Drinkstone (dringk-stin) n. farm to the north of Hawick, reached by going straight at the 'Fower Road Ends'. It was known at least as early as the 16th century, when it was home of a branch of the Scotts. There was a dispute over possession of the lands between John Scott in Drinkstone and Robert Scott in Howford in 1535. John Scott of Drinkstone is recorded in the 1550s to 1570s. John Scott 'in Drinkston' was listed by Scott of Satchells among the 24 'pensioners' of Buccleuch (probably some time around 1600). Robert Scott paid land tax there for £66 13s 4d in 1663. It was part of the Buccleuch estates by 1678. The tenant there in 1694 was Robert Scott, along with James Learmouth and Robert Shortreed, with Walter Scott as shepherd. The lands became part of Wilton Parish when Hassendean was suppressed in 1690. Robert Scott was recorded there in 1696, John Easton in 1698 and Walter Scott in 1704. William Scott was tenant in 1709 and James Grieve in 1711. It was surveyed along with other properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1718, when it extended to 206 acres and was bounded by Easter Grundistone, Boonraw, Tandlaw, Coldhouse and Wilton Common. John Thomson was living there in 1722 and John Kersel in 1729. The farm was re-leased from the Buccleuch Estates by John Lamb in 1744, along with a declaration about what to do if the adjacent Has-sendean Common was divided. Adam Ormiston was farmer there in at least the period 1780–97. William Anderson was farmer there in 1841 and 1851. A ride-out to there took place in 1899 (the name is first recorded as 'Dryngstoun' in 1528/9 and 1550, 'Dringstoun' in 1535, 'Dringistoun' in 1556, 'Dringston' in 1559 'Dringgestoun' in 1574, 'Drunkston' in 1603, 'Deringstoun' in 1616 and 'Drinkston' in 1643; it is commonly 'Drinkstoun' in the 17th and early 18th centuries and is still 'Drinkston' in 1744; the origin is probably 'the dreng's or freeman's farm' and may imply a feudal relationship with the adjacent Boonraw).

Drinkstone Cleuch (dringk-stin-klooch) n. small stream to the north-east of Drinkstone farm.

Drinkstone Cottage (dringk-stin-ko-cean) n. cottage near Drinkstone farm. The Hogg family were living there in 1841.

Drinkstone Hill (dringk-stin-hil) n. hill just north-west of Hawick, height 318 m, with a triangulation pillar. Before about the middle of the 18th century there was an old road that came from Teviothead over into the Borthwick valley, past Harden and behind Drinkstone Hill to Groundistone Height, avoiding Hawick. A drove road also used to follow a similar route.

drive a prey (driev-a-pra) v., arch. to drive off stolen cattle – 'In Coquetdale, Reed and Tyne We drive a prey wi’ glee, And hunder the lubberts like swine, And wha daur meddle i’ me?’ [T], ‘The Captain of Bewcastle hath bound him to ryde, An he’s ower to Tevidade to drive a prey ...’ [T].

Dr. Mark’s Little Men (dok-tur-mawrks-li-ul-men) n. travelling orchestra of child performers from Manchester, who were very popular in the 1850s and 60s, playing at the Subscription Rooms.

drong (droong) n., arch. a droning sound – ‘Ma lang Dander ... cam ti an end ... ti the droaong o the Toons clock’ [ECS] (also written ‘droaq’).

droof (drook) v. to drench, soak – ‘What heaps our hearts wi’ heavy wae, An’ wi’ saut drackin’s drouks our pellit’ [JoHa], ‘Ae lambin’ nicht o’ drookin’ weather a flock o’ lambin’ men did gather ...’ [TD] (cf. drack).

drooked (drookd) pp., adj. drenched, soaked – ‘the Friday was aartight, bit oo aa got drooked on the Seterdi’, ‘In the simmer oo get birsled, Oo get drooked bei autumn’s rain, An then the wund turns snell yince mair, An the wunter comes again’ [IWL] (cf. drookit).

drookin (drookin) n. a drenching or soaking, often given to a person by surprise or against their will – ‘they ganged up an gave him a drookin in the river’, ‘aabody got a drookin it the Common Ridin o 1971’, ‘...dog-huggit ... tide-merked Wi mony a drowe and drookin’’ [DH], adj. soaking, wet through, drenched – ‘the terrible drookin’ wet Common Ridin’ o’ 1923’.

drookit (druo-kee, -ki) pp., adj. drenched, soaked – ‘the Heavens opened an oo got drookit’, ‘The riven claes, an’ droukit skins, That mony aaright, like swine, And wha daur meddle i’ me?’ [T], ‘The Friday was aartight, bit oo aa got drooked on the Seterdi’. ‘In the simmer oo get birsled, Oo get drooked bei autumn’s rain, An then the wund turns snell yince mair, An the wunter comes again’ [IWL] (cf. drookit).

droon (drow) v. to drown – ‘carefi it the river, A deh wa’ ee comin hyim drooned’, ‘deh droon that whisky wi witter’, ‘When a’ the lave to bed are gane, And weary toil lies droon’d in sleep . . .’ [JoHa], ‘Mony waters canna slocken loofe, neather can the fluids droon it’ [HSR], ‘Minglin’ wi’ the notes of wailin’ Droon’d by base degenerate ralin’’ [RK], ‘. . .Which Tam, puir cratur’, couldna bide, Mair like his sorrow droon’ [WFC], ‘. . .It’s droonin tae, that sets mei frettin’; In drams and yill’ [DH].

Droonin Sike (droon-in-sik) n. Drowning Sike, small stream just to the east of the Maidean, which flows into Harwood Burn to eventually join the Slitrig. It is crossed by a section of the Catrail.

droonit (droo-neec, -ni’) pp., arch. drowned – ‘. . .promest be him to bring haill, saif and sound to Hawick, qhilk he brak, drownet, and lossit be ’ [ECS].

droon the miller (droun-thu-mi-lur) v., arch. to add too much water to an alcoholic drink or to in cooking.

droot (droo’) n. a drought. There was a severe drought in Hawick (and elsewhere) in 1826, sometimes called the ‘Droothy Simmer’, and another in 1844 which brought the Town’s mills to a standstill – ‘. . .And brunt broon in the lang droot And brunt broon in the lang droot’ [WL].

drooth (drooth) n. thirst, dry mouth, drought, prolonged period of dry weather – ‘they sautty peanuts hev gien is a right drooth’, ‘Let drooth hae drink her dry to weet, And hungry wames hae rowth o’ meat’ [JoHa], ‘This day my fast I haena broken, I at last might my drooth did slocken’ [JoHa], ‘Ilk Oliver a drooth inherits, Leevin or dead we stick by spirits’ [WNK], ‘For daye an’ nicht thy han’ was hivie apon me: my moustir is turnet intil the drouth o’ sim-mer’ [HSR], ‘. . .the unamet cuddies slocken their drooth’ [HSR], ‘Sin’ that ane that slocked Samson’s drooth I’ the jawbone o’ the cuddie’ [VV], ‘C’away and slacken yer drooth and we’ll drink tae the best o’ dochters . . .’ [JEDM], ‘In mony a toom I’ve quench’d my drooth And gi’en for mony a toast the order’ [GWe], ‘There’s mony ane that talk o’ drooth When drooth they never fin’, And mony ane creates a drooth Wi’ drinking late at e’en’ [DA], ‘. . .an than A gaed inti a bit an slokent ma drooth’ [ECS], ‘. . .Wi’ the ‘Paul as a bieldy Limbo Where the lost droothis Dwelt’ [DH], ‘. . .His is nae mealy-mooth, He’s a sullen-doon drooth, But his cruck is aye herty and free’ [WL] (also spelled ‘drouth’; cf. the less common droorth).

drooths (droothis) n., pl. droughts, dry years. Probably the worst local drought in recorded history was in the summer of 1826, ‘the Droothy Simmer’. 1800, ‘the Dear year’ also had a drought, following on a winter of heavy rains. There was another serious drought in 1723, with the Hawick Parish records stating there was to be a fast day so ‘that God may be pleased in His mercy to put a stop to ye great drought . . .’.

droothy (drou-thee) adj., arch. thirsty, craving alcohol – ‘‘Hout lod! the hirin’s no’ begun At a’!’ cries droothy Wullie’ [JoHa], ‘Long fashed wi’ a thrillfist and droothy guidman – Wad ha’e drucken the ocean when ance he began’ [JT], extremely dry – ‘. . .the droothy summer of 1826 brought about a change . . .’ [WSR], ‘. . .no least Ronnie Tait, his ancient trusty droothy crony’ [IWL] (also spelled ‘drouthy’ and ‘drouthie’).

the Droothy Simmer (thu-droo-thee-sim-nur) n. popular name for the summer of 1826, which was hot and rainless. Whitsunday (May 15th) had a downpour, then the drought set in until the first week of August. Wheat increased in yield, while oats were very stunted and the oatmeal was full of soil and sand. Water power to some mills stopped altogether, while moorland and forest fires raged throughout Britain. Hawick’s rivers (as well as the Rule) almost entirely dried up, bringing the water-powered mills to a standstill (and encouraging the introduction of steam power, starting 5 years later). It caused commercial havoc, resulting in several hosiery firms going out of business. The Common Riding that year was held very late, on 16th and 17th June. Local events were dated from this year for many decades.

drop (drop) n., arch. a disappointment – ‘Now that’s exactly where I got a drop that raether taen iz ti the fair!’ [ECS].

drope (drop) n., arch. a measure of some kind, probably corresponding to a ‘drop wecht’, which corresponded to a 16th of an ounce – ‘. . .James Scott Laird’s quarter of ane pound wanted ane drop, his twa unce wanted half a drop and more’ [BR1676], ‘Item, for six drope of Silke . . .00 12 00’ [BR1707].
droppit (dro-pee’, -pi’) pp., poct. dropped – ‘but soon as he saw him, doon droppit the gun, And up stairs like lightning away he has run’ [JoHa] (also drappit).
drop-scone (drop-skôn) n. a small round flat cake cooked on a griddle, called a ‘Scotch pancake’ in England (see also scone).
dross (dros) n. coal or peat dust, formerly used to damp down a fire – ‘The power my grandeur to destroy No yellow dross from him could buy’ [WNK].

drove roads (drov-rodż) n., pl. routes used for driving sheep and cattle. There were formerly several of these passing near Hawick, which were particularly used for driving cattle from the Highlands to the markets of northern England. They typically avoided difficult river crossings (e.g. the one passing north of Hawick into the Borthwick valley), as well as major towns and tolls. These routes became well established after the Union of the Crowns in 1603, and were well used until about the first quarter of the 19th century, when there was increased carrying trade on the improved toll roads. Hawick was a major stopping point for droves travelling between markets such as Falkirk and those around Newcastle and Carlisle. The Council forbade droves from using the Common after the Division of 1777, but in 1785 agreed to let them stop for 3 days at the Moor as part of a cattle fair held around Thorderykes and Haggishaa in November (or perhaps October). The exact routes of the drove routes presumably changed with time, and several of them had overlapping sections. Most of the local examples can hardly be traced any more, although there are some sections that are still quite visible, e.g. at Muselee. There were at least 5 distinct drove roads that passed near Hawick: one via the Loan, the Nipknowes, Pilmuir, Pilmuir Rig, the Caa Knowe, Trouthlawford, Hareceluchhead, Penchrise and over a ford near Shankend; a second came across the old ‘Thief’s Road’ from Liddesdale (the ‘Maiden’s Way’ may be essentially the same route) joining the existing road near Dod farm and hence up towards Hawick; a third came from Harelaw (between Lilliesleaf and Hassendean), along the north side of Bewlie Moor and Chapel Moor to Groundstone Heights, then crossing the Hawick-to-Selkirk road, passing behind Drinkstone Hill to Harden Cottage, then along the back of Borthwickshiel to Borthwickbrae Burnfoot, Milsington, Deanburnhaugh, Craik, Howpasley and over the hills into Eskdalemuir; a fourth road went from Newlands (on the Hassendean-Lilliesleaf road), passing Hassendean Common to Moorfield, then following the Hawick-to-Selkirk road until Boghall, then the ‘Pover Road Ends’, Stouslie, Dykeneuk, towards the Cala Burn, past Whitehaugh, Wilton Dean, turning right to Brieryhill, connecting with Overhall-Wiltonburn road, behind Highchers Hill and by Harden Burnfoot to Borthwick Mains and on to the upper Borthwick valley; and a fifth road came over the Limekilnedge and up the Slitrig valley, crossed a ford at Newmill-on-Slitrig, passed behind Coliforthill (still marked as a drove road on the Ordnance Survey map) to join the Lover’s Lane, merging with the old high road to Newcastle at Ormiston, and hence via Birneyknowe, Appotside, the Forkins and on to the Carter Bar to Newcastle or via the Note-o-the-Gate to Liddesdale. Another choice was to leave the road at Cleuch Head, passing between Wolfelee Hill and Mackside Hill to join part of the Wheel Causeway and hence via Wheelkirk and Deadwater into Northumberland. The route through the Borthwick valley could also pass through Deanburnhaugh past Girnwood, over to East Buccleuch, and on towards Eskdalemuir (partly marked on Mitchell’s 1851 map of Selkirkshire), and there was another route past Muselee and over to Teviothead or Commonside (following part of the Catrail), connecting to Hawick via Old Northhouse. There was also a piece of drove road between Spittal Tower and Dykes. The names Kimmelcuttie (in the Borthwick) and Lightpipe (on Hawick Common) may have related to places where drovers stopped for a smoke. Note that some parts of drove roads were not marked in any way, but just represented an understood right of way. Because of this, drovers would often wander across some farms, with fights sometimes breaking out with shepherds guarding their own flocks and pastures.

drowe (drow) n., arch. a cold, damp mist, drizzle, particularly in the phrase ‘a Liddesdale drowe’ – ‘I have heard an old lady remark, quoting a local saw: A Liddesdal drow Weets a Tibidull [Teviotdale] man Throw and throw’ [BM1933], ‘The daggy drowe comes drifflin on’ [ECS], ‘...dog-luggit ...tidy-merked Wi mony a drowe and drookin’’ [DH], ‘Ah weel, my man, I dinna doobt You’ll meet a canny drowe ...’ [WL], v., arch. to drizzle – ‘...Into shabby

drucken (dru-kin) adj., arch. drunken, addicted to alcohol – ‘May’e plenty hae o’ gospel gear, Braw godly foes, An’, odsake, Jamie, aye beware O’ drucken plays’ [JoHa], ‘Take my advice, though but a brute: Leave off ilk drucken, rantin’ rout’ [JoHa], ‘Moo indeed, ye drucken auld thief that ocht tae be ashamed o’ yer sel’ [JEDM], ‘She’ll ca’ me a drucken auld deevil An’ try an’ look roosed a’ day!’ [RM], ‘Bousie wi flourish, My rowan beams Like a drucken bride . . .’ [DH], ‘The wine was flowin’, the haa was ringing Wi’ drucken lausches, and the soun’ o’ singing’ [WL], ‘. . . the bust o Thomson which was ti be crooned as the culmination o the ceremony bein smashed in a drucken frolic afore its erection’ [IW], ‘The day is treated like a big picnic, even if for some it’s a gei drucken yin’ [IW], pp., arch. drank, drunken – ‘I ha’e drucken the ocean when ance he began’ [JT], ‘A felt A cood heh drucken waeter . . . till ma lugs played crack!’ [ECS].

drugget (dru-gi) n., arch. a coarse cloth made of worsted and hemp woven together. It was manufactured locally on the hand-loom in the late 18th century.

the Druids (thu-droo-idz) n., pl. ancient mystical British priest class, supposed to have been associated with the Mote and other local places. Whether they ever existed at all is debated, but certainly there is nothing to link them with Hawick. There is also sometimes claimed to be a connection between the wearing of oak leaves on Common Riding Friday and the Druids. Their supposed connection with the Mote may be entirely the fault of Sir Walter Scott – ‘Dimly he view’d the Moat-hill’s mound, Where Druid shades still flitted round’ [SW], ‘Hawick shall triumph’ mid destruction’ Was a Druids dark prediction’ [JH], ‘It first be torn not by the plough The ancient bonny green Moat-Knowe: For sair I fear it, too, maun fall, Though reared by hands Druidical!’ [AD], ‘And this snug little town that nestles down Where druid and pagan prayed . . .’ [TK].

Drumlanrig (*dru-lan-reeg, *dru-lan-rig, dru-lan-dree) n. title of the house of Douglas, particularly applied to refer to James Douglas, who granted Hawick its 1537 charter. The lands are in Nithsdale, Dumfriesshire, about 15 miles north of Dumfries. They were owned by Douglases since at least the early 14th century and the Barony was granted by James, Earl of Douglas, to his illegitimate son William some time in the period 1384–88; this started the line of Douglases of Drumlanrig. The lands reverted to their superior (the Crown) several times in the 15th century and also for 32 years after the death of William of Drumlanrig at Flodden. The arms of the Douglases of Drumlanrig was the quartered arms of Douglas and Mar, with a red bordure added, later changed to gold, on which was the red royal treasure, and their motto is ‘Forward’. The present version of the castle was constructed in the late 17th century and is owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch – ‘We’ll a’ hie to the muir a-riding; Drumlanrig gave it for providing’ [AB], ‘‘Twas then Drumlanrig, generous donor, Gave (immortal be his honour!’ . . .’ [JH] (the origin of the name is uncertain, but possibly ‘ridge long ridge’, with the first element either Cumbriac or Gaelic; note the variety of pronunciations and the huge variety of former spellings; it is ‘Drumlangrig’ in 1353/4, ‘Drumlangryg’ in 1357, ‘Drumlangrig’ in 1407 and 1412, ‘Drumlangryg’ in 1415, ‘Drumlangryge’ and ‘Dromlingryg’ in 1427, ‘Drumlanrig’ and ‘Drumlanrygk’ in 1452, ‘Drumlanrig’ in 1459, ‘Drumlanrig’ in 1464/5, 1479 and 1484, ‘Drumlanryk’ in 1491/2, ‘Drumlanrik’ in 1494, ‘Drumlanrig’ in 1501 and 1502, ‘Drumlanark’ in 1511, ‘Drumlanrig’ and ‘Drumlanryk’ in 1514, ‘Drumlanerk’ in 1536/7, ‘Drumlanrig’ in 1557, ‘Drumlanrig’ in 1563, ‘Drumlanirk’ in 1565 and ‘Drumlenrick’ in 1661).

Drumlanrig (*dru-lan-reeg, dru-lan-dree) n. popular name for Drumlanrig School and surrounding area (many different pronunciations exist).

the Drumlanrig Bar (thu-dru-lan-reeg-bawr) n. pub at 29–31 Drumlanrig Square.

Drumlanrig Brig (dru-lan-reeg-brig) n. Drumlanrig Bridge, the main bridge over the Slitrig, originally called Slitrig Bridge. It was built by public subscription in 1776–77, with stone from a Bedrule quarry, and formed of two flat arches. It made a dramatic improvement to the town, giving greater accessibility between the eastern and western parts than had been possible with the neighbouring Auld Brig and the route through Silver Street. On completion there was a public procession of the town’s piper, the drums and fifes, the Magistrates, Council etc., with a speech on the bridge made by Bailie Hardy while the Cornet James Richardson waved the Flag on top of the bridge. Although a great improvement, it was still quite narrow, being the width of a cart, with a recess on either side. It was widened in 1828 to facilitate the market which met there. Then it was further widened to a triple width structure in 1900, with the stone parapet replaced by ornamental ironwork. This was redesigned after structural strengthening in 1978. The 50th mile-stone from Edinburgh used to stand on the northern parapet.

Drumlanrig Castle (drum-land-reg-kaw-sur) n. castle in Upper Nithsdale in what was formerly Dumfesshire, this was originally the home of the ‘Black’ Douglas family, with the present castle being built in 1679–1691 by William Douglas, the first Duke of Drumlanrig and 3rd Earl of Queensberry. On the death of the 4th Duke of Queensberry the Castle and the Queensberry title passed to the Dukes of Buccleuch, becoming one of the four major Scottish houses they owned (the name comes from the spur of a ‘drum’ or ‘long ridge’ on which the castle is built).

Drumlanrig Hospital (drum-land-reg-hosp-i’-ul) n. the poor-house, turned into an old-folks hospital, situated off a drive at the top left-hand corner of Drumlanrig Square. The building was constructed in 1856/7. It is a 2-storey, 11-bay construction on a rectangular plan, built with whinstone, with red sandstone dressings. It was built to hold 133 inmates, at a cost of £4,000. In WWI it was used as an army hospital. In the 1930s it was renamed Drumlanrig Poor Law Institution and later became a geriatric hospital. It closed in 1994, with many of the residents moving to St. Margaret’s or Crumhaugh House. It was converted into flats in 2009/10. A gable contained stonework saved from the Buccleuch Memorial, which was removed during the latest renovations. It is a grade B listed building.

Drumlanrig Place (drum-land-reg-plis) n. street in the West End, joining the north side of the Loan a little higher up than the Mote. It was built in 1850–55 and named after the Douglases of Drumlanrig. The corner of the street used to have a public well with water coming from Haggishaa and Dodburn. On the Saturday of the Common Riding the Drums and Fifes stop here after leading the mounted procession up the Loan, and they play Teribus as the riders pass.

Drumlanrig Quadrilles (drum-land-reg-kwad-reelz) n. piano tunes written by William Laidlaw and arranged by R.W. Manning, published in 1886 by Adam Grant.

Drumlanrig Schuil (drum-land-reg-skil) n. Drumlanrig and St. Cuthbert’s Primary School, on the Loan. It started as the Hawick and Wilton Industrial School, built in the West-End around 1855. It was supported by the Duke of Buccleuch at the suggestion of Rev. Dr. MacRae. It was taken over by the new School Board in 1872 and a new school was built in 1873 by public subscription in a field behind Nos. 13 and 15 Loan, being renamed Drumlanrig. The small school associated with West Port Church merged with it in 1875. The pupils from St. Cuthbert’s School joined in 1956, when the name was extended. The school was entirely rebuilt starting in 1960, with several more recent additions. School Inspectors’ Reports for 1874–1953 are in the National Archives. The earliest known photograph of the school is from about 1906. James Ker was Headmaster from 1860, John Fowler from 1860 and Basil Wilson in the mid-1900s.

Drumlanrig’s March (drum-land-reg-mawrch) n. name used for the song or tune ‘Teribus’ in the 18th century (as described by Robert Wilson).

Drumlanrig Square (drum-land-reg-skwär) n. open area between the Howegate and the Loan, known as ‘the Raws’ prior to 1886 when it was the site of the Fore Raw, the Back Raw and the Mid Raw. J.P. Alison designed some houses there, particularly at Nos. 26 and 31 in about 1891 and No. 16 in 1901. It changed considerably with demolition at the end of the 19th century and with the construction of the gardens, clock and Brown Fountain in the centre in 1910. Since then it has popularly been known as ‘the Square’. Eldon Housing carried out extensive renovations on the south side of the Square in 1997. It has housed several pubs, including the Drumlanrig Bar and Barclay’s currently, as well as other businesses (named after Douglas of Drumlanrig, the ‘generous donor’).

Drumlanrig’s Toor (drum-land-regz-toor, -tow-ur) n. the oldest building in Hawick, being a fortified ‘L’-shaped tower dating mainly to the 1550s, surrounded by later building work, particularly from the 18th century. There is also some evidence of an earlier building on the site, which probably replaced the Baron’s wooden tower on cus of unrest associated with the county elections to Carlisle to Edinburgh. The Tower was also the staging post for the main stagecoach from a spinning mill. From about 1760 until 1862 it was the first landlord, running successfully for 1756. In 1773 (or perhaps 1771) the Duke of Buccleuch took over the tower (and the lands around Hawick) in 1671. Covenanters (led by Thomas Turnbull of Stanhill) successfully laid siege to it in 1679, in order to take the militia arms stored within. It was then derelict until about 1701. Anne Duchess of Buccleuch had the Tower renovated, particularly in 1702–04, turning it into a major residence. It was extended to its present proportions and used as a country retreat from the main family seat at Dalkeith. It was used by troops during the Jacobite rebellions of 1715 and 1745 when they passed through the town. It was repaired in 1730–32, and when the Duke of Buccleuch paid tax for 42 windows in Hawick in 1748 that was probably for the Tower. By about 1750, with the Scotts moving to Bowhill, it was abandoned as a town house; there is an inventory of the Duke’s furniture and pictures there in that year and again in 1756. In 1773 (or perhaps 1771) it was converted into an inn, with Michael Stevenson as the first landlord, running successfully for two centuries. Probably around this time the additional stables and other buildings were added in the back. Robert Armstrong was landlord in the 1790s, followed by Billy Brown. In the early 19th century the walls were thinned as part of renovations, the material being used to build part of a spinning mill. From about 1760 until 1862 it was the staging post for the main stagecoach from Carlisle to Edinburgh. The Tower was also the focus of unrest associated with the county elections of 1832, 1835 and 1841, when it was the main poling station in Hawick. It was sold by the Buccleuch family in 1935 and run as a private hotel, later becoming part of the North British Hotels chain. A plaque was unveiled by the Dowager Duchess of Buccleuch in 1951, stating that ‘Incorporated within these walls is the Black Tower of Drumlanrig’. The stabilizing area became Croall Bryson’s garage and was also used for a while by the ambulance service. By the 1970s it had fallen into a state of disrepair and was closed as a hotel in 1981, being purchased by the local authority in 1985. It was renovated from 1991 by Gray Marshall Associates for the Scottish Historic Buildings Trust and reopened in 1995 as a visitor attraction. ‘Drumlanrig’s Tower Tourist and Information Centre’ contained displays focussing on the history of Hawick, the area and the tower, as well as a gift shop. Parts of the earlier building are now uncovered, including a vaulted cellar and the baronial hall. Much of the garage area was redeveloped to make Lovel Court in the early 1990s. In 2010 the tower was renovated again as the ‘Borders Textile Towerhouse’, with a focus on textiles history. A plaque outside marks the visit of Sir Walter Scott with the Wordsworths in 1803, and the iron door knocker bears the date 1677. It was in former times extensively used for events during the Common Riding, and some of those uses have been resumed – ‘The grey old walls of Drumlanrig’s tower Rang out with a heartening cheer’ [JB], ‘… Enduring as her ancient moat Or dark Drumlanrig’s tow’r’ [JL], ‘… To share the gen’rous feast and quaff the goblet bright, Within the storied walls of old Drumlanrig’s Tower’ [JEDM].

Drumlenrig (drum-len-reeg) n. Drumlanrig, often referring to Drumlanrig School and surrounding area (note that multiple pronunciation variants exist).

drumlie (drum-lee) adj., arch. muddy, turbid, cloudy, discoloured (especially of a river in spate) – ‘Eh whow! Bit ma een are drumlie …’ [RM], ‘Before the sheep had made the water ‘drumly’, or again after it had cleared …’ [BM1905], ‘Throwe drumly foreign dub and clairt …’ [DH], ‘Guid ale keeps the heart aboon, Better far than drumlie water’ [GWe], ‘The waters o’ the Teviot Are drumlie at Trowmill …’ [WL], also of the weather, dark, gloomy (also spelled ‘drumly’).

drummer (dru-mur) n. In former times the duty of one of the Burgh Officers was to beat the drum around the town to announce proclamations, to ‘drum out’ criminals, etc. Specifically he would parade the town daily at 5 a.m. and 10 p.m. (the times being recorded as 4 a.m. and 8 p.m. in 1729). In 1672 the Bailies requested that the Bailie of Regality use the Town’s own drummer and piper to ‘set the fair’ (rather than those from another town). He would also lead processions at the Common Riding, with the town supplying ribbons to decorate his coat. He would additionally announce public sales at the church door. At Christmas it was traditional for the drummer and bellman to go round the town collecting money for themselves for ringing the bells (with it being recorded in 1721 that the ‘drummer is allowed ten shillings yearly and his Yuill wages’). All of these duties ended in the early 19th century, with the last ‘drumming out of town’ happening in 1824. However, town drummers continued as part of the Drums and Fifes band. Note that in 1703 payment for coats was due to ‘the officers, pyper, and drumer’, suggesting that at that time the positions of Town Piper and Town Drummer were separate from those of the Burgh Officers, although this distinction is less clear at other times. Thomas Boyd is described as a drummer in Hawick in 1713. Robert Wilson is described as a drummer in 1781 and 1791 – ‘And list again th’ inspiring strain Led on by ‘Wat the Drummer’’ [JT].

Drummond (dru-mind) n. Agnes (17th C.) mother of 2 illegitimate children of Walter Scott, 1st Earl of Buccleuch; one of these was John Scott of Gorrenberry. She later married Patrick Graham. In 1635 she petitioned the 2nd Earl, pointing out that she had received nothing since the late Earl’s decease 2 years earlier; she was given a small sum under the condition that she asked for nothing more. Alexander (b.1808/9) originally from Gordon in Berwickshire, he was farmer at Bewlie in Lilliesleaf Parish. In 1861 he was farming 349 acres there and employing 8 people. He was also listed there in 1868. His wife was Ann and their children included Agnes and Robert. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1733 he witnessed a baptism for William Easton, resident of Heap. He married Helen Scott and their children included James (b.1726). Archibald Hamilton ‘Airchie’ (1868–1915) 2nd son of George, corn merchant of the Sandbed, he also became a corn merchant. He was Cornet in 1888, his horse being called ‘Lady Oliver’, after his Lass, and he won one of his own Cornet’s Races on it. He was well known as a cyclist, winning many races on grass tracks, and was generally an all-round athlete. He was one of the founding members of the Callants’ Club in 1903 and President in 1906. He was also President of Hawick R.F.C. in 1912. It has been said that the face of the callant on the Horse Monument was modelled after his. He married Elizabeth (1872–1966), daughter of Andrew Ekron. Their children included Jessie, Anne, Elizabeth, Margaret Ekron (1899–1988) and Archibald Ekron (1905–62). George (b.1832/3) from Greenlaw, he was a corn merchant in Hawick. In 1861 he was living a 3 Sandbed. He married Annie Hamilton, who was from Melrose. Their children included: Isabella Hendry (b.1860); Annie (b.1862); Annie Ovens (again, b.1864); Jessie Hamilton (b.1866); Archibald Hamilton (b.1868), who was Cornet; George Ovens (b.1870); John William (b.1872); and Annie Hamilton (again, b.1874). James (c.1615–75) 3rd Earl of Perth. He was son of John, 2nd Earl of Drummond and Jean Ker, who was daughter of Robert, 1st Earl of Roxburgh. In 1634 he inherited one third of the properties of his uncle William, Master of Roxburgh, with the other parts going to his aunts, Maria and Isabella. This included many lands around Kelso, but also Alton near Hawick. His brother William later became 2nd Earl of Roxburgh. He married Anne Gordon, daughter of the Marquess of Huntly. John of Stobshall (c.1438–1519) son of Sir Malcolm and Mariota Murray. He was 1st Lord Drummond. He was appointed a Lord of Session in 1471 and later was made Justiciary General of Scotland. He acted as Depute Justiciar at the Circuit Court in Jedburgh and Selkirk in 1494. He was a Scottish Commissioner to negotiate Border grievances with England in 1495, 1511, 1513 and 1514. Sir Malcolm (d.1403) eldest son of Sir John, 11th of Lennox and Mary Montifex. He was head of a powerful, land-owning family. He married Isobel, only daughter of William, 1st Earl of Douglas; she was Countess of Mar in her own right. He was present at the Battle of Otterburn in 1388, where the death of his brother-in-law James, 2nd Earl of Douglas, led to him succeeding to the Earldom of Mar. His wife also held the Barony of Cavers, and he is recorded in 1390 as superior of Cavers when the Gourlays were confirmed in their lands of Rulewood. He may have acted as Sheriff of Roxburghshire from about 1389. He died in captivity after being captured by some opponents, perhaps related to Alexander Stewart, ‘the Wolf of Badenoch’, who later married his widow and acquired the Mar titles. He had no children. Margaret (17th/18th C.) Hawick resident who was convicted in 1697 of stealing several items of clothing and a large loaf.

Drummond an Laing’s

n. hosiery firm on Wilton path (near the top of the ‘Hunder Steps’) in the early 20th century. It was formed as a partnership in 1908 by John Laing and his son Ivan, but taken over by Henderson’s in 1913. This amalgamated into Innes & Henderson in 1919, which later became Braemar Knitwear.

drum oot (drum-oo’-o-toon) v. to forcefully reject, overwhelm – ‘A thought oo shou’d carry on, but A was drummed oot’. This expression derives from the expression ‘drum out of town’ a form of banishment from a town and frequently a county, which in Hawick continued well into the 19th century, with the last recorded occasion being 1824. The drummer in the last years was Caleb Rutherford, assisted by Burgh officers Sandy Bryson and ‘Tufty’ Wilson. The ‘Rogue’s March’ would be played on the drum throughout the procession from the old jail to the toll-bar.

drums and fifes (drumz-in-fis) n. the combination of drums and flutes began to be used as military marching bands in the 16th century, reaching its peak of popularity in the 17th century. A fifer is first mentioned in Hawick town records in 1797. In 1798 the town gave a donation for the Volunteers to purchase drums and fifes. Selkirk and Langholm both have drum and fife bands, and other towns like Edinburgh used to – ‘I hear the drums and fifes gang by and clatter o’ horse and folk’ [JEDM], ‘…For the drums and fifes are calling, and the Cornet’s riding by’ [JYH], ‘…Like the drums and fifes oot airy, And the jowe o’ St. Mary’s bell’ [WL], ‘That wakens again the auld mem’ries tae life – The jubilant strain o’ the drum and the fife!’ [CB].

the Drums an Fifes (thu-drumz-in-fis) n. the band that plays a significant role at many of the ceremonies associated with the Common Riding. They are often referred to as ‘the Cornet’s Band’, and do not play officially outside Common Riding season. The first record of a fifer at the Common Riding is in 1797, and individual drummers were employed much earlier than that (from at least 1672). The band itself (with 2 drummers and 2 fifers) can be traced back to at least 1823. The tunics or uniforms date from 1907, and by the early 1900s the complement was 3 drummers and 5 fifers. Their official duties begin with the Picking, and they are usually considered to start the Common Riding proper (although opinions differ on whether this is on the Thursday night or Friday morning). At the Colour Bussing procession, they start from the Kirk Wynd at 6 p.m. on the Thursday night, visiting the approximate sites of the old tolls to mark the boundaries of the old town, playing ‘Teribus’ the whole time. They also accompany the Cornet on his walk round town, playing specific tunes at specific locations. On the Friday morning they begin at 6 a.m. (with ‘Teribus’) in the Kirkwynd, proceed to the Smuffin, and follow the same route around the old tolls to wake up the Town. Having received their rum and milk refreshments, they start again at the Kirkwynd (with ‘Dumbarton Drums’), walking to the old Loan Toll, then along the High Street to the Horse. At about 7.30 a.m. (playing ‘John Paiterson’s Mare Rides Foremost’) they walk from the Kirkwynd to the Tower Know, via Drumlanrig Square and the Howegate. They join the Cornet’s Breakfast, and later join the Procession, leading the Cornet and his supporters. From the top of the Loan to Thorterdykes they play ‘Teribus’ and ‘Jockey to the Fair’ in preparation for the Friday Chase. They also lead the march from Drumlanrig Square to the Mill Path for the Song Singing and on to the Town Hall and Tower. On the Saturday they start at 8 a.m., marching from West Port to the Horse, and later play at Drumlanrig Place as the riders pass. After the Moor they lead the Cornet to the Town Hall for the Handing-Back, playing ‘Teribus’ twice through when he emerges with the Flag. Finally they lead the procession to the Tower, with the Principal carried on others’ shoulders, where the Bull Reel is danced. In all they march about 12 miles each Common Riding. The band’s complement varies, but now consists of 3 drummers and about 10 fifers. Their most characteristic tunes are ‘Rumblin’ Brig’, ‘Teribus’ and ‘Dumbarton Drums’, and at specific times they also play ‘Pawkie Paiterson’, ‘Hazeldean’, ‘Jockey to the Fair’ and ‘John Paiterson’s Meir Rides Foremost’. Their repertoire has also included ‘Auld Brig’, ‘This is no my ain Hoose’, ‘The Girl I Left Behind Me’, ‘Cock of the North’, ‘Teribus’, ‘Stumpy’ and ‘Kate Dalrymple’ – ‘Our standard is reared once more, my lads, and its folds are flaunting free, The drums and fifes bestir the air in their summons to you and me’ [JEDM], ‘Anon the drums and fifes send forth their strains Of martial music, rousing old and young, And many a glance from friend reveals The pleasane thoughts unspoken by the tongue’ [JCG].

Dryburgh

Dryburgh (dri-bu-ru) n. area around Dryburgh Abbey, once a thriving town, linked to Jedburgh and Melrose by fords across the Tweed. It was razed by the English in 1545. The estate was held by the Erskines in the 18th century.

Dryburgh Abbey (dri-bu-ru-aw-bee) n. picturesque abbey on a loop in the Tweed between St. Boswells and Newtown St. Boswells. It was built around 1150 by the Order of Premonstratensians (also known as the White Canons) from Alnwick. The site is only a few miles from Melrose Abbey and not much further from Jedburgh. Like the other local abbeys, it was dedicated to Mary. The abbey was ruined by Hertford’s men in 1545. The Abbey was purchased in 1780 by David Erskine, the Earl of Buchan, who carried out improvements and preservation. It has some remarkably complete ruins, including a rose window and the Chapter House. The grounds contain a very old yew tree, which tradition says was planted by the monks in 1136, before the foundation of the abbey. This was also the central location for David Erskine’s planned ‘Temple of Caledonian Fame’, which helped preserve the structure and explains the elaborate historical Erskine Obelisk. The Abbey is the burial place of Sir Walter Scott and Field Marshal Earl Haig – ‘Praise to the bard, immortal Scott, Who sleeps in ‘Dryburgh Bowers’ …’[JT] (the name derives from the Old English for ‘dry burgh’!).

Dryburgh Abbey Hoose (dri-bu-ru-aw-bee-hoo) n. mansion house near Dryburgh Abbey, substantially rebuilt in 1877, and home of the Erskines. It is now run as Dryburgh Abbey Country House Hotel. The Temple of the Muses near there is topped by a bust of James Thomson, author of ‘The Seasons’. There is also a dovecote nearby.

Drycleuchlea (dri-kloo-ch-lee) n. farmstead just to the north-west of Redfordgreen. This is the steadying of ‘Drycleuchshele’ mentioned along with Hindhope and Redford in 1501. It had been occupied for the 6 previous years by Robert Scott. In 1510 it was ‘DrICLEUCHSHEIL’ when feued by Alexander, Lord Home. In 1621 it was valued at £15 13s 4d. It was inherited by Thomas Scott of Whitslade from his brother Sir Walter in 1655. The superiority was still held by the Homes when inherited by 3 heirs portioners in 1693. Adam Scott was tenant there (and in Easter Redfordgreen) in 1716. It was listed along with Redfordgreen in the 1785 and 1802 Land Tax Rolls. John Anderson was tenant in ‘Drycleugh’ around 1800 (it is ‘Drycleuchscheil’ in 1621, ‘Drycleughsheill’ in 1655 and 1693 and ‘Drycleughsheils’ in 1802).

Dryden

Dryden (dri-din) n. valley just before Teviothead, with Dryden Fell and Drydenhope nearby. There was formerly a fortified house here. The lands of ‘draden’ were said to be among those (along with Commonside and Harwood) gained by the Muirs of Rowallan through marriage with an heiress of the Comyns in about 1260; there is no original document to confirm this, but it is stated in a 17th century family history by poet and politician Sir William Muir. Philip of Dryden, who signed the Ragman Roll in 1296, may have held these lands. In 1462 the lands were given (along with Commonside and Over Harwood) by Stephen Scott of Muirhouse to Robert Muir of Rowallan in security for a loan. They were returned to Robert Scott of ‘Dogehauach’ on full payment of the loan in 1477. This could be the Dryden where Turnbulls were recorded in 1493 and 1494/5. John Turnbull and William Anderson were there in 1502. Stephen Scott’s son George of Whames, had the lands confirmed to him in a grant of ‘warrandice’ in 1508/9. In 1511 the lands were listed among those held ‘in tenantry’ by the Baron of Hawick, this continuing in the list of 1572 for the retour of James Douglas of Drumlanrig. The lands were sold by Alan Mossman to the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1532. James Cessford was shepherd of the King’s lands there in 1540 when he was paid for grain. In 1574 they were listed among the lands of Scott of Buccleuch, but held ‘in chief’ of Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig (for payment of a red rose), and valued at £5 ‘in time of peace’. The lands are still listed among those held by the Baron of Hawick in 1615. The lands were listed in 1663 (and confirmed in 1686) among those owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch. John Scott was shepherd there in 1738 and 1739. Robert Nichol was shepherd there in the mid-19th century. Running from here over Hunt Law to the north is a linear earthwork, running about ¾ of a mile (the origin is probably Old English ‘dryge demu’ meaning ‘the dry valley’, appropriate since this valley is noticeably dry compared with the surrounding land; the name
Dryden

Dryden (dr-I-din) n. farm just north of Ashkirk, off the A7. Along with Headshaw, it was owned by a branch of the Scotts, being sold by Robert of Headshaw to Andrew Hay in 1605. However, John Scott of Headshaw had a charter again for the lands in 1636 and in 1691 they were inherited by Mary Scott from her brother John of Headshaw. The lands were valued in 1643 and 1678 at £290. They were probably sold along with Headshaw in 1696 to the Elliots of Minto. In 1694 there were 5 people resident there who were taxed for having a house with a hearth, as well as 6 poor people who were unassessed. In 1705 they were included among Sir Gilbert Elliot’s lands as part of a new Barony of Headshaw. Thomas Kedie was tenant there in 1717. Most of the lands there were leredent to Dr. William Elliot in 1779. They were listed among the properties of Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto in 1788, with the same value of £290. William Huntly is recorded as farmer there in 1797. In the 1830s the farm was still owned by the Earl of Minto. James Young was farmer in the 1860s. Into the south wall of the stable yard has been built a disc quern, said to have been found when clearing an old water mill. About 400 m north-east of the farm there are traces of rig lines (it appears as ‘Drydenn’ on Gordon’s c. 1650 map and Blaeu’s 1654 map and is ‘Dry dean’ on Ainslie’s 1773 map; it is ‘Drydenn’ in 1694 and ‘Drydon’ in 1797).

Dryden (dr-I-din) n. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His daughter Janet was baptised in 1704. Adam (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish who married ‘Catron’ Scott in Robertson Parish in 1722. Adam (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish who married Betty Pringle in 1761. Their children included Alison (b.1762). Adam (b.1820/1) spinner in Hawick. In 1851 he was living on O’Connell Street. His wife was Agnes and their children included Isabella. Alexander (19th C.) married Margaret Neilson in Hawick in 1845. Their children (baptised in Wilton Parish) included: Alexander (b.1856); Helen (b.1859); Adam (b.1867). He could be the weaver of Wilton who was recorded in Jedburgh Jail in 1864 and 1867. Andrew (17th/18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish who married Isabell Best in 1693. His children included Andrew (b.1694) and James (b.1697). Andrew (18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His children included: Isabel (b.1728); John (b.1733); Thomas (b.1736); and George (b.1743). Andrew (18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His children included: Euphan (b.1762); Andrew (b.1757); Charles (b.1767); Charles (again, b.1769); John (b.1770); and Margaret (b.1773). Andrew (1779–1848) son of Thomas and Jean Thomson. His father was blacksmith in St. Boswells, where he was born. He lived at Wilton Dean, then in 1810 moved to Lees and in 1818 to Branxholme Park Woodfoot. In 1803 he married Janet (1785–1864), daughter of John Cairns. Their children were: Mary Ann (‘Annie’, b.1803), who married William Rae; Thomas (b.1806), who married Agnes Kennedy; John (b.1808), married Margaret Shiel; Robert (b.1811), married Mary Clerk; Jane (b.1813), married James Brown; Andrew (b.1817), married Elizabeth Kennedy; William (b.1820); James (b.1822), married Mary Swan from Lilliesleaf; and Walter Kerr (b.1827). The witnesses in 1803 were Thomas Cairns and James Kerr. The family emigrated to Galt, Canada in 1834 when cholera was visiting the area. They established a home there near North Dunfries known as ‘the Dryden Settlement’. Andrew (b.1817) son of Andrew. He was a wright of Everhall and also a member of Alars Kirk. Archibald (15th C.) listed along with John and William among the Roxburghshire men who had remission from James IV in 1488/9 for their support of James III at Stirling. It may be that the 3 men were brothers. It is claimed that he stayed in Roxburghshire, while John and William moved to England (although there is no proof of this); he may therefore be an ancestor of local Drydens. It is also suggested that he was a son of Henry, recorded on the council of James Kennedy, Bishop of St. Andrews in about 1452. Gavin (17th C.) resident of Cavers who was listed in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the ‘Gavin’ who married Janet Miller in 1695 and whose children baptised in Cavers Parish included: Margaret (b.1697); James (b.1699); Janet (b.1702); John (b.1704); George (b.1706); John (again, b.1708); Margaret (again, b.1711); and Euphan (b.1714). He may be the Gavin whose daughter Margaret married Adam Turnbull in Minto Parish in 1739. Gavin (17th/18th C.) shepherd at Adderstoneshiel. His daughter Margaret was baptised in Kirkton Parish in 1718. Gavin (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. His daughter Bessie was baptised in 1723. His forename appears to be written ‘Gain’ and he... was living at ‘Foulbrae’ (although it is unclear where this wass). Gavin (18th/19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included: John (b.1776); Robert (b.1778); and Isabel (b.1781), who may have married John Tudhope. Gavin (18th/19th C.) farmer at Cavers Knowes, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 3 horses. He could be the Gavin whose children baptised in Cavers included William (b.1784), who was a millwright in Wilton. George (16th C.) recorded in 1541 on a list of tenants and other associates of James Douglas of Cavers when he complained about his farm of Whitriggs being burned by Walter Scott of Branxholme. He is probably the James who married ‘Manie’ Henderson and their children, baptised in Roberton Parish, included Helen (b.1680) and Adam (b.1684). The witnesses in 1684 were Robert Scott and Andrew Donald. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His daughter Janet was baptised in 1692. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, who married Janet Mack in 1697. He may be the James whose son William was baptised in 1703. James (17th/18th C.) blacksmith at Newmill. In 1720 he witnessed a baptism for Robert Scott in Branxholme Town. He married Margaret Riddell in 1715. Their children included: Robert (b.1718); Walter (b.1720); William (b.1723); Walter (again, b.1726); and Margaret (b.1729). An unnamed son baptised in 1716 was probably also his child as well as Margaret (b.1730), with mother’s name given as ‘Ann Riddel’. The witnesses in 1718 were the older and younger William Thomsons from Newmill, in 1720 were Robert Scott in Branxholme Town and William Thomson in Newmill, in 1723 were William and Robert Thomson in Newmill and in 1725 were William Thomson and John Riddell. In 1724 he was witness to a baptism at Newmill. In 1740 the witnesses to a baptism for William Thomson at Newmill (and also for Walter Hume, carrier at Braxholme Town, who married Helen Dryden) were ‘James Drydens Elder & Younger Smiths’; this suggest that he had an older son who was also James. He was probably related to the later Drydens in that area. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Appletreehall in 1723. He married Isobel, daughter of Andrew Rodger, in Wilton Parish in 1712. Their children included: Bessie (b.1716); Margaret (b.1729). An unnamed son baptised in 1716 was probably also his child as well as Margaret (b.1730), with mother’s name given as ‘Ann Riddel’. The witnesses in 1718 were the older and younger William Thomsons from Newmill, in 1720 were Robert Scott in Branxholme Town and William Thomson in Newmill, in 1723 were William and Robert Thomson in Newmill and in 1725 were William Thomson and John Riddell. In 1724 he was witness to a baptism at Newmill. In 1740 the witnesses to a baptism for William Thomson at Newmill (and also for Walter Hume, carrier at Braxholme Town, who married Helen Dryden) were ‘James Drydens Elder & Younger Smiths’; this suggest that he had an older son who was also James. He was probably related to the later Drydens in that area. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Appletreehall in 1723. He married Isobel, daughter of Andrew Rodger, in Wilton Parish in 1712. Their children included: Bessie (b.1716); and Helen (b.1723). The witnesses in 1723 were John Dryden (surely related) and John Scott. He is probably the James who witnessed baptisms in Wilton in 1723 for James Letthead in Boonraw, in 1725 for John Waugh in Appletreehall, in 1728 for John Blyth in Stirches, in 1729 for James Easton in Alton and John Miller in Apple treehall and for others in the 1730s (sometimes with John). However, it is hard to tell which of these were him and which were the contemporary James at Clarilaw, who married Alison Irvine in 1721. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Gibson and their children included Isobel (b.1719). James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Gibson and their children included Isobel (b.1719).
of Cavers Parish. He is recorded at Denholm in 1719 and Birneyknowe in 1725 and 1726. His children included: James (b.1717); Janet (b.1719); George (b.1725); and Margaret (b.1726). Robert (b.1729), baptised at Kirkton Parish, may also have been his child. James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, who married Margaret Turnbull in 1732. He may be the James who was at Ashybank in 1733 and 1741. His children included William (b.1733) and Bessie (b.1741). John (b.1736) and Margaret (b.1738) may also have been his children. James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, who was recorded at Middle in 1736 when his son Walter was baptised. It is possible that Helen (b.1733) and Marion (b.1740) were also his children. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Clarilaw in 1724, 1735 and 1737. He is probably the James who (along with John) witnessed baptisms for Thomas Liddell, resident of Clarilaw, in 1727 and 1729. He may also be the James who witnessed a baptism for William Gray, resident of Clarilaw, in 1738. He married Alison Irvine in 1721 and their children included: Adam (b.1722); Many (b.1724); Margaret (b.1725); Many (again, b.1728); Anna (b.1730); James (b.1732); Mary (b.1734); Elizabeth (b.1735); and Alexander (b.1737). The witnesses in 1724 were James Irvine and John Dryden (who were surely related to his wife and him), in 1735 were Robert Graham and William Nichol and in 1737 were Andrew Martin and James Turnbull. He may be the same as the farmer at Clarilaw. He may be the James who witnessed a baptism for John Smith (resident of the Stirches area) and Margaret Dryden (perhaps his daughter) in 1747. Note there are several men of the same name living in this and neighbouring parishes at this time. James (18th C.) farmer at Clarilaw in Wilton Parish, tenant of the Buccleuch Estates. A record of 1744 discusses what he would do in the event of a division of Hassendean Common, which adjoined his land. He may be the James who witnessed a baptism for Thomas Laidlaw at Stirches in 1747. He is probably also the James who witnessed baptisms in Wilton Parish for James Lorraine in 1753. He is then probably the James who witnessed several baptisms in Wilton (e.g. at Stouslie, Appletreehall, Heap and Clarilaw) in 1758, 1759, 1769, 1770, 1771, 1772 and 1773 (suggesting that he may have been an Elder in the Kirk). He may be the same man as the James who married Alison Irvine. James (18th C.) married Barbara Scott in Hawick Parish in 1754. James (18th C.) married Mary Gray in Hawick Parish in 1760. James (18th C.) married Agnes Turnbull in Wilton Parish in 1766. James (18th/19th C.) smith in Hawick, who was Cornet in 1772. He was referred to as ‘Deacon Dryden’, suggesting that he was Deacon in the Hammermen’s Guild. He is likely to be the James who, along with Walter Freeman, was leader of the ‘Patriots’ who opposed the Council and Bailies in the period 1778–81. In 1778 he and Freeman were jailed in Hawick over the weekend and then taken off to Jedburgh Jail for another 2 days before being bailed. He is mentioned as ‘Deacon Dryden’ in the story of the ‘rebel’ Common Riding of 1809, as one of the men on the West-enders side who helped keep order to avoid bloodshed. He was grandfather of Cornet James Smith and great-grandfather of Cornet John Smith. His Common-Riding cuff-links are still in the Watt family. He is probably the smith who married Agnes Pott (or Potts) in Hawick Parish in 1780; her death is recorded in 1795. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Lurgiescleuch in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’. He could be the James, son of William, born in Hobkirk Parish in 1783. James (18th/19th C.) Hawick resident who owned a horse according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. His could be the property marked ‘Dryden’ on the Howgate on Wood’s 1824 map. He could be the smith who married Agnes Potts (d.1795) in 1780 and who was Cornet in 1772. If so, he married again and was father of Elizabeth (b.c.1800), who married John Smith. James (1746/7–1820) shepherd at Merrylaw. His wife was Jane Pott (d.1838). James (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1795 he married Christian Scott. He may be the same as one of the other Jameses. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Mary Scott and their children included Barbara (b.1799) and Jean (b.1801). John (15th C.) listed as ‘John Drydane’ among the Roxburghshire men who had re- mission in 1488/9 from James IV for their support of the previous King, especially on the battlefield at Stirling. Most of the men appear to have been closely associated with Douglas of Cavers. William and Archibald are also listed, so presumably close relatives. John (16th C.) recorded in 1541 on a list of tenants and other associates of James Douglas of Cavers. He was probably related to George and Thomas, who were also listed. John (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, probably the part corresponding to Hassendean. He married ‘Marie Mure’ in Roberton Parish in 1684. He witnessed a baptism for Walter Clerk in Roberton in 1687. John (17th C.) recorded in the last testament of William Elliot of Harwood and Binks as a debtor ‘for a part of Fairnies’ in 1662. John (17th C.) blacksmith at Newmill on Teviot. He was probably related to the James and John who were blacksmiths there a little later (perhaps father of both of them). He was recorded at Newmill on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, when he paid tax on 2 hearths. He witnessed a baptism for John Beattie in 1673. He is probably the John, married to Agnes Hope, whose children included: John (b.1675); Adam (b.1683); and Agnes (b.1685). Gideon (b.1694), with no mother’s name given, may also be his son. The witnesses in 1675 were Robert Thomson and Alexander Riddell. John (17th/18th C.) smith at Newmill, probably son of the earlier smith at Newmill. He is probably the smith in Newmill who witnessed baptisms for Robert Thomson in Newmill in 1698 and for William Thomson (servant to Gideon Scott of Falnash) in 1702. He is probably also the John who witnessed a baptism for William Allan (in ‘Park’) in 1712. He married Isobel Thomson and their children included: William (b.1700); Adam (b.1703); Helen (b.1705), who married Walter Hume; and Isobell (b.1708). The witnesses in 1700 were Adam Elliot of Arkleton and Robert Thomson in Newmill (who was probably related to his wife), in 1705 were Robert Manuel and William Thomson (also probably an in-law) and in 1708 were Walter Scott at Nether Southfield and John Wilson, tailor in Newbigging. He may be the John, son of blacksmith John, born in Hawick Parish in 1675. He is probably the John who witnessed a baptism for Robert Thomson in Newmill in 1698. He is surely related to James who was blacksmith in Newmill a little later (perhaps his brother). John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Margaret Shiel from Kelso and they had 8 children. John (19th C.) married Agnes Nichol in Hawick in 1841. John (19th C.) married Susan Ritchie in Hawick in 1852. John (19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish who married Isabella Muir. Their children included John (b.1855). John (19th C.) married Elizabeth Fraser in Hawick in 1874. Their children included John (b.1874), whose baptism was recorded in both Hawick and Minto Parishes. Margaret (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. Philip (13th/14th C.) recorded as ‘Philip de Dryden’ when he swore fealty to Edward I of England in 1296. His lands may have been those near Teviothead. Robert (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His daughter Margaret was baptised in 1737. Robert (b.c.1785) farmer in Lilliesleaf Parish. In 1841 he was living at Firth with the slightly older Walter, who was probably his brother. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1826 he and William Thomson were put in charge of the Parish mort-safes. Robert (19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margaret Dalgleish in 1828 and their children included: George (b.1829); and James (b.1835). Robert (19th C.) married Mary Pringle in Hawick in 1834. Robert (1811–75) 3rd son of Andrew and Janet Dryden. He may be the Robert listed at Damside among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835. He married

Mary Clerk. Like the rest of his family he emigrated to Ontario. He had a tavern and blacksmith’s shop in Eramosa Township there. He had 6 children. Robert R. (19th C.) married Isabella Preston in Southdean Parish in 1858. Thomas (16th C.) recorded in 1541 on a list of tenants and other associates of James Douglas of Cavers. He was probably related to George and John, who were also listed. Thomas (17th C.) resident at Clarilaw in Hassendean Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He was probably related to James, who was also listed there. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included William (b.1712). Perhaps the same Thomas also married Isabel Dryden in Cavers in 1725. Thomas (b.1744) son of Andrew, he was born in Crailing Parish. He worked as a wheelwright at Nisbet in Hobkirk Parish in 1817. Thomas (b.1792/3) from Selkirk, he was spinner at a woollen factory and was then a blacksmith at St. Boswells. In 1771 he married Jean, daughter of John Thomson. They had 6 children, Ann, Janet, Andrew (who lived at Wilton Dean), Thomas, Robert and Jean. He secondly married Janet, daughter of Robert Fletcher and had 4 more children, William, Walter, Margaret and Thomas. Thomas (18th/19th C.) married Betty Paterson in Hobkirk Parish in 1817. Thomas (b.1792/3) from Selkirk, he was spinner at a woollen factory in Hawick. He was a member of Allars Kirk. In 1841 he was living at Gibsnose in Wilton. He married Janet Reid in 1816 and their children included: John (b.c.1820); William (b.1820), who became an engineer in Preston; Jane (b.c.1825); Elizabeth (‘Betsy’, b.1824/5); Jessie (b.1828/9); Margaret (b.1830/1); Robert (b.1832/3); Mary; and Thomas (b.1837/8). Thomas L. (b.1806) son of Andrew, he was a wright at Everhall. Like the rest of the family he was involved with Allars Kirk and emigrated to Ontario. He married Agnes Kennedy in 1828. They settled in North Dumfries Township, near Galt in Ontario. He worked as a joiner and then an innkeeper. They had 9 children. Thomas (19th C.) house factor and yarn agent. In 1863 he married Agnes, daughter of baker Walter Wilson. Thomas (19th C.) married Helen Anderson in Wilton Parish in 1866. He may be the Thomas, ‘Engine Smith’, living at Wilton Kirkhouse in 1861. Walter (15th C.) father of William. His son William was recorded in 1493, when the Sheriff of Roxburghshire was fined for his non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. Walter (18th/19th C.) elder of Hobkirk Parish. He was recorded on the heritors council in 1803. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Isabel Douglas and their children included: Nelly (b.1807); Gavin (b.1809); Isabella (b.1813); John (b.1814); Robert (b.1819); and Margaret (b.1821). Walter (b.c.1780) farmer at Firth in Lilliesleaf Parish. In 1841 he was at Firth with Robert (probably his brother), plus Gavin, John, Robert and Helen (probably his children), as well as a female servant. William (15th C.) son of Walter. He was listed at the 1493 Justice-aire in Jedburgh when William Douglas of Cavers was fined for his non-appearance. He was again cited for non-appearance in 1494/5. Other men listed were local and so be was probably from the Cavers or Rulwater areas. Perhaps the same Walter is recorded in 1502 being ‘super aquam de slitrikk’ (i.e. on Slitrig Water) when he had remis-sion for stealing sheep from Bowhill; his surety was George Douglas in the Trows. William (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Margaret Brown and their children included Thomas (b.1680). William (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish who married Rachel Turnbull in 1694. His children included: James (b.1696); and Isabel (b.1698). William (17th C.) resident of Muckle Cote who was listed in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the William who married Margaret Huntly in Cavers Parish in 1697 and whose children baptised in Cavers Parish included Helen (b.1698), Isabel (b.1699), William (b.1700), Adam (b.1700), James (b.1702), William (again, b.1703) and Margaret (b.1704). When Margaret was baptised be was living at West Middle. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. His daughter Helen was baptised in 1707. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish who married Helen Lunn in 1725. He was in Denholm in 1727 and was recorded as herd in Denholm in 1730 and 1733 and also there in 1742. His children (baptised in Cavers) probably included Isabel (b.1727), Janet (b.1730), John (b.1733) and Isabel (again, b.1742). William (18th C.) married Bessie Knox in Wilton Parish in 1749. Their children included: probably Helen (b.1753); Margaret (b.1756), baptised in Cavers Parish; David (b.1759, Hawick), mother’s name ‘Margaret Knocks’; Robert (b.1761, Hawick); and Isabel (b.1766, Hawick), mother’s fore-name ‘Isabel’; Mary (b.1768, Hawick); Margaret (b.1770, Hawick), with mother’s name given as just ‘Knox’. The witnesses in 1766 were the whole congregation. William (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Bessie Fal-side and their children included Mary (b.1746).
Drydenburn

William (18th C.) from Bedrule Parish. His children included: William (b.1781); and an unnamed son (b.1792). Perhaps the same William had a son James baptised in Hobkirk Parish in 1783. William (18th C.) married Margaret Black in Hawick in 1783. William (d.1794) smith whose death is recorded in Hawick. He may be related to James and John who were contemporary blacksmiths. William (b.1784) from Cavers Parish, son of Gavin. He was a millwright in Wilton. He was listed at Dovemount among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835 and 1840. In 1841 and 1851 he was on Wilton Place, probably corresponding to about 30–32 Princes Street and in 1861 he was at about 24 Princes Street. He married Agnes Dobson (from Galashiels) and their children included: Jean (b.1819); Walter (b.1821); Isabel (b.1823); Elizabeth (b.1825); Agnes (b.1830/1); Margaret (b.1832/3); and William (b.1837/8). William (b.1820) born at Branxholme, son of spinner Thomas. He left around the 1840s and founded an engineering business in Preston, which eventually became the world-renowned Thomas Dryden & Sons. He is said to have eloped with Margaret Weens, daughter of Sandy (although the marriage is recorded in Hawick in 1846). He was a guest at the 1888 Colour Bussing. William (19th C.) Hawick resident who married Mary Leyden. Their daughter Jane was baptised in 1857. William (19th C.) married Jane Dalgleish in Hawick in 1868. Their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1869. William (19th C.) resident of Wilton. He married Mary Grant and their children included: James (b.1862); and Mary (b.1864). Perhaps the same William also married Jane Dalgleish and had children Margaret (b.1869), William (b.1870) and William (again, b.1872). William (19th C.) married Elizabeth Richardson in Hawick in 1872. Their daughter Margaret Kerr was baptised in 1874 (formerly written ‘Drydoney’, ‘Dreden’, ‘Dreiden’, ‘Dridane’, ‘Driden’, ‘Dryddon’, ‘Drydon’, ‘Dryulon’ and variants).

Drydenburn (dri-din-burn) n. former name for a farmstead near Dryden in what became Teviot Parish. John Scott was there in 1713. Andrew Turnbull was tenant there in 1725 (it is ‘Dryden-burn’ in 1713).

Dryden Burnfit (dri-din-burn-fi’) n. former name for Teviothead Cottage, used in the 1851 census. The cottage there is listed as ‘dryddenburnfoott’ in 1694 when John Scott was shepherd.

Dryden Fell (dri-din-fel) n. hill north of Teviothead, reaching a height of 351 m. On its lower slopes the Henry Scott Riddell monument can easily be seen from the A7. On the north side, between Cauldon Hole (at the head of the Back Burn) and Cat Cleuch (at the head of the Philhope Burn) is a linear earthwork, about 500 m long. It is probably an ancient boundary ditch.

Dryden Greenhill (dri-din-gren-hil) n. farm in Ashkirk Parish, east of the television mast, between North Synton and New Greenhill farms. It was previously known as simply ‘Greenhill’ and was recorded as ‘Greenshill’ in 1797. James Johnstone was tenant there in 1797. Gowanlocks were tenants there through much of the 19th century. An axe, possibly early Bronze Age, found on the farm is in Selkirk Museum. Several flint arrowheads and other implements picked up in the surrounding area were described in 1927 by J.B. Mason.

Drydenhope (dri-din-hop) n. hill and former farmstead, to the right of the main A7 after Ashkirk, topped by a B.B.C. television mast, and reaching a height of 303 m (994 ft).

Dryden Linn (dri-din-lin) n. steep, wooded part of the Dryden Burn, with waterfalls, just north of Teviothead.

Dryden Quarry (dri-din-kwa-ree) n. small quarry by the side of the A7 just after Dryden farm. This gives an exposure of rock where folding of Silurian strata can be seen.

Drye Sands (dri-sawndz) n. area where the Drye Water joins the Annan, west of Lockerbie. It was the site of a conflict in 1593, between the Maxwells and the Johnstones and their supporters. Often stated to be part of a family feud, it was more likely to be part of a struggle for political control of the Western Marches. The Maxwells under John, 7th Lord Maxwell, assembled about 2,000 men to invade Annandale; this included contingents led by Douglas of Drumlanrig, Charters of Amisfield and others. But Sir James Johnstone of Dunskellie had advanced warning and gathered the support of several local families, including Scotts and Elliots from Liddesdale and Teviotdale. Although outnumbered, the Johnstone side used surprise to rout the Maxwells, killing perhaps as many as 700, including their chief. Some accounts state that it was the intervention of Scott of Buccleuch and the his followers that swung the battle in favour of Johnstone. It is said that the wounds inflicted during the pursuit of the fleeing Maxwell supporters gave rise to the term ‘Lockerbie Lick’. A ‘respite’ was given in 1594 to Sir James Johnstone and 160 others for the killing of Lord Maxwell; this included Armstrongs of Liddesdale, Scotts and Chisholmies from near Hawick. A reconciliation meeting was arranged in 1608 between Sir James Johnstone and the young Lord Maxwell (who had escaped the battle); Maxwell shot Johnstone with a pistol and escaped to France, but was later beheaded in Edinburgh.

Drygrange (dri-granj) n. hamlet on the A68 just to the north of Newtown St. Boswells, once the principal farmstead associated with Dryburgh Abbey. The estate there was owned by the Tod’s of Drygrange, inherited by Sir George Leith through a daughter and sold to Edward Sprot in 1867, when a new mansion was built (the origin of the name is ‘the grange of Dryburgh’ and it first occurs as ‘Grangiam’ in the early 13th century).

Dryhope (dri-up) n. ruined tower in the Yarrow valley, famous as the home of Mary Scott, the ‘Flower of Yarrow’. It was a property of a branch of the Scotts of for several generations; they were closely connected with the Scotts of Harden and Headshaw. The arms of this branch are the same as for the Scotts of Headshaw, with an extra border. George Middlemas and Matthew Paterson had cattle and goods stolen from here as recorded in 1502. In 1541 Philip Scott occupied the farm (along with ‘Furnynhop’). In 1589 the Scott clan bond was signed by John, Philip and Simon Scott of Dryhope. The tower may have been razed in 1592 by royal order, because of Walter Scott of Harden’s role in the Falkland Raid. The superiority over the lands was held by the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1653 and 1661. The present building dates from the rebuilding of 1613, and the renovations of 1788. It measures 33 feet by 22 feet, and was 4 storeys high. There are earlier sites nearby. The balloonist Lundari attempted to come down on the hill here in 1785, losing his anchor, and not descending until he reached Alemoor. It was farmed by Milnes in the 19th century. With the aid of Heritage Lottery funding in 2003 it was renovated, as a visitor centre, with a new spiral staircase allowing visitors to enjoy the view from the roof. A carved panel has been built into the neighbouring farm building, bearing the date 1613 and the initials ‘P.S.’ and ‘M.S.’ (for Philip Scott and Mary Scott). It is possible that the tower was also home of ‘Dickie’ Armstrong of ‘Dryupp’, a notorious riever of the late 16th century – ‘Now Dickie of Dryhope led that band, And nevir a word o lear had he’ [T]. ‘Warn Dryhope, and Catslack, Howford, and Huntlee free, Whitslade, Todrigg, and Sallenside, the morn to wait on me’ [WSB] (written ‘Drihoip’, ‘Drihoup’, ‘Dryhoip’, ‘Dryhop’, ‘Dryop’ and variants).

dryin green (dri-in-green) n. a communal lawn used for drying clothes on washing lines, often behind a tenement. Hawick formerly had many communal drying greens with poles set up for clothes lines; a few still exist, e.g. at the Little Haugh and Mote Park. There were formerly greens at Lothian Street and Garfield Street – ‘A dryin’ green? Aye man, it’s no afore time! Yon’s a sicht that I canna weel thole . . .’ [WL].

dry-killit (dri-ki-lee’, -li’) pp., arch. kiln-dried – ‘. . . for horsing of him from Edinburgh to Hawick, and in 9s. Scots for ane dry killit fische’ [BR1655].

dry-stane dyke (drl-stän-dik) n. a wall made of fitted together stones, used to divide lands and enclose livestock. The main building phase locally was roughly 1750–1850, with a peak perhaps in the 1820s. It was stated that a recently as the 1920s there were 22 dykers who would leave Hawick every morning to go out to fix dykes.

drystraiks (drl-sträks) n., pl., arch. blows that do not lead to bloodshed – ‘Item, whatsoever person that committs ryottis, in giving of dry cufis and straiks . . .’ [BR1640]. ‘Some of these names . . . arose from . . . a brawling disposition, or a proneness to drystraiks’ [WNK] (see also straiks).

Drythropple (drl-thro-pul) n. former farmstead in Hobkirk parish, just north of Weensmoor. The house was built as a shepherd’s cottage for Town-o-Rule farm in 1815 by George Cleghorn of Weens (the owner at the time). It was a teetotaller, and refusing to give the masons their traditional drink, it was given the nickname, which stuck. There was a later attempt to rename it ‘Heathfield’, but the locals always used the nickname. For a while it was the location for one of the hails in Hobkirk Baa. Tenants included Gilbert Aitken (‘Gib o Drythropple’) and John Halliday (‘the Rustic Bard’). Dyker William Armstrong was there in 1861.

Drythropple (drl-thro-pul) n. former place name to the north-east of Denholm, on the north side of the Teviot, south of Minto Glen. A track there is so marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map. ‘Drythropple and Ground’ was listed as part of the Minto estate in 1779, 1788 and 1811, when valued at £3 12s 6d. Old river courses there can be made out in aerial photographs (also ‘Drythraply’).

du (du, doo) v., arch. do – ‘And that Aw du weel ken’ (the vowel sound can be somewhere between oo and å).

dub (dub) n., arch. a puddle, small pond, pool, particularly of marshy water – ‘Ilk step they redouble their haste, As through dirt an’ dubs they spatter’ [JoHa], ‘…An’ yetts play jaig, and dubs play plash’ [JoHa], ‘On Winter nights when Johnnie Frost Hath sealed baith dub and mire’ [JT], ‘…Throwe drumly foreign dub and clairt …’ [DH] (possibly from Low German or Dutch; the word occurs in place names, such as ‘Wylie’s Dub’ and ‘Hackman’s Dub’).

the Dub (θu-dub) n. former name for the area east of ‘the Vennel’ (roughly Morrison Place), also known as ‘Wylie’s Dub’ and also called ‘Bridgehaugh’, once a boggy area between the Howegate and the modern Buccleuch Street (also spelled ‘Dubbi’ and sometimes ‘Dubs’ and ‘Dubbs’).

de Dubbs (θu-dubz) n., pl. former name, from around the 17th century for the marshy region between the Howegate and the Teviot (also known as ‘the Dub’, although that may have been a more specific area).

ducatoon (du-ki-toon) n., arch. an old silver coin, possibly referring to several types, but most usually one from the Netherlands – ‘Likewise there was found among the consignation money before marriages and half Ducatoon and twenty shilling Scots piece pawned by Jo. Forman merchant in Hawick . . .’ [PR1711].

the Duchess o Gloucester (θu-du-chis-o-glos-tur) n. (1901–2004) Princess Alice, born Lady Alice Christabel Montagü-Douglas-Scott, 3rd daughter of John, 7th Duke of Buccleuch. She was born on Christmas Day in London, Princess She married Henry William Frederick Albert Windsor, 1st Duke of Gloucester, who was son of George V. She was thus an aunt of Queen Elizabeth II. She was a frequent visitor to Hawick, staging theatrical performances, often in the Upper Haugh, and playing many of the parts himself.

duck huntin’ (duk-hun-tin) n. a former cruel sport, which locally took place until the mid-19th century at the Coble Pool. Ducks would have their wings clipped and be chased in the pool by dogs.

dud (dud) n., arch. a wretched person, someone easily injured by the cold or wet – ‘He’s a saft dud’ [JoJ], ‘…you poor half starved creatures, with faces as pale as clay, and ilka dud bidding another good day!’ [WSB] (see also duds).

duddy see duddie

Dudgeon (du-jin) n. Thomas (b.1832/3) from Smalholm, he was a young teacher in Denholm in 1851. In a directory of 1852 he is listed as teacher of the Free Church school in Denholm.
Dudley

Dudley (duck-lee) n. John (1502–53) son of Edmund, he became a Knight and military commander. He was part of Hertford’s force that sacked southern Scotland and burned Edinburgh in 1544. He was created 1st Duke of Northumberland in 1551. That year he was also appointed Lord Warden General of the English Marches, succeeding to his son’s father-in-law, Lord Dorset. He was later Warden of the Middle and East Marches. His elder son Guilford married Lady Jane Grey and like the other co-conspirators was beheaded after she was deposed.

Duds (dudz) n., pl. clothes, articles of clothing, rags – ‘The skulls o’ elk-deer, bisons, tups, Fund i’ the mosses, Worm-eaten dudds, auld cheens, an’ raips, Fossils o’ fishes’ [JoHa], ‘Thou hides the might o’ mony a manly mind, By hoppin’t up wi’ duds an’ pouches toom’ [JoHa] (formerly more common than in standard English; see also dud).

the Duds (the dudz) n. nickname for George Turnbull in the latter part of the 16th century. The name could refer to ragged clothes.

duff (duf) v., arch. to draw back from a bargain, throw up an undertaking, often used with ‘on’.

Duff (duf) n. Rev. Archibald (1810–85) born in Aberdeen, he was first minister of the Congregational Church in Hawick, at that time called the Evangelical Union Kirk. He arrived in late 1848, but was not inducted until early 1849. He had been a minister in Fraserburgh for the previous 7 years, and was also briefly in Liverpool. He first preached in the Subscription Rooms until the new premises on O’Connell Street were opened in March 1849. He was a strong advocate of Total Abstinence. As well as 3 sermons each Sunday, and prayer meetings during the week, he also preached in the open air at places such as Borthaugh Woodfoot, Stobs Woodfoot, Newmill-on-Teviot and Newmill-on-Slitrig, as well as occasionally on Hawick street corners. This kind of activity met a hostile reception from the Town’s other ministers. He left for Canada in 1856 and became minister of Cowansville Church, Montreal, where he was known as an accomplished Highland dancer and named his house Teviot Cottage. In the period 1862–80 he was minister at Sherbrooke, Quebec. He returned to Hawick, in 1883, it is said as Dr. Duff in 1883. Note that his name is sometimes given as ‘Alexander’, perhaps in confusion with a nearly contemporary missionary of that name (or possibly he was genuinely known by both names). He married Catherine Hamilton in 1841. They had 4 children in Fraserburgh: Margaret Elizabeth (b.1842); John Morell Mackenzie (b.1844); and Charles (b.1847). They then had 3 children who were born in Hawick: Catherine Hamilton (b.1850); Edward Hamilton (b.1852); and Joseph Wilson (b.1854). He died suddenly in Putney, London. Bert (1948/9– ) brought up at the Pre-fabs and Havelock Place, he attended Wilton and Hawick High Schools. He worked at Deanbrae and Pesco’s, then as a handyman for the N.H.S. A keen runner, he won the Teviotdale Harriers’ Senior Cup in 1985. In 1970 he married Olive Johnston, who worked at Braemar. The couple were selected as Acting Father and Mother in 1990 and celebrated their golden wedding anniversary in 2020.

duffie (duke-fee) n. a toilet, particularly an outside one – ‘the duffie was threi flairs doon’ (also spelled ‘duffy’).

Duffy (duke-fee) n. William ‘Willie’ (19th C.) tramp who was a regular visitor to Liddesdale in the mid-19th century. His wife was Jean McLusky. They sold smallwares and chap-books and were a source of the spreading of news in the countryside.

the Duik’s Wud (the diks-wud, -diks-) n. Whitlaw Wood (used interchangeably with the Duke’s Wud).
the Duke of Cumberland

The Duke of Cumberland (thu-jook-ô-kum-bur-lind) n. (1721–65) son of George II, he was William Augustus. He was a career soldier, and defeated the Jacobites at Culloden in 1746, ordering that no quarter be given. As a result he earned the nickname ‘the Butcher’ and Robert Wilson says that afterwards ferocious bulls or dogs were often locally given the name ‘Will’ or ‘Cumberland’.

the Duke o Queensberry (thu-jook-ô-kwenz-ò-bu-ree) n. title in the Scottish peerage, connected with both the Douglasses of Drumlanrig and the Scotts of Buccleuch, also spelled ‘Queensbury’. An associated title is the Lordship of Hawick and Tibbers, formerly held by the Douglasses of Drumlanrig. The 1st Duke was William Douglas, who had been Marquess of Queensberry until 1684, and was a direct descendant of the Douglasses of Drumlanrig (and Hawick). His son James became 2nd Duke and he passed the title to his own 3rd son Charles (the 1st dying in infancy and the 2nd, James, being disinherited), after which the 4th Duke was William, great-grandson of the 1st Duke. With the 5th Duke, Henry Scott (3rd Duke of Buccleuch) the title transferred to the Scotts, while the Marquessate of Queensberry was inherited by Sir Charles Douglas of Kelhead.

the Duke o Roxburgh (thu-jook-ô-roks-bu-ri) n. title created in 1707 for John Ker, 5th Earl of Roxburghe and now held by the Innes-Kers, with their seat at Floors Castle. The name comes from an old spelling of Roxburgh. The eldest son of the Duke is called Marquess of Bowmont and Cessford.

the Duke o Teviotdale (thu-jook-ô-teev-yi’-däl) n. suspended royal title. It was granted (along with the Dukedom of Cumberland and the Earldom of Armagh) to Prince Ernest Augustus, 5th son of King George III, in 1799. Ernest became King of Hanover in 1837 and died in 1851. The 2nd Duke of Cumberland and Teviotdale was Prince George Frederick Alexander Charles Ernest Augustus, who married Princess Marie Alexandrine Wilhelmine Katherine Charlotte Therese Henriette Louise Pauline Elisabeth Friedrike Georgine, daughter of the Duke of Saxe-Altenburg, and was later deposed as King of Hanover in 1866. He was succeeded by his son Ernest Augustus William Adolphus George Frederick, who was also Duke of Brunswick-Lüneburg. Being associated with the enemy during WWI he was deprived of his titles and the peerages were removed from the Roll of Peers in 1919.

the Duke o the Dean

The Duke o the Dean (thu-jook-ô-thu-deen) n. nickname in use around the mid-19th century, presumably for someone from Wilton Dean – ‘The Duke o’ the Dean comes staggerin’ doon; O’ the ring i’ the Haugh auld Broughton’s boss, And Duke Rodger

Michael Wintrup gangs roond the toon, Cryin' siller that’s squandered at Pitch and Toss’[HI].

Duke Rodger (jook-ro-jur) n. nickname of Robert Rodger.

the Duke’s Ayrch (thu-jooks-ärch) n. arch in the south wall of St. Mary’s Kirk, put there during rebuilding in 1763 when it was found that the wall would interfere with the Buccleuch Vaults. It marks the probable site of the burial place of the early Scotts of Buccleuch.

the Duke’s Loft (thu-jooks-loft) n. eastern gallery, over the choir in St. Mary’s Church, also known as ‘the Buccleuch Loft’. The site of the Buccleuch Vault is said to be under the stairs leading to this loft.

Duke Street (jook-stree)’ n. street running along the east side of the Teviot, constructed in 1887, involving building up of the road to the bridge level. The area was previously undeveloped, being marked ‘Nursery Grounds’ on Wood’s 1824 map. It was named after Walter Francis Montagu-Douglas-Scott, the 5th Duke of Buccleuch. It used to have the Buccleuch Memorial at the top, built in honour of the 5th Duke, now the site of the tax and social security offices. J.P. Alison designed the tenements at Nos. 1 and 2 in 1902. The street also used to run under the railway viaduct until that was removed in the 1970s. The Trinity Bar is at No. 18, and at the bottom of the street a footpath continues along the river bank. A decorated spindle whorl from there is in the Museum.

the Duke’s Wud (thu-jooks-wud, -diks-) n. popular name for Whitlaw wood, south and south-west of the Slitrig, and behind the Vertish. It can be reached from the lane that skirts the left-hand side of the golf course. The wood was formerly on the Duke of Buccleuch’s land, and presumably was given the name to distinguish it from the town’s woods at the Vertish. The wood is now managed as a nature conservancy area by Scottish Wildlife Trust – ‘And yonder is the Duke’s green wood And Whitlaw’s flowery braes’[GD] (see also the Duk’s Wud).

dule (dool) n., poet. grief, sorrow, misery, suffering, dolour, state of lassitude – Then, think what dule an’ muckle strife, To marry sic a strumpet ... ‘[JR], ‘O dool! an’ what will dounce Fouk say, When this I tell – Death’s stown away’[JoHa], ‘O wae to the weary day that I first cardit woo’, O dool to the weary beginning o’t’[JoHa], ‘Mine ee is consumnet becaus o’ dool’[HSR], ‘...mine ee is waistet wi’ dool, yis, my saul an’ my bellic’[HSR], ‘When news o’ Flodden’s day o’ dule Made dark baith hut and ha’’[JT], ‘In dule or disappointment, praise or blame, Teviot ran liltting on its rippling way ...’[JYH], ‘...its dule I woudna dreed’[WL], ‘Can we forget those olden days, The dool their evils wrought?’[JEDM] (also spelled ‘doil’; cf. duil).

the Dule Trei (thu-dool-tri) n. ancient ash tree near Branxholme Tower, said to have been used for hangings. It can be seen in a painting from the mid-19th century, which is in the Museum. The tree was probably not as old as traditionally claimed, perhaps dating from the mid-17th century. It was said to once be part of a large rookery. It was largely blown down about 1880.

dull (dul) adj., arch. slow on the uptake – ‘Gutterblude?’ Hoots, Aw’m awfi’ dull o’ the uptake, ee’r a’ Gutterbludes – the best o’ Hawick’s Gutterbludes’[JEDM].

Dumbarton Drums (dum-bawr’t-in-drumz) n. one of the tunes traditionally played by the Drums and Fifes. The tune is similar to the traditional bagpipe tune ‘The Haughs of Cromdale’. It is entirely different from the regimental tune of the Royal Scots (who were once known as ‘Dumbarton’s Regiment’), which dates back to the early 18th century, with suggestions it was the ‘Scots March’ referred to by Samuel Pepys in 1667. It is uncertain when or why the local tune was given this name. The tune is played during Picking Night on the march to the Cornet’s house, if the route takes the band to the north. It is also played at other specific times, for example when the band lead the mounted cavalcade from Drumlanrig Square and along the High Street after the Dipping of the Flag, and to rouse the Town on the Saturday morning. The tune was combined with ‘Rumblin Brig’ in the Scocha song ‘Bottles at Dawn’.

the Dumb Precentor (thu-dumb-pree-sen-tur) n. sometimes nickname of Job Gadd.

Dumbreck (dum-breik) n. Mrs. Euphemia nee Kinneear (1810–79) born in Rhyned, Perthshire, daughter of Charles Kinneear and Euphan Ritchie, she married John Dumbreck in 1830. She had daughters Euphemia Ritchie (b.1835) and Catherine Elizabeth (b.1837). She came to Hawick in 1865 with her husband and 2 daughters, setting up a boarding and day school for girls on North Bridge Street, named Teviotside House (and now 1 Teviotside Terrace). The school taught English, French, German, Italian, Music, Singing, Drawing and Painting. She is remembered in Hawick as composer of the music for ‘I Like Auld Hawick’. Her husband died only about a year after the family’s arrival in Hawick, but the school was continued by her and her daughters until 1885. She died at the District Asylum, Melrose and is buried at St. Cuthbert’s in Edinburgh. Euphemia Ritchie (b.1835) daughter of John and Euphemia. In 1861 she is recorded as governess for the family of Walter Wilson of Orchard. Since this family were Quakers, then this may also have been true of the Dumbrucks. This was 4 years before the Dumbeck family moved to Hawick to start a school for girls. She and her sister Katherine probably continued to run the school after their mother’s death in 1879. It is said that they retired to Colinton in Edinburgh (sometimes erroneously ‘Drumbeck’).
dumfoonder (dum-foon-dur) v. to dumfounder, nonplus – ‘Fierce Bothwell I vanquished clean, Gar’d troopers an’ fitmen flee: By my faith I dumfoondert the Queen, An’ wha daur meddle wi’ me?’ [T], ‘... he schot owt ichtienin’s, an’ dumfuunderethame’ [HSR].
dumfoondert (dum-foon-dur) pp., adj. dumfounded, nonplused – ‘The twa’ dumfoundert, stood appall’d, An’ trembling, swat – their blood ran cauld’ [RDW].
Dumfries (dum-frees) n. main town of Dumfriesshire, and later of Dumfries & Galloway Region, lying in Nithsdale, about 70 miles from Hawick. Although well to the west of Carlisle, it still retains a flavour of the Borders, and was the major metropolis of the Scottish West March. It has been a Royal Burgh since 1186, and a bridge there is recorded as early as 1283. Long a market town it also developed significant hosiery and tweed mills from the 18th century. The town was a major centre during centuries of strife on the Border, being burned by the English many times. It was also a haunt of Robert Burns, where he spent the last 5 years of his life, and where he is buried. The town was known as a manufacturer of textiles, rivalling Hawick in the 19th century.

the Dump (thu-dump) n. town rubbish tip, near the ‘Fower Road Ends’, above Stourie, adjacent to Stouslie. The earliest recorded dump (in the 18th century) was between the Slitrig and the modern Slitrig Crescent. For a while the location was in the middle of Hawick Moor (where it is said that a circus elephant is buried, after dying while performing at a circus in town, as well as the fever hospital beds). There was later a location off a road at the top of the Wellogate Brae and then the main site was near Haughhead, between the A698 and the Teviot.

the Dumplin (thu-dum-ling) n. nickname in use in the early 19th century.

the dumps (thu-dumps) n. called ‘the bumps’ in England, a mild beating traditionally given to a child by school mates on birthdays, often one thump on the back for each year – ‘hei hed ti rin a child by school mates on birthdays, often one in England, a mild beating traditionally given to

Dunbar (dun-bawr) n. Gavin (c.1490–1547) 3rd son of John of Mochrum and Janet Stewart. In 1518 he became Dean of Moray, succeeding his uncle, also Gavin Dunbar. By 1520 he was also Prior of Whithorn (although not after some dispute), and was also Preceptor to James V. In 1524 he was appointed Archbishop of Glasgow, thus becoming the superior of the church in Teviotdale. In 1531 he was the Archbishop who was renting lands in Lilliesleaf to Scotts. Although he had been given exemption to the jurisdiction of the Archbishop of St. Andrews (as Primate of All Scotland), there was a long running feud with his fellow archbishop David Beaton, including a brawl between the attendants of the 2 archbishops in Glasgow Cathedral in 1545, in which both processional crosses were broken! He was Chancellor of Scotland 1528–43. He fought against early reformers of the Church and was known for his ‘Monition of Cursing’ against the Border Rievers, issued in 1525, an astonishing curse, running to about 1500 words, which all parish priests were required to read out, including ‘I curse their heid and all the grass and all the grass and their children and the gudis and house that is necessair for their sustentatioun and weillair’, and condemning the rievers to ‘all the vengeance that evir was takin sen the warlde began for oppin symmys, and all the plagues and pestilence that ever fell on man or beist’. He was a witness to several charters relating to the Scotts of Buccleuch around the 1520s. He attended the trials and signed the death sentences of several early Protestants, who were later considered as martyrs. He was buried in an elaborate tomb he had constructed for himself in Glasgow Cathedral, which was destroyed by reformers 13 years later. His seal showed an elaborate image of St. Kentigern and the words ‘SIGILLUM GAVINI ARCHIEPI. GLASGUENSIS’.

Dunbush (dun-bush) n. former name for a piece of land owned by Scott of Harden. In the 1788 assessment of the county valuation it is ‘Dunsbush’ and valued (along with Harden and Highchesters Mill) at £463 9s. In the 1788 county valuation (and the 1811 Land Tax Rolls) it was listed along with Harden and Highchesters Mill as ‘Dunsbush’ (or ‘Dunbush’). This was clearly the name for a piece of land near Harden, but the precise location is not clear.

Duncan (ding-kin) n. name of 2 Kings of Scotland. Duncan I (d.1040) King from 1034, succeeding his maternal grandfather Malcolm I. He was son of Bethoc, who was daughter of Malcolm. He was previously ruler of Strathclyde. He was slain by Macbeth, and his sons Malcolm III and Donald were both Kings afterwards. Duncan II (c.1060–94) King of Scotland from 1093, when he drove out his uncle Donald (Bane) III. He was a Canmore, son of Malcolm III and his first wife Ingibiorg and spent much of his life in the English court. He was killed, probably by a supporter of Donald.

Duncan (ding-kin) n. George ‘the Admiral’ (19th C.) Hawick character of the mid-19th century. Having been in the navy he would always turn out on special occasions wearing a blue coat with brass buttons, hence his nickname. He could be the George (b.1796/7) living on the Loan in 1841 and 1851, widower of Janet Thorburn and with children Agnes, Sarah, Martha, George and William. James (16th C.) resident of one of the farms in the lower Borthwick whose residents complained in 1549 about a raid by the English, assisted by Kers and others. He may have been at Wilton Green, and was probably related to William, who stayed at Wiltowburn and John, who was at Borthaugh. James (19th C.) one of the main organisers of the Hawick Reformers of the early 1800s. He is probably the man of the same name who was listed at Hawick in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’. Rev. James (1754/5–1830) born in Kirkcaldy, he was minister of the Cameronian Chapel in Denholm from 1774, taking over from John Arnot. He was said to be a great linguist and tutored the young John Leyden in classics. He was described as a plain preacher who ‘possessed none of the grandiloquent embellishments in delivery'. He was a strict disciplinarian with his congregation, regularly rebuking people from the pulpit. He had a 'Black List' detailing all the sins that would stop people from taking communion; this included 'All those persons who carry any sticks from Cavers plantations without authority', for which the Laird of Cavers granted him an annual pension. He managed to keep the congregation united, but after his death they ceased to worship together and were effectively absorbed by the Independents. He married Isabella Scott and their son James was the first minister of Teviothead Parish, as well as being known as an entomologist. His gravestone, erected by the congregation, said that they cherished 'the sincerity and exemplary piety of his character, his faithfulness in the discharge of his ministerial duties, and unwearied solicitude for their best interests'. Leyden's father presented him with a copy of 'The Poetical Remains', which is now in the Museum.

Rev. James (1804/5–61) born in Denholm, son of the minister of the Cameronian Chapel there and Isabella Scott. He was educated at Edinburgh University, spending a few years afterwards as a private tutor and in studying botany and entomology. He helped Rev. David Aitken of Minto compile a list of the rarer insects and plants seen in the Parish of Minto for the New Statistical Account in 1838. In 1850, at the urging of friends and family, he became minister at Teviothead, being the first incumbent of the newly created Parish. However, this was said to be against his own judgement, and a struggle because of his nervous temperament in public. He was deprived in 1853 and published a 'Letter to Members of the Church and Inhabitants of the Parish of Teviothead' in Hawick that year. However, he flourished as an entomologist, publishing a 'Catalogue of Coleoptera' in 1834, 'The Natural History of Foreign Butterflies' (1837), 'Introduction to Entomology' (1840), and 'The Natural History of Exotic Moths' (1841), as well as writing the chapters on Geology, Botany and Natural History for Jeffrey's 'The History and Antiquities of Roxburghshire', which included a list of indigenous plants. He also indexed the entire 'Encyclopædia Britannica' for the publishers. He was preparing a biography of John Leyden when he died in Denholm, and was a primary instigator for the erection of the Leyden Monument. His interest in nature and other topics were an early influence on James 'Dictionary' Murray. He made a catalogue of plants observed in the area around Jedburgh, including many species listed as being found at Denholm Dean, Minto Hill, Ruberslaw, etc. These were to have formed a chapter in Jeffrey's 'History of Roxburghshire'. James 'Jim' (19th/20th C.) from Aberdeen originally, he married one of the daughters of Appletreehall blacksmith Robert Davidson. The couple lived at Deanbrae and then he became joiner at Appletreehall. He was known for his prize gooseberries. He had a son Hector. In 1906 he contributed to the fund for the renovation of Kirkton Kirk. John (16th C.) recorded as holder of the vicarage of Hassendean in 1538. In that year he was 'escheated for barratry' (i.e. negligence and trade in the sale of church appointments) and the fruits of the benefice were granted to George Scott. In 1544 he resigned Hassendean in favour of John Anderson. In 1553 he resigned from the Clerksip of Melrose. James V described him as a worthless old man, and he is also stated to have been 'a notorious character of the period and one of the most typical of the band of Scots who at this time were hangers-on at the papal court and agents in the purchase of benefices'. John (16th C.) resident of Borthaugh, recorded in 1549 when tenants and servants of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme complained about their farms being burned by a group of Englishmen and Kers in the previous year. He was probably related to William who was a resident at Wiltonburn at the same time, as well as James. John (17th C.) described as a ‘traveller’ in 1685 when he was charged, along with other local men, with being a Covenanter. All the men took the ‘Test’ in Hawick and promised not to frequent conventicles, the letter being signed by Sir William Elliott of Stobs. John (17th/18th C.) surgeon who arrived in Hawick around 1714. He is recorded in the Hawick Parish records, with the minister questioning the testimonial he had from his former parish. He was married to Anne Munroe. Rev. J.W. minister at Burnfoot until 1966 when he was translated to Aberdeen. Margaret ‘Peggie’ or ‘Peggy’ (19th C.) cock-eyed character in the song ‘Pawkie Paiterson’. It was said that ‘she could not be characterised as a beauty’, but the extent to which the song was accurate is unknown. She is listed as an agricultural labourer on the Kirkwynd in the 1841 census, living there with her son William (and next door to Thomas Duncan and his family, probably her brother). In 1851 she was a hosiery seamstress on the Back Row. She was probably the daughter of William and Betty Duncan born in Hawick in 1800 – ‘Peggy Duncan and Jenny Din, Nellie Herkness and Mensie Mein;
Duncan’s Grain duncht

The Wilton Priest wi’ his coat o’ skin, Staney Stewart and Candy Jean’[HI], Rev. Thomas (see Duncanson). Thomas (b.1793/4) weaver living on the Kirk Wynd in 1841 and 1851 with his wife Ann and children Margaret, Betty, Mary, Kirsty, William and James. He is probably the Thomas who was one of the men in the vanguard of the Hawick band at the Carthaugh Baa in 1815. W.F. (19th/20th C.) schoolmaster at Teviot Grove Academy. He married Jane Fisher, daughter of Peter Laidlaw. They moved to Vancouver, Canada. Walter (18th/19th C.) thongmaker in Hawick. The death of a child of his is recorded in 1819. Walter (18th/19th C.) earthenware dealer of the High Street, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. William (16th C.) resident of Wiltonburn recorded in 1549, among a list of the tenants and servants of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme who complained about the Kers ravaging their farms. It seems likely he was related to John who was a resident of Borthaugh at the same time and also James. William (18th C.) servant at Midshiels in 1788, when he was working for Archibald Douglas. His name appears to be written ‘Duncion’. William (d.1797) wright from Eskdale who died in Hawick. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was living at Whithope Mill in 1781 when his daughter Margaret was baptised. He married Margaret Miller in 1779. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Betty Turnbull in 1780 and she died in Hawick in 1815. Their children included: William (b.1781); Christian (b.1782); John (b.1784); Helen (b.1786); Thomas (b.1788); Betty (b.1790); Thomas (again, b.1793); and James (b.1795). The witnesses in 1793 were Robert Wilson and Walter Inglis. William (18th/19th C.) baker and publican in Hawick. His daughter Janet died in Hawick in 1808. His wife Betty Turnbull died in 1815. In 1816, along with butcher Francis Deans, he was found guilty of unspecified fraudulent activities. He may be the William born to William and Betty Turnbull in Hawick in 1781 (also formerly ‘Duncane’ and ‘Dunkan’).

Duncan’s Grain (dung-kinz-gran) n. small stream forming part of the headwaters of the Frostlie Burn. It rises on Millstone Edge and Tudhope Hill.

Duncan’s Hole (dung-kinz-höI) n. earthwork along the south side (right bank) of Hob’s Burn, between Bonchester Bridge village and Hobbsburn house. It is on a narrow tongue of land between the burn and an old channel for the Rule Water. It consists of a rampart and external ditch, possibly of mediæval date.

Duncanson (dung-kin-sin) n. Rev. Andrew (17th C.) son of Rev. Thomas, who he assisted as minister of Bowden briefly. He moved to St. Boswell’s in 1618 and was still there in 1654. He married Margaret, brother of William Riddell of Greatlaw (in Lilliesleaf Parish). In 1630 his wife was served heir to her brother. Their children included: Andrew, who was minister at Maxton; and Thomas. Rev. Andrew (d.bef. 1672) son of Andrew. In 1631 he was served heir to his mother Margaret Riddell. He was minister at Maxton from 1640 and confined to his Parish in 1662 for not conforming to Episcopacy. He succeeded to his mother’s lands of Greatlaws. He was recorded in Lilliesleaf Parish in the Land Tax Rolls of 1663, when he paid £104 for Greatlaws. He was also listed at Greatlaws in 1678 (although probably already deceased). He additionally paid the land tax at Maxpoffle in 1678. Rev. Thomas (d.1621) probably son or grandson of Thomas of Maxpoffle and Janet Oliphant. He was presented to the vicarage of Bowden in 1567 and admitted there early the following year. In 1568 he was also Minister of Lilliesleaf. In 1571 he was presented to the Rectory of Lilliesleaf. It is recorded in 1575 (when he was ‘Dunkesoun’) that Bowden, Lilliesleaf, Longnewton and Melrose were all in his care, although he had the assistance of two readers, with also individual readers at each of the 4 parishes. When he died he was ‘father of the church’, i.e. the oldest surviving minister. His son was Andrew, who succeeded him as minister of Bowden. He may be the Thomas ‘Duncan’ who is recorded in a deed of 1612 as minister of Bowden briefly. He moved to St. Boswell’s in 1618 and was still there in 1654. He married Margaret, brother of William Riddell of Greatlaw (in Lilliesleaf Parish). In 1630 his wife was served heir to her brother. Their children included: Andrew, who was minister at Maxton; and Thomas. Rev. Andrew (d.bef. 1672) son of Andrew. In 1631 he was served heir to his mother Margaret Riddell. He was minister at Maxton from 1640 and confined to his Parish in 1662 for not conforming to Episcopacy. He succeeded to his mother’s lands of Greatlaws. He was recorded in Lilliesleaf Parish in the Land Tax Rolls of 1663, when he paid £104 for Greatlaws. He was also listed at Greatlaws in 1678 (although probably already deceased). He additionally paid the land tax at Maxpoffle in 1678. Rev. Thomas (d.1621) probably son or grandson of Thomas of Maxpoffle and Janet Oliphant. He was presented to the vicarage of Bowden in 1567 and admitted there early the following year. In 1568 he was also Minister of Lilliesleaf. In 1571 he was presented to the Rectory of Lilliesleaf. It is recorded in 1575 (when he was ‘Dunkesoun’) that Bowden, Lilliesleaf, Longnewton and Melrose were all in his care, although he had the assistance of two readers, with also individual readers at each of the 4 parishes. When he died he was ‘father of the church’, i.e. the oldest surviving minister. His son was Andrew, who succeeded him as minister of Bowden. He may be the Thomas ‘Duncan’ who is recorded in a deed of 1612 as schoolmaster at Yair (also formerly ‘Duncason’; it was interchangeable with ‘Duncan’ in early times).

dunch (dunch, dunsh) v., arch. to strike, knock – ‘Wha’ mischief’s that, what, deil. d’ye mean by dunchin?’[JoHa], ‘Cairts an hurlbarrihs an yirrint-vans an thing, that every-wee-bittie dunsh other i the strooshie’[ECS], n., arch. a knock, blow, bump – ‘But yet, what reck? we sht other i the strooshie’[ECS], ‘Cairts an hurlbarrihs an a yerk an a dunsh an a stech an a Parp!’[ECS], ‘Oor Jock hed ti gie’s a dunsh for ti waken iz even than’[ECS] (also ‘dunsht’).

Dundas (dun-das) n. Jean (b.1773/4) born in Bombay, she was in dealer in small wares, listed at about 19 Howegate in 1841. In 1851 she was there as a servant with retired mason Peter Taylor. William Pitt (1801–83) son of Robert of Arnistone, he was an advocate, who became the first Register General for Scotland, from 1854. There is some suggestion that he was not particularly assiduous in his post. He was assisted by his Superintendent of Statistics, Dr. James Stark, who may have done most of the work. His name appears at the foot of several local parish records (e.g. for Cavers in the late 18th century and Hawick in the early 19th century), suggesting that these were copied out from deteriorating originals.

 Dundrum (dun-drum) n., poet. a blockhead, dolt – ‘My bluid flies up whene’er I think, How brainless dundrums sneer an’ wink, An’ shan’ an’ shile, and leering blink, At povertie’ [JoHa], dung (dung) pp., arch. knocked over, smote, overcame – ‘But I hae claut a newer creed, An’ dung the auld ane a’ abreed .’. [JoHa], ‘As wae an’ sair dung doon i’ mooth, She through the dirt gaed wadin’’ [JoHa] (past participle of ding, with dang being the usual past tense).

 Dungell (dung-ul) n. John (16th C.) recorded in Whithope in 1580, with his surname appearing as ‘Dwngell’. He witnessed a transaction in Selkirk between John Scott in Whithope and Robert Scott of Haining.

 Dungeon Plantin (dung-jin-plawn’-in) n. plantation of trees by the main entrance to Weens House, lying south of the house, and east of the B6357. There are 2 small hills there surrounded by a turf bank. It has been suggested that one of them was the site of the original Weens peel house, but there is no physical evidence for this. There is also a nearby linear earthwork, of unknown age or function.

 Dunhóg Moss (dun-bóg-mos) n. marshy area to the right of the A7 shortly before coming to Selkirk, lying further to the east than Hare Moss. It now forms part of the Hare & Dunhóg Moss Nature Reserve. There are signs of rig-and-furrow cultivation on a field to the south-east.

 the Dunion (thu-dun-yin) n. hill on the back-road from Denholm to Jedburgh, formerly reaching a height of 1,092 ft (333 m). The hill lay entirely within the bounds of Bedrule Parish, but part of it may once have been in Jedburgh Parish. It was the site of an Iron Age settlement, and the summit was used as a beacon during the times of perceived threat of French invasion. More recently the contours of its peak have been changed by extensive quarrying for road metalling. The fort had a massive drystone wall surrounding the summit, enclosing an area about 170 m by 55 m, separated by a dyke into 2 enclosures. There were also external ramparts, as well as 7 hut circles, which are probably later in age, and the foundations of 2 rectangular buildings, which could have been medieval look-out posts. The fort was excavated in 1961 and 1962, but mostly destroyed over the next decade or so. However, further excavation in the 1980s revealed that the fort covered an area much larger than just the summit. On the north-east side are 14 roughly circular scoops, corresponding to a settlement associated with the fort, with carbon dating giving an age around 100 B.C.E. A cinerary urn was found on the northern slopes by Mr. Pott of Dodd in 1885, and later donated to the National Museum of Antiquities. A stone axe-head, and 2 flint arrow-heads have also been collected from the hill. Before quarrying removed much of the summit, it was said to command one of the most glorious views in the Borders. The summit formerly hosted a triangulation pillar – ‘See the Dunion grey mark the Eildon’s rise Like sentinel watch towers to greet the skies’ [TC], ‘When Ruberslaw puts on his cowl, The Dunion on his hood, Then a’ the wives o’ Teviotside Ken there will be a flood’ [T] (the name appears in a 1513 report by Lord Dacre as ‘the Dungyon’; it is ‘Dvnzone’ in 1576, ‘Dunzeon’ in the 1650s, ‘Dunyon’ in 1662 and ‘Dunian’ in 1795 and 1839; it is ‘Hill of Dunyon’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and has its modern spelling by Stobie’s 1770 map; its origin may be ‘hill with the dungeon’).

 Dunira (dun-I-ru) n. Victorian mansion on Buccleuch Road, being the last house inside the town boundaries on the New Road. It was probably designed by J.P. Alison and erected around 1892. It was built for tweed merchant William Laidlaw Stevenson and manufacturer James Boyd Sime later lived there. More recently it became a guest house and when the owners moved further along Buccleuch Road to the old manse house, they (confusingly) moved the name with it.

 the Dunk (thu-dungk) n. deep pool at a bend in the Teviot at the southern end of the Park, often used for swimming in the summer months – ‘Heavy wi’ deniers And heat, the scholars dreamed o’ the Dunk And Coblé . . .’ [DH], ‘Aa want naething else adae Wi money Except to sit at the Dunk And watch the auld currancy Floatin’ bye’ [DH], ‘… Or by the Dunk to Goldilands Ayont where waters meet’ [WFC], ‘We don’t go swimming in the Park, In the Dunk oo hev a dook’ [IWL] (possibly from mediaeval Scots ‘donk’ meaning ‘damp, moist’).

Dun Law (dun-law) n. hill in the Borders to the south of Soutra at the western end of the Lammermuirs, reaching 393 m (1,289 ft). It is the site of a large wind farm built in 2000, consisting of 26 turbines on 40 m high towers, and easily visible from the A68.

Dunlop (dun-loup) n. Archibald (18th/19th C.) recorded at Whitmuir in Selkirk Parish according to the 1797 Dog Tax Rolls. He was surely related to Walter, who farmed at Whitmuirhall. He was listed as owner of parts of Silverbuthall in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. Perhaps the same Archibald of Whitmuir was listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1661 he witnessed a baptism for William Stewart. His daughter Margaret was baptised in 1644. James (17th C.) resident of Birkwood in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll there. William was also listed at Birkwood and so surely related. He is probably the James who witnessed a baptism for William in 1691. Along with William he witnessed a baptism for Robert Turnbull in 1694. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isobel Johnstone and their children included Agnes (b.1708), Walter (b.1714), George (b.1720) and John (b.1724). James (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isobel Rutherford and they had an unnamed daughter in 1738. James (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His children included George (b.1780), John (b.1781) and Janet (b.1783). He may be the James who witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1772 for James Scott and Marjory Irvine. James (18th C.) probably son of Walter of Whitmuir, he was a doctor in Rochdale and also in Hawick. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He is probably the ‘Dr Dunlap of Rochdale’ who married Miss Fisher in Hawick in 1797. His daughter Nancy died in Rochdale in 1806 and his wife Margaret in 1820, aged 50. John (16th C.) recorded in 1581 as resident at Burnfoot on Ale when acting as a cautioner for William Scott there. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1718 he was recorded as tenant in Clerklands and in 1724 was tenant in Langton. It seems likely Walter was closely related (perhaps brother) of Walter, who was previously tenant in Langton. He married Isobel Taylor and their children included Margaret (b.1716), James (b.1718), Walter (b.1720), Robert (b.1722) and Marion (b.1724). John (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Archibald and and their children included John (b.1726), Janet (b.1728) and Andrew (b.1733). John (b.1710) son of Walter. He was probably also tenant of local lands. In 1760 he purchased Whitmuir Hall (east of Selkirk) from John Goudie (Divinity Professor in Edinburgh). He was succeeded by his son Walter, while another son was John. He may be the John who married Margaret Scott in Ashkirk Parish in 1745. John (18th C.) younger son of John. He was tenant of Chisholme farm. In 1779 William Stoddart had a discharge of a bill with him. His children (born in Roberton Parish, but with no mother’s name given) included: James (b.1770); George (b.1771); John (b.1773); Rev. Walter (b.1775), minister at Newcastleton and Dunfries; and William (b.1777). He is probably the John ‘late in Chisholme now in Selkirk Common’ who was complained about in Selkirk in 1790 by Hawick carrier Archibald Paterson for non-payment of a bill. John of Whitmuir Hall (18th/19th C.) recorded in documents in Selkirk in 1821 and 1822, related to road trustees and improvements. Margaret (17th C.) resident of North Synton in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor’. Her surname is written ‘Dilape’. Patrick (15th C.) probably name of a presbyter of Glasgow Diocese who was a witness to the 1464/5 sasine giving the Barony of Cavers and Sherifffdom of Roxburghshire to Archibald Douglas. His name appears as ‘[l]atrio de Dunlop’ (with the first letter illegible). Walter (17th/18th C.) tenant of Ashkirk Town and Synton Parkhead in the early 1700s. He and his brother John also between them held the farms of Chisholme, Whitslade and others. His son was John. Probably the same John was tenant in ‘Longtoun’ in Ashkirk Parish in 1716; He married Jean Halliday and their children included Agnes (b.1703), Janet (b.1706), John (b.1714) and Jean (b.1716). He is probably the Walter who was tenant in Ashkirk in 1753. Walter of Whitmuirhall (1738–1808) eldest son of John and brother of John. He was recorded at Whitmuirhall on the 1785–91 Horse Tax Rolls. In 1788 he was listed as owner of both Whitmuir and Whitmuirhall, valued at £673 13s 4d. He was recorded as owner of 7 horses in the 1797 Horse Tax Roll for Selkirk Parish and also paid the dog tax there in the same year. In 1761 in Ashkirk Parish he married Agnes, eldest daughter of Robert Dickson of Roxburghshire in 1819.

Bald of Whitmuir was listed as a Commissioner of 1811 Land Tax Rolls. Perhaps the same Archibald of Whitmuir was listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1661 he witnessed a baptism for William Stewart. His daughter Margaret was baptised in 1644. James (17th C.) resident of Birkwood in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll there. William was also listed at Birkwood and so surely related. Dunlop Dunn Hassendeanburn. He had 7 sons and 5 daughters, including: James (b.1766), who was a physician in Rochdale; Katherine (b.1768); Archibald (b.1770), who succeeded his father and sold the farm of Whitmuir in 1818; Isabel (b.1772); Walter (b.1774); John (b.1776), 4th son, who lived in Ayrshire and died unmarried; Janet (b.1778); Jean (b.1780); Robert, cloth merchant in Huddersfield; William (b.1785), 6th son, who became Quartermaster-General of the Bengal army; and Charles, who purchased Whitmuir Hall from the trustees of his brother William. The earlier children were baptised in Ashkirk and the later ones in Selkirk. Rev. Walter ‘Wattie’ (1774–1846) son of John, who was a younger son of Walter of Whitmuir Hall. His father was tenant of Chisholme and he was born in Roberton Parish. His mother was Agnes Hunter. He was in Prof. Lawson’s junior class at Selkirk. The family attended the East Bank Kirk in Hawick. He was apprenticed to a baker in Leith, but switched careers to train for the ministry in Edinburgh and at the Burgher Theological Hall in Selkirk. He was ordained at Newcastleton Burgher Kirk in 1804 (the first minister in the new building). He was said to be known for his ‘ready and pungent wit’ and ‘famous among South country humorists for the jokes he made himself or was the subject of among others’; however, no stories survive relating to his time in Liddesdale. It is said that he baked the pie for his own ordination dinner. He lived in a manse that was built next to the new church in Newcastleton. He greatly increased the congregation during his time in Newcastleton, but was called to Dumfries in 1809, moving there in 1810. In Dumfries he became the first minister of the new Secession Kirk on Buccleuch Street there, where he served until about 2 years before his death. He married Isabella Scott, who died in 1814. He secondly married Janet Jessie MacLean, who died in 1828. Their son Archibald emigrated to Australia, while his oldest daughter Catherine (or ‘Kitty’) died in 1838. William (17th C.) resident of Birkwood in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Roll there. He was presumably related to James, who was also listed at Birkwood. Along with James he witnessed a baptism for Robert Turnbull in 1694. He is probably the William who witnessed a baptism for James Gray and Bessie Dunlop in 1689 and others for John Murray, William Scott and William Allan in 1690. He married Jean Cuthbertson and their children included Euphane (b.1691) and Jean (b.1692). The witnesses in 1691 were James Gray and James Dunlop. Perhaps the same William had earlier married Janet Hislop, with their daughter Margaret baptised in 1688 (formerly written ‘Dilape’, ‘Dinlap’, ‘Dinlop’, ‘Dunlop’, ‘Dunlap’ and variants).

Dunn (dun) n. Eling (16th C.) tenant of Sir Walter Scott of Howpsley in the lands of Outersideig in 1569. Sir Walter acted as cautioner for all of his tenants, appearing in Hawick to assure that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. It is unclear what this fore-name corresponds to, and whether this might be a woman’s name. James (17th/18th C.) gardener in Hawick. In 1708 he witnessed a baptism for gardener William Riddell (along with gardener James Falsyde). He married Margaret Ker and their children included: Jean (b.1707); Janet (b.1707); Robert (b.1708); John (b.1708); Helen (b.1710); Mary (b.1713); Margaret (b.1716); James (b.1719); and Adam (b.1721). The witnesses in 1707 were Bailie George Martin and tailor Henry Orrock, in 1713 were gardeners William Riddell and Robert Ker (probably related to his wife) and in 1719 were gardener William Riddell (again) and carrier James Simpson. James B., A.R.S.A. (19th/20th C.) Edinburgh architect famous for designing the Scotsman Building with James Leslie Findlay. In Hawick he was commissioned to design the Hawick War Memorial. Jean (17th/18th C.) born in Selkirk, she was a servant to Andrew Jerdon in Hawick, being put out of the Town twice for failing to produce a testimonial from her former Parish. She was also servant to Mrs. Fraser (although whether this was Hawick is unclear) and travelled between the parishes of Hawick, Galashiels and Prestpans. John (1780/1–1807) from Ruletownhead, he died of fever and was buried at Bynness in Northumberland. Margaret (b.1811/2) from Jedburgh, she was a grocer and spirit merchant at Bonchester Bridge in 1851. Marilyn (??– ) from Hawick, she graduated from Edinburgh University and is Senior Lecturer in Medieval History at the University of Glasgow. She has published books on Byzantine and monastic history. Thomas (15th C.) probably from the Rule valley. In 1493 Archibald Plenderleith in Bedrule was charged with stealing a cow and an ox from him. Perhaps the same ‘Thomas dwn de Jedworth’ was also mentioned in 1493 when Walter Ker of Cessford served as surety for the Laird of Bedrule not harming him. It is possible he was the same Thomas for whose murder John Robson in Auld Roxburgh was declared a fugitive in 1502. Thomas (19th C.) gardener at Stobs. He married Ann Henderson. Their son Robert died of consumption in 1857, aged 36. William (15th C.) witness to the document of 1488 in which Greenwood (i.e. Girnwood) and the Lyne were leased by Sir Thomas Turnbull to Robert Scott of Allanhaugh. It was signed at St. Mary’s Church in Ettrick Forest and his name appears as ‘Willelmo Dun’. Probably the same William is recorded in 1494/5 when Thomas Turnbull of Phau was fined for his non-appearance in Selkirk. William (19th C.) said to have been one of only 2 residents of Boltoncruig who stayed in their houses during the devastating flood of 1846. William (19th C.) carrier, listed in 1852 leaving the Black Bull in Hawick on Thursday’s, travelling to Canonbie and Annan (formerly written ‘Dun’).

Dunnan (du-ninn) n. John (15th/16th C.) listed among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Brauxholme) pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran. His surname is recorded as ‘Dunnand’, which might correspond to some other modern name. He is actually the last man named.

dunner (du-nur) v., arch. to make a noise suggestive of thunder, rumble, clatter – ‘Thunners dunned a’er ye’, ‘…and though it gard the divots stour off the house riggins and every caber dunner …’ [EM1820], ‘…When fell on her ear a dunning sound, Mix’d with a boisterous cry’ [JTe], ‘…She tuk alang the road hersel’, As fast as she could dunner’ [JoHa], ‘But dummeran tyres And poisoned reek Chowk her till she Can hardly speak’ [DH], n., arch. a noise like thunder – ‘…maist deved an daivert an donnert wui the rammellin dunner o an eend-on bizz’ [ECS].

Dunnerine Haa (du-ne-rin-haw) n. an old cottage that stood near Barnes in the early 19th century. It was the home of James Cavers, known as ‘Auld Dunnerum’, who reached the age of 98.

Dunnett (du-ni’i) n. Rev. Arthur Henry (1882–1940) son of William, minister in Kilmarnock, he was educated in Kilmarnock and at Glasgow and Edinburgh Universities. He was licensed by Irvine Presbytery in 1910, assisted at Dalziel and St. Mungo’s in Glasgow and was ordained as minister of St. John’s in Hawick near the end of 1913. He was translated to Teviothead in 1920. He demitted in 1924 when he was appointed as Depute Home Mission Secretary. After the Union of 1929 he became one of the Secretaries of the Home Board for the Church of Scotland. He married Jessie, daughter of John Lamb, the West Kilbride minister. Their children were Fiona and William Gavin (b.1919). He published ‘The Child’s Prayer Book’ (1920), ‘Book of Prayers’ (1925) and an article ‘For Christ or Congregation’ in ‘The Church in Changing Scotland’ (1934).

Duns (dunz) n. small market and former county town in Berwickshire. Originally called Dunse and built on the dun (Iron Age fort), it became a burgh of barony in 1490. Duns Castle includes part of a 14th century tower, and Duns Law is the site of the Covenanters’ Stone. Nearby stands Manderston House, as well as Nisbet House and Wedderburn Castle. It was the birthplace of Duns Scotus (who indirectly gave us the word ‘dunce’) and also has the Jim Clark Museum. Duns summer festival was started in 1949, and takes place in July. It includes a ride to the summit of Duns Law by the Reiver and his supporters. The town motto is ‘Duns Dings A’!, relating to a rout of the Earl of Northumberland’s men there in 1377. The town handball game was carried out until 1886 and revived recently as part of the Summer Festival. Population (1991) 2,444 (formerly spelled ‘Dunse’).

Duns (dunz) n. Patrick (17th C.) resident in Ashkirk Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. His name is written ‘Dunce’. Also in 1694 he witnessed a baptism in Ashkirk for James Brown.

Dunside Rig (du-sid-rig) n. hill to the southwest of Buccleuch and north of Phenzhopehaugh, reaching a height of 367 m.

Dunsmuir (dunz-mwir) n. Robert (15th C.) witness to a charter of 1453, the first known relating to lands in Hawick. His name was written ‘Dunsmyre’.

Dunstone (dun-stän) n. area just to the southwest of Lilliesleaf village. The hill immediately west of the village was formerly called Dunstone Height and is now marked ‘Dunstone Roundle’, reaching a height of 109 m. Dunstone Mill is probably an old name for Riddell Mill (although it is possible it was a separate mill). Some of the lands of Riddell of that Ilk in Lilliesleaf are described in 1595/6 as being called ‘the West-Maynis alias Dunstone or Myris’. Adam Young was farmer there in the 1860s (also written ‘Dunston’).

dunt (dun’ट) n. a blow, thump – ‘A gien eet a right guid dunt’, ‘Yet up he raise, the truth to tell, And laid about him dunts fu’ dour …’ [CPM], ‘…for it wad be a gey sair pliskie ti rin dunt up again’ the braw moniment at the fit’ [ECS], ‘But nought will scare him frae his neuk, Or gar him rair. But hearty dunts wi' the big buik, Or fervent prayer’ [DA], ‘Hard are the dunts, The dule and pain, A wheen o’ oor neebors Maun thole vent prayer’ [DA], ‘Hard are the dunts, The dule rair, But hearty dunts wi’ the big buik, Or freed-fæils me; as for the licht o’ mine eyne, it alsua is the bodie’ [JoHa], ‘My hairt dunts, my strencht glish and Gaelic for ‘hill fort athwart the valley’).

Duntersdales (dun-turz-dälz) n. former name for land lying south of the Slintrig, between and up-hill from Usuch Haugh and Deidhaugh. In 1892 it was feued by the Duke of Buccleuch to John Laing & Sons and James Melrose & Sons, both of Slintrig Crescent (the origin is uncertain, perhaps relating to ‘dunters’, the spirits that inhabited old estates, or alternatively a combination of Old English and Gaelic for ‘hill fort athwart the valley’).

Dun Tae (dun-tä) n. hill between Carlin Tooth and Carter Fell. It may be the ‘Dun’ listed among the highest hilles in Castleton Parish in 1839.

duntit (dun-tee’, -ti’) pp., arch. beaten, struck – ‘But he tirl’d fu’ lood at the window glass, And he duntit and knockit to waken the lass’ [JoHa], ‘... But he dunted the banes o’ the bodie’ [JoHa], ‘My hairt dunts, my strencht

Durham (du-rum) n. small city in northeastern England, centre of the Anglican Diocese of Durham. This traces its history to the Kingdom of Northumbria in the 7th century, the headquarters shifting from Lindisfarne to Chester-Le-Street and then the cathedral built in the loop of the River Wear from the late 10th century (and the present building started in 1093). The Cathedral still contains the remains and relics of St. Cuthbert. Teviotdale may have been part of this diocese until transferred to Glasgow sometime around 1100. Reginald of Durham, in his description of miracles attributed to St. Cuthbert, makes the first mention of Hawick in the 12th century. The town was also the location for the Battle of Neville’s Cross in 1346, also sometimes known as the Battle of Durham.

Durham (du-rum) n. Adam (12th/13th C.) holder of lands in West Lilliesleaf. His son Adam sold their lands to Melrose Abbey. Adam (13th C.) son of Adam. Some time in the period 1214–49 he sold to the monks of Melrose his lands of ‘Thodholesid’ and ‘Standestanerig’ which he held of Sir William Riddell in the territory of West Lilliesleaf. This was ‘out of great need for himself, his wife and his children. His name is recorded as ‘Adam filius Ade de Durnelino. The precise location of the lands is unclear, but they were adjacent to Clerklands.

Durie (joo-ree) n. Andrew (d.1558) son of John of Durie in Fife, and brother of George, who was Archdeacon of St. Andrews. He became Bishop of Galloway and Abbot of Melrose, under very dubious circumstances, it is said. He is meant to have been a very poor Abbot. In 1524 he was recorded as Postulate of the Abbey when he re-granted Sir Walter Scott of Branchholme the office of bailiary of the Abbey’s lands. In 1529 he witnessed the indenture to keep the peace between the Kerrs and the Scotts. He is said to have died of shock after Protestant rioters attacked St. Giles Cathedral. His shield bore the figure of Mary, together with a kneeling bishop, the arms of Durie and the words ‘S’ ANDREE ABBATIS DE MELROS’ (also spelled ‘Dury’).

durk (durk) n., arch. a drik, short dagger – ‘Assaults were common; the weapons ... ‘an durke’ ... ’ [JW1649] (also written ‘durk’).

Durnsteids (durn-steedz) n. Durnsteads, former name for lands in the Lordship of Winnington, once owned by the Elliots of Stobs. It was recorded in the late 17th century.

Durrough (du-rog) n. Mr. ?? (17th/18th C.) described as ‘dancing-master’ in the Hawick Parish records. He was in Hawick for part of 1715 and 1716, presumably teaching dance, and received a certificate for good deportment to carry to his next abode (possibly the same as ‘Durrow’ or ‘Darrow’, a family well-represented in Berwickshire).

dursni (durs-ni) contr. dared not (also durstnii).

durst (durst) pp., arch. dared, ventured, challenged – ‘... and none of the tenants’ hirsels durst stand before the Town’s hirsels for mixing’ [C&L1767], ‘Ha! dar’st thou point thy blood-stain’d hand at her’ [JoHa], ‘We’ve lis’ent to the fearfu’ tale till we durst nae gae hame ... ’ [JoHa], ‘... it was some time before either durst show their face on the streets’ [AM], ‘... ye durst not crook ye’re mooth tae whistle on a Fast-day, but now ye may whistle or sing or anything ye like on a Sabbath day’ [WiS], ‘Our land had given heroes birth, That durst the boldest brave, And

Dyce (dis) n. Isobel see Gordon ‘Mem Dyce’ (1769/70–1859) wife of ‘Lang Tam’. She ran a school for girls in Hawick, and was apparently the first such teacher to insist on being called ‘Mem’, hence her nickname. She is said to have been a Catholic and died at an advanced age. Rev. Thomas ‘Lang Tam Dyce’ (b.1740) son of William, Rector of Hawick Grammar School. He was educated at St. Andrews University and became preacher at Teviothead ‘chapel-of-ease’ in 1792. He also sometimes substituted at St. Mary’s. He rode a pony, called Donald. His nickname suggests that he must have been tall. He was described as ‘a man of some learning, talent, and a vast amount of eccentricity’. Several stories are told of him, e.g. on one occasion he set the congregation to sing the 179 verses of the 119th Psalm, saying to them ‘chow on that the now till A gaun throwe to Fahnesh for ma denner!’ On another occasion, impatient at shepherd’s dogs fighting in the church, he quipped ‘A’ll hev a shillin on the black yin!’ He is probably the minister of Teviothead who signed up for the Volunteers, although above the usual age. He apparently went insane (possibly around 1804 when Robert Shaw took over at Teviothead) and retired to Hawick, where he died. He got married in 1792: his wife Isobel, daughter of Alexander Gordon of Fochabers, was a Roman Catholic and died in Aberdeen in 1859 at the age of 90. William Norman Kennedy wrote an account of his life and character in the 1868 Transactions. His is probably the death recorded in 1809 in Hawick as ‘Mr. Dice son to Deed. Mr. Dice Latin schoolmaster’. William (b.1706) father of Rev. Thomas. He was son of James in Bellheric, Aberdeenshire. He was schoolmaster in Selkirk before moving to Hawick. He began teaching in Selkirk in 1730, with a licence to teach English, Writing and Accountancy. He is recorded in a legal case against debtors in Selkirk in 1737. He is the ‘Mr. Dyce’ whose houses in Selkirk are recorded being thatched in 1742 and repaired in 1743, and who had receipts for his salary as master of Selkirk Grammar School in the years 1731–46. He was schoolmaster at Hawick Grammar School approximately 1746–73 (although differing dates are given). In 1751 he was one of 4 men appointed by the Hawick Session to deal with the affairs of the deceased Bailie Gideon Ruecastle. He is listed among the subscribers to the 1752 reprinted Buchanan’s ‘History of Scotland’. He witnessed baptisms for clockmaker Walter Freeman in 1758, for wright John Kay in 1759 and for weaver John Elder in 1760. He was also witness for merchant Walter Turnbull and Katherine Dyce (who was probably his daughter) in 1764 and 1766. He married Katherine Forbes and their children, baptised in Selkirk Parish, included: Janet (b.1733); Isobel (b.1734); Katherine (b.1737), who probably married Walter Turnbull; William (1739–44); and Thomas (b.1740) (also formerly ‘Dice’).

dydie (dl-dee) adj. dyed – ‘...deidy (dyed) paips ...’ [ECS] (also written ‘deidy’).

dydie-egg (dl-dee-eg) n. a dyed hard-boiled egg, especially one prepared for rolling down a hill at Easter – ‘...Golfers and sledgers and dydie-eggs’ [DH], ‘...Crying ‘Shairy must be time, now, To trimle my dydie egg!’’ [DH] ‘At Easter A’ve trimmed dydie eggs ...’ [IWL].

Dydie-egg Day (dl-dee-eg-dà) n. Easter Saturday, when ‘dydie-eggs’ were traditionally rolled.

dyein (dl-in) n. the process of dyeing fibres, particularly cotton or wool. The Hawick dyeing industry grew up in support of textile manufacturers. ‘Turnbull the Dyers was an offshoot of the original Hawick Carpet Company, the dyeing department being started by Thomas Turnbull in the late 18th century and located where the Bridge Hotel is now. In the early 19th century there were 2 main businesses operating in town. John Turnbull & Sons became a large operation through much of the 19th and 20th centuries, with factories on Victoria Road and Slitrig Crescent, but went into liquidation in 2000.

dyester (dl-stur) n., arch. a dyer – ‘John and William Tomlins, dyesters in Reughheugh ...’ [BR], ‘Paid Thomas Turnbull, dyster, for dyeing and dressing officer’s clothes ...’ [BR1757] (also written ‘dyster’).

dyke (dik) n. wall, especially a ‘dry-stane dyke’ on a farm, formerly referring to a turf or ditch boundary – ‘...Item, whatsoever person that monds tp big ane stane dyck betwixt his nicher and houm and ...’ [C&L1767]; ‘Yet kneel down at the dyke side, And pray for heaven’s blessin ...’ [JR], ‘Auld Ringan stood against the dyke, And level’d weel his gun’ [JTe], ‘The big garden dyke’s carried off, every stane ...’ [JoHa], ‘...Dinna sit claiverin’ Doon at the dyke’ [GWe], ‘The bairns ... gaed lowpin an rin-pin aboot deike an gerss’ [ECS], ‘...bye seike an deike an waeter; bye burn an brig an ha’ [ECS], ‘He crawed and flappit over the dyke ...’ [WFC], ‘...and a glimpse o yon auld battered dyke that rins at intervals up the hill’ [DH], v. to build a dyke (sometimes written ‘dike’ or ‘dyck’; the word appears in several place names, e.g. Dykeback, Dykecroft, Dykehead, Dykeeneuk and Dykeraw).

the Dyke (thu-dik) n. former lands in Liddesdale, listed between Killoloy and Hietreis on the 1541 rental roll. The lands were valued at 10 shillings and the tenant were George and Edward Nixon. Thomas Nixon and ‘Fargathe Nixon’ were there in 1544. The precise location is uncertain (and is not Dykeraw, which is listed separately). The land of ‘Stellis, within the Dyk’ is also listed on the rental roll. This was probably the home of ‘Ekkie Nixson in Dyk’, recorded in 1611. In 1632 it is ‘Dyke’ when listed among Gavin Elliot’s lands in Liddesdale, along with Ower Heuchchoose, Nether Hightreis, Kilford and Byrestead (suggesting it was somewhere near Saughtree).

was a dyke-back gett: A bondager's wean, Wi' never ocht but the bothy-cat To ca my ain' [DH].

Dykeback (dik-bak) n. former name for land beyond the splitting of the road at the Loanhead, lying between Longbaulk Road and Rosebank, and being separated into Easter Dykeback and Wester Dykeback. Presumably it was originally the back of the area known as Thorterdykes.

Dykecrofts (dik-krofts) n. farm in Castleton Parish on Gall Sike, to the east of Castleton. ‘Albine’ Armstrong was tenant there in 1694 and William Herd was also listed as a resident there. William Elliot was farmer there in 1794–97 and Andrew Stavert in 1841 until at least 1868 (it is marked ‘Dykecroft’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Dykecrofts (dik-krofts) n. farm in Castleton Parish on Gall Sike, to the east of Castleton. ‘Albine’ Armstrong was tenant there in 1694 and William Herd was also listed as a resident there. William Elliot was farmer there in 1794–97 and Andrew Stavert in 1841 until at least 1868 (it is marked ‘Dykecroft’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Dykefit

Dykeheads, farm in the upper Rule valley, south of Wauchope farm. South-east of the farm, on the gentle slopes of Wauchope Rig, are the remains of a settlement, about 55 m by 50 m. Its interior contains the foundation of a small cottage, and it is recorded in 1892 that it was surrounded by a stone wall. The remains were once described as a ‘homestead moat’, but now seem more likely to be from the Iron Age, with a later cottage. Nearby there are also field boundaries and rig and furrow lines.

Dyke-louper (dik-low-pur) n., arch. an animal that jumps over walls, a person of immoral habits – ‘I am informed, that the old Session records of the parish of Hobkirk take notice of a female who was commonly known by the sobriquet of Bessy Loup-the-Dykes; and who is said to have been brought before the Session for having been guilty of dyke-loupin’ [JoJ].

Dykeraw

Dykefit

Dykeraw (dik-raw) n. farm in Southdean Parish, located along a track south of Southdean Cottages. The former tower of the same name is about 1/3 of the way along this track. After the area was burnt by Dacre’s men in late 1513 it was where the detachments met on their way back to England, with Sir Christopher Dacre leading 2000 horsemen and 400 footmen. It was once split into neighbouring farmsteads called Nether Dykeraw and Over Dykeraw. It was described being 2 steadings valued at 50 shillings in the Exchequer Rolls in 1538 and 1539. The tenants of the farm in the 17th and early 18th centuries were Olivers, ancestors of the Hawick lawyers; those recorded in 1669 are Robert, Gilbert, Thomas, elder and Thomas, younger. Andrew Jardine was a tenant there in 1684 when listed as a fugitive for being a Covenant. Isobel Oliver was listed among the poor of the Parish there in 1694. George Oliver is recorded as tenant in 1797. A farmstead is shown on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map just to the east of the old tower (see also Dykeraw Toor; the origin of the name is probably Old English and Old Scots ‘dic raw’, meaning ‘the row by the ditch’; the name is at least as old as the 16th century; ‘N. Dykra’ and ‘O. Dykra’ appear on Blaeu’s 1654 map; it is ‘Dykeraw’ in 1538 and 1539, ‘Dykeraw’ in 1571/2, ‘Dykarae’ in 1669 and ‘Dikerow’ in 1797).

Dykeraw (dik-raw) n. former house in upper Liddesdale, between old Castleton and Kirndean. It is valued at one merk and let to William and Hector Armstrong according to a rental roll of 1541. ‘Geordy Armstrong of Dykraw’ was tried for resetting cattle in 1633. Adam Elliot was tenant there in the late 17th century. William Waugh and John Scott were recorded there in 1694. It is shown on the 1718 survey of Buccleuch properties, covering 420 acres, bounded by Kirndean, James Robson was there in 1778. lands owned by the Laird of Whithaugh, Nether Harden, Cocklaik and Whitehaug. The location of the farmhouse is indicated, near the 176m spot height shown on the Ordnance Survey map, but with no evidence of habitation there now. William Sharp was farmer there in 1797. The whole of the former farm is now within an area of forest to the east of Florida (it is ‘Dykray’ in 1541, ‘Dykráe’ in 1694 and ‘Dikerow’ in 1797; it is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Dyakra’, and ‘Dykráw’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey, is still on Stobie’s 1770 map and is ‘Dikeraw’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).
Dykeraw Toor

Dykeraw Toor (dik-raw-toor) n. tower in Southdean Parish. It was burned by Dacre’s men in late 1513, ‘both roof and floor’, with Dacre adding in his correspondence ‘and so smoked them out’. It was burned again by the English in 1544. The remains can still be seen on the track leading towards Dykeraw farm, which is further to the south-east. The tower was oblong in shape. Part of the south-west side still exist, but not all of this is contemporary with the tower (it is ‘Dyker’ in 1513, ‘Dycray’ in 1544).

Dykes (diks) n. farm in the Rule valley, just to the west of Bedrule and east of Spittal Tower. It may have previously been known as ‘Middle’ and ‘Holm’. It was farmed by Turnbulls in the late 17th and 18th centuries. William Murray was there in 1724–31, Thomas Veitch in 1728 and James Murray in 1730. John Leyden was there in 1728, James Scott in 1729, Thomas Veitch in 1730, James Scott in 1736, James Murray in 1738, James Turnbull in 1742, James Scott in 1772, Robert Scott in 1784 and Walter Scott in 1786. In about 1795 it was listed among parts of Cavers Parish that were nearer to Bedrule Kirk than their own kirk. Thomas Turnbull is recorded as farmer there in 1797 and Henry Litster was hind there in at least 1818–22. Walter Cavers was there in 1841 and 1851 and William Veitch in the mid-19th century. It became part of the estate and Barony of Wells, despite being in the Parish of Cavers. In the 1811 Land Tax Rolls it was ‘That part of the barony of Wells, called Dykes’, owned by William Elliot of Wells and valued at £214 10s. By the 1870s it was held by the trustees of the late Sir William F. Eliott of Stobs and Wells. ‘Dykes Moor Cottage’ was a small cottage there in the 19th century (also called ‘the Dykes’; it is marked as ‘Dýks’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Earl o Mar

Dykes (diks) n. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Redford in 1646 and their children included Agnes (b.1653), Isobel (b.1656), Janet (b.1658) and Marion (b.1661). In 1658 his name is transcribed ‘Thomas’, but that is surely an error. The witnesses in 1661 were George ...and Walter Coltart. This seems to be the only occurrence of this surname in the district (also written ‘Dicks’, ‘Dikes’, ‘Dyke’ and ‘Dyckes’).

Dykes Burn (diks-burn) n. stream that rises on the north side of Ruberslaw and run in a roughly northern direction, passing the Dykes, to join the Rule Water at Fastcastle.

Dykesmuir (diks-mewr) n. former farmstead in Cavers Parish, south of Dykes and just to the north-west of Blawearie. George Ormiston and his family were there in 1851 (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

dymont (dI-min’) n., arch. a diamond.

eeachie-peachie (ee-chee-pee-chee) adj. not much to decide between two alternatives, six of one half a dozen of the other (cf. eeksie-peekie).

Earl o Minti (e-rul-ö-min'-i) n. title of the Lords of the Minto estate, beginning with Sir Gilbert, the 4th Baronet who was created Earl in 1813. The family also have the titles of Viscount Melgund and Baronet of Nova Scotia. They have been the most important landowners in the area around Denholm for the last 300 years. The full list of Earls is: Sir Gilbert Murray Kynynmound 1813–14; Gilbert Elliot-Murray-Kynynmound 1814–59; William Hugh Elliot-Murray-Kynynmound 1859–91; Gilbert John Elliot-Murray-Kynynmound 1891–1914; Victor Gilbert Lariston Garnet Elliot-Murray-Kynynmound 1914–75; Gilbert Edward George Lariston once Elliot-Murray-Kynynmound 1975–2005; Gilbert Timothy George Lariston Elliot-Murray-Kynynmound 2005– (see Elliot and Elliot-Murray-Kynynmound).

Earl o Murray (e-rul-ö-mu-ri) n. one of the titles of James Stewart (spellings can also be ‘Stuart’ and ‘Moray’).

Earl o Strathearn (e-rul-ö-straw-thern) n. title of Maurice Murray (or Moray), who was Baron of Hawick and Branxholme in the early 14th century.

the Earl o Tarras (thu-e-rul-ö-ta-ris) n. title often used for Walter Scott of Highchester and Harden.

Earlside (e-rul-, yi-rul-sid) n. farm off the side road leading from near Cogsmill to Hawthornside, south of Hawick. It was among lands re-signed in 1368 by Thomas Baliol to his superior William, Earl of Douglas. It was formerly part of the Cavers estate, having been acquired by Douglas of Cavers at least as early as 1511. In that years the ‘mains thereof’ are also mentioned, and these ‘dominicales earundem’ are still mentioned in 1687 and 1698. This is probably the place transcribed as ‘Yarsaye’ where Martin Crozier resided in 1544; he appears to have been a prominent member of the clan at that time. In 1574 this was among the lands that William Douglas of Cavers served as surety for, the inhabitants being guilty ‘for the cryme of thift in tymne bigane’, this including ‘Cock’s Clem’ Crozier, his brothers John and Rowie, ‘Kate’s Adie’, ‘Kate’s Jock’, ‘Megat’s Adie’, Airchie and also ‘Mark’s Airchie’. David Douglas of Earlside was recorded in 1589. James Douglas was ‘goodman of Yerlesyd’ in 1590. It was listed among the lands of Stobs purchased by Gilbert Elliott from his half sisters in about 1608. Adam Scott was tenant in 1641. The area was said to have been used for secret Covenanters’ sermons in the latter part of the 17th century; a thorn tree near there was long pointed out as the spot. James Stavert was tenant in 1682 and James Leyden in 1688. Part of the lands here were among those inherited by Sir William Elliott from his father in 1692. In the 1694 Hearth Tax roll there is an entry for 3 hearths there. Thomas Douglas and Richard Main were there in 1708. Robert Douglas in at least 1726–28, Walter Nichol and William Dodds in 1726, John Nivison in 1727 and John Douglas in 1728–29. John Lorrain was there in 1732, Thomas Telfer in 1733, Thomas Anderson and William Douglas in 1741, John Rule in 1742, William Inglis in 1772 and Thomas Scott in 1784. John Huggan was recorded as farmer there in 1794–97 and James Lunn as shepherd. Labourer Thomas Scott was living there in 1800. It was farmed by Peter Amos in the early 19th century, followed by his sons Thomas and then Gilbert. There is a story of some mysterious fires being set there when the Amoses were tenants; the culprit could not be found and so they procured a savage dog, which they paraded through Hawick, then let it be known how a nephew of Mr. Amos narrowly escaped being savaged by the dog, after which there were no more fires. William Telfer was there in the early 1900s. There was formerly a mill pond just to the north of the farm buildings. There is an ancient earthwork on the slopes of nearby White Hill (spelled ‘Yarlside’, ‘Yairlside’, ‘Yarlsyde’ and other variants from 1329 until the mid-17th century; it is ‘yarlside’ in 1368, ‘Yarlsid’ in 1511, ‘Zarlside’ in 1511 and 1558, ‘Zarlesyde’ in 1562, transcribed ‘Yairlesyde’ in 1569, ‘Yarlsyde’ in 1574, ‘Yarlsyde’ in 1589, ‘Yairlesyd’ in 1608, ‘Hairlesyde’ in 1622, ‘Yairlsyde’ in 1641, ‘Yearlesyd’ in 1652, ‘Zarlesyde’ in 1662, ‘Earlesyde’ in 1687, ‘Earlsyde’ in 1688 and 1692, ‘Earelesyde’ in 1694 and ‘Earlesyde’ in 1698; the name probably means simply ‘the nobleman’s slope’, ‘erl-sides’ in Old English).

Earlsideshiels (e-rul-, yi-rul-sid-sheelz) n. former farmstead near Earlside. John Elliott was shepherd there in the 1750s.

Earlston (e-rul-stin) n. town on the Leader Water, about 3 miles up from the Tweed, and about 25 miles from Hawick. It contains the ruined tower where ‘Thomas the Rhymer’ was born, and has the site of the castle of the former Earls of March. The old Earlston Bridge, a thatched cottage and the Rhymer’s Mill are other historic attractions. Post Office Close has a house with a lintel bearing the date 1581. Earlston Civic Week is at the beginning of July. Population (1991) 1,629 (the origin is possibly ‘Ercil’s fort’).

Earl Street (e-rul-stree’) n. road between Duke Street and Trinity Street, with houses built in 1887, and named after the 6th Duke of Buccleuch (Henry Walter Scott), who had been Earl of Dalkeith.

Eastbank see East Bank

East Bank (eest-bawnk) n. former name for the area near where Trinity Church now stands, which formed the eastern extremity of the town boundary. This was the site of the East Bank Kirk, and the lower ground was once called the Wheathole.

East Bank Hoose (eest-bawnk-hoos) n. Manse of East Bank Church, beside Trinity Gardens at the start of Bourtree Place. Once the building was turned over to secular use it became a shop, run by A. Kyle then Fred W. Robertson as a souvenir and art supplies retailer in the early 20th century. Later it was a Scottish Power showroom. From 1991 it has been Hamish Smith’s jeweller shop, Nos. 2 and 4 Bourtree Place, and is a grade C listed building. Local joiner Tosh Scott designed the new frontage in mahogany, and it contains custom cabinets to Hamish Smith’s designs, as well as the Teribus Clock outside.

the East Bank Kirk (thu-eest-bawnk-kirk) n. church formerly built at the Wheathole, being the lower part of the current Trinity Church. It was originally erected in 1780 as the East End Meeting House of the East End Burgher Congregation, which had been founded in Hawick in 1773 by the ‘dissenting seceders’, and previous to that members of this congregation had travelled to Selkirk for services. The first minister was George Williamson, but he left after disagreements with his congregation, and it was 8 years before James Henderson was appointed. He significantly increased the numbers, placing the congregation on a firm footing. Many worshippers came from the neighbouring Parishes of Wilton, Cavers, Kirkton and Hobkirk. There were 673 members in 1806. From 1847 it became part of the United Presbyterian Church, and formed an offshoot in 1886, which became Wilton South Church. The original structure was an unpretentious, square, 2 storey building with an attached church hall. An adjacent manse was built in 1793. In 1837 a dispute over whether to build a manse for the assistant minister caused a schism in the congregation. The church was enlarged in 1877. Members of the Free Church worshipped there for about a year, before St. George’s was built. The old meeting house was converted for use as a private school for a few years (the forerunner of St. Mary’s and Trinity schools), and was last used by a joiner’s firm in the early 20th century. Photographs of it exist from the late 19th century. The present building was constructed in 1843 higher up than the original, was officially called the East Bank United Free Church, and later became part of the Church of Scotland again. In the 1890s a Church Hall was built to designs by J.P. Alison. In 1958 the church merged with the nearby congregations of St. Andrew’s and St. John’s to become Trinity Church. An entrance pillar from the former gates by the Horse was dumped in the Teviot at Mansfield, but rescued to form the base of the Frank Scott Memorial Seat on the Miller’s Knowes. The oldest existing communion token is marked ‘Rev. J.H. 1791’ and ‘Ass-o-c-Hk.’ on the other side. A history was written by Stewart Richmond Scott in 1923. A roll of the ministers is: George Williamson 1774–83; James Henderson 1791–1840; Adam Thomson 1833–60; James McEwen 1862–72; James Orr 1874–91; Charles Allan 1892–99; James Brand Scott 1900–.

East Boonraw

Loaning in Denholm. Comrades Hall was built on the lower part in the 1920s, while the upper part continued to have clothes poles until about 1960, when it was turned into a children’s playground.

East Boonraw (eest-boon-raw) n. farm reached by taking the right hand road at the ‘Power Road Ends’, just next to West Boonraw, on the Boonraw Burn. It probably corresponds to the location of the main farm of Boonraw. Robert Scott was farmer there in at least the period 1841–72 (see also West Boonraw).

East Buccleuch (eest-bu-kloo) n. farm in the Rinkle Burn valley off the B711 and near West Buccleuch. This area gave its name to the Scotts of Buccleuch. The present house stands on the site of a much older manor house, near where the Clear Burn joins the Rinkle Burn. This was probably the first local seat of the Scotts of Buccleuch (or ‘Rankiburn’, as it was originally). The modern farmhouse was built in 1832, during the construction of which the foundation walls of the castle were discovered (at the western end). The house incorporates a freestone door-rybat from the earlier mansion, as well as a stone above the door bearing the crescent moon of the Scotts of Buccleuch. It is said that an old spur, a bridle bit and other relics were once dug up there. It is also said that when a fireplace was replaced in 1921 that the floor gave way, revealing the vault of the old house. The original ‘castle’ there was probably a fortified house and may have been ruined in an attack by the Routledges and accomplices in about 1490, although it has also been speculated that it was destroyed by the Earl of Hertford’s men in 1544. There are nearby signs of possible other buildings and rig field systems. The farm also once contained the lands of Gair Horse now is. In 1770 there were 96 houses there and various persons lived. The name came later to refer to the eastern boundary of Hawick, around where the merchants etc. lived. The name was used to distinguish it from West Cote and it is essentially the same as the earlier Little Cote (also spelled ‘East Cote’, ‘East Coat’ etc.; it is marked ‘Eastcot’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

East Cote see Eastcote

east (ees-tul) prep., arch. on the east of (also eassel).

the East End (thu-eest-end) n. former name for the area around the High Street, to distinguish it from the ‘West End’. This was the commercial part of Hawick, where the merchants etc. lived. The name came later to refer to the eastern boundary of Hawick, around where the Horse now is. In 1770 there were 96 houses there owned by Burgesses, with a value of over £17,000. On the 1841 census it was used as an explicit address (also written ‘Eastend’).

the East End Kirk (thu-eest-end-kirk) n. the East End Church, also known as the East End Meeting House, the original name for what became known as the East Bank Church. The name distinguished it from the other Secessionist church, the West End (or Green) Kirk.

Easter Alemoor (ees-tur-al-moor) n. farm beyond the dam at Alemoor Loch, on the Easter Burn, and actually to the north of the modern Wester Alemoor. It appears to have existed as a separate estate from at least the mid-16th century. David Armstrong ‘of Ailmure’, recorded in 1573, may be the first known owner. It was owned (along with Wester Alemoor) by the Scotts of Buccleuch in the 17th century, but by the late

East Burnfit (eest-burn-fi) n. East Burnfoot, former farmstead in the Ale valley, corresponding approximately with the modern Burnfit on Ale, with the ‘West’ farm actually to the south east. James Hart was tenant there in 1711 and Robert Riddell in 1721 (it is ‘eister burnfoot’ in 1688).

East Burn Park (eest-burn-pawrk) n. name for the field on the Common to the east of West Burn Park and to the west of Williestruther cottage.

East Castle (eest-kaw-sul) n. fortified house said to have been at the east end of Denholm village, so-called to distinguish it from Westgate Hall, at the other end of the village.

East Cavers (eest-kai-vurz) n. former farm on the Cavers estate, also known as Easter Cavers.

Eastcote (eest-ko’) n. farmhouse just outside Hawick, about half-way between Weensland and Denholm, lying on the left between the A698 and the Teviot. It was formerly part of Cavers estate and is now the ‘Eastcote House Archery Centre’. Andrew Rodger was there in 1727, John Douglas in 1731 and William Douglas in 1733. William Blyth was there in 1772. John Johnstone was farmer there in at least 1794–97 and Thomas Scott in 1841. Thomas Armstrong was farmer in the early 20th century. Aerial photography revealed the outlines of what appears to be a Roman temporary marching camp in the nearby fields. The name was used to distinguish it from West Cote and it is essentially the same as the earlier Little Cote (also spelled ‘East Cote’, ‘East Coat’ etc.; it is marked ‘Eastcot’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

18th century was the property of Pringle of Haining. Alexander Pringle, a prominent Scottish Judge, became ‘Lord Alemoor’. The farm was in Selkirk Parish until incorporated into Roberton in 1689. William Lamb was there in 1714, Walter Scott in 1716, James Govenlock in 1715, Walter Scott in 1716, George Sinton in 1720, William Scott in 1725, James Anderson in 1753, John Storie in 1757 and James Grieve in 1765. John Pringle of Clifton paid the Land Tax of £308 there in 1785 and Mark Pringle in 1802. There are signs of rig and furrow cultivation nearby and former buildings to the north-west (it is ‘Easter Ealmuir’ in 1725; it is marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Easter Barnhills (ees-tur-barn-hilz) n. former name for part of the lands of Barnhills. It was sold by John Turnbull of Barnhills to Ragwell Bennet of Chesters in 1613. In 1678 it was combined with Wester Barnhills when both were owned by Sir William Bennet. By 1788 the lands were valued at about £450 and held by the Miss Stewarts.

Easter Buccleuch see East Buccleuch

Easter Burnfit (ees-tur-burn-fi’) n. former farm bordering on Midshiels and Appletrechall, all tenanted farms of the Scotts of Buccleuch from at least the late 17th century. It was part of the lands of Burnfoot, distinct from Wester Burnfoot. The mill there is recorded from 1574, when William Scott ‘in Harden’ and James Scott ‘in Quhit-slaid’ paid back Sir Walter Scott of Birkenside for a loan on the lands. James Shiel was living there in 1682. Robert Wright was a shoemaker there in 1690. The residents there in 1694 were Alexander ‘Hymers’ and Robert Wright. Bessie Gray was from there in 1717. There is still mention of ‘easter Burnfoot myyne’ in 1718 and in the survey of Buccleuch properties in that year it was not owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch, unlike the adjacent Wester lands. Robert Riddell was recorded there 1721–29, Alexander Moore in 1723, Walter Riddell in 1725 and James Scott in 1733–35 (it is ‘Easter Burnfoot’ in 1694 and ‘E: burnfoot’ in 1725).

Easter Cavers (ees-tur-kā-vurz) n. former farm on Cavers estate, also known as ‘East Cavers’. John Miller and William Nichol are listed there in 1694. Walter Lorraine was there in 1714. It is possible it was the same as Little Cavers.

Easter Clarilaw (ees-tur-klā-ree-law) n. former name for the eastern half of Clarilaw in Wilton Parish. It was included in the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch, when it covered 146 acres and was bounded by Midshiels, Wester Clarilaw and Hassendean Common. It was also stated that 6 acres of land belonging to Wester Clarilaw were mixed with it, while one acre mixed with Wester Clarilaw belonged to it.

Easter Common Haugh (ees-tur-ko-min-hawf) n. former name for the Wee Haugh, including the extended area now occupied by Teviot Crescent.

Easter Craik (ees-tur-krāk) n. formerly half of the lands of Craik. In 1548/9 these lands were granted by Mary, Queen of Scots, to Sir Walter Scott and his wife Janet Betoun, having been forfeited by John Cockburn of Ormiston. The lands were re-granted to John Cockburn by James, Earl of Bothwell in 1567. It was inherited by Simon Scott in Newton in 1618, from his brother Walter. It is probably the ‘Easter Craig’ listed among the possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch according to the 1653 and 1661 services of heirs and the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch. The lands were also described as having a mill (it is ‘Eistir Craik’ in 1548/9, ‘Eister Craik’ in 1567 and ‘Eister Craik’ in 1661).

Easter Dykeback (ees-tur-dik-bak) n. former name for land lying on the north side of Rosebank Road, probably once part of the area known as Thorterdykes, and distinguished from Wester Dykeback, which lay further to the south-west.

Easter Essenside (ees-tur-e-sin-si) n. farm west of Ashkirk, adjacent to Wester Essenside. It was part of the estate of the Scotts of Headshaw in the late 16th century. In 1643 it was owned by Francis Scott of Synton and valued at £200, with the teinds being valued at £60. There were 6 tenants listed there on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. William Redford was tenant there in at least 1709-17 and James Nichol was living there in 1710. The Shortrees were there in the 18th century, with James Shortreed being the owner in 1759. In 1778 it was purchased by John Elliot, younger son of the 2nd Lord Minto (who would become an Admiral and settle at Monteviot); when he died in 1808 it passed to his nephew, the next Lord Minto. In 1788 it was...

valued at £365 (and had a value of 10s more in 1811). In 1820 it may have been sold to Miss Ann Carnegie (perhaps a relative of the Elliots by marriage). John Scott was farmer there in 1879–97. It was farmed in the 19th century by John Douglas (father of Bailie James) and his son, who was also John. 2 small bronze axe-heads (or ‘celts’) were discovered on the farm, in 1882 and in 1887, as well as a bronze armlet, possibly loaned to the National Museum of Antiquities by Tom Scott.

Easter Grundistone (ees-tur-grun-dee-stin) n. former house and farm, which was home of a branch of the Scotts in the 16th century, situated near Groundistone. ‘Robert Scot of Easter-groundistone, brother-son to Robert Scot of Headshaw’ is listed by Scott of Satchells as one of the 24 ‘Pensioners’ of the house of Buccleuch. George Scott was there in at least 1682–88. It was part of the estates of the Duchess of Buccleuch by the end of the 17th century. George Scott and Robert Stewart were there in 1694, with William Bell as shepherd and James Young there among the poor of the Parish. William Miller was there in 1711. In the 1718 list of Buccleuch properties it covered 371 acres, bounded by Hassendean, Newton, Boonraw, Wester Grundistone and Synnton. A stream separated it from Wester Grundistone, and in 1718 farmhouses are shown on either side of this stream. The small farmstead of Boghall was also included within its limits. John Armstrong was farmer there in 1797 (it is ‘Easter Grundiston’ in 1643, ‘eister groundiston’ in 1688 and ‘Easter Grundiestone’ in 1718).

Easter Hassendean (ees-tur-haw-sin-deen) n. former name for the eastern half barony of Hassendean, the name being used from at least the 15th century to refer to the part with barons being the Cunninghams. This is distinct from the western part, which included some of the northern Borthwick valley. In 1510/1 the lands were granted to David, son of James Scott of Hassendean. In 1514 Cuthbert Cunningham, Earl of Glencairn granted the lands to Elizabeth Cunningham, widow of John, Lord Hay of Yester. And in a charter of 1529, John, Lord Hay of Yester takes possession of the ‘ten merkis landis of ald extent’ of ‘eister hassindane’, previously belonging to his grandmother Elizabeth Cunningham. This was confirmed to the Hays of Yester in 1617, when the daughters and heirs of another John, Lord Hay of Yester disposed the lands to him. Although the Cunninghams and Hays held the superiority, the lands were possessed by the Scotts of Hassendean, with a confirmation to William Scott of Hassendean in 1532. In 1606 Walter Scott of Alton was served as heir to his grandfather Robert in half the lands of ‘orientalium de Hassinde’ with the mill there. The lands, including ‘the toure, fortalice, and mylne thairof’ were listed among the possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1661 and 1663 (it is ‘Estir Hassindene’ in 1514, ‘Estir Hassindene’ in 1532 and ‘Estir Hassindene’ in 1663).

Easter Heap (ees-tur-beep) n. former name for an estate roughly corresponding to the modern Silverbuthall, and being part of ‘the Heaps’. In 1635/6 James Waugh was served heir to the lands there belonging to his grandfather, John Waugh ‘de Heip’; this was explicitly land valued at 5 merks. In a 1650 list of ‘communlicants’ there are 39 people listed on the estate, namely (using modern spellings) Adam Welsh, Margaret Davidson, Marion Waugh, Janet Percival, Margaret Sheen, John Percival, Walter Scott, Bessie Scott, James Aitichison, Gavin Elliot, Janet Percival, Robert Easton, James Easton, Margaret Fletcher, William Easton, Isobel Fowler, John Scott, James Scott, James Stevenson, Bessie Easton, Bessie Stewart, William Easton, Janet Gray, Helen Johnstone, James Stewart, Agnes Scott, Patrick Lorraine, William Lorraine, Marion Rule, Robert Scott, Margaret Percival, Robert Aitkin, James Aitkin, David Aitkin, Bessie Brydon, Adam Aitichison, Robert Mitchell, James Learmonth and Isobel White. In 1788 it was ‘Easterheap or Silverbuthall’ when valued at £80 and owned by James Scott. The 1808 will of William Oliver ‘Auld Cash’ mentions ‘Easter Heap or Heip now commonly called Silverbuthall’. ‘Three Inclosures and Stackyard, part of Easter Heap, or Silverbuthall, formerly belonging to James Scott, and possessed by Robert Smith, acquired from James and Walter Knox’ are listed in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls, with the owner being Archibald Dunlop of Whitmuir and the value being £13 (also spelled ‘Heip’ or ‘Hepe’; it is ‘Eister Heip’ in 1636 and ‘Eister heape’ on a parish map of 1650).

Easter Hermiston (ees-tur-her-mis-tin) n. former name for lands in Lilliesleaf Parish. The lands were owned by Andrew Scott and William Johnstone, both valued at £130, along with teinds valued at £51 10s 2d. John Scott of Synnton and John Johnstone owned the lands in 1678 and they were combined with Wester Hermiston by 1743. They were all owned by William Govan in 1788.

Easter Hill (ees-tur-hil) n. hill just south of the western part of Alemoor Loch, reaching a height of 344 m.

Easter Hislop (ees-tur-hiz-lop) n. former part of the farm of Hislop, mentioned in the 16th century and early 17th century (it is ‘Eister Heislehoip’ in 1572 and ‘Eister Heissilhoip’ in 1615).

Easter Hoose (ees-tur-hoos) n. house in Roberton that used to be the local manse.

Easter Howlands (ees-tur-how-lindz) n. old name for the area that was later called Dovemount (mentioned as early as 1511), making up a large part of Wilton east of Roughheugh, or today east of Wilton Crescent and Stirches Road. Note that the name does not signify that it is east of Howlands, but rather that it is the eastern lands (of the Langlands estate) which lie in the hollow. A 1726 charter granted Easter Howlands to William and Charles Tudhope, then it passed to John and William Sharp of Mackside in 1763 and George Haliburton in 1770, by which time it was known as Dovemount and subsequently parcelled off.

Easter Kirkstile (ees-tur-kirk-stil) n. former name for the Kirkstile, to distinguish it from the formerly existing Wester Kirkstyle – ‘John Bridges weaver att the easter kirkstyle had a child baptized . . .’ [PR1713].

Easter Langbaulk (ees-tur-lun-bawk) n. former farm on the ‘Lumback’ road. Archibald Scott was farmer there in the late 18th and early 19th centuries.

Easter Lees (ees-tur-leez) n. ??.

Easter Lilliesleaf (ees-tur-li-leez-leef) n. farm near Lilliesleaf. The mill, lands and town of ‘Easter Lillisle’ were listed in the service of heirs for Sir John Riddell in 1669. The farmer there in 1851 and 1861 was George Alexander.

Easter Loch (ees-tur-loch) n. name. sometimes used for Branxholme Easter Loch eastermaist (ees-tur-maist, -most) adj., arch. furthest east (variant of eastmaist, also written ‘eastermost’).

Easter Mertin’s Hill (ees-tur-mer-‘inz-hil) n. hill to the north of Crumhaugh Hill farm. It was the location for a view of Hawick painted by Andrew Richardson about 1835.

Easter Moormaw see Moormaw

Easter Star (ees-tern-stawr) n. the Order of the Eastern Star, effectively a women’s version of the Masons, although men can also be members. The Hawick branch started in 1911 and closed in 2002, being the last one in the Borders. The leaders were called Worthy Matron and Worthy Patron, and were typically appointed for 2 years.

Easter Parkhill (ees-tur-pawrk-hil) n. former name for a farm in the southern Borthwick valley, adjacent to Easter Park Hill. The former farm of Parkhill was at some point split into west and east parts. Andrew Chisholme paid the land tax there in 1678, when it was valued at £100. John Hume was recorded there in 1717 and Walter Scott in 1718. John Scoon was recorded as farmer in 1797, James Aitkin in 1800 and William Miller in 1819. In the 1788 county valuation (and the 1811 Land Tax Rolls) it is listed among the possessions of William Chisholme of Chisholme, and valued at £100. In about 1874 it (as well as Easter Parkhill) is recorded being owned by William Richardson Dickson of Alton (see also Parkhill).

Easter Perk Hill (ees-tur-perk-hil) n. Easter Park Hill, hill in the southern Borthwick valley, south of Roberton village, reaching a height of 295 m, and with a peak to the north-west reaching 276 m. Nearby was the farm of Easter Parkhill.

Easter Sike (ees-tur-sik) n. small stream that rises on Saughtree Fell and runs roughly south-easterly to join Dawston Burn to the north of Ashtree Cottage.

Easter Swanshiel (ees-tur-swan-sheel) n. former part of the farm of Swanshiel in Hobkirk Parish. It was situated on a promontory jutting into the Swanshiel Cleugh. In 1643 it was the larger part of Swanshiel, and valued at £66 13s. 4d. It was owned by a branch of the Turnbuls, then acquired by the Grieves of Easter Swanshiel in the early 18th century, before being sold and annexed to Wolfelee. Adam Turnbull was there in about 1663, when it was still valued at £66 13s 4d. James Turnbull was there in 1694. The last occupant of the steading there was a pauper by the name of Loraine. By 1788 it was owned by Cornelius Elliot of Wolfelee and still owned by him in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1811 (it is ‘eister Swanshell’ in 1663 and ‘Easter Swansheall’ in 1694).

Easter Toll (ees-tur-tol) n. one of Hawick’s 4 toll houses, a plaque marks the site on Bourtree Place near the Conservative Club. The toll house is marked on Wood’s 1824 map. George Grieve was tollkeeper in 1841.
Easter Weens

Easter Weens (eest-tur-weenz) n. former stables on the Weens estate, located north of the main house.

Easter Wells (eest-tur-welz) n. former name for farm that was part of the Wells estate in Rulewater, distinct from Wester Wells.

Easter Whitehaugh (eest-tur-whi'-nf) n. former name for the lands also known as Wester Heap.

Easter Winds (eest-tur-windz) n. former name for lands somewhere near Dryden, Commonside etc. Distinct from ‘Wester Winds’, this may have been an early form of ‘Weensland’. It is listed in 1686 among lands tenanted by Robert Grieve in Commonside in the ratification of the Barony of Hawick to Anna Duchess of Buccleuch.

Eastfield Mills (eest-feeld-milz) n. main premises of Blenkhorn Richardson & Co. Ltd. on Mansfield Road, opposite the footbridge. The main building, along with an engine room and a huge single-storey weaving shed, was erected in 1882/3 by Bell & Hill, Builders, with Melrose’s planning most of the engineering. The frontage is in the style of a French Renaissance chateau. The main warehouse, fronting the Teviot, was 120 feet long, with free-stone from Woodburn Quarry. It was extended in 1886 to incorporate the spinning of worsted yarn, with the addition of 2 extra 2-storey structures, as well as a matching gatehouse. There was further expansion in the period 1895–1921, with enlargement of the weaving sheds and an additional office block on Rosevale Street. The mill carried on through troubled times, until it sounded its whistle for the last time in 1976. Since 1981 it has been home to a knitwear mill for Johnstons of Elgin. The large octagonal chimney, spinning sheds and engine house were all demolished. The mill is a grade B listed building. There is a piece of film of workers leaving the factory in 1909/10.

Eastfield Road (eest-feeld-röd) n. built in 1962 in an area where Waverley Mills and part of Blenkhorn and Richardson’s, Eastfield Mills had been. Some of the council flats there were demolished in 1998.

East Fodderlee (eest-fo-duur-lee) n. eastern part of the lands of Fodderlee in the lower Rule valley, lying east of West Fodderlee, and also Old Fodderlee. It was also known as ‘Easter Fodderlee’. Near the bend in the road to the south are Easter Fodderlee Cottages, and a little further south is Easter Fodderlee March Wood. The owner in 1707 was Mary Kerr, when the value was £80. The lands were disposed by James Thomson to William Riddell in 1784 and then granted to John Thomson 3 years later. However, the lands are recorded being owned by George Thomson in 1788, and still in 1811 (so there may be some confusion with names). John sold them to Thomas Gregson in 1802, who sold them to Charles Kerr of Abbotrule 4 years after that. Kerr sold them to William Walker in 1815, and they passed to Walker’s nephew James in 1832. However, in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls the farm is recorded being owned by George Thomson and valued at £80. In 1864 the farm was purchased by Sir William Francis Elliott of Stobs, who had plans to encourage the railway to pass through the land. James Fairbairn was farmer there in 1861 and his widow was recorded as farmer in 1868. The farm was bought by John Usher of Norton and Wells in 1895. There was probably a small threshing mill here, powered by water from a pond. A polished stone axe found there is in the Museum (formerly written ‘Fotherlie’ and variants; see also Fodderlee).

Eastgate (eest-gä’) n. street running through the middle of Denholm, being part of the A698. It is also known as Main Street.

Eastgate Hoose (eest-gä’-hoos) n. house on the Loaning in Denholm. It was the home of the local master joiner around 1900.

East Grain (eest-grän) n. small stream in the headwaters of Twislehope Burn in the upper Hermitage valley, south of Twislehope Hope. It rises near Mid Hill joining Muckle Sike to become Deep Gill.

East Highchesters (eest-hi-ches-turz) n. former name for a smaller part of the main Highchesters estate, distinguished from West Highchesters. There were 9 ‘communicants’ there in 1650, namely John White, Bessie Allan, Adam Noble, George Heatlie, Janet Adam, John Gavin, Robert Renwick, Helen Napier and James Scott. It was within Wilton Parish until the Parish of Roberton was formed in 1689/90. It was probably the farm within Wilton Parish owned by Robert Scott of Glack in 1678. In 1694 there were 5 separate householders recorded there. John Wilson was there in 1714–20. John Hume was there in 1736, John Scott in 1742 and Robert Scott in 1763. It was purchased from Elliot of Fenwick by the Duke of Buccleuch in about 1756. George Hart was farmer there in 1797. In 1788 and 1811 it was part of the Buccleuch estates and valued at £130 (also called ‘Easter Highchesters’, it is ‘Easterhaychasters’ in 1694 and ‘Easter Heichester’ in 1718).
East Hill

East Hill (eest-hil)n. hill just to the south-east of the Note o the Gate. It reaches over 420 m (it is marked ‘Easter Hill’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Easthope (eest-hōp)n. John (d.c.1899) son of a soldier, his widowed mother and sister came to the Hawick area, where they slept in the barn at Branxholme Braes. The mother died overnight and the children were taken charge of by Mr. Grieve, then raised by Nancy Ewart. He attended school in Newmill, was apprenticed as a stone mason, and taught the herds’ children at Penchrise, later starting a school in Hawick. In Pigot’s 1837 directory he is listed as a teacher on the Back Row, but it was also said that his private school was on the Mid Row. He wrote some articles for the Kelso Chronicle, which helped secure him a Civil Service job in London, where he rose to a high position.

eastin (ees-tin) adj., poet. east, eastern (noted by J. Leyden).

Eastla (eest-la, ees-la) adj., n., arch. the eastern part of Hawick, as opposed to the ‘Wesla’, i.e. the part to the East of the Slitrig, also known as ‘Eastla Water’. The rivalry between the two parts of town used to be quite strong, with, for example, competing bonfires at the ‘King’s Ranting’ in the 18th century, and a tradition for the Cornet to be elected from alternate sides. In the 18th century (as described by Robert Wilson) there used to be gangs from each side, made of youths under about 16 years old, which formed ‘regiments’ with drums, flags, halberds, clubs and even swords. They would battle in the 2 or 3 weeks before and after ‘Fastern’s Eve’ (the time of the ‘Baa’ game), when injuries were common. They also used to have competing bonfires on July 4th, with material collected over the preceding month, and regular raids on each other’s store of fuel. The rivalry survived into the Baa game of the 19th and early 20th centuries – ‘...a total of 86 deaths ...34 were in Eastla water, and 52 in Westla water’ [JE] (cf. easla.

Eastlea Drive (eest-lee-driv)n. street in Denholm, off the main road after the Ashloaning, with construction began in the 1930s and finished after WWII. The local police station was on the corner with the Jedburgh road until it closed in 1971.

East Langlands Ludge (eest-lawng-lindz-luj, -loj)n. former gatehouse for Langlands House, now a separate dwelling, situated on Sunnyhill Road. It is dated 1880 and has picturesque detailing, including deep overhanging eaves. It was probably designed by the Edinburgh firm Kinnear & Peddie. It is a grade C listed building.

East Lees (eest-leez)n. former farm adjacent to West Lees, between Newton and Appletreehall. James Craunston was farmer there in the mid-19th century (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

East Mains (eest-mānz)n. former name for a set of lands to the east of Hawick, distinct from West Mains. The boundaries probably changed over time, but it consisted of essentially all the land to the east of the Burgh. Together these were originally part of the ‘demesne’ lands of the Baron. The detailed outline is shown in a survey of the lands held by the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1718. At that time it consisted of 572 acres, bounded by the Slitrig, Melkie Whitlaw, Hummelkowes, Weensland and the eastern limits of the Burgh; the enclave of Hilliesland and some smaller portions of lands were not included and the land was described as ‘corn land which is indifferent good, but it lyeth very inconvenient by reason that there is so many hills and valleys in it’. A great deal of what is currently the eastern part of the town (including the Terraces, the Wellegate, Slitrig Crescent, etc.) was once part of these lands. Over time various parts were sold to the Burgh and other landowners, or incorporated into neighbouring farms, so that eventually the name ‘East Mains’ ceased to be used. There was a court case of 1437 where William Douglas of Drumlanrig recovered part of these lands from Janet Murray, widow of James Gledstains; they were there said to be in the demesne lands of Hawick ‘commonly called le Estmaynis’ and rightfully owned by the previous Sir William of Drumlanrig, including the mill with appurtenances. The lands of ‘Est Manis of the Kirkton’ recorded in 1470 are probably the same as Kirkton Mains, and not the East Mains of Hawick. These are probably the ‘easter dominical lands’ which James Douglas, together with his wife, held in 1484 before he inherited the Barony of Hawick. They are listed as part of the lands held ‘in property’ by the Baron in the 1511 charter. Part of these lands are referred to as being to the north of the Trinitylands in a charter of 1557 (assuming that ‘Vest manis de Hawik’ is meant for ‘East Mains’). The lands were included in the Baron’s property in a promise of feftment in 1559, the retour of 1572 and in the Parliamentary ratification for Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1594. It was listed among the lands of the Earl of Queensberry in Hawick Parish on the 1663 Land Tax Rolls, valued at £1120. The lands were described as having a mill, although it is unclear where this was simply Hawick Mill, or referred to another, perhaps on the Slitrig, would have been, and whether on the Teviot or Slitrig. In 1630 Drumlanrig gave a quarter of the lands to Thomas Lidderdale of the Isle (in Kirkcudbrightshire). They are described as extending to 19½ husband lands' in 1675. In 1684 a piece of land called Crumptlands Croft, within East Mains, was sold by Patrick Cunningham to Alexander Hislop. In the 1686 ratification of the Barony to Anna, Duchess of Buccleuch it is listed first (supporting the idea of this as part of the demesne lands) as being 'nineteen husband lands and three fourth parts'. Rentals for the lands are included in the Buccleuch archives from 1690. However, it appears that some of the lands were purchased in the 1740s by the Duke of Buccleuch from John Scott and Thomas Turnbull (ex-Bailies of Hawick) and Patrick Cunningham. Improvements to the lands are mentioned in 1764. The lands of Crowbyshaugh are recorded in a dispute of 1822 as being part of East Mains (it is 'Easter Middles' in 1797). Marked 'Easter Middle' on Stobie's 1770 map and around 1900 (it is 'Easter Midle' in 1685; it is still recorded in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls.

East Mains (eest-minz) n. former name for a farm in Cavers Parish. It was presumably to the east of West Mains, and once formed part of the demesne lands of the Baron. James Douglas was there in 1716, George Dryden in 1748 and William Turnbull in 1782. George and John Dryden were there in 1716, George Dryden in 1748 and William demesne lands of the Baron. James Douglas was there in 1716, George Dryden in 1748 and William Turnbull in 1782. George and John Dryden were there in 1716, George Dryden in 1748 and William demesne lands of the Baron. James Douglas was there in 1716, George Dryden in 1748 and William Turnbull in 1782. George and John Dryden were there in 1716, George Dryden in 1748 and William Turnbull was farmed by James Turnbull in 1785, Alexander Douglas was there in 1795 and Thomas Blyth was tenant in 1797. There were Turnbells there in the 19th century and R. Ballantyne farmed there around 1900. It is 'Easter Middle' in 1685; it is marked 'Easter Middle' on Stobie's 1770 map and is 'Easter Middles' in 1797).

Easton (ees-tin) n. Adam (17th/18th C.) tenant in Greensidehall. His son Robert was baptised in Wilton Parish in 1709. Margaret (b.1715) may also be his child. Adam (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Overhall in 1723 and 1725. He married Mary Turnbull and their children included: Anna (b.1720); Jean (b.1723); Beatrix (b.1725); Agnes (b.1728); Gideon (b.1731); and William (b.1734). The witnesses in 1723 were William and Robert Easton (possibly his father and brother) and in 1725 were John and Walter Scott. He may be the Adam who witnessed baptisms in Wilton in 1723 for Robert Wilson and in 1729 for Adam Wright in Dean Mill. Adam (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, perhaps living at Wiltonburn. He married Isabel Renwick and their children included: Agnes (b.1770); and Thomas (b.1772). The witnesses in 1770 were Thomas (perhaps his father) and Thomas Hoy. He could be the Adam who (along with George) was recorded owning part of Roughheugh in 1788 (valued at £11 8s 8d), and still recorded in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. Adam (18th/19th C.) resident of Oxnam Parish. In 1791 he married Isobel Helm, who was from Cavers. In 1792 he was at Shiplaw Corse when his son Robert was baptised in Cavers Parish. Adam (b.1783) son of Andrew and Margaret Kedie, he was farmer at Overhall. In 1851 he was farming 62 acres and in 1861 he was a widower farming 60 acres. In 1814 he married Janet, daughter of John Michie from Old Northhouse. Their children included: Isabella (b.1815); Margaret (b.1817); Andrew (b.1819); William (b.1821); Robert (b.1824); John (b.1826); George (b.1828); Christian (b.1830); and Helen (b.1833). Agnes (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish who received poor money from the Session in 1706. Alexander (18th/19th C.) resident of Twisleton in 1821 when he subscribed to William

East Mains (eest-minz) n. former name for Knowetoonheid in Hassendean. It is referred to by this name in a ‘letter of reversion’ by Walter Turnbull, when it was assigned to the new Baron of Hassendean, Alexander, Lord Home in 1493/4 (and hence was originally the ‘home farm’ for the Baron). The name distinguished it from ‘Middle Mains’, which was also referred to in early times as part of Hassendean.

the East Main March (thu-eest-march) n. the East Marches of Scotland coincided with the area known as the Merse, with wardship often held by the Home family. It was also more or less the same thing as the Sheriffdom of Berwick. The English East March, more or less Northumberland, often had wardship by the Percy’s.

Scott's ' Beauties of the Border'. He is probably the shepherd at Broadleehope listed among heads of households in 1835-37 and Broadlee 1838-40. He may be the Alexander, married to Jean Kyle (daughter of Andrew KYLE and Jean Murray), whose children, born in Castleton Parish, included: William (b.1822); Andrew (b.1824); Jane (b.1826), who married Walter Gedstains; Alex (b.1828); Robert (b.1834); James (b.1835); Isabella (b.1836); and Elizabeth (b.1838). This family emigrated to Ontario, Canada in 1840. He left around the same time as the other Alexander, who was surely related. Alexander (18th/19th C.) shepherd in Castleton Parish. He was listed among heads of households for the first time in 1836, when he was at Whithaugh. He was at Bellshields in 1838 and 1840, and emigrated to America about that time. He was surely related to the other shepherd Alexander. Andrew (17th C.) recorded in 1673 on the list of men named in the trial for the so-called riot at St. Jude's Fair. He could be the Andrew, married to Helen Swan, whose son Stephen was born in 1671. Andrew (18th C.) mason in Hawick. The death of one is his children is recorded in 1782. He could be the Andrew who married Margaret Kedzie in 1771, with children including Robert (b.1773), George (b.1775), Thomas (b.1777), Agnes (b.1779), an unnamed child (b.1782), Adam (b.1783), Christian (b.1786) and Andrew (b.1789). Andrew (1743-1820s) tenant farmer at Overhall, son of Robert and Christian Murray. He was recorded as farmer at Overhall in 1797, with Thomas also listed there. He owned some property in Edinburgh and would go there for a couple of days a year to collect the rent. On one such occasion he returned early to find his daughter Christian holding a party. Being a strict and disapproving man, he said nothing until leaving the next time, when he told her 'Kirsten, if you're going to again have a party, you'd better have it a day earlier', and so no party was held again. In 1771 he married Mary (or Margaret) Kedzie, who died in 1809, aged 63. Their children included: Robert (b.1773), who became a minister in Montreal; an unnamed child (b.1782); Adam (b.1783); Christian (b.1786); and Andrew (b.1789). It is said that his wife was excommunicated from East Bank Kirk for attending the service of a minister she knew who was preaching at a neighbouring church, and so the family moved to the Green (Anti-Burgher) Kirk. Andrew (b.1805/6) born in Roberton Parish, son of George. He was farmer at Easter Alemoor and then Todrig. He was farmer at Alemoor, according to an electoral roll of 1837. In 1841 he was at Easter Alemoor. In 1851 he was at Todrig, farming 1376 acres, 46 of which were arable and in 1861 he was farming 1400 acres and employing 3 labourers. His wife was Isabella. Colin (1956/7— ) attended Burnfoot and the high Schools, where he started playing rugby, settling after a while into the position of full back. After school he played for the P.S.A., being Captain in 1974/5, before moving to the Trades. He first played for Hawick R.F.C. at the age of 18 and eventually played 199 games for the Greens. He was a regular member of the team that won 4 titles in the early 1980s. He was Captain in 1986/7. He worked for the Fire Brigade. He married Elaine and they live in Hawick. Francis (1758/9–1829) gardener in Hawick. He was probably son of Overhall farmer Thomas (since they were recorded on the same headstone). He is probably the Francis who was recorded as a gardener at Minto in 1778 and 1779, as well as at Roberton (for the minister James Erskine) in 1779. He may be the same Francis who was gardener at Stobs in 1794 and 1797. He married Elizabeth Ormiston, who died in Hawick in 1833, aged 53. George (16th C.) recorded in 1539 as a subtenant of Margaret Falside and Walter Scott in their lands in either Ashkirk or Falside. He may be related to John and Peter, who were also listed. George (16th C.) recorded in 1581 as former occupier (along with Richard Brown) of Salenside Croft and 'Skakiggs'. These same lands were then assigned to John Scott in Kirkhouses by Walter Scott of Ashkirk. George (17th C.) resident of North Synton in 1693 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll there. He came right after William, to whom he was presumably related. George (17th/18th C.) servant to William Henderson in Clarilaw. His children, baptised in Wiltown Parish, included: Margaret (b.1702); and Helen (b.1709). George (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He was recorded as tenant in Woll in 1715 and 1717. He married Bessie Murray and their children included William (b.1705), James (b.1708), John (b.1713), Agnes (b.1715) and Margaret (b.1717). George (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Tait and their children included John (b.1733). George (18th C.) paid the cart tax in Lilliesleaf in 1787. He may be the 'younger mason' recorded in Lilliesleaf in 1790 when he was involved in a dispute over an unpaid bill in Selkirk. Probably the same George is recorded in a letter to a Selkirk lawyer in 1791. George (18th/19th C.) recorded in 1788 as owner of part of Roughheugh, along with Adam. They were still recorded as owners on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. It is unclear how he was related to Adam, or the other Eastons. George (1785–1875) born at Upper Glendivan in the Ewes valley. He was recorded as a roadman at Glendivan in the 1841 census. He ouved to Edinburgh and became an agent of the Scottish Temperance League, who talked all over Scotland about abstinence and sobriety. In 1834 he married Mary Hetherington. Their children included James, Douglas and Margaret. His autobiography was published in 1869. George (b.c.1810) son of William. He was a hairdresser in Hawick, who was an early Trustee and deacon of St. George’s Kirk. On the 1861 census he is listed at 1 High Street. He married Elizabeth Jane (b.c.1828), daughter of William Scott, and sister of Sir James A.H. Murray’s first wife. Their children included: William, local song-writer; Robina Ann; James D.; and Elizabeth D. George (b.c.1775) farmer at Easter Almoor. He was there in 1841 with his son Andrew. He is probably the resident at Borthwick-shiel who subscribed to Andrew Scott’s book of poetry, printed in Kelso in 1811. He married Elizabeth Brack and their children included: Andrew (b.1805); George (b.1809); and Margaret (b.c.1810). George (19th C.) farmer at Fenwick, recorded on the 1834 electoral roll as a tenant, with lands acquired from William Turnbull of Fenwick. Gideon (18th C.) wright in Hawick. In 1765 he witnessed a baptism for Gideon Scott in Hawick Parish. He married Janet Irvine in Hawick in 1763 and their children included: Margaret (b.1766); Elizabeth (b.1768); and Janet (b.1771). Witnesses to the 1766 baptism were butcher Thomas Waugh and smith Robert Telfer. He could be the Gideon, son of Adam and Mary Turnbull, born in Wilton in 1731. He may have earlier married Margaret Laidlaw in 1758. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His children included Isobel (b.1632), Margaret (b.1633), Robert (b.1635) and Marion (b.1639). The witnesses in 1652 were M…Scott and William….. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Scott and their children included: George (b.1650); John (b.1652), William (b.1657); Thomas (b.1658); and Robert (b.1661). Agnes (b.1647) and Bessie (b.1648), with no mother’s name given, are probably also his children. He may be the James who witnessed a baptism for Thomas Johnstone in 1656. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at West Burnfoot in 1722 and Alton in 1729. He married Bessie Scott and their children included: John (b.1714); Jean (b.1716); Helen (b.1719); Robert (b.1722); and Adam (b.1729). The witnesses in 1722 were William and Walter Scott (who may have been related to his wife) and in 1729 were James Dryden and Thomas Irvine. He could be the James recorded as an elder of Wilton Parish in 1711. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Heap in 1725. He married Isobel Aitken (probably in 1714, although no wife’s name is given) and their children included: Anne (b.1716); Isobel (b.1720); Agnes (b.1723); and Robert (b.1725). He is probably the James who (along with Robert) witnessed a baptism in 1725 for James Smith, also resident at Heap. James (17th/18th C.) resident of ‘Geamscleugh’ (i.e. Gamescleuch) in Ettrick Parish in 1716 when his son William was baptised in Roberton Parish. He may be the William who married Helen Stavert in Roberton in 1716. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Janet Scott and their son James was baptised in 1764, with witnesses John Anderson and James Hogg. He may be the James who in 1765 witnessed a baptism for Robert (perhaps his brother). James (1739/40–95) tenant at Broom, which must have been in Rulewater or nearby. He was recorded on a tombstone in Abbotrule Kirkyard, along with his son William and an unnamed daughter. James (18th C.) married Agnes Sanderson in Hawick in 1758. It is possible that they had a son James in the 1770s (the entry being hard to read). James (18th C.) resident of Branxholme. He married Betty Cook and their children, baptised in Hawick, were Isabel (b.1774) and Mary (b.1779). The witnesses in 1774 were James Roger and William Mitchellhill. James (18th/19th C.) carter in Lilliesleaf. He married Agnes Thomson and their children included: George (b.1790); Isobel (b.1792); James (b.1794); Maney and Agnes (b.1796); and Thomas (b.1799). He is also recorded in Selkirk (in the Walter Mason Collection) in a dispute over an unpaid bill. Probably the same James, resident of Lilliesleaf, is recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He is probably the James who owned land in Lilliesleaf in 1788 (still recorded in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls), valued at £26 13s 4d, which was among those owned by Sprot of Riddell in about 1874. James (18th/19th C.) tailor on the High Street, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. James (18th/19th C.) listed as a wright in Wilton on Pigot’s 1837 directory. He could be the James born to Andrew and Margaret Kedie in Wilton in 1782. John (16th C.) recorded in 1539 as a subtenant of Margaret Falside and Walter Scott in their lands in either Ashkirk or Falside. He may be related to George and Peter, who were also listed. John (17th C.) recorded in 1581 as former occupier of a ‘husbandland with onset, toft and croft’ in Ashkirk, later wadset by Walter Scott of Ashkirk to John Scott in Kirkhouses. John (17th C.) tenant at Salenside in Ashkirk Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Drinkstone in 1698 when his daughter Helen was baptised. The witnesses were Robert Scott in Drinkstone and Robert Scott of Tandlaw. John (d.bef. 1691) resident of Ashkirk. He married Blanch Bell and their daughter Janet was baptised in 1691. His wife was recorded as his widow at the baptism, with witnesses Robert and John Easton (who were probably related to him). John (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk who married Isobel Helm and had children Isabel (b.1690), William (b.1692) and Elizabeth (b.1696). The witnesses in 1690 were William and John Scott. He may be the John who (along with Robert, also married to a Helm) witnessed a posthumous baptism for another John in 1691. John (17th/18th C.) resident in Ashkirk listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694, distinct from the James in Salenside. In 1698 he was recorded as tenant in Ashkirk. He married Janet Easton and had children Agnes (b.1695), Robert (b.1698), George (b.1699), Isobel (b.1702), William (b.1704), John (b.1707), Thomas (b.1709) and Robert (b.1715), all baptised in Ashkirk. John (17th/18th C.) resident in Ashkirk Parish. In 1710 he was ‘Elder tenant in Ashirk’. He married Bessie Leithead and their children included Janet (b.1706) and Agnes (b.1709). The witnesses in 1723 were Robert Taylor and John Scott. John (18th C.) from the Damside family. He married Euphan Douglas. Their daughter Rachel married Merrylaw farmer William Goodfellow in 1773. The 84 year old Euphan who was recorded as ‘Independent’ on Underdamside in 1841 could be his daughter. John (18th C.) barber in Hawick. The death of his wife (name not given) is recorded in 1805. John (18th/19th C.) wright on Damside, recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He could be the John who married Margaret Turnbull in Wilton in 1797. Peter (16th C.) recorded in 1539 as a subtenant of Margaret Falside and Walter Scott in their lands in either Ashkirk or Falside. He may be related to George and John, who were also listed. Robert (17th C.) resident in Ashkirk listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He may be the Robert who married Isobel Helm and had a son James (b.1690), with witnesses Robert Scott and John ... He may also be the Robert who married Margaret Henderson and had a daughter Margaret (b.1698). He could be the Robert who (along with John) witnessed a posthumous baptism in 1691 for another John. Robert (17th C.) tenant in Teindside. He is buried in Wilton Old Churchyard, but some of the dates were unreadable. Robert (17th C.) resident at Wester Heap according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Robert (17th/18th C.) described as ‘in Todshaw’ in 1696 when he leased the lands of Todshaw for 5 years from Gideon Scott of Highchester. Robert (17th/18th C.) married Anna ‘Kair’ in Wilton in 1708. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Agnes ‘Steward’ and their children included Robert (b.1708). Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isobel Cavers and their children included Robert (b.1717) and William (b.1719). Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Greensidehall in 1725. He may be the Robert who witnessed baptisms in Wilton in 1722 (along with William) for Thomas Liddell, in 1723 (along with William) for Adam Easton and in 1733 for William Goodfellow. He married Margaret Scott, the marriage probably being the one recorded in 1715 (with no wife’s name given). Their children included Anna (b.1725) and Isobel (b.1728). The witnesses in 1725 were John and Walter Scott. He may be the Robert who (along with James) witnessed a baptism for James smith in Wilton in 1725. Robert (1702/3–91) farmer at Overhall, probably older brother of Thomas, who also farmed there. In 1746 he was living at Calaburn. He is probably the Robert who witnessed baptisms in Wilton for Archibald Turnbull in 1759, for John Scott (in Lees) in 1764 and for Robert Oliver in 1770. He married Christian Murray in Wilton in 1755, and she died at Pathhead, aged 82. Their children included: Isobel (b.1736); Andrew (b.1739); Mary (b.1740); Andrew (again, b.1743), who also farmed at Overhall; Adam (b.1746); Thomas (b.1748); and Christian (b.1750). The witnesses in 1746 were James Robertson and John Murray. Robert (18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. He married Margaret Dickson and their children included an unnamed child (b.1755), John (b.1757) and Andrew (b.1758). Robert (d.1778) resident of Hawick Parish. His death record lists him as ‘An old Man’, suggesting he had no family at that time. Robert (18th C.) builder who was paid in 1751, along with Robert Oliver and their workmen, for work on the new Teviot Brig. This was explicitly for ‘helping the far pillar of the bridge and 12 drains’. He may be the Robert who married Christian Scott in Hawick in 1752. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Dickson and their children included: James (1763); and James (again, b.1765). The witnesses in 1763 were cooper Alexander Scott and church officer Alexander Bunyan, and in 1765 were James (probably his father or brother) and Alex Bunyan. Elizabeth (b.1760), with no mother’s name given, was probably also his child. Robert (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His children included: Adam (b.1746); Thomas (again, b.1750). He married Margaret Easton (apparently the same surname) and Andrew (b.1758), and she died at Pathhead, aged 82. Their children included: Isobel (b.1736); Andrew (b.1739); Mary (b.1740); Andrew (again, b.1743), who also farmed at Overhall; Adam (b.1746); Thomas (b.1748); and Christian (b.1750). The witnesses in 1746 were James Robertson and John Murray. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Dickson and their children included: James (1763); and James (again, b.1765). The witnesses in 1763 were cooper Alexander Scott and church officer Alexander Bunyan, and in 1765 were James (probably his father or brother) and Alex Bunyan. Elizabeth (b.1760), with no mother’s name given, was probably also his child. Robert (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His children included: Adam (b.1767); and William (b.1768). Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Dickson and their children included Helen (b.1771). Robert (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His daughter Tibby was baptised in 1773. Robert (1749–1823) land surveyor of Jedburgh, only son of William of Rankend and Isobel Bridges of Maxton. He was said to be a ‘self taught student of natural science, chiefly astronomy and mathematics’. He married Mary, elder daughter of George Douglas (from the Timpendean family), tenant of Howden, and Agnes Oliver from Dykeraw. His wife survived ‘nearly all their family’. Their children were: William, who died in childhood; Jane, who died young; Betty, also died young; Agnes (1784/5–1856), who died unmarried; Isabella, who married William Mattewson and died in Greenlaw; Mary, last of the family, who died in Edinburgh, aged 84; Esther (1789/90–1839), who married John Tinline; Jean (1793/4–1865), unmarried. A memorial stone was erected to the family in Jedburgh Abbey cemetery. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Betty Easton and their children included Francis (b.1790). Rev. Robert (1773–1831) son of William and Nelly Thomson, he was baptised in Selkirk. His father was a gardener and he was the eldest of 4 children. Note that there is an alternative suggestion that he was eldest son of Andrew, farmer at Overhall. He attended Hawick grammar school, then Edinburgh University. He was licensed as a Burgher minister in 1793 and ordained at Morpeth in 1798. Along with 5 other clergymen he emigrated to New York in 1802 and moved to Montreal in 1804. He ministered privately to Presbyterians there and then helped found St. Peter’s Street Presbyterian Church (also known as St. Andrew’s), Montreal. In 1818 he helped set up the Presbytery of the Canadas. He also worked with the British and Foreign Bible Society. With his eyesight failing, he retired in 1824. He married Mary Beattie and they had 4 children, 2 of whom died in infancy. He had sermons published in 1815 and 1816. Robert (b.1797/8) weaver in Hawick, son of William, who was from Southdean Parish. He was living with his father on Bourtree Place in 1841 and 1851. On the 1861 census he was at 2 Bourtree Place, living with his sister Isabella and described as ‘Woollen Weaver & Chelsea Pens’. This suggests that he spent some time in the army. Stuart (1983– ) born and educated in Hawick, he became a motorbike racer. He was British Supersport Champion in 2002. He has ridden for Ducati, Kawasaki and Honda. He suffered a serious crash during practice in 2011. Thomas (d.1800) farmer at Overhall, probably younger brother of Robert, who also farmed there. He was recorded at Overhall in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Andrew is also listed there, who was probably his nephew. His wife Margaret Easton (apparently the same surname) died in 1777, aged 50. This was at Whitehillbrae (part of Dodburn farm), suggesting he earlier farmed there. Their children included: Margaret (1742–67); Mary (1746/7–65); Robert (1762/3–98); and Gideon, who died in infancy. The family are buried in Wilton Old Churchyard. Hawick gardener Francis may have been another son (since he was recorded on the back of the same headstone). Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at West Groundistone. His daughter Mary died in 1811. Thomas (1780/1–1846) precentor of the West-end Church, who ran a school for teaching English and Music on Silver Street in the early 19th century. He is recorded there in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. His school later moved to the Fleece Inn Ballroom (presumably the High Street location where he was recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory), and it was here in 1838 that the meeting took place to organise the opening of the Chartist Store. He only taught reading, writing and counting, with Saturday morning lessons consisting entirely of reading the Bible and the Shorter Catechism. On Saturday afternoons he went round the district cleaning clocks, often accompanied by a pupil of mechanical bent. He also held singing classes in the evenings. He is listed on Tannage Close in 1841, with his wife Margaret. Thomas (b.1787/8) born in Selkirk, he was gardener at Chisholme. He was listed at Chisholme in 1841, 1851 and 1861. He married Anne Lumsden in Roberton Parish in 1917 and their children included: Elizabeth (b.1818); Henrietta Lumsden in Roberton Parish in 1917 and Chisholme in 1841, 1851 and 1861. He married he was gardener at Chisholme. He was listed at Heap in 1733. He was probably related to William (b.1727); and William (b.1731). William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1727 he married Jean Scott and their children included: Margaret (b.1773); and Joanna (b.1777). William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1759 he married Violet Lorraine. Perhaps the same Violet Lorraine married Walter Turnbull in Hawick Parish in 1771 (in which case he must have been deceased). William (b.1768) son of Robert, he was born in Southdean Parish. He was probably the William recorded as gardener at Green River (working for James Chisholme) in 1797. He later lived in Hawick, where he worked as an agricultural labourer. He lived on Bourtree Place in 1841 and was described as a retired gardener in 1851. His children included: Robert, weaver and ‘Chelsea Pensioner’; Margaret; and Isabel. William (18th/19th C.) married Margaret Smith. Their children (baptised in Hawick) included: Janet (b.1795); Joseph (b.1797); Margaret (b.1798); Elizabeth (b.1800); George (b.1804); and Adam (b.1806). The witnesses in 1795 were James Winthrope and Thomas Huggan, and in 1797 were Joseph Caverhill and James Scott. William (b.1783/4) barber in Hawick. He is recorded as a hairdresser on the High Street in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory, as well as a fishing-tackle maker. He is listed in the 1834 electoral roll along with his son George as a joint proprietor. In 1837 he was listed as a High Street hairdresser, as well as a fishing-tackle maker. He is still listed as a fishing-tackle maker. He later lived in Hawick, where he worked as a hairdresser in Slater’s 1852 directory, as well as a toy dealer and fishing-tackle maker. He lived at about 2 High Street according to the 1841 and 1851 censuses. He married Elizabeth Richardson and their children included: an unnamed child (d.1809); George (b.c.1810), who took over the business; Catherine (b.1815); John; William (b.1822); and James (b.1824). William (18th/19th C.) earthenware dealer of the High Street, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. In 1837 he is recorded as simply a ‘dealer’ on the High Street. This could be the same man as the hairdresser. William Scott (1853–1877) son of hairdresser George and Elizabeth Jane Scott. He was related on his mother’s side to local poet William Scott. He was well known for writing satirical rhymes and doggerel, leaving us with the familiar ‘Kinly Stick’ and ‘The Anvil Crew’, as well as ‘Run Them In’. Robert Murray says that ‘his best pieces are now lost, never having been committed to paper’. He was Bard of Masonic Lodge St. John 111, but could not have lived long in that position. He died tragically at age 23 in a shooting accident when training with the Volunteers. He had apparently stood in to replace someone else as a marker during practice at the Whitlaw Range near Hummelknowes. A poem ‘Alane’, found in his private notebook, was published after his death, but essentially nothing else survives (formerly spelled ‘Easten’, ‘Eas-ton’, ‘Eas-toun’, ‘Eastoune’, ‘Eiston’, ‘Eistone’, ‘Eistonne’, ‘Eistoun’, ‘Esten’, etc.).

east o the gate (east-o-thu-gā’) adv., arch. in an easterly direction, eastwards – ‘Here’s Tib the Virgin and Virgin Kate, Here’s baith Robbie and Babbie the Cow; Auld Chairlie Hardie gangs east o’ the gate, While Dunnerum danders ower the knowe’ [HI] (also ‘east the gate’).

East Port (eest-pōr’) n. old entrance to the town, situated roughly opposite Baker Street, corresponding to the modern 74 High Street, removed in the mid-18th century. An entry in the Town Treasurer’s Book for 1751 states that a tanner is paid ‘for lime to the East Port Cross’, which is the only mention of the possibility of a ‘cross’ being there (but may be an error). The port is marked on Wood’s 1824 map. This once marked the beginning of the road out of town along Bourtree Place towards Jedburgh. A plaque was erected by the Callants’ Club beside the Waiverley Bar (78 High Street) in 1964. The place was formerly used to distinguish among families of the same name that lived in different parts of the Town, e.g. ‘Walter Scott at the Eist-port, Robert Deannes, thair’ in 1638 – ‘.. Baille Scott and Thomas Hardie from Wm. Dickson’s house to ye East Port on both sides of ye toon’ [PR1722].

East Spittal Road (eest-spi-ul-rōd’) n. former name for a road in Minto Parish. A ‘Haugh be-East Spittal Road’ was listed in the Land Tax Rolls of 1811.

East Stewart Place (eest-stew-ur’-plis) n. street off Wilton Hill in the area known as Stewartfield, built in 1886, and named after Rev. James Stewart.

East Teviotdale (eest-teev-yi’-dāl’) n. name used to refer to lands owned by Melrose Abbey in the 15th and 16th century. They were among a list of lands to which the Scotts of Buccleuch were appointed as bailie. It is unclear precisely the location and extent of the lands so-named (it is ‘Estywidail’ in 1519, ‘Estywidail’ in 1524, ‘Esteywidail’ in 1524 and ‘Est Teuidaill land’ in 1553/4).

east the (eest-thu’) adv., arch. towards the east, ‘east of the’ – ‘.. differing ten minutes or so from its modern sister east the street’ [WNK] (this was formerly a common expression).

East-the-witter (eest-thu-wi’-ur’) adj., arch. another form of Easla or Eastla water, i.e. referring to the part of Hawick on the eastern side of the Slitrig – ‘By cash for stent collected east the Water of Slitrig,... 3 8 8’ [BR1761]. ‘As soon as public worship began, the elders started on their quest, two being appointed for ‘east-the-water’ and two for ‘west-the-water’’ [JJV] (cf. West-the-witter).

East Whitehaugh (eest-whī’-af’) n. former farm in the hills behind Wilton, once also known as Wester Heap.

easy (ee-zee’) adv. easily – ‘We were that easy pleased when we were bairns ...’ [WL].

easy-osie (ee-zee-o-zee’) adj. easy-going, flexible, insouciant, unconcerned about a choice – ‘A’ll take either yin, A’m easy-osie’ (also written ‘easy-osi’ and ‘easy-ozie’; an example of ‘rhyming reduplication’).

eatin-hoose (ee’-in-hooz’) n. an eating-house – ‘There was a snod bit leikely-leike eateen-hoose, nerr bye ...’ [ECS].

ebber (e-bur’) adj., poet. shallower – ‘The good apostle’s whisky cask, Would grow but little ebber’ [JR].

ebbit (e-bi’) interj., arch. yes but, literally ‘aye, but’ or ‘ah, but’ – ‘Ehhbit NA!! Nehh!’ [ECS], ‘Eh, bit gaun back teh 1707’ an oo find that yin o’ the toon’s twae bailies was a Rob Broon ...’ [BW1979] (also written ‘eh, bit’ and variants).

Eben (e-bin’) n. short form of ‘Ebenezer’, occasionally used in Hawick in the 18th and 19th centuries.
Ecclefechan

Ecclefechan (e-kul-fe-kin) n. town in Annandale, off the M74, birthplace of Thomas Carlyle at the Arched House, built by his father and uncle in 1795. The nearby Hoddam Castle was a Maxwell stronghold. Population 857 (1991) (named after the church of St. Fechin).

Eccles (e-kulz) n. village north-east of Kelso, in Berwickshire, also being the name for the associated parish. The village contains the ruins of St. Mary’s Priory, burned by Hertford in 1545. The mansion house there dates from 1898, replacing an earlier house. Surviving estate buildings include a clock tower, dovecote and lodge gateway (the origin is probably from ‘church’, since there are the remains of a Cistercian Convent there; it is ‘Ekkils’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map).

Eccles Hoose (e-kulz-hoos) n. large house near Kelso, built 1895–8 in a Scottish 17th century revival style.

ech (ech) interj., arch. exclamation of disgust, surprise or sympathy – ‘Eh, ech, preserve us a’.

echi (e-ki) n., v. echo (also spelled ‘echih’).

echt (echt, ech’) n., arch. eight – ‘A gaed ti bed at neine an A sleepeet on till echt, gey nerr the clock rourd . . . ’[ECS], ‘The dailly wuman had arrived at Sharps hoose as usual, at echt in the morning . . . ’[DH], ‘Is my clock an echt-day or a thirty-hour movement?’[DH], ‘Echt days, ech’ days, a week (ago): ‘this time (or day) echt days’’[GW], an eighth (this was once the common pronunciation; cf. aicht, aucht, aeight and eit).

echty (ech-tee) n., arch. eighty – ‘He throve frae eeighteen-fifty-five And leeved to be echty-yin’[DH] (also eity, eichty and aeghty).

Eckford (ek-fur'd) n. village about 5 miles east of Jedburgh, and also the name for the surrounding parish, containing the villages of Eckford, Cessford and Caverton. The lands were granted to Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1450 and erected into a barony in the following year. They remained part of the lands of the Scotts of Buccleuch through the 17th century. The lands were valued at £20 in 1574, and along with Lanton were held ‘by the service of ward and relief’. The lands were given in liferent to Margaret Ker when she married Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1586. The lands were included in the main Barony of Branxholme according to the services of heirs in 1634, 1653 and 1661, and the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch. The Barony was coupled with the lands of Hawick and Lempitlaw in the rental records of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1692, when set to Sir Patrick Scott. It was surveyed in 1718 along with other Buccleuch properties. The village was burned during the ‘Rough Wooing’ of 1544/5. The church dates from 1771, with some earlier fragments; it closed in 2006 and is now privately owned. There is an existing communion token from 1696. The graveyard contains a Mort-house for guards to look out for grave robbers. The parish united with Crailing in 1977 and became part of Alie and Teviot United Church in 2004. The village has a community hall, built in 1930. The bridge at Eckford Mill was built in the 1690s (the origin of the name is probably ‘Ecca’s Ford’, from the Old English personal name; it first appears as ‘Eckford’ about 1200 and was ‘Eckfoord’, ‘Ekfurd’, ‘Erfurde’, ‘Eksfurid’, ‘Hecfurid’, and other variants).

Eckford (ek-fur’d) n. Andrew George John Nichol ‘A.N.’ (b.1851), son of John. He carried on his father’s grocer and spirit merchant business at 21 High Street, which lasted until at least the 1950s. The Museum has a stone bottle labelled ‘Andrew Eckford’s celebrated nourishing stout, 21 High Street, est. 1838’. John ‘Johnny’ (c.1770–1843) stocking-maker in Hawick. He was described thus: ‘a quiet inoffensive man of plodding habits and taciturn disposition. Dressed in a short tailed blue coat and knee breeches, his legs encased in coarse blue stockings, a low crowned broad brimmed hat on his head, his short thick body bent forward as if pressing in advance of his legs, while the firm way he planted his feet on the ground bespoke of a decided determination of character indicative of the man’. He married Jean, daughter of John Anderson, tenant at Newton in Wilton Parish, and she died in 1829. His wife was descended from Helen Lithgow, sister of Rev. Robert, minister of Ashkirk. Through her he claimed the residue of the estate of John Lithgow, who had made a fortune while serving in India. He devoted his life to trying to prove his right to the fortune, travelling widely to see headstones and interview people, and becoming known to the law courts in London, as well as Sir Walter Scott, the Earl of Minto and others. He died in London, still pursuing his cause, and although he was ultimately not successful, he apparently had his expenses paid in the form of ‘discovery moneny’. However, the people of Hawick who supported his labours as ‘cent per cent callants’ presumably never saw any money. His marriage to Jean Anderson (or ‘Andisone’) was in Wilton in 1802. Their children included: Jean (b.1802); Archibald (b.1804); Agnes (b.1806); John (b.1808); and Michael (b.1811). John (1804–88) born in Cavers Parish, son of William and Jean Nichol. He was a grocer at 24 High Street, establishing his business in 1838. He is recorded at about 38 High Street in 1841, No. 35 in 1851 and Melgund Place in 1861. He was listed as a High Street grocer in Slater’s 1852 directory. He was registered as a non-resident voter in Cavers Parish in the 1860s. He married Janet Kerr, who died in 1876, aged 72. They had several children who died young, including Andrew (b.1842), George (b.1844), John Nichol (b.1847) and James (b.1848); 3 of them died in the cholera outbreak of 1849. Surviving children included: William Kerr (b.1839), who became a merchant in Leeds and married Anne Gaitskell; Euphemia (b.1840), who married George Somerville; Elizabeth Wood Fordie; and Andrew George John Nichol (‘A.N.’, b.1851), who was also a grocer. He is buried in Wellowgate Cemetery. A stout bottle from his firm is in the Museum. John (b.1818/9) born in Bedrule Parish. In 1861 he was farm steward at Stichill. His wife was Mary and their children included John and James. John (19th C.) builder in Hawick. He is said to have gone out to the gold rush in New Zealand with Andrew Tunno to make copies of instruments of sasine for Goldielands, which Tunno had in the previous Hawick Town Clerk’s ‘protocol book’. It is unclear if he was a Hawick or Melrose lawyer. James (b.1780/1) born in Kirkcudbrightshire he was a teacher pupil, but gave up due to ill health and took up work as a stockingmaker, becoming an apprentice in Hawick in 1801. He was one of the main organisers of the Hawick Reformers of the early 19th century. He married Jean, a daughter of shoemaker Robert Oliver. In 1841 he is recorded on the Cross Wynd with his wife Jean, as well as Robert and John, probably his sons. He died in his 80s, after working about 60 years as a stockingmaker in Hawick. James (b.1827/8) from Canonbie, he was a merchant in Newcastleton. He was at about 18 Douglas Square in 1861. He married Elizabeth, daughter of shepherd Walter Jackson. Their children included Jane, Helen, Isabella, William and James (1860–1920, who died at 11 Oliver Crescent, Hawick). James (19th/20th C.) eldest son of Robert and cousin of editor James. He worked for Pringle’s and was known for his lay preaching. It is said that when given some lily of the valley he planted it within a biscuit tin in the ground, saying ‘Aw’m no gaun to have a weed in ma gairden’. He married Mary Scott. James (1862–1940) son of John and Isabella Richardson. He was proprietor and editor of the Hawick Express, who wrote several local books, including ‘Hawick Common-Riding’ (1886), ‘Hawick Songs and Recitations’ (1892, 1901), ‘Hawick in the Early Sixties’ (1913), ‘History of Lodge St. James’ (1932) and ‘The Provosts of Hawick’ (1933). He was also responsible for publishing many more books, such as ‘Hawick Songs’ (1914) and ‘Hawick Guide: Directory and Yearbook’ (1903). A keen Common

Riding supporter, he was Secretary of the Committee from 1887 until around 1908, and acted as Clerk of the Course at the Races. His letter to the Hawick Express on 2nd April 1887 suggesting changes to the Common Riding ceremonies led to the resurrection of the festival in the following years. In 1928 he was gifted a grandfather clock for 32 years of service on the Common Riding Committee (and this is now in the Museum). He was also one of the founders of the Callants’ Club, being the first Honorary Secretary and President in 1924. He was a Town Councillor for several years. He was the initiator of the ‘Betty Whutson’ column in the Hawick Express. He was also Honorary Secretary of the Cricket Club. He married Janet, daughter of Bailie John Richardson, and she died in 1930, aged 65. Their son John was a banker in Edinburgh. John (c.1826–1909) son of the first Hawick James. He was a warehouseman in Teviot Crescent, lived at 3 Village and was father of newspaper proprietor James. He was a prominent Common Riding supporter of the mid-1800s. He married Isabella, daughter of James Richardson of ‘Saut Haa’, and she died in 1909, aged 78. Their children were Margaret (who married baker James Scott) and James (who became editor of the Hawick Express). Jock (1920–2016) brother of Rob and Wull, he worked at Wilson & Glenny’s, Mactaggart’s, Lyle & Scott and Turnbull the Dyers. He played rugby for the Quins, the Y.M. and the Linden, where he was President and became a life member. He gained his Mosstroopers’ badge at the aged of 57. He was known as a singer, particularly of ‘Oor Ain Auld Toon’. There is a bench to his memory at 'Auld Toon'. There is a story of how one night about midnight in the church, he confronted a ghost that had been haunting the churchyard, finding it to be the spirit of a murdered cattle-dealer, and an arrangement was made that it be allowed instead to roam freely between Hiddleswoodie and Howabank. Whatever the basis of this story, he was apparently thereafter looked on with suspicion by some of the parishioners. He preached at least once in Hawick, in 1721. He married Susanna, daughter of John Veitch, minister of Westruther, and she died in 1713, aged 52. Their children were Susanna, Elizabeth (who married Robert Blyth in Edinburgh in 1739) and John (who died age 17). He was buried in Hobkirik kirkyard, but it is said he was dug up shortly afterwards to be buried in some lonely spot, but his arms coming free and striking one of these superstitious men, they dropped him in the ditch and fled, so that he had to be reburied the following day. The inscription for his burial was carved into the same stone as that of Rev. James Douglas. Robert (1815/6–99) son of the first James and brother of John. He was a hosiery worker in Hawick. He was one of the first members of the Hawick Total Abstinence Society, joining in 1838. He married Helen Armstrong, who died in 1888, aged 75. Their sons were James (who worked for Pringle’s), Robert (who married Mary Robson, sister of the joiners, and became a baker in Inverness) and John (who married Jessie Anderson and became a mill cashier in Inverness). Walter H. (1885/6–1933) grocer in Newcastle. He married Betty Nichol, who died in 1900, aged 31. He secondly married Jane Elliot, who died in 1910, aged 41. He thirdly married Margaret Nichol, who died in 1935, aged 60. William (d.1907) heavily involved with the Vertish Hill Sports and St. George’s Kirk. He held the position of Church Officer for the 2 years before his death. He was also Clerk of the Scales at the Common Riding Races.

edge (ej) n., arch. a watershed that does not have a prominent ridge, the word being used in several hill names, e.g. Firestane Edge, Grundis-tane Edge, Lamblair Edge, Limekilnedge, Mill-stane Edge, Reidcleuch Edge, Whisgills Edge, Whithope Edge and Wundy Edge.

the Edge (thu-ej) n. former popular name used in Liddesdale to refer to the pass over into Teviotdale, perhaps named after the Limekilnedge and Sandy Edge.

Edgerston (e-jur-stin) n. estate about 7 miles south-east of Jedburgh, home of the Rutherfords of Edgerston. It was a detached part of Jedburgh Parish, with its own church. There was probably a fortified house there from at least the 15th century. In 1544 it was stormed by a group of Olivers, Halls, Croziers and Turnbulls, who had entered into a bond with the English. Thomas ‘the Black Laird’ was possessor at the end of the 16th century; his arrival at the Raid of the Redeswire is meant to have turned the tide. Tax was paid on 7 hearths at the main house in 1694. The present mansion house dates from the 1720s, with major renovations in the 1830s. The house is surrounded by an area of diverse woodland and contains an octagonal dovecote from about...

Edinburgh an Hawick Railway (e-din-bu-ru-an-hIk-rāl-wi) n. line operating between Hawick and Edinburgh, owned by the North British Railway. It began as the Edinburgh and Dalkeith Railway, in 1831, incorporating the Marquess of Lothian’s Waggonway in 1845, extended to Gore-bridge in 1847 and reaching Hawick in 1849. After being extended to Carlisle the route was renamed the Waverley Line.

Edinburgh Borderers’ Union (e-din-bu-rőr-urz-yoon-yin) n. former club in Edinburgh, with rooms at 22 Forth Street. It was founded in 1874. The organisation gave prizes for essays and offered aid to Borderers who were in difficulty. They also published an edition of Leyden’s poetry and a life of Sir David Brewster, as well as having their own reading room. From 1890 they instituted an annual excursion and a choir was formed in 1894, followed by a Literary and Debating Society, a Cycling Club, a Whist Club, a Golf Club and a Cricket Club.

the Edinburgh Cup (θu-e-din-bu-ru-kup) n. presented by Teries in Edinburgh, it was competed for at the Common Riding Games in the late 1800s, the event being the 250 yards foot race on the Saturday.

Edinburgh Road (e-din-bu-rōød) n. popular name for the ‘new road to Selkirk’ leading north out of town. It was used as a street name up until the mid-20th century for that part of the road beyond Wilton Hill, but still within the Burgh.

Edin’s Hall (ee-dinz-hall) n. remains of an Iron Age broch and several other contemporary walls and earthworks on the hills above the Whiteadder outside Duns. This is the best preserved example of a broch anywhere near Hawick (also called ‘Edwin’s Hall’, ‘Edenhall’ and other variants).

Edmonds (ed-mindz) n. Rev. Donald Kinloch (b.1941) born in Hawick, son of Alexander McDonald and Catherine Maria Balfour Kinlock.
Edmondson

He was educated at George Watson’s, Dalketh High and Edinburgh University.

Edmondson  (ed-mind-, -mee-, sin, -stin)  n.

George  (c.1842–1900)  son of Isaac, he was a butcher in Hawick. The family were members of the ‘English Kirk’. In 1871 he married Joan Bowie, who appears to have been the aunt of his brother Isaac’s wife, Jane Bowie. Their children included: Isaac (b.1870), who died young; Isaac (b.1872), also died young; Isabella (b.c.1874); Isaac (1876–1959), who died young; Isaac (b.1872), also died young; Isabella (b.c.1874); Isaac (1876–1959), who died young; Isaac (b.1870), who died in Edinburgh. In 1876 he married Jane Bowie. His son was also Isaac (1876–1942), who married Jane Bowie. He died in Hawick. Isaac (1855–1924) 3rd generation of Isaacs. He was born in Hawick, but died in Edinburgh. In 1876 he married Jane Bowie, who was the niece of his brother George’s wife, Joan Bowie. His son was also Isaac (1876–1942), who died in Hawick. Isaac (1876–1942) 4th generation of Isaacs in Hawick. He married Margaret Little in Hawick in 1897. James (15th/16th C.) member of the panel for deciding on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers by James Douglas in 1509. His name is recorded as ‘James Edmestone’. James (1872/3–1947) married Mary Murray, who died in 1955, aged 81. They are buried in Wilton Cemetery. They had a son John Murray (1903/4–88). John (15th C.) recorded at the 1494/5 Justice- aire in Jedburgh. William Douglas in Deanbrae was charged to enter him for the slaughter of Thomas Hoggarth; Oswald Mason was also accused of the same crime, with Ralph Ker charged to enter him. Failing to appear he was denounced a rebel and his goods escheated to the King. Given that his surety was a Douglas from Deanbrae, then he may have been local. John of that Ilk and Ednam (16th C.) son of James of that Ilk and Katherine, daughter of George Home of Wedderburn. In 1530 he was charged (along with Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and John, Abbot of Jedburgh) with disisting from his claim to the lands of Ednam. He was probably the John of that Ilk who was on a panel of ‘retour’ in 1551 for David Home of Wedderburn. In 1567 he was cautioner for ‘Dand Elliot’ of Caveling. Either he or his son was listed among the men who signed a bond in 1569 to suppress thieves on the Border. In the same year Robert Kerr of Woodhead promised to relieve him of a bond to make payment to an Englishman. In 1529 he married Euphemia, daughter of Gilbert Wauchope of Niddrie-Marschel. He was succeeded by his son Sir John. Sir John of that Ilk and Ednam (d.c.1595) son of John, he was Sheriff of Lauderdale. He may be the same Sir John who in 1569 signed the bond to suppress thieves in the Border and he signed the ‘Band of Roxburgh’ in 1573. In 1574 he was on the retours for Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme as heir to his great-uncle David Scott and his father Sir Walter. In 1575 he was found to have falsely accused Robert Fraser in Overton of stealing horses belonging to Englishman Sir George Heron. He was among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. In 1590 he was cautioner for Walter Scott of Goldielands. He is listed among Lairds who appeared before the Privy Council in 1591 to promise to support the Warden of the Middle March. In 1591/2 he was surety for Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme, when there was an accusation that he had led 200 Scotts and others to steal livestock from Drumelzier and Drevon. In 1593 he resigned his lands at Synton and Synton Mill to John, Earl of Minto. In 1595 he was listed among leaders ordered to appear in court to resolve feuds. He married Agnes, daughter of Walter Ker of Cessford and was succeeded by his son Andrew. He may be the John of that Ilk whose daughter Margaret married George Scott of Synton. Rev. John (1801–1865) son of Thomas, an Edinburgh ironmonger and Isobel Howden. He was dux at Edinburgh High School in 1815, graduated from Edinburgh University, and was licensed to preach by Edinburgh Presbytery in 1825. He was presented to the Parish of Ashkirk by Gilbert, Earl of Minto and became minister there in 1837. He may have been assistant there previous to the death of Rev. Hamilton in 1837. He walked out.
during the Disruption of 1843 and became minister of Ashkirk Free Kirk. It is said that he suffered great hardship as a result, for example sheltering in a small house 4 miles from the church, and then having to move to a dilapidated farmhouse 3 miles further away, before in 1845 finding a residence in Selkirk, 6 miles from his congregation (a distance that he would walk every week). He married Janet (or Jane) Waddell in 1842, and she died in 1895. Their children were Jessie Traill, Thomas William (farmer), Isabella Howden (who married William Ross), Wilhelmina Euphemia, Elizabeth, and Mary Margaret (who married William Ebenezer White). In 1854 he edited an edition of ‘Paradise Lost’ and ‘Paradise Regained’ for schools and was assistant editor on ‘Works of John Owen, D.D.’ (1850–54). His surname is sometimes given as ‘Edmonestone’. Richard (b.c.1843) 2nd son of Isaac. He was a hand-loom weaver in the 1861 census. He married Elizabeth Pattison Kennedy (b.c.1849) in Hawick in 1868. Their children included: Isaac (b.1869); Elizabeth Pattison (1871–1918); James (b.1872); Isabella Montgomery (b.1874), who married Bailie Francis Scott; Ann; Janet; Mary; Joanne; Richard (1884/5–1915); George; and John (b.1891), who married Jessie Hogg Wilkinson (who may have been his father’s half-sister) and emigrated to Canada. Richard (1884/5–1915) son of Richard and Elizabeth Kennedy. He served in the 5th Battalion Cameron Highlanders and was killed in action. He is commemorated on the Loos Memorial in France. He married Elizabeth Robertson, and later Hugh Despenser. He tried to continue his father’s subjugation the Scots, including his former Baron’s lands were now in his hands. It is also said that he visited Bedrule Castle in 1298. William (18th C.) recorded at Stobcote in 1727 when his daughter Martha was baptised in Cavers Parish (formerly ‘Edmondston’, also written ‘Edmestoun’, ‘Edmistone’, ‘Edmonston’, ‘Edmonstone’, ‘Edmestoun’, ‘Ednestown’, etc.).

Ednam (ed-nam) n. village a few miles north of Kelso. Birthplace of James Thomson, who wrote ‘Rule Britannia’ and Henry Lyte, who wrote ‘Abide With Me’. This is also the name of the surrounding parish, which is claimed to be the first named parish. It borders Sprouston, Kelso and Stichell, as well as part of Berwickshire. The Eden Water crosses the parish and the Tweed forms its south-east boundary. The church has communion tokens from the late 17th century. A book ‘Ednam and its indwellers’ was written by John Burleigh in 1912 (the origin is ‘town on the Eden Water’; it first occurs as ‘Ednham’ in the early 12th century).

Edward (ed-wurd) n. name of eight Kings of England. Edward I ‘Longshanks’ (1272–1307) English King who invaded Scotland in 1296, removing the ‘Stone of Destiny’ and historical records, and beginning the War of Independence. He was thus partly responsible for the unrest that plagued the Borders for the next three centuries. After dispute over succession of the Scottish crown, he gained overlordship of Scotland and chose Baliol as the King. Later many Scottish nobles swore fealty to him rather than to Robert the Bruce. In 1307 for example, the Lovels lost their lands around Hawick as a result. After invading in 1296 he also called a ‘parliament’ at Berwick and forced about 2,000 Scottish landowners and clergymen to sign the ‘Ragman Rolls’, this becoming a valuable historical document (partially making up for those he destroyed!). In 1297 he made a presentation to Cavers Kirk, since the former Baron’s lands were now in his hands. It is also said that he visited Bedrule Castle in 1298. Edward II (1284–1327) English King from 1307, son of Edward I. He was never very popular as a King, partly because he was heavily influenced by Piers Gaveston (who was possibly his lover) and later Hugh Despenser. He tried to continue his father’s subjugation the Scots, including his disastrous expedition in 1314 to relieve Stirling Castle, which led to the Battle of Bannockburn. He was forced to flee from Bannockburn, pursued by James Douglas. He was denied entrance to Stirling Castle, but made it to Dunbar, where he escaped to England by ship. He was forced to abdicate in favour of his infant son Edward, and died in a dungeon, possibly the result of a red hot poker up the backside – ‘Gang cry the hounds of Douglas vale, Gang scream the Ettrick wall, Gang warn the spears of Liddesdale, That Edward leads the foe’ [T]. Edward III English King from 1327–77, including a time of much war and the Black Death. He renounced the Scottish throne in the 1328 Treaty of Northampton, accepting Scotland’s right to independence. But he continued to battle the Scots and was victorious at the Battle ofHalidon Hill in 1333. He was given much of southern Scotland by the puppet King Edward Baliol in 1334. And he took full possession of the Borderland in the 1340s, restoring lands to families who had supported England. The Lovels regained (at least on paper) their lands of Hawick in 1347. Edward was the self-appointed patron of St. Mary’s Kirk in 1355, presenting it to ‘John de Hawyk’. Edward VIII British King who abdicated in favour of his brother. He visited Hawick in 1924 when he was Prince of Wales, opening the Laurie Bridge, laying a foundation stone forwards at the Cottage Hospital and giving an address in the Town Hall. The avenue from the new bridge to the Park gates were lined with school children to see the Prince, escorted by the Provost – ‘The Prince was resplendent with his Chain and Ermine Robes, escorted by a Wee Soldier’.

Edwards (ed-wurde) n. Thomas (18th C.) coachman at Riddell in 1794, when he was working for Lady Riddell. William (19th C.) dentist of Edinburgh who visited Hawick every Saturday in the latter part of the 19th century. He was based on Queen Street in Edinburgh, and set up at the Tower Knowe on his visits to Hawick. He gave a silver cup for the Cornet’s Races in the 1880s and also donated a gold-mounted whip to be competed for by married supporters on several occasions through to the mid-1890s.

Edwin (ed-win) n. (585–633) King of Northumbria. He was the son of Ælla, who had been King of Deira, before it was united with Bernicia by Æthelfrith. He was expelled by Æthelfrith around 605, but was part of the force that defeated him and reclaimed the kingdom around 617. He is also supposed to have brought Christianity to the region. He was killed by Cadwallon and his allies near Doncaster (also called ‘St. Edwin’).

Effie (e-fée) n. pet name for Euphemia.

Efflidge (ef-lij, ef-leej) n. farm to the east of Cavers, between Nether Tofts and Whitriggs, in Kirkton Parish. Efflidge Cottage is just off the road to the north-east. Archibald Douglas was there in 1502. It was once part of Cavers estate, listed among the lands belonging to the Barony of Cavers in charters of 1511 and 1558. There is a 1535 record of William Scott ‘in Layk’ being charged with stealing 13 cows and oxen from Arthur Douglas and Thomas ‘Fresall’ (possibly Fraser) and 7 cows and oxen from Marion Davidson, all from the lands there. Walter Noble was tailor there in 1686 when declared a fugitive for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. It was still held by Douglas of Cavers in 1687 and 1698. William Turnbull, widow Marion Turnbull and James Gledstains were all there in 1697. James Goodfellow was there in 1710, James Henderson in 1716, Walter Graham and Robert Scott in 1720 and Robert Stavert in 1794. It was part of the estate of Douglas of Cavers in 1788. James Bunyan was farmer there in 1797 and it was farmed by William and then Thomas Griersen in the 19th century. William Blyth was farmer there in 1868. Robert Kerr was there in the early 1900s (also spelled ‘Efflidge’; the name first occurs as ‘esflage’ in 1502, then ‘Efflesche’ in 1511, and is ‘Efflesche’ in 1535, ‘Effleche’ in 1558, ‘Efladge’ in 1684, ‘Eff-\text{fich’} in 1687, transcribed ‘Affeith’ in 1698 and ‘Eflitch’ in 1710 and 1716; it is ‘Efflidge’ on Stobie’s 1770 map; the origin is possibly from the Old English personal name ‘Elf’, plus the Middle English ‘leche’, meaning ‘a bog’, but the elf-swamp has also been suggested).

efremmit (e-fre-mee’, -mi’) adj., poet. estranged – ‘The wicket ar efremet frae the wome; thaye gang astraye sune as thaye be born, speiken lees’ [HSR] (perhaps only used once).

efter (ef-tur) prep. after, subsequent to – ‘A’m efter yow’, ‘A’ll sei ee after the schuil’, ‘it wasni her efter aa’, ‘an efter aa the things A’ve din for ee’, ‘deh thrav guid money efter bad’, ‘Blisset be the Lord, wha daye efter daye lades us wí guid things’ ...’[HSR], ‘Thou art ane priest forevir efter the oordir o’ Melchizedek’ [HSR], ‘...waled, efter an agony o’ choice’ [DH], ‘Aw wonder what he’ll think o’ us Efter a’ thae years’ [IJ], in accordance with – ‘...did ryd the meiths and marches of thair Common, mosses, muir, and pasturage, after the usual manner’ [BR1711], adv. after, later – ‘she left right efter’, ‘...sal pay £10 efter tryal, toties quotas, and wairdit during the bailies’ will’ [BR1640], ‘...thaye ca’ thair lan’s efter thair ain nemes’ [HSR], ‘What man is he that langs efter liffe ...’ [HSR], ‘Hei saw the Cornet’s Chase, hei said efter, an’ went tae the Muir for the horse-races’ [BW1939], ‘...And she shortly efter flitted Frae the Vertish Hill’ [IW], also ‘to be efter’ means ‘to want’ – ‘what’re ee efter then?’.

eik (eek) n., arch. the natural grease in sheep’s wool – ‘A sort of unctuous perspiration that oozes through the pores of the skin of sheep in warm weather, Roxb. Often called sheep-eik’ [JoJ].
eiky (ee-kee) adj., arch. having a greasy fleece – ‘An eiky sheep’ [GW].
eiky-tailed (ee-kee-tald) adj., arch. having a tail discoloured by urine (said of sheep).
eild (eelld) adj., arch. barren or no longer giving milk (of a cow, ewe or mare) – ‘The council resolve, that no eild nolt be found at any time within the infield …’ [BR1696], ‘The aue I mention – She was eild, and she was lyin’ in the bield’ [TD], not giving milk on account of being with pregnant or with young – ‘…on the Common along with the eild sheep, and after the ewes were eild the eild sheep and lambs were brought off the Common onto the ewe pasture’ [C&L1767], ‘Lambs lie thick as new netted herrin’, ‘A’ cauld as lead; Eild yowes, in thousands, lood are raerin’ – Guid weather’s dead’ [JoHa], having one’s finances exhausted (also written ‘eeld’; cf. yeld).
eild (eeld) adv., poet. of old, long ago – ‘My sair-hol’d bonnet, eild dy’d dingy blue …’ [JoHa], ‘When hoary Eild comes hirplin’ roon’, And death’s cold wintry breezes blaw …’ [JoHa] (this usage is rare).
eild-bease (eelld-bees) n., arch. barren cattle used for fattening, neat (a synonym for nowt).

Eildon Hoosin Association (eelld-in-hooisin-aw-so-see-a-shin) n. based in Melrose, this agency develops and manages about 1,400 sheltered and other types of housing units across the Borders, including many in Hawick.

Eildon Knowe (eelld-in-now) n. small hill in the headwaters of the Ale Water, south of Crooked Loch, being the north-eastern spur of Mid Rig (it is unclear if there is a connection with the Eildon Hills).

Eildon Quaw (eelld-in-kwaw) n. boggy area near the head of Byrelee Burn, west of Eildon Knowe.

Eildon Road (eelld-in-roed) n. part of Burnfoot, built in 1953 and named after the Eildon Hills, which can be clearly seen from here.

the Eildons (thu-eel-din) n. the Eildon Hills, between Melrose and St. Boswells. They are somewhat peculiarly known as Eildon Mid Hill, Eildon Hill North and Eildon Wester Hill, with heights of 422 m (1,385 ft), 404 m (1,327 ft) and 371 m (1,216 ft), respectively. Eildon Mid Hill contains a triangulation pillar. The northernmost summit held the largest Iron Age fort in Scotland, constructed around the 10th century B.C.E. The Romans built a signal station there in the 2nd century, as well as an extensive fort and settlement nearby, and called the hills Trinontium. By local legend they were separated by Michael Scot the wizard, and also Arthur and his knights supposedly sleep here, waiting to return – ‘From Eildon’s cairns no more the watch-fire’s blaze. Red as a comet, darts portentous rays’ [JL], ‘Gaze where Eildon’s triple height Guards the secret dread’ [RSC], ‘A mist of tenderness so lightly folds the Eildons in her mantling love …’ [WFC] (they occur on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Heeldoun Hills’).

the Eidon Trei (thu-eel-din-tri) n. a tree on the slopes of the Eildons where Thomas the Rhymer supposedly met the Queen of the Fairies and was spirited away for 7 years. The site is marked by the Eilden Tree Stone, which is modern (1929), but replaces an older one – ‘Mysterious Rymour! doom’d by fate’s decree Still to revisit Eildon’s lonely tree’ [JL].

Eilrig (eeld-rig) n. older name for the area around Eilrig and still used for the hill and stream there. There was a building marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map at Eildrigburnfoot, of which there are now no visible remains.

ei-lid (i-lid) n. an eye-lid – ‘she didni bat an ei-lid when A telt her’, ‘I willna gie sleepe til mine eyne, or sloom til mine eelyds’ [HSR].

Eilrig (eelrig) n. farm on the ‘Eild Rig’, south of the Borthwick Water about a mile before Craik. Before 1689 (when Robertson was formed) it was part of Hawick Parish. The lands were held by Robert Scott of Rankilburn from the early 15th century. In 1426/7 Robert’s son and heir Walter, was granted the lands by the Baron of Hawick. They were then valued at 10 merks and given ‘by the service of one penny’, due at the feast of St. John the Baptist. The lands were included in those resigned in 1463 and re-granted by James III in 1464 to Sir Walter Scott of Kirkurd and Buccleuch. Robert Scott of Eilrig is recorded in 1477 renting the lands of Craik. In 1492 the lands were described as being then waste, but normally valued at £10 Scots. In 1501 the tenant was Simon Scott. In 1517 the lands were part of the estate of the Scotts of Buccleuch and said to be then ‘waste’, but valued at 10 pounds in times of peace; they had the same value in 1553/4. This is probably the ‘Elreg’ where David Armstrong was in 1533, the ‘Elryg’ where John Armstrong was recorded in 1561 and also the residence in 1576 of ‘Andro Armstrong, callit Reid Andro in Eilrig’. The lands were included in a list of those formally inherited by Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch from his great-uncle David Scott in 1574; they were at that time annexed to the Barony of Braxholme and valued at £10. In 1581/2 the lands were held by Margaret Douglas, Countess of Bothwell, when she complained that a gang led by the Armstrongs of Whithaugh and Braedlie had raided the farm; they came ‘bodin in feir of weir, with jakkis, steil-bonettes, speris, swordis and utheris wappinis invasive’, stealing 24 cows, a horse and some goods. Adam Govenlock was there in 1586/7. The lands were listed (along with Phillhope) as a ‘pendicle’ of Broadlee among lands inherited by the Baron of Hawick in 1615. ‘Rowie of Hutikill, furth of the Lyn beside Eilrig’ is recorded in 1616. The lands were estimated to pay ‘200 lb., in vicarage to 32 lb.’ in the 1627 valuation of Hawick Parish. The lands were included in the main Barony of Branhholme according to the services of heirs in 1634, 1653 and 1661, and the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch. There were 7 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650, namely Walter Grieve, Margaret Hall, Janet Grieve, Janet Murray, Robert Grieve, Margaret Scott and Maly Laing. It was still valued at £10 in 1653. Sir William Scott was recorded paying the land tax on £500 in 1663. In the 1678 Land Tax Rolls it was still valued at £500 and listed as ‘Ilrig’ or ‘Flerig’ under Walter Scott of Raeburn. John and Robert Grieve were there in the 1680s. Walter Herd was there in 1710, John Johnston and William Black in 1712, John Nichol in 1716, John Shortreed in 1718 and James Rutherford in Eilrig. In 1719 it was leased by John Chisholme of Stichres from William Scott of Raeburn, then James Home of Eccles and in 1730 Walter Scott of Merrylaw. Robert Welch and James Grieve were living there in 1722, James Rutherford in 1728, Walter Laidlaw in 1733–36, John Nichol in 1735, William Scott in 1736 and Archibald Henderson in 1743. In 1759 it was sold to the Duke of Buccleuch by Rev. John Clunie of Whitekirk, when the lands are still described as being in the Barony of Branhholme. John Mitchellhill was there in 1764, William Lawson in the 1770s, Andrew Geddes in 1781 and Francis Elliot in 1786. James Tait was tenant farmer there in at least 1787–1815. In 1788 and 1811 it was valued at £500. James Scott was shepherd there in the 1840s and 1850s – ‘Have you along the lonely road When the storm was raging near, Down by the old stone bridge At Eilrigg?’[WFC] (the name first appears in 1426 as ‘Elerig’, with several later spelling variants, including ‘Ealrig’, ‘Ealrigg’, ‘Ealrigge’, ‘Eelridge’, ‘Eildrig’, ‘Eildrigg’, ‘Eilridge’, ‘Eilrig’, ‘Eilrigg’, ‘Eilrige’, ‘Eildrige’, ‘Eildrig’, ‘Eildrigg’, ‘Eildrige’, ‘Eilrig’, ‘Elyrig’, ‘Eylrig’ and ‘Ileridge’, as well as ‘Yealrig’, ‘Yealrigg’ and ‘Yield Rigg’; it is marked ‘Eilrigge’ and ‘Ealrigge’ on parish maps of 1650, ‘Erick’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Eildrigg’ on Ainslie’s 1773 map; the origin is probably simply ‘ridge’ with an Old English personal name Ælla, Ella or Illa).
Eilrig Burn ei-stern

Eilrig Burn (eel-rig-burn) n. stream that runs near the farm of Eilrig, flowing roughly north to join the Borthwick Water opposite Meadshaw. A building was shown on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map near the confluence with the Rough-hope Burn (marked ‘Eildrig Burn’ on the modern Ordnance Survey maps).

Eilrigburnfoot (eel-rig-burn-fi’) n. Eildrigburnfoot, former cottage by the road near where the Eildrig Burn meets the Borthwick Water. A building is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, on the south side of the road. It is recorded in 1616 that ‘Marion’s Geordie’ Scott and William Scott of Satchells met Jock Scott ‘the Suckler’ at ‘Eilrig-burne-fute’ after riding at night from Hawick, before meeting further accomplices and continuing to Howpasley, where they slaughtered the sheep belonging to the Laird of Drumlanrig. The Lamb family and 3 other people were living there in 1841 and just ‘annuitant’ Georgina Tait in 1861.

Eilrig Shank (eel-rig-shawngk) n. another name for Eilrigburnfoot (it is ‘Eildrige Shank’ in 1841).

Eimond (ee-mond) n. James (17th C.) probable name of a resident of Ashkirk Parish (but hard to read). He married Isobel Thomson and their son William was baptised in 1661, with witnesses Adam Ogilvie and John Tudhope. Steven (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Jean Murray and their children included William (b.1652) and ‘Andira’ (b.1662). The surname may be the same as that of the earlier ‘John Eamont of Hilhouse’ in Liddesdale.

ek (eek) adv., poet. also – ‘Myself, and eke you brothers three, Took ev’ry man his brand ...’ [JTe].

Ekron (iék, ek-ron) n. Agnes (b.1788) daughter of John and Ann Johnson. In 1841 she was a grocer on the Loan, probably at about No. 17, and was at about 8–10 in 1851. Andrew (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He erected a stone in St. Mary’s Cemetery to commemorate his children: Agnes (1814/5–20); Ann (1816/7–20); Agnes (again, 1819/20–23); John, Mary and Eliza, who died in infancy; and James (1828/9–30). Given that all these children died young, it is possible he is the same Andrew as the son of John, who had several surviving children with Elizabeth. Andrew (b.1792) Hawick framework knitter, son of John and Ann Johnston. His wife was Elizabeth (surname unknown). In 1841 and 1851 he was living on Walter’s Wynd. His children include: Margaret (b.1826/7), who married George Pringle in 1851; Helen (b.1828/9); Mary (b.1831/2), who married Alexander Scott; Agnes (b.1834/5), who may have married Allan Stewart in 1857; and Ann Johnstone (b.1838/9), who was living with her cousin John Hall in 1861 and married Robert B. Wilson in 1862. His daughters Helen and Mary were lodging with Jane Turnbull on the High Street in 1851. Andrew (b.1829) frameworker in Hawick, son of James and Margaret Thomson. He lived at 48 Loan, 7 Back Row and 13 Drumlanrig Square. He married Elizabeth Stewart in Hawick in 1850. Their children include: Jane (b.1851/2); John (b.1856); Margaret (b.1858); James (b.1861); Janet (b.1862); James Stuart (b.1864), who married Nettie E. Blodgett in Michigan in 1895 and died in Indianapolis; Walter (1866–1909), married Grace Thwaites, but had no children; Robert (b.1868), who lived in Philadelphia and Chicago; Elizabeth (1872–1966), who married Archibald Drummond and died in Jedburgh; and Helen (1875–78). Family stories said that James and Robert emigrated to America, with one of them being an opera singer in Boston and the other one having a wooden leg! He was still alive in 1891. Andrew (1894–c.1952) son of John and Jemima Baxter, he was born in Hawick. He changed his name to Arthur Stewart Scott, apparently due to some mix-up during WWI (because he deserted or got separated from his unit and needed a new name in order to get back into the army). He married Althea Theadora (‘Dora’) Jones (1895–1973). They had a son, Arthur Frederick ‘Fred’ Scott (b.1920). He probably died in Wales. Ann (b.1790) daughter of John and Ann Johnson. She was a grocer on the Mid Row, recorded there in 1841. She had an illegitimate daughter, Adeline (or Adelina, d.1897) with French prisoner of war Adam Bellom. Apparently she lived with Bel- lom for several years, but they never married. She appears to have died before 1851. James (1721–87) son of William and Mary Graham. He was a merchant in Hawick, presumably a book-seller, since he is recorded on the subscribers list for the reprinted Buchanan’s History of Scotland (1752, 2 volumes), ordering 13 sets. He was also on the subscriber’s list for Caw’s ‘Poetical Mu-seum’ (1784), for 12 copies, and listed there as ‘merchant, Hawick’. He is additionally recorded as ‘Messrs James Ekron, Hawick’ when listed as one of the sellers of ‘A Display of Genuine Christian-ity and Christian Love’ (1784), Caw’s second book published in Hawick; a copy of the book bears the inscription ‘When this you see, Remem-ber me, James Ekron’. He appears to have operated as a bookseller in about the period 1757–84. He owned property in Silver Street and in the Crescent. In 1780 he was one of 6 trustees for the East Bank Meeting House who had a bond with them for erecting the building. He is proba- bly the James who witnessed baptisms in Wilton for Adam Ormiston (at Drinkstone) in 1780 and James Black (at Packhouses) in 1781. He was recorded as a merchant in 1784 when he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for what appears to be a Hume. He paid the Shop Tax in Hawick in 1785. He was probably owner (and not James Aitkin, as suggested in notes) of a book, ‘The Duty and Advantage of Religious Conferences, Proved from Scripture and Reason’ (1743) by Rev. John Wilson; this book (which survives and is in the Museum collection) passed to his direct descendant, Sir James A.H. Murray, who wrote on 3 pages at the beginning, describing the book’s provenance. He was at Kelso Fair during the great Slitrig flood of 1767 and on returning was surprised to see some of his own goods left lying on the haugh at Menslaws. His house was one of those carried away by the flood waters, his wife escaping just in time by crawling along a ladder laid horizontally to an upper window of a house on the other side of Silver Street, across the rushing water (their house must have therefore been between Silver Street and the river). His bed was found stranded on the Common Haugh after the flood, with the cat still sleeping on it. He may be the ‘Joseph Eckron’ (written in error) whose ‘whole onstead of houses’ were stripped of furniture etc. during the great flood of 1767, and several people helping save items had to be rescued themselves; these houses were close to John Kedie’s house and it said that the damage to them amounted to £1000. He married Isobel Betty Richardson, who was probably daughter of merchant James Richardson and died in 1764. Their children included: Elizabeth (‘Betty’, 1746–85), who married merchant Walter Scott in 1765; Agnes (1748–80), who married John Oliver in 1766, was mother of Margaret Oliver who married Charles Scott, and was maternal grandmother of Sir James Murray; and William (1758–60). He had another daughter, who married a Mr. Adams and emigrated to America; she gained his Silver Street property after his death, with the Crescent property going to his daughter, Agnes Oliver. Mary, who married John Thomlin in 1772 may also have been his daughter (based on the names of her children). The witnesses in 1746 were shoemaker Robert Oliver and maltman John Moss and in 1758 were James Beattie and George Telfer. He also had young children who died in 1759, 1760 and 1764. He may be the James who hired the Hawick mortcloth in 1760. He witnessed baptisms for his daughter and merchant Walter Scott in 1766, 1768 and 1771. He secondly married Margaret Brown in Hawick in 1766; she was traditionally said to be his former maid servant and died in 1802. ‘Mrs Eckron Mercht in Hawick’, listed on the 1789 female servant tax roll, was probably his widow; she also paid the same tax in 1790. In 1790 there was a case on his behalf in Selkirk for non-payment of a bill by William Cranston formerly in Mackside, now in Clarilaw on Ale, for ’5 yards Bleu cloth intrist one it for laying out’. Additionally his widow Margaret Brown had cases for non-payment against James Stoddart, tailor in Shielshaughand in 1790, against a servant of Andrew Thomson in Oakwood Mill in 1791 and against John Campbell in Fauldsheope, now in Whitehillbrae in 1793. His death is recorded in Hawick in 1787. James ‘The Blast’ (b.1757) son of William and Elizabeth Dobbie. He was said to be a merchant and bookseller in Hawick in the latter part of the 18th century; however, it is possible he is being confused here with the man of the same name born a quarter of a century earlier. The origin of his nickname is uncertain, perhaps related to smoking. He was probably a member of the Masons. He was Cornet in 1779 and also wrote some poetry. He married Helen Turnbull (from Kirkton Parish) in Hawick in 1781. They had a daughter Janet (b.1782), possibly the ‘Jane’ who married Benjamin Hooven. He could be the James who is recorded as recently deceased in a letter of 1794 between Hawick men living in Pennsylvania. James (b.1793) South African settler, born in Hawick. He is sometimes said to be son of John and Ann Johnson, but that may be confusion with another James (based on the names of his children, it is possible that he was a son of James ‘The Blast’). He worked as a ploughman. He was in the party of settlers of Robert Pringle (farmer at Blakelaw) who went to South Africa in 1820, and worked as a ploughman. He is mentioned in John (son of Robert) Pringle’s ‘Narrative of a residence in South Africa’ (1834) in connection with a lion hunt. In 1832 he was sentenced to 2 years hard labour for the murder of a ‘Hottentot’ with whom he was living. He firstly married Elizabeth Keen (1796–1870), but they seem to have had no children. He secondly married Mary Ann Moffat (from Gloucestershire) and their children were: James (1835–1916); Margaret (b.1836) and Matthew (b.1837), who died in infancy; William Moffat (b.1838); Janet Margaret (b.1840); John (b.1842); Mary Anne (b.1844); Mathew Charles Linton (1849–1915); and Thomas Edward (1852–1925). James (b.1794) Hawick frameworker, son of John and Ann Johnson. He was living somewhere on the Back Row in 1841 and 1851 and John (b.1807), who may have married John Brown in 1835. He may be the ‘John Ekron Junr.’ who paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1791. He and his wife are buried at St. Mary’s. John (d.c.1790) army pensioner. He was living on the Loan in 1841, along with Agnes (about 40 years old) and James Oliver (about 15). He is probably the son of John and Ann Johnson, born in Hawick in 1786. John (d.1854) son of James and Margaret Thomson. He was listed as a framework knitter at about 28 High Street in 1851. He may also have helped his aunt as a grocer on the Fore Raw. In 1844 he married Margaret (d.1858), daughter of stocking-maker Thomas Anderson and Isabella Scott. John (1856–1916) son of Andrew and Elizabeth Stewart, he was a frame-worker who lived on O’Connell Street. In 1881 he was living at 50 O’Connell Street, in 1891 was a stockmaker at 17 Loan and later lived at 35 Loan. He firstly married Agnes Carruthers (d.1883) in Hawick in 1875. In 1887 he secondly married Jemima Baxter (1865–1935), but separated from her after the death of their son James. His children were: Mary (b.1875), who married Andrew Wilson; Elizabeth (b.1876), who married Andrew Elliot; Andrew (b.1878), who died in infancy; Helen (or ‘Nellie’, 1879–1943), who married twice, had no children, and died in Edinburgh; Jane (b.1881) and John (b.1882), who died in infancy; an unnamed child (b.1883); Jane (b.1887), died in infancy; Andrew (1888–91); James (1890–1906); Margaret (b.1891), died in infancy; Janet (1892–1971), who married Hugh Gilroy and died in Glasgow; Andrew (1894–1952), who changed his name to Arthur Stewart Scott and died in Wales; Mary Jane (1897–1913); Isabella (1899–1935), who married Wilson Hogg and died in Hawick; and Jemima (b.1902), who married John Douglas also died in Hawick. Walter (1866–1909) son of Andrew... and Elizabeth Stewart. He worked as a lorry-man. He married Grace Thwaites, but had no children. He died in Edinburgh and is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. William (17th/18th C.) workman in Hawick, probably brother of John and great-uncle of James ‘The Blast’. Where he came from, or the identity of his parents, have not been established. He firstly married Mary Graham and their children included: James (1721–87); and George (b.1725). In 1726 he secondly married Margaret Douglas and their children included Marion (b.1727), who may be the Mary who married Walter Ballantyne in 1760. Witnesses to the 1721 baptism were shoemaker Robert Allan and Robert Hardie, tenant. The witnesses in 1727 were Bailie Purdom and candlemaker John Scott. William (1714–80) son of John and Jean Dunlop, he was a mason in Hawick. He is probably the William who witnessed a baptism in 1762 for John (likely his brother). He married Elizabeth (‘Betty’) Dobbie in Hawick and their children include: James (b.1757), ‘The Blast’; plus William (b.1762), Elizabeth (b.1766) and another William (b.1768), who all died young. The witnesses in 1768 were George Swan and Robert Tudhope (also spelled ‘Ackren’, ‘Aickren’, ‘Aicron’, ‘Eckron’, ‘Eckrom’). Swiss and Robert Tudhope (also spelled ‘Ackren’, ‘Aicron’, ‘Aikren’, ‘Eckron’ and ‘Ekhrin’; this family seems to have been almost entirely based in Hawick in the 18th and 19th centuries; the origin of the name is unknown).

elbi (el-bi) n. an elbow – ‘hei got an elbih in the face frae yin o’ his brothers’.

elbi chair (el-bi-chair) n., arch. an armchair – ‘Frac the wean to the granmy in aud elbow chair’ [JJ].

elder (el-dur) n. a lay church officer elected by the local congregation to have official duties in the Presbyterian Church, and who, with the minister, compose the church session. In 1717 the Hawick Parish Session records lists 19 elders, each (mostly in pairs) assigned a specific area to collect monies from; together with elders from the further part of the Parish, plus the Bailie of the Regality, the total number must have been about 2 dozen.

Elder (el-dur) n. Alexander ‘Sandy’ (d.1836) bookseller, printer and publisher of Peebles. His brother Walter was a bookbinder in Hawick at about the same time. Indeed, he spent some time working in the same trade in Hawick, as indicated by him being listed as ‘bookbinder, Hawick’ in the subscription list for Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). It is possible he was the son of John and Mary Brown born in Wilton in 1764 (and that he was thus half-brother of Walter). He is probably the Alexander who in Hawick in 1786 (along with John ‘Senior’, probably his father) witnessed a baptism for merchant John (presumably his brother). He gave Peebles its first lending library, where the young Robert Chambers would borrow books (Chambers later became a successful publisher and anonymously wrote a book in 1844 which contained ideas about the origin of the Earth and life). He also brought the first printing press there in 1814 (later used to produce that town’s first newspaper). He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He married Elizabeth (‘Betty’) Oliver of Hawick in 1788 and they had 8 children. His daughter Agnes (b.1811) married Alexander ‘Booky’ Scott from Peebles, who took over the business on the High Street there. Alexander ‘Sandy’ (1820–1904) possibly a son of Walter by an earlier marriage. He was one of the last 2 coach drivers between Carlisle and Hawick (along with William Crozier). He started as a postboy at the Tower Hotel in Hawick and was recorded as ‘postillion’ there in 1851. When driving he would dress in a top-coat. He took over the Cross Keys Hotel in Canonbie in about 1860. In his old age he drove a ‘four-in-hand’ from Canonbie to the opening of the new Moss-paul Inn. David (18th C.) gardener at Borthwickbrae in 1794. He was listed as groom at Borthwickbrae in 1793, when he was working for William Elliot Lockhart. He married Helen Jardine and their children include Thomas (b.1794) and an unnamed son (b.1798). John (1728–1816) weaver in Hawick. In 1786 he was John ‘Senior’ when (along with Alexander) he witnessed a baptism for merchant John (presumably his son). In 1788 both he and his son John ‘Junr’ witnessed a baptism for weaver John Brown. He may have witnessed a baptism for Margaret (presumably his daughter) and Alexander Inglis in 1791. He married Jean Stewart (b.1729) in 1769. It seems likely that this was his second marriage and that he had first married Mary Brown in 1756, with children: Mary (b.1757); John (b.1760); Margaret (b.1762); Alexander (b.1764), publisher in Peebles, and said to be brother to Walter; and Thomas (b.1766). In 1764 this John was living at the Sandbed, in Wilton Parish. The witnesses in 1757 were the whole congregation, in 1760 were schoolmaster William Dyce and shoemaker John Scott and in 1764 were Thomas Scott and Robert Ormiston. His children with Jean Stewart included: Walter (b.1770); Ann (b.1771),...

who married Robert Henry; and Jane (b.1773). He is probably the John whose unnamed granddaughter died in Hawick in 1778. John (18th C.) book-seller in Hawick, probably the son of John born in Hawick in 1760. He was recorded as a merchant in 1786 when his daughter Janet was baptised, with witnesses John senior (probably his father) and Alexander (probably his brother). In 1788 both he and his father John ‘Senr’ witnessed a baptism for weaver John Brown. His daughter Peggy died in 1795. He is probably the John who married Margaret Lamb and also had a son Walter (b.1784) in Hawick. Robert (b.1797/8) frame-work knitter, originally from Peebles. He is recorded at about 41 High Street in 1841 and 1851. His wife was Isabella and their children included Margaret O., Robert, Susan and John McRae. Robert (19th/20th C.) resident of Howahill. In 1906 he contributed to the fund for the renovation of Kirkton Kirk. Turnbull (b.1822/3) from Jedburgh, he was a tailor at Kilmknwoe in Hobkirk Parish in 1841. He married Agnes Tait in 1847 and their children included Margaret, Rachel and John. Walter ‘Watty’ (1770–1849) bookbinder in the Fore Row and Howegate in the early 19th century. He was son of John and Jean Stewart. He subscribed to 12 copies of William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821 and 2 copies of Robert Wilson’s ‘ History of Hawick’ in 1825. His brother Alexander was a bookseller and printer in Peebles (and also subscribed to Wilson’s book). He was the seller for the 1836 edition of James Hogg’s words for ‘ Teribus’. This was printed by John Elder of Edinburgh High Street, who was surely a relative of some sort. He was listed as a bookbinder on the Howegate in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 he is recorded on the Kirk Wynd, still as a ‘ book binder’, aged 70. In 1790 he married Isabel Lamb (d.1831), who was also from Hawick. Their children included: Mary (b.1791), who was 2nd wife of hairdresser James Brisbane; Jean (b.1792); John (1796–1844); Janet (b.1800); Walter (b.1802); Alexander (1804–22) and Ann (1806–31). The witnesses in 1791 were Robert Oliver and James Rae and in 1796 were John (probably his father) and James Hume. Walter (b.1802) son of Walter and Isabella Lamb. He was a stocking frame-worker, recorded on the Fore Row in 1841, on the Kirk Wynd in 1851, at 69 High Street in 1861 and 11 Teviot Crescent in 1871. In 1835 he married Margaret (1818–1901), daughter of hairdresser James Brisbane. Their children include: Walter (b.1835); Christine (b.1837); Isabella (b.1839); Janet (b.1841–65), the first to survive past infancy; James (b.1843); Sarah (b.1845); Walter (b.1847); Isabelle (b.1849); John (b.1851); John (again, b.1853), who married Ellen Turnbull; Mary Ann (1856–63); William Brisbane (b.1857); and Margaret (b.1860). Alexander (b.c.1822), coachman at the Tower Hotel, was possibly a son from an earlier marriage. Walter (1847–1926) son of Walter and Margaret Brisibane, he was born in Hawick. He married Jane Johnstone. Their son William Johnstone was born in Monkton, Ayrshire.
edlerin (el-dur-in) adj., arch. growing old, advanced in years, elderly – ‘ An eldrin’ lad’ [JoHo], ‘... But a five-bar fence I sprang in a glance. And ran like an elderin’ hare’ [WaD] (also ’eldern’ and ’eldrin’).
eder Knowes (el-dur-nowz) n. small hilly area to the south-west of where the Eildrig Burn meets the Borthwick Water. Here there are remains of an earthwork, about 40 m across (the name presumably derives from ’Eildrig Knowes’).
ederman (el-dur-num) n., arch. a councillor, bailie or head of a guild – ‘... quhilk being considered be the said bailie, and eldermen and council of the said bruche ... ’[BR1641] (it is uncertain precisely who this term applied to; the same as an ’alderman’ in England; not locally in use since the 17th century).
edership (el-dur-ship) n. a body of elders, the office of being an elder – ‘... a new silver Bason for ye Baptisms, almost containing a pynt, qch the said Bailies present to ye sight of ye Eldership, and were well satisfied therewith’ [PR1711].
edling (el-ding) n., arch. fuel of any kind, particularly peat or turf – ‘... the Deponent, got elding off the Common for the use of his family, and he was never interrupted’ [C&L1767].
edlinhope (el-din-hop) n. farm in the Yarrow valley, on the B709, before the Gordon Arms Hotel, with Eldinhope Knowe to the east. It was a Crown property from 1456, mentioned many times in the exchequer Rolls. It was assigned to Sir Walter Scott in at least the period 1460–67, Alexander Scott in 1469 and Sir David Scott in the period 1475–90, transferring to the Earl of Bothwell in 1491 and remaining with him until at least 1496. In 1499 it was assigned to John Murray of Falahill and David Pringle, with sheep for the King’s flocks there being mentioned in the Exchequer Rolls. In 1501 it was again assigned to Walter Scott. In 1502 it is recorded that the farm was pillaged by Adam Scott of Tushielaw... and the Littles of Eskdale. It remained Crown property until at least 1510, when it was leased by John Murray and David Pringle. In 1539 William Scott complained that James Stoddart took violent possession of the lands. In 1541 the tenants were Andrew Brydon, John Blackstock, William Tait, John Hislop and Margaret Melroe, paying £92 yearly. The former tower there was built by the Scotts. John Chisholme was in Eldinhopeknow in 1579. The farm later became part of the Bucleuch estates, being mentioned in services of heirs in 1634, 1653 and 1661. Walter Scott was tenant in 1737. Over and Nether Eldinhope were valued at about £900 in 1785, with Eldinhopeknow valued at a further £370. Francis Scott was farmer there in the late 18th and early 19th centuries; he lived to the age of 94 and still travelled to church on a pony when he was 90. It is said that it suffered some of the heaviest losses of sheep during the harsh winter of 1794, around 120 animals. Note that it is easy to confuse with the ‘Aldanehop’ also referred to in the Exchequer Rolls of the late 15th century, being ‘Auldshope’, whose name became the modern Anneshope in the Ettrick valley (it is ‘Eldanehope’ in 1456, ‘Aldanehop’ in 1468, ‘Eldashope’ in 1469, ‘Eldainhope’ in 1477, ‘Aldanishop’ in 1479, ‘Auldanehop’ in 1480, ‘Aldanhop’ in 1481, ‘Aldanehope’ in 1486, ‘Auldanehop’ and ‘Eldanhoip’ in 1487, ‘Eldanhop’ in 1490 and 1491, ‘eldan-hop’ in 1494/5, ‘Eldinhop’ in 1499, ‘Eldanehop’ in 1501 and 1507, ‘Eldanhop’ in 1502, ‘Eldin-houp’ in 1539, ‘Eldinhope’ in 1541, ‘Eldinghope’ in 1576, ‘Eldinghop’ in 1581, ‘Elhoip’ in 1634, ‘El-dingshope’ in 1635 and ‘Eldingshope’ in 1661; the origin of the first part may be Old English personal name ‘Aldwine’; ‘Eldinhopeknow’, ‘Mid-lie Eldinhope’ and ‘Over Eldinhope’ are on the 1718 Bucleuch survey).

eledrin (eld-riin) n., arch. a freshwater fish – ‘How out of that pool there we drew many a fine young ‘elderling’ with the bait!’ [BM1905].

Elec see Elick

Elec the Bellman (ee-leek-thu-bel-mawn) n. nickname for Alexander Stainton, immortalised in a poem by William Peffers.

the Election Denner (thu-cee-leek-shin-de-nur) n. celebratory dinner of the old and new Town Councils in the 18th and early 19th centuries. It was held during October, and was at the town’s expense up until about 1817.

Election Night (ee-leek-shin-nit) n. phrase sometimes used for the night of the Pickin.

Election Riot at Hawick (ee-leek-shin-ri-i’-i’-hiIk) n. engraving by ‘D.H. Tristam’ of the supposed riot at Hawick during one of the elections of the 1830s. It appears in Cassell’s ‘Illustrated History of England’ (c.1860). The engraving depicts a pitched battle between a crowd of men on the Auld Brig.

electit (ee-lek-tee, -ti’) pp., arch. elected – ‘...quhilk council and communitie, all in ane vois, electit the said Gilbert Watt, notar, clerk for ane yeir to cum ...’ [BR1638].

electricity (ee-lek-tri-si’-ee) n. first introduced publicly into Hawick by the Urban Electric Supply Company in 1901. The first electricity in town had been generated using the water wheel under Tower Mill some years earlier, this being constructed by William Melrose and William Elliot used to provide light in Mr. Elliot’s house at Teviot Lodge.

eleeven hoors (ee-lee-vin-oorz) n., arch. a light meal taken at 11 a.m. (see also ‘le-en hoor’).

eleeven see eleeven elements (ee-lu-mintz) n., pl., arch. the bread and wine used at communion – ‘James Gray in Whita, James Davidson in Newbigging, with James Scott in Branxholm, by reason of their old age to wait upon the Elements’ [PR1718].

the Elephant’s Back (thu-e-lee-fintz-bawk) n. common name for a rock at ‘the Dunk’ from which diving is popular.

elevint (ee-le-een-oorz) adj., arch. eleventh – ‘...faithfullie maid and gevin vp be his awne mouth vpoun the eleevin day of Aprile, the zeir of God foirsaid ...’ [SB1574] (cf. eeleevinth).

Elfhaugh (elf-hawch) n. former farm in the Rule valley, to the south of Braehead, probably close to Cleuch Head. It is probably the place transcribed as ‘Elschew’ in 1612 when John Turnbull was tenant there. It is marked on Pont’s manuscript as ‘Elphheuch’ (which has become ‘Elfhaugh’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map) and close to the modern Mackside (although Mackside itself is marked much further to the north). Adam Turnbull was tenant there at the time of the 1694 Hearth Tax records. There is no obvious incidence of a similar name later (it appears to be ‘Elpheust’ in 1694; it is also marked as ‘Eelfeuch’ on Gordon's manuscript map c.1650).

elf-shot (elf-sho’) adj., arch. said of diseased cattle, with the supposition that they have been bewitched by fairies — ‘...with any sudden disease, (the cause of which was usually ascribed to the malignant machinations of the fairies,) she was said to be elf-shot ...’[EM1820].

Elgee (el-jee) n. Jane Francesca Agnes (1821–96) granddaughter of a Church of Ireland Rector, she was an Irish Nationalist and poet, using the pseudonym ‘Speranza’. In 1847 she visited Rev. William Grant and his wife Jane Dickson at Cavers Manse and may have written the poem ‘Vanitas’ when there, some verses from it appearing in the visitors’ book there. While in the Borders she met Jedburgh tweed manufacturer John Hilson and started corresponding with him. She married Sir William Wilde and their children included the poet and playwright Oscar Wilde.

Elibank (e-lee-bawngk) n. ruined 16th century tower overlooking the Tweed, between Galashiels and Walkerburn. It was home of Sir Gideon Murray from 1594, who married off his daughter ‘Muckle-mou’d Meg’ to William Scott of Harden in 1611. The ballad version of the story was popularised in Hogg’s ‘Fray at Elibank’. Sir Patrick Murray (sister of ‘Muckle Mou’d Meg’) became the 1st Lord of Elibank in the 17th century, and his great-great-grandson was Gen. James, first Governor-General of Canada. A more modern house was built there in the 1840s — ‘But when they arrived on the Elibank green, The yett was shut, and the east grew pale; They slinkit away, wi’ the tears i’ their een, To tell to Auld Harden their sorrowfu’ tale’ [ES] (also called ‘Elibank Castle’ and formerly ‘Eliburn’).

Elick (e-lee-k, -lik) n. Christian name, usually a pet form of Alexander (also spelled ‘Elec’).

Ellett (e-1i’, e-lee-i’, el-yi’) n. (see also Elliot) Alexander (1805–83) youngest son of Sir William of Stobs, christened in Cavers Parish. He was a naval storekeeper at Devonport. He was appointed as a trustee of his brother’s Wells and Haddon estates in 1863. He died unmarried. Alexander Boswell (1830–82) 2nd son of Sir William Francis of Stobs. He was christened at Cavers. He was in the Royal Navy for a short period. In 1855 he married Katharine Wigrane, daughter of John Craigie, a builder in Portobello. This was apparently just 5 days after they met, with her being just 16, and the couple eloping to Lamberton Toll Bar near Berwick. With his wife pregnant, neither family approving and him not having a job, he enlisted in the 17th Regiment of Foot and was sent to India, while his wife and son went off to America with his brother-in-law James and settled in Chicago. He later obtained a divorce and secondly married Annabella, daughter of Neil Carmichael. His children were Arthur Boswell (only child with his first wife, who inherited Stobs from his uncle William Francis), Alexander Boswell Vassal (who married Hannah Josephina Kavanagh and settled in Australia), Charles James (who settled in Alaska), and Rawdon Popham Vassal (who married Nellie Thompson and died in Alaska). Archibald of Middlestead (17th C.) 3rd son of ‘Gibbie wi the Gowden Gartens’. He inherited the lands of Middlestead and Blackmiddings in Ettrick from his father, according to a charter of 1637. He signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638 (along with his brothers Gavin and Gilbert). In 1662 he was fined £ for supporting the Commonwealth and then his lands were ‘appraised from him’ to pay his debts. There are no records of him after that. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir John Learmonth of Birkhill. Archibald of Craigend and Deanfoot (d.c.1683) 2nd son of William of Stobs. He inherited Craigend from his uncle Gilbert. In 1656 he witnessed the resignation by Edward Lorraine of the lands of Appotside and Tythehouse in Rulewater (in favour of William Elliot of the Binks and Harwood) and another contract in which the Lorraines reserved a small piece of land for themselves. He had at least 2 children, Gilbert and John. His son Gilbert was served as heir in 1683 to his lands of Craigend, Deanfoot and Minto. Archibald (1710–59) younger son of Sir Gilbert, 3rd Baronet of Stobs. He was born at Stobs and baptised in Cavers Parish. He was a merchant in London, being Secretary to Ramsgate Harbour. He married Frances Seer in 1737. He had an only child, Vernon (who was left a legacy by his uncle William). Sir Arthur Boswell of Stobs (1856–1926) 9th Baronet and Chief of the Eliotts. Born at Portobello, he was the only son of Alexander Boswell and his first wife Catherine Craigie. He never really knew his father, being taken by his mother to join his uncle James Craigie in Chicago when only a few months old. He returned to Britain to attend school, but his mother’s condition was that he not see his father. He spent the holidays with his aunt Blanche, but also was not allowed to see his uncle Sir William (due to the dispute between his aunt and uncle). After school he moved to Australia, where there were several Eliott relatives. There he purchased a sheep farm, but was forced to return to Britain after several droughts. He then tried dairy farming in the a memorial plaque to her in Bedrule Kirk stating that she ‘died after a lingering illness born with the most exemplary patience, aged 4 years 11 months’. Capt. Elliot (1712–45) younger son of Gilbert, 3rd Baronet, brother of John, William, Gilbert, Anne, Charles, Archibald, Gavin and George. He was born at Stobs a few weeks before a major fire there and was christened at Cavers. His first name was spelled like the non-Stobs branches of the family. He served in the Royal Navy, being 3rd Lieutenant on H.M.S. Argyll, then spending some time in the West Indies and in the merchant service. He was a Lieutenant on the St. George in 1742 and a year later was Captain on the H.M.S. Lively, on which he died at sea. He also captained the fireship Aetna, on which his young distant cousin John Elliot (son of Capt. John Elliot and Jean Grieve) served. In his will he left money to his nephew Vernon and nieces and Anne and Eleanor. Esther (16th/17th C.) daughter of Gavin, 1st Laird of Stobs. In 1607 she and her sister Dorothy, along with their niece Jean, were served heirs to Stobs. Shortly afterwards she sold her share to her half-brother Gilbert, ‘Gibbie wi the Gowden Garthins’. She married Gilbert Ker of Lochtour, eldest son of John of Hirsel, and had children with him. Sir Francis of Stobs (d.1791) eldest son of Sir John, he was named after his aunt, Lady Frances de Nassau d’Averquerque, who was wife of Col. Willliam Elliot of Wells, and a close friend of his parents. When young he served with the 3rd Regiment of Foot Guards. He was still ‘younger’ in 1761, when listed among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire. He succeeded in 1768 as the 5th Baronet, having already been favoured by his grandfather, who changed his will to leave all his personal estate to him (under the condition that he lived continuously at Stobs). He was known locally as ‘Frankie o the Stobs’ and was said not to have kept up his position in society (mixed with common people!). He planned the new mansion at Stobs, but died before building work commenced. He was on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. He was taxed for having 2 saddle or carriage horses in 1785, then 3 or 4 in the years 1786–91. He was also taxed for having a 4-wheeled carriage in the years 1785–91 and also for having 2 male servants from 1778–91 and 2 female servants in the period 1785–

91. He was said to be in ill-health in 1788 when listed on the roll of voters in Roxburghshire. In 1788 his lands of Stobs and Lymiecleuch in Cavers Parish, together with teinds acquired from Douglas of Cavers, were valued at about £3000; at the same time his lands in Kirkton Parish (including Acreknowe, Barnes, Birkwood, Dodburn, Horse-lee, Newton, Smithfieldhaugh, Turn, Whitehill-brae, Winnington and Winningtonrig) were valued at £1846 13s 4d, and in Hobkirk Parish he held Hallrule, Billerwell and part of Hawthorns-side valued at £2355 16s 8d. It is unclear where he lived after inheriting the Stobs estates, since the mansion has burned down. However, he may have been involved with plans for a new house before he died. He was probably also the Eliott of Stobs who was one of the trustees for the Lang-lands estate during its last years. He was said to have been the only heritor who did not share in the spoils of the Division of Hawick’s Common.
In Edinburgh in 1767 he married Euphan (or Euphemia) Dickson (or Dixon), daughter of the Galashiels piper. They had 4 children: William (b.1767), who succeeded; Catp. John (d.1795), who died at sea; Anne (b.1771), who was baptised at Cavers; and Mary (d.1826), who married a Mr. Guy. He had a stroke in 1784 (after dining at Sinton with James Grieve of Branxholm Park, Gilbert Chisholme, and Mr. Riddell) and never fully recovered. Francis Willoughby (1832–82) younger son of Gilbert, who was Speaker of the Queensland Parliament. He was born in Scotland, and baptised in Melrose Parish. He emigrated to Australia when he was 7 years old. He mar-rried Sarah Jane Richards and they had 6 sons and 2 daughters. Gavin or ‘Gawain’, ‘Gawin’, etc. (d.1606/7) Laird of Stobs, also ‘of Bailielee’ and ‘of Horsleyhill’. He was probably the 5th son of Gavin Elliot of Horsleyhill (with his 2nd wife and was descended from the Elliots of Redheugh. It is sometimes claimed incorrectly that he was a son of William Elliot of Larriston and Mary Scott (daughter of Sir Walter of Buccleuch).
He gained Bailielee after the death of his brother
Andrew in 1563/4 and execution of his brother Robert in 1564. He was acquitted of any involvement in the 1564 murder of David Scott of Hassendean, and gained the escheat of his 3 relatives who were executed for the crime. He is probably the ‘Gawin Elliot in Skelhil’ recorded in 1569
when he signed a bond of security in Hawwick for his tenants, with the ‘young Laird of Greneheid’ (probably a Ker) acting as surety for him; he had 9 tenants at that time, including on farms at Skelhill and Priefthaugh. In 1569 he was managing the lands of Skelhill, Pealbrae and Penagushope for the young Robert Elliot of Redheugh (probably his stepson) when he signed the ‘Band of Teviotdale’ promising the Regent Moray to suppress rebels. He was ‘of Skelfhill’ when he was one of the designated relief pledges for Gavin Elliot of Falnash in 1569. Also in 1569 he was ‘Gawen Ellot of Skelfhill’ when there was an order from the Privy Council that he should enter into the Regent’s custody on 8 days warning, wherever he should be. In 1569 he was a surety for 9 men, who were presumably his tenants. His pledge in 1569 was ‘young Grenheid’ and his son (actually step-son) Robert promised to enter if his father required it. He was sold Horsleyhill by his nephew William in 1569, but it seems that young William had also sold the same lands to his brother William, who won the court case to keep them in 1573/4. In 1573 a complaint is recorded against him before the Privy Council (when he was listed as brother of William of Horsleyhill); William Douglas of Cavers complained that he had no right to occupy his lands of Caveling. He is listed as ‘of Bailielee’ in 1573, when, along with his wife Jean Scott, he complained that his servant James Storie was attacked on his newly purchased 6 merk land of Chamberlain Newton; the attackers were Walter and John Scott, possessors of the other half of Chamberlain Newton (they were step sons of Margaret Turnbull, widow of David Elliot, who was also from the Horsleyhill Elliots). Later in 1573 Margaret Turnbull and Walter Scott promised not to harm him, his wife, their children and servants. In 1575 he is probably the Gavin, brother of William Elliot of Horsleyhill who was ordered to appear in reference to the feud between the Pringles and the Elliots. He is ‘in Skelfhill’ in 1575/6 when he complained that he was owed the ‘mails’ for his steading of Bailielee. He is probably the Gavin who Walter Scott found surety not to molest in 1576. In 1581 he was ‘of Baillielee’ when he James McDougall of Makerstown gave sasine of an annual rent in Makerstoun to him and his wife Janet Scott. In 1581 he was witness to the sasine whereby Gavin Gledstains inherited the land of Stobs from his deceased brother George Gledstains of Stobs. He was first to gain the lands at Stobs, purchasing them before 1584 from Gavin Gledstains of Stobs. Thereafter he was referred to as being ‘of Stobs’. In 1584/5 he was ‘Gavin Elliot of the Stobbs’ when listed among the Border Lairds who had to appear before the Privy Council to explain how they were helping to keep peace on the Border. In 1586 he was listed among leaders in upper Teviotdale in instructions from the King to his Lieutenant on the Border. In 1587 Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus, acted as cautioner for him to appear. In 1587/8 he had Home and Cairncross cautioners for presenting Robert Elliot of Redheugh. In 1588 he was on a list of Borders ‘masters and landlords’ ordered to appear before the Privy Council. In 1589 he was on a list of Border Lairds who failed to appear before the Privy Council to give ‘thair gude advise anent the gude reule and quietnes of the Bordouris’ and were denounced as rebels. About 1590 he was listed among the landed men of the Borders. Also in 1590 he was listed as one of the sureties for the entry of Robert Elliot of Redheugh and he was mentioned in a case where the Earl of Angus was ordered to relieve the King of certain ‘bills’ of English complainant. In 1591 he promised not to harm Marjorie Hamilton, widow of Robert Elliot of Redheugh (probably his stepson), with Gilbert of Kirkton as his cautioner. In 1592 he was a tutor to William of Horsleyhill, his grand-nephew (although he had to fight a court case to win this right over William’s father’s half-brother, also William). Also in 1592 his cautioner was Thomas McDougall of Makerstoun that he would not reset any of those who had supported the Earl of Bothwell. There is a bond of 1594/5 in which James Gledstains of Cocklaw pledges that Hector and Richard Turnbull of Clarilaw shall not harm him or William Elliot of Horsleyhill; presumably there was a feud at the time between the two families. Also in 1494/5 he as surety for Gilbert Elliot of the Mains that he would pay taxes for lands in Teviotdale to James Douglas of Cavers. He is probably the Gavin among the Elliots who signed a bond written by Sir John Forster to try to end family feuds on the Border in 1595/6. He is probably the ‘Gawen Elliot who said he was Buccleuch’s depty’ recorded in an English letter in 1597 giving excuses for not delivering up Scottish prisoners. In 1600 he was among leaders from the Borders who were ordered to attend a meeting at Falkland to discuss ‘the present disordours of the Bourdours’. Also in 1600 he was on the ‘retour’ for the Kers of Cessford. He signed a bond among Border Lairds in 1602 for keeping the peace. Also in 1602 he was ‘of Horsliehill’ when he and Walter Scott of Harden were cautioners for Kinmont Willie Armstrong. In 1603 he is on a long list of local landowners to whom the Baron of Hassendean (James Cunningham, Earl of Glencairn) issued a ‘summons of removing’ to vacate their lands. He married Jean (or Janet) Scott, sister of Buccleuch (but it is unclear which one) and widow of Robert of Redheugh; it has been suggested that the marriage was part of attempts to end the feud between the Elliots and Scots in the 1560s. His surviving children were: Jean, who married Thomas Rutherford of Edgerston, and pre-deceased her father; Dorothy, who married George Haliburton of Pinnacle; and Esther, who married Gilbert Ker of Lochtour. His wife brought him 5 step-sons, including the young Robert Elliot of Redheugh (who acted as surety for him on several occasions). There is a suggestion that he may have been father of Gilbert, ‘Gibby wi the Gowden Gartins’, although information about these early generations are unclear (and there are claims that the pair were entirely unrelated). Having no sons of his own, he appointed his stepson Gilbert along with Gilbert Ker of Lochtour (his son-in-law) as executors, shortly before his death, and they were also appointed as factors and attorneys by his widow in 1608. When he died he held no fewer than 19 farms (which he had run with his stepson Gilbert’s help). His daughters Dorothy, and Esther and grand-daughter Jean Rutherford in- (turning in 1691. Gavin (b.1713) younger son of Sir William of Stobs. Like several of his brothers he served in the East India Company. He captained a large trading ship. He died in India before 1756. Gen. George Augustus (1717–90) later Lord Heathfield and Baron Gibraltar, he was 9th son of the 3rd Baronet of Stobs, Sir Gilbert. He was born at Wells House where the family were living after Stobs House burned down (although there is also a tradition that he was born while his parents were visiting their farm at Hallrule). He was educated by private tutor at Stobs, then in Leyden and at the École Royale du génie militaire in Picardy. He returned to Scotland at the age of 18 and obtained his warrant at Woolwich in 1739. He worked his way through the ranks in different regiments and was wounded at the Battle of Dettingen in Germany, serving with the Horse Grenadier Guards. In 1759 he left to raise a new regiment called the 15th or Light Regiment of Dragoons, commonly called ‘Elliot’s Horse’. He was well known for strict discipline among his troops. They fought in the War of Austrian Succession, the Seven Years’ War and the War of American Independence. He was involved in the capture of Havana in 1762, the spoils from which meant that he could purchase the estate of Bailey Park in Heathfield Parish, Eastbourne in 1766. He spent about a decade back in Britain during times of peace. However, he is probably best known for his stint as Commander of Gibral-

in 1787 was made Lord Heathfield, Baron Heathfield of Gibraltar. He retired to London, recovering from a stroke. However, he asked to be reappointed as Governor of Gibraltar, essentially desiring to end his days there, but died when visiting Aachen (now in Germany) on the way. He was said to have been extremely disciplined, setting an example for the men on Gibraltar, where he was ‘perhaps, the most abstemious man of the age. His food is vegetarian and he drinks water. He never sleeps more than four hours at a time... He has so inured himself to habits of hardness that the things that are difficult and painful to other men are to him daily practice’. Robert Burns was referring to him when he wrote ‘Yet let my country need me, with Elliot to head me, I’d clatter on my stumps at the sound of a drum’. He married Anne Pollexfen Drake, a distant relative of Sir Francis Drake, and she died in 1772. Their children were: Francis Augustus (1750–1813), 2nd and last Lord Heathfield; and Anne Pollexfen, who married John Trayton Fuller of Brightling, Sussex. He built a mansion on the Heathfield estate, called Ashdown House, designed by Benjamin Latrobe, which became a boys’ school. The Museum has one of his walking sticks, presented by Thomas Turnbull in 1856. There is a portrait of him by Joshua Reynolds in the National Gallery and he is depicted in the huge painting ‘The Defeat of the Floating Batteries at Gibraltar’, which is the centrepiece of the London Guildhall Gallery – ‘Brave Elliot, as you all well know, Gibraltar’s rock protected: And well he beat the Spanish foe, Tho’ by a Duke directed. A scene like this you soon will see In Roxburghshire repeated: And Dukes and Dons again will be By Elliot’s name defeated’ [T]. George Augustus (1799–1872) 5th son of Sir William of Stobs, he was born in Cavers Parish. He became an Admiral. He married Alice Anne, daughter of Thomas Jeffrey of Halifax, Nova Scotia. He secondly married Harriet Sophia West, daughter of the Admiral of the Fleet. His children were: George Augustus (1838–84), a Major, who married Helen Jane Gallen and Mary Anna Crampton; and Francis John Jeffrey (1844–1903), Naval Captain, who married Florence Caroline Schmidt. He had descendants in South Africa. Gideon (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Mary Haliburton and their children baptised in Hawick were: Jean (b.1719); Barbara (b.1720); and Simon (b.1722). Gilbert of Stobs and of Horsleyhill, ‘Gibbie wi the Golden Gartins’ (d.1634). From his seal it seems clear he was directly related to the Elliots of Redheugh. His parentage is uncertain, some accounts (e.g. Scott of Satchells) saying he was the son of Elliot of Larriston and a Scott of Buccleuch, while a Liddesdale tradition states that he was an illegitimate child of William (or Robert) Elliot of Larriston (or Redheugh) with Maggie (or Helen) Kidd. However, it seems most likely that he was a younger son of Robert, the 16th Chief and Jean Scott, and step-son of Gavin of Stobs (who was the 2nd husband of Jean Scott). He helped Gavin run his farms and shortly before Gavin’s death in 1606/7 was appointed as one of his executors and trustees. He may also be the Gilbert ‘of the Kirkton’ who in 1591 was cautioner for Gavin of Stobs in a promise not to harm Marjorie Hamilton, widow of Robert Elliot of Redheugh. There are many variants on his nickname (‘Gowden’, ‘Garties’, ‘Garters’, etc.), which presumably arose from his choice of colour of device for keeping his socks up! He may be the Gilbert who, along with several other Elliots, signed the bond with the Regent Morton in 1572. He is probably the ‘Gebbe Elliot his brother’, named after Robert, chief of the Elliots in a letter written by English Border officials in 1583. He is said to have been at the rescue of Kimmont Willie in 1596 and may have acted as a hostage for one of the Scotts after when they were captured after a raid on Gilsland in 1597. He is probably the ‘Gybb Elwood allias Robes Gibb’ who, along with Scott of Buccleuch and Scott of Harden, met with Englishmen a few days before to plan details of the raid; if this was him, then it would verify that he was a son of Robert. He may be the Gilbert of ‘Hardlisdale’ (possibly Horsleyhill) who was one of the leading Elliots and Armstrongs to write to Lord Scrove to get their family hostages freed from England in 1599. In 1600 he gained the lands of ‘Elinburn, Schawis alias Middelsteid of Gield in Ettrick forest’ from William Cranston (as registered in 1608). He may be the ‘Gilbert Elliot’ who signed the ‘General Band’ among Border Lairds in 1602. He is probably the ‘Gilbert Elliot of Horsliehill’ coming after Gavin of Stobs in the list of local men served a ‘summons of removing’ by the Baron of Hassendean in 1603; and he may be the Gilbert of ‘Horsiehill’ who was on the ‘retour’ panel for Tweedie of Drumelzier. He was clearly a man of local importance and wealth, since in 1607 he bought Stobs from the heirs of Gavin Elliot (probably his step-father), paying off the full amount of 15,000 merks and being formally infested by the superior Sir John Cranston of that.
In 1607 he purchased Baxtonliees from John Home, as well as ‘Carlinghall, Lailsell, Brounishall, Brumesclewis and Roberthill’ from Hector Turnbull of Staneedge. In 1608 he purchased ‘Danzeltoun’ from James MacDowgall of Makerstoun. In 1609 he purchased ‘Harwood in Fairnileyes and Stenletch’ from Hector Turnbull. In 1610 he was recorded as ‘of Horsliehill’ when he stood as cautioner for Walter Scott of Harden and his sons Walter, Francis and Hugh, that they would not harm Walter Scott in Hawick, called Todshawhill, George his son, Thomas Scott, called ofOrmiston, and his brother Alexander. Also in 1610 he complained to the Privy Council that Will Scott of Northhouse and his brother Hob ‘assaulted him in the town of Hawik with drawn swords, and would have slain him but for his own better defence and help of certain inhabitants of the said town’; this was presumably related to a dispute over land, with the same William Scott being accused in 1608 of attacking Stobs (just before he took over ownership), threatening to burn ‘all the evidents and writs of the said lands’ unless they got what they wanted. In 1611 he purchased lands in Ettrick from his sister’s father-in-law Gilbert Ker of Lochtour and bought further lands from him in 1628. In 1616 he bought the lands of Middle Mains of Hassendean and Horsleyhill from the Earl of Home; in 1630, along with his eldest son William, he resigned the lands on receipt of the agreed 8,000 merks from James, Earl of Home. In 1617 he (and his son Gilbert) had a ‘wadset’ with John Turnbull of Barnhills and purchased Wester Barnhills from Turnbull in 1618. Also in 1617 he appeared before the Privy Council with a number of other Border lairds to renew the bond for the good behaviour of his supporters and tenants. In 1620 he resigned the reversion on half of Glenkerry and Midgehope to Walter Scott of Tushielaw. Also in 1620 he complained about Walter Gledstains of Cocklaw not paying him for a series of loans. In 1622 he was fined for not being on a jury in Edinburgh. Also in 1620 he purchased Corriesike, Langbyre, Giddenscleuch and part of Caerlenrig from Douglas of Cavers. In 1621 he had a charter for Hangingside and he also purchased the lands of Winnington and Winningtonhall from Robert Elliot of Redheugh. He is recorded in the Commissioners’ Court of 1622 as having some sheep stolen from his land at Kershope in 1621 and again in 1623. And in 1623 William Wilson (of Carlisle) was hanged after being found guilty of stealing 6 sheep and 13 goats from his lands at Stobs and Teviothead, while Adam Turnbull, mille in Harts-garth, was acquitted of stealing cows from his lands of ‘Leisburne’. Also in 1623 he was on the commission (representing Roxburghshire) to discuss the export of Scottish wool to England. He is supposed to have been a great hunter of deer, and at one point angered King James by hunting on his land. He was probably the ‘Sir Gilbert’ mentioned in the song ‘Rattlin Roarin Willie’, who captured William Henderson. In 1628 he is listed among the major landowners who met to elect M.P.s. for Roxburghshire. In 1628 he received the lands of Middleston and Blackmiddles (in Ettrick), in 1630 he gained the lands of Hartsaugh and the Kirklands of Kirkton and in 1632 he received a charter of the lands of ‘Town o Rule’ and was involved in a ‘wadset’ for the lands of Harwood (although this may have been another Gilbert). Also in 1632, he is recorded as owner of the lands of ‘the Hill, Streuchehill alias Stitchel-hill, Laidhop and Qhithop’ (probably Laws Hill, Stitchel Hill, Laidlehope and Whitrope) in Liddesdale. He is sometimes referred to as the earli-est ancestor of the Eliotts of Stobs, although the family history around this time is uncertain (and his relationship to the previous Gavin of Stobs is unclear). He married Margaret Scott (‘Maggy Fendy’), and had 11 children. His wife’s par-ents were ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden and Margaret Scott, ‘the Flower of Yarrow’. A story is told about how he stayed under his father-in-law’s roof after his marriage, with Auld Wat making the condition for his board being the plunder of the first harvest moon. His children were: William (d.1654), who succeeded him; Gilbert of Craigend and Hartsaugh (d.1680); Archibald of Middleston; Gavin of Grange and Midlem Mill, father of the 1st Lord Minto; John (d.1639), advocate in Edinburgh; James (d.bef. 1661), married Margaret Elliot of Redheugh, heiress of Larriston; Elizabeth, married John Turnbull of Minto; Jean, married Robert Pringle of Blindlee; Mar-garet, married Andrew Scott of Fawside; Esther, who married Andrew Ker, ancestor of the Scott-Plummers of Sunderland Hall; and Anne, married Andrew Bell of Colross, Kelso. He is also said to have had an illegitimate daughter who married Simon Elliot of Binks. His wife was listed as lif-erenter of lands in Kirkton Parish in 1643; she may also have been the ‘Mar. Scott, gudewife of Horsliehill’ who was owner of lands in Hassendean Parish in 1643. Since he is said to have died in 1634, he is probably not the ‘G. Elliot of Stobbes’ who signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638; this was more likely to be his son Gavin, who signed it along with his brothers Gilbert of Craigend and Archibald of Middlestead. Gilbert of Craigend and Hartshaugh (d.1680) 2nd son of ‘Gibbie wi’ the Golden Gartins’. In earlier records he was Laird of Hartshaugh. He is mentioned in the 1623 Circuit Court records (along with ‘Archie Elliott of Bowholme’) as cautioner for ‘Will Elliott of Hiesches’. In 1630 he was witness to his father Gilbert and brother William redeeming the lands of Hassendean and Horsley-hill for payment from James, Earl of Home. A contract of 1632 (between Rev. William Weir, Francis Hamilton and Edward Lorraine) records that he was given certain lands of Harwood. He held a ‘wadset’ from Edward Lorraine in 1633 in exchange for the lands of Tythehouse. And in 1638 he had an agreement with William, son of Simon Elliot of the Binks over teinds of Harwood and Tythehouse. In 1637 he witnessed a deed of Robert of Redleigh to his daughter and son-in-law. He signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. Both he and his wife were described as ‘zealous Presbyterians’. There is a crown charter of 1638 in the name of him and his wife for the lands of Craigend and Deanfoot, and where he is described as ‘of Hartisheuch’. In 1643 he is recorded as owner of land in Minto Parish (specifically Craigend and Deanfoot), valued at £660 and land in Abbotrule Parish, valued at £65 (this probably being part of Hartshaugh). In 1643 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire and also the Committee of War for the county in 1643, 1644 and 1649. In 1649 he gave a discharge of 52 merks Scots to William Elliot of Harwood, as the part owed to him for the lands of Harwood, Tythehouse and Tythehousefield. He was recorded in a document relating to the lands of Appotside in 1656. He may be the Gilbert who in 1661 witnessed a baptism for Archibald (perhaps his brother) in Ashkirk Parish. He was fined £1200 in 1662, after the Restoration. He paid tax on £660 in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1663 and 1678 in Minto Parish. He may also be the Gilbert whose land of ‘Killnow’ in Hobkirk Parish was valued at £80 in 1678. In 1678 he was one of the Commissioners for Roxburghshire to raise money for the King. He married Alison Ker (from an unknown branch of the Kers), but died without issue. He was succeeded in the lands of Craigend by Archibald, 2nd son of his brother William. His wife, Lady Craigend leased the lands to Edinburgh ‘writer’ Thomas Porteous in 1686; she is mentioned by Rev. John Livingstone of Ancrum as one of the Covenantant supporters in Teviotdale and was fined in 1684 for refusing to give up her religious principles. Sir Gilbert of Stobs (d.c.1683) eldest son of William of Stobs and grandson of ‘Gibby wi the Gowden Gartins’. In 1648 he was ‘fiar thairof’ listed after his father on a Commission to suppress the thieves in the Borders. In 1649 he was on the Committee of War for Selkirkshire along with his father. He was an ardent royalist and served in the army, commanding a troop in Sir Walter Scott of Whitslade’s regiment of horse. In 1650 he was named (along with his father and several Scotts) as one of the ‘tutors’ for the children of Francis Earl of Buccleuch in his will and also served as one of the ‘tutors testamentars’ for the will of Francis. In 1651, along with his father, he bought Stonedge and Woollee (later Wolfelee) from Lord Cranstoun, his brother-in-law. However, due to Cranstoun’s imprisonment, he did not claim the properties until 1659. He was Sir Gilbert ‘fiar of Stobbis’ who witnessed contracts relating to Appotside in 1654 and 1656. He succeeded his father in 1654, and immediately had to contend with the fine of £1000 sterling imposed by Cromwell on royalist supporters. In 1655 he sold Kirkton to his uncle Sir Archibald Douglas of Cavers. In 1656 he was the superior of the lands who confirmed the charters of William Elliot of Harwood for Harwood, Tythehouse and Appotside. In 1657 he was served heir to his father in the lands of Winnington and Winningtonhall, as well as ‘Portheid’, ‘Horslie’, ‘Turie’, ‘Arkendknow’, Winningtonrig, Over and Nether ‘Swynsteid’, Over and Nether Dodburn, Birkwood, Birkwoodhead, ‘Bromsydbrae’, ‘Bromsyke’, ‘Huntishill’, ‘Abbotis-aker’, Baxtonlees, ‘Ellinburne’, Shaw, Middlestead, ‘Gildhous’ and Bailielee. He was one of the trustees for Mary Scott of Buccleuch during her minority. In 1658 he was among 20 ‘gentlemen and heritors’ of Roxburghshire who signed a commission to oppose payment requested from the county. In 1659 he sold Peel (or Baxtonlees) to William Elliot of Binks and Swinside and his son John. Also in 1659 he had a charter of Over and Nether Wells and Mackshideshaw. In 1660, after the restoration of the monarchy, he was appointed one of the Parliamentary Commissioners (i.e. M.Ps.) for Roxburghshire, and reappointed in 1669, serving until 1674. In 1662 he was appointed one of the Justiciars for the Borders (for apprehending moststroopers), an appointment that was renewed ten years later. He was involved in a libel action with Robert Scott of...

Harwood in 1663. He witnessed the marriage contract of Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch in 1663, and was still one of her curators at that time. He was reappointed as a Justice of the Peace in 1663, and nominated as the convenor for Roxburghshire. According to the Land Tax Rolls of about 1663 his rentals in amounted to £10,226 13s 4d, including lands in Hobkirk, Cavers, Kirkton, Castleton and Abbotrule Parishes; this also included £666 13s 4d from his mother’s rentals. He was also recorded in 3 bonds and discharges in 1663. He was knighted by Charles II in 1651 on Largo sands, and was made 1st Baronet (of Nova Scotia) in 1666. In 1671 he had the lands of Stonedge separated from the Barony of Hallrule, so that he could give it to the eldest of his 2nd family. In 1673 he succeeded his cousin Robert the 17th of Redheugh as Chief of the Eliots. He is probably the Gilbert ‘of woolie’ recorded being taxed for £1000 in Southdean Parish in 1678. He married first Isabella (or Isobel) Cranstoun (daughter of James, Master of Cranstoun and Lady Elizabeth Stewart, who was daughter of the Earl of Bothwell) and secondly in 1661 Magdelen (or Magdaline), daughter of Sir John Nicolson of Laswade. He had 10 children, including: Sir William, who succeeded him (and was the 2nd born son); James, recorded in 1679; John, excise collector, still alive in 1704; Elizabeth (d.1662), buried in Greyfriars Cemetery; Esther, who married William Douglas of Morton; Thomas (d.1671), who would have inherited Wolfelee and Stonedge, but died young; Gilbert (1669–1706), eldest surviving son of his 2nd marriage, to whom he gave the estate of Stonedge; another William (d.1699), merchant of Edinburgh and later of London, who married a daughter of Sir George Hume; Janet (d.bef. 1694); and Magdalene (d.1739), who married John Pringle of Stichell. There seems to be some confusion over the year of his death, but he certainly signed a bond of provision for his wife and children in April 1677. And his son Sir William was served as his heir in 1692, perhaps a while after his death. His widow occupied old Wolfelee House, until that fell into disrepair, afterwards moving to Hobsburn. Gilbert of Craigend and Deanfoot (17th C.) local landowner in the mid-to-late 1600s. He was a grandson of ‘Gibbie wi the Gowden Garters’ and son of Archibald (and hence cousin of the 1st Baronet of Stobs). He may be partly confused with Gilbert of Craigend and Hartshaugh, who was probably his uncle, and he is also easy to confuse with the later Gilbert of Minto. In 1683 he was served heir to his father’s lands of Craigend, Deanfield and Minto, as well as ‘Grassland’, Ladyland, ‘Viccars land’ in Hobkirk Parish, Wester Swanshiel and Clerksbank. He inherited the lands of Craignend and Deanfoot from his father, but in 1687 sold the land to Lord Tarras. He was already deceased by 1696 when his brother John was married in Edinburgh. Gilbert of Stanedge (1669–1705) eldest surviving son of Sir Gilbert of Stobs with his 2nd wife, Magdelen Nicolson. He was served heir to his brother Thomas in 1671 and succeeded to the Stanedge lands in 1682, while still a minor. The lands had been separated from the Barony of Hallrule in 1671 and originally disposed to his brother Thomas, who died shortly afterwards. As part of the arrangements for his inheritance he had to provide the sum of 20,000 for his 3 younger siblings. During his minority his ‘curators’ were his mother Lady Stobs, William Elliot of Grange (his uncle), Gavin Elliot in Dalkeith and John Elliott (brother of Sir William of Stobs, and his half-brother). In 1678 he is recorded as owner of lands in Hobkirk Parish; he was also ‘of Stenhouse-edge’ when listed as owner of Woollee in Southdean Parish. His ‘brother-german’ William became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1691. He became first Laird of Stonedge and also of Woollee in 1671, the lands being given by his father after an older brother died. He witnessed the marriage contract of the daughter of Henry Elliot of Harwood in 1692. A sasine of 1693 shows him in a bond with Sir John Pringle of Stichell over the lands of Fairnielees, Unthank, Howa, Hobsburn, Snipe and Little Gledstains. That year he also had a bond with Patrick Johnston, Edinburgh merchant and had an action raised against him and his curators by Archibald Douglas of ‘Garvat’ (Gervald perhaps) for non-payment. This was followed by a letter of horning’ against him and Walter Scott of Wauchope by Archibald Douglas of ‘Garvat’ in 1695. Henry Elliot of Harwood appears to have paid off several of his debts about 1694, so it is clear he was in financial difficulties. In 1694 he sold the 3 eastern quarters of Fairnielees (part of the Harwood estate) to Henry Elliot of Harwood. He contributed £100 to the Darien Scheme in 1695. From 1698 he started on extensive alterations to Woollee, to turn the tower into a home; however, this placed him further into debt. A stone formerly built into the house (but later destroyed) was inscribed ‘D.M.E. G.E. E.S.’ In 1704 he was listed on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire. In 1693 he married Elizabeth, daughter of Walter...
Scott of Harwood-on-Teviot. Their children were: Magdalen (b.1694), who married Robert Ainslie; Gilbert (b.1695), who succeeded; Walter (b.1696), unmarried; Christian (b.1697), who married a Mr. Dawson, a Kelso surgeon; Helen (b.1698), who married John Haswell, Provost of Jedburgh; Elizabeth (b.1699), who married a Mr. Ogilvie of Ayrshire; William (b.1701), unmarried; John, also unmarried; Robert (b.1704), who became an apprentice in 1721 and died unmarried; Isobel (b.1705), who married Alexander Jerdon of Newcastle; and Margaret (b.1706), who married John Angus, an Edinburgh lawyer. He died suddenly aged 37, leaving a large family of children. His widow stayed in Woollee (i.e. Wolfelee) after his death and married James Campbell, minister at Legerwood. Sir Gilbert of Stobs (c.1680–1764) 3rd Baronet and Chief of the Elliots, eldest son of Sir William. He was served heir to his father in 1699. Soon after getting married he moved from London to Edinburgh, where his house was on the north side of the High Street at the top of Trunks Close (and was demolished in 1873); this was in the Canongate, where several other Roxburghshire families lived. In 1704 he was among the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire. He also lived at Stobs, but resided at Wells for a few years after Stobs House was burned down in 1712. It is possible he was the ‘Gilbert Elliott of Midlamiln younger’ (the family having previously held Midlem Mill) listed in 1708 as one of the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire. He became a Burgess of Edinburgh in 1713 by right of his father Sir William. Following the rebellion of 1715 he bought up the ‘wadsets’ of Adam Turnbull of Deneside (who had been a Jacobite supporter) and forced him to leave, thereby gaining a local reputation as a high-handed Laird. He was M.P. for Roxburghshire 1708–15 and again 1726–27 (taking over from his distant cousin Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto) in a bye-election. In 1718 he drew up a bond of entail (at the insistence of his father-in-law), ensuring that none of the estate (except for Haddon) could be sold off; despite the best of intentions, this agreement led to financial trouble for later generations. After 1723 the family began to regularly spell their name with the double ‘t’ and single ‘l’. In 1722 a letter was sent to Winningtonrig, warning his tenants there not to pasture their animals on Hawick Common, and in 1723 one of the Hawick Bailies was paid for ‘taking instruments’ against him. In 1725 he gave the east side of Hallrule, valued at £414, to his son John, retaining the other £1939. In 1726, following a court meeting in Jedburgh, the drinking party he was with discussed the recent election (and particularly who did not vote for him) and he got into an argument with Col. Stewart of Stewartfield (now Harttrigge) in the Black Bull in Jedburgh and stabbed him to death with his sword. He apparently sobered up in Jedburgh Abbey churchyard, hid out in Wauchope Forest and fled by boat to Holland. He was declared an outlaw, but was later pardoned and allowed to return, partly through the influence of Lord Minto and his father-in-law, William Elliot. The sword that he had used later came into the possession of the Marquess of Lothian. It is said that he led a sober and quiet life after his return. He added the farms of Lymiecleuch and Penchrise to the family estates. The Bailies and Council of Hawick complained about his tenants’ encroachment onto the Common in a notorial instrument of 1734. On the other hand, in 1736 he applied to the Board of Trade for Manufactures for a grant of £40 to purchase some looms for the manufacture of coarse tarred wool, which was probably a significant moment in the development of Hawick as a knitwear centre. In 1739 he was among the local landowners asked to decide where the Teviot Brig in Hawick should be built. He leased Pelebraehope from the Buccleuch Estates in 1744. He paid the window tax in Cavers Parish in 1748 and 1753. In 1750, after the death of Gilbert Elliot, son of Robert Elliot of Larriston, he arranged for the education at Stobs of Robert’s grandson, William (who would later buy back Larriston and become a Major-General). In 1758 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Scott in Tandlaw. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. Shortly before his death he changed his will to favour his grandson Francis over his eldest son John, stipulating that Francis should live constantly at Stobs. In London in 1702 he married Eleanor (or Eleanor), daughter of William Elliot, who was a tailor in London (and later of Wells), and was a distant cousin from the Brugh branch of the family. She died in 1728 and it is unclear if he also married another Eleanor later. He had 11 children: William (1703–05), who died in infancy; Gilbert (1704–06), who also died in infancy; Sir John (b.1705), who succeeded him; another William (b.1706), who became a merchant with the East India Company; Gilbert (b.1707), also with the East India Company; Anne or Eleanor (b.1708), the only daughter, who probably died young; Charles (1709–56), who became Attorney General of North Carolina;
Eliott

Archibald (1710–59), who was born at Stobs and became a London merchant, being secretary to Ramsgate Harbour; Elliot (1712–45), who was born at Stobs and became a Captain in the Royal Navy; Gavin (b.1713), who was born at Wells and became Captain of a ship in the East India Company; and George Augustus (1717–90), who was born at Wells and became Lord Heathfield. His wife’s dowry was said to be £15,000, which was a fortune at the time. He bestowed on her the lands of Langside, Shankend and Hawthornside, and the rentals from Penchrise. Gilbert of Stanedge and Howa (1695–1727) son of Gilbert, he was the 2nd (and last) Eliott Laird of Stotedge and also owned Woollee (i.e. Wolfelee) as well as several neighbouring farms, all of which were part of the Stonedge lands. He was said to have been a delicate child who was mainly kept at home. He succeeded at age 11, to an estate that was heavily in debt, and so the management was in the hands of his curators. In 1718 he sold Stonedge and Howa to Adam Scott, tenant of Wauchope, but retaining lands in Hobkirk Parish valued at £676 14s 8d. In 1722 he succeeded to his uncle’s lands of Woollee (i.e. Wolfelee). He died while still in debt, but arranged a Deed of Provision for his younger children. In 1715 he married Cecily (or Cecilia), daughter of William Kerr of Abbotrule, having known her for many years. Their children were: Elizabeth, who married William Kerr of Gateshaw, Town Clerk of Kelso; Gilbert, who married Margaret Ainslie and was designated ‘of Otterburn’; and Charles, who was a merchant Captain in the Lisbon trade. Gilbert (1707–bef. 56) 3rd son of Sir Gilbert of Stobs. He was born at the family home at Trunk’s Close in Ed-inburgh. He served with the East India Company, serving for a while on the Heathcote. He died unmarried in India. Gilbert of Otterburn and Wells (1717–1801) eldest son of Gilbert of Stonedge. While a minor his ‘tutor’ was William Kerr of Abbotrule. He trained as a surgeon and in 1739 became surgeon to the regiment raised by his cousin Gen. George Augustus Elliott (later Lord Heathfield), who was born in the same Parish in the same year. He received money after the death of his uncle William and purchased Otterburn estate from Thomas Moir; however, he held Otterburn for only a few years, selling it in 1765. After retiring from the army he served as factor of Wells for his distant relative William Elliot, taking over from Archibald Jordan, probably in the late 1760s. Sometime before leaving the country for the last time Lord Heathfield entrusted him with the key of the main gate of Gibraltar, and it later passed to his nephew when he retired. A great admirer of James Thomson (of ‘The Seas-ons’), he acquired the armchair the poet used when composing the ‘Castle of Indolence’, said to have been sent to him from London by the Liddesdale-born Dr. John Armstrong). In 1787 he invited Robert Burns to dine at Wells (described in Burns diary as breakfast) during the poet’s Border Tour; he insisted that Burns sit in the chair, making such a fuss over it that Burns grew confused, the situation became very awkward and the whole visit was not the great success that he had planned. In 1788 he was recorded as owner of ‘Otterburn in Morebattle Parish, valued at £224 13s 4d (and the teinds valued at £40). He was ‘in Walls’ in the period 1785–98 when taxed for having a carriage. He was also taxed for having 1 or 2 male servants in the period 1785–97, and a female servant in 1785–90. He was ‘in Walls’ on the 1785–91 Horse Tax Rolls, when he had 3 carriage horses; he is probably also the Gilbert recorded paying the horse tax at Stonedge in 1791. He is recorded in the 1792–97 Horse Tax Rolls as ‘Gilbert Elliot Esq. at Wells’, when he owned 2 farm horses and 2 carriage or saddle horses. He also paid tax on 2 dogs in 1797. In 1764 he married Margaret, daughter of Jedburgh Bailie and apothecary William Ainslie. He died with-out issue and the male line of Eliott of Stanedge therefore became extinct. Gilbert (b.1707) son of Sir Gilbert of Stobs and Eleanor Elliot. He was born in his father’s house at Trunk’s Close in Edinburgh. He became a merchant with the East India Company, like his brother William. He died before 1756, unmarried. Gilbert (1796–1871) 3rd son of Sir William of Stobs and Mary Russell. He was baptised in Cavers Parish and schooled at Houghton-le-Spring. In 1812 he became a ‘gentleman-cadet’ in the Royal Corps of Artillery and served in the Peninsular War in 1815 just after Waterloo, leaving as 1st Lieutenant in 1821. He then returned to Scotland and stayed with his mother at Wells (which his elder brother William had inherited). He was a member of the Jedforest Club from 1822, but resigned in 1834 along with other Whig supporters. He sub-scribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. In 1830 he married Isabella Lucy, daughter of Rev. Robert Elliot of Wheldrake (son of Sir Gilbert Elliot, 3rd Baronet of Minto), after meeting her the year before when she was visiting Weens; the couple were married at Minto. In 1839, along with his brother-in-law Dr. Grant of...
Jedburgh, he emigrated to Australia. There he prospered, and was appointed Police Magistrate in Parramatta, then moved to Wide Bay (north of Brisbane), where he bought a sheep station called ‘Yenda’. He became Member of Parliament for Wide Bay and was appointed first Speaker of the Queensland Parliament (serving for 11 years). He apparently refused to be given a knighthood, but agreed to have his portrait painted (which hangs in Parliament House in Brisbane). His children were: Gilbert William (b.1831), who was a police magistrate and married Jean Penelope Thomson; Francis Willoughby, who married Sarah Jane Richards; Henry Alexander (b.1834); and 2 daughters. There are many descendants now living in Australia. Gilbert William (1831–93) son of Gilbert, 3rd son of Sir William of Stobs. He was born in Scotland and baptised in Jedburgh Parish. He moved to Australia with his father at the age of 8. He kept in touch with his family back in Scotland, and welcomed their kinsman Arthur (later 9th Baronet of Stobs) when he came to Australia in 1875. He married Jane Penelope Thomson and they had 2 sons and 4 daughters.

Sir Gilbert Alexander Boswell of Stobs (1885–1958) 10th Baronet and Chief of the Elliots. He was born in Massachusetts, only son of Sir Arthur and Lilla Burbank. He left school at 16, worked for a bank and started his own firm on Wall Street at the age of 20. On the outbreak of WWI he joined the McGill University Battery in Canada and after training served with the Royal Artillery in England. After the War he was an apple farmer in California for a while, then returned to Wall Street. When his father died in 1926 he remaining in the U.S.A., but sent his 2 sons to be educated in England. In 1932 he retired from his partnership, bought Wolfelee and moved there himself. He also joined his cousin’s firm in London, later setting up under his own name. Before he died he was able to purchase Redheugh, the ancient seat of the Elliots. In 1912 he married Dora Flournoy, only child of Alexander Stephens Hopkins of Atlanta, Georgia; she carried out extensive research on the family. They had 4 children: Charlotte Elgitha Georgia; she was brother of her own brother’s wife, Charlotte Wood of Quebec. She was appointed by her father in 1863 as one of the trustees of the estates of Wells and Haddon (essentially to exclude her brother, Sir William, from his inheritance). She was said to be unhappy at how quickly her brother remarried after his first wife (her husband’s sister) died in 1878, and was then involved in about 20 years of legal battles with him over rights to the rents at Wells. John of Goodtrees (d.1639) 5th son of ‘Gibbie wi the Gowden Gairters’. He became an advocate in Edinburgh. In 1632 he was described as ‘bailie in that part’ for a charter where his brother Gilbert purchased the lands of Harwood from Edward Lorraine and Rev. William Weir, as well as for a sasine where Rev. Weir sold Appotside and Tyethehouse to Edward Lorraine. He married Marion, daughter and heiress of David McCulloch of Goodtrees (and whose wife was Margaret Elliot, a cousin). Their only child was Margaret, who married Sir Thomas Stewart of Coltness. After his death she remarried, to her daughter’s father-in-law. John (17th/18th C.) 3rd son of Sir Gilbert, 1st Baronet of Stobs and Isabella Cranston. He was brother of Sir William and uncle of Sir Gilbert, 3rd Baronet of Stobs. In 1681 he was a witness for a bond between Walter Lorraine and Walter Scott in Wauchope. In the 1680s he was one of the ‘curators’ for Gilbert of Stonedge (his half brother). He was made collector of excise for Roxburgh and Selkirk in 1686. In 1687 he had a charter from his brother William for the lands of Lymiecleuch (this being obtained by adjudication from Adam Elliot of Mosspeebles and his brothers when they were unable to repay their loan); however, owing to the Revolution, he only took possession of the farm in 1695. He was cautious for a bond by Gilbert of Stonedge in 1691 and witnessed a disposition between Gilbert Elliot of Stonedge and Henry Elliot of Harwood in 1694. In 1702 he witnessed the marriage arrangement by his nephew Sir Gilbert Elliot of Stobs to Eleabor Elliot. In 1704 (along with shoemaker John Elliot) he witnessed a baptism for Gilbert Elliot in Nether Southfield; he was recorded there as ‘Collector’. Sir John of Stobs (1705–1678) 4th Baronet and Chief of the Elliots. He was born in Edinburgh, son of Sir Gilbert, and said to be named after the Duke of Argyll. He was probably educated at home, like his brothers. He received livery of ‘Eastside’ when he reached 21. He became a Burgess and Guild Brother of Jedburgh in 1713 (when still a boy) and became a Burgess of Edinburgh in 1748, ‘gratis’. In 1725 his father gave him lands in the east side of Hallrule, valued at £414. He was ‘of Stobs, junior’ when recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. His father disinherited him as much as possible in favour of his son Francis (perhaps a result of his marriage and the fact that he moved to England), and in fact he was only Baronet for 3 years before he died and was succeeded by Francis. He was one of the defenders in the action of 1767 brought by the Duke of Buccleuch against the Bailies of Hawick and the neighbouring landowners regarding the division of the Common. He married Mary Andrews of London (about whom nothing else appears to be known). His children were: Francis (d.1791), who became 5th Baronet; John (d.1769), who was Captain with the Inniskilling Dragoons; Anne (1735–1803), who died in Bath, unmarried; and Eleanor (d.1767). He died on New Year’s day in 1768 at his house in New Portugal Street in London. He left everything to his wife and daughter Anne. John (d.1769) son of Sir John of Stobs and brother of Sir Francis. He was a subaltern officer in the Inniskilling Dragoons for many years and died as a senior Lieutenant in the regiment. Capt. John (d.1795) younger son of Sir Francis of Stobs. He was a Captain in the 20th (or Jamaica) regiment of Light Dragoons. He died on the Princess Royal packet on his journey home from Jamaica. He was unmarried and his brother William was his executor. Maj. John (1793–1837) 2nd son of Sir William, 6th Baronet of Stobs. Born at Stobs, in 1812 he was gazetted to the 8th Hussars as a Cornet. By 1824 he was a Captain in the 4th Dragoons and was later promoted to Major. He died unmarried. Dame Magdelen née Nicolson (d.1699) wife and later widow of Sir Gilbert, 1st baronet of Stobs. She was daughter of Sir John Nicolson of Lasswade. She is recorded borrowing ‘40 Punds Scots’ for her share in building the new Hobkirk church of 1690–92. She stayed at Wolfelee and kept an account book that survives. Margaret Frances Boswell of Stobs (1948– ) heir of the Chieftanship of the Elliots, only child of Arthur Francis Augustus, 11th Baronet of Stobs. She published ‘The Elliots, The Story of a Border Clan’ (1974). Richard of Fallahill (17th C.) younger son of William of Stobs. He witnessed a sasine in 1669 and received a charter for Fallahill in 1677. He had sons Gilbert and William who were both witnesses to a bond of caution at Dumfries in 1684. Sir Robert of Stobs (17th/18th C.) recorded becoming a Burgess of Edinburgh in 1713 in right of his father Sir William. Adm. Russell (1802–81) christened at Cavers, younger son of Sir William of Stobs. He lived at Easter Langlee near Melrose. He became an Admiral in the Navy. In 1830 he married Bethia, daughter of Sir William Russell (by a coincidence the same surname as his first name), and she died in 1843. In 1852 he secondly married Henrietta, widow of John Ward and daughter of Sir John Kaye. His children were Capt. John Francis (b.1820), Capt. Charles Francis (b.1830), Sophia Mary (b.1832), George Gilbert (b.1834), Claud William (b.1836), Georgina Katherine Grisell Bille (b.1840), Gilbert Henry John of the Royal Navy (b.1842) and Bethia Russell (b.1843). It seems that all of them died without surviving children.

Theresa Janet nee Boswell (d.1836) eldest daughter of Sir Alexander Boswell of Auchincleek, who had the distinction of being the last man killed in a duel in Scotland. Her grandfather was James Boswell, biographer of lexicographer Samuel Johnson. In 1826 she married Sir William, 7th Baronet of Stobs. She had 8 children and died in childbirth. She was buried in the family vault in Cavers Kirk and her hatchment is preserved there. Thomas (d.1671) younger son of Sir Gilbert of Stobs, with his 2nd wife, Magdelin Nicolson. It is said that his mother convinced his father to settle lands on his 2nd family. So proceedings were started to transfer Wolfelee and Stonedge to him, even although he was still just a boy; hence he is referred to as being ‘of Wolfelee’. However, he died before the charter was obtained in 1671, and so the lands went instead to his brother Gilbert, who was served as his heir in 1671. William of Stobs (d.1654) eldest son of ‘Gibbie wi the Golden Garties’. He was probably the first member of his family to spell his name ‘Eliott’ rather than ‘Ellot’ (as recorded in a letter of 1641). He was a strong supporter of the Covenant. He was a Commissioner to Parliament for Roxburghshire in 1641 (in place of Sir William Douglas of Cavers, who was absent in England), this being the Second Parliament of Charles I. In 1642 he was named to a commission to try a large number of Borderers who had been declared fugitives. Also in 1642 he had a charter of Borthwickshiel. He was also recorded as Convener of the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1643. In 1643 his lands in Castleton Parish were valued at £160, those in Cavers Parish at more than £3400, Kirkton about £1200, Wilton at £260 and Holbkirk at £80. Also in 1643 his mother Margaret Scott was recorded as liferenter of lands in Kirkton valued at about £670. In 1643, 1644, 1646 and 1648 he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire and for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1649. It appears that he switched from supporting Cromwell to supporting the King. In 1645 he was served heir to his father in the lands of ‘Hangansyde’ and Baxtonlees and he had a charter for Town o’ Rule in 1649. In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, Dunfries and Annandale. In 1649 he wrote a description of Selkirkshire with Walter Scott of Arkleton. In 1650 he was named as one of the ‘tutors’ for the children of Francis Earl of Buccleuch in his will and also served as one of the ‘tutors testators’ for the will of Francis. He added Hallrule (it is said, through some underhand means) to the family possessions, adjoining the estate of ‘Toon-o-Rule’. He bought Wolfelee (i.e. Wolfelee) from Lord Cranstoun in 1651. In 1621 he married Elisabeth, daughter of Sir James Douglas of Cavers (and she appears to have been a supporter of the Covenant, like the rest of her family). Their children were: Sir Gilbert, 1st Baronet; Archibald of Craugend and Deanfoot (dead by 1683); Gavin, who married Barbara Creighton and Jean Nicolson; William, probably of Grange, who had no male heir (and is sometimes confused with the Provost of Peebles who was son of Gavin Elliot of Brugh); Margaret, who married William Bennet, minister of Ancrum, and secondly James Scott of Bonnington (in Lothian); Richard of Fulahill; John, who witnessed a charter in 1657; Anna, who married John Maxwell of Cowhill in 1641; Marie, who married John Young of Gulyhill; Isobel, who married Francis Scott of Arkleton in 1664; and Elspeth, who is mentioned in 1658 when her mother assigned a bond to her. It is said that he was concerned about having his lands confiscated by his mortal enemies Lord Balmerino and Lord Colvin, this eventually leading to him hanging himself. His last testament is in the National Archives.

William of Grange (17th C.) probably 4th son of William of Stobs. He witnessed a charter in 1659. In 1678 he was recorded as owner of part of Grange in Ancrum Parish, valued at about £350. In the 1680s and early 1690s he was one of the ‘curators’ for Gilbert Eliott of Stanedge during his minority. He was a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1685. He appears to have had no surviving male heir, since a pedigree of about 1704 states that the Eliott of Grange line was now extinct. Note that he is sometimes confused with the Provost of Peebles who was son of Gavin Elliot of Brugh. Sir William of Stobs (d.1699) 2nd Baronet and Chief of the Eliotts, son of Sir Gilbert (by his first wife, Isabella Cranston). He was the 2nd but oldest surviving son and was served heir to his father in 1692. In 1672 he was appointed one of the Justiciars for the Borders (for apprehending mosstroopers), along with his father and others. In 1676 he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for William Laing. Also in 1676 he was one of the men charged with seizing 5 women who were accused of attacking the minister of Abbotrule. In 1677 he inherited the Barony of Winnington and was served heir to his father in the lands of Stobs in 1692 (which, for some reason, was probably several years after his father’s death). His estate included Stobs itself, as well as several lands in Cavers Parish. In 1678 he and his brother Gilbert paid the land tax on £14642 in Hobkirk Parish. He also paid for Stobs, Langside, Penchris, Stanishope, Singley, Harwoodburn and Williamrig, valued at £1633, for half of Lynniecleuch in Cavers Parish, valued at £500, as well as £1846 13s 4d in Kirkton Parish (for Winnington, Winningtonhall, Winnington Mill, Winnington Rig, Horselee, Turn, Smithfieldhaugh, Acreknowe, Hunthill, Abbott’s Acre, Kirkwood, Dodburn, Newton, Whitehillbrae and Barnes). In 1684 he was entered as a Burgess and Guild brother of Edinburgh in right of his father-in-law Charles Murray of Haddon; he eventually took complete possession of the Haddon estate (near Kelso). He was appointed one of the tutors of the children of Sir William Douglas of Cavers. In 1678 he was a Commissioner for Roxburghshire for raising money for the King, and again in 1685. In 1684 he was one of the men appointed as a commissioner in Roxburghshire for prosecuting Covenanters. About 1685 he was made Lieutenant in a troop raised by the Earl of Lothian for the purpose of rounding up local Covenanters. In 1685 he was in Hawick to oversee 9 local farmers swearing against the Covenanters by repeating ‘the test’. In 1689 he was appointed one of the 2 Parliamentary Commissioners (i.e. M.P.s.) for Roxburghshire. However, he was replaced in 1693 for not taking the oath of allegiance. He was also on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1690. In 1690 he was listed among the heritors of the Regality of Melrose. He witnessed a disposition for Gilbert Elliott of Stonedge and Henry Elliot of Harwood in 1694. Also in 1694 he was served heir to his deceased sister Janet. He married Elizabeth Scott of Langshaw (d.1680, daughter of John Scott, 1st Baronet of Auncrum); he had no children with his first wife and secondly married Margaret, daughter and heiress of Charles Murray of Haddon. His 2nd wife survived him until 1739 and they had 8 children, including: Gilbert (d.1764), who succeeded his father; William, who became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1700: Margaret (perhaps the Margaret born in 1682 in Jedburgh Parish), who married John Paterson of Granton, later Baronet of Eccles; Magdalene, who married Alexander Scott of Synton; Janet, who married Capt. Alexander Corbet; Elizabeth, who married William Scott of Bonnington and possibly John Forrest of Edinburgh; Christian (d.1775), who married Rev. Thomas Blair of Edinburgh; and possibly John, who was in the Army. His testament is recorded in 1684. William (b.1670s) 2nd (perhaps originally 3rd) son of Sir Gilbert of Stobs with his 2nd wife Magdelen Nicolson. He was apprenticed as a merchant to Patrick Johnstone in Edinburgh in 1691. He was a merchant in Edinburgh and then London. He was left half of his sister Janet’s share of the money left to his sister Janet when she died before 1694. He is said to have married a daughter of Sir G. Hume, Baronet (possibly Sir Gustavus Hume of Hume Castle, Ireland). Their children were: Jean, who married Mr. Ker of Littledean (perhaps Walter); Helen, who married Captain Wilkinson; Gilbert, Customs Officer at Gravesend and chief clerk at the War Office; and George, Deputy Searcher of the Customs at Gravesend, who married Mary Fortrey of Woomble Hall. He was probably the brother of Gilbert of Stanedge who became an apprentice merchant in Edinburgh in 1691 and who witnessed a bond of 1694. In 1694 he was also served ‘retour’ to the provision given to his deceased sister Janet by his father. William (17th/18th C.) 2nd son of Sir William of Stobs and Margaret Murray. In 1700 he was apprenticed to merchant John Hepburn. William (b.1701) 3rd son of the 1st Gilbert of Stonedge and Margaret Scott. He witnessed a sasine in 1722, when he is described as ‘brother-german to Gilbert now of Stonedge’. He died unmarried. William (1706–79) son of Sir Gilbert of Stobs and Eleanor Elliot. He was born in his father’s house at Trunk’s Close in Edinburgh. He became a merchant with the East India Company and died in London, unmarried. He had property in East Florida and on the Island of Barbados. He left a large amount of money to several family members, appointing his brother Lt.-Gen. George Augustus and nephew Capt. Francis Augustus as joint executors. His house in London was left to the Countess Dowager of Chioza. Sir William of Stobs (1767–1812) eldest son of Sir Francis, he was 6th Baronet and Chief of the Elliots. He was christened in Cavers and died at Stobs. He succeeded his father in 1791 and had the new mansion built at Stobs around 1793, to plans started by his father. The construction apparently strained his resources to the limits, already stretched by his father. This meant he had to re-lease some of his farms for a lump sum, rather than yearly rent. It is said that he also borrowed from Gideon Pott of Penchrise (his son breaking the deal he made with Pott). He also managed to make money by being allowed by the Court to sell off some of his land, but buying it himself and reselling (Hallrule, Hallrule Mill and Town-o-Rule) at a much higher price. This broke the entail made on the estate in 1725, giving his son legal problems later. In the 1790s he complained to the county Justices about the circuitous route taken by local mail and the cost according to actual distance travelled, thus helping introduce the local mail coaches. He paid tax for having 3 male servants in 1792, 4 in 1793 and 3 in 1794 and 1797. He was listed on the Horse Tax Rolls in the period 1792–97, owning up to 6 carriage horses and 3 farm horses. He was also taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in the same year. He was additionally taxed for owning a carriage in the period 1792–95. He served as President of the Heritors of Hobkirk Parish. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. He is listed in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls as owner of Billerwell, Hawthornside and the west part of Outer Hallrule; he was also listed as owner of several farms in Kirkton Parish.

In the early 19th century he sold 6 enclosures of Inner Hallrule to John Wilson. In 1790 he married Mary, youngest daughter of John Russell of Roseburn, Clerk to the Signet; she died in 1850. They had 10 children (all but the first 2 baptised in Cavers Parish): Bethia Mary (b.1791), who died unmarried; Sir William Francis (b.1792), who succeeded; John (1793–1838), who became a Major in the 4th Dragoons and died unmarried; Gilbert (1796–1871), who eventually emigrated to Australia; Sir Daniel (1798–1872) of the Madras Civil Service, who married Georgina, daughter of Gen. George Russell; George Augustus (b.1799), who became an Admiral; Charles (b.1800), who was killed in action at 19; Russell (b.1802), who became an Admiral and married Bethia, daughter of Sir William Russell; Alexander (1805–99), naval storekeeper at Devonport; and Euphemia Elizabeth Anne (1809–99), who married Rev. David Bagot. He died suddenly at Stobs aged 44. Sir William Francis of Stobs and Wells (1792–1864), son of Sir William, he was 7th Baronet and Chief of the Elliots. He was christened at Cavers in 1793. He was gazetted to the Queen’s Bays at the age of 16 and left when his father died, with the rank of Lieutenant. It is said that during this time he once lost money to the Prince of Wales at cards. He succeeded on the death of his father in 1812, before he had reached majority, and was faced with an estate that was heavily in debt. Bored with rural life he joined the Roxburgh troop of Yeomanry Cavalry as a Lieutenant, later becoming Captain. In 1817 he was appointed a Deputy-Lieutenant for Roxburghshire. His financial situation improved when he gained the estate of Wells in 1818 on the death of a cousin (William Elliot, M.P.), although there was further litigation involved there for many years. He embarked upon a costly lawsuit over his father’s sale of Hallrule, which lasted almost 20 years. His finances were in such dire straits that in 1828 he had to put them in the care of trustees. He also eventually gained back the estate of Haddon, near Kelso. He purchased East Fodderlee, and had plans for encouraging the railway to pass through his property. He was listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819. He subscribed to 6 copies of Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He stood as a Liberal candidate in the 1831 Roxburghshire election, losing to Francis Scott of Harden, but as the populist candidate he was still being carried around the streets of Jedburgh shoulder-high. It was said that on election day a procession set out from Hawick at 5 a.m., roused by the drums and fifes and set out for Jedburgh, picking up his carriage at Spittal, and numbering about 2,000 when they reached the county town. He took part in the Reform Bill celebrations in Hawick in 1832. He was also made an Honorary Burgess in 1825. He served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. During a trip to the north he was made a Free Burgess and Guild Brother of Wick, Banff and Elgin. He was said to have taken a keen interest in the baa game in Bonchester. He was listed among the local gentry in Pigot’s 1837 directory, and was a heritor in Kirkton Parish. Following his wife’s death he sent the children to live with their grandmother, the Dowager Lady Boswell, while he lived at Mortlake near London. However, he extended Wells House around 1862, and spent his last few summers there, as well as this being the residence of his mother. In 1826 he married Theresa Janet, eldest daughter of Sir Alexander Boswell of Auchinleck, and she died in 1836 during childbirth (her hatchment is in Cavers Kirk). His wife’s father had the distinction of being the last man killed in a duel in Scotland, and her grandfather was James Boswell, biographer of Johnson. They had 8 children: Eleanor Jane Ann Augusta (b.1825), who died in infancy; Sir William Francis Augustus (b.1827), who succeeded; Grace Theresa Emmeline (1828–52), who died unmarried; Alexander Boswell (b.1830), who married Katherine Craigie and Annabella Carmichael, and whose son Arthur Boswell succeeded to Stobs; Charles James John (1832–49), who died aged 16; Jessie Blanche Adelaide (d.1898), who married Capt. James Wood, and died at Hyde Park; George Augustus Leslie (1833–54), who married Mary Ratray; and Frances Elizabeth (d.1869), who married Edmund Forrest. He was said to be furious at his eldest son marrying without his consent, and effectively dispossessed him, assigning as trustees for Wells and Haddon his brothers Daniel and Alexander, as well as his brother-in-law Gen. Vassal, Allan Eliott-Lockhart of Borthwickbrae and his daughter Blanche. He died in London and was buried in the family vault in Cavers Old Kirk. On the day of his funeral a large beech tree fell across the road near the House, making it hard for the carriages to approach. The procession was well attended when it neared the old church. His funeral ‘hatchment’ is in the Museum. Sir William Francis Augustus Boswell of Stobs (1827–1910), 8th Baronet and Chief of the Eliots, eldest son of Sir William Francis, he was born at Stobs. At the age of 9 his mother Theresa Boswell died and he (along with his other siblings) was put into the care of his grandmother, Lady Boswell, at Ochiltree. He served for many years in the 93rd Highlanders, going with the regiment to Canada and reaching the rank of Lieutenant before he left at the age of 26. In Canada he married without the knowledge of his father, and this caused him to be dispossessed of much of his inheritance. He succeeded to the estates at the age of 37, but with much of it under the control of his sister Blanche and the other trustees appointed by his father. In fact he had a protracted legal battle with his sister over the rent on Wells (this was said to be due to her unhappiness at how quickly he had remarried after the death of his first wife, who was her own husband’s sister). He lived much of his life at Stobs, and also lived at Wells in the late 1800s, but had to sell off that estate in 1896 to clear debts on it. He had the family arms regranted to him in 1869. He was a J.P. for Roxburghshire, as well as Deputy-Lieutenant for the county. He became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1869.

He was known as a keen sportsman, being a good shot and fine horseman, and was elected Master of Foxhounds. He was the (honorary) President of Hawick Curling Club. He served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire from before his father’s death. In about 1874 he was recorded as owner of Hallrule, as well as Billerwell, Hawthornside and the Stobs estate. He also owned a house in Crieff (Rubserlaw House), where his first wife died in 1878. Largely due to falling rents he was forced to sell off his lands, with Stobs itself going to the Military in 1903. He then moved to Crieff. In 1846 he firstly married Charlotte Maria, daughter of Robert Wood of Quebec, and she died in 1878 (although not an heiress, she was great-granddaughter of the Duke of Kent). In 1879 he secondly married Hannah Grizel, daughter of H.T. Birkett; she was the (rich) widow of Henry Kelsall. He only had one child, Theresa, who was brain-damaged from birth; it is said that this was owing to a fall down a flight of stairs that his wife had when seeing him carried in from a hunting trip on a gate and thinking the worst. He died at Crieff and was succeeded by his nephew Sir Arthur (note this spelling, and the common local pronunciation).

Eliott-Lockhart

the Eliots

(a) normal spelling of the Stobs branch of the family, adopted formally after 1723 in preference to the previous form ‘Eliot’, probably to distinguish the leading branch of the clan from the others (see the Eliots).

Elizabeth

(1533–1603) last of the Tudors, was known in Scotland for her treatment of her cousin Queen Mary and for the involvement of England in Scottish political and religious affairs during her reign. There was a period of greater unrest on the Borders immediately after her death. Elizabeth I

Elizabeth I

Elizabeth Alexandra Mary Windsor (1926–) reigning monarch, daughter of George VI. She visited Hawick, while still Princess in October 1945, inspecting troops at the cricket field and attending a rally of women’s organisations in the Pavilion Theatre. She also visited Hawick with her family in 1947. She came back as Queen in 1962, and returned to Hawick in her Silver Jubilee year, 1977, visiting the Katharine Elliot Centre amongst other places. And in her golden jubilee year, 2002, she bussed the Hawick Flag at a ceremony in Melrose.
ell (el) n., arch. a Scots length, corresponding to about 37 inches, used to refer to lengths of cloth etc., or 45 inches for yarn, using the English convention – ‘... for art and part of theft and concealment ... six ells of melley, twenty-four ells of white cloth ...’ [RBA1537], ‘...imprimis, for three ells of silk at 44s. per ells, £6 12 0’ [BR1707], ‘...They fand their tree three ells o’er laigh – They fand their stick baith short and sma’. With my fading, &c.’ [CPM], ‘...13s 4d in money, six quarters of wool, a per of shoon, an ell of linnen, and a mad’ [DMW], ‘...An’ mony an ell birls roond the beam, Afore the whistle blaws’ [IJ] (see also five ell o wund and elin).

Ellabank (e-la-bawngk) n. former house adjacent to St. George’s Kirk, which, along with its grounds was purchased by the church in 1913. The new church was built partly on this land, and part of the old house is now used as a kitchen for the church halls. There were Scotts living there in the 1880s and Bonsors in the early part of the 20th century.

Ellen Riddle’s (e-lin-ri-dulz) n. former confectioners at 24 High Street, selling home made sweets and chocolates from the mid-19th century until the mid-20th. This may also have been the same premises known as ‘Miss Riddle’s’ where several local societies held their meetings in the latter part of the 19th century – ‘Oo went ti Paisley’s for oor tools, Jess McVeetie’s for rock books, Lynch’s hed a’ kinds o’ toys, Ellen Riddle hed her pies ...’ [IWL].

Ellen’s Pool (e-linz-pool) n. name for a pool in the Liddel Water, near where the mill lade from Mangerton Mill used to come out (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

eller (e-lur) n., arch. the elder tree, Sambucus nigra (note that the alder tree is also written ‘ellerree’).

eller ee (e-lur-ee) n., poet. enchanted eye, preternatural insight, a person with such ability – ‘Confoondit by philosophy, I gove’t at him, he glowert at me, And, Ah, he had an eller ee!’ [DH] (also written ‘ellie’).

Ellice (el-is) n. Edward (1781–1863) Liberal M.P. for Coventry, known as a reformer, he was also Secretary of War and Director of the Hudson’s Bay Company. His sister Helena Anne married Charles Chisholme of Chisholme. During a visit to Chisholme in 1823 he was made an Honorary Burgess. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825.
was also listed in 1569 among Borderers held in Blackness Castle. He was ‘Ade Elliot callit the Cowdais’ and was pledge for ‘Wilkokis Hob’ and Gavin’s Jock of Ramsieggill. He is also recorded as ‘Adie Elliot, called Cawdais’ in 1578/9 among 22 Border Lairds who did not appear before the Privy Council when summoned. He was ‘callit Cowdais’ there, when it was reported that he had previously been a joint surety for John of Heuchhouse and Hobbie, son of Elder Will. He was also listed as ‘Adie Elliott, called Cawdes’, in 1581 when he was among a large group denounced as rebels for failing to present men to answer their rieving crimes. In 1583 he was recorded as ‘Codius’ in a letter from Thomas Musgrave to Queen Elizabeth’s Chancellor, where he is listed among the Elliots of Burnhead. He is ‘Ade Cowdais’ when recorded along with ‘Gawins Jok’ under the heading ‘Burnhead’ in Monipennie’s c.1594 list of Border chiefs. The other man was probably an Elliot, and the lands of Burnhead were probably those in Liddesdale. It is possible that ‘Cowdais’ is ‘Cowdhouse’, i.e. ‘Coldhouse’ (although not the one in Wilton). It is unclear what his nickname means, or even how it should be spelled. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Adams. Adam (16th C.) recorded as ‘Eddie Elliot son to Davie the Carling’ among Borderers complained about for a raid on Woodburn in England in 1589. He is also recorded in 1590 as ‘Edie Elliott sonne to Davye Calinge’ when he was part of a group of Elliots who were accused of a raid by Thomas Hall of ‘Gersomfeeld’ and the tenants of ‘ Dortres’. In 1590 he is recorded as ‘Edward Elliot son to Davye’ (but this could be an English error assuming that ‘Adie’ was short for ‘Edward’) when accused along with Robert Armstrong ‘the Tailor’ of stealing horses from John Heron of Chipchase. Adam (16th C.) son of Davie of Dinlees, who was accused in 1590 of being in a group who were accused by William ‘Loren’ of stealing from ‘Trewhit’ and taking Robert Storie prisoner. The other men named were all Armstrongs, ‘Robin the Tailor’, Ringan of Tweeden, Matthew and ‘Alexander’s Airchie’. It is possible he is the same man as the son of Davie the Carlin. Adam of Philhope (17th C.) recorded as being of ‘Filip’ (presumably Philhope) in 1643, when he became an Honorary Burgess of Selkirk, along with a number of Scotts. In 1649 he was on the Committee of War for Selkirkshire. He may have been succeeded by his son Andrew. It is unclear how he was related to the contemporary Archibald Elliot of Philhope. Adam of Meikledale (1598/9–1682) son of the 4th son of William of Falnash (whose name is unknown), who was probably of Unthank. He was recorded as tenant at Gorrenberry in 1656, when he witnessed a document relating to Harwood and was again so recorded in 1662. He was fined £1800 for backing wrong side in the Civil War. He was also listed as indweller at Gorrenberry in 1657 when he purchased the lands of Isgill, Midgehow and Newbigging for his eldest son John, reserving the liferent for himself. He was described as ‘in Gorrinberrie’ about 1665, when he was listed (along with many other Elliots) as a creditor for William Elliot of Binks for the rent of ‘Wolfebeilder’ (and this was ‘in Woolfholder’ in 1662). He also was a witness to the last testament of William Elliot of Harwood and Binks in 1662. In 1669 received a charter of the lands of Meikledale, held in fee for his son Andrew. He is additionally said to have acquired Arkleton, but this may have been his son. He also held Burngrains and Carrot Rigs (i.e. Carewoodrig). He paid tax on £900 of land for Meikledale in 1671. He was grantee on a bond in 1673. He is said to have married a daughter of Glendinning of that Ilk, and secondly married Janet, daughter of John Scott of Rennaldburn. His children were: John of Thorleshope (b.1621); Walter of Arkleton (b.1634); Andrew of Meikledale; William of Meikledale; and one daughter, said to have received a dowry of 8,000 merks. He was known as a very successful as a farmer, he left separate lands to 3 of his sons; Meikledale went to Andrew, eldest son from his 2nd marriage, but afterwards was inherited by William. He is buried in the Overkirk churchyard near Unthank, the stone being inscribed with the date of his death and also having an armorial carving of a man holding a tree in one hand (for Armstrong), with a shield in the other. He could be the basis for the tradition that the last Elliot of Gorrenberry, Adam, whose family for generations had known a friendly fairy called ‘the Cowie’, was said to have frozen to death by Hermitage Chapel after falling off his horse when fording the river, with the fairy giving loud lamentations at Gorrenberry, for the last time. Adam (17th C.) tenant in Girnwood. The will of his wife, Bessie Murray, is recorded in 1688. Adam of Lymiecleuch (17th/18th C.) probably 2nd son of William of Unthank. He received a lease of Mosspecleuch in 1643. Along with his father and Simon of the Binks and Swinside, he purchased Lymiecleuch in 1670, from William Elliott, younger of Stobs. He had a charter for his share of Lymiecleuch in 1673, but lost everything in 1687. Along with his 2 brothers, they were guarantors for someone in 1681 (probably a tenant) who failed to appear and so they had to pay the 5000 merks fine. They could only do so by seeking an advance on Lymiecleuch from Sir William Elliott of Stobs, but were unable to repay the loan. Eventually, in 1687, Lymiecleuch was settled on John Elliott, brother of the Laird of Stobs. He was still called ‘of Lymiecleuch’ when involved in legal proceedings with Anna, Duches of Buccleuch, in the period 1698–1703. He is probably the Adam ‘in Lymiecleuch’ who witnessed a baptism for ‘Wester’ James Grieve in Commonside in 1705. His children were: John in Dinlees (1650–1728), who married Margaret Scott of Falnash; and Adam in Dykeraw. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, living at Whitchesters in 1704. He married Margaret Halliday. Their children included: Thomas (b.1689); and Isobel (b.1704). The witnesses in 1689 were Thomas Halliday (presumably related to his wife) and John Stewart and in 1704 were Thomas Falside and ‘student’ John Thorbrand. Adam of Beirhope (17th/18th C.) 2nd son of Simon of the Binks and Swinside. In 1704 he purchased Beirhope in Hownams Parish, which he had partly owned before that. In 1702 he married Isabelle Ainslie in Jedburgh and their children were: Simon (b.1703), mentioned in his grandfather’s entail of 1714; Robert (b.1705); William (b.1707); Thomas (b.1711); Elspeth (b.1713); and John (b.1714). Adam of Teindside (17th/18th C.) eldest son of Walter of Arkleton. He was also recorded being ‘of Tyndside’, but the lands were clearly Teindside in upper Teviotdale. He was referred to as ‘younger of Arkleton’ when he and his cousin Walter Elliot gave a bond of 2,000 merks to Alexander Orrock, which formed part of the Orrock Bequest for Hawick Grammar School. This presumably means he was a heritor of Hawick Parish. He was ‘of Arkleton’ in 1698 when he witnessed baptisms in Hawick for John Scott in Hawick and for Gideon Scott of Falnash, and in 1700 for smith John Dryden and for James Laidlaw in Harwood. He was also ‘of Arkleton’ in 1700 when he witnessed a baptism for James Grieve in Teindside. He witnessed further baptisms in Hawick in 1702 (when listed as ‘of Arkleton’ and along with his servant John Bell) for William Davidson in Holt, in 1706 for Hawick apothecary Walter Scott and in 1707 and 1708 for James Stevenson in Harwood. In 1708 Stevenson was described as ‘(in Harwood) tenant to arkleton’, making it clear that he was owner of Harwood at that time, as well as Teindside. Also in 1708 his ‘servitor’ John Laidlaw had a child baptised in Hawick, with him as a witness; he is described there as ‘of Arclleton In Harwood’. In 1709 he witnessed a baptism for James Grieve, tenant in Teindside. He also owned the land on which the Grammar School would be built from 1713, selling it to James Rodger of Cavers in 1722 (although whether this is a coincidence or connected with the Orrock Bequest is unclear). He is said to have fallen out with his father over wasting the price of a drove of cattle his father had given him to sell in England, and also because he brought back an English woman for a wife. He was left only £200 by his father, but he did not receive the money until 1714, following an extended legal battle. Arkleton went to his younger brother William, after he and his brother Arthur of Harwood were disinherited by their father. In 1700 in Hawick he married Ann Drury (with both being described as parishioners). 1700) and had 3 children who were christened in Hawick: Katherine (b.1701), who married Robert of Midlem Mill; Walter (1705–bef. 1721); and Anne (b.1707). He may also have been father of Isobell (b.1704) and Thomas (b.1717), also baptised in Hawick. In the 1707 baptism he is recorded as ‘of Arkleton at Harwood-on-Teviot’ and the witnesses were Gideon Scott of Falnash and William of Arkleton (his brother). Adam in Dykeraw (17th/18th C.) younger son of Adam, who was associated with Mosepiece and Lymiecleuch. His children included: Robert in Know, who married Helen Grieve; John in Harden; Adam in Tweedsdie, who married Isobel Glendinning; and William in Millburnholm. Adam (18th C.) tenant in Dykeraw. According to a family history he was younger son of William of Penchrise and Janet, daughter of John Elliot of Thorlieshope. However, this might be confusion with Adam in Dykeraw son of Adam of Lymiecleuch. Adam of Arkleton (b.1702) eldest son of William and Anne Ainslie, he was baptised in Ewes Parish. In 1722 he was confirmed in his father’s testament as his oldest son. In 1725 he was forced by his father’s cousin William of Thorlieshope to sell Meikledale in order to pay debts. In 1744 he disposed of Arkleton to his eldest son William, reserving liferent for himself and 600 merks a year for his wife. In 1733 he married Christina, daughter of William Elliot of Thorlieshope. Their children were: Arthur (1734–42); William (1735–91), physician in Jedburgh; Anne (1736–42); Margaret (b.1737); Robert (1738–40);
Walter (b.1740), died young; John (b.1742); and Christian (b.1744). Most of the family were baptised and buried at Ewes. He may have died in about 1744, when his son William of Arkleton had tutors appointed. Adam (17th/18th C.) descended from the Elliots of Thorlieshope (although the details seem unclear). He married a daughter of Christopher Irving, ‘Kick-ma-lerrie’. His children were: Christopher, who became a smuggler; George, described as ‘a great pugilist’; and several daughters. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick. He is probably the merchant in Hawick who witnessed baptisms in 1718 (along with tailor James ‘Bowwston’) for candlemaker George Turnbull, in 1720 for merchant John Little, and in 1723 for wright Richard Turnbull. He married Margaret Bowston in Ashkirk Parish in 1713. Their children included: William (b.1714); Thomas (b.1717); Isobell (b.1719); Sarah (b.1721); Sarah (again, b.1722); and Elizabeth (b.1723). Adam (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Alison Hislop in Wilton in 1723. Adam (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Isobel Hart in Wilton in 1729. Adam (1715/6–60) son of William of Meikledale. He died at Hartsdie and is buried at Castleton Cemetery. He is likely to be related to the Adam who married Mary Pott, but these families seem confused. Adam (18th C.) son of Walter in Brugh and descended from the Elliots of Falnash. He was tenant in Hartsdie, and was surely related to the earlier Adam, who died there in 1760. He married Mary Pott. Their son Walter (b.1762) was born in Castleton Parish and was probably the farmer and cooper at Dinlabyre. Helen, born to Adam and Mary Pott in Castleton in 1772, may also have been their child. Adam (18th C.) son of Adam in Dykeraw. According to a family pedigree he was ‘in Tweedside’, but this could have meant Tweedenside. He married Isobel Glendinning and had a daughter Helen, who married James Elliot. Adam (18th C.) younger son of Henry of Lodgell. He was tenant in Flatt. He married Elisabeth, daughter of Henry in Sorbitrees and Christian Scott of Falnash. Their children included Christian (b.1761); Jean (b.1762); and Henry in Canobie, who married Helen Little. Adam (18th/19th C.) farmer at Kirndean in Liddesdale, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. It is unclear how he is related to other contemporary Elliots, or other Elliots connected with Kirndean. Adam (d.1815) shoemaker in Hawick. He was the only known son of Robert and Elizabeth Scott from Doorpool, and perhaps grandson of Walter in Brugh. His wife Peggy Scott died in 1797; theirs is probably the 1760 marriage of Adam with Margaret Scott. Their children included: Robert (1761–1810); Walter (b.1766); James in Goldielands (b.1769), schoolmaster at Wilton; and Helen (b.1773), whose baptism was witnessed by John Elliot, tanner. He is probably the shoemaker Adam who witnessed the birth of William Elliot, son of Wilton schoolmaster James, in 1801; this was presumably his grandson. His death in Hawick is recorded in 1815, when he is clearly listed as father of James in Goldielands. Adam (1740–1804) younger son of William, 1st Laird of Wolfelee. He was a merchant in Danzig. He married Rose Leonard and they had a daughter Charlotte, who inherited the estate of Pinnaclehill from her uncle Robert. He died on the Isle of Wight. Adam (18th/19th C.) said to be a printer in Hawick. His wife was Margaret Wilson and they had a son Adam born in Hawick in 1812. Adam (18th/19th C.) member of Hawick Curling Club in 1812. He is probably the same as one of the contemporary Adams. Adam (1765–1852) son of shepherd Ninian. He was a carter in Newcastleton. He married Margaret Little (1763–1851). Their children included: Ninian (1786–1800); Margaret (1795–1816); Esther (b.1797), who married Robert of Powis; and Adam (b.1806), mason. Adam (1774–94) oldest son of William of Arkleton. He was a Lieutenant in the 72nd Regiment of Foot and was said to be present at the taking of San Domingo (presumably modern Haiti). He died of wounds in the West Indies and was unmarried. Adam of Arkleton see Adam Scott-Elliot. Adam (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He was probably son of James and Helen Elliot. He married Margaret Oliver and lived at ‘Burntshields’ (although it is unclear where this is). Their children included: Lizzy (b.1800); James (b.1801); Daniel (b.1803); Helen (b.1805); Isabella (b.1808); Jean (b.1811); Margaret (1813–16); and Jane (1813–36). Dr. Adam (b.1797) eldest son of James of Goldielands, former schoolmaster of Wilton. He was born in Wilton Parish and became a surgeon with the East India Company. He is probably the Adam who was a medical student at Edinburgh University 1813–18, receiving an M.D. in 1819. He was recorded at Goldielands in the 1837 electoral roll, and was listed there on the 1841 census. He was described as ‘in Goldielands’ in about 1850 when he was one of the men charged with arranging the ‘Coutard Fund’ for the poor in Hobkirk Parish, bequeathed by John and William Dalgleish. In 1851 he was at Goldielands (listed as a former maritime surgeon with the H.E.I.C.), living with his sister Helen, cousin William, a shepherd and 3 servants. He was ‘Dr. Elliott, Goldielands’ when listed as an informant to the Ordnance Survey Name Books in about 1859. In 1861 he was listed as ‘Graduate of the University of Edinburgh, Not practising recevng. compensation annually as Surgeon in the Ex Maritime Service of the Hon. E.I. Company., Farmer of 200 acres Employing 5 men’. He was still at Goldielands in 1868. He donated many items to the Museum in the 1860s, and was consequently made an honorary member of the Archaeological Society. Adam (b.c.1800) listed as a tailor in Newcastleton in 1841. He was then at about 28 Langholm Street, with a younger tailor, Henry, as well as Jean (perhaps his siblings) and young baker John. Probably the same Adam is still recorded as a tailor in Newcastleton in the 1860s. Adam (1806–89) son of Newcastleton carter Adam. He was a mason in Newcastleton on the 1841 and 1851 census and listed as a ‘Feuar’ on South Hermitage Street in 1861. He married Elizabeth Murray (1818–1901). He was blind by the 1881 census. Adam Scott (1807/8–99) born in Hawick Parish, son of William and Margaret Scott. Along with his parents and siblings he emigrated to Canada in 1816. He worked in farming and milling and built a saw and grist mill in Sullivan township. In 1858 he moved to Bruce County, Ontario, where he is credited as the founder of the settlement of Chesley. He married Janet Halliday and had a family of 10 children. Adam (1827–80) son of Robert in Powisholm, Castleton Parish. In 1851 he was living in Wilton Kirkstyle and working as a journeyman baker. He later was a bread and biscuit baker in Dumfries. He married Euphemia Oliver (b.1830) in Wilton in 1851. Their children included: Mary (b.1854), who probably died young; Esther (b.1856); Mary Oliver (b.1863); Euphemia Oliver (b.1866); and Margaret Law (b.1871). Adam (19th C.) resident of Slitrig Crescent. In 1861 he donated a heron to the Museum. Adam of Caverton (d.c.1900) brother of Col. William of Teviot Lodge and James of Mosstower. In 1901 his extensive natural history collection was presented to the Hawick Museum. This included mounted butterflies and moths, as well as stuffed mammals and birds. Adam (d.1938) said to be the last of the hand-frame knitters in Hawick when he died. Agnes (17th C.) recorded as ‘in Brighous’ in 1662 among people who owed money to the decease William Elliot of Harwood. Then she was ‘in Brighouce’, i.e. tenant farmer in the Liddel valley in 1665 in a record relating to William Elliot of Binks. Agnes (17th C.) recorded in the Town Book in June 1698, when she was said to be due £6 Scots. The reason is not given, but it was along with money due to the Burgh Officer for his Common Riding coat, and so it may be that this was a charge for providing refreshments or similar at the Common Riding that year. Agnes ‘Little Auld Nany’ (d.1776) resident of Hawick whose death is recorded. Alexander (15th C.) listed among a large number of Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. Alexander (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1533 as husband to Isabel Murray. His wife assigned her lands in Kershop (in Ettrick Forest) to her ‘brother german’ Michael Scott (suggesting that she was a Scott, who first married a Murray, probably James). In 1539 his wife was ‘Esebell Scott’ when she discharged a loan from Michael Scott. Perhaps the same Alexander ‘Elwald’ in Borthwick was recorded in 1539 when accused (in the Selkirk Protocol Books) of stealing a large number of sheep belonging to the Elliots in Cranston. Alexander ‘Sandy’ (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Alexander Elwald’ in 1535 when his son William was one of a large group of Armstrongs and others who were denounced as rebels for a raid on Craik. Alexander (16th C.) witness in 1550 to a lease granted by the curators of the young James Crichton to his mother, Janet Beaton, wife of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme (where it was witnessed). Alexander (16th C.) recorded in 1563/4 along with Will in Adderstoneshie, Will ‘of the Burnmouthis’ and 2 Croziers. They were to be presented by John Gledstains of Cocklaw to answer accusations brought against them by Englishman William Selby. He was probably associated with lands owned by Gledstains of that Ilk. Alexander (16th C.) younger son of Gavin of Falnash. He is probably the Alexander ‘of Fallon’ (likely an error for ‘Fallnash’) complained about by the English for a raid of 1589. Along with many of the same men he is ‘of Fallensche’ later that same year for a raid on farms of the Laird of ‘Troghwen’ and Hedley of ‘Garret Sheills’, when they are said to have slain 2 men and taken 2 prisoners. He was listed in 1598/9 as brother of Archie of Muselee when a number of ‘brother, tenants and servants’ of William of Falnash were cited for reiving. Alexander ‘Mill’ (16th C.) resident of Priesthaugh. He was recorded in 1574 as being ‘alias Myll thair’, listed after ‘Law’s Jock’ in
Elliot

Priesthaugh, among men who had been ordered to be removed from the lands of Robert of Redheugh. It is unclear what his nickname meant or how he was related to other Elliots. Alexander (18th C.) from Southdean Parish. He married Christian Scott in 1766, announced in Southdean and Ancrum Parishes. They had children Betty (b.1766) and Jean (b.1769). Alexander Kynynmound (1754–78) 3rd son of Sir Gilbert, 3rd Baronet, and brother of Gilbert, the 1st Earl of Minto. He served with the East India Company and died (unmarried) of fever while on a mission to Nagport. Alexander (b.1809) born in Hobkirk Parish, son of John. He was a shoemaker on the High Street. He was a shoemaker journeyman living at 48 High Street on the 1841 census and 23 High Street in 1851 and 1861. He married Mary Tait (b.1806) in Cavers Parish in 1833. Their children included: Rachel (b.1836); John (b.1838); William (b.1838); David (b.1842); Elizabeth (b.1844); Margaret (b.1847); Walter (b.1849); Mary (b.1854); and Agnes (b.1857). Alexander ‘Sandy’ (19th/20th C.) shoemaker of Wilton. He had a shop on Victoria Road, which for a long time was thatched, and later became the property of John Rae. He was connected with Allars Kirk and was also well-known for having a family of 17! He could be the same as the High Street shoemaker. Alexandra Pringle ‘Zandra’ nee Hogg (1940–2014) born in Hawick, she worked in the office of Pringle’s after leaving school, but quickly became a model for the company. She married builder Ian in 1962, and after his death ran the firm of J. & R. Elliot on Commercial Road. She was elected Chair of the Community Council in 1999. She was Honorary Provost 2003–05 and was voted Citizen of the Year in 2005. She became a Scottish Borders Councillor in 2007 and was voted in as Honorary Provost again, serving until early 2011. A new bandstand was erected in her memory in the Park in 2015. Alison (16th C.) recorded in 1541 on a list of tenants and other associates of James Douglas of Cavers when he complained about his farm of Whitriggs being burned by Walter Scott of Brauxholme. Her name appears to be written ‘alisaun Ilwand’ and she was probably related to John and Margaret, who are also listed. Andrew (15th/16th C.) witness in 1497 to the sasine for the lands of Robert of Redheugh. Other witnesses were Ninian, Robert, William and John ‘Elwald’, as well as others. It is unclear how he was related to other Elliots. Andrew ‘Dand the Man’ (15th/16th C.) son of William, recorded in 1502, along with his brother “Hob the King”. Patrick Gray from Greenhead, James Elliot in ‘Quhitmere’ and Ralph Ker of Primside Loch had a respite for helping them, specifically in the theft of 180 sheep from Tweeddale and Lauderdale. Andrew (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1516 as witness to a document for George Ker prebendary of Auld Roxburgh, done at Fairnilee. Perhaps the same Andrew acted as a bailie for Margaret Haliburton and George Ker in Falkondside in 1539/40. Andrew (d.1531) recorded as ‘Elwald’ when he was hanged for theft along with Patrick ‘Dowglass’ and David ‘Blynskale’, as given in Pitcairn’s ‘Criminal Trials’. It is unclear which area this involved, or how he was related to other Elliots. Andrew (16th C.) recorded as ‘Andree Elwald’ when he and others held the lease on Braidlie on the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. It is unclear how he was related to other Elliots. Andrew (16th C.) recorded in 1544 as agent in Sekirk for Margaret Haliburton, Lady of Dirleton. He was probably the same man as (or closely related to) the Andrew who purchased a tenement in Selkirk in 1579. Andrew ‘Dand’ (d.bef. 1564) third son of Gavin, 1st Laird of Horsleyhill. He was involved in the murder of Hugh Douglas in about 1547. His father gave him the lands of Bailielee in 1551. He was dead in 1563/4 when there was a case before the Privy Council involving his brothers William and Robert, and sheep that had been stolen from his lands by the Scotts of Tushielaw. He is referred to as ‘umquhile Andro, alias Dand Elliot’ when his brother Robert in Horsleyhill appeared on his behalf and the Scotts of Tushielaw were ordered to replace the stolen sheep. Andrew ‘Dand’ (16th C.) tenant of Gavin of Elliot of Falnash in 1569. The Laird appeared in Hawick to give surety for his tenants. His name is recorded as ‘Dande Elliot’ and he may have been related to Will, Jock and Hob, other Elliots also listed as tenants. Andrew ‘Dand’ (16th C.) recorded as ‘callit of the Heuchhous’ in 1576/7 when he was convicted for theft, including stealing 80 sheep from the Laird of Cessford. He was surely related to the slightly earlier Martin of the same location and the slightly later Hob. His son John is mentioned in 1579/80. Andrew (16th C.) recorded as ‘Andro Elliot, callit the Wowaris Andro’ in 1578/9, when it was stated to the Privy Council that he was supposed to have been presented to the King and his Regent, but had not been. This was along with John ‘callit of the Dewisleis’, with sureties John Carmichael, younger of that Ilk and William Scott of Montbenger. It is unclear what his nickname meant (perhaps his father was ‘the Wooer’). Andrew (16th C.) recorded in 1579 when he purchased a tenement in Selkirk. He is also recorded in 1579/80 as Burgess of Selkirk in a dispute with another Burgess, John Watson. In 1581 he loaned money to William Hogg in Melrose, receiving an annual rent of tenements in Melrose. He was a Burgess in 1581 when he was asked for the key to Selkirk Tolbooth. Also in 1581 he loaned money to John Murray in Lindean. Andrew ‘Dandie’ (16th C.) nephew of Martin of Braidlie. He was recorded in 1580 among Elliots who raided the farms of Harwood (on Teviot), Slaidhills, Whitlaw and Hoscote; he was declared a rebel after not appearing. It is unclear who his father was, and whether he is the same as one of the contemporary Andrews. The ‘Dand Elliot of Braydley’ complained about in 1590 (about a raid in 1588) is either him or his cousin Andrew (son of Martin of Braidlie). In 1590 he was recorded as ‘Dande Elliott brother’s son to said Martinge’ on a list of Elliots (including Martin’s sons Archie and John), Croziers, Nixon’s and others accused of rieving from William Robson of ‘Allerweshe’. Andrew ‘Dand’ (16th C.) son of Clement’s Hob. He is listed in 1581 among many Elliots and Armstrongs complaining about the actions of the Scots and their followers. It is possible that he is the same man as one of the contemporary Andrews. Andrew ‘Dand’ (16th C.) son of Martin of Braidlie. He is easily confused with his cousin, who was nephew of Martin, and sometimes also just called ‘of Braidlie’. He is probably the ‘Dand of Braidley’ listed along with Clement’s Hob when ‘Archie Kene’ was held in Blackness Castle as pledge for them. He is probably the ‘Dand of Braidley’ whose son Hob is recorded in 1574 when he was to remain in ward. Martin complained to the Privy Council in 1581 of an attack on him and his brother Hob while they were riding near Headshaw. The pair were attacked by Walter Scott of Headshaw and others, with one of them losing a hand and the other also being injured. His son Hob was warded in Edinburgh in 1580. He was probably ‘Dand Elliott of Braidley, fugitive’ listed among those implicated in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh in 1580 (but his name occurs after 4 sons of Martin of Braidlie, so perhaps this was a brother or some different man). He was also listed among the Elliots of Braidlie in 1583, his name appearing as ‘Dand Elliot of the Brandley’, along with ‘John Elliot of the same’. He is probably the ‘Dand Elliott of Braydley’ recorded in 1590 when there was a complaint by Englishmen about a raid made on their livestock in 1588. He is probably the ‘Martin’s Dande’ listed in 1590 along with Will of the Steele and other Elliots and Armstrongs, accused of rieving from Englishman John Armstrong. He is also ‘Martins Dande’ when accused in 1590 along with Will of Fiddleton and others of stealing livestock and goods from the Laird of ‘Troghwen’ and Hedley of ‘the Garret sheills’. He is probably the ‘Dand of Braidley’ listed along with Clement’s Hob when ‘Archie Kene’ was held in Blackness Castle as pledge for them. He is probably the ‘Dand of Braidley’ whose son Hob is recorded in 1574 when he was to remain in ward. Andrew ‘Dand’ (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 as ‘younger, in Borthuikmanis’ when he was a fugitive from trial. Presumably his father was also Andrew from Borthwick Mains. Andrew of Blackhall (16th C.) listed among a large group of Elliots who were accused in 1590 of taking Ralph Hall and others prisoner and ransoming them. He was presumably from Blackhall in Ewesdale, since other Elliots of Ewes were also listed. Andrew ‘Dand’ (16th C.) brother of Hob of Bowholm. He was recorded in 1590 when he, his brother Robert and ‘Willie’s Archie’ of Stitchillhill were accused of stealing from Englishman Richard Thurlwall. He may be the same as one of the other Andrews. Andrew ‘Dand’, ‘Dandie’, ‘Sweet Milk’ (16th C.) recorded in 1598 when there were complaints from Sir James Sandilands that he was among a group of Armstrongs, Elliots and Scotts who stole from his lands and ‘slew and dismembered divers good subjects who rais to the fray’; in a court case in 1600, Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch’s agent denied responsibility for him and his crimes. His nickname was given as ‘Sweet Milk’. He was probably related to Hob (recorded in 1569) and Gib (recorded in 1586/7), who shared the same nickname. It seems likely he was related to the slightly later William who was also called ‘Sweet Milk’ and whose death is supposed to have been the inspiration for the song ‘Rattlin Roarin Willie’. Andrew (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘Wower’s Andro’ in 1605. His son Jock was listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick. Andrew (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘Dandie of Bowholmes’. In 1611 his brother Will was listed among Liddesdale men who failed to appear at court in Jedburgh; however, he was acquitted of the charges. Andrew of Philhope (17th C.) possibly son of Archibald. After the restoration of the monarchy in 1662 he was fined £1,000. Andrew of Meikledale (d.1682) eldest son of Adam of Meikledale with his 2nd wife, Janet Scott. He succeeded to Meikledale on the death of his father, but died himself later in the same year. The lands of Meikledale and Meikledalehope then went to his ‘brother german’ William. Andrew (17th C.) recorded as Treasurer of the Burgh of Selkirk in 1676. He gave a discharge to Thomas in Borthwickshiel (who may have been related) for some payments. Perhaps the same Andrew, maltman and Burgess of Selkirk, was deceased in 1683 when his wife Agnes Scott had a discharge with the treasurer of Selkirk. Andrew (17th C.) recorded as ‘sone to Langsyde’ in 1677 when there was a petition to grant him freedom of the Burgh of Selkirk. Andrew ‘Dand’ (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, when it contained Hassendean. In 1687 he witnessed a baptism for Adam Craig. He married ‘Beatie’ Wilson and their children included Thomas (b.1684) and Helen (b.1689). Probably the same ‘Dand’ had a daughter Elizabeth baptised in Roberton in 1681, with no mother’s name given and witnesses John Hardie and Walter Elliot (who may have been related). Andrew (17th/18th C.) recorded as schoolmaster in Selkirk in 1719 and 1720. He probably succeeded Robert Chisholme. Andrew (17th/18th C.) 3rd son of Thomas in Oakwood Mill and grandson of Thomas of Bewlie. His brothers were Thomas of Oakwood Mill and William of Wolfelee. He could be the Andrew recorded in a legal claim in Selkirk in 1736. He firstly married Agnes Shortreed and their children were: Thomas (b.1727), probably died in infancy; James (b.1728); Margaret (b.1730); Jean (b.1732); Agnes (b.1734), probably died young; and Thomas (again, b.1736). All of his children were baptised in Selkirk Parish. He secondly married Mary Simpson and their children were: Agnes (b.1746); Margaret, who married David Hagie and also Thomas Hay, both from Kirkcaldy; and Charles (1748–bef. 90), who was a Burgess of Selkirk and bookseller in Edinburgh. Andrew (1728–97) 3rd son of the 2nd Lord Minto. He was named after his grandfather, Sir Andrew Kerr of Cavers Carre. In 1746 he sailed for America, setting up as a merchant in Philadelphia. He returned to Scotland in 1761, but returned to America 2 years later when appointed Collector of Customs for New York. He was there during the American Revolution, although he fled when the city was taken, but returned as Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of New York when it was reoccupied by the British. After independence was declared he returned to Scotland and purchased Greenwells in Bowden Parish. He also had a house in George Square in Edinburgh. In America he married Eleanor McCall and later Elizabeth Plumstead (whom George Washington was enamoured with, according to family tradition) and had 9 children (including Capt. John, William and Andrew). He died at his brother John’s house at Monteviot and was buried at Minto. Andrew (18th C.) groom and house servant at Woll in 1794, when he was working for Charles Scott. Perhaps the same Andrew was recorded as a servant to Rev. Thomas Sharp when he witnessed a baptism for John Lamb in Hawick in about 1789 and another for Thomas Rutherford of Knowesouth in Hawick in 1789. Andrew (b.1771/2) joiner in Newcastle. In 1841 he was at about 16 South Hermitage Street, living with Helen and Thomas (probably his children) and Thomas Simpson (probably a grandson). Andrew (1772–1850) blacksmith in Newcastle. He is recorded as such in the 1841 census, probably at about 8 Doncaster Street. He married Janet (or Jane) Wilson and she died in 1851, aged 74. They had a son, John (1834/5–1907), who married Elizabeth Scott. They are buried at Ettleton. Andrew (1787–1866) farmer at Twislehope, son of John, who also farmed there. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He is listed among heads of households in 1835–41. He was farmer there in 1841 and in 1861 was farming 2300 acres and employed 3 people. He was on the Borders Union Railway Committee for Liddesdale in the 1850s. He married Eliza Armstrong and their children included: Agnes (b.1835); John (b.1836), who emigrated to New Zealand and Canada; Janet (b.1838); Walter (1840–99), whose family emigrated to Canada after his death; Eliza Murray (b.1843), who died unmarried; Robert (1845–1918), who emigrated to New Zealand; Archibald (1847–1900), emigrated to Canada; Margaret (b.1847), twin of Archibald, who regularly corresponded with her nephews in New Zealand; Andrew (b.1849), emigrated to America; Mary (b.1849); and Thomas (1852–1906). Andrew (b.1819/20) born in Castleton Parish. He was listed at Mount in 1851 and was based at Stobs Linery in the 1850s. By 1861 he was farming 186 acres and employing 3 people at Boosmill in Lilliesleaf Parish. He was still recorded at Boosmill in 1868. He married Janet Thomson in 1843 and they had a son James (b.1844). Andrew (1844/5–1930) born in Castleton Parish, son of Thomas and Hannah Storey. He firstly married...
Agnes Telfer, who died in 1880, aged 29. He secondly married Margaret (1851–1940), daughter of shepherd William Glendinning. Their children were: Thomas (b.1883); Helen (b.1885); Hannah (b.1886); John (b.1889); Mary Jane (b.1891); Maggie (b.1892); and Bessie (b.1895). He is buried at Ettleton along with his wives and 4 children. Andrew (d.1961) married Elizabeth Ekron. His wife Elizabeth (b.1876) was daughter of John Ekron and Agnes Carruthers. Their children included John Burns, who married Margaret Butler. Anna Mary (19th/20th C.) daughter of Thomas of Redheugh and sister of Robert. Her brother inherited Redheugh, but died in 1915. In 1918 she sold Redheugh to the tenants, James and Thomas Scott. She was described as a widow at that time. Anthony of the Binks (16th/17th C.) probably eldest son of William of the Binks. He was ‘Anthony of the benches’ in 1590, when accused along with James of the Hill, James ‘Half Lug’, Hobbie ‘the Tailor’ and 60 others, of raiding ‘Windgates’, taking more than 100 cows and 4 horses, slaying George Hume, leaving 6 or 7 men near death and robbing 5 houses. He is mentioned in 1590/1 being ‘of the Benkis’ and ‘brother-son of Martine’; this suggests he was a nephew of Martin of Braehead, while the standard genealogy makes him a grand-nephew. He was ‘Anthony of the Benks’ in 1596 when there was a complaint that he and others (including William of the Steele and George Simpson) had raided lands in England at King Water. He was described as ‘Antone Elliott in Rouchie’ in 1622 when he was on a Jedburgh jury with his brother Simon. His forename is uncommon among Elliot and so probably came from his mother’s family. Archibald (16th C.) recorded in 1529/30 as brother of Gavin. With Gavin, along with Simon Armstrong of Whithaugh and Ninian Armstrong, he pledged to bring Robert Elliot ‘Flaskvold’ to Fairnilee to answer for crimes prepetrated against George Ker of Linton. He must have been a prominent Liddesdale Elliot of the time, but it is unclear where he resided. Archibald ‘Aircie’ (16th C.) recorded in 1541 when he was accused of having been on a raid on Bewcastle in which Englishman ‘John Makrobyn’ was killed. He was listed along with brothers Adie and Ingram, who may have been related to him. He may be the same as Archibald of Gorrenberry. Archibald (16th C.) recorded as ‘Archibald Aillat, vicar of Kassilltone’ in 1557 when he wrote a bond involving Robert Elliot of Redheugh. It is thus possible that he was a relative of the Elliot Chief. He must have been one of the last priests in Castleton before the Reformation. Archibald ‘Aircie’ 1st Laird of Falnash (d.bef. 1566) third son of Robert, 13th Chief (who was probably killed at Flodden). His brothers were Robert of Redheugh, perhaps Martin of Braehead and probably John of Copshaw. He was probably the Archibald, brother of Robert of Redheugh who served as surety for William, James and Simon ‘Elwald’ in 1537/8; he was also one of the Elliot sureties for several Crozier’s, that they would not harm John Gledstains of that Ilk. In 1541 he was designated ‘of Gorrenberrie’, and was probably the Archibald ‘Elwald’ who was tenant of ‘Gorrumberry’ on the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. He was probably the Archibald, uncle of ‘Robert Elwand, sone to Robyne of the Redhwych’ who signed a bond to enter prisoners with the Laird of Ferniehirst in 1546 (and then had to have the notary help him sign). In bonds for re-entry of the same men he was recorded as of ‘Northows’ (i.e. Northhouse) in 1547 and ‘of Gorranberrie’ in 1548. He is also probably the Archibald (along with Robert of Redheugh and William of Larriston) who had a bond to enter Robert Crozier as a prisoner in 1548. In 1554 he was in Gorinberie when he was granted an acre of arable land in Spittal-on-Rule (‘Harparhill’) and the advowson of the chapel at Caerlenrig; he there signed ‘with my hand at the pen’ led by the notary. In the following letter of reversion he agreed to hold the land and patronage of the chapel for 13 years for 86 pounds Scots. He was probably the ‘Arche Elwald’ who, along with ‘Robyn’ (probably of Thorleshope) went ‘to lord Maxwell at Gedforth’ to seek pardon for the English rebels that they were resetting. He had a Crown charter for Falnash in 1556. In about 1557 he and Simon Scott of ‘Fernilil’ rented Bowanhill and ‘Grangia alias Stanyhetoun’ from Melfosse Abbey; he was there listed as ‘Arche Elliot of Gorumberry’. In 1561 he was among a list of men charged to appear before Queen Mary regarding the state of the Borders and later that year appeared before a Justice Court to answer for his tenants. As ‘Arche Elliot of the Fawnyche’ he signed a bond in 1561/2 with Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst to enter Thomas Routledge as a prisoner (the other Elliots were his son and heir Gavin, John of Copshaw and ‘Elder Will’): he may thus have been serving as Captain of Hermitage Castle. In 1562 he had another bond, along with his son Gavin, to enter John, son of Mungo Routledge to Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst.
His wife’s name is not known. He had 3 children: Gavin of Falnash, who succeeded by at least 1566; William, ‘Archie’s Will’, of Gorrenberry; and Robert, ‘Archie’s Hob’. In 1647 his great-great-grandson Archibald was served heir to his lands, thus confirming the succession over 5 generations. His descendants held Falnash until about 1675. Archibald (16th C.) recorded in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale as tenant of Dinlees. He may be the same as Archibald of Falnash. Archibald ‘Airchie’ of Thirlshope (16th C.) said in 1541 to be one of the main ringleaders of the Elliots of Liddesdale who were raiding into England. He was specifically believed to be responsible for the ‘burnyng of William Carnabyes corne at Halton’; he was referred to as ‘brother and son to Robert Ellwald of Thorllyshope’. Sir John Heron led a party of men from Tynedale who burned ‘the saide Arche Elwodes house’ at ‘Thirleshope’. In 1557 probably the same man rented, along with Scott of Synton, the lands of Southdeanrig and Caulcleuch, from Melrose Abbey; he is there recorded as ‘Archie Ellot of Thirlshoup’. He could be the same as one of the other contemporary Archibalds. Archibald ‘Airchie’ (16th C.) younger son of Gavin of Horsleyhill and brother of the next Laird, William. He is recorded as ‘Arche’ in 1564, along with William of Horsleyhill, Robert and Gavin, and other Elliots and Scotts, tried for the murder of David Scott of Hassendean. He was acquitted, along with Gavin, partly because he was a ‘puer’ (i.e. a boy under 16 at the time). In 1596/7 he was witness to a sasine and was there described as brother of Gavin of Horsleyhill. He may be the same as one of the other Archibalds. Archibald ‘Airchie Keen’ (16th C.) one of 10 Liddesdale rievers captured in Hawick in October 1567 and afterwards held in Edinburgh tolbooth. In 1569 he was pledge for himself ‘and the haill branche of Gorrumber’.

Also in 1569 he and ‘Clement’s Hos’ escaped from imprisonment in the Castle of Doune. Also in 1569 he is listed being held in Blackness Castle as pledge for Clement’s Hob and ‘Dand of Braidley’. In 1578/9 it was restated that Walter Scott, younger of Tushielaw had pledged to the Privy Council that he had been entered into ward in Castle Doune (in Monteith); since this did not happen, then his cautioner was fined. He is probably the same as ‘Archie Keene’ in Monipennie’s list of Border chiefs, published about 1594 (but prepared much earlier) under the heading ‘Gorumberie’. It is possible that he was a younger son of Gavin of Horsleyhill. Archibald (16th C.) recorded in 1561 renting the farm of Corrie Sike for 17 years from Gledstains of Cocklaw. The transcription of his surname is uncertain, but is given as ‘Willat’. He is recorded more clearly as ‘Arche Elliott in Corresiik’ in the bond of security signed in Hawick in 1569 by several Elliots, Scotts and others; the Laird of Gledstains there served as surety for him for 1000 merks. In 1569 the Privy Council ruled that Gledstains was liable for the £1000 when he failed to appear and additionally Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme became surety for him. Archibald ‘Airchie’, ‘Possets’ (16th C.) tenant in Whitehillbrae. He was recorded in 1574 as ‘Archie Elliot callit Possettis in Quheittilbray’ among men who had been ordered to be removed from the lands of Robert of Redheugh. He is probably related to some of the other Elliots of the Priestshaugh area who are also named in 1574, particularly James ‘Dobson’, who was also in Whitehillbrae. It is unclear what his nickname meant (but perhaps the hot drink). He could be the same as one of the other contemporary Archibalds. Archibald ‘Airchie’ (16th C.) recorded in 1578/9 when it was stated to the Privy Council that Martin of Braidlie and Robert of Redheugh had already entered him in ward with George Ramsay of Dalhouse. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Archibalds (but not ‘Archie Kene’, who is listed separately). Archibald ‘Archie’ (16th C.) listed in 1578/9 as ‘sone to Ringanis Wil’ when John Carmichael, younger of that Ilk was caution for him (and others) not to raid into England. He was also recorded in 1579 as ‘Archie Elliot, sone to Ringhanis Will the portar’, when he was among the ‘Armstrangis of the Gyngillis and thair complices’ who gave in to the demands of Lord Maxwell and agreed to end the feud between the Elliots of Ewesdale and the Armstrongs. His name was also given as ‘sone to Ringanis Will Elliot the portar in Glenvoreen’. He appeared personally before the Lord’s of Secret Council later in 1579 and hence John Carmichael was relieved from his surety. From his name he was presumably son of Will and grandson of Ringan; this could be Ninian the same man as the ‘porter’ of Ewesdoors. He may be the ‘Arche Elliot at Ellis Durris’ (probably ‘Ewis’ mistranscribed) listed in 1586 among ‘principallis of the brokin men of the west marche’ in a document by King James VI instructing his Lieutenant on the Border. It is possible he is the same man as ‘Will’s Airchie’ recorded a little later. Archibald (16th C.) nephew of Martin of Braidlie.
He was recorded in 1580 among Elliots who raided the farms of Harwood (on Teviot), Slaidhills, Whitleaw and Hoscote. It is unclear who his father was. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Archibalds. Archibald (d.bef. 1583) tenant in Dodrig. It is unclear to which branch of the Elliots he belonged. He farmed at Dodrig from about 1547, and built a house there; he has pescieable bruikit and jost thrie quarters of the lands of Dodrig, pertaining to the chaiplanrie of the paroch kirk of Caveris, as kyndlie tenentis thairof’. In 1583 his son Robert complained that men sent by Robert Elliot of Redheugh had attacked the workers on the farm. Archibald (16th C.) recorded in Yair in 1581 when he witnessed a transaction between James in Yair and John Gray in Lindean. He was probably related to James, as well as Thomas, who were both in Yair at the same time. He witnessed a further transaction in Selkirk in 1581. Archibald (16th C.) recorded as brother of Robert of Redheugh in 1581 when he witnessed a transaction between James McDougall of Makerstoun and Gavin Elliot of Bailielee (later of Stobs). His brother Gavin also witnessed the same transaction (and may have been Gavin of Brugh). He was also listed as one of the brothers of Robert of Redheugh according to a 1583 letter from the English wardens; he is listed separately from Archie ‘Fyre the Braes’, but it is unclear if the was the same as one of the other contemporary Archibalds. He may be the same as Archibald, son of Robert, 15th of Reidheugh. Archibald ‘Fyre the Braes’ of the Shaws (16th C.) listed in 1569 along with his brother ‘Hob of the Schawis’, when John of Thortieshope was held in Wester Wemyss Castle as pledge for them. It is possible that all 3 men were brothers. He is also recorded as ‘Archie Elliot’ in an 1583 letter from Musgrave to Burleigh, Queen Elizabeth’s Chancellor. He was probably a close relative of Robert of Redheugh, since his name appears shortly after the Laird’s brothers. In 1584 he was listed among the Elliots of Thorlieshope, giving assurances to the English Wardens for the following year; there he is ‘Arche Elliot called Fyrebraises’. He was recorded as ‘Arche Elliott of the Shawes called ‘Fye the braes’’ in 1587/8 when accused by Sir John Forster of being on a raid on England in 1585, along with many other Elliots. He is also recorded on Monipennie’s c.1594 list of Border chiefs, where he is appears as Arthur and is listed beside Rob of Thortieshope. He could be the brother of Robert of Redheugh listed in 1579/80 among men accused of raiding into England. He could also be the same as Archibald of Thorlieshope, recorded in 1557. Archibald of the Park (16th C.) listed among those implicated in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh in 1580. Others listed there are Hob of the Park and John of the Park. He was also listed in 1581 among Armstongs, Elliots and others who accused the Scotts and their allies of several crimes. His name appears after ‘James Rowe of the Park’, who was probably ‘Jamie’s Rowe’ and possibly his brother. He is probably the ‘Archie Elliot, called Symmis Arche’ listed as one of the cautioners for ‘Symmis Rowe’ and others in 1581 and 1582/3; this would make him son of Simon of the Park. His name comes first among those giving assurance for the Elliots of Park in the 1584 bond signed with the English Wardens at Hermitage. He is presumably not the same as ‘young Archie of the Park’ recorded in 1599. Archibald ‘Airchie o the Hill’ (16th C.) recorded in 1578/9 when it was stated to the Privy Council that Martin of Braildie and Robert of Redheugh had previously entered him in ward with George Ramsay of Dalhousie, but he escaped. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Archibalds (but not ‘Archie Kene’, who is listed separately in 1578/9). He was also listed as one of the Elliots accused in 1581 of stealing cattle and goods from James Foster of ‘Synmis Olaithe’. In 1581 William Turnbull in Bouchester was declared a rebel after failing to appear to answer the charge of stealing a horse from him. He was further listed in 1583 as ‘Arche of Hill’, when listed among the Elliots of the Burnhead branch; Jock of the Hill is also listed. He was probably from Liddesdale, although it is unclear where his seat was. He signed the 1584 bond of assurance with the English Wardens, his name appearing along with several Elliots of Ramsiegill, making it clear he was closely related to them. In 1586 his master Robert of Redheugh was instructed to enter him in court. In 1587/8 he was accused by Sir John Forster of being on a raid on England in 1585, along with many other Elliots. He was also one of the Elliots who entered a bond for ‘Willie’s Hob’ in 1587. There was a complaint by Leonard Corbet of the Orchard that (along with Archie ‘Dog Pintle’ and Archie’s 2 brothers) he had stolen 12 cows, 2 horses and £100 of goods, and burned 4 houses. In 1587/8 he was recorded being held in ward (by the Laird of Lochleven) as part of an attempt to quell unrest on the Border; however, he ‘eshaipit and eschewit’ and his pledge was charged to appear before the Privy Council. He is listed in 1590 among a group accused of taking livestock, goods and prisoners from the Pott’s of Carrick; James of the Hill is also listed, as well as a Crozier, Douglas, Laidlaw and Henderson. Also in 1590 he, his brother James, Martin Crozier and others were accused of rieving from ‘Borne’ in Redesdale. Furthermore, in 1590 he was accused, along with several Croziers, of rieving from John Hall of Otterburn. He was also listed among Elliots, Armstrongs, Turnbulls, Laidlaws and Crozier, accused in 1590 of rieving from the Laird of ‘Trogilwen’ and Hedley of ‘Garrett Sallows’. In 1590/1 he listed among men that the Earls of Bothwell and Murray were to enter before the Privy Council. In 1591 he was accused of leading a group of men to plunder from Jeffrey Tailor and stole livestock and goods from the tenants of Scaleby; others included his brother James and his nephew Jock. Probably the same man signed a bond with Scott of Buccleuch in 1599, along with ‘Willie’s Archie’, ‘Cull with the Shaid’ and ‘Jock o the Hill’ (possibly his son). In 1602 he was among a group of mostly Armstrongs who killed a shepherd at Hallrule and stole about 120 sheep; his son Mark was also listed. He was probably related to ‘Joanni de Lie Hill’, who is recorded in 1541. He may be the ‘Archie Ellot of the Hill, callit Gleyit Archie’ who was acquitted of crimes in 1541. He is listed as ‘alias Ibells Arche’ in 1595 among Elliots complained of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. Archibald (16th C.) tenant in Westcoiterig. He is recorded as ‘Archie Elliot of Westcoiterig’ in 1590 in a case where Walter Scott of Buccleuch and Walter Scott of Goldielands were ordered to enter certain of their tenants to answer some English complaints. Archie in Doeceuch was also listed and hence a separate man; however, he may be the same as one of the other Archibalds. Archibald (16th/17th C.) son of Gavin of Falnash and brother of William of Falnash. He was mentioned several times regarding raids on England. In 1587 he was named in relation to compensation for raids, the issue being raised with the Earl of Bothwell, Keeper of Liddesdale. His elder brother William, along with Walter Chisholme of that Ilk, was guarantor for his payment. In 1586/7 he was ‘in Muserlit’ under the Laird of Chisholme (and hence presumably Chisholme’s tenant) when he failed to find surety in relation to raids into England. In 1590/1 he was ‘brother of Will of Fallinesche’ among men that the Earls of Bothwell and Murray were to enter before the Privy Council. Additionally his brother Will and Walter Chisholme of that Ilk were also ordered to present him to the court. In 1598/9 he is ‘Archie Elliott of Mouslie’ listed among the ‘brothers, tenants and servants of Will of Fallinesche’; his brother Alexander is also listed, as well as ‘Stottan Gib’ and his brother John, who may also have been his own brothers. Probably the same Archibald ‘of Mouslie’ is recorded in 1628 in proceedings of the Privy Council. He was stated to be a ‘notorious thief and fugitive’, who was ‘committed to ward within the pitt of Cavers’, but escaped and fled to England. However, he was recaptured and imprisoned in Jedburgh. He could be the same as the earlier Archibald of Muserlee. Archibald ‘Airchie’ of Ramsiegill (16th C.) listed among a large group of Elliots who were accused in 1590 of taking Ralph Hall and others prisoner and ransoming them. Archibald ‘Airchie’ (16th C.) listed along with ‘Hob’s Davie’ of Ewesles and many other Elliots in 1590. They were accused by a group of Englishmen of taking 8 horses and well as prisoners that they ransomed. Archibald ‘Airchie’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1595 among Elliots complained about by the Lord of Gilsland for raids into England. His name is listed as ‘alias Ibells Arche’ (and separately as ‘Ibbels Arche’), but it is unclear if this was ‘Abell’s’ or ‘Isobel’s’ or something else. Archibald ‘Willie’s Airchie’ of Stitchillhill

Archibald ‘Ariche’ (16th/17th C.) described as ‘young Archie of the Park’ in 1599 when he was one of a large number of Liddesdale Elliots to sign bonds with Scott of Buccleuch. He may have been a son of Jock of the Park or Robin. The Archibald of the Park recorded in 1581 is presumably too old to be the same man. Archibald (16th/17th C.) younger son of William of Falnash. He was mentioned in complaints about 2 raids into England in 1595, along with Wat Scott of Harden and several Elliots, including his brother Robert and uncle Gilbert. Archibald ‘Dog Pintle’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1595 among Elliots complained about by the Lord of Gilsland for 2 raids into England. There were also explicit complaints by John Hetherton of ‘the Cairns’ that he had stolen 20 cow, and by Leonard Corbet of the Orchard that (along with his 2 brothers and other Elliots) he had stolen 12 cows, 2 horses and £100 of goods, and burned 4 houses. He is recorded as ‘Arche Ellott called dogpyntle’ and ‘Arche Elliott alias doge pintle’, and he was brother of George ‘Buggerback’. Other Elliots named along with him include those of the Hill and of Bowholm. His nickname was clearly not complimentary. Archibald of Clintwood (16th/17th C.) younger son of Martin of Braidlie. He is referred to as ‘Martin’s Arche of Clintwood’. He is listed in 1580 among a group of Elliots (including his brothers Gavin and Hobbie, and 3 cousins), who attacked the lands of Harwood (on Teviot), stealing 40 cows and oxen, and then later attacked Slaidhills, Whiltlaw and Hoscote; he was declared a rebel after not appearing. He was also among those implicated in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh in 1580. He is probably the ‘Archie Ellott called dogpyntle’ and ‘Arche Elliott alias doge pintle’, and he was brother of George ‘Buggaback’. Other Elliots named along with him include those of the Hill and of Bowholm. His nickname was clearly not complimentary. Archibald of Clintwood (16th/17th C.) younger son of Martin of Braidlie. He is referred to as ‘Martin’s Arche of Clintwood’. He is listed in 1580 among a group of Elliots (including his brothers Gavin and Hobbie, and 3 cousins), who attacked the lands of Harwood (on Teviot), stealing 40 cows and oxen, and then later attacked Slaidhills, Whiltlaw and Hoscote; he was declared a rebel after not appearing. He was also among those implicated in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh in 1580. He is probably the ‘Archie Ellott’, brother of Gavin and Hobbie (and probably Simon) who was listed among the Elliots of Braidlie in 1583. He may be the ‘Archie Elliot’ who, along with Gibbie (perhaps his brother) was accused of a raid into England in 1587. He was also ‘Arche Elliott of Clyntwood called Martins Arche’ when accused of being on a raid on the tenants of Featherstonehaugh in 1587; William of Hartsgarth was also there, as well as 160 others, and it is claimed that they burned 23 houses and took 3 prisoners. In 1588 he was among several Elliots and Nixons complained about by the English Warden for the murder of 2 Englishmen during a raid. He is ‘Martin’s Arche’ in 1590 when, along with his brother Gib and others, he was accused of stealing cattle and horses from England. Also in 1590 he was ‘Martin’s Arche’ when, along with Will of Heuchhouse he was accused of rieving from ‘Haliden’. In the same year he may be the Martin’s Archie accused of further rieving along with Hob of Bowhome and William ‘Ryddie’. He was probably the son of Martin recorded in 1590 along with his brother John, as well as ‘Martin’s Gib’ and Martin of Prickinghaugh, when they were accused of stealing from Englishman Thomas Rutherford of Blackhall. Additionally he was accused in 1590 of taking cattle and goods from ‘Stealie’ and was ‘Martin’s Arche’, who, along with ‘Martin’s Dande’ and other Elliots and Armstrongs, was accused of rieving from Englishman John Armstrong. Also in 1590 he was first on a list of men, including James (‘Martin’s man), the elder and younger Will of the Steele, Airchie ‘Cowfowle’ and 2 shiels, accused of stealing from ‘Dotland’. He was further accused in 1590 at the head of a list of Elliots and others said to have stolen from the ‘Hewrde’ family, maiming and taking prisoner Christopher ‘of the Whithall’. He could be the ‘Archie Elliot’ further listed along with elder Will of the Steele, ‘Lang’ John and Martin’s Gib ‘the cousin’ in 1590, accused of rieving from the tenants of ‘Greinridge’. Also in 1590 he was explicitly recorded as son of Martin on a list of Elliots (including his brother John and cousin Dand), Crozier, Nixons and others accused of rieving from William Robson of ‘Allerweshe’. He is ‘Archie Elliot of Clarewood’ listed in 1590 among Armstrongs and Elliots complained about by a large group of Englishmen for a raid on Blackcleugh in Kirkhaugh, taking many prisoners for ransom. In 1590/1 he was called Marten’s ‘Archie’ among men that the Earls of Bothwell and Murray were to enter before the Privy Council. He is on a list of Elliots (including his father Martin and brother Hob) accused of raiding the English farm of ‘Wynatlie’ in the previous year. He may be the Archie who signed a bond written by Sir John Forster to try to end family feuds on the Border in 1595/6. He was referred to as ‘Archy Elliot called Martins Arche’ in 1597 in an English letter listing Scotsmen who had reset English fugitives. Also in 1597 he is ‘Arche Elliott son to Martin’ among men for whom the English Warden demanded pledges and he was warded in Carlisle Castle. His son William is listed among 5 Scotsmen delivered by Sir Walter Scott to the English Deputy Warden in 1597. In 1597 Lord Evers describes him as ‘Arche the son of Martin a great rider’. In 1611 he acted as cautioner in Jedburgh for ‘Andro Armeastrang, called the Lord’, as well as ‘Kirstie Elliot callit Hobis Kirstie’. He was also part of the assize at the Justice Court on Jedburgh in 1611. In 1613 he was a witness to the infeftment of Robert of Redheugh in his lands. In 1615 he was banished from the Kingdoms of England and Scotland, and no more is known about him. He had at least one child, William, who was imprisoned in York Castle in 1598 at age 12, with Scott of Buccleuch appealing for his release. It is possible that either he or a son was ‘Archie Ellote in Clinton’ who was accused along with Middlemases and others of harassing and attacking George Turnbull of Belses and his farm workers. Archibald ‘Burnt Hand’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1597 among defendants in cases brought by the English Wardens involving raids by men of Liddesdale. His name is given as ‘Archie Elliott brunt hand’. Presumably he had an injured hand. Archibald of Merry Naze (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1598 when there were complaints from Sir James Sandilands that he was among a group of Armstrongs, Ellots and Scotts who stole from his lands and ‘slew and dismembered divers good subjects who rais to the fray’. He was ‘of Mirrieneis’, and other Ellots listed were William of Falnash and Dandie ‘Sweet Milk’. It is possible he was the same man as Archibald of Muselee (given that the Elliots of Falnash also held Merry Naze). In a court case in 1600, Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch’s agent denied responsibility for him and his crimes. Archibald ‘Airchies’ of Thorlisheshope (16th/17th C.) listed among Liddesdale men declared as fugitives for not attending a court in Peebles in 1605. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Thorlisheshope Ellots. Archibald ‘Airchie’, ‘Blackheid’ (16th/17th C.) listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a Borders Commissioners’ court in Jedburgh in 1605. He may have been related to Jock and William, who had the same nickname. Archibald ‘Airchie’ of Brugh (d.bef. 1621) eldest son of Gavin, the first Elliot of Brugh. He may be the ‘Archie Elliott of Dogcleoch’ recorded in 1588/9 in relation to a payment for the release of ‘Vicar’s Hob’ from Edinburgh Tolbooth. He was ‘Archie Ellot of Dokcleuch’, the said Sir Walter’s man’ recorded in a Privy Council case related to Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1590; also in 1590 he was mentioned in a case where Walter Scott of Buccleuch and Walter Scott of Goldielands were ordered to enter certain of their tenants to answer some English complaints. He was probably the Archie of the Dobcleuch (i.e. Doecleuch) who signed a bond with Scott of Buccleuch along with Gavin of Brugh in 1599. He is also mentioned in 1621 (after his death) having previously loaned money to Chisholme of that Ilk (probably the family of his mother). His brother Gilbert succeeded to the estate. Note that he is sometimes confused with a later Archibald (who died at the Battle of Dunbar in 1650). Archibald ‘Airchie’ (16th/17th C.) tenant in Foulshields. In 1611 George Pringle in Newhall was cautioner for him in court in Jedburgh. In the same year John Ainslie, Burgess of Jedburgh was cautioner for his son John. Archibald ‘Airchie’ (16th/17th C.) eldest son of William ‘called of Cowshaw’ (possibly Copshaw), recorded in 1617. Along with his father and 2 other men, he was arrested for stealing sheep and held in Jedburgh Jail. Archibald ‘Airchie’ (16th/17th C.) recorded being ‘of Bowholme’ in 1623 when he and Gilbert Elliott of Craigned were cautioners for Will ‘in Hiesches’. Archibald (16th/17th C.) recorded being ‘in Burnclughesdyse’ in 1623 when he appeared before the Commissioners’ Court in Jedburgh. Archibald (17th C.) possessor of the farm of ‘Overraw’ (i.e. Upper Raw) in Castleton Parish in 1632. Archibald of Arkleton (17th C.) son of John and Ester Armstrong, he was grandson of William of Falnash. He is mentioned in 1623 and was served heir to his father in 1631. In 1626 he was described as ‘Archibald son of the late John Elliot of Arkleton’. Nothing else appears to be known about him. Archibald of Brugh (d.1650) eldest lawful son of Gilbert Brugh. In 1648 he received a ‘precept clare constant’ from William Elliott of Stobs (as heir to his grandfather Gavin of Brugh) of the 10 merk lands of Over and Nether Dodburn and ‘Brandsyde Bray’. He was Corporal in John Rutherford of Edgerston’s troop, fighting for the King in the Civil War. There is a record in 1642 from him ‘for a sufficient horseman and arms for the hail lands of Edgerston’. He died at the Battle of Dunbar, when Rutherford’s troop was essentially wiped out. His wife’s name is not recorded. His children were: John, who farmed at Southfield; Gavin, mentioned in 1665 as brother of John; and Gilbert in Carllops, also mentioned in 1665. Note that he is sometimes confused with his uncle Archibald. Archibald of Philhope (17th C.) made an Honorary Burgess of Selkirk in 1642. It is unclear what branch of the Elliots he was from. He was on the Committee of War for Selkirkshire in 1646 (although incorrectly written ‘Scott’ in the manuscript version), probably again in 1648 (when the place is transcribed ‘Philnone’) and in 1649. He appears to have married Elizabeth Chisholme, who was widow of Simon of Philhope. In 1644 he and his wife were granted half the lands of Philhope from his step-daughter Grizell. There is some confusion over his wives, since later he was certainly married to Marion Nichol; in 1651 she was granted 8 bolls of grain yearly during her lifetime in the will of Francis Scott, Earl of Buccleuch. He was listed first under the ‘communicants’ at Philhope in 1650, followed by ‘Maly Nicoll’ (presumably his wife), then Helen and Maly Elliot (probably his daughters) and 8 others (likely to be farm workers). He was also recorded in 1663 when his eldest son William married Margaret of the Binks. Andrew of Philhope, recorded in 1662, may have been another son. Archibald (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He witnessed a baptism for Thomas Johnstone in 1656. He married Elspeth (or Elizabeth) Fisher in Melrose in 1649. Their children included: Gilbert (b.1650); William (b.1652); Gavin (b.1658); and George (b.1661). The witnesses in 1652 were William … and Gavin ‘Ellot’ (who was probably a relative) and in 1661 were Gilbert (likely another relative) and George Scott. It is possible he is the same man as Archibald of Middelsteed, younger son of ‘Gibbie wi the Gowden Gartins’, with is brothers including Gavin of Grange and Midlem Mill and Gilbert of Craigend and Hartshaugh. Archibald of Falnash (d.bef. 1675) succeeded his father Robert, since his elder brother William had died. He was ‘younger of Falnash’ at the time of his sister Jean’s sasine in 1637. He is probably the ‘young Falnash’ mentioned in the song ‘Rattlin Roarin Willie’, who (along with Gilbert Elliott of Stobs) apprehended William Henderson for the murder of William Elliot. In 1647 he was served heir to his father’s lands of Falnash and his 10 merk lands of Hislop (in the Barony of Hawick and Regality of Drumlanrig), as well as his 5 merk land of Langhaugh. In the same year he was separately served heir to his great-great-grandfather Archibald’s lands of Falnash, ‘Cawsya’ and ‘Tandilnes’ (probably Tanlaw Naze). James Douglas, Earl of Queensberry then exercised his right of reversion of Broadlee, Langhaugh and Hislop, paying 10,500 merks for them in 1650. In 1644, 1646 and 1648 he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire. He is probably the Elliot of Falnash who paid the land tax in 1663: the lands redeemed by Queensberry from ‘Ffalmash’ were valued at £716, and he separately paid tax on £360. In 1667 he paid 9,000 merks to Francis Scott for what was effectively a mortgage on Falnash, and almost immediately sold the property to Gavin of Caerenrig, his brother. Before 1645 he married Esther Scott (probably a daughter of ‘Auld Wat o Harden’) and by 1660 secondly married Isobel Scott (who died by 1668). His children probably included: Archibald, who succeeded and may have married a widow of Gledstains of that Ilk; Grizell (b.1642), born in Hawick Parish; and Robert (b.1645), also born in Hawick Parish. Archibald ‘Superior of Falnash’ (17th C.) elder son of Archibald. He succeeded to the estate in 1675, this including ‘Cawsya’ and Tanlaw Naze as well as Falnash itself. He probably married a widow of Gledstains (perhaps William of that Ilk), since Walter Gledstains is mentioned as his son in 1677. He probably had no male children, since the Lairdship went to his cousin Ninian. Archibald (17th C.) recorded as being ‘in Middlester, (Midlem-mill)’ in the 1643 valuation for Castleton Parish. His lands were valued at £36. He was transcribed as ‘in Mistlesteed’ in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls, and hence the earlier record perhaps was an error for Middlesdeed. He was recorded among local landowners of the mid-to-late 1600s, according to James Wilson. He may have been Archibald of Middelsteed, son of ‘Gibbie wi the Gowden Gartins’. Archibald (17th C.) resident of Bowanhill on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He may have been father of the later tenant of Bowanhill. Archibald (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1705 he is recorded paying for use of the mortcloth. Archibald (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1697 he married Helen ‘Broun’ (or perhaps ‘Boum’). Their children included: Robert (b.1704); and Francis (b.1706). Archibald (17th/18th C.) resident of Minto Parish who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. He is surely related to (or the same as) the slightly later Archibald in Minto. Archibald (17th/18th C.) workman in Hawick Parish. He married Helen Brown and their children included: William (b.1704) and Francis (b.1706). The witnesses in 1704 were weavers James Wight and John Swan and in 1706 were Bailies Walter Graham and George Martin. Archibald (17th/18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. He is probably the resident of Minto who married Helen Gray in Hawick in 1706. His children included: William (b.1707); Margaret Elliot (b.1710); James (b.1712); Archibald (b.1715); Archibald (again, b.1719); John (b.1721); Archibald (again, b.1723); Marion (b.1726); and Helen (b.1729). It is possible that these are children of more than one family, since no mother’s name is listed. Archibald (1679/80–1757) recorded in 1722 as farmer at Bowanhill (near Teviothead), renting from the Duke of Buccleuch. The following year he rented half of the farm, with James Elliot in the other half (probably a close relative). He re-leased the lands in 1744. He was surely related to the Archibald recorded at Bowanhill in 1694. He witnessed a baptism for Robert ‘Hutson’ at Blackcleugh in 1741. His wife was Christian Elliot (c.1692–1779). Their children included: Archibald (b.1717/8), who succeeded as tenant of Bowanhill; Thomas (1722/3–1791), who died at Bowanhill; Walter (1726–1813), who died at Binks; John (b.1729); and Isabel (b.1731). His grandson John died at Falnashburnfoot in 1832, aged 72. Archibald (18th C.) smith in Bewlie in 1737 when he was recorded in a legal case in Selkirk. Archibald (1717/8–1812) son of Bowanhill. He succeeded to the tenancy of Bowanhill. He is listed there on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he was taxed for 2 farm horses. He also paid tax on 3 non-working dogs there in 1797. He is probably the Archibald of Henderson’s whose son Walter was born in 1791. He lived to be 94 and was buried at Teviothead. Archibald (18th C.) cotter at Falnash. He married Margaret Scott and their son Robert was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1740. The witnesses were Walter Scott at Commonside and Walter Jackson at Falnash. Archibald ‘Archie’ (18th C.) dyker in the Hawick area. One year in the earlier part of the 18th century he was hired by the tenant of Fenwick to build a dyke that was inside the bounds of Hawick Common. At the Common Riding the riders accosted him and brought him in; he was arrested and had to give a bond for £100 Scots as a promise not to do so again. This was described by George Richardson in 1767. Archibald (18th C.) born in Robertson Parish, he lived at Boonraw. In 1759 he married Elizabeth Cunningham, who was also from Wilton Parish. Their children included: Elizabeth (b.1759); Jean (b.1762); Isabel (b.1765); John (b.1767); and Alexander (b.1770). The witnesses in 1770 were Thomas Scott and Thomas Reid. Archibald (d.1803) weaver in Hawick, son of William. He married Janet Aitkin in 1760 and she died in 1805. Their children included: Mary (b.1761); Helen (b.1769); William (d.1805); and Robert (d.1775). He may be the son of William and Margaret Balmer born in Hawick in 1729. He could be the Archibald who witnessed a baptism for wig-maker Robert Miles in 1766. Archibald (1761–1823) son of Archibald, a carrier from Ancrum. He became an architect along with his younger brother James. They designed some of the most imposing late 18th century and early 19th century houses in Scotland. His designs included Stobo Castle, Calton Prison (Edinburgh), Midlothian County Hall (Edinburgh), Penicuik monument, Jethart Castle Jail and renovations at Minto House and the Haining. He married Sarah Shiel, and they had a son Archibald, who was also an architect. Archibald (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Isobel Wilson. Their daughter Helen was baptised in 1782. The witnesses were Charles Scott at Commonside and Thomas Grieve. He could be the Archibald living at Bowanhill who in 1791 witnessed a baptism for Walter Riddeill in Commonside. Archibald (b.1800) son of John, he was born at Bowanhill in Cavers Parish. In 1825 he married Isabel, daughter of Thomas Oliver and Christina Elliot. Their children included: John (b.1827); Thomas (b.1828); and Kitty (1830–1902). In about 1830 he emigrated with his family to Delaware County, New York. There 4 more children were born: Walter (1832–1907); Margaret (1835–1901); William (b.1837); and Elizabeth. Archibald (b.c.1795) stocking-maker in Hawick. He was listed as a member of Allars Kirk in 1829. In 1841 he was living on Brougham Place. His wife was Euphemia (or Euphan), and their children included: Janet (b.c.1821); Margaret (b.c.1827); Mary (b.1829); Peter (b.c.1832); Isabel (b.c.1834); and Euphan (b.c.1837). Archibald (1847–1900) son of Andrew, farmer at Twislehope. He had a twin sister, Margaret, who lived in Newcastle. He married Margaret Scott and emigrated to Canada. Their children were Andrew, John, Helen (who married Wallace Hood), Eliza, Agnes (married a Dunlop), Isabella (who married Robert Laidlaw) and Marianne (who married John Hobson). Arthur of Harwood (d.1698) son of Walter of Arkleton and grandson of Adam of Meikledale. His lands were at Harwood-on-Teviot, for which he received a Crown Charter in 1698 (shortly before his death). He married Anne Disney and they had a daughter (his heiress), Margaret, who married William Elliot of Thorlischehope. Arthur (17th/18th C.) 2nd son of Walter of Arkleton. It is said that after his father had fallen out with his older brother Adam, he refused to accept the family estate, and so the lands went to his younger brother, William. Arthur (18th C.) first schoolmaster at Caerlenrig, being appointed in 1755 and resigning 2 years later. Branche of the Burnhead (16th C.) recorded in the 1580s accusing Englishmen Thomas Carleton and ‘Riche of the Moat’ of stealing 200 cattle and 40 horses from Burnhead. It is unclear whether his name is a transcription error or a nickname of some sort. He must have been related to ‘Hobbie’ who was Laird of Burnhead only a few years earlier. Bruce started playing rugby at Denholm School, joining the P.S.A. at the age of 15, then the Harlequins and Y.M. He played full back for Hawick R.F.C., starting in the late 1960s and was part of the team that won the league title 5 times in a row in 1973–78. He also played sevens, sometimes as scrum-half. With his wife Isobel he had children Alistair and Tracy and they live at East Middle. Charles Edward (1693–1763) eldest son of Gilbert of Nethermill, who was a merchant in Hawick. It is likely that his grandfather was Robert of Larriston. Along with his (unnamed) brother, he is said to have taken part in the 1715 Jacobite rebellion and was wounded at Preston. He escaped to Holland, where he married a Dutch lady. He then worked for the Dutch East India Company, living for a while in Java (where his brother also lived) before settling in Essex (after he was no longer considered an outlaw in Britain). There he was appointed Searcher and Tidewaiter in H.M. Customs at Burnham-on-Crouch, where he also owned a mill. He had 12 children, although only 1 son (Charles, b.1752, who wrote his name ‘Elliott’ and became a wealthy cabinet-maker in London) and 2 daughters survived; the first 9 were born on Java and died young. Sir Charles Gilbert John Brydone (1810–95) 3rd son of Gilbert, 2nd Earl of Minto. He was Admiral of the Fleet 1870–73. He was recorded living at Bonjedward House in a directory of 1868. He firstly married Louisa, daughter of Sir Edward Blackett and secondly married Harriette Emily Liddell, daughter of the 1st Earl of Ravensworth. They had one surviving son, Bertram Charles. Rev. Charles, D.D. (b.1815) son of shepherd John, he was born in Castleton Parish. In 1818 the family emigrated to America. By about 1840 he had moved to Easton, Pennsylvania, where he became a Presbyterian minister. He was Professor of Hebrew Language and New Testament Exegesis in Chicago. There are other ministers of the same name with whom he is easily confused. A portrait of him exists. Col. Charles (1824–88) son of James, the 3rd Laird of Wolfelee. He was Colonel in the Royal Artillery and died in London. In 1859 he married Christina, daughter of Sir Alexander Ramsay of Balmain, and she died in 1873. In 1877 he secondly married Mary, daughter of Henry Davidson of Muirhouse. His children were Lieut. Walter, George Ramsay, Elizabeth Maule and Mabel. Charlotte ‘Black Charlotte’ (18th/19th C.) only daughter of Adam and grand-daughter of William, 1st Laird of Wolfelee. Her father was a merchant in Danzig, who married Rosa Leonardi there. She inherited the estate of Pinnaclehill near Kelso from her uncle Robert (who had tried to leave it to his nephew James, but the will was insufficiently stamped). Christopher ‘Kirstie’ (16th/17th C.) only known child of Robert, ‘Martin’s Hob of Prickenhaugh’. He is recorded in 1611 when he took part in a raid on Robsons in England. Later that year he was afterwards sentenced to banishment with his wife and children by the Jedburgh court. He is recorded as ‘Kirstie Elliot callit Hobis Kirstie’ in 1611 when Robert of Redheugh and several others were cautioners for him and his wife. In 1618 he is recorded as a fugitive. He had at least one child, Robert. This is probably the Robert ‘some to Hobbeis Chrystie’ recorded as a fugitive in 1642. Cornelius ‘Auld Corrie’ (1732–1821), W.S., 2nd Laird of Wolfelee, eldest son of William, the 1st Elliot Laird. He succeeded to the Lairdship after his older brother Thomas had died. He also followed in his father’s legal business in Edinburgh’s Lawnmarket, becoming Writer to the Signet. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761, when ‘of Woollie junior’. He was a trustee for the creditors of Robert Shortreed of Easter Essenside in 1778. He was also one of the trustees for Dr. Robert Langlands when he sold off his estate to satisfy creditors in about 1780. He served as an executor for Henry of Peel, who died in 1780. Also in 1780 he was the lawyer for the legal aspects of several new voters being added to the county roll after being granted liferent of lands by Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto and others. He was himself on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. He is probably the Cornelius who purchased Barnhills from Matthew Stewart in 1780 (and appears to have sold it back). Also in 1780 he matriculated arms, proving descent from the Elliots of Horsleyhill. By 1788 his estate included Mackside, Broadhaugh, Blackcleughmouth, Catlee, Easter Swanshiel, Hartshaugh, Hartshaugh Mill and Wolfelee, as well as parts of Stonedge and Kilknowe. He was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1788, privately described as probably a supporter of Sir Gilbert Elliot and also as ‘Brother-in-law to Adam Ogilvie, factor to the Duke of Buccleuch’ (although that appears to be an error for another Elliot branch). He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in both 1805 and 1819, along with his son James. In 1811 he was listed as owner of ‘Woollee’, as well as Catlee, Catleeshaw, Easter Swanshiel, ‘Shiel’s Lands’, part of Kirknowe, lands that were formerly part of Stonedge, Hartshaugh Mill, Broadhaugh, Mackside and Blackcleughmouth. In 1765 in Leith he married Margaret, daughter of James Rannie, and she died in 1796. They had at least 6 children: William (1766–1807), a Major who died in Vellore, Madras, and had his portrait painted by Raeburn; Mary (b.1767), who married Gen. Sir Thomas Dallas in Madrid, and in later life lived with her sister Margaret; Eleanor (or Eleonora), who married Robert Anderson, merchant in Leith; Magaret Jane, who was unmarried; James (1772–1855), who succeeded; and Janet Hyndford, who married Sir John Gibson-Carmichael of CastleCraig and later John, 12th Lord Elphinstone from Edinburgh. He lived in Queen Street, Edinburgh, but also held several country residences. His will is in the Peebles Commissary Court Records in 1823. Cuthbert (16th C.) recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books in 1560. His wife Christine Robertson, widow of John Hogg of Corschill in Bowden, gave lands to his daughter Bess Hogg, with ‘Vatte Elwand’ also being named. David (15th/16th C.) son of William. He was listed among many men of Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5 to answer for their crimes. It is unclear which William was his father, but William (also son of William) was probably his brother. David (16th C.) recorded as witness in Selkirk in 1562. David (16th C.) listed as one of the tenants of the oldings of ‘Cleirlandis, Robsteid, Thomscoitsteid, Cranswat, Gusbank, Hurklebuss’ in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. William and David Elliot are also listed. David (d.bef. 1570) son of Gavin of Horsleyhill. He was a tenant in his father’s lands of Caveling in Cavers Parish. In 1564 John Turnbull of Hassendaleankbank accused him of stealing 80 sheep from his farm at Hassendeankirk. William of Horsleyhill and William Douglas of Cavers (proprietors of the lands of Caveling) were ordered to present him before the Privy Council. In 1567 he was given notice to remove himself as tenant from the 6 merk lands of Chamberlain Newton by George Turnbull of ‘Wowlie’. He was probably the ‘Dand Elliot of Cavilling’ for whom John Edmonson of that Ilk was cautions in 1567/8 for him to remain in ward on this side of the Tweed. The Laird of Edmonson was also surety for him in 1569. A decree of removal was given against his widow Margaret Turnbull in 1570/1. In 1573 his widow was said to have encouraged her 2 sons, Walter and John Scott, to attack James Storie, who had been placed on the other half of the farm (sold by George Turnbull to Gavin Elliot of Bailielee and Stobs, who was coincidentally also from the Ellots of Horsleyhill). His wife must therefore have remarried to a Scott. David (16th C.) son of ‘Elder Will’. Along with his brother Martin he signed the 1584 bond of assurance with the English Wardens, on behalf of their whole part of the clan. It seems likely they were closely related to the Elliots of Heuchhouse, but a different Martin from there, along with his brother John of Heuchhouse, were listed separately in 1584. David of Braidlie (16th C.) recorded in 1578 when his son Hob was released from ward, but promised to meet again to help suppress lawlessness on the Border. However, it is possible that ‘David’ is an error for ‘Dand’. Probably the same man is recorded as ‘Davie Elliot of Bracley’ in 1584, when he was one of the signatories of the bond of assurance with the English Wardens: he was one of 3 men to give surety for the Elliots of Gorrenberry, suggesting that ‘Bracley’ was an error for Braidlie. He is recorded being ‘of Braidley’ in 1586 when his superior Robert of Redheugh was instructed to enter him in court. David (16th C.) listed as ‘Davie Elliot of Hongrige’ in 1584. Along with David of ‘Bracley’ (probably Braidlie) and Will of Mosspatrickhope, he gave assurances for the Elliots of Gorrenberry. His designation is probably a misunderstanding of some sort, but it is unclear where he was from. David (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 being ‘in the Ma’nis’ among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. He may have lived at the Mains in Liddesdale. David ‘Davie’ of Dinlees (16th C.) recorded in 1590 when his son Adam was part of a group of Armstrongs and others accused of riving. David ‘Davie, the Carlin’ (d.1598) probably a son of ‘Elder Will’. He was listed in 1569 as ‘David Carling his brother’ along with Elder Will’s eldest son, when ‘Elder Will the Tod’ was held in Blackness Castle as pledge for their behaviour. He is listed in 1574 along with his son, among Scots rebels who were re-set in England. He was also complained about in 1587/8 for a raid on Tynedale in 1589, along with Croizers, Armstrongs and about 300 others, accused of stealing 800 cows, 60 horses and 500 sheep, burning 60 houses and killing 10 men; he is there recorded as ‘Davye Elliot called the Carlinge’. He was also recorded in 1588, when James Dalgleish and Nichol Brydon (from the Edinburgh area) were convicted of helping bring in him and his accomplices to steal cattle. This took place in 1588, the accomplices being ‘Hob Billie’ Elliot and 2 Armstrongs, suggesting they were from Liddesdale. He was ‘Davye the Carlinge’ among a group of Ellios and others complained about for raiding into England in 1589. His son ‘Eddie Elliot’ (probably Adam) was listed among Borderers complained about for another raid on a farm in England in 1589 and further recorded in 1590, among Ellios accused of a raid. He was ‘Davie the Carlinge’ listed among Ellios, Armstrongs, Turnbuls, Laidlaws and Croizers, accused in 1590 of rieving from the Laird of ‘Troghwen’ and Hedley of ‘Garret Sheills’. In 1590/1 he was ‘called the Carling’ among men that the Earls of Bothwell and Murray were to enter before the Privy Council. He may be the David who signed a bond written by Sir John Forster to try to end family feuds on the Border in 1595/6. In 1598 he was ‘Davyd Elliot alias Carlyne’ who killed William Ogle on a raid in Gilsland, and was in turn killed by a group of Ogles and Shaftoes. David ‘Hob’s Davie’ of Eweslees (16th C.) presumably son of Robert. He is listed among a large group of Ellios who were accused in 1590 of taking Ralph Hall and others prisoner and ransoming them. His name appears as ‘Hobs Davie of Dewes leases’. David (16th/17th C.) son of John of Bowholm. He was listed in 1605 among men of Liddesdale declared fugitives at a court in Peebles. David (17th C.) Treasurer of Selkirk in the 1650s and 1660s. He is probably the ‘elder merchant burgess of Selkirk’ recorded in discharges for annual rent in 1666, 1668 and 1678. An undated account from him to the Burgh of Selkirk relates to the town coble and other matters. He may be the deceased David whose house rental is referred to in Selkirk in 1709. He was ‘elder, merchant’ in a deed of 1663, while his son was ‘younger, burgess of Selkirk’. His son David was witness to a discharge for him in 1664. David (17th C.) merchant and Burgess in Selkirk. He is recorded as ‘younger’ in 1708, and hence probably son of the earlier David. Probably the same merchant David was recorded in Selkirk in 1723 and 1737. David (18th/19th C.) gardener at Borthwickbrae in 1797, when he was working for William Elliot Lockhart. Dorothea Helen (d.1925) daughter of Sir Walter. In 1866 she married William Elliott-Lockhart, heir to the Lairdships of Borthwickbrae and Cleghorn. The marriage was held in Hobkirk Kirk, but officiated by her uncle, Rev. John Elliot-Bates, who was an English clergyman (this event causing much local consternation at the time). On the death of her brother Edward she became heir in line to the Elliots of Wolfelee, and also of Borthwickbrae, following her marriage to William Elliott-Lockhart in 1866. She was succeeded by her daughter Mary Charlotte Elliot-Lockhart of Cleghorn. Edmund (18th C.) recorded as ‘Edmundus de Elaund’ in the 1269 assize roll of Northumberland. He complained about the actions of ‘Johanne de Crammelyngton’ in the town of ‘Corburg’. He could be an early member of the Elliot family. Edmund (15th C.) recorded among men of Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aires in 1494/5. His name is given as ‘emmundi elwald’. Lt.-Col. Edmund James (1813–54) son of John Edmund. He was born in Calcutta and died at Varna, Bulgaria. He served with the 79th Regiment. He married Matilda Inglis. Their son Edmund Halbert was born posthumously and baptised in Wilton in 1854. Edward Hay Mackenzie 6th Laird of Wolfelee (1852–1920) 3rd son of Sir Walter. He was born in Vizagapatam, Madras and came to Britain at age 3, growing up mainly in Ayrshire and Wigtownshire. He attended Harrow, where he excelled at sports. After leaving school he played for Harrow Chequers Football Club and then Wanderers F.C., where he was part of the team that won the first 2 F.A. Cups. In 1871 and 1872 he was selected to play for a Scottish side against England in what were only the 4th and 5th international matches, and the last not to be officially recognised. He tried unsuccessfully for the Indian Civil Service and spent 3 months in a commission with the Scottish Borders Militia, then became a Lieutenant with the 82nd Regiment from 1874–88 before transferring to the 40th Regiment, the South Lancashire Regiment, where he became a Major. He also served as Private Secretary to Lord Glasgow, serving under him in New Zealand. He succeeded his eldest brother James T.S. in 1892, another elder brother Walter Blair having died in 1869. He retired early, in 1899, to attend to the family estates. He served

It is said that his line became extinct, but it is also claimed that he might be the ancestor of the Elliots of Dinlabyre. Francis (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jane Laing and their children included: Janet (b.1688); William (b.1707) could also be his child. Francis (17th C.) listed as resident at Burnfoot in Castleton Parish on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. This was probably Tinnis Burnfoot. Francis (17th C.) resident at the farms of ‘Gulenflatt & Grec Holmes’ in Castleton Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Francis (17th/18th C.) resident of ‘Crackuroll’ in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll. In 1698 he is recorded as cottar in Kirkhouses. He married Bessie Stoddart in Roberton in 1681 and their children included: Isobel (b.1689); Francis (b.1692); and Thomas (b.1698). Francis (17th/18th C.) listed as tenant at Burnfoot in Castleton Parish on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. This was probably the same place as Tinnis Burnfoot. Francis (17th/18th C.) listed as being ‘in Hawick’ in 1701 when he witnessed a baptism for Walter, who was Bailie-Depute of the Regality of Hawick. He may thus have been related to Walter. Also in 1701 he witnessed a baptism for smith George Scott. He was probably the innkeeper who witnessed baptisms in 1702 for Bailie Walter Graham and in 1704 for merchant Adam Turnbull (who was at the Westport, suggesting that he himself lived in that area). Probably the same Francis was ‘Vintner’ in Hawick when he witnessed baptisms in 1704 for James Leithead and in 1706 for carrier David Minto. He was ‘in Hawick’ when he witnessed a baptism for James Scott ‘Laird’ in 1708 (his step-son James Scott ‘Doctor’ was also witness to a baptism for the same man). In 1709 he was recorded as a merchant in Hawick when he witnessed a baptism for weaver Jasper Richardson. He could be the Francis whose son William was born in Hawick in 1707. He may be the Francis who witnessed a baptism (along with Bailie Walter) for merchant Walter in 1713. He is probably the merchant who witnessed a baptisms for weaver Robert Wight and for wright John Pringle in 1716. Perhaps the same Francis paid tax for 2 hearths on the west-side of Hawick in 1694 and was listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He could be the Francis who acted as a cautioner in 1706 to James Scott and John Graham, when they were imprisoned and fined for being the main instigators in the disturbances at the Common Riding that year. Francis (17th/18th C.) 2nd son of William of Bewlie and Borthwickbrae. He was apprenticed to merchant John Turnbull in Edinburgh in 1710. Francis (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Mervinslaw in 1721. His wife was Helen Anderson. Their son Walter was baptised in 1721, with witnesses Walter Scott and James Irvine. Francis of Fenwick (17th/18th C.) 3rd son of Gavin of Caerlenrig. He bought Outersiderig in 1719. He married Rachel Langlands (who was probably a cousin or other relative of his brother Robert of Caerlenrig’s wife Agnes Langlands). They had 2 sons: Robert, Burgess of Galasgow, who married Jean Scott and Catherine Elliot from Arkleton; and William, about whom nothing is known. He may also have had a daughter Rachel who married Walter Scott of Howcleuch and Wauchope. Francis (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Isobel Murray, and their children included: Helen (b.1741); Ann (b.1746); Isabel (b.1751); Jean (b.1754); and John (b.1756). Francis (18th C.) resident at Harwood on Teviot, brother of Thomas, who was also there. In 1740 he and Thomas witnessed a baptism for Robert Elliot, tenant in Slaidhills (who may also have been related to them). In 1746 he and Thomas (also at Harwood) witnessed a baptism for Thomas Reid at Harwood (in Hawick Parish). It is unclear how he and his brother Thomas were connected to other Elliots. Francis ‘Frank’ (1733–79) son of Robert of Caerlenrig. He was a skinner in Hawick. He is probably the Francis who in 1766, along with John (his brother), witnessed a baptism for merchant James Oliver and his wife Christian (their sister). He witnessed another baptism for merchant John Oliver and Christian (his sister) in 1772. He died unmarried. Francis (b.1758) resident of Roberton Parish, son of James and Margaret Scott. He was living at Eilrig in 1786 and Craikburn in 1788. In 1785 he married Mary Hislop (b.1754). Their children included: James (1786–1859); John (1788–1851); Margaret (c.1790–1859), who died on Albin Place; and William (1792–1861), who died in Hawick. Francis (b.c.1800) from England, he was a farm labourer living at Ryeleahead in southern Castleton Parish in 1841. His wife was Betty and their children included Matthew, Walter, John, Helen and Katherine. Francis (1819–94) son of John, labourer and dyker at Parkhill. In 1851 he was a labourer at Parkhillhaugh. By 1861 he was a mason at Deanburnhaugh. He first married Christine Wintrup (1825–53) from Lilliesleaf in 1840; she died at Roberton Burnfoot. Their children were Andrew, James and Frank, who all

Of a branch of the Elliots of Liddesdale, chief of Horseleyhill. He may have been head of cattle, 40 sheep and other goods from the cows. He also led a group of Elliots who took 27 people from Horncliffe, taking a prisoner, along with 30 oxen and other goods. He may be the same man as Gavin of Ramsiegill or Gavin Laird of Cessford’s farm of Newton. He may be the same man as ‘Gilbert of Horsleyhill’ the Earl of Bothwell’s Bailie of reversion to William Scott regarding the lands of Nether Galalaw, with Thomas acting as his procurator. He was already deceased in 1561/2. Perhaps the same Gavin was witness to documents for Ker of Primside relating to the lands of Softlaw in 1530/1. Probably the same Gavin was a witness to a charter by Lord Home in 1555, making him 1st Laird of Horsleyhill, as well as other lands. He killed Hugh Douglas; no details of this event are known.

Gabriel of the Park (16th C.) recorded in 1590 along with John of the Park, as well as Elliots of the Steele, Thorlshope and others, who were accused of raiding into England. Since ‘Gabriel’ is an unfamiliar first name, it may be that the English report confused the name. Gavin (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1526/7 as ‘Gavin Elwald’ the Earl of Bothwell’s Bailie in a document relating to the lands of Harden. Perhaps the same Gavin was witness to documents for Ker of Primside relating to the lands of Softlaw in 1530/1. Probably the same Gavin was recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books for about 1532, marrying Margaret, daughter of Andrew ‘Makduell’ (i.e. McDougall) of Makerstoun; he received 200 merks from Andrew Ker in Primside and gave to Margaret his lands of ‘Toftlawe’ and ‘Boucherflat’ in the Barony of Hassendean. The same Gavin probably witnessed a document in Selkirk in 1534. Also in that year he had a letter of reversion to William Scott regarding the lands of Nether Galalaw, with Thomas acting as his procurator. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Elliots, but it is possible he was the same man as Gavin of Horsleyhill.

Gavin (16th C.) recorded in 1529/30 as brother of Archibald. With Archibald, along with Simon Armstrong of Whithaugh and Ninian Armstrong, he pledged to bring Robert Elliot ‘Flaskvod’ to Fainilee to answer for crimes prepetrated against George Ker of Linton. He must have been a prominent Liddesdale Elliot of the time, but it is unclear where he resided. Gavin (16th C.) recorded in 1543 in English documents as ‘Gawan Elwald Scotisman’. Along with a large group of other Elliots they attacked Over Howden in Lauderdale, taking a prisoner, along with 30 oxen and cows. He also led a group of Elliots who took 27 head of cattle, 40 sheep and other goods from the Laird of Cessford’s farm of Newton. He may be the same man as Gavin of Ramsiegill or Gavin of Horseleyhill. Gavin of Ramsiegill (d.c.1563) chief of a branch of the Elliots of Liddesdale, with the seat being near Riccarton. The connection between this branch and other branches is unknown. In 1563 he and others from Liddesdale entered into a bond with Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst to bring in William Nixon ‘Grey Will of the Kyll Fuird’. Later in 1563 his son ‘Jock Elliot’ was subject of a bond by Robert of Redheugh and Martin of Braidlie, to enter him before Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst, in which he is described as deceased. The Gavin of Ramsiegill recorded soon afterwards was presumably another son. Gavin of Horsleyhill (d.bef. 1562) probably a grandson of William of Larriston, who married the daughter and heiress of Robert Scott of Horsleyhill. However, the names of his mother and father are not known. In 1543 he is ‘of Hoslaw hill’ when he was involved in a transaction with Ninian Cranston over a place called ‘Schawes’ in Ettrick Forest. In about 1547 he and his 3 sons, Robert, William and Andrew, were charged with killing Hugh Douglas; no details of this event are known. He was one of the signatories of the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’ in 1551, when he was a tenant in Horsleyhill. Also in 1551 he purchased Baillielee (in Selkirkshire) and Caveling (in Cavers Parish) from Gilbert Ker of Primside. He was granted a Charter by Lord Home in 1555, making him 1st Laird of Horsleyhill, as well as other lands. He married twice, the name of his first wife being unknown and the second being a sister of McDougall of Makerstoun. Around the late 1550s there was a dispute over the lands of Newbigging (part of the Middle Mains of Hassendean) between his children by his first wife and those by his second wife. This was resolved through a panel consisting of Gilbert Ker of Primside, David Turnbull of Wauchope, William Elliot in Larriston (probably a relative) and Robert Elliot of Redheugh. He had 6 sons: Robert, 2nd Laird; William, who later became the 5th Laird; Andrew, also called ‘Dan’; David, tenant at Caveling; Gavin, who was the first of the family to own Stobs; and Archibald (possibly ‘Archie Keen’). Note that the family name was often spelled ‘Eloit’ at that time. He may be the same as ‘Gilbert of Horsliehill’ (perhaps an error in transcription) who witnessed the marriage contract between William Scott of Harden and Agnes Murray, ‘Muckle Mou’d Meg’, in 1544. He may be the Gavin who in 1534 sold the 40-shilling lands of Nether Galalaw to William Scott of Hassendean, with Thomas acting as his procurator. He was already deceased in 1561/2 when his son Robert was involved with a land transaction in Selkirk. Gavin (16th C.) brother died in infancy, as well as John (b.1841), Douglas (b.1843), Jane (b.1845) and Robert (b.1848). He secondly married Mary Burnet (1827–64) from Drumelzier, who died at Deanburnhaugh; they had Marion (1854–79), James Proctor (b.1857), born at Branxholme Town and perhaps Francis. He thirdly married Elizabeth Paterson (1832–98) in Hawick in 1870, and she died in Hawick. Their children were: William (b.1870); James (b.1871), blacksmith at Bunchester Bridge; and Francis (b.1874). He died at Damfoot and the family are buried at Borthwick Waas.

Elliot

Elliot of Archie’s Will. He is listed in 1561 among Border lairds who appeared before the Queen to promise to present the names of thieves. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Gavins. Gavin (d.1565) 3rd Laird of Horsleyhill, son of Robert, who was executed only a year before he died. He was succeeded by his brother William. In 1564 he was ‘Gawine Elliot, sone to umquhile Robert Elliot of Horsliehill’ who was heritable owner of part of the lands of Caveling; his ‘fadir bruther’ (i.e. uncle) and tutor at that time was William in Horsleyhill. He may be the ‘Gawane’ who was listed along with William of Horsleyhill, Robert and Archibald (as well as other Elliots and Scotts) in the trial over the murder of David Scott of Hassendean in 1564, for which he was acquitted along with Archibald. He may be the ‘Guidman of Horsliehill’ listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the warden, Ker of Cessford. In 1565 he was listed along with William of Larriston and ‘Gavin’s Willie’ of Falnash in a follow-up of the same case of the murder of David Scott of Hassendean. He may be the ‘Gawine Elliot of Hosliehill’ who was listed in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme for which he was acquitted along with Archibald. He may be the ‘Gavin Eliott of Stobs), since it is hard to separate these nearly contemporary Gavins. Gavin in Skelfhill (see Gavin Elliott of Stobs). Gavin of Ramsiegill (16th C.) possibly son of the previous Gavin. He was one of the 10 Liddesdale thieves held in Edinburgh tolbooth after being captured in Hawick in 1567. He was also one of the Elliots who entered a bond for ‘Willie’s Hob’ in 1587. ‘Hob Elliot of the Ramsigill’ is also listed, so they must have been either brothers or father and son. Also in the 1580s, along with John of Heuchhouse he accused a band of Englishmen from raiding his lands. His seat was probably somewhere near Riccarton. Gavin of Hoscote (16th C.) listed among men accused in 1579/80 of committing raids into England. He was ‘Gawen Elliot of Hostcoit’, accused along with Robert of Redheugh and Walter Scott of Harden of a raid on Coquet Water. William of Hoscote was also among those listed, and hence it is unclear which of the two was the Laird at the time, or whether they were the same men as other Elliots, with other designations. Gavin 2nd Laird of Falnash (d.c.1584) son of Archibald. He appears to have avoided being involved in many disputes, which is unusual for the time. He is listed in 1561 (as brother of Archie’s Will) among Border lairds who appeared before the Queen to promise to present the names of thieves. He is among Elliots who had a bond in 1561/2 with the Kerrs of Ferniehirst, to enter Thomas Routledge into prison at Ferniehirst (the others were his father Archie of Ferniehirst, John of Copshaw and ‘El- der Will’). In a bond of 1562 with Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst he is described as ‘of the Merynes’ (i.e. ‘Merry Naze’). He is first recorded as Laird of Falnash in 1566 in an altercation with Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig ‘concerning violent profits from certain lands’. In 1569 he signed a bond of security in Hawick with Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch acting as surety for him; he is recorded as ‘Gawin Elliot in Fallinesche’ and 14 tenants of his are also listed. When he failed to appear in 1569, Scott of Buccleuch was to be liable for £1000. He was to be sent to St. Andrews as a pledge, with Will of Gorrenberry, Gavin Elliott of Skelfhill (later of Stobs) and Sim of Dodburn designated as his relief pledges. Along with several other Elliots he signed the bond with the Regent Morton in 1572. He was entered into ward in St. Andrews in 1573. In 1575 he was one of the men summoned by the Privy Council to resolve the feud between the Elliots and the Pringles. He was listed in 1576 among local lairds who acted jointly as sureties for Hob Elliot, ‘Mirk Hob’ in Penchrise as well as ‘Vicar’s Hob’ Elliot, pledging that they would refrain from theft, but in default of the pledge by 1578/9. In 1583/4 he was among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council. He was dead by the end of 1584. He had at least 4 children: William, who succeeded; Archibald of Muselee; Gilbert; and Alexander ‘of Fallon’. In 1598/9 there were complaints against brothers, tenants and servants of William of Falnash, including ‘Stottan Gib’ and his brother John and Archie of Muselee and his brother Alexander; they may all have been his sons. Gavin ‘Scot’s Hob’s Gavin’ (16th C.) son of ‘Scottis Hob’, hence his father was clearly Robert, and he was related to the Elliots of Park. In 1578 there was a dispute between John Cunningham of Glengarnock, who had held him as a pledge for about three years, and John Hamilton of Stonehouse, who was supposed to receive him, but let him go. He was listed in 1578 among pledges who were to meet again to suppress lawlessness on the Border. In 1580 he was among a number of Borderers held in Blackness Castle and presented to the Privy Council by their keeper, Malcolm Douglas of Mains. In 1580/1 he was sentenced to imprisonment for several crimes of theft, along with other Elliots, Armstrongs and Nixons. In 1581 Martin of Braidlie and others were cautioned for his not appearing and fined in 1582/3; he is recorded there as ‘Scottis Hobbes Gawin’ and ‘Hobbis Jok’ was one of the cautioners, who may have been his brother. He is ‘Scotes Hobbe’ when recorded among the Elliots of Park in 1583. Gavin (16th C.) son of Martin of Braidlie. He is listed in 1580 among a group of Elliots (including his brothers Hobbie and Archie, and 3 cousins), who attacked the lands of Harwood (on Teviot), stealing 40 cows and oxen, and then later attacked Slaidhills, Whitlaw and Hoscote; he was declared a rebel after not appearing. They were also implicated in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh in 1580. He is probably the ‘Gawan Ellot called the clarke’ listed among the Elliots of Braidlie in 1583. It is unclear why his nickname should be the ‘Clerk’ (perhaps jocularly for cleric, scholar or scribe). It is possible he was the ‘Gawine Elliott of [ ]’ (with the designation blank) listed first in 1590 among other Elliots, Croziers and Armstrongs, accused of taking cows and horses from the tenants of Woodhall and Netherhouses in England. Gavin of Swinsteal (16th C.) recorded ‘in Swinsteis’ in 1576 when he was ‘surety found not to molest’ with the Privy Council. He was also recorded as ‘sometime in Newbiggin, and now in Swinsteis’ in 1578/9; presumably he was also the Gavin in Newbiggin recorded in the register of the Privy Council in 1574. He was among 22 Border Lairds who did not appear before the Privy Council when summoned. However, he was among the sureties who swore that they had earlier presented ‘Adie of the Schawis’. He was also listed similarly in 1581, among a large group denounced as rebels for failing to present men to answer their rieving crimes. He was also listed in 1583/4 among Border Lairds who were summoned to appear before the Privy Council to discuss keeping peace on the Border, where he is recorded as ‘Gawine Ellot of Swinsteidis’. It seems probable he was the same man as Gavin of Brugh, brother of Robert of Redheugh, who held the lands of Swinsteal (and not the same as the contemporary son of Martin of Braidlie or the Laird of Baillielie and Stobs). In 1581 he is probably the Gavin, listed along with William as brothers of Robert of Redheugh in 1581 when they witnessed the sasine for Gavin Gledstains inheriting Stobs (with Gavin of Baillielie, Robert of Redheugh and 2 tenants of Swinsteal also acting as witnesses).

Gavin (16th C.) recorded in 1587/8 when accused by Sir John Forster of being on a raid on England in 1585, along with many other Elliots. His name is given as ‘Wilcox’ Gawen Ellott; it is unclear what this means, but one possibility is that he was ‘Will Cock’s Gavin’, and perhaps son of Will who was related to ‘Cock’ Crozier. ‘Willkoke Elwald’, recorded in 1541, could have been his father. Gavin ‘John’s Gavin’ of Fiddletone (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1606 when he was accused of cutting off the nose of Thomas Tweedie ‘in Dunsyre’. A group of Armstrongs were separately charged. Robert Elliot, younger of Falnash, acted as cautionser for him. Given his nickname, his father was presumably John. He must have been related to Ninian, son of William of Fiddleton, who was executed in 1608. Gavin (d.1606/7) son of Gavin of Horsleyhill, see Gavin Elliott of Stobs. Gavin of Hillhouse (16th/17th C.) one of 3 men who were meant to have plotted the murder of Walter Scott of Buccleuch in a foiled plot of 1624, part of a feud between the Elliots and the Scotts. He was listed as ‘Gawane Ellot of Hillhille’ and ‘Gawine Ellott in Halhouse’. Gavin of Braidliie (16th/17th C.) younger son of William of Dinlabyre and Braidlie. He is probably the Gavin, brother of Robert ‘of Drumlybyre’ who was denounced as a rebel in 1611, along with several other Elliots and Armstrongs, for hunting illegally, as well as destroying woods etc. Gavin (16th/17th C.) recorded being ‘of Cokle’ in 1611 when Robert of Falnash was cautionser for him in Jedburgh. Gavin (d.be. 1618) described as ‘Gawane Ellott in Hassindeane Burne’ in 1619 when his wife Helen Elliot raised an action to try Hector Turnbull in Clarilaw for his murder. Their children Gavin, Samuel and Elizabeth are also mentioned. Gilbert, son of Gilbert Elliott of Stobs, appeared on their behalf (and so may have been a relative). Gavin of Brugh (d.be. 1631) youngest son of Robert of Redheugh and Jean Scott, and brother of Robert the 16th chief. He was probably raised partly by his step-father, Gavin Elliot of Stobs. He may be the Gavin, who, along with his brother Archibald (brother of Robert of Redheugh) in 1581 witnessed a transaction between Gavin of Baille (later of Stobs) and James McDougall of Makerstoun. He may be the ‘Gawan Ellot his brother’ recorded along with Robert of Redheugh and other Elliots in 1583. He is ‘of Brugh’ when he witnessed a deed in 1597 and is recorded as ‘in the Burgh’ in 1599 when he had a bond with the Laird of Buccleuch. Additionally in 1599 he was one of the leading Elliots and Armstrongs to write to Lord Scrope to...

get their family hostages freed from England. He was among Elliots who raided into England in 1603 and later had remission for this crime. In 1612 he complained to the Privy Council about being attacked by servants of Douglas of Cavers, specifically that William Douglas of Whitriggs and others confronted his family and servants on their way home from the Kirk, ‘threw thame af thair horssis, pullit thame in myris, struck thern with horse wands about thair lugeis and upoun thair face’, and violently took his sons sword; however, the men were acquitted. He helped his nephew Robert of Redheugh in his dispute with Buccleuch, thus putting himself in debt. In 1621 Robert granted him Over and Nether Dodburn and Branxholmebrae, as well as discharging him from all previous bonds. In 1625 he was one of the men who broke out of Selkirk jail (the others being Robert Scott of Thirlestane, George Davidson of Kames, Thomas Little of Meikledale and John ‘Skailis’). He married Margaret Chisholme (who may have been a daughter of Chisholme of that Ilk) and they had 4 children: Archibald, who died before him; Gilbert, who succeeded; Robert, mentioned in 1621; and William, who became Provost of Peebles. However, the first couple of generations of this family are quite uncertain, and it has been suggested that 2 of his sons were illegitimate. He was certainly the first of the Elliots of Brugh, a family that was well represented in the Hawick area for at least the next 200 years. In 1631 his widow sold Over and Nether Dodburn and Branxholmebrae to William Elliott, younger of Stobs. Gavin (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘of the Schawis’ in 1611 when William of Falnash was cautioner for him in Jedburgh. He was further ‘callit of ye Schawis’ in 1623; Rowie Foster stole sheep from ‘Callshiels’ owned by him and John Nixon in Lawshill. He was probably related to the earlier Elliots of Shawis. Gavin (17th C.) recorded as possessor of the lands of Burnmouth, Over Heuchhouse, Nether Hightrees, Dyke, Kilford and Byrestead in 1632. Given the lands he owned, he was probably of some significance among local Elliots. Perhaps the same Gavin is recorded in the same 1632 document as joint tenant, along with John Scott, of the lands of Over and Nether ‘Closee alias Welshaw’ in Liddesdale. Gavin (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, married to Bessie Veitch. Their daughter Helen was baptised in 1635. Gavin (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, married to Marion Elliot. Their daughter Marion was baptised in 1636. as Gavin of Caerlenrig, who had a daughter Mary. Gavin of Caerlenrig (17th C.), 4th son of Robert of Falnash. He was mentioned as early as 1635, when he witnessed the marriage of his brother William. He had a charter of Caerlenrig from Sir Gilbert of Stobs in 1668. In about 1668 he purchased Falnash from his brother Archibald, and settled it on his son Ninian. He was ‘in Carlenrick rig’ in 1678 when he paid the land tax in Cavers Parish. He was ancestor of the Elliots of Caerlenrig. He married Janet Elliot by 1655 and their children included: Ninian, who succeeded as Laird of Falnash; Robert ‘of Carlenrickrig’ (b.1655), baptised in Hawick Parish; Francis of Fenwick; and Mary.

Rev. Gavin (d.bef. 1678) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1645, he became minister at Kirkton in 1652. However, he was deprived in 1662 (for refusing to conform to Episcopacy), and forced to leave not only his manse, but the bounds of the Presbytery. His sons were Robert and William both ‘in Borthwickbrae’. He was presumably related to the Elliots of Horsleyhill, Borthwickbrae, Borthwickshielis, etc., but the precise relationship is unclear. The name of his wife and date of his death are both unknown. Gavin of Outsider Rig (17th C.) recorded in a list of landowners of Hassendean Parish in 1666. Ninian of Eweslees was his grandfather, and appointed his guardian. His brothers were William of Unthank and James in Harwood. In 1662 he was among a long list of men fined and given a pardon by the King after the Restoration. In 1678 he paid the land tax for lands in Wilton Parish valued at £360. Gavin (17th C.) described as ‘in Stob’ in 1668 when his son Gilbert became a baker’s apprentice in Edinburgh. This is unlikely to have been the same man as Gavin Elliott of Grange, since his son Gilbert was the 1st Lord Minto. Gavin (17th C.) recorded in 1673 as ‘collector of customs and excise at Surone (Sowrone)’ when he had 3 separate bonds. This may have been ‘Souden’, i.e. Southdean. Gavin 4th Laird of Midlem Mill (1727–86) eldest surviving son of Robert and Katherine Elliot. He was born in Old Langholm Castle. He left a sort of diary in the family bible. He was educated at Hawick Grammar School and then went to college in Edinburgh for 3 years, lived at Midlem Mill for 18 months and moved to London in 1743. There he joined the counting house of Alexander Coutts, before sailing to Virginia in 1745 where he opened a store. Returning to Britain in 1747, he lived in London and then in 1752 moved to Danzig as a clerk with Gibson & Hogg. He succeeded his father in 1753, but there was a large debt owed to Col.
William of Wells, and the family estate was sold by the trustees in about 1756. He subsequently lived in London. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He married Anna Catharine Clemens in Danzig in 1758 (and he received a large dowry). They had 7 children, including Robert (who died aged 11), Catherine Elizabeth (who married Rev. William Lance), Helena Constantia (who died young), Clemens (also died young), Anna Renata (who married Adam Ogilvie of Hartwoodsmyres, and received money in the will of her relative William, son of Sir Gilbert Elliot of Stobs), Gilbert (died aged 12) and William (the only surviving son, who became Rector of Simonburn). He died in London and was buried in Greenwich Church. Gavin of Fenwick (18th C.) last Elliot of Fenwick. He was son of Robert and Katherine, daughter of William of Arkleton. He may have also had a brother James, for whom he witnessed a baptism in 1758. In a pedigree of 1811 (by J.W. Henderson) he is said to have lived with ‘a loose woman’ and had a son (who went abroad in about 1796 and died), as well as several daughters. He eventually acknowledged her as his wife, in England, so his children could succeed to daughters. He eventually acknowledged her as his wife, in England, so his children could succeed to daughters. Elliot (18th C.) farmer at Burnmouth in Liddesdale, recorded in 1748. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Elliots in Burnmouth. George (1729/30–1805) tenant farmer at Doorpool in Rulewater. He was probably brother of William, tenant at Lanton Mains. He may be the George at Ruletownhead on the 1794 Horse Tax Rolls. He is recorded at Doorpool on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 5 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid the dog tax at Doorpool in the same year. He may also be the George who owned parts of Ruletownhead, ‘Bossithill’ and Burnkinford that were among the possessions of Charles Kerr of Abbotrule by 1811.

He married Mary Scott, who died in 1807, aged 71. Their children, baptised in Bedrule Parish, included: William (b.1767); who died in infancy; Mabel (b.1768); Mary (b.1770); George (b.1770); and William (1772–1855), who farmed at Doorpool. The family are recorded on a tombstone at old Abbotrule Kirk. George (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their children included: Elizabeth (b.1786); Gilbert (b.1789); Janet (b.1791); Mary (b.1793); James (b.1795); William (b.1797); and John (b.1800). George of Larriston (18th/19th C.) see George Fraser Scott-Elliot Adm. Sir George (1784–1863) 2nd son of the 1st Earl of Minto. He joined the Navy and at a young age took part in the capture of the Danish Fleet un Copenhagen Harbour, led by Lord Nelson. He accompanied his father (then Governor-General of Bengal) out to Java, and on the trip made one of the only known sketches of John Leyden. He captured H.M.S. Victory 1827–32, and was later promoted to Admiral, as well as Lord of the Admiralty. He was also General of the Mint in Scotland. A Whig in politics, he became the first M.P. for Roxburghshire after the passing of the Reform Bill in 1832, defeating Lord John Scott. He took part in the Hawick celebrations for the passing of the Bill and was made an Honorary Burgess in 1833. In 1834 many of the Whig members of the Jedforest Club resigned when the Chairman refused to toast his health. He was defeated by Scott in the 1835 election. It is said that he helped get John Ewen appointed as minister at Hobkirk. In 1810 in Calcutta he married Eliza Cecilie, daughter of James Ness of Osogdly, Yorkshire and they had 9 children, one of whom, George, was also an Admiral and M.P. He may be the ‘Hon. Captain Elliot, Teviotbank’ who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. George Mackenzie (1822–56) 5th son of James, 3rd Laird of Wolfelee. He went to Australia with his brother Thomas. A stone was erected to his memory, with an inscription describing that he died at Gracemore Fitzroy River.

Gideon of Horsleyhill (16th/17th C.) along with ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden and Gideon Murray, he was responsible for burning West Burnflat (in Liddesdale) in 1599, for which they obtained remission in 1604. He (probably wrongly transcribed as ‘Gilbert’) was one of the landowners of Hassendean who the Baron, James Cunningham, tried to evict in 1603. He was also recorded in 1611 as witness to a marriage contract of William Scott of Harden and Agnes Murray. Dr. Gideon (d.bef. 1712) third son of Robert of Bewlie, tenant in Borthwicksheils. He became an apprentice surgeon in Edinburgh in 1681. He became a Fellow of the Royal College of Surgeons of Edinburgh in 1689 and was Chair in 1693/4 and 1699/1700. In 1695 he and Thomas Burnet were employed by the Council of King William to visit the Earl of Home, then a prisoner in the Hirsel, and report whether his health would allow him to be transferred to Edinburgh Castle. In 1691 he married Margaret Cunningham, heiress of North Sinton and was then designated ‘of North Sinton’. In 1705 he secondly married Jean, daughter of James Loch of Drylaw. In 1695 and 1704 he was listed on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire. His children all died young. His portrait hangs in Surgeons’ Hall in Edinburgh. Gideon of Harwood-on-Teviot (d.1735), 3rd or 4th son of Simon of Swinside and grandson of William of the Binks. He was recorded as a Hawick Parish heritor in 1718 and became an elder in 1723. In 1724 he purchased Teindside from his brother Robert. He was probably the uncle of Rev. Simon Haliburton, minister of Castleton and Ashkirk. He married Mary Haliburton in 1715 and she died in 1735. Their children (all baptised in Hawick) included: Jean (b.1719); Barbara (b.1720); Simon (b.1722); Christian (b.1723), who married Rev. Isaac Davidson, minister at Sorbie, Wigtonshire; Elizabeth (b.1726), who married Andrew Oliver; and Mary (b.1728). Only Christian and Elizabeth survived their mother. In the 1719 baptism in Hawick he is recorded in error as ‘Simeon Eliot of Harwood’, with his wife being a ‘Halyborton’, and the witnesses Gideon Scott of Falnash and ‘Doctor Halyburton’ (probably his wife’s brother). In 1726 he was ‘of harwood’ and the witnesses were Robert Scott of Falnash and Andrew Scott . . . . The 1728 baptism was witnessed by Robert Scott of ‘F...’ (probably Falnash) and ‘Mr. Shiel in Todja...’. Gideon (b.c.1793) agricultural labourer in Castleton Parish. In 1835 and 1841 he was at Bellshiels. He married Agnes Anderson (b.1795) and their children were: Jean (b.1819); Betty (b.1821); Gideon (b.1824); Helen (b.1827); Mary (b.1830); Agnes (b.1832); Anne (b.1835); and Janet (b.1840). He could be the Gideon, son of John and Betty Crozier, born in Castleton in 1791. Gideon (1833–1913) son of John and Jane Goodfellow. In 1861 he was a dyer living at Muselie. In Robertson Parish in 1853 he married Margaret Wilson. Their children included: Agnes E.; Jane (b.1856); John (b.1859); Thomas (b.1861); James (b.1864); Archibald Hoy (b.1866); William (b.1868); Francis (b.1870); and Thomas (b.1873). Gilbert (15th C.) son of Nicholas, listed among a large number of Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. Perhaps the same Gilbert was mentioned in 1493 when his son Robert produced a remission at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh for the crime of stealing a grey horse from William Scott of Tushielaw. Gilbert (15th C.) son of Nicholas, listed among a large number of Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. Perhaps the same Gilbert was accused in 1502 of the theft of 8 oxen from Newhall, with William of ‘lahope’ serving as his surety. He may also be the Gilbert who is 1502 was surety for John in Foulshiels. Gilbert ‘Gib’ of the Shaws (16th C.) recorded in 1578 when he was held by Pater Hay of Megginch, with a pledge to the King for good behaviour. Later in 1578 he was ‘Gib Elliot of the Schawis’ when he was released from being warded with the Provost and Bailies of Perth, but requested to meet with other Border Lairds to promise to suppress lawlessness on the Border. In 1580 he was held in ward in Falkland Castle when his keeper was ordered to present him to the Privy Council. It is unclear how he was related to other Elliots. He is probably the ‘Gib of the Schawis’ listed in 1580 when his procurator explained to the Privy Council that he had ‘departit hame to his awin cuntrie and sensyne wes slayne’. In 1583 he is ‘Gybbe Elliot of the Shaeus’ in a letter from English wardens; he is listed among the close kin of Robert of Redheugh, and surely related to Adam of the Shaws, who is also listed. Gilbert (16th C.) recorded among merchants of Edinburgh in a case before the Privy Council in 1565/6. His surname is given as ‘Elwand’. Gilbert ‘Gib’ (16th C.) nephew of Martin of Braidlie. In 1569 he was recorded as ‘Martin’s Gib the Cousin’ when he was among a number of pledges to support Martin of Braidlie with the Regent Moray. He was recorded being ‘left with my Lord Regentis Grace to the returning of Martine Elliot’. He was also recorded in 1580 among Elliots who raided the farms of Harwood (on Teviot), Slaidhills, Whitlaw and Hoscote; he was declared a rebel after not appearing. In 1584 he was ‘Gyb the cousin’, who defended the tower at Larriston, which was taken by an English raiding force under Sir John Forster; he was said to have been trained as a soldier in the wars in Flanders and France. He is ‘Martin’s Gib being Martins cosen’, recorded in 1590, along with ‘Martin’s Airchie’ and Martin’s brother Gib and others, when accused of stealing cattle and horses from England. Also in 1590 he and William, younger of the Steele, were accused of stealing cattle 2 years earlier. Additionally he was ‘Martins Gib being Martins cosen’ when accused of further riving in 1590, along with elder Airchie, Will of the Steele and ‘Lang’ John. It is unclear who his father was, or whether he was the same as one of the contemporary Gibs. His killing by men of Tynedale is recorded in 1597, with the description that he was ‘a notorious offender in England, and besides, being a soldier and trained in war, was a captain and principal leader’. Gilbert ‘Gib’, ‘Sweet Milk’ (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. He is listed as ‘Gib Elliott, callit Sweit Milk’. It seems likely he was related to the earlier Hob and the later Dand, who had the same nickname, as well as William, suppos- edly commemorated in the song ‘Ranton Roarin Willie’. Gilbert ‘Gib’ (16th/17th C.) brother of Robert of Redheugh. In 1578 he was listed among Border Lairds who were directed to meet in order to pledge to suppress lawlessness; he was then ‘Gibbie Elliot, broder to Robert Elliot of Redheugh’. In 1583 a letter from Musgrave to Burleigh describes him as ‘Gibbe Elliot’ among the most important Elliots of Liddesdale, along with his brothers Robert of Redheugh, William of Hartsgarth and Archibald. He may be the Gib, ‘son to Robine Elliott’ who was among a number of Elliots (along with servants of Robert of Redheugh), Croziers and others accused in 1590 of stealing livestock from Middleton Hall in England in 1589; he is recorded as ‘Gib Elliot son to Robin’, and his servant John Noble and ‘his man’ John Shevell were also listed. In 1591 he was described as ‘louit freind and servitour’ of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme when he rented Commonside, Northcrot, Hillend and ‘Stoghill’ from him, being given this lease for service performed for the Laird of Branxholme. In 1595 he was also servitor of Sir Walter Scott Branxholme when he witnessed a charter. He is probably the Gybb Elwood allias Robes Gibb’ who, according to an English account, along with Scott of Buccleuch and Scott of Harden met with some Englishmen to get help in the plan to rescue Kinmont Willie. He is probably the ‘Gyb Ellot brother to Robert Elliot of Reidheuch’ who was held as a prisoner in England in 1597. In 1599 he had a remission, along with Gideon Murray of Ellbank and Walter Scott of Harden, for burning Westburnflat in Liddesdale. In 1603 he was probably ‘my louit Gilbert Elliot of the Kirktooun’ to whom Sir Walter Scott leased the lands of Wester Commonside and Northcrot. He may have been an illegitimate son of Robert the 16th Chief, with his mother possibly being Helen Kidd (unless this story is complete fabrication); he would then be the ‘bastard brother of Robert Elliot of Redheugh’ recorded in 1603. It is not impossible that he is the same man as ‘Gibbie wi the Gowden Gartins’. Gilbert ‘Gib’ (16th/17th C.) younger son of Martin of Braidlie. He may be the ‘Gibbie’ who, along with Archie and their accomplices, was accused of taking part in a raid into England in 1587. He is probably also the ‘Martins Gib’ in a group complained about by the English Warden for the murder of 2 Englishmen during a raid in 1588. He is recorded as brother of ‘Martin’s Arche’ in 1590 when, along with Gib, cousin of Martin, and others, he was accused of stealing cattle and horses from England. He was probably the ‘Martin’s Gib’ who, along with Will Elliot of Heuchhouse and ‘Adie’s John’ Crozier were accused of stealing from William Henderson of ‘Fallofeeld’ in 1590. Also in 1590 he was accused of stealing from Thomas Rutherford of Blackhall (in England), along with Martin’s sons (and so presumably his brothers) Airchie and John, as well as Martin of Prickinghaugh. He was probably the ‘Martin’s Gib’ accused in 1590 along with a list of Elliots and others said to have stolen from the ‘Hewrde’ family, as well as maiming and taking prisoner Christopher ‘of the Whithall’. He was probably the ‘Martinges Gib’ listed in 1590 among Elliots and Armstrongs complained about by a large group of Englishmen for a raid on Blackcleugh in Kirkhaugh, taking many prisoners for ransom. He was probably the Gib, son of Martin, who (along with his brother John) was part of a complaint about a raid into Gilspain in 1596, led by Sir Walter Scott of Harden. He is probably the ‘Martin’s Gibbe’ who Lord Evers described being killed by English raiders in 1597; the slayer was a Dodd, it is said in retaliation for an earlier raid. He was described as ‘brought up in the wars in Flanders and France, and has since been a leader to that wicked race’. Note that he may be confused with ‘Martin’s Gib the Cousin’, who is recorded at about the same time. Gilbert ‘Gib’ (16th/17th C.) younger son of Gavin of Falnash. In 1595 he was mentioned along with Wat Scott of Harden and 2 of his nephews (sons of William of Falnash), Archie and Hob in a list of English complaints against Liddesdale men. His name is recorded as ‘Gibbe Elliot brother to Will E. of the Fawenesi’. He may be the ‘Gilbert Elliot in Fallinasche Mill’ recorded in 1618 when Walter Scott of Buccleuch complained that he had cut down 60 alder trees from his lands of Gorrenberry; William ‘Ellote, called of Fallinasche in Braidlie’ was also accused of cutting trees and may have been his brother. Not appearing before the Privy Council, he was denounced as a rebel. Gilbert ‘Stottin Gib’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1598/9 as ‘Gib Elliot, called Stottin Gib’, along with his brother John and other ‘brothers, tenants and servants’ of William of Falnash. There were complaints against them by Margaret, widow of James Douglas of Knightsridge, for stealing cattle from her lands of Corsetburn. His brother John was also listed; it is possible they were both brothers of William of Falnash and hence sons of Gavin of Falnash. Gilbert of the Mains (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1594/5 when Gavin Elliott of Stobs was his surety for a promise to pay taxes owed to James Douglas of Cavers for some of his lands in Teviotdale. He was there recorded being ‘of the Manis’. In 1599 he witnessed bonds (signed at Branxholme) between Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch and the Armstrongs and Elliots of Liddesdale. His name is recorded as ‘Gilbert Elliot of the Maynis’; it is unclear where ‘the Mains’ might have been, but it seems likely he was a prominent Elliot of the time, and perhaps the same as one of the contemporary family members noted by another designation. He was also ‘of the Mains’ in 1602 when he signed the bond among Border lairds to keep the peace. Gilbert ‘Gib the Galyart’ (16th/17th C.) convicted in 1618 of stealing the purse of John Armstrong of Holm when they were in the house.
of Alexander Young of Selkirk. He was sentenced to be scourged through Edinburgh and then banished from the Kingdom. It is unclear to which branch of the Elliots he belonged. His nickname referred to a lively dance, and was apparently a common nickname for someone who was smart in dress or lively in spirit. Gilbert ‘Gib the Tutor’ (17th C.) described as a servant of Robert of Redheugh. He was involved in stealing cattle from Englishmen at ‘Chipsies’ and ‘Islysyde’ in about 1623. He was one of the men who had planned to murder Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1624, as part of the feud between the Scotts and the Elliots. He is listed as ‘Gib Elliot, callit the Tutour’, along with Gavin of Hillhouse and ‘Will Elliot, callit Gibbis Will’, who may have been his son. They were meant to kill the Earl in Jedburgh at the time of a Justice Court, and then followed him to Edinburgh, but after failing they confessed. Robert of Redheugh stated that the idea for the murder originally came from him, but Gavin of Hillhouse said that ‘Gib was bot a feible couthcer and wald never do the turne’. Gilbert (17th C.) married Janet Richardson in Kelso in 1635. They had a daughter Elizabeth in 1636. Janet (b.1639) and Margaret (b.1642), both baptised in Hawick Parish, were probably also his children. He may be the same as one of the other Gilberts. Gilbert (17th C.) signatory of the National Covenant in Hawick in 1638. He is recorded as being ‘now in Quhithauche’, which could be Whithaugh in Liddesdale. Gilbert of Brugh (d.bef. 1648) 2nd son of Gavin, he gained the Lairdship since his elder brother Archibald died before 1621. In 1621 he is recorded as witness to a contract for money due by the Chisholmes to his deceased brother. He is recorded in the Circuit Court of 1623 when he acted as caution (along with several others) for Mungo Scott in Castleside (who may have been his tenant). His wife’s name is unknown and his only son was Archibald (d.1650), who was served heir to his grandfather in 1648. However, details of these generations of the Elliots of Brugh seem quite uncertain. Gilbert (17th C.) younger son of Robert of Faulhush. In 1637 he was apprenticed to John Nichol, merchant in Edinburgh. Gilbert (17th C.) younger son of Archibald of Brugh. He was mentioned being ‘in Carlrops’ and brother of John in Southfield (who succeeded to Brugh) in 1665. Nothing else is known about him. Gilbert (17th/18th C.) referred to as ‘of the Park’ in 1699. He and his son William ‘in Castletoun’ were subject of a complaint of non-payment by William of Bewlie, recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books. It is unclear how he might have been related to earlier Elliots associated with Park. Sir Gilbert ‘Gibbie’ (1651–1718) of Headshaw and of Minto, 1st Baronet and Lord Minto. He was younger son of Gavin Elliott of Grange and Midlem MILL, and grandson of ‘Gibby wi the Gowden Gartins’ (although these early generations are somewhat uncertain). His sister Margaret was the mother of Rev. Robert Lithgow of Ashkirk. He may have purchased part of the land of Minto (perhaps Craigend and Deanfoot) from John Turnbull in about 1674. He may be the ‘Minto’ who acted as an agent for renting some of the Duchess of Buccleuch’s farms in 1675. He may be the Laird of Minto who paid the Land Tax on more than £2100 in 1678. He was a lawyer in Edinburgh, and a zealous Presbyterian. In 1679 he acted to have the preacher William Veitch’s sentence commuted from execution to banishment, and it is said that this established him as a capable lawyer. In 1681 he is reported to have ridden from London, beating the King’s messenger, and allowing the Earl of Argyll to escape from Edinburgh Castle before the capital sentence was imposed. He later took part in Argyll’s disastrous expedition to Scotland from Holland (perhaps helping to raise funds, along with the Lairds of Torwoodlee and Polwarth). In 1685 he was among the rebels (under Sir Patrick Home and Sir John Cochrane) who engaged the Royalist force at Muirdykes in Renfrewshire, and afterwards fled to Holland. He is probably the ‘wryter in Edinburgh’ listed among others in 1685 as fugitive rebels. He was convicted of high treason for plotting against the King, hid out in the Border hills and fled to Holland. He was pardoned in 1687; it was stated this was because of the service to the Crown offered by his father. He became an advocate in 1687 and was fully back in favour when William of Orange acceded in 1689, when he was appointed Clerk to the Privy Council in 1689 (until 1692). He was knighted in 1692. In 1694 he was listed as one of the creditors of Gilbert Elliott of Stanedge. In 1696 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire and in 1698 for Selkirkshire. In 1696 he bought the Headshaw estate (from the female heiress Mary and her husband Patrick Por teous) and in 1697 purchased Langhope (probably the one near Ashkirk). He was created a Baronet of Nova Scotia (for Headshaw) in 1700 and became a Judge. He was appointed one of the Parliamentary Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1702 and hence was a member of the last Scottish Parliament, voting against the Union. In 1703 he purchased the Minto estate (which had been combined with Craigend and Deanfoot) from Gideon Scott of Highchester. He witnessed baptisms for George Douglas of Friarshaw in 1703 and 1704. In 1704 he was one of the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire and for Selkirkshire. In 1705 he was appointed Deputy Keeper of the Signet and shortly afterwards was created a Lord of Session, taking the title of first Lord Minto. Also in 1705 he had a royal charter for the lands of Headshaw, Dryden, Crawknowe and ‘Clews’ in Ashkirk Parish, which included the erection of these lands into the Barony of Headshaw, as well as the patronage and teinds of Ashkirk Parish.

In 1706 he combined the Barony of Headshaw and his lands of Langhope and Minto into the Barony of Minto and Craigend. In 1705 he was one of the members of the Scottish Parliament to vote against having a single Parliament for the whole of the United Kingdom. He is recorded in a discharge with the Burgh of Selkirk in 1717. His portrait was painted in about 1715. On the frieze of the pulpit in Ashkirk Kirk are the initials ‘S / GE’ and ‘D / (I)C’ for ‘Sir Gilbert Elliot’ and ‘Dame Jean Carre’, his second wife. He married first Mary (or Helen) Stevenson, daughter of an Edinburgh Burgess, and they had one daughter, Mary, who married Sir John Elphinstone of Logie; his first wife died in 1689 after 9 years of marriage. In 1692 he secondly married Jean, daughter of Sir Andrew Kerr of Cavers Carre. Their children were: Sir Gilbert (b.1693), who succeeded; and Andrew, who drowned at age 16 on his way to Holland. Gilbert (17th/18th C.) 2nd son of Robert of Larriston and grandson of James Elliot of Stobs. He was a merchant in Hawick, was said to be ‘of Nethermill’ (which was probably the place of that name in Dumfriesshire, adjacent to lands owned by his grandfather, John Maxwell of Cowhill), and is described in 1696 as ‘brother german to Robert Elliot of Larriston’. His son Charles Edward was born in 1693, and settled in Essex, while another (unnamed) son eventually emigrated to California, where he is said to have descendants. It is claimed that both sons fought in the 1715 Jacobite uprising and later lived in Java for a while (but like other family legends, this may be confusing generations and individuals).

Gilbert (17th/18th C.) son of William of Penchrise and Janet, daughter of John Elliot of Thorlieshope. He was ‘at Mount’, which may have been the farmstead near Whitropefoot. He died without issue. Gilbert (c.1670–aft. 1727) second son of John of Brugh, who farmed at Southfield, and younger brother of William ‘the Laceman’. He lived for many years at Nether Southfield and took over the tenancy at Winningtoursig in 1710. He was also factor for his cousin, Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. He is probably the Gilbert who leased the farm of Over Southfield (perhaps an error for Nether Southfield) from the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1698. He was at Nether Southfield in 1698 when he witnessed a baptism for James ‘Colwort’ in Whitlaw. Both he and John (his father) witnessed Hawick baptisms in 1700 for Robert Scott in Newbigging and for William Scott (from Wilton Parish). He witnessed a baptism for Glendinnings in 1702, and both he and John ‘in Nether Southfield’ witnessed a baptism in 1704. In 1705 he witnessed baptisms for James Stevenson in Harwood, for Southfield shoemaker John Elliot and for Walter Scott in Hawick Shiel, and in 1706 another for William Cowan, herd in Southfield. He was stated in 1767 to have been tenant in Nether Southfield like his father before him and in about 1710 he ‘broke Hawick Common by plowing a part of it’, for which he got no protection from the Duchess’ Chamberlain, ‘Auld Falnash’; during the riding of the Common that year his flock was hounded more than those of the other neighbouring farmers and he was fined by the Hawick Bailies. In 1717 there was a complaint that one of his servants had encroached upon the Hawick Common at Winnington Moss. He witnessed the baptism of a child of Walter Scott in Newbigging in 1725. In 1727 his brother William of Wells left him money in his will. He is probably the Gilbert who witnessed the baptism of his grandson Gilbert in Hawick in 1734. He married Agnes Turnbull of Southfield in 1698; she was daughter of Walter Turnbull (from Jedburgh) and Helen Elliot (from Hawick). Their children were: Jean and Barbara, twins (b.1701); ‘Helenora’ (b.1702), who married James Grieve, farmer at Commonside; Jane (or ‘Jannet’, b.1704); John (b.1708), who became a Captain and married Jean, daughter of James Grieve in Todshawhaugh; Agnes (b.1710), who died in infancy; Elizabeth (Arabella, b.1712); James; and another Agnes (b.1718). They were all christened locally (in Hawick, Cavers and Kirktoun Parishes). The 1701 baptism was witnessed by his father John and brother George, the 1702 baptism by Robert Thomson in Newmill and James Ogilvie in Branxholme and the 1704 baptism by John Elliott (uncle of Sir Gilbert of Stobs) and shoemaker John Elliot. He was referred to as ‘Mr.
Elliot in Rig’ in the 1712 baptism and as being ‘in Rige’ in 1718. The year of his death is not known. Gilbert (d.bef. 1752) son of Robert of Larriston. It is unclear if he was the oldest son, but he appears to have been the only one who had issue. He settled in Newcastle and married Margaret, daughter of James Scott of Calfield. He had 2 children: Jane Stewart, who married John Williams of Kensington; and Maj.-Gen. William (b.1741), who bought back the family lands of Larriston, but died unmarried. Sir Gilbert (1693–1766) 2nd Baronet and Lord Minto, eldest son of ‘Gibbie’. He was educated in law at Utrecht University in the Netherlands, and became an advocate in 1715. He was M.P. for Roxburghshire 1722–26. He reached the bench as a Lord of Session in 1726, assuming the title of Lord Minto, later becoming a Judge and eventually Lord Justice Clerk of Scotland in 1763. It is said that it was partly through his influence that his relative Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs was eventually pardoned for the murder of Colonel Stewart. In 1727 and 1731 he had discharges with the Burgh of Selkirk. He purchased Raperlaw (which had once belonged to an Eliott of Stobs), followed by Fallahill in 1727, Newlands in 1734 and part of Langhaugh in 1743. He was responsible for the extensive alterations carried out at Minto House in 1744 and 1745, including the addition of 68 new windows, and building up a library. He also improved the grounds, with a pond-head being built across the glen in 1735, an avenue of larches added in about 1736, and most of the houses moved to Minto Green. In 1739 he was among the local landowners asked to decide where the Teviot Brig in Hawick should be built. An anti-Jacobite, he reputedly hid among the crags when part of the Jacobite force stopped at Minto House in 1745. He paid the window tax for Minto House in 1748. He was known as a music-lover and supposedly introduced the German flute into Scotland in 1726. When appointed Lord Justice Clerk, he had a house built in Edinburgh, on Argyll Square. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1761. In 1718 he married Helen (d.1774), daughter of Sir Robert Stuart (or Stewart) of Al lanbank and had 13 children: Eleanor (b.1719), who married John Rutherford of Edgerston; Jean (b.1720), who died in infancy; Sir Gilbert (1722–77), who succeeded; Mary (b.1724), who probably died young; Robert (1725–57), Captain in the Royals; Jean (or Jane, 1727–1805), who was author of ‘Flowers of the Forest’; Andrew (b.1728), who became Lieutenant-Governor of New York, married Elizabeth Plumstead and lived at Greenwells; Marianne (1730–1811), who died unmarried in Edinburgh; John (1732–1808), became an Admiral and died at Monteviot; twins Margaret (b.1734), who died in infancy and Ann (or Anne, b.1734), who married Charles Congleton of Congleton in Edinburgh in 1762; Grizell (b.1737), who probably died young; and Archibald (1743–59), who died in Antigua, aged 16. He died suddenly at Minto. Sir Gilbert of Minto (1722–77) 3rd Baronet, son of Sir Gilbert. Born at Minto, he was educated for the Scottish bar, becoming an advocate in 1743. He went to Holland in 1744 and married 2 years later. He was said to be a great public speaker. He was M.P. for Selkirkshire 1753–65 and for Roxburghshire 1765–77 (when he died, but was succeeded as M.P. by his son). He was appointed one of the Lords of the Admiralty, as well as being Keeper of the Signet in Scotland. He was conspicuous as a parliamentary orator, being said to have almost single-handedly argued the successful case for making the office of Sheriffs in Scotland independent of the Crown. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1761 (when still ‘junior’ of Minto). In 1761 he became Lord of the Treasury, in 1762 Treasurer of the House of Commons and from 1771 he was Treasurer of the Navy. He was also known as a man of philosophical interests and literary talent, with his song ‘Amynta’ being popular in its day: it begins ‘My sheep I neglected, I brook my sheep-crook, And all the gay haunts of my youth I forsook’ (or alternatively ‘My sheep I’ve forsaken, and left my sheep-hook, And all the gay haunts of my youth I’ve forsook’). He also had poems published on the death of Col. James Gardiner and the Earl and Countess of Sutherland. In addition he wrote a letter to David Hume, which was later published. Before inheriting Minto he lived in London and later Twickenham. In 1767 he started the first experimental postal service in Hawick. He is probably the Sir Gilbert who is recorded as owner of the lands of Dryden, Headshaw, Crawknowe and Clews in about 1788. In 1746 he married Agnes Murray-Kynynmound, only daughter of Hugh Dalrymple; she was heiress (from Sir Alexander Murray) of Melgund in Forfarshire and of Kynynmound in Fife, and died in 1778. He was succeeded by his son Sir Gilbert (b.1751), who became 1st Earl of Minto and adopted the Murray-Kynynmound extension to his surname when inheriting his mother’s lands. His other children were: Isabella (b.1749), who died unmarried; Hugh (1752–1830), Governor of Madras and the Leeward Islands; Alexander (1754–78) of the East India Company; Rev. Robert (1755–1824), Rector of Wheldrake; David (b.1757), who died aged 5; an unnamed son; Eleanor (1758–1818), who married William Eden, 1st Baron Auckland; and Marianne, who died in Edinburgh in 1811. He died when visiting Marseilles for his health and is buried at Minto. Gilbert (b.1725) born in Cavers Parish, son of Walter in Brugh. He became tenant farmer at Blackburnfoot in Castleton Parish. He married Betty Forbes and their children included: George, who lived in Castleton; Gilbert, tenant in Glenzier, who married a Miss dren included: George, who lived in Castleton; Parish. He married Betty Forbes and their children included: George, who lived in Castleton; Gilbert, tenant in Glenzier, who married a Miss Davidson; William; and Margaret, who married Adam Scott from Langhaugh. Gilbert (b.1731) younger son of the 2nd William of Borthwick- brae. He had one child, Thomas (probably illegitimate, by Sarah Growesmith), who purchased Wilton Lodge. He paid the Horse Tax at Langlands in 1785–86. He is recorded as ‘Gilbert Elliot of Longlands’ or Langlands when he was taxed for having a footman in 1785 and 1786 and a carriage in 1786 and 1787. He was also taxed for having 2 female servants in 1785 and 1786; his son Thomas is listed on the tax roll from 1787, suggesting he may have died or moved. Gilbert (1734–59) eldest son of Capt. John of the Elliots of Brugh. He was baptised in Hawick, the witnesses being his grandfathers Gilbert Elliot and James Grieve. He joined the Navy when no more than 10 years old, and served under Capt. Elliot Elliot (his distant cousin from the Stobs Elliots) on the fireship Actua. In 1759 he was on the Tyger, commanded by Capt. Brereton, ‘who deserted his post for a slight wound in the head and tied a white napkin on his face and went below’. Elliot took over command of the vessel ‘till a cannon shot carried away his bowels, and he dropped on the deck’. Apparently the Captain was court-martialled, and although acquitted was afterwards known in the Navy as the ‘white-faced Captain’ because of this incident. In his will, made a week before his death, he left most of his possessions to his shipmates, but his sword and belt to ‘William Elliot of the Honourable Company’s Military of Madras’ (whose identity is unclear). He died unmarried. Sir Gilbert Murray Kynynmound (1751–1814) 4th Baronet and 1st Earl of Minto. Son of Sir Gilbert and Agnes Murray Kynynmound, he was educated largely in England. He studied for the bar, but followed his father into politics. He became M.P. for Morpeth, Helston and Berwick in 1774 and was known for his debating skills. He was then M.P. for Roxburgh 1777–84 (following in his father’s footsteps), Berwick 1786–90 and Helston 1790–95. He was served heir to his father in 1778, in the Baron of Minto and Headshaw, and the lands of Shielwood. He paid the land tax for Langhope in Ettrick Parish in 1785. In 1780 he held Craigend, but had lifiered much of the rest of Minto to 6 other gentle- men (surely for the sole purpose of allowing them to vote in Roxburghshire, where he was standing as a candidate), each of them having just a little more than the required £400 of land: Alexander Alison; David Dalrymple, Lord Westhall; Sir John Dalrymple, Baron Dalrymple; Rev. Robert Elliot, his brother; Sir John Stewart of Allanbank; and Robert Trotter of Bush. At the same time he disponed the liferent of Dryden to 3 other men: Dr. William Elliot; George Potts, younger of Todrig; and Rev. Simon Haliburton. He was listed as a voter in Selkirkshire in 1788. In 1788 he was listed as owner of most of the Parish of Minto, valued at £2108 13s 4d and Newlands (which had formerly been in Hassendean Parish), valued at £80, as well as Raperlaw (valued at £416) and Willie’s Peel (valued at £104) in Lilliesleaf Parish and the associated teinds (valued at £129 12s 4d), and Shielwood, Dryden, parts of Head- shaw and associated teinds (valued at £1420 18s 4d) in Ashkirk Parish. He was taxed for having 4 servants (gardeners) in 1778 and 1779 and 3 gardeners in 1785 and 1786, with 5 (including butler, footman and groom) in 1787–92 and 6 in 1793, 1794 and 1797. He paid tax on 3 female servants in 1785 and 1786, 6 servants in 1787, 7 in 1788, 6 in 1789, 5 in 1790 and 4 in 1791. He was recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls in 1785–86, when he had 2 carriage horses, 4 in 1787–89 and 6 in 1790–94. In 1797 he was taxed for having 8 farm horses and 1 saddle horse at Minto. He was also taxed for owning a carriage in the period 1787–98. In 1791 he gave a speech in the House of Commons proposing the repeal of the Test and Corporation Acts (a popular cause in Hawick at the time). He was appointed Commissioner in Toulon in 1793, then went to Corsica as Viceroy. In 1796 the Duke of Buccleuch and others tried to convince him to re- main in Corsica rather than contest the election. He was present at the Battle of St. Vincent in 1797, and a sword taken there from the Captain of the ‘San Josef’ was presented to him by Adm. Nelson. On his return in 1797 he was made Earl of Minto for his services attempting to secure Corsica against the French Republic. He was Lieut.- Col. of the 1st Battalion of Roxburghshire voluntees in about 1803. His estate added the lands of Barnhills in 1797 and Hassendeanbank about 1799. In 1806 he resigned the lands of Barnhills, Hassendeanbank, Standhill and Lantonhall in his own favour. He was appointed Governor General of Bengal (which effectively meant India at that time) in 1807, holding the post until 1813. There he annexed Amboyna and the Molucca Islands, took Bourbon and Mauritius from the French and subdued the pirates in Borneo. He also helped quell an army mutiny and personally led the expedition to take Java (where John Leyden died) from the Dutch. He was on the subscription list for Jamieson’s Scots dictionary in 1808. Returning to Britain in 1814 where he was created Earl of Minto, and Viscount Melgund. Much of the improvements to the Minto estate were carried out under the supervision of his wife, since he spent so much time away: Minto House was extensivly altered, with the work completed in 1814, and the plantations were added to; this included doubling the width, adding to both wings and covering the entrance hall with a cupola. Unfortunately he died on his way back to Scotland, the sad news being brought to people preparing to draw his car-rriage through the streets of Hawick and light bonfires in celebration. Many locals apparently refused to believe he was dead, and there grew a tradition that he lived in secret rooms in the House and wandered the Crags at night. A life-size portrait of him by George Chinnery was donated to Hawick in 1893 and used to hang in the Town Hall; in 1975 it was loaned to the Scottish National Portrait Gallery and donated permanently in 2020. In 1777 he married Anna Maria, daughter of Sir George Amyand and she died in 1829.
They had 3 daughters and 4 sons: Gilbert Ell-it (b.1782), who became the 2nd Earl; Adm. Sir George (b.1784); Anna Maria (1785–1855), who married Lt.-Gen. Sir Rufane Shawe Donkin; John Edmund (b.1788), M.P. for Roxburghshire; Harriet Mary Frances (1790–1825), who died unmar-rried; William (1792–1811), who died returning from Bengal; and Catherine Sarah (1797–1862), who married Sir John Peter Boileau. He is buried in Westminster Abbey. He adopted the addition of ‘Murray-Kynynmound’ to his surname by royal licence in 1797 (the surname becomes confusing at this point; see Elliot-Murray-Kynynmound). His will was proved at the Prerogatory Court of Canterbury in 1815. His portrait, by George Chinnery, is in the Museum. His wife’s portrait was painted by Sir Joshua Reynolds, but was stolen from Minto House in 1930. Gilbert (18th/19th C.) son of Gilbert in Blackburnoof and descended from the Elliots of Falnash. He was tenant in Glenzier, near Canonbie and mar-rried a Miss Davidson according to a family pedigree. He is probably the Gilbert, married toIsobel Davidson, whose children, baptised in Canon-bie Parish, included Elizabeth (b.1786), Margaret (b.1790), John (b.1792), Margaret (again, b.1794)
and Matthew (b.1797). Gilbert (18th/19th C.)
resident of Minto Parish. His children included: Gilbert (b.1807); Mary Elizabeth (b.1811); and Frederick William (b.1812). It is unclear how he is related to other Gilberts. Gilbert (b.1809) born in Ashkirk Parish, son of Jesse and Margaret Smith, he was a millwright in Hawick. He was listed as a journeyman millwright on Melgund Place in 1841, by 1851 was a millwright at the Coach House on Langlands Place in Wilton, but in 1851 was still listed as a journeyman millwright at Langlands Place. In 1832 he married Cec-ily (or Cecilia) Robson (b.c.1811) and their children included: Walter (b.1834); Helen (b.1837);
George (b.c.1839); and Margaret (b.1841). Lt.
Col. Gilbert (1826–65) 5th and youngest son of Gilbert Elliot-Murray-Kynynmoung, 2nd Earl of Minto. He served with the Rifle Brigade. In 1858
he married Katherine Anne, daughter of Rev. Dr.
Gilbert, Bishop of Chichester. Gilbert John of Brugh (1864–1945) 2nd son of Rev. William of Hereford, from whom he succeeded as head of the Elliots of Brugh. He married Bessie Clark David-sion in 1895 and their children were Air Chief Marsh. Sir William and Brig. James. Grizel (17th C.) only child of Simon ‘in Philhope’. She was the heirress of the lands at Philhope (in the Borthwick). When her father died she was given as ward to Robert of Falnash, and later (sometime before 1644) married his son John. In 1642 she was served heir to her great-grandfather Si-om of Philhope in the 10-pound land of Phil-hope. In 1644, with the consent of her husband, she resigned half the lands of Philhope to her mother Elizabeth Chisholme and step-father Archibald in Philhope. Rev. Harold ‘Harry of Peebles’ (c.1611–53) recorded as ‘Hairie Elliot’ and also ‘Henry Elliott’. He was son of William of Peebles, and grandson of Gavin of Brugh (near Doddburn). He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1631, taught for a while in Jedburgh, was presented to Bedrule Parish in late 1639 and ordained there in 1640. He replaced Henry Pearson, who was ousted for his connections to Episcopalianism. However, he was himself ousted from his position in 1649 for being on the side of the King. He may have remained in Bedrule until his death about 4 years later, and ‘lived in a most dejected and miserable and cast down tradition’. After that the church of Bedrule was vacant for another 5 years. He married Elizabeth Douglas and also earlier Helen MacGhie (daughter of John of Balmagie) and had at least 3 children. In 1650 he had a discharge of a debt with Robert Pringle, ‘tutor’ to Will Bennet of Grubet. It is recorded in 1662 that Elizabeth Douglas and 7 fatherless children petitioned Parliament, claiming persecution (presumably for not supporting the Covenants) of her husband and family for publicly supporting his Majesty’s interests, for example during the expedition of 1648, and that he had been forced out of his charge, and they had lived from hand to mouth since then. They were allowed £100 out of vacant stipends (although 10 years later she had received none of it). His children include Christian, John (possibly son of his first wife, who married Elizabeth Fitchie) and Adam (who may have been a minister in London). John’s elder son was Thomas, who was Solicitor to the Prince of Wales, and his elder son was Sir John of Peebles (d.1786), who lived in London and was a famous physician. Hector (16th/17th C.) appeared before the Judiciary Court in Dumfries in 1622. He was recorded being ‘in Rig’, so that he might have been related to the Elliots of Rig; however, it seems likely to be a different Rig. Hector (18th C.) lived at Southdean, where he married Christian Oliver in 1736. Their children included: Robert (b.1738); John (b.1740); and Mary (b.1741). Hector (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. He is surely related to the earlier Hector, as well as Robert from the same parish, whose children were born about a decade later. His children included: William (b.1753); Susan (b.1754); and Christian (b.1756). Helen ‘the Witch’ (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 being ‘callit the Witche, in Jedburgh’, among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. It was quite unusual for women to be named as criminals in this way, and she is one of only 2 such names on this particular list. It is unclear if her supposed crime was witchcraft or if this was just a nickname. Helen of Binks (b.1796) daughter of John, she was known as ‘the White Rose o Liddesdale’ and married Archibald Blake in Liverpool in 1820. Henry (16th C.) recorded among a large list of men of Liddesdale who did not appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5, with the Lord of Liddesdale and Captain of Hermitage being fined. He was probably related to some of the others Elliots who were listed. Henry (15th/16th C.) recorded as witness to a document of 1520 for George Ker of Auld Roxburgh, done at Fairnilee. Henry (17th C.) recorded as ‘Harie Elliot, son-in-law’ when he was overseer of William Elliot of Binks in 1665. Assuming that the date is correct, it is inclear who he might have been. Henry (17th C.) resident of Denholm on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. Henry (d.bef. 1715) farmer at ‘Sorbi-trees’ (i.e. Sorbietrees) near Newcastleton. In 1715 Henry Elliot of Bells in Northumberland and John Elliot of Larriston in Roxburghshire were appointed ‘tutors’ for his children Jane, Elizabeth, Margaret, Gilbert, Christine, Henry and Adam. Based on the names and the date, it seems this may be the same man as Henry of Lodgegill. Henry ‘Harry’ (17th/18th C.) 2nd (or 3rd) Laird of Harwood, son of William and grandson of Simon of the Binks. His father left him the lands of Harwood, Tythehouse and Appotside. He built a new house at Harwood and also purchased Chapelknowe in 1675. He paid the land tax in Hobkirk Parish in 1678. He was Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1678 and 1690. He is recorded in 1676 as ‘Harie Elliott’ when he was cautioner to a ‘letter of hornsing’ against William Elliot of Philhope, bought by Walter Scott, called ‘Westport’. He witnessed Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs ‘bond of provision’ in 1677. In 1681 he was a witness for a bond between Walter Lorraine and Walter Scott in Wauchope. He is recorded in a bond of 1683 with Robert, Lord Jedburgh, with Simon Elliot of Swinside as cautioned, and in 1688 he was a cautioner for Gilbert Elliott of Stonedge. He also feued the lands of ‘Caephope and Calahope’ from Sir John Scott of Ancrum in 1692. He had a bond with William Elliot of Bewlie in 1692, another in 1694 with John Kerr of Cavers, and one in 1696 with Rev. John Goudie of Sprouton. He appears to have paid off some of Gilbert Elliott of Stonedge’s debts in the mid-1690s. He was the Laird of Harwood in 1694 when the tax on 7 hearths was paid on ‘Harits hous and office houses’. In 1694 he purchased Fairnilee for his eldest son William, reserving liferent for himself. However, in 1699 he gave up the liferent on the condition that William paid off some of his debts and provided for the 2 youngest sons, John and Henry. He married Mary, daughter of John Scott of Dryhope and had at least 6 children. He had 3 sons who married sisters, all of them daughters of the Laird of Todrig, Walter Scott: William (who succeeded) married Jean; John married Nelly; and Henry of Peel married Elizabeth. He had another son, Walter of Ormiston, who is said to have married the eldest daughter of Andrew Kerr of Lindean. He also had a daughter Elizabeth, who married Robert Elliot, 2nd Laird of Midlem Mill, and another daughter Anne (or Anna) who married William Cur rer, tenant in Hyndhope. In 1699 he gave his eldest son William the lands of Harwood, Apposit and Tythehouse in agreement for paying his debts and granting him a yearly allowance (the implication is that he was infirm by this time, his son already being mentioned in all the documents relating to Harwood for several years previously). The dates of his birth and death are unknown, but he was certainly alive in 1701, and in 1707 his heir William was still described as ‘younger of Harwood’. Henry of Lodgegill (1672–1714) 2nd son of John of Thorlischope, Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. His brothers were John of the Binks and William of Thorlischope. He succeeded his father in Hudshouse. In 1708 he had a Crown Charter of the lands of Lodgegill in Ewesdale (part of what had been known as Black Tarras), this being settled on him by his brother William, after Simon of Lodgegill became bankrupt. He was ‘of Tarras’ when listed as one of the Commissioners of Supply for Rox burghshire in 1708. He married Margaret (1680–1768), daughter of Robert Elliot of Midlem Mill; she survived him for more than 50 years. Their children were: William of Lodgegill, who married Jane, daughter of William Elliot of Harwood on-Rule; John and Robert, who probably died young; Adam in Flatt, who married Elizabeth Elliot of Sorbietrees; Margaret, who married Charles, brother of Scott of Gorrenberry; Catherine, who married Edmund Atchison in Mosspeebie; Elizabeth, who married Robert Scott in Singlie; Jean, who married John Armstrong in Sorbie; and Henry (1712–94), who farmed at Flatt and married Janet Little. Henry (17th/18th C.) son of William of Penchrise and Bessie Grieve, he was tenant in Riccarton. He married Isobel, daughter of John Elliot in Dinklees, and sister of John in Park (mentioned in 1730). Their children included: William, a baker in Hawick; Catherine, married Thomas Armstrong of Riccarton Mill; and Jean. Henry of Peel (17th/18th C.) son of Henry of Harwood and Mary Scott of Dryhope. He may be the Henry ‘in Hudhouse’ recorded as one of the witnesses to the 1700 marriage contract between William Elliot of Harwood (his brother) and Jean, daughter of Walter Scott of Todrig. He was tenant farmer at Bells in Northumberland and was later at Deadwater. He purchased the lands of Peel (which had been called Baxtonles) from his cousins (heirs of his uncle John Elliot) sometime after 1731. He was a tenant at Deadwater; one story is recounted (in ‘Beauty of the Border’) where after a harsh winter he reported to the Duke of Northumberland that unlike on the neighbouring farms he instructed his shepherds not to skin any of the dead sheep until the warm weather came, ‘when, to my great joy, the most part of them came to life again!’. He is said to have been well known as a ‘topper’, with his standing toast being ‘Here’s to all Elliots and Elliots’ bairns, And them that lie in the Elliots’ airm’. He married Elizabeth Scott of Todrig (probably the sister of 2 of his brothers’ wives). He had many children, but only 3 are recorded: Henry of Peel, who married Jean, daughter of John Elliot of the Binks and sold Peel; Walter (d.1741), surgeon on H.M.S. Wa ger, who died following a shipwreck off Patagonia; and William, who was a Captain and tenant in Rowanburnfoot. Henry (1700–84) Laird of Harwood, successor to William. In 1731 he signed the marriage contract of William Elliot of Lodgegill and Jean Elliot of Harwood (this being before he succeeded to Harwood). He did not get along with his father, particularly after much of Harwood was let for an extended period to the Pott brothers. He appealed to the Court of Session about his father’s behaviour and finally managed the estate for his father’s trustees. He was keen to improve the lands, in particular to enclose the fields, but he cared nothing for antiquities, and had all the old buildings pulled down (including the old town of Harwood). He did, however, build an edifice thatched with heather (‘Elliot’s Folly’) on a small hill, from which he could watch his workers. He paid the window tax in Hobkirk Parish in 1748. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He was listed on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. He was said to be a good-looking, broadshouldered youth and stood over 6 feet tall. His normal dress was a three-cocked hat, a long coat, top-boots and a huge necktie, which was wrapped thrice round his neck. In his old age he became quite deaf and then blind, but kept up an interest in the estate; he was led about by an Elliot who lived at Hasliehirst and became known as ‘Blinnd Harrot’. Born at Harwood, he lived on the estate all his life and also dropped down dead there in the garden, aged 84, and was buried in Hobkirk churchyard. He never married and was succeeded by his nephew William; the succession was set out in a ‘deed of tailzie’ in 1769, and formalised in a disposition of 1783. Henry (18th C.) younger son of John, farmer in Cooms. He farmed at Sorbietrees. It is unclear if he was related to the earlier Henry in Sorbietrees. He married Christian Scott, from Fahash. Their children were: William in Sorbietrees; Catherine; and Elizabeth, who married Adam Elliot in Flatt. Henry (1712–91) younger son of Henry of Lodgegill, he was farmer at Flatt. He is probably the ‘Henry Eliot in Flatt’ who paid the window tax in Castleton Parish in 1748. He was recorded at Flatt on the 1785–91 Horse Tax Rolls. He served as an executor for Henry of Peel, who died in 1780. In 1786 he subscribed to a theological book by a Carlisle author. He was a witness in 1788 at the court proceedings to establish Maj.-Gen. William Elliot as head of the clan. Also in 1788 he was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire, specifically under ‘Votes of Mr. Thomas Waugh’. He married Janet Little (c.1730–99). Their children were: Margaret (b.1760), who died young; Catherine (b.1762), who married Dr. Andrew Graham from Dalkeith, probably related to Dr. Walter Graham of Hareston. He married Christian Laidlaw from Gorrenberry and was heir of provision to his uncle Henry of Harwood without issue. He died in 1787. He married Jean (or Janet, 1780–1863), daughter of Rev. Dr. Thomas Somerville. He died without issue. Henry (c.1765–1860) tenant at West Fodderlee and Westerhouses. He could be the son of William, shepherd in Templehallshiel, born in Hobkirk Parish in 1764. He was at West Fodderlee in 1841. In 1851 he was a widower at Westerhouses, farming 200 arable acres and 870 acres of moor and pasture, employing 13 people. He married Robina Burnett (c.1722–1844) in Roberton Parish in 1790. Their children included: William (b.1790), baptised in Robertson; James (b.1794), baptised in Yarrow; Henry (1802–73), baptised in Yarrow, tenant at Greensriver; and Robert (1805–45), baptised in Robertson. He died at Westerhouses. Henry (18th/19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. It is unclear how he was related to other contemporary Elliots. His children included: Henry (b.1812); Betty (b.1815); an unnamed child (b.1817); and Robert (b.1819). Henry (1769–1841) son of Capt. Robert and Elizabeth Pringle. He became an ensign in the 70th Regiment, serving in Ireland and the West Indies. He was then an officer with the 60th and 96th Regiments, and ended up as Lieut.-Col. He retired from the Army and settle at Rosebank, near Kelso. He became a member of the Jedforest Club and was the chairman at the 1834 dinner when refusal to toast the sitting M.P. led to most of the Whigs to leave the club. He married Janet, daughter of Rev. Dr. Somerville of Jedburgh. He died at Rosebank, Kelso, and is buried in Jedburgh Kirkyard. Henry (1792–1874) son of William in Dinlees. He was a tenant farmer in Colterscleuch and Dinlees. He leased Colterscleuch in 1816 and gave up the lease of Dinlees in 1842. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He was listed at Colterscleuch in 1841 and in 1851 and 1861 was farmer of 1700 acres there, employing 5 labourers. He was still listed there in 1868.

He married Janet (b.1793), daughter of Walter Elliot in Hermitage. Their children included: William (b.1813), tenant in Colterscleuch; Janet (b.1815); Helen (b.1815), twin of Janet; William (again, 1817–98) tenant in Colterscleuch; Agnes (b.1820); Agnes (again, b.1823); Margaret (1825–1905); Betsy (b.c.1829); Walter (1827–49); Esther (1833–56); Mary (b.c.1835) and Joanna (1837–1920), who married John Harrison, and had children who later farmed at Colterscleuch. He is buried at Castleton. Henry (1793–1818) eldest son of John, tenant in Flatt, he was born in Castleton Parish. He had a son William (b.1817) in Cumberland with Esther Glendinning of Newcastleton. He died in Jamaica Henry (1802–73) son of Henry, farmer at West Fodderlee and Westerhouses. He was born at Rawflat and baptised in Yarrow Parish. He was tenant of Greenriver (i.e. Hobsburn). In the 1830s he farmed at West Fodderlee, and at Gatehousecote in the 1840s. In the flood of 1846 he lost 28 sheep from the lands he farmed at Weens Haugh. In 1851 he was at Gatehousecote, farming 1300 acres of pasture and employing 35 people. By 1861 he was at Greenriver, as farmer of 4300 acres, employing 30 labourers. He lived there for the rest of his life. He also ran the various farms of the Abbotrule estate for the 4 Henderson brothers. He also had the farms of Dalgleish, Westerhouses (where he was recorded in a directory of 1868) and Dykeraw. Additionally he ran the financial arrangements for Charles Scott, who farmed at Tythehouse and Dykeraw. He is said to have been a good judge of cattle and familiar at Newcastle market. He always carried a lucky half-crown in his pocket, which was worn down to a blank piece of silver by the time of this death. He married Agnes Taylor in 1833 and she died in 1878, aged 71. Their children included: John (1831–78), a surgeon in Calcutta; Janet (b.1833), who died in infancy; Janet (1835–48); Robina (1836–1907), who married Peter Pennycook of New Hall in 1855; Agnes (1837–1906), who married William Scott and died in Edinburgh; Henry (1839–91), who succeeded on the farms; Jane (1840–56); Margaret (b.1843), who died young; Margaret (again, 1851–83). He is buried in Hobkirk churchyard. Sir Henry George (1817–1907) 2nd son of Gilbert Elliot-Murray-Kynynmound, 2nd Earl of Minto. He had a career in the Diplomatic Service, holding posts in many capitals of Europe, ending as Ambassador in Vienna 1877–84. He married Anne, daughter of Sir Edmund Antrobus. Their children were Gertrude (who died unmarried) and Sir Francis Edmund Hugh. Henry (b.c.1819) son of James, farmer at Lymiecleuch. In 1851 he was listed as head of the family, with the 3700 acre farm of Lymiecleuch held in trust for his siblings Scott, William, Walter, Mary and Janet. Henry (b.1821–63) son of Thomas and Helen Scott. In 1851 he was farmer of ‘a large store farm’ employing 9 labourers at Kirndean. He lived with his sisters Ann and Christian. In 1861 he was farmer at Lanton in Jedburgh Parish, where he died. Henry (b.1823/4) from Canonbie, he was a baker in Newcastleton. In 1861 he was at about 46 North Hermitage Street. His wife was Ann and their children included Robert, John, William and Helen. Henry Erskine (b.1829/30) joiner in Newcastleton. In 1851 he was journeyman carpenter with James Douglas in Newcastleton, and listed there as ‘Cousin’s Son’. He was living at about 6 Langholm Street in 1861, and employing 7 men. In 1859 he married Elizabeth, daughter of John Scott and Isabel Grieve. Their children included: James Douglas (b.c.1860); Beatrice Cavers (b.1861); Isabella (b.1863); William Thomas (b.1866); and Jane (b.1868). Henry (1839–91) son of Henry, from whom he took over as farmer at Greenriver in Rulewater. Shortly after his mother’s death in 1878 he became ill himself, eventually becoming paralysed. He was looked after by his sister Robina Pennycook and the farm was run by his nephew James Lindsay Oliver. Herman F. (1854–95) 4th son of Sir Walter of Wolfelee. He was born in India, was educated at Harrow and joined the Black Watch, rising to the rank of Major. He was apparently very stout. He was decorated in Egypt and the Sudan and died in Mauritius. Hugh (17th C.) described as ‘Hew Elliot, smith’ when he was a witness in a Hawick Magistrates Court case of 1642. ‘John Elliot, wag’ was also a witness, so may have been his brother or other relation. He is probably the Hugh, married to Margaret Dickson, whose children born in Hawick included Helen (b.1640), William (b.1643) and Hugh (b.1644). Hugh (17th C.) recorded as ‘Hewgo Elliot, smith’ in 1685 when he was fined by the Hawick Magistrates for throwing off Adam Young’s bonnet in the church, to which Adam Young retaliated and was also fined; Adam was also a smith, so this may have been a professional rivalry. He is probably the Hugh, son of Hugh and Margaret Dickson, who was born in Hawick in 1644. He was listed as a smith in 1685 when he witnessed a baptism for James Aitchison in 1685 (along with Lancelot Aitchison, who lived at Newmill), in 1687 when he witnessed a baptism for James Davidson and another for James Atkinson in 1687. He is probably the ‘Hew Eliott, smythe in Newmylnes, in Slttrig’ in 1672 when he was admitted as a Burgess of Hawick, gratis, ‘by the importunity of one person of quality’. Hugh (1752–1830) 2nd son of Sir Gilbert, 3rd Baronet of Minto. He was brother of the 1st Earl of Minto. He was educated along with his elder brother and the pair were mentored by David Hume. He attended Oxford University and finished his military training at Metz. He fought with the Russian Army and then became a British diplomat in Bavaria before being appointed Ambassador to Prussia. In 1780 he married his first wife, Charlotte von Kraut and fought a duel with her lover (a scandal that, it is said, followed him for the rest of his life). After he moved to Copenhagen he abducted his daughter Isabella from his wife’s influence in Berlin, and the couple divorced. He then served in Dresden and Naples and was Governor of the Leeward Islands 1809–14. He was a strong abolitionist and was reported to be the force behind the conviction of a man for the murder of a slave in the British Virgin Islands. In the period 1814–20 he served as Governor of Madras. He secondly married Margaret Jones, after whom Lady Elliot Island in Queensland was named. His children were: Isabella (d.1826), who married George Payne; Theodore Henry (d.1842); Emma (d.1866), who married Sir Thomas Hislop; Edward Francis (1796–1866); Caroline; Harriet Agnes; Gilbert (1800–91), Dean of Bristol; Adm. Sir Charles (1801–75), who was Governor of Bermuda, of Trinidad and of St. Helena; Hugh Maximillian (1802–26); and Sir Thomas Frederick (1808–80). He died in London and was buried in Westminster Abbey. Ingram (15th C.) recorded among men of Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. He was listed after Edmund and before Martin, who he may have been closely related to. Ingram (15th/16th C.) given a dispensation to marry, within the usually prohibited bounds of consanguinity (in the 4th degree), with Elizabeth Scott. This was granted by the Archdeacon of Teviotdale and recorded in Selkirk. The witnesses included Thomas and Alexander Scott. Ingram (16th C.) recorded in 1541 when he was accused of having been on a raid on Bewcastle in which Englishman ‘John Makrobyn’ was killed. His brother Adie was also listed, as well as Aircchie. Isabel (17th C.) resident of Castleton Parish (probably at Yethouse) according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. John, who was listed before her must have been closely related. Isabella (19th C.) listed as grocer and spirit dealer in Newcastleton in Slater’s 1852 directory. She could be the Isabella from Nicol Forest in Cumberland, who was listed in 1851 at about 7 Douglas Square, with her daughters Agnes and Violet; she was wife of shepherd William. James (15th C.) listed along with Laurence, Simon and John Elwald, as well as Robert Turnbull and Robert Dalgleish, when they were said to be rebels captured by Patrick Dickson, Bailie of Peebles, in 1482/3. His name was listed first, and so he was presumably head of some Borders branch. For his service Dickson received a grant from the King for the following 19 years. He is probably the ‘Jacobi elwald’ recorded at the Justice-aire in Peebles in 1498 when Thomas Middlemas had remission for resetting him after he and his accomplices had burned a ‘pele in bothil’. James (15th C.) recorded in the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1493. Thomas Brown in Minto and George Davidson in Raperlaw were given remission for several crimes, including helping him in thefts occurring before the date of their existing remission. Probably the same James was mentioned in 1494/5 when Adam Turnbull in Hornshole had remission for several crimes, including stealing livestock from Synton, with his help. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Elliots. James (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Jacobus elwald’ in Whitmuir in 1502, along with William Ker (in the same place) and Alexander Gray in Greenbank, when they had remission for the murder of John Ford in Selkirk. The same men also had remission for resetting the sons of William (called ‘Hob the King’ and ‘Dand the Man’) and stealing from Fairnington, with James Ker acting as surety. Also in 1502, along with John Lauder and Janet Ker, he had 7 cows stolen from him from Whitmuir, with Adam Turnbull in Hornshole being given remission for the theft. Perhaps the same James ‘Elwand’ was recorded in 1514 when he was a witness to George Ker appointing Thomas Ker as Archdeacon of Glasgow. James (d.1526) recorded as ‘James Elwald’ when he was convicted and hanged in Edinburgh for his part in the Battle of Skirmish Field. This was an event where Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme, along with other Scotts, Elliots and their followers tried to wrest control of the young James V from the Earl of Angus, this being part of ongoing power struggles within Scotland. His crimes also included ‘common Theft and Reset of theft’. However, it seems clear that he was simply a scapegoat, being probably the most important Elliot that was captured (perhaps a son of Robert of Redheugh, for example). He could be the ‘Jacobi Elwald’ recorded in 1535 when ‘Georgii Elwald’ had a remission from the crime of associating with him. James (16th C.) entered in 1537/8 for crimes along with his brother Simon ‘Elwald’ and William in Leaugh, with sureties being Robert of Redheugh and his brother Archibald. They were accused of breaking open the shop of Thomas Graham in Selkirk. How he was related to other Elliots is unclear. James (16th C.) tenant in Skelfhill in 1569 when he was listed in a bond of security signed in Hawick. He may have been related to ‘Gawin Elliott in Skelfhill’ (later of Stobs) who was the proprietor of the lands. His name is listed as ‘Jame Elliot in Skelfhill’. James (16th C.) recorded in Yair in 1579 when he loaned money to John Gray in Lindean. The transaction was done in Selkirk and Thomas in Yair was one of the witnesses. In 1580 Gray confessed that he owed him more for the crops they had jointly sown at Lindean. In 1581 he paid the same John Gray £40 and was assigned half his grain; Archibald in Yair was a witness. James ‘Jamie’ (16th C.) listed among men accused of raiding Harwood on Teviot in 1581/2. He was brother of ‘Rowans Hobbe’. They were declared rebels after not appearing to answer the charge. James ‘Jamie’ of the Park (16th C.) recorded having a pledge before the Privy Council in 1573. He was also recorded in 1583 in a list of Elliots compiled by the English wardens. He must have been related to Jock Elliot of the Park, and may also have been descended from Simon. He was surely related to ‘James Rowe of the Park’ recorded in 1581. He is probably the James of the Park for whom there was surety before the Privy Council in 1573. However, there may be 2 men here, since in 1573 James of the Park was deceased when his son Hob was interchanged with John of the Park as ward with Sir William Scott of Balwearie. His son Hob was also recorded in a pledge by Border Lairds in 1578. He may be the ‘James Elliott of the Park’ listed in 1586 when his superior Robert of Redheugh was instructed to enter him in court; Simon of the Park is listed just before him and Robert of the Park just after him, hence presumably close relatives. James ‘Dobson’ (16th C.) tenant in Whitehillbrae. He was recorded in 1574 as ‘James Elliott alias Dobsoun thair’, after Archie in ‘Quheittilbray’, among men who had been ordered to be removed from the lands of Robert of Redheugh. He may have been related to other man of this area who were also listed, e.g. the Elliots in Priesthaugh and ‘Vicar’s Hob’. It is unclear what his nickname meant. James ‘Grey Will’s Jamie’ (16th C.) recorded in 1578 as ‘Jame Elliot, sone to Gray Will Elliot. He was listed among Border Lairds who had been released from ward (in his case with George Crawford of ‘Lefnoreis’) and directed to meet again to promise to suppress lawlessness on the Border. In 1583 he is recorded as ‘Jeme Elliot called gray Wills Jeme’ when listed among the Elliots of Park (separately from Jamie of the Park). He was presumably son of ‘Grey Willie’. James ‘the Gyde’ (16th C.) recorded as ‘James Ellott, called the Gyde’ in 1586 when his superior Robert of Redheugh was instructed to enter him in court. He was presumably related to John who was recorded at about the same time with the same nickname (or else ‘James’ was an error for ‘John’). James (16th C.) recorded in 1586 being ‘of the Steill’ when Robert of Redheugh was instructed to enter him in court. He is presumably related to other Elliots of the Steele. James ‘Jame’ of Millburnholm (16th C.) recorded in 1587/8 when accused by Sir John Forster of being on a raid on England in 1585, along with many other Elliots. His name was listed as ‘Jame of Milbourne home’, and seems highly likely to have been an Elliot, perhaps the same as one of the other Jameses. James (16th C.) son of William of Mosspartick-hope. In 1587/8 he is recorded being warded with the Laird of Balmuto (John Boswell); however, he ‘eshaipit and eschewit’ and his pledge was charged to appear before the Privy Council. He may be the same as one of the other Jameses. James ‘Airchie’s Jamie’ (16th C.) listed among men accused in 1590 of raiding Middleton Hall in England in the previous year. He was named as ‘Arches Jamye’ along with ‘Gib Elliott son to Robin’, 2 servants of Robert of Redheugh and others who were accused of stealing horses. James of the Binks (16th C.) recorded in 1590 among Elliots of the Steele, the Park, and others, when complained about for a raid into England. On a later record of the same case he is ‘of the Byrks’, so there could be confusion over where he was from. In 1590 he was ‘of the Byncke’ when accused of stealing a gelding and furniture from Englishmen John Heron and Henry Charlton. It is unclear how he might have been related to later Elliots of Binks. James (16th C.) recorded as ‘Martin’s man’ in 1590 when he was on a list of men, including Martin’s Airchie, the elder and younger Will of the Steele, Airchie ‘Cowlowe’ and 2 Shiels, accused of stealing from ‘Dotland’ a couple of years earlier. He was presumably a servant of Martin of Braidlie, and could be the same as one of the other Jameses. James see James Elliott. James of the Hill (16th/17th C.) brother of Archie of the Hill. He is listed among a large group of Elliotts and others who were accused in 1590 of taking Ralph Hall and others prisoner and ransoming them. He was additionally listed in 1590 along with Archie of the Hill among a group accused of taking livestock, goods and prisoners from the Pott’s of Carrick, and along with his brother Archie of the Hill among a group accused of rieving from ‘Borne’ in Redesdale. He was ‘James on the hill’, also in 1590, when named first along with Anthony of the Binks, James ‘Half Lug’, Hobbie ‘the Tailor’ and 60 others, accused of raiding ‘Windgates’, taking more than 100 cows and 4 horses, slaying George Hume, leaving 6 or 7 men near death and robbing 5 houses. He was also listed as brother of Archie of the Hill among Eloit, Armstrongs, Turnbulls, Lairdalls and Croizers, accused in 1590 of rievings from the Laird of ‘Trogkwon’ and Hedley of ‘Garret Sheills’. In 1591 he was part of a group (along with his brother Archie of the Hill) accused of plundering from Jeffrey Tailor and the tenants of Scaleby. Probably the same man is listed along with John and Mark of the Hill among men of Liddesdale and upper Teviotdale accused of raids into England in 1595. James ‘Tod’ (16th/17th C.) recorded as being ‘alias ‘toddle’’ in 1596 when he was among men complained about for a raid on ‘Allergarthe’ in England, along with Willie and Geordie ‘Kange’. He was also ‘Jamy Elliott ‘toddle’’ when accused of raiding ‘Dormontstead’ in the same year. James (16th/17th C.) merchant in Selkirk. He was recorded in 1629 as brother of William, who was a Bailie there. James (17th C.) possessor of the farm of Clintwood in Liddesdale in 1632. It is unclear if he was related to the earlier Archibald in Clintwood. James (17th C.) son of John ‘wag (soldier) in Hawick’ recorded in 1642. He was named as one of the men accused of stealing the wallet of the servant of the Laird of Cavers in Hawick. He gave evidence, saying that he never saw the wallet. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Margaret Davidson and their children included: William (b.1650); Jean (b.1652); and Archibald (b.1655). James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His wife was Bessie Knox and their son James was born in 1651. The witnesses were William Mark and Robert Mathieson. Perhaps the same James witnessed a baptism for Thomas Mark in 1651. James (17th C.) tenant in Snaberlee, one of the executors or overseers for William Elliott of Binks in the mid-1660s. James (17th C.) recorded being ‘of Bridgeheuch’ in a set of deeds in 1673. This may be Bridgehouse in Liddesdale or Bridgehaugh elsewhere. He was probably the cousin of William, 1st of Bothwickbrae, who was said not to be such a good farmer. James (17th C.) resident of Ormiston on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. It is unclear if he is connected to the later Ellis of Ormiston. He could be the same as the James who was later in Hummelknowe Mill. James (17th C.) recorded as resident at Byreholm in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th C.) listed as tenant at ‘b’our’ (possibly near Bower Rig) in Castleton Parish on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. He paid tax on 2 hearths, since he was tenant ‘wt an kilne’. James (17th C.) resident of Firth in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. James (17th/18th C.) tenant in Hummelknowe Mill. In 1700 he witnessed a baptism for merchant Thomas Howison, along with Robert Huntly in Ormiston. His children probably (with no mother’s name give) included: Marion (b.1698); Jean (b.1700); Janet (b.1702); Martin (b.1707); Isabel (b.1709); James (b.1710); John (b.1715); Walter (b.1718); and an unnamed child (b.1719). James (17th/18th C.) tenant in Bowanhill. In 1723 he halved the lease of the farm with Archibald Elliot. In 1725 it is recorded that he was ‘trysted with a long continued sickness’. Isobel Beattie was assisting him, which she used as an excuse to postpone appearing to be publicly rebuked in Hawick. James (18th C.) shepherd in Stobicote. His son James was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1733; this could be the James who married Betty Goodfellow and lived at Newcastleton. James (18th C.) younger son of William of Penchrise and Janet Elliot. He was tenant in Millholm in Castleton Parish. He had a son, who was also James, and who died without children. James (18th C.) tenant at Meikle Whittlaw, recorded in 1753. He was probably son of Robert of Larriston, and brother of Robert who was a senior clerk at the Pay Office in London. Helen, who married Rulewater joiner Walter Amos, may have been his sister. He died unmarried. James (18th C.) recorded as being ‘Fenwick’ in 1758 when his daughter Magdalene was baptised in Hawick Parish. Gavin was witness to the baptism, this presumably being the Gavin who was known as last Elliot of Fenwick. He may have been brother of Gavin and another son of Robert states ‘Heard at the fair James Elliot of Ormiston was married to his own servant’. His children included: Simon (b.1770); James (b.1776); and Andrew (b.1777), who may have been shepherd at Cocklawfoot and emigrated. All 3 of these children were baptised in Cavers in 1778. It seems that his children were unable to inherit and hence Ormiston went to his sister Helen and her husband Thomas Currer. James (1748–1828) shepherd in Castleton Parish. His wife was Helen Elliot, who died in 1809 at Cleuchhead. They are easy to confuse with a contemporary Castleton couple with the same names. Their children probably included: William (b.1773); Isabel (b.1779); Jean (b.1781); James (b.1783); John (1785–1854), who married Helen Murray and emigrated to Westminster Township, Middlesex County, Ontario; and Walter (b.1787), who may be the Walter who lived at Dinleyhaughfoot. He died at Burgrains and is buried in Castleton. James (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. His wife was Helen Elliot. They are easy to confuse with a contemporary couple of the same names. He was recorded in Tweedenside in at least the period 1774–79. His children included: Isabel (b.1774); Adam (b.1777); and Helen (b.1779). Other children probably included: Helen (b.1775); Mary (b.1780); and Thomas (b.1791). James (18th C.) resident of Harwood in Hobkirk Parish. He had sons Charles (b.1784) and George (b.1786).

James (b.c.1765) joiner in Newcastleton. He is listed among heads of households in 1835–41. In 1841 he was at about 3 Walter Street. James (b.1765) son of shoemaker Robert. In 1798 he married Janet Renwick, announced in Hawick and Cavers Parishes. His wife died in 1835. James (1769–1824) youngest son of William of Whithaugh. He was born in Castleton Parish and became a merchant in Hawick. He worked as a clerk for William Oliver ‘Auld Cash’, who was the most prominent general merchant and banker in Hawick at the time. He was listed in Oliver’s 1808 will as ‘my clerk, brother of John Elliot Esq of Whithaugh’. He is probably the merchant James who witnessed baptisms in Hawick in 1799, 1801, 1805, 1806 and 1808 for Joseph Peacock and Jean Miller. He is probably the James, merchant in Hawick, who was declared bankrupt in 1815, and who was listed as ‘late Merchant in Hawick’ in 1824 when his outstanding debts were to be sold. James (1770–1855) son of Ninian. His mother’s name is not given on the baptism record, but it seems likely it was

Janet Douglas. He was a shepherd in the Teviot-head area; most of his children were born at Sundhope. In 1798 he married Janet (1774/5–1843), daughter of John Grieve and Elizabeth Paisley; she died at Broadhaugh. Their children included: Ninian (1799–1885), who died in Ontario; Elizabeth (b.1801); Janet (b.1803); John (b.1806), who died young; Jean (or Jane, b.1809), who married James Riddell, who lived at Lochburnfoot; John (again, b.1811), probably the carrier in Robertson; James (1814–80), who died at Northhouse; and William (b.1816). In 1851 he was a retired shepherd living with his daughter Jane. He died at Valesburn. James ‘Jamie’ (1772–1855) 3rd Laird of Wolfelee, younger son of Cornelius, the 2nd Laird, his brother William dying during their father’s lifetime. He became Writer to the Signet in 1798. Trained in his father’s Edinburgh law office, it is said he did not enjoy the sedentary job, but he did attend to much of his father’s country business. However, from the early 1800s he improved the Wolfelee estate by planting trees and hedges, repaired dykes, cottages, etc. He was still ‘junior of Woollee’ listed along with his father as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. In 1810 he became a Major in the 1st Roxburghshire Volunteers. He was also ‘younger of Woollee’ in 1811 when recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh. He succeeded to the estate in 1821, and for a few years lived at Mackside. He built the mansion there in 1825–27 (although probably retaining some of the previous house) and it was him who changed the name from ‘Woollie’ to ‘Wolfelee’. He was a Justice of the Peace and in 1823 fined some shepherds for playing Hobkirk Baa on the wrong day. He took part in the Hawick celebrations for the Reform Bill in 1832. He was also a founder member of the Jedforest Club, but left after a political dispute in 1834. He was also one of the Magistrates of the county who were present in Hawick during the election troubles of 1837. He was living at Stewartfield in 1837. About 1849 he gave land for Wolfelee Free Kirk and Manse to be built. He had 12 children, many of whom were born at at Stewartfield (later called Hartragge), near Jedburgh. Although personally attached to the Established Church, he gave land to establish a Free Church and manse. In 1799 he married Caroline, daughter of Walter Hunter of Polmood and Lady Caroline Mackenzie, and she died in 1824. In 1827 he secondly married Margaret, daughter of Robert Davidson of Pinmaclehill, Kelso, his cousin, who died in 1856 (and is buried in Kensal Green, London). His children were: William (who died in infancy); Sir Walter (1803–87), who succeeded; James Forbes (1807–41), a Lieutenant with the 5th Madras Infantry, who died in Nellore; Robert (1807–96), twin of James, who reached the age of 89; John Elphinstone (b.1810), Rector of Whalton, Morpeth, who married Georgina Bates of Milburn and changed his surname to Elliot-Bates; William Thomas (1812–90), who died in Australia; George Mackenzie (1822–56), who also died in Australia; Charles (1824–88), Royal Artillery Colonel, who married Christina Ramsay of Balmain and later Mary, daughter of Henry Davidson of Muirhouse and the Archbishop of Canterbury’s sister; Caroline (b.1805), who died at the age of 13; Elizabeth Margaret (d.1889), who died unmarried; Eleanor Mary (1815–1915), who married Herman Freyherr von Poellnitz and reached the age of 100; and another child (with his 2nd wife), who died young. He helped 2 of his sisters out of debt. He was known as a Liberal in politics. He was said to be still riding his horse into his eighties. James (18th/19th C.) Bailie in Hawick in the early 1800s, both before and after 1810. He is probably the same as one of the contemporary Jameses. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Elizabeth Young and their children included: John (b.1796); Isabella (b.1798); Daniel (b.1800); James (b.1802); and Elizabeth (b.1804). James of Goldielands (1769–1848), son of shoemaker Adam and descended from the Elliots in Brugh, he became a teacher in Wilton. He wrote ‘A Scripture Catechism, with references instead of answers’, running to 4 editions (the last 3 being 1798, 1803, 1808). He retired as schoolmaster at Wilton in about 1810 and was replaced by James Turnbull. Around the same year he was put in charge of supervising the cutting that had to be done to create the Avenue leading to Wilton Lodge. He was overseer of works (or factor) for the Duke of Buccleuch, serving from about 1810 into at least the late 1830s, and living at Goldielands; he was there on the 1841 census. Baron Von Holbein lodged with him as a prisoner during the Napoleonic Wars. He was recorded as ‘Mr. Js.ät Goldielands when his father died in 1815. He was a prominent Hawick Tory, taking an active part in local politics in the early 19th century. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825 and may be the ‘J. Elliot, Hawick’ who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. A letter to him from 1825, relating to the Duke of Buccleuch's share of the assessment for Ettrick Kirk is preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. He was also one of the founder members of the Wisp Club in 1826. He provided the minister with details of the agricultural state of Hawick Parish for the 1839 entry in the New Statistical Account. He married Agnes Pirrie (d.1840) in Wilton in 1794; it is suggested that she was born in 1758, but that is surely too early. All their children were baptised in Wilton Parish: Margaret (b.1795), the eldest daughter, who married John Wilson, 'the Dip'; Adam (b.1797), a medical doctor, who later lived at Goldielands; Agnes (1799–1863); William (b.1801), hosiery manufacturer; Helen or Nelly (b.1803); James (b.1805), mathematics and physics professor in Liverpool; and Robert (1807–88) of Laighwood, Dunkeld. Letters of his for the period 1810–37 are in the National Archives. His will in Jedburgh Sheriff Court Records is dated 1849. His portrait is in the Museum, painted by an unknown artist. James, resident at Newcastleton, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He is presumably the same as another James. He could be the James recorded as driver in Newcastleton in 1835 or the other James recorded as joiner. James (18th/19th C.) resident in Castleton Parish. He married Janet Robson and their children included James (b.1818/9), who was an agricultural labourer in Newcastleton. His wife secondly married William Cowan, who she is recorded with in 1841. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Helen Glendinning and their children included: William (b.1827); John (b.1829); Thomas (b.1832); Adam (b.1834); and Jane (b.1837). James, resident of Castleton Parish. He married Bella Armstrong and their children included: Betty (b.1826); George (b.1828); and Janet (b.1831). These 3 were all baptised in 1835. His widow, son George and daughter Janet (or 'Jenny') were living at about 11 South Liddle Street in 1841. James of Cooms (18th/19th C.) recorded in the Land Tax Rolls in 1822. James (18th/19th C.) listed as shepherd at 'Waterside, Castleton' among heads of household in 1836–41. James (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Foulshields in Castleton Parish. He is listed among male heads of households in 1835–40. He emigrated to America in about 1840. James (18th/19th C.) teacher at Hermitage School. He was listed there among heads of households in the Parish in 1835–38 and recorded in Pigot's 1837 directory. In 1841 the schoolhouse there was occupied by labourer Robert (and family), who may have been his son. James (b.1783/4) from England, he served with the 2nd Dragoon Guards. In 1841 he was an agricultural labourer living at about 54 High Street with his wife Mary. In 1851 he was a lodger with the Bells on Turk's Close and recorded as a Chelsea Pensioner. In 1861 he was living with his daughter Janet. His daughters may be among the 'Lasses o' Limey' that John Halliday wrote about in a poem of the same name. James (b.1787/8) agricultural labourer in Roberton Parish. In 1841 he was at Robertson Woodfoot and in 1851 was farmer of 6 acres there. In 1861 his wife and 2 sons were living at Riddell Mill. His wife was Jane (b.1799/1800) and their children included: John (b.c.1823); James (b.c.1825), a dyer; Janet (b.c.1826); William (b.c.1828); Adam (b.c.1830); and Alexander (b.c.1832). James (1792/3–1873) carter and sheep dealer in Newcastleton. He could be the 'J. Elliot, N. Castleton' who subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. He was probably the cattle dealer of that name listed as male head of his family in Newcastleton in 1835. In 1851 and 1861 he lived at about 29 North Hermitage Street. He married Margaret Shiel (1808–87). Their children included: Roland E. (1832–88), who died in New Westminster, British Columbia; Robert (b.1834); Thomas (b.1836); James (1839–47); Katherine (1841–47); Charles Scott (b.1843); William (b.1846); and James (b.1849). He died at Kershopebrae, and his wife died in Hawick. James (1794–1884) born in Roberton Parish, son of John and Elizabeth Scott. He was long-time proprietor of the Ewe and Lamb, being a spirit merchant at 3 Orrock Place. He may be the same James recorded as proprietor of a public house on 'High St.' in Pigot's 1825 directory (and this could be the Punch Bowl at No. 27, marked ‘Elliot’ on Wood’s 1824 map), and listed as a vintner on the Round Close in Pigot’s 1837 directory; this same James was proprietor of the Royal Oak in 1832. On the 1841 census he was an innkeeper and spirit dealer on the Sandbed. In 1851 he is listed as a vintner on Orrock Place, in Slater’s 1852 directory he is a vintner at the Ewe and Lamb and in 1861 he was innkeeper at 3 Orrock Place. He married Helen Paterson (1806/7–54). Their children included: John (1835–58), who was Cornet in 1855; Helen (b.1838); William (b.1841), who died in infancy; Elizabeth or ‘Betsy’ (b.1843); Ann Scoon (‘Annie’, 1844–92); Margaret (b.1846), who died young; and James. A portrait exists of him. They are buried at Borthwick Waas. James (b.c.1797) grocer and spirit dealer on Needle Street. He is recorded there in 1841, along with wife Agnes and children Agnes, Margaret and Benjamin. Probably the same James is listed as a grocer on the Mid Row in Pigot’s 1837 directory. James (1797–1866) son of Robert and Wilhelmina Hislop, he was born in Castleton Parish, where most of his children were baptised. He became farmer at Middleholm, near Langholm. He married Helen (1804–80), daughter of joiner John Douglas. Their children included: Robert (1824–50), who died in Liverpool; Elizabeth Beattie (1825–94), who married Langholm clogger Thomas Houman; John (1828–56), who worked as a joiner with his uncle James Douglas; Anne (1830–95); Christian Douglas (1833–89), who married shepherd William Elliot Pringle; Janet Douglas (1835–92), who married forester Adam Inglis; William Douglas (1837–87), who lived in Langholm; James Douglas (1840–1920), who also farmed at Middleholm and later lived in Ewesdale; Walter Douglas (1843–77), bank clerk, who moved to County Durham; and Douglas (1846–1919), bank cashier in Yorkshire. James (b.c.1800) from Newcastle, he was a shoemaker on Havelock Street in Wilton, listed in 1861. His children included Andrew, Elizabeth, Helen, James and William. His children were born in Teviothead and Langholm parishes. James (b.1800/1) from Teviothead Parish, he was shepherd at Wauchope Common. In 1851 he was living at Hawthornside Cottages and listed as a shepherd, and was listed as retired at Wauchope Common in 1861. He married Margaret Scott (from Ettrick), and their children included Adam, Isabella and Mary. James (b.1802/3) born in Minto Parish, probably son of William. He was a farmer and then a grocer, wine and spirit dealer at the Crown Inn in Denholm in the 1860s. He may also have been a joiner in Denholm. In 1837 he married Mary, daughter of farmer Robert Bulman. In 1841 and 1851 he was living with his father-in-law, probably at Eastgatehall farm. By 1861 he was on Main Street as a grocer, etc. His children were: Alison (b.1838); Janet (b.1840), perhaps also known as Jessie; Elizabeth Simpson (‘Eliza’, b.1840), probably twin of Janet; William (b.1845); and Mary Ann (b.1850). James (b.1803/4–80) son of John and Jean Scott, he was tenant farmer at Flatt in Castleton Parish and later at Westwater. By 1851 he was ‘Farmer not now tenant but residing’ at Flatt. He was succeeded in the tenancy of Flatt by his nephew John. He married Margaret Little (c.1818–83) in 1847 and their children included: John (1848–66); William (1849–97), also tenant in Westwater; Thomas Scott (1850–1906), who died at Salkend; Jane Scott (1851–1928); James Main (1855–1917); George Thompson (1855–1921), who died at Twickenham; and Henry (1864–1913), an engineer, who died in Barcelona. James (b.c.1805) labourer in Hobkirk Parish. In 1841 he was living at Langburnshielis. He married Margaret Scott in 1838. Their children included: Janet (b.1838); Isabella (b.1845); and Mary (b.1850), born in Kirkton Parish. James (b.1862) may also have been their son. James of Goldielands (b.1805) son of the earlier James, who was teacher at Wilton. Later in life he was also referred to as ‘Professor Elliot’, while his brother Adam was called ‘Dr. Elliot, Goldielands’. In 1841 he was listed as a teacher, living with his father at Goldielands. In 1851 he was a teacher of mathematics, lodging in Duke Street in Edinburgh. He contributed talks to the Archeological Society (e.g. on local birds in 1876), and he described the geology of Upper Teviotdale for the Edinburgh Geological Society in 1870 and the Hawick district for the Berwickshire Naturalists’ Club in 1873. In 1880 he gave the land of the former bowling green off Bourtree Place to the Baptist congregation. He is probably the James who was Professor of Mathematics and Natural Philosophy at Queen’s College in Liverpool. He wrote ‘An Elementary Course of Practical Mathematics’ (1850), which ran to several editions, ‘Moses and Modern Science’, as well as several other books. In 1857 he was described as ‘late of Edinburgh, now of Queen’s College, Liverpool’. In 1879 he wrote to the Spectator about the extraordinary mental arithmetic powers of his friend (and fellow student at Edinburgh).
George Bidder. Adam who wrote to Charles Darwin from Liverpool in 1872 (about the possible offspring of a woman and an ape) may have been his son. James (1807–41) eldest son of James the 3rd Laird of Wolfelee and brother of Walter, 4th Laird. He was a Lieutenant in the 5th Madras Native Infantry and died in Nellore (south-eastern India). He had a twin, Robert, who died in 1896. James (1818/9) from England, he was a farmer in Newcastleton. In 1861 he was living in North Hermitage Street and farming 4 acres. His wife was Helen and their children included: Janet (b.1847); James (b.1849); Margaret (b.1845), who married John Young; and William (b.1854).

James (b.1812/3) from Langholm, he was an agricultural labourer living in Castleton Parish. He could be the ‘driver’ at ‘Wheathaugh’ recorded as a head of household in Castleton for the first time in 1837. In 1851 he was residing at Whithaughburn and in 1861 at Whithaugh Cottages (probably the same place). He married Sophia Miller (b.1814) from Eskdalemuir. Their children included: George (b.1839); Archibald (b.1841); Andrew (b.1846); Euphemia (b.1848); Isabella (b.1849); John (b.1851); and William (b.1854).

James (b.1812/3–90) born in Northumberland, son of Robert of Hermitage, who farmed at Moraylees and Haydon Bridge. His mother was Mary Scott from Skelfhill. He farmed at Galalaw. In 1851 and 1861 he was farming 250 acres there, and employing 12 people. At the same time Robert Turnbull farmed the other part of Galalaw. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1853. James (1814–80) son of shepherd James and Janet Grieve. He was recorded as a shepherd at Broadhaugh in Teviothead Parish in 1851 and was a labourer living at Lochburnfoot in 1861. He married Mary Nichol (1818–1901), who died in Hawick. Their children included: Janet (b.1841); Margaret (b.1845), who married John Young; and Eliza (b.1847), who married James Inglis. He died at Northhouse.

James (b.1818/9) agricultural labourer in Newcastleton, son of blacksmith James and Janet Peddie Ewen. In 1861 he was living at about 13 South Liddel Street. In Castleton in 1847 he married Ann (or Annie), daughter of Matthew Elliot and Dorothy Purdom. Their children (some of whom were born in Northumberland) included: Janet (b.1847); James (b.1849); Matthew (b.1849); Dorothy (b.1852); Isabella; Thomas; and William. He could be the labourer James who was visiting farmer Henry at Gatehousecote at the time of the 1851 census. James (b.1819/20) born at Wolfelee head, he was a coal carter. In 1851 he was visiting William Mercer in Galashiels. James (b.1825/6) born at Hayeknowe, son of Thomas and Margaret Hume. He was a grocer at 2 Buccleuch Street. In 1861 he was listed as a grocer at 7 Sandbed, with his brother Thomas and George also in his house. He married Jane Peddie Ewen in 1861. Their children included: Thomas; Jane Ewen; and James Oliver. James (1830–77) son of John. He was inn-keeper of the Grapes Hotel in Liddesdale in the 1860s and 1870s and died there. James Thomas Spencer 5th Laird of Wolfelee (1845–92) eldest son of Sir Walter. He was born in Madras and educated at Harrow. Poor eyesight hampered some of his career prospects (and he also apparently became quite hefty in later life). He spent about 7 years in Argentina, returning in 1872, and living at Wolfelee. He became involved in local and national politics and stood as Conservative candidate for the Hawick Burghs in 1880, and was defeated by Sir George Trevelyan. He then bought some land in Manitoba, but did not live there for long. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1875. He represented the Borders at the Highland and Agricultural Society, and personally managed 2 of the farms on the Wolfelee estate (with the help of Mr. McPherson). He was a J.P. and Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. He joined the Border Mounted Rifles (volunteers), eventually becoming Quartermaster Sergeant before they were disbanded in 1892. He was also a member of the Jedforest Club. In addition he was Vice-President of the Upper Teviotdale Fisheries Association in the 1880s. He was also a keen Freemason, holding high office locally and nationally. He was a guest of the 1888 Common Riding Dinner. He succeeded his father in 1887, but had no children and hence was succeeded by his brother Edward. In 1888 he married Emily Grace, 2nd daughter of William St. Lawrence Gethin, brother of an Irish Baronet, and the couple resided at Wolfelee. He died suddenly, aged 47 and was buried in Southdean churchyard – ‘My name it is J.T.S. Elliot, And I am the laird o’ Wolfelee; A fig for the Rosebury Earl, Wha thinks he daur meddle wi’ me’ [JCG]. James (1848–1928) son of William, shepherd at Scotch Kerhope. He worked as a gamekeeper in Liddesdale and was later a farmer over the Border. He married Margaret Murray (1854–1918) and their children were: Davina (1873–96); William (1875–1902); and Catherine (1877–1974), who married Alexander Hunter. James (1859/60–1936) postmaster in Newcastleton. He was grandson of William and Isabella Armstrong, who are buried in the same lair at Ettleton. He married Lizzie Jane, who died in 1919, aged 50. They had a son John who died of wounds in 1918. James ‘Jimmy’ (d.1923), J.P., farmer at Burnhead and later at the Flex. He was for a long time a member of the Common Riding Race Committee. He was recorded as the starter at the Common Riding Races in 1873 and 1875 and gave several speeches at Common Ridings in the 1890s. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1880. He also acted as Convenor of West Teviotdale for the Highland and Agricultural Society and was invited to be a wool judge when the Agricultural Show came to Hawick in 1914. In 1895 he gained the farms of Meikle and Little Whitlaw from the Scotts of Buccleuch, exchanging them for Fenwick. He was still alive in 1919 when there was a gathering of the Flex photographed. In 1892 he married Isabella Douglas Amos (d.1945), daughter of James Amos. He and his wife are buried at Borthwick Waas. He left a sum of £500, the interest to be run for as prize money in the Flex Stakes each year at the Common Riding. James (b.1873) son of Francis, he was born at Parkhill-haugh in Roberton Parish, where his father was a stone dyker. He was educated at Robert School and was an apprentice blacksmith with William Pow at Borthwickbraeburnfoot. He came to Bonchester Bridge as a journeyman blacksmith with Thomas Rutherford, then went to Edinburgh and worked with Mackenzie Brothers there for 8 years. He joined the 4th Volunteer Battalion Royal Scots in Edinburgh in 1896. He returned to Bonchester Bridge to take over as blacksmith from the Rutherford’s in about 1902. He was Superintendent of Range for Rulewater Miniature Rifle Club in 1905 and then Secretary. In 1899 he was married in Edinburgh. Jane see Jean. Jane (18th/19th C.) recorded as ‘Miss Jane, Burngrains’ in 1821 when subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’. She could be the Jean (b.1781), daughter of James, who died at Burngrains. Janet (17th C.) recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 among those ‘Payed but not listed in Hauick Toun’. Janet (19th C.) listed as grocer and spirit dealer in Newcastleton in Slater’s 1852 directory. She could be the ‘Jeannie’ listed in the 1851 census as mother of grocer James Edgar, probably at 28 Langholm Street. Jean nee Rutherford (d.bef. 1621) daughter of Jean and granddaughter of Gavin of Stobs. She inherited Stobs in 1607, along with her aunts Dorothy and Esther. She married William, brother of Robert Elliot, 17th of Redheugh, and they had 3 children: Robert; Francis; and James. Her husband was successively called ‘of Hartsgarth’, ‘of Rig’ and ‘of Hartshaugh’. Janet (17th C.) listed as resident of Redheugh on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. There were John Elliots listed before and after her, and so she was presumably related to at least one of them. Jean (1709/10–74) daughter of William, Laird of Harwood. In 1731 she married William Elliot of Black Tarras, also called ‘of Ludgegill’. The marriage contract is signed by Thomas Scott of Todrig, Charles Scott (brother of the Laird of Gormenberry), Thomas Scott of Stonedge, George Scott (brother of the Laird of Newton), John Scott of Weens, Henry Elliot (both elder and younger, in Deadwater), Robert and William Elliot (sons of John Elliot in Larriston), Henry Elliot (son of William of Harwood) and Robert Kerr (son of the deceased Andrew Kerr in Roughleenook). Many of these men were her close or distant relatives. Their oldest son was William, tenant of ‘Dinlie’ (presumably Dinlees). Jean (1727–1805) born at Minto, 3rd daughter of Sir Gilbert, 1st Earl of Minto. In her teens she entertained a group of Jacobites under John Goodwillie at Minto House, while her father (a staunch anti-Jacobite) hid among the crags. She is also known as the writer of a popular version of ‘Flowers of the Forest’. This was published anonymously in 1776. It was written in response to a bet by her brother Gilbert (later 3rd Baronet) that she would be unable to produce a good ballad on the subject of Flodden. She must have based her version on parts of a traditional ballad, but nevertheless her interpretation quickly became popular. And although she declined to claim credit for it, she was locally referred to as ‘the Flower’. Some of her other verse is published in ‘The Border Elliots and the Family of Minto’ (1897). She played a strong role in sorting out her father’s affairs after his death in 1766. She later moved to Edinburgh, where she was described as ‘a prodigious fund of Scottish anecdote’, but also that she ‘did not appear to have ever been handsome’. She was said to be elegant, fashionable and intelligent, with a liking for French literature. However, she was also said to be the last lady in Edinburgh to use a sedan chair. Returning to Teviotdale in her last year, she died, unmarried, at her brother’s house at Monteviot. A portrait of her as an elderly woman was painted by an unknown artist (also sometimes ‘Jane’). Jean ‘Lucie Lass’ or ‘Jeanie Luce’ (b.1788/9) postmistress in Newcastleton. She was described as ‘a crazy female who could neither read nor write’, and it later seemed unthinkable that she would ever be entrusted with the mail. She would be dressed in ‘a drugged petticoat reaching a little below the knee, a man’s coat and shepherd’s plaid, with her feet and legs encased in a pair of Wellington boots’ and in later years had a weather-beaten face, piercing eyes, shaggy eye-brows and an uncovered head. She was said to be treated well by residents of Lidleshop because she was related to some of the Elliots who witnessed a sasine for the lands of Wolfelee in 1497. The other men listed were all from relatively nearby. It is unclear how he was related to other Elliots, and it is even possible he was the clan leader at the time. John (15th C.) recorded as ‘Johannis Elwald’ in the Exchequer Rolls of 1459 for the Linculden area when his fine was compounded. Probably a different ‘Johannis Elwald de Dauduran’ is also listed. John (15th C.) listed along with James, Laurence and Simon Elwald, as well as Robert Turnbull and Robert Dalgleish, when they said to be rebels captured by Patrick Dickson, Bailie of Peebles, in 1482/3. John (15th C.) recorded in 1493 as ‘Jak elwald’, he lived at Newton of Caverton. He had remission for several thefts: cattle from John Waddell from ‘elinburn’; sheep from John Lamb in Wilton; a horse from Wilton; and sheep from William Martin in Whitchester. He also committed common theft before the time of his previous remission. His surety was Sir Robert Ker. It is unclear how he was related to other Elliots. John (15th/16th C.) witness to the 1488 sasine in which Robert Scott of Allanhaugh leased the lands of Greenwood (i.e. Girnwood) and the Lyne. He is recorded there as ‘John Elwalde of Thorleshop’ and his brother Patrick is also mentioned as a witness. In 1494/5 he was listed being ‘in thornlawishop’ among a list of Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice-aire. Presumably the same man is recorded as ‘Johne Elwald in Thorleshope’ in 1498 in a document listing many Liddesdale men who pledged themselves to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell for good behaviour. He must have been a close ancestor of Roland, Robert (or ‘Hob’ or ‘Robin’) and the later John of Thorleshope. He may be the John who was one of the Elliots who witnessed a sasine for the lands of Robert of Redheugh in 1497. John (15th C.) listed among a large number of Liddesdale men who did not appear before the court in Jedburgh in 1494/5. His name was given as ‘Johannis elwald lawson’, with the last part presumably being a nickname. It is possible he is the ‘Law’s John’ recorded 40 years later. John (15th C.) listed among Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. He was son of ‘wrycrag’, but it is unclear how to interpret this nickname, or who his father may have been. John (15th/16th C.) resident of Foulshiels, probably in Liddesdale. In 1502 he is ‘Johannes elwald in foulschelis’ when convicted of stealing 100 sheep from Walter Scott, out of Hartwoodburn. Perhaps the same John (with no location give) was listed at the same court sitting in Jedburgh in 1502, among men who Marjory Turnbull in Hawick was convicted of resetting. John (15th/16th C.) listed as ‘Johne Elwald in Sondhope’ in a respite of the Register of the Privy Seal of 1510 given to Robert of Redheugh and several others in Liddesdale. Since only a few Elliots are mentioned, it seems likely that he was a close relative of the chief. He is also listed along with William of Larriston and a number of other Liddesdale Elliots in another respite of 1516. He is recorded there as ‘John Elwald in Sandop’. He was probably tenant of the lands of Sundhope, near Whitrope. John ‘Gret Johnnie’ (15th/16th C.) tenant in Priesthaugh. In about 1510 he and Patrick were entered by Robert of Redheugh at a Justice Court in Jedburgh. John (15th/16th C.) recorded as witness to a document for Thomas Ker of Sunderland Hall, done at Fairnilee in 1526. His surname is ‘Elwald’. Chaplain George was also a witness. John ‘Law’s John’ (16th C.) listed as one of the band of Armstrongs and others who were denounced as rebels in 1535 for a raid on the farm at Craik. His name is given as ‘John Elwald, called Lawis-Johne’; it is possible that his father was a Lawrence. He may have been a servant of Thomas of Mangerton, along with William, son of Alexander ‘Elwald’, who is also listed. It is possible he is the same man as (or otherwise related to) ‘Law’s Jock’ mentioned in the 1570s. He could alternatively be the ‘lawson’ recorded in 1494/5. John ‘Jock Unhappy’ (d.1536) recorded as ‘John Elwald, alias Jok Unhappy’ when he was convicted of theft etc., and hanged. John (16th C.) recorded as ‘Joanni Elwald’ on the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. He and his brothers were the tenants of ‘Catlie’ (probably ‘Gatliehill’). John of the Hill (16th C.) recorded as ‘Joanni de lie Hill’ in 1541 on the rental roll for Liddesdale, when he was one of the tenants of ‘Streichelhope’. He may be related to Aircie of the Hill, recorded around the 1550s and others with the same designation. John (16th C.) tenant of Ramsiegill in the 1541 rental roll for Liddesdale. Other men recorded as being ‘in Ramsiegill’ (but tenants of other farms) were Robert and William. He may also be the John who was a tenant in Stirkshielhope (along with other Elliots associated with Ramsiegill); his son ‘Jacobo Elwald’ called ‘Nelis Jok’ was also named (but may be a confusion). He was perhaps related to the earlier Hob and later Gavin of Ramsiegill. John of Thortheshope (16th C.) son of Robert (or ‘Robin’). Along with others he was entered in a bond to John Kerr of Ferniehirst by James Douglas of Cavers in 1546. He was there recorded as ‘John Elwand’. There are other similar bonds involving Robert of Redheugh and him in 1547 and 1548. It is unclear what crimes he was accused of. He may be son of the ‘Rolland Elwald in Thorleshop’ recorded in 1516 and may be related to the John of Thortheshope recorded in 1583. John (16th C.) recorded in 1541 as a tenant of the lands of ‘Lyndene’ in the Barony of Bowden, along with other ‘Elwalds’. John (16th C.) recorded in 1541 on a list of tenants and other associates of James Douglas of Cavers when he complained about his farm of Whitriggs being burned by Walter Scott of Brauxholme. His name appears as ‘Johnne Ilwand’ and he was probably related to Alison and Margaret, who are also listed. John (16th C.) recorded as son to ‘Hob Quhytserk’ in 1546 when he was one of the men to be entered as prisoners with John Kerr of Ferniehirst. He was recorded as son of ‘Quyltsork’ in 1548 when there was a further a bond of Robert of Redheugh with the Kerrs of Ferniehirst for him and John of Thortheshope to be ‘entered’. He was probably another Liddesdale Elliot. John ‘Nelly’s John’ (16th C.) recorded in 1548 when, along with Robert of Redheugh and Richard of the Park, he had a bond to enter 2 prisoners with the Laird of Ferniehirst. He is recorded as ‘Jhone Elliott, callit Nelleis Jhone’. He is probably the same man as ‘Neillis Jok’ (although listed as ‘Jacobo Elwald’, i.e. James rather than John) recorded in 1541 among the tenants in Stirkshielhope; he appears to have been son of another John, with his mother presumably being Helen. John ‘Jock o the Park’ or ‘Little Jock Elliot’ (d.bef. 1578) son of Simon of the Park. He was a notorious riever, and subject of a traditional ballad. His tower may have been located where Newcastleton railway station was later built. He is recorded purchasing (or perhaps leasing) Hangingside (i.e. the land later known as Hawthornside) in 1562, confirmed in 1572/3. In October 1566 he was pursued by the Earl of Bothwell, after failing to appear at Hermitage along with the other Elliot leaders. Since he refused to stop, Bothwell shot him and they then fought at close quarters. He apparently struck Bothwell 3 times, while himself being stabbed twice in the chest, and collapsed about a mile away. It is said that he died of his wounds (although this is not clear, since it seems that the same man is documented later) and traditionally this is said to have happened on the Billhope Burn. Meanwhile Bothwell was taken back to Hermitage where he eventually recovered, after being visited by Mary Queen of Scots. In 1569 he was pledge for ‘the haill branche of the Park’, with William Ker of Cessford, younger, as his surety. In 1569 he was held in Balwearie Castle, as pledge for ‘Gray Will Elliot’ and ‘Hob Mirk Elliot’, who were surely close relatives. In 1570 he signed a bond along with other Elliots, giving pledges for Hob, son of Elder Will and John of Heuchhouse. There was surety for him in 1573, before the Privy Council. He may be the same ‘Johne of the Park’ listed among Montipennie’s Border chiefs, published about 1594 (but probably compiled earlier). He was ‘unquhile Johnne Elliot of the Park’ when it was reported that he had previously acted as joint surety for Simmie Elliot of the Park; he also served as surety for 2 other Elliots. Unless he lived to be quite old he is unlikely to be the same John of the Park recorded in the 1580s – ‘They leave not spindle, spune nor spit, Bed, bolster, blanket, sark nor sheet, John o’ the Park, Rypes kist and ark, For a’ sic wark, He is richt meet’ [SRM]. ‘Who daur meddle i’ me? Who daur meddle wi’ me? Oh, ma name it’s we Jock Elliot, An’ wha daur meddle i’ me?’ [T]. John ‘Jock’ (16th C.) tenant of the lands of Simon Elliot in Dod Burn, listed in a bond of security signed in Hawick in 1569. His name is given as ‘Jock Elliot’. John (16th C.) tenant of Fiddleton. He is recorded in 1569, along with Hob ‘the Lady’ and Hob of Unthank, when ‘Will Elliot callit the Lord’ when held in Loch Doon Castle as pledge for them. He may be related to the later John in Fiddleton. John ‘Law’s Jock’ (16th C.) tenant in Priesthaugh. He is recorded in 1574 as ‘Jok Elliot callit Lawis Jok in Preisthauch’ among men who had been ordered to be removed from the lands of Robert of Redheugh. ‘Lawis Thome’ and ‘Lawis Richie’ were also named and presumably brothers. Their father may have been Lawrence, or perhaps they came from Laws in Liddesdale. Probably the same ‘Jokke Elliot in Preisthauch’ is listed in 1569 among the tenants that Gavin Elliott in Skelhill was surety for. It is possible he is the same man as ‘Lawis-Johne’ recorded in 1535. John (16th C.) described as John ‘Elwood’, brother of Will of the Steel in 1576 when the English Wardens complained to the Deputy Warden for West Teviotdale that he had stolen 100 sheep from Hexhamshire. He could be the same as John ‘of the Steill’ who was taken prisoner by Johnstone of that Ilk in 1572, with Robert of Redheugh and Martin of Braedlie entering into a bond with Johnstone for his return to Johnstone after they had ‘borrowit’ him. He could be the recorded John of the Steele (unless this was an error for Will of the Steele) recorded in 1590 as first in a list of Elliots of the Park and Binks, and others, accused of a raid into England. John ‘Scot’s Hob’s Jock’, ‘Rob’s John’ (16th C.) listed among those implicated in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh in 1580. His name is given ‘Jok Elliott, callit Scottis Hobbis Jok’, and hence he was presumably son of ‘Scot’s Hob’. In 1581 he was part of a bond of caution entered with John Carmichael, who had been Keeper of Liddesdale; ‘Scot’s Hob’s Gavin’ was also listed and presumably his brother. He was also part of a second bond in 1581, for the ‘haill gang of Park’. He was listed in 1582/3 as one of the cautioners for Sim’s Rowie of the Park. He is recorded as ‘Johnne Elliot, called Robeis Johnne’, and his name appears with Sim’s Archie, Jamie’s Hob and others. His name comes second (after Airchie of the Park) among those giving assurance for the Elliots of Park in the 1584 bond signed with the English Wardens at Hermitage; there he is ‘Scotts Hobbs Jock of the Parke’. He was recorded as ‘Scotts Hobs Jocke’ in 1587/8 when accused by Sir John Forster of being on a raid on England in 1585, along with many other Elliots. His father was presumably Robert and his grandfather either a Scott or nicknamed ‘Scot’; However, it is otherwise unclear who he was and how he may have been related to the earlier Jock o the Park. John of Bowholm (16th C.) recorded as ‘Johnnie Elliot of Bewholmis’ among cautioners for men accused of crimes against Englishmen in 1579/80. He was recorded as ‘John Elliott of Bohomes’ in 1587/8 when accused by Sir John Forster of being on a raid on England in 1585, along with many other Elliots. His father was presumably Robert and his grandfather either a Scott or nicknamed ‘Scot’; However, it is otherwise unclear who he was and how he may have been related to the earlier Jock o the Park. John of Bowholm (16th C.) recorded as ‘Johnnie Elliot of Bewholmis’ among cautioners for men accused of crimes against Englishmen in 1579/80. He was recorded as ‘John Elliott of Bohomes’ in 1587/8 when accused by Sir John Forster of being on a raid on England in 1585, along with many other Elliots, including Hob of Bowholm. In 1590/1 he was ‘called Bowholmes’ among men that the Earls of Bothwell and Murray were to enter before the Privy Council. It is unclear how he was related to Hob, but they were probably brothers or father and son. His son David was declared as a fugitive in 1605. John (16th C.) son of ‘Elder Will’, he was sentenced to imprisonment for rieving in 1580/1, along with several other Elliots, Armstrongs and Nixons of Liddesdale. In 1581 James Stewart ‘of Scherelaw’ was cautioned to present him to the Privy Council and in 1582/3 Stewart was found liable to pay a penny for his non-appearance. He was probably brother of Robert, who was captured in Hawick in 1567. Their father was clearly William, but it is unclear to which branch of the Elliots they belonged. It is possible he was ‘Johnne Ellot, sone to Will Elliot, callit the Eldar Tod’ listed in 1578 among Border Lairds who promised to meet to suppress lawlessness on the Border, after being released from being warded with Alexander Abercrombie of that Ilk and also the man transcribed as ‘Johnne Elliot, son of the Elder Tod’ who was warded in Edinburgh in 1580. John of Heuchhouse (16th C.) prisoner in Blackness Castle in 1570, along with Hob Elliot, son of ‘Elder Will’. The pair were allowed to return to Liddesdale following a bond given by Martin of Braedlie, Elder Will, John of the Park, Adam ‘called Cowdais’, Hob of Heuchhous and ‘Clementis Hob’; however, they were not produced after 8 days, and the Elliots incurred a penalty of 4000 merks. There was a reminder at the Privy Council in 1578/9 of the pledge to enter him into ward, along with Hob son of Elder Will; they were supposed to go to the houses of John Cockburn of Ormiston and William Lauder of Halton, but did not go. He was also listed in 1581 along with William of Redheugh, Adam of Shaws, Archie of the Hill and others. They were accused by Englishman James Foster of ‘Symwhaite’ of stealing cattle and goods. In 1579/80 he was ‘Johnne Ellot, son of Dand of Heuchhous’ when he was listed among men (including Martin of Heuchhouse) accused of raiding into England. In the 1580s he (and Gavin of Ramsiegill) also accused Capt. Carvell and his band ‘with the clans of Leven’ of stealing 200 cattle and 30 horses from their lands. He must have been related to the earlier Andrew and Martin of the same place. He could be the John who is recorded in 1583 as brother to Hob of Heuchhouse. He is recorded as ‘Johanne Elliot of Heuchous’ in 1586 when his superior Robert of Redheugh was instructed to enter him in court. In 1587/8 he was accused by Sir John Forster of being on a raid on England in 1585, along with many other Elliots, including ‘Reid’ Martin of Heuchhouse, who was surely a close relative. In 1587/8 his son John is recorded being held in ward (with the name not given) as part of an attempt to quell unrest on the Border; however, he ‘eshaipit and eschewit’ and his pledge was charged to appear before the Privy Council. In 1590 he was part of a group of Elliots who were accused of a raid by Thomas Hall of ‘Gersomfeld’ and the tenants of ‘Dortres’ in England. His name was also given in 1590 along with Croziers, Fosters and others accused of stealing livestock and a detailed list of items from a servant of Sir John Forster. In 1590/1 he was listed among men that the Earls of Bothwell and Murray were to enter before the Privy Council. ‘William Ellott son to John of the Hewghhouse’, complained about for a raid into England in 1595, was presumably his son. John ‘the Gyde’ (16th C.) listed in 1576 when Robert of Redheugh acted as surety for him ‘that he sould abstene fra thift and resett of thift in tyme cumming’. His name was given as ‘Johanne Ellot, callit Jok the Gyde’, and the pledge was stated to have been broken by 1578/9. He was probably related to Jock the Gyde recorded almost 50 years later. John ‘Gavin’s Jock’ of Ramsiegill (16th C.) listed in 1569 as ‘Gawynnis Jok in Ramsygill’. Ade, ‘callit the Cowdais’ was held in Blackness Castle as pledge for him and ‘Wilcokis Hob’. Perhaps the same ‘Jock’ was listed as tenant of Gavin of Elliot of Falnash in 1569; the Laird appeared in Hawick to give surety for his tenants, and he may have been related to Will, Dand and Hob, other Elliots who were also listed as tenants. He is recorded in 1574 among Scotsmen who were reset in England, where he was ‘Gawynnis Jok’ (making it clear that his father was Gavin); his brother ‘Hobbe’ was also mentioned. In 1576 there was a complaint that Neil Montgomery of Langshaw had allowed him to break from ward. In 1581 he was listed along with Martin of Braedlie and Robert Kerr of Ancrum when they were cautioned for the non-appearance of Jock’s Willie and ‘Il Hob’, both from Ramsiegill, who were possibly his sons; they were fined in 1582/3. In 1581 the notary signed for him because he could not write himself. He was listed in 1583 as ‘Joke of Ramsgill’ in a letter from the English wardens, where he was the first man listed under the Elliots of Burnhead. He was probably related to the Jock of Ramsiegill recorded in 1612, as well as to other Elliots of Ramsiegill and Burnhead. Probably the same man is recorded as ‘Gawins Jok’ under the heading ‘Burnhead’ in Monipennie’s list of Border chiefs (published around 1594, but probably compiled earlier). It is possible he is ‘Johanne Elliot’ brother of ‘Stottan Gib’ recorded in 1598/9 among brothers, tenants and servants of William of Falnash in complaints about reiving; they could both have been brothers of William of Falnash and hence sons of Gaving of Falnash. John (16th C.) recorded as ‘Johanne Elliot, callit of the Dewisleis’ in 1578/9, when it was stated to the Privy Council that he was previously meant to have been placed into ward, but in fact had not been. This was along with Andrew ‘callitt the Wowaris Andro’, with sureties John Carmichael, younger of that Ilk and William Scott of Moutbenger. He was probably from Eweslees. Probably the same John was recorded as being ‘of the Dewhowses’ in Ewesdale, along with Ringan, when they signed the 1584 bond of assurance with the English Wardens. John ‘Jock’ (16th C.) recorded in 1583 in a list of Elliots of the Burnhead branch. He was surely related to Archie of the Hill, who is also listed. Probably the same ‘Jocke Elwood’ was ‘brothers sonne’ to Archie of the Hill in 1591 when they were accused of plundering from Jeffrey Tailor and the tenants of Scaleby. He is probably the Jock listed along with Mark and James of the Hill among Scotsmen accused of raids into England in 1595. Possibly the same ‘Johne Ellot of the Hill’ acted as cautioner in 1611 for John of Heuchhouse to appear in court at Jedburgh. John of Burnhead (16th C.) named in 1590 along with ‘Gib Ellott son to Robin’, 2 servants of Robert of Redheugh and others who were accused of stealing horses from Middleton Hall in the previous year. He was recorded as ‘called the lard of Burnheadhes’. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Elliots associated with Burnhead. John ‘Half Lug’ (16th C.) listed among the Elliots of Burnhead in 1583, where his name is given as ‘Joke Ellot called Halfe loges’. Probably the same John was ‘halfe lug’ in 1590, when accused with several other Elliots of leading a raid on ‘Windgates’ in England. He may be the ‘Wyll Ellotts John of Burnheards’ recorded in 1595 among Scotsmen accused of raiding into England. He was ‘Jok Elliott of Burnheid, called Halfe Lug’ when listed among Liddesdale men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in 1605. John ‘Jock’ of Thorlieshope (16th C.) listed in 1583 among the Elliots of the Braidlie branch, his name appearing as ‘John Elliot of Thoreshope’. He may be the same as the John of Thorlieshope recorded 4 decades earlier, but is more likely to be his son. Probably the same John was recorded in 1569 when Martin of Braidlie and Archibald Armstrong of Mangerton promised to enter him in ward if requested by the Lord Regent. Probably the same John was pledge in 1569 for ‘the hail branche of the Thorlishiop (except Hob of the Shaws and his brother Will of the Steele), with Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule as his surety. He was also ‘of Thorlishoip’ when held in Wester Wemyss in 1569 as pledge for Hob of the Shaws and Archie ‘Fyre the Brais’. John ‘Jock’ (16th C.) listed as ‘Hobbis Jok’ in 1581 when he was among those cautioned for the non-appearance of ‘Symmis Rowie’ of the Park. Others listed were Rob’s John (unless this was an error and the same man), Sim’s Archie and Jamie’s Hob, who may have been related to him; they were fined in 1582/3. He was also referred to as ‘Johnne Ellot, called Roweis Johnne’. John ‘Sim’s John’ of the Park (16th C.) presumably son of Simon, and probably related to ‘Jock o the Park’ from a couple of decades earlier. He is probably the John of the Park for whom surety was recorded in 1573. He was to be warded with Sir William Scott of Balwearie, but was interchanged with Hob, son of the deceased James of the Park; the cautioners were Sir Walter Ker of Cessford, Andrew Ker of Faldonside and Walter Riddell of that Ilk. He may be the ‘Johnne Ellot of the Park’ listed in 1580 among those implicated in the ambush of Scots and Gledstains at Whithaugh. An English list of 1583 has him first among the Elliots of Park, giving his name as ‘Sims John Elliot of the Parke’; others named (to whom he was probably closely related) are ‘Grey Willie’, ‘Scots Hobbie’, Jamie of the Park, ‘Grey Will’s Jamie’ and ‘Hob’s Hobbie’. Also in 1583 he was ‘John Elwet of the Park’ when the Halls of ‘Haveracres’ complained that he had led about 100 men in a raid that resulted in the deaths of 4 Halls. He may be the John of the Park, recorded in 1590 along with Gabriel, as well as Elliots of the Steele, Thorlieshope and others, who were accused of raiding into England. ‘He must have been related to ‘Rowie’ or ‘Robin’ of the Park, recorded in 1578 and 1581 and ‘young Archie of the Park’ who was one of the Elliots to sign a bond with Scott of Bucleuch in 1599 John ‘Jock’ (16th C.) recorded in the 1585 remission for men of Dumfriesshire as being ‘Jok Ellat in Bowgranis’. This was probably somewhere near Langholm, but could be same as Burngrains. John of Copshaw (16th/17th C.) probably a son of Robert of Redheugh, his brothers being Robert, the 14th Chief, possibly Martin of Braidlie and Archibald of Falnash. In 1561/2 he was among Elliots who had a bond with the Kerrs of Ferniehirst to enter Thomas Routledge; the others were Archie of Falnash, Archie’s son Gavin and ‘Elder Will’. In 1568 he led a party of Elliots, Armstrongs and others, which burned the house at Torwoodlee, killing George Pringle there. In 1580 he was among those implicated in the ambush of Scots and Gledstains at Whithaugh; his brother Tom was also listed. Also in 1580

he was said to have joined the group of Elliots and Armstrongs that raided the farm of Slaidhills, stealing cattle and leaving a servant for dead. He was also in the party that attacked some Elliots, Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh in Liddesdale in 1580, killing Walter Gledstains. He was listed in 1581 among Armstrongs, Elliots and others who accused the Scotts and their allies of several crimes, contrary to the bond between them. He may be the ‘Jock of Copshawe’ (surname not given) who was among a group of men accused in 1582 of taking part on a raid into England in which Martin Taylor and 3 others were killed. He is probably ‘Joke Elliot called Copshawe’ listed among the Elliots of Braidlie in 1583. In 1584 the Warden of the Middle Marches, Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst, lists him among the ‘principalis of the branchis of Liddisdail’. In 1587/8 his brother Hob was held in ward with Lord Sinclair. He is also mentioned in 1588 (although this could have been his son) when Nichol Cairncross was surety for his brother Hob, who was in the Tolbooth. He may be the ‘John of Copshawes’ whose tower, somewhere near Saughtree, was marked on Sandison’s c.1590 map of the Debatable Land. He was named by an English informed as part of the group that raided Carlisle Castle to free ‘Kimmont Willie’ (although he is likely to have been too old to take part himself, and so this may have been a son). In 1590 he was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. In 1594/5 he was named in an indenture between the Scottish and English Wardens. He is probably one of the 3 Johns who signed a bond written by Sir John Forster to try to end family feuds on the Border in 1595/6. In an English letter of 1596 it is stated that he had built a tower at ‘Blackstone lee’ (which was probably near Mangerton, or may simply have been a misunderstanding for Copshaw). He was one of the trustees for the young Robert (17th) of Redheugh appointed in about 1597. In that year he wrote (along with Robert of Redheugh and William of Hartsgarth) from Larriston to the English Warden, explaining that they had sworn to the Scott of Buccleuch that they would not have dealings with any Englishmen. In 1599 he was ‘Jok Elliot of Copschaw’ among Elliots who signed a bond at Branxholme with the Warden of the West March regarding the inhabitants of Liddesdale; he did this with his hand on the notary’s pen ‘because I can noch wryte my self‘. He was probably the Laird of Copshaw who in 1599 was listed among Scotts and others who were charged to find sureties for ‘observing the King’s peace’. In 1605 he was accused, along with his son Robert (and servant John Routledge and Adam ‘Rakese’), of attacking Wauchope (in Rulewater) with 100 men, stealing cows, sheep, etc., but was acquitted. He was found guilty of the murder of Pringle in 1607 and denounced as a rebel when he did not appear; if this is the same man, then he must have been quite old by then. John ‘Rowie’s John’ (16th C.) recorded in 1581 as part of a bond of caution entered with John Carmichael, who had been Keeper of Liddesdale. Several other Elliots were listed, including Jock and Gavin, sons of ‘Scot’s Hob’. He was also part of a second bond in 1581, for the ‘haill gang of Park’. He was also listed among the Elliots of the Park who signed for their whole band in the 1584 assurance given to the English Wardens. His name is given there as ‘Roweis Johnne of the Parke’. His father was presumably Ninian. John ‘Jock o the Lies’ (16th C.) one of a group of Elliots who signed a bond for ‘Willie’s Hob’ in 1587. It is unclear where his seat was, but presumably in Liddesdale. He may have been closely related to the Elliots of Ramsiegill and of ‘the Hill’. He was probably related to ‘Ade Elwald de Leyis’ who is recorded in 1541. John (16th C.) brother of ‘Willie’s Hob’, he was part of the bond for his brother, made to William Douglas of Loch leven and his son James Douglas, Commandator of Melrose in 1587. His father was probably William. John (16th C.) recorded as ‘Johnne Ellot, sone to unquhile Ringane the Portar, or Blasteis Jok’ in 1578/9, when John Carmichael, younger of that Ilk was caution for him (and others) not to raid into England. He was also ‘John the Portars sone’ among Elliots of Evesdale in Monipennie’s c.1594 compilation of Border chiefs. He may have been son of Ninian ‘the Porter’ from Eves Doors. John ‘Lang Jock’ (16th C.) recorded among Nixons and Elliots complained about by the English Warden regarding 2 separate raids in 1588. He was also recorded in 1590 as ‘longe Jocke Elliot’ when, along with relatives of Martin of Braidlie and others was accused of stealing cattle and horses from England. Probably the same man was ‘longe John Elliott’, accused in 1590 along with elder Will of the Steele, Archie and Martin’s Gib ‘the cousin’ of stealing from the tenants of ‘Greinridge’. He is also ‘longe John’ listed among Elliots and Armstrongs complained about in 1590 by a large group of Englishmen for a raid on Blackcleugh in Kirkhauga. He was also named in 1590 on a list of Elliots, Nixons and others who were accused of being on a raid into England in 1588. His nickname presumably means he was tall. John (16th C.) recorded as ‘Cowshawes’ in 1590 along with other Elliots and Nixons when there was a complaint from the English side of the Border that in 1588 they had stolen in ‘playsay dayelight, thir hirdes’ and 24 head of cattle. He may be related to Will ‘called Cowsauche’, who was a fugitive in 1605. John ‘Cull the Spade’ (16th C.) recorded in 1590 along with other Elliots and Nixons who were accused of going on a raid into England in 1588. He is listed separately from John ‘Cowshawes’, along with Gavin’s Hob, who may have been close relatives. John ‘the Child’ (16th C.) listed among a large group of Elliots who were accused in 1590 of taking Ralph Hall and others prisoner and ransoming them. It is unclear what his nickname referred to, or whether he is the same as one of the other Johns. John (16th C.) listed among Elliots and others who were accused in 1590 of taking horses and prisoners on a raid into England. He is recorded being ‘of the Hillend, but separately from Mark of the Hill (making it seem that he was not directly related to that branch), and just before Elliots of Ewesdale. John ‘Jock’ of Burngrains (d.bef. 1608) probably from the lands near Meikledale, in Ewesdale. In 1606 his sons Hob and Will were listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick. He is recorded as ‘vmqle Johnne Ellote of Burnegrans’ and also ‘Jok of Burgranes’ in 1608 when his son William (or possibly Ninian, since the records are confusing) was sentenced to hanging for resisting the King’s Guard. He may have been related to Adam of Meikledale, who also held Burngrains later in the 17th century. John (16th/17th C.) younger son of Martin of Braidslie, referred to as ‘Martin’s John of Burnmouth’. He was probably the son of Martin recorded in 1590 along with his brother Airche, as well as ‘Martin’s Gib’ and Martin of Prickinghaugh, when they were accused of stealing from Englishman Thomas Rutherford of Blackhall. He was probably the John, son of Martin, recorded on a 1590 list of Elliots (including his brother Archie and cousin Dand), Croziers, Nixons and others accused of rieving from William Robson of ‘Allerweshe’. He is probably also the John listed among Elliots (including his brother Gib, as well as Airche of Clintwood, who was also his brother) and Armstrongs complained about in 1590 by a large group of Englishmen for a raid on Blackcleugh in Kirkhaugh, taking many prisoners for ransom. He was probably the John, son of Martin, who (along with his brother Gib) was part of a complaint about a raid into Gilsland in 1596, led by Sir Walter Scott of Harden. He was denounced as a rebel in 1611 and his lands and goods forfeited to Thomas Cranston. It is possible that he was the ‘Johnne Elwode in Burnmouth’ listed in 1612 among those who supported Sir William Cranston in his commission to keep peace on the Border. John (16th/17th C.) listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605. He was son of Will of Fiddleton and listed along with his father and brother Ringan. John ‘Jock’ (16th/17th C.) listed among fugitives who did not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605. He was son of ‘Heidheid’, but it is unclear how he was related to other Elliots. John ‘Jock’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1605 as son of ‘Wower’s Andro’. He was listed as a fugitive among Liddesdale and Eskdale men not appearing at a Borders Commissioners’ court in Hawick. It is unclear who his father might have been. John ‘Jock’, ‘the Murt’ (16th/17th C.) listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a Borders Commissioners’ court in Jedburgh in 1605. He was also referred to in 1611 when ‘Robert Ellot, called Martenis Hob’ was cautioner for his appearance at court in Jedburgh. However, he was acquitted of the charges. It is unclear what his nickname meant, but he may have been related to Will in Burnhead, called ‘Murt’. John ‘Jock’, ‘Blackheid’ (16th/17th C.) listed among Liddisdale men declared as fugitives for not attending a court in Peebles in 1605. He is recorded as ‘Jok Ellott, called Blakheid’. His nickname was presumably to distinguish him from other contemporary Johns. He was perhaps related to Archibald and William, who also had the same nickname. John ‘Reid Jock’ (16th/17th C.) listed among Liddisdale men declared as fugitives for not attending a court in Peebles in 1605. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Elliots. John (16th/17th C.) son of Archie of Foulshiel. In 1611 John Ainslie, Burgess of Jedburgh was cautioner for him to appear in court at Jedburgh; however, he was acquitted of the charges. John of Heuchhouse (16th/17th C.) son of the earlier John. In 1587/8 he was ‘Johnne Ellos, son fo Johnne of the Heuchhous’ when held in ward (with the name not given) as part of an attempt to quell unrest on the Border; however, he ‘eshaipit and eschewit’ and his pledge was charged to appear before the Privy Council. Probably the same John of Heuchhouse was recorded in 1611 when John of the Hill acted as cautioner for him to appear in court at Jedburgh. He was acquitted of the charges. John ‘Jock’ (16th/17th C.) referred to in 1612 as ‘in Braidlie’. He was on the jury for the trial of Hawick Bailies and others over the death of John Elliot ‘in Redden’ while in custody. He may have been the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John ‘Jock of Rynsiegill’ (16th/17th C.) from Ridden in Liddesdale, the designation is probably the same as ‘Ramsiegill’. He was a thief who was caught plundering from a Hawick Burgess in 1612, and imprisoned in the church steeple. He then apparently committed suicide, and his widow Bessie ‘with the ffyve fatherless bairns’ brought an action against the Bailies. However, it was proved by witnesses that ‘he was fund lying deid …hangit himself in his aune belt’. He was recorded in Pitcairn’s ‘Criminal Trials’ as ‘Johnne Ellote in Redden, callit Johnne of Rynsiegill’. John of Arkleton (d.bef. 1622) 2nd son of William of Falnash and brother of Robert of Falnash (who was Justice of the Peace in Roxburghshire). He was also referred to as ‘of Falnash’. In 1615 he witnessed a sasine of Kirkton by William Armstrong. In 1616 he was on the jury that convicted Jock Scott ‘the Suckler’ of sheep stealing. In 1617 he appeared before the Privy Council with a number of other Border lairds to renew the bond for the good behaviour of his supporters and tenants. He married Ester Armstrong, who was one of the heirs-portioners of Ninian Armstrong of Arkleton. They had one child, Archibald of Arkleton. John ‘the Dod’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1624 when Adie and Will Usher were convicted for stealing sheep from him and others. He is distinguished from John ‘callit the Gyde’ in the same case. He may have farmed on the Dod Burn. Perhaps the same John ‘callit Dods’, tenant in Thorlieshope, was recorded in 1623 when he was a cautioner (along with John Turner in Nether Nisbet) for Michael ‘Birnie in Fairnylies’ at the Justice Court in Jedburgh. He was probably also the ‘Jok Elliot, callit Dod’ who had 3 cows stolen from his lands of ‘Buceburne’ in 1623. John ‘the Gyde’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1624 along with John ‘the Dod’ when they had 5 sheep stolen from them by Adie and Will Usher. It is unclear what his nickname meant (but there was also a William Scott ‘the Gyde’); he is probably related to the earlier ‘Jok the Gyde’. John (17th C.) recorded in 1642 as ‘Jock Elliot called Jock a gods name’ on a long list of Borderers to be apprehended and tried for various crimes. It is unclear what his peculiar nickname meant. His lands were probably around Liddesdale. John (17th C.) 3rd son of Robert of Falnash. Before 1644 he married Grizel Elliot, heiress of Philhope, who had been ward of his father since her own father had died. In 1644 Philhope was sold to Archibald Elliot and Elizabeth Chisholme. He started as a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1636, but the entry is deleted 2 years later, presumably meaning that he had changes in his circumstances. This may have been the time of his marriage, when he took over running Philhope. He was probably the John, ‘Fahnashes brother’, recorded in the Land Tax Rolls for Hawick Parish in 1663, paying £216 for Broadlee. John (17th C.) described as a ‘wag’, i.e. soldier, in Hawick in 1642 when he is listed among a large number of people accused of theft (probably wrongly). His son James was also mentioned there. John (17th C.) described as ‘in Whitscheill’ in 1665 when he was named as a debtor of William Elliot of Binks, along with many other Elliots. John (17th C.) said to have been an illegitimate son of the first Gavin of Brugh, he was hanged for theft at Hexham. However, these generations are quite confused. John (d.1679) from Southdean Parish. He is recorded as one of the men banished to America in 1679 for being a Covenanter, and dying at Moul Head of Deerness, in Orkney, when their ship wrecked and they were ordered shut up beneath the hatches. John (d.c.1685) tenant in Hyndhope (although it is not clear which one). His will is recorded in 1685. John of Thorlieshope (1621–98) son of Adam of Meikledale. In 1657 his father purchased for him the lands of ‘Is-gill’ (or Elfgill), ‘Midgehop’ (or Midgeholm) and Newgibbing, retaining the liferent for himself. In 1671 he was ‘indweller in Hudshouse’ and already possessed Thorlieshope. He purchased Larriston Rig and Hopehead and in 1675 he gave a ‘wadsett’ for Robert Elliot of Larriston’s lands of Over and Nether Larriston, Redheugh, Blackhope and ‘Greenhollys’. He paid tax on £520 in Castleton Parish in 1678. He probably had the house at Thorlieshope rebuilt in 1682 (since there is a stone there bearing that date). In 1690 he was a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. In 1697 he (along with his 3rd son John) purchased another wadsett on the lands of Larriston Rig and Hopehead. He was a Commissioner of Supply in Roxburghshire in 1690. It is said that he was conspicuous among the band of local minor Lairds who engaged in smuggling cattle across the Border during the time when such trade was illegal. He was a cautioner for a bond by Henry Elliot of Harwood in 1692, and also witnessed the bond between Harwood and Bewlie in 1692. He was recorded at the Castleton Kirk Session in 1698. He married Jean Elliot of Dinlabyre before 1671. In 1677 he secondly married Jean, daughter of Thomas McDougall of Stodrig. He had 10 children: William of Thorleshope and Ove, who was also Commissioner of Supply and married Christian Ainslie; Henry of Lodgegill (1672–1714), who married Margaret, daughter of Robert Elliot of Midlem Mill; John of the Binks (1674–1751), who married Christian, daughter of Robert Elliot, factor to the Duke of Buiccleuch; Andrew, who died unmarried; Margaret, who married Sim Elliot of Lodgegill; Janet, who married William Elliot in Penchris; Helen, who married John Elliot of Cooms (or perhaps William of Cooms); Jean, who married Thomas Armstrong of Sorbie; Christian, who married John, brother of Elliot of Dinlabyre; and Elizabeth, who married Edward Elliot. He is buried at the Nether Kirk of the Ewes. John (17th C.) described as ‘sometimes in Dinlibeir now in Hudshouse’ in 1665 and 1668, when he was named as a creditor for the estate of William Elliot of Binks, who was his father-in-law. In 1662 he was also one of the witnesses to the last testament of William Elliot of Harwood and Binks, described as his father-in-law. John of Brugh (1627–1705) eldest son of Archibald of Brugh. He farmed and lived at Nether Southfield. He was recorded as tenant there in at least the period 1690–98, however, he was already at Southfield when his daughter Beatrix was baptised in 1654. In 1665 he borrowed money, with his brothers Gavin and Gilbert as guarantors. In 1667 he was on the panel for William of Dinlabyre being served heir to his great-grandfather William of Hartsgarth. He is probably the John recorded at Nether Southfield in 1694, when he paid tax on 2 hearths there. In 1700 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Paterson of Burnflat and both he and Gilbert (his son) witnessed baptisms for Robert Scott in Newbigging and for William Scott (from Wilton Parish). In 1701 he was witness to the birth of the twin daughters of his son Gilbert. In 1702 he helped arrange the settlement for his grand-daughter Eleanor when she married Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. In 1702 he witnessed baptisms in Hawick for Robert Scott in Goldielands, for merchant Thomas ‘Hotson’ and another along with his brother Gilbert. In 1704 he and his son Gilbert witnessed a baptism for William Hood in Newbigging. He married Margaret (1630–1706), daughter of Robert Johnstone, who was said to be Minister of Ancrum, although no man of that name held that particular office, and so he was possibly minister elsewhere. She died the year after him. They had at least 9 children: William, merchant in London, later of Brugh and Wells; Gilbert in Winningtonrig and Nether Southfield; Robert, mentioned in his brother William’s will; Thomas of Haydon Bridge or Canonbie Mill, who married a Miss Robinson; an unnamed son (b.1672); George (b.1676), Minister of Howman; Beatrix (b.1654); a daughter who married Hobbie Scott; Jeanette (b.1672), who was left money in William’s will; and Joan (b.1675), also left money in her brother’s will. Most of their children were christened in Hawick Parish. The witnesses in 1654 were William Douglas (perhaps of Cavers) and Gilbert Elliott (perhaps of Stobs), in 1672 were James Liddell (probably Hawick Town Clerk) and James Scott and in 1675 were John Hardie and schoolmaster John Purdom. His wife died the year after he did and they were buried at St. Mary’s, the tombstone once reading ‘Here lies John Elliot in the Southfield descended from the renowned family of the Ellios of Lariston by his grandschir Gavin Elliot of the Brough . . .’ and that his wife was ‘sister of the ancient family of the Halliburtons of Muirhouslaw’. He could be the John in Southfield who in 1680 was called as a witness in the trial of local Covenanters, but did not appear. John (c.1650–1728) son of Adam of Mosspeeble. He was described as being ‘in Dinley’ (i.e. Dinlees). He married Margaret Scott from Falnash (perhaps an older child of Gideon Scott). Their children were: probably Ninian (1697–1724); Adam (1702–24); John (b.1703), who died young; John in Park; William (c.1703–91), who married Helen Scott, from Blackhall; Isobel, who married Henry, 2nd son of William Elliot in Penchris; Janet; Christian; and Anna. He died at Park. His will is registered in Edinburgh Commissary Court in 1730. John in Leaugh (17th C.) 3rd son of William of Penchris and Mary Elliot, he was recorded in 1683. He had a son, Archibald, who was an Excise Officer. John (17th C.) recorded being ‘in Harwood’ in 1688 when his daughter Bessie was baptised in Hawick Parish. The witnesses were Corporal James Campbell and Gideon Scott of Outerside. John (17th C.) resident of Castleton Parish (probably at Yethouse) according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Isobel, who was recorded after him, must have been closely related. John (17th C.) tenant in Saughtree in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. John (17th C.) name of 2 separate men recorded paying the Hearth Tax in 1694 for households near Redhengh in Castleton Parish. John (17th C.) resident of Castleton Parish, listed between Sorbietrees and Flatt, according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. John (17th C.) recorded as a householder at Branxholme on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, when he was taxed for 2 hearths. It is possible he was the same as one of the contemporary Johns. John (17th C.) resident at Monk’s Croft (in Hassendean Parish) according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to William who was also listed there. John in Harden (17th/18th C.) son of Adam in Dykeraw. He had a daughter, Marion, and a son, William in Hole. His lands were Harden in Liddesdale. John (17th/18th C.) described as ‘in Tower’ in Cavers Parish in 1698 when his daughter Jane was baptised. John (17th/18th C.) shepherd in Langside in Cavers Parish in 1700 when his daughter Elspeth was baptised. He could be the tenant in Langside who is recorded paying tax on 3 hearths in 1694. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, where he had 2 children baptised. He married Helen Scott in Cavers Parish in 1701. Their children included: Walter (b.1703); and Margaret (b.1705). John (17th/18th C.) married Christian Grieve in Hawick Parish in 1702. They were both from Hawick Parish. John (17th/18th C.) shoemaker in Southfield. In 1704 he witnessed the baptism of a daughter of Gilbert, farmer in Southfield and Winningtonrig, who was probably a relative of some sort; the other witness was John Elliott, ‘Collector’, who was uncle of Sir Gilbert, 3rd Baronet of Stobs. He married Helen Scott in Cavers Parish in 1701 and their daughter Margaret was baptised in Hawick in 1705. The witnesses in 1705 were Gideon Scott of Falsnash and Gilbert Elliot in Southfield. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, where he married Helen Laidlaw in 1705. Their children included: Andrew (b.1705); William (b.1707); Margaret (b.1709); John (b.1711); and Walter (b.1713). In 1709 he was described as a tenant, but the location is missing, and in 1711 he was tenant in Lees. John (17th/18th C.) miller at Appotside Mill who was witness to a sasine for the Elliots of Harwood in 1704. His son James was also a witness. John of Castlehope and Billhope (17th/18th C.) 2nd son of William of Mosspeeble, he was descended from the Elliots of Falsnash. Castlehope was an earlier name for Twislehope. He married Margaret, daughter of Robert Elliot of Caerleunrig. Their children were: William in Whithaugh and Braidlie (b.c.1678–1767); Robert of Castlehope and Billhope; and Walter in Brugh. John (17th/18th C.) recorded as ‘in Rig’ 1711 when his son Francis was baptised in Cavers Parish. It is unclear if he was related to the other Elliots in Rig. John (17th/18th C.) said in some genealogies to be son of Robert of Lodgellill. In 1711 he married Helen, daughter of John of Thorlieshope. However, this information may be confused, and his name may be an error for William of Cooms. John (17th/18th C.) wigmaker in Hawick. He was the brother of Robert of Rigg. In 1718 he witnessed a baptism for a child of the deceased William Scott of Brieryhill. John of Larriston (17th/18th C.) appointed in 1715 as one of the legal guardians for the 7 children of Henry, farmer at Sorbietrees. ‘John’ could be an error, since Robert was the Laird of Larriston at this time. He could also be the John whose sons Robert and William signed the 1731 marriage contract of William Elliot of Lodgellig and Jean Elliot of Harwood. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Stobicote, where his records are in 1716, 1722 and 1728. He witnessed a baptism in 1720 (along with James Scott in Stobicote) for William Telfer, servant in Stobicote. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included: Archibald (b.1716); Isabel (b.1722); and James (b.1728). Other children, baptised in Cavers to a John around the same time, could also be his. John (17th/18th C.) married Helen Turnbull in Bedrule Parish in 1714. Their children (with no mother given) may include John (b.1715), Janet (b.1723) and Helen (b.1725). John (17th/18th C.) tenant in Goldielands and Crumhaugh. His brother William was tenant in Crumhaugh. He was already tenant in Goldielands according to a baptismal record of 1713. 2 of his servants (Walter Scott and Helen Turnbull) are recorded in 1721 getting married in Hawick. He is recorded as ‘in Goldielands’ in 1723 when he was considered as an elder of Hawick Kirk. He was admitted as a Burgess of Hawick in 1727. He was still tenant in Goldielands in the period 1730–5 when his shepherd, Robert Hobkirk, had a run-in with the Town Herd, Mungo Armstrong (as recounted in 1767). And a few years later he had to speak with the Bailies to recover cattle owned by himself and other local tenants, which the Burgh Officers had driven to the West Port after they were found being pastured on the Common. In 1720 he presented for baptism a posthumously born child of his brother William. In 1731 he witnessed a baptism for workman Robert Lawson. He married Helen Laidlaw and their son Walter was baptised in 1713, with witnesses Walter Grieve in Bramsholme Park and Andrew Riddell (who also lived at Goldielands). John (17th/18th C.) described as being in Earlside in 1724 when his daughter Katherine was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1724. John of Demainholm (17th/18th C.). Recorded in the period 1695–1726 in papers with the Scotts of Buccleuch dealing with his debts. In 1727 he sold the lands of Demainholm to William of Thorsleshope and Overton. John of Peel (d.bef. 1721) youngest son of William of Harwood. His older brother Simon pre-deceased his father, while his brother Henry succeeded to the main estate of Harwood. He was given the lands of Baxtonglee (also called Peel) by his father. He paid the land tax on £160 in Castleton Parish in 1678, and was recorded then as being ‘in Backestonelyes alias peel’. He married Elizabeth Elliot (from an unknown branch of the family). He had a son John, to whom he conveyed the lands of Peel; however, on John’s death these lands went to his daughters. His children were: John, tenant in Langside in 1723; Christian, who married Adam Elliot of Unthank; Jean, who married Thomas Pringle in Kirkton; and Margaret, who married Robert Dalgleish in Fastheugh. His daughters sold Peel to Henry, son of their uncle Henry of Harwood. He appears to have been dead by 1721, when Elizabeth is referred to as his widow (although Tancred suggests that his son John predeceased him and he lived until about 1730). John of Binks (1674–1751) 3rd son of John of Thorsleshope. He was granted a charter of Binks by Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs in 1674. His brother Henry of Lodgegill died in 1714, when he became a curator for his nephew William. In 1718 he was granted a charter for Binks by Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. He and his descendants also held the lands of Burnmouth; he is probably the ‘Jo. Elliot in Burnmouth’ who paid the window tax in Castleton Parish in 1748. In 1700 he married Christian (c.1682–1726), daughter of Robert Elliot, Factor to the Duke of Buccleuch, and had 9 children, but the only sons who survived to adulthood were Robert of Binks and William of Bush. His children included: Robert of Binks (1702–66); John (b.1704), who died young; William of Bush (1705–99), who married Margaret Aitchison; John (again, b.1710), who was a Burgess of Jedburgh and died without issue; James, George, Henry and an unnamed son, who all died young or unmarried; and Jean (b.1726), who married Henry Elliot of Peel. He is buried at Castleton. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. His children baptised there were: John (b.1727); Adam (b.1725); and Margaret (b.1729). John (17th/18th C.) referred to as being ‘of Langlands’. He married Elizabeth Wilson in Ashkirk in 1723. Their children, born in Ashkirk and Wilton Parishes, included: Isobel (b.1724); James (b.1726); Robert (b.1728); John (b.1731); and Beattie (b.1733). John (17th/18th C.) tenant in Park, son of John of Dinlees. He is mentioned in 1730, but nothing else is known about him. His brother William may have taken over the tenancy from him. John (17th/18th C.) cooper in Hawick Parish. In 1726 he was recorded at Nether Southfield. He married Catherine Elliot in Hawick in 1723. Their children included: Bessie (b.1724); William (b.1726); Katherine (b.1729); and Henry (b.1737). The witnesses in 1726 were James and Walter Scott. John of Whithaugh (c.1702–48) eldest son of William, who purchased Whithaugh for him (as well as Redheugh for his brother Robert) in about 1730. He paid the window tax in Castleton Parish in 1748. He married Margaret (c.1704–1768), daughter of Robert Scott of Gorenberry. Their children were: William (c.1723–76) of Whithaugh, who married Margaret Shortreed of Essenside and secondly Elizabeth, sister of the Laird of Wolfelee; Robert (1725–70), farmer at Hermitage and Millburnholm, who married Janet Scott from Greenwood; John (1726–1813), farmer at Twislehope, who married Janet Turnbull from Mangerton; Margaret (b.1727), who died young; Mary (b.1728), also died young; Walter (b.1729), died young; Thomas (1730–1807), also tenant in Twislehope; Helen (b.1731), married A. Waddle, purser in the Royal Navy; Isobel (1732–1807); James (c.1733–1816), shepherd in Twislehope; and Elizabeth (c.1734–1807), who died unmarried. He and his wife are buried at Unthank. John (18th C.) rented the farm of Todshawhill from the Scotts of Buccleuch in at least the years 1744–46. Note that his name may have been James rather than John. John (b.1701/2–88) from Castleton Parish. He married Hannah Grieve. Their children included: Robert (b.1761); William (1763–88), a surgeon who died at Cape Coast Castle in Africa; Janet (b.1765); John (b.1767); and John (again, b.1769). He and his wife are buried at Langholm, but mentioned on the family gravestone in Castleton (although the dates may not be correct, since he would be very old when he had his children). John (18th C.) recorded in Penruchise when his sons William (b.1728) and Thomas (b.1730) were baptised in Cavers Parish. He may be the same as another contemporary John. In 1728 he is ‘in Penchross’ when his sister Margaret married James Linton (from Ettrick Parish). John (18th C.) married Agnes Best in Bedrule Parish in 1726. Their children (with no mothers’ name listed) may be Thomas (b.1727), John (b.1728), Helen (b.1729), Agnes (b.1732), James (b.1734), John (b.1737) and Margaret (b.1740). John (18th C.) recorded as ‘in Linhope’, when his daughter Helen was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1733. He could be the same as John ‘in Southdeanrigg’ whose daughter Katherine was baptised in 1741. John (17th/18th C.) from the Black Tarra branch of the family, he was eldest son of William of Cooms. In 1732 he was described as ‘now of Cumes’, having inherited Cooms from his father. In 1709 he married Agnes, the eldest daughter of Robert Mather of Greenhill. Their children (mostly baptised in Cavers Parish) were: Helen (b.1711), who probably died young; Gilbert (1713–59); Mary (b.1735); Helen (again, b.1739); and Margaret (b.1740). William of Borthwickbrae was served as his heir. He died very old when he had his children.

John of Brugh (d.bef. 1756) 2nd son of William of Cooms. His children (with no mothers’ name listed) may be Thomas (b.1727), John (b.1728), Helen (b.1729), Agnes (b.1732), James (b.1734), John (b.1737) and Margaret (b.1740). John (18th C.) recorded as ‘in Linhope’, when his daughter Helen was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1733. He could be the same as John ‘in Southdeanrigg’ whose daughter Katherine was baptised in 1741. John (17th/18th C.) from the Black Tarra branch of the family, he was eldest son of William of Cooms. In 1732 he was described as ‘now of Cumes’, having inherited Cooms from his father. In 1709 he married Agnes, the eldest daughter of Robert Mather of Greenhill. Their children (mostly baptised in Cavers Parish) were: Helen (b.1711), who probably died young; Gilbert (1713–59); Mary (b.1735); Helen (again, b.1739); and Margaret (b.1740). John of Brugh (d.bef. 1756) 2nd son of William of Cooms. His children (with no mothers’ name listed) may be Thomas (b.1727), John (b.1728), Helen (b.1729), Agnes (b.1732), James (b.1734), John (b.1737) and Margaret (b.1740). John (18th C.) recorded as ‘in Linhope’, when his daughter Helen was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1733. in 1790 and 1791. He was recorded at Borthwickbrae on the 1785 and 1788–91 Horse Tax Rolls and in 1792 at Orchard. He paid the land tax on part of Borthwickbrae and the west side of Howcleuch in 1785. He also paid tax on 2 female servants at Borthwickbrae in 1785, 3 in 1787 and 2 in 1788–91. He was taxed for owning a carriage at Borthwickbrae in the period 1785–92, and is probably the ‘John Elliot Esqr. in Orchard’ who was taxed in Cavers Parish in the year 1792/3. He was listed as a voter in Roxburghshire in 1788, and probably a supporter of the Duke of Buccleuch’s interests in the county; the privately-printed description is ‘family in good circumstances. The son has a good estate through his mother, and is at the Bar. Second son in the Army’. He was also listed in 1788 among the voters in Selkirkshire. In 1753 he married Margaret, daughter of Alexander Murray of Cringletie. In Edinburgh in 1764 he secondly married Margaret (who died in 1792), daughter of Walter Laing and heiress of the lands of Meikledale, Flex, Old Melrose and Burnfoot-on-Ale; she was probably the ‘Mrs. Elliot’ listed as owner of the Flex in 1788 and on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls (although deceased before then), as well as Wester Essenside, part of Leaphill and Burnfoot in Ashkirk Parish (valued together at £952). His children were: twins Alexander and William (b.1754), who died young; William (b.1764), baptised in Roberton, who succeeded, but changed his surname to ‘Lockhart’ or ‘Elliott-Lockhart’ (see Lockhart); Walter of Old Melrose (1766–1809), baptised in Roberton; Margaret (b.1767), who married David Simpson of Teviotbank and Knowe (and was mother of Gen. Sir James Simpson), and may secondly have married Walter Grieve, tenant of Branxholme Park; and Janet, who also died young. John (18th C.) tenant in Kershopeburnfoot. His wife Elizabeth died in 1752, aged 36. Their children David Matthew and Agnes died young. They are buried at Ettleton. John (18th C.) shepherd at Earlshideshiels. His daughter Elizabeth was baptised in Hobkirk Parish in 1758. He could be related to the earlier John in Earlside. John (18th C.) shepherd in Langburnshiels in Hobkirk Parish. His children included William (b.1764) and Margaret (b.1770). John (18th C.) owner of part of the lands of Grange near Chesters. In the 1811 Land Tax Rolls he was listed as former owner. John (1725–1801) son of Robert, from the Caerlenrig branch. He was born in Cavers Parish and was a tanner in Hawick. He was listed as a tanner in 1748 when he paid tax on 11 windows in Hawick. He is probably the tanner of that name recorded being paid in 1751 for lime for mending the East Port. He is probably the tanner of that name who witnessed baptisms in 1757 for Hawick distiller and merchant John Aitchison and in 1762 for shoemaker George Gardner. He was appointed as Hawick’s first part-time postmaster in 1767; he was re-appointed, apparently against his better judgement, several years later. He lived down the Punch Bowl Close, which also acted as the post office. Probably the same John, tanner, was one of those appointed in 1763 to oversee the collection of money for a new bell for St. Mary’s. He is probably the John who in 1766, along with Francis (his brother), witnessed a baptism for merchant James Oliver and his wife Christian (their sister); he also witnessed another baptism for them in 1781. In 1769 he was appointed to the commission to discuss the Common with representatives of the Duke of Buccleuch. In 1779 (although the date is uncertain) he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Robert Oliver. In 1787–92 he was recorded as a tanner on the Horse Tax Rolls in Hawick. In 1789 he witnessed a baptism for exciseman Hugh Grieve. In 1778 he married Margaret Curle, who died in 1807, aged 67. Their children included: Isobel (b.1779), who probably died in infancy; Robert (1780–1851), farmer at Roan; James (b.c.1781), who died in infancy; Christian (1883–1855), who died at Roan; William (1785–1827), also died at Roan; and Isobel (again, 1784/5–1859), who died in Hawick. He was buried, along with most of his family, at Teviothead. In 1773 he witnessed the christening of Helen, daughter of shoemaker Adam Elliot (suggesting they were related). His will is registered with the Peebles Commissary Court in 1802. John (1725–1813) younger son of John of Whithaugh and Margaret Scott of Gortonberry. He farmed at Castlehope, which was a former name for Twislehope. In 1786 he subscribed to a theological book by a Carlisle author; Thomas, also in ‘Tweeslihope’ also subscribed (although it is unclear who this might have been). His wife is probably the ‘Mrs Elliot, Twislehope’ who subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ in 1784. He married Janet Turnbull from Mangerberry. He farmed at Castlehope, which was a former name for Twislehope. In 1786 he subscribed to a theological book by a Carlisle author; Thomas, also in ‘Tweeslihope’ also subscribed (although it is unclear who this might have been). His wife is probably the ‘Mrs Elliot, Twislehope’ who subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ in 1784. He married Janet Turnbull from Mangerin Charleston, U.S.A.; and Margaret (b.1791). John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His daughter Nelly was baptised in 1785. John (18th C.) Hawick bookseller of the late 18th century. A book by Samuel Charters was published by him in 1793. John (1731–1808) eldest son of William in Park. He was tenant in ‘Baggot’, i.e. Bygate in Liddesdale. He was farmer at ‘Bagget’ and elsewhere in Castleton Parish, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 9 horses. He is probably the ‘Mr. John Elliot, Park’, who subscribed to a theological book by a Carlisle author in 1786 and who is recorded on the 1786–92 Horse Tax Rolls. He died unmarried. His will was recorded with Peebles Commissary Court in 1808. Adm. John (1732–1808) son of Sir Gilbert, 2nd Lord Minto. He joined the Royal Navy at the age of 13, becoming a Lieutenant in 1756. He was famed as a Captain for capturing a fleet of the French admiral Thurot in 1760, having chased them from Carrickfergus to near the Isle of Man. An 8 ft long cannon captured from the French was long on display outside Fatlips Castle. On being received by the King afterwards he apparently turned down a knighthood, but received cash instead. He was promoted to Commodore, and retired on half-pay in 1765. He then served as M.P. for Cockermouth in 1767 and was appointed General of the Mint in Scotland in 1767. He returned to active duty in 1777, attaining the rank of Rear-Admiral in 1787 and full Admiral in 1795. He was ‘Captain John Elliot of his Majesty’s ship the Edgar’ in 1780 when he was entered into the voters’ roll for Roxburghshire, on the basis of his ownership of Easter Essenside and Hermiston. In 1788 he is recorded as owner of Mounthooly and other lands in Jedburgh Parish, as well as Kirklands in Ancrum Parish and Easter Essenside in Ashkirk Parish. He was listed among the voters of both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1788. He was taxed for owning a carriage, horses and dogs at Monteviot in the 1780s and 1790s, as well as for having several male and female servants. He lived at Monteviot House, where he died, unmarried. He also purchased Easter Essenside, Mounthooly and Woodend, which he left to his nephew Lord Minto. He was sometimes known locally as being ‘of Essenside’, e.g. when listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819 (when he was already deceased). He was also listed on the Land Tax Rolls for 1811 at Mounthooly (although this was after his death). His will was proved at the Prerogative Court of Canterbury in 1808. John (18th C.) tenant in Wigg. His children included: John (b.1768), tenant in Wauchope Gardens; James (b.1770); and Betty (b.1772). He could be the same as one of the other Johns. John (18th C.) resident in Shankendshiels. His children, baptised in Hobkirk Parish, included Agnes (b.1771) and Helen (b.1772). He could be the same as one of the other John from Hobkirk Parish. John (18th C.) resident in ‘Harrothknow’ (i.e. Harwoodknowe) in Hobkirk Parish, when his children Jean (b.1778) and John (b.1789) were baptised. He must have been related to James in Harwoodknowe, who is recorded in 1760. John (18th C.) resident in ‘Hargleclughhead’ in Hobkirk Parish. It is unclear where this was, but possibly he was shepherd at Harecleuchhead (near the old boundary of Hawick’s Common), which was actually in Kirkton Parish. His son Robert was baptised in 1762, and may have been the direct ancestor of Canadian Prime Minister Pierre Elliot Trudeau. He could also be the same as some (although surely not all) of the Johns recorded in these other nearly contemporary baptisms in Hobkirk Parish, with no mother’s name given: Elizabeth (b.1758), ‘in Earlsideshiells’; William (b.1764), in Langburnshiels: William (b.1766), ‘in Hopehead’; John (b.1768) in Wigg; Margaret (b.1770) in Langburnshiels; James (b.1770), in Wigg; Agnes (b.1771) in Shankendshiels; Betty (b.1772) in Wigg; Helen (b.1772) in Shankendshiels; Jean (b.1775) ‘in Harrothknow’; and John (b.1780) ‘in Harrothknow’. Without knowing which of these children were his it is impossible to guess the names of his parents and hence trace this Elliot line further back. John of Redheugh (1740/1–1809) 2nd son of Robert of Redheugh, whose father had purchased the ancestral farm for him. He himself farmed at Cleughhead and Foulshiels, while his brother (presumably Thomas) was given liferent of Redheugh. He is probably the farmer at ‘Cleugh’ or ‘Cleughheads’ in Castleton Parish, recorded on the 1785–97 Horse Tax Rolls. He was also taxed for having a non-working dog in 1797. In 1793 he disposed of the stock and household furniture from Redheugh to his brother Thomas (who also lived at Redheugh and farmed Foulshiels). In 1799 he married Margaret, 2nd daughter of Rev. John Russell, minister of Canonbie. They had no children and he settled Redheugh on his nephew Robert in 1806. He died at Newlands and is buried in Castleton cemetery. Dr. John (18th C.) surgeon living at Cleughhead in Liddesdale towards the end of the 18th century.
He could be the same as the farmer at Cleuchhead. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ in 1784, and it is possible he supplied material for it; indeed he may be the ‘Gentleman of taste, in Liddesdale’ to which Caw was indebted for providing a manuscript copy of ‘Dick o’ the Cow’ and other verses. He was also ‘J. Elliot, M.D. Cleughheads’ in 1786 when he subscribed to a theological book by a Carlisle author. He was visited in about 1792 by Sir Walter Scott and Robert Shortreed, on their ‘raid’ into Liddesdale, to gather material for what would become ‘Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border’. He apparently already had a manuscript copy of ballads that he had collected himself. He presented Scott with an old Border war horn, which still hangs in Abbotsford. And afterwards he sought out other ballads ‘among the darker recesses of the mountains’. Rev. John (1749/50–1817) licensed by Jedburgh Presbytery in 1793, he became assistant to Thomas Elliot of Cavers (who was probably his uncle). He was presented to the Parish of Kirkton in late 1800 and ordained there early the next year, remaining as minister until his death. In 1786 he married Jean Armstrong, who died in 1828, aged 75. Their children were: Elizabeth: twins Adam and Mary (b.1794); and Isobel (1797–60), who died at Coliforthill. John (18th C.) Bailie in Hawick in the 1780s. He was one of the local people who subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). His son James died in 1782. In 1786 he was recorded as ‘late Bailie’ when he (and shoemaker Thomas Wallace) witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Robert Oliver. This suggests that he may also have been a shoemaker. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John (c.1750–1801) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Janet Little (c.1757–1825). Their children included: Christian (b.1792); Robert (b.1794); and Thomas (b.1799). He and his wife died in Newcastle. John (c.1750–1821) eldest son of Robert, tenant of Hermitage. He farmed at Hermitage, Highfield, Crinkledyke and Deadwater. In some family trees he is confounded with an earlier John. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. In 1783 he married Christian Grieve (b.1753), but she died less than a year later; she was probably daughter of William Grieve, farmer at Southfield. He secondly married Margaret Scott from Skelfhill. His children included: Jean (1790–1886); Robert, who married a Miss Maxwell from Langholm and had children who emigrated to the U.S.A.; Janet, who married Robert Elliot from Haltwhistle, son of John who farmed Twislehope; James, who emigrated to the U.S.A.; John (1796–1833) in Nether Hindhope; Thomas (1815/6–87), who married Elizabeth Turnbull and succeeded his brother as farmer at farmed at Nether Hindhope; Catherine, married Robert Webster; Mary, married Robert Hall of Doanham in 1846; Elizabeth, married Gideon Yule from Kelso; and Margaret, who married John Dagg from Kidderminster. He is buried at Ettleton Cemetery, the stone being inscribed ‘Here lies John Elliot in Burnmouth and Christian Grieve his spouse’. John of Binks (1754–1820) eldest son of Robert. He served as an executor for Henry of Peel, who died in 1780. He owned Binks from at least 1788 (when it was valued at £300) and was listed as owner of Binks in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. In 1790 he married Mary Robson (1767–1858) in 1790, who was from Boghall, daughter of Adam Robson and Helen Hume; her sister Janet also married a John Elliot and she must have been related to his mother, who was also a Robson from Boghall. Their children were: Robert (b.1791), who died young; Jane or Jean (b.1792), who married William Nixon of Lynnwood; another Robert (1794–1814); Helen (b.1796), ‘the White Rose of Liddesdale’, who married Archibald Blake from Liverpool; Elizabeth (d.1798), who died in infancy; John (b.1799), who married Mary, daughter of Thomas Smith of Darnick and farmed at Calaburn; and another Elizabeth, who married William Turnbull of Merrylaw in 1847. In 1851 his widow was listed as an ‘Annuitant, Gentlewoman’, farming about 610 acres at Binks. He died at Burnmouth and is buried in Castleton Cemetery. He is probably the John who was recorded as farmer at Burnmouth on the 1785–97 Horse Tax and Dog Tax Rolls, and who was of Binks’ when listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. His will was registered with Peebles Commissary Court in 1821. John (1753/4–1817) resident of Roberton Parish. He is recorded living at Borthwickbrae in 1794 and Woodburn in 1798. In 1874 in Cavers Parish he married Elizabeth or ‘Betsy’ Scott (1757/8–1842), who died in Hawick. Their children included: Elizabeth (b.1792); James (1794–1884), long-time proprietor of the Ewe and Lamb in Hawick; and Jean (b.1798). The marriage is probably the one recorded between James and Betty Scott in Cavers in 1787. He died at Branxholme and the family are buried at Borthwick Waas. John (18th/19th C.) lived at Bowanhill, near Teviothead. He is probably related to the earlier Archibald who farmed there. He married Margaret Turnbull in 1793. Their children included: Archibald (b.1800); Walter, married Jean Anderson and emigrated to Delaware County, New York; John; Margaret, who married Thomas Thompson and later George Stewart; and Betty, whose son William Keir inherited Whithaugh. He died at Newlands in Liddesdale. John (b.1793–1847) eldest son of William of Whithaugh.

His will is register of Whithaugh, near Langholm. John of Whithaugh (1785–1847) eldest son of William of Whithaugh. He was served heir to his grandfather John in 1777. In 1788 his lands of Whithaugh (half of the former farm) were valued at £200 3s. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ in 1784, a theological book by a Carlisle author in 1786 and John Learmont’s book of poetry in 1791. He is recorded as farmer at Whithaugh on the 1785–97 Horse Tax Rolls. He was also taxed for having 3 non-working dogs in 1797. He married Jean Scott, from Ladhope in Yarrow, who died in 1838, aged 63. Their children included: Henry (1793–1818), who died in Jamaica; Margaret (b.1794–1804); Janet (b.1795), who married Robert Elliot of Redheugh; William (1796–1838); Jean (b.1798), who died in infancy; Jean (again, b.1800); John (1801–40), engineer in Glasgow, who married Helen Elliot of Kirkdean, granddaughter of Elliot of Harwood; James (1803/4–80); who died at Westwater; and Margaret (again, b.1809). This Margaret may have been the ‘Miss M. Elliot, Flatt’ who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. John (b.1767) Cooper in Castleton Parish, son of William and Anna Scott, descended from the Elliots of Falsnash. Some of his children were born at Byreholm. He married Elizabeth Crozier and their children included: William (b.1790), probably shoemaker in Newcastle; Gideon (b.1791); Helen (b.1793); Anne (b.1798); Elizabeth (b.1803); John (b.1804), who probably died young; and Margaret (b.1808). John (b.1768) labourer at Wauchope Gardens, Blackcleuchmouth and Templehallshiel. He was son of John in Wigg and surely related to William in Templehallshiel. He married Betsy Taylor and their children included: William (b.1798), who lived at Wauchope Cottages; Betty (b.1800); John (b.1802); Walter F. (b.1804); Robert (b.1807); Alexander (b.1809), probably the shoemaker in Hawick; Margaret (b.1813); and Agnes (b.1815). Most of the family emigrated to Otsego County, New York. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1794 he married Agnes Inglis, also from Hawick. It is possible they are the couple of the same names who had children in Melrose Parish. John (18th/19th C.) resident in Denholm, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. No occupation or other information is given. He could be the tenant in Denholm whose son John was born in 1804. John (18th/19th C.) lawyer who set up a partnership with John Oliver in Hawick around 1790. They became agents for the Commercial Bank around 1820 and are listed as writers in Hawick in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He may be the ‘John Elliot, Hawick’ who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. However, he left for Jedburgh in 1829 to become Sheriff-Substitute, which office he held until 1835. The Hawick firm eventually became Geo. & Jas. Oliver's. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. John (b.1769) son of William in Hillhouse and Mary Haliburton. He was born in Castleton Parish and became a merchant in London. He married Miss Robinson in London and they had 13 children, William, Robert, Margaret, John, Mary, Ann, Jane, Eliza, Mary, Thomas, Louisa, George and Walter. John of Reidheugh (18th/19th C.) recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. It is unclear who this is, since the owner at that time was Robert Elliot;perhaps this is an error. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. He had several children baptised there, including John (b.1807), Brown (b.1820), Elizabeth (b.1822), Jane (b.1824) and an unnamed child (b.1826). John Edmund of New Belses (1788–1862), youngest son of the 1st Earl of Minto. He was named after the statesman Edmund Burke. He had a successful career in the Bengal civil service. He accompanied his father back from India in 1814 and had to perform the sad duty of carrying the news of his death to the Borderers who were awaiting his triumphal return to Minto (including celebrations for drawing his carriage through Hawick). He is probably the 'Hon. J.E. Elliot, Eildonhall' who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He was elected Liberal M.P. for Roxburghshire in 1837, when several people in Hawick were prosecuted for rioting. He spoke in the House of Commons in the following year, when Sir James Graham proposed a motion that Hawick be removed as a polling place; he supported the actions of the Bailies and townspeople, and claimed that the situation had been exaggerated by the other side (and perhaps fabricated in order to discredit the election). In 1841 he received a majority in Hawick, but lost to Francis Scott in the County. However, he was re-elected in 1847 and remained M.P. until 1859, being elected unopposed in 1852 and 1857. In a directory of 1852 he was listed as living at Wilton Lodge. He was donor of a silver-mounted hammer for the Chief Magistrate's use in Council meetings (engraved with his initial electoral poll results). He was also made an Honorary Burgess in 1837. He was a keen hunter (despite his weight), keeping his own pack of hounds until 1844. He held lands at Belses, Ryeknow and Abbotsmeadow, which were sold to the Marquess of Lothian in 1872. In 1809 he married Amelia, 3rd daughter of James Henry Cassamajor of Madras and they had 6 children: Amelia Jane (d.1837), who married Thomas Campbell Robertson; Anna Maria Elizabeth, who married Pierce G.E. Taylor; Lt.-Col. Edmund James (1813–54), who married Matilda Inglis, and died in the Crimean War; William Brownrigg of Benrig (1820–1900), who married Mary Geraldine McCartie; Capt. Amyand Powney Charles of the Bengal Army (1823–69), who married Anna Maria Alexander; and Augustus John (1824–89) of the Bengal Civil Service, who married Helen Lewis and Katherine Mangles. John (1780/1–64) from Castleton Parish, he married Ann Graham, who was from Hartsgarth. Their children were: Ellen (b.1816), who probably died young; and John (1818–1902), who married Agnes Beattie and Elizabeth Nichol in Canada. In 1818 the family emigrated to New Brunswick, with the infant John. His wife died on the voyage and he later married Helen, with whom he had daughters Elizabeth and Ellen. The family settled in Westminster Township, Middlesex County, Ontario in 1836. He was a farmer and strong churchman and gave land for the First Presbyterian Church in Westminster Township. There were several Johns born in Castleton Parish around 1781, so he could be son of John and Janet Turnbull, or Walter and Isabel Douglas or a different John entirely. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Isabel Hogg and their children included: Margaret (b.1808), who married George Stewart; Matthew (b.1811); Nelly (b.1813); Robert (b.1815); Henry (b.1817); and Janet (b.1819). John (18th/19th C.) labourer at Hartsgarthburnside. He was listed among male heads of households in 1835 and 1836. John (d.1848) perhaps son of John from Morebattle. Some of his children were born in Morebattle Parish, but most in Bedrule Parish. He was associated with Ruecastle in Bedrule Parish. He married Isabel Turnbull (1783–1854), who was born in Northumberland. Their children included: John (1806–73); James (1809–85); Andrew (1811–79); William (1813–81); Mary (1815–83); Robert (1818–89); Brown (1820–93); Elizabeth (1822–45); Jane (1822–51); and Isabel (1826–91). The entire family emigrated to Howick, Quebec, where they died. John (c.1785–1854) son of James and Helen Elliot. He was born in Castleton Parish and worked as a shepherd. He married Helen Murray and in 1818 the family emigrated to America, settling in New Brunswick and then in Westminster Township, Middlesex County, Ontario. Their children included: James (b.1811); Elizabeth (b.1813), who died young; Rev. Charles, D.D. (b.1815); John (b.1817), who...

In 1809 he married Margaret Oliver in Cavers in Andes, Delaware County, New York State. In 1815 in Ancrum Parish he married Margaret Hart, who died before 1841, when the family are listed at ‘Sheeplawcross’. In 1851 he was shepherd at Wester Essendie. Their children included: Margaret (b.1816); Andrew (b.1817): Mary (b.1821), who probably married William Irvine, farmer at Cavers Mains; Christina (b.1823); Isabel (b.1827), who probably married Robert Elliot, gamekeeper at Cavers East Lodge; John (b.1832); Janet (b.1833); Elizabeth (b.1836); George (b.1837); and Agnes (b.1837). John (b.1790/1) agricultural labourer living in Parkhillaugh in 1841 and Deanburnhaugh in 1851. He married Jane (or ‘Jean’) Goodfellow (1795–1860) in Roberton Parish in 1818 and their children included: Francis (b.1818), whose wife was Christina; Elizabeth (b.1820); James (b.1822); William (b.1824); John (b.1827); and Gideon (1833–1913). John (b.1795/5) born in Canobie, he was an agricultural labourer in Castleton and Southdean Parishes. In 1835–41 he was living at Clerklea and in 1851 was at Westerhouses. He married Henrietta Carruthers and their children included: Janet (b.c.1821); Gilbert (b.1831); Henry (b.1833); Mary (b.1836); Matthew (b.1838); and Elizabeth (b.1841). John (1795–1859) 2nd son of William ‘of Carlenrick-rig’ (who was an architect in Kelso) and grandson of the minister of Cavers. He was born in Kelso and became a solicitor in Hawick and Jedburgh. In 1841 and 1851 he was a banker in Jedburgh, where he lived at Boundary Bank. However, by 1851 he is described as blind. He married Janet Usher (daughter of Thomas of Court hill). Their children included William (procurator in the Roxburghshire Sheriff Court), Thomas Usher, Isabella, John, Jane Robertson, Charles Scott, Elizabeth Pott and Esther. He should not be confused with the earlier lawyer John who had a partnership with John Oliver in Hawick before moving to Jedburgh. John (1795/6–1834) son of Walter and Helen Crozier. He was tenant in Templehall. John (1796–1833) son of John, who farmed at Hightfield, Crinkledyke and Deadwater, and grandson of Robert in Hermitage. He was tenant in Nether Hyndhope in Oxnam Parish. After his death he was succeeded as farmer by his brother Thomas. John (1796/7–1875) shepherd at Blinkbonny in Castleton Parish. He was listed there among heads of households in 1835. In 1841 he was a labourer in Newcastleton, living on North Hermitage Street. In 1851 and 1861 he was at Blinkbonny. He married Jean Armstrong (1809/10–85) from Kirkpatrick. Their children were: Janet (1828–52); Helen (1829–60); Jane (1833–97), who married James Beattie; William (b.1836), also died young; Robert (b.1837), also died young; William (1840/1–60). He must also have lived at Border Rigg, where some of his children died. The family are buried at Et tleton. John of Binks (1799–1875) eldest surviving son of John of Binks and Mary Robson. He purchased Calaburn in Wilton Parish. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. In Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories and Slater’s 1852 directory he is listed as owner of Burnmouth. He is probably the farmer at Burnmouth listed among heads of households in 1835–41. He served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He is listed at Upper Burnmouth in 1841, along with Janet, possibly a relative. In 1851 he was farming 2,000 acres there and employed 6 labourers. By 1861 he was farming 5,000 acres and employing 10 people. He was still at Burnmouth in 1868. In 1851 he married Mary, 2nd daughter of Thomas Smith, architect in Darnick. Their children were: John (1853–1909), who married Jane Pott Oliver; Jane (1855–1939); who married Rev. John C. Martin; and Mary (c.1858–1941). He died at Burnmouth and is probably buried in Castleton Cemetery. His portrait, by an unknown artist, is in the Museum. John (18th/19th C.) grocer and labourer in Newcastleton. He is listed among heads of households in 1835–38. John (18th/19th C.) shepherd in Castleton Parish. He is listed among heads of households at Newhouses in England in 1836 and perhaps the same shepherd is at Sorbietrees in 1840 and 1841. John (b.1800/1) from Castleton, he was a tailor who lived at Quarrelhaa, near Harwood- on-Teviot. It seems possible he was related to Henry and Adam, who are recorded as tailors in Newcastleton in 1841. In 1851 he was a tailor employing 2 men. He married Helen Scott (b.c.1806) from Galashiels. Their children included: Janet (b.1824); Robert (b.1826); John, Mungo (b.1828); William (b.1830); James Rutherford (b.1832); Nenion (note the spelling, b.1834), a lawyer in Edinburgh; Walter (b.1840); Edward (b.1842); Elizabeth (b.1844); and Thomas (b.1846). It seems the family must have moved from the area before the 1861 census. John (1801–40) son of John, tenant in Flatt in Castleton Parish, with his mother being Jean Scott from Ladhope. He was an engineer in Glasgow. He married Helen Elliot (1812/3–82), daughter of Thomas of Kirndean and grand-daughter of Elliot of Harwood. They had a son, John (1839–97), who was also tenant in Flatt. John (b.1801/2) from England, he was a shoemaker in Newcastleton. He was listed among heads of households for the first time in 1840. He was listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. He married Margaret Pott (from Castleton Parish) and their children included: Betty; Andrew; James; John (b.1840); Isabel (b.1844), Esther (b.1844), twin of Isabel; and Margaret (b.1846). He lived at about 2 Whitchester Lane. John (1801/2–90) son of Matthew, who farmed at Netherraw, with his mother being Janet Scott. He worked as a labourer and roadman in Newcastleton. He was listed as labourer (and son of Matthew) among heads of households in 1841. In 1841 he was at about 21 North Hermitage Street. In 1861 he was on Douglas Square. Later he was tenant at Sandholm. He was said to be very knowledgeable about the area, and helped the Berwickshire Naturalists’ Club on their tour of upper Liddesdale in 1889, shortly before he died. He married Frances (or ‘Fanny’) Broadfoot Wilson, and she died at the Grapes Inn, Newcastleton, in 1860, aged 62. He secondly married Mary Thomson. His children included: William (1826–47); Matthew (1828–65), who died in London; Margaret (1829–1904), who died in Newcastleton; James (1830–77), who was innkeeper of the Grapes Inn; Janet (b.1833); Andrew (1835–1905), who died in Birmingham; John (b.1838), road surveyor; and Helen (1842–1908), who died at Brox. John (1809–81) younger son of William of Harwood and Helen Rutherford. He was born at Hundalee and farmed at Primrosehill. He married Jane, daughter of Archibald Jerdan of Bonjedward and they had a son and 2 daughters. Rev. John Elphinstone (1810–90) son of James, 3rd Laird of Wolfelee. He trained as a lawyer, apprenticing to William Bell and becoming Writer to the Signet in 1833. He was appointed as Rector of Whalton, Morpeth. In 1843 he married Georgina, daughter of Col. Ralph Bates of Milburn and changed his surname to Elliot-Bates. John (b.1810) son of Ninian and brother of Ninian and James. Like his brothers, he was a road contractor in Newcastleton. In 1861 he was living on Douglas Square with his son James (probably keeper of the Grapes Inn) and daughter Helen. He was recorded as proprietor of the Grapes Inn in the 1860s. His brother Ninian was also a road contractor. John (1811–88) from Castleton Parish, son of James and Janet Grieve. In 1841 he was a carrier, living at Scaurnook in Roberton. He married Helen, daughter of shepherd William Murray; she died at Oliver Place in Hawick in 1909, aged 86. His children included Helen Grieve (d.1855), who died at the age of 4, and 2 sons who died in infancy. John (b.1816/7) carter in Newcastleton, on Doncaster Street. In 1851 he was living with his sister Helen and nephew George Aitchison. By 1861 he had a 2nd wife Betty, and step-children James Scott and David Scott. They also had children Janet and Margaret. John (19th C.) Inspector of Nuisances in Newcastleton in the 1860s. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John (b.1819/20) born in Castleton, he was an agricultural labourer in Cavers and Teviothead Parishes. In 1851 he was at Castlewearie. In 1861 he was farm steward, living at Borthaugh Cottages. He married Jane Murray and their children were: William (b.1839); Matthew (b.1843); and Gideon (b.1845). John (b.1822/3) born in Castleton Parish, he was a labourer in Hobkirk. In 1851 he was at East Fodderlee Cottages and in 1861 was a ploughman at Bonchester Cottages. He later lived in Southdean Parish and in Denholm. In 1846 he married Christian (or Catherine) Scott Crozier (b.1825), from Ettrick. Their children were: William (b.1846); Jane (b.1848); Thomas (b.1852); Robert (b.c.1854); Patrick (b.c.1855); David (b.1856); Scott (b.1860); Margaret Murray (b.1862); and John (b.c.1863). John (b.1823/4) son of Matthew and Dorothy Purdom, he was born in Castleton Parish. He was a labourer living at Adderstoneshie Stable in 1841, with his family at Adderstoneshie... in 1851 and a ploughman at Barnes in Kirkton Parish in 1861. He married Sibella Hunter (from Langholm) in Wilton in 1848 and their children included (b.c.1849): Elizabeth; Matthew (b.1851); John (b.1852); James (b.1855); Thomas (b.1858); William (b.1861); Margaret (b.1863); Dorothy (b.1865); and Georgina (b.1867). Some of the family may have emigrated to Huron County, Ontario. John ‘Jock’ (b.c.1825) son of George and Agnes Beattie. His grandfather drowned, perhaps when he was thrown into Whitehaugh pond near Newcastleton. He lived near Bonchester Bridge since about the 1870s and worked as a dyker. His biography is told by Tancred in ‘Rulewater’; if some information was incorrect, he could be the same as one of the Johns from Castleton. John (b.1825/6) shoemaker in Newcastleton, son of William, who was also a shoemaker. In 1851 he was living on North Hermitage Street and in 1861 on Douglas Square. In 1849 he married Jane McVittie (1826–1905) from Evesdale. Their children included Jane (b.1850), Christian (b.1851), Janet (b.1853), Robert (b.1855), Mary (b.1857), William (b.1860), Helen (b.1863), Elizabeth (b.1866) and Isabella Anne (b.1869). John Scott (1829–1914) son of Robert and Janet Black. He was Cornet in 1851, when he was a joiner’s apprentice. In 1855 he married Mary Scott, from Southdean. They had a daughter Margaret (b.1855). By 1857 he had emigrated to Culross, Ontario, along with his wife and daughter, as well as his brother Thomas. John (1830/1–1915) tenant in West Middles in Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Mary Scott, who died in 1904, aged 73. They had 2 sons called Robert who died young. They are buried at Ettleton. John Davidson (1834–96) son of Robert and Eleanor Davidson, he was born in Castleton Parish. In 1860 he married Mary, daughter of Christopher Foster. Their children were: Margaret (b.1863); Helen (b.1865); Jane (b.1868); Robert (b.1870); Isabella (b.1872); Christopher (b.1875); and Mary (b.1880). He died at Clerkkleap, killed by being knocked down by a goods train. John (b.1835) son of James, a spirit dealer at 3 Orrock Place. His mother was Helen Patterson. He worked as a railway clerk and bank clerk. He was Cornet in 1855 and can be seen as Left-hand Man in the first photograph of the Common Riding Principals. John (1836–58) 2nd son of Robert of Redheugh. He was baptised in Castleton Parish and died at Cardona, Mexico, predeceasing his father. John (1836–1905) son of Ninian, he was a roadman like his father. In 1864 he married Jane Jackson (1840–1912). Their children were Jane (b.1865), James (b.1866), Eliza Jane (b.1868) and Marion (b.1871). John (1838–1913) son of John. He was District Road Surveyor in Newcastleton. He married Betsy, daughter of innkeeper John Scott; she died in 1889, aged 60. Their children included: Agnes (b.1865), who died in infancy; Archibald (1863/4–90); William (1861/2–1904); Frances Mary (1866/7–1907); and Jane (1872/3–1956) John (1839–97) born in Glasgow, son of John and Helen Elliot. He was farmer at Flatt in Castleton Parish, succeeding his uncle James there. He was recorded at Flatt in 1861 and 1868. When another uncle, John Scott-Elliot died, he succeeded to the different of Peel, and also carried on the leases on Kirndean, Myredykes and Singleean. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1863. John Burns (19th C.) partner in the builders firm Aitken & Elliot. He married Christina, daughter of James Wintrup. John (1853–1909) eldest son of John of Binks and Mary Smith. He may be the John ‘of Binks, Burnmouth’ who became a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland in 1880. He matriculated arms in 1897. He sold Calaburn, breaking his families direct ties with the Hawick area. He married Jane Pott Oliver and their children were: Maj. Edward John (1881–1918), who married Dorothy Allen Smith and was killed in action; Sina Gertrude Pott (1882–1965), who married Lieut.-Col. Edwyne Douglas-Jones; Lt.-Com. James Oliver (1883–1965), who married Margaret Hogben; Mary Smith Turnbull (1885–1967); John Stephen (1886–1972), Navy Captain and Surgeon, who married Magda Virginia Salvesen and became a lecturer at Newcastle University; Clement Nixon (1889–1969), who married Katherine Winnifred Penney and moved to Rhodesia; Edward John, who married Dorothy Allen, daughter of Richard Sidney Smith of Clifford Chambers, and was killed in WWI; Lt.-Col. Henry Hawes (1891–1972), who became Surgeon to the Viceroy of India and retired to Springbank, Melrose; Robin Alexander (1891–1969), twin of Henry, he became abanker in Canada; and Jean Oliver (b.1892), who was an Almoner at the Royal Free Hospital, London. He died at Southsea, Hampshire. Katherine of Arkleton (b.c.1700) daughter of William of Arkleton and Anne Ainslie of Jedburgh.
Elliot

She was married 3 times. Firstly (about 1720) she married David Laing of Westerkirk. Secondly, in 1727, she married Rev. Charles Telfer, who was minister of Hawick Parish. Thirdly, she married Robert Elliot of Fenwick (son of Francis and Rachel Langlands). Her only child appears to have been Gavin, who succeeded to Arkleton (but is said to have lived with a loose woman who he had to acknowledge as his wife to qualify his daughters to succeed to the estate). Katherine (b.1701) elder daughter of Adam of Teindside, she was baptised in Hawick Parish. In Wilton Parish in 1719 she married Robert, son of Robert of Midlem Mill. When her brother Walter died in 1721 she was served as his heir. Baroness Katharine ‘Kay’ (1903–1994) of Harwood, born Katharine Tennant in Peeblesshire, 7th daughter of Sir Charles Tennant. She died 171 years after her father was born, and her great-grandfather was a witness at Robert Burns’s christening in 1759. As a child she played at 10 Downing Street, where her half-sister Margot was married to Prime Minister Herbert Asquith. She studied politics at the London School of Economics, was an accomplished violinist, played the organ, spoke fluent French, rode until age 80 and boasted that she beat 2 Prime Ministers at golf. In 1934 she married Walter Elliot, Conservative M.P. for Glasgow Kelvingrove and they made their home at Harwood, near Bonchester. She was a leading public figure in her own right, being active in farming, council and social work. She was made C.B.E. in 1948, D.B.E. in 1952 and was raised to the peerage in 1958 after her husband’s death, becoming Baroness Elliot of Harwood. She became Chairman of the Conservative Party in 1957, serving on several government committees and being on Roxburghshire County Council for 29 years. She worked tirelessly for the Conservative Party, although never abandoned some of her Liberal roots, being strongly against the death penalty and involved with prison reform, for example. In 1973 the Katharine Elliot Centre was named in her honour. She was the first woman, other than the Queen, to speak in the House of Lords and the first woman to get a private bill through the Lords. The Tweeddale Press Group voted her ‘Borders Man of the Year’. She became a Justice of the Peace in 1998. In 1993 she tripped over her parliamentary robes after the opening of Parliament and was rushed off to hospital, still in her robes, suffering a fractured hip. She died at Hawick Cottage Hospital shortly afterwards and was buried in Hobkirk Kirkyard (note her name is also spelled ‘Katherine’). Lawrence (15th C.) recorded in 1456/7 as witness to the sasine for Ewesdale passing from Robert of Ewesdale to George Douglas, 4th Earl of Angus. He may have been an Elliot of Ewesdale, and is listed as ‘Law Elwald’, along with Adam and Robin. Lawrence (15th C.) listed in 1482/3 along with James, Simon and John Elwald, as well as Robert Turnbull and Robert Dalgleish, when they were said to be rebels captured by Patrick Dickson, Bailie of Peebles. Perhaps the same ‘laurencii elwald’ was recorded at Mossapul in 1494/5 when fined for non-appearance at the Court of the Justiciary, the Earl of Bothwell seeing as surety (but 3 other men of the same name were also listed in 1494/5). Lawrence (15th C.) recorded among Ellots and other men of Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. He is listed separately from 2 other Laurences, but appears after William and David, sons of William, and before John in Thorlieshope. Lawrence (15th C.) recorded among men of Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. He is listed separately from 2 other Laurences, along with Ralph, William, Edmund, Ingram, Martin and Lawrence (son of Martin). Lawrence (15th C.) son of Martin, he is listed among many Liddesdale men who did not appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. The Lord of Liddesdale and Captain of Hermitage were fined as a result. Martin, listed just before him, as presumably his father. Leon (16th C.) starting as a message boy with Stothart’s in 1939, he eventually took over the firm when David Stothart retired in 1971. He ran Hawick’s well-known toy emporium until its final closure in 1989. He is also believed to be the last person in Hawick to have gone through the 6-year apprenticeship as a saddler. Leon (16th C.) recorded as ‘Leoni Elwald’ on the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale, when he and his brothers were the tenants of Sundhope. He was also listed as one of the tenants of Whitrope, along with William in Ramsiegill, John, Robert and another ‘Leoni’. Madge Callaghan, M.B.E. (1928– ) wife of Bob Known as a campaigner for the Waverley Line, she had a carriage on the new line named after her in 2015. She received an M.B.E. in 1998 for services to lawn tennis. She recited David Hill’s poem ‘The Bleach’ on the ‘Hawick Speaks’ tape and on the 2006 CD ‘Hawick and Teviotdale in Song and Poetry’. She was recorded speaking in dialect as part of the BBC ‘Voices’ project in 2004. Margaret nee Roger (16th C.) widow of Robert ‘Elwand’, who was a tenant of Mark Ker at Borthwickshiels. In 1540 she raised an action against 2 Murrays for stealing cattle from Borthwickshiels in 1528, apprehending her and burning her house. The Murrays defence was that their actions were part of a raid by the Earl of Angus (Lieutenant of the Borders) against thieves and traitors in Teviotdale and that she was harbouring such thieves, namely her sons David and Alexander, as well as helping her other sons John and Ringand (Ninian).

Margaret (16th C.) recorded in 1541 on a list of tenants and other associates of James Douglas of Cavers. She was probably related to Alison and John, who are also listed. Margaret (d.1697) heiress of Reidheugh, elder daughter of Robert. She was recorded paying the land tax (of £500) in 1663. In 1637 she married James Elliot, 6th son of Gilbert of Stobs in 1637. The couple were granted many of the Elliot lands in Liddesdale, excepting 3 farms that were given to her sister Esther and some farms that were held in 'liferent' by their father Robert. Her son Robert succeeded to the Redheugh and Larriston lands, but she retained a dower right to rentals from Larriston. She later reduced her claims in order to help her son's financial difficulties. She further reduced her claims on the family's former lands on Hermitage Water, which helped enable her grandson, Robert of Larriston, to buy back Larriston in 1695. However, right after her death Larriston Rig was sold off, and the rest of the estate was bought by Oliver of Dinlabyre in 1719. Margaret (17th/18th C.) daughter of Arthur of Harwood, who died in 1698. She was recorded as proprietor of Harwood in a 1710 land evaluation of Hawick Parish, with her lands being valued at more than £800, the third highest in the Parish. She was served heir to her father Robert in 1711, probably when she reached the age of majority. She married William Elliot of Thorleshope and they had 14 children. She is buried at Oxnam. Margaret nee Laing (d.1792) daughter of Walter Laing of Meikledale. She inherited Meikledale, Flex, Old Melrose and Burnfoot-on-Ale. In 1764 she became the second wife of William of Borthwickbrae. She was recorded as owner of the Flex (valued at £114 10s 9d) in 1788, and also in about 1811 (although she was deceased by then). She also owned Wester Essenside, Leaphill and Burnfoot in Ashkirk Parish, which were valued together at £952 in 1788. Her children included William (who succeeded to Borthwickbrae and changed his surname to include 'Lockhart'), Walter of Old Melrose, Margaret (who married David Simpson of Teviotbank) and at least two children who died young. Margaret (1779–1816) daughter of William of Arkleton, she was born in Jedburgh. In 1807 she married Adam, son of Rev. William Scott, Minister at Southdean. In 1810 her brother Robert died, and she succeeded him as the only surviving child of their father. She then assumed the surname Scott-Elliot and her son William succeeded to Arkleton. Margaret (19th C.) recorded as proprietor of a shoemaker's business on the Cross Wynd in Pigot's 1837 directory. Mrs. Marjorie L. nee Laidlaw (19th C.) from Ancrum Mains, daughter of Adam, who had been a builder in Hawick. She is sometimes incorrectly named as 'Margaret' rather than 'Marjorie'. She was the first librarian of Hawick Public Library 1878–94, and possibly only the second female chief librarian in Britain. She was said to be a forceful and dominating lady. She was married to a farmer, but later re-married to D. McBunie Watson. Another Mrs. Elliot, librarian, is recorded as a member of Allars Kirk in 1829, although this cannot be the same woman. Mark (d.1564) recorded as being 'callit of the Hill' when he was found guilty of sheep-stealing and reset and hanged. Those convicted along with him were Hob Scott 'of Colylfur'd' and John Scott 'the Clerk'. He may be related to later Elliots of the Hill. Mark of the Hill (d.1611) probably the son of Archibald of the Hill who was recorded in 1602. The pair were listed among Armstrongs who killed a shepherd at Hallrule and stole about 120 sheep. Probably the same Mark of the Hill was listed among a large group of Elliots who were accused in 1590 of taking Ralph Hall and others prisoner and ransoming them. He was probably the Mark listed along with James and Jock of the Hill among Scotsmen accused of raids into England in 1595. He was listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a Borders Commissioners' court in Jedburgh in 1605. He was recorded being 'in the Hill' when he was convicted and executed at Jedburgh court in 1611. He was probably a descendant of the earlier Mark of the Hill. Mark (1776–1854) brother of Maj. William Elliot of Harwood and also Thomas. He served as a private soldier in the Royal Marines and was present at the mutiny of the Nore in 1797. He later served as a Captain in the Roxburghshire Yeomanry, and helped get the Liddesdale men to the muster in Hawick. A story is told of him at an inspection of the troops in Hawick, during which his horse made a bolt forward. When Capt. Elliot of Harwood asked 'Where the devil are you going Elliot agreed to keep peace on the Border, being given he received a pardon for his former crimes, and sent to subdue the Elliots and others. In 1567 defeated that of the Earl of Bothwell in 1566/7, appears to have been resolved. His force to have moved into England, and the feud with the Scotts apparently burned, and the deaths of many men, women and children. Counter raids followed on Liddesdale and Teviotdale for the next few years. Also in 1565 he had offered to make a deal with Lord Scrope, handing over Hermitage in return for English protection; although the offer was not fully taken up, the Elliots did receive support from the English Wardens. He was probably involved in the ambush of Scotts by Elliots at Ewes Doors in 1565. In 1566 the Elliots were again raiding into England, and the feud with the Scotts appears to have been resolved. His force to have defeated that of the Earl of Bothwell in 1566/7, sent to subdue the Elliots and others. In 1567 he received a pardon for his former crimes, and agreed to keep peace on the Border, being given money by both the English and Scottish authorities. He may have been among the roughly 300 men who raided Torwoodlee in 1568 (perhaps slaying several Pringles), and was one of the men summoned to settle the feud between the Pringles and Elliots in 1575. In 1569 he was said to have met the Black Laird of Ormiston in Liddesdale and forced him to stop giving refuge to the English Earls of Northumberland and Westmorland to return to England (from where they had fled after an uprising in support of Mary, Queen of Scots). He and Archibald Armstrong promised in 1569 to enter into ward John Elliot of Thorlleshope. In 1569 he also served as pledge for the ‘hail branche of the Reidheuch that dwells within the Swyris’, with Alexander Home of Manderston as his surety. He was also pledge for the Nixons in the same year. Additionally in 1569 he gave assurances, along with Archibald Armstrong of Mangerton and Lancel Armstrong of Whithaugh, to ‘Rowie Forester’ (who was probably the deputy English Warden), ‘that thai sall mak obedience according to the rest of the cuntre’. Also in 1569 he was recorded being held ‘with My Lord Regentis Grace’ as pledge for his eldest son Simon, as well as ‘Archeis Hob’. Furthermore, in 1569 he appeared in Edinburgh to request that he be released from ward to return temporarily to Liddesdale, to be replaced with his nephew Gib and offered to give service ‘in keping the hous of Armitage’; he signed ‘with his hand at the pen’. In 1570 he wrote to the English Warden, Sir John Forster, making a deal that avoided Liddesdale being ravaged by the English on their way to Teviotdale. Also in 1570 he headed a group of Elliots who signed a bond, giving pledges for Hob, son of Elder Will Elliot and John Elliot of Heuchhouse. In about 1572, Robert of Redheugh came of age, and he ceased to be the leader of the clan; later there would be strife between the two sets of the Elliots that they led. He was probably the ‘Martin of Brady’ who gave a pledge for the surname of Nixon in 1573. In 1574 he was given ‘liferent’ of the teinds of Castleton by Scott of Bucelleuch. According to the register of the Privy Council he gave a pledge for the Nixons in 1573, was also surety in 1574, was moved from ward in Blackness to St. Andrews and had re- entry in ward in 1577. In 1575 he was summoned to appear to answer for the feud between the Elliots and the Pringles. He was said to have built himself a strong tower around 1576, described in an English letter being ‘strongly vawted, att the head of Liddell, with open ventes for traynes of Elliot Armstrong of Whithaugh and a number of other
in 1581 he had a bond of caution with Lancie sided against Robert of Redheugh. And lastly, interesting that at that time he appeared to be on charged to appear before the Privy Council with as they rode near Headshaw. All the leaders were attacking his farm of Northcroft, and of another
he specifically complained about a group of Scotts
stains of Cocklaw and Robert Elliot of Redheugh;
preceeded it). In 1580 there was a complaint was the instigator of the raid on Whitlaw that he may not have been on this raid himself. In Robert of Redheugh (his nephew); of course the Elliots of Braidlie are Gledstains at Whithaugh (and it may be that he was the instigator of the raid on Whitlaw that preceeded it). In 1580 there was a complaint
by the Countess of Bothwell, James Gledstains of Cocklaw and Wat Scott of Harden that he was maintaining Lancie Armstrong of Whithaugh and his family and followers, and that a group of Elliots of the Park and Gorrenberry had attacked Harwood, Whitlaw and Hoscote; this included his own sons Gavin, Hobbie and Archie, as well as his nephews Airchie, Gib and Dandie. In 1580/1 there was caution of £2000 for his entry to the Privy Council ‘when warned’. In 1581 he and John Turnbull of Minto were caution for the re-entry of Hob Elliot of Braidlie (who had been released from prison in Edinburgh), as pledge for the Elliots of Gorrenberry. Also in that year he was among a large group denounced as rebels for failing to present men to answer their riev-ing crimes. In 1581 he was allied with Simon Armstrong of Mangerton and Lance Armstrong of Whithaugh when they made a set of complaints against Walter Scott of Goldielands, James Gled-stains of Cocklaw and Robert Elliot of Redheugh;
he specifically complained about a group of Scotts
attacking his farm of Northcroft, and of another group of Scotts attacking his sons Hob and Dand
as they rode near Headshaw. All the leaders were charged to appear before the Privy Council with pledges of assurance from their supporters; it is interesting that at that time he appeared to be on sided against Robert of Redheugh. And lastly,
in 1581 he had a bond of caution with Lancie
Armstrong of Whithaugh and a number of other Elliots, entered with John Carmichael, who had been Keeper of Liddesdale. In 1581/2 he was declared a rebel for the non-appearance of his supporters who had been accused of raiding Eilrig, Bellendean and other farms. Along with Robert of Redheugh and 2 Armstrongs, he was also deounced in 1582/3 by the Privy Council for failing to make redress for the crimes committed by their tenants and servants. The Elliots of Braidlie are listed in an English letter of 1583 as Martin, his son Simon, Gavin ‘the Clerk’, Hobbie, Archie (all 4 of these probably his sons), Jock ‘Copshaw’, John of Thorlloshope, Will of the Steele, Dand and John of Braidlie (probably also his sons) and Simon of Harden; they were probably all closely related to him. He was among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4 to give their advice regarding the quieting of the troubles in Liddesdale and Teviotdale, and it appears that the feud between factions within the Elliot clan were resolved at this time. In 1584 he was listed second among the Elliots when they gave a bond of assurance to the English Wardens at Hermitage Castle. In 1586 he and Robert of Redheugh were explicitly listed as leaders in Liddesdale in instructions from King James to Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus. In 1586 he and his eldest son Simon had a lease of lands from the Earl of Bothwell, including Kilford, ‘Hietrie Clewis’ and ‘Ricartoun Cleucht’. In 1589 he was listed among leaders in Liddesdale who signed a bond for keeping peace with England. Also in 1589 he was on a list of Border Lairds who failed to appear before the Privy Council to give ‘thair gude advise anent the gude reule and quietnes
to make redress for the crimes committed by their tenants and servants. The Elliots of Braidlie are listed among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. He was last definitively mentioned at a Wardens’ meeting at the Bell Kirk in April 1590.
Also in 1590 he was on a list of Elliots accused of raiding the English farm of ‘Whynatlie’ in the previous year, stealing 60 cows, 2 horses, taking goods worth £100 and burning 5 houses; others listed include his sons Airchie and Hob, as well as Robert of Redheugh (his nephew); of course
he may not have been on this raid himself. In 1591 he had a charter of ‘liferent’ of ‘the ten pund land of auld extent of Phillop’ from James VI, confirmed by Parliament the following year; he must have been very old by this time, or this was the later Martin of Braidlie. He is mentioned in one version of the ballad ‘Jamie Telfer’, where he is referred to as being ‘of the Prakkin Tower’, i.e. Prickinghaugh, which may have been his home for a while. He was among several Elliots who signed a bond written by Sir John Forster to try to end family feuds on the Border in 1595/6 (although, since he was probably deceased by then, this may have been his grandson, also called Martin of Braidlie). He may have married an Armstrong (supported by his first son being called Simon) and their children were: Simon, probably first Elliot of Philhope; William of Braidlie, who married Mary Scott of Buccleuch and was hanged in 1607; Robert of Braidlie, called ‘Martin’s Hob of Prickenhaugh’, whose son and grandson were both declared fugitives; Andrew ‘Dand’; Archibald, called ‘Martin’s Archie of Clintwood’, banished from both Kingdoms; Gavin; Gilbert, ‘Gib’; John, called ‘Martin’s John of Burnmouth’, denounced a rebel; and a daughter who married Francis Foster of Kershopefoot. Martin ‘Martin o Heuchhouse’ (16th C.) one of the 10 thieves captured in Hawick in 1567 and held in Edinburgh tolbooth, unlike many of the others who were drowned. He was probably a descendant of the William ‘in Heuchous’ recorded in 1516. If he was not executed in 1567, then he could be the same man as ‘Reid Mertin’. Martin (16th C.) presented to the Parsonage and Vicarage of Castleton in 1574. He could be the same as one of the contemporary Martins (or closely related to them). The charge was vacant in the following year. Martin ‘Reid Merton’ of Heuchhouse (16th C.) recorded in 1579/80 as ‘Rid Martene Elliot of Heuchhous’ on a list of men accused of raiding into England. ‘Hob’ of Heuchhouse is also listed as his brother. In 1584 he was ‘Martinge Elliot of the Hewghewouse’ when, along with John of Heuchhouse, he signed the bond of assurance with the English Wardens at Hermitage. In 1587/8 he is recorded as ‘Reade’ Martyn Ellott of the Hewghouse’ when accused by Sir John Forster of being on a raid on England in 1585, along with many other Elliots; John of Heuchhouse was also listed, and so presumably closely related. Martin (16th C.) recorded in 1584 along with his brother David, as sons of ‘Elder Will’ on the 1584 bond of assurance with the English Wardens. They gave assurance on behalf of their whole part of the clan, but it is unclear where they were from; certainly Martin of Heuchhouse was listed separately. Martin (16th C.) recorded in 1583 as ‘Rytchis Martyn’, on a list of the Elliot chiefs of the time, said to be closely related to the leader of the clan. Presumably his father was Richard. Martin ‘Black Baird’ (16th C.) resident of Harwood, perhaps the one in on the Teviot. He is recorded in 1586/7 being ‘callit the Blak Baird, in Harwoode’ among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. He could be related to men with the same nickname recorded at Branhxholme in the 1630s Martin of Braidlie (d.1607) son of Simon of Philhope (‘Mertin’s Sym’) and grandson of the earlier Martin of Braidlie. He could be the ‘Martryne’ listed by Monipennie in about 1594 among the chiefs of the Border, along with the Laird of Redheugh (but this list was probably compiled earlier, and referred to his namesake, who was already deceased by then). He was also sometimes known as ‘of Prickenhaugh’ and so presumably inherited those lands from his relatives. He was probably the ‘Martine Ellott of the Prickinge hawghe’ accused in 1590, along with ‘Martin’s Gib’ and Airchie and John (sons of Martin, and hence probably his uncles) of stealing horses from Englishman Thomas Rutherford. In 1591/2 John Turnbull of Minto acted as surety for him. In 1592 he had a charter of the lands of Philhope, along with his eldest son Simon. This charter also included rights of the Kirk of Castleton. In 1593 he was probably the ‘Martyn Ellott of Bradley’ who was part of the large raiding party of Elliots and Armstrongs into Tynedale. In 1599 he and Robert of Redheugh made an agreement (on behalf of their relatives and friends) to settle their differences with with Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. Also in 1599 he was part of a bond with the Warden (Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch) to be responsible for the behaviour of the inhabitants of Liddesdale. He must thus have been an important Liddesdale Elliot chieftain, and sometimes confused with his grandfather, the more powerful Martin of Braidlie, who died about 15 years earlier; he was described as good old Martin’s oye’ (i.e. grandson). He may have acquired Braidlie in only 1606, from Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig, the cautioners for the payment of 4000 merks being Gilbert of Mains, William of Fahnash and Robert Scott of Haining. He was captured in 1606 by the Earl of Dunbar (then Commissioner on the Border) and hanged at the court at Foulde (near Berwick), along with his uncle William as well as the Armstrongs of Mangerton and Whithaugh. After his death Braidlie (in the Barony of Hawick) went to William of Fahnash, who had been one of his guarantors in an arrangement between him and Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig. The name of his wife is unrecorded, but their children included: Simon of Phillhope; and a son, whose name is unknown, but whose son Robert was served heir to his grandfather’s great-grandfather, Martin Elliot of Braidley, in 1653. Martin (d.bef. 1618) holder of lands in Lilliesleaf. He married Agnes Lorraine and had a son and William. It has been suggested that he was the same man as Martin of Braidlie; although this seems unlikely, the similarity of names may indicate a relationship with that family. Martin (17th C.) servant of John Letham. In 1656 he was ordered to pay 30 shillings ‘for absence from his service for 5 weeks’, although he was let off the money claimed ‘for the Trooper coming to the said John Lethane’. Martin (18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. He married Margaret Stewart in 1821 and their children included: John (b.1723); Adam (b.1725); and Margaret (b.1729). Mary (18th C.) cook at Dinlabyre in 1791, when she worked for William Oliver. Matthew (15th C.) listed among a large number of Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice-aine in 1494/5. Matthew (15th C.) listed as former tenant in ‘helmys’ among a large number of Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice-aine in 1494/5. His lands were possibly Helm in Cavers Parish (or potentially Whames in the Borthwick valley), and he is listed separately from another Matthew. Matthew (16th C.) chaplain who witnessed a document in Selkirk. Walter Scott of Robertson begged for clemency from Robert Hunter, for his part in the killing of Robert’s brother John Hunter. Thomas, Burgess of Selkirk was also listed, and perhaps a relative. Matthew (18th/19th C.) from Canombie, he lived in Castleton Parish. He married Janet (also known as ‘Fanny’) Wilson. Their children included: Elizabeth (b.1782); Andrew (b.1785); John (b.1787); Matthew (1788–1874); Henry (b.1791); and Janet (b.1796). Matthew (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Betty Elliot and their children included Betty, Margaret and William. It is possible this is an earlier marriage of the Matthew who married Dorothy Purdom. Matthew (1788–1874) son of Matthew and Janet Wilson. He was a labourer in Newcastleton, living at about 9 Doncaster Street in 1841 and 26 South Hermitage Street in 1861. He is probably the labourer in Newcastleton listed among male heads of households in 1835. He married Dorothy (‘Dolly’) Purdom and their children included: Annie (b.1821), who married farm-worker James; Matthew (b.1821); John (b.1823), a ploughman at Barnes, who may have emigrated to Huron County, Ontario; Isabel (b.1825); and Thomas (b.1827), who possibly emigrated to Canada with his brother. Matthew (1788/9–1877) tenant in Netherraw. He was listed as head of household in Netherraw in 1835–41. He was farmer of 20 acres at Netherraw in Castleton Parish in 1841 and 1851. He was the last farmer of Netherraw, with the buildings being demolished after his death, and much of the land planted. He married Janet Scott (c.1788–1875) and their children were: John (b.1808); Betty (b.1811); Matthew (b.1812); Robert (b.1814); Helen (b.1816); Ann (or Annie, 1819–84); William (1820–36); Andrew (b.1821); Isabel (b.1823), who married a Wilson; Margaret (b.1825); Janet (or Jane, b.1827); and Frances (or Fanny, 1829–1914). Matthew (b.1821) resident of Castleton Parish, son of Matthew and Dorothy Purdom. In 1851 he was a farm servant at Hudshouse. He married Cecilia Turnbull and their children included: Stavert Turnbull (b.1844); and Elizabeth (1850–96), who married James Duncan Helm and died in Hawick. Matthew ‘Matthia’ (c.1871–1945) half-back for Hawick in the 1890s, who also played for Scotland. His 1895 Scotland cap is in the Museum. Michael (13th C.) recorded as ‘Michaels de Eland’ in the 1256 assize roll of Northumberland. He may have been an early Elliot, living just across the Border. His son Nicholas, who was 7, and Gilbert, son of Thomas, from the same place, seem to have died in an accident ‘in villa de Eland’. Miss ?? (b.1830s) became famous for knitting about 130 pairs of socks to send to local soldiers during WWI. She lived on Dalkeith Place. Mr. ?? (18th/19th C.) teacher at the ‘Latin School’ in Hawick, i.e. the Grammar School. His son John died in 1798. It is unclear if he was the main master or an assistant at the school. Mrs. ?? (17th C.) listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. She probably ran an inn or shop. She could be the same Mrs. Elliot recorded in 1735 when the Council records show £2 7s being spent in her establishment ‘when the poer was mended’, suggesting that her inn was near one of the town’s ports. Mrs. ?? (20th C.) from Borthaugh. She was heavily involved in the local Women’s Voluntary Service during WWII. Nenion (19th C.) Edinburgh-based solicitor before the Supreme Courts of Scotland and Clerk of the Teind Court. He was involved with the Edinburgh Border Counties Association and contributed several papers to the Hawick Archaological Society Transactions. Nichol (17th C.) 4th son of Walter ofArkleton. He was farmer at Unthank. He married Janet, daughter of Rev. John Lithgow of Ewes. His children were: Thomas (b.1700), who probably died young; Anna (b.1702); Adam (b.1703); Janet (b.1704) referred to as ‘in Newmill’, who died unmarried; and Margaret (b.1707), who married William Armstrong of Woodhead. In 1704 he was listed being of Ewes Parish when he witnessed a baptisms for William Anderson in Ramsaycleuchburn. Nichol (17th/18th C.). His son John was baptised in Kirkton Parish in 1725. Given the forename, he was probably connected with the farmer at Unthank. Nicholas (14th/15th C.) recorded as deceased in 1408 in a document relating to St. Giles’ lands in Edinburgh, where he is ‘Elwald’. Nicholas (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 when his son Gilbert was among Liddesdale men cited for non-appearance at the Justice- aire. Ninian (15th/16th C.) witness in 1497 to a sasine for the lands of Robert of Redheugh. Other witnesses were Robert, William, John and Andrew ‘Elwald’ (presumably important men of the clan), as well as 2 Croziers, a Graham and a Forster. Ninian (16th C.) recorded in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale as a tenant of the steadings of ‘Cleirlandis, Robsteid, Thomsctosteid, Cranswat, Gusbank, Hurklebuss’. Another (or the same) Ninian is recorded, along with John, as tenant of Roughley in the same roll. Ninian ‘Ringan the Porter’ (16th C.) recorded as tenant at Ewes Doors about 1567. His nickname could be an epithet from the ‘Doors’. In 1569 he was ‘Niniane Elliot, callit the Portar of Ewis durris’ when order to enter as pledge for ‘hail Ellottis dwelland’. Possibly the same ‘Renyen’ was recorded as being ‘of the Dewhowses’ in Ewesdale, along with John, when they signed the 1584 bond of assurance with the English Wardens. ‘John the Portars son’, recorded in 1578/9 and also in about 1594, was his son; in 1578/9 he was ‘umqwhile Ringane the Portar’ when his son John (or ‘Blasteis Jok’) was cited, and hence he was already deceased by then. ‘Archie Elliot, sone to Ringhais Will Elliot the portar in Glenvoren’ could be his grandson. Ninian and John, who were tenants of Roughley in 1541, may also be related. Ninian (16th C.) recorded in a huge list of men whose superior was Lord Maxwell in 1585, when they had remission for their previous crimes. He is the first named of ‘Ninia, Thome, George and Will Ellattis’, suggesting they all resided in the same place. They are listed among Armstrong, Littles etc. of the area around Eskdale. Ninian ‘Ringan’ of Dodburn (16th C.) recorded among a large number of Ellots and others complained about for a raid into England in 1589. His name is listed as ‘Rynion Elliott of Dodborne’ and ‘Ryenon Ellott of Dodburne’. He is surely related to the slightly earlier Simon of Dodburn and Will in Dodburn. Ninian (16th C.) tenant in Colterscleuch. He was recorded in 1590 in a case where Walter Scott of Buccleuch and Walter Scott of Goldielands were ordered to enter certain of their tenants to answer some English complaints. Ninian ‘Hob’s Ringan’ (16th/17th C.) listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a Borders Commissioners’ court in Jedburgh in 1605. He was recorded as ‘Rinyeane Elliott, called Hob’s Rinyeane’. Ninian ‘Ringan’ (d.c.1608) son of William of Fiddleton. He was listed (along with his father and brother John) among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605. In 1608 he was sentenced along with William, son of John Elliot of Burngrains with resisting the King’s Guard. They were also recorded as ‘Niniane Ellote, sone to unq Jok of Burgranes; William Ellote, sone to Will of Fiddeltoun’, which is confusing. The pair had been declared rebels some years earlier for theft, murder and other crimes. Hiding in ‘the West cuntie’ they were sought out by Sir Robert Hepburn and men of the King’s Guard, but they shot at the Guard, killing William Bailie and being captured after the house they were in was set on fire. They were sentenced to be taken to Edinburgh Castle Hill, to have their right hands cut off and then to be hanged. He must have been related to the ‘John’s Gavin’ of Fiddleton who was tried in 1606. Ninian (d.1660) 4th son of Elliot of Unthank (whose name is unknown), he was tenant in Eweslees. His brothers were probably Adam of Meikledale, William of Mosspeebie and William of Unthank. He received a lease of Eweslees from the Earl of Buccleuch in 1643. His eldest son appears to have predeceased him, and when he died he left 2 grandsons who were minors, with their appointed guardians being William of Unthank, Gavin of Outersiderig and James in Harwood. He married Margaret ‘Acheson’ (probably Aitchison). His children included: a son, whose children were Ninian of Eweslees and Robert of Eweslees; Robert in Gorrenberry; and William in Lynniecleuch. However, this information is all quite uncertain. Ninian (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His son Ninian was baptised in 1694. It is possible he is the same as Ninian of Falnash. Ninian of Falnash (d.bef. 1703) son of Gavin and grandson of Robert. He had a charter of Falnash dated 1667 from Archibald of Falnash, his cousin. He had a son, Walter. He may be the Ninian who leased Todshawhill, Whames and part of Branchholme Muir in 1672 and 1673. Ninian (b.c.1709) born at Shaws in Castleton, he may have been son or grandson of William of Penchrise and Bessie Grieve. He married Agnes Paterson and they had a son Ninian (b.1735) who lived at Riccarton. His wife’s gravestone is in Teviothead cemetery; she died at the age of 58. He could be the shepherd in Commonbrae marked on the same stone, who died at Slatehills in 1762. He may have been father of Adam (1734–60), also marked on the gravestone, who died at Commonbrae. Ninian (18th C.) son of Robert in Know. He was tenant in Priesthill, which was probably the farmstead near Whithaugh. Ninian (1735–1816) son of Ninian and Agnes Paterson. He was a shepherd in Castleton, associated with Riccarton and Dod. He was at Riccarton in 1778. He was also recorded as shepherd at Riccarton on both the 1797 Horse and Dog Tax Rolls and also in the Castleton Parish section of the Roxburghshire Militia in 1797. He appears to have married 3 times, to Margaret Brydon (b.1731) at Riccarton in 1756, then Esther Crozier (1731–66) and lastly to Janet Douglas (1745–1834) at Upperraw. His children probably included: Margaret (b.1756); John (b.1760) in Middlemoss; Margaret (again, b.1763); Adam (b.1765); Ester (b.1766), who married Robert Ballantyne from Pinglehole; Mary (b.1772); Robert (b.1774); Ninian (b.1776); Catherine (b.1777); Christian (b.1778); William (b.1784); and Walter (b.1789). He died at Shaws. Ninian (1776–1847) son of shepherd Ninian and Janet Douglas, he was born at Riccarton. In 1841 he was listed as ‘Lab. or Roadman’ and living at about 13 North Hermitage Street. He married Margaret (1779–1863), daughter of John Nichol and Elizabeth Riddell. Their children included: Ninian (1808–89); John (b.1810); Helen (b.1812); James (1814–98), road contractor; and Janet (1821–1901), who had a daughter to John Nichol (presumably a cousin of some sort). Ninian (1789–1865) eldest son of John and Janet Robson, he was born in Castleton Parish and may have lived at Blackburnfoot. He emigrated with his family to Middlesex County, Ontario, and all but their first child was born there. He married Agnes Turnbull (b.c.1790). Their children included: Janet (b.1815), born in Castleton; Mary (b.1821); Elizabeth (b.1823); Esther (b.1829); Francis (b.1829); and Agnes (1837–41). Ninian (1799–1885) born at Sundhope in Castleton Parish, son of shepherd James and Janet Grieve. He married Janet, daughter of Elliot Grieve, who was born at Blinkbonny. They emigrated to Canada where their children were born, Janet, James, Elizabeth, Elliot Grieve, Gardner, John, William, James, Catherine, Thomas and Margaret. They lived in North Dorchester Township, Middlesex County, Ontario, where he was a farmer. Ninian (1808–89) son of Ninian and brother of John. He was a road contractor in Newcastle west, living on Douglas Square in 1851 and 1861. He married Jane (1812–65), daughter of John Nichol and Marion Murray. Their children included: John (1836–1905), also a roadman; Margaret (b.1838), who died young; Marion (1840–99). Patrick (15th C.) brother of John of Thorlieshope. He is recorded in 1488, when he was witness to a sasine for the lands of Girnwood. It is possible that the same Patrick was listed among a large number of Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. Patrick (16th C.) entered at a Justice Court in Jedburgh in about 1510, by Robert of Redheugh, along with ‘Gret Johnnie in Priesthaugh. Patrick ‘Pate’ of Ryleknow (16th C.) recorded in 1569 among men that Sir John Forster served as surety for. This makes it seem like he was from the English side. Peter ‘the Fart’ (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. He is listed as ‘Petir Ellott, callit the Fart, in Penlamb’ presumably his nicknames means what it sounds like it means. Patrick (17th C.) recorded in Yair in 1678 when he had a deal about providing timber to the Burgh of Selkirk. Pauline received the B.E.M. in 2021 for service to Newcastleton’s resilience group. Percival (16th C.) recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books for 1535. Along with William (probably a relative), Andrew ‘Louche’, Patrick Gourlay and others were accused of taking grain from ‘le Schaw’ belonging to John Hall. They claimed that Hall reaped grain that they had sown themselves. His name is written ‘Parsevell Ellot’. He is probably the ‘Perse’ recorded as a witness in Selkirk in 1542 for a transactions involving Burgess Robert. In 1544 he (along with Walter Scott of Branchholme) was a captor of an Englishman who William had a bond to return to them. Phillip (18th/19th C.) saddler of Hawick (probably from the Eastend). He was the Council’s elected Cornet in 1790, but after he drew up a narrow list of invitees some of the young men of the town (presumably mainly the West-enders) chose George Wilson as their own Cornet instead. The two cavalades approached the West Port from different sides of the Rawes and Bailie Hardie blocked the rebel cavalade (felling the first man with an oak stick), allowing the elected Cornet’s party to proceed unmolested to the Moor (as described by Robert Wilson). Ralph (16th C.) recorded among a large list of men of Liddesdale who did not appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. Two men listed as ‘radulphi elwald’ are there, although this forename is not otherwise common among the Elliots. One of them had a brother, William, who is also listed in 1494/5. Ralph (16th C.) priest who was recorded as witness to 2 documents in Selkirk in 1532. Richard ‘Little’ (14th C.) recorded in Cumberland in 1389, appearing before the justices of gaol delivery. His nickname was recorded as ‘parvus’ and his surname as ‘Elwald’, the same as William ‘One-Eyed’, who was also recorded. Richard (16th C.) recorded in 1548 as ‘Ryche Elliot of the Park’. Along with Robert of Redheugh and ‘Nelly’s John’, he had a bond to enter 2 prisoners with the Laird of Ferniehirst. He was presumably related to other Elliots of Park. Richard ‘Law’s Richie’ (16th C.) tenant in Swinstead. He was recorded in 1574 as ‘Richel Elliot callit Lawis Richie in Swinteis’ among men who had been ordered to be removed from the lands of Robert of Redheugh. ‘Lawis Jok’ and ‘Lawis Thome’ in Priesthaugh were also named and presumably his brothers. Their father may have been Lawrence, or perhaps they came from Laws in Liddesdale. Richard (16th C.) listed in 1581/2 as ‘Ritchie Elliott, callit Rowanes Willis Ritche’ among Elliots accused of raiding the farm of Harwood on Teviot. He was presumably son of William and grandson of Roland. He is listed after ‘Rowans Hobbe’ and his brother Jamie, who may be related. He was declared a rebel after not appearing. Richard ‘Ritchie’ (16th C.) recorded in 1587/8 when accused by Sir John Forster of being on a raid on England in 1585, along with many other Elliots. His name is written as ‘Riche Elliott, ‘Bessies wifes Riche’’, but it is unclear exactly what this means and who he was related to. Richard ‘Ritchie’ (d.1606) called ‘Richie Elliott of Heuchous’ when he was

faulde’ (i.e. Leahaugh, Corrie’s Shiel and Hartsgarth) in the lordship of ‘ledesdale’. In 1484 he was Robert ‘Elwald’ of the Redheuch when the Earl of Angus directed ‘Walter Scot de Edschau, Radulpho Ker, fratri Walteri Ker de Cesfurd et Willielmo Elwaldo de goranbery’ to infest him in the lands of Over and Nether ‘Larrostane’. In 1489 there was a further precept for ‘redehuch’, ‘layhauch’, ‘hartsgarth’, ‘caraschele’, ‘dawmane’ and ‘larostanys superior et inferior’. In 1491 the Earl of Angus swapped Liddesdale for Bothwell, ending the association of the Elliots with their superiors the Douglases. He may be the Robert son of Gilbert ‘Elwald’ who produced a remissation at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493 for the crime of stealing a grey horse from William Scott of Tushielaw; his surety was Robert Scott of Whitchester. He may also be the Robert mentioned in 1493 when Patrick Hardie had remission for stealing oxen from him. It seems likely he was the ‘roberti elwald, senioris’ who was listed among many Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the 1494/5 Justice-aire. He is said to have had one son, Robert, Captain of Hermitage, who died in his lifetime. He was succeeded by his grandson, Robert, according to a ‘retour of inquest’ of 1497/8 in the Douglas of Cavers papers. He is there said to have died ‘about the feast of the Invention of the Holy Cross last bypast’, i.e. in early May, and his grandson inherited his lands of Tillielee and Cauldcleuch. Robert of Reidheugh (d.c.1491) son of Robert, he was also known as ‘Robin’. He is sometimes listed as 11th Chief of the Elliots, even though he died in his father’s lifetime. He served as Captain of Hermitage Castle (probably Deputy Keeper), perhaps being appointed on the death of David Scott, younger of Buccleuch (in about 1484). In 1491 the Earl of Angus was bound to hand over his son Robert (as well as his own son, the Master of Angus) to King James. He was succeeded by his son Robert (12th) of Redheugh. He may also have been father of William of Larriston, although these early generations are not clear. Robert ‘the King’ (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1494/5 among a long list of men of Liddesdale who did not appear at the Justice-aire. Patrick Hepburn, Earl of Bothwell, and George Turnbull of Hallrule, Captain of Hermitage, served as their sureties and were fined. His name was given as ‘Roberti elwald vocatus king’ and he is listed second (after William) in a long list, perhaps suggesting his prominence among the Elliots. He was also one of a large number of Elliots (mostly ‘Elwalds’) listed in a 1500 document relating to pledges of good behaviour to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell. In 1502 he is probably the ‘Hob the King’, brother of ‘Dand the Man’ and son of William, who was involved with stealing 180 sheep from Tweeddale and Lauderdale. They were already rebels at that point, with 3 men from around Greenhead producing a ‘respite’ for resetting them. It is unclear which William was his father, and how he was related to any other Elliots. He may be the Robert who witnessed a sasine (along with several Elliots and others) for Robert of Redheugh in 1497. Robert (15th C.) recorded among a large list of men of Liddesdale who did not appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5, with the Lord of Liddesdale and Captain of Hermitage being fined. His name is listed as ‘roberti elwald comitis’, with his nickname perhaps being ‘the Count’ (to distinguish him from ‘the King’ and other contemporary men of the same name). Robert of Langhaugh (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1494/5 among men of Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aire. He is listed there as ‘Roberti elwald de langhalch’. He is also recorded in the document listing men who pledged themselves to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell in 1498 for good behaviour. He is there recorded as ‘Robert Elwald of the Langhalch’. This is probably the Longhaugh on the Hermitage Water. Robert ‘Young Rider’ (15th/16th C.) listed in a large number of men of Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. He is also listed among men who pledged their good behaviour to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell in 1498. He is recorded as ‘Robert Elwald, callit zong ridar’. Robert of Reidheugh (d.c.1516) 12th Chief of the Elliots, son of Robert and grandson of the previous Laird of Redheugh. In 1491 he is probably the Robert, son of ‘Robert Elwole, of the Hermitage’ who was delivered (along with the Master of Angus) as security by the Earl of Angus to King James. He was served heir to his grandfather in 1497/8 in the lands of Tillielee and Cauldcleuch, according to a ‘retour’ in the Douglas of Cavers papers (where he is ‘Robert Elwalde). 2 other Robert Elliots, and 2 William Elliots were on the panel for this inquest. He had sasine for the Liddesdale estates in 1497 and in 1501 he had another retour (at Jedburgh) for his grandfather’s lands, held of the Earl of Bothwell. He additionally inherited Priesthaugh, with the Abbots of Melrose as superiors. In 1502 he was ‘Robertus elwald in redheuch’ when he and George Turnbull in Hallrule were fined for failing to present David Turnbull in Bouchester at court in Jedburgh. He was witness to a sasine at Hermitage (for Adam, 2nd Earl of Bothwell) in 1508, along with William Elliot and Robert in Dinlees. He may be the Robert ‘Elwald’ who was on the 1509 panel for deciding on the inheritance of Cavers by James Douglas. He was ‘Robert Elwald of Redheuch’ when summoned to come before the King to promise to keep good order in 1510. Following this he had a respite in the Register of the Privy Seal of 1510 for all crimes carried out by him and his associates (except for treason) to be unpunished for 19 years to come. Also listed explicitly were Robert of Dinlees and John in Sundhope, suggesting they might have been brothers or sons (other associates were 2 Nixons, 2 Croziers, 2 Hendersons and an Armstrong). His children were Robert (possibly killed at Flodden) and a daughter who may have married David Scott of Howpasley (or possibly Tushielaw), with William of Larriston perhaps being another son. In general it seems difficult to separate him from the next Robert (in deciding how many generations there really were, and who may have been killed at Flodden). It is unclear if he was the ‘Robert Elwald of Redheuch’ who had a respite for his crimes in 1515/6, along with his brother William of Larriston and some Nixons, Foresters and Croziers, numbering 40 men. If this was him, then he seems likely to have died in 1516 and was succeeded by his grandson Robert in 1526. Robert (15th/16th C.) brother of William. In 1502 he was convicted of stealing 5 cows from John ‘spedin’ out of Blackhaugh. His brother William was his surety. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert of Reidheugh (d.1513) referred to as 13th Chief of the Elliots, even though he appears to have died in his father’s lifetime. He was son of Robert, although the number of different Robert in the preceding couple of decades seems quite uncertain. His sons were: Robert, who succeeded his grandfather in 1526; possibly Martin of Braidlie (although he seems more likely to have been his grandson); Archibald of Falmash and Gorrenberry; and probably John of Copshaw. He was probably the ‘Master Elliot’ said to have been killed at Flodden. However, this may be confusion with his father (since it seems hard to believe he was very old at Flodden), and there is no documentary evidence to separate the various Roberts. Robert (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Robert Elwald of Dunle’ in a 1510 respite to Robert of Redheugh and many others in Liddesdale. It seems likely he was a close relative of the Elliot chief. He is also listed as ‘in Denly’ in a 1516 ‘respite’ to William of Larriston and several other Liddesdale Elliots. He was presumably tenant farmer at Dinlees on the Hermitage Water. Robert (d.1530) referred to as a ‘common thief’ in 1530 when he and Adam Nixon were allowed to escape from the custody of John, Lord Hay of Yester, and for which Lord Hay’s brother (also John) was imprisoned in Linlithgow. Probably the same Robert ‘Elwald’ was hanged for theft in Linlithgow that same year, along with Matthew and William Nixon and Robert Noble. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Elliots. Robert (d.bef. 1539) recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Book in 1539/40 when his widow, Janet Scott, purchased lands in Appletreehall from Robert Scott of Howpasley. He is recorded as ‘Robert Elwand of [Toungtis?]’, but could possibly be a deceased Robert of Redheugh. Perhaps the same Robert was described as ‘layman’ when he witnessed a document in Selkirk in 1535 for Alexander Scott of Palace. Robert (d.bef. 1540) referred to as ‘Robert Elwand’ in 1540 when his widow Margaret Roger raised an action against 2 Murrays for stealing cattle from Borthwickshiels (where he was a tenant) in 1526. His sons included David, Alexander, John and Ringand (Ninian), all of whom were wanted as thieves. Robert of Ramsiegill (16th C.) recorded as ‘Hobbe Elwald of Ramsiegill’ in 1532 when the King charge a commission with his capture (along with Croziers and Foresters) for the killing of Thomas Dalgleish and Adam Turnbull. In 1541 he was ‘antiquo Roberto Elwald de Ramysgill’ when listed among the tenants of Stirkshielhope; ‘Roberto Elward in Rammisgill’ was also listed and presumably a different man (although it is unclear if they were related). Robert of Reidheugh (c.1505–bef. 1557) 14th Chief of the Elliots, served heir to his grandfather in 1526, with his father probably being killed at Flodden. His grand-uncle (or perhaps uncle) William of Larriston led the clan during his minority. In 1526 he inherited his grandfather’s Liddesdale lands of ‘Reidheuch, Layhauch, Hartgarth, Carechesel, Dalemane’ and ‘Over and Nether Larastanis’. In 1531 he was probably the Robert ‘Elwolde’ of the ‘Armytage’ who was one of 3 attendants who accompanied the Earl of Bothwell to a secret meeting with the Earl of Northumberland. He was further recorded as Captain of Hermitage in a document of 1532 and another in 1548/9 (when he had a bond to enter John ‘Cragill’ as a prisoner with the Laird of Ferniehirst). In 1537/8 he and his brother Archibald were sureties for William in Leaugh, plus brothers James and Simon, who had broken open a shop in Selkirk. He may be the ‘Robert Elwald seriendo’ (i.e. ‘sergeant’) who was recorded as tenant of Shaws in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale; he may also be the Robert who was tenant of the lands of Copshaw. He may be the ‘Robert Elwald’ listed in 1541 among Scotsmen accused of burning the corn of William Carnaby at Halton. In 1546 his son was described as ‘sone to Robyne of the Redhwychn’.

He was listed as ‘Rot. Eluard of Reidheuch’ in a 1550 bond signed by him and 10 Scotts in which they promised the Queen to keep order and hand over criminals. In 1552/3 he and Thomas Armstrong of Mangerton were appointed by the Privy Council to meet the Governor at Dumfries and accept the charge of keeping the peace in Liddesdale. He was succeeded by his son, Robert. He seems likely to have also been father of Martin of Braidlie (who led the burning of Hawick in 1565), although genealogies often have this Martin as his brother. Jock of Copshaw may have been another son (since he appears to have been Martin of Braidlie’s brother).

Robert ‘Flaskwood’ (16th C.) recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books for 1529/30. Archibald and Gavin Elliot, along with Simon and Ninian Armstrong pledged to bring him to Fairnilee to answer for attacks and other crimes perpetrated against George Ker of Linton. He is also recorded as ‘Roberto Elwald de Flaswod’ in 1535 in a trial in Jedburgh in 1535, where Robert Scott of Allanhaugh was accused of bringing him and William ‘Mend the caill’ from Liddesdale to plunder cattle at Midlem and elsewhere. His lands could be the place of this name in Liddesdale or ‘Flask Wood’ in Ewesdale. Robert (16th C.) son of Thomas and Helen Rutherford. In 1541/2 he inherited his deceased father’s tenement and 2 rigs in Selkirk and then resigned a house to his mother, in liferent. He may be the Burgess of Selkirk recorded in 1542; ‘Perse’ was one of the witnesses and may have been related. Probably the same Robert witnessed a transaction in Selkirk in 1543. In 1561 his mother Helen Rutherford assigned the tenement and 4 rigs to Robert, son of the deceased Gavin of Horsleyhill, leaving liferent for herself; Robert of Horsleyhill also assigned to him the ‘kindness’ of the King’s Croft in Selkirk. Robert (16th C.) recorded as being ‘in Rammsgill’ in the 1541 rental roll for Liddesdale, when he was one of the tenants at Stirkshielhope. Old Robert ‘Elwald de Rammsgill’ was also listed among the tenants, and is hence presumably a different man. He is surely related to the William in Ramsiegill who is also mentioned in 1541, and is probably related to the Robert in Ramsiegill who is recorded in the 1580s. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th C.) listed in 1544 as ‘Hobbe Elwode Clemyt [Crozier’s] syster sone’, when he was among local men who gave their assurances to the English. The Clement mentioned here, who was presumably his mother’s brother, was a prominent member of the Crozier family at that time, and possibly Clen Crozier of Stobs. It is not impossible that he was the same man as Robert of Horsleyhill (which also had a Stobs connection). It is also possible he was the same man as the ‘Clement’s Hob’ mentioned several times in the 1560s and 1570s. Robert (d.1564) 2nd Laird of Horsleyhill, eldest son of Gavin, 1st Laird. His brothers were William (who later succeeded to Horsleyhill), Andrew, David, Gavin of Stobs, and Archibald. He was said to have been involved in the murder of Hugh Douglas in about 1547, along with his father Gavin, and brothers William and Andrew. In 1561/2 he was recorded as son of the deceased Gavin of Horsleyhill when he purchased a tenement and 4 rigs in Selkirk from Helen Rutherford, widow of Thomas Elliot; he promised to retain liferent of a house for Helen and gave up the ‘kindness’ of the King’s Croft in Selkirk to Helen’s son, who was also called Robert Elliot. In 1563/4 he is ‘in Horslehill’ when he appeared on behalf of his brother Dand, whose sheep had been stolen from Baililee by the Scotts of Tushielaw; their cautioner was John Preston, Burgess of Edinburgh. He is probably the Robert who was listed in 1564 along with William of Horsleyhill and Gavin and Archibald (as well as other Elliots and Scotts) in the trial of the murder of David Scott of Hasseedean, for which he was said to be the instigator; however, it is confusing that he was not named as Laird at the time, perhaps because he had not formally succeeded his father by then. He had at least 2 children: Gavin (d.1565), who succeeded; and William (b.1547) who succeeded after his brother. He was executed for the murder of David Scott. His uncle Gavin (later of Stobs) was appointed as guardian to his children, although his half-brother William (later Burgess of Peebles) disputed this, but was deemed too young. Robert of Reidheugh (d.bef. 1564) 15th Chief of the Elliots, son of Robert, whom he probably succeeded some time before 1557. He may have appeared along with his father at a Judiciary Court held by Lord Maxwell in 1537/8. In 1546/7 he was ‘sone to Robyn of the Redhwych’ when he was among several men entering Elliots as prisoners at Ferniehirst, and in 1548 (referred to as ‘younger of the Reidhewcht’) had a similar bon for entering John, son of Robin of Thorlshope. His ‘eym’ (i.e. uncle) Archibald was also referred to there and he signed with the help of the notary (meaning that he could not write). He had a bond for entering Nixons in 1557 and in that year his brother Martin is also referred to (confusing, since Martin of Braidie is sometimes placed in the family tree as his uncle). He was ‘of Reidhucie’ in about 1557 when he rented Priesthaugh and Penangushope from Melrose Abbey. Around the late 1550s he was one of the men on the panel to resolve the conflict over the lands of Newbigging (in Hassendean) between the children of Gavin Elliot of Horsleyhill. In 1561 he was ‘of Reidheuch’ when listed (along with his Gavin, brother of Archie’s Will) among Border lairds who appeared before the Queen to promise to present the names of those who were guilty of theft; he was called ‘of Redheuch’ when later listed (after Martin ‘of Reidheuch’) among men charged by the Privy Council to appear before Queen Mary regarding the state of the Borders. In 1563 he was appointed Deputy Keeper of Hermitage Castle, while the Earl of Bothwell was in exile, with William Douglas of Cavers acting as security for him. He had a bond of 1563, along with Martin of Braidie (his brother) for entering Jock, son of Gavin Elliott to Sir Thomas Ferniehirst. He married Jean Scott, sister of Buccleuch, around 1550 (and after his death she married Gavin Elliott of Stobs). His children were: Robert of Redheugh; William of Hartsgarth; Gilbert of Stobs, ‘Gibbie wi’ the Golden Garties’ (although this is not certain); Archibald; Gavin of Brugh; and a daughter, who was the 2nd wife of Will, 2nd son of Richard Graham of Netherby. A report on the West Marches compiled in the period 1563–66 states that ‘oulde Robyn Elliott and young Robyn, his son, are both dead’. Robert ‘Reid Hob’ (16th C.) listed in 1569 among the tenants that Gavin Elliott in Skelhill was surety for. It is unclear how he was related to other Elliots. Robert of the Shaws (16th C.) said to have been the Elliot who convinced those who had been rounded up in Hermitage Castle to allow the wounded Earl of Bothwell to enter in 1566, by agreeing to let all of them go. It is said that he was granted the rent of the lands of ‘Blackgrave’ as a reward. It is possible that ‘Shaw’ is the same as ‘Copshaw’, but is more likely to be the lands of that name on the Hermitage Water. In 1569 he and his brother Will of the Steele were excepted from the pledge that John of Thorlshope had for the whole of that branch of the Elliots. Also in 1569 he was ‘Hob of the Schawis’, listed along with Archie ‘Fyre the Brais his brother’, when John of Thorlshope was held in Wester Wemyss Castle as pledge for them. In 1572 he was among the Elliots who signed a bond with John Johnstone of that Ilk for returning John of the Steel (who had been broken out of ward). He may be ‘Hob Elliott, brother of Johnne of Copshaw’ who was recorded in 1587/8 being in ward with Lord Sinclair; however, he ‘eshaipit and eschewit’ and his pledge was charged to appear before the Privy Council. He is also ‘Hobb Elliott of the Shawes’ when accused in 1590 along with Will of Fiddleton and others of stealing livestock and goods from the Laird of ‘Troghwren’ and Hedley of ‘the Garret sheills’. In 1591 he was part of a group (along with Archie of the Hill and others) accused of plundering from Jeffrey Taylor and the tenants of Scaleby. Either he or his son was probably the ‘Hob of the Schawis’ who was one of the Liddesdale Elliots to sign bonds with Scott of Buccleuch in 1599. He was probably also related to Adam and Gilbert of the Shaws who are recorded in 1583. Robert ‘Hob’, ‘the Lady’ (16th C.) recorded in 1569 among Elliots of Ewesdale. ‘Will Elliot callit the Lord’ was held in Loch Doon Castle as pledge him, as well as John of Fiddleton and Hob of Unthank. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th C.) recorded being ‘callit Hob of Unthank’ in 1569. This was along with Hob ‘the Lady’ and John of Fiddleton, when Will ‘the Lord’ was held in Loch Doon Castle as pledge for them. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th C.) tenant of Gavin of Elliot of Falnash in 1569. The Laird appeared in Hawick to give surety for his tenants. He may have been related to Will, Dand and Jock, other Elliots also listed as tenants. Robert ‘Hob’, ‘Sweet Milk’, ‘Great Legs’ (16th C.) recorded in 1569 when Andrew Ker of Faldonside had a bond with him. His name appears in the Register of the Privy Council as ‘Hob Elliot callit Sweit Mylk alias Greit Leggis’. It is possible that he was related to William ‘Sweet Milk’, whose death in a duel at Newmill is immortalised in the song ‘Rattlin Roarin Willie’. His second nickname presumably means that he was tall. It seems likely he was related to Gilbert, who had the same nickname.
Elliot

recorded in 1586/7 and Dand in 1598. Robert ‘Martin’s Hob of Prickenhaugh’ (16th C.) son of Martin of Braidlie. He was also sometimes called ‘Hob of Braidlie’. His lands were at Prickenhaugh in Liddesdale. He was one of the band of 300 or so Elliots, Armstrongs and others who plundered Torwoodlee in 1568. He is probably the Robert of Braidlie for whom there was surety before the Privy Council in 1573. He is listed as ‘Hobie’ in 1580 among a group of Elliots (including his brothers Gavin and Archie, and 3 cousins), who attacked the lands of Harwood (on Teviot), stealing 40 cows and oxen, and then later attacked Slaidhills, Whittlaw and Hoscote; he was declared a rebel after not appearing to answer the charges. He was also implicated in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh in 1580. He was ‘Hob’ of Braidlie when sentenced to imprisonment in 1580/1 for several crimes of theft, along with other Elliots, Armstrongs and Nixons. He is probably the ‘Hob Elliott of Braidley’ for whose re-entry in 1581 Martin of Braidlie (presumably his father) and John Turnbull of Minto served as caution; he was pledge for the ‘gang of Gorrumbenrire’, and was released from ward in the Castle and Tolbooth of Edinburgh. In 1581 his father complained about how he and his brother Dand had been attacked while riding near Headshaw; Walter Scott of Headshaw and 5 or 6 others attacked them and ‘struckin the hand from the ane and hurt the uther in perrell of his lyff’, although it is unclear whether he or his brother lost his hand. He is listed as ‘Hobbe Elliot’ among a 1583 list of Elliots of Braidlie and was probably also the ‘Robin Elliot of Braidley’ listed among the landed men of the Border in about 1590. In 1587/8 he was ‘Hobbe Elliott, called Martin’s Hobbe’ when there was an order for Francis, Earl of Bothwell, to release the Englishman that he had captured. He is on a list of Elliots (including his father Martin and brother Archie) accused in 1590 of raiding the English farm of ‘Whynatlie’ in the previous year. He is probably the Hob listed among Elliots (including his brother Gib, as well as Airchie of Clintwood, who was also his brother) and Armstrongs complained about in 1590 by a large group of Englishmen for a raid on Blackcleugh in Kirkhaugh, taking many prisoners for ransom. Two of his sons were later denounced as rebels (‘Kirstie’ and one other). In 1611 he was ‘Robert Elliot, called Martenis Hob’ when he was cautioner for ‘Jok Elliot, called the Murt’, for his appearance at court in Jedburgh. He was also one of the cautioners in 1611 for ‘Kirstie Elliot callit Hobis Kirstie’, along with Robert of Redheugh, William of Gorrenberry, Archie of Clintwood and William of Prickinghaugh. He may be the same as ‘Robert Elliot, called of Braidlie’ when witness to the document of 1613 infesting Robert of Redheugh in his lands. Robert ‘Hob’ of Heuchhouse (16th C.) listed among Elliots who signed a bond in 1570, promising to give pledges for the release of John of Heuchhouse (who was surely a brother or son) and Hob, son of Elder Will. In 1578/9 he was among 22 Border Lairds who did not appear before the Privy Council when summoned; it was reported that he had previously been surety for John of the Heuchhouse and Hobbie, son to Elder Will. In 1579/80 he is recorded along with his brother ‘Reid Mertin’ on a list of men accused of raiding into England. In 1581 he was among a large group denounced as rebels for failing to present men to answer their rieving crimes. He is recorded in an 1583 letter from Musgrave to Burleigh, describing the leaders of the Elliots of Liddesdale. He is described as ‘Hobbe Elliot of the Hewghus’, and listed along with Robert of Redheugh and 3 of the chief’s brothers, so he was presumably closely related. His brother John is also mentioned, and he could be the John of Heuchhouse who is recorded about the same time. Robert ‘Scot’s Hob’ (16th C.) listed as ‘Scotis Hob’, along with his 2 unnamed sons, in a 1574 list of Scots rebels who were reset in England. In 1578 he was listed among Border Lairds who had been released from ward (in his case with John Carmichael, younger of that Ilk) and directed to meet again to promise to suppress lawlessness on the Border. In 1578/9 he is ‘Hob Elliot, callit Scottis Hob’ when it was declared by the Privy Council that he was meant to return to prison with William Cunningham of ‘Caprintoun’, with cautioner John Carmichael, younger of that Ilk. However, he had not re-entered ward with Cunningham, and hence his cautioner defaulted. He is recorded as ‘Scotes Hobbe’ in 1583 in a list of Elliots of Park. It is unclear whether his nickname meant ‘Scottish’ or that he was perhaps stepson of a Scott, or his father was nicknamed ‘Scott’. It is possible that ‘Hobbie’s Hob’, who is also listed, was his son. Gavin, who was convicted of theft in 1580/1, was probably also his son; he was ‘Scottis Hobbis Gawen’ in 1581. Another son, ‘Scottis Hobbis Jok’ is recorded in 1580, 1581 and 1584. Robert ‘Hob’ of the Park (16th C.) son of James of the Park. There is a pledge for him before the Privy Council in 1573; he was exchanged for John of the Park, who was to be warded with Sir William Scott of Balwearie, and although he had been freed, was ordered to present himself again to be warded. In 1576 there is a complaint that he had been freed from ward with William Porterfield. He was listed in a promise by Border Lairds to meet to suppress lawlessness on the Border. He is listed in 1578/9 in a restatement of a promise made to the Privy Council as a ‘plege for the gang thairof’, that he should stay in ward with William Porterfield of Duchall. His sureties were Robert of Redheugh and Martin of Braedlie. However, he was stated to have ‘not remanit bot eschaipit fra the said Williame Portarfeild’. He was listed among those implicated in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh in 1580. Also in 1580 he was held in ward by the Earl of Lennox in Dumbarton Castle. In 1581/2 he was declared a rebel after failing to appear to answer charges about farms near Hawick being raided. He was presumably important in the family of Elliots of the Park, and also related to the deceased John of the Park and ‘Symmy’ of the Park, who were also mentioned in the same 1578/9 document. He is recorded as ‘Robert Elliot of the Park’ in 1586 when his superior Robert of Redheugh was instructed to enter him in court; Simon and James of the Park are also listed. Either the same or a different ‘Hob Elliot of the Park’ was declared a rebel of 1606. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th C.) son of ‘Dand of Braidley’ and probably grandson of Martin of Braedlie. In 1574 it is recorded that he was to remain in ward. In 1576 the man with whom he had been warded, George Maxwell of Newark, was ordered to appear before the Privy Council to explain why he had been freed. He is listed in 1578 as ‘Hob Elliot, sone to David Elliot of Braidley’ among Border Lairds who had been released from ward (in his case with the Provost and Bailies of Edinburgh) and directed to meet again to promise to suppress lawlessness on the Border. In 1580 he was warded with the Provost and Bailies of Edinburgh, along with John, son of ‘the Elder Tod’. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Roberts. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th C.) listed among those implicated in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh in 1580. His name is given as ‘Hobbe Elliot, callit Kene’. The meaning of the nickname is unclear, but he may have been closely related with ‘Archie Kene’, and must have been a supporter of Lanie Armstrong of Whithaugh. Robert ‘Hob’ of Glenvoran (16th C.) recorded in 1587/8 among men (probably of Ewesdale) who William Maxwell, Lord Herries, was ordered to present to the Privy Council. His name is listed as ‘Hobbe Elliott, alias Hobby of Glenvorse’. He is also recorded as ‘Hbbie of Glenvoren’ on Sandison’s c.1590 map of the Debateable Lands. His lands were in the upper Ewes valley. Probably the same man was ‘Robine Elliott the Bastarde of Glenvorane’ listed among a large group of Elliots who were accused in 1590 of taking Ralph Hall and others prisoner and ransoming them. He was mentioned in 1590 in a case where Lord Maxwell and Alexander, Lord Home were ordered to enter certain men of Ewesdale to answer some English complaints. In 1590/1 he was listed among men who both Lord Maxwell and Lord Home were to enter before the Privy Council; he was specifically called out with a few others ‘to answer for all their other steel-fellows [fellow thieves]’. Probably the same ‘Robene Elliot of Glenvorane’ was declared a fugitive in 1606. (‘Reid Hob Elliott’) suggests that he had red hair. He is probably also the Robert of Skelfhill who was one of those summoned by the Privy Council in 1575 to settle the feud between the Elliots and Pringles. Robert ‘Hob Billie’ (16th C.) recorded in 1588 when James Dalgleish and Nichol Brydon were convicted of helping him, David Elliot, Armstrongs and others steal cattle from near Edinburgh. He is probably the ‘Hobbe Elliot ‘Hobbe bullie’’ listed among Elliots, Armstrongs, Turnbulls, Laidlaws and Croziers, accused in 1590 of relieving from the Laird of ‘Troghwen’ and Hedley of ‘Garret Sheills’; he is also ‘Hobb ‘Bullie’’ when accused of having been in another group who stole from the same farms earlier. Robert ‘Gavin’s Hob’ (16th C.) recorded in 1590 along with other Elliots and Nixons when there was a complaint from the English side of the Border that in 1588 they had stolen in ‘playne dayelight, thir hirdes’ and 24 head of cattle. He is recorded as ‘Gawens Hob Elliot’, but it is unclear who his father Gavin was. Robert (16th C.) recorded as being ‘in Borthunkbra, servant to Wat Scott of Tushelaw’ in 1589 when he refused to restore 2 mares and a horse that had been stolen. Along with ‘Sandie Wemys in Hawik’, Robert Fraser younger of Overton and Andrew Armstrong, he was denounced as a rebel for not appearing. He was presumably tenant at Borthwickbrae, but was not obviously related to the later Elliots of Borthwickbrae. Robert (16th C.) recorded as ‘Hob bullie’ in 1589, among a group of Elliots and others complained about for raiding into England. It is unclear what his nickname meant. Robert of Redheugh (d.c. 1591) 16th Chief of the Elliots, son of Robert. He was a minor when his father died sometime around 1563, and Martin of Braidlie (probably his uncle or perhaps great-uncle) acted as clan chief, while his new stepfather was Gavin Eliott of Stobs and Skelfhill. In 1569 he was ‘Robert Eliott of the Skelfhill’ when he promised to enter as surety in place of his stepfather, if required. He became of age in about 1572 and took over as clan chief. He was recorded as Captain of Hermitage in 1573. Also in that year he was among a large group of Border lairds to sign a bond with the Regent Morton. He signed the ‘Band of Roxburgh’ in 1573. Additionally in 1573 there was a decree by Douglas of Cavers for his removal from the lands of Langside (which he fought against, on the basis that his father and grandfather had held these lands). He was the Robert of Redheugh who signed a bond recognising Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferrniehirst as Warden of the Middle Marches in the 1570s. He is probably the ‘Young Robin’ recorded ‘for the wrangus spoilioum and awtaking of thair teindis’, along with Gaving of Horsleyhill and William Douglas of Crook, on the 1574 testament of Walter Scott of Buccleuch. Also in 1574 he witnessed a discharge between Douglas of Cavers and Cranston of that Ilk. Additionally in 1574 he served as surety for a number of Borderers with the Privy Council, specifically for the lands of Priesthaugh, Peelbrae, Swinstead and Dodrig; he was found liable for 5000 merks for not removing the thieves and replacing them with ‘trew men’. In 1578/9 he was among 22 Border Lairds who did not appear before the Privy Council when summoned, and was found liable for the fines, because the men he made pledges for had continued their rieving activities (in his case, ‘Joke the Gyde’ Elliot and Sim, son of Lanie Armstrong of Whithaugh). In 1579/80 he acted as surety for a group of Elliots and others accused of conducting raids into England; his brother Archie is also named there, and he himself was accused of being part of a raid on Coquet Water. In 1580 he, the Scotts of Buccleuch, Gledstains and others, followed a group of English and Scottish thieves who had raided Meikle Whitlaw; he was wounded in a fray with Armstrongs and Elliots on their return. In 1580/1 he was directed to give up his position as Captain of Hermitage. In 1581 he was allied with Walter Scott of Goldielands and James Gledstains of Cocklaw when they made a set of complaints against Martin of Braidlie, Simon Armstrong of Mangerton and Lance Armstrong of Whithaugh; all were charged to appear before the Privy Council with pledges of assurance from their supporters. Along with Martin of Braidlie and 2 Armstrongs, he was also denounced in 1582/3 by the Privy Council for failing to make redress for the crimes committed by their tenants and servants. He signed a bond of support for the Warden of the Middle Marches, Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferrniehirst, probably in the early 1580s. He is ‘Robin Elliot, of the Redheugh’ when he complained of an English raid on his lands at the Steele in the 1580s. In a letter of 1583 from Musgrave to Burleigh he is ‘Robin Elliot of the Reddhuige, cheife of the Elliotes’, along with his brothers William of Hartsgarth, Gilbert, Archibald and Gavin, and many other Elliots, including Hob of the Heuchhouse and his brother John, Adam and Gilbert of the Shaws, Archibald ‘Fyre the Braes’ and ‘Richie’s Martin’, as well as Garth Simson, all of whom were said to be his ‘brethren, or his men that are daly at his commandement’. Also in 1583 he was denounced as a rebel for failing to appear to answer the charge brought against him by Robert in Dodrig, that his men had repeatedly attacked the servants there, although he had no legal right to the lands. He was recorded in 1584 as ‘Robeine Elliot’ in a letter from the King and was temporarily imprisoned in Edinburgh Castle, along with Martin of Braidlie and Armstrong of Whithaugh. He was chief of the Elliots (named first, along with Martin of Braidlie and William of Falnash) in their assurance to the English Wardens to keep the peace in 1584, signed at Hermitage Castle. In 1583/4 and 1584/5 he was among the Borderers who were summoned to appear before the Privy Council. In 1586 he and Martin of Braidlie were explicitly listed as leaders in Liddesdale in instructions from King James to Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus. In 1586 he was instructed to enter into court his brother William in Hartsgarth, as well as his tenants and servants Adie in the Shaw, Archie in the Hill, Sim of the Park, James of the Park, Robert of the Park, David of Braiddlee, James ‘the Gyde’, James of the Steele, John of Heuchhouse and George Simpson of the Raw; he was also ordered to present himself as surety for ‘Jokis Willie’ Elliot. In 1587/8 Gavin Elliott of Stobs promised to present him to the Privy Council. In 1588 he was on a list of Borders ‘masters and landlords’ ordered to appear before the Privy Council. In 1589 he was listed among leaders in Liddesdale who signed a bond for keeping peace with England. Also in 1589 he was on a list of Border Lairds who failed to appear before the Privy Council to give ‘thair gude advise anent the gude reule and quietnes of the Bordouris’ and were denounced as rebels. There was a ‘letter of horning’ against him for failing to appear in 1589. In 1590 he was named first on a list of Elliots accused of raiding the English farm of ‘Whynatlie’ in the previous year, stealing 60 cows, 2 horses, taking goods worth £100 and burning 5 houses. Also in 1590 he was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. In August of 1590 he appeared before the King and Council to answer for some of his men, and this may be the last time he is recorded (he certainly died before June of the following year). He was probably the Laird of Redheugh listed by Monipennie (published around 1594, but compiled earlier) among Border chiefs, along with Robert (probably his son) and Martin (probably of Braiddlie). He married Marion (or Marjorie), daughter of James Hamilton of Sprouston in 1572; through this marriage and its Bothwell connection, he became allied with the side of Mary, Queen of Scots. They had 5 children: Robert of Redheugh; William of the Rig and of Hartsgarth, who married Jean Rutherford; a daughter, who married Hector Lorraine of Harwood; Nicola, who married Gerard, brother of Sir Thomas Carlyon; and Gilbert, illegitimate (possibly by Helen Kidd). His sons were all minors at the time of his death. He may also be the ‘Robin Elliot’ who, along with his brother William, George Simpson and their accomplices were accused of raiding into England in 1582. In 1591 Gavin Elliott of Stobbs promised that he would not harm his widow Marjorie Hamilton. Robert ‘Clement’s Hob’ (d.1578) one of the Liddesdale thieves captured in Hawick in October 1567 by the Earl of Moray, in a surprise attack during the Market. He was one of the 10 who were afterwards held in Edinburgh tolbooth, unlike the 18 who were immediately drowned. His father was presumably Clement; although it is also possible that he was the same as the Robert who was nephew of Clement Crozier (and certainly Clement was a prominent name among Croziers and otherwise unknown among Elliots). In 1569 he and Archie Keen escaped from the Castle of Doune and then went on ‘a marauding expedition’; he is there listed as being ‘in Gorumbery’. Also in 1569 he is listed along with ‘Dand of Braidle’ when ‘Archie Kene’ was held in Blackness Castle as pledge for them. In 1570 he was one of several Elliots who signed a bond related to the release from ward of John of Heuchhouse and Hob, son of Elder Will. In 1574 he is ‘Hob Elliott callit Clemmettis Hob’ when listed among a list of mostly Croziers who had been ordered to be removed from the lands of Douglas of Cavers; he is listed after Mirk Hob in Penchrise. In 1578/9 there was a reminder at the Privy Council that he had been one of the joint sureties for John of Heuchhouse and Hobbie, son of Elder Will; he is listed as ‘umquhile Hob Elliot, callit Clemmettis Hob’. His son Dand is recorded in 1581. Robert ‘Mirk Hob’ (16th C.) one of the 10 Liddesdale rievers held in Edinburgh tolbooth after being captured in Hawick in 1567. Surely the same man was ‘Hob Mirk Elliot’ in 1569 when John of the Park was held in Balwearie Castle, as pledge for him and ‘Gray Will Elliot’. He is probably the same as ‘Mirk Hob in Peneryse’ recorded in 1574 among a list of Croziers who Douglas of Cavers was supposed to have removed from his lands. His is also ‘Hob Elliot, callit Mirk Hob, in Pencyrse’ recorded in 1576 when several Border Lairds acted as joint sureties for him; they were Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule, Robert Elliot of Redheugh, Gavin Elliot of Fahnash and Walter Scott of Goldielands. He was thus associated with the farm of Penchrise. By 1578/9 he was among many Borderers state to have ‘brokin and contravenit the condition abonespecifiit, having committit diverse crymes of thift and resset of thift’; he was thus declared a fugitive. Robert (16th C.) son to ‘Elder Will’, another of the Liddesdale thieves captured in Hawick in 1567. In 1570 there was a charge brought against several Elliots involving him and John of Heuchhouse, complaining that they had been released from Blackness Castle, but their clan had failed to ‘enter the said pledges’ on eight days’ warning; among those who signed the bond was ‘the said Elder Will’, as well as Martin of Braiddlie. There was a reminder of this pledge in 1578/9, where it was ststed that he and John of Heuchhouse had not been imprisoned in the houses of John Cockburn of Ormiston and William Lauder of Haltoun, as pledged.
He was probably brother of John, who was convicted of theft in 1580/1. Robert ‘Vicar’s Hob’ (16th C.) one of the outlaws of Liddesdale apprehended in Hawick in 1567, where he is ‘Rob’. In 1574 he was listed among men who had been ordered removed from the lands of Priesthaugh and others by Robert Elliot of Redheugh; he is there ‘Robert Elliott callit the Vicaris Hob’. In 1576 there was a pledge to the Privy Council that he would refrain from thieving; he was recorded there as ‘Hob Elliot, callit the Vicaris Hob’, with cautiencers being jointly Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule, Robert Elliot of Redheugh, Gavin Elliot of Falnash and Walter Scott of Goldielands.

He is probably the same ‘Hob Elliot, called the Vicar’s Hob’ for whom John Turnbull of Minto and Edward Lorraine of Harwood were cautiencers in 1588/9, to promise that when he was released from Edinburgh Tolbooth he would re-enter when required, ‘under the pain of the payment of the bill filed on Archie Elliot of Dogcleuch’. Robert ‘Hob o Thorslieshope’ (16th C.) one of the Liddesdale thieves captured at Hawick market by the Earl of Moray in 1567; he is recorded as being ‘in Thorlinsope’. In 1569 he was entered before the Regent by Sir Andrew Ker of Hirsel, Gilbert Ker of Primside Loch and Andrew Ker of Falcondonside. Probably the same Robert of Thorslieshope was appointed as one of the sergeants for the Justiciary Court held by the Keeper of Liddesdale in 1537/8. He is ‘Roberto Elwald officiario’ who was tenant of Thorslieshope on the 1541 rental roll for Liddesdale; ‘officiario’ suggests he had an official role in the area. He is ‘Robyn Elwald of Thorslieshop’ listed in 1541 by the English among Scotsmen who reset English rebels; ‘Wilcoxes Elwald’ is listed along with him, and so possibly a relative, and he is also listed along with Clem Crozier, who may have been a neighbour. He was also mentioned in 1541 when Airchie, ‘brother and son to Robert Ellwald of Thorllyshope’ was listed among Scotsmen responsible for the burning of the corn of William Carnaby at Halton; this suggests that Airchie was his brother and perhaps that their father was also Robert. He is also probably the ‘Robin of Thorllyshop’ whose son John was entered in a bond by James Douglas of Cavers in 1546 and in other bonds with Robert of Redheugh in 1547. In 1546 he had to sign with the help of the notary (meaning that he could not write). He was probably related to (or possibly the same as) the ‘Rob of Thorllyshop’ recorded in about 1594. Robert ‘Will Cock’s Hob’ (16th C.) listed in 1569 as ‘Robert Elliot callit Wilcokis Hob’. He and ‘Gawins Jok in Ramsygill’ were the pledges for whom ‘Ade Elliot callit the Cowdais’ was held in Blackness Castle. It is possible he was the same man as Hob of Thorlieshope. His father was probably ‘Will Cock’. Robert ‘Airchie’s Hob’ (16th C.) third son of Archibald of Falnash, he seems to have been a regular supported of Martin of Braudlie on raids. He was mentioned in 1569 among a number of pledges to exchange for Martin of Braudlie when Martin was warded with the Regent Moray. He is probably the ‘Arches Hobbes’ whose 2 sons were among several Elliotics and Nixons complained about by the English Warden for the murder of 2 Englishmen during a raid in 1588. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th C.) recorded among Nixons and Elliots complained about by the English Warden regarding a raid in 1588. His name is recorded as ‘Hobbe Elliot of the Sheale’, but it is unclear where his lands were. He could be the same as Hob of the Staneshiel recorded in 1590 and 1595. Robert ‘Willie’s Hob’ (16th C.) presumably son of William. In 1584 he signed the bond of assurance with the English Wardens, his name appearing along with several Elliots of Ramsiegill, but separately from ‘Hobb Elliot of Ramsegill’ (the leader of this branch). He was recorded in 1587 in a bond by several Elliots, including his brother John, when he was imprisoned, probably for rieving; he had to be entered ‘as haill man and feir’ at Melrose. He was released in 1598, with Adam Tweedie obliged to make good for this theft. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Roberts. Robert ‘Hob’ of Bowholm (d.1595/6) listed as ‘Hob of Bowholmes’ in a list of Borderers made in about the 1580s. He was listed along with ‘Will Colithis Hob’ under the area of ‘Welshaw’. In 1584/5 he was listed as ‘Hobb Bowholms dwellinge in Tevidal’ along with other Elliots of Heuchhouse; he was singled out as the only member of the Heuchhouse branch that the leaders would not vouch for. He was recorded as ‘Hob Elliot of Bohomes’ in 1587/8 when accused by Sir John Forster of being on a raid on England in 1585, along with many other Elliots, including John of Bowholm. In 1590 he was part of a group of Elliots who were accused of a raid by Thomas Hall of ‘Gersomefeld’, and also accused of another raid along with Archie (who was probably related). In the same year he is ‘Hob of Behomes’ who was accused of further rieving along with Martin’s Airchie and William ‘Rydlie’. Also in 1590 he was accused along with his brother Dand, as well as ‘Willie’s Airchie’ of Stitchillhill of stealing from Englishman Richard.
Elliot

Thurlwall; he was recorded as ‘Robine Elliott Bohomes’. He is ‘Hobb Bohomes’ when accused in 1590 along with Will of Fiddleton and others of stealing livestock and goods from the Laird of ‘Troghwen’ and Hedley of ‘the Garret sheills’. Also in 1590 he was listed along with other Elliots, Croziers and Armstrongs, accused of taking cows and horses from the tenants of Woodhall and Netherhouses in England. He was ‘Hobe Elliott of the Bowholmes’ listed among Scotsmen accused of raids into England in 1595. In 1595/6 he was ‘Hob of Bowholme Scotsman’, servant of William (possibly the William in Hoscote who was delivered as a prisoner to England about this time), when sentenced to death for several crimes in England and ‘taken with the bloody hand’ by the Captain of Harbottle. He was executed at Hexham. Robert ‘Ill Rob’ or ‘I’ll Hob’ of Ransiegill (16th C.) recorded as ‘Yll Hob of Ramsygill’ in 1578. He was listed among Border Lairds who had been released from ward (in his case with the Provost and Bailies of Edinburgh) and directed to meet again to promise to suppress lawlessness on the Border. He is ‘Yll Hob’ in 1580, when he was held in ward in Edinburgh Castle, with Alexander Erskine as his pledge. He was convicted for theft in 1580/1 along with other Elliots, Armstrongs and Nixons. He was recorded there as ‘Hob Elliott, callit Ill Rob of Ramsygill’. In 1580 he was produced at the Privy Council to prove that he was in ward with Erskine of Gogar. In 1581 Martin of Braidlie, Gavin’s Jock and Robert Kerr of Ancrum were cautioned for his non-appearance, when he was stated at that time to be imprisoned in Edinburgh Castle; his brother ‘Gavin’s Jock’ of Ramsiegill was one of his cautioners. The same group were fined in 1582/3 for his non-appearance, as well as that of Jock’s Will, his brother; he is recorded there as ‘I’ll Hob of Ramsygill’. In 1584 he signed the bond of assurance with the English Wardens, his name appearing first to speak for his branch, with Archie of the Hill, Rowie of Ramsigill and Will’s Hob also listed. In 1587/8 he is recorded as ‘Hob Elliott of the Ramsigill’ when accused by Sir John Forster of being on a raid on England in 1585, along with many other Elliots. He was also one of the Elliots who entered a bond in 1587 for ‘Willie’s Hob’. Several other Elliots are also mentioned there, in particular ‘Gavin Elliott of Ramsigill’, who must have been a son or brother. He was also ‘Hob Elliott of Ransigill’ who complained in the 1580s of an English raid upon his lands, stealing livestock and taking prisoners. Probably the same man is ‘yll’ Hobb Elwood’ recorded in 1591 as part of a group of Elliott and others accused of plundering from Jeffrey Taylor and the tenants of Scaleby. He was presumably a son of Jock and probably related to the Robert recorded as ‘in Rammisgill’ in 1541. However, he was probably the ‘Hob Elliott, brother of Gawin’s Hob’ (probably a transcription error for Jock) of the Ramsygill who remained in prison in 1581 for the ‘hail gang of the Burneheddis’ after Jock’s Willie was released; this would make him son of Gavin of Ramsiegill. Robert ‘Jamie’s Hob’ (16th C.) listed in 1581 and 1582/3 among the cautioners for Sim’s Rowie of the Park. His name was recorded as ‘Hobbe Elliott, called James Hobbe’, and he was listed along with Rob’s John, Sim’s Archie and others. His father was thus presumably James. He was also listed in 1581 along with other Elliots in a bond of caution entered with John Carmichael (who had been Keeper of Liddesdale), relating to the Elliots of Ramsiegill. He was also part of a second bond in 1581, for the ‘hail gang of Park’. Robert (16th C.) listed among men accused of raiding Harwood on Teviot in 1581/2. His name is given as ‘Rowy Elliott, callit Rowans Hobbe’, which is confusing, although it is later ‘Hobbe Elliott, callit Rowans Hobbe’. His brother Jamie, as well as ‘Rowanes Willis Ritchie’ are listed after him; they were declared rebels after not appearing to answer the charge. Robert ‘Hobbie’ of Burnhead (16th C.) Laird of Burnhead in Liddesdale (and not the one just outside Hawick). In 1584 he was accused of being part of a foray into England. He is perhaps the earliest known resident of Burnhead, and may have had the tower built for him there. In 1587/8 he is recorded as ‘Hob Elliott of the Burneheddis called ‘Fydlers Hob’’ when accused by Sir John Forster of being on a raid on England in 1585, along with many other Elliots; the reference to ‘Fylder’ may refer to the nickname of his father. He was ‘Robin Elliott the laird of Bornewheads’ in 1589, among a group of Elliots and others complained about for raiding into England. He may have been ‘Hob Elliott called Hob the larde’ listed among a large group of Elliots who were accused in 1590 of taking Ralph Hall and others prisoner and ransoming them. Additionally in 1590 he was among a group of Elliots, Armstrongs and Croziers, said to be 200 strong, who were accused of raiding the towns of ‘Allenton’ and ‘Linbriggs’, taking 100 cows, 20 horses and 20 prisoners. He was also listed among Elliots, Armstrongs, Turnbulls, Laidlaws and Croziers, accused in 1590 of rieving from the Laird of ‘Troghwen’ and Hedley of ‘Garret Sheills’; there is ‘Hobb Eliott of the Burneheades’. Also in 1590 he was listed along with other Eliotts, Croziers and Armstrongs, accused of taking cows and horses from the tenants of Woodhall and Netherhouses in England. He was also ‘Hob Elliott called the laird of Burneheads’ when complained about for another 2 raids into England in 1595, this time along with Eliotts of Falnash, as well as ‘Auld Wat’ Scott of Harden, Armstrongs and Hendersons. Additionally in 1596 he was ‘Hobb Elwood laarde of Burnehead’, when it was said that along with Scott of Buccleuch he met secretly with Englishmen, presumably to discuss helping each other with raids. It is unclear how he is related to other local Eliotts, such as ‘Bramche of the Burnhead’, also recorded in the 1580s and ‘Gawins Jok’ recorded in the 1590s. It is possible he is the same man as ‘Curst Hobbie’. Robert ‘Curst Hobbie’ (16th C.) recorded in 1583 (in a letter from the English warden) among the Eliotts of Burnhead. It is possible he is the same man as Hobbie of Burnhead, recorded a year later. He is probably related to other Eliotts of Burnhead, as well as Eliotts of Ramsiegill and of the Hill. Robert ‘Rob o Thoirlishop’ (16th C.) mentioned in Monipennie’s list of Border chiefs, published around 1594 (put probably compiled earlier). ‘Arthur fyre the Brays’ is listed beside him. He must have been related to the earlier ‘Hob’ of the same place, Thorlieszope. He could be the son of Robert of Unthank who is listed in a pedigree of the Eliotts of Thorlieszope (in the Berwickshire Naturalists’ Club transactions of 1889); he was known as ‘Bonny Hob’, warded in Lochdun in 1569 and died unmarried (although that could be the earlier Hob of Thorlieszope). In 1584 he, ‘Fire the Brases’ and one other ‘assure for the hole branch comenge of the howse of Thorlospe’. In 1587/8 he was ‘Hobbe Eliott of Thorwisop in the Flict’ when warded with the Laird of Balwearie (James Scott); however, he ‘eshapit and eschewit’ and his pledge was charged to appear before the Privy Council. He was presumably a tenant in the lands of Flicht at that time. He was recorded as ‘Hob of Thoresopp’ in 1590 among Eliotts of the Steele, the Park, Binks, and others, when accused of raiding into England. Additionally, along with Martin’s Gib and ‘Adie’s John’ Crozier, he was accused of stealing from William Henderson of ‘Fallofoekld’ in 1590. In another case in 1590 he was ‘Robin Elliot of Thoresoppe’ when listed among Eliotts, Nixons, Shiels and others accused of stealing from the tenants of Woodhall in England. He was listed in 1595 as ‘the officer alias the laird of Thoresop’ among Eliotts complained about by the Lord of Gilsland for a raid into England; the ‘officer’ designation suggests that he inherited the position of sergeant of Liddesdale from the earlier Robert of Thorlieszope. In a complaint about another raid in 1595 ‘young Robyn Elliot of Thoresop’ was probably his son. There was a complaint against him (along with a Nixon and 2 Armstrongs) by the English in 1597; but Scott of Buccleuch stated that he was already in Hexham Jail. Robert (16th C.) tenant in Dodrig, son of Archibald. In 1583 it was stated that he and his father were ‘kindlie tennentis’ of ‘thrie quarters of the landis of Dodrig, pertening to the chaiplanrie of the paroche kirk of Caveris’ for 36 years previously, and had built a house there. This may have been the pele-house whose remains are on the east side of Gray Coat. He complained to the Privy Council that his servants there were attacked by Robert of Redheugh’s men on several occasions, trying to dispossess him of the lands. Robert of Redheugh was denounced as a rebel for not appearing to answer the charge. Robert (d.1592) 6th Laird of Horsleyhill, eldest son of William, the 5th Laird. He is recorded in 1564 when he was granted all of his father’s property. In 1581 he is listed along with many Armstrongs and Eliotts who complained to the Privy Council about the actions of the Scotts. In 1582 he took legal action against Dame Isobel Ker, Widow of Sir Walter Ker of Cessford, for the delivery of his father’s charters, specifically for Horsleyhill, ‘Dowiswod’, Westerhouses (called Little Hassendean), Newgibbing (called the Middle Mains of Hassendean), Caveling, Monkscroft and Hassendean. However, the order to deliver these seems never to have been followed, since he died without formally being served heir to these lands. He also had a dispute with Robert Scott of Hassendean over a merk land in ‘Dowiswod’; his widow Agnes Scott was served with the letter of removal in late 1592. It is unclear to which branch of the Scotts she belonged, but there may have been a connection with Haining (given that their son William was later a retainer of Robert Scott of Haining). He was listed among ‘Landit Men’ of Scotland in about 1590. In 1587 Ker of Grange acted as cautioner for him to appear before the Privy Council. He married Agnes Scott, and their children included: Robert, who pre-deceased him; William, who succeeded and sold Horsleyhill to Gilbert Elliott of Stobs; another Robert, who married an illegitimate daughter of Scott of Harden, and from whom the Elliots of Borthwickbrae are descended; and one more son, from whom the Elliots of Selkirk and Newhall probably derive (probably father of James, Burgess of Selkirk in 1635). The existence of these last 2 sons is suggested by Scott of Satchells, but no direct evidence has been uncovered. Robert 'the Tailor' (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1590 among a large number of Elliots and others who were accused by Ralph Hall of 'Gersomfeeld' and others for taking Ralph and other prisoners, then ransoming them. His name was recorded as 'Robine Elliot called the Taillour'. Also in 1590 he was 'Hobbie the taylor' when accused along with James of the Hill, Anthony of the Binks, James 'Half Lug' and 60 others, of raiding 'Windgates', taking more than 100 cows and 4 horses, slaying George Hume, leaving 6 or 7 men near death and robbing 5 houses. There was an Armstrong of the same name at that time, and it is possible there was confusion and they are the same man (although whether an Armstrong or an Elliot would then be unclear). Robert 'Hob of the Leyes' (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1591 in a group of Elliots of the Hill and others accused of plundering from Jeffrey Taylor and the tenants of Scaleby. He is recorded in 1595 among Elliots complained about by the Lord of Gilsland for 2 raids into England. He was also 'alias the troche', although it is unclear what this nickname may have referred to (perhaps a trough). He may have been related to some of the others named in 1595 e.g. Robert of Thorlieshope, Rich 'of the Lewlandes' or William, son of John of Heuchhouse. Robert 'Hob' of Staneshiel (16th/17th C.) part of a group of Elliots who were accused of a raid by Thomas Hall of ‘Gersomfeeld’ and the tenants of ‘Dortres’ in 1590. Hob Elliot of Staneshiel, John of Heuchhouse and Davie ‘the Carlin’ were also named in the same accusation. He was further accused in 1590 by William Hall of ‘Gersomfeeld’ of rieving at ‘Steward sheile’, along with Quentin’s Airchie Crozier and others. He was also recorded in 1595 among men complained about by the Lord of Gilsland for raids into England. His name is recorded as 'Hob Elliott of the Stanesheale alias bane prycz'. He probably lived at Staneshiel in Liddesdale, and the meaning of his nickname is unclear (but probably not complimentary). Robert ‘Hob’ (16th/17th C.) listed in 1595 among Scotsmen accused of raiding into England. His name was recorded as ‘Hob Elliott alias kyll of the spade’, although it is unclear what his nickname meant. He was listed along with John of Burnhead, who may have been related. Robert (16th/17th C.) younger son of Robert, 6th Laird of Horsleyhill and Agnes Scott. According to Scott of Satchells (who confusingly refers to him as William) he became a servant to Scott of Harden (presumably ‘Auld Wat’) and married Scott’s illegitimate daughter (whose name is not recorded). He was recorded as a servant to Scott of Harden in a bond dated 1620. He is the progenitor of the Elliots of Borthwickbrae, Oakwood Mill and Wolfelee. His only known child was Robert, who was ‘in Borthwickshiels’. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th/17th C.) son of Jock of Burngrains. He was listed (along with this brother Will) among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605. Robert (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘in Langraw’ in 1610 when he was part of an inquest for lands in Rulewater. Robert (16th/17th C.) recorded as being ‘in Gledstaines’ in 1610 when he denounced his possession of this part of Feu-Rule when he was not accepted as a ‘kindly tenant’ by his superior, Sir Andrew Ker of Oxnam. This could have been the land later called ‘Little Gledstains’. Robert of Dinlabyre (b.c.1580) son of William of Braidie and Dinlabyre. In 1599 he witnessed the bonds (signed at Branxholme) between Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch and the Armstrongs and Elliots of Liddesdale. In 1600 he was said to be about 20 years old when there was a plan to substitute him for his father as a hostage in England. In 1611 he was denounced as a rebel, along with his brother Gavin and several other Elliots and Armstrongs, for hunting illegally, as well as destroying woods etc.; his name is transcribed there as being ‘of Drumlybyre’. He is recorded as ‘Robene Ellote of Dunlabyre’ in 1612 when he failed to appear to serve on the jury for the case of Jock Elliot dying while in custody in Hawick. In 1613 the King granted him all the lands forfeited by his father in 1607. In 1623 he served as cautioner for Robbie Armstrong in ‘Greinay’ and his brother John. Probably the same ‘Robert Elliot of Dinlabyre’ is recorded in 1632 in a rental roll of Kelso Abbey when he possessed the lands of ‘Hoillis’ in Liddesdale, as well as Dinlabyre. His sons probably included William of Dinlabyre (d.bef. 1693) and John in Unthank. Robert of Copshaw (16th/17th C.) listed in 1612 among Elliots and Armstrongs denounced as rebels for hunting illegally, as well as destroying woods etc. His brother Francis was also listed. He was also recorded among those fined in 1612 for failing to appear to sit on the jury when the Hawick authorities were accused of the murder of a man.
who died in the steeple of St. Mary’s. His brother Francis was also listed. Robert (d.bef. 1637) eldest son of William of Rig and Jean Rutherford, heiress of Stobs. He was served heir to his mother in 1621 and was in turn succeeded by his brother Francis. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th/17th C.) recorded being called ‘Ladd, in Quhythauch’ in 1623 when he appeared before the Commissioners’ Court in Jedburgh. Robert (16th/17th C.) son of Robert and a daughter of Scott of Harden, he was grandson of Robert, the 6th Laird of Horsleyhill and brother of William, the last Elliot Laird there. He is referred to as being ‘in Borthwickshiel’s’, and so must have been tenant of that farm. He married Euphemia Haitlie from Mellerstain and had 2 children: Thomas (d.1686), who succeeded him; and William (1617–85), who became minister in Yarrow. He is recorded in a list of ‘communicants’ of the Borthwick valley in 1650, with his wife being ‘Euphemia Hastie’ and their son Thomas also listed. Robert ‘Hab’ (17th C.) possessor of the lands of ‘Baggat’ (i.e. Bygate) in Liddesdale in 1632. He could be the same as one of the contemporary Roberts. Robert of Falnash (d.1645), J.P., son of William, he was a Justice of the Peace in Roxburghshire. He was recorded along with his father (and more than 170 others) in a ‘respite’ of 1594 to Sir James Johnstone and his followers for the killing of Lord Maxwell at Dryfe Sands. In 1595 he was listed among Elliots and others accused by the Lord of Gildland for raids into England; he was explicitly listed with ‘Auld Wat’ Scott of Harden, as well as his brother Archibald and uncle Gilbert. In 1598 he was recorded as son of William of Falnash when he was witness to a document for the Regality of Melrose. He is probably the Robert ‘younger of Fallinesche’ who was cautioner for Gavin Elliot of Fiddletown in 1606. In 1610 he was cautioner for James Irving of Cleuchhead and in 1611 for Gavin ‘of Coklek’. In 1618 his father is referred to as ‘William called of Falnash in Braidle’, suggesting Falnash had already been passed to him. In 1620 he was cautioner in 2 cases for Johnstones and Armstrongs in Dumfriesshire. He rebuilt the house at Falnash around 1620, probably replacing the tower with a farmhouse; a stone built into the present house carries the date 1620 and the initials ‘R.E.’ and ‘M.S.’. The family also owned land in Wilton Parish. He is probably the ‘gudeman of Fallineshe’ from whose lands at Ramsaycleuch 6 head of cattle were stolen in 1621. In 1623 he sold Arkleton to Adam Cunningham, the reason not being known, but Scott of Satchells wrote ‘By Maxwell’s rage out of their hands it got, And was possess’d by Cunninghame and Scot’. In 1624 he purchased Hislop and Langhaugh in the Barony of Hawick. In 1627 he was one of 9 men charged with performing a valuation of the lands in the Parish of Hawick. He was listed in 1628 among the major landowners who met to elect M.P.s. for Roxburghshire. Also in 1628 he had a crown charter for the lands of Philhope and the wardship of Grizell Elliot, heiress of Philhope (to whom he would marry his son John). He was appointed a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire in 1634. He married Marion Scott (from an unknown branch of the Scotts, but perhaps the Scotts of Harden). They had 7 children: William, who married a Maxwell of Cowhill, but died before his father; Archibald, who succeeded; John, who married Grizel Elliot of Philhope and held the lands of Broadlee; Gavin of Caerlenrig, who married Janet Elliot and was father of Ninian; Gilbert, who became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1637; Robert, who also became a merchant’s apprentice in 1646; and Jean, who married Adam Carleill of Byrdkirk. Robert (d.1663) 4th son of William of the Binks and brother of Simon. He was called ‘of the Binks’. In 1630 he was charged as ‘ane commoun and notorious theefe’ and fled to Flanders. It is described in the Register of the Privy Seal that ‘he is returned again and hes begun his old accustomed trade of theft’, stealing 6 cattle from Englishman Sir Arthur Gray. He was convicted of theft and tried in Jedburgh, but the Provost there released him on a bond whereupon he fled. In 1631 he turned up in Carlisle jail, from where the Sheriff of Roxburghshire requested his transfer. He had a son called Simon, who was a minor when he died. Robert ‘Hob’ (17th C.) recorded as being ‘called of Thorlinshope’ (presumably Thorlinshope) in a 1642 list of many Borderers who were to be captured and tried for theft and other crimes. In about 1648 he was recorded as Robert ‘of Thorlinshope’ on a list of ‘mosstroopers’ (i.e. thieves). He may be the ‘young Robyn Elliott of Thorlesop’ recorded in 1595. Robert (17th C.) younger son of Robert of Falnash. In 1646 he was apprenticed to Edinburgh merchant Archibald Graham. Robert (17th C.) listed as a fugitive in 1637. He was also recorded as ‘sone to Hobeis Chrystie’ listed among fugitives of the Border in 1642. It may be that he was listed twice, since Robert ‘called Chrysteis Hob’ also appears. He was probably son of the Christopher who was son of Robert of Braidlie; he was thus a great-grandson of Martin of Braidlie. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Isobel Henderson and their children included: John (b.1646); William (b.1650); Bessie (b.1652); and Janet (b.1655). Robert of Black Tarras (d.bef. 1665) 2nd son of Simon of the Binks and younger brother of the William, Laird of Harwood. He was still alive in 1663, when referred to as 'of Ludogill indweller in Sauchtrees, Liddesdale'. By 1665 his wife was a widow. Robert 'Robin' of Reidheugh and Larriston (c.1583–c.1644) 17th Chief of the Elliots, son of Robert. He was the last of the Elliots of Redheugh in the direct male line. He was still a minor when his father died, with his guardian being his uncle William of Hartsgarth and when he was 14 the additional trustees appointed were William of Fahnash, John of Copshaw and his mother’s brothers, John and Andrew Hamilton of St. John’s Chapel. At the time when Francis, Earl of Bothwell forfeited his lands, he was in possession of Redheugh, Over and Nether Larriston, Hartsgarth, Leafauld, Corrie’s Shiel, Langhaugh, Leahaugh and Demainholm. He is probably the Robert who was the first Elliot name signed on the bond written by Sir John Forster to try to end family feuds on the Border in 1595/6. In 1597 he (along with William of Hartsgarth and John of Copshaw) wrote from Larriston to the English Warden, explaining that they had sworn to the Scott of Buccleuch that they would not have dealings with any Englishmen, and furthermore they offered security for the actions of their followers. In 1599 he, along with Martin Elliot (son of ‘Mertin’s Sym’), made an agreement to settle their differences with Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. They also promised to the Warden (Sir Walter Scott) to be responsible for the inhabitants of Liddesdale. Additionally in 1599 he was one of the leading Elliots and Armstrongs to write to Lord Scrope to get their family hostages freed from England. There was also a pledge made in his name (and others) in 1599 following the murder of several Englishmen (who had been waiting in hiding to ambush the Scots) near Bewcastle. He was probably the Laird of Redheugh who in 1599 was listed among Scotts and others who were charged to find sureties for ‘observing the King’s peace’. In about 1600 he was ordered to pay £1,200 for supporting the Commonwealth. There was also a pledge made in 1599 to Lord Scrope to get their family hostages freed. In 1602 he was served heir to his father in 1619, presumably to a further order of removal. However, Robert was among leaders from the Borders who were ordered to attend a meeting at Falkland to discuss ‘the present disordouris of the Bourdours’. In 1602 he signed a bond among Border Lairds for keeping the peace. Also in 1602 he was declared answerable for Will of Fiddleton. He escaped the convictions and executions that came down on the men of Liddesdale around 1606; it is said that this may have been due to the influence of his brother-in-law John Murray of Lochmaben. In 1607 he brought an action against George Henderson, tenant of Winnington, accusing him of cutting down trees on his land at Birkwood. In 1608 he (and 14 other lairds) were removed from their lands by the Privy Council for being ‘ringleaders suspected either of their bygone conversation or for their present disordered courses’; he was sent along with Walter Scott of Goldielands to Cupar in Fife. In 1608 he was charged by Scott of Buccleuch to remove himself from all lands in Liddesdale, but this was not followed through with; however, there was a decree of removal in 1612, after the death of the old Laird of Buccleuch. He was then denounced as a rebel, but through the influence of his brother-in-law John Murray he obtained a new agreement with Buccleuch over these lands in 1613; this included Over and Nether Larriston, Reidheugh, Blackhope, ‘Greenholles’, Hartsgarth, Langhaugh, Leahaugh, ‘Carriescheil’ and ‘Downmane’. In 1615 Buccleuch accused him of adding the names of 3 properties to the charter, and he went to London to plead with Scott of Buccleuch. A court case was started in 1617, and he was unable to produce the charter, which led to a further order of removal. However, Robert was served heir to his father in 1619, presumably part of the ongoing legal proceedings. His main dwelling around that time was at Demainholm. There were also attempts to remove his tenants; William Scott of Newark complained in 1618 that his tenants at Foulshields were harried by a large group of Elliots, including him. He and William of Hartsgarth complained afterwards that they should not have been declared as rebels and finding caution the horning was suspended. Over the next few years he failed to collect any rent on his lands, incurred debts and many of the old Elliot lands in Teviotdale were lost. In 1622 he and his brother William sold the lands of Winnington Rig to Gilbert Elliot of Stobs. In 1622 and 1623 he served as cautioner for Rowie Crozier from Hartsgarth. He was probably the ‘Robert Elliot of Reidheuch, in Larestoun’ who was removed as a tenant of Scott of Buccleuch in 1624.
His brother-in-law John Murray (Earl of Annan-dale) apologised to Scott of Buccleuch in 1624 for a dispute over lands with Buccleuch and for stealing from Englishmen. Also in 1624 he was accused of conspiring to murder the Earl of Buccleuch, the 3 would-be assassins (all Elliots) apparently confessing their part. He was at that time prisoner in Edinburgh Tolbooth related to debts. He was also accused of being involved in stealing cattle from Cuthbert Heron, an Englishman; he seems to have escaped punishment, although his servant Adam Usher was hung for that crime. Despite being induced to confess to the crimes, pleas by Francis Hamilton and the Earl of Annandale resulted in Scott of Buccleuch asking for the trial to be postponed. Within a short period of the King’s death in 1625 he received a pardon for the theft and other crimes, although it is unclear when he was released from confinement. His wife petitioned the Privy Council because of poverty during his imprisonment. It seems that when his daughter and heiress was married in 1637 he still held his Liddesdale lands, including the 3 farms that had been in dispute, namely ‘Blaikhope’, ‘Greenhol-lis’ and Langhaugh. He married first a sister of John Murray (later Earl of Annandale) and secondly (after 1618) Lady Jean Stewart, daughter of Francis, Earl of Bothwell and Lady Margaret Douglas, widow of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch.
He had no children with his first wife, and with his second had no sons, but 2 daughters: Margaret, (or Mary) his heir, who in 1637 married James Elliott (6th son of Gilbert of Stobs); and Esther (d.1664), who married Alexander Clerk, Minister of Letherton, and died in Inverness. He gave all his lands to his daughter Margaret and her husband James, except Leaughau, Greenholm and Gullyflat, which were given to Esther and her husband, and he retained Larriston, Blakhope and Greenholm ‘in liferent’ for himself. The year of his death is quite uncertain, but he probably died in the period 1666–73, with his estate heavily encumbered by debt. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Janet ‘Red’ (i.e. Reid). Their daughter Helen was baptised in 1651, with witnesses John Elliot (probably related to him) and Thomas Jackson. Robert of Braidlie (17th C.) nephew of Simon in Philhope. In 1653 he was served heir to Braidlie. Robert (17th C.) recorded in several accounts in Selkirk in the 1660s, e.g. one for a Common Riding dinner. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. He could be the Robert, son of Selkirk Burgess William, whose daughter Elizabeth is part of a deed in 1673. Robert (b.c.1645) younger son of Archibald of Fulfush, he was christened in Hawick.
Robert (17th C.) referred to as ‘Robert Elliot, called of the Maynes’ in 1659 when he witnessed a document relating to lands of Hobkirk Parish for William Elliot of Harwood. Robert of Larris-ton (d.bef. 1695) eldest son of James Elliott, and Margaret, heiress of Redheugh. He was thus a grandson of the last Elliot of Redheugh as well as being grandson of ‘Gibbie wi the Gowden Garters’ of Stobs. He took the ‘Elliot’ spelling after inheriting the Liddesdale lands through his mother.
He was probably the Robert of Larriston whose lands in Castleton Parish were valued at £1334 in 1643. He may have been the ‘younger of Laristoune’ who was an executor for William Elliot of Binks in the 1660s and when appointed Justice of the Peace in 1663. He was recorded paying the land tax (on £1334) in 1663. In 1672 he was appointed one of the Justiciars for the Borders (for apprehending mostropers). He was served heir to his grandfather Robert of Redheugh in 1673, inheriting these lands through his mother. However, the Teviotdale lands had already been sold off and the Liddesdale lands were heavily encumbered by debt. Hence in 1675 he was forced to put Over and Nether Larriston, Redheugh, Blackhope and Greenholm into ‘wadsett’ with John Elliot of Thorlieshope and in 1677 sold outright the land of Demainholm to John Elliot ‘in Mainholm’. In 1678 he still paid the land tax on £1934 in Castleton Parish. In 1685 he had a ‘precept of clare constat’ from the Commissioners of the Duchess of Buccleuch as heir to all the lands of his grandfather, Robert of Redheugh. About 1688 he was forced to sell most of his lands af-fter getting into financial difficulties, his creditors obtaining a ‘decree of adjudication’. He managed to hold onto Over and Nether Larriston only.
In 1667 he married Elizabeth, eldest daughter of John Maxwell of Cowhill, Dumfriesshire, and she had one son with him, but died before 1675.
He later married Janet, 2nd daughter of Scott of Todrig (probably Thomsa). His children were:
Robert, who succeeded to Larriston; Gilbert of Nethermill, who was a merchant in Hawick; Willliam, who was apprenticed to a barber in 1699; and
Elliot

Janet, who married Robert Gledstains of that Ilk and secondly John Scott of Gorenberry. His testament is recorded in 1688, but he may have died after that. Robert (17th C.) recorded in 1678 as owner of part of Raperlaw called ‘Wyliespeel’, or Willie’s Peel. This was valued at £104, and corresponded to William Turnbull’s lands in Raperlaw in 1643. In another version of the 1678 records he is transcribed as ‘Richard’ and ‘in williespell’. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (17th C.) recorded as ‘in Blackhall’ in 1680 when he was indicted at the Justiciary Commission in Jedburgh for ‘reset of theft’. He probably lived in Ewesdale. Robert (17th C.) recorded as ‘in Stobs’ in 1684 when he was on a long list of men declared as fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. He was actually recorded on the list twice. He may be the Robert who was listed as a Covenanter at Langside in government papers from about the same time. It is unclear whether he was related to local Elliots or Eliotts. Robert (17th C.) tenant in Giddenscleuch in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. Robert (17th C.) miller at Hummelknowe Mill on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He may be related to the slightly later Robert. Robert (17th C.) tenant in Stitchellhill in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Robert of Caerlenrig (1655–98) 2nd son of Gavin. He was also known as Robert ‘of Rig’. He paid tax on 2 hearths at Caerlenrig in 1694, and ‘his herd’ is also listed. He firstly married Agnes, daughter of John Langlands, minister of Wilton (as recorded in the will of Agnes’ brother George Langlands in 1690); she was related to his brother Francis of Fenwick’s wife Rachel Langlands. He secondly married Mary Elliot, who died in 1727, aged 80. His sons were Robert (b.1690s) of Caerlenrig and John. He also had a daughter, Margaret, who married John Elliot of Castlehope and Billhope. His testament is recorded in 1699, when he was ‘of Carlenrickrig’. He is buried at Teviothead. Robert 2nd Laird of Midlem Mill (d.bef. 1725) elder son of Gavin Elliot of Midlem Mill and Grange, and probably grandson of ‘Gibbie wi the Gowden Gairters’. His father settled the lands of Midlem Mill on him in 1653. He paid the land tax on £36 in Cavers Parish in 1678; it is unclear what lands these were, but they were owned by the Duke of Buccleuch by the late 18th century and listed in Castleton Parish in 1788. Also in 1678 he also paid tax on about £400 for Midlem Mill and other lands in Bowden Parish. He was a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1685 and 1690, and it appears that he acted as factor to Elliot of Minto. He is recorded in 1693 as witness to a bond between Elliot of Harwood and Henry Douglas, writer in Edinburgh. In 1694 he was cautioner to a bond between Henry Elliot of Harwood and John Kerr of Cavers. He also witnessed a disposition between Gilbert Elliot of Stanedge and Henry Elliot of Harwood, as well as other bonds for the Elliots of Harwood about the same time. He was described as ‘sheriff in that part of the sheriffdom of Roxburgh’ in 1694. He contributed £200 to the Darien Scheme in 1695. In 1695 he acquired the lands of ‘Clarelaw, called Langsyde’ and North Prieston, which he bought from John Elliot of Langsyde. He added Whitmuir in 1702. He may have acted as factor for Gideon Scott of Highchester in the period 1695–99. In 1700 he was one of the Roxburghshire heritors who petitioned Parliament. He was witness to the marriage contract between William Elliot of Harwood and Jean Scott of Todrig in 1700. He also had a ‘tack’ for the lands of Stanedge the discharge of which is recorded in 1700. He was factor for his younger brother Sir Gilbert of Headshaw (and Minto) from 1706; it is said that when he was introduced as the brother of Sir Gilbert, he would say ‘na, na, Gibbie’s my brether’. He rented Easter and Wester Hassendean from the Duke of Buccleuch in 1720. He married Elizabeth, eldest daughter of Henry Elliot of Harwood in 1678 and had 9 children: Gilbert (d.1709); Robert (d.1753), who succeeded to Midlem Mill; Margaret (c.1680–1768), who married Henry Elliot of Lodgegill; Marion, who married Andrew Halliburton of Newmains; Anny, who married Robert Paterson of Drygrange; Elizabeth, who married lawyer John Gibson and possibly another Paterson of Drygrange; Helen (or ‘Nelly’), who married William Elliot of Wolfelee; Magdalene (1694/4–1773), who married John Pasley of Craig; and a ‘natural daughter’ Elizabeth, who married Richard Paterson, portioner of Midlem. Robert of Penchrise (17th C.) involved in a court case in the 1690s. Along with William of Lyniecleuch he failed to pay a bond due to John Riddell of Haining; when they failed to show up in court the farms went to their guarantor, Sir Gilbert Elliot of Stobs. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was married to Marion Culbertson and in 1694 their son Robert was baptised. The witnesses were Robert Storie and Robert Halliwell and this was one of the earliest entries in the existing records for Wilton Parish. Perhaps the same Robert in Galalaw had a son Alexander baptised in Wilton in 1704; William Henderson and James Jamieson were witnesses. Probably the same Robert was described as servant to Adam Scott of Galalaw when his daughter Bessie was baptised in 1709. Esther (b.1706), baptised in Wilton, was probably also his child. Robert of Larriston (17th/18th C.) eldest son of Robert. His father had sold the family’s lands in 1688 after being declared bankrupt. In 1689 his grandfather, John Maxwell of Cowhill, gave him the lands of ‘Cullshangan’ in the Parish of Crossmichael and the half merkland of Kirkland of Kirkpatrick Irongray. His grandmother further reduced her dower rights, and with this help from his grandparents he was able to in 1695 to buy back (or perhaps redeem the ‘wadsett’ on) the lands of Over and Nether Larriston (including the mill, mill lands and Larriston Rig) from Christopher Irving of Binks. In 1696 he reinstated his grandmother’s 500 merks dower rights from the rents of Larriston. However, after his grandmother died in 1697 he gave a wadsett for the lands of Larriston Rig and Hopehead to John of Thirlshope and his son John. He formally succeeded his father as heir of the Elliots of Redheugh and Larriston in 1712. However, he continued to have financial difficulties and in 1719 he sold outright the last of the family’s local possessions to John Oliver of Dinlabyre, these being Over and Nether Larriston and Larriston Rig. He then moved to Newcastle, but later returned to Liddesdale, taking up residence in a cottage on the farm of Redheugh, where he died. He married Mary Applebie (or Appleby), and possibly had a 2nd wife. His children included: Robert (d.1752), a clerk in London, who died unmarried; James, farmer at Whitlaw, who died unmarried; Jean; another daughter, probably Helen (‘Nelly’), who married Walter Amos, joiner in Rulewater in 1768; and Gilbert, who married Margaret, daughter of James Scott of Calfield, and was father of Maj.-Gen. William. Robert of Dinlabyre (17th/18th C.) eldest son of William of Dinlabyre. He was recorded as ‘younger’ in 1697 when he married Helen, eldest daughter of Arthur Forrester of Kingfield. In about 1698 he sold Dinlabyre to John Oliver. Nothing else is known about him. Robert (1665/6–1757) resident of Castleton Parish. He was married to Jean ‘Ruan’, who died in 1743, aged 73. Their children included William, merchant in Castleton, who died in 1741. They are buried at Castleton. William, son of John and Hannah Grieve, is also mentioned on the gravestone, and so presumably related. Robert (17th/18th C.) probably resident at Acreknowe. He married Mary Hislop in Cavers Parish in 1703. He is likely to be the father of William, born to a Robert in Cavers in 1706. Robert (17th/18th C.) married Bessie Brydon in Hawick in 1706. He was probably the Robert whose daughter Bessie was born in Wilton in 1709. Robert (17th/18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He witnessed baptisms in 1705, 1709 and 1721. He also witnessed one in 1716 for Robert Turnbull and Margaret Elliot (who may have been related to him). He married Jean Elliot in Wilton Parish in 1710. Their children, baptised in Hawick Parish, included: Mary (b.1712); Agnes (b.1714); Jean (b.1717); Anna (b.1719); and Margaret (b.1720). The witnesses in 1714 were ‘officer’ William Douglas and John Tudhope and in 1717 were Bailie Walter Elliot and weaver Robert Turnbull. Robert (17th/18th C.) farmer in Powisholm. In 1707 he was ‘taken upontryall as precenter’ in Castleton Parish. Robert of Teindside (17th/18th C.) younger son of Simon of Swinside. He was sometimes referred to as ‘of Tyneside’, although his lands were certainly Teindside in Teviotdale and not in England. His brother Gideon owned Harwood-on-Teviot and in 1724 he sold Teindside to Gideon, In 1718 he married Jean, daughter of Rev. John Simpson of Morebattle. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Hummelknowes or Hummelknowes Mill when his children were baptised. They were: James (b.1720); William (b.1732); Robert (b.1735); and Isabel (b.1737). He may be the Robert who maried Jane Elliot in 1717 or the Robert who maried Margaret Douglas in Cavers and Kirkton in 1719. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident at Ormiston in Cavers Parish. His children included: John (b.1727); and Bessie (b.1729). Robert (d.1752) son of the last Robert of Larriston. His brother James farmed at Whitlaw, and his sister (or perhaps other near relative) Helen married Walter Amos, joiner in Rulewater. He went to London in 1712 was a clerk in the office of Sir John Bernard. He became a senior clerk in the Pay Office, Great Court Yard, St. James’s, London. He lived in the Parish of St. Peters, Cornhill, London. He loaned money to the Elliots of Stobs (his distant relations). He died unmarried. He left some silver plate, gold rings, snuff-boxes and a portrait of Lord Heathfield. Robert 3rd Laird of Midlem Mill (d.1753), oldest surviving son of Robert, 2nd Laird. He was Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch for Eskdale from about 1723–27 (although complaints about his conduct are recorded in letters of the 1740s), with Robert Scott of Burnhead taking over in 1728. In 1728 he took over as Chamberlain for Teviotdalehead from Gideon Scott of Falnash, serving until 1741. During this period he lived at Langholm Castle, Broadhaugh and Branxholme. He must also have lived at Midlem Mill for some of that period and remodelled the house, since a stone built into the mill is inscribed ‘R.E. 1730 K.E.’ In 1734 there was a formal inquiry by the Bailies and Council ‘how he came to take down the Bailies’ seat in the kirk and by whose allowance’, suggesting some disagreement over the authority of the Patron versus the Burgh.

In 1735 he rented part of the farm of Branxholme Mains. He was one of the local lairds asked to decide on the position of the new Teviot Bridge in Hawick in 1739. In 1740 a baptism in Hawick was witnessed by ‘Gardiner to Midlamlin at Branxome’, showing that he was living at Branxholme at that time. He leased the farms of Priesthaugh and Peelbrae from the Buccleuch Estates in 1741. He paid the window tax in Bowden Parish in 1748 (and his widow paid in 1753). In 1719 in Winton Parish he married Katherine (b.c.1701), only child of Adam Elliot of ‘Tyndside’ (i.e. Teindside) and grand-daughter of Walter Elliot of Arkleton. They had 14 children: Robert (b.1719), who must have died young; Elizabeth (b.1721), who married Simon Haliburton of Howcleuch, minister at Castleton and Ashkirk; Ann and Margaret (b.1722), who were unmarried and lived at Lichfield Street in London; Gilbert (b.1724), died in infancy and buried in Ewes Kirkyard; Gavin (b.1727), 4th and last Laird of Midlem Mill, selling the estate to Prof. George Stewart and moving to London; Henry (b.1729), baptised in Cavers; Robert (b.1730), also baptised in Cavers, served in the Royal Navy; Andrew (d.1779), a Major in the Marines, who died in Rhode Island, U.S.A.; Adam (d.1752) a baker who died in Lisbon; Maisy, who lived in Berwick with her mother; Helen (d.1798), who married James Wilkie, merchant in Marseilles; Jean (b.1738), who was christened in Hawick and lived with her mother in Berwick; and another child who died young. He is buried at Bowden. When he died the estate was in debt and was sold off 3 years later by his trustees. His widow and unmarried daughters then moved to Berwick. Robert (17th/18th C.) miller of Hawick Mill. He was listed as ‘Tacksman of the Mill and Lands of Hawick’ in the baptism records of some of his children. He was ‘milner’ in 1719 when he witnessed a baptism for Archibald Paterson (recordly incorrectly as ‘Robert Miller’ in one version). He was ‘Taxman’ in 1730 when he witnessed a baptism for merchant Robert Howison. He married Jean Scott and their children included: Rachel (b.1718); Jean (b.1722); Margaret (b.1724); Beatrix (b.1727); and Janet (b.1728). The witnesses in 1718 were Walter Scott of Crumhaugh and Bailie William Laing. He was probably son of Walter, who was listed as miller in the 1710s. He was also described as ‘tacksman of mill and lands of Hawick’ in 1722 when he rented Ginglenwells and Dinlees (on the Hermitage Water) from the Buccleuch estates. He was probably the Robert listed as ‘Tacksman’ in 1725 when he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for William Tudhope. Robert of Caerlenrig (1694–1777), eldest son of Robert of Caerlenrig, his mother probably being Agnes Langlands. The dates of his birth and death are given elsewhere as (1697–1767), but those on the tombstone in Teviothead are probably correct. He is described as ‘of Carlenrickrig’ and ‘of Rig’ in different records. In 1718 his ‘brother German’ John, ‘wigg-maker in Hawick’ witnessed a baptism in Hawick for a child of the deceased William Scott of Brieryhill. In 1722 he, along with Robert Scott of Skelfhill and James Grieve of Commonside petitioned the Presbytery for a preacher and meeting house in their district. In 1739 he witnessed baptisms in Hawick Parish for tenant Robert Whutson and for John Scott at Dryden. Due to ‘embarrassed circumstances’ he was forced to sell Caerlenrig and then farmed at Wintonrig. He is among the subscribers to the reprinted Buchanan’s ‘History of Scotland’ (1752), being listed at ‘Wintonbridge’. In 1721 in Roberton he married Christian (b.1697–1767), daughter of William Elliot of Borthwickbrae; she was sister of William, 2nd Laird of Borthwickbrae at the time of their marriage. Their children were baptised in Cavers Parish. They had 6 sons: Robert (1722–1770), writer in Edinburgh, who died unmarried; William (1724–97), farmer at Wintonrig, who married Margaret Anderson; John (1725–1801), who married Margaret Curle; Thomas (1730–1808), who became minister of Cavers; and Francis, ‘Frank’ (1733–79), skinner in Hawick, also died unmarried. Another son, Gideon, may have died young. They also had 4 daughters: Mary (b.1727), who married William Grieve, farmer at Southfield; Isobel (b.1729), who married a Kerr; Agnes (b.1729), twin of Isobel, who apparently... did not survive; Margaret (b.1735), who married George Pott, the purchaser of Caerlenrig; and Christian (b.1738), who married James Oliver in 1765. He and his son William were witnesses for a baptism for William Grieve (farmer in Southfield) and his daughter Mary in 1764. He and his wife both died at Winningtonrig. Robert of Binks (1702–66) eldest surviving son of John of Binks. He was tenant farmer in Burnmuth. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He married Elizabeth Robson (c.1722–93), who was from Boghall. Their children were: John (b.1754), who succeeded; Robert (b.1756), who died young; Jean (1758–87), who married John Elliot of Whitehaugh; Christian (1761–82); and Catherine, who died unmarried. His daughter Jean was probably the ‘Miss Jean Elliot, Burnmouth’ who subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He is buried in Castleton Kirkyard. Robert (18th C.) tenant in Slaidhills. He was tenant at Slaidhills (along with Patrick Hume) in 1743 who witnessed a baptism for Adam Hogg in 1743. He married Agnes Hardie and their daughter Agnes was baptised in 1740. The witnesses were Thomas Elliot at Harwood and Francis Elliot (brother of Robert), who may have been related to him. Robert (18th C.) resident of upper Teviotdale. He was recorded at Braidhaugh in 1747 and 1748 when children of his were baptised in Cavers Parish. He married Bessie Nixon. Their children included: Robert (b.1740) in Falnash Mill; Janet (b.1743), who worked at Falnash; Thomas (b.1747) in Broadhaugh; an unnamed child (b.1748); and Beatrice (b.1750), also lived at Broadhaugh. Robert (1711–82) son of William and Margaret Mather, he was grandson of William of Cooms. He was born in Hawick Parish. He married Catherine Armstrong, from the Sorbie family and their children included: Jean, who married George Graham from Greenknowe; Thomas in Harden; Margaret; who married James Davidson; and Robert in Crookham. Robert (1720/1–82) youngest son of William, Laird of Hawwood. He joined the army as an Ensign in the 1st Regiment of Foot in 1738 and was a Lieutenant on half-pay in Sir William Pepperell’s Regiment of Foot by 1757. Although commonly referred to as ‘Captain’, he appears never to have held that rank. In 1763 he had a bond with his brother Henry for the lands of Fernieles and a sasine in 1763 from William Elliot of Tarras for Blakehope, Lodgegill and other lands. He was also tenant at Stonedge in the late 1700s when it was owned by Robert Lisle. He served as an executor for Henry of Peel, who died in 1780. In 1766 he married Elizabeth, youngest daughter of Robert Pringle of Clifton, and she died in 1820, aged 88. They had 8 children: the eldest son, William (b.1766), succeeded to Harwood after the death of his uncle Henry; Robert (b.1767), married Anne Hilly of Portsmouth and was a Vice-Admiral in the Royal Navy; Pringle (c.1768–88) was apprenticed to a surgeon; Henry (1769–1841) married Janet, 2nd daughter of Rev. Dr. Somerville of Jedburgh and attained the rank of Major-General in the Army; Thomas (b.1771) farmed at Kirndean and married Helen, daughter of Thomas Scott of Peel; Margaret (b.1773), the only daughter, married Peter Brown of Rawflat; Andrew (1775–1810), was a Captain in the 70th Regiment and died unmarried at St. Thomas, Virgin Islands; and Mark (1776–1854), who was a tenant farmer in Lanton. He died at Hobsburn. Robert of Fenwick (18th C.) son of Francis and Rachel Langlands. He may be the Laird of Fenwick recorded paying a year’s rent for the weighthouse in Hawick in 1729. Along with Walter Scott (farmer at Commonside) he leased Unthank and Fiddleton from the Buccleuch Estates in 1733. In 1737 he and Robert Harrison, William Ogilvie of Hoscoat and lawyer Thomas Watson entered into a partnership to establish and stillhouse and brewhouse in Hawick. He is recorded in 1738 receiving the ‘tack’ from the Buccleuch Estates of a ‘stillhouse and brewhouse on east side of the water of Slitridge, and of ground adjacent; also a malt kiln and barn yet to be built; all lying in parish of Hawick’. This may be the first record of brewing and distilling near Hawick; it may refer to the lands of ‘Whusky Hooses’ and/or the ‘Brewery Haugh’ on Slitrig Crescent. In 1747 he witnessed a baptism for Charles Scott of Crumhaugh. He became a Burgess of Glasgow in 1753. About 1756 he sold Easter Highchesters and Lahirhope to Henry Scott, Duke of Buccleuch; he may have died shortly afterwards, since there are other documents between the Duke of Buccleuch and his trustees in 1756–8. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He firstly married Jean Scott (from an unknown branch of that family), this probably being the irregular marriage of Robert ‘eldest lawful son to Francis’ to Jean Scott in Carlisle in 1716 that was a matter brought before the Hawick Parish Session in 1717; he must have been fairly young at the time, suggesting this was an elopement or rushed marriage of some kind. He secondly married Katherine (b.1697), daughter of William Elliot of Arkleton; she had previously married David Laing of Westerkirk and Charles Telfer minister of Hawick. It is said that his only child was Gavin, who was the last Elliot of Fenwick; however, ‘James Elliot, Fenwick’, whose daughter Magdalene was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1758 was probably another son. Robert ‘Hobby’ (18th C) resident of a cottage called Hassely Cleugh on Stonedge farm. A story is told (recounted by Walter Deans) of how he went to the blacksmith’s at Unthank to get a ‘sling’ (perhaps for a sled), but the smith was busy, and by the time it was his turn he had forgotten what he came for. Eventually he decided ‘it was time for him ta gang hame, as he had a ferr road ta gang’ and the smith said ‘Ay Hobbie, it’s a lang sling’, to which he replied ‘a lang sling, that’s the verra thing a’ wanted made, a gude sling, darsay am donnert’. Robert (b.c.1700) son of Walter in Brugh. He married Elizabeth Scott, who came from Doorpool. He had one known child, Adam, who lived in Hawick and was father of James of Goldielands, schoolmaster at Wilton. Robert (18th C) tenant in Sundhope farm in the middle of the 1700s. Robert (18th C) resident of Ewesdale. He married Janet Scott, who was also from there. Their children included: Thomas (b.1741); and Mary (b.1743). Jean (b.1737) and Robert (b.1739), born in Langholm Parish, may also have been their children. Robert of Reidheugh (1705–93) 2nd son of William in Braildie and Whithaugh. His father purchased Redheugh for him around 1730, thus regaining the home of his ancestors. He was tenant in Cleughhead in 1744 when he had a charter of confirmation for Redheugh in liferent for himself and in fee for his son William. In 1778 he was also tenant in Foulshiels, Kershope and Shaws. In 1786, for reasons unknown, he disinherited his eldest son William in favour of his 2nd son John. He was recorded as Robert of Redheugh on the 1786–92 Horse Tax Rolls. His lands of Reidheugh were valued at £96 11s in 1788. He married Margaret Beattie (d.1767). They had at least 3 children: William, tenant in Hillhouse, who married Margaret Haliburton from Roughley; John of Redheugh (1741–1809), farmer in Cleughhead and Foulshiels, who married Margaret Russell; and Thomas (1745–1800), who married Mary Thomison. Both he and his wife are buried in Castleton Cemetery. Robert (b.c.1715) eldest surviving son of William of Thorliveshope and Overton. He succeeded his father in 1744 and immediately sold Thorliveshope. He is probably the Robert who paid tax at Overton (in Oxnam Parish) in 1748 and also the Robert of Overton recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He may then have moved to London. He married Mary Henderson, who died at the age of 25. He also married a second time. His children included: Cassandra, who was 2nd wife of Dr. William of Arkleton; Margaret (1751–1842), who died unmarried in Jedburgh; and Rebecca (b.1753), who died in infancy. Robert (1717/8–1816) resident of Roxburghshire, whose death is recorded at the age of 98. The report states that ‘a short period previous to his death, he told Mr John Scott, meal-dealer, Hawick, that about 70 years ago he was sent by his father to Hawick, with one shilling to purchase a stone of barley-meal, a capful of salt, a pound of butter, and a pennyworth of tobacco – all of which he got for the said shilling’. Robert (1722–79) lived at Sorbie in Ewes Parish. He married Janet Wilson (1726–85) and their children included: William (1753–85), who married Jean Davidson; Jean (b.1756); Margaret (b.1758); Walter (b.1764); John (d.1792); and Mary (1778–88). He and his wife are buried at Ewes Churchyard. Robert (1722/3–70) eldest son of Robert of Caerlenrig. He was a writer in Edinburgh and died unmarried. He could be the Robert, writer in Edinburgh, who acted as Proctor for Hawick during the 1767 perambulation of the Common, undertaken as part of the case brought by the Duke of Buccleuch for its division. Robert (1724/5–70) 2nd son of John in Whithaugh. He was tenant farmer at Hermitage and elsewhere from about 1748, farming an area of perhaps 5,000 or 6,000 acres, on the eastern side of the Hermitage Water, including Braildie, Gorrenberry, Hermitage and Millburnholm. It is said that he was a well organised farm manager, who had little help from the Buccleuch Estates. He married Janet Scott from Greenwood. Their children were: John (1750–1821), tenant in Hermitage, and also farmer at other farms, who married Christian Grieve and then Margaret Scott from Skelfhill; Walter (1754–97), who farmed Millburnholm and married Helen Crozier from Brighouse; William (1759–1829) in Millburnholm, who married Elizabeth Laidlaw from Fulfash; Jean (b.1760), who married William Sharp of Hartsgarth; Robert (b.1760) tenant in Moraylees and Haydon Bridge, who married Mary Scott from Skelfhill; and Philip (b.1862), merchant in America. There are meticulous farm records of his, which survive. Robert (d.bef. 1777) Hawick resident. The death of his wife Betty Scott is recorded in 1777. Robert

(1725–57) 2nd son of the 2nd Sir Gilbert of Minto. He was a Captain in the Royals. He died suddenly at the home of his brother Sir Gilbert. Robert (b.1730) younger son to Robert of Midlem Mill, he was baptised in Cavers Parish. In 1744 he was apprenticed as a merchant to John Haliburton of Howcleuch (who was surely related to Rev. Simon Haliburton who married his sister Elizabeth). He later joined the Navy, being an ensign in the Marines. He is also said to have been a clerk on H.M.S. Royal George. He married, but nothing else is known about him. Robert (18th C.) son of Adam in Dykeraw. He was described as being ‘in Know’, which is probably Priesthill Know in Liddesdale. He married Helen Grieve and their children included: Robert in Know, who married Marion Elliot; and Ninian in Priesthill. Robert (18th C.) writer (i.e. lawyer) in Edinburgh, who was legal agent for the town, particularly during the protracted case involving the division of the Common. He was made an Honorary Burgess in 1761. It is possible he is the same as the descendant of the Elliots of Caerlenrig. Robert (18th C.) resident at Howcleuch in 1757 when his son Andrew was baptised in Robertson Parish. Perhaps the same Robert was resident at Woodburn in Robertson Parish in 1763 and 1767 when his children Helen and John were baptised. He may be the Robert who married Janet Scott in Robertson in 1750 or the Robert who married Margaret Rieve in Robertson in 1754. Isobel (b.1760) may also have been his child. Robert (d.1799) shoemaker of the Cross Wynd. He was probably son of Adam, older brother of schoolmaster James (later of Goldielands), and may also have been brother of shoemaker Adam. In 1768 he witnessed a baptism for John Nicolaus. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He may be the shoemaker Robert who in 1787 witnessed a baptism for stockingmaker Mark Sutherland. In 1761 in Hawick Parish he married Isobel Scott, who died in 1796. His children included: Walter (b.1762), who carried on his business; James (b.1765), whose wife may have died in 1835; Janet (b.1767); and John (b.1771). The witnesses in 1765 were carrier James Wilson and weaver John Wilson. Robert (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. He could be the son of Hector born there in 1738. His children included: Hector (b.1765), probably father of Robert (b.1792); Isabel (b.1767); Jean (b.1768); and Margaret (b.1771). He is surely related to the Hector whose children were born in Southdean Parish in the 1750s. Robert (18th C.) tenant in Heap in Wilton Parish. His wife was Janet Russell and their children included: Isabel (b.1776); Robert (b.1777); Betty (b.1779); and Isabel (again, b.1785). Robert (18th C.) resident at Parkhill Wester in 1774 when his son John was baptised in Robertson Parish. There are several other children born in Robertson around that time who could also be his. Robert (18th C.) son of Robert in Know, this probably being Priesthill Know in Castleton Parish. He married Marion Elliot and died without issue. Robert (b.c.1745) son of William of Wolfelee with his 2nd wife Margaret Ogilvie. He was a merchant in Amsterdam. He purchased the estate of Pinnaclehill near Kelso. He died without issue and left Pinnaclehill to his niece Charlotte. Robert (1746–1817) tenant at Powisholm and other places in Castleton Parish, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. It is possible he was son of William in Southdeanrig. He married Wilhelmina Hislop (1763–1836). Their children included: Christian (b.1788); Margaret (1790–95); Ann (b.1793); Robert (b.1796), who also farmed at Powisholm; John (b.1797), who farmed at Middlholm; James (b.1798); Margaret (b.1799); and William (b.1802), who was farmer at Harden in Castleton Parish. Robert (c.1752–1827) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Betty Elliot (c.1755–1828) and their children included: Ann (b.1783); Elizabeth (b.1784); Helen (b.1786); and Robert (1788–1812), who was a teacher. Rev. Robert (1755–1824) younger son of Sir Gilbert, 3rd Baronet of Minto. He was Rector of Whedrake Church in Yorkshire. In 1779 he was given livery of a set of small pieces of land formerly called Minto Townhead, consisting of: South Croft; North Croft; Quicksands Park; Notman’s Shot; Langlands; Temple Croft; Howden; Whitfield; West South Croft; Minto Town; and the green of Minto. These were valued at £461 1s 10d, enough to put him over the required minimum of £400 to be on the roll. In 1788 he was listed under ‘Votes of Sir Gilbert Elliot’ among the voters of Roxburghshire. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. He was still listed as liveryenter of lands in Minto Parish in the Land Tax Rolls of 1811. In 1788 he married Mary, daughter of Rev. Edmund Garforth of Askham. They had 5 children: Eleanor Maria Anne, who married Dr. James Grant of Jedburgh; Isabella Lucy, who married Gilbert, 3rd son of Sir William Elliott, the 6th Baronet of Stobs; Agnes, who died unmarried; Robert, who was a Captain in the Royal Navy; and Edward Eden, Accountant General in Bombay. Robert (c.1759–1844) cattle dealer in Newcastleton. He may be the son of William who was born in Hobkirk Parish in 1758. In 1841 he was living at about 10 Langholm Street, with Helen and Mary, who were probably his daughters. He is probably the Robert who married Mary Elliot (c.1768–1840) in Castleton and whose children included Isabell (1799–1804); Mary (1804–54); and Robina (1816–42). Robert (c.1760–1824) son of Robert, who farmed at Hermitage. He was tenant in Moraylees and Haydon Bridge. He married Mary Scott (c.1776–1843) from Skelfhill and their children were Robert (1809–44) and James (1813–90), who were both tenants at Galalaw. Capt. Robert (1761–1840) younger son of William of Whithaugh, he was born in Castleton Parish. He was in the Merchant Navy, serving as Captain of the ‘Hope’, which operated between Calcutta and Canton. He farmed at Glencartholm, near Canobicie. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He married Alison Grieg (c.1779–1856). Robert (b.1762) son of John, he was born in Hobkirk Parish. He emigrated to America, settling in Quebec, where he married Elizabeth Louise Josephite Savoie in 1788. Their children included: Andre (b.1788); Marie-Louise Allet (b.1790); Simon (1793–1865), who married Rebecca Armstrong and was great-grandfather of Canadian Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau; Joseph (b.1795); Marie (b.1796); Charlotte (b.1798), who probably died young; Helene Allet (b.1802), also died young; Margaritte (b.1805); twins Helene and Charlotte (b.1807); and Sara-Marie (b.1810). Robert (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Roan in Castleton Parish, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was also taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. He died in Trois-Rivières, Quebec. Robert ‘Little Hobbie o the Castleton’ (18th/19th C.) resident of Byreholm in Castleton Parish. In the ‘Local Historians Table Book’ of 1841 it is described that he was ‘a dwarf’, ‘reputed to be a fairy changeling’, who had died less than 20 years previously. He was ‘a most irascible creature’ who would pull out a knife when insulted, but was too slow to catch people. He also had a run-in with his neighbour William Scott from Kirndean, threatening the big man to a duel for tarnishing his reputation, causing Scott to flee from his house. Robert (b.1767), W.S., son of William in Hillhouse and Mary Haliburton, he was born in Castleton Parish. He became a lawyer in Kirkcaldy and died unmarried. Robert (1767–1854) son of Capt. Robert, and grandson of William of Harwood. He was born at Hobsburn in Hobkirk Parish. He joined the Navy in 1781 and rose through the ranks, becoming Commander in 1801 and going on half-pay in 1814. In 1846 he was promoted to the rank of Vice-Admiral. In 1797 he married Ann, daughter of Andrew Hilley of Plymouth. His children were: Elizabeth Pringle (1801–47); Robert Hilley (b.1803), Captain in the Navy, who married Elizabeth Carr; and Helen (or Ann), who married John Paton of Crai ling, his 1st wife being her cousin Eleanor Elliot. He lived at Hundalee and then at Glenbank and was a member of the Jedforest Club. For several years before his death he was completely blind. Robert (1768/9–1856) shepherd at Blinkbonny. He married Elspeth ‘Huitson’ or ‘Hotson’ (possibly Whitson), who died in 1815, aged 50; she was probably related to George ‘Hotson’ (d.1728), who is buried in the adjacent lair at Et tleton. Their children included: Margaret (b.1789); Helen (b.1791); William (b.1794); Christian (b.1799), who may have married shoemaker William Elliot; Elspeth (1803–59); Robert (b.1807); and John, who died in infancy. Robert (18th/19th C.) from Langburnshiels. He was an apprentice baker with Thomas Kedie in Hawick. He produced a sketch entitled ‘Wilton Path and Damside, 1810’, which is one of the first representations of Wilton. It was reproduced in the Hawick News in 1910 and discussed in the Transactions in 2015. Robert (b.1769) farmer at Lanton Mains, taking over from his father, William. He married Margaret Hall (c.1778–1818) and their children included: Christian (c.1810–27); and Jane (c.1812–31). The family are buried at Abbotrule Kirkyard. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. Probably the same Robert was father of: Mary (b.1783), born at Tythehouse; William (b.1792), born at Harwood; and John (b.1794), born at Robert’s Linn. Robert (b.c.1770) born in Bedrule, he was a farmer. In 1841 he is ‘Independent’ and in 1851 recorded as ‘Pauper Formerly Farmer’. His wife was Jessy from Morebattle and their children included Margaret, Mary (who married David Turnbull), Christian and Janet. Robert of Cooms (18th/19th C.) subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He was cautioner for a bank in Langholm in 1825. It is unclear how he was related to other Elliots. Robert of Arkleton (1775–1810) son of William and Cassandra Elliot. He was a Captain in the 5th Bombay Native Infantry, and saw active service at the siege of Seringapatam. He returned home about 1803 to take possession of the family estate. He was then a Major in the 1st Battalion of the Roxburghshire Volunteers. He led some of the men of Liddesdale and the Slitrig valley to Hawick in response to the False Alarm of 1804. He returned to India where he was promoted to Major. He later accompanied the mission to the Isle of France, where he (and many others) were killed on the H.M.S. Africaine when attacked by 2 French frigates. Robert ‘Blind Robbie’ (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick. His wife Margaret Robson’s death is recorded in the Hawick Parish records in 1805. It appears that they were married in 1790. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Deadwater who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825 and William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. It is unclear how he was related to other Elliots. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of London who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He probably had a local connection. Robert (1780–1851) son of John, tanker in Hawick. He was farmer at Roan. He may be the ‘R. Elliot, Roon’ who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He was listed among heads of households in the Parish in 1835–41. In 1851 his widow is recorded as farmer of 130 arable acres and more than 4,000 acres of moorland, employing 5 labourers. His wife was Isabel, who was also from Hawick. He is buried at Teviothead. Robert (b.1780/1) from Ewesdale, he was a farmer in Roberton Parish. In 1841 he was a gamekeeper at Harden and in 1851 was a retired farmer at Scarnook. His wife was Janet (from Canonbie). Robert (b.1785) son of John, farmer at Twislehope. He was a surgeon in Haltwhistle. He married Jane Elliot from Cringledykes, daughter of John and grand-daughter of Robert in Hermitage. Their children were Margaret, Jane, John (surgeon in Bellingham), Robert (surgeon in Haltwhistle), William (lived in London), Janet, Jane, Alice, Georgina, Andrew (who married Helen from Hermitage), Kate and Margaret (who married James Hill, Controller General for Scotland). Robert (1790–1872) eldest son of William, and grandson of Robert of Caerlenrig, he was born in Kirkton Parish. He became tenant in Teindside and is recorded there in 1825 when he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’. Probably the same Robert of Teindside was one of the founder members of the Wisp Club. He is recorded there as farmer in 1841, living with William (probably his brother) and Margaret (probably his mother). In 1851 he was recorded there as farmer of 440 acres, employing 6 labourers. He died unmarried. Robert (18th/19th C.) spinner in Hawick. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. Robert (c.1785–1849) son of William and Jean Davidson from Ewes. He was a slater in Hawick, recorded at Townhead in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He was at about 2 Loan in 1841. He married Janet ‘Bleak’ (or Black, c.1789–1831). Their children included: Margaret (1811–79), who married William Miller; William (1814–67), who married Helen Smith; Jane (1816–74), who married John White; Janet (1818–83), who married Thomas Thomson; twins Martha (1822–92) and Robert (b.1822), who probably died young; Thomas (1825–64); and John Scott (1829–1914), who was Cornet in 1851. His will is registered with Jedburgh Sheriff Court in 1849. Robert (1791–1858) son of Walter and Helen Crozier. He farmed at Hermitage, like several members of his family before him. He is probably the Elliot from Kirndean who was on the Committee of the Proprietors of Castleton Library. He is listed among male heads of households in 1835–41. In 1851 he was farming 2,000 acres of moorland and employing 4 labourers. He married Mary (c.1804–35), daughter of Thomas Murray and Janet Inglis, from Whisgills. She was probably already dead in 1841, and he was certainly a widower by 1851. He was wealthy enough to be employing a governess in 1841. His children were: Janet (1826–73), who married Colin Hay; Walter (1828–93), who farmed Hermitage after his father died; Thomas (1830–54), who died on the Isle of Mull; Helen (1832–93); and Mary (b.1834). Robert (1793/4–1858) only son of William, tenant at Millburn. He also farmed at Millburnholm. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821 and Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. In 1827 he married Helen (or Eleanor), daughter of John Davidson from Ewes. He was a slater in Hawick, recorded at Townhead in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He was at about 2 Loan in 1841. He married Janet ‘Bleak’ (or Black, c.1789–1831). Their children included: Margaret (1811–79), who married William Miller; William (1814–67), who married Helen Smith; Jane (1816–74), who married John White; Janet (1818–83), who married Thomas Thomson; twins Martha (1822–92) and Robert (b.1822), who probably died young; Thomas (1825–64); and John Scott (1829–1914), who was Cornet in 1851. His will is registered with Jedburgh Sheriff Court in 1849. Robert (1791–1858) son of Walter and Helen Crozier. He farmed at Hermitage, like several members of his family before him. He is probably the Elliot from Kirndean who was on the Committee of the Proprietors of Castleton Library. He is listed among male heads of households in 1835–41. In 1851 he was farming 2,000 acres of moorland and employing 4 labourers. He married Mary (c.1804–35), daughter of Thomas Murray and Janet Inglis, from Whisgills. She was probably already dead in 1841, and he was certainly a widower by 1851. He was wealthy enough to be employing a governess in 1841. His children were: Janet (1826–73), who married Colin Hay; Walter (1828–93), who farmed Hermitage after his father died; Thomas (1830–54), who died on the Isle of Mull; Helen (1832–93); and Mary (b.1834). Robert (1793/4–1858) only son of William, tenant at Millburn. He also farmed at Millburnholm. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821 and Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. In 1827 he married Helen (or Eleanor), daughter of John Davidson from Ewes; she died in 1886, aged 82, and was buried at Ettleton. Their children: included William (1828–91), who emigrated to New Zealand; Anne (b.1829); Elizabeth or Betty Laidlaw (b.1831); and John Davidson (b.1834–96). He died at Toftholm and is buried at Unthank. Robert of Reidheugh (1794–1869) only son of Thomas and Mary Thomson. He inherited the lands of Redheugh from his uncle John. During his time the road to Hawick (B6399) was built adjacent to the farm. He also had the Rede Burn partially diverted and drained the marshy area behind the farm. In 1805 (although this date seems too early) he sold Cooms and Middlemoss to Humble Lamb of Ryton. He was listed for the first time as a head of household in Castleton Parish in 1837. He was on the Borders Union Railway Committee for Liddesdale in the 1850s. He served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He was also Vice-President of the Liddesdale Curling Club. He was listed at Redheugh in Slater's 1852 directory and in the 1861 census was ‘Land Proprietor’ there. In 1851 he and his wife settled Redheugh jointly on their 2 sons, reserving the liferent for themselves. He was still at Redheugh in a directory of 1868. In 1820 he married Jessie (or Janet, c.1796–1871) Elliot from Flatt. Their children were: Thomas (1821–69), who married Elizabeth Kyle; Jane (1822/3–67); Mary (b.1824), who died young; John (1825–57); Robert (b.1830); Agnes (b.1823); Agnes (again, 1824–97); Christina (b.1826); John (1828–57); Robert (b.1830); Isabella (b.1819); Janet (b.1821). Their children included: Robert (1821–98), who worked for a while as a baker in Hawick; John (1829–48); Ann (1831–95); Mary (1833–1906); James Armstrong (1835–1903); Elizabeth (1837–85), married John Glendinning from Liverpool and died in California; Sibella (1839–1911); and William (1843–1921). He is probably related to the Robert who farmed at the same place earlier. Robert (19th C.) recorded as ‘Robert, esq. of Leethaugh’ on Pigot’s 1837 directory. He probably lived at Leethaugh near Newcastleton, and could be the same as Robert of Redheugh. Robert (1802–77) born in Castleton Parish, son of William and Jean Easton. He was an agricultural labourer and shepherd. He was listed among heads of households as labourer at Gillfoot in 1835 and Whitropeburn in 1836–38, and shepherd at Phaupknowe in 1840 and 1841. He is listed as labourer at Phaupknowe in 1841 and Upperraw in 1851. He married Betty Telfer (c.1805–75). Their children included: John (1822–26); Isabella (1827–46); William (b.1829); Jeannie (b.1832); Robert (b.1834); Sarah (b.1839); and John (b.1841). He died at Whitehillbrae.

Robert Kerr 6th Laird of Harwood (1805–73) eldest son of William the 5th Laird. Before 1835 he lived at Greenriver on the Stonedge estate. He succeeded to the Harwood estates at the age of 30 and moved into the new house that his father had had built on the estate. He served in the 23rd Royal Welsh Fusiliers, reaching the rank of Lieutenant. He is said to have been a keen country sportsman, excelling at riding with the hounds. Along with some friends he started the ‘Jedforest Harriers’, meeting at Swinnie Toll-bar, Howahill, Chapel of Cross (presumably Shiplaw Corse), Ruletownhead and elsewhere. He became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1829. He was a J.P. for Roxburghshire, as well as being Deputy-Lieutenant (from 1848), a Commissioner of Supply for the county, Tax Commissioner and member of the Police Board. In 1845, after a 2 year legal battle, he inherited the Clifton estates from his cousin Robert Pringle; his tenants in Rulewater lit a huge bonfire to mark the occasion, as recounted in a poem by John Halliday. He said ‘The name Clifton has been a lucky one with me. When staying at Clifton, near Bristol, I met my wife, a Miss Clifton, and I succeeded to the estate of Clifton’. On the announcement of the legal victory there was a great celebration at Harwood, with a bonfire lit on a nearby hill. He was said to be a keen supporter of the ‘uppies’ in Hobkirk Baa. In 1833 he married Mary Anne, daughter of Charles Claude Clifton.
of Twymaur, Brecon, and she died in 1871. His 13 children were: Mary-Anne Frances (1834–1917), said to be the prettiest, who married Sir Edward Chudde Cockburn; William Claude (1835–1922), who succeeded; Charles John (1836/7–1863), who died aged 27, after returning from India; Robert Henry (b.1838) of Clifton Park, who married Anna Maria Louisa, daughter of Lord Trimle-ston, and whose son Robert would later succeed as Laird of Harwood; Ellen Eliza (b.1839), who married Chetwode Drummond Pringle; Adelaide Catherine (1840–1926), who married Sir Basil Francis Hall; Chandos Frederick (1842–62); Anna Maria Octavia (b.1844), who died young; Caroline Clifton (1845–1923), who married James Moffat of Edenhall; Edward Claude (1846–1913), married Eleanor, daughter of John Jones of Melbourne; Charlotte Elizabeth (1848–93), who married John Dalton of Sleningford Park, Yorkshire; Anna Maria (b.1849), who married Lieut.-Col. James Colquhoun; and Mark Pringle (1851–1924). The family used to spend the winter at Brighton, where he would go hunting. He died there following a hunting accident. His will is registered with Jedburgh Sheriff Court in 1873. He was buried in Hobkirk Kirkyard. Robert (b.1804/5) born in Hobkirk Parish, he was an agricultural labourer and gardener in Hawick. In 1841 he was living at Slitrig Cottage with his wife and mother-in-law Margaret. By 1851 he was a widower, still at Slitrig Cottage and in 1861 he was a shepherd at Bucklands. He married Janet Crozier in Wilton in 1841. Their children included: Margaret (b.1842); and Robert (b.1844). He could be the son of John born in Hobkirk in 1807. Robert (1808–88) youngest son of James, schoolmaster of Wilton, who lived at Goldie-Clands. He was a sheep farmer in Roxburgh-shire, Selkirkshire and Dumfriesshire, before settling at Laighwood, near Dunkeld. He received prizes for his sheep from the Highland and Agricultural Society in the 1850s and 60s. He corresponded with George Cupples, who was gathering data for Charles Darwin, on the subject of the proportions of sheep born of each sex. He was also on that Society’s Committee for Land Improvement. Robert (1808/9–44) elder son of Robert, farmer at Hermitage, Haydon Bridge, etc. His mother was Mary Scott from Skelfhill. He probably held the tenancy of Galalaw farm, but died in Madeira (or perhaps Madras, India). After his death his brother James became tenant at Galalaw. Robert (b.1808/9) born in Hobkirk Parish, he was farm steward at Wester-houses in 1851 and 1861. He married Mary Renwick and their children included Elizabeth, Margaret, John, William, Francis, Marianne, Henry (b.1851) and Agnes (b.1854). Robert (c.1811–45) agricultural labourer who was living at Foder-lee Cottage in 1841. He married Mary Elliot (b.c.1814) and their children included Elizabeth (b.c.1834), Margaret (b.c.1835) and John (b.c.1839). His will is registered with Jedburgh Sheriff Court. He could be the Robert, son of John, born in Hobkirk Parish in 1807. Robert (1807–96) younger son of James of Wolfelee and brother of Sir Walter. He was a twin of James. He was an elder of Wolfelee Free Kirk and also took a keen interest in the Sclenty Schuil. He lived to the age of 89. Robert (b.1812/3) born in Castleton Parish, he was a shepherd and labourer. In 1861 he was at about 37 South Hermitage Street. He married Mary Armstrong in 1840. Their children included: Christian (b.1842); Robert (b.1845); Jane; and Archibald. Robert (b.1814/5) born in Newcastleton, he was an agricultural labourer living around Sunnyside in Denholm in 1841. The family was living in a cottage at Hundlea in 1851. In 1861 he was a ploughman in Oxnam Parish. In 1836 he married Hannah Whillans from Crailing. Their family included: John (b.c.1837); Archibald; and Walter. His elderly uncle Walter, formerly a mason from Cavers, was also living with them in 1851. The family may have emigrated to Bruce County, Ontario. Robert (b.c.1815) labourer who was living at Hermitage Schoolhouse in 1841. He married Agnes Milligan and their children included: Jessie (or Janet, b.1835); Margaret; and Jane (b.1839); and Matthew (b.1841). He may have been related to James, who was schoolmaster at Hermitage. Robert (b.1818/9) born in Hawick Parish, he was farm steward at Cavers estate in the 1860s. In 1851 and 1861 he was living at Cavers East Lodge (called ‘Cavers Garden’ in 1861). He was listed as ‘gamekeeper’ and his wife as ‘portress’. His wife was Isabella Elliot, probably daughter of John, who was shepherd at Shiplaw Corse. Their children included: Margaret (b.1850); William (b.1852); Mary (b.1854); Stuart Douglas (who became a Colonel in the Volunteers); Elizabeth (b.1858); John (b.1860); Isabella (b.1863); Janet (b.1869); Janet (again, b.1866); Agnes (b.1869); and Robert (b.1872). Robert (1821–1908) son of Robert, who farmed at Powisholm, and Esther Elliot. He was an agricultural labourer living at Bankend in Castleton Parish in 1861. In 1849 he married Christian Elliot (c.1826–1904) and their children included Agnes Murray (1850–1904); Robert (1851–1928); John (1853–1935); Esther; and Adam (1858–1903). He died at Powisholm. Robert Henry of Clifton Park (b.1837) 3rd son of Robert Henry. He inherited the lands of Clifton Park from his father. In about 1874 he also owned lands in Linton Parish. In 1868 he married Anna Maria Louisa. In about 1874 he also owned lands in Linton. He inherited the lands of Clifton Park from his grandfather in 1887. He married Effie McGregor Corbett, but gave up the lease and retired to Newcastle. His wife was Annie and their children included Annie, Henry, Thomas, Jane, Edward and Robert. Robert of Reidheugh (d.1915) only son of Thomas and Elizabeth Kyle. He inherited Redheugh, being served heir to his grandfather in 1887. He married Effie McGregor Corbett, but they had no children. In 1918 his sister Anna Mary sold Redheugh to the tenants, James and Thomas Scott. Robert (1865–1937) son of Walter, farmer at Hermitage, and descended from the Elliots of Falnash. He also farmed at Hermitage, but gave up the lease and retired to Newcastle. He married Isobel, sister of J.G. Wilson, manufacturer in Hawick. He secondly married Mary Elizabeth, daughter of Walter Paisley, ironmonger from Hawick. His only child was Isabella Jane Armstrong. Robert Young Scott ‘Bob’, M.B.E. (1920–2016) born on February 29th, so he celebrated his 21st birthday in 2004! A High School Maths teacher for 28 years, he coached tennis locally and received an M.B.E. in 1998 for services to lawn tennis. He married Madge, who coached tennis along with him, and they had sons Kim and Sean. Roland (15th C.) recorded as ‘Rollando Elwald’ in 1466 when he witnessed a charter at Kirkcudbright for Robert Herries. Roland (15th C.) recorded in the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1494/5. Along with ‘Willot’ and some Armstrongs, Hector Lauder, brother of the Laird of Todrig, had remission for bringing them to the area to attack the tenants of Whitmuir. They are described as ‘traitors of Leven’, but are as likely to have been from Liddesdale as England. Roland (15th/16th C.) recorded in a 1516 ‘respite’ to William of Larriston and several other Liddesdale Elliots. He is listed as ‘Rolland Elwald in Thorleshope’. He is surely related to the other Elliots of Thorleshope, perhaps the generation between the John of the 1480s and 90s and the Robert or Robin of the 1540s to 60s. Roland (16th C.) tenant of the lands of Riccarton, recorded in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. Listed after him are William Elliot, along with Martin and Patrick Crozier. He may be related to some of the other nearly contemporary Rolands. Roland of Thorleshope (16th C.) recorded in 1546 when he was one of the men to be entered as prisoners to John Kerr of Ferniehirst. This was along with John, son of Robert of Thorleshope (whose relationship to him is unclear), as well as John, son to ‘Hobe Quhytserk’. Roland ‘Rowie’ of the Park (16th C.) recorded in 1578 when he was held by Patrick Houston of that ilk with a pledge of good behaviour to the King. He is probably the Robin of the Park who was accused (along with Simon and others) by the English in 1581 of stealing cattle and taking Thomas Routledge prisoner. He could be the man transcribed as ‘James Rowe in the Park’, listed along with Sym of the Park and Archibald of the Park in the Register of the Privy Seal in 1581. It is thus possible that he was son of James of the Park. However, he is probably the ‘Rowie Elliot of the Park, called Symmis Rowie’ listed in 1581 as the leader of the gang of Elliots of the Park released from Edinburgh Castle; his father was thus Simon. In 1582/3 his name was transcribed as ‘Robbe’ when several other Elliots were charged for his non-appearance. Roland ‘Rowie’ (16th C.) recorded in 1594 as ‘Rowie Elliot of Ramsgill’ when he signed the bond of assurance with the English Wardens. Probably the same man is recorded as ‘Rowe Ellocht of the Hall’ in a huge 1585 remission of crimes for men whose superior was Lord Maxwell; his name appears near those of Ewesdale residents, and it seems likely he was ‘of the Hill’ (rather than ‘Hall’). ‘Hob and Will Elliottis, brether’ are listed after him, so possibly his brothers, or brothers to each other and more distantly related to him. Roland ‘Rollie’ (17th C.) described as ‘called Park’ in the 1660s when he was listed as a debtor of William Elliot of Binks, along with many other Elliots. He may have been a descendant of the earlier Elliots of Park. Roland (1815–41) son of James, tenant at Lymiecleuch. He was tenant farmer at Mackside in 1841. In 1837 he married Beatrice Pott (c.1799–1878), who died at Wilton Hill, Hawick. Samuel (18th C.) possibly a resident at Wells. He was recorded as a wright in Denholm in 1723. Probably the same man was father of: James (b.1723) in Cavers Parish; Samuel (b.1725) in...
Cavers; Walter (b.1828) in Hobkirk and Bedrule Parishes; Alison (b.1730) in Hobkirk; and William (b.1732) in Bedrule. Samuel (b.c.1750) son of William of沃尔菲 mysteries with his 2nd wife Margaret Ogilvie. He was a merchant in Antigua. He has 2 daughters: Alicia, who married William Hay Carre and Sir M.A. Crosby; and Eliza, who married Lord Despenser. Simon (15th C.) listed in 1482/3 along with James, Lawrence and John Elwald, as well as Robert Turnbull and Robert Dalgleish, when they said to be rebels captured by Patrick Dickson, Bailie of Peebles. Simon (16th C.) entered in 1537/8 for crimes along with his brother James ‘Elwald’ and William in Leaugh, with sureties being Robert of Redheugh and his brother Archibald. They were accused of breaking open the shop of Thomas Graham in Selkirk. How he was related to other Elliots is unclear. Simon (16th C.) recorded in 1541 as the tenant of Park in Liddesdale. Either the same or a different Simon was also tenant at ‘Coklaik’. He was probably an ancestor of the Simon of the Park recorded about 4 decades later. Simon (16th C.) recorded as ‘Sym Elwald’ in 1546 when he was witness to the bond entering some Elliots as prisoners with John Kerr of Ferniehirst. He signed with the help of the notary (suggesting that he could not write), ‘in absens of my brother young William’. He may be the same as one of the other Simons. Simon ‘Sim’ (16th C.) proprietor of lands at Dodburn and adjacent farms. In 1567 Robert Scott of Thirlestane and Master Thomas Weston relieved Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme as surety for him and Archie’s Will in Gorrenberry. He is recorded in a bond of security of 1569 signed in Hawick, in which he is given as ‘Sym Ellot in Dodburne’, with Sir Walter Scott of Bucleuch serving as surety for him. 5 tenants are listed for whom he was surety himself. He may have been related to the other Elliots in the bond, e.g. Gavin in Skelfhill or Gavin of Falnash. When he failed to appear in 1569 (along with Gavin of Falnash and William of Gorrenberry), Scott of Bucleuch was to be liable for £1000. Also in 1569 he was one of the relief pledges listed for Gavin in Falnash (the other 2 being William of Gorrenberry and Gavin Elliott of Skelfhill, who were probably close relatives). Along with several other Elliots he signed the bond with the Regent Morton in 1572. In 1573 he was to be entered into ward in St. Andrews, according to the register of the Privy Council. It is possible he is the ‘Sym Ellot’, who with his brother Will in Dodburn and Archie, was found guilty in 1586 of ‘a great stouth committed by them at the Eschellis’; the Crown was still trying to recover the penalties from their superior Will of Falnash in 1602. Simon ‘Simmie’ of the Park (16th C.) probably related to the earlier Simon of the Park. In 1578/9 there was a restatement at the Privy Council of a pledge that he should be placed in ward with the Laird of Corstorphine; his sureties were Martin of Braidlie and the deceased John of the Park, while Hob of the Park was also mentioned in the same document and so surely related. He was said to have escaped from ward, and hence his cautioners were fined. He could be the same as one of the other contemporary Simons. He is listed as ‘Sym Elliott of the Park’ in 1581 among Armstrongs, Elliots and others who accused the Scotts and their allies. He was surely father of ‘Symmis Rowie’ of the Park, recorded in 1582/3, and possibly also father of ‘Symmis Arche’, who was one of the cautioners for ‘Symmis Rowie’. ‘Sims John Ellot of the Parke’, recorded in 1583, was probably also his son. He was likely related to the other Elliots of the Park who are listed in 1583, namely ‘Grey Willie’, ‘Scots Hobbie’, ‘Jamie of the Park’, ‘Grey Will’s Jamie’ and ‘Hob’s Hobbie’. He is recorded as ‘Sym Elliott of the Park’ in 1586 when his superior Robert of Redheugh was instructed to enter him in court; James of the Park was also listed and presumably closely related. Simon of Philhope, ‘Mertin’s Sym’ (d.bef. 1592) eldest son of Martin of Braidlie. He is first mentioned in 1569, when he was among a number of pledges in exchange for Martin of Braidlie with the Regent Moray. In 1579 his father Martin purchased a 10 poundland of ‘Reuhop or Philop’ from John Turnbull and granted them to him. He is mentioned in 1580 along with his brothers Gavin, Archibald and Robert; in that year they were all implicated in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh. He is ‘Sime Ellot’, son of Martin of ‘Bradley’ in a letter of 1583. In 1586 he was ‘Sym Ellot, sone to the said Martene’ when he occupied the farm of Riccarton Cleuch, which was released to him by Francis, Earl of Bothwell. He was ‘Syme Elliott Martin’s son’ in 1590 when accused of stealing 8 cows from ‘Medupp’ in England, along with ‘Ill-willed Will’ Crozier and ‘Quentin’s Archie’ Crozier. He received a Crown Charter of the lands of Philhope (in the Borthwick valley) in 1591, along with his father. It is unclear if he succeeded to the lands for long after his father’s death. There were Elliots at Philhope for several subsequent generations. His wife’s name is not recorded, but his children included: Martin of Braidley; William of the Binks; and James ‘in Hollis’ (Hollow). His son Martin, along with Robert of Redhengh, made an agreement to bury their differences with Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1599. Simon of Harden (16th C.) listed among the Elliots of Braiddie in 1589. His lands were presumably Harden in Liddesdale. It is possible he is the same man as Simon of Philhope. Simon ‘in Philhope’ (d.bef. 1628) eldest son of Martin of Braiddie and grandson of the earlier Simon of Philhope. He is recorded in the charter for the lands of Philhope in 1592. In 1615 his wardship, which had been in the hands of the Crown since his father’s execution in 1607, was granted to Thomas Armstrong of Craig. He married Elizabeth Chisholme (who was presumably from one of the local families), who survived him, and may later have married Archibald of Philhope. They had one child, Grizel, who was given as ward to Robert of Fahnash when Simon died; she later married Robert of Fahnash’s son John and was heiress of Philhope. Simon ‘Sim’ (16th C.) recorded with a tower in the Debatable Land on Sandison’s c.1590 map, to the north of Larriston. This could have been near Burmoumth perhaps. Simon ‘Sim’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1623 as ‘Syme Elliott, callit Gidy, in Linsburn’ when he was accused of stealing 3 cows from Jock, ‘callit Dod’ from the lands of ‘Buceburne’. He was found guilty along with Abie Armstrong, although Archie Armstrong ‘Raccas’ and Francie Armstrong ‘Tueden’ were acquitted. He was ordered to be hanged for his crimes. Simon of the Binks (d.bef. 1656) 2nd son of William of the Binks, and great-grandson of Robert, 13th Chief. He is first mentioned in 1599 when accused of theft and then in a marriage suit with an illegitimate daughter of ‘Gibbie wi’ ye Gowden Garters’ of Stobs. It is said that he ‘hand-fasted’ with her on condition that he pay a considerable dowrie if was unsatisfied with her (which he was, since he married another woman). This led to him selling Binks to Gilbert Elliott (around 1601), although his son William bought it back. In 1603 he was ‘Sym Elliott of Bankis’ when there was a complaint that he and others had raided ‘Sewing-dene’ in 1601, stealing livestock and goods and injuring several people; ‘Cubbie’s Archie, Sym’s man’ (probably Archibald, son of Cuthbert Armstrong from Bankhouse) was also listed, as well as Armstrongs and others. He was forced to admit that his servant was responsible and was denounced as a rebel. He was on the inquest at the Judiciary Court of 1622 and 1623, when listed as ‘Sime Elliott, Benkis in Thorlieshope’ and ‘callit of Benkis’. He is also referred to as ‘Sym Elliott of Binkis in Thorlieshope’. He was tenant at Thorlieshope (from at least 1622), Larriston (around 1627) and Huddishouse (around 1637). He is referred to as ‘Symione Elliott called of the Benckis in Huddishous in Liddersdail’ in 1637 when his son William purchased Harwood; William may have ‘wadset’ the lands to him and hence he himself was listed as owner in 1643, when ‘Harrit’ was valued at £433 6s 8d. As a result he is occasionally referred to as the 1st Elliot Laird of Harwood. He purchased Lodgegill in 1647 and Cooms in 1650, and together these made up Black Tarras. He is recorded in a contract of 1648 involving the vicarage teinds for Hobkirk Parish, and in a discharge for the teinds in 1649. His sons were: William, more usually called 1st Laird of Harwood; and Robert of Black Tarras, who married Margaret Riddell from Bawlie. His brother Robert is noted in the Register of the Privy Seal as a thief. He also had a daughter who married a Scott, her sons John and William later witnessing a document relating to Harwood (and it is possible this was Rev. John of Hawick). His name is sometimes written ‘Simeon’ or ‘Syne’. In 1656 his charters of Lodgegill and Cooms were confirmed by Cromwell, by which time he was deceased. Simon of Black Tarras (17th C.) probably eldest son of Robert of Black Tarras and Margaret Riddell. He inherited half of the lands of Lodgegill. He is mentioned in 1671 when he brought a case of assault and robbery of his lands of Tarras, Skelfhill and ‘Longkeip-syde’ against Henry in Harwood, Henry’s brother James, John in Diny, Robert of Pingleholes, William of Philhope, John of Brugh and others; this suggests some dispute with his neighbours. He was declared bankrupt in 1690 and the lands of Lodgegill were adjudged to William of Thorlieshope, who settled them on his brother Henry. Simon of Dinlabrye (17th C.) recorded in a letter of 1692 to the Earl of Tarras. He must have been related to William of Dinlabrye, who died around 1693. He may have been the last Elliot Laird of Dinlabrye, who sold the estate to John Oliver in about 1700. Simon of Swinside and the Binks (17th/18th C.) eldest son of William of the Binks and Harwood. In 1670, along with William of Unthank and his son Adam, he purchased Lymiecleuch (including Corriesike, Langbyre and Giddenscleuch) from William Elliott, younger of Stobs. However, he sold his share to William Elliot of Stobs 3 years later. In 1672 he bought Middleknows in Oxnam Parish and in 1674 he obtained a Crown Charter of the Barony of Swinside, designating his eldest son as heir, but retaining liferent for himself. In 1678 he is recorded as owner of the lands of Swinside and Middleknowes in Oxnam Parish, valued at more than £2000. He is ‘Symeon Elliott of Swinside’ when he signed the 1678 marriage contract between the Elliots of Midlem Mill and Harwood. He is recorded as ‘Simeon of Swinside’ in a bond of 1683. In 1690 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire. He was cautioner for a bond between Henry Elliot of Harwood and William Elliot of Biewie in 1692, witness to a bond for Henry Elliot of Harwood in 1696 and cautioner for another in 1696. He registered his arms as Baron of Swinside in 1697. In 1699 he witnessed a disposition for Elliot of Harwood. In 1714 he settled various of his lands on his sons and he sold the lands of Binks to John of Thorliehope, sometime before 1718; however, it has also been suggested that he sold them to Christopher Irving some time before this. He married Jean Elliot (from an unknown branch of the family) before 1672. They had 7 children: William, Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire, who succeeded to Swinside; Adam of Beirhope; Gideon of Harwood on Teviot; Simon, mentioned in 1688 (d.bef. 1714); James, also mentioned in 1688 (d.bef. 1714); Robert of ‘Tyneside’. He married Dr. John Haliburton from Jedburgh and whose son Simon Haliburton married Elizabeth Elliot of Midlem Mill. Simon John of Brugh (1940–) only son of Sir William (Air Chief Marshal). He was educated at Eton and McGill University. He is the present head of the Elliots of Brugh. He married Sonia Annabel Shand in 1972 and their children are Alice Rosalind, Benjamin William and Catherine Camilla. The family live in Dorset. Stuart Douglas (1856–c.1930) son of Cavers gamekeeper Robert and Isabella, he was born in Cavers Parish. He worked in Edinburgh as a Supreme Court Solicitor, and was also a City Councillor there. He was President of the Edinburgh Borderers’ Union for 23 years and Secretary of the Edinburgh Border Counties Association for 25 years. He was heavily involved with the volunteer movement, which he joined in 1876; he was an officer of the 4th Battalion of the Royal Scots (Lothian Regiment), rising through the rank to become Lieutenant-Colonel. In 1882 in Hawick he married Agnes, daughter of William Laidlaw. Their children were Agnes Laidlaw Douglas, Isabella, Edith, Constance R., Florence W., Robert A.D. and William Gilbert. Note that his name is also sometimes ‘Stewart’. Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1528 and 1534 as owner of a tenement in Selkirk. He also witnessed another document in Selkirk in 1528, along with William. Probably the same Thomas was recorded in 1534 as procurator to Gavin in a legal agreement carried out in Hsannidean Kirk; Gavin (who may have been related) made a letter of reversion to William Scott for the 40-shilling lands of ‘Neder Gallelaw’. He is probably the Thomas, Burgess of Selkirk, who in 1535 witnessed a document, in which Walter Scott of Robertson begged for clemency from Robert Hunter, for his part in the killing of Robert’s brother John Hunter; chaplain Matthew was also listed, and perhaps a relative. He may be the Thomas who is recorded in 1535/6 jointly owning 2 rigs of land with his wife Helen Rutherford. He also witnessed another document in Selkirk in 1536. He is probably the Thomas who was listed among the friends who would vouch for Alan Mithag in 1539/40 and who witnessed another transaction in 1540/1. He is probably the Thomas who was deceased in 1541/2 when his son and heir Robert inherited his tenement and 2 rigs; Robert resigned a house to his mother Helen Rutherford, in liferent and in 1561/2 she sold her tenement and rigs to Robert, son of Gavin of Horsleyhill. Thomas (16th C.) recorded in 1541 as a tenant of the lands of ‘Lynedene’ in the Barony of Bowden, along with other ‘Elwalds’. Thomas ‘Law’s Tom’ (16th C.) tenant in Priesthaugh. He was recorded in 1574 as ‘Thome Elliott callit Lawis Thome’ among men who had been ordered to be removed from the lands of Robert of Redheugh. ‘Lawis Jok’ also in Priesthaugh and ‘Lawis Richie’ in Swinstead were also named and presumably his brothers. Their father may have been Lawrence, or perhaps they came from Laws in Liddesdale. Thomas (16th C.) recorded in Yair in 1579 when he witnessed a transaction done in Selkirk. This involved James in Yair, who was probably related. In 1581 he was still in Yair when there was a promise to pay him and James Ker in Yair for the tacks on ‘Brighenucht’ and Lindead Mill by Thomas Ker in Sunderlandhall. Thomas (16th C.) brother of Jock of Copshaw. In 1580 he was among those implicated in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whitwaugh. He is recorded as ‘Thom Elliot of Copshawe’ when accused along with William of Gorremberry, the Armstrongs of Whitwaugh, and others of attacking the farms of the Laird.
of Bellister in England in 1587. He is probably the ‘Thom of Copschaw’ whose son Francis was listed among men who failed to appear at court in Jedburgh in 1611. Thomas of Bonjedward (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1623 when is son Will was found guilty of stealing a horse from Walter Scott of Burnfoot-on-Ale. Thomas (17th C.) servant of Gilbert of Craigend who witnessed a sasine for Applestide in 1632. Thomas of Bewlie (d.1686) tenant farmer at Borthwickshiel, son of Robert in Borthwickshiel and descended from the Elliots of Horsleyhill. He is recorded along with his parents in a list of communicants in the Borthwick valley in 1650. His only known sibling was William, minister at Yarrow, for whom he became executor (for his debts!) after his death. In 1672 he purchased Bewlie from Walter Turnbull of Bewlie and settled these lands on his eldest son William in 1675. In 1676 he was involved in the redemption of annual rent with Isobel Riddell, wife of David Elliot, Burgess of Selkirk (and widow of George Dunn). He may be the Thomas who witnessed a baptism in 1682 in Roberton for Patrick Riddell of Muselee and Marie Elliot (his daughter). He is probably the Thomas who (along with William) witnessed a baptism for James Murray, herd at Borthwickshiel in 1683. He is recorded as Thomas ‘in Borthwickshiel’s’ in an undertaking of 1685 with Henry Elliot of Harwood. He married Margaret, daughter of William Scott of Chamberlain Newton (and she died in 1672). They had 5 children: William, 1st Laird of Borthwickbrae (b.1658); Thomas (c.1660–1723), progenitor of the Oakwood Mill Elliots; Dr. Gideon (d.bef. 1723), of North Sinton; Mary (or ‘Marie’), who married Patrick Riddell (incorrectly recorded sometimes as Nichol) of Muselee; and Susanna, who married William Scott of Stonedge (and whose daughter married William of Wolfelee). His will is recorded in 1686. Thomas of Haydon Bridge (d.c.1688) 4th son of John of Brugh. He may also have been described as ‘of Canonbie Mill’. He married a Robinson. Their children included: George, who was killed in battle; Walter, unmarried; Gilbert, killed at Dettingen; and William, born posthumously, who was a joiner at Haydon Bridge. Thomas (1659/60–1723) tenant of Oakwood Mill, 2nd son of Thomas and Margaret Scott of Chamberlain Newton, and brother of the 1st Laird of Borthwickbrae. In 1719, along with his son Andrew, he witnessed a sasine for Helen, 2nd daughter of James Elliot in Cafrus. Also in 1719 he had a discharge with the Burgh of Selkirk. He may additionally be the Thomas who in 1719 was charged with taking divots off Selkirk Common. He served as Treasurer of Selkirk, as attested in 1734 when his widow had a discharge with the Burgh. He married Jean (c.1660–1743), daughter of Cornelius Inglis of Newton (possibly from the same family who once owned Branxholme); she died in Selkirk in 1743, aged 83 (although she is still recorded in a discharge with the Burgh of Selkirk in 1745). His children were: Thomas in Oakwood Mill, Bailie of Selkirk, who married Bessie Tudhope; William (b.c.1688), 1st Elliot of Wolfelee; Andrew, who married Agnes Shortreed and Mary Simpson; Bessie (b.1697), who died young; Isobel (b.1702); another Bessie (or ‘Elizabeth’, b.1704), who married Robert Shortreed of Essenside in 1723; and Agnes (d.1801), who married John Sibbald from Whitelaw and Walter Cunningham from Hindhope, and had 20 children in total, with Col. Sibbald of Pinnacle being a grandson of hers. He may also have had a daughter Elizabeth who was the 2nd wife of William of Whitlaugh. He is buried in Lindean churchyard, this location suggesting a connection with the family of ‘James Elliott of Bridgheugh’ mentioned by Scott of Satchells. Thomas (17th/18th C.) recorded at Whitmuir Hall in 1709. In that year he purchased meal for the use of the Selkirk Town Herd. Thomas (b.c.1685) eldest son of Thomas in Oakwood Mill and related to the Elliots of Borthwickbrae. He was also tenant in Oakwood Mill, was described as a ‘malster’ (presumably a maker of malt) in Selkirk and was Bailie there from 1721, being mentioned in many records. For example, he was late Bailie when he had a discharge with the Burgh of Selkirk in 1727, the Bailie whose servant was involved with a debt case in 1737, the Bailie involved in a legal case in Selkirk in 1741 and the ex-Bailie asked about non-payment of annual rent on part of Selkirk Common in 1752. He may also be the Thomas recorded in receipts with Selkirk in 1743. In 1708 he married Bessie, eldest daughter of John Tudhope (also a Bailie in Selkirk). Their children were John, John (again), William, Agnes, Jean, Agnes (again), Andrew, Jen (again), Robert, Elizabeth, Elizabeth (again) and Margaret. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident at Falnash Mill. His wife was Helen and their son John was baptised in Hawick Parish (probably at Caerlenrig) in 1720. His wife was probably Helen Allan, and their other children included Jean (b.1717). Thomas (17th/18th C.) wright in Selkirk. He was recorded in 1727 for work done on the herd's house and dam there. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Redfordgreen. He married Margaret Legerwood in Selkirk in 1736 and their son William was baptised in Ashkirk Parish in 1738. His wife may have secondly married James Scott in Wilton. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Harwood on Teviot. In 1740 he was 'at Harwood' when he witnessed baptisms for William Nichol, shepherd at Teinside and for Robert Elliot, tenant at Slaidhills; his brother Francis was also witness in 1740. He was described as 'in Harwood' in 1744 when he leased Northhouse and Suddenrig from the Buccleuch Estates. He was recorded in the list of rental arrears for Northhouse in the period 1745–48. In 1745 he was 'in Harwood' when he witnessed a baptism for Robert Lawson (resident of Teinside). In 1746 he and Francis (also at Harwood) witnessed a baptism for Thomas Reid at Harwood (in Hawick Parish). It is unclear how he was related to other Elliots. Thomas (1723–51) eldest son of William the 1st Laird of Wolvelee. He was a physician. In 1751 he married Helen, daughter of Sir John Elphinstone and whose mother was a daughter of Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto. He died only about 6 weeks after the marriage. A story is told of his wife being accidentally shut in a secret lower vault of Megginch Castle after being instructed to locate some family valuables and papers there, and being rescued by her cousin through chance circumstances. He predeceased his father, his death coming after catching fever in attending to a sick family. In grief, his wife spent a year living in the dark, but survived her husband by almost 56 years. Thomas (18th C.) purchaser of the Langlands estate (later called Wilton Lodge) in July 1783. His lands were valued at £278 12s 8d in 1788 (with much of the former Langlands estate having been sold off to others, but still including Calaburn). He sold that estate again in about 1790 to Lord Napier. He was the probably an illegitimate son of Gilbert, a younger son of William, 2nd Laird of Borthwickbrae and Sarah Growesmith. There is a record of a boundary dispute between him and the Duke of Buccleuch over the Pipewellhaugh and Gardener's Haugh. His father Gilbert is recorded at Langlands on the female servant tax roll for 1785 and 1786, and he himself in 1787 and 1788. He was also taxed for having a footman and 2 horses in 1787 and 1788. In the 1789–92 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick he was listed as 'late of Langlands'. Thomas (1730–1807) son of John of Whithaugh. He was tenant in Twislehope, along with his elder brother John. He was a subscriber to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' in 1784. In 1786 along with John (his brother), also in 'Tweeslihope', he subscribed to a theological book by a Carlisle author. He was listed at Twislehope on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797, and his wife was also taxed for 2 dogs. It is said that Sir Walter Scott visited him at Twislehope on his first trip through Liddesdale. His will is recorded in Peebles Commissary Court in 1809. Rev. Thomas (1731–1808) local minister, 6th son of Robert 'of Carlenrickrig' and Christian Elliot of Borthwickbrae. He may be the Thomas in Stobicote who witnessed a baptism in 1757 for William Grieve and Mary Elliot (probably his sister), with the other witness being Robert Elliot in Winningtonrig (his father). He was licensed by the Presbytery of Jedburgh in 1757, presented to Kirkton on the last day of that year and ordained in mid-1758. Then he was translated to Cavers in 1763. In 1775 he complained that the Parish had had to pay Wilton to borrow its communion silverware and so in 1776 he arranged for the purchase of 4 sliver cups. He paid the Horse Tax in 1785–92. He was said to have gentle manners and great modesty, but also was talented as an astronomer and mathematician. The famous Dr. Thomas Chalmers had his first ministerial duty as his assistant 1799–1800. In 1794 his salary was £83 6s 8d, together with 2 1/2 chalders of grain, his manse and garden and 11 acres of glebe land. In 1760 he married Anne, daughter of William Elliot (2nd Laird) of Borthwickbrae (presumably his cousin). Although she died only a year later they did have a child, William (b.1761), who became an architect in Kelso (designer of the extension to the old Wilton Kirk), and probably the same William became a wright's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1775. He published a description of Cavers for Sinclair's Statistical Account and a paper on practical astronomy, 'New and improved Method of taking Observations at Sea' in the Transactions of the Philosophical Society of Edinburgh. A miniature portrait of him exists. A communion token dated 1761 (the second oldest in existence from the Parish) dates from his ministry. He died in Kelso. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His children included: Margaret (b.1769); James Thomas (b.1771); Thomas (b.1774); William (b.1777); and Isabel (b.1780). It is possible that he was the Thomas who married Ann Veitch in Southdean in 1762. Thomas (18th C.) mason at Newmill. He married Helen Douglas. Their children, born in

Hawick Parish were: Betty (b.1771, with ‘Margaret’ crossed out); Margaret (b.1772); Walter (b.1772); and James (b.1774). The witnesses in 1771 were Thomas Laidlaw and William Riddell. He could be the Thomas who in 1800 witnessed a baptism for Thomas Glendinning, shepherd at Blackcleugh. Thomas (b.1741) from the Ewes valley, son of Robert and Janet Scott. He married Elizabeth (born in Bowden), daughter of Robert Carruthers and Isobel Balmer. Their children included: William (1770–1824), who married Jean Easton; Robert (1781–1858); Elizabeth (‘Betty’, 1782–1843), who married farmer James Scott; Mary (b.1786); and Thomas (b.1791), who married Isabella Aitchison and may have died in the U.S.A. Thomas (1744/5–1800) 3rd son of Robert of Redheugh. His brother John farmed at Redheugh, but he also lived there and farmed Foulshiel. He is the Thomas who was recorded on the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as farmer at Redheugh. He was also taxed for having 3 non-working dogs in 1797. In 1786 he subscribed to a theological book by a Carlisle author. In 1793 his brother John of Redheugh disposed of the stock and household furniture from Redheugh to him ‘in order that he may be enabled with more ease and convenience to live upon the lands of Redheugh’. He married Mary Thomson. Their children included: Jean (1794–1867), who married Thomas Jardine; Robert (b.1794), who married Jessie Elliot and inherited Redheugh from his uncle; and Margaret (1797–1823), who married William Nichol. He and his wife are buried in Castleton cemetery. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Wester Parkhill in 1781 and Parkhill in 1784. He married Margaret Elliot in Roberton in 1775 and their children included Margaret (b.1778), William (b.1779), Agnes (b.1781), Janet (b.1783) and Christian (b.1784). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hawick. He is said to have married Margaret, daughter of William Elliot, cooper in Castleton and farmer at Dinlabyre. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Thomases. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, recorded at Binks in 1783. His children included: Isabel (b.1783); Archibald (b.1788); and Thomas (b.1791). It is possible he was connected to the Thomas of Colterscleuch who lived at roughly the same time. He could be the Thomas, recorded in the Cavers Parish records being rebuked in 1784 for eloping with his pregnant friend the previous year, with their daughter being baptised in Glasgow; his wife was Isabel Dalglish and their daughter was Elizabeth (b.1783). Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at Applethorpe hall according to the 1797 Horse Tax register, when he owned 2 work horses. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at ‘Fenzlehope’ in Castleton Parish, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at Borthwick Mains, recorded on the 1794–97 Horse Tax Rolls. In 1797 he was owner of 4 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid the dog tax at Borthwick Mains in 1797. Thomas (1771–1850) son of ‘Captain’ Robert and brother of Capt. William of Harwood. He lived at Kirndean in Liddesdale. He was a Corporal in the Roxburghshire Yeomanry (Volunteers), directing some of the Liddesdale part of the troop, along with his brother Mark. Together with Robert Kerr Elliot (his nephew) he is recorded loaning money in 1805, which was repaid by James Scott in 1845. He is probably the Elliot from Kirndean who was on the Committee of the Proprietors of Castleton Library. He was farmer at Kirndean listed among heads of households in 1835–41. He is still recorded at Kirndean in Slater’s 1852 directory (even although he was deceased). In 1802 in Southdean Parish he married Helen (1776/7–1849), elder daughter of Thomas Scott of Peel. They had 5 sons and 6 daughters: Esther (c.1803–27); Robert (1805–24), Ensign in the 16th Madras Native Infantry, who died at Wallajabad in India; Thomas Scott (1806–32), who died at Lanton; Elizabeth Pringle (1808–18); Margaret (b.1809), who died in infancy; Margaret (again, 1810–39), who married William Boog of Sweethope; William (1811–71), the eldest surviving son, who inherited the lands of Peel from his uncle Thomas Scott (and the lands later descended to John, farmer at the Flatt in Liddesdale), taking the additional surname Scott; Helen (1813–82), who married John Elliot, tenant in Flatt; Ann Jane (1815–92), who died at Friars Mount, Jedburgh; Christian (1817–86): John (b.1819), 2nd surviving son, who inherited Riccalton from his uncle John Scott, and also took the additional surname of Scott; and Henry (b.1821–63), who farmed at Kirndean for a while. Thomas (b.1766) younger son of William of Whithaugh. He was a doctor in Carlisle. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821 and to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He married Eliza, daughter of Robert Batey of Hightown near Haltwhistle and their children were William (doctor in Carlisle), Robert (b.1811), Elizabeth (b.1813), Margaret (b.1814), Sophia (b.1816), Thomas (b.1817, surgeon in Carlisle) and Jane Isabella (b.1819).
Thomas (b.1771) son of William in Hillhouse and Mary Haliburton. He may have been tenant in Hillhouse for a while, like his father. He died unmarried. Thomas (c.1776–1838) son of Walter, from the Henderson’s Knowe branch. He had brothers Archibald and William. He lived at Coltersuch (where he is recorded in 1800) and Bownhill. He married Magdalene Thomson (1776–1861). The family emigrated to the ‘Scotch Settlement’ in St. Lawrence County, New York in about 1815 and eventually settled in Andes, New York, where he died. His children were: Mary, who married shepherd Walter Scott in 1822; Walter (1798–1858), who lived at Niagara, Ontario; Betty (b.1800); James (1802–28); William (1809–19). Thomas (19th C.) owner of property on Slitrig Crescent, marked in Wood’s 1824 map at around No. 10. It is unclear who he was, since he is not listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory or the 1841 census. He could be the Thomas from Hawick who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. Thomas (1804/5–bef. 1861) originally from Ireland, he was a hosiery worker in Hawick. In 1841 he was on the High Street in Mather’s Close. In 1851 he was at Lynwood Cottages. However, in 1860 he moved to Bonthec, where he was postmaster and letter carrier for the Rule valley. He was first to introduce a spring cart to the district and would carry passengers to and from Hawick. However, the venture was not a great success and he gave up, eventually moving elsewhere. In 1824 he married Margaret Hume, from Cavers Parish. Their children included: James (b.1825), who was a merchant at the Sandbed; Elizabeth (b.1827); Mary (b.1829); Peter (b.1831); Robert (b.1834); Rev. William Hume (1837–1927), minister at Ramsbottom; John Little (1839–60); Thomas (b.1842); Michael (b.1844); George Lewis (b.1846); Michael (again, b.1849); and Betsy (1852–57). Thomas (1807–91) son of William and Jean Easton, he was farmer at Mangerton. He was recorded as shepherd at Mangerton among heads of households in 1835–41; his brother Robert was also listed as a shepherd. In 1841 he was listed as a labourer at Mangerton. In 1851 he was farming 115 acres there, and employed 5 labourers. In 1852 he was listed as miller at Mangerton Mill and was listed at Mangerton in a directory of 1868. In 1838 he married Janet (1815–47), daughter of joiner John Douglas. Their children included: William (1839–1923), who died at Gattonside; Elizabeth Beattie (1841–1911); Jean Easton (1842–1910), also died at Gattonside; Helen Douglas (1844–1917), also died at Gattonside; Janet Anne (1846–97); and John (1847–1904), who worked for a bank in London and married Margaret Eliza Middleton. Thomas (1811/2–76) grocer in Newcastleton, probably son of joiner Andrew. In 1851 and 1861 he was at about 14 South Hermitage Street. In 1841 he married Hannah Storey, who died in 1882, aged 61. Their children included: Mary (b.1843); Andrew (1845–1930), who married Margaret Glendinning; Betty (b.1847); Margaret (b.1850); Thomasina (b.1853); Arkle; Helen; Hannah Janet (b.1862), who died in infancy; and John James (1865/6–1944), who died in Longtown. The family are buried in Etton Cemetery. Thomas (1815/6–87) son of John, who farmed at Highfield, Crinkledyke and Deadwater, and grandson of Robert in Hermitage. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1852. In 1861 he was at Under Hindhope in Oxnam Parish. He succeeded his brother John as farmer at Nether Hindhope in Oxnam Parish. He married Elizabeth Turnbull from Redmoss. Their children included: John (1859–1918) in Hyndhope; Thomas of Attonburn, who married Jane Robson from Bellingham; James; Mary; Margaret, who married Dr. J.P. Elliot from Bellingham; Robert Turnbull of Chatto; Jean (d.1913); Elizabeth (d.1870); Susan, married A.O. Rutherford; William Scott (1876–1912); Walter of Toft (b.1878). Arthur of Hindhope (1880–1968); and George of Alnham Moor and Brockdam (1883–1933). Dr. Thomas (1817–59) son of a doctor who came from Whitehaugh in Liddesdale. He was probably born in Carlisle. He studied in Edinburgh and Paris and then took up a surgeon’s practice in Carlisle, in partnership with his brother William. He became known as a pioneering ophthalmologist, who had an early understanding of how to cure strabismus (squinting). He was on the Carlisle committee for the proposed railway between Hawick and Carlisle. There was a typhus outbreak at the age of 42 and he had a plaque to his memory in Carlisle Cathedral. Thomas (19th C.) wright recorded in Newcastle in Slater’s 1852 directory. It is possible he is also the Thomas listed as grocer in the same directory. Thomas (1821–69) elder son of Robert of Redheugh and Jessie Elliot. He was born in Castleton and inherited Redheugh jointly with his brother John. In 1851 (while living at Redheugh with his father) he was already listed as farmer of 90 arable plus 1200 moorland acres, and employer of 4 labourers. He was on the Borders Union Railway Committee for Liddesdale in the 1850s. He was a Justice of the Peace in Roxburghshire. He married Elizabeth Kyle and their children included: Robert, who inherited Redheugh and married Effie McGregor Corbett; and Anna Mary, who sold Redheugh in 1918. He died at Knockton, just a few days after his father. He is buried in Castleton cemetery along with his wife. Arthur (1864/5–93), who died in India and is marked on the same gravestone, was probably another son. Thomas (1825–64) younger son of Robert and Janet Black. He was a grocer in Hawick. In Slater’s 1852 directory he was listed on the Fore Row as a grocer and spirit dealer, and in 1851 he was also listed as a blacksmith. In 1847 he married Helen Welsh and their children included: Helen Broad (b.1848); Robert (b.1850); Janet Blake (b.1853); and an unnamed child (b.1855). He was buried in the Wellogate (although the inscription is illegible). Thomas (c.1827–89) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Elizabeth Armstrong (c.1819–1919), who died at Glendivian. Their children included Mary (b.1851) and probably Maggie (1866–86). He died in Langholm. Thomas Robert Barnewall 8th Laird of Harwood (1871–1924), only child of Robert Henry of Clifton Park. He succeeded his father to Clifton Park and his uncle William (7th Laird) in Harwood. He was also referred to as ‘of Clifton’. He sold Harwood to William Elliot of Muir Glen in 1924. He married 3 times: firstly in 1892 to Rose, 3rd daughter and co-heir of Col. John Joicey of Newton Hall, Northumberland, and she died in 1912; secondly in 1915 Dagmar, daughter of C.E. Ahlborn of Landekrona, Sweden, and she died in 1937; and lastly in 1942 to Mrs. Helen Campbell. He had 7 children: Robert Barnewall of Clifton Park, who lived in Carmarthenshire; Liet.-Comdr. James Kerr; Thomas William Henry; Rose Adelaide Maud; Frances Eva; Lieut. Charles Edward of the K.O.S.B.; and Diana Catherine. Walter (13th/14th C.) recorded in the Ragman Rolls as William ‘Alight’ or ‘d’Alyth’ (in Perthshire) when he swore fealty to Edward I in 1296. It seems likely that he was a direct ancestor of the Elliots of Roxburghshire. He was imprisoned at Tonbridge Castle and his younger brother Thomas was taken to Kenilworth Castle. The family lands at that time were ‘Alyth’ or ‘Eliot’ in Perthshire, although they were probably granted Redheugh and associated lands in Liddesdale by Robert the Bruce in the early 1300s. He further paid homage to Edward in 1304. In 1306 he is listed among the adherents of Bruce who forfeited lands, and it was probably in the few years following that he was granted Redheugh. There are no recorded links between him and the later Roberts of Redheugh; however, it may be that his descendants were called Robert in honour of his patron. His son Thomas is recorded as a witness to a Perthshire charter in 1304. Walter (15th/16th C.) recorded in a list of owners of crofts and rigs in Selkirk in about 1529. His name appears as ‘Watte Elwand’ and he owned a rig at ‘quhitreig’. Walter (16th C.) recorded in 1563/4 when his wife Christine Robertson was involved with a transaction for lands in Bowden. Walter (17th C.) Factor and Chamberlain to Robert, Earl of Roxburghe. In 1637 and 1638 he was involved with discharges with the Treasurer of Selkirk. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Margaret Wilson and their children included Elizabeth (b.1635); Janet (b.1644); Janet (again, b.1646); John (b.1648); James (b.1651); and Marion (b.1655). Walter of Arkleton (1634–1702) second son of Adam Elliot of Meikledale, his mother being a daughter of Glendinning of that Ilk. In 1669 he bought back the lands of Arkleton (from Francis Scott), which had previously belonged to the Elliots; he was described as ‘indweller in Arkleton’, showing that he already lived there. In 1671 he paid tax on £700 of land for Arkleton. He probably had the old tower rebuilt as a farmhouse, which contains a stone bearing the date 1676 and initials ‘W.E.’ and ‘K.F.’ (for him and his wife). He registered arms in 1676 and in 1694 documented how the estate was to be inherited after his death (excluding his eldest 2 sons). He contributed £100 to the Darien Scheme in 1695. In 1698 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire. In 1670 he married Katherine, daughter of Arthur Foster of Stanegarthside. Their children were: Adam of ‘Tyneside’, who married Ann Drury; Arthur of Harwood, who married Anne Disney; William of Arkelton (d.1721), who married Anne Ainslie of Jedburgh; Nichol in Unthank, who married Jane Lithgow; James, who married Miss Chambers; Walter, who died unmarried; Henry, Robert and Gilbert, who all died young; Jeanette, who married Gideon Scott (later of Falnash), brother of Walter of Harwood; Helen, who married Andrew Murray of Tundergarth by contract of 1679; and Mary, who married Robert Graham of Slipperfield. He is buried in Ewes churchyard, along with his wife and several children. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Helen Grieve and their children included: William (b.1671); Margaret (b.1673); and Adam (b.1675). Walter (17th/18th C.) 4th son of William of Unthank. He was described being ‘of Carowoodrig’, which was Carewoodrig. He died unmarried. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was at Commonbrae in 1704 when he witnessed a baptism for Robert Scott in Blackcleugh and in 1708 when he witnessed a baptism for Thomas Telfer, workman in Blackcleuch. Walter (17th/18th C.) miller of Hawick Mill. He was recorded as an elder of Hawick Parish in 1711. He was ‘tacksman if ye mill’ in 1709 when he witnessed a baptism for undermiller Walter Riddell (along with the other undermiller, James Paterson). He was also ‘tacksman if ye milne of Hawick’ in 1711 and 1714 when he witnessed baptisms for Archibald Aitkin, undermiller in Hawick (with Walter Riddell as the other undermiller). He was called ‘tacksman of ye milne and customer of Hawick’ in 1712 when he asked the Session to find him and his family specific seats in the Church ‘seeing he was burdensome to others’. It thus appears that he was tenant at Hawick Mill and also a weaver of some sort. Robert, who was ‘Tacksman of the Mill and Lands of Hawick’ around 1720 was probably his son. Perhaps the same Walter was recorded as Bailie in 1707 when he witnessed a baptism for miller Walter Riddell, along with miller James Paterson. Walter of Ormiston (17th/18th C.) son of Henry of Harwood. He witnessed his brother’s marriage in 1700 and a bond by his brother in 1703. The connection with Ormiston is confusing, since it was probably his son Walter who acquired Ormiston from the Gledstains of Cocklaw. He is said to have married the 1st daughter of Andrew Kerr of Lindean (whose first name is not recorded); however, this may be confusion with later family connections with Currie descendants of Kerr of Lindean and Whitemuir. They are said to have had 4 sons, all of whom died without a male successor. However, it seems likely that he was succeeded by another Walter, who was one of the founders of carpet-making in Hawick. Walter (17th/18th C.) Bailie-Depute of the Regality of Hawick. He is often referred to in Parish records as simply ‘Bailie’, but held the office of the representative of the Baron, rather than Magistrate of the Town. He is recorded as ‘Bailie, substitute of Gideon Scott of Falnash’ in 1700/1 when he presided over a criminal court in Hawick, banishing an offender (who had been in irons for 10 days) from the town. He was ‘bailie of the regality of Hawick’ in 1703 when he witnessed a baptism for miller Robert Deans. He is recorded as ‘bailie’ when he witnessed a baptism for Bailie Robert Ruecastle in 1705, for wright John Pringle in 1707, for Glover John Scott in 1708 and for shoemaker John Scott in 1708. In 1709 he was ‘bailie deput of the regalitie’ when he witnessed a baptism for schoolmaster John Purdom and also ‘bailiff’ when he witnessed baptisms for wigmaker John Scott, for Henry Orrock and for tailor John Scott. He was also ‘Bailie’ when he witnessed baptisms in 1709 for Bailie Robert Ruecastle and for John Scott ‘Whitegate’, in 1711 for Walter Stoddart (herd in Harwood), in 1713 for his namesake the merchant Walter Elliot and in 1714 for candlemaker John Scott and for Bailie George Martin. He was ‘bailie of ye Regalitie’ in 1713 when he witnessed a baptism for carrier David Minto. He witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Robert in 1717. He is described as ‘bailie-deput of the regality of Hawick’ in 1718, when he witnessed a baptism for merchant William Dickson and also when his servant John Turnbull was rebuked by the Hawick Parish Session. By 1721 he was ‘late Baillie Depute of the Regalitie’ (probably meaning he had given up the office, rather than being deceased) when he was recorded having provided ‘as much oak as was ane axtree to the great church bell in the year 1718’ (i.e. the axle for the bell). He may be the same as one of the other Walters. He married Marie Lindsay, and their son Francis was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1701; he was there described as ‘bailie’, with the witnesses being Francis Elliot ‘in Hawick’ and James Ogilvie. He may also be the merchant in Hawick whose son Gideon was baptised in 1700, with witnesses Gideon Scott of Falnash (after whom the child may have been named) and Bailie Walter Graham. Walter (d.1741) son of Henry of Peel. He was a naval surgeon on H.M.S. Wager, which shipwrecked off Patagonia. This event became infamous because of what followed, with the survivors marooned on an island in the southern winter. There was a mutiny and the crew split into groups. Walter was among officers who were set adrift before regrouping with some of the men and trying to row up the coast of Chile. After suffering several mishaps and enduring horrendous weather Walter became ill and was ashore with 4 officers when the 6 other men rowed off in the boat, never to be seen again. He died of starvation, while the others traded their last possession, a musket, and were taken in a canoe and were imprisoned by the Spanish, eventually to return to Britain. John Byron (later Vive-Admiral and grandfather of the poet Lord Byron) wrote ‘he died the death many others had done before him, being quite starved. We scraped a hole for him in the sand and buried him in the best manner we could’. Walter (17th/18th C.) farmer in Brugh. He was 3rd son of William in Whitehaugh and Braidlie (who repurchased Redheugh) and descended from the Elliots of Fahnash. It is unclear whether he farmed at Brugh or if the appellation was just to distinguish him from other Walters. The name of his wife is not recorded. He had 7 children (the order of births being unknown): John, farmer at Adderstoneshieł, who married Helen Moffat from Garvald; Robert (b.c.1700), who married Elizabeth Scott from Doorpool, and whose children lived in Hawick; Adam in Hartside, who married Mary Pott; George, who lived in Cuba; Helen, who in 1727 in Hawick Parish married James Gray, tenant in Whittalaw; William (b.1710) who was a cooper and married Hannah Scott; and Gilbert (b.1725) who was tenant in Blackburnfoot and married Betty Forbes. William was baptised in Kirkton Parish and Gilbert in Cavers. Walter (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He married Bessie Scott in 1712. Their children included: Janet (b.1713); Archibald (b.1715); John (b.1717); Margaret (b.1719); Jean (b.1724); Marie (b.1726); Bessie (b.1728); and Agnes (b.1730). The witnesses in 1713 were Bailie Walter Elliot (who was therefore clearly a different man, but perhaps related to him) and Francis Elliot. Walter (1702–bef. 21) only son of Adam of Teindside and grandson of Walter of Arkleton. He was baptised in Hawick Parish. He died before marrying and was succeeded by his sister Katherine. Walter (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Broadlee in 1726 when his son James was baptised. There are several other children baptised in the parish who could be his. Walter of Ormiston (d.1777) probably son of Walter, he was one of the founders of carpet manufacturing in Hawick. He (or perhaps his father) obtained Ormiston after 1734, when the last of the Gledstains of Cocklaw died, and he proceeded to build a mansion house there in 1747. Before that he was tenant in Bellendean and Braidhaugh. He was in Bellendean in 1736 and 1741 when two of his children was baptised in Robertson Parish. He is probably the Walter, tenant in Bellendean, who was recorded as brother of Isobel, when she married Walter Turnbull of Firth in 1738. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. In 1766 he wrote to the Duke of Buccleuch, in response to a suggestion that a woollen factory be developed on one of the Duke’s estates, proposing that Hawick would be the perfect place. He formed a partnership with others in 1769 (perhaps earlier), constituting the main Hawick carpet factory. He was one of the Commissioners appointed in the court case regarding the division of Hawick Common in 1767. In 1735 in Roberton he married Margaret (b.1716), daughter of George Currer of Hartwoodburn. Their children (mostly baptised in Robertson) included: James (1736–1782), who inherited Clerklands; Andrew (b.1739); Simon (b.1741); Walter (1744–80), who died at Bellendean; and Helen (b.1747), who married Thomas Currer (perhaps a cousin), Bailie of Selkirk. The first 3 children were baptised at Bellendean and the last 2 at Braidhaugh (in Cavers Parish). He secondly married Isobel or ‘Tibbie’, (probably youngest, b.1708) daughter of William Elliot of Borthwickbrae, and she died in 1797 (being referred to as ‘Mrs. Elliot of Ormiston or Isobel Elliot of Borthbrae’. ‘Mrs Elliot of Ormston in Hawick’, who paid the female servant tax in 1789 and 1791, was probably his wife. Walter (18th C.) married Isobel Hogg in 1750, both being from Wilton Parish. Walter (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Southdeanrig in 1757. His children included John (b.1757). He was probably related to William, who was at Southdeanrig at about the same time. Walter (b.1731) son of William from Robertson and Bessie Scott from Wilton. He was a resident of Wilton Parish. His children were born at Alton, ‘Moortown’ (probably Moorfarm or Muirfield) and Wester Groundstone. In 1758 he married Helen (or Elinor or Nelly) Robertson (or perhaps Robison) in Ashkirk Parish. Their children include: Elizabeth (b.1759); Elspeth (b.1761); Janet (b.1765); Violet (b.1773); Nelly (b.1776) and Mary (b.1779). John (b.1771), baptised in Robertson, son to Walter in Mabonlaw, may also have been his child. He may also be father of William (b.1767), also baptised in Robertson, son of Walter at Whithope. Walter (18th C.) farmer at Henderson’s Knowe, near Teviothead, where he is recorded in 1778. He married Isabel Grieve and their children included: Thomas (b.1776), farmer at Colterscleuch and Bowenhill; Christian (b.1778); William (b.1780), miller; Margaret (b.1783); John (b.1788), who emigrated to New York State; and Archibald. Walter (18th/19th C.) cooper at Dinlabyre. He is probably the farmer at Dinlabyre, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John is recorded separately as farmer there (and with more horses), and so presumably a near relative. He married Isabel Douglas and their children included: Christian (b.1777); Adam (b.1779); John (b.1781); Adam (b.1790); and probably Catherine, Margaret, Henry, Elizabeth and Walter. He may be the son of Adam in Hartsdie born in 1762 (but that would make him too young to have married by 1777). Walter (1753/4–97) younger son of Robert in Hermitage and brother of John. He was probably tenant at Hermitage and also at Millburnholm. He was at Millburnholm in 1786 when he subscribed to a theological book by a Carlisle author. He is probably the Walter listed as a farmer at Hermitage on the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls; he owned 2 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He married Helen Crozier (c.1767–1851) from Brighouse. Their children were: Robert (1791–1858), who married Mary Murray from Whisgills and farmed at Hermitage; Jean (1792/3–1872), who married Henry Elliot from Colterscleuch; John (1795/6–1834) in Templehall; and Helen (b.1797/8), who married Walter Scott, from Newton near Hawick. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1783 he married Janet Blaikie, who was from Wilton Parish. Their son William was baptised in Kirkton Parish in 1802. Their daughter was Margaret (b.1803) and Isobel (b.1805), of whom Adam Brown painted miniature portraits, as well as Janet (b.1807). He is listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. His wife Margaret carried on the business and is listed in the 1837 directory. Lt.-Col. Walter of Old Melrose (1766–1809) christened in Roberton, he was a younger son of John Elliot of Borthwickbrae. He became Lieutenant Colonel in the 22nd Regiment of Foot (the same rank reached by his elder brother William, who changed his surname to Lockhart). He was recorded among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1788. In 1788 he was already listed as owner of Old Melrose. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and in 1819 (when already deceased). He was still listed in 1811 as owner of Old Melrose. He died unmarried. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. He married Jane Haig. Their children included: Christian (b.1793); Robert (b.1795); Mary (b.1797); Adam (b.1800); Margaret (b.1802); Walter (b.1804); William (b.1806); and Christian (again, b.1811). Some of these baptisms did not include the wife’s name, but seem likely to be the same family. It is possible that Jean, born to Walter and Jean ‘Harg’ in Ashkirk Parish in 1789 was also their child. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick. In 1818 he married Euphemia, daughter of James Laidlaw and Margaret Scott from Hobkirk Parish. They had 3 daughters and 1 son: Anne; James; Janet; and Margaret, who married James Kennedy and had 11 children. He was deceased by 1841, when his wife is listed as a seamstress at Mill Bank along with his daughter Janet. Walter (b.1787) probably son of James and Helen Elliot. In 1851 he was living at ‘Dinleahaugh’ (i.e. Dinleyhaughfoot). He married Janet Dinwoodie (b.1801), from Dumfriesshire. Their children (some of whom were born in Langholm Parish) included: Walter (b.1833); William (b.1835); James (b.1836); and John (b.1838). Walter (18th/19th C.) toll-keeper in Newcastleton listed among heads of households in 1835. He may be the same as the shepherd at Castleton Townfoot in 1836 and 1837, farmer at Greenholm in 1838 and 1840, and labourer in Newcastleton in 1841. Walter (18th/19th C.) recorded as a flesher in Denholm in 1837. Sir Walter 4th Laird of Wolvelee (1803–87), collector, Indian archaeologist, naturalist and sportsman. Born in Edinburgh, he was eldest surviving son of James, the 3rd Laird. He spent his early life at Hartridge near Jedburgh and was educated at Haileyburn in England. He had an illustrious career in the Indian Civil Service 1821–60, working with the Board of Revenue and as private secretary to Lord Elphinstone. He was later Vice-Chancellor of Madras University and a Member of the Council of the Governor of Madras, briefly serving as Provisional Governor. Early in his career he was Elliot was appointed private secretary to Lord Elphinstone (a distant cousin), Governor of Madras. He eventually rose to become a Member of the Council of Madras, which was the highest position a civilian could attain. He was responsible for rescuing the Amaravathi Marbles (now in the British Museum), compiled a history of the coins of southern India, donated his Indian coin collection to the British Museum and wrote an important work of ethno-botany 'Flora Andhiharica' (1859). His hunting trophies from India were fixed around the entrance hall and staircase at Wolfelee. He only succeeded to the estates at the age of 52, and appointed William Oliver of Langraw as factor. In 1860 he returned permanently from India and retired to the family home at Wolfelee, where he had the House altered and extended and immersed himself in natural history and other projects. He was a Vice-President of the Archaeological Society. He donated several items to the Museum, including the bronze horde found near the summit of Ruberslaw in 1863. His collections have been the focus of an exhibit in the Museum, these included stuffed animals, Indian weapons and coins, and he also owned several Raeburn paintings. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1861. He became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1862. He also served as a Justice of the Peace, Commissioner of Supply and Tax Commissioner for Roxburghshire, as well as Deputy-Lieutenant for the county. He was heavily involved with the construction of the new Hobkirk Kirk in 1863, and was said to have an 'unwavering belief in the truths of Christianity'. In 1867 he contributed a sketch of the history of 'Denholm and its Vicinity' to the Berwickshire Naturalists' Club. In 1868 he also gave land for the erection of a new Wolfelee Free Kirk. In 1871 he published a call for cooperation among regional societies of naturalists. He was listed as owner of Wolfelee on the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874. By 1875 he also owned part of Kirknowe, Wester Swanshiel and half of Langraw. He was also on the committee for the Upper Teviotdale Fisheries Association. He was knighted (as a Knight Commander of the Star of India) in 1866, waqqqs a Fellow of the Royal Society, as well as several other learned societies and was awarded an Honorary Doctorate by Edinburgh University in 1878. In 1885 he published a final volume of 'Coins of Southern India', revising the proofs by ear, since he was quite blind by then. In 1839 (in Malta) he married Maria Dorothea (1816–90), daughter of Sir David Hunter-Blair of Blairquhan (grand-daughter of Sir James Hunter-Blair, Provost of Edinburgh). They had 6 children: James Thomas Spencer (1845–92), who succeeded; Walter Blair (1847–1869), Navy Lieutenant, who died at sea; Edward Hay Mackenzie (1852–1920), who succeeded his brother; Dorothea Helen, who in 1866 married William Eliott-Lockhart, 6th Laird of Borthwickbrae; Herman F., who served with the Black Watch and died childless in Mauritius; and Caroline Elizabeth, who married he cousin Arthur von Poelnitz. Lady Elliot was known as an outspoken woman, who shared in some of her husband’s interests and made Wolfelee an open house for visitors to the district. Sir Walter became blind in old age, but retained his memory to the end, which came suddenly. He is buried in the kirkyard at Chesters. His collection of the coins of Southern India was gifted to the British Museum. A limited-edition book ‘Sir Walter Elliot of Wolfelee: A Sketch of his Life and a few Extracts from his Notebooks’ was written by Robert Sewell in 1896. Walter F., (1804–74) son of John, he was born in Hobkirk Parish and was a joiner in Chesters. In 1841 he is recorded as farmer at Abbotrule and in 1851 as joiner at ‘Abbotrule (penticle)’. In 1827 in Hobkirk Parish he married Margaret (1803–80), daughter of George Minto. Their children included: Helen (1828–1915); John (1830–1910); George (b.1831); William (b.1835); James (b.1837); Walter Henry (b.1841); Robert Henderson (b.1843); and Margaret (b.1849). He emigrated to the U.S.A. with his family in 1852, joining his brother John, who had gone out about a decade earlier. They settled in Otsego County, New York. Walter (b.1811) son of John and Margaret Forrest, he was born in Castleton Parish. In 1841 he was a quarryman at Stitcheshill Quarry. In 1861 he was listed as a blind quarryman, living with his mother on South Hermitage Street. Walter (b.1819/20) born in Castleton Parish, he was shepherd at Lairhope in Teviothead Parish in 1851 and 1861. He married Elizabeth (or ‘Eliza’) Elliot and their children included: William (b.1843); Jane (b.1845); Thomas...
Elliot (b.1847); Walter (b.1850); James (b.1853); Margaret (b.1856); Jane (b.1858); and Elizabeth Turnbull (b.1862). Walter (1828–93) son of Robert and Mary Murray. He was farmer at Hermitage in 1861, having taken over from his father. In 1861 he was living there with his sister Mary, a domestic servant and 3 farm workers. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1866. In 1864 he married Agnes, daughter of John Armstrong and Janet Glendinning. Their children were: Robert (b.1865), who also farmed at Hermitage; Mary Murray (b.1867), who married John G. Wilson, manufacturer in Hawick; Janet Glendinning (b.1869), who died aged 14; and Ellen (b.1873), who married Archibald R. Oliver Rutherford of Dinlabyre. Walter (1840–99) son of Andrew, farmer at Twislehope. He was recorded as farmer at Twislehope in 1868. He married Anne Brown and their children were: Andrew (b.1874); James (b.1876); Eliza (b.1878), who married Thomas Potts; Elizabeth Jane (b.1880), who married Christopher Hether and Archibald Bridges; John (b.1881), married Anne Gwilliam; Anne (b.1883), married William Broatch; Sarah (b.1885), married Edmund Harvey Thompson and lived in Galt, Ontario; Walter (b.1887), married Gertrude Gwilliam; Agnes (b.1889), married Dennis Rivers Le Deau; Janet, died in infancy; and David (1898–1918), killed in action in France. In 1905, after his death, most of his family emigrated to Canada. Walter Nichol (1846–82) son of William and Christian Crozier, he was born in Liddesdale Parish. He married Mary Cowan, who died at the Golf House, Hawick in 1933, aged 85. Their daughter Jane Tait died in Hawick in 1892, aged 21. He himself died at Millburn. Walter Blair (1847–69) 2nd son of Sir Walter of Wolfelee. He was born in Madras, served in the K.O.S.B., based poet and historian. He spent his early life in the Ettrick valley, served in the K.O.S.B., then worked as a fencer and woodcutter, before a fractured skull led him to change career to becoming a museum assistant, performer and writer. His books include Clash-ma-clavers chap book' (1985), ‘Song for Yarrow’ (1991) and the series of guide-books ‘Ballads Trail’ (2000), ‘James Hogg Trail’ (2000) and ‘Sir Walter Scott Trail’ (2000), as well as in ‘Jorum: six poets in Border Scots’ (2000). William (13th/14th C.) Burgess of Perth who signed the Ragman’s Rolls in 1296. His name is recorded as ‘William Aligh’. Since there is a strong suggestion that the Border Elliots came via the Perth and Angus areas, it seems possible that he was the direct ancestor of the first Laird of Redheugh, perhaps given lands in Liddesdale by Robert the Bruce in the early 14th century. William ‘One-Eyed’ (14th C.) recorded in Cumberland in 1389, appearing before the justices of gaol delivery. His nickname was recorded as ‘monoculus’ and his surname as ‘Elwald’, the same as Richard ‘parvus’. William of Gorrenberry (15th C.) recorded as ‘Willelmo Elwaldo’ in 1484 when he was one of the men directed by the Earl of Angus to infeft Robert of Redheugh in the lands of Larriston. In 1489 he was one of the men further directed to infeft Robert of Redheugh in other lands, there recorded as ‘Willelmo elwald de gouniberry’. He may also be the William who was witness (along with Ninian, Robert, John and Andrew ‘Elwald’ and others) to a sasine for the lands of Robert of Redheugh in 1497. He was probably closely related to the Elliots of Redheugh and Larriston, as were the later Elliots of Gorrenberry. However, it has also been suggested that this branch of the family was one of the ‘twelve great families’ of Elliots who came to Liddesdale in the 14th century. William (15th C.) recorded in the records of the Justice-aire held at Jedburgh in 1493. Hector Lauder was allowed to ‘compone’ for several crimes, including associating with him and ‘alias fures de branxhame’ (i.e. other thieves of Branxholme). In 1494/5 John and Thomas Liddersdale in Hawick were allowed to ‘compone’ for aiding the ‘elwaldis de branxhame’ in their crimes. It thus appears that there was a branch of the Elliots living near Branxholme at that time, although it is unclear how they might have been related to other Elliots. Perhaps the same William ‘elwald’ was recorded at the Justice-aire held in Selkirk in 1494/5 when John Hervey in Fairnilee had remission for crimes that included resetting him and Robert Heiton. William (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Willehmi elwald’ in 1494/5 when he failed to appear along with 85 other Elliots, Armstrongs, Wighamols, Croziers and others. This resulted in fines for the Lord of Liddesdale (Patrick, Earl of Bothwell) and the Captain of Hermitage (George Turnbull of Hallrule). His name was given first, suggesting he may have been an important member of the clan. Ralph, listed as brother of William in 1494/5 may have been his brother. Perhaps the same William was also described as ‘Wilzam Elwald’, son-in-law of George Armstrong in a document of 1500, listing pledges of good behaviour made to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell. Several other men of the same name are mentioned in that document, e.g. William and David, sons of William (who may have been his sons, but without further designation it is impossible to say). William (15th/16th C.) son of William. He was listed among many men of Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5 to answer for their crimes. It is unclear which William was his father, but David (also son of William) was probably his brother. William ‘Siders’ (15th/16th C.) listed among a large number of Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. He is listed as ‘Willehmi elwald syders’. He is also recorded in the 1498 pledge to Patrick Earl of Bothwell, along with many other Elliots, Arm- strongs and others. He is listed there as ‘Wilzam Elwald, Siders’; the designation is possibly the same as ‘Side’. William (15th/16th C.) listed in 1501/2 as ‘William Elwalh his follower’ when Andrew Kerr of Fernihirst received the lands of Feu-Rule from their superior, Sir William Douglas of Cavers. He may have been acting as Kerr’s Bailie. He may have been the same as one of the other contemporary Williams. William (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Willemno elwald de lahope’ in 1502 when he was surety for Gilbert. His lands may have been Langhope (or perhaps Ladhope or Lawhope or somewhere else). Probably the same William was accused in 1502, along with James Foster, of stealing a horse from David Brown, out of Edinburgh, with William Turnbull ‘de lahope’ as surety. He may be the same as one of the other Williams. William (15th/16th C.) brother of Robert. In 1502 he was surety for his brother Robert, who was convicted of stealing 5 cows from John Spedding out of Blackhaugh. He may be the same as one of the other Williams. William (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘in Ramsigill’ in a list of Elliots and others given respite for their crimes in 1510. Since Robert of Redheugh is listed with only a small number of other Elliots, this might suggest he was closely related to the chief, as well as to Robert of Dinlees and John in Sundhope. He may be the same William ‘in Rammilgill’ recorded as a tenant of Whitrope in 1541; the other tenants were Leon, John and Robert. He must have been related to Robert who was also ‘in Rammisgill’ in 1541. William of Larriston (15th/16th C.) second son of Robert of Redheugh, 11th Chief, recorded in 1511. He is listed as brother of Robert of Redheugh in a ‘respite’ given in 1515/6. In 1516 he had a further respite in the Register of the Privy Seal, where he is ‘William Elwald of Larestans’. A number of other Elliots are also listed, specifically those at Mossopatrick, Dinlees, Thorlieshope, Sundhope and Heughhouse and ‘Bagget’, and others bound to them, including men by the name of Forester,
Elliot

Thomson, Gledstains, Turner, ‘Leche’, Atkinson, Caverhill, Rowill (presumably Rule), Lawson, Wilson, White, Telfer, Nixon, Henderson, Simpson, Hunter, Davidson, ‘Billip’ (i.e. Billhope), Warwick, Dickson, Noble, Burn and ‘Purdoun’ (Purdon). He was probably serving as chief of the Elliots in 1516, since Robert of Redheugh (his nephew perhaps) had been killed at Flodden, and the next in line Robert was probably still a minor. He probably led the clan during the minority of the next Robert of Redheugh (probably his grand-nephew). He may be the William of Lariston who is recorded in 1547, along with William ‘younger’ (so presumably his son). He is said to have married the heiress of Robert Scott of Horsleyhill and to have had one son, whose son was Gavin, the first Elliot of Horsleyhill (if this was not William, then perhaps he had another son). He may be the Elliot of Lariston whose daughter married Sir Walter Scott of Howpasley. William (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘William Elwald in M’Patrick’ in a ‘respite’ of 1516 to William of Lariston and a large number of neighbouring Elliots and others. He may be related to the William in Mosspatrick recorded in 1541. William (15th/16th C.) listed in a 1516 ‘respite’ to William of Lariston and several other Elliots of Liddesdale. He appears as being ‘in Heuchous’, this probably being Heuchhouse near Dinlabyre. The later Martin of Heuchhouse is surely his descendant. William (16th C.) witnessed a document in Selkirk in 1528, along with Thomas. Perhaps the same William is recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books for 1535, along with Percival (probably a relative), Andrew ‘Louche’, Patrick Gourlay and others, accused accused of taking grain from ‘le Schaw’ belonging to John Hall. They claimed that Hall reaped grain that they had sown themselves. He may also be the William who promised to pay James Dunlop for his butter in 1544. In 1544/5 he had a bond to return an Englishman to his captors, Walter Scott of Branxholme and ‘Perse Elwand’. He may also be the William who purchased a half tenement of Branxholme and ‘Perse Elwand’. He may also be the Englishman to his captors, Walter Scott of Horsleyhill and to have had one son, whose son was Gavin, the first Elliot of Horsleyhill (if this was not William, then perhaps he had another son). He may be the Elliot of Lariston whose daughter married Sir Walter Scott of Howpasley. William (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘William Elwald in M’Patrick’ in a ‘respite’ of 1516 to William of Lariston and a large number of neighbouring Elliots and others. He may be related to the William in Mosspatrick recorded in 1541. William (15th/16th C.) listed in a 1516 ‘respite’ to William of Lariston and several other Elliots of Liddesdale. He appears as being ‘in Heuchous’, this probably being Heuchhouse near Dinlabyre. The later Martin of Heuchhouse is surely his descendant. William (16th C.) witnessed a document in Selkirk in 1528, along with Thomas. Perhaps the same William is recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books for 1535, along with Percival (probably a relative), Andrew ‘Louche’, Patrick Gourlay and others, accused accused of taking grain from ‘le Schaw’ belonging to John Hall. They claimed that Hall reaped grain that they had sown themselves. He may also be the William who promised to pay James Dunlop for his butter in 1544. In 1544/5 he had a bond to return an Englishman to his captors, Walter Scott of Branxholme and ‘Perse Elwand’. He may also be the William who purchased a half tenement from Alison Turnbull in 1545. William (16th C.) son of Alexander. He was a servant to the Thomas Armstrong of Mangerton, listed along with a large number of Armstrongs and others who were denounced as rebels in 1535 for a raid on Craik. ‘Law’s John’ was also listed, and so possibly a relative. William ‘Mend the caill’ (16th C.) named along with Robert ‘de Flaswod’ in a trial in Jedburgh in 1535. Robert Scott of Allanhaugh was accused of assisting them in stealing 5 cows from ‘Corsle’ (probably Corslie on the Gala Water) from John Veitch. They were probably among the thieves of Liddesdale who it is claimed that Scott brought to attack Midlem and other places. His nickname may refer to the vegetable ‘kale’. William (16th C.) recorded in 1537/8 as being ‘in Layheuch’ (i.e. Leaugh) along with brothers James and Simon. They were entered by Robert of Redheugh and his brother Archibald for breaking open the shop of Thomas Graham in Selkirk and stealing 100 merks worth of cloth, hides, etc. They were also bound not to harm Thomas Graham or his friends and servants in the future. He was presumably related somehow to the Redheugh branch. William (16th C.) referred to as ‘Williame Ellot callit Bruk’ in 1540/1 when he had respite for treasonable acts, including not being at the Solway raid and associating with the Douglases. One possibility is that his name is associated with ‘Brugh’. William (16th C.) recorded in Selkirk in 1540/1 when he was given respite for being at the horn. He had been tried in Kelso, but since then had found surety. It is unclear where he was from. William (16th C.) tenant of Mosspatrick recorded in the rental roll of Liddesdale in 1541. Williams with no designation are also listed as tenants of several other farms, including ‘Pantodene’, Singdean, Heuchhouse and the small steadings of Clearlands, etc. It is unclear if some of these were the same men. He was probably related to the William recorded in Mosspatrick in 1516. William ‘Cock’ (16th C.) recorded in 1541 along with Willie ‘White Sark’ and Clement Crozier, accused of having killed Englishman Robert Hall at ‘Tredermayn’. His name is listed as ‘Willkoke Elwald’, which seems likely to be a combination of his forename and nickname. The same ‘Wilcakes Elwald’ was listed along with Clem Crozier and Robin of Thorlleshope, accused in 1541 of resetting English fugitive Robsons. He may have been related to ‘Cock’ Crozier and it seems likely he was father of ‘Wilcokis Hob’ recorded in 1569, as well as ‘Wilcox’ Gawen Elloit’ recorded in 1587/8. He may be the same as one of the other Williams. William ‘White Sark’ (16th C.) recorded in 1541 along with ‘Wilkoke’ and Clement Crozier. They were accused of having raided ‘Tredermayn’ and killed Englishman Robert Hall. His name is given as ‘Willy Elwald called ‘whitsarke’. William (16th C.) recorded in 1541 as a tenant of the lands of ‘Lyndene’ in the Barony of Bowden, along with other ‘Elwalds’. William (16th C.) listed in 1544 as ‘William Elwode John Crossier sister sone’, when he was among local men who gave their assurances to the English. The John mentioned here, who was presumably his mother's brother, was a prominent member of the Crozier family at that time, possibly the son of 'Cock Crozier', who seemed to be chief of the Slitrig valley branch of the family a generation earlier. William (16th C.) resident of Whithope recorded in 1549, among a list of the tenants and servants of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme who complained about the Kers ravaging their farms. William of Larriston (16th C.) recorded as 'Elliot of Larestanis' in 1556 when he had a bond for entering William Nixon to John Kerr of Ferniehirst. He may have been the son of the previous William of Larriston, and the 'younger' mentioned along with William of Larriston in 1547. He is probably the 'yowng Wylliam Elwand' involved with a bond to enter some Elliots as prisoners at Ferniehirst in 1546; however, his brother Simon was witness on his behalf. He also (along with Robert of Redhughe and Archibald) had a bond to enter Robert Crozier as a prisoner in 1548; he signed with the help of the notary (meaning that he could not write). Around the late 1550s he was one of the men on the panel to resolve the conflict over the lands of Newbigging (in Hassendean) between the children of Gavin of Horsleyhill. He may be the 'Williame Ellot, callit Woddir-nek' listed (after Robert of Redheugh) in 1561 among a list of men charged to appear before Queen Mary regarding the state of the Borders. He is surely the 'William Elliot of Lamestone' recorded in part of the trial for the murder of David Scott of Hassendean in 1565, along with Gavin of Horsleyhill and William of Falnash. For his non-appearance John Douglas of Cavers and William Douglas of the Crook were fined and he was denounced as a rebel. However, he may be confused with William of Braidlie, who was also described as being 'of Larriston'. William ‘Elder Will’, ‘the Tod’ (d.bef. 1586) recorded in 1561/2 in a bond between Elliots and the Kerrs of Ferniehirst to enter a Routledge. The other Elliots were Archie in Falnash, Archie’s son Gavin, and John of Copshaw (all of whom may have been relatives). He is also recorded in 1567 when his son John was captured in Hawick for being a Liddesdale thief. In 1569 he was ‘elder Will Elliot’ when he was pledge ‘for himself and his haill branche’, with Alexander Home of Manderston as his surety. Also in 1569 he was ‘Elder Will the Tod’ when held in Blackness Castle as pledge for his eldest son and also ‘David Carling his brother’. In 1570 he was among a group of Elliots who signed a bond related to the release from ward of his son Hob, as well as John of Heuchhouse. There was surety for one of his sons (name not given) in 1577, according to the register of the Privy Council. He may be the ‘Will Elliot, callit the Eldar Tod’ whose son John is recorded in pledges in 1578 and 1580. In 1578/9 he was among 22 Border Lairds who did not appear before the Privy Council when summoned. He had been among the sureties for an earlier assurance for his son Hobbie, as well as John of the Heuchhouse. He is also recorded in 1580/1 when his son John was convicted of riving. In 1581 he was ‘Will Elliott, called Elder Will’, among a large group denounced as rebels for failing to present men to answer their riving crimes. His sons David and Martin signed the bond of assurance to the English Wardens, taking ‘the burden upon us for ourselves, brethren, and brethren bainres and servants. He is probably the ‘Willie the Tod’ from Liddesdale who was already deceased in 1586 when his son William was granted a lease of the lands of ‘Culgatis’. He may be the Will of Heuchhouse accused along with Martin’s Archie in 1590, of stealing from ‘Hal-liden’ and additionally he was named among Elliots, Nixons, Shielis and others who in 1590 were accused by the tenants of Woodhall of stealing from them; however, these are probably his son William. The Will of Heuchhouse accused (along with Rich and others) accused of raiding into England in 1595 may have been his son William. William ‘Wedder-Neck’ (16th C.) listed in 1563/4 along with George in Adder-stoneshiel, Alexander and 2 Croziers. They were to be presented by John Gledstains of Cocklaw to answer accusations brought against them by Englishman William Selby. His name is recorded as ‘Will Elliot, callit Woddir-nek’. William ‘Will’ (16th C.) listed in 1563/4 along with George in Adderstoneshiel, Alexander and 2 Croziers. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Elliots. His name is recorded as ‘Will Elliot, callit Woddir-nek’. William ‘Will’ (16th C.) listed in 1563/4 along with George in Adderstoneshiel, Alexander and 2 Croziers. They were to be presented by John Gledstains of Cocklaw to answer accusations brought against them by Englishman William Selby. His name is recorded as ‘Will Elliot of the Burnmouthis’, which seems likely to have been Burnmouth near Saughtree (although perhaps there was another place of the same name in the Slitrig valley, where the Gledstains’ lands were). William (16th C.) listed as ‘bastard sone to vmqle Robert Elliot’ in the 1564 trial for the murder of David Scott of Hassendean, along with Elliots of Horsleyhill and others. His father may have been Robert, 15th of Redhugh. He may be the ‘William Elliot of the Redhugh’ who was among several Elliots accused by the English in 1581 of stealing cattle and goods from ‘Symwhaite’. He may also be the William, brother of ‘Robin Elliot’ accused of raiding Englishman Andrew Taylor’s livestock and goods in 1582. William (d.1580) 5th Laird of Horsleyhill, he was the 2nd son of Gavin, the 1st Laird. He is presumably the William, along with his father Gavin and brothers Andrew and Robert, accused of murdering Hugh Douglas in about 1547. In the late 1550s he was involved in the family dispute over the lands of Newbigging in Hassendean and in 1563 was arguing with John Scott in Catslack. He is probably the William of Horsleyhill who witnessed a bond in 1561/2 between several Elliots and the Kerrs of Ferniehirst. He is probably the William of Horsleyhill recorded in the Register of the Privy Council in 1563/4, along with his brother Robert, in a case involving the Scotts of Tushielaw stealing cattle from Bailielee; their cautionser was John Preston, Burgess of Edinburgh. In 1564 he was listed as ‘fadir brother and tutour’ to Gavin, son of the deceased Robert of Horsleyhill; this was in connection to the complaint by John Turnbull of Hassendean against Dand (who was also his brother). In 1564 it was presumably he (although the Lairdship around this time seems hard to follow) who was found guilty of involvement in the murder of David Scott of Hassendean; also involved were Robert, Gavin and Archibald, who were probably his brothers. He was banished after this, but was pardoned in 1565 by Queen Mary (perhaps because of his marriage to a Kerr). He purchased the lands of Horsleyhill from his nephew William, initially in 1568 for a period of 15 years, finally buying them outright from William’s wife Margaret Turnbull in 1570/1. In 1569 he also bought the Middle Mains of Hassendean from his nephew. In 1572/3 he promised the Regent that his family, servants and tenants would continue to be obedient subjects, with Thomas Weir of Kirkton as cautionser (it is unclear what events this was in response to). In 1574/5 he was involved in a court case where Scott of Buccleuch claimed some lands; he was able to prove that he was infested in Westerhouses, Clarilaw and Hassendeanburn, but his superior, William Douglas of Cavers, was instructed to remove him from the lands of Catslack. In 1575 he was one of the men summoned by the Privy Council to settle the feud between the Elliots and the Pringles; his brother Gavin was also summoned. In 1575/6 he was a complainant regarding ‘mails’ for his steadying of Easter Mowntbenger. He may be the William ‘of Torslyhill’ (if this is an error for ‘Horsleyhill’) on Monipennie’s c.1597 (but drawn up earlier) list of Border Lairds. He married Elizabeth Kerr sometime before 1556, and secondly in 1569 married Elizabeth, daughter of James Douglas of Cavers. He had at least 2 children: Robert, who succeeded; and William of Caveling, (b.1572), Burgess of Peebles, who married Christian Chisholme. James in Peebles may have been another son. William ‘Will’ (16th C.) tenant of Gavin of Elliot of Falnash in 1569. The Laird appeared in Hawick to give surety for his tenants. His name is recorded as ‘Wille Elliot’ and he may have been related to Dand, Jock and Hob, other Elliots also listed as tenants. William ‘Ringan’s Will’ (16th C.) mentioned in 1579 when his son ‘Archie Elliot, sone to Ringhanis Will the portar’ was among Armstrongs and their compatriots who promised to yield to Lord Maxwell. He is separately recorded in 1579 as ‘Ringanis Will Elliot the portar in Glenvoran’. He may have been related to Ninian, tenant in Ewesdoors and Glenvoran (with Will, son of Ringan the Porter also named in the same citation). Possibly the same ‘Ringanis Wille Elliot’ was listed in 1611 for not appearing at court in Jedburgh. William ‘Grey Will’ (16th C.) recorded in 1569 when John of the Park was held in Balwearie Castle, as pledge for him and ‘Hob Mirk Elliot’. He was listed in 1574 among Scotsmen who were reset in England. His name there is given as ‘Will Elliott, called Gray Will’. He is also listed in 1583 among the Elliots of the Park branch. His name is given as ‘Will Elliot, gray Wille’. He is probably father of ‘Grey Will’s Jamie’, who is also listed. He is ‘Gray Will’ when listed along with Jock of the Park in a list of Borderers in the 1580s. William (16th C.) recorded in Lindean in 1580/1 when he had a marriage contract with Helen, daughter of Robert Fletcher, witnessed in Selkirk. William ‘Jock’s Willie’ (16th C.) listed in 1578 among Border Lairds who promised to meet to suppress lawlessness on the Border, after being released from being warded with George Ramsay of Dalhousie. He was also warded with George Ramsay of Dalhousie in 1580, when ordered to be presented to the Privy Council. He was recorded in 1581 when he was released from being warded as pledge for the ‘gang’ of Elliots of Burnhead. Hob, brother of Gavin’s Hob (this may be an error for Gavin’s Jock) of Ramsiegill remained as pledge for these Elliots. Also in 1581 he was ‘Will Ellott, called Jokkis Willie, pledge for the hail gang of rampsygill’. He was also recorded in 1582/3, when Martin of Braidlie, Gavin’s Jock and Robert Elliot is first mentioned around 1556 and probably still son of Archibald of Falnash and Gorrenberry. He ‘Airchie’s Will’ of Gorrenberry (16th C.) 2nd Will-berie’. He is probably related to the William with ‘Archie Keene’ under the heading ‘Gorum- of Border chiefs (published around 1594) along as being ‘of Morspatrikshors’ in Monipennie’s list Laird of Balmuto (John Boswell). He is recorded his son James is recorded being warded with the In 1587/8 he was ‘Will of Mospatrikhoip’ when caused the Scotts and their allies of various crimes. In 1590/1 he was ‘of Gorromberry’ when witnessing a bond of his father’s in 1561/2, and hence must have acquired Gorrenberry by then. In 1567 Robert Scott of Thirlestane and Master Thomas Weston relieved Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme as surety for him and Sim Elliot in Dodburn. He is recorded in 1569 within an agreement in Riddell between James Riddell in Maxton and John Riddell in Newton Mill. He may have lived near Riddell, or otherwise was from Selkirk. William (16th C.) recorded as ‘Will of Devisleyes’ in Monipennie’s list published about 1594 (although probably compiled earlier). He is listed among the Elliots of Ewesdale. It is possible that the place is a misreading of ‘Ewesleses’. William (16th C.) son of ‘Jock’s Willie’, although it is unclear to which branch of the family he belonged. In 1580/1 he was sentenced to imprisonment for theft, along with several other Elliots, Armstrongs and Nixons of Liddesdale. William ‘Will’ (16th C.) tenant in Mosspatrickhope in 1581 when he appeared on a list of Armstrong, Elliots and others who accused the Scotts and their allies of various crimes. He and 2 others gave assurances for the Elliots of Gorrenberry to the English Wardens in 1584. In 1587/8 he was ‘Will of Mosspatrikohip’ when his son James is recorded being warded with the Laird of Balmuto (John Boswell). He is recorded as being ‘of Morspatrikshors’ in Monipennie’s list of Border chiefs (published around 1594) along with ‘Archie Keene’ under the heading ‘Gorumberie’. He is probably related to the William who was tenant in Mosspatrick in 1541. William ‘Aircie’s Will’ of Gorrenberry (16th C.) 2nd son of Archibald of Fahnash and Gorrenberry. He is first mentioned around 1556 and probably still alive in 1596. In about 1556 he is ‘Vil Elliot callit Arche Wille’ when, along with Walter Scott, he rented ‘Westcoit’ in Ringwoodfield from the monks of Melrose. He is probably the William ‘callit Archeis Will’ listed in 1561 among men charged to appear before Queen Mary regarding the state of the Borders. His brother ‘Gawin El-wald’ also appeared before the Queen in 1561, promising to provide the names of thieves. He was ‘of Gorrumberry’ when witnessing a bond of his father’s in 1561/2, and hence must have acquired Gorrenberry by then. In 1572 he was one of the designated relief pledges for Gavin of Fahnash in 1569. Along with several other Elliots he signed the bond with the Regent Morton in 1572. He is probably the William ‘of Gorumberry’ who was to be entered into ward in St. Andrews in 1573. In 1574 he was involved in a dispute with William Douglas of Cavers over the lands of Caerlenrig (which had been held on wadset by his father from Douglas’ father). Douglas tried to have him removed from the lands, and in 1576 the case was still not settled, with his sisters having to confirm that he was still alive. He may be the William in Gorrenberry who was one of the men summoned by the Privy Council in 1575 to resolve the feud between the Elliots and the Kerrs and also summoned with other Border Lairds (including Robert of Redheugh and Martin of Braidlie) to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. He is recorded as ‘William Elliott of Goddamburie’ when accused along with Tom of Copshaw, the Armstrongs of Whithaugh, and others of attacking the farms of the Laird of Bellister in England in 1587. He was said to have been part of the group who raided Carlisle Castle to free ‘Kinmont Willie’, being named by an English informer as ‘Will Ellott goodman of Gorrombye’ (although he is likely to have been too old to take part himself). In 1590 he and Simon Armstrong of Whithaugh were accused of rieving from the Lord Warden’s tenants. In 1590/1 he was ‘of Gorrumberry’ among men that the Earls of Bothwell and Murray were to enter before the Privy Council; he is probably also the ‘Will Ellot of Fallinesche’ who along with Walter Chisholme of that Ilk, was ordered to present his brother Archie. He is probably the William ‘o Gorramberrie’ in 1599 (unless this was a son) among Elliots who signed a bond at Branc- holme with the Warden of the West March regarding the inhabitants of Liddesdale; along with Robert of Redheugh, Martin of Braidlie and Jock of Copshaw he was listed as one of the ‘principallis of oure brencche’. His son may have been the ‘Willie’s Archie’ who, along with many other Elliots, signed bonds with Scott of Buccleuch in 1599; he did this with his hand on the notary’s pen ‘because I can nocht wryte my selff’. He is the ‘doughty Willie o’ Gorrenberry’ in some versions of the ballad ‘Jamie Telfer in the Fair Dodhead’.

William ‘Will o the Steele’ (16th C.) recorded in 1569 when he and his brother Hob of the Shaws were excepted from the pledge that John of Thorlshope had for the whole of that branch of the Elliots. A letter from Sir John Forster in 1576 complains that his brother John ‘Elwood’ had stolen 100 sheep from his lands in Hexhamshire. In 1581/2 his son Will was listed among men accused of raiding Harwood-on-Teviot. He was listed among the Elliots of the Braeild branch in 1583. In 1584 he was among the Elliots of the Thorlshope branch who gave assurances to the English Wardens at Hermitage. In 1590 there is a complaint by the tenant of Birdoswald about a raid into England made by both old and young ‘Will Ellot of the Steill’ in 1588, and in 1590 there was a further complaint against ‘Will of the Steile the elder, and his son Will’. The younger William is also recorded on his own in a further accusation in 1590, while he was accused in 2 separate cases, where he is ‘elder Will of the Steile’ (and ‘Steill’) and in a further complaint of 1590 (for stealing from Englishman John Armstrong 2 years earlier) where his is just ‘Will of the Steill’. Both he and his son were among men accused in 1590 of having raided the farm of Dotland a couple of years earlier. Both he and his son are on a 1590 list of Elliots (including from Redheugh and Braeild) accused of raiding the English farm of ‘Whynatlie’ in the previous year. Also in 1590 he is ‘old Will Ellot of the Steile’ listed among Elliots and Arm- strongs complained about by a large group of Englishmen for a raid on Blackleugh in Kirkhaugh. Hence it seems likely that all mentions of Will of the Steele after that date are probably for his son. William (16th C.) recorded as possessor of the fields in ‘rindail’ near Hermiston for which in 1580 Patrick Johnstone gave sasine to his father John Johnstone’s wife Marion Wilson. William ‘Will’ of Hartsgarth (16th/17th C.) probably 2nd son of Robert (15th) of Redheugh. He was hence brother of Robert (16th) of Redheugh, as well as ‘Gibbie wi the Gowden Gairties’, Archibald and Gavin of Brugh. He was sometimes referred to as ‘Robyn’s Will’ and was recorded as early as 1581. He was said to have ridden with his brother on raids into England and the pair were involved in a dispute with Scott of Buccleuch. In 1581 he is probably the Robert , listed along with Gavin as brothers of Robert of Redheugh in 1581 when they witnessed the sasine for Gavin Gledstains inheriting Stobs (with Gavin of Baillielie, Robert of Redheugh and 2 tenants of Swinstead also acting as witnesses). In a letter from Musgrave to Queen Elizabeth’s Chancellor he is ‘Wille Ellot of Harstkarth’, brother of the chief. He was accused of leading a group of Liddesdale and Teviotdale men on an attack into Mindrum in England in 1583/4, in which several men were killed and a number taken prisoner; these being freed by the King and the Warden had orders to get him to repay what was stolen, but that had still not been done by 1590/1. In a letter from the King in 1584 he is described as ‘Will Ellot of Hartstarth bry’ to Robene of Reidhwech’. He was ‘of Harkescar’, called Robyns Will’ when accused of being on a raid on the tenants of Featherstonehaugh in 1587; Martin’s Airchie was also there, as well as 160 others, and it is claimed that they burned 23 houses and took 3 prisoners. In 1586 his brother Robert of Redheugh was instructed to enter him in court. He served as a guardian for his nephew Robert (17th) of Redheugh; in about 1590 he was listed as ‘Will Ellot of Hartstarth, tutour of Rei- dheuch’ among the landed men of the Borders. In 1590/1 he was ‘Will Ellot of Haitscarth’ among men that the Earls of Bothwell and Murray were to enter before the Privy Council. In 1591/2 Wal- ter Scott of Goldielands acted as surety for him. In 1593 he was ‘of Lariston’ when accused of being involved in the death of Charltons in England, along with Scott of Buccleuch. He was also ‘William Ellot of Lawreston’ when accused in 1593 (along with Martin of Braidlie and Kinmont Willie Armstrong) of leading about 1000 men in a raid on Redesdale, taking 1005 head of cattle, 1000 sheep and 24 horses, as well as burning a mill and stealing £300 worth of goods. In 1593 he was ‘of Hartscarth’ when accused of killing 2 Tynedale men called Dods. In 1594 there was a complaint against him by Englishman Gilbert Park of ‘Warton’. In 1595/6 he complained about men of Tynedale who was stolen cattle from him, and was himself involved on a retaliatory raid into England; he was there ‘Will Ellot of Larrestone alias Harskarth’. He was ‘of Larestone’ in 1594/5 when there was an attempt to deliver Jock Graham as prisoner in his stead. He is probably one of the 2 Williams who signed a bond written by Sir John Forster to try to end family feuds on the Border in 1595/6. He appears to have held Hartsgarth through wadset until 1595/6, when it was gained by William of Larriston (son of Martin of Braidlie). In 1597 he (along with his nephew Robert of Redheugh and John of Copshaw) wrote from Larriston to the English Warden, explaining that they had sworn to the Scott of Buccleuch that they would not have dealings with any Englishmen. He was also known as William ‘of Rigg’ until 1622, when Winningtonrig was sold by his brother, and he received 2500 merks for his share. In 1605 he represented his mother, Marion Hamilton, in a complaint against the Douglasses. He was recorded in 1618 among a large group of Elliots and others who John Scott in Newark complained attacked his farm at Foulshiels in Liddesdale, beating up one of his workers there; not appearing, the accused were denounced as rebels, but he and Robert of Redheugh appeared later and the horning was suspended. Some time before 1608 he married his half-cousin Jean, daughter of Robert Rutherford of Edgerston, with her mother being a daughter of Gavin Elliott of Stobs; this may be garbled into him being the ‘William called ‘Neck of Steel’, a son of Robert Elliott of Lariston’, who is said to have married Joan, daughter of Thomas Rutherford, the ‘Black Laird’ of Edgerston. He may have married a second time, since in 1642 the deceased Jean Rutherford is described as his 1st wife. He probably had children, but this branch of the Elliots was extinct by 1634 (as stated in the matriculation of arms for Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs in 1673). Note that some genealogies suggested he had 3 sons, including William of Roan, but this may be confusion with another William, perhaps the son of Martin of Braidlie. His children probably included: Robert (d.beef. 1637), who succeeded; Francis, who succeeded his brother; and James, who was ‘second lawful son’ in 1639. William ‘Willie’ (16th C.) son of William, ‘callit the Tod’. He is probably the eldest son (name not given) of ‘Elder Will the Tod’, who, along with his brother ‘David Carling’, were the pledges for whom their father was held in Blackness Castle in 1569. In 1586 he was granted a lease of the lands of ‘Culgatis’ in Liddesdale by Francis, Earl of Bothwell. It is unclear where exactly these lands were. Given a connection with ‘Tod’, it is probable he was son of ‘Elder Will’. William (16th C.) tenant in Dodburn. In 1586, along with his brother Archie, he was accused of ‘a great strough at the Eschelles in England’. William of Falnash (probably their laird) was surety for them at the Justice Court in Jedburgh. By 1602 the Crown was still trying to get William of Falnash to pay the £60 for him and his brothers Archie and Sim, for ‘a great stouth committed by them at Eschellis’. William (16th/17th C.) recorded in an indenture of 1594/5 between the Scottish and English Wardens. His name is written as ‘Wille Elliott, called Cowsauche’ when he was delivered as a pledge for the crimes of Hob (who may have been related). Probably the same man was ‘Will Ellott, called Cowsauche’ listed among Liddisdale men declared as fugitives for not attending a court in Peebles in 1605. He may be related to John ‘Cowshawes’ who is recorded in 1590. William ‘Will’ (16th/17th C.) recorded along with ‘Riche Ellott of the Hewghhouse’ in 1595, as well as another Elliot called Hob. They were accused of stealing horses from a farm in England. William of Braidlie (d.1606/7) 2nd son of Martin, who was probably responsible for the burning of Hawick in 1565. He was known as ‘Will o the Dale’, as well as being ‘of Larriston’, ‘of Hartsgarth’ (although this may be confusion with a different man, brother of Robert of Redheugh) and later ‘of Dinlabyre’. He may be the ‘Will El- lot of Bradelie’ who entered the bond of 1557 to bring ‘Robene Pet’ to the Warden, John Kerr of Ferniehirst (although that seems too early, and hence may be a different William). Along with several other Elliots he signed the bond with the Regent Morton in 1572. In 1574 he was one of the hostages taken by the Regent Morton to ensure the good behaviour of the clan and was held by James Scrimgeour, Constable of Dundee. In 1578, there was a pledge to the King to meet with other Border Lairds to promise to suppress lawlessness on the Border, with his cautioner being James Scrimgeour, Constable of Dundee; he was there referred to as ‘sone to Martine Elliot of Braidley’. However, within a few months he headed 200 men on a raid into Tynedale. He may have spent time in the wars in Flanders and France, since he is not recorded for more than a decade. He was ‘of Larriston’ in 1593 and 1594 (making him possibly confused with another family branch). He led the Elliots and Armstrongs in a massive raid on Tynedale in 1593, with as many as 1,000 men taking part; they drove more than 2,000 head of livestock back to Scotland, as well as taking £300 in goods. In 1595 he was ‘of Lareston’ when his servants John and Clement Nixon were complained about for a raid into England. In 1595/6 he may be the same man as ‘William Elliot of Harscat a principal actor in the attempt of Tyndale’ delivered by Scott of Buccleuch to Sir John Forster (this is presumably Hoscote, but it is not entirely clear if this is the same or a different William). In 1596 he was ‘Wile Elliott of Lairston’ when (along with Walter Scott of Harden and the young Laird of Whithaugh) accused of stealing a large number of cattle and horses from ‘the Leabecke at Wilkinkskarre’. He was ‘Will Elliott of Larestane’ in 1597 among a list of men the English Warden demanded pledges for. He is probably the ‘William Ellwald of Dunelabye’ listed among 5 Scotsmen delivered by Sir Walter Scott to the English Deputy Warden in 1597 as hostages for the general peace on the Border. He remained a prisoner for more than 2 years, despite pleas by several Elliots for his release. In 1598/9 he was ‘William Elwood, elder’, (to distinguish him from a younger of the same name) among a group of Scotsmen who tried to escape from their English prison. In 1600 there was an offer to substitute his son Robert, which was rejected; however, he and Simon Armstrong of Whithaugh escaped soon afterwards. He may also be the William ‘of Eskez’ listed in 1600 (along with William of Clintwood and Simon Armstrong of Whithaugh) as the men delivered by Scott of Buccleuch to the English Warden as pledges for Liddesdale; after his escape from York he is described as ‘Will of Hescottes an Elwood’, suggesting he is the same William who was tenant in Hoscote (but then the designations become hopelessly confused!). In 1606/7 he was one of the leaders in Liddesdale who were rounded up and executed by the Earl of Dunbar, then Commissioner on the Border. He married Mary, daughter of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, and their children were: Robert of Dinlabyre; Gavin of Braitle; and William of Braitle. He was hanged at Foulend Justice Court along with his nephew Martin and other Elliot and Armstrong leaders. William (1546/7–aft. 1616) 4th Laird of Horsleyhill, son of Robert, he succeeded from his brother Gavin when he was 19. In 1566 he was served as heir to Gavin in a Precept of Clare Constat of the Middle Mains of Hassendean and of Horsleyhill, from the superior, Alexander, Lord Home. He then settled the ‘4 merk land’ of Horsleyhill on his wife, Margaert Turnbull. There is no record of children for the couple. In 1569 he gave a charter of the lands to his uncle William and in 1570/1 his wife sold Horsleyhill to his uncle William. However, it appears he also sold Horsleyhill and the Mains of Hassendean to his uncle Gavin in 1572, with his uncle William taking the case to court, with Gavin’s infeftment being annulled in 1574/5. In 1573 he also sold Caveling to his uncle William. He may be the William of Horsleyhill who is recorded in a bond of 1594/5, when James Gledstains of Cocklaw pledged that Hector and Richard Turnbull of Clarilaw would not harm him or Gavin Elliott of Stobs. In 1616 he is recorded acknowledging the redemption of the reversion of the Middle Mains of Hassendean, granted by his grandfather Gavin of Horsleyhill to Lord Home in 1555. He may be the William of Horsleyhill whose son Robert ‘Ellet’ is among those listed in the King’s 1594 ‘respite’ for the murder of Lord Maxwell at Drye Sands; if so, then he had at least one child. William ‘Will o the Steele’ (16th/17th C.) son of the elder William. In 1588 both old and young ‘Will Elliot of the Steill’ were complained about for a raid. In 1590 he is recorded as ‘William Elliott of the Steile the younger’ among a group of Elliots and others who took livestock and goods from Over Warden in England. Also in 1590 both he and his father were accused of leading a raid on Catton, where they took livestock and prisoners. He was further accused in 1590 (along with Shiels and Nixons) of stealing from Roland Walker. Both he and his father were accused in 1590 of being in a group of Elliots and others who raided Dotland about 2 years earlier. He is listed along with Elliots and others accused in 1590 of stealing from the ‘Hewrde’ family, maiming and taking prisoner Christopher ‘of the Whithall’. Both he and his father are on a list of Elliots (including from Redheugh and Braitle) accused of raiding the English farm of ‘Whynatie’ in the previous year. In 1596 there was a complaint that he and others (including Anthony Elliot of Binks and Geordie Simpson) had raided lands in England at King Water. In 1597 he is listed among men for whom the English Warden demanded pledges. In 1597 he was ‘William Ellwald of Steale’ when he was among 5 Scotsmen delivered by Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch to the English Deputy Warden. However, he was recorded as ‘Will Ellwood alias Will of the Stile’ when released on a bond to return to Scotland; however, he soon led a raid into Tynedale, taking 200 head of cattle and 30 horses in broad daylight, so that the English Wardens called for his execution. He may have escaped punishment, since he is recorded in 1599 as ‘Will of the Steill’ when, along with many other Elliots, he signed a bond with Scott of Buccleuch. William of Braidlie (16th/17th C.) son of William of Braidlie and Dinlabyre. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Williams. William of the Binks (16th/17th C.) 2nd son of Simon of Philhope and grandson of Martin of Braidlie. This line of Elliots of Binks is easy to confuse with the slightly later line that came from the Elliots of Falnash. His wife’s name is not recorded. Their children were: Anthony ‘in Rouchlie’; Simon of the Binks (d.bef. 1656); James; and Robert (d.1663). William ‘Will’ of Fiddleton (16th/17th C.) recorded occupying Fiddleton in 1567. In 1578/9 John Carmichael, younger of that Ilk was caution for him, that he would not raid into England. He was ‘Will Ellot of Fydderton’ listed in 1586 among ‘principalallis of the brokin men of the west marche’ in a document by King James VI instructing his Lieutenant on the Border. He was complained about for a raid into England in 1589. He is probably the ‘Will of Fyfttington’ listed among a large group of Elliots who were accused in 1590 of taking Ralph Hall and other prisoners and ransoming them. Also in 1590 he was listed first in a group of Elliots and about 80 others accused of stealing from ‘Trowhen’ and killing 2 Englishmen in 1589, with the complaint repeated in 1590; he was there ‘Will Elliott of Fydderton’. Additionally in 1590 he was the first in a list of Elliots, Armstrongs and Croziers, said to be 200 strong, who were accused of raiding the towns of ‘Allenton’ and ‘Linbriggs’, taking 100 cows, 20 horses and 20 prisoners. He was also listed among Elliots, Armstrongs, Turnbulls, Laidlaws and Croziers, accused in 1590 of riving from the Laird of ‘Troghwen’ and Hedley of ‘Garret Sheills’; he was also among a group accused of having earlier stolen livestock and goods from the same people. Also in 1590 he was listed along with other Elliots, Croziers and Armstrongs, accused of taking cows and horses from the tenants of Woodhall and Netherhouses in England. In about 1600 Sir James Sandilands complained about the theft of 2 horses by him. He was ‘Will Ellot of Fiddiltoun’ in 1602 when Robert of Reidheugh was declared to be answerable for him; Sir James Sandilands complained that he had stolen 2 horses from him and hence Elliot of Redheugh was liable for the restitution. He was probably the Will of Fiddleton listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605; his sons John and Ringan were also listed as fugitives. He was apparently still alive in 1608 when his son Ninian was sentenced to be executed for killing one of the King’s Guards while trying to escape arrest. William, son of John of Burngrains, was also convicted (and the records confusingly also switch the 2 men’s fathers in one part, so it is possible that his son was William and not Ninian). He must have been related to the Gavin and John recorded in 1606. William ‘Will’ (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘Will Elliott, sone to Will Elliot of the Steill’ in 1581/2, when he was among men accused of raiding the farm of Harwood-on-Teviot. He was declared a rebel after not appearing. William ‘Will’ of Thorleshope (16th C.) listed in 1590 along with Will of Fiddleton and others of stealing livestock and goods from the Laird of ‘Troghwen’ and Hedley of ‘the Garret sheills’. His name is given as ‘Will Elliot of Thorleshope ‘Renyon Will’’, suggesting that his father was Ninian. William ‘Will’ 3rd Laird of Falnash (d.bef. 1620) son of Gavin. He is first recorded in 1564, when he was ‘Gawenis Willie, of Fallinesche’ at the trial for the murder of David Scott of Hassendean; he was denounced as rebel for not appearing, but must have been rehabilitated later. In 1566 he was among a group of Elliots cited for attacking the Pringles and killing George Pringle of Torwoodlee; this was part of a feud between the 2 families. He also purchased ‘Hoscoit’ (i.e. Hoscote). In 1575 he was listed as son of Gavin of Falnash among those summoned to answer for the feud between the Elliots and the Pringles. In 1579/80 he was charged by John Carmichael, Keeper of Liddesdale, with raids into England. He is probably the William of Falnash who signed the Assurance of Liddesdale with the English Warden Sir John Forster in 1584; this was along with Robert of Redheugh and Martin of Braidlie, making it clear that he was an important Elliot chief at that time. In 1586 he was cited along with 15 other Border lairds for failing to bring their followers to justice. Additionally in 1586 he was ‘Will Elliot of Hoistcoitt or Fallinesche’ when listed among leaders in upper Teviotdale. He was also surety for 2 of his tenants in 1586, Will in Dodburn and his brother Archie; however, the fines were not paid and by 1590 he was ‘put to the horn’ (with a follow-up case before the Privy Council in 1602). In 1590 he was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. He is named in 1590/1 in a case brought against the Scottish Wardens and leaders on the Border, for failing to produce certain fugitives. In about 1590 he is listed among the landed men of the Borders. He is probably the ‘William Ellet in Fellinesche’ listed (along with his son Robert and many others) in the King’s ‘respite’ of 1594 for the murder of Lord Maxwell at Drye Sands. He is mentioned in an indenture of 1594/5 between the Wardens, his case (whatever it was) being delayed. He may be one of the 2 Williams who signed a bond written by Sir John Forster to try to end family feuds on the Border in 1595/6. He was one of the trustees for the young Robert (17th) of Redheugh appointed in about 1597. In 1598 there were complaints to the Privy Council by Sir James of Sandilands about raids on his property in which his name is listed; in a follow-up court case in 1600, Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch’s agent denied responsibility for him and his crimes. In 1598/9 there were complaints by the widow of James Douglas of Knightsridge against several of his ‘brother’s, tenants and servants’ for reiving from ‘Corsetburne’ (in Lothian); this included ‘Stottan Gib’ and his brother John, Will in Falnash Mill, Archie of Muselee and his brother Alexander, and Adele Scott ‘the Peck’ and his son. He was accused of resetting the stolen cattle and failing to appear in court, was denounced as a rebel. Along with his son Robert, he signed a bond with Scott of Buccleuch in 1599. Also in 1599 he witnessed the bonds (signed at Branxholme) between Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch and the Armstrongs and Elliots of Liddesdale. Additionally in 1599 he was listed among Scotts and others who were charged to find sureties for ‘observing the King’s peace’. In 1600 he was among leaders from the Borders who were ordered to attend a meeting at Falkland to discuss ‘the present disorderous of the Bourdours’. In 1602 he signed the ‘New General Band’ along with other Border landlords. Also in 1602, he and his eldest son Robert were denounced as rebels for failing to appear before the Privy Council ‘to give their advice for keeping good rule in the Borders’. The Crown Treasurer brought a case against him in 1602 for non-payment of £60 in fines as cautioner for Will in Dodburn and his brothers Archie and Sim, for reiving in 1586, with a horning in 1590; he was again denounced as a rebel and his goods escheated. He received 500 merks for redemption on the lands of Outersiderig with Walter Scott of Synton. He then purchased the farms of upper Ewesdale from the Earl of Home, specifically Mosspeebles, Over and Nether Woodend, Unthank, Fiddleton, Blackhall and Mosspaub; he forced out the former tenants. After Martin of Braeidle and Prickenhaugh was executed in 1607, he paid the 4000 reversion money to Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig and acquired the lands of Braeidle in the Barony of Hawick. In 1607 he was cautions for John Elliot of Copshaw, who was found guilty of the murder of George Pringle of Torwoodlee; he had to pay the fine of 500 marks on the non-appearance of John of Copshaw. He had a charter of the lands of Arkleton (presumably purchased from the Armstrongs) in 1611. Also in 1611 he served as cautioner in Jedburgh for Gavin ‘of the Schawis’ and for the Laird of Foulshields. Additionally he was part of an assize at the Justice Court on Jedburgh in 1611. He signed a bond in 1612 (along with several Scotts) for keeping the peace in the Borders. In 1618 he is referred to as ‘William Elyotte, called of Fallinasche in Braeidle’, suggesting that he had already passed Falnash to his eldest son; this is when he was accused by Walter Scott of Buccleuch of cutting down 60 alders from Gorenberry, with Gilbert in Falnash Mill (possibly his brother) also accused of stealing timber. Not appearing before the Privy Council, he was denounced as a rebel. He had 4 sons: Robert of Falnash, J.P. in Roxburghshire who married Marion Scott; John of Arkleton, also called ‘of Falnash’, who married Ester Armstrong; Archibald, who is mentioned in 1595; and probably one other, who owned Unthank, and whose children were the Elliots of Meikledale, Mosspeebles, Unthank and Eweslees. William ‘Will’ (16th C.) tenant in Falnash Mill in 1598/9. He was listed among the ‘brothers, tenants and servants’ of William of Falnash who were complained about by Margaret, widow of James Douglas of Knightsridge, for stealing cattle from her lands of Corsetburn. He was ‘Will Elliott in the Mhn of Fallinesche’. William (d.c.1608) son of John of Burngrains. Listed (along with his brother Hob) among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605. Along with Ninian, son of William of Fiddleton (although they are also confusingly listed the other way round, with his father being Will of Fiddleton) he was sentenced to execution in 1608 for killing one of the King’s Guards while resisting arrest. The pair had been declared rebels some years earlier for crimes including theft and murder. William of Caveling

(b.1572) 2nd son of William, 5th Laird of Horsleyhill. His mother was Elizabeth Douglas of Cavers. In 1592 he was passed over (in favour of Gavin Elliott of Stobs) as tutor to his nephew William of Horsleyhill because he was still too young. In 1599 he was described as indweller and Burgess of Peebles; his connection was through his uncle, Archibald Douglas, who was Parson in Peebles. He was served heir to his father in some lands in 1603, when he was described as a Burgess of Peebles. About this time he sold Caveling to Gavin Elliott of Stobs. In 1604 he bought (under wadset and reversion) the lands of Cruxton from Robert Scott of Thirlestane. He was listed in 1607 among Douglastes and others who swore not to harm the Horsburghs. He may be the William ‘called of Horsliehill’ who was among the group of Scots and others who attacked Selkirk Mill in 1608. Also in 1608 he rescued a man who was chased into his house in Peebles by a gang of his enemies. He was still living in 1610. He married Christian Chisholme. William of Gorrenberry (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1611 when he was one of the cautioners for ‘Kirstie Elliott callit Hobis Kirstie’. Other cautioners included Robert of Redheugh, Archie of Clintovery, Martin’s Hob and William of Princkinghaugh, some of whom were probably relatives. He was also witness in 1613 to the infeftment of the lands of Robert of Redheugh. It is unclear how he was related to the other Elliots of Gorrenberry or of Redheugh. William (16th/17th C.) son of Archie of Clintovery. He is listed among 5 Scotsmen delivered by Sir Walter Scott to the English Deputy Warden in 1597. His name is repeated in 1600, when the list of pledges for Liddesdale, delivered to the English Warden by Buccleuch consisted of him, William ‘of Eskez’ (possibly ‘Hoscote’, and probably his uncle, William of Braidlie and Dinlabyre) and Simon Armstrong of Whithaugh. He was described as ‘young Elwood’, also called ‘the boye’ when listed in 1598/9 as one of the Liddesdale prisoners in England. In 1600 (after the other 2 Liddesdale pledges had escaped from prison in York) he is described as son of ‘an Ellwood called Martin’s Archie’, making it clear that he was a grandson of Martin of Braidlie. William (16th/17th C.) listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605. He was recorded as ‘Will Elliott in Burneheid, called Murth’. He was presumably related to other Elliots of Burnhead and may also have been related to Jock ‘the Murt’. William ‘Gleyd Will’ (16th/17th C.) listed among men those who were fugitives for not appearing in a Borders Commissioners’ court in Hawick in 1605. He is recorded as ‘Gleyd Will’. William (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1617 being ‘called of Cowshaw’. This may have been an error for Copshaw. Along with his eldest son Archie and servants Hob Elliot and a Crosier, he was arrested for stealing sheep and held in Jedburgh Jail. Andrew Riddell of that Ilk, John Riddell, heir apparent of Riddell and John Molle of that Ilk were appointed to a commission to try them. William (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1619 as brother to Robert of Redheugh when Robert Rutherford of Edgerston complained that he remained at large despite being declared at the horn. He could be the same man as William of Hartsgarth, but it seems more likely he was from the next generation. William (16th/17th C.) son of Martin and Agnes Lorraine. In 1618 his mother granted him her half husbandland of lands in Lilliesleaf. He later deponed this land to Andrew Riddell, as confirmed in a service of heirs to Walter Riddell in 1702. William of Prickinghaugh (16th/17th C.) recorded as witness to the 1613 infeftment for Robert of Redheugh in his lands. It is unclear how he was related to Christie (son of ‘Martin’s Hob’ of Prickinghaugh) who was declared a rebel in 1611. Also in 1611 he was one of the cautioners for ‘Kirstie Elliott callit Hobis Kirstie’, with others including Robert of Redheugh, William of Gorrenberry, Archie of Clintovery and Martin’s Hob, some of whom were probably relatives. He was also recorded in 1618 among a large group of Elliots and others who John Scott in Newark complained attacked his farm at Foulshiels in Liddesdale, beating up one of his workers there; not appearing, the accused were denounced as rebels. William of Rig (16th/17th C.) 2nd son of Robert of Redheugh, 16th Chief and brother of Robert. He may have been raised partly by his step-father Gavin Elliott of Stobs. He was probably the brother of Robert of Redheugh who had a bond to appear at court in Jedburgh in 1611. He was witness to the infeftment of Robert of Redheugh in his lands in 1613. He may also have been known as ‘of Hartsgarth’. He married Jean, daughter of Thomas Rutherford of Edgerston and Jean Elliott, co-heiress of Stobs. Their children were: Robert (d.bef. 1637), who succeeded; Francis (d.bef. 1699), related to the Elliots of Dinlabyre; and James (d.bef. 1699). He may be the William of Hartsgarth who died in 1613 and whose great-grandson William of Dinlabyre was Kene’. He was acquitted of charges.
Elliot

at court in Jedburgh. He may have been related to Archie and Hob, both called ‘Kene’, recorded a few decades earlier. William ‘Blackheid’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1611. 2 Hendersons were accused in Jedburgh of several crimes, including the theft of 4 cows of his from the lands of Flatt. He may have been related to Archie and Jock, who had the same nickname. William (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1618 as servitor to William Middlemas, younger of Lilliesleaf. Along with Middlemases and others, he was accused of harassing and attacking George Turnbull of Belses and his farm workers and was ordered to be imprisoned in Edinburgh Tolbooth. Archibald ‘of Clintoun’ (possibly Clintwood) was also involved. William ‘Sweet Milk’ (d.1627) from the Rule valley, said to be a minstrel. He is cited for immorality as ‘William Sweet Milk’ in the Cavers Parish records in 1623 and along with Robert Scott and Helen Langlands in 1624. He was killed at Newmill in a duel by William Henderson from Priesthaugh, as immortalised in the song ‘Rattlin Roarin Willie’. Although the basis of the story was traditional, the Jedburgh Presbytery records describe his ‘fearful and cruel slaughter’ and the excommunication of his assailant. A thorn bush near the spot was called ‘Milksweet Willie’s Thorn’, and was still pointed out in the early 1800s. It is unclear to which branch of the Ellots he belonged, however, his murderer is said to have been rooted out by Gilbert Elliott of Stobs and young Elliot of Falnash (either of whom may have been a distant relative). It is possible he was related to ‘Dandie Ellot called Sweet Milk’ whose name is recorded in association with complaints about raids into England in 1598. William (16th/17th C.) 7th and last Laird of Horsleyhill, son of Robert and Agnes Scott. He was a minor when his father died in 1592, with his grand-uncle Gavin of Stobs appointed as his tutor. In 1606 curators were appointed to manage his affairs and in 1607 they requested from the Chancery the writs and charters of Horsleyhill so that he could be served heir to his grandfather William. However, he sold Horsleyhill shortly afterwards to Gilbert Elliott of Stobs and was thereafter ‘called of Horsleyhill’, rather than being the Laird. He became a retainer of Robert Scott of Haining, who may have been related to his mother. In 1617 he was accused of attacking William Mitchellhill, a Burgess of Selkirk, apparently trying to rip his ears off, as well as half his beard, this after 20 days earlier having said he ‘avowit to cause cott the said complenairis luggis out of his head’; however, he was acquitted on assurance of ‘his great oath’. In 1619 he was found guilty of attacking and stabbing William Turnbull in Philiphaugh, who had loaned a plough to Sarah Lough in Selkirk to till a piece of land that he had tried to get for himself; he was fined £40 and ordered to remain in Edinburgh until he found caution for 500 merks. He is probably also the ‘Wm. Elliott, sometimes in Horslaw’ who in 1623 was acquitted of the charge of stealing sheep from Clinhill. William ‘Will’ (16th/17th C.) listed among Liddesdale men declared as fugitives for not attending a court in Peebles in 1605. His nickname was given as ‘Cauldfute’. William ‘Laurie’s Jock’s Willie’ (16th/17th C.) listed among men of Teviotdale declared as fugitives for not appearing before a court in Jedburgh in 1606. His name is recorded as ‘Willie Elliott in Carlawerok, called Lowrey’s Jok’s Willie’. His father was therefore John and his grandfather ‘Laurie’ (or Lawrence). However, the designation ‘Carlawerok’ is confusing, since this is not in Teviotdale. William (16th/17th C.) brother of ‘Dandie of Bowholmes’. In 1611 he was listed among Liddesdale men who did not appear at court in Jedburgh. William ‘Dun Wullie’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1618 as ‘Dun Willie Elliott in Ailmuir’ among fugitives listed at the Privy Council. He presumably lived at Alemoor. William (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1622 and 1623 being in ‘Huntlaw’. John Nichol in Craikhope was caution for him at the Juniciary Court in Jedburgh. William ‘Gib’s Will’ (17th C.) one of 3 men who were meant to carry out the murder of Walter Scott of Bucelleuch in 1624, as part of the ongoing feud between the 2 families. The other men were Gavin of Hillhouse and ‘Gib Elliott, callit the Tutour’, who may have been his father. All 3 later confessed. William (16th/17th C.) Bailie in Selkirk. In about 1618 he was listed among men who witnessed the illegal use of hagbuts and pistols. Probably the same William William ‘Will’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1618 among a large group of Ellots and others who John Scott in Newark complained attacked his farm at Foulshiel in Liddesdale. He is described being ‘called of the Park’, suggesting he was related to earlier Ellots of the Park; others accused of being involved include Elliot of Redheugh, Hartsgarth and Prickinghaugh. Not appearing, the accused were denounced as rebels. William (16th/17th C.) resident of Harden. He was listed among men who had illegally used hagbuts and pistols in Ettrick Forest in about 1618.
in Selkirk was involved in 1619 with a caution not to harm him and his family. He was 'procurator' for James Melrose in a land transaction in 1629. His brother James was one of the witnesses. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Jean Murray and their children included: Robert (b.1634); Jean (b.1636); Marie (b.1640); and William (b.1643). William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Agnes Stoddart and their children included: High (b.1635); Gavin (b.1640); Robert (b.1642); and Bessie (b.1645). William (d.1637) eldest son of Robert, he is described as ‘Younger of Falnash’. In 1635 he married Margaret, daughter of Archibald Maxwell of Cowhill. Their daughter Margaret was christened in Hawick 2 years later. His wife was granted the liferent of Outer-side and an annual rent of 200 merks from ‘Fallesche, Causlchaw and Tandilneir’. He was dead within a few months of the baptism of his daughter. His wife may have remarried a Haswell, since Margaret Haswell held the liferent of Outer-side in 1643. Falnash was inherited by his brother Archibald. William (d.bef. 1638) youngest son of Gavin of Brugh. He was probably born locally, but became Provost of Peebles, and founded the Peebles branch of the family. He was served heir to his father in 1603. He was Provost of Peebles in 1620 in a case before the Privy Council and in 1622 when he served on an assize at the Court of Judicairy in Dumfries. He married Mary, daughter of John Ker of Faldonside and their children were: Lillian (d.1638); Gavin, who witnessed a tack for his brother in 1643; and Harry, who was Parson at Bedrule. He is sometimes suggested (e.g. by Tancred) to have instead been son of William Eliott of Stobs. His great-grandson, Sir John was physician to the Prince of Wales and was created a baronet in 1778. William (16th/17th C.) recorded being ‘callit of Peill’ in 1622 when 2 men were accused of stealing sheep from his lands at Brighousecleuchhead. William (16th/17th C.) recorded being ‘in Heisches’ in 1623, when he was entered at the Judicial Court. His cautioners were Gilbert Eliott of Craigen and Archie of Bowholm. However, it is unclear where ‘Heisches’ may have been. William (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1623 being ‘callit of ye Myyne, in Cassiltoine’, presumably meaning he was tenant in Castleton Mill. A man was found guilty of stealing a clock from him. William ‘Will’ (16th/17th C.) son of Thomas of Bonjedward. In 1623 along with George Johnstone in Essenside he was found guilty of stealing a horse from Walter Scott of Burnfoot-on-Ale. He was probably executed as a result (and may have also been referred to as son of ‘Thome of Fawsyde’). William (17th C.) possessor of the lands of Hermitage in 1632. He may have been ancestor of the later Elliots of Hermitage. William (17th C.) recorded as being ‘called of the Boulex’ when he was listed among a large number of Borderers who were declared fugitives in 1642. It is unclear where the place name might have been, but many of the men he is listed with were from the Liddesdale area. William (17th C.) described as ‘William Elliot, tailor in Cavers’ in a Hawick magistrates case of 1642, when Douglas of Cavers’ servant accused him and several other people of stealing his wallet in Hawick. William (17th C.) from Ashkirk, he married Mary Taylor. Their children included James (b.1651), with baptismal witnesses John and William Welsh. William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His wife was Agnes Elliot and their son Francis was born in 1653. William of Mosspeeble (17th C.) 2nd son of an unknown Elliot, probably owner of Unthank. His grandfather was William of Falnash. He married Mary, daughter of John Carmichael, Laird of Castlehope. They had 2 sons: Robert of Mosspeeble, who died unmarried; and John of Castlehope and Billhope. William (17th C.) recorded in 1662/3 as Chamberlain to the Scotts of Buccleuch for Canonbie and Morton, and in 1663–70 for Hawick, Hassendean and Eckford. He is probably the same as one of the other Williams. William of Binks and Harwood (d.1662) eldest son of Simon of the Binks. In 1637 he bought the lands of Harwood, including Tythehouse and Appotside from Edward Lorraine (with the permission of Gilbert Eliott, who had the lands in wad-set). However, his father was listed as owner in 1643. Thus, although he is sometimes referred to as the 1st Elliot Laird of Harwood, this may really have technically been his father Simon. He later sold Binks to John Elliot of Burnmouth. He may be the William ‘in Harret’ who acted as surety for Janet Scott (wife of John Glendinning, ‘Sowtail’) in 1644, when she promised to appear before the Justice-General on a charge of witchcraft. He is listed in a contract for the vicarage teinds of Hobkirk Parish in 1648 and discharge of 1649. He was also the William ‘of the Burnmouth, indweller in Liddesdale’ who had a loan discharged in 1653. In 1654 he purchased a wadset of Appotside from Edward Lorraine and his son Walter; his signature was written by the notary because he could not write himself. He purchased Appotside outright in 1656 and was confirmed in his charters of Harwood, Tythhouse and Appotside by his superior, Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. He (along with his son John) purchased lands at Baxtonlees near Peel in 1659 from Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. After the Restoration both he and his brother Robert were fined £1,200 for supporting the Commonwealth. He was recorded paying £433 6s 8d on the Land Tax Rolls in about 1663. He married Christian Greenlaw in 1627 and in 1659 gave her a sasine of ‘liferent’ of Appotside (presumably as part of the marriage contract); he was then described as ‘of Apitsyde’. His children were: Simon of the Binks and Swinside (although there is some confusion between him and his son William); Henry (or ‘Harry’), who succeeded to Harwood; Jean, the eldest daughter; Margaret, who married William Elliot of Philhope; Jean (also called ‘Jennet’), the youngest daughter; and John of the Binks and later of Baxtonlees or Peel. George may have been another son, who died about 1666. He was ‘indulged’ in Burnmouth’, although described as ‘of Harwood’, when he died. His testament and inventory of goods are in the National Archives. In 1665 ‘Harie Elliot, son-in-law’ is recorded as an overseer of William of Binks, who may have been him (if the date is correct). William of Unthank (d.1670s) probably 3rd son of the 4th son (whose first name is unrecorded) of William of Falnash, his brothers being Adam of Meikledale, William of Mosspeebale and Ninian of Eweslees. He ‘flitted from Eweshead’ in 1642 and probably moved to Gorrenberry. He is recorded in 1660 when he was ‘called Unthank’ in a list of debtors in the last testament of William Elliot of Harwood and Binks in 1662. He was also among the men fined (£1800) after the Restoration in 1662, presumably meaning that he acted against the King in the Civil War. In 1670, along with Simon of the Binks and Swinside, and his own son Adam, he purchased Lymiecleuch (including Corriesike, Langbye and Giddenscleuch) from William Elliott, younger of Stobs. He is probably the William who paid the land tax for half of Lymiecleuch in 1678 (the other half being paid by Sir William Elliot of Stobs). His children included: Robert, who died unmarried; Adam of Mosspeebale and Lymiecleuch; William of Penchrise; and Walter of Carewoodrig. Rev. William (c.1617–85) from Borthwickshiel, son of Robert. He graduated from St. Andrews University in 1637 and became minister at Yarrow in 1641. In 1654 he was one of the local men who signed an attestation about the ‘carriage and deportment of the deceased Francis Earl of Buccleuch’; this was part of efforts to have the fines reduced on the Buccleuch estate that had been imposed by Cromwell for the Earl supporting King Charles. He was confined to his parish in 1662 for refusing to conform to Episcopacy. However, he was ‘indulged’ (i.e. allowed to resume his duties) in 1679 for about a year. In 1664 he had a bond with Sir William Scott of Harden (his father and grandfather having had close connections with the Scotts of Harden). When he died he had debts amounting to £8,333 13s 4d (Scots probably), with his brother Thomas in Borthwickshiel becoming his executor. His will is recorded in 1686. William of Lymiecleuch (17th C.) local landowner of the mid-to-late 1600s, according to James Wilson. He may have been a son of Ninian of Eweslees, or else was son of William of Unthank and the same as William of Penchrise (or perhaps was William of Unthank himself). William of Grange (17th C.) paid the land tax in Ancrum Parish in 1678. He was probably related to other Elliot of Grange. He was a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1685. In 1788 he was listed as a former owner of lands in Nether Ancrum, valued at £20. William of Penchrise (17th C.) son of William of Unthank, he was the first Elliot at Penchrise. In 1680 he was called as a witness in the trial of local Covenanters, but did not appear. Also in 1680 he was charged with being at a conventicle given by the ousted Abbotrule minister James Ker of Grange; he was fined £25 and set free after paying it. He may have been the same William (along with Robert) of Lymiecleuch and Penchrise who was involved in a court case in 1695 over not paying a bond due to John Riddell of Haining; not appearing, their lands were yielded to their guarantor, Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. He married Bessie Grieve, who died in 1683 (her will being recorded in 1684). Their children included: William of Penchrise, who married Janet Elliott of Tholrishope; Henry in Riccarton, who married Isobel, daughter of John Elliot in Dinlees; John in Leahaugh, who married Mary Elliot; Ninian in Ruecastle, who married Agnes Paterson; Adam in Catlowdie, who married Mary Irving; Jean, who married Robert Grieve in Teinside; and Eupham, mentioned in 1683. William of Straghan (17th C.) said to be a direct descendant of the Eliotts of Stobs, he was the progenitor.
of County Fermanagh branch. He was a Lieutenant in the army, who defended Ballyshannon and fought under William III at the Battle of the Boyne. He married his cousin, Mary, daughter of William Cairnes of Killyfaddy. William of Bewlie, 1st Laird of Borthwickbrae (b.1658), eldest son of Thomas of Bewlie, who was tenant in Borthwickshiel. His mother was Margaret Scott from Chamberlain Newton. He could be the William who (along with Thomas) witnessed a baptism for James Murray, herd at Borthwickshiel in 1683. He is probably also the William who witnessed baptisms for Patrick Riddell of Muselee and Marie Elliot (his sister) in 1682 and 1686. He may be the William who was taxed for 4 hearths at Borthwickshiel in 1694 (assuming he kept his father’s tenancy of the farm there). It is said that he wanted to buy Horsleyhill, but since it was not for sale, he instead purchased Borthwickbrae. He could be the William ‘of Belvie’ who in 1696 directed the Bailies of Selkirk to incarcerate William from Castleton. He received a Crown Charter for Borthwickbrae in 1698. He was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1690, 1695 and 1704. He was involved in a bonds with Henry Elliot of Harwood in 1692 and with Sir William Scott of Harden in 1694. He contributed £200 to the Darien Scheme in 1695. He was one of the ‘curators’ for Alexander Scott of Synton. Scott of Satchells describes him as a good farmer (‘kept the sheep upon the Down’) and a generous supporter of the poor (‘was the Poors relief, for he fed and clad them both with Flesh and Fleece’), in contrast to his cousin James of Bridgehaugh. He was still ‘of Bewlie’ in 1699 when he complained about non-payment by Gilbert ‘of the Park’ and his son William in Castleton. In 1686 he married Isobel, daughter of William Scott of Synton and sister of John Scott of Synton. He may also have married a second time, but her name is unknown. He had 16 children, 9 of whom survived: Thomas (b.1687), who must have died young; Jean (b.1688), who in 1705 married Gideon Scott of Newhouse, brother of the Laird of Woll; William (1689–1756), who succeeded to the Borthwickbrae Lairdship; Francis, who became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1710; Mary, who in 1715 married Gideon Burnet in Whitehope; Christian (b.1697), who married Robert Elliot of Rig (probably Caerlenrig) in 1721; Anne (b.1704), who married Thomas Elliot, minister of Kirkton and Cavers; Susanna (b.1704); and Margaret, who married William Borthwick in Glendinning. Isobel (or ‘Tibby’, b.1708) may have been his youngest daughter and married Walter Elliot of Orniston. William of Philhope (17th C.) eldest son of Archibald of Philhope. He married Margaret Elliot of the Binks and Harwood in 1663. He is recorded in the 1678 Land Tax Rolls as ‘William Elliot of philip for braidie’, paying the tax for land valued at £216 in Hawick Parish. He was also listed paying tax on land valued at £400 in Selkirkshire in 1678; he was recorded being ‘of philip’ and ‘hes bene thretie [although hard to read] yeires bypast res- denter in the land’. He was ‘Wm Elliott of Phillip’ on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. In 1700 his wife assigned to him the remainder of the money bequeathed to her by her mother. His son William was a witness to this document of 1700. He was probably succeeded by William, although father and son are hard to separate in records. He may have been the Elliot of Philhope who entered into a teind agreement with the curators of the Duke of Buccleuch in the late 1660s. William (17th C.) listed as son of deceased William of Philhope, son-in-law of William of Binks, when he was in the testament for the deceased George, son of William of Binks. He was recorded in a list of landowners and tenants of Hassendean Parish in 1666. He was one of the heritors in support of the suppression of Hassendean Parish in favour of Roberton. There is a ‘letter of horn-ing’ against him (and Henry Elliot of Harwood) by Walter Scott, called Westport in 1676. His son Arthur became an apprentice skinner in Edinburgh in 1694. And possibly the same Arthur married Mary Douglas in Edinburgh in 1721, by which time William is recorded as deceased. Another son James became a tanner’s apprentice in Edinburgh, also in 1694. William (17th C.) merchant in Hawick. In 1669 fellow merchant Samuel Newbie was convicted of striking him in the head with his sword and wounding him in the face with a bridle. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick recorded in 1693. The Bailie of Regality, William Scott, was in his house sorting out some financial business between John Hardie and Walter Ruecastle, when he was assaulted by Walter Ruecastle. He must have been an innkeeper, or some prominent townsman. He could be the William of the Sandbed listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He may be the William recorded in the Sandbed in 1702 when he witnessed baptisms in Hawick for shoemaker George Allan and for Alexander Ogilvie in 1708 and again for shoemaker George Allan in 1709.
Elliot

Probably the same William, married to Agnes Allan had children baptised in Hawick, including: Margaret (b.1685); and William (b.1687). The witnesses in 1685 were Robert Allan and James Deans. William of Dinlabyre (d.1693) son of William of Brajdlie and Mary Scott, daughter of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. However, he seems to have lived rather late in the century for a man whose grandfather is meant to have died in 1607, suggesting that there may be some confusion here. He was a local landowner of the mid-to-late 1600s, and appears to have been the most prominent Elliot in Liddesdale in the latter half of the 17th century (after the death of the last Robert of Redheugh). He may be the William ‘of Dunliebye’ whose lands in Castleton Parish were valued at £400 in 1643; if this was not him it must have been an earlier relative. He was ‘of Dunlybye’ in a deed of 1663. In 1667 he was ‘now of Dinlabyre’ when served heir to his great-grandfather William (who died in 1613), in the lands of Killoley, Bighouse, Heuchhousebrae, Dinlabyre, Easter Flicht, ‘Hie-Eshies’ and Burnfoot. He is probably the William (transcribed as ‘of Dunlileries’) who paid tax on £400 of land in Castleton Parish in 1663. In 1672 he was appointed one of the Justiciars for the Borders (for apprehending mosstroopers). He signed the bond of provision for fulfillment of Sir Gilbert Elliot of Stobs marriage contract in 1677. He paid the tax on of provision for fulfillment of Sir Gilbert Eliott apprehending mosstroopers). He signed the bond for non-payment of annual rents. William (17th C.) recorded as resident in Stripshielden in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. William (17th C.) resident of Powisholm in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. William (17th C.) resident at Pinglehole in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. William (17th C.) resident at Westburnflat in Castleton Parish on the Hearth Tax records of 1694. William (17th C.) resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He could be the same as one of the contemporary Williams. He could be the merchant who witnessed a baptism (along with merchant Robert Brown) for Adam Brown in 1700. William (17th C.) tenant in outer slaidhills’ according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (17th C.) tenant at Monk’s Croft (in Hassendean Parish) according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to John who was also listed there. William of Arkleton (1665–1721) 3rd son of Walter of Arkleton, he succeeded to the estate after his father disinherited his older brothers. In 1700 he had a Crown Charter for the lands of Meikledale and Meikledalehope, which he purchased from his uncle William of Meikledale. In 1696 he sold (by ‘wadsett and reversion’) Meikledale to his nephew William, 3rd son of Walter of Arkleton. He married Barbara Forrester and also possibly a Scott of Merrylaw. His children included Adam (who died at Hartsdie in 1760) and Lucy. He is said to have died in reduced circumstances, leaving his children unprovided for. He was still alive in 1698. William (17th C.) recorded being ‘[writer?]’ at Cassel-toune’ when he was incarcerated in Selkirk at the insistence of William ‘of Belvie’ [possibly Bewlie] for non-payment of annual rents. William (17th C.) recorded as resident at Pinglehole in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. William (17th C.) tenant in Stripshielden in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. William (17th C.) tenant in Powisholm in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. William (17th C.) resident at Pinglehole in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. William (17th C.) resident at Westburnflat in Castleton Parish on the Hearth Tax records of 1694. William (17th C.) resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He could be the same as one of the contemporary Williams. He could be the merchant who witnessed a baptism (along with merchant Robert Brown) for Adam Brown in 1700. William (17th C.) tenant in outer slaidhills’ according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. William (17th C.) tenant at Monk’s Croft (in Hassendean Parish) according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to John who was also listed there. William of Arkleton (1665–1721) 3rd son of Walter of Arkleton, he succeeded to the estate after his father disinherited his older brothers. In 1700 he had a Crown Charter for the lands of Meikledale and Meikledalehope, which he purchased from his uncle William of Meikledale. In 1696 he sold (by ‘wadsett and reversion’) Meikledale to his nephew William, 3rd son of Walter of Arkleton. He married Barbara Forrester and also possibly a Scott of Merrylaw. His children included: Katherine (b.1697), who married David Laing of Westerkirk, secondly later Charles Telfer minister of Hawick and thirdly Robert Elliot of Fenwick; William (b.1700), who died unmarried; Adam (b.1702), who succeeded and married Christian of Tholrhishope; and Christian (1704–23). He is buried in Ewes Kirkyard.

William (17th/18th C.) son of Gilbert ‘of the Park’. In 1699 there was a complaint of non-payment by William of Bewlie against him and his father. He was ‘in Castletoun’ with an additional word that may be ‘waiter’. William of Cooms (d.1714) younger son of Robert of Black Tarras (or perhaps the eldest son, it is not clear). He inherited Cooms (half of Black Tarras) from his father. He was declared bankrupt in 1690, but receive a Crown charter of Cooms in 1708 (perhaps being enabled to keep Cooms because his brother-in-law purchased Lodgegill from his brother Simon). He married Helen, sister of William of Tholrhishope. Their children included: John (b.1709), who married Agnes, daughter of Robert Mader of Greenhill; a second son, whose name is unknown; Henry in Sorbietrees, who married Christian Scott of Falsnash; and Simon.

William (17th/18th C.) tenant in ‘Adderstoun’ (probably Adderstoneshieil) in Cavers Parish. His children included: an unnamed child (b.1698); Jean (b.1701); Frances (b.1704); and Margaret (b.1705). In 1708 he was listed being in ‘Etherstoneshieils’ when his daughter Betty was baptised. William of Wells, ‘the Lace-man’ (c.1670–1728) descendant of the Elliots of Brugh, he was eldest son of John and Margaret Johnstone, who lived at Southfield and are both buried in Hawick. It is also speculated that he derived from an illegitimate son of Gavin of Brugh, but these generations are quite uncertain. He was an apprentice to merchant Patrick Johnstone, but it is unclear where this was (since there is no record of it in Edinburgh). Johnstone seems likely to have been a relative of his mother and was a Bailie in Edinburgh (perhaps the Patrick who was later Provost of Edinburgh). In 1692 he became a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh and was by that time already a merchant in London. He was a successful dealer in gold and silver lace, hence his nickname ‘the Lace-man’, and was also described as the King’s tailor in London (but this could be local hyperbole). He owned an estate in Reigate in Surrey. He is referred to as ‘of Brugh and Wells’, having purchased the estate of Wells in 1706 from Thomas Rutherford; this was on the advice of his son-in-law (Gilbert Elliott), who owned neighbouring farms. He had Wells erected into a barony in 1707 and registered his arms in 1711. He is surely the same Mr. Elliot, born and educated at Nether Southfield, who is recorded as supplying Hawick Parish with a new mort-cloth in 1720. About 1720 he also purchased the estate of Haddan (near Kelso) from Sir Gilbert Elliott (it is said, to help him financially). Further Borders purchases included Ormiston, Hunthill and Scraesburgh. Despite his local lands and importance, he lived mainly in London, visiting the Borders seldom and briefly. He is said to have lost money in the South Sea Bubble around 1720. He worked to have his son-in-law pardoned after he had to flee following the death of Col. Stewart of Stewartfield in 1726. He spent £1000 setting up his son in business in London, and also left ‘many thousands of pounds’ for the grandchildren of Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs, his son-in-law. He married Eleanor, whose last name is not known, and she died in 1745; she may be the ‘Ellenor Tankard’ who married William Elliot in London in 1682. Their children included: William, who succeeded and became a Colonel; John, whose son inherited Wells; Eleanor (d.1728), who married Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs; Charlotte (d.1753), who married Maj.-Gen. Roger Eliot (of the St. Germains family), Governor of Gibraltar, and secondly married a Mr. Burroughs; Arabella, who married John Bishop and had a son Elliot Bishop; and Margaret, who married Jonathan Waggaman. He left a sizeable fortune when he died. When he witnessed his daughter Eleanor’s marriage contract in 1702 it was also signed by John Elliot, tailor of London, who must have been a relative, possibly his son. Portraits of him and his wife, and of his daughter Lady Elliott, once hung in Wells House. His will was made at St. Martin in the Fields, and describes his surviving family, as well as mentioning a miniature portrait of his painted by Mr. Harle. He was buried in the Dissenter Burial ground at Bunhill Fields. An inventory of Wells House, drawn up for his son in the second quarter of the 18th century, includes portraits of him and his wife, as well as his daughter, Eleanor. William of Swinside (17th/18th C.) eldest son of Simon and grandson of William of the Binks and Harwood. He received a charter of Swinside during his father’s lifetime in 1674. He was witness to the marriage contract of a daughter of Henry Elliot of Harwood in 1692. He was ‘younger of Swinside’ in 1698 when he was on the Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire, but just ‘of Swinside’ when listed as one of the heritors of Roxburghshire who petitioned Parliament in 1700. He was also a Commissioner of Supply in 1704. Sometime before 1702 he married Barbara, eldest daughter of Thomas Rutherford of Wells. She died by 1722 and he remarried, probably to Elizabeth McClean. In 1730 he purchased Sharpitlaw in Kelso Parish, which he conveyed to his son Robert, retaining life interest for himself. He had 9 children: William of Swinside (b.1701); Thomas (b.1703); Sussana (b.1705); John (b.1706); Adam (b.1709); Elizabeth; Walter; George; and Robert of Sharpitlaw. Note that Tancred’s history places him as the son of William of the Binks and Harwood, rather than the grandson. A document of 1707 lists William ‘younger of Swinside’, so it is also possible that there was an additional generation. William (1661/2–1731) tenant in Whitlaugh and Braidlie. He was eldest son of John of Castlehope and Billhope and descended from the Elliots of Falnash. Around 1730 he bought Whitlaugh for his 1st son and Redheugh for his 2nd son. He married Isabella (c.1680–1769), daughter of Scott of Falnash (perhaps Gideon Scott, who would be the right generation, or his brother Robert). Their children included: John of Whitlaugh (c.1702–78), who married Margaret, daughter of Robert Scott of Gorrenberry; Robert of Redheugh (1709–93), who married Margaret Beattie; and William in Braidlie (1711–71), who died unmarried. Note that the dates of his birth and death are very uncertain, with some sources suggesting he died in 1767, aged 89. He and his wife were buried at Hermitage Chapel. William (17th/18th C.) 2nd son of James of Redheugh and brother of Robert of Larriston. He was grandson of ‘Gibbie wi the Gowden Garters’. He will was proved in 1694. According to a family pedigree of about 1704 he ‘went away to be a horner’. William of Penchrise (17th/18th C.) son of William of Penchrise and Bessie Grieve. His siblings included Henry in Riccarton, John in Leahaugh, Ninian in Rucastle, Adam in Catlowdie and Jean (wife of Robert Grieve in Teindside). He is probably the William of Penchrise who was imprisoned and fined for attending a field conventicle at Abbotrule, probably in about 1680. He married Jane (or Janet), daughter of John Elliot of Thorlshiphope. Their children included: Gilbert of Mount; John; Walter; James in Millholm; William in Selkirk, who married Marion Elliot; and Adam in Dykeraw. He may also be father of Thomas, who was born in Cavers Parish in 1699. Note that information about this family seems uncertain. William (17th/18th C.) younger son of Adam in Dykeraw, he was tenant farmer in Millburnholm. He is said to have firstly married a Miss Henderson and secondly married Marion Nixon, with whom he had a son William in Dykeraw. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His children included: Beatrix (b.1707); Agnes (b.1710); and Dand (b.1714). William 1st Laird of Wolfelee (1688–1768) second son of Thomas of Oakwood Mill and grandson of Thomas of Borthwickshiel, with his mother being Jean Inglis. He was a lawyer in Edinburgh, being sent there by his father, and it is said he did not really settle down to a serious business life until his marriage. He was apprenticed to Andrew Haliburton, W.S. and his own law office was in the Lawnmarket, although later he also had an office in Selkirk (with receipts recorded with the Burgh of Selkirk in 1729, 1733 and probably 1744). He dealt with legal business for Scott of Harden for several decades. He purchased the estate of Wolfelee in 1730 (from his distant relatives, the Elliots of Stobs), although it is said that he seldom stayed there, except when his legal business took him to the area. He sold off the Stonedge part to his future father-in-law. In 1751 he bought several neighbouring properties from William Kerr of Abbotrule, as well as half of Kirknowe from Richard Mair. And in 1757 he and his son Cornelius bought ‘Forkings of Unthank’, ‘Eyeele’, the ‘old Glebe of Hobkirk’ and the ‘Cleugh or back brae of Unthank’ from Thomas Scott of Stonedge. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. In 1722 he married Helen, daughter of Robert Elliot of Midlem Mill and Elizabeth Elliot of Harwood. In 1727 he secondly married Margaret, daughter of William Scott of Stonedge, and she died only 3 years later. In 1732 he lastly married Margaret, daughter of Adam Ogilvie of Hartwoodmyres, and she died in 1796; there was a portrait painted of her. His children were: Thomas (b.1723, by his 1st marriage), a doctor who pre-deceased his father; Elizabeth (also by his 1st marriage), who married William Ogilvie of Hartwoodmyres, her father’s brother-in-law; Cornelius (1733–1821), who succeeded to Wolfelee; Adam (1740–1804), who married Rose Leonard, worked in Danzig, and died on the Isle of Wight; Thomas, who died in infancy; Robert, merchant in Amsterdam, who bought Pinnaclehill, Kelso: Samuel, merchant in Antigua; Janet (or Jean), married Maj. Henry Balfour of Pilrig, Leith; and Helen, married Capt. Robert Davidson of Pinnaclehill. Not known as a great land improver, he nevertheless purchased several Border estates, becoming quite wealthy in later life. He was a friend of the Grieves of Branxholme Park, often staying there. He is said to have been tall and handsome. He was healthy and working up until the day he died. William (17th/18th C.) son of John in Harden and grandson of Adam in Dykeraw. He was tenant in ‘Hole’, which is probably the same as ‘Hollows’. His children included William, John and Isabel. William of Harwood (d.c.1736) 3rd Laird (although some say he was 4th), eldest son and successor to his father Henry. He is recorded in bonds of 1693 and 1694 as the eldest lawful son of Henry and in 1697 as ‘younger of Harret’. In 1698 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire as ‘younger of Harrow’. His father assigned the lands of Harwood, Appotside and Tythehouse to him, suggesting he took over financial control of the family estates, although his father appears to have lived for several years afterwards. He was just ‘of Harwood’ in 1700 when he was one of the Roxburghshire heritors who petitioned Parliament. He is listed in 1704 as one of the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire. He married Jean (or ‘Jane’), eldest daughter of Walter Scott of Todrig by post-nuptial contract in 1700. The witnesses (probably all relatives) were Robert of Midlem Mill, Henry in Hudshouse and his own brothers Walter, John and Henry. They had 10 children: Henry (1700–84), who succeeded; Thomas and John, who died young; Robert, ‘Captain’, whose son William became Laird of Harwood; Elizabeth, who married William Scott of Milsington; Jean (1709/10–74), who married William Elliot of Lodgegill and Tar ras; Marion (or ‘Mary’), who married John Scott of Weens; and Margaret, Christian and Janet, who all died unmarried (Janet in her 90th year). It is unclear when he succeeded to his father, but certainly by late 1707, when he was involved in the discharge of a bond along with Walter Scott of Todrig (his father-in-law). He had a bond of provision for his children in 1720, updated in 1726. He had a reputation for being eccentric (or perhaps ‘of weak intellect’) and for not seeing eye to eye with his son and heir, Henry. In 1731 they both ran horses in the annual race held near Hartshaugh, and he tricked his son by buying an old racehorse from Newcastle, which won at a canter; it is said that the cheers could be heard across the Rule valley. He let much of the Harwood estate to James Pott and his brothers, provoking his son into appealing to the Court of Session, and having him placed under trust, with only a small annuity. This ‘Bond of Interdiction’ was in 1731 and to last 21 years. The appointed trustees were Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs, Robert Elliot of Midlem Mill, Thomas Scott of Todrig (his brother-in-law), Henry (his son) and Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto. He was essentially forced to resign his lands to his son in 1733. His wife had a contract in 1736 restricting her ‘liferent’ and handing over the mansion house of Har wood to her son Henry. William of Thorlieshope and Overton (17th/18th C.) eldest son of John of Thorlieshope. His father settled on him several lands, including ‘Isgill’. In 1690 Simon of Lodgegill and his brother William of Cooms were declared bankrupt, and he was awarded Lodgegill, which he settled on his own brother Henry. In 1698 he acquired Blackhall and Overton from his father-in-law (Andrew Ainslie), and had a crown charter for these lands. He was one of the Rox burghshire heritors who petitioned Parliament in 1700 and was appointed Commissioner of Supply in Roxburghshire in 1704. He could be the Laird of Thorlieshope whose Chaplain, Mr. Tait, was recorded preaching in Hawick in 1721. He forced his cousin’s son Adam to sell Meikledale in 1725 to pay off debts. In 1729 he entailed all his lands on his eldest son William. In 1682 he married Christian, eldest daughter of Andrew Ainslie of Blackhall (who had been Provost of Jedburgh). They had at least 10 children, including: William of Thorlieshope and Overton (b.1694), whose 2nd wife was Margaret, daughter and heiress of Arthur Elliot of Harwood; John; Robert; Walter (b.1701); Elizabeth (b.1702); James (b.1704); Walter (again), described as 5th son; Helen, who married William Mather of Greenhill; Christian, who married Adam of Arkleton; Cecile (b.1706), who married William Hall, tenant in Hyndhope; and Andrew (b.1707), tenant in Edgerston Tofts. He moved to Oxnam Parish and is buried there. William (17th/18th C.) cottar in Ashkirk. He married Mary Ker and their son Thomas was baptised in 1715. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1719 he married ‘Jesobel’ Wilson, who was also from Roberton. Perhaps the same William is recorded at Mabonlaw in 1721 when his son Walter was baptised and in 1726 when his daughter Margaret was baptised. He may be the William at Whitecleughside whose son Walter was baptised in 1727. Either he or a different William was recorded at Alemoor in 1721 when his son James was baptised. William (17th/18th C.) writer in Edinburgh who acted as agent for the Burgh of Selkirk. In 1724 he was paid by Selkirk for researching the town’s erection as a regality. In 1733 he was paid for inserting an advertisement for Selkirk Races in an Edinburgh newspaper. He may be the ‘younger writer in Edinburgh’ in a case with the Burgh of Selkirk. Probably the same writer in Edinburgh had a receipt for salary from the Burgh of Selkirk in 1742 and further receipts for legal work in 1743 (including borrowing the charter of 1449 to establish the establishment of a court of regality in Selkirk), 1745 (including a dispute with Douglas over Selkirk’s right to a market). He may be the William also recorded in discharges with the Burgh of Selkirk in the 1750s. He is probably from one of the local Elliot families and may be the same as William of Wolfelee. William (1689–1756) 2nd Laird of Borthwickbrae, eldest son of William and Isobel Scott. In 1708 he was ‘younger’ when he was listed as one of the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire. He is probably the Elliot of Borthwickbrae who in 1715 and 1716 witnessed baptisms for Alexander Scott of Synton (his brother-in-law). In 1721 he leased the west end of Branhholme Muir from the Scotts of Buccleuch for 21 years. Little else is known about him. In 1706 he married Margaret (probably his cousin), daughter of John Scott of Synton, and they had 14 children (mostly baptised in Robertson): William (b.1706), christened at Roberton, but died at sea; Margaret (b.1707), who married Thomas Scott of Wauchope, who later purchased part of the Borthwickbrae estate; John (1711–92), who succeeded to Borthwickbrae; Magdalene (b.1713), who married Walter Grieve of Branxholme Park; Elizabeth (b.1716), who died unmarried in 1809, aged 92 (90 in the Parish Register); Jean (b.1718), who married Thomas Borthwick in Shaws; Alexander (b.1720); Mary (b.1722); Christian (b.1724); Thomas (b.1726); Gilbert (b.1728), who probably died young; Ann (b.1729), who married Thomas Elliot, minister of Kirkton and Cavers in 1760; Gilbert (b.1731), whose son Thomas purchased the Langlands estate; and Isobel (b.1731), who married Walter Elliot of Ormiston, one of the founders of Hawick’s carpet-making trade. He must have been quite young when he married. A Robertson Parish record of 1707 relates to Isobel Riddel, who acted as midwife to his wife, the baby being delivered ‘before the time’. William of Thorlieshope and Overton (1694–1744) eldest son of William of Thorlieshope. He lived in Oxnam Parish. His father settled on him the lands of Blackhall in 1698, Thorlieshope in 1711 and the remainder were entailed to him in 1729. In 1727 he acquired Demainholm from John of Demainholm and in 1731 he sold Meikledale to William Scott in Meikledale. In 1707 he had an illegitimate child with Isobel Minto, Charles. In 1711 he married his 2nd cousin Margaret, daughter and heiress of Arthur Elliot of Harwood. His wife was recorded as having the third most highly valued lands in Hawick Parish in 1710. They had 8 sons and 6 daughters, including: Robert, who succeeded; James (b.1726); Walter (b.1729); and Andrew (b.1737). Col. William of Brugh and Wells (1696–1764) eldest son of William of Brugh and Wells, ‘the Lace-man’. He was guardian for his nephew Granville Elliott (son of his sister Charlotte and the deceased Roger Elliott) around 1720. He joined the Army in 1722 as Coronet in the Royal Regiment of Horse Guards and was then Captain in Churchill’s Regiment of Dragoons. He was served as heir to his father in 1730. However, he spent most of his time at his estate near London, with Archibald Jerdan acting as his factor at Wells (and whose surviving rental book from 1728–60 gives a glimpse into the conditions of a Border laird at that time). At Wells he was keen on developing the gardens, had a bowling green, kept dogs and also had fishing and hunting gear. His Border estates included Ormiston (in Eckford Parish) as well as Hadden (near Kelso). In 1737 he became a Major in the Grenadier Guards and was Lieutenant-Colonel by 1741. In 1743 he was at the Battle of Dettingen, where he served as A.D.C. and equerry to King George II. His nephew George Augustus Elliott (later Lord Heathfield) and his cousin Capt. John Elliot (son of Gilbert of Winningtonrig) were officers under him. He resigned his army commission in 1746. He paid the window tax for ‘Walls’ in Hobkirk Parish in 1748. He was elected M.P. for Caine, Wiltshire in 1741 and held the seat until 1754. He went through a long legal battle with Lady Rutherford of Chatto over his father’s purchase of Ormiston, this ending in 1753. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. It is said that he took a keen interest in the well-being of his Elliot relatives. In 1737 he married Lady Frances Nassau d’Auverquerque (apparently against her father’s wishes), daughter of Henry, Earl of Grantham, and she died in 1772. They had one child, Henry (b.1741), who died in infancy. The family are buried at St. James’, Westminster. He was succeeded by his nephew William Nassau. William (17th/18th C.) resident in Hawick. He married Margaret Balmer (or Bulmer) in Hawick Parish in 1725. Their children included: Helen (b.1728); and Archibald (b.1729), who may be the weaver.

who married Janet Aitken. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded at Peelbrae in 1727 and Peelbrachhope later. His children included: Janet (b.1727); William (b.1729); and Helen (b.1731). William (d.1720) tenant in Crumhaugh, where he is recorded in 1716 and 1718. In 1720 he is 'late tenant in Crumhaugh'. He married Bessie Brown and their children, baptised in Hawick, included: Walter (b.1716); Walter (again, b.1718); and William (b.1720), baptised posthumously, presented by his brother John (tenant in Goldiebanks). The witnesses in 1716 were Walter Scott of Crumhaugh and Andrew Riddell, in 1718 were Andrew Riddell and John Scott, and in 1720 was Beadle John Scott. Probably the same William in Crumhaugh secondly married Margaret Scott in 1726 and their children included John (b.1727) and Christian (b.1729). William (1703–91) son of John in Dinlees, he was tenant at Park in Liddesdale. He is mentioned in 1730 as brother of John in Park. He married Miss Scott from Blackhall, probably Helen Scott (1702–74). Their children included: John in Bygate (1731–1808); Margaret (1736–1827), who married Archibald Armstrong in Sorbietrees; and Violet, who married George Dalgleish in Castleton. ‘Miss Vilette Elliot, Park’ subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ in 1784. William of Bush (1705–79) 2nd surviving son of John. He married Margaret, daughter of Robert Aitcheson, farmer at Eweslees. He inherited Binks from his brother Robert in 1754. He farms at Arkleton for 20 years, as well as farming Bush and Binks. His children were: John; Henry, who married Jean Laidlaw from Gorrenberry; Christian (b.1738); Jean (b.1740); Robert (b.1742); and Margaret (b.1745). William (18th C.) younger son of William of Penchrise and Janet, daughter of John Elliot of Thorlieshope. He lived in Selkirk. He married Marion Elliot from Linslaw and their children included William, Robert and Mary (who married A. Muir in Whithaugh). William (18th C.) from Roberton Parish. He married Bessie Scott from Wilton in 1727. Their children included: Walter (b.1731), born at Whitfield, who is probably the Walter whose children were born at Alton and Wester Groundstone; and Agnes (b.1733), born at Groundstone. William (b.1706) eldest son of William of Borthwickbrae and Isobel Scott. He died at sea, but the details are not recorded. The farm was inherited by his brother John. William (1707/8–41) son of Robert and Jean ‘Ruan’, he was a merchant in Castleton. He died aged 33 and is buried at Teviothead. John, who married Hannah Grieve, may have been his brother. William (18th C.) son of Adam in Dykeraw. He was tenant in ‘Hole’ (although it is unclear where this was). His children included William, John and Isobel. William of Tarras (1708/9–79) son of Henry of Lodggegill and Margaret Elliot of Midlem Mill. His father died in 1714 and his uncle John of Binks was appointed one of his curators. He succeeded to Lodggegill (or Black Tarras) in 1732. He rented Gingleswells from the Duke of Buccleuch in 1736. He was involved in bonds with Capt. Robert Elliot for Fairnielees in 1761 and Blakehope and Lodggegill in 1763. He was a great breeder of racehorses, and once raced an unknown horse in Newcastle, but was virtually ruined by betting debts when it fell near the post after he had backed it heavily. The financial problems during the American War meant he had to sell Blakehope and Tarras to the Duke of Buccleuch, but he was allowed to lease Dinlees for a modest rent. In 1731 he married Jean Elliot (1709/10–74), daughter of William, Laird of Harwood. Their children included: Henry (1731–90), tenant in Dinlees; Margaret, who married Mr. Haig; Janet, who died unmarried; John (1741–54); Jane (1742–61); William (b.1745), also tenant in Dinlees; and Jean, who married Mr. Crichton. He and his wife are buried at Castleton. William (1711–71) tenant in Braidlie on Hermitage. He was 3rd son of William in Whithaugh and Isobel Scott. He died unmarried and was buried at Untank, where the stone stated that he died aged 50. However, a family pedigree also suggests he was born in 1694. William (b.1710) son of Walter in Brugh. He was a cooper (in London according to some sources, but that is surely a transcription error, since his entire family were born and lived locally). He married Hahhah (or Anna) Scott and their children, born in Castleton Parish, were: Elizabeth (b.1755), who married Robert Mathieson from Castleton; Helen (b.1757); Agnes (b.1759), who married William Elliot from Selkirk; Ann (b.1760); James (b.1762); William (b.1764); and John (b.1767), also a cooper. Margaret, who married Thomas Elliot from Hawick, was probably also his daughter. William (18th C.) dyker in Hawick Parish. He witnessed baptisms in 1741 for James Nimmo and in 1742 for shoemaker John Brown. He is recorded as a ‘Diker’ in 1760 when he hired the Hawick mortcloth. William of Whithaugh (c.1723–76) eldest son of John of Whithaugh. He is probably the William ‘of Whithaugh’ listed among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761, with William ‘junior’ perhaps being his son. He firstly married Margaret Shortreed (c.1735–88) from Essendon (perhaps daughter of Robert) and secondly married Elizabeth Elliot, probably sister of the Laird of Wolfelee; she may be the ‘Betty Elliot of Whithaugh’ whose death is recorded in Hawick in 1798. His children were: Elizabeth (1754–1815), who married Robert Weir from near Canonbie; Margaret (c.1755–1837), who lived in Kirkcaldy and made a family pedigree in about 1790; Jean (c.1757–1839), who married James Bogle from Kirkcaldy; John (1759–1847), who married Jean Elliot of Binks; Robert (1761–1840), Captain of ‘the Hope’, who married Alison Greg; William, (1762–1843), W.S., J.P., lived in Hawick; Isobel (1765–1808); Thomas (b.1766) doctor in Carlisle; and James (1769–1824), who was a merchant in Hawick. He is said to have died aged 59, but this seems unlikely given the ages of his parents and siblings. William (18th C.) farmer at Whithaugh in Wilton Parish. In 1756 he married Isabel Jackson and their children included Agnes (b.1757), ‘Ketty’ (b.1759), Helen (b.1761), John (b.1763) and William (b.1766). William (18th C.) shepherd at Harwood in Hobkirk Parish. His children included Henry (b.1741), Jean (b.1743) and William (b.1751). Probably the same William was shepherd at ‘Hawkcleughlongels’ (which seems likely to be Hawklawtongues) in Hobkirk Parish, having children Jean (b.1745), William (b.1747), Walter (b.1752) and Janet (b.1755). William (18th C.) resident at Southdeeranrig in Cavers Parish. His children included: William (b.1743); Robert (b.1746), possibly the tenant farmer in Powisholm; William (again, b.1748); Janet (b.1750); and Helen (b.1753). William (18th C.) shepherd at the Flex. His wife was Janet Gledstains and their son was born in 1743. William (18th C.) in Toon-o-Rule. He had a daughter Isobel born in 1748. William (1722/3–1806) described as ‘porterion in Lanton Mains’ on a tombstone at old Abbotrule Kirk. He must have had a close connection with the Abbotrule area. He may also have been tenant at Knowesouth, recorded on the Land Tax Rolls in 1811. He married Jean Henderson in Bedrule Parish in 1759, and she died in 1807, aged 79. Their children included: Margaret (b.1760); Mabel (b.1762); Janet (b.1764); Jean (b.1768); Robert (b.1769), also farmer at Lanton Mains; and William (b.1772). 3 of his children died in infancy. He was probably brother of George, tenant in Doorpool. William Nassau of Brugh (1736–75) only son of John, who was 2nd son of William of Brugh and Wells (‘the Laceman’). In 1764 he was served heir to his uncle Col. William of Wells, and took the additional name of his aunt’s family, Nassau. Also in 1764 he married Martha Tryphena Louisa, daughter of Sir Nathaniel Meade; she died in 1796. Her name was given to a wood on the Wells estate, ‘Mead’s Grove Plantation’. Their only son William, who succeeded, was an M.P. He may have earlier married Mary Scawen of Reigate. In 1775 he purchased West Lees, extending the Wells estate. But he died a few months later at his lodgings in Bath. William (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Marion or Mary Laidlaw and their children included Adam (b.1750), Henry (b.1753) and Mary (b.1761). Dr. William (18th C.) physician in Jedburgh. He is recorded as liberal of Dryden and part of Headshaw in 1788. Dryden was then valued at £290 and his part of Headshaw at £116 19s 6d. He was among a group of men to whom Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto granted liferent of part of his lands in order to add them to the Roxburghshire voters’ roll. He may have been related to the Elliots of Minto, William (18th C.) farmer at Nether Staneearthside, probably son of Thomas. He married Mary (or Marion) Pattison, who died in 1794. Their children included: John (b.1761); Robert (1784–1813); Margaret (1769–1846); an unnamed child (b.1772); and Mary (b.1780). The family are buried in Ettleton Cemetery. Dolly, who married Andrew Pattison in Nether Staneearthside, and died in 1763, aged 64, was probably related to him. William (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. Probably the same William was father of Gideon (b.1767) and John (b.1777). William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, perhaps tenant in ‘Sandridgeshells’. In 1746 he married Margaret Elliot and they had a daughter Margaret in 1755. William (18th C.) recorded at Cavers in 1791 when he subscribed to John Learmont’s book of poetry. William (1723–97) son of Robert of Caerlenrig. He farmed at Winnington Rig and neighbouring farms. He and his father Robert were witnesses for a baptism for William Grieve (farmer in Southfield) and his sister Mary in 1764. He may be the William who was joint possessor (along with Robert Potts) of the farm of Turn in 1779. He was recorded as farmer at ‘Winnington’ on the 1785 Horse Tax Rolls and ‘Winningtonridge’ in 1786, continuing there until 1797 when he farmed at ‘Winningtonrigg & c.’ and owned 4 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid tax for having 4 non-working dogs at Winningtonrig in 1797. He married Margaret Anderson and she died in 1845, aged 90. Their children were all baptised in Kirkton Parish. Their sons were: Robert (1790–1872), tenant at Teindside; James (b.1791), who died in infancy; and William (1796–1842), tenant at Mangerton. Their daughters probably included: Christian (1786–1880), who married Walter John Grieve, farmer in Southfield; Margaret (b.1788), who died in infancy; Margaret (again, 1793–1809); and Mary (1795–1837). His will is registered with Peebles Commissary Court in 1798. William (18th C.) tenant farmer at Templehall in Rulewater, recorded in 1751 when the lands were sold. His son William, younger, was also mentioned. His daughter Elizabeth was born in 1750. William (18th C.) Hawick baker, son of Henry in Riccarton and Isobel Elliot. He is probably the William listed as Bailie during the 1760s to 1780s. In 1762 and 1765 he witnessed baptisms for fellow baker Robert Scott, junior. He is recorded as ‘baxter’ in 1763. He is probably the baker who witnessed a baptism for merchant Walter Scott in 1766. He was one of the Magistrates during the proceedings for the Division of the Common and in 1769 was appointed to the commission to discuss the Common with representatives of the Duke of Buccleuch. He paid the horse tax in Hawick in the period 1785–90 and 1794. He married Janet (her name sometimes given as ‘H.’) Grieve of the Branxholme Park family. Their children were: Henry (b.1756); Jean (or Jane, b.1759), who died unmarried; James (b.1761); Walter (b.1763), who died young; and Helen, who married Henry Armstrong from Riccarton Mill (who may have been a cousin). The witnesses in 1763 were Excise Officer Archibald Campbell and merchant Thomas Wilkie. William (c.1714–1806) shepherd at Templehallshiel. In 1757 he married Helen Turnbull (c.1725–95) from Wilton, with the marriage being recorded in Wilton and Hobkirk Parishes. Their likely children are: Robert (b.1758), possibly the cattle dealer in Newcastle; Thomas (b.1761); George (b.1762); Henry (b.1764); and Margaret (b.1770). It also seems likely that he was father of John, labourer around Wauchope. He died in Newcastle; and his wife died at Roan. William (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He married Betty Wilson in 1756 and they had a son John (b.1760). He witnessed a baptism for James Buckham in 1764. His name also appears to be written in the baptismal records for 1765, but crossed out. William (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His children included: John (b.1760); and Helen (b.1761). He is probably the William who married Christian Oliver in Southdean in 1758. William of Arkleton (1735–91) eldest surviving son of Adam and Christina Elliot, he was baptised in Ewes Parish. He succeeded when quite young, and in 1744 had tutors appointed, including Andrew, younger son of William of Thorlieshope. However, the estate was probably heavily encumbered when he succeeded. He became a doctor in Jedburgh, where his children were born. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He paid tax in Jedburgh for having a male servant in the period 1778–85 and a female servant in 1785, as well as the Horse Tax in Jedburgh from 1785. He is probably the Dr. William of Jedburgh who was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1788. He may also be the William of Arkleton who was as a voter in Dumfriesshire in the same year. He inherited Thorlieshope through his wife, but sold it to James Jardine, tenant of Arkleton. He firstly married Marie, a sister of Dr. Lindsay, then secondly married Cassandra, daughter of Robert Elliot of Overton, co-heiress of Thorlieshope. His children were: Adam (1774–97), Lieutenant in the 72nd Regiment of Foot, who died unmarried; Robert (1775–1810), Major with the 5th Bombay Native Infantry, who died at sea; William (b.1777), army surgeon, who died unmarried while serving in the West Indies; Margaret (‘Peggy’, 1779–1816), who married Adam, son of Rev. William Scott of Southdean; John (b.1781); and Gilbert (b.1784). His son Robert succeeded when he returned home in 1803 and his daughter Margaret succeeded in 1810. William (18th C.) farmer at Burnhead and Appletreehall. His wife was Helen Hume and their children included Janet (b.1770), Margaret (b.1773) and Jean (b.1775). William (18th C.) resident of Chisholme in the Borthwick valley. His daughter Margaret was baptised in Robertson Parish in 1773. Other children, baptised in Robertson Parish, included Alexander (b.1754), William (b.1754), Janet (b.1758), William (b.1764), Walter (b.1766) and Margaret (b.1767). William (18th C.) son of Robert of Redheugh. In 1744 his father had a confirming charter for Redheugh, in which he was assigned the farm in fee. He was later tenant in Hillhouse. He was disinherited by his father in 1786, for reasons that are not recorded. He married Margaret Haliburton from Roughley in 1764.

Their children included: William (b.1765), who was a doctor in Newcastle; Robert (b.1767), who was a lawyer in Kirkcaldy; John (b.1769), a merchant in London; Thomas (b.1771) in Hillhouse; and Margaret (b.1774), who married Castleton chant in London; Thomas (b.1771) in Hillhouse; was a lawyer in Kirkcaldy; John (b.1769), a mer-was a doctor in Newcastle; Robert (b.1767), who died at Tweedenside. He himself died at ‘Dedburn’. William (d.bef. 1809) farmer at Myredykes. He was recorded as farmer at Myredykes and other farms on the 1794–97 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 3 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He was also taxed for having 3 non-working dogs in 1797. His only daughter, Helen, married James Oliver (farmer at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot) in 1797. His wife’s death is recorded in Hawick Parish in 1809. Bailie William (d.1795) merchant in Hawick, whose death is recorded. He was Bailie during the 1770s and 80s. It is unclear if he was the same as the baker who was also Magistrate around the same time. He witnessed baptisms for ex-Bailie John Hardie and for Bailie Andrew Scott in 1772 and for George Turnbull and Isobel Hardie in 1777. He could be the William in Hawick recorded in letters preserved in Selkirk in the Walter Mason Collection from the years around 1791. William (c.1740–96) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Isabel Crozier (c.1740–82). Their children included: Marion (b.1761); Janet (1765–1838); James (b.1770); and James (again, b.1772). He died at ‘Pigeonhole’ and is buried in Castleton Kirkyard. William of Brugh (c.1740–1817) eldest son of Capt. John and Jean Grieve. He was a grandson of Gilbert, who farmed at Winningtonrig, and was descended from the Elliots of Brugh. He is said to have been born in Belgium (presumably where his father was serving), although his siblings were all christened locally. He was given a commission in the Army in 1758, was appointed Cornet in the Inniskilling Dragoons in 1761 and was appointed A.D.C. to Gen. Johnstone (who commanded the forces in Ireland) in 1766, holding that post until 1780, but being transferred to the 11th Dragoons in 1779. He was also Commissary General of Stores for the Army in Ireland. Shortly after being married in 1780 he left the Army and entered the Church. He became Rector of Trim, as well as being Chaplain to Bishop Ossory and also a regimental chaplain. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Nicolas FitzGerald, from Turlough, County Mayo. Their children were John (who died as a young man), Eliza (who married John Mockler from County Meath), Harriet (who married Capt. Elliott Seward, godson of Lord Heathfield), Lt. Col. William (d.1845) and Gilbert (who served in the Army and was Governor of the Island of Paxos). He died in Cheltenham and was buried in St. Mary’s Churchyard there. Maj.-Gen. William (1741–1803) only son of Gilbert of Larriston, who was the direct heir of the Elliots of Redheugh and Larriston. His mother was Margaret, daughter of James Scott of Calfield. His father died when he was quite young. He is said to have worked for a while as a tailor’s apprentice at Bowanhill (Teviothead), perhaps spent a year at Skelfhill, then entered the service of Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs as a stable boy. Being recognised as the head of the clan, Sir Gilbert had him educated and arranged for him to go out as a cadet in the East India Company Artillery in 1761. By 1763 (or perhaps 1764) he obtained a commission and was rapidly promoted, becoming a Lieut.-Col. in 1782. It is said that he distinguished himself in the Carnatic, where he commanded artillery under Sir Eyre Coote. He made a small fortune in the East India Company and was able to resign in 1785, to return home. He repurchased the lands of Larriston (including Nether and Over Larriston and Blackhope) from William Oliver of Dinlabyre in 1786, and added Larriston Rig and (also called Haggiehaugh) in 1790. His lands of Larriston were valued at £834 in 1788. He is recorded at Haggiehaugh on the both the 1797 Horse Tax and Dog Tax Rolls (when he was a Colonel) and in the same year when taxed for having a male servant. He was also a Deputy-Lieutenant of Dumfriesshire. He tried to establish his claim to be head of the clan through court proceedings in Jedburgh (presided over by the Sheriff, the same Oliver of Dinlabyre), being formally served heir to his grandfather Robert of Larriston in 1788, and matriculating arms in 1793. Perhaps country life was too quiet for him, because he resumed his commission with the East India Company by 1788. However, it seems unlikely that he returned to India, and may have worked for the company in England, rising to the rank of Major General. He died unmarried and named George Fraser Scott (a son of his cousin) as his heir. A memorial to him in Littleham Church, Exmouth misspells his appellation ‘of Larrinton’. He is probably the William from Castleton whose will was proved at the Prerogative Court of Canterbury in 1803. William (1744/5–93) farm worker who lived at Deeburn in the Hermitage valley. His children included Elizabeth (b.c.1770). William (1745–1807) son of William, who farmed at Tar-ras and Lodgell. He was tenant in Dinlees on Hermitage Water. In 1786 he subscribed to a theological book by a Carlisle author. He is recorded at Dinlees on the Horse Tax Rolls in 1785–89 and 1794. He was taxed for having 4 non-working dogs in 1797. He married Agnes Amos (c.1753–1842) from Langholm. Their children included: Margaret (b.1781); William (b.1790), who also farmed at Dinlees; and Henry (b.1792) in Coltersclease. William (1753–1821) son of Robert and Janet Wilson. He was born in Ewes Parish. He married Jean Davidson (1751–1827) from Canonbie and their children were born in New Langholm. He could be the William listed at New Langholm on the subscription list for William Scott's ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. Their children included: Margaret (b.1783); Robert (1785–1849); John (1785–1847), who became a minister in Peebles and married Janet Scott; William (1789–1822), who lived in England; Matthew (b.1791), who died young; Janet (b.1793); and Jane Beat-tie (b.1797), who died young. William ‘Willie’ (c.1750–1827) son of Robert in Hermitage and Janet Scott from Greenwood. He was tenant in Millburnholm. He was the farmer there when Sir Walter Scott and Robert Shortreed visited on their tour around Liddesdale; it seems likely that Scott took some of the qualities of ‘Dandie Dinmont’ from him. The meeting is described in detail by Scott. He is probably the farmer at Millburnholm who is recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls in the period 1786–1797 and also on the Dog Tax Rolls in 1797. In 1787 in Hawick he married Elizabeth Laidlaw from Falnash, who died in 1822, aged 72. Their children were: Jean (b.1792); and Robert (1793–1858), who married Mary Scott from Skelfhill and died in Toftholm. One source states he was born in 1759. William (1761–c.1835) son of Rev. Thomas of Kirkton and Cavers. He was an architect in Kelso and may have been the William who became a wright’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1775. He built the Teviot Bridge near Kelso 1794–95 (probably to designs by Alexander Stevens). He also designed the extension to the old Wilton Kirk, which was built in 1801. Langholm Town Hall and the houses at Chesters and Crailing were his work, as were renovations at Yair and Drumlan-rig Castle. He married Jean Robertson in 1791 and their children included: Esther (b.1792), who married Charles Scott of Knowesouth; Thomas (b.1793), who died in infancy; John (b.1795), W.S. in Hawick and Jedburgh, who married Janet Usher; William (b.1797), surgeon in London; Ann (b.1799) who married Kelso ironmonger Thomas Sibbald; Jean (b.1799); another Thomas (b.1802); Alexander (b.1804); Robert (b.1807); and Walter (b.1810), who carried on the architect’s business in Kelso. William Nassau of Brugh and Wells (1766–1818) only son of William Nassau of Brugh and Wells, whom he suc-ceeded in 1775. He was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1788; he was described at that time as having ‘a good estate’ and sup-porting Sir Gilbert Elliot. In 1778 and 1779 in Hobkirk Parish he was taxed for having 3 male servants. In 1788 he is recorded as owner of the lands of Wells and West Lees (in Hobkirk Parish) and Huntknow (listed in Bedrule Parish), as well as Ormiston (in Eckford Parish) and Hadden (in Sprouston Parish). He was also taxed for having a male servant at Wells in 1794 and 1797 (along with Gilbert Elliot, who was serving as his factor there). Already owner of the Wells estate (which had been erected into a barony by his grandfa-ther), in 1801 he purchased the adjacent Barony of Bedrule from the Kerrs of Cavers Carre. This included the lands of Bedrule, Fulton, Dunion-hill, Dunionshank, Bedrule Mill, Gourlaybog and Poinderhaugh. He became an M.P., for Portar-lington 1801–02 and for Peterborough in 1802– 18. He was Chief Secretary for Ireland and was a member of the Privy Council. In Westminster he was called ‘the Spectre of the Castle’, because he was so thin; however, he was said to be well regarded by his contemporaries. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and in 1819 (when already deceased). He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. He was also recorded as owner of Wells and West Lees, as well as the Barony of Hadden, on the Land Tax Rolls in 1811. He died unmarried at Minto House. He had named his rel-ative Lord Heathfield (or his son) as his successor to the Wells estate, but outlived them both, so succession fell to Sir William Eliott of Stobs as heir of the line. He left his portrait, plate and library to Lord Minto. His will was proved at the Prerogative Court of Canterbury in 1818. William (1762–88) son of John and Hannah Grieve. He was a surgeon, who died at Cape Coast Castle in Africa. He is mentioned on the family’s gravestone in Castleton cemetery. William (1762–1843), W.S., J.P., younger son of William of Whitaugh (descended from Elliot of Mosspec-bale) and Elizabeth Elliot (probably sister to the Laird of Wolfelee). He was a writer (i.e. lawyer) in Hawick, where he was also a Justice of the Peace, and he lived in Newcastleton in later life (probably from about 1820). It is also possible he was the writer in Edinburgh who subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He was ‘Writer in Hawick’ in 1789 when he paid tax for having a female servant. He also paid the Horse Tax in Hawick in 1791–94. He drew up a pedigree of the Elliotts in about 1790 (and made a formal deposition of the document in 1841, when he was living in Newcastleton); this was said to be quite accurate back to the time of his great-grandfather’s generation, but incorrect before that. He subscribed to John Learmont’s book of poetry in 1791. He is probably the writer in Castleton who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825 and may be the William from Castleton who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He is described as ‘ Writer Ind.’ living in the house of joiner John Cavers in Newcastleton at the time of the 1841 census. He seems to have died without issue. William in Orchard see William Elliot Lockhart. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1797 he married Janet Gordon from Hawick Parish. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His children included: William (b.1796); and Frear (b.1798). William (1765–1851) eldest son of William in Hillhouse and Mary Haliburton, he was born in Castleton Parish. He may be the William of Liddesdale who studied at Edinburgh University 1784/5. He received a surgeon mate’s diploma from the Royal College of Surgeons in Edinburgh in 1794. He was a doctor in Newcastle. In 1808 he received an M.D. from St. Andrews University. He married Jane Grieve, from Newburn. Maj. William (1766–1802) eldest son of Cornelius the 2nd Laird of Wolfelee. He was a Major in the 1st Madras Cavalry and died in Vellore (southern India). His portrait (in a red hunting coat) was painted by Raeburn. Wolfelee was inherited by his younger brother James. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Dykecroft, recorded on the 1794–97 Horse Tax Rolls. It is unclear how he was related to other Elliotts. William (d.1816) Town Herd of Hawick. He is ‘ late Town Herd Hawick’ in the record of his death. It is possible he was the same as the William recorded at Whitchesters in 1797. He was already Town Herd in 1800 when the death of his sister Janet is recorded. William (18th/19th C.) recorded at Whitchesters in 1797, when he paid tax on 2 non-working dogs. William 5th Laird of Harwood (1766–1835) son of ‘ Captain’ Robert and Elizabeth Pringle of Clifton. He succeeded his uncle Henry, who had considerably improved the estate. Gideon Pott, farmer at Penchrise, was appointed to clear his debts before he succeeded to the estate. Shortly afterwards he joined the recently formed Roxburgh Fencible Dragoons. He was promoted to Major and served under his distant relation Lt.-Col. William Elliot (later Elliot-Lockhart) of Borthwickbrae, repelling the French from Killala Bay in Ireland in 1798. It was claimed that his men were guilty of killing a group of Irishmen who were hiding in a straw barn (this apparently told by a man from an Irish Cavalry regiment who visited Hawick a few years later, whose father and brothers were said to be among the dead). In 1788 his estate consisted of Harwood, Appotside, Fairnielees, Templehall and Kilnknowe, valued at £2143 2s. Also in 1788 he was mentioned as being about to be added to the list of voters in Roxburghshire. He subscribed to John Learmont’s book of poetry in 1791. He paid the Horse Tax in Wells in 1791 and Hundalee in 1792. He was recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses at Borthwickbrae. In 1802 he was made Captain commandant of the western troop of the Roxburghshire Yeomanry (Volunteers). Every man of the troop assembled (in Jedburgh) at the False Alarm. He was commonly called ‘The Major’ locally. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. He was a member of the Jedforest Club from 1812. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. In 1811 he was recorded on the Land Tax Rolls as owner of Harwood and Appotside, as well as Fairnielees, Templehall and Kilnknowe. In 1819, after troubles over the proposed Reform Act, he suggested forming his own troop of yeomanry to quell the riots, but the offer was declined. He lived for many years at Hundalee (where he paid tax for having a male servant in 1792–94 and the dog tax in 1797), where several of his children were born, and was also tenant at Stonedge. He then leased Weens from 1819 or 1820 for a few years, moving to Greenriver (Stonedge again in 1824) and then Mossburnford. He also had a house in Jedburgh. In 1834/5 he had a new house built at Harwood, but he died before moving into it. In 1804 he married Helen (or Eleanor, c.1783–1846), 2nd daughter of Maj. John Rutherford of Mossburnford. His children were: Robert Kerr (b.1805), who succeeded to Harwood; Eleanor (or ‘Ellen’, b.1806), who married John Paton of Crailling; and John (b.1809), who married Jane Jerdan of Boujedward and farmed at Primrosehill. He was buried in Hobkirk Kirkyard. His will is registered with Jedburgh Sheriff Court in 1838. William of Borthwickbrae, see William Elliott Lockhart. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isabel Wilson in 1791 and their children included Archibald (b.1792), Isabel (b.1794), Janet (b.1796) and Walter (b.1798). William (18th/19th C.) resident of Thornshoep. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. It is unclear how he was related to other Elliots connected with Thornshoep. William (18th/19th C.) drover in Castleton Parish. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. It is unclear how he was related to other Elliots. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Roan. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. It is unclear how he was related to other Elliots. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. His wife was Isabel Jackson and their children included William (b.1801) and John (b.1803). They could be the William (aged 65) and Isabela (aged 70) living at Langhaugh in 1841 and recorded as labourer at Langhaugh in 1838–41. William (1770–1824) son of Thomas and Elizabeth Carruthers. He lived at Foulshiel and later Hartsgarth in Castleton Parish. He was probably the ‘W. Elliot, Hartsgarth’ who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He married Jane Easton and their children included: James (b.1800); Robert (b.1802); George (b.1805); Thomas (b.1807); Ann (1810–92), who married Walter Armstrong; William (b.1812); Betty (b.1815); Walter (1818–99), died a bachelor; Walter (again, b.1819); and Jane (b.1822). He drowned in the Kershope Burn in 1838–41. William (1770–1824) son of Thomas and Elizabeth Carruthers. He lived at Foulshiel and later Hartsgarth in Castleton Parish. He was probably the ‘W. Elliot, Hartsgarth’ who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He married Jane Easton and their children included: James (b.1800); Robert (b.1802); George (b.1805); Thomas (b.1807); Ann (1810–92), who married Walter Armstrong; William (b.1812); Betty (b.1815); Walter (1818–99), died a bachelor; Walter (again, b.1819); and Jane (b.1822). He drowned in the Kershope Burn and is buried at Uthank. William (1771/2–1855) son of George, like his father he was tenant farmer at Doorpool in the Rule valley. He was a prominent member of the Relief Kirk in Jedburgh. In 1812 he married Isabella Stephenson, who died in 1850, aged 65. Their children included: George (b.1813); Janet (b.1815); Richard (1817–91); William (1819–91); and John (1823–1910), who married Agnes Stevenson Rutherford. His sons Richard, William and John were tenants in Hartwoodmyres for about 50 years. He died at Hartwoodmyres. The family were recorded on a memorial stone at old Abbotrule Kirk. William (c.1778–1843) from Hawick. He married Agnes ‘Bone’ and they had a son William (c.1800–78), who married Jane Oliver. In about 1833 he emigrated to Canada, settling in Halton, Ontario. William (c.1780–1824) from Castleton Parish, he lived at Gillside. His wife was Mary Murray and their children included: Mary (b.1803); Nelly (b.1811); Betty (b.1815); Christian (b.1818); Eppy (b.1821); and Isabel (b.1824). William (b.1780) son of Walter, who farmed at Henderson’s Knowe, he was a miller in Hawick Parish. In 1816 he emigrated with his family to Smith’s Falls, Lanark County, Ontario. In 1802 he married Margaret Scott. Their children included: Elizabeth (b.1802); Janet (b.1804); William (b.1806); Adam Scott (1807/8–99), who died in Ontario; Walter; James; Margaret; Janet; John; and Ellen. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Minto Parish. His children included: Walter (b.1800); James (b.1802), probably the grocer in Denholm; Nelly (b.1804); and Betty (b.1806). He is probably the miller whose child is recorded dying in Hawick in 1815. William (b.1790) son of William, tenant at Dinlees. He was farmer at Dinlees on Hermitage Water, like his father. His children included William, Jessie, Helen and Margaret. He is probably the ‘W. Elliot, Dinlee’ who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. William (c.1790–1853) labourer in Castleton. In 1841 he was at Little Whithaugh with his wife's mother, Jenny Crozier also living with them. In 1851 he was a widower and farm servant at Whitaughburn. He is listed as a farm servant at Whitaughburn in 1835. William (18th/19th C.) labourer listed at ‘North Gunholm’ (perhaps meant for Greenholm) among male heads of households in 1835. He married Jean Oliver (c.1792–1847). Their children included: Agnes (b.1813); Betty (b.1815); John (b.1817); Jean (b.1819); James (b.1822); George (b.1825); Gideon (b.1828); William Keir (b.1830); and Helen (b.1832). He died at Whitaughburn. William (1789/90–1869) boot and shoe maker in Newcastle. He is listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He probably lived at 6 Whitecheste Stret. In the 1841 census he is listed with his wife Christian and children Betty, John (also a shoemaker), Ann, Christian and James. His cousin Robert Murray (‘Formerly Teacher’) was living with him in 1851. He married Christian Elliot (1797/8–1846) and their children included: Betty (b.1819); William (b.1821); Helen (b.1823); John (b.1825); Isabel (b.1827); and Anne (b.1829). He may have been son of cooper John and Betty Crozier, who was born in 1790. William of Brugh (1789/90–1845) eldest surviving son of William, Rector of Trim, and descended from the Eliotts of Brugh and farmers of Southfield. In 1818 he succeeded as head of the Eliotts of Brugh on the death of William of Wells. He became a Lt.-Col. in the Royal Canadian Rifles. He served in the Peninsular Wars and commanded the Niagara frontier, where he died, and where there is a memorial to him in St. Mark’s Church. In 1829 he married Mary Ann Charlotte Moore, daughter of Capt. Moore of the Royal Marines. Their children were: Rev. William, Prebendary of Hereford; and Capt. Henry Sheridan (d.1867). William (1792–1811) youngest son of the 1st Earl of Minto. He was 3rd Lieutenant on the H.M.S Fox and died returning from Bengal. William (1794/5–1866) shepherd in Castleton. In 1861 he was on Langholm Street. He married Isabella Armstrong, from Nichol Forest, Cumberland, and she died in 1870, aged 75. Their children included: Walter (1820/1–40); Robert (1825/6–74); Violet; and Agnes (1836/7–90). William (b.1794/5) mason in Robertson Parish. In 1841 he was living at Whitecleuchside and in 1851 was at Woodfoot (probably Cleuchfoot). His wife was Elizabeth and their children included Mary, Isabella, Francis and William. Perhaps the same William was a widowed dyke builder living at Myrselawgreen with his daughter Jane in 1861. William (b.1795/6) from Selkirk, he was ‘Tacksman, Tollbar’ at Mackside Toll in 1861. His wife was Elizabeth and their children included James, George and William. William (1796–1842) younger son of William, farmer at Winningtonrig. He farmed at Mangerton and died unmarried. William (1796–1838) son of John and Jean Scott. He was farmer at Flatt in Castleton Parish, like his father before him. He was one of the Tory supporters who became a victim during the ‘Tully’s Mill’ mobbings at the 1837 election. William (1797–1869) younger son of William, architect in Kelso and grandson of Rev. Thomas of Cavers. His brother John was a lawyer in Hawick. He was born in Kelso and became a surgeon in London. He married Sarah Georgina Miller and they had 14 children. William (b.c.1800) son of John, labourer at Wauchope Gardens. His children were born at Saughtree in Castleton Parish, although he was living at Wauchope Cottages in 1841 and Tythehouse in 1851 and 1861. He was Farm Steward at Tythehouse in 1861. He married Margaret Murray (who died before 1851) and their children included: Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’, b.1822); John (b.1823); Margaret (b.1824); Thomas (b.1826); James (b.1828); Scott (b.1830); Anne (b.1832); and Agnes (b.1835), who married Peter Cairns. William (1801–64) hosiery manufacturer who founded William Elliot & Sons in 1823. He was son of James of Goldielands and brother of Dr. Adam and of Margaret, who married John Wilson, ‘the Dip’. He served his time as a stocking-maker, then built up his own business in Slitrig Crescent (around No. 6). His business is listed as a hosiery manufacturers on the Crescent in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was an executor for the estate of fellow manufacturer John Nixon in 1849. In 1851, essentially as an extension of his nearby factory he built Tower Mill over the Slitrig and paid for a new bridge (now part of the Kirkstile) to be built in place of the Auld Brig (which was demolished, with the approval of the Town Council and Roads Trustees). As a result he obtained possession of the stone from the demolition of the Auld Brig, some of which found its way into other buildings. He was one of the Orrock Trustees. He was also a Town Councillor from 1861, and his portrait hangs in the Museum. He served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. He lived on the Crescent. It was said that the citizens of Hawick, keen to hear about the future fortunes of the hosiery industry, looked forward more to his speech at the New Year’s factory festival than they did to the throne speech! He is also supposed to have said that he preferred hosiery because ‘though it was not so profitable, it gave most employment in proportion to the capital invested’. He was probably the William whose heirs are recorded in about 1874 owning part of the ‘particulate lands’ once owned by shoemaker Robert Oliver. He married Isabella Scott (b.c.1806) in 1836. Their children included: Jane Carfin (b.1836); Agnes (b.1838); James (b.1840); William Scott (b.1843); and Adam (b.1844). His 2 sons carried on the firm of Elliot’s. He died at the old family home of Goldielands. William (b.1802) son of Robert, tenant in Powisholm. He farmed at Harden in Castleton Parish. He married Jean Pattison (b.c.1811). Their children included: Robert (b.1839); and William (b.1843). William (19th C.) blacksmith and leader of the Jedburgh drum and fife band. He walked to Hawick in 1832 after the Reform Bill was defeated in the House of Lords, calling on Hawick men to follow him to London to overthrow the Lords, a threat he was talked out of. He later left Jedburgh, then emigrated to America, where he set up the Elliot Frog and Switch Company in St. Louis, which helped build the U.S. railroads. William (19th C.) from Hawick, he is recorded... as winner of the ‘standing high leap’ at the 1834 Common Riding Games. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Williams. William Scott see William Scott-Elliot. He was on the Borders Union Railway Committee for Liddesdale in the 1850s. In 1861 he was farming more than 6000 acres. He lived with his sisters Ann Jane and Christian. William Scott of Arkleton see William Scott-Elliot. William (1812–c.78) raised by William and Jane Easton, he appears to have actually been the illegitimate son of William’s younger brother Thomas (i.e. the man whom he would have called uncle) with Isobel Aitchison (who may have died in childbirth). He was shepherd at Scotch Kershope in at least 1841–1861. In 1841 he married Christian Crozier (1806–77). Their children included: John (1842–79), died at Whithaugh Mill; William (b.1844); Walter Nichol (1846–82), died at Millburn; and James (1848–1928), farmer. William (1814–67) son of Robert and Janet Black. He was a joiner on the Loan. He was listed as a joiner at about 2 Loan in 1851 and as ‘House Proprietor’ at 2 Loan on the 1861 census. He married Helen Smith, and their children included: Robert (1851–1930), who married Isabella Mitchell; Helen T. (b.1852), who lived in Liverpool; Peter Smith (1854–1915), who married Jane Drinnan; Janet B. (1855–1933), who married Alfred Hannah; Elizabeth (1857–1934); and Martha (1863–1945), also lived in Liverpool. His younger brother John Scott Elliot was Cornet. William (1817–98) son of Henry in Colterscleuch. He was tenant in Colterscleuch. He was helping his father with the farm according to the 1851 and 1861 censuses. William (b.1817/8) from Castleton Parish, he was shepherd at Arkleton in 1851. His wife was Helen and their children included Jane, Esther and Henry. William (b.c.1819) agricultural labourer, born in Castleton. In 1851 he was a cattle-feeder at Ruletownhead in Southdean Parish and in 1861 was a ploughman at Broadhaugh in Teviothead Parish. He married Jemima Elliot and their children included Elizabeth (b.1852), Isabella (b.1854), John, Margaret and Matthew. William (1819–91) son of William, tenant at Hartwoodmyres. He farmed at Hartwoodmyres along with his brothers Richard and John. He was recorded at Hartwoodmyres in 1868. William (1820–97) shepherd of the Ewes valley and elsewhere. He married Helen McVittie who was from Fiddleton, and secondly married Elizabeth Little. He died at Peelbraehope and was buried at Ewes Kirkyard. William (19th C.) recorded at ‘Road End’ near Newcastle in 1868. This could perhaps be the same as Steeleroad-end. William (1828–91) son of Robert and Eleanor Davidson. His father was farmer at Millburn in Castleton Parish. In 1861 at Lochburnfoot near Teviothead he married Helen (1839–1920), daughter of James Miller and Euphemia Winthrope. At that time he was living at Falnash. In 1862 they emigrated to New Zealand, and he died at Nevis, Central Otago. Their children were Euphemia Wintrup, Helen Davidson, Jane, Isabella Douglas and Ann Jemima. Rev. William Hume ‘Hume’ (1837–1927) from Hawick, son of Thomas and Margaret Hume. He was brother of James, merchant in the Sandbed. He trained as a writer’s apprentice in Hawick. He went to Edinburgh University in 1859, and was minister at Haltwhistle in Northumberland. In 1874 he became minister of the St. Andrews Presbyterian (Dundee) Church in Ramsbottom, and served until his retirement in 1907. He wrote ‘The Country and Church of the Cheeryble Brothers’ (1893), and ‘Story of the ‘Cheeryble’ Grants: from the Spey to theIrwell’ (1906), describing the real life counterparts of the Scotsmen used as inspiration for characters in Charles Dickeons ‘Nicholas Nickleby’. He also wrote verse, for example ‘God and our Country’, about the Covenanters, as well as verse in both Scots and Lancashire dialects. He was a keen member of the Bury and District Burns Club as well as the Manchester Branch of the Dickens Club. He was said to have a ‘remarkable command of the Scotch language and Scotch dialect, and also of the Lancashire dialect’. He married a daughter of P.L. MacTaggart of Liverpool. He is buried in Wandsworth Cemetery, London. William (19th C.) Hawick’s first cabman. His daughter Jessie married Alexander Kyle. William ‘Wullie o Gowdlands’ (or Goldielands) (19th C.) simple-minded soul who lived at Goldielands, and liked to dress up for special occasions, marching in front of the Saxhorn Band, the Volunteer Band, with the Cornet, etc. He was long remembered for one occasion when he arrived the night before a band event so as not to sleep in. William Claude 7th Laird of Harwood (1835–1922) eldest son of Robert Kerr. He succeeded to Harwood in 1873, with Clifton going to his brother Robert. He was born at Greenriver and baptised at Mossburnford. Educated at Cheltenham College, he entered the army in 1854 and soon became a Lieutenant in the 9th (Norfolk) Regiment. He was decorated in the Crimean War, but had retired from the army after only about 2 years. He served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He was a keen hunter and also proficient in boxing. In about 1874 he was recorded as owner of the farms of Harwood, Appotside and others. In 1876 he married Bertha Eliza, daughter of William Charles Blackman of Southsea, and she died in 1895. After his marriage in 1876 he lived mainly in Wales, seldom visiting Harwood, which was let out for the hunting season. He had no children and was succeeded by his nephew Thomas. William (b.1838/9) born in Castleton Parish, he was a cattleman, living at Adderstone Shiel Cottages in 1901. His wife was Christina and their children included ploughman James. Col. William Scott (1841–aft. 1919) son of William Scott, with whom he is easily confused, his mother being Isabella Scott. He had brothers Adam of Caverton and James of Mosttowner. He ran the factory at Tower Mill and lived at Teviot Lodge. Some time before 1900 he installed electric lighting at his house at Teviot Lodge, using wires running from his factory at Tower Mill. In 1859 he (or perhaps his father) instigated setting up a company of Hawick Volunteers, and he eventually became Colonel of the Battalion. In 1874 he won a shooting competition between Volunteers from around Scotland. He was later Major and Honorary Lieutenant-Colonel of the Battalion’s successors, the Border Rifles, serving until 1891. He was also a keen meteorologist, and regularly sent his readings to G.J. Symons who published British Rainfall readings. He donated fossil shells to the Museum. In 1919 he retired from the firm of William Elliot & Sons, and passed ownership to his son, who was also William Scott. He married Margaret Cadenhead, daughter of Dr. George Scott of Harwood and was an M.P. William (b.1861) elder son of Rev. William, Prebendary of Hereford. He matriculated arms in 1902, establishing his descent from Gavin of the Brugh and Robert of Redheugh. He wrote the book ‘The Elliots of Brugh and Wells’. In 1890 he married Mary Frances (d.1919), daughter and co-heiress of Arthur B. Warre of Westfield House, Ramsgate. Their only child was Allison Mary, who married her cousin Lt.-Col. George Augustus Elliot of the Royal Irish Regiment. Sir William of Brugh (1896–1971) born in Wormit, Fife, elder son of Gilbert John of Brugh, he became head of the Elliots of Brugh. He joined the army in 1915, becoming a pilot in 1918 and was shot down and rescued in Russia in 1919. He rose to become Air Chief Marshal and Chief Staff Officer to the Minister of Defence, also receiving a knighthood. He married Elizabeth Rosemary Alice Chancellor and their children were Louise Elizabeth Rosemary and Simon John. Willott (15th C.) recorded in the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1494/5. Along with Roland and some Armstrongs, Hector Lauder, brother of the Laird of Todrig, had remission for bringing them to the area to attack the tenants of Whitmuir. They are described as ‘traitors of Leven’, but are as likely to have been from Liddesdale as England. Lauder’s crimes also included resetting Elliots, Armstrongs, Fosters and others who were traitors; this makes it seem likely he and Roland were already declared as rebels before this time. His name is recorded as ‘Willot elwald’, but this is odd, since ‘Willot’ was sometimes a variant of ‘Elliot’. Zandra see Alexandra (also formerly spelled ‘Eloit’ and permutations including 'Ellat', 'Eloit', 'Elleott', 'Elliot', 'Eloffit', 'Ellot', 'Ellote', 'Elliot', etc., as well as variants such as ‘Ellwald’, ‘Ellwand’, ‘Elhund’, ‘Elwallde’, ‘Elwode’, ‘Elwoode’, ‘Elwood’, ‘Eluat’, ‘Ilwand’ and even ‘Willat’; see also Elliot and Elliot-Murray-Kynynmound).

Elliot (e-lee-o-tee) n. specific name for several species found on or around the Indian subcontinent, which were first described by Sir Walter Elliot of Wolfelee. They are specifically: Buceros, hornbill; Dendrocopus, woodpecker; Goliarda, groove-toothed mouse; Leopardsus, leopard; Perris, honey buzzard; Platydoris, sea slug; Symmaticus, pheasant; and Tupia or Anathana, tree-shrew (also spelled ‘Elliottii’ and ‘Eliottii’).

Elliot-Murray-Kynynmound (e-lee-i'-mu-ri-kin-in-mund) n. Arthur Ralph Douglas (1846–1923) son of William Hugh and brother of Gilbert John, the 4th Earl of Minto. He was editor of the Edinburgh Review and Liberal M.P. for Roxburghshire 1880–92. In 1880 he defeated Sir George Henry Scott-Douglas by only 10 votes. He also defeated Charles Barrington Balfour of Newton-Don in 1885 and Mark Francis Napier in 1886, when he had become a Unionist. However, he lost in the rematch of 1892, although he returned as an M.P. for Durham 1898–1906. He was Financial Secretary to the Treasury 1903–06. In 1888 he married Harriet Dagmar Ryan and they had 2 children, Robert Douglas (who died young) and Capt. Hubert William Arthur (of the Wiltshire Regiment). Emma Eleanor Elizabeth nee Hislop (1824–82) daughter of Gen. Sir Thomas Hislop and wife of the 3rd Earl of Minto. She wrote several works relating to family history, including ‘A Memoir of the Right Hon. Hugh Elliot’ (1868), ‘Life and Letters of Sir Gilbert Elliot, first Earl of Minto’ (1874), ‘Lord Minto in India’ (1880) and ‘Border Sketches’ (1870). George Francis Stewart (1822–1901) son of Gilbert, the 2nd Earl of Minto. He wrote ‘The Border Elliots and the Family of Minto’ (1897) as well as some other works. He was a local M.P., and was given a celebratory dinner in the Exchange Hall in 1868. He died unmarried. Gilbert see Sir Gilbert Murray Kynynmound Elliot. Gilbert (1782–1859) 5th Baronet and 2nd Earl of Minto, born in Lyons. He was son of Gilbert the 1st Earl, who had adopted the extra surname after inheriting titles through marriage. Educated at Edinburgh University and Cambridge. He was Captain of the Roxburgh Militia 1802–05, and later (from about 1808) Lt.-Col. Commandant of the 1st Regiment Roxburghshire Militia. He became M.P. for Ashburton in Devonshire, and then for Roxburghshire from 1812 (following a long family tradition), defeating Alexander Don by 6 (or perhaps 7) votes. He was only M.P. until 1814, when he succeeded as Earl, taking up his seat in the House of Lords. He was listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819. He was an early member of the Rifle Forest Club, but resigned in 1834 following a dispute over politics. It was suggested that he intervened during the ‘Lang Stand Oot’ of 1822/3. He was made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick in 1825 and subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in that year. He was ambassador to Berlin 1832–34, First Lord of the Admiralty 1835–41, and Lord Privy Seal 1846–52. It is said that while he was in charge of the Admiralty there was a complaint raised about the number of Elliots who held positions in the Navy. He was also Deputy-Lieutenant for Roxburghshire and a member of the Royal Society. He retired to Minto House in 1852. In 1806 he married Mary, daughter of Patrick Brydone (traveller and author) of Lennel House near Coldstream, and she died in 1853. They had 10 children: Mary Elizabeth (d.1874), who married Baron Dunfermline; Francis Anna Maria (d.1898), who married Lord John Russell; Elisabeth Amelia Jane (d.1892), who married Frederick Romily; Charlotte Mary (d.1890), who married Melville Portal; Harriet Anne Gertrude (d.1855); William Hugh (1814–91), who became 3rd Earl; Adm. Sir Charles Gilbert John Brydone (1810–95), who married Louisa Blackett and Henrietta Emily Liddell; George Francis Stewart, who was also Roxburghshire M.P.; Lt.-Col. Gilbert, who married Katherine Anne Gilbert; and Sir Henry George (1817–1907), who married Anne Antrobus. Gilbert John (1845–1914) 4th Earl of Minto, eldest son of William Hugh. He was educated at Eton and Cambridge. He was known as an allround sportsman in his youth, excelling on horseback, at rowing, shooting and angling. He rode in the Grand National 5 times (breaking his neck in 1876) and won the Streeplechase de Paris in 1874. He was newspaper correspondent in a number of wars and an officer in others (serving in the Scots Guards), this taking him to various parts of Europe, Asia and Africa. He was Commandant of the Border mounted volunteers. He first went out to Canada in 1883 as military secretary to the Governor-General, and there helped suppress the rebellion led by Louis Riel, being present at the battle of Fish Creek. Back in Scotland, in 1889 he became Brigadier-General of the Scottish Border Volunteer Brigade. In 1891 he succeeded to the Earldom of Minto, before which he had the title of Viscount Melgund. He became Governor-General of Canada in 1898, serving until 1904 and then was Viceroy of India (1905–1910), being jointly responsible for the Morley-Minto reforms of 1909. He returned to Scotland in 1910, but did not long enjoy his retirement. In Hawick he was made an Honorary Burgess in 1898, following his appointment as Governor-General of Canada, and Minto Place was named after him. In 1883 he married Mary Caroline, daughter of Gen. Charles Grey. They had 5 children: Eileen Nina Evelyn Sibell (1884–1938), who married Lord Francis George Montagu-Douglas-Scott, 6th son of the Duke of Buccleuch; Ruby Florence Mary (1886–1961), who married the 2nd Earl Cromer; Violet Mary (1889–1965) who firstly married Lord Charles George Francis Mercer Nairne and secondly became Lady Astor; Victor Gilbert Lariston Garnet (1891–1975), who succeeded; and Gavin William Esmond (1895–1917), who was killed at Flanders. Photographs of him show a fine handlebar moustache. He died at Minto House and was buried there. Many streets, schools, parks and towns (particularly in Canada and India) were named after him. Sir Gilbert Edward George Lariston, O.B.E., J.P. (1928–2005) 6th Earl of Minto, succeeding his father in 1975. He was baptised in S.S. Mary & David in Hawick. Educated at Eton and Sandhurst, he was commissioned into the Scots Guards and served as aide-de-camp to the Commander-in-Chief in the Far East and then Cyprus. He returned to run the farm at Minto, and played an active part in local affairs. He was elected to the Borders Regional Council, serving 1974–80 and 1980–96, being Convenor for the period 1990–96. He was a J.P. for Roxburghshire from 1961 and was Deputy Lieutenant for Roxburgh, Ettrick and Lauderdale. He was called ‘Gibbie’ by his friends, the same nickname used generations earlier in his family. He was a Brigadier in the Royal Company of Archers, the Queen’s bodyguard in Scotland. He served on several national committees, including being President of the South Scotland Chamber of Commerce, and was awarded the O.B.E. in 1986. In 1952 he married Lady Caroline Child-Villiers, and after a divorce married Miss Ballantine of New Jersey, and had 2 children: Gilbert Timothy George Lariston (b.1953), who succeeded; and Laura (b.1956). Gilbert Timothy George Lariston of Minto (1953– ) son of Gilbert Edward George Lariston, he became 7th Earl of Minto in 2005. Hugh Frederick Hislop (1848–1932) 3rd son of the 3rd Earl of Minto. Like several members of his immediate family he served as an M.P., for the North Division of Ayr, 1885–92. In 1879 he married Mary Euphemia, daughter of Col. Samuel Long. His children were Nina Emily (who married Sir Charles Lennox Somerville Russell), Mabel Victoria (who married Hugh Munro and secondly married William Stewart McGeorge and Lieut. Hugh Samuel Roger of the Coldstream Guards. Sir Victor Gilbert Lariston Garnet (1891–1975) 5th Earl of Minto, son of Gilbert John. He was known as Viscount Melgund until he succeeded his father in 1914. He was educated at Eton, being then commissioned into the Lothian and Border Horse before entering the Scots Guards in 1913, becoming a Captain and serving through WWI. After the war he read the Roll of Honour for the fallen in WWI in St. Cuthbert’s Kirk. He then went to Canada as A.D.C. to the Governor-General. Returning to Scotland, he ran his estate and played an active role in local work, becoming a Justices of the Peace and Deputy Lieutenant of Roxburghshire in 1924. In 1930 a portrait of the 1st Countess Minto by Joshua Reynolds was stolen from his private collection at Minto House and has never been recovered. In 1921 he married Marion, daughter of George William Cook of Westmount, Montreal. They had 4 children: Bridget Elliot (1921–2005), who married Lt.-Col. James Averell Clark and Maj. Henry Claude Lyon Garnett; Willa (b.1924), who married Maj. George David Chetwode; Gilbert Edward George Lariston (b.1928), who succeeded; and Lieut. George Esmond Dominic (b.1931), who married Countess Marie-Anne Esterhazy, ‘Bunny’. William Hugh (1814–91) 3rd Earl of Minto, eldest son of Gilbert. He was Liberal M.P. for Hythe 1837–41, Greenock 1847–52 and Clackmannanshire 1857–59. In 1859 he succeeded to the Minto titles. In 1860 he had a writ for the lands and Barony of Headshaw, part of Hassendean Common and Langhope. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1863. He was Deputy-Lieutenant for Roxburghshire, served on the Lunacy Board for the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk and Berwick and chaired the Board of Lunacy Commissioners for Scotland. He was also a Justice of the Peace and Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire, as well as on the county Prison Board. He was a staunch supporter of the Established Church. He gave the main speech at the inauguration of the Leyden Monument in Denholm in 1861. He was also Patron of Hawick and Wilton Football Club In 1844 he married his cousin Emma Eleanor Elizabeth, daughter of Sir Thomas Hyslop (or Hislop). They had 4 children: Gilbert John, who succeeded: Arthur Ralph Douglas, barrister, who married Madeleine Harriet Dagmar Ryan; Hugh Frederick Hislop, M.P., who married Mary Euphemia Long; and Lt.-Col. William Fitzwilliam, who married Elisabeth Fanny Rutherford. He died in London. William Brownrigg (1820–1900) eldest son of John Esmond Elliot, M.P. He was a J.P. for Roxburghshire and a Commissioner of Supply for the county. He was also a member of the Jedforest Club. He resided at Benrig, near St. Boswells. In 1858 he married Mary Geraldine, daughter of Justin McCartie of Carrigvar, County Cork. Their children were William Gerald and Cyril Herbert, both of whom died unmarried (whether the extra names are included in the Elliot surname or as middle names is confusing in these generations, with the triple-barrelled surname typically being only adopted by the Earl of Minto; note that ‘Kynynmound’ is also spelled ‘Kynnmond’ etc.).

the Elliot Bandstand (thu-e-lee-it-bawnd-stawnd) n. bandstand constructed in the Park in 2015 on the site of the former structure, named in commemoration of Zandra Elliot (see also the Bandstand).

the Elliots (thu-e-lee-itz, e-litz) n. important local family since at least the 15th century, thought to have been granted land in Liddesdale sometime in the 12th to 14th centuries, perhaps originally as vasals of the Douglases. There are theories and legends of how they came originally from Angus or from Elliot (now called Arbirlot) in Forfarshire, or were descended from a Norman soldier named ‘Aliot’. This might be consistent with ‘William Alight, bugeois de Seint Johan de Perth’ (who signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296) being a direct ancestor of Elliots who were granted land in Liddesdale, perhaps in the time of Robert the Bruce. Another version of the origin of the name is that it derives from the old English personal name Elwold; this is consistent with some of the earliest local recordings of the name as ‘Elwold’, ‘Ellwand’ and variants (although it is possible that this was simply a scribal affectation). Probably the most likely early history has a Breton origin, perhaps ‘Halegouët’ (or Huelgoat), with land (later called ‘Alyth’) being given in Perthshire around the late 12th century, then moving to Liddesdale when given the lands of Redheugh around the early 14th century. There were people of that name close to the Borders from at least the 13th century (e.g. ‘Elewald’ and ‘Helewald’ in England in 1230, and Reginald son of Eliot in Dumfriesshire in the period 1242–95); the close geographic connection makes these people seem like likely ancestors for the Border Elliots, although other branches may have a different origin entirely. The first recorded example in the Borders may date from 1425/6 and there is certainly a ‘Johannis Elwald’ in 1436 and Gilbert in 1453. They grew more powerful and numerous through the 15th century and in the 16th century effective took over control of Liddesdale from the Armstrongs. In 1494/5, among a list of Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice- aire there were listed 27 Elliots. They then had a reputation as notorious rievers, e.g. the Master of Hailes brought in ‘the Elwands’ in 1515/6. The clan submitted to England in 1547, with 74 men giving their pledges to Lord Wharton. Under Martin of Braidlie they were particularly powerful in the 1560s, but this led to a deadly feud with the Scotts, which included burning Hawick in 1565! A letter of 1583 lists the leaders of the family in Liddesdale. The clan suffered after the Union of the Crowns and attempts at ‘pacification’ of the Borders. The Elliots of Minto are derived from a grandson of the Elliots of Stobs (who spelled their name differently), who in turn come from the earlier Chiefs at Redheugh in Liddesdale. The family moved their seat to Stobs for some time, although the chief once more sits at Redheugh. The Elliots of Brugh were also once well represented in Hawick, with other branches such as the Elliots of Horsleyhill and Wolfelee also being locally important. Elliots have been famous as soldiers, administrators and landowners. A pedigree of the family, dated about 1704, was discovered among the papers at Minto. The clan motto is ‘Fortiter et recte’ (boldly and rightly) – ‘The double L and single T Descend from Minto and Wolfelee, The double T and single L Mark the old race in Stobs that dwell. The single L and single T The Elliots of St. Germins be, But double T and double L Who they are, nobody can tell!’ [T], ‘Land of Elliots and of fame, Of every bold and Border name, The Scottish pulse still beats the same Through kindly-hearted Liddesdale’ [DA].
Elliot’s (e-litz, e-lee-itz) n. stockingmakers of the mid-19th century, William Elliot & Sons, with their factory in Slitrig Crescent (probably No. 6), as well as at Tower Mill. The firm began around 1820, growing out of Waldie, Elliot & Co. (the Crescent), with Wilson & Elliot (Tower Knowe Mill), being formed in 1823. Elliot went on his own from 1830, later giving up spinning and focussing on hosiery. The firm was still listed at the Crescent in Slater’s 1852 directory. It acquired Stonefield Mill and the old Waulk Mill in 1850 and had the new Tower Mill built (also on the site of the Auld Brig) in about 1852. The same firm later built Buccleuch Mills on Green Lane in 1862 (more recently Glenhowe). It had sseparate factories for spinning and knitting. In 1869 it is recorded that the firm employed 617 men, women and children, manufacturing ‘Cheviot wool stockings, drawers and undershirts’. In 1871 the 3 locations employed 490 people between them, spinning 70 tons of wool and manufacturing 70 tons of goods. In 1896 J.P. Alison deigned a new wool store for the factory.

Elliot’s Field (e-litz-feeld) n. isolated house by the Slitrig, seen from the Waverley Line between Stobs and Shankend. It is on the east side of the Slitrig, by Fleety Wood and was later called Fleety Cottage. Andrew Beattie appears to have been tenant or shepherd there in the 1820s and 30s. Robert Grieve and his wife were there in 1861, along with a domestic servant and 8 lodgers who were working on the railway. Robert Grieve was there in 1861 and R. McLean in 1868. Some shale from here, part of the Riccarton Beds, were found to contain graptolite fossils, including specimens of the species called ‘Monograptus riccartonensis’ (marked ‘Ellioticsfield’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, it was recorded as ‘Elliottfeld’ in 1857 and ‘Eliotsfield’ in 1860).

Elliot’s Folly (e-litz-fo-lee) n. popular name used for a building constructed by Henry Elliot, Laird of Harwood in the mid-1700s. It was built on a small hill near an ancient camp, was thatched with heather and used by the Laird to watch his workers.

Elliotside (e-li’-sid) n. lands that were formerly part of the estate of Douglas of Cavers, precise location uncertain. There are deeds relating to the lands in 1545, 1566 and 1614.

Elliot’s Mill (e-litz-mil) n. former name for Toor Mill.

Elliott (e-lee-i’) n. Nichol (b.1835–1904/5) born in Cornhill, Northumberland, near Coldstream, where his father was schoolmaster. He became a joiner, working around the Borders. In the late 1850s he worked at Wilton Lodge, which was then being renovated for David Pringle. His ‘Literary Hours of a Working Man’ (1862) consists of prose and verse pieces, many from around this time, some having been previously published in the Hawick Advertiser. He also had poetry and prose printed in the Border Treasury (in the 1870s), as well as a longer story ‘Nellie Macpherson’. Later he worked as Clerk to Sunderland Police Court and published essays and poems in papers from Sunderland and Newcastle (see also Elliot).

Ellitt see Elliot

Elliot (e-’li’) n. older spelling of ‘Elliot’ or ‘Eliott’, common into the mid-17th century. This spelling reflects the common local pronunciation (also written ‘Elot’ and other variants).

ellwand (el-wawnd) n., arch. a measuring rod one ell (about 37 inches) long, a yardstick – ‘...for ane elwand after the form of any other standard, vizt., to be made of iron jumpt after the length of the standart elwand of the town and burgh of Jedburgh for tryell of the ellwands’ [BR1687], ‘...the ellwand or yard-stick used in the course of his business by his great-grandfather, who was known by the sobriquet of ‘Handless Wat’’ [WAPJ] (also written ‘elwand’).

Ellwand see Elliot

elm (e-lum) n. elm (note normally pronounced as 2 syllables).

Elm Bank (e-lum-bawngk) n. original name of villa-type house at 6 Fenwick Park. It was built for Burgh Surveyor John Manuel in 1884, to designs by Manuel himself. The land was previously owned by Thomas Laidlaw of Sillerbuthall and joined John Inglis, and before that the Turnbulls of Fenwick and Brierryards. The access road became known as ‘Manuel’s Brae’. The house was bought by Robert Scott-Noble about 1900 and renamed ‘the Elms’. It was used as Wilton Manse in the period 1945–90 and then renamed ‘Ellistrin’ when purchased by Ron and Eileen Smith.

Elmbank (e-lum-bawngk) n. small house in Denholm that used to be the preacher’s house attached to the Cameronian Chapel.

Elm Cottage (e-lum-ko’-eej) n. former cottage to the north of Elm House, off the Green in Denholm.

Elm Court (e-lum-kör’) n. housing developed by Eildon Housing in 2000, in the renovated Store Dairy off Orchard Terrace, also incorporating the former Provost’s House. It consists of 30 flats.

Elm Hoose

Hawick Working Men’s Building and Investment Company. It was named after the elm trees that used to grow there. The Hawick Co-operative Society had extensive premises in the street, including stables for the Store horses, as well as a grocer’s shop and a butcher’s. One of the last town gas lamps from this street is preserved in the Museum. Nos. 1–7 are grade C listed buildings.

Elm Hoose (e-lum-hoos) n. villa-style house at 17 North Bridge Street, converted into a hotel. It was built as the residence of Dr. John R. Hamilton in about 1880. After conversion to a hotel the dining room became one of the town’s restaurants. It is grade C listed.

Elm Hoose (e-lum-hoos) n. house in Denholm near the eastern corner of the Green. It held a baker’s shop in the late 19th and early 20th centuries and housed the Co-op store from 1951–85 (not to be confused with the hotel in Hawick).

Elm Hoose Hotel (e-lum-hoos-hô-tel) n. name used for Elm Hoose after it was converted into a hotel.

the Elms (thu-elmz, e-lumz) n. name given in 1901 to the house off Weensland Road known as ‘Elmbank’ (or ‘Elm Bank’), which had been built in 1884. It was purchased in 1945 as a manse for Wilton Parish Church. By the 1990s it was back in private hands and renamed ‘Ellistrin’, with present address 6 Fenwick Park.

eln (eln) n., arch. a unit of length approximately equal to 37 inches, a yard – ‘...ten pennis for weaving of the elne of cloth against their will ...’ [BR1660], ‘...that none who shall cast peats for this year in Whitchesters Moss shall take above twelve yards of measure alongst the Moss side for spreading of the said peats, and that conform to the said twelve elns there must be a bridge left’ [BR1735], ‘...to take no more ground to spread peets next the moss side than the breadth of eight elns ...’ [BR1743] (also ell).

Elot see Elliot

Elphinstone (el-fin-stin) n. Alexander (17th C.) witness in 1652 to the marriage contract between Robert Elliott (2nd son of Simon of the Binks) and Margaret Riddell (eldest daughter of William, portioner of Bewlie), where he is described as ‘in Hopsburne’. In 1653 he is recorded in a sasine as ‘indweller in Hobisburne, baillie in that part to William, Earl of Lothian’. He was presumably related to the later Alexander. Alexander (17th/18th C.) eldest son of William and Margaret Langlands. In 1713 he sold the lands of Hartshaugh and Kirklands of Hobkirk to William Kerr of Abbotrule. John of Henderston (16th/17th C.) brother of George, Janet and Agnes. William Turnbull of Rulewood had a ‘letter of apprising’ against him in 1622 for non-payment of several bonds. He then had to yield up the Barony of Henderstoun (in Peebleshire) and other lands to Turnbull. His son and heir was William. John (d.1649) 2nd Lord Balmerino, son of James, who was tried for supporting catholicism. He was imprisoned for opposition to Charles I, but eventually pardoned. He remained a staunch Covenanter, presiding over the Parliament which met in Edinburgh in 1641. In 1643 he was recorded in the valuation rolls as owner of Over Crailing and the Wester Mains of Hundaile. He also held lands in Hobkirk Parish, valued at £4844 16s 8d. It is said he was a mortal enemy of William Elliott of Stobs. Some of his lands in Rulewater were sold to John Stewart, Earl of Traquair and combined into the Wells estate. However, the bulk of his Rulewater property eventually became part of the estate of Elliott of Stobs. He was succeeded by his son John, and the titles became extinct in 1746 when Arthur, 6th Lord Balmerino was beheaded for supporting the Jacobite cause. Thomas (d.c.1519) received a gift of rights of the lands of Hassendeanbank, along with William (probably his son) in 1510. In 1512 he is also recorded in the Register of the Privy Seal along with his wife Elizabeth (an error for Janet?) Turnbull in a deed for Hassendeanbank. In 1512 he had a charter from Cuthbert Cunningham, Earl of Glencairn for half of the lands of Hassendeanbank, along with his wife Janet Turnbull (daughter and co-heiress of Walter Turnbull of Gargunnock). William had a ‘precept of clare constat’ in 1519, suggesting he was deceased by then. William (d.c.1486) younger son of Sir William of Pittendreich. He took up an ecclesiastical career. He became a Prebendary Canon of Glasgow and was Rector of Ashkirk by 1437. In 1479 he was stated to be holder of the Prebendary of Ancrum. He probably succeeded to his sons rights as Archdeacon of Teviotdale in 1481. He may have held the office until he died. He partnered a son, William, with an unknown woman of baronial family. It has been suggested that his was Margaret, daughter of Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig. Their (illegitimate) son William became Bishop of Aberdeen and founded the university there. William (1431–1514) Bishop of Aberdeen and Chancellor of Scotland, son of William, Archdeacon of Teviotdale and grandson of Sir William of that Elrickhill

Ilk. His mother may have been Margaret, daughter of Sir William Douglas, 1st Baron of Drumlanrig and also Baron of Hawick. He was an official at Glasgow University in the 1470s and became a Lord of Council in Parliament by 1478. He appears to have held some of the rights as Archdeacon of Teviotdale in the period 1479–81, with his father taking over from him. He was on the Privy Council in 1508/9 when John Muir of Rowallan was directed to give ‘warrandice’ to George Scott for Dryden, Commonside and Over Harwood. He was probably the William who (along with Thomas) received a gift of the rights of the lands of Hassendeanbank through ‘non-entry’ in 1510. William (15th/16th C.) Burgess of Edinburgh. In 1519 he had a ‘precept of clare constat’ for half of the lands of Hassendeanbank. This suggests he was son of Thomas, who held the lands in 1512. Almost immediately he gave a charter of the same lands to Andrew Ker of Cessford and Agnes Crichton. William (17th C.) acquired the lands of Hartshaugh in the Rule valley, along with his heir Alexander. The lands were probably bought from Gilbert Elliott of Craigend in the mid-1600s and remained in the family until 1713. It is unclear to which branch of the Elphinstones it belongs. In 1637 he was ‘William Elphingstoun in Blackleyemouth, alias Steytheveyage’ (presumably ‘stay the voyage’) when he witnessed a Hobkirk sasine. He married Margaret, daughter of John Langlands, the minister of Wilton. William (17th C.) listed as tenant of Hartshaughmill on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was surely a descendant of the earlier William of Hartshaugh. He was recorded as owner of Hartshaugh (including the mill and mill lands) in 1707, when they were valued at £60 (formerly written ‘Elphingston’, ‘Elphingstoun’ and variants).

Elrickhill (el-rik-hil) n. lands near Denholm, recorded in the Douglas of Cavers deeds around the 16th century. In 1511 it is ‘Elrechill’ when listed (along with ‘Drieleth’, ‘Murelaw’ and ‘Dennummains’) as part of the Barony of Cavers. It was still in the Barony of Cavers when inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687, when written ‘Ellrighill’, and by his brother Archibald in 1698, when transcribed ‘Elvighill’. It is unclear exactly where these lands were located, but presumably near Denholm.

else (els) adv., arch. already, ere now – ‘Forbye, A was i the hert’s hymm, els!’ [ECS], ‘...for it was weel-on o haaf-past five, els!’ [ECS], ‘Have ee come back else!’ [GW] (also written ‘els’).

Elwald

elshin (el-shin) n., arch. a shoemaker’s awl – ‘...or pinglin’ wi’ an elshin like the sourtes o’ Selkirk’ [JMW] (also elsin).
elsin (el-sin) n., arch. an awl (also elshin).
elsin box (el-sin-boks) n., arch. a box for holding awls.

Elwald (el-wawl) n. early form of Elliot, e.g. recorded in a in 1497 when several men of that name witnessed a sasine for Redheugh. It is unclear if the Gilbert son of ‘Elewald’, ‘Walter son of ‘Helewald’ and ‘Helewald’ son of Herbert, listed in an assize in Newcastle in 1230, were connected. Perhaps the earliest record is for ‘Johannis Elwald’, who witnessed a sasine for Wolfelee and Wolfehopelee in 1436. Gilbert Elwald is mentioned in 1453, on a document relating to lands in Feu-rule. ‘John Elwalde’ of Thorliveshope is recorded in 1488 and 1498. ‘Robert Elwolde, of the Hermitage’ is recorded in 1491. A letter of remission for Patrick Earl of Bothwell in 1500 names 14 men of that surname in Liddesdale and surrounding areas. The same spelling is used in the Register of the Privy Seal in 1510 and 1516, for families of Redheugh, Larriston, etc., so this is clearly an alternative early spelling (although Pitcairn in his ‘Criminal Trials’ states ‘The Elwalds, notorious Border Thieves. The name is now extinct’). It is unclear whether this spelling was related to the pronunciation of the time, but it seems likely it was only used by scribes as an anglicised version of the name. In 1526/7 we have Gavin recorded, and in 1535 George and James. William and Robert Elwald are recorded as Liddesdale thieves in 1535. In the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale the name is recorded consistently as Elwald. Letters from English Wardens to their superiors from around this time also consistently use the form ‘Elwald’ (with spelling variants; although one letter of 1542/3 uses the perhaps more phonetic spelling ‘Eylwittes’). James Elwald in Dalkeith is recorded as witness to a document relating to the lands of Pettie in 1555. In a list of Borderers charged to appear before Queen Mary in 1561 we find the names ‘Elwald’ and ‘Ellot’ used interchangeably. By the end of the 16th century the forms ‘Elot’, ‘Ellat’, etc. are certainly more common. It is also possible that some of the earlier references were to an entirely different family, e.g. there were Elwolds in Ellingham Parish, Northumberland in the 12th century, in Newcastle in 1230 and throughout the Border counties of England in the 13th and 14th centuries. A man called ‘Elewald’ was killed in 1278/9 when accidentally struck in the head by a mallet near Alston in Cumbria. There were also people of the designation ‘de Elaund’ recorded in Northumberland in the 1260s and 1270s, which may be the same family (also written ‘Ellwald’, ‘Ellwald’, ‘Elwolde’ and occasionally ‘Elwand’ and ‘Elwood’; the ‘-wald’ ending suggests a Saxon origin, and there is an ‘Elwolfius’ mentioned as early as 964 in the Melrose Chronicle; the use of this form for members of the Border Elliot family has caused some confusion in accounts of the origins and history of the Ellitious, but was probably mostly an affected form used in formal documents).

Elwood see Elwald

Ely Grain (e-lee-grain) n. small stream that joins Linhope Burn at the shepherd’s cottage of Ely Grain (see also Alliegrain).

emigration (e-me-gra-shin) n. moving overseas, expatriation. This was common for local people, particularly in the 18th and 19th centuries, with the usual destinations being America, Canada, Australia and New Zealand. Most boats would leave from the western ports, Hawick folk often being ferried from Annan to the ships that left Liverpool. In the early part of the 19th century it was common to see carts leaving along the New Road towards Langholm, loaded with woman and children and modest luggage, with the men walking, and friends following them a mile or so out of town.

em (em) v. am (first person singular, present tense) – ‘A em so’, ‘em A allowed oot the night’?, ‘A em listenin ti ee’ (often used emphatically; also sometimes um as well as occasionally the English am).

Embrog (em-brō, -bru) n. familiar for of Edinburgh – ‘When dominie and minister Could offer him nae mair, He took the gate to Embro’ toun To stoke his lairming there’ [WL], ‘... wee bogles, big bogles, auld and young bogles, Embra bogles, Border bogles, Fife bogles ... ’ [JuII] (also written ‘Embra’).

Emery (e-nu-ree) n. John Dixon (b.1810/1) from Berwick, he was a ropemaker, living at Howdenburn. He is listed there in Slater’s 1852 directory. He married Janet Gordon and their children included Elizabeth G. and John J.S.

emmen (e-, i-min) contr. am not, aren’t – ‘emmen A the biggest bummer ee’ve ever seen’? (short form of emnt; could be written ‘Emn’n’; note this becomes ‘aren’t’ in standard English).

emmet (e-mi’, -it) n., poet. an ant – ‘... An emmet ran up a blade o’ gress And beis thrae the clover were hingin’’ [DH].

Emmett (e-mi’, -mit) n. John T. (1828–98) English architect and architectural critic who designed the new Wilton Church, built 1859–62. He had previously been responsible for Bath Street Independent Church in Glasgow (now called Renfield St. Stephen’s and also referred to as Blythswood), which has the tallest spire in that city. He also designed Sandyford Church, Glasgow. It is said that he was influenced by Gothic revivalist August Welby Pugin, and that his designs (being quite Gothic and Anglican in appearance) heavily influenced later Presbyterian and Episcopalian church designs in Scotland.

Emmetshiels (e-ni’sheels) n. former name for lands probably near Harwood-on-Teviot, in the Barony of Hawick. They were held ‘in tenantry’ by the Baron of Hawick from at least 1511, mentioned again in 1572, 1594 and 1615, and recorded again in the ratification of the Barony of Hawick to Anna Duchess of Buccleuch in 1686. They were owned by the Scotts of Crumhaugh in the latter part of the 17th century. Precisely where they were is uncertain, but in 1686 they are ‘the lands of Harwoodhill and Emmetsheels, somtimes called Lant and Emmetsheells’ (it is ‘Emetschelis’ in 1511, ‘Emetscheilis’ and ‘Emetschelis’ in 1572, ‘Emeschelis’ in 1594 and ‘Emetschelis’ in 1615).

emni (em-, an-, um-ni) contr. am not, literally ‘amn’t’ – ‘A emni din yit’, ‘Mibbe ee’re feenished, bit A emni’, ‘... an’ in the nicht seeseen, an’ amna seelent’ [HSR] (also spelled ‘amni’ etc.; used for emphasis, cf. emnt: it is unclear why ‘A emni’ is used sometimes in preference to ‘Am emni’; local dialect fills the gap left in standard English, where ‘amn’t’ doesn’t exist).

emnt (em-in’, am-in’, um-in’) contr. am not – ‘A’m the wunner, emnt A’?, ‘emnt A the daftest glaik ee’ve ever seen?’ (also inn’t: usually precedes the first person singular pronoun; cf. emni: emmen is a shortened form).

Emond (e-mind) n. Robert (19th C.) probably son of James and Thomasina Montgomery. He was Cornet in 1876 and flesher to trade. He was arrested along with 7 others after Edward Dearden was fatally injured at the Thursday Night Chase, but later released. Probably the same Robert was listed as a butcher in Selkirk in 1897. He may be the power-loom tuner who died in Selkirk in 1913, aged 79.

the Empire (thu-em-ph) n. name for the cinema at the Exchange in the early 20th century.
the Employment Exchange  (thu-em-plo-min-'iks-choin) n. Hawick's Employment Centre, which opened in 1939 on Teviot Crescent, off the Little Haugh. The building is now Diesel's nightclub.

A was howe!’ [ECS], n. an empty object – ‘did ee pit oot the empies?’ (also written ‘empie’ and ‘emp'y’).

Emtelle (en-tel) n. manufacturer of fibre-optic cable duct, with factories in both Hawick and Jedburgh. Founded in Jedburgh in 1980, the Hawick manufacturing facility was opened in Hawick in 1999. The Hawick premises are located at Haughhead, to the east of the town, on the big bend in the A698 after the junction with the Bonniebridge.

-en (in) suffix ending for some strong past participles, of which only a few survive in standard English (e.g. ‘beaten’, ‘eaten’, ‘fallen’ and ‘written’). Several more survive locally (e.g. ‘lutten’, ‘litten’, ‘putten’, ‘stoonden’, ‘strucken’ and ‘stunken’), and even more used to be common (e.g. ‘baken’, ‘cuisen’, ‘cruppen’, ‘hauden’, ‘setten’ and ‘stunken’).

-en suffix ending. – ‘They’re nae ways nice about the means Gif they but gain their selfish en's’ [RDW], ‘…an' let thame ken that God rings in Jacob until the en's o' the yirth’ [HSR], ‘Och let the wicketniss o' the wicket cum til ane en' …’ [HSR].

engage (en-gäf) v., arch. to pledge, undertake – ‘…burgesses and Counsellors of the sd. burgh, faithfully engage and promitt for themselves …jointly to concur for the defence of the true liberties and provileges of the sd. burgh ...’ [BR1706].

the Engineer (thu-in-ji-neer) n. name of one of the stagecoaches which regularly ran between Carlisle and Hawick before the railway, the other being ‘the Favourite’. The route started at the Tower and finished at the Grey Goat Hotel (on English Street) in Carlisle. The coach ran from 1825 until 1862. Robert Govenlock was one of the original guards. According to Pigot’s 1825 directory the 2 coaches were called ‘the Mail’ and ‘the Sir Walter Scott’, but it may be that these names were never used locally.

England (ing-glund, -glind) n. country to the south of Hawick, usually entered across the Carter Bar or near Canonbie. The 19th century saw a large immigration to Hawick of people from English hosiery centres around Derby, Leicester and Nottingham – ‘Ours was a land – a free fair land – Ere England had a name; And minstrel’s harp and warrior’s brand Have aye upheld her fame’ [JT], ‘ ‘Mong the beauty spots of England I have rambled far and near ... But I like auld Hawick the best’ [TK], ‘Dive ee leike ti beide up Ingland?’ [ECS], ‘Here were the white road from England Drops to the Rule and the Jed, Leaps the proud pulse of the exile, Back to the motherland sped’ [WL] (sometimes written ‘Ingland’; note the pronunciation is always i-, never e-).

Englandshire (ing-glund-shIr) n. humorous name for England – ‘Here, hevin contemplated the ‘glorious river Tweed – clear and majestic’ Burns, for the first time in his life crossed owre inti Englandshire ...’ [IWL] (a Llandlesism).

English (ing-gleesh) adj. coming from south of the Border, n. the people living south of the Border – ‘...in refusing to go as ane gyd to the Inglis to Lungholin’ [BR1651], ‘The English love to sip through a stiffened upper lip. They believe they are a race of self-made men; thus relieving the Almighty of the blame for making Blightly, and relieving Him of blame for making them’ [TD], v., arch. to translate into English – ‘And startled up auld liart carlins may be Englished, ‘and transformed themselves into old grey headed witches’’ [EM1820].

English (ing-gleesh) n. Adam (17th C.) Hawick resident, married to Margaret Thorbrand. Their children included: John (b.1642); Janet (b.1644); William (b.1646); and Janet (again, b.1649). Probably the same Adam is listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694 (it is possible that this is a variant of ‘Inglis’).

the English Cricket Field (thu-ing-gleesh-kri-ki’-feeld) n. former field near St. Cuthbert’s, used for cricket, P.S.A. rugby matches etc., situated where Lyle & Scott’s offices now stand.

the English Grammar Schuil (thu-ing-gleesh-graw-nur-skil) n. another name for Hawick Grammar School, once in Orrock Place. The name possibly came from a combination of the formerly separate ‘English’ and ‘Grammar’ schools, and may only have been used once they were merged (otherwise the name is too confusing!).

the English Kirk (thu-ing-gleesh-kirk) n. informal name for the Episcopal Church, because of its ties with the Anglican Church. In Hawick this was the name given (with no obvious sense of disparagement) to St. Cuthbert’s Church, partly also because of the number of southern incomers who joined its congregation.

the English Schuil (thu-ing-gleesh-skil) n. name formerly used to refer to the ‘Parish’ as opposed to ‘Grammar’ school, i.e. the elementary school, which was taught in English rather than Latin. In the 17th century the school-house was St. Mary’s Kirk, and it is unclear what building was used in the early 18th century. In 1683 there was a plea made for the school to be house elsewhere than the Kirk, partly because ‘the pews had suffered a considerable loss by the scholars breaking the same’. In 1715 it is recorded that 5 merks were appropriated by the Council for the rent of a house for the school, with the other half to be paid by the Kirk Session. In 1722 the master was given 40 merks by the Council for renting a school-house for 4 years ‘when he had not the liberty to teach in the kirk’ and in 1737 he was allowed £8 annually for the rent of a schoolhouse. In 1739 the first purpose-built school was erected, being 30 feet by 16 feet (inside the walls). The school once had its own flag that was carried in the Common Riding procession, behind the Grammar School flag and in front of the apprentices flag, according to the 1747 Council decree. Pupils attended this school for 2 years, learning reading, writing and arithmetic. It united with the Grammar School in 1824/5. The same name was later informally used for St. Cuthbert’s School, which was attached to ‘the English Kirk’ and opened about 1848, with a purpose-built school constructed 1849/50. An Episcopal school was also opened in Wilton in 1851, and there appears to have been a third one in the town at about the same time.

the English side (thu-ing-gleesh-sid) n. the other side of the Border into England – ‘Here Johnie Armstrong, take thou my sword, That is made o’ the metal sae fine; And when thou comest tae the English side, Remember the death of Hughie the Graeme’[T], ‘…James Olifer, toun piper, seeing several immoralities, revellings, drunkenness, frequent cursing, blaspheming ye name of God, …beside his irregular marriage on the English side …’[PR1720], ‘The long line of the Carter, Teviotdale flung wide, And a slight stir in the heather – a wind from the English side’*[WHO].

enlichten (in-līch-tin) v., arch., poet. to enlighten – ‘…the commandment o’ the Lord is pure, enlichtenin’ the yeene’[HSR], ‘His licht-eni’s enlichtenet the warld; the yirth saw, an’ trimmel’[HSR], ‘…an’ was enlichtened on the posesion as regards the Common-Ridin’*[BW1939].

enormitie (ee-nor-mi-tee) n., arch. a shocking crime, outrageous wrong – ‘…quither we or any of oure foirsaids be the actors of the enormities, gall be challenged …’[SB1599], ‘…by yr night rambling commit divers and sundrie abominable irregularities, unlawful faults, and enormities and abuses by yr scandalous outrages …’[BR1706], ‘…John Binnie, late Baylyea for his miscarriages, egregious enormities and faults …’*[BR1706].

enshain see eenow

enshain (en-shār) adj. to ensure – ‘Enshair for sunshine! That’s what they want tae dae tae make the Common-Riding pay’*[HE1939].

Ensign (en-sin) n., arch. a standard-bearer in an army unit. This word is used in the 1706 Burgh Records to refer to the Cornet, but does not appear again after that – ‘…and voted Thomas Hardie, merchand, to be ensigne and to carry the colour’*[BR1706].

enter (en-tur) v., arch. to present oneself or someone else in court, to assume possession of lands or property – ‘…to haue enterit, ressauit and rentallit, and be the tennour heirof enteris, ressaues and retallis the said Gilbert and his airs …’*[SB1591].

entry (en-tree) n., arch. presentation to a court – ‘…and thair to remane quhill lawfull entre be takin of him be Sir Jhone of Farnehirst, Knycht’*[RBA1561].

Episcopalian (ee-pis-kō-pā-lee-in) adj. belonging to the Episcopal Church, pertaining to the government of a church by bishops.
Episcopalianism

Episcopalianism (ee-pis-kō-pă-lee-in-i-zi-m)
n. the doctrine of governing a church through bishops, prelacy. In Scotland’s history this has tended to mean the opposite of Presbyterianism.

the Episcopalian Kirk (thu-ee-pis-kō-pă-lee-in-kirk)
n. the Scottish Episcopalian (or Episcopal) Church is essentially a vestige of the Disestablishment of the Church of Scotland in 1689. It is run by bishops, and has much in common with the Church of England. Like the rest of Scotland, Hawick’s parish church was Episcopalian in the period 1662–89. Thereafter local Episcopalians probably met in secret. There is an entry (in the Parish Kirk records of the 1770s) of a baptism performed by Rev. Findlay McLennan (‘Minister of the Episcopal Congregation of Hawick’) in 1753. The church met publicly again in 1804 in a Kirk Wynd house in the late 18th and early 19th centuries. This building was situated at the western end, opposite the churchyard. A new church was opened in Jedburgh in 1844 and a mission was started in Hawick by the Jedburgh minister in 1846, meeting in the Orrock Place Grammar School, with the school (and possibly the congregation itself) meeting in Inglis’ Ballroom from 1847. The Church Schools were built about 1850 on Slitrig Crescent, with services held there for several years. The purpose-built St. Cuthbert’s Church was erected in 1857–58, with the site and building paid for by the Duke of Buccleuch.

the Episcopal Schuil (thu-ee-pis-kō-pal-skil)
n. another name for St. Cuthbert’s Schuil. There was also a private school taught under Episcopal supervision in about 1846 by Thomas Marchbanks in a pended apartment in the Mid Raw; probably the same school operated in the ballroom of the Half-Moon Hotel around a year later. An Episcopal school opened on Wilton Crescent in 1851, and in 1852 it is recorded that there were 3 such schools operating within Hawick and Wilton, with 180 children registered.

Eppy (e-pee) n. Christian name, a pet form of Euphemia, Elspeth or Elizabeth (also spelled ‘Eppie’).

Eppy Suitty (e-pee-si’-ee, -soo’-z) n. local nickname, probably from the late 18th or 19th centuries. Her real name was probably Euphemia Stevenson, and her name came with the darkness (or dirtiness) of her attire. She is described in an Edinburgh Magazine article of 1820 as a modern witch, who wore a mantle that was ‘black as soot (whence probably she derived her title), and of a most aromatic perfume’ and also wore a large hood. Her personal appearance was also said to be striking, with 3 prominent teeth and a long ‘whiskin’ beard’. She was said to be demanding of food and money, promising good luck to those who complied and cursing those who refused. She told fortunes, especially relating to affairs of the heart, and it is said that she was so well connected with the common people, that she could use the information gathered previously to yield apparently impressive readings. Her death is said to have come a few days after convincing her own sister to sever her foot, after the appendage had been giving her so much trouble that she wanted it to be amputated. She may have been married to William Scott, with the death of their daughter Helen recorded in 1805. She was dead by 1820 and was said to have lived into the 90s – ‘. . . the far-famed Euphemia Stevenson, alias Black Eppy, alias Eppy the Witch, alias Eppy Sooty’ [EM1820], ‘. . . bar yeh haafflang chaap as black as Eppie Suiitte’ [ECS], ‘Black as the yiss o spades; black as Eppie Suiitte. – Expressions signifying exceeding blackness’ [ECS], ‘Eppy Sootie and Wullie Pairk, Geordie the Buck and Higgins Phill, Jamie Nichol the Hawick band claikr, The Duddy Laird and Shallow Bill’ [HI] (also written ‘Eppie Suiitte’ and variants; the name may have been in more widespread use as a dark-faced 18th century witch).

erles (e-rulz) n., pl., poet. payment for services, earnest-money – ‘She’d gotten sax pun’ but a croon, An’ hauf-a-croon o’ erles’ [JoHa] (cf. arles).

Ermildon (er-nil-din) n. former name for ‘Ernilton’ in Liddesdale, which probably corresponds to the modern Arnton. In the c.1376 rental roll (among the charters of the Douglasses of Morton) ‘Newland de Ermyldoun’ has a value of 13 shillings and 4 pence (see Ernilton’).

ern (ern, e-rin) n. iron – ‘it was made o solid ern’, ‘…She’ll raise her cruit Earn-like gab, An’ gie my feelings sic a stab’ [JoHa], ‘Thou salt bri克 thame wi’ ane rodd o’ ern’ [HSR], ‘Whase feets thaye hurtet wi’ fetters; he was layde in ern’ [HSR], ‘…when wud turns geizant an ern lowps abreed’ [ECS], ‘When ma last ern shot’ been shankeet …’ [IWL], ‘There yaised ti be a lovely bit o cast ern engineerin, the sluice outlet at the fer end …’ [IWL], adj. made of iron – ‘Ern Yetts! Ern Yetts!’ [RM], v. to iron – ‘ee’ll hev ti ern yer ain claes this week’, ‘it’ll look bet-ter when it’s erned’, ‘A’m fair muintteet oot wi wui weshin an ernin, an thing’ [ECS] (also spelled ‘earn’; cf. airn).

Ern Cleuch (ern-kloech) n. stream that joins the Ettrick Water between Singlie and Ettrickbridge. The lands there were owned by the Crown from at least 1456. They were associated with a branch of the Turnbulls in the 15th century, perhaps the same branch who were also at Whithope and Harden in the Borthwick valley. John Turnbull was Laird there in 1464/5. It is probably the Crown property of ‘Ernheugh’, which was let along with Singlie to Walter Turnbull of Gargunnock in 1484, Thomas Home of Langshaw in 1490, Patrick Home of Fastcastle in 1492 and Sir Robert Ker in 1499. It remained Crown property until at least 1502. The Laird of Whithope ‘in ernheuch’ was recorded in 1494/5 and Robert Scott was recorded there in the same year. David Pringle was recorded there in 1502. The Laird of Cessford was tenant in 1541, paying £28. It passed to Sir William Scott of Harden about 1605 and was later owned by the Scotts of Bonnington (it is ‘Ernhuche’ in 1456, ‘Ernhyuch’ in 1464/5, ‘Ernleuch’ in 1468, ‘Ernheuch’ in 1490 and in 1494/5, ‘Erne- heuch’ and ‘erneheuch’ in 1502, ‘eruin heuch’ in 1534, Ernheuch in 1541, ‘Orneheucht’ in 1580/1, ‘Ernescleugh’ in 1593, ‘Erneheuch’ about 1605 and ‘Ernesheugh’ in 1624).

Ernside Craigs (ern-sūd-kraigs) n. craggy outcrop in southern Castleton, situated between Blinkbonny Height and the Kershope Burn. Nearby are the remains of a settlement, about 70 m by 40 m in size.

Ernest Augustus (er-nist-aw-gus-tis) n. (1771–1851) King of Hannover. He was 5th son of George III, being made to serve with the Hanoverian hussars in 1790, returning to England in 1776. In 1799 he was created Duke of Cumberland and Teviotdale. Very unpopular in Britain at the time, he was variously accused of murder and incest. Because of the rules of succession he became King of Hanover in 1837 on the death of his brother William IV, and was apparently much more popular there than back home. He married Friederike Caroline Sophia Alexandrina of Solms-Braunfels. He outlived his 8 brothers and was succeeded by his son George V of Hannover.

Ernest Augustus William Adolphus George Frederick (1845–1923) only son of George V of Hanover and grandson of Ernest Augustus. After the death of his father the assumed the title of Duke of Cumberland and Teviotdale in the British peerage. However, he was an officer in the Austrian army, and since he fought against Britain in WWI he had his titles stripped in 1919. He was thus the 3rd and last Duke.

erni (er-ni) contr. aren’t, are not – ‘they erni likely ti help’, ‘looks erni everyhin ee ken’, also used to negate ‘am’ – ‘am erni gaun oot the night’, ‘The praud hae howket pits for me whilk arna efter thy law’ [HSR] (there are spelling variants; cf. errn, ern’t).

Ernilton (er-nil’in) n. former house marked on Blaen’s 1654 map, located in the hills approximately north of Steele Road. The area to the north is marked ‘Erniltoun b. fell’, corresponding probably to the modern Arnton Fell, suggesting that one of the streams there was the Ernilton Burn. The rental roll for Liddesdale from about 1376 lists 42 separate pieces of land under ‘Quartium de Ermyldoune’, which is probably the same place. The name was thus formerly of much greater significance. Owners of land there around 1376 include ‘Johannis Raufson’, ‘Ricardi Broun’, ‘Thome Gilson’, ‘Ad de Syde’, ‘Elie Nobill’, ‘Dauid Stodhirde’, ‘Ennie de Lawys’, ‘Ricardi de Lawis’, ‘Robert de Lawis’, ‘Mathei Meryng’ and ‘Willelm Nyson’.

Erskine (ers-kin) n. Adam (15th C.) left 3 sheep in the 1491/2 will of Sir David Scott of Braugholme. He is listed as ‘Ad Erskyn’. Alexander (d.bef. 1509) served heir to his father Thomas in 1494, when he became 3rd Lord. He thereby also inherited the estates of Synton and Dalgleish and the office of Sheriff of Selkirk (as well as many other lands and titles), for which he already held a crown charter of 1489. He witnessed a document relating to ‘Langhassendean’ in 1480/1. He had a sasine for Synton on 1493. He held the lands on formal presentation to the King of a pair of gilt spurs at Whitsunday, if asked. He may be the Laird of Whitslade who was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire held in Selkirk in 1494/5. In 1502 his son and heir Robert had a charter of the lands of Nisbet from him. He married Christian, daughter of Sir Robert Crichton of Sanquhar. Their children included Robert (4th Lord), Walter, Christian and Agnes. He later married Ellen, daughter of Alexander, 1st Lord Home. Charles of Shielfield (1771–1825) 2nd son of Rev. James, he succeeded on the death of his brother Lieut.-Col. Henry. He was a lawyer, who was Sheriff-Substitute for Selkirkshire, as well as being Baron Bailie of Melrose, and stayed at the Priory there. He was a good friend of Sir Walter Scott, under whom he worked. He was a founding member of the Jedforest Club. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. In 1806 at Borthwickshiel he married Barbara, only daughter of George Pott of Todrig. Their children included: James, who succeeded, and married his cousin Barbara Pott; and Col. George Pott, who married Jane, daughter of Rev. G. Coventry. David Stuart (1742–1829) 11th Earl of Buchan. Interested in history and the arts in Scotland, he was a founder member of the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland and also founded the Ednam Club to maintain interest in the poetry of James Thomson. He was also instrumental in having the Encyclopedia Britannica published. In 1786 he purchased the Dryburgh estate, saving the abbey from further destruction. He used it as the centrepiece for his planned ‘Caledonian Temple of Fame’. The main parts of this vision that were completed were the obelisk in the Abbey grounds, the Wallace statue and the Temple of the Muses. He had Dryburgh House substantially rebuilt and lived there until his death. Sir David (1772–1837) 11th Earl of Buchan. His father, the 11th Earl of Buchan, had bought Dryburgh Abbey, saving it for posterity, and he inherited the estate in 1810. He wrote historical plays, among them ‘James V; or, The warlike days o’ Hab of Hawick: an historical drama’ in 1829, published by John Anderson, Edinburgh, 1830 (this being a fanciful version of the old story). He is also described as ‘Captain Erskine of Dryburgh’. He died without issue and the Dryburgh estate passed to Henry David, 12th Earl of Buchan. Rev. Henry ‘Harry’ (1692/3–1773) son of James of Sheilfield in Berwickshire and Elizabeth, daughter of John Scott of Ancrum. He was licensed to preach by Kelso Presbytery in 1722, was presented to Robertson Parish at the end of 1727 and became minister there early the next year. He was recorded in discharges with the Burgh of Selkirk in 1742, 1767 and 1772. He married Janet Cunningham (who died aged 64 in 1766), daughter of the minister of Hawick. Their children included James (b.1731), Marjory (b.1734) and Robert (b.1740), baptised in Robertson Parish when he was taxed for having a male servant. He wanted to transfer to Wilton (according to a letter of 1784 to Hugh Scott of Harden). He was recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls in Robertson Parish in 1785. In 1786 he was translated to St. Boswells, but died only about 2 years later. He married Henrietta Scott, daughter of Charles of Goldielands, and she died in 1818 at the age of 79. Their children included: Henry, who was in the army and succeeded, but had no offspring; Charles, who became a lawyer in Melrose, married Barbara, daughter of George Pott of Todrig and succeeded his brother; and William, who was a preacher and tax surveyor in Haddington. James of Sheilfield (1809/10–75) son of Charles. In the 1850s he was said to hold the female representation of the female line of the Scotts of Goldielands and Crumhaugh. He married his cousin Barbara Pott and she died in 1886, aged 76. He was succeeded by his son Charles. He and his wife are buried at Dryburgh Abbey. Sir John (d.1552) 5th Lord Erskine, 2nd son of Robert, who died at Flodden. He was also referred t as ‘of Nisbet’. He was named along with his father in an indenture of 1510 involving lands within their Barony of Synton, with Kers. He inherited the lands of Synton from his father in 1513 and they passed to his son and heir John in 1557. He married Margaret, daughter of Archibald Campbell, Earl of Argyll. His 2 eldest sons, Robert and Thomas, died before him. His daughter Margaret was a mistress of James V, and mother of James, Earl of Mar (and later Regent of Scotland). John (d.1572) 6th Lord Erskine and 1st (or 22nd) Earl of Mar. He was a member of the Council of Mary, Queen of Scots, guardian of James V and served as Regent of Scotland in 1571. In 1557 he inherited his father’s lands of Synton. He was among the prominent men of the nation who signed the document declaring James as Monarch (in place of Mary) in 1567. He married Annabella, daughter of William Murray of Tulibardine, and was succeeded by his son John, 2nd Earl of Mar. His daughter Mary married Archibald Douglas, 8th Earl of Angus. John (c.1562–1634) 2nd (or 23rd) Earl of Mar and 1st Lord of Cardross, son of the 6th Lord Erskine. He served as Treasurer of Scotland. He inherited his father’s lands of Synton in 1573, but sold them to the Earl of Buccleuch in 1619. In 1590 he was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. He is recorded gaining the lands of Synton and Synton Mill from Sir John Edmondston in 1593. He resigned his lands in 1620, so they could be re-granted to his heir. This included superiority over the local lands of Synton, Whitslade and Dalgleish. He married Anna, daughter of David, Lord Drummond and was succeeded by his son John and had several other children. John (d.1653/4) 3rd or 24th Earl of Mar, descended from the family who formerly held lands at Synton. In 1635 he was served heir to his father’s Earldom of Mar, which included superiority over Whitslade and Dalgleish (which was one third of Synton). The Scotts of Whitslade held the main estate at this time, and Synton was held by the Scotts of Buccleuch. He married Jean Hay (daughter of the Earl of Erroll) and was succeeded by his son John, who was Chancellor and married Mary (or Margaret), daughter of Walter Scott, 1st Earl of Buccleuch. Sir Robert (d.1452) 1st Lord Erskine, son of Sir Thomas of that Ilk and his 2nd wife, Janet Keith of Synton. Through his mother he probably inherited the Synton estates and possibly the hereditary sheriffdom of Selkirk. He witnessed charters during the reign of the Duke of Albany. He was captured at Homildon Hill in 1402, but released by 1405 and was again in English captivity in 1427. He claimed the Earldom of Mar in right of his mother in 1435. He passed on his estates (retaining the ‘liferent’) to his son Thomas in 1448, this including Synton and Dalgleish. He married a Stewart and secondly Elizabeth, daughter of David Lindsay of Glenesk. He was succeeded by his son Thomas, 2nd Lord. Robert (d.1513) son of Alexander, 4th Earl of Mar. He had a charter for the lands of Nisbet, Synton and lands within Selkirk in 1499/1500. He and his heirs had a charter for Nisbet in 1502. He obtained a charter of the lands of Synton and associated lands of Whitslade and Dalgleish in 1507/8 (when he was heir apparent to his father). Part of the deal was that he could infest Whitslade to John Cockburn of Ormiston and John Glendinning the lands of Dalgleish. He was Baron of Synton, rather than owner of specific lands within it, since Scott of Synton is mentioned as early as 1509, about the time he became 4th Lord. In 1510 there is an indenture of him and his son, with Ralph Ker of Primside Loch and Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst involving lands in Synton, as well as Nisbet; this was witnessed by John of Dun, as well as Alexander and Robert, who were probably all closely related. He married Isabella, daughter of Sir George Campbell of Loudon. Their eldest son, Robert, died before him and he was succeeded by his second son Sir John, the 5th Lord. The youngest of his 3 sons was James, who married Christian Stirling, and who was progenitor of the Erskines of Shielfield. He was killed at Flodden. Robert (18th C.) surgeon in Hawick who in 1772 witnessed a baptism for shoemaker John Oliver and Helen Currer. Perhaps the same Robert married Katherine Gledstains and their daughter Mary was baptised in Hawick in 1775. She is probably the ‘Kate Gladstains Mother to Molly Eskine’ whose death is recorded in 1816. Thomas of that Ilk (d.c.1404) son of Sir Robert, Chamberlain of Scotland. He witnessed charters during the reign of Robert III. He was witness to the confirmation of the lands and titles of George Douglas, Earl of Angus. He held many other titles and positions, including Keeper of Edinburgh Castle in 1371. He was recorded as Sheriff of Selkirkshire in 1373. In 1383 he is recorded when Peter ‘of Koeburn’, Lord of Henryland renounced to him the rights to the rentals from the lands of Dalgleish in Selkirkshire. In 1389 he witnessed the charter of Walter Scott to the superiority of Kirkurd; he is there referred to as ‘consanguineo nostro’, suggesting he was related to King Robert II. He married Mary, daughter and heiress of Sir William Douglas; she died in childbirth and a duel was fought over the right to her titles, the crucial dispute being over whether her child was stillborn or died after birth. He secondly married Joneta Keith, from whom he may have inherited the Synton estates. He was captured at Homildon Hill and may have died while a prisoner. He was succeeded by his son Robert. Thomas (d.1493/4) 2nd Lord Erskine, son of Sir Robert, the 1st Lord. Among other lands he held the estate of Synton and office of Sheriff of Selkirk, which passed to his son Alexander. This may have come through his grandmother Joneta Keith, Lady of Cadzow. He had a crown charter in 1448 for the lands of Erskine, Sheriffdom of Aberdeen, etc., as well as the lands of Dalgleish and Sront; these had been resigned by his father, while retaining ‘life-ent’. He was ‘Thoma, domino Erskin’ when witnessing charters for the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1451/2 and 1455 and another for the Douglasses in 1456. He is recorded as Sheriff of Selkirkshire in 1469. He also served as Justiciar for Lothian in 1474. Along with Alexander, he witnessed an ‘instrument’ relating to lands in Haversendean in 1480/1. He resigned his lands in the King’s hands in 1489, and they were re-granted to his heir, Alexander. He married Janet Douglas, possibly a daughter of the 1st Earl of Morton. His children included Alexander, 3rd Lord; Helen; Isobel; Elizabeth; and Mariotta or Muriella. He may also have been father of Margaret, who married James Rutherford of that ilk and Wells. He died 3 months before his son Alexander succeeded in April 1494. William (16th C.) Parson of Campsie and Commendator of Paisley. He was appointed as titular Archbishop of Glasgow in 1585, but deprived in 1587, when the General Assembly dissolved the archbishopric. He may have continued to be referred to as Archbishop until 1594, but unlike his predecessors, played no important role in affairs in Teviodore. His seal was rather crude compared to those of earlier bishops, showing St. Kentigern and the words ‘SIG-ILLUM GUILIELMI ERSKENE ARCHIEPISCOPI GLASCU.’ (formerly written ‘Erskyn’, ‘Er- skin’ and variants).

es (ez) v. is (third person singular, present tense) – ‘she es so’; ‘...how grand a privilege it hez been and still ez ti bide in the West End’ [IW], ‘If we are inquiring about a sick friend we might say, ‘Is hei bediit?’ We would not, however, hear the word ‘is’ so sounded in the answer. ‘Hei ez that, puir fella’’ [WL] (often used emphatically, in response to a statement, even if it contained ‘is’; note is is also frequently used, depending on context, and eez is sometimes used for emphasis; also spelled ‘ez’).

Es (ee-sa) n. (b.c.457) possibly first chief of Bernicia, the Anglian kingdom of north-eastern England and south-eastern Scotland, which included Hawick. He was succeeded by his son Eoppa and grandson Ida who became the first genuine King of Bernicia.

Eskdaill (esk-dal) n. courtesy title of the heir to the heir to the Dukedom of Buccleuch (i.e. first son of the Earl of Dalkeith), which keeps the older spelling. It was written this way in 1619 when Walter Scott was created Lord of Whitchester and Eskdaill, as well as Earl of Buccleuch.

Eskdaill Bank (esk-dal-bawngk) n. street rising steeply uphill across the roundabout from Mart Street, better known as the ‘Killin Hoose Brae’. It was developed in 1897 and named after a title of the Scotts of Buccleuch.

Eskdaill Terrace (esk-dal-to-ris) n. street named in 1883, developed in 1885, and incorporated into the west end of Weensland Road in 1955. Since the land was originally purchased from the 5th Duke of Buccleuch, it was named after one of the titles given to Walter, Lord Scott of Buccleuch in 1619 and more recently borne by heirs to the Earldom of Dalkeith. The main road to Denholm used to pass through this location (i.e. above the present Weensland Road) until rejoining near Bogliebarns (i.e. near the present Little Shop).

Eskdale (esk-dal) n. valley of the River Esk, running from roughly Canonbie to Eskdalemuir. It was once a Lordship, held by the Avenel family from the late 12th century until it passed to the Grahams through marriage in 1243. In 1309 Robert the Bruce confirmed a charter to Melrose Abbey of lands there (held of Graham) and the superiority was granted to Sir James Douglas. It remained with the Earls of Douglas until they forfeited their lands and it was granted to George, Earl of Angus in 1458/9. Melrose Abbey still held lands there in the 15th century – ‘March! march! Ettrick and Teviot-dale! Why my lads dinna ye march forward in order? March! march! Eskdale and Liddesdale! All the blue bonnets are over the border!’ [T] (it is ‘Eskdalled’ in about 1185 and ‘Esckedal’ in 1235/6).

Eskdale an Liddesdale Farmers’ Association (esk-dal-in-li-diz-dal-fer-murz-aw-so-see-a-shin) n. farmers club existing from at least the 1830s. It met alternately in Langholm and Newcastleton, with prizes given for the best livestock.

Eskdalemuir (esk-dal-mewr, -mär) n. town in Eskdale, with the Meteorological Observatory and Seismological Station above, as well as the Girdle Stanes and Loupin Stanes and the Samye Ling Temple nearby. The lands there were long owned by Melrose Abbey, for which the Scotts of Buccleuch held the office of Bailie from around 1484, and it still belonged to the Abbey in 1553/4. The area used to be a centre for sheep farming, but is now heavily forested. An old drove road used to pass by the north of Hawick to the Borthwick valley and then go from How pasley over towards Eskdalemuir. The parish of Eskdalemuir was created in 1702 from part of Westerkirk – ‘The stag-hounds, weary with the chase, Lay stretched upon the rushy floor, And urged, in dreams, the forest race, From Teviot-stone to Eskdale-moor’ [SWS], ‘...And then, ten miles threa anywhere, We had arrived at Eskdalemuir!’ [DH] (it is ‘Esckalmur’ in 1524, ‘Esdaill Muyr’ in 1553/4 and ‘Eskdaill Mure’ in 1633).

the Esmond Elliot Wards (thu-ez-mind-lee-e-lee-i’-wawrdz) n. wards in the Cottage Hospital, named for the Hon. Esmond Elliot, brother of Lord Minto, who was killed in WWI. His sister Lady Violet Astor gave a sum to build the wards, and the foundation stone was laid by the Prince of Wales in 1924.

esni (ez-ni) contr. isn’t, is not – ‘she esni, is she?’; ‘hei esni gaun ti be the wunner o ony beauty contests’ (sometimes used for emphasis, cf. isni and issen).

Esplin (esp-lin) n. Thomas (19th C.) English stockmaker who came to Hawick in the mid-1800s. He helped introduce cricket to the Town.
Essenside

He may be related to (or an error for) John, who was living at about 19 Howegate in 1841.

Essenside (e-sin-süd) n. hamlet to the west of Ashkirk, consisting of Wester and Easter Essenside, with Essenside Head above the former and Essenside Loch above the latter. Old Essenside was a former farmstead between Western Essenside and Essenside Loch. An ancient fort and settlement are in the hills to the west. The lands were owned by branches of the Scotts from the 16th century, and Easter Essenside was later farmed by the Shortreeds for several generations. Bernard Shortreed was recorded as tenant there in 1494/5. George Shortreed was there in 1579. Residents recorded in 1581 were Walter Chisholme, Robert Waugh, John Johnstone, William Chisholme, Mungo Robson, Thomas Shortreed, David Shortreed there, Thomas Aitchison and James Hall. In about 1616 a group of Scotts murdered Walter Scott 'in Essenside' (son of 'Auld Wat' of Harden) while he was fishing on the Ettrick. Geordie John-...

Ettableton (e-tul-tin) n. former parish near Newcastleton, with a churchyard that still contains Mediaeval gravestones. It is reached from a short dead-end road leaving the main road south of Newcastleton by the Milnholm Cross. Some of the oldest stones have been incorporated into a wall, which is dedicated to the memory of the Armstrongs, and others are behind a railing. The church was in the patronage of the Lords of Liddesdale, but there is no record of any minister serving there. There is now no sign of the church that served the parish until 1604, when it was merged with Castleton; it was located on a terrace to the north and west of the graveyard. There are the remains of a settlement to the north (said to have been a village once), where ancient coins were found in the early 19th century. A more extensive farm and field system is located to the west, possibly being the lands of Side. There was also probably another chapel at Chapelknowe, at the edge of the old parish towards Canonbie. It appears on Bagomond’s Roll of 1275 as ‘Rectoria cum vicaria de Eddiltoun’. In the Exchequer Rolls for 1540 the teind lambs were paid to the rector there, amounting to £29 12s. The farm there along with Milnholm, was possessed by David Goldie and James Mitchelson. The patronage and teinds of the kirk are still mentioned along with Castleton in the 1653 service of heirs for Mary Scott of Buccleuch and in the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch, when it is described as a ‘pendicle’ of Castleton (the name probably derives from the Old English personal name ‘Edla’ or ‘Eadhild’; it first appears as ‘Eddiltoun’ and ‘Eddilstoun’ in the 13th century; it is ‘Edilstoun’ in 1540, ‘Eddiltoun’ in 1575, ‘Eddiltoun’ in 1632 and ‘Edington’ in 1653, ‘Edilston’ and ‘Eddilstoun’ in 1663; it is ‘Ettrleton’ on Stobie’s 1770 map; note the potential confusion with the Eddleston near Peebles).

Ettrletonside (e-tul-tin-sid) n. former farmhouse near Ettrick. It is listed in 1632 along with Potterlampert, as a possession of Sandy Armstrong (it is ‘Eddilstounsise’ in 1632 and ‘Edington’ in 1653).

Ettrleton Sike (e-tul-tin-sik) n. small stream in Liddesdale, which rises on Kirk Hill and flows past Ettrleton cemetery to join the Liddel opposite Mangerton. To the south there is a small terrace with the remains of a rectangular building, and there are field-banks and rig lines in the area, visible on aerial photographs. On a hillside to the north are the remains of another rectangular hut, together with a field system.

Ettrick (e'-reek, et-reek) n. village on the Ettrick Water, well away from main roads. James Hogg, the Ettrick Shepherd was born near here and is buried in the parish church graveyard, along with Tibbie Shiel and Thomas Boston. There has been a church there for about 800 years, and the village was once ‘Ettrick Kirkton’. The name is also used for a former parish, and in general for the valley. Lands there that were granted by Alexander II to Melrose Abbey and are described in detail in the charter. The present church was built in 1824. There is also the Boston Memorial Hall. The lands of ‘Ettrik’, Rodono and ‘Carrick’ were erected into a free regality by James I in 1436 (origin uncertain; sometimes formerly spelled ‘Etterick’, it is ʻEthryc’ and ʻEtherick’ in c.1236, ʻEtricke’ in 1415 and ʻEtryk’ in 1519).

the Ettrick (thu-e'-reek) n. popular name for Ettrick Witter – ‘The border lass sings it in strains sweet tho’ sad, On the banks o’ the Ettrick or Yarrow’ [WS], ‘Fareweel, my Ettrick! fare-yewel! I own I’m unco laith to leave ye; Nane kens

the half o’ what I feel, Nor half the cause I ha’e to grieve me! [ES].

Ettrickbank (e’-reek-bawngk) n. cottage in Ettrickbridge, once the home of the Ettrick Shepherd and of the Scott family in the mid-19th century.

Ettrickbridge (e’-reek-brig, et-reek-brig) n. Ettrickbridge, also called ‘Ettrickbridge-end’, a village set out by the 3rd Duke of Buccleuch in the late 18th century in the Ettrick valley, west of Selkirk. The lands there had been held by the Scotts of Harden until about 1746. The original bridge there was built of freestone in 1628 by Auld Wat of Harden and had 3 arches. The romantic version of the story is that the old riever had accidentally killed a child in a cross-Border raid, and at the request of the Abbot of Melrose erected this bridge at a spot where several lives had been lost crossing the river, so that in future many lives would be saved. The bridge was ruined by 1715 and rebuilt in 1739, but washed away in 1777. The replacement came in 1780 about half a mile further up-river, and this had the old stone displaying the Harden coat of arms built into it. It was widened in 1858. The Cross Keys Inn was once a coaching inn and survives as a hotel.

Ettrick Brig-end (et-reek-brig-end) n. the village of Ettrickbridgend, also known as ‘Ettrickbrig’.

Ettrick Forest (e’-reek-for-ist, et-reek-for-ist) n. name formerly used for a large tract of land generally lying to the west of Selkirk, and also sometimes called ‘Selkirk Forest’ or just ‘the Forest’. It formed the last large part of the great Caledonian Forest situated around the Ettrick and Yarrow valleys, and now almost entirely gone. It consisted of Scots pine, oak, birch and hazel. However, it should be noted that the word ‘forest’ could also refer to an area of bare, high land, rather than necessarily implying that it was full of trees. It became a royal hunting forest, with royal parties being based at Selkirk and Galashiels. Lands there were granted to Sir James Douglas by Robert the Bruce in 1321, and they remained in the superiority of the Douglases until forfeited to the Crown in the middle of the 15th century. Rents were paid to the Crown, with a few specific farms where the King or Queen kept their own flocks of sheep. Margaret Tudor received lands there in 1503, which later passed to the Scotts. There was often a Keeper of the Forest, with the Earl of Gloucester being one of the first appointed, by Edward I. It was also used as a sanctuary for fugitives, with Wallace and Bruce hiding there, for example, and known as a lawless place in scaring days. In early times there were special Forest Courts, with jurisdiction over the residents, and the Forest was divided into 3 Wards, known as Ettrick, Tweed and Yarrow. Each Ward was under the charge of 2 rangers, one of whom was referred to as the Master Ranger. The Wards were divided into steadings; in the 15th century there were 45 in Ettrick, 23½ in Yarrow and 17 in Tweed, each paying £6 in rent, as well as payment in livestock – ‘... May hang upon a soor ploom tree, And sleep in Ettrick Forest’ [JT] (it is ‘Etrik-Forest’ in 1525).

Ettrickheid (et-reek-heed) n. area around the head of the Ettrick Water. The lands there were part of the holdings of Melrose Abbey, for which the Scotts of Buccleuch had the office of Bailie from the late 15th century (it is ‘Etrikheid’ in 1524 and 1525 and ‘Etrikheid’ in 1553/4).

Ettrickhill (et-reek-hil) n. village, being the western extension of Ettrick. Here is the monument to the Ettrick Shepherd, marking the site of the cottage he was born in.

Ettrickhouse (e’-reek-koos) n. Ettrickhouse, former farm in the Ettrick valley. In 1557 Scott in Thirlstane paid rent to Melrose Abbey for these lands. The tenants there in 1609 were John Scott, James Amos and Archibald Stewart. Sir Robert Scott of Thirlstane had a charter for these and other lands in about 1620 and granted them to Sir Walter Scott of Whitslade in about 1622. They were inherited by Thomas Scott of Whitslade in 1655 (it is ‘Etrikhous’ in 1557, ‘Atrikhous’ in 1564 and ‘Etrikhouss’ in about 1622).

Ettrick Pairish (e’-reek-pä-reeesh) n. parish in Selkirkshire, containing the upper reaches of the Ettrick valley, extending to St. Mary’s Loch. It is bounded by Roberton to the south-east. It incorporated the ancient parish of Rankilburn or Buccleuch from 1650. There was a ‘New Kirk’ there from the early 16th century, with the present building dating from 1824 (it is ‘Atrik’ in 1539).

Ettrick Pen (et-reek-pen) n. summit that is the highest point in the headwaters of the Ettrick, on the border with Dumfries & Galloway, reaching a height of 692 m (2,270 ft). It was long referred to as ‘Eskdalemuir Pen’ by those living in Eskdale – ‘... For, swift as the deer on Ettrick Pen Sweep at the sound from scaur to glen, And swift as the towering kestred stoops When a field mouse moves in the bracken hoops’ [WHO], ‘Away owre i’ the wast, Ettrick Pen, raxin abune his nec-bors, And the muckle roond shooders o’ the Moffat Hills ... ’ [DH] (the name is probably another example of the p-Celtic ‘pen’).
the Ettrick Shepherd

the Ettrick Shepherd (thu-et-reck-shepherd) n. popular name for the other James Hogg.

Ettrickside (et-reck-si-d) n. the side of the Ettrick Water – ‘There are brase on Ettrickside Where the broom and bracken bide; But the’re charmin’ spots that hide Roond auld Hawick’ [TK].

Ettrickside (et-reck-si-d) n. former name for a farm in the Ettrick valley, owned by the Scots of Thirlestane in the early 17th century, with tenants in 1609 being William ‘Houp’ and Thomas Brydon. It was once part of the parish of Rankilburn. In 1621 it was described as an ‘outset’ of Gamescleuch (it is ‘Ettriksye’ in 1609 and ‘Etriksyd’ in 1621; it is marked ‘Ettricksyid’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Ettrick Terrace (e’-reck-te-ris, et-reck-te-ris) n. street in ‘the Terraces’ of the Wogelgate, built around 1892 by Hawick Working Men’s Building and Investment Company, and named after the river.

Ettrick Witter (e’-reck-wi’-ur, et-reck-wi’-ur) n. river that rises at Ettrick Head, east of Moffat, and joins the Tweed near Abbotsford. The first bridge across it was built for Alexander II in 1234 and connected Kelso Abbey with a cell of monks at Lesmahagow in Lanarkshire, although it is unclear how long it lasted. The next bridge was built by Auld Wat of Harden at Ettrickbridge in 1628 and replaced in 1780. There was also a ford near here from at least 1647 – ‘...I hear the lintie in the whins Where Ettrick rins’ [JBS], ‘So Ettrick flowed by an elf-heart led With an elf-lintie in the whins Where Ettrick rins’ [JBS], ‘Thy kingdoom is ane evirlestin’ an’ thy dominione in-'.

Eunson (yon-sin) n. Paul educated at Hawick High School, he is a pediatric neurologist at the Royal Hospital for Sick Children in Edinburgh. He has worked to train pediatricians in developing countries.

the Evangelical Union (thu-ce-vawn-je-leek-kul-yoon-yin) n. evangelical church group in Hawick, formed in 1848 and later renamed the Congregational Kirk (although there were separate, but related, groups with that name at about the same time, the early history being complicated). They met on O’Connell Street, with Rev. Alexander Duff being the first minister. The church was formed on E.U. principles, but only joined the Scottish Evangelical Union in 1859. The building was constructed on O’Connell Street in 1848-9 and finally sold about 1892 when the new church was erected on Bourtree Place. Also called the ‘Evangelistic Union’ and later the ‘E.U. Congregational Church’ when there was a union between the Evangelical and Congregational churches in Scotland. It was finally renamed simply the ‘Congregational Church’, and moved to new premises on Bourtree Place in 1894.

Evans (e-vinz) n. Dr. Rufus Easson (d.1945) general practitioner in Newcastleton. He lived at Northfield, North Hermitage Stree. He served as a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He married Rose Alice Vassie. Their daughter Helen Christina drove ambulances in the London Blitz and wrote fiction under the name ‘Jane Oliver’.

even on (ee-vin-oân) adv., arch. straightforwardness, frankness, honesty, candour – ‘But dinna blame me for my evendoonness, Joost wyte thysel’ for fateing me the sphere O’ rustic life ...’ [JoHa] (cf. eendoon).

even on (ee-vin-oân) adv., arch. continuously – ‘It rain’d even on’ [GW] (also written ‘even-on’).

ever (i-vur) adv. ever (note the pronunciation, also sometimes spelled ‘ivver’ or ‘ivir’).

the Ever Burn (thu-e-vur-burn) n. former name for a stream near the lands of East Mains, the precise location being uncertain. It is described in a sasine of 1688 as forming the southern boundary of Cramplands Croft.

the Evergreen (thu-e-vur-green) n. common name for the Evergreen Hall.

Evergreen Hall (e-vur-green-hawl) n. the Evergreen Club for the elderly was started in 1960, meeting in church halls until this hall was built at the foot of Dovecote Street by public subscription, and opened in 1965 by Lady Polwarth. The land had previously been the site of the hut used for Pentecostal (or Apostolic) meetings. It is the traditional starting point for the children’s procession to the Vertish Hill Sports.

Everhaa (e-vur-haw) n. another name for Overhall – ‘Here kneels James Langlands o’ that ilk, A Borderer both true and keen; For he’s the Lord of Langlands fair, Of Everhall and Wilton Dean’ [BCM1880].

everlastin (i-vur-les-tin, -tean) adj., poet. everlastin – ‘Blisset be the Lord God o’ Israel, frae evirlestin til evirlestin’ [HSR], ‘Thy kingdoom is ane evirlestin’ kingdoom, an’ thy dominionce in-duurs throweowt a’ ganæratians’ [HSR], n., arch.
Evers (ee-vurz) n. Sir Ralph (1508–1545) officer of Henry VIII, born in Witton Castle, Yorkshire, son of William the 1st Lord Eure (or Evers). He was married to Margery Bowes (grand-daughter of William, 1st Lord Eure (or Evers)). He was the 4th generation of his family to have been a March Warden. He married Mary Dawnay of Sassay and was succeeded by his son William.

Sir William 1st Lord Eure (c.1483–1547/8) son of Sir Ralph Eure (or Evers) and Muriel Hastings. He was appointed by the Earl of Surrey to be one of the Marshalls of the English army that attacked Jedburgh in 1523. He was Sheriff of Durham and Northumberland and Warden of the English East March in the 1530s and 1540s. In 1541 he complained about the large flocks of Scottish sheep and other animals that were being pastured on the English side of the Merse. He married Elizabeth Willoughby of Parham. Since his son Sir Ralph died before him, he was succeeded by his grandson William, the 2nd Lord.

William 2nd Lord Eure (1529–93/4) son of Sir Ralph and grandson of William, 1st Lord. He was Warden of the English Middle March about 1553–57. He married Margaret Dymoke of Scrivelsby and was succeeded by his son Ralph (also written ‘Ewrie’, ‘Ewie’, ‘Everlie’, etc.).

every (e-vu-ree) adj., arch. hungry (noted by J. Jamieson; also aiverie and aevenoo).

Evil-willit Sandy (ee-vil-wi-lee’-sawn-dee) n. nickname for Alexander Airmstrong.

evite (e-vee’t) v. avoid, evade – ‘The Treasurier could not attend this day the Session in the Manse by reason of some emergencie he was trysted with and could not evite’ [PR1724].

Ewart (yoo-ur’) n. Adam (15th/16th C.) tenant in ‘langhop’ in 1502, this probably being Langhope near Ashkirk. He was fined for not attending the justice-aire held in Selkirk, and served as his own surety.

the Ewe an Lamb (thu-yoo-an-lawn-in) n. public house on the Sandbed at 3 Orrock Place, previously known as St. Leonard’s Vaults, and popularly called ‘the Monkeys’. It was built around 1860, presumably replacing an earlier building. James Elliot was proprietor from at least 1841. The pub closed in 2005, becoming the Y.M. clubrooms (sometimes referred to as the ‘Ewe & Lamb Inn’).

Ewe Hill (yoo-hil) n. hill on the south side of the upper Hermitage valley, located south-east of the farm of Twislehope. It reaches a height of 471 m.

Ewe Knowe (yoo-now) n. small hill in Liddesdale, to the south-east of Dinalabyre, being the northern spur of Hunter’s Hill, with Wilson’s Pike above them.

Ewe Knowes (yoo-nowz) n. name for a hilly region in Liddesdale, just to the west of Foulshields Wood, being an eastern extension of North Birny Fell.

Ewelair Hill (yoo-lär-hil) n. hill in Craik Forest, just north-west of Wolfcleuchhead. It lies between Muckle Knowe and Grey Hill, reaching a height of 434 m.

Ewen (yoo-win) n. Andrew (c.1760–1840s) born in Kelso, son of Andrew and Mary Hogherd. He was a Skinner and tanner in Hawick. He had the premises in Tannage Close from 1812, moving to Slitrig Crescent by the 1820s. He was listed as Andrew ‘sen. Crescent’ in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory and his tannery on Slitrig Crescent is shown on Wood’s 1824 map, around No. 1. He was listed among heads of households of Wilton Kirk in 1835. He was listed as a tanner in Pigot’s 1837 directory. His business was eventually taken over by John Nichol, who was later Provost. He was a staunch Whig who worked to help elect Capt. Elliot. It is said that Elliot influenced the Whig members of the county to appoint his son as the Minister of Hobkirk the year after the 1832 election. He married Jane Peddie (from Kelso), and their children included: Jean (b.1790), who was living unmarried at Slitrig Crescent in 1851; Andrew (b.1792), a manufacturer in Jedburgh; Mary (b.1794); Helen (b.1796); Rev. John (b.1800), local minister; and Henry (b.1804), also a skinner. He was still alive in 1841 and listed in Slater’s 1852 directory (although he was probably deceased by then). His children Jane, Helen and Robert were all living together unmarried on Bridge Street in 1861. One of his daughters was probably the ‘Miss Ewen’ who donated a 1576 bible to the Museum in 1857. Andrew (b.1792) son of Andrew. He worked in Hawick before moving to Jedburgh, where he was a manufacturer. He was still in Hawick in 1825 when he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’. He is recorded as ‘Andrew Ewen, jun.’ as a currier on the Crescent in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. In 1841 he was a manufacturer at Allars Mill in Jedburgh, living with his son Robert. Henry (b.1804) son of Andrew and Jane Peddie. He was also a Skinner in Hawick. In the 1837 Commons inquiry into ‘fictitious voters’ he was mentioned as exchanging property with John Haldane in Selkirk, apparently for the purpose of voting. He is recorded as such in the electoral roll of 1837 and on the 1841 census is living with his elderly father and sister Helen on the Crescent. In 1851 he was listed as a farmer on Slitrig Crescent and in 1861 was at 3 Bridge Street (probably corresponding to the modern No. 20), still unmarried with his mother and sister. In 1857 he donated the skull of an ancient ox to the Museum, found at Synton Moss. Rev. John (1800–75) son of the Hawick Skinner Andrew and Jane Peddie, he was born in Hawick. He was educated at Edinburgh University and licensed to preach in 1822. He became assistant to Rev. James Arkle in Hawick soon afterwards, apparently refusing to accept remuneration for this position. He was then tutor to several notable Roxburghshire families, including travelling in Europe, and also worked as preceptor to the only son of a gentleman in Yorkshire. He was presented as minister of Hobkirk in late 1833 and ordained there in 1834. This was said to be due to the influence of Capt. Elliot (brother to Lord Minto) who his father had supported in the election the year before. There was much dissent among the heritors and some even laid an accusation of simony against him, so it was a year before he was finally ordained. He also acted as Persbytery Clerk. His was appointed by the Crown amid some controversy, the heritors being unable to agree. He remained there until his death. He wrote a statistical account of Hob Kirk Parish in 1834. The oldest known communion token from Hob Kirk is from 1837 and bears his initials; it is crudely made and probably formed from the material of older tokens. In 1841 he is recorded living at the Manse with Jane an Margaret (presumably his sisters). He married Isabella Yeaman (who died in 1898), daughter of James Fitchie, manufacturer of Deanfield, Meigle. Their children were: Anna Jane, who married George Watson, minister of Hownam; Rosanadra, ‘Rose’ (1849–1912), who married Col. John Joicey of Newton Hall, Northumberland; John Sangster, stockingmaker (1851–1913); and Charles Henry, engineer (1855–1909). Robert (18th C.) gardener at Cavers in 1786, when he was working for George Douglas. His name is recorded as ‘Ewans’. Robert (1823–1900) native of Hawick, son of Jedburgh manufacturer Andrew and grandson of Hawick skinner Andrew. He was educated at Peebles, then briefly worked in the Hawick Town Clerk’s office before working with his father in the hosiery trade in Jedburgh. For many years he worked for William Watson & Sons, then about 1860 opened his own tweed and hosiery firm at Millbank, apparently the first firm to make tartan stockings; he sold the firm in the early 1880s and it became Currie’s and then Hogg’s. He was part of the old ‘eternal council’, and after reconstitution became a Councillor and Magistrate for 9 years before being Provost 1875–78. His Provostship saw the new sewage works developed, and the purchase of Wilton Manse and Glebe. He was a Libreal who worked locally for the Reform Bill. Although not a Common Riding supporter, he was a member of the Parochial Board, member of the South of Scotland chamber of Commerce, one of the founders of Hawick Heritable Investment Bank, and a deacon in the Hawick Free Church. In 1841 he was living with his father in Jedburgh, but by 1851 was living on Hawick High Street with his widowed mother Elizabeth and sisters Elizabeth and Jane. In 1861 he was recorded as a hosier, employing 40 people. His wife was Blanche, from Edinburgh, and their children included Andrew and Eliza. He wrote the booklet ‘Through Canada in 1878’. Long involved in banking, he left Hawick about 1880 to promote the ‘People’s Bank of Scotland Ltd.’ in Glasgow, died in Edinburgh and is buried in the Wellogate (also sometimes ‘Ewin’).

Ewen’s Court (yoo-winz-kör) n. former name for Tannage Close, after Andrew Ewen, skinner, who ran a tannage business there. It marked the southern end of the Little Haugh on Woods 1824 plan.

Ewen’s Loch (yoo-winz-loch) n. small pond in the ‘Ewen’s Moss’ area, to the west of Kaimend.

Ewen’s Moss (yoo-winz-mos) n. former name for an area in the hills to the south-east of Hawick, corresponding to the area now centred on Ewen’s Loch, west of Kaimend. This is south of the once much larger Hilliesland Loch.

Ewes (yooz) n. settlement on the River Ewes, a few miles north of Langholm, or more generically the name for the valley. The surrounding parishes of ‘Over Ewes’ and ‘Nether Ewes’ were here. The church by the roadside at Ewes, built 1866/7, is famous for its ancient bell hanging in the fork of a tree. It is built on the site of the 13th century Nether Kirk of Ewes, dedicated to St. Cuthbert. There was formerly a school here and a blacksmith’s and post office to the north at Brieryshaw – ‘Sequestered vale! my loved, my native Ewes, Thy bounty’s worthy of a nobler song, Nor can these broken notes express the strong Unuttered thoughts that thrill my rustic muse’ [MW].

Ewesdale (yooz-däl) n. valley of the River Ewes, running north of Langholm. It is familiar to Terries who drive much of the valley between Fiddleton and Lanholm along the A7. Historically it appears never to have been a barony, and to have been separate from the Regality of Eskdale to the south. In 1456 it was granted by the King to George, 4th Earl of Angus, after being resigned by Robert Graham of Ewesdale (actually swapped with lands in Forfarshire); it was stated that it had formerly been in Dumfriesshire, but had been transferred to Roxburghshire. Sains was given in 1456/7 at the principle manor of ‘Mallano’, although it is unclear where that was. Through the 15th century it was a Lordship, held by the Douglasses. The upper part (with the ‘Ower’ Kirk) was once a Lordship of the Homes, while the lower part of the valley belonged to the Lindsayes, then the Maxwells; the 2 parts were united in the hands of Alexander, Earl of Home in about 1610. However, the superiority of the lands in the lower part (along with patronage of Nether Ewes Kirk) continued to be held by the Maxwells into at least the 18th century. The valley was burned by the English in 1514, when it was described as ‘8 myles of Lienth in the said...
Marchies, wherupon was 27 pleughes'. George, Lord Home, granted lands in 'the vyr parrochin of Ewisdale' to Ninian and David Armstrong in 1528. Throughout the 16th century it was listed among those places near the Border whose inhabitants were responsible for 'dalie slaughteris, birming, fyre raising, open refnis, thiftis and depredations'. In 1579 there is a record of a feud between the Elliots of Ewesdale and the Armstrongs of 'the Gyngillis'. Much of the land fell into possession of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1643. The 'lordschip of Ewisdaill' was listed among the possessions of the family in the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch. The region was for a time part of Roxburghshire (on account of being part of contiguous lands held by the Duchess of Buccleuch), from at least 1672, and was last restored to Dumfriesshire in 1747. The name formerly applied to parts of Eskdale as well. There were once mills at Meikledale, Sorbie, Arkleton, Bliss, Glenvorane, and Wrae. The main families of the area were the Littles, Armstrongs, Elliots, Scotts (of Ewesdale) and Beatties. An ancient turf dyke ran along the hills on the western side of the valley, and old roads of various vintages can be traced up the hillsides and across the pass at Ewes Doors. There are many signs of ancient habitation in the area, with more than a dozen locations marked as settlements, along with a couple of hill forts. A book 'The Ewes Valley: An Historical Miscellany' was written by Brenda I. Morrison and R. Bruce McCartney in 2000, with a historical article by John Elliot (spelled 'Euesdaill', 'Euisdaill', 'Ewisdale', 'Ewysdale', 'Ewisdale' and variants; it is 'le Vale de Ewithe' in 1296; some sources suggest the origin of the name is 'efts dale' or 'newts dale', but it seems more likely that like other local rivers, the origin of 'Ewes' is obscure). The last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branholme and his men laid in wait here for a gang of Cumbrian raiders, scaring them off and recapturing their booty. There was once a chapel near here (presumably closer to the river), dedicated to St. Paul and connected with Melrose Abbey. The last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branholme in 1575 records a debt owed 'to the porter of Wisdys' for the rest of the price of ane horse'; this suggests that there may have been a change-house located at the pass here, with the proprietor known as the 'porter'. Archibald Elliot was there in 1586. There are also several linear earthworks here, crossed by the terrace-way that forms part of the old road from Eweslees to Caerlenrig (which may have been originally Roman). The Parish of Ewes was disjoined from Dumfriesshire and united with Roxburghshire in 1672 (it is 'Ewisdores' in 1565 and transcribed as 'Ellis Durris' in 1586).

Ewesdown Sike (yooz-down-, yowz-doon-sik) n. stream in the headwaters of the Teviot. It joins Worms Cleuch at the steading of Ramsaycleuchburn, becoming Rams Cleuch.

Ewes Fit (yooz-fi) n. Ewes Foot, former name for an area near the foot of the Ewes Water, or more specifically for the ford near the confluence with the River Esk (just north of Langholm) which was once part of the main route towards Hawick.

Ewe Sike (yoo-sik) n. small stream in Liddesdale, rising on Ewe Knowe and running north to become part of Boghall Burn.

Ewes Kirk (yooz-kirk) n. name of one of 2 churches in the Ewes valley, formerly referred to as the Ower Kirk and the Nether Kirk. The upper one was abandoned after the Reformation and the congregation merged with that of the lower one. The present building was constructed in 1867, with designs by James Burnet of Langholm. A roll of ministers is: Roger Kirkpatrick in 1556; William Graham, from 1627; Mr. Chisholme in about 1642; John Lithgow 1646–64; John Home c.1664–81; John Melville early c.1682–89; John Lithgow 1689–94; Robert Darling 1694–1717; Robert Malcolm 1717–61; Richard Scott 1761–90; John Clunie 1790–91; John Laurie 1791–1817; Robert Shaw 1816–53; Thomas Smith 1853–1901; David Preston 1901–.

It has been there since the mid-19th century, the building previously being the Chartist Store. It is a grade C listed building.

the Exchange Buildings (thu eks-chänj-bil-dinj) n. built over the Slitrig beside Towerdyke, the foundation stone was laid in 1865 by the Duke of Buccleuch. A photograph of 1860 shows the site before construction commenced. The buildings consisted of a large hall, accommodating about 1500 people (and thus the largest in town), smaller halls, an arcade of shops and a house. It had a dual role as agricultural hall and entertainment centre, but soon came to be used mainly for concerts, shows, etc. It was later used as a dance hall and cinema, with various names, the Empire, the King’s, the Odeon, the Classic and finally the Marina. In later years it was a bingo hall, with attached bars, most of which burned down in 1992. The northern section and the Arcade doorway survive, the rest being converted into a car park in 1998. The remaining three level building is designated to house the Border Archives.

excommunication (eks-ko-mew-neek-kā-shin) n. official exclusion from the Church, being the ultimate punishment in former times. Imposition of this order meant that public proclamations were read at all nearby churches ordering all parishioners to shun the offender, and to refuse to offer them food or shelter. Civil rights were also affected, until an Act of 1690. But in general excommunication meant being a social outcast and losing one’s livelihood. The Pope excommunicated the whole of Scotland for Robert the Bruce’s involvement in the murder of John ‘Red’ Comyn (who was Baron of Bedrule, among other places). This led to the Declaration of Arbroath, and the eventual lifting of the National excommunication. There are no records of individual Teris suffering this fate. In 1724 2 people from Stow had their Act of Excommunication read at Hawick Kirk and all the churches of the Presbytery of Merse and Teviotdale.

Failziehope (fail-zeek-hop) n. former name for lands in Jedforest, recorded as ‘Failyephopis’ in 1539. It was among lands that passed from the Douglasses to the Crown in about 1537. The location is uncertain (it is possible it is the same as Fenzlehope).

faimily (faim-lee, fain-mi-lee) n. a family – ‘her famility er verra important ti her’, ‘Aw ken at least three Haack familics that hev a particuler interest in this the 1979 Common Ridin’ [BW1979], ‘...modelled on that o his grandfither the 1888 Cornet A.H. Drummond, a freend o the Beattie families’ [IWL], ‘The Landles’ waur a weel kent family in the toon’ [MB], ‘...Wi other families oo’d ti share Doon oor close and up oor stair’ [IWL], ‘I mind o’ hale familics oot sledgin, Careerin pell-mell owre the braes’ [WL] (note that the common pronunciation has only 2 syllables).

fain (faan) adj., arch., poet. glad, eager, well-pleased – ‘But Jesu, gif the folk was fain To put the buffing on their thighs ... ’ [CPM], ‘I’ll sigh, an’ whinge, an’ cant, an’ grane, An’ mak the godly unco fain’ [JR], ‘But seeing y’or come back again Of your coming I’m right fain, And alto-gether free of Pain ye shall ly in my Bosom’ [AHS], ‘I’d fain to Harden gie’n me my vote, But for the clock ... ’ [DH], ‘...More the auld toon is fair doon the hole’ [WL], ‘...Fair enjoyed Glenny’s fire’ [IWL], ‘Losh! The scene is fair entrancin’ And draws the smile’ [RH], ‘...And eer chin was fair rinnin wi grease’ [AY] (common in Hawick as an intensifier).

Fair (fair) n., arch. ‘ti take a body ti the fair’ is to take aback an over-confident person, to disagree-ably surprise someone – ‘Now that’s nate where A got a drop that raether taen iz ti the fair!’ [ECS] (usually occurring in the passive voice).

Fair (fair) n. Richard (16th C.) owner of half a particante of land on the south side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter.

Fairbairn (fair-barn) n. James (17th C.) resi-dent of Ashkirk Parish. His son Thomas was bap-tised in 1651, with witnesses Patrick Angus and Patrick Nichol. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at Castleside, in Ashkirk Parish, recorded on the 1789–97 Horse Tax Rolls. In 1797 he was owner of 8 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He was addi-tionally taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. James (18th/19th C.) from the Hawick area, in about 1815 he emigrated with his family to the ‘Scotch Settlement’ in St. Lawrence County, New York. James (b.1806/7) born in Westruther Parish, he was farmer at Easter Fodderlee around the 1860s. In 1851 he was living in Jedburgh, but by 1861 he was farming 212 acres and employing 7 labourers. His wife was Helen Rutherford, and they also lived with his mother-in-law, who was a farmer’s widow. By 1868 his wife was recorded as farmer at East Fodderlee, and so he was presumably deceased. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, recorded at Spittal in 1781. His children included Betty (b.1779) and David (b.1871). John (1858–1943) son of the Maxton blacksmith Charles, with his mother being Elizabeth Elliot, he came to Hawick in the early 1900s. He eventually became manager of the King’s Theatre (in the Exchange Build-ings). He retired in 1928. He was known as a writer of poetry, several of which were pub-lished in the Hawick Express. His output includes ‘Alec, Oor Bellman’, ‘On Seeing A Tramp Pass-ing’, ‘Look On The Bright’, ‘The Cornet’s Chase’ and ‘Wilton Park’. He also published the poem
Fairbairn's Craigs

‘To the most glorious... Memory of... Sir Walter Scott’ in 1932. However, he is best remembered as writer of ‘The Exile’s Dream’, which was put to music by John Huggan. He died at his home, 25 Wilton Crescent, and is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. Peter (1807/8–69) from Edinburgh, he was a shoemaker in Hawick. He married Janet, daughter of Michael Griev and Rachel Scott, and she died in 1877. In 1861 he was living at 3 Fore Raw. Robert (1813/4–96) married Hannah Ann Murray, as recorded in Cavers and Southdean Parishes in 1825. His wife died at Lanton Craig in 1851, aged 49. He emigrated to America with his family, with daughter Helen dying in Nebraska in 1872 and Margaret at Burnkinford in 1874. He died at Elmira, Illinois, and there is a memorial to him and his family in Bedrule kirkyard.

Fairbairn’s Craigs (fær-bærnz-krægz) n. rocky region to the south-west of Larriston Fells in Castleton Parish, located near the head of the Stanesheil Burn.

Fairfoul (fær-fowl) n. Andrew (c.1606–63) son of a minister from Anstruther, he studied at St. Andrews and became minister of North Leith and then Duns. In 1661 he became the first Archbishop of Glasgow after the Restoration. He was zealous in persecuting Covenanters. He died on his way to Edinburgh after less than 2 years in office and is buried at Holyrood. His seal showed a crozier and a saltire, with a monk and a tree with fowls, together with a fish and the words ‘SIGILLUM R. P. ANDR. ARCHI[EPISC]O GLASGU’.

Fairgrieve (fær-greev) n. David (b.1791/2) born at Ledgerwood in Berwickshire, he was a tailor on the Howegate, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories and in Slater’s 1852 directory on ‘Middle row’. In 1841 and 1851 he was on the Mid Row. His wife was Janet and they had a son Robert. George (b.1781/2) from Jedburgh, he was a tin-plate worker in Hawick. In 1841 he was a tinsmith on O’Connell Street and in 1851 he was listed as a white-smith at about 6 High Street. Slater’s 1852 directory lists ‘George Fairgrieve & Son’ on the High Street. His wife was Margaret and their children included William, Thomas, Helen and Margaret. George D. (19th/20th C.) 5th man to serve as Secretary of the Congregational Kirk. Helen (b.1830/1) daughter of tinsmith George. She was listed as a milliner on the High Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. James (18th/19th C.) tin-plate worker on the High Street, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. In 1837 he was listed as an ironmonger as well as tin-plate worker at the Tower Knowe. In 1841 he was living at Tower Knowe (probably No. 3) with his wife Isabella. Janet (17th C.) listed among the poor householders in Abbotrule who could not pay the Hearth Tax in 1694. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isabel Bruce and their son William was baptised in 1726. The witnesses were Bailie Martin and candlemaker John Scott. John (b.1789/90) from Galashiels, he was a carrier in Lilliesleaf. He is probably the John from Galashiels who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. His daughter Jessie married road labourer James Goodfellow. In 1852 he is listed running his cart from Hawick to Lilliesleaf, leaving from the Plough on Thursdays; his name is given in Slater’s directory as ‘Job’ (also written ‘Fairgreave’, ‘Fairgreive’, ‘Feirgrive’ and ‘Fergrieve’).

Fairhust Drive (fær-hurst-drɪv) n. part of Burnfoot, built in 1950 and extended around 1966. The name derived from the fact that the

The Fairest Spot o’ a’ (thu-fær-rist-spō-ō-aw) n. song with words and music by Tom Ker, written about 1890. It was often performed at social nights for the Teviotdale Bicycle Club and first sung at the Common Riding at the 1909 Colour Bussing by T. Caldwell. It fell into obscurity after WWI, but was revived after WWII, with music arranged by Adam Rutherford Grant (from his own memory and some notes left by Tom Ker and Adam Grant). In its new form it was first sung by George L. MacDonald at the Callants’ Club Smoker in 1948. It has the same rhythm and meter as Ker’s ‘I Like Auld Hawick the Best’, and like his other songs, each ‘chorus’ has different words. Again falling out of fashion for decades, the song was revived for the 2005 Colour Bussing by Joyce Tinlin and is included in the CD ‘Hawick and Teviotdale in Song and Poetry’ (2006) sung by Joyce Tinlin.

Fairgrieve (fær-greev) n. First houses were of the early concrete ‘Whitson Fairhurst’ style. Later houses built to fill gaps were of a different style.

fairies (fä-reez) n., pl. imaginary mischievous spirits. The exact nature and appearance are ill-defined, this being part of their mystique. However, the picture of small, winged creatures is largely a Victorian English invention, having little in common with the Scottish concept. Local stories often had them as small creatures, sometimes dressed in green. There was great local superstition about fairies until well into the 19th century. People claimed to have seen them cavoring at the Miller’s Knowes and the Welloagate. 2 green circular mounds, or ‘fairy rings’ (now known to be generally caused by a fungus) were once situated on the north bank of the Teviot, but were obliterated when Laidlaw’s Cauld was built. Similar rings once existing at Carterhaugh were supposedly related to the fairies in ‘Tam’s lane’. Windburgh Hill was supposed to be a domain of the ‘guid folk’, and a shepherd disturbing them by throwing a stone into the (non-existent) bottomless loch is said to have caused the great flood of the Slitrig in 1767. An area in the Borthwick Water was called the Fairy Knowe, apparently where a shepherd was thrown in the flooded burn by the fairies. An article on local fairies, written by ‘A.M., Hawick’ appeared in the Edinburgh Magazine in 1820. A child of a woman at Minto Craigfoot was said to have been swapped for a changeling and only saved when Rev. Borland of Bedrule administered a concoction made from the foxglove. Another tale is of a changeling baby who became ‘an ugly emaciated creature’, who demonically played the fiddle and was thrown in the fire by a tailor, when the original baby reappeared. James Ruickbie told a story of a girl in Innerleithen who was taken by the fairies, but returned after prayers. The farm of Winningtonrig was said to have 2 fairies, which often performed favours on the farm, but once were interrupted while piping and dancing, and in retaliation made all the animals call out loudly for the next day. A fairy at Bedrule was said to have been given the farmer’s wife’s last barley, and in return filled her meal chest. Objects that were meant to offer protection from these spirits include a husband’s ‘blue bonnet’, a hank of red thread, a natural stone with a hole in it, and branches of the rowan tree. Related supernatural phenomena of local lore include ‘bogles’ and ‘spunkies’. Prehistoric tools and other artefacts turned up by the plough were formerly associated with fairies or elves.

fairin (fär-in) n., poet. a gift purchased at a fair – ‘Aye, b’ my faith! we’ve got oor fairin’ – Oor hirsels gane, past a’ repairin’’ [JoHa], ‘But few were the fairings puir Bessie e’er got – Though bearded and beautless aye had a lot’ [JoHa].

fairkishin (fär-ki-shin) n., arch. a good quantity, sometimes implying untidiness – ‘Thae scones ir weel heirit; A pat a guid farkeesheen o butter inti thum’ [ECS] (cf. ferkishin.

Fairley (fär-lee) n. Robert (19th/20th C.) weaver from Northumberland, who lived in Selkirk, Innerleithen and elsewhere, but spent much of his life in Hawick. He wrote poetry, being a prize-winner in the Verter Well competition, where he used the pseudonym ‘Birkshaw’. He published ‘Poems and Songs’ (1881) and a second edition called ‘Teviotside Musings’ (1892) (also sometime spelled ‘Fairlie’).

Fairloans (fär-lonz) n. farm in Liddesdale, located to the east of Saughtree, near to Myredykes and very close to the Border. Robert Armstrong was tenant there in 1694. Walter Jardine was farmer there in 1794–97, with James Beatie as shepherd. David Jackson was shepherd in the early 19th century. Nearby limestones quarries were developed, this being the ‘Thorlieshope Lime Works and Fairloans Quarries’. In 1841 the ‘spa’ at Deadwater was also listed as being here (it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Fairloans (fär-lonz) n. farm near the head of the Kale Water, north of the Border at Catcleugh Hill. It should not be confused with a place of the same name in Liddesdale. Around 1800 an old woman lived there called Kitty Hall, a native of Northumberland, who recited for James Telfer a version of the ballad ‘The Death of Parcy Reed’, this being published in 1844.

fairm (farm) n. a farm – ‘Holstered pistols cairried For gairdin’ o’ the farms, Less militant in eichty fower The year thae laid doon airms’ [MB] (cf. the more common fern).

fain (färn) n., arch. a fern – ‘A’ll sort ee, yih little bleckie, for poww-in aa ma fairns’ [MB] (cf. ECS).

Fairneylaw (fär-nee-law) n. George (d.c.1493) priest of the Diocese of Glasgow who is recorded as notary for a sasine relating to Hawick in 1490. He is separately recorded as ‘Sir’, usually indicating that he was a cleric without a Masters degree. He was notary to a sasine of 1484/5 relating to Mangerton, where he is called ‘Priest’ and another sasine for a ‘tenement’ in Hawick in 1484, where he is referred to as ‘Chaplain, Glasgow Diocese’. According to tradition he was a chaplain sent from Melrose Abbey to collect the tithe from Roger (or sometimes Robert) Langlands. When he persisted Langlands supposedly drew his broadsword and cut off Fairneylaw’s head at Wester Hepe. The story further relates how Langlands escaped punishment from the King by apologising for removing the chaplain’s hat, but omitting to add that his head was inside it! How much of the story is true remains unclear, although it is clear that Fairneylaw did have a local connection, and there is a record of Roger Langlands being denounced a rebel in 1494/5 for failure to appear to answer for the slaughter of ‘Sir George Farnylaw, chaplain’. It is also unclear whether there is a connection with the Heap Cross, which probably once existed at Stiches, and which was traditionally said to mark the site of the murder (however, it seems likely its existence as a marker long preceded these events). Fairneylaw Place in Stiches is named after him. Janet (16th C.) listed in the 1552 last testament of William Scott, younger of Branxholme. She is recorded as ‘Jonet Farnielaw’, but it is unclear whether she was from the Hawick area or not. John (16th C.) holder of 2 particates of land on the north side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. His name is written ‘Farnelaw’. It is conceivable that he was related to the earlier priest. William (15th C.) recorded as ‘William Farnlie’ when witness to a charter between Henry Wardlaw of Wilton and John Scott of Thirlstane in 1483. It is not impossible that he was related to George (the name is also spelled ‘Farnylaw’, ‘Farnelu’, ‘Farnelaw’ and other variants).

Fairneylaw Place (far-neelaw-plis) n. part of Stiches, off Stiches Road, along with Oxnam Court and Maxton Court, built in 1978 and named after Sir George Fairneylaw – ‘Then thinking it time to finish off The story of the bonnet, He said, wi’ a twinkle in his een, ‘The Abbot’s heid was in it’’ [FL].

Fairneyside (far-neel-sid) n. former name for lands near Newton in Bedrule Parish, listed as ‘Fairney-side’ in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls.

Fairnilee (far-nee-lee) n. mansion house in the Tweed valley, near Yair, built 1904–06 by John James Burnett. It was a Crown property from at least the 1460s, leased to Thomas and James Ker in 1480 and by 1501 let to George Ker. John Hervey was recorded there in 1494/5, when he had remission for rieving crimes. In 1541 it was tenanted by George Ker of Linton. The farm remained a property of the Kers until at least the late 17th century and there were Rutherfords of Fairnilee in the 18th century. The grounds contain the ruins of ‘Old Fairnilee’, a 16th century house, where Alison Rutherford wrote her version of ‘The Flowers of the Forest’. It was also the setting for Andrew Lang’s story ‘The Gold of Fairnilee’. Until 1818 the main road from Selkirk to Edinburgh passed here, avoiding Gala. This is probably the ‘Fernleigh’ mentioned in the 1837 inquiry into ‘fictitious voters’, 10 men having been denied their claim to the life-rent there, including John Goodfellow, William Goodfellow, John Hislop, Andrew Ewen, Peter Wilson and Walter Wilson, all of Hawick (also spelled ‘Fairnlee’, ‘Farnlee’, ‘Farnelee’, ‘Fernlee’, etc.; it is ‘Farnylee’ in 1501 and ‘Fairnalle’ in 1780; the origin is probably Old English for ‘ferny pasture’).

Fairnlees (far-leez) n. Fernlees, part of the former estate of Harwood in the Barony of Feu-Rule. It belonged to Hector Turnbull of Stonedge in 1609, when he sold it to Gibbie Elliott of Stobs by wadset and reversion. It may be the ‘Fairnylies’ where in 1623 Michael Birnie stole sheep belonging to Walter Scott of Todrig and Simon Nichol. It is recorded in a contract of ‘wadset’ in 1647 (discharged in 1649) involving Walter Riddell and William, Earl of Lothian. Different quarters of the lands were owned by Sir Walter Riddell, Sir Thomas Ker of Cavers and James Laidlaw. ‘Tithous with 4th part of the lands of Fernilie’ were listed among the properties of Sir William Elliott of Stobs in the Barony of Feu-Rule in the late 17th century. In 1694 the 3 east quarters are recorded being sold by Gilbert Elliot of Stonedge to Henry Elliott of Harwood. There were Ogilvies there in 1758. By 1788 it had been disjoined from the estate of Elliott of Stobs and was valued at £1200 (meaning it was a large farm at that time), forming part of the estate of Elliott of Harwood. In 1811 it was listed among those lands owned by William Elliot of Harwood and with the same value. These lands were still being referred to in documents of the late 19th century. The precise extent is uncertain, but Lurgiescleuch was the eastern quarter of the lands. Fernlees Sike rises between Berryfell Hill and Pike Fell and joins Lurgies Burn just north of Lurgiescleuch (it is ‘Phairnilies’ in 1562, ‘Faireneleys’ in 1609, ‘Fairnileyis’ in 1647, ‘Fernilies’ in 1677, ‘Fairnlieles’ in 1694, ‘Phairnilies’ in 1700 and ‘Fairynejies’ in 1811).

Fairnington (far-nin-tin) n. hamlet just to the north of Peniel Heugh monument. There Fairy was formerly a hospital associated with the place. There is said to have been a stone circle in the nearby Harlaw Plantation, but there is now no sign of it. There were once Maitlands there. In 1494/5 Ninian Rutherford in Ancrum was allowed to ‘compone’ for stealing cattle and grain from several tenants there and Walter Rutherford for similar crimes, the victims including men by the name of Hogg, Ormiston, Stenhouse, Purves and Wat. The Earl of Bothwell was recorded as owner in 1502. Also in 1502, James Rutherford (called ‘Kay’) had remission for stealing cows, sheep, geese and oats from here, the farmers being called Hogg and Ormiston. The lands (including the hospital) were listed among those possessed by the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1634. The estate was sold by Francis Scott, Earl of Buccleuch to George Rutherford in about 1647, and was afterwards a seat of a branch of the Rutherfords. The mansion house dates mainly to the end of the 17th century, but incorporates part of an earlier structure. It is said that there was once a stone circle in a field to the east (the origin of the name is Old English ‘færing dun’, meaning ‘the ferny hill’, and first occurs around 1200 as ‘Farringdun’; it is ‘farnyntoun’ and ‘farnyntoun’ in 1502, ‘Farnyntoun’ in 1505, ‘Pharnyngtoune’ in 1568/9, ‘Farnyntoun’ in 1580/1 and ‘Faringtoun’ in 1601; it is ‘Fernitoun’ on Blaen’s c.1654 map).

Fairy (fä-nee) adj., arch. ferny.

Fairy-faced (fä-nee-fäsd) adj., arch. freckled.

Fairnyside (fä-nee-sid) n. former farmstead in the upper part of the Allan Water. It was described as a ‘pendicle’ of Brugh in 1660. It is shown on the 1718 survey of Scott of Buccleuch lands, attached to Skelfhill and Langleuchside. It was leased from Buccleuch Estates in 1744 by Elizabeth Mason, widow of Robert Scott of Harwood, along with the farm of Skelfhill (marked ‘Fairnysyde’ on Blaen’s 1654 map, perhaps on the western side of the Skelfhill Burn; it is ‘Fairneside’ in 1718 and ‘Ferniside’ in 1744).

Fairy-faced (fä-nee-ti-kulz) n., pl. arch. freckled – ‘A bit beekin callant, eis chuffy chowks an fairnytickles, eis airm up ti shade eis een …’ [ECS].

Fairs (färz) n., pl. fairs and markets were once important focal events for towns, involving buying and selling, as well as hiring and entertainment. In Hawick there were several regular fairs, which petered out by the end of the 19th century. The horse- and cattle-related tryst was on the Fairy Faulds (θu-fa-ree-fawldz) n. former name for an area on the Wilton side of the Teviot, next to the ford that was at the foot of Walter’s Wynd (so where Victoria Laundry was later built). The name presumably relates to the 2 ‘fairy rings’ that could once be seen there (due to the growth pattern of a fungus), but were eradicated when Laidlaw’s Cauld was built. A ‘claystone axe’ was found there, and once in the Museum collection.

the Fairyfauld’s Stream (θu-fa-ree-fawldz-streem) n. former name for a stream that entered the Teviot near the ford at the foot of Walter’s Wynd, on the opposite bank. It may also have been used as a fanciful name for the Teviot itself before industrialisation – ‘…before Laidlaw’s Cauld was built, the river was a fine stream, which auld folks called the ‘Fairyfauld’s Stream’ …’ [JTu] (also written ‘Fairy Fauld’s; the name derived from the ‘fairy rings’ which once existed beside the stream).

the Fairy Knowe (θu-fa-ree-now) n. former name given to a hill somewhere in the upper Borthwick valley. It is said that a shepherd was thrown into a flooded burn by the fairies there.

faizenins (fä-zin-inz) n., pl., arch. frayed edges or ends.

fake (fäk) n., arch. a trick, performance – ‘Thus a clever fake describes a smart act or ‘turn’ at a theatre or elsewhere’ [ECS].

Fake Graham (fäk-grä-um) n. nickname for several men listed were important locally. He was there in 1542 that James V tried to organise an attack into England, but the collected nobility refused to follow him.

Falahill (fa-wa-hil) n. former seat of a branch of the Murray family. It is a farm just off the A7 before crossing from the Scottish Borders into Midlothian. Franklin D. Roosevelt named his Scottish terrier ‘Murray the Outlaw of Falahill’ (‘Fala’ for short) in recognition of his distant Borders ancestors (also written ‘Fallahill’, ‘Fallohill’, ‘Fallowhill’, ‘Faulohill’, ‘Fawlahill’, ‘Fawlayhill’, ‘Fawlohill’, etc.).

Falahill (fa-wa-hil) n. former farmstead in Lilieleaf Parish, just to the north of Greenhouse farm. It is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map. James Riddell was farmer there in 1789–91.

Falahill Summit (fa-wa-hil-sum-i’) n. highest point on the Waverley line between Hawick and Edinburgh at 880 feet above sea level. The summit itself was level and had extensive sidings. The lands of Falahill were once a seat of the Murray family. It liesleaf Parish, just to the north of Greenhouse farm. It is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map. James Riddell was farmer there in 1789–91.

Falcower (faw-lk-wnr) n. Rev. James F. minister of Denholm and Bedrule, linked with Minto, 1976–77. Robert (15th C.) recorded as ‘Robertum Fawconar’ when he witnessed the 1450 ‘retour’ for the Barony of Hawick. All the other men listed were important locally. He was also ‘Roberto Falconar’ in 1452 when he witnessed the sasine for the Barony of Hawick going to William Douglas of Drumlanrig. His name appears among a list of 4 burgesses. Thomas (15th C.) witness to the 1432 sasine giving the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffdom of Roxburghshire to William Douglas; he is there ‘Thoma Falconar, presbiter’ (presumably of Glasgow Diocese). He is also recorded as ‘Thoma Falconar capellano’ in 1452 when he was one of the witnesses to the sasine for the Barony of Hawick, signed in Hawick. He was thus a chaplain, presumably of Hawick or Cavers. He was probably related to Robert, who was also listed. And a second Thomas is also listed as a witness. William (15th C.) recorded as witness to a sasine of 1490 when Robert Scott purchased a ‘tenement’ from Robert Cessford in Hawick. He was probably a local resident.

falderal (fawl-dur-awl) n., arch. folderol, trifle, petty matter, fancy but inconsequential thing – ‘They can eat their falderals that like, but recommend mei tae a sonsy bicker o’ guid auld fashioned Scotch porridge ...’ [JEDM] (see also faltheral).

Faldonside (faw-, fal-din-sid) n. hamlet, house and nearby Loch just south of the Tweed between Selkirk and Melrose. The estate was long owned by the Kers. Part of the lands were owned by the Riddells of that Ilk in the 17th century. Sir Andrew Ker of Faldonside was a prominent Laird in the latter part of the 16th century. Being immediately to the south-west of Abbotsford, the estate here was planted in a similar style to Abbotsford in the early 19th century (formerly written ‘Fadounsyde’, ‘Fauldounsyde’, ‘Fawdonside’, ‘Fawdounsyde’, etc.).

the Falkland Raid (thu-fawl-klind-räd) n. raid on the Royal Palace at Falkland in 1592, led by the Earl of Bothwell, along with 300 horsemen from the Borders, including Wat of Harden. The raid was unsuccessful in capturing the King, James VI, but Bothwell did take him prisoner at Holyrood the following year. After the raid Walter Scott of Goldielands and Gideon Murray were instructed to destroy the houses of Harden and nearby Loch just south of the Tweed between Selkirk and Melrose. The estate was long owned by the Kers. Part of the lands were owned by the Riddells of that Ilk in the 17th century. Sir Andrew Ker of Faldonside was a prominent Laird in the latter part of the 16th century. Being immediately to the south-west of Abbotsford, the estate here was planted in a similar style to Abbotsford in the early 19th century (formerly written ‘Fadounsyde’, ‘Fauldounsyde’, ‘Fawdonside’, ‘Fawdounsyde’, etc.).

the Falkland Raid (thu-fawl-klind-räd) n. raid on the Royal Palace at Falkland in 1592, led by the Earl of Bothwell, along with 300 horsemen from the Borders, including Wat of Harden. The raid was unsuccessful in capturing the King, James VI, but Bothwell did take him prisoner at Holyrood the following year. After the raid Walter Scott of Goldielands and Gideon Murray were instructed to destroy the houses of Harden and Dryhope belonging to Walter Scott of Harden (although it is unclear if this was done).

fall (fawl) n., arch. old Scots unit of length, also used for area. As a length unit it corresponded to 6 ells or about 18.6 English feet, with measurements traditionally being made using a rope of this length. A Scots furlong was 40 falls and a Scots mile 320 falls. After unification with England the fall became 6 English ells or 22.5 feet. As a unit of area it was one square fall, i.e. 36 square ells or about 346 square feet. 40 square falls (or just ‘40 falls’) were equivalent to 1 rood or 1/4 of a Scots acre.

Falla (faw-la) n. village in Oxnam Parish, to the east of Camptown off the A68 (the origin of the name is probably Old English ‘fag hlaw’, meaning ‘speckled hill’ and first occurs as ‘Falaw’ in 1549).

Falla (faw-la) n. John (17th C.) from Kelso, he was accused of being a Covenantant. He was taken prisoner at Whitsom Fair and tried along with Thomas Turnbull of Knowe in 1681. His surname is given in the court documents as ‘Flala’. He was found not guilty of raising arms against the government and being involved in the attack on Drumlanrig’s Tower in Hawick. In 1684 he was charged with supporting and resetting rebels and after being sentenced to transportation, died in prison. John (d.1743) wright living at Swan- shiel in Hobkirk Parish. He made coffins for those on the poor roll, as recorded in 1725. However, he was also elder and treasurer to the Parish Session during the time of Rev. Riccarton, and so there may be 2 generations here. John (18th/19th C.) wright in Hawick. The death of his unnamed child is recorded in 1808. Robert (19th C.) son of John, he was a mason who lived at Hassendean Common. In 1851 he is recorded there with Alison (possibly his mother) and Jane, probably a daughter. Letters from him exist dealing with the Smith family who moved to Manchester. William (b.1805/6) born in Wilton, he was a woollen slubber who lived on O’Connell Street in 1841. His wife was Margaret and their children included Jean, Margaret, George, Betty, Simon and William. By 1851 the family were in New Abbey, Kirkcudbrightshire, where he was a woollen machine keeper, and soon afterwards they emigrated to America. By 1870 they were in North Andover, massachusetts and by 1880 their surname appears to have changed to ‘Falls’. The house he live in in O’Connell Street was known as ‘William Fala’s house’ on the 1851 census.

Falla Cleuch (faw-la-klooch) n. stream that rises on the northern slopes of Drinkstone Hill and drains into Synton Loch.

falli (fa-li, -łó) n., arch. a fellow – ‘...a muckle big, bang fallih, braid-shoerdoh, rash an stuffy, that staapeet alang the Jethart road wui a taathi-steppin streide’ [ECS], ‘There are no ‘Yauld, bang fallows’ or ‘Muckle leash fallows’ now-a-days’ [JT], ‘...A dizen near, I'm sure they were, O fallaws in a raw’ [WaD], ‘...A buirdly auld falla wi' muckle to sell, And muckle to gie wi' his crack’ [WL] (also written ‘falliih’; cf. the now more common felli).

falliship (fa-li-ship) n., poet. fellowship – ‘Sall the throne o’ inequitie hae fallaschip wi’ thee ...?’ [HSR].
Falnash

_Falnash_ (fawl-nash, faw-nesh) _n._ farm and hamlet near Teviothead, reached by the side road across the Teviot at Bowanhill. It is described as a ‘20 merklands’ around 1390 when given to Thomas Cranston of that Ilk and may have been the residence of Dalgleishes in the mid-15th century. In 1456 William Dalgleigh had a sasine for the lands, which had previously been in the hands of the King. Simon Dalgleish had a sasine in 1464. In 1511 it was confirmed to a later Simon Dalgleish, with the consent of his son Kentigern. The Elliots owned the lands from at least 1556. In 1569 a bond of security signed in Hawick lists the following tenants: ‘Wille Ellot, Johnne Turnair, Jame Caveris, Georde Armeastrang, Georde Turnbull, Andro Turnbull, Jame Bichat, Dande Ellot, Jok Elliot, Hobbe Elliot, Jok Murray, Will Hartar, Johnne Nobill’. In 1627 its value was ‘estimat to 300 merks in stok; in teynd to 40 lb’. In 1643 the lands of Robert Scott of Falnash were valued at £1400. In 1667 Archibald Elliot paid 9,000 merks to Francis Scott to clear the ‘reversion’ on the lands, and then sold them to his brother Gavin Elliot of Caerlenrig. Walter Scott of Harwood and Falnash is recorded on the 1678 Land Tax Rolls; his lands in Hawick Parish were valued at £1550 13s 4d. James Baptie was recorded as resident there in 1678. James Veitch was smith there in 1706. The lands held by the Laird of Falnash once extended much further than the modern farm; in the 1718 survey of lands of the Scotts of Buccleuch the lands of Falnash bordered on those of Commonside. Gideon Scott, the Duchess of Buccleuch’s Chamberlain in the late 17th and early 18th centuries lived here and was called ‘Old Falnash’. He also acted as the Duke’s Bailie in Hawick, and others in his family were also nicknamed ‘Falnash’. The Scotts of Langshaw also held lands here along with the mill (so this may be Falnash Mill), inherited by Walter of Langshaw from his father Francis in 1690. In 1703 James Stewart was smith there and Robert Riddell was miller. John Scott was recorded there in at least 1703–05 and William Scott was tenant in 1712. Walter Scott paid tax for 11 windows there in 1748. The lands were sold by Thomas Scott of Falnash to Henry, Duke of Buccleuch in about 1760. By 1788 Falnash and Haregrain were valued together at £684. Robert Laidlaw was the farmer there in the 18th century, followed by Thomas Laidlaw. John Baptie was shepherd in 1797. In 1811 it was valued (along with Haregrain) at £684, part of the properties of the Duke of Buccleuch. William Turnbull was farmer in 1841 and in 1851, when the farm covered 4500 acres and had 17 labourers. Robert L. Turnbull was farmer in the 1860s and 70s. The burial place of the Scotts of Falnash is in Teviothead Cemetery, with a large table-stone once inscribed with most of the names. The area was part of Hawick Parish until Teviothead Parish was formed in 1850. Before the mid-18th century one of the routes from the south towards Selkirk diverted at Teviothead and went over to the Borthwick valley via Falnash, Lairhope and Old Howpasley – ‘... Falnash, and Commonside; inform Fenwick, and Goudiland, With Ha’ick, Burnfoot, and Hassindean, to wait on my command’ [WSB] (the name first appears in the late 1300s as ‘Fallyness’; it is ‘Fallinash’ and ‘Falliniche’ in 1456, ‘Fallyn Eche’ in 1461, ‘Fallinesch’ in 1464, ‘Fawnesch’ in 1511, ‘Fawnyche’ in 1561/2 and is later spelled ‘Fallenash’, ‘Fallenesch’, ‘Fallenescie’, ‘Fallinesche’, ‘Fallinesciche’, ‘Fawndeshe’, ‘Fawnish’, ‘Faneshe’, ‘Faneash’, ‘Fawndeshe’, ‘Fawneshe’, ‘Fawinesche’, ‘Fawynche’, etc.: it is transcribed ‘Fenneske’ in 1644, written ‘Fennish’ in Hawick Burgh records of 1728 and ‘Finesh’ in tax records of 1748; it is marked ‘Fanessh’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; its origin is simply Old English for ‘at the fallen ash-tree’; note there is also a ‘Fawnyys’ in Berwickshire, near Mellerstain).

Falnash (fawl-nash) _n._ Richard (13th C.) described as ‘Richard de Fawnes’ when his daughter Christian married William of Haliburton. This may well have been Falnash, since the Haliburtons of that Ilk were involved in transferring the lands to Thomas Cranston of that Ilk in the late 14th century.

Falnash Burnfit (fawl-nash-burn-fi’) _n._ former name for a farmstead near Dryden. John Elliot died there in 1832. The Helm family lived there in 1841.
Falnash Mill (fawl-nash-mil) n. former farmstead near Falnash, perhaps the same place later called Birkiebrae. William Elliot was tenant there in 1598/9 (while another William was Laird of Falnash). Gilbert Elliot was there in 1618. It may be the lands of ‘Falnsh de molendino [mill]’ inherited by Walter Scott of Langshaw from his father Francis in 1690. Walter Davidson is recorded there, among the poor of Hawick Parish, in 1694. Robert Riddell was there in 1703 and Thomas Elliot in 1720. James Veitch, blacksmith, lived there in the early 18th century and Robert Elliot in the mid-18th century. Walter Hogg lived there in the early 19th century. Adam Beattie and his family were there on the 1841 census. In about the middle of the 18th century, near Falstone, a boy called Paterson was born without hands or feet, and shortly after his birth his family moved to here, where he was brought up, although not long afterwards the family moved again to the Carlisle area, where he died at the age of 7; at the time many claimed that this fulfilled a prophecy (sometimes ascribed to Alexander Peden, but probably older) which went ‘Atween Craig-cross and Eildon Tree A bonny bairn there is to be, That’ll neither have hands to feight, not feet to fle; To be born in England, brought up in Scotland, And to gan hame to England again to dee’ (it is the Mih of Fallinesche’ in 1598/9, ‘Fallinasche Mill’ in 1618, ‘falneshmilne’ in 1694, ‘Falnesh milne’ in 1720 and ‘Falnashmiln’ in the 18th century).

Falnash Parkheid (fawl-nash-park-heed) n. former farmstead near Falnash. The Andison family were there in 1841.

the False Alairm (thu-fawls-a-lärm, -a-lä-rum) n. perceived French Invasion on the evening of Tuesday 31st January 1804, when warning signals blazed all across the Borders, calling men to arms to repel Napoleon’s forces. At 9 p.m. in Hawick a beacon was lighted at the heights of Crumhaughhill, known then as Gotterson’s Knowes or the Watchknowe. James Knox spotted it and ran down the Howegate to the Tower Knowe, firing his gun to signal the lighted beacon, and gaining a prize of 20 shillings. Caleb Rutherford then went around town beating his drum. A trumpeter was dispatched up the Slitrig valley to rouse the men as far as Liddesdale, where several men swam across the Liddel to muster. A piper there mounted his donkey and played the rousing ‘I am little Jock Elliot and who daur meddle wi’ me?’ Walter Scott of Wauchope was at the head of the company that came from Liddesdale to meet the company of Capt. Corse Scott of Synton at the Tower Knowe. All the local volunteer units were mobilised, and people bid farewell to their loved ones. The Liddesdale volunteers reached Hawick by 8 a.m., travelling on horse and foot. After the muster at Hawick, the mounted men proceeded down the Teviot valley, many reaching Duns before they heard of the mistake. The foot volunteers were arranged on parade at the Haugh by Lord Minto, awaiting marching orders, which fortunately never came. Capt. Pringle of Whytbank was visiting Lord Napier at Wilton Lodge at the time and the butler is supposed to have said ‘My Lord, supper is on the table, and the beacon’s blazing; Pringle rode to Selkirk to assemble his troops there. The Selkirk men marched off and reached as far as Dalkeith. Meanwhile the Berwickshire Yeomanry mustered at Duns and marched to Dunbar. A tailor from Denholm, who marched off with the others, but would rather have remained at home was apparently heard to mutter ‘Aw wush aw was a wummin! aw wush aw was a wummin!’ The Alarm had been raised by a soldier at Home Castle at about 8.30 p.m., probably mistakes the fire from a charcoal burner at Shoreswood Colliery for a warning beacon. It spread via beacons on Caver-ton Edge, Pennielheuch, the Junon, Crumhaugh Hill, the Tudhope, the Wisp and Black Andrew. Although there were rumours on the following evening that the French were not really coming, the official word did not come until the morning of 2nd February. The readiness and speed with which the troops were mobilised was a source of great local pride, although some suggested it was a ruse to test the Volunteers (but there is no evidence to support this). Sir Walter Scott describes some of the local events in his note ‘Alarm of invasion’ in ‘The Antiquary’ (he himself is said to have ridden from Gilsland to reach Dalkeith 24 hours later). The Hawick Provost lit a centenary beacon at Crumhaughhill in 1904, and there was a reenactment in 2004 – ‘One moment the watcher stood, robbed of his wit, Then he roared to the farmhouse: ‘The beacons are lit! The lightnings are loosened, the war dogs untied, And it’s time for the Borders to saddle and ride!’’[WHO].

falset (fawl-si’) n., arch. falsehood, fraudulent dealing – ‘...plottit aganis the said Erle of Buc-leughe ane manifest falsit, and causit vitiat the said dispositioun and chairtour ...’[SB1624].

Falset (faw-, fawl-si’) n. former name for lands in upper Liddesdale, near Saughtree. It is probably the ‘Terra de Fawysde’ in the Ernaldon area of upper Liddesdale, on the c.1376 rental roll and valued at 33 shillings. It is recorded in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale, value at 48 shillings and tenanted by Henrisons (possibly Hendersons). It is recorded as ‘Cleuchside otherwayes designed Fals’ among the possessions of Hab Henderson in 1632, suggesting it was associated with Cleuchhead. It was marked as ‘Fasetsysde’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, near Sughtree, roughly between Pinglehole and Dawstonburn, perhaps near the modern Spout Sike. It is mentioned as ‘Fallsett’ on the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch, when it appears to be confused with Pinglehole.

Falside (fawl-sid) n. farm in Southdean Parish, between Chesters and Roughlee. This could be the lands held by ‘William de Fausyde’, who swore fealty to Edward I in 1296. It was mentioned in a document of 1502, when Ralph Ker of Primside Loch obtained a charter of apprais-ing of the lands after George Douglas, Master of Angus failed to present one of his tenants who had stolen from the English. 2 towers near here, ‘West Fawsyde and Est Fawsyde with a pele of lime and stane in it’ were burned by Dacre’s men in late 1513. It was described as 8 steadings valued at £10 in the Exchequer Rolls in 1538 and 1539 (with William Douglas being allowed the ‘fermes’ from there in 1538 and Sir Andrew Kerr of Fernihirst in 1539. Tenants in 1541 were Adam Cowman, Robert Oliver (alias ‘Laird’), Ninian Oliver, Walter Oliver, Roger Oliver (called ‘Little Roger’), Robert Laidlaw, Alexander Laidlaw, John Oliver, and Roger Oliver (called ‘Lang Roger’). The lands were split into 9 separate steadings with a total value of 175 shillings. Ringan, Dandy and Martin Oliver were recorded there in 1544. Jock Common was tenant there in 1571/2. It was among lands inherited by Robert Douglas of Brieryyards from his father John in 1606. In 1669 there were 5 Oliver tenants, namely Stephen, David, Thomas and 2 Patricks, as well as Commons. In 1694 the tenants recorded were Steven Oliver, David Common and John Oliver, Thomas Oliver and his sons, and (another) Steven and Dand Oliver. In the 17th century the lands were split into ‘East Fa’side’, ‘West Fa’side’ and ‘Fa’side’. The Olivers were tenant farmers there through the 17th century until 1747 and were the ancestors of the Olivers of Langraw. George White and John Armstrong are recorded there in 1797. William Pringle was shepherd there in 1841, 1851 and 1861. J. Ord was farmer in the 1860s. The farm also had a mill, with a mill pond. On the hill on the opposite side of the road there are signs of rig and furrow. There was also a place of the same name in Selkirkshire, owned by the Scotts in the 16th century. There is a restored 16th century L-plan mansion of the same name in East Lothian (also ‘Fawside’ etc.; the name dates back to at least 1502/3 and the origin is probably Old English ‘fah side’, meaning ‘the speckled slope’; it is ‘Fawsyde’ in 1538, ‘Fawsyd’ in 1539, ‘Fawside’ in 1544, ‘the Faw-side’ in 1571/2, ‘Fawsyde’ in 1606, and ‘Fa’syd’ and ‘Fasyd’ in 1669; it is ‘Fasye’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Fallside’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Falside (fawl-sid) n. former lands in the Ettrick valley in Selkirkshire, north of Foulshiels. They were once Crown lands from at least 1456 until 1502. James Scott (also of Kirkurd and Hassendean) was recorded as possessor of the lands of ‘Myddilstede de Fausyde’ 1473–99, being granted the lease for life. James Scott is recorded in 1494/5 having sheep stolen from him there. In 1501 the rentals were assigned to his wife Margaret and son John, and he again had the lease in 1503. Margaret, received the lands ‘in liferent’ in 1510, with the heirs of the deceased John (probably James’ son) being granted heredity. Adam Scott ‘in Falside’ is recorded in 1526 and 1531/2. Adam Scott claimed the tenancy in 1541, paying £13 6s 8d yearly. This was probably the ‘Fawsyde’ where Janet Scott, widow of Robert ‘Elwand’ received instruments for lands at Appletreehall that she bought from Robert Scott of Howpasley. It was recorded as a 40-merk land in 1653. The ‘landis and steading of Falsyd’ were listed among the Buccleuch estates in the services of heirs in 1634, 1653 and 1661, and in the marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch in 1663. The lands were later in the hands of the Scotts of Hassendean. And in 1693 they were still part of the estates of Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch (it is ‘Falsyd’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; it is ‘Fausyde’ in 1456, ‘Fawysde’ in 1473, ‘Fawside’ in 1480, ‘Fawsyde’ in 1483 and 1491, ‘fawysd’ in 1494/5 and ‘Fawysde’ in 1541).

Falsyde (fawl-sid) n. Helen (b.1787) recorded as ‘a very old woman’ in 1787 when she died in Hawick. Her surname is written ‘Falsyth’. James (14th/15th C.) parson of the church of ‘Ruiale’, probably ‘Rule’. He was a witness to the charter from Archibald, Earl of Douglas about 1406, granting the Barony of Hawick to Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig. Another James ‘of Falsyde* of Glasgow Diocese was an imperial notary in the 1450s and may have been related. James (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He farmed on one of the farms of the Knowesouth estate. James (17th/18th C.) gardener in Hawick. He witnessed baptisms in 1700 for Walter Martin in Alton Croft, for glover James Scott and for schoolmaster at Hawick. He was recorded as an elder of Hawick Kirk in 1719 for William Goodfellow. He is probably the James recorded as an elder of Hawick Kirk in 1718 (but not mentioned as such in a list a year earlier). He married Isobel ‘Jerdon’ (or Jardine). Their children included: Marion (b.1692), who married Andrew Turnbull: Janet (b.1694); James (b.1701); and William and Bessie (b.1704). The witnesses in 1704 were glovers James Burn and James Scott. He may have been related with Thomas. John (16th/17th C.) servitor of the Laird of Buccleuch. He is listed among the 180 supporters of Sir James Johnstone who had a respite in 1594 for killing Lord Maxwell and others at Dryfe Sands. John Cuthbert Rutherford (d.1915) son of Rev. J.T., minister of Eskdalemuir. He was training as a lawyer when WWI broke out, and as a member of the 1/5th K.O.S.B., he served as a Lance Corporal. He was killed by a shrapnel shell in Gallipoli. His 2 older brothers were also killed in the war, and it appears that the surname may have died out with them. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1767 he married Margaret Armstrong, who was from Castleton Parish. Margaret (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694, when she paid tax for 2 hearths. It is possible that she is the Margaret who married William Scott, but was widowed and secondly married Robert Thomson in Newmill. Nicholas (13th C.) signatory of the Ragman Rolls in 1296, where his name is given as ‘Nicol Fausy’ in the county of Roxburgh. He may well be an ancestor of the local Falsides. William (in Roxburghshire) and Robert (in Edinburgh) also signed in 1296. His seal was attached, showing a tree of four branches. In 1298 he is recorded in an English document as a ‘rebel with the Scots’, when he and his wife Loretta are recorded as former owners of lands at Doddington in Northumberland; his name is there ‘de Fauside’. In 1303/4 he is ‘de Fausside’ when his wife’s dowry lands in England were restored to him. Philip (14th C.) owner of lands in Liddesdale, listed on a c.1376 rental document of the Douglasses of Morton. His lands are recorded as ‘Terra Philippo de Fausyde cum Holdoun’, worth 35 shillings. Thomas (17th C.) resident at Winningtonrig according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. His name is written ‘Faside’ and he was probably related to the William who is also listed. He may be the Thomas who witnessed baptisms for William at Woodburn in Roberton Parish in 1686 and for Adam Elliot (resident of Whitchesters) in Hawick Parish in 1704. He may be the Thomas whose son Alexander was baptised in Wilton in 1699. Thomas (17th/18th C.) mentioned in an Edinburgh marriage record of 1712 as ‘doctor of the grammar school at Hawick’.
Falsyde

in the Parish of Eckford, recorded in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1574. William (17th C.) resident of Woodburn in 1686 when his daughter was baptised in Robertson Parish. The witnesses were Thomas (who was surely a relative) and Robert Learmonth. He could be the same William who was later at Winningtonrig. William (17th C.) resident at Winningtonrig in Cavers Parish in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. His name is written ‘Faside’ and Thomas is also listed, and so presumably related. William (17th/18th C.) married Margaret Fletcher in 1718, the marriage being recorded in both Wilton and Kirkton Parishes. John (b.1730) and William (b.1733), baptised in Cavers, may have been his children. Probably the same William witnessed a baptism for tailor James Scott and Janet Falsyde (who was probably related to him) in 1719 (also written ‘Faesyde’, ‘Faside’, ‘Fasyde’, ‘Fawsyde’, etc.).

It is one of the highest hills in Hob Kirk Parish (it is marked on the 1718 Bucleuch survey and on Stobie’s 1770 map; a region to the south is labelled ‘Muckle Fanna’ on the 1718 map).

fanner (faw-nur) n., arch. a machine used to create wind for winnowing chaff – ‘The winnowing machine, or corn fanner, from the best information, made its first appearance in Hawick’ [RRG].

Fanns (fawnez) n. farmstead near the Fanns Burn, north of Langhope and Todrig and west of Ashkirk. It is located just to the west of where the Fanns Burn meets Blindhaugh Burn. Robert Riddell was recorded there in 1661. James Brown was a mealmaker there in 1747. Another Robert Riddell was herd there in 1762. Note that there is a farm of the same name in Yarrow Parish, fariest (fawr-ist) adj., arch. farthest, most distant – ‘The dun and the grey kept farest away, farquhar see Fairneylaw Farquhar (far-kur) n. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Oliver and their children included: George (b.1776); Robert (n.1778); Peter (b.1781); unnamed (b.1784); and James (b.1789). His name was written ‘Fraquar’ in 1789. The witnesses in 1789 were Robert Oliver of Burnflat and baker James Oliver (who was surely related to his wife). James (18th/19th C.) grocer at the Sandbed, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He could be the same as the tobacconist listed living with (presumably) his brother Peter in 1841. He could also be the James on the Cross Wynd, listed as an insurance agent for the United Kingdom company in 1852 (although probably deceased by then). Peter (b.1781) son of James and Margaret Oliver, he was born in Hawick. He was a stock-} farle (faw-rol) n., arch. a large slice, quarter, fardel – ‘Syne a farle o cake frae my mither he got, And she ca’ed him a brave little mannie’ [JT].

fashrie (fawsh-ree) n., poet. trouble, fuss, annoyance – ‘To yerksins and yells frae a loose lither tongue. To fashries an’ flytings, while ye maun sit dumb’ [JoHa].

Faskenn (fas-kin) n. tower house marked on Blaeu’s c.1654 map near the Whitrope Burn meets the Hermitage Water. It could be related to Flaskett Sike, which is in the same area, or may be a transcription error.

Fasson (faw-sin) n. Lieut. Francis Anthony Blair ‘Anthony’ or ‘Tony’ (1913–42) born at Lanton in Bedrule Parish and educated at Jedburgh Grammar School, he joined the Royal Navy. Along with Colin Grazier, he volunteered to swim out naked to a damaged U-Boat in the Mediterranean, after the crew had been captured. They recovered several documents and pieces of equipment, passing them to someone else in a small boat, before the submarine sank, drowning him and Grazier. The recovered items included the ‘M4 Enigma Machine’ and codebook, which were passed to Bletchley Park, where the cipher was cracked, and probably thousands of lives saved as a result. He was posthumously awarded the George Cross ‘for outstanding bravery and steadfast devotion to duty in the face of danger’. There is a plaque honouring his memory in Bedrule Kirk.

Fast Castle (fawst-kaw-sul) n. stronghold dramatically perched on the coast between St. Abbs and Cockburnspath. It has existed since the 14th century, long possessed by the Homes, and notorious during the reign of Logan of Restalrig. An old lock from the Castle was presented to the Hawick Archaeological Society in 1856.

Fastcastle (fawst-kaw-sul) n. former farm in the Rule valley, on the west side of the river, near the bridge to Bedrule Mill. It became part of the extensive estate of Wells and was probably adjacent to Doveshaugh. In 1644 John and Thomas Young from there were cited by the minister for not signing the Covenant; at that time it was owned by the Earl of Traquair. Robert Turnbull was there in 1715 and Adam Craig in 1717. John Riddell was there in 1791. In about 1795 it was listed among parts of Cavers Parish that were nearer to Bedrule Kirk than their own kirk. An ancient fortification at ‘Fast’ was possibly an outwork of Bedrule Castle, which lay about 500 m to the south-east. It is just by the roadside, on a natural rise, built up into a motte-like structure, with a rampart on the summit enclosing an area about 35 m by 25 m. Just to the north-west there are signs of rig-and-furrow cultivation in aerial photographs (it is written ‘Falsocastle’ in 1715 and 1717; it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Fast days (fawst-daz) n., pl., arch. an old church custom of fasting on particular Sundays, with preparatory services on the preceeding Saturday and thanksgiving services on the following Monday. This was particularly prevalent before the annual Communion service, before which there would be a Sacramental Fast Day, when all work was suspended and there were 2 (long) church services. This custom died out locally towards the end of the 19th century. Official fast days in Hawick were the 2 Wednesdays before the last Sunday of June and before the second Sunday of December. Earlier than the 19th century the June days were closer to harvest time. Other neighbouring areas had different days, but typically on Wednesdays or Thursdays (although in Castleton it was the Friday before the 2nd Sundays of June and November). There were also other days officially prescribed for fasting, sometimes by Act of the General Assembly, e.g. for prayers ‘for King George and his royal family’ in 1715, with several other examples yearly in the Parish records – ‘...ye durst not crook ye’re mooth tae whustle on a Fast-day, but now ye may whustle or sing or anythiing ye like on a Sabbath day’ [WiS].

Fasteneven (faws-ten-ee-vin) n. another name for Fastern’s E’en – ‘Of holidays throughout the year, There’s nane that raises sic a steer As Fasteneven ...’ [JoHo].

Fastern’s E’en (faws-turnz-ee-in) n., arch. old name for Shrove Tuesday, or the day before fasting starts at Lent. Festivals of different sorts were held in many Scottish towns, including handball games, sometimes referred to as ‘Fastern’s E’en Baa’. In Hawick the Baa game was held on the previous day, in earlier years on the following Monday, and before about 1780 on Fastern’s Eve itself. In the 2 or 3 weeks leading up to the event there would be fights between gangs of youths from the ‘Eastla’ and ‘Westla’ sides of town – ‘...shall keep the same assurance till Fasternes eve next to come ...’ [CBP1584], ‘At Fasten’s E’en, when ba’s are played, I’ll look for ane that is nae here ...’ [TCh].

Fastheugh (fawst-heuwdh) n. former lands on the southern side of the Yarrow valley, with Fastheugh Hill rising above. The lands were owned by the Crown in the latter part of the 15th century. William Donaldson was there in 1493 when he had 12 goats stolen by William, son of William Scott of Goldielands. In 1494/5 James Ker was tenant there when sheep were stolen by Adam
Fasthill Plantin

Howison in Commonside. John Clerk was also living there at the same time when his goods were plundered. In 1502 John Murray of Falahill’s farm there was raided by Turnbulls. And in 1535 a raid on these lands was among the crimes for which Robert Scott of Allanhaugh was accused; at that time they were held by Lancelot Ker. Lands there were granted to James, son of James Pringle of Tynnes in 1540. George Ker was tenant there in 1541, paying £30 yearly; he was probably George of Gateshaw, son and heir of Lancelot Ker, who was ‘now living in Fastheucht’ in 1544. William Scott ‘in Fasthewachie’ was one of the men accused in 1618 of the murder of Adam Dalgleish in Deuchar. The lands were part of the Buccleuch estates in 1663 and when surveyed in 1718 (it appears on Blaeni’s c.1654 map as ‘Fastheuch’; it is ‘Fasthewich’ in 1456).

Fasthill Plantin (fawst-hil-plan-tin) n. plantation near Synton, just to the south of Synton Parkhead (it is already marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

fat (faw’) n., arch. a vat, wooden tub – ‘Two females are convicted of stealing great quantities of ale, sometimes turned, sometimes working in the fatt . . .’[BR1697].

fatefi (fa’-fi) adj. fateful – ‘. . . But then yin fatefih day, A retail giant came oor way, And it wasni long afore, They’d ta’en owre yon Presto store’[IWL] (also spelled ‘fatefih’).

Fathill Plantin (faw’-hil-plawn’-in) n. plantation on the Chisholme estate, to the north-west of Parkhill and to the west of Churnton Burn. There is a possible old enclosure there.

fatit (fa’-tee’, -ti’) pp. fated – ‘. . . An’ riggit ribs, where snurk’lt skin is fatit To lanely hing where flesh could stay nae langer’[JoHa], ‘But thou, my plaid, has ne’er been fatit, ‘Mid war’s proud dance Survey map).’

Fatlims Castle (fa’-lips-kaw-sul) n. tower built in the 16th century, perched on Minto Crags, and sometimes also called Minto Tower. It is 9 m, 3 stories high, with a vaulted basement and parapet walk. Built by the Turnbulls, it passed to the Elliots in 1705, and is now the property of the Minto estate. It was restored in 1857 and then renovated in 1897/8 (to designs by Sir Robert Lorimer) as a shooting lodge and private museum. The collection on display included an early, large breech-loading gun (possibly the one taken from Sebastopol by Col. Sir Gilbert Elliot), a muzzle-loading cannon (taken by Adm. Elliot from the French off the Isle of Man in 1760) and a third cannon (that belonged to the mutineers of the Bounty was recovered from deep water off Pitcairn Island by Capt. Russell Elliot). At that time there was a carriage drive approaching it from the west. Since the 1960s it was sadly neglected and became vandalised. However, a grass-roots campaign, supported by the Minto estate, resulted in funds being secured from public and private funds, and a renovation was completed in 2013. A fanciful tradition states that an underground passage led from here to Barnhills Castle. The origin of the name is uncertain, but one idea is that it derives from the look of Turnbull of Barnhills; there are other stories, including that of a goat on the Dunion, which warned of the approaching English, or that gentlemen were traditionally allowed to kiss one of the ladies on entering – ‘. . . an the gray waas o Fatlims keekkst oot threaw atween the treis that skuggeet Barnhill’s staney bed’[ECS] (it is sometimes stated that it was also known as ‘Catslick’, but that may be an error; note that there is another Fatlims Castle near Symington in South Lanarkshire, and a couple of others elsewhere, marked on old maps).

Fauch Grain (faw-ch-gr=an) n. small stream in the headwaters of the Hermitage Water. It rises on Wetherhorn Hill and joins Chapel Grain.

Fauchwin Sike (fawch-win-sik) n. small stream in the Hermitage valley. It rises on Guile Hass and joins the Carewoodrig Burn.

faugh (fawch) adj., arch. fallow, n., arch. fallow ground – ‘He plewh’d the faugh’[GW] (also written ‘fauch’).

Faughill (faw-hil) n. farm and hamlet just west of Bowden (the name may derive from Old English for ‘variegated hill’, is also spelled ‘Fauchhill’, ‘Faughhill’, etc. and is recorded on Stobie’s 1770 map).

faughish (faw-gish) adj., arch. palish, having faded colours – ‘. . . just as it begound to get faughish derk’[LHTB].

fauld (fawld) v. to fold – ‘did ee fauld up they claes yit’?, ‘Paid James Wintropse for falind brods in Ballies’ loft, 1 14 0’[BR1735], ‘These taits o’ gowden hair, Aboon thy fauld yed eye’[HSR], ‘Aside the sparkling jewels put, thy silken robes gae fauld . . .’[TCh1], ‘The bonnie wee flowers fauld their leaves in the gloamin’ . . .’[JT], ‘. . . And robin fauld his ragged pipes, Reckons his arles and airts awa’[DH], ‘In owre the Firth a clean wind blaws And the fauldin’ plaid is gethert . . .’[WL], n. a fold (also written ‘fald’).

fauld (fawld) n. an enclosure for livestock, sheepfold, pen – ‘When the sheep are in the fauld, and the ky at hame, And a’ the warld to sleep

are gone . . . ’[CPM], ‘. . . one year there was a dyke on one side of a fauld, built within the edge of the Common’ [C&L1767], ‘. . . nar he-gaits owt o’ thy falds’ [HSR], ‘I’ve suffered cauld in Auld Nick’s fauld. In niichts o’ drookin’ rain I’ve seen it . . . ’ [TD], ‘You are the hills that my hert kens weel, Hame for the weary, rest for the auld, Braid and high as the April sky, Blue on the tops and green i’ the fauld’ [JBU], ‘The last sheep cryin’ thrae the fauld, The afterglow duist turnin’ cauld . . . ’ [DH], group of people bound together by common beliefs, congregation – ‘To where the Faither’s fauld at last . . . ’ [WL].

faunder (fawl-dur) n. a folder, person in the knitwear industry who folds finished garments, usually attaching the hanging tag and placing the garment in its bag for presentation.

fauldit (fawl-dee’, -di’) pp., adj. folded – ‘They think if they’re only fauldit Up in the empty husk o’ a creed . . . ’ [FL].

Faualds Cottage (fawldz-ko’-ej) n. farmstead to the west of Bucellech.

Fauldshope (fawldz-ho’p) n. farm south-west of Selkirk, over the Ettrick from Oakwood. A ruined keep here was once the home of the Hoggs, including Will Hogg called ‘the Wild Boar o Fauldshope’ and several wives who were reputed to be witches. One ‘Lucky Hogg’ is supposed to have turned Michael Scot into a hare. The Hoggs held Fauldshope under the Scotts of Harden for centuries and are commemorated in James Hogg’s ‘Fray at Elibank’. William Scott was there in 1535. Andrew, son of William Scott ‘in Falkdishop’ gained the lands of Broadmeadows in 1624. It was rented by the Earl of Traquair in 1633. Adam Scott was there in 1722 and William Dalgleish in 1797 – ‘Young Wattie o’ Harden has crossed the Yarrow, Wi’ mony a hardy an’ desperate man; The Hoggs and the Brydens have brought him to dare you, For the Wild Boar of Fauldshope he strides in the van’ [ES] (note that it is easily confused with ‘Phaup’ near the head of the Ettrick; marked as ‘O. Faushoop’ and ‘N. Faushoop’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; it is probably the ‘Faulshoop’ recorded in 1456 and is ‘Feldishoup’ in 1535).

fault (fawl) n., arch. a misdemeanour, offence – ‘. . . by yr night rambling commit divers and sundrie abominable irregularities, unlawful faults, and enormities and abuses by yr scandalous out- rages . . . ’ [BR1706] (cf. the more common fault).

fause (faws) adj., poet., arch. false – ‘Behold, the setting sun that gilds the skies! O! when I’m fause, may it nac mair arisel’ [CPM], ‘Itt wasne kinde, thou cruelle manne, To prove sae fause a luve to me . . . ’ [JTe], ‘. . . Fed by fause hope, wild fon wi’ airgy vision’ [JoHa], ‘The fause and fickle-hearted loon, He hookit wi’ another’ [JoHa], ‘. . . And the three fause Ha’s o’ Girsonsfeld Alang wi’ him he has them ta’en’ [LHTB], ‘. . . therfor ilka fause waye do I haethe’ [HSR], ‘. . . or what sall be dune untill thee, thou fause tung?’ [HSR], ‘Bec- stow on the gay a’ the favours o’ fashion, Bestow on the great a’ that money can yiel’’ [DA], ‘By thae fause notions the lass had naething To caa her bonny, – but she had ae thing’ [WL].

fausehood (faws-hood) n., arch., poet. falsehood – ‘. . . an’ heth conceifet mischief, an’ brung furth fausehuud’ [HSR], ‘. . . an’ thair richt han’ is ane richt han’ o’ fausehuud’ [HSR].

fausely (faws-lee) adj., poet. falsely – ‘Natheless thyaye flattiret him wi’ thair moth, an’ thyaye spak fauslie untill him wi’ thair tungs’ [HSR].

faut (fawt, fau’) n., arch. fault – ‘I’d rather be ca’d Hobie Noble, In Carlisle where he suffers for his fault, Before I were ca’d traitor Mains, That eats and drinks of meal and maut. Fala, &c.’ [CPM], ‘. . . fautit (faw-t’ee, -ti’) pp., arch. faulted – ‘A’vre wroacht here threi-an-toonty eer, an’ A’ve never been fauteet yet’ [ECS].

fautless (faw’-lis) adj., arch. faultless – ‘He tells me through the chink wi’ care About his faultless, dainty ware . . . ’ [WP].

the Favourite (thu’-faw-ri’) n. name of one of the regular stagecoaches operating in Hawick in the 19th century. In Pigot’s 1825/6 directory it is listed leaving the Spread Eagle in Jedburgh for Hawick on Tuesdays and Fridays at 5 p.m. and leaving Hawick for Kelso via Jedburgh on Tuesdays and Fridays. In 1837 it is listed leaving from the Tower Inn on Tuesdays and Fridays at 8 a.m., bound for Jedburgh and Kelso. Later in the 19th century it was one of 2 coaches running between Hawick and Carlisle, the other main one being called ‘the Engineer’.

faw  (faw)  adj.,  arch.  multi-coloured,  variegated  (the  word  survives  in  several  place  names, e.g. Faw Hill, Fawhope, Falla and Falside).

Faw  see  Faa

Fawcett  (faw-si’)  n.  Richard  owner  of  Wolfelee when it was run as a hotel.

Faw  Hill  (faw-hil)  n.  hill  in  Southdean  Parish, just  to  the  north-east  of  Riccarton  Junction, reaching a height of 331 m (1,086 ft) and containing a triangulation pillar.  On  the  eastern  slopes,  towards  the farm  of  Ashtrees,  there  are  the  remains  of  an ancient settlement, perhaps  of the  Iron Age,  but now almost levelled  by  cultivation  (the  name  probably comes from the Scots ‘faw’, meaning variegated in colour).

Fawhope  see  Phaup

Fawhope  Knowe  (fawp-now)  n.  hill  in  Liddesdale, just  to  the  south-east  of  Riccarton  Junction, reaching a height of 294 m.  Fawhopeknowe Sike rises to the north and passes there to join the Riccarton Burn.  John  Crozier is  listed  as  shepherd at ‘Phaupknow’  in 1797.  There  were  4  huts there housing railway workers on the 1861 census (also sometimes ‘Phaup Knowe’;  a farmstead  there is marked  ‘as Fapknow’  on  Stobie’s 1770 map;  it could be  related  to  the  places  listed  as  ‘Folepul’ and  ‘Fopillis’  in  earlier  documents).

Fawhopeknowe  Sike  (fawp-now-sik)  n.  stream in  upper  Liddesdale,  which  rises  on  the slopes  of  Saughtree  Fell  and  runs  southwards, to the east of  Riccarton  Junction,  passing Fawhope Knowe and through Catscleuch Culvert, to join Riccarton Burn.

Fawlaw  (faw-law)  n.  George  (15th  C.)  recorded being  ‘in hawic’  at  the  Justice-aire held  in Jedburgh in 1494/5.  He had remission for stealing  a dacre of (i.e. 10) hides from James Braidfoot out of ‘le bog de Selkirk’.  His surety was Robert Scott of Whitchester.  His surety was Walter Haliburton.  Also in 1502, he may  be the  John  of  Softlaw  who  was  granted the lands of ‘Perislawis’ in Oxnam by Andrew Kerr of Over Crailing.  Perhaps  the  same  John was  granted  a charter  for ‘Ester Fawlaw’  in 1510, along  with  the  office  of  the  East  Ward  of Roxburghshire.  In 1512  he  had  a charter for Softlaw.  Philip  (15th/16th  C.)  recorded  in 1502 as ‘philippi fawlo’ when he and James Liddersdale ‘in hawik’  were sureties  for each other at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh, and failing to appear, were to be fined at the next court.  He  was  said to be  of the  same place  as James Liddersdale, i.e. Hawick.  Also in 1502 he  was ‘Philip Faula’ when Alexander ‘Wyndis’ of that Ilk was convicted of the ‘forethought felony’  done to him on St.  Mary’s Day while riding to Branhulme, with Robert Scott being fined for non-appearance.  It is unclear what  malice was done to him, whether it was connected with  the charges  against  him at the  same  court.  He  is probably the  same ‘Philip Faulo’  who  had 4 horses  stolen  from  him and his neighbours  at ‘Quhitchester-holme’  by associates of John Dalgleish around 1510.  He may have been related to the  later  local  priest Thomas.  Thomas (16th  C.)  priest  mentioned in  the Charter  of 1537,  with 2 particates of land on the south side of the public street.  He is designated both ‘Sir’  and ‘Mr.’, making it unclear whether he held merely a Bachelors or a full Masters degree in the priesthood.  Since several other clergymen are  also mentioned, it is unclear what  his status  was within St.  Mary’s  Kirk of the  time.  A  possibly related William Fawlaw also possessed a particate of land on the north side of the street.  William of Kirkton (14th C.) member of  the ‘retour  of inquest’  if 1438  for Ker of Altonburn.  He was certainly a Roxburghshire Laird, but it is unclear whether this was the Kirkton near Hawick.  William (16th C.) holder of a particate of land on the north side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter.  William (d.bef. 1560s) farmer in Hobkirk Parish.  The land ‘callit William Fallawisclous’  to the east of Nether Billerwell is mentioned in 1562 (also spelled ‘Fallaw’, ‘Faula’, ‘Faulaw’, ‘Faulo’, ‘Fawlo’, ‘Fowlaw’, etc.).

feart  (feer’) pp., adj. scared, afraid – ‘They’ll a’ be fear’t they’re missing out, they’ll want tae join the fun’ [T], ‘The collie dog noo unco feart As owls wi’ orra shrickys by flit’ [WFC] (also spelled ‘fear’t’; cf. feart).

the Feast o the Assumption  (thu-feest-o-thu-aw-sum-shin) n. Feast of the Assumption of Mary, a Catholic celebration of the assumption of the body of the mother of Christ into heaven, which supposedly happened several days after she was entombed. This is celebrated on 15th August, and prior to the Reformation would have been an important day in the Hawick calendar, particularly because of the Parish Church being dedicated to St. Mary. The ‘retour’ for the Barony of Hawick in 1450 states that it is held of the superior, the Earl of Douglas, for the payment of an arrow at Hawick Kirk on the day of the Assumption. The Charter of 1511 indicates that the Barons of Hawick are to be paid an arrow ‘in blenche-ferme’ on this day. Similarly, in the 15th century, Scott was to pay a silver penny to Inglis at St. Mary’s on this day for the lands of Branxholme.

feat  (fee’) adj., arch. neat – ‘...it was nae bigger than a three year auld lassie, but feat and tight, lid and limb, as ony grown woman’ [LHTB] (cf. faik).

fechs  (fechs) interj., poet. faith, truly – ‘Fechs! ‘Deed say you! For weel you try ...’ [WFC] (cf. faiks).

fecht  (fecht) n., arch. a fight, struggle, battle – ‘Weel, weel, if hei wull read, let him read about a guid stiff fecht’ [JTu], ‘Yea day at least he’ll miss the jostle, the fecht and push’ [RH], ‘Hei Cornet was, in forty-echt, And won his fecht waeight’ [IWL], ‘...it was nae fechtin waeight’ [IWL], ‘...And Heather Jock’s for fechtin When he’s drunken a’ his tin’ [WE].

fechter  (fech-tur) n., arch. a fighter – ‘...although ma bird was a gie little ane, man it was a grand fechter’ [RM].

fechtin  (fech-tin) n., arch. fighting – ‘An sic vesheys fechtteen as it was, tui!’ [ECS].

Fechtin Chairlie o Liddesdale  (fech-tin-char-lee-ö-li-diz-dal) n. nickname for an Armstrong or Elliot from Kirndean, Castleton Parish, whose exploits are described by Sir Walter Scott in his notes for ‘Guy Mannering’. A story is told of how he stopped at ‘Mump Ha’ inn near Gilsland where his pistols were filled with ‘tow’, which he only just discovered in time to fight off a band of robbers when he was crossing over into Scotland.

feck (fek) n., arch., poet. amount, quantity, number, force, value – ‘Be kindly unto them, and courtey and free, Then you’ll fin’ in the feck o’ them Donald M’Gee’ [JoHa], ‘What feck o’ folk wad there be there? Fenwick \( (*fe-n) \) \textit{n.} house and area on the Teviot opposite Branzholme Park and just down from the Muir. Walter Scott of Fenwick was witness to a document for Whitchesters in 1456 and others in 1484/5 and 1488. William Scott of Fenwick was recorded in 1502, was on an inquest panel in 1509 and gave a pledge for another Scott in 1510. The ‘ditch of Fenwick’ formed part of the northern boundary of the Common in the 1537 charter. It is listed as part of the Barony of Hawick in 1511, 1572, 1594 and 1615, among those lands held by the Baron ‘in tenandry’. Later it became part of the Lordship of Whitchesters. In 1627 it was described as a ‘neuer payt ferme’, i.e. a farm that had never been rented to a tenant, and ‘estimate to pay 8 bolls in stok, parsonage 2 bolls, and vicargace 3 lbs’. In 1643 these are probably the lands of Robert Scott of ‘Cloak’ valued at £100 and still held by him in 1678. In the 1718 survey of lands of the Scotts of Buccleuch it is shown that a small part of the farm lay on the northern side of the Teviot. There were Elliot lairds there in the late 17th and early 18th centuries. John Scott was ‘coater’ there in 1723. It was farmed by Scotts until the mid-18th century. Robert Scott of Fenwick and Robert Elliot of Fenwick were both recorded in 1747. Bailie Thomas Turnbull purchased the estate in 1762. William Scott was thre in 1771. The farm was still valued at £100 in 1788 (and still in 1811) when owned by Thomas Turnbull; Thomas Turnbull of Fenwick is the largest owner of land within the Burgh of Hawick on Wood’s 1824 map. David Lees was farmer there in 1861, when it was composed of 140 acres. In 1895 the farm was gained by the Scotts of Buccleuch, being exchanged for Fenwick with James Elliot of Flex. The farmhouse dates from the late 17th century, but has been extensively renovated. It is a 2 storey structure of harled rubble. The entrance has a lintel bearing the initials ‘R S’ (presumably ‘Robert Scott’) and ‘M T’ and the date 1687; a shield above has been suggested to be the arms of Myrton of Cambo, ancestors of Kerr of Cavers Carre, although this seems hard to understand. The house is a grade B listed building – ‘\ldots Falnash, and Commonside; inform Fenwick and Goudiland, With Ha’ick, Burnfoot, and Hassindean, to wait on my command’ [WSB] (earlier spelled ‘Fynnik’ and other variants; the origin is probably Old English ‘fen wic’, meaning ‘the dwelling by the fen’; the name appears at least as early as 1456, when it is ‘Fennyk’, it is ‘Fenwik’ in 1484, ‘Fenwik’ in 1484/5 and 1488, ‘fenwik’ and ‘fynvik’ in 1502, ‘Fenwyk’ in 1509, ‘Fynwik’ and ‘Fennyk’ in 1510, ‘Fennyk’ in 1511, ‘Fynnik’ in 1526, ‘Fenyk’ in 1530, ‘Fenwik’ in 1540, ‘Fynwik’ in 1561, 1572, 1594 and 1615, ‘Fynnyk’ in 1562, ‘Phenik’ in 1627 and ‘Fenik’ in 1729; it is on Gordon’s c. 1650 map as ‘Fennik’, on Blaeu's
Fenwick

1654 map as ‘Fennick’ and on the 1718 Buccleuch survey as ‘Fenick’.

Fenwick (fen-ek) n. Francis P. ‘Frank’ (b.1855) son of John, proprietor of the Tower Inn, he was born in Hawick. He was farmer at Northhouse and was a guest at some Common Riding functions in the 1880s. He became proprietor of the Tower Hotel and was Acting Father in 1893. He was also a starter at the Common Riding Races. In 1901 he was a retired farmer at Barnes. He may have later lived at Harts-garth. His wife was Mary A., and their children included John B. and David B. James (19th C.) landlord of the Tower Hotel in the mid-19th century. He was on the original committee of Hawick Bowling Club, and probably first President. This is probably confusion with John. John (17th C.) son and heir of Randall. In 1652 he gave a lease of lands to his sister Catherine, including ‘Hawicke’ in the parish of Kirkharle (i.e. the one in Northumberland). John (b.c.1808) born at Auchtergaven in Perthshire. He was proprietor of the Tower Hotel in the middle part of the 19th century, with William Crozier as his head hostler. He is recorded providing the dinner for the Magistrates’ party at the Common Riding of 1840. He was there in 1841, with his wife Helen (probably Stewart). He was listed as innkeeper at the Tower in Slater’s 1852 directory. His caricature from 1856 appears in the book ‘Noctes Hawickiana’. He helped with the last ceremonial run of the coach from Hawick to the south in 1862. In 1849 he married Janet Crone or Bawden and was listed with her at the Tower Hotel in 1851. Their children included Sophia Agnes and Francis Peter (who became proprietor later). John (1803/4–74) farmer at Northhouse. His elder brother was Peter. He was recorded at Northhouse in 1868. He married twice, his second wife being Janet Crone, who died in 1888, aged 73. He is probably the same as the coach driver above, and is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. Randall (d.bef. 1652) recorded as ‘of Hawicke’ in grants of 1624 and 1626 from the Swinburne (Capheaton) Estate Records. His wife was Katharine. He may have been son-in-law of Edward Gray of Howick (by coincidence). His son and heir was John and a daughter was Catherene. This is presumably the ‘Hawicke’ in Northumberland. Sir Roger of Wallington (d.1544) commander of part of the English force under Lord Dacre in 1513. He led 300 men who burnt the town of Lanton near Jedburgh.

Fenwick Burn (fen-ek-burn) n. stream that flows to meet the Teviot near Fenwick.

Fenwick Loan (fen-ek-loun) n. former name for the road running from Haysike over to Whitchesters. The name was referred to in the description of the boundaries of the Common in 1767 – ‘The east down that Syke into Weatland Burn and the dykes of Alton Crofts, and so on to Fenwick Loan head, where the march turns south by hillocks up the west side of the head of the Loan …’[C&L1767].

Fenwick Park (fen-ek-pawrk) n. name given in 1890 to an area of large houses, reached from Weensland Road up Manuel’s Brae. Some of the houses had been there perhaps a century before. This included St. John’s, which had been known as Ivybank, St. John’s Manse (previously ‘The Birks’) and Elmbank, or ‘The Elms’. New building occurred in the few years after 1962 to make the modern housing development of Fenwick Park. The name derives from Fenwick on Teviot, specifically referring to Thomas Turnbull of Fenwick who owned land there.

Fenzlehope (fenz-lup) n. former farmstead in Liddesdale, where Thomas Elliot is recorded as farmer in 1797. It could be related to the earlier records of ‘Folepul’ and ‘Fopillis’, but note that ‘Phaupknew’ is listed separately on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls (it is possible it is the same as Failziehope).

fer (fer) adj. far, distant – ‘si near and yet si fer’, ‘Lo, than wad I dander fer aff, an’ bide in the desart’[HSR], ‘…athort the fer seide o Teiot’s flooery vale …’[ECS], ‘Hei’s be fer the senior citi-zen’[CT], ‘… And fer oor steps hae suneedt’[DH], ‘In fer-away days the Piets, When they cam to make oor toon …’[TK], adv. far, by the greatest degree, further – ‘it was fer better afore’, ‘she was be fer the youngest o threi dowters’, ‘But I’ve sel-dom seen twae decent fouk differ fer’[RW], ‘As fer as the east is frae the west, sae fer heth he remu-nation of the boundaries of the Common in 1767 – ‘The east down that Syke into Weatland Burn and the dykes of Alton Crofts, and so on to Fenwick Loan head, where the march turns south by hillocks up the west side of the head of the Loan …’[C&L1767].

Ferguson (fer-gee-sin) n. Agnes (19th C.) one of the 4 operators, at Dicksons & Laings, of the first power looms to arrive in Hawick in 1830. Alexander (18th/19th C.) resident of Stonedale. In 1760 he married Janet Margaret Hope from Blackcleughmouth, the proclamations being recorded in both Hobkirk and Southdean Parishes. Their children included: Alexander (b.1761); Mary (b.1763); Adam (b.1768); Isobel (b.1772); and Betty (b.1773) Their children were all baptised in Wilton Parish. Alexander (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton. He married Martha Easton in 1762 and their children included: Thomas (b.1763); William (b.1766); Janet (b.1768); Helen (b.1770); John (b.1774); Andrew (b.1777); James (b.1779); James (again, b.1780); and Jean (b.1781), who married George Rae. Alexander (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1787 he married Isobel Hart, who was from Wilton Parish. Alexander (18th/19th C.) farmer at West Middle, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 6 horses. He could be the same Ferguson who farmed at Denholmhill, opening up the first quarry there. His wife was probably Helen, innkeeper in Denholm, and they had children Alexander, Margaret and Janet. Alexander (b.1812/3) innkeeper in Denholm in the 1860s. He was born at West Middle, and so probably son of Alexander. His premises were probably on Eastgate. In 1861 he was living with his widowed mother, Helen. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, living at Hummelknowes in 1781. His children included: Thomas (b.1781); Agnes (b.1783); George (b.1786); Alexander (b.1788); John (b.1794). Christina (1844–1939) daughter of mason James, she was born in Denholm. In the 1851 census the family was living near Sunnyside, and her name was listed as 'Catherine'. She emigrated to the Melbourne area with her parents in 1855. In 1879 she married John Band, but they had no children. She named her house on Princess Street in Melbourne ‘Roxburgh’, after her home county. After her husband’s death she lived with her sister Agnes, and she was buried in Meblourne General Cemetery. Helen (b.c.1785) innkeeper and spirit dealer in Denholm. She was born at Linhope. She was probably married to Alexander, farmer at West Middle. In 1837 she was recorded as a widow, and 1841 she was living around Eastgate with her children Alexander, Margaret and Janet. She is recorded as vintner and grocer in 1852. James (18th/19th C.) spinner in Hawick. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. James (b.1800/1) listed as a mason journeyman in Denholm in 1841 and a mason around Sunnyside in 1851. The family emigrated to Australia in 1855. He married Anne Laing in 1828 and she died in Melbourne in 1881. Their children included: Thomas (b.1829); Betty (b.1832), probably died young; an unnamed child (b.1834); Betsy (b.1836); Walter (b.1838); Alexander (b.1841); Christina (b.1844), also perhaps known as Catherine, probably died young; Anne (b.1846); Agnes (b.1849), who married William Laidlaw in Melbourne; and Mary (b.1852). Their children were christened in the Free Kirk of Jedburgh. He died of dysentery in Australia. James ‘Jamie’ (d.c.1861) character who worked at Moss paul most of his life, first as a ‘post-boy’, then as a ‘strapper’. He was only once allowed to take the reins of the coach, but overturned it near Langholm. He was a widower by the time of the 1861 census and died a few months later. Rev. John (c.1655–1737) ordained as minister of Roberton in 1696, after several years of appeals to the Presbytery for preachers to be supplied. For part of 1697 he helped with vacancies in Angus and Mearns and received calls from Aberbrothock and Montrose, which the Presbytery refused. There then followed some debate in which the Commission for the Assembly blamed the Presbytery for not declaring the parish vacant. He was finally translated to Aberbrothock (i.e. Arbroath) in 1699, despite a petition to the General Assembly from his parishioners. It is said that he had the old Abbey Church there destroyed, in order to build himself a tomb. He married firstly Margaret MacDougall and secondly Bethia Brand. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, recorded at Ormiston Mains in 1779, 1780, 1782, 1784, 1786 and 1788 and as farmer at Harwood in 1796. He married Agnes Grierson and their children included: William (b.1779); Margaret (b.1780); twins Robert and Thomas (b.1782); Alexander (b.1784); Nelly (b.1786); Andrew (b.1788); Isabel (b.1790); Mary (b.1792); and John (b.1796). The entries of his children’s baptisms appear to have been added later to the Cavers records (perhaps indicating that he belonged to a non-established church). John (18th/19th C.) paid the cart tax in 1790 and 1791, when he was at Kippielaw. He was also recorded at Greensidehall on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 2 work horses. John (18th/19th C.) tenant at ‘Newharrodt’ (i.e. New Harwood), listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 4 horses. John Mein (b.1839) son of James and Jean Mein, he was born in Selkirk. He was Cornet in 1861, the first from Wilton after it merged with Hawick. He was a waiter at the Railway Hotel in Princes Street. He was step-son of the hotel-keepers George and Jane Burns, and was half-brother of Cornet Andrew Burns. He can be seen in an early photograph of 1862, as Right-hand Man to Cornet Richardson. Robert (1853–98) born and educated in Hawick, son of Tom and Jessie Ferguson. He studied geography at Edinburgh University and then town planning at the Sandbed. He was listed among heads of households in 1840 and 1841. His wife was Elizabeth and their children included William. Thomas (b.c.1814) tailor at about 8 Howeagate. His wife was Jane, and their children included Isabella and Nancy. Thomas ‘Tom’ (19th C.) blacksmith at 24 Drumlanrig Square in the mid-1800s. The property was owned by the Dinwiddies. There was also a blacksmith’s next door at No. 22. Thomas (1832/3–1907) joiner and fencing contractor of Hawick. He married Elizabeth Clark, who died in 1925 (and who was related to Sir J.A.H. Murray). Their children were Jane and Elizabeth (who died young), plus James (commercial traveller of Leeds), Jane Alaine and Margaret Isabella (who both moved to New Zealand) and Agnes Burns (who married James Caldwell and also moved to New Zealand).

William (18th C.) tenant in Trowmill. He was there in at least 1787–88. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included: Alexander (b.1787); Janet (b.1788); George (b.1790); and William (b.1792). Ferniehirst (fer-nie-hurst) n. lands and tower just south of Jedburgh, built in the 1470s by Sir Thomas Kerr following his marriage to Margaret Kerr of Kersheugh. The tower there is sometimes referred to as ‘Ferniehirst Castle’. The land was valued (along with Limekilnwood) in 1538 at £4 6s 8d. It was stormed by Dacre’s men in 1523, recaptured by Sir John Kerr and his men in 1549, when they butchered all the French garrison. It was destroyed soon afterwards by James VI and rebuilt in 1598. Disused in the 18th century, it was repaired in the 19th and used as a youth hostel from about 1935–85. In 1988 it was restored again by the Lord Lothian, and is now a Kerr family home, also containing the Kerr Museum. It is said to be haunted by the ‘Green Lady’. The castle features in Jedburgh’s Callants’ Festival – Hermitage wistfully lifts her head, Where the mists on the lone moors fall: Ferniehurst, lulled by the crooning of Jed, Lies wrapped in her sylvan shawl!’ [WL] (also spelled ‘Ferniehurst’, as well as variants such as ‘Fainnyhirst’, ‘Farniehirst’, ‘Farniherst’, ‘Farnyherst’, ‘Fainnyhirst’, ‘Farniehirst’, ‘Phainierhirst’, ‘Phainyhirist’, ‘Phainyhirist’, ‘Pharniherst’, ‘Pharnyhirist’, ‘Pharnyhirist’; ‘Pharnyhirist’ etc.; the origin of the name is probably the Old English ‘fearnig hyrst’ meaning ‘the ferny wood’; it first appears in 1493 as ‘Fainny hirst’; there is a place of the same name in Cadfonfoot and Stow Parish).

feu (few) n., arch. in Scots Law, the right of an individual to use lands in exchange for a fixed annual fee in grain or money to the landowner; in Hawick, after the division of the Common, town lands were feu’d, with the rent going to the Common Good, v., arch. to let as a feu – ‘The lands of Over hassindean, east and west syde throf the hands of the King through forfeiture by Sir Kerr of Over Crailing, but the ‘reversion’ of the lands was granted by Elizabeth, Lady Pedmont (Sir William Colville’s daughter) to her son-in-law Robert Colville of Cleish in 1541; however, the Colvilles appear not to have repaid the long-standing debt. In 1509/10 the lands were listed among the holdings of Douglas of Cavers, dating back to the time of King David; however, this may have explicitly meant Hallrule and it is called ‘Fewhawroull’ in 1511, when the ‘mill thereof’ is also mentioned. It was owned by Lord Herries of Terregles and the Kerrs of Ferniehirst jointly, then in 1562 there was a ‘decret of division’ of the lands between Agnes (4th Lady Herries) and Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst. In 1574 it was in the hands of the King through forfeiture by Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst, although he held it again from 1581. John Maxwell, Lord Herries and Sir Andrew Ker of Oxnam were in dispute over the lands in the 1610s. In 1629 the superiority was transferred to Sir Andrew Kerr of Jedburgh from his deceased son, but then passed to Sir Patrick Home of Polwarth in 1632 and William, Earl of Lothian in 1649. The bulk of the lands were owned by Lord Balmerino in 1643, valued at more than £4800 and by Elliott of Stobs in 1678, when Stonedge and Fairmiedies had been disjoined and the value was roughly halved. The Mains of Feu-Rule were inherited in 1632 by Margaret and Isobella from her brother Walter Turnbull of Rawflat. The Barony passed from William, Earl of Lothian to William Elliott of Stobs later in the 17th century. In the 1690s it passed from Sir Gilbert Elliott to his son Sir William. The Common for the barony lay on the farm of Hallrule, and is referred to in a return of 1610 for Appotside. Before 1722 the Lairds of Weens had the right to graze on the Common, but in that year it was arranged that 1/5th of the land be given to Weens in exchange to yielding the pasturage rights, although retaining the right to cast peats.
the Fever Hospital

the Fever Hospital (thu-fevr-ur-hos-pi'-ul) n. hospital built at Burnfoot, off Burnfoot Road, as an isolation hospital for victims of infectious disease, particularly scarlet fever. Formally called the Hawick and District Joint Fever Hospital, or the Hawick and District Infectious Diseases Hospital. It was funded jointly by the Town and County, but saw little use. The hospital was designed by Alexander Inglis and built around 1902. It had 24 beds and also had an adjoining wooden smallpox hospital. The name ‘Fever Hospital’ was also sometimes used as an alternative name for the Anderson Sanatorium, built on the site of a former dilapidated building at Howdenburn in the last few years of the 19th century. The former Fever Hospital became an annex of Burnfoot Primary School in the 1960s and was converted into a Social Work Outreach Centre in the 1990s.

Firestane Edge (fir-stän-ej) n. hill by the B711 to the west of Roberton, where the road reaches 333 m (1,085 ft), affording a fine view of Teviotdale and the Southern Uplands. The hill itself peaks to the south of the road, reaching 353 m. The southern side of the hill has signs of rig and furrow cultivation.

firlot (fir-li’) n., arch. a former dry measure consisting of a quarter of a boll or 4 pecks, essentially equivalent to the English bushel. The wheat firlot contained 21 1/4 Scots pints, and was also used for pease, beans, rye and salt. However, the barley firlot contained 31 Scots pints, and was also used for malt and oats – ‘...viz. foure bollis and twa firatlis meill and five bollis and twa firlotts malt gud and sufficient stuf ...’ [SPB1579], ‘Item, the Myll land, estimat to pay 3 bolls in stok, and 3 firlotts teynd’ [PR1638], ‘First fit ma Uncle Jock’.

Firth (firth) n. farm and former hamlet south of Lilliesleaf. The poet William Knox was born there. It was formerly part of the Barony of Belses. In 1569 it was part of the lands sold by Jedburgh Abbey to Adam French, and was listed ‘with the teyndis and woddis of the samin’. Walter Turnbull was tenant there in 1576/7. It was listed as part of the Lordship of Jedburgh in 1587. ’Eckie Turnbull of the Firth’ is recorded in 1601. Thomas Hamilton (1st Earl of Haddington) owned the land in the early 17th century and owned by the Turnbulls of Firth. It (or perhaps just the superiority) was owned by the Kers of Cavers Carre in the 17th century. Hector Turnbull was owner in 1643, his lands being valued at £195. Walter Riddell farmed there in the mid-17th century. John Turnbull paid the land tax on £195 there in 1678. Andrew Knox and James Elliot are recorded there in 1694. Walter Turnbull paid tax for 13 windows there in 1748. Thomas Knox is recorded as farmer in 1797. George Pott was owner in 1788 (and still recorded in 1811), when the value was still the same. The Drydens were there in the mid-19th century. It was owned by John Martin in about 1874 it was later purchased by Walter Haddon (also formerly ‘the Firth’, it is probably ‘Phirth’ in 1476; it is marked ‘Firth’, it is probably ‘Phirth’ in 1476; it is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

fitbaa (fi’-bu, fi’-baw) n. football, referring either to the ball or the game – ‘. . . and that was the beginnin’ o’ the fitba’ played there till mony years back atween Aleveland an’ Ettrick folk’ [BCM1880], ‘Oor fitba’ wi’ handba’ was oft interspersed’ [AY], also used to mean rugby football – ‘Aw’m gettin’ half price tae the fitba’ And doon tae the toon in the bus’ [AY]. Locally the game has its roots in the ‘baa’ (i.e. handball) games played annually in many Border towns, as well as more casual games played at other times of the year. There is mention of a large match of around 1600 played at ‘Kelsy’ (probably Kelso) in the memoirs of Robert Carey, the English Warder of the Marches. The ‘Carterhaugh Baa’ of 1815 was essentially a re-enactment of those early games. The Rugby and Association Rules only became adopted in the latter part of the 19th century – ‘Then strip lads, and to it, though sharp be this weather, And if, by mischance, you should happen to fall. There are worse things in life than a tumble on heather, And life is itself but a game if the young rascal sets fit in ma hoose again, Cow Jean . . . ’ [JEDM], ‘When tunefu’ strains o’ dancin fiddle music Find my slow fuit owre blate to stert’ [WL], ‘. . . fit-weshin (fi’-we-shin) n., arch. traditional good-luck ceremony, performed before weddings in the 18th and early 19th centuries. The washing was done by a female friend of the bride-to-be, usually on the Tuesday before the wedding.
A tub of warm water was prepared, containing a ring from a married woman present (the finding of which in the tub being considered lucky). All those present washed the bride’s feet, and there were often pranks involving soot etc.

Fitz Alan (fitz-aw-lin) n. Edmund 9th Earl of Arundel (1285-1326) son of Richard, 8th Earl. He took part on the war against Scotland in 1306 and was appointed Warden of the English Marches in 1316. He organised an expedition against Scotland in 1317 and part of his force was ambushed by Sir James Douglas’ men at Lintalee. He went in and out of favour with the English King and was eventually executed. However, his estates were restored to his eldest son Richard. Hawise (13th C.) daughter of Alexander, 4th High Steward of Scotland and sister of Sir James, 5th High Steward, she was heiress of Old Roxburgh. She married John de Soulis, and so became Lady Lidddesdale. Her daughter Muriel married Sir Richard Lovel. Walter (b bef. 1155-77) first High Steward of Scotland under David I. He helped encourage Norman families to settle in Scotland. He owned large amounts of land in western Scotland, but also Birchensoilde on the Leader Water in Berwickshire and Hassendean in Teviotdale.
He witnessed the renewal of the grant of Ringwood to Melrose Abbey in the late 1160s. In the late 1160s he was witness to the confirmation of the gifts of lands to Jedburgh Abbey. In 1166 he witnessed a charter by King William to Robert de Brus. After his death there was a document confirming the lands he had given to the monks of Paisley Priory, including a ploughgate in Hassendean (called Huntlaw). He married Eschina de Molle, heiress of Molle (or Mow) and Huntlaw. Their son was Alan, 2nd High Steward. The Stewardship was thereafter hereditary and led to the Stewart Kings several generations later. His seal shows a knight on horseback, holding a sword and shield and with the words ‘SIGILL. WALTERI FILI ALANI’ (also written ‘Fitzalan’).

Fitz Malger (fitz-mal-gur) n. Race (12th C.) grantor of half the lands of Shorthotts to Jedburgh Abbey. This took place in the late 1100s, and the lands were in Liddesdale, described as being in the territory of Sorbie. Presumably his father was ‘Malger’, a name that occurs among Norman families south of the Border.

Fitz-Scott (fitz-skər) n. Uchtred (12th C.) first known ancestor of the noble Scotts, with some indication that his family came from Galloway, and that they had held the barony of Scotstoun in Peeblesshire. Although, there is no definite information about his parentage or earlier ancestors, his designation as ‘son of Scot’ distinguished him from others of the same name. He lived during the reigns of Alexander I and David I. Around 1116 he witnessed an inquest made by David (then Prince of Cumbria) regarding the foundation of the church at Glasgow, and also witnessed the foundation charter for the monastery at Selkirk (where he was ‘Uchtred filio Scot’). He was among the courtiers of King David I. About 1145 he witnessed the charter of King David’s son Henry to the church of Melrose. His son was probably Richard. The Dukes of Buccleuch and many other local branches of the Scotts can trace themselves directly back to him (also written ‘Uchtred Filius Scot’), i.e. the son of Scot).

flaffer (flaw-fur) v., arch. to flap, flutter.

the Flag (flawg) n. Hawick’s colour, standard, pennon, pennant, or pensil, also known as ‘the Banner Blue’. It is meant to be a copy of the original flag captured at Hornshole, which is believed to have originally belonged to a group of English soldiers attached to the Priory of Hexham. The oldest surviving flag dates from 1707, sometimes called ‘the Union Flag’, since it contains the date 1707 (but the connection with the Union of the Kingdoms is probably just a coincidence) and is in the Museum; it was ordered by Bailie Ruecastle at a cost of £10 14 shillings, and was ready for the end of May that year. It was a replacement for a much older flag, which was so decrepit in 1706 that the Cornet-Elect refused to carry it, causing near riots. The result was that the Bailies took the responsibility of carrying the Flag that year, while the young men of the town appointed their own unofficial Cornet (whose name is not recorded) to carry another Colour. The Hawick flag is ‘A Banner Azure with Saltire Or’ with the date 1514 also in gold, and should be pennon-shaped (with the date read correctly when held like a lance). The vertical line may have simply hidden a seam. The letters ‘HC’ (for ‘Hawick Colour’ or ‘Hawick Common’ or perhaps even ‘Hawick Callants’, no one is entirely sure) were probably added later, perhaps to the original after its capture. The 1707 flag, of much lighter material than later version, was probably not the first replacement (although some have suggested that it might have been). A flag from around the end of the 18th century still had the correct colours, but with ‘1514’ in red and the cross in yellow; this was repeated for the replacement of 1832. A new flag made in 1865, and carried by the Cornet in the procession for the opening of the Allan Water supply and the opening of the Carlisle railway, was mistakenly given a red (or crimson) cross, and was square-shaped (‘…They love the banner that leads them on – the banner of red and blue’ [JEDM]). New flags were purchased in 1865, 1877 and 1892, still with the wrong colours. The error was probably made around 1850 (or 1845 and again around 1855 if 2 flags were purchased between 1832 and 1865), presumably because of indifference by the Town Council and citizens to the details of the ceremonial side. At the end of the 19th century it was established (by Craig & Laing, although the yellow colour had been suggested a few years earlier by J.E.D. Murray) that the flag should be pennon-shaped and with a golden cross, and this was implemented for the new flag of 1903, with subsequent copies retaining this design. The old coloured Flag was last used at the Thursday morning Chase of 1903 (and can be seen outside the Town Hall in an 1893 painting by Frank Wood). A replica flag was made by the ladies at Pringle’s and sent to the K.O.S.B. troops in Germany during WWII, then returned with the names of places where local men had fallen embroidered on it. Flags of schools and guilds were also carried in earlier Common Ridings, but since the mid-18th century only the Town’s Colour has been allowed. In 1851 the Flag was stolen when flying at the Tower Hotel overnight, but recovered a week later in Silver Street. Until 1861 the flag used to fly from the Chief Magistrate’s (sometimes the Junior Magistrate’s) house until it was bussed on the Thursday evening. After that year this happened at an inn selected by the Cornet, until the Colour Bussing was moved to the Town Hall in 1887. Now the unbussed Flag first appears at the Thursday morning Chase and is bussed on the Thursday evening, after being displayed from the Town Hall balcony all day. After being bussed inside the Town Hall it is waved from the balcony and left on display there. On the Friday the Cornet carries it at the Chase, then the Acting Father takes it to St. Leonard’s, where it is displayed outside the farmhouse. It is then taken by the Cornet on the Ride around the Marches. After the Cutting of the Sod it is carried by the Acting Father, and handed again to the Cornet at the gate from pilmuir Field onto the Mair. The Cornet rides proudly round the course with the Flag and later it is displayed from the roof of the committee room. Leaving the Mair, it is dipped in the Teviot and is returned to the Council Chambers for the night. On the Saturday it again goes to the Mair, and is returned on the Saturday afternoon at the Handing Back ceremony. The Flag was loaned to Hexham Abbey for the procession for the consecration of a new nave in 1908, with a copy presented to the Abbey by the Callants’ Club in 1914 and a replacement presented by the Provost in 1972 (the one last carried by the Cornet in 1971); this now hangs in the abbey’s north nave, with the 1914 copy returned to Hawick. There was a new flag in 1972, which was used until 1991. The flag was bussed by the Queen at a special Golden Jubilee ceremony in Melrose in 2002. It is rarely brought out except at the Common Riding, but formerly was used in local processions, e.g. at the opening of the Allan Water supply in 1865 (when a new Flag was provided) and the Dod Burn water supply in 1882. The Flag is also draped over the coffins of ex-Cornets, the practice beginning with James Smith in 1904. A practice flag (green, with the words ‘Aye Defend’ in yellow, donated by the Mosstroopers’ Club) is used by the Cornet and the Acting Father at the Mair after the Wednesday morning Chase. A new flag was provided in 2014 – ‘Hail to the banner that proudly floats o’er us, Hail to the brave hearts that bear it along’ [JT], ‘Then rally around the good old flag – let the slogan ring out again!’ [JEDM], ‘…And blue as my wee lad’s wondering eye Watching the Flag go fluttering by’ [JYH], ‘The flag is oor emblem, an’ stands for a’ that wei cherish an’ haud dear’ [BW1939], ‘The flag for which oor fithers died At Hornshole be Teviotside’ [IWL].

flaik (flāk) n., arch. a piece of frame-work, frame – ‘…for ane ryott with each other, and the said Janet Holywell in ane provocation for taking of her stand, ane flaik being laid there before’ [BR1676], a hurdle used as a barricade or

gate – ‘...my father sprang ower the bucht flake to be near the lasses’ [LHTB].

the Flail (thu-flail) n. nickname for Archibald Elliot in the latter part of the 16th century.

flain (flān) n., poet. an arrow – ‘The swallow-tail frae teckles flew. Five hundred flain into the flight ...’ [CPM].

flap (flāp) n., arch. a flop, thud, a clean or unbroken fall – ‘I've gotten mony flaps an’ fa’s, Baith Eilrig. It reaches a height of 318 m.

flanker (flang-kur) n. one of the 2 wing forwards in rugby, playing at numbers 6 and 7, and forming part of the back row in scrums.

flannen (fla-nen, neen) n., adj., arch. flannel – ‘Ma flannen serks an up ma back an ’s hard as buckram’ [ECS], ‘A can mind when tredsman wore Flannen serks wi a navy blue stripe’ [DH] (also written ‘flaaneen’ and variants).

flapper (flaw-pur) n. one who owns or trains horses for ‘flapping’ meetings, also a horse that races at such meetings.

flappin (flaw-pin) n. amateur horse-racing in the Borders, not under the Jockey Club or National Hunt rules. The word has been used elsewhere in Britain (and also for greyhound racing), but the Borderers have been the most enthusiastic supporters of unofficial racing. The main locations are at Hawick Moor, Langholm and Selkirk (at the Rig). Those at Hawick Moor that are not associated with the Common Riding are organised by ‘Hawick Horse’. There were also races on Flatt farm near Newcastleton until the early years of the 21st century. There were formerly meetings across much of Scotland, although support waned in most places, with the last meeting in the Aberdeen area around the 1990s. The only other place in Scotland to now have such race meetings is Irvine. Among places known to have meetings in the past are Insch (Aberdeenshire), the Black Isle, Bogside, Lanark, Canonbie, Dumfriesshire (near Newton Stewart) and Galashiels (once). Historically, flapping has a reputation as a hot-bed of swindlers and riffians, and the exclusive Jockey Club still gives a ‘warning off’ penalty for participants. The Common Riding of 1946 was the first flapping meeting to be held in Scotland. The Tradesmen’s Handicap, run on Common Riding Friday is the flappers equivalent of the Derby – ‘...daein a pickle flappin tae on his Uncle Elec’s Nell’ [IWL], ‘...Till hei got intae flappin’, racin’, no under orders’ [MB] (the origin and antiquity of the word is uncertain, but there is a claim it comes from an old slang word for a loose woman; however, it seems more likely it is related to ‘flap’, recorded as ‘a sudden happening’ in Aberdeenshire).

flappit (flaw-pi’, -pee’) pp. flapped – ‘He crawed and flappit over the dyke, An’ roosed the bees ayont the bike’ [WFC].

flare (flār) v., poet. to flatter, cajole, brag – ‘He ever shunn’d the wheedlin’ pack, Wha flare ane up wi’ fulsome crack’ [JoHa] – ‘I’m no come here To seich and sab and flare and row’ [HSR] (also written ‘flair’).

Flask (flawsk) n. former lands on the east side of the Ewes valley, between Hoghill and Terrona. Flask Wood is still marked on the Ordnance Survey map. It was also formerly called ‘Flashkholm’, although in some periods the 2 names may have referred to distinct neighbouring lands. Along with Howgill and Glendivan it was described as a 10-merk land when inherited by Robert, Lord Maxwell in 1550, by John, Lord Maxwell in 1604
Flasket Sike

(flaws-kī'-sīk) n. small stream on the west side of Whitrope Burn in upper Liddesdale, just north of Buckstone Moss.

Flaskwood (flask-wud) n. Flaskwood, former name for lands in Liddesdale, recorded in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale, listed as vacant at that time. A document of 1529/30 states that Robert Elliot ‘alias Flaskvod’ is to be brought in to answer crimes perpetrated against George Ker of Linton. It was probably the ‘Flaskett’ included along with Over Close, Millburn and several adjacent farmsteads when surveyed for the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1718. The farm was presumably on the Flasket Sike, off the Whitrope Burn in upper Liddesdale.

flat (fla') n. a storey in a mill, or an area defined for specific factory production, e.g. ‘the Back Flat’ or ‘the Middle Flat’ – ‘...one day while going through one of the spinners’ flats there he noticed a piecer lounging about’ [JHH].

flat (fla') n., arch. a cow-plat, cake of cow dung (Jamieson says this is ‘apparently from its flat form’).

flate (flā') pp., arch. scolded, chided (also ‘flaet’; this is the past tense of flyte, noted by E.C. Smith, but also see fleet; the past participle is flitten).

flatlins (fla'-linz) adv., poet. flatly, at full length – ‘Ane other thro’ the breeks him bare, While flatlins to the grund he fell ...’ [CPM].

Flatt (flaw', flat) n. farm just north of Kershope-foot, on the Scottish side of the Border. It is already ‘Flatt’ in 1541 when valued at 5 merks and tenanted by Simon Armstrong. ‘Young Sim’ was recorded as residing there in 1583. Will Elliot ‘called Blakheid’ had 4 cows stolen from the lands there in about 1610. Lancie Armstrong of Flat was recorded in 1611. It was possessed by Francis Robson in 1632. Elspeth Scott was tenant there in 1694, and paid tax on 3 hearths. It was surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718, extending to 442 acres, bounded by the Kershope Burn, Liddel Water and Sorbietrees; the map shows the house in the same place as today’s farmhouse and some old trees corresponding to the modern Sorbholm Strip. Henry Elliot paid tax on 11 windows there in 1748. Elliots were tenants in the later 18th and early 19th centuries. Henry Elliot was there in at least the period 1785–91. John Elliot was farmer there in 1797 and another John in the 1860s. There was a mill pond to the east. A mineral spring on the farm was once considered to have healing properties, and is marked ‘Stinking Well (Chalybeate)’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map. The farm was used for ‘flapping’ race meetings in the latter part of the 20th century. It is also a former name for lands to the east of Smailholm Crags (also ‘The Flatt’, it is ‘the Flates’ in 1583; it is ‘Flett’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map and ‘Flat’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

flatty (fla-tee) n., poet. an ignorant person – ‘What mak’s ye spae o’ caul’ an’ want, To gliff puir corky-noddl’d flatties?’ [JoHa].

flauch see flach
flauchter see flachter flaught see flacht

flaw (flaw) n., arch. a piece of ground used for drying peats – ‘A flaw o’ peats, the spot of ground occupied by an individual, on the edge of a moss, on which his peats are spread for being dried, in the summer season’ [JoJ], a quantity of peats (also flowe).

Fleck (flek) n. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer in Hobkirk Parish. He paid the Horse Tax at ‘over Chesterhall’ in 1797; this was probably a temporary name for Over Boucherne. His children included: Betty (b.1789); and James (b.1791).

Flecks see the Fleck

fleece (flees) n., arch. a supply of stock, a flock or company of people, humorous term for an outfit of clothes – ‘A’ve bocht a new fleece o warm claes for the wunter months’ [ECS].

the Fleece see the Fleece Inn

Fleece Close (flees-kīs) n. passageway at 6 High Street, named after the Fleece Inn, the ballroom of which it led to. In the mid-19th century there was the sign of a golden fleece at the entrance.

the Fleece Inn (thu-flees-in) n. inn formerly at 6 High St, also known as ‘the Golden Fleece’. It was reached by the long passageway there, behind what was for a long time Davies the saddler’s. The attached ballroom was further up the close, with access from an outside staircase (seen in an old sketch). In the middle of the 19th century it was used for many purposes, including weddings, dances, theatrical performances and concerts in the winter, as well as ‘Blind Wall’s’ dance classes. At one point there were 3 separate dance instructors using the ballroom. It was a popular place for raffles to raise money for distressed workers. There were performances of all kinds there, including the exhibition of a supposed mermaid and performances by Borders clown Billy Purves. One of the last performances there was a recital of selections from Shakespeare by a father and daughter. It was also used for many years for the monthly business meetings of Allars Kirk, with the upper room (No. 5) used for this purpose known jokingly as ‘the Manse’. Thomas Easton ran a school here for a while and in 1838 it was the location for the meeting that organised the opening of the Chartist Store (i.e. the Co-op). George Hunter was the proprietor in 1825 and 1837, Margaret Best is listed there in 1852, then James Hay, followed by James Scott, with the last tenant being town bellman Samuel Lawrence. The licence was reduced from that of a hotel to a public house in 1871 and lost altogether in 1875 for a ‘breach of certificate’. There are 2 sketches made by T.H. Laidlaw in 1899. The ballroom was demolished in 1948 – ‘Jock Buckham to the Fleece is gane To sleep among his rags . . .’ [WE].

fleech (fleech) v., poet. to cajole, coax, beseech, flatter – ‘But what are a’ their fleeing tales to me? Colin I loo, but them I donna see’[CPM]. ‘An’ that in nae most awfu’ gracious manner; I’m plainly blunt – nor kens the way to fleece’[JoHa], ‘Nae fleeching an’ fondness, but glunching an’ strife, Bestriddles the way o’ a man wi’ a wife’[JoHa], ‘I’ve fleech’d an’ foughten a’ in vain – Jock disna seem to care; I’ve thraished him o’er and o’er again Until my arm was sair’[JT].

fleet (flee) v., poet. to floor, to flow, flood – ‘. . .blaw apon my gairden that its spices may fleet owt’[HSR], ‘Where the weet comes frae the flowe, And fleetes, ye mind, on yon bit lea’[HSR], arch. to be awash with water – ‘. . .and boggy ground on the other which fleets water all the winter season’[GT].

Fleety Wud (flee-ee-wud) n. wood on the east side of the Slitrig, to the south of North Berryfell Farm. The cottage there is Fleety Cottage or Fleety Haugh, formerly called Elliotfield (the name presumably relates to propensity for flooding in the area).

fleg (fleg) v., arch. to frighten, scare, drive away by scaring – ‘. . .But stuff my wame wi’ guid kail brose, To fleg the caul’ Syne strutting in guid plaidin’ hose, I look fu’ baul’’[JR], ‘. . .An’ scripture anathema’s gather, To fleg the faithles’[JR], to fling (as a horse, from a fright), n. a fright, scare – ‘An’ if ye meet wi’ Whisky Meg, That honest hearted carlin, Gude faith your cares will get a fleg . . .’[JR], ‘. . .She threw doon a guinea, and thought it weel waired, For he, to her ailment, had given a fleg’[TCh].

flegggar (fle-gur) n., arch., poet. someone who flinches, one who frightens – ‘Even in the Tranties, wi’ their beggars, The spoilers had found fearfu’ flegggars’[AD], a horse that is prone to flinging off its rider (the meaning of Agnes Douglas’ line may possibly instead be ‘an exaggerator, liar’ just be ‘scarer’).

flei (fli) n. a fly, any general flying insect – ‘is that flei a cleg or just a hoose-flei?’, ‘shut yer y moth or the fleis’ll get in’, ‘Dirty white-wesh, deid-rot treis, Baked bean tins and mawky fleis . . .’[DH], v. to fly – ‘she’s gliffed stiff ti flei’, ‘But hei took iz roond the Haugh – Oh, how the time had given a fleg’[DH], ‘. . .it’s sixteen eer sin oor Queen an Prince Philip last veesiteet the toon. How time fleis’[BW1978] (also spelled ‘fley’; see also hoose-flei, mauky-flei and shairny-flei).

flei ceemetry (fli-see-mi-ree) n. humorous term for fly paper – ‘They came to a horrid place, A fly cemetery’s . . .’[BB], humorous term for a fruit slice made of pastry and currants.

fleich (flech) v., poet. to cajole, flatter – ‘. . .wi’ flech’in lipps, an’ wi’ ane double haire do thaye speik’[HSR].

flei-er (fli-ur) n. a flyer, a flying-top, i.e. a wooden toy that flies when spun up by rubbing between the hands.

flei-hauf (fli-hawf) n. half-back in rugby, playing at no. 10, and being effectively the leader of the backs.

flei-hook (fli-hook) n. a fishing fly, especially in the phrase ‘dressed like a flei-hook’, meaning overdressed.

flei-in adder (fli-in-aw-dur) n., arch. the dragon-fly (also ‘fleein adder’, ‘fleein ether’, etc.).
flei-in bent

flei-in bent (fl-în-ben) n., arch. a rough grass, purple melic, Molinia caerulea.

flei-in oot (fl-în-oo) adj., arch. sticking-out – ‘Yet there was a Hawick wumman used to take a flyin-oot lip whenever the train got to Reston Junction . . .’ [DH].

flei in the air (fl-în-thu-år) interj. used to express doubt – ‘that’s nae mair gold is flei in the air’.

Fleming (fl-în) n. Sir David of Biggar (d.1405/6) eldest son of Sir Malcolm. He distinguished himself at the Battle of Otterburn in 1388. Being in royal favour he gained several properties and titles, including being (briefly) given the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffdom of Roxburgh by King Robert III on being forfeited by the Earl of Douglas in 1405. In 1404 he was a Commissioner for negotiating a truce with England. In 1405 he was one of those ensuring (unsuccessfully, for he was captured by the English) the safe passage of Prince James of Scotland by ship to France, to escape the plotings of the Douglasses. However, the Royal force was met at Long Hermiston Moor and he was killed there by James Douglas of Balveny, son of Archibald Earl of Douglas. As a result Cavers (and the Sheriffdom) returned to Douglas hands, and later Douglas of Balveny became the 7th Earl of Douglas. He married Jean, daughter of Sir David Barclay of Brechin and secondly married Isabel, heiress of Monycabow. He had a daughter Marrion (who married William Maule of Panmure) and 2 sons, Sir Malcolm and David. He was ancestor of the Earls of Wigtown. Hugh (12th C.) landowner at Malton in Yorkshire. He is recorded in Reginald of Durham’s collection of miracles of St. Cuthbert, probably written in the 1170s. He was said to have fled Malton due to the incursions of the army of William the Lion, and sought refuge in the chapel of St. Cuthbert in the Slitrig valley. A vision of the saint told him to take moss from the chapel and stick it out – ‘Thou didist smatter the heeds o’ leviathan intil flenders . . .’ [HSR].

flenders (fl-în-durz) n., pl., poet. splinters, fragments – ‘Now ye your barrels into flenders May ding wi’ speed’ [JoHa], ‘. . . thou salt basch thame intil flenders like ane patter’s vesshel’ [HSR], ‘Thou didist smatter the heeds o’ leviathan intil flenders . . .’ [HSR].

flesh (fl-îsh) n., arch. a general term for butcher meat – ‘A made a faisable mael oot o pie-soop, . . . caald flesh, pickit ingans . . .’ [ECS], ‘. . . for aw’ve the pot on the day, an’ aw henna the flesh in yet’ [JTu].

flesher (fl-îshur) n., arch. a butcher. There were formerly strict laws attached to the treatment of meat, which the Town Council enforced, e.g. in 1713 a flesher was fined for bringing a carcass into the Town that had already died in the country. In Hawick the ‘fleshers’ were one of the 7 incorporated trades, which until 1861 had two representatives on the Town Council. They obtained their ‘Seal of Cause’ in 1720, when there were 7 of them, but had ceased to exist by the end of the 19th century. In Selkirk the ‘Fleshers’, a remnant of the former trade incorporation there, are still an active group with their own reception etc. during the Common Riding. The amount of business done locally was at a fairly low level until the latter part of the 18th century. Cutting the hamstrings of escaped cattle in the public street was one of the barbaric practices of the 18th century mentioned by Robert Wilson. An 1860 photograph (of George Davies’ shop) shows the once common sight (before being banned in 1862) of carcasses hanging up outside the shop – ‘Item, to Adam Lidderdale, flescheour in Hawik, for flesche to the place, tuentie pundis’ [SB1574], ‘The said day, Bessie Henderson, spouse to Cuthbert Henderson, fleshour, being accused …’ [BR1638], ‘Item, that all flescheris present the hale flesh slaine by them at the mercat place …’ [BR1640], ‘The flesheres are ordained by the council not to sell skins until they shall first be exposed in the market place …’ [BR1663], ‘The incorporations are 7, viz. weavers, tailors, hammermen, skinners, flesheres, shoemakers, and baxters’ [RRG], ‘…Past flescher, webster, hind’ [DH] (also sometimes ‘flechter’; several spelling variants exist, such as ‘fleshour’).

the Flesh Mercat (thu-flesh-ner-ki’) n., arch. former name for a market held in Hawick to sell meat. In 1755 it is recorded that ‘The Flesh Mercate’ was finished at the cost of £20, suggesting there was a building constructed especially for this purpose. It is specifically recorded that a ‘cross-tree’ was put up there in 1755 and there was a ‘roup’ for it that year (presumably it was rented by butchers). However, in 1762 the Council resolved to ‘take down the Flesh Market and Cross’, and to dispose of the stones and timber; this suggests that it may have been located close to the foot of the Cross Wynd.

Fletcher (flo-chur) n. Adam (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Thomson and their children included William (b.1689). Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was living at Borthwickshiel in 1718, 1722 and 1724. He may have married Margaret Tait in 1715. His children included: Janet (b.1718); Margaret (b.1720); James (b.1722); and Adam (b.1724). He was surely related to William who was at Borthwickshiel about the same time. Alexander (b.1883/4) saddler in Newcastle, listed on Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. He was at about 48 North Hermitage Street in 1841 and 1851. His wife was Elizabeth (‘Betty’). Probably the same Alexander was listed as a tailor in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Andrew (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish, recorded as miller in Synton Mill in 1689 and 1698. In 1689 he had a discharge with the treasurer of Selkirk in the name of his wife Margaret Smail. He witnessed baptisms in 1689 for John Turnbull and for William Balmer, in 1691 for George Robison and for Robert Gledstains, and in 1694 for James Rutherford and for William Palmer. Also in 1694 he and William witnessed a baptism for John Cuthbertson and Isobel (who was surely related). He married Margaret Smail and their children included George (b.1688), Isobel (b.1692), William (b.1696), Janet (b.1698), Helen (b.1701) and Andrew (b.1704). Andrew (18th C.) Hawick resident, married to Janet Kedie. Their children included: Janet (b.1737); Mary (b.1740); and Walter (b.1741). He was probably related to Betty Fletcher, who was married to Thomas Kedie at about the same time. He is probably the Andrew who hired the Hawick Parish mortcloth in 1760. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Whitfield in 1759. He married Mary Henderson in 1756. Their son James was baptised in 1759, with witnesses William and Robert Scott. George (d.c.1558) son of Thomas, from whom he was given the lands of Rucastle in 1519. His son was John. George (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His son John was born in 1636. Perhaps the same George married Isobel Veitch and has a son Andrew baptised in 1653. He also witnessed a baptism in 1652 for Thomas, who was probably a brother or other close relative. George (17th C.) owner of lands in Ruecastle in Bedrule Parish. In 1643 his lands were valued at £12. He is probably related to the George who was recorded in Bedrule Parish in 1694. George (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He farmed on one of the farms of the Knowesouth estate and is probably related to James and John, who are also listed. George (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1690 he (along with William) witnessed a baptism for John and Isobel Brydon. He married Agnes Veitch and their children included James (b.1705). George (18th C.) tenant farmer at Turn near Stobs. He was there in the 1750s when his servant Robert Thomson got into a violent altercation with the Hawick Town Herd over his flock being hounded off the Common. He could be the George, son of James, born in Bedrule Parish in 1730. James (16th C.) recorded in Huntly in 1580 when he witnessed an agreement between the tenants in Dodhead and Singlie. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Reid, whose surname is written ‘Red’. Their children included: William (b.1670); Thomas (b.1672); James (b.1675); and Helen (b.1676). James Haining states that ‘in some notes of James Wilson, Town Clerk, appears a famous Fletcher m. to Isobel Reid or Rae’, and Helen (b.1676). James Haining states that ‘in some notes of James Wilson, Town Clerk, appears a famous Fletcher m. to Isobel Reid or Rae’, but it is unclear what was famous about him. He is probably the James, son of Thomas, born in Ashkirk in 1644. James (17th C.) tenant in Bel- lendalean. Along with several other men from the upper Borthwick, he was charged in 1685 with being a Covenanter. However, all the men took the ‘Test’ and promised not to frequent conventicles. His name is given as ‘Flesher’. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His name is recorded as ‘Flatcher’. His wife was Janet Scott and they had a son George (b.1662). James (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He farmed on one of the farms of the Knowesouth estate. His children, baptised in Bedrule Parish, included William (b.1693) and George (b.1698). James (17th/18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. He may have been son of the earlier James. His children included Mary (b.1726), Margaret (b.1728) and George (b.1730). Andrew (b.1732) and William (b.1735), baptised in Ashkirk Parish, may also have been his children. Rev. James (1725/6–1803) from Dalkeith, he became the first minister of the Newcastle- ton Burgher Kirk in 1762. He was one of 6 students who entered the divinity hall in 1758, only 2 of whom became ministers. His appointment to Castleton came after a long delay, caused by difficulty in finding a suitable man. He was said to be skilled at optics and keen on astronomy, and a friend of James Veitch of Inchbonny. He is also said to have built a ‘wooden horse’ which he used to get around the Parish; it is unclear whether or not this was an early predecessor of the bicycle. There were also stories of how he had second sight and predicted things about the next 3 ministers of the parish. He was said to be ‘a man of singularly primitive manners’ and was not a successful minister, being a strict disciplinarian and having an off-putting manner. A new Kirk was built around 1773, but it was said that the congregation was in decline by 1793. Around this time there was also the establishment of Newcastleton, dramatically altering the parish. A complaint was made to the Selkirk Presbytery in 1801 that he was preaching against accepted doctrine, which led to discussions of his dismissal, during which he announced his resignation; he had apparently come to a new but unorthodox understanding of the Trinity, and written of this in a preface to an edition of Dr. Watts on ‘The Sonship of Christ’. He moved back to Dalkeith and shortly before his death published ‘The orthodox scheme freed from the remains of Arianism . . .’, largely a commentary on the works of Rev. Isaac Watts. He married Christian Beattie in 1769 and had a daughter, also Christian (d.1835). The family are buried in Castleton churchyard John (15th C.) resident of Hartwood. In 1494/5 Walter Rutherford in Phaup was allowed to componse for several crimes, including stealing sheep from him and Robert Nichol. His surname is recorded as ‘flegiar’. John (16th C.) son of George, he inherited the lands of Ruecastle in 1558/9. Then he immediately sold the lands to Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst. Perhaps the same John was recorded in 1563 leasing part of the lands of Hermiston in Lilliesleaf Parish and in 1580 witnessing a transaction involving the Johnstones of Hermiston. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick and Ashkirk Parishes. He married Isobel Brydon and their children included: Janet (b.1680), baptised in Haw- nicks (b.1690), baptised in Ashkirk. The witnesses in 1690 were William and George, who were probably related to him. John (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He farmed on one of the farms of the Knowesouth estate. He may be the John whose children baptised in Bedrule included: Helen (b.1693); Thomas (b.1696); Margaret (b.1698); Isabel (b.1701); Janet (b.1704); Jean (b.1708); John (b.1706); and possibly Jean (b.1718). John (18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. He married Margaret Scott, and their children included Margaret (b.1726). John (18th/19th C.) saddler in Hawick with Andrew Atcheson. In 1799 he was selected by ballot to serve on the Roxburghshire Militia. Peter (18th/19th C.) weaver in the West-end. Along with Robert Leith- head, he walked to Selkirk to secure the services of the drummer and fifer there for the ‘rebel’ party during the 1809 Common Riding. He is probably the Peter who had a child John with Jane Paterson in Wilton in 1794. The death of his illegitimate grandchild was recorded in 1816.
Robert (15th C.) owner of the lands of Ruecastle. He had a sasine for the lands according to the Exchequer Rolls of 1471, with his name given as ‘Roberto Flesware’. He was succeeded by his son Thomas. Robert (d.c.1492) son of Thomas. He inherited the lands of Ruecastle (in Bedrule) in 1470/1. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th C.) recorded in 1561 when Robert, son of Walter Scott of Synton, promised to produce him at the next truce day at Coldstream. This was to answer the charge that he stole 3 horses from Steven Simpson in Berwick. He is recorded as ‘Hob Flescheour’. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1717 he was recorded as tenant in Huntly. He married Agnes Renaldson and their children included Andrew (b.1706), William (b.1708), Andrew (again, b.1717) and Andrew (again, b.1723). The 1717 baptism took place in the Manse ‘there being Examination that day’. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Hoscote in 1710. He probably married Bessie Scott in Roberton in 1708. His children included: Isobel (b.1710); and Helen (b.1714). Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded as a herd in 1796. His children included William (b.1794) and James (b.1796). Thomas (d.c.1470) inherited the lands of Ruecastle from his father Robert in the 5th year of the King’s reign (i.e. either 1441 or 1464), 8 years after his father’s death. Thomas (15th/16th C.) son of Robert, from whom he inherited the lands of Ruecastle. In 1497 he retained Ruecastle after having them held ‘in wadset’ to Janet Moscrop. He gave the lands to his son George in 1519, except for ‘liferent’. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Jean Minto and their son Walter was baptised in 1652. The witnesses were George (presumably a relative) and Robert Mathieson. Thomas (d.1680) from Bedrule parish, where he has one of the earliest surviving gravestones. Walter (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Kedie in 1692 and their children included William (b.1696) and Janet (b.1698). William (15th C.) tenant in ‘le crug’, which could be ‘Crook’ near Hawick. His name is given as ‘William fle-giar’ when he failed to appear when called by William Douglas, Sheriff of Roxburghshire, at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493; he appears right after 4 Routledges who are connected with the lands of Trows near Crook. He was also called in 1494/5 and again failed to appear. William (17th C.) resident of Castleside in Ashkirk Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He may be the William who (along with George) witnessed a baptism for John in 1690. He is probably the William who in 1694 (along with Andrew) witnessed a baptism for John Cuthbertson and Isobel (who was surely related). William (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Borthwickshiel in 1721, 1723, 1725, 1727 and 1729. He may have married Isobel Smail in Roberton in 1722. His children included: Walter (b.1721); Margaret (b.1723); Mary (b.1725); Andrew (b.1727); William (b.1729); and Margaret (b.1731). He may have been brother of Adam who was at Borthwickshiel at the same time (formerly spelled ‘Flechar’, ‘Fleggear’, ‘Flegiar’, ‘Fleiggar’, ‘Fleschar’, etc.).

flew (floon) pp. flown – ‘she’s never been abroad or flown nowhere’, ‘It has flown away’ [GW], ‘The nest’s flown’ (= young ones have taken wing’ [GW] (cf. the older flown).

the Flex (thu-fleks) n. farm on the northern side of the road between St. Leonard’s and the Sliprig, and a name for that general area. The name is old, with a ‘Richard de Flex’ of Roxburghshire signing the Ragman Rolls in 1296, and Alexander of Flex witnessing a charter in 1357/8. Alexander Gledstains held the lands in the early 15th century, with a confirming charter in 1458, but had to yield them to William Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1464/5 following a case before the Justiciary South of the Forth. William Douglas had a sasine for these lands (along with Kirkton Mains) immediately following; this was done at the ‘principale messuagium’, i.e. main dwelling. In the charter for the Barony of Hawick in 1511 these lands were listed among those held by the Baron ‘in property’. James Scott of Flex is recorded in 1556. The lands were among those inherited by James Douglas in 1572 along with the Barony of Hawick and listed among the property of the Baron in 1594. In a land valuation of 1627 it is listed as ‘estimat to 100 merks in stok, parsonage 2 bolls, varnage 5 lbs’. A charter for the land was given to John Gledstains in 1653, when it was described as ‘extending to five merks, old extent’, and it was probably the main residence for the Gledstains of Whitlaw. It was still valued at 5 merks (of old extent) when inherited by Francis Gledstaines of Whitlaw in 1672. John Stoddart was listed there among the poor of Hawick Parish in 1694. William Lilico was herd there in 1700. Walter Martin was there in at least 1700-02. William Henderson was smith there in at least 1702-09 and Francis was also smith in at least 1702-04. John Davidson was tenant there in 1718 and Archibald Paterson in 1716–19. William Hill was a weaver there in 1720. John Thomson was there in 1726. John Irvine was tenant in 1741, with John Cavers and John Goodfellow also there. James Reid and William Scott were there in 1743. Robert Boyd purchased the farm in 1751 and in 1753 march stones were laid out along the burnside to mark the boundary with the Common. John Laing lived there in the late 18th century, and William Elliott Lockhart in the late 19th. By 1788 the lands of Flex had been disjoined from those of Whitlaw, were valued at £144 10s 9d and were owned by Mrs. Elliot of Bothwickbrae; it had the same value and owner in 1811. William Scott was there from at least 1799 and was also recorded ‘at Flex’ in 1811. Henry Scott Riddell also lived here for several years, walking 9 miles to preach ‘at Flex’ in 1811. Henry Scott Riddell also lived there from at least 1799 and was also recorded same value and owner in 1811. William Scott was there in 1801, 1707 and 1709 and ‘Flexes’ in 1717; it is ‘Flex’ in 1296, ‘Flexis’ in 1458, ‘Flekkis’ in 1514, ‘Flekkis’ in 1559 and 1572, ‘Flekis’ in 1594 and 1615, ‘Flexs’ in 1700, 1707 and 1709 and ‘Flexes’ in 1717; it is marked ‘Flecks’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Flex’ on the Buccleuch survey of in 1718; the origin of the name is obscure, but ‘fleck’ is a Scots word for a cattles pen made of hurdles.

Flex (fleks) n. Alexander (14th C.) witness to a charter granting the lands of Altonburn to the Kers in 1357/8. All of the other men were from Roxburghshire, and so presumably these were the lands near Hawick. He must have been related to the earlier Richard, ‘Alexander de Flex a Scotsman’ was ordered to be released from the Tower of London in 1356. Probably the same ‘Alexandro de ffleckys’ witnessed a charter for lands in Lessuden being granted to Melrose Abbey in about 1370. Richard (13th C.) recorded as being ‘de Flex’ in Roxburghshire when he signed the Ragan Rolls in 1296. His seal shows a crescent enclosing a star (suggesting a connection with the Scotts perhaps) and the name ‘S’RICARDI DE FLECHIS’. He was also on a jury in 1304 at Dumfries (made up of men from Dumfriesshire and Roxburghshire) to decide on the privileges claimed by Robert Bruce, Earl of Carrick (later King); he was there ‘Richard del Flexkes’. His lands were presumably those at the Flex, near Hawick.

Flex Back Burn (fleks-bawk-burn) n. another name for Acreknoive Burn (it is so described in the 1767 description of the Common).

the Flex Brae (thu-fleks-brä) n. another name for the road leading from St. Leonard’s past Flex farm down to the Slitrig.

Flex Burn (fleks-burn) n. stream running from Williestruther down to the Slitrig.

Flex Lodge Park (fleks-loj-pawrk) n. name of the field on Hawick Common to the north-west of the Flex farm.

Flex Machr West (fleks-märch-west) n. field on Hawick Common Moor to the east of Williestruther cottage.

the Flex Stakes (thu-fleks-stäks) n. race run at the Common Riding. An amount of £500 was left by James Elliot (d.1923), farmer of the Flex, with the interest to be run for yearly.

fley (flä, flī) v., poet. to scare, frighten, put to flight, make flee – ‘And whiles a wee bit prayer began, To fley away the ghaists and witches’ [JT], ‘He was fley’d oot o’ his wuts’ [GW] (cf. flei).

fley see flei

flicher (flī-chur) n., arch. a flake (also flicht and flichter).

flicht (flīcht) n., arch., poet. flight – ‘... The gems that whirl in crazy flicht Mann end in draiglin’ lifeless mud’ [WP].

flicht (flīcht) n., arch. a flake (of soot or snow), a small speck (e.g. in porridge or other food), a mote of dust – ‘... where yin braiths God’s air clear an no suddlt wui suitty flicht’ [ECS] (also ficher and flichter).

Flight (flīcht) n. former name for an area in Liddesdale, south-east of Castleton, close to the Border. It is now marked by ‘Flight’s Moss’ on the Ordnance Survey map, although the area around the farm ‘The Flatt’ near Kershopefoot may also be meant. It is recorded as ‘Flygh’ in the c.1376 rental roll of Liddesdale, with a value of 20 shillings. The farm of ‘Hieflycht’ is listed in 1541, with a value of 3 pounds and tenanted by Martin Nixon. Matthew and John Nixon were there in 1544. Hob Elliot of Thorrieshope was ‘in Flic’ in 1587/8 when held in ward with the Laird of Balwarie. The eastern part was inherited by William Elliot of Dinlabyre in 1667 (and apparently again in 1691), having earlier been held by his great-grandfather William of Hartsgarth. John Wilson was tenant there in 1694 and James Lamb also a resident. In the 1718 survey of Scott of Buccleuch lands it appears to be combined with Kirnudean and Clintwood. Robert Robertson was shepherd there in 1797. It is marked on Mercator’s 1595 map of Scotland as ‘Flighees cha.’ and on other roughly contemporary maps as ‘Flighees cast’, suggesting there was confusion over whether there was a chapel or a castle there. It is probably the ‘Flygh superior’ listed as a 36-shilling land. The remains of a farmstead are located near the head of the Boghall Burn. The New Statistical Account mentions 2 ‘camps’ on the farm, one round and the other square (it is ‘Flycht’ in 1516, ‘Flecht’ in 1544 and ‘Flight’ in 1694; Blaeu’s 1654 map shows ‘East Flicht’ and ‘West Flicht’, with ‘Flicht’s Fell’ above, while it is still marked on Stobie’s 1770 map and is labelled as a ruin on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

flichter (flisch-tur) v., arch., poet. to flutter, to fly about lightly (as snow) – ‘He little ken’d my heart was flight’ring fain. My winsome lad! O gin ye war my ain!’ [CPM], ‘...an the flichterin’ burdies daibbelt an dookeet’ [ECS], ‘The broun leaves flichtered crinklin’ Wi’ the first soft flecks o’ snow’ [WL].

flichter (flisch-tur) n., arch. a flake (of soot or snow) (also ficher and flicht).

flichty (flisch-tee) adj., arch. flightly – ‘...proving yet again that it’s no’ the weemen-folk that’s flichtry!’ [DH].

fid (fid) n. a flood – ‘Oor hames are hie, we ken nae flute ...’[JoHa], ‘...And calm’st the raging, roaring fluid, When dashing wild’ [RDW], ‘The neist big flute ‘ill show them fun’ [WNK], ‘...shurelie in the fluides o’ grit waters thaye salina cum nie untill him’ [HSR], ‘Oo’v a hist’ry thrae the Fluid Oo’v a Moat where Druids stuidl’ [TK], ‘Through fire and fluid the real auld gutter bluid Aye circled roond the auld green Moat’ [TK], v. to flood – ‘A says ‘What er oo gaun ti dae now?’ cos it was fliddin virtually the whole road ...’ [IA] (also spelled ‘fluid’ and ‘flude’ and probably formerly pronounced flid).

fliddin (fli-din) n. a flooding – ‘The fluidin’s gey bad aa the watergate lang, – I’ve a fine pair o’ towels, as cheap as they’re strang!’ [WL].

the Flid Merk (thu-flid-merk) n. name sometimes used for the plaque at Towerdyska, marking the level of the Slitrig flood of 1846. The level was marked annually by James Smith, Cornet that year, and a painter to trade. The plaque was placed there by him and his friends in 1902, with the inscription ‘Flood Mark July 1846’.

flids (fliz) n., pl. the Teviot floods every few years, with significant floods in 1796, 1806, 1846, 1826, 1938, 1948, 1953, 1955, 1963, 1977, 2005 (twice, the October one being the worst in living memory), 2015 (with 600 people being evacuated from their homes), 2020 (with the collapse of the Bridge Hotel), etc. A record of 1782 notes damage to the bridges along the Mosspaul to Haremoss Turnpike (essentially the A7). Dramatic floods at Minto are reported in 1783 and 1789, and a torrential rain-storm in 1806. The flood of November 1938 swept away the Victoria Bridge and the Mansfield Bridge. The Slitrig can also rise rapidly, and perhaps even more dramatically. The most famous such event was the Great Flid of August 1767, when the river rapidly rose 22 feet (about 6.5 m) above its normal level, sweeping away many houses, as well as the old Corn Mill, and drowning 2 people. The Teviot flood of 1796 carried away part of the burial ground at Hassendean. Sir Walter Scott describes the flood of 1806, when the lower floor of Minto House was filled with water and trees and livestock sailed past his own house. This flood also devastated Rulewater, particularly at Bonchester Brigend. The 1806 flood was also bad around Denholm, sweeping away the bridge over the Dean Burn, and removing the remains of the burial ground at Hassendean. The flood of 29th July 1846 swept away Slitrig Crescent footbridge and its level is marked by a brass plaque in Towerdyska, with the inscription ‘Flood Mark July 1846’. over the Tower Knowe and down the Mill Port and water flowed down the High Street as far as the Round Close, forming streams to the Teviot down several closes. The worst damage was to the businesses on the Sandbed. The Teviot also overflowed, causing great damage over a wider area, and sweeping away iron railings at the Haugh. There was similar damage in Teviotdale, Rulewater (where the river was said to be 10–12 feet higher than normal and Hobshurn bridge was lost), the Slitrig valley (with Whitrope Toll House and stable washed away), Liddesdale (where some cottages were washed away) and elsewhere, with a rider drowning while returning from Langholm Common Riding. A stone in Newcastleton commemorates the flood there, where water poured down the main street. In 1862 part of the Haugh flooded overnight on the Friday of the Common Riding, making conditions extremely wet for the Saturday races and games. The year 1948 also saw a major flood throughout the Borders, about which there is a book, ‘The Great Borders Flood of 1948’ by Lawson Wood. The Teviot’s highest flow rate (since recording began in 1963) was 142.4 m³/s on 17th February 1997. The floods of early 2020 washed away part of Bridge House and devastated Newcastleton – ‘On Hawick burst the flood’s resistless sway, Plough’d the paved streets, and tore the walls away. floated high roofs, from whelming fabrics torn; While pillar’d arches down the wave were borne’ [JL].

flinders (flin-durz) n., pl., poet. splinters, smithereens – ‘...the next chain’d dore that they came at, They gard it a’ in flinders flee. With my fa ding, kfc.’ [CPM], ‘...he sall saufe the childer o’ the needle, an’ sall brik in flinders the oppresser’ [HSR].

Flintoff (flin-taf) n. Butler (18th C.) dance-master, who must have travelled around the Borders towns. In 1785 he is ‘Mr Flintiff (teacher of dancing)’ who paid the Hawick Council for renting the Town House for 2 months. In 1769 in Oxnam Parish he married Ann Rutherford and they had children John, Walter, Mary, Archibald, Susanna and Thomas Winterup.

flipe see flype

flird (flirld) n., arch. a flimsy and poor piece of fancy dress, anything insubstantial – ‘A thin flird’ [JoJ], pl., poet. vanities, vain finery – ‘Let manly worth doff the flyrds of folly’ [HSR] (also written ‘flyrd’).
Flodden Field

1 archbishop, 4 abbots, 12 earls, 17 Lairds, perhaps 400 knights and as many as 10,000 others. Borderers under Huntly and Hume played a significant role and suffered huge losses. Sir William Douglas and most of the Hawick men were also killed. One exception was John Chisholme, who returned with the family pennon, although his brother was killed. In the wake of Flodden the Borders was left with almost no defence against the ravages of Surrey and Dacre – ‘Sons of heroes slain at Flodden! Met to ride and trace our common’ [JH], ‘Scotia felt thine ire, O Oden! On the bloody field of Flodden . . . ’ [JH], ‘Green Flodden! on thy blood-stain’d head Descend no rain nor vernal dew: But still thou channel of the dead, May whitening bones they surface strew!’ [JL], ‘. . . I knew I had stayed from Flodden, and I wish that I were dead’ [RSC], ‘When our life looks at its Floddens, where cherished dreams lie low, And big, brave hopes, like burghers dead, are smitten by the foe’ [JYH]. Among the noblemen and landowners with local connections who were slain at the battle are: William, Lord Borthwick (possibly); Robert, son of Robert Chisholme of that Ilk; George Douglas, Master of Angus; Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig; Robert Elliot of Redheugh; Robert Erskine of Synton, Earl of Mar; John Hay, 2nd Lord Yester; Adam Hepburn, 2nd Earl of Bothwell; Sir David Home of Wedderburn; John Murray of Blackbarony; Sir Alexander Scott of Hassendean (possibly); John Scott of Haining; Sir Walter Scott of Howpastley; James Stewart of Traquair; and John Stewart of Minto (perhaps).

The Flooers o the Forest

The Battle of Flodden, and it thus effectively forms the first part of the Hornshole-inspired song. However, it has been seldom sung, in comparison to the familiar ‘Teribus’. The first edition was published in Kelso, and the 2nd by Robert Armstrong in 1824, with several changes. The 3rd was also printed by Armstrong in 1829, but does not bear Hogg’s name, while the 4th was printed by John Elder in 1836, and another by Kennedy’s in 1837, the last before Hogg’s death. The first 3 editions are all quite rare, and there may be no existing copy of the 1st. The song was revived for the 2013 Flodden quincentenary, sung by Michael Atkine.

The Flodden Memorial (thu-flod-den-me-mo-ree-ul) n. memorial on Flodden Field, erected in 1910. The Flodden Memorial Committee, representing both sides of the Border, was chaired by Sir George Douglas. The monument consists of a celtic cross of grey Aberdeen granite, 12 feet 6 inches high on a rough-hewn granite and concrete cairn. The inscription reads simply ‘Flodden 1513. To the brave of both nations. Erected 1910’. It is located on Piper’s Hill near Branxton.

flooter (floor) n. a flower – ‘And they may tell o’ valleys fair Bedeck’d wi’ gorgeous floo’ers’ [JEDM], ‘Gie me the heather floo’er . . . ’ [JoHa], ‘But ye canna see a’ that list o’ floo’ers on the photograph, says I’ [DH], ‘. . . For he’ll find nae ither sae leal and true As the floo’er o’ aa the glen’ [WL], ‘On Flodden’s field oor floo’ers they died . . . ’ [IWS], v. to flower, arch. to sew trimming into muslin or other cloth (also spelled ‘flo’er’, ‘floor’ and ‘flouer’).

flooreed (floor-ed) adj., arch. scabby, losing wool (of sheep) – ‘Flower’d, flour’d, adj. A term applied to sheep, when they begin to become scabby, and to lose their wool, Teviot.’ [JoJ].

the Flooer o Rankleburn (thu-floor-o-rang-kul-burn) n. nickname of Mary Scott.

The Flooers o the Forest (thu-floor-oor-s-the-forist, -flow-) n. ancient song whose words exists in 3 separate versions, written by Mrs. Patrick Cockburn (Alison Rutherford), Jean Elliot (of Minto) and Mrs. John Hunter. The tune is recorded in the early 17th century and may not originally have had words. It is also unclear whether the song originally had a connection with the battle of Flodden. Jean Elliot’s version of the words made the song a lament for the death of James IV and other Scotsmen at Flodden. It was published anonymously, and only identified with Elliot later. In Selkirk this version is known the Flooer o Yarrow

as ‘the Liltin’, and the tune is played after the Casting of the Colours. Alison Cockburn’s lyrics appear to be about a financial crisis, and were probably written earlier than Elliot’s (although not published until 1765). The song was in-mensely popular in the 19th century, being regularly sung in Hawick at the Colour Bussing and similar events. The tune is played internationally at funerals and remembrance ceremonies, where it is often referred to simply as ‘the Lament’ – ‘I’ve heard the lilting, at the yowe-milking, Lasses a-lilting before dawn o’ day: But now they are moaning on ilka green loaning; ‘The Flowers of the Forest are a’ wede away’’ [T].

the Flooer o Yarrow (flhu-floor-ô-yaw-rô, - flowr-) n. nickname for Mary Scott, popularised in a ballad of the same name. She was from Dry-hope Tower and married Walter Scott of Harden about 1576. She was mother of 6 sons and at least 4 daughters. It is also said that she raised another boy who was found in the spoil from a Cumberland raid (like ‘Whaup o the Rede), and grew to be a poet, composing some of the Border ballads – ‘Tis Yarrow’s fairest flower, who through the gloom Looks wistful for her lover’s dancing plume’ [JL]. ‘…Amang them aa there was name to narrow Auld Harden’s leddy, the ‘Flooer o’ Yarrow’’ [WL].

flooery (flooo-ree, floo-u-ree) adj. flowery –
‘And yonder is the Lover’s Lane And Lynwood’s

Floors Castle (flor-z-kaw-sul) n. castle near Kelso, built by John, 1st Duke of Roxburgh, between 1718 and 1740. It was designed by William Adam, and extended around 1839 by William Playfair. It is the home of the Duke and Duchess of Roxburgh, and the largest inhabited house in Scotland. It includes collections of art, porcelain, taxidermy and tapestries. James II was killed here when a cannon exploded in 1460, and it was ‘Greystoke’ in the Tarzan film of 1984. The entire estate is enclosed by a continuous high wall, with a few lodge houses, and contains terraced woodland and open parkland (also formerly ‘Fleurs’;
the origin of the name is probably just Old Enlish for ‘floor’ or ‘ground’ and first appears as ‘le fluris’ in 1516).

flooery (flooo-ree) adj. floury, covered with flour (also written ‘floury’).

cleric, known as ‘Florentius’, he was son of the Count of Holland, and also nephew of both King Malcolm IV and William I. He became Bishop of Glasgow in 1202, but resigned in 1207 before he was consecrated. He was also Chancellor of Scotland. He died in Zeeland. His seal bore the figure of a young man seated at a lectern with a book, with a rod of office in one hand, and has the words ‘SIGIL. FLOREN[TII GLAS]GUENSIS ELECTT’.

Florida (flooo-ri-da) n. farm in Liddesdale, situated just before Old Castleton on the B6357. Between the house and the river lies an earthwork, possibly a homestead of mediæval date, which lies partially in woods and has been partly eroded by the river. The old house of Dyeraw lay somewhere to the east in what is now forest. John Turnbull and family were there in at least 1841–
68. William Hislop was there in 1841 and John Scott and his family in 1851.

Flesh Burn (flesh-burn) n. stream joining the Leap Burn to form the Lang Burn near Langburnshielis, which then becomes the Slitrig. It is joined by Kiln Sike below Robert’s Linn and had several other waterfalls on burns that join it from the east. It marks the start (or end) of the Catrail (‘flesh’ is an old Scots word for boggy ground).

Fodderlee (fo-dur-lee) n. farms and general area on the east side of the Rule valley between Hallrule and Billerwell. David Shiel was tenant there in 1567. The lands there were acquired by Adam French from Jedburgh Abbey in 1569 and were split into the East and West farms in the 17th century. The lands were recorded as part of the Lordship of Jedburgh in 1587. John Shiel was there in 1586/7. In 1643 Helen Turnbull held lands there valued at £80 and James Turnbull £180. It was among lands whose superiority was inherited by daughters of George Scott (brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade) in 1670. In 1678 the land tax on £100 was paid by Mark Turnbull and on £80 by ‘the widow in otherlie’. The lands (or perhaps just their superiority) were among those inherited by William Kerr of Abbot-rule in 1680. Robert Kerr of Fodderlee was first recorded in 1685, and appears to have owned half of the lands. Mark Turnbull was tenant in the late 1600s. John Turnbull, John Kerr and George Scott were recorded as tenants there in 1694.
The east lands passed to Robert Kerr’s daughter Mary (who also married a Kerr) and then grandson Andrew. In 1757 it passed to Robert Thomson, whose mother was Margaret Kerr. Andrew Oliver, ‘Fodderleebrinks’, is recorded in 1784.
‘Fodderlee, Fodderlee-bank head, and Fodderlee-brinks’ are recorded in 1795 as parts of Hobkirk that are closer to Bedrule Kirk than their own kirk; these same lands were among those moved to Hobkirk when Abbotrule was suppressed. James Davidson was tenant there in 1797. The modern map shows Old Fodderlee, Easter Fodderlee and Wester Fodderlee, this last being closest to where the Fodderlee Burn joins the Rule Water. A report in 1836 describes how a cairn was removed near there ‘near to a place where tradition says a battle had been fought’ (it is ‘Fodderlie’ in 1567, ‘Foderley’ in 1589, ‘Foderley’ in 1587 and 1588, ‘Foderlie’ in 1643, ‘Fotherlie’ 1670, ‘fotherlie’ in 1678, transcribed ‘Foderlae’ in 1680, ‘Fotherlie’ in 1690, 1694 and 1707 and ‘Fatherlee’ in 1797; it is marked as just ‘Fodderlie’ on Gordon’s c. 1650 map and Blaen’s 1654 map; also written Fotherlie, see also Auld Fodderlee, Easter Fodderlelee and Wester Fodderlee).

Fodderlee Burn

(fo-dur-lee-burn) n. stream flowing into the Rule Water from the south, past Abbotrule. A memorial plaque by the road marks the site of the Sclaterford, where there was a skewmish between a large English raiding party and some local forces in 1513 (also spelled ‘Fodder-lie’ etc.; the origin is probably simply ‘the fodder meadow’).

fodge (foj) adj., arch. a fat and clumsy person.

fog (fog) n., arch. moss, particularly as used for thatching or for packing between slates – ‘Item for leading the slates . . . Item for fog gathering and ‘. . . there was a fold dyke built on the Common by the possessors of Fenwick, which dyke was levelled by order of the Magistrates and rendered useless’ [C&L1767] (probably an anglicised version of fail).

Folepul (føl-pul) n. former lands in Liddesdale recorded on a rental roll from about 1376, and listed under the 'Foresta' section. They are valued at 40 pence. Their location is unknown (this could be a transcription error, although it is unclear for what). It could be the same place listed as 'Fopillis' in the 1541 roll, when it was valued at 2 shillings, but vacant. It was possibly related to Fawhope Knowe.

Forbes (förbz) n. Archibald (1869–1937) son of John, he was born at Wilton Lodge. He took over the running of the nurseries business from his father in 1909. He was also President of the Hawick Horticultural Society. He married Eleanor Snowdon Currie and their children included John (1900–61). Sir Arthur (1623–95) 1st Earl of Granard, son of Sir Arthur of Castle Forbes in Ireland. He commanded a Royalist Scottish force in the 1650s. In December 1653 he came down from the north with 80–100 men and with Andrew Kerr.
Forbes’ Nursery

of Sunlaws and Chatto as prisoner, and stopped at Borthwickbrae. Pursued by an English Commonwealth force, they were easy to follow in the snow and there was a skirmish at Philip in the upper Borthwick valley. The English were victorious, but Forbes managed to escape, apparently recuperating in a cottage near Glasgow. He later fought for the loyalist cause in the north in 1654, and was captured at Glenlyon. He returned to Ireland, was made Earl and joined the cause of William III. He is buried in Sligo. John (1841/2–1909) proprietor of the Buccleuch Nurseries on Slitrig Crescent. Born in Aberfeldy, Perthshire, he came to Hawick in 1867 as gardener at Wilton Lodge for David Pringle, later becoming tenant of the gardens. He started up his own business in 1870 at the Dovemount Nurseries, then after about ten years moved into larger premises on Slitrig Crescent, the land granted by the Duke of Buccleuch. Named the Buccleuch Nurseries, they became famous throughout Britain, and were a prominent sight from the railway. The gardens received a royal warrant and the name was changed to the Royal Nurseries in 1907. It then became a private limited company in 1908. He won many awards for his floral displays. He was Councillor for Slitrig Ward for 3 years, and long involved with the running of St. Andrew’s Church. John (1900–61) son of Archibald and grandson of John, who founded Forbes Nursery. He married Maggie Toshack (1897–1980) and Lizzie Addison McEwan (1898–1940). His children included Archibald (‘Archie’, 1928–87). He was Master of Lodge 111 in 1929/30 and President of the Callants’ Club in 1938. Lillias Magdalene nee Scott (1918–2013) daughter of composer Francis George Scott, she was born in Glasgow. She was known as a singer, and published poetry over about a 75 year period, some of it in Scots. An autobiographical collection, ‘View from the Bench: My Life in Poetry’, appeared in 2011. She firstly married composer Erik Chisholm, and after his death married clarinetist John Forbes. Forby (for-bi) adv. besides, in addition, moreover – ‘he played rugby an fitba an din rinnin forby’, ‘…Wad border on a muckle crime, Forby the skaith’ [JR], ‘…an’ ther is nane apon yirth that I desyre forbye thee’ [HSR], ‘Forbye this he refuseth the taabernakle o’ Joseph …’ [HSR], ‘Forbye, there was naither a bus nor a chud in the lift to make a shadow’ [BCM1880], ‘…selfin

Ford (ford) n. Brian (1936/7– ) raised in Teviot Road, he attended Trinity and Hawick High Schools. First working as a plumber and frameworker, he did National Service with the Queen’s Own Irish Hussars, where he excelled at rugby, shooting and boxing. He then worked in local knitwear mills, moving to a job in York in 1959, but soon returned to Hawick, working at several mills, including 20 years at Lyle & Scotts, then opening his own knitwear shops and finishing with a job at Hawick Hosiery. He married Helen Murray in 1960 and they had 3 children, Beverly, Brian and Graham. They mostly lived at Slitrig Crescent. In 1983 he won the veterans’ sprint at the New Year meeting at Meadowbank.

He and his wife celebrated their diamond wedding anniversary in 2020. Mary Helen ‘Helen’ nee Murray (1941/2–2020) brought up in Allars Crescent, she attended Drumlanrig and Hawick High Schools. She started working as a collar linker at Turner & Rutherford’s in 1957 and in 1960 married Brian. Their children are Beverley (b.1966), Brian (b.1968) and Graham (b.1970). After raising her family she returned to work at Glenhowe, retiring in 2004. She was involved with the Wilton Dean W.R.I. and the Bright-Eyed Daughters’ Association, and was a great Common Riding supporter. She served for many years as a Community Councillor and took up running at the age of 55. She and Brian celebrated their 60th wedding anniversary in 2020, but she succumbed to the coronavirus shortly afterwards. Her features are captured on the ‘Return’ statue at the Tower Knowe. W. Inglis (20th C.) 6th Secretary of the Congregational Kirk.

forden (for-dur) adv., arch. furthermore, in addition – ‘... and forder, vnder the payne of periurie, diffamatioun, and neuer to haiff fayth nor credit in the law...’ [SB1585], ‘... and forder gif ony persone or personis allegis or acclames ony rycht of the said tenement of land...’ [SPB1579], ‘I will dosyre yow to spare me and nocht to trubill your self and me farder’ [SPB1579] (also written ‘farder’; see the later forder).

fords (fördz) n. before the erection of the Teviot Bridge in 1741, the river had to be forded, or when undeforable it was crossed by ferry at the Coble Pool. The main fords were at the foot of Walter’s Wynd to enter town through the North Port or near Parkdaill (sometimes called the Howe Ford) connecting to a footpath which went uphill to join the main road at Longbaulk. There are still fords connecting to a footpath which went uphill to join the main road at Longbaulk. At the bottom of Burnfoot, Newmill, Priesthaugh there are still fords unfordable it was crossed by ferry at the Coble Bridge in 1741, the river had to be forded, or when ‘farder’; see the later furder). forepairt (för-pär’) n., arch. the earlier portion of a period of time (noted by E.C. Smith).

the Foreraw see the Fore Raw

the Fore Raw (thu-för-raw) n. row of pended tenements that stood on the south-east side (i.e. left hand side on the way up the hill) of what is now Drumlanrig Square. The entrance to William Lockie’s Mill was there. It also once held the Teribus Arms and the West-end Mission (it is ‘Front row’ in Pigot’s 1837 directory; presumably it was ‘Fore’ relative to St. Mary’s Kirk, with the Back Row being further away).

Fore Raw (för-raw) n. Fore Row, name used for a row of houses in Wilton Dean on the 1841 census. By 1851 it was known as ‘Front Row’, and was numbered from 1 to 6. This referred to a block of houses on the north side of the Dean Road, where it meets the Overhall Road. The name distinguished it from Burn Row, which was lower down, and Upper Row, which was up the small track above the green. The names were probably never in general use and disappeared by the time of the 1861 census.
foresait (fu-r-sä) n., arch. the front seating area, front part of a pew or gallery – ‘...anent ye prece-dencie in ye samien in ye foresait of ye loft att the head thereof’ [PR1715].

forest (fo-rist) n., arch. a preserve, a tract of land, often bare and hilly, upon which deer were traditionally hunted – ‘...‘Trees’, retorted the gillie; “wha ever heard o’ trees in a forest?”’ [RB] (note, the former use of this word did not imply trees!).

Forest (fo-rist) n. Jean (17th/18th C.) Hawick woman who ran an inn in the late 1600s and early 1700s. She was listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. She was also listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. In 1702 she was fined for allowing people to be drinking in her house after 10 o’clock at night. Her name is written ‘Jeane Forrest’ and ‘Jane Forrest’.

foreстair (for-stär) n., arch. an outside staircase at the front of a building – ‘A conspicuous feature of many of the dwellings was the ‘out’ or ‘forestairs’ projecting onto the streets’ [V&M]. Many of the examples on the High Street were removed around 1781 when the streets were paved, and more were removed by order of the road trustees, with the Council paying more than £50 to have the work done. One of last sets in Hawick was removed in 1884 when the old Town Hall was demolished. Perhaps the last example is in St. Mary’s Place – ‘Paid expense of fo stairs, taken away by order of trustees, 55 18 l’ [BR1792] (also ootstair).

forestall (for-stawl) v., arch. to buy goods before they reach market in order to resell them at a higher price – ‘Thomas Howison, merchant, is fined for forestalling two bosils of beir from the Lady Newtoune, and ane from Gladstanes’ [1699], ‘Four Hawick fleshers are fined £40 Scots each for forestalling the sheep market, by buying of sheep and lambs, and instantly, for gain, reselling them to the butchers of Jedburgh’ [BR1792].

foreستaler (for-staw-lur) n., arch. someone who profits by buying up goods before they get to market in order to increase the price and resell them – ‘Various persons are fined ‘for breach of the proclamation of His Majesty’s Privy Council, against regrating of victuals and forestallers’ [JW1699].

the Forest Club (thu-for-rist-klub) n. dining and coursing club, based around Selkirk, also sometimes known as the ‘Ettrick Forest Club’. It was established in 1788 by 13 lairds of the Ettrick Forest, modelled on similar clubs in Edinburgh. Members met once a month (outside winter) in the County Hotel, Selkirk. Coursing was introduced in 1794 and lasted for 60 years. Sir Walter Scott (of Abbotsford) was a member. Michaela Reid wrote a history of the club in 2000.

Forester (fo-rees-tur) n. Alan (16th C.) tenant of ‘Syskett’ in 1541. This was probably in the far south of Roxburghshire and he was probably related to the Foresters who possessed neighbouring lands. Andrew (16th C.) recorded in 1541 as the tenant of Ryleknowe, near the southern tip of Roxburghshire. Probably the same Andrew was also tenant of ‘Avirholme’ along with Lancelot. He was probably related to Simon, who was tenant of the nearby Burnfoot. Henry (18th C.) farmer at Langraw in Castleton Parish according to the 1788–94 Horse Tax Rolls. James (15th/16th C.) recorded in a 1510 list of associates of Robert Elliot of Redheugh who received respite for their crimes. His name appears as ‘Forestare’. In 1515/6 he was recorded in another remission to Robert Elliot of Redheugh and others, where he is listed as ‘in Greenhauche’. This could be Greenhaugh in Northumberland, but seems more likely to be Greena in Liddesdale. In 1516 he was also part of the remission given to William Elliot of Larriston and his associates. James ‘Rowie’s Jamie’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1603 among a gang of Elliots, Armstrongs and others who had raided ‘Sewingdene’ in 1601, stealing livestock and goods and injuring several people. He is listed being ‘called Row’s Jame’ and may be related to Simon Elliot of Binks, whose servant was leader of the gang. John (14th/15th C.) cleric of Glasgow Diocese. He was Archdeacon of Glasgow 1409–14 and is recorded as Archdeacon of Teviotdale in 1418. John (16th C.) recorded in 1532 as ‘Johnny Forrestar’. He is listed along with Sym (to whom he was surely related), Croziers and Elliots, who were the subject of a commission ordered by the King to capture them, for the killing of Thomas Dalglish and Adam Turnbull in Teviotdale. He could be the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John ‘Shake Buckler’ (16th C.) listed among the Liddesdale men denounced as rebels in 1535 for a raid on the farm at Craik. His name is givn as ‘John Forrestare, called Schaik-buklar’. His servant Ninian Gray is also listed, so he must have been a man of fair substance. John (16th C.) listed in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale as tenant of Greenhaughshaw. It seems reasonable to assume he was related to James in Greenaugh
the Foresters forfochen

(his son perhaps), and that he was related to the tenants of nearby farms with the same surname, namely Alan, Andrew, Lancelot, Simon and William. John (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1602 as ‘good-son’ to Simon Armstrong of Whitaugh. This means he was either son-in-law or step-son of Simon, suggesting that either Simon has married a Forester or his daughter had. He was part of a group of about 20 Armstrongs and Elliots who attacked Hallrule, killing a shepherd there and stealing about 120 sheep. John (17th C.) resident at Hudshouse in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. John of Stanegarthside (17th/18th C.) nephew of Nicholas, from whom he inherited ‘Greina, Purviven and Burnemouth’ in Liddesdale in 1693. Lancelot (16th C.) joint tenant of ‘Avirholme’, along with Andrew, in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. Robert of Stanegarthside (d.1598) buried at Staplegordon Church in Cumbria. He may be the ‘Forster’ of Stanegarthside who killed Williami Armstrong near where the Kershope Burn meets the Liddel. Simon ‘Sim’ (16th C.) recorded in 1532 as ‘Symme Forestar’. He is listed along with Johnnie (to whom he was surely related), Croziers and Elliots, who were the subject of a commission ordered by the King to capture them, for the killing of Thomas Dalgleish and Adam Turnbull in Teviotdale. He was probably related to the other contemporaries of that family. He resigned Cavers in 1467, with the new priest, previous appointments (including presumably his) being made by the monks of Melrose.

William (15th C.) held the benefice of Cavers Parish from about 1450. He could have been from the Torwood or perhaps Corstorphine branches of that family. He resigned Cavers in 1467, with the Pope issuing an edict for the appointment of the new priest, previous appointments (including presumably his) being made by the monks of Melrose. William (16th C.) recorded in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale as tenant of Bennetholm. He was probably related to the other contemporary Foresters. William (17th C.) listed at Harwood among ‘The poor in Hauick Parioch’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls (also written ‘Forrester’; once interchangeable with ‘Foster’).

the Foresters (θu-fo-rees-turz) n. mutual aid society, once very active in Hawick. The Ancient Order of Foresters has its origins in the 18th century, and was established in its modern form in 1834. As an example of a ‘friendly society; it was very important in providing a form of insurance for workers. Individual branches were known as ‘courts’, the Hawick one being ‘Flower of Teviotdale’, No. 5771. Office bearers would wear a sash and the organisation used to turn out in local parades. The Roll of Honour of local members who fell in the wars was formerly in Orrock Church Halls and is now in the Museum. John Halliday wrote an address to be spoken at the Annual Anniversary of Court Teviotdale – ‘For arms, let them have friendship, love, and truth; And in the cause be eloquent each mouth, As advocates of peace, and exile’s barristers, And thus let them be call’d – The Order of Foresters’[JoHa].

the Foresters’ Hall (θu-fo-rees-turz-hal) n. hall on O’Connell Street, run by the Hawick branch of the Foresters, occupying the lower floor beneath the British Legion, formerly being part of Johnstone’s tea rooms. It was used for dance lessons, prayer meetings and other social functions, and closed around 1992.

fore-supporter (för-su-pur-tim) n., arch. evening, literally meaning the period between teatime and suppertime (E.C. Smith describes this as ‘probably now obsolete’ and ‘one of the few Scottish instances of identifying a period of the day by reference to a meal’).

Forkins (for-kinz) n. farm south of Hobkirk, near where the Wauchope, Harwood and Catlee Burns meet to form the Rule Water, on the west side of the bridge. It was also formerly known as ‘Forkins of Unthank’. There was once a blacksmith’s there, and in the 17th century there was an inn at this location, in use until the early 19th century; its remains lie among trees on the east side of the bridge, near the entrance lodge to Wolfelee. It was formerly on the main route from Hawick to Newcastle, until the new road was built via Bonchester Bridge in about the 1820s; this was also part of a drove road. There was also a local police station there in the latter part of the 19th century. The lands were sold by Thomas Scott of Stonedige to William Elliot of Wolfelee in 1757. Walter Amos was wright there in the late 18th century (also called ‘the Forkins’ and sometimes written ‘Forkings’; it was ‘Forkons’ on Stobie’s 1770 map; the origin of the name is probably from the division in the river, rather than the road, but there are no early records of the name).

the Forkins (thu-for-kinz) n. name used for the area where the Hermitage Water meets the Liddel Water in Liddesdale.

Forkins (for-kinz) n. former farmstead in the upper Borthwick valley. It is marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map, near where the Howpasley Burn joins, close to where the modern turns towards Craik.
forlane (for-län) pp., poet. forgotten, set aside – ‘The Lord redeems the saul o’ his servents; an’ nane o’ thame that trust in him sall be forlane’ [HSR].

Forman (for-min) n. Sir John of Davine (d.bef. 1516) son of Nicholas. His brother Andrew held the Archbishoppirc and Primacy of Scotland, and was said to be one of the instigators for the Battle of Flodden. In 1502 he and his brother were granted the ward of the lands of Rutherford by James IV and he was one of the ‘tutors’ appointed to Helen, heiress of Rutherford. He was Sergeant Porter to James IV, and was knighted in 1503. In fact he married Helen Rutherford, who inherited the lands of Rutherford, Wells and Edgerston after the death of her brother Richard. Along with his wife, he was inflected in these lands by the King in 1505 and 1506. In 1504 he (when referred to as ‘of Ruthirfurde’) was pardoned for being an accessory to the murder of Thomas Rutherford in Jedburgh Abbey. The lands of Rutherford, Wells and others were confirmed to him and his wife by James IV in 1511. He was one of the few Scots taken prisoner at the Battle of Flodden. He probably had a daughter who married William Gouraly of Kincraig. John (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He witnessed baptism in 1699 and 1702 for tailor Walter Riddell (both along with Baxter John ‘Weelands’). In 1705 he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Michael Scot. In 1706 he married Margaret ‘Weelands’, who was also from Hawick Parish, and their son John was baptised in 1707. It is recorded in 1711 that the ‘half Ducatoo and twenty shillings Scots piece’ that he ‘pawnded’ to guarantee his marriage had not been claimed and so was given to the poor fund. It is unclear whether this donation was simply the intent, or whether something happened to the couple in the intervening years. They had a son John in 1707.

Nicholas (d.1478/9) succeeded as Archdeacon of Teviotdale on the death of Patrick Hume in 1478. However, he died within only a few months, before he could be confirmed. Patrick (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He married Agnes Turnbull and their children included: Patrick (b.1702); Agnes (b.1707); and Janet (b.1709). The witnesses in 1709 were glover John Scott and Patrick Angus. Robert (19th/20th C.). His wife funded the Forman Hall in Roberton, dedicated to his memory and that of her great-nephew, who was killed in WW1 (also written ‘Foreman’).

Forman Hall (for-min-hal) n. community hall in Roberton, situated approximately opposite the church. It was designed by J.P. Alison and built in 1922/3. It was funded by Mrs. Forman of Bothwickshiel in memory of her husband Robert, and also her great-nephew, Lt. Campbell Ross, who was killed at Flanders in 1917. It also contains a roll of honour for locals who fell in the Great War (sometimes incorrectly written ‘Foreman Hall’).

foroutin (for-row-tin) prep., arch. without – ‘… the said landis of Qhitchester to be haldin of the said William … foroutyn ony langer delay … ’ [SB1470].

Forrest (fo-rist) n. Rev. Alexander of Huntlaw (d.c.1658) minister at Hassendean. He graduated from St. Andrews in 1603 and was ordained at Kailzie in 1613, then translated to Hassendean later in the same year. He was rebuked by the Presbytery in 1615 for ‘receiving the gudwife of Sintoun to the communion, notwithstanding he understood she was ane contemner both of her awin min. (Mr Alex. Hog, Ashkirk) and of the Word out of his mouth’ (whether this was an indication of religious dissent or a purely personal matter is unclear). He was one of the 55 ministers who signed the ‘Liberties of the Kirk’ protest to Parliament in 1617 and gave £20 towards building the library at the University of Glasgow in 1636. In 1626 there is a ‘letter of deliverance’ against him in favour of Thomas Turnbull of Knowe and Walter Scott of Ancrum, probably relating to a debt or disputed teinds. In 1633 he was owed £333 6s 8d for his stipend in the inventory.
of the deceased Earl of Buccleuch, as well as £9 12s for the communion. In 1649 he was ‘invaded with a drawn sword’ by one of his parishioners, Robert Hislop. In 1655 (although this date may be an error) his son was served heir to his lands of Huntlaw. He appears to have continued as minister at Hassendean until 1658 and died before 1665, when the Presbytery met to decide what payment was due to his son. He was recorded in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls (although probably deceased by then), among owners of lands that were then in Hassendean Parish, when he paid for lands valued at £66 13s 4d; this was Huntlaw, which remained with his family for another couple of generations. He married Margaret Clerk and their children included William of Huntlaw, and Alexander, who became minister at Kirkton. In 1665 his son William was served heir to his lands of Huntlaw. Archibald of Huntlaw (who rented Huntlaw to Thomas Turnbull of Knowe in 1703) was probably his grandson and Agnes, who married George Minto, was his great-granddaughter.

Rev. Alexander (c.1622–83) son of Alexander, minister at Hassendean. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1642 and became minister at Kirkton in 1664. He remained minister there until his death, and sat on the local (Jedburgh Presbytery) at least in 1666. He is recorded in 1665 repaying the money owed by William Forrest (possibly his brother) to Walter Clerk. He paid the land tax on £66 13s 4d for Huntlaw in 1678. His ‘insight and plenishing, with librarie, and abuziments of bodie’ were estimated to be about £200. He married Anna Douglas (d.1681), whose will is recorded in 1682. Their children were: Archibald; Richard; William (became a tailor’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1691); Margaret (married James Mirrielies in Edinburgh in 1702); and Anna. His will is recorded in 1683. James (17th C.) one of the tenants in Mervinslaw according to a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. His name was given as ‘forsett’ (which could feasibly be another surname, such as Forsyth). Julie (1968– ) lawn and indoor bowler from Hawick, who took up bowls from a young age, and won the Teviotdale Indoor Ladies Singles 10 times between 1990 and 2007. Outdoors she won the Scottish Triples in 1997, the British Isles Triples in 1998 and the Scottish Pairs in 1998. But she has excelled mostly indoors. She won the Scottish Indoor Pairs in 1992, 1994 and 2008, the Triples in 1993 and 2010, and the Singles in 2001, 2003, 2008, 2009, 2010, 2013, 2019 and 2020. She was also Scottish Masters champion 3 years in a row, 2001–2003, and British Isles Singles champion in 2004, 2010, 2011 and 2019. She represented Scotland in the 1998 Commonwealth Games. She won the Mixed Pairs World Championship in 2002 2003 and 2013 and the World Indoor Singles title in 2004, 2010, 2013 and 2014. She was named Senior Sports Personality of the Year by Roxburgh Sports Council in 2004 and presented with a silver quaich at a special ceremony in the Town Hall the same year. She was also voted Hawick’s Citizen of the Year in 2004. In 2007 she was inducted into the Scottish Borders Hall of Fame and is an Honorary Life Member of the Scottish Indoor Bowling Association. Thomas (14th/15th C.) recorded as being ‘de Foresta’ in 1404 when he witnessed the confirmation of the grant of the Church of Cavers to Melrose Abbey. He was licentiate in decrees and Rector of the Parish of Southdean. Walter Torrie ‘Wattie’ (1880–1917) born in Kelso, son of a fishing tackle maker. He was a gifted sportsman, playing rugby and being ambidextrous at cricket. He moved from Kelso R.F.C. to Hawick R.F.C. and was first capped for Scotland along with Hawick’s Willie Kyle in 1903. He was full-back for Scotland for a couple of years until he broke his collar bone in a Hawick versus Gala match. During WWI he served at Gallipoli, was awarded the Military Cross, and was promoted to Major. He died leading his men in an attack during the Second Battle of Gaza. William of Huntlaw (17th C.) son of Rev. Alexander, minister at Hassendean. In 1665 he was served heir to his father’s 10-shilling land of Huntlaw in Hassendean Parish. He is recorded as ‘in Huntlaw’ in a record of 1666 listing landowners in Hassendean Parish (sometimes spelled ‘Fforest’ in earlier records).

Forster (for-stur) n. Andrew (16th C.) listed in 1581/2 among the men accused by the Countess of Bothwell of raiding her lands at Ellrig. He is described as ‘Andro Forster, callit Craicrrop, baneist Englishman’, and was an accomplice of the Armstrongs of Whithaugh. He was declared a rebel after not appearing to answer the charge. He could be related to the ‘Andro Forster’ who was recorded in 1541, accused of being involved in raids into England in which men were killed. George (15th/16th C.) witness in 1497 for a document relating to the lands of Robert Elliot of Redheugh. Like the others, he was probably from Liddesdale. Sir John (d.1602) younger son of Thomas of Adderstone. He became Constable of Bamburgh Castle and later held lands around Alnwick. He was part of an English force that sacked southern Scotland in 1557 and was Warden of the English Middle March by 1559/60. He was Deputy Governor of Berwick and also Deputy Warden of the East Marches in 1563. He escorted Mary Queen of Scots to Berwick. He was also Keeper of Tyndale and Redesdale. He and George Heron of Chipchase supported the Regent Moray on attacks on Liddesdale in 1569. He accompanied Sussex and Hunsdon on the raid into Teviotdale in 1570, when the Hawick folk burned the thatch themselves: he personally led the ‘horsmen too burne the townes and vyllages adjoynyng’ He was the Warden of the Middle March during the Raid of the Redeswire in 1575 (with his name being recorded as ‘Sir George Foster’ in the ballad), when he was taken prisoner and held for a few days in Dalkeith. There are several letters from him in 1576 to the Deputy Warden for West Teviotdale, William Douglas of Bonjedward. He was still English Warden in 1584 when he and Lord Scrope led a raiding force of 7,000 men that invaded Liddesdale, taking the tower at Larriston and capturing 18 prisoners. After harrying the valley, he received a bond of assurance from the chiefs of Liddesdale (who spoke for most of the Elliots, Armstrongs and others). In 1595/6 he got the heads of several families to sign a bond of assurance to try to end the feuds existing between 25 English families and ‘the Ellotes, Armestrongs, Crosers, Nixsons, Nobles, Larences, Hendersons, Batysons, Symsons and Lyttles’ in Scotland. It is said that he was challenged by a laird of Rulewater to a jousting match, which took place at the ‘Justin Haugh’; he was badly injured and laid under a bush to recover, this field being known as ‘Foster’s Bush’. He married Jane Radclyffe, heiress of Blanchland. He had several daughters and was succeeded by his (probably illegitimate) son Nicholas. Robert ‘Hob’s Robin’ (16th C.) English fugitive from Bewcastle who fled to the Scottish side. He was described in a letter from Thomas Wharton in 1541, along with Adam, as ‘grete offendres agaynst Inglishmen and Scotishmen’. In 1542 his men burned ‘the Cassihill, Reyhilles in West Tevedall’, stealing livestock and taking 2 prisoners: this may be one of the nearby Castlehills, although it is unclear where ‘Reyhilles’ may have been. A few days later his men burned ‘Cromokhilles’ in West Teviotdale, which is surely Crumhaughhill. Their father ‘Hob’ was warded in Cockermouth Castle in 1541, but the Captain of Carlisle Castle would not take him. Roland (16th C.) probably a brother of Sir John. He was one of the assistants to the English Warden and served as Captain of Wark Castle. In 1565 he wrote to Bedford, describing the ambush of the Scots by the Elliots at Ewes Doors. He is probably the ‘Rowie Forrester’ recorded in 1569, when Archibald Armstrong of Mangerton, Martin Elliot of Braudie and Lance Armstrong of Whitaugh gave assurances to him ‘that thai sall mak obedience according to the rest of the cuntre’ (see also Foster).

Forster’s Buss (for-sturz-bus) n. former name for a field between Bonchester Bridge and Bonchester Hill, a little above the flat ground once known as ‘Jeistins’-haugh’. The name is said to have been because this is where an Englishman, Forster, was killed in combat.

forsuik (for-sik, -sük) pp., arch. forsook (this was the past tense form, while the past participle was more usually ‘forsaken’).

forsuth (for-sooth) adv., arch. truly, in truth – ‘...not yet that for’t they’ll hae to pay, When shoon comes to need soloyn’ [JoHa], ‘A’m no for’t at aa’, ‘...Resolved to clutch his ill-got store Though he should roast for’t evermore’ [RDW], ‘Ye’re in for’t now lad, ye’ll no can rin away sae readilie on the sea’ [WNK], ‘Ah’ve a’mer aud for’t’, ‘Aweel, maister sailor, if ee sweer tae that Aw’ll take eer word for’t ...’ [JEDM], ‘I’d juist get to some place afore there was ony need for’t’ [DH], ‘Ah weel, they were warmed, they maun suffer for’t noo, The auld toon is fair doon the hole’ [WL].

for that (for-th-at) prep., arch. because, since – ‘For that yt ys neidfull and merytabelle to ber wytnes to the suthfastnes ...’ [SB1431], for the time (for-thu-tím) adv., arch. at the present time, from now – ‘...and that without consent of the baylyeas of the said burgh succes for the tymé’ [BR1699].

for ti (for-ti) prep. in order to, to – ‘And for tae keep him frae the cauld ...’ [JSB], ‘Then the lasses began to the barn for to thrang’ [JoHa], ‘...Wad tempt o’o for tae jounk the schule and seek the flooery braes’ [VV], ‘The old farmer, ‘Tattie Willie’, wouldnae pay me for tae drive a pair so we had tae move’ [TH], ‘A body was need ti ken’d off leike as Wattie Laidlaw kenn’d cet, for ti tell owre, off-luif, aa its dambrod-checkeet story’ [ECS], ‘...an bocht a wheen picter-postcairds for ti send away up Inglend’ [ECS] (this use of ‘for’ is redundant in standard English; also written ‘for tae’).

Fortun

Fortun (for-tun) n., arch. Fortune, chance personified – ‘An so it is that A hie thae thochts ti faa back on gin Fortun takes a pick at iz ...’ [ECS].

the Forty Fits (thu-for'-ee-fits) n. popular name for the track leading from Calaburn farm to Whitehaughmoor etc., off the road north of Whitehaugh. A continuation of this road leads towards Shielwood Loch. It is marked ‘drove road’ on the Ordnance Survey map, and may well have been such, although the nearby drove road of which we have a description passed more directly from Whitehaugh to the ‘Power Road Ends’. The name probably derives from the dykes on either side being about 40 feet apart.

the Forty Thiefs Bus (thu-for'-ee-theefz-bus) n. humorous name sometimes used for the minibus used at the Common Riding to transport the Committee members from the Hut to the Moor.

foryeild (for-yeeld) v., poet. to repay, recom pense – ‘The Lord rewairdet me akordin’ til my richteousniss; akordin’ til the cleenniss o’ my han’is he heth foryeildet me’ [HSR].

Foster (fos-tur) n. Abraham ‘Abie’ (16th/17th C.) tenant in Greena who was accused in 1623 along with Hob of stealing sheep belonging to Gilbert Elliott of Stobs from Kershope. He was ordered to be banished. He may be the same ‘Abraham Foster in Grenehall’ listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605; Sim ‘in Grenehall’ was also listed and hence presumably related. Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (18th C.) housemaid at Branzholme in 1791, when she worked for Adam Ogilvie. Sir George see Sir John Forster. Gilbert ‘Gib’ of Foulshiels (16th C.) named in 1590 along John Elliot of Heuchhouse and Martin’s Clem Crozier. They were accused of stealing livestock and a detailed list of items from a servant of Sir John Forster. He was surely related to John of Foulshiels. Helen (19th C.) charged with the murder of her daughter Betsy at the Slitrig in 1867. They lived at Catherine Scott’s boarding house on the Loan. Henry (17th C.) recorded as ‘Harie forrester’ when he paid the land tax on £420 for Greena in Castleton Parish in 1678. He was probably descended from earlier Fosters in Greena. James (15th/16th C.) accused in 1502, along with William Elliot, of stealing a horse from David Brown, out of Edinburgh. Their surety was William Turnbull ‘de lahope’ (possibly Langhope). Jean (17th C.) resident of North Synton in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor’. John (16th C.) listed as ‘younger, of Fouleschelis’ in 1581, among Ellios and Armstrongs complaining about crimes committed by the Scotts and their allies. He could be related to the John ‘Forster’ recorded in 1541, accused of being involved with raids in which Englishmen were killed. John (16th C.) son of ‘Meikle Rowie’ of Greenaugh. He is recorded in 1583 among a large group of men led by William of Kynmont into Tyndale. John (17th C.) resident of Ashikirk Parish. His daughter Janet was baptised in 1647. John (b.1771/2) horse-trainer from England. He lived at Kirkgate and Kirkyard (i.e. St. Mary’s Place) in 1841 and 1851. His wife was Mary, and their children included John and Jean. Law (16th/17th C.) resident of Greena in 1611 he is listed as ‘in Grenehall’ among men who failed to appear at court in Jedburgh. It is unclear what the forename ‘Law’ might be. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘callit Foulscellis’ in 1623 when he and Abie Foster in Greena were accused of stealing sheep belonging to Gilbert Elliott of Stobs from Kershope. He was ordered to be banished. His lands were probably Foulshiels in Liddesdale. He was probably related to the earlier Gib and John of Foulshiels. Robert (17th/18th C.) miller in Synton Mill. He married Agnes Donaldson and their children, baptised in Ashkirk Parish, included: Andrew (b.1701); and Margaret (b.1703). Robert (18th/19th C.) recorded as farmer at Leaugh in 1836 when he was head of household in Castleton Parish for the first time. He was still there in 1837, but disappeared after that. He was perhaps son of the labourer recorded in Bygate and Upperraw 1835–41. Roland ‘Meikle Rowie’, (16th C.) tenant in Greenaugh. In 1583 his son John was listed as part of a large group under William of Kynmont who raided Tyndale. Roland ‘Rowie’, ‘Ower the Moss’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1623 when he was found guilty of stealing from several farms. He stole 20 sheep from Myredykes, 20 sheep from ‘Callshiels’ and a horse from Chapelhill. He was ordered to be hanged for these crimes. Simon ‘Sim’ (16th/17th C.) listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605. He was recorded as ‘Sym Foster in Grenehall’ and listed along with men from Liddesdale and Eskdale. Abraham ‘in Grenehall’ was also listed. William of Greena (16th C.) recorded in 1583 when it was said he had a daughter who had married Englishman Hob Foster of Kershope. William of Fowlesheils (16th C.) signed the 1584 bond of assurance with the English Wardens, on behalf of his ‘bairnes and servands’. His name is listed along with many Elliots of Liddesdale, and is recorded as ‘larde of Fowlesheils’. William (16th/17th C.) recorded in Langhaugh in 1611 when Roger Scott, Captain of Hermitage, was cautioner for him in Jedburgh. William (17th C.) recorded in 1642 as brother of the deceased James in Greena. This was on a long list of thieves of the Border who were to be tried. He may be the same man as ‘Weilliam Foster, called Rossis Will’ on a list of ‘mostroopers’ (i.e. men branded as thieves) in about 1648. William Air (1801–62) from Coldstream, he worked as a shoemaker, later moving to Glasgow. He is remembered for the verse that he published, especially those relating to angling contributed to ‘Whistle-Binkie’. He was a friend of the Ettrick Shepherd, and shared with him a love of country sports (see also Forster).

Foster’s Bush (fos-turz-bush) n. popular name for a field lying near the Justin Haugh, perhaps now part of Bonchester village. It is said that the English Warden Sir John Foster took part in a jousting challenge there and was unhorsed and wounded by one of the lairds of Rulewater. His supporters laid him under a bush to recover, hence the name of the field. Tancred states that it was still known by this name in the early 20th century.

fot (fōt) n., arch. a footless sock used in wet or snowy weather – ‘A champ that turns foats an cuittiekins soappin-wat’ [ECS] (also spelled ‘foat’; usually plural; cf. fottie).

fother (fo-thur) n., arch. fodder, food for livestock, v., arch. to feed cattle or horses, humorously applied to feeding people, to cater – ‘…a richt toon an big eneuch ti fother an fend for fremd folk an gangrels’ [ECS].

Fotherlie (fo-thur-lee) n. variant of Fodderlee.

fottie (fo-te, fo’-ee) n., arch. a child’s stocking or woollen boot, booties – ‘And ye’se get fotties for yer feet At the Big Bazaar’ [JT], someone whose trousers, stockings or boots are too wide (cf. fot).

fotty (fo-te, fo’-ee) adj., arch. having feathery legs (said of hens).

fought (fowght) pp., arch. fought – ‘Thaye cam roun’ aboot me alsua wi’ wurds o’ hætret; an’ fought agayne me wuthouten ane caus’ [HSR] (focht is more common).

foughten (foch-tin) pp., poet. fought – ‘And with this lade I’ve sprawl’d and foughten Hail ten lang mile’ [JoHa], ‘I’ve fleech’d an’ foughten a’ in vain – Jock disna seem to care …’ [JT] (cf. the more common feuchen).

fouk (fowk) n., pl., arch. people – ‘But ye are happy, and I’m glad it’s sae, And may rejoice whan ithier fouk are wae’ [CPM], ‘Od! there’s some fouk has a face for onything’ [JoHa], ‘And curs’d be ambition, the plague o’ this land, That sets fouk a-langing for things that are grand’ [JoHa], ‘Ah, dear Sir, it’s no a goud that glitters, and at ony rate the rich fouk gie aye least away’ [RW], ‘For thou wult saufe the aaflicket fouk …’ [HSR], ‘Thou sellist thy fowk for naucht …’ [HSR], ‘Pretensic fowk gaed primpin’ by, Snirkin’ at sic a din …’ [DH] (also written ‘fowk’; cf. the more modern folk).

Foulbrae (fowl-brā) n. former name for lands in Robertson Parish. Gavin Dryden was living there in 1723. The location is unknown. Perhaps the same location is where labourer James Hall was living in 1800 when he had a child baptised in Cavers Parish.

Foulden (fowl-din) n. Matthew (18th C.) incomer to Hawick around 1733, when he was asked by the Council to produce testimonials from his former residence, Jedburgh. Having failed to produce them by 1738 he was banished from Hawick along with his wife and family. A ‘Matthew Fowlden’ was born at Stobo in Peeblesshire in 1674 and could be related (possibly the same as ‘Fulton’).

Foulledge (fowl-ej) n. farmstead to the west of Skelfhill farm (the name could refer to birds or dirty; marked on the c.1860 Ordnance Survey map).

Foulledge Park (fowl-ej-pawrk) n. name for a piece of land on Minto estate. In 1779 (and 1811) ‘Foulledge Park, and one north of it’ was valued at £45 10s 11d.

Foulledge Sike (fowl-ej-sik) n. stream that rises near Foulledge runs past Alderybar and joins the Southdean Burn, to run into the Northhouse Burn and then the Teviot (G. Watson suggests that the name is ‘foul leche’, meaning ‘smelly ditch’).

Foulis see Fowls

Foulmire Heights (fowl-mirhīts) n. high ground on the Border, roughly between Saughtree and Kielder. It reaches a height of 396 m, is the site of a triangulation pillar, and is the source of the Larriston Burn.

the Foul Raid (thu-fowl-rād) n. popular name for the failed attempt by a Scots army under Archibald, 4th Earl of Douglas, to take Roxburgh and Berwick from the English in 1416. Hearing of a large English force, the Scots retreated ignominiously. In retaliation the English army attacked Teviotdale and Liddesdale, including the burning of Hawick, Jedburgh and Selkirk.

Foulshiels (fowl-sheelz) n. former hamlet west of Selkirk along the Yarrow, opposite Newark Castle. It was once a seat of the Scotts, and now a farm. Mungo Park was born here in 1771. An ornamental piece of grate found in the ruins there was donated to the Museum in 1900 (it is ‘Foulsheils’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Foulshells’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Foulshiels (fowl-sheelz) n. farm about 2 miles north of Newcastleston, to the right off the B6399, above Redheugh. A bridle path connected this with the upper Hermitage valley, via Harstgarth Fell and Twislohe. It was formerly split into Nether and Over Foulshiels. South of the farmstead, on a terrace on the slopes of Foulshiels Rig are the remains of a settlement. And on a ridge just to the west is another ruined building, along with field-banks, and extensive boundary banks and signs of cultivation along the Well Sike. About 470 yards (420 m) north of the present farmstead is the probably site of the tower-house of Foulshiels (marked on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map), with 2 enclosures, remains of a farmstead, boundary dykes and ‘lazy-beds’. The tower is about 12 m by 8.5 m and has been robbed of stone. John Elliot was recorded there in 1502. Its location is probably the ‘Foulschelmoore’ in a rental record of 1541 and possibly the Nether Foulshiels mapped by Pont. In 1541 it was valued at 6 shillings and at that time the lease was vacant. ‘Johnne Forster, younger’ is recorded as proprietor in 1558, William Foster in 1584 and Gib Foster in 1590. Archibald Elliot was there in 1611. The farm was once owned by the Elliots of Redheugh, but was part of the ongoing dispute with Scott of Buccleuch in the early 17th century. John Scott in Newark was tenant of the 33-shilling land there in 1618 when he complained that a group of about 100 Elliots and others had tried to attack his workers and servants, but not finding them there had removed all the hay and fodder, then returned to bind and beat Wat Dickson, subtenant there. Hob Foster was associated with the farm there in 1623 when he was accused of stealing sheep from Kershope. The farm was owned by the Bishop of Caithness in 1632. Walter Turnbull was tenant there in 1694. Further to the west on the north side of Eves Knowes are the remains of 7 or 8 turf buildings, probably the township of Over Foulshiels. Along the track to the north of the modern farmstead are the remains of a turf sheepfold and closer to Foulshiels Wood there are 2 or 3 others. The farm was surveyed in 1718 along with other properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch, when it consisted of 1729 acres and was bounded by Roan, Tarras, lands held by the Laird of Hoscote and the Hermitage Water. James Elliot was shepherd there in 1835 (the origin is probably from Old English ‘ful’ and Middle English ‘schele’, meaning ‘the dirty huts’; the name appears as ‘foulscheles’ in 1502, ‘Foulescheles’ in 1581, ‘Fouleschelis’ in 1611, ‘Foulscheillis’ in 1618, ‘Foulschellis’ in 1632 and ‘Foulsheils’ in 1694; it is on Gordon’s c. 1650 map as ‘Fousheels’, on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘O. Fousheels’ and ‘N. Fousheels’, on the 1718 Buccleuch survey as ‘Foulshells’ and has its modern name on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Foulton see Fulton

the Foul Well (thu-fowl-wel) n. former spring on Braidhaugh farm in Rulewater. It was located near the modern farmhouse, and said to have once been the cause of much sickness on the farm. It was eventually disused on account of its supposed harmful effects on the residents (mentioned by Tancred, it is also written ‘the Ffoull Well’).

Foulwud (fowl-wud) n. Foulwood, former lands in Liddesdale, recorded on a rental roll of c.1376. ‘Foulwud superior’ and ‘Foulwud inferior’ were both valued at 10 shillings. In a rental roll of 1541 ‘Ovir Foulwud’ was leased to Alexander Armstrong (probably son of ‘Ill Will’) and ‘Nethir Foulwud’ to Simon Armstrong (probably of Tinnisburn). The lands of ‘Fowlwoodis’ are also listed separately, but with no additional information. ‘Foulwodles’ is listed among the Liddesdale possessions of the Sheriff of Teviotdale in 1632, and ‘Fawhead alias Foulwod’ among possessions of Thomas Kerr of Ancrum. Nether Foulwood became the modern Gilside. The stream to the west is Foulwood Sike (it is marked on Blaeu’s c.1654 map; ‘Ouerfoulwod’ and ‘Netherfoulwood’ are recorded in 1541).

Foulwud Sike (fowl-wud-sēk) n. Foulwood Sike, stream in southern Liddesdale, rising on Sufficient Hill and running roughly eastwards to join the Liddel near Gillside.

It is derived from Fow, full’ [JoJ].

Fowler (fow-lur) n. Auntie (d.1781) recorded in Hawick’s death records as ‘old Auntie Fowler’. It is unclear what her full name might have been. Isobel (17th C.) listed at Slacks among the poor of Southdean Parish in the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. Her surname is recorded as ‘Fouller’. John (d.1795) tailor in Hawick, son of Robert. He died in Hawick. John, F.E.I.S. (b.1844) taught in Hawick for more than 40 years. Born in Ross-shire, he came to Hawick as Headmaster at the West Port Free Church School, transferring to Drumlanrig in 1872. Probably the same Fowler, of Longview, made a sketch of the ‘Chamberlain’s House’ about 1870. He married Elizabeth Sinton in 1872 and she died in 1920. Their children included William, Elizabeth, Robert, Annie, John, Margaret (a teacher in Kerikeri, New Zealand), James and George (who may have married Margaret Hamilton and moved to Brooks, Alberta). John (19th C.) first Secretary of the Hawick Home Mission when it was founded in 1873. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Riddell and their children included Margaret (b.1652), Helen (b.1654) and an unnamed child (b.1655). The witnesses in 1652 were William (surely a relative) and Hector Paisley. Robert (17th/18th C.) recorded as ‘Fouller’ when he was paid to be Hawick’s Town Piper in 1721. He probably took over from James Oliver and continued until about 1732. His name may also have been written ‘Foulier’. Perhaps the same Robert ‘in Sea Croft’ married Margaret Elliot and had children Elizabeth (b.1743) and Isobel (b.1745); the witnesses in 1743 were merchant John Cavers and shoemaker John Scott. Robert (18th/19th C.) forester to the Duke of Buccleuch at least in the period 1798–1807. He worked at Hassendean Common and probably elsewhere. Thomas (16th C.) servant to Robert, son of John Langlands of that Ilk. He is recorded in 1581 as witness to the sasine for half the Barony of Wilton being transferred from James Langlands of that Ilk to his son Robert. Walter (17th C.) named on a list of ‘idle and masterless men’ suggested by the Hawick Bailie to the Privy Council as suitable for sending to the wars in Germany in 1627. When produced before the Privy Council by the Bailie he was one of the men who were found ‘not fit for the wars’ and dismissed. Walter (17th C.) witnessed a baptism in Hassendean (officially Roberton Parish) in 1683 for Robert Scott and Isobel Turnbull. Rev. William (c.1560–1612) poet and scholar who was Parson of Hawick in the reign of King James VI. He was son of William, a merchant of Edinburgh, with his mother possibly being Janet Fokart. His sister Anne married Sir John Drummond. He graduated from St. Leonard’s College, St. Andrews in 1573/4 and received his M.A. in 1578. He then studied in Europe, but apparently suffered at the hands of some Catholic Scotsmen and returned to Britain, acting as a spy to the Duke of Lennox in London 1583–84. He was appointed Rector of Hawick in 1585, being presented by Francis, Earl of Bothwell. He apparently received 2/3 of the salary, while the Reader (and actual minister), William Auchmowtie received the other 1/3. In 1587/8 he assigned the ‘tack’ of Hawick Kirk to Walter Scott of Buccleuch for 5 years. He was still described as ‘Rector of Hawick’ when he was witness to a 1595 land document of Walter Scott of Branxholme. And later in 1595 when he witnessed another document of Sir Walter’s, he is described as ‘secretary to the Queen’. He accompanied Sir Peter Young to Denmark in 1589 to take part in the negotiations of the marriage of James VI with the Princess Anne. He became Master of Requests and Secretary-Depute to Queen Anne in 1589, and later her Secretary. He must have been at Holyroodhouse during much of this time; there is no reason to believe he ever visited Hawick, and he probably ceased to be Rector in 1601. However, there are papers of the period
Fowlerawe

1602–07 relating to an action with the feuars and others over payment of the Parish teinds. In 1606 he gave a feu charter to Walter, son of Walter Scott of Buccleuch, for the Kirklands of Hawick, except for the Manse and Glebe. And in 1608 he is still described as ‘parson of Hawick’ in a ‘tack’ whereby Sir Gideon Murray of Elibank received the teinds of Hawick Kirk. In 1603 he accompanied the Queen to London and never returned. He was apparently known as a great anagram maker. He wrote ‘An Answer to the Calumnious Letter and Erroneous Propositions of an Apostat named M. Jo. Hammilto[n]’ (1581), dedicated to Francis, Earl of Bothwell, as well as a commendatory sonnet for James VI’s ‘Essayes of A Prentise’ (1584). His better known poetic works were published posthumously by his nephew, the poet William Drummond of Hawthornden, namely ‘The Tarantula of Love’ and a translation of Patrarch’s ‘Trionfi’. In perhaps his most famous work, the ‘The Triumphs of the most famous Poet, Mr. Francis Petrarke, translated out of Italian into English’ (published 1587), he refers to himself as ‘P. of Hauicke’. Several other pieces exist in manuscript form, including an almost complete translation of Machiavelli’s ‘Prince’, as well as some unfinished verses, anagrams and scrolls of official letters in French, Italian and Latin. Some of these manuscripts are still in Edinburgh University library. He married (although his wife’s name is unknown) and had 4 surviving children, with his eldest son, Ludovic being recorded as portioner of Restalrig. After his death he was succeeded as minister of Hawick by Thomas Abernethy. William (17th C.) witnessed a baptism for Robert in Hawick in 1652. William (18th C.) recorded in New Woll in 1788 when he was working for John Scott of Buccleuch, for the Kirklands of Hawick, probably near Denholm (it is ‘Foullerysland’ in c.1380, ‘Fowlersland’ in 1458/9, ‘Fowlaris landis’ in 1509/10, ‘Foulars lands’ in 1574 and ‘Foullerlands’ in 1687 and ‘Foulerslands’ in 1698).

Fowlerewe (fow-lu-raw) n. former lands in the Slitrig valley, listed in 1547/8 in an English communication about farms they had burned. They were the property of the Laird of Gledstains, along with ‘Torne’ (probably Turn) and ‘Wener-ton’. The exact location and pronunciation are unknown.

Fowlerslands (fow-lurz-lawnds) n. former place name in Cavers, probably near Denholm. There was a confirming charter for these lands ‘in Denum’ to Thomas Cranston in about 1380. It was among the lands held by Thomas Cranston of that Ilk in 1458/9. It was referred to in 1483 when William Douglas of Cavers renounced these lands to John Cranston of that Ilk, as well as part of Denholm Mains. It was listed as part of the Barony of Cavers in 1511. It was regranted to Sir William Cranston in 1512 (where it is referred to as being ‘near the town of Dennom’), and listed as part of the Barony of Cavers in 1509/10. In 1636 it was referred to as ‘the land called the fouleris lands’ when passed from John, Lord Crnston to his nephew William Cranston. It was still in the Barony of Cavers when inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687 and by his brother Archibald in 1698. It was then described as lands in Denholm (it is ‘Foullerysland’ in c.1380, ‘Fowlerslande’ in 1458/9, ‘Fowlaris landis’ in 1509/10, ‘Foulars lands’ in 1511, ‘Fowlersland’ in 1512, ‘Foullars lands’ in 1574 and ‘Foullerlands’ in 1687 and ‘Foulerslands’ in 1698).

Fowlertoun (fow-lur-tin) n. Alexander (d.c.1423) cleric who was a servant of the captive James I. He held some rights of the Archdeaconry of Teviotdale, probably in succession to John Lyon. His surname is written ‘de Foulertoun’.

Fowls (fowlz) n. Rev. David (17th C.) presented to Bedrule Parish by Lord Stewart of Traquair in 1633 and ordained there the same year. However, he was translated to Oxnam (probably a more valuable living) in 1634. He was deposed in 1639 for contempt of the Acts of the General Assembly. He thereafter lived in England, abandoning his 7 children. But in 1662 he petitioned Parliament along with his son John, claiming he had been deprived simply for refusing to sign the Covenant, and was then given a stipend. He appears to have spent much of the intervening time in England and was described being in Paddington, Middlesex in 1663. He married and had 7 children, including James (who became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1648) and John. James (18th C.) footman at Stobs in 1778 and 1779, when he was working for Sir Francis Eliott (also written ‘Foulis’ and other variants).

Framysden  (fra-mis-din) n. John (d.1418) appointed as Bishop of Glasgow by Pope Boniface IX in 1391. This was as a result of a dispute in the church at the time, since Matthew de Glen-donwyn was already Bishop. He was never recognised within Scotland.

France  (frawns) n. country in Europe, across the English channel from England. The Lovels and many other Norman families originated in northern France. The ‘Auld Alliance’ between France and Scotland started formally in 1295 and united the two countries against their common foe, England (although the details of the alliance over the centuries are extremely complex). A treaty of 1512 made all citizens of Scotland citizens of France and vice versa. The alliance effectively ended with the death of Mary of Guise, the wife of James V, in 1560. Britain formally declared war on France in 1756 (as part of the Seven Years War), the event being marked by drinking (as recorded in the Town books). The French Revolution had a dramatic polarising effect on Britain in the latter years of the 18th century. In Hawick there was a meeting of pro-war, anti-reform supporters in 1792, chaired by Lord Napier, leading to the following years being extremely politically charged, with animosity and suspicion between the 2 groups. The ‘loyalist’, pro-war group consisted mainly of wealthier men, while the ‘reformist’, anti-war group was mainly from the working classes. There were several specific incidents, such as 2 reformist publicans being denied licenses by the local J.Ps. Sympathisers of the Revolution were referred to as ‘black-nebs’. There were official illuminations in Hawick following the victory in the Battle of the Nile in 1798. There was a great enlisting into volunteer army units, prompted by a concern about French invasion, culminating locally in the ‘False Alarm’ of 1804. During the Napoleonic Wars there were French prisoners of war in Hawick. Huge numbers of local men fell in France during WWI and again during WWII, many still lying in unmarked graves. Hawick became twinned with the French town of Bailleul in 1973.

France  (frawns) n. James (18th/19th C.) Supervisor of Excise in Hawick recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory.

the Franchise Agitation  (thu-fran-chlz-aw-ji-tä-shin) n. name generally given to a series of political demonstrations during the summer and autumn of 1884, demanding equally voting rights for a much larger fraction of working men, particular in rural districts. In Hawick there was a march of approximately 6000 people along the High Street, the procession being 2 1/2 miles long, with 10 bands, along with many flags and banners. Several banners are preserved in the Museum, particularly from Dicksons and Lainings. The Representation of the People Act (also known as the Third Reform Act), introduced by William Gladstone, was passed at the end of 1884.

Francis Hole  (fran-sis-höl) n. popular name for a pool in the Teviot, to the east of Denholm (mentioned by James Murray in 1863).

Francis’ Well  (fran-si-seez-wel) n. spring at the left-hand side of the main A7 just after Newton, to the north of Hawick. The origin of the name is uncertain, but could be related to St. Francis if connected with the nearby ‘Hallywell Hill’, which has its own ‘Hally Well’. John Cavers was farmer at the steading there in 1797, when it is recorded as ‘Franciswell’.

Frankie’s  (frawng-keez) n. Frankie’s the Inn Place, bar at 14 Bourtree Place.

Frankie o the Stobs  (frawng-kee-ô-thu-stôbz) n. nickname for Sir Francis Eliott.

Frank Place  (frangk-plis) n. street near Loch Park that had tenements constructed on it in 1881 and demolished in 1977. The location was the southern end of Lothian and Garfield Streets, directly opposite the top end of Allars Bank. It was named for Frank Hogg, who lived near there at the time of his death.

Frank Place Brig  (frangk-plis-brig) n. occasional name for the road bridge over the railway at the top of Allars Bank and adjacent to the former Frank Place, also sometimes called the Wellogate Brig.

Frank Scott Court  (frangk-skô-kör’) n. sheltered housing development off Buccleuch Street, built 2001/2 and named after ex-Provost Frank Scott. The bell from the Old Parish Church is displayed at the front of the building, having been cast at the Whitechaple Foundry in 1841.

Fraser  (frä-zur) n. Alexander of Ewesdale (14th/15th C.) resigned his lands in Ewesdale sometime before 1426, when they were granted to Simon Little. This included Meikledale, Kirkton, Sorbie, etc. David ‘Davie’ (1949/50– ) local boxer, coached by Jock Thorburn. He had 80 victories from around 100 bouts, including 3 schoolboy championships and 2 at youth level. He represented Scotland in an international tournament at the age of 16. After injury and disappointment he chose not to follow the professional route, but instead coached with Hawick Amateur Boxing Club. He also set up his own club, based at the Royal Albert for several years from 1994. Kenneth ‘Kenny’ (1953/4–) son of Jack, he is known as a champion canoeist. For decades he could be seen regularly training on the Teviot and Alemoor Loch. He was part of the U.K. racing team in the 1980s and regularly toured Europe to compete. He was Scottish White Water Champion 7 times. He has continued to win events in the senior age categories. George Hardie (1823–81) second son of Bailie Robert Fraser and great-grandson of Bailie John Hardie. He was a draper by trade, succeeding his father in ‘John Hislop & Co.’, 51 High Street. First elected to the Council in 1853, he was twice a Magistrate, as well as a J.P., and continued on the reconstituted Council, for North High Street Ward. He was made Provost in 1868, serving until 1871. He was a Whig Liberal in politics. He was a member of the first School Board and of the Parochial Board. He also led the resignations from the 4th Roxburghshire Volunteers and became Lieutenant in the 5th Roxburgh (Hawick Volunteer Corps), thereafter being involved in the argument between the two corps, which led to his dismissal and the disbanding of the 5th Roxburgh. The song ‘Hawick Volunteers’ was composed and first sung for him in 1860. He was a keen Common Riding supporter and said to have had a fine tenor voice. He was also a leading light in the Masons, and involved in the formation of the Lodge St. James. In addition he was an early Trustee of St. George’s Kirk. He was living at 7 Teviot Crescent in 1875. On his retiral he was presented with an inscribed tea set, later became landlord of the Imperial Hotel, and was buried in St. Mary’s (note, his name is also sometimes ‘Hardie’). George J.P. (d.1962) came to Hawick as Excise Officer in 1936. He served for 18 years on the Town Council starting in 1940 and was Provost 1945–58. He gave his name to Fraser Avenue. He died at his home in Edinburgh. George Watson reporter who covered rugby for the Hawick Express. Ian Acting Father in 1994 and Common-Riding Committee Secretary since 2017. Jack (20th C.) well-known local ‘fixer-upper’. Brought up in Cavers, he worked as a joiner in Mansfield most of his life, and was famous for renovating old cars and bikes. He also rescued and restored the whistle from Blenkie’s mill and the Willie Leggat statue. He took part in the John o’ Groats to Land’s End rally of Austin 7 enthusiasts in 1982 and 1992. He was an elder at Cavers Kirk. His son Kenny is a champion canoeist. John (17th/18th C.) preacher at Hassendean Kirk the last 2 Sundays before it was demolished. He went on to become the minister at Glencorse in 1691, and was transferred to Alness in 1695. There is an assignation against him in 1692 from Thomas Shiels (minister at Roberton), claiming the stipend of Hassendean to which he believed he had the right. John (18th/19th C.) baker and flour dealer at the Sandbed, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. Lesley daughter of Ian and Nancy. She studied at the Edinburgh College of Art. She has worked as a local photographer who produced ‘Hawick Common Riding, An Illustrated Guide’ along with Judith Murray in 2009. Her imaging and photography company is ‘ILF Imaging’, known for its extensive coverage of the Common Riding, as well as providing general photographic services. She designed the junior Mosstroopers’ Club tie in 1995. She has been Treasurer of the Common Riding Committee since 2017. She proposed the toast to the Common Riding at the 2018 Dinner. Mrs. ?? (d.1840) midwife in Hawick. Her death is recorded in 1840. Bailie Robert (b.c.1795) father of Provost George Hardie and a draper by trade. His premises were at 7 Teviot Crescent. He is recorded in 1840. He was a merchant on Teviot Crescent. He is recorded on the electoral roll of 1832 and the censuses of 1841 and 1851 (when he was a widower). He was a good friend of William Laidlaw. Although his family joined the Free Kirk after the Disruption, he remained a staunch ‘Auld Kirker’. He was listed as a Steward at the 1836 Common Riding Races. He was mentioned in the 1837 Commons inquiry into ‘fictitious voters’; he swapped a liferent in Roxburghshire belonging to William Muir. In 1847 he was given the tack of the Waulk Mill in Selkirk. In the 1850s he was on the Railway Committee for Hawick District. His wife was Rebecca and their children included John H., Margaret, George and Rebecca. A portrait exists of him. Sir Simon of Olivercastle (d.c.1291) from Peeblesshire, son of Sir Simon. He held extensive lands in Scotland, and was Keeper of Ettrick Forest, as well as Sheriff of Traquair and Peebles. In about the 1280s he was witness to a resignation of lands by Richard of Rule. In 1291 King Edward I ordered him to deliver harts to the Bishops of St. Andrews and Glasgow. His son, also Sir Simon, led the Scots to vistory at the Battle of Roslin in 1303, refused to swear fealty to Edward, fought with Robert the Bruce, was captured by the English and was executed in London. Simon Lord Lovat (c.1667–1747) Chief of the Fraser Clan, he was famous for his belligerent nature and for changing allegiance, being a supporter of the House of Hanover in 1715 and of the Stuarts in 1745. He supposedly passed through Hawick along with the Jacobite army in 1745. There is a story told about a local man who acted as a guide and met him, later becoming a barber in Newcastle, and slitting the throat of one of the men who testified against Lovat. Defeated at Culloden, he was beheaded at the Tower of London, the last man to be executed in this way in Britain (also spelled ‘Frazer’).

fratch (frawch) v., poet. to argue, wrangle – ‘My curse light on the awkward sot, Who ... breeds a fratch about his shot’ [JR].

fray (frā) n., poet. a fight, skirmish, conflict, brawl – ‘As her sons were ever foremost In the foray and the fray’ [TC], warning of an attack – ‘And when he cam to the fair tower yate, He shouted loud, and cried weel hie, Till out be-spak auld Gibby Elliot – ‘Whae’s this that brings the fraye to me?’’’ [T], ‘While o’er my mind come thoughts of former days When ruthless feuds and fierce and bloody frays ...’ [JCG], arch. a commotion, stir, fuss, especially in the phrase ‘ti make a fray’ – ‘They were makin’ a fray’ [GW], ‘Slips away the day, unbroken By strife or fray’ [??].

the Fray of Suport (thu-frā-ov-su-pōr) n. Border ballad from the English side of the Kersehope area, describing the raising of a pursuit after stolen goods. It has been described as one of the most uncouth and savage of the Border ballads and a version was recorded by Scocha in 2004.

freeth (freeth) v., poet. to froth, foam – ‘A bundle o’ fine flaring clouts, Beneath which poison freethes’ [JoHa].

the Free Kirk

Free Church Lane (free-church-lān) n. popular name for St. George’s Lane, running from Buccleuch Street to the Teviot and named after what was Hawick Free Church. At one time it was also known as Johnman’s Opening. It was the scene of a murder in 1861. After Teviot Lodge was taken over it became the eastern boundary of the High School grounds. The Post Office sorting office has been there since 1972 (also called ‘Free Kirk Lane’).

freedom (free-dum) n., arch. liberty to engage in the rights of a member of a community, especially a burgh – ‘Item, whatsomever person committis the said theft ... sal be banyshit the town, and lose their freedom for ever’ [BR1640], the boundaries within which the laws of a burgh apply – ‘Impr. whatsomever person sal committis the said theft especially a burgh – ‘Item, whatsomever person committis the said theft ... sal be banyshit the town, and lose their freedom for ever’ [BR1640].

the Free Gairdners (thu-free-gār-di-nurz) n. the British Order of Ancient Free Gairdners, a friendly society with Lodge No. 3465 operating in Hawick from the 1880s until the early 20th century. Dr. Barrie was the first and most enthusiastic member. There were 2 separate branches at one point, ‘Flower of the Border’, Hawick, No. 146 Border District, and ‘Lily of the Border’, Hawick, No. 6 Border District. There was also briefly a junior branch ‘The Flowerbud of the Border’ (Juvenile), No. 23 Border District. The National Archives have some of their records.

the Free Kirk (thu-free-kirk) n. the Free Church, established after the Disruption in 1843, when hundreds of Church of Scotland ministers left to form the Free Protesting Church. In Hawick Rev. John Wallace left as minister of the Parish Church along with about 600 of the congregation of 800. They met originally in the East Bank Meeting House, then built their own church in 1844. The site was purchased from Mr. Anderson, with Mr. Nixon of Lynnwood laying the foundation stone. This became St. George’s Church, which was long afterwards known as the Free Church or Free Kirk, and is now renamed Teviot Church. A second congregation started meeting in the West-end in 1855, leading to the construction of the West Port Kirk in 1866. Another Free Church congregation, St. Andrew’s, was founded in 1866, with the church itself constructed in 1868, to serve the northern part of town. There was also a Free Kirk started about the same time in... the Borthwick (the Snoot), another in Denholm in 1844 and one at Wolfelee about 1849.

the Free Kirk Manse (thu-free-kirk-mans)

manse for St. George’s Church, built on Wilton path in 1846. The land had previously been a garden belonging to Francis Ballantyne. The house was designed by Smith of Darnick and can be seen in the 1846 painting of the Common Riding Races. It was occupied continuously by the Free Kirk minister until Rev. Johnman died in 1923, then sold the following year. The junior minister had lived at Broomieknowe, and this house was gifted by Sir Thomas Henderson in 1925 to become the new Manse. This house may have been the ‘U.P. Manse’ and ‘Wilton Manse’ recorded on Ordnance Survey maps, which was demolished about 1969.

Free Lance (free-lawns) n. pseudonym for Isabella Anderson Gray.

Freeland (free-lind) n. Rev. John (20th C.) minister at Ashkirk Church from 1953 until about 1961.

the Free Library (thu-free-Il-bru-ree) n. an early name in use for the Library.

freeman (free-mun) n. another name for a Burgess – ‘Item, that ilk freeman’s eldest son and heir that is to be admitted freeman and Burgess, his father being in life, sall pay forty shillings with the wyne and pertinents’ [BR1640].

Freeman (free-mun) n. Patrick (17th/18th C.) charged in 1701 with going over the Border into England to get married. He is recorded giving evidence that the Burgh Officer was the first person to arrest him (i.e. that it was not done on the authority of any other court). Walter (18th C.) clockmaker in Hawick. He was engaged by the Council in 1747 to fix and upkeep the clock on St. Mary’s, with an annual salary of £1 5s. This included providing iron work for a dial-plate on the west side and alterations to the dial-plate on the east side. He is also recorded making 420 communion tokens and a stamp for Hawick Parish Kirk in 1751. In 1752 he was paid the remains of his salary for upkeep of the clock for a year. He may be the same as the Walter who led the ‘Patriots’ (or was at least related to him). He married Margaret Falside and their daughter Janet was baptised in 1758; the witnesses were William Dyce and Walter Ruecastle. He is probably the ‘Walter Freemans, Watchmaker’, whose death is recorded in Hawick in 1781. Walter (18th C.) leader of a secession movement in Hawick Kirk. He also led the ‘Patriots’, a group of 205 Burgesses and others who took the Town Council to court 1778–81, claiming they had improperly managed the Common on behalf of the Burgess and questioning their authority. They particularly complained about the Bailies, stating that they were ‘generally a set of poor low men’ and that ‘he that drunk most in the Bailies’ house had most interest in the decision’. In 1778 he and James Dryden were jailed in Hawick over the weekend and then taken off to Jedburgh Jail for another 2 days before being bailed (he is probably the one described as being ‘in bad health’ at the time). The Court of Session ruled in favour of the Magistrates and Council, but the outcome also led to the Council being fixed at 31 members. He was probably the same watchmaker Walter whose daughter Isobel married John Clark in Edinburgh in 1780. He may be the Walter, married to Margaret Falside, whose daughter Janet was baptised in Hawick in 1758. He is probably the Walter who was recorded renting the ‘mortcloth’ in Hawick in 1773 and also in 1774 for his ‘goadsister’.

Dr. William (1751/2–1821) surgeon and liberal politics leader in Hawick in the latter part of the 18th century. He was said to be a ‘blackneb’ and had a portrait of Napoleon in his house. He was an early friend of Robert Wilson, apparently influencing his political and religious views; it was said that ‘Dr. Freeman had made Rob Wilson a’ but the soul’. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ in 1784. He paid the Horse Tax in Hawick in the period 1789–97. He is probably the William who married Helen Scott in Hawick in 1788. He seems likely to be related to Walter, perhaps his son. He was buried at St. Mary’s, his gravestone reading ‘A man of sterling honour, integrity, and benevolence. A warm friend and affectionate Relative. His talents as a professional man were of the highest order and were ever at the service of the poor’ (also written ‘Freman’).

freen (freu) n., arch. a friend – ‘My blessing be upon ye, Wattie, On’ a yer freens, an’ favourite dawtie’, ‘Jock glows around, an’ spies a freen’ ...’[JoHa], ‘Twa trusty frien’s, secure frae storm, In Coffer-Ha’ sat snug and warm’[RDW], ‘Guide us a’, yer stock o’ freens Has sunk to Jock and Sandy Weens’[WNK], ‘...et. freend (freend) n. a friend – ‘Real candour a true freend doth lack, Sin’ Davie’s dead’[JoHa], ‘An’ met wi’ freends, an’ feughan faes, an’ jokin’ muckle glee’[JoHa], ‘Did ee gang ti sei er freends the teime ee was in Edinburrih?’[ECS], ‘Him and mei turned fast freends and ‘Accept the enclosed, my freend, my brither – Perhaps ye’ll never get another’[WiD], ‘. . . gang back wi’ mei tae unmask the villain’[JEDM], ‘. . . Ye’ve freends that lo’e ye here’[RH], ‘Dear Cantir Humour, guid.’[JYH] (also written ‘frien’; cf. freend).

freend-lee adj. friendly – ‘A gold-fish can be just as freendly as a dog’, ‘. . . When boot yer plans ye freendly tattle, An’ speech gets huskie’[JoHa], ‘Till, truly, sir, a freendly pen, I scarce dare lift to ony man’[JoHa], ‘Ei turned tae eis freendly neebour And gien um the nicest smile’[AY] (also freen at one time).

freend-lee-su-l-i-i’ee n. friendly society (freend-lee-su-sl-i-i’ee) n. a benefit society, organised for mutual assistance among workers. The Hawick Friendly Society was the first such organisation in town, forming about 1790. A second organisation formed about 1810, but both were dissolved by their members some time before 1840. The Foresters became important from the mid-19th century, with the Free Gardeners formed in the 1880s, and Trades Unions also appearing in the late 19th century to fill a similar need.

freend-ship (freend-ship) n. friendship – ‘Teri-Bus is now a charm That keeps heart an’ freendship warm For auld Hawick’[TK], ‘And ye’ll fin’ the warmth o’ freendship Down the lang years still the same’[WL].

freen-ship (freen-ship) n., poet. friendship – ‘. . . We’re weetin’ oor freen’ship, quo’ Donald M’Gee’[JoHa].

Freestane Cleuch (free-stan-clooch) n. small stream that flows into the Lurgie Burn in the western part of Hobkirk Parish. Near the confluence are the foundations of former walls or enclosures, probably once a farmstead.

frehaldar (free-hal-dar) n., arch. a freeholder – ‘. . . at the quhilk day the saidis frehaldaris comperande apone the saidis landis of Quhithop . . . ’[SB1500].

frei (frí) adj., arch. free – ‘. . . So, sure, may some auld-farrant sap Set my songs frei, To cheat the devil O’ the soule’s desolation’[DH].

fre-elect (frí-stan) n., arch. free-stone, a kind of sandstone used for building – ‘Yon freis-tane border that’s round th’ tablet got on my nerves’[HEX1921], ‘Wulton was biggit in comely stane Quarried frae native hills – Frei-stane and whan . . . ’[DH].

frem (frem) n., arch., poet. strange, unfamiliar, estranged, unrelated – ‘A frem body (=stranger)’[GW], ‘Obleeg’d ti naither freend nor frem’[GW], ‘She’s a scodgy amang the frem’[GW], ‘. . . And the Slitrig sings its blithest sang, when only the fremm are near’[JYH], ‘A fremm land claimed his banes, and though He feared we’d a’ forget . . . ’[WL] (also written ‘fremm’: cf. freend and fremmit).

fremd (fremd) adj., arch. strange, foreign, unrelated – ‘. . . O bleart, ill-faurt, frem’d fiend, starvation – An empty purse’[JoHa], ‘. . . Jethart: that was a richt toon an big eneuch ti fother an fend for fremd folk an gangerels’[ECS], ‘A frem(d) folk’[GW] (cf. the modern German word; see also fremmit).

French (french) n. Adam (d.c.1578) 8th Laird of Thornydykes in Berwickshire. He was son of Robert and Anne Home and grandson of Adam (who in 1502 was on the panel for Sir David Home of Wedderburn inheriting some of his father’s lands around Lauder). He was a minor at the death of his father and had a charter from Thornydykes in 1555/6. He was involved in a contract relating to lands in Gordon in 1563 and in 1567 he had an action involving lands at ‘Petkokkis’. In 1569 he acquired from Andrew Home, Commendator of Jedburgh Abbey, the lands of Ulston, Nether Crailing, Auld Jedburgh, Rucastle, Abbotrule, ‘Bowatsyle’, Grange, Fodderlee, Over Bonchester, Mackside, Gatehousecote, Hartshaugh, Langraw, Raperlaw, Firth, Belses, Ancrum and others. This was for the sum of 30 hundred merks. In 1574/5 he was involved in a dispute over teinds in the Parish of Gordon. He married Margaret, daughter of Robert Hoppringle of Blindlee, and she died in 1582. His children were: Robert, who succeeded; James, executor of his mother’s will, who led an action against the Abbot of Jedburgh in 1583; and John, tutor of Thornydykes after his brother James died; Alexander, who was mixed up with the Earl of Bothwell; Thomas, who was in the King’s service; Margaret; Christine; Jonet; and Eupham. Adam of Thornydykes (1599–1617) only son of Robert, he was 10th Laird of Abbotrule and other lands that had been purchased by his grandfather from Jedburgh Abbey. His uncle John was appointed as his tutor in 1604. It is said that at the age of 14 he was attending school in Haddington when he was kidnapped from the care of his guardian Sir John Home, by William Home of Hardiesmill, John Cranston of Moriston and Sir Patrick Chirnside of East Nisbet, taken to Berwick and married to Sir Patrick’s daughter, Jane. This led to a trial before the Supreme Court of Scotland. However, the King finally allowed the marriage, but he died before there were any children. His 3 sisters, Jean, Alison and Margaret were served as his heirs in 1625. George (16th C.) 4th son of Adam, 6th Laird of Thornydykes. He is listed in 1549 among the associates of Walter Ker of Cessford who were accused of helping the English in raids upon the farms of Sir Walter Scott of Brauxholme. James (d.c.1604) 2nd son of Adam and Margaret Hoppringle. He acted as executor for his mother. In 1583 he instituted proceedings against the Abbot of Jedburgh. In 1588 his brother-in-law John Baillie of St. John’s Kirk had a letter of reversion to him for the annual rents of the former lands of Jedburgh Abbey, including Abbotrule, Nisbet, Rucastle, Over Bonchester, Mackside, Belses, Over Ancrum, etc. He died soon after his older brother Robert and his younger brother John became his heir. Robert (d.1603) son of Adam and Margaret Pringle, he was 9th Laird of Thornydykes and 2nd of Abbotrule. In 1582/3 he and his mother had an action against a number of men for spoliation of their lands of Jordanhill and East Gordon. He was part of a feud that resulted in the death of Ninian Spottiswood in 1588. He was denounced as a rebel in 1592 for helping the Earl of Bothwell. In 1589 he married Margaret, said to be only daughter and heiress of William Turnbull, younger of Bedrule (who pre-deceased his father), with her mother being Margaret, daughter of Sir John Home of Cowdenknowes; she died in 1593, leaving no children. He secondly married Margaret, daughter of Mark Home of Hardiesmill. Their children were: Adam, who succeeded; Jean, who married John, brother of William, Lord Cranston; Alison, who married Thomas Cranston of Huntlywood and secondly William Marjoribanks of Stainerig; and Margaret, who married Robert Brownfield of Tordrig in Berwickshire. His brother John was appointed tutor to his son Adam in 1604. Robert of Frenchland (16th/17th C.) son of Robert, with his mother probably being sister of Christopher Halyday of Raehill in Annandale. He was served heir to his father in 1610. In 1613 he was a cautioner for John Johnstone of Westerraw to infeft Andrew, son of William Scott of Bowhill in some lands. He may be the French of Frenchland appointed to assist Walter Scott of Buccleuch to administer justice in the Middle Shires in 1622. In 1598 he married Isabell Scott, who was from the Bowhill Scotts. They had 9 children, including William (who succeeded), Adam (who later acquired Frenchland and Thornydykes), Margaret (who became co-heir and married her kinsman William French) and Marian (also co-heir, who married David French, her sister’s brother-in-law). William (18th/19th C.) local man who got stuck in the cleuch on Toon-o-Rule farm one night while riding from Hawick to Abbotrule. It is said that he managed to pull himself out, but that his horse drowned, and the horse-shoes were found many years later when someone was casting peats. frenfi (fren-fi) adj., poet. furious, wrathful – ‘...an’ let thy frenfu’ angir tak’ haud o’ thame’[HSR].

Fresally (fre-nish-lee) n., poet. the Fridi

Fressell (frennishin) n., poet. a state of extreme agitation, rage, fury – ‘He cast him upon thame the frenishin o’ his angir, wrath, an’ indignatione . . . ’ [HSR], ‘Ye ruul the frenishin’ o’ the se; when the waves o’r raisè up, thou quashist thame’ [HSR], a state of distraction, such as when a child is woken from sleep – ‘He is . . . in a freinishen’ [JoJ] (there are spelling variants; also freinishin).

Fresingly (fre-nish-in-lee) adv., poet. frenziedly, in a rage – ‘Why do the heathen frenishin liegether?’ [HSR].

Fri (fri, fre, frä) prep. from – ‘where div ee com fri’, ‘Then can I be glad when sae far I am frae thee . . . ’ [JoHa], ‘. . . A day frae Hawick’s a day wasted!’ [DH], ‘. . . frae ma hoose upon the rock’ [JEDM], ‘. . . And keep oor dear hames frae disorders’ [WS], ‘I’ll sing the test a Callant tries When far frae hame and weary’ [RH], ‘. . . An’ at his voice the deid folk leapt Frae oot their graves’ [WP], also sometimes meaning ‘of’ – ‘heid deid fri a hert attack’, conj. from the time that – ‘Fae she cam in, her tongue never devauldit’ [GW] (the pronunciation varies, and can often be between the examples given; also spelled ‘frah’; cf. the less common fra and the older threih).

Friarshaw (frI-ur-shaw) n. farm on the north side of the Ale Water, roughly between Riddell and Lilliesleaf. It was the seat of a branch of the Douglases, descended from the Cavers line (but with a genealogy that is not well established in detail). In 1563 William Gourlay warned George and Ralph Douglas to remove themselves from a husbandland there belonging to Andrew Douglas. William Douglas (d.1575) was probably the first Laird of these lands, followed by Andrew. It was valued at £5 12s 6d in 1592. In the 17th century the superiority was held by the Hamiltons, Earls of Haddington, long with other lands previously possessed by Melrose Abbey. James Shiel was there in 1628. It was valued at £2 85 13s 4d in 1643, 1663 and 1678 (including feu-duty of £13 6s 8d to the Earl of Haddington). It was still part of the Lordship of Melrose in 1670. In 1678 the feu duties were valued at £13 6s 8d, and held by the Earl of Haddington. Walter Riddell of Friarshaw is recorded in 1695. There were Turnbulls there in the late 18th century. In 1788 it was owned by Rev. William Campbell. The 1811 Land Tax Rolls lists the owner as William Scott of Friarshaw, with a value of £286 (plus £60 in teinds). There were Scott-Douglas owners in the 19th century, but by the 1870s it was part of the estate of the Sprots of Riddell. It was called ‘Jerusalem’ by the locals, and was once monastic property. Another farm to the north-west is called Friarslaw. The Douglases of Friarshaw were cadets of the Douglases of Cavers, differences by making the bordure nebuly – ‘We’d cross the brig and thread the wood, And climb to Friarshaw, Where we can see the Minto Hills And rugged Ruberslaw’ [FL] (the name probably comes from Middle and Old English ‘frere sceaga’, meaning ‘friar’s wood’; it first appears in 1563 as ‘Freirschawe’ and continues with similar spelling for the next century, being ‘Freirschaw’ in 1581, ‘Freirschaw’ in 1618, ‘Friershawe’ and ‘friershaw’ in 1678 and ‘Frier-shaw’ in 1695; it is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Freershaw’).

Fricht (fricht) n., arch. a fright – ‘. . . an’ ane fricht til mine acquaintince; thame that did see me owrby flee frae me’ [HSR], ‘I was ane reproch amang a’ mine enimies . . . an’ ane fricht til mine acquaintince’ [HSR], ‘Bairnis wi’ it get sic frichts, There’s no ane that sleeps soone’ . . . ’ [TCh], ‘. . . Advisin’ Jimmie not ti dee Wi’ useless fright’ [WP], v. to frighten ‘. . . eneuch to fright the verra whaups frae their haunts’ [BM1907].

Frichtfi (fricht-fi, -fu) adj., arch. frightful – ‘There’s whiles a wee thing that was uncontrolled, And causes a frichtfu’ skaith . . . ’ [WFC] (spelled ‘frichtfu’ etc.).

Friid (fri’d, fred) contr. from it – ‘the trouble wi Gala is, oo’re no fer enough fri’d’, ‘A was guy fer fri’d it the time’, ‘The water that cam’ frae’d was caller and clear . . . ’ [JCG] (see also thrih’d).

Fridi (frë-di) n. Friday (also spelled ‘Fridi’; note the pronunciation with i rather than I).

the Fridi (thu-frë-di) n. Common Riding Friday, being the Friday after the first Monday in June and the main day in the traditional celebrations, lasting almost a full 24 hours for the principals. The earliest it can be is 5th June and the latest is 11th June. It starts with the Drums & Fifes assembling at 6 a.m. in the KirkWynd, traditionally playing ‘Teribus’ and ‘John Paiter’s Mare Rides Foremaist’. It proceeds with the Snuffling and the Cornet’s Breakfast, with the Drums and Fifes continuing on a route round the old parts of the Town. The Cornet then gets the Flag and walks with it to the Tower, where the Friend (see freen)

Friend (frend) n. Edmund (19th C.) native of somewhere along the Malay Archipelago. He was given as a gift to Gilbert Elliot, Lord Minto by one of the Rajahs of the kingdoms there in about 1811, as part of negotiations for support against the Dutch and French. Lord Minto emancipated these slaves, but kept the two eldest boys as domestic servants; he chose the surnames 'of Homo [man] and Amicus [friend], that I may always be put in mind to treat my humble property like men and friends instead of cattle', based on a quotation from Seneca. Along with Francis Man he became part of the household staff at Minto, one of them being groom. However, it is unclear what became of them. Gilbert (1825–1911) son of John and Mary Scott. He was baptised in Minto Parish and in 1841 and 1851 was living with his mother and siblings in Denholm. In 1861 and 1871 he was a gardner living at Milnthorpe, Westmorland. He married Elizabeth (Betsy) Wilson and their children included: George (b.1847/8); Elizabeth (b.1855/6); Mary (b.1857/8); Margaret (b.1863/4); Gilbert (1865–1930); Catherine (b.1867/8); and Jane (b.1871). He died in Clitheroe, Lancashire. John (19th C.) married Mary Scott in Ancrum Parish in 1824. They had 3 children baptised in Minto Parish: Gilbert Elliot (b.1825); Adam (b.1827); and Agnes (b.1830). Given the name of the first child, it seems very likely that John was in fact the same man called 'Edmund' in a letter from Lord Minto, i.e. that he was originally from Bali or one of the neighbouring regions of what is now Indonesia. His wife (presumably widow) was living in Denholm (probably Sunnyside) in 1841, along with children Gilbert and Mary and working as a dressmaker. In 1851 the family were probably on Eastgate in Denholm, his wife then a widow, his sons both being gardeners and his daughter Agnes a baker’s wife with a grand-daughter Mary Beattie also living with them. His son Gilbert married Betsy Wilson and lived in Heversham, Westmorland and his grandson, also Gilbert lived in Clitheroe, Lancashire.

fri-sel (fri-set) n., arch. metal used for striking a flint – ‘The donations to the Museum during the month comprised the following: 6 frisels, Border district . . . ’ [HAST1900].

Frissell (fris-sel) n. Andrew (16th C.) son of the Laird of Overton and brother of William. Along with his brother he was accused of being involved in 2 raids on English farms in 1589. David (15th C.) appointed one of the procurators of Thomas Armstrong of Mangerton in 1482 when Mangerton passed to David Scott of Branxholme. His name is recorded as ‘Daid Fresell’. Jean (17th C.) listed at Mervinslaw among the poor of the neighbouring regions of what is now Indonesia. His wife (presumably widow) was living in Denholm (probably Sunnyside) in 1841, along with children Gilbert and Mary and working as a dressmaker. In 1851 the family were probably on Eastgate in Denholm, his wife then a widow, his sons both being gardeners and his daughter Agnes a baker’s wife with a grand-daughter Mary Beattie also living with them. His son Gilbert married Betsy Wilson and lived in Heversham, Westmorland and his grandson, also Gilbert lived in Clitheroe, Lancashire.

‘Auld Sang’ is sung. The Procession of the officials’ motorcade plus riders then starts, going through Wilton then along the High Street and up the Loan for the Chase. The married riders go to the front as usual, this being the only time anyone rides past the Flag. After the Chase up the Nip Knowes the Acting Father takes the Flag to St. Leonard’s, where the main ‘Hut’ takes place. Here the curds and cream are served, which were ordered on the Thursday of the previous week. After the Hut, the mounted procession proceeds round part of the Common for the actual Riding of the Marches, with the Cornet performing the Cutting of the Sod. They then make their way to the Mair, with the Flag being placed on the roof of the committee room during the Races, and the Cornet being presented with a race-crop. After the events at the Moor, the riders proceed via Crumhaughhill and Myreslawgreen, where they receive refreshments. The Principals then go to the Coble Pool for the Dipping of the Flag, then the Song Singing, before returning the Flag to the Town Hall for the night. Then there is the Cor-net’s Dinner and finally the Ball, ending with the Cutting of the Sod. They then make their way to the summit of the Mote at dawn. Before 1752 it was fixed as the last Friday in May, but since then (largely because of the 11 day shift to 1752 it was fixed as the last Friday in May, but since then (largely because of the 11 day shift to the Gregorian calendar) it has been in June. In the early 19th century the Magistrates and ret-cons lived in the Barony of Hawick in 1484. He may be the Laird of Overton fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aires in Jedburgh in 1493. John of Overton (16th C.) listed in 1549 among the associates of Walter Ker of Cessford who were accused of helping the English in raids upon the farms of the lower Borthwick valley belonging to Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. Patrick (15th C.) recorded as ‘senior in Smallholm’ in 1494/5 when he was found to be infrum at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh. Robert (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1509 as part of the inquest for ruling on the inheritance of the Baron of Cavers and Sheriffship of Roxburghshire by James Douglas. In 1517 he was ‘Robertum Fresal de Buntoune’ when he was on the panel of ‘retour’ for Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. Thomas (16th C.) tenant at ‘Efflesche’, i.e. Effledge in Cavers Parish. In 1535 along with Arthur Douglas he had 13 cows and oxen stolen, with William Scott ‘in Layk’ being accused. They are described as ‘common thieves of Liddesdale.’ He is probably related to the previous Robert. William (15th C.) recorded as ‘Fresal’ in 1424 when he was on a ‘retour of inquest’ in Hawick for settling claims to lands on Hownam. Most of the other men were Teviotdale Lairds. William of Overton (16th C.) recorded in 1590 when he and his brother Andrew were named along with Rutherfords, accused of a theft. They are described as ‘sons of Teviotdale men accused of rieving from Teviotdale.’

Fulton (ful’, fool’in-) n. lands between Bedrule and Fodderlee, once a site of a small village. There is a ruined 15th century pele tower there. Adam Turnbull is recorded there in 1390. John Turnbull of ‘Foulton’ took part in 1426 in the inquiry into the leprosy of John Turnbull of Minto. Thomas and Roland Turnbull were recorded there in 1493 and Cock Turnbull, William White and Robert White in 1494/5. Thomas Turnbull was tenant there in 1501 and George Russell in 1502. In 1502 some Olivers were allowed to compone for stealing 100 of the Laird of Bedrule’s sheep from there at different times. In 1516 James V granted remission to several Turnbuls, including Adam, George and Andrew in Fulton. The tower is recorded being burned the Earl of Hertford’s men in 1545. It was the home of Margaret Home of Cowdenknowes in the 1570s, before her marriage to William Turnbull of Bedrule, and then was a Turnbull stronghold. In the 1580s it was the seat of Walter, heir apparent of Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule. A letter of 1602 from William Turnbull to his father-in-law Thomas Ker of Cavers describes how he took possession of the lands and lists the tenants there at that time. In 1619 John Stewart of Traquair accused several Turnbuls of stealing wood from his lands at Huntliehill; this included Walter in Fulton and his son Thomas, as well as Robert, Mungo and Robert ‘Fendie’ Turnbull and James Ainslie, who were also there. In 1623 Andrew Paterson, tenant there, was accused of stealing an ox and a cow, but found not guilty. The Kers were granted the lands in 1623, along with other Turnbull possessions (probably on default of loans). It was among lands owned by Sir Thomas Ker in 1643, valued at £440. William Turnbull was there in 1690 and George White was tenant in 1694. It was owned by John Ker of Cavers Carre in 1788. William Elliot of Wells bought the lands from the Cavers-Carre family in 1801. It was among lands owned by William Elliot of Bedrule in 1811. The minister of Bedrule formerly had the right to cut turf annually on the moor here. A Roman coin, specifically a denarius of Augustus, was found to the west of the tower. Further to the south-east is a possible ancient enclosure (the name occurs in 1296 as ‘Fougheltona’, is ‘Foulton’ in 1390, ‘Foulte’ in about 1390, ‘Foulte’ in 1426, ‘Foulte’ in 1493, ‘foulton’ in 1494/5, ‘Foulton’ in 1501, ‘foulton’ in 1502, ‘Foulton’ in 1516, ‘Folton’ in 1545, ‘Foulton’ in 1583/4, ‘Foulton’ in 1643 and 1678, ‘Faltoun’ in 1684, ‘foulton’ in 1690 and ‘Foulten’ in 1694; it is still marked as ‘Foulton’ on Gordon’s c. 1650 map and ‘Foulte’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; the origin is probably Old English ‘fugel tun’, meaning ‘bird farm’).

Fulton (fool’in) n. James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, living at Skelfhill in 1736, when his son Robert was baptised. He is probably related to his contemporary John. James (18th/19th C.) stocking needle maker on the High Street, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His son William was baptised in 1715. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, recorded at Denholm in 1736. His children included: Margaret (b.1736); William (b.1740); and Janet (b.1747). Perhaps the same John was married to Janet Hogg and had an unnamed child baptised in Cavers in 1751. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, perhaps son of John. He was living in Denholm in 1777 and Denholm Dean in 1779 and 1783. His children included: John (b.1768); Janet (b.1770); Robert (b.1777); William (b.1779); Alexander (b.1783); Margaret (b.1786); James (b.1789). William (1794–1875) first (and possibly only) Governor of Hawick Jail. He was born in Jedburgh, son of John and Rachel Watson. He was wounded in Holland in the 1st (Foot) Regiment, being struck Fulton Toor (ful‘-, fool‘-in-toor, -tow-ur) n. ruined peel tower dating from the 16th century, about 1½ miles south of the village of Bedrule, on the side road between Bedrule and Fodderlee. It was long a stronghold of the Turnbulls. The tower is recorded being burned the Earl of Hertford’s men in 1545. Tradition holds that the last occupant of the tower was a strong Turnbull who was overcome by the Kers of Ferniehirst, pouncing upon him while he was singing to his infant child on his knee: ‘Little wat ye wha’s coming, Jock and Tam and a’s coming’. The remains of the tower are one storey high and surrounded by turf covered foundations of out-buildings. The dimensions are about 7 m by 9 m, and oblong in plan, with a circular stair-tower on the east. The walls of the tower were repaired around 1880 to preserve the ruin.

the Fyre Brigade (thu-fir-bree-găd) n. municipal fire service within Hawick, in early days operating out of the old Town House. The Council first resolved to purchase a fire engine in 1809, and it arrived from London in 1812. Prior to that the Burgh had a few leather buckets, a couple of ladders and several iron hooks on poles for dealing with burning thatch. The new ‘engine’ consisted of a carriage on a swivel, several lengths of pipe and many leather bags for carrying water. A force of about 50 volunteers was established in 1814, but at first were only paid with ale! The engine was adapted several times an additional one purchased in 1847. By the late 1800s the engine was pulled by 3 horses yoked together; pictures exist from this period, as well as a short film of about 1890. The engine acquired in 1894 was a Merryweather Greenwich Gem, pulled by horses until a motorised engine replaced them in 1918; a second engine was purchased in 1931. The first uniforms were simply white jackets. The uniform issued in 1882 consisted of a blue coat, white linen trousers and helmet. Hawick’s first actual fire station was constructed in 1857 at Slitrig Hall, 2–6 Old Manse Lane (at the end of Slitrig Bank), where some evidence of the original building’s use can still be seen. This station served the town through the rest of the 19th century and into the early 20th. A new Fire Station was constructed on Commercial Road in 1914, which in turn was replaced with the new headquarters on Wilton Hill in 1971. The Hawick Fire Brigade became part of the National Fire Service in 1941. A full time brigade started in 1963, along with the purchase of a new engine. It was later incorporated into the Lothian and Borders Fire Brigade and in 2013 the local brigade became part of the Scottish Fire and Rescue Service.

the Fyre Station (thu-fir-stă-shin) n. Hawick’s initial fire station was in part of the old Town House. A new station was built at the end of Slitrig Bank in 1857, perhaps including parts of an earlier house. This had an arched entrance for the vehicles and roundel windows above. The location was presumably chosen for its proximity to water in the centre of the Town; however, it later proved too inconvenient for the larger fire engines to negotiate the narrow streets there. So a specially built Fire Station was constructed on Commercial Road, designed by Alex Ingles and completed in 1914. The old station was converted into a meeting house by the Christian Brethren, renamed Slitrig Hall. The arch was bricked up and a stage was included in the interior. This was converted into a residential property in 2016, with the arch turned into a large window; additionally the baptismal pit (perhaps once a maintenance pit for the fire engines) was retained. The new station on Wilton Hill was opened in 1971. The old Commercial Road building became part of the Town yards, but being largely derelict was a victim of arson, and demolished in 2002.

Gadd (gawd) n. Job (1786–1869) English-born stocking-maker of the mid-19th century. He was born in Derbyshire, son of Thomas and Ann Follows. He came to Hawick some time in the 1830s, moving from Shepshed, Leicestershire. He was fond of giving speeches, and for a time was known as ‘the Dumb Precentor’ because he took over the Precentor’s seat in the Parish Church when the Precentor occupied a seat in the choir, even although he never himself sang a note. The family were living on Walter’s Wynd in 1841, at about 62 High Street in 1851 and at 1 Teviot Place in 1861. He married Catherine Foreman (1789–1850) in 1810. Their children, baptised in Shepshed, included: Ann (1812–28); Sarah (b.1815), who married Thomas Beresford in Leicestershire; Mary (b.1820), who married Alexander Mitchell in Melrose in 1841; Catherine (b.1823), who married John Gordon in Kelso in 1844; Martha (b.1825), who married stocking-maker James Harkness in Hawick in 1851; Jane (b.1827): Ann (again, b.c.1830), who married Peter Butler in Hawick in 1849 and died in Molong, New South Wales; and James (b.c.1832). He appears to have secondly married Margaret Halliday (from Lochmaben) in Hawick in 1854. Job (b.1817) son of Job, he was a stockingmaker like his father. He was born in Leicestershire and moved to Hawick as a child. He married Jane Scott in Hawick in 1842 and their children included Job (b.1843/4) and Elizabeth (b.1844/5).

In 1856 he secondly married Ann Pringle, and with her had further children Robert (b.1857), Catherine (b.1861) and James (b.1863). The family were living at 12 Sandbed in 1861 (also written ‘Gad’ and ‘Gedd’).

Gadeni (gaw-de-nee) n. an ancient tribe that lived south of the Forth, including present-day Lothian and Tweeddale, according to Roman geographers. The central town is supposed to have been near Jedburgh, but has also fancifully been suggested to have been nearer to Hawick (e.g. at Chapelhill).

Gairdner (gär-nur) n. (Gardner) George (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He is probably the George, son of James, baptised in Hawick in 1716. His wife was Mary Porteous (or ‘Partis’) and their children included: Walter (b.1742); James (b.1743); Janet (b.1744); George (b.1746); Andrew (b.1756); Mary (b.1758); Isabel (b.1762); and Margaret (b.1765). The witnesses in 1743 were ex-Bailie William Tudohope and mason Andrew Turnbull, in 1744 were Glover John Scott and merchant William Oliver, and in 1762 were tanner John Elliot and Church Officer Alexander Bunyan. In 1758 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Rae and Margaret Gardner (perhaps his sister) and another in 1760 for shoemaker James Porteous. In 1764 he witnessed a baptism for weaver Charles Scott and his wife Janet Porteous (who may have been his sister-in-law). He may be the shoemaker of that name who witnessed a baptism in 1786 for fellow shoemaker John Wiens. Gideon (d.1702) gardener in Hawick, on the 1693/4 subscribers’ list for the new Kirk bell. He was a resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. In 1701 he witnessed a baptism for Adam Scott, along with miller James Paterson. He married Margaret Davidson and their children included: James (b.1686). Probably the same Gideon later married Margaret Paterson (unless there is an error in surnames and there was only one wife). Their children included: Margaret (b.1700), who in 1719 married William Turnbull, weaver near the Westport; and Isobel (b.1702). The witnesses in 1700 were merchant George Martin and glover John Harrt. The baptism in 1702 was posthumous, with James Paterson, the child’s uncle, making ‘faith for her education’; the witnesses included Robert Thomson in Newmill and James Scott ‘Ormiston’. James (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick Parish. He witnessed baptisms in 1721 for merchant John Johnston in Hawick and in 1723 for workman James Dickson. In 1713 he married Isobel Renwick. Their children included: John (b.1714); George (b.1716); Margaret (b.1718); and Mary (b.1722). In 1721 he witnessed a baptism for merchant John Johnston in Hawick. The witnesses in 1718 were Thomas Hardie and David Miller. He may be the James who witnessed baptisms in Wilton in 1733 and 1736 (along with John) for Robert Renwick, who lived at the Sandbed. John (17th C.) resident of ‘oest the water’ (i.e. west of the Slitrig) on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. He is probably the gardener listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4 and the gardener who witnessed baptisms for gardener Thomas Boyd in 1699, George Andrew (servant to Douglas of Cavers), Robert (Lord) Oliver in 1704 and for shoemaker Robert Oliver in 1706. He is probably the John who, along with William (perhaps his brother or son) witnessed a baptism in 1709 for carrier John Hardie. He may be the John who was fined £10 in 1691 because he tried to run away down the Tolbooth stairs when cited by the Bailies. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, probably the second son of John who got married in 1716. In 1718 he was ‘in Sandbed’ when he and flesher Robert Renwick (also at the Sandbed) witnessed a baptism for innkeeper Adam Richardson. He may also be the John ‘Gardner’ (apparently written as ‘Glendinnen’ in one record) who witnessed a baptism in 1718 for flesher George Renwick. He was living at the Sandbed in 1721. In 1736 (along with James) he witnessed a baptism for Robert Renwick, who also lived at the Sandbed. He married Isobel Wilson (or ‘Wilkison’) in 1716; he was recorded as 2nd son to John in Wilton Parish and she was servant to Mr. James Innes. Their children included: John (b.1716) and Margaret (b.1717), baptised in Hawick; and James (b.1719), Janet (b.1721) and Isobel (b.1723), baptised in Wilton. The witnesses in 1721 were another John and William Gardner (who were surely relatives). John (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at the Sandbed in 1725. He appears to be distinct from the John who was married to Isobel Wilkie and lived at the Sandbed at the same time (and whose child’s baptism he witnessed in 1721). He married Mary Simpson in 1721, the marriage being proclaimed in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. Their children included: an unnamed child (b.1723); and Walter (b.1725). The witnesses in 1725 were John and Walter Scott. John Waldie (19th/20th C.) farm steward for the Earl of Minto at Hassendeanbank. In 1892 he married Helen Dickson, daughter of William Elliot and Christina Pow. His son Andrew (born before their marriage) took over as farm steward after him. The other children emigrated and were William, Christina Elliot, John, Betsy Waldie, Mary Helen McCreadie and James (‘Jim’). Robert (17th C.) resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He was recorded at the Sandbed in 1697. He married Agnes Scott and their children, born in Wilton, included: William (b.1697); and Agnes (b.1699), who married gardener Walter Scott in 1722. The witnesses in 1697 were John and Robert Scott. William (17th/18th C.) resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He was listed as a gardener among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He could be the William, married to Agnes Scott, whose son Robert was born in Wilton in 1697. He is probably the gardener who witnessed baptisms for weaver Andrew Jardine, younger, in 1703, 1711 and 1713. In 1703 he also witnessed a baptism for fellow gardener John Vair. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Isobell Morton in Hawick in 1702. Their children included Agnes (b.1705), with witnesses Michael Bridges and Adam Jardine. William (b.1683) born in Hawick, son of Robert. He may be the William who, along with John (perhaps his brother) witnessed a baptism in 1709 for carrier John Hardie. He is probably the merchant who witnessed baptisms in 1710 for carrier David Wilson and in 1712 for carrier John Hardie. He is probably the merchant William who was elected as Cornet in 1710; if so he cannot be the William who married Isobell Morton in Hawick in 1702, but could be the William who married Agnes Aitkin in August of 1710. Their children included: Margaret (b.1711); William (b.1713); and John (b.1716). He is probably the William, merchant of Hawick recorded in 1721 when his servant Thomas Weddell was rebuked for fighting on the Sabbath (spelled ‘Gardiner’, ‘Gardener’, ‘Garner’ and variants).

Gairie Gill (gä-ree-gil) n. stream that rises fairly close to the Nine Stane Rig and runs south to join the Roughley Burn.

gaiter-trei (gā-’ur-tri) n., arch. the Bramble bush — ‘Gaiter-tree, An old name given to the Bramble, Teviotd.’ [JoJ].

gaitin (gā-’in) n., arch. the act of setting up corn sheaves to dry, a single sheaf of corn, tied near the head and spread out at the foot to dry more quickly, a stack of corn set up in this way (noted by J. Jamieson; cf. gaiter).

gaivel (gā-vul) n., arch. a gable — ‘Item, what-somever person that mindes to big ane house, he sall haif half gewill of his nichbour’s rowmes, for the whilk he sall haif libertie to big and lay to his gewill’ [BR1640] ‘...the gavel to be built with stone and lime, with three stone chimneys in the south end ... ’ [JJV], ‘...at the ‘gavel’ of the houses belonging to Mrs. Inglis and Mrs. Gladstanes’ [WAPJ] (also written ‘gavel’; formerly ‘gewill’ and variants).

Gala (gaw-lu, gaw-la, gaw-li) n. Galashiels, the traditional rival town of Hawick. It is built in the narrow valley of the Gala Water near the confluence with the Tweed on the A7 and a former station on the Waverley Line. It was known as a producer of a kind of coarse grey (or sometimes blue) cloth in the 17th and 18th centuries, and there were early waulk mills there, used by weavers throughout the district. The town developed along with the textile industry, and the Scottish College of Textiles is here, part of Heriot-Watt University since 1998. The Braw Lad’s Gathering in June celebrates the town’s 1599 charter and was established as long ago as 1930. It includes a ride to the Raid Stane, where supposedly some English soldiers were killed while picking plums in 1337, an event also commemorated on the town’s coat of arms. The betrothal of Margaret Tudor to James IV occurred at the Market Cross in 1503. The lands were owned by the Crown in the early 16th century. If the town has a jewel it is Old Gala House, with parts dating from 1583. Now a museum, it was the former home of the Lairds of Galashiels, who were first Pringles and then Scotts. The Scotts of Gala burial aisle dates from 1636, although both the original church and the gothic replacement were demolished. New Gala House was home to ‘St. Trinian’s’ School during WWII, but was also demolished. The ‘Hunters’ Haa’ was an old peel tower that stood till the late 18th century, while the town’s Tolbooth was demolished in 1880. The Cornmill Fountain is a converted mill lade. The ‘Border Reiver’ equestrian statue is by Thomas Clapperton, a Gala native, outside the 1867 Burgh Chambers, which have an imposing clock tower by Robert Lorimer (added 1924–27). The main road from Hawick to Edinburgh only went through Gala from 1818, previously being via Fairnilee and Clovenfords. The town did not become a municipal burgh until 1864, although it had possessed burgh of barony status since 1599. The origin of the rivalry with Hawick is a mystery, but dates back at least to the time of the Carterhaugh Baa, when the Gala men switched sides. Population (1991) 13,753. It is said that if Gala didn’t exist, then Hawick and Selkirk folk would have invented it in order to have something to agree on — ‘ ‘Bout forest trees let Gala brag, We carena what belong them’ [JT], ‘...The Hawick team tae play fower games And oo’ve picked twae Gala reserves’ [AY] (note that the pronunciation of the final vowel sound can vary, and hence it is colloquially spelled ‘Gali’ etc.; the meaning of the name is ‘huts on the Gala Water’; Teries often talk about going ‘ower ti Gala’ rather than using another preposition; it is ‘Galowaschelis’ in 1456, ‘Galloschelis’ in 1512 1525 and 1549, ‘Gallosheliis’ in 1574, ‘Gallowshiellis’ in 1598, ‘Gallascheilles’ in 1633 and ‘Gallaschiells’ in 1651).

Galabrae (gaw-lu-brā) n. home of Peter Laidlaw in the late 19th and early 20th centuries. This may either be ‘Galahaw Braefit’ or one of the houses at Howdenburn.

Gala Law (gaw-lu-law) n. hill on the northern outskirts of Hawick, 221 m high, with a white concrete triangulation point, and also he name for the surrounding area. Foxhounds used to meet there in the mid-19th century. The hillside was set on fire to commemorate victory in the Crimean war in 1856 and took decades to recover — ‘For I like auld Hawick Wi’ a’ her kindly folk Frae Galalaw tae Haggisha’ And auld St. Mary’s Clock’ [RMc], Galalaw

‘Gala Law ablaze wi’ colour Wi’ golden broom and whins …’ [AY] (the origin is possibly from Old English for ‘gallows hill’, like the similar names near Biggar, Kelso and Gullane, and certainly having no connection with Galashiels; it seems an unlikely place for a public gallows to be situated, although it is possible that it served this purpose in the old Barony of Chamberlain Newton).

Galalaw (gaw-lu-law) n. farm above Guthrie Drive, on the slopes of Gala Law. The lands were owned by a branch of the Scotts from at least 1494 until 1762. In 1494 James Scott of Kirkurd granted the lands to his son David (later of Hassendean); at that time it was valued at 6 merks annually, and was held for the annual payment of 3 silver pennies at the Feast of the Pentecost, if asked. David was further recorded in 1507/8 and 1510. John Scott of Hassendean owned the lands in 1528/9. In 1534 Gavin Elliot sold the 40-shilling lands of ‘Neder Gallelaw’ to William Scott, the sealing of the letter of reversion being done at Hassendean Kirk. James Renwick was tenant there in 1628. It is probably the land (valued at £156) owned by a Scott (first name not recorded) lifreuter of Newton in 1643. William Scott of Galalaw paid tax on £156 in the Land Tax Rolls of 1663 and 1678. Robert Scott was recorded there in 1681. The land there was part of Hassendean Parish until being assigned to Wilton in 1690. Tax was paid on 5 hearths in 1694 for ‘Gallalaw his hous and cottars’. William Turnbull was there in 1697, Robert Elliot in 1704, John Easton in 1723, Walter Veitch in 1724, John Scott in 1746, Adam Laidlaw in 1747 and Thomas Scott in 1751. Alexander Scott of Galalaw is recorded in 1718. Alexander and Robert Pott were owners in 1788. James Aitkin is recorded there in 1797, when he owned 3 horses. The lands (or at least part of the lands) were owned by William Oliver ‘Auld Cash’ when he died in 1808; in his will they were described as ‘the six merks lands of Galalaw …lying within the old parish of Hassendean now annexed to the Parish of Wilton, Barony of Chamberlain Newton and Shire of Roxburgh. Robert Pott was recorded as owner in 1811, when it was valued at £156. Robert Turnbull was owner from at least 1821 and later sold a small part to Chisholme of Stirches. In 1851 Robert Turnbull farmed 150 acres there and James Elliot farmed 250 acres. The hill has been taken over by whins and has a triangulation pillar on top (it is ‘Gallowlaw’ in 1494, ‘Gallolaw’ in 1501, ‘Galllaw’ in 1507/8 and 1510, ‘Gallowlaw’ in 1511 and 1581, ‘Gallolaw’ in 1528/9, ‘Gallalaw’ in 1663 and 1681, ‘Gallow Law’ and ‘Gallalau’ in 1690, ‘Gallalaw’ in 1718 and 1770, ‘Gallolaw’ in 1786 and ‘Galllaw’ in 1821; the origin may related to ‘gallows’, as for similarly named places elsewhere, although there is no known connection to hangings).

Galalaw Braefit (gaw-lu-law-brä-fi) n. former farmstead at the foot of Galalaw hill, possibly also the same as ‘Galabrac’. James Turnbull was there in 1841.

Galalaw Cottages (gaw-lu-law-ko’-ee-jeex) n. Cottages near Galalaw farm ??.

Galalaw Knowes (gaw-lu-law-nowz) n. former alternative name for the Miller’s Knowes (the origin is probably the same as for ‘Gala Law’, but there is no obvious relation between them).

Galalaw Road (gaw-lu-law-röd) n. street in the Burnfoot area, named after the hill on the other side of the A7.

Galalean (gaw-lu-lee-in) n. someone from the town of Galashiels, not to be confused with ‘Gallean’ or ‘Galleealan’, both of which suggest a certain nobility.

Galashiels (gaw-lu-sheelz) n. full name of Gala, an unattractive town that has to be passed through on the A7 to Edinburgh (in early records it is ‘Gallow-shiels’ etc.).

Galashiels grey (gaw-lu-sheelz-grä) n. course, grey cloth, formerly manufactured in Galashiels – ‘It is interesting to find him next year writing to a business correspondent in the ‘old country’ to send ‘Galacheils Gray at 6d or 7d per ell, to be here in September or October for winter only’ [HAST1921] (the cloth was probably made from a combination of white wool and black wool; it is recorded in 1736 that ‘at Gallowshiels are made a few coarse Kerseys, called Gallowshiels Grays, for Home-consumption’).

Gala Witter (gaw-lu-wi’-ur) n. Gala Water, a river that joins the Tweed from the north-west at Galashiels. The river is about 21 miles long. The Waverley Line crossed it no less than 15 times, with most of the bridges still existing – ‘Tho’ the Esk has pearly sprays, And the Gala windin’ ways; Th’e some bonnie banks and braes Aboot Hawick’ [TK] (it is ‘Galu’ in 1268).

Galbraith (gawl-bräth) n. John G. (19th/20th C.) native of Hawick, he moved to Glasgow and wrote the romantic rieving book ‘Rough-Riding Scots’ in 1910. Michael John priest at S.S.
Mary and David from 2008. He was previously assistant at St. John the Baptist in Corstorphine.

Rev. Robert (1866–1937) educated at Glasgow University, he was licensed by Paisley Presbytery in 1891. He was licentiate at Saughtree Kirk for a few months in 1892. He was then assistant at Linlithgow, ordained at Buckie in 1898 and was later minister of Fordoun. William (16th/17th C.) mentioned as minister of Bedrule in 1599, having previously been at Penicuik. He had a son called John.

gale (gāl) n., arch. collective noun for geese – ‘A gale of geese, a flock of geese, Teviotd. This is said to be a very ancient phrase’ [JoJ].

Gali see Gala

Gall (gawl) n. George (19th/20th C.) joiner in Hawick. He married Margaret, daughter of tailor John Riddle; she died in 1896, aged 39. Their son Robert was a collector with the Gas Company in Hawick.

Gallaslande (gaw-lis-lawnd) n. former lands in the Slitrig valley, listed in 1547/8 in an English communication about farms they had burned. They were the property of Clement Crozier, along with ‘Hoble Knowes’ (probably Hummelknowes). It seems likely that this is the same place as Hilliesland.

gallayniel (gaw-lā-neel) n., arch. a big, glutinous, ruthless man – ‘Wae be to them for a pack o’ greedy gallayniels – they haena the mence of a miller’s yaud’ [ES] (noted in Roxburghshire by J. Jamieson).

Gallipoli (gaw-li-po-lee) n. Turkish peninsula that was the site of a disastrous military campaign of 1915. The 1st Battalion K.O.S.B. were there from the beginning, late April 1915, with the 1/4th K.O.S.B. (Territorials) arriving in June. Many local soldiers of the 1/4th K.O.S.B. were involved in a particular offensive on 12th July; with the benefit of hindsight it is clear that many strategic mistakes were made, in particular the instructions to take the 3rd Turkish trench led to confusion when the trench turned out not to exist, and the soldiers were caught in fire from all sides when they overshot and then tried to turn back. More than 80 men from Hawick and district lost their lives on that day, most remaining under the fields where they fell. The whole campaign was a disaster, with the peninsula with over 120 local men buried or lost there. The peninsula was evacuated by January 1916 after the futility of the whole military campaign became clear to the commanders. A memorial wreath has been laid at the Horse by the Callants Club (first in 1916, then annually from 1930) ‘In remembrance of the Hawick Territorials of the 1/4th Kings Own Scottish Borderers who fell bravely charging the Turkish trenches, Gallipoli, 12th July 1915. The ancient spirit of our fathers hath not gone.’ A commemoration at the War Memorial was later added to the events to mark that day. In 1926 several locals were able to travel to visit the place where their loved ones had fallen, and a marble plaque from the town was installed at the Helles Memorial. In 1933 the 1/4th K.O.S.B. Gallipoli Comrades Association was formed, based in Hawick and holding an annual dinner on 12th July. The Callants’ Club raised money to send 6 veterans back for the 50th anniversary; a special memorial service was held in Trinity Church and 2 cypress trees, grown from Gallipoli seeds were planted at either side of the War Memorial (although they succumbed to the Scottish winter). In 1974 the Callants’ Club took over the financial responsibility of the 12th July commemoration and an oak tree was planted to replace the cedars. The last Comrade died in 1992, and thereafter the Callants’ Club have continued to lay wreaths at the Horse and the War Memorial. To mark the centenary, a group of 20 Teries visited the peninsula, marking the resting places of all known local men there – ‘A tear dims my eye as I view the memorial, Head bowed, I remember how callants like me Laid down their lives to ensure us our freedom And lie now at Ypres and Gallipoli’ [IWL].

gallivant (ga-li-van’ v. to go about idly (particularly noted in Teviotdale by J. Jamieson, suggesting the local usage may be more common than in standard English).

the Gallopin Chairer (thal-gaw-lo-pin-chār-jur) n. nickname for James Hislop, also known as the ‘Gallopin’ Cadger’ – ‘Black Andra’ and the Birsin’ Badger, Tammy Roberton, Deevil Bell; The Blue Laird and the Gallopin’ Cadger, Baillie Birsin and the Mell’ [HI].

Galloway (ga-lō-wā) n. Rev. Alexander (1847–1926) born in Tillicoultry, son of William and Isabella Dawson. He received his B.D. from Edinburgh University in 1872, was licensed by Edinburgh Presbytery that year and became assistant at Bowden, Lasswade and St. Mary’s.
Partick. In 1876 he became minister at Milton of Balgonie and was admitted as assistant and successor to Minto Kirk in 1878, taking over fully from Rev. J.P. Macmorland in 1893. He was Lecturer on Church Music to the Divinity Students of the Scottish Universities 1912–14. In 1885 he married Margaret Rankin, daughter of William Smith, minister of Douglas. Their children were: William G., merchant in Japan; died in New York 1936; Isabella Dawson; Elizabeth Eleanor; and Alexander, Lieutenant in the K.O.S.B., later Instructor at Camberley Staff College. He was one of the compilers of the ‘Scottish Hymnal’ (1885), ‘The Scottish Mission Hymnbook’ (1912), as well as helping with ‘Hymns, Ancient and Modern’ (1889). Sir Alexander (1895–1977) born at Minto manse, youngest child of Rev. Alexander. He was educated on the Isle of Man, and volunteered when war broke out in 1914, joining the Cameronians, then seeing active service with the K.O.S.B. at Gallipoli, being one of the last to leave the Peninsula. He received the M.C. in 1918. He remained in the army after WWI, eventually becoming an instructor at Camberley Staff College, then commanding the 1st Cameronians and the Staff College at Haifa. He served as chief staff officer for the 8th Army in Egypt. He then had a series of posts, including after WWII being Commander-in-Chief of British forces in Austria. He was knighted in 1949, retired in 1950 and died at Norham, Northumberland. He married Dorothy Hadden, daughter of Frank Hadden White from Northumberland, and they had 3 sons. William (19th/20th C.) manufacturer of William Galloway & Sons. He had a boiler-house and dyeworks built on Commercial Road in 1888. This lay opposite the Victoria Laundry and was later occupied by Renwick’s. His firm only occupied this building for about 5 years.

the Gallops (thu-gaw-lups) n. name for relatively new houses near Hassendeanbank. They were built on the pond for the former water wheel, which was filled in in the 1970s. The name comes from the popular name for some nearby fields.

galloway (ga-lō-wai) n. a small, study breed of horse, originally from Galloway, often used as a pack animal – ‘... a party of Tynedale men passed the window in tattered clothes, driving lean galloways laden with coals’ [WSB].

gallus (ga-lus) adj., poet. bold, daring, self-confident, rash, reckless – ‘... Ready to roar away in the gloaming Wi’ gallus young lads that think lichtly o’ scaith’ [DH], ‘... Airie o’ the Reuch Sike, gallus auld Airchie, The lang nicht afore him, now’ [DH]; galore (ga-lōr) n., poet. plenty, superabundance – ‘An’ he gæfe thame galore for thair greed ...’ [HSR].

galoshins (ga-lō-shinz) n. traditional folk play, common in many parts of Scotland, a variant of the ‘resurrection’ drama found in many parts of Britain (e.g. in England, where it is an example of a ‘mummers play’). The words of the play were passed down orally, and involve a hero called ‘Galooshin’, sometimes St. George, a doctor, and other characters. The height of popularity may have been the mid-19th century. It was typically performed for money by groups of ‘guisers’, usually young boys, visiting inns or private houses. Its timing was connected with either Halloween or Hogmanay (like other ‘guising’). It may be that this is the longest surviving example of a richer tradition dating back to Mediæval times. It is unclear how prevalent this play was in the Hawick area, but there are still some recollections in the early 21st century, from families connected to Bowden and Boucher.
galt (gawl̂t) n., arch. a castrated boar (noted by J. Jamieson as a Roxburghshire word, but perhaps in error).

Galt (gawl̂t) n. former name for a town in Ontario, Canada, which was a common destination for Hawick emigrants in the 19th century. Settlement in an area along the Grand River was promoted by William Dickson, who sold lots to predominantly Scottish settlers. The town was originally called Shade’s Mill and was renamed Galt in 1825, after John Galt, Scottish novelist and Commissioner of the Canada Company. The town grew as an agricultural hub, with industry developing from the 1830s and the town becoming known as ‘the Manchester of Canada’. Originally the largest town in the area, it was eventually eclipsed by Berlin, which was later renamed...
Kitchener. The city of Galt continued to exist as a separate entity until 1973, when it became part of the new city of Cambridge, adjacent to Waterloo. Many street names in the area reveal the early Scottish influence. Local families with connections to this area include Aitkin, Amos, Cavers, Dryden, Kersel, Lamb, Lee (including James Paris Lee), Murray, Scott and Spalding.

lame – ‘A game leg, a leg hurt by accident, so as to make the person lame, Roxb.; also Northumb.’ [JoJ] (compare the English ‘gammy’).

Gamel (ga-nel) n. clerk of the 12th century, during the reign of David I. With the permission of his sons Osulf and Ughtred, he granted the lands of ‘Caverum’ to Jedburgh Abbey probably around 1138. This gift was confirmed in charters by Earl Henry and by King William (in the period 1165–70), and reconfirmed in 1229. This was probably part of the Barony of Cavers (although Cavers was there in 1716 when he had a child baptised in ‘Thorniehill’, and in 1621 and 1667 were described as ‘Thornhill and Ettrickside and were formerly referred to as a steading of Mount Common. They were once Crown property, in the King’s hands in the 1480s, but granted to Adam Scott in 1490 ‘without grassum owing to its sterility’, and again in 1492. Alexander Lauder was recorded there in 1502. The lands were again assigned to Adam Scott of Tushielaw in 1510. William Scott in Sundhope was tenant in 1541, paying £14. William Scott in Hartwoodmyres assigned his steading there (‘callit Etrriksyd’) to his son John, acknowledging an arrangement already made with Simon Scott in Thirlestane; the superior at that time was William Cranston of that Ilk. They were held by the Scotts of Thirlestane in 1573, but shortly afterwards passed to the Scotts of Tushielaw and then back again, following a ‘decret arbitral’ by Sir Walter of Branxholme in 1603. ‘Mr’ Arthur Scott of Gamescleuch was Laird in the 1590s. The dispute over these lands grew into a feud between the Thirlestane and Tushielaw branches. The murder of Walter Scott of Gamescleuch by John Scott of Tushielaw in 1609 may have been the inspiration for the ‘Dowie Dens of Yarrow’. The lands were also known as ‘Thorniehill’, and in 1621 and 1667 were described having an ‘outset called Etriksyd’. James Easton was there in 1716 when he had a child baptised in Robertson. James and Thomas Dodds were there in 1784 and James Tod in 1791. It seems that an exchange of land was made in about 1812 with the farm of Annelshope. There is now a caravan site there – ‘Gae warn the lads of Thirlstone, Gammyscleucht’ in 1479, ‘Gammilliscleuch’ in 1486, ‘Gilmynscleuch’ in 1490, ‘Gammilliscleuch’ and ‘Gemmyscleucht’ in 1492, ‘gammilliscluch’ in 1492, ‘gammilliscluch’ in 1492, ‘gammilliscluch’ in 1492, ‘gammilliscluch’ in 1492, ‘gammilliscluch’ in 1492.

Gamel (ga-nel) n. clerk of the 12th century, during the reign of David I. With the permission of his sons Osulf and Ughtred, he granted the lands of ‘Caverum’ to Jedburgh Abbey probably around 1138. This gift was confirmed in charters by Earl Henry and by King William (in the period 1165–70), and reconfirmed in 1229. This was probably part of the Barony of Cavers (although Cavers Carre is a possibility).

the Games (thu-gāmz) n. the Common Riding Games, held at Volunteer Park, also sometimes called ‘the Sports’. Amateur games, now long abandoned, were held on the Friday, with professional games on the Saturday, now moved to the Sunday. Until the early 19th century the Games were entirely amateur, with professional sportsmen only appearing later. In earlier times there was less of a distinction between the Games and the Races. In the 19th century there were Games on the Friday afternoon (after the Dinner) and on the Saturday morning, which were held at the Common Haugh, and included sprints and middle-distance running, hurdles, walking, jumping of several varieties, quoiting, shot-putt, wrestling, Highland dancing and costume contests. There were also special races for boys and for old men. Professional cycling races were a feature in the very late 1800s. They were held on the Saturday morning at the Haugh from about 1855–67 and moved to the afternoon in 1868. The ‘Shows’ would also accompany the Games on the Haugh, and this must have been true from early times. The Games were moved to the Volunteer 1893. The Amateur and Professional Games were switched back and forth between the Friday and Saturday in the early 20th century. The Amateur Games ending up on the Friday by 1913 and were discontinued in 1961. The Cornet stopped attending the Saturday Games from 1964. It became a tradition for the ‘Big Power’ to engage in a pillow-fight balanced on a beam, and for this to take place at the Games. The Games were held on the Saturday before Common Riding week in 2005.

Gamescleuch (gāmz-klooch) n. ruined 16th century tower near Ettrick village, on the opposite side of the valley to Thirlestane. It is said to have been built for Simon Scott (2nd son of Sir John of Thirlestane), who may have been poisoned by his step-mother on the eve of his wedding. The lands there were also referred to as Thornhill and Ettrickside and were formerly referred to as a steading of Mount Common. They were once Crown property, in the King’s hands in the 1480s, but granted to Adam Scott in 1490 ‘without grassum owing to its sterility’, and again in 1492. Alexander Lauder was recorded there in 1502. The lands were again assigned to Adam Scott of Tushielaw in 1510. William Scott in Sundhope was tenant in 1541, paying £14. William Scott in Hartwoodmyres assigned his steading there (‘callit Etrriksyd’) to his son John, acknowledging an arrangement already made with Simon Scott in Thirlestane; the superior at that time was William Cranston of that Ilk. They were held by the Scotts of Thirlestane in 1573, but shortly afterwards passed to the Scotts of Tushielaw and then back again, following a ‘decret arbitral’ by Sir Walter of Branxholme in 1603. ‘Mr’ Arthur Scott of Gamescleuch was Laird in the 1590s. The dispute over these lands grew into a feud between the Thirlestane and Tushielaw branches. The murder of Walter Scott of Gamescleuch by John Scott of Tushielaw in 1609 may have been the inspiration for the ‘Dowie Dens of Yarrow’. The lands were also known as ‘Thorniehill’, and in 1621 and 1667 were described having an ‘outset called Etriksyd’. James Easton was there in 1716 when he had a child baptised in Robertson. James and Thomas Dodds were there in 1784 and James Tod in 1791. It seems that an exchange of land was made in about 1812 with the farm of Annelshope. There is now a caravan site there – ‘Gae warn the lads of Thirlstone, Gammilliscleuch’.

Gas (gas) n. Hawick’s gas lighting first appeared on the High Street in 1831, being the first among Border towns (and replacing the 60 oil lamps of 1813). The lighting ceremony was celebrated with a banquet. Electric lighting arrived in the early 20th century and one of the last lamps (from Elm Grove) is preserved in the Museum. Hawick Gaslight Company started in 1830 on part of the old Under Haugh (now Commercial Road), moving to Mansfield Road around 1882. In the early years the company was run by a manager with a single assistant. The manager’s house was formerly at the other side of the ford at the foot of Walter’s Wynd. The company also had a show-room at 66 High Street. Nationalised as part of Scottish Gas in 1948, the main works were dismantled in 1968 after conversion from coal gas to natural gas in 1964. The town was converted around 1970, with new pipes etc., to use the North Sea supply. However, the gasometers on Mansfield Road continued to be used as holders for the high pressure gas delivered from Granton in the Lothians.

Gatehoosecote

Gatehoosecote (gā-tees-, gā'-ces-kō', gā'-hoos-kō') n. Gatehoosecote, farm between Abbotrule and Hallrule Mill on the Foderlee Burn. John Turnbull was recorded there in 1493. John, Andrew and Thomas Turnbull were recorded there in 1502. In 1516 the tenants were Andrew Turnbull, William his brother, Thomas, Patrick and David. The lands were acquired in 1569 (along with several others) by Adam French and were described as being ‘with woods’ in 1588. Jock Turnbull was tenant there in 1575. There were Lorraines there in the early 17th century. It was among lands whose superiority was inherited by daughters of George Scott (brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade) in 1670, when it was described as having a mill. This was probably a small threshing mill, powered by water from a pond. The lands (or their superiority) were among those inherited by William Kerr of Abbotrule in 1680. John Shiel was a tenant there in 1684 when he was listed as a fugitive who had attended conventicles. In 1694 there were 3 householders (probably tenants) listed, Margaret Lorraine, Thomas Pringle and William Turnbull, as well as 3 cottars. It was long part of the Abbotrule estate, although linen near estate (although this is debated). A newer house referred to as ‘New Gateshaugh’ was built in about 1522 and also burned by the English in 1545. The estate was sold by John Ker to Sir William Scott of Auncrum in 1749. In 1758 Scott sold the estate to William Kerr, Chamberlain to the Duke of Roxburghe (the origin is probably from Old English for ‘goat’s wood’; it is first recorded in the mid-15th century as ‘Gaitheschaw’).

gatewards (gā'-wurds) adv., prep., poet. in the direction of, directly towards – ‘I wull cum intil thy hous in the multetud o’ thy mercie; an’ in thy feær wull I worship gaitwairds thy haly temple’ [HSR]. ‘I am my beloefet’s, an’ his desæyre is gaitwairds me’ [HSR] (also written ‘gaitwairds’ and sometimes ‘gaithwaird’).

Gaylor (ga-lurz) n. David (1846/7–1924) from the Dunbar area, he came to Hawick as a young man to learn the watchmaking trade with Mr. Gowans and Mr. Rutherford. He then went briefly to Bishop Auckland before returning to Hawick in 1875 to set up his own watchmaker’s and jeweller’s business. This was originally based at 14 Howegate, moving to 59 High Street about 1877, where he worked for 47 years. He was an early photographer around Hawick and would put on shows in the Exchange Hall and elsewhere, with his son William assisting, and his niece Dorothy providing piano accompaniment. The showing of local slideshows was continued by his son William and lasted until the 1950s; his early ‘magic lantern slides’ collection is still in the Museum. His Border Kinematograph business (with partner local manufacturer Sime) made films in the period 1899–1903 and they at one point considered buying the ‘Wee Thea’, but wound up due to lack of financing. Their films represent the earliest moving images of Hawick Common Riding and other local events, and are only a few years later than the first known films in Scotland. He was for a long time a Deacon in the Congregational Kirk and is said to have identified with the ‘Psychic Movement’ in later life. He married Jeanie (or Jane), daughter of blacksmith William Pow, and she died in 1919, aged 70. Their children were: David William, who became a Congregational minister at the East E.U. Church in Greenock; Elizabeth S., also known as ‘Bessie’; William Pow, who followed his father as an optician; and Margaret Jean, who married Andrew Dalgleish and had 2 sons who were Galashiels builders. William Pow ‘W.P.’ (1880/1–1963) son of David, whose jewellers business he carried on at 59 High Street. He was known locally as a sportsman (e.g. in the Cycling Club), amateur actor and singer, who made Adam Grant’s ‘Three Humorous Songs’ his own in the first quarter of the 20th century. He served as the 5th Treasurer for the Congregational Kirk. He continued his father’s interest in photography, continuing ‘lantern slide’ shows until the 1950s. After WWI he also became an optician, giving up the jewellery side of the business. He married Helen Scott Clark, who died in 1964, aged 78. David William Pow was their son.

particularly in rural areas. He was the original for ‘Edie Ochiltree’ in Sir Walter Scott’s ‘The Antiquary’. He was a soldier in his youth and was a popular teller of stories (claiming to have fought at Culloden). He travelled around on his own horse, usually sleeping in an outhouse. He wore a blue gown, broad bonnet and strong iron-soled shoes and carried a walking stick about as tall as himself. He was also a great player of draughts.
It was said that he had a nephew who farmed in Ayrshire and grew rich on the profits from his begging. His gravestone in Roxburgh cemetery is inscribed ‘Behold the end o’ it – The body of the gentleman beggar ANDREW GEMMELS alias EDIE OCHILTREE was interred here who died

The George (ˈθi:n-ˈjörj) n. popular name for the Whisky House Mill, which stood opposite St. Cuthbert’s Church, also known as ‘the Royal George’. It was a stocking-shop, with the building later becoming part of Melrose’s engineering works.

George (ˈjörj) n. name of 4 British Kings, George I (1660–1727) King from 1714, first of the house of Hanover. He was nominated as King by Queen Anne, under political pressure to bypass James Stewart. In 1714 the Council and Burgesses of Hawick had to swear an oath of allegiance to the new King. In opposition to his rule the Jacobite rebellion occurred in 1715, although with little support in the Borders. The King spent much of his life in Hanover, and never learned to speak much English – ‘Your Geordie was a German laird, That used to delve his ain kail yard!’ [T]. George II (1683–1760) King from 1727, son of George I. George III (1738–1820) King from 1760, grandson of George II. He initially took an active role in government (losing America for example). However, he had a nervous breakdown, suffered from the hereditary disease porphyria, and was declared insane in 1810. His domestic life was uncharacteristically tranquil, with his devoted wife Charlotte Sophia. It is recorded that a fiddler was paid for playing before the Bailies and Justices of the Peace in Hawick when he was proclaimed as King in 1760 and further money was paid for liquor at his accession to the throne in 1761. Hawick officials used to regularly celebrate his June 4th birthday with the ‘King’s Rantin’. Half-pennies of his reign were often counterfeit, merchants in Jedburgh refusing to accept them, leading to a legal battle in 1785, which went all the way to the Lords. George IV (1762–1830) King from 1820. He was appointed as Regent in 1811, with his father being unfit to rule. In Hawick there was a festive meeting to mark the occasion, with Bailie James Oliver proposing the toast ‘The Mucking o’ Geordie’s byre’. In 1822 he became the first reigning monarch to visit Scotland since 1650. He stayed for 2 weeks at Dalkeith House as a guest of the Duke of Buccleuch. In Edinburgh, George IV Bridge was named after him. Obsese and unpopular, it was hoped his visit would calm the rising Radical movement in Scotland. The event was partly organised by Sir Walter Scott, and led to an upsurge in the use of tartan for formal occasions. He has been portrayed by Rupert Everett, Peter Ustinov and Hugh Laurie. George V King of Hanover (1819–78) son of Ernest Augustus, born 3 days after his cousin, Queen Victoria. His full name was George Frederick Alexander Charles Ernest Augustus, and like other members of his family, was usually considered to have no surname. He became blind in a childhood accident. He acceded to the Hanoverian throne in 1851, when he also became the 2nd Duke of Cumberland and Teviotdale. He escaped to Austria when Hanover was annexed by Prussia in 1866. He married Princess Marie Alexandrina, daughter of Joseph, Duke of Saxe-Altenburg. He had one son, Ernest Augustus William Adolphus George Frederick, who became the 3rd and last Duke of Cumberland and Teviotdale. He spent most of his last years in Paris, where he died. George VI (1865–1936) King from 1911. For his coronation celebrations in Hawick there was a procession from the Town Hall to the Old Parish Church, and then a parade up to the Mote for a ceremony in which the Duke of Buccleuch handed over that land to the town. George VII (1895–1952) King from 1936. He made a ‘secret’ visit to Hawick in 1943 to inspect the troops and returned in 1947 with Queen Elizabeth (the Queen Mother) and other members of the Royal Family, including the future Queen. His coronation in 1937 was marked in Hawick with a great parade of bands and floats, some of which exists on film. Trees were also planted in the Park, and a miniature silver spade used on this occasion (presented to Provost Fisher’s wife) is in the Museum.

Geppit (ˈge-pee,-pi) pp., poet. gaped – ‘The hurcheon raxed his scory chafts, And gepit wi’ gurning joye’ [JTe] (see also Gapit).

The German Cemetery (ˈθu:n-ˌjer-min-ˌsee-mi-ˌree) n. small cemetery at Stobs Camp, in use from 1915 to 1919, with a monumental cairn erected in 1917. A plaque was inscribed with the words ‘Unseren Kameraden die fern d. Heimat starben’ (‘To our comrades who died far from home’). 35 soldiers, 4 sailors and 6 civilians were buried there, with the remains being disinterred in 1962 and reburied at Cannock Chase. The memorial was demolished, but reconstructed in 2018, using most of the same stones.
the German Gun

the German Gun (thu- jer-min-gun) n. artillery gun captured by the 7th/8th K.O.S.B. at Happy Valley, monchy, near Arras during WWI. It sat outside Wilton Lodge Museum until sold as scrap for the war effort in 1940.

Gibbie’s Dance

Gibbie the Gowk (gi-bee-thu-gowk) n. daft fictional character in J.E.D. Murray’s play ‘The Gutterbludes’, where he is described simply as ‘A Hawick worthy’.

gibble-gabble (gi-bul-gaw-bul) n., arch. idle, babbling talk (an example of ‘rhyming reduplication’).

Gibby’s Sike (gi-bee-sik) n. stream that rises near Penchrise farm and runs in a north-easterly direction, through Gibby’s Cleuch Culvert on the Waverley Line, to join the Slitrig Water (it is marked ‘Back Sike’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

giblich (gi-litch) n., arch. an unfledged crow (noted by J. Jamieson).

Gib Nose (gi-noz) n. formerly an area near Princes Street, explicitly referring to a small piece of land bounded by Albion Place (now Princes Street), Wilton Crescent and the former Wilton Crescent Lane. Owned by the Langlands family, it was first feuded to James Davidson in 1768. William Nichol is recorded as farmer there in 1797. It is marked on Wood’s map of 1824, with ‘Mrs. Davidson’ as owner. There were 6 separate households recorded there on the 1841 census (named probably for the triangular shape of the land and possibly an early association with someone called Gilbert; also spelled ‘Gibsnose’ and ‘Gib’s Nose’).

Gib o Drythropple (gi-õ-drI-thro-pul) n. nickname for Gilbert Aitken.

Gib o Holmsteed (gi-õ-hom-steed) n. former name for lands in Liddesdale, recorded in 1541 as ‘Gib of Holme Steid’. It is unclear where these lands were, or what the name might designate.

Gibsnose see Gib Nose

Gibson (gi-sin) n. Adam ‘Yeddie’ (19th C.) Hawick man, famous for his angling skills, for whom the song ‘Lean Yeddie Gibson’ was written after his death while fishing the Teviot in the 1850s. He is buried in the old Kirkyard. George (18th C.) witnessed a baptism for John Thomson in the Flex in Hawick in 1726. John (1774–1814) born in Ayr. He was a soldier with the 94th Regiment of Foot. Posted to Hawick in 1795 (probably related to the French prisoners of war), he married Janet, daughter of Hawick butcher Gideon Renwick. Posted elsewhere, the couple returned to Hawick around 1802 and he worked as a nailer.
Gibson’s

He then re-enlisted, deserted, was press ganged into the navy, jumped ship, worked in Langholm and Kelso, and was acquitted for desertion. He was back in Hawick by 1810, and the family had 11 children. He is recorded as a nailer in 1810 when 2 of his unnamed children died. In late 1813 he murdered his wife at their home in the Mill Port, apparently accusing her 12th child of being fathered by a Frenchman, and of poisoning him. He was the last person to be hung in Hawick, the event taking place in the Haugh; this was unusual, and may in fact never have previously happened in the Town. He wrote ‘Some particulars of the life of John Gibson’ while awaiting execution. It is basically a screed on the evils of drink. Perhaps the only child to survive was Gideon, who was a witness to the murder, but at 10 years old too young to give evidence. John, W.S. (19th C.) solicitor who was an agent for the Buccleuch estates, in at least the period 1822–78. He was originally called ‘younger’. He was present at Branxholme at the banquet held in honour of the Duke of Buccleuch in 1839. Miss (19th C.) teacher at the girl’s school at Cleuch Head in Hobkirk Parish in the 1860s. She could be inspiration for the poem ‘The Flower of Rule’ by Robert Allan. Rev. Mungo (c.1660–1735/6) graduating from Glasgow University in the early 1690s, he was ordained as minister of Abbotrule Parish in 1698. He was translated to Sanquhar in 1713, and remained there until his death (brought on by a stroke suffered in the pulpit). He had 2 sons, George and William, and 1 daughter, Janet. Robert (d.1810) stocking-maker in Hawick, son of Walter. His unnamed child died in 1810. Ronald ‘Ronnie’ (1947/8–2003) Cornet (18th C.) mason in Hawick. His son William died in 1798. He may be the Walter who married Janet Miller in Wilton in 1755. He could be the Walter, son of mason William, born in Wilton in 1723. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1766 he married Janet Laidlaw, who was from Hawick Parish. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Mary Armstrong and their son Walter was baptised in 1778. William (18th C.) mason in Wilton. He was at Tandlaw in 1708. He got married in 1707, his wife’s name not being recorded. However, his wife was later listed as Helen Roger. His children included: Robert (b.1708); Margaret (b.1713); Bessie (b.1715); Agnes (b.1719); Walter (b.1723); and William (b.1725). William (d.1798) mason in Hawick, son of Walter. He had an unnamed child who died in 1798. He is probably the William born to Walter and Janet Miller in Wilton in 1756 (also spelled ‘Gibson’ etc.).

Gibson’s (gib-sinz) n. temperance hotel of the early 20th century situated on North Bridge Street. It became the Kings Hotel sometime after WWII.

Gid (gid) n. short form of Gideon.

Giddenscleuch (gi-dinz-kloogh) n. Gideoncleuch, farmstead near the of the side road from Teviothead, just before Merrylaw. The stream Giddens Cleuch joins the Teviot just there. 4 archaeological features, perhaps hut bases, were found on a broad terrace about 600 m south-west of the farm. The lands were listed in the early 16th century as part of those held by John Gledstains of Cocklaw and that ilk. It was among lands purchased by Gilbert Elliott of Stobs from Douglas of Cavers in 1620. It was ‘Guiddigscleuch’ among lands owned by the Eliotts of Stobs in the latter part of the 17th century. However, it appears to have been in the Barony of Cavers when Sir William Douglas succeeded as Baron (i.e. superior of these lands) in 1687 and when his brother Archibald succeeded in 1698. The lands were included among those of Lymincleuch (along with Corriesike and Langbyre) when sold by William Elliott of Stobs to a group of Eliots in 1670, but may have been bought back shortly afterwards. They were among lands inherited by Sir William Elliott from his father in 1692. John Thomson was there in 1724, David Scott in 1727, ‘[blank] Moor’ in 1741 and John Scott in 1749. There were Armstrongs there in 1841 (the name means ‘the ravine belonging to Gideon’; it first appeared as ‘Gudwyinscleuch’ in 1509/10, is ‘Guiddschuch’ in 1519/20, ‘Gudingscleuch’ in the early 17th century, and later is ‘Gudinscleugh’, transcribed ‘Gudduscleuch’ in 1620, ‘Gandinscleuch’ in 1687, ‘Gudinscleuch’ in 1692, ‘Gidinscleugh’ in 1694, ‘Gidinscleugh’ in 1698 and ‘giddens Cleugh’ in 1724; it is marked on Blaeni’s 1654 map as ‘Guiddinscleuch’; there is presumably a connection with a local family that used Gideon as a first name, e.g. the Scotts of Harden).

Gideon Scott & Sons (gi-dee-in-sk’-in-sonz) n. Hawick millwrights, set up by Gideon Scott in the latter part of the 18th century. The premises were on the Cross Wynd. Gideon’s sons Gilbert and James were also millwrights. The firm’s assets were sequestered in 1842.

Gigson’s Flat (gig-sinz-flaw’) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded as being vacant in the 1541 rental roll, where it is ‘Gigsonis Flatt’ or perhaps ‘Gibsonisflatt’. The location is uncertain, but it is listed after Kilgarth.

Gilboa Wud (gil-bō-u-wud) n. name given to a large plantation to the north-east of Ruberslaw (the origin of the name is unclear, but it is may not be very old; it is marked ‘Gilbo Wood’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Gilchrist (gil-krist, -krist) n. Rev. John (d.1746) from Dumfriesshire. He was son of Mungo in Holm of Dalgarno. He was presented to Bedrule Parish in late 1713 and ordained there in early 1714, succeeding James Borland. In 1716 he was recorded in a ‘Lybell’ in Selkirk, against John and Andrew Riddell. He was a substitute preacher in Hawick in 1721, when the minister was ill. He dissented from the Act of Assembly of 1740 which deposed 8 seceding ministers. He remained at Bedrule until his death, and was succeeded by George Dickson. His only daughter married John Cranstoun the minister of Ancrum.

the Gilded Chamber (thu-gil-deed-cham-bur) n. a series of get togethers taking place initially in a golden decorated room at the Gre tel bar in 1966, which grew into an annual event. The event later moved to the Volunteer. It is a sing-song for men only, and traditionally accompanied by potted-meat sandwiches.

Gildhouse (gild-hows) n. former name for lands near the Ettrick valley, probably associated with the later farm of Gildiesgreen, between Hellmoor Loch and Upper Shaws Loch. They were formerly Crown lands, split into the Weststead, Middlestead and Eaststead. In 1479 Thomas Scott had remission for a fine for these lands. David, son of Walter Scott in Headshaw leased part of the lands in 1486. John Cranston of that Ilk leased part of the lands in 1492. Robert Scott of Storches was leasing the Weststead in 1501, when that was referred to as ‘alias Dodbank’. In 1502 the eastern part was said to be known as Baillielee and was leased to Peter Turnbull in 1510. In 1510 the west steading was feued by Walter, son of Robert Scott.

Gildshaw (gild-shaw) n. lands in Liddesdale, precise location uncertain. They are recorded as ‘Gildschaw’ in a rental roll of 1376, with a value of 6 shillings and 8 pence. This may be the same as the place recorded as Gillshaw in the 16th century.

Gill (jil) n. a unit of measurement equal to one quarter of a pint or about 142 millilitres for Imperial measures. Note that Scots gills were at one time about one third greater in quantity. Scottish bars generally served spirits in shots of one fifth of a gill, but some used one quarter. A metric measure of 25 millilitres is now more common. A ‘Hawick Gill’ was once a term for half an imperial pint – ‘Till gills intae half mucchkins turned, Half mucchkins intae bottles, An’ mair the wit an’ fancy burned The mair we wat oor throt-tles’ [VW], ‘To bide man, I had man, Though sair against my will, For fear that, owre dear that, I might buy the wedding gill’ [JoHa], ‘Ilk ane that

It is generally applied to a gully whose sides have resumed a verdant appearance in consequence of the grass growing, Roxb.’ [JoJ] (also written ‘gil’; the word survives in place names, generally for streams in higher areas, e.g. Hog Gill, Long Gill and Rough Gill to the west of Newcastleton, as well as the lands of Lodgagill, Ramsiegill, etc.).

gill (gil) n. Peter (16th.) listed among people who were owed money by William Scott, younger of Branxholme, when he died in 1552. Several of the people listed before him were from the Hawick area.

the Gill (thu-gil) n. popular name for area around Gillside and Gillbraehead, south of Newcastleton – ‘The fields along the waterside; The fire abune the Gill; Auld Clintoch where the hoollets hide; The loanin’ up the hill’ [ECB].

Gillan (gi-lin) n. Rev. James (c.1629–68) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1650, he became Minister at Cavers in 1657 or perhaps 1658. He was deprived in 1662 for refusing to conform to Episcopacy, and forced to leave the Presbytery of Jedburgh. He moved to Edinburgh, and then out to Currie for his health (and because outed ministers were then banned from the city). However, one night in 1668 he was seized by a group of soldiers, who claimed to be searching for the person who had tried to assassinate Bishop Sharp (actually James Mitchell, after whom Mitchell’s Slack was named). They forced him to run back to Edinburgh at midnight and stand outside waiting for the West Port to open, after which he was imprisoned. The next day he was taken before the Privy Council, but dismissed by them when they realised the mistake. He died 2 days later, probably as a result of the harsh treatment he had received. His name was often spelled ‘Gillon’. His sister Elizabeth married William Forrest of Norserk. It is unclear whether he was related to the later ministers of St. Boswells and Hawick, but he was unmarried. He may be buried in Greyfriars in Edinburgh. Rev. Robert (1761–1824) born in St. Boswells, son of Robert who was minister there. He was educated at St. Mary’s College and Edinburgh University, licensed by Jedburgh Presbytery and ordained at Ettrick in 1787, where he was presented by Lord Napier. He was translated to Hawick in 1789, being presented by Henry, Duke of Buccleuch. However, there is an existing letter from the Magistrates and Town Council to the Duke of Buccleuch, protesting the appointment, so he was presumably not a popular choice. Despite this, he remained until 1800, when he was accused of an irregularity of some sort and demitted his charge, moving to Edinburgh. Nevertheless, he remained one of the Orrock Trustees. He paid the Horse Tax in Hawick in the period 1790–97. There is a letter from him in 1791, preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. About 1799 he contributed to the local subscription to support the war against France. In 1793 he wrote an account of the town for the Old Statistical Account of Scotland, which contains valuable tidbits of information (including details of the beginnings of manufacturing in the town). He also wrote several books, including ‘An abridgement of acts of General Assemblies of the Church of Scotland from the year 1638 to 1802 inclusive’ (1803) printed in Hawick, ‘A short view of modern astronomy, for the use of schools and private classes’ (1814) and ‘A compendium of ancient and modern geography’ (1823). He also edited ‘The Scottish pulpit, a collection of sermons’ (1823). In 1798 he married Mannie (or Marion), daughter of William Campbell, minister of Lilliesleaf, and she died in 1845 at the age of 63. Their son Robert was born in Hawick and became an eminent minister of Inchinnan, Glasgow. Their other children were William, Margaret, Joseph (possibly the ‘Joseph Gillon, Esq. Edinr.’ who subscribed to Jamieson’s Scots dictionary in 1808), Alexander Murray, Cauvin and Agnes Farquharson.

Rev. Dr. Robert (1799–1879) born in Hawick, son of minister Robert. He studied at Edinburgh High School and University, was licensed in Selkirk in 1829 and ordained in Stamfordham, Northumberland in 1830. He was then minister at South Shielis, Holytown (Lanarkshire), Wishaw, Abbotshall (Fife) and then St. John’s (Glasgow) for 14 years. When a thunderstorm broke out during a fiery sermon he preached at Hawick during his early days, it is said that one parishioner remarked ‘Yon was grand scenery for Dr Gillan’s sermon’. He was active in social and political movements in Glasgow and was conferred with a doctorate of divinity by Glasgow University in 1853. He moved to the small parish church of Inchinnan, Renfrewshire in 1861, but continued to lecture broadly. He was presented with his portrait in 1870 and was Moderator of the General Assembly in 1873. He published many of his sermons, including 'A General Fast Sermon' (1832) and 'The Decalogue' (1856). In 1833 he married Anne, daughter of George Green, minister at Carmunnock. She died in 1847 and he secondly married Laura, daughter of John Buttery of Woodville. His son George Green was chaplain in the East India Company. He died in Inchinnan Manse (also written ‘Gillon’).

Gillbeck (gil-bek) n. possible name for a farmstead in Liddesdale. It is transcribed as ‘Guilbeck’ in the 1718 survey of lands of the Scotts of Buccleuch, when it was combined with Nether and Over Steele, along with other small farmsteads. It might be associated with the nearby Gill Sike.

Gillbraehead (gil-brê-heed) n. Gillbraehead, farmstead in Liddesdale, of the B6357 between Gillside and Demainholm. It was formerly ‘Geilbraehead’. This was where the minister of the Castleton Burgher Kirk lived in the 1760s to the end of the 18th century, and where their first meeting house was built. Thomas Turnbull was there in 1821 and James Armstrong in 1841. Thomas Chapman was carter there in 1861 and Richard Telfer was there in 1868 (it is marked as ‘Guilbraehead’ on Stobie’s 1770 map and is ‘Geilbraehead’ in 1799).

Gillespie (gi-les-pee) n. Marion (17th C.) recorded in the Council records of 1665 when she confessed to pulling the hair out of the head of Walter Lorraine. She was also accused of harassing another man at about the same time. She may be the Marion, daughter of Robert, born in Hawick in Hawick in 1639. Robert (17th C.) smith in Hawick. He was a Councillor who signed the 1640 ‘Act of Bailies and Council’ and was recorded being elected to the Council in 1648. Also in 1648 he witnessed a baptism for Robert Scott and Isobel (probably a relative). He is probably the Robert who married Marion Stoddart and whose children born in Hawick included: John (b.1636); Marion (b.1639); Patrick (b.1641); and Stephen (b.1642). The witnesses to the 1640 baptism were William Wilson and James Paisley.

Gillfit (gil-fi’) n. Gillfoot, former farm in Castleton Parish near the modern Gillfoot Moss. The farm of ‘Guyefoot’ is listed among the Liddesdale possessions of the Sheriff of Teviotdale in 1632, and also ‘Gyilkfoot’ among the lands of Thomas Kerr of Ancrum. James Scott was tenant there in 1694, with John Little and William Elliot also listed as householders. It is shown on a survey carried out for Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch in 1718, when it consisted of 266 acres and was bounded by the Liddel Water, Demainholm, Whisgills, Side and Millholm. William Stewart was farmer there in the mid-18th century. Robert Elliot and family were there in 1835. John Armstrong was shepherd at ‘Gillfoot Upper’ in 1851 and William Little a labourer at ‘Gillfoot Under’. William Armstrong was shepherd there in 1861 (it is ‘Guyefoot’ in 1632, ‘Gillfoot’ in 1694, ‘Gillfoot’ in 1718 and ‘Geelfoot’ in 1760; ‘Gillfoot’ is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map; the name is surely just the foot of the gully).

Gillfoot Moss (gil-fi’-mos) n. Gillfoot Moss, boggy area in Castleton Parish, on the west side of the Liddel valley, opposite Mangerton. There is the remains of a farmstead there, including foundations of 2 buildings, as well as enclosures and rig lines visible from aerial photography. This is surely the old farm of Gillfit.

Gillheed (gil-heed) n. farmstead in Liddesdale, situated on Foulwood Sike, south-west of Mangerton. The name presumably derives from being at the head of the gully (‘Gillhead’ is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Gillhoose (gil-hoos) n. former lands in Liddesdale, listed as ‘Gillshouse’ (after ‘Gillestede’) in a rental roll of c.1376. It was valued at 4 shillings.

gilliegawkie (gi-lee-gaw-kee) n., poet. a foolish or silly young man (used by John Hogg in 1806).

Gillies (gi-leez) n. Brian (1957–) son of George, he grew up in Burnfoot. At the age of 10 he joined the Hawick Legion Pipe Band. He was an apprentice knitter at Barrie & Kersel and then worked at Hogg’s. On the spur of the moment he signed up for the Royal Scots Dragoon Guards, where he spent 9 years as a gunner and joined the regimental band, eventually becoming Pipe Major. He returned to Hawick to be a knitter, but later served as Pipe Major with the Oman Army Pipe Band. On returning to Scotland again he joined the Anman Ex-Serviceman’s Pipe Band. He later worked at Johnstons of Elgin in Hawick. He has played pipe solos at many events, including the Edinburgh Tattoo in 1985. He scored ‘Highland Cathedral’ for pipes, based on a tune written by German musicians Ulrich Roever and Michael Korb in 1982 (originally intended for a military band, rather than pipe band). He wrote the song ‘Wauchope Cairn’ which the Burns Club sing on their annual visit to Wauchope, as well as Gilligan

‘The James Thomson Bridge’ to commemorate that opening. Rev. James Wardrop (b.1862) trained at Glasgow Evangelical Union Hall, he was place in India with the London Missionary Society. In 1899 he became minister of Newcastle Congregational Church, remaining until 1905. He was then minister at Muirkirk, Ayrshire and at Manse Street, Fraserburgh. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His wife was Catherine Gillies and their son Thomas was baptised in 1687. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1736 he was a witness for a baptism for Robert Riddell, who lived at the Sandbed. His name is written ‘Gillas’. Walter (17th/18th C.) tenant of ‘Crack know’ in Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Brown and their children included: unnamed (b.1698); and Margaret (b.1701). William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1777 he married Mary Henderson in Hawick (also written ‘Gillies’).

Gilligan (gi-lee-gin) n. James (b.1805/6) born in Sicily, he was a clothes and furniture merchant in Hawick, at 8 Howegate. In Slater’s 1852 directory he is listed as a ‘broker’. In 1861 he was at 2 Howegate, listed as a clothier employing 11 men and 3 women. His wife was Elizabeth and they had children: Sarah; James; Robert; Charles; and John. In the 1841 census he is a pedlar at about No. 18 Howgait.

Gillis (gi-lis) n. David (19th/20th C.) schoolmaster at St. Cuthbert’s School from early 1894 until he retired in 1915. He was also heavily involved in local musical activities and the Volunteer movement. He moved to Greenlaw after he left Hawick.

Gillore (gi-lor) n., arch. galore, plenty, wealth (noted by J. Jamieson).

gill-maw (gil-maw) n., arch. a gourmand of coarse manners, guzzler – ‘...as ‘a greedy gillmaw’, one who is not nice in his taste, but devours by wholesale, Roxb.’ [JoJ] (also gill-maw and cf. golliner).

Gillon (gi-lin) n. Fr. Thomas (19th/20th C.) priest at S.S. Mary & David’s 1918–24. He was said to have been quiet, but well-respected in the Town. He moved to Linlithgow. His time as priest saw the introduction of the 1918 Education Act and the return of the survivors from the War (see also Gillan).

Gillshaw (gil-shaw) n. former name for lands in Liddesdale, recorded in 1541 as ‘Gilschaw et Burnhous’. It is unclear where these lands were, but possibly related to ‘Gillfoot’, ‘Gillhead’, etc. (see also Gildshaw).

Gilmanscleuch

Gilmanscleuch (gil-munz-klooch) n. hamlet in the Ettrick valley, just north of the farms of De- loraine, and near where the Gilmanscleuch Burn meets the Ettrick. The farm was once a Crown property, from at least the 1456. It was assigned to James and Roger Alemoor in 1484, Steven Lockhart in 1486, Patrick Home of Fastcastle and Robert Lyle in 1490, Alexander, Lord Home in 1492, George Home in 1501 and Adam Scott of Tushielaw in 1510. John Scott in Thirlestane claimed the tenancy there in 1541. A tower here was once home of a branch of the Scotts, with the land passing from the Scotts of Gilmanscleuch to Walter Scott of Harden in the late 16th century, when ‘Auld Wat’s’ youngest son (possibly John) was slain in a hunting match; he apparently said that the lands were worth a dead son. Robert Scott from here was killed by Elphistones sometime before 1621 (and so the 2 murders may sometimes be compounded). The lands (or perhaps the superiority) were later sold by John Scott of Harden to Anne, Duches of Buccleuch and passed to Francis, Duke of Buccleuch along with other lands in the Lordship of Ettrick Forest in 1735. The Scotts of Gilmanscleuch started with James in at least 1589, with William being the last in the early-to-mid 18th century. When Francis Scott inherited the lands from his father John in 1686 the lands were valued at £20 6s 8d (‘feudi-firmae’). Adam Scott was tenant in 1737 and James Borthwick was a cottar there in 1752. James Scott was there in 1797. In 1802 it was valued at £67, when part of the Buccleuch estates. Adam and James Scott were joint tenants in the 1820s and 1830s. ‘Daft Jock Gray’ came from there; he was a singing beggar in the early 1800s. Henry Scott was farmer in the 1860s – ‘There’s Daft Jock Grey o’ Gilmancesleigh, And Davie o’ the Inch, And when ye come to Singley, They’ll help ye in a pinch’ [DJG], ‘Warn Wat o’ Harden, and his sons, Wi’ them will Borthwick water ride; Warn Gaudilands, and Armstrangs did convene; They were a gallant companie: We’ll ride and meet our lawful king, And bring him safe to Gilnockie’ [CPM], ‘But when Johnny went from Gilnock-Hall, The wind it blew hard, and full fast it did rain; ‘Now fare thee well, thou Gilnock-Hall, I fear I shall never see thee again’.’ [T].

Gilpin (gil-pin) n. Rev. William (1724–1804) from a well-known English family, he was educated at Oxford, where he trained as a minister. He set up his own school, became a biographer of religious reformers and published illustrated volumes of his British travels, which revolutionised travel writing and attitudes. He was later Prebendary at Salisbury. During one tour, he visited Hawick in 1776, making a sketch of the Auld Brig, made from below the bridge. This is the oldest known sketch of any part of the town of Hawick. It shows 2 arches and the wooden parapet erected to replace the stone one washed away in the 1767 flood. It also unfortunately omits any of the surrounding buildings.

Gilpin Horner (gil-pin-hör-nur) n. character of Scottish legend, said to be an evil goblin. He was the basis for the goblin page in Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Lay of the Last Minstrel’, and said to be the inspiration for the whole work, when the future Lady of Buccleuch urged Scott to write a poem based on him.

gilravage (gil-raw-veej) v., arch. to create an uproar – ‘Gilravage . . . To raise a tumult, or to make much noise, Roxb.’ To rove about; to be unsteady; to act hastily and without consideration, Roxb.’ [JoJ], n., arch., poet. noisy merry-making, uproar – ‘Wi’ hypicritikil mokirs make much noise, Roxb. To rove about; to create an confusion – ‘Gilravage, Gilravitich, . . . confusion, conjoined with destruction; as that of a sow, &c., destroying a garden, by rooting up the plants, Roxburgh’ [JoJ].

Gilrig (gil-rig) n. place name in Robertson Parish, referred to in papers of the Buccleuch estates in the 1750s.

Gilroy (gil-roi) n. John (b.1820/1) from Jedburgh, he worked as a dyer in Hawick. He was father of Councillor John. He hailed the first Hawick Baa in 1842. In 1851 he married Margaret, daughter of John Amos Hogg. In 1861 the family are recorded living at 7 Sandbed. His children included John, Andrew, Agnes, Janet, Beatrix and Margaret. Bailie John (19th C.) grandson of John Hogg the poet, he was a Magistrate in the late 1880s, as well as Chairman of Hawick School Board and Treasurer of the Co-operative Society. He ran a newsagent’s shop at 7 Howe-gate. He married Margaret (‘Maggie’), daughter of shoemaker John Rutherford in 1869. William (1810–1872) mail-coach driver and uncle to Bailie John. He married Isabella Harkness, who died near Dublin in 1896, aged 87. Their children included Margaret, who married Mr. Watson of Mooney’s Brewery, Dublin. He died at Belfast and is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery.

Gilroy’s (gil-roiz) n. shop on the Howegate from the late 19th century. It was a booksellers, toy shop and now mainly a newsagents.

Gilsland (gilz-lind) n. village in northern Cumberland, on the Irthing River, and near Hadrian’s Wall. It was the seat of the Dacres and also near the once strategically important Gilsland Gap. In former times the area was a popular holiday destitination, and was known in the 18th and 19th centuries for its healing waters, e.g. the poet Ley-den’s father went there to recover his health in 1800 – ‘Mong the beauty spots of England I have rambled far and near, By the northern lakes at Cheviot, big enough tae loup the Teviot’ [TD].

ginger (jin-jur) n. a fizzy soft drink of any flavour
– ‘When A was wee the kids would ask for ginger when they played For that’s the name they gave to every drink they ever made’ [Sco] (this usage common around Glasgow).

ginger breed (jin-jur-breid) n. ginger bread – ‘Losh, Ah’ve forgotten the ginger breed men an’
the ha’penny whustles . . . ’ [JEDM].

ginger wine (jin-jur-win) n. a dark, spicy cordial drink made with ‘ginger wine essence’, which derives from a secret recipe of Kennedy’s (now Crosby) the chemists. There were probably other variants of this, such as the ‘black betty’ sold in Denholm.

Gingills (ging-gilz) n. former lands in Ewes-dale, a little north of Langholm, once a seat of the Armstrongs. The spelling is variable, and it is also possible it is sometimes confused with Chingills, near Mangerton in Liddesdale. In 1579 the Privy Council ordered that several of the principle ‘Armstrangis of the Gyngillis’ should give assurance about the behaviour of the others.
In 1583 an English account of the number of men in various parts of the Middle Marches listed ‘Eus-dale, Gingles, 300’. Thomas Armstrong ‘of the Gynghills’ signed the 1584 bond of assurance with the English Wardens. Ringan Armstrong ‘of the Gyngills’ is recorded in 1590. Towers of ‘Ecki gingles’ and ‘Tho. of ye Jingles’ are recorded on opposite sides of the Ewes valley on Sandison’s c.1590 map of the Debatable Land. It may be the place transcribed as ‘Creingills’ in the Lordship of Melrose, among lands inherited by Sir John Riddell of that Ilk in 1609 (also written ‘Gingles’ and variants; it is ‘Gyngillis’ in 1573;
see also Chingills).
Ginglenwells

Ginglenwells (ging-ling-welz) n. former house on the Hermitage Water, roughly opposite Gorr benry. William Armstrong was tenant in 1694, with John Elliot also residing there. It was sur veyed in 1718, along with other Scott of Buc cleuch properties, when it was combined with Diniees, consisting of 1067 acres and bounded by Greystonehaugh, the Lord of Hoscoat’s lands, Twislehope, Rispylaw and Gorrbenry. The lands there were rented by William Elliot of Tarras from the Duke of Buccleuch in 1736. There is possibly an association with ‘Chingills’ or ‘Gigells’, although they were near Mangerton and in Ewesdale, respectively (it is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map and is ‘Giglawnwalls on the 1718 Buccleuch survey; it is ‘Giglenwalls’ in 1694, ‘Giglenwalls’ in 1722 and ‘Giglawnwalls’ in 1736).

The Girl I Left Behind Me (thu-gi-rul-I-left-bee-hind-me) n. tune that the Drums and Fifes play at certain times, popularised in the 1949 John Ford/John Wayne film ‘She Wore a Yellow Ribbon’. The song is known by many dif ferent names and is claimed to have either Irish or English origins. It is known to have been played by military drum and fife bands in the early 1800s and dates back to at least the late 18th century. It is one of the tunes specifically played on the Saturday, when the band march the Cornet and mounted supporters down the Loan.
girnel (gir-nul) n., arch. a storage place for grain, garner – ‘Item, the said vmquhile Walter had, the tyne of his deceis in his girnals of Hassindane, the huill teindis of Hassindane and Kavers . . . ‘[SB1574], ‘Item mair, in his girnale of Hawik, collectit be Johne Watsoun, of the crope and zeir of God foirsaid, fittie-thrie bollis and five pekxis mele . . . ‘[SB1574], ‘That our girnals may be fu’, affurdin’ a’ kinkind o’ provendir . . . ‘[HSR] (also written ‘gernel’, ‘girnal’, ‘girnale’, etc.).

Girnside Bog (girn-síd-bog) n. former name for Greenside Moss, a formerly marshy part of the Common. This name was used in the 1788 Council records when the area was largely drained.

Girnside Hill (girn-síd-hil) n. hill on the north side of the Todrig Burn, between Wester and Easter Essenside, reaching a height of 266 m. Just north of the hill is Old Essenside, possible site of a former village, and on the southern slopes are the remains of a settlement.

Girnwud (girn-wud, -wood) n. Girnwood, a farm at the end of the road through Deanburnhaugh in the Borthwick valley. The estate here was formerly connected with ‘Lyne’, so that ‘Girnwood and the Lyne’ was its name in the earliest records. It was formerly included within the Parish of Hassendean, transferring to the new Roberton Parish in 1689/90. The lands passed from Walter Dalgleish ‘of Greenwood’ to Adam Turnbull in 1439. Sir Thomas Turnbull of Greenwood and Lyne leased the lands to Robert Scott of Allanhaugh in 1488, but keeping 1 acre in the north parts of both Greenwood and Lyne for himself. Alexander, 2nd Lord Home was granted these lands in 1492/3, after being resigned by Sir Thomas Turnbull. Alexander, 3rd Lord Home succeeded to these and other lands in 1506. James Turnbull was recorded there in 1503. In 1506 ‘the lands of Greenwood were valued at £3 Scots and in time of peace at 2 merks old extant, and were held of William Turnbull of Minto as superior, for one penny blench’. In 1522 there is a letter from James V requiring William Turnbull of Minto to receive George, Lord Home as tenant on his lands there. William, son of William Turnbull of Minto sold the lands to Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1532/3. In 1535 George, Lord Home regained the lands through royal revocation of the previous charter. The lands were held by the Scotts of Buccleuch in the late 16th century, and were stated in 1574 to be in the Barony of Minto; they were at that time valued at £10 and held of the King by service of ward and relief. The Scots of Girnwood were tenants for about 200 years. James Chisholme of Girnwood is recorded in 1605. The lands of ‘Grenwode et Lyne’ were inherited in 1634 by Francis Earl of Buccleuch from his father, then passed to his daughters Mary and Anne, and ‘Girnwood and the Lyne with their pertinentis’ were listed among the possessions of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch in her 1663 marriage contract. There were 9 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650, namely Andrew Clerk, John Govenlock, Marion Stoddart, Isobel Nivison, Bessie Renwick, Margaret Brown, Robert Hislop, Margaret Laidlaw and Janet Hislop. It was listed among properties of the Duke of Buccleuch in 1678. Adam Elliot was tenant in 1688. Adam Scott was tenant there in 1694, and James Aitchison was also a resident at that time. Francis Beattie and James Aitchison were there in 1703. Thomas Chisholme in at least 1710–16 and Robert Scott and John Laurie in at least 1716–18. It was surveyed in 1718 along with other Buccleuch properties, when it covered 603 acres (with 100 acres of ‘corn land meadow and pasture’), bounded by Outersiderig, Henwoodie common and Hoscote. Walter Scott was there in 1726. John Tait was there in 1735 and Henry Paterson in 1742. The tenant reported flood damage to the crops there in 1745. Robert Mitchellhill was there in 1757 and Andrew Goodfellow in 1766. Walter Scott is recorded there in 1797 and was tenant until his death in 1818. James Glendinning was shepherd there in 1808. Another Walter Scott was farmer there in the 1860s. Provost William Scott Nichol farmed there for a time, and there are memorial cairns there for him and his brother. The western-most section of the Catrail is near here, with part to the north now planted over, and reaching towards a tributary of the Dean Burn, while a long shallow section is also visible to the south; however, there have been debates about precisely which sections might have been part of the Catrail, and which might have been later boundary ditches. There is also another similar linear earthwork above the farm to the west, on the southern slopes of Girnwood Hill. There is a waterfall to the west of the farm, on Girnwood Linn, this probably being the associated place referred to in old documents as ‘the Lyne’. Just to the north east is a small unnamed loch, with enclosures nearby, while Girnwood Loch lies much further, behind
Girnwud Linn

Girnwud Loch (girn-wud-loch) n. small loch north-west of Girnwood, draining into the Hoscote Burn. It is marked near Girnwud Linn on Ainslie’s 1773 map.

Givanshaa (gi’-vinz-haw) n. Givanshall, farmstead in Ashkirk Parish, marked to the east of Outer Huntly on Ainslie’s 1773 map.

Glack (glawk) n. former name used for a local branch of the Scotts, apparently the same as Clack, closely related to the Scotts of Fenwick. The seat was ‘Glack’ in Peeblesshire, but the family also owned Fenwick and Highchesters in the mid-to-late 17th century. The Laird of ‘Glak’ was listed among ‘Landit Men’ of Roxburgh and Selkirk in about 1590 – ‘...Then he married a wife according to his mind, And betwixt them twa they did procrear Headshaw, Askirk, Sinton, and Glack’ [CWS], ‘Oh! the laird of Glack, he must not be omitted, Though he sold the land of Goldieland long e’er he got it’ [CWS] (perhaps from Gaelic ‘glâc’, a hollow; there are several Gladstains

Glaiks elsewhere in Scotland; it is ‘Glak’ in 1581 and 1585, ‘Glaek’ in 1597 and ‘Glaik’ and ‘Glake’ in 1609.

Gladstains see Gledstains

Gladstone (glad-stin) n. William Ewart (1809–1898) politician born in Leith, he entered politics in England, becoming Prime Minister no fewer than 4 times. He came from the Gladstains of Arthurskiland, who were descendants of the local Gladstains of that Ilk. He was elected M.P. for Midlothian in 1880, speaking in Hawick during the campaign. Apparently he and his wife used to often stay at the Mossopaul Hotel on their way north. Gladstone Street is named after him (see also Gledstains).

glaibber (glä-bur) v., arch. to chatter, babble, to slobber while speaking. n. idle talk, someone who talks in a slobbering manner (noted by J. Jamieson and G. Watson).

glaibbers (glä-burz) n., pl., arch. slavers, slobbering talk – ‘Whan ma lugs ir stawd wi thropply glaibbers’ [ECS] (also written ‘glaibers’).

glaiks (gliks) n., arch. a kind of toy or puzzle – ‘Glaiks. A puzzle game, consisting in first taking a number of ring off one of a large size, and then replacing them, Roxb., Mearns …A toy for children, composed of several pieces of wood which have the appearance of falling asunder, but are retained in their places by strings, Roxb.’ [JoJ].

glaiky (gli-koe) adj., arch. thoughtless, foolish.
Oo find oor speakin’ aboot the Glebe Where oo played at the fit o’ the Loan’ [AY].

Glebeheid (gleeb-beed) n. land at the head of the glebe lands in Roberton, to the east of the manse. A couple of separate buildings are marked there on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map.

Glebe Mills (gleeb-milz) n. knitwear factory built on a piece of land on the south of the Teviot, which was originally part of the endowment for Wilton Parish Church. First constructed in 1873 by Richardson, Noble & Co. (which company had previously operated out of Stonefield Mill), it was much extended by other companies, including Pringle’s, who are the current owners. Pringle’s purchased the factory in 1962 and started men’s knitwear production there a year later. It was extended in 1968. The gatehouse was designed by J.P. Alison.

Glebe Mill Street (gleeb-mil-stree’) n. street along the south side of the Teviot, built in 1877 beside Glebe Mills, on land previously belonging to Wilton Church. It is essentially a continuation of Duke Street.

Glebe Place (gleeb-plis) n. street in the Wellogate, being the continuation of Waverley Cottages down to Minto Place, built in 1875 and named after Wilton Glebe. It also contained Orchard Street from 1888 until 1892.

Glebe Terrace (gleeb-to-ris) n. original name for the upper houses of Minto Place, built in 1875, with the name being discarded in 1882.

Glebe View (gleeb-vew) n. street in the Terraces of the Wellogate, built in 1879 by Hawick Working Men’s Building and Investment Company. It is the opposite side of the street from Minto Place, and named after Wilton Glebe lands, which it overlooks. It included Orchard Street from 1892–99. Mrs. Smith’s grocer’s shop was there in the mid-1900s.

Gled (gled) adj. glad – Ye’re welcome, sakes ye’re welcome Where ye’re gled nae doot to be’ [WL], ‘Man, come on in, I’m gled tae see ye, In a’ this time, how are things wi’ ye’ [JRE], ‘The puir wee soul was unco gled, This was his day of days …’ [WFC].

gled (gled) n., arch., poet. a kite. Milvus milvus – ‘The Kite or Gled, the Hobby and the Goshawk are also birds which ought to be found in the neighbourhood …’ [JAHM], ‘His een, as greedy as gled’s for gear, Wad settle whiles on a sonsie dear …’ [WL] (from Old English, the name survives is some place names, e.g. Gledsnest).
The Gledstain Porch

The Gledstain Porch (Gled's Nest, Gledsnest, gledness, gledhawk, Gledstains, gledge) of Roxburghshire. Now deep within Craik Forest, it is on the edge suggested to have obtained the name from being gled house (presumably related to the 1860s. It is run as a bed and breakfast guest from at least the 1820s to 40s. John Hume was farmer there in Teviothead. It was locally known as ‘the Nest’.

Gledhawk (gled-hawk) n., poet. to squint, leer – ‘An’ sun-tamm’d hide, to gi’e offence is prone, After sic gledging on a scene like you’ [JoHa], ‘She gledged at her cousin, and trigged up her cap’ [HSR], ‘The kimmers Faith and Hope gledge oot o the lamp-lit door Into the wundy derk o Eternity’ [DH], ‘…and, sune, ye’re daunederin’ alang gledgin’ aboot frae yin side to the t’other as ye gaun’ [DH], n., arch. a squint, sidelong glance – ‘Yeh loonge owre the brig … an a gledge doon inti the Rule as it ran rowlin ti link in wui Teiot’ [ECS], ‘Wi’ a gledge at the sky As the cutty reeks, A demm at a thistle And on wi’ his breeks’ [DH], ‘… wi’ a last gledge at St. Mary’s clock keekin owre the ruifs like a sma local moon’ [DH] (cf. glede).

Gled’s Nest (gledz-nest) n. area at the head of March Sike, in the headwaters of Northope Burn. Now deep within Craik Forest, it is on the edge of Roxburghshire.

The Gledstain Porch (thin-gled-stin-porch) n. burial aisle of the Gledstains family, forming the southern transept of Cavers Old Kirk. It is referred to in the Exchequer Rolls of 1524, and was probably even older. This once important family had lost almost all its estates and influence by the mid-18th century and the heritors had the aisle demolished.

Gledstains (gled-stänz, gled-stinz, glad-stänz) n. (Gladstone) Abraham of Hunthill (17th C.) possibly son of George of Dod. In 1676 he was served heir to his grandfather Walter of Dod in his lands of Hunthill. He was listed paying the land tax in 1678 for land in Cavers Parish valued at £180; this was a combination of Dod and Hunthill (then included within the valuations of Cavers Parish). By 1707 the 2 lands had been disjoined and were later owned by the Potts of Dod and the Duke of Buccleuch, respectively. He could also be the ‘Laird dod’ who paid tax for land valued at £14 in Eckford Parish in 1678. Adam (15th/16th C.) resident of the Selkirk area. In 1530 he witnessed a transaction between Walter Scott in Ashkirk and his brother William Scott, over Lilliesleaf Mill. In 1532 he was represented by Andrew Shortreed when Thomas Ker, in the name of Walter Scott, requested that he repay his debt. Agnes (b.1677) daughter of Town Clerk Walter. She married a Col. Murray and went with him to Flanders. Alexander (15th C.) probably son of Thomas of Robertson and Flex. However, it is also possible he was son of James of that Ilk and father of John of Cocklaw, recorded in the 1480s. In 1458 he had a confirmation by James II of ‘terras dominicales de Kirktoune, et molendinum ejusden ac terras de Flexis in Baronia de Hawic’ (i.e. the lands and mill of Kirkton and the lands of Flex). In 1464/5 he was involved in a case of ‘mortancestry’, where William Douglass of Drumlanrig (and Baron of Hawick) had him removed from the lands of Flex and ‘Kirktoun Mains’, which he claimed were wrongfully possessed. Neighbouring lands of East Mains had been removed for a similar reason from James of Cocklaw’s widow Janet Murray in 1437. In 1464/5 Douglas had a saisine for these lands, in which he is also mentioned. Probably the same Alexander is recorded as witness to a saisine for Denholm Mains in 1465/6, along with Matthew and Cuthbert; he is listed between the Chaplain and Notary, so perhaps he held some official role. Alexander (16th C.) Burgess who witnessed transactions several times in Selkirk in the period 1531–41. He was on an inquest there in 1536/7. In 1540 he bought a tenement in Selkirk from Alexander Lauder and his wife Marion Hay and resolved a dispute with them in 1544. In 1541 he resigned a tenement in favour of his wife Katherine Fairley and in 1543/4 he and Fairley ‘his kinsman’ made a bond of payment. In 1542 and 1543 he received payment for bolls of barley. In 1561 he promised to pay back the £10 Scots he had borrowed from his son and heir, John. In 1562 he assigned a tenement to George Halliwell. Alexander (16th C.) Burgess in Selkirk, who was probably related to the earlier Alexander. He was ‘elder’ in 1580 when he witnessed a transaction involving Marion, widow of William Scott, Burgess of Selkirk and another involving Scott of Haining and Scott of Goldielands. He may be the Burgess of Selkirk of that name who in 1580 gave up an annual rent in Selkirk in favour of John Scott in Whithope. Also in 1580 he was ‘elder burgess’ when, with the consent of his wife Katherine Turnbull, he gave a tenement in Selkirk to his daughter and heir Helen. Furthermore, in 1580 he was executor for the will and inventory of Janet, who may have been widow of a man called Dunn: he was left 56 shillings, while his daughters Helen and Margaret were left £6 and £4, respectively. It seems like he was a close relative of Janet, such as her brother. In 1581 his daughter Helen is recorded receiving redemption money from him and he also resigned a tenement to Helen and her husband Thomas Dobie. He witnessed further transactions in Selkirk in 1581. Also in 1581 he was among those chosen to make a ‘stent roll’ in Selkirk. In 1581/2 he and his daughter Helen declared that they had received money from several people, including from the testament of ‘Dony Gledstanis’. Also in 1581/2 there was a marriage contract between his daughter Helen and Gavin ‘Gledstanis late of Stobbis’ (who sold Stobs to Gavin Elliot): the couple were to receive his tenement in Selkirk (although he reserved the liferent for him and his wife), while the grooms would bring 400 merks. Alexander (16th C.) recorded as ‘younger’ in Selkirk in 1579 and as ‘younger burgess’ in 1580 and 1580/1. He may have been son or other near relative of the earlier Alexander. Andrew (15th C.) listed as ‘And. de Gledstane’ in 1451 when he witnessed a charter relating to the Church of Brechin. It is unclear how he might have been connected to other early family members. Andrew (15th/16th C.) listed on the ‘retour of inquest’ performed at Cavers in 1497/8 for Robert Elliot inheriting his grandfather’s lands of Tillielee and Cauldcleuch.
It is possible that they were connected with Kelso Abbey. Christian (d.1816) daughter of Town Clerk John. Her and her sister Ann were served heir to their father in 1808 (their brother James presumably dying before that). Some accounts say that she died unmarried, but she appears to have married manufacturer Walter Richardson. In 1811 she was probably the ‘Mrs. Richardson’ listed along with ‘Miss Glestanis’ as owners of part of the particlate lands of Hawick. Cuthbert (15th C.) recorded as ‘of Glestanis’ when he was witness to a Cranston family sasine for Denholm Mains in 1465/6. David (15th C.) received 3 sheep in the will of Sir David Scott of Bransholme in 1491/2. He may be the same ‘David Glestanis’ who witnessed a document for Scott of Bransholme in 1500. Elizabeth (15th/16th C.) resident of the Selkirk area. She was recorded in 1532 as mother of Andrew Brydon, when her son agreed to pay her, with the money related to Sir Walter Scott of Bransholme (perhaps as laird of the associated land). Elizabeth (15th/16th C.) wife of Robert Ker, Burgess of Selkirk, and mother of Mark Ker. In 1534 she donated her livery of a tenement and orchard in Selkirk to the chapel there. She also produced a charter for her lands ‘of Wr...’ in Hundlehope before ‘bailie James Glestanis and lord superior of the same’; this may have been James of that Ilk, who was perhaps her brother or father. The witnesses included Richard and John, who were probably also relatives. Probably the same Elizabeth in 1537 promised to follow her letter of assignation to Robert Turnbull regarding wards, reliefs and non-entry of Philiphaugh. Lieut. Francis (d.1645) father of Walter the Town Clerk, and brother of Capt. James. At age 21 (or perhaps 29) he was killed at the Battle of Aulderne, near Nairn, fighting for the Covenanter army alongside Douglas of Cavers and nine other local gentlemen. He married Margaret Stewart, and his son Walter Francis was born in Hawick in 1642. Francis of Whitlaw (17th C.) probably directly related to John of Whitlaw who died in about 1672. He may have been son of an earlier John. He is easy to confuse with the Francis of Whitlaw (son of John) who was born in 1643. He may be the ‘francis Glestanis’ who signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. He managed the Cavers estates when ‘the Good Lady Cavers’ was in prison for her covenanting principles. He served as Chamberlain to the Buccleuch estates for Hassendean, Hawick and Wilton in 1657–59, taking over from his father, who was certainly dead by 1660 (according to a document of the Scotts of Buccleuch). In 1661 it is recorded that he owed about £3500 to the Duchess of Buccleuch for rentals in Hassendean and elsewhere, where he and his late father had been Chamberlain. He was recorded in a discharge in 1663. In 1671 he was Bailie of the Regality of Hawick for William Douglas of Drumlanrig when there was a court of Regality held in Hawick. Francis of Whitlaw (b.1643) son of John, with his mother possibly being Anna Scott. He was also referred to as being ‘of Flex’. It is unclear how he was related to the Francis who was recorded in the previous few decades. In 1672 he was served heir to his father John of Whitlaw in the lands of the Flex (perhaps suggesting that there is more than one generation here). He was admitted as a Burgess of Hawick in 1675. He paid the land tax in Hawick Parish in 1678 for £266 13s 4d. He may be the same Francis of Whitlaw who was recorded several times in the 1690s and until about 1704. In 1703 he witnessed a baptism for John Scott of Gorrenberry. Francis (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Agnes ‘Wiggam’ and their daughter Isobell was born in 1670. It is possible he is the Francis ‘servitor to Falnesh’ who witnessed a baptism for Walter Wilson (younger in Castlehill) in 1709. Francis of Whitlaw (17th/18th C.) probably a descendant of the earlier Francis of Whitlaw. In 1692 he leased the farm of Meikle Whitlaw (which he held for service for his lifetime) as well as Little Whitlaw. He is recorded providing timber for repairing the town Tolbooth in 1692, as well as timber ‘for mounting of the steeple where the bell hangs’; this was valued at £40, making him the first name among the subscribers of the new bell, listed on the enactment of the Council in 1694. Also in 1692 he made a proposal to the Town Council that he be allowed to enclose part of his land, but also including ‘a little brae upon our syd of the march betwixt him and us’; he would plant trees there, with the agreement that the Town receive half of the timber, when it was ready to chop down. He seems likely to be the local Gledstains who was taxed for 5 hearths at his house in 1694. His brother may have been Archibald, and although it is unclear if he had any children, it is possible that James and John may have been his sons. He witnessed baptisms for tenants at the Flex in 1700 and 1702, for apothecary Walter Scott in 1703 and for gardener (for Gideon Scott in Fenwick) Walter Paterson in 1704. He was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1690, on a list of Roxburghshire heritors who petitioned Parliament in 1700 and may be the Francis of Whitlaw who was still a Commissioner in 1704. It is possible he was the Francis in Braidhaugh, servant to the Laird of Fahnsw, who witnessed baptisms in Hawick in 1707 (for James Stevenson, tenant in Harwood and for the tenant and shepherd in Slaidhills). Scott of Satchells dedicated a chapter of his history to him. A sundial belonging to him was saved from destruction by William Norman Kennedy and presented to the Museum collection; it bore the initials ‘F.G.’, the motto ‘Fide et Virtute’ and the date 1693. Francis (17th/18th C.) wright in Hawick. In 1683 he was fined for attacking Bailie Thorbrand and for ‘violentlie taking 4 dukes [presumably ducks] on the street, which the baylyea had first caught’. In 1688 he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Andrew Angus. He was listed as a wright among those contributing to the new Kirk bell in 1693/4. He is probably the Francis on the east side of Hawick, who appears on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. In 1702 (or perhaps 1712) he was fined by the Kirk Session for being found drinking in a public house after 10 o’clock; however, he ‘protested yt. he was not in drinke’. He could be the Francis in Hawick who witnessed a baptism in 1711 for carrier William Rae (along with smith John Scott). He witnessed further baptisms in 1712 for Bailie James Burn and for William Sanderson, in 1716 for smith John Scott, in 1718 (along with smith John Scott) for weaver Walter White and in 1719 for gardener John Tait. He married Marion Scott and their children included: William (b.1678); Christian (b.1680); Marion (b.1682); Margaret (b.1682); Helen (b.1684); John (b.1686); and James (b.1689). Witnesses to the 1680 baptism were Mr. John Purdom and tailor Walter Gledstains, in 1682 were Mr Walter Gladstains’ (probably the Town Clerk, suggesting that they were related), shoemaker Thomas Turnbull and John Riddell and in 1684 were Walter again and ‘student’ William. Francis (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1723 he married Helen Allan, whose surname is given as ‘Allan or Bridges’. Their children included: Margaret (b.1725); and John (b.1728). He could be the Francis, son of John and Margaret Harkness, born in 1685. He could be the Francis, innkeeper, who was a Bailie in the 1730s and 1740s and who in 1723 witnessed a baptism for weaver John Weens. He was one of the ‘present Bailies’ in 1742 (along with Robert Boyd) when he witnessed baptisms for Rev. William Somerville and for merchant John Ruecastle. Francis (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Skelfhill in 1745 when his daughter ‘Kathren’ was baptised. It is possible he was the same as one of the other Francis. Francis (18th C.) merchant in Hawick who was Cornet in 1744. He may be the Francis, son of Thomas and Bessie Sanderson, born in Hawick in 1718. It was stated in the Town Book that he was ‘to go to the moss on Saturday yr. after’, this being perhaps the first indication of events taking place on Common Riding Saturday. He is probably the merchant Francis who witnessed baptisms in 1741 for druggist Gideon Scott, in 1742 for gardener Alexander Donald and in 1745 for James Riddell (at Menslaws). He was listed as a merchant in the baptismal record for one of his children in 1746. He married Elizabeth Scott and their children baptised in Hawick included Thomas (b.1746) and Sarah (b.1747). The witnesses in 1746 were merchant Gideon Scott and ex-Bailie Robert Howison and in 1747 were merchants Gideon Scott and Charles Tudhope. Gavin of Stobs (16th C.) recorded in 1580 when he witnessed an agreement in Riddell between James Riddell in Maxton and John Riddell in Newton Mill. He is also recorded in 1580 when he sold the lands of Stobs (for 400 merks) to Gavin Eliott, who became the first Eliott Laird there. In 1581 there was a sasine (recorded in Selkirk) for him in inherit the lands of Stobs from his brother George; this was witnessed by Gavin Elliot of Baillielie (to whom he sold Stobs) and other Elliots, as well as 2 tenants in Swinstead. In 1581/2 he was ‘late of Stobbis’ (suggesting that the sale of the land to Gavin Eliott had already happened) when there was a marriage contract between him and Helen, daughter of Alexander, Burgess in Selkirk. The couple were to be given a tenement in Selkirk by Alexander, while he was to bring 400 merks as part of the arrangement. It is possible that he was related in some way to the Gledstains of Selkirk. George (15th C.) recorded in 1484/5 as a witness to Walter Ker of Cessford assigning Dolphinston to his son Mark. It is unclear how he was related to other members of the family. Perhaps the same George was recorded in 1489, along with William, as witness to a return for the Kers of St. Helen Shaw in Selkirk. Probably the same George (along with William and Bartholomew) was witness to a charter for Walter Ker of Cessford for the lands of Caverston in 1500. He could be related to the George who had sasines for Craig in Dumfriesshire in Gledstains Gledstains

1458 and 1459. He may be the ‘Gorgoni de Gledstany’s who leased Hundleshope in Peeblesshire in 1471. George (15th/16th C.) obtained a sasine for the lands of Gladstanes in Roxburghshire in 1503, this being granted by Ninian Glendinning. It is unclear which lands are referred to here. He is probably the ‘georg of gledstanis’ who witnessed a bond between Turnbuls at Caerlenrig in 1505. In 1510 he witnessed a charter for this same Ninian Glendinning, for lands in the Barony of Scraesburgh. He may be the ‘George Gledstains’ listed in 1526 as a brother of Adam Scott in Clarilaw and William Scott, when a large number of Borderers had remission for attacking the Earl of Arran; this would suggest he was a step-brother or brother-in-law (i.e. he married a daughter of James of Kirkurd). He may be the George who witnessed a document for the Scotts of Headshaw in 1531. George (15th/16th C.) recorded among the many Borders men who had remission in 1526 for their earlier attack on the Earl of Arran. He is listed separately from another George, but right before Walter, who is probably related. George of Stobs (d.bef. 1581) recorded as deceased in 1581 when his brother Gavin received sasine for his lands of Stobs. It is unclear how he was related to other local Gledstains. George of Dod (17th C.) possibly son of Walter. He was a local landowner of the mid-to-late 1600s, according to James Wilson. In 1643 he is recorded paying tax for lands valued at £180 in Cavers Parish; these appear to have been Dod and Hunthill, which were disjoined before 1707. He may be the Laird of Dod whose lands in Kirkton Parish were valued at £700, and whose mother was listed as liferenter of lands in Kirkton Parish, valued at £200. He is recorded as heir to Walter of Dod in 1649 when he was infested in the lands of Hunthill (in Cavers Parish) by William, Earl of Lothian. He may have been father of Mary who married George Scott of Synton. He was recorded in a deed of 1663. He may have been father of Abraham of Hunthill, who was served heir to his grandfather Walter of Dod in 1676. Gorgon (d.1456) probably a son of the Laird of Gledstains. He was described as ‘Gorgon de Gledstanys of Hundwellishop’, and must have held the family lands of Hundleshope in Peeblesshire. After his death the property passed into the King’s ward. He was mentioned in relation to the lands of Hundleshope in a later charter of 1471. Herbert ‘de Gledstan’ (13th/14th C.), the earliest recorded Gladstone, from the county of Lanark, who swore fealty to Edward I in 1296. His seal bore an 8-leaved flower and the name ‘S’HERB D’GLEDSTAN’. He probably gained the family lands in the Parish of Liberton, about 4 miles north of Biggar. His exact descendants are uncertain, but were known to be in Roxburghshire in 1336. It is likely that he received his Lanarkshire lands from the Douglasses, because of the close connection between the families for many subsequent generations; this may also have been the origin of the move to lands in Roxburghshire. A tradition says that the family shield once bore ‘the bleeding head of a savage or Saracen’, perhaps relating to the Crusades. The name Herbert occurred many times later in the Dumfriesshire and Peeblesshire branches. Herbert (15th C.) rendered the accounts of Annandale in the Exchequer Rolls for 1455. He is referred to as ‘eodem’, i.e. ‘of that Ilk’ in 1456 when he witnessed a charter for Robert, Lord Maxwell. He was probably the Baillie of Dumfries mentioned in the Exchequer Rolls in 1460. Probably the same Herbert also witnessed a charter in Annandale in 1487. Herbert (15th/16th C.) Rector of Dornoch, he held lands in Over Kelwood in Dumfriesshire. He was recorded in several charters in the years 1504–08. Perhaps the same Herbert witnessed a charter for Robert, Lord Maxwell in 1525. He is probably the Herbert, Burgess of Dumfries, whose great-grandson Mark was served heir in 1610 (as well as to the lands of his son, also Mark). He may have been succeeded by Thomas, who had a charter of Over Kelwood in 1509. Herbert (d.1569) Town Clerk of Dundee. In 1541 he married Mirabella, who was daughter of his cousin (with a dispensation from the Pope) Matthew of Over Kelwood. His first wife died in 1555 and he secondly married Margaret Hepburn. He was succeeded in Over Kelwood and Craigs by his son Walter (also called ‘of that Ilk’) and also had a son George, who was Archbishop of St. Andrews. Herbert (16th/17th C.) schoolmaster in Dumfries, recorded in 1601. In 1606 he was named in a grant by John of Over Kelwood and Craigs (to whom he was presumably a distant relative). Given his forename, he was surely a descendent of earlier Gledstains. Herbert (b.c.1600) born in Dumfries, he joined the army of Gustavus Adolphus of Sweden in about 1640. He received lands in Oestergottland in 1647, with the form of his name being ‘Gladsten’. This branch of the family continued in Sweden until 1761. James (d.bef. 1437) 6th of that Ilk, son of William, and younger brother of John, who he appears to have succeeded. He also had another brother Thomas, although it is unclear who was older. He probably inherited Hundleshope in Peeblesshire from his mother (Margaret Turnbull), along with Gledstains in Lanarkshire and Cocklaw in Roxburghshire through his father. He was witness to a charter along with his brother Thomas in 1404 (regarding the rights of Melrose Abbey for the benefits of Cavers Parish), and resided at Cocklaw in Cavers Parish. He was the owner of the tower during the famous siege of Cocklaw (i.e. Ormiston) by the Percys in 1403. Also in 1403 he was probably the ‘James of Gledstanis’ appointed as bailie of the regality of Sprouston for Archibald, Earl of Douglas. In 1413 he is recorded holding the position of Bailie to the 4th Earl of Douglas, in the Regality of Sprouston, and possibly also in the Barony of Cavers (like his forefathers held for their Douglas superiors) in a sasine for John, son of Sir William of Cranston. In 1424 he was on a ‘retour of inquest’ made in Havick for lands in Howman; Robert was also listed and so probably related. He married Janet Murray, who was involved in a law-suit against the Baron, Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1437 over ownership of East Mains. The next generation is uncertain, but his grandson was probably John of that Ilk and Cocklaw. He must also have been related to Alexander (perhaps his nephew) who lost the lands of Flex and ‘Kirkton Mains’ to the Baron in another court case of 1464/5. James of Cocklaw (d. bef. 1544) son of John. In 1519 he entered into a marriage contract with Sir Walter Scott of Bucleuch, to marry his son and heir John to one of Sir Walter’s daughters, or failing that any other woman Sir Walter selected; this involved a promise to give lands in Peeblesshire and Cavers to the couple, with Sir Walter promising to try to preserve the lands of Cocklaw intact in future. The Peeblesshire lands were in the barony of Hundleshope and the Cavers lands were ‘Guddisclucht, Vnishop, Binkkis and Langbittis’. He may be the James described as ‘lord superior of the same’ in 1533 when Elizabeth (wife of Robert Ker, Burgess of Selkirk) produced a charter for her lands in Hundleshope. In 1533/4 he witnessed a bond between Patrick Murray of Falahill and William Stewart of Traquair. He was said to have been in possession of Cocklaw in 1534, when a fresh seal was added to the deed granting Hundleshope to John Turnbull, hence confirming him in those lands. Although the family no longer had the lands of Gledstanes in Lanarkshire, they were still called ‘of that Ilk’, and Arthur-shiel, a neighbouring property was still owned by a branch of the family. He was succeeded by his son John, who is recorded as his heir in a dispute in 1544 with Robert Scott in Howford. James of Cocklaw (1547–c.1615) son of John. He was 12th of that Ilk. In 1567 he was among men ordered to present themselves to be warded in Blackness Castle; his surety was Sir William Douglas of Cavers. He was probably the James of Cocklaw who signed the bond uniting against the Liddesdale thieves in 1569. In 1569 he gave surety for Archibald Elliot of Corriesike (along with Sir Walter Scott of Bucleuch, who was surety for other Eillots) and was found liable when he failed to appear, with his lands and goods to be held if he did not pay the £1000. Along with Walter Scott of Goldielands, he gave security for the appearance of a number of Hawick residents (Alan Deans, John Scott, son to Philip’s Jock, and Johnnie Cavers) in a court case in Edinburgh in 1571, possibly connected with a raid. In 1571/2 he signed the bond to act against Borders thieves. According to the register of the Privy Council he was warded in 1571, had ‘surety in relief’ in 1571 and 1574 and served as surety in 1576. In 1572/3 he swore allegiance to the Crown and the Regent (and not to assist Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst), with his surety being William Ker of Caverton. He signed the ‘Band of Roxburgh’ in 1573, ‘with my hand at the pen’. Also in 1574 he served as surety for a large number of Borderers, specifically residents of Hummelknowes, Colforthill and Adderstoneshie; he was found liable to pay 5000 for not removing the thieves (who were mostly Croziers). In 1574 he was on the retours for Walter Scott of Branxholme as heir to his great-uncle David Scott, as well as his father Sir Walter Scott. He was probably the ‘little Gladstane, good in need’ who led the local contingent at the Raid of the Redeswire in 1575; the land near Bonchester known as ‘Little Gledstains’ may be connected with him in some way. He was a prominent Borderer of his time, his name being mentioned 32 times in the Register of the Privy Council, in connection with either Roxburghshire or Peeblesshire. He was probably the Laird of Gledstains who was on the defence side in the trial of 2 sons of Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule in 1577/8. In the 1570s he was one of the ‘curators’ of the young Robert Scott of Thirlestane. Also in 1576 was he a surety along with Walter Scott of Goldielands and James Langlands of that Ilk for tenants in Lairhope and Broadlee, as well as George Elliot, ‘the Cleg’, and John Stoddart, ‘cobilman to the Lord of Langlandis’. In 1578/9 he was among 22 Border Lairds who did not appear before the Privy Council when summoned, and was declared liable for the fines associated with the pledges made in 1576. Also in 1578/9 he was cautioner for Robin Elliot of Redheugh, pledging that he would not raid into England. In 1580, Walter Scott of Goldielands and Robert Elliot of Redheugh complained to the Privy Council about Muckle Whitlaw being raided; they raised the fray, following the thieves to England. However, on their return through Liddesdale they were attacked by a band of Armstrongs and Elliots near Whithaugh. He was probably in the party that rode off to follow the raiders, and his brother Walter was killed. One of his farms was raided by Elliots and Armstrongs in 1580, as well as the farm tenanted by John Gledstains at Whitlaw. Also in 1580 he complained (along with the Countess of Bothwell and Wat Scott of Harden) of thefts and outrages committed by the Elliots on their farms. In 1580/1 he witnessed an agreement to settle a dispute between George Scott of Synton and Walter Scott of Stiches regarding the lands of Synton Mill. In 1581 he was allied with Walter Scott of Goldielands and Robert Elliot of Redheugh when they had a set of complaints made against them by Martin of Braidlie, Simon Armstrong of Mangerton and Lance Armstrong of Whithaugh; they were all charged to appear before the Privy Council with assurances for their supporters. He was a cautioner (although with Robert and Mungo, Burgessess of Edinburgh) for Walter Scott of Goldielands being entered into ward in Edinburgh Castle in 1581. Also in 1581 he witnessed a ‘letter of slains’ in Hawick whereby Robert and James Scott forgave the Scotts of Allanhaugh and Over Southfield for the murder of their brother George. He was among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. Also in 1583/4 he was involved in a caution for his tenant Thomas Burnet and others in his 3 husbandlands in Hundlehope, that John Scott there would not harm them. He was the Laird of Gledstains who gave assurances in 1584 for himself and other Gledstains, with the Elliot chiefs standing as assurance. In instructions from the King to Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus (Lieutenant on the Border) in 1586, he is listed along with the Lairds of Buccleuch, Howpasley, Redheugh, Braidlie, Whithaugh and others as chiefs in upper Teviotdale. In 1589 he was on a list of Border Lairds who failed to appear before the Privy Council to give ‘thair gude advise anent the gude reule and quietnes of the Bordouris’ and were denounced as rebels. Also in 1589 he was surety for John Turnbull of Minto. In 1590 he was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. Also in 1590, Walter Scott of Goldielands acted as cautioner for him. He was probably the Laird of ‘Gledstain’ listed on the 1590 ‘Roll of the Clans’ and is also probably the ‘James Gledstain’ who was witness in 1595 to the bond between the Scotts and the Kerrs. In 1592 his cautioner was Charles Geddes of ‘Rauchane’ that he would not reset any of those who had supported the Earl of Bothwell. In 1594/5 he made a bond that Hector and Richard Turnbull of Clarilaw would not harm Gavin Elliot of Stobs or William Elliot of Horsleyhill; this was signed at Hawick. In 1598 his name was transcribed ‘of Atrei of Cocklaw’ when he served as surety for John of Craig in a bond registered in Selkirk. In 1599 he was surety for himself and for ‘his man’ Simon, brother of Philip Scott of Dryhope, that they would ‘observe the King’s peace’. In 1600 there was a complaint by the Provost and Bailies of Peebles that he had come to ‘Caidmure’, along with his son and heir James, his natural son Robert and his nephew James, where they slew James Dickson; they were all denounced as rebels for non-appearance. He was ‘of Cocklaw’ in 1602 when he signed a bond among Border Lairds for keeping the peace. In 1605 he was in court with the family of Thomas Peebles, Burgess of Peebles, who was murdered in 1561, with the family still seeking satisfaction; his sureties were John of Winningtonrig and John Rutherford, Bailie of Jedburgh. His name appears in the Register of the Privy Seal no less than 32 times, in connection with both Roxburghshire and Peeblesshire. He was regularly fined (e.g. in 1608 along with Horsburgh of that Ilk and Halden of that Ilk, binding them to keep the peace), imprisoned and denounced as a troublemaker, although he lived to a reasonably old age. In 1610 he and William Scott of Howpasley had an action against them by James Douglas of Drumlanrig for not paying taxes on their lands of ‘Ramselew, Hoppaile and Schawis’, and on his lands of Adderstone and Adderstoneshiel. He signed a bond in 1612 (along with several Scotts) for keeping peace in the Borders. In 1614 he resigned his lands of ‘Hundillishope, Acolmfeild, Wodegrevintoun’ and land at the east end of Peebles to his son James, younger, and his wife; this suggests he was quite old by then. He was succeeded by his son James (who was succeeded after only a few years by Walter). His daughter Margaret... married David, son of Hector Turnbull of Wauchope according to a marriage contract of 1593 (not 1567 as in one record). Another daughter Lilias married Richard Rutherford ‘Dickon Draw-the Sword’, who led the Jedburgh contingent at the Raid of the Reidswire. He may also be the James of Cocklaw whose daughter Barbara married John, younger son of John Rutherford of Hunthill. James of Cocklaw (c.1584–c.1620) son of James, he was the 13th of that Ilk. He led a similar life to that of his father, committing theft, murder, etc. In 1600 he was son and heir of his father when the pair, along with his brother Robert and cousin James, went to ‘Caidmure’, where they slew James Dickson; this was a continuation of the family’s dispute over lands adjacent to their possession of Hundleshope. However, he was Laird of Cocklaw for only a few years. In 1606 he was ‘appeirand of Coklaw’ when he served as cautioner for Thomas Turnbull (younger of Wauchope) who was accused of raiding and burning Appotside and Harwood. He was still ‘apparent of Cocklaw’ in 1608 when he appeared for Archibald Douglas and others, swearing not to harm anyone in Peebles. In 1614 he was granted the lands of ‘Hundillishope, Acolmfeild, Wodegrevingtoun’ which had been resigned by his father James, elder, together with his wife Beatrice Ker. In 1616 he (or perhaps his father) was on the jury for the trial of the ruffians hired by Jean Scott of Satchells and Lady Scott of Howpasley to mutilate the sheep and cattle belonging to Douglas of Drumlanrig. In 1618 he was said to be son and heir of James, and former owner of the lands of Hundleshope and others in Peebleshire, when John Scott had a charter from James VI. He may be the James who was a Hawick Bailie in the 1620s. He married Beatrix Ker in about 1607, and hence Beatrix, who married James Grieve of Commonside, may have been his daughter. He was succeeded by Walter of Cocklaw and may have also had sons Robert and James. In 1620 Beatrix Ker, Lady Gledstanes (presumably his widow by then) and her 3 sons William, Robert and James, led an assault on the old lands near Peebles that the family had disputed for generations; they were charged with being armed with ‘swerdis, gantillatis, plaitslevis, halbertis, lances, speiris, Jedburgh stauffissi’. James (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1600 as ‘brother-son’ to James of Cocklaw. Along with his uncle and his cousins James and Robert, they were accused of killing James Dickson near Peebles. It is unclear who his father was. He may be the same as one of the other Jameses. Bailie James (16th/17th C.) Magistrate of Hawick recorded in 1627, along with Robert Scott. They were the Town’s Bailies when 16 men from Hawick were listed as being ‘idle and masterless’ and appropriate for sending to the wars in Germany. When the men were not produced he said that ‘he had not power, force nor friendship within the town of Hawick to apprehend the persons abonewritten or to exhibit thame’; it is unclear exactly what that meant (since it also states that the other Bailie did have ‘both power and friendship within the town’). He is probably the James who acted as witness to the Hawick Parish valuation of 1627. Capt. James (d.1645) grandfather of Walter the Town Clerk, he must have been a near relative of the Lairds of Cocklaw. He was part of Sir William Douglas’ Covenanter force, and was killed at the Battle of Aulderne along with his brother Francis. James (17th C.) resident of Abbotrule Parish. He married Marion Tudhope about 1668 and her will is recorded in 1682. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Jane Forrest and their children included: Alexander (b.1670); and Gavin (b.1673). Bailie James (17th C.) Hawick Councillor and Magistrate in the 1660s and Magistrate in the 1670s. He was on the list of Hawick men named in the 1673 trial following the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. He was also recorded as Bailie in Hawick in a deed of 1673. He may be the ‘Baylyea Gladstaines’ recorded in 1675 among the men named to go to check on the boundary wall being built by Walter Scott of Goldielands, to ensure that the Common was not being encroached upon. He is probably the ‘late baylyea’ in Hawick listed among those contributing to funds for the new Kirk bell in 1693/4 and the ‘Bailyea Gladstaines’ who paid tax on 2 hearths in the east-side of Hawick in 1694. He may be the James, married to Isobel ‘Whillance’ (i.e. Whullans), whose children baptised in Hawick included: William (b.1673); Isobell (b.1675); John (b.1677); James (b.1678); and Christian (b.1680). Probably Rachel (b.1683), with the mother’s name given as ‘Helen Whillance’ was also his daughter. He may be the James who witnessed a baptism for carrier James Scott in 1688 and another for John Aitchison in 1682. He was ‘balyie’ when he witnessed a baptism for Walter Turnbull in 1685. James (17th C.) of Hummelknowes. Recorded in a letter to Walter, Earl of Tarras in 1692. James (17th C.) listed as a resident of Effledge on the 1694 Hearth Tax roll. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Laing in 1700. James (b.1701), Janet (b.1703), Euphan (b.1706) and Bessie (b.1710) could have been his children. For the 1703 baptism he was recorded being in Whitehaugh and the witnesses were James Gray in Whitlaw and Francis Henderson in Flex. James (d.before 1734) 16th of that Ilk and Laird of Cocklaw, probably son of William. Scott of Satchells dedicated part of his Scott history to him in 1686. He registered arms in the period 1672-78. He was probably the Laird in 1678 who paid the land tax on £1240 in Cavers Parish. His brother John became a tailor’s apprentice in 1681. He may be the Gladstains of ‘Ormistoun’ who was among the local lairds who were taken off to Edinburgh Castle as supporters of the Covenanters in 1683. He was one of the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1685. He (along with ‘Mr Archibald’) witnessed a baptism in 1685 for John of Hilliesland. He may be the James who witnessed a baptism for doctor William Scott in Hawick in 1687, along with Town Clerk Walter. He was ‘of Cocklaw’ in 1688 when he witnessed a baptism for Charles Scott of Crumhaugh. In 1700 he witnessed a baptism for John Scott of Gorrenberry. He was certainly still living in 1707, when he is recorded as gaining permission to cart divots off the Common. However, a Robert ‘of that Ilk’ is recorded on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1704, so the succession is unclear around this time. He supposedly died unmarried, perhaps shortly before 1734 when his property was divided among his heirs; however, it is possible he died earlier and was succeeded by Robert (perhaps a younger brother). Cocklaw passed to Janet Gladstains, who was either his daughter or perhaps the daughter of Robert. James (17th/18th C.) wright in Hawick Parish. In 1719 he witnessed a baptism for William Bulloch. The witnesses were John of Whitlaw (who was probably related) and ex-Bailie James Scott. He may be the same as one of the other Jameses. James (17th/18th C.) blacksmith at Dodburn. His son William was baptised in Kirkton Parish in 1718. William (b.1731), also baptised in Kirkton Parish, may also have been his son. It is possible he is the same man as the blacksmith in Hawick in the 1720s. James (17th/18th C.) blacksmith in Hawick Parish. In 1735 he was paid by the Council ‘for making ye coulter’ (presumably for using on the Common). He married Janet Moscrop and their children included: Bessie (b.1721); Janet (b.1723); and Walter (b.1725). The 1725 baptism was witnessed by Walter Nixon and John Scott ‘in Hawick’. He could be the James, son of Walter and Janet Scott, baptised in Hawick in 1688. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Orchard in 1715. His children were probably Margaret (b.1712), Marion (b.1715), Isabel (b.1718) and Margaret (b.1722). James (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was son of Walter and in 1718 married Marion Gladstains, daughter of another Walter. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Hobkirk and had a daughter Margaret (b.1728). The witnesses appear to have been John Scott and John Paterson. James (18th C.) outdoor servant working on the Wells estate in about 1730. He is mentioned in the estate book of factor Archibald Jerdan, described as a sort of handy-man. James (18th C.) possibly brother of Bailie Gladstains, they were together given responsibility about 1740 for collecting subscriptions ‘west the water’ for paying for the Teviot Bridge. He could be the James described as a tailor in Hawick in 1735. He may be the tailor James who witnessed a baptism for weaver William Crozier in Hawick in 1718. He may be the James (along with another John) who witnessed an Episcopal baptism for John of Whitlaw in 1753. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elizabeth Turnbull in 1753. James (18th C.) tailor in Hawick Parish. He married Jean Bulloch and their daughter Marion was baptised in 1759. James (d.bef. 1808) only surviving son of Town Clerk John. He owned the property at 80 High Street that was later the Liberal Club. However, he did not long outlive his father, since his sisters Christian and Ann were served heirs to their father in 1808 and sold the property in 1809. He could be the James, son of John and Ann Weir baptised in Hawick in 1766. James (b.c.1795) farm labourer and gamekeeper who lived at Branxholme Town and later at Stintyknowe. He was probably related to the earlier Gladstains who were at Chapelhill. His wife was Barbara and their children included Betty, Agnes and Margaret. In 1861 he was ‘Formerly Gamekeeper’ at ‘Stintyknows Far House’. Janet nee Murray (15th C.) wife of James of that Ilk. In 1437, after the death of her husband, she was involved in a dispute with the Baron of Hawick, Sir William Douglas, over the lands of the East Mains of Hawick; the ‘reurt’ decided in favour of Douglas. Her name is given as ‘Joneta de Murraia’. Janet (16th C.) owner of 1½ particates of land on the south side of the public street.

Gledstains

According to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. She may have been widow of a local Gledstains. Janet (16th C.) recorded in Selkirk in 1580 when her will and inventory was listed in the Selkirk Protocol Books, ‘made by her own mouth in her own house’. She was ‘alias Done’, suggesting that she may have been a widow, with her husband being a Mr. Down or Dunn. Her executors were Alexander, elder Burgess of Selkirk (who may have been a close relation, such as a brother) and William Currer. The list is given of those who owed money to her, and those to whom she owed money (including Katherine Scott, widow of Ninian Scott and Marion Gledstains, widow of William Scott). She left money to Margaret, widow of Thomas Dunn (who were surely related to either her or her husband), her son-in-law Thomas Brydon, her executor William Currer and Alexander, and Alexander’s daughters Helen and Margaret. Janet (d.1737) probably the daughter of James, the 16th of that Ilk (although he is also said to have died unmarried, but perhaps this is confused and he merely died with no male heirs); however, she is also said to have been daughter of Robert of that Ilk. She died unmarried and in 1738 the lands of Dod were divided among her ‘heirs-portioners’, who were John of Whitlaw, Robert Rutherford and Robert’s wife Esther, sister of Robert of that Ilk (and hence presumably her aunt). Cocklaw was eventually sold in about 1741. John (d.1412) 5th Gladstains of that Ilk, eldest son of William and Margaret Turnbull. His mother transferred her properties to him when William died, some time in the reign of Robert III (probably the late 1390s). This included Hundslethope in Peeblesshire and Roberton in Selkirkshire (perhaps the first record of the name ‘Roberton’), as well as land in the town of Selkirk. It is also possible that the lands of Ormiston (or Cocklaw) etc. near Hawick were acquired by the Gledstains through this Turnbull connection; Margaret’s father John was surely related to the Turnbulls of the Borthwick Water and Selkirkshire. This was the start of the family of Gledstains of that Ilk moving their centre of activity to Roxburghshire. He was probably succeeded by his brother James, or possibly by Thomas and then James. John (15th C.) possibly 7th of that Ilk, perhaps succeeding James, who may have been his father. However, the information is uncertain, partly because of the decline of the Earls of Douglas, their overlords. He was referred to as ‘Johanni de Gledstanys de eisdem’ in 1456 in the Exchequer Rolls for Peeblesshire.
Gledstains

He was probably the John ‘Gledstanis’ who was one of the witnesses for a sasine of lands in Denholm and Cavers in 1491/2. He may be the John ‘gledstanys’ who acted as surety for the sons of Matthew in Hassendean in 1494/5. In 1497/8 he was on the panel at Cavers to rule on the inheritance of Tillielee and Cauldeleuch by Robert Elliot; he is there ‘of Winditonhaw’. He may be the John recorded in 1502 when 40 geese were stolen from him out of ‘aquam de teviot’ by Adam Grahamslaw. He was probably an ancestor of the later John of Winningtonhall. John (1482–1518) 8th of that Ilk and Cocklaw, probably the grandson of James who suffered the famous Siege of Cocklaw. He still appears to have owned lands in Peeblesshire; He may be the John who presented Thomas Linton as suitor for his lands of Melvilleslands at the Justice-aire in Peebles in 1502 and William Dickson for his lands of ‘Wodgrewington’ in 1502/3. In 1509 he leased lands at Cademuir to John Murray. In 1509 he was also on the ‘re-tour of inquest’ (listed first, in fact) for the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers by James Douglas. He is named in a Douglas of Cavers document in 1509/10, verifying their lands and Barony, except for the lands held by him, as shown by a charter of David II (although it is unclear whether this also refers to the Gledstains lands). He allied himself with the Scotts of Braxholme and Buccleuch. In 1517 he was on the panel of ‘re-tour’ for Sir Walter Scott inheriting his father’s barony of Braxholme. His lands at that time included Coliford, Ormiston, Dod and Giddenscleuch. He was apparently quite unscrupulous, trying to gain possession of part of the common lands of Cademuir (adjacent to Hundleshope), and being involved in a raid there in 1518. He was succeeded by his nephew John, who was mentioned in connection with the 1518 raid. John of Cocklaw (d.1519) nephew of John, the 8th Laird. He was the 9th Gledstains of that Ilk, although only for a year. He was probably already an old man in 1518 when there was a raid, involving him and his son Archibald, on the common lands of Peebles. It is described that the Laird of Gledstains sent forth ‘John of Gledstanes his nevy and apperand air, Archibald Gledstanes, his sone, and others to the number of twenty-six men’. He was succeeded by his son James, who contracted in 1519 to marry his son John to a daughter of Sir Walter Scott of Braxholme. In 1517 his daughter Helen was infefted in ‘liferent’ of the lands of ‘Langhawcht’ in the Barony of Manor in Peeblesshire. He may be the John of that Ilk whose widow Margaret ‘Jardane’ is recorded in 1542 requesting from the Court of Session that Lord Somerville pay her the rents on the lands of Liberton (in Lanarkshire). John of Craig and Over Kelwood (d.bef. 1537) son of Thomas, who held Over Kelwood in Dumfriesshire. He was confusingly referred to as being ‘of that Ilk and Craigs’, even although there were others ‘of that Ilk’ in Roxburghshire at the same time. He had a sasine of Over Kelwood in 1525, married Margaret Jardine, who brought a case as a widow in 1537. He was probably succeeded by his brother Matthew. John (d.1574) probably a son of Gledstains of that Ilk, but his parentage is not known. He held the lands of ‘Quothquan’, which extended to 26 acres of the former larger estate of Gledstains in Lanarkshire. He attended St. Andrews University 1505–8, then studied in France. In 1534 he became an advocate, appointed ‘Advocatus Pau- perum’ and was a Lord of Sessions from 1542. He was also Procurator of Judges, Member of the Privy Council and became Doctor of Laws. He was recorded in Edinburgh in 1550, on a panel ruling for the Privy Council. His property was inherited by his nephew, also John, who was Ormond Pursuivant for Scotland. He must have lived to a great old age, or else two men are compounded here. John (1519–64) 11th of that Ilk, son of James. He probably married a daughter of Sir Walter Scott of Branzholme (Janet or Chris- tian), to whom he had been betrothed by a mar- riage contract of 1519/20 (which must have been shortly after he was born). This demonstrates the close links between the Scott and Gledstains families at this time. In 1537/8 there was an assurance by several Croizers that they would not harm him, his friends or servants, with Elliots acting as cautious. In 1542 he had a sasine for the lands of Adderstone and Adderstoneshiel. He was recorded in 1544 as heir of the deceased James of Cocklaw in a dispute with Robert Scott in How- ford; he complained that Robert Scott and his tu- tor William Scott had made an arrangement for 6 1/2 husbandlands in Cocklaw and owed him 200 merks in redemption money. Philip was a witness, and hence may have been related. He was probably the Laird of Gledstains mentioned as a credi- tor in the inventory of the estate of William Scott, younger of Buccleuch in 1552. He is mentioned in connection with exploits of the Scotts after 1553. In 1553/4 he was ‘de Coklaw’ when he was on the panel for Sir Walter Scott of Branzholme inheriting from his grandfather. He was charged with the murder of Thomas Peebles and William...
Bell at ‘Kaidmuir’ near Peebles in 1561, probably a continuation of the claim on those lands made by his family for generations; his name is given as ‘Jhone Gledstaneis of Coklaw’. Although the trial was deferred indefinitely, his son James was pursued for damages by the descendants of the victim. Also in 1561 he was among a list of men charged to appear before Queen Mary regarding the state of the Borders. In 1563/4 he gave the tenancy of lands in Hundlehope (in Peeblesshire) to 2 men after they renounced their former ‘kindenes’ agreement. Also in 1563/4 he promised to enter 3 Elliots and 2 Croziers for crimes against an Englishman, with Sir William Cranston as his surety. He is probably the ‘Lard of Coklaw’ listed in 1564 among Border lairds who were ordered to support the warden, Ker of Cessford. In 1564/5 he and his barnis are described as supporters of Buccleuch in the bond signed between the Scotts and the Kerrs. He was succeeded by his son James, ‘little Gledstane’. His other sons were: William of Cocklaw; Walter, killed by raiders from Liddesdale; and (probably) John of Whitlaw. A document of 1561 (for the rental of Corrie Sike) states that his son and heir apparent was John, which appears to contradict other information (and is perhaps an error, unless there were 2 confounded generations here). John (16th C.) tenant of Sir Walter Scott of Howpasley in the lands of Outersideig in 1569. Sir Walter acted as cautioner for his tenants at a meeting in Hawick, assuring that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. John (16th C.) resident of Selkirk. He was son and heir of Selkirk Burgess Alexander in 1561 when his father promised to pay him back for the £10 Scots he had borrowed. John of Whitlaw (16th C.) probably son of John, 11th of that Ilk. He was the founder of the Whitlaw and Flex branch of the family. He is mentioned in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme as being left something unspecified. In 1580 he is recorded as ‘servand’ to the Countess of Bothwell, owner of Whitlaw, when the farm was raided by a group of Elliots and Armstrongs, who stole 100 sheep. He was in the party that followed the raiders, and one of his brothers was killed in a skirmish. John of Winningtonhall (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1579 when he witnessed the transfer of Routhhope and Philhope from John Turnbull to Martin Elliot. In 1581 he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk involving lands in Langnewton; his servant John Elliot was also a witness. In 1582 he witnessed a transaction involving the Scotts of Allanhaugh, taking place at Branxholme. He is probably the John ‘of Wydeton hall’ in 1584 when he signed the bond of assurance between men of Liddesdale and the English Wardens, his name appearing alongside other local Gledstains. He is recorded in 1586/7 among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. Probably the same John ‘of Woudingtoun Hall’ was witness to a marriage contract between the Gledstains of Cocklaw and the Turnbulls of Wauchope in 1593. In 1598 he was one of the signatories for the registration of a bond for John of Craig not to harm certain Maxwells, with James of Cocklaw as the surety. He resigned his lands in 1605 (presumably for the purposes of a new infeftment), and is there styled ‘Joanni Gledstaneis de Windintounhall’. He is named as surety for James of Cocklaw and that Ilk in a trial of 1605 (relating to reparations for John of Cocklaw’s murder of Thomas Peebles in 1561). His location is there recorded as ‘Wymingtonhauch’ and ‘Wyndington Haugh’. In 1607 he was chancellor of the ‘assyse’ which found George Henderson in Winnington to be not guilty of chopping down trees belonging to Robert Elliot of Redheugh. It seems likely that he was a close relative of James of that Ilk and related to the John of the same place a century earlier. John of Over Kelwood and Craigs (16th/17th C.) son of Walter. His lands were in Dumfriesshire and he was the last of his line to be referred to as ‘of that Ilk’. In 1595 he was served heir to his father in the superiority of the family’s original Lanarkshire lands. He was recorded in 1598 when James of Cocklaw was his surety not to harm certain Maxwells; the papers were signed in Selkirk, with John of Winningtonhall as one of the witnesses (showing that there were still connections between the separate branches of this family). In 1606 he settled Over Kelwood on his cousin Alexander, Archdeacon of St. Andrews; the grant also named Herbert, Schoolmaster of Dumfries and John, son of William, Burgess of Dumfries (both probably distant relatives). He married Agnes Maxwell, who died in 1628. His heiresses were: Margaret, who married James Watson, Burgess of St. Andrews; Elizabeth, who married Matthew Hairstanes and acquired Over Kelwood; and Agnes, who married John Hairstanes, Burgess of Dumfries, in 1622. John of Whitlaw (d.bef. 1672) son of Walter. He stood in for his father as Chamberlain for the Duke of Buccleuch for Hassendean and Wilton.
Gledstains

Parishes in the period 1641–47 and was Chamberlain in his own right by 1647–48. He remained Chamberlain until at least 1656, and in the last couple of years also acted for Eckford, Hawick and Clarilaw. He was the Chamberlain who gave an account of the personal property and debts of Earl Francis Scott of Buccleuch when he died in 1651. In 1648 he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire. He may be the John who witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1652 for Robert Scott of Harwood and Beatriss Gledstains (probably a relative). He was granted the lands of Flex by James Douglas, Earl of Queensberry in 1653. He is probably the John of Whitlaw recorded on the Land Tax Rolls of 1663, when £133 6s 8d was paid for Flex in Hawick Parish and £266 13s 4d paid for Whitlaw; he also paid the teind of Eckford on behalf of the Countess of Buccleuch. He married Anna Scott (probably daughter of Walter Scott of Synton) and their children, baptised in Hawick, included: Margaret (b.1639); Walter (b.1640); Francis (b.1643), who succeeded; an unnamed son (b.1645); and Helen (b.1646). His son Francis was served as his heir in 1658. He may be the same John of Whitlaw (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. It is possible he was the same as the Hilliesland (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1717 he married Jean, daughter of Adam Glendinning and their children included John (b.1718). John admitted as a Burgess in 1692 and an an-cestor of the Town Clerks who owned Hilliesland. He was surely related to the Town Clerks of Hawick. John of Hilliesland (if not the same man) and perhaps father of the later John of Hilliesland; he was surely related to the Town Clerks of Hawick. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobell Burn and their children included William (b.1707). John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1717 he married Jean, daughter of Adam Glendinning and their children included John (b.1718). John of Whitlaw (17th/18th C.). It is unclear how he was related to earlier Gledstains of Whitlaw. He witnessed a baptism for William Henderson in the Flex in 1709. He was recorded as being a Hawick Parish heritor in 1718. He witnessed further bap-tisms in 1718 for John Davidson (tenant in Flex), with the other witness being his brother William, and in 1719 for Archibald Paterson, tenant in the Flex. His brother James became a skinner’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1719. He is probably the same man as John of Flex who was recorded in a 1710 land valuation of Hawick Parish, when his lands of ‘Flex and Meikle and Little Whitlaw’ were valued at 400 merks. He probably succeeded Francis of Whitlaw, but it is unclear if he was his son or brother. He was probably succeeded by the (next and last) John of Whitlaw. John (d.1754) tenant of ‘Hilliesland Walls’ and presumably related to the ‘Town Clerks’ family. He witnessed a sasine made by Town Clerk Walter in 1728. He was described as being ‘of Hilliesland’ when admitted as a Burgess of Hawick in 1733 (and was presumably a descendant of the John of Hillies-land who became a Burgess in 1692). He may be the John who witnessed an Episcopal baptism for John of Whitlaw in 1753. He may have been the last Laird of Hilliesland to live there, and was probably the Laird who was described (in 1767) as having earlier driven his herd to Hawick Common, down the Iver Burn. John of Whitlaw (c.1710–bef. 83) one of the last of the family to

His son was William. In 1717 he and his son and daughter-in-law were all rebuked by the Session for fighting with one another on the street. He is probably the John ‘at the East Port’, who, along with his son William, were in 1700 ‘found guilty of stealing peats and strae, are sentenced to stand at the crosse for a season, and be banished the town’. They stole 3 loads of peat from Galalaw and oat straw from the stack yard of Rev. Cunningham; this was said to be ‘out of his extreme necessity’, probably related to the great famine that spread over the country at that time. John of Hilliesland (17th/18th C.) admitted as a Burgess of Hawick in 1692. He may have been son of the earlier John of Hilliesland and Bessie (b.1687). The witnesses in 1685 were ‘Mr Archibald’ (surely a relative) and James of that Ilk. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was married to Isobel (or Bessie) Lid-dell and their children included Jane (b.1676), Francis (b.1683), Francis (b.1685) and Bessie (b.1687). The witnesses in 1685 were ‘Mr Archibald’ (surely a relative) and James of that Ilk. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was married to Isobel (or Bessie) Liddell and their children included Jane (b.1682) and William (b.1685). John (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He was listed separately from the carier. It is possible he was the same as the Hilliesland Laird. John (17th/18th C.) carrier in Hawick. He was listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4 and paid tax on 2 hearths according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694.
own land locally. He may have been son of the previous John of Whitlaw. In 1738 he was one of ‘heirs-portioners’ of Janet, daughter of Robert of that Ilk and Cocklaw, when she died unmarried; he thus received part of the lands of Dod that Janet had still possessed. He was listed on a memorial of 1738, claiming the right of the Lordship of Rutherford to John Scott of Belford. He was stated to be tenant of Whitlaw in the 1750s when Robert Hobkirk was Town Herd. He witnessed a baptism in 1759 for tailor James (possibly a relative). He was interested in genealogy and prepared a pedigree of the Scotts of Synton (through whom he was related on his mother’s side), Whitslade, etc. in 1769; this was used as the basis for much of the booklet on the pedigree of the Scotts of Stokoe, Todrig, etc., which was printed privately in 1783 (by which time he was deceased). He was witness to a sasine in Hawick in 1764. He was said to have been an officer under Prince Charles and remained a Jacobite sympathiser (as described by Robert Wilson). He went about on crutches in later life, and blamed his rheumatism on the house of Hanover! He was also known for having a large feast every Christmas. His daughter Mira was baptised in 1753, by Episcopal Minister Rev. Findlay McLennan, making it clear that the family continued to follow that particular faith; the witnesses were Dr. Robert Scott of Whitslade, as well as John and James Gledstains from Hawick (who were probably his brothers, cousins, or other near relatives). The name of his wife is unknown, and it is not clear what happened to Mira, or whether he had other children. John (d.1781) has his death recorded in Hawick. He is listed as ‘Elder in the Green meeting’, presumably meaning the Green Kirk. It is not impossible he was the same man as John of Whitlaw. John (1724–83) son of the second Walter, writer (i.e. lawyer) in Hawick. He was recorded as a writer in 1762 and 1765 when he witnessed baptisms for baker Robert Scott. He was Town Clerk from about 1763 until 1783, with a short gap in 1768–70 (precise dates uncertain), when he was deprived of office for being a Jacobite supporter and refusing to take the oath of government (although Robert Wilson’s account of this is confused). He was assisted by Thomas Wintrop for several years, perhaps until 1768. He was also tenant of Meikle and Little Whitlaws, and had the farms as aliment from the Duke of Buccleuch (although this could be confusion with his namesake, John of Whitlaw). He kept a public house in town (like his predecessors as Town Clerk), where it was said that most of Hawick’s civic business was carried out. He was apparently liked to avoid litigation and was fond of resolving disputes by inviting both parties to his house in the evening to discuss things amicably. He wrote a detailed account of the great flood of 1767. In 1767 he one of the representatives of Hawick at the perambulation of the Common made as part of the court case for its division. In 1769 he was appointed to the commission to discuss the Common with representatives of the Duke of Buccleuch. He married Ann Weir, who died in 1805; she was probably daughter of the earlier Town Clerk James Weir, born in 1738. Their children included: Walter (b.1765); James (b.1766), who owned 80 High Street; William (b.1768); Christian, who married manufacturer Walter Richardson Elizabeth (b.1776); and Ann (b.1781), who may have married John ‘the Turk’ Scott. The witnesses to the 1768 baptism were writer James Weir (probably his brother-in-law) and Schoolmaster James Inglis and in 1776 were surgeon James Wilson and Schoolmaster James Inglis. He appears to have been the last male of the direct family of Gledstains in Teviotdale. His 2 daughters were served as heiresses to him in 1808 and sold 80 High Street in 1809 (so his sons must have been deceased by then); they are probably the ‘Mrs. Richardson and Miss Gladstanes’ listed in 1811 as owners of part of the particate lands of Hawick. He was succeeded as Town Clerk by his nephew, John Inglis. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick who married Margaret Beattie in 1770. They had a daughter Joanna baptised in 1778. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick who married Katherine Riddell in 1775. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Stevenson and their son William was baptised in the East Bank Kirk in 1818. Katherine (16th C.) recorded in 1541 on a list of tenants and other associates of James Douglas of Cavers when he complained about his farm of Whitriggs being burned by Walter Scott of Branxholme. Matthew (15th C.) witness to a sasine of the Cranstons of that Ilk for Denholm Mains in 1465/6. Matthew and Cuthbert were also witnesses. Perhaps the same ‘Mathw Gledstanis’ was witness to a letter of appraising for the lands of Whithope, directed by William Douglas of Cavers, in 1500. Matthew of Over Kelwood (d.c.1554) son of Thomas and brother of John, who he succeeded. He lived in Dumfriesshire and was referred to as being ‘of that Ilk’, even though the Roxburghshire branch were probably the superior line. He had a sasine of Over Kelwood in 1536. He married Elizabeth Livingstone and their daughter Mirabella married a relative, Herbert of Dundee, to whom he gave Over Kelwood in 1541. He was recorded in connection with the lands in Lanarkshire in 1542 and 1543. His grandson Walter was also referred to as being ‘of that Ilk’. Mira (b.1753) daughter of John of Whitlaw. There is an entry in the Hawick Parish Kirk baptismal records that she was baptised by Episcopal minister Rev. Findlay McLennan, with witnesses Robert Scott of Whitslade, and John and James Gledstains (who were probably uncles or other close relatives). This was one of the few pieces of evidence that there was a continuing Episcopal Kirk in Hawick through the 18th century. Patrick (14th C.) juror in Roxburghshire in 1336, who swore fealty to Edward III in 1346 following the Battle of Durham (Neville’s Cross). He may have been a son of Herbert and was surely related to William, who was also recorded in 1346. Patrick (15th C.) recorded in the 1493 Justice- aire held in Jedburgh. He was ‘Patricius gledstainis in oklaw’; he must surely have been related to the Gledstains of Cocklaw and that Ilk, although appears to have been a tenant rather than a laird. He was allowed to ‘compone’ for multiple thefts: 12 cows from John Anderson; 58 sheep from William Knight; 120 score sheep from James Sinclair and Robert Knight; 80 sheep from James Crays; 100 sheep and 50 cows from Hartshaw; plundering from the tenants of Glengelt; and stealing horses and other things from Robert Walderston, William Allan, John Hutchison and their neighbours. His surety was Sir Robert Ker. Patrick (15th C.) tenant in Hummelknewes, recorded in the 1494/5 Justice-aire held in Jedburgh. He was allowed to ‘compone’ for the theft of 4 sheep from Yairi, with James Pringle of Smallholm as his surety. It seems that he was a different man from Patrick in Cocklaw. Philip (16th C.) witness in Selkirk to a document involving a dispute between John of Cocklaw and Robert Scott in Howford. Robert (15th C.) on the ‘retour of inquest’ made in Hawick in 1424 for lands in Hownam. James of that Ilk was also listed and so perhaps related. In 1434 he witnessed a charter where Archibald, Earl of Douglas granted Nether Crailing to William Cranston. Probably the same Robert ‘de Gledstainis’ was a bailie of Sir William Crichton of that Ilk, when he infeited Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in Graham- slaw in 1439. And he appeared as witness along with Crichton and others on a charter by Archibald, Earl of Douglas to the Kers of Altonburn in 1439. Probably the same Robert witnessed a charter for William Cranston of Crailing in 1443. Probably the same man is ‘Roberto Gleddistanys de le Crag’ in 1446 when he witnessed a charter between Inglis of Manor and Scott of Buc- cleuch; his lairdship was probably Craig in Dumfrisesshire. He is probably the same ‘Roberto de Gledstainis’ (an esquire) in 1452 when he is the first witness listed on the sasine for the Barony of Hawick to William Douglas of Drumlanrig. In 1454/5 he is ‘Robert of Gledstainys’ when he witnessed a document for Ker of Altonburn. And in 1463/4 he was ‘Roberto de Gledstainys’ among the men who received a reward from the King for the capture of John Douglas of Balveny. Probably the same man is recorded as ‘Gledstainys’ when he witnessed a charter of 1468 dealing with the Scotts of Buccleuch and lands of Lempitlaw. Robert (15th C.) recorded as ‘Robertum Gledstainys’ in 1484 when he was on the inquest panel for the inheritance of the Barony of Hawick. Robert (15th/16th C.) described as being from Annan when he witnessed a charter at Caerlawrock in 1492/3. Probably the same Robert is described as ‘scutiferis’ (i.e. shield-bearer) when he witnessed a charter for John, Lord Maxwell, in 1505. Robert (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1600 as ‘son natural’ to James of Cocklaw. Along with his father, brother James and cousin James, he was accused of killing James Dickson near Peebles; they were all denounced as rebels for non- appearance. Robert (17th C.) recorded as ‘pr Todschahauch’ when he signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. He was proprietor of Todshawhaugh in a 1650 list of communicants of the Borthwick valley. His wife may have been Agnes Rule, with their daughter Margarett bap- tised in Hawick in 1639. In 1648 he was listed on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire (along with Walter of Cocklaw and John of Whitleaw, who must have been closely related). He may be the Robert who witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Adam Scott in 1652. Either he or a son of the same name was listed in 1686 as tenant of the lands of Whames in the ratification of the Barony of Hawick to Anna Duchess of Buccleuch. Robert (17th C.) Hawick resident who was on a 1684 list of men declared as fugitives for religious non-conformity. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret and their children included: Walter (b.1688); and

Agnes (b.1691). The witnesses in 1691 were Andrew Fletcher and Thomas Wallace. Robert (17th C.) tailor in Raesknowe. In 1719 he witnessed a baptism for William Williamson, herd in Whitchesters. His children, baptised in Hawick Parish, included Margaret (b.1693) and Margaret (again, b.1700). In the 1700 record his wife’s forename is given as Janet and the witnesses are David Graham and John Armstrong, tenants in Raesknowe. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was listed as ‘ane hyred servant in hawick’ in 1700. He married Janet Brown and their children (although the mother’s name is not always give) probably included: Anna (b.1690); Walter (b.1693); Robert (b.1696); John (b.1700); and Janet (b.1703). The witnesses in 1693 were John Stuart and John Black and in 1700 were weaver Thomas Turnbull and ‘officer’ James Lethem. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1705 he is recorded (twice) being given money from the Session poor box. Robert (17th/18th C.) listed as ‘of that Ilk’ in 1704 as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. Also in 1704 he petitioned the Bailies of Hawick to let him ‘cast divots in the Common of Havice’, this was to thatch his stable at Hummelknoes. It is unclear who he was, since the Laird of Cocklaw at the time was James; but perhaps he was a brother of James, and hence son of William. Probably the same Robert of that Ilk married Janet, daughter of Robert Elliot of Lariston in 1706 (and she secondly married John Scott of Gorrenberry in 1716, so he was presumably dead by then). He may be the Gledstains in Hummelknoes recorded in an account in Selkirk in 1707. Robert (17th/18th C.) workman in Hawick, as recorded in 1708. He married Janet Brown, and their children included: John (b.1700); Janet (b.1703); Robert (b.1705), who lived in Robertson Parish; Marion (b.1708); and Margaret (b.1709). The witnesses in 1705 were Bailie Patrick Richardson and weaver Andrew Brown (probably his wife’s father or brother) and in 1708 were merchant Robert Robson and flesher Walter Anderson. Robert (17th/18th C.) Hawick resident. He married Isobell Hobkirk in 1714. Robert (17th/18th C.) Hawick resident. In 1721 he married Marion ‘Lun or Douglas’ (suggesting his wife had previously been married). Robert (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Borthwickbrae in 1742 and Harden Burnfoot in 1753. His children (assuming these are all the same father Robert) included Magdalen (b.1742), Thomas (b.1747), Thomas (again, b.1747), Kathrine (b.1753) and Robert (b.1756). Robert (18th/19th C.) Hawick resident. He married Jean (or Jane) Scott in 1780 and she died in 1805. Robert (b.c.1763) perhaps son of William, resident of Chapelhill. He married Mary Scott in Wilton Parish in 1788. This means he was probably different from the Robert who married Jean Scott 8 years earlier. Their children included: Peggy (b.1789); William (b.1792); and James (b.1794). When Peggy was baptised the family were at Overhall. The 1792 and 1794 baptisms were recorded in Hawick with witnesses the ‘Associate Congregation’. Perhaps the same Robert was a 78 year old agricultural labourer living with the Anderson family at Whitehaugh Cottages in 1841. Robert (b.1812) eldest son of William. He married Mina Nichol. In 1840 he and his wife emigrated to Canada along with his parents and siblings. Simon (16th C.) recorded in 1535 when he witnessed a bond between Mark Ker in Kippielaw, John Scott in Thirlestane and others. In 1539 he witnessed another transaction for Elizabeth, mother of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. Thomas (14th/15th C.) son of Sir William and brother of John and James. It seems that John was the eldest brother and succeeded to their father’s lands, while their mother’s lands were divided among the brothers. He was probably the youngest son, but that is uncertain. He may have owned the lands of Flex. He acquired Robertson (in Selkirkshire) from his mother in 1412, confirmed by a charter of James I in 1430. It is possible he is the same Thomas ‘Gledstani’ appointed (along with Stephen Scott and others) as a procurator by Ellen Rule of Primside when she resigned her lands to their superior, Archibald, Earl of Douglas in 1439. Probably the same Thomas had a charter from the Duke of Albany (around 1410) for the lands of ‘Withnychope’ in Selkirkshire. He could be the same Thomas who witnessed a confirmation of the Church of Cavers to Melrose Abbey in 1404. His wife was Margaret and he was succeeded by their son Alexander. Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1511 when he witnessed a charter for Margaret Colville relating to lands in Oxnam. It is unclear how he was related to the Roxburghshire Gledstains. He could be the Thomas who had a charter for ‘Overkeldvd’ (i.e. Over Kelwood, in Dumfriesshire) in 1509, and hence was probably a son of Herbert, Rector of Dornoch. This Thomas was ‘of that Ilk’ in Lanarkshire in 1508. He could also be the Laird of ‘crag gledstani’ who was fined at the Justice-aire in Dumfries in 1504, for failing to give suit for his lands of Craig. He was father of John and Matthew, who were both of Over Kelwood and that Ilk. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1706 he married Bessie Sanderson and their children included Janet (b.1707), John (b.1710) and Janet (b.1712), Bessie (b.1716) and Francis (b.1718). The witnesses in 1707 were Bailies Robert Ruecastle and George Martin. He could be the son of John and Margaret Harkness who was born in 1679. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living in Denholm in 1723 and 1725. His children, baptised in Cavers, included Bessie (b.1717), William (b.1721), Janet (b.1723) and Walter (b.1725). Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Leithead and their daughter Helen (b.1796/7) married poet John Halliday. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Lunn and their children included: Agnes (b.1811); Walter (b.1817); Robert (b.1819); and Thomas (b.1821). Thomas (18th/19th C.) carter in Hawick. The death of his unnamed child is recorded in 1816. Thomas (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Betsy Michie and their children included: Thomas (b.1843); Elizabeth (b.1846); Eliza (b.1847); Helen (b.1848); Jane (b.1851) and Margaret (b.1853). Some of the children were baptised in the Hawick Free Kirk. Thomas (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Mary Miller and their son John was baptised in 1872. Thomas (19th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. He married Isabella Fox, daughter of Gilbert Amos, who was joined at Chesters. He died in an accident at Southdean sawmill. Walter (15th C.) witness to a sasine of 1470 relating to the lands of Grahamslaw and the Scotts of Buccleuch. The same Walter may have witnessed a Buccleuch document of 1464/5 relating to Ladyurd, and hence be from the Peebles area. Probably the same Walter also witnessed a document relating to Kirkurd for the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1475/6. Walter (15th/16th C.) listed on the pardon granted in 1526 to a large number of Scotts, Turnbulls and other Borderers who had assisted the Homes in attacking the Earl of Arran. He comes right after George in the list, suggesting they were related. Walter (d.1580) probably son of John, 11th of that Ilk, he was brother of James of Cocklaw. He may be the same ‘Walter Gledstanes’ (location not given) who is recorded in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branholme being owed about £13 ‘for his fie’ (he may thus have acted as some kind of factor or chamberlain, as his descendants did). He was killed by men of Liddesdale, led by Lancie Armstrong, when a party of Scotts and Gladstains followed those who had raided Meikle Whitlaw, but were ambushed on their way back home through Liddesdale (probably the morning after the raid on Whitlaw). After complaints to the Privy Council none of those implicated in the ambush appeared, and hence they were declared rebels. Walter of Over Kelwood and Craigs (d.c.1593) son of Herbert and Mirabella. He had a sasine for Over Kelwood in 1570 and was also referred to as being ‘of that Ilk’ (complicating the issue with the Gladstains of Cocklaw), being superior of the Lanarkshire lands. He was succeeded by his son John in 1593/4. Walter (16th/17th C.) recorded as being ‘in Haining’ in 1608 when he was part of a group of Scotts and others who attacked Selkirk Mill. James Gladstains was also listed. Walter of Dod (17th C.) recorded in 1627 as holding, along with Walter Scott of Buccleuch, the Trinitylands in Hawick. He may be the same Walter of Dod who was recorded in the 1640s. He (or perhaps his son) may have been Laird of Dod in 1643 when he held the lands of Adderstoneshiel, with his mother having the liferent of Adderstonelee. He may be the Walter of Dod whose daughter Eupham married John Rutherford of Littleleheugh. Walter of Whitlaw (d.c.1643) part of the assize at the Justice Court in Jedburgh in 1611. He was also part of the 1616 jury that convicted Jock Scott, ‘the Suckler’, of sheep stealing. He is recorded as a ‘personne of assyse’ in the local Circuit Court of 1622. In 1627 he was one of 9 men charged with performing a valuation of the lands in the Parish of Hawick; he was one of the men who refused to accept some of the items in the valuation, presumably because of a dispute over either the Kirland, Ladyland or Trinitylands. He was also recorded in a county valuation of lands in Hawick Parish in 1643, his lands being valued at £266 13s 4d. He also appears as Chamberlain (or Factor) to the Earl of Buccleuch in existing records of rents and teinds for the period 1631–40 for Hassendean, Hawick and Wilton Parishes, also including Denholm. He was probably ill by the next year when his son John stood in for him, and was deceased by the time of the 1642–43 accounts. In one document he is transcribed as ‘Walter Gledstones in Whitehall’, presumably an error. He may be the Walter of Whitlaw who is listed by Scott of Satchells as being one of the 24 ‘Pensioners’ of Buccleuch (the only one not called Scott), who was a close cousin to the Scotts and was given the lands of Whitlaw for this service; however, this may have been an earlier generation. He is probably the Walter of Whitlaw whose daughter Margaret married Walter Scott, Laird of Galalaw. Walter (17th C.) possessor of the farm of Blackburn in Liddesdale in 1632. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Margaret Wood and their children included Marion (b.1640) and Agnes (b.1641). Walter of Cocklaw (17th C.) probably the son of James, as recorded in 1648. He may have had brothers William, Robert and James. It is possible he was the Walter of that Ilk listed in 1617 among Border Lairds who renewed their pledge to keep the peace (although it is possible this was an error for James). It is possible he was the Walter of Cocklaw who was recorded as superior of the lands of Hundleshope in Peeblesshire in 1620 when they were granted to Sir William Scott of Harden. In 1620 he was ‘of Cocklaw’ when there was a complaint by Gilbert Elliott of Stobs that he had not repaid 3 loans, totalling about 300 merks. He was likely the ‘Laird of Gledstains’ who witnessed a family baptism in 1642, and hence was 14th of that Ilk. He was probably the Laird of Gledstains whose lands in Cavers Parish were valued at £1240 in 1643; this consisted of the farms of Hummelknowes, Ormiston and Orchard. He was ‘of Cocklaw’ in 1648 when listed on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire. He may have been succeeded by a son (or brother), William, who is recorded in 1663. Walter of Hilliesland (17th C.) recorded in a 1643 valuation of lands in Hawick Parish (with the spelling ‘of Halysland’). His lands were worth £66 13s. 4d. per year. He is presumably different from Walter of Whitlaw, who was listed separately in 1643. However, it is unclear how he was related to other local Gledstains, but he may have been father of John of Hilliesland who paid the land tax in 1678. Walter of Dod (17th C.) recorded in 1649 when his son and heir George was infected in the lands of Hunthill (in Cavers Parish) by William Earl of Lothian. He is probably the same Walter of Dod who married Agnes Douglas of Cavers, and whose son Walter was minister at New Abbey. His grandson Abraham was served heir to his lands of Hunthill in 1676. Walter of Flex (17th C.). He married Esther, daughter of Richard Rutherford of Littleheugh and granddaughter of John Rutherford of Capehope. His wife’s mother may have been Eupham, daughter of William Gledstains. It is unclear how he was related to other Gledstains of Flex. Rev. Walter (1624–60) son of Walter of Dod and Agnes Douglas of Cavers. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1645 and in 1650 became minister at New Abbey, Kirkcudbright. He married Margaret, 2nd daughter of John Crichton of Crawfordston, who was widow of William Lawrie in Ingliston. His children included James and Agnes. His widow married James Mair, minister of Troqueer. His gravestone had the following lines (in Latin): ‘Q. Wherefore lies the Gladstone Hidden by the dark stone? A. The bosom of the earth Conceals the gem of gold’. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Margaret Turnbull and their children included Marion (b.1639), John (b.1643) and Bessie (b.1649). Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Isobel Lauder and their children included Helen (b.1646) and Jean (b.1649). Walter (17th C.) merchant in Hawick. In 1676 he and James Liddell were involved in checking the weights used by other traders in Town. He could be the same man as the tailor who witnessed a baptism for Francis in 1680 (suggesting that they were related). He may be the same as one of the other Walters. Walter Francis of Hilliesland (1642–1718) son of Lieut. Francis and Margaret Stewart, he was born in Hawick, about 3 years before his father was killed. He was Town Clerk 1673–1696, and after a 1 year gap again in c.1696–1710, then sharing the position with his son Walter until his death in 1718. He was Town Clerk on the list of subscribers for the Kirk bell drawn up in 1693. In 1680 he witnessed baptisms for George Young and Janet Purdom, and for John Stewart. He gave evidence in the trial of Thomas Turnbull of Knowe (for being a Covenanter) in 1681. He may be the Walter ‘in Hawiec’ who is listed among the heritors of the Regality of Melrose in 1682. He is probably the ‘Mr Walter Gladstains’ who witnessed baptisms for George Deans in 1673, for wright Francis in 1682 and for schoolmaster John Purdom in 1685. He is probably one of the 2 men of his name who witnessed a baptism for John Cavers in Hawick in 1671. He may also be the Gledstains whose letter to Sir William Douglas of Cavers in 1683 told of the imprisonment of several local lairds for trumped up charges relating to supporting the Covenanters; if so he was factor to Douglas of Cavers and wrote several letters that are extant. In 1697 he was one of 4 men who protested against the continuing of Robert Ruecastle as Bailie, through there being a vacancy and on account of an agreement made.

with the Commissioners of the Duchess of Buccleuch, until a new election for Bailie was held. In 1701 he was cited at the Kirk Session for being drunk at a burial and ‘using expressions savouring of blasphemy in his drunkenness’; he acknowledged his guilt and being reported again in 1702 promised to endeavour to remain sober. He was ‘Mr’ when he witnessed a baptism for Patrick Angus in 1704 and for his son Walter in 1708. He also witnessed baptisms in 1709 for schoolmaster John Purdom and for Robert Porteous. Either he or his son was witness for a baptism in 1709 for George Johnston, tenant in Hillsides. In a 1710 land valuation of Hawick Parish his lands were valued at 100 merks. He was also a heritor of Hawick Parish, recorded in 1711 and 1718. He was listed as ‘Mr Walter Gladstains’ when he witnessed a baptism in 1687; the other witness was James, who was probably a close relative, and may have been James of that Ilk. He was listed in the same way when he witnessed a baptism for weaver John Stewart and another for tailor Walter (his namesake and probably relative) in 1688. He was also ‘Mr Walter Gladstaines’ when he paid tax for 4 hearths in Hawick, ‘eist the water’, in 1694: this suggests he had quite a substantial house. In 1707 ‘the town clerk’s wyf’ (presumably his wife) was ordered by the Council to be paid back for expenses incurred at the Queen’s birthday in 1706. He translated Rev. Cunninghame’s ‘Lines written on the situation of the burgh and town of Hawick’ (possibly the earliest verse about Hawick) from the Latin. The ancient family bible, now in the Museum, appears to have been largely inscribed by him. He may also have been the Town Clerk who entertained a party of Jacobite officers while their army was encamped in Hawick in 1715 (although Robert Wilson ascribes this to a later Town Clerk in 1745). In 1704 he also provided what was probably the first translation of the 1537 Charter, appearing in print in Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He was married to Margaret Sinclair in Calder. Apart from Walter, their surviving children were William (b.1674) and Agnes (b.1677). Other children baptised in Hawick who could be his were Francis (b.1672), Gideon (b.1678) and Margaret (b.1681). Bailie Walter (17th/18th C.) wright in Hawick. He was a Bailie in the 1690s. Probably the same wright is recorded as in 1673 on the list of men named in the trial for the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. He may be one of the 2 men of this name who witnessed a baptism for John Cavers in Hawick in 1671. His wife was Janet Scott and their children probably included Agnes (b.1672), Margaret (b.1673), Janet (b.1676) and Marion (b.1678). However, a tailor of the same name was also married a Janet Scott and had children about the same time. The witnesses in 1676 were John Aitkin and James Deans and in 1678 were William Haswell and James Gledstains (who was surely related). Probably the same Walter was recorded as Bailie in 1697. Perhaps the same wright is listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694 and among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. Walter (17th C.) recorded in the 1678 valuation roll as portioner of Samieston in Jedburgh Parish. This land was formerly owned by Moir of Otterburn, but sold to the Duke of Roxburghe. It was listed as ‘Lands in Samieston, formerly Walter Gladstain’s £233 6s 8d’ in 1788. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hummelknowes on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. It is unclear how he was related to other family members. Walter (d.bef. 1719) tailor in Hawick. He witnessed a baptism for wright Robert Cowan in 1688. He was listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He was also listed as a tailor among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. Note the possible confusion with ‘William’, who was a tailor in Hawick at about the same time and also the contemporary wright of the same name (whose wife also had the same name!). He also witnessed baptisms for weaver Walter Greenshields in Braugholme Town in 1703 and for John Davidson and Jean Gledstains in the Flex in the 1716. His wife was Janet Scott and their son James was baptised in Hawick in 1688, with witnesses ‘Mr Walter’ (presumably his namesake the Town Clerk) and Bailie James Deans. Helen (b.1684) was probably also his child, with witnesses Francis (probably also a relative) and Thomas Bridges. His daughter Marion married William Stoddart (‘Casaer in Flexs’) in 1719. Walter (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish, more specifically probably the Hassendean part. He may be the Walter, married to Janet Scott, whose son James was baptised in Robertson Parish in 1681, with witnesses John Hope and Charles Wood. He is probably the Walter who witnessed Robertson (or Hassendean) baptisms for James Scott in 1680, Robert and Marion Scott in 1683 and Adam Sanderson in 1684. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His children included: John (b.1695). He may be the same man who later married Helen Sanderson. Walter ‘Walter Alison’ (17th/18th C.) carrier in Hawick. In 1709 he was recorded as ‘distinctionis causa called Walt: Alison’ (to distinguish him from the Town Clerk of the same name, among others); however, it is unclear what this name may have referred to. He may have been related to Thomas, who married Bessie Sanderson. In 1703 he married Helen Sanderson (who was also from Hawick Parish). Their children included: William (b.1703); John (b.1706); Isobel (b.1709); Robert (b.1713); and Walter (b.1716). John (b.1708) and John (again, b.1711) were probably also their children. The witnesses in 1706 were Bailie James Deans and carrier Robert Aitken and in 1709 were Bailies James Burn and Robert Ruecastle. Walter junior of Hilliesland (d.1739) son of Walter who was Town Clerk. He was recorded being ‘of Hilliesland’ (i.e. Hilliesland) in 1707 and 1708, even although his father was still alive at that point. He himself was Town Clerk from 1710 probably until his death. However, it appears that James Weir was also acting as Town Clerk for the last few years. It was said that he was a strong supporter of the Town Herd in stopping encroachment on the Common, but that ‘since his death there was never one to support the Herd, and the Common had been ten times worse used than it was before’. He is probably the Walter of Hilliesland who was admitted as a Burgess of Hawick in 1704. He was Town Clerk when he witnessed baptisms for smith James Beattie in 1719 and for William Hill, weaver in the Flex in 1720. He may have had an inn (like other Town officials in those days); it is recorded in 1724 that £5 8s. Scots was ‘spent in Wal-... the Barony of Cavers and charging him to protect the lands of the Abbot and Convent of Melrose within the Barony (specifically Ringwood). At about the same time he witnessed a confirmation of the advowson of Cavers Kirk to Melrose Abbey. In about 1360 he witnessed a charter for lands in Lauderdale and was also recorded in the Exchequer Rolls as a watcher of wool on the marches. In 1363 he was one of a number of Scotsmen given safe conduct into England by King Edward (probably related to a ransom). He was succeeded by his son Sir William. Sir William (d.c.1400) son of Sir William according to a charter of 1365, when he was granted his father’s land of ‘Wodgrynnyton, Wynkiston and Acolmfelde’ in Peebleshire. He witnessed a charter by James, Earl of Douglas in the 1380s. He is probably the William who witnessed the charter by John Turnbull of Minto, granting Minto to Sir William Stewart of Jedburgh in 1390. He obtained lands near Peebles from David II, and is referred to in 1396 as ‘of Gledstanes and Coklaw’. This ‘Coklaw’ is believed to have been in Lanarkshire, and gave its name to the tower built later near Hawick. In 1396 Sir William Inglis was granted the Barony of Manor, except for the lands there that he possessed. He married Margaret Turnbull (said to be daughter and heiress of John Turnbull), acquiring other lands near Peebles (specifically Hundleshope), as well as in Selkirk and at Roberton. His sons were John, James and Thomas. He appears to have been succeeded by John and later by James (although this is uncertain). In 1430 Margaret resigned her lands of Roberton to her son Thomas. William (15th C.) recorded in 1432 as a witness to the sasine giving the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffdom of Roxburghshire to William Douglas. Although no other designation is given for him, he must have been an important local laird at the time, probably connected with Cocklaw. William (15th C.) one of the men directed by the Earl of Angus in 1489 to infeft Robert Elliot of Redheugh in certain lands. The others were William Ker of Mersington, Ralph Ker of Primside Loch and William Elliot of Gorrenberry. His relationship to other Gledstains is unclear. Perhaps the same George was recorded in 1489, along with George, as witness to a retour for the Kers of St. Helen Shaw in Selkirk. He may be the William who in 1500, along with Bartholomew and George, witnessed a charter for Walter Ker of Cessford for the lands of Caverton. It is possible that they were connected with Kelso Abbey. William of Arthursheid (d.bef. 1565) possibly a younger son of James of that Ilk and Cocklaw. He appears to have been the first Laird of Arthursheid in Peebleshire, and ancestor of Prime Minister W.E. Gladstone. William (16th C.) son of John of Cocklaw, who is recorded in a document of 1576. He may be the William who was a Bailie in Hawick in 1574 when Thomas Short sold a tenement in Hawick to Robert Johnstone. It is possible that he is the ‘William of Flecks’ who signed the 1584 bond of assurance between men of Liddesdale and the English Wardens, his name being listed along with other local Gledstains. William of Dod (16th C.). In 1627 his daughter Eupham married John Rutherford of Capehope. This could be an error for ‘Walter of Dod’. William (d.bef. 1672) son of Walter (or perhaps his younger brother), he was 15th of that Ilk. He is recorded as a baptismal witness in 1642 and is also probably the William ‘of . . .’ who witnessed a baptism for William Scott of Synton in 1661. He was recorded as Laird in 1663, when he was appointed Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. In 1663 he also had sheep stolen from his land by John and Walter Glendinning. He was further recorded as Laird of Gledstains in 1663 when he paid Land Tax for £1240 for property in Cavers Parish. Perhaps the same William owned teinds and lands (valued at £130) in Makerstoun Parish in 1643, 1663 and 1678. He was recorded as William of Cocklaw in 2 deeds of 1673. He was succeeded by James, presumably his son. He was probably also the ‘deceased Gladstains of that Ilk’ whose daughter Margaret married William Murray in Edinburgh in 1693, the ceremony being carried out by John Langlands, former minister at Hawick. He may have married Elizabeth Wishart or Margaret Riddell. It is possible that Robert (mentioned as being ‘of that Ilk’ in 1704) was a younger son, and that he was also father of Esther, who married Robert, son of James Rutherford, surgeon in Jedburgh. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Stewart and their son William was baptised in 1671. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elizabeth Wishart and their children included: Isobell (b.1671); William (b.1673); and Margaret (b.1676). He may be the same as one of the contemporary Williams. William (17th C.) Hawick resident. He married Margaret Riddell and their children included Margaret (b.1673). William (17th C.) resident of Hownam Parish. In 1681 he was imprisoned in Canongate Tolbooth for being a Covenanter. He is probably the same man as the unnamed resident of Hownam who was imprisoned several times, always at his own expense, was fined and had his livestock taken from him. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Helen Gledstains and their daughter Marion was baptised in 1685. William (1674–1703) son of Walter the Town Clerk. He left Hawick at 15, eventually working as overseer in a Barbados plantation, where he died. He may be the William, ‘student’, who witnessed baptisms in Hawick in 1682 and 1684 (for Francis, perhaps an uncle or other relative). William (17th/18th C.) tailor in Hawick. He was listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was probably the William listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He witnessed baptisms for tailor James Turnbull in 1705 and 1709 and for merchant Michael Scott in 1709. In 1711 he (along with fellow tailor Alexander Hislop) witnessed a baptism for carrier William Rae. He was a member of the Council when it granted a bond (dated 1710, but recorded in the Town Book in 1711) to provide money for the Master of the new Grammar School. He may be the William who witnessed a baptism for Robert Douglas in 1698. In 1719 his daughter Sara married James, son to Walter Scott, ‘Westport’. In 1730 he witnessed a baptism for this same couple. William (17th/18th C.) listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He is separately listed from the tailor, and so presumably was a different man of the same name. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Isobell Porteous in the same name. William (17th/18th C.) tailor in Hawick. He was listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was probably the William listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He witnessed baptisms for tailor James Turnbull in 1705 and 1709 and for merchant Michael Scott in 1709. In 1711 he (along with fellow tailor Alexander Hislop) witnessed a baptism for carrier William Rae. He was a member of the Council when it granted a bond (dated 1710, but recorded in the Town Book in 1711) to provide money for the Master of the new Grammar School. He may be the William who witnessed a baptism for Robert Douglas in 1698. In 1719 his daughter Sara married James, son to Walter Scott, ‘Westport’. In 1730 he witnessed a baptism for this same couple. William (17th/18th C.) listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He is separately listed from the tailor, and so presumably was a different man of the same name. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Isobell Porteous in 1700. William (17th/18th C.) workman in Whitlaw, as recorded in the 1707 baptism of his daughter. He married Marion Henderson and their children included Margaret (b.1707) and Robert (b.1712). The witnesses in 1707 were James Gray in Whitlaw and Bailie George Martin and in 1712 were Walter Elliot and Walter Graham (probably the Bailies). He may be the same as one of the other Williams. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Haldurton and their son John was baptised in 1708. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He is recorded as ‘workman’ in 1708 and 1721, ‘workman in ye town of Hawick’ in 1714 and ‘workman in whita’ in 1709. He married Bessie Scott (who was also from Hawick Parish) in 1703. Their children included: John (b.1706); William (b.1708); Walter and Janet (b.1709); Helen (b.1712); Helen (again, b.1714); and William (b.1721). The witnesses in 1708 were Andrew Riddell in Goldielands and Walter Nixon in Hawick Shiel, in 1709 were Dand and James Gray in Whitlaw, in 1714 were Bailies James Deans and James Scott and in 1721 were weavers David and John Miller. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His children included Jean (b.1709) and Robert (b.1712). He may be the same William whose wife was Mary Wilson and whose children baptised in Wilton Parish included: Agnes (b.1718); William (b.1720); and James (b.1722). William (17th/18th C.) son of Hawick carrier John. In 1713 he was cited in the Session book for excessive drunkenness, the minister having ‘found him vomiting in his drunkenness in ye Churchyard’. He apparently acknowledged his faults on his knees and promised to live temporarily thereafter. But the following year he was back before the Session ‘rebuked for his frequent drinking and wasting his father’s substance by Ryoting and reveling’ and was further threatened with imprisonment by the Magistrates. This is one of the earliest records of a habitual drunkard in Hawick! In 1717 he was rebuked for openly fighting in the street with his wife and father, and told that if he did not refrain from drunkenness he would be sent to the Bailie, who would then send him to the Circuit Court for harsher punishment. In 1714 he married Helen, daughter of Robert Purves. Their children included: John (b.1717); Jean (b.1718); Euphan (b.1721); and Helen (b.1724). Marion (b.1715) may also have been his daughter. William (17th/18th C.) brother of John, who was Laird of Whitlaw. In 1718 he and his brother were witnesses for a baptism for John Davidson, tenant in Flex. William (17th/18th C.) described as being ‘of Kirklands’ in 1721 when his daughter Jean married gardener Robert Ker in Hawick. His lands could have been Kirklands in Wilton Parish, or one of the other local places of the same name. William (17th/18th C.) recorded as witness in Hawick in 1719 when his daughter Sara had a child with her husband James Scott. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Brockie in 1726. William (18th C.) carrier in Hawick. He married Mary Baldie and their children included: John (b.1735); Robert (b.1738); Mary (b.1739); Helen (b.1741); and William (b.1743). The witness in 1743 was smith Thomas Hantly. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Wilson and their daughter Agnes was baptised in 1743. William (18th C.) ploughman at Bradlie on Hermitage Water, recorded in 1750. William (18th C.) carrier in Hawick

The Gledstains. He married Agnes Nichol in 1754 and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1757, with the whole congregation as witnesses. William (18th C.) married Janet Lillico in Bedrule in 1756. William (18th C.) married Catherine Riddell in Hawick Parish in 1759. He was living at Chapelhill when his children were baptised in Robertson Parish in 1762 and 1763. His children included: Henrietta (b.1761); James (b.1762); Robert (b.1763), probably the Robert who married Mary Scott in 1788; and an unnamed daughter (b.1769). The witnesses in 1761 were gardener James Kyle and shoemaker William Riddell (probably related to his wife). William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Betty Riddell in 1773. Their children included: Robert (b.1774); John (b.1777); Betty (b.1781); and Jane (b.1784). William (18th C.) recorded at Teinside Bridge-end in 1784. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included: Walter (b.1784); and James (b.1787). William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Esther Nichol and their children included: William (b.1774); and Thomas (b.1782). William (18th/19th C.) listed as innkeeper in Hawick in 1791 when he paid the cart tax. It is unclear where his inn might have been. William (18th/19th C.) recorded as owner of a horse at Hoscoleshiel in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Harwood. He is recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, having 3 working horses. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Bowanhill Roadside (at Teviothead), listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 3 horses. William (18th/19th C.) agricultural labourer in the Hawick area, son of Robert and Mary Scott. He married Elizabeth Davidson. Their children included: Robert (b.1812), married Mina Nichol; Mary (or Marion, b.1814), who married William Paterson; Walter (b.1817), married Jane Easton; James (b.1821), married Jennie Edgar; Margaret (b.1825), married Robert Hall; Catherine (b.1827), married a Mr. Rose; and William (b.1830), married Helen Pringle. The baptisms were in Robertson Parish, when he was at Vales for the first 2 and at Parkhillhaugh for the next 3. In 1840 the family emigrated to Canada, settling at Nithvale, across the River Nith from Ayr, Ontario. William (19th C.) married Christy Stothart in Riberton Parish in 1828 (note that the spelling varies in older records, including ‘Gladstain’, ‘Gladstaines’, ‘Gladstains’, ‘Gladstanys’, ‘Gladstains’, ‘Gladston’, ‘Gladstones’, ‘Gladstoun’, ‘Gladstanes’, ‘Gladstouns’, ‘Gladstones’, ‘Gladstanes’, ‘Gladstainis’, ‘Gladstaneis’, ‘Gladstones’, ‘Gladstounes’, ‘Gladstanes’, ‘Gladstanys’, ‘Gladstaneys’, ‘Gladstainen’, ‘Gladstainen’, ‘Gladstanes’, etc.).

The Gledstains (thu-gled-stänz) n. once prominent local family, being the most common former spelling of the name ‘Gladstone’. The origin of the name is probably related to the Old Scots ‘gled’, meaning a kite. The family had its roots in Lanarkshire (the original lands being a few miles north of Biggar), acquired land in Peeblesshire and then moved its main centre to the Hawick area, with lands in Kirkton and Cavers, with principal residence at Cocklaw. Cocklaw Castle (at Ormiston, but never more than a minor tower house) was involved in the 1403 ‘Siege of Cocklaw’. In 1509/10 the lands of John Gledstains of that Ilk within the Barony of Cavers included Coliford, Ormiston, Dod and Giddenscleuch, and it was said that he had a charter of confirmation from King David (which must have been from the mid-14th century). ‘Little Gladstein good at need’ led Hawick men at the 1575 Raid of the Redeswire. A member of the family sold Stobs estate to the Eliotts in 1580. A major branch, connected directly to the Gledstains of that Ilk and Cocklaw, was the Gledstains of Whitlaw and later Hillisland. They provided Town Clerks to Hawick for about 110 years with only minor interruptions (1673–1783). The family also provided Cornets in 1714 and 1744. The Cocklaw estate included Orchard and Hummelknowes, and the family held it until 1734, when the last Gledstains of the Ilk died. The burial aisle of the Gledstains of Cocklaw was pulled down by the heritors sometime in the 18th century. Branches of the family also held lands at Dodd, Coliforthill and Adderton Shiel. They farmed at the Flex and elsewhere, and had property at 80 High Street, as well as a town house in the Mid Raw. The local Gledstains lost much of their lands in the 18th century, and then the name died out, but descendants undoubtedly remain in Hawick. Another branch, of Craig and Kelwood in Dumfriesshire, also died out in the male line. Meanwhile the Arthursheils branch flourished and produced William Ewart Gladstone, who became Prime Minister. The family aisle in old Cavers church was abandoned, but was located where a set of steps leading to the gallery was built. The family motto is ‘Fide et virtue’ (with faith and valour), which was engraved on a sundial belonging to Francis of Whitlaw, bearing the date 1693. The original arms feature a savage’s head dripping blood, with a bonnet of bay and holly leaves. The papers of the Douglastes of Cavers include many documents relating to the Gledstains of Cocklaw, beginning in the year 1530.

Old family bible in the Museum, once belonging to Walter Gledstanes of Hillisland, Town Clerk of Hawick. It is a ‘Beza’ Bible, Geneva edition, dated 1601. It contains many handwritten entries relating to this once important local family, e.g. ‘upon the 4 day of mai 1645, my father Francis Gladstanes and other nynse sister’s sons of Sir William Douglas of Cavers killed at the Battle of Aukerdene’. The bible came into the hands of Catherine Cheyne, a servant of the family, then passed to her nephew, William Smith (cutlet in Hawick), then to Andrew Irvine (merchant in Hawick), who presented it to the Burgh. James Wilson described it in 1858 and J.A.H. Murray transcribed many of the entries in 1878.

Former name for a small piece of land near Hunthill and Lanton. The lands appear to have been held by George Gledstains of Cocklaw in 1466. They formed the dowry of Lilias, daughter of James Gledstains of Cocklaw, when she married Richard Rutherford in the latter part of the 16th century. It was ‘Gladstanis-part de Langtoun’ in 1510 when Ninian Glendinning had a charter for the Barony of Scraesburgh. In 1536/7 the ‘ten merkland of old extent lying in the town and territory of Langtoun called Gledstane-landis’ when listed as the exception to the lands in the Barony of Scraesburgh infefted to John Rutherford of Hunthill by Ninian Glendinning of that ilk. In 1685 the succession to the Rutherfords of Hunthill estates included the Barony of ‘Scraesburg alias Hunthill, exceptis 10 mercatis terrarum, antiqui extentus, vocatis Gledstanes Lands’. It seems likely that this was the same piece of land later called Hunthill and owned by the Gledstains of Dods.

Gladstone’s mill at No. 10 Union Street, being adjacent to the corner of Union Street and North Bridge Street. The site had been James Brand’s ‘New Academy’ in the mid-19th century. The mill closed in the late 1970s and was converted to a warehouse, used by N.G. Thomson. It was then converted to Blondettes bar, but was demolished after the concrete house on the corner burned down.

Gledstone Street in the West End, built in 1878, and named after Prime Minister William Ewart Gladstone. The first buildings were 2 large houses and 2 small cottages on the south side. In 1897 J.P. Alison designed a tenement at No. 20.

Glendinning see Glendonwyn

Glendinning (glen-di-nin) n. Adam Fitzhugh of Glendonwyn (13th/14th C.) probably the first of the family to use the designation ‘of Glendonwyn’ or Glendinning. He was an important man during the reign of Alexander III. He had a charter around 1286 from John Macgill for lands in Clifton and Morebattle. He may have married Agnews, daughter of Sir John Towers. He was succeeded by his son Adam. Adam of Glendonwyn (13th/14th C.) probably a descendant of the Fitzhugh family. He held many lands under the superiority of the house of Douglas. He had a discharge of 1313 from Archibald, Lord of Galloway, for all his past feu-duties. In 1320 he had a charter from King Robert for part of the duties from Roxburgh Castle. In 1325 he was confirmed in the lands of ‘Fallhope’ in Roxburghshire, these possibly being ‘Phaup’. He may have married a daughter of Wauchope of that Ilk and was succeeded by another Adam. Adam of that Ilk (d.1363). He held lands in Ewesdale and elsewhere, with the Earl of Douglas being his superior. These generations are confused, and it is unclear how many separate Adams there were. He may be the Sir Adam who married Margaret Douglas, daughter of Sir John of Lothian and sister of Sir James of Dalketh (although accounts differ, and she may have been wife of a different Adam). He is proba-ably the ‘Ade Glendening’ (also transcribed as ‘Glentoun’) who forfeited lands in the town of Glendinning

Roxburgh, which were granted to Henry Ashkirk in about 1362. His children included: Sir Adam, who succeeded; Sir Simon, who died at the Battle of Otterburn; Matthew, who became Bishop of Glasgow; Thomas; a daughter who married a de Mundaville; and another daughter who married Thomas de Moffat. Sir Adam (d.c.1397) son of Adam and Margaret Douglas, daughter of Sir John Douglas of Lothian. His grandfather was probably Adam Fitzhugh of Glendonwyn, who first adopted the ‘of Glendonwyn’ appellation, and his brother Matthew was Bishop of Glasgow. However, these early generations are unclear. In a rental roll c.1376 (among the charters of the Douglases of Morton) he is ‘Domino Ade de Glendonwyne’ and listed as holding the lands of ‘Eskdale Mur’ and ‘Le Baly’. About 1380 he witnessed a charter for Henry of Swinton and everal around the same time for William, Earl of Douglas. He is recorded as ‘de Glendonwin’ in 1389, in a charter confirming the lands of Wauchope to Alexander of Wauchope. He acted as general receiver for the Earl of Douglas’ rents. In 1385 he received a charter for the feu-duties of Scarborough. He was an envoy to the English court and also travelled to Picardy in France. He obtained charters for many lands, including ‘Easter Fawhope’ (probably ‘Phaup’, either in Ettrickdale or near Mosspaul) and Brecallow in Dumfriesshire. In 1390 he was a witness of the confirmation of the lands of Minto to William Stewart of Jedburgh. A 1391 charter of Archibald, Earl of Douglas, dated at Glendonwyn, describes how the Earl was mortifying certain lands in the Barony of Hawick in order to found a chapel in Westerkirk, and directing him to arrange this. He may have married Margaret Douglas, but this could be confusion with an earlier generation. He was married to Wauchope’s daughter Margaret and was to succeed to the lands if there were no other heirs; this appears to have happened. His children probably included: John, who died at Humildon Hill; Sir Simon, who married Mary, daughter of Archibald, 4th Earl of Douglas; William; Adam; Matthew; and Robert, in Annandale. Adam (15th C.) received a cow in the will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme in 1491/2. He is listed as ‘Ade Glendonwyn’. Mark and Margaret were also listed. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jane Turnbull and their children included William (b.1686). Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Hume and their children included John (b.1682). Adam (17th C.) listed at Winningtonrig in Cavers Parish in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls, although his name is crossed out and he is then listed among the ‘deficient’. Adam (17th C.) tenant in Blackburn in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Groundstone in 1698. He married Margaret Preacher in Ashkirk in 1696 and their children (baptised in Wilton) included: John (b.1698); and Margaret (b.1699). The witnesses in 1698 were George Scott and Thomas Preacher (surely related to his wife). He may be the Adam whose daughter Jean married John Gledstains in Hawick in 1717. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Highchesters in 1718. His children included: Bessie (b.1704); John and William (b.1715); and Agnes (b.1718). Helen (b.1707), baptised in Hawick, may also be his child. Adam (18th C.) possibly the son of William, born in Roberton in 1734. In 1765 he is recorded as shepherd at Mains in Liddesdale. He married Agnes Crozier. He had 4 sons: the eldest, William (who married Mary Elliot), being a shepherd; and the youngest, Adam (b.1762, who married Elizabeth Crook), a soldier. Adam ‘Slow Adam’ (d.1808) carter in Hawick. He married Isabel Roger, who died just 3 weeks after him. They had a daughter, Margaret (1770–75), who is buried at Borthwick Waas. Probably the same Adam was recorded as owner of a horse in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He could be the same Glendinning shown as owner of lands on the south side of the west-end of the High Street on Wood’s 1824 map (even although deceased by then). Esther, who married John Rieve in Howcleuch, may have been his sister (since she is buried next to his daughter). Adam (1762–1851) son of Adam and Agnes Crozier, born in Castleton. He was a soldier, although it is not known which regiment he originally served in (but it may have been the Scots Greys). It is said that he served all over Europe, although family tradition also says that he never served abroad. In 1805 he was Cornet with the Royal Wagon Train, becoming Lieutenant to the 9th Royal Veterinary Battalion in 1806. He was in the party for Lord Nelson’s funeral. He retired on full pay to settle back in Newcastle-on-Tyne in 1841. He was at about 5 Langholm Street and listed as ‘Lieut. Army R. Vet. Bat. H.P.’ His wife was Elizabeth and their children included: Thomas, who served in Canada with the Royal Wagon Train; Mary (b.1804), who married John Grieve of Branxholme Braes; and Isobel (1805–92), who married James Inglis. It is possible that he was the servant at Harden and Myredykes in Castleton Parish, listed among heads of households in 1835–41. Adam (1802–68) eldest son of shepherd William and Mary Elliot. He was born at Cauldronfoot in Castleton Parish. He was a shepherd at Potholm in 1841 and at Tweedhead in 1851 and 1861. He married Margaret Robson (from Ewes) and they had 6 sons and 7 daughters. It is said that all of his sons became shepherds, including the eldest, Adam, whose 4 sons were all shepherds in the Jed and Rule valleys. Their children included: Helen (1829–1915), who married Walter Kitchen; William (1831–1911), who married Anne Kyle and died at Gatehousecote; Peter (1833–1904), who emigrated to Canada, worked as a miner and is buried in Ross Bay Cemetery, Victoria; Adam (1836–1920), who emigrated to Victoria, Canada; Mary (b.1838), who had a daughter, Margaret; Margaret (b.1838), who lived at Shankend; Janet (1840–78), who married James Temple Robson; John (1842–1907), who died at Westshiels; Ninian (c.1844–98), a shepherd at Ruletownhead, and had 3 brothers who were also shepherds. Archibald of Fiddletton (16th/17th C.) recorded in the Circuit Court of 1622 when he was cautioner for his brother Andrew. He also appeared, along with John Graham of ‘Thicksyd’, as caution for ‘Lancie Glendinning, now in Dryff’ (formerly tenant in Logan), as well as ‘Hob and Andro Glendonnings in Logane’ (also in Riddings and Hudshouse, respectively). Archibald (17th C.) resident at ‘Jullian’ in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He was surely related to John, who was also listed there. Archibald (17th/18th C.) tenant at Hawick Shiel. He married Margaret Glendinning and their children included: George (b.1689), born in Ashkirk Parish; and John (b.1702), born in Hawick Parish. Archibald (19th C.) joiner in Newcastle. He was listed among heads of households in 1838–41. Bartholomew (d.c.1503) eldest son of John of Glendonwyn and Parton. He was witness to Alexander Home becoming Bailie of the Lordship of Eskdale in 1495. He witnessed a charter for Gordon of Lochinvar in 1501. He and his brother Simon were killed by John Lindsay of Wauchope when he was discharging his duties as Sheriff by attempting to arrange for one third of the lands of Wauchope to go to the widow of Lindsay’s father. Lindsay was executed for this crime in 1505. He probably died about the same time as his father, and his brother Ninian succeeded. He married Margaret daughter of Sir John Gordon of Lochinvar. David (1860–1942) son of William, he was a shepherd like his father. He worked at Hawthornside and elsewhere. In 1883 he married Margaret Martin (1863–1934) from Canonbie; she died at Lurgiescleuch. Their children were: Matthew Martin (1883–1967), who also worked as a shepherd and married Agnes Skilling; Annie (1885–1964), who married John Easton;
Glendinning

William (b.1886), who died in infancy; Elizabeth Agnes (1888–1983); William (again, 1891–1975), who married Mary Jane Easton; Robert (1893–1934); Adam (1896–1976); Margaret Jane (b.1899); and David Martin (b.1903). Ellen (17th/18th C.) said to be an elderly member of the Newcastleton Burgher congregation in about the 1810s. She was the last hold-out for the practice of reading each line before singing psalms in church. When the change arrived, she claimed she had gotten the better of the Session by not joining in, but reading and singing the lines later at home. George (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick Parish. He married Jean Turnbull in 1709 and their son Robert was baptised in 1710, with witnesses Andrew Davidson in Newbigging and Thomas Davidson (perhaps the man recorded at Stobicote in 1716). George (18th C.) married Isobel Lillico in Kirkton in 1733. George (18th/19th C.) carrier at Hummelknowes. He is recorded in a list of men volunteering in 1803 to fight against the French. He could be the George who was living at Lower Calaburn in 1841, aged about 65, and listed as ‘Independent’. Henry (18th C.) hired at Braedlie (on Hermitage) in 1750, probably as an assistant shepherd. James (17th C.) recorded as being ‘in Burgh, in Cavers parish’ in 1684 when he was listed as a fugitive among many others for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. He was presumably tenant at Brugh and probably related to shepherd John, who was recorded at Brugh in 1694. He may be the ‘John in Brough’ whose will is recorded in 1684 (although the first name is incorrect, the match of the dates is probably not a coincidence). James (17th C.) recorded as being ‘in Southfield’ in 1684 on a long list of men declared as rebels for refusing to take ‘the Test’. James (17th C.) tenant in Stobicote on the 1684 list of men declared rebels for being Covenanters. He was listed separately from James in Southfield and James in Brugh. James (17th C.) shepherd at Whitehaugh in Wilton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. He could be the James who witnessed a baptism for Robert Stewart in Wilton in 1694. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, recorded as herd at Hawick Shiel in 1703. His children included Christian (b.1703), with baptismal witnesses Bailies George Martin and Robert Wright. Margaret (b.1701) was probably also his child. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Birneyknowe in 1716. He probably married Bessie Glendinning in Cavers in 1711 and had children Ann (b.1713), Isabel (b.1716), Thomas (b.1718) and James (b.1720). James (17th/18th C.) shepherd at Falnash. His son John was baptised in Hawick Parish (probably at Caerlenrig) in 1720. James (b.c.1704) farm worker, born at Whitchesters, probably son of John. He lived there for 41 years and later moved to Hawick. In 1761 he was one of 3 men chosen to perambulate the boundary between Fenwick and Alton Croft in order to regularise it. He could be the James who married Bessie Rule (or ‘Rowl’) in Hawick in 1721, both of them being described as ‘in whitchesters’; their children (baptised in Hawick Parish) included Janet (b.1724), James (b.1727), John (b.1731), Robert (b.1735), Betty (b.1737) and Walter (b.1743). The witnesses in 1731 were William ‘Willieson’ and John Hobkirk and in 1743 were the ‘whole congregation’. He is probably the James who witnessed a baptism for James Dodds (in Whitchesters) and Jean Glendinning (perhaps his daughter) in 1758. James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Bowanhill in 1729 when he married Jane Turnbull. James (18th C.) resident at Broadleeshiel in 1729 when his daughter Bessie was baptised in Roberton Parish. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jane Telfer and their children included: Jane (b.1770); and Robert (b.1772). James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Jardine and their son James was baptised in 1776. James (18th C.) resident at Outersideshiel in 1775 when his daughter Margaret was baptised in Roberton Parish. James (18th C.) worship in Hawick Parish. His wife was Helen Laidlaw and their children included: Betty (b.1757); Margaret (b.1761); and Adam (b.1766). The witnesses in 1766 were Charles Rutherford and John Richardson. Elizabeth (b.1760), with mother’s name given as ‘Margaret’ Laidlaw, was probably also his child. He could be the James who witnessed a baptism for carrier John Richardson in 1764. Adam is probably the son of Wright James who died in Hawick in 1787. He could be the son of James and Bessie Rule baptised in Hawick in 1727. James (1749/50–1823) married Margaret Brydon, who died in 1839, aged 83. She may have been daughter of William Brydon, born in Ettrick in 1756. His wife died at Gair (probably the one on Tima Water) and he died at Glendinning. They are buried at Borthwick Waas. He could be the James, son of Thomas, baptised in Roberton in 1748. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1769 he married Jane Telfer and their children included: Jane (b.1770); and Robert (b.1772). He may be the James, junior, whose unnamed child died in 1781. James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded at ‘Cal- lendridge’ (probably Caerlenrig) in 1772 when his son Robert was baptised in Cavers. Perhaps he was the same man as James in Hawick Parish (if Robert was baptised twice). James (18th/19th C.) farmer at Headshaw Mill, recorded as owner of 2 horses on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. James (b.1775/6) from Nichol Forest in Cumberland, he was a tailor in Newcastleton. He was recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1841 and 1851 he was at about 10 South Hermitage Street, He married Esther Kyle and they had children William (also a tailor), Margaret and Esther. James (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Girnwood. In 1808 his child was baptised at Deanburnaugh. He married Margaret Scott and their children (mostly baptised in Robertson) included: John (b.1808); Mary (b.1810); Robert (b.1813); and James (b.1815), baptised in Lyne and Megget Parish. James (19th/20th C.) son of William, who was shepherd at Kiddem Hill, Eskdalemuir. His grandfather Andrew had been shepherd at Craikhope, where he also worked as shepherd. He was also Callants’ Club President in 1934 and Club Treasurer for 20 years.

John of Glendonwyn and Parton (d.1503) son of Sir Simon. He possessed large amounts of land, including Glendinning, Clifton, Scraesburgh, Brecklaw, Wauchope, Westerkirk and Langholm. He is probably the Laird of Glendinning who was fined in 1494/5 for non-appearance at the Justice- aire in Jedburgh. In 1495 he was superior of Scraesburgh when the west half of the town there was inherited by George Rutherford. He married Agnes, daughter of Robert, Lord Maxwell of Caerlaverock. He secondly married Elizabeth, daughter of William, Lord Sinclair. His children included: Bartholomew, the eldest, who was killed by John Lindsay of Wauchope; Ninian, who succeeded; Simon, also killed by Lindsay; Adam, father of John of Bishopton; and Janet, who married Gilbert Grierson, 2nd of Lag. He may be the Laird of ‘Glendunwin’ for whose murder Patrick ‘Dunwedy’ in Eskdale was hanged in 1508/9. John (15th/16th C.) recorded in Hermiston in 1502. Along with William Waugh, he had 4 cows stolen from him, with Adam Turnbull in Hornshole having remission for the theft. John (15th/16th C.) described as Coroner of Eskdale in 1507/8 when he gave licence for Robert Erskine to be infected in the lands of Dalgleish. He was probably father of Simon, who was Coroner in 1540. John of Glendonwyn and Parton (c.1510–c.60) son of Ninian, from whom he inherited lands in Dumfriesshire, Kirkcudbright and elsewhere. He may be the ‘Domino de Glendynwyn’ who heritably held the lands of Riddelstead in Liddesdale according to a rental roll of 1541. In 1554 he and his mother agreed to take it in turns to provide for his poor and clothing ‘considering his poverty’; he was then described being ‘of Drumrith’. He married Elizabeth (or Isabel), daughter of Sir Robert Gordon of Lochinvar. Their sons were: Alexander, who succeeded; William of Garquhinye, progenitor of the Glendinnings of Mochrum; Simon, whose son was George of Laggan. John (16th C.) tenant of Sir Walter Scott of Howpsley in the lands of Outersideig in 1569. Sir Walter acted as cautions for his tenants at a meeting in Hawick, assuring that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. His name is recorded as ‘Johnne Glendonyng’. John (16th/17th C.) tenant in Byreholm. In 1623 he and Sandy Armstrong in Harden entered John Armstrong (called ‘of Powsholme’) to the Justice Court in Jedburgh. John of that Ilk and Parton (17th C.) son of John. He was confirmed in the family lands in 1630. In 1644 he was part of Moutrose’s army, setting up the King’s standard in Dunfries, as a result of which he was denounced as a traitor. His goods were forfeited and he fled abroad until the Restoration. He married Isabel, daughter of George Seton, 2nd Earl of Winton. His children included: George, who married Elizabeth Glendoning of Gilston, but pre-deceased his father; James, who succeeded his father, but died soon afterwards without children; William who died unmarried soon after his elder brother; and Robert, who succeeded. By this time the family was focused on their estate at Parton and all local connections appear to have been severed. John ‘Sowtail’ (17th C.) recorded in the Hawick Burgh Records in 1644. His wife, ‘Janet Scott, alleged witch’, had William Elliot in Harwood, acting as her cautioner, promise that she would appear before the Justice-General or the Bailies of the Regality of Dunfries. John (17th C.) along with Walter (probably a brother or son) he was charged with stealing sheep from the Laird of Gledstains in 1663. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Janet Riddell and their children included: Margaret

He married Margaret Turnbull, who died in 1755, aged 81. Lodgell in Castleton Parish. He married Margaret (b.1765). Andrew (b.1759) was probably also Margaret (b.1756); an unnamed son (b.1759); Hebrides (b.1765). Andrew (b.1759) was probably also the elder of Hawick Kirk recorded in 1717, along with Andrew (presumably also Glendinning), when charged with collecting monies from Crumhaugh, Goldielands, Fenwick, Alton Croft and Closses, suggesting he may have lived in this area. He was recorded as an Elder in 1719 when he witnessed a baptism for William Williamson, herd in Whitchesters. He is probably the John who was tenant in Whitchesters when he witnessed a baptism for John Ekron in 1723 and another for Robert Scott, weaver in Hawick Shiel. He may be the John who witnessed a baptism for Thomas Wilkie in 1731. He married Helen Scott in 1701 and their children included James (b.1704) and Esther (b.1707). The witnesses in 1704 were William Bell in Whitchesters and Robert Rodger. He is probably the elder of Hawick Kirk recorded in 1717, along with Andrew (presumably also Glendinning), when charged with collecting monies from Crumhaugh, Goldielands, Fenwick, Alton Croft and Closses, suggesting he may have lived in this area. He was recorded as an Elder in 1719 when he witnessed a baptism for William Williamson, herd in Whitchesters. He died at Gatehousecote and his wife at Cleughhead, Southdean, and they are buried in Hob Kirk Kirk Yard. William (b.1862) son of William and Ann Kyle. Like many of his family members before him, he worked as a a shepherd. He lived in Castleton, Morebattle and Southdean Parishes. In 1897 he married Agnes (b.1871), daughter of William Hardie. Their children were: Hardie Bain (1900–1947); William (b.1902); Margaret (b.1905.6); and Ann Kyle (1909–32), who married Robert Cromarty (for merly ‘Glendonwyn’ and variants, such as ‘Glendennan’, ‘Glendevin’, ‘Glendinen’, ‘Glendinning’, ‘Glendinning’, ‘Glendinnewyn’, ‘Glendinwin’, ‘Glendinwyn’, ‘Glendonewining’, ‘Glendonewyn’, ‘Glendonwyng’, ‘Glendonowyn’, ‘Glendonowyn’, ‘Glendonyn’, ‘Glenduning’, ‘Glendunwin’, ‘Glendun wyn’, ‘Glendynewyn’ and ‘Glendynewyn’).

Glendivan (glen-di-vin) n. former lands in Eyedale, near where the Glendivan Burn meets the Ewes Water. Along with Flask and Howgill it was described as a 10-merk land in 1550, when inherited by Robert, Lord Maxwell, by John, Lord Maxwell in 1604, by Robert, Lord Maxwell in 1619, and still held by John, Earl of Nithsdale in 1670 and William, Earl of Nithsdale in 1696. It is probably the ‘Glendourane’ (likely a transcription error) and ‘Glendovan’ listed among the Dum friesshire possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1653, 1661 and 1663. It was surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718, when it consisted of 368 acres, bounded by Howgill, Sorbie, Kirkton and lands of the Laird of Arkleton. The map shows farmhouses on both sides of the burn, some parts of the farm on the other side of the Ewes Water and a small area of the farm owned by the Laird of Arkleton. John Irving and Robert Armstrong were there in 1797. William Irvine was farmer there in 1841, his son John taking over later. There were also Eastons living there in 1841. A little further up the burn from the farmhouse are remains of 2 settlements (not to be confused with Glendonwyn in Meggatdale; also sometimes ‘Glendiven’; it is ‘Glendowane’ in 1550 and ‘Glendovane’ in about 1610; it is ‘Glendouin’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, ‘Glendovein’ on Gordon’s c.1650 map, ‘Glendoven’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and confusingly ‘Glendonwyne’ on Crawford’s 1804 map).

Glendonwyn (glen-don-win) n. old form of Glendinning, the family name coming from lands in the upper Meggat valley. There was formerly a tower there, with remains still visible in the mid-19th century, on the south side of the Poldovick Burn, a few hundred metres south of the modern farmhouse. There was once an antimony mine here. There are several nearby earthworks and enclosures. In 1669 Walter, son of Robert Scott of Harwood, was served heir to his father’s 7½ merkland of ‘Glendoning’ in the Parish of Westerkirk (it is ‘Glendinning’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Glendouglas (glen-dug-lis) n. lands in the Jed valley, off the A68 south of Jedburgh, at the northern extremity of Southdean Parish. The big house was once home of the factor for the Home family. There was formerly a private school there, which eventually became a state primary school and closed in 2005 (also written ‘Glen Douglas’).

Glendoune (glen-doon) n. knitwear manufacturers at Buccleuch Mills on Green Lane in the 20th century.

Glenkerry (glen-kee-ree) n. farm on the Tim a Water, where it is joined by the Glenkerry Burn, on the B709 south of Ettrick village. In 1415 the lands were swapped for those of Bellendean, between Scott of Buccleuch and the monks of Melrose. The lands are specifically referred to as ‘Wynzehope called Glenkery, west of the water of Temay’. Scott of Tushielaw paid rental to Melrose Abbey for these lands in 1557 and the half-land there was still held by Scott of Tushielaw in 1620, when the reversion was resigned to him by Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. The lands were part of the Lordship of Melrose until at least 1670. Robert Griev was there in 1724 when he married Jean Black from Hawick Parish. John Rutherford of Edgerston owned the lands in 1802 (it is ‘Glenkery’ in 1235/6 and 1415, ‘Glencie’ in 1564 and ‘Glencarlie’ in 1620: ‘Glencyr’ and ‘Glencir’ are both marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map).
Glenmac

Glenmac (glen-mak) n. knitwear company with a factory up the Cross Wynd and another part on Teviot Road, which had been Walter Wilson’s. The factories closed in the 1980s when taken over by Dawson International. A smaller cashmere-based factory remained at Burnfoot, associated with Barrie, but carrying on the Glenmac brand.

Glennie (gle-nee) n. George (19th C.) resident engineer of the Hawick branch of the North British Railway, living in Melrose. In 1849 he was charged, along with an Edinburgh contractor, with culpable homicide in the deaths of 8 railway workers who died when the Roxburgh viaduct collapsed.

Glenny (gle-nee) n. Arthur Philip (1904–67) eldest son of Charles James. He took flying lessons, like his brother Charles James. The pair partnered with Lieut.-Col. G.L.P. Henderson to manufacture the ‘Henderson-Glenny Gadfly’, but eventually he withdrew his financial support in the project. The plane was designed by K.N. Pearson and manufactured at Byfleet, Surrey in 1929. Charles James (1871–1961) second son of James. He was born at Deanfield in Hawick. He worked with the family firm of Wilson & Glenny, and for many years was Managing Director, retiring in 1936. He was known as a tennis player, recorded 1891–1908. He was Border Champion on more than one occasion, won the Scottish Northern Championship in 1894 and was runner-up in the Scottish Championship in 1904. He married Ilfra Showell and they had 4 children: Elsie Ilfra Muriel (1899–1989); Arthur Philip (1904–67); James Esme (1905–80), who was Cornet; and Eileen Ilfra Wilson. He died on his 90th birthday. Elizabeth nee Pringle (20th C.) daughter of John Douglas Pringle and Susan Roberts. She was Cornet’s Lass to Riddell Innes in 1931, married him the following year. They moved to London to work for Pringle’s, but her husband died in 1963 and she emigrated to New Zealand in the late 1960s, where she married Jim Glenny (who died in 1983) in 1970. George Crosfield (b.1878) youngest son of James and Georgina Waterhouse. He trained as a lawyer, and practiced for a while in Carlisle, in partnership with a Mr. Mawson. He later emigrated to New Zealand, where he became a successful sheep farmer. He married Catherine Anne (‘Cathy’) Pringle, daughter of Walter. Their children were James Douglas, Mary Catherine and Margaret. James (1836–1914) partner in Wilson & Glenny’s, who gave the Town its Public Baths in 1912. He was born in Mill of Lethenty, Aberdeenshire, only son of John and Katherine Wilson. Like his parents he was a Quaker. He was the last private owner of the corn mill and farm of Lethenty in Aberdeenshire. In 1865 he moved to Blackburn in Lancashire, where he went into business as a cotton spinner, with his cousin, John William Cruickshank. Health problems forced him to sell his business and move abroad for the winter of 1873. He returned to England, to start a cement business in Chester. He was consequently briefly in a partnership with London concrete pioneer Charles Drake (who was responsible for the Congregational Manse), although the business, based at Thorlshope, folded in 1875. But also in 1875 he was invited to become a partner in a tweed business with his uncle George Wilson and 2 cousins, Charles John and George Murray Wilson; thus was born Wilsons & Glenny. In 1891 it became a limited company under the name Wilson & Glenny, Ltd. In 1867 he married Georgina Waterhouse (1844–1923). They had 4 children: John (1868–1919), who worked for the family firm; Charles James (b.1871), who was for a long time Director at Wilson & Glenny; Elizabeth (1875–90), who died while still at school; and George Crosfield (b.1878), who became a lawyer and moved to New Zealand. He had the house at Bucklands extended in the latter part of the 19th century and died there. James Esme ‘Jimmy’ (1905–80) son of Charles James. He was educated at St. Bees in Cumbria. He was Cornet in 1927 and lived at Deanfield. An early car enthusiast, his 1926 Delage still exists. He also flew aeroplanes, first taking lessons just months after being Cornet. Along with his brother Arthur and Lieut.-Col. G.L.P. Henderson they developed a low-cost nonoplane called the ‘Henderson-Glenny Gadfly’, but only 3 were ever built. He flew from Cramlington to Hawick in 1930 in a de Havilland DH60 Moth, with repairs in Hawick being carried out by Jimmie Guthrie. Also in 1930 he survived a crash after engine failure at R.A.F. Turnhouse in Edinburgh, his fellow crewman being killed. He had a small aircraft hangar built at Groundistone Heights and later moved to Ravenslea on Sunnhill Road. He served in R.A.F. during WWII and afterwards worked for British South American Airways. He married in 1936 and died at his home in Portugal. John (1799–1844) from Kinnuck, Aberdeenshire, son of James and Elizabeth Wigham. The family can be traced back to John, who was born in 1641 at Mill of Colihill

Glenpyet
(also Aberdeenshire). In 1833 he married Katherine (1798–1863), daughter of William Wilson, Hawick manufacturer, and must have been a regular visitor to Hawick. Their children were: Elizabeth (1835–45); James (1836–1914), who became partner in Wilson & Glenny’s; and Mary Ann (1838–1917), who married John Charles Wilson. John (1868–1919) eldest son of James. After leaving school he entered the family firm of Wilson & Glenny. However, he retired from the business while still quite young. He married Helen Borthwick and their children were: Barbara (b.1899); Katherine (b.1903); Phyllis Mary (b.1905); and Evelyn Georgina Wilson. Mary Ann (1838–1917) sister of manufacturer James, and son of John and Katherine Wilson, she was born in Mill of Lethenty, Aberdeenshire. She married Charles John Wilson, partner of her brother. Her children included Hawick Provost George Heron Wilson. She died at Deanfield.

Glenpyet (glen-pI-i’) n. former name for lands in the Yarrow valley. They were Crown lands in the late 15th century, split into 3 steadings, the middle one being leased to Thomas Dickson of Ormiston in 1479. In the 1480s they were leased by Robert LAuder, William Inglis and Thomas Dickson. The Middlestead of Glenpyet was referred to as ‘Wallacehill’ in 1486. They were still Crown lands in 1502 when half was held by David Inglis. They were feued by the Murrays in the early and late 16th century. In 1541 they were valued at £24. They belonged to the Scotts of Buccleuch from at least the 16th century. They are recorded as ‘Glenpyet’ in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme, when James Brewhouse was tenant. Sir Walter owed ‘males’ for these lands to his half-brother Gideon Murray. Christian Gray, widow of James Brewhouse was removed as tenant in 1581. ‘Jedion Murray of Glenpint’ is among the 180 or so followers of Sir James Johnstone who had a ‘respite’ in 1594 for their role at Dryfe Sands the year before; he is the same man later referred to as Sir Gideon of Elbank (it is ‘Glenpoyte’ in 1456, ‘Glenpoot’ in 1468, ‘Glenpoite’ in 1479 and 1489, ‘Glenpot’ in 1541, ‘Glennpiot’ in 1575/6, ‘Glenpoyt’ in 1581 and ‘Glenpoytte’ in 1594).

Glenvoran (glen-v0-ri-an) n. former lands within Ewesdale, between Eweslees and Fiddleton. The lands held the special feudal status of ‘free tenandrie’ and may have been connected with the lands at ‘Ewes Doors’. There was once a fortified house there, with ‘Hobbie of Glenvore’ marked on Sandison’s c.1590 map and also marked on Gordon’s c. 1650 map just north of Fiddleton. It is listed among the lands in Ewesdale held by Alexander, Lord Home in 1509/10. It was among a set of lands in the Ewes valley that were transferred from Simon Armstrong to George, Lord Home in 1525. This was confirmed when the King revoked a set of charters relating to lands of the Homes in 1535, including this and several other parts of Ewesdale. ‘Hobbe of Glenvorane’, an Elliot, is also recorded. ‘Archie Ellot, sone to Ringanis Will Ellot the portar in Glenvoren’ is recorded in 1579. Probably the same Archie Elliot ‘of Glenworren’ signed the 1584 bond of assurance with the English Wardens; his name was first among the Elliots of Ewesdale, suggesting some prominence of Glenvoren at that time. Robert Elliot from there was recorded in 1590 and declared a fugitive in 1606. The lands were listed in 1663 among those owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch in the Lordship of Ewesdale. It may have near the modern cottage of Fiddleton Bankend where sometime around 1900 a ‘piece of very substantial masonry’ was found while digging a little to the west. There was formerly a mill there (also written ‘Glenvorane’, ‘Glenvoren’, etc.; it is ‘Glenvo-’

Hawick, and the rest of Peebleshire, Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire belonged to the Episcopal Church Diocese of Glasgow from sometime around 1100 until transferred to Edinburgh in 1888. For a long time Teviotdale was one of the rural deaneries of the Diocese. In the 1960s Hawick (like many other towns) made an agreement to build housing for families from the Glasgow area, to solve a problem with the over-expansion of Glasgow, known as the ‘Overspill Programme’ – ‘Next hail thee, Glasgow! Three times hail! To flourish mays'th thou never fail, But ever nobly cock thy crest As the metropolis of the West’ [AS] (also spelled ‘Glesgae’; see also Glesci; Teres often speak about going ‘throwe ti Glesgi’).

Glesgi (glez-gi) n. (Glasgow) John (17th C.) from Cavers Parish. He was ordered to be transported to America in 1679 for being a Covenanter, and escaped the shipwreck in the Orkneys, which killed about 200 men. William (17th C.) presumably related to John, he was also a banished Covenanter who escaped from the 1679 shipwreck. However, most of those who survived were recaptured and sold as slaves in Jamaica or New Jersey. William (17th C.) tenant in Hummelknowes on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls.

Glesgi Jimmie (glez-gi-ji-mee) n. itinerant street performer of the mid-19th century. He used to sing Scottish songs in a tenor voice on the High Street, sometimes visiting for several weeks at a time. He is also referred to as ‘Gleska Jamie’ – ‘Then Meg the Mantua sails along, Auld Nancy leads her cuddy aboot, And Gleska Jamie lift a sang Tae Shuauchles, Chinnie and Roll-aboot’ [HI].

Godfrey (god-free) n. Valentine (1800–74) born in Leister, son of Valentine and Sussannah Rawson. He was an early stocking-machine needle maker, and taught both his sons the trade. He moved to Hawick in the late 1830s. He is recorded in 1841 living at about 25 High Street and was at about 4 Walter’s Wynd in 1851. He is listed as a needle-maker on Walter’s Wynd in Slater’s 1852 directory. He married Eleanor Austin. Their children included: James (b.1820/1), who married Janet Slater; Susan (b.1824/5), who married Robert Oliver; Jane (b.c.1826), who married Thomas Swinton; Valentine (b.1827); and Sarah A. (b.1832/3). Valentine ‘Val’ (1827–1911) English stockingmaker, born in St. Margaret’s, Leicestershire, son of Valentine. He was an experienced maker of needles for hand-frames, learning the trade from his father. He came to Hawick in the mid-1800s and was one of the main men who introduced cricket to the Town. He was listed as ‘Valentine, jun.’ as a needle-maker on the Back Row in Slater’s 1852 directory. He married Janet Hope in Hawick in 1847, and she died in 1913, aged 87. The couple celebrated a golden wedding anniversary. Their children included: Elspeth (b.c.1850); Thomas (b.c.1854); Allan (b.c.1856); and Sarah (1857–1941), who married Bailie Andrew Landles. 4 of their children died in infancy. He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery.
the Gododdin (thu-go-do-din) n. tribe who inhabited the south-eastern part of Scotland during the Roman and post-Roman period, with capital at Edinburgh, and who spoke Brythonic. They were previously known as the Votadini and the Romans also referred to them as the Gadeni. A commemoration of one of their battles (Cala-traeth) exists in the epic poem ‘Y Gododdin’. Hawick was probably included in their area, although the boundaries are very uncertain.
the Gods (thu-go’dz) n. upper circle seating in a picture-house or theatre, generally the cheaper seats. In Hawick this gallery level was particularly popular with youngsters in the hey-day of the cinema at the ‘Wee Thea’.

He first performed in Hawick Common Riding festivities in 1984. He is the singer of ‘Songs of Teviotdale’ and ‘Callant’s Song’ on the 2006 CD ‘Hawick and Tviotdale in Song and Poetry’.
Goldielands

Goldielands (gõl-dee-lîndz) n. farm with tower, set in a prominent position overlooking the confluence of the Borthwick with the Teviot. The lands were possessed by the Scotts of Buccleuch since 1446, when they exchanged half of Branxholme and neighbouring lands with Inglis of Manor for some in Lanarkshire. William, son of William Scott of Goldielands was recorded in 1493 and George Scott in Goldielands in 1510. The ‘ditch of Goldielands’ formed part of the northern boundary of the Common in the 1537 charter. In late 1548 the ‘manis of the landis of Goldland’ are among those that were raided and burned by a group of Kers, Englishmen and others, complained about in a summons by Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme; 200 ‘thraves’ of barley, along with corn cattle and other goods were lost. The farm was surveyed in 1718, along with other properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch; at that time it consisted of 254 acres, bounded by Crumhaugh, Hawick Common, Alton Croft, Fenwick and the River Teviot, and with a small part on the north side of the Teviot. The Scotts of Goldielands were an offshoot of the Scotts of Branxholme, who were important in the Hawick area for several generations. The tower was probably built mostly in the 16th century, and is now a ruin on the farm. Probably its most famous resident was the first Laird, Walter Scott ‘the Laird’s Wat’, who took part in the Raid of the Redeswire and whose son Walter was probably at the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596 and was a powerful leader of the whole Scott clan during times of minority or absence of the Laird of Buccleuch; his tombstone is preserved in the Museum, and was part of a family vault located below the steepel in the northern aisle of the present St. Mary’s Kirk (later used as the furnace chamber). Tradition says that the last Laird was hanged from his own gateway for stealing cattle; however, there is no evidence of this. Walter Scott of Goldielands’ lands in Hawick Parish were valued at £566 13s 4d in 1643. The family history in the 17th century is murky, but we are helped through the existence of a complaint made in 1672, preserved in the Melrose Regality records. The Scotts of Goldielands eventually failed to have a male heir, and their lands were inherited by the Scotts of Crumhaugh, except for the estate of Goldielands itself, which returned to the Scotts of Buccleuch. In 1627 the farm is described as a ‘neuer payit ferme’ (i.e. never having been rented to a tenant), estimated to pay ‘100 lbs. in stok, parsonage 3 bolls, vicarage 7 lbs. 10 sh.’ It has been a tenanted farm owned by the Duke of Buccleuch since the mid-1600s. William Lyne was a tenant there in 1642. There were Elliots living there in the 18th and 19th centuries. Andrew Riddell was there in at least 1702–08. John Elliot was tenant there in 1713. In 1706 the title Baron of Goldielands was created (among others) for Henry, son of Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch. A plantation to the west of the tower is probably quite old, and is shown clearly on the 1718 drawing. John Elliot was still recorded there in 1742. In 1788 the estate of Scott of Goldielands was recorded as having been valued at £400, and by then owned by the Duke of Buccleuch – ‘He pass’d the Peel of Goldiland. And cross’d old Borthwick’s roaring strand’ [SWS], ‘Does the blaze rise on Goldielands?’ [SWS], ‘Walter of Branxholm grasps his brand, And calls upon his gallant band – ‘For Hawick ride’ . . . ’ [WIS], ‘But to the story that’s afloat, I’ll tell it while ‘tis green: Near Goldielands, within the wood, A heidless man was seen’ [TCh], ‘I maun gang doon by Gowdlands To’er, Where the Teviot wails i’ the wintry rain . . . ’ [FGS], ‘Ever more dear were the echoes are ringing Out through the green glades by Goldielands’ wall: Where the sheep bleat to the sound of your going, In the lush pastures by fair Branxholm hall’ [WL], ‘And bursting ranks of doves rise heavenward From Goldielands’ high tow’ring stone’ [IWS] (also spelled variously ‘Gaudielands’, ‘Goldiland’, ‘Gouldeiland’, ‘Gowdielands’, ‘Gowd’ rather than ‘Gold’, e.g. ‘Goudielands’ in 1593 and ‘Gaudielands’ in 1594, and from 1596 tends to begin with the Scots ‘Gowd’ rather than ‘Gold’, e.g. ‘Goudeilandis’ in 1435 and ‘Goldilandis’ in 1446 and 1493; it is ‘Gouldeilandis’ in 1510, ‘Goldland’ in 1549, ‘Gordeiland’ in 1574, ‘Gouldielands’ in 1577, ‘Gaulielands’ in 1574, 1580 and 1581, ‘Gouldielande’ in 1579, ‘Goldeilandis’ in 1583/4, ‘Gaudielandis’ in 1586, ‘Gouldeilandis’ in 1592, ‘Goldielandis’ in 1593 and ‘Gaudylandis’ in 1594, and from 1596 tends to begin with the Scots ‘Gowd’ rather than ‘Gold’, e.g. ‘Goudielands’ in 1596, ‘Gouldeilandis’ in 1610, ‘Gowdilandis’ and ‘Gouldielandis’ in 1627, ‘Gowdilandis’ in 1643, ‘Gouldielandis’ in 1646, ‘Gouldielandis’ in 1664, ‘Gowdilands’ in 1649, ‘Gouldielands’ in 1650, ‘Gowdilaw’ in 1655, ‘Gowdilandis’ in 1673, ‘Goudielands’ in 1682, ‘Gouldielandis’ in 1690 and ‘Gouldilans’ in 1698; it is on Gordon’s c. 1650 map as ‘Gaudielands’, Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Gaudielands’, de Wit’s c. 1680 map as ‘Gaudylands’ and Roy’s c.1750 map as ‘Gold Lands’; the origin might be either from yellow flowers once growing

there, perhaps from the richness of the soil or from the Old English personal name ‘Golda’; there is no reason to believe the Victorian view that it was once the residence of the ‘Goldie’ family.

Goldielands Cottage (gōl-dee-lindz-toor) n. cottage on the farm of Goldielands. There were Armstrongs there in the latter part of the 19th century.

Goldielands Toor (gōl-dee-lindz-toor) n. tower on the farm of Goldielands. It is a typical 16th century peel tower, built in a useful location as a watch-tower to protect Brauxholme. The tower is approximately 10 x 7 m, with 5 stories, and formerly had a parapet walkway. In lay-out and construction, it is similar to Burnhead Tower, and was the model for Westburnflat Tower in Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Black Dwarf’. There is a view in Grose’s ‘Antiquities of Scotland’ from 1789, showing the tower in good condition and with an adjacent barmkin, although the details may not be factually accurate; it shows a walled enclosure with the large tower (along with a couple of small outbuildings) in the south-west corner, and another tower in the south-east corner. There is now no evidence of the wall, although a mound may indicate where the second tower stood. The towers may have once been called ‘Speed o fit’ and ‘Tranty fit’, who were also said to be 2 witches who lived there. The main tower is now a fairly well preserved ruin on the farm of the same name, attached to more modern farm buildings. Many original features survive, such as fireplaces, doorways, corbels and an aumbry. Tom Scott’s painting of the tower is in the Museum. It is a grade B listed building.

the Gonial Blast (thū-gō-ne-ul-blawst) n. severe snowstorm in southern Scotland in early 1794, described by the Ettrick Shepherd (although there is some confusion over whether this is 1794 or 1795). Thousands of sheep were killed, particularly in Eskdale, but also in many other areas. Around 20 shepherds also perished, including William Scott at Priesthauglishiel and one at Sorbietrees. There is also a detailed description by Rev. William Brown of Eskdalemuir, including the progression of the weather from 23rd January onwards, with the fatal day being the 25th; he lists shepherds who perished in neighbouring parishes, and tallies the dead sheep in Eskdalemuir to over 4,000 (the name derives from gonial; also spelled ‘Goniel’).

Gonnella (go-ne-li) n. Giocondo ‘George’, ‘Telio’ (19th/20th C.) from Barga in Lucca Province, Tuscany, Italy. His nickname may have come from ‘Tiglio’, which is just to the east of Barga. He lived at 6 Dickson Street and ran Telio’s chip shop. His wife was Mary and their children were: Anna Leah, who married Andrew Wilkinson; and Giovanni ‘Jock’, who married Olive Graham. He died while on a return visit to Barga – ‘A cannie fella, real name Gonnella, The chips he made were nice, Tae gaun wi a hag-gis slice’ [IWL].

gonterniblicks (gon-tur-ni-bliks) interj., arch. an exclamation of gladness (noted by J. Jamieson, who also gives ‘gonternickles’).

He could be the John whose daughter Jean was baptised in Roberton Parish in 1686. John (17th C.) resident of Briery Yards according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th/18th C.) tenant at Southfield. He was fined in 1677 for ‘abusseeing of the marches of Hawicke marching betuixt John Hardie and him’. He rented half the farm of Over Southfield from the Duchess of Buccleuch in at least the period 1690-96. He was also tenant farmer at Over Southfield, according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He is probably the John who witnessed baptisms in 1696 for Robert Scott in Newbigging and for James Story. He and his son William were joint tenants of Southfield around 1710 (as attested in evidence given regarding the state of Hawick’s Common in 1767). He was listed as being at ‘Southside’ [probably a transcription error] in 1713 when he witnessed a birth at Branxholmstown. Also in 1713 he and his son William ‘in over Southfield’ witnessed a baptism for William Martin (who was farm servant there). He married Margaret Cook in 1713; he was said to have taken a wife when he was 90 years old, and this may have been that time. He was deceased by 1721 when his widow married tailor William Oliver; they were both at ‘Over Southfield’. He could be the John who witnessed a baptism for John Beattie and Helen Goodfellow (presumably a relative) in Hawick in 1673. John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. His children included: Thomas (b.1754); and Jean (b.1756). John (18th C.) married Christian Cavers in Wilton Parish in 1730. He may be the John whose daughter Christian was baptised in Kirktoun in 1735. He could be the John at the Flex, who (along with John Cavers) witnessed a baptism for John Irvine (tenant at the Flex) in 1741. He may also be the John who along with Archibald, witnessed a baptism for Walter Douglas and Christian Goodfellow in 1762. He could also be the John who hired the Hawick Parish mortcloth in 1758. John (b.1756) wright in Hawick, probably son of Robert and Margaret Scott. In 1782 he married Janet Deans, daughter of flesher George Deans. Their children included: Agnes (1784–1872), who married Wallyter Haddon, father of Andrew Haddon of Honebyburn; and Robert (b.1786). John (18th/19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Jane Jardine and their children included: Helen (b.1809); and Andrew (b.1811). Bailie John (1798–1869) son of baker Hugh and Elspeth Scott. He was Cornet in 1822 and was also a Magistrate in Hawick. He had a grocer’s and candlemaker’s business at 1 Buccleuch Street. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He is probably the merchant in Hawick listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1840. He is listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory at the Sandbed, in 1837 on Buccleuch Street and in Slater’s 1852 directory (as a ‘tallow chandler’) on Teviot Square. He is probably the Mr. Goodfellow whose property is marked there on Wood’s 1824 map. He opened the first public baths and wash-house in Hawick, by the river-side, where Orrock Church was later built. In 1837 he was involved in a dispute with the ‘Trades and Operatives’ over expenses for the celebration (i.e. the drinks bill) and parade for the proclamation of the new Queen. He was listed among a group of 10 men who had been denied their claim to be on the electoral roll in Selkirkshire on the basis of joint life-rent there. In Slater’s 1852 directory he is listed as proprietor of the Public Baths at Teviot Square and also listed there as insurance agent for Scottish Provident. He ran the grocer’s until 1857, when it had ceased to be successful and he emigrated to New Zealand. He married Margaret, daughter of John Mercer and Euphemia Scott, and she died in 1838. Their children were: Euphemia (b.1828), who emigrated to New Zealand with her father; Archibald (b.1830), who died young; Margaret (b.1832), who married Walter Hume and later emigrated to New Zealand; Jane (b.1835), who died young; and John (b.1838), who also emigrated with his father. A portrait of him exists. John (b.1808/9) born in Jedburgh, in 1860 he was living at Woodhouse in Southdean Parish. His wife was Beatrice from Hawick. Their children included: Thomas, Oliver, James, Peter, Robert and William. John (19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. He married Ann Swanstone and their children included Jean (b.1844). John (1825–1900) son of Robert and Elizabeth Kedzie. He emigrated to Canada, where he was a pioneer in Inmissifie Township, Ontario. He married Margaret Cross and secondly Esther McCullough. John Cumming (1834–1917) born in Jedburgh, son of William and Helen Cumming. The family spent some time in Glasgow but moved to Hawick when he was young. He became a publisher at 63 High Street. He was an early member and regular contributor to the Archaeological Society, and a keen temperance supporter. He gave a speech at the 1891 Colour Bussing, including some Common Riding reminiscences. He wrote a memoir of his early life about 1901, which was published in the 1997 Transactions. He also wrote historical articles for the Border Magazine. He married Martha Hain in 1865 and Andrew Hain was their son. He wrote ‘Border Biography’ (1890, based on articles from the ‘Hawick News’), ‘Occasional Poems and Verses’ (1893) and ‘Hawick’s Annual Festival and Other Verses’ (1911), as well as producing the ‘Illustrated Guide to Hawick and Vicinity’ (1898) and the updated edition ‘Goodfellow’s Guide to Hawick’ (1914). He also wrote several short booklets on local history, specifically ‘Hawick myths: No. 1 Gawyn Douglas’ (1983), ‘Hawick and Gavin Douglas’ (1987), ‘Reminiscences of the Hawick Archaeological Society’ (1891), ‘Satchells (A Review) and the Riddell Monument’ (1894), ‘The Common Riding’ (1894), ‘The Bibliography of Hawick’ (1896) and ‘John Casper Leyden: An Historical Retrospective – Explanatory and Critical’ (1903). In addition he published pamphlets on wider topics, namely ‘The Early History of Scotland, from an Archæological Point of View’ (1881), ‘The Archæology of Books’ (1882), ‘The Egyptian Question’ (1882), ‘The Present Aspects and Position of the Radical Movement’ (1883) and ‘The Social Life of the People, Politically Considered’ (1892). John (1842–1912) son of Alexander Scott, tenant at Trow Mill. He was born in Hawick and emigrated to Victoria, Canada, then moved to Seattle. He married Florence Agassiz and they had 11 children. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Scott and their children included William (1729). Other children (baptised in Hawick) who could be his include Bessie and an unnamed son (b.1719). Robert (1715–79) son of William. He married Margaret Scott (1721/2–87). Their children included: Agnes (1748/9–66); John (1756–86), who married Janet Deans in 1782; Robert (1759); and James, joiner and Bailie in Hawick. The witnesses in 1759 were the whole congregation. His wife may be the ‘Widow Goodfalow’ who hired the Hawick mortcloth in 1760; she is probably also the ‘Widow Goodfellow spouse to Decd. Robert’ whose death is recorded in 1787. They are buried in Old Wilton Cemetery. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Margaret Kedzie in 1768. John (d.1809), son of the deceased Robert, whose death is recorded in Hawick Parish, may also have been his son. Robert (18th C.) farm-worker at Greenhouse in Lilliesleaf Parish. In 1789 he was recorded at Kirklands. He could be the son of Robert and Margaret Scott baptised in Hawick in 1759; however, based on family names it seems likely his father was James, perhaps from the Bowden area. He married Helen Leis (or Lies) in Selkirk in 1782. Their offspring probably included these children baptised in Lilliesleaf Parish: James (b.1783); Thomas (b.1785); William (1787–1848), who died in North Monaghan, Upper Canada; John (b.1789); Robert (c.1791–1866), who emigrated to Quebec in about 1821; Andrew (c.1794–1852), who married Isobel Young and emigrated to Canada, along with his family and mother; Helen (b.1795), who married John Turnbull; and George (b.1800). Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. He married Jenny Biggar and their children included Elizabeth (b.1802). Robert (19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. He married Elizabeth Dodds and their children included Margaret (b.1807). Robert (1790–1880) born at Merrylaw, son of William and Rachel Easton. He farmed at Merrylaw, Gilliestongues and Croslie (near Stow). He later worked on estates in Devonshire, Argyllshire and Midlothian and was Land Steward at Inch Estates, Liberton. He married Elizabeth, daughter of John Kedie (or Kedzie) of Hawick. They had 6 children: Isabella, who married Andrew Forgie and lived at Newbattle Abbey; Rachel; William, who married Mary Whitaker and farmed in North Wales; Margaret Elliot; John, who emigrated to Innisfill, Canada in 1844; and Archibald, who died in infancy. Robert (b.c.1805) joiner on Teviot Crescent. His wife was Grace, and their children included Adam C., Janet, Joshua, Robert, Jane and Elliot. Robert (19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. He married Mary Dodds and their children included Helen (b.1842) and George (b.1845). Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. Most of his children were born in Midlothian. He married Isabella Renwick, who was from Forkins in Rulewater. He was probably a gentleman’s servant, and spent the latter part of his life at Penrith. His son Andrew was forester around Jedburgh. This branch of the family is not directly connected with the Hawick family of J.C. Goodfellow etc. He is probably the Thomas, son of Robert, who was born in Roberton Parish.

in 1785. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. He married Isobel Renwick (from Jedburgh) and their children included: Andrew (b.1807); James (b.1809); Helen (b.1811), who married Thomas Lunn; and Oliver (b.1813). He is probably the Thomas, son of Robert, born in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1785. Thomas (c.1790–1849) miller at Roughheugh Corn Mill. He was listed as miller there among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835 and 1840. He is also described as tacksman (i.e. tenant) there on the 1841 census. His wife was Mary and their children included: Mary; Robert; Jane; Janet; and Elizabeth. Walter (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded in Denholm in 1773 and 1775. His children included Margaret (b.1773) and Archibald (b.1775). William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Pott and their children included Marion (b.1636), Isabel (b.1639), Janet (b.1642), Janet (again, b.1646) and John (b.1650). William (17th C.) tenant for the Duchess of Buccleuch in Phaup on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. William (17th/18th C.) servant to Francis Scott, miller at Wester Burnfoot, he lived at Leaheads in Wilton Parish. He is recorded there in 1707 (and having later come to the area) when he was called to report to the Kirk Session. He was also at Leaheads in 1708 and in 1711. His children, baptised in Wilton, probably included: John (b.1708); William (b.1711); and Archibald (b.1713). Perhaps the same William had a second marriage in Wilton in 1718 (with no wife’s name recorded). William (17th/18th C.) tenant in Over Southfield along with his father John in about 1710. This was attested in evidence given regarding the state of Hawick’s Common in 1767. In 1713 he and his father John ‘in over Southfield’ witnessed a baptism for William Martin (who was their farm servant). He is probably the William who in 1720 witnessed a baptism for William Martin in Over Southfield. He may be the William who married Helen (or Bessie) Gledstains in 1711, the marriage being recorded in both Hawick and Kirkton Parishes. Probably the same William married Agnes Wright and is recorded in Hilliesland in 1719. His children, baptised in Hawick Parish, probably included John (b.1714), Robert (b.1715), Marie (b.1716), James (b.1716) and Margaret (b.1719). The witnesses in 1719 were merchant William Dickson and gardener James Falsyde. William (1692/3–1740) son of Archibald, who came from Cumberland to Teviothead, with his mother being a Scott. He was tenant farmer at Adderstonelee. He also had half the farm of Bowanhill, Teviothead, with Archibald Elliot having the other half. He married Isobel Scott (1697–1773) at Skelfhill (listed in Cavers Parish records); she is recorded releasing the lands of Bowanhill in 1744. Their children were: Archibald; Andrew, who died at sea; Isabel; John, wine merchant in London and later Berwick; Robert, whose son William emigrated to Ontario; Hugh, who died young; and William, farmer at Merrylaw. He is buried with his wife in Teviothead cemetery. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded in Boghall in 1727 and Heap in 1733. He married Agnes Wight. Their children included: Agnes (b.1727); Bessie (b.1728); Esther (b.1731); Robert (b.1733); and William (b.1735). The witnesses in 1727 were Robert and Francis Scott and in 1733 were Robert Easton and Thomas Scott. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, recorded in Hummelknowes. His children included: John (b.1762); Robert (b.1764); Janet (b.1766); William (b.1767); Christian (b.1769); Betty (b.1771); Jean (b.1778); Nelly (b.1778); and Margaret (b.1781). He is separate from William, tenant in Merrylaw (but may have been related to him). William (1738–1821) son of William and Isobel Scott. He was tenant at Merrylaw for about 50 years. He is recorded there in at least 1788–90. He was also at Merrylaw on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls and was additionally taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. In 1773 he married Rachel (1747–1809), daughter of John Easton, from the Damside family in Hawick. Their children were: Euphan, or ‘Euphy’, who went to London and married John Smith; Elspeth (b.1778); Isabel (b.1778), who married Adam Scott in Westerkirk; Rachel (b.1780), who married Thomas Proudfoot, shepherd at Headshaw; William (b.1782), stockmaking in Hawick; Margaret (b.1784), who married shepherd William Helm; John (b.1788), who died young; and Robert (b.1790), who married Elizabeth Kedzie. He is buried with his wife in Teviothead cemetery. William (1782–1849) son of William, farmer at Merrylaw and Rachel Easton. He was a stockmaking in Wilton, listed at Damside among heads of households in 1840. He was on Lower Damside on the 1841 census. He married Helen Cumming in Jedburgh in 1830. Their children were: William, who married Isabella Amour Own and was Schoolmaster in Haddington; John Cumming, bookseller and local historian; Rachel Easton, who married John B. Miles; and Jessie, who died young.
the Good Samaritans

William (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Margaret Dodds and their children included Jessy (b.1808), John (b.1809) and Thomas (b.1811). William (b.1799/1800) born in Roberton Parish. In 1841 he was an agricultural labourer, in 1851 a ‘Roadmaker’ and in 1861 was farmer, all at Curcarwood in Yarrow. His wife was Isabella and their children included Mary, Janet, Andrew, John, James, George and William. William (1806–90) son of Hugh and Elspeth Scott. He took over his father’s bakery business. He was listed as a baker at the Sandbed on Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1837 he is recorded on the electoral roll as tenant of lands of James Douglas of Cavers. He was also listed among a group of 10 men who had been denied their claim to be on the electoral roll in Selkirkshire on the basis of joint life-rent there. In 1839 he decided to emigrate to Australia, but a delay in his ship’s passage led him to enroll as a colonist of Port Nicholson (to become Wellington) in New Zealand. He travelled to Adelaide, spent time in Melbourne and finally made his way to Wellington, returning to Australia to bring his family in 1840 and purchasing land in Auckland in 1841. There he opened a bakery and flour mill. He later purchased land in Otara, where an oak tree he planted in 1850 is still standing. He married Ann, daughter of John Scott and she died in 1882. Their children were: Helen (b.1836), who married Samuel C. Baird; Ann (b.1838), who married William Macky; Hugh: John: Euphemia, who married David Scott Robertson; Margaret, who died in infancy; Jane, also died in infancy; William, who died in Oakland, California; Thomas; and James Alexander. He and his wife are buried at St. John’s Presbyterian Church Cemetery in Papatoetoe, Auckland. William (19th C.) lived at Kirkhope and Dodhead in Ettrick Parish. He was probably son of William and Isabel. He married Margaret Forest and their children included: John (1891–1917), who was killed in action in France; and 2 daughters who lived at 16 Wellogate Place, Hawick, one of them married to a Tucker (also written ‘Goodfalla’, ‘Goodfalo’, ‘Goodfalow’, ‘Goodfallow’, ‘Goodfelwe’, ‘Good felu’ and variants; note never locally pronounced gid-fe-li).

the Good Samaritans (thu-gid-saw-ma-ri’-inzu) n. abstinence group which seceded from the Good Templars in Hawick, objecting to paying money into central coffers. They lasted for many years in the latter part of the 19th century.

the Good Templars see the I.O.G.T.

Goodyear (good-yeer) n. Hedley John (1886–1918) teacher and army officer, born in Newfoundland, Canada. He enlisted in 1916 and spent several months in Britain in 1917. He received the Military Cross for gallantry, survived the Battle of Amiens, but was killed by a sniper. When he died he was engaged to Betsy Turnbull who was from Hawick. He became well known for the poignant letter to his mother, which was published and much read in Armistice and Memorial services.

Gordon (gor-din) n. town and parish on the western side of Berwickshire. There was once a branch line of the Berwickshire Railway here. The ‘de Gordon’ family took their name from the associated barony. It is also the name of the surrounding parish. Greenknowe Tower is nearby.

Gordon (gor-din) n. Alexander (d.1575) brother of George, 4th Earl of Huntly, and nephew of James IV. He was a servant of the Queen Dowager, Mary of Guise and spent some time in France. In 1549 he sent a detailed report of the capture of Ferniehirst Castle by the English from the French. He was Postulate of Caithness and then appointed as Archbishop of Glasgow in 1550. But in the following year the see was resigned to the Pope, following a request from the Scottish Crown. Hence he was Hawick’s Archbishop for about a year. He was then pensioned and given the title of Archbishop of Athens, later becoming Archbishop of the Isles and then of Galloway. He became a Protestant. In 1566 he preached at the wedding of the Earl of Bothwell and his niece, Jean Gordon, and in 1567 he signed the bond agreeing to the marriage of Bothwell with Mary Queen of Scots. Rev. Alexander (d.1785) son of Alexander of Blairtoun, he was educated at Marischal College, Aberdeen 1748–52. Licensed by Jedburgh Presbytery in 1768, was presented to Kirkton Parish in late 1774 and ordained there the following year. In 1758 he married Joan Perrie (or Pirrie), who died in 1793. They had no surviving children. Alexander (18th/19th C.) weaver in Hawick. The death of his child is recorded in 1815. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Abbotrule Parish. As a Covenanter he had to flee the region. He was captured in Bewcastle and, along with Robert Cameron, was banished to America. Rev. Charles (c.1656–1710) from Aberdeenshire, brother of John, the Provost of Aberdeen. He graduated from Aberdeen University in 1676 and became minister at Campvere in 1686. He returned to Scotland to answer calls to Dumfries and Dalmeny, the latter of which he took up in 1691. He was presented to Ashkirk Parish at the end of 1694 and became minister there the following year. He was offered the Chair of Divinity at Aberdeen University in 1697/8, and the Assembly suggested to translate him in 1698, but he refused to accept it. He was described as ‘a learned and holy man of uncommon integrity’. In 1690 he married Rosina Campbell, daughter of the minister of Dumfries. Their surviving children included 2 sons, George and James, and a daughter, Christian. They had children in Edinburgh, including George (b.1691). Their children, baptised in Ashkirk, included: Alexander (b.1697); Rosina (b.1698); Isobel (b.1700); Margaret (b.1701); Daniel (b.1702); Janet (b.1703); Jean (b.1704); John (b.1705); James (b.1707); and Anne (b.1708).
