unnamed child is recorded in Hawick in 1808, with the notation ‘a Bastard . . . Luggage’. Isabella (18th C.) jailed in Edinburgh along with 3 men, for their conduct in opposing the arrival of the new minister of Castleton Parish, Simon Haliburton, in 1751. James (16th C.) recorded as tenant of part of Mervinslaw in a rental roll of Jedforest in 1541. His steading was valued at 18s 9d. James (16th C.) recorded as ‘James Vauch’ in 1543 when he was one of the men who failed to appear to answer for helping Henry VIII’s men burn and sack Borthwickeuses and neighbouring areas. James (16th/17th C.) grandson of John of Heap. In 1635/6 he was served heir to his grandfather’s 5 merklands of ‘Eister Heip’ in the Barony of Wilton. The name of his father is not recorded, but this could have been Robert of Heap, who is recorded in 1615 and 1616. James (17th C.) ‘officier’ named on a list of ‘idle and masterless men’, suggested by the Hawick Bailie as fit to be sent to the war in Germany in 1627. They were described as ‘fitter to be employed in his Majesteis service nor to be suffered to ly loyttering at home’. However, when later produced before the Privy Council by the Bailie he was one of the men who were found ‘not fit for the wars’ and dismissed. He presumably had worked as some kind of officer, perhaps a Burgh Officer. James (17th C.) resident of Burnfoot in Ashkirk Parish. In 1640, along with James Allan, he was accused by the Kirk Session of ‘sowing cloathes about some of their sheep’. Presumably this was a discretion on the Sabbath. James (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, specifically the Hassendean part. He is recorded ‘in hassendan’ in a baptismal record of 1688. He married Janet Waugh in 1683 and their children included: John (b.1683); Helen (b.1685); and Marion (b.1688). The witnesses in 1688 were Thomas Lockie and Thomas Caldwell. James (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He married Margaret Scott and their children included: Helen (b.1757); Robert (b.1760); Janet (b.1763); Jane (b.1765); Sarah (b.1768). The witnesses in 1757 were shoemaker John Scott (probably related to his wife) and butcher Thomas (probably a close relative), in 1765 were the whole congregation and in 1768 were Thomas, both senior and junior. He was probably also father of shoemaker Thomas. He could be the James, son of John and Helen Riddell, born in Wilton in 1722. It is possible he was the James who in 1772 witnessed a baptism for William Turnbull. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Euphan Dodds and their children included Thomas (b.1771) and Elizabeth (b.1786). In 1786 he (or his wife perhaps) was recorded as ‘pauper’ in the baptismal record, with witnesses the whole congregation. James (18th C.) listed along with Andrew as farmer at Broomiebraes in 1792, when they were leasing from the Scotts of Buccleuch. James (18th/19th C.) stockmaker who was one of the founders of the Relief Kirk in 1810. James (19th C.) Curator of the Archaological Society collection when located in the Buccleuch Memorial in the 1880s. John (15th C.) witness to an instrument of 1454 relating to the lands of Burrell in the barony of Eckford. Information was given by Alexander Henderson ‘in tenement of John Walche, elder, in town of Hawic’. ‘John Walch, younger’ was also a witness, as well as Robert Scott. They are all described as Burgesses, presumably of Hawick. Probably the same ‘Johanne Walch’ is listed as a witness to the sasine granting the Barony of Hawick to William Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1452, where he is ‘Johanne Walch’. And he is probably the John who witnessed the charter of 1453 relating to the first known sasine within the burgh of Hawick. In 1455 he is one of 4 Burgesses listed on a document relating to the lands of Whitchesters, and is listed as a Burgess in a related document in 1456. John (15th C.) recorded as ‘Johanni Walch in bone jedworth’ (i.e. Bonjedward) at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1493. John Wilkinson in Nether Auncrum had remission for a crime against him. John (15th C.) recorded as ‘Johannes Walch’ at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1493. He had remission for stealing a large number of sheep from the Murrays in Sundhope and also for associating with the former Duke of Albany. His surety was Peter, son of Sir Thomas Turnbull. It is possible he was the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Johann Walch’ as a witness to a charter of David Scott of Hassendean in 1510/11. He was probably related to the later John, tenant of Clerklands. Perhaps the same ‘Johannem Walch’ was on the panel for Elizabeth Cunningham inheriting the lands of Appletreehall and the eastern part of Hassendean in 1482. He may be the same ‘Johanne Walche’ who was notary among the witnesses for the charter of Over Newhall in 1484. John of Heap (16th C.) recorded in an agreement of 1534 preserved in the Selkirk Protocol Books. He was ‘lord of Heip’ when along with his wife Elizabeth Ker they resigned her claims to a third of Heap and Craigwood in Rulewater, for payment of 10 merks a year. The fact that this was done in Selkirk suggests that his wife was from there; Richard was a witness and probably related. He was surely connected to the other Waughis of Heap. John (16th C.) owner of 2 particates of land on the south side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. Probably the same John was also holder of a particate of land on the north side. He may be a descendant of the earlier John in Hawick. John (16th C.) tenant in Castlehill in Jedforest in 1514. He jointly held the lands with Robert. John (16th C.) recorded as ‘John Waitche in Clerklandis’ (i.e. near Lilliesleaf) when he was witness to a charter of the lands of Harden in 1559. The name ‘Waitche’ could also be the modern ‘Veitch’ or other possibilities. John (16th C.) tenant in Auld Jedburgh. In 1567 he was listed among men who Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst had to present to answer accusations of raiding into England. John of Heap (16th/17th C.) owner of the lands of Easter Heap. In 1635/6 his grandson James was served as heir to his 5 merklands of ‘Eister Heip’ in the Barony of Wilton. John (17th C.) tenant in Mervinslaw according to a 1694 rental roll of Jedforest, with his name recorded as ‘Wach’. He may have been descended from the much earlier Robert. John (17th C.) shepherd at Orchard according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th C.) listed as tenant at Heap in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He is probably related to the earlier Waughis from Heap. John (17th C.) resident at Commonside according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th/18th C.) resident in Slaidhills in 1701 when he is recorded giving money to the Parish after the burial of his son William. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Appletreehall in 1725. He married Helen Riddell in 1719 and their children included: James (b.1720); Robert (b.1722); Bessie (b.1725); William (b.1736); and Thomas (b.1738). The witnesses in 1725 were James Dryden and Walter Scott. John (d.bef. 1799) resident of Hawick Parish. The death of his wife Betty Laidlaw is recorded in 1799. His name could be an error for Robert (whose wife had the same name). John (18th/19th C.) slater in Hawick. His unnamed child died in 1798. John (b.1814) son of Thomas and Sarah Beattie. Like his father, he was a farmer at Burnmouth, in Castleton Parish. In 1851 he was recorded as cattle dealer at Under Burnmouth. His wife was Isabella and they had children Margaret, Sarah, George, Janet and Mary Jane. John (1824–1904/5) son of Robert and Elizabeth Hindmarsh, he was born in Southdean Parish. He succeeded his father as blacksmith at Chesters. He was there for about 20 years, and then became tenant farmer at Higend (in Rulewater) for 32 years, while his nephew Elliot Murray succeeded as blacksmith

his daughter Janet with John Winthrope's son at Highend, along with their mother. He moved to Kirknowe where he died. John (b.1868) son of Andrew and Agnes Purdom. He was born at Wolfelee Glen and became a Rulewater ma-sone. In 1893 he married Jane, 5th daughter of James Moore and Jane Thomson, at Blacklee Brae. Their children included Jane Thomson, who was born at Swanshiel. Margaret (17th

C.) recorded at Mervinslaw on the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. Mrs. Margaret (d.c.1716) left £60 for the benefit of the poor of Hawick Parish in 1716. Margaret (b.c.1810) recorded as a mid-wife at about 12 High Street on the 1841 census.
She lived there with Mary and Margaret, who are probably her daughters. Philip (15th C.) recorded as ‘Philippo Walgh, perpetuo vicario de Sibbaldby’ in 1451, when he witnessed the charter exchanging Milsington with Heap. This was dated at Wilton Kirk. It is unclear where ‘Sibbaldby’ is.
This is surely the same ‘domino Philippo Walch capellano’, who witnessed a charter in the Barony of Wilton in 1454. Richard (16th C.) recorded in 1534 when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk for John of Heap and his wife Elizabeth Ker. He was probably related to John. Richard (b.1830) from Lessuden, son of James and Margaret Mercer. He was also a descendant of the Weens family, who were shoemakers in Hawick. He became a successful businessman in Winnipeg. In 1904 he wrote a memoir of his early life, which contains some interesting anecdotes of the mid-19th century. Robert ‘de Hep’ (13th C.) entered in the Ragman Rolls of 1296. His seal showed a star enclosed by a serpent. This is probably Heap in Wilton. Adam ‘de Hep’ (his surname being effectively ‘Heap’ and so presumably not related) also signed, so they probably separately held the west and east parts of the lands of Heap. There were still Waughs associated with Heap about 400 years later. Robert (15th/16th C.) tenant in Mervinslaw. In 1502 he had remission, along with several Olivers from Jedburgh and Rulewater, for the murder of Robert Brig and Adam ‘Barnisfader’ at ‘Kelsop’. His surety was Ralph Ker of Primside Loch. Robert (16th C.) tenant in Castlehill in Jedforest in 1541. He jointly held the lands with John. Robert (d.bef. 1580) recorded being formerly ‘in Askirk’ in 1580 when his widow Elizabeth Elliot had a marriage contact with John Winthrove, and at the same time his daughter Janet with John Winthrove’s son Robert. He also had a son James, who was arranged to remain with his widow’s new family until he came of age. George in Crawknowe was a witness and hence probably related. Robert (16th C.) recorded as resident at Essenside when acting as a cautioner for William Scott in Burn-foot on Ale. Robert (16th/17th C.) recorded in a sasine of 1615 for the lands of Easter Heap, following a charter by George Langlands of that Ilk. He is probably also the ‘Robert Wauch of Hoip’ who was on the 1616 jury for the trial of Jock Scott, ‘the Suckler’, for sheep-stealing. He may have been son of John and father of James; certainly in 1635/6 James was served heir to the lands of his grandfather, John of Heap. Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton and Cavers Parishes.
He is recorded at Trow Mill in 1753 and Grundis-tone in 1759. He married Bessie Laidlaw and their children included: Mary (b.1748), Helen (b.1750), and John (b.1753), baptised in Cavers Parish; and Betty (b.1759), baptised in Wilton. The witnesses in 1759 were Thomas Knox and Robert Scott. He is probably the man recorded as ‘John’ in 1799 when his wife Betty Laidlaw died in Hawick. Robert (18th C.) tailor in Hawick who is listed among the subscribers to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He must have been closely related to the contemporary tailor Thomas. He is recorded as a tailor in 1799 when an unnamed daughter of his died in Hawick. He is probably the tailor and merchant Robert whose son Robert died in Hawick in 1815 and the tailor Robert whose daughter Mary died in Hawick in 1819. He probably married Mary Paterson and had children Thomas (b.1805), Andrew (b.1807) and Mary (b.1809). Robert (1774–1859) blacksmith at Chesters. He married Elizabeth (‘Betty’) Hindmarsh at Newcastle-on-Tyne. He was blacksmith at Chesters for 45 years, being succeeded by his son John and then John’s nephew Elliot Murray. His children included: Elizabeth (b.1815), who married Adam Sinton; Catherine (b.1817), who married Thomas Robson, blacksmith at Teviothead; Helen (b.1819), who mar-rried Robert Murray, farm steward at Dimpleknowe; William (1822–81), vet in Hawick; John (1824–1904), who was blacksmith at Chesters and at Highend; Mary (b.1827), who married John Kedie, master blacksmith at Heatherlie, Selkirk; and Robert (1830–59), who helped his father as blacksmith. Robert (1783/4–1827) shepherd at Whitehaugh Mains. He is buried in Old Wilton Cemetery. Robert (b.1783/4) born in Ewes Parish, he was tollkeeper at the New Toll Bar in

Ewesdale in 1851. He married Mary Irving and their children included William and Janet. Rev. Robert minister of Denholm 1754–74, linked with Bedrule from 1693. Serg. ?? (18th/19th C.) recruiting sergeant for the Dumfries Militia. In 1809 he loaned his sash for use by the ‘rebel’ Cornet, John Tully. He also tried to take the coach to Selkirk to find musicians in Selkirk for the rebel party, but was pushed off the coach at Pathhead, the guard having been paid off by the ‘royalist’ party. Stephen (16th C.) tenant in Wadeshill in 1571/2 when he was listed among men of the Southdean area for whom William Oliver of Lustruther was pledge. Thomas (16th C.) English fugitive recorded in 1541. He was reset by Alexander Armstrong in Monkbehirst, along with George, as well as 2 Purdoms. His name is given as ‘Thomas Walghe’. Thomas (17th C.) Hawick merchant who was arrested in about 1678 for attending field conventicles. Margaret Barclay and William Turnbull were arrested at the same time. They were condemned to be sold as slaves to the plantations. Thomas (d.bef. 1716) merchant of Hawick. In 1703 he witnessed a baptism for carrier David Minto and in 1704 he witnessed a baptism for fellow-merchant Bailie George Martin. In 1716 his widow Margaret gave in a bond for 760 Scots (which she held with candlemaker George Turnbull) for the benefit of the poor of the Parish. He could be the Thomas who paid tax for 2 hearths on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694 and who was listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He is probably the Thomas who witnessed a baptism for John Beattie in 1684. Thomas (17th/18th C.) flesher in Hawick. In 1711 he witnessed baptisms for smith Thomas Huntly and for merchant Walter Scott. His wife was Bessie Scott and their children included: Thomas (b.1711); Margaret (b.1713); Thomas (b.1715); Agnes (b.1716); James (b.1718); and an unnamed son (b.1721). Witnesses in 1716 were flesher John Tudhope and Thomas Wilson. Thomas of Hawkburn (1717/8–1894) writer in Jedburgh, also referred to as being ‘of Hagburn’. In 1767 he served as Proctor for the Duke of Buccleuch in the perambulation of Hawick Common, carried as out as part of the court case over the division of the Common. His lands in Jedburgh Parish are listed in the 1788 draft valuation of the county, including parcels of land in Hawickgate; he also owned Hawkburn and other lands in Melrose Parish. In 1790 and 1788 he was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire, his private description being ‘Rich, An only daughter married to Captain Ormiston, Jedburgh. Attentive to interest. Will probably go with Sir Gilbert Elliot’. He paid tax on servants and horses in the 1770s to 1790s. Thomas (18th C.) butcher in Hawick. In 1740 he witnessed a baptism (along with fellow flesher William Renwick) for cooper William Richardson. In 1757 he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker James, who was probably a close relative. In 1766 he witnessed a baptism for wright Gideon Easton and in 1767 he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Thomas (who was probably his son). He is probably also the Thomas senior who, along with Thomas junior, in 1768 witnessed a baptism for shoemaker James (perhaps his son). He could be the Thomas, son of Thomas and Betty Clerk, born in Hawick in 1735. Thomas (18th C.) shoemaker of Hawick Parish. He is probably the Thomas, junior, who (along with Thomas senior) witnessed a baptism in 1768 for shoemaker James (perhaps his brother). It thus seems clear that he was son of Thomas. He married Helen Lawson and their children included Margaret (b.1766), Walter (b.1767), Thomas (b.1769), Rachel (b.1771), an unnamed child (b.1774), Dorothy (b.1779) and Peter (b.1781). The witnesses in 1767 were butcher Thomas (probably his father) and carrier William Nichol. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Christian Henderson in 1773 and had children William (b.1777) and Walter (b.1780). Thomas (18th/19th C.) tailor of Hawick. In 1762 he married Helen Ferguson from Wilton Parish; he was already deceased in 1805 when she died. Their children included: John (b.1763); Isabel (b.1765); Robert (b.1767); Thomas (b.1769); and Alexander (b.1770). Thomas (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. During the 1767 flood he and John Oliver ‘got to the top of the kiln’, but then needed people to throw ropes to save them. He could be the Thomas whose son was one of 2 men carried off from the Auld Brig during the great flood of 1767. He may have been father of shoemaker James. Thomas (d.1811) shoemaker, son of James. His death is recorded in Hawick. He may have been grandson of the earlier Thomas. Thomas (b.1779/80) farmer at Burnmouth in the south part of Castleton Parish. He was listed at Burnmouth among heads of households in 1835–41. He married Sarah Beattie. In 1841 he was also living with Robert (probably his brother), and Janet (either daughter of niece). In 1851 he was farming 45 arable acres and 355 acres of moorland, with 5 labourers. His son John was also a farmer at Burnmouth. He could be the drover of Castleton who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. Thomas ‘Tom’ (19th C.) weaver in Hawick. It is said that during the procession to the election in Jedburgh in 1831 he walked by the coach of the popular candidate, Sir William Francis Elliott, and whenever the crowd became quiet would shout ‘Rend the Heavens with another cheer’. Thomas (19th C.) son of a music teacher, who went door to door. He became a mason at Denholm. He married Jessie Tait in 1833. Their children were Rachel, William, Andrew and Martha. Thomas (b.1866) son of Andrew and Agnes Purdom, he was a mason in Ruelwater. He married Agnes Goodfellow and their children included Emma (housemaid at Weens), Andrew (telephone boy and gardener at Weens), Robert, James and William. Tib (18th C.) local character of the early 1700s century. Walter ‘Wattie’ (16th C.) merchant mentioned in the will of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1574. He supplied ‘buttir, saip, and vthir neces-saris’ and hence was clearly a merchant, probably from Hawick, given the other people with whom he is listed. His name is given as ‘Wattie Waucht’. Walter (16th C.) listed in 1579 in Clerklands among the debtors to the deceased James Liddersdale, Burgess of Selkirk. Walter (16th C.) recorded in Heap in 1580 when he witnessed an agreement between William Scott of Whitehaugh and Walter Scott of Headshaw. Walter (18th C.) resident of Ashybank. He married Janet Douglas in Wilton in 1734. Their children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included: George (b.1734); Isabel (b.1736); Helen (b.1739); and Janet (b.1740). He was surely related to George, who was at Ashybank at the same time. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Service and their children included John (b.1771) and James (b.1774). He may be the ‘W. Waugh’ who is recorded in the Hawick Parish records (suggesting he was beadle or elder or similar). Walter (b.1818/9) from Hawick, in 1851 he was working as a servant at Cavers House. He was unmarried at that time. William (15th/16th C.) recorded in Belses in 1502. Thomas Walker was surety for him, and he was also surety for himself, and fined for non-appearance at the Justice-ai-re in Jedburgh. William (15th/16th C.) recorded in Hermiston in 1502. Along with John Glendinning, he had 4 cows stolen from him, with Adam Turnbull in Hornshole having remission for the theft. William (16th C.) tenant along with George in part of the farm of ‘Burwynyet’ in Jedforest in 1541. His name was given first. Edward was tenant of the other part and surely related. William ‘Willie’ (16th C.) recorded in 1592 as servant of ‘Abie’s Sandie’ Armstrong. They were complained about by Routledge of ‘Comecrocke’ for stealing his livestock. William (17th C.) wright in Hawick recorded in 1673 on the list of men named in the trial for the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. William (17th C.) recorded as resident at Dykerow in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (17th/18th C.) tenant in Slaidhills. Waverley (wā-vur-lee) n. novel by Sir Walter Scott, published anonymously in 1814, it was Scott's first foray into prose fiction, and hence is often regarded as the first historical novel. It is set around the time of the Jacobite uprising of 1745, with the main protagonist being an Englishman called Edward Waverley. It's name was later used for the whole set of Scott's historical novels, and thereafter the name was given to various things, e.g. the main station in Edinburgh, the railway line running through Hawick, a pub on Hawick High Street and towns all over the world. The novel contains a reference to 'the winder fair at Hawick'.

Weatland Burn (wee-lind-burn) n. stream that rises at Closses and flows between the end of the racecourse at the Moor and Whitchesters farm, into the Fenwick Burn. It is mentioned in the 1767 description of the boundaries of the Common.

weavers (wee-vurz) n. once one of the 7 incorporated trades or guilds in Hawick, which until 1861 had two representatives on the Town Council. They were a very old incorporation, preceding the Burgh Records (i.e. existing from before 1638). In early records they were referred to as ‘websters’. In the 1640 Burgh Act it is described how the incorporation would call meetings, with members fined for not attending, and how no weaver should take work from someone who had not paid another weaver for earlier work. They are referred to in 1643 when each of the ‘wobstaris’ was fined 12 shillings for breaking the rule of not reeling out yarn out of sight of the owner. In 1660 they fined someone for taking less money for weaving than the agreed rate. In 1683 the Bailies imprisoned all of them until they paid the fine of £20 Scots each for ‘working linen cloth narrower than an ell and two inches’, as confirmed by the Supreme Court; at that time there were stated to be 19 weavers. They are recorded taking the Test in 1684. In 1747 they were ordered by the Council to turn over their books. The incorporation was renewed in 1760 and they contributed money for the rebuilding of St. Mary’s Kirk in 1763. They were often prominent in local parades and celebrations, sometimes decked in white and scarlet ribbons – ‘Warpers and weavers all, We have woven the web of a Border town where Teviot seeks to the sea’[JYH].

the Weavers’ Loft (thu-wee-vurz-loft) n. former name for the balcony level in St. Mary’s Church, on the western side. It was probably first constructed in 1683, at the same time as the Bailies’ Loft. It was also reconstructed in the new church in 1763. In the former church building it had been called ‘the Merchants’ and Weavers’ Loft’ or ‘the Wobsters’ Loft’. The Bailies regulated sittings in the loft in 1710. There were squabbles over precedence in the seating, one dispute between the hammermen and weavers being ruled on by the Session in 1715, with the senior official for the hammermen having the first seat, followed by the 2 quarter-masters of the weavers and then by the other 2 hammermen. There were further scuffles in the Kirk in 1716, with some men breaking down the door when it had been locked to keep them out. The gallery was also known as ‘the Wester Loft’ to distinguish it from ‘the Bailies’ Loft’. The right to these seats was given as a result of a special payment by the guild towards the expense of rebuilding the church in 1763. The front row of this gallery was reserved for use by the Magistrates until into the 20th century.

Weaver’s Moss (wee-vurz-mos) n. area between the ‘Hill Road to Roberton’ and the Ale Water, between Esdale Sike and Harehope Sike.
Weaver Will

Weaver Will (wee-vur-wil) n. character mentioned in Arthur Balbirnie’s version of ‘Teribus’, from whose whisky flask the riders take a drink at Haggishaa. There is no reason to doubt that this was a real person of the late 18th century, but his full name is not known.

Webster (web-stur) n. George (1823/4–1880) born in Ceres, Fife, he was a teacher in Hawick. He was described as an assistant in the Parish School around 1860 and on the 1861 census was Burgh Schoolmaster and living on the Kirk Wynd. In 1862 he was described as mathematics teacher of the United Schools. He was a founder member of the Hawick Archological Society, being elected as first Vive-President. He also gave the very first lecture at the Society, on 27th September 1856, the subject being ‘The Study of Archaeology’. He stated ‘The man, who gives a proportion of his time to the study of the relics of years that are gone, will become a wiser and it may be reasonably concluded a better member of the community’. He was also a local poet, publishing ‘Here’s to Hawick’s Bonnie Lasses!’ and ‘To the Teviot’, amongst other things. He married Mary Henderson Thomson, from Leven in Fife. Their children were: David John (b.1854); Elizabeth (b.1855); Peter M.; George Lawson (1858–1919); Barbara Lawson (1860–61); James Hay (1862–1927); Henry Darling (1865–86); Isobella Thomson (b.1866); Mary Georgina (1868–1940); Helen Linton (b.1870); and John Jafrey (b.1872). In the 1860s he left Hawick to become Parochial Schoolmaster in Dunbar and died at West Barns, Dunbar – ‘. . . Auld Dodds, his bairld form I mind, And Webster’s smiling face’ [WL1u]. George (b.1824/5) from Brechin, he was a draper in Hawick. In 1851 he is listed as a journeyman draper, living with James R. Laing and his family at about 2 Howegate. The draper’s firm of Laing & Webster is listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. It appears that the business expended and he moved to Australia. Later they split and George Webster & Co. failed in 1896. John (d.c.1784) said to have been buried at the Dimples ‘where three lairds’ lands meet’, because he was a suicide. He could be the John who married Betty Ruecastle in Hawick in 1770 and had a daughter Elizabeth (b.1770).

wecht (wehcht) n., arch. weight – ‘The wecht gars the string hing strecit’[?]. ‘Item, that ilk merchand that buys cuntrie gier with trone wecht, sall sell it agin in small with the lyik wecht . . . ’ [BR1640], ‘George Scott was fined £10 for keeping false weights, viz. ‘Flemes wecht for French wecht’’ [JW1651], ‘She’s borne the awfu’ wecht o’ baith pestilence an’ sword’ [JEDM], ‘We’ve smoored it wi’ a wecht o’ fun And hidden it frae sight’ [WL], ‘There was jaist yin cless, didneh maitter the wecht . . . ’ [BW1974], v., arch. to weight – ‘. . . the Wee Green (thu-wee-green) n. the Little Green in Denholm, as distinct from the main or ‘Big Green’, being off the road towards Minto. This is part of the land managed by the Feuars. An auction mart took place here until the early 20th century, and then there was a market garden until the mid-1960s, when it was grassed over and the surrounding wall removed.

the Wee Haugh (thu-wee-hawf, -hawrh) n. the Little Haugh, a triangle of land bordered by Teviot Crescent and the river, with many uses over the years: once the traditional burial-ground for horses; a public drying green; an impromptu sports ground for many generations of children; and now planted with shrubbery. It was the detached part of the Common lying on the east side of the Teviot, the area stretching from Ewen’s Court to ‘The Rock’ on old maps. In 1767 it was described as ‘a little Haugh on the south side of the Teviot, bounded by William Kerr and Bailie Turnbull’s garden dykes’. The area was rented soon after the Division of the Common, but later came back to public use. Since at least the beginning of the 20th century a footpath has crossed the area from the bottom of Baker Street to the end of the riverside path leading to Laidlaw Terrace. At the end of the 20th century it was redeveloped, with the public toilets being removed and a playground located there – ‘To the Little Haugh fu’ sorry, While the horses neigh ‘Memento Mori’ [AB] (also known as the ‘Easter Common Haugh’ or ‘Lower Haugh’, and sometimes included in the ‘Under Haugh’, which was across the river).

weellock (weel-ok) n., arch. a small amount, little bit – ‘A willock cheese’ [GW], ‘Wull eh heh a weilock or a vast?’ [ECS], ‘A duist caa cane a weilock …’ [ECS], to a small degree, somewhat – ‘Whan yince A’d gotten to the top o the rig, an – forfeuchen a weilock – hed hoakkert doon on ti ma hunkers till A gethert back ma braith’ [ECS] (also spelled ‘weillock’; cf. lock).

weel-off (weel-of) adj. well-off, rich, comfortably wealthy – ‘A vast o folk dinna ken when they’re weel off!’ [ECS].

weel-on (weel-ôn) adv. getting on for, well nigh, almost – ‘… for it was weel-on o haaf-past five, els!’ [ECS].

weel-putten-on (weel-pu’in-ôn) adj., arch. well-dressed, neatly tailored – ‘A crum Brig, weel-kennd ti fisher-folk, is baith braid an strang’ [ECS], ‘A weel-kenned country fiddler leaved there, yince on a day’ [DH].

weel-redd-up (weel-red-up) adj., arch. well in order, tidy (noted by E.C. Smith).

weels me on (weelz-mee-ôn) interj., arch. blessings on, ‘I’m happy because of’, good luck to – ‘O weels me on the open ear, Will list’ a tale o’ woe …’ [JT].

weels on (weelz-ôn) interj., arch. expression of pleasure or relief, literally ‘good health on’ – ‘Weels on thee, my ain tartan plaidie’ [JoHa].

weel-taen-oot (weel-tân-oo’) adj., arch. hospitably treated, invited out frequently (noted by E.C. Smith).

weel ti the gate (weel-thu-gä) adv., arch. well forward, at an advanced stage, in an advanced state – ‘She’s weel ti the gate wi’ ‘er wark’ [GW].

weel-worn (weel-wörn) adj. well-worn – ‘… An’ pechin’ up the weel-worn steps, The bairn went in his lane’ [WFC].

weel-wurn (weel-wurn) adj., arch. well-worn – ‘… a grocer body gaun eis yirrints, gien iz the wee-wurn: ‘It’s a grand-day!’ [ECS] (older variant of week-worn).

the wee man (thu-ewe-mawn) n. the devil, especially in the phrase ‘in the name o the wee man!’ – ‘What in the name o’ the wee man is that a’ about?’ [We].

wee meenite (wee-mee-ni’) n. a moment, short amount of time – ‘haud on a wee meenit’.

weemen (wee-min, -meen) n., pl. women – ‘hei thowt hei was God’s gift ti weemen’, ‘they played fitbaa like a bunch o weemen’, ‘Gif thou kenna, O thou fairist amang wemen . . .’ [HSR], ‘Kings’ douchters wer amang the honorable weemen . . .’ [HSR], ‘The weemin in their nice long frocks The men in their nice blue suits’ [AY], ‘Doon the centuries the men an’ weemen o’ Hawick toon hev kept alive ghe speerit o’ love an’ courage . . .’ [BW1939], ‘Bliss aw ma pals, An folk that Aw ken, Bit nae weemin, Amen’ [MB], ‘The weemen gang hauedin’ their hags at the dinging, The clack’s like a litter o’ grumphies bereaved’ [WL]. Note that the first 2 recorded residents of Hawick, Saejafa and Rosfritha, were women, ‘dua mulieres de villa Hawick dicta ipsius proventia Teviotdale’ according to Reginald of Durham (also spelled ‘weeminnen’ and sometimes ‘weemen’; the singular is wumman).

the Weemen’s League (thu-ewe-minz-leeg) n. the Women’s League of Health and Beauty, founded in London in 1930 by Mollie Bigot Stack. There was an active Hawick branch in the mid-20th century, running exercise classes in the Crown Hotel.

ween (ween) v., poet. to surmise, suppose, imagine – ‘The king he mov’d his bonnet to him – He weind he was a king as weel as he’ [CPM], ‘No Elfin-King, with azure wing, On the dark brown moor I see; But a courser keen, and a Knight in Green, And full fair I ween is he’ [JL], ‘. . . Yet, if a bard presage aright, I ween, We both shall live to dance once more on Denholm’s green’ [JL], ‘Oh! never I ween, did a lovelier form The world with its fragrance fill’ [JTe], ‘It is, I ween, a gallant sight; See mustering there, The Scott and Douglas, for the fight, With pennon fair!’ [WiS], ‘All, all is seeming happiness, and who would ever ween That misery held her horrid reign amidst that joy-like scene?’ [JoHa], ‘No happier bird than he, I ween: His song is bliss without alloy . . .’ [FL] (also written ‘ween’).

Weens (weenz) n. estate just north of Bonchester, containing a mansion house that was converted to a nursing home. The estate was once part of the Barony of Feu-Rule and formerly an important part of Hobkirk Parish, being recorded before the Reformation. The lands were owned by the family of Weens of that Ilk in the 15th century and Alexander ‘Wyndis’ of that Ilk was recorded in 1502. George Turnbull ‘in le wyndis’ was also recorded in 1502. The town was burned by the Armstrongs in 1544. There were Turnbull Lairds there from at least the early 16th century and it was sold by Thomas Turnbull to John Scott (brother of Walter in Allamouth) in 1606. In 1643 it was part of the lands in Hobkirk Parish owned by Lord Balmerino. Andrew Scott was there in about 1663 and John Scott in 1678, when it was valued at £200. John Scott was there in 1694, when he paid tax for having 3 hearths. James Oliver was tenant in 1738. The Scotts held the estate until 1744 when John Scott sold it to John Armstrong in Brieryhill. His executors sold it to Adam Cleghorn in 1760, and it passed quickly to David Cleghorn, William Sharp and then William Oliver of Dinlabyre, who built the current house about 1775 (the wood used being the finest Baltic timber, carried by wagon from Berwick). In 1793 Oliver sold it to Robert Nutter Campbell of Kailzie, then it was sold to Adm. Thomas Pringle in 1796 and in 1804 the estate was bought by Thomas Cleghorn, who quickly added Town-o-Rule and Hallrule Mill; his descendants renovated the house in the mid-19th and early-20th centuries. In 1788 (and still in 1811) the farm was valued at £200. In the mid-19th century the estate consisted of Nether Bonchester, Weensmoor, Town-o-Rule, and Hallrule and covered about 800 acres. A red sandstone doorway from the old house has been set into a wall of the kitchen garden, where there is also an old sundial. It was also said that an old baptimal font stone in the garden here was from Hobkirk Kirk – ‘Most justly, too, they earn his praises, Those loftier hills and glorious scenes; Yet more I love the humble daisies That grow around my home at Weens’ [FMC] (the mansion is also referred to as ‘Weens House’; formerly spelled ‘Weinds’ and variants; sometimes also formerly ‘the Weens’; it is ‘Wyndis’ in 1502, ‘Weynis’ and ‘Weinis’ in 1562, ‘Weyndis’ in 1606, ‘Waynis’ in 1652, ‘Wen- nies’ in 1653, ‘the Weyns’ in 1654, ‘weimes’ in 1663, ‘weimins’ in 1678, ‘Weins’ in 1684 and 1727 and ‘Weens’ in 1694; it is marked ‘Wynds’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Weemys’ on Roy’s c.1750 map).

Weens (weenz) n. former farmstead in the upper Teviot valley, located between Commonside and Dryden, presumably on the Weens Sike. It is probably recorded as ‘the Weynis’ in the 1627 valuation of Hawick Parish, when it paid ‘40 merks, 8 merk in teynd’ (marked as ‘Wyind’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Weens (weenz) n. Alexander (15th C.) recorded in 1437 as ‘Alexander of the Weyndis’, when he assigned his lands of Weens into the hands of the superior, Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig. This was probably the lands later known as Weensland. His ‘procurators’ were James of ‘Paiblis’ of that Ilk and George of ‘Pringil’. Alexander of that Ilk (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Wyndis’ in 1502 when he was convicted of the ‘foresought felony’ done to ‘Philip Faula’ on St. Mary’s Day while he was riding to Branholme, with Robert Scott being fined for non-appearance. It is unclear precisely what the crime was. Also in 1502 he was fined for failing to enter John ‘ruffy’ at the Justice- aire, this man charged with murdering 2 Jack- sons; his surety was the Sheriff of Roxburgh. He was probably owner of the estate of Weens in the Rule valley and descendant of the earlier Alexander of Weens. Alexander (16th C.) Burgess of Hawick. In 1582 he warned Alan Deans to appear at Hawick Kirk to receive redemption money of £160 for an annual rent on his 4 merklands in Hawick and £30 for Weens Croft. His surname is written ‘Weyndis’ and Robert was also a witness (and hence surely related). Alexander (17th/18th C.) listed ‘eist the water’ among those paying the Hearth Tax in Hawick in 1694. He could be the ‘Sanders Weins’ recorded in 1676 among several Hawick people found guilty of using insufficient weights; specifically he was gound to have a ‘half-pecke about half ane inch short’.

Alexander (17th/18th C.) cooper in Hawick. He married Janet Douglas and their children included: James (b.1709); William (b.1711); Walter (b.1713); Bessie (b.1715); Alexander (b.1717); Janet (b.1719); William (b.1721); and John (b.1723). The witnesses in 1709 were cooper David Miller and shoemaker Robert Elliott, in 1711 were merchant William Oliver and Bailie Robert Brown, in 1713 were carriers James Richardson and James Aitken, and in 1721 were cooper John Aitken and ‘tenent’ James Richardson. Alexander (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Scott and their children included: Alexander (b.1759). He may be the Alexander whose daughter Isabel died in Hawick in 1781. Alexander (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Mary Scott and their children included: Walter (b.1772); George and John (b.1774); Isabel (b.1778); an unnamed child (b.1780); and John (again, b.1784). The witnesses in 1772 were George Scott (probably related to his wife) and Alexander Bunyan. The witnesses in 1774 were George and John Scott (surely related to his wife), who the children were probably named after. Alexander (d.1794) tailor from Hull whose death is recorded in Hawick. Alexander ‘Sandy’ (1786–1868) cobbler who was son of Tam and younger brother of Jock, with shop on the Kirkstile. They are listed at ‘Silver Street Head’ on the 1841 census – ‘Auld Rob Young o’ the Back Raw’s there, Biddy the Hawker’s sellin’ preens; Wat Inglis is at his tricks yince mair, And there’s baith Jock and Sandy Weens’ [HI]. Ebenezer ‘Eben’ (b.c.1790) woollen spinner, living at the Maltsteep in Wilton. He was part of the party of Hawick men who took part in the Carterhaugh Baa in 1815, perhaps being the man who scored the first ‘hail’. As the band came back to Hawick he triumphantly carried the Yarrow banner, which had been stolen from the field. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’, published in 1825. He was recorded at Malt Steep among heads of households in 1835 and 1840. He married Janet Laidlaw in Wilton Parish in 1819 and their children included: Mary (b.1824); David Stevenson (b.1826), who married Ganes Duncan; Jane (b.1830); Esther (b.1833); and Alexander (b.1833). By 1851 his wife was a widow living on the Cross Wynd. Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (18th C.) from Hawick, she was sister of shoemaker ‘Tam’. In about the 1750s she was hired as a girl on a farm in Liddesdale, her wages being half-a-crown, a pair of clogs, and all the wool she could gather off bushes. When she died she left her niece 40 gold sovereigns. Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (18th/19th C.) wife of Robert Crawford. She was found guilty of stealing a shirt in 1792, but absolved of blame later. George (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Janet Baptie and their children included Alexander (b.1795). James (17th/18th C.) Hawick merchant. He witnessed a baptism for carrier William Aitken in 1685. He is listed among those who subscribed to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He is also probably the James ‘weins’ listed ‘eist the water’ among those paying the Hearth Tax in Hawick in 1694. In 1699 he was fined for selling oatmeal at higher than the set price. He witnessed a baptism for tailor James Cowan in 1705. He is recorded in 1706 regarding his appointment the previous year to collect some of the ‘stent’ imposed on the Burgesses to pay for putting lead on the steeple of St. Mary’s. He could have been the James born to Alexander and Elspeth ‘Corsall’ in Hawick in 1648. He could be the James, married to Janet Aitkin, whose daughter Janet was born in 1687. James (18th C.) weaver of Hawick. He married Mary Hart and their children included: John (b.1720); Walter (b.1725); and Agnes (b.1730). The witnesses in 1720 were shoemaker John Scott and William Riddell, in 1725 were merchant Andrew Turnbull and John Scott, Beadle, and in 1730 were John Turnbull and Bailie Graham. James (18th C.) tenant in Weens. His son John was baptised in Hob Kirk Parish in 1738. Other children baptised there who may be his include Marion (b.1732), Margaret (b.1735), Samuel (b.1749) and Janet (b.1751). James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1776 he married Isabel Beattie, who was from Wilton. The marriage was recorded in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Isabel Davidson and their children included James (b.1811). John (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He married Janet Scott and their children included: James (b.1721); James (again, b.1722); Janet (b.1723); Helen (b.1726); Walter (b.1730); Alexander (b.1733); Thomas (b.1735); Mary (b.1737); and Janet (b.1741). The witnesses in 1723 were innkeeper Francis Gledstains and shoemaker John Scott. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Napier and their children included Janet (b.1759), with the whole congregation as witnesses. John (d.bef. 1801) weaver from Hawick. His son James died in 1801. He could also be the John whose son Walter died in 1809; this child was also recorded as grandchild to ‘John Scott mill’ (possibly miller), suggesting that he was related to the Scotts. John (d.1835) shoemaker in Hawick, whose death is recorded in the Parish Records. He was surely related to ‘Jock’ and ‘Sandy’, perhaps their uncle. Probably the same shoemaker John married ‘Luke’ Henderson and had children Jane (b.1781), Betty (b.1783) and Walter (b.1786). The witnesses in 1786 were shoemaker George Gardner and Church Officer Thomas Miller. John ‘Jock’ (1784–1866) elder brother of Sandy and son of Tam, the family were cobblers who lived at the head of Silver Street, with a shop on the Kirkstile. They were known for their outspokenness and resistance to change, and their motto was ‘ready money for coblins’. He is recorded as ‘John Wemyss’ in Silver Street in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. In the 1841 census he is listed with his brother Alexander, as well as Margaret, who was probably his daughter. He appears to have been married to Mary Fachney and their children included: Alexander (b.1810) and Margaret (b.1813). Margaret (17th C.) recorded in 1676 when she was among a group of Hawick people found guilty of using faulty measures. She was specifically found to have a peck that was ‘ane double gill short of the ordinair gagd of the town’. Perhaps the same Margaret was the resident of Hawick ‘eist the water’, who paid the Hearth Tax in Hawick in 1694. She was probably an innkeeper or shopkeeper of some sort. Robert (16th C.) recorded ‘in Mostoure’ in 1582 when he witnessed an agreement in Hawick for Alan. Robert (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He was listed among the subscribers to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784), with his name recorded as ‘Wemyss’. He could be the son of Thomas born in 1761. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Clerk and their children included Elizabeth (b.1739). Thomas ‘Tam’ (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick, sister of Betty. In 1780 he had a precept in Selkirk with John Haldane. He married Margaret Aitkin in 1759 and their children included: Thomas (b.1760), probably the father of shoemakers Jock and Sandy; Robert (b.1761); Walter (b.1765); William (b.1768); and Jane (b.1770). The witnesses in 1765 were shoemakers William and Andrew Scott. It is said (by Richard Waugh, a later relative) that he had 6 sons, all of whom fought at Waterloo, with only 1 surviving (however, this seems a little late, and so may be confusion with other family members). His wife’s ‘muckle press’ was carried away from their house by the great flood of 1767, and he found it 15 miles down the Teviot, with the clothing inside hardly damaged. He was probably the Thomas born in Hawick in 1735, son of John and Janet Scott. Thomas ‘Tam’ (18th/19th C.) father of Jock and Sandy, also a shoemaker. Like his sons he was known for his cantankerous nature. He was apparently the first Hawick resident to possess a pound note, and was visited by many curious Teries at the time. He was probably the Thomas born in Hawick in 1760, son of Thomas and Margaret Aitkin. He married Janet Scott in 1781, with children including John (b.1784), Alexander (b.1786), Margaret (b.1788), Margaret (again, b.1789), Henry (b.1791) and Janet (b.1793). The witnesses in 1784 were the whole congregation and in 1793 were Bailie Andrew Scott and John Hardie. Thomas (b.1787/8) woollen factory foreman. In 1841 he was living at Dovemount and on Wilton Place in 1851. His wife was Elizabeth Scott and their children included: Isabella; Alexander (b.1813); Mary (b.1819); and John (b.1821). He could be the ‘Thomas Wemyss, spinner’ who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’, published in 1825. Walter (17th C.) merchant in Hawick, on the 1693/4 subscribers’ list for the new Kirk bell. In 1708 he witnessed a baptism for mason Peter Mitchell. He married Bessie Lunn and their children included: Alexander (b.1704); Walter (b.1706). The witnesses in 1704 were William Bruntfield and Henry Orrock. He could be the Walter whose daughter Elspeth married Robert Wilson in 1718. Walter (d.1809) son of John. The record of his death states that he was ‘Called Ballea Weens’, suggesting that he may have been a Bailie. He may be the Walter who married Margaret Knox in Hawick in 1791. However, he is probably the ‘Bailie Weens’ whose wife Betty Ballantyne died in 1795. He could be the Walter ‘Weens’ who witnessed baptisms for weaver Thomas Ballantyne in 1768 and 1771. William (17th C.) listed in 1694 among those on the west-side of Hawick who paid the Hearth Tax (see also Wemyss, with which it was interchangeable in early documents; also written ‘Weyndis’, ‘Weems’, ‘Weims’, ‘Wiems’, ‘Wiems’, ‘Wiems’, etc.).

Weens Cottages (weenz-ko-ee-jeez) n. cottages on the left hand side of the B6357 just outside Bonchester and before coming to the old entrance road to Weens House.

Weens Croft (weenz-kroft) n. former name for a croft of land near Hawick. In 1582 it was wadsit from Alexander Weens to Alan Deans, with Weens warning Deans to accept payment of the redemption money of £30. Perhaps these lands were in Weensland.

the Weenses (thu-ween-zeez) n. well-known Hawick shoe-making family of the 18th and 19th centuries, attending local fairs and markets throughout the Borders. Jock and Sandy were probably the last of this cobbling line (also called ‘Weensses’).

Weensforth (weenz-förth) n. purported tweed factory in Hawick, the name being used by conman John Graham Henderson in the late 19th century.

Weensgate (weenz-gä’) n. electoral ward in the town, being approximately the combination of Weensland and Wellogate districts.

Weensgate Drive (weenz-gä’-driv) n. housing development built in 1964 off Weensland Road and named because of its proximity to Weensland and the Wellogate, and from being in the Weensgate Ward.

Weens Haugh (weenz-hawgh) n. former name for land near Weens. 28 sheep were lost from there in the flood of 1846.

Weens Hoose (weenz-hoos) n. mansion house just north of Bonchester, now used as a nursing home. It was built about 1775 for William Oliver of Dinlabyre, in red sandstone with 18th century wrought-iron gates. The previous house, dating from perhaps the early 17th century, was demolished in 1774, although some parts were built into the new one; it stood about a hundred yards to the east, with a former doorway later being used as a garden entrance. The new house can be seen shortly after it was built in a sketch of 1804. It was the home of George Cleghorn in the mid-19th century and was substantially renovated in the early years of the 20th century by George Tancred. A plaque was unveiled there in memory of George Tancred in 1981. The Cornet’s party traditionally visit the nursing home during the Bonchester Ride-out. It has been suggested that the location of the original peel house was one of 2 circular earthworks near the old main drive to the current house, but there is no evidence for this; Tancred suggests it was ‘on the top of the bank above the garden walk not far from old Weens loaning’ and that foundation stones had been dug up there occasionally.

Weensland (weenz-lind) n. area around Weensland Road on the flat land south of the Teviot in the eastern part of town. ‘Weens’ is probably a corruption of ‘Wyndis’, who may have been an early owner of the land (like Weens in Rulewater, perhaps even being related to the same family). The lands probably once covered an extensive area; in a 1718 survey of the lands belonging to the Scotts of Buccleuch it appears to extend down the east side of the Burgh boundaries. In 1437 Alexander ‘de le Weyndis’ resigned the lands of ‘Weyndis’ (in the Barony of Hawick) into the hands of the Baron, Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig. The lands were among those lands held ‘in tenandry’ by the Baron of Hawick, when confirmed to Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1511 and when inherited along with the Barony by James Douglas in 1572. The lands are still listed among those held by the Baron of Hawick in 1615. In 1627 it is described as consisting of 3 husbandlands, yielding 12 bolls in stock and 3 in teind. William Scott of Horsleyhill was granted part of the land in 1653 by James, Earl of Queensberry, described as a ‘four merk land’; it remained in that family until about 1772. Some of it may be the land of ‘weemes’ valued at about £133 in the Land Tax Rolls of 1663 (among the Earl of Queensberry’s rents). Robert Scott of Horsleyhill was owner in 1678, when ‘Weinesland’ was valued at £264. George Armstrong was listed there among the poor of Hawick Parish in 1694. In the early 18th century, the tenants of the lands there paid the Hawick Town Herd to have their sheep under his care, along with the Town’s animals. Another place of the same name near Harden (in the lower Borthwick valley), sometimes with the prefix ‘Wester’ is mentioned in the 16th and 17th centuries, suggesting this was once owned by the same family. James Henderson was tenant there in 1709. The Douglases of Cavers owned the superiority of part of it in the later 18th and early 19th centuries. By 1788 parts of the lands were held by John Hardie (valued at £36 5s 8d), Thomas Turnbull of Fenwick (valued at £35 18s 7d), James Dickson (valued at £19 13s 7d), William Dickson of Orchard (valued at £47 8s 4d, previously owned by William Irvine and valued at £41, previously owned by Adam Ormiston), Archibald Dickson (valued at £38 5s 6d), William Irvine (valued at £18 1s 8d), and George Douglas of Cavers (the part called Haughhead, valued at £27 6s 8d). In 1811 the parts were listed being the same, but Robert Scott had purchased the parts from William Irvine and Adam Ormiston (valued at £64 8s 10d) and Andrew Porteous purchased part from Robert Scott (valued at £23 19s 6d). The name was later specifically applied to some of the first houses built there, also known as ‘Weensland Cottages’. It grew as a residential area as a result of the growth of mills alongside the Teviot, and until the early 20th century was an isolated village and mill. The rows of houses there were called Weensland Place, Heronhill Terrace, Teviot Row and Weensland Terrace, almost all of which have been demolished and the street names lost. Oliver Park in the Weensland area, was the first council housing development in town in 1922. When the old Trinity School was demolished in 1955 more council houses were built on the site, and there was further housing built at the far end in the 1980s. The road through the area, skirting the south bank of the Teviot, has been the main route from Hawick to Denholm and Jedburgh since time immemorial. But the connection to the Carter Bar, via Haughhead, Deanbrae, Kirkton and Bonchester was only laid out around the 1830s. A bronze socketed spearhead found in the river here is in the Museum (the first record of the name is as ‘terras meas de le Weyndis’ in 1437, then ‘Weyndis Landis’ in 1511; it is ‘Weyndislandis’ in 1572, ‘Weyndislandis’ in 1615, ‘Weyndislands’ in 1627, ‘Weyneslands’ in 1654/5, ‘weines land’ in 1678, ‘weinsland’ in 1694, ‘Weinsland’ in 1762 and ‘Wiensland’ in 1764).

Weensland (weenz-lind) n. former name for an area in the Teviot or Borthwick valleys, perhaps near Harden and Whames. Its is listed in 1594 as ‘Weyndislands’ among lands to the south and west of Hawick for which the Baron of Hawick was superior. There are several writs for 1654–55 in the Buccleuch papers for ‘Weyneslands called Wester Weyndis, and Quhalmes, in barony of Hawick, regality of Drumlanrig, sheriffdom of Roxburgh’. The 1686 ratification of the Barony to Anna Duchess of Buccleuch lists ‘the lands of Windlands, commonly called Wester Winds’, which were occupied by Robert Grieve in Commonside. There is also in 1686 a privilege listed of ‘free chappell and chancellary within the bounds of the said lands of Windslands and Whalmes’ for the Baron, perhaps suggesting a connection with the former chapel at Chapelhill. Presumably there is a connection, at least through former ownership, with the Weensland within Hawick (see also Wester Winds).

Weensland Cauld (weenz-lind-kawld) n. weir near Weensland Mill, first dammed around 1839 to supply water through the mill lade to drive the mill machinery – ‘As they came up by Weensland weir through by the Sker Pool, They were met by lots o’ bairns, Sir, As they came frae the mill machinery { ‘As they came up by Weensland weir}.

Weensland Cottages (weenz-lind-ko’-ee-jeez) n. housing built around 1836, also known just as ‘Weensland’ at the time, and renamed Weensland Place in 1875, only to be demolished about 1960. It may also have been referred to as ‘Weensland Village’ in the 1861 census. It is marked ‘Weensland Cottage’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map.

Weensland Haugh (weenz-lind-hawch) n. former name for the flat land near the Teviot in Weensland. There is a plan of the area in 1825 in the Douglas of Cavers papers.

Weensland Mill (weenz-lind-mil) n. in the 18th and early 19th centuries this was the name of a corn mill in the Weensland area, between the main road and the river. James Scott was there Weensland Park in 1729. It was still active when John Shiel was listed as miller in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. The name was later used for 2 woollen mills, built in the same area by Walter Wilson & Sons, beginning in 1835. The Corn Mill was purchased from Douglas of Cavers at this time, jointly by William Wilson & Sons and John Oliver & Sons (who quickly got out of woollen manufacturing). The erection of the new Weensland Mill led to the construction of a much more substantial mill lade a few years later, and a hamlet of workers’ cottages developing nearby. The original equipment consisted of ‘four sets of Carding Engines, 60 inch Scribblers, and 42 inch Carders with placing machines attached’. Fire destroyed much of the mill in 1852, but it was rebuilt by 1858. The mill had a 20 foot diameter water wheel, made by Melrose’s. In the late 19th century it was the name given to the premises of Wilson & Armstrong’s, before 1876, when they reconstituted as Wilson & Glenny’s. Wilson & Armstrong’s made tweed and blankets there. It later housed several companies, including the Weensland Spinning Co., and Sime & Williamson. By 1888 there were 3 separate tweed companies operating in Weensland, George McLeod & Son (which only lasted a year), Scoon & Barrie and the Weensland Spinning Company, and the name ‘Weensland Mills’ or ‘Weensland Mills’ was applied to all of them. The name also came to include the adjacent ‘Atheenic Mills’. The oldest part of the structure was 4 storeys high and built of whinstone, and the mill was partly destroyed in a fire in 1999. The structure had a mixture of mainly 19th century styles, including an unusual cupola with open colonnade and ogee roof. It was acquired by the Scottish Development Agency, partly demolished and developed since 1991. The main surviving part was once a spinning mill, but converted more recently into the offices and store for the Weensland Spinning Company, and now a function suite. It is 2 storeys high with a loft space, having 8 bays and a rectangular plan, built in the mid-19th century. The building is listed as category C. (also sometimes ‘Weensland Mills’; it is ‘Weensland milne’ in 1717).

Weensland Place (weenz-lind-plis) n. original name for Weensland Terrace and new name for Weensland Cottages in 1875, but the houses were demolished about 1960 and the street name lost.

Weensland Road (weenz-lind-rôd) n. main road leading out of town to the north-east, named because it was the road to Wyndis or Weens land. The old Trinity School was demolished and new houses built in 1955, when the whole street was renumbered and Eskdaill Bank incorporated into Weensland Road.

Weensland Row (weenz-lind-rô) n. a lost street, built in 1866, renamed Heronhill Terrace and demolished in 1966.

Weensland Slated Hoose (weenz-lind-slâ-eed-hoos) n. former name for a house in Weensland, possibly the same as Ivybank. It was used as an address on the 1841 census.

Weensland Spinnin Company (weenz-lind-spi-nin-cum-pi-nee) n. tweed manufacturers based at Weensland Mills from the late 19th century and finally closing in the 1990s. Most of the structure was badly damaged in a fire in 1999. The surviving part was converted into a function suite, containing the restaurant Spinners.

Weensland Terrace (weenz-lind-te-riis) n. housing built in 1864, originally named Weensland Place, then for a time Alexander Terrace, becoming Weensland Terrace in 1885. The tenement block at the western end was demolished in 1978.

Weensmoor (weenz-moor) n. farm in Hobkirk Parish, on the side road between Hawthornside and Town-o-Rule. It is also known as ‘Weensmuir’. In 1745 one of the cottages was occupied by the Sclater family, and it is said that the Highlanders stopped at the farm on their march to England, when only the children were at home. The Barry family were also there in 1748. Thomas Oliver was there in 1774 and weaver George Craw in 1776. James Laidlaw lived there from at least 1780. The old, thatched, clay-built cottage there was torn down in the late 19th century and the foundations showed that there had previously been 2 houses there. The separate farm steadings was renovated in 1841 and still survives. A spring there flows into the cleuch on Toon-o-Rule farm to join the Rule Water. Robert Dickson was farmer there in the 1860s and Robert Turnbull in the early 1900s (marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Weens Place (weenz-plis) n. short street in Bonchester.

Weens Sike (weenz-sik) n. small stream running in an easterly direction to join the Teviot between Commonsid and Colterscleuch. It gave its name to the lands of Wester Weens, which were attached to the farm of Commonsid.

Weenswud (weenz-wud) n. former name for a wood near Weens in the Rule valley. It is recorded the Wee Shop

weepers (wee-purz) n., pl., arch. bands of fabric worn on the sleeves as a mark of mourning. Locally such bands of light linen fabric were stitched on the sleeves of male relatives and worn for 2 or 3 weeks – ‘Male relatives wore ‘weepers’, a narrow band of lawn stitched on the cuffs of the coat’ [V&M].

the Wee Thea (thu-wee-thee) n. the Hawick Picture Theatre, also known as ‘the Theatre’, a picture-house in Croft Road, converted from the Temperance Hall, and showing films from the early 1900s. J.P. Alison was responsible for designs for renovations in 1901. Adam Grant was the managing director in the early days. It was renamed the ‘New Theatre Picture Palace’ in 1913, when there is an existing picture (with another of 1914 showing the audience). Mrs. Pankhurst, the suffragette, spoke here in 1913. The interior had 3 levels, the stalls, dress circle and gallery, or ‘the Gods’, with plush red seats and plaster gilt crowns around the front of the gallery. It was destroyed by fire in 1955, and the site rebuilt in 1961/2 as the Salvation Army Citadel.

Weir (weer) n. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Alison Graham and their children included John (b.1770) and Robert (b.1772). George (16th/17th C.) recorded as schoolmaster in Southdean Parish in 1622. George (17th C.) recorded on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls for Castleton Parish. He lived somewhere near Mangerton and was listed ‘with an kilne’, suggesting he was a tradesman of some sort. George (18th C.) wright on Damside. He was listed among the subscribers to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He is probably the George who married Betty Waugh in Hawick in 1779 and whose children included Margaret (b.1780) and Ann (b.1782). James (17th C.) Schoolmaster in Hobkirk, recorded in 1653 when he married Grizel Lyndsay in Edinburgh. He may be the son of Rev. William who was witness to a contract for the vicarage teinds of Hobkirk Parish in 1648 and for a related discharge in 1649. If so then he was the elder brother of William, who became minister at Linlithgow. James (d.c.1762) writer in Hawick who was Town Clerk, holding the position on his own in at least the years 1739–61. He may have started as early as 1732, overlapping in some way with the last few years that Walter Gledstains held the position. He was certainly recorded as Town Clerk in 1734. In 1734 he was notary public when he drew up the legal instrument through which the Town complained of the encroachment onto the Common of the tenants of Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. He was described as ‘writer and clerk to the roup’ in 1735 in the deposition where the widow of Robert Scott of Falnash sold her property on the Howegate to Patrick Hardie. He was clerk involved with the building of the Teviot Bridge in 1738. In 1743 he witnessed baptism for late Bailie Depute Walter Scott, mason Andrew Wilson, Bailie Gideon Ruecastle, ‘messanger’ William Wilson and Walter Scott of Newton. He may have been the ardent Jacobite supporter who entertained a group of officers while in Hawick in 1745, and refused to take the oaths of Government in 1746, another lawyer being allowed to take the oaths as proxy. He was probably the man mentioned in 1757 when the Burgh ‘paid in Mr Weir’s for gilt paper &c., when writing to the Countess anent the minister’. He witnessed a baptism for skinner Thomas Turnbull in 1758 and another for skinner Thomas Turnbull in 1759. The Clerk is still referred to in the Town Treasurer’s books of 1761, and in 1763 it is recorded that money was spent ‘by bailies and council electing clerk, vacant by Mr Weir’s death’. James Wilson suggests that he died in 1762. His wife was Christian Watson. Their children included: Anne (b.1738), who may have married John Gledstains; Thomas (b.1739); Mary (b.1741); John (b.1743); Thomas (b.1745); James (b.1747); Thomas (b.1756); and John (b.1757). The 1738 baptism was witnessed by William Ogilvie of Hoscote and Bailie John Scott, the 1743 one by Bailie Gideon Ruecastle and ex-Bailie Robert Boyd, the 1745 one by ex-Bailies John Scott and Gideon Ruecastle and the 1757 one by Bailies John Scott and Charles Tudhope. James, junior (d.c.1770) Town Clerk for a very brief time, perhaps as short as 1 month or as long as 1768–70. He took over after John Gledstains (probably his brother-in-law) refused to take the oaths of Government. He was presumably son of the previous Town Clerk. James Wilson says that he was elected as Town Clerk in October 1768 and died a month later. In April of that year he was witness to a baptism for writer John Gledstains. John (18th C.) recorded being in Ashkirk Parish in 1794 when his marriage to Isabel Henderson was announced in Melrose Parish, with James Ballantyne as cautioner. Patrick (18th C.) wright in Hawick. He married Agnes (or Ann) Easton. Their children were baptised in Wilton (with the first also recorded in Hawick), including: Mary (b.1744); Margaret (b.1748); George (b.1750); Adam (b.1752); George (again, Weisz (weis) n. Otto (d.1994) Pringle’s designer, credited with creating the cashmere ‘twin-set’ around the 1940s, popularised by actresses such as Jean Simmons, Deborah Kerr, Heddy Lemarr and Dorothy Lamour. The idea to name the product the ‘twin-set’ is meant to have occurred to him after seeing a woman pushing twins in a pram on Hawick High Street! His designs were partly responsible for Hawick knitwear’s post-war success. In Hawick, he rode at the Common Riding. He was a Jewish refugee from Austria, being apprenticed to Bernhard Altmann of Vienna. Originally an artist, he was appointed by Pringle’s in 1934 (on his 3rd attempt to get hired), becoming a Director in 1937, Assistant Managing Director in 1952 and Joint Managing Director in 1964. He finally retired in 1969, and moved to Jersey, where he died. In 2006 his son David donated the Andrew Binnie painting ‘Hawick in Winter’ to Hawick Museum – ‘How a stylish bit knitwear disappeared from the scene. The classic twin-set – Otto Weisz’s big dream’ [GM].

Weittie (wi-tee) n. John ‘Jock’ (16th C.) servant to James Turnbull of Stonedge. He was recorded in 1590, along with his master, Gavin Turnbull of Woollee and Alexander Oliver of Westerhouses, when they were accused of raiding farms in England. It is unclear how to spell or pronounce his surname.

Welch (welsh, welch) n. Adam (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Margaret Laidlaw in 1723 and their children included: Janet (b.1738); and Bettie (b.1740). Janet (16th C.) listed in 1552 as ‘Jonete Welch’ among people who were owed money in the testament of William Scott, younger of Branxholme. It is unclear whether she was ‘Waugh’ or ‘Veitch’.

John (17th C.) listed as resident at Outerside on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William, who was also listed there, was surely related. John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Philhopehill in 1727 and Broadlee in 1732. In 1726 he married ‘Bitrich’ Young, also from Roberton. His children, baptised in Roberton, included: Thomas (b.1727); James (b.1729); Margaret (b.1732); and Elizabeth (b.1735). John (d.1900) born in dinburgh, he served with the 5th Battalion Cameron Highlanders in WW1 and was wounded at Loos. In 1924 he founded the Hawick Welch’s accountancy firm Welch’s. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Eildrig in 1722 and Girnwood in 1725. He married Margaret Hislop in 1721. His children included: Thomas (b.1722); and Thomas (again, b.1725). William (17th C.) resident at Outerside according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. John was also listed there and must have been related. He is probably the William, married to Margaret Scott, whose children baptised in Hawick Parish included: Margaret (b.1673); George (b.1675); Marie (b.1677); and Janet (b.1678). The witnesses in 1675 were James Thorbrand and William Laing. It is possible that his name was ‘Wetch’, i.e. Veitch.

Welch’s (wel-sheez) n. Messrs. J.J. Welch, accountancy firm at 19 Buccleuch Street (note the pronunciation).

wele (weladv., arch. well, faithfully (in wording related to holding lands) – ‘...the quhilk soume of twa hundreth markis wele and lelely to be made ...’ [SB1470] (cf. the more modern well).

welkin (wel-kin) n., poet. the sky, upper air, vault of heaven – ‘Far beyond the setting sun, Where ever brood the shadows dun, Where bends the welkin to the wave, And ocean’s utmost waters lave’ [JL], ‘The maiden stray’d till dark’ning night O’erspread the welkin wide’ [JTe], ‘Which makes the upland welkins ring Far from the din of busy throng’ [RHL], ‘...Striking the welkin here, her old Norse slogan, On festive, storied, Common-Riding morn’ [JBSS], ‘In this dour job that he maun dae On land an’ sea an’ welkin ...’’ [WP] (from Old English).

well (wel) n., arch. a spring, source of fresh water – ‘I like to drink the muirland wells, For that was aye the name for me’ [DA] (most springs or pumps in the Hawick area were called ‘Wells’; see also wall and wells).

the Well Brae (thu-wel-brá) n. former name for a track down to the Dean Burn in Denholm, on the east side. It is now a path leading from the War Memorial down to Deamburn House. James Murray says that the earliest course of the road towards Hawick used to go this way, much higher up the Burn than the modern road.

Wellbutts Park (wel-buts-pawrk) n. former name for Wellfield (on account of the butts, or archery targets, being placed there).

Wellerton (we-le-ton) n. Roger (13th/14th C.) appointed Archdeacon of Teviotdale by Edward II in 1307. He was probably from England, probably one of the Wiltons there. He remained in this position, at least tillerarily, until about 1310.

Wellfield (wel-feeld) n. area around the former Wellfield House, probably named after the well, which stood near there and was known in the latter part of the 19th century as ‘Dickson’s Well’.

Wellfield Bank (wel-feeld-bawng) n. housing built on the grounds of Wellfield Lodge in 1960.

Wellfield Hoose (wel-feeld-hoos) n. villa in Wellfield, demolished in the early 1970s to make way for the new Wilton School. It was built for William Dickson in the early 1860s. It was the residence of the Nobles in the 1880s, then the Scotts in the late 19th and early 20th centuries, with the final residents being the Montgomery family. There were additions made around 1908, to designs by J.P. Alison. The name is also sometimes used for the former lodge house at 31 Dickson Street.

Wellfield Ludge (wel-feeld-luj, -loj) n. former lodge house for Wellfield House, situated at 31 Dickson Street.

Wellfield Road (wel-feeld-röd) n. road connecting Dickson Street with Havelock Street, roughly between the positions of the former Wellfield Lodge and Silverbuthall Lodge. It was built in 1969 when the house was already derelict.

We’ll Follow Oor Cornet (weel-lo-o-oor-kör-nì) n. song adopted as the club song of the 1514 Club. The words are by David Johnston, first published in the Hawick Express in 1951. The music was by Adam L. Ingles, provided at the request of the Club, and dedicated to them in 1975, when it received its first performance.

Wellgreen (wel-green) n. house on Sunnyside in Denholm.

Wellington Court (we-ling-tin-kör) n. housing for single people built off Wilton Path in 1982, and named after the streets that used to be there. It was redeveloped in 2002 into 21 larger units.

Wellington Kirk (we-ling-tin-kirk) n. Wellington Church, built in 1886 following a disagreement in 1881 in which the assistant minister of Hawick Parish Church, Rev. J.A. Birrell, walked out with part of the congregation. The new church was built in Wellington Street and took that as its name. It was renamed St. Margaret’s and created a ‘quoad sacra’ church in 1896. After the congregation merged with Wilton South in 1940 the building was used commercially, e.g. as storage for fruits and vegetables by Proudfoots. It was demolished in 1976.

Wellington Place (we-ling-tin-plis) n. houses constructed in 1853 and named around 1857, being previously part of Wellington Street. The whole area was cleared in 1973–75.
Wellington Road

Wellington Road (we-ling-tin-röd) n. street off Wilton Path, with houses constructed around 1876 and 1885, the western part originally being called Pringle Street. St. Margaret’s Church was formerly there. The area was cleared in 1973–75 and new houses built.

Wellington’s Pillar (we-ling-tin-pi-lur) n. name by which Penielheugh was known around the time it was built.

Wellington Street (we-ling-tin-stree) n. street in Wilton named after Arthur Wellesley, the Duke of Wellington (1769–1852), famous for his victory over Napoleon at Waterloo, and also Prime Minister 1823–30. The mill lade was used to cross under the bottom of the street. There also used to be a baker’s at the top and a general shop at the bottom, and two sweet and tobacco shops between. The original houses were constructed 1850–55. J.P. Alison designed the house at the corner with Wellington Place, built in 1910. There was major demolition in 1973–75 with new houses constructed around 1977, as well as the 1982 sheltered housing development called Wellington Court.

the Wellogate (thu-we-lö-gā’-lu-, wa-lö-gā’) n. area in the east of Hawick, around Wellogate Brae. Up until the early 20th century the area contained many fields rented to farmers with barns and stabling in the town. In the 19th century some of these farmers were the Grieves of the Cross Wynd, the Tullys of the Millpath, the Hardies of the Kirk Wynd, the Aitkens of the Kirk Wynd, the Tower Hotel landlords and Hawick Mill. In 1715 gardener John Tait was fined for ‘breaking the marches between the Common and the property of the Duchess of B. at the Woollegate’; however, it is unclear where such a boundary could have been. The housing there was largely built by the Hawick Working Men’s Building & Investment Co., Ltd. in the latter half of the 19th century. A number of the streets in the Terraces had different names for the upper and lower houses (as well as for each side if the street) until rationalisation of the names by the Council in 1882. The ‘Well o’ Gate’ spring was marked by a monument in 1985. A stone ball found in the area is in the Museum. The name is also used more specifically to refer to Wellogate Brae – ‘In wellogate the Eastern Gate …’ [NM], ‘…’Twas then I found mysel alane In Wellogate, Where deid folk mony a year hae lain – Cauld, calm, sedate’ [WP] (the name occurs in many forms, including ‘Walllegate’, ‘Woollee gate’ and ‘Wellygate’ in the 18th century, and ‘Woollegate’, ‘Wallygate’ and ‘Well o’ Gate’ in the 19th; it is ‘Woolie Gate’ on Wood’s 1824 map; it is likely to have derived from ‘Woollee Gate’, i.e. the way to Wolfelee, with some later influence on the name from the wells or springs there).

the Well o Gate (thu-we-lö-gā’) n. name for the spring at the top of Wellogate Brae, about 50 yards above the entrance to Fisher Avenue. It was used as a water supply in the latter half of the 19th century, and still existed until about the 1930s. There was a drain on the right hand side of the road above the cemetery entrance, which is marked by a restored well (with wall supplied by J. & R. Elliot, builders) and plaque (carved by R.E. Scott in 1985). The spring was on oreginally on John Kedzie’s land and the supply was piped to the Cross Well, the Council resolution for this being in 1755. It was also piped later to Allars Church, as well as supplying a watering trough used by horses and cattle entering the town (it is ‘Wellygate’ in 1755).

Wellogate Bank (we-lö-gā’-bawngk) n. house on Wellogate Brae, roughly opposite the cemetery gates.

Wellogate Brae (we-lö-gā’-bra) n. main road leading out to the east of Hawick, being the continuation of the Cross Wynd and Allars Bank. It was officially named in 1934, with council houses built on the right hand side at the top, along with Fisher Avenue.

the Wellogate Brig (thu-we-lö-gā’-brig) n. name sometimes used for the road bridge over the railway line at the top of Allars Bank.

Wellogate Ceemetry (we-lö-gā’-see-mi’ree) n. one of Hawick’s two main cemeteries, lying between the old railway line and Fisher Avenue in the Wellogate district. 7½ acres of land on the Common was sold to the heritors of Hawick Parish in order to be exchanged with land for the new cemetery. It was opened in 1849, as an overflow for St. Mary’s Churchyard, and almost immediately had to cope with the 1849 cholera epidemic, with most of the victims buried in the vacant middle area. The Heritor’s area, containing the final resting place of many of Hawick’s worthies, was opened in July 1849 and its control transferred to the Parish Council in 1903. The entrance to this area was formerly higher up than the present main gate. The cemetery has expanded several times since then. A staircase also connects with the former railway. There is a shelter within the grounds, designed by J.P. Alison. It was for a while known as ‘Hawick Cemetery’ to distinguish it from Wilton Cemetery – ‘Then one
Wells

Wellogate Place (wel-ō-gā‘-wel) n. estate near Bedrule, formerly owned by the Douglases of Cavers, the Rutherfords and the Cavers-Carre families. In some of the earliest documents it was known as ‘Wollis’. The area was burned by Hertford’s men in 1545. The superiority appears to have passed from Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus to Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst in 1581. The first Rutherford of Wells was James of that Ilk, who held it from at least 1492 (when it was described as a 5-pound land and granted by Douglas of Cavers). Robert Turnbull was recorded as tenant there in 1493. John Turnbull and Adam Turnbull were recorded there in 1502. ‘Non-entry’ of the lands is recorded in 1508. It passed to James’ grandson Richard, then to Richard’s sister Helen. About this time it was separated from the Barony of Cavers, with the Crown being the direct superior thereafter; an extract charter of 1511 confirms how James Douglas of Cavers resigned the superiority into the hands of the King, to be given to Helen Rutherford and her husband John Forman. Since Helen had no children, the lands passed to James Stewart of Traquair (the husband of Katherine, sister of Richard and Helen). In 1524/5 the Laird (probably a Stewart) was among the Border Barons who swore the bond of allegiance to the Earl of Angus (Warden at that time). Several generations of the Stewarts of Traquair were Lairds until Charles, the 4th Earl, sold the estate to Thomas Rutherford of Wells in 1687 (and thus the estate passed back into the hands of the Rutherfords after 2½ centuries). Stewart of Traquair was owner in 1643, when the lands were valued at £214 10s in Cavers Parish and £409 10s in Hobkirk Parish. Andrew Ker paid the land tax on £66 13s 4d there in 1678; he may also be ‘The walls’ who paid tax on £214 10s in Cavers Parish in the same year. Thomas was the last Rutherford Laird, selling the estate to William Elliot (decedent of the Elliots of Brugh) in 1706/7, who had a house built there. Meanwhile Sir Gilbert Elliot of Stobs had a charter of the lands of Over and Nether Wells in 1659 indirectly from William, Lord Cranstoun. Archibald Jerdan was factor there from 1728 until the 1760s; his rental book gives many details of the running of the estate in the 18th century. The rentals (including Ormiston and Hadden) amounted to £744 in 1729 and £921 in 1735 (but with many farmers in arrears). Archibald Jerdan paid tax on 45 windows there in 1753. In 1788 part of the lands were listed in Cavers Parish, valued at £214 10s. It was sold to the William Nassau Elliot, M.P. towards the end of the 18th century. It was valued at £409 10s in 1811. It passed to Sir William Francis Elliott in 1818 when William Nassau Elliot died. The house was extended around 1862.

Well Plantin (wel-plawn‘-in) n. plantation in Hobkirk Parish, lying just to the west of Braidhaugh.

wells (welz) n., pl. in Hawick there used to be public wells situated at several points down the Loan and Howegate and along the High Street, and elsewhere in the area, as well as many private supplies. They were the traditional gossiping place in town, with women gathering in line with their pitchers. The important thing to understand is that a ‘well’ (or ‘wall’) was typically a stand-pipe and trough, and not the traditional draw-well (like the new fake one in the Park) which is the more modern meaning of the word. Water would be fed to the wells through pipes from sources such as the Smaile Burn, the ‘Well-o-Gate’ and other natural springs. In 1731 the Council paid for 3 loads of clay for ‘the well’ and in 1737 the well in the High Street was directed to be rebuilt. In 1783 the Council resolved to provide 2 street wells using piped spring water, these being the Cross Well and the Pant Well (and masons William Phillop & Co. were paid for the work). In 1786 the Council paid for white paint ‘for wester fountain-head’, suggesting that these public wells were painted. In 1797 the Schidder Springs were piped into Hawick, providing 6 additional public wells. However, there were also smaller, local or private wells (often named after a nearby inhabitant), and several more which were opened up through the 19th century. These open wells were largely responsible for outbreaks of cholera and other diseases, and the decline in their use came with the opening of the Allan Water supply in 1865.

It passed to Sir William Francis Elliott in 1818 when William Nassau Elliot died. The house was extended around 1862.
The house was leased to John Bald in the period 1865–76. The estate having a considerable debt, the trustees had lots of the old trees cut down in the late 1800s, this being locally quite unpopular. Sir William and Lady Elliott of Stobs lived there themselves in the years around 1890. But the estate was sold to the Ushers in 1895/6, who rebuilt the main house in 1906, although it was demolished in the 1950s. The new development included a herony, as well as alterations to the banks of the Rule to form a small lake. The wrought-iron gates are retained from the 18th century, while an armorial pediment from about 1690 is in the Museum. Extensive and irregularly shaped plantations also survive. The entire Wells and Hallrule estates were sold off in 1995 – ‘Adieu, fair Wells! I gladly quit Thy mutilated glade, But who can look without regret Upon thy ruined shade? Years, countless years, may come and go. And heirs thee still retain, But what thou wert in former years Thou’lt never be again’ [T] (often formerly written ‘Walls’, ‘Wellis’, etc.; it is ‘le wellis’ in 1502; it is already marked by its modern name ‘Wells’ on Gordon’s c. 1650 map).

Wells (welz) n. former estate to the east of Jedburgh, including Over Wells, Nether Wells, Wells Shawhead and Wells Mill, long owned by the Kerrs. The spelling varied as ‘Wollis’ etc., and is thus easily confused with Wells in the Rule valley (formerly ‘Wellis’ and variants).

Wells (welz) n. David (1834/5–72) son of John, he was Schoolmaster at Stouslie. He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. Ebenezer (18th/19th C.) schoolmaster at Newcastle on the early 1800s. He subscribed (for 2 copies) to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. John (14th C.) listed as ‘John de Wellis’ in 1390 when he witnessed the charter by John Turnbull of Minto, granting Minto to Sir William Stewart of Jedburgh. The other witnesses were all local men. Thomas ‘Tom’ (b.1806/7) Burgh Officer and Halberdier in the 1850s. He was listed as the Keeper of the ‘House of Refuge’ in the 1851 census. In Slater’s 1852 directory he is listed as keeper of an eating house on the Howegate as well as ‘sheriff’s officer, Howegate’. His wife was Mary, and they had a daughter Maria.

Wells Hoose (welz-hoos) n. former house near Bedrule, on the Wells estate. The name has existed for centuries, and so probably there was a house there from at least the 16th century. Shortly after the estate passed to the Rutherfords in 1687 a mansion was built. The original house can be seen on a sketch from the mid-18th century. It was the birthplace of George Augustus Elliott (Lord Heathfield) in 1717, and was visited briefly by Burns in 1787. The rental book of Archibald Jerdon lists the contents of the house in about 1730. Col William Elliot paid tax for 37 windows there in 1748. The house consisted of 6 main rooms, a kitchen, a servants’ room and an attic. The house was extensively repaired in 1753 and there is a sketch as it was around 1790. During the late 18th and much of the 19th century it was mainly used by the factor of Wells. It was altered and extended by Sir William Elliott of Stobs and Wells around 1862, and became the home of Sir William’s mother. A sundial was shown on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map. The house was then rented by the Vassals and by the new Sir William himself, in order to try to pay off the debts on the estate, but it was sold off to John Usher in 1896. The house was demolished in 1905 by Sir Robert Usher soon after the estate was acquired, and a photograph exists showing it shortly before demolition. A new Edwardian-style house was then constructed for the Usher family on the same site, designed by Thomas Greenshields Leadbetter. Only 2 stones survived from the original house, one bearing 18 coats of arms, showing the descent of Thomas Rutherford and his wife, and the second was the lintel bearing the motto ‘Ne des tua robora scortis’ (‘do not give away your strength to whores!’). The new house fell into disrepair and was dynamited in 1955. A modern bungalow was built there in 1999. There is an ancient earthwork, of unknown age, in the woods to the south.

He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1860. Matthew (b.1851/2) from the Ewes valley, son of labourer Matthew and Margaret. In 1861 he was ‘Wood Forester’ at Sandyhaugh. He was known for his poetry. He wrote ‘Maggie Elliot: a romance of Ewes, and other poems’ (1906). The inscription on his tomb reads ‘Perhaps in this neglected spot is laid Some heart once pregnant with celestial fire’.

Robert (17th/18th C.) servant on the Falnash estate. In 1720 he confessed to the Hawick minister his fornication with ‘Isbel Batie’, and subsequently stood in the place of repentance 3 times and paid a fine. Their son William was baptised in 1720, with the couple recorded as ‘Fornicators’ and witnesses Walter Scott (servant to Rev. Robert Cunningham) and John Scott (Beadle). Perhaps the same Robert was recorded in Bowanhill in 1731 when his son John was baptised. Robert (18th C.) servant on the Falnash estate. In 1720 he Robert Brown (1943-) Hawick R.F.C. player who was one of the 3 men who played in all 10 of the consecutive events that the team won in 1966-67. He started playing rugby at the High School, moving to the P.S.A. in 1958, followed by the Linden and then the Greens. He initially played on the wing, but moved to be stand-off and centre. He also played regularly for the South and earned 2 caps for Scotland. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Jane ‘Welsh’ and their daughter Agnes was baptised in 1797; the witnesses were ‘Mr Hardy’ (perhaps the minister at Ashkirk) and Andrew Gray. Probably the same Thomas, married to Jean Ballantyne, had further children baptised in Wilton: Christopher (b.1800); Martha (b.1803); and Thomas (b.1807). William (19th C.) carrier operating between Hawick and Edinburgh, according to Pigot’s 1825 directory. The agent is listed as James Relton.

William (b.1770/1) born in Castleton Parish, he was living at ‘Poor’s houses’ in Evesdale in 1851. He was then described as ‘Pauper & Sexton’ and living with his daughter Jane and grandson John Irvine. William (b.1808/9) labourer and postmaster in the Ewes valley. In 1861 he was at Bogfoot. His wife was Anne. William (b.1825/6) son of Matthew, he was a tailor in the Ewes valley. In 1851 he was at Sandyhaugh with his mother and siblings Matthew and Helen.

Wemyss (weemz) n. Bailie Alexander (b.1813) Hawick Magistrate of the latter part of the 19th century. His parents were Thomas, foreman at Wilton Mills, and Elizabeth Scott. He began working at Wilton Mills in 1827, becoming a commission agent later in life and retiring.
in 1889. He was the last living standard-bearer of the great Reform Bill procession of 1832. He was also present at the election in Jedburgh when Sir Walter Scott was supposedly assaulted by Hawick men, but vehemently denied this version of events. He also acted as sergeant-in-chief of the special constables appointed during the troublesome 1841 election. He was for a long time on Wilton Parochial Board, entered the Council for Wilton Ward in 1868 and became a Magistrate 3 years later. He was also one of the originators of St. Andrew’s Free Church. In 1861 he was living on Dovemount Street. He married Ann, daughter of Alexander Gow. He is buried in Wilton Cemetery. James (16th/17th C.) Hawick resided recorded in 1616. He was one of the men (along with ‘Bonnie Johnnie Scott’ and James Lethen) who took the pistol from ‘Marion’s Geordie’ Scott, before he could shoot the Baron, James Douglas of Drumlanrig. James (b.1819/20) born in Hawick, he was a wool spinner. He married Margaret Duncan in 1839. Their children were James, George, Charles, Janet and Margaret. They emigrated to Boston in 1854. He emigrated to the Boston area in 1854, with the rest of his family. He worked as a furniture maker, eventually becoming owner of a large company. In Boston he was an Oddfellow and Mason and was President of the Scots’ Charitable Society, the British American Association of the State of Massachusetts, the Boston Curling Club and the Hawick Club. James (b.1840) born in Hawick, son of James and Margaret Duncan. Thomas (1878–1861) manager at Dicksons & Laings. He remained responsible for running the looms until he died. He was listed as foreman at Wilton Mills among heads of households in Wilton Parish 1835–41. He was recorded as woolen factory foreman, living at Dovemount in 1841 and on Wilton Place in 1851. In 1861 he was a widower living with his son Alexander. He married Elizabeth, daughter of John Scott and sister of Dr. William Scott. Their children included: Isabella (1812–58), the oldest daughter, who became 2nd wife of John White, miller of Hawick, and her cousin; Alexander (b.1814), who also worked at Wilton Mills; and Mary. A portrait of him exists (also spelled ‘Weymes’ and variants; the name was once interchangeable with Weens).

Wenelaciam (we-ne-la-see-un) n. place recorded in the late 12th century in a document relating to the lands of Glasgow Diocese in Ashkirk Parish. Most of the other locations are recognisable, but the modern equivalent of this particular name is unclear.

Wenerton (we-ner-in) n. former lands in the Slitrig valley, listed in 1547/8 in an English communication about farms they had burned. They were the property of the Laird of Gledstains, along with ‘Torne’ (probably Turn) and ‘Fowler-awe’. The exact location and pronunciation are unknown.

Wesla (wes-ly, -la) adj., n., arch. formerly used to describe the western part of Hawick, in distinction to the ‘Eastla’ part. Also referred to as ‘Wesla Witter’, because the Slitrig was the line of demarcation. There used to be a strong rivalry between the two sides, with competing bonfires on special occasions (the ‘Wesla’ one being at Myreslawgreen), as well as the tradition of appointing the Cornet from alternating sides (also written Westla).

Wesla Lads (wes-la-lads) n. group who selected their own Cornet in the ‘Disputed Common Riding’ of 1809, in opposition to new regulations introduced by the Town Council regarding invitations to the Cornet’s supporters. They were also referred to as the ‘Wesla Water’ party. They had to get the Selkirk drummer and fifer to supply the music for the processions, and held a separate Ball in the Cross Keys. Their ‘rebel’ flag is in the Museum, and James Hogg’s ‘Address to the inhabitants of Hawick’ was written for this occasion – ‘If you love your ancient freedom, Their new Cornet never heed him; From amongst you choose a Cornet, Hand it down to sons unborn yet’[HJ].

Wesla Witter (wes-la-wit-ur) n. former name for the part of town west of the Slitrig, effectively the old version of the ‘Westend’ (also Westla).

Westbarns (west-baurnz) n. former lands in Belses Barony, near Lilliesleaf. In 1569 it was listed among the lands sold by Jedburgh Abbey to Adam French. In 1632 it was feued from Thomas Hamilton, Lord Binning, to Robert Grieve from Commonside, William Davidson from Caerlenrig, John Gray from Lilliesleaf and Robert Law from Kames. It was among lands whose superiority was inherited by daughters of George Scott (brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade) in 1670. (it is ‘Westbarnis’ in 1569 and ‘Westbernis’ in 1588 and ‘Westbyres’ in 1670).
West Beechwud

West Beechwud (west-beech-wud) n. name for a field on Hawick Common to the north of the road between Williestruther cottage and the Flex.

West Boonraw (west-boon-raw) n. farm reached by taking the right hand road at the ‘Fower Road Ends’, just next to East Boonraw, on the Boonraw Burn. It was also known as ‘Wester Boonraw’. Elizabeth Davidson lived there in 1841 and 1851 and labourer William Hewitson was there in 1841 (see also Boonraw).

West Buccleuch (west-bu-kloo) n. farm on the south-west bank of the Rinkle Burn, off the B711, near East Buccleuch, in the centre of Scott country. In the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch it extended to 3909 acres and the farmhouse is marked in much the same location as the present one. The ‘West side of Buccleugh’ stock and teind was valued at about £916 in 1785. It was tenanted by Turnbuls in the early 19th century and was then composed of 1,400 acres of land. It was for a time run as a hotel. Part of the old drove road can also be seen near here. There was a Ride-out here in 1988 (also sometimes ‘Wester Buccleuch’).

West Burnfoot see Wester Burnfoot

West Burnfoot (west-burn-fi’) n. West Burnfoot, farm in the Ale valley, being the partner of East Burnfoot. It is also known as ‘Wester Burnfoot’ and is easily confused with the place of the same name in Wilton Parish. There was also a mill there, although it may have been a separate farm. There were 3 tenants listed there in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, namely James Henderson, Walter Wilson and Robert Culbertson. Daniel Kedie was tenant there in 1709. It is marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map off the streamlet that emerges from Shielswood Loch. The location is south of the other farm, but actually a little further to the east on Ainslie’s map (it is ‘Westerburnfoot’ in 1744; see also Burnfit Mill).

West Burn Park (west-burn-pawrk) n. name for the field on the Common opposite the entrance to the racecourse and north of Burn Park.

Westburnflat (west-burn-flaw’) n. former tower of the Armstrongs on Hermitage Water, perhaps just south of its junction with the Liddel. It was listed as a land with rental 37 shillings and 4 pence in a c.1376 list of the area around Mangerston among the charters of the Douglasses of Morton. Archie of Westburnflat is listed by Monipennie among Border chiefs in the late 1500s. It was burned in 1599 by the Gideon Murray of Ellbank, Walter Scott of Harden and Gilbert Elliot of Horsleyhill. It was possessed by Lanie Armstrong in 1632 and John Armstrong until about 1683. John Glendinning was tenant there in 1694, with William Elliot also listed as a householder. It is said that one of the last owners, William Armstrong, was captured for stealing cattle and hanged at Selkirk, in the early 1700s. Labourer Francis Armstrong was there in 1835 (it is ‘Westburne-flat’ around 1376, ‘Wastburne-flat’ in 1599 and ‘westburnflat’ in 1694; it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

West Cote (west-kō’, -ko’) n. farm off the A698 Denholm road, roughly opposite Trowmill, behind Linden Park. It was once a tenanted farm on the Cavers estate and sold off in the early 19th century. Adam Douglas was there in 1718 and William Sanderson in 1730. John and James Bunyan were tenants in 1794 and James Bunyan in 1797. Robert Shiel was farmer in the early 20th century. The name distinguishes it from the farm of Eastcote (also spelled ‘West Coat’, ‘Westcote’, etc.; it is marked ‘Westcot’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Westcoterig (west-kō’-rig) n. former farmstead in the upper Teviot valley, perhaps on the Cromrig Burn north of Southdean Rig, although its precise location is uncertain. It was recorded in 1540 among lands (probably part of Ringwoodfield) farmed by the King’s shepherd Richard Henderson. In 1557 it was ‘Westcoit’ when rented from Melrose Abbey by Walter Scott and William Elliot; at that time it was valued at £5. It was listed as part of the Lairdship of Ringwoodfield in 1621 and 1634 and listed among the same upper Teviotdale lands in 1693. In 1620 Sir Walter Scott of Goldielands was infelt in these lands, along with those of Goldielands. It was recorded as part of the Lordship of Melrose in 1653, 1661 and 1663. In 1744 it was leased along with Colterscleuch by William and Gideon Grieve (marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘West cotrigg’; it is ‘Westcotrig’ in 1540, ‘Westcoitrig’ in 1621, ‘Westcotrig’ in 1634, ‘Wester Coitrig’ in 1653, ‘West Cotrig’ in 1661, ‘Wester Coitrig’ in 1663, ‘Westcotrig’ in 1670, ‘Westcoittig’ in 1693 and ‘west-coat-riggs’ in 1744).

the West End (thin-wes-tend) n. popular name for an area of Hawick, corresponding approximately the part of town to the west of the Slitrig and south of the Teviot. It was traditionally where the workers and poorer residents lived, and where the strongest dialect was spoken. In a case of reverse snobbery, Westenders typically regard the area as the ‘real’ Hawick. The area has been occupied for many centuries and it seems likely that it was the original centre for the settlement of Hawick. It is clearly shown as an inhabited area on Pont’s map of c.1590. In 1770 there were 110 houses there owned by Burgesses, with a value of over £13,000. In 1804 the Council resolved for form footpaths in the area. The modern street layout was mostly developed in the 19th century.

West End Academy (wes-tend-aw-ka-du-mee) n. former private school, run by Rev. and Mrs. B. Brodie. It started in 1883 on Buccleuch Street, and moved to Wilton Lodge in 1892, changing its name to Wilton Lodge Academy.

the West End Bar (thu-wes-tend-bawr) n. hostelry at 3 Loan in the latter part of the 19th century. A stone bottle from there (when the proprietor was James Shiel) is in the Museum (also known as the ‘West End Spirit Bar’).

West-Ender (wes-ten-dur) n. someone from the West End of Hawick — ‘Maister Thompson, a Wastender like masel’ [HE1924] (also spelled ‘Westender’, cf. the older West-End).

the West End Kirk (thu-wes-tend-kirk) n. previously known as the Green Kirk, it was home of the Anti-Burgher congregation and then part of the United Presbyterian Church from 1847. It should not be confused with the West Port (Free) Kirk.

the West End Meetin Hoose (thu-wes-tend-mee-in-hoos) n. the West End Meeting House, also known as the Green Kirk, at Myreslaw Green.

wester (wes-tur) adj. part of an area that is further west (cf. waster).

Wester Adam (wes-tur-aw-dum) n. nickname for Adam Scott.

Wester Alemoor (wes-tur-äl-moor) n. farm just before Alemoor Reservoir on the B711. The present farm was built fairly recently, with the old one close to the dam at the end of the reservoir. This was formerly the site of a peel tower, on the high left bank of the Ale Water, dating probably from the 15th century. There are several enclosures and signs of former cultivation near the old farm location. The farm was in Selkirkshire in 1511 when it was included in a grant of lands to Adam Hepburn, Earl of Bothwell. The separate farm of Easter Alemoor is known from at least 1573, when it had a separate owner. Wester Alemoor was forfeited (along with many other estates and titles) by Francis Stewart, the 5th Earl Boswell, to Walter ‘the Bold’ of Buccleuch in 1594. The farm remained with the Scotts, but by the late 18th century was owned by Elliot of Borthwickbrae. It was transferred to Roberton in 1689 when that Parish was created. Thomas Scott and Walter Scott were recorded there in 1734 and Robert Anderson in 1741. John Sinton was there in 1771–74. John Elliot of Borthwickbrae paid the land tax on £308 3s 4d there in 1785 and William Elliot in 1802. The new farm was built adjacent to the B711, just before the Loch is reached, essentially south of Easter Alemoor. The earlier location for the farm was covered by the reservoir extension, and chimneys from the old farmhouse can be seen in the Loch when the water is low. The name is also used for the western side of Alemoor Hill, which lies north of the Loch, with peaks 366 m and 376 m and an observation tower (also called ‘West Alemoor’, it is ‘West: Ealmuir’ in 1734; it is marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Wester Barnhills (wes-tur-barn-hilz) n. former name for part of the lands of Barnhills. In 1618 it was gained by Gilbert Elliott of Stobs from John Turnbull of Barnhills. In 1678 it was combined with Easter Barnhills when both were owned by Sir William Bennet. In 1780 Robert Bennet gave sasine of the lands to Alexander Allison ‘in liferent’ and Matthew Stewart of Barnhills ‘in fee’. By 1788 the lands were owned by the Misses Stewart and valued at about £350.

Wester Boonraw (wes-tur-boon-raw) n. another name for West Boonraw.

Wester Braid Road (wes-tur-bräd-röd) n. extension of Braid Road to the other (southern) side of Wellogate Brae. The track there was formerly also known as the Cross Road. It was developed in the early 1930s to provide access to Fisher Avenue. The road continues as a right of way to Hardie’s Hill.

Wester Broadlee (wes-tur-bröd-lee) n. formerly part of the farm of Broadlee. In 1650 the ‘communicants’ recorded there were William Wyllie, Margaret Armstrong, William Chisholme and Bessie Spence.

Wester Buccleuch see West Buccleuch

Wester Burnfit see West Burnfit

Wester Burnfit (wes-tur-burn-fi’) n. former name for part of the lands of Burnfoot in Wilton Parish. It should not be confused with a place of the same name in Ale Water. James Shiel was living there in 1682 and 1688 and Robert Wait was a gardener there in 1688. In 1718 it was owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch, unlike the adjacent Easter Burnfoot. It consisted of 226 acres, bounded by Easter Burnfoot, the River Teviot, Wilton, Burnhead and Galalaw. The mill is shown in the south-eastern corner, and there are woods near there along the river, as well as along the Boonraw Burn. James Easton was living there in 1722, James Young in 1724, William Scott in at least 1724–35, George Scott in 1729, William Lamb in 1735 and Adam Laidlaw in 1736.

Wester Bushes (wes-tur-bri’-sheez) n. hilly area in Craik Forest, west of Howpasley, and north-east of Craik Moor. It is crossed by the Roman road. There are old enclosures there, visible on aerial photographs.

Wester Clarilaw (wes-tur-klä’-ree-law) n. former name for the western half of Clarilaw in Wilton Parish. In 1678 it was owned by William Scott of Clarilaw and valued at £182. In the 1718 Buccleuch survey it was not owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch, although the eastern section was. It was stated that 6 acres of land belonging to it were mixed with Easter Clarilaw, while one acre mixed with it belonged to Wester Clarilaw. It was the property of the trustees of Thomas Turnbull of Knowe in 1788 and on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls (valued at £65), with the other part owned by William Scott of Burnhead (valued at £117). The parts were later owned by the Dicksons of Alton and Watson of Burnhead.

Wester Commonside (wes-tur-ko-min-sid) n. name for part of the farm of Commonside. It was described as a 40-shilling land in 1603 when leased to Gilbert Elliot (it was ‘Westir Comounsye’ in 1603).

Wester Craik (wes-tur-kräk) n. former name for part of the lands of Craik.

Wester Dykeback (wes-tur-dik-bak) n. land lying approximately between Burnflat Brae and Crumhaughhill Road, probably once the back part of the area known as Thorterdykes, and distinguished from Easter Dykeback, which was to the north-east. The Burgh boundary passed diagonally through here.

Wester Essenside (wes-tur-es-iin-sid) n. farm west of Ashkirk, close to Easter Essenside, along the Todrig Burn. George Riddell was recorded there in 1579. It was owned by the Scotts of Burnfoot on Ale in the early 17th century and was farmed in the 18th century by the Laings. In 1643 it was valued at £400 and owned by Thomas Scott. It was valued at £540 according to the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. William Laidlaw was herd there in 1697. Robert Cranston was tenant there in 1724. David Henderside was owner in 1761. By 1788 the lands were valued at £400 and owned by Mrs. Elliot of Borthwickbrae (with the teinds of these lands and Leap Hill being another £12). John Thomson was farmer there in at least 1789–94. Robert Thomson was farmer there in 1797. It was owned by Mrs. Elliot of Borthwickbrae in 1788 (and still recorded in about 1811) and Allan Elliot Lockhart by 1874. William Aitken was there in the mid-19th century and J. Paterson in the 1860s (see also Essenside; it is ‘wester Eschiside’ in 1579, ‘Wester Eschinsyde’ in 1609, ‘west-essensyde’ in 1663 and ‘Wester Essensyde’ in 1724; it is marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Wester Grundistone (wes-tur-grun-dee-stin) n. former lands at Grundistone, which, along with ‘Easter Grundistone’, were owned by the Scotts in the 16th century. ‘Thomas Scot in Wester-groundiston’ is listed by Scott of Satchells as one of the 24 ‘Pensioners’ of Buccleuch. It was part of the estates of the Duchess of Buccleuch by the end of the 17th century. Francis Scott was tenant there in 1694, with James Dean as shepherd, and Adam ‘English’ recorded being ‘out of the shire’. Walter Scott was tenant there in 1709. In the 1718 survey of Buccleuch properties it covered 362 acres, bounded by Easter Grundistone, Boonraw, Drinkstone, Wilton Common and Selenside. A stream separated it from Easter Grundistone, and in 1718 farmhouses are shown on either side of this stream. John Turnbull was living there in at least 1721–25. Robert Scott was there in 1729. The lands were leased from Buccleuch Estates by Gideon Scott of Falnash in 1744, along with a declaration about what would happen if the adjacent Hassendedean Common was divided (it is ‘Wester Grundiston’ in 1643, ‘Westergroundiston’ in 1694, ‘Wester Groundiestone’ in 1718 and ‘W: Grundiston’ in 1725).

Westerhall (wes-tur-hal) n. house in Eskdale, near Bentpath, long a seat of the Johnstones. The mansion was largely built in the 17th century, and repaired following several major fires, the last in 1955 – ‘The Johnstones met at Westerhall, And they sang o’ the raid and the moon, Wi their ‘Ready aye ready’; the Johnstones cry, For they’re ‘ready’ baith late and soon’ [T].

Wester Hassendean (wes-tur-haw-sin-deen) n. former name for the lands which were ‘commonly called Horsliehill’ according to a charter of 1616, when they were sold by the Earl of Home to Gilbert Eliott of Stobs.

Wester Heap (wes-tur-heep) n. older name for the farm at East Whitehaugh and surrounding area. It was exchanged for Milsington between the Langlands and Scott families in 1453. In 1650 there is a list of 8 ‘communicants’ there, namely Bessie Scott, Marion Scott, Bessie Scott, Robert Waugh, Thomas Scott, Margaret Easton, John Almond and Jean Scott. Robert Scott paid £448 in land tax there in 1663. Scott of Whitehaugh paid the land tax for these lands and Whitehaugh in 1678, with joint value £648 10s. In 1694 John Barrie was blacksmith there and 7 other householders were listed. ‘Wester Heap, otherwise called Easter Whitehaugh’ is recorded on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls (and the 1788 county valuation) as part of the estate of Scott of Whitehaugh (also spelled ‘Hepe’, ‘Heip’ and other variants; it is ‘Wester heape’ on a 1650 parish map).

Wester Hermiston (wes-tur-her-mis-tin) n. former name for lands in Lillieslie Parish. The lands were owned by Robert Scott of Whitsslade in 1643 and valued at £156. Thomas Scott of Whitsslade owned the lands in 1678 and they were combined with Easter Hermiston by 1743. They were all owned by William Govan in 1788.

Wester Highchesters see West Highchesters

Wester Hislop (wes-tur-hiz-lop) n. former part of the farm of Hislop, mentioned in the 16th century and early 17th century (it is ‘Westir Heislehoip’ in 1572 and ‘Wester Heissilhoip’ in 1615).

Westerhooses (wes-tur-hoo-seez) n. Westerhooses, farm near Bonchester Bridge, just to the east of Ruletownhead. The farm includes a lade and mill pond. In 1538 it was valued, along with Strange, at £6 5s; the two sets of lands were together referred to as 3 stedings. In 1541 the Nicholas and Margaret Oliver were tenants in part of the farm, paying 18s 9d yearly, and Alexander Oliver in another part, paying 6s 3d. There were 3 hearths recorded on the tax rolls there in 1694. In the 18th century Andrew Murray is meant to have found a box of gold coins on the farm while ploughing one day. William Oliver was farmer there in 1794 and 1797. Henry Elliot was farmer there in the 1860s. There was also once probably a small threshing mill there, powered by water from a pond. A ‘polished felsite axe’ was found there in the 19th century. To the east is an area of rig and furrow, and further east lies the ruined peel tower of Kilnslke, and also an ancient earthwork, called Iron Castle (it is ‘westirhous’ in 1538, ‘Westirhousis’ on 1539, ‘Westirhous’ in 1541, ‘Wester Houssis’ in 1571/2 and ‘West houses’ in 1797).

Wester Kirkstile

Westerhooses (wes-tur-hoo-seez) n. Westerhooses, a former farm between Clarilaw and Horsleyhill. It is referred to in a charter of 1516, when Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme gained this (and other lands) after being forfeited by Alexander, Lord Home, and belonging to John Murray of Falahill. This charter was revoked by the King in 1535, when superiority returned to George, Lord Home. It was listed in 1582 among lands for which Robert Elliot of Horsleyhill demanded the charters of his father from the widow of Sir Walter Ker of Cessford; it is there said to have also been called Little Hassendean. It became part of Minto Parish in 1690. James Smith and Walter Armstrong were there in 1694. It was farmed by the Dicksons of Hassendeanburn in the 18th century. William Turnbull is recorded as farmer there in 1797. Later the lands became part of Horsleyhill, and is now called Horsleyhill Cottages. An axehead (made of felsite) found there is now in the National Museum of Antiquities of Scotland (it is ‘Wester Houssis’ in 1535; referred to as ‘Westhouses’ in 1690, it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Westerkirk (wes-tur-kirk) n. village and surrounding parish in Dumfriesshire, to the north-west of Langholm. Thomas Telford was born here. The church was granted to the monks of Melrose by John Graham, Lord of Westerkirk and confirmed by Robert I in 1321. A separate chapel (at Boyken) within the parish was founded following a charter of 1391, dated at Glendowyn (in Ewesdale) in which Archibald, Earl of Douglas mortified certain lands in the Barony of Hawick to pay for its foundation, under the direction of his Baillie Adam of Glendowyn (or Glendining); the chaplain was to pray for the souls of the late James, Earl of Douglas and for his ‘brother’ Sir Simon of Glendowyn (who also died at Otterburn), as well as the living Douglasses. In 1447 William Scott was presbyter and ‘perpetual vicar’ in this parish, when he witnessed the sasine for the Cousinlands, signed at Branxholme. The patronage and teinds of the parish were listed among the possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1663. The parish was briefly united with Roxburghshire following an Act of Parliament of 1672. Before the creation of Teviothead Parish, it had a boundary with the south-western portion of Hawick Parish (it is ‘Watstirker’ in 1324).

Wester Kirkstile (wes-tur-kirk-stil) n. name once given to the western approach to St. Mary’s Church, which is now gone, but shown in old drawings (e.g. a water-colour sketch by T.H.
Wester Lilliesleaf

Laidlaw) as steps leading through the wall in St. Mary’s Place. This was formerly where auctions and other public notices would be announced by the town bellman after Sunday services. Wilton Crescent was also once known as ‘the Wester Kirkstyle of Wilton’ (also spelled ‘Wester Kirkstyle’).

Wester Lilliesleaf see West Lilliesleaf

Wester Loch (wes-tur-loch) n. name used for the western of the 2 Branxholme Lochs, also known as Chisholme Loch. ‘Wester Loach’ and ‘Wester loch house’ must have been a cottage near here, where Walter Heatley was living in at least 1774–77.

the Wester Loft (thn-wes-tur-loft) n. name sometimes used for the Weaver’s Loft in St. Mary’s Kirk, also known as ‘the Ballie’s Loft’ – ‘…it was found therein specified that ye loft bewest the church door was allocat to the Mechanicks in ye toun as is att more length set down in Anno 1683 …’ [PR1717].

Wester Middle see West Middle

Wester Mill (wes-tur-mil) n. former name for a corn mill in Wilton Parish. It is unclear exactly where it was located, but it is possible it was the same place as Wester Burnfit Mill. James Scott was there in 1727 and 1729, George Lamb in 1751 and Archibald Irvine in 1759.

Wester Moormaw see Moormaw

westermaist (wes-tur-naist) adj., arch. furthest west (variant of westmaist; also wastermaist and wastermaist).

Western Bank (wes-turn-bawngk) n. bank based in Glasgow, which became the second largest in Scotland. The Hawick agent was Charles Kirk in the mid-19th century. The bank failed in 1857, ruining many people around Scotland, and was eventually taken over by the National Bank of Scotland.

Western Star (wes-turn-stawwr) n. one of 3 cricket teams set up in 1849, representing the western part of Hawick. The team only survived for a short time.

Western Tollbar (wes-turn-tol-bawwr) n. another name for Wester Toll.

Wester Nurseries (wes-turn-nur-su-reez) n. former nurseries between the New Road and the river, starting at the Cable Entry. The area was owned by the Duke of Buccleuch and used as a nursery for raising forest trees and shrubs by Dickson & Turnbull’s in the 19th century. The land was gifted to the town in the 1930s. Also called ‘West Nurseries’.

Wester Parkhill (wes-tur-pawk-hil, -perk-) n. former name for part of the farm of Parkhill, to distinguish it from Easter Parkhill. In 1678 Walter Chisholme paid the land tax there for the farm and mill, when it was valued at £100. James Turnbull was there in 1714 and James Scott in 1733. Robert Elliot and Robert Scott were there in 1774 and Thomas Elliot in 1781. By 1788 (and still recorded that way in 1811) it was valued at £66 13s 4d and owned by Thomas White, merchant in Jedburgh; however, £33 6s 8d of Chisholme Mill had been separated out and was then part of the Chisholme estate. William Rodger was farmer in 1797 and David Johnstone was living there in 1799. Cattle dealer Adam Scott was living there in 1841, as well as labourer George Richardson, and their families. By 1874 it was part of the estate of William Richardson Dickson of Alton (along with Easter Parkhill).

Wester Perk Hill (wes-turn-perk-hill) n. Wester Park Hill, hill just to the north-west of Branxholme East Loch, lying between Chapel Hill and Easter Park Hill, with the farm of Parkhill to the north-west. It reaches a height of 303 m. The farm of Wester Parkhill was nearby.

Wester Roughlee (wes-turn-rowch-lee) n. former name for a steading in Jedforest. It was recorded along with Midroughlee and Roughleeneuk in 1538 and 1539, valued at 20 shillings (it is ‘terrarem de Roucheles vocatarum Westir Roucheles’ in 1539; see Roughlee).

Westershielhope (wes-tur-sheel-hop) n. former name for lands in Jedforest, recorded as ‘Westirshellehoip’ in 1538 and ‘Westirscheilhop’ in 1539. It was among lands that passed from the Douglases to the Crown in about 1537, which had lain waste for the previous 20 years, with Walter Scott of Buccleuch accused of occupying it during that period.

Wester Swanshiel (wes-tur-swan-sheel) n. former farm in Hobbirk Parish, the western part of Swanshiel, the division happening around the early 17th century. In 1622 the lands were inherited by Adam Turnbull of Harsthaugh from his grandfather Hector. In 1643 the western part was smaller, and valued at £32 10s. Adam Turnbull was there in about 1663, when it was valued at £32 10s. The lands of ‘Wester Swanshil’ are recorded in 1683, when inherited by Gilbert Elliott from his father Archibald of Craigend. Thomas Turnbull was there in 1694. It was held by a branch of the Turnbuls until the late 18th century, being recorded belonging to John Turnbull in 1788. It was let along with the neighbouring
Wester Toll

Wester Toll (wes-tur-tól) n. one of Hawick's 4 toll houses, which was in use when the New Road opened. Its position is marked on Wood's 1824 map. A plaque marks its position near the Coble Entry by the High School. There was once a well there at the head of the Coble Entry. The earlier 'Auld Wester Toll' was also known as the Loan Toll, and was at 26 Loan (also called the 'Western Toll-bar' and other variants).

Westertoon (wes-tur-toon) n. Westertown, farmstead between Skelfhill farm and Foulledge.

Wester Weens see Wester Winds

Wester Wells (wes-tur-welz) n. former name for a farm that was part of the Wells estate in Rulewater, distinct from Easter Wells.

Wester Whitehaugh (wes-tur-whī'-uf) n. former name for the lands known as Whitehaugh.

Wester Winds (wes-tur-windz) n. former name for lands in the upper Teviot valley also called Weensland, situated near Weens Sike. They are mentioned in the 1686 confirmation of lands to the Scotts of Buccleuch and were at that time in the middle of lands possessed by Robert Grieve in Commonside. 'Wester Weens (in Hawick)' was valued at £179 according to a valuation of Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1707. The lands of 'Wester Weines' are listed as part of Commonside in the 1718 survey of Buccleuch lands. In 1811 'Wester Weens, acquired from Earl of Queensberry' was part of the Buccleuch estates, valued at £179 (see also Weensland).

Westfield Works (west-feeld-wurks) n. small knitwear factory on the left-hand side of Drumlanrig Square, at Nos. 27–28. It is run by William Lockie & Co. Ltd. It had previously been George Scott & Son.

West Fodderlee (west-fo-dur-lee) n. part of the lands of Fodderlee in the lower Rule valley, lying west of Easter Fodderlee, and south of Old Fodderlee. It was also referred to as 'Wester Fodderly' and was separated from East Fodderlee in the 17th century. It was owned by Helen Turnbull in the late 17th century, and after she married William Chisholme of Parkhill it passed to their son Mark. William Chisholme was recorded as owner in 1707 when it was valued (probably along with Ruletownhead) at £175. By 1788 it was owned by Barbara Chisholme and valued at £78 9s. Henry Oliver was farm steward there in the 1850s and 1860s. James Turnbull was tenant there in the 1860s. It was recorded being owned by David Henderson of Abbotrule in about 1874, and valued at £78 9s. The Bruces became tenants in 1887 and 'Mrs. Joan Wood or Bruce' is recorded as owner in the Land Tax Rolls of the end of the 19th century, when it was valued at £142. The farm is the location for the Sclaterford, where there was a skirmish between Lord Dacre's men and a band of Scots in 1513, with the Sclaterford bridge being located just to the south. There was probably a small threshing mill here, powered by water from a pond. In the fields to the south-east a linear cropmark was found in aerial photographs (see also Fodderlee; it is 'Wester Fodderly' in about 1874).

Westgate (west-gā') n. street leading out of Denholm to the south, passing the War Memorial and Westgate Hall and turning into Dene Road.

Westgate Haa (west-gā'-haw) n. oldest house in Denholm, at the corner of the main street and Westgate, essentially marking the south end of the village. The name was used to distinguish it from 'East Castle'. It was built in 1663 for Archibald Douglas, possibly on the site of a much older building, West Castle, which belonged to Gwy of Denum around 1300. The house measures about 17 m by 7 m and consists of 2 floors plus a garret (with a modern addition to the south-west and modern fore-stair). A lintel over the entrance on the north-east side bears the date 1663. A corner stone of the roof has a Douglas heart, and there are other carved stones on the exterior. The Douglas coat of arms and monogrammed initials of Sir Archibald and his wife Dame Rachel Skene are still carved over a fireplace inside. It may be the 'Denholme House' listed with 3 hearths on the tax records of 1694. In 1907 the upper level was given by the Palmer-Douglas family for use as a village meeting hall, with an outside staircase added. It was used for this purpose until the 1950s. It is now a 'Class A' listed building.

West Highchesters (west-hi-ches-turz) n. former name for the main estate at Highchesters, distinguished from the smaller estate of East
Westla

Highchesters. There were 11 communicants there in 1650, namely Robert Riddell, Maly Cowan, John Riddell, William Riddell, William Brash, Janet Robson, Bessie Riddell, Marion Riddell, Walter Gledstains, Margaret Wilson and Janet Brown. It was listed as ‘Wester Highchesters’ in 1788, when owned by Walter Scott of Harden. James Wilson was living there in 1792.

Westla (west-la, wes-la, -lu) adj., arch. a version of Welsa or Western. Used formerly to describe the half of the town west of the Slitrig.

Westlands (west-lindz) n. James (17th/18th C.) innkeeper in Hawick. In 1702 he was fined ‘for keiping of company drinking in his house, with the pyper playing, after the ringing of the tenn hour bell’.

Westlands (west-lindz) n. one of the newer houses on Sunnyhill Road.

West Lees (west-leez) n. farm just north of Hawick, between the A7 and Appletreehall. In the 16th centuries the lands were known as ‘Wester Moormaw’ and were held by John Scott, Vicar of Hawick from the 1530s, afterwards passing to his illegitimate son James. It was home of a branch of the Scotts in the 16th and 17th centuries. William Scott ‘in Lies, alias Milma’ was (sometime around 1600) listed by Scott of Satchells as one of the 24 ‘pensioners’ of Buccleuch. The lands here were part of Hassendean Parish until 1690 after which they fell within the bounds of Wilton. John Wilson was farmer there in 1841 (also spelled ‘Lies’, etc.; it is marked as ‘Westlies’ on Gordon’s c. 1650 map and Blaeu’s 1654 map, but as just ‘Lees’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

West Lees (west-leez) n. farm just north of Hallrule, which was one of the estates of Hob Kirk Parish, recorded before the Reformation. It was burned by Hertford’s men in 1545. James Turnbull held these lands in at least the period 1605 to 1616. It was included in the lands inherited by James Stewart of Nether Horsburgh from his father in 1634. William Turnbull was owner in 1643, when it was valued at £66 13s 4d. James Turnbull was there in about 1663 when it has the same value, which also continued in 1678. Robert and Thomas Caldwell were there in 1694. The lands were among those inherited by William Kerr of Abbotrule in 1680. Robert Buckham was Laird there in at least 1738–45. The farm became part of the estate of Wells in 1775. In about 1795 it was listed among parts of Hob Kirk Parish that were nearer to Bedrule Kirk than their own kirk. George Rutherford was tenant there in 1797. In 1811 it was still valued at £66 13s 4d, when owned by William Elliot of Wells. It was later owned by Sir William F. Elliott of Stobs. John Armstrong was tenant in at least 1841–1861 (also written ‘Westlees’; marked on Stobie’s 1770 map; it may be the ‘west leis of Nether Bullerwall’ recorded in 1562, is ‘Weast leas’ in 1545, ‘Westleyis’ in 1617, ‘Westlies’ in 1634, ‘West lies’ in 1663 and ‘lie Steedings de Westlies’ in 1680).

West Lilliesleaf (west-li-leez-leef) n. former name for lands adjacent to Lilliesleaf, probably the same as what was later called Riddell. This name, or ‘Wester Lilliesleaf’, was in use from the 12th century until the 16th century. The granting of lands here to Walter Riddell in the mid-12th century is one of the first known charters from King David I to a layman. The relief of these lands of James Riddell was gifted to Walter, son of Sir David Scott of Buccleuch. In 1636 the lands of ‘Wester Lillieslie’ called ‘Murieknow’, which lands are called Riddell, were inherited by Sir Walter Riddell of that Ilk from his father. In 1669 part of the lands of ‘Wester Lillislie lie Muirieknow now called Riddell’ were inherited by Sir John Riddell, as well as the remaining 6-pound lands of Wester Lilliesleaf, which were presumably not called Muirknow (it is ‘Westlillisleif’ in 1471 and ‘Wester Lelesleif’ in 1503).

westlin (west-, wast-lin) adj., poet. western, westerly, from or in the west – ‘Phoebus had sunk adown the westlin wave …’ [JTe], ‘…To view the bonny gowden screen, That hang alang the westlin sky’ [JTe], ‘Old people invariably talked of westlin and eastlin winds’ [HAST1902] (also written ‘wastlin’).

West Linton (west-lin’-in) n. town on the Lyne Water in the old county of Peeblesshire, known for its sheep markets, stone carvers and silver and lead mines. Two well preserved prehistoric burial cairns are in the hills nearby, as well as the remains of old silver and mining operations. A festival associated with the Whipmen, an old horsemen’s society, has been held most years in June since 1803. Population (1991) 1,157.

West Ludge (west-luj, -loj) n. former lodge house for Cavers estate, located by the main road near Deanbrae, at the end of a track leading to Cavers House. It is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, while today’s maps only show the wood called ‘West Lodge Covert’.

Westly Sike (west-lee-sik) n. stream in upper Liddesdale, rising on the western slopes of Larriston Fells and flowing roughly north-west to join the Larriston Burn.
West Mains (west-mânz) n. former name for lands owned by the Baron of Hawick on the west side of the Town. This was part of the demesne lands of the Baron, distinct from East Mains, which was to the east of the Town. Rather than being a specific ‘home farm’, this was just the name given to a set of lands. In a survey carried out for the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1718 its detailed outline is shown at that time; it was composed of 2 parts, the largest part bounded by Hawick Common, the River Teviot and the western edge of the Burgh lands, including Myreslawgreen and the Loan, while the smaller part was on the eastern side of the Loan, from Burnflat to about the Kirkwynd, and going all the way down to the Slitrig. Over time parts of the lands were sold to the Burgh or incorporated into neighbouring farms. In 1494 it was given (along with Crumhaugh) by James Douglas of Drumlanrig to his son and heir James; it is there valued at £5 ‘of old extent’. In the 1511 charter for the Barony of Hawick it is listed explicitly among the lands held ‘in property’ by the Baron. It is named in the 1547 Charter and had a boundary with the Common. It is also listed among the Baron’s properties in a promise of infeftment in 1559 and in the retour of 1572 for Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig. In 1590 there is a document of rental of the land by Sir James Douglas from Walter Scott, younger. It is described there as a ‘2 merkland’. It probably once formed part of the ‘demesne’ lands of the Baron, and is listed among the Baron’s property in the ratifying Parliamentary Act of 1594. In the 1663 Land Tax Rolls it was ‘possesst and wadset’ by Rev. Robert Cunningham, William Ruecastle, James Laing and Walter Scott at West Port. In 1686 it is described as ‘extending to eight husband lands’. In 1675 it was described as ‘extending to 8 husband lands, when there was a ‘wadset’ on it, and it is still recorded among the rental records of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1690. When surveyed in 1718 it consisted of 186 acres, mostly of ‘corn land’ and ‘moderately good but very stoney’. In the 18th century it was described that the tenants of these lands had similar privileges to the Common as the Burgess of Hawick. Based on the 1767 description of the Common it lay to the west of the Nipknowes by that time. It is unclear when the name ‘West Mains’ ceased to be used to describe lands – ‘Then east the martch dyke with Crumhaugh to the march with the Westmains of Hawick, and along the Westmains dyke down to the Burnfoord . . . ’[C&L1767] (it is ‘West Manys’ in 1494 and 1511, ‘West Manys’ in 1511/2 and 1514, ‘Vest Manys’ in 1514, ‘West Manis’ in 1559 and 1572, ‘West Manys’ in 1594, ‘West-maynes’ in 1615, ‘West Maynes’ in 1686 and ‘Westmains’ in 1767; there are many places of the same name elsewhere in Scotland).

West Mains (west-mânz) n. name of farm that was formerly part of the Cavers estate. It was once a centre for spinning. It is probably the West in Cavers Parish where William Douglas was tenant in 1745 and 1747. It is on Stobie’s 1770 map, located near the modern farm of Kinninghall. In at least 1794–97 the farmer there was Robert Hall.

West Mains (west-mânz) n. former name for lands in Lilliesleaf. John Scott held 3 pieces of land there, for which he received £40 Scots from another John Scott in Bewlie (it is ‘Vest Manes in Lillescleff’ in 1528).

the West March (tho-west-märch) n. the West March, consisting of Dumfries & Galloway and neighbouring areas on the Scottish side, generally held by the Maxwells. More specifically it consisted of the valleys of Esk, Ewes (although this was sometimes in the Middle March), Wauchope, Annan and Nith, along with part of Galloway.

West Mair Plantin (west-mär-plawn’-in) n. tree plantation between the road and the racecourse at Hawick Moor.

westmaist (west-mâist) adj., arch. furthest west (also wastmaist, watermaist and westmaist).

West Middle (west-mi-dul) n. farmstead in Cavers Parish, just south of Midgard. The name distinguishes it from East Middle. John Turnbull was there in 1694, William Dryden in 1704, Thomas Scott in 1716, William Shiel in 1719, another John Turnbull in 1723, Thomas Scott in 1726, John Douglas in 1744 and Thomas Douglas in 1788–90. Alexander Ferguson was farmer there in 1797 (it is ‘Westler Middle’ on Stobie’s 1770 map and still so marked on the Ordnance Survey map; it is ‘Westermidle’ in 1694, ‘Westmiddle’ in 1719, ‘Westermiddle’ in 1790 and ‘West Middles’ in 1797).

West Middles (west-mi-dulz) n. farm just south of Lilliesleaf. John Preston was there in the 1860s (there is no obvious connection with East Middle in Cavers Parish; ‘Westermiddles’ and ‘Eastermiddles’ are marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

West Mints (west-min’-i) n. former farm near Minto village. It was among the farms burned by the Earl of Hertford’s men in 1545.
the West Nurseries (θu-west-nur-su-reez) n. a former name for the land that became the Buccleuch Playing Fields, now forming the part of Wilton Lodge Park on the south side of the river, also called ‘Wester Nurseries’.

Weston (west-tin) n. Rev. Thomas (16th C.) Parson of Wilton recorded in 1567, perhaps serving until 1574, when he demitted. In 1567 he and Robert Scott of Thirlestane relieved Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme as surety for Archie’s Will in Gorrenberry and Sim Elliot in Dodburn; he was recorded there as ‘Maister Thomas Westoun’. Presumably the same ‘Maister Thomas Westoun, aduocat’ was mentioned in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, with Sir Walter still owing him for an account. Thomas, advocate, is recorded demitting the vicarage of Hassendean Parish in October 1576, and appears to have been recorded in that benefice from 1568; so he may have held the vicarage of Hassendean for 2 years after he was Parson of Wilton. He is probably the ‘Mr. Thomas Westoun, attorney’ who presented the briefs in Roxburgh Sheriff Court for the serving of heirs to David Scott and Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1569. He is probably the same ‘Maister Thomas Westoune, aduocatt’ who witnessed the 1568/9 bond between the Scotts and the Kers at Melrose. He may be the same as ‘Maister Thomas Westoun, advocat’ who was the notary for the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1574 and who prepared ‘And Inventare of Walter Scot of Branxholme’s evidentis’ in 1577 (also spelled ‘Westoun’).

west o the gate (west-ō-thā-gā) adv., arch. in a westerly direction, westwards (also ‘west the gate’).

West Port (west-pōr) n. original entrance to the town from the west and south-west directions, i.e. the Carlisle road. It was once known as the Townhead Port and situated at the foot of the Loan. Work was done on it in 1734. The old gate was removed around 1762, with a jutting stone at pavement level indicating its position, with a matching rybat stone in the Museum. It remained the main entrance to the town from the south until the New Road was opened in 1815. The roadway was widened in 1895, and the Loan/Beaconsfield Terrace junction altered in 1978. A plaque at No. 2 Loan was erected by the Callants’ Club in 1964 to mark the Toll location. The area was home of a branch of the Scott family in the 17th and 18th centuries. James Scott ‘Westport’ was Cornet in 1705. John Clerk was recorded ‘at ye westport’ in 1704, Adam Turnbull was merchant there in 1704 and Thomas Oliver was smith there in 1712.

Westport (west-pōr) n. nickname of Walter Scott in the 17th century.

West Port Hoose (west-pōr'-hoos) n. sheltered housing built on the site of the former West Port Church in 1971–73, at 19 Drumlanrig Square (also known as West Port Day Unit or West Port Sheltered Homes).

West Port Kirk (west-pōr'-kirk) n. church near the former western entrance to the town, at the upper left-hand corner of Drumlanrig Square. It was built in 1866 following the establishment of a Free Church Mission in 1855 (in the building vacated by the stocking-shop of Andrew Haddon. In the early days it was sometimes referred to as the ‘Territorial Church’, to distinguish it from the main Free Church in Town. The building was constructed in a plain Gothic style, and a church hall was added in the 1890s. The congregation merged with St. George’s in 1956 and its War Memorials were moved to that church. The building was used for a while as a factory, bought by the council in 1961 and demolished to build sheltered housing in 1971. A school associated with the church, taught by Mr. Fowler, ran from 1865–75, when it was merged with Drumlanrig. Kirk Session records for 1859–92 are in the National Archives. A roll of the ministry is: R.R. MacQueen 1869–72; Robert Fordyce 1872–93; Alexander Westwater 1894–98; Horace Walker 1939–44; Tom Morton 1945–51; ... (not to be confused with the West End or ‘Green’ Kirk).

West Port Mission (west-pōr'-mi-shin) n. branch of the Free Church established in Walter Haddon’s old stocking-shop in the Fore Raw in 1855, supported by William Kedie and others. It led to the establishment of the West Port Church, which was erected in 1866.

Westport Road (west-pōr'-rōd) n. old name (on Wood’s 1824 plan, for example) for what became Beaconsfield Terrace.

Westrop see Wilstrop

West Riddell (west-rī-dul) n. farm on the former Riddell estate. Thomas Orr was farmer there in the 1860s.

Westshiels (west-sheelz) n. farm in Southdean Parish, near Lustruther, now in the middle of Dykeraw Plantation. Patrick Oliver was tenant there in 1794 and 1797, with William Telfer the shepherd in 1797. It was farmed by Andrew Common from at least the 1840s to 60s. Part of a polished stone axe was found on the farm about 1974.
West Teviotdale Farmers (west-teev-yi’-däl-fer-murz) n. West Teviotdale Farmers’ Book Association ran a library, based at 50 High Street, in the late 19th century, and presumably was associated with the Agricultural Society.

Westside (west-sid) n. street in Denholm that runs along the west side of the Green, and continues south of Main Street.

Westside Mill (west-sid-mil) n. stockmg-machine mill in Denholm, on the west side of the Green, behind Greenview. It dates from the late 18th century. It has 3 storeys and small windows for lighting each machine, and represented an early stage in the development of textile factories. It ceased operating as a textile mill in the late 19th century and later became a warehouse for Scott the joiners, then a barn for a nearby farm. Around the 1980s it was converted into a house, preserving the building (it has been locally known as ‘The Old Mill’ and ‘The Stocking Shop’ and has also been referred to as ‘Denholm Mill’, confusing it with the old corn mill near the river).

West Sooth Croft (west-sooth-kroft) n. former name for a piece of land in Minto Parish. ‘Wester Southcroft and house’ was valued at £43 18s 1d in 1779 and it is ‘West South Croft and House’ in the Land Tax Rolls of 1811. It is ‘Wester south croft’ in 1779, among the lands inherited by Rev. Robert Elliot, and listed separately from Sooth Croft Park.

West Stewart Place (west-stew-ur’-plis) n. street off Wilton Hill in the area known as Stewartfield, with houses built in 1879, and named after Rev. James Stewart. It contains Kirklands Hotel, Abbeyfield House and Wilton Bowling Club.

West Teviotdale Agricultural Society (west-teev-yi’-däl-aw-gree-kul-chu-rul-su-sI-i’-ee) n. local farmers’ organisation established by James Douglas of Cavers in 1835. It included the parishes of Ancrum, Ashkirk, Bedrule, Bowden, Cavers, Hawick, Hobkirk, kirkton, Lilliesleaf, Minto, Roberton, Southdean and Wilton, with its annual meeting being held in Hawick on the 1st Thursday in August. It existed along with Teviotdale Farmers’ Club through the late 19th and early 20th centuries. Its office was listed as Bridge House in 1852, with James Oliver as Secretary and Treasurer. It may have become more of a horticultural society than a farmers’ club. It retained the name for a piece of land in Minto Parish.

West Teviotdale Farmers (west-teev-yi’-däl-fer-murz) n. West Teviotdale Farmers’ Book Association ran a library, based at 50 High Street, in the late 19th century, and presumably was associated with the Agricultural Society.

the Wey-hoose (wI-hoos) n. the Weigh House, formerly occupying the lower level of Hawick’s Tolbooth. In 1727 it was ‘now possessed by Henry Orrok and others, tacksman of the customs’ when the Council decreed that it be leased. In 1786, when the Duke of Buccleuch gave money towards the erection of the new Town House, it was stated when the Duke of Buccleuch gave money towards the last surveyor of weights and measures was a tenant of the feudal system. In the 19th century the last superintendents were James Kennedy and then George Hunter.

weys (wiz) n., pl., arch. a weighing machine, scales (noted by E.C. Smith; also written ‘weiz’ and ‘weis’).

Whack (whawk) n. nickname for several of the Scott family who were milliners at 47 High Street in the early 19th century.

whacked oot (whawkd-oo) pp., adj., arch. tired, exhausted, dead beat.

Wha Daur Meddle Wi Me? (wha-dawr-me-dul-wi-mee) n. Border ballad about ‘Wee Jock Elliot’. The refrain is a Scots version of the Latin motto of the royal coat of arms ‘Nemo me impune lacessit’. Apparently the tune was played when the Liddesdale men marched to Hawick to muster for the ‘False Alarm’ in 1804. When Dr. John Leyden heard of this in a letter read to him at his sick-bed in India he leapt out of bed to sing the song with wild and enthusiastic gesticulations – ‘Oh, ma name it’s wey Jock Elliot, an’ wha daur meddle wi’ me?’ [T].

wha-div-ee-caaed (wha-di-vee-kawd) n. whatchamacallit, something whose name has been forgotten, thingumajig, ‘... unless its a box that they’re nintent whatdivvee caud comes in’ [We].

wham (wham) pron., poet. whom – ‘... ane peeple whom I haena kennet sall ser’ me’ [HSR], ‘Blisset is the man whom thou chusist ...’ [HSR].

Whames (whāmz) n. former farm in the Borthwick valley, between Whithope and Todshawhaugh. It is probably the seat of Adam of ‘Wammes’, recorded around the 1190s when lands adjacent to his were granted to the Priory of St. Andrews by Richard Lovel, Lord of Hawick. It is probably also the seat for ‘Henry (or perhaps John) del Whommes’ who was on the 1303/4 inquest into inheritance of the half barony of Wilton. It was owned by Robert Scott of Muihrone and Whames in the late 15th century, probably passing to his son, George Scott of Borthaugh. Robert Scott was recorded as tenant in 1501. It is listed in 1511, 1572, 1594 and 1615 among the lands that the Baron of Hawick held ‘in tenandry’. This may be the lands called ‘Quhonnis’ in 1528 when passed from John Scott of Borthaugh to his brother Walter. It is possibly the ‘Whelley’, which was burned by the English along with Bruxholme and Whitcheasters in 1533/4. The farm was among those belonging to Scott of Buccleuch, which were burned by a band of Englishmen and Kers in late 1548. In 1549 the tenant was William Scott, and other residents were ‘Willie’ Scott ‘called of Todshawhaugh’, John Scott and William Hall. The year before the farm had been among those whose crops were destroyed just before the harvest by a group of Englishmen supported by the Kers. Scott of Satchells lists ‘Scot of Whames’ as one of the 24 ‘Pensioners’ of Buccleuch, and descended from the Northhouse Scotts (this applying to some time around 1600). In the 1627 valuation of Hawick Parish it is estimated to pay ‘40 merks, vicarage 8 merks’. In 1650 it is recorded as ‘Quhames’ on a list of communicants of the Borthwick and western Wilton Parish; 8 ‘communicants’ were recorded there, namely William Laidlaw, William Stewart, John Cook, Patrick Cook, Marion Hardie, Katherine Laidlaw, Marion Scott and Margaret Pott. It is likely the same as the ‘Quhalmes’ which were part of ‘Weyneslands’ in the Barony of Hawick, subject of several writs of 1654-55 in the Buccleuch papers. In 1672 and 1673 it was the ‘Rowne of Whelms’, formerly possessed by William Scott, which was leased to Ninian Elliot along with Todshawhill. In the 1686 confirmation of the lands of the Scotts of Buccleuch it is recorded that this farm was ‘sometime occupied by Robert Langlands in Todshawhaugh’s’. It is also recorded that Robert Laidlaw was tenant about that time (unless this is an error for ‘Langlands’). Originally part of Hawick Parish, it became part of the new Parish of Roberton in 1689/90. In 1691 it was recorded that ‘Whelms dissolved from this rental and annexed to the new rental of the Lordship of Hawick’, suggesting that it was administered along with Hawick properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch thereafter. It was listed among the Buccleuch properties in 1707, when valued at £124 5s 8d. It was surveyed in 1718 along with other Buccleuch properties, when it consisted of 105 acres, bounded by the Borthwick Water, Todshawhaugh, Todshawhill and Whithope; it was also stated that there were trees along the Whithope Burn there, but no farmhouse at that time. It was leased along with Todshawhaugh from Buccleuch Estates in 1744 and 1751 by James Grieve, by Walter Grieve in 1792 and by Robert Scott in 1802. It was still valued at £124 5s 8d in 1788 and 1811. It is uncertain exactly where this farm was, but it came between Todlashaunders and Whithope in the 1686 rental list. The small stream ‘Holm Sike’, to the east of Whithope is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, and may be the same name (it is ‘Qhames’ on a 1650 parish map, is marked ‘Whonomes’ on Blaeu’s 1645 map, between Todshawhaugh and Whithope, close to the Borthwick, and ‘Whelmis’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey; it is ‘qhamyss’ in 1493, ‘Qhammis’ in 1501, ‘Qhommys’ in 1502, ‘Qhomys’ in 1505/6, ‘Qhomyss’ in 1508/9 and 1511, ‘Qhamymys’ in 1510, ‘Qhomymys’ in 1517, transcribed as the ‘Qhamynys’ in 1549, ‘Qhomis’ and ‘Qhumyss’ in 1572, ‘Qhamysses’ in 1594, ‘Qhammys’ in 1615, ‘Qhuomys’ in 1627, ‘Qhomlyss’ in 1654/5 and 1686, ‘Qhomys’ in 1663, ‘Whelmes’ in 1686, ‘Whelmis’ in 1677 and 1744, ‘Whelmes’ in 1705 and 1751, ‘Whelms’ in 1707, ‘Helms’ in 1802 and ‘Whelms’ in 1811; the name could be related to Scots ‘wham’, meaning a broad hollow through which a stream runs).

Whames (whāmz) n. Adam (12th C.) recorded in about the 1190s in a charter of Richard Lovel, Lord of Hawick, when he granted lands adjaecnt to those of Adam of Wamnes to St. Andrews Priory. Henry (13th/14th C.) recorded as ‘de Hommes’ in 1296 when he paid hommage to Edward I. He was also recorded as ‘Henry del Whomonnes’ on the 1303/4 inquest into inheritance of the half barony of Wilton. However, there seems to be confusion over whether he was John or Henry. It seems likely he was descended from the earlier Adam. His seal attached to the Ragman Rolls shows a stringed hunting horn and the name ‘S’HENRICI DE WOVMVS’. It seems likely that his lands were Whames in the Borthwick valley, but there are probably other possibilities.

Wharton (whar’-in) n. Sir Thomas 1st Lord Wharton of Helagh (c.1495–1568) son of Sir Thomas, he was Deputy March Warden under Lord Scrope. In 1542 he described a plan to ‘burn the towne of Awyke’ in West Tevidell in an attempt to punish the rievers of that area. The plan was further discussed in 1543/4, but it is unclear if actually happened. However, he did send a force to attack Liddesdale at that time, burning 19 houses, killing 2 men, and taking 3 prisoners, along with 240 head of cattle and a great amount of goods; as a result Hermitage Castle was sent pieces of artillery by the Scots. He was made Warden of English West March in 1547. He also fought at Solway Moss. In 1553 he was made Deputy Warden General of all the Marches under the Duke of Northumberland. He was later Deputy Warden to the English Middle Marches under the Duke of Northumberland. He was made Warden of English West March in 1547. He also fought at Solway Moss. In 1553 he was made Deputy Warden General of all the Marches under the Duke of Northumberland. He was later Deputy Warden to the English Middle and East Marches until his death. He married Eleanor Stepleton of Wighill and was succeeded by his son Sir Thomas. His tomb can still be seen in Kirkby Stephen Church, although the locals still blame him for demolishing the village of Wharton because it was a blight on the view from his house.

Whaton (wha’-in) n. William (17th/18th C.) fiddler in Hawick. In 1712 he witnessed a baptism for John Scott ‘Whitegates’. He was recorded in 1718 when rebuked by the Hawick Session. He apparently rode through the town in a military style outfit, including a sword, boots, spurs and red clothes, with James Oliver (the Town Officer) playing before him, scaring some of the townspeople. He was ordered ‘to be summoned when in ye toon’, suggesting he lived elsewhere and in 1719 was ordered to appear before the Presbytery (the name may be ‘Wharton’, ‘Whitton’ ‘Whitson’ or similar).

whaup-nebbit (whawp-ne-bee’, -bi’) adj., arch. having a nose like a curlew, hook-nosed.
Whaup o’ the Rede

Whaup o’ the Rede (whawp-ô-thu-reed) n. epic poem published by Will Ogilvie in 1909, subtitled ‘A Ballad of the Border Raiders’. It tells the story of a child who was accidentally taken along with the spoils of a raid into England by Walter Scott of Harden and his men. The story derives from an old tradition that Mary Scott ‘the Flower of Yarrow’ raised such a child, who became a poet and wrote several of the Border ballads. The book was reprinted in a facsimile edition by the Will H. Ogilvie Memorial Trust in 2019, to mark the sesquicentenary of the poet’s birth – ‘Well did they name thee ‘Whaup’, I trow, For a very whaup o’ the moor art thou’ [WHO].

Whaupshaw (whawp-shaw) n. isolated farmstead in the Borthwick valley, near the head of Borthwickbrae Burn. William Inglis was shepherd there in 1851 and 1861. It may also have been known as Milsingtonshiel (it is ‘Whap Shaw’ in 1851).

whaur (whawr) ade., arch. where – ‘Whaur Teviot, Gala, or Jed’s bonnie streams …’ [WS]. ‘…Rypit the reid-cheekt aipples whaur they hung’ [WL] (not particularly Hawick pronunciation).

the Wheathole (thu-whee-hôl) n. name used up until the end of the 18th century for the area corresponding to Trinity Gardens, named presumably for being a hollow in which wheat and other crops once grew. It was owned by William Turner in 1767, in a description of privileges to Hawick Common enjoyed by various tenants. The East End Meeting House (later East Bank Church) was built there around 1780 – ‘The Burgher congregation assembling at Wheathole was the second dissenting body which obtained a footing in Hawick’ [WNK] (sometimes just ‘Wheathole’ or ‘the wheat hole’).

whee-ch (wheech) v. to move quickly, remove suddenly – ‘she went wheechin past on her bike’, ‘hei wheeched eet away afore A coulds git a drink’.

wheeg (wheeg) v., arch. to jog, frisk, dance about – ‘…coonjert wui its moween an its skeletin-maigs, aa the braw folk wheegin an dancin?’ [ECS].

Wheelans (whe-linz) n. James, C.B.E. ‘Jim’ (?–2004) born in Hawick, he graduated in law from Edinburgh University in 1935. He became a solicitor, ultimately being President of the Law Society of Scotland. He became Lieutenant-Colonel during WWII, being Commandant at Brussels after its occupation, for which he was awarded the M.B.E. His private legal career started in Galashiels. He became involved in the Law Society, and served as President 1974–76, for which he received the C.B.E. (the surname is a variant of Whullans).

the Wheel Causeway (thu-wheel-kawz-wä) n. old road, said to be Roman, running from Jedburgh over Swannie Moor, through Rulewater and Southdean Parish and on into Liddesdale and England. It was known by locals as the ‘Wheel Causey’. The road may have been a continuation of the Maiden Way, running from Lancashire to Bewcastle, then through Deadwater to Wolfelee, the track thereafter becoming unclear. It is suggested that it was used by the Romans, but was built by the Britons. In some earlier records it is termed the ‘Via Regia’ (i.e. King’s Way). It was used by Edward I in 1296 when he marched with his army from Roxburgh to Castleton and back again, referred to there as ‘Wyel’. It was a route later used in rieving days, and was first referred to as the ‘Wheel Causeway’ perhaps in 1533. Part of it was also used as a drove road in the 17th and 18th centuries. Sections can still be made out, but because of the multiple uses over many centuries, it is impossible to trace the age of specific parts. In Southdean Parish the route north passes through Wauchope Forest via Wardmoor Hill and then appears to separate into 3 paths, one going slightly west to cross the eastern slopes of Wolfelee Hill, another proceeding more northward and the third going further east over Highlee Hill and Lustruther farm. Other branches are said to follow along each side of the upper Jed Water, one past Westshiels and Dykeraw Tower and the other over Millmoor Rig. Sections are also hard to trace because there were actually multiple alternative routes in places, e.g. on Causeway Rig in Southdean Parish, where there are at least 2 sets of tracks (it is marked ‘ye wheele Cawsey’ on Sandison’d c.1590 map; the origin of the name may be the Old English for ‘wheel’, but it seems unlikely that this was because the track was suitable for wheeled carts, as has been suggested).

the Wheel Causey (thu-wheel-kawz) n. former name for the Wheel Causeway, used by locals in Southdean Parish – ‘He also says that some stones of the ‘wheel causey’ were torn up to build the faulds’ [GT].

the Wheel Kirk (thu-wheel-kirk) n. former church in Castleton Parish, which may have once been the main one in the area. It was situated near the Wheel Causeway and not far from Deadwater at the head of the Liddle. Apparently Edward I spent the night here when he was were listed in 1632 among those owned by the Earl of Buccleuch. However the lands of ‘Quheilkirk’ and ‘Quheilland’ were inherited by Sir William Scott of Harden from his father Sir Walter in 1642. ‘Over and Nether Whilkirk’ was listed (along with Wheellands, Wormscale, Abbotsike and Abbotshaws) among lands inherited by Mary Scott of Buccleuch in 1653 and by her sister Anne in 1661. ‘Kirk Wheelland’ was listed along with ‘Nether Wheell’ in the 1663 marriage contract of Wheel Rig (wheel-rig) n. ridge in the northern part of Castleton Parish, between the Wormscale and Peel Burns, and with the Wheel Causeway running across it. It was ‘Quheilrig’ in 1623 when Adam Coltart was there. An old enclosure there is of unknown date. A little further north, at Wheelrig Head there is a linear earth-work, running about 650 m. The area was once used as a meeting point for shepherds in the area, who would gather there twice a year to exchange stray sheep (also written ‘Wheelrig’).

the Wheenge (thu-wheeng) n. sometimes nickname for Sir Thomas Henderson used by his workers.

the Wheesht (thu-wheesht) n., interj. silence, quiet, hush, shush – ‘wheesht, wull ce no?’, ‘haud

wheest (wheest) interj., arch. silence, shut up, shush – ‘Wheest – now what’s that? [Both spring their weapons – Wat looks through the loop hole’ [JEDM], ‘...there’s often matters being discussed that we ken noughts about, and ee wad be best to keep wheest and no’ let on eer ignarance’ [JHH] (see the more common wheesht).

Whelpinside (whel-pin-sid) n. former farm in Feu-Rule, i.e. Hobkirk Parish. The precise position is uncertain, but it appears to have been west of Fernieeles and adjacent to Broonsike. In 1413 there is a charter by Robert Colville, Lord of Oxingham to William of Symington for his lands at ‘Nether Quelpinsyd’. And the dispute over the superiority of the Barony of Feu-Rule in 1561 and 1562 lists ‘Quholpinsyde’.

whereanent (whær-a-nen’) adv., arch. concerning which – ‘...the Baillies and Council hereby impower Bailie Rouscastle and Walter Scott of Crumhaugh to concert with Robert Paisley, wright, anent the rebuilding of the Bailie’s seat ...’, whereanent they have hereby full commission [BR1734].

wherebie (whær-bee) adv., poet. whereby – ‘Thy arras ar sharp in the hearth o’ the King’s enemies, wherebie the peeples fa’ anæth thee’ [HSR].

where’re (whær-rur) contr. where are – ‘where’re ee gaun?’.

Where Slitrig and Teviot Meet (whær-sli’-rig-in-teev-yi’-nee’) n. song by Tom Ker, performed by him at functions of the Teviotdale Amateur Cycling Club and other venues (e.g. the Callants’ Club dinner in 1905), but then forgotten. It was resuscitated by Adam Grant junior, saved from memory, and notes of his father’s. It was sung again at the Callants’ Club smoker of 1949, performed by William Oliver. It was not included in the 1957 song collection, perhaps being discussed that we ken noughts about, and ee wad be best to keep wheest and no’ let on eer ignarance’ [HSR].

Where Teviot Rins (whær-teev-yi’-rinz) n. song with words and music by Ian Seeley, written for Alison Seeley in 1994, and first sung by her at the 1514 concert in 1995. It is the 2nd of Seeley’s 5 Hawick songs, and the accompaniment being sparser than for the others.

wherewi (wer-wi) prep., poet. wherewith – ‘Wharewi’ thine enemies hae reprochet, O Lord; wharewi’ thay hae reprochet the fitstepps o’ thine anaintet’ [HSR].

Whatever or No (whe-thur-or-nó) n. nickname for Bailie John Hardie’s brother.

whew (whew) v., arch. to howl, yelp – ‘...As heil bruisselt and whewed the bullet-shells, and bang’t the drum away’ [DH] (cf. yuoot).

whey (wī) n. whey – ‘And bonny scab, bairn-high, Whiter than whey, On a gurdy simmer’s day Wi’ a tear in its ei’ [DH] (note the pronunciation).

Whey Brae (wī-brā) n. former name for a road out of Denholm – ‘...scourin’ roond the hoose ends for the Whey Brae, where he was sittin’ whus’lin’ on them, an’ then for the Law’ [BCM1881] (the location is uncertain).

whey-sey (wī-sē) n., arch. a tub in which milk is curdled (in [HAST1910]).

the which (thin-which) adj., pron. which – ‘The which day the Baillies and Council unanimously appoint the two present magistrates of Hawick ...’ [BR], ‘The qch day Robert Welsh in Fahnash ... confess his guilt of fornication with Isbel Batie ...’ [PR1720] (once used in a relative adjectival sense with the definite article; also shortened in various forms; see quhich and whilk).

whidder (whī-dur) conj., poet. whither – ‘Whidder is they beloefet gane, O thou fairest amang wemen?’ [HSR], ‘Whidder the clans gae up, the clans o’ the Lord ...’ [HSR].

whiff (whīf) interj. euphemistic ‘hell’, used to express scorn or disagreement – ‘ee er whiff’ (cf. the more common whuff).

whig (wīg) n., arch. a member of the Presbyterian Church – ‘Now learned Sir, put on your wig, The story’s done, and I’m a whig’ [JR] (formerly the word was applied to those who signed the National Covenant, later to those who were anti-Jacobite and eventually came to be an informal synonym for Liberal in politics).

whigmaleerie (whīg-ma-lee-ree) n., arch. a vaga- gary, whim, a fanciful piece of ornamentation (see also kickmaleerie).

whiles (whīlz) adv. sometimes, occasionally, at times – ‘...Tho’ whyles mysel’ I tak a pouring, A wee bit gill; An’ whiles wi’ Meg – but there’s nae curing O’ ilka ill’ [JR], ‘For ane that lo’ed wi’ frends frae ower the main Auld mem- times { `Now learned Sir, put on your wig, The story’s done, and I’m a whig’ [JR] (forwhileom (whi-lom) adv., poet. sometimes, at an earlier time – ‘Where Hazledutha’s crystal tide Winds through its rural vale, Whillan an ancient hermit staid, The subject of my tale’ [JTe].

whimmer (whi-mur) v., arch. to whimper.

whin (whin) n. gorse, furze, thorny shrub with yellow flowers – ‘I hear the linties in the whins Where Ettrick rins’ [JBS], ‘I follow Teviot frae the heid, I ken each bend and whin . . . ’ [JCa], ‘The skylark sings his praises loud Above the whins, so sweet, The rising Heap Hills smile and laugh Where happy couples meet’ [WFC].

Whinfield (whun-, whin-feeld) n. former farm near Synton, east of Ashkirk. John Scott was farmer there in 1797. John Nichol (d.1828) was tenant there. Thomas Hobkirk and family were there in 1841. It is described in the 1863 Ordnance Survey Name Book as consisting of a row of thatched cottages, one storey high, with a blacksmith’s shop attached, and occupied by farm labourers. A farm of the same name near St. Boswells was owned by the Scotts of Harden until sold off in about 1920 (the name is presumably related to gorse; it is marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

whinger (whing-ur) n., arch. a short stabbing sword – ‘ . . . in Edinburgh Gib Elliott boght ane quhingear and brought it to the deponer and Robin Young . . . ’ [SB1624], ‘ . . . much more primitive . . . than the sword . . . such as . . . ane whinger’ [BR], ‘ . . . whink (whinkk) n., arch. a stifled bark, yelp – ‘A little, wee creature, . . . coming straight for him, whyles gie’in a whink o’ a greet’ [HAST1922], v., poet. to yelp, bark in a suppressed manner – ‘Butte aye he ran with whinkin scream, Till he drappit in a swoone’ [JTe].

Whinington Sike (whin-ing-in-sik) n. stream in the upper Liddesdale valley, rising on Windy Knowe and running roughly westwards, just to the north of Thorlieshope.

Whimney Cleuch (whi-nee-kloo-ch) n. small stream in the upper Borthwick valley, joining the river on the north side between Meadshaw and Craik. It is fed by Moss Sike on the north side. The farm there was listed in the 1718 survey along with Craik. The lands there were leased from the Buccleuch Estates by Walter Scott of Merrylaw in 1744. The farm of ‘Whimnycleugh’ is valued along with Craik and Meadshaw at about £667 in 1785 and 1802, and owned by the Duke of Buccleuch. In 1779 it was among the lands liferented by Walter Scott of Harden to Charles Scott, younger of Woll. The stream is fed by Moss Sike (it may be the same as Wormiecleuch; it is ‘Winniecleugh’ in 1718 and ‘Whinniecleugh’ in 1744; the name presumably means the gorse-clad stream; it is probably unrelated to Whinny Park) whinny (whi-nee) adj. covered with gorse – ‘The Millers Knowes are green again, And whinny banks their gold display . . . ’ [WP].

Whinny Park (whi-nee-pawrk) n. former name for a farmstead near Whitchesters. The lands of part of the estate of the Scotts of Harden. In 1779 it was among the lands liferented by Walter Scott of Harden to Charles Scott, younger of Woll. The lands of ‘Mabenlaw and Highchests Whinny-park’ were valued at £327 13s 4d in 1788 and in 1811 at £312. It seems easy to confused
Whisgills (whiz-gilz-ej) n. farm south of Newcastleton, on the Tinnis Burn. It was once home of a branch of the Armstrongs. In 1541 the lands of ‘Over Guhisgillis, Nether Guhisgillis, Purvanen et Vtnomound’ were valued at 9 merks and tenanted by Bartolomew and Ninian Armstrong. Adam Armstrong of Whisgills is recorded in 1581, ‘Lancie’ of Whisgills was one of the Armstrongs accuses by the English of raiding near Newcastleton in 1587 and the ‘the Whisgills’ was included among Scotsmen accused of another raid in 1588. ‘John of the Whisgills’ (probably also an Armstrong) is recorded in 1601. Thomas Wilson was possessor of both Over and Nether Whisgills in 1632, with a separate entry for just Whisgills under the possession of Thomas Kerr of Ancrum. John, son of William Wigham in Nether Whisgills is recorded in 1642. Robert Oliver and Alexander Wilson were recorded as Nether Whisgills in 1698. Robert Blaiklaw and William Armstrong in 1698. John Murray was farmer at Whisgills in at least the period 1788–91. Thomas Murray was farmer there in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls and still farmer in the 1830s. James Murray was farmer in 1861 and David Murray was there later. The New Statistical Account describes in 1839 how there was a cairn where ‘the quantity of stones is immense, and they are mostly of very large size’, with a 5 foot high standing stone nearby; this could be the cairns and standing stones noted on modern maps to the south of Tinnis Hill, just over the border into Dumfriesshire. The top stone of a quern from near the farm is in Hawick Museum (it is ‘Quhisgillis’ in 1581, ‘Wheisgills’ in 1632, ‘Quhisgills’ in 1642, ‘netheruhiisgiels’ in 1694 and ‘Whisgles’ in 1797; it is ‘ye whiskills’ on a map of Liddesdale drawn up by Sir William Cecil, c.1561. and is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Whitsgills Edge (whiz-gilz-ej) n. hilly region on the boundary between Roxburghshire and Dumfriesshire, to the south-west of the farm of Whisgills (it is marked on the 1718 Buccleuch survey of the farm of Nether Whisgills).

Whist (whisht) interj. silence, be quiet – ‘Whisht! I hear his doggie barkin’, – Yon’s his bonnet on the hill’ [JT], ‘...Whisht, baurnies, whisht! while frae her e’en Tears on the heart-stane fa’’ [TCh] (variant of wheeshet).

Whist drive (whist-driv) n. a group of people playing progressive whist. This was a very popular form of entertainment in the early-to-mid 20th century. There were whist nights organised by several of the mill social clubs etc., and it was possible to play almost every night. There were prizes for the winners and often a booby prize also. It was effectively replaced by bingo from around 1960.

Whit (whi’ adj., arch. white – ‘Payd to James Simson for lintseed oyle and whit lead got to the weather-kok ...’ [BR1731] (see also quhyt).

Whit (whi’, whit) n., arch. short form of Whitsunday.

Whitacres see Whiteacres

Whita Monument (whi-ta-mo-new-min’) n. 100 ft obelisk erected to Gen. Sir John Malcolm in 1835 on Whita Hill above Langholm. It is locally referred to as simply ‘the Monument’.

Whitcastle Fort (whi’-kaw-sul-für’) n. hill-fort just to the south of Denholmhill farm, on the north-western slopes of Ruberslaw. It has been mostly destroyed by Denholmhill Quarry, but a roughly 60 m long rampart on the north side of quarry still exists. It is unclear if the site is a genuine hill-fort, or a medival fortified house.

Whitcastle Hill (whi’-kaw-sul-hil) n. hill between Chapelhill farm and Braxholme Easter Loch, containing several earthworks and settlements, which are extremely clear in aerial photographs. It appears to have formerly been known as simply ‘Castle Hill’. The ridge on the east side of the summit is the location for a particularly good example of Iron Age earthworks, consisting of a fort and 6 smaller earthworks. The fort is about 65 m by 40 m, with double ramparts and an entrance at the south-west. The other earthworks are of a range of sizes and shapes, some appearing contemporary with the fort and some later. There is also a linear earthwork round the ridge to the north, with a sharp bend in it. A finger ring found here was said to be perhaps Roman. There is another earthwork south-east of the summit, on a ridge sloping to the north-east, much denuded by ploughing. It is probably the Whitchester-holm (whi-ches-tur-öm) n. farm tenanted by Philip ‘Faulo’ (probably ‘Fawlaw’) about 1510 when 4 horses were stolen from there by associates of John Dalgleish. The place is recorded as ‘Quhitchester-holme’, and it seems reasonable to associate it with Whitchesters, since Branxholme is mentioned in the same document and Philip Fawlaw is also recorded as tenanted there. In 1507 it is ‘Whitlaw’ which was probably nearby).

Whitchester see Whitchesters

Whitchester (whi-ches-tur) n. farm in Berwickshire, not to be confused with Whitchesters near Hawick. It lies on the north side of Black Hill, about 8 km north-west of Duns. The farmhouse was converted into a mansion in the late 1800s (it is ‘Whytchester’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map).

Whitchester-holm (whi-ches-tur-öm) n. farm tenanted by Philip ‘Faulo’ (probably ‘Fawlaw’) about 1510 when 4 horses were stolen from there by associates of John Dalgleish. The place is recorded as ‘Quhitchester-holme’, and it seems reasonable to associate it with Whitchesters, since Branxholme is mentioned in the same document and Philip Fawlaw is also recorded as tenanted there. In 1507 it is ‘Whitlaw’ which was probably nearby).

Whitchesterhouse (whi-ches-tur-hoos) n. recorded as ‘Whitchesterhouse’ in 1545 on the list of farms and towers in Teviotdale that were burned by the Earl of Hertford’s men. It is listed right before Timpendean, suggesting this is a place in Bedrule Parish.

Whitchester Lane (whi-ches-tur-län) n. street in Newcastleton, off the east side of North Hermitage Street, just before Whitchester Street.

Whitchester Retreat (whi-ches-tur-rec-tree’) n. Whitchester Christian Retreat and Guest House, located at Borthaugh House (and not Whitchesters, confusingly).

Whitchesters (whi-ches-turz) n. farm in the hills to the south of Branxholme, with a hill-fort nearby. It was surveyed in 1718, along with other properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch; at that time it consisted of 243 acres, bounded by Alton Croft, Hawick Common, Newbigging, Raesknowe and the River Teviot. The lands were held by the St. Michael family from before 1183 until about 1445, when they were forfeited. In 1383 it was included in a lists of lands from which rentals were paid to the Ward of Roxburgh Castle. In 1399 Elizabeth St. Michael, widow of John Ker, resigned her lands there to have them granted to her new husband, John Maxwell of Pollock. In 1455 John of St. Michael was attested to have inherited his father’s lands there, valued at £20 Scots (and so they may have been in dispute). The lands were granted by James II to the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1455, along with some annual rents in Hawick. The lands were held of the superior on payment, if asked, of a silver ‘denarius’ on the Feast of Pentecost. Technically it was for a while a ‘Lordship’, within the Barony of Branxholme. The traditional Lairdship of Whitchester (usually not plural) was transferred to the Barony of Branxholme in 1463, and is now held by the Duke of Buccleuch. In 1470 the lands were promised as part of a marriage contract (between the heir of Douglas of Drumlanrig and a daughter of Scott of Buccleuch), to be held in ward and relief by William Douglas of Drumlanrig and his heirs. In 1484/5 Robert Scott of Allanhaugh had a charter of the lands and Lordship from his father David of Branxholme. He still held the lands in 1500 when he surrendered them to Walter Scott of Branxholme (his nephew) as security for a loan; the lands of Whitchesters are mentioned, along with ‘the husband lands of the town of Quhitchester’. Adam Scott was recorded there in 1502. The Scotts of Whitchesters are described in 1507 as possessing a tower in Hawick ‘between the bridges’, one of these presumably being the ‘Auld Brig’, but it is a mystery what the other one could have been. In 1511 the lands were listed among those held ‘in tenandry’ by the Baron of Hawick, i.e. Douglas of Drumlanrig; this continued until at least 1615. It could be that the Douglases and Scotts both held part of the lands at the same time, since it was included in the list of lands inherited by Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme (from his great-uncle David Scott) in 1574. The farm was among those around Branxholme that were burned by the English in 1533/4. The lands were valued at 20 pounds Scots in 1553/4 and in 1627 were ‘estimated to 16 bolls in stok, 4 bolls parsonage, 7 lb. 10 sh. vicarage’. The farm there was long a tenanted remains of a settlement, internally about 47 m by 87 m and containing 3 possible hut scoops. On the south-eastern slopes, just north of the road, about 300 m south-west of Chapelhill farmhouse, are the remains of a settlement, known as ‘the Clints’. About half a kilometer to the west, and also just north of the road, is another similar settlement on an oval rocky knoll. It measures about 32 m by 27 m and has an unnamed tributary (possibly Whitcastle Sike) of the Newmill Burn passing round its west side. There are also archaeological remains on the neighbouring Todshaw Hill, and a little to the south was the location of a fort (the name is likely related to the nearby ‘Whitehope’ and ‘Whitrig’ as well as the former ‘Whitlaw’ which was probably nearby).

Whitchesters Bank

Whitchesters Bank (whi-ches-turz-bawngk) n. former place name near Whitchesters. In 1790 willows were planted there, presumably to serve as a shelter for livestock.

Whitchesters Cottage (whi-ches-turz-ko'-eej) n. cottage on a farm track to the east of Whitchesters farm.

Whitchesters Hill (whi-ches-turz-hil) n. hill just to the south-west of Whitchesters farm, reaching a height of 259 m. On the summit is a memorial cairn for Nan Lyle, unveiled in 2011. The granite toposcope that caps the cairn indicates the directions of local landmarks, as well as distant countries where work was done by the Borders Exploration Group.

Whitchesters Moss (whi-ches-turz-mos) n. boggy area by Sea Croft, above Whitchesters farm, originally being part of Hawick Common. It is mentioned in the 1767 description of the boundaries of the Common. In the 1777 Division of the Common, the south side was given to Robert Oliver, John Laing and Thomas Turnbull, while the rest went to the Duke of Buccleuch.

Whitchester Street (whi-ches-tur-stree') n. street in Newcastleton, off the east side of North Hermitage Street, opposite Montagu Street.

Whitchester Treis (whi-ches-tur-triz) n. former name for lands in the Barony if Whitchesters. In 1541 Robert Scott of Allanhaugh infested his son William in his 6 merklands there, as part of a marriage contract (it is ‘Quhyisester treis’ in 1541).

White (whi”) v., arch. to whistle, pare – ‘Dinna gaun an whet ma kitcheen taibl, callant! That kneif’s a keindih daingeriss waipin thay’ve gien ee’ [ECS] (also written ‘wheet’; the past tense is whate or whut and past participle whutten, as noted by E.C. Smith).

White (whi”) n. Alexander ‘Sandy’ (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘Sandy Quhyt in Foultonn’ in a letter of 1602 listing the tenants of the lands of Fulton in Bedrule Parish. Andrew (1819–49) youngest son of miller John. He worked as a baker. He married Christian Hogg, sister of George Hogg, manufacturer in Hawick; she died in 1882. Their children included John, Ann S. and Andrewina. He was buried in St. Mary’s Kirkyard. Archibald (16th C.) recorded as ‘Archibald Qhuite’ in 1531 on a list of the occupiers of the lands of Newton in Bedrule. Claire (1988–) last person to be born in the Haig Maternity Home. George (16th C.) farmer at Weens, recorded as ‘George Quhytis’ when his barn and yard are listed among the disputed lands in the Barony of Feu-Rule in 1562. George (17th C.) tenant at Fulton in Bedrule Parish according to the Hearth Tax roll of 1694. George (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living in Denholm in 1716. He married Jean Scott in Cavers in 1709 and their children included John (b.1710), Margaret (b.1712), George (b.1714), Walter (b.1716), James (b.1718), Robert (b.1721) and Adam (b.1724). His son may be the George who married Margaret Scott in Minto in 1738.
George (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Parkhill in 1753, 1763 and 1767. He married Janet Gledstains in Roberton in 1759. He was probably father of Isobel (b.1753), Janet (b.1760), Betty (b.1763) and Jean (b.1767).

George (18th/19th C.) farmer at Falside in Southdean Parish, recorded on the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was owner of 4 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He was an active member of the Relief Kirk in Jedburgh. James (15th C.) resident of ‘aula de Roull’ or Hallrule. He was recorded in 1493 when William Douglas of Cavers was fined for not producing him at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. He also failed to appear in 1494/5 and Douglas was fined again. James (16th C.) farmer at Borthwickshiels. He was recorded about the 1540s when John Scott of Roberton was surety for him. James (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, when it included Hassendean. In 1686 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Crinklaw. He married Helen Miller in 1685. He may also be the James who witnessed a baptism for Robert Thomson in Burnfoot in 1697.

James (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He married Marion Douglas and their children included: Marion (b.1739); Walter (b.1741); Archibald (b.1743); Jean (b.1745); and Jean (again, b.1747). The witnesses in 1741 were gardener Robert Ker and ‘late Baillie’ James Scott. James Oliver (1830–1901) son of Hawick miller John. He married Janet Wallis (or Wallace) Pringle in 1854. They emigrated to Australia, where he worked as an early photographer (from about 1862). He later moved to Otago, New Zealand, where he lived for a while at ‘Hawick Street, Roxburgh, Teviot valley’. James Pollock ‘Jimmy’ (1905–2010) Hawick man, known for his quiet and unassuming nature. He reached his 100th birthday in 2005, repeating the earlier feats of his mother and sister. He worked for 51 years in Lyle & Scott’s knitting department. He married Janet Telfer and had one daughter, Kathleen. He was a founder member of the Probus Club and spent much of his time in his Wellogate allotment. He died at the age of 104, perhaps being the oldest ever Teri. John (17th C.) recorded in Ashkirk Parish in 1651 when he witnessed a baptism for James Vogan. He married Janet Kedie and their children included Thomas (b.1651) and William (b.1653). John (d.c.1683) tenant in Belses Mill. His will was recorded in 1683. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Elizabeth Scott and their children included Marie (b.1690). The witnesses were Andrew Scott and Andrew Riddell. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Chesters (Southdean) according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John (18th C.) breeches maker in Hawick. The death of a child of his was recorded in 1790. John (1774–1836) miller of Hawick Corn Mill. In 1797 he married Ann Scott (1778–1852), who was sister of Dr. William Scott. Their children included: John (b.1798), who was also miller; James (b.1803); Andrew (b.1819), who was a baker. He is probably the ‘John White Mealman’, whose unnamed child died in 1808.

John (1798–1866) eldest son of miller John, he was also proprietor of Hawick Corn Mill. He inherited a large sum of money from an uncle, Dr. William Scott, and took a lease on Midshiels. He is recorded as farmer at Midshiels among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1840. He may be the John recorded as a meal dealer on Back Damgate in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 he is recorded at Midshiels, and is there in 1851, farming 157 acres and employing 4 labourers. In 1820 in Wilton Parish he married Isabella Oliver, said to be daughter of the miller of the Roughheugh Mill, but more likely daughter of John Oliver, from Ashikirk. Their children included: Anne (b.1821), who married Andrew Haddon; John (b.1823); William (b.1824), who joined the Navy; Isabel (b.1827); James (b.1830), who married Janet Wallace Pringle and emigrated to Australia; George Tucker (b.1833); and Oliver (b.1839). His wife died in childbirth in 1839. In 1841 he secondly married another Isabella, daughter of Thomas Wemyss (who worked at Wilton Mills); she was his 1st cousin. They had 2 daughters: Janet, who died in infancy; and Elizabeth Scott (b.1842), who married James Church and lived in Langholm. He is buried in St. Mary’s Kirkyard. Leonard (16th C.) holder of a particate of land on the north side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. Robert (d.bef. 1453) Burgess of Hawick. He must have died just before the ‘instrument of sasine’ in which he gained lands in Hawick from John Turnbull in October 1453, sasine being given to his widow Janet. His name is written ‘Wayte’ and the ‘tenement’ was on the south side of Hawick, between those of John Chapman and John Scott. Robert (15th C.) resident of Fulton recorded at the 1494/5 Justice-aire in Jedburgh. He was listed as ‘Roberto quahte de fowlton’. George Shiel in Bedrule had remission for stealing 4 of his ewes from Bedrule. He was surely related to William of Fulton, who also had sheep stolen at the same time. Robert (17th/18th C.) C.) resident of ‘Todshawk’. An unnamed child of his was baptised in Roberton Parish in 1721. Robert (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He married Ann Ruecastle in 1754 and their children included: Betty (b.1756); John (b.1757); and Jane (b.1760). The 1757 baptism was witnessed by the ‘Whole Congregation’. He could be the Robert, son of Walter, born in Hawick Parish in 1713. Robert (19th C.) historian of Northumberland. In Vol. II of ‘The local historian’s table book, of remarkable occurrences, historical facts, traditions, legendary and descriptive ballads’ he wrote an introduction to James Telfer’s ‘The Gloamyne Buchte’, describing some Borders stories relating to fairies. S. (18th/19th C.) owner of land in Wilton Parish, recorded on Wood’s 1824 map. His land was located roughly where part of the Mayfield scheme was built. Simon ‘Syme’ (16th/17th C.) from Alemoor. In 1623 along with William White he acted as caution for ‘Hob Wigholme, sum tyme in Ailmire’. Simon (b.1777) son of John and Agnes Larson. He was a weaver in Hawick. In 1800 he married Janet, daughter of Michael Anderson. His daughter Agnes died in 1801 and an unnamed daughter died in 1808. His father-in-law died in 1823, aged 80. Thomas (15th C.) resident of Bedrule. At the 1493 Justiceaires held in Jedburgh he produced a remission for common theft before his existing remission. His name is recorded as ‘Thomas quhite in bethroull’. Thomas (18th/19th C.) merchant in Jedburgh. In an assessment of the valuation of Roxburghshire in 1788 (and again in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls) he is recorded as owner of Wester Parkhill in Roberton Parish, valued at £66 13s 4d. Thomas (1787/8–1860s) from Southdean Parish, he was joiner at West Port. Probably the same Thomas was listed as joiner at Overhall among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835. He was recorded at about 3 Loan in 1841 and the back house of 8 Fore Row in 1851. He was on the ‘Middle row’ as a joiner in Slater’s 1852 directory, but also on the ‘Front row’ as a wheelwright. He married Mary Oliver, who died in 1867. Their children included: John; Isabel, who married James Rae; William, James, Barbara, Agnes and Thomas. Walter (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick and Wilton. He married Jean Ker (from Hawick Parish) in 1709; he was there recorded being from Wilton Parish. Their children, baptised in Hawick, included: James (b.1710); Janet (b.1712); Robert (b.1713); Adam (b.1716); Walter (b.1718); Adam (again, b.1720); Helen (b.1723); Jean (b.1725); John (b.1727); James (again, b.1728); and William (b.1731). The witnesses in 1710 were the 2 Walter Paisleys in Weensland, in 1712 were miller Walter Paisley and weaver David Miller, in 1718 were wright Francis Gledstains and smith John Scott, and in 1731 were David Miller and John Scott. Walter (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He married Bettie Kedie and their children included Walter (b.1765) and Andrew (b.1767). Witnesses in 1767 were the whole congregation. Walter (d.bef. 1779) resident of Hawick Parish. He was already deceased when his daughter Margaret died in Hawick in 1779. William (15th C.) weaver, probably in Bedrule. He was recorded at the Justice-aires in Jedburgh in 1493. Along with George Turnbull of Bedrule and David Waugh, also in Bedrule, they had remission for stealing cattle from Pringle in Pilmeur, associating with John Turnbull of Gatehousecote, comming with the ‘traitors of Leven’ and accompanying the former Duke of Albany; his surety was George Turnbull of Bedrule. His surname was given as ‘quhite’. Perhaps the same William ‘de foltoun’ was recorded in 1494/5 when George Shiel in Bedrule had remission for stealing 11 of his ewes from Bedrule. He was surely related to Robert who was also a Fulton resident in 1494/5. William (16th/17th C.) farmer in the ‘heid of the parochin of Hawick’ recorded in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme as owing him money for crops and teinds. He may have acted as Sir Walter’s factor or chamberlain in the outer parts of Hawick Parish. He could have been ancestor of the later William from Muselee. William ‘Will’ (16th/17th C.) from Muselee. He acted (along with Syme White from Alemoor) as security for Robert Wigholm of Braidhaugh in 1623. In the Circuit Court records his name is written ‘Quhytt in Muslie’. William (18th C.) gardener at Minto in 1778 and 1779, when he was working for Sir Gilbert Elliot. His surname was written as ‘Whitt’. William (18th C.) Skinner in Hawick. He was listed among the subscribers to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). William (18th/19th C.) farmer at ‘Clesspool’ in Southdean Parish, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses. He was probably tenant of the lands associated with Clesslee Peel. William (18th/19th C.) tenant of Denholm Mill and later Whinfield, he was one of the founders of the Relief (Allars) Kirk. William (b.1800/1) dyer in Hawick. In 1841 he was on O’Connell Street and was at 16 Buccleuch Street by 1861. His wife was Ann and their children included Janet, John,
Ann S., James, Isabella and Elizabeth. William (b.1813/4) shoemaker in Hawick. He was listed on the Howgate in Pigot’s 1837 directory and on Silver Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. He was living on Silver Street in 1841 and 1851. His wife was Janet from Hobkirk, and it appears that they had no surviving children. Rev. William Spranger (19th C.) Episcopal minister of St. John’s in Jedburgh, where the church was consecrated in 1844. He started a mission in Hawick in 1846. The mission proved so successful that the master of St. John’s School in Jedburgh was transferred to Hawick as the new Episcopal minister the following year. William (1824–53) son of Hawick miller John and Isabella Oliver. He was in the Navy, his last ship being the S.S. Inflexible. He is said to have caught some disease and returned to Hawick to die, his pregnant wife disappearing to London afterwards. His wife was Eliza Dearden. William ‘Willie’ (19th/20th C.) served with the Royal Engineers in WWII, being attached to the 1/4th K.O.S.B. His campaign medals were gifted to the Callants’ Club (formerly written ‘Quhite’, ‘Quhyt’, ‘Whyt’, ‘Whyte’, ‘Wyt’ and variants).

Whiteacres (whi’-á-kurz) n. former farmstead on the western side of Whiteacres Hill, south of Kaimend farm (marked ‘Whitacres’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Whiteacres Hill (whi’-á-kurz-hil) n. hill south-east of Hawick, beyond Kaimend, reaching 275 m and containing an ancient enclosure on its slopes. It is also described as part of the Kaimend Hills, and sometimes called the ‘second Kaimend’ (it is ‘Whitacres Hill’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Whiteburn (whi’-, whi’-burn) n. farm on the main A6088 between Chesters and Southdean, near where the White Burn joins the Jed Water. The Manse for Southdean Kirk is situated just to the east. John Amos was farmer there in 1851. This could be ‘the Burne’ listed in 1571/2 among places where William Oliver of Lustruther was pledge for the Olivers there.

White Burn (whi’-burn) n. stream in Southdean Parish, rising near Highlee Hill and flowing north to join the Jed Water near Chesters. A field near the upper part of the stream is shown on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, and the area also contains rig and furrow lines and lazy beds (the stream is labelled ‘Whyburn’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Whitecastle Fort (whi’-kaw-sul-för’) n. earthwork just south of Denholmhill farmhouse. It has been mostly destroyed by the large quarry to the south, with the only surviving feature being a rampart about 200 ft in length. It is unclear whether this is a mediæval homestead or an older hill-fort.

Whitecastle Hill (whi’-kaw-sul-hil) n. name sometimes used for Whitecastle Hill near Chapelhill farm.

Whitecastlepark (whi’-kaw-sul-pawrk) n. former name for a farmstead in Cavers Parish, situated on the Dean Burn to the west of Denholmhill, in roughly the same location as the modern Todlaw (it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

White Cleuch (whi’-klooch) n. stream that rises on Harden Moss and Mabonlaw Moss and flows in a southerly direction. It is also labelled as Marchelyton Burn on the Ordnance Survey map, as it continues past Mabonlaw farm to join the Harden Burn south of Harden Glen. The farmstead of Whitecleughside was formerly along its banks.

Whitecleuchside (whi’-klooch-síd) n. former farm in the Borthwick valley, just west of Mabonlaw. It was on the west side of the White Cleuch, a burn that flows past Mabonlaw to join the Harden Burn just above Harden Brig. It is shown on draft maps of the neighbouring parishes in 1650, with 2 ‘communicants’ recorded there, namely Walter Fairgrieve and Maly Richardson. It was part of Wilton Parish until Roberton was created in 1689/90. William Elliot was recorded there in 1727 and Robert Turnbull in 1761. In 1841 mason William Elliot and family, along with Charles Scott and family were living there (also spelled ‘Whitescleuchside’, ‘Whiteclough-side’, ‘Whitscleughside’, ‘Whytcleuchside’, ‘Whytcleuchside’, etc.; it is ‘Whitecleuchside’ on a parish map of 1650).

Whitecloak (whi’-klök) n. nickname of Sir William Scott of Kirkurd.

White Coomb (whi’-koom) n. craggy hill rising 821 m above the Grey Mare’s Tail, just over into Dumfries & Galloway.

the White Dyke (thu-whi’-dik) n. ruined dry-stone wall around Hermitage Castle, probably once the boundary of the deer-park. It starts at the Hermitage Water between the village and the Castle, running uphill, then along Green Sike, turning west across the southern slopes of Hermitage Hill ending near Coldwell Snab. It is about 5 ft high and 4 ft thick and built of limestone blocks in a different style from the local farm walls of later times. It has been much robbed.
of stones, and hence its full extent is hard to ascertain. In its interior are other walls and ditches that are probably a deer trap.

White Ersed Nannie \( (\text{whi}-\text{ersd-naw-nee}) \) n. nickname of Agnes Turnbull.

white-faced \( (\text{whi}-\text{fasd}) \) adj. having a white face, in distinction to 'black-faced' – 'An all-round increase of at least 4d. per lb. for whitefaced wool' \[HEx1917\].

Whitefield \( (\text{whi}-\text{fleld}) \) n. farm in the Yarrow valley. The 'Yarrow Stone' is here, near the main road, turned up by the plough at the beginning of the 19th century, along with some bones. 2 other nearby stones are probably related, the 'Glebe Stone' and the 'Warrior's Rest'. There were also formerly about 20 large burial cairns on the moor above, and it appears that the site was used for burials from the Bronze Age through to early Christian times.

Whitefield \( (\text{whi}-\text{fleld}) \) n. former name for lands in Minto Parish that were owned by Lord Minto. In 1779 (and also 1811) there are 4 pieces of land listed separately (valued together at £190): Quarter of Whitefield House and North Croft Park; Langlands and Quarter of Whitefield; Howden and Quarter of Whitefield; and Quarter of Whitefield and House. It was among the lands formerly called 'Minto Townhead', which were differentiated by Rev. Robert Elliot from 1779 (it is 'Whitefield' in 1780).

Whitegates see Whiteyetts

the White Hart \( (\text{thi}-\text{whi}-\text{hawr}) \) n. 19th century hostelry at 31 High Street until replaced by the National Bank Building about 1870. It had a thatched roof and the proprietor at one time was Mr. Lake (although that could be an error for 'Leck'). The property there was labelled 'Turnbull' on Wood’s 1824 map. Robert Leck was publican there in 1841 and 1851. It was also known as 'the Buck Inn'.

Whitehaugh \( (\text{whi}-\text{tuf}, \text{whi}-\text{tuf}) \) n. farm and mansion house beyond the Dean, named after the white flowers (daisies etc.) which grow on the level parts near there. The existing house was built in 1822, but there were earlier structures in the same place, with the Scotts of Whitehaugh living here for several centuries. The road passing here used to be part of a drove road, avoiding Hawick on its way to the Borthwick valley. David Scott was granted the lands of Whitehaugh in 1479 and the estate was in the family for (on and off) about 400 years. Walter of Whitehaugh was recorded in 1488 as one of the heirs of Sir David Scott, although the precise relationship is unclear. John Scott 'de quihalch' is recorded in 1493 and John Scott was mentioned as tenant there in 1501 and 1502. Walter Scott of Whitehaugh sold the estate to his maternal uncle Robert Scott of Headshaw in the early 17th century. Robert’s son sold the lands in 1623 to lawyer Andrew Hay, who sold them to Walter Scott of St. Leonards in 1656, and he sold them to his nephew Walter Scott of Headshaw in 1671. The 1643 Land Tax Rolls 'Scott of Headshaw’s Lands, being Wester Whitehaugh' being valued at just under £450, while 'Scott of Park’s Lands, being Easter Whitehaugh, or Wester Heap' were valued at £200. There were 13 'communicants' recorded there in 1650, namely Thomas Scott, John Scott, William Scott, James Scott, Thomas Mitchell, Alexander 'Aikeneid', Janet Robson, Marion Scott, Margaret Easton, Bessie Easton, Agnes Thorburn, John Bell and Bessie Scott. James Scott of Whitehaugh is recorded paying £200 in land tax there in 1663. Scott of Whitehaugh paid the land tax for both these lands and Wester Heap in 1678, with joint value £648 10s. 5 separate households were listed in 1694, with Robert Brown as tenant; in Hawick 'Leddie Whithaugh' was taxed on 2 hearths for a house on the west-side. William Scott of Whitehaugh paid tax on 17 windows there in 1748. The first Seccesion services in Hawick took place here in about 1770. In 1788 'Whitehaugh, now called Wester Whitehaugh' was owned by John Scott of Whitehaugh (as well as Easter Whitehaugh), and valued at £448 10s; John Scott of Whitehaugh was still listed as owner on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. John Hume was there in 1797. Walter Scott, Esquire, was there in 1841. The last of the family died in 1852, when the lands became part of Stiches estate. John James Scott Chisholme was listed as owner in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874. A circular stone pot lid from here is in the Museum – 'Sall I come skirtin' the braid muiirs When the gloamintide is still; And meet the track aboon Whitehaugh Or the road by Chapelhill!' [WL], 'We’ve roamed far o’er the countryside, But the grandest to be seen Is the burn that takes our fancy, Frae the Whitehaugh to the Dean' [WFC] (also formerly spelled 'Whithaugh', 'Whythauch', 'Whithauche', 'Whiteauch', 'Whithaugh', etc.; it is 'Quhithauch' in 1488, ‘quihalch’ in 1493, ‘Quhithauch’ in 1501, ‘quihalch’ in 1502, ‘Quhithauch’ in 1510, ‘Quhithauch’ and ‘Quhithaucht’ in 1580/1, ‘Quhithauch’ in 1619, ‘Quhthauch’ in 1627, ‘Whythauch’ in 1648, ‘Whythaugh’ in 1692, ‘Whythawgh’ in 1721 and ‘whythaugh’ in 1724; it is marked on a 1650 parish map as ‘Whithauche’, is on Gordon’s c. 1650 map as ‘Whythauh’ and on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Whiythauch’.
Whitehaugh

Whitehaugh (whi-tuf) n. farm in the Liddel valley, between Castleton and Dinlabyre. It is easily confused with the more significant Whithaugh, a former seat of the Armstrongs.

It was surveyed in 1718, along with other properties owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch, when it covered 148 acres, bounded by lands of the Laird of Dinlabyre, Kirndean, Cocklaik and a common (on the north). It included a small piece of land on the east side of the Liddel Water and the farm-house is shown close to the modern Whitehaugh Ford. The land was said to be ‘much damned by the water, and the pasture is sorry land in general’. It appears to be the place recorded as ‘Whytthauch’ on the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale (given the places it is listed near). It was then valued at 10 shillings and 8 pence and tenanted by James Armstrong. Given that it was then associated with the Armstrongs, it may be that the 2 places in Liddesdale with essentially the same name were once connected. Will Armstrong possessed the lands in 1632. It is probably the ‘Whithaugh’ where Thomas Armstrong was tenant in 1694. It is possible this was the ‘Little Whithaugh’ listed on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, with Thomas Mather as tenant. John Telfer was farmer there in 1797. John Ballantyne was shepherd there in 1835. Gilbert Telfer was gamekeeper there in 1861. There is now a row of 19th/20th century cottages there, but there was an earlier farmhouse in the same vicinity (it is ‘Whytthauch’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map, ‘Wheatheauh’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and is shown on Stobie’s 1770 map as ‘Wheatheauh’; it is ‘Whetthauche’ in 1632, ‘Wheatheauh’ in 1797 and ‘Wheatheauh’ in 1861).

Whitehaugh Aisle (whi-tuf-Il) n. isolated memorial at Whitehaugh farm, which is the burial place of the last 2 Scotts of Whitehaugh, Walter and James.

Whitehaughbrae (whi-tuf-bræ) n. former lands that were owned by a branch of the Scott family. They were once Crown lands in the Ettrick Ward of Selkirkshire (and hence presumably unrelated to Whitehaugh in Wilton), probably associated with ‘Whitehillbrae’ on modern maps. ‘Volle Chesholme Quhithauch bray’ was recorded in 1540/1. In 1541 the wester side of ‘Warm-wod’, ‘alias Quhithauch Braa’ was occupied by Walter Scott in Synton, but claimed by Andrew Murray of Blackbarony, paying £24 yearly. Also ‘Quhitchill Bra alias Cathmurlee’ was tenanted by Thomas Chisholme, paying £35, with 3 steadings and the mill set by Patrick Wright, Chamberlain to the Forest. George Caverhill in Quhithauchbrae is recorded in 1581/2. Thomas Scott was the first Laird at the end of the 16th century, passing the lands to his son Walter, from whom they were inherited by a cousin, Thomas of Salenside in 1621. This could be the ‘quithalch braa’ where Thomas Thomson was recorded in 1494/5 when he contributed a horse to the itinerant court held in Selkirk (incorrectly written ‘Whitehaughbrae’ by Keith Scott, it is ‘Quhitehaughbraes’ in 1621).

Whitehaugh Cottages (whi-tuf-ko’-ee-jeez) n. group of cottages on the left-hand side of the road just before Whitehaugh farm. There were 2 families there in 1841.

Whitehaughmains Slack (whi-tuf-mänzslawk) n. pass to the east of Wiltonburn Hill and south-west of Whitehaugh farm (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Whitehaughmoor (whi-tuf-moor) n. farmstead north of Whitehaugh, reached by the ‘Forty Fitts’ track. Andrew Chisholme lived there in 1841. There are remains of 5 rectangular structures and a later sheepfold about 500m to the north-west. Aerial photography has also shown at least 4 rectangular enclosures about 1.2 km north-west of the farm stead ing.

Whitehaugh Moor (whi-tuf-moor) n. area of moorland around Whitehaughmoor farm.

Whitehaugh Park (whi-tuf-pawrk) n. alternative name for the main house at Whitehaugh.

Whitehaugh Road (whi-tuf-rōd) n. street built in the Dean in 1971 along the road leading to Whitehaugh farm (although the road was popularly given this name long before the houses were built).

Whitehaugh View (whi-tuf-view) n. part of the Longbaulk housing development, constructed in 1970 and named for the view of the Whitehaugh area across the valley.

Whitehead (whi’-heed) n. James pseudonym of Dr. Dixon. William ‘Bill’ (b.c.1800) from England. He was said to be among the ‘finishers’ who came to Hawick in about 1836, following John Wilson going to the Rochdale area to learn about weaving flannel. He was listed as a ‘Fuller Journeyman’ in 1841, with his brother John having the same job; by 1851 he was a ‘Fuller Miller’. In 1841 he was living at Wilton Path-head and in 1851 at Roadhead. By 1861 his widow was living at 4 Tannage Close. His wife was Nancy and their children included John, Betsy, Martha and Janet.
White Hill

White Hill (whi'-hil) n. hill just south-east of Hawick, with a triangulation pillar and height 301 m. Note that this is a common hill name, including 5 others (listed separately) and another to the west going into Selkirkshire.

White Hill (whi'-hil) n. hill above the Dod Burn, to the west of Penchrishe, reaching a height of 397 m. It contains a linear earthwork (probably an agricultural boundary) running from the head of Pen Sike to the north-west for about 350 m. Another pair of earthworks cross the south-west shoulder of the hill, connecting a tributary of Py- atknowe Sike with the Dod Burn. There are also 3 other overlapping linear earthworks, although none seems connected with the hill-fort on the southern spur. Some of the earthworks were formerly associated with the Catrail, but they are of a different character. The hill-fort appears to have had a later homestead built on it; it measures about 60 m by 45 m, with double ramparts and a ditch. The homestead built inside is about 45 m by 30 m, with a hut circle and hut scoop inside that.

White Hill (whi'-hil) n. hill between Cogsmill and Earlside, reaching 299 m. It contains an earthwork consisting of 3 ramparts and with a linear earthwork to its south-west, as well as cultivation terraces on the north-west slopes.

White Hill (whi'-hil) n. hill to the east of Penchrishe and south of Stobs, reaching a height of 311 m. It should not be confused with the more prominent hill to the west of Penchrishe. On its north-east side is some kind of enclosure.

White Hill (whi'-hil) n. hill behind (i.e. to the south-west of) Shellhill, reaching 474 m.

White Hill (whi'-hil) n. hill in Craik Forest.

White Hill (whi'-hil) n. hill in Southdean Parish, reaching a height of 262 m and containing a hill-fort. Aerial photographs show extensive rig lines of various types surrounding the entire hill.

White Hill (whi'-hil) n. hill between Lin- dean and Bowden, reaching a height of 323 m and topped by a triangulation pillar.

Whitehillbrae (whi'-hil-brä) n. former farmstead between the farm of Dodburn and Dodburn Filters, on the western slopes of White Hill. ‘Archie Elliott callit Possettis’ was recorded as tenant in 1574, when listed among men accused of being thieves who were to be removed from their farms. Gilbert of Stobs purchased 5 merks of land there in 1622 (without prejudice to Gavin of Brugh’s infeftment) from Robert Elliot of Red- hugh, along with Dodburn and the rest of the lands of Winnington. Walter Scott was the tenant there on the 1694 Horse Tax rolls. George Pott (ancestor of the Potts of Caerlenrig, Dod, Hoscote and Todrig) was there in the early 1700s. Archibald Tait was tenant in about 1760. James Sibbald (the publisher) had the lease of the farm there for a few years until 1779. In 1788 it was valued (along with Newton) at £4 57 s 4d, being an extensive farm on the Eliott of Stobs estate. It was still valued along with Newton at the same amount in 1813. It was occupied until the 1930s. The remains of the cottage and stone dyke enclosures are still visible (marked on Stobie’s 1770 map; it is ‘Quhittilbray’ in 1574, ‘Whithilbray’ in 1622, ‘Whithillbrae’ in 1708 and ‘Whitehillbrae’ in 1760).

Whitehillshiel (whi'-hil-sheel) n. farmstead in Castleton Parish, south of Saughtree and east of Burnmouth farm. It may correspond roughly to Dykecroft, as marked on Blaeu’s c.1654 map. The top stop of a quern found there is in Hawick Museum.

Whiteholm (whi'-hörm) n. farmstead in South- dean Parish, on the side road from the A6088 to Hass on the A68. There are remains of an enclosure and signs of ancient cultivation there.

Whiteholm Sike (whi'-hörm-sik) n. small stream in the upper Borthwick valley. It rises near White Holm, southwest of Howpasley Hope.

Whitehope (whi'-tup) n. farm in the Yarrow valley, just west of Yarrow village, with standing stones and the Yarrow Stone nearby. These were Crown lands in the late 15th century, being leased to the Ranger of Yarrow for his fee. It was still crown property in 1541, occupied by Robert Scott of Howpasley, paying £24 yearly. In 1562 Scott leased the lands to John Dalgleish in Deuchar for 5 years. Dalgleish was still there in 1582 when the farm was attacked by a gang of Armstrongs and their followers. It was surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718. There were Ballantynes there in the 19th century – ‘... And Yarrow lay dark at Whitehope’s feet Like a warrior’s blade on his winding sheet’ [WHO] (there are several other Whitehopes elsewhere; formerly spelled ‘Quhilthop’, ‘Quhitehop’, ‘Quhitehope’, etc.).

Whitehope see Whithope

Whitekirk (whi'-kirk) n. former name for lands in upper Liddesdale, probably adjacent to Cliffhope Burn and Abbey Sike. In about the 1530s Scott of Harden was granted the lands of ‘Over and Nether Clifhousip, Quhyletkirk and Whitelaw

Quhyteland, Ermscleuch and Abbotisykes’. It may be related to the ‘White Stones’, which is marked near Saughtree Grain on the modern Ordnance Survey map. However, it seems more likely this is a transcription error for the relatively nearby lands of Wheelkirk and Wheellands.

Whitelaw (whi'-law) n. former farmstead on the Blindhaugh Burn, to the east of Acremoor Loch (marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Whiteknowe (whi'-now) n. former cottage in Liddesdale, by the side of the road between Toftholm and Netherraw.

White Knowe (whi'-now) n. hill lying to the west of Stobs, just before Barnes Loch, reaching a height of 339 m. On its north-eastern spur, called Newton Hill, are remains of a couple of settlements. Aerial photographs have also shown signs of cord rig here.

White Knowe (whi'-now) n. hill in southern Liddesdale, near the boundary with Dumfriesshire, lying between Windy Edge and Whisgills Edge.

Whitekno (whi'-litd) n. former name for lands near the Cliffhope Burn to the north of Saughtree. It is ‘Quhyteland’ in about the 1530s when the Abbot of Jedburgh granted a set of lands to the Scots. This is probably an error for ‘Wheelland’, lands attached to the Wheel Kirk.

Whiteknewe see Whitlaw

Whitelew see Whitlaw

Whitelew (whi'-law) n. former place name in Melrose Parish, probably corresponding to the modern ‘Whitlee’ (the origin is probably Old English ‘withig hlaw’, meaning ‘willow hill’ and is first recorded about 1200 as ‘Wythelaw’; there are several other places with the same name, e.g. near Duns and near Peebles, as well as others like ‘Whitlaw’ and ‘Whitelee’).

Whitelew (whi'-lew) n. Alexander (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Alexandrhum Quhitlaw’ in 1508 when he witnessed the sanseine for Adam Hepburn inheriting his father’s Lordship of Liddesdale. He could be the same Alexander who witnessed a charter for Archibald Whitelaw, Archdeacon of St. Andrews in 1493. Andrew (15th/16th C.) witness to the 1505 charter of Boomrawn, granted to Robert Scott of Stiches by Patrick, Earl of Bothwell. He is recorded as ‘Andrea Quhitlaw’. Probably the same ‘Andrea Quhitlaw’ was witness to the 1508 sasine for Adam Hepburn inheriting the Lordship of Liddesdale, as well as the associated sanseine. Henry (b.1827/8) from Coldstream, he was a shoemaker in Hawick, probably son of Francis and brother of John. He was part of the firm of ‘Francis & Sons’, listed in Slater’s directory of 1852. This firm, with branches in Coldstream, Duns and Hawick, was dissolved in 1851. In 1851 he was at about 38 High Street, and employing 4 men and 1 apprentice. His wife Cathrine was from Jedburgh. John (15th C.) Archdeacon of Teviotdale in 1475. He may have been related to Archibald who was Archdeacon of Lothian in 1483 when he confirmed the charter transferring the half Barony of Wilton from Henry Wardlaw to John Scott of Thirlestane. He could be the same John, Rector of Pennicuik who witnessed a charter for Archibald Whitelaw, Archdeacon of St. Andrews in 1493. Mrs. Mary see Mary Shannon. Patrick (16th C.) Parson of Hawick in 1532, recorded in a letter from Lord Dacre to King Henry VIII. He states that on hearing of a possible raid of the Scottish King into Liddesdale, this parson ‘the Parsome of Awyke, one Pate Whitelow’ and 2 Hepburns, kinsmen of the Earl of Bothwell, went to Hermitage to safeguard it from the King’s forces. His name was presumably Patrick, and ‘Whitelaw’ may be the same as ‘Whitlaw’ or ‘Whitlaw’ (although a connection with Whitlaw by the Flex seems possible, but unlikely); a distant cousin of the Earl’s, Margaret Hepburn, daughter of Sir Patrick of Waugh, married Patrick Whitelaw in about the right decade, and this may be the same man. If so he was Sir Patrick Whitelaw of that Ilk, who later married Margaret Hamilton, was accused of treason in 1567 for helping James Hepburn, Earl of Bothwell, and died before 1571. Patrick of that Ilk was also recorded in 1534/5 along with Sir Patrick Hepburn of Waughton, and several other Hepburns (some of them priests) for killing Gilbert Wauchope on the highway. And in 1526 Patrick of that Ilk was listed in a remission for Sir Patrick of Waughton, ‘Mr. John Hepburne’ (possibly the priest of Hawick) and others for assisting David Home of Wedderburn (also spelled ‘Whitlowe’).

Whitelea Gill (whi'-lee-gil) n. stream in upper Liddesdale, running roughly to the north to join the Thorlshope Burn.

Whitelee (whi'-lee) n. farm near the head of Redesdale, just over the Carter Bar on the A68. It was formerly the site of a roadside inn. This is the area where ‘Parcy Reed’ met his end at the hands of the Croziers in the Border ballad.

Whitelew see Whitlaw

the White Peel ( thu-whi'-peel) n. former popular name for the fortified house at Satchells, so-called because it was white-washed.
white puddin

white puddin (whi’- poo-din) n. a type of sausage containing oatmeal, suet, onions and spices, also known as ‘mealie puddin’ and sometimes served battered in a fish and chip shop – ‘A’ll hev twae white puddin suppers please’.

whiterick (whi-tu-rik) n., arch. a soot or weasel (cf. whutret).

the White Rose o Liddesdale (thu-whi’-röz-ô-li-diz-däl) n. nickname for Helen Elliot.

White’s (whîts) n. White of Hawick Ltd., knitwear retailers at 2 Victoria Road, specialising in lambswool and cashmere. The firm was established by James White in 1968. It was later owned by Bill Atkins and sold to Locharron of Scotland in 2008.

white-seam (whi’-seam) n., arch. plain needlework – ‘Yince in a day the maist o this wheit-seem was shewed be hand’ [ECS].

Whiteside (whîs’-sid) n. former farm in the upper Jed valley, a little to the east of Chesters, on the north side of the river, between Roughlee and Falside. Patrick, Gilbert, Andrew and John Oliver were there in 1541. ‘Jake’, ‘Gorge’ and ‘Patte’ ‘Ollyver’, as well as ‘Ede Ladlay’ were listed there in 1544 when they were among Olivers who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. Dand Oliver was mentioned there in 1571 and 1572/3 and David Oliver in 1571/2. It was among lands inherited by Robert Douglas of Brieryyards from his father John in 1606. Robert Laidlaw, Thomas Oliver and William Oliver were tenants there in 1669 and Thomas Oliver in 1694 (it is ‘Quhiteside’ in 1536, ‘Quhitsuysde’ in 1541, ‘Whitside’ in 1544, ‘Quhiteside’ in 1571/2, ‘Quhitsuysde’ in 1572/3 and 1606, ‘Whitsyde’ in 1669 and ‘whittsyd’ in 1694; it is marked ‘Whitsyde’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, and shown to the south-west of Roughlee on Stobie’s 1770 map).

the White Swan (thu-whî’-swaww) n. former hostelry on the Howegate. Also the name of a former hostelry in Denholm, now Leyden’s View.

White Well (whî’-wel) n. spring in southern Liddesdale, near the former farmstead of Powgillcraig, to the west of Burnmouth.

whitewash (whî’-wesh) n. whitewash – ‘Dirty white-wesh, deid-rot treis, Baked bean tins and mawky fleis...’ [DH].

Whiteyets (whî’-yets) n. local place of uncertain location, where John Scott was living in the late 1600s and early 1700s. Additionally George Turnbull ‘Young Whitegates’ is recorded in 1720, but it is unclear if this was the same place or not (it is ‘qiteyets’ in 1680, ‘Whiteyets’ in 1682, ‘Whyt-yetts’ in 1701, ‘Whiteyatts’ in 1718 and ‘Whitgates’ in 1725).

Whitfield (whî’-feeld) n. former farm about 2 miles north-west of Hawick, near Calaburn farm, and reached via the ‘Forty Fits’ track off the road past Whitehaugh. There are about 9 Bronze Age ‘cairns’ or ‘saucer barrows’ on the hills to the west of here, 7 on the north-east slopes of Pisgah Hill (although these have also been suggested to be ‘ring-ditch houses’). There is also the remains of an old dyke, about 1900 yards (1500 m) long, stretching from the headwaters of the Cala Burn, crossing the Wilton Burn near West Whitfield, and ending to the north-east of Mabonlaw; it was probably an agricultural boundary. Aerial photographs have shown an area of rig-and-furrow cultivation to the north-west of the farmhouse. There were 8 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650, namely Jean Scott, Jean Gray, Robert Tweedie, Margaret Brown, Thomas Hunter, Walter Miller, Margaret Miller and Isobel Hislop. In 1694 it was listed among the lands held by Langlands of that ilk and there were 6 separate households listed there. John Leithead was there in 1698. William Lorraine was gardener there in the early 1700s. Andrew Bell was there in 1709 and John Hendrie was gardener there in at least 1709–21. James Learmonth was there in 1713. Robert Scott was there in 1732, Robert Smith in 1751, Andrew Fletcher in 1759, John Scott in 1762, George Coltart in 1765, Walter Scott in 1770 and 1772 and Walter Rae in 1772. The farm was once part of the estates of the Scotts of Harden, with Walter of Whitfield, being the 2nd son of Walter, Earl of Tarras, and succeeding to the Harden titles himself on the death of his 2 nephews without male heirs. By 1788 it had been sold off from the Langlands estate and was owned by John Johnstone of Alva, valued at £352 2s 2d. It later passed to George William Hutton Riddell. William Hart was living there in 1790. John Oliver and Robert Scott were farmers there in 1797 and Walter Hume was there in 1799. Turner was farm overseer there on the 1841 census, when it is listed as ‘Whitefield East’. There are many other places of the same name (also sometimes ‘Whitefield’ and formerly ‘Whitfield’; it is marked ‘Whitfield’ and ‘Whitefield’ on 1650 parish maps, ‘Whitfield’ on Blaue’s 1654 map and ‘Whetfield’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Whitfield (whî’-feeld) n. former farm in the northern part of Liddesdale. It is recorded as ‘Qwytfeld’, with a value of 20 merks, in the ‘Foresta’ section of the Liddesdale rental roll of 1698. William Lorraine was gardener there in the early 1700s. Andrew Bell was there in 1709 and John Hendrie was gardener there in at least 1709–21. James Learmonth was there in 1713. Robert Scott was there in 1732, Robert Smith in 1751, Andrew Fletcher in 1759, John Scott in 1762, George Coltart in 1765, Walter Scott in 1770 and 1772 and Walter Rae in 1772. The farm was once part of the estates of the Scotts of Harden, with Walter of Whitfield, being the 2nd son of Walter, Earl of Tarras, and succeeding to the Harden titles himself on the death of his 2 nephews without male heirs. By 1788 it had been sold off from the Langlands estate and was owned by John Johnstone of Alva, valued at £352 2s 2d. It later passed to George William Hutton Riddell. William Hart was living there in 1790. John Oliver and Robert Scott were farmers there in 1797 and Walter Hume was there in 1799. Turner was farm overseer there on the 1841 census, when it is listed as ‘Whitefield East’. There are many other places of the same name (also sometimes ‘Whitefield’ and formerly ‘Whitfield’; it is marked ‘Whitfield’ and ‘Whitefield’ on 1650 parish maps, ‘Whitfield’ on Blaue’s 1654 map and ‘Whetfield’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

about 1376. Its precise location is uncertain, but perhaps near the Hermitage valley.

Whithaugh see Whitehaugh

Whithaugh (whi-tuk, -tuf) n. farm and former home of the Armstrongs in Liddesdale, just to the north of Newcastleton, on the other side of the Liddel. Note that there can be confusion with the less significant ‘Whitehaugh’, further up the Liddel valley. It was listed as being worth 4 merks on a rental list c.1376 among the charter of the Douglasses of Morton. As an Armstrong seat it was second in importance only to Mangerston. It was valued at £400 in 1678. In 1580 a band of Scotts and Gladstains, who were returning from following a party that had raided Whitlaw, were attacked here by the Armstrongs; Walter (or perhaps William) Gladstains was killed, more than a dozen others were wounded and about 40 men captured, including Walter Scott of Goldielands. The house was taken by the English in 1582 and burned in 1599. The tower was once raided by a party of men from Bewcastle, led by a Taylor, when Armstrong was away in Ewesdale; they captured documents that they later burned, resulting in Armstrong riding into Cumberland where he burned Taylor’s house. Andrew, Francis and John Armstrong, sons to the ‘auld laird of Whithaughe’. Lancie Armstrong was owner in the 1630s. It was valued at £400 in 1643 and again in 1678. It is probably the ‘Whithauhghs house’ on which tax was paid on 3 hearths in 1694. It is said that tower was once used to obtain a commanding view of the horse races that used to take place on the flat land where Newcastleton would later be built. About 1730 it was bought by William Elliot for his eldest son John. John Elliot was taxed for 25 windows there in 1748. William Lockie was living there in 1764. Half of the lands were sold to the Duke of Buccleuch before 1788; in that year the Duke’s lands there were valued at £199 17s. The remainder of the lands were in 1788 owned by John Elliot of Whithaugh and valued at £200 3s. The tower was destroyed in about 1770 and stones used to build the new farmhouse, including an armorial stone dated 1552 and inscribed ‘BIGIT B(E) LONSI ARMSTRONG’; there is an original cellar beneath. John Elliot was there in 1785. It is said that Sir Walter Scott wrote parts of some of his novels while visiting Elliot there. John Elliot is recorded as farmer with 6 horses there in 1797, with Walter Elliot also there with 1 horse. John Elliot was listed as owner on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls, when it was valued at about £177 (although he had sold off Snaberlee, and part was already owned by the Duke of Buccleuch). In the 19th century it was left to John Elliot’s nephew, William Keir, and later to Keir’s nephew William Little. In 1924 Little sold it to William Armstrong, who had worked as a detective in Shanghai (note the former local pronunciation; the name probably means simply ‘the white haugh’; it is ‘Qwhythawgh’ around 1376 and is recorded in relation to the Armstrongs from at least as early as 1541, when it is ‘Whyauch’, although this could be the Whitehaugh to the north; it has various spellings, such as ‘Quhihauch’ in 1529/30, ‘Whitahauch’ in 1562, ‘Qhihauch’ in 1576, ‘Qhihtaucchis’ in 1580, ‘Quihtauch’ in 1580 and 1581, ‘Whitaugh’ in 1582, ‘Whetaugh’ in 1583, ‘Quhythauch’ in 1587, ‘Quhyauch’ in 1592, ‘Quihtauche’ in 1593, ‘Quhihauch’ in 1616, ‘Quihtauch’ in 1623, ‘Whitauch’ in 1632, ‘Qhihauch’ in 1638 and ‘whitauch’ in 1678; it occurs on Sandison’s c.1590 map as ‘Whithaugh’, Gordon’s c. 1650 map as ‘Whthauch’, on Blaeu’s 1654 atlas as ‘Whithauch’, with ‘Lit. Whithauch’ to the east and is ‘Whithauch’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Whithaugh Burn (whi-tuf-burn) n. stream that rises on Priest Hill and Stell Knowe and runs roughly westwards past the farm of Whithaugh to join the Liddel at the north end of Newcastleton.

Whithaughburn (whi-tuf-burn) n. former farmstead near Whithaugh, on the Whithaugh Burn, to the north-east of Newcastleton. Labourer James Elliot and family were there in 1851.

Whithaugh Mill (whi-tuf-mil) n. former corn mill attached to the lands of Whithaugh in Liddesdale, just north-east of the modern Newcastleton. John Graham was there in 1842. Robert Riddell was the miller there in 1743. Christopher Armstrong is recorded there in 1797 when it is ‘Whithaughmule’, William Armstrong is there on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory, Walter Armstrong in 1837 and John Crozier in 1851 (it is ‘Quihtauch-milne’ in 1642 and ‘Whithaugh-mill’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Whithope (whi-tup) n. farmstead in the Borthwick, on the opposite side of the valley from Harden, formerly in the Barony of Hawick. The outline of the farm was shown in a survey of 1718, with Whames to the east, Todshawhill to the south and Braunholme Muir and Parkhill to the West. At that time there was also a mill by the Borthwick and ash and birch trees, especially near the Whithope Burn and in a wood near the mill. The lands may have once been more extensive and have a long history. This is probably the lands of ‘Wichiop’ near Branxholme, mentioned in a charter of the Lovels in about the 1190s. Adam Turnbull of Whithope is recorded in 1390. John, son of ‘ade turnebule’ of Whithope was granted the lands of Hassendenbank in 1409. ‘Philippo Turnbul de Quhithop’ is first recorded in 1454. This Philip Turnbull, son of William of Whithope had a charter of the lands in 1456. David Turnbull was son of the Laird there in 1494/5. In 1500 Philip Turnbull of Whithope had the lands taken from him in part payment of his brother Ninian’s fine for raiding a farm belonging to the Murrays, with Whithope going to the assignee, Walter Scott of Branxholme; the lands were then valued at 400 merks and were held of the Baron of Hawick for a penny at the Feast of the Nativity of St. John the Baptist. Philip Turnbull was still tenant in 1502. Whithope Knowe is the adjacent hill, and there was another farmstead there called Whithope Mill, presumably with a corn mill, and near to the river. A charter of 1502 shows the ‘20 merklands’ confirmed to Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme, and in 1515 they went to his 2nd son William (the charter being granted by James Douglas of Drumlanrig). Adam Scott was tenant there in 1539. They were still owned by Scott of Buccleuch in 1574, but held ‘in chief’ of Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig, and valued at £5. James Scott, John Miller and John Douglas were there in 1580. The lands were listed among those held ‘in tenandry’ by the Baron of Hawick in 1511, 1572, 1594 and 1615. The tenant in 1549 was recorded as Adam Scott, with other residents being William Elliot, Thomas Telfer, James Scott and Helen Scott; they were among those who complained that their lands had been burned by a group of Englishmen and Kers. There was a dispute over the lands between Walter, Lord of Buccleuch and Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig about 1610. The lands are still listed among those held by the Baron of Hawick in 1615. John Scott was tenant there in 1627. In the 1627 valuation of Hawick Parish it was listed as ‘ane corne rowme estimat to pay 16 bolls’ in a typical year, ‘3 bolls in personage, 7 lb. 10 sh., in vicarage’. There were 16 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650, namely John Scott, Adam Scott, Bessie Scott, James Noble, Walter Miller, James Scott, Malie Scott, Robert Miller, Adam Glendinning, Bessie Govenlock, Margaret Scott, Bessie Runciman, Helen Thomson, William Currie, Helen Wigholm and Isobel Almond. The lands were listed in 1663 among those owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch in the Barony of Hawick. The lands passed from Hawick Parish to Roberton in 1690. Francis Scott was tenant of the Duchess of Buccleuch there in 1690, 1692 and 1694. The householders recorded there in 1694 were James Scott, Robert Goodfellow, John Wilson, Robert Cook and John Riddell, with Archibald Douglas, Robert Lawson, James Noble and John Davidson listed there among ‘the poor’. The rental rolls of 1694 and 1696 state that ‘Fahnesh [the Duchess of Buccleuch’s Chamberlain] is to see the wood fenced and hained’. Walter Scott, younger of Woll, was renting the farm in 1696. John Scott and Walter Scott of Merrylaw rented in 1698. This is probably the ‘Wheathop’ where James Burnet was tenant in 1701. Walter Scott was there in 1703, James Scott in at least 1710–26, James Halliday in 1716, James Greenshields in 1717–21, John Murray in 1718–21, John Hume in 1721, John Wilson in 1722, Andrew Main in 1722 and 1728, James Nichol in 1734 and William Scott in 1742, Robert Scott in 1757–65, William Reid in 1757–63, Walter Taylor in 1761, James Scott in 1763 and 1766, George Coltart in 1763, James Crow in 1764 and Walter Elliot and Thomas Scott in 1767. William Miller and William Reid were there in the 1770s. Gideon Scott was living there in 1794 and Gideon Goodfellow in 1795–98. Adam Scott was tenant in 1797 and William Richardson was living there in 1808. In 1841 the Laidlaw family lived there, as well as pauper Helen Broad along with her daughter and grand-daughter, and others. There are signs of a settlement a little to the west of the present stead ing – ‘...To Whitup and to Black-grain, To Commons ide, and Milsanton-hill, And Eildridge is left all alone, Except some Town Lands in Lanton’ [CWS] (also sometimes ‘Whitehope’ it was formerly spelled ‘Qwhithope’, ‘Quhithop’, etc.; the name dates to at least 1390, when it is ‘Quhythehope’; it is ‘quhithope’ in 1409, ‘Qwythope’ in 1431, ‘Qwthop’ in 1447, ‘Qwthop’ in 1454, 1484, 1500 and 1594, ‘Quhithope’ in 1500, ‘Quhithop’ and ‘Qhithope’ in 1511, ‘Qhithoip’ in 1549, ‘Qhuhip’ in 1550, ‘Qhitehoip’, ‘Qhuytehoip’ and ‘Qhithoip’ in 1572, ‘Qhittope’ in 1574, ‘Quhitthope’ in 1580, ‘Qhitehoip’ in 1615, ‘Quhitthope’ in 1627, ‘Whitope’ in 1650, ‘Qhythope’ in 1663, ‘Whitope’ in 1686 and ‘Whitthope’ in 1694; it is marked ‘Whytitupp’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Whittop’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey; the origin is probably just ‘the white valley’ from Old English ‘hop’; note there are places of the same name elsewhere, e.g. near St. Mary’s Loch.

Whithope Edge

Whithope Edge (whi-tup-ej) n. hill among the headwaters of the Teviot, reaching a height of 475 m (1506 ft) and lying at a corner of the border with Dumfries and Galloway. The boundaries of Hawick Parish once reached this far in the southwest (also written ‘White Hope Edge’).

Whithope Knowe (whi-tup-now) n. hill on the southern side of the Borthwick, just west of Whithope steading. It has an enclosure at its summit, with some structures within it; this is probably a livestock enclosure of no great antiquity.

Whithope Mill (whi-tup-mil) n. former farm on the south side of the Borthwick near Harden, and adjacent to the separate farm of Whithope. It once had one of the local corn mills. The position of the mill and mill lade are clearly marked on the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch (when it was part of the farm of Whithope). There were 3 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650, namely George Riddell, Margaret ‘Colban’ and Mary Riddell. It was among lands from Hawick Parish that became part of the new Parish of Roberton in 1690. Walter Riddell was living there in at least 1714–29, John Johnstone in 1743, John Riddell in 1765, another Walter Riddell in 1767–74, Robert Turnbull in 1780, William Duncan in 1781 and George Scott in 1786. John Scott was tenant in 1797 (referred to as ‘Whithope-mill’ in 1678, ‘Whithope-milne’ in 1690, ‘Whithopmilne’ in 1717, ‘Whitupmilne’ in 1725, ‘Whitehop Milne’ in 1729, ‘Whitupmilm’ in 1774 and 1780 and ‘Whitupmill’ in 1808; it is just ‘The mylne’ beside Whithope on a parish map of 1650, is ‘Whitehopemill’ on Stobie’s 1770 map and ‘Whitehope Mill’ on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Whithope Moss (whi-tup-mos) n. marshy area to the north of Branxholme Easter Loch and east of Wester Park Hill.

Whithope Sike (whi-tup-sik) n. small stream that runs past Whithope farm, joining Holm Sike to become Howford Sike and then run into the Borthwick Water (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Whitlaw (whi’t-, whit-law) n. area in the Slitrig valley from Lynnwood to the Acreknowe Burn, rising to the Vertish Hill in the west. There was once a small thriving hamlet there, with a teacher in the 18th century. The name more specifically refers to the farm or farms of Whitlaw, near the bottom of the Flex road, at the edge of the old Common. They were owned by the Gledstains family in the 16th and 17th centuries, and then passed to the Duke of Buccleuch. Scott of Satchells lists Walter Gledstains of Whitlaw as one of the ‘pensioners’ of Buccleuch (the only one not called Scott), and suggests he had the lands of Whitlaw for his service. It is probably the ‘Manis of Quhytlaw’ recorded in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, when there were ‘nyne drawand oxin’ there. Sir Walter left the farm to John Gledstains in his will. In 1580 part of the lands were held by the Countess of Bothwell, when 100 sheep were stolen by a gang of Ells and Armstrongs; this is in addition to the lands of Meikle Whitlaw being raided by a gang of English and Scottish thieves a couple of months earlier. The lands were said in 1627 to be ‘1 myll from the kirk, neuer payit ferme [probably never having been let to a tenant for rent], estimat to pay 100 merkis in stok, 2 bolls in parsonage, 5 lbs. in vicarage’. The estate of Walter Gledstains of Whitlaw was valued at £266 13s 4d in 1643. There were disputes over the boundary with Hawick Common; in 1668 the Council decreed to support the ‘casing doune the dykes buidle be Whitlaw and other adjacent nighboures upone the Common Dyke of the Common’. The estate of Francis of Whitlaw was still valued at £266 13s 4d in 1678. A sundial from here, engraved with the initials F.G. (for Francis Gledstains), the date 1693, and the motto ‘Fide et Virtute’, was saved from destruction by William Norman Kennedy and presented to the Museum collection. It is probably the ‘place of Gladstens’ listed on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694, with tax paid on 5 hearths. William Armstrong was also listed there among the poor of Hawick Parish in 1694. James ‘Colwort’ (probably Collier) was tenant there in at least 1698–1702 and Dand Gray in 1702–09. Robert Cairns was recorded as tailor there in 1704 and James Gray was there in at least 1708–13. Christian Wright was there in 1709. Adam Hobkirk was herd there in 1712. John Anderson was a weaver there in 1719. Robert Turnbull was tenant in 1725 and James Scott in 1766. James Knox, David Knox and Peter Scott were tenants there in 1797. By 1788 the former lands of Whitlaw had been divided into ‘Meikle and Little Whitlaws’, owned by the Duke of Buccleuch (and valued at £152 2s 7d) and Flex, owned by Mrs. Elliot of Borthwickbrae (valued at £114 10s 9d). Two farms here were long called ‘Meikle Whitlaw’ and ‘Little Whitlaw’. The 2 farms were still valued in 1811 at about £152. Part of the road there was washed away in the flood of 1846. They were still owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch until 1895, when they were exchanged for Fenwick with James Elliot of Flex. This was once the point where the boundary of the Common passed through a house, so during the riding of the marches, a sod was placed on the roof and the Flag passed over it. The area was used at the end of the 19th century for rifle practice by Hawick Volunteers. The ‘Quhitlaw’ recorded passing from the Inglis to Scott families in 1446 may be a different place near Brancnholme, perhaps related to Whithope and Whitcastle Hill. However, ‘Whytlaw’ and Lytle Whetlawe the larde of Boceloues’ were listed among farms burned by the English in 1547/8 – ‘…When, on their palfreys, they wad soon Frac Linwood skip, and Whitlaw-braes, Beneath the soft-eyed summer moon’[AD], ‘And echoed sternly back by Whitlaw braes – Renowned alike for bairns, and nuts and slaes’[WNK], ‘O happy were the days I spent at Whitlaw braes, Pu’ing haws and slaes, A merry hearted boy’[JCG] (also spelled ‘Whitehall’, ‘Whitla’, ‘Whytlaw’, etc.; presumably named for being a white hill, possibly because of the white-blossomed blackthorn that grows there, although the Old English ‘withig hlaw’ for ‘willow hill’ is also possible; it is recorded as early as 1433 as ‘Quhitlaw’, is ‘Whytlaw’ in 1564, ‘Quhytlaw’ in 1574, ‘Quhitlaw’ in 1580, ‘Quhytelaw’ in 1616, ‘Quhitlaw’ in 1622 and 1627 and ‘Quhytelaw’ in 1627, and has its modern spelling by at least 1660, although is still ‘Quhitlaw’ in Buccleuch papers of 1656, ‘Quhytelaw’ in 1661, ‘Whytlaw’ in 1672, ‘Whitehall’ in the Hawick Session records of 1716 and ‘Whytlaw’ in 1738; sometimes transcribed, perhaps in error, as ‘Whithall’ from early records: ‘N. Whytlaw’ and ‘O. Whytlaw’ are marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Whitlaw (whi’-, whi-law) n. lands near Branxholme, probably adjacent to Whitrig. In 1446 the lands of ‘Quhitlaw et Quhiteryg’ are listed among those exchanged between Inglis of Manor and Scott of Buccleuch. It seems unlikely these were the same as the Whitlaw on the Slitrig.

Whitlaw Bank (whi-law-bawngk) n. farmhouse off the main Newcastleton road shortly after Crowbyres Bridge.

Whitlaw Burn (whi-law-burn) n. former name for the Flex Burn. It is so named in the 1767 description of the Hawick Common.

Whitlaw Gairdens (whi’-law-gar-dinz) n. street built on the edge of Hawick on the Newcastleton Road and named after the area in 2006. It is built roughly where the former curling pond was located.

Whitlaw Haugh (whi-law-hauf) n. part of the Common near Whitlaw, once used for shows etc. (e.g. for the Buffalo Bill Wild West Road Show in 1904). It is uncertain exactly what area this referred to, although it seems likely it was the flat land between the B6399 and the river, opposite the bottom of the Flex road. The name is also applied to a farmstead on the left-hand side of the road before Colislinn, presumably at the southern end of the Haugh. William Leithead was there in 1741. After the cottages at Stobs Woodfoot were pulled down about 1903, the joiners bought a piece of land here and built a joiner’s shop, as well as a smiddy (it is ‘Whitla-hauch’ in 1716).

Whitlaw Mains (whi-law-mänz) n. former name for the major farm at Whitlaw. It is recorded in 1574 in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme as the ‘Manis of Quhytlaw’, when the livestock and crops there are inventoried.

Whitlawside (whi-law-süd) n. farm in the lower Liddel valley, a few miles south of Newcastleton into Dumfriesshire. It was a former seat of the Armstrongs with Simon of Whitlawside and his close kin listed in 1583. ‘Sime of Whitlesids’ tower is marked on Sandison’s c.1590 map of the debatable land, and he is listed as ‘Sym in Quhitlysyde’ in Monipennie’s Border chief’s list of c.1594. There are Wigholms there in 1622. ‘Geordy’ (probably Armstrong) of Dykeraw and Whitlawside was tried for resetting cattle in 1633. A later tenant named Simon Armstrong is recorded in 1642 and 1646. The lands are listed among the Dumfriesshire possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1663. John Armstrong of Sorbie leased the farms of Over and Nether ‘Whitlawsyde’ from the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1673. There were generations of Scoons there from the late 18th century (it is ‘Quhitleyside’ in 1605, ‘Quhitleyside’ in 1622, ‘Whyttlysde’ in 1633, ‘Quhitliesyd’ in 1642, ‘Whitlisyde’ in about 1645, ‘Quhitliesyd’ in 1663 and ‘Whitelaside’ in 1792).

Whitlaw Slap (whi-law-slawp) n. small stream that joins the Flex Burn at Whitlaw and effectively marking part of the old boundary of the Common. It is marked on J.P. Alison’s map of the Common in 1777, running roughly south-east from the back of the Vertish Hill to join the Flex Burn to the west of Meikle Whitlaw. Farm draining must have obliterated much of its course, since it is now scarcely visible.

Whitlaw Wud (whi’-law-wud) n. proper name for the wooded area that was more often known as the Duke’s Wud. The wood has been felled frequently, leading to a diversity of plant species. There have been several botanical surveys there from the 1970s. It is partly a reserve of the Scottish Wildlife Trust.

Whitmuir (whi’-mewr) n. lands just to the east of Selkirk Common. This is probably the ‘Withmer’ granted to Kelso Abbey around 1150. A tower near there was said to have been built in 1250 and pulled down in the 18th century. William Ker was there in 1494/5 and 1502 and James Ker in 1531. William Dunn and James Elliot were also there in 1502 when they had remission for separate crimes involving theft and murder; John Lauder, James Elliot and Janet Ker were also recorded there in 1502 when they had 7 cows stolen. A branch of the Ker family acquired the lands in 1566 from the Commendator of Kelso Abbey. This include Whitmuir Hall, further to the east. James Ker is recorded there in 1663, with Whitmuir Hall owned by Andrew Ker of Maisondieu. In 1678 John Currrer paid tax on £392 13s 4d for Whitmuir and Samuel Morrison paid tax on £281 at Whitmuirhall. William Currrer was there in 1691. Thomas Elliot was at Whitmuir Hall in 1709. John Goudie (Divinity Professor from Edinburgh University) acquired the property in the mid-1700s from the last representative of Thomas Ker. In 1760 it was bought by James Dunlop, and passed down through that family until sold by Archibald in 1818, with Whitmuir Hall continuing to be held by the Dunlops for another couple of generations (it was ‘quhitmerr’ in 1502).

Whitrick (whi’-, whit-rik) n. another name for Whitriggs.

Whitrig (whi’-, whit-rig) n. wood on the Chisholm estate, near Chapel Hill. This may be the ‘Quitrig’ in the barony of Hawick, mentioned as an Inglis possession in a 1435 charter, and among the lands swapped by Inglis of Manor for lands belonging to Scott of Buccleuch in Lanarkshire; in this charter it is listed along with Whitlaw, which was presumably adjacent. It is also recorded as ‘Qhuitrig’ in the Barony of Braxholme in a contract of 1482 between Robert Scott of Haining and David Scott of Braxholme. The lands were part of the Harden estates and were passed from Sir William Scott of Harden to his son Sir William in 1649 – ‘...And or we passed the Whitrig road A mirky hap cam doun’ [WL] (it is ‘Quitrig’ in 1435, ‘Quhitergy’ in 1446, ‘Whitrig’ in 1649 and ‘Quhitrik’ in 1511; it is also the name of a bog on the road to Smailholm, famous for its bird life).

Whitriggs (whi’-, whit-rigz) n. farm to the east of Cavers, in Kirkton Parish. Whitriggs Cottages are between Whitriggs and Effledge. It was listed as part of the ancient holdings of Douglas of Cavers in 1509/10, dating back to the time of King David. In about 1541 James Douglas of Cavers and others complained that ‘a peil and hous of stane’ there, valued at £20, had been burned by Scott of Buccleuch. It was also burned by Hertford’s men in 1545. There are deeds in the Douglas of Cavers papers for the years 1527, 1530, 1570 and 1620. William Douglas of Whitriggs is recorded there in 1601 and 1612. It was owned by Douglas of Cavers in the 1643 and 1678 county valuations. Douglas of Cavers paid the land tax on £195 there in 1663. It was still in the Barony of Cavers when inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687 and by his brother Archibald in 1698. There was additionally a merkland of land there that was part of the kirklands of Cavers, called ‘Housie’ in 1698. 7 individuals are listed there on the Hearth Tax records of 1694. John Douglas was there in 1716, Alexander Davidson in 1718, James Huntly in 1720, John Turnbull was a mason there in 1721, James Buckham was living there in 1722, Robert Scott in 1725, Robert Turnbull in 1727, Robert Temple and Gideon Scott in 1737 and William Veitch in 1761. It was part of the estate of Douglas of Cavers in 1788. Andrew Currrer was tenant there in the 1780s and 1790s. Henry Turnbull was farmer there in at least the period 1791–97. James Dalgleish was a labourer there in 1800. Thomas Blyth was farmer there in the early part of the 19th century, with his nephew William Blyth taking over around the 1850s. It was still part of the estate of Douglas of Cavers in the 1870s. Flints found there are in Hawick Museum, and a flint knife and arrowheads in the National Museum of Antiquities of Scotland (also ‘Whitricks’ etc. in earlier documents; it first appears as ‘Qhuitrik’ in 1509/10, is ‘Quhitrik’ in 1511, ‘Quhitrig’ in 1541, ‘Whitrike’ in 1545, ‘Quhitrik’ in the later 16th century, ‘Wytherige’ in 1687, ‘Whytrig’ in 1698, ‘Whitridge’ in 1694, 1716 and 1718, ‘Whitrich’ in 1721, ‘Whitridge’ in 1737, ‘Whitrick’ in 1781 and ‘Whitrig’ in 1797; it is ‘Wytrig’ on Gordon’s c. 1650 map and ‘Whittrigg’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).
Whitrope (whi-trup) n. area around Whitrope Cottages and Whitropefoot, about 12 miles south of Hawick along the Newcastleton Road. The farm there is listed as ‘Wytwrahop’ in the c.1376 rental of Liddesdale, valued at 8 merks. It was still valued at 8 merks on the 1541 rental roll when the tenants were William Elliot in Ramsiegill, Leon, John, Robert and (another) Leon. It is probably the ‘Quhithop’ (with the ‘r’ missing) listed in 1632 along with Stichelhill and ‘Laidhop’ as lands in Liddesdale (among the rentals of Kelso Abbey) owned by Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. In 1718 it was combined with Laidlawhope in the farm of Stitchilhill, with the farmhouse marked near the modern Whitropefoot. The area changed dramatically in 1859 when it became a centre for navvies working on the nearby tunnel and viaduct on the railway. More than 100 huts were built, along with a carpenter’s shop, blacksmith’s and Jamieson’s store, arranged around a square with a belfry in the middle. Huts typically contained a married couple and children in one room, and several lodgers in the other. The village was temporary, however, since the railway was completed several months in. The farm was owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch in building Newcastleton and the road connecting it with Hawick. Carter Thomas Scott lived there in 1835. Andrew Calvert was tollkeeper there in 1841. The house and stables were swept away in the flood of 1846, but must have been rebuilt (also known as ‘Whitrope Bar’).

Whitrope Toll (whi-trup-tol) n. former tollhouse on the turnpike road built to connect Newcastleton to Hawick on the B6399 in the early 19th century. Like all toll houses, this also acted as an inn and was extremely popular with the navvies during the construction of the Whitrope Tunnel and Viaduct. All that remains now are the turf-covered foundations on the west side of the road near Whitropefoot. The tolls were collected largely to recoup the costs incurred by the Duke of Buccleuch in building Newcastleton and the road connecting it with Hawick. Carter Thomas Scott lived there in 1835. Andrew Calvert was tollkeeper there in 1841. The house and stables were swept away in the flood of 1846, but must have been rebuilt (also known as ‘Whitrope Bar’).

Whitrope Tunnel (whi-trup-tu-nul) n. railway tunnel on the Waverley Line, about 12 miles south of Hawick, being 1,208 yards (1104 m) long, and constructed underneath Sandy Edge. There were numerous casualties during its construction, as commemorated by a nearby plaque. The tunnel crossed the boundary between Cavers and Newcastleton Parishes. The tunnel was blocked off in the late 1970s. There are 5 spoil heaps on the surface, left over from the excavations. A bronze spearhead, unearthed near there during railway construction in the 1860s is now in the National Museum of Antiquities of Scotland.

Whitshiels (whit-, whi’-sheelz) n. area just north of Langholm, to the east of the A7, now marked by Whitshiels Bog and Whitshiels Knowe. It was leased to Walter Scott (but it is not clear which one) in 1494. The superiority was inherited in 1550 by Robert, Lord Maxwell, by John, Lord Maxwell in 1604, by Robert Maxwell in 1619 and by John, Earl of Nithsdale in 1670 and William, Earl of Nithsdale in 1696. The farm was owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1653 and 1661. William Armstrong of ‘Kirkton’ was there in about 1641. There were Elliots here in the 17th century (it is ‘Quhiteschelis’ in 1494, ‘Quhiteschelis’ in 1550, ‘Quhiteschelis’ in 1641 and ‘Whytscheills’ in 1661; it is marked ‘Whitesheills’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Whitsheills’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).
Whitslade

Whitslade (whi'-slad) n. former 16th century tower in the Ale valley, about 6 miles west of Hawick, also known as ‘Whitslades’, the area now being a farm of the same name. The name is first recorded as ‘Whitslades in Aline’ in the reign of William I in a document describing the boundaries of lands granted to Orm of Ashkirk, and another royal charter granting the lands to Andrew, son of ‘Uviet’ in about 1173. The boundaries of the lands are described there, although some of the place names are not recognisable. The ‘petra stante’ (possibly ‘standing stone’) between Whitslade and Alemoor is mentioned, as well as the Langhope Burn, another stream called ‘Harwude’, ‘Condosum’, ‘Wiuenesae’ and ‘Blakeden’. The house there was burned by a group of Armstrongs and Hector Lauder in Clerklands some time before 1502; they also stole 16 cows, 2 horses and goods. The lands (or perhaps their superiority) appear to have passed from the Erskines to John Cockburn of Ormiston in 1507/8. It may be that Walter of Synton (who married a daughter of Cockburn) gave up Synton to his son John, and resided himself at Whitslade. Walter’s second wife, Margaret Riddell died at Whitslade in 1585. The first Scott of Whitslade was Walter ‘The Hawke’, son of Robert of Stirches, who had held the Lairdship from 1575. The superiority of the lands resided with the Erskines, and was part of the Earldom of Mar in 1635. In 1643 the Roxburghshire teinds were valued at £80 and owned by Robert Scott of Heap. The estate was valued at £586 in about 1663. Thomas Scott paid land tax on £1048 10s in 1678 and the lands in Selkirkshire belonging to the Laird of Whitslade were valued at £2168 in that year. Tax was paid on 17 hearths on the estate in 1694. James Rule was herd there in 1698, and William Learmonth was gardener.

In 1704, ‘Whitslade’ in 1708, ‘Whitsle’ in 1734. The arms of the Scotts of Whitslade are part of Whitslade – ‘Come round about the Merry-Knowes, my Marion, For Whitslade is lying lee’ [T]. The arms of the Scotts of Whitslade were mostly the same as for the Synton and Boonraw families, namely the usual Buccleuch arms with 2 stars and a crescent – { ‘First came Todrig, Syne came Woll, Last came Whitslade’ } states that the Merry-Knowes are part of Whitslade – ‘Whitslades, wi’ mony a sigh and groan’, thought to be written by Walter Scot of Satchells – ‘Craik-cross repent, Eldon relent, And so may Etrick-head; – Let Ruberslaw to Jedburgh shaw, Sad news, that Whitslade’s dead’ [CWS]. A local version of the ballad ‘Ewe-buchts’ (or ‘The Broom o’ Cowdenknowes’) states that the Merry-Knowes were dug up ‘some years ago’ for the sake of the lime. In the first half of the 20th century the foundations could still be traced under an ash tree in the garden to the south of the farmhouse. Today only a set of indistinct bankings and turf walls can be made out in this general area. It has been suggested that there may once have been an extensive lake to the east of the farm. A dormer pediment with fleur-de-lys finial (as well as perhaps a cross) from there) is preserved in the Museum. The Laird of Whitslade (probably Thomas, who died in 1671) was sung about in a ballad (probably written by Scott of Satchells) beside a small stream that runs east into the Ale, close to the present-day farmhouse. In 1502 it was burned by Hector Lauder (in Clerklands) along with a band of Armstrongs. John Kerr of Gogar received the monies for ‘non-entry’ in the 1660s. The lands were sold to James Adam in 1723, as confirmed by the superiors, the Erskines. It was then owned by John Adam, and passed to the Venners through marriage. James Anderson was there in 1786. The Ordnance Survey Name Book of 1858 says that the foundations of the tower were dug up ‘some years ago’ for the sake of the lime. Whitslade and ‘Whitslie’ in 1748; it is labelled ‘Whîytshîtt’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, ‘whytslaid’ on Adair’s map c. 1688, ‘Whitsleads’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and ‘Whitslaid’ on Ainslie’s 1773 map; there are other towers of the same name near Biggar, in Glenholm Parish, and another near Lauder, Leg-erwood Parish, ancient seat of the Lauder family.

Whitslade (whi’-släd) n. Adam (14th C.) recorded in 1342 as witness to a grant to Gilbert Maxwell of rights of the Barony of Wilton to Melrose Abbey. He was a clerk of Melrose.

Whitslade Faulds (whi’-släd-fawldz) n. farmstead to the south of Whitslade, situated on the Bleakhill Burn.

Whitslade Hill (whi’-släd-hil) n. hill to the north of Whitslade farm, reaching a height of 346 m and essentially being an eastern spur of Barrel Law. There is a linear earthwork on the north-east of the hill.

Whitsunday (whit-sun-dâ) n. one of the Scottish quarter days, typically when annual rents were due. It originally fell on 26th May, but shifted to 15th May in 1752, with the adoption of the Gregorian Calendar. The date is close to the seventh Sunday after Easter, which is also known as Pentecost, a Christian feast. It is also known as ‘Whit’ or ‘Whitsun’. In 1886 all of the Scottish ‘term days’ were set to be the 28th of the appropriate month. This was the day on which it was formerly common to see the families of shepherds and other farm labourers travelling by cart between farms – ‘...that is to say Witsunday and Martynes in wyntr, be twa ewyny porcionis ...’ [DoR1445] (see also Whitsunday).

Whittle (whi-tul) n. Thomas (18th C.) groom at Cavers in 1794, when he was working for George Douglas. His name was recorded as ‘Whettle’.

Whitton (whi-in) n. farm south of Morebattle, between Oxnam and Hownam. The lands there were long the property of the Riddells of Riddell and Whitten and were once split into Over Whitten and Nether Whitton, which were annexed to the Barony of Riddell. There were Davidsons recorded farming there in 1494/5. The lands were valued at £1600 in 1643, when owned by Sir Walter Riddell of that Ilk. The name is preserved in the hamlet of Over Whitton, as well as Whitton Edge and Whitton Loch (it was formerly ‘Quhit-toun’ and variants; the origin of the name is either ‘Whita’s farm’ or ‘white farm’ in Old English; it first occurs as ‘Wittunes’ in 1156).

Whitworth (whi’-wurth) n. William (b.c.1785) from England, he was innkeeper at the Plough Inn in Lilliesleaf in 1841. His wife was Elizabeth and they had children Isabella, Ann and Robert.

Whullans in 1948 and in 1967 was Acting Father to George Peden, son of the man who was his own Acting Father. He was also President of the Moostroopers' and Callants' Clubs and Common Riding Master of Ceremonies for 18 years. He was one of the men who rode the marches during WWII. He donated a new Common Riding flag in 1992. He rode during the Common Riding in his jubilee year and celebrated 50 years as Acting Father in 2017. He was also a President of Hawick R.F.C. He married Nan and has children Alister, Donald and Ian. Christopher Glendinning (b.1876) born at Bewliehill, Lilliesleaf. He worked as a builder and as a tenant farmer. He married Elizabeth B. Steadman in 1898. He had 3 sons: John 'Jack' Glendinning, who had a shop in Hawick; Robert Glendinning (1901–58), who emigrated to Australia in the 1930s and died there; and Christopher G. (d.1968), who had a grocer’s shop on Havelock Street. Cuthbert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Glendinning and their son John (possibly the later baker) was baptised in 1657. Walter (who married Margaret Lamb) was probably another son. The witnesses in 1657 were James and John. Cuthbert (17th C.) resident of Northbank in Southdean Parish according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. His name is among those crossed out (presumably to be entered again on another page); it is written ‘Culbert whilands’. It seems likely he was related to (or the same as) the earlier man from Hawick Parish. Cuthbert (b.1718) baptised in Jedburgh Parish, son of William, who was a weaver at Firbank. In 1744 at Elsdon in Northumberland he married Elizabeth Robson and they had at least 5 children. His name is sometimes written ‘Culbert’. George (b.1758) son of William and Elizabeth Kerr, he was born in Cavers Parish. He moved to London, where he married Eleanor ‘Haston’ in 1786. Their children included William (b.1787), Eleanor Merrylees (b.1789), George (b.1791) and James (b.1794). George ‘Kinly Stick’ (1818–81) born in Kirktoun Parish, son of Richard ‘Willans’, who was a molecatcher and his 2nd wife, Mary Miller. He was the model for the character in Easton’s song ‘Kinly Stick’. He appears to have also been known as ‘Dick’ or ‘Pim’. Although working as a stocking-maker, he was a well known local poacher, often escaping punishment by knowing about loopholes in the law. He was also fond of quoting poetry. He joined the Dumfries Militia at its formation, but military life did not suit him. His nickname came from the name he gave to an old flint gun, ‘the Kinly Stick’, which he used for poaching. In Hawick. He was living with his mother and siblings.
on the Mid Raw in 1841, in 1851 he was living at the Back Row, at 2 Fore Row in 1861 and by 1881 he was at 10 Kirk Wynd. He married Helen Turnbull, who was born in Edinburgh, and she died in 1875, aged 55. Their children included: Margaret (b.1840); Elizabeth (b.1843/4); Richard (b.1845/6); John (b.1848/9); James (b.1851); and William (b.1853/4). In 1875 he was living at Kirk Wynd when he was charged in the death of his wife Helen, who had been found in her bed covered in blood; he was found not guilty at the trial. He himself died after falling down some stairs. Irving (b.1938/9) son of John ‘Jack’ Glendinning and Netta Irvine. He was known locally as an arsonist, responsible for at least a couple of mill fires, pleading guilty to setting fire to Wilson & Glenny’s. He ironically died in an accidental fire in his flat on Allars Bank. James (16th/17th C.) servant of John Watson in Coldingham. He was recorded ‘as ‘Quhillans’ as a witness to a sasine in 1622, which may be the earliest record of this surname, albeit in Berwickshire. How he may have been connected to the Roxburghshire family members is unknown. James (17th C.) witness in 1657 to the baptism of John, son of Cuthbert. He was surely a close relative of Cuthbert, as well as John, the other witness. James (c.1688–1783) born in Jedburgh Parish, he was a weaver at ‘Firbank’ (probably near Northbank) in Jedburgh Parish. His parents could be the John and Janet who were required to marry in Ednam Parish in 1687. He seems likely to have been brother of William, who was also a weaver at Firbank. In 1720 he married Jean Lookup. Their children included: Janet, who must have died young; John (1718–1813), born at Blackchesters and married Mary Swan; James (1720–1811), who married Jean Oliver; Thomas; Janet (again, b.1722), who married a Crawford and had 5 children; Robert (1723–87), who married Janet Scott; and Thomas (again, b.1726), who died unmarried. He and his family are buried at Chesters, some descendants living at Roughlee. James (1720–1811) son of James and Jean Lookup. He married Jean (or Janet) Oliver and their children (mostly baptised in Jedburgh Parish) included: James, John, Jean (or Janet, b.1763), Thomas, and at least 2 others. James (b.1766) eldest son of John and Mary Swan. He was born in Castleton Parish. He moved to England and married Ellen Weare in 1798. Their children were John, James, Thomas, Mary, Mungo, Jenny, William and Margaret. James (b.1813) son of Aaron and Margaret Swan. He lived near Chesters, like many of his family before him, and later resided at Smallholm. He worked as a dyker. He married Mary Laurie. Their children were: Aaron (b.1847); George (b.1849); John Stephenson (b.1852); Elizabeth (b.1854); James (b.1857); and Margaret (b.1859). John (17th C.) witness in 1657 to the baptism of John, son of Cuthbert. He was surely a close relative of Cuthbert (perhaps even his father), as well as James, the other witness. John (17th/18th C.) Hawick brewer mentioned in 1702, where his name is recorded as ‘Weillands’. He may be the same as John ‘Whillace’ who was born in Hawick in 1657 and may thus have been a baker as well as brewer. He was listed as a ‘baxter’ in several baptismal entries. He witnessed baptisms in 1699 for Walter Wilson in Hawick and for tailor Walter Riddell in 1700 for merchant Michael Scott, in 1702 for Michael Scott and for merchant Patrick Angus, in 1705 for Bailie Walter Graham, in 1706 (along with Bailie John Binnie) for Bailie Robert Hardie, in 1709 for Walter Riddell, for tailor James Turnbull, for candlemaker John Scott, for Bailie Robert Hardie again and for merchant William Craig, and in 1715 for mason John Turnbull. John (b.1657) son of Cuthbert and Bessie Glendinning, with the baptism witnessed by John and James Whillans. His surname when baptised is recorded as ‘Whillace’. He is probably the John ‘Weillands’ who was mentioned as a ‘baxter’ (i.e. baker) in Hawick in 1694 and 1710. He was listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4 and was probably the John who paid tax for 2 hearths on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eisit the water’ in 1694. He may have witnessed a baptism for Walter Wilson in Hawick in 1699. He was ‘John Weelands baxter’ when he witnessed a baptism (for tailor Walter Riddell) in 1702; John Forman (the other witness in 1702) later married Margaret ‘Weelands’, who was probably his daughter or sister. He witnessed another baptism (along with William Gledstains, perhaps related to his wife) in 1705. He was a baxter and member of the Council when it granted a bond (dated 1710, but recorded in the Town Book in 1711) to provide money for the Master of the new Grammar School. He is probably the John who married Margaret Gledstains and had children: Margaret (b.1690); Margaret (again, b.1691); and John (b.1693). Note that James Gledstains married Helen ‘Whillance’ and had a daughter in 1683; they may have been related to his wife and to him, respectively. John (1718–1813) son of James and Jean Lookup. He was born at Blackchesters in Southdean Parish.
and lived in Castleton. In 1765 he married Mary Swan and she died in 1806. Their children included: James (b.1766) who married Ellen Weare and moved to England; Thomas (b.1768) who married Agnes Riddell; John (b.1772) who married Mary Geddes and lived in Castleton; Jean (b.1780) who married Thomas Oliver; William (1779–1856) who married Agnes White and died in Ontario; Robert (b.1781) who must have died young; and Robert (again, b.1783) who married Barbara Oliver and also emigrated to Canada. He is buried at Southdean. John (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. He was living at Henlawshiel when most of his children were baptised. He married Margaret Scott and their children included: John (b.1769); Charlotte (b.1771); Hannah (b.1773); and Archibald (b.1774). It is possible that a 2nd Archibald (b.c.1779) and Sophia (b.1779) were also his children. John (b.1768) son of John and Mary Swan. He lived in Castleton Parish. He married Mary Geddes in about 1795. Their children were: John; David; William; Margaret; Agnes; James; Mary; Andrew; Isabel; and Jean. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. He was living at Henlawshiel when most of his children were baptised. He married Margaret Scott and their children included: John (b.1769); Charlotte (b.1771); Hannah (b.1773); and Archibald (b.1774). It is possible that a 2nd Archibald (b.c.1779) and Sophia (b.1779) were also his children. John (b.1768) son of John and Mary Swan. He lived in Castleton Parish. He married Mary Geddes in about 1795. Their children were: John; David; William; Margaret; Agnes; James; Mary; Andrew; Isabel; and Jean. John Bell (18th/19th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. He married Alison Muir and their son James was baptised in 1794. John (d.1847) from Southdean, he married Jane Lillico in Bedrule in 1833. His wife was a daughter of William Lillico and Margaret Nichol. They emigrated to Canada in about 1835 (along with Robert, who was surely a relative), settling in Gloucester Township, Ontario. His wife’s brothers James and Robert Lillico joined them in Canada later. He farmed at Hurdman’s Bridge, Ontario and died of consumption, just before the last of his 7 children was born. John Bell (c.1896–1928) son of Isabella and an unknown father, he married Agnes Alice Walker Darling in 1920. Their children were Alice Darling (b.1921), Charles Noel (‘Chuck’, b.1924) and Catherine Darling. His wife secondly married John Bell and died in 1973. He died in a biking accident near the Mair. John ‘Jack’ (20th C.) eldest son of Christopher G. He was father of Irving. Margaret (17th/18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. Her daughter Margaret was baptised in 1723, with her surname listed as ‘Whollis’. Walter ‘Whillis’ accepted responsibility for sponsoring the child’s education (suggesting perhaps that he was the grandfather, and hence may be Walter from Denholm, whose wife was Margaret Lamb). Richard (d.bef. 1841) possibly born in Dent, Yorkshire in 1783, he was the father of ‘Kinly Stick’. He worked as a mole-catcher in Kirkton Parish, and later his family moved to Hawick. He firstly married Katherine (or Christian) Stevenson, and she died in 1816. Their children included: Walter (b.1809); and Janet (b.1813). He secondly married Mary Miller, and their children included: Mary (b.1818), who married Broughton Newell; George (b.1819), also known as ‘Kinly Stick’; Margaret (b.1822); John (b.c.1827); Jane (b.1830/1); James (b.1834); and Betty (b.c.1835). His wife Mary was listed as head of the family on the Mid Row in 1841 and as a widow on Kirkgate (i.e. St. Mary’s Place) in 1851. Robert (1723–87) son of James and Jean Lookup. He lived in Southdean Parish, specifically at ‘Roughhint’ and Roughlee and married Janet Scott. Their children were: James (b.1759); Janet (b.1762); Robert (b.1763); Aaron (b.1766); Jean (or Ellen, b.1770); Betty (or Isabel); and Andrew. The family name is sometimes recorded as ‘Hollans’. He died at Chesters. Robert (1783–1861) son of John and Mary Swan, he was born at Chesters. He married Barbara Oliver in 1808 and their children were: John; Margaret; Thomas (b.1814), who married Mary Anderson; Mary; George; Betty; and Jane. He emigrated to Canada in 1837, like his brother William, settling at Hurdman’s Bridge near Ottawa, Ontario. His grandchildren included Rev. Robert and Rev. Dr. George. Robert (18th/19th C.) merchant in Hawick. He had 2 sons who died in 1819. Robert (18th/19th C.) butcher of the High Street, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Presumably the same Robert is also listed as proprietor of a public house and stabler on the High Street. He is listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory as a meal dealer on the High Street. He may be the same as the agricultural labourer recorded at about 20 High Street in the 1841 census, along with his wife Margaret and daughter Isabella. Thomas (b.1768) 2nd son of John and Mary Swan, he was born in Castleton Parish. He married Agnes Riddell (or perhaps Liddell) in about 1794 and their children included John and ‘May’ (probably Mary). It may not be a coincidence that Agnes, daughter of John Riddell and Agnes Whillans was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1799. Thomas (d.1810) lived at Town-o-Rule and is buried at Southdean. This is according to an old gravestone. Thomas ‘Tom’ (1843–1924) born in Southdean Parish, youngest son of William. He became head gardener to the Duke of Marlborough at Blenheim. He suffered from ill-health and moved to Oxford. His children included David, Maude, Isabel Frances, Ralph and Sydney James. Walter (17th/18th C.) probably son of Cuthbert and brother of John. He married Margaret Lamb. When he had a daughter baptised in 1690 he was living in Hawick, but subsequent children were baptised in Cavers Parish, with his address specifically listed as Denholm Deanhead in 1705 and 1712, and Denholm Dean in 1708. His children probably included: William, who married Janet Stothart; Elspeth (b.1690); Archibald (b.1700); Janet (b.1703); Walter (b.1705); Ann (b.1707); Christian (b.1708); and John (b.1712). Note that in 1703 his name appears as ‘Mewhillance’. Walter (18th C.) recorded as a ‘fowler’ in 1729 in the rental book for Archibald Jerdon, factor to Capt. Elliot of Wells. He is probably either the man who lived at Denholm Dean, or his son who was born in 1705. Walter (b.1720) son of William and Janet Stothart. He was baptised in Hawick Parish. In 1756 he is probably the Walter who married Jean ‘Dowgall’ in Glasgow. Their children were Margaret (b.1757), Walter (b.1759), John (b.1761), Isobell (b.1763), Janet (b.1771), Alexander (b.1774) and David (b.1774). Walter (b.1819) son of Richard and Katherine Stevenson, he was an older brother of George ‘Kinly Stick’. He lived at the Back Row (where he is recorded in 1841) and worked as a hand-loom weaver. He married Catherine Stevenson (who had the same name as his mother), daughter of Thomas Stevenson and Isabella Turnbull. William (17th/18th C.) weaver at Firbank in Jedburgh Parish. His children included: Culbert (b.1718); and Elizabeth (b.1720). William (17th/18th C.) smith at the Flex. His younger brother was Walter, possibly the fowler. In 1714 he was cited at the Session, along with William Leithead, for their ‘supernumery marriage’. This was probably the marriage of Leithead to Bessie Stevenson, and may have been held at the Flex, with apparently more guests than then allowed by law. He married Janet Stothart in 1714; she was a ‘servitrix’ to Hawick innkeeper William Shiel. Their children were: Margaret (b.1715); Robert (b.1717); Walter (b.1720), who probably married Jean Dougal and moved to Glasgow; Janet (b.1722); Ann (b.1725), who probably married John Hunter in Minto Parish; William (b.1728), who married Elizabeth Kerr and was a wright in Oxfham Parish; and Mary (b.1729). Some of his later children were born in Hobkirk and Cavers Parishes (rather than Hawick or Kirkton), suggesting that he had moved from the Flex. In 1725 he is recorded at Shiplaw Corse, in 1728 at Caudmill and in 1729 at New Mill (in Kirkton Parish). William (b.1728) son of William and Janet Stothart, he was a resident of Cavers Parish, later being a wright in Oxfham Parish. He married Elizabeth Kerr in 1753 and their children probably included: Agnes (b.1754); John (b.1755); George (b.1758), who moved to London; William (b.1760); Hannah (b.1764); and Helen (b.1768). William (1779–1856) son of John and Mary Swan, he was born in Southdean Parish. He compiled a Whillans family tree in 1823. He emigrated to Canada in 1824, settling in London, Ontario (with his brother Robert settling near Ottawa), where he built a home at Ilderton. He married Agnes White and they had 9 children: John (b.1814); Jean; William (b.1818); Mary; Betty; Adam; Robert (b.1828); Thomas (b.1830); and Agnes (b.1833). He died in Ontario. William (18th/19th C.) possessor of part of the lands at Acrenowe. He is recorded as former owner in a valuation of 1779 (when the lands were owned by Sir Francis Eliott) and also on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls (when Sir William Eliott of Stobs paid the tax there). It is recorded that £22 5s 8d of land that was of Acrenowe was ‘possessed in 1779 by William Whillands’. He could be the William (b.1728), who was earlier associated with the Flex or his son William (b.1760). William (1800–68) son of Aaron and Margaret Swan. He was a dyke builder and lived at Chesters in Southdean Parish. He was the enumerator for Southdean Parish for the 1861 census and probably also the William who is recorded in the Ordnance Survey Name Book. In 1828 he married Isabella Riddell, who was also from Chesters. Their children included: Jane (b.1828); Aaron (b.1830); Margaret (b.1832); Robert (b.1835); William (b.1837), died young; Walter, twin of William; Jessie (b.1838), who married John Inglis; William John (b.1841), who married Jane Maben and was a letter-carrier; Thomas (1843–1924) gardener; James, twin of Thomas; and Catherine (b.1846), who married Thomas Rutherford, coal merchant in Hawick. 3 of his sons emigrated to America. William John (b.1841) son of William. He was born in Chesters, his family being in that area for at least 3 generations before. He was educated at Chesters, and for a few years (starting at age 10) acted as letter-carrier between Southdean and the post office at Bonchester Bridge. After working with his father, in 1868 he became the letter-carrier between Bonchester and Hawick. He lived at Weens Lodge in the period 1868–73, but retired as postman in...
1883 due to ill-health and moved to Bonchester Bridge, where he also acted as carrier to Hawick.
He and his wife moved to Hawick in 1893. In 1873 at Melrose he married Jane, daughter of farmer
James Maben, in a ceremony in which his sister Catherine also married Thomas Rutherford. His son was William James (b.1889) and his daughter Annabell became a teacher. William (19th/20th C.) born at East Fodderlee, he was a ploughman who lived in a cottage on Bonchester farm. He became paralysed and had to be looked after by his wife. He married Agnes Grieve, who was born at Liddel Bank. Their children included: William, born at Whitelee, hind to the Turnbulls in Bonchester; Janet Agnes (b.1891), kitchen maid at Weens; and James, born at East Fodderlee.
He could be the William, son of Robert and Elizabeth Henderson, baptised in Southdean Parish in 1843 (one theory on the origin of the name is that it relates to lands at the Wheel Kirk;
variants include ‘Hollans’, ‘Weallan’, ‘Weelands’, ‘Whollance’ and ‘Whynnance’).

Whisky Hooses

Whisky Houses, old place name for an area immediately next to the Slitrig near what became Melrose’s on Slitrig Crescent. Sometimes the name in terms of payment for workers (in place of the earlier brandy) in the Town Treasurer’s books in 1747. The occupation of ‘distiller’ first occurs in a baptismal record of 1757 (for John Aitchison and Gilbert Corbet). Whisky did not start being common as a local drink until about 1770, but soon after was being used as a cure for almost every ailment! The drink had many illicit stills at one time, and in the late 18th century a great deal of smuggling to England, where the duties were much higher. It was only legitimately manufactured in Hawick around 1818–19 – ‘Whisky given the workers at the bridge, 1 pint, 1 gill, ...0 2 10. Half-a-mutchkin whiskie to glaziers and officers, ...0 0 4’ [BR1747], ‘...Wi’ what some bellums ca’ the bottle, An’ I ca’ whisky, When ’boot yer plans ye frendly tattle, An’ speech gets huskie’ [JoHa], ‘Wha’s oily words, like eighty-year-au’ whisky, Slip owre the palate wi’ a din unhussy’ [JoHa], ‘...While someone slips a whisky in your tumbler unaware’ [WHO], ‘Aw can offer ee maist o’ the usual things The likes o’ whisky, rum or beer ...’ [AY], ‘...about icecream flavoured wi port, sherry, whisky and sic-alcoholic beverages’ [DH].

the Whisky Burn (thu-whuskee-burn) n. stream entering the Slitrig near ‘Whisky Hooses’, which must have been buried for at least a couple of centuries (mentioned in Parish Records of 1762).

Whisky House Mill (whuskee-hoos-mill) n. Whisky House Mill, on Slitrig Crescent (at No. 14). It was built for William Richardson in 1787–88, located on Slitrig Dam, and used for the manufacture of cloth and then carpets. This firm was continued by William’s son Walter until his death in about 1808. From 1815 it was owned by Waldie, Pringle, Wilson & Co., and probably from about 1819 was solely Waldie’s, becoming J. & W. Waldie, manufacturers of stockings and woollen cloth. It was sold off in 1829 and later the building became a storehouse as part of James Melrose & Sons, millwrights. It was also popularly known as ‘the Royal George’ or ‘the George’. This may have been the first real ‘mill’ in Hawick and the beginnings of the tweed industry (note that it is probably named after an already existing name for the area, and only coincidentally related to a distillery).

Whisky Hooses (whuskee-hoo-seez) n. Whisky Houses, old place name for an area immediately next to the Slitrig near what became Melrose’s on Slitrig Crescent.
Whusky Meg

was applied more to the area between the Crescent and the river. It was probably the same as the area that was earlier called Usuch Haugh, and later called the Brewery Haugh. A 1738 record of Robert Elliot of Falnash leasing from the Buccleuch Estates a ‘stillhouse and brewhouse on east side of the water of Slitridge, and of ground adjacent; also, a malt kiln and barn yet to be built; all lying in parish of Hawick’ may refer to this site. It was used as the town dump until the latter part of the 18th century (origin uncertain, but probably a corruption of Usuch Haugh).

Whusky Meg (whus-kee-meg) n. nickname of the years around 1800, perhaps meant as a familiar name for James Ruickbie’s wife – ‘An if ye meet wi’ Whisky Meg, That honest hearted carlin, Gude faith your cares will get a fleg, Though baith the dell an’ Merlin Ye meet that day’ [JR].

Whusky Sike (whus-kee-sik) n. small stream that rises on Berryfell Hill, joins Fernielees Sike and flows into the Harwood Burn just to the north of Lugiescleuch.

whusp (whusp) n. a whisp – ‘A’v heard ma fither sayin aboot a ‘tow’s whusp’ [DaS].

whusper (whus-pur) n., v. whisper – ‘A’ that ill-wull me whusper thegither agayne me . . . ’ [HSR], ‘. . . And a hush as they cairrit um off. A whusper came frae Dye’ [DH]. ‘There was a whusper that eer that a horse threh a famous racin stable hed been bocht on the quiet for Haaick Warren during WWII and never really picked up again.

whussles (whu-sulz) n., pl. whistles from the main mills in Hawick used to go off at regular times and could be heard at home by most of the employees. Each mill’s whistle had a distinctive tone, and they were once familiar to all Teries. Typical times were 8 a.m., 12.30 p.m., 1.30 p.m. and again at night. The practice was suspended during WWII and never really picked up again.

Whussunday (whu-sun-di) n., arch. Whitsunday – ‘Oo’ll beide i this hoose ti Whussenday, an than oo’ll fit’ [ECS] (also written ‘Whussenday’; see Whitsunday).

Whussun-tide (whu-sun-tid) n., poet. Whitsun-tide, the season of Whitsunday – ‘I’ve been to your waddins Owre often afore, At Whussan-tide’ [DH].

whuther (whu-thur) v., arch. to bluster (of the wind), n., poet. a blow, beating – ‘Auld Britain’s sons are yet fu’ yauld, We trow they weel could bide a whuther’ [JoHa] (also whudder).

Whutson (whut-sin) n. (Whitson or Hewitson)

Betty see Betty Whutson. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He is recorded at Hoscoate in 1711 when his daughter Janet was baptised. His surname is written ‘Huto don’, which has been transcribed ‘Knotson’, but could be a variant of ‘Watson’. It is possible that he is the John Watson whose son Walter was baptised in Roberton in 1721. Rev. John (1826–1902) trained at Glasgow and Kilmarnock Evangelical Union Halls, he was minister at John Street, Montrose 1866–70 and then at Beith and at Anstruther East. He was minister of Newcastle upon Tyne Congregational Church 1890–91.

Nancy nickname of Agnes Hewitson. Robert (18th C.) married Margaret Lillico in Kirkton in 1720, when his name was written ‘Hotson’. Their daughter Isobel was baptised in Hawick in 1724. He was there recorded as ‘Robert Huisen workman in Flex’ and the witnesses were ‘Mr’ Charles Telfer and Beadle John Scott. It is possible he is the Robert ‘Whitsone’, married to Margaret Elliot, whose son Walter was baptised in Hawick in 1728. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Elliot and their son Walter was baptised in 1728. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1730 he is ‘Robert Huison […] dler’ and in 1739 he is ‘Whitson’ and ‘Tennent’. He was stated to be from Ewes Parish when in 1729 in Cavers Parish he married Janet Scott from Hawick. Their children, baptised in Hawick Parish, included: James (b.1730); Walter (b.1739); and Helen (b.1741). The witnesses in 1730 were ‘Mr Kennedy’ (minister of Cavers) and Robert ‘Huisone’ (probably merchant Robert Howison) and in 1739 were William Elliot of Rigg and Walter Scott at Commonside. Based on the witnesses, he probably lived near Teviothead. In 1741 he is recorded being ‘at Blackcleugh’ and the witnesses were Walter Scott at Commonside and Archibald Elliot at Bowanhill. It seems likely he is the fiddler, married to Bessie Scott, whose son Gavin was baptised in Hawick in 1744, with witnesses Walter Scott at Fahns and Walter Scott at Commonside. He could be the Robert whose son Thomas was baptised in Cavers in 1746 and the Robert whose daughter Marion was baptised in Kirkton in 1731. His name is variously spelled ‘Howison’, ‘Huison’, ‘Hutson’, ‘Whitson’ and ‘Whotson’. However, he appears to be distinct from the contemporary. Robert see Bailie Robert Howison. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His son George was baptised in 1736.

wicke (wik) suff. placename ending, generally derived from the Anglo-Saxon ‘wic’, meaning a settlement or farm, perhaps fortified. Despite occurring in the name of our Town, it is not common locally, with Borthwick and Fenwick being among the only other examples. In coastal towns, like Berwick, the ending is believed to have a different origin, perhaps Viking, with the meaning being ‘bay’, as in Jorvik.

Wicked Tammy (wi-ki-taw-mee) n. local nickname, probably from the 19th century – ‘Wicked Tammy and Tidy Mars, The Sap, Paul Laidlaw and Tory Tam; Tip-ma-Daisy hame frae the wars, Johnny Macmannus and Neddy Lamb’ [HI].

the Wide Close (thu-wid-klos) n. former name for the Roond Close, used in the early 1800s.

the Wideopen (wid-ó-pin) n. hill in the eastern part of Roxburghshire in Yetholm Parish, reaching a height of 268 m and lying on St. Cuthbert’s Way (the origin is probably the Old English ‘et tham widum hopum’, meaning ‘at the wide valleys; it is first recorded as ‘Wydhoppin’ in 1523).

the Wide Pend (thu-wid-pend) n. former popular name for the passageway next to the Waverley Bar?.

wide ti the waa (wi-d-ti-thu-waw) adj., arch. wide open (of a door), as far open as it will go – ‘Oh shair! Hei’s left the ooter door weide ti the waa. Nae wunder there’s a cauld draucht’ [ECS].

widni (wi-di) contr. wouldn’t, would not – ?.

Widow Richardson (wi-dó-ri-churd-sin) n. lady who kept a lodging house in Hawick in the early 18th century. This is recorded in the 1723 Parish records, although further particulars of her name, her husband and her address are not given.

Wield (weeld) n. Bailie John (1836/7–77) druggist of 48 High Street, who was Hawick Magistrate. He came from the Aman area, son of a farmer. His chemist’s business operated for about 20 years, and he was succeeded by W.R. Ross. He started a paraffin works on Commercial Road around 1866 (where Donaldson’s later had an oil extracting works), but he was bankrupt in a couple of years. He was a Councillor for Teviot Ward from 1871, immediately being appointed as a Magistrate, but retired in 1875 due to business difficulties following the Collie failure. In 1870 he married Christina Mary, daughter of draper James Turnbull. In later years he lived at Wilton Grove and is buried in Wellogate Cemetery.

Wigholm

Wigholm (wi-gum) n. Adam ‘Edy’ (16th C.) listed in 1541 among English rebels who had been reset in Scotland. He was listed among some Armstrongs who were reset by young Hector Armstrong at Tweeden. Probably the same ‘Edde Weghame, servante to Anton Armstronge’ was listed in 1541 among a group of Armstrongs, Elliots, Croziers and others accused of burning the corn of William Carnaby at Halton. Archibald ‘Archie’ (16th C.) tenant of the lands of Simon Elliot in Dod Burn, listed in a bond of security signed in Hawick in 1569. His name is given as ‘Arche Wiggein’. He is surely related to the ‘Rynne Wiggein’ who was tenant of a farm near Skelfhill. Helen (16th C.) merchant of some sort recorded in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1574. She was owed money for supplying fowls. Given the others she is listed alongside, it seems likely she was from Hawick. John ‘Cock’ (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Johne Wighame alias Cok’ in a document of 1500 listing men of Liddesdale and neighbouring areas who gave pledges for good behaviour to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell. Perhaps the same ‘Cok Wigiane’ is listed among many men from Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. John (17th C.) son of William, tenant in Nether Whisgills. In 1642 he is on a long list of Border ‘notorious criminals, theeves and ressetters of thift’ who were to be captured and tried. Matthew (15th C.) listed among a large number of Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. Actually there are 2 separate men listed with the same name. They may have been related to other Wigholms who were also listed, namely Cock and William. Ninian ‘Ringan’ (16th C.) listed among the tenants of Skelfhill and neighbouring farms in a bond of security signed in Hawick in 1569. His name is given as ‘Rynne Wiggein’ (and there is some guess work on his name). Ninian (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘Niniane Quhigholme in Peilbrae’ in 1612 when he was on the jury for the case of the death of a man while imprisoned in the Hawick Kirk steeple. Ninian (17th C.) tenant in ‘Todscheuliseyd’ in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th/17th C.) from Braidhaugh and formerly Alemoor. William White from Muselee and Simon White from Alemoor were caution for him at the Justice Court in Jedburgh in 1623. William (15th C.) listed among men of Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. William (16th/17th C.) tenant in Nether Whisgills. In 1642 his son John was listed among many Borderers wanted for theft and other crimes. ‘Wilwigholms steid’ is listed in 1632 among the lands possessed by Thomas Kerr of Ancrum, and seems likely to have been the farm he tenant in Liddesdale. William (17th C.) recorded as tenant of Newton in wifie (wi-fie) n. a wife – ‘Aw’ll maybe pick up a bit wifie o’ ma ain in the by gaun …’ [JEDM], mildly derogatory term for a woman, particularly a middle-aged one – ‘The gawsie auld wifie cam’ bustlin’ ben …’ [JJ], ‘If ye want a bit wifie that’s usefae an’ neat …’ [WAP].

Wigg (wig) n. farm on the B6357 in the upper Rule valley, near where the Wigg Burn meets the Hyndle Burn. William, Lord Cranstoun (superior of the Barony) owned the woods there in 1621 when 2 Shiels were denounced as rebels for cutting down his ‘greenwood’. James Laidlaw was shepherd there in the early part of the 18th century. John Elliot was living there around 1770 and Thomas Grieve in 1788. The lands there were held by Walter Scott of Wauchope in 1811, along with part of Wauchope-head, ‘now known by the name of the South-west division of the Lands of Wauchope’, with the superiority held by Archibald Scott of Howcleuch. George Scott was shepherd there in the mid-19th century and Andrew Thomson was shepherd in the latter part of the 19th century (it is ‘Wig’ in 1621).

Wiggam (wi-gum) n. nickname of James Turnbull of Denholm.

Wigg Burn (wig-burn) n. stream in the upper part of Rulewater. It rises on the slopes of Wigg Knowe and flows roughly north to meet the Hass Sike and then the Hyndle burn near the farm of Wigg. Recorded in 1677 when the lands of Wauchope are described as ‘on Southside of water called Wig’.

Wiggins (wi-ginz) n. possible name for lands belonging to Melrose Abbey, and for which Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch was granted the office of Bailie in 1524, confirmed in 1525. It is unclear where these lands were, but the others named were Melroselenads, Ettrickhead, Rodono, Eskdalemuir, Ringwoodfield and East Teviotdale. They are not listed in the earlier grant of 1519 (it is ‘Uiggynnis’ in 1524 and ‘Wggennis’ in 1524).

Wigg Knowe (wig-now) n. hill in the Wauchope Forest, to the west of the Note o’ the Gate. Wigg Burn rises on its eastern slopes. It reaches a height of 491 m and has a communication mast on top (it is ‘Wyiggs hill’ on Pont’s c.1590 map and ‘Wriggs hill’ on Blaeu’s map of 1654).

Wight (wɪt) n. Adam (18th/19th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He married Ellen Clerk (1776–1860). He died abroad and is commemorated on the family gravestone in Borthwick Waas Cemetery. Adam (b.1805/6) farmer at Newton in 1841. In 1851 he was working as a ‘miller’s man’ at the Maltsteep in Wilton. His wife was Helen and their children included John, Jane and Mary. Alexander (18th/19th C.) farmer at the Grange in Southdean Parish, according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Andrew (18th/19th C.) living at Over Kirkhope in Ettrick Parish in 1799 when his son Andrew was baptised in Robertson Parish. Andrew (19th C.) cabinet-maker of Scott & Wight, 58 High Street. Their premises may be the place marked ‘Mr. Scott’ around No. 58 on Wood’s 1824 map. The business is listed on Buccleuch Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. They are listed as ‘Scott & Wight’ in Slater’s 1852 directory. He married Mary Rutherford, and they had no children. Daniel ‘Dan’ (19th C.) landlord of the Half-Moon Inn in the latter part of the 19th century. He was also well known as a Powderhall runner. In 1889 he refuse to sell some land to allow an extension of the Evangelical Union Kirk on O’Connell Street, presumably because of their promotion of temperance. George (17th/18th C.) wight in Hawick who was Cornet in 1709. He married Helen Cook in Hawick in late 1711 and their children included James (b.1712), Janet (b.1714), Robert (b.1717), Margaret (b.1719) and Jean (b.1722). The witnesses in 1712 were cooper Robert Hardie and James Scott ‘Doctor’ and in 1714 were Bailie George Martin and flesher Robert Deans. Note that his name was written ‘Wright’ in 1712. George (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1728 he married Janet Beattie from Langholm Parish. In 1721 and 1725 he witnessed baptisms for weaver Robert, who was surely related. James (17th C.) weaver listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He witnessed baptisms in Hawick in 1700 for carrier David Minto, in 1704 for workman Archibald Elliot, in 1707 for weaver Andrew Jardine and in 1709 for George Johnston, tenant in Hillesle. Janet (18th C.) widow of someone called Leith-head. In 1751 the Hawick Session resolved to provide her with an allowance from the sale of her husband’s house. John (17th C.) resident in Bewlie in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. He was probably related to Thomas, who were also listed there. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Milsington in 1725 when his son Andrew was baptised. John (18th/19th C.) listed as a shepherd at Bedrule on the Dog Tax Rolls in 1797 for having 2 non-working dogs. Mary (b.c.1780) listed as a widow who was a midwife at about 25 High Street in 1851. Robert (17th C.) indweller of Unthank in Ewesdale. In 1653 he inherited half a husbandland in Midlem from James Bald, his grandmother’s brother. Robert (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He witnessed a baptism for carrier David Minto in 1706. In 1715 he married Jean Bridges (‘or Swan’); she may therefore be the Jean who previously married Mungo Swan in 1702. Their children included: Robert (b.1716); Margaret (b.1717); James (b.1718); Janet (b.1720); James (again, b.1721); Helen (b.1723); George (b.1725); and Robert (again, b.1727). The witnesses in 1716 were merchant Francis Elliot and wright William Murray, in 1721 were wright John Pringle and weaver George Wight (who was surely related) and in 1725 were weaver George (again) and weaver John Steven-son. Thomas (17th C.) resident in Bewlie in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to John, who were also listed there. Walter (d.1819) tailor in Hawick. His name is the second one on the list of ‘Donations’ to the Hawick Savings Bank in 1815. William (18th C.) paid the cart tax in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1791. William (1806–92) son of Adam and Ellen Clerk, born in Robertson Parish. He was a slater at Borthaugh Cottages. He donated some interesting stones to the Museum in 1863. He married Helen Lillico, who died at Borthaugh in 1850, aged 40. He may also have married a second time. His children included Christian, Helen Clerk (1851–1883) and Isabella Douglas (1853–1936). His mother Helen (or Ellen) Clerk was also living with him in 1841 and 1851. The family are buried at Borthwick Waas. William (19th/20th
the Wilderness

C.) joiner and cabinetmaker who ran the business ‘Scott & Wight’ at 58 High Street. In 1906 he transferred the firm to his son Andrew (also formerly written ‘Weight’).

the Wilderness Road (thu-wil-dur-nis-rød) n. name once used for the approach road to the original Wilton Manse, located where the Station Centre is located now. A little stream used to run through the grounds (long buried in conduits). The road ran between 2 high hedges and was called after the popular name for the plantation on its eastern side.

wild hyacinth (wild-hl-a-sinth) n. usual name in Scotland for the flower called the bluebell in England.

wile (wil) v., arch. to deceive, beguile, entice – ‘...O but ye be a wilin’ rogue – Fareweel John Barleycorn!’ [JT], ‘Until a lass wi’ saft sweet words Did wyle the glove in play ...’ [DH], n., poet. a snare, trap – ‘Keepe me frae the wyles whilk thaye hae layde for me, an’ the girns o’ the workers l’ inequitie’ [HSR] (also written ‘wyl’).

Wilkie (wil-kee) n. James (17th C.) cottar at Rueltownfoot according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Janet (d.1760) described as being ‘in Hartshaugh miln’ when her funeral is recorded in Halkirk Parish in 1760. John (17th C.) tenant in Hassendean. He is recorded in 1684 when his servant Thomas Brown was listed among those declared fugitives for being Covenanters. Also in that year the will of his wife Helen Davidson is recorded. He is probably the John ‘glkie’ who witnessed a baptism for Thomas in Hassendean. He was presumably farmer at Rawflat. John (d.bef. 1808) wright in Hawick. His son John was a shoemaker whose death was recorded in 1808. He may be the John who married Margaret Reunick (also from Hawick) in Hawick in 1776 and whose children included Janet (b.1777) and John (b.1780). John (d.1808) shoemaker in Hawick, son of wright John. Margaret (16th C.) probably name of a tenant of Sir James Douglas of Cavers according to a list in the court proceedings of the Lords of COuncil in 1541. Mary (18th/19th C.) proprietor of a shop somewhere around the Howegate in the early 19th century. She sold ‘tam trot’, gingerbread and other confectionaries. T. (18th/19th C.) listed at Minto House among subscribers for Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’, published in 1825. He was probably a house-servant at Minto. Thomas (15th/16th C.) witness to a sasine of the Erskines in Synton lands in 1508, where he is ‘Thomas Wykinsone’. He may have been local, since several of the other witnesses were. Rev. Thomas (d.c.1638) first post-Reformation minister at Lilliesleaf (those earlier being just readers). He was related to John Row, the Reformer. He was educated at St. Leonard’s College and St. Andrews University, becoming ‘laureated’ in 1583. He became Lilliesleaf minister in 1588 (after being Reader for 2 years) and continued until at least October 1638. He was presented to the parsonage and vicarage by Robert, Lord Roxburgh about 1609. He is said to have frequently shed tears while preaching. In 1615 he was rebuked for allowing ‘the gudewife of Sinton’ (possibly the widow of Walter Scott of Synton) from Ashkirk parish to take communion, ‘she being a contemner of her awin minister and of her awin kirk’. He may be the same man as Thomas ‘M.A.’ recorded as schoolmaster in Selkirk in 1626 and 1629. His elder son was Thomas (who was Reader at Selkirk and then minister of Crailing), and his younger son William (who succeeded as minister at Lilliesleaf). Rev. Thomas (c.1592–c.1658) probably son of Thomas, minister of Lilliesleaf, he graduated from St. Andrews in 1614 and became minister of Crailing in 1621. He left a widow and son, John. Note that there were other ministers of the same name living at a similar time, and who were probably related. He signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. Rev. Thomas (17th C.) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1659, he was a minister in London and then became minister of Galashiels in 1665. He is recorded holding lands at ‘Feirlenown, Bwlie’ in 1669. He was translated to North Leith in 1672 and translated to the Collegiate or Second Charge of the Tolbooth (Edinburgh) in 1687. Rev. Thomas (17th C.) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1668, he was licensed in 1676 and later the same year became minister at Abbotrule. He was translated to Beith (Ayrshire) before mid-1687. But he was only minister there for 2 years. Rev. Thomas (1645–1711) nephew of Rev. Thomas (who was minister at Galashiels and the Tolbooth in Edinburgh, and who held lands at Bwlie). He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1662 and was part of the meeting of Lothian and Tweeddale ministers after the Toleration. In 1689 he became first minister of the Canongate. He was twice Moderator of the General Assembly. He married Rachel, daughter of John Sinclair, minister at Ormiston. Note that it is easy to confuse the various nearly contemporary ministers of the same name. He may be the Thomas who was said to have officiated at a field conventicle in 1679 when Graham of Cleverhouse was searching the local countryside.

Thomas (17th C.) resident of Minto Craigend who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. He could be the Thomas who witnessed a baptism for Adam Inglis ‘in huntla’ (i.e. Huntlaw) in Robertson Parish in 1682. Probably the same Thomas ‘glkie’ is recorded in Hassendean in a baptismal record of 1683. His wife was Janet Dodds and their children included Helen (b.1683) and William (b.1684). The witnesses in 1683 were John ‘glickie’ and Walter Davidson. Thomas (17th/18th C.) tailor in Hawick. In 1742 he witnessed a baptism for gardener Alexander Donald. He paid tax for 11 windows in Hawick in 1748. In 1720 he married Margaret, daughter of John Purdom (schoolmaster and Session Clerk). Their children included: Marion (b.1721); Janet (b.1723); John (b.1724); Margaret (b.1725); Margaret (again, b.1727); Robert (b.1729); Christian (b.1731); Margaret (again, b.1734); and William (b.1737). The 1726 baptism was witnessed by William Sadler and Henry Orrack and the 1731 one by Walter Scott and John Glendinning. He could be the merchant Thomas who witnessed baptisms for Walter Purdom (perhaps related to his wife) in 1759, 1760 and 1765, the Thomas who witnessed baptisms for merchant Richard Purdom in 1762 and 1773, and the merchant Thomas who witnessed baptisms for shoemaker James Chisholme in 1762 and for baxter William Elliot in 1763. Thomas (b.1806/7) from Kirkliston in Middlothan, he was a farmer in Newcastle. In 1861 he is listed as a horse hirer on Douglas Square. He was on the Town Committee of Management in the 1860s. His wife was Agnes and their children included John and Margaret. Rev. William (d.1671) probably son of Thomas, Lilliesleaf minister, he graduated from St. Andrews in 1614 and himself became minister at Lilliesleaf in 1640. While preaching at Melrose in 1640 he was apparently interrupted in the middle of a sermon by the passage of English troops going from Berwick to Duns. His initials are inscribed on a panel containing a sun-dial that is built into the modern kirk at Lilliesleaf and bears the date 1642. The county valuation of 1643 records that £20 was paid to the Reader, who was probably him. He was confined to his parish in 1662 for not conforming to Episcopacy. He apparently died suddenly. His son Thomas was the first minister of the Canongate in Edinburgh (formerly written ‘Whilkie’ and ‘Wilky’).

Wilkinson (wil-kin-sin) n. Charles (18th C.) writer (i.e. lawyer) of Huntlywood, Melrose, who was made an Honorary Burgess in 1751. Richard (20th C.) hosiery foreman with Pesco’s. He played rugby for the P.S.A. He married Joan, daughter of George Cairncross, who manufactured aerated waters. Their children included Richard and Irene, who married a McLeod. Richard ‘Dick’ (1931/2-2020) son of Richard and Joan Cairncross. He worked for John C.Laurie, framesmith’s of Teviot Crescent. Later he worked in Innerleithen and then lived in Gala. He was a keen member of the Teviotdale Harriers, being Captain 1953/4 and becoming a life member in 1988. In 1952 he won the 4-mile Jubilee Trophy, as well as the 7-mile cross-country and 1-mile titles, and in 1958 won the 5-mile Menzies Trophy. Thomas of Chesterhall (18th/19th C.) merchant in Amsterdam, who was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1788. He was admitted in 1780, with no objections. He was recorded as owner of lands in Ashkirk Parish in 1788 (and still according to the 1811 Land Tax Rolls), which had previously belonged to Scott of Whitslade, including Ashkirk Mill, Kirkhouses, Salenside, Castleside and Broadlee. Some of these lands were sold to Archibald Cochrane in 1795 (sometimes written ‘Wilksesion’; see also Wullison).

will (wil, wul) n., arch. power, choice, particularly in phrase ‘to come in or someone’s will’, meaning to surrender to someone’s wishes – ‘The said day, Bessie Henderson, ... confess’d of the said pettis in the nicht, and cam in will for the same’ [BR1638], ‘...the said Robert Deans came in will for bluiding of the said Robert Scott upon the cheek and hand ...’ [BR1640], ‘He, the said John Hardie came in the baylyes will for his il-leagal and irregural marriage’ [BR1712], ‘This day Mr Watson in Leeds and me bargained for the Brodly wool, he came in my will for 6/- the stone’ [JB], or ‘put in one’s will’, meaning to leave things to the other’s discretion – ‘Hyred Will Nickle to caw the plevgh from Martinmas to Whitsunday for a pair of shoes – 2s that he put in my will ...’ [JB] (cf. wull).

from Larne, having also served in the Ulster Defence Regiment. He made several improvements to the Kirk, but some of his comments from the pulpit and literature he distributed proved unpopular with much of the congregation and he left (for a new charge at Brockham Green, Surrey) amid acrimonious dispute. He is now minister at Leigh, Surrey. He also wrote a controversial book ‘Proof the Bible is True’, became well known for chairing a survey of church attendance published in 2005, and also posts responses on a ‘Bible Questions Answered’ web-site.

Willat (wi-li) n. another variant of Elliot.

Will Easton’s Well (wil-ees-tinz-wel) n. part of the town’s public water supply, situated near the Tower Hotel.

Willglen Mill (wil-glen-mill) n. name sometimes used for the building at 22 Commercial Road. The name presumably came from this being part of the set of mills run by Wilson & Glenly. It was built around the 1890s for Hunter & Young’s hosiery manufacturers, then used by Hawick Woollen Manufacturing Co. Ltd. 1922–25 and by Wilglen Hosiery Ltd. from 1925. It was used by dressmakers W. & O. Marcus 1940–1964, with part also occupied by the Red Cross. It then became the Scout Headquarters. The main part of the building was demolished in 2000 as part of road improvements to Commercial Road, with the back part of the original ‘L’ still standing (also sometimes written ‘Wilglen’).

William (wi-lee-um) n. name of one King of Scotland and 4 Kings of the United Kingdom. William I (1143–1214) King from 1165. His name came from his standard, the red lion rampant on a yellow background. He was part of the Canmore family and was Earl of Northumbria from 1152, until forced to yield the title to Henry II of England in 1157. He tried to regain Northumbria, but was captured at the Battle of Alnwick in 1174 and taken to Normandy. To be released he had to acknowledge Henry as his feudal superior in the Treaty of Falaise, which lasted for 15 years. Because of this focus on the Borders, it is probable that he passed near or through Hawick. He certainly spent some time in Jedburgh, where he granted many charters. He also arranged the ‘Auld Alliance’ with France, which effectively existed for the next 300 years. He was succeeded by his son Alexander II. William III of England (1650–1702) King of England from 1689, taking the crown from James II in the ‘Glorious Revolution’ and re-establishing a Protestant monarchy with Mary II. He was son of William II, Prince of Orange and Mary Stuart (daughter of Charles I). He married Mary, daughter of James II and ruled the United Provinces of the Netherlands from 1670, until invited to England by James’ opponents. In 1689 the clergy were required to pray for the new King and Queen and to denounce James II or lose their positions. Only 3 ministers out of 33 in the Presbyteries of Jedburgh, Kelso and Selkirk did this. There was also continued opposition in Scotland from the Jacobites. William IV (1765–1837) King from 1830, being crowned after the death of his brother George IV. There was a Coronation Dinner held in the Town Hall in 1831, chaired by Dr. John Douglas. He was originally a Whig supporter and helped push through reforms, although by the time the Reform Bill was passed he had switched his sympathies to the Tories.

William (wi-lee-um) n. (11th/12th C.) 2nd Abbot of the abbey in Selkirk (which would become Kelso Abbey. He took over from Radulf in 1117 or 1118, but retired in 1119, after only a couple of years. He returned to Tiron and was succeeded by Herbert.

William (wi-lee-um) n. (12th C.) one of the chaplains (‘capellano’) probably of Hawick (along with Algar) who was recorded as witness to a charter in about 1183, the first mention of a church at Hawick. He is also one of the first people associated with Hawick of whom we have record, although whether he actually resided there is unknown. He may be the William, Clerk of Hawick (‘Willo, Cleric de hauwic’) mentioned as witness to: a Lovel charter of about the 1190s, swapping the lands of Branxholme for some nearby lands in the Barony of Hawick granted to the canons of St. Andrews; a charter of Geoffrey Riddell to Kelso Abbey in the period 1185–1204; a charter of Ralph de Vere to Kelso Abbey sometime in 1165–1195; and a charter of William de Moreville to Melrose Abbey in 1189–1195. He may have still been Hawick chaplain when St. Mary’s was dedicated in 1214.

William (wi-lee-um) n. (d.1227) son of John, who was son of Orm, who gave his name to Ormis-ton on Kale Water. He was referred to William of Hownam and also William de Landales. He confirmed his father’s gift of land in Hownam to Melrose Abbey, but there followed a dispute with the monks, and he ended up having the property for his life. He witnessed many grants to religious institutions, e.g. in the period 1165–85 a grant of Anselm of Whilton to Melrose Abbey, lands in Clifton around the 1180s, lands in Whilton by William, son of Walter de Ryedale in the period 1185–1215 and lands in Eskdale and elsewhere in Dumfriesshire by Gervase, son of Robert Avenel. In the 1210s he witnessed a grant to the Convent of Dunfermline and perhaps a little later a grant to St. Andrews Priory. In the 1210s he also witnessed a grant by Patrick of Ryedale of lands in Whittington to Melrose Abbey, and a further grant of lands in Lilliesleaf by Walter, son of Patrick of Ryedale to Melrose Abbey. He witnessed further grants to Melrose and Kelso in about 1220. He was last recorded as witness to a transaction by Alexander of Chatto to Melrose Abbey for lands in Hownam in 1226. His wife was Donancia de Cleresei. They had sons: John of Landle, who may have been ancestor of the later Landle’s; and William of Orniston, ancestor of the Ornistons.

William (wi-lee-un) n. (12th/13th C.) son of Hugh. In the period 1214–49 he witnessed the sale of lands in West Lilliesleaf by Adam, son of Adam of Durham. It seems likely he was a local man, perhaps a cleric.

William (wi-lee-un) n. (13th C.) Dean of Teviotdale, in the Diocese of Glasgow, recorded sometime in the period between 1251 and 1274. His surname is unknown.

William (wi-lee-un) n. (13th C.) Vicar of Hassendean. He is recorded as a witness for several undated documents, preserved in the chartulary of Coldstream Priory, from around 1280.

William Beck’s Stockin Shop see Beck’s William Fawlaw’s Close (wi-lee-un-faw-lawz-klöös) n. former name for lands in the Barony of Feu-Rule, i.e. Hobkirk Parish, mentioned in a land dispute of 1561 and 1562. It lay to the east of Nether Billerwell.

Williamhope (wi-lee-un-höp) n. farmstead between the Yarrow and Tweed valleys, just south of Ashiestiel Hill and west of what is now Yair Hill Forest. These were Crown lands from around 1456 and were leased by Thomas Ker of Merchiston in 1488 and David Murray in the early 16th century. Sheep were recorded being stolen from there in 1494/5. Alexander Pringle in ‘Craglesche’ held the lands in 1541, paying £24. John Stoddart was there in 1741/2 (the name occurs as ‘Williamhope’ in 1456, ‘William hop’ in 1494/5, ‘William hop’ in 1502 and ‘Williamhope’ in 1541).

William Inglis’ (wi-lee-un-ing-ul-zeez) n. carrier’s firm of the early 19th century, operating weekly between Hawick and Dunfries (there was a separate ‘Inglis’ which ran to Berwick).

William Laidlaw Memorial Hall (wi-lee-un-läd-law-me-mö-ree-ul-hawl) n. village hall in Bonchester Bridge, designed by J.P. Alison in 1899. Its erection was funded by Sir Robert Laidlaw in memory of his son William, who died in infancy, and his father, also William. It was renovated with help from the Lottery Fund in 2003.

William Lockie’s Well (wi-lee-un-lo-keez-wel) n. a former private pump, also sometimes used by the public, its precise location uncertain. There are at least a couple of possible William Lockies after whom it might have been named.

William of Deloraine (wi-lee-un-ov-de-lo-rän) n. fictional character in Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Lay of the Last Minstrel’. He is the champion of the Lady of Branxholme, who rides to Melrose Abbey to get Michael Scott’s mystic book, is injured by the evil dwarf page of Henry of Cranstoun and through magic is impersonated by Henry for the final duel with Sir Richard Musgrave – ‘A stark moss-trooping Scott was he, As e’er couch’d Border lance by knee; Through Solway sands, through Tarras moss, Blindfold, he knew the paths to cross’ [SWS].

William of Hawick (wi-lee-un-ov-hlk) n. prebend (i.e. member of the clergy receiving a stipend) of Sir David Guthrie, mentioned in 1435. There was also a ‘William, clerics de Hawick’ who witnessed a charter of about 1300.

Williams (wi-lee-unz) n. A.S. (19th/20th C.) teacher at the Buccleuch School who moved to Teviot Grove Academy in 1895 when it became the new secondary school. He was the main assistant teacher of the senior classes, replacing Mr. Brown. Dr. Harry (1913–2016), O.B.E., living at Gattonside in his later life, he was a member of the Hawick Salvation Army for many years. He trained in medicine and as at the Salvation Army training college and became a missionary surgeon, specialising in reconstructive surgery. He worked at several hospitals in India and was involved with relief work in Vietnam and elsewhere. A hospital was named after him in Bolivia. He was appointed O.B.E. in 1970 for work in the field of plastic surgery, particularly for leprosy sufferers. He was Chief Medical Officer for the Catherine Booth Hospital. He married Eileen Neeve in 1939. He died at the age of 103. John (18th C.) servant at Borthwickbrae when his child (or perhaps he himself) was baptised in Robertson
William’s Cleuch

Parish in 1775. He was footman at Borthwickbrae in 1778 and 1779, when he was working for John Elliot. By 1785 he was a house servant at Borthwickbrae. His name is transcribed in one document as ‘William’. Robert (18th/19th C.) stabler and public house proprietor of the High street, recorded in Pigot’s 1825 directory.

William’s Cleuch (wi-lee-unz-klooch) n. small stream rising on Burnt Craig and running north-east to join the Slitrig.

William Scott’s Well (wi-lee-un-skots-wel) n. a former private pump at the foot of the Green Wynd (Beaconsfield Terrace, or perhaps the continuation of Morrison Place).

Williamshope (wi-lee-unz-hop) n. former name for lands in the Barony of Cavers, located somewhere in upper Teviotdale. It is listed between Corriesike and Giddenscleuch when the Barony was inherited in 1687 and 1698. There may be a connection with ‘WilliamSrig’, which was also in the Barony. However, it seems unlikely to be related to ‘Williamhope’ in the Yarrow valley.

Williamson (wi-lee-un-sin) n. Alan (1969/70–) from Dunfermline, he came to Hawick to teach History and Modern Studies, moved to the Highlands, then was Principal Teacher of History at Earlston, returning to Hawick as Depute Headteacher in 2002. He was High School Rector from 2006. Charles (19th C.) Hawick draper, listed on the 1837 electoral roll. He was also recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory as a draper on the High Street. He was mentioned in connection with ‘fictitious voters’, having a reciprocal life-rent agreement with John Robertson in Selkirk. He was listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory as Secretary of the Hawick Reading Room at the Tower Knowe. He had a business at the Tower Knowe, which was taken over by William Kedie and Walter Armstrong when he emigrated to Australia in 1839. He sailed on the ship Palmyra and founded a business in Collins Street in Melbourne. He married Elizabeth Waldie and their children included Joan (d.1833), who is buried at St. Mary’s and Isabella (d.1840), who died in Melbourne. Cornelius (b.1814/5) from England he was a ‘sinker maker’ in Hawick. In 1841 he was on O’Connell Street and was at about 12 Howegate in 1851. He was also listed as a ‘sinker maker, Back row’ in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Sarah. Rev. George (1741/2–1817) native of Alloa, he was the first minister of the East Bank (‘Burgher’) Church, from 1774. However, he lasted only about 9 years, there being dissaray among the congregation and argument about his stipend. The precise details of why a segment of the congregation turned against him are now unknown, but one suggestion is that he declined to marry someone who had effectively been selected for him, and another idea is that his acceptance of charity from Dr. Charters of Wilton was resented. James Winthorpe published a pamphlet about the dispute, ‘A Dialogue between Two Burghers on the Ejection of the Rev. Mr. Williamson from the Eastend’, but no copies are known. He finally left in 1783 following disagreements with his congregation, his successor referring to his ‘offensive peculiarities’. Nevertheless, he remained in Hawick for several months, preaching to his sympathisers in the Little Haugh. The East-end congregation subsequently had a difficult time finding a new minister, calling at least 2 other men before James Henderson was ordained in 1791. In 1785 a group of the congregation obtained a ‘decree of removing’ from the meeting house against him. After leaving Hawick he attached himself to the ‘Auld Licht’ party and was a probationer for 6 years before becoming minister at St. Andrews in 1789. However, in 1796 there was again a dispute over the payment of the stipend, with him claiming he had not been paid, but then a paper being produced in which he signed for the payment. He left to become an independent preacher, suffering from ill-health and poverty and dying in Kirkcaldy. He wrote ‘Separation no schism …’ (1800). In Hawick in 1775 he married Betty Dalgleish, daughter of the farmer at Fastheugh in Yarrow. An unnamed daughter of his died in Hawick in 1781 and a son Simon in 1782. There is no known portrait of him. George (b.1814/5) born in Collessie in Fife, he was head gardener at Minto House in the 1860s. His wife was Margaret and their children included Eliza and George. James (b.1821) born in Southdean Parish, son of Alexander and Helen Jamieson. He moved to Edinburgh with his parents when young. He married in 1845 and travelled around the countryside with his wife selling baskets. In 1866 his wife died after he had assaulted her and he was sentenced to 15 years in prison. In 1868 there was a legal dispute between Southdean and an Edinburgh Parish over who was liable to support his children Helen and Anne. His other children were David and John. James ‘Nellie Swinton’ (19th/20th C.) well-known Hawick character whose nickname was, for some reason, that of a woman. He was noted for training runners. His father had died from a fall in the Sandbed while decorating a shop for Edward,
William’s Rig

Prince of Wales’ wedding. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish, recorded in 1698 as a servant to the Laird of Woll. He married Margaret Cuthbertson and their children included Beatrice (b.1694), Agnes (b.1696) and John (b.1698). The witnesses in 1694 were John Stewart and Robert ‘Humnum’. Perhaps the same John secondly married Isobel Tait and had children Agnes (b.1708) and Walter (b.1710). Margaret (19th C.) merchant of the Kirk Wynd. She was daughter of Alexander Russell and Margaret Crozier. May (20th C.) writer of ‘The Non-Celtic Place-Names of the Scottish Border Counties’, submitted in 1942 as a Ph.D. thesis at the University of Edinburgh. It is the seminal work on the origin of local placenames. Thomas (15th C.) recorded in 1493 as resident of ‘irkland de Wiltoun’. Adam Turnbull in Hornshole was allowed to ‘compone’ for several crimes, including stealing 12 sheep from him. Thomas (18th/19th C.) slaughterer in Hawick. The death of his wife is recorded in 1824.

W. (18th/19th C.) minister in the Hawick area who was one of the first members of the Curling Club in 1803. William (17th/18th C.) shepherd in Whitchesters. He is recorded there in 1719. In 1725 he witnessed a baptism in 1725 for William Cathrae in Closses. He is probably the William ‘Willieson’ who (along with John Hobkirk) witnessed a baptism for James Glendinning (who also lived at Whitchesters) in 1731. He married Marion Thomson and their children included: Margaret (b.1714); Alexander (b.1716); William (b.1719); William (again, b.1722); and Marion (b.1725). The witnesses in 1719 were John Glendinning ‘Elder’ and tailor Robert Gledstains. William (b.1807/8) from Edinburgh, he worked as a tinsmith and gas-fitter in Hawick. In 1841 he was at ‘Kirkyard’ and in 1851 on the Loan. His wife was Mary, and their children included Margaret, James, Charles, William and Ann (formerly written ‘Williamson’).

William’s Rig (wi-lee-unz-rig) n. ridge in the Slitrig valley, to the north of Burnt Craig and just to the west of an extensive series of earthworks. The ridge contains the remains of an enclosure, about 38 m in diameter. This is probably the ‘Williamrig’ described being in Cavers Parish and owned by the Elliotts of Stobs at the end of the 17th century, e.g. among lands inherited by Sir William Elliott in 1692. It appears on a list between ‘Herretburn’ and ‘Mirrilaw’. It was still in the Barony of Cavers when inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687 and and by his brother Archibald in 1698 (it is ‘William-rig’ in 1678, transcribed ‘Williamslidg’ in 1687 and is ‘Williamsrig’ in 1698).

William Wilson & Sons (wi-lee-un-wul-sin-an-sunz) n. William Wilson & Sons hosiery manufacturers from 1819–51, founded by William Wilson, who had been in business since 1788. It began with Langlands Mills and with warehouses behind 13 High Street. The warehouse moved to the top of Wilton Path and a mill was opened at Weensland in about 1835. They started with hosiery, but branched out into flannel, blankets and tweed. The company received regular support from the Board of Trustees for Manufactures through the 1830s. With business booming and the families of the original ‘Sons’ having several sons growing up to enter the trade, in 1851 the business was essentially split among the 3 sons who mainly controlled it, Walter, John and George: Ladylaw and Langlands Mills went to John Wilson; Weensland Mill went to George Wilson; and additional land at Weensland, together with Allars Crescent and the property at 13 High Street went to Walter Wilson.

Winning (wi-ning) n. John Gray (d.1927) native of Lanark, who was a local solicitor, usually referred to as ‘John G.’ He was known as a good public speaker. He was Common Riding Chief Guest in 1903, Callants’ Club President in 1911 and involved in many aspects of the town. He was Chairman of Hawick Parish Council. He laid the foundation stone for Lodge St. John 111. He edited the 1894 edition of Scott of Satchells History of the Scott Family. He lived at Branhomle Knowe. He married Jemima Girdwood. Their children included twins Thomas (who became Cornet) and John (who died young).

Jemima nee Girdwood (19th/20th C.), known as ‘Mrs. J.G. Winning’, she was wife of John G. She was known locally as a writer, publishing ‘A Song of Hawick’, and contributing to the writing for the Quater-centenary Pageant. Thomas Girdwood ‘Tom’ (1888–1941) son of John G., he was born at Branhomle Knowe. He was educated at George Watson’s in Edinburgh, and credited with writing a school song there. He volunteered for the Lothian and Berwickshire Imperial Yeomanry in 1905, before attending Edinburgh University, where he trained as a lawyer. He apprenticed in Hawick with James Barrie, W.S., then with an Edinburgh solicitors before returning to Hawick, where he became a partner in Guthrie and Winning by 1912. On the outbreak of WWII, he joined the Lothian and Borders Horse, and after training was posted to France, then to Salonika. Demobbed in March 1919, he was Cornet that same year, the first since the end of the war. He settled back in as a solicitor in Hawick, becoming first President of the Mosstroopers’ Club and Common Riding Committee Secretary 1923–25. However, in 1925 he moved to Edinburgh to set up Hamilton & Winning, solicitors, in Dundas Street. He was appointed Secretary of the Grand Lodge of Scotland.

Winnington (wi-ning-tin) n. area to the north-west of Stobs, containing the farm of Winningtonrig and the marshy land at Winnington Moss. Stobs army camp was on this land. The farm of Winningtonhall was lower down, perhaps near the present Woodfoot Cottage. The lands were long held by the monks of Jedburgh Abbey and for a period had the status of a barony, including ‘the lands and towns of Wyndingtoun, the lands of Wyndingtonhall and mill, the lands of Smynsteid, Over and Nether Kirkwood, Barndsyd and Horslie’ and some pieces of land in Jedburgh; in 1610 the barony was inherited by Marion, Jean and Margaret Hamilton, heirs of Patrick Hepburn. In 1621 Winnington and Winningtonhall were purchased by Gilbert Elliott of Stobs from Robert Elliot of Redheugh. It was among lands whose superiority was inherited by daughters of George Scott (from the Whitslade Scotts) in 1670. Along with Winnington it was valued at £120 in 1788 and 1813 (it is ‘Wyndetounhall’ in 1463, appears to be ‘Wyndytourhall’ in 1483, then is ‘Wynditonehall’ in 1484/5, ‘Winditonhaw’ in 1497/8, ‘Wyndingtonhall’ in 1579, ‘Wodintoun Hall’ in 1593, ‘Winningtounhauch’ and ‘Windintounhall’ in 1605, ‘Winningtonlaw’ in 1607, ‘Wyndingtonhall et molendino ejusdem’ in 1610, ‘Windingtounhall’ in 1622, ‘Windingtounhall’ in 1657 and ‘Windingtoun-hall’ in 1813; it is sometimes ‘Winnington Haugh’).

Winnington Mill (wi-ning-tin-mill) n. former corn mill at Winnington. In 1788 the value of separate parts of the estate of Elliott of Stobs are given and ‘Windington-mill and mill-lands’ were listed as £62 19s 9d. It is unclear where exactly this was, with one possibility being that it is effectively the same as Newmill-on-Slitrig.

Winnington Moss (wi-ning-tin-mos) n. boggy area between Winnington Rig and Hawick Moor. The boundary of the Common ran through it, this being the ‘Wintownmoss on the south’ described in the 1537 Charter. Acreknewe Burn rises there. A field in this area is the most extreme part of the modern Common of Hawick, where the ‘Cuttin o the Sod’ ceremony takes place annually. Peat was cut there by Burgesses, although there were orders for it not to be used, e.g. in 1713 and 1733. In 1755 the Burgh Officers and others were paid ‘for baking bakes, and breaking and Winnington Rig

Winnington Rig (wi-ning-tin-rig) n. farm above what was the Stobs Military Camp, extending over to the edge of the Common. It was once part of the Barony of Winnington. In 1622 the farm was sold by Robert Elliot of Redheugh and his brother William Elliot of Hartgarth (also know as 'of Rigg') to Gilbert Elliott of Stobs: it was an 11 merk land, sold along with the rest of Winnington. It was then owned by the Ellotts of Stobs for many generations. The family of Sir Andrew Smith also lived on the lands belonging to the farm. There was once a small community there, with several houses. Mungo Dalglish was there in 1622 and John Penman in 1688. There were 6 householders listed there on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, 3 Scotts, 2 Fallsides and a Glendinning. John Harkness and John Cavers were there in about 1710 and William Hall and William Martin around 1720. William Douglas was also recorded as a tailor there in 1720. Gilbert Elliot was there in the early part of the 18th century. John Scott was there in 1744. It was valued at £319 14s 6d in 1788. William Elliot farmed this and other lands in at least the period 1785–97. John Tait was also there in 1787. James Henderson was there in 1811. It was still valued at about £320 in 1813. George and Alexander Aitchison were farmers there in the 1860s. It was farmed by Mr. Brydon around 1900. A story was once told (probably originating in the 18th century) of 2 fairies that used to frequent the farm, often performing helpful tasks, but once, when their piping revels were disturbed, they made all the farm animals call loudly for the whole of the next day. The main farmhouse has long been deserted. There are more buildings and enclosures depicted on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map than currently exist. A perforated stone disc from here is in the Museum – ‘In throwe the knowes o’ bracken That huddle roun’ Winnington Rig: Or slowly alang the ribboned road That sailles Crawbyres Brig?’ [WL] (often written as one word ‘Winningtonrig’ and as ‘Winningtonridge’; it is ‘Windingtonerig’ in 1622, ‘Windingtournrig’ in 1657, ‘Winding-toun-rigg’ in 1688, ‘Wingingtounridge’ in 1694, ‘Wingingtounridge’ in 1710, ‘Wingingtounridge’ in 1717, ‘Wingingtounridge’ in 1722, ‘Wingingtounridge’ in 1744, ‘Wingingtounridge’ in 1759 and 1788, and ‘Winningtounrig’ in 1797; it is ‘Winningtounridge’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Winnington Rig Winthrope

Winthrope (wi-ning-tin-rig) n. farm above what was the Burnfoot on the east, Troutlawfoord upon the west, the dykes of Goldielands and Fenwick upon the north, and the syke of Winding-Toun Moss upon the South’ [BR1734], ‘...in all the Mosses of the Commodity of Hawick for the present year, 1743, except in Windington Moss...’ [BR1743] (‘Windingtoun Moss-side’ is recorded in 1717).

Winnock (wi-nuk) n., poet. a window – ‘For the growling jarr came on the gust, And the winnock glinted bright’ [JTe], ‘Like skinklin stars When mirk haps doun Are winnocks lit Owre a’ the toun’ [WL].

Winraw (win-raw) v., arch. to built peat into stacks – ‘After a like period they were ‘winrawed’, that is, the peat was built loosely into rows so that they were exposed to the wind, hence the name ‘winraw’’ [BM1907] (cf. wun).

Winterburgh (win-tur-bu-ru) n. former farmstead in the Ettrick valley, between Newburgh and Crosslee. These were Crown lands from at least 1456. They were let to Robert Scott in 1483, then in 1488-92 let to William Roger and Robert Scott. It is probably the ‘Wynterburn’ where John Laidlaw was located in 1494/5 when he had remission for murder. In 1499 they were let to John, son of John Murray of Falahill. It remained Crown property until at least 1502. By 1512 it was feud to James, 2nd son of John Murray of Falahill. Robert Scott of Wamphray claimed tenancy of the lands in 1541, paying £21 yearly. The lands were later owned by a son of Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane. It was owned by the Scotts of Newburgh in the late 16th and early 17th centuries. The lands were listed among the possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in Ettrick Forest in 1663 and part of the Buccleuch estates afterwards (it is ‘Wyntyburn’ in 1456, ‘Wyntyburn’ in 1460, ‘Wyntirburn’ in 1469, ‘Wintirburn’ in 1488, ‘Wintirburn’ in 1490 and 1492, ‘Wyntrirburn’ in 1499, ‘Wintirburn’ in 1501, ‘Winterburn’ in 1541, ‘Wintirburn’ in 1578 and ‘Wyntrburne’ in 1583/4).

Winthrope (win-, wun-trup, -thrup) n. Alexander (16th C.) recorded in 1580 being in Castleside, with his surname ‘Wynterhop’. He witnessed a double marriage contract for John in ‘Ilistoun’ and John’s son Robert, with Elizabeth Elliot (widow of Robert Waugh in Ashkirk) and her daughter Janet. Andrew (17th/18th C.) wright in Hawick. He was recorded as a joiner of some sort in Hawick in the early 1700s, listed making stools, church doors, etc. In 1727 he mended the ladder to the steeple in St. Mary’s. In 1740 he was a witness to a baptism for wright
James, who seems likely to have been his son or brother. He is probably the wright who married Bessie Hardie (also from the Town of Hawick) in 1709. Their children included Margaret (b.1707), Thomas (b.1714), Sara (b.1717) and Sara (again, b.1721). Andrew S. (1876/7–1900) son of Mrs. Wintrup of 20 Trinity Street, he was a grocer to trade. He served with the 1st Battalion, Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders and was killed in South Africa. He is listed on the Hawick Boer War Memorial. George (b.1847) son of James and Margaret Rutherford. He became Burgh Surveyor of Castle Douglas. He married Isabella, daughter of joiner Richard Purdom. James (d.bef. 1798) wright in Hawick Parish. In 1735 the Council paid him for providing ‘falding brods in Bailies’ loft’ for St. Mary’s Kirk. In 1755 he was paid for ‘helping the fit-gang of the bailies’ loft’. He married Margaret, whose surname was also ‘Winthrop’. Their children included: James (b.1737), who probably died young; Elizabeth (b.1740); James (b.1742), Hawick lawyer; and Thomas (b.1745), perhaps the wright in Jedburgh. Andrew (b.1733) and Christian (b.1736), with no mother’s name given, may also have been his children. The witnesses in 1737 were baker Robert Boyd and gardener Robert Ker, in 1740 were merchants Francis and John Ruecaster. He was already deceased when his son James, the writer, died. James (d.1798) lawyer in Hawick, son of James. He was probably the James born in Hawick in 1742, his mother being Margaret. He is recorded as ‘the Clerk Writer in Hawick’ in 1778. He may have been Town Clerk from about 1783. Around that time he published a pamphlet about the dispute that had led to the demission of the minister of the East-end Kirk entitled ‘A Dialogue between Two Burghers on the Ejection of the Rev. Mr. Williamson from the Eastend’, of which there are no known copies. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He is listed as ‘writer’ in 1778 when he witnessed a baptism for ex-Bailie Andrew Scott. He may be the James who witnessed a baptism for William Easton in 1795. He married Agnes (1745–1828), daughter of William Wilson and Mary Hardie. Their son was also James. James (d.1820) son of writer James and Agnes Wilson. He served in the army in France. James (1775/6–1849) tailor of the Sandbed who was also a pawn-broker, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He may also be the James listed there as an insurance agent for ‘Hercules’. In 1837 he was a tailor and clothes dealer on the Sandbed. His premises were at ‘Sandbed Bridge End’, and according to the 1841 census his wife was Margaret and they had at least one child, William. James (b.1812) born in Ancrum, he was son of Thomas, who was a carrier in Hawick. He was a shoemaker of the High Street (around No. 48), listed there in 1837 and 1841. He was near the Crown Close in 1851 and later at 7 Cross Wynd. He also worked as an auctioneer (and was listed as such in Slater’s 1852 directory). He married Margaret Rutherford (daughter of Thomas of Haysike) in 1839. Their children included: Jane (or Jean), who married builder George Aitken; George, who became Burgh Surveyor of Castle Douglas; Helen, dressmaker of Oliver Crescent; Christina, who married builder John Elliot; Thomas Hope; and John (b.1855). James (19th C.) school friend of John Inglis, known locally as a poet. He left Hawick in the early 1880s and emigrated to Ontario, where he called his boat ‘Teri Odin’ and continued to write poetry. He was the ‘Border Minstrel’ mentioned in Inglis’ ‘Hawick Among the Hills’. John (15th/16th C.) resident of ‘langeluch’ recorded in 1502. Along with Robert Paterson and James ‘aronyk’, he had 60 sheep stolen by Patrick, son of Adam Scott in Harwoodhill. His surname was written ‘Wintherhope’. John (17th C.) resident in Riddell according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (18th C.) assistant Town Clerk to John Gladstains roughly 1762–68. It is unclear how he was related to other Winthropes. John (b.1802/3) probably born in Cavers Parish, he was miller at Leaderfoot Mill in Melrose Parish. He was said to be son of Thomas, who was a miller in the Hawick area and buried in Hawick. He married Margaret Gray, and their children included: Thomas (b.1827/8); James (b.1829); William (b.1832), who is meant to have served in the U.S. Civil War; Robert (b.1834), who emigrated to America in the 1880s; Mary Ann (b.1837); John (b.1838/9); and Michael (b.1841/2). He is buried in the graveyard at Melrose Abbey. John (b.1805) son of Robert, he was born in Lilliesleaf Parish. He moved to Liverpool, where he became a master brewer. In 1841 he published the poem ‘Friendship, Love, and Truth’, which are the foundational principles of the Society of Oddfellows. In Liverpool in 1831 he married Anne Evans, and she died in 1848. Their children were: Robert (b.1832); Ann (b.1836); Mary (b.1839); and John (b.1842). All 4 children emigrated to the U.S.A., settling in Delaware. John Ainslie (b.1853/4) Winthrope Winthrope next door. Michael bly sister-in-law of Thomas, the carrier who lived listed as 'Formerly (Farmer)'. She was probawas a widow living around the Crown Close and (b.1766/7) from Lilliesleaf Parish, in 1851 she (b.1872); and John Kemp (b.1873). Margaret son. Their children included: Thomas Michael in Ancrum Parish he married Douglas siller that's squandered at Pitch and Toss' [HI].
Robert (b.1862); and George (b.1863) ‘The young; Andrew (b.1857); James (b.1860); Will-(b.1853/4); Helen (b.1855), who probably died was Janet, from Langholm. Robert (1835–1909) born in Melrose Parish, he was son of John, miller at Leaderfoot, but probably related to the Hawick Wintrups. He married Cecilia Fairbairn in 1856 and their children were: John (b.1856); Janet (b.1858); George (b.1860); Thomas (b.1862);
Robert (b.1868); Margaret (b.1870); and Archbald (b.1871). The last 2 children were baptised in Hawick Parish. In the 1880s he emigrated to the U.S., following some of his children. He died in Philadelphia. Thomas (d.1776) writer in Hawick. He witnessed a baptism in 1743 for merchant Andrew Riddell. In 1746 the Town Treas-er paid for giving an account of the poor rates to him. He witnessed baptisms in Hawick in 1756 and 1759 (for William Scoon and Sara Wintrope, likely a relative). Around the 1760s he as-isted as Town Clerk; James Wilson says that he and John Gledstains refused to take the Oath of Government and so resigned in 1768. He may be the same Thomas who was notary for the sasine for the sale of Howcleuch and Borthwick Mains to Walter Scott, farmer at Commonside. He witnessed a document for the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1765. It is possible he is the same Thomas who was Provost of Jedburgh in 1767. His daughter Christina married James Murray, and was the paternal grand-mother of Sir James A.H. Murray. He owned land at the Wheathole (now Trinity Gardens) where East Bank Church was built.
His wife was Jean Scott and their children, baptised in Hawick, were: Sarah (b.1745); Thomas (b.1756); and Charles (b.1757). The witnesses to the 1757 baptism were Bailie James Scott and Bailie Kerr. He hired the Hawick Parish mort-cloth in 1758. His daughter Elizabeth married William Ormiston, barber in Kelso. In 1799 his daughter Elizabeth’s elder son, James, was served heir to him. His office cabinet is in the Museum.
Thomas (18th C.) wright in Hawick. In 1742 he witnessed a baptism for mason James Harkness (although this could be confusion between wright James and writer Thomas). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Jane Easton and their children included: Margaret (b.1770); and William (b.1775). Thomas (b.1776/7) born in Lilliesleaf. He was a carrier in Hawick, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory operating along with John Cochrane between Hawick and Langholm. In 1837 he was operating between Hawick and Langholm, leaving from the Grapes every Tuesday and Friday. His premises were on Buccleuch Street in 1841 and the High Street (near the Crown Close) by 1851. In 1852 he was operating Mondays and Thursdays to Dumfries and Langholm, leaving from the High Street.
He married Helen Anderson and their children were: Isabella (b.1808); Janet (b.1810); James (b.1812/3), shoemaker; Thomas (b.1816); Robert (b.1818); Robert (again, b.1821); and Michael (perhaps the shoemaker and Burgh Officer). He was still alive in 1861. Thomas (b.1801/2) tailor on Orrock Place. He was listed as a tailor on the Howegate in 1837 and at ‘Teviot square’ in 1852. In 1851 he was at 6 Orrock Place.
Wintoun

In 1861 he is recorded at ‘1 Backhouse’ in Hawick. His wife was Margaret and children included Margaret, James, Adam, Isabella, Thomas and George. Widow ?? (18th/19th C.) keeper of a tavern in the early 19th century. There is a record of a Town Council meeting there in 1808. William (16th C.) recorded in 1581 as resident at Burnfoot on Ale when acting as a cautions for William Scott there (spelled ‘Winterhop’, ‘Winterup’, ‘Winthrop’, ‘Wintrup’, ‘Wynterhop’ and other variants in early records; see also Wintrop).

Wintoun (win-tin?) n. variant of Winnington, ‘the syke of Wintoun moss’ forming the southern boundary of the Common in the 1537 charter.

Wintrop see Wintropo

Wishart

Wise (wīz) n. H.C., M.P. (19th C.) made a pencil sketch of the Auld Brig in 1850, perhaps from the foot of the Mill Port. It shows some of the houses formerly at the head of Silver Street.

Wishart (wi-shur’) n. Agnes listed ‘eist the water’ among those paying the Hearth Tax in Hawick in 1694. She probably ran an inn or shop of some kind. Alexander (16th/17th C.) recorded as a notary public in Hawick in 1623. Presumably the same Alexander ‘Wischart’ was officer of Sir James Douglas, Baron of Hawick. In 1612 the Magistrates stopped him collecting customs at the market in Hawick, took him from his house and had him imprisoned in the steeple of St. Mary’s tower. This was also apparently because of him striking Robert Roger of Burnfoot Mill (presumably at the market). He was there for 4 days and nights until released on the orders of the Sheriff of Roxburgh. This incident was part of a complaint by the Baron to the Privy Council. In 1613 it was recorded that there was no schoolmaster in Melrose but he ‘keips the schole’ there. He was presumably related to other clergies from that same family, which produced Bishops of Glasgow in the 13th and 14th centuries. James (b.1825/6) from Dalmeny in West Lothian, he was toll-keeper on Wilton Hill in 1861. His wife was Margaret and their children included Isabella D. and Jeanie Mannal (who married Alexander Scott). James (19th C.) mason at Blackburn in Castleton Parish. He was recorded there in 1879. Janet (17th C.) resident of Cavers who was listed in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (d.1337) probably directly related to the earlier Wisharts connected with the Diocese of Glasgow, he was Archdeacon from at least 1321. He became Bishop in 1335 and was consecrated at Avignon in 1337, but died a few months later, as a result of being captured at sea by the English. His seal showed a bishop in a niche and a kneeling bishop with the words ‘SIGILLUM JOHAN-NIS DEI GR[A. EPI.] GLASGUENSIS’. Marion (17th/6) recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 among those ‘Payed but not listed in Hauick Toun’. She could be the Marion, married to Adam Martin, whose son William Martin was born in Hawick in 1674. Robert (c.1240–1316) probably son or nephew of William, Bishop of St. Andrews, who made him Archdeacon of Lothian in 1267. He was elected Bishop of Glasgow in 1271, after William (who was Bishop-elect) was appointed to St. Andrews. As Bishop of Glasgow, he held authority over Teviotdale. He was Bishop when John Comyn donated the land of ‘Rulehalch’, as confirmed in 1279. He became one of the Guardians of the Kingdom after the death of King Alexander III in 1286. He was active during the Wars of Independence, being a strong supporter of Robert Bruce (grandfather of the future king) against John Baliol. He stated to the English King Edward that 'the kingdom of Scotland is not held in tribute or homage to anyone save God alone'; however, he swore fealty to Edward, along with other prominent Scotsmen in 1296. He is believed to have encouraged William Wallace in 1297, and was imprisoned for a year. Taking an active part on the battlefield, he was captured at Cupar and held as a prisoner 1308–15. He lived out his last year or so back in Scotland, although blind. John, who was a later Archdeacon and then Bishop of Glasgow, may have been his son. He is buried in the crypt of Glasgow Cathedral. His existing seal is of fine workmanship, depicting a full-length figure of a bishop standing on a lion, with heads of 2 saints and a bird below him and the words 'S' ROBERTI DEI GRATIA EPI. GLASGUENSIS'.

William (d.1279) probably son of John, Sheriff of Mearns. He was Archdeacon of St. Andrews from 1254 and was said to have as many as 12 benefices. In 1270 he was elected Bishop of Glasgow after the death of Nicholas de Moffat. However, he was not consecrated in that position before being elected as Bishop of St. Andrews (which was seen as a more senior appointment) in 1271. He died in Morebattle, Teviotdale; however, his association with the region is uncertain. He may have been father of Robert, who was the next Bishop of Glasgow. Mary, who married William Oliphant, may have been his daughter. William (13th/14th C.) cleric of Glasgow Diocese. He was surely related to the Bishop of the same name and also Bishop Robert, although the precise connection is unknown. He became Archdeacon of Teviotdale by 1288, and in that year is listed as 'Guillelmo Thevidaliae' in a papal bull. He was mentioned again as Archdeacon of Teviotdale in 1297. In about 1306 he was imprisoned by the English, and replaced by Edward II soon afterwards. Rev. William (17th C.) 3rd son of Sir John of Pitarrow and Jean Douglas. He graduated from King's College Aberdeen in 1606, and was given the charge of Fettercairn in 1611. In 1613 he was translated to Minto as helper to Samuel Cockburn, and returned again to Fettercairn in 1618, so that he never became Cockburn's successor. He sat on the Court of High Commission in 1634 and became a Burgess of Edinburgh in 1636. He was translated to South Leith in 1630, but deprived in 1639 'for erroneous doctrine'. An opponent of the Covenant, he was forced to flee Scotland in 1639 and died in Cornwall several years later. He married Elizabeth Keith, heiress of Phesdo, and their children were: John, who married Elizabeth Home of Manderston and was killed at Edgehill; Jean, who married Alexander Wood of Benholme; and Elizabeth, who married Sir William Forbes of Monymusk. He wrote 'An Exposition of the Lord's Prayer' (1633); 'Immanuel, a poem' (1642) and 'Aaron's Obsequies' (1635). Rev. William (c.1625–92) minister of Minto Parish, possibly the grandson of the previous Rev. William. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1676 and was ordained at Minto in 1682, where he was presented by Thomas Rutherford of Minto. In 1685 he gained the 'escheat' (i.e. goods forfeited as the result of criminal prosecution) of Alexander Wishart, merchant and Burgess of Glasgow (and presumably a near relation). In 1684 a letter from him to the Earl of Tarras describes the manse as so ruinous that he cannot live in it. He was presented to Sprouston Parish in 1686, but the move did not happen. He was deprived of his living in 1690, presumably for refusing to give up Episcopalianism. He appears to have married Margaret, 2nd daughter of Commissary Wishart in 1685 in Edinburgh (this may have been John Wishart, member of the Commissary Court of Edinburgh, who was nephew of George Wishart who had been Bishop of Edinburgh). She may also have been known as Elizabeth, or else he remarried. They had a daughter Catherine (who married Ninian Wishart from Gen. Hamilton's Regiment). Helen Wishart, servant to his widow Elizabeth, married James Walker in Edinburgh in 1708 (the interrelationships among the family must therefore have been extremely complicated!). Note that there are several contemporary Scottish ministers with the same name, e.g. Rev. William (1621–92), son of Alexander of Pittarrow (and thus a cousin), minister of Kinteil, who was a member of the Dissenting Presbytery from 1651–59 and then spent 13 months in prison, was accused of keeping conventicles in 1675, sentenced to banishment in 1685 for refusing to take the 'Test', but eventually let off and later allowed to preach at Leith (also spelled 'Wischart', 'Wischeart', 'Wyshart', 'Wiseheart', etc.).
the Wisp (thu-wisp, -wisp) n. Wisp Hill, immediately to the west of Mosspaul, reaching a height of 1,953 ft (595 m). It is topped by a triangulation pillar and a cairn, and from the summit on a clear day the Solway and the Lake District can be seen to the south, as well as a magnificent prospect of the Borders to the north and east; it is even said that the Isle of Man has been seen. J.E.D. Murray and Adam Grant wrote a musical play called ‘The Witch o’ the Wisp Hill’. There was also a farmstead on the western side (reached from the Merrylaw road), with John Anderson and family living there in 1861. James Hogg (of ‘Teribus’) was shepherd lad here for a couple of years. There is an ancient cairn on the summit, about 9 m in diameter – ‘Emerging from the glen so drear, With giant Wisp upon your rear; The Vale of Ewes its charms display, Bright shining in the noon-tide ray’ [WSB], ‘To count each magic summit frae the Wisp to Ettrick Pen, Frae the Black Hill to the Eildons and the heights by Harden Glen’ [JYH] (the origin is unclear; note there is another Wisp Hill near Eskdalemuir).

the Wisp Club (thu-wisp-klub) n. former club of the mid-19th century, which met at Mosspaul. It was formed in the Spring of 1826 at a meeting at Mosspaul by several of the local farmers. The founding members were: Alexander Pott, Burnfoot, Langholm; William Brown, Tower Inn, Hawick; James Elliot, Goldielands; Walter Grieve, Southfield; Thomas Lamb, Woodhead; Robert Elliot, Teindside; John Wilson, Hawick; Thomas Davidson, Milnholm; William Aitchison, Linhope; George Aitchison, Linhope; Robert Scott, Eweslees; and Robert Govenlock, Aitchison, Linhope; George Aitchison, Linhope; Thomas Davidson, Milnholm; William Aitchison, Linhope; George Aitchison, Linhope; Robert Scott, Eweslees; Dauid Scot of the Bukchich . . .’ [SB1470], ‘But waste ye that the Lord heth qael owt for himsel’ [HSR].

witter-polo (wi’ur-pó-lo) n. water-polo. For several decades Hawick had a successful team. They defeated Border City (Carlisle) in a match to mark the opening of the Baths.

witter-rat (wi’ur-ráw) n. the water vole, Arvicola amphibius.

witters (wi’urz) n., pl., arch. alcoholic drinks – ‘. . . for furnishings of certain acquawyttie and watters coft and receivit by him’ [BR1642], ‘For payment to him of £6 10 s. worth of hott waters, and aucht merkis worth of pouder, and aucht merkis worth of qhysyt sugar . . . ’ [BR1652] (sometimes called ‘hot witters’).

witter-side (wi’ur-síd, wi-tur-síd) n. water-side, riverside, banks of a river – ‘Whae beides i you hoose doon the waeter-seide?’ [ECS], ‘Langsyne, Aa walkit up the witterside And owre the Station Brig, efter a game . . . ’ [DH], ‘Magic flute an piper Led mice ti the witterside . . . ’ [MB] (there are spelling variants).

Witterside (wi’ur-síd) n. Waterside, formerly a farmstead and possibly fortified house on the south side of the Jed Water, a mile or so east of Chesters. It was valued at 22 shillings in 1538 and 1539. James Oliver was there in 1541, along with Marion and Robert Young, paying 22s yearly. Hob Young was there in 1571/2. The tenant there in 1669 was Thomas Douglas. The tower indicated there may be the one whose remains are near where the Langslack Sike meets the Jed Water, about 150 m east of Hyndhaughhead; this is close to where it is marked by Pont around 1600. The more modern farm is located much further to the east, alongside an old drove road (near where Pont marked ‘Wadeshill’). The remains of the house there probably date from the late 17th century (perhaps replacing the pele house) and was latterly used as a stable. It consists of a single storey plus a garret, with 3 bays and chamfered dressings. It is at the south-east corner of a large enclosure, and there are rig lines and chamfered dressings. It is at the south-east margin of the Jed Water, a mile or so east of the Dodburn Filters, starting in 1882. The second supply came to the onlookers: ‘The water work’ is the most amusing feature of the Dodburn Filters, starting in 1882. The second supply came from the Allan, constructed in 1865, with an extension to the supply in 1932. The second supply came from the Dodburn Filters, starting in 1882.

Witterside Hill (wi-'ur-sid-hil) n. Waterside Hill, hill on the south side of the Borthwick valley, just above the Snoot. It reaches a height of 261 m.

witter-spool (wi-'ur-spool) n., arch. a water-spool, downspout, rainwater-pipe (noted by E.C. Smith).

witter-waggy (wi-'ur-waw-gee) n., arch. pied wagtail – ‘...A water-waggy on a stane ...’ [JBS] (also ‘water-waggy’).

witter-witter (wi-'ur-wi-'ur) n., arch. river water – ‘...waeter-waeter, waal-waeter, sprigget-waeter, or waeter threth a pownd!’ [ECS].

witter work (wi-'ur-wurk) n., arch. popular name for action taking place in the river during Hawick Baa – ‘...most of the play is in the river, and the ‘water work’ is the most amusing feature to the onlookers ...’ [RM] (see also witterin).

witter-works (wi-'ur-wurks) n. water-works. Hawick’s first modern water supply came from the Allan, constructed in 1865, with an extension to the supply in 1932. The second supply came from the Dodburn Filters, starting in 1882.

wittin (wi-tin) n., poet. knowledge, notion, information – ‘Hae the wurkers o’ inequitie nae waetin?’ [HSR], ‘...he that teeches men waetin, sall he nat ken?’ [HSR] (there are spelling variants).

Wighton (wi-tin) n. Adam (13th C.) recorded as ‘Adam de Wyttone’ in Selkirkshire, where he paid homage to Edward I in 1296. His seal bore a small shield and the name ‘S’ADE DE WITTONA’. Michael (13th C.) another of the men who swore fealty to Edward I in 1296. He was from Selkirkshire, like Alan, and had the same surname, ‘de Witten’, as the Parson of Hawick at that time. His seal showed a deer running and the name ‘S’MICHAELIS DE WITTVN’. He was also mentioned in about 1300 in a letter to King Edward written at Melrose, where he craves the tithes of Bothwell. Richard ‘de Wyttone’ (13th/14th C.) Parson of Hawick, who signed the Ragman Rolls in 1292. He is thus one of the earliest Hawick clergymen on record. His seal shows a lion fighting a dragon and the words ‘S’RICARDI DE WYNHOV’. He appears to have only lasted a year before being replaced by another appointee of Edward I. Although one might suspect the name ‘Wytton’ or ‘Witten’ is a corruption of ‘Wilton’ there were 2 others of the same designation in the Rolls, Adam and Michael, both from Selkirkshire. Additionally the Parson of Wilton Parish is listed, with a clear spelling distinction. These may be the lands of Whitten in Morebattle Parish. Probably the same ‘R. de Wyttone’, clerk of St. Andrews was listed in an inquiry of 1288 made into debts of the late King of Scotland, and in the related writ in 1289. In 1292 he is recorded holding the church of ‘Sourby’, which had been granted to him by the King of Scotland.

wizart (wi-zur', -zurt) n., arch. a wizard.

woark (wörk) n., arch. work – ‘...wui the wuddles an the vexes o woark i the mids o a michty ceetic fer ayer sindert’ [ECS], ‘...But note that the verb is ti wurk (= to work), and we say wurkman, wurkshop, wurker, not woarkman, etc.’ [ECS] (this spelling favoured by E.C. Smith to emphasize the pronunciation of the noun form; the verb is also spelled ‘wurk’).

woarl see wort

woarry (wö-ree) n., arch. worry (spelling to emphasize the occasional pronunciation).

wob (wob, wób) n., poet. a web, woven material, piece of woven cloth – ‘...Weavin’ a wob to hap oor banes’ [WL], ‘...And an frae the ae shoddy wob’ [WL].

wober (wob-stur) n., arch. a weaver – ‘The said day, in presence of the bailies and council of Hawick, the hail wobstars being accused for usurping the bailles’ office . . . ’ [BR1643], ‘. . . that the Wobstairs shall receive the town’s work, and refuse none of the town’s work . . . ’ [BR1657] (also written ‘wobstair’ and ‘wobstar’; cf. webster and webster).

the Webster’s Loft (thu-wob-sturz-loft) n. alternative name for the Weaver’s Loft – ‘. . . the hail persons . . . concerned in and have particular interest to that loft in the church of Hawick commonly called the webster’s loft . . . ’ [BR1710].

Woden Law (wō-din-law) n. hill of 1,388 feet (422 m), about 15 miles east of Hawick, near the Border. It was once home for Iron Age settlers and Roman legions, and is now a popular walking area.

Wednesdaysday (wō-denz-di, -ā) n, arch. Wednesday (also spelled ‘Wodn’sday’; Jamieson says ‘The name given to Wednesday by old people in the upper district of Roxb.’).

woft (woft) v., arch. to weft or woof, n. weft, woof, cross-threads, employment in general – ‘Oo’ve naething adae the day – oo’re eidl for woaf at the mill’ [ECS], ‘wairp an woaf = warp and weft’[ECS] (also written ‘woaf’).

wo-hie (wo-hI) interj., arch. call to a horse to turn left.

Wolfcleuch Burn (woolf-clooch-burn) n. stream in what is now Craik Forest, joining the Aithouse Burn, which becomes part of the Borthwick. There is a footpath from the car park at Craik village to the scenic waterfall on this burn. The lands of ‘Wolcleuch’ are recorded in 1535/6 when a horse was stolen from there, belonging to Robert Scott of Howpasley. The stream is fed by several smaller water courses, including Cat Sike.

Wolfcleuchhead (woolf-clooch-heed) n. Wolfcleuchhead, a former shepherd’s cottage near the head of the Borthwick, about 12 miles from Hawick. Until 1689/90, when Roberton was formed, it was part of Hawick Parish. The building is in a clearing of Craik Forest just above the 20 foot high waterfall on the Wolfcleuch Burn. It is said that conventicles were held there in the 17th century and also supposedly used as a hiding place for Peden. One story tells of a thick mist that came down and hid the cottage from the dragoons. There were 4 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650, namely Michael Anderson, Margaret Grieve, Thomas Anderson and Bessie Grieve. It was surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718; at that time it covered 1224 acres and was bounded by Craikhope, Langshawburn, Buccleuch, Craik, Howplesley, Borthwick Water and Craikhope. William Park was there in 1734-37 and Andrew Park in 1737–41. Another William Park was there in at least 1763–75 and William Crozier in 1786. Robert Pringle was shepherd there in 1797, farm labourer Andrew Scott in 1841 and William Armstrong in 1861. The cottage was still occupied into the early 20th century. It was renovated and used as an outdoor centre for groups from Wester Hailes in Edinburgh. Just to the north are the remains of a small turf-banked enclosure (sometimes written ‘Wolfeleighhead’, it is ‘Wolfeleuchhead’ in 1650, ‘Oulvcleuch head’ in 1737 and ‘Woolfcleughhead’ in the 1760s and 1770s; it is marked ‘Wolfeleuch’ on a parish map of 1650, ‘Wolfeleuchhead’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and is on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Wolfehopelee (woolf-fup-lee) n. farm on the B6357 between Wolfelee and Hyndlee, long part of the Wolfelee estate. The lands were partly in Hobkirk, but mostly in Southdean Parish. David Home of Wedderburn was granted these lands, along with those of Wolfelee in 1436. They passed to the Cranstons of that Ilk who sold them to Elliott of Stobs in the 1650s. The tenant farmer was John Teller in the early-to-mid 1800s and later Robert Inglis (also written ‘Wolfoopelee’; it is ‘Wolhopelee’ and ‘Wolphople’ in 1436, ‘Wolphope’ in 1479 and 1515, ‘Wolftu-pee’ in 1522, ‘Willuplie’ in 1525, ‘Wolftu-pee’ in 1550, probably ‘Wosflee’ in 1564, ‘Wolphople’ in 1564, ‘Wolpho-pee’ in 1574, ‘Wowahople’ in 1590, ‘Wolftuople’ in 1627 and ‘Wolfohople’ and ‘Wolpho-pee’ in 1677; it is marked as ‘Wolfohopelie’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Wolfohopelee’ on Stobie’s 1770 map, when, curiously, ‘Wolfelee’ was still known as ‘Woollie’, so the name may indeed be related to ‘wolf’).

Wolfehopelee Burn (woolf-fup-lee-burn) n. stream that rises to the east of Wolfehopelee Hill and is joined by the Cross Sike and the Catlee Burn, becoming part of the headwaters of the Rule. Near the head of the stream there was a linear earthwork linking to the head of the Battling Sike.

Wolfehopeshielz (woolf-fup-sheelz) n. former herds cottage associated with Wolfehopelee. It is recorded in 1762, but there was already no sign of it by the mid-19th century.

Wolfelee (woolf-, woo-lee) n. mansion, estate and hamlet south-east of Hawick, beyond Bonchester, in Hobkirk Parish. On the near side of Wolfelee Hill there are the remains of an ancient settlement, where Roman remains were discovered. In early times the lands may have been owned by Jedburgh Abbey. It is probably the lands of ‘Wleles’ which William of Wauchope was granted in the early years of the 14th century. The lands were given to David Home of Wedderburn in 1436 by William Douglas, 2nd Earl of Angus, who was Lord of the Regality of Jedwood Forest. They were held of the superior for a red rose and were possessed by 7 Home Lairds, until sold to Sir William Cranston by Sir George Home in 1605. Alexander and Robert Turnbull were residents there in 1493. It was listed in 1538 among lands in Jedforest that had passed to the Crown, but the lands were ‘claimed by the laird thereof’; at that time it was valued at £10. In 1528 the superior was the Crown, since the Earl of Angus had forfeited his lands, and they were then held ‘in blench’ for a silver penny. The lands were burned by the English in 1545. There were also Turnbull tenants there in the 16th century, e.g. James and Adam in 1516 and Hector in 1567. It was valued at £1000 along with other Southdean lands of Lord Cranston in 1643. The Cranstons in turn sold the estate to the Eliotts of Stobs in 1651, who passed it to the Stonedge branch. Gilbert Elliott of Stanedge paid the land tax on £1000 in 1678. The Eliotts of Stonedge, being in serious debt, were ordered to sell it off in 1730, the purchaser being William Elliot, an Edinburgh lawyer. His descendants held it until 1912. Bonnie Prince Charlie and his men camped near here in 1745. Robert Shortreed was occupier for a short period, paying tax for 17 windows in 1748 (when it was listed in Southdean Parish). William Oliver is recorded paying the house tax there in 1792–94. Thomas Scott was tenant in 1797. The lands were valued at £1000 in 1788 (when held by Cornelius Elliot). James Elliot changed the name from ‘Woollee’ when he had the main house built 1825–27, with architects and building work by Smith of Darnick. This incorporated part of an earlier building (specifically the lower, vaulted chamber, which was about all that was still standing), which had been itself rebuilt in 1698. This earlier house is mentioned as the location for a marriage contract in 1612. It was used as a dower-house by the Eliotts of Stobs and Stonedge in the late 17th and early 18th centuries. Tax was paid on 10 hearths at ‘The Place of oulie’ in 1694, suggesting it was already a large house; at the same time ‘The farmer at woulie’ paid tax on 2 hearths. A stone marked ‘D M-N G E E S 1698’ (for Dame Margaret Nicholson, Gilbert Elliott and Elizabeth Scott) from the old house was built into the later one. This new house was extensively renovated as a Scottish Baronial mansion in 1860–62. Its most famous resident was Sir Walter Elliot, the 4th Laird, who lived there 1860–87, and was well-known as a naturalist and collector. Sir Walter’s son Edward sold the estate in 1912 to Sir Robert Laidlaw and in 1930 to Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. The house had several later uses, including as Beverley School around the years of WWII, and then as a hotel. It was destroyed by fire in 1977, and is now little more than a lawn, although the stable block has been converted into a house. Locals continued to call it by the earlier name well into the 20th century. The house was probably the original of Sir Walter Scott’s Wolfcraig castle in ‘Heart of Midlothian’ and ‘Guy Mannering’. The noted art critic John Ruskin, who visited, said that the view from his bedroom window was the most beautiful he had seen in the United Kingdom. The lands were split into the farms of Over and Nether Wolfelee according to a sasine of 1479 and again in the 17th and 18th centuries. The old farmhouse was close to the site of the mansion house and was demolished in 1824, some of the stone being used for Wolfelee House. The newer farm of Wolfelee was called Cleuchhead. There have been Tuesday Ride-outs to here. The beech hedges that enclosed the house survive, as do 2 lodges (also spelled ‘Wollee’ and variants; it is probably first recorded as ‘Wleles’ in about 1305 and is certainly ‘Wolle’ and ‘Wolle’ in 1436, ‘Wolle’ in 1469, ‘Wowlee’ in 1493, ‘Wowlie’ and ‘Wolley’ in 1538, then ‘the Wolley’ in 1526, ‘Wolley’ in 1516, ‘Wolle and Wolfe’ in 1528, ‘Wolly’ in 1538, ‘Wowlee’ in 1539, ‘The Wolles’ in 1545, ‘Woulie’ in 1552/3, ‘Wolhoplee’ in 1550, ‘Woolie’ in 1557, ‘Wolley’ in 1567, ‘Wolley’ in 1574, ‘Wolie’ in 1590 and 1616, ‘Wowly’ in 1616, ‘Woolie’ in 1626, ‘Woolyes’ and ‘Wolleys’ in 1677, ‘Wooly’ in 1690, ‘Woolie’ in 1691, ‘Woelie’ in 1709, ‘woolie’ in 1748, ‘Woollie’ in 1761 and 1797 and ‘Wolley’ in 1811; it is ‘Oulie’ on Blaen’s 1654 map and is still ‘Woollie’ on Stobie’s 1770 map; the origin of the name is possibly Old English ‘wulf leah’, meaning ‘wood of the wolves’, however this may be confusion over the deliberately changed form of the name; it probably never contained the ‘f’ until the name was changed in the early 19th century, but this is confused because of the neighbouring ‘Wolfehopelee’ which does appear to have been related to the word ‘wolf’; it has also been suggested that the Wellogate in Hawick was named as the road to ‘Woollee’).

Wolfelee Free Kirk (woolf-lee-free-kirk) n. Free Church in the Rule valley. It was also sometimes known as Southdean Free Kirk. The congregation was first set up in 1846, following the Disruption, with a congregation formed from those who ‘came out’ in Hobkirk and Southdean. The meeting constituting it was held in Hawick in March 1849, with a list of 83 members drawn up as the initial congregation. The first minister was Rev. James Barbour Johnstone. James Elliot of Wolfelee gave some of the lands of Mackside for the church and manse. The original kirk was in the Crown Plantation, to the south of the A6088, just to the east of the junction with the B6357. The Manse was built a little to the east, on the north side of the A6088. The church roof started to give way in 1867 and a new building was constructed on another nearby site in 1868. A roll of the minstry is: James B. Johnstone 1849–62; Robert Milligan 1863–71; William C. Russell 1872–90; William Smith 1891; Robert Leggat 1891–98; David Wilson Baird 1898–.

Wolfelee Glen (woolf-lee-glen) n. former pair of cottages in the glen near Wolfelee, also known as ‘The Glen’. They were on the earlier site of Wolfelee Mill.

Wolfelee Hill (woolf-lee-hil) n. hill in Southdean Parish, lying just south-east of Wolfelee. It reaches a height of 393 m (1,288 ft) and contains a triangulation pillar. Burns apparently climbed this during his Border tour of 1787. On the north-west slopes are the remains of a settlement, measuring about 50 m by 40 m, consisting of a bank and ditch, and perhaps connecting with a hollow road to the north. A number of metal finds were uncovered at this location in the 1990s, including a Romano-British trumpet brooch and Roman-style iron axehead, now in the National Museum of Scotland. The slopes of the hill also show signs of old cultivation and plantation banks. The east side is crossed by a section of track, which is part of the Wheel Causeway.

Wolfelee Ludge (woolf-lee-luj, -loj) n. gatehouse for Wolfelee mansion, located by the B6357, at the north end of the former driveway.

Wolfelee Mill (woolf-lee-mil) n. mill on Wolfelee farm. Andrew Turnbull was tenant there in 1684 when his servant John Hall was among those declared as fugitives for attending conventicles. The location was later called ‘The Glen’, where 2 cottages were built.

Wolfelee Schuil (woolf-lee-skil) n. former school near Wolfelee.

Wolfelee Schuil Cottage (woolf-lee-skil-ko’-eej) n. name used for the house that was formerly the small school Wolfelee. The Waugh family lived there in the latter part of the 19th century.

Wolfope (woolf-fup) n. former farm in the Ettrick valley on the Wolfhope Burn and above the farm of Tushielaw. It may be where Adam Scott ‘in wolfope’ was from, recorded as surety in 1494/5. Also in 1494/5 James Laidlaw of ‘Wynterburn’ had remission for the murder of his uncle’s son, John Laidlaw, who was from here, and John Cook from here had cows stolen by Robert Scott of Deloraine. Additionally in that year it is recorded that a group of men who were reset by Adam Scott in Annelshope, had pillaged the farm there. There was a ruined shepherd’s cottage near where the stream meets the Tushielaw Burn (it is ‘Wolfope’ in 1494/5).

Wolfhope Burn (woolf-fup-burn) n. stream in the Ewes valley, which joins the Meikledale Burn at Rigfoot. It is said that this was where the last wild wolf in Scotland was shot. Also on a steep slope here is the monument for Lady Florence Cust’s wild ride down the steep bank during a fox hunt. The ‘landis of Wolfhope and pendicle theirof callit Belstanerig’ is listed among the Dumfriesshire possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1663. The lands of ‘Woolfhope’ are among those whose superiority was inherited by John Maxwell, Earl of Nithsdale in 1670 and William, Earl of Nithsdale in 1696 (this could be the ‘Wolfope’ in Ettrick Forest granted to Melrose Abbey in the reign of Alexander II; ‘Wolfope’ is marked on Blaeu’s c.1654 map).

Wolfhopefit (woolf-fup-fit) n. land at the foot of the Wolfhope Burn, on the farm of Bush in Ewesdale. Around 1900 ground there was brought under the plough and a large amount of stonework was unearthed, suggesting there had once been several buildings there. It is marked ‘Settlement’ on modern maps.

Wolffe see Wolfelee

wolfs (woolfs) n., pl. wolves, once indigenous in Britain. They appear to have survived in the Borders into the 16th century. Scotland’s last wolf was killed either near Killiecrankie in 1680, Brora around 1700, Perthshire in 1743 or Morayshire also in 1743. The 12th century historian Reginald of Durham recounts a tale told him by Dolfinius, Woll

parson of Cavers; a poor widow, who could not afford a shepherd, had her flock protected from wolves by appealing to St. Cuthbert and seeking sanctuary in the churchyard of the chapel of St. Cuthbert (probably at Cogsmill). The only local legacy of their existence is in the name ‘Wolfcleuch’ near Craik and ‘Wolfehopelee’ near Wauchope (with Wolfelee probably being unrelated, the ‘i’ being a relatively recent addition) – ‘Woods of dark oak, that once o’er Teviot hung, Ere on their swampy beds her mosses sprung. On these green banks the ravening wolf-dogs prowl, And fitful to the hoarse night-thunder howl!’ [JL], ‘Old Wat o’ Harden, tireless and keen, Rode first of the troop; he was lithile and lean As a Liddesdale wolf; and his glance was swift As the glance of the sun when the low clouds life’ [WHO].

Woll (wol, wol) n. large house in Ashkirk, traditionally home of the Scotts of Woll. It is unclear what the lands here were called before the 17th century. One possibility is that the Scotts ‘in le walls’ (who derived their byname from lands called ‘Walls’ in Dryfesdale near Lockerbie) transferred their designation to this area. In 1579 Isabel Turnbull was recorded as ‘gudwif of Woll’, although the name of her husband is not given. William Allan was also tenant there in 1579. The first known owner of the lands was Walter Scott of Woll, recorded from at least 1606, and said to be descended from the Scotts of Haining. His grandson James sold the lands to Sir William Scott of Harden and William’s 5th son John, in about 1660. This established the more modern Lairdship. John Murray was a tenant there in 1638 and William Laidlaw in 1639. In 1643 the lands were valued at £533 and owned by Walter Scott of Woll; the teinds were valued (along with Leap Rig) on the east, lands of the tenants of Blindhaugh an inch and south of Ashkirk. It is fed by the Woll Burn and Blindhaugh Burn. The 1843 map by Crawford & Brooke shows both Woll and New Woll. It is also the name given to the general area just west of Ashkirk. Woll estate is home to a golf course (expanded recently from 9 to 18 holes). The buildings include a stable block (formerly spelled ‘Wall’ and other variants; it is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Well’, Adair’s c. 1688 map as ‘well’, is ‘Wool’ on Stobie’s 1770 map and ‘Wooll’ on Ainslie’s 1773 map; it is ‘Woollis’ in 1617, ‘Well’ in 1636, ‘Wall’ in 1643, ‘Wooll’ in 1661, ‘Wooll’ in 1673, ‘waalls’ in 1678, ‘Woall’ in the 1680s and 1690s, ‘Woall’, ‘Wool’ and ‘Wooll’ in the 1690s, ‘Wall’ in 1690. ‘Wooll’ in 1692 and 1698, ‘Well’ and ‘Wooll’ in 1704, ‘Waalls’ in 1715, ‘Woall’ in 1726, ‘Wooll’ in 1737, ‘Walls’ in 1748, ‘Wooll’ in 1753, ‘Wooll’ in 1761, ‘Wooll, or Wall’ in 1788, ‘Wool’ in 1805, ‘Wooll’ in 1811 and 1815 and ‘Wool or Wall’ in 1834; the origin is obscure, with possibilities including ‘wall’ for a spring, or a connection with either sheep or wolves!).

Woll Burn (wol-burn) n. stream that runs roughly south-east to join the Ale Water about half a mile south of Ashkirk. It is fed by the Wollrig Burn, Hutler Burn and Blindhaugh Burn.

the Woll Golf Course (thu-wol-golf-kôtrs) n. a 9-hole golf course on the Woll estate just outside Ashkirk, opened in 1993.

Wollhaugh (wol-hawçh) n. former lands in Ashkirk Parish. In 1580 they were owned by Isabella Turnbull, widow of John Scott of Blindhaugh and leased to Walter, brother of George Scott of Synton. These lands had Palace Waas as a former corn mill.

Wollie Miln (wo-lee-miln) n. former corn mill in Hobkirk parish, around the 17th and 18th centuries, on a site later occupied by ‘The Glen’ cottages. It may be the same as Woollee Mill.

Woll Rig (wol-rig) n. hilly area on the back road connecting Ashkirk with the Ettrick valley, which reaches a height of 337 m (1,095 ft). Robert Davidson is recorded as farmer there in 1797. Peter Clark was there in the 1860s. The Bishop’s Stone lies under the dyke near the cattle-grid here. The ridge offers an extensive panorama.
Wollrig Burn (wol-rig-burn) n. small stream in Ashkirk Parish. It rises on Woll Rig and in Tocker Lodge Moss, and runs roughly south-east to join the Woll Burn. It is probably the ‘small rivulet on the east side of Hunlie’ recorded in a charter of about 1170, describing lands granted to Orn of Ashkirk.

Woodburn (wood-burn) n. William (13th C.) person from Roxburghshire who may have sworn fealty to Edward I in 1296, as stated in ‘Origines parochiales Scotiae’. Both James Robson and James Murray wrote that he was ‘William of Wodeburn, parson of the Church of Mynetowe’. He is transcribed as ‘Williamus Wodeburn, Parsona ecclesiae de Mynetowe’ in Borthwick’s 1775 list. However, he does not appear in later published versions of the Ragman Rolls.

Woolhope (woo-law) n., arch. fluff from cotton, flax or wool (cf. ooder).

Woodger (woo-jur) n. John (19th C.) coachman to Mark Sproat of Riddell for 58 years – ‘His cheerful greeting and his ready joke Will be remembered long by all who felt The influence of his individuality, Genial and robust. His kindliness Will always be recalled with kindliness’ [FL].

Wood’s Plan of Hawick (woodez-plawn-ow-hlk) n. map of 1824, surveyed by John Wood (c.1780–1847) of Edinburgh for his ‘Town Atlas of Scotland’ (1828). This is one of the earliest maps of Hawick showing any detail, and indicates buildings, plots of land (with owners names), wells and even trees.

Woo Law (woo-law) n. hill to the north-east of Whitfield farm, about 4 miles from Hawick, reaching a height of 322 m. Woolaw Loch and Woolaw Moss are nearby, as well as Woolaw Covert, and a spring called the Woolaw or Cheese Well. The Woo Burn also has its source near here, running near Ashkirk Loch to eventually join the Ale Water. There is an ancient rectangular enclosure on the east of the hill, about 900 m north-north-west of Whitfield farmhouse, and the remains of a farmstead and enclosures a little to the east. There is also a claim of evidence of a Roman road between here and Groundistone Heights.

Woolaw Moss (woo-law-mos) n. marshy area near Woo Law. A drain was constructed, probably in the 19th century to improve the land for agricultural use, draining the Moss into the Cala Burn. Aerial photography has shown an area of rig-and-furrow cultivation there about 450 m north-west of Whitfield.

Woolhope (oo-lok, woo-lup) n. farmstead in Liddesdale, situated on the Kih Sike, about a mile or so to the north-west of Newcastleton. There is an extensive ancient field system in the area, including ‘lazy beds’ to the north of the cottage. The area is probably the same as what is marked ‘Oulack’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map and first recorded as ‘Wiljayk’ in c.1376. Alexander Armstrong possessed the farm of ‘Willock’ in 1632, which was probably here. William Pringle was shepherd there in 1841 and 1851 and William Robson in 1861. The farmhouse is derelict (note the local pronunciation; it is ‘Woolock’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey.

Wooliegate (woo-lee-ga’ n. another name for the Wellogate – A party is fined for breaking of the marches betwixt the Duchy of Buccleuch and the commonti at the Woollee gate’ [JW1715] (it is ‘Woolie Gate’ on Wood’s 1824 map).

Woolie’s (woo-leez) n. branch of Woolworths P.L.C., situated at 46 High Street. The store opened in about 1930 (as store No. 413), with its original sign reading ‘F.W. Woolworth & Co. Ltd., 3d and 6d Stores’. It closed in 2009. The building was purpose-built as a Woolworth’s store, and has the typical 5 bays and central pediment to be found on ex-Woolworth’s shops elsewhere. During construction in 1930 there was an accident in which one worker died and several were injured.

Woollee (woo-lee) n. former name for Wolfelee, changed by James Elliot when he built the mansion there 1825–27. It is believed that the ‘Wellogate’ is derived from being the ‘gate’ to ‘Woollee’. The name is known from at least the early 15th century, and in 1605 is recorded as the separate ‘Over Woollee’ and ‘Nether Woollee’. It is probably the ‘Woolie’ recorded in papers in Selkirk in 1655 suggesting it was used as a garrison by Royalists soldiers (also spelled ‘Woolie’, ‘Wolle’, ‘Woelie’, ‘Wowlee’, ‘Wowlie’, etc.; it is ‘Overwollie’ and ‘Neather Wolley’ in 1636).

Woollee Mill (woo-lee-mil) n. former corn mill attached to the lands of ‘Woollee’ (i.e. Wolfelee). It is recorded in 1659 along with other lands sold by William, Lord Cranstoun to Sir Gilbert Elliot of Stobs. Turnbulls were tenants in the late 17th century (it is ‘Woollie-mill’ in 1684 and ‘Wollie Mih’ in 1691).

Woollee smiddy (woo-lee-smi-dee) n. former name for the blacksmiths at Forkins near Wolfelee.

Woollie Rig (woo-lee-rig) n. hill just to the south of Riccarton Junction, being the southern ridge of Fawhope Knowe.

Wooplaw (woop-law) n. farm just north of the Carter Bar, in Southdean Parish. William Ainslie was there in 1623. Walter Thomson was tenant there in 1694. Douglas Davidson was tenant in the mid-19th century. There is another area of the same name north of Gala (it is ‘Wouplaw’ in 1623 and ‘ouplaw’ and ‘Wpplau’ in 1694; there is a place of the same name in Melrose Parish).

Wopen (wo-pin) adj., arch. wrapped, tied up – ‘The spelling is, in most cases phonetic, and shows that the local pronunciation has been then, as now, distinctive, . . . gritt beens, wheet, wopen cole plants . . . ’[DMW] (cf. waupit).

wor (wor, wur, wer) pron. our – ?? (used only in some particular contexts).

worchard (wor-churd) n., arch. an orchard.

Worchart (wor-chur) n. old name for Orchard farm and surrounding area.

Wordsworth (wurdz-wurth) n. Dorothy (1771–1855) sister of the poet William. In 1803 she accompanied her brother on a tour of the Borders, led for much of the way by Sir Walter Scott. Her diary records the party leaving Jedburgh on 22th Sptember, passing through Denholm, then stopping off at Hornshole (where Scott told them an imaginative story about the name deriving from an old school master who lived nearby), before arriving in Hawick, where they stayed at the Tower Inn. The next morning they ‘walked with Mr. Scott along a high road for about two miles, up a bare hill’ from where they had a great view to the south: this was probably the Vertish, although other places are possible. Scott left them after breakfast and they travelled on towards Langholm, stopping off at Branxholme, Caerlenrig and Moss paul, where she described: ‘The scene, with this single dwelling, was melancholy and wild, but not dreary, though there was no tree nor shrub; the small streamlet glittered, the hills were populous with sheep; but the gentle bending of the valley, and the correspondent softness in the forms of the hills, were of themselves enough to delight the eye.’

William (1770–1850) English poet who visited Hawick in 1803 as part of a Border tour with his sister Dorothy, led by Sir Walter Scott. They spent the night in the Tower Inn and walked up the Wellogate (or perhaps the Vertish) to enjoy the view. There is a brief entry in his sister’s diary. A plaque commemorating the visit was placed on the Tower in 1921 by the Callants’ Club. Next day they travelled south and stopped at Moss paul, spending the next night in Langholm.

wordy (wur-dee) adj., poet. worthy – ‘Sae dinna vex a heart that is your ain, But end at anes a wordy wooer’s pain’ [CPM], ‘It’s no wordie a dad of a bonnet,’ was a common phrase used when expressing contempt . . . ’[EM1820], ‘I wull ca apon the Lord, wha is wurdie til be prayet’ [HSR], ‘The keeper o’ that ale-hoose Is wordy nocht but scorn’ [WL] (also written ‘wordie’).

were in (wör-in) pp., arch. herded into an area, hemmed in – ‘. . .and thereby wore in the sheep and nolt of Over Southfield so that they could not get to the Common for part of that day’ [C&L] (cf. weir).

workeet see workit

the Workhouse (thu-wurk-hoos) n. another name for the Pairhouse.

the Workin Men’s Buildin Society (thu-wur-kin-menz-bil-din-su-sl-i’-ee) n. also known as ‘the Building Society’ or the Hawick Working Men’s Building and Investment Company Limited, a name which it adopted in 1888. It formed in 1864, registered under the Friendly Societies’ Acts, after a previous failed attempt to start a local building society in 1851 (the Hawick Benefit Building Society). It offered a safe investment opportunity and cheap housing for the working classes, with the house being paid off over time by the purchaser. The society was instrumental in raising the quality of accommodation in Hawick in the latter part of the 19th century. Much of ‘the Terraces’ in the Wellogate were built by the society, starting with Waverley Terrace. In all it built 324 quarter-house units, 20 half-houses and 94 cottages in the Wellogate. In the early days houses were sold by auction and the street names often suggested by the successful bidders.

workit (wur-kee’-ki’) pp. worked – ‘in they days the men aye workit over Christmas’, ‘His faither workit at the mill Like mony a decent chap’ [DH] (also written ‘workeet’; alternative past tense to worcht and wroucht, which can also be the past participle).

worlin (wör-, wur-, lin) n., arch. a worldling, someone only concerned with worldly matters – ‘The worlin’ weel had lo’ed the ha’, Doun in yon bonnie greenwud shaw’ [HSR].

wortl (wur-, wō-rul’, -rul) n., arch. world – ‘The native floo’rs the auld-worl stories … ?[?], ‘Aa yow yins that’s ooreet an oold wui this neeger-wheeper ov a worlt’ [ECS] (this is the older pronunciation, which once had the ō vowel, rather than u; also written ‘woartl’; cf. world).

Wormieleuch (wurm-mee-klooch) n. farmstead between Meadshaw and Craik, marked on Blaen’s 1654 map as ‘Whyrmycleuch’. The only feasible connection on modern maps is ‘Whinney Cleuch’, a stream that joins the Borthwick roughly opposite Eilrig (marked on de Wit’s c. 1680 map of Scotland as ‘Wirmyclech’).

Worm Rig (wurm-rig) n. wooded ridge between the Rueycastle and Knowesouth Burns, in the northern part of Bedrule Parish, directly to the east of Newton. A series of earthworks was revealed in aerial photographs in 1946, covering an area about 140 m by about 60 m. It lies on the narrow ridge between the 2 streams and is formed of double ramparts and ditches, although partially obliterated by cultivation. Note there is another earthwork much higher up on the Knowesouth Burn, described in the New Statistical Survey in 1837.

Worms Cleuch (wurmz-klooch) n. small stream in the headwaters of the Teviot, joining Rams Cleuch at the steading of Ramsaycleuchburn. A steading there, ‘Ormscleuch’ was listed in a Hawick Parish valuation of 1627 along with Rashiegrain and Commonbrae, valued jointly ‘in stok 120 lb., in teynd 20 lb’.

Wormston (wurm-stin) n. old name for Ormiston farm.

Wormwud (wurm-wud) n. former name for lands in the Ettrick valley. In 1479 the eastern part was held by William Chisholme, with Alexander Murray, Rector of Hawick holding the ‘grassum’. In 1541 it is described that the western part was called Whitehaugh Brae and the eastern part was Hutlerburn. Hence the lands lay along the B7009 between Inner Huntly and Ettrickbridge. There were Scotts and Murays there in the mid-15th century (it is ‘Warmwod’ in 1479 and 1541).

worset (wur-si’) n., arch. worsted, twisted woollen yarn – ‘Hard-weenin wors set threids for warip … ’ [WL] (also written ‘worst’ and ‘wurset’).
worship

worship (wur-ship) n., arch. religious denomination – ‘Wey had been schueld thegither, an’ oor pawrents belonged to the same wur-ship’ [BCM1880].

wot (wot) v., poet. first and third person singular present tense of wit, to know – ‘For weel I wot it wadna serve To make ye frae your purpose swerve’ [AD], ‘For days lang syne, I wot ye weel, Her sons made English foemen feel . . .’ [JLH], ‘. . . And I wot I will ne’er be puir’ [WL] (also written ‘wait’, ‘wait’, etc.; cf. wath and watin).

Wowie (wow-ee) n. nickname for William Laidlaw Scott.

Wowlick (wow-lik) n. former lands in Liddesdale. They are recorded on a rental roll of c.1376 as ‘Wllyak’ (valued at 5 shillings) and ‘Wllayk maior’ (valued at 18 shillings), the section called ‘Ludne’. In a rental roll of 1541 they are ‘Wowlyk’, valued at 20 shillings and leased to Simon Armstrong (probably of Tinnisburn). This is surely the same as ‘Oulack’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map, which is situated near the modern farm of Woolhope, and hence probably the same place, i.e. north-west of Newcastleton.

Wr. (wal’-ur) n. formerly common abbreviation for ‘Walter’.

wrack (rak) n., arch. field weeds, especially long-rooted grasses when gathered up for burning, often referring to couch-grass, Triticum repens – ‘Rack (sb.) (variant of wrack) = garden refuse’ [ECS].

wrack (rak) n., poet. a wreck, shipwreck – ‘My heart it said nay,– I look’d for Jamie back: But the wind it blew high; and the ship it was a wrack . . .’ [CPM].

Wrae (rá) n. farm in the Ewes valley, between Sorbie and Langholm. There was formerly a mill there. Along with Park it was described as a 20-merk land in 1550, when inherited by Robert, Lord Maxwell, by John, Lord Maxwell in 1604 and by Robert, Lord Maxwell in 1619. There were Armstrongs there in the 16th and 17th centuries. Easter, Waster and Middle ‘Wraes’ are listed as part of the lands of Ewesdale in about 1610, when the superiority was granted to the Earl of Home. It is listed as ‘Wray’ among the possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1663. The 12-merk lands of ‘Ovir et Nathir Wraithes’ in the Parish of ‘Nathir Yeues’ are listed among the lands whose superiority was inherited by John Maxwell, Earl of Nithdale in 1670 and by William, Earl of Nithdale in 1696. Middle and Over Wray were surveyed together along with other Scott of Buccleuch farms in 1718, when they covered 255 acres, bounded by Sorbie, Howgill and Flask, but with no farmhouse there at the time. Neither Wrae was surveyed separately, covering 265 acres, bounded by Flask, Terrona, Middle Wrae and Staplegordon, with the farmhouse roughly where the modern farm of Wrae is located. William Anderson was there in at least the period 1785–97. William Knox (the poet) farmed there for a few years. Mina Maxwell was there in 1841, as well as Bells. In 1851 there were Bells, Andersons and Littles there (sometimes formerly ‘Wra’ and occasionally ‘Wrea’; ‘O. Wrae’ and ‘N. Wrae’ are marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map, while ‘Midle and Over Wrae’ and ‘Nether Wrae’ are on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

wrait (rä, rá) pp., arch. wrote – ‘. . . whan the Dooglas an the Scott wrait off a wheen auld scores . . .’ [ECS], ‘A expeckeet a letter, bit aa hei wrait iz was a bare post-caird’ [ECS] (this is the past tense form, with the past participle being the usual English ‘written’).

wraith (ráth) n., poet. wrath – ‘The crabbit carle wadna speak, His swelling w райthe did puffe . . .’ [JTe], ‘. . . for thaye smairg inequitie apon me, an’ in wrath thaye haete me’ [HSR], ‘Shurelie the wraith o’ man sall praye thee . . .’ [HSR].

the Wran (thu-rawn) n. nickname of George Dickson.

wrange (rawrng) adj. wrong – ‘is that a dough-nut or em A wrang?’, ‘Lord Mangerton them orders gave, Your horses the wrange way maun a’ be shod . . .’ [CPM], ‘For ne’e er a neighbour was he wrang, He’d sooner in a halter hang’ [RDW], ‘And oft when no’ richt he’s nane sae far wrang’ [JEDM], ‘. . . The hauflin kens that the world’s sweet And there’s nocht wrang’ [WL], ‘The hert’s aye the pairt, aye, that makes us richt or wrang’ [DH], adv. wrong – ‘Where the fair are never slighted, And the honest ne’er gae wrang’ [DJ], n. a wrong – ‘. . . and never promise to bring thame saif and sound to Hawick, and did thame na wrang be the way’ [BR1652], ‘. . . ’Tis not the hares that I’m for fighting’, Quoth Hab, ‘my wrangs I’m but for rightin’’ [JR], ‘Why gab aboot some ill or wrang If guid will help the warld alang’ [WFC], v. to wrong, falsify – Ane report that Gilbert Elliot in Windingtounridge, or one of his servants, that he was wrang’d, (The blackguard! to get off unhang’d!’ [RDW].

wrongfully (rawng-fu-lee) adv. wrongfully – ‘I am determinet that my mouth salha soeik wrangfullie … ’ [HSR], ‘Letna thame that ar mine enemies wrangfullie rejoysce over me’ [HSR].
wrang-ganger (rawng-gawng-ur) n., poet.
transgressor, evil-doer – ‘But the wrangangers sall be destroyet thegither, an’ the en’ o’ the wicket sall be snegget aff’ [HSR].
wrong in the head (rawng-in-thu-heed) adj.
mentally imbalanced, somewhat unhinged, deranged, insane – ‘If Colin disna come back sune – A’ll gaun fair wrang in the heid’ [JEDM].
wrangous (rawng-is) adj., arch. wrongful, unjust, illegal – ‘…and Robert Ellot, called Zoungh Robene, for the wrangus spoliatioun and awaytaking of thair teindis of the landis of Cruik, Skelfhill, Peilbra, and Penangushope … ’ [SB1574].
wrangously (rawng-is-lee) adv., arch. wrongfully, incorrectly – ‘…wha hethna liftet up his saul untill vainitie, nar swurn wrangouslie’ [HSR].
the Wrangway Burn (thu-rawng-wa-burn) n.
stream that joins the Limiecleuch Burn in the Teivot. Its source is near Rashiegrain Height, and it runs near Ewes Doors and to the west of Wisp Hill. There is some evidence for a possible Roman road linking the valley of this burn with that of the Eweslees Burn.
A large stone on its banks contains cup-shaped hollows, although it is unclear whether they are man-made or natural (it is marked on Blaen’s 1654 map; the name is said to derive from when a group of Scottish rievers were being pursued up the burn by the English and slipped over to Eweslees via Ewes Doors, with the English continuing the wrong way; however, the meaning may be from the stream appearing to come from the pass at Ewes Doors, but in fact originating on Haggis Side).
wrasse see rassle
wrastle see rassle wreath (reeth) n., poet. a snow drift, bank of snow – ‘The hill was steep – the glen was deep;
And our twa sons thegither Were stan’in’ wi’ their father’s sheep, When down the wreate cam’ wi’
a sweep, That nane could aid the ither’ [HSR].
Wreathlongshot (reeth-lawng-sho) n. former name for part of Salensis called Wreathlongshot and Broomshaugh’.
the Wreath Layin (thu-reeth-lä-in) n. ceremony held on the Saturday morning of the Com-
Hand Men lay wreaths at the War Memorial in the Park, while the Acting Father holds the Flag in a lowered position. The same phrase sometimes refers to the wreath-laying ceremony at Horns-hole, carried out by the Cornet’s Lass on after the Kirking Ceremony. Before 1977 this ceremony took place after the Cornet’s Walk on the Thursday.
the Wreck (thu-rek) n. local nickname in use around the early 19th century.
wreckit (re-ki’, -kee’) adj., pp. wrecked – ‘…They’d ruined lives and wreckit toons, In mony a fray’ [JCG].
wreesle (ree-sul) v., arch. to wressle – ‘Hoo memory wreesals at the sneck Whene’er the ‘slo-gan’s’ soonded … ’ [RH] (also spelled ‘wreesal’).- Wrath (reeth) n. Alexander (16th C.) miller recorded in 1554 when he witnessed the grant of an acre of land on ‘Harparthi’ to Archibald Elliot in Gorrenberry by James Douglas of Cavers, and also witnessed the letter of reversal by Elliot to Douglas that followed. In fact two men of this name are listed, with one being ‘molendinario’ (i.e. miller) to distinguish him from the other. He may have been miller at Spittal-on-Rule or elsewhere in Cavers Parish (’Wreth’ is otherwise unknown and may be a transcription error for some other name, e.g. ‘Veitch’).
the W.R.I. (thu-du-bul-yoo-awr-I) n. the Women’s Rural Institute, also sometimes called ‘the Rural’. The Scottish W.R.I. was founded in 1917, partly as an outgrowth of the suffrage movement, and partly following success of such institutes in Canada 20 years earlier. This quickly spread into a set of social clubs for women in sparsely populated rural areas, with an emphasis on preserving traditional handicrafts and cooking. Since their formation these groups have been important for organising community events in local rural areas, and also for having community halls built. The members of each Institute usually meets once a month. There have been active W.R.I. groups in Appletreehall, Bedrule, Burnfoot, Cogsmill, Hermitage, Minto, Newcastleton, Newmill & Teviothead, Robertson, Southdean, and Wilton Deaton, as well as further afield.

\textit{wright} \textit{(right)} \textit{n., arch.} a wright, carpenter – ‘Isna this the wright’s son? isna his mither ca’t Mary?’ [HSR], ‘Nae wricht’s son this’, cries oot The Captain to his men … ’ [WL] (also just \textit{wright}).

\textit{wright} \textit{(rite, rite)} \textit{n.} \textit{arch.} a craftsman, particularly a carpenter (or joiner).

\textbf{Wright} \textit{(rite)} \textit{n.} \textbf{Adam} (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Dean Mill in 1729. He married Marion Riddell and their children included: Anna (b.1727); Robert (b.1727); William (b.1731); and Bessie (b.1733). The witnesses in 1729 were William Scott and Adam Easton. \textbf{Rev. David L.} minister of Hawick Old Parish 1972–86, also with responsibility for Teviothead. He was the last minister of the ‘Auld Pairish’, which finally closed in 1987 and was demolished a few years later. \textbf{George} (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Riddell and their children included Grizel (b.1655) and an unnamed child (b.1656). \textbf{George} (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Tudhope and their children included Janet (b.1669), Robert (b.1677) and John (b.1680). \textbf{George} (d.bef. 1719) described in 1719 as ‘sometimes under miller in Hawick’ and already deceased when his son George got married. \textbf{George} (17th/18th C.) son of George, who was under-miller in Hawick. In 1719 he married Helen, who was also from the town of Hawick. Their children included Margaret (b.1721). \textbf{George} (d.1911) baker at 2 Allars Crescent. He married Helen Davidson, who was related to the Hawick plasterers, and died in 1915. They had a daughter Georgina, who was a shopkeeper in Irby, Cheshire, and other daughters Mary Jane and Isabella. He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. \textbf{Hector} (16th C.) smith of Hawick, mentioned in the will of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1574. He was owed money ‘for schone to the Lairdis horse’. \textbf{James} (17th C.) tenant of Harry Riddell, probably near Bewlie, recorded in 1665. \textbf{James} (17th C.) recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 among those ‘Payed but not listed in Hawick Toun’. Perhaps the same James witnessed a baptism for John Scott and Janet Jackson in Hawick in 1673. He could be the James recorded as ‘Cook’ in 1713 when he witnessed a baptism for ‘drummer’ Thomas Boyd (who was also gardener at the Flex); it is unclear for whom he might have been a cook. He was also recorded as a cook in a baptismal record of 1712. He married Jean Robson and their children included Jean (b.1712) and James (b.1715). The witnesses in 1712 were carrier Walter Rucastle and shoemaker George Oliver. \textbf{James Hunter} (d.1765) killed falling from a steeple in Jedburgh, he is buried in Lilliesleaf kirkyard. His tombstone reads ‘Stop, traveller, as you go by, I once had life and breath; But falling from a steeple high I swiftly passed through death. Take you example by my fate. And be by me advised; Repent before it be too late, Lest you be thus surprised’. \textbf{John} (17th C.) described along with Robert as tenant of Spittal in a Hawick magistrates case of 1642 when Samuel Rutherford accused them and a large number of their drinking friends of stealing his wallet. \textbf{John} (17th C.) resident of Spittal-on-Rule on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He was surely related to the earlier John. \textbf{John} (17th C.) smith in Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He is listed among the ‘deficients’ of the Parish, but was taxed for 2 hearths. \textbf{John} (18th/19th C.) mason in Castleton. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. \textbf{John} (18th/19th C.) grocer and spirit dealer at the Sandbed, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. \textbf{John} ‘Jackie’ (1922–??) sales rep by trade, he was scrum-half for Hawick R.F.C., also capped for Scotland and playing for the Barbarians. He was sometimes nicknamed ‘Ma Baa’ from his rugby-playing days. He was Cornet in 1952 (and hence one of the few who have worn both the green jersey and green coat). It was at his suggestion that Ex-Cornets were allowed to wear their green coats at the Ball, provided they could still get into them! \textbf{John} (1947–2008) professional folk musician. Born in Bournemouth, and brought up in Manchester, he worked as a sales rep and played in rock bands as a youth. He joined the Household Cavalry 1970 and left in 1974, becoming a shepherd. He lived in Derbyshire, then North Yorkshire and Northumberland, before settling near Newcastle in 1980. In 1990 he made a cassette recording of unaccompanied traditional songs, called ‘Border Crossings’, funded from the sale of a horse. Teaming up with Kenny Spiers on guitar and Wattie Robinson on fiddle, he formed the John Wright Band in 1993 to support a tour for their CD ‘Ride the Rolling Sky’. He popularised the Hawick song...
‘The Wail of Flodden’ (after asking Henry Douglas to suggest a local song he could learn), although in a somewhat folk music version. Further albums included ‘The Things We’ve Handed Down’ (1996), ‘Other Roads’ (1997) and ‘A Few Short Lines’ (2000). Robert (17th C.) resident of Spittal in 1642 when he was named among acquaintances of Samuel Rutherford who were accused of stealing his wallet in Hawick. He was probably related to John, who was also listed in Spittal in the same case. Robert (17th C.) Hawick resident who married Margaret Deans. Their son Robert was born in 1643. Margaret’s will is recorded in 1697, by which time he was already deceased. Note that father and son may be confused here. He is probably the smith of that name who was elected to the Council in 1648. Bailie Robert (17th/18th C.) recorded as Bailie in the 1680s. He was tried for abusing another Bailie in 1685, and a man is recorded being fined for calling him a ‘basse kniffe’ (i.e. ‘base knave’) in 1689. He owned 2 ‘tenements’ in the West End of Hawick, according to a sasine of 1687 (for a tenement between his). In 1688 James Turnbull was fined for assaulting him, when he tried to take him to the Tolbooth. He was probably the son of the deceased Robert of Hawick who became a locksmith’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1659. He may be the Robert who was born in Hawick in 1643, son of Robert and Margaret Deans. He was probably the Robert who witnessed a baptism for James Halliday in 1675. He was probably the Robert who was fined in 1679 for destroying a load of peat belonging to Robert Thomson in Hawick Shiel, with the other man also fined for fighting with him. He is probably the Robert who witnessed baptisms for William Laing, Patrick Scoon and Robert Hogg in 1688. He is included among the contributors to Hawick’s new church bell in 1693/4. He was ‘late bailie Havek’ in 1696 when a child of his was buried in Greyfriars Cemetery in Edinburgh. In 1697 he was one of 4 men who protested against the continuing of Robert Ruckcastle as Bailie, through there being a vacancy and on account of an agreement made with the Commissioners of the Duchess of Buccleuch, until a new election for Bailie was held. He may be the Robert who married Helen Glendinning and whose children included Robert (b.1670) and Margaret (b.1671); the witnesses in 1671 were George Renwick and James Burn. Robert (17th C.) cordiner in Easter Burnfoot who was made a Burgess for free in 1690 ‘in respect it is the custom of all towns, that the Provost or other Magistrates have the liberty to create 2 or 3 Burgesses gratis’; he thus may be the first known Honorary Burgess. He was also resident of Easter Burnfoot according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Bailie Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He is surely related to the earlier Bailie Robert (unless this is the same man and he married twice). He married Margaret Fraser and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1702, with witnesses Bailie James Deans and litster James Scott. Mary (b.1693), with no mother’s name listed, was probably also his child. The witnesses in 1702 were Bailie James Deans and Bailie John Scott, litster. Samuel ‘Sam’ (20th C.) Burgh Chamberlain in the 1960s. Simon (17th C.) under-miller who is listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He is also listed as under-miller at Rougheugh in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (17th C.) one of the men who appraised horses in Hawick for the Covenanter army in 1644. He could be the William, married to Agnes Elliot, whose children baptised in Hawick included Robert (b.1636), Bessie (b.1639), Thomas (b.1641) and Francis (b.1643). The witnesses to the 1641 baptism were William Liddell and Andrew Lidderdale. Alternatively he could be the William, married to Bessie Huggan, whose children baptised in Hawick, included William (b.1647) and Maragret (b.1653). William (17th C.) listed among the ‘Cottars in Hassanden’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (b.1679/80) tenant in Doveshauhaubrachhead. His wife, Helen Turnbull, died in 1740, aged 60. They are buried in Bedrule kirkyard. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick. In 1696 he was served heir to the 5-merk land of Alton Croft, from his cousin Walter Scott of Alton Crofts. His mother was Marion Scott, sister of Robert, who was father of Walter. William (17th/18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. In 1718 there was a dispute between him and Robert Wilson over the spaces their wives occupied in St. Mary’s Kirk. His claim was that his wife had the space for 3 years before he moved to ‘easter Burnfoot mylne’. He married Christian Renwick in 1712 and their children included: Helen (b.1716); Margaret (b.1718); William (b.1721); and Robert (b.1723). The witnesses in 1721 were fleshers Robert and George Renwick (who were surely related to his wife) and in 1723 were ‘Tenent’ John Ekron and merchant John Little. He witnessed baptisms in Wiltton for Robert Renwick in 1728 and 1733 and in Hawick for shepherd Andrew Brown in 1740. He could have been the William born in Hawick to Francis and Jane Graham in 1673. William (19th C.) married Helen Lillico in Wilton in 1848. William (1972–2020) 3rd child of Bill and Nancy, he attended Trinity and Hawick High Schools. He was known as a dancer, winning his first competition at the age of 8, reaching the national youth finals in disco, and being crowned the British Disco King in 1989. He appeared in ‘The Hit Man and Her’ on TV and also performed in pantomimes. He worked as a redcoat at Butlins and as a hairdresser and barman. He wrote a dance show called ‘Rok til U Drop’, which launched at the Con Club in Hawick and later toured Britain (formerly spelled ‘Wricht’ and variants).

Wud (wud) n. (Wood) Basil (18th C.) wright at ‘Dangerfields’ according to a document in Selkirk in 1793 when he was summoned for non-payment by a carrier in Selkirk. Also in 1794 he was in ‘Dangerfield’ when he was subject to another summons by George Gray in Wiltonburn ‘for non-payment of price of a stirk’; he was ‘now in Whitehill Brae’. Presumably he lived at Dangerfield in Hawick. Charles (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He witnessed a baptism for Walter Gledstains in 1681 and another for John Henderson in 1682. David (16th C.) tenant of one of the farms of Midshiels, Appletreehal, Broadlee, Cottlaw or ‘Burnside’ in 1562/3 when Lord Alexander Home tried to remove his ‘pretended tenants’. Francis Watson ‘Frank’ (1862–1953) born in Edinburgh, he worked in the Navy and then became a well known painter, specialising in water-colours, particularly landscapes and maritime scenes. He attended Berwick Art School, finished his training at South Kensington Art School and the Academie Julian in Paris and in 1883 was appointed 2nd master at the School of Art in Newcastle. In 1889 he moved to Hawick as Art Master at the Buccleuch School. In 1899 he gave up teaching to become a professional painter, specialising in marine landscapes. He lived at Southsea, Portsmouth, Berwick and Edinburgh. He painted many scenes around the Borders, including one of Wulliestruther Loch. He also painted a portrait of Robert Milligan in 1890 (hanging in the Town Hall), a portrait of Thomas Purdom (in the Museum) in 1891, one of Robert Murray in 1897 (in the Museum), and one of D. McBurnie Watson in 1898. In 1893 he painted a view of Wilton Dean, as well as a view showing the old red and blue Common Riding flag at the Town Hall, in 1895 he painted a view of Hawick based on the 1813 painting of French prisoner-of-war M. Prefont and in 1902 painted a view from Wester Braid Road. He was present at the surrender of the German fleet at Scapa Flow, making some sketches of some of the ships before they were scuttled. In 1939 he accompanied George VI and Queen Elizabeth on a royal tour of Canada. He died in Perthshire. Several of his descendants have also been artists. George (1763/4–1834) resident at Doveshaughmill. He married Jennet Wright, who died in 1846, aged 72. Andrew, who lived at Spittal and married Margaret Rule was probably his son. He is buried in Bedrule kirkyard. George Ormiston ‘Ormie’ (1918–2003) born in St. Boswells, he moved to the Borthwick valley at 4, when his father took over the Robertson police station. He was educated at Robertson and Hawick and spent most of his life living at Thornbank in Denholm. He became a joiner in Hawick, enlisted in the K.O.S.B., being present at the Letzlingen Common Riding, and returned to Denholm in 1947. He married Maisie Scott of Overhall. He was a great lover of the Border hills, greeting each New Year from the summit of Ruberslaw, and helping rejuvenate the pine trees near the top. He worked as an insurance man and in Lyle & Scott’s and retired in 1982. He also regularly won Denholm’s best kept garden prize. He was an office bearer of the Archaeological Society for 30 years, being Field Secretary 1962–72 and 1982–88, and organising excavations at Crumhaugh Tower, Dod Burn peel tower and Heronhall, as well as the restoration of the Norman burial ground at Minto. He published ‘Roberton, the Making of a Parish’ in 1991. Due to infirmity he moved into Hawick and ended his days at Crumhaugh House. Just weeks before he died he was presented with the Dutch Liberation Medal. His photo album and scrapbook covering 1935–89 is in the Borders Archive. Hamish (1926–2009), C.B.E., born in Hawick, where he attended Trinity and the High School. His father was in charge of coal supplied for the town during WWII, and his mother was headmistress at Cogsmill. He was a keen member of the Scouts and the Scout Pipe Band. He obtained a B.Sc. in Chemistry from St. Andrews in 1947 and a Ph.D. in 1950. He joined the forming Australian National University staff in London in 1951, but then moved to Strathclyde in 1953, where he stayed until retirement in 1991. He was Vice-Principal there 1984–6. He also contributed to forming several colleges into Glasgow Caledonian University, where the Hamish Wood Building was named in his honour, and from where he received an honorary doctorate in 1994. He received the C.B.E. for services to higher education in 1993, and was a Fellow of the Royal Society of Edinburgh and the Royal College of Chemistry. His research focussed on inorganic and medicinal chemistry, particularly anti-bacterial drugs. He married Jean Mitchell, who was a Cub Scout leader in Hawick. Their children were Sheena (Mrs. Walker) and Colin. Helen (17th C.) resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. She probably ran an innor shop of some sort. Henry (15th C.) Chaplain who in 1445 leased his tenandry of the lands of Harden Wood, lying within Borthwickshielis, to Andrew Ker of Altonburn. It seems likely that he was a local chaplain, e.g. for the nearby Kirk Borthwick or for Hassendean, in which Parish Borthwickshielis lay. His name is recorded as ‘Henry of Wod chap-lane’. The lease, which is written in the vernacular, is one of the earliest known local pieces of Scots writing (assuming it is genuinely local of course). James (18th C.) mason of Hawick, son-in-law of mason David Laing. He possibly worked on the Slitrig Bridge and was made an Honorary Burgess in 1776 along with Gala mason John Haldane. James (19th C.) landlord of the Commercial Inn in the mid-1800s. A caricature of him appears in ‘Noctes Hawickianae’. Capt. James John (d.1911) of the 45th Regiment. In 1868 he married Blanche, who was daughter of Sir William Elliott of Stobs and Wells. Along with his wife he acted as trustee for the Wells estate in the latter part of the 19th century. Because of the debt on the estate, they had to cut down lots of the old trees to meet the trust payments (this being locally quite unpopular). He may be son of the Mr. C. Wood who rented the ‘shooting’ at Stobs from 1861. Jean (18th C.) kitchen maid at Minto in 1785 and 1786, when she was working for Sir Gilbert Elliot. John ‘Johnnie’ (16th/17th C.) of

Whitfield, one of the local men accused in 1612 of charging too much interest on loans; ; his name is omitted from the list of those found guilty. It seems likely this is the Whitfield near Hawick, but it may be another one in Roxburghshire. John (1782–1847) surveyor and cartographer who produced town plans of around 150 places across Scotland, as well as in England and Wales. This includes his 1824 ‘Plan of the Town and Environs of Hawick from actual survey’, which provides the first detailed map of the Town. It can be assumed that he spent some time in Hawick carrying out the survey himself. He lived in Morningside in Edinburgh from 1813 and was elected Permanent Director of the Land Surveyors’ Society in around 1833. Nicholas (1795–1865) colliery and locomotive engineer from Newcastle. He was President of the North of England Institute of Mining and Mechanical Engineers and is known for introducing several safety measures. In the early 1860s he occupied Stobs Castle as a summer residence. William (15th C.) witness to the 1469 sasine for Wolfelee. It seems likely that he was local to Rulewater. William (17th C.) tenant at Raperlaw in the 1630s. He had a charter of lands in Lessuden (St. Boswells) in 1635. There is a marriage contract of 1642 between his daughter Janet and John Gray, younger, in Lilliesleaf. He gave the couple his land in Lessuden and some land adjacent to Barnhills. William (c.1800–bef. 1851) agricultural labourer in Wilton Parish. He was listed as hind at Parkhouses among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835; he was at Courthill in 1840 and 1841. In the 1841 census he was at Parkhouses (i.e. Burnhead Cottages). His widow and daughter Margaret (a milliner) were living at Courthill in 1851. He married Euphemia Henderson and their children included: William (b.1826), who died young; Jane (b.1828); William (again, b.1830); and Margaret or ‘Maggie’ (1832–1913), who married George Elliot Wilson William (b.1831/3) from Wilton Parish, he was a draper. Along with the Graham brothers he established Wood, Graham & Co. in about the late 1850s. Their business was at 6 Tower Knowe, where they are recorded in 1861, with 8 draper’s assistants. He may be the William whose trustees were recorded in about 1874 as owners of part of the former lands of Patrick Cunningham in Hawick. Rev. William appointed in 1958 as the last minister of St. John’s in Hawick, for a term appointment. He had retired from Half Morton in 1956 (formerly ‘Wod’, ‘Wode’ etc.).

Wudcock’s

the Wud (thu-wud) n. the Wood, former name for a farm in Abbotrule Parish. In 1643 ‘Bertie Rutherford of the Wood’ owned land valued at £20. Adam Scott ‘in Wood, in Abotroule parish’ had his will recorded in 1693.

Wudbrae (wud-brä) n. Wudbrae, cottage on the side road between Teviothead and Caerlenrig farm.

Wudburn (wud-burn) n. Woodburn, farm on the south side of the Borthwick valley, near the end of the back road leading past the Brauxholme Lochs. The lands were attached to the Chisholme estate at one time. In 1627 it was valued along with Muselee as paying ‘120 lb., vicarage 20 lb’. There were 10 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650, namely Thomas Shiel, Jean Stuart, John Elliot, Isobel Shiel, Mary Shiel, Robert Scott, Janet Nichol, John Scott, Bessie Scott and Margaret Scott. In 1678 it was valued along with Chisholme at £433 6s 8d. William Falside was living there in 1686. Like much of the area, it transferred from Hawick Parish to Roberton in 1690. John Noble lived there in 1712 and 1717, John Miller in 1716–21, Walter Scott in 1716–20, William Bell in 1723, William Heatley in 1722–42, Thomas Heatley in 1727–37, Francis Coltart 1727–42, James Inglis in 1731, Thomas Heatley in 1756, Henry Mitchellhill in 1757, Archibald Scott in 1761, Robert Elliot in 1763–67, Katherine Cowan in 1765, Alexander Heatley in 1767, Walter Scott in 1769, William Miller in 1772, James Scott in 1773 and John Hislop in 1774. Walter Hume was there in the period 1789–94 and John Elliot in 1798. In 1788 and 1811 it was valued along with Chisholme at £433 6s 8d. John Nichol was there in 1800. William Gorries died there in 1816. Andrew Anderson was farmer in 1841 and still in 1868. A perforated stone disc from there is in the Museum (formerly spelled ‘Woodburne’, etc.; it is ‘Wodburne’ in 1627, ‘woodburne’ in 1686 and ‘Widburne’ in 1694; it is ‘Woodeburne’ on a parish map of 1650, is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map with its modern English spelling and is also on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Wud Burn (wud-burn) n. Wood Burn, stream that rises to the south-west of Brauxholme Wester Loch and runs to the north past Woodburn farm to join the Borthwick Water.

Wudburn Mill (wud-burn-mil) n. former farm near Woodburn and Chisholme. In 1797 the tenant was John Nichol. It may be the same place as ‘Chisholme Mill’ (it is ‘Woodburnmill’ in 1797).

Wudcock’s (wud-, wood-koks) n. local engineering company, specialising in hosiery equipment, with premises on Commercial Road until about 1950.
wudden

wudden (wu-din) adj. wooden – ‘Neckless bottles, wudden cups, Leather jackets, rotten whups’[JoHa], ‘A kent a man wi a wudden leg caaed Lefty’, ‘...The wudden tub wi’ mendin’ flannel’ [IJ].

wudden (wu-den, wu-din) contr. wouldn’t, would not – ‘wudden ee expect eet?’, ‘that’d be jist like the hing, wudden eet?’ (shorter form of wudent).

wudent (wu-den’, wu-din’) contr. wouldn’t, would not – ‘she wud, wudent she’, ‘wudent ee juist credit eet?’ (also written ‘wudn’t’; sometimes shortened to wudden: this form always precedes the pronoun; cf. wudni which comes after the pronoun).

wuddie (wu-dee) adj., arch. woody, relating to wood.

wuddie (wu-dee) n., arch. the gallows, noose, rope, a willow, willow branch, wand of flexible wood – ‘...an laap an flaang as yauld as a wuddie’[ECS], a wood-eating insect, insect that infects wood, especially in the phrase ‘As yauld as a wuddie’.

wuddle (wu-dul) v., arch. to stagger, stumble, struggle through adversity (often used along with the verb describing the adversity) – ‘She’d mony a hatter, puri craitit, bit she wuddit an brocht thae bairns up rael faisable, for aa’[ECS], to work laboriously – ‘He wuddl’t on a’ day lang’[GW], n., arch. a struggle, bustle, scene of a struggle – ‘This wearifu’ world’s a wuddle o’ care’[JoHa], ‘...fair leike ti faa off the spake wui the wuddles an the vexes o woark’...’[ECS].

Wudend (wu-end) n. Woodend, a cottage on the right of the road heading up the Nip Knowes. The name is also used for that general area near the end of the trees – ‘A yince unleashed a muckle slice Wi’ sic tremendous bend That it ended in ablow the swing In the gairden at Wudend’[IWL].

Wudend (wu-end) n. Woodend, former farm between Synton and Ashkirk. In 1579 it was listed in the inventory of Isabel Donald, widow of Robert Scott of Palace, who had crops growing there (it is ‘Wodend’ in 1579; marked as such on Gordon’s c. 1650 map and Blaen’s 1654 map).

Wudfit (wu-fi’) n. Woodfit, area in the Slitrig valley where the side road to Barnes leaves the B6399. Near Woodfoot Cottage there is a late 18th century archway with Doric columns, once the beginning of the drive to Stobs Castle. There is a small war memorial by the bridge. This area is sometimes called ‘Woodfoot-on-Slitrig’, since the name has also been used for Borthaugh Wood-foot. It was formerly also called ‘Birkwud Fit’. The porter’s lodge there was filled with 5-foot deep water in the flood of 1846 and huge sinkhole appeared in the road, which swallowed a horse and threw off the rider (although they both survived). Just to the south the 1863 Ordnance Survey map shows a building on the east side of the main road, which is no longer visible. Local ministers would sometimes preach at the blacksmith’s shop there in the 19th century. The former row of cottages near here once housed a blacksmith’s and joiners shop; as many as 9 units are shown on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, arranged in a north-south row, just to the west of Stobs Lodge. All but one of the cottages (the one belonging to the mason) were pulled down when the military purchased the whole estate in 1903. Walter Scott was recorded there in 1790 and J. Thomson in 1868.

Wudfit (wu-fi’) n. Woodfoot, former farmstead near Robertson village, marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map. In 1841 the residents were Elliots and Hoggis. It may be the same place referred to as ‘Cleuchfoot’.

Wudfit (wu-fi’) n. another name used for Borthaugh Wudfit.

Wudfit Brig (wu-fi’-brig) n. Woodfoot Bridge, where the B6399 crosses the Slitrig for the first time after Crowbyres. It was built in 1815 and carries the name of Eliott of Stobs.

Wudheid (wu-heed) n. Woodhead, lands on the north side of the Ale Water and west of Ancrum, also known as Ancrum Woodhead. The farm was an amalgamation of 3 previous farms, noted in the rhyme ‘The Randy Raw, The scab-bit Scaw, The drucken wives o’ Gersetlaw’. It was formerly a seat of the Kers. In 1571 it was raided by Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule and a group of other Turnbulls plus Rutherfords and others, who claimed that Robert Ker had reset the fugitive Sir Thomas Kerr of Fernihirst there; the record in the Register of the Privy Council gives a detailed list of the goods in the house at that time. Alexander White was farmer there in 1797. The farm was also a location where the preparation of lint was carried out into the early 19th century.

Wudhouse (wu-hoo) n. Woodhouse, farm on the western side of the Jed valley, off the A68 near the Jedforest Hotel. George Oliver, ‘Zimian’ Oliver and John Chatto were there in 1694. John Scott was recorded as tenant there and elsewhere in 1797. John Goodfellow and family were there.
Wudhooselees

Wudhooselees (wud-hoo-se-leez) n. Woodhouselees, farm just south of Canonbie. The area may have previously been connected with Kinmont Willie. In the ‘Kinmont Willie’ ballad it is the place where Buccleuch and his men stopped on their way to Carlisle. There was a branch of the Armstrongs there in the 16th and 17th centuries. The Scotts of Buccleuch possessed the lands there according to the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch. The farm of Over Woodhouselees was farmed by George Bell for the 2nd half of the 18th century. George Scott-Elliot farmed at Nether Woodhouselees in the early 1800s – ‘Where are ye gaun, ye mason lads, Wi’ a’ your ladders, lang and hie?’ – ‘We gang to herry a corbie’s nest, That wons son lads, Wi’ a’ your ladders, lang and hie?’ {‘Where are ye gaun, ye ma’}

Wulliestruther (wu-lee-stru-thur) n. Wulliestruther Loch, in the middle of Hawick Moor, near Pilmuir farm, covering about 17 acres and stocked for fishing. It is sometimes referred to simply as ‘the Struther’. Its level was raised by damming in the early 19th century, in the interests of mills on the Slitrig (to raise the level of the river during dry spells). This allowed the mills on the Slitrig
Wulliestruther Cottage

Water to survive through some of the summer of 1844, for example, when the local rivers dried up to a trickle. Previously it would have been little more than a bog, and possibly also contained the area once called Crawstruther. In 1767 the foot of the Struther was stated to mark the western boundary of the region of the Common where the Town Herd typically pastured the Hawick livestock. The loch has been the site of several drownings over the years. In 1939 it almost completely drained due to a fault with the outlet valve. The 1863 Orname Survey map shows a building between the south-west end and Pilnmuir (the origin is Old Scots ‘struther’, meaning marsh, with a prefix indicating either willows, oily or slimy, or wool or wolf, cf. Buckstruther, Crawstruthers, Holstruther and Lustruther; a personal name is also possible for the origin, although there is no reason to believe the story sometimes given of it being named after a person who drowned there, although a Willie Strathearn did in fact drown there in 1884; it is ‘Wullies Struther’ in 1767).

Wulliestruther Cottage (wu–lee–stru–thur–ko’–eej) n. small cottage at the northern end of Williestruther Loch, part of Hawick Common. The tenants used it for a time as dog kennels.

Wulson (wul-sin, wil-sin) n. (Wilson) Adam (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Helm in 1756 and their children included: Christian (b.1758); and John (b.1761). The witnesses in 1758 were Francis Scott and Robert Dryden. Adam (18th/19th C.) son of flesher Robert and brother of Andrew, he was a shoemaker on the High Street. He is listed on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He is probably the Adam who married Margaret Young in 1788, and whose children included: Robert (b.1789); Margaret (b.1791); Richard (b.1793), who was also a shoemaker; Sarah (b.1795); and Andrew (1805–08). Adam (b.c.1815) chemist recorded at about 3 High Street in 1841. His wife was Eliza and their children included Thomas and George. This is probably the same as the firm ‘A.R. Wilson & Co.’ recorded on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. The company made ‘aerated waters’, as well as its own sheep dip and other products. It was also listed in Slater’s 1852 directory as ‘A.R. Wilson & Co.’, druggists and manufacturers of soda water; but the proprietor was deceased by then. The company was sold to Thomas Howie Hopper some time before 1856, when George (from Coldstream, perhaps his brother) ceased to have any business interest. Adam (b.1825/6) farmer at Midshiels. He served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. He was a Steward of the West Teviotdale Coursing Club in the 1860s. In 1861 he was farming 426 acres at Midshiels, and employing 11 people. He was still recorded at Midshiels in 1868. In about 1874 he was recorded as owner of Allars Garden, which had previously belonged to John Scott. Agnes (b.c.1795) daughter of shoemaker Peter. She was a milliner and straw hat maker at the Sandbed, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory along with Jane (her sister). They were both recorded again in Pigot’s 1837 directory, but now on the Sandbed. In 1841 they were living at about 5 Buccleuch Street with their brother James, who was Hawick Town Clerk. They were also listed on Buccleuch Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. Alan (17th C.) listed as ‘Allane Wilson’ in 1627 among men stated to be fit for the military. Later in the year he was the first named of 7 inhabitants of Hawick held in the Tolbooth of Edinburgh who complained that they were not ‘ydle and maisonless men’, but ‘honest, simple men attending that calling quherunto it hes pleased God to call us’, and hence should not have been pressed into military service. Nevertheless the Privy Council ordered that they be transported by the Earl of Nithsdale to the wars in Germany. It is unclear if any of them returned to Hawick. Alexander (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Marion Shiel and their son Alexander was baptised in 1695. He probably (although it is hard to read) witnessed a baptism in 1691 for Robert Mark, who lived at Burnfoot on Ale. Alexander (17th C.) resident at Nether Whisgills in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Alexander (1766–1813) from Paisley, he is described as ‘the Father of American Ornithology’. He was apprenticed as a weaver and inspired by Burns tried his hand at verse. Imprisoned for a satirical verse against a mill-owner, he afterwards emigrated to America. Sometime before he left in 1794 he is meant to have visited Denholm Dean with an itinerant packman by the name of Bertram; the old packman claimed to have later sent Leyden’s lines on Denholm over to him in America. Alexander M. (b.1810/1) from Duns, he was a house painter listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. He was at about 46 High Street in 1841, with his brother Thomas. In 1851 he was on Allars Crescent. His wife was Margaret and they had a daughter Elizabeth. Dr. Alexander Christie (1845–1925) younger son of Walter of Orchard, he was born in Hawick. He was partly educated at Hawick Subscription Rooms, where he was taught by James A.H. Murray. He graduated M.D. from Edinburgh University in 1870 and moved to Doncaster in 1871, where he was a doctor for 55 years. There he lived at 21 South Parade and then 39 Hallgate. He was President of Doncaster Y.M.C.A. for 30 years and also warden at St. James’ Church there.

In 1873 he married Emma Bewley. Their children were: Walter Reginald (1874/5–1965), who joined his father’s medical practice; Agnes Bewley, also a doctor, who died in 1909 from blood poisoning after being bitten by a suicidal woman patient; Norman; and Eleanor (or Norah), who died unmarried in 1952. Rev. Alexander (1860–1917) son of Rev. James of Enzie and Charlotte Allardes. He was educated in Aberdeen, becoming assistant at Holburn, before moving to Saughtree as ‘missionary’ in 1886, where he remained until 1889. He then moved to Blairdaff, before becoming a minister at Ythan Wells, Aberdeenshire. He married Margaret Isabella Anderson and their children were: Charlotte Mary; Margaret Anderson; and Alexander Gordon.

Alfred Cruickschank (1843–69) 3rd son of Walter of Orchard. In 1866 he married Rebecca Fraser Scott, who died in 1870, aged 22. They had a daughter, Florence Margaret (b.1867). Allan (17th C.) named by the Hawick Bailie in 1627 on a list of men fit to be sent to the wars in Germany (and hence presumably undesirable to the town!).

Andrew (17th C.) simpleton in the Branxholme area. He is described in a 1638–40 financial account of the Scotts of Buccleuch as ‘the fool at Branxholm’. Andrew (17th C.) mason in Hawick. In 1676 Samnel Newbie was found guilty of assaulting him and another mason, Andrew Turnbull. Andrew (d.c.1685) tenant in Millholm. His will is recorded in 1685. Andrew (d.c.1697) leased 1/5 of the farm of Branxholme Town in 1692. He may have been related to Janet, who also leased part of the farm in 1692, and by 1694 he appears to have taken over her 1/5. He was still leasing part of Branxholm Town in 1697, but in 1698 his widow (with her name not recorded) was leasing part of the farm, with Walter Wilson as her cautionsioner. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, described in 1725 as ‘servant to Falnesh’. He married Isabel Murray and their children included Robert (b.1725), Walter (b.1729) and Bessie (b.1731). The witnesses in 1725 were James and Walter Crow, tenants in Branxholme Town. Andrew (18th C.) mason in Hawick. He witnessed a baptism for James Riddell (at Menslaws) in Hawick in 1745. He paid tax for 19 windows in Hawick in 1748. He may be descended from the earlier mason Andrew. He married Isobel Scott and their children included: Isobel (b.1741); James (b.1743); John (b.1744); and Betty (b.1746). The witnesses in 1743 were wright Walter Scott and writer James Weir and in 1744 were late-Bailie John Scott and William Scoon, servant to Rev. Somerville. It is possible that his children included Dr. James, Bailie John and Betty who married George Hailburton (with the other 2 acting as baptismal witnesses for one of her children). Andrew (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His children included Robert (b.1738), Isabel (b.1741) and William (b.1748).

Dr. Andrew (18th C.) paid tax on 16 windows at Newton in Bedrule Parish in 1753. He appears to have had a daughter Margaret baptised in Bedrule in 1757. It is unclear how he was related to other local Wilsons. Andrew (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. In 1749 he is recorded purchasing 75 stones of ewe’s milk cheese from Robert Elliot, farmer at Braidlie. And in the same year he sold whisky and malt to the same Robert Elliot. He may be the same as one of the other Andrews. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Betty Dods and their children included Janet (b.1754). Andrew (18th C.) flesher in Hawick, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Rev. Andrew (1798/9–1831) appointed assistant minister of the Presbyterian Church in Liverpool in 1824, in an attempt to resolve disputes between the minister, David Thom, and the congregation. He is among the subscribers to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’, published in 1825; his connection to Hawick is unclear. He was minister at the Rodmay Street Kirk from 1825 until 1830. He married Sarah Murray. He was struck with a debilitating illness and died less than a year later. Andrew (d.1847) son of flesher Robert, he was also in the same line of business. He is probably the flesher who paid the Horse Tax in Hawick in 1797. He was listed as a flesher in Hawick in 1810 (in the inventory after the death of ‘Auld Cash’). His premises were on the High Street, where he is recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory as a ‘flesher’ and ‘bacon dealer’. In 1815 his servant Henry Stockwell was found not guilty of an assault. He was among the subscribers to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’, published in 1825. He was referred to in 1829 in a letter that farmer Adam Brydon wrote to the King, complaining about paying taxes; it ended with a request for the receipt to be directed ‘to the care of Andrew Wilson, butcher in Hawick’. Andrew (b.c.1810) baker at about 24 High Street. He is listed there on Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 he is listed with his wife Martha and son Andrew. He could be the merchant who was on the Railway Committee for Hawick District in the 1850s. Andrew (b.1812/3–74) son of James, he was a road surveyor like his father. He was living at Ovenshank in Castleton parish in 1841, 1851 and 1861. He was on the Borders Union Railway Committee for Liddesdale in the 1850s. He donated an old coin to the Museum in 1863. He was the architect for the Albert Bridge in 1865. He was listed as the Surveyor for the Liddesdale Turnpike Trust in 1866. He married Margaret Kyle, who died in 1889, aged 75. Their children included: James; William (1848/9–60); Margaret (1851/2–1904); Georgina (1856/7–60); James (d.1916); and Frances Helen (d.1927). He and his wife both died in Hawick and are buried at Etterton. Andrew (b.1821/2) grocer in Hawick. He was listed on the ‘Middle Row’ in Slater’s 1852 directory. He was at 11 Mid Row in 1851 and 1861. In 1841 he married Ann (c.1822–77), daughter of shoemaker Adam Ker-sal. Their children included: William (b.1842), Isabell (b.1843), Adam Kersall (b.1845), George (b.1847), Janet Hannah (b.1851) and Margaret (b.c.1856). Andrew ‘Dan’ (b.c.1870) son of William and Betsy Robson. He carried on his father’s rag and waste business at 5 Teviot Road and later emigrated to Australia. Andrew (d.1945) married Mary Ekron in Hawick. His wife Mary (1875–1939) was daughter of John Ekron and Agnes Carruthers. Their children were: Agnes (d.1977), who married Joseph Farries; Isabella, who married John Stewart; Helen (d.1975), who married Andrew Aitken; and John, who married Elsa Farquharson. Archibald (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1717 he was recorded as ‘weaver at the Kirk’. He married Isobel Jardine and their children included Janet (b.1715), Marion (b.1717) and Marion (again, b.1721). Basil Fritz Aubrey (1919–95) son of Fritz Aubrey and brother of Dennis. He studied English and History at Edinburgh University, became Assistant Headmaster at Wilton and then Headmaster at Drumlanrig School. He was one of the first teachers to introduce outdoor pursuits into his schools activities. He instigated the use of pre-recorded music in church. In the late 1980s he also oversaw the reconstruction of the organ at St. Cuthbert’s Kirk. He married Elizabeth M. Hogg and they had sons Michael and Johnny. Bruce son of George, who was Cornet in 1932. He was himself Cornet in 1969. He lost his Cornet’s Badge at the Monday morning Chase, but found it again on Wednesday! He married his Cornet’s Lass Valerie Franklin. They lived in Glasgow for 28 years before moving to North Berwick. Catherine (18th/19th C.) dressmaker on the High Street, recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory. She is listed along with Josiah, who was presumably her son. He is probably the man from England with that name listed as a handloom weaver on the Howe-gate in 1841. Catherine (b.c.1785) grocer at about 57 High Street in 1841. She is probably the same person as Christian. Charles (18th C.) father of Robert. He may also have been called ‘Lurgie’. He was a shoemaker and inn-keeper like his son, and may also have been son of a shoemaker. He appears to have had literary interests, like his son, since he was among the subscribers to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). In 1781 he was one of the witnesses to a baptism for Thomas Miller. In 1771 he married Agnes Tinlin and their only surviving child was Robert, born about 5 months later (with witnesses being the whole congregation). He was probably the Charles born in Hawick Parish in 1746, son of Robert and Bessie Lorraine (or possibly the Charles born in Cavers in 1743, son of James). It is said that he was named Charles because his father had been in the company of officer’s from Prince Charles’ army when they passed through Hawick in 1745. Charles (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at Greenbank in 1779 (presumably the place in Roberton Parish). He married Mary Dryden and their children included: Betty (b.1771); James (b.1773); David (b.1779); William (b.1781); John (b.1784); and Samuel (b.1790). Charles M. (19th C.) solicitor in Hawick. He is recorded from at least 1866. He served as Depute for the Justices of the Peace for Hawick. He was a member of the Berwick Naturalists’ Club. He was half of the partnership of Wilson & Anderson, who were a firm of writers, conveyancers and bank agents, which dissolved in 1874. He may be the Charles who was recorded at Ormiston House in a directory of 1868. Charles John (1842–1923) son of Provost George. At the age of 14, after a year in boarding-school in London, he was brought into the family business, learning about every department in the factory. In 1860 he was made factory manager, when still a young man. In 1875, along with his father and brother George Murray Wilson, he went into partnership with James Glenny, purchasing the Ladyleaw and Langlands Mills. He served as a local councillor in the late 1800s, and was on the School Board and Parish Council. He was one of the original members of the Hawick Science and Art Committee and was the founder of the Hawick Technical Classes. He was Chairman of the Hawick Working Men’s Building Society. He was a Director of the North British Railway, President of the South of Scotland Chamber of Commerce and first President of the South of Scotland Woollen Trades Approved Society. An enthusiastic member of the British Association, he attended their meetings in South Africa in 1905 and in 1902 (partly to recover his health) he went on a round-the-world tour. He gifted the barometer outside the Town Hall in 1898 and jointly (with his brother and James Glenny) gave the Public Baths to the Town in 1912. He also offered to build a bridge at the Spetch, long before the Laurie Bridge was built. He wrote the article ‘Hawick and its people’ for the 1921 Transactions. He lived at Deanfield. In 1865 he married Mary Ann Glenny (sister of James Glenny), who was his cousin; she died after 52 years of marriage. They had 3 children: Katherine (b.1866); George Heron (b.1868), who was Provost; and Charles Glenny (died aged 14). He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. He left money to establish the C.J. Wilson Educational Bequest and C.J. Wilson Medal Fund at Wilton School and to build the C.J. Wilson Educational Bequest and First President of the South of Scotland Chamber of Commerce, being beaten by 1 vote in 1884 and was re-elected to the Council in 1886. He helped open a school in Weensland, was a committee member of the Roxburghshire Liberal Association, a keen horseman and also involved with the Cottage Hospital, Savings Bank and Congregational Church (for which he served as 3rd Treasurer). He married Margaret, daughter of builder Robert Pringle and carrier David Minto, and he may also have been his daughter, if he had an earlier marriage with Margaret Elliot. The witnesses in 1710 were merchant William Gardner and mason Peter Mitchell and in 1721 were wright John Pringle and carrier David Minto, and he was then recorded as ‘Tenent in Hawick’. He may have been related to other Wilsons who were carriers, like James and Robert. David (b.1768/9) from Greenlaw, he was land steward at Cavers farm. His wife was Margaret, and their children included Jane, Margaret and Mungo (who was a shopkeeper). He was still at Cavers in 1861. David (19th C.) teacher of a school on Tannage Close. He is listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He may be the schoolmaster in Hawick who had an unnamed daughter who died in 1819. Dennis Elliot Aubrey (1916-64) son of Fritz Aubrey and brother of Basil. He was the last Wilson owner of the firm of Walter Wilson & Sons. He married Doris Stevens and had a son, Colin Aubrey, who moved to the U.S.A. Edward (1841-1920) tweed manufacturer, son of Walter of Orchard and nephew of Provost George. He entered the Council in 1869 for North High Street Ward, later becoming a Bailie. He was Provost for 8 months in 1875, having to resign after the Collie collapse. He later returned to politics, being beaten by 1 vote in 1884 and was re-elected to the Council in 1886. He helped open a school in Weensland, was a committee member of the Roxburghshire Liberal Association, a keen horseman and also involved with the Cottage Hospital, Savings Bank and Congregational Church (for which he served as 3rd Treasurer). He married Margaret, daughter of builder Robert Hobkirk, and they had 6 daughters: Ada Elizabeth (b.1883), who married a Mr. Rams, minister in South Africa; Bessie Elmina (b.1885); Constance Rebecca (b.1890); Freda M. (b.1893); Muriel (b.1896), who married a Mr. Davis; and Olive P. Edward (b.1900). He built Beechhurst in 1889, later moved to Switzerland for health reasons and died in London. Edward Joseph (1858–1917) born at Chatton, where he was a pupil teacher. He then became schoolmaster at Charlton, and was at Saughtree in the late 1880s. He helped describe the area of upper Liddesdale for the Berwickshire Naturalists’ Club in 1889. He later moved to Bolton (East Lothian) and finally Abbey St. Bathans, and died in Earlston. He contributed other articles to the Berwickshire Naturalists and wrote an account of the area around Wooler, where he grew up. Elizabeth (17th C.) recorded in 1688 along with Janet Leydon, when they were fined for insulting Bailie Scott when he was equipping the Royalist Militia. Francis (b.1791) son of hatter James and Isabella Newberry. He was listed among the Borderers (led by 39) and `Barbara’ Constance (1913–95). George and Dennis and daughters ‘Pamela’ Agnes (1910–39) and ‘Barbara’ Constance (1913–95). George (15th/16th C.) listed among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Branxholme) pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran. George (16th C.) listed along with John Stewart as ‘servants and ministers for the time to William Ryddall’, brother to the Laird of Riddell. This was in a transaction signed in Lilliesleaf Kirk, suggesting that he may have been associated with that church. George (17th C.) shepherd at Raeskeknowe according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. George (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1708 he was recorded at Skelfhill when he married Bessie Grieve. Their children, baptised in Hawick, included: William (b.1715); and Gideon (b.1722). Robert (b.1718), also baptised in Hawick Parish, with mother’s name given as ‘Christian’ Grieve, was probably also their child. George (18th C.) living at Hott in Hawick Parish in 1722 when son Gideon was baptised in Roberton. George (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish, probably a carrier there. In 1753 he was paid by the Burgh of Selkirk for carrying timber from Berwick. George (18th C.) carrier in Hawick. He married Elizabeth Turnbull in Wilton in 1752. Their children included: Isobel (b.1756); James (b.1758); Helen (b.1761); Jane (b.1766); twins George and Mary (b.1767); and George (again, b.1769). Their first 2 children were baptised in Wilton. The witnesses in 1766 were carrier William Aitkin and writer William Wilson and in 1767 were carrier James Wilson (surely a relative) and writer William Wilson. George (18th C.) carrier, selected as Cornet in 1790 in opposition to the Council’s official selection. This was after the Council’s choice, Philip Elliot, made a narrow list of invitees to the Common Riding, leading many of the young men of the Town (and probably the West-enders in particular) to choose their own Cornet. His cavalcade was stopped at the West Port by Bailie Hardie, and therafter the two parties effectively held separate Common Riding celebrations. He probably married Agnes, daughter of Adam Laing. George (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Betty White and their children included Betty (b.1791), George (b.1792), William (b.1795) and James (b.1796). George (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1793 he married Betty Howison, who was also from Hawick. greengrocer and taxidermist at 8 Howegate. He was George (18th/19th C.) greengrocer and taxidermist at 8 Howegate. He was said to be the 5th of 8 George Wilsons. His premises appear to be marked ‘Wilson’ on Woods 1824 map. George (d.c.1815) son of James. He was a carrier in Hawick, like his brothers James and William. He paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1791. All 3 of the brothers were listed as carriers in the 1797 Horse Tax Roll for Hawick. He had 2 horses at that time.

He could be the George, married to Elizabeth Turnbull, whose children included Helen (b.1761), Jane (b.1766), Katherine (b.1766), twins George and Mary (b.1767) and George (again, b.1769);
the witnesses in 1767 were carrier James (presu-marily his father or brother) and writer William. George (19th C.) weaver in Newcastle.
He was listed as male head of his family in 1835, 1836 and 1838. George (19th C.) son of George, with the name probably going back at least 5 others before him. He was a joiner and a janitor at the High School. George (19th C.) first official precentor appointed by Hawick Free Kirk, acting in the period 1844–50. George (1815– 1898) first Provost of Hawick. Born in Hawick, he was the youngest child of mill-founder William, with his mother Elizabeth Richardson dying 10 days after he was born. He was educated in Hawick and at Quaker schools, including one in Wigton, where he went from the age of 12 for 2 years (without returning). He finally came back to Hawick from schooling at the age of 17, and immediately learned the hosiery and cloth-making trades. His father died in 1832, and the firm was split, with him effectively taking his father's share, and the other partners being his brothers Walter and John. In 1841 he lived at about 11 or 13 High Street. In about 1851 the brothers' partership was dissolved and he took the mill at Weensland, manufacturing tweeds. After a fire he took on Walter Armstrong as a partner, and as the firm grew they built workers’ housing in Weensland. He was a Councillor and Bailie 1846– 61, being a strong supporter of the Special Act to revise the council, which he helped frame. He was elected Provost at the first meeting of the reconstituted council in November 1861, served until 1868, and was then a councillor again until 1888.
He was later helped by his sons Charles John and George Murray. After the great Collie failure of 1875 he went into partnership with James Glenny, did it. He jointly (along with his brother Charles John, and their partner James Glenny) gave the Public Baths to the Town in 1912. He was one of the early tennis enthusiasts in the town.
He translated ‘Practical Perspective applied to Artistic and Industrial Design’ from the French in 1886. Later in life he lived at Dale End, Grassmere. He married late in life and had a daughter, Evelyn. George (1855–95) printer in Hawick, he was involved with local cricket from its earliest days, playing for Hawick and Wilton for several years, often as wicket-keeper, and being Honorary Secretary. He was also involved with other sporting clubs in the town. He was on the original Hawick R.F.C. committee, playing in the very first match, being a team regular for 9 years and Honorary Secretary for many years after that. He scored the winning try in the 1879 game against Melrose, probably the first to be played in Hawick under electric light. He is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery with a large monument erected over his grave by members of the Hawick Rugby Football Club. George of Langheugh (19th/20th C.) one of long line of Georges, son of the joiner and janitor. He was a yarn merchant of George Wilson & Sons (who were successors to William Laidlaw & Sons). His son George was Cornet in 1932 and his daughter Netta was Cornet’s Lass in 1936. George Heron, C.B.E. (1868–1959) grandson of Hawick’s first Provost, and elder son of Charles John. He was born at Ormiston, educated at Kirkton School, George Watson’s and in Switzerland and London. He played for Hawick R.F.C. in the 1885/6 season. He was a founder of the Harriers and the Tennis Club, and a keen golfer. He became a junior partner in Wilson & Glenny in 1885, and was Managing Director after it became a private limited company. He taught a French class for businessmen at his own expense, entered the Council in 1901, was elected a Magistrate and was also on many Council committees. He served as Deputy Controller of the Priority Department of the Ministry of Munitions. He became the first Provost when the Council reconstituted after WWI, serving 1919–22. His Provostship saw the War Memorial erected (he was Chairman of the War Memorial Committee), the sewage works extended and other improvements. He gifted the crimson robes, trimmed with ermine, for use of the 4 Burgh Magistrates. He was J.P. from 1912 and Chairman of the County National Health Insurance Committee, as well as member of various education committees, and he gifted Kilmeny to the Education Authority in 1929, for use as a hostel for girls from rural areas attending Hawick High School. He ran a French language course for young men in Hawick at his own expense. He helped the Common Riding Committee purchase the Volunteer Park, and gave money for tennis courts near the High School, as well as establishing the George Heron Wilson Bequest Fund. He entered the Ministry of Munitions in 1915, becoming Section Leader and then Deputy Controller, as well as being member of the Special Wages Arbitration Court, for which services he received the C.B.E. He married Julia Tod of Leith in 1902. He left Hawick in 1924 to live at Orchard near East Grinstead, where he became involved in the local council and educational committees. George Lithgow Wilson ‘Jinglin Geordie’ (d.1940) United Free Church minister at Cullen and then Cardenden in Fife. He came to Newcastleton as minister of the South Church in 1930, taking on the combined charge (with the Park Kirk) in 1934. His nickname came from his enthusiasm for playing the piano. His daughter Margaret Fairley Callan was a teacher. He died on a train at Riccarton Junction. Gideon (19th/20th C.) Hawick tweed and hosiery manufacturer. He had the house Almonte built for him on Braid Road in 1893, but sold it to Thomas Elliot Rutherford in 1901. He is probably the Gideon who was involved with Wauchope Mills in Langholm. He took part in the inaugural competition for the 6-hole golf course that existed for a while at Mosspaun. Henry (b.c.1810) smith in Hawick, listed on Pigot’s 1837 directory at the Sandbed. He was recorded at ‘Sandbed bridge end’ on the 1841 census. He helped James Hogg (of ‘Teribus’) to make some stocking frames. He married Helen Wintrope in Wilton in 1829. Their children included James, Thomas, Walter and Henry. Isabel (d.1799) resident of Hawick Parish. In her death record of 1799 she is ‘sister to Jane & Nelly’. These were the names of daughter of Peter Wilson, but would surely have been too young at the time; it seems likely these were daughters of a onceprominent deceased Wilson. Isabella (19th C.) milliner on the Howgate, listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. She was daughter of baker Walter. In 1851 she was living with her widowed mother and several siblings at about 10 Howgate. James (16th C.) holder of a particate of land on the north side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. James (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1595 in complaints made by the Lord of Gilsland about raids into England by Elliots, Nixons and others. His name is given as ‘Rytche James Wylson’, which could mean he was James, son of Richard. James (17th/18th C.) listed as resident at Mabonlaw on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was also at Mabonlaw in 1710, 1713, 1715 and 1723 when children of his were baptised in Roberton Parish. His children included: Christian (b.1710); Marion (b.1713); Jean (b.1715); and James (b.1723). James (17th C.) carrier in Hawick. He is probably the carrier listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. Probably the same James is listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He married Marion Scott and their daughter Isobel was baptised in 1701. Other children, baptised in Hawick, who could be theirs, include Margaret (b.1692) and James (b.1700). The same carrier appears to have secondly married Helen Murray (also from Hawick Parish) in 1709 and had a daughter Margaret (b.1712), as well as perhaps sons John (b.1710) and James (b.1715). The witnesses in 1701 were tailor Robert (who may therefore have been his brother or other close relative) and carrier Robert Robson and in 1712 were merchant Robert Robson and tailor Robert again. James (17th C.) resident at Huntlaw on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls for Hassendean Parish. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was recorded in 1708 as servitor at Horsleyhill when he witnessed a baptism for weaver Thomas Brigge. James (17th/18th C.) resident of ‘Kirkton’ farm. His son Robert was baptised in Kirkton Parish in 1719. James (17th/18th C.) schoolmaster in Ashkirk, recorded there in 1719 and 1724. He married Elizabeth Douglas and their children included: Alexander (b.1719); Elizabeth (b.1724); and William (b.1727). James ‘the Baron’ (1687–1774) son of tailor John and Bessie Beattie. He was said to be one of 2 sons of an army sergeant in Queen Anne’s time, the other probably being William. He was born at Whitchesters, where the family may have resided for a long time. He was a farmer and carrier in Kirkton and later a carrier in Hawick. He is probably the Hawick carrier who witnessed a baptism for workman William Nichol in 1742. He married Isabella Blyth (1692–1747), daughter of James and they had 5 children: William (1713–91), ‘Whusky Wullie’; Anne (b.1727); James (twin with Anne, but died young); James (b.1730); and Beatrice (b.1735). He is buried in St. Mary’s Kirkyard. In the 1791 death record of his son James, he is listed as ‘the old Baron’. James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1737 he was recorded at ‘Mains’, which was presumably Cavers Mains. His children, baptised in Cavers, probably included William (b.1734), Thomas (b.1737), Archibald (b.1740), Charles (b.1743) and James (b.1746). James (18th C.) tanner in Hawick, also recorded as a carrier. He married Janet Elliot and their children included: Robert (b.1739); Bessie (b.1740); Margaret (b.1744); Helen (b.1744); John (b.1745); Adam (b.1745); Janet (b.1747); and Robert (again, b.1757). The witnesses to the 1757 baptism were the whole congregation. He may have been related to the tanners and candlemakers of about the same time, John and Walter. He may be the ‘carrier’ (or perhaps ‘currier’) James who witnessed a baptism (along with weaver John) for shoemaker Robert Elliot in 1765. James (18th C.) recorded being in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1743 when his marriage to Catherine ‘Mabane’ was announced in Melrose Parish, with Thomas Vair as cautioner. James (b.1730) son of carrier James and Isobel Blyth. He had 3 sons, George, James and William, all of whom were carriers. It is possible he was the carrier James who witnessed a baptism for carrier George in 1767 (if George was perhaps his brother). James ‘Craft’ (d.bef. 1811) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Scott in 1763 and their children included Walter (b.1764). He could be the James who witnessed a baptism for Walter Lorraine in 1764. His wife died in Hawick in 1811, when his nickname is recorded (but it is unclear what it meant). James (18th C.) recorded being in Hawick in 1781 when his daughter Emily was baptised in Roberton Parish. He may have been living at a farm in Hawick Parish close to the boundary with Roberton. His daughter’s name is uncommon for that time. He may be the same as one of the other Jameses. Dr. James (d.c.1800) surgeon in Hawick, said to be from Otterburn. Originally. He probably lived on the south side of the High Street, since during the great flood of 1767 it is said that the Backdamgate flooded ‘as far as Doctor Wilson’s cross-head’. Hawick printer, postmaster and Bailie, Robert Armstrong, was an apprentice with him. In 1768 he witnessed a baptism for schoolmaster James Inglis and in 1775 (along with James Inglis) he witnessed a baptism for Town Clerk John Gledstaines. He was one of the founders of the Hawick Farmers’ Club in 1776. In 1780 he (along with Bailie John) witnessed a baptism for George Haliburton and Betty Willock. He was a farmer and carrier in Hawick Parish. He is probably the carrier James quoted in Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He paid the Horse Tax in Hawick in 1785–94. He was a bachelor in Hawick in 1787 when he paid tax for having a female servant; he continued to pay in 1788–91, and paid the lower rate for a ‘bachelor servant’. In 1791 he witnessed the baptism of one of Lord Napier’s children at Wilton Lodge. About 1799 he is recorded contributing money to the war against France. His unnamed daughter is recorded dying in 1801 in the Parish records, by which time he was already deceased. He is recorded as an owner of ‘Part of Particot Lands of Hawick’ in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls (although probably dead long before then); by about 1874 the lands were recorded being owned by feuars. He may be the ‘Dr Wilson’ recorded on Wood’s 1824 map (even although deceased by then) as owner of lands where Melgund Place and the southern side of Brongham Place were built, and also of a plot of land on what would become Allars Bank, as well as the property at 22 High Street. James of Otterburn, listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819 may have been related. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton and Hawick Parishes, recorded at Damside in 1780. He married Margaret Miller and their children included: George (b.1780), baptised in Wilton; and Isabel (b.1782), Robert (b.1784), George (b.1788) and Elizabeth (b.1790), baptised in Hawick. The witnesses in 1780 were George and James Wilson (who were surely relatives, perhaps the carriers). James (18th C.) hatter manufacturer of James Wilson & Co., Hawick. There is a record of a grant of £10 being awarded to the company by the Board of Trustees for Manufactures in 1785. By 1787 he was carrying on the business on his own, rather than in a partnership. He is recorded as a hatter in Hawick on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1789–92. He should not be confused with the later hat manufacturer (and economist) of the same name; it is unclear if he had any link to the manufacturing Wilsons. He may have married Isabella Newberry and had children Ann (b.1787), James (b.1789), Francis (b.1791) and Mary. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at West Highchesters in 1792. He married Elizabeth Turnbull in Robertson in 1792 and their son Thomas was baptised in that year. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at Belses, recorded as owner of no fewer than 14 farm horses and 1 saddle horse on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was additionally taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. James (18th/19th C.) horse-dealer at Denholmhill, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Perhaps the same John was blacksmith in Denholm on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. James ‘the Bean’ (1747–1821) clock and watchmaker, son of William (‘Whusky Wullie’). He was known as the leader of Hawick fashion in the mid-to-late-18th century. He was Cornel in 1781 and was also Dean of Guild. In 1778 4 of his silver watches were reported as part of goods stolen from the coach office at the Bull and Mouth Inn, near Birmingham. He is recorded as ‘clock-maker’ when he (along with his father William) witnessed a baptism for his brother Peter in 1779. He is probably the James of Hawick described as a watchmaker when he took out fire insurance in London in 1781. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He is said to have been standing at his new shop door when ‘Blinnd Wullie’ Craw passed, and asked him to make a poem about his new house, whereupon he replied ‘A certain one has built a house, Whose fortune it was low, A wooden cornice he put on – I mean the charming Beau’. In 1783 he married Janet Gibson of Cardrona, Peeblesshire, and she died in 1839, aged 76. Their children were: Peggy (or Margaret, b.1784); Mary (b.1787); Nancy (or Agnes); and Hardie James (b.1797). James (18th/19th C.) son of skinner John. He was a shoemaker in Hawick. He was selected by ballot to serve on the local Militia in 1799, but later declared to be unfit. He could be the James, son of John and Margaret Waugh, born in Hawick in 1776. His son Thomas died in 1808 and Robert in 1810, with his wife Lizzy Reid also dying in 1810. James (b.1762/3–1843) originally from England, he was a road surveyor living at Ovenshank in Castleton Parish. He was listed there among heads of households in 1835–41 and was there on the 1841 census. He married Margaret Foster, who died in 1853, aged 56. Their children included: Andrew (1812/3–74), also a road surveyor; Helen; and Jane. The family are buried at Ettleton. James (d.1831) son of James, he was a carrier in Hawick, like his brothers George and William. He paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1789–91. He was recorded with his brothers as a carrier on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, having 2 horses. He also served as Town Herd. He is probably the carrier James whose son William died in Hawick in 1840. James (b.c.1790) farmer at Cleithaugh in Southdean Parish. James (1797–1862) Hawick Town Clerk. He was the youngest son of shoemaker Peter and his brothers included shoemaker William, candlemaker John (‘the Dip’) and manufacturers Peter and Thomas. He was a ‘writer’ (i.e. lawyer) and bank agent in Hawick. He was listed as a writer in Hawick on the subscription list for Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ (1825). He is probably the James recorded as writer and notary on the Howegate in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. His premises were probably one of those marked ‘Wulson’ on Wood’s 1824 map. A letter to him is preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. In Pigot’s 1837 directory he is listed as writer, and agent for the National Bank of Scotland as well as agent for Caledonian fire insurance and Standard life insurance; he was at that time on Buccleuch Street. In 1852 he was agent for both Caledonian and Standard insurance companies. He served as Town Clerk of Hawick 1841–62 and may also have been a Councillor. He wrote ‘Annals of Hawick’ (1850) and ‘Hawick and its old Memories’ (1858, also known as ‘Memories of Hawick’), which were compiled from Burgh and Parish records; these form an invaluable record of the early history of Hawick, with his detailed insight and interpretation being crucially important. However, he probably did a disservice to the Town by suggesting that the 1537 Charter may have represented the original granting of Hawick’s Common. Additionally, he sided very clearly with those who caused Hawick to lose part of the Common in the Division of 1777, and he was not a great fan of the Common Riding, describing it as ‘now a mere pageant for the enjoyment of youth’. Despite this, for many years until 1859 he headed the Procession to the Moor, and called the Burgess Roll. He also produced a very useful register of deaths for the period 1825–62. His legal office was at 5 Buccleuch Street. In 1841, 1851 and 1861 he was living there with his unmarried sisters Agnes and Jane (or Janet). In 1851 he is listed as Procurator before the Sheriff Court of Roxburghshire. He may be the Liberal supporter who was mentioned in connection with the 1837 Commons inquiry into ‘fictitious voters’, specific because of buying property in Selkirkshire in order to vote there. He traced a disservice to the Town by suggesting that the 1537 Charter may have represented the original granting of Hawick’s Common. Additionally, he sided very clearly with those who caused Hawick to lose part of the Common in the Division of 1777, and he was not a great fan of the Common Riding, describing it as ‘now a mere pageant for the enjoyment of youth’. Despite this, for many years until 1859 he headed the Procession to the Moor, and called the Burgess Roll. He also produced a very useful register of deaths for the period 1825–62. His legal office was at 5 Buccleuch Street. In 1841, 1851 and 1861 he was living there with his unmarried sisters Agnes and Jane (or Janet). In 1851 he is listed as Procurator before the Sheriff Court of Roxburghshire. He may be the Liberal supporter who was mentioned in connection with the 1837 Commons inquiry into ‘fictitious voters’, specific because of buying property in Selkirkshire in order to vote there. He traced an extended family tree for the local Wilsons. He appears to have died unmarried. A portrait of him exists. James (b.1798/9) horse-keeper on the High Street, listed on the 1851 census. In 1841 he was recorded as an agricultural labourer. He lived on Reid’s Close, which was at about 77 High Street. His wife was Margaret and their children included Elizabeth, Archibald and Janet. He was a widower by 1861. James (b.c.1800) from Castle Douglas, he was a blacksmith on the High Street. In 1841 he was living at about No. 75 with his wife Janet and children Andrew, James (frameworker) and Adam. By 1861 he was a widower, living with his son James at 7 Kirkwynd He is probably the same James who was blacksmith on Walter’s Wynd; was said that James (‘Teribus’) Hogg had a ‘double-decker’ frame made on his anvil. He may have been related to Henry, who was also a smith in Hawick. James (b.1800/1) born in Cavers Parish, he was shepherd at Lurgiescleuch in Hobkirk Parish in 1861. It is unclear if he was related to Robert ‘Lurgie’, who came from there. He married Isabel Elliot, and their children: included John (b.1847); Mary (b.1850); Janet (b.1852); Matthew (b.1855); Margaret (b.1858); Robert (b.1862); and Andrew (b.1866). Their children were born in Cavers, Kirkton and Teviothead Parishes. He may be the agricultural labourer living at Peelbraehope in 1841, with Margaret (probably his mother). James (1805–1860) politician and economist, born in Hawick. Third son of manufacturer William (of a family of 15), he was educated in Quaker schools at Ackworth and Earlscombe. However, he returned to Hawick at the age of 16 to be apprenticed to a hat manufacturer, apparently frustrated that Quaker beliefs prevented him from pursuing a legal career. With his brother William they took over the business (purchased for them by their father), which prospered in Hawick, and did even better when they moved it to London in 1824. The company was called Wilson, Irwin & Wilson, but in 1831 became James Wilson & Co. After some financial troubles (including disastrously speculating in indigo) he retired from business in 1844. He then speculated in indigo, and lost almost all his money, but avoided bankruptcy and eventually recovered. Meanwhile he wrote essays against the Corn Laws, in favour of free trade and on fiscal policy; establishing a reputation as a political campaigner. He established ‘The Economist’ magazine in 1843, writing most of it himself for the first few years. It was established on the principle of stimulating ‘every man who has a stake in the country … to investigate and learn for himself’ about public affairs. He became a Liberal M.P. first in 1847, and was financial secretary to the Treasury then turned down an appointment as Vice-President of the Board of Trade. He was also nominated as Governor of Victoria, Australia, but this was blocked by the Queen, because his ‘position and status’ were not deemed high enough. Thus snubbed he almost resigned from politics, but stayed on to become Vice-President of the Board of Trade. He later accepted a position as financial member of the Council of India (effectively India’s Chancellor of the Exchequer), which meant resigning his parliamentary seat. He was made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick in 1859. Later in 1859 he travelled to India, where he quickly adapted to life there, learning the ropes rapidly, and doing much to reform Indian finance. However, he died of dysentery there. He is buried in the Circular Road Cemetery, Calcutta. There is a bust of him in the National Gallery, Edinburgh, and a full-size marble statue inside 25 St. James's Street in London. A copy of his portrait hangs in the Town Hall (painted by J. Watson-Gordon) and in 2005 a plaque was placed at 11 High Street, his probable birth place. The Museum also has a bust of him. In 1831 he married Elizabeth Preston (who died in 1886), after converting to the Church of England. They had 6 daughters, all of whom were later joint proprietors of the Economist: Eliza, married Walter Bagehot, whose romantic correspondence was later published; Julia, married William Rathbone Greg; Matilda, married Matthew Horan; Zenobia, married Orby Shipley; Sophie Victoria, married William Halsey; and Emilie Isabel, who married Russell Barrington and wrote a biography of her father. His daughter Emilie wrote the biography ‘The Servant of All’ (1927). He is buried in the Circular Road Cemetery, Calcutta. There is a bust of him in the National Gallery, Edinburgh. A full-size marble statue of him by acclaimed sculptor John Steell, stood inside the Economist’s offices at 25 St. James’s Street in London, but was relocated onto Drumlanrig Bridge in 2017. A copy of his portrait hangs in the Town Hall (painted by J. Watson-Gordon) and in 2005 a plaque was placed at 11 High Street, his probable birth place. The Museum also has a bust of him. James (19th C.) farmer at Cleuch Head in Hobkirk Parish in the 1860s. James Anderson (1830–86) son of Hawick shoemaker William. He served with the Royal Navy and is listed as a chief engineer in 1870. He married Agnes Downie and their children were William Grant, Beatrice Mary, John Downie (who married Gertrude Potts), Agnes J.K., James A., George E. and Harry C. Dr. James P.A. (19th C.) sometimes preacher at the Home Mission in Hawick. He lodged with Mrs. Gowans in town and married her daughter Katie. He later worked in a government job in Jalore in Malaysia. Their son was Dr. William Brockie and his widow became Lady Ibrahim, Sultannes of Jalore, while their daughter Eleanor was on the London stage for a while. Sir James Glenny (1849–1929) born in Hawick, son of woollen manufacturer George and Jane Law. He was educated at the Parish School then in London and at college in Edinburgh. He is probably the James recorded at Heronhill in 1868. He floundered in a position back at Wilson’s mill, so was sent off to learn about farming, travelling to Australia. He moved to New Zealand in 1873, where he purchased a farm in the Rangitikei district. He called his house ‘Lethenty’, after the place where the Glennys had come from in Aberdeenshire. He was known as an innovative farmer, trying many new ideas, but taking about 20 years to be successful. He became a Member of the New Zealand Parliament in 1881, serving until 1896 (and was a Conservative, despite his family’s Liberal ties). He became first President of the New Zealand Farmers’ Union in 1902. He was also President of the Board of Agriculture and served on many committees and advisory boards. He is now best remembered for his early efforts as a conservationist, helping establish the State Forestry Service, and being a strong advocate of replanting native forests. He was knighted in 1915. A keen churchman, he played the organ in his local Presbyterian Church. He married Annie Adams, daughter of farmers in western Victoria. They had 3 sons (Hamish, Noel and Maj. Robert A., farmer and naturalist) and 2 daughters (Nancy, who was a leader in the Girl Guides and Jean). He is buried in the cemetery at Bulls. Jane (b.c.1800) keeper of a lodging house on the Loan. She is recorded there in 1841, along with children Jane, Elizabeth, Isabella, Janet and James. By 1851 she had married frameworker John Eddie and was running a boarding house on Walter’s Wynd. Janet (17th C.) recorded in 1690 when she leased one fifth of the farm of Branxholme Town from Scott of Buccleuch. She was probably a widow of the previous farmer, but it is unclear if Wilson was her maiden or married name. She was also tenant in 1691 and 1692, and may have been related to Andrew Wilson who also leased part of Branxholme Town then. Her name does not appear again after that, and so either she died, or other family members took over farming. John (15th C.) recorded being ‘in hartwoodmyris’ (i.e. Hartwoodmyres) in 1494/5. He contributed goods the itinerant court held in Selkirk, his surety being John Murray of Hangingshaw. John (16th C.) recorded on a list of tenants of Newton in Bedrule in 1531. John (16th C.) recorded in Wester Phaup in Ettrick in 1580, when he had an agreement over borrowing money from James Stewart in Tinnis. John (16th C.) recorded in Thirlestane in 1581, when he was recorded as witness to a sasine for the lands of Thirlestane and Hopehouse, involving the Cranstons of that Ilk. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish who in 1651 witnessed baptisms for William Thomson and for John Renwick and in 1652 for George Henderson. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret (or Marion) Scott and their children included Marion (b.1646), William (b.1651) and William (again, b.1652). The witnesses in 1652 were James Scott and Walter Riddell. John (17th C.) tenant in Flight in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. John (17th C.) resident at Whithope according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to the later John at Whithope. John (17th/18th C.) tailor in Hawick Parish. He is probably the tailor recorded at Allanhaugh Mill on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. The later tailor (in Newbigging) of the same name was probably his son. He witnessed a baptism for his son John in 1713; he was then described as ‘taylor called old John’. His wife was Bessie ‘Betie’ (i.e. Beattie) and their children included: Agnes (b.1678); Bessie (b.1680), who married John Nichol in 1708; Janet (b.1682); John (b.1685), also a tailor at Newbigging and Whitchesters; and James (b.1687). Baptismal witnesses were Robert Scott, ‘Glack’ and Walter Henderson in 1678, Robert Scott in Barn Knowe and John Martin in 1680, Walter Scott of Altoncroft and John Scott in 1682, and John Stewart and William Riddell in 1687. It is unclear whether or not he was the Army Sergeant during the reign of Queen Anne, who had 2 sons (possibly James and William), who were said to be progenitors of many of the local Wilsons. He could be the John Wilson who enlisted as an ensign in the Coldstream Guards in 1688/9. John (17th/18th C.) tailor in Newbigging in Hawick Parish, probably related to the earlier tailor of the same name (perhaps his son). In 1708 he was tailor at Newbigging when he witnessed baptisms for John Dryden, smith at Newmill and for dyker William Pearson. In 1713 he was ‘younger and Taylor in Whitchesters’ when one of his children was baptised. He married Helen Paterson and their children included: James (b.1711); John (b.1713); John (b.1716); Helen (b.1719); Bessie (b.1722); and Christian (b.1725). The witnesses in 1711 were Walter Scott and Robert Davidson in Newbigging and in 1713 were Alexander Thomson (tenant at Whitchesters) and John Wilson (‘taylor called old John’, his father). John (17th/18th C.) farmer at Branhxolme Town. He could be the son of Walter, who was recorded at Branhxolme Town in 1694. He was at Branhxolme Town from at least 1702. He was recorded being in arrears at Branhxolme Town in the period 1712–17. During that time he was renting 1/5 of the farm along with Walter Craw. In 1723 he was tenant in Branhxolme Town (along with John Craw, also tenant) when he witnessed a baptism for John Scott and Helen (perhaps his daughter). In 1725 he was renting 2/5 along with Robert and Walter Scoon and 1/5 with Walter Craw. He was still recorded as farmer of part of Branhxolme Town in 1735 and was in arrears for rent there in 1742. In 1699 he married Margaret Crow, who died around 1739. Their children included: Helen (b.1702), perhaps the Helen who married John Scott in 1724; William (b.1705), who may have emigrated; and Walter (b.1712), ‘Haunless Wat’. He may be the carrier who witnessed a baptism at Branhxolme in 1747. The baptism of Helen in 1702 was witnessed by merchant Walter, who was surely related, as well as merchant Walter Oliver. James (b.1711), baptised in Hawick Parish, may also have been his son. He is said to have had 2 of his horses requisitioned by Bonnie Prince Charlie’s army in 1745, to carry baggage as far as Carlisle. John (17th/18th C.) shepherd at Priesthaugh in 1716. His daughter Agnes was baptised in Hawick (although he was living in Cavers Parish) in 1716. The witnesses were the same as for the other baptism that day. Other children, baptised in Cavers, who could be his included Margaret (b.1710), Francis (b.1714), Archibald (b.1717) and Ann (b.1720). John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was recorded at East Highchesters in 1714, Highchesters in 1716 and 1718 and East Highchesters in 1720. Perhaps the same John was at Whithope in 1722. His children probably included: Agnes (b.1714); Janet (b.1716); William (b.1718); James (b.1720); and Janet and Jean (b.1722). He is probably the John who married Janet Laidlaw in Roberton in 1713. Perhaps the same John also married Janet Scott in Roberton in 1707. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Jean Dalglis and their children included Walter (b.1719); and John (b.1722), mother recorded as ‘Bessie Dalgless’. Adam (b.1727), with no mother’s name given, may also have been his son. He is probably the John who witnessed a baptism for Thomas Irvine in langlands in 1722. He may be the servitor of Rev. William Crawford, minister of Wilton, who in 1723 accused a Selkirk couple of stealing ‘a new cloth coat with other linen’. John ‘Light Pack’ (18th C.) son of (probably) William, elder son of an army sergeant in Queen Anne’s time. He was a weaver and married Margaret Elliot. Their sons were John and Walter, both of whom worked as tanners and candlemakers. They also had daughters Janet (b.1756) and Margaret (b.1759). It is possible that his wife was the ‘Peggy Wilson, Hawick’ who subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He could be the weaver John who (along with currier James) witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Robert Elliot in 1765. Note that there was a later John, also married to a Margaret Elliot, which can confuse the Wilson genealogies in Hawick. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Scott and their children included Janet (b.1758), Bailie John (18th C.) Hawick baker who was a Bailie in 1772. He could be the John who paid to have the Parish ‘mortcloth’ for a child’s burial in 1773. He may be the John who was one of the Bailies during the disturbances in Hawick involving clashes with the ‘Patriots’ in about 1778. He is recorded as Bailie John in 1780 when (along with Dr. James) witnessed a baptism for George Haliburton and Bessie Wilson (who may have been related). He may be the John who witnessed a baptism for Town Clerk John Gledstains in 1781. He may be the John who leased Pilmuir farm in 1787. He could be the John whose daughter Jean died in 1781. He is probably the baker John whose unnamed child died in 1797 and whose daughter Anne died in Hawick in 1810. He witnessed a baptism for William Brown in 1801. John (18th C.) Hawick inn-keeper of the late 1700s. He was a second cousin of shoemaker Peter, and probably a descendant of the William who resided at Whitchesters. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Waugh and their children included James (b.1776), Janet (b.1778), Jane (b.1780), Mary (b.1782), Thomas (b.1784) and Robert (b.1786). John (18th C.) resident of Lurgiescleuch in 1786 when his son John was baptised in Hobkirk Parish. It seems likely he was related (perhaps brother) of Charles, and hence potentially uncle of Robert ‘Lurgie’, the Hawick historian. Margaret (b.1783), also baptised in Hobkirk, was probably also his child. John (18th C.) gardener in Cavers. He was recorded there in 1779 and 1781, and was also at Cavers in 1793 and 1794, when he was working for George Douglas of Cavers. His children included: John (b.1779); and Alexander (b.1781). It is also possible that he is the John whose unnamed child was baptised in cavers Parish in 1765. John (18th C.) stable servant and gamekeeper at Larriston in 1794, when he was working for William Oliver. John (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Skelfhill. He paid tax in 1797 for having 2 non-working dogs. He may have been related to Walter, who was shepherd at Priesthaugh. John (1752/3–1828) of Hallrule, local farmer. He purchased Hallrule in about 1803 and built the main house there. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburgshire in 1805 and 1819. In 1811 he was listed as owner of the east part of Outer Hallrule, as well as 5 of the 6 enclosures of Inner Hallrule. He was stated by the local minister in 1836 as being one of those responsible for land improvements in Hobkirk Parish. He is buried in St. Cuthbert’s churchyard in Edinburgh along with his youngest daughter, Barbara. His lands were later owned by Sir William A.F. Elliott of Stobs. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Amos and their children included Andrew (b.1781), Janet (b.1783), William (b.1785) and James (b.1787). John (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1791 he married Wilhelmina (or ‘Mina’) Irvine, also from Hawick. Their children included: John (b.1794); Isobel (b.1796); Thomas (b.1799); Walter (b.1801), wool-sorter in Hawick; Andrew (b.1803); and William (b.1805), frame-worker in Hawick. John (18th/19th C.) listed at Wilton Lodge in 1805 when his son George died. He may have been a gardener or other employee of the estate. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Minto Burndoon on the 1792 Horse Tax Rolls. Probably the same John was at Deanfoot in Minto Parish on the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned no less than 13 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. John (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Wauchope in 1797 according to the Dog Tax Rolls. John (b.c.1778) born in Cluny Parish, Perthshire. He was a tailor by trade. He deserted from the Roxburgh and Selkirkshire Light Dragoons in Hawick in 1799, having probably had his name drawn by ballot. He could be the son of John born in Cluny in 1776. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Brown and their son Thomas was baptised in 1810. He could be the same as one of the other Johns. John (d.1828) son of John and Margaret Elliot and brother of Walter. Both brothers worked as tanners and later became candlemakers. He was a candlemaker and Chief Magistrate in the 1820s. He is recorded as Bailie in 1828 when the Slitrig (Drumlanrig) Bridge was widened. He was also Cornet in 1812 and there is a portrait of him in Cornet’s dress; he is likely to be the first Cornet of whom we have an image. He is probably the candlemaker of that name who subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetic Museum’ in 1784. His premises were on the Howegate (according to Pigot’s 1825/6 directory). He may have been the John who was a founder member of the Wisp Club in 1826. Note that he is easily confused with another candlemaker of the same name (‘the Dip’), who lived in Hawick at the same time (although a little younger) and to whom he was related. John ‘Tufty’ (b.c.1780) Hawick Burgh Officer and drummer in the early part of the 19th century, being Halberdier along with William Turnbull (‘Wull the Bellman’) and for a while with Sandy Bryson. He may be the same John who is described as an auctioneer and Sheriff Officer in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He is recorded as ‘sheriff officer’ on the subscription list for Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’, published in 1825. It is unclear which other Wilsons he was related to. He is probably the John who married Janet Armstrong in Wilton Parish in 1794 and whose children included: Margaret (b.1795); Ann (b.1801); James (b.1802); James (again, b.1803); Jean (b.1805); Elizabeth (b.1807); William (b.1809); and Janet (again, b.1812). The birth of Ann is crossed out in the Parish Records for 1802, with witnesses Robert Armstrong, printer (probably related to his wife), and Robert Tinlin, Church Officer. He is recorded as an ‘Officer’ on the Howegate in the 1841 census, living along with his wife Janet at about No. 18. He was known for being a law unto himself, and as a terroriser of evil-doers – ‘Auld Cash and Tufty blithely trip, Lean Yeddle Gibson’s creel is full, Jamie Tamson and John the Dip Gang hand in hand wi’ Cutler Wull’ [HI]. John ‘the Dip’ (1783–1857) son of shoemaker Peter. His brothers included hosiers manufacturers Peter and Thomas, as well as Town Clerk James. He was also a distant relative of the other candlemaker John. He himself was a candlemaker and grocer. He was listed as a grocer and spirit dealer on the Howegate on Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He was also listed as a seedsman in 1837, as well as a candlemaker on the Howegate. He is probably the grocer recorded on the subscription list for Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’, published in 1825. Probably the same man is additionally listed as a general and tar merchant on the Howegate in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He is listed as a grocer and spirit dealer on the Howegate in 1841 (at about 6 Howegate) and by 1851 was a widower who was a ‘Proprietor of houses and land’ on Buccleuch Street. He is the Mr. John of Buccleuch Street listed among the gentry of Hawick in Slater’s 1852 directory. He served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. In 1818 he married Margaret, eldest daughter of James Elliot of Goldielands (making this couple have the same names as the earlier John ‘Light Pack’ and his wife). Their children included Adam, farmer at Midshiels, and Agnes. He died at Midshiels. His portrait, by an unknown artist, is in the Museum. John (18th/19th C.) listed as baker in Carlisle on the list of subscribers to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ (1825). It seems likely he was related to Wilsons from Hawick. John (1785–1854) reviewer and essayist, born in Paisley, but settled in Edinburgh, where he became Professor of Moral Philosophy. He was a leader in the city’s literary society, where he also wrote bold articles under the pseudonym ‘Christopher North’. He supposedly once stayed in a lodging-house in Mill Port along with a band of travelling gypsies. His grand-daughter Mary married William Aitchison of Brieryhill. He was also a great help to Henry Scott Riddell when he was at Edinburgh University, giving him the run of his house, and apparently refusing the standard fee from Riddell. He was said to have visited Denholm Dean, where he read Leyden’s ‘Scenes of Infancy’. His portrait, by John Watson Gordon, is in Hawick Museum. John (b.c.1790) tenant farmer at Lees in Wilton Parish. He was listed there among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835 and on the 1841 census. His wife was Isabella, and their children included Walter, Margaret and James. John (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Shankend and then at Wauchope Common. He is recorded as shepherd at Wauchope on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He may be related to the John who was shepherd at Hawklaw several decades later. John Mackay (1804–35) Scottish writer, particularly of the 6 volume ‘Tales of the Borders’. Born in Duns, he was brought up in Tweedmouth and apprenticed with a printer in Berwick. He spent time in Edinburgh and London trying to secure employment, and was eventually hired to the staff of the Literary Journal in Edinburgh. He published poetry and other literary and dramatic work (including ‘The Gowrie Conspiracy’ and ‘Margaret of Anjou’), and travelled to give lectures. In 1832 he became editor of the Berwick Advertiser. He was an advocate for the abolition of slavery, for a national education system and for free trade. He began to publish his ‘Tales’ in Wulson Wulson once owned by William Robertson. He married previously belonging to the Eastons, and the part as owner of half of the part of Roughheugh pre-Patrick Cunningham in Hawick. He is also listed about 1874 owning part of the former lands of Roughheugh. He may be the Wilson recorded in he owned a large fraction of the former lands of 190 people. According to the Land Tax Rolls hands’. In 1871 he is estimated to have employed ing at Ladylaw and listed as an employer of ‘205 Supply for Roxburghshire. In 1851 he was livin the 1850s and served as a Commissioner of on the Railway Committee for Hawick District rst home in what is now Sunnyhill. He was listed manufacturing. He also built Ladylaw House, the Waulk Mill, and had Langlands Mill built adja-

He carried on both hosiery and tweed manufacturing. He also built Ladylaw House, the first home in what is now Sunnyhill. He was listed on the Railway Committee for Hawick District in the 1850s and served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. In 1851 he was living at Ladylaw and listed as an employer of ‘205 hands’. In 1871 he is estimated to have employed 190 people. According to the Land Tax Rolls he owned a large fraction of the former lands of Roughheugh. He may be the Wilson recorded in about 1874 owning part of the former lands of Patrick Cunningham in Hawick. He is also listed as owner of half of the part of Roughheugh previously belonging to the Eastons, and the part once owned by William Robertson. He married at least twice, in 1838 to Margaret Scott (1810–51) and in 1863 to Elizabeth Thomson (sister of Rev. Adam Thomson). He may also have married Jeannie Laidlaw. His children included: William R. (b.1839), also a manufacturer; Annie (b.1840), who married Simon Graham; Frank (1845–88); Elizabeth; Maggie (b.1845), who married George Walker; and Mary (b.1851). A portrait of him exists as a young man. John (b.1811) son of Richard and Agnes Weir. He was church officer in Ashkirk in 1858, serving like several generations of his family before him. John Fiddes (b.1813) son of Thomas and Margaret Fiddes (whose sister Janet married David Laing). He became a wool merchant and lived at Leaburn. He acted as standard bearer for the 1832 celebratory procession for the passing of the Reform Bill. He was recorded along with skinner Walter (probably his brother) as joint proprietor of houses on the 1837 electoral roll. In 1841 he was recorded as a farmer living at 1 Teviot Crescent with his mother, as well as Thomas Fiddes, his cousin. In 1851 he was there with his mother, cousin and brother, Walter. In 1861 he was listed as a wool merchant, employing 12 men and 6 apprentices. In about 1874 he was recorded owning part of the former lands of Patrick Cunningham in Hawick. He married Margaret Bell Underwood from Annan and their son was Walter Fiddes (b.1861). John (b.c.1815) tailor living on the Kirkwynd in 1841 and at about 29 High Street in 1851. He was married to Christian and their children included Helen, John and Mary. John (b.1818/9) from Annan, he was farm overseer at Larriston in 1851 and 1861. His wife was Isabella and their children included James, Robert, John and Francis. John (19th C.) shepherd at Hawklaw when listed among the original members of Wolfelee Free Kirk in 1849. He was still recorded at Hawklaw in 1868. He married Catherine, daughter of William Carruthers. Their daughter Agnes Robina died of consumption in 1874. John (b.1825/6) from Canonbie, he was employed as a lime-burner at Thorlieshope. In 1861 he was living at Lawston and was at Thorlieshope in 1868. His wife was Mary and they had daughters Helen and Margare Personal Advances in the Dictionary of the Scottish Dialect, which (even if imperfect) are a valuable record of vocabulary and modes of speech from the early 19th century. He is buried at Tweedmouth. John (b.1805/6) frame-worker in Wilton, born in Hawick. In 1851 he was living at Gib’s Nose. His wife was Elizabeth (from Tranent, East Lothian) and their children included Elizabeth and William (both born in Midlothian). John G. of Ladylaw (1806–86) son of manufacturer William and older brother of Provost George. He spent 3 years in a Quaker school at Ackworth in Yorkshire, which is said to have broken him of his Hawick vernacular. After returning to Hawick he worked for the family firm. In about 1835 he decided to start manufacturing flannel from Cheviot wool and so went to Rochdale to spend some time there working as a weaver, starting some looms back in Hawick. He also brought back to Hawick several weavers from the Rochdale area, including Robert Greenwood, James Kershaw, Edward Dearden, Bill Peacock and Bill Shaw, as well as finishers, such as Bill Whitehead and Jim Nuttal. After the firm of William Wilson & Sons was dissolved in 1851, he took over the Roughheugh Waulk Mill, and had Langlands Mill built adjacent to it. He carried on both hosiery and tweed manufacturing. He also built Ladylaw House, the first home in what is now Sunnyhill. He was listed on the Railway Committee for Hawick District in the 1850s and served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. In 1851 he was living at Ladylaw and listed as an employer of ‘205 hands’. In 1871 he is estimated to have employed 190 people. His children included: William R. (b.1839), also a manufacturer; Annie (b.1840), who married Simon Graham; Frank (1845–88); Elizabeth; Maggie (b.1845), who married George Walker; and Mary (b.1851). A portrait of him exists as a young man. John (b.1811) son of Richard and Agnes Weir. He was church officer in Ashkirk in 1858, serving like several generations of his family before him. John Fiddes (b.1813) son of Thomas and Margaret Fiddes (whose sister Janet married David Laing). He became a wool merchant and lived at Leaburn. He acted as standard bearer for the 1832 celebratory procession for the passing of the Reform Bill. He was recorded along with skinner Walter (probably his brother) as joint proprietor of houses on the 1837 electoral roll. In 1841 he was recorded as a farmer living at 1 Teviot Crescent with his mother, as well as Thomas Fiddes, his cousin. In 1851 he was there with his mother, cousin and brother, Walter. In 1861 he was listed as a wool merchant, employing 12 men and 6 apprentices. In about 1874 he was recorded owning part of the former lands of Patrick Cunningham in Hawick. He married Margaret Bell Underwood from Annan and their son was Walter Fiddes (b.1861). John (b.c.1815) tailor living on the Kirkwynd in 1841 and at about 29 High Street in 1851. He was married to Christian and their children included Helen, John and Mary. John (b.1818/9) from Annan, he was farm overseer at Larriston in 1851 and 1861. His wife was Isabella and their children included James, Robert, John and Francis. John (19th C.) shepherd at Hawklaw when listed among the original members of Wolfelee Free Kirk in 1849. He was still recorded at Hawklaw in 1868. He married Catherine, daughter of William Carruthers. Their daughter Agnes Robina died of consumption in 1874. John (b.1825/6) from Canonbie, he was employed as a lime-burner at Thorlieshope. In 1861 he was living at Lawston and was at Thorlieshope in 1868. His wife was Mary and they had daughters Helen and Margaret. Rev. John Rudge (c.1857–1930) son of Thomas of Glasgow and Catherine Mary Relt... then to Wilton in 1887. He preached the sermon at the inauguration of the 1st Hawick Company of the Boys' Brigade in 1893. He was also Chairman of the School Board for Wilton Parish, first President of Wilton Bowling Club, and acting Chaplain in the Volunteers. He was the Chaplain for the 1890 Common Riding and was a fairly vocal supporter during a time when most of the local clergy were attacking the Common Riding. He also talked at the 1899 Colour Bussing. He was Chaplain to the forces in the South African War in 1900, and was mentioned in dispatches in 1901. In 1905 he took charge of St. Andrews Church, Simla (India). However, he was soon back at Wilton, and remained there until leaving the area in 1926. He was Chaplain of the K.O.S.B. from 1912 and received a doctorate from Glasgow University in 1913. His ministry saw the building of the church halls and the addition of a chancel and transepts to the church. He was apparently widely known as an eloquent preacher. In 1903 he married Georgina Underwood Fiddes (sister of Walter Fiddes Wilson), and she died at Wetheral, Cumberland in 1947. There are descendants of the Reltons, Rudge and Wilsons living in Tasmania. He published 'Prophecy and Poetry: a Sermon on the Death of Lord Tennyson' (Hawick, 1892), 'Spirited Weapons of War' (Hawick, 1895), 'The Foundation Rock of the Church' (Hawick, 1896), 'Patriotism, a sermon' (Hawick, 1897), 'Not Peace, but a Sword, a sermon' (Hawick, 1899), 'Hardship and Character, a sermon' (Hawick, 1904) and 'The Soldiers of the Cross' (Hawick, 1907). John Graham (1862–1928) son of William R. He was a tweed manufacturer in Hawick, like generations before him. In 1899 he married Mary Murray Elliot, daughter of Walter Elliot, tenant farmer in Hermitage. His sister Isobel married his brother-in-law Robert Elliot, also farmer in Hermitage. His children were: Agnes Armstrong (b.1890); William E.G. (b.1894); and Walter Elliot (b.1898). Rev. J.P. minister of St. Mary’s 1959–66. Katherine (1798–1863) eldest daughter of Hawick manufacturer William. She went to London with her brothers William and James about 1824 to keep house for them while they developed their hat manufacturing business. She married John Glenny of Aberdeenshire in 1834, and their son James became partner in Wilson & Glenny. Lucy Ann (1853–1944) daughter of Walter of Orchard. She was President of the Hawick Young Women’s Christian Association. She provided family information for James Haining in compiling his notes for the monumental inscriptions in Hawick. She died at Belmont, at the age of 92. Luke (16th C.) merchant who was owed money for an account, according to the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1574. It is unclear if he was from the Hawick area or perhaps Edinburgh. Margaret (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. She was probably widow of a farmer on the Knowesouth estate. Margaret Fiddes (b.c.1785) listed as owner of a tanners and skinners business in Pigot’s directory of 1837. She was by that time the widow of Thomas. In 1841 she was at about 1 Teviot Crescent with her son John. In 1851 she was a widow working as a wool merchant and Skinner. employing 6 men, with her sons Walter and John as partners. ‘Margaret Wilson & Sons, Teviot crescent’ are listed as tanners and skinners in Slater’s 1852 directory. Margaret Stavert worked as Head of the Training Department of Barrie’s. She received the B.E.M. in 1978 for services to export. Marion (17th/18th C.) recorded in 1695 when she was ordered by the Council to pay ‘for 10 ells of sheets woven in the Holland reid, 5 groats the ell’. Mina (18th/19th C.) listed as vintner on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. It is unclear how she was related to any other Wilsons. Mungo (b.1821/2) son of land steward David, he was born at Cavers. In 1841 he was listed as a shopkeeper at Cavers, although less than 20 years old at the time. He became a licensed grocer at the foot of the Howegate, where the Post Office had formerly been. In 1851 he was listed as a grocer on Silver Street, living with his sister Jane. He was recorded as a Silver Street grocer in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1861 he was a widower, living with his sister Jessie (probably the same as Jane). His business was taken over by his assistant, James Laing, grandson of James Hogg (of ‘Teribus’ fame). Nichol (16th C.) recorded in 1541 when he and John White were accused of coming to Burgh-by-Sands and killing Englishman Thomas Bull. It is unclear what part of the Borderland he came from. Patrick see Peter. Peter (1750–1836) shoemaker and Magistrate, who lived at Slitrig Bank. He was son of William (‘Whusky Wullie’) and Mary Hardie, and was christened ‘Patrick’. In 1784 he and weaver Archibald Douglas (who also married a Kedie) witnessed a baptism for Thomas Kedie. He was listed as Patrick in 1794–97 when he paid the Horse Tax in Hawick. He witnessed a baptism for William Young in 1796. He was listed as a shoemaker on the Howegate in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He is among the subscribers to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’, published in 1825. In 1776 he married Joan (1756–1840), daughter of baker John Kedie and she died in 1840. Their children were: William (1779–1845), also a shoemaker; twins Betty (d.1782) and Mary (d.1781), who died in infancy; John (1783–1857), The Dip; Helen (b.1783); Peter (1784–1862), hosiery manufacturer; Betty (b.1785), who also died in infancy; Thomas (1787–1859), manufacturer; Joan (1788–1857); Archibald (b.1789), died in infancy; Agnes (1795–1866), dressmaker; James (1797–1862), Hawick Town Clerk; and Jane (1798–1885), also a dressmaker. The witnesses in 1779 were his father writer William and brother clockmaker James, in 1783 were baker John Kedie (his father-in-law) and weaver Archibald Douglas (who was married to his wife’s sister), in 1788 were William Wilson and William Elliot, and in 1789 were baker John Kedie (his brother-in-law) and Postmaster John Inglis. A portrait exists of him, by an unknown artist, as well as perhaps another with his wife and servants. He is probably the Peter who purchased barley from ‘Auld Cash’ sometimes before 1810. Peter (1784–1862) hosiery manufacturer and yarn spinner of Peter Wilson & Co., sometimes called ‘junior’, since his father was also Peter. His brothers included William (shoemaker), John (‘the Dip’), Thomas (also a manufacturer) and James (Town Clerk). He was in partnership with John Waldie and Robert Pringle at the Whisky House Mill on Slitrig Crescent from 1815, but left the partnership in 1819. He is listed as a hosier among the subscribers to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’, published in 1825. Around 1825 he ran a yarn spinning operation at Appletreehall Mills, as recorded in Pigot’s directory. He operated Tower Mills and Allars Mill (near Jedburgh) from 1823, and was still running the Waulk Mills (along with his brother Thomas) at the time of the flood of 1846. Around 1837 he was operating a mill on Slitrig Bank, at the foot of the Kirk Wynd; this same building is marked on Wood’s 1824 map. He was listed in 1835 as a manufacturer in Hawick among heads of households in Wilton Kirk. He was listed there in Pigot’s 1837 directory, as a manufacturer of both woollens and hosiery. He was a Bailie of the Town in the 1810s and again in 1837, during the so-called ‘election riots’. He was listed among a group of 10 men who had been denied their claim to be on the electoral roll in Selkirkshire on the basis of joint life-rent there. Later in life he was a grocer in Old Manse Lane. He was Chief Magistrate in the 1830s. Later in life he also ran a shop, being listed in Slater’s 1852 directory on Silver Street. In 1861 he was a grocer and spirit dealer at 6 Kirkgate (i.e. St. Mary’s Place); he was by then a widower living with his housekeeper. In 1818 he married Mary, daughter of Robert Selby, who was factor at Minto, along with his son Ephraim. Their children were Helen Ritchie (wife of Rev. Adam Thomson), Elizabeth, Robert, Mary, another Mary, Peter, Mary Selby (who married her cousin Thomas Grant Wilson) and another Robert. A portrait of him and his wife exists. Peter (19th C.) said to have been from Cavers, he was at St. Andrews University 1822–6. Originally training to be a Secession minister, he became Professor of Mathematics at Andersonian University, Glasgow 1828–45 and was Rector of Inverness Academy 1845–7, then returned as Professor at Glasgow University. Richard (17th/18th C.) probably church officer in Ashkirk like other generations of his family. He married Bessie Halliwell and was succeeded as church officer by his son Robert. Richard (b.1756) son of Robert and Margaret Riddell. He was church officer in Ashkirk, like his father before him. He was succeeded in that office by his son John. He is probably the Richard who married Agnes Weir and whose children included: Robert (b.1792); William (b.1793); Alexander (b.1796); George (b.1800); Margaret (b.1802); James (b.1805); Agnes (again, b.1810); and John (b.1811). Richard (b.c.1793–1849) shoemaker in Hawick. He was listed on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was probably also the librarian of Hawick Trades Library listed in 1837. In 1841 he was at about 17 High Street with his wife Agnes and children Margaret, Agnes, Robert and Joseph. Robert (16th C.) recorded as ‘curate’ of Wilton in 1552 when he was listed as a creditor in the inventory of the estate of William Scott, younger of Buccleuch. There was a separate entry for the ‘rectori de Viltoun’ (but with no name given) suggesting that a different man was Rector at the time. Robert (16th C.) recorded ‘in Lynthropbank’ (i.e. Lintobank in Lilliesleaf Parish) in 1581/2. He was a witness to the debt due by Thomas Smail in Lilliesleaf to Richard Wilson in Howford being transferred to William Turnbull in Belses. He was probably related to Richard in Howford. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Margaret Martin and their daughter Isobel was baptised in 1655. Robert (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Robertson and their children included: George (b.1690); and William (b.1693). The witnesses in 1690 were James Scott and John Renwick. Robert (17th C.) carrier in Hawick, on the 1693/4 subscribers’ list for the new Kirk bell. Probably the same Robert was listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He may be related to James, who was also a carrier at the same time. He is probably the carrier whose daughter Elizabeth is recorded in 1716 when her daughter Helen was baptised, ‘begoten in fornication’ with Walter Scott, brother of the Laird of Whitslade. Robert (17th/18th C.) tailor in Hawick. He may be the same Robert who witnessed baptisms in 1687 and 1689. He is recorded as a tailor in 1701 and 1712 when he witnessed baptisms for carrier James (who may therefore have been his brother). He is recorded in 1718 in a dispute with William Wright over the spaces occupied by their wives’ stools in St. Mary’s Kirk. He also witnessed a baptism for merchant James Simpson in 1721. He married Isobel Tait in 1700 and their children included: Margaret (b.1701); Robert (b.1704); Isobel (b.1706); and John (b.1708). The witnesses in 1704 were glove John Hart and flesher Thomas. 1706 included flesher Thomas (who may this have been related) Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded simply at ‘wiltoun’ and 1724 in the 1723 baptismal record for one of his children; the entries are more detailed than most, suggesting he was important in some way. In 1718 he married Elizabeth (or Elspeth), daughter of Walter Weens from Hawick; the marriage was proclaimed in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. Their children (baptised in Wilton) included: Walter (b.1719); Rachel (b.1721); Bessie (b.1724); Robert (b.1726); Walter (again, b.1728); and Robert (again, b.1731). Robert (18th C.) flesher in Hawick Parish. He married Janet Huntly and their children included: Esther (b.1726); Robert (b.1728); John (b.1730); James (b.1736); and Marion (b.1739). The witnesses in 1726 were Henry Orrock and Francis Ruecastle and in 1730 were another Robert, as well as John Telfer. Robert (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick Parish. He was recorded as a shoemaker when one of his children was baptised in 1742. He witnessed a baptism for fellow shoemaker John Snail in Hawick in 1743. He married Bessy Lorraine (who may have been daughter of William Lorraine, b.1712). Their children included: John (b.1742); and Charles (b.1746). The witnesses in 1742 were merchant John Aitchison and baker John Kedie. He was already deceased in 1778 when the death of his wife Betty is recorded. It is possible that he was grandfather of ‘Lurgie’. Robert (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, recorded at Shiplaw Corse in 1749. His children included John (b.1749) and Jane (b.1756). Robert (b.1723) son of Richard and Bessie Halliwell. He was church officer in Ashkirk. It is said that 9 or 10 generations of the same family held this office continuously. He married Margaret Riddell in 1753. Their children included: Betsy (b.1754); Richard (b.1756), who succeeded as church officer; Agnes (b.1759); and Isabel (b.1760). Robert of Bewlie (18th C.) recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. It is unclear where he came from, or how long he owned these local lands. Robert (d.1799) butcher of Hawick, possibly related to the same old family who traced themselves back to the late 17th century in the Whitchesters area. He could be the son of flesher Robert who was born in Hawick in 1728. He had at least 2 surviving sons: Andrew, who was also a flesher; and Adam, who was a shoemaker. He married Sarah Scott in 1760 and she died in 1781. Their children included: James (b.1760); Christian (b.1762); Adam (b.1764); Margaret (b.1765); Robert (b.1766); Margaret (again, b.1768–91); Robert (again, b.1769); Janet (b.1771); and Andrew (b.1774). The witnesses in 1766 were James Waugh and Robert Turnbull. He may be the Robert who hired the Hawick Parish mortcloth twice in 1760. In Hawick’s death records he was recorded as ‘Drummer’ in 1781 and (twice) in 1791, and then for his own death he was ‘flesher & town Drummer’. He was therefore presumably in an early incarnation of the Drums and Fifes. He is probably the Robert whose son Robert died in Hawick in 1777. He may be the Robert who witnessed a baptism for William Duncan in 1793. Robert ‘Lurgie’ (1772–1837) shoemaker, was cornet in 1799 and also a local historian and writer. He was son of Charles and Agnes Tinlin, with ‘Wull the Naig’ being one of his cousins. His nickname came from Lurgiescleuch, once a family home (said to be where his grandfather was from). His baptism is recorded in Hawick, but there is no record of the date of his birth (but probably the end of April or beginning of May). He was an only child and followed his father Charles into the combined trade of shoemaker and publican. He received only rudimentary and brief education in Hawick, and was largely self-taught. He was also known as a singer from an early age. His political views were strongly affected by the French Revolution, and it is said that his religious views were influenced by his friendship with Dr. Freeman. He is listed as a shoemaker at the Sandbed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory, and as a vintner on Buccleuch Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He inherited the publican’s business when his father died, the upstairs room at 2 Buccleuch Street being used as a public house, the Burns Inn. It was frequented by many of the most respectable local citizen’s and was often a meeting place for Hawick’s literati and local reformers. Since newspapers were scarce in those days, he would sometimes read important news from the window of his house, e.g. news of the victory at Waterloo. He used to set aside time every day for reading and from 1822 he started daily committing some of his thoughts to paper. At the encouragement of his friends he collected various pieces written on different scraps of paper and published them as ‘A Sketch of the History of Hawick’ (1825). The introduction for the second second edition, called ‘The History of Hawick’ (1841), was written only about a month before his death. This work represented the first serious history of the town, as well as being a discursive outline of the author’s Liberal political views. He argues vehemently for equality and for peace, using carefully thought out positions, and often utilising humour. He took a particular stance (in many cases surprisingly modern) against: the House of Lords; the length of the Civil List; too much power in the hands of the Clergy; religious education; out-dated educational methods; religious intolerance; the laws of entail and the legal system generally; simplistic attitudes to solving Ireland’s problems; and the state of the Carlisle-Edinburgh road near Hawick! He argued in favour of mediation in labour disputes, for religious toleration in Ireland, the support of the poor through taxation, for the Duke of Buccleuch to return the part of Hawick’s Common taken in 1777 and to encourage the development of mills on his property, and also to build housing on the Common Haugh to solve Hawick’s overcrowded housing problems! The editor of the Scotsman was so impressed he came to Hawick to find him, arriving on Common Riding Saturday and being told he was at the Haugh, his servant girl said ‘just look out for the longest, the leanest, and maist ill-faured man that ye can see. Ye’ll sure find him, for he wears a white hat’. In addition he wrote ‘Disquisition on the corn-laws, with a few observations on pauperism, etc.’ (1826) and ‘Observations on the character and working of the Reform Bill’ (1834). A prominent Liberal in local politics, he took the part of the King of the Ancient Order of St. Crispin for the shoemakers in the 1832 Reform Bill celebratory procession and gave a speech at the banquet held in the Haugh. He is said to have helped in the selection of songs in ‘The Banquet of Euphrosyne’, published in Hawick by Robert Armstrong in 1811. He was also one of the founder members of the Hawick Curling Club. He was much respected in Town, and often consulted about the running of the trades Incorporations, the history of the Town, etc. He was clerk for both Hawick’s friendly societies of the early 19th century, one being an annual benefit club (perhaps the Hawick Friendly Society) and the other the Hawick Medico-Relief Society. He was also distributor of the funds from the Association for the Purpose of Suppressing Public Begging in the Town of Hawick. He is probably the Robert recorded as Dean of Guild in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. In his last few years, when his health was declining, he became Master of Works for Hawick. Under his supervision the plantations at the Vertish and on Hawick Moor were undertaken, and he enjoyed checking on the growth of the trees. Late in life he married Margaret Miller (who died in 1852), but they had no children. He is said to have walked the Common every day and caught a fever after falling asleep beside a... damp spring (later referred to as ‘Lurgie’s Well’, near St. Leonard’s) and never recovered. Over 500 people attended his funeral. He is buried in St. Mary’s, although there was no headstone. A portrait of him exists (by an unknown artist, a friend of his), and he is described as being about 5 ft 10 in, with small, deep-set eyes, angular features, a protruding forehead and pale complexion. He is said to have had a temperate nature, but to be extremely perceptive, imaginative and excitable. He also wrote many letters on political matters, which appeared in newspapers. He was a great admirer of Burns, and would regularly give the addresses at meetings of the earliest incarnation of the Hawick Burns Club (e.g. in 1821 and 1823). The only example of poetry attributed to him are in supplement to Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Sweet Teviot’ lines: ‘All now is changed, and halcyon years succeed the feudal baron’s sway; And trade, with arts and peace, appears To bless fair Scotia’s happier day’ [RW]. His Masonic insignia are in the Museum. A biography of him was written by Robert Murray in 1881. An anonymous contemporary wrote ‘Then hail to thee Rob! I am glad that our town, Can call such a blade as Rob Wilson our own. Oh, lang mayst thou flourish about in our parish Thy drab-coloured hat, Rob; and lang mayst thou nourish Thy Whiggisms, too, independent and true, And returns snap for snap when the Tories grow currish!’ Robert (c.1788–bef. 1851) spinner at Nixon’s Mill. In 1841 he was living at ‘Nixon’s Mill’, probably meaning Lynnwood Cottages. He married Janet, eldest daughter of William Laidlaw and Margaret Aitken. His children included: Margaret, who married Benjamin Hall; Isobel, who married John Biggar; James; and William. They also took in Catherine Laidlaw, a daughter of his brother-in-law James Laidlaw, who died around 1838. Robert ‘Rob the Clocker’ (19th C.) one of the men who attended social evenings in David Shiel’s public house on Baker Street in the mid-1800s, along with several Robert Scotts. Robert (19th C.) listed as a hosier on the Round Close in Pigot’s 1837 directory. Rev. Robert (b.c.1810) minister of Denholm Congregational Kirk 1835–42, taking over from itinerant preacher Francis Dick. He came from Glasgow Theological Academy, and was appointed as the first full-time independent minister in Denholm, there being preceived to be a strong need following the death of the Cameronian preacher James Duncan. During the period he served as minister he baptised Sir James A.H. Murray. In 1841 he was living at Deanburn Cottage with his wife Susan Gillies Smith. He moved to Cumbria in about 1843, where he was minister at Cockermouth Congregational Chapel and later was at Charlesworth Chapel, Derbyshire. Probably the same Robert emigrated to Nova Scotia in 1853 and was minister in Yarmouth Congregational Church there, as well as in Sheffield, New Brunswick. Robert (19th C.) one of the earliest deacons in the Hawick Congregational Kirk, from about 1848. Robert (b.1837/8) farmer at Cleuch Head in Hobkirk Parish, originally from Channelkirk. In 1861 he was farming 1110 acres and employed 5 labourers. He was living with his brother William and sister Margaret. Robert Brodie (1840–1906) son of Margaret Brodie, with the father probably being cabinetmaker Walter Wilson. In 1861 he was living on Albion Place with his grandmother Helen Brodie. He worked as a wool sorter. In 1862 he married Annie J. (1839–87), daughter of Andrew Ekron. They had 12 children, including Robert (b.1863), Elizabeth Scott (b.1864) and Margaret (b.1866). He secondly married Susan Stewart (who had formerly been married to a Waldie). He died in Dunedin, New Zealand. Roland (16th C.) tenant at Catslack, as recorded in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branzholme in 1574. This seems most likely to be the ‘Catlochill’ (essentially the same as Branzholme Braes) which is mentioned in the ballad ‘Jamie Telfer’. S. C. (19th/20th C.) wrote the article ‘The Barony of Hawick and the Lovell Family’ for the 1932 Transactions. Simon (16th C.) recorded in Hawick in 1582 when he witnessed an agreement in Hawick for Alan Deans and Alexander Weens. Simon (16th/17th C.) described as ‘Symeon Wilsoune in Priesthauch’ when he (along with 3 other local men, from the Branzholme area and Craik) were cautioners for ‘Hob Cowan in Ailmure’ in 1623. He may have been related to later local Wilsons. Simon ‘Sim the Colt’ (17th C.) recorded on a long list of Borders men to be apprehended and tried for various crimes. He was probably from somewhere around Liddesdale. He could be the ‘Symone Wilsone’ listed in about 1648 among ‘mostroopers’ (i.e. men branded as thieves on the Border). Thomas (17th C.) recorded in 1632 as possessor of the lands of Over and Nether Whisgills and Redmoss in Liddesdale. Thomas (17th C.) Hawick resident recorded in 1644 when his horse was valued at £22 when provided for the Covenanting army ‘in case the horses come nocht back again or be lost’. He could be the Thomas, married to Margaret Henderson, whose children included Robert (b.1640) and Margaret (b.1644). Thomas (17th/18th C.) fleshers in Hawick. He was listed among those contributing to the new Kirk bell in 1693/4. Probably the same Thomas was listed ‘eist the water’ among those paying the Hearth Tax in Hawick in 1694. He was recorded as a fleshers in Hawick when he witnessed baptisms for tailor William Scott in 1701 and tailor Robert Wilson (possibly a relative) in 1704. He also witnessed a baptism in 1716 for Thomas Waugh (along with fellow fleshers John Tudhope). He could be the Thomas, married to Esther Fowler, whose children, baptised in Hawick, included Robert (b.1687) and James (b.1689). Other children (as recorded in the baptismal entries) were Bessie (b.1700) and Thomas (b.1705). The witnesses in 1700 were ‘late Bailie’ James Deans and glover John Hart and in 1705 were carter John Aitken and fellow fleshers Walter Anderson. Thomas (18th C.) son of fleshers Thomas. In 1715 he witnessed a baptism for Thomas, son to the deceased merchant Thomas ‘Hulson’ in Hawick. Thomas (18th C.) resident of the Borthwick valley. He was in Borthaugh in 1729 and ‘H…’ (perhaps Highchesters) in 1732. In 1729 he witnessed a baptism for James Scott in Borthaugh. In 1723 he married Violet, daughter of George Turnbull, the marriage being proclaimed in both Hawick and Roberton Parishes. Their children included: Thomas (b.1726), Janet (b.1729) and Thomas (again, b.1733), baptised in Wilton; and William (b.1732), baptised in Roberton. James Scott and George Bell (both in Borthaugh) witnessed the 1729 baptism and John and James Dryden in 1733. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Elspeth Turnbull in 1743 and their children included George (b.1745); Betty (b.1750); and Janet (b.1759). Thomas (d.c.1786) second Schoolmaster at Caerlenrig, appointed in 1757, and staying until 1761 when he was appointed as Schoolmaster at Kirkton. There he was teacher to the class that included the young John Leyden, but he died after only teaching Leyden for a year or two. He was succeeded as schoolmaster by Walter Scott. Thomas (18th C.) from Ireby in Cumbria. He is recorded in 1779 along with his wife Katherine when their son Thomas was baptised in Cavers Parish. The witnesses were William Irvine, merchant in Hawick and his apprentice John Nixon. Thomas (1785–bef. 1837) son of Walter (and probably not brother of Walter). He had a tanner’s business and lived at 1 Teviot Crescent. He is probably the ‘T. Wilson, skinner’, listed among the subscribers to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ (1825). His wife was Margaret (b.c.1785), daughter of John Fiddes, from Hobkirk. Their children included Walter (b.1811) and John Fiddes (b.1813), both wool merchants and skinners. He had a son who died in 1815 and another in 1819. He could be the tallow dealer and candlemaker listed on the High Street on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. After his death his wife continued the tanning and skinning business, with their sons Walter and John becoming partners. Thomas (b.1787–1859) son of shoemaker Peter and brother of hosiery manufacturer Peter, as well as Town Clerk James. He ran a hosiery factory at 8 and 9 (or perhaps 7 and 8) Slitrig Crescent, where he is recorded on Wood’s 1824 map; the building there is shown straddling the mill lade. Pigot’s 1825/6 directory lists him in partnership with William Elliot. This partnership lasted only 7 years, ending in 1830, with William Elliot & Sons going their own way next door, and Wilson’s being eventually taken over by John Laing & Sons about 1851. He was also in partnership with his brother Peter and others in the Waulk Mill (Tower Knowe), under the name Waldie, Elliot & Co. He was among the local men implicated in the 1837 Commons inquiry into ‘fictitious voters’ on account of purchasing property in Selkirkshire. Pigot’s 1825/6 directory further lists a Thomas as skinner and wool merchant on the High Street, and this is also probably him. The 1837 directory lists him as both a woollen and hosiery manufacturer on the Crescent. In 1819 he married Charlotte, only daughter of Edinburgh lawyer Charles Grant. Their children were: Peter Grant; Charles George (b.1823), who died young; Charles, who married Sarah Frisbie; Joan Kedie (d.1831), who died young; Charlotte Grant (1834–42); Eliza; Agnes Jane; George Grant, in the Civil Service; and this is also probably him. The 1837 directory lists him as both a woollen and hosiery manufacturer on the Crescent. In 1819 he married Charlotte, only daughter of Edinburgh lawyer Charles Grant. Their children were: Peter Grant; Charles George (b.1823), who died young; Charles, who married Sarah Frisbie; Joan Kedie (d.1831), who died young; Charlotte Grant (1834–42); Eliza; Agnes Jane; George Grant, in the Civil Service in Somerset House, father of Sir Wemyss Grant-Wilson; and Thomas Grant, who married his cousin Mary Selby Wilson. Thomas (b.1812/3) shoemaker in the West-end. He was listed on the 1841 census on the Mid Row and in 1851 at 4 Kirk Wynd, where he was a Master Shoemaker in 1861. His wife was Agnes Ewen (from Selkirk) and their children included John, Margaret, William, Isabella, Janet (b.1837), Thomas, Robert, Eliza and Gideon (b.1855). He could be the shoemaker Thomas whose child’s death was recorded in 1838. Thomas Grant (19th C.) son of hosiery manufacturer Thomas. He worked in the cotton business in Liverpool, then emigrated to Canada and the U.S.A. and died.

in Chicago. He married his cousin Mary Selby Wilson. Their children included Thomas Herbert Grant, who married Blanche Sanders. Thomas ‘Tom’ or ‘the Bottler’ (d.1918) prominent back in Hawick R.F.C. in the early 1900s, who was also capped for Scotland. He first appeared for Hawick in 1903, and could play in almost any position. He also excelled at Sevens, and played in nearly 50 tournaments. He was killed during WWI. He may have been connected with the Thomas of Bourtree Place who made aerated waters. Thomas (19th/20th C.) Schoolmaster at Roberton for over 50 years. He lived at the schoolhouse in Roberton and wrote an article about the area for the 1924 Transactions. In 1875 he firstly married Mary Scott Grieve. He secondly married Ellen Mary Douglas, son of John, farmer at Easter Essenside (and also descended from Charles Scott, ‘Chairlie o the Crescent’). His children were: James (‘Jim’); Margaret; Thomas (b.1888), who died in WWI; Christina (‘Chrissie’), who was teacher at Ashkirk; and George, a doctor at Redditch. Thomas ‘Tom’ (1888–1917) second son of the Roberton Schoolmaster. He became a civil engineer, moving to Glasgow, Carlisle and then Singapore. He played rugby for several sides and was selected to go on tour with the English national side in 1907; however, a dispute with the Scottish Union led to him being de-selected by England. During WWI he was drafted to East Africa, where he was a Lieutenant with the King’s African Rifles. He was awarded the Military Cross in 1916 and transferred to the Royal Engineers. He was killed when his car was attacked by a sniper in German East Africa. Thomas Michael Aubrey ‘Michael’ (1951– ), F.R.S.E., son of Basil, headmaster at Drumlanrig School. He attended Hawick Hawick School. He was Chief Executive Officer of Horticulture Research International and acted as Editor-in-Chief for the Journal of Horticultural Science & Biotechnology. He has been a spokesman on behalf of a scientific approach to genetically modified crops. Walter (15th/16th C.) tenant in ‘blindhalch’, which is probably Blindhaugh near Ashkirk. In 1502 Robert Turnbull (in the same place) was surety for him when they were fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. Walter (d.c.1681) listed ‘in Hawick’ when his will was recorded in 1681. He may be the same as the later merchant of Hawick, if he registered a will significantly before his death. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Elliot and their son James was baptised in 1671.

Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Nichol and their children, baptised in Hawick, included: Archibald (b.1671); Helen (b.1677); and Robert (b.1680). Probably the same couple had a daughter Isobel baptised in Roberton Parish in 1684. Walter (17th C.) resident at Wester Burnfoot in Ashkirk Parish on the Hearth Tax roll in 1694. He may be the Walter who married Isobel Lamb and whose son John was baptised in Ashkirk in 1690, with witnesses William Stewart and James Murray. Walter (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He was listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4 and is probably the Walter listed ‘eist the water’ among those paying the Hearth Tax in Hawick in 1694. He is probably the Walter who (along with merchant Walter Oliver) witnessed baptism for John Scott, smith in Hawick in 1704 and for fellow merchant William Douglas and for wright William Brack in 1706. He also witnessed a baptism for smith John Scott in 1708. He was a member of the Council when it granted a bond (dated 1710, but recorded in the Town Book in 1711) to provide money for the Master of the new Grammar School. He may be the Walter who married Agnes Riddell and whose children, baptised in Hawick, included: Walter (b.1698), with the mother’s surname not recorded; Helen (b.1702); Marion (b.1704); Walter (b.1707); and William (b.1709). Janet (b.1694), John (b.1695) and Margaret (b.1699), with no mother’s name recorded, may also be his children; the witnesses in 1699 were John Scott and John ‘Weelands’. The witnesses in 1698 were James and John Aitken, in 1704 were James Ogilvie in Branxholme and Robert Thomson in Newmill, in 1707 were Robert Thomson in Newmill and William Nixon in Stobicote and in 1709 were Francis Gedstains (servitor to Scott of Falnash) and Walter Scott. Walter (17th/18th C.) tenant in Castlehill. He was renting part of Branxholme Town in 1693, rented the farm of Castlehill in 1698 and acted as cautioner for the widow of Andrew, tenant in part of the farm of Branxholme Town. He married Margaret Scott and their children included: Marion (b.1686), who probably married John Riddell in Hawick in 1720; Agnes (b.1702); and Bessie (b.1705). Walter (17th/18th C.) tenant in Castlehill. He was recorded in 1700 as ‘younger in Castlehill’ (suggesting he was son of the previous Walter in Castlehill). He was at Castlehill in 1700, 1704, 1707 and 1709 (when still ‘younger’). He married Isobel Riddell and they had children: Margaret (b.1698); Isobel (b.1700);
and Bessie (b.1705), who may be the ‘Old Betty’, daughter to the deceased Walter, who died in 1795. The witnesses in 1698 were James and John Aitken, in 1700 were Robert Thomson in Newmill and Henry Orrock and in 1705 included Andrew Riddell in Goldielands. Walter (18th C.) listed as ‘Servant to Walter Scott at Commonside’ in 1737 when he witnessed a baptism for Walter Jackson, hind at Falnash. It is possible he is the same man as ‘Haunless Wat’. Walter (18th C.) carrier in Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Douglas and their children included: James (b.1739); and Mary (b.1743). The witnesses in 1743 were Adam Scott ‘younger’ weaver and shoemaker William Scott. It is possible he is the same man as ‘Haunless Wat’. Walter ‘Haunless Wat’ (1712–1795) son of John and Margaret Crow, he was born in Hawick Parish. His nickname came from the fact that he was born with only one hand. He was grand-father of William, and great-grand-father of Provost George. He worked as a travelling packman for William Oliver, ‘Auld Cash’ (or perhaps more likely, the father of ‘Auld Cash’), taking goods back and forward across the Border using pack-horses. He set up as a merchant in 11 High Street, later buying No. 9 from Francis Scott and finally acquiring No. 13 through exchange of property on the Back Row. No. 11 High Street belonged to 3 generations of Walters, the last being Cornet in 1820. It is labelled as ‘Wa. Wilson’ on Wood’s 1824 map. After the death of Oliver, he set up in business on his own. He also tried running the Cross Keys Inn for a while, but returned to being a merchant. He paid the Shop Tax in Hawick in 1785. In 1752 (at a fairly advanced age) he married Catherine (or ‘Katharine’), daughter of Robert Oliver and Bessie Blackhall; she was a niece of the William Oliver he worked with (although cousin seems like the correct generation), as well as sister of the wife of Bailie Walter Purdom; she died in 1788, aged 56. Their children included: Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (b.1753), who married draper George Turnbull; Margaret ‘Peggy’, who died in infancy; John (b.1756), died young; Robert (b.1758), died young; Margaret or ‘Peggy’ (b.1759), who married William Beck; Agnes (b.1761), who married currier John Straiton; Ann (b.1763), who married Cornet James Oliver; William (1764–1832), manufacturer in Hawick; John (1767), also died young; Walter (b.1770), cabinet-maker in Hawick; and Katherine (1773–81). He was recorded as a merchant in 1758 when the baptismal witnesses were Robert Oliver (perhaps his father-in-law) and merchant William Oliver, and also in 1764 when the witnesses were Robert Oliver and Walter Purdom (his wife’s brother-in-law). He may be the Walter who witnessed a baptism for Thomas Gray in 1758 and another for Walter Hogg in 1772. He is probably the merchant William who witnessed a baptism for Walter Purdom and Agnes Oliver in 1774. He died at the ‘Old Cross Keys’ and is buried in Wilton Old Churchyard. A wooden folding yard-stick of his (from around 1734) is in the Museum. Walter (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Betty Armstrong and their son Thomas was baptised in 1750. Walter (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Helen Glenidding and their son Andrew was baptised in 1756. Walter (18th C.) married Isabel Oliver in Hobkirk Parish in 1764. His children included Isabel (b.1765) and Christian (b.1782). Walter (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was among the subscribers to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’, published in 1825. He was at Howpsley in 1766. His children included Isobel (b.1761) and Ann (b.1766). Walter (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was living at Howcleuch in 1788 and Commonside in 1799. He married Jane Scott in Roberton in 1781 and their children included: Euphan (b.1784); Thomas (b.1788); Jane (b.1792); and Robert (b.1799). Walter (d.bef. 1809) resident of Newmill. The death of his grandchild is recorded in Hawick in 1799. He married Isabel Renwick in Hawick in 1759 and she died in 1809. He may be the Walter who (along with John Martin) witnessed a baptism for William Elliot (or Gledstains) in 1777. Walter (18th C.) married Mary Wilson in Hawick in 1773. Walter ‘Wat the Buck’ (18th/19th C.) baker in Hawick, based at 10 Howegate. His nickname distinguished him from his contemporaries, such as ‘Wat the Laird’. He was among the subscribers to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’, published in 1825. He was listed as a Howegate baker in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was a Bailie in Hawick, and was said by the Tories to have been engaged in intimidating Tory voters before the 1837 election. On the other side, he was said to have ensured that when the military were called out in 1835 (after all the trouble had quietened down in Hawick) they were received warmly by the townspeople, rather than reinstigating the riot. In Selkirk in 1772 he married Margaret, daughter of Alexander Donald (or Donaldson) and Agnes Hardie. Their children included: Agnes (b.1775); Janet (b.1777); Margaret (b.1780), who married William Rathie; Jane (b.1782); Isabel (b.1784);
Janet (again, b.1787); Alexander (b.1789); Walter (b.1794), who carried on the baker’s business; and Barbara (d.1794). The witnesses in 1789 were the whole congregation. He was probably still alive for his granddaughter’s baptism in 1812. Walter (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Priesthaugh. He is recorded in 1797 when he was taxed for having 2 non-working dogs. He may have been related to John, who was a shepherd at Skelfhill. He may be the Walter, resident of Cavers Parish, who married Nelly Scott in 1788. Walter ‘Wat the Laird’ (18th/19th C.) distinguished from ‘the Buck’ by his nickname. The ‘Laird’ suggests he farmed some fields, perhaps up the Loan or the Wellogate. Walter (18th/19th C.) Lieutenant in the Hawick Military Association (volunteers) around 1800. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Walters. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Ann Irvine in 1780 and their children included: Isabella (b.1782); Thomas (b.1785), probably the skinner; Margaret (b.1787); and Ann (b.1789), who married Alexander Laing. The witnesses in 1789 were the whole congregation. Walter ‘Watty’ (1770–1847) wright and cabinet-maker of the High Street, 2nd son of ‘Haunless Wat’ and Catherine Oliver. His joiner’s and cabinet-maker’s business was down the close at 9 High Street. He inherited this property from his father, and it included land that went all the way down to the river, with stables at the foot. He lived above the property at the front, which was rented to a grocer; his parlour windows faced the street above the shop. This property is shown belonging to him on Wood’s 1824 map of Hawick. It was said that as a joiner he was known for some local specialties, including a kind of nutcracker that he made with a circular ring of wood and wooden screw. He was also on the Town Council, and served as Master of Works. He was a keen fisherman, and told stories of sailing his ‘trows’ from Hawick to Berwick when the river was full. He is probably the Walter ‘wright in Hawick’ who was listed as a second cousin in the 1808 will of William Oliver, ‘Auld Cash’. In 1812 he witnessed a baptism for James Scott and Elizabeth Turnbull. He is probably the wright who helped compile a ‘New Valuation of Houses and Gardens in the Town of Hawick’ in 1814. He is recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory as a joiner on the High Street and in 1837 as a joiner and undertaker. In the 1834 electoral roll Walter senior and Walter junior (both cabinet-makers) are mentioned, and they are still on the High Street (at about No. 9) on the 1841 census. He married Agnes Fletcher, who died in 1802, aged 27. They had 2 sons: Walter (b.1798); and Robert (b.1801), who died in infancy. The witnesses in 1798 were merchants William Wilson and George Turnbull. In older life he was known as ‘Uncle Wattie’. A portrait of him exists. The family are buried in Wilton Old Churchyard. Ballie Walter (d.1840) tanner in Hawick. He was brother of John and son of John and Margaret Elliot. Both brothers were tanners and later candlemakers. He is easy to confuse with his nephew Walter, who was a Skinner in Hawick. He is probably the Walter who was a Ballie in the 1790s and early 1800s and who was recorded as eldest Ballie in 1808. He could be the tanner whose son John died in Hawick in 1781. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. He married Peggy Rae and their daughter Peggy was baptised in 1808. Walter (1794–1849) son of baker Walter and Margaret Donald. He was Cornet in 1814. He carried on his father’s baker’s business at 10 Howegate and was listed on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. In the 1830s he was among a list of 10 men who had been denied their claim to be on the electoral roll in Selkirkshire on the basis of joint life-rent there. He is listed as a baker in Hawick among the heads of households in Wilton Kirk in 1840 and 1841. He later became Burgh Treasurer. In 1821 he married Isabella Richardson, daughter of James Richardson (Cornet in 1777) and Jane Scott from Milsington; she carried on the business after his death. Their children included: Jane (b.1822), who married baker George Armstrong; Walter (b.1824), the eldest son, who helped his mother with the baker’s; Margaret D. (b.1827); Isabella (b.1829); James Donaldson (b.1831), later worked in the family business; John (b.1833); Elizabeth (b.1836); Agnes, who married Thomas Dryden; and Jessie (d.1891), who married John Riddle Thompson. He died in the cholera epidemic, his death being listed among 9 others on the same day. A portrait of him exists. Walter of Orchard (1796–1890) eldest son of William and Elizabeth Richardson, he was a manufacturer in Hawick. It is said that when the partnership between his father and William Watson dissolved in 1819 he began to travel on horseback, with commercial samples in his saddlebags, spending up to 6 weeks on the road. He may be the ‘Walter Wilson, hosier’ who is recorded on the subscription list for Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ (1825). In 1841 he is recorded living at 13
High Street, with his wife, 2 children and 4 servants and in 1851 was at Orchard, also with 4 servants. He took over part of the family manufacturing business, forming Walter Wilson & Sons of Teviot Mills (Weensland) and Allars Crescent in 1851. He manufactured both hosiery and tweeds. Along with several other local manufacturers and Mr. Croall of Edinburgh he organised a cheaper (than the mail coach) stage-coach between Hawick and Edinburgh 1823–46. He was Secretary of the Board of Health set up to deal with the 1832 cholera outbreak. It was said that once William Grieve of Branxholme Park challenged him to a fight, and as a Quaker he put his hands in his pockets and stated ‘That’s what I do when anyone asks me to fight’. He was leader of the group in the 1850s pushing for the Hawick–Carlisle railway to go via Liddesdale rather than Langholm. He served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire; he may have been the first J.P. from Hawick. He was living at Orchard from at least the 1850s. He was recorded there in 1861, listed as a Justice of the Peace and farmer of 270 acres, as well as a manufacturer in Hawick, employing almost 200 people. He also owned part of Weensland (perhaps where the mill was) that had been owned by Robert Scott. In 1827 he firstly married Rebecca Gibb (sister of James Gibb, who married his sister Margaret); she died in 1832. In 1838 he secondly married another Rebecca (1818–96), daughter of Alexander Cruickshank (with whom his father had started in business in 1794). Both of his marriages were within the Society of Friends and he remained in the organisation all his life. His children included: William (1829–59); Francis Elliot (b.1839) of Broomlands; Edward (b.1841), who married Margaret Hobkirk; Alfred Cruickshank (b.1843), whose wife was also Rebecca; Dr. Alexander (b.1845), who married Emma Bewley; Susan Cruickshank (b.1847), who married Rev. Robert Hislop, brother of Hawick minister David Hislop; Walter Stuart (b.1850), who married Janet Cairns; Lucy Ann (1853–1944), who was President of the Hawick Young Women’s Christian Association; and Emily Richardson (b.1857), who died in infancy. His involvement in the railway debate left a big impression in the area – ‘’Twas said to Walter Wilson, ‘Sir ’twas you that shut the door’, ‘I deny it’, said the Quaker, ‘We can prove it’, said a score’ [T]. Walter (1798–1862) son of Walter, he was a cabinet-maker like his father. He was on the short-list for Cornet in 1817 and was elected as Cornet in 1820. He was listed as ‘Walter Wilson, Jun. wright’ among the subscribers to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’, published in 1825. He is listed along with his father on the High Street on the 1841 census. By 1851 he was a widower at about 9 High Street, and was employing 3 men. In Slater’s 1852 directory he was listed as a joiner on the High Street. By 1856 he was a ‘Proprietor of Houses’ on the High Street. By 1861 he was a retired cabinet-maker living at Silverbuthall House. He had a son called Walter (b.1823), apparently before he was married (with the mother being Wilhelmina Bell); this son became a baker in Selkirk and then emigrated to Australia. He firstly married Janet Gray (who probably died in 1829). He also appears to have had an illegitimate son (Robert Brodie Wilson, 1840–1900) with Margaret Brodie. In 1856 he secondly married Isabella (c.1824–98, from Lilliesleaf), daughter of farmer James Gray; they had a daughter, Jessie (1828–1913), who married George Hobkirk, of Slitrig Villa. He was said to be very keen on fishing, and left his business largely to be run by John Rae, while he went on angling excursions. He was also said to be a great storyteller. An early photograph of him exists. Walter (b.1801) wool sorter in Hawick, son of John and Wilhelmina Irvine. He was recorded living at about 30 High Street in 1841, along with grocer Isabel Oliver. In 1851 he was with his brother William at about 32 High Street and in 1861 was an unmarried lodger at 6 Cross Wynd. Walter (b.1811) son of Thomas and brother of John Fiddes. He was a skinner and wool merchant in Hawick. He is easy to confuse with Bailie Walter, his uncle, who was a tanner. He was listed in the 1837 electoral roll (along with John Fiddes) as a joint proprietor. In the 1837 Commons inquiry into ‘fictitious voters’ he was claimed to have gone to Edinburgh to seek votes. In 1851 he was living with his widowed mother, brother John and cousin Thomas Fiddes at 1 Teviot Crescent. In 1861 he was living with his brother at 1 Teviot Crescent, and was unmarried. Walter (19th C.) hawker in Hawick. He was deceased in 1879 when his representatives were rebuilding his house at the top of the north side of the Howegate. Walter (1823–1903) son of Walter, with his mother being Wilhelmina Bell (from Riddings). His half-sister was Jessie, wife of George Hobkirk of Slitrig Villa. He lived with his father and grandfather, cabinet-makers at 9 High Street, but then became an apprentice baker in Selkirk. He spent about 5 years as a baker in London, returned to Selkirk in 1849 and then in 1852 emigrated to Australia, following the gold rush. He married Janet Brydon (who was from the Ettrick valley) and they had children Robert, Walter and William. Walter (19th C.) married Janet Nichol in Wilton Parish in 1844. Their son John was baptised in Wilton in 1845. Walter (19th C.) married Margaret Beatie in Roberton Parish in 1845. Their daughter Isabella was baptised in 1845. Walter (b.1824) son of Walter and Isabella Richardson. After his father's death, he helped his mother run the family baker's business on the Howegate. He was listed as baker in Slater's 1852 directory. In 1861 he was still at 10 Howegate, running the business with his mother and brother James, and sisters Elizabeth and Agnes also living there. Walter Francis (1875–1957) son of Francis Elliot and Agnes Laing. Like his forebears, he was a manufacturer in Hawick. He was married twice, firstly to Ann Brown Alexander and secondly to Delia Frances Tighe. He had a son Walter Elliot Francis (1907–59). Walter Stuart (1850–1926) younger son of Walter of Orchard, he was born at Orchard. He trained as an engineer and in the 1880s formed a partnership with Alexander Simpson. The firm specialised in tunnelling work for the North British Railway; 2 large brick rotundas they designed, once gateways to tunnels across the Clyde, can still be seen in Glasgow. In 1880 he married Janet Cairns and they had a son, Arthur Hamilton (b.1881). He retired in 1922, moving to Lancashire, where he died. Walter Fiddes (1861–1925) son of John Fiddes and Margaret Bell Underwood. He abandoned the tweed manufacturing trade and studied music in Italy. He was a organist at St. John's 1880–91 and then organist at Wilton Kirk (where his brother-in-law, Rev. John Rudge Wilson, was minister). He was also a singing teacher, and great organiser of musical performances in Hawick at the end of the 19th century, including conducting the Sacred Harmonic Society, which mounted ambitious choral performances in the Exchange Hall. He was also founder of the Hawick Amateur Opera Company in 1897. He and his wife he gave a procession cross to St. Cuthbert's Kirk. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1641 he witnessed a baptism for Robert Gillespie. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Riddell and their children included an unnamed son (b.1679), Margaret (b.1681), Jane (b.1683) and Agnes (b.1687). He could be the William who witnessed a baptisms for William Thomson and Agnes Cook in 1680, for Walter Lorraine and Bessie Riddell in 1682 and for Robert Cook and Isobel Scott in 1685. William (17th/18th C.) recorded at Mabonlaw, among the poor of Wilton Parish, in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Fenwick. He married Margaret Stevenson and their daughter Jean was baptised in Hawick in 1703. The witnesses were Andrew Riddell in Goldieland and James Fulside. William (17th/18th C.) said to have been son of an army sergeant in the time of Queen Anne, and brother of James. He is one of the first known of an old Hawick family. Probably the same William, servitor to Alexander Thomson of Whitchesters was admonished for not observing the Sabbath in 1712. It also seems likely he was the tenant in Hawick Shiel who was found in 1717 to have ploughed a distance of 5 or 6 yards into the Common, east of the corner marker near Langflat. He was recorded as herd in Whitchesters in 1714, when his daughter Margaret was baptised, with witnesses Walter Scott and James Davidson, tenants of Newbigging. William 'Whusky Wullie' (1713–91) born in Kirkton, eldest son of carrier James. He was admitted a Burgess of Hawick in 1736 and worked as a 'messenger and writer'. He also acted as Burgh Procurator Fiscal. He was recorded as 'messenger' in 1745. He was a 'writer' when he paid tax on 11 windows in Hawick in 1748. He is also a writer when he (along with his son James) witnessed a baptism for his son Peter in 1779. He is probably the 'Mr William Wilson, there' who subscribed to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' (1784). He married Mary Hardie (1717–96), who was related to Bailie John Hardie; the marriage took place in Edinburgh in 1737. Their children were: Isobel (b.1743), who married wright John Telfer of Jedburgh and emigrated to America; Agnes (b.1745), who married writer James Wintrope; James (1748–1821), clockmaker and Cornet; and Peter (1750–1836), shoemaker; as well as Patrick (b.1739), Agnes (b.1741), William and John (b.1756), who died in infancy. The witnesses in 1743 were wright Walter Scott and writer James Weir and in 1745 were John Telfer and shoemaker John Scott. He himself witnessed baptism for carrier George in 1766 and 1767, and another for exciseman Robert Pringle in 1778. He died in Hawick in 1791, when he is recorded as a 'writer', son of James 'the old Baron'. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was in Stobice in 1772 when his son William was baptised. William (18th/19th C.) son of James, he was a carrier in Hawick, like his brothers George and James. His premises were at the East End.
Wulson

He paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1785–91. All 3 brothers were listed as carriers on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls; at that time he had 5 work horses. He may be the William who witnessed a baptism for saddler Thomas Huggan in 1797. He had 3 sons, James, William and Robert, and a daughter, who became Mrs. A. Mair (and whose daughter was Mrs. Drummmond). His wife may be the Ann Murray (marriage 1777), spouse of carrier William recorded in the Hawick Parish records in 1805 (but if so, he was already deceased). Either he or his son is probably the carrier William living with the Mair family on the Mill Path in 1841. He probably married Ann Murray (from Roberton Parish) in 1777 and their children included: George (b.1778); James (b.1780); Elizabeth (b.1784); Ann (b.1785); and William (b.1787). William (18th C.) recorded at Adderstonelee on the 1787–92 Horse Tax Rolls. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Williams.

William (1764–1832) eldest son of Walter and Catherine Oliver, he was a Hawick-born hosiery manufacturer, and well-known Quaker in the Town. He was said to have been a sickly child, but grew to be healthy (although afflicted with asthma, for which it is said he sought relief in trips to Glasgow in later life). After seeing the stocking-frames introduced to Hawick by Bailie Hardie, at the age of 24 he went to Glasgow, where he worked as a journeyman to make enough money to buy a stocking-frame, which he brought back to Hawick. Thus in 1788 he set up in the hosiery business on his own, with the frame originally in a room of his father’s house on the High Street at 9 or 11 High Street. He was also Cornet in 1786 and Town Treasurer for many years. He is probably the merchant William who witnessed baptisms in 1791 and 1795 for his sisters Betty and Agnes. He was recorded as ‘Hosier’ in 1796, when he witnessed a baptism for James Richardson. He is probably the merchant who witnessed a baptism for Walter (likely his brother) in 1798. In 1797 (by which time he probably had 4 frames) he acquired a lease of part of the old Inkle Company’s property, off what would be Commercial Road, where he started carding and spinning. He met William Watson on sales trips to Glasgow and in 1804 formed the partnership Wilson & Watson, then building Dangerfield Mills. In 1819 he split with Watson to form William Wilson & Sons, Roughheugh (Langlands) Mill, and the family name passed to several subsequent hosiery firms through his sons, including George, who became Hawick’s first Provost. About 1800 he was one of the local men contributing to support the war against France. A debt of his is recorded in Selkirk in 1814. In 1825 he is recorded as a hosiery manufacturer, yarn spinner and blanket maker on the High Street. He lived in a house on the south side of Buccleuch Street (about No. 19), shown on Wood’s 1824 map. He may also be the William whose property on the left side of Drumlanrig Square and near Rosalea Brae is marked on the same map; additionally he was the William at about 11 High Street (with his brother Walter, adjacent at No. 9). He is among the subscribers to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’, published in 1825. He was active in the Edinburgh Meeting of the Society of Friends and many of his family were educated at Quaker schools. In 1794 he married Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’, b.1772), daughter of William Richardson, who built the Whiskyhouse Mill; she died in 1815, following the birth of their last child. The couple moved into 11 High Street, where Mrs. Wilson ran a shop in the front, and built out at the back was the stocking shop. They had a family of 15, including: Isabella (b.1794), who died young; Walter of Orchard (b.1796); Katherine (1798–1873), who married John Glenny; William (b.1799), who died in infancy; Isabella (1800–76), who married Andrew Galloway Hunter, Glasgow manufacturer, and was mother of Sir William Wilson Hunter, historian and Indian scholar; William (b.1801), hat manufacturer; Elizabeth (1802–72), who married cattle-breeder John Cruickshank; Margaret (1803–63), who married James Gibb from Edinburgh, who went to India to be secretary to James Wilson, but arrived on the day of his funeral, and was father of a Liberal M.P., also James Gibb; James (1805–60), founder of ‘The Economist’; John (1806–86), who married Margaret Scott, and lived at Ladylaw; Ann (1808–77), who married Anthony Cruickshank, brother of her brother-in-law; Agnes (1809–13); Deborah (1810–12); Jane (1812–13); and George (1815–98), Hawick’s first Provost. The witnesses in 1794 were merchant George Turnbull and currier John Straiton (both married to his sisters). He died from cholera when attending the annual Quakers’ Society meeting in London with his daughter Katherine. He is buried in Peckham. His business day-book from about 1790 is preserved in the Museum, which also has a portrait of him (by an unknown artist). William (1779–1845) eldest son of shoemaker Peter, he was a shoemaker himself. He is among the subscribers to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’, published in 1825. In Pigot's 1837 directory he was listed as a shoemaker and leather cutter on the Howegate. On the 1841 census he is recorded at 2 Howegate. He served as a Town Councillor. In 1821 he married Judith Grant, housekeeper at Wilton Lodge, daughter of John Grant, who was overseer to George Cumming of Rutherford, near Forres. Their children included: Patrick Hardie (1821–44); John Grant (1823–56); Harriet (b.1826); Joan (1827–1910); Agnes (1829–1905); James Anderson (b.1830), engineer in the Royal Navy; William Henry Brougham (1831–56), sugar planter; George Elliot (1833–75) of the City of Glasgow Bank; James; Beatrice; and Alexander.

William (b.1800/1) frameworker in Hawick. He was living on Tannage Close in 1841, 1851 and 1861. He married Agnes Michie and their children included: Margaret (b.1820); James (b.1823); George (b.1826); Jane (b.1828); and Robert (b.1834). William (1801–57) second son of manufacturer William. He went to London with his brother James and sister Katherine around 1824, as a hat manufacturer, and became a successful businessman there. He is listed as 'hat manufacturer, London' among the subscribers to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick', published in 1825. He lived on Coburg Road in Peckham, originally with his brother James, their sisters Margaret and Elizabeth keeping house for them. The firm was called Wilson, Irwin & Wilson, with a hattery on the north side of London Bridge. They started by making beaver hats, but moved into silk when that became the fashion. It is said that he retired at a fairly young age, with a considerable fortune. He was called upon to arbitrate in the splitting of the business of William Wilson & Sons between his brothers Walter, John and George. He married Margaret MacDonald and their children were: William (d.1868); Katharine; Helen (d.1857); James (d.1857); Alice (d.1857); Henry, who married a Henderson; John Treder, Isa Elder; George; and Annie. He died, along with 3 of his children (James, Helen and Alice), in a tragic bathing accident at Dunbar. William (b.1805) frameworker in Hawick, son of John and Wilhelmina Irvine. He was living on Tait's Close in 1841 and at about 32 High Street in 1851 (with his brother Walter also living with him). He married Jane Scott and their children included: John (b.1830); David (b.1834); Gilbert Elliot (b.1836); Jane (b.1838); and Williamina (b.1842). William (b.1824), with the mother's name given as Janet Scott, may also have been his child.

William (b.1805/6) wool sortier in Hawick, born in Galashiels. He was living on O'Connell Street in 1841. He married Janet Hunter and their children included: Margaret (b.c.1828); Isabella (b.c.1831); Mary (b.c.1834); Walter (b.1836); Jane (b.1839); and Janet (b.1841). William (1823/4–76) son of William and Isabella Laidlaw. He was a spinner at Lynnwood, like his father, becoming foreman there. He was living on Wilton Place in 1851 and at 5 Teviot Crescent in 1851. He married Agnes Oliver (aunt of Robert, Lyle & Scott's secretary), who died in 1908, aged 84. Their children were: Janet Laidlaw, who married Adam Robson; Joseph (tweed manufacturer); Robert; James; John; William; and Margaret; plus Margaret, Isabella and Benjamin, who died young. He is buried in the Wellogate. William (19th C.) mason, recorded at Spittal-on-Rule in 1858. William H. Brougham (b.1831) son of Hawick shoemaker William. He was a sugar planter in Mauritius. He married Emma Dick and their children Edith and Grace both died unmarried. He is probably the 'son of Mr. Wilson's, once shoemaker in Hawick' who was said to have met 2 sons of Tom Jenkins (Teviothead's African-born school-teacher), thus proving that Tom did not perish at sea, as most people in Hawick had believed. William (19th C.) rag and waste dealer in Hawick, with premises at 5 Teviot Road. He was associated with both the 'Open' and 'Needed Truth' sections of the Brethren. In 1866 he married Elizabeth ('Betsy'), daughter of Thomas Robson, blacksmith at Teviothead. His son Andrew ('Dan') continued his business for a few years, before emigrating to Australia. William Richardson (1839–96) son of John and grandson of the William, the original manufacturer of the family. He lived at Ladylaw, like his father before him and continued his father's manufacturing business. He married Jane Macpherson (1839–1924) and their children included: John Graham (1862–1928); Isabella (b.1864), who married Robert Elliot, farmer in Hermitage; Margaret Scott (b.1866); William Richardson (1869–1902), Cornet in 1894; Elizabeth (b.1873); Thomas (b.c.1876); and perhaps James (b.c.1885). William Elliot (1868–1950) son of George Elliot and grandson of Hawick shoemaker William. He became a chemist and was associated with Hawick Archæological Society. He was a friend of James Sinton, who was one of those who helped him compile his Hawick-related bibliography. He donated the painting of John Wilson (in Cornet's dress) to the Museum. William A. (19th/20th
Wulson an Airmstrong’s

C.) clerk and later cashier at Blenkhorn’s. He was long connected with Allars Kirk. William Richardson (1869–1902) eldest son of William Richardson and Jane Macpherson. He was Cornet of 1894 and descendant of the Cornet of 1786. His Lass was Miss Wilson of Dumfries, his cousin. He lived at Ladylaw, and worked in the hosiery business like his father. However, he emigrated to the U.S.A. and was employed at the Marston Worsted Mills in Maine, where he was a member of the Masons and the Milburn Club. He died of pneumonia at Skowhegan, Maine and was buried at Saugus, Massachusetts (formerly spelled ‘Wilson’, ‘Wilsoun’, ‘Wilsoune’, ‘Wilsone’, ‘Wilsome’, ‘Wylisomn’, ‘Wylsone’, etc.).

Wulson an Airmstrong’s (wul-sin-in-är-mströngz) n. hosiery firm of Weensland Mills in the mid-19th century. It was a partnership between George Wilson (Provost of Hawick) and Walter Armstrong and was set up in 1851, after George Wilson received the Weensland Mill part of his father’s business of William Wilson & Sons. It focussed on the production of tweed, and was particularly known for its designs of ‘Scotch Tweeds and Mauds’. Armstrong went to live in London, where he represented the business at their warehouse at 69 Aldermanbury. The firm was employing about 400 people in 1871. The firm lasted until the Collie failure of 1875.

Wulson an Elliot’s (wul-sin-in-e-litz) n. hosiery firm and yarn spinners of the early 19th century, with factory in Slitrig Crescent. It was a partnership between Thomas Wilson and William Elliot and lasted between the years 1823 and 1830. Wilson then started on his own, and Elliot’s grew to be the most prominent hosiery firm in the country.

Wulson an Glenny’s (wul-sin-in-gle-nee-z) n. Wilson & Glenny’s tweed mill at Langlands and Ladylaw. It started in 1876 (following the Collie Disaster) from the former Wilson & Armstrong’s. The partnership was between George Wilson and James Glenny (his nephew), together with Wilson’s sons Charles John and George Murray. The name was originally ‘Wilson’s & Glenny’, but it became ‘Wilson & Glenny Ltd.’ in 1891. The firm became one of the largest tweed manufacturers in the South of Scotland. The families retained control of the company until around WWII. The main factory was decimated by fire in 1959, although rebuilt in 1961. It closed in 1980 and was converted into the Ladylaw Centre. That was later demolished and the site became the Lidl supermarket and car park. Company records exist covering the period 1902–75.

Wulson an Watson’s (wul-sin-in-wawt-sinz) n. hosiery firm of William Wilson & William Watson, established in 1804 in the old Inkle House on what would be Commercial Road. They then constructed Langlands Mill and Dangerfield Mill further along Wilton Dam. It is said that Wilson was the meticulous businessman and Watson the consummate salesman. The firm split in 1819, with the Wilsons taking Langlands Mill and the Watsons taking Dangerfield Mill. This was the beginning of several of the largest manufacturers in Hawick.

Wulson Burn (wul-sin-burn) n. Wilson Burn, stream that emerges from Hellmoor Loch and runs in a roughly southern direction to reach Alemoor Loch.

the Wulson Cup (thu-wul-sin-kup) n. bowling trophy, it was presented to the Town Council in 1925 to be competed for on the bowling green in the Park. Last presented in 1959, it is now in the Museum.

Wulson Drive (wul-sin-driv) n. Wilson Drive, a street in Burnfoot, lying above Hamilton Road. It was built in 1967 and named after Provost George Wilson.

Wulson’s (wul-sinz) n. hosiery firm started by William Wilson in 1788 when he brought back a stocking-frame from Glasgow. In 1797 he acquired part of the old Inkle Company’s property on the Under Haugh, and began carding and spinning there. By about 1804 he formed a partnership with William Watson, but this split again in 1819. He later assumed his sons as partners, and the firm of William Wilson & Sons lasted until 1851, when the 3 sons (Walter, John and George) each took part of the firm to run themselves. In 1826 the firm were the first to use foreign wool for the manufacture of fine flannels. William Wilson & Sons was the first firm in Hawick to use steam power, Melrose’s supplying the engine in 1831. Around 1832 the firm moved to manufacturing woollen belts that were said to be a preventative for cholera. In about 1835 they started weaving flannel. In Pigot’s 1837 directory the firm is listed at Langlands and Weensland Mills, manufacturing both woollens and hosiery. It was still listed at Langlands and Weensland Mills in Slater’s 1852 directory, although dissolved by then.

Wulson’s Close (wul-sinz-klös) n. once the popular name for the passageway at 13 High Street, also known as Quaker’s Close. It was named after William Wilson & Sons who had premises (and possibly a residence) there.
Wulton Barony

Wulton Barony (wul'-in-bawng) n. house on the eastern side of Princes Street, built on the site of the stables of Old Wulton Bank. Also formerly the name used for ‘Old Wulton Bank’ the home of the Watson family, built above their main factory at Dangerfield. It was later the home of David Laing and then Robert Innes (sometimes written as one word).

the Wulton Bar (thu-wul'-in-bawr) n. former pub at the foot of Dickson Street, popularly known as ‘Genties’.

Wulton Auld Kirk (wul'-in-awld-kirk) n. popular name used in the latter part of the 19th century to refer to the former church of Wilton Parish, after it was replaced in 1861 with a new building across the street. This church stood in the middle of the old churchyard and was built in 1762, replacing what was probably the pre-Reformation church. It was a square construction, with windows on either side, 2 entrances, the pulpit on the south wall, and a belfry on the west side. Since it was too small for the congregation, an extension was built to the north side in 1801, designed by William Elliot of Kelso. A new gallery was formed at about that time, with the expense split between the Duke of Buccleuch, Rev. Dr. Charters, William Oliver and other subscribers; the lower part became a vault for the Charters family. The church was abandoned in 1861 when the new building was ready. At that time there was some remodelling done, including removal of the belfry. The ruins of the church can be seen in an early photograph. The churchyard was largely cleared of tombstones in 1957. David Hill wrote a poem about watching the demolition of the last gable of the church itself – ‘I watched the deliberate Last Destruction o Wulton Yin simmer Setterday afternoon. Wulton was biggit in comely stane Quarried frae native hills – Frei-stane and whum . . . ’[DH].

Wulton’s Shooder

Wulton’s Shooder (wul-sinz-shoo-dur) n. Wilson’s Shoulder, southern ridge of Pike Fell, south-east of Shankend in the upper Slitrig valley. There are remains of a settlement, about 39 m by 34 m, divided into 2 courts, of uncertain age.

Wult (wult) v., poet. wilt – ‘For thou, Lord, wilt bless the righteous . . . ’[HSR], ‘Wi’ the mercifu’ thou wilt shaw thysel’ mercifu’: wi’ the upright man thou wilt shaw thysel’ upright’[HSR].

Wultin see Wulton

wultna (wult-na) contr., poet. wilt not – ‘Wultna thou, O God, wha hest casen us aff? an’ wultna thou, O God, gang furth wi’ our hosts?’[HSR].

Wulton (wul’-in, wil’-in, wil-tin) n. Wilton, originally a separate settlement on the north side of the Teviot. It is first mentioned in a deed of about 843 in which Egred, Bishop of Lindisfarne secured to that See land in Teviotdale including ‘Wiltuna’. The church transferred to the Diocese of Glasgow in the 12th century, when there are also several references to ‘ecclesiam de Wilthona’. A large part of the Parish of Wilton was owned by the Langlands family for centuries. The town had its own Common in the area behind Stiches, the feuers being called together at Stinty Knowe. In 1627 it was reported that ‘thair is no foundatioun for hospitall or schooll, at Stinty Knowe. In 1627 it was reported that ‘their is no foundation for hospital or school, albeit they war necessar’. In the 18th century Wilton consisted of the Langlands and Stiches estates, together with a few smaller farms, the Roughheugh corn mill, the Parish Kirk, Manse and School, and houses at Damside, Sandbed, the Peth-heid, Gib’s Nose, the Maut Steep, Saut Haa and Lockiesedge. It remained a scattered village until it was developed as cheap housing for mill workers in the late 18th and early 19th centuries, when it became increasingly dependent on Hawick when it became increasingly dependent on Ha-wick. With bridge access across the Teviot being easy, it grew more and more clear that Wilton and Hawick were two parts of the same town. Wilton came within the boundaries of the Burgh of Hawick following the local Police Act of 1861 (which was not without its critics), bringing new life to the community. For ecclesiastic matters the parish has remained separate, however – ‘And for the Priest o’ Wilton, His coat it is worn thin . . . ’[JSB], ‘. . . While Wilton’s broad domain, that shuts the view With pleasant blending, skirts the western sky’[JCG] (sometimes written ‘Wultin’; the name occurs in the early 9th century and has been spelled in various ways over the years; it is ‘Wilthona’ and ‘Wiltona’ in the late 12th century, is ‘Wiltoun’ in 1342, ‘Wyltoun’ in 1431, ‘Wylton’ in 1448, ‘Wiltoune’ in 1453, ‘Vilton’ in 1468, ‘Weltoune’ in 1495, ‘Wiltoune’ in 1499/1500 and 1502, ‘Wiltoune’ in 1501/2, ‘Weltoun’ in 1511, ‘Vultoun’ in 1576/7 and 1588, ‘Woltoune’ in 1594 and 1615, ‘Wultoun’ and ‘Woulton’ in 1611, ‘Woltoun’ in 1634, ‘Walton’, ‘Woltone’ and ‘Woltoune’ in 1663, ‘Woltoune’ again in 1688 and 1690 and ‘Weltoune’ locally in 1722; the local pronunciation is also written ‘Wultin’; the most likely origin is the Old English ‘welig’ or ‘wilig tun’, i.e. ‘farm by the willows’, while the suggestion that it was once owned by someone called William has no supporting evidence).

Wulton Auld Kirk (wul'-in-awld-kirk) n. popular name used in the latter part of the 19th century to refer to the former church of Wilton Parish, after it was replaced in 1861 with a new building across the street. Wulton Boolin Club

Wulton Boolin Club (wul'-in-bö-lin-klub) n. organisation established in 1895, with green and clubhouse at 6 West Stewart Place. The first President was Rev. J.R. Wilson, with Provost Barrie as Vice-President.

Wulton Burn (wul'-in-burn) n. stream that joins the Teviot at the far end of the Park, near Overhall. It is said that some windings in this stream were used as locations for secret sermons by Covenantant preachers around the 1660s and 70s. There was formerly a small mill lade going past Netherhall farm (not to be confused with the Wilton Dean or Cala Burn).

Wultonburn (wul'-in-burn) n. farm on the Wulton Burn past Overhall, now rented out as holiday cottages and having a Cashmere shop. The farm was among those belonging to Scott of Buccleuch that were burned by a band of Englishmen and Kers in late 1548. In 1549 the tenant was Philip Scott, and other residents included Matthew Hunter, George Scott and William Duncan. In 1569 the superiority of the lands (along with Wilton Green and Overhall) was inherited by Grizel Borthwick from her father Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. In 1586 the lands are among those given in ‘liferent’ to Margaret Ker as part of the marriage contract with Walter Scott of Buccleuch. In 1603 they were inherited by Walter Cairncross from his uncle Walter, brother of Robert of Colmslie. The land appears to have been part of the Wilton Parish possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch by 1643. There were 18 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650, namely James Scott, Mary Scott, John Scott, Robert Scott, Margaret Scott, Bessie Rashie, James Scott, Philip Scott, Marion Miller, Robert Scott, Mary Scott, Walter Scott, Helen Scott, Robert Scott, Isobel Thomson, Robert Scott, Robert Scott and Isobel Scott. It was home of a branch of the Scotts in the 17th century and the Turnbuls in the 19th. It was among the Wilton Parish possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch listed in 1653, 1661 and 1663. In 1690 it was rented by James Riddell, James Hogg, John Scott and John Hunter. In 1694 it was rented to Robert Scott, Bessie Scott, John Scott and Robert Langlands. In 1694 there were 8 households listed there. John Scott was recorded there in 1696. In 1696 the widow of Thomas Mitchelson joined the farmers, and James Irving in 1698. William Scott was also there in 1698 and James Telfer and Janet Scott in 1705. James Irving was still there in 1708. William Scott and James Irvine were tenants there in 1711. Walter Scott was living there in at least 1713–27, another Walter Scott 1721–24 and William Scott in 1735. The farm was surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718, when it extended to 361 acres and was bounded by Whitehaugh, Brieryhill, Easter Highchesters, Todshaw, Whitfield and Mervinslaw; farmhouses are shown on both side of the Wulton Burn. James Riddell was there in 1718, James Scott in 1724 and Andrew Irvine in 1747. Adam Easton and James Robson were there in 1770, William Cook in 1772, Thomas Cairns in 1780 and William Miller in 1786–89. William Willison and William Amos were farmers there in 1797. Before 1826 the main road to the Borthwick passed by here. There is an enclosure marked in the corner of a field on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map (formerly spelled ‘Wiltonburne’; it is ‘Wiltonburne’ in 1654, ‘Wiltonburne’ in 1569, ‘Wiltonburne’ in 1586, ‘Wiltonburne’ in 1603, ‘Wetounburne’ in 1653, ‘Woltounburne’ in 1661, ‘Walltounburne’ and ‘Wiltonburne’ in 1663, ‘Wiltonburne’ in 1690 and ‘Wiltonburne’ in 1696; it is marked ‘Wiltowne burne’ on a 1650 parish map, is on Blaeu’s 1654 map as simply ‘Wilton’ and is ‘Wiltonburne’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Wultonburn Epps (wul'-in-burn-eps) n. former small holding, now the name of a field on Wiltonburn farm. It is ‘Wiltonburn Esps’ on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, with John Gray recorded as the farmer there.

Wulton Burnfit (wul'-in-burn-fi') n. former name for a steading in Wilton Parish, probably at the foot of the Wulton Burn. It is recorded as ‘W: burnfoot’ in 1727, when William Scott was there.

Wultonburn Hill (wul'-in-burn-hil) n. hill north of Wiltonburn farm, height 282 m, with a white concrete triangulation point on top. A spur on the eastern side contains the remains of a homestead, approximately 45 m by 30 m, with probably 3 hut circles identifiable, as well as a ditch outside the structure – ‘And now life’s golden Sun gone doon Ahint Wulton Burn Hill Oo’re a’ fair prood That oo hev kent The man that oo ca’ Bill’ [IWL].

Wulton Camp (wul'-in-kawmp) n. army camp, at Howdenbank, where the Police and Fire Stations were later built. It was used during WWII for British troops, and also used for holding prisoners of war. There were around 200 German prisoners there in 1946. Aerial photographs show at least 44 Nissen huts. It may also have been known as Wilton Hill Camp.
Wulton Cemetery (wul’-in-see-mi’-ree) n. burial place of a large fraction of local residents, having two separate locations over the centuries. The Old Cemetery was begun with the construction of Wilton Old Church in 1762 and essentially closed along with the church in 1861. There must have been an earlier churchyard on more or less the same site, since there was a church there for many hundreds of years. The old cemetery was neglected for many years, with many headstones being replaced in 1957, the railings and wall being removed in 1961 and all but a few notable stones being removed to make way for public pathways and grassy areas. The new Wilton Cemetery lies between Wilton Hill and Burnfoot, and is one of the town’s two main cemeteries. It was opened in 1864 when the former churchyard had run out of space. It contains 17 graves maintained by the Commonwealth War Graves Commission. By 2011 it contained no new burial plots.

Wulton Common (wul’-in-ko-min) n. the Common attached to the Parish of Wilton. It was divided in the period 1764–66, before which it was annually ‘stented’ at Stintyknowe. ‘State of the Process of Division of the Commonty of Wilton’ being Robert Langlands of that Ilk and others against Henry Duke of Buccleuch and others, was published in 1764, and contains a map showing owners’ names and acreages. The land was divided among the local landowners, including the minister (who received about 16 acres). The National Archives contains several related documents.

Wulton Cottage (wul’-in-ko’-eej) n. small house off the south side of Langlands Road in the mid-19th century. It was home of Margaret Turnbull (nee Dalgleish) who probably ran it as the ‘Image Garden’ school around the 1840s (marked on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map).

Wulton Crescent (wul’-in-kre-sin’) n. street named in 1864, incorporating Langlands Place in 1865 and Wilton Terrace and Hopepark in 1869. The house at the top was built using stone from the original Wilton Manse, around the 1840s. The east side was demolished in 1971/72 along with Dickson Street. New houses were then built at the south end in 1973, closing it to traffic.

Wulton Crescent Lane (wul’-in-kre-sin’-làn) n. lane between Wilton Crescent and Dickson Street, described as ‘Wester Kirkstyle of Wiltown’ in a 1726 charter and later as ‘Wilton Kirkstyle’. It disappeared with the reconstruction of the area in 1971–73.

Wulton Dam (wul’-in-dawn) n. Wilton Dam, mill lade beginning at the Cauld, running parallel to the Teviot behind Victoria Road, turning at roughly right angles (along the side of Mactaggart’s skinworks) and continuing alongside Commercial Road. It was also sometimes referred to as the Roughheugh Dam. The lade existed from at least the 18th century, but probably existed in a primitive state from much earlier, and was much expanded later. From its source down to the Mill the land lay within the boundaries of the Burgh of Hawick, and so in the 18th century it was ceremoniously possessed during the Common Riding, with stones and earth symbolically thrown into it. It was developed by the Wilton Dam Company in the early 19th century to provide water power for the factories of Wilton, specifically Ladylaw, Dangerfield and Wilton Mills. In 1815 it is recorded that the Hawick Council earned money from the rent of two wooden bridges over the dam. The course of the lade is shown clearly on Wood’s 1824 map. An extension was built from Wilton Mills through Wilton Glebe lands to come out at Mansfield in 1827–29. A flood carried some of the lower part away in 1835–36 and it was further extended in 1837, with a new outlet. Yet another outlet was built near the North Bridge in 1876, but never used. Several other outflows into the Teviot were built along the side of Commercial Road during the 19th century. A court case in 1871 for having the dam fenced led to an outcome in favour of the manufacturers, although a wall was built for public safety. During dry spells it was possible to feed the dam by allowing water from Philhope and Broadlee Lochs to flow into the Borthwick (and hence the Teviot). From 1864 the dam could be fed by water from the new Allan Water supply and the flow was managed jointly by Wilson & Glenny, William Watson & Sons and Dicksons & Laings. The sluice gate at the Coble was closed from Saturday evening to Monday morning to allow water to flow over the Cauld. The lade was largely filled in after the Wilson & Glenny’s fire of 1959, with parts behind Victoria Road disappearing in the 1970s, and a small last section visible behind Wilton Mills disappearing in 2016.

Wulton Dean (wul’-in-deen) n. Wilton Dean, an area to the west of Hawick, on the higher ground behind the Park, constituting a separate community in Wilton. It was mentioned as early as the 15th century, and was formerly part of the Langlands estate, being originally known as ‘Langlands Dean’, and more familiarly as ‘the Dean’. The name became officially ‘Wilton Dean’ in 1861. The centre of the village is around the...
Wulton Dean Burn

Cala (sometimes Dean) Burn. Here was the site of the only trade that developed there, stock-making in the Dean Spinning Mill, which thrived in the 19th century. Because of this factory the population was as high as 250 in 1850. However, the factory did not last into the 20th century, and the old mill pond was drained to form a drying green and play area by the stream. The village was once illuminated by gas lamps, with a lamp-lighter going round each evening and morning. There was also once someone appointed to wake up the villagers in the mornings. It has been suggested that the novel ‘The Cottagers of Glenburnie’ by Elizabeth Hamilton is based on the Dean, and written when she visited James Anderson in Wilton Lodge in 1808. The school closed in 1937, but the building remains a focus for community activity. There was also once a grocer’s shop. New housing was built at Overhall in the 1970s and the adjoining Park View development in the 1990s – ‘How oft I’ve walked by Wilton Dean, Tae view auld Hawick, the Border Queen’ [JCa], ‘Though far afield I’ve wandered And a thousand places seen, There’s a tugging at my heart strings Calls me back to Wilton Dean’ [WL].

Wulton Dean Burn (wul’-in-deen-burn) n. Wilton Dean Burn, a name sometimes used for the Cala Burn, which flows through Wilton Dean. It should not be confused with the Wilton Burn, which forms part of the western extremity of Wilton Lodge Park.

Wulton Dean Hall (wul’-in-deen-hawl) n. community hall at Wilton Dean. It was refurbished in 2005 with money from several different sources.

Wulton Dean Schuil (wul’-in-deen-skil) n. former school in Wilton Dean, run by the Wilton School Board. It was probably set up in the 1870s as a primary school. Its pupils famously went on strike in 1889 (perhaps inspired by an earlier strike in Gala), marching into town in an unsuccessful attempt to close the Trinity Board School, demanding ‘shorter hours, fewer and easier lessons and better teachers’. The one-day strike made the national press and led to other school strikes throughout Britain. The school closed in 1937, when the number of pupils enrolled had fallen to an unsustainable level. The building was refurbished in 2005 as a village hall. Log books for 1873–1936 are in the Borders Archive.

Wulton Glebe (wul’-in-gleebee) n. previously the name given to the area attached to the manse for Wilton Church, also known as ‘Wilton Mains’ and part of which later became known as Mansfield. Wood’s 1824 map marks as ‘Glebe’ the area between Wilton Mills and the old Manse, but the lands extended much further down Mansfield. It also included an area south of the Teviot, roughly from the Mansfield footbridge towards Salisbury Avenue, where Glebe Mills were erected. The land was originally about 80 acres, and is said to have been given to Wilton Church when the brother of the Laird of Langlands was minister. This could have been John Langlands in the late 16th century, but seems more likely to have been the minister of the same name about a century later. The story is that the Laird gave him the gift so that the extra income would help with his large family. The land passed to subsequent ministers and continued to be used for agricultural purposes until feuded in the latter part of the 19th century. Several of the streets built on this land had to pay feu duty to the Church of Scotland for several decades afterwards. A small part (adjacent to Burnfoot Mill) was exchanged in 1748 for part of the Duke of Buccleuch’s ‘Trinity lands’ on the Wilton side.

Wulton Glebe (wul’-in-gleebee) n. bungalows built in 1955 in a new street off Wilton Hill, connecting with Wilton Hill Terrace, on land once belonging to Wilton Church (hence the name).

Wulton Green (wul’-in-green) n. Wilton Green, former lands, probably near Wilton Burn, which they are recorded along with in the 16th century. In 1549 they were among lands in the lower Borthwick valley whose residents complained about a raid by a group of Englishmen and Kers in the previous year; the tenant at that time was Patrick Hunter. In 1569 the superiority of lands (along with Wiltonburn and Overhall) was inherited by Grizel Borthwick from her father Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch; they were held for payment of a silver penny at Pentecost. In 1586 the lands are among those promised in ‘liferent’ to Margaret Ker as part of the marriage contract with Walter Scott of Buccleuch. Also in 1586 the lands were granted to William Cairncross of Colmslie and his wife Grizel Scott. In 1603 they were inherited by Walter Cairncross from his uncle Walter, brother of Robert of Colmslie. In 1604 they were resigned and granted to Walter Scott of Branxholme. There is a deed relating to them in the Douglas of Cavers papers in 1605. It was still listed among the Wilton Parish possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1653, 1661 and 1663 (it is ‘Wiltoune Greine’ in 1549, ‘Wiltoun Greine’ in 1569, ‘Woltoungreine’ in 1586, ‘Woltoungrein’ in 1603, ‘Weltouns-green’ in 1653, ‘Woltoungein’ in 1661 and ‘Waltounegrein’ and ‘Waltongrein’ in 1663.

Wulton Grove (wul'-in-grov) n. house built in the early 1800s for William Cathrae, merchant and banker, near the family land at Damside (‘Cathrae’s Haugh’). The land between Victoria Road and Albert Road was originally feued to John Ormiston in 1764. There was a wooded region north and west of Wilton Grove, hence the name. The house was occupied by Peter Laidlaw in the mid-19th century. There was also a small stocking shop there, run by Laidlaw. When he moved to Jedburgh it was taken over by Robert Murray, then a Mr. Routledge, and eventually Peter Scott, being the antecedent of Pesco’s.

Wultonhaa (wul'-in-haw) n. former name sometimes used for the main house in Langlands, seat of the Baron of Wilton. It is unclear what farm was meant by the same name on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when Thomas Darling and Dr. Gavin Turnbull are recorded there (‘Wiltonhall’ in a charter of 1531/2).

Wultonhill (wul'-in-hil) n. placename used for the location of James Langlands of that Ilk in 1574, when he was listed as superior of the lands of Borthaugh. The phrase ‘de Wiltounhill’ may simply be an error for the Barony of Wilton.

Wulton Hill (wul'-in-hil) n. street being the continuation of Dovemount Place, running up and over the hill towards the Burnfoot junction. It was named in 1871, previously being called Stall Brae or ‘Stellhoose Brae’. It contains several large villas on the east side. The name is more generally applied to the high ground roughly between the Leisure Centre and the Police Station.

Wulton Hill Lane (wul'-in-hil-lan) n. street off Wilton Hill??, name disappeared?? known more often by the name of the shop at the foot of the hill??.

Wulton Hill Terrace (wul'-in-hil-te-ris) n. street above Wilton Hill, built in 1879, originally called ‘Hill Terrace’ and renamed in 1882.

Wulton Home (wul'-in-höm) n. former children’s home located roughly where Melrose Place is today, in the former Wilton Manse building. The house was demolished before the area was developed in the 1960s.

Wultonian (wult-o-nee-in) n., arch. a resident of Wilton, particularly before the town became part of Hawick in 1861 – ‘...and it was held incompetent for a Wiltonian to act as Cornet at the Common Riding’ [RM], ‘Viv Sharp wasni a Hawick man, hei was a Wultonian and prood o’d’ [IWL].

Wulton Kirk (wul'-in-kirk) n. Wilton Church, the main church serving the Parish of Wilton, the present building dating from 1859. It was a Rectory from early times, associated with Glasgow Diocese (with the second highest value, after Hawick, in the Deaconry of Teviotdale in 1275). In about 1225 John of Wilton settled a dispute with the Bishop of Glasgow in which he granted 5 merks to the mother church, payable annually at the fairs of St. James of Roxburgh. The earliest clergyman that we have any record of is ‘Robert de Dene’ in 1296, although the first structure was probably built even earlier. The Old Church was built in 1762 in the middle of Wilton Old Churchyard, to the south of Princes Street. Earlier churches stood on the same site. There was an investigation into the state of the Kirk and Parish in 1627 and ‘stents’ for kirk repairs in 1659 and in 1673/4. There is a record of the church being neglected during the vacancy in the ministry in 1694, and including mention of a ‘quire’ (suggesting it may have been the pre-Reformation chapel). A corner-stone from that building is all that survives. This church also had a loft of Scott of Highchester, trasferred to Roberton after 1690 (but the sittings there were still disputed in the early years of the 18th century). The roof was in a sorry state by 1761 and the building was replaced in 1762, along with a new schoolhouse. This church was a plain square building, with the pulpit on the south wall, a large window on either side, two entries on the same side, and a belfry on the west gable. This building was enlarged to the north in 1801, repaired in 1829 and closed in 1861 when it was replaced by the new church across the road. The building was for a while used as a mission hall, but later demolished. Photographs of the old church exist. The new building, started in 1859, was designed by John Thomas Emmett of London (after winning a competition), and built by George Tait, builders. It is in a Gothic revival style that went against the trend for Presbyterian churches of its time. The exterior has a 4-storey bell tower, with a slated pyramidal roof. Interior columns are in Caen stone (common in English churches, but unusual in Scotland), with also some Bath stone arches and some exterior stone from Denholmhill. Construction was completed by 1862. However, it was extensively altered in 1907/8 to plans by J.P. Alison. The galleries were removed and a chancel and transepts added, with Caen stone and some Iona marble used in the interiors. The adjacent extensive church halls were built in 1897, also with J.P. Alison as architect, this time in a red brick Arts & Crafts style. War Memorial windows by Lilian J. Pocock were added in 1924. The building to the north, with its red brick spiralling Tudor chimneys and cupola-style bell tower, was designed as the Sunday School. The church and halls are both Grade B listed buildings. The church once held a great deal of land called Wilton Manse or Wilton Glebe, almost all of which was sold off to the town in the 19th century. The Earl of Bothwell held the patronage of the Kirk in the early 16th century, and it transferred to Scott of Branxholme in 1550. Kirk Session records exist from 1694. The oldest existing communion token is from 1763; it is lead and square with the letters ‘W.K’. Other tokens exist from 1861, oval in shape and made of mixed metal. The congregation was linked with Burnfoot and Teviothead in 2004. Famous ministers include William Crawford and Samuel Charters. The parish was left vacant for about 5½ years following the Revolution of 1689. A roll of the ministry is: Robert de Dene, Parson in 1296; Simon Wardlaw, Rector in 1432; Philip Waugh, Chaplain in 1454; George Carmichael, Rector in 1477; James Davidson, Clerk in 1489; Andrew Turnbull, Chaplain in 1512; Peter Langlands until 1549; John Greenlaw from 1549; Robert Wilson, Curate in 1552; Michael Balfour, at least 1561–63; Thomas Weston, Parson at least 1567–74; William Auchmowtie (Minister, along with several neighbouring parishes), from 1574; John Langlands, Reader from 1574 until about 1589; John Bonar 1593; John Johnston 1594–95; John Abernethy (possibly united with Jedburgh) 1596; William Clerk 1602–c.41; John Langlands 1641–69; John Stewart 1683–89; Robert Cunningham 1694–1712; William Crawford 1713–37; James Simpson 1738–71; Samuel Charters 1772–1825; David Stevenson 1826–51; James Stewart 1851–86; John Rudge Wilson 1887–c.1926; Charles Cooper 1926–30; John Beattie 1931–59; George Watson 1960–91; Brian Hendrie 1992–97; John Shedden 1998– (it is ‘Ecclesiam de wiltona’, ‘Ecclesiam de Wiltona’, ‘Ecclesiam de wiltoni’ and ‘Ecclesiam de Wilton’ in the reign of William; it is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Wilmou K.’).

Wulton Kirkstyle (wul’-in-kirk-stil) n. former street name in Wilton Parish, recorded on the 1841 census. It is probably another name for Wulton Lane.

Wulton Kirkyaird Entry (wul’-in-kirk-yard-en’-ree) n. another name for Wulton Lane (also called just Kirkyaird Entry).

Wulton Lodge

Wulton Lane (wul’-in-lan) n. Wilton Lane, running between Commercial Road and Princes Street, formerly known as Kirkyard Entry because it ran past Old Wilton Churchyard. There are no addresses on this street, although there was once a joiner’s yard there.

Wulton Lodge (wul’-in-luj, -luj) n. name of the mansion within the Park, and also formerly the name of the estate it occupied, called Langlands before about 1790. The walls of a much older fortified house were discovered in the grounds behind. The Hearth Tax was paid in 1694 for 6 hearths there. Tax was paid on 10 windows there in 1748. The current house may have been started in the 18th century, although it was remodelled in 1859 (the date on the house), when an extra storey and bow windows were added. Apart from modern heating, lighting etc., and the addition of the Scott Gallery, the house is much as it was in the late 19th century. It is currently a Category B listed building. A carved stone above the entrance has the monogrammed letters ‘DMP’ for David and Mary Pringle, the last private owners, with a lower stone bearing half of the Pringle and Anderson coats of arms, with the motto ‘Sursum corda’ (‘lift up your heart’). On the gable overlooking the War Memorial there are also two biblical texts. The estate was for centuries known as Langlands and had encompassed the entire western half of the modern Wilton. The earliest recorded owner is Thomas de Charteris in the mid-13th century. It was granted to the Langlands family in 1451, who owned it for over 300 years. Unfortunately all the early charters relating to the property have been lost. It passed to Thomas Elliot in 1783, then to Lord Napier in 1790. James Anderson purchased it in 1805, and had the Avenue created around 1810. His daughter married David Pringle, and it was the Pringle family home until the Burgh purchased its 107 acres in 1889 for £14,000. The boundaries of the estate were first ridden on the Saturday of the Common Riding in 1890 (this followed by refreshments and some speeches and singing outside the Lodge were the only official marking of the new public purchase of the estate). It was used as a private school from about 1892–98, then remained unoccupied for a few years while the Council contemplated many suggestions for its use. Finally it was converted into the town’s Museum in 1910, when the Archaeological Society’s extensive collection was moved there. A 25 foot captured German field gun was positioned there in 1920, but moved in WWII. A stone ball found on the grounds is now in the Museum. The nearby grounds contains several items of interest: the Wallace Thorn memorial; an old well; stonework from the Buccleuch Memorial; the Burgh coat-of-arms from the Corn Exchange; a carved stone verse from Linden Park House; the ‘Glorious Dead’ War Memorial; the Fountain; the waterfall; the Guthrie Memorial; etc. – ‘An’l’ll sing o’ bonnie Wilton Lodge And o’ the Wallace Thorn’ [GD].

Wulton Lodge Academy (wul’-in-loj-aw-kə-du-mee) n. private school, run by Rev. and Mrs. B. Brodie, which moved to Wilton Lodge in 1892, changing its name from the West End Academy. It taught both sexes as day pupils and boarders, including some pupils from abroad. There were several assistant teachers, some of whom were foreign. The school closed in 1898, and whether it moved to another location is uncertain.

Wulton Lodge Gate Lodge (wul’-in-loj-gā’-loj, -luj-, -luj) n. gate lodge house for Wilton Lodge, at the entrance to the Avenue and the foot of Roadhead. It was built in the mid-19th century, with a west extension added in the early 20th century.

Wulton Lodge Park (wul’-in-loj-pawrk) n. proper name for the Park.

Wulton Lodge Stables (wul’-in-loj-stā-bulz) n. former building behind (i.e. to the north of) the Museum, part of the estate of Wilton Lodge. It was situated at the top of the access road, essentially on the site where the Park-keeper’s house was later built. Probably built in the 19th century, the building is already marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map. It had an unusual design, consisting of 3 parts, with the central section having an ‘onion-shaped’ roof. It was used by a riding school, as stabling for the Mosstroopers’ Club and as finally as Parks Department storage. As well as stables, the building contained a house, which was last occupied in 1938, by the Cranston family. The entire construction was demolished in the 1950s. It can be seen in the background of several photographs of Wilton Lodge, but there are and no good images of the house itself. It was painted from memory by Walter Cranston and was the inspiration for an exhibition by local artist Andrew Cranston in 2013.

Wulton Lodge Witterfaa (wul’-in-loj-wi’-ur-faw) n. name sometimes used for the picturesque waterfall on the Cala Burn behind Wilton Lodge, also referred to by local residents as just ‘the Witterfaa’. It was partly created by quarrying activity (and hence is artificial), with some of the stone being used for the rebuilding of the Lodge itself.

Wulton Lodge (wul’-in-luj) n. alternative name for Wulton Lodge – ‘It’s a nice bit, Wultan Ludge’ [ECS], ‘Oo’ve a pairk in Wultan Ludge That e’en Fairyland nicht grudge’ [TK].

Wulton Mains (wul’-in-mānz) n. former name for the lands attached to the Manse of Wilton Church, also known as Wultan Glebe and sometimes ‘the Mains of Wilton’.

Wulton Manse (wul’-in-mans) n. former Manse of Wilton Church, at 6 and 7 Mansfield Square. The original building was on the site of the Railway Station, specifically where the railway tank was later built, adjacent to the area known as ‘the Wilderness’, and with a small stream passing nearby. It was built around the 1780s, but probably replaced an earlier building on the same site; tax was paid on 18 windows in this earlier building in 1748. When it was demolished some of the stone was used to build the upper house in Wilton Crescent (nearest to Mayfield Lodge). The new manse was erected by the railway company in 1849 on ‘the Haugh’, i.e. the flatter land nearer the river. For several decades water was piped to it from the ‘Cadger’s Well’. Before the council bought the surrounding land in the 1870s it was the only house in the area. The house survives and has been split into flats. It is a grade C listed building. When this land was sold a new Manse was built at Wilton Hill in 1880, standing near where Melrose Court is now. This has long since been demolished. The house at Fenwick Park known as ‘The Elms’ was used as the Wilton Church Manse from 1945–89. The most recent Manse is on Wilton Hill Terrace.

Wulton Mill (wul’-in-mil) n. flour mill in Wilton, marked on Wood’s 1824 map on the east side of the foot of Wilton Path, and just to the south-west of Roughheugh Mill. It should not be confused with ‘Wulton Mills’. It may also have been known as Roughheugh Mill at times.

Wulton Mill Cauld (wul’-in-mil-kawld) n. name sometimes used for the weir at the bottom of Dovecote Street, feeding water to the mill lade that came out at Mansfield.

Wulton Mills (wul’-in-milz) n. Dickson & Laings main mill in the middle of Commercial Road (Nos. 31 and 32), with its distinctive clock tower, which is listed. The buildings were built in 1810–15, with the original mill being 46 feet long and 36 feet wide. The first spinning jennies in Hawick driven by water were introduced here, as well as the first power-loom in 1830. A major new mill lade constructed in 1827–28. The mill was powered by 2 huge water wheels (installed by Gideon Scott and James Melrose), supplemented by a steam engine in 1831. The mill can be seen on a sketch made around 1830. The factory was mostly destroyed by a fire in 1867, but rebuilt in 1869, and extensively altered over the years. In 1871 the workforce was estimated at 600 and the mill made 400,000 pounds of goods annually. The clock tower was constructed about 1877. The firm struggled, and by 1908 had closed, with the buildings put to other uses. Part was sold to the Scottish Tweed & Woollen Company, and other parts used by Mactaggart Bros., as a joiner’s yard, garage etc. There were local authority workshops and offices there, the buildings being upgraded in 1979–83. However, the mill was mostly empty from this time. Into the late 20th century, behind the main building, it was still possible to see part of the old mill lade of Wilton Dam (which once marked the boundary of the Common Haugh), as well as a pit for the former mill wheel. It was a grade B listed building, but nevertheless part was demolished in 2014 and the remainder in 2016. The mill lade and wheel-pit were filled in and the site was developed as an Aldi supermarket.

Wulton Pairish (wul’-in-pä-reesh, -paw-) n.

Wilton Parish, which has always been separate from Hawick Parish, generally lying to the north side of the Teviot. Around the time of the Reformation the boundary on the east was the Howden Burn, while on the west it stretched almost to the head of the Borthwick valley, with a detached part of Hassendean Parish splitting it in two between the Roberton and Harden Burns. The southern boundary of the Parish was essentially the Borthwick and Teviot, with the Ale bounding it to the north. For centuries the western part of the parish was served by a small church at Kirk Borthwick. The unsatisfactory state of affairs resulting in the suggestion in 1650 of moving the main Kirk to the Borthwick. In 1678 the rents of the parish were valued at £5672 in Roxburghshire and £700 in Selkirkshire. In 1678 it was valued at £5672. In more modern times, for ecclesiastical purposes, part of the Parish was attached to St. Margaret’s quoad sacra church in 1896, another part to Wilton South in 1929 and a further part to Burnfoot in 1951. The ecclesiastical boundaries of Wilton Parish were set at a Presbytery meeting in 1930. The Parish had small schools at Clarilaw, the Dean and Stouslie. Wilton Path has long been the main thoroughfare through the heavily inhabited part of the Parish, as well as part of the road from Hawick to Edinburgh. Ecclesiastically the Parish was long in the Presbytery of Jedburgh, and synod of Merse and Teviotdale, and formerly in the Diocese of Glasgow from about 1100 (and earlier attached to Durham, and before that Lindisfarne). Heritors minutes books exist from November 1740 and Parochial Board minute books from 1853–95 are in the Borders Archive. The Session records start in 1694 and are fairly complete. However, the register of births is quite irregular (e.g. a gap 1699–1702 and spotty in the 1790s), there are no early death registers, and marriages are only recorded through the proclamation of banns. Minute books of the heritors start in 1723. Note there are also Wilton Parishes in Berwickshire, Wulton Park (wul'-in-park) n. another name for Wulton Lodge Park or the Park.

Wulton Park Road (wul'-in-park-rôd) n. the road behind Wulton Lodge Park, which was only named in 1971 when private bungalows were built on some of the former allotments near the Walled Gardens. There has been more development in the subsequent years.

Wulton Peth (wul'-in-peth) n. Wilton Path, more commonly known as the Peth – ‘Now aw wad compare that, wi’ a shop in Hawick That was in Wulton Peth, at the fit ...’ [AY].

Wulton Place (wul'-in-plis) n. lost street, named about 1850 and incorporated into Princes Street in 1971. It ran from Dickson Street to the foot of Havelock Street and once contained the Wilton branch shop of the Hawick Co-op, as well as the Railway Hotel. The name only applied to the block on the north side (e.g. on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map), with the block on the south side always known as Princes Street.

Wulton Place North Bar (wul'-in-plis-north-bawr) n. toll-bar situated at Wulton Place, probably another name for the Dovemount Toll (this name recorded in the 1841 census).

Wulton Roadheid (wul'-in-rôd-heed) n. alternative name for Roadheid.

Wulton Roadside (wul'-in-rôd-siôd) n. 18th and 19th century name for what became Princes Street. Also known as just ‘Roadside’.

Wulton Schuil (wul'-in-skil) n. school that has existed in Wilton since about the time of the Reformation. The old primary school was built in 1847–8 at what became No. 36 Princes Street, across from the Old Church. It has an open colonade in the playground and an enormous external staircase. This was once the Parish School of Wilton, and was considerably enlarged when the new public school system was introduced. The original school had been between the old Kirk and Manse (roughly near the modern entrance to the Leisure Centre car park), with a small stream (now piped underground) passing by. There was a nearby willow tree there, which effectively served as the gymnasium for the children. The old schoolmaster’s house in the mid-19th century consisted of one room plus a kitchen; its site later became the railway booking office. These buildings were probably the ones erected in 1762 at the same time as the Kirk was rebuilt; the school there is marked on Wood’s 1824 map. There were more than 110 pupils there in the 1830s. In the mid-19th century the infant school part was located separately, off Wilton Crescent. The School Board took over running the school in 1872. Until well into the 20th century the school took pupils up to the statutory leaving age of 14. A new school was built on the grounds of old Wellfield House in 1974/5, incorporating a wing for children with special needs. At that time the old school became used for special and community education purposes, referred to as Wulton Centre, and is a grade C listed building. School Inspectors’ Reports for 1860–1955 are in the National Archives. Schoolmasters include: Robert Wilson, in at least 1720–44; Samuel Irvine, 1760s; Robert Stuart, 1780s; James Elliot, late 1700s until c.1810; James Turnbull from c.1810; Andrew Hogg, from 1833; and James Blain, from c.1846 – ‘Aw wis just a lad at Wulton skuil Juist a wee bit fella When ma mother broke the news ‘Oor gaun tae Portabella’’ [AY].

Wulton Sooth (wul'-in-sooth) n. Wilton South Church, built on Commercial Road in 1894–95 to replace the ‘Ern Kirk’ which had been used by the United Presbyterian congregation of Wilton for the previous few years. The congregation was formed out of East Bank U.P. Church in 1886 (with other members from Orrock and Allars Kirks). They were gifted the pre-fabricated building by the congregation of Craigmore, Rothesay about 2 years later. The first men to preach were Dr. William Boyd and William G. Macfee, and the first ordained minister was Malcolm Smith, although he tragically died in his second year. The ‘Ern Kirk’ had to be abandoned in 1893 and for over a year the congregation met in the Temperance Hall. The new building was designed by J.P. Alison along with Glasgow architect James Chalmers. It was an elegant red sandstone structure, constructed on a narrow and sloping site, using stone from Longtown Quarries. It became St. Margaret’s and Wilton South in 1940, after merging with St. Margaret’s. The church closed in 1987, was abandoned by the new owner and was demolished in 2001–02 after becoming unstable. A stained glass window, ornate chimney pots and weather vane were salvaged. The congregation merged with St. George’s West, now Tievot Church. A roll of the ministry is: Malcolm Smith 1890–91; James W. Shannon 1892–

Wulton Terrace (wul'-in-te-ris) n. lost street name, which contained the ‘Brick Houses’ and was incorporated into Wilton Crescent in 1869.

Wunter (wu-tur) n. (Winter) Robert (19th C.) brewer in Hawick, who took over from John George King in the 1860s.

the Wunter Fair (thu-wun-tur-fur) n. Hawick’s winter fair in the 17th to 19th centuries, taking place in early November, often on the 8th. The holding of this market was a legal right of the Baron (latterly the Duke of Buccleuch). It was essentially a repeat of the May Hiring Fair (although not as extensive), with stalls etc. in the Sandbed and along the High Street. The market would run from 9 a.m. and finish at 2 p.m. It is recorded taking place on 28th October in 1675. It stopped happening in the late 19th century, although it was probably a continuation of the annual fair, which happened in late October from early times. It was during one such fair in the 1660s that the Regent Moray captured several thieves in Hawick. In the early 18th century there was also one year where there was a riot after the County officers tried to impose a tax during the fair, and a similar event later when the Officers of the Duke of Buccleuch tried to extract a tax and a riot broke out. In the mid-18th century there was a large fight at the event between the Lochmaben and Yetholm gypsies.

wunters (wu-turz) n., pl. winters. There are records and memories of several severe winters over the years. Sheep, cattle and horses suffered in great snowstorms in 1615, 1633 and 1665. The storm of early 1674 was particularly harsh (‘The Thirteen Drifty Days’), wiping out many flocks. Another storm of the 17th century was known as ‘The Blast o Mairch’. The winters of 1709, 1740 and 1772 were also severe. Many thousands of sheep and nearly 20 Border shepherds perished in a snowstorm of early 1794, ‘the Gonal Blast’, which began on January 23rd (described by the Ettrick Shepherd). A storm in 1795 never ceased for a week. Around this time the flocks were sometimes herded to lower farms in Annandale, which were largely free of snow. The storm of 1803 claimed the lives of at least 2 shepherds. A great snowstorm of 1809 held up the mail coach between Hawick and Edinburgh for 10 days. 1813/4 was also a severe winter. The winter of 1822/23 was particularly harsh, with snow lasting from December 20th until February 9th, and snowbanks of 6–10 ft in town. The winters of 1831, 1836/7, 1854/5, 1859/60, 1860/1, 1878/9, 1885/6, 1880/1 and 1895 are also recorded as being severe in the Borders. The storm of late 1859 was quite devastating to sheep, because it came on so unexpectedly, and the winter of 1860 was particularly calamitous for sheep in the whole of the Ettrick Forest, where lambs were destroyed to save the strength of their mothers. Other harsh winters on record in Hawick include 1900 (when there was still snow lying until May), November 1901 (when there was a storm of rain, which turned into sleet and then snow, with huge gusts of wind, doing great damage about 1400 feet), 1903 (when there is a photo of people playing ‘shinty’ on the Teviot), 1917/18, 1937 (spring), 1940 (January, with the Dean Burn waterfall frozen), 1941 (New Year, the quickest freeze-up in living memory), 1947, 1962/3, and 1981.

wutch (wuuch) n. A witch – ‘Mossy haughs where ‘wutches’ flit Primrose glades where artists sit …’ [TK], ‘… It needs na a wutch to tell How the blessing wad come to oorsel’ [FL].

wutchcraft (wuuch-krawft) n. Witchcraft. There were bouts of frenzied panic among the public in the Middle Ages, where individuals were seized upon as being witches and put on trial or killed by superstitious mobs. The victimisation of eccentrics in this way did not end till well into the 18th century. Fortunately Hawick seems to have been among the more rational towns. Although there are many records of people being accused of witchcraft in Scotland in the 16th and 17th centuries, there is no evidence that anyone was locally found guilty of being a witch or killed as a result of such accusations. In 1641 one of the Bailies was found guilty of attacking a woman after accusing her of witchcraft upon a deceased child and on his wife. In 1644 the Burgh Records show that Janet Scott was accused of being a witch and had to promise to present herself to the Justice-General. Suggesting someone was a witch was considered an extremely serious offence, and there are other cases of people being fined or sentenced to the stocks for such behaviour in the 17th century. ‘Tranty-fit’ and ‘Speed o fit’ are two sisters who are supposed to have lived near Goldielands and said to have been witches. Strong and independent women were often rumoured to be witches, e.g. Janet Beaton, wife of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, Jean the Ranter and Jean Hall in more recent times. The wife of Rev. James Ker, covenanter and former minister of Abbotsrule, was accused of witchcraft (but ‘most unjustly’) in the 1680s. Nearby communities appear to have succumbed more easily to superstition, with the execution of witches said to have taken place last at Spittal-on-Rule. There are certainly records of 25 people being accused of being witches in Jedburgh, with the peak year being 1649. In 1628 ‘Issobell Howetsone’, in Riddell and ‘Katharine Leithame’ were tried in Selkirk.

In 1629 the J.Ps. of Selkirkshire were given permission to try 9 people for witchcraft. The accounts of the Chamberlain of Scott of Buccleuch contain an entry for ‘a commission for burning of witches in Eckfurd’ in 1650. Selkirk also burned to death Agnes Lawson for witchcraft in 1660 and Jean Taylor, wife of James Scott, teacher at Selkirk School, was held for witchcraft, but released in 1662. A legend spoken of in the 19th century tells of the wife of the Schoolmaster called Brown drowning him with the help of her associates, who cavorted drunkenly in the grounds of the Abbey. There are records of a similar number of accusations and trials in Selkirk, including at least 2 women from Lilliesleaf, and the wife of the junior school teacher in Selkirk in 1662. Langholm used to drown its witches at a place called the ‘Grieve’, possibly at the confluence of the Ewes with the Esk. Local methods used to ward off the effects of witchcraft include affixing branches of the rowan or alderwood to stables, etc., tying scarlet thread to the horns of cattle and carrying around an ear of wheat. An article on tales of local witches, written by ‘A.M., Hawick’, appeared in the Edinburgh Magazine of 1820; it contains a story about the Devil cavorting with witches at Allanhaugh, among other anecdotes. A tale is told (in the 1914 ‘Highways and Byways of the Border’, repeated from the 1820 article) of an old woman in Teviotdale (no specific location given) who was believed to have appeared as a grey-hound trying to rescue the heart of a horse (which died as a result of witchcraft) from the fire, and was later herself burned in the same fire when she failed to recite the Lord’s Prayer.

Wutch Craigs (wu-chew-krægzh) n. Witch Craigs, small craggy area to the west of Kirkton, lying roughly between Sunnyside farm and Kirkton Hill. It reaches a height of 254 m (the origin of the name is unknown).

Wutches Camp (wu-chewz-kawmp) n. Former place name somewhere to the east of Crumhaugh Hill. A decorated spindle whorl found here is in the Museum, and this is the only known reference to the name. It was described in 1856 as an ‘amulet or charm found near the head of the Loan, at a spot called the Witch’s Camp’, and said to be made of sandstone with runes.

wutches-gait (wu-chewz-gāt, wi-chewz-gāt) n., arch. The offspring of a witch, used contemptuously or tauntingly – ‘Margaret Oliver was fined 50/s for calling Isabell Scott, witchsgait and saying that she devoured her awine child.

Wyhenes (wheenz) n. John (13th/14th C.)
recorded as 'John del Wyhenes' on the inquest of 1303/4 for inheritance of the half barony of Wilton. It seems reasonable to suppose that he was a local man, like the others. Note that he is separate from John (or perhaps Henry) Whames, who was also on the jury. It is possible that his lands were Weens, but there are probably other possibilities.

Wylie (wii-lee) n. Elizabeth (16th C.) holder of a particate of land on the north side of the public street according to Hawick's 1537 Charters. Her name is given as 'Bessie [or Besses] Weile'. John (17th C.) resident at Leaungh in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. His surname appears to be written 'weillij'. Margaret (16th C.) joint tenant, along with Margaret Oliver, in the part of the lands of Wylie's Hill in Jedforest, according to a rental roll of 1541. It may be that she was connected to the family who gave their name to this farm. Her name is recorded as 'Mergrete Wyle'.

Rev. Robert (17th/18th C.) son of Thomas, minister of Kirkcudbright. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1668, and became tutor to the Douglasses of Cavers. He was tutor at Ochiltree in 1676 and governor for Francis Lord
Wylie’s Dub

Semple in 1678. In 1679 he was imprisoned for several weeks in Glasgow (presumably as part of the Revolution). He went overseas with some of his pupils, but returned to go on trial before the General meeting of Presbyterians of 1687. He was ordained at Wheathope in 1690 and became minister at Yarrow. That same year he was a member of the General Assembly and also the Commission for Visiting Schools. He was presented to Ashkirk Parish in 1690 and ordained there in 1691. There is a letter of 1691 from ‘R. Wylie, Wooll, to Tarra’ (i.e. to Scott of Harden) saying that he hopes the Rev. Shiel could be kept in the area by offering him Wilton Parish until Robertson is re-erected. He was a member of the General Assembly in 1692 and translated to Hamilton in that year. He was still alive in 1709. Mr. ?? (19th C.) Schoolmaster at Minto. He took over from William Grant, who had given the school a very strong reputation, and went on to become minister of Minto Parish in 1840.

Ninian ‘Ringan’ (16th C.) recorded in 1544 on a list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. He is listed as ‘Ranyon Wille of Wylyeshill’, among Olivers of Jedforest and others, although it is unclear where his lands were. William (17th C.) tenant in Belses who was among the men declared as fugitives in 1684 for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. William (17th C.) cottar at Appletreehall according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. His surname appears to be written ‘Willie’.

William (b.c.1800) from Fife, he was a tailor at Commonside Bankhead in 1841, 1851 and 1861. His wife was Agnes and their children included Janet, William, Helen, Nichola and Mary (also spelled ‘Wyllie’).

Wylie’s Dub (wi-leez-dub) n. former name for the area immediately east of what is now Beaconsfield Terrace, forming part of the northern boundary of the Common at Myreslawgreen. It belonged to Bailie Turnbull at the time of the Division. Roughly the same piece of land may be recorded in Hawick’s first existing sasine, when Alexander Scott sold it to James Scott. It is mentioned in the 1767 description of the boundaries of the Common (when it belonged to Bailie Turnbull) and is marked on Wood’s 1824 map (variously referred to as ‘Willyes Dub’ and ‘Weylys Dub’, or just ‘the Dub’, it is ‘Weylys Dub’ in 1767; it may be the same as ‘Bridgehaugh’; it was presumably marshy at one time).

Wylie’s Hill (wi-leez-hill) n. lands in Jedforest listed being valued at 25 shillings in the Exchequer Rolls in 1538 and 1539. In 1541 part of the lands were tenanted by Margaret Oliver and Margaret Wylie, paying 25s yearly, another part by Margaret Oliver, paying 12s 6d yearly and a last part by Robert Oliver, paying 12s 6d yearly. It is possible that the farm was named shortly before this period and connected to the family of this same Margaret Wylie. ‘Wille of Wylleshill’ was recorded in 1544 along with many Olivers and others from Jedforest, but it is unclear exactly where his lands were (it is ‘Wylrishill’ in 1538 and 1539 and ‘Wyleishill’ in 1541).

Wyltoun (wil-toon) n. variant of Wulton, recorded in a document of 1453 involving Milingston and Wester Heap.

Wynd (wînd) n. a narrow, often twisting road leading off a main street – ‘Auld Hawick my dreams are all of thee, Thy storied wynds and streets’ [RHL], ‘There’s a silence in the cobbled wynds . . . ’[JYH], ‘What though at times the moorland mist Creeps up by wynd and street’ [RSC], ‘The mirth o’ the glen and the warmth o’ the shieling Are brought to the wynds o’ the grey toun again’ [WL].

the Wynd (thu-wînd) n. informal name for the Kirk Wynd – ‘And Jess McVeetie offered, up the Wynd, The grandest sticky taffee in the town’ [WL]. In earlier times the same name may have applied to what was known as Horsleyhill’s Wynd and became Walter’s Wynd – ‘John Scott smith in ye Wynd’ [PR1718].

the Wynd (thu-wînd) n. street in Denholm, leading off the west side of the Green towards Denholm Mill. The local fire brigade used to be based here.

the Wynd (thu-wînd) n. lane that runs from Lilliesleaf village directly down to the Ale Water.

Wyndburgh (wind-bu-ru) n. alternative spelling for Windburgh, a hill near the head of the Slitrug valley.

Wyndburgh (wind-bu-ru) n. racehorse, trained locally by Ken Oliver. The horse was well-known for coming in the top 4 in the Grand National on 4 separate occasions (2nd in 1957, 4th in 1958, 2nd again in 1959 and again in 1962). Most famously it managed to hold on to 2nd place in 1958, 2nd again in 1959 and again in 1962). Most famously it managed to hold on to 2nd place in 1959, with jockey Tim Brookshaw effectively riding the end of the race bareback after his stirrup leather broke at Bechers. The horse was retired at Hassendeanbank along with its beloved friend, a donkey.

Wyndheid (wînd-heed) n. former name for an area in Hawick. It may have referred to the top of the Kirk Wynd, or the top of what became Walter’s Wynd, or perhaps both.
Wyndheid

Wyndheid (wind-heed) n. nickname of several Scotts around the early years of the 18th century, presumably all of the same family, including Archibald, George, John, Robert and Walter.

Wyndis see Weens

Wynzehope (win-zup) n. former name for lands in Glenkerry on Tim a Water. These were exchanged in 1415 for Bellendean by Robert Scott of Rankilburn, with the monks of Melrose Abbey. This is probably the same as the modern ‘Winghope’ on the eastern side of the Tim a valley (written ‘wynzehope’ in 1415).

the Wyoming Silver Challenge Cup (thu-wi-amin-sil-vur-chaw-linj-kup) n. trophy presented by Wyoming Hawick Exiles Club in 1909 and competed for in 1 mile relay race at the Common Riding Games. The Wyoming callants also contributed $15 for a horse racing or other event in 1910, and as a result the American handicap was renamed the Wyoming Handicap.

wyre (wi-ur) n. a wire (note the triphthong).

the Wyre Brig (thu-wir-brig) n. former light footbridge over the Slitrig opposite St. Mary’s Church, indicated in a painting of 1813. This could be the ‘Wooden Bridge at Kirk Wynd Foot’ recorded

wyre-worm (wi-ur-wurm) n., arch. a kind of grub that attacks grain – ‘Wire-worm, A sort of crustaceous grub, of a yellowish color, which destroys grain by eating the stalks underground, viewed as another name for Cut-worm, Teviotd.’ [JoJ].

Yair (yār) n. house a few miles north of Selkirk, overlooking the Tweed. It was originally built around 1580 by the Kers, this branch holding the hereditary office of coroners of Selkirkshire. They are buried in Melrose Abbey with the inscription ‘Here lies the race of the House of Zair’. The lands were Crown lands from about 1456, assigned to William Ker from at least 1476 and passing to his son William in the 1490s. They were still Crown lands in 1502. In 1494/5 John Scott in Tushielaw was allowed to ‘compone’ for crimes including stealing 60 sheep, 3 oxen, 4 cows and another 20 sheep from there. In 1535 Robert Scott of Allanhaugh was found not guilty of stealing 200 sheep from here (among other crimes). It was still Crown land in 1541, occupied by Thomas Ker, paying £40 yearly. The estate was acquired by the Ruthven family in 1736 and then went to the Pringles. The name is used for the estate and surrounding area, which once covered about 4 miles along the banks of the Tweed. The nearby bridge over the Tweed dates from 1760; it was built as part of the turnpike road from Selkirk to Edinburgh and would have been on the main route from Hawick to Edinburgh until about 50 years later. The lands were sold by Pringle of Whytbank to the Duke of Buccleuch in 1758, but the house was reacquired by Alexander Pringle of Whytbank in 1784 and rebuilt in 1788/9. Robert Horsburgh lived there in the 1790s – ‘From Yair which hills so closely bind, Scarce can the Tweed his passage find. Though much he fret, and chafe, and toil ’Till all his eddying currents boil’ [SWS], ‘O, the vale o’ the Tweed is bonny Frae Yair to auld Elibank . . . ’[FL] (formerly written ‘le Yar’, ‘le Yare’, ‘Yaire’, ‘Yhare’, ‘Yhair’, ‘Zar’, ‘Zare’, etc.).

yaird (yärd) n. a yard, piece of enclosed ground attached to a building – ‘oo yaised ti play in the yaird ahint the Store’, ‘. . . ane tenement of land bak and fore with the yaird thairof liand in Hawik’ [SPB1579], ‘Item, giff any nicks, land, or wumin should be administered after ye gathering in of ye corn to ye farm yeards’ [PR1640], ‘. . . to see auld Duvait’s heidstane In a likk o’ St. Mary’s Yaird’ [DH], a yard of length, i.e. 12 inches (note that yird is also used; also spelled ‘yeard’ etc.; in earlier centuries a ‘yard’ might also be used to mean a square yard and hence was used as a unit of area).

the Yaird Back (thu-yärd-bawk) n. alternative name sometimes used for the Back o the Yairds.

Yair Hoose see Yair

Yairside (yä-ruel-säd) n. former variant of Earlside, presumably reflecting the common pronunciation in the 17th century.

yairm (yärm) v., arch. to whine, wail.

yairn (yärn) n., arch. yarn – ‘. . . And the yairns whusl throwe the hecks’ [WL].

yaise (yäz) v. to use – ‘yaise yer een wumman’, ‘deh yaise yer sleeve is a hankie’, ‘John Broon yaised ti make an sell spunks’ [RM], ‘That a man or wumin should be sae misguided as tae yase the occasion for a debauch shouldna bei laid at ye gathering in of ye corn to ye farm yeards’ [PR1640], ‘. . . to see auld Duvait’s heidstane In a likk o’ St. Mary’s Yaird’ [DH], a yard of length, i.e. 12 inches (note that yird is also used; also spelled ‘yeard’ etc.; in earlier centuries a ‘yard’ might also be used to mean a square yard and hence was used as a unit of area).
tones (not clearly distinct from English, but noted by E.C. Smith).

yare (vär) n., poet. ready, alert – ‘Yeoman yare and baron bold’ [HSR].

Yarrow (ya-ro, -ri) n. village situated on the Yarrow Water, with a church dating from c.1642 built by the Covenanters, and an early Christian stone nearby dating from the 5th or 6th centuries. Also the name for the surrounding parish of Selkirkshire, bounded on the south by Ettrick Parish and to the east by Selkirk. The ancient name of the parish was St. Mary’s of the Lowes. The Parish was once quite extensive, but lost portions to Caddonfoot and Kirkhope in the mid-19th century. The area around there is known for its beauty, as well as for its battles, and is featured in many ballads – ‘Yarrow’s dowie dens may be Graced wi’ elfish fantasy’ [TK], ‘The Border lass sings it in strains sweet tho’ sad’, On the banks of the Ettrick or Yarrow’ [WS] (perhaps from Galeic for ‘rough’; it was formerly sometimes ‘Jarrowe’ and similar; it is ‘Yarrow’ in 1426).

the Yarrow (thu-ya-ro, -ri) n. popular name for Yarrow Witter – ‘He told a tale that was common word With the Yarrow laird and the Ettrick herd’ [WHO].

Yarrow Kirk (ya-ro-, ya-ri-kirk) n. church in the Yarrow valley, serving the parish, which was amalgamated with St. Mary’s and Deuchar. In early times the parish was referred to as ‘the Forest’. Administration along with neighbouring parishes changed over the centuries, and in 1650 the former parish of Rankilburn was disjoined from Yarrow and annexed to Ettrick. The earliest church in the parish was the kirk of St. Mary’s of the Lowes, near the north end of St. Mary’s Loch. The first church in Yarrow village stood to the east of the present one, on a small stream (and may have been called Deuchar Chapel). The present church was built in 1640, altered in 1772, and with major renovations in 1826. It was gutted by fire in 1926, but restored. A sun-dial dating from 1640 is inscribed ‘Watch & Pray, ‘Time is short’. The parson in the 1290s was Edmund of Letham. Around 1484 the rector & Pray, Time is short’. The parson in the 1290s was Edmund of Letham. Around 1484 the rector was Alexander, brother of Patrick Murray of Falahill. James Scott was minister 1607–34, who was rebuked for drunkenness, ill-discipline, and non-residence. William Elliot (brother of Thomas in Borthwickshiels) was minister 1641–66 and 1679–80. John Rutherford (maternal great-grandfather of Sir Walter Scott) was minister there 1691–1710. Robert Russell (who married Agnes Turnbull from Hawick) was minister 1791–1847 and his son James afterwards. The minister used to receive four bolls of oatmeal annually from Hassendean, the origin of the payment being lost in time.

Yarrow Knowe (ya-ri-now) n. small hill in Liddesdale, to the south of Saughtree (it is unclear if the origin of the name is related to that of the river).

Yarrow Schuil (ya-ri-skil) n. another name for the old school at Linfit on Yarrow Water.

the Yarrow Stane (thu-ya-ro-stän) n. ancient Christian burial stone inscribed ‘here lie buried the two sons of liberalis’, dating from the 5th or 6th century, standing within a small enclosure beside Whitehope farm near Yarrow village. It is the possible location for the ballads ‘The Dowie Dens of Yarrow’ and ‘Willie’s Drowned in Yarrow’. 2 other uninscribed stones lie only a few hundred yards away, called ‘the Glebe Stone’ and ‘the Warrior’s Rest’.

Yarrow Terrace (ya-ro-te-ris) n. street in the Terraces built around 1898 by Hawick Working Men’s Building and Investment Company, and named in 1900 after the river Yarrow.

Yarrow Witter (ya-ro-wi’-ur) n. river that runs from St. Mary’s Loch to join the Ettrick about 2 miles west of Selkirk. It passes through the former Ettrick Forest, with a length of about 12 miles (20km). The first bridge over the river (near the village of Yarrow) was built around 1653, replaced in 1722, swept away in a flood of 1734 and replaced in the 1740s. James Russell wrote ‘Reminiscences of Yarrow’ (1886). The Yarrow valley has been popularised in the ballads ‘Mary Scott, Flower of Yarrow’ and ‘The Dowie Dens of Yarrow’ – ‘I dreimed a dreirie dreim last nicht; God keep us a’ frae sorrow! I dreimed I pu’d the birk sae green Wi’ my true love on Yarrow’ [T], ‘Tis better by far to leave publican’s bar, And doon by the Yarrow to stray’ [RF] (in the past the river was known as ‘Gierua’, ‘Gyrwa’, ‘Yarou’ and similar; in earlier times the name was sometimes written ‘Zarrow’; it derives either from the Gyruii tribe, of the Fens, who may have given their name to Jarrow in Tyneside, or more likely from the Gaelic for ‘rough stream’).

yate (yät) n., poet. a gate – ‘And when he cam to the fair tower yate, He shouted loud, and cried weel hie, Till out bespak auld Gibby Elliot – ‘Whae’s this that brings the fraye to me?’’ [T] (variant of yett).

yatter (ya’-ur, ya-tur) v. to chatter, talk incessantly – ‘what’s she yatterin on aboot now?’.
ye (thu) article, arch. form of `the', common in Burgh and Parish Records before the mid-18th century – ‘... for cutting of William Elliot, mercer, with ane sword in ye head’ [BR1669], ‘Accout of ye coelection and disbursements since ye death of Mr Alexr. Orrok, our minister, who deceased April 23d 1711’ [PR1711] (this form became common in print, because of the similarity of the letter ‘y’ to the Old English ‘thorn’ symbol for th; it was never pronounced yee).

ye (yee, yu) pron., arch., poet. you – ‘The streets ye ken when ye were bairns ...’ [WL], ‘Safe oot, Safe in’, my Border lads! And safely win ye hame’ [RSC], ‘Ye may ken I was born and bred i’ the Loan ...’ [DH] (this is often written, to conform with general Scots, even when the more common local pronunciation ee is meant).

yea see yeh

year (yeer) n. a year, note that the singular form is often used for the plural – ‘they were members for twal year’, ‘it was a few year ago’, ‘... aye, no e’en to Jean Rae, ma ain wife, for twae or thrie year after we were married’ [BCM1880], ‘It’s an awful lot mair than fifty year But aw’ll never forget ‘Foosty Broon’’ [AY], ‘I’ve lambed this fifty year or mair, and what I’ll tell ye’s true, I swear’ [TD].

Yeavering Bell (yee-ver-in-bel) n. peak in Northumberland National Park, above the village of Yeavering, west of Wooler (and not too far from Flodden), reaching a height of 1.182 ft (361 m). On its summit is one of the largest iron-age forts in the area, a tribal centre for the Votadini. Nearby was the palace of Edwin and other Northumbrian (and presumably therefore Hawick’s) Kings, until abandoned about 670 – ‘As the scornful words from the fair lips fell, A flush, like the red on Yeavering Bell When the mornig sun comes out of the south, Trembled and fluttered from brow to mouth’ [WHO] (the origin of the name could be p-Celtic).

Yeddie see Yedie

Yedie (ye-dee) n. formerly a local pet form of Adam – ‘Lockt in a box – but few may see – Is Eve’s first glance o’ wanton glee, Whilk dang puir Yeddie’s head agee ...’ [JoHa] (also spelled ‘Yeddie’; cf. Adie, Yiddie and Yid).

O’er moss an’ muir, an’ never grumble, Tho’ my auld yad should gie a stumble’ [BS], ‘Ma collar lay roond ma craigie as wan-reftil as branks an brec ham roond a yaud’ [ECS], ‘... For the Cornet’s lads Are sadding their yauds To follow the banner blue’ [TK], ‘While every Teri lad, Striddlin’ his gallant yaud ...’ [JEDM] (from Middle English; cf. the little-known English word jade and also yauld).

the Yaud (thu-yawld) n. local nickname in use in the early 19th century.

Yaud Linns (yawld-linz) n. former name for a narrow pass and waterfall near Langburnshiels, perhaps near where the road gets closest to the river between Shankend and Langburnshiels. Graptolites have been found in the black shale here (the origin is ‘linn’ meaning a narrow gorge, and it said the yaud comes from the resemblance to an old horse of a rock lying across the stream; it is ‘Yad Linn’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

yauld (yawld) adj., arch. alert, nimble, strong, vigorous, sprightly – ‘... As Fasteneven, for young and auld That day, seem mair than common yauld’ [JoHo], ‘And she lap sae yald, and spanged sae hich, Her rigging banes did rattle’ [JTe], ‘She was a yauld and willint bitch As ever lap ower hedge and ditch’ [JH], ‘Auld Britain’s sons are yet fu’ yauld, We trow they weel could bide a whuther’ [JoHa], ‘These men, stout and young and yauld as they were ...’ [HSR], ‘Masel’ an’ twae as yauld young fallows as ye wad hae seen ...’ [BCM1881], ‘Eh whow! the glamourie an’ twae as yauld young fallows as ye wad hae seen ...’ [JoHo], ‘And she lap sae yald, and spanged sae hich That ane sae dune, sae auld, Should, in a vesion o’ the nicht, Be young again, an’ yauld’ [ECB], ‘There are no ‘Yauld, bang fallows’ in a veesion o’ the nicht, Be young again, an’ yauld’ [ECB], ‘There are no ‘Yauld, bang fallows’ or ‘Muckle leash fallows’ now-a-days’ [JTu], ‘The air is frosty and the ground is cauld, But Davie’s heart is warm – his legs are yauld’ [HNo], ‘A wiry wee cratur and yauld. Wi’ his bundle and shears At the guidwife he speirs Gin we’re aa keepin’ clear o’ the cauld’ [WL] (also written ‘yald’; the origin is unknown).

yauldness (yawld-nis) n., arch. sprightliness, vigour – ‘... for a richt Nibbie has aye a kinmin’ o’ the yauldness o’ life left in’t’ [DH].

Yeoman (yō-nʊn) n. Janet (b.1805/6) from Tundergarth, she was housekeeper at Arkleton in 1851. She was a widow, staying at Arkleton Cottage with her daughter Mina.

The Yeomanry (thu-yō-nʊn-re) n. one of a number of volunteer cavalry forces, particularly those set up following the Yeomanry Act of 1794. Members were most often farmers, with landowners acting as officers. Troops of volunteer were active during the period of perceived danger of French invasion. The local troop was variously called the ‘West Troop of Yeomanry’ or ‘ Roxburghshire Gentlemen and Yeomanry Cavalry’. It was connected to the Lothian and Borders Horse, which was set up in 1797, with Sir Walter Scott as its first quartermaster. Such units were embodied several times during the Napoleonic Wars. They were cut back during the decades of peace, but occasionally used to deal with civil unrest. Lothian and Border Horse remained active through the late 19th century and many wealthier locals joined it on the outbreak of the First World War. Note that the Yeomanry was technically distinct from the Militia and the Volunteers, although all of their histories are intertwined and they were jointly the precursors of today’s Territorial army – ‘...Thus yeoman troops were raised to stand As bulwark to the Borderland’ [WHO].

Yetholm (ye-tum) n. parish and twin villages in south-eastern Roxburghshire. Town Yetholm and Kirk Yetholm are two parts of the settlement, across the Bowmont Water from each other, with Kirk Yetholm being slightly older. First mention of the village was around 1200. It was said that the Scottish noblemen killed at Flodden were buried in the churchyard here. The town was formerly known for its ‘baa’ and other games on ‘Fastern E’en’, like other Border towns. It was also once known as a centre for whisky smuggling. Kirk Yetholm was once the headquarters of the Faa gypsy royal family, from the 16th century until the last gypsy king died in 1902. There are several books about the local gypsies, including one by Hawick man Vic Tokely. Kirk Yetholm is the beginning (or end) of the Pennine Way – ‘Blithe April wandered through the glen, An’ ower the flank o’ Cheviot, An’ doon by Yetholm’s auld grey toon, An’ syne ti wimplin’ Teviot’ [WP] (probably from Old English ‘village at the pass’, ‘geat ham’; the name first appears around 1200 as ‘Yetham’, is ‘Zhetam’ in 1436 and does not attain its modern form until the 16th century).

Yetholm (ye-tum) n. William (13th/14th C.) Archdeacon of Dunblane from around 1309. He was known as ‘de Yetholm’ and was presumably from that area. He became Archdeacon of Teviotdale in 1320/1 and remained in this position until at least 1329.

Yethoose (yet-hooz) n. Yethouse, farm just to the east of Newcastleton. It could be the ‘Zaird-hous’ in that area recorded being possessed by Archibald Tailor in 1632. It has long been owned by the Duke of Buccleuch. In 1694 Thomas Robson (or Robison) paid the Hearth Tax there and is also recorded there in 1696 and 1697, when he was rebuked for working on a Sunday. Other residents recorded there in 1694 were John Elliot and Isobel Elliot. It was surveyed in 1718 along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties, when it was combined with ‘Noutlaires’ and consisted of 70 acres, bounded by Chingills, ‘Baxtongill’, Hillhouse, Tweeden Burn and a common on the west. The farm also shared a common of 116 acres with the neighbouring farms of Greens and Chingills. Robert Little was there in 1748. Mungo Armstrong was farmer there in 1797; his sons James and Francis are recorded on the Militia Lists in 1797 and 1801. James Armstrong was tenant from at least 1835 to 1851. The tenancy passed from Armstrongs to Alexander Temple Robson in the 1880s and there were Rutherfords there in the 1930s (spelling varies; it is ‘Gethous’ in 1694 and ‘Yeathouse’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

ym (thum, tham) pron., arch. former abbreviated form of ‘them’ – ‘... and the Session una voce agreed yt seeing it was ye first fault they should be sharpli rebuked before ym and that they engage to be observant of ye lord’s day in time coming’ [PR1712], ‘... and the Minister telling ym what sad punishment were under ye law implicated upon ym qho broke the Sabbath’ [PR1713].

the Y.M. (Thu-wi-em) n. Young Men’s Rugby Club, a ‘junior’ rugby team, nicknamed ‘the Reidkins’. Their strip consists of a scarlet shirt with red socks. They play at Mansfield Haugh, next to the Hawick R.F.C. ground. In 1964 they took over part of 32 Commercial Road as clubrooms. For a long time they played in the Border District League, but joined Division 5 (East) National League in 2000. One of the club’s highlights was winning the National League Division 4 title in 2004 as well as reaching the B.T. Bowl Final at Murrayfield. ‘Once a Redskin’ is a booklet of the club’s history.

yn (then) adv., arch. abbreviation for ‘then’ – ‘...of importing ...forraign cloths and stuffs ...qh was yn prohibit and discharged by proclamatione ...’ [BR1702].

yo (yo) interj., arch. emphatic positive, yes – ‘Oh, bit yo’ (meaning something like ‘yes I did’).

yoan see yon

Yogi Burns (yo-gee-burnz) n. nickname for a High School teacher of the mid-to-late 20th century.

yoint (yoin’) adv., prep., arch. along, further, beyond – ‘There yoint the waeter, lay Ancrum!’ [ECS], ‘Yoint the road, an bye the station, A crosst Jed Waeter’ [ECS], ‘Yoint the street’ [GW]. ‘Sit yoint!’ means ‘sit further along’ (cf. yont and ayoint).

yokatola (yo-ku-to-la) n. a train of sledgers or skaters, v. to slide as a yokatola – ‘... A’ve nither yokatolad Doon the Vertish Hill’ [IWL] (cf. yoke-a-tulie and other variants).

yoke-a-tulie (yo-ku-too-lee) n. a succession of skaters, each crouching down and holding on to the one in front, or a string of people with their sleds held together – ‘Yoke-a-tuillie = the mode of sliding on ice as a team and in a chain; a winter pastime familiar to all youthful Teries. Did ee ever hear the runmul o a yoke-a-tuillie doon the Loan skly?’ [ECS], ‘The yoke-a-tuillie gaed full nail doon the brae’ [ECS], ‘The yoke-a-tulie rankit up, And doon the Loan like fire’ [JT], ‘... A yoke-tully we made up, And doun the Loan did fly’ [WL] (the spelling varies; this is a peculiarly local phrase, perhaps restricted to Hawick alone, e.g. it is ‘tuckle’ or ‘tuckie’ in Selkirk; the meaning of the first part of the phrase is clear, while the second part is probably from ‘tulie’, meaning a squabbale or struggle, although it has also been suggested that it comes from the days of the turnpike toll, where one could get away with paying less by yoking carts together; see also yokatola and yokotolo).

yoka-tully see yoke-a-tulie

yoke on (yok-cau) v., arch. to tackle, attack – ‘Twa muckl hullies (lazy scamps) huv yokeet on um whan ei was comin hyimm i the derkneen’ [ECS], ‘The dog yokeit on the bit lassie’ [GW], ‘The rubber yokeit on ’im alang thon derk loan’ [GW], ‘There’s a twae-heidit mavis in Westmorland That sings at the brek o day; While the yin heid yokes on the airly worm The tother chants its lay’ [DH] (also yoke on o).

Young  (yung) n. Adam (17th C.) smith in Hawick. In 1685 he was fined by the Magistrates for fighting with fellow smith Hugh Elliot in the Kirk. They pulled each other’s bonnets off and threw them down. He may be the same Adam who was fined in his absence in 1685 for insulting the good name of Bailie Scott and his son John by claiming that they had reset the pease taken by some of the Royalist forces. He may be the Adam who in 1676, along with Alexander Hislop, was found guilty of using a ‘half-pecke ane inch short or thereby’. Adam (17th C.) resident of Denholm on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. Adam (17th C.) resident at Hassendeanbank according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the Adam recorded as a witness to a baptism in Roberton in 1680 (although crossed out). He was recorded at Hassendeanbank in 1690 when listed as someone owing money to the deceased Mark Turnbull and Bessie Kerr. Adam (b.1768/9) from Ashkirk Parish, he was farmer at Burnhead. He was already there in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’. He was listed as farmer at Burnhead among heads of households in Wiltown Parish in 1837–41. He was listed at Burnhead in 1841 and 1851, when he farmed 160 acres and employed 4 labourers. He lived there with his sister Margaret and was unmarried.

Rev. Adam (18th/19th C.) minister of Wiltown in the early 1800s. It is unclear precisely who he was, perhaps an assistant minister. He was listed as ‘Rev. A. Young. Burnhead’ on the subscription list for Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ (1825). Adam ‘Ad’ (d.1874) brother of Pin, son of Jamie and Jean Scott, left fatherless at an early age. He had a reputation for being saucy and sullen, was a skillful poacher and fisher, and also had a knowledge about herbal medicines. More cautious than his brother, he was nevertheless often in trouble with the law. He was found dead in the stables of the Victoria Hotel and is buried in the Wellogate – ‘Ad Young went to bed alive at night, and wakened a corpse next morning’ [T].

Adam (b.1814/5) from Ancrum Parish, he was farmer at Dunstane in Lilliesleaf Parish. He was still recorded at Dunstane in 1868. His wife was Margaret and their children included Margaret, Jessie, William, James and Adam. Alexander (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Marion Stewart and their children included Helen (b.1682) and Jane (b.1686). The witnesses to the 1682 baptism were William Purdom and George Young (possibly his brother). He could be the Alexander, son of James and Helen born in Hawick in 1653. It is possible that he is the same man as the Town Officer. Alexander (17th/18th C.) Hawick Town Officer. In 1696 the 2 Bailies ‘less confirmed the kirke bell ringing at even and morning’ in his hands (this being the new bell at St. Mary’s) as well as ‘the toum’s common deid bell’. He was Burgh Officer at the same time as Alexander Scott, and witnessed the baptism of two of Scott’s children in 1702 and 1705. In 1698 he was found to be due £4 Scots ‘for his last yeirs Common rydeing coat’, which is the first explicit mention of the ceremonial aspects of the Common Riding in the Burgh Records. In 1704 he was listed as ‘officer’ when he witnessed a baptism for wright Andrew Scott. In 1707 there was a new arrangement by which he should himself buy oil for the clock and bell-ropes, and in exchange ‘that he should pay nothing inward to the toune for tolling of the bell at landward burials’, i.e. he would keep those fees. He was ‘officer’ in 1714 when he witnessed a baptism for John Rae.

Andrew (16th C.) owner of 2 particates of land on the south side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. Andrew (d.bef. 1581) tenant in Langnewton. He is recorded as deceased in 1581 when his son and heir John resigned a husbandland in Langnewton to Patrick Dobson. Andrew (16th/17th C.) listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a Borders Commissioners’ court in Jedburgh in 1605. He was recorded as ‘Andro Young, sometime in Bernehillis’ Andrew (17th C.) tenant in Roughleeneuk in Southdean Parish according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. ‘Andrew younger’ who is also listed there seems like an error, perhaps meaning his son. He is surely related to John, Lyle and Ninian, who were at the same farm in 1669. Andrew (18th C.) recorded in Belses in 1788 when he had a court case in Selkirk with William Thompson in Yair over unpaid wages. Andrew (b.1818/9) from Oxnam, he was farm steward at Ashtrees in the 1850s. His wife was Mary, from Southdean Parish. Their children included John, Isabella, Margaret and Jane. Catherine (19th C.) milliner and dressmaker on the Howegate. She is listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. Daniel (d.1774) said to be buried in Castleton Kirkyard, according to ‘Monuments and monumental inscriptions in Scotland’. His gravestone bears the inscription ‘Oh reader, stay your car, and stay And read what I have here to say: You walk on earth as once did I, Remember you and all must die. For in my health I little thought My glass was run so near; But now the hour for me is come No longer to be here’.

David (16th C.) listed as ‘David Zong’ among the bailies of the Sheriff of Roxburgh on the Precept of Chancery (probably in 1532) for William Scott of Hassendean retaining his properties. David (16th C.) recorded in Hassendeanburn in 1580, when he acted as cautioner for Robert Scott of Alton when he borrowed money from the servant of Margaret Douglas, Countess of Bothwell. David (17th/18th C.) Hawick resident, recorded in 1707. He was fined for not appearing before the Magistrates to answer the charge that when he was before the Kirk Session ‘cited for immoralties’ he stated that ‘ther was some (as is alledged) in the said Sessione as guyltie as he was’. He is probably the merchant David who married Marion Newbie in Hawick in 1704 and whose children included John (b.1705), William (b.1707) and Marie (b.1708). In the 1708 baptismal record he was ‘hairbuyer in Hawick’. The witnesses in 1705 were Robert and Francis Rucastle and in 1708 were Bailie George Martin and gardener James Falsyde. David (19th C.) one of the first Deacons of the Evangelical Union (later Congregational) Kirk from 1848. David ‘Dave’ (1922–2008) Hawick born Bandmaster of the Saxhorn Band 1963–75. He played with the Salvation Army from an early age, and in the Navy during the War. He joined the local dance band the Dixie Seven and was briefly a professional musician with the Maurice Sheffield Dance Band, also being included on some dance band recordings. He played with the Methil Colliery Band and also conducted the Selkirk Silver, Jedforest Instrumental and Newtongrange Silver Bands. He was musical director for Hawick Amateur Operatic Society for 7 years and a founder member of the Borders Big Band. In addition to playing the cornet, he was an accomplished soloist on the flugel horn. He won the Best Instrumentalist Award at the Whitburn Entertainment Contest in 1997 and the soloist prize at the inaugural Borders Entertainment Contest in 2001. Douglas ‘Doug’ (b.1961) from Jedburgh, he was a member of the boxing club in Hawick. He worked on a farm, and joined the Hawick Amateur Boxing Club at age 16. He won the Scottish Heavyweight Championship in 1983 and the ABA British title in 1984. He represented Britain in the 1984 Olympics in Los Angeles and in 1986 he represented Scotland in the Commonwealth Games in Edinburgh, gaining a silver medal in the Heavyweight class. He turned professional in 1987 and had 7 fights. However, he then suffered horrendous injuries when struck by a motorcycle while labouring on the roads, ending his boxing career. He later worked as a sales manager in Jedburgh. Elizabeth nee Scott (b.c.1763) known as ‘Widow Young’ or ‘Bet Young’, she was the wife of William Young, blacksmith. She is probably the Betty Scott who married William Young in Hawick in 1785, and may be the Elizabeth born to Walter Scott in Yarrow Parish in 1759. She was known for dabbling in politics and for composing poetry, publishing ‘Songs and poems, on various subjects’ (1823) in Hawick. This contains 30 poems, many of them commemorating contemporary events, such as Waterloo, deaths in the royal family, Lord Minto’s return, etc. There are occasional Scots words, but mainly the poems are in English. It must have been unusual in those times to have women poets, and she seems likely to have been Hawick’s first who published anything. She is probably the elderly ‘Betty Young’ living with Martha Young on Walter’s Wynd at the 1841 census. Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (18th/19th C.) daughter of a Hawick blacksmith. She was recorded in 1818 claiming a ‘stolen child’, apparently taken at Hawick. She probably married someone called Smith, and her daughter Peggy Smith (who apparently later worked as a nurse to the Duchess of Buccleuch) is reported to have stolen a child herself. George (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 as ‘Georg Zoung’. Walter Scott of Buccleuch pledged to bring him before the next Justice- aire at Edinburgh. He had been captured by ‘Rinzeane of Rutherfurde, Hew of Douglace, and thare complices, furthe of Mynto toune’. Probably the same George in Minto was recorded in 1502 when he failed to appear at the Justice- aire, with William Turnbull of Minto as his surety; he was probably related to John and Robert, who were also recorded. It is probably also the same Thomas Young recorded in 1502 having had 14 geese stolen from him by Adam Grahamslaw. Probably the same George at ‘le crag de mynto’ was recorded in 1502 when Richard Rutherford in Littledean had remission for wounding him and stealing a series of items (including a horse, a waistcoat, a lance, a shield and a knife). George (16th C.) owner of a quarter particate of land on the south side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. He was one of the owners who was obliged to pay annual rents to James Blair. George (16th C.) resident of somewhere in Teviotdale. He was recorded in an English letter of 1542 as ‘one of the cheif setters forwardeis of all spoyles and robberyes’. The other man listed was Will Davidson, ‘oon of the Pringleis’. They robbed a village in England, but were intercepted on their return and 14 men captured. George (16th C.) farmer at Harwoodtown in the Rule valley. His barn and yard are listed in the 1562 document over disputed lands in the Barony of Feur- Rule. George (17th C.) tenant in Bedrule. He is listed as a fugitive in 1684, along with his brothers Robert and James and many other men, for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. George (17th C.) servant of George Gray, who was tenant at ‘Ruperlaw’ in Roxburghshire. This seems likely to be Raperlaw (but could conceivably be Ruber- slaw). He is listed in 1684 among men declared to be fugitives because of religious non-conformity. George (17th C.) dyer in Hawick who witnessed a sasine in 1687. Probably the same George witnessed baptisms for Margaret Purdom in 1684, for John Tinlin also in 1684 and for William Elliot in Hawick in 1687. He was also recorded as a dyer in 1689 when he witnessed a baptism for John Scott, ‘brother to Goldilands’ and as ‘lit- ster’ when he witnessed a baptism for weaver James Lunn. He was listed as ‘litister’ in 1688 when he witnessed a baptism for weaver John Stuart. He could be the George listed among those on the west-side of Hawick who paid the Hearth Tax in 1694. He may be the George, married to Janet Purdom, whose children born in Hawick included: Jane (b.1680); William (b.1682); Walter (b.1683); John (b.1685); and Margaret (b.1686). The witness to the 1680 baptism were Walter Gledstains (the Town Clerk) and John Purdom (the schoolmaster). He may be the George, son of James and Helen Martin, who was born in Hawick in 1650. It seems likely he is the George who witnessed a baptism for Alexander (possibility his brother) in 1682, as well as a baptism for a Mr. Reid in 1680. George (17th/18th
Young

C.) wright in North Synton. He married Margaret Lorraine and their children included Isobel (b.1703). George (d.c.1940) leader of the Hawick Home Mission choir. Helen (18th C.) listed as ‘Miss Nelly Young, Hawick’ in 1784 among the subscribers to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’. It is unclear how she was related to other Youngs. Helen ‘Nelly’ (18th C.) cook at Langlands in 1786, when she was working for Gilbert Elliot. Henry (1828/9–1907) gamekeeper at Harwood (on Rule) for many years, starting in 1885. He was responsible for much of the planting on the estate. He was born at Millhaugh, Oxnam Water, son of farm steward Robert and Maragret Riddell from the Lammermuirs. He worked for a while with Andrew Goodfellow, father of the Abbotrule forester. He married Isabella Hogg of Melrose with Andrew Goodfellow, father of the Abbotrule forester. He married Isabella Hogg of Melrose and their children were Robert (who emigrated to Toronto in 1873), William (who went to Canada and their children were Robert (who emigrated to Toronto in 1873), William (who went to Canada and their children included: George (b.1650); and Alexander (b.1653), who may be the Burgh Officer. James (17th C.) from Cavers Parish. He was ordered to be transported to America in 1679 for being a Covenantanter, and escaped the shipwreck in the Orkneys that killed about 200 men. Most of the escapees were recaptured and sold as slaves in Jamaica, but he was among a small number who were said to have managed to escape to Ulster. James (d.c.1687) tenant in Mervinslaw when his will was recorded in 1687. James (d.c.1695) servitor to Sir William Elliott of Stobs. His will is recorded in 1695. James (17th C.) cottar at Mackside in Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th C.) recorded among the poor of Has- sendeane Parish in 1694, when he was at Easter Grundestone. James (18th C.) recorded at West Burnfoot in Wilton Parish in 1724. He married Janet Clerk in 1713, the proclamations being made in Ashkirk and Minto Parishes. Their daughter Janet was baptised in Wilton in 1724, with witnesses Thomas Irvine and William Easton. James (18th/19th C.) mason and innkeeper recorded in Crawknowe in 1794 when he was involved in a dispute with heckler Robert Scott in Denholm. This was over the price of a mare. He was surely related to Walter, who was recorded in Crawknowe in 1788. James (18th/19th C.) smith in Hawick. The death of his wife Janet Wilson is recorded in 1800. James (1774–1822) born in Bedrule Parish, son of Peter. He was licensed to preach by Jedburgh Presbytery in 1802 and became minister of Eckford in 1807. He married Marion, eldest daughter of James Hume, Schoolmaster of Lasswade, and she died in 1857, aged 75. His children were: Margaret Simpson; Euphemia; Peter, surgeon in Hong Kong; Marion, who married Rev. James Hope of Roxburgh; Beatrix Laing; James Hume, doctor at Amoy, China, who died at Musselburgh; and Janet. James (b.1794/5) mason and innkeeper in Lilliesleaf, recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He is probably also the same man listed as a grocer in 1837. In 1841 and 1851 he was recorded at the Cross Keys Inn. In Slater’s 1852 directory he was listed as a mason and innkeeper at the Cross Keys. By 1861 he was at Dryden near Ashkirk, farming 400 acres and employing 3 labourers. He married Jean Manuel and their children included Jane, James, Elspeth and Simon. James (b.1815/6) from Oxnam, he was farmer at Teviothaugh. He is recorded there in 1851 and 1861, when he was farmer of 100 acres and employer of 2 labourers. He married Margaret Nurdie and their children included Janet, and employer of 2 labourers. He married Mary Manuel and their children included Jane, James, Elspeth and Simon. His name was also recorded (as ‘Johis zoung scis- sorem in denebra’, suggesting he was a carver (or perhaps carpenter) at Deanbrae. His name was also recorded (as ‘Johis zoung scis- sorem in’) in 1494/5, but scored out, and then entered again later when he had remission for stealing a cow from Simon Landles, with the Laird of Gledstain as his surety. John (15th/16th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1493. He was a resident of Minto along with Thomas, when Adam Turnbull in Hornshole was able to ‘compone’ for stealing from them, specifically 2 bolls of barley, a horse, linens and sheets and diverse tools. Probably the same John in Craigend of Minto was recorded in 1494/5 when George Shiel in Bedrule had remission for stealing 14 ewes from him; he was probably related to Thomas, who is also recorded in 1494/5. Probably the same John in Minto was recorded in 1502 when he failed to appear at the Justice-aire, with William Turnbull of Minto as his surety; he was probably related to George and Robert, who were also recorded. He was indicted in 1502 (as well as Thomas, Richard and William, to whom he was probably also related), with William Turnbull of Minto again as his surety. John (15th C.) recorded as tenant at Roughlee in 1494/5. He had remission for bringing in Englishmen from Tynedale to plunder from Thomas ‘Leipden’ and Matthew Mitchelson, living at Hundalee, with his surety being the Master of Angus. He was probably related to Simon, who was recorded at Roughlee in 1493. John (16th C.) owner of a quarter particulate of land on the south side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. He was one of the owners who was obliged to pay annual rents to James Blair. John (16th C.) recorded in 1563 as brother of Thomas. Isabel Ker of Cessford complained that it had been 18 years since their father had died, and they still occupied her quarter of Hassendeanbank without paying her. John (16th C.) tenant in Roughlee, along with ‘Michaely’. They are listed in 1571/2, among tenants in Southdean for whom William Oliver in Lustruther was pledge. John (d.1580) described as ‘in Cames’ (probably Kames) under the Laird of Minto when he was convicted and hanged for the murder of and theft from John Hamilton of ‘Benestoun’. His accomplice, Andrew Turnbull from Belses, was still a minor at the time. John (16th C.) son and heir of Andrew, tenant in Langnewton. In 1581 he resigned a husbandland in Langnewton to Patrick, son of John Dobson. Patrick paid him £27 Scots. John (16th/17th C.) described as ‘Jok Young in Toune of Roull’ in the records of the Circuit Court of 1622. He was accused of stealing sheep belonging to William Scott of ‘Weymus’, but cleared of the charges. John (17th C.) tenant in Fustcastle, recorded along with Thomas in 1644. The pair were cited in 1644 for not subscribing to the Covenant, saying that ‘they would ken no session nor minister, but follow the command of their master, my Lord Traquair’. Thomas was probably his son or brother, and they were probably related to other Youngs in Rulewater. John (17th C.) tenant in the farm of ‘Rouchnuek’ (i.e. Roughleeneuk) according to a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. Ninian and Lyle are also listed and surely closely related. John (17th C.) resident at Bygate in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. John (17th/18th C.) merchant of Hawick. He was fined in 1706 for ‘his disorderlie and irregular marriage with Margaret Clerk’. She was daughter of Andrew Clerk, also a merchant in Hawick. They were married by Thomas Blair at Cornhill in Northumberland, suggesting that at least one of the 2 families still proscribed to the Episcopal Kirk, or that the couple simply eloped there because the wedding was against the wishes of the families. John (18th C.) recorded being in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1780 when his marriage to Janet Slaiter was announced in Melrose Parish, with James Slaiter as cautioner. Rev. Dr. John (1743–1806) first minister of the Hawick Anti-Burgher Kirk. He was born in Kinross-shire, probably son of John,

Secession churches were full of radicals. Its con-revolutionary France, probably written as a delib-1798) was well read in its day, and was a justicification of the British government’s opposition to a deliberate attempt to counter the perception that the Secession churches were full of radicals. Its con-ents led to a complaint to the Synod, although about 1799 he contributed to the local subscription to support the war against France. He was also an early member of the Hawick Curling Club. In pol-ics he was a Tory, and had no patience for the `blacknebs' who were well represented in Hawick in his day. He was an eminent scholar, but said to be perhaps too academic for some of his congregation. Services in his time were about 3½ hours in duration, with hour-long doctrinal prayers while the congregation stood. For many years he also led ‘evening exercises’ on Sunday nights (in addition to the 2 earlier sermons of the day), which were usually lectures on Old Testament history or political matters. It is said that about half of the seats in the Green Kirk were paid for by members of the Established Kirk, due to his popularity. He is said to have also been called on much more fre-cently than the parish ministers for public visits as well as funerals. He was said to be the most tolerant local minister in regard people of other denominations, but was unpopular with many of the others. He was twice called before the Session.
In order to eke out his meagre stipend, he and his family farmed a garden at the Green, and for several years also farmed at Silverbuthall and some fields at Crumhaugh-hill. He refused a call to the Secession Church in Nicholson Street, Edinburgh, saying that only death would sever his connection with Hawick; the call was later accepted by Dr.
John Jamieson, the lexicographer. He received a doctorate from King’s College Aberdeen in 1794, the first given to a secession clergyman. His other publications include ‘The true nature of evangelical covenanting with God’ (1778), ‘Rules for the Direction of Praying Societies, or Fellowship Meetings’ (1781), ‘Duty of relieving the indigent and distressed’ (1795) and ‘Sermons on various important subjects’ (3 volumes, 1797). However, most of his manuscripts and correspondence were lost, as well as the diary he kept (except for a brief extract from 1777 and 1778). An original letter of his is in the Museum. He additionally helped Sir John Sinclair prepare the ‘Statistical Survey of Scotland’ for publication. In 1804 he suffered from what might now be called a stroke. As a result of this he required a colleague to preach for him in about his last year, since it was difficult for the congregation to make out what he said. For his last 5 months he could neither move nor speak, but recovered his speech one day, and gave a blessing to his family for 3 hours before again becoming insensible. A communion token from the church bears the inscription ‘M.-I.Y.- 1768’ (i.e. ‘Minister’ and his initials) on one side and ‘A.C.-H.K.’ (for ‘Associate Church Hawick’) on the other. He married Helen Gibb in Wilton in 1768; she was from Muckhart, where he had lodged before coming to Hawick, and she died in 1809 in her 60th year. They had 6 sons and 5 daughters, 9 children reaching maturity. His children included: James (b.1769), who presumbly died in infancy; the eldest daughter, who married Rev. William Patrick of Lockerbie, and assisted Dr. Jamieson with his dictionary; Euphemia (b.1774), who was 2nd wife of Alexander Davidson, blind lecturer in chemistry, then secondly married Dr. Thomas Dick; John (b.1776); Janet (b.1778), who married John Scott, manger of Hawick gasworks and also miller of Hawick Mill; Margaret (b.1780); James (b.1782); Ann (b.1784); and an unnamed son (b.1791). The 1791 baptism was recorded in Hawick Parish and done ‘in the presence of the Associate Congregation’. 2 of his sons trained for medicine, one obtained an army commission, and another became a merchant. There is no known portrait of him, although there is a water-colour of his daughter, Mrs. Janet Scott. He was long remembered in Hawick as a popular and dedicated minister. Sir Walter Scott was working on editing his memoirs when he had some sort of stroke in 1830, and the work never appeared. John (b.1771/2) farmer at Hillhead in Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Elizabeth Boa. They had a son Richard (b.1801) in Wilton Parish. John (1788/9–1864) sawyer in Hawick. He married Beatrice Scoon, who died in 1865, aged 68. Their children included: Jane,
who died aged 18; and John (b.1822) who died in infancy. They are buried in St. Mary’s Kirk-who died aged 18; and John (b.1822) who died
in 1865, aged 68. Their children included: Jane, Hawick. He married Beatrice Scoon, who died
Wilton Parish.

when he could not make up his mind and so said ‘Guilty or not guilty, three days or 5 shillings to pay’. Lyle (17th C.) tenant in Roughleeneuk, along with Ninian and John, according to a rental roll of 1669. Margaret (17th C.) recorded at Mervinslaw on the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls.
Margaret Paulin Young (1864–1953) born in Lilliesleaf, where her father was the minister of the Burgher Kirk. She was head girl at Lilliesleaf School, went through teacher training in London and became Head Teacher at Park School in Glasgow. She is credited with modernising Park School, where she introduced classes in science and art. Marion (16th C.) tenant at Waterside in 1541, along with Robert, as well James Oliver.
They paid 22 shillings yearly. It seems likely she was a sister or daughter of James Oliver with Robert being husband or son. Michael (16th C.) tenant in Roughlee, along with John. They are listed in 1571/2, among tenants in Southdean for whom William Oliver in Lustruther was pledge.
His forename is written ‘Michaely’. Mina nee Smith (b.1847) youngest daughter of Peter Smith and Betty Dunlop. She married Hawick Baker John Young in 1871 at Greenriver, in the Rule valley. They set up their home at Oakwood on Buccleuch Road. She provided information about her family for Tancred’s ‘Rulewater and its Peodle’. Her own children included J.E.D. Murray’s wife. Mungo (16th/17th C.) tenant in Lilliesleaf.
His wife was Meg Small, who was an acquaintance of Isobel Howison, who was convicted of witchcraft in 1628. It was stated that Wat Henderson came to his house, and seeing Howison there, was afraid and turned back. Ninian (17th C.) tenant in ‘Roucheuneuk’ (i.e. Roughleeneuk) according to a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. John and Lyle are listed after him and so presumably younger brothers or sons. Patrick (17th C.) resident of the Hassendean part of Roberton Parish.
In 1688 he ‘had a child baptized gotten in for-nica[tio]ne wt Issobell graham’ called Bessie. The witnesses were Robert Caldwell and William Graham (who was surely related to the mother of the child). Peter (18th/19th C.) dyer in Hawick. Unnamed children of his died in 1794 and 1810. He is probably the Peter who witnessed a baptism for shoemaker John Scott in 1792. Pim (19th C.)
brother of Ad, son of Jamie and Jean Scott, left fatherless at an early age. A well known town character, he was big, burly and frank. Known as a poacher, he also once rushed into the Coble Pool to save a boy. On at least 2 occasions he was rescued from arrest by a mob of his friends, but in 1844 he was sentenced to transportation to Australia. Richard (15th/16th C.) recorded being in Minto in 1502. He was indicted and failed to appear at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh, with his surety William Turnbull of Minto being fined. Thomas, John and William in Minto are also mentioned and probably related to him. Richard (d.1679) of Cavers Parish. He drowned on the 'Crown of London' when it shipwrecked off the Orkneys when carrying a cargo of Covenanters captured at Bothwell Bridge and bound for America. He may have been related to James who survived. Richard (18th C.) smith in Hawick Parish. In 1789 he witnessed a baptism for William Young, probably his son or brother. In 1761 he married Margaret Scott, who was also from. Their children included: William (b.1762); Margaret (b.1764); James (b.1767); Robert (b.1771), probably 'Rob Young o the Back Raw'; John (b.1774); Isabel (b.1777); Mary (b.1779); Richard (b.1783) and George (b.1786). The witnesses in 1774 were Robert (probably the smith) and Thomas Robson, and in 1786 were carrier John Scott and smith William Young. He witnessed a baptism for smith Robert (surely a relative) in 1766. Richard (b.1786) son of William and Elizabeth (the poet), he was a blacksmith on the High Street. His premises around No. 54 are marked on Wood's 1824 map. He is recorded as blacksmith on the High Street in Pigot's 1837 directory and on the 1841 and 1851 censuses. He was one of the victims in the election 'riot' of 1837; he was said to have once been a leader of the Radicals, but switched allegiance when he received a grant of land from the Duke of Buccleuch. His wife was Elizabeth Blacklock (born in Kirkton Parish). Their children included William, Robert, Elizabeth, Agnes and Joan. He was still alive in 1851. Richard (1793–1849) son of Adam and Margaret Young. He was a shoemaker at about 17 High Street. He married Agnes (or 'Nancy') Henderson. Their children included: Isabel (b.1818); Adam (b.1820); Margaret (b.1822); Margaret (again, b.1824); Agnes (b.1829); Robert (b.1834); and Joseph Hume (b.1837). Robert, a weaver who lived with him in 1841, was probably his brother. By 1851 his wife was a midwife, living at 73 High Street. Richard (b.1801) son of John Young and Elizabeth Boa, he was born in Wilton Parish. He lived at Lilliesleaf with his parents in 1841 and was later farm steward at Todshawhaugh. He was unmarried and had 4 servants in 1851. Richard (b.c.1805) blacksmith on the Mid Raw. His wife was Margaret, and their children included Robert, Alexander, Joan, Thomas and Francis. He must have been related to the older man of the same name who was blacksmith on the High Street. Robert (15th C.) resident of Minto. In 1494/5 James Davidson in Raperlaw was charged with several crimes, including stealing a young bull from him. Perhaps the same Robert is recorded in Selkirk in 1494/5 along with William Scoon. Lawrence Rutherford of Oakwood had remission for several crimes, including resetting the pair of them. Perhaps the same Robert in Minto, brother-in-law of John Turnbull, was recorded in 1502 when he failed to appear at the Justice-aire, with William Turnbull of Minto as his surety; he was probably related to George and John, who were also recorded. Robert (16th C.) tenant at Waterside in 1541, along with Marion, as well James Oliver. They paid 22 shillings yearly. Marion was possibly his mother. Perhaps the same 'Hob Younge in the Watterside' was recorded in 1571/2, when Richard Rutherford, Provost of Jedburgh, was surety for him. Robert 'Hob' (16th C.) listed in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1574. He may served as factor or similar. His name is given as 'Hobbe Yhong' or 'Zoung'). Robert (16th C.) servant of Robert Elliot of Redheugh. He went to Edinburgh with Elliot in 1624, apparently part of the plot to try to murder the Earl of Buccleuch, although it was not claimed that he was directly involved. Robert (17th C.) resident of Minto Craigend who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Robert (17th C.) recorded as resident at Burnmouth in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert (18th C.) paid the cart tax at Clerklands in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1785–88. Robert (18th C.) blacksmith in Hawick Parish. He witnessed baptisms for carrier William Richardson and Isabel Henderson (perhaps his sister-in-law) in 1759 and 1766. He also witnessed baptisms for carrier James Tudhope in 1765 (and probably 1762) and for John Nichol in 1768. In 1774 he witnessed a baptism for Richard, who may have been his brother. He married Margaret Henderson in 1754 and their children included: Isabel (b.1757); James (b.1762); Margaret (b.1766); and William (b.1771). The 1757 baptism was witnessed by carrier James Henderson (probably his brother-in-law) and Alexander Bunyan (who was a gardener), the 1760 baptism by carriers James Scott and William Hardie, the 1762 baptism by James Henderson and William
Young

Richardson, and the 1766 baptism by James Henderson and Richard Young (surely a close relative). It is unclear how he was related to the later ‘Rob Young o the Back Raw’. Robert ‘Rob’ (b.1771) probably son of Richard and Margaret Scott. He was a blacksmith of the Back Raw, recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories (when he was listed as being on the Howegate). His premises are marked ‘Young’ on Wood’s 1824 map, in the middle of the Back Row. In the 1841 census he lived with several other Youngs: Catherine (b.c.1890); Thomas (b.c.1809), also a blacksmith; Robert (b.c.1822), blacksmith’s apprentice; and Agnes (b.c.1825). He is mentioned in John Ballantyne’s song ‘Pawkie Paiterson’ – ‘And Rob Young o’ the Back Raw, Hei’s often shod ma clutes, Sae Aw wull leave him ma shank banes To bei a pair o’ butes’[JSB]. He was still alive for the 1841 census. Robert (18th/19th C.) hedger at Larriston, listed among heads of households in 1835. Robert (19th C.) blacksmith on the High Street, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He is separate from the blacksmith Robert on the Howegate, and hence there must have been 2 men in the same trade with the same name at that time. He does not appear on the 1841 census, although there is a blacksmith of the same name in Oxnam Parish. Robert (1800-c.70) son of William, he was born at Ruecastle. He became a joiner, first working with Walter Amos at Blacklee. He later lived at Mackside and then Hobkirk, where he worked on the Wolfelee estate. After 10 years he moved to Edgerston, working on the estate of William Oliver Rutherford. His son William followed him into the joinery trade. Along with his sons William and James he emigrated in 1851, settling in Ontario, where he purchased 100 acres. Rev. Robert (d.1884) born in Covington, Lanarkshire, son of Schoolmaster James and Margaret Ferguson. He was educated at Edinburgh University, licensed by Lanark Presbytery and became assistant at Selkirk before being ordained as minister of Teviothead in 1854. He died unmarried. He wrote ‘Dr. Bisset’s Address and Episcopal Tendencies’ (1864), ‘Henry Scott Riddell: Notes and Remembrances’ (published in Hawick, 1875), ‘On the History of Education in Scotland’ (1879) and ‘The Buccleuch Book, with Specific Reference to Allanhaugh’. Robert (19th C.) baker at 75 High Street. He also made aerated waters. He married Agnes Lamb, probably the same ‘Bonnie Aggie’ who was said to have made the first recipe for Hawick Balls. Their children included: Isabella Frank (b.1856); Helen (b.1858); Helen Jane (b.1860); Margaret (‘Maggie’, b.1862), who married Robert Riddle Thompson; Alexander (b.1865); Mary Lamb (b.1867); Janet Hall (b.1872); and Elizabeth (‘Bessie’), who married William Laidlaw. Robert (19th/20th C.) Hawick joiner, son of baker John. He married Margaret Barclay. Simon (15th C.) tenant in Roughlee. In 1493 he had remission for the crimes of bringing in Englishmen and plundering from Hundalee. Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst served as his surety. He was surely related to John, who was recorded in Roughlee in 1494/5. Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded at the Justicier held in Jedburgh in 1493. He was a resident of Minto along with John, when Adam Turnbull in Hornshole was able to ‘compone’ for stealing from them, specifically 2 bolls of barley, a horse, linens and sheets and diverse tools. Probably the same Thomas was recorded in 1494/5 when George Shiel in Bedrule had remission for stealing 6 sheep of his ewes from Minto (with John also recoded). Probably the same man was recorded in 1502 as ‘Thomas Zoung’; he was a tenant in Cragend of Minto, along with his son Thomas, William Johnstone and Simon Leitch. His farm there was burned by a group consisting of David Scott, called ‘Lady’, in Stirkshews, Archibald Armstrong, Ninian Armstrong, David Turnbull of Bonchester and other ‘Traitors of Levin and Liddalisdale’. This raid included the burning of seven horses. He was also recorded in 1502 when a cow of his from ‘cragend’ was stolen by Adam Grahamslaw. Additionally William Turnbull of Minto was fined when he failed to appear in court; John, Richard and William in Minto were also recorded and hence probably related to him. Thomas (15th/16th C.) son of Thomas, tenant in Minto Craigend. In 1502 it is recorded that their farm had been plundered by David Scott, ‘Lady’, from Stirches. Thomas (16th C.) ‘officiar of Lempetlaw’ for Scott of Brauxholme and Buccleuch. He is listed in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott in 1574. Thomas (16th C.) recorded in 1563 as brother of John. Isabel Ker of Cessford complained that it had been 18 years since their father had died, and they still occupied her quarter of Hassendeanebank without paying her. His name was listed first, so he was probably the older brother. Thomas (16th/17th C.) granted a husbandland of land in Lilliesleaf in 1595/6. Thomas (16th/17th C.) described as being ‘in Herret’ (possibly Harwood) in a document of 1602. He was ‘bailie in that Young
part’ to Lord Herries for a sasine in Rulewater. Thomas (16th/17th C.) Schoolmaster at Hobkirik, recorded in 1616. He was witness to a bond between William Scott of Todrig and Mark, son of Hector Turnbull in Hartsbaugh. Thomas (17th C.) recorded at Fastcastle in 1644, along with John. The pair were cited at the Presbytery for refusing to subscribe to the Covenant. They were surely related to each other and to other Youngs of Rulewater. Thomas (b.c.1810) son of blacksmith Rob. He was a blacksmith, like his father, being the eldest son, running the business on the Back Row in 1841. He does not appear on the 1851 census. Bailie Thomas ‘Earthin Tom’ (1815/6–91) from Duns, he was a draper at 45 High Street for more than 40 years, and owner of this building in the mid-19th century. His nickname came from his use of vulgar fractions in pricing. He was also one of the founders of the Hawick Billiard Club. He played an active role in public life, being a member of the old Town Council and made a Magistrate, although in later years he led a more private life. He was living on Buccleuch Street (about No. 1) in 1841 and at 45 High Street in 1851 and 1861. He married Agnes Grieve, who died in 1876, aged 62. Their children included Mary Stenhouse and Christina Brydon, neither of whom reached adulthood, as well as Robert, Mary S. and Agnes. Thomas (19th C.) precentor at Hawick Free Kirk 1850–53. Walter (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, when it still contained Hassendean. He married Margaret ‘creake’ (probably Craig) and their daughter Helen was baptised in 1687. The witnesses were William Scott and Patrick Dodds. Walter (18th C.) tailor in Hawick Parish. He married Isabel Turnbull in 1723; they were ‘both att ye milport’. Their children included: Isobel (b.1724); William (b.1727); Andrew (b.1728); Margaret (b.1728); Margaret (again, b.1730); and Walter (b.1735). The deceased Walter whose daughter Margaret died in 1791, could be him. Walter (18th C.) shoemaker recorded in ‘Crawnous in Lilliesleaf’ in 1788 when he was accused of non-payment of a bill in Selkirk. He probably lived at Craknowes near Ashkirk and was related to James, who was there in 1794. William (15th/16th C.) recorded being in Minto in 1502. He was indicted and failed to appear at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh, with his surety William Turnbull of Minto being fined. Thomas, John and Richard in Minto are also mentioned and probably related to him. William ‘Will’ (16th C.) listed in 1544 as ‘Wille Yong Clemyt Crossers servaunte’, when he was among local men who gave their assurances to the English. His brother ‘Jake Yong’ is also listed. It is unclear where they lived, or which Clement this was, although lands near the Slitrig are likely. William (16th C.) recorded in 1561, when Thomas Scott of Haining was obliged to enter him (or James Middlemas or a servant of James) before the Warden of the East Marches. He is recorded as ‘quhyte Will Young’, this probably being a nickname. This was to answer the charge of stealing from David Thomson in Berwick. William (17th C.) listed ‘eist the water’ among those paying the Hearth Tax in Hawick in 1694. William (17th C.) ploughman at Todshawhill according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (17th C.) resident of ‘the netherend’ of Hassendean Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the William who witnessed baptisms in Roberton Parish (but probably Hassendean) in 1684 and 1687 for Walter Turnbull, in 1687 for William Martin and in 1688 for Thomas Scott in Hassendean. William (17th/18th C.) blacksmith in Hawick. In 1720 he (and ‘fowler’ Archibald Little) witnessed a baptism for Adam Brown ‘Headhous’. In 1725 he witnessed a baptism for Thomas Waddell. He married Janet Little and their children included: William (b.1725); and Isabel (b.1730). The 1725 baptism was witnessed by masons John and Andrew Turnbull and the 1730 one by another William Young and James Scott. William (17th/18th C.) blacksmith in Hawick. He married Isobel Aitkin and their children included James (b.1740) and Isobel (b.1742). The witnesses in 1740 were ex-Bailie Robert Howison and merchant James Sanderson and in 1742 were weaver David ‘Harg’ and workman Robert Boyd. He could be the same man as the William who earlier married Janet Little. William (18th C.) tradesman in Hawick, possibly a cooper. In 1754 he was paid ‘for clasping the bell wheel’ of St. Mary’s Kirk. William (18th/19th C.) blacksmith in Hawick, probably son of Richard and Margaret Scott. He is probably the smith who in 1786 witnessed a baptism for Richard (probably his brother). He is probably the William recorded as blacksmith at the Midrow on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He married Betty Scott in Hawick in 1785. Their children included: Richard (b.1786), also a blacksmith; Walter (b.1788); Henry (b.1792); Margaret (b.1794); and Christian (b.1796), who married James Grieve in Midlem. The witnesses in 1786 were smith Richard (probably his father or brother) and Thomas Miller and in 1796 were James Richardson and Peter Wilson. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Burnhead, recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He owned 4 horses at that time. He was probably succeeded as farmer by Adam. William (b.c.1770) portioner at Ruecastle. He sold coals in Hawick which he drove from the English Border. He is recorded at Ruecastle on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 2 horses. In 1832 he was one of the 13 voters in the Parish of Bedrule. He was recorded at Ruecastle in 1841. In 1795 he married Agnes Scott from Ancrum Parish. Their children were: Agnes, who died in infancy; Peggy; Robert, who became a joiner; Agnes (again); James; and William. He is buried at Bedrule. William (b.c.1803) born in Lilliesleaf Parish, he was Parochial Schoolmaster at Lasswade in 1851. His wife was Susan and they had a daughter Agnes. Rev. William (19th C.) from Kirriemuir, he was minister of Lilliesleaf Secession Kirk from 1857. In 1874 he moved to Parkhead, Glasgow where he was minister until 1907. William (1816/7–82) farmer at Rockvale. He married Margaret Fairbairn, who died in 1895, aged 80. Their children included: Catherine, who died in infancy; William, who farmed his father’s fields; and John, Sandbed baker. William (b.1816/7) from Jedburgh, he was a baker at the Sandbed. In 1851 he was listed at Teviot Square, probably around 12 Sandbed. In Slater’s 1852 directory he is also on Teviot Square and in 1861 he was at 12 Sandbed as baker, employing 9 bakers and 2 carters. His wife was Margaret and their children included John, Mary, Sarah and William. William (b.1819) son of Richard and Elizabeth Blacklock. He was a blacksmith on the High Street, at around No. 28. His wife Sarah was from Northumberland. Their first child, Richard, was born at Newton in Northumberland, suggesting that he worked there for a while. William (19th C.) Judge at the Common Riding Games in the 1850s. He may be the same William who won the standing high leap at the 1840 Games. William (19th C.) farmer in Cavers or Minto Parish, listed in Slater’s directory of 1852. William (b.1831/2) recorded as miller at Spittal in 1861. He lived at ‘Spittal Cottars House’. His wife was Sarah, and they had a son Thomas. William (19th/20th C.) son of Rulewater joiner Robert. He was educated at the ‘Sclenty Schuil’ and Hobkirk School, then went with his father to work on the Edgerston estate. In 1851 he emigrated along with his father, settling in Ontario. There he purchased 500 acres, which he cleared and farmed. He married Janet Brown, daughter of an Edinburgh builder who settled in Lambton County, Ontario. Their children were: Robert, who married Sarah Walton; John, who also married; and Janet, who married W. Johnston. He returned to visit the Rule valley in 1905. William (19th/20th C.) partner, along with Thomas Hunter, in the hosiery firm Hunter & Young. The firm operated until 1914. (formerly spelled ‘Yong’, ‘Yonge’, ‘Yowng’, etc., as well as ‘Zong’, ‘Zoung’, ‘Zowng’, etc. in earlier documents).

younger (yung-ur) adj. younger – ‘A’m the same age es ma pinkie, bit ma teeth er younger’ (note the lack of hard g in the pronunciation).

Younger (yung-ur) n. Archibald (15th C.) listed among local men as witness to the 1464/5 sasine for the lands of Kirkton Mains and Flex. His name is recorded as ‘Archibaldo Zungare’ John (15th/16th C.) witness to the 1511/2 sasine for the Barony of Hawick. His name is recorded as ‘Johanne Zownger’. He was probably a prominent man in Hawick at the time. John (1785–1860) poet and writer from St. Boswells. Born in Longnewton, son of William and Jean Hender- son, he was educated at Longnewton school. He grew up at Ellieston and followed his father as a shoemaker. His mother died when he was 10 and within a few years he had started to write verses. The family moved around, but settled in St. Boswells. His cottage there was called ‘Patmos’. He became an expert angler, as well as joining the Volunteers. In writing he was encouraged by Andrew Scott of Bowden and eventually published his first poetry in 1834, followed by others, as well as ‘River Angling for Salmon and Trout’ (1840). He was heavily involved with the Burns centenary celebrations, giving lectures locally, as well as in Glasgow. An autobiography appeared in 1882, and contains an account of the ‘False Alarm’, amongst other local descriptions. Peter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, recorded as ‘poor’ in 1779. yowr (yowr) pron., arch. your – ‘…and in cases of emphasis, yoor is used, and sometimes yowr …’ [ECS] (possessive pronoun, used emphatically as a variant of ‘your’, with the more common un-emphasised forms being eer and yur).
yowrs (yowrz) pron., arch. yours – ‘Is this buik yours (or yowrs)?’ [ECS] (used emphatically).
yowt (yowt) v., arch. to roar, howl, hoot – ‘And the yollering, youting noise came on, And swell’d the unsteady gale …’ [JTe], ‘…an A litleet a sang an hwewed an yuofted, leike as A’d gane wuth …’ [ECS], n., poet. a shout, cry – ‘That youling yowte sae yerlish was, Butte and sae lang and louds …’ [JTe] (there are various spellings).
yow yins (yow-yinz) pron. you lot, denoting the second person plural – ‘…Thus we say: Second person singular – Ee’ll finnd that gey ill ti baet. Second person plural – Yow yins’ll finnd that gey ill ti baet’ [ECS].
ypothecar (ee-p-thee-kur) n., arch. an apothecary – ‘Item, awand to Williame Purves, ypothecar, threttene pundis, xj s.’ [SB1574] (also ‘apotecar’).

yr (thur, thair) pron., arch. abbreviation for ‘their’ or ‘there’, common in Burgh Records of the 17th and early 18th centuries – ‘…by virtue of an decret and arreistment following yr upon …’ [BR], ‘Item, that na persone nor persons bring in, be themselfs, yr servandis …’ [BR1640] (along with similar spellings, this is probably an example of the disappearing ‘thorn’, i.e. derived from the penchant for substituting ‘y’ for the Old English letter ‘th’ in early printing).
yrby (ther-bli) adv., arch. thereby, thereabouts – ‘…and cohabiting and beding with her for eight nights’ tymre or yrby …’ [BR1689].
yrfore (ther-for) adv., arch. therefore, abbreviated in older records – ‘…and yrfor the bailies, with consent of the council, ordained her to lie 48 hours in the stocks …’ [BR1638], ‘…prohibited and discharged by the forsd act of Parliat. and yrfor, they ilk ane, ought … to pay yr respective fynes and penalties’ [BR1702].

Yrostellcitis (thros-til-kots) n. place name recorded in 1351 and suggested to be identified with Hoscote. It may be the same as the name recorded as ‘Thoftcotys’ in 1410, but whether these are simply early versions of ‘Hoscote’ or names for part of those lands is unclear (the name clearly derives from the Middle English for thrush, ‘throstel’).
ys (this) pron., arch. abbreviation for ‘this’, common in documents before the middle of the 18th century – ‘Intimation made ys day by the sd Mr Broun yt masters of families in ye parish may call for ye testimonials of ye servants …’ [PR1711], ‘…and was ordered to present his child either ys night or to-morrow to baptism’ [PR1713].
yt (tha’) pron., arch. former abbreviation for ‘that’, common in older Burgh Records – ‘…for his contumacious language given to the sd bayleys att yt time’ [BR1685], ‘The sd day Mr Olifer did intimate yt these go intended to go out of ye parish …may come and receive their respective testimonials. And likewise yt none receives servants or others without certificates …’ [PR1711] (see also at and that).
yuck (yuk) v. to chuck, throw, n. a throw, toss, a stone that is the right size for throwing – ‘The bigger the yuck and the greater the distance, the higher was the reputation of the thrower’ [HNe1972] (cf. chuckie and hyuck). yucker (yu-kur) n. a thrower, stone that is good for throwing.

Yuil (yil) n., arch. Yule, midwinter festival – ‘Price of thirty-four sheep £102 Scots, or £3 a piece sold at Yuill’ [BR1638], ‘The drummer is allowed ten shillings yearly and his Yuill wages’ [BR1721] (note the former pronunciation, also written ‘Yuill’; cf. Yule).

Yule (yool) n. older name for the season or festival around Christmas. Before the reform of the calendar in 1752, this fell on 5th January. Around the 16th century it was one of the 3 times year the Sheriff Court would meet (usually the first Tuesday after Epiphany). Note that it was once considered a superstitious festival in Scotland, observance being prohibited by an Act of the General Assembly in 1645 (formerly Yuill).

Yule (yool) n. Andrew (b.1788/9) from Samilholm Parish, he was a sawyer in Wilton. He was recorded as a sawyer on Wilton Path among heads of households in 1840 and 1841. He was living on Under Damside according to the censuses of 1841 and 1851. His wife was Susan and their children included Andrew, William and Henry. Andrew (1935/6–97) born in Hawick, he was educated at St. Mary’s, Trinity and the High School. He worked at Waverley Mill on Mansfield Road then left Hawick to study textiles in Loughborough, eventually setting up his own knitwear business in the west of Scotland. But later he moved to America, where he became a full time writer in his late 40s. He wrote biographies of several actors and directors, including Sean Connery, Al Pacino, David Puttnam and Steven Spielberg.

James (16th C.) recorded as Curate of Cavers in 1542 when he witnessed a document for the Porteous in Selkirk, done in the house of William Scott. He was Curate at the same time as David Scott was Vicar of Cavers. James (19th/20th C.) Common Riding Song Singer. He first took charge of the Snuffing in 1921, which has since been a traditional duty of the Song Singer. He was Song Singer in 1946. John (b.c.1810) sawyer in Hawick. He was listed as a member of Allars Kirk in 1829. In 1841 he was living at Wilton Pathhead. His wife was Agnes and their children included Agnes and Andrew. William D. (19th C.) blacksmith at Smailcleugh in Southdean Parish, recorded there in the 1860s.

Yule fee (yool-fee) n., arch. fee levied on the community by the Burgh Officer around Christmas. The practice was discontinued in Hawick near the beginning of the 19th century – ‘Rob was the last functionary who levied yule fees from the community’ [JW] (also yule wages).

Yule wages (yool-, yul-wa-jeez) n., pl., arch. fees collected at Christmas – ‘The drummer is allowed ten shillings yearly and his Yuill wages’ [BR1721], ‘He had also the privilege of collecting ‘fra the honest men in the town’ what was termed ‘Yuill wadges’, now known as Christmas box’ [HAST1913] (also yule fee).

Yooot (yoo, yoot) v., arch. to whoop, yelp – ‘...an A lilteet a sang an whewed an yuooted, leike as A’d gane wuth ...’ [ECS] (note that this was pronounced with a long, almost diphthongal oo-oo; cf. yowt).

d (yur, yer) adj. your – ‘whae’s yer freend?’; ‘...I’ll gi’e yer fill, Wi’ richt guid will, To fit ye for the racing’ [JEDM] (also spelled ‘yer’; cf. eer).

Yersel see yersel

Youth With A Mission (Y.W.A.M.) see Y.W.A.M.

the Y.W.C.A. (thi-wl-du-bu-lew-see-a) n. the Young Women’s Christian Association, established in England in 1855, with an active group in Hawick by the 1880s, run by Mrs. Elliot Lockhart and Mrs. Glenny.

z (yi) n. letter that sometimes stands for the ‘yogh’ symbol, since that was indistinguishable from a tailed cursive ‘z’. It was therefore sometimes printed as a ‘z’, although often the same words were alternatively spelled with a ‘y’. This led to pronunciations which voice the z (like the modern ‘Menzies’ and the usual pronunciation of the local name ‘Kedzie’), even although the correct pronunciation was originally more like yee. This confusion is particularly apparent in words containing ‘lz’, such as ‘assoilzie’, ‘balzie’, and ‘failzie’.

zebra crossin (ze-bru-kro-sin, zee-bru-kro-sin) n. these black and white striped crossings, accompanied by Belisha beacons, appeared experimentally in 1949 and were fully approved in 1951. The first one appeared in Hawick at least from 1952, on the High Street between Baker Street and O’Connell Street. Another 2 appeared near the Town Hall and across North Bridge Street near the Horse. These have been prominent landmarks ever since. The main one at the Town Hall was moved further north, denuded of stripes, and became a pedestrian-controlled crossing, but is still referred to as a ‘zebra crossing’. There are also pedestrian-controlled crossings at the top of Commercial Road and on Mart Street. The crossing over North Bridge Street/Oliver Place was removed following road changes at the Horse. There are still zebras with Belisha beacons over the Mart Street car park and across Mansfield Road near the Leisure Centre.

Zeedy (zee-dee) n. nickname for Jim Jack.

Zeppelins (zep-linz) n., pl. German airships, which bombed targets in Britain during WWI, leading to the imposition of black-outs. 2 of them entered near Berwick in April 1916, killing 10 people on its way to Edinburgh. There was a local scare in August 1916, which turned out to be a British airship. A story that a Zeppelin bombed Robert’s Linn Bridge is unsubstantiated.

01450 (zee-roh-yin-fow-ur-flv-zee-ro) n. telephone area code for Hawick, previously being 0450.

Zigzag Plantin (zig-zawg-plawn’-in) n. wooded area on the southern slopes of Ruberslaw, west of Town-o-rule farm, named for its shape. A ‘chipped and polished axe of grey-white volcanic tuff from the Langsdale axe factory’ was found just east of here and is now in the Museum.
Appendix A: Sources of quotations

The following is a list of abbreviations for authors from whom quotations have been taken, as credited in the text. Note that for some of the quotations (particularly older or anonymous ones) the reference given is to the author of the book or article in which the quote was found, and so in not all cases is the person listed the originator of the quote. In order to save space, specific publications and page numbers are not given, but in most cases the relevant body of work is modest enough that it would not be too difficult to find the relevant passage; however, for some historical examples the year is also given. Since older sources are scarce, some liberality is used in deciding whether the text represents local speech. The abbreviations used are:

Appendix E: Common Riding

Acting Fathers and Cornet’s Lasses are known only patchily in the 19th century. The earliest Acting Fathers were the Cornet’s own father. Long before the Cornet’s Lass was a formal position, there was a young lady chosen to buss the Flag. Brackets for the Chief Guest indicate a main guest at the Common Riding in the years before there was an official Chief Guest.
