Rottenraw (ro’-in-raw) n. former name for land near Hundalee, once a home of the Rutherfords. In 1638 it was given by John Rutherford of Rottenraw to Robert Scott (‘in Burnfutt near Tiviot’) who was marrying his daughter Anne (spelled ‘Rattinraw’ etc.).

Rotten Sike (ro’-in-sik) n. stream in southern Liddesdale, rising near the boundary with Dumfriesshire and running north-east past the farm of Whisgills to join Tinnis Burn.

Rotten Sike (ro’-in-sik) n. small stream in Liddesdale, rising on Stell Knowe and joining the Tweedean Burn north of Tweedhead farm.

rouch (rowch) adj., arch. rough – ‘…ane peck of insufficient humillcorn meill, out of which there was dight ane choppin dish full of rouch seids’[BR1675], ‘Ay whow, bairns, it’s a rouch nicht. How the wund’s souchin’ i’ the chumla heid!’ [JAHM], ‘… And it’s dreich, gey dreich on this rouch hill heid Whaur the caul air gars ane nither’ [WL] (also spelled ‘dreech’).

Rouchchester (row-ch-ches-turz) n. former name for lands in Jedforest. The precise location is unknown, but it was listed between Strange and Southdean Mill in a rental roll of 1541. The tenants were Patrick Oliver and the lands were valued at 12s 6d (it is ‘Rouchchesteris’ in 1541).

Rouchhirst (row-ch-curst) n. former farmstead on the Jed Water, just to the south of Auld Jedburgh. In 1541 the tenant was John Laidlaw and the lands were valued at 12s 6d. The tenants there in 1669 were Thomas, Martin, Lyle and Thomas (junior) Laidlaw and in 1694 were Thomas and John Laidlaw. This may be the ‘Roughhirst’ which was burned by the English in 1544 (it is ‘Ruchhirst’ in 1549; it appears on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Ruchhirst’).

Rouchhope (row-ch-hop) n. former place name in Hobkirk Parish, near to Hyndlee. These were the lands of ‘Rughope’ granted to William of Wauchope in the early 14th century. As part of Jedforest, the farm passed from Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus, to the Crown in about 1537, with Walter Scott of Buccleuch being accused of occupying the lands, which had been in waste for the previous 20 years. In 1541 the tenant was David Turnbull, paying 25s yearly. The lands were owned by the Turnbulls in the mid-16th century. The lands were purchased by William and Robert Chisholme (of Stirches) in 1684. The ridge to the west of the Note o’ the Gate road just south of Wigg is still ‘Rough-hope Rig’ on the Ordnance Survey map (it is ‘Rouchhope’ in 1538 and 1541, and ‘Ruchhoip’ in 1539; Pont’s sketch c.1590 and Survey map (it is ‘Rouchope’ in 1538 and 1541, of Wigg is still ‘Rough-hope Rig’ on the Ordnance Survey map). The lands were purchased by William and Robert Cavers, Bessie Laing, Isobel Hardie, Walter Shortreed, Janet ‘Symontonn’, John Redford, Robert Cavers, Bessie Laing, Isobel Hardie, Walter Shortreed, Janet ‘Symontonn’, John Redford, Thomas Clerk, Mary Armstrong, John Clerk, Isobel ‘Howatson’, Robert Riddell, Margaret Shortreed, Janet Ellioe and Janet Redford. John Miller was recorded there in 1724 and George Wallace in 1737. The 1767 description of the boundaries of the Common talks about the Common Roughheugh (ruf-hew, rowch-hewch) n. former name referring to the area in Wilton between Howlands and Easter Howlands, and from Ladylaw to Lockieshedge, lying ‘contiguous to the Kirk road from Langlands to Wilton’, and bounded on the south by Wilton dam. So it extended roughly from Wilton Path to Old Wilton Churchyard, on both sides of Princes Street. The name was also used for the corn mill there, and the later hosiery mill. The name dates at least to the mid-17th century and is preserved in a house on Greensidehall Road. In 1650 there are 14 ‘communicants’ recorded on a map of local parishes, when it is ‘rouch-heuch’; they are Robert Cavers, Bessie Laing, Isobel Hardie, Walter Shortreed, Janet ‘Symontonn’, John Redford, Thomas Clerk, Mary Armstrong, John Clerk, Isobel ‘Howatson’, Robert Riddell, Margaret Shortreed, Janet Ellioe and Janet Redford. John Miller was recorded there in 1724 and George Wallace in 1737. The 1767 description of the boundaries of the Common talks about the Common Rough Gill (ruf-, rowch-gil) n. small stream in western Liddesdale, rising on Cooms Fell and running roughly south-eastwards to eventually join the Black Burn (it is marked on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Rough Grain (ruf-, rowch-grân) n. small stream in upper Liddesdale, rising on Mid Hill and flowing into Cliffhope Burn. It is marked on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and on the large scale 1899 Ordnance Survey map.

Rough Grain (ruf-, rowch-grân) n. small stream in the headwaters of the Hermitage Water. It rises on Hartsgarth Fell and runs roughly to the north-west to join Chapel Grain and then the Twislehope Burn (it is marked on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

rough-heid (ruf-, rowch-heed) n., arch. a turf or divot, especially a piece of peat cut from the surface and with the grass still attached – ‘These are to give notice to all Burgesses within the Burgh of Hawick that they are discharged from casting dry land soads of any part of the Commonwealth or roughheads (except roughheads in the Mosses), and from casting turfs or diviots on the Common ...’ [BR1816], ‘An’ divots an’ roughheads gotten where the modern’s now ca’ Teviot Square’ [WNK].
Roughheugh Dam

Haugh lying ‘between Dangerfield and the rough heugh land as described by hillocks’. The lands were part of the estate of Langlands of that Ilk, until sold off in parts around 1780: the Waulk Mill to John and William Thomline; the Corn Mill to Robert Scott; and other parts to James Knox, Hector Blaikie, Robert Oliver, James Hart, Adam and George Easton, Walter Scott and William Robertson. John Clerk was living there in 1780. In 1788 (and repeated in the Land Tax Rolls of 1811) the lands are listed as consisting of the Waulk Mill and Corn Mill and 7 other parts, owned by John Thomline (plus William by 1811), Robert Scott, James Knox, Hector Blaikie, Robert Oliver, James Hart, Adam and George Easton, Walter Scott and William Robertson; together they were valued at around £140. The Laird of Langlands held some enclosures in the area, which were sold off to Rev. John Thomson in the mid-19th century. By the early 20th century the name was no longer in use (the origin is presumably from the roughness of the land around the steep bank).

Roughheugh Haugh (ruf-hewf, rowch-hewch-hawf) n. former name for part of the Under Haugh – ‘There’s teuch sauchs growin’ i’ the Reuch Heuch Hauch’ [JAHM] (this also inspired the Hugh MacDiarmid poem ‘The Sauchs in the Reuch Heuch Hauch’).

Roughheugh Mill (ruf-hew-ch-mil, rowch-hewch-nil) n. former corn mill, near the south end of Commercial Road. It was formerly a possession of the Baron of Wilton, specifically Langlands of that Ilk. It was recorded in an agreement involving Langlands in 1581. It is shown in a crude sketch of 1810, with the miller’s cottage alongside (and a water wheel, with the adjacent waulk mill also having a water wheel). It is labelled ‘Rough Heugh Mill’ on Wood’s 1824 map. The building that held the water wheel was once on the Burgh boundary with Wilton; in the early 1700s the Flag used to be unfurled and given 3 cheers there after the visit to the Coble Pool on Common Riding Friday. William Cavers was miller there in 1694, with Simon Wright the under-miller, and Thomas Rutherford also listed there. Alexander Scott (probably descended from the Scotts of Bonchester) was tenant in the mid-18th century and then his son Robert Scott was tenants after him. Robert is recorded there on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. In 1811 it was valued at £26 9s. It was still an active mill in the 1820s, when Pigot’s directory lists the millers as Walter Chisholm and David Fiddes. Thomas Goodfellow and David Fiddes were millers there in 1837 and 1841, with John Fiddes there in 1851. Soon after it (or a building on an adjacent site) became a waulk mill, carried on by John Wilson after William Wilson & Sons was dissolved in 1851. Langlands Mill was constructed on the site in about 1860. John Wilson was listed as owner of the land there in about 1874 (also spelled ‘Rouch-heuch’, etc.; it is ‘Reuchouchtmiln’ in 1581, ‘Roughheugh-miln’ in 1797 and incorrectly written ‘Roughhead mill’ in 1837).

Roughheugh Peth (ruf-hew-peth) n. Roughheugh Path, an old name for Wilton Path or the Peth. It is so marked on Wood’s 1824 map.

Rough-hope (ruf-hop, rowch-up) n. former farm in the upper Borthwick valley, lying on the Rough-hope Burn, to the south of Eildrig. These are the lands of ‘Reuhop or Philop’ sold by John Turnbull to Martin Elliot in 1579. James Oliver was there in 1785 and James Lunn and family in 1796 (it is ‘Roughshope’ in 1795).

Rough-hope Burn (ruf-hop-burn) n. stream that rises on Phillhope Fell, running roughly north-west to join the Eildrig Burn, and hence the Borthwick Water. There are some old field boundaries about half-way up the stream. The stream fed the reservoir, later known as Phillhope Loch, which was used to boost the level of the Borthwick Water and the Teviot.

Rough-hope Rig (rowch-up-rig) n. ridge just to the west of the B6357, shortly before coming to the Note o’ the Gate pass. There is a picnic spot near there. On the ridge is a linear earthwork, about 400 m long, running from the Wigg burn north-east to the main road.

Rough Joke (rowch-jok) n. nickname for John Oliver in the late 1700s.

Rough Knowe (rowch-, ruf-now) n. hill between the Ettrick and Yarrow valleys, to the east of Ladhope. It reaches a height of 481 m and contains a block that acts as a triangulation point.

Roughlaw Sike (rowch-law-sik) n. small stream in Hobkirk Parish. It is mentioned in a charter of 1606, defining the west side of the lands of Hobsburn and Weens. It is unclear where this is exactly, but perhaps the small tributary of the Hallrule Burn that runs past Heathfield cottage (it is ‘Rowchelawsyke’ in 1606).

Roughlee (ruf-lee, rowch-lee) n. farm in the upper Jed valley, between Falside and Edgerston. It was formerly split into Easter and Wester Roughlee. Simon Young from there had remission... for plundering neighbouring farms in 1493, John Young for similar crimes in 1494/5 and Simon again in 1502. The lands of ‘Wester Roughlieis’ were valued at 20 shillings in 1538, with ‘Mydroucheles’ at 30 shillings and ‘Rowchlenweke’ at 40 shillings. The 20 shilling land of ‘Roucheles vocatarum Westir Roughlieis’ is recorded in 1539, as well as the 30 shilling land of Midroughlee and the 40 shilling land of Roughleeneuk. William Douglas was allowed the ‘fermes’ from there for 1538 and in 1539 claimed £10 pertaining to his inheritance. ‘Lyonell Ollyver’ is recorded there in 1544. Michael and John Young was there in 1571/2. David Laidlaw was there in 1588. Robert Douglas of Brieryyards was infested in the lands in 1588 and was served heir to his father John in 1606. The cottage there was once part of Falside farm. This is probably the ‘Ruchlie’ recorded in 1669 when the tenants were Robert and John Storie and Adam Bell. Robert Laidlaw and Andrew Oliver were tenants there in 1694. The ancient settlement on the eastern slope of the hill to the east of the current farmstead may be the former Easter Roughlie; it consists of a roughly oval enclosure, with 2 possible hut sites inside, but has been largely destroyed by forestry plantation. A little to the west is Roughlee Strip, where there are 2 enclosures visible in aerial photographs. To the north there was a plantation bank, now covered with forest. Further south, on a shelf overlooking the Jed Water, are the remains of another farmstead – ‘And her eye was fixt on the Klesly brae ’Till the red sun glinted fair; – On the Roughlee height, where now in sight, A knight did onward bear [JTe], (also written ‘Roughlea’, it is ‘rouchlie’ in 1493, ‘rouchlee’ in 1494/5, ‘rouchlie’ in 1502, ‘Rouchleyis’ in 1538, ‘Rowghleis’ in 1544, ‘Rowchles’ in 1571/2 and ‘Roughlie’ in 1694; ‘Eis-ter Rowchlie et Wester Rouchlie’ are recorded in 1606; it is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Ruchly’).

Roughleeneuk (rowch-lee-newk) n. former farm in the upper Jed valley, to the east of Roughlee. It was valued at 40 shillings in the Exchequer Rolls of 1538 and 1539. It was burned by an English raiding party in 1544. It was among lands inherited by Robert Douglas of Brieryyards from his father John in 1606. Ninian, John and Lyle Young were tenants of ‘Rouchneuck’ in 1669 and Andrew Young was tenant in 1694. Andrew Ker ‘of Roughleenook’ was recorded as deceased in 1731. George Davidson was farmer there in at least 1790–91. James Davidson (‘Dandie Dinnmont’) lived there in the late 1700s and William Scott was farmer there in at least 1794–97. The farmstead was still marked on maps in 1863, and is still visible in aerial photographs, with a plantation bank 150 m to the south (it is ‘Rowchlenewke’ in 1538, ‘Rouchlenewke’ in 1539, ‘Rowle Newke’ in 1544, ‘Rowchlienwik’ in 1606, ‘Roughlinouck’ and ‘ruchlinuck’ in 1694 and ‘Roughlawnoonk’ in 1797; probably the place marked ‘Nuik’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, it is ‘Roughleenock’ on Stobie’s 1770 map; ‘neuk’ could just refer to a remote place).

Roughleeneuk Hill (rowch-lee-newk-hil) n. Roughleeneuk Hill, hill in Southdean Parish, reaching a height of 241 m, in a bend of the Jed Water to the east of Roughlee. The 1863 Ordnance Survey map showed a farmstead there, comprising 5 buildings and an enclosure, the outlines still visible in aerial photographs.

Roughley (ruf-lee) n. farmstead to the east of Hermitage, off the Roughley Burn. The tenants of the Englishman John Thirlwall were given protection by Edward III in 1365, suggesting that these lands were formerly among those held by Comyn. In 1541 the tenants were Ninian and John Elliot. Anthony Elliot was tenant there in 1622. It was owned by the Earl of Buccleuch in 1632. John Armstrong was tenant there in 1694. It was surveyed for the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1718, when it extended to 160 acres, bounded by Laws, Riccarton, Tayloreuchehead, Shaws, Millburnholm and Stichelhill. The farmhouse is shown in the same position as the modern one and another house was marked, perhaps around Dean’s Cleuch. Henry Haliburton was there in 1778. The farmer in 1794–97 was Robert Turnbull. John Little was shepherd in 1835. There was once a large burial cairn there, which was dismantled, the cist found inside being acquired by Sir Walter Scott – ‘When three long years were come and gone, Two shepherds sat on Roughly hill; And ay they sigh’d, and made their moan, O’er present times that look’d so ill [ES] (the name probably comes from the Old English ‘ruh leah’, meaning ‘uncultivated clearing’; it appears as ‘Routhlie’ in 1541, ‘Rouchlie’ in 1622, ‘Ruchlie’ in 1632, ‘Roughlaw’ in 1694, ‘Roughlie’ in 1778 and ‘Roughlee’ in 1797; it is ‘Ruchcly’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, ‘Roughlee’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and ‘Roughly’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Roughley Burn (ruf-lee-burn) n. major stream in upper Liddesdale, rising in the hills to the east of Whitrone and running south, fed by many smaller ‘sikes’ and ‘gills’ to join the Hermitage Water at Shaws.
Roughley Sike

Roughley Sike (ruf-lee-sik) n. small stream that rises on the western slopes of Arnton and fell and runs to the west to join Roughley Burn.

rough runch (rowch-runch) n., arch. wild radish. Raphanus raphanistrum.

Roughside Hill (ruf-sid-hil) n. hill just to the south-west of Synton Mossend. It reaches to more than 270m.

Rough Slack (rowch-slawk) n. small stream in Liddesdale, rising on Birny Fell and running south to join Dalton Burn.

the Rough Wooin (thu-ruf-woo-in) n. soubriquet for the rampage of English armies in 1544 and 1545 throughout the Scottish Border country. This was an attempt to force the Scots to allow the wedding of King Henry VIII’s young son Edward to the infant Mary Queen of Scots. Among other places, the abbeys of Dryburgh, Jedburgh and Melrose were left in ruins, and in Hawick Drumlanrig’s Tower was about all that survived the conflagration. The attacks were led by the Earl of Hertford, Sir Ralph Evers and others. In the Autumn of 1544 Edinburgh was burnt and looted, along with 192 towers and villages in the Borders, with around 400 Borderers being killed. The devastation was even worse in 1545, when Teviotdale was laid waste, including Cavers, Minto, Denholm, Hassendean and Brierymead, among other villages.

rouk (rowk) n., arch., poet. mist, fog, smog, drizzle, vapours – ‘He gars the rouks ascen’ frae the en’s o the yirth … ’ [HSR], ‘Fire an’ hail; snaw an’ rouk; stormie wund fu’fillin’ his wurd’ [HSR], ‘… where yin cannna sei bye yin’s neb for skomfeeshin rowks an drowes’ [ECS], ‘When the smuiky rouk fylses a’thing’ [GW], ‘… to re-pay us for a’ the derk and weet, the glaur and mirk’ [WL] (also written ‘rowk’).

rouky (row-kee) adj., poet. misty, drizzly, damp, foggy, muggy – ‘The inn-man, casin the sneck, Peered into the rouky nicht’ [WL] (also spelled ‘rowky’).

routtree (rown-tree) n., poet. rowan, the mountain ash – ‘A routtree bus’ oot o’er the tap o’t. A glassy pule to kep the lap o’t’ [JBS] (cf. rauntrei).

roup (rowp, roop) n., arch. an auction – ‘his goods an effects wull be selt be public roup’, ‘… and after ye roup, the money then gotten should be given in’ [PR1722], ‘Received roup of the seats in the kirk for 1755 … 0 10 6’ [BR1755], ‘… While high-bred dame – bereft o’ hope – Is doomed to stand a public roup – The highest bidder gets her’ [JR], ‘A sale o’ furniter, a roup O’ spuds at Black’s Hotel. I’ll tell ye a’ about it if Somebody brings my bell’ [WP], v. to sell by auction.

Up until the early 19th century ‘Roup’s’ in Hawick were announced after Sunday services at the Wester kirkstyle by the town bellman, standing on the ‘loupin-on stane’. By the mid-19th century this practice had been replaced by a printed notice attached to the church door – ‘… that anie person who hath received charitie out of ye Box when they die, their household plenishing should be rouped … ’ [PR1722], v., arch. to cry hoarsely (from Old Norse; also spelled ‘rowp’).

roupit (row-pee, -pi’*) pp., arch. auctioned – ‘An’ when that Coffer-Ha’ was roupit, The devil’s in’t! our birkie bought it!!!’ [RDW], Routin Burn (row-in-burn) n. Routing Burn, stream that rises on Roan Fell on the border between Roxburghshire and Dumfriesshire, and flows into Hartsgarth Burn. Along the stream lie 2 shepherd’s bothies, 6 shieling huts, a pen and a ‘knocking stone’.

Routin Burn (row-in-burn) n. Routing Burn, small stream in the headwaters of the Twislehope Burn. It rises near Pike Fell on the border with Dumfriesshire, only a couple of miles west of the other stream of the same name.

Routledge (row’, rowt, roo’-lij) n. Adam (16th C.) recorded in the 1580s as ‘Jamie’s Adam Routledge’. He was one of a group of Englishmen complained of by Thomas Armstrong of Tinnisburn for stealing livestock from him. He could be the ‘Addame Rutledge of the Netechughe’ listed among Routledges of the English Border in 1583. Andrew (17th C.) witnessed a baptism in Ashkirk in 1650, for Alexander Turnbull and Isobel Scott. Archibald (15th/16th C.) recorded among the many Borders men who had remission in 1526 for their earlier attack on the Earl of Arran. His name appears as ‘Routlage’ right after John, who was presumably related. Cuthbert (15th C.) recorded along with John in 1473 as a deputy of the Constable of Bewcastle. How he was related to the Hawick members of the family is not known, but these appear to be the first recorded members of the family near Bewcastle (possibly the eponymous home). Around 1478 they were let the lands and castle of Bewcastle by Richard, Duke of Gloucester, with instructions that they maintain the Border there. During a land dispute of 1538 an old witness in Bewcastle stated that ‘60 years bipast when Liddisdale men came into England and were sworn to King Richard at Carlisle’ that ‘let all the lands of Bewcastle to Cuthb and John Routlege, Robt Elwald, and Gerard Nyxon, and before that’ ‘as well the said castle as all the lands belonging to the same of long time lay waste’. David (15th/16th C.) from Liddesdale. He was witness to Adam Hepburn being served as heir to his father Patrick, Earl of Bothwell in 1508. He is recorded as ‘David Routleich, sergeant’, suggesting he was a local official of the area. Probably the same David was also witness to William Douglas of Drumlanrig selling Broadlee in 1512/3. He may be the same man as the Bailie for Douglas of Cavers. David (15th/16th C.) bailiff and later factor for James Douglas of Cavers. Possibly the same David ‘Rucclarh’ or ‘Rutlethe’ held 8 particates of land in Hawick according to the 1537 Charter; these were on the south side of the public street, and represent one of the largest amounts of any single owner. He may be the David ‘Routlesche’ who in 1512 he was directed to be one of James Douglas of Cavers Bailies to give saisine of Denholm to William Cranston. He may be the same David who was listed on a pardon by James V in 1526, along with a great many Scotts, Kerrs, Pringles, Turnbills and Elliots, as well as John, Archibald and Simon ‘Routlage’. Probably the same David was listed among tenants and other associates of Sir James Douglas of Cavers in a court case of 1541. Probably the same David was witness to a saisine for Douglas of Cavers in 1550 (for the lands of Colifort). Isobel (16th C.) widow on the English side, recorded in 1581. Her house was apparently raided by 30 Elliots, who stole 4 oxen, 6 cows, her only horse and all her possessions. James (15th/16th C.) son of Simon. He failed to appear when called by William Douglas, Sheriff of Roxburghshire, at the Justice-aine in Jedburgh in 1493; John, Simon (presumably his father) and Simon son of Simon (hence his brother), were also called and failed to appear. Probable the same James was also called in the Justice-aine held in 1494/5. James (16th C.) holder of half of the lands of Crook. In an instrument of resignation of 1529/30 (not a century earlier as apparently written), William ‘Routlech’, son of the deceased John resigned all rights to these lands, the ‘kynndess’ of which was held of this James. He was surely related to John and William, as well as to other nearly contemporary local Routledges. He may be the ‘Jacobi Routlich’ who is recorded in the Exchequer Rolls of Scotland for 1501, along with Matthew, John and Simon, as well as many Rutherfords, who had their fines compounded. He could be the James (‘on trows’) who, along with John (in the same place), served as surety for Simon in the Trows in 1502, and was fined for his non-appearance. James of Todhills (16th C.) from Cumbria. In 1540 the Laird of Ferniehirst and his tenants complained about a raid he led into Rulewater, where ‘Thome Oliver’ and ‘Will Kowman’ were slain at Abbotrule. John (15th C.) recorded in 1471, along with David Armstrong and Archibald Armstrong, when they gave pledges for Walter to appear at court in Selkirk. He was probably related to Walter in some way. John (15th C.) recorded in 1473, along with Cuthbert as deputies to the Constable of Bewcastle. John (15th C.) recorded at the Justice-aine held in Jedburgh in 1493. He was called by the Sheriff, William of Douglas, but failed to appear. At the same time Simon, James son of Simon and Simon son of Simon were also called. He could be the John ‘in trows’ who, along with James (in the same place), served as surety for Simon in the Trows in 1502, and was fined for his non-appearance; he seems to be distinct from John, son of Simon in the Trows, who is recorded separately in 1502 (and may have been his nephew or similar). John (15th C.) recorded among many men from Liddesdale who did not appear at the Justice-aine in 1494/5. The Lord of Liddesdale and Captain of Hermitage were fined as a result. John ‘Black John’ (15th/16th C.) Englishman who along with John Dalglish and others was brought with his accomplices to burn Branxholme some time prior to 1510. In that year Dalglish was convicted of this and other crimes and sentenced to hanging if he could not find sureties. He is recorded as ‘Black John Rouslesche’ (which in Pitcairn’s ‘Criminal Trials’ is suggested to be ‘Roughcliffe, or Rowcleff’, but seems clearly to be a transcription error for ‘Routlesche’) and was a ‘traitor of Levin’. He was probably related to the Simon and Matthew who burned the Scott’s seat at Buccleuch about 20 years earlier. John (d.bef. 1530) ‘kynndie’ tenant of half of the land of Crook in Cavers Parish. He may have been son of Simon in the Trows. He was succeeded in this tenancy by his son William, who resigned his rights to his superior (Douglas of Cavers) in 1529/30. They had the 'kyndness from James, who must surely have been a relative; his surname is recorded as 'Routlech'. Probably the same John 'rouclisch' failed to appear when called by William Douglas, Sheriff of Roxburghshire, at the Justice- aire in Jedburgh in 1493; Simon, James son of Simon and Simon son of Simon, were also called and failed to appear, and were surely related. Probably the same John is recorded as son of Simon (who was 'in le trowis') in 1494/5 when he failed to appear again, with Douglas of Cavers being fined; his father Simon, as well as James and Simon (perhaps his brothers) were also called at the same Justice- aire. He may be the 'Johannis Rutlich' who is recorded in the Exchequer Rolls of Scotland in 1501, along with Matthew, John and Simon, as well as many Rutherfords, who had their fines compounded. In 1502 he is recorded as son of Simon in the Trows 'mune in le cruk' (i.e. now in the Crook) when he was surety for himself at the Justice- aire held in Jedburgh, and was fined for not appearing. John (15th/16th C.) listed among the Borderers who had remission in 1526 for supporting the Homes in an attack on the Earl of Arran. Archibald is listed after him and so probably related. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John (16th C.) son of Mungo, an Englishman. He was entered as a prisoner to Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst in 1562, by Archibald Elliot of Farnash and his son. John (16th C.) listed in 1585 as 'Jjohn Rowlege' among a list of men under their superior Lord Maxwell who had respite for all their crimes. He is listed along with Armstrongs from around Eskdale. John (16th/17th C.) servant to John Elliot of Copshaw, recorded in 1605. John (b.c.1780) born in England, he was a grocer and spirit merchant of the High Street recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He was living at about No. 50 with his wife Margaret in 1841. His widow Margaret was still living there in 1851. He may be the same John who was one of the 6 elders of Hawick Parish who left along with Rev. Wallace, in 1843 to form Hawick Free Kirk. His wife was Peggy, daughter of stockingmaker William Beck; she secondly married M. Thompson. They had no children.

John (19th C.) farmer at Greenholm in Liddesdale in 1868. Mals (17th C.) resident of Dryden in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among 'ye poor'. It is unclear if her first name was short for something more familiar. Margaret (b.1786/7) married John, who was a grocer and spirit merchant. By 1851 she was a widow living on the High Street. She was listed as a grocer in Slater's 1852 directory. Martin (16th C.) Procurator of the Scottish Nation in the University of Orleans from 1537. He described himself as being of the Clan Scott and was the last of his family to sign his name 'de', in his case 'de Rotheluge'. Matthew (15th/16th C.) son of Simon, who was tenant at the Trows. In 1494 there was a decree against them to repay the value of the livestock and goods they had taken or destroyed from the house and farm at Buccleuch. In 1494/5 he was recorded as son of Simon at the Justice- aire held in Jedburgh, when he was surety for himself and was fined for not appearing. He may be the 'Mathei Routlich' who is recorded in the Exchequer Rolls of Scotland in 1501, along with James, John and Simon (with his name appearing first), as well as many Rutherfords, who had their fines compounded. He was recorded again at the Justice- aire in Hawick, as son of Simon in the Trows, when he was once more surety for himself and fined for non- appearance. Matthew (15th/16th C.) Burgess of Hawick who is listed in the sasine of the Barony of Hawick for William Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1511/2. His name is recorded as 'Routlech'. Probably the same John 'Routlich' who was charged with plundering and burning Buccleuch in 1494. Nichol (15th/16th C.) recorded as 'Nicholl Routleche' along with a number of Nixons and others of Liddesdale who has remission from their crimes from the Privy Council in 1516. Richard (19th C.) farmer at Gorenberry. His only surviving son Jack was a Lieutenant in the K.O.S.B. who was killed in 1917. Robert (16th/17th C.) resident of Thorthleshope who appeared before the Commissioners' Court in 1623. Robert (17th C.) recorded in Hawick in the 1650s. Whether he was a descendant of the earlier Routledges is unknown. He married Isobel Huntly and their children included Bessie, James (b.1657) and Michael. Simon (15th C.) Burgess of Hawick who was listed among the witnesses to the 1432 sasine giving the Barony of Cavers and Sherifflodom of Roxburghshire to William Douglas; he is there recorded as 'Simone Routlleg'. In a charter of 1433 he is referred to as 'Simon of Routlghue burgess of Hawik' when William Douglas of Drumlanrig and Hawick feued the lands of ‘Byrkwoode called the oxgang’ (near the present day Duke's Wood) and the lands of Burnflat to him. He is also mentioned in a deed of 1447 as a Burgess, when he conveyed part of the land of the Branxholme estate to Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. The land was known as ‘Cusingland’ and was the dowry of his wife Margaret (or ‘Mergrete’) Cousin (or ‘Cusyne’). In 1447 he also feu’d Birkwood (incorrectly transcribed in one record as ‘Birdwood’) to Sir Walter, and is again referred to as a Burgess of Hawick, and as a Bailie in the 1448 sasine. In 1453 he was one of the 2 Bailies who witnessed the first known sasine for a ‘tenement’ in Hawick. In 1455 he is one of the Burgesses of Hawick listed on the notarised document attesting that John of St. Michael had inherited his father’s lands of Whitchester; he is there referred to as ‘burgensis ac sergendus’ of the Barony of Hawick, this second title presumably equivalent to Bailie or Baron’s Bailie. He is mentioned again in 1456, this probably referring to him witnessing an earlier retour for Whitchesters; there he is ‘Symon de Routluge de Hawk’. He is one of the earliest recorded people with this surname, and also the earliest known Burgess of Hawick. He may be closely related to the Simon Simon (15th C.) witness to the sasine giving the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffdom of Roxburghshire to Archibald Douglas in 1464/5. He is recorded as ‘Simone de Routlagh’ and one of the ‘scutiferis’ (i.e. ‘esquires’). Since the sasine was made at Cavers, he was surely a nearby landowner, but it is unclear whether he is the same as the earlier Burgess and Bailie of Hawick or the later Simon from Trows. It may be the same man who was ‘Simone Routelych’ when he witnessed the sasine for the lands of Kirkton Mains and Flex in 1464/5. Simon (15th C.) possibly related to the earlier Simon. He is recorded in 1484 on the panel of inquest for James Douglas as heir to his father Sir William of Drumlanrig in the Barony of Hawick. He may also be the ‘Symone Rowclugh’ recorded in 1492/3 when he witnessed the confirmation of Rutherford and Wells to James Rutherford. He is probably the Simon ‘rouchlich’ who William Douglas, Sheriff of Roxburghshire, was called to enter at the Justice- aire in Jedburgh in 1493, and not appearing, Douglas was fined (similarly John, James son of Simon, and Simon son of Simon, were all failed to be entered, and were surely closely related to him, Simon and James probably being his sons). He may be the same Simon ‘in the trows’ who was subject was charged with plundering Buccleuch in 1494 along with his son Matthew (with their sureties the Douglasses). He is recorded as ‘Symonis rouclisch in le trows’ at the Justice- aire in Jedburgh in 1494/5 when William Douglas of Cavers was fined for his non-appearance; his sons John and Simon also failed to appear at the same Justice-aire, as well as James (probably also his son). Simon (15th C.) recorded as ‘Symon routlage i the trows’ (and probably not ‘prows’ as stated by William Fraser) in 1494 when Walter Scott, grandson of Sir David of Buccleuch, obtained a decree from the Lords of Council against him for the theft and plunder (‘spulzeit’) of the manor and farm of Buccleuch. His son Matthew is also mentioned. Presumably this happened before David Scott died 2 or 3 years earlier. They stole 5 horses, 40 cows, 40 sheep, 2 oxen, large quantities of food etc., including 80 stones of cheese and butter, and ruined the manor, leaving ‘nocht on bed or baulks’. Given the similarity of the names (Simon and Matthew), it seems likely this family was closely related to that of the Hawick Burgesses, possibly the same. Their residence appears to have been the Trows (and not ‘Prows’, known to be connected with the Bewcastle branch of the family), since Douglas of Hornside acted as surety for the 1494 decree. He may be the ‘Symonis Routlich’ who is recorded in the Exchequer Rolls of Scotland in 1501, along with Matthew, James and Simon and many Rutherfords, who had their fines compounded. His son Matthew is recorded in 1494/5 and 1502. His son John, ‘now in le cruk’ (although it is unclear whether this refers to the father or the son) is recorded in 1502, when he was fined for failing to appear in court. Additionally, he is ‘in le trows’ in 1502 when John and James in Trows served as surety for him at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh and were fined for his non-appearance. It seems likely that Simon in Trows and Simon in Crook were the same person. Simon (15th/16th C.) son of Simon. He failed to appear when called by William Douglas, Sheriff of Roxburghshire, at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493; John, Simon (presumably his father) and James son of Simon (hence his brother), were also called and failed to appear. In 1494/5 he failed to appear again (as well as his father Simon and James and John, who were probably his brothers). Simon (16th C.) tenant in Crook in 1592. He is recorded as a witness to the instrument of sasine in which Martin Douglas inherited Crook from his father. He was surely related to John, who was associated with Crook about 60 years earlier, and probably also a descendant of Simon, tenant in the Trows. It is possible he is the same man as Simon in the Trows. Thomas (16th C.) subject of a bond for him to be entered as a prisoner in 1561/2. The bond was between several Eliots (Archibald of Fahnash, Archie’s son Gavin, John of Copshaw and Elder Will) Sir John Kerr and Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst, the Eliots promising to deliver him to ‘the irn yettis of the Fairnehirst’, and was signed at Hawick. A few months later Elliot of Fahnash in another bond entered John, ‘son to Mungo Rutlache, Englishman’ as a prisoner, so this seems likely to have been a relative. The same man (or a son perhaps) could have been recorded in 1581; in a raid by the Eliots of Liddesdale, a Thomas of ‘Todholes’ (i.e. Todhills in Cumbria) was taken prisoner and his horses and oxen stolen. This same Thomas of Todhills complained in 1582 of having livestock and goods stolen by ‘Kinnmont Jock, Eckie of Strubholm and Jock Armstrong of Calvhill’. The same Thomas of Todhills was injured in another raid by the Armstrongs of Mangerton, Whitehaugh etc., in 1583; several other Routledges were targeted, including George of ‘Greinhilesh’ and Anthony of ‘Nutticleugh’, with Alan being killed and William, John and another Thomas being injured ‘in peril of death whereof one hath his legge cut of’. Walter (15th ) recorded in 1471 when John, as well as David Armstrong and Archibald Armstrong gave pledges that he would appear at court in Selkirk. Walter (17th C.) recorded in Hawick in the 1640s and 50s. He may have been related to the contemporary Robert, and possibly was a descendant of the earlier local Routledges. He married Isobel Ruecastle. Their children included 2 Michaels, Janet, Isobel and Margaret (there are many older spellings, including ‘Routledge’, ‘Rouchligis’, ‘Roulesche’, ‘Roulichis’, ‘Routlyech’, ‘Routlthele’, ‘Routlage’, ‘Routlgh’, ‘Routlaige’, ‘Routlich’, ‘Routlhe’, ‘Routlege’, ‘Routlesche’, ‘Routlich’, ‘Routlooch’, ‘Routlge’, ‘Rowclugh’, ‘Rowtleq’, ‘Rowlthugh’, ‘Rutledge’ and ‘ Rutletcher’).

The Routledges (thu-rowt-li-joezj) n. prominent family in the Debatable land, near Bewcastle, which spread to much of the Borders. The only remnant of the early seats of the family is the name of the Routledge Burn, a couple of miles east of Kershopefoot. Nearby is the hamlet of Routledgeburn, Routledge Burn Bridge and Routledge Rigg. The earliest known member of the family is ‘Simon de Routledge’, a Burgess and Bailie of Hawick, recorded in several documents of the 1440s and 1450s. Simon and his son Matthew lived at the Trows, and were charged in 1494 with plundering the manor and lands of Buccleuch. There is a record of a payment made from the Treasurer of Scotland to ‘men of Levin callit Routlyche’ in 1491. Another early member of the family is John ‘Routliche’, who was already deceased in 1529/30 when his son William resigned his ‘kyndlie’ tenancy of half of the lands of Crook in Cavers Parish, which they held of James (surely another relative). There were other people with this surname, probably closely related to the earlier Simon, holding prominent positions in Hawick over the next century. David held 8 ‘particates’ of land in Hawick’s 1537 Charter, probably the largest of any single landowner). Sir Christopher Dacre, with a band of 500 men, set upon them in 1528, and although he failed to dislodge them from the lands of Taras, the family appear to have dispersed afterwards. There were later Routledges in Hawick, e.g. the families of Robert and Walter in the 1640s and 50s, but whether directly related to the earlier Burgess is unknown.

Rovin (rö-vín) n., arch. a roving, a set of lightly twisted fibres in the process of being spun, also called a ‘slub’ or ‘slubbing’ – ‘The rovings were pieced together by boys on a leather rubber at the back of the Billies …’[JGW].

rowan (row-in, row-an) n. a slender tree with white flowers and red berries, the mountain ash, formerly believed to ward off evil – ‘...or even the rowan tree, or mountain ash, used against the charms of witchcraft’ [EM1820], ‘In Keelar’s plume the holly green, And rowan leaves, nod on’ [JL], ‘Where the rowan and the weeping birk perfume th evening air, Where the primrose and the cowslip mix, their beauties blooming fair’ [JoHa], ‘But the kind auld miller isna there wi’ shooters strang and wide. He sleeps aeneath a rowan tree upon yon green hill side’ [VW], ‘The munelicht glintin’ on een sae fair, The lips like rowans, the goowen hair’ [WL] (once pronounced with a longer ō-oo diphthong; cf. rountree and raun-trei; Scandanavian origin).

Rowan (row-in) n. James ‘Jim’ (1943–2008). He grew up in Slitrig Crescent, served an apprenticeship at Woodcock’s, and served with the 4th Royal Tank Regiment. He ran the Hawick Motorcycle Centre, worked as an engineer with Pringle’s and later opened The Photo Shop on the High Street. He often contributed letters to the local press. He married Irene Gentleman. He moved to the Leicester area to be near his son Mark and died there.

Rowanhill (row-in-hill) n. former lands in the upper Teviotdale, listed as part of the extensive Lairdship of Ringwoodfield in 1621 and in 1693. It seems likely this is a scribe’s or transcriber’s error for Rowanhill. However, it is not impossible that it could be associated with Rowantree hill, although this is probably on the wrong side of the Teviot valley or Rowantree Knowe on the right side (it is ‘Rowandhill’ in 1693).

Rowantreihill (row-in-tri-hill) n. Rowantreehill, probable name for a farm in Jedforest. In 1538 and 1539 it was described as 2 steadings and valued at 44 shillings. In 1541 John, Marion and Adam were tenants of part of the lands paying 22s, John and Robert Oliver were tenants in another part paying 11s and Robert ‘the Sheriff’ Oliver was tenants in the last part paying 11s (it is ‘Rowentrehill’ in 1538 and 1539 and ‘Rownte-rehill’ and ‘Rontreihill’ in 1541).

Rowantrei Hill (row-in-tri-hill) n. Rowantree Hill, hill south-west of Teviothead, roughly between the farms of Hislop and Merrylaw. It reaches a height of 372 m.

Rowantrei Knowe (row-in-tri-now) n. Rowantree Knowe, hill in the headwaters of the Dod Burn, north-west of Hawk Hill.

Rowantrei Sike (row-in-tri-sik) n. Rowantree Sike, small stream that rises on Rowantree Knowe and flows roughly northwards to join the Dod Burn.

Rowantrei Sike (row-in-tri-sik) n. Rowantree Sike, small stream in Liddesdale, rising on Stell Know and flowing westwards to become part of Ashy Butn and then Whithaugh Burn.

Rowantrei Sike (row-in-tri-sik) n. Rowantree Sike, small stream in Liddesdale rising on Hazely-side Hill and flowing roughly north east to join the Black Burn.

row a nievefi (row-a-neev-fi) v., arch. to turn round every cut of corn (during harvest) so all the stalks can be intermingled in order that many can be held in one hand before laying in the band (see row).

Rowbank (rö-bawngk) n. house on Drumlanrig Square that has the back on the Square and the front overlooking the mill behind.

Rowcastle see Ruecastle row-chow-the-bacca-wheel (row-chow-th-hu-ba-ki-wheel) n., arch. a children’s game in which a chain of children surround a large child, called the ‘pin’, then sway around until everyone rowd

falls in a heap (noted by J. Jamieson, who states that it is derived from ‘imitation of the process of a tobacconist in winding up his roll round a pin’).

rowd  (rowd) pp., adj. rolled, wrapped – ‘The bairn’ll taik nae ill; ee hev um weel rowd up’ [ECS].

rowen  (row-in) n., arch. fish Roe or spaw, a single egg of fish Roe.

Smith notes that compared with ‘row’ the verb ‘ti rowl is more commonly used for to roll’).

the Rowly-Powly Loft  (thin-row-lee-pow-lee-loft) n. popular name for the old ‘High Loft’ in St. Mary’s Kirk, before it was rebuilt in the 1760s. It is recorded that in 1755 3s. 2d. was received from Adam Kersel for this loft (presumably for his right to sit there).

rowme  (rowm) n., arch. a holding of land, especially a bounded area used for crops or grazing, a farm – ‘Item, he levis to Willie of Allanhauch, the Kirkland, his awne rowme’ [SB1574], ‘...[Hosgote] ane rowme of Wat Scott of Harndenis’ [1580 record], ‘The Larde of Gleddestanes for hymselfe and his rowmes, the Larde of Harret for hymselfe and his rowmes ... ’[CBP1584], ‘...under the higheste paine of our lives or els att lease the banishment of our rowme for ever ... ’[CBP1597], ‘The paroche is 8 myles in lenth, so there are some rowmes 8 myles or thairby from the kirk ... ’[PR1627] ‘Item, whatsoever person that minides to big ane house, lie sall half half gewill of his nichbour’s rowmes ... ’[SB1640], ‘The particular valuationes of the particular rowmes of ye said parochine’ [BR] (also written ‘roum’, ‘room’, etc.).

rowt  (rowt, row’) v., arch. to bellow, roar, low loudly (of cattle) – ‘He’s fitter far to raier an’ rowte, Among his father’s Highland nowte’ [RDW], ‘The road was thrang wiu droves o nowt rowtin an mehhiin an blehhiin’ [ECS], ‘...To hear her rowte baith aft and loud’ [RF], n., poet. a shout, uproar – ‘Take my advice, though but a brute: Leave off ilk drucken, rantin’ rout’ [JoHa] (also spelled ‘rout’ and ‘rowte’).

rowth  (rowth) n. plenty, abundance – ‘Quoth she, about their healths we’ll chase; And rowth o’ gear, and meikle grace ... ’ [CPM], ‘Let uppish queens hae rowth o’ braws, An’ humble minds hae rowth o’ fa’s’ [JoHa], ‘In his dayes sall the richteous flurish, an’ rowth o’ peece, sae lang as the maun induurs’ [HSR], ‘Hed nae routh o bawbees tae pit the time by ... ’[JEDM], ‘A worthy Burgess o’ the Borough, Wi’ rowth o’ wealth to banish sorrow’ [RDW], ‘In the happy days o’ auld langsyne what rowth o’ fun was then, Whiles gumpin’ trouties i’ the burn, or nesting i’ the glen’ [VW], ‘Ay! thon’s the keind o bit! wui rowth o simmer sheine’ [ECS], ‘A rowth o’ modest wayside floowers Spreds owre the track aboon’ [WL], adj., poet. abundant, plentiful – ‘Thou, O God, didist sen’ ane routh rain’ [HAST1958], ‘The Lord is mercifull’ an’ gracious, slaw til angir an’ routh in mercie’ [HSR] (also written ‘routh’; cf. rooth and ruth).

rowthie  (row-thee) n., poet. diminutive form of ‘rowth’ – ‘We’ve rowthie baith o’ brose an’ kail ... ’ [JoHa].

rowthness  (rowth-nis) n., poet. plenty, fullness – ‘But the meik sall haud an’ indwall the yirth; an’ sall delicht thamesels in the routhniss o’ gear, and meikle grace she, about their healths we’ll chase; And rowth o’ peece, sae lang as the muun induurs’ [HSR], ‘Hed nae routh o bawbees tae pit the time by ... ’[HAST1958], ‘The Lord is mercifull’ an’ gracious, slaw til angir an’ routh in mercie’ [HSR] (also written ‘routh’; cf. rooth and ruth).

rowup  (row-up) v. to roll up, wrap, envelop – ‘The bairn’ll taik nae ill; ee hev um weel rowd up’ [ECS] (cf. row).

Roxburgh  (roks-bu-ru) n. small village that is all that remains of an important historic site. It was created a Royal Burgh in the early 12th century, with its castle used as a royal residence, and was one of the four Royal Burghs in the 13th century, being then probably the fourth most populous town in Scotland. It was a walled town with 3 churches, schools and at one time the Royal Mint. James II was famously killed here in 1460, and after the Scots captured it they had it demolished. The village went into decline after that, but there was still a Franciscan convent there in the early 1500s. The area was devastated by Hertford’s men in 1545. The village itself is built on the site of the overflow of the old town, and was thatched until the 1950s. The graveyard contains the burial vault of the Kers of Chatto. A nearby railway viaduct was constructed from 1847, but 9 men lost their lives when part of it collapsed in 1849. A short history was written by Brian Wain in 1983 – ‘For soon, where scenes of seeter beauty smile Around the mounds of Roxburgh’s ruin’d pile, No more the mistress of each lovely field, Her name, her honours Teviot soon must yield’ [JL], ‘Where you slip sullenly under the shadows Skirting the feet of old Roxburgh’s tower: Where you take, lower-like, close to your bosom, Kale, and the music of coppice and bower’ [WL] (the origin of the name is probably Old English ‘Hroc burh’, meaning ‘the fortified dwelling belonging to Hroc’; the name is recorded from the early 12th century, in the earliest records being ‘Rokesburgh’ and variants; it occurs on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Rosburgh’; an example of ‘Hroc’ occurs in the Domesday book for Suffolk and in compound form in other parts of England).

Roxburgh (roks-bu-ru) n. small town in Central Otago on the South Island of New Zealand. It lies on the Teviot River (now called the Clutha), and was also once called Teviot itself, with Ettrick and Mount Benger nearby. It was named by some of the early settlers and was an important centre during the local gold rush of 1862. Streets in the town include one named after Hawick, as well as Abbotsford, Ancrum, Berwick, Branxholm, Cheviot, Edinburgh, Ednam, Hermitage, Jedburgh, Kelso, Liddle, Melrose, Scotland and Tweed.

Roxburgh (roks-bu-ru) n. John (d.1196) Canon of Glasgow, who witnessed several charters from the 1160s. It is possible he was the Master John associated with either Lessuden or Longnewton. He was appointed Treasurer of Glasgow Diocese in 1195/6, but only held the appointment for a few months before dying at Melrose Abbey. William (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He farmed on one of the farms of the Knowesouth estate. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Ruecastle, recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls for 1794 and 1797. He was recorded as owner of 8 farm horses and 1 saddle horse in 1797. William (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Stitchelhill. He is listed as male head of household there 1835-41. He emigrated to America in 1842.

Roxburghshire County Council

Roxburgh Castle (roks-bu-ru-kaw-sul) n. also called Marchmont, built above the confluence of the Teviot and the Tweed. It passed back and fourth between Scotland and England several times, with the English holding it about as often as the Scots. Alexander II was married in the Castle in 1239. A large number of Scottish charters and other records were removed there on the orders of Edward I in 1292, before subsequently disappearing forever. Robert the Bruce’s sister Mary was hung there in a cage from 1306–10 on orders of Edward I. Sir James Douglas captured it in 1313, but the English held it from 1334 until 1460. A bridge connecting the area with Kelso was destroyed in 1398 and its successor destroyed by Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1411. During the 1460 siege James II died when one of his cannons exploded; a yew tree in the grounds of Floors Castle marks the spot. Queen Mary of Gueldres dismantled it, but it was rebuilt by the English in 1547. When the Scots regained it for the last time they razed it themselves, around 1550 – ‘Roxburgh! how fallen, since first in Gothic pride Thy frowning battlements the war defied, Call’d the bold chief to grace thy blazon’d halls, And bade the rivers gird thy solid walls!’ [JL].

Roxburghie Drive (roks-bu-ru-driv) n. one of the bigger roads through Stiches, being his continuation of Hazelwood Road. It was built in 1976 and named after the 9th Duke of Roxburghe, George Victor Robert John Innes-Ker, who was Convenor of Roxburgh District Council (often erroneously written ‘Roxburgh’) the Roxburgh Roondie (thu-roks-bu-ru-roon-dee) n. local brie-like cheese made at Standhill farm by Jim and Anne Shanks from 2007.

Roxburghshire (roks-bu-ru-shir, roks-bu-ru-shir) n. former county which included Hawick, Jedburgh and Kelso. It was the southernmost county of Scotland and was bounded by Berwickshire, Dumfriesshire, Selkirkshire and the English Border. It contained what was formerly Teviotdale and part of Liddesdale and was divided into over 30 parishes. Jedburgh was the county town, although there was a proposal around 1891 to change this to Hawick. The area was 669 square miles, although changes to the boundaries means this number does not apply to all times. The county is full of archaeological remains, including Bronze Age burial cairns, British forts, Roman camps and roads, vestiges of settlements and peel towers. The county is named after the formerly important town and Castle of Roxburgh.

Roxburghshire Gentlemen and Yeomanry Cavalry (roks-bu-ru-shir-jen’-ul-mi-lish-a) n. volunteer regiments of the early 19th century, formed in 1809 after the Light Company of the Roxburgh Volunteers had been disbanded. The 1st Regiment was headquartered at Jedburgh, and contained many local men, while the 2nd Regiment was based at Kelso. The 1st Regiment had Gilbert Elliot (later Earl of Minto) as Lieut.-Col., with James Elliot (younger of Wolfelee) as Major and the first Captain was Walter Scott of Wauchope. They were disbanded in 1828 (note that several different names were used for these units).

Roxburghshire Nursin Association (roks-bu-ru-shir-nur-sin-aw-sō-see-ā-shin) n. nursing association formed in 1900 to provide for nursing needs in local country areas. Fees were paid to join the association and only members could benefit from its services. It operated until the National Health Service was set up in 1948.

the Roxburghshire Rifle Volunteers (thu-roks-bu-ru-shir-ri-fūl-vo-lun-teerz) n. formal name for the Border Rifles, a volunteer outfit founded in 1861.

the Roxburghshire Word-Book (thu-roks-bu-ru-shir-wurd-book) n. the most useful resource for words that are peculiar to various parts of the county, written by George Watson and published in 1923. Words that are local to the Hawick area are denoted ‘[W]’, for Western Roxburghshire. As well as the word list itself, the introductory sections compile a huge amount of information about pronunciation and other facets of Roxburghshire vernacular. The book was compiled by Watson from the help of many communicants (most of whose names are unknown) from various parts of Roxburghshire, this following articles and lists of words that he published in the local press to encourage people to help him. Earlier books of poetry are much used to provide examples, and phrases from Elliot Cowan Smith are often included (sometimes without attribution). Watson was from Jedburgh and worked for the Oxford University dictionary project, effectively following in the footsteps of James Murray.

Roxburghshire Yeomanry (roks-bu-ru-shir-yō-nun-ree) n. another name for the Roxburghshire Gentlemen and Yeomanry Cavalry.

Roxbury (roks-bu-re-ee) n. suburb of Boston, Massachusetts, which was apparently named for the many rocks there (although a connection with our county is not impossible). The town of West Roxbury (annexed to Boston in 1874) was the site of the Boston area Common Ridings of the late 19th and early 20th centuries. This was organised by Hawick exiles under the auspices of the Scottish Border Club. It consisted of sports (races, baseball throwing etc.) and other events on Common Riding Saturday, with the location...
Roxmount

Caledonian Grove, West Roxbury. There is a photograph of the 1886 celebration. Ex-Cornet Walter Irvine attended in 1888. There are American Cornets recorded from 1877 until at least 1926.

Roxmount (roks-nown’) n. former farm a mile or so south-east of Hawick (marked on Stobie’s 1770 map close to the modern farm of Kaimend).

the Royal (thu-roi-ul) n. pub at 22 Howegate in the latter 19th and early 20th centuries. It was also known as ‘the Royal Bar’. The proprietor for many years was John Barclay.

the Royal Bank (thu-roi-ul-bawngk) n. the Royal Bank of Scotland erected an impressive building at 12 High Street in 1857/8, designed by Peddie & Kinmear, constructed by James Harkness, with ornamental work by Alex Pirnie. On the top corners of the building can be seen the monogram ‘P K’ and the year ‘1857’. It is a Category B listed building. The location had previously contained 2 adjacent hostelries, the Ornance Arms and the Harrow Inn. The first agent was James Carmichael, solicitor, and later Haddon & Turnbull took over. The building was turned into the Registry Office and now is education service offices. Meanwhile the Royal Bank had another office at 4 Tower Knowe. After it merged with the Commercial group in 1969 it obtained its current branch at 31 High Street (built as the National Bank about 1870). It stretches over 31, 33 and 35 High Street, and is a grade C listed building.

royal burgh (roi-ul-bu-ru) n. a town granted its charter by the Crown rather than the local landowner. There were 65 royal burghs in Scotland. Nearby ones include Jedburgh, Selkirk, Roxburgh and Peebles.

the Royal George (thu-roi-ul-jorj) n. former popular name for the ‘Whusky Hooses Mill’ which stood opposite St. Cuthbert’s Church, also known as ‘the George’. It was presumably named after the famous Royal Navy vessel of the same name, which was the largest warship in the world when it was launched in 1756. The ship fought in the Seven Years War and became famous when it sank in 1782 during routine maintenance with the loss of more than 800 lives.

Royal Highlanders (roi-ul-hI-lin-durz) n. three officers of the 42nd Royal Highland Regiment, Lt.-Col. William Dickson, Capt. Archibald Campbell and Capt. McQuarrie, were made Honorary Burgesses in 1802. This was when they passed through Hawick on their way back from Egypt after having ‘immortalised themselves in defeating the French Invincibles’.

the Royal Mail (thu-roi-ul-mal) n. name of a stagecoach operating out of Hawick in the early 19th century. In 1837 it was listed leaving for Edinburgh from the Tower Inn every day at 9.30 a.m., going via Selkirk and Galashiels, and leaving for London at 12.30 p.m., via Langholm and Carlisle. The coach operating at the same time was ‘the Standard’.

Royal Nurseries see Buccleuch Nurseries the Royal Oak (thu-roi-ul-ok) n. former hostel near the top of the Round Close in the 19th century, also known for a while as the Blue Bell Inn. It can be seen in a sketch by T.H. Laidlaw. James Elliot, proprietor, was considered to have provided the finest spread of the local innkeepers at the Reform Bill open air dinner of 1832. Elliot was listed as vintner on the Round Close in Pigot’s 1837 directory. It could have been where Mary Hunter was publican on the Round Close in 1841. Also the name of a separate local pub on Wilton Path at roughly the same time, and another small licensed house on the north side of Buccleuch Street in the mid-19th century (the name is shared with hundreds of other pubs in Britain and refers to the tree in which Charles II hid from Cromwell’s army).

rubber (ru-bur) n., arch. a robber – ‘Ye’re that damned Indian rubber Warren Hastings; get off the ground at yince’ [RM].

rubbers (ru-burz) n., arch. scrapie, a disease of sheep, marked by constant scratching (cf. scratchie).

rubbin-oot-indie (ru-bin-oo’-in-dee) n., arch. an India-rubber, eraser.

Ruberslaw (roo-burz-law) n. hill about 4 miles due east of Hawick, lying on the boundary of Cavers and Hobkirk parishes. It reaches a height of 424 m (1392 ft), and is the most prominent landmark in Roxburghshire. It was long considered to be an extinct volcano, but the reality is that the geology is much more complex (although the rocks are predominantly basaltic, the shape probably came from erosion). It is topped by an Iron Age fort, and was also used as a Roman signal station. The fortifications on the hill-top were first described by A.O. Curle in 1905. There was an extensive stone citadel on top (about 72 m by 32 m), defended by a wall, with an entrance on the north-east side. There is also an annex on the south side, including the plateau below the summit. These were probably rebuilt from the stones of the Roman signal station, as a Dark Age ‘nuclear’ fortification.

with Roman stone. A less well-defined outer wall is probably part of an earlier Iron Age structure. A cairn on the east side was removed in the late 19th century. The summit also has a modern triangulation pilar. A horde of bronze vessels was unearthed there in 1863 (including a jug handle, decorated with grotesque figures of 2 dwarfs and a bird) and are in the Museum, as well as 2 stones with diamond-shaped carvings. Several flints found there are in the Hawick Museum. Other flints and an arrowhead are in the National Museum of Antiquities of Scotland, as well as an unfinished stone axe. The hill was used for Covenanters' meetings of the mid-17th century, at Peden's Pulpit (a rocky cleft at the south-west side of the summit) and elsewhere on its slopes. In a wood near the head of the Haw Burn is a ‘burnt mound’. Pine trees on the north side are said to be remnants of the ancient Caledonian forest. Part of the slopes were used as Common land in Denholm and in the 18th century each feuar's allotment was marked out with stones – ‘Oft have I wandered in my vernal years Where Rubserlaw his misty summit rears’ [JL], ‘Dark Ruberslaw, – that lifts his head sublime, Rugged and hoary with the wrecks of time! On his broad misty front the giant wears The horrid furrows of ten thousand years’ [JL], ‘Did you see his broad misty front the giant wears The horrid furrows of ten thousand years’ [JL], ‘Did you see the shadow’s speeding On the slopes of Ruberslaw?’ [RSC], ‘…Waiting helpless the beak and claw Of the carrion birds of Ruberslaw!’ [WHO], ‘…where Ruberslaw's summit stands out and looks doon on the wild lovely Border and Denholm's wee toon’ [GM], ‘Rest on the heights an’ look ayont Where Ruberslaw shows green, An’ a’ the countryside displayed Aroon’ the Border Queen' [WFC], ‘When Rubers Law has on his cap, The Dunion on her hood, A’ the auld wives on Teviotside Are sure ti hae a flood’ [T], ‘If you can see Ruberslaw it’s going to rain and if you can’t see Ruberslaw it’s already raining’ [IWL] (sometimes written ‘Rubers Law’; it is marked ‘Rubburlaw hill’ on Pont’s manuscript map of the 1590s, and on a manuscript map of Gordon in c.1650, but is absent from Blaeu’s 1654 map; the origin of the name is unknown; it should not be confused with ‘Rubislaw’ near Aberdeen).

Ruberslaw Drive (roo-burz-law-driv) n. street in Denholm, running parallel to the Loaning and connected with Ruberslaw Road.

the Ruberslaw Hoard (thu-roo-burz-law-hörd) n. hoard of bronze objects discovered on the eastern slopes of Ruberslaw in 1863. The objects were donated to Hawick Museum by Sir Walter Elliot of Wolvelee, later being studied by staff at the National Museums of Scotland and then being displayed at the Trimontium Trust’s Museum. The pieces are: 2 ‘paterae’ (sauce-pans), one decorated with a ‘thyrsus’ (staff surmounted by vegetation); a patera base; parts of a jug, including an elaborate handle; a shallow dish; a bowl about 1-foot in diameter; and fragments of 2 scabbard mounts. They are believed to date from the 2nd century.

Ruberslaw Hoose (roo-burz-law-hoos) n. house in Crieff near Perth. It was built in the late 18th century, being a branch of the Commercial Bank from 1811, and then was a home of Sir William Elliott of Stobs from at least 1878, when his first wife died there. It is unclear who named the house (but the connection to the Eliotts of Stobs seems unlikely to be a coincidence).

Ruberslaw Pairish (roo-burz-law-pa-reesh) n. combined parish consisting of Denholm, Minto and Bedrule, set up in 2003, and extended to include Hobkirk and Southdean in 2004.

Ruberslaw Road (roo-burz-law-röd) n. part of Burnfoot, named after the prominent hill. It was built in 1951, with additional houses added in 1957.

Ruberslaw Road (roo-burz-law-röd) n. street in the south-eastern part of Denholm, built on the site of a former livestock market. The private housing development there dates from the 1970s.

rubiator (roo-bee-ä-tur) n., arch. a bully, a violent, swearing person – ‘He comes out on me roaring like a rubiator’ [JoJ], ‘Hei cam in leike a roobeater (a violent bully), an cowpeet the taibl yownt owre’ [ECS] (there are spelling variants).

Rubstic (rub-stik) n. race-horse, trained locally by John Leadbetter. It won the Grand National in 1979, being the first Scottish horse to do so.

ruck (ruk) n., arch. a rick, stack of hay – ‘O! as we ran about the rucks o’ hay! I himna seen since syne a blyther day’ [CPM], ‘Lang Johne turn-bull in quietrig – III oxin II ky a hors a ruk of corne’ [CoJ1503].

the Rude Day (thu-rood-dä) n. mediæval festival of the Exultation of the Cross, celebrated on 14th September (3rd May in England), supposedly the date of the discovery of the ‘true cross’. It was important locally before the Reformation and is recorded in the mid-16th century as a day sometimes chosen for signing documents etc. It was the occasion of a Fair in Jedburgh, the day in 1601 being marked by a skirmish, when a group of about 30 Turnbuls from the Minto area came to town seeking Thomas Ker (brother of the Probvost). At the end of the fight Ker and his servant were dead, along with 2 of the Turnbells, and several men were left seriously wounded (still referred to in the 1622 Circuit Court records; also spelled ‘Rood’).

Rudd (rud) n. Charles Clifford from Yorkshire, he was Superintendent of the Hawick Burgh Police in 1851. He was living at about 3 Tower Knowe. He was also listed as Superintendent in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Elizabeth, and they had a son Thomas Frederick. By 1861 he was a widower working as Police Constable in Jedburgh.

rue see take the rue rue-claw (roo-klaw) n., arch. a mild sore made worser by scratching.

Ruecastle (roo-, row-kaw-sul) n. hamlet a mile or so north-east of the Dunion, formerly in the Barony of Bedrule. A piece of land there was granted by Lady Bethoc and her husband Rudolph to the monks of Jedburgh when that abbey was founded (as confirmed in several later charters). There is a suggestion that an area of elevated land to the east of the farm may have been the site of a tower. There is also a tradition that the local courts of justice were held there until moved to Jedburgh. William ‘de Rucastel’ is recorded in the Ragman Rolls of 1296. The Fletcher family held part of the lands from before 1464 until they sold them to Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst in 1558/9. In 1491 there was a ‘procuratory of resignation’ by Thomas Dickson of Ormiston, to resign (presumably a different part of) these lands into the hands of the Abbot of Jedburgh; they appear to have been gained by John Rutherford of Hundalee. John Turnbull was recorded there in 1493. John Turnbull is recorded there in 1502. The village there was burned by an English party led by Philip Dacre in 1513, including 2 towers, burned by Sir Thomas Wharton’s men in 1543 and burned again by Hertford’s men in 1545. In 1569 it was among the lands purchased by Adam French from the Abbot of Jedburgh. The lands were recorded as part of the Lordship of Jedburgh in 1587. Thomas Turnb was there in 1619. It was among lands granted to Thomas Ker of Cavers-Carre in 1623. Lands there were held by Lord Jedburgh in 1629. Thomas Hamilton (1st Earl of Haddington) owned lands there, which he feued in 1632. In 1643 the lands there were valued at a total of £459, owned by Thomas Rutherford, Andre Turnbull, Laird Storie, Alexander Miller, George Fletcher and the Earl of Traquair. In 1665 Thomas, son of John Rutherford was served heir to his father’s 7-pound-10-shilling lands there, with ‘lie Maynes de Harden et forresta de Rowcastle’ as well as 3 husbandlands in the town of Ruecastle. In 1788 the main part was owned by John Rutherford of Knowesouth and valued at £396 13s 10d (with teinds of £70 6s), part owned by Thomas Rutherford valued at £41 3s 10d, a small part owned by Thomas Ogilvie of Chesters (that had been acquired by Bennet of Chesters) valued at £37 2s 4d and a another part owned by Thomas Storie valued at £18. William Roxburgh was there 1794– 97 and William Young was also farmer there in 1797. The farm was part of the estate of Knowe-south, until sold by the heirs of Capt. Rutherford to George Pott of Dod. Part of the lands were acquired by Bennet of Chesaters before 1811 and combined with his estate, with the rest being owned by Rutherford of Knowesouth; together the parts were valued at about £510. Gideon Pott acquired further parts from William Oliver Rutherford and from Thomas Storie. The area may be the origin of the similar surname. A settle was found a few hundred yards to the south, containing an urn that was said in 1949 to be preserved in Monteviot House. A stone axe found earby is in the National Museum of Antiquities.
In a field about 500 m to the north are the possible remains of a settlement. A former resident, perhaps fictional, is mentioned in the ballad ‘The Grey Peel’ (as recited by ‘Matthew Gotterson’) – ‘An’ gallopin’ up comes Ruecastle Hew, On his Bewcastle naig o’ the guid steel grey. An’ Fer-nihirst grim, but ever heart true, Whase ready Kerr hand reds mony a fray’ [T] (the name probably derives from Old English ‘ruh’ and Anglo-Saxon ‘ceaster’, meaning ‘rough fort’, suggesting an early fortification of some sort there; it is written ‘Reucastel’, ‘Reucaestel’, ‘Reucastle’, ‘Row-‘Rowcstel’, ‘Rowcstel’, ‘Rowcstel’, and variants; it is first recorded as ‘Rughecstestre’ in about 1140 and is ‘Rucastle’ in the 13th century; it is ‘Roucastel’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and the modern spelling appears on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Ruecastle (roo-, row-kaw-sul) n. [Adam](17th C.) recorded as ‘merchant of Hawick’ when he was entered as a Burgess and Guild brother of Edinburgh in 1692. He may be related to the Adam who was born to William and Marion Scott in Hawick in 1650 and may be the Adam who was father in Hawick of an unnamed child in 1690 and James in 1693. He was listed as a merchant among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He is probably the Adam who is listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the wa- ter’ in 1694. In 1688 he witnessed a baptism for merchant John Scott. Elizabeth nee Kelly (18th C.) wife of Bailie Walter, whom she married in the early 1750s. She was apparently the first Hawick citizen to travel out to America and return safely! She was at that time 72 years old and visiting her son John, who was a Captain in the Revolutionary Army. Francis (18th C.) probably closely related to Robert. He could have been the Francis born to William and Janet Richardson in Hawick in 1678. He is probably the Francis who (along with Robert) witnessed baptisms for merchant David Young in 1705, for merchant William Dickson in 1718 and for candlemaker John Scott in 1720. In 1723 he was entered as a new elder of Hawick Kirk and was a candidate for Session Treasurer in 1725. He witnessed baptisms in 1725 for workman William Henderson, in 1726 for flesher Robert Wilson and probably (the record is hard to read) along with Robert, for wigmaker Francis Miles, in 1727 for carrier George Porteous, and in 1730 for ‘junior surgeon’ Walter Scott. He is also mentioned in reference to the building of the Teviot Bridge in 1738. He may be the Francis, saddler in Hawick, who witnessed the notorial instrument of 1734 in which the Town complained about encroachment on the Common by tenants of Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. He witnessed a further baptism for gardener William Paterson in 1743, in which he was also listed as a saddler. He is recorded as a merchant in 1745 when he witnessed a baptism for weaver William Roger, along with merchant John. He is probably also the saddler Francis who witnessed a baptism for Gideon in 1745; Gideon thus seems likely to have been closely related. In 1747 he was recorded as a saddler who (along with carrier John) witnessed a baptism for wright Henry Haliburton. He may have been the Francis who died around 1750 and gave his estate to Francis, young son of Bailie Gideon (perhaps therefore his brother). George (17th C.) Councillor who signed the 1640 ‘Act of Bailies and Council’. He may be the George who was married to Isobel ’Merlay’ and had a son Hector in Hawick in 1636. George (17th C.) married to Janet Gilbertson, they had daughter Janet in Hawick in 1653. He may be the George who witnessed a baptism in 1648. Bailie Gideon (b.1713) son of Robert, he was a Magistrate in Hawick roughly in the 1730s and in 1740. He may have been the Gideon who was Cornet in 1730. He was probably the (ex-)Bailie Ruecastle involved with overseeing work to rebuild the Bailies’ seat in St. Mary’s in 1734 and building a new Parish School in 1739. He was ‘present Bailie’ in 1741 and in 1743 when he witnessed baptisms for writer James Weir and Burgh Officer Francis Turnbull, and also ‘late Bailie’ in 1745 when he witnessed another baptism for James Weir, and also when his own child’s baptism was recorded. He appears to have died shortly before 1751, when the Hawick Session agreed to act as trustees for his minor son Francis, who had been left the estate of another Francis (perhaps his brother). He married Jean Watson, who may be the daughter of John Watson (Clerk to the Regality) baptised in 1710. Their children included: Robert (b.1731); John (b.1733); Francis (b.1734); Thomas (b.1735); John (again, b.1738); Anne (b.1740); Francis (again, b.1741); Anne (again, b.1743); Jean (b.1745); and Gideon (b.1747). The witnesses in 1741 were writer Thomas Watson (surely related to his wife) and merchant Charles Tudhope, in 1743 were wright Walter Scott and writer James Weir, and in 1745 were former Bailie John Scott and saddler Francis (who was surely closely related to him). He may be the ‘Bailie Gideon’ who hired the Hawick Parish mortcloth in 1758 (although he appears to have been deceased before then). Gideon (18th/19th C.) recorded in Hawick when he paid the Horse Tax in 1790–92. He also paid the dog tax in Hawick in 1797. He contributed £1 to the subscription to support the war with France around 1799. He is probably the son of Gideon, born in 1747. Hector (17th C.) married to Isobel Minto, their daughter Grizel was born in 1645. Hector (17th C.) Hawick resident. He married Marion Brown and their children included Bessie, Hector, and probably Andrew in the period 1687–92. He may have been son or grandson of George. He may be the ‘Hector Ruecastell younger’ listed on the west-side of Hawick on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. John (16th C.) recorded in Hawick’s 1537 charter as ’Rowcastell’. He owned a ‘particate’ of land on the north side of the High Street. He may have been the ancestor of the later Ruecastles of the Town. John (17th C.) one of a list of 16 ‘idle and masterless men’ suggested by the Hawick Bailie to the Privy Council in 1627 as suitable for sending to the wars in Germany. While in Edinburgh Tolbooth he is among 7 of them who complained that they were not in fact the sorts of men who should be pressed into military service, but nevertheless were transported to the

Ruecastle is the same as Bailie John. Edward in 1674. It is not impossible that he the same John became a cooper's apprentice in and Janet Tweedie, born in Hawick. Probably the same John was involved in a scuffle with Robert Jolly in 1716 in the Wester Loft of St. Mary's during the Sunday service, when 'Jollie did thrust him hard by his feet upon his belly'. Bailie John (17th/18th C.) Chief Magistrate of Hawick in the early 1700s, recorded as such during the swearing of the oath of allegiance to King George by the Council and Burgesses in 1714. It is unclear how he is related to the other Ruecastles (but based on his marriage record he was 'nephew to Walter Ruecastle att ye Kirkstyle of Hawick'). He is probably the merchant John who in 1719 married Bessie (or Betsy), daughter of Walter Paterson of Burnflat, and had children: Margaret (b.1721), who probably married Walter Henderson; Bessie (b.1727); Walter (b.1729), baker and magistrate; John (b.1731); Jean (b.1735); Isobel (b.1739); Bessie (again, b.1740); Beatrix (b.1742), who probably married clothier and dyer Thomas Turnbull; and Janet (b.1744). The witnesses in 1742 were Francis Gledstains and Robert Boyd (both 'present Bailies'). Given the birth years it seems likely he is also the John whose children recorded with Bessie Scott (perhaps an error, or indicating his wife had previously been married) were: Anna (b.1723); and Helen (b.1725), who may have married James Paterson, 'Ilka Thursdi'. The witnesses in 1725 were Walter (perhaps his uncle) and John Scott (possibly related to his wife). He is probably the merchant John who witnessed baptisms for workman Gilbert Oliver in 1741, for flesher George Deans, for merchant Robert Scott, for flesher Walter Sheen, for gardener Robert Balmuir and for flesher William Renwick in 1742, for carrier John Pott and for Schoolmaster Walter Turnbull in 1743, and for Alexander Bunyan and John Kedie in 1745. In 1744 he witnessed baptisms for carriers John Tudhope and James Paterson (who married Helen, probably his daughter), as well as for weaver John Gray and for shoemaker Thomas Scott. In 1745 he also witnessed a baptism for weaver William Roger, along with fellow merchant Francis. He could be the carrier who witnessed a baptism for William Leithead in 1741 and another for wright Henry Haliburton in 1747. John (18th C.) elder of Hawick Session, recorded in 1751. He was in care of a horse belonging to the Session, with instructions to sell it, and also appointed as a trustee for the affairs of the deceased Bailie Francis Ruecastle. Since he was not referred to as a late Bailie, then he may not have been the same as the earlier Bailie John. He could be the John who witnessed a baptism for baker Walter in 1758. John (1755/6–1808) son of Walter. He went to America, serving in the U.S. Army during the American War of Independence, becoming a Captain. He married Phoebe Thomas of Elizabeth Town, New Jersey. When his mother went out to visit him she was apparently the first Teri to take a trip out to America and return safely. Mrs. ?? (17th/18th C.) Hawick innkeeper of the early 1700s. She is recorded several times in the Parish Records in connection with payment for drinks associated with Kirk Session events, such as funerals and the ‘roup’ of seats in the gallery. She may have been related to the John who was Bailie. Robert (17th C.) described as ‘viatore’, i.e. ‘traveller’ when he was witness to a 1622 sasine for land in Hawick owned by Allan Deans. Robert (17th C.) listed in 1627 as one of 9 men charged with making a valuation of the lands in the Parish of Hawick. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (17th C.) married to Margaret Scott and had son James in Hawick in 1636. Robert (17th C.) married to Janet Gledstains and had daughter Isobel in Hawick in 1646. Robert (17th C.) selected as one of 2 people in Hawick to collect the ‘stent’ on the west side of the water in 1649. Probably the same Robert was ordered in 1655 to pay Walter Stavert money borrowed when he when he went from Glasgow to Edinburgh and for a leg of mutton. He is described as a traveller in 1655 when someone was ordered to pay him for carrying wool to Edinburgh, ‘for horsing of him from Edinburgh to Hawick’ and ‘for ane dry killit fische’. Robert (17th C.) Hawick resident, married to Janet Scott. Their children included George (b.1648), Bessie, an unnamed child (b.1653) and Walter (b.1655), in the period 1648–55. Robert (17th C.) married to Janet ‘Twiddie’, they had son John in Hawick in 1657. Robert (17th C.) Hawick resident married to Isobel Scott. Their children included William (b.1654) and Robert (b.1656). The witnesses in 1654 were Thomas Scott and John Scott (perhaps related to his wife). Robert (17th C.) Hawick resident married to Margaret Wintrop. Their children included Robert (b.1670) and Margaret (b.1674). Robert (17th C.) married to Agnes Mow, their son William was born in Hawick in 1673. Robert (d.c.1688) tailor in Hawick. His will was recorded in the Commissariat of Peebles in 1688. He is probably the same as one of the contemporary Roberts. He could be the Robert recorded in 1673 on the list of men named in the trial for the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. Bailie Robert (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He served as Magistrate between about 1690 and 1710, certainly recorded in 1697, 1707 and again around 1709. He is probably the Robert who (along with Francis) witnessed a baptism for merchant David Young in 1705. He was Bailie in 1707 when along with the other Bailie, Robert Brown, he was fined by the Council for ‘the publicke undeniable and unaccomptable abuse ... att the ry-deing of the Commone’, with the pair ‘strikeing att others’ horses with their whips and staves’; the nature of the incident is not described, but it seems likely it was related to the near riots that happened at the previous year’s Common Riding over carrying the Flag. He witnessed baptisms for Thomas Gledstains, John Scott ‘Whitegates’ and tailor William Donald (along with Bailie Robert Brown) in 1707, for Walter Gledstains (junior of Hilliesland) in 1708, for Walter Gledstains, ‘Walter Alison’, for Henry Orrock and for merchant William Dickson in 1709, for shoemaker Walter Lethem in 1711, for Bailie James Burn in 1712 and for Bailie George Martin in 1714. He was ‘late bailie’ in 1713 when he witnessed a baptism for carrier David Minto. In 1710 he was stated to be one of the Councillors given a key to the Charter Chest. He was an ex-Bailie when the bond was granted by the Council (dated 1710, but recorded in the Town Book in 1711) to provide money for the Master of the new Grammar School. In 1715 he was given custody of ‘the charter little chest’, with 2 other ex-Bailies holding the keys. He witnessed a baptism for weaver Robert Turnbull in 1716. He was probably the Bailie Ruecastle charged in 1717 with collecting money from the area between the Cross to the bridge. And in 1718, when he was a Magistrate, there was a serious dispute with ex-Bailie Graham, who accused him (apparently at a Council meeting) of being a thief and worse; the exact nature of the argument is not recorded, but it was resolved after the Minister intervened. He witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Walter Lethem in 1721. Another dispute of 1722 led to him having all the elders publicly questioned about whether they had 'heard him speak opprobriously and disparagingly of Mr Robert Cunningham our minister'. He continued as Magistrate in the 1720s and was also Parish Treasurer in the 1720s. He may be the Robert who witnessed a baptism for David Johnston in 1731. He may have been the Robert, son of Robert and Margaret Wintrop, who was born in Hawick in 1670 (although there are other Roberts recorded being born in 1648 and 1656). He may be the Robert recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 among those ‘Payed but not listed in Hauick Toun’ and probably from the west side. It is possible that he was the Robert, who, along with Walter, leased part of the Kirklands of Hawick in 1692. He married Anna Elliot and their children included: Mary (b.1700); Anna (b.1704); Beatrix (b.1705); William (b.1709); and Gideon (b.1713). The witnesses in 1700 were Walter Graham and George Martin, in 1704 were Bailies Patrick Richardson and George Martin, in 1705 were Gideon Scott of Falnash and Bailie Walter Elliot (who may have been related to his wife) and in 1709 Bailies Walter Elliot, James Burn and Walter Graham. He may be the Robert whose daughter Jean married Robert Ogilvie in 1720. These other children baptised in Hawick Parish (with no mother’s name given) were probably also his: Anna (b.1702); Anna (again, b.1707); William (b.1709); and Mary (b.1711). He is probably the Robert who witnessed a baptism for John Moss in 1725. Simon (17th C.) married to Margaret Scott, their children included William (b.1635) and an unnamed son (b.1641). Walter (17th C.) recorded in 1693 when he was fined for insulting and assaulting the Bailie of Regality, William Scott. It seems that Scott was in the ‘houss’ (i.e. probably pub) of William Elliot, sorting out some financial business between him (Walter) and John Hardie, when he came in, calling the Bailie ‘ane fals judge’, and when there was an attempt to remove him he ‘instantly, insolentlie, and most violentlie fell upon the sd. baylyea, rugged and rave the hair of his head’. As well as being fined, he was ordered to go to the stocks. The financial dealings also involved his father, who was presumably alive at the time. He could be the same man as the carter. Walter (17th/18th C.) carter in Hawick, on the 1693/4 subscribers’ list for the new Kirk bell. He is probably the Walter listed on the west-side of Hawick on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He was recorded as a carrier of Hawick when he married Abigail...
Lamb in Edinburgh in 1694. He could be the Walter who was born to William and Janet Richardson in Hawick in 1674 (although there are other possibilities). He may be the Walter who witnessed a baptism for cook James Wright in 1712. In 1713 he was a ‘carier’ when he witnessed baptisms for ‘drummer’ Thomas Boyd (who was also gardener at the Flex) and for weaver John Bridges (who lived at the Easter Kirkstyle). In 1716 his ‘servitor’ John ‘Roucastle’ was one of the people who the weavers complained were using their assigned seats in St. Mary’s; this John could have been a close relative. He could be the Walter who witnessed a baptism for Richard Miles in 1705. It is possible that he was the Walter, who, along with Robert, leased part of the Kirklands of Hawick in 1692. He is probably the Walter ‘att ye Kirkstyle of Hawick’ whose nephew John married Bessie Paterson in 1719. Bailie Walter (1729–c.1795) son of John and Bessie Paterson. He was a baker of Hawick who was a Magistrate during the dispute over the Division of the Common, and served through the 1750s and 1760s. He witnessed a baptism for carrier Walter Henderson and Margaret Ruecastle (probably his sister) in 1757, for clockmaker Walter Freeman in 1758 and for shoemaker Robert Oliver in 1759. In 1769 he was appointed to the commission to discuss the Common with representatives of the Duke of Buccleuch. He witnessed a baptism for Thomas Turnbull (probably his brother-in-law) in 1768. He was witness for baptisms for Archibald Paterson in 1775, 1777, 1780 and 1781 and for James Dickson in 1777. He married Elizabeth Kelly (or ‘Bettie Kellie’) and had 13 children, including: Robert (b.1756); James (b.1758); Walter (b.1759); Charles and William (twins, b.1761); Barbara (b.1762), who married Robert Howieson; Walter (again, b.1766); Elizabeth (b.1768); Christian, who married Andrew Haddon (from Selkirk); and John, who was a Captain during the American Revolutionary War. The baptismal entry for the twins reads ‘Gemini’. The 1758 baptism was witnessed by John (probably his father or brother) and James Paterson (perhaps his uncle), the 1759 and 1766 ones by John (again) and Walter Henderson. William (13th/14th C.) recorded as ‘de Rucastel’ when he swore allegiance to Edward I of England in the Ragman Rolls of 1296. His seal was oval, showing a figure with a branch in the right hand, a scroll in the left, and a kneeling figure on the left, with the name ‘S’WILL’I D’RUCASTELE’. He is also recorded receiving a pension from King Robert the Bruce in the early 1300s. Whether he had a direct connection with the Hawick family of 3 centuries later is unknown. William (17th C.) Councillor who signed the 1640 ‘Act of Bailies and Council’. He is also mentioned in a Magistrates court case of 1642 when Thomas Oliver is accused of using irreverent language towards him, particularly calling him ‘man-sworn’. He is probably the William who was elected to the Council in 1648. He is probably the William who was Bailie in the 1650s. He is probably the William who witnessed a baptism for Robert Scott in 1652. He is probably also the William recorded as one of the owners of West Mains in 1663. He could be the William who was married to Marion Scott and had several children in Hawick, including William (b.1639), Margaret (b.1643), Marion (b.1643), Walter (b.1646), Robert (b.1648), Adam (b.1650) and James (b.1652). The witnesses in 1648 were Robert Deans and James Scott (who may have been related to his wife). William (b.1650) born in Hawick, he married Janet (or ‘Janet’) Richardson in 1674. Their children included Marion (b.1669), Janet (b.1671), Walter (b.1674), Isobel (b.1675), William (b.1677) and Francis (b.1678). The witnesses in 1671 were Robert Dickson and William Purdom. William (b.1671) son of Walter and Elizabeth Kelly and twin of Charles. He is probably the William from Hawick recorded in a legal matter in Selkirk in 1791 (also spelled ‘Reucastell’, ‘Rewcastel’, ‘Rewcase- tle’, ‘Rowcastell’, ‘Roucastle’, ‘Rowcastell’, ‘Rowcastill’, ‘Rowcastle’, ‘Rucastle’, ‘Ruecastle’ and other variants in earlier documents).

Ruecastle Burn (roo-kaw-sul-burn) n. stream that rises on the western side of the Dunion and flows in a roughly north-western direction, passing the hamlet of Ruecastle to join the Knowesouth Burn and eventually the Teviot. At Worm Rig there are remains of ancient earthworks. Near Knowesouth is Ladies’ Well.

Ruecastle Moor (roo-kaw-sul-moor) n. former name for the moor near Ruecastle. It was ‘Rowcastell Mure’ in 1616 when Douglases from Friarshaw were accused of threatening Gilbert Watt to meet them in combat there. In about 1795 it is recorded that the minister of Bedrule had the right to cast 2 ‘darg of turf annually’ here.

the Ruecastles (fly-roo-kaw-sulz) n. family that was prominent in Hawick in the 17th and 18th centuries, but then entirely disappeared. The surname surely derives from the area of Ruecastle in Bedrule Parish. William ‘de Ruecastle’ is listed in the Ragman Rolls of 1296 and had a pension from Robert the Bruce. The eponymous lands were in other hands by the mid-15th century, but there are no instances of the name until ‘Rawcastill’ appears as a landowner on Hawick’s 1537 Charter. Then Thomas, Margaret, Agnes and Nicholas Ruecastle were married in Hexham in 1581, 1586, 1590 and 1596, respectively. The Hawick branch is recorded continuously from the 1630s, and furnished many Magistrates, Councillors and Elders. They were probably all from a single local male ancestor. It seems likely that the Northumbrian branch was also related, however some of the occurrences further afield may have an entirely different origin. There is a vast range of spellings in early records of the name. Modern variants include ‘Rowcastel’, ‘Rewcassell’ and ‘Reucastle’.

the Ruecastle Tenement (thu-roo-kaw-su-l-te-ne-min’ n., former popular name for the building at 7 High Street, before the British Linen Bank purchased the land in 1862 and rebuilt on it. It was built around 1690, and was a 3 storey construction. The Ruecastle family, which provided several Hawick Bailies, had lived there for 3 generations. It can be seen in an 1860 photograph, showing the shops of W. Douglas, saddler, J. Kemp, cooper and Wm. Rutherford on the ground floor. It was demolished in 1861.

ruelfi (roo-fi) adj., poet. rueful – ‘He sees that sae will be the case, An’ wii a lang-drawn ruefu’ face’ [RDW], ‘... an’ saufes sic as be o’ ane rewfu’ speerit’ [HSR], ‘... I wull be rewful for my sin’ [HSR] (there are spelling variants).

ruff (ruf) v., arch. to beat a drum, n., arch. the beat of a drum, the drum roll preceding a proclamation, v. to applaud, signify approval.

ruffie (ru-fee) n., arch. a knitted neck ruff – ‘That hyimm-made ruffie o yoors looks nane sae unheelint’ [ECS].

ruffin (ruf-in) n., arch. an encore, ovation – ‘Ruff um in! Gie (or gae) um a ruff-in!’ [ECS] (also written ‘ruff-in’).

the Rufus Trophy (thu-roo-lis-tru-fee) n. trophy competed for at the Common Riding race meeting. It was first raced for in 1934, replacing the Medway Cup, which had been won outright (after 3 victories) by ex-Cornet Ian Maclaggart on Rufus. The first winner was the same rider on his horse Rufus! It was won outright and replaced by the Horshemole Stakes in 1950.

Rufy (roo-fey) n. John (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as ‘Johannem ruffy’ at the Justice-aise in Jedburgh. Alexander Weens of that Ilk failed to produce him to answer to the murders of John and James Jackson. He was declared as a fugitive and his goods escheated to the King. Patrick (15th/16th C.) tenant in Rutherford. He was recorded as a fugitive in 1502, this being for the murder of John and James Jackson. William Douglas of Cavers dealt with his escheated goods. He was presumably related to Thomas who was also put to the horn for the same crime. Thomas (15th C.) member of the ‘retour of inquest’ in 1438 for Ker of Altonburn. He must have been a prominent Roxburghshire Laird of the time. However, it is unknown where exactly he was from or whether his surname was a variant of something else. Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded at the Justice-aise held in Jedburgh in 1502. Adam, brother of William Douglas of Cavers, failed to enter him into the court for his part in the murder of John and James Jackson. He was declared as a fugitive and his goods forfeited.

rug (rug) v., arch. to tug, pull roughly, plunder, spoil – ‘When fre temptation bolted snug, Wi’ commentators at his lug, Which he from shelves in thraves did rig...’ [JR], n., arch. a pull, tug, a bite of grass (of a farm animal), feed – ‘...unless when he brought them on to the several ground to give them a rugg for a part of the day’ [C&L1767] (note by E.C. Smith).

rug an rive (rug-in-riv) v., arch. to tug, tear, pull at with great force or persistence – ‘...fell upon the sd. baylyea, rugged and rave the hair of his head...’ [BR], ‘Swearin’ an’ tearin’, they rug an’ they rive, Wha to be foremost wi’ Meggie M’Givelry’ [JoHa], ‘...And boulevards o’ blankets ruggin’ an’ rivin’’ [DH].

rugby (rug-bee) n. a religion practised by many people in Hawick, with its main church at the foot of Mansfield Road. It was first introduced only in 1872, so for hundreds of years before that Teries must have had little to cheer about! The game was introduced locally when the Cricket Club decided to purchase a ball for the younger players to exercise with in the winter months. The club itself was formed in December 1873, with Robert Michie as Captain. The first organised game was against Langholm in 1874. George Wilson was a mainstay of the early committee, which was re-organised in 1885. At that time ‘Hawick’ (playing at the Volunteer) and ‘Hawick and Wilton’ (playing at the cricket field) were formed separately. They played matches against each other and the St. Cuthbert’s team for a few years, but by 1892 only ‘Hawick Football Club’ survived. Although the official game started only in the late 19th century, the local tradition of ‘Baa’ games goes back...

probably several centuries, and there is a description of a game (‘the pledges’) played by youths in the 18th century, which bears some striking similarities, although without the ball (often ‘the rugby’).

rugby-fitbaa (rug-bee-fi’-baw) n. name still used frequently, perhaps to distinguish it from other forms, before the ‘handling rules’ came in.

ruggit (ru-gi’, -gee’) pp., arch. rugged, pulled roughly – ‘…saying that he maliciously and unreverently racket and ruggit her from her said seat’ [Ash1639], ‘How the jockies in their fury Rave an’ ruggit’ [RH].

ruggy (ru-gi’) adj., arch. tangled, knotted, difficult to comb – ‘…wui a toozy, taaty heed that wad be richt an ruggy ti redd’ [ECS].

rubbish (ri-bees) n., arch. rubbish – ‘Throw that rubbish aback o the feier’ [ECS].

Ruickbie (rik-, rook-bee) n. James ‘Jamie’ or ‘Reubie’ (c.1757–1829) born in Innerleithen, he lived much of his life in and around Hawick. The identity of his parents is unknown, but either his father or uncle was an earlier James of whom a story is told of how he used to go to the Pirn plantation to preach loudly to himself, with the Laird there overhearing him one day and saying ‘Man, Jamie, … ye should mind that the Lord’s no deef’. He was a miller to trade, being the assistant at Nisbet Mill and then working at Newmill. After this he became a toll-keeper, at Haremoss (for a year), then Colterscleuch (for 12 years), then at Langholm and finally at the West-End toll-bar in Hawick. Entirely self-taught, he wrote a good deal of poetry, and also played the fiddle. He settled in Hawick as landlord of the Harrow Inn (at 12 High Street), where he enjoyed the friendship of other more distinguished writers. He belonged to the Burgher (East End) congregation in Hawick and started a Sunday School at Newmill. He was also listed as a volunteer in 1803. He would recount a tale of a girl from Innerleithen who was carried away by the fairies and later turned up in Plora Wood after prayers offered by 7 ministers; he claims to have known this girl personally when she was an old lady and he was a boy. He was one of the earliest local poets to publish his work, some of it in dialect. An 8-page pamphlet of his, ‘An Elegy on the death of Whisky’ was printed in Hawick by Robert Armstrong in 1801. His 3 published collections are ‘Way-side Cottager, consisting of pieces in prose and verse’ (1807, while he was still at Colterscleuch), ‘Poems, chiefly in the Scottish dialect’ (1815, while he was at the Harrow Inn), and ‘Poems’ (1826). This last volume contained tributes from some of his contemporaries. A few of his poems were quite popular locally, particularly ‘The Bottomless Pit, or the Lawyer Outwitted’ and ‘The Vulture and Raven or the Dinner Arrested’. He also wrote some lines about his contemporary, James Hogg (of ‘Teribus’). He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. His prose pieces include attacks on cruelty to animals and on the slave trade, complaints about drunkenness and a tribute to peace. He described himself as ‘diminutive, thin-visaged, sallow-complexioned’ and ‘clothed in a ragged great coat, a smuffy-breasted doublet, and a sea-green cap’ with a cheek bone ‘best adapted to whet razors on!’ He married Margaret Govenlock in 1787 and their daughter Margaret married Robert Govenlock of Mossapaul Hotel. The first Mrs. Ruickbie may have died in 1797. He probably later married Jean (or Jane) Wilson, who died in 1836 and their children included Alexander. There seems to be uncertainty about whether he died in 1828 or 1829. He is buried at St. Mary’s, although the grave appears to have been unmarked. A portrait of him exists, painted when he was about 50, and the Museum has at least one of his original manuscripts. Robert Murray wrote an account of his life in 1864 – ‘Farewell, then, Old Bard! I have learned by the fate That goodness and genius conjoined cannot save From neglect the possessor, but often await On him scorn and contempt, til shut out by the grave’[WiSp] (also written ‘Rucbie’ and variants; it is uncertain how his name would have been pronounced by his contemporaries, rū-bee also being possible).

ruif (rif) n. a roof – ‘what were ee daein up on yon ruif?’; ‘as long as ee bide under ma ruif, ee’ll dae is’; ‘on ti bowkin lums an platchin cloots an ruiffs an waas baith suitteet an ratcht on ti bowkin lums an platchin cloots an ruiff s an waas baith suitteet an ratcht … ’ [ECS].

ruiffs o’ reid?’ [WL], ‘… on ti bowkin lums an platchin cloots an ruiffs an waas baith suitteet an ratcht … ’ [ECS].

ruif-trei (rif-tri) n., arch. main beam of a roof, hence figuritively referring to a home.
ruind (ruind, ruind) v., arch. to cough hoarsely, make a disagreeable crunching noise, n. a hoarse cough – ‘A ruind o a cough’ [GW] (noted by E.C. Smith; also roound).

ruinds (ruindz, ruindz) n., pl., arch. strips of cloth, the selvage of a web of cloth – ‘Ruinds = short strips and odds and ends of cloth, often sewn into rugs and mats; properly the selvage of tweed cut down’ [ECS].

Ruins Moss (roo-inz-mos) n. former name for the area of ‘moss’ just to the south of the road to the Branxholme Lochs, about half-way between Chapelhill and Branxholme Easter Loch (marked on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map).

ruise (rizi) v., arch. to praise, extol – ‘I mind when he ca’ed me his Nannie, An’ ruis’d sae my bonnie black ee’ [JoHa], ‘Never huvvin ti ruize Jethart high’ [ECS], ‘Huz Teres ruize high oor bonnie toon’ [ECS], n., arch. conceit, high opinion – ‘Hei hes a guid ruise o his-sel’ [GW], ‘Monie a creestin bit wui a guid ruice o itsel . . .’ [ECS] (from Mediaeval English; also written ‘ruice’ and ‘ruize’; cf. raise).

ruit (rit; ruıt) n. a root – ‘A tripped ower a muckle trei ruit’, ‘if ee stand there ony langer, ee’ll take ruit’, ‘It’s no’ because the gowans braw are bonnie roound its ruit, For we hae seen them bloom as braw in mony a ither bit’ [JoHa], ‘I’d lived on nought but ruit an’ weed, Acorns an’ nuts an’ ither seed’ [WP], ‘I’ve lived in it a good while now, and I doot I’ve ta’en ruit!’ [DH], ‘. . . clearin’ the soil away, till ye can sei if the ruit hes the richt bend’ [DH], ‘A’thing is buddin’ flooer, ruit and hedgeraw . . .’ [WL], ‘. . . The rits theressel were a fit long So it didnae tell a lie’ [AY], ‘The amount o yirth stickin teh the ruit o the runt was coontee tae’ [BW1961], arch. the lowest classes, root of society – ‘A’in a rael Wast-ender, born i the verrih ruit’ [ECS] (also spelled ‘rit’).

Rule

Rule (rool) n. Adam (12th/13th C.) recorded as ‘Adam Reuel of Stawelle’ in 1225. He was brother and heir of Richard and resigned the lands of Balmerino in Fife in favour of Queen Ermen-garde (widow of William the Lion and mother of Alexander II). In the period 1211–33 he witnessed charters for St. Andrews Priory, where he is ‘ade de Rule clerics’. Adam ‘de Roule’ (13th/14th C.) signatory of the Ragman Rolls in 1296, along with ‘Allyn’, parson of the church of ‘Roule’ in Roxburghshire. Thomas of Rule was another signatory, so perhaps related. He gained lands at Mole (south of Morebattle) through marriage. About 1300 he granted some of these lands to the monks of Kelso Abbey, with witnesses including both Hugh and William ‘de Roule’. Probably the same Adam ‘de Rule’ was recorded (along with William) in a charter of Sprouton in 1320/1, and also witnessed a charter for lands in Lessden at about the same time. He married Johanna, daughter and heiress of Sir Henry of Halyburton, and widow of Ralph Wyschard. Adam (14th C.) granted his lands of Altonburn to John ‘of Coupland’ in about 1354, with his name given as ‘Adam de Roule’. 3 years later these lands passed to John Ker (who thus became the first Ker of Altonburn); witnesses to this deed included William of Gledstones and William ‘de Roule’. He may have been the same as Adam of Yetholm, son of Alan of Rule. Adam (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘Adam Roull in Abbottrou in the Circuit Court of 1622 when Walter Kerr of Linton was found guilty of stealing 6 sheep from his land at Cosserhill. Alan (13th C.) recorded in charters of the early 1200s, during the reign of Alexander II. He witnessed a charter for the muns of Coldstream and also for a gift of half of the lands of ‘Eschirche’ (Ashkirk) to the Bishopric of Glasgow. In the period 1195–1205 he witnessed a marriage contract for Philip de Valognes, with other Roxburghshire men also listed. He appears to have at this time been an English subject. He also witnessed an agreement between Henry of Ashkirk and Henry’s brother Alexander some time before 1249. Alan ‘of Roule’ (13th/14th C.) possibly the same man as the parson of the church at Rule who signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. In 1296 his wife Alicia was forced to give up her dower lands in ‘Dovanby’ in England; this was part of a long list of followers of John Bariol who were thus ordered by Edward I. In 1317 he granted his ‘manor of Roule with Neyfs and their sequals’ to Adam of Yetham. This may have been his son Adam of Rule, who granted the lands of Altonburn (near Yetholm) to the Kers. Alison (15th/16th C.) wife of Sir William Ogilvie of Strathearn, who was Lord High Treasurer of Scotland. In 1507 they were granted the Barony of Strathearn, it is said because she was the first to inform the King of the birth of a son by his wife Margaret Tudor. She was also named along with her husband in several other charters in the period 1508–13. She appears to have been a member of the court of the king and friend of the Queen. She died before her husband, and they had only one child, John. It is unclear how she was related to other Rules. Andrew of Primside (d.bef. 1439) owner of significant lands in the Regality of Sprouston and the Barony of Planderleith. It is unclear how he was related to other Rules, but it seems likely he was a descendant of Alan of Rule. He borrowed £100 from Andrew Ker of 'Altonburne' (Attonburn, near Yetholm, which had been acquired from the Rules in the previous century) in 1430 (or perhaps 1413) and let lands in Primside to him in the meantime, the money to be repaid at St. Mary’s in Hawick. In 1430 he sold ‘ten husbandlands of the Maynis’ in Primside to Andrew Ker, with the permission of his son George, this being confirmed in 1432 by Archibald, Earl of Douglas. He resigned his lands to George, his son and heir, in 1432. George had married Margaret, daughter of Andrew Ker of Altonburn and Cessford. However, George must have died before him, and he had no other surviving sons, because his 4 daughters (Marjorie, Isabella, Janet and Ellen) became co-heiresses of his lands of Hownham, Planderleith and Hyndhope, and each got one quarter of Primside. In 1439 Andrew Ker was granted ¼ of the land outright, from his daughters Marion, Janet and Ellen (with the consent of their husbands); it is unclear what became of the other ¼. In 1443 the Mains of Hownam, and lands of Planderleith and Hyndhope, which had belonged to the 4 co-heiresses, passed to Andrew Ker. Andrew ‘Dau’, (d.1918) 3rd son of Robert and Jane, grandson of John, Inspector of Poor, and nephew of Private Harry. He was born in Hawick and joined the 1/4th Battalion K.O.S.B. He was awarded the Military Medal, General Service Medal and Victory Medal and was killed in action near the end of WWI. His name is recorded on the Vis-en-Artois Memorial. Bernard (14th C.) recorded as ‘de Roule’ in 1364 when he resigned his lands of ‘Fouceroul’ (now ‘Folla Rule’) in Aberdeenshire. Brian (15th/16th C.) listed as ‘Fiftelar’, i.e. probably a fife player, at the Scottish court in 1506. His name is recorded as ‘Bryane Roule’. Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (17th C.) coter at Appletreehall according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Ellen (15th C.) daughter of Andrew. She was one of 4 co-heiresses of the lands of Hownham Mains, Planderleith and Hyndhope, along with Marjory, Isabella and Janet. In 1439 she is ‘Elena Roule of Prymside’ when she appointed her husband Thomas Young, along with Stephen Scot, Thomas Gledstains and others, as procurators when she resigned her part of Primside into the hands of the superior, Archibald, Earl of Douglas. The sisters’ lands of Primside were granted to Andrew Ker of Altonburn in 1439, and other charters transferring their lands to the Kers followed in 1443 and 1454/5. George (d.bef. 1440) son of Andrew of Primside. His father resigned his lands of Primside to him in 1432. He married Margaret, daughter of Andrew Ker of Altonburn (and Cessford). Ker gained the lands of Primside from Andrew Rule’s daughters in 1439/40, suggesting that both father and son were deceased by then. George (15th C.) recorded as witness to charter by Alexander, Duke of Albany in the period 1470–78. John ‘Roule’ was also a witness, suggesting they were related. He is probably the same man as George of Edmondsfield. Perhaps the same George was Bailie in that part for David Ranton of Billy (in Haddingtonshire) in 1478, with his brothers Patrick and John as witnesses. George ‘of Edmondsfield’ (15th C.) recorded in 1489–90 when he was involved in a court case with Archibald, Earl of Angus, relating to the lands of Bonkle. He was probably related to Andrew of Primside. He was appointed by the 5th Earl of Angus as Bailie of the Barony of Bonkle, but later ejected from this office. There was an inquest for his son George inheriting Edmondsfield in 1505. George (16th C.) minstrel appointed by the Burgh of Selkirk in 1537. Perhaps the same George witnessed a transaction in Selkirk in 1539. George (16th C.) witness to a document of the Riddells of that Ilk in 1551. George (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1798 he married Elizabeth Nichol, who was also from Hawick. Their children included: John (b.1799); Margaret (b.1801); Walter (b.1803), carter in Hawick; Thomas (b.1806); Elizabeth (b.1810), who married Alexander Pringle Scott; George (b.1815); Jane (b.1818); and Isabel (b.1821). George (b.1815) son of George and Elizabeth Nichol. He was partner in Rule & Leyden, dyers of Teviot Road. The business later amalgamated with British Cotton & Wool Dyers, Ltd. He was a dyer journeyman on the Crescent in 1841. He married Margaret Pringle in 1837 and their children included: George (b.1837); Margaret (b.1838); John (b.1841); Elizabeth (1843–1913); buried in Wellogate cemetery; Jane (b.1845); Frederick (b.1849); Adam (b.1851); Helen (b.1853); and Isabel (b.1855). Their daughter Elizabeth died in 1913 aged 70 and is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. He is probably the son of George and Elizabeth Nichol born in Hawick in 1815. Harry (1875/6–1917) son of John, Inspector of Poor in Hawick.
He served with the Army Service Corps, HQ 52nd Lowland Division. He married Elizabeth Linton, and their children were John, Jim and Janet. He died at sea when the S.S. Ivernia was torpedoed and sunk off the coast of Greece. His name is recorded on the Mikra Memorial. Henry (12th/13th C.) recorded as ‘de Reuel’ in the period 1188 when he was witness to several benefactions of William the Lion to the monastery of Arbroath. He was granted the lands of ‘Cultrach’, which included Balmerino, in Fife. He was present at a court in Kinghorn in 1204. He must have been directly related to Richard (possibly his son) who is also recorded as witness in a similar period. He may have married Margaret, daughter of Orm of Abernethy. Hugh (13th C.) recorded as ‘Hugo Rouel’ in 1260 when he was listed as a master of the hospital of St. John of Jerusalem. Hugh (13th/14th C.) recorded as ‘Hugonis de Roule’ in 1320/1 when his seal was attached to a charter of Sprouston. Adam and William are also mentioned in the charter, and so they were surely all related. Humphrey (16th C.) recorded as ‘Umphra Rewll’ in a long remission for any past crimes for men under the superiority of Lord Maxwell. Given the others with whom he is listed, he probably lived near Langholm. Isabella (15th C.) daughter of Andrew. She was one of 4 co-heiresses of the lands of Hownam Mains, Panderleith and Hyndhope, along with Marjory, Janet and Ellen. They resigned their lands to the superiors, and they were then granted to Andrew Ker of Altonburn in 1443 and 1454/5. She was not named as a co-heiress in 1439, suggesting she was deceased by 1443 and 1454/5. She was not named as a co-heiress in 1439, suggesting she was deceased by 1443 and 1454/5. She was not named as a co-heiress in 1439, suggesting she was deceased by 1443 and 1454/5. Her name is given as ‘Jonet of Roule’. John (14th C.) recorded as witness to a ‘quitclaim by Robert de Colluayll’ to Roger of Alton, regarding revenue of lands for Kelso Abbey, in 1328. His name appears as ‘John de Roule’. He could be the John whose son William was recorded in 1369. John (15th C.) recorded as a priest in the King’s household in 1468. He was also recorded as a Prebyter in the Exchequer Rolls of 1468. Probably the same John (along with George) was witness to charters by Alexander, Duke of Albany in the period 1470–78, and was Steward of Alexander, Duke of Albany in 1479. He may be the same ‘John Laird of Rule’ listed among a set of Scottish ecclesiastics appointed as ambassadors for appeasing the truce on the Border. And in 1476 there is a summons for ‘John of Roule’ and others for stealing horses from Sir John of Swinton; there is a confirmation of this in 1477. He may also be the ‘John Roule’ who witnessed a document relating to Home of Crailing in 1479. John (16th C.) witness in 1523/4 to a charter of his sister Margaret for lands in Linlithgowshire. Another witness was James Ramsay, Prebendary of Corstorphine. This establishes a connection with Corstorphine, where the poet ‘Gentill Roull of Corstorphine’ had his praises sung by William Dunbar a generation earlier. Perhaps the same John was witness to a document of Kirkintilloch Church in 1523. Sir John (16th C.) Prior of Pittenweem before 1526. He was an ally of Cardinal Beaton. He had at least 4 sons, John, James, William and Ninian. John (16th C.) tenant of Newtown in Roxburghire, recorded in 1531. John (16th C.) signatory of the band of Dumfries in 1570. John (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish, when it contained Hassendean. He married Elspeth Nichol and their children included: Agnes (b.1671), an unnamed son (b.1671) and Stephen (b.1675), all baptised in Hawick Parish; and Bessie (b.1684) and John (b.1686), baptised in Robertson Parish. The witnesses in 1686 were James Turnbull and James Veitch. John (17th C.) listed as resident at Todshaw in Wilton Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the John who was shepherd at Mervinslaw in 1709. Alexander, son of a shepherd at Mervinslaw (with the father’s name blank) was baptised in Wilton Parish in 1706. John (17th C.) listed at Chesters among the poor of Southdean Parish in the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Earlside in 1742 when his daughter Janet was baptised. His children included: John (b.1731); James (b.1739); and Janet (b.1742). John (18th C.) wright in Nether Bonchester. His son John was baptised in 1788. John (19th C.) Inspector of Poor, Collector of Poor Rates and Clerk to the Burial Ground for Hawick Parish towards the end of the 1800s. He wrote the poem ‘Song by a Callant Abroad’. He was also President of the Hawick Co-op in 1868, and probably wrote the history published in 1889. It seems likely that the same John Rule was also editor and part owner of the Hawick Express in the late 19th century and who was recorded as ‘Editor’ at 72 High Street in 1875. His children included Harry (killed at sea in 1917) and Robert. Margaret (b.1801/2) grocer on the Backdamgate. In the 1851 census she was living with her sister Isabella, and was unmarried. She was listed as a shopkeeper on ‘Back Damgate’ in Slater’s 1852 directory. Marjory (15th C.) daughter of Andrew (possibly the oldest). She was one of 4 co-heiresses of the lands of Primside, Hownam Mains, Plenderleith and Hyndhope, along with Isabella, Janet and Ellen. They resigned their lands to the superiors, and they were then granted to Andrew Ker of Altonburn in 1439, 1443 and 1454/5. Martin (16th C.) recorded as ‘Roule’ when he was owner of a tenement in the ‘Walkargait’ in Jedburgh in 1574. Patrick (15th/16th C.) recorded as Provost of the Collegiate Church of St. Nicholas of Dalkeith in 1499. He was also Provost of Dalkeith in 1478 when he witnessed a declaration by his brother George, Bailie for David Ranton of Billy. Another brother, John, was also witness. Patrick (15th/16th C.) recorded as serving in the King’s spicery in 1499 and 1500. He was paid his fee according to the Exchequer Rolls, with his surname written ‘Roule’. Probably the same ‘Pait Roule’ was recorded in 1497 when money was sent from the King’s Treasury to him, lying sick in Ayr. Patrick (15th/16th C.) recorded in a list of owners of crofts and rigs in Selkirk in about 1529. His name appears as ‘Pait of Roull’. James and ‘Philes’ were also listed. Richard (12th/13th C.) probably son of Henry and Margaret Abernethy. He is recorded being present at the court of King William at Alyth in 1180, where his name is ‘Reuel’. He witnessed an Athole charter in the late 1190s. In 1205 he was witness to a charter of William the Lion at Forfar. He also witnessed several gifts of the King to the monastery of Arbroath in the period 1188–1214. Henry, who is a witness at about the same time may have been his son or other close relative. Perhaps the same Richard is recorded in charters during the reign of Alexander II, i.e. 1214–49. This was at the same time as Alan and Thomas of Rule. Adam, brother and heir of Richard, is recorded in 1225. Richard (13th C.) recorded in connection with the lands of Bunkle, Berwickshire, in 1247. Richard (13th C.) witness to a renewal of lands in Mow granted to Melrose Abbey by Richard of Heiton in the period 1269–89; he is listed as ‘Ricardo de Rule’. In the period 1270–90 he confirmed a grant of a 20-shilling land in Hownam to Melrose Abbey. It is unclear how he was related to other Rules. Richard (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Roull’ when he had remission for wheat ‘fermes’ in 1496 for the lands of ‘Osanisden’. Robert (13th C.) recorded as ‘de Ryhull’ in about 1240 when along with his wife Christiana, he held half of the lands of North Middleton in Northumberland. Robert (14th C.) recorded in an English document of 1391 as ‘a rebel and traitor’ when his lands of ‘Promset in Tevydalle’ (Primside) were forfeited to Thomas ‘Sparrowe, late prisoner with the Scots’. Robert (15th C.) Chaplain of the church of St. Nicholas in Aberdeen in 1444. He is recorded as Chaplain there in 1468. Robert (15th C.) recorded in a Berwickshire inquest in 1464. Robert (15th/16th C.) tenant in Rewcastle. In 1502 in Jedburgh he was surety for Andrew Storie, who was also a resident of Newcastle, when they were fined for non-appearance. Robert (17th C.) Border minstrel who was supposedly slain by William Henderson of Priesthaugh near Allannahagh in 1627, as immortalised in the ballad ‘Rattlin Roarin Willie’. It is possible he was connected with George, who is recorded as a minstrel hired by the Burgh of Selkirk in 1537. Thomas (13th C.) recorded in charters between 1214 and 1249. For example he was witness to Petronella, daughter of Adam Herring of Minto, when she granted land in the Borthwick to Melrose Abbey. He may be the same Thomas of Rule recorded on a jury in Northumberland in 1231 and as a witness of a grant to the canons of Kirkham in Northumberland in 1256. Thomas (13th C.) paid homage to Edward I by signing the Ragman Rolls of 1296. Another signatory was Adam of Rule, as well as William ‘de Rouley’. Thomas (14th C.) recorded as Rector of Cambuslang (Lanarkshire) in 1329. Thomas (14th C.) recorded as ‘Rouk’ (possibly just a transcription error) during the reign of David II, 1329–71. He resigned his lands of Butland or Butelend in the Sheriffdom of Edinburgh to James Douglas of Stratthbok. He may also have resigned his lands of ‘Little-Rulwod’. Possibly the same Thomas ‘of Roulwode’ forfeited certain lands in the Barony of Cavers in 1335/6. Perhaps the same Thomas witnessed the grant of the Forest of Ettrick to John Ker in 1358 and was juror at Roxburgh in 1361. And he may be the Thomas who was on an English jury in 1367 deciding which lands had been taken from English subjects by Scotsmen. Thomas (14th C.) witness to a court case in Dundee in 1348. He is recorded as ‘Ruwel’. Thomas (14th/15th C.) recorded as a Burgess of Aberdeen in 1390, and as a Bailie in the period 1406–35. He was Provost of Aberdeen in 1417. In 1424 he was still recorded as ‘of Roule’ when witness to a charter in Aberdeenshire. Thomas (15th C.) eminent ecclesiastic, contemporary with the Provost of Aberdeen of the same name. In 1429 he became a Canon of Glasgow Diocese. In the period 1426–32 he was annually the ambassador to England, designated Chaplain to the King of Scots. In 1429 he was also one of the sub-commissioners appointed to settle conditions for keeping order on the Border. In 1438 he was recorded as Chancellor of Glasgow Diocese. Thomas (16th C.) mentioned in a Northumberland record of 1523. Thomas (16th C.) listed among tenants of Newton in Bedrule in 1531. Thomas (18th C.) resident in Town-o-Rule in 1788 when his daughter Helen was baptised in Hobbirk Parish. Waldeve (12th C.) witness to a charter of Ranulph de Soulis to Jedburgh Abbey in the late 1100s, recorded as ‘Waldevo de Rula’. His name is also translated as ‘Waltheof’. Walter (14th C.) Precentor of Glasgow Diocese mentioned in the period 1321–33. For example he witnessed the document of 1329 where the Bishop of Glasgow confirmed the founding of a chantry at Roxburgh Church by Roger of Alton. He was surely directly related to other early ‘de Rules’. Walter (14th C.) recorded as ‘de Roull’ in 1387 when he was granted a Canonry of Glasgow by Pope Clement VII. He already held a position at the church of Tarbolton. Walter (b.1805) carter in Hawick, son of George. In 1861 he was living at 2 Allars Crescent with his mother Elizabeth, brother John and sister Elizabeth (widow of Alexander Pringle Scott). William (13th/14th C.) witness to a grant by Adam ‘de Roule’ of lands of Molle to Kelso Abbey about 1300. Another witness was Hugh ‘de Roule’, hence all 3 are likely to have been closely related. He may also be the William ‘de Rouley’ who signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. In 1302 ‘William de Rue’ was King’s Clerk to Edward I at Roxburgh. About 1304 he is mentioned in a charter of donation granted by Robert ‘Wischart’, Bishop of Glasgow. This refers to land ‘of Bromilaw’ bordering his lands. He is probably the William ‘de Rule’ who is recorded (along with Adam) in a charter of Sprouton in 1320/1. It has been suggested by some that he may be the same as the William who became the first Turnbull. William (14th C.) recorded as ‘de Roule’ in 1357/8 when he was witness for the lands of Altonburn passing to John Ker, with William of Gledstones, James of Lorraine and Alexander of Flex being other witnesses. The lands had passed from Adam of Rule in 1354, so this may have been a relative. He also witnessed a further charter of related lands in 1358, passing from William of ‘Blakdene’. In 1369 he was ‘Willelmi de Rowele’, son of John, when he resigned lands in ‘Hunedoun’ to Melrose Abbey. William (15th C.) recorded as witness to charters in Edinburgh in 1465 and 1471. William (b.c.1805) born in Westerkirk, he was a shoemaker living at 5 Round Close in 1841, 1851 and 1861 and still there in 1875. By 1861 he was employing 2 men. His wife was Margaret from Langholm. Their children included Alexander, Hendry, William, John, twins Thomas and Walter, and Mary (spelled ‘Reule’, ‘Reull’, ‘Roul’, ‘Roule’, ‘Roull’, ‘Roule’, ‘Roule’, ‘Rowle’, etc. in early records).

the Rule (thu-rool, -rowl) n. popular name for Rule Witter – ‘Between ezlar banks, that frightful scowl, Fring’d with gray hazel, roars the minning Roull . . . ’[JL], ‘On these sweet scenes I love to ponder, And each fair spot in memory see; So dear must be, where’er I wander, The valley of the Rule to me’ [FMC], ‘. . .As he crossed the Rule, girth deep at the ford, A rider rose dark from the haung and roared With a voice that shivered the still night air And startled the wild fowl, ‘Who goes there?’ ’[WHO].

Rule Hervey (root-her-vee) n. earliest known name for the lands of Abbotrule Parish, first recorded in about 1165 in a charter to Jedburgh Abbey by William the Lion. These lands were granted to the monks of Jedburgh Abbey in exchange for a ‘ten pound’ land in ‘Hardinghestorn’ (Northamptonshire). The name was changed sometime after the parish was granted to Jedburgh Abbey. The origin of the earlier name is unknown, but presumably distinguished it from ‘Rule Bethoc’, i.e. Bedrule (it occurs as ‘Rulam Herevei’ in about 1165).

Rulehaugh (root-hawch) n. area of flat land near the mouth of the Rule Water, possibly lower down in former times before the course of the rivers altered. In 1279 Alexander III confirmed a grant by John Comyn of Bedrule of the lands of ‘Rulehalch’ to the Diocese of Glasgow. In 1395 there was a duel there when Sir William Inglis (then of Branxholme) was challenged by Thomas Struthers (an Englishman), with Archibald Douglas and Sir Henry Percy as judges. Struthers was killed in single combat. It is possible this was the same as the Deadhaugh, where Turnbulls supplicated to James IV in 1510. About 80 sheep from here were swept away during the flood of 1846 (it is ‘Rulehalch’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

the Rules (thu-roolz) n. once important family whose name was connected with the area of Rulewater. Adam and Thomas ‘de Roule’ from Roxburghshire signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. They held the lands of Altonburn, Primside, Penderleith and Hyndhope, all of which were disposed of by 4 co-heiresses around 1440. There were also Rules in Aberdeenshire from early times. It is unclear what fraction of the world’s Rules are descended from this local family.

Rule’s Land (roolz-lawnd) n. former name for lands in Ruecastle in the Parish of Bedrule. They were feued by Rev. Joseph Tennant of Bedrule from Thomas Hamilton in 1632 (called ‘Roullis land’).

Rule-Spittal see Spittal-on-Rule

Ruletoon (rool-tin, -toon) n. Ruletown, former name for farms and lands in Hobkirk Parish, at Town-o-Rule. Both Ruletownhead and Ruletownfoot were recorded in the 17th century. In 1694 James Grieve paid tax for 4 hearths there ‘for himself & cottars’, with William Turnbull also a cottar there.

Ruletoonfit (rool-tin-fi’, -toon-) n. Ruletownfoot, former farmstead that was once part of the Abbotrule estate. Its precise location is unclear, but presumably associated with Ruletownhead. It may be the place transcribed as ‘Reidetoun fute’ where Thomas Turnbull was in 1615. Adam Turnbull and Beatrix Lorraine were there in 1643, each with lands valued at £10. On the 1694 Hearth Tax records, John Lorraine was listed there, with Andrew Mathew and William Blakie as cottars. Separately Thomas Turnbull and Thomas Scott are listed as tenants there in the Hearth Tax rolls, with James Oliver, James Wilkie and James Turnbull being cottars there, and Adam Sharp ‘deficient’ in not paying the tax (it is ‘Roultonfit’ in 1643, ‘Roultonfit’ in 1662 and ‘Roultonfoot’ in 1694).

Ruletoonheid (rool-tin-heed, -toon-) n. Ruletownhead, former farm in Hobkirk Parish, once part of the Abbotrule estate. Adam and Walter Turnbull were tenants there in 1643, when it was valued at £140. It had the same value in 1678. It later became part of the Parish of Hobkirk. In the late 17th century part of it was owned by Helen Turnbull, along with West Fodderlee. In earlier times the farm seems to have been incorporated into West Fodderlee, the Grange and Bowatsyde. In 1788 it was owned by the trustees of George Dickson and valued at £96 11s. George Elliot was there in 1794 and John Walker in 1797, with James Dalgleish being shepherd in the same year. In 1811 it was listed (in 2 parts, split between Hobkirk and Southdean Parishes) along with ‘Bossithill’ and Burnkinford, among the possessions of Charles Kerr of Abbotrule, having a combined value of about £224 and previously being owned by George Dickson and George Elliot. By about 1874 it was owned by David Henderson, including a part formerly belonging to Walter Turnbull (valued at £96 11s). The tenant was Tom Brown in the mid-to-late 19th century, then passing to the Douglas family. Tom Douglas was owner in the early 20th century, when it was valued at about £300. It seems there was once also a corn mill here (also formerly written ‘Ruletonhead’ and ‘Rule-town-head’, it was ‘Roull toune-head’ and ‘Roultounhead’ in 1678).

Ruletoonheid Mill (rool-tin-heed-mil) n. former corn mill at Ruletownhead. The last miller there was Ralph Prendergast.

Rulewater and its People (rool-wa-tur-and-its-pee-pul) n. book written by George Tancred of Weens, published in 1907. It contains a truly extraordinary number of anecdotes from the general area of the Rule valley, as Tancred systematically described the histories of all the major families of Hobkirk Parish, in addition to much of Bedrule and Southdean. Importantly, the book does not just focus on the histories of the ‘gentry’, but includes all social strata. A facsimile edition was published by Borders Regional Library in 1992.

Rule Witter (rool-wi’-ur) n. the Rule Water, a tributary of the Teviot, joining it from the south near Spittal-on-Rule. It is formed by the Wauchope, Harwood and Catlee Burns. The region gave rise to a surname, with the first recorded ‘Roules’ being in the mid-12th century. A history of the parishes along the Rule valley was written by George Tancred in 1907 and re-published in 1992 – ‘Then Tividale came to wi’ spied; The Sheriff brought the Douglas down, Wi’ Cranstane, Gladstain, good at need, Baith...
Rulewittier Court

Rewle water, and Hawick town' [T], ‘All Rule Water, east and west, Bowed to the spell of Turnball's name, And among the proud of the Borders best There was none so proud as the Wauchope dame' [WHO], ‘He's lang since left Roull's smilin’ scene, An’ fairy milks o’ prattlin’ Jed, An’ Oxnam's pines an’ banks sae green, An’ winplin’ Kale's soft dreamy bed’ [WP] (also sometimes one word ‘Rulewater/Rulewitter’; formerly spelled ‘Roull’, ‘Rowll’, etc.; it is ‘Ruiale’ in about 1406. ‘Watter of Rowle’ in 1530 and ‘Reullwater’ is recorded in the 17th century; the origin may be the old Celtic for ‘steep slope’).

Rulewittier Court (rool-wi’-ur-kör’) n. Rulewater Court, a street planned for Stiches and appearing on Burrow’s street map of Hawick, although never built.

Rulewitter Rifle Club (rool-wi’-ur-ri-ful-kluh) n. Rulewater Miniature Rifle Club, established following a meeting of 1905, called by Mr. Carr-Ellison of Greenriver. Mr. Waldie of Braithwaugh gave a piece of land on his farm for a rifle range. The original membership was 30, with office-bearers being Sir Robert Usher of Wells, George Tancred of Weens, Major E.H.M. Elliot of Wolfelee. It is the last item to be described in Tancred’s book on Rulewater, but it is unclear if the club lasted very long.

Rulewud (rool-wud) n. Rulewood, former farm in the Rule valley, probably once owned by the Rule family. ‘Thomas de Rillewod’, who signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296, may have been owner of these lands. Thomas ‘of Roulwode’ is recorded resigning some lands in the Barony of Cavers in 1335/6. It was later home to a local branch of the Gourlay family. Henry Gourlay granted the lands to his son John in 1380, confirmed in 1390. In 1387 John was served heir to his father Archibald. John Gourlay of Rulewood is recorded in the 1490s and several times until 1509 when William Lord Herries of Terregles granted these lands. Thomas ‘of Roulwode’ is recorded in 1406. ‘Watter of Rowle’ in 1530 and ‘Reullwater’ is recorded in the 17th century; the origin may be the old Celtic for ‘steep slope’).

Rum an milk (rum-in-milk) n. traditional Common Riding drink. The Drums and Fifes are given this as a reward after marching round the former tolls on the Friday morning. The origin and history are unclear, but it is said that one of the members of the Drums and Fifes was given (or asked for) milk with his rum to settle his stomach, since he was not feeling well; the drink caught on with the rest of the band, and then with Common Riding supporters in general. There is a reference in reports of the Common Riding of 1890 to ‘a liberal supply of fresh milk and other customary refreshments’ for the Thursday morning ‘Hut’. The traditional rum has for many years been ‘Skipper Rum’. Bella Robson would regularly come out of her house on the Kirkwynd to offer a tray to the band in the late 19th and early 20th centuries.

Rum and Milk (rum-awnd-milk) n. local interest comic strip produced by Jim Coltman for the Hawick News from the early 1990s.

Rumballiach (rum-ba-lee-ach) adj., arch. stormy (of weather), quarrelsome (of a person) – ‘a rumballiach wife’, a woman given to brawls, Roxb.’ [JoJ].

Rumberella (rum-bur-e-la) n., arch. an umbrella – ‘Gies the siller, an’ ye’se get yer rumberella’ [WNK]. Note the umbrellas were not used locally until the late 18th century; the first one seen in the Yarrow valley, for example, was in 1779 (perhaps in a joking sense).

Rumblin’ Brig (rum-bl-in-, rum-lin-brig) n. one of the most familiar tunes played by the Drums and Fifes (along with ‘Dumbarton Drums’ and ‘Teribus’). The tune appears to be peculiar to Hawick, although there are other tunes known elsewhere that have a similar name. The tune is played on Picking Night on the march to the Cornet’s house if the route takes the band to the south. It was combined with ‘Dumbarton Drums’ in the Scocha song ‘Bottles at Dawn’.

rump gumption (rum-gump-shin) n. common sense, gumption – ‘she hedni enough rump gumption ti bide awa fru um’, ‘Rump gumption, Rummilgumption, Rumble-gumption, ... the remark commonly made as regard to one who is viewed as having more sound than sense, ‘He has a gude deal o’ the rumble, but little o’ the gumption’, Roxb.’[JoJ] (also rummlegumption).

rummel see rummle

Rummie Riddell (ru-mee-di-dul) n. nickname for a local innkeeper around 1800, presumably someone called Riddell – ‘When Hawick bonnie brig ye cross, An’ up the muirlan’ striddle, Ye cannna lang be at a loss, Ca’ in to Rummie Riddell’[JR] (note this is printed ‘R—e R—l’ in the published version, although it is not hard to fill in the blanks).

rummle (ru-nul) v. to move or search through something clumsily, to rummage – ‘she was rummlin throwe her drawers looking for the scissors’, ‘Burns gush it oot, as red they’re rumlin’, Aiks creak it, crash it, as they’re tumlin’’[JoHa], ‘He rummled ’lang the riverside, Ne’er saw the grey trout scuttling by ...’[WFC], to rumble – ‘ee’re juist openin yer mooth an lettin yer belly rummel’, ‘...maist deived an daivert an donwert wui the rummellin dunner o an eondon bizz’[ECS], ‘The Laird’s lauch rummled wi’ muckle glee, But the leddy glowered wi’ an angry ee’[WL], n. a clumsy search or movement, a rumble – ‘oo heard the rummle o thunner’, ‘Did ee ever hear the rumml o a yoke-a-tuillie doon the Loan skly?’[ECS], ‘The rummel when ee went throwe a tunnel Ee’d been warned when the train gien a whistle’[AY], a fidget, one who moves constantly or clumsily – ‘ee’re an awfi rummel, can ee no sit still?’ (also spelled ‘rummel’).

runch (runch) n., arch. wild radish, Raphanus raphanistrum, or wild mustard, Sinapis arven sis; the first of these was also ‘yellow runch’ and the second ‘rough runch’ – ‘The Runches, comprising both the Field Mustard and the Joint-podded Charlock, the garlic-tasted Jack-by-the-hedge, and several others come under this category’[JAHM].

runch (runch) v., arch. to eat or bite avidly – ‘Runchin’ at an aipple’[GW].

Runciman (run-see-mun) n. James (17th C.) smith in Raperlaw recorded at on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He paid tax for 2 hearths there. His name is written ‘Runcian’. He is probably the James who owned a ‘quarter of land’ in Nether Ancrum, valued at £ 13 6s 8d, listed as a former owner in 1788. Thomas (16th C.) recorded as witness to a document for the Routledges of Crook, witnessed in 1529/30 at Cavers Kirk. He must have been a local landowner, tenant or church official. He is an early example of this surname, which is recorded as ‘Runseman’. He may have been related to the earlier Patrick.

Patrick (15th C.) listed among the 24 Roxburghshire men, mostly associated of William Douglas of Cavers, who had remission in 1488/9 for supporting James III. His surname is recorded as ‘Runsyman’. Walter ‘Wat’ (16th C.) tenant of Sir Walter Scott of Howpasey in the lands of Outersideig in 1659. Sir Walter acted as cautioner for his tenants at a meeting in Hawick, assuring that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. His name is recorded as ‘Watt Runseman’. Walter (18th C.) recorded as ‘Runchiman’ in 1868 when he married Janet ‘Reedfoord’ in Robertson Parish. Their son Thomas was born in 1867, with witnesses Thomas Robson and runckle

Thomas Hardie. Helen (who married John Douglas in Robertson in 1687) and Bessie (who married Thomas Hardie in the same year) were probably his sisters. He was probably a descendant of the earlier Wat (formerly ‘Runchiman’, ‘Runciman’, ‘Runseman’, ‘Runsyman’, etc.).

runckle see runkle

rung (rung) n., arch. a staff, strong stick, cudgel, wheel-spoke – ‘...much more primitive ... than the sword ... such as ... one rung’ [BR], ‘...by striking her with one rung, and breaking of her mistresses rocke when she was spinning there ... ’ [BR1693], ‘We’ll smash them, as did oor forbears, Wi’ hazel rungs and blackthorn cudgels’ [JoHa], ‘I took my rung that I had flung Ay-ont the auld jambstane ... ’ [WaD].

rung-wheel (rung-wheel) n., arch. the spoke wheel driven by the cog-wheel in a corn mill – ‘As there are two wheels in a corn-mill, which work into one another, the one which has cogs drives the other, and is called the cog-wheel, the other, from its having spokes or rungs, is called the rung-wheel, Roxb.’ [JoJ].

runkle (rung-kul) n., arch. a wrinkle, crease – ‘The description of feeding hungry schoolboys, by ‘taking the runkles oot o’ their wame’, amused him greatly’ [JW], v., arch. to wrinkle – ‘O the bane o’ St Giles, The bane o’ St Giles, Makes the face o’ the faithless Runckled wi’ smiles’ [FL], ‘Ach, ye’re no’ foolin’ me, Ye brazent hag, Wi your wrinkled hide ... ’ [DH] (also written ‘runkle’ and ‘wrunkle’).

Russell (ru-sul) n. Alexander (1808/9–bef. 1851) from Ancrum, he was a gardener in Wilton. In 1841 he is listed as a gardener on Upper Danside, employing 2 men. His wife was Elizabeth and their children included Mary, Alexander, Robert and Jane. By 1861 his wife was a widow, living on Wellington Street. Rev. David (1783/4–1868) from Tollcross, he was a schoolteacher, and then was ordained at Colinsburgh Relief Church in Fife in 1811. He moved to Hawick in late 1812 to become the first minister of the new Relief (later Allars) Kirk. His son was the engineer, naval architect and mathematician John Scott Russell. In Hawick he remarried and had more children, and introduced one of the earliest Sunday Schools. Following ongoing dispute over his stipend he resigned in 1819 and later moved to Errol near Perth. He was unable to carry on his duties following some kind of ‘mental ailment’ in 1847. He seemed able to carry on in about 1849, but the same affliction returned by 1854, and he was ‘dead to the world’ for many years before his death. A photograph of him exists. Ella (d.2004) Hawick dressmaker. She worked for dressmakers W. & O. Marcus. It is said that Walter Marcus referred to her as ‘Alice’, since there were already too many Ellas working in the factory! After Marcus’ closed in 1964, she set up her own business at Loch Park, operating as ‘Alison Russell’, this running for about 20 years. In 1986 she married Heinz Melchert, whom she had met in his early days in Hawick, having settled after being a German prisoner of war. Frances, Countess Russell, see Frances Elliot. Francis (1814–95) son of Dr. James (Professor of Clinical Surgery at Edinburgh University) and Eleanor Oliver (daughter of William Oliver of Dinlabyre). He trained as a lawyer, was called to the bar in 1836 and in 1860 became Sheriff-Substitute of Roxburghshire, serving until 1885. He was a member of the Jedforest Club and lived at Jedbank until retiring back to Edinburgh. He married twice. George (15th/16th C.) resident of Fulton. In 1502 Matthew and Martin Oliver in Strange were allowed to compone for stealing 4 lambs and an ox from him. George (1903/4–67) born in Hawick, he was educated at Wilton and was an apprentice gardener at Wood’s Nursery. He worked as a gardener at Langlee. During WWII he served as a constable with the Hawick Police. After the War he worked for Lyle & Scott’s. He was an enthusiastic member of Lodge 111 and was also made an honorary life member of Lodge 424. He ran with the Teviodale Harriers and was also a Isabella Edmondson "Isla" (1934–2021) only surviving child of gardener George, who served in the Hawick Police during WWII. Her mother was Lizzie Scott, sister of local historian Dick Scott. The family lived at 5 Trevelyan Terrace and then 8 Oliver Crescent and she was educated at the Buccleuch School and Hawick High. After school she worked for Marcus, dressmakers on Commercial Road, along with her cousin Ella Russell. At the age of 20 she responded to a recruitment campaign by Liverpool City Police and left Hawick to begin an entirely new career. She joined at a time when female police officers were rare, but she managed to thrive in this male-dominated environment, her height and calm demeanour probably being strong assets. She was one of the first women in the country to be posted into a traffic department and rose through the ranks of what became the Merseyside Police, becoming one of the first women acting as Sergeant and later Inspector in charge of a largely male department. She eventually reached the rank of Chief Inspector, first in the Traffic Department and then the Warrant Department, this probably being the highest rank achieved by a woman in any force in Britain at that time. After 30 years of tireless service, she took early retirement in 1985. She was involved with the Soroptimists voluntary organisation, which works internationally to ensure that the voices of women and girls are heard. Along with her doubles partner, Marie Lupton, Isla took part in table-tennis tournaments, winning the national competition for police officers on several occasions. In Liverpool, Isla called her house 'Haaick', and it also became home to her mother after the untimely death of her father in 1967. She later moved to Tarleton (near Preston) and then back to her native Hawick in 2014. Always retaining close ties with Hawick, she was a member of the Archæological Society for more than 50 years. Rev. James (b.1808) son of Robert and Agnes Turnbull, who was from Hawick. He attended school at Yarrow, under the instruction of James Scott. He was minister at Yarrow and wrote 'Reminiscences of Yarrow' (1886), which contains anecdotes about many local people of the late 18th and early 19th centuries. He had a cousin, Robert Laidlaw from Philiphaugh. He married Janet Margaret Shand. His children included Robert and John Harvey Shand (1861–84). James 'Jimmy' (1867–1956) son of artist John Bucknell. His mother died of smallpox in Edinburgh and the family moved to Fochabers, Morayshire. His great delights were fishing and poaching. He learned painting in his father's studio. He moved to Glasgow, painting commissions of fish and countryside scenes. In 1918 he and his wife moved to Bonchester Bridge, where they lived above the Laidlaw Memorial Hall. Later they moved to Weens Cottages ('the Sclenty') and lastly lived in Denholm. In Rulewater he acted as telegraph boy until he was about 80. He continued to paint almost up until his death. His paintings were signed 'J.B. Russell', distinguishing them from those of his father. From a Catholic family, he married Protestant Annie Hendry, keeping the marriage secret for years. They had children: Peggy (b.1900); Hendry Smith (1906–88); and William Hendry (1915–41), also known as Dovish, who died in Greece in WWII. He painted the caricature of the 'Rulewater Foothunters' in the Horse and Hounds. His painting of Wilton Lodge gatehouse is in the Museum, as well as another of a bridge. James 'Jimmy' (d.1939) from Peebles, he was a motor engineer, graduating from Heriot-Watt. He worked with Croall Bryson in Hawick and was a great friend of Jimmy Guthrie, who was godfather to one of his children. He built a model car for his daughter and reconstructed a crashed biplane, which he flew on trips to Europe. He married Edith, daughter of Hawick poet Tom Ker. Their children were: Margaret; and Jocelyn (or 'Jocey'). He lost money in the Wall Street Crash and moved to Leeds, where he us buried. James Lyon 'Jimmy' (1935–) son of Hendry Smith and Isabella Lyon, and grandson of the artist James, he is a social scientist born in Wilton. He lived in Denholm and Rulewater until 1960, later splitting his time between Rulewater and Ireland. He graduated M.A. from St. Andrews and Ph.D. from Strathclyde and worked at the University of Ulster, specialising in issues related to children. He carried out survey research for several government agencies and other organisations, particularly in Northern Ireland. After retirement he carried out personalised funerals for people without church connections in...
The Rustic Bard

the Edinburgh area. He wrote the words and music for the song ‘The Burn ’at Rins Throu’ Bิน st’. He also wrote an article on ‘The Rulewater Foothunters’ for the Scots Magazine in 1887. In 1960 he married Heather Begg and had children: Fiona Jane, Roisin Anne and Kevin. John (16th C.) farmer at Over Bilerwell. His barn is mentioned in 1562 as part of the dispute over lands in the Barony of feu-Rule. John (18th C.) married Isabel Lillico in Kirkton in 1748. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at Heap in 1772. In 1760 in Ashkirk Parish he married Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’) daughter of George Thorburn; she was sister of Jean Thorburn, who married John Anderson, farmer at Newton. Their children included: Helen (b.1761); Elizabeth (b.1764); John (b.1766); Thomas (b.1768); George (b.1771); Betty (b.1772); and possibly Isabella. The witnesses in 1772 were James Dryden and James Scott. Lord John (1792–1878) M.P. from 1813, he was a supporter of extending the franchise and granting religious equality, being one of the drafters of the Reform Bill. He served as Home Secretary, Secretary for War and the Colonies, and Leader of the House of Commons, before becoming Prime Minister in 1846–52 and again briefly in 1865–66. He was also made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick during a stay at Minto House in 1840. In 1841 he married the 2nd Earl of Minto’s daughter, Lady Francis Anna Maria. John Scott (1808–82) born in Parkhead, son of Rev. David, his mother (a Scott) dying at an early age. His father became minister of the Hawick Relief Kirk in 1812, where he remarried, and remained until 1819; thus the family must have spent more than 6 years in Hawick. The young John went on to become a naval engineer and architect. He is remembered as the discoverer of the ‘solitary wave’, the full significance of which was not explained and generalised until the 1960s; it gave rise to the mathematical concept of the ‘soliton’, which has diverse applications, such as in optics. Rev. Robert (1766–1847) born in Fife, one of a family of 11, he attended Edinburgh and St. Andrews Universities. He taught at a school briefly and was a private tutor for the Napiers at Merchiston Hall, near Falkirk. He was licensed to preach by the Presbytery of Linlithgow in 1788 and ordained as minister of Ettrick in early 1790. He was a regular visitor at Wilton Lodge, which his patron Lord Napier purchased; the room he used there was known as ‘the prophet’s chamber’. He moved to Yarrow in 1791, succeeding Dr. Cramond and remained there until he died. In 1805 he became Chaplain to the Lord High Commissioner of the General Assembly and obtained a D.D. from Edinburgh University in 1811. Rev. Campbell of Lilliesleaf referred to him (somewhat facetiously) as ‘the beauty of holiness’. He married Agnes Turnbull, who was from Hawick; she died in 1843. His son James succeeded him as minister of Yarrow and wrote ‘Reminiscences of Yarrow’ (1886). He also had another son Walter and a daughter who predeceased him. He was rarely ill, never spending a whole day in bed in his life, and not requiring a doctor until 3 days before his death. When he died he was ‘father of the Synod’. Robert (19th C.) tinsmith at 4 Bourtree Bank. He married Janet, daughter of jailor Michael Anderson. Their children were James A. (a plumber), Robert (an ironmonger) and George (a plumber, who emigrated to America). Rev. Thomas (1830/31–80) from Bucklyvie, son of John, who was the minister there. He became the 6th minister of Allars Kirk in 1857. He was recorded in 1861 as ‘Minister of Crosswynd United Presbyterian Church’, living with his wife Anne W. and children Euphemia M., John W. and William J., along with 2 servants. He moved to Albion Chapel, London in 1863, then to Forest Hill, Sydenham in 1870, although he was only there 2 years. In 1872 he ceased to be recognised as a minister of the U.P. Church. Rev. William Cuthbertson (1839–90) born in Coupar, Angus, son of schoolmaster John. He was educated in Edinburgh New College 1864–68, where he trained for the Free Church ministry. He was based at Lauder before being ordained as 3rd minister of Wolfelee Free Kirk in 1872. In 1878 he married Janet Calvert, daughter of George Scott (who was visiting her aunt and uncle in Lauder), postmaster at Mimico, Canada. They had 2 children: William Cuthbertson (1880–1941), born in Hobkirk, who trained as an engineer, joined the K.O.S.B. and died in Lasswade; and Janet (b.1881), born in Hobkirk. He came down with Bright’s disease and moved to Musselburgh for a change, but died after a few months there. Rev. Winning (19th/20th C.) appointed as assistant to Rev. David Hislop at Hawick Evangelical Union Kirk in 1894. Soon afterwards the church united with the Congregational Union. It is unclear exactly how long he remained in Hawick (formerly ‘Russel’).
He is best known for writing the words ‘Bonnie Teviotdale’. His early poetic efforts are collected in ‘The rustic bard, or, A voice from the people: being miscellaneous poems and songs’ (1847), published when he was living at Longbaulk. The book contains 351 pages and no fewer than 97 poems; however, it does not include ‘Bonnie Teviotdale’. The dedication is ‘to the working classes of Scotland’, with Halliday writing that he wanted to avoid the fashion of being sycophantic to a wealthy patron. In the preface he complains about those who criticised him for publishing his verses, singling out someone who was ‘a schoolmaster, likewise a poet’, presumably James Telfer. Included are: a long introductory poem ‘The Vision’; a vicious polemic ‘My Real Thoughts’, in which he attacks his critics in colourful phrases; a poem in praise of Henry Scott Riddell; verses about the historical curiosities collection of Andrew Jameson; a short poem thanking William Oliver of Hallrule for support; a poem to the recently married ‘W—m B—k’ (perhaps William Black); a long ‘Address to Fortune’; an address to his empty purse, dedicated to W.J. Oliver (probably Walter James, tenant farmer at Southfield); ‘Davie’s Dead’ (whose subject appears to be a piper); a poem about the severe storms of 1845; a long one about a hiring fair; one about sectarianism; one about the bonfire lit for the health of James [actually Robert] Elliot of Harwood; verses to be read at the annual celebration for the Ancient Order of Foresters; an ‘Epitaph on Mr J—s G—e [perhaps James Grieve]; a poem about a dance at Raesknowe; many poems related to beauty and love; a short toast; and several songs about Teviotdale.

Ruth (ruoth) n. Henry (15th C.) resident of Longnewton, recorded at the 1494/5 Justice-aire in Jedburgh. He had remission for the slaughter of Thomas Gibson, with his surety being George Rutherford of Longnewton.

Ruther (ru'-heed) n. Rutherhead, pass at the head of Ruthead Sike, which flows into Lairhope Burn to the west of Lairhope in the upper Teviot valley. The pass here reaches a height of 352 m, and was formerly on the old road from Lairhope to Howpasley, linking the upper Teviot and Borthwick valleys.

Rutherford (ru-thur-furd) n. village and former station on the Kelso Branch of the North British Railway. Before being destroyed in 1545 there was a hospital near here for the protection of travellers, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene, as well as ruins of the old British fort called Ringley Hall. The area was a small parish in ancient times, later absorbed into Maxton. The land is intimately connected with the Rutherfords of that Ilk. It passed to the Stuarts of Traquair in the early 17th century, then the Scotts of Thirlestane and later to the Don and Antrobus families (also written ‘Rutherford’ and variants; the origin of the name is probably Old English for ‘cattle ford’ and it first appears in about 1165; an alternative is the Flemish for a ‘knight’s river crossing’; less likely, but more romantic, are tales involving King Ruther fording a river, and related stories; there is a more recent Rutherford in Linton Parish, Peebleshire).

Rutherford (ru-thur-furd, -ford) n. Adam of that Ilk (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1501 in relation to lands of ‘Glenisland’ in Roxburghshire for which he had a sasine. His name is given in the Exchequer Rolls as ‘Afe Rutherforde de eisdem’, but it is unclear how he was related to other Rutherfords of that Ilk. Adam (15th/16th C.) son of George of Longmewton. In 1498 he was listed (along with his brother Gilbert, a cousin George and his ‘brother’s son’ David) among Rutherfords and others who were declared rebels for the murder of Patrick Hepburn. He was also mentioned in 1502 when Alexander Laidlaw was convicted of associating with him, Thomas Rutherford and Thomas Grahamslaw. In 1510 he had letters of rehabilitation for his crimes after spending months in Edinburgh Castle. Adam (15th/16th C.) farmer of the lands of ‘Hirdmanstone’, probably the same as ‘Hermiston’ in Lillieasleaf Parish. In 1502 David Scott, called ‘Lady’, ‘in Stirkshawis’, had a remission for leading the ‘Robsonis, Doddis, and Charlis, Englishmen’ in a raid on his lands. This included stealing 5 horses and burning corn and houses there. He may be the Adam whose son James was killed at the Kirk of Hawick around 1502. Adam (16th C.) Burgess of Jedburgh who was appointed one of the temporary Sheriffs of Roxburgh in 1545 in order to officiate over the inheritance of James, son of Sir James Douglas of Cavers. Adam (17th C.) tenant in Bonchestrise. In 1684 he was among those proclaimed as fugitives for being Covenanters. Adam of Kidheugh (16th/17th C.) grandson of William and Kidheugh and probably son of Robert. In 1621 and his son John had a charter of Nether Crailing. In 1656 he gave a charter of lands in Bedrule to Thomas Rutherford of Whitehouse in Nisbet. He married Isobel, daughter of Ragwell Bennet of Chesters. Andrew of Kidheugh was probably his son. Alexander (18th
Rutherford

C.) recorded in 1732 being paid for cloth for the Burgh Officers and drummers clothes. He may have been a local tailor. Alexander (b.1820) youngest son of Bonchester joiner James and Isabella Thomson. He followed his father into the joinery business. However, he became paralysed in the middle of his life, had to be maintained by Hobkirk Parish and died in Hawick Poorhouse. His brother William (who had emigrated to Australia) sent money back to cover the expenses for his maintenance. Alison (1712–94) daughter of Robert Rutherford of Fairnilee, Selkirkshire. In 1731 she married Patrick Cockburn of Ormiston, and thereafter was referred to as Mrs. Cockburn. She was a leading society figure in Edinburgh, and wrote a version of 'The Flowers of the Forest'. Andrew of Hunthill (c.1430–c.82) son of John. He had a charter for Nether Wormalston in Peeblesshire in 1452. He is probably the 'Andro of Rutherfurde' who was on the 1456 panel that acquitted Andrew Ker of Altonburn of helping the English. In 1479 he had a sasine for Makerstoun and Grubet. He married Janet Rutherford of that Ilk. Their children included: John, who succeeded; Thomas of the Grange; and Andrew of Swinside, who died at Flodden, and whose daughter Margaret married her cousin (once removed) Sir Nicholas of Hundalee. There may be confusion between Andrew of Hunthill and Andrew of Hundalee. Andrew of Chatto and Hunthill (d.1529) son of George of Hunthill. He was the 3rd husband of Helen Rutherford, heiress of Rutherford, Wells and Edgerston. From her he inherited several lands, including the 'half merk land of Bethiroull' (i.e. Bedrule), which they sold to Andrew Ker of Ferniehirst. He may be the Andrew who had sasine for the lands of Swinside in 1506. In 1529 he had a charter for Capehope and other lands, along with his wife Helen. He died without issue and his brother John succeeded to Hundithill in late 1529. Andrew 'Dand' of Grange (16th C.) tenant in the Grange, in Abbotrule Parish. He may have been related to the slightly later George of the Grange. In 1541 he is recorded as tenant of half the lands of Hyndlee in Jedforest; his name appears there as 'Andree Ruthirfirde in Grange'. In 1581/2 his daughter Joanna received sasine of half of the lands of Todrig 'in full settlement of her terce, conjunct feo or liferent' from Walter Scott of Todrig; William of Abbotrule was a witness and hence prably related. He could be the 'David' of the Grange recorded in about 1590 among landed men of the Borders.

Andrew (17th C.) recorded in 1652 when he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for John Brown. Andrew of Hundalee (c.1530–96) son of Sir Nicholas. His older brother George died a rebel. He was 'youngar of Hundoley' in 1567 when ordered to remain in ward in Edinburgh; at the same time he and Robert Fraser of Overton were sureties for entering a servant of Fraser's. He was also surety for Dand Davidson of Birnryig. Along with his father and many other prominent Borderers, he signed a bond in 1571/2 to act against thieves. He was 'youngar of Hundoley' in 1572/3 when he swore allegiance to the Crown, with Richard of Edgerston as his surety (and apparently vice versa); he himself was surety for George of the Grange, as well as 'Jock of the Knowe' He signed the 'Band of Roxburgh' in 1573. In 1574 he and several other Ruthefruds had a 'bond of manrent' with Archibald, 8th Earl of Angus. He signed an agreement with other Ruthefruds and Turnbulls in about 1578 (perhaps earlier), annulling all former bonds and swearing allegiance to the Crown. Also in about 1578 he was involved in a bond between the Kers and Ruthefruds. In 1578/9 there is mention of a feud between him (along with other Ruthefruds, Douglas of Boniedward and Turnbull of Bedrule) and the Kers of Cessford. In 1581 he was among Border Lairds who denounced their bonds with Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus. He was among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. In 1586 he was instructed to enter in court David Middlesmas 'in Grubethauch'. In 1588 he was on a list of Borders 'masters and landlords' ordered to appear before the Privy Council. In 1590 he was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. In 1592 the cautioner for him and his son Nicholas was James Douglas, Commanndator of Melrose, that they would not reset any of those who had supported the Earl of Bothwell. He married Margaret, daughter of John Pringle of Smallholm in 1561. Their children included: John; Nicholas, who succeeded; and Andrew. However, it is stated in some family histories that he had no sons, and was succeeded by his brother Nicholas. It is also (or alternatively) claimed that he married Christian, daughter of Thomas McDougall of Makerstoun and they had no issue, so Hundalee was eventually inherited by his sister Marie, who married Sir James Kerr of Crailing, who became Lord Jedburgh. Andrew of Townhead (d.1674) stabbed James Douglas (brother of Sir William of Cavers) on their way to Jedburgh after dining together at Swanside. He subsequently tried

Rutherford to flee abroad, but was caught, tried and beheaded at Edinburgh Cross. He must have been related to other Rutherfords of Townhead and of the Hall. Andrew (17th C.) Hawick Town Clerk from 1670 until about 1673. Nothing else seems to be known about him. He was noted for notary for the document drawn up (probably in 1672) for the Commission by the Town Council to discuss an equal division of the Common with the Earl of Queensberry. He was also listed as notary when he witnessed a baptism for John Chalmers in Hawick in 1673. A man of the same name is recorded as schoolmaster in Ancrum in 1643 (but there is no obvious connection). Andrew (d.1664) 5th and youngest son of William of Wrightsland and Quarryholes, with his 3rd wife Isabel Stewart of Traquair. His father was eldest son of William, a ship’s captain in Leith, who was grandson of Archibald Rutherford, Canon of Jedburgh and descended from the Laird of Hunthill. He had a successful military career in the French service, where he became a Lieutenant General. He had 4 brothers, one of whom was a treasurer to the King of Spain. Coming to England after the restoration of Charles II, he was recommended by the King of France. He was created the 1st Lord Rutherford in 1661 and served as Governor of Dunkirk. In 1663 he was created the 1st and only Earl of Teviot. In that year there was an inventory made of his possessions (amounting to almost £200,000 Scots, as well as a will and 2 other deeds. He was mentioned several time in the diaries of Samuel Pepys. He died in Tangiers after being sent there to be Governor by Charles II. Having no issue, he had named Sir Thomas of Hunthill as his heir. Andrew of Edgerston (1646/7–1718) 2nd son of John. He succeeded to Edgerston in 1686, his elder brother John having already died. He was probably the Laird in 1694 when tax was paid on 7 hearths at his house at Edgerston. He contributed £200 to the Darien Scheme in 1695. He is probably the Laird of Edgerston who appears on a list of Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1708. He died unmarried and the estates were inherited by his younger brother Thomas. He contributed a legacy to ‘poor lame soldiers’ and another to the University of Edinburgh. Andrew (17th/18th C.) recorded ‘in Rule’ in 1690 when listed among people owing money to the deceased Mark Turnbull (portioner in Fodderlee) and Bessie Kerr. Andrew (17th C.) listed at Swinnie among the poor of Southdean Parish in the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. Andrew (18th/19th C.) resident at Newcastleton, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Andrew (19th C.) farmer at Barnhills in the 1860s. Ann (18th C.) chambermaid at Midshiels in 1791, when she was working for Archibald Douglas. Archibald (15th C.) recorded in 1493 when George Turnbull of Hallrule had remission for several crimes, including his slaughter. Perhaps the same Archibald is also mentioned when John Davidson in Minto was allowed to ‘compone’ for stealing 10 ewes from him. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Rutherfords. Archibald (d.1685) 4th son of John of Hunthill. He was ‘younger’ in a deed of 1663. In 1670 he succeeded his brother Thomas in the lands and barony of Scraesburgh, otherwise known as Hunthill, as well as Newlands and Linton in Peeblesshire. He was recorded as owner of Hunthill, Scraesburgh and Groundhouseenook in 1678, valued at £1200. In 1680 he succeeded his brother Thomas as the 3rd Lord Rutherford and sat in Parliament as a peer. He died abroad, without issue and was succeeded by his brother Robert. He was the basis for the Master of Ravenswood in Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Bride of Lammermuir’, the bride being based on his betrothed, Janet Dalrymple. His testament was registered with the Commissariot of Peebles in 1691. Bertie (17th C.) recording being ‘of the Wood’ in 1643 when his lands in Abbotrule Parish were valued at £20. It is unclear where this was. Caleb (1765–c.1831) son of Robert and Mary Simpson. He was apprenticed as a shoemaker, but gave up the trade to become Burgh Officer. He worked as the town crier and drummer as well as sheriff’s officer. He would also call public auctions etc. in the time before there were newspapers in Hawick. He roused the town with his drum during the False Alarm of 1804. He also acted as crier of races and games at the Common Riding, and was one of the Halberdiers. In addition he was annually the toastmaster at the King’s Ranting, and was paid extra for singing. He was well known as a trickster and wag, and for avoiding steady work at all costs. He used to repeat things like the Burgess Roll, adding amusing comments of his own. Due to such idiosyncrasies, he frequently came to grief for breach of Bailie’s orders. His wife was referred to as ‘Jean Caleb’, and with her and ‘the Noted Beattie’ they used to perform shows around the south of Scotland and northern England. One incident is related of him claiming to exhibit ‘a horse’s head where it’s tail should have been’ at Kelso Fair. After being dismissed for being drunk one Common Riding he is supposed to have said ‘There’s ye’re drum; ye’ll carry’t hame for me. Ye’ll sune get another drummer, but ye’ll never get another Caleb.’ He is surely the ‘Calib Rutherford, shoemaker’ on the subscription list for Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ in 1784 (even although he would have been quite young at the time). He lived to a ripe old age, and his drum is in the Museum. He appears in a cameo role in ‘The Gutterbludes’ – ‘Rob Rodger, he ca’s up the rear, And Caleb beats the drum’ [RM], ‘… Or Caleb rise to beat the drum, And I cry out ‘They come, they come!’’ [AD].

Charles (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He witnessed a baptism for wright James Glendinning in 1766. He married Janet Richardson in 1760 and their children included John (b.1761) and Thomas (b.1772). The witnesses in 1761 were shoemaker Thomas Burnet and John Richardson (probably related to his wife). His son Charles died in Hawick in 1782. Charles (18th/19th C.) resident of Crailing Parish. In 1788 in Cavers Parish he married Betty Little. Charles Faa Blyth (1824/5–1902) son of Esther Faa Blyth, who was the last Queen of the Gypsies. Born at Kirk yetholm, he spent 58 years of his life in England, but returned in 1898 to claim the gypsy crown. This was said to be to ‘boost the tourist trade’, the coronation being a pageant attended by thousands. He was visited in his palace by the Hawick Archæological Society field trip in 1901. He died less than a year later, while sitting in his chair. Charles Dickson (1825/6–95) son of Robert and Jane Crawford. In 1841 he was an apprentice grocer living on the Sandbed. On the 1861 he was visiting his brother Walter at Mabonlaw. He went to Edinburgh as a young man and is said to have broken his leg when he kicked out at a rat, but hit something solid instead; he was attended to in his recovery by Christina Smart who he subsequently married. The couple had 6 children. He worked as a commercial traveller and lived at 21 Montague Street in Edinburgh, dying on Chalmers Street. Christina (1702–82) daughter of Thomas of Knowesouth. She may have inherited the family estate from her father, but this is unclear, since her brother John was also Laird. She married Gilbert Ainslie in Bedrule in 1724. Their eldest son was Thomas. David (17th C.) recorded ‘in Gramis’ in Abbotrule Parish in 1643. The lands were valued at £10, but it is unclear where this was (although ‘Grange’ is possible if this was an error). David (17th C.) mason listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He is listed as a resident of the east-side of Hawick on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He may be the David who married Marion Douglas and whose children included: Margaret (b.1682); John (b.1685); Adam (b.1682); and Marion (b.1682). The witnesses in 1685 were John Scott in Ormiston and ‘Mr’ John Purdom. David (19th/20th C.) started sheep sales in Selkirk. In 1883 he and James Scott acquired Loch Park when Andrew Oliver & Son moved to Weensland Road. They continued sales there until the early 1900s. Elizabeth see Elizabeth Scott. Euphan (17th C.) servant of Francis Scott, former minister of Hassendean. She is recorded in 1693 when Robert Scott was fined in Hawick for striking her ‘with ane rung, and breaking of her mistresses rocke when she was spinning there’. Francis (d.bef. 1841) watchmaker of the High Street, who was one of the first members of the Curling Club. He is recorded as a watch and clockmaker on the High Street in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He married Alison Henderson and their children were: Francis Elliot; Agnes; and William, who carried on the jewellery business. An unnamed child of his died in 1811. His wife was listed as a member of Allars Kirk in 1829. Francis (19th C.) clock-keeper in Hawick from 1869. He was probably son of watchmaker William. Sir George of Chatto (c.1380–c.1428) probably son of Robert of Rutherford and nephew of James of that Ilk. He was squire of Archibald, 4th Earl of Douglas. He was probably a survivor of the Battle of Vernueil in 1424. He married Janet Rutherford, possibly of Edgerston; he appears to have died shortly afterwards. He was succeeded by his son Robert. Other children were: Adam, Prior of the Anchorites in Ancrum; George of Langnewton; Walter of Redheugh; Katherine, who married William Cockburn of Henderland; and Helen, who married Sir Thomas Borthwick of Colylaw and Bourhouse. George of Ettles Cleuch (15th C.) son of Robert of Chatto. He was a member of the panel for the inheritance of Branxholme and Buccleuch in 1492, when he is listed as ‘Georgium Rutherfurde de Edilisichuh’.
Rutherford

1495 there was a 'retour or inquest' at Jedburgh, finding that he was heir to his father in the lands of Nether Chatto, Sharplaw, 'Eddillischuch' and Hangingshaw, as well as the west half of Craesburgh and the lands of Hunthill. He also had a sasine for the same lands. George of Hunthill (d.c.1496) son of Robert and Margaret Glendinning. He could not have been Laird for very long. His wife's name may have been Mariotta. He was succeeded by his son William. George of Longnewton (d.c.1499) 3rd son of George of Chatto. He was witness to a document dealing with Denholm Mains in 1483 and left his seal on a document relating to Synton in 1494. In 1493 he was surety for Henry Rauch in Longnewton (who had remission for the murder of Thomas Gibbinson), as well as for Patrick and Arthur Crawford in Longnewton Mill. He was Sheriff of Selkirk in 1494 when Alexander, Lord Erskine succeeded to his father's lands of Synton and hereditary Sheriffship of Selkirkshire. In 1494/5 he was surety for Henry Ruth in Longnewton. Also in 1494/5 James Davidson in Raperlaw was allowed to compone for several crimes, including stealing 40 cows and 100 sheep from him at 'Camys', as well as 40 sheep from him at Sandystanes. In 1497 he gave a charter 'from his place of Sandystanys' to his grandson Walter. In the same year he was mentioned in an inquest relating to the boundaries of Melrose Abbey lands. He married Catherine Lyle. His sons Adam and Gilbert were recorded in 1498. He may already have been dead when the 'Dominus de langnewtoun' (no forename given) was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1502. A case at the 1502 Justice-aire at Jedburgh related how 120 of his sheep had been stolen from 'Sandystanys' by the Laird of Minto and 'resett' by Adam Scott 'in Hawchester's (probably Highchesters). Another case in 1502 involved Peter Turnbull in Bonchester, who was in a group who burned 120 bolls of barley and 60 bolls of wheat belonging to him, as well as stealing 25 oxen, 44 cows and 60 sheep from him, and burning 11 horses, and other goods of his at Barnhills. Peter Turnbull was also involved in burning 26 bolls of barley and 40 bolls of oats at 'Sandystanis', with the help of John Turnbull of Minto and others. One more case in 1502 recorded how Adam Grahamslaw had stolen 41 sheep and 8 threaves of barley from him. In 1510 his son Adam had letters of rehabilitation for his crimes after spending months in Edinburgh Castle. George of Hunthill (15th/16th C.) son of William. In 1500 there was a dispensation from the Archbishop of Glasgow, allowing him to marry Elizabeth Turnbull, although they were related in the third and fourth degrees of consanguinity. In 1507 there was a 'retour of inquest', finding that he was heir of his father William of Hunthill, in the lands of Nether Chatto, Sharplaw, Ettles Cleuch and Hangingshaw. In 1508 he was on the retour panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting the Lordship of Liddesdale. In 1510 he confirmed a charter of Craesburgh for Ninian Glendinning. In 1516 he, along with Thomas of that Ilk and John of Hundalee had a bond of manrent with Alexander, Lord Home. In 1520/1 he had a charter for a 4 merkland in Craesburgh. His children included: Andrew, who succeeded, and married Helen, daughter of Philip Rutherford, younger of that Ilk; John 'Cock' of Hunthill, who married Christine Pringle and succeeded his brother Andrew; William, who married Christian Armstrong; and Archibald, who was Canon of Jedburgh and married a Douglas of Bonjedward. George of Hundalee (c.1470-c.1545) son of John, whom he succeeded. He was 'junior Laird of Hundalee' in 1502 when serving as surety for Lawrence in 'quhitmeir'. He was a Bailie for Sir William Colville of Ochiltree in 1504. In 1508 he was part (along with his father) of the panel of retour for Adam Hepburn. He was one of the major Border Barons who signed a bond in 1525 to help the Earl of Angus, the Warden. In 1526 he was listed among the many Borderers in a remission for attacking the Earl of Arran; his sons Nicholas and Andrew were also listed. He had a charter for Hundalee in 1528. In 1538 he was charged with assisting 'George Ruthirfurd, called Cokburne, John Ruthirfurde, called Jock of ye Green, and other rebels at the Kingis horn'; In 1539 he had a charter for Ashtrees. In 1542 he resigned his lands into the hands of James V, in favour of his son Nicholas; this included Hundalee, Ashtrees, Gruptet, Kirk Yetholm, Town Yetholm, Cherrytrees, Makerstoun, Ruecastle and Lanton. In 1544 he signed a bond to serve Henry VIII during the 'Rough Wooing', but in the following year the English burned Hundalee anyway. He was succeeded by Sir Nicholas, his son. He also had a daughter who married Adam Grahamslaw of Newton. George 'Cockbank' (16th C.) said to be a 'great riever, thief and manslayer'. He was on a 1540 list of Scottish rebels 'reset' within England who the Wardens wanted captured. He is there 'Geo. Rutherford called Cok Bankes' and listed along with his brother ‘Hobbe’ and a son with unknown first name, as well as other Rutherfords. He is probably the ‘George Ruthirfurde, called Cokburne’ listed along with John ‘called Jock of ye Green’ and other rebels who Ker of Cessford, Douglas of Cavers, Rutherford of Hundalee and Ker of Dolfinhstone were accused of assisting in 1538. About the same time he was captured and held in Carlisle Castle with his son Thomas and Tom Bell, probably so they could be exchanged for the Englishman Dr. Hillyard. In 1540 James V refused to exchange him for the churchman, but offered to swap him for any English lawbreaker; his fate is not recorded. He was probably related to ‘Robin’ and ‘Gawen’, who are also listed in 1540. He is probably the George recorded along with Thomas Turnbull in 1541, when they were accused of having been on a raid into England with 100 other Scotsmen in which John Routledge and Robert Noble were killed. George of Longnewton (16th C.) listed in 1553/4 among the Rutherfords in an assurance not to harm the Kers. He is also recorded in 1560 on the bond to settle the feud between the Kers and the Rutherfords. He was son of William, who was murdered earlier by Robert Ker of Newhall. He signed the bond ‘at the pen led by the notar’, suggesting that he could not write himself. He was a juror on a retourn in 1600. He may be the same man as George of Fairnington. George of the Grange (16th C.) signed a bond with John Kerr of Ferniehirst in 1557, along with Thomas Turnbull of Hartshaugh, Adam Turnbull of Woollee and Adam Turnbull of Billerwell. He was also part of the bond in same year among Turnbills, Elisters and others to bring in William Nixon (‘Clement’s Will’). In 1560 he signed the bond (‘at the pen led by the notar’) to settle the feud between the Kers and the Rutherfords. In 1569 he was ‘George Ruthirfurde in the Grange’ when a set of Homes, Rutherfords and Kers were caution for him to remain in ward in Forfar. In 1572/3 he swore allegiance to the Crown, allowed with several other Borderers, with Andrew, younger of Hundalee, as surety. In 1575 he was one of the arbitrators appointed for the Elisters in their feud with the Pringles. George of Fairnington (16th C.) probably son of William of Longnewton. He is listed as ‘George Ruthirfurde of Pharnyngtoune’ when he witnessed the 1568/9 bond between the Scotts and the Kers, signed in Melrose. In 1580/1 he witnessed a list of the feuars of Newton (near Melrose), made at Selkirk. In about 1590 he was listed among landed men of the Borders. Also in 1590 he was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. In 1601 he was among a group of Rutherfords who were accused of firing weapons towards the Youngs at a horserace. In 1602 he signed a bond of peace among Border lairds (with his hand ‘at the pen’). He was probably ancestor of the later George of Fairnington. He may have married Margaret Cranston and had 5 sons. George (16th C.) recorded in Bewlie in 1580 when he had a marriage contract with Isabel, daughter of George Riddell in Lilliesleaf. The contract included conditions that if he died before there were offspring, then his wife was to inherit half of his possessions and get her dowry back. George of the Grange (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1618 as ‘younger in Abbotreull’ when he had a bond with Walter Turnbull of Bedrule. This was on behalf of William Shiel of Fodderlee. He could be the George ‘of Rule’ whose ‘Airs’ were recorded as owning land in Abbotrule Parish in 1643, valued at £20. He is probably related to ‘Dand’ of the Grange, who is recorded in 1581/2. George of Fairnington (16th/17th C.) probably son or grandson of the earlier George of Faimington. He was signatory of the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. His name was written ‘G. Rutherforde of flairningtoome’. In 1643 he is recorded as owner of teinds in Roxburgh Parish. He was closely related to the Rutherfords of Nisbet, Knowesouth and Ruecastle. Either he or an earlier George signed a bond among Border Lairds in 1602. He is probably the George ‘of Fairnitoun’ who acted as bailie for a sasine for the Haliburtons at Friarshaw in 1606. He was fined in 1611 for the non-appearance of several other Rutherfords. He may be the George of Langnewton whose younger sons were Thomas, Adam and Patrick, from whom sprang the Rutherfords of Nisbet, Knowesouth and Ruecastle. The owner of lands in Cavers later in the 17th century sometimes transcribed as ‘Lady Farnington’ is probably in fact Lady ‘Symington’, and unrelated to him. George (d.1651) said to be brother of John in East Nisbet. After the Union he received lands on Rede Water through marriage. He apparently had 21 sons, most of whom served the King during the Civil War. He died in the Battle of Worcester, along with 14 of his sons. George of Fairnington (17th/18th C.) son of George. He was served heir to his father in the lands of Faimington in 1674. He could be the same as one of the other Georges, although this seems like a separate generation. He is probably the Laird who paid the land tax in Roxburgh Parish in 1678. He may be the George of Fairnington who married Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas (and Elizabeth Turnbull), who was son of Robert of Edgerston. George of Fairnington (17th/18th C.) son of George and Elizabeth Rutherford of Edgerston. He succeeded his father in 1692. He contributed £200 to the Darien Scheme in 1695. In 1686 he married Barbara, daughter of John Haliburton of Newmains and Margaret Rutherford of Edgerston; she died in 1750. Their children were: George, who succeeded, and killed his brother-in-law; David; Margaret, who married Robert Pringle of Clifton; and Elizabeth, who married Thomas Haliburton of Muirhouselaw, and secondly George Haliburton of Muirhouselaw, Lord Provost of Edinburgh. George of Fairnington (b.1691) son of George and Barbara Haliburton of Newmains. He may be the younger Laird of Fairnington whose name appears on a list of Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1708. In 1716 he slew Thomas Haliburton of Muirhouselaw in a drunken fight over the rights to a spring bordering their properties; the spring was afterwards known as the ‘bloody well’. He kept in hiding until it was clear that he would not be prosecuted. He was listed on a memorial of 1738, claiming the right of the Lordship of Rutherford to John Scott of Belford. His wife could have been the ‘Lady Ferninton’ who paid the window tax at Timpendean in 1748. His son George, W.S., married Mary, daughter of Strother Ker of Littledean. George (18th/19th C.) farmer at West Lees in Hobkirk Parish, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses. Lieut. George of Knowesouth (d.1806) 2nd son of Thomas of Knowesouth. He succeeded his brother John, who died without an heir, only a few years after inheriting Knowesouth. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805. He was a Lieutenant in the Royal Navy, and while serving on the Trident had been responsible for sentencing some men to illegal punishments, which had led to their deaths. He was taken into custody in Plymouth, but escaped from ship the night before the trial, and was believed to have drowned. Doubts over the circumstances of his death (and rumours that he had effected an escape) led to delays in legal proceedings to decide on the inheritance of the estate. He was ultimately succeeded by his aunt, who had married Thomas Scott, and their son Charles Scott. George (18th/19th C.) watch and clockmaker on the High Street, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He may have been related to Francis, who was listed separately as a clockmaker at the same time. One of them was probably the Rutherford marked at about 39 High Street on Wood’s 1824 map. George (b.c.1800) from Jedburgh, he was farm steward on the Minto estate. He married Mary (or ‘Mina’) Easton, probably in St. Boswells. In 1841 he was living at Minto Lillielaw Lodge with his wife and 4 children. Their children included: James (b.1825); Agnes (b.1827); Helen (b.1830); John (b.1833), partner in Turner & Rutherford’s in Hawick; and Isabel (b.1839). George (b.1806) joiner at Blacklee and Kirkstyle in Hobkirk Parish. His father was James, joiner at Boucher Bridge, while several other brothers were also joiners. In 1841 he was listed as a labourer at ‘Killinknowe’, and was a joiner at ‘Blackley’ in 1851. He married Agnes Inglis and their children included: James (b.1830); William (b.1832); Helen (b.1834); Isabella (b.1836); Thomas (b.1838); Janet (b.1839); Betty (b.1843), George (b.1845); and Margaret (b.1847). George (d.c.1895) son of James. He carried on his father’s tailor’s business at 60 High Street, later becoming a tobacconist. He married Mary Ann, daughter of James Stewart. They had a son, Thomas. After his death his wife carried on the business for a few years, before it was taken over by William Sharp. She later married Mr. Irving. Gilbert (15th C.) recorded as ‘Gilberti de Ruthurfurde’ in 1437 when Walter Scott of Buccleuch was granted lands in Eckford for capturing him. It is unclear how he was related to other Rutherfords. One suggestion is that he is the same man as William, 3rd son of Sir Richard and Jean Douglas. Gilbert (1832/3–99) Hawick resident. In 1852 he married Agnes Park, and she died in 1907, aged 75. Their children included: Maggie, who died young; William (1851–98), who died at West Meridan, Connecticut, U.S.A.; Mary (1854–1925); Margaret (1856–61); Frank (1865/6–1928); Betsy (1870–1931); John (d.1936); and Gilbert, tweed merchant. He died in Howlands Terrace and is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. Gilbert (b.1863) son of Gilbert. He became a tweed merchant in Hawick and lived at 3 Douglas Road. He married Nellie, daughter of farm steward George Moffat. He secondly married Esther Aitken, sister of Bailie George Aitken. His children included: George, cashier with Blaikie’s coal merchants; and Gilbert, who died in WW1. Gregory (13th C.) one of the earliest of the family on record. He was witness to a document relating to Fairnington in the Melrose Abbey charters in about 1214. He witnessed Rutherford Rutherford rose Abbey in 1425. In 1427 he was 'Jacobo de document between Haig of Bemersyde and Mel-

He witnessed a charter of 1435 transferring lands of Braxholmie etc. in the Barony of Hawick from John Inglis to his son Thomas. He may be the James who witnessed the

She delivered the lands of Rutherford, Wells and Edgerston into the hands of the King, so they could be infefted to her and her husband in 1505 and 1506. Also in 1506 her husband received a pardon for the murder of Thomas Rutherford within Jedburgh Abbey. About the same time the King confirmed to her the ‘half merk land of Bethiroull’ near the parish church, ‘held in tack by Herbut Turnbull’. In 1511 James Douglas of Cavers resigned his su-

She married 4 times, her husband being: Sir John Forman of Davine (who had been one of her tutors); Sir Thomas Ker of Merington, who was killed by the Rutherfords, apparently as the newly wedds left the church; Andrew Rutherford of Huntthill; and Patrick Home of Broomhouse. She gallantly defended the tower of Broomhouse from the English force led by Sir Ralph Evers, eventually being burned to death there, along with her children. The cruelty of this act was used as a rallying cry by the Scots at the Battle of Ancrum Moor. Since she never had a surviving son to succeed her, despite her desperation to do so, her lands passed to other family members. Henry Thomas (18th/19th C.) recorded at Redfordgreen as Commissioner of Selkirkshire in 1819. He may only have been given the lands in order to be a voter, since there is no evidence he ever lived in the area. James of that Ilk (c.1395–1454) son of Sir Richard. lands of Crailing. In 1471 he received a charter of the lands of Hownam, Capehope and Swinset, confirmed along with his wife in 1483. He is probably the James who had a debt relating to Crown lands in 1471, with Thomas Turnbull and Robert Rutherford as pledges. In 1482 he had a charter for the patronage of Bedrule Kirk. In 1483 he was also witness to a document dealing with Denholm Mains and another for Smallholm. He was appointed a commissioner for settling the Border marches in 1487, under the designation of Lord Rutherford. In 1488 he was mentioned in a charter of James III re-granting the regality of Cavers to William Douglas; there is he stated ‘for the favour which he bears to the said William Douglas’ to perform his service to the King. He gained the barony of Edgerston in 1492/3 and is recorded in that year when his superior James Douglas confirmed the lands of Rutherford and Wells (or ‘Walls’, in the Barony of Cavers) to him and his heirs. His possessions described in 1492/3 included the patronage of Bedrule Kirk. He is last recorded in early 1494 when he was on the panel for Alexander Erskine inheriting Synton. He married Margaret, daughter of Thomas, Lord Erskine. Their children included: Philip, whose son Richard succeeded, and whose widow married Sir Walter Scott of Bruxholme and Buccleuch; John, recorded as son of the Laird of Rutherford in 1493; Thomas of Edgerston, who succeeded his nephew as Rutherford of that Ilk; Andrew; Robert; Christian, who married Sir Robert Ker of Caverton; and Janet, who married John Rutherford of Hundalee. He was succeeded by his grandson Richard, who was the last Rutherford of Rutherford. James (d.c.1500) son of Adam, he was murdered at the Kirk of Hawick. In 1502 Peter Turnbull in Bonchester had remission for his murder, as well as a long list of other crimes. Some other Turnbuls (accomplices of Peter) were ‘at the horn’ for being involved in his murder. Probably the same James was mentioned in 1494/5 when Patrick Turnbull at Wauchope Tower ‘componed’ for associating with the Turnbuls who were responsible for his murder. James (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 when he was part of a letter of ‘respite and protection’ for the friends and family of William Douglas of Cavers (Sheriff of Teviotdale), while he was away in Denmark. Other men named were William Douglas (heir of the Sheriff) and William, Robert and Thomas Rutherford. It seems likely that they were members of the family of Rutherford and Wells. He could be the same as the James listed among the Borderers pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran, recorded between the Rutherfords of Hundalee and of Grange. James ‘Kay’ (15th/16th C.) recorded being in Ancrum in 1502 when he had remission for a list of crimes. This included stealing cattle, sheep, geese and threaves of oats from Fairnington on several occasions, his surety being Archibald Heriot, Captain of Ancrum. James (17th C.) tenant at Kirkhouses in Ashkirk Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694, when he paid for 8 hearths. Probably the same James married Margaret Hastie and had children, baptised in Ashkirk: Beatrice (b.1691); James (b.1692); John (b.1694); unnamed (b.1695); Margaret (b.1696); and George (b.1697). The witnesses in 1691 were Robert Pringle and John Cutliberton and in 1694 were John Stewart and Andrew Fletcher. James (17th C.) tenant in Orniston. He was resident of Orniston on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. In 1716 in Hawick his daughter Mary married Archibald Paterson, tenant in the Flex. James (b.1697/8) shepherd in Hawick Parish. He worked as shepherd for 20 years at Alton Croft, 14 years at Nether Southfield and later at Langflat. In 1761 he was 3 men selected to perambulate the boundary between Fenwick and Alton Croft to regularise it. He was a widower in 1767 when he gave evidence in the court case regarding the division of the Common. James of Bowland (d.1747) only son of Robert of Bowland and Anne Murray. He was M.P. for Selkirkshire 1730–34, succeeding his cousin John Pringle. He also served as Commissary for Peebles in 1733. He was a ruling elder at the 1737 General Assembly of the Church of Scotland. He was listed on a memorial of 1738, claiming the right of the Lordship of Rutherford to John Scott of Belford. He is supposed to have owed a large sum in arrears of teinds, but was unable to find evidence that his father had purchased the right of these teinds; however, in a dream his dead father told him about the old writer who had the documents, which he was able to retrieve the next day. He married Isabella, daughter of John Sharplaw (or perhaps Simpson). His daughters Anna and Barbara emigrated to North Carolina. James (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1727 and 1728 he was living at Eilrig. In 1726 he married Helen Haliburton, also from Roberton. His children included: Janet (b.1727); Maly (b.1728); and Isobel (b.1730). James (18th C.) farmer at Falahill in Lilliesleaf Parish on the 1789–92

Horse Tax Rolls. James (18th C.) listed as gardener at Midshiels in 1791 and 1794, when he was working for Archibald Douglas. He may be the James in Wilton who married Agnes Hogg in Melrose in 1700. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at Sandystones in Ancrum Parish. He owned a horse according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was additionally taxed for having a non-working dog in 1797. James (b.1768/9) born in Crailling Parish, he was farmer at Barnhills. In 1851 he was farmer there of 360 acres, employing 12 labourers. His children included Elizabeth, Agnes and Andrew. James (b.1777/8) joiner at Bonchester Bridge, probably son of John, who was shepherd at Shiplaw Cross. He first set up as a joiner at Hobkirkstyle, then moved to Langraw and finally to Bonchester Bridge by about 1813. His joiner’s shop was next to the blacksmith’s there. He married Isabella Thomson (1779/80–1847) and their children were: Agnes (b.1804), who must have died young; John (b.1805), joiner at Old Gatehousecote; George (b.1806), joiner at Kirkstyle; James (1808–41), whose son Tom was blacksmith at Bonchester Bridge; Elizabeth (b.1810), who probably died young; Thomas (b.1811), who was a soldier and then policeman in Hawick; William (b.1812), who emigrated to Australia; Robert Scott (b.1814), also a joiner, married Isabella Hall; Agnes (again, b.1816), who married a Hawick shoemaker called Elder; Douglas (b.1818), who worked in a sawmill in Leith; and Alexander (b.1820), who followed his father as a joiner. He could be the James who was listed as a Steward at the Common Riding Races of 1836. It is possible he was the James, son of John and Janet Noteman, born in Wilton Parish in 1778. James (d.bef. 1840) Slater in Hawick. His daughter Jenima died in 1840. James (1808–41) 3rd son of Bonchester joiner James. He married Betty Beattie, who was daughter of Betty Stevenson and grand-daughter of John Stevenson, Laird of Kirkstyle. Their son Thomas (b.1832) eventually took over as blacksmith from his grand-uncle Andrew Stevenson. James (1818/9–1900) tailor of 60 High Street. He is listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1861 he was listed at 21 High Street. He married Mary Wilson, who died in 1892, aged 73. Their children included Betsy Waldie, William, Isabella and Elizabeth, who all died in infancy, Robert, James, George (tailor and tobacconist), Alison and Mary (who married Andrew Wight). James (b.1825/6) born in New York state, he was a hosiery warehouseman in Hawick. In 1861 he was living at 1 Teviot Place (which may be the same as 4 Teviot Road). He married Isabella Elliot and their children included: George (b.1856); and Thomas Elliot (b.1861). James (b.1842/3) born in Roberton Parish. In 1901 he was shepherd at Dodburn. His wife was Janet and they had a daughter who was also Janet. James (b.1843) son of William, farmer at Ferniehirst Mill. He was farm steward at Kershaugh and in 1877 or 1878 moved to Gatehousecote, where he was also farm steward. By 1891 he had moved to Chesters Grange in Ancrum Parish. He married Isabella Hood and their children were William Rae (b.1877), John Hood (b.1878), Cecilia Richardson (b.1880), Henry James (b.1883), Charles (b.1885/6) and Robert (b.1887/8). James (b.1876) son of Tom, blacksmith at Bonchester Bridge. He was educated in Hobkirk and served his apprenticeship with his father. He worked in Kelso and Hawick, returned to Bonchester, worked with a shipbuilders in Belfast and then in Edinburgh, before taking over as blacksmith at Bonchester in 1899. In about 1904 he became tenant of the inn at Bonchester and gave up the blacksmith’s business. He married Margaret Sparks, who was sister of his brother Thomas’ wife. James (b.1861) born in Hawick, he attended St. Andrews Kirk. He studied at Edinburgh University and was ordained as a minister of the Free Kirk in Coldstream in 1887. He became minister at Craigmillar Park, Edinburgh in 1896. James (20th C.) Managing Director of Turner & Rutherford’s at Mansfield Mills. He was in this position at the time of the 1955 fire, which was not long before the firm foelded. Jane see Mrs. James Rutherford Oliver. Janet (17th C.) landowner in Abbotrule Parish in 1663. She paid £70 on the Land Tax Rolls. Perhaps she was widow of a man who formerly owned lands in Abbotrule, for example ‘Bertie Rutherford of the Wood’ or George of the Grange. Mrs. Janet (18th/19th C.) closest relative of William Turnbull, last Laird of Langraw. She inherited the property sometime in the 1790s. She married a Mr. Easton, who settled in America, and sold Langraw in 1801. Jean (18th/19th C.) wife of Caleb, she was known as ‘Jean Caleb’, and her surname is uncertain. Together with ‘the Noted Beattie’ they locally performed ‘Wild Man of Bengal’ shows. Her snuff box is in the Museum, with the date February 22 1803. John of Hundalee (15th C.) probably son of Nicholas of Hundalee. In 1434 he was ordered to leave Jedburgh Abbey and to allow the Abbot, Thomas Cranston, to take possession (probably a dispute over burial rights in the choir between the 2 families). He was witness to the sasine for the lands of Wolfelee and Wolfhopelee in 1436. John, son of Nicholas of Yetholm and Grubet was also a witness, showing that they are different men; he is there recorded as ‘Johannis de Ruthirfurdu de Hundwelle’. He may be the John who in 1437 was on the retour for deciding on ownership of the East Mains of Hawick. In 1464/5 he was ‘Johe of Ruthirforde of Hundweldee’ when he was on the panel to rule on the dispute over Kirkton Mains and the Flex. In 1467 he is recorded as ‘Johannis Ruthirfurde, dominus de Hundwalve’ when he was appointed by Parliament (along with John Ainslie of Doplphinston) to make an evaluation of Roxburghshire. He appears to have married Margaret Charteris (daughter of Thomas of Cagnore) and then a daughter of Sir Thomas Cranston. The contemporary John appears easy to confuse with him, while the later John of Hundacell was possibly his son, but more likely to have been son of Andrew of Hundacell. John (d.c.1470) son of Nicholas of Yetholm and Grubet. Along with his father he witnessed the sasine of Woollee and Wolfhopelee to David Home in 1436. This was also witnessed by John of Hundacell, showing they are 2 separate people, even although he may be the later John of Hundacell; this is clearly confusing, and family histories may be muddled. In 1450 he was on the panel for the ‘retour’ of the Barony of Hawick to William Douglas of Drumlanrig. In 1453 he had a lease of the Crown lands of ‘Kyncavil’. In 1457 he had a sasine for lands at Falnash, Hassendealn, Grubet and Kirk Yetholm. In the Exchequer Rolls of 1458 he is probably the John, heir of the deceased Nicholas who had previously dealt with the accounts for Jedburgh. He firstly married Elizabeth, sister of John Ruthfurde of Hundalle. His second wife was Margaret Turnbull. He was succeeded by his son Andrew of Hundacell and had another son George. John of Edgerston (d.bef. 1501). In 1494 he was fined 10 pounds at the Judiciary Court for failing to produce Walter (probably a relative). He was one of the sureties (with Sir Robert Ker) for the appearance of Robert Langlands to answer to his murder of chaplain George Fairneylaw in 1494/5; they had to pay £20 when Langlands failed to show up. In the same year he was also surety for Thomas, son of Nicholas Rutherford, who had killed Duthac Rutherford, for James Davidson in Raperlaw, George Davidson in Raperlaw and for the Grahamslaws of Newton. He also served as surety for others in 1494/5 and was fined for the non-appearance of some of them. He was possibly second son of James Rutherford of that Ilk and elder brother of Thomas of Edgerston. He was probably the John, son of the Laird of Rutherford, who witnessed a sasine for lands in Denholm and Cavers in 1491/2, and also the John, son of the Laird of Rutherford, who was surety for a resident of Edgerston in 1493. It is possible he is the ‘Johnne of ruthirfurde in edzartoun’ who was fined ‘a ruk of corne’ in 1503 for failing to appear at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. John (15th/16th C.) brother of Ninian in Ancrum. At the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1494/5, he was surety for himself, as well as his brother acting for him. He failed to appear and was to be fined at the next court. At the 1502 Justice-aire he was surety for his brother Ninian in Ancrum, as well as for himself and for Andrew Laidlaw in Edgerston; failing to appear, he was denounced as a rebel and his goods seized. John of Hundacell (c.1450–c.1524) son of Andrew of Hundacell. He is easy to confuse with the slightly earlier John of Hundacell (who may have been his uncle). He is probably the ‘Johanni Rodenfurde de Hundole’ who was a bailie appointed by Alexander, Lord Home, to infeft Andrew Ker in the lands of Crailing and Hownam in 1484. In 1491/2 he was recorded as ‘Johannem Ruthirfurde de Hundole’ when he had a charter for the lands of Ruecastle (resigned by Thomas Dickson), as well as Samieston (resigned by Thomas Ker of Cessford). In 1492 he obtained a decree from the Privy Council against William and Archibald Douglas of Cavers, as well as John Gledstains of that Ilk for 100 merks due to his grandfather, Nicholas. He was a member of the panel of ‘retour’ for the lands of Synton in 1494, where he is ‘Johannem Ruthirfurde de Hundole’. At the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1494/5 his ‘suitor’ was Adam Sluthman, who was present at the court for his lands of Ruecastle. In 1499 he witnessed a document for Walter Ker of Cessford and also the sasine for George, Master of Angus being infefted in the Lordships of Eskdale and Ewesdale. In 1502 he presented Nicholas Oliver at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh, to ‘give suit’ for his lands of Grubet. In 1502 he and his brother Thomas were sureties for Nicholas, and also had remission ‘for intercommuning with ye Ruthirfurdes, ye Kingis rebels’. Also in 1502 he served as surety for Richard in Littlekean, for James in Nisbet and for John ‘Fiffe’, and he was fined for the non-appearance in court of William Turnbull in Bunchester. Additionally William of Hunthill was surety that he would not...

harm John Tait in Yetholm. In 1504 he acted as a specially appointed ‘bailie in that part’ for the sasine of Maxton Craig granted to William Turnbull. In 1508 he was on the retour panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting the Lordship of Liddesdale. He was appointed as temporary Sheriff of Roxburghshire in 1509 to give the inheritance of Cavers Barony to James, son and heir of Sir William Douglas; he is recorded as ‘John Ruthirfurd of Hundole’ and George is also listed (so possibly related). In 1516 he, along with Thomas of that Ilk and George of Hunthill had a bond of manrent with Alexander, Lord Home. The house at Hundalee was destroyed by the English while he was Laird. He married Christian Boyd. Their children included: George, who succeeded; Lucia, who married Adam, son of Philip Nisbet of that Ilk; Janet, who married Adam Grimslaw; Margaret, who married Ralph Ker of Primside Loch; and Alison, who had a marriage contract with George, eldest son of William Ker in Lintalee, but appears to have died before the wedding, since her parents were ordered to pay 90 merks to Ker in 1500. John (15th/16th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1502 when the Coroner, William Cranston, was fined for failing to arrest him. His name is given as ‘Johanne rutherfurd’ called ‘fiffe’ in ‘le grange’. In a separate court entry he was found to be infirm, with his surety being John of Hundalee. It is unclear how he might be related to other Rutherfords of Grange. John ‘the Cock o Hunthill’ (c.1510–77) son of George, he succeeded his older brother Andrew. There was a ‘retour of inquest’ in 1529, finding that he was heir of his brother Andrew in the lands of Nether Chatto and others. He is recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books in 1535, with David (possibly related) as his attorney and in that year the Sheriff of Selkirkshire confirmed that he was to be restored to the Lordship by royal letters, dismissing the dispute with Alison Douglas, widow of David Home of Wedderburn. A further ‘retour of inquest’ in 1558 established that he was heir to his brother in the lands of Capehope. In 1530 he resigned lands in Scraesburgh in favour of himself and his wife Christian Hoppringle. He had charters for several lands and baronies in the 1530s. In 1535 he was represented in Selkirk by ‘the venerable sir William’, who may have been a relative. He was convicted in 1538 of assisting several men who were ‘at the horn’; also convicted were James Douglas of Cavers, other Rutherfords and also Kers. In 1541 he was tenant of Blackhaugh in Tweed. He was probably the Laird of Hunthill who was accused of resetting English fugitives in 1541, specifically 9 Hunters of Tyndale. He was on retour in 1542 and 1564. He was among Borderers who swore allegiance to the English in 1544. In 1545 he was among lairds in Teviotdale who signed a bond to settle feuds. He was probably the ‘lard of Hunthill’ who signed a bond of assurance with Somerset at Kelso in 1547, along with many other Border lairds. In 1549 he was listed among the associates of Walter Ker of Cessford who were accused of helping the English in raids upon the farms of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. In 1553/4 he was listed among the Rutherfords in an assurance not to harm the Kers; he signed with his hand led by the notary and the pledge for his sons was John of the Knowe. Also in 1553/4 he was on the panel for Sir Walter Scott inheriting his grandfather’s lands of Branxholme and Buccleuch. In 1558 he granted the lands of Scraesburgh (occupied by Thomas Rutherford and others) to his son and heir John. In 1560 he was named on the bond to settle the feud between the Kers and the Rutherfords; he and his son John was said to be responsible for the murder of Andrew Ker of Corbethouse and as part of the restitution his 2nd son William was to marry a daughter of James Ker of Corbethouse, while his son and heir John was to offer his sword to ask forgiveness from James Ker. He signed the bond ‘at the pen led by the notar’, meaning that he could not write himself. In 1561 he was listed among Border lairds who appeared before the Queen to promise to present the names of those who were guilty of theft. In 1564 he was listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the warden, Ker of Cessford. In 1565 he is listed among men complained about by the Warden of the Middle Marches for not presenting accused men from their lands. In 1565 he was explicitly instructed (along with Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst) to enter one of his servants at the next truce day, to answer accusations from Englishmen; later this was increased to 2 servants to relieve the Warden, and then he himself was warded in Edinburgh Castle to redress the charges against his servants, then was ordered to pay the expenses to Ker of Cessford. Also in 1565 he signed the ‘Band of Teviotdale’ (but helped by the notary). Additionally, he was among landowners summoned before the Privy Council in 1565 to try to resolve the feud between Sir Nicholas Rutherford of Hundalee and the people of Jedburgh. In 1566 he was ordered to enter ‘Sym Oliver, Cuddy

Hendrisoun, and Mathew Dowglas’ to the Warden. He was among men re-ordered to appear before the Privy Council in 1567 regarding order in the Middle Marches. He signed the bond of peace for the Borders in 1569. Also in 1569 he was on the panel of inquest for Grizel Borthwick inheriting superiority of her father’s lands in Wilton. Additionally in 1569 he was a surety for Robert Ker of Lochtour, as well as for Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule and was directed to relieve Sir Walter Ker of Cessford of a debt. In 1571/2 he signed the bond to act against Borders thieves and was surety for David Oliver in Whiteside. He served as surety before the Privy Council in 1571 and 1577. In 1572/3 he gave his assurances that he would not help Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst, with Richard of Edgerston as surety. He signed the ‘Band of Roxburgh’ in 1573, ‘with my hand at the pen’. In 1574 he, his son John, and several other Rutherfords had a ‘bond of manrent’ with Archibald, 8th Earl of Angus. In 1576 he was surety for Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule. In 1529 he firstly married Christine ‘Hoppringle’, daughter of David Pringle of Smalholm, this requiring special permission because of consanguinity. He secondly married Isobel, daughter of Sir Walter Ker of Cessford. His children included: John, who succeeded; Mariotta, who married William Rutherford of Leith; Mary, who married David Ainslie of Fala; Betty, who married Richard Rutherford of Edgerston; Steven, recorded in 1582 and 1593; and Thomas of ‘Grundisnuke’. He may have secondly married a daughter of Ker of Greenhead. He could be the ‘vmquhile Maister Johnne Rutherfurd’ named in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1574 in connection with the lands of Lanton. John (d.bef. 1560) probably son of Thomas and brother of Richard and Philip. He was said to have ‘dwelt in the tofts’, ‘had six fingers on each hand and six toes on each foot’ and to have been ‘of memorable strength and courage’. He is listed being ‘in Edzarstoun’ (i.e. Edgerston) in 1560 on the document attempting to settle the feud between the Rutherfords and the Kers. He was killed by Sir Andrew Ker of Littledean and his friends. Also ‘Johne Ruthirfurd thair’ (hence probably related) was mutilated in the same attack. As part of the attempt to resolve the feud, the daughter of Philip in Edgerston was to marry Andrew, son of Robert Ker of Newhall. John of the Knowe (16th C.) recorded in 1553/4 as a pledge for the sons of the Laird of Hunthill, that they would keep order. His lands were probably the Knowe of Nisbet. He described as being ‘in Know’ in the bond of 1560 to settle the feud between the Kers and the Rutherfords. He was one of the signatories of the bond, and hence must have been a fairly important family representative at that time. In 1572/3 he was ‘Jok of the Know’ when he swore allegiance to the Crown, with Andrew of Hundalee and Richard of Edgerston as sureties. In 1573 he was among men from the Jedburgh area accused by Robert Kerr of Woodhead of raiding his house and farm, although they were acquitted because Kerr had reset the fugitive Kerr of Ferniehirst; he was there recorded as ‘Jok of the Know in Nisbet’. In 1574 he and several other Rutherfords had a ‘bond of manrent’ with Archibald, 8th Earl of Angus. He was ‘of the Know’ in about 1578 when he and other Rutherfords and Turnbulls agreed to annul all former bonds and swear allegiance to the Crown. Also in about 1578 he was involved in a bond between the Kers and Rutherfords. He was recorded in about 1590 as ‘Johnne Rutherfurd of the Know in Nysbit’ among landed men of the Borders. Perhaps he is the same as one of the contemporary Johns. He was probably succeeded by George. John of Hunthill (16th C.) son of John. He was known as ‘the Cock’, like his father. In 1558 his father granted to him (and his wife) the 8 husbandlands of Scarbrough that was occupied by Thomas Rutherford and others. In 1565 he was ‘of Hunthill, youngar’ when he was one of the sureties for Robert Kerr of Woodhead. In 1578/9 there is mention of a feud between him (along with other Rutherfords, Douglas of Bonjedward and Turnbull of Bedrule) and the Kers of Cessford. Along with his father and friends, he was said to be responsible for the murder of Andrew Ker of Corbethouse; as part of the bond of 1560 to end the family feud he agreed to ask forgiveness from James Ker of Corbethouse by offering him his sword. In 1571 he was younger of Hunthill when he was one of the sureties for the leaders of the Olivers. In 1571/2 he signed the bond to act against Borders thieves and also acted as surety for tenants in Oxnam. In 1573 he was among the men from the Jedburgh area accused by Robert Kerr of Woodhead of raiding his house and farm; however, the group claimed they did it because Kerr had reset the fugitive Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst and were acquitted. He is probably the John of Hunthill who signed a bond with other Rutherfords and Turnbulls in about 1578 and another between the Kers and the Rutherfords. He was juror on a retour in 1579. His brother Stephen is recorded in 1582.
He is listed among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4 and on a bond of support for the Warden, Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst, at about the same time. He is recorded in 1586 when he was surety for Sir Andrew Ker of Greenhead and vice versa and was denounced as a rebel for not appearing. He was also denounced in 1586 for not appearing (along with his son Thomas and others) to answer charges of stopping the Commendator of Melrose collecting his teinds in Langnewton. He is recorded in 1587 when Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst served as surety for him to appear before the Privy Council, the penalty being the large sum of £10,000. In 1588 he was on a list of Borders ‘masters and landlords’ ordered to appear before the Privy Council. In 1589 he was listed among leaders in Teviotdale who signed a bond for keeping peace with England. Also in 1589 he was on a list of Border Lairds who failed to appear before the Privy Council to give ‘thair gude advise anent the gude reule and quietnes of the Bordouris’ and were denounced as rebels. In 1590 he was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. Also in 1590 his cautioner was Sir John Edmonson of that Ilk. He is further recorded in 1590 among men of Teviotdale accused of breaking their bond with Englishman Edmund Crawster. He was denounced as a rebel in 1592 for helping the Earl of Bothwell, but this was lifted a few months later. In 1593 he was again denounced as a rebel (along with his brothers Steven and Thomas of ‘Grundismuken’, among others) for failure to appear to answer accusations about raids into England. In 1595 he, along with William Scott of Howpasley and Hector Turnbull of Wauchope were ‘put to the horn’ for failing to pay to the Sheriff their ‘blench ferms and castlewards’. He married his cousin Grizel Home and also married Agnes Kirkton (perhaps in 1558, when the couple were granted lands in Scraesburgh). His children included: William, who may have been the eldest son (and if so, predeceased his father), recorded in 1592 when he was denounced as a rebel; Thomas, who succeeded and who married a Cranston of that Ilk; John, ancestor of the Rutherfords of Bankend, who married Barbara, daughter of James Gledstains of Cocklaw and that Ilk; Grizel, who married Walter Orniston of that Ilk; Jean, who married Adam Rutherford of Chatto; George; Andrew; Percie; Steven; Robert; and 5 other daughters. Richard of Littleheugh may also have been his son. John ‘Jock’ of Tofts (16th C.) probably son of Richard of Edgerston. He was said to be a man of prudigious strength, who had 6 digits on each hand and foot. He was named in several accusations of raids on English farms in 1590. His son Andrew is also listed in some of them. He was also recorded in about 1590 among landed men of the Borders. In 1602 there was a complaint about him, his sons Robert, Thomas and William, his son-in-law John Stevenson and others that they attacked ‘Jackie Laidley’ and his family and servants at his lands near Jedburgh. Thomas, younger of Hunthill was cautioner for him and his sons Thomas, Archibald and William, not to harm ‘Jacques Laidley in Ancrauch’. John (16th/17th C.) 2nd surviving son of John ‘the Cock’ of Hunthill. In 1619 he was referred to as ‘Master John Ruthirfurd, sheriff-depute of County Roxburgh’. In 1623 he had the lands of Hyndhousefield, Howdenbraes and Maison-Dieu confirmed to him, his wife and eldest son. He married Barbara, daughter of James Gledstains of Cocklaw. His eldest son was John of Bankend, who served as Provost of Jedburgh. John ‘Provost’s Jock’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1617 along with James Middlemas (brother of William Middlemas of Lilliesleaf) and Patrick Brotherstone. George Douglas of Friarshaw and George Douglas in Lilliesleaf complained that the 3 men attacked the houses at Friarshaw and Lilliesleaf. His name is given as ‘Provostis Jock’, suggesting that his father was Provost, perhaps of Jedburgh. John of Hunthill (17th C.) son of Thomas of Hunthill and Jean Cranston. He was served heir to his father and grandfather in 1610. In 1615 the lands of Nether Chatto, ‘Eidlescleuch’, ‘Hanganshaw’ and Gate-shawfield were conveyed to him and his wife by James Ker of Chatto. In 1617 he was among Border Lairds who renewed their bond for keeping the peace. He represented Roxburghshire in Parliament in 1630. His lands of Hunthill, Scraesburgh, etc. were valued at £1200 in 1643. He was still alive in 1666 when he was among the Rutherfords who made an agreement concerning the family burial place at Jedburgh Abbey. He married Alison, daughter of Andrew Kerr, 1st Lord Jedburgh; she was recorded as Lady Hunthill in a deed in 1663. His children included: Andrew, who succeeded, but had no male heirs; John, who succeeded his elder brother, but died unmarried; Sir Thomas, who succeeded his 2 older brothers and became the 2nd Lord Rutherford; Archibald, 3rd Lord Rutherford; Robert, 4th Lord Rutherford; Lilias, who married Henry Ker of...
Graden; Isobel, who married Alexander Burnet of Carlops; Helena, who married Thomas Lewin of Amble; Anna, who married Rev. Thomas Abernethy of Hownam; and Margaret, who married William Elliot of Dinlabyre. John (d.1679) 2nd son of Richard of Littleheugh. His older brother Walter died without issue and he succeeded his father in 1626. His lands included ‘Capehope vocatis Phillip-hope, Hardroddis, Maksydbank, Priestschawis, &c.’, to which he was served heir in 1643, with confirmation in 1666. He married Eupham, daughter of Walter Gledstains of Dod. He was succeeded by his sons Walter and John. John (17th C.) recorded in Abbotrule Parish in 1643. He owned lands valued at £140, but the name of the property is not listed. John of Knowesouth (d.c.1665) transcribed ‘de Cowsnothe’ in the 1666 services of heirs. In that year his son Thomas (referred to as ‘junior’, presumably meaning he was a minor) was served heir to his lands of Ruecastle, including Harden Mains and Newtonhaugh. He was described as already deceased in 1672 when his son Andrew became a merchant’s apprentice in 1672. He was succeeded by his son Thomas, and another son Robert became an apothecary’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1673. John of Edgerston (c.1622–86) eldest son of Robert and Margaret Riddell. In 1643, 1646 and 1649 he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire. In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, Dumfries and Annandale. He raised a troop in the 1640s and fought for King Charles; it is said that at the Battle of Dumbar he was severely wounded and all but 5 of his men were killed, and he lost a leg while defending the bridge at Worcester. In 1654 he was one of the local men who signed an attestation about the ‘carriage and deportment of the deceased Francis Earl of Buccleuch’; this was part of efforts to have the fines reduced on the Buccleuch estate that had been imposed by Cromwell for the Earl supporting King Charles. In 1654/5 he and Robert (Town Clerk of Jedburgh) were acquitted of liability for a sum of £300, which was taken from the tax-collector by ‘a strong party of mostroopers’. In 1658 he was one of 2 commissioners sent by 20 ‘gentlemen and heritors’ of Roxburghshire to oppose payment requested from the county. In 1666 he was among the Rutherfords who made an agreement concerning the family burial place at Jedburgh Abbey. After the Restoration he commanded a troop of dragoons who kept order in the Borders. He paid the land tax in 1678 for £2700 in Jedburgh Parish. Also in 1678 he was a Commissioner for Roxburghshire for raising money for the King. He married Barbara Abernethy, daughter of the Bishop of Caithness (and related to the family that had earlier possessed lands at Teindside and Harwood south of Hawick, with his mother being a Murray of Philiphaugh). He had 4 sons and 12 daughters, including: John, who died before him; Andrew, who succeeded, but died without issue; Thomas, who succeeded Andrew; Robert of Bowland, who married Ann, daughter of Sir John Murray of Philiphaugh; and Isabel, who married Andrew Ker of Littledean. His testament was recorded in 1682. John (1641–1710) born in Yarrow, son of John and Isabella Ker. He was the great-grandfather of Sir Walter Scott the author. He was licensed by the Presbytery of Selkirk and was master of Selkirk Grammar School; he was recorded there in at least the period 1676–85, and probably served until 1691, when he was ordained in 1691 as minister of Yarrow. In 1685 he was described being ‘in Philiphaugh’ and in 1692 was ‘late schoolmaster of the burg of Selkirk and now present minister’. He was minister at Yarrow until his death. He still had dealings with the Burgh of Selkirk in 1707. He married Christian, grand-daughter of John Shaw, minister of Selkirk. His children included: Robert, who died young; John (1695–1779), Professor of the Practice of Medicine at Edinburgh University; Jean (b.1693), who died unmarried; and Anne, who married William Scott of Whitehaugh. John (17th/18th C.) married Margaret Turnbull in Bedrule Parish in 1691. John (17th/18th C.) from Hawick Parish. In 1704 he was ‘in Dernicktoun’ (presumably邓尼克顿 Parish) and Margaret ‘ivson’ was ‘his wife in Goldilands’ when their daughter Agnes was baptised in Hawick. The witnesses were Andrew Riddell in Goldielands and gardener James Falsyde. John of Knowesouth (17th/18th C.) son of Thomas and Cecilia Douglas. He married Isabella, daughter of William Scott of Raeburn in 1711. He may have been a doctor, and succeeded his father before 1715. His sister Ann married William Chisholme, son of Robert and grandson of Walter of Stirches. His children included: John, who succeeded; William (b.1711); and Ann. John of Ladfield (17th/18th C.) descendant of John of Ladfield (d.c.1686), who was Provost of Jedburgh. His father may have been Adam. He was ‘younger’ in 1712 when he married Margaret, daughter of the deceased William

Rutherford of Falla, this taking place at Hummelknowes. John (17th/18th C.) married Helen Turnbull in Bedrule Parish in 1702. John (17th/18th C.) married Isabel Storie in 1705, the marriage being proclaimed in both Bedrule and Jedburgh Parishes. Sir John of Edgerston (1687–1747/8) son of Thomas. He was knighted in 1706 and succeeded to Edgerston in 1720. He was mentioned in 1735 in the deposition where the widow of Robert Scott of Falnash (his sister Violet) sold her property on the Howe gate to Patrick Hardie. He is probably the Sir John who paid the window tax in Jedburgh in 1748. He married Elizabeth, daughter of William Cairncross of Langlee in 1710. They had a large family, including: John (b.1712), who succeeded; William (b.1714) of Nether Ancrum; Thomas (b.1715), who married Martha Town from York and whose sons Richard and John were in the Navy; Susannah (d.1791), who married Alexander Pringle of Whytbank; Robert of Fairnington (b.1723), who became a Russian Baron; James (d.1742), who was unmarried; Walter (1723–1804), who married Mary, daughter of Gen. Alexander, and whose son John was an American politician; Mary, who married Sir Alexander Nisbet of Dean; Elizabeth, who married John Horsburgh of that Ilk; Jean, who married Charles Inglis of Manorhead; Hugh, who had 4 daughters; Archibald; Jean; and Agnes. He secondly married Sarah, daughter of Sir John Nisbet of Dean (sister of his son-in-law). Their children were: Henry of Hunthill, who married Agnes Lauder; and Christian, who married Rev. Dr. Davidson of Muirhouse. John (1695–1779) born in Yarrow, son of John, minister there, he was descended from the Rutherfords of Hunthill. He was educated in Selkirk and at Edinburgh University. He became a partner in a medical practice in Edinburgh in 1717 and they petitioned the University to start teaching Medicine, the 4 partners becoming the first Professors of Medicine there. He delivered clinical lectures in the Royal Infirmary, beginning the relationship between the university and the hospital. He firstly married Jean Swinton and they had a daughter Anne, who was mother of Sir Walter Scott. He secondly married Anne Mackay (daughter of the Jedburgh minister) and their children included: Daniel, who was a physician and botanist; Jean, who married Col. William Russell of Ashiestiel; and several children who died young. John (17th/18th C.) married Helen Tudhope in Bedrule Parish in 1721. John of Edgerston (1712–58) son of Sir John of that Ilk and Elizabeth Cairncross. He trained as an advocate and was elected M.P. for Roxburghshire in 1734, being re-elected in 1741. However, later that year his younger brother Walter convinced him to go to America, where he joined the Independent Regiment of Foot in New York. In 1756 he became a Major in the Royal American Regiment. In 1737 he married Eleanor, daughter of Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto; she died in 1797 at her house in George Square, Edinburgh. They had 11 children, most of whom were born in America, and 7 of whom survived to adulthood: John, who succeeded; Jean (or Jane) married William Oliver of Dinlabyre; Robert (d.1780), who served with the East India Company; Archibald (d.1790) who was an army Captain; Eleanor (d.1822), unmarried; Elizabeth, married Andrew Sinclair of Hermandston and was mother of Lord Sinclair; and Agnes (1758–1840), who died unmarried. He died at Ticonderago and his family then relocated back to Scotland. John of Knowesouth (d.1788) son of John and Isabella Scott. He was served heir to Knowesouth in 1728 and in 1739 married Mary, daughter of William Kerr of Abbotrule, this marriage ending in divorce. It appears that he was mentally ill, and the records describe years of abuse before she finally left him in 1749. He paid the window tax in Bedrule Parish in 1748 and 1753. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. By 1763 he was an inmate of the‘Bedlam’ in Edinburgh. He is recorded as Laird in 1764 when his eldest son Thomas married Margaret Elliot of Kirklands in Ancrum. He was on the role of electors in Roxburghshire in 1780. In 1747 he was in a dispute with William Henry, Marquess of Lothian over his alleged wrongful possession of the lands of Ruecastle. It appears that an infeftment of Ruecasttle was made obtained by his (young) eldest son Thomas in 1748 (or perhaps 1758). In 1770 this son Thomas was in dispute with his wife, younger children and creditors. These other children were: Jean, who married Thomas Scott and whose son Charles later succeeded to the estate; Capt. John of the Royal Navy; and another daughter, who married Jedburgh lawyer John Thomson. In 1788 he is recorded owning lands valued at £466 19s 10d, with his son Thomas also holding lands valued at £48 10s. He died in Edinburgh. John ‘the Little Major’ of Mossburnford (1746–1830) son of Thomas and grandson of the Laird of Edgerston. His father died in the Barbados when he was an infant, and he was sent back to the care of his grandfather at Edgerston. After going to America to seek his fortune he was apparently captured by Indians, but escaped after several years. He joined the 42nd Highland Regiment and was promoted to Captain in 1778. After retiring and returning to Scotland he purchased the estate of Mossburnford. He was later a Major in one of the local volunteer regiments (probably the 2nd Regiment of Dumfries militia). His nickname derived from his short stature. He paid tax on 2 male servants in Jedburgh Parish in 1778 and 1779. He was probably also Collector of Supply for about 35 years. He paid the Land Tax for Glenkerry in Ettrick Parish in 1785. He was one of the Borders men who entertained Burns on his tour of 1787. He was on the Land Tax Rolls in 1811. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819, along with his son John. In 1810 he was one of the founder members of the Jedforest Club. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. In 1819 he was appointed as Collector of Assessed Taxes. He married Eleanor Chalk of Artane, Dublin and secondly Agnes, daughter of Rev. Andrew Chatto, minister of Morebattle. His children included: John, W.S. (b.1777), who was the Edinburgh agent for Jedburgh; Charles (1780–1846), who inherited the lands of Fairnington, but died unmarried; Thomas (b.1784), who succeeded his brother; Martha, married Charles Robson of Samieston; Helen (or Eleanor) married William Elliot, Laird of Harwood; Walter (1801–56) who served with the East India Company in Bengal; and at least 5 who died young.

Capt. John (b.1744) younger son of John of Knowesouth and Mary Kerr of Abbotrule. His elder brother Thomas inherited the estate and then it passed to his sister Jean (who married Thomas Scott), since he was unmarried. He was a member of the Jedforest Club. He died in the early 1800s. He could be the John who was recorded at Knowesouth in 1797, where he owned 4 farm horses and 1 saddle horse, as well as 2 non-working dogs. He may be the Rutherford of Knowesouth who was eldest son of Maj. John of Mossburnford, and was an agent for Jedburgh in Edinburgh, dying in 1801. On the other hand, he could be the Capt. John who died in 1833 and was considered as the last of his line. John (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Shiplaw Cross in 1780. This was the highest cottage in Cavers Parish. He had a son James, who was a joiner at Bonchester Bridge and his great-grandson was blacksmith at Bonchester Bridge. Note that Tancred lists him as James rather than John. John of Edgerston (1748–1834) son of John of Edgerston and that Ilk. He was born in America, while his father was in the army there. He succeeded to Edgerston following his father’s death in 1758 (his father having been overseas since succeeding Sir John in about 1749). In 1759 he inherited lands in Hillsap from Elizabeth Cairncross. He owned land at ‘Rink’ in Hawick, which was used for the October market from 1779. He was Vice-Lieutenant for Roxburghshire and was already on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. In 1780 he was appointed Major and Captain in the Southern Regiment of Fencible-men and by 1797 was in command of the Roxburghshire Yeomanry (Militia). In 1788 he was described as a ‘popular man’ in a private list of voters in Roxburghshire, and was also said to be connected with the interests of the Duke of Buccleuch. He was additionally listed among the voters of Selkirkshire in 1788. His estate in Jedburgh Parish was valued at more than £2000 in 1788, and he also owned other lands in Oxnam Parish. He paid tax on 2 male servants in 1778, and was taxed for having male and female servants through the 1780s into the 1790s as well as for owning a carriage in the period 1788–98 and for having horses and dogs in the period 1785–97, including 8 carriage or saddle horses and 4 non-working dogs. In 1797 he was knocked off his horse in Jedburgh and struck in the head, but fully recovered. In 1803 he became Colonel-Commandant of both battalions of Roxburghshire volunteers. He was listed as ‘Major’ on the 1808 subscription list for Jamieson’s Scots dictionary. He paid the land tax on his estate in 1811, and also owned Overton. He was listed as a Commissioner for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1805 and 1819. He served as M.P. for Selkirkshire 1802–06 and Roxburghshire 1806–12. He was one of the founder members of the Jedforest Club in 1810. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. In 1787 he married Mary Ann, daughter of Maj.-Gen. Alexander Leslie-Melville and died without issue. He left the lands of Edgerston to William Oliver of Dinalbyle, son of his sister Jane, and Fairnington to Charles, son of John Rutherford of Mossburnford. There is a watercolour sketch of him by Lord Sinclair. John (18th C.) resident of Alton in Wilton Parish. In 1777 he married Janet Notman. Their children included: Thomas (b.1783); and Robert (b.1785). The witnesses in 1779 were George Scott and James Lorraine. John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1786 he was living at Howpalesly. His children included Henry (b.1783) and John (b.1786). John (18th C.) gamekeeper at Knowesouth in 1794, when he was working for Thomas Rutherford. John (d.c.1805) eldest son of Thomas of Knowesouth. He apprenticed as a lawyer to William Riddell and became Writer to the Signet in 1798. He died after succeeding his father. He died without issue and the Knowesouth estate was inherited by his brother George, who also died without issue. John (18th/19th C.) from Cavers Parish. In 1789 he paid a fine for his ‘irregular marriage’ with Betty Hogg. Their children included: Charles (b.1790), baptised in Wilton; Walter (b.1792), baptised in Minto; Isabel (b.1795), baptised in Minto; William (b.1802), baptised in Lilliesleaf; and Thomas (b.1805), baptised in Minto. John (18th/19th C.) recorded as owner of a horse at Synton Mill in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was also recorded at Synton Mill in 1797 when his son Francis died in Hawick. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Newbigging in Hawick Parish in 1797. He was taxed for having 2 non-working dogs. Capt. John of Knowesouth (d.c.1830). He died unmarried and so the family estate passed to Charles, eldest son of his oldest sister, who sold it. He is probably the Capt. John who is listed as owner on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He must be different from the Capt. John recorded earlier. John (b.1805) son of James, joiner at Bonchester Bridge. He was a joiner at Old Gatehousecote in Hobkirk Parish. By 1851 he was a joiner at Old Belses. He married Helen Curran Murray in 1831. Their children included Robert, James, Walter, Isabella, John, Helen and George. In 1855 the family emigrated to Australia, settling in Tazmania, where several sons worked as carpenters. Rev. John Hunter (19th C.) evangelical minister from Kelso from the early 1840s. The Congregational Church in Kelso started in 1841 and met in the Friends’ Meeting house there. He led the first communion service of what would become the Hawick Congregational Kirk in May of 1848. This was in the Suscription Rooms, with an audience of about 45 people. He had been invited to Hawick in 1847 by William Munro, minister of the faltering Congregational group in Hawick, and took up the invitation in the Spring of the following year. The ‘mission’ of intense prayer meetings lasted for 7 weeks and had to be moved twice to larger premises. Rev. John Kirk of Edinburgh joined after the first week, and they preached together for the next 6 weeks, the direct result of which was the founding of the Evangelical Union Kirk (which became today’s Congregational Kirk). He preached himself every other week until Alexander Duff arrived in late 1848. John (b.1811/2) from Middlebie, he was a shepherd in Castleton Parish. In 1861 he was at Old Larriston. His wife was Agnes Scott and their children included Helen, David, Thomas, Janet, John, William, James and Andrew. John (c.1835–1906) son of Joseph, he was born in Hawick. By 1851 the family were living at Swinburn in Northumberland. He worked for the Newcastle City Police for 8 years and was then prison officer and warder at the Newcastle Borough Gaol and Correction House. From 1871 he was Chief Warder and in 1875 was Master of the Berwick Union Workhouse. There were disputes with the authorities and by 1888 he had moved to North Shields where he was innkeeper. In 1855 he married Hannah Gray (1825–c.90). It appears the couple adopted his niece Sarah. In 1894 he married his housekeeper Elizabeth ‘Isabella’ Rutter and the couple became tenants of the Britannic Inn and then the tiny Beehive Inn in South Shields. In 1898 he was found guilty of manslaughter after his wife was found dead (and beaten) in their upstairs room. He served 3 years in Newcastle Gaol. John (1838–1914) composer of the music for ‘The Border Queen’, written specifically for Thomson’s words. Born in the West End, he was (probably) son of Thomas. However, his early years are unclear. He is probably the John who was 3 years old when listed with his sister Mary living with Ann Andison on the High Street, in 1851 was a ‘pauper scholar’ lodging on the Kirkwynd and in 1861 was a boarder at 4 Melgund Place working as a shoemaker. He worked for 30 years as a shoemaker, with Robert & William Burnet of the Howegate. He apparently had a fine baritone voice and was prominent in the choir of the Catholic Church in Hawick. In 1884 he emigrated to Australia as a hotel keeper, to help out his widowed sister. There is a report of a ‘Hawick Night’ at the Middlesburgh Hotel there in 1885. He is recorded as a subscriber to the 1888 and 1889 Common Ridings, where his address is Royal Hotel, Rockdale, Sydney, N.S.W. He was a member of the Sydney Scottish Borderers Association. He returned to Hawick in 1892 and 1901, and was apparently preparing to return for the quater-centenary when he took ill. It is not known whether he wrote any other music. In 1860 he married Margaret Gallagher. Their children included: Mary (b.1861); Ann (b.1863); Edward (b.1866); William (b.1866); John (b.1870); His daughter Margaret married Bailie John Gilroy. He is buried at Rockwood Necropolis, Sydney.

John (19th C.) iron merchant who was one of the early elders of St. Andrew's Free Church. Katherine (15th/16th C.) younger daughter of Philip, who was the only son of James of that Ilk and Wells. After the death of her brother Richard of that Ilk, there was dispute over succession to the lands and titles, Rutherford and Wells going to her sister Helen, with the rest going to their uncle Thomas. She lost out on her portion due to her fornication with a relative, James Stewart of Traquair, who she married when quite young. She died at Flodden and she claimed ‘that in tender age she had been left away by the said James Stewart, held in subjection and compelled to marry him’. She was probably the Katherine who supported Patrick Murray of Falahill in 1530, against an objection to his being Sheriff, with John Scott, Vicar of Hawick as procurator. In 1536 she was ‘Lady of Trakquare’ when she had a court order not to communicate with the rebel Douglases who were in England. Her son and heir to Traquair was William Stewart. Lawrence (15th C.) recorded as tenant in Oakwood in 1494/5. He had remission for a number of crimes: stealing cattle from several different people, including an ox from the Vicar of Ancrum; resetting Robert Young and William Scoon; stealing sheep from Yair and Kershope; stealing and resetting horses; burning the farm of Hartwood; and stealing from the widow of William Dickson. His surety was John Rutherford of Edgerston. Lawrence (15th/16th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1502. He had remission for stealing sheep from Ninian Murray out of Kershope, with George, junior Laird of Hundalee as his surety. He was ‘in quhitmeir’, which was probably Whitemuir. Lawrence (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 when he had remission for stealing cows from a servant of Margaret Murray out of Traquair. He was recorded being ‘now in ‘hartwod’ (probably the lands between Ashkirk and Selkirk). His surety was Ralph Ker of Primside Loch. Mrs. Margaret nee Turnbull (1850/1–1925) keeper of the post office and shop in Cogsmill. She married William and had a son William (b.1891). Mary (17th C.) recorded in 1643 when she owned £20 in Hobkirk Parish. She is listed being ‘of Rydwell’ and Marie Turnbull was also there, but it is unclear where it was. Mungo (16th C.) tenant of Nisbet. He was on the 1553/4 panel for Sir Walter Scott inheriting his grandfather’s lands of Branxholme and Buccheluch. He is recorded as ‘Kentigernum Rutherfurd in Nesbet’ and may also have been known as Quentin. One of his descendants was John (brother of Gavin), who married Grizel Ramsay, and died at East Nisbet in 1630. Sir Nicholas (13th/14th C.) early member of the family. He witnessed a document in the Melrose charters in the period 1269–89. He signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. He held the Manor of Doddingstone in Northumberland, which was forfeited by Edward I; in 1306 his granddaughters and heiresses, Eva and Marjorie, petitioned the English King to restore their lands of ‘Doddingstone’. ‘Blind Harry’, in his history of 1460, states that he met Sir William Wallace in Ettrick Forest with 60 warriors. He may have been related by marriage to Marion Braidfute, heiress of Lamington. He was succeeded by his son Sir Robert. Nicholas of Yetholm (d.c. 1457) probably son of Sir Richard of that Ilk. He may be the Nicholas who received charters for Kirk Yetholm, Grubet, Makerstoun, Corbet and other lands in the years 1421, 1426 and 1430. However, these generations are quite confused. Probably the same Nicholas was part of a ‘retour of inquest’ in Hawick in 1424 for lands of Hownam. He served as Bailie in Liddesdale for William Douglas, 2nd Earl of Angus, recorded in 1428/9. He witnessed a charter for Alexander, Earl of Douglas in 1433/4. He was also Bailie for the Earl of Angus in 1436 for the granting of the lands of Wolfelee and Wolfehopelee to David Home of Wedderburn; he is there ‘Nicolaud de Rutherfurd de Zhetam’. He is probably the Nicholas who in 1437 was on the retour for deciding on ownership of the East Mains of Hawick. He is probably the Rutherford who was Bailie for the Earl of Angus in 1439 for a charter for Douglas of Bonjedward. In 1449, along with his brother James of that Ilk, he was appointed as a guarantor of a treaty with the English. He may be the ‘Nechole of Rutherfurde’ who was on the panel that acquitted Andrew Ker of Altonburn in 1456 of helping the English burn lands around Jedburgh. In 1458 his heir John was mentioned in the Exchequer Rolls in relation to his having previously handled the accounts of Jedburgh. He may be the ‘Nocol’ who was a younger son of Sir Richard of that Ilk, and ancestor of the Henderlee (or Hundalee) branch. His son John also witnessed the sasine for Wolfelee in 1436, and separately also John of Hundalee (showing that they are separate people). His son John married Elizabeth Rutherford of Yetholm. He had a grandson, John, who became Provost of Aberdeen, with that office also being filled by 3 later generations of the same family. Nicholas (15th/16th C.) resident of Hundalee.
Nicholas of Hundalee (d.1572/3) probably son of George, whom he succeeded in about 1545. He was listed (along with his father George and brother Andrew) among the Borderers pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran. He may be the Nicholas said to have been one of 3 attendants who accompanied the Earl of Bothwell to a secret meeting with the Earl of Northumberland in 1531. In 1544 he was among local Lairds who gave their pledges to England. In 1545 he was among lairds in Teviotdale who signed a bond to settle feuds. He was listed in 1549 among the associates of Walter Ker of Cessford, accused of raiding the lands of Sir Walter Scott of Bransholm in collusion with the English. In 1551 he signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’. He is probably the Laird of Hundalee who was appointed as a deputy march warden in 1553. In 1553/4 he was first listed among the Rutherfords in an assurance not to harm the Kers and the pledge for him was Batholomew of the Grange. He and other Rutherfords also appeared to promise that Adam and Charles, their pledges, would remain in ward in Edinburgh. Also in 1553/4 he was on the panel for Sir Walter Scott inheriting his grandfather’s lands of Bransholm and Buccluel. In 1560 he was named on the bond to settle the feud between the Kers and the Rutherfords. In 1561 he was among a list of men charged to appear before Queen Mary regarding the state of the Borders. Also in 1561 was (along with Walter Scott of Synston and Thomas Scott of Haining) cited by the Privy Council for non-appearance. In 1564 he and James Langlands of that Ilk were listed as sureties for Ormiston of that Ilk in the bond between the Scotts and Kers and their supporters. Also in 1564 he was listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the warden, Ker of Cessford. In 1565 he is listed among men complained about by the Warden of the Middle Marches for not presenting accused men from their lands. Also in 1565 he was engaged in a serious dispute with the people of Jedburgh, and tried to insist that they should chose him as their Provost, because of family tradition; a number of Burgess and local lairds were summoned before the Privy Council to resolve the ‘allegeit bluid and inymitie’. He was among men re-ordered to appear before the Privy Council in 1567 regarding order in the Middle Marches. In 1569 he was on the panel of inquest for Grizel Borthwick inheriting the superiority of her father’s lands in Wilton. Also in 1569 he and his sons Andrew and Nichol were sureties for George in the Grange. In 1596 and again in 1571/2 he signed the bond to act against Borders thieves. He is said to have been at the Raid of the Reidswire in 1575, although it seems more likely that was his son. He signed a bond with other Rutherfords and Turnbulls in 1578 (although perhaps this was 1569). He married his distant cousin Margaret Rutherford and secondly married Margaret McDowell. His children included: George, who died as a rebel by 1526; Andrew, who succeeded; Nichol, listed along with his father and brother Andrew in 1569; Marion, who married Andrew Ker of Graden; Mary, who married David Ainslie of Fala; and probably Martin, vicar of Makertoun. Nicholas (16th C.) recorded as Dean of Teviotdale, in the Diocese of Glasgow, in 1548. It is unclear how he was related to other Rutherfords. He may be the ‘Nycholl Rutherfurd’ who signed the bond between the Rutherfords and Kers in 1560. Nicholas of Hundalee (c.1565-c.1628) son of Andrew of Hundalee and Margaret Hoppringle of Smailholm. However, in some genealogies he is stated to be brother of Andrew and younger son of Sir Nichol. In 1591 he is listed along with Rutherfords, Kers and Turnbulls in a bond of allegiance to King. In 1592 the cautioner for him and his father Andrew was James Douglas, Commendator of Melrose, that they would not reset any of those who had supported the Earl of Bothwell. He was juror on a retour in 1601. He is probably the ‘Hundielie’ who signed the bond among Border Lairds for keeping the peace in 1602. In 1608 he was appointed by Parliament, along with Douglas of Bonjedward, to meet with the Bailies of Jedburgh to fix the price of leather. In 1606 he renewed his charter of Grubet and in 1620 gave a charter of Belses to his son-in-law, Sir James Kerr of...
Rutherford

Crailing. In 1617 he was among a list of Border Lairds denounced as rebels for not appearing before the Privy Council. He was listed as a land-owner in the Barony of Belses in the tax roll of the Abacy of Jedburgh in 1626. He married Martha, daughter of Andrew Stewart, Master of Ochiltree. His children included: Andrew, who succeeded in 1633; John; James; Marie, who eventually became heiress and married Sir James Ker, 2nd Lord Jedburgh; Margaret; and Anna. Ninian ‘Ringan’ (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 as ‘Rinzeane of Rutherfurde’. Along with ‘Hew of Douglace’ he appears to have captured George Young, who Walter Scott of Buccleuch pledged to bring before the next Justice Aire in Jedburgh. He could be the Ninian in Ancrum who was surety for his brother John at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1494/5; John did not appear. This same Ninian in Ancrum was allowed to ‘compone’ for many crimes in 1494/5, in particular stealing livestock and grain from several tenants in Fairnington, as well as thefts along with his brother John, with the Laird of Rutherford as surety. In 1502 his surety was his brother John (who was also surety for himself and for Andrew Laidlaw in Edgerston), who failed to appear and hence was denounced as a rebel and his goods seized. Presumably he was the same as Ninian in ‘uvir ancrum’ who was surety for himself in 1502 and was fined and deprived of his lands until he found surety. Philip (d.bef. 1492) eldest son of James of that Ilk and Wells. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir Walter Ker of Cessford. His widow later married Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch. He had an only son, Richard (who succeeded his grandfather), and 2 daughters: Helen, who married Sir John Foreman of Davine, secondly Andrew of Hunthill and may also have married 2 other times; and Katherine (or perhaps Christian), who married James Stewart of Traquair and later became heir of the Rutherfords of that Ilk. He pre-deceased his father. In 1495 his widow (now wife of Scott of Branxholme) brought a case to the Lords of Council demanding payment of promised rentals. Philip (15th/16th C.) witness of a sasine for the Erskines in the lands of Synton in 1508. He could not have been the son of James of that Ilk (and Margaret Erskine), since that Philip died before his father, several years earlier. Perhaps the same Philip, son of Alan, was included among Rutherfords and others who were declared rebels in 1498 for the murder of Patrick Hepburn; his brother John was also listed. Philip (16th C.) probably younger son of Richard and son of Thomas of Edgerston. He is recorded as being ‘in Edzarstoun’ (i.e. Edgerston) in the 1560 bond to settle the feud between the Rutherfords and the Kers. As part of the agreement, Andrew, son and heir of Robert Ker of Newhall was to marry his daughter; he signed the bond ‘at the pen led by the notar’, meaning that he was unable to write. He may have been son of John in Edgerston, whose earlier murder was part of the feud. John Rutherford, also in Edgerston, who signed the 1560 bond, was probably his brother. In 1573 he and John ‘breder in Edgarstoun’ were among men from the Jedburgh area accused by Robert Kerr of Woodhead of raiding his house and farm, although they were acquitted because Kerr had reset the fugitive Kerr of Ferniehirst. In 1574 he was ‘in Edzarstoun’ when along with several other Rutherfords, he had a ‘bond of man-rent’ with Archibald, 8th Earl of Angus. He was a tutor to his brother Richard’s son Thomas, ‘the Black Laird’. He may have been father of ‘Philip’s Andro’, recorded in 1601. Sir Richard (c.1345–1424/5) probably son of William (or possibly a younger brother). He was said to be a favourite of King Robert III. He witnessed a charter by James, Earl of Douglas in the 1380s. In 1390 he was ‘of that Ilk’ when he witnessed the charter by John Turnbull of Minto, granting Minto to Sir William Stewart of Jedburgh. He was one of the ambassadors to the Court of England in 1398 and was also Warden of the Marches from about this time. About 1399 he was captured by the English, according to the story along with his 5 sons (although he may in fact have had no more than 3 sons) and John Turnbull (‘out with the sword’). In 1424 (apparently not long before his death) he was on a ‘retour of inquest’ for lands of Hownam, witnessed at Hawick. He married Jean Douglas and their sons were: Sir James; John of Chatto, ancestor of the Hunthill branch; and Nichol, ancestor of the Hundalee branch. He was succeeded by James, although there is some suggestion that he was predeceased by his son and succeeded by his grandson James. He may also have had sons William (or Gilbert) of Eckford and Sir John, who was killed at Cravant in France along with Sir John Turnbull. Richard of that Ilk (d.c.1502) grandson and heir of James of Rutherford, only son of Philip. He was the last Rutherford of that Ilk. He was served heir to his ‘goodfather’ (presumably grandfather) according to an inquest in 1499. A document of 1500 shows lands of his going to several Kerrs because of ‘non-entry’. He is probably the Richard whose name led a 1501 list of Rutherfords and others whose fines were compounded by Walter Ker of Cessford and Henry Haitlie of Mellerstain. He died without children, leading to a dispute over who should succeed to the estates and titles, these mainly going to his uncle Thomas, although his sister Helen inherited the estates of Rutherford and Wells. However, in 1502 the gift of ward of the lands of Rutherford was granted by James IV to Andrew, Bishop of Moray and his brother John Forman. Also in 1502, Nicholas had remission for stealing 'a cavoci le caldron' from his wife (whose name is unfortunately not given).

Richard (15th/16th C.) tenant in Liddlean. In 1502 he had remission for wounding George Young in Minto Craig, as well as stealing several items from Young. His surety was John Rutherford of Hundalee. Richard of Edgerston (16th C.) son of Thomas (or perhaps Robert). He is probably the 'Richart Rutherfurd of Edyarstoun' listed in 1553/4 among the Rutherfords in an assurance not to harm the Kers; his pledges were Charles and John 'sone of the Grene'. He may have succeeded about 1558 and in 1559 he finally settled the dispute over succession to Rutherford lands and titles with his cousin, Sir John Stuart of Traquair (who received the estates of Rutherford and Wells). In 1560 he was named on the bond to settle the feud between the Kers and the Rutherfords; he was to shake hands with John Haitlie of Mellerstain in order to settle the feud between those particular families and he signed 'at the pen led by the notar' (meaning that he could not write himself). In 1561 he was among a list of men charged to appear before Queen Mary regarding the state of the Borders. In 1564 he was 'Lard of Edyarstoun' when listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the warden, Ker of Cessford. He was among men re-ordered to appear before the Privy Council in 1567 regarding order in the Middle Marches. In 1567 he was among men ordered to present themselves to be warded in Blackness Castle. Also in 1567 he was surety for entering several men with the Warden. In 1569 he was a surety for Robert Ker of Lochtou. He also signed a bond to suppress the Border thieves in 1569 and another recognising Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst as Warden of the Middle Marches in the 1570s. In 1571 he was one of the sureties for the leaders of the Olivers, along with John, younger of Hunthill, and 2 Turnbulls. In 1571/2 he signed the bond to act against Borders thieves. In 1572/3 he was cautions (along with Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule) for several men from Southdean, as well as for John of Hunthill. He himself swore allegiance to the Crown in 1572/3, with Andrew, younger of Hundalee, as surety. He signed the 'Band of Roxburgh' in 1573. He signed a 'bond of manrent' to Archibald, Earl of Angus in 1574. He was at the Raid of the Redeswire in 1575. In 1575 he was one of the arbitrators for the Elliots in their feud with the Pringles. Also in 1575 he was among men asked to decide whether Robert Fraser was responsible for stealing some English horses. He signed an agreement with other Rutherfords and Turnbulls in 1578, amnulling all former bonds and swearing allegiance to the Crown. Also in about 1578 he was involved in a bond between the Kers and Rutherfords. In 1578/9 there is mention of a feud between him (along with other Rutherfords, Douglas of Bonjedward and Turnbull of Bedrule) and the Kers of Cessford. In 1581 he was among Border Lairds who denounced their bonds with Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus. In 1583/4 he (or his son) was among the Border Lairds who were summoned to appear before the Privy Council. Either he or his son was in 1589 on a list of Border Lairds who failed to appear before the Privy Council to give 'thair gude advise anent the gude reule and quietnes of the Bordouris' and were denounced as rebels. He married Elizabeth ('Bittie'), sister of John Rutherford, the 'Cock o Hunthill'. He was probably succeeded by his son Richard. Other sons may have been: John of the Tofts, a man of pridigious strength, who had 6 digits on each hand and foot; Philip, tutor of Edgerston; and Gilbert of 'the Aicks'. Richard (16th C.) Provost of Jedburgh. In 1569 he was on the panel of inquest for Grizel Borthwick inheriting superiority of her father's lands in Wilton. In 1569 he was also among the signatories of a bond to suppress thieves on the Border. He served as surety before the Privy Council in 1571. In 1571/2 he signed the bond to act against Borders thieves and also acted as surety for Hob Young in Waterside. In 1573 he was among men from the Jedburgh area accused by Robert Kerr of Woodhead of raiding his house and farm, although they were acquitted because Kerr had reset the fugitive Kerr of Ferniehirst. In 1574 he and several other Rutherfords had a 'bond of manrent' with Archibald, 8th Earl of Angus. Also in 1574 he was a witness for the Turnbulls in their bond of service with Archibald Douglas, 8th Earl of Angus. In about 1578 he was involved in a bond between the Kers and Rutherfords. He may have been the ‘Gray Will’ elected as Provost of Jedburgh in 1590, against the wishes of the King, who had ordered the position to be filled by Ker of Cessford. Richard of Edgerston (d.bef. 1605) probably son of Richard (although not all sources agree there was another generation here). He may be the Richard of Edgerston in 1587 when Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus, acted as his cautioner. He is probably the Richard mentioned in a 1590 case where the Earl of Angus was ordered to relieve the King of certain ‘bills’ of English complainant. In 1592 his surety was William Stewart of Traquair. He was witness to the 1595 bond between the Scotts and the Kerrs. He married Jean, daughter of William Elliot in Hartsgarth. They had a son Thomas (the ‘Black Laird’), and a daughter Margaret, who married Thomas Haliburton of Newmains. He may also have had 8 other sons who helped him in his exploits on the Border; however, this could be confusion among generations, since it is separately claimed that he was helped by his 6 brothers. His daughter Jean was served as his heir in 1611. Richard of Edgerston (d.bef. 1615) eldest son of Thomas ‘the Black Laird’. He succeeded his father, but died unmarried and was succeeded by his brother Robert. Richard of Littleheugh ‘Dickon Draw-the-Sword’ (d.c.1634) son of John ‘the Cock o Hunthill’ or possibly William of Littleheugh. He led the Jedburgh men at the Raid of the Reidswire in 1575. He is probably the Richard, son of William of Littleheugh who was accused in 1590 of raiding into England. He was fined in 1611 for the non-appearance of several other Rutherfords. He was on the inquest for the Justice Court in Jedburgh in 1622 and 1623. He also served as Provost of Jedburgh, an office later held by his nephew, John of Bankend. He appears to have been unable to write, since his signature had to be led when he supported a bond with the Earl of Bothwell. He married Lilias, daughter of James Gledstain of Cocklaw and that Ilk (with John Rutherford, probably his brother, marrying Lilias’ sister Barbara). His children included Walter (who died without an heir) and John of Capehope. John of Capehope’s grandson, Capt. John, became 5th Lord Rutherford in 1737. Richard (b.1822/3) tailor in Hawick. In 1851 he was a Master Tailor at Market Place (i.e. the Tower Knowe), employing 1 man and 1 apprentice. His wife was Agnes. Robert (12th C.) perhaps the earliest known member of the family. Sometime in the reign of David I he witnessed a charter to Gervase de Rydal. He is there recorded as ‘Rober-tus dominus de Rodyrforde’. There is no clear genealogy connecting him with later generations. However, it seems likely he was an ancestor of Hugh, who is recorded in about 1200 and Gregor, who is recorded in about the 1210s to 1230s. Sir Robert (d.1330) son of Sir Nicholas. He was said to be a friend of Robert the Bruce, accompanying him on the trip to Palestine with the heart of James Douglas. He died in Spain. Robert of Chatto (c.1410–bef. 95) son of Sir George of Chatto and Janet. However, these generations are confused, and it may be that there are two men here, one being a son of John of Chatto. In 1429 there was a confirmation by Archibald, Earl of Douglas, of the gift made formerly to his father George, of the lands of Nether Chatto, Sharplaw, ‘Eddylliscluch’ and Hangingshaw; this was confirmed in 1439/40. He may be the Robert who in 1437 was one of those who was on the ‘retour’ at Jedburgh for Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig inheriting the East Mains of Hawick. He was also on the 1450 retour for William Douglas to inherit his father’s Barony of Hawick. In 1464 there is a grant of lairs in the choir of Jedburgh Abbey to him and his wife Margaret (a highly unusual example of the granting of the right of sepulture). In 1464/5 he was on the panel to decide on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers by Archibald Douglas and also on the panel to rule on the disputed lands of Kirkton Mains and the Flex. In 1465 he had a charter from Simon of Glendinning for the west half of Scraesburgh and the lands of Hunthill (which he is said to have acquired by marriage). He is recorded in 1468 in a document relating to lands of Crailing for the Homes of that Ilk. In 1471 he witnessed a document for Ker of Cessford. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir Simon Glendonwyn. He had a charter of the lands of Hunthill and half of Scraesburgh from his father-in-law in 1465/6. He witnessed a charter for James Rutherford of that Ilk in 1468, another for William, Lord Abernethy in 1471. He is probably the Robert who was pledge for James of that Ilk in 1471 and whose fine for absence from the Beltane Court was remitted in 1478. In 1482 he was on the panel for Elizabeth Cunningham inheriting Appletreehall and the eastern part of Hassendean. In 1486 he is mentioned along with George and Richard, probably his sons. He was succeeded by his son George of Hunthill, while Robert of Chatto was probably another son. Robert (15th C.) assigned the lease of Alkwood in 1484, along with his grandson and heir, Ninian. He leased it with his son Lawrence in 1485. Robert (15th C.) son of Lawrence. In 1490 he was assigned the Crown lands of the Middlestead of Hartwood. It is unclear how he was related to other Rutherfords. Robert (15th/16th C.) tenant in Todlaw, probably the one near Jedburgh. In 1502 he had remission for stealing cushions, silks and other clothing from Jedburgh Kirk, with Robert Turnbull of Blindhaugh as his surety. Robert (16th C.) listed as ‘Roben’ among ‘Scottesmen rebels resete within England’ in 1540. He was said by the English Wardens to be hiding in Redesdale. He may be related to George ‘Cockbank’.

Robert (16th C.) recorded being ‘in Edzerstoun’ (i.e. Edgerston) in the 1560 bond to settle the feud between the Rutherfords and the Kers. He and his friends were said to be responsible for killing William Haitlie ‘in Fawnis’, while his own son John was killed by the Haitlies. It is unclear if he was Laird of Edgerston, or just tenant there, but it seems likely he was father of Richard, who was Laird in the 1560s. He may have been the ‘lard of Egerston’ who signed a bond of assurance with Somerset at Kelso in 1547, along with many other Border lairds. Robert of Edgerston (c.1590–1659) younger son of Thomas, ‘the Black Laird’. He succeeded his brother Richard in 1615. In 1619 he complained that William, brother of Robert Elliot of Redheugh, was still at the horn. He acted as a cautioner for an Ainslie in 1623. He is probably the Rutherford of Edgerston who signed a bond of assurance with Somerset at Kelso in 1547, along with many other Border lairds. Robert of Edgerston (c.1590–1659) younger son of Thomas, ‘the Black Laird’. He succeeded his brother Richard in 1615. In 1619 he complained that William, brother of Robert Elliot of Redheugh, was still at the horn. He acted as a cautioner for an Ainslie in 1623. He is probably the Rutherford of Edgerston who signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638 (even although it appears to say ‘W.’). Around 1640 he purchased the Mill of Edgerston and other lands, which had been inherited by Francis Elliot of Harts Haugh through marriage. He firstly married Marion (or Margaret) Riddell, and secondly Elizabeth, daughter of Turnbull of Minto. He was succeeded by his son John. He may have been father of Lady Gaudielands, Edgerstons Aunt’, who is recorded in a document of 1666 describing the division of the choir of Jedburgh Abbey into burial lairs for various Rutherfords. Robert (17th C.) notary public recorded in 1640 at the admission of Henry Elliot as minister of Bedrule. Robert (d.1724) younger son of John of Hunthill. In 1685 he succeeded his brother Archibald as 4th Lord Rutherford, also inheriting the family lands comprising the Barony of Hunthill, including the 10 merk lands called Gledstane’s Lands. In 1691 he sold Nether Chatto and the Barony of Scraesburg to Sir John Scott of Ancrum. He sat as a peer in Parliament until the Union. He married Dame Sara Ollens and they had 2 children: Margaret, who married Charles Scott of Palace Hill; and John, who died young. Like his elder brothers, he died without male issue and the honours were later claimed by Capt. John, descendant of Richard of Littleheugh. Robert of Bowland (d. bef. 1728) son of John of Edgerston. He purchased Bowland (on Gala Water) in 1697. In 1712 he purchased Hollinglee and Thornilee in Ettrick. He married Ann, daughter of Sir John Murray of Philliphaugh; she was widow of Alexander Pringle of Whytbank. In 1728 his widow resigned her annuity to her only son James, who succeeded and was M.P. for Selkirkshire. They also had a daughter, Barbara. Robert of Fairnilee (17th/18th C.) solicitor in Edinburgh, he was referred to in the family as ‘the Nottar’. He was said to be descended from Richard, son of Robert, 3rd brother of Richard of Edgerston. He served as Deputy Receiver General for Scotland. He inherited some lands from his father, acquired parts of Capehope from Sir John Scott of Ancrum in 1701 and bought lands in Scraesburgh in 1702. In 1719, 1727 and probably 1734 he had discharges with the Burgh of Selkirk, and a bond in 1731. He firstly married Bethia Lidderdale and they had 2 sons, David and Capt. William, neither of whom produced a male heir. In 1699 he secondly married Alison, only surviving daughter of John Ker of Shaw. Their numerous family included: Robert, who married Anne, daughter of John Pringle of Haining, and their daughter Anne became heiress of Fairnilee, marrying John Pringle of Crichton; and Alison, who wrote a version of ‘Flowers of the Forest’. He was the last of his family to be buried in the Bell-house at Jedburgh Abbey. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, recorded as a ‘walker’ (presumably a ‘waulker’). His wife was a Cavers (first name not listed) and their children included Robert (b.1706). Other children, baptised in Hawick, who are probably his include: John and William (b.1713); and John (again, b.1716). The witnesses in 1706 were Bailie George Martin and Andrew Riddell in Goldielands. Robert (17th/18th C.) son of James, surgeon in Jedburgh. He married Esther, daughter of Robert Gledstains of that Ilk. In 1738 he was one of the 3 ‘heirs-portioners’ (along with his wife Esther and John Gledstains of Whitleaw) for Janet, last of the Gledstains of that Ilk. The lands of Dod were divided among them. Rev. Robert (1719/20–90) son of Gideon of Kidheugh, he graduated from Edinburgh University in 1743, was licensed by the Presbytery of Earlston in 1746.
and became preacher at Teviothead (or Caerlennig) from 1750 until probably 1756. He moved to Longframlington in Northumberland in that year and became minister at Castleton in 1763, where he was presented by Henry, Duke of Buccleuch. He was recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1785–89. In 1767 he married Elizabeth Widdrington of Huxley in Northumberland, and she died in 1768, aged 26. He wrote ‘A Scripture Catechism’ (1794). Robert of Fairnilee (17th/18th C.) son of Robert, who was a solicitor in Edinburgh, said to be descended from Richard, son of Robert, 3rd brother of Richard of Edgerston. He inherited his father’s lands in Ancrum and Scraesburgh. He is probably the Robert of Fairnilee recorded in a discharge in Selkirk in 1743. He was listed on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. He married Anne, daughter of John Pringle of Haining, and their daughter Anne became heiress of Fairnilee, marrying John Pringle of Crichton. Robert of Fairnington (1723–c.94) 4th son of Sir John of Edgerston and Elizabeth Cairncross. He was created a Baron of the Russian Empire following the assistance he gave during Russia’s war with Turkey in 1770. He repurchased the lands of Fairnington in 1779, planting trees and naming fields after some of his Russian friends. He also built a summer house on top of Down’s Law in the 1780s; this was known ever after as the ‘Baron’s Folly’. He was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1788 and was described at that time as being ‘very independent’. Also in 1788 (and still in 1811) he was listed as owner of Fairnington and neighbouring lands in Roxburgh Parish; he was listed in the county valuation as ‘Baron of the Russian Empire’. He was taxed for having 3 female servants in the period 1785–91, as well as 3 male servants 1785–91 and 4 in 1792, 1793 and 1794 (when he was deceased). He is recorded in the Carriage Tax Rolls in the 1780s and 1790s, but was deceased in the year 1794/5, when the duty was paid on his behalf by John of Edgerston. He left Fairnington to his nephew, John of Edgerston. There is a portrait of him by Benjamin West. His will was proved at the Prerogative Court of Canterbury in 1794. Robert (18th C.) resident of Lillesleaf Parish. His children included Margaret (b.1751). Robert (d.1787) mason in Hawick. He married Mary Simpson in 1761; she was daughter of Andrew Simpson and Agnes Turnbull. Their children were probably: Thomas (b.1762); Caleb (b.1765); Helen (b.1767); unnamed (b.1773); Susan (b.1775); and Robert (b.1777), known as a fiddler. The witnesses in 1767 were wright Francis Paisley and cooper John Miller. He died in Hawick. He was probably born in 1738 in Cavers, son of Thomas, although it has been suggested he is the son of Walter and Isabella Turnbull born in Wilton in 1724. Robert (b.1768/9) born in Kirkton Parish, he was a shepherd at Braxholme Town. He was recorded there as an agricultural labourer in 1841 and was also stated to have been a farm grieve. He married Jane (1784–1859), daughter of James Crawford and Janet Elliot; she was from Wilton, also known as Jenny and Janet and was buried in Wilton Kirkyard. Their children included: Walter (b.1814), who succeeded as shepherd and emigrated to Canada; and Charles Dickson (b.1825), a grocer living in Hawick. Robert (1776/7–1843) probably son of mason Robert. He was in the Militia in his youth, and noted for refused to flog a fellow soldier. Afterwards he was not himself given corporal punishment (perhaps because he was a balloted soldier), but had his wages reduced by twopence a day as a result; it was said he submitted to this cheerfully for the man ‘had dune him nae ill’. He was well known locally as a fiddler, being described by James Wilson as ‘long remembered by the present generation as a charming performer on the violin’ and ‘without any of the dashing execution of the race of youngsters who strive to dazzle rather than delight, his object was to please’. He paid a yearly visit to Tyneside and performed often at Minto House. A portrait of him exists in the Museum, painted by Adam Brown, and donated in 1897 by his grand-daughter, Mrs. Joseph Wilson. He is probably the Robert, recorded as ‘musician’ on Walter’s Wynd in 1841, living with wife Mary and children Robert, William, Thomas, Mary, Martha and Robert (possibly a grandson). Robert (1789–1838) son of Thomas and Mayde-Vail Dickson (b.1825), a grocer living in Hawick. He probably owned the building on the south side of the top of the Mill Path, labelled ‘Mr. Rutherford’ on Wood’s 1824 map. He is recorded as a builder at ‘Townhead’ on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory and at ‘Mill bank’ in 1837. He married Jane, daughter of William Waldie; she married William Laidlaw after she was widowed and died in 1871. His children included: Mary (1815–80), or ‘May’, who married William Rutherford, watchmaker; Thomas (1816–69), who married Mary Hutton, and died in Newcastle, New South Wales; William (b.1818), who married Beatrice Brydon and emigrated to Ontario, where he may have named the village of Millbank; Robert (1821–43); Elizabeth (1822–93), who married George Hogg; John (1826–75), who married Elizabeth Hackins; Jane (1828–55), first wife of auctioneer James Oliver; Agnes (b.1830), who married James Johnston and William Laidlaw; George (1831–58), who died in Hong Kong; and James (1833–8). Most of his family were still living at Millbank on the 1841 census. Robert (1814–bef. 61) son of James, who was a joiner at Bonchester Bridge. In 1851 he is listed as a joiner at 4 Bonchester Bridge, employing 1 man. He married Isabella, daughter of shepherd Andrew Hall. Their children were: Helen (1850–60); James (b.1852), who was a joiner with Douglas Taylor; and Isabella (b.1855, although it is unclear if he was the father). He went to America, leaving his family behind, and died there. By 1861 his wife was a widow, living at Hallrule Cottages. Robert (c.1846–98) son of shepherd Walter. He became a shepherd. In 1870 he married Ellen Nichols. His children included Helen or Nellie (b.1870); Walter (b.1871), Ann (b.1875), Roberton (b.1877), Janet (b.1879), Mary (b.1880), Aggie, born in Canada; and John, also born in Canada. In 1882 the family emigrated to Huron County, Ontario and he was farmer at East Wawamash. He was killed by a bull on his won farm in the Camille district of Manitoba. Samuel (17th C.) described as servitor to Sir William Douglas of Cavers in 1642 when he accused a large group of his drinking companions of stealing his wallet and its £11 contents. He was also accused by John ‘Lethane’ of trying to retrieve his wallet through violence. Steven (16th/17th C.) younger son of John ‘the Cock o Hunthill’ and brother of the next John of Hunthill. In 1582 he was recorded in a document with Archibald Douglas, 8th Earl of Angus; he signed ‘witht my hand led at the pen be the notar’. He is also recorded in 1593. Susannah (b.c.1795) from England, she was publican in Newcastleon, recorded at the King’s Arms in Pigot’s 1837 directory. This was probably the same place that became the Liddesdale Hotel at about 17 Douglas Square. In 1841 she was living with Thomasina (probably her mother). Thomas (15th C.) recorded in 1493 when George Turnbull of Hallrule had remission for premeditated felonies carried out against him at Bonjedward. The nature of the crimes is not given, but were presumably plundering of his farm. He could be the same as one of the other Thomases. Thomas (d.bef. 1504) killed in Jedburgh Abbey. At the Justice-aire of 1504 Lord Home, the Earl of Bothwell, Hugh Douglas in Biggar and several men in Jedburgh became sureties for a list of men who were accused of his murder. Later in 1504 there was a long list of tenants, factors and servants of the Archbishop of Glasgow, Robert Blackadder, who had remission for involvement in his murder. In 1506 there was also remission to John Forman and several Rutherfords for involvement in his murder. It is unclear which branch of the Rutherfords he belonged to, and what the circumstances were that led to his death. It is possible he was the Thomas, son of Nicholas, who was denounced as a rebel in 1494/5 for the murder of ‘Duthac Rutherfurde’ and who was also ‘at the horn’ in 1498 for his part in the murder of Patrick Hepburn. The Thomas who was connected with the death of Patrick Hepburn was also mentioned in 1502 when Alexander Laidlaw was convicted of associating with him, Adam Rutherford and Thomas Grahamslaw. Thomas of Edgerston (15th/16th C.) 3rd son of James of that Ilk and Wells. His brothers Philip and John died before him, and he succeeded his nephew Richard. However, his niece Helen gained Rutherford and Wells, and he kept Edgerston. He was thus the progenitor of the Lairds of Edgerston. He was probably the son of James of that Ilk who was included among Rutherfords and others who were declared rebels in 1498 for the murder of Patrick Hepburn. In 1502 Richard Hunter had remission for stealing sheep from his lands at Edgerston. He may be the Thomas who in 1503 witnessed a financial agreement in Jedburgh between George Douglas, Master of Angus and Ralph Ker of Primsideloch. He may be the Thomas of that Ilk who (along with John of Hundalee and George of Hunthill) had a bond of manrent with Alexander, Lord Home in 1516. He was succeeded by his son Richard (or possibly Robert). Other sons may have been: Philip, who lived at Edgerston and was tutor to his nephew Thomas, the ‘Black Laird’; John, who is said to have had 6 digits on each hand and foot, and to have had ‘memorable strength and courage’, and whose descendants occupied ‘the Tofts’; and Archibald of the Townhead, ancestor of the Rutherfords of Townhead and of ‘the Hall’. It is possible he was the Thomas who was on the panel in 1482 for Elizabeth Cunningham inheriting the lands of Appletreehall and the eastern part of Hassendean. He may have been the Thomas who as on the panel of retour for Gordon of Stichill in 1525, and who was listed among the Borderers who had remission in 1526 for supporting the Homes in an attack on the Earl of Arran. Thomas of the Grange (15th/16th C.) 2nd son of Andrew of Hundalee. He seems likely to be the brother of the Laird of Hundalee who in 1493 acted as surety for Patrick Rodman from Rulewater. He was described being in the Grange of Abbotrule at the 1494/5 Justiciary held in Jedburgh when he acted as surety for Patrick Rodman. Also in 1494/5 he was recorded as brother of the Laird of Hundalee when he was surety for Jedburgh men. In 1502 he was recorded as brother of John of Hundalee when the pair of them served as sureties for Nicholas (who may have been related). Also in 1502 he had remission for resetting Gilbert Oliver, a man called ‘Wobstar’ and James Rutherford, who had stolen animals; John of Hundalee was his surety. Additionally he had remission in 1502 for stealing livestock and for resetting other thieves, including Nixons, who raided Raperlaw and elsewhere, and Englishmen from Redesdale; again John of Hundalee was his surety. He is listed as being ‘in the Grange’ among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Branxholme) pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran. His sons Andrew, George and ‘Dougal Stible’ are also listed (the last presumably being a son-in-law). He was probably succeeded by George. Thomas (16th C.) first man listed as a witness to the instrument of resignation for the Routledges of Crook in 1529/30, witnessed at Cavers Kirk. It is unclear whether he was a church official or local landowner, or how he was related to other Rutherfords. Sir Thomas ‘the Black Laird of Edgerston’ (c.1550–1615) son of Richard and grandson (or perhaps great-grandson) of the first Robert of Edgerston. His nickname came from his complexion and dark hair (‘being of a swarthy complexion and black haired’), but he was also known as a local leader to be reckoned with, along with his 9 sons (or perhaps this is his 8 brothers). He supposedly turned the tide of battle at the Raid of the Redeswire in 1575 when he arrived with the Jedburgh contingent; however, he only succeeded as Laird in 1605 and hence it was likely to have been his father or grandfather Richard who was at the Raid. He is also said to have led the Rutherfords at the Battle of the Hencleugh. He is recorded as son and heir of Richard in 1587, when Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst served as surety for him. He married Jean, daughter of Gavin Elliott of Stobs, who may have been his cousin (although there is much confusion over this). He is said to have had 9 sons (but this is not documented, and may also have referred to his brothers). He was succeeded by his sons Richard and Robert in turn. A daughter, Jean, inherited Stobs, along with her aunts Dorothy and Esther. He is also said to have had a daughter Joan, who married William, called ‘Neck of Steel’, son of Robert Elliot of Larriston (but this may be confusion). Thomas ‘Lippie’ (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. It is unclear what his nickname referred to. Thomas of Tofts (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘Thomas Rutherfurde of Toftis’ in 1610 when he was on an inquest relating to lands in Rulewater. His brother William was listed among fugitives in 1618. His son Robert was accused of stealing horses in 1623. Thomas of Hunthill (16th/17th C.) son of John of Hunthill. In 1583 he and his father were summoned to appear at Jedburgh to answer charges. He was also denounced as a rebel (along with his father and others) in 1586 for not appearing to answer charges of stopping the Commendator of Melrose collecting his teinds in Langnewton. In 1590 he was ‘son and apparent heir’ of John of Hunthill when his cautioner was recorded as William of Littlediugh. He is probably the ‘younger of Hunthill’ listed among Lairds who appeared before the Privy Council in 1591 to promise to support the Warden of the Middle March, particularly in pursuing the Earl of Bothwell. In 1592 he was summoned for charges of treason for being an accomplice of the Earl of Bothwell, but his ‘horning’ was lifted soon afterwards. He was juror on a retour in 1601. Also in 1601 he was head of a group of Rutherfords who were accused of firing weapons towards the Youngs at a horserace; his brothers William and Robert were also listed and after confessing he was warded in Edinburgh Castle for 24 hours. Alexander Lord Home was his cautioner that he would pay 500 merks to the Crown for ‘shooting with pistolets’. In 1602 he signed a bond among Border Lairds for keeping the peace and was cautioner for John in the Tofts and his sons. In 1603 he was cautioner for George of ‘Ewingstoun’. In 1611 he was fined for the non-appearance of a man he was cautioner for. In 1612 he had a charter for the lands of Hunthill and others. He married Jean, daughter of John Cranston of that Ilk. He was succeeded by his son John of Hunthill. His daughter Grizel married Adam Kirkton of Stewarfield, the contract being signed at Wolfelee in 1612. Thomas of Ruecastle (16th/17th C.) probably a younger son of George of Longnewton, he was served heir to his brother Andrew ‘called of Quhytehouse in Nesbit’. He had a charter of ‘Rouchcastell’ in 1642, along with the attached forest and the mains of Harden. In 1643 he was ‘in Whitehouse’ when his lands in Ruecastle were valued at £240. In 1656 he was referred to as ‘Thomas of Rowcastell, called of Quhytehouse, in Nesbit’. He is probably the Thomas ‘of whythouse’ who paid tax on £340 in Bedrule Parish in 1663, as well as £144 worth of land he had purchased from the Earl of Traquair. He married Elizabeth Mader. It is unclear how he was related to the Thomas of Ruecastle who was served heir to his father John of Knowesouth in 1666.

Sir Thomas of Hunthill (d.c.1680) 3rd son of John. He succeeded his brother John in 1656. He is probably the ‘Thomas Rutherfoord called of the towrs in Sjraisburgh’ recorded on the Land Tax Rolls of 1663. He was recorded in 2 deeds in 1663. In 1664 he succeeded to the estate of Rutherfurd after the death of his relative Andrew, Lord Rutherford and Earl of Teviot. In 1665 he complained to the Archbishop of Glasgow over rights to the loft in Jedburgh Church. He was also made the 2nd Lord Rutherford and sat in Parliament. In 1666 he was among the Rutherfords who made an agreement concerning the family burial place at Jedburgh Abbey. Dying without issue, he was succeeded by his brother Archibald.

Thomas (17th C.) recorded as Bailie of Regality of Hawick in 1672. In that year he wrote to the inhabitants of Hawick exonerating them from attending the Head Court at Thornhill (near Drumlanrig) that year; he wrote from Jedburgh, suggesting that he could be same man as Thomas of Hunthill or Thomas of Knowesouth. Also in 1672 he was recorded, when setting the fair in October, being asked to use the Hawick drummer and piper to ‘set the fair’, rather than the ones from Jedburgh; he called the roll in the kirkyard for all the inhabitants to ride the fair. Thomas of Ruecastle or Knowesouth (17th C.) eldest son of John of Knowesouth. In 1666 he was served heir to his father’s 7-pound-10-shilling land of Ruecastle, with ‘lie Maynes de Harden et forresta de Rowcastle’ (annexed to the Barony of Grubet), as well as 3 husbandlands in the town of Ruecastle with a piece of land called Newtonhaugh (in Bedrule Parish), some land in the Earldom of Traquair and a further 1½ merklands in Ruecastle (in the Barony of Ulston). It is unclear how he was related to the John of Ruecastle recorded a little earlier, but was described in 1666 as ‘junior’ (suggesting this was used to distinguish him, or just that he was a minor when he succeeded). In 1673 his brother Robert became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh. He paid the land tax in Bedrule Parish in 1678, the lands then valued at £511 and included lands previously in Ruecastle. In 1687 he sub-leased the lands of Minto ‘Kaims and Hills’ from William Mather. He is probably the Thomas of Knowesouth who was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1685 and 1690. He may be have been Laird in 1694 when the Hearth Tax was paid on the Knowesouth estate. He contributed £100 to the Darien Scheme in 1695. In 1673 he married Isobel, daughter of Robert Ker of Linton (hereditary Bailie of Jedburgh) and was probably succeeded by his son Thomas. Thomas (17th C.) listed as resident at Roughheugh in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Thomas of Knowesouth (17th/18th C.) son of Thomas and Isobel Ker. He married Cecilia Douglas, grand-daughter of George Douglas of Ardit, and daughter of William Douglas and Agnes Scott (daughter of Patrick of Ancrum). His son William became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1708. His son John (b.1684/5) was probably a doctor and in 1710 married Isobell, daughter of the deceased William Scott of Raeburn. His daughter Ann married William Chisholme of Broadlee in 1702. His daughter Christina (1702–82) married Gilbert Ainslie in 1724. Rev. Thomas (17th/18th C.) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1683, he became minister of Southdean Parish in 1689. However, he was deprived later that year for ‘not reading the Proclamation of the Estates, and not praying for their majesties William and Mary’ (i.e. refusing to give up Episcopacy), and was said to have instead prayed for the late King James. The case was brought to the Privy Council by a group of Southdean Parishioners. He was declared a fugitive, but what happened to him afterwards is not known. Thomas of Edgerston, Hunthill and Wells (c.1650–1720) 3nd son of John. He succeeded after his brother Andrew’s death in 1718, but only held the lands for a couple of years before his own death. They had become ‘of that Ilk’ in 1703 when Robert Earl of Rutherford resigned his lands. He was also Laird of Wells, purchasing it (with his wife’s money) from Charles Stewart, 4th Earl of Traquair in 1687. He was listed as Laird of Wells in 1694 when he paid for 19 hearths in several parishes. He was also ‘of Wells’ when he contributed £800 to the Darien.
Rutherford

Scheme in 1695. In 1690 and 1704 he was listed as Laird of Wells on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire. However, in 1707 he sold Wells it to William Elliot, and was thus the last Rutherford Laird of Wells. He also acquired Bonjedward, Mounthooly and Scraesburgh, before 1707, when he was recorded as owner of more than £2200 worth of land in Bonjedward. He married Susanna, daughter and heiress of Walter Riddell of Minto and Catherine Nisbet of Dirlton. He was succeeded by his eldest son Sir John. His other children were: Barbara; Catherine; Jean, who secondly married William Douglas of Timpendean in 1718; Agnes; Isabella; Susanna; and Violet, who married Robert Scott of Falnash. A stone preserved in the new Wells House built in the early 20th century, bore 18 coats of arms, showing the descent of both him and his wife. Thomas of Knowesouth (1742–96) son of John and Mary Ker, he held a charter of Knowesouth in 1758 (his father being declared insane). He was descended from the Rutherfords of Ruescater. In 1788 he was ‘younger of Knowesouth’ when his lands of Westfield (and others) in Lanton were listed in the valuation roll. He was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1788; he was described at that time as having a small estate, being ‘once Sheriff-Substitute of the County under Oliver of Dinlabyre’ and probably being a supporter of Sir Gilbert Elliot. He was recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls in 1785–94. He paid tax for having a male servant in 1778, 1779 and 1794. In the 1788 county valuation he is recorded as owner of ‘Lands in Ruescater acquired from his father’, valued at £48 10s (including teinds). He is still recorded as owner on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls of lands in Lanton, including ‘Lady Lands, formerly in Cavers Parish’. He married Margaret Elliot (perhaps also known as Christine), and their Thomas (b.1772), who probably died young; John (b.1774), who briefly succeeded; George (b.1775), in the Royal Navy, who succeeded for a very short period; Nelly (b.1777), who probably died young; Anne (b.1778), who married Dr. William Somerville; and Cicely (1778–1804), also known as Cecilia, who died at Knowesouth. None of these children produced heirs. He later married Ann, daughter of William Falla. Their children were: Thomas; Charles; Hugh, who emigrated to Ontario; and William, who lived in Ancrum and married Janet Angus. He is also recorded in Hawick in 1789 when his son Walter with Helen Scott (who appears to have ‘N.’ after her name) was baptised, with witnesses Andrew Elliot (servant to Rev. William Sharp) and Kirk Officer Thomas Miller. After his death the order of inheritance was complicated and disputed, but the estate eventually went to his sister Jean, who married Thomas Scott, uncle of Sir Walter of Abbotsford. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Rieve and their children included: James (b.1769); John (b.1771); Margaret (b.1773); and Walter (b.1776). The witnesses in 1773 and 1776 were William Mitchellhill and Robert Riddell. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. He married Margaret Elliot and their children included: Thomas (b.1772); John (b.1774); George (b.1775); Nelly (b.1777); and Anne and Cicely (b.1778). Thomas (18th/19th C.) clockmaker in Hawick. His unnamed child died in 1808. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825, where he is listed as ‘watchmaker’. He could be the son of clockmaker William who was born in Hawick in 1784. Thomas (b.1762) son of mason Robert and Mary Simpson. He was elder brother of Caleb. He married Magdalena Dryden and their children included: Margaret (b.1786); and Robert (1789–1838). He may have secondly married Jane Elliot and their children included Francis (b.1794). It seems likely he was a mason, like his father. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1791 he married Jane Elliot, also from Hawick. Their son Francis was baptised in 1794. He could be the Thomas who witnessed a baptism for James Laidlaw in 1773. Thomas (1784/5–1855) son of shepherd Thomas and Helen Reeve. He was a farm worker at Haysike, and is recorded there in 1841. He married Jane, daughter of agricultural worker George Michie, and she died in 1859, aged 75. Their children were: Thomas, gamekeeper at Blackcockhaa; John, shoemaker; and Maggie, who married James Wintrup. Thomas (b.1807/8) born in Ancrum Parish, he was farmer at Sandystanes in the 1860s. In 1861 he is recorded there along with his brothers John (retired accountant), George (retired farmer), William (also a farmer) and sister Isabella. He is listed as farmer at Sandystones in 1868. Thomas (b.1811) son of Bonchester joiner James. He served for 21 years in the army. After his discharge he became a policeman in Hawick. In 1861 he is listed as a ‘Police Office, Chelsea Pensioner’, living at 10 O’Connell Street. He married Elizabeth Young in Hawick in 1859 and their children included: James (b.1859), who worked with Turnbull the Dyers; and Richard (b.1861), who probably died young. Thomas Elliot (1816–1900) son of Thomas, he was born at Branxholme Park. He was gamekeeper at Blackcockha (also known as Byreleehaugh) near the head of the Ale and also lived at Bellendean Cottage. He married Christina Scott (grand-daughter of ‘The Pether’) at Haysike and she died at Wellogate Place in 1877, aged 54. Their children were: Jane Scott (d.1844), only daughter, who died in infancy at Todshawhill; Thomas, who became a coal merchant; David; George; and Walter R. He and some of his family are buried at Borthwick Waas. Thomas (b.1816) mason in Hawick, son of Robert. In 1841 he was listed as head of the family at Mill Bank, living with his widowed mother and his siblings William, Robert, John, Jane, Agnes and George. Thomas ‘Tom’ (1832–1906) son of James and Betty Beattie, who was daughter of Betty Stevenson. His father died when he was young, and in 1841 he is listed with his mother in the home of his grand-uncle Andrew Stevenson, blacksmith at Bonchester Bridge. He was educated by George Tancred’s mother and then at Hobkirk School. He was assistant blacksmith at Bonchester Bridgend in the mid-1800s, and effectively took over as blacksmith by the 1860s and formally after his great-uncle Andrew Stevenson's death in 1871. He helped carry letters to Chester for a while. His great-grandfather John was shepherd at Shiplaw Cross. James Elliot took over from him as blacksmith in about 1902. In 1853 he married Agnes Burns (d.1901), who came from Ancrum. Their children were: Janet (b.c.1853); Andrew Stevenson (b.1854), blacksmith in Newcastle; Elisabeth (b.1856), who lived in New York; Christina (b.1858), a professional cook in New York, who married James Rennie; Margaret (b.1860), who married blacksmith Gideon Scott and lived in Hawick; Agnes (b.1862); John Burns (b.1863), blacksmith in Belfast, who married Jean Waugh, daughter of the tenant at Hartshaugh Mill; Agnes (again, b.1865), who married Ecclefechan blacksmith Andrew Calvert; Thomas (b.1867), a tailor and clothier with businesses in Belfast and Bangor, he married Isabella Sparks, sister of his sister-in-law; Alexander Burns (b.1870); Alexander Burns (again, b.1871), wine and spirit merchant in Crook, County Durham; and James (b.1876), blacksmith for a while and later proprietor of the Fox & Hounds. Said to posses a wonderful memory, he helped George Tancred with information for his book on Rulewater. He died in Hawick. Thomas (1846–1909) son of gamekeeper Thomas and Christina Scott. He became a coal and hay merchant of Wellogate Place. He was active in the Total Abstinence Society, the Congregational Church and the P.S.A. He married Catherine, daughter of William Whillans (from Chesters), and she died in 1935, aged 88. Their children were Thomas, Isabella Christina (who married James H. Haining) and Catherine Jane. He is buried in the Wellogate. Walter (15th C.) recorded in 1494 when John of Edgerston failed to produce him to stand trial before the High Court of the Judiciary in Jedburgh. Perhaps the same Walter ‘in falsishop’ (i.e. Phaup) composed in 1494/5 for stealing sheep from Hartwood and Haining, a cow from Minto, oats from Fairnington and other crimes. Walter, son of Walter in Phaup, failed to appear at the court in 1494/5 and his surety, John of Edgerston, was fined. Walter (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as ‘lustus’ (probably a nickname meaning ‘lusty’) in Edgerston. He was surety for John ‘Cowar’, also in Edgerston. Walter of Fairnington (16th C.) recorded in 1580/1 when he claimed right to lands in Lessuden. It is unclear how he was related to other Rutherfords. Walter (17th/18th C.) workman in Hawick. He married Isobel Turnbull in Wilton Parish. Their children may have included Robert (b.1724), a mason. Walter (17th/18th C.) described in 1694 as ‘portioner of Caiphope’ (i.e. Capehope) when he was involved in the discharge of a bond with Henry Elliot of Harwood. He may have been son of John of Capehope, being the Walter of Capehope who paid the land tax in Hownam Parish. Walter (1723–1804) younger son of Sir John of Edgerston. He served with the army in America, being a Captain in the 60th Regiment. He persuaded his brother John to join him in America, and there John died at Ticonderoga (where he was probably also present) in 1758. He was later a hostage of the Americans and eventually settled there. He married Mary, daughter of Gen. Alexander. Their son John (1760–1840) was a land surveyor and politician, who spelled his name ‘Rutherford’, served on the U.S. Senate, laid out part of Manhattan and settled New Jersey’s boundaries; he named his house Edgerston’, at what is now called Rutherford, New Jersey. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. Walter (1814–97) son of Robert and Jane Crawford. He worked as a shepherd in the Borthwick area. Mabonlaw. He won a silver medal for speed in shearing sheep. In 1851 he was shepherd at Branxholmtown and was at Mabonlaw in 1861. In 1844 he married Ann Clark (1825–55), who may have been from Dyke, Morayshire. Their children included: Mary (b.1845), who married Andrew Huggan; Robert (b.c.1846), who emigrated to Canada; Janet (b.1847), returned to Scotland; John (b.1849), became an undertaker in Glasgow; Charles (b.1851), partner in Rutherford & Kay, wine merchants; Isabella (b.1851), who went to Frankford, New York; and Alexander (b.1854). In 1861 he secondly married Helen Scott Beattie, daughter of John Beattie, shepherd at Combe; her mother was Isobel Scott, said to be related to Sir Walter Scott. Their children were: Isabella (b.1862); Walter (b.1865); Adam (b.1866); Helen (b.1869); James (b.1870); William (b.c.1873); and Ann (b.1875). In 1881 they emigrated to a farm at Turnberry in Western Ontario, and he died in Bluevale, Huron County. Walter (19th C.) farmer of Crailing Tofts. He was well known as a local golfer, being first President of the Border Golfers’ Association. His paternal grandmother was Elizabeth Bunyan from Spittal-on-Tweed, daughter of John Beattie, shepherd at Combe; her mother was Elizabeth Bunyan from Spittal-on-Tweed. His uncle was William Rutherford, Professor of Physiology at Edinburgh University. He served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. William (13th C.) recorded on the Ragman Rolls of 1296 as ‘William de Rotherford’ parson of ‘Lillesclyue’ (i.e. Lilliesleaf). ‘John de Lillesclif’ was also recorded there, as well as ‘Aymer de Rotherford’ (of Roxburghshire) although whether they were related is unknown. His seal bore a bull’s head with a human head between the horns, and with the name ‘S’WIL’MI DE ROTHIRFORD’. He could also be the clerk of the same name who witnessed a gift of land in Dryfe (Dumfriesshire) in the mid-13th century. William (d.c.1363) probably son of Sir Richard. He was listed as ‘Willelmo de Rotherford’, Lord of that Ilk when he witnessed a charter for Adam of Roule, for the lands of Altonburn in about 1354 and another for Roger of Alton relating to the Church of Roxburgh. He also witnessed the same lands of Altonburn passing to the Kers in 1357/8. About the same time he witnessed a grant of lands in Lessuden for Melrose Abbey. In 1363 he was already deceased when his lands in Teviotdale were granted to the custody of John Ker until his heir William reached the age of majority. However, William probably died before this, since he appears to have been succeeded by Sir Richard, probably his son. William (15th C.) recorded as William ‘of Ruderfurde’ in 1429/30 when he was on the ‘retour’ panel for the lands of Caverton. James (probably of that Ilk) was also listed, but it is unclear how this William was related to other family members. William of Hunthill (d.bef. 1507) son of George. He had a sasine for Nether Chatto and other lands in 1496. In 1502 he was surety for John of Hunderford. In 1503 Simon (perhaps a relative) was his procurator for his lands of Nether Chatto at the Justice-aiere. In 1504 he became surety to enter a long list of Rutherfords and others at the next Justice-aiere for the murder of David ‘bachler’; his own surety was Mark Ker (presumably of Dolphinston). His son George succeeded him in 1507. William (16th C.) younger son of George of Hunthill and brother to Andrew and John. In 1544 he was tutor to William of Langnewton. He held lands at Over Ancrum. He married Christian, daughter of Christopher Armstrong of Mangerton; her brother was John Armstrong of Gihockie. William of Longnewton (16th C.) probably grandson of George of Longnewton and son of Walter. However, it is suggested in some genealogies that he succeeded his cousin Walter. He was a juror on a retour in 1541 and was also a Burgess of Edinburgh. In 1544 William, younger brother of the Laird of Hunthill, was his tutor. He was served heir in 1547, presumably when he came of age. He had sasine for various other lands in 1550. However, he appears to have been murdered by Robert Ker of Newhall, part of a family feud between the Rutherfords and the Kers that led to a bond being signed in 1560. His son George was also mentioned in 1560, and was to be satisfied by Sir Andrew Ker of Littledean. It is unclear if he or his son was the William who signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’ in 1551. William of Kidheugh (16th C.) son of Adam, or perhaps son of Walter, younger brother of George of Longnewton. He is recorded as possessor of Kidheugh in 1545, and also owned Langrink in Selkirkshire. He is listed in 1549 among the associates of Walter Ker of Cessford who were accused of helping the English in raids upon the farms of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. In 1553/4 he was on the panel (but transcribed as ‘Reidhauch’) for Sir Walter Scott inheriting his grandfather’s lands of Branxholme and Buccleuch. He was succeeded by his son Robert. William of Longnewton (16th C.) possibly son of the earlier William. In 1578 he signed a bond of allegiance with other Rutherfords, Turnbulls and Douglas of Cavers. He may have died before 1583 when the other barons of the bond were declared rebels. William of Abbotrule (16th C.) recorded in 1581/2 when he witnessed a transaction between Walter was listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. William (17th C.) served as interim Town Clerk in 1696. He was a Bailie of Jedburgh and recorded as a writer in Hawick in 1690 when his son Thomas became a baxter’s apprentice in Edinburgh. He may be the same as William of Bankend. Dr. William of Barnhills (d.bef. 1731). He bought the lands of Barnhills from Sir William Bennet of Grubet in 1703, with sasine in 1705. He married Agnes, daughter of Sir Gideon Scott of Highchester. He had 2 daughters: Margaret, who married Rev. Alexander Mackenzie of Edinburgh; Helen; and Jean, who married John Mowbray from Edinburgh. Each of his daughters inherited a third of Barnhills. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Northcroft in 1751. He married Margaret Hall and their children included: Agnes (b.1746), baptised in Ashkirk; and Thomas (b.1751), baptised in Wilton. The witnesses in 1751 were James Dryden and Walter Scott. William (d.1797) clockmaker of Hawick. He married Helen Scott and their children included Thomas (b.1784). The record of his death states that he was ‘killed by a fall over a stair’. The death of his wife Nelly Scott is recorded in 1805. William (18th/19th C.) Sheriff Clerk in Jedburgh, recorded in 1814. William (1797/8–1871) probably born in Northumberland, he was teacher at Woodburn 1822–25. He then came to Hawick, where he was teacher of Mathematics and other subjects at the Grammar School. About 1832 he moved to be master at Corporation Academy, Berwick, in 1838 moved to the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, and retired about 1864. He was a member of the council of the Royal Astronomical Society 1844–47 and Honorary Secretary in 1845 and 1846. He contributed mathematical problems to publications such as the ‘Ladies’ Diary’ and co-edited the first volume of ‘The Mathematician’ in 1845. He also edited many other mathematical books, including ‘Simson’s Euclid’ and Hutton’s ‘Course of Mathematics’. He published about 15 papers, including a solution of spherical triangles, and the calculation of π to 440 decimal places. His wife was Elizabeth, and they had a daughter, Mary Fenwick. He died at his home in London. William Oliver (1781–1879) of Edgerston, son of Jane Rutherford and William Oliver of Dinalabyre. He was born at Weens, with a celebratory larch planted on the side of the walk to the garden. He succeeded to Dinalabyre on the death of his father in 1830. He was ‘younger of Dinalabyre’ when he served as a Lieutenant in the Roxburgh Volunteer cavalry that responded to the False Alarm of 1804. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805, when still ‘junior of Dinlabyre’. He was also a founder member of the Jedforest Club in 1810. He succeeded his father as Sheriff of Roxburghshire in 1807. He was listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819 (along with his father), when still younger of Dinlabyre. He was probably the William listed as ‘sheriff clerk, Jedburgh’ in 1825 when he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’. He was Sheriff during some of the local election troubles of the 1830s, requesting that a troop of dragoons be sent to Hawick in 1835, and reading the Riot Act twice on that occasion. He purchased the estate of Knowesouth from Charles Scott, and had the mansion there built, but sold it not long afterwards to George Pott in 1838 (although may have held on to part of these lands). He also acquired part of the lands of Ruelcastle from the heirs of Thomas Rutherford of Knowesouth. After his uncle John of Edgerston died in 1834, he was passed the lands of Edgerston and changed his surname. He was recorded at Edgerston in Pigot’s 1837 directory and at Dinlabyre in 1852. In 1839 he was present at the banquet at Branxholme for the Duke of Buccleuch. He was also Deputy-Lieutenant (from 1848), Justice of the Peace and Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. He also served as Chairman of the Lunacy Board for Roxburghshire, Selkirkshire and Berwickshire, and Chairman of the Police and Prison Boards for Roxburghshire. He retired from his duties as Sheriff in 1868. In 1804 he married Agnes, 2nd daughter of Alexander Chatto of Mainhouse, and she died in 1859. His children included: William, who died young in 1818; a second son who died the same year; Elizabeth, who married Rev. James Denniston in Malta; William Alexander Oliver (b.1818), who succeeded and whose son William Edward Oliver sold Edgerston; Jane, who married McDuff Rhind, Sheriff-Substitute for Wigtonshire; and Archibald John, who succeeded to Dinlabyre. His name was sometimes written ‘Oliver-Rutherford’. William (b.1804/5) watchmaker of Hawick, son of Francis and Alison Henderson. He was recorded on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In the 1841–61 censuses he was living at 7 High Street. His mother was living in the adjacent house in 1851. He married Mary Rutherford, daughter of builder Robert. His children included: Jane (b.1839); Alice (b.1841); Francis (‘Frank’) E. (b.c. 1844); Robert (b.c.1845); Matilda (b.c.1848), who married Thomas Davidson; Andrew S. (b.1850); Agnes; and Elizabeth A. (b.c.1853) A portrait exists of him. William (b.1812) son of Bonchester joiner James. He emigrated to Australia and is said to have done well. When he heard of the death of his brother Alexander (who had suffered paralysis), he sent money back to Hobkirk Parish to cover the expenses for maintaining him. William (b.1813/4) born in Hawick, he was a shepherd. In 1841 he was living at Mabonlaw and in 1851 his family were there (but he was presumably absent during the census). By 1861 he was at Glenkerry. His wife was Janet (from Kirkton Parish) and their children included Helen, Robert, James, Janet, William and Thomas. William (1818–80) son of Hawick builder Robert and Jane Waldie. He married Beatrice, daughter of William Brydon and Margaret Hogg. Their children were Margaret, Jean, Matilda, Robert William, Catherine Anne, Elizabeth H., Georgina, Alice May, William Thomas and Agnes, at least the first of which was born in Hawick. They emigrated to Ontario in about 1850. It may be that he was responsible for naming the area ‘Millbank’, near Waterloo and Stratford in Ontario. William ‘Willie’ (1849/50–1937) resident of the small house in Cogsmill that used to be the school. His wife ran the post office and shop there. He married Margaret Turnbull, who died in 1925, aged 74. Their son William John was born in Hawick in 1891. They are buried in Denholm (formerly written ‘Routherfourd’, ‘Ruderfurde’, ‘Ruderfurde’, ‘Ruderfurde’, ‘Rutherfoord’, ‘Rutherford’, ‘Rutherford’, ‘Rutherford’, ‘Rutherford’, ‘Rutherfurde’, ‘Rutherfurde’, ‘Rutherfurde’, ‘Ruthirfurde’, ‘Ruthirfurde’, ‘Rwthyrfurde’, etc.).

the Rutherfords (thu-ru-thur-furdez) n. prominent family around the Kelso and Jedburgh areas. The family name is believed to have originated in their lands near Maxton, various versions of the traditional story involving a fording of the Tweed that led to Scots victory. They had land in Roxburghshire since at least the 12th century. Aymer and Sir Nicholas ‘de Rotherford’ swore fealty to Edward I in 1296, as well as William, who was Parson of Lilliesleaf. Sir Richard Rutherford, Warden of the Marches, and his 5 sons helped repel English incursions in the years around 1400. He is the direct ancestor of the Rutherfords of Chatto, Edgerston, Hunthill, Houndlee, Fairnington and Fairnilee. Robert Rutherford of Chatto gained renown in helping with the victory at Otterburn. In 1544 some of the Rutherfords were among the families that ‘did set on red... crosses on their cotes’ and support the English army in the burning of Jedburgh etc. Thomas Rutherford, the Black Laird of Edgerston, was famous for his daring attacks on the English in the 16th century, particularly at the Raid of the Redeswire. The Edgerston branch tended to spell their name ‘Ruthfrud’. A feud with the Turnbuls in Teviotdale was recorded in Parliament in 1479. General Andrew Rutherford became Lord Rutherford in 1661 and was made Earl of Teviot (a title that became extinct) in 1663. The Rutherfords also held the lands of Wells in Rulewater. The various branches of the family are intimately connected with the other local landed families through marriage. A family of that name in Hawick were known for their abilities on the fiddle for several generations around the 18th century. The family motto is ‘Nec Sorte Nec Fato’ (‘Neither by strategy nor by chance’) and the shield is silver with a red border and three blackbirds at the top – ‘...The Ruthfoords, with grit renown, Convoy’d the town of Jedburgh out’ [T].

Rutherford’s Directory (ru-thur-furdz-di-rek-tu-ree) n. directory of businesses and prominent individuals in the south of Scotland, as well as listing statistical information for each of the 3 Borders counties. It was officially known as ‘Rutherford’s Southern Counties Register’ and was published in 1867 by J. and J.H. Rutherford of Kelso. It is an invaluable source of local information in this decade, and contains considerably more detail than the more general directories of Scotland. It was reprinted in facsimile form in 1990.

Ruthven (ruth-vin) n. William 4th Lord Ruthven (c.1541–84). Along with his father Patrick, he was involved with the murder of Mary Queen of Scots’ secretary Rizzio. In 1572 he captured a force under Ferniehirst and Buccleuch, which had unsuccessfully tried to surprise Jedburgh (which was loyal to the infant James VI) and then retreated to Hawick. In 1578/9 he was the King’s Lieutenant in the West Marches when he brought an action against 22 Border Lairds for the deeds of the men for whom they served as cautioners. He was later involved in a plot to seize James VI and was executed.

He was minister at Greenlaw from 1905, then at Hillhead in Glasgow and Canmore Street in Denfermline, before taking becoming Hawick Congregational Kirk minister in 1934. His wife was a grand-daughter of Evangelical Union founder James Morrison, and a daughter of another well known E.U. figure, George Gladstone. He was President of the Congregational Union of Scotland, and in this capacity was the first Hawick minister to broadcast a Sunday evening service on the radio, in 1936. He was well known for his talents as a preacher, and led spacial monthly evening services for young people. He demitted in 1941, intending to retire, but was appointed interim minister in Kilmarnock and later at Sannox, Arran, where he died.

safe oot, safe in (säf-oo-säf-in) interj. slogan used to send riders off at the Common Riding, and a toast drunk at some functions. It is also used in other Common Ridings (e.g. Selkirk, Annan, Biggar and Linlithgow), while in Peebles the phrase is ‘Safe oot, safe roond and safe in’. The origin and antiquity of the slogan is uncertain, but it may be related to Psalm 121 ‘The Lord shall preserve thy going out and thy coming in from this time forth, and even for evermore’. It is mentioned in 1806 in the letter than William Nixon sent along with the sash for the Cornet, and so its use goes back at least to this time – ‘Wishing the Cornet and his company ‘Safe Out and Safe In’, I have the honour to remain …’[C&L1806].

Salenside (sā-linsīd) n. farm just south of Ashkirk. There was once an ancient tower there, although there is now no evidence of its precise location, but there is a suggestion that Salenside Cottage was built on the same site. It was owned by a branch of the Scotts in the 17th century. Walter Scott of Ashkirk paid £14 for the lands and tacks there to John Scott in Kirkhouses. Andrew Scott of Salenside was said to be part of the raid at Carlisle Castle in 1596. Robert Scott of Salenside was charged with murder in 1614. It was valued at £116 in 1643, when owned by Robert Scott of Whitslade. John Easton and William Scott were tenants in 1694. John Ridell was living there in 1710. Patrick Hume was there in 1731. In 1753 they are described as ‘twenty-shilling lands’. The house had a fire in the 1760s. It is listed in 1788 being owned by Thomas Wilkinson, with a value of £116, and still listed with the same owner in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls, being valued (along with Castleside and Broadlee) at £519. William Little was farmer there in the mid-19th century and William Inglis in the 1860s – ‘Warn Dryhope, and Catslack, Howford, and Huntlee free, Whitslade, Todrigg, and Sallenside, the morn to wait on me’[WSB] (the origin is possibly the Celtic ‘sailin’, meaning ‘little heel’; also spelled ‘Salinsyde’ etc.; it is ‘Salenside’ in 1580, ‘Salingsyde’ in 1609, ‘Sallensyde’ and ‘Salinsyde’ in 1621 ‘Sullinsyd’ in 1632 and ‘Sallinside’ in 1710; it is marked as ‘Sallanside’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, although quite far south of the Ale Water, and is ‘Sallenside’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).
Salenside Croft

More recently it had a 3-storey tower built onto it.

Salenside Croft (sä-lin-siē-kroft) n. name for a piece of land in Ashkirk. In 1581 it is recorded along with ‘Skakriggis’ when assigned to John Scott in Kirkhouses, having previously been occupied by Richard Brown and George Easton. It is unclear if it was the same place as Salenside, or separate (it is ‘Sallandside Croft’ in 1581).

Salisbury Avenue (salz-bu-ree-aw-vi-new) n. street of relatively large houses off Weensland Road, built around 1898. It is named after Robert Arthur Talbot Gascoyne Cecil (1830–1903), 3rd Marquis of Salisbury, who was Prime Minister 3 times. The designs for the half-timbered villas were by J.P. Alison.

Salkeld (sal-keld) n. Thomas deputy of the English Warden, Lord Scrope. He captured Kinmont Willie in 1596, after a truce meeting to discuss Border disputes – ‘O have ye na heard o the fause Sakelde? O have ye na heard o the keen Lord Scroop? How they hae taen baud Kinmont Willie, On Hairibee to hang him up?’ [T].

sall (sal) v., arch. shall – ‘...sal content and pay to Jhone of Murray of Fallohill and Niniane Murray the sovm of thua hundreth merkis ...’ [SB1500], ‘Impr. whatsoever person sal commit blud upon utheris within the freedom of Hawick, sal pay 5 pundis ...’ [BR1640], ‘Item, the clark sal tak for every bill making twa shillings ...’ [BR1640], ‘...Determined, in whate’er array, Ye sall review their rank perfay’ [JoHa], ‘A’ the yirth sall wurship thee, an’ sall sing untill thee; thaye sall sing til thy nyme’ [HSR], ‘Sall I come skirtin the braid muirs When the gloamintide is still, And meet the track aboon Whitehaugh, Or skirtin the braid muirs When the gloamintide is still, And meet the track aboon Whitehaugh, Or skirtin the braid muirs When the gloamintide is still, And meet the track aboon Whitehaugh, Or ...’ [HSR].

Sally Maclusky (saw-lee-mu-klus-kee) n. nickname for a Hawick character, probably from the 19th century – ‘Sally Maclusky, Betty Johnny, Jamie Adams and Tammy Graham, The little Gover as smart as ony, Auld Mag Lamb and her penny krame’ [HI].

death (sä-mi:n) adj., arch. same, aforementioned – ‘...and beis nocht teemandis til hym of the samyn’ [SB1470], ‘...and servicie of frie tennittis of the samin, with the pertinentis, liand within the baronie of Branxhelme ...’ [SB1569], ‘...desyreing the samen to be ratified, confirmed and approvin by them ...’ [BR], ‘...and obleist him not to wrong the meiths and marches of the samen’ [BR1675], ‘By reason of y manse being remote from other houses and none at present...’ [BR].

the Salmon Inn (thu-saw-mi:n-in) n. pub at 14 Ladylaw Place in the latter part of the 19th century.

Salt Hall see Saut Haa saltire (sal-tir, -tir) n. A St. Andrew’s cross, particularly used as a symbol of Scotland – ‘Jets tear through the blue, Bring me back to you, I see my spirit fly, Saltires, I see satires, in the sky’ [Sco].

the Salvation Army (thu-saw-l-, sel-vä-shin-är-mee) n. evangelical and charitable movement with a quasi-military style, founded in London in the 1860s and re-named in 1878. Jokingly referred to as the ‘Sally Army’, the Hawick branch started in 1887, with the founder Gen. Booth visiting the town in 1905. A band was started in 1919. The first meetings were in the Temperance Hall on Croft Road, with location shifting to Silver Street, Drumlanrig Square, Tannage Close and then the foot of the Mill Path in the early 1920s.

Salvation Army Citadel (saw-lvä-shin-är-mee-si-u-del) n. Salvation Army meeting house, on Croft Road, opened in 1962, with previous citadels being located in other parts of the town since 1878.

Sametoun (sawm-mee-tin) n. lands said to be in the Barony of Wilton and listed along with Outersidemill and Todshaw when granted to Sir William Wardlaw of Wilton in about 1400. It is unclear what lands the name could refer to, and hence it is possibly an error for the lands of similar name in Oxnam or Jedburgh Parishes.

Sam Marsden’s (sawm-mawrz-dinz) n. High Street fishmonger’s shop on the north side of the High Street in the mid-20th century.

samen (sä-mi:n) adj., arch. same, aforementioned – ‘...and beis nocht teemandis til hym of the samyn’ [SB1470], ‘...and servicie of frie tennittis of the samin, with the pertinentis, liand within the baronie of Branxhelme ...’ [SB1569], ‘...desyreing the samen to be ratified, confirmed and approvin by them ...’ [BR], ‘...and obleist him not to wrong the meiths and marches of the samen’ [BR1675], ‘By reason of y manse being remote from other houses and none at present...’ [BR].

sampil (sawn-pul) n., arch. an example, specimen, especially of stolen goods – ‘The said John Hardie . . . to be brought to the mercatt croce of Hawick . . . and to stand thereupon with the sampell of the stouth upon his shouldours or ells ane paper upon his breist or foirhead to declare the fact’ [BR].

the Samye Ling Centre (thu-saw-mee-ling-sen'-ur) n. Tibetan-style Buddhist monastery and community near Eskdalemuir, about 20 miles from Hawick, formerly the estate of Johnstone House. It is named after a Tibetan monastery, and was started by 2 American buddhists who had started a small temple and gifted the house and grounds to 2 visiting abbots in 1967. It became Scotland’s first Buddhist monastery, and the first phase was largely completed by 1988, with the full courtyard still being worked on, and plans to make it the most extensive temple outside Tibet. It was inaugurated by the Dalai Lama in 1993.

sanct (sanct) n., poet. a saint, either literally or figuratively – ‘A sair sanct for Ettrick hospitality Mr Boston must have been!’ [DH].

the Sandbed (thu-sawn-bed) n. name for the relatively low-lying area near the confluence of the Slitrig with the Teviot, now an official name for the street from the roundabout to Albert Road. The name derives from the alluvial, sandy deposits that were there before the area was built up (interestingly, Kilmarnock also had a Sandbed from early times, and there is also an area in Dumfries that had that name). The name goes back at least to the late 17th century and the area was formerly part of the Common. In 1712 it is recorded that someone was fined ‘for breaking the ground in that part of the common called the Haugh and Sandbed, at the foot of the Church-wynd, by digging, delving, and bigging of ane dyke there’. It eventually became an enclosed space, which was well used on market and fair days (e.g. in 1701). There were houses across what is now Buccleuch Street and an archway gave access to the gardens there. It stopped being used for public gatherings with the building of the Teviot Bridge in 1741. The land around the area was feued for building in 1782, split into lots for houses (with a 99 year lease) and 2 building areas in the centre were sold in 1791. When the New Road was opened in 1815 the market was moved to the Tower Knowe. At the same time the houses between the Howegate and Orrock Place were demolished to provide access to Buccleuch Street. The name was officially changed to Teviot Square by the Town Council from the late 1840s, but it was never popular and was abandoned after about 10 years. There was a public weighing machine for use by carriers near the Ewe & Lamb from before the days of the railway until the latter part of the 19th century. J.P. Alison designed renovations to Nos. 11 and 12 in 1895. The area also saw traffic lights introduced in 1939. The traffic pattern was altered with a more substantial roundabout and demolition of the island site of 3 and 4 Sandbed in 1987. The street contains a post office, a launderette and the Angling Club offices. Note that the building on the corner is unusually 5 stories high. Nos. 1, 2 and 3 are grade C listed buildings – ‘Then through the Sandbed the pair did go . . .’ [WE].

Sandbed (sawn-bed) n. also called ‘Sandbed English’, a humorous term for an attempt to speak English by someone who normally speaks only broad Hawick, an affected, comical mixture of proper English and broad Hawick, e.g. ‘pussy get down off that ruif’ – ‘hei was speakin in his best Sandbed’.

Sandbed English (sawn-bed-ing-gleesh) n. affected English spoken by someone who normally only speaks in dialect – ‘San’bed English, ‘fine’ English as attempted to be spoken by a Borderer, in which Scotch words are un rightly introduced’ [GW] (see Sandbed).

Sanderson (sawn-dur-sin) n. Adam (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, probably the part corresponding to Hassendean. He married Margaret Porteous and their children included: Janet (b.1681); and Margaret (b.1684). Walter Scott was witness in 1681, James Scott and Walter Gledstains in 1684 and Walter Sanderson (presumably a relative) and Robert Wright in 1686. He may be the tenant in ‘Hoap’ (perhaps Heap) whose will was recorded in 1686. Probably the same Adam was recorded as witness to baptisms in Roberton Parish for James Scott in 1680 and for John Hope and John Martin in 1681. Adam (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Margaret Rutherford in Roberton in 1685. Their children included: Andrew (b.1686); Helen (b.1687); and Robert (b.1689). The 1687 witnesses were John Hope and Robert Scott. He could be the same Adam who was previously married to Margaret Porteous. Adam (17th
C.) workman in the Hawick area. He married Margaret Hogg and their children included Robert (b.1711), baptised in Hawick. Thomas (b.1704), baptised in Minto, may also have been their child. The witnesses in 1711 were merchant Thomas Hardie and carrier James Aitkin. Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (17th C.) cottar at Appletreehall according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (d.1750) resident of ‘Greenside’ in Wilton Parish whose funeral is recorded. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Isobel Robson and their children included John (b.1681). The witnesses were James Deans and Walter Sanderson (who was surely related to him). He witnessed a baptism for George Rid dell in 1681. James (17th/18th C.) merchant of Newcastle who left £60 to the poor of Hawick Parish in 1748 (and so was presumably a native). Probably the same merchant James witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1737 and others in 1740 for gardener Walter (who was probably related) and for smith Robert Young. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He is recorded in Newbigging in 1713. He took over part of the farm of Braxholme Town in 1726, after the death of Robert Scott. Probably the same James married Beatrix, daughter of James Davidson, in Hawick Parish in 1711 and had children: James (b.1713); Margaret (b.1714); and Janet (b.1717). The witnesses in 1713 were James Davidson and Walter Scott in Newbigging. In 1717 his wife’s surname is given as ‘Scott’. James (d.bef. 1815) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Marion (or Mary) Henderson, whose death is recorded in 1815. Their children included James (b.1783). James (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isabel Scott and their son James was baptised in 1811, with witnesses Robert Tinlin and Agnes Scott (perhaps a relative of his wife). The baptism is recorded right after that for a child of George Nicholson and Isabel Scott in 1804, suggesting that his wife may have been the mother in both cases, and have married twice. Jean (c.1730-c.1810) wife of Henry Scott ‘the Hero of Quebec’. She received a widow’s pension of £40 and lived in a cottage called ‘the Saaverin’ a little below Stobs Castle, on the opposite side of the Slitrig. She became known for her dirty habits and wild appearance and was evicted by Sir William Elliot, who had her house demolished, apparently because her appearance and behaviour frightened his horses. Thereafter she lived in Hawick. She was said to have turned down a suitor later in life, when she discovered she would lose her pension if she remarried. She survived her husband by about 50 years. John (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, when it contained Hassendean. He married Margaret ‘Bleakie’ in 1680 and their children included: James (b.1680); Margaret (b.1683); Jean (b.1686); and Adam (b.1689). The witnesses in 1680 were James Scott and James Blakie and in 1686 were James Blakie (perhaps related to his wife) and John Armstrong. John (17th C.) listed among the ‘Cottars in Hassendean’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Mary (17th C.) recorded in 1676 when she was among a group of Hawick people found guilty of using faulty measures. She was specifically found to have a ‘half-pecke ane mutchkin short’. She may be the ‘Marie’ recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 among those ‘Payed but not listed in Hauick Toun’. She could be the Marie, wife of John Nasmith, whose son William Nasmith was born in Hawick in 1652. Robert (18th C.) living in Roberton Parish in 1734 when his unnamed daughter was baptised in 1734, with no residence given. Simon ‘Sym’ (16th C.) tenant of one of the local farms of Alexander Lord Home in 1562/3. Home (as superior of Midshiels, Apple treethall, Broadlee, ‘Cotlaw’, Burnside and mill) tried to have his ‘pretended tenants’ removed. Perhaps the same Simon was recorded in 1579 as owner of a tenement on the north side of the High Street in Hawick, ‘quhilk sumtyme pertenit to Thomas Logane’, adjacent to the tenement of David, brother to Walter Scott in Chamberlain Newton. Thomas (17th C.) resident at ‘mil-maue’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls for Hassendean Parish. He was probably a farmer at Moormaw. He is probably the Thomas who witnessed a baptism along with Walter in 1688 for James Shiel in east Burnfoot. He married Helen Shiel in Roberton in 1683 and their children included: Bessie (b.1685); and Helen (b.1687). The witnesses in 1687 were Robert Scott (probably of Lees) and James Shiel (who was probably related to his wife). Walter (17th C.) resident of Hassendean in the 1680s, when it was part of Roberton Parish. He married Elspeth Riddell and their children included: Margaret (b.1680); Helen (b.1683); and Simon (b.1687). The witnesses in 1683 were Andrew Deans and James Shiel. He could also be the Walter, married to Isobel Shiel, whose had a daughter Jean (b.1694) baptised in Wilton Parish. He may be the Walter who witnessed baptisms in Roberton Parish in 1681 for James, in 1682 for William Nichol, herd in Boonraw, in 1686 for Adam (who was probably Sandholm

Sandholm (sawnd-hööm) n. hamlet at the junction of the Liddel and Hermitage Waters and where the B6399 (Hawick to Newcastleton road) meets the B5357 (from the Note o the Gate), about 1½ miles north-east of Newcastleton. Cuthbert Little and William Armstrong were there in 1694. John Elliot was tenant there in the mid-to-late 19th century. There were 15 huts there housing railway workers on the 1861 census. Walter Turnbull and Walter Thomson were there in 1868. It was the location of Bankend Kirk, recently converted to a house. There was also a schoolhouse and smithy there. In the mid-19th century the school was run by Christian Telfer, daughter of the ‘poetic schoolmaster’ of Saughtree. To the north and northwest there were 3 curling ponds (also sometimes ‘Sandyholm’; it is ‘Sandiholme’ in 1694).

Sandhope see Sundhope

Sandie (san-dee) n. George (18th C.) dyker in Hawick Parish. He married Isabel Stevenson and their children included: Janet (b.1756); Agnes (b.1759); and Jane (b.1761). The witnesses in 1759 were Kirk Officer Alexander Bunyan and midwife Mary Simpson.

Sandilands (san-dee-lindz) n. Sir James of Calder (d.bef. 1426) son of Sir James and Jean Stewart, daughter of King Robert II. He was thus brother-in-law of King Robert III. He held the right to inherit several lands and titles following the death of Isabella, Countess of Mar (sister of the King’s son-in-law, George Douglas, Earl of Angus). This included the Barony of Cavers, Sheriffship of Roxburghshire, Lordship of Jedburgh, Lordship of Liddesdale, lands of Bonjedward and town of Selkirk, as well as lands further afield. In 1397 he passed them on to George Douglas, Earl of Angus, but they reverted to him after the Earl’s death, as confirmed in a charter of Robert III in 1404/5. Confusion over the Barony of Cavers grew out of the earlier grant to Archibald Douglas (1st of Cavers) not being confirmed by Robert III. Sometime around 1390 he and John Haliburton of that Ilk granted the lands of Falnash and others in Tranent to Thomas Cranston of that Ilk. In 1425 he is mentioned in a charter for Patrick Lindsay and in 1426 he had a charter for lands in Stirlingshire. He married Jonet and was succeeded by his son Sir John. James of that Ilk (15th/16th C.) listed among the Borders men who were pardoned in 1526 for attacking the Earl of Arran. His sons John and William are also listed. He was Captain of Hermitage Castle for a short period in 1532/3. He was probably succeeded by his son John of that Ilk. James (d.1579) 1st Lord Torphichen, brother of John of Calder. He was son of a first cousin of the Parson of Hawick with the same surname. He held lands in Rule valley, with the lands of Templehall and Brewlands (part of Harwood) being feued to Andrew Turnbull in 1567. He married Janet Murray and died without an heir. John (d.1583) second son of James of Cruvie (and descendant of the daughter of Sir Archibald Douglas of Liddesdale and Cavers, as well as being descended from a daughter of Robert II). He was Parson of Hawick, although he may simply have held the living and not actually preached in the Parish, since William Auchmowtie served as Reader of Hawick, Wilton, Hassendean, Cavers and Kirkton at the
the Sands

Sandyhaugh (sawn-dee-fu-seek) n. name given to at least one rag and bone man of the early 20th century, who would give balloons to children in exchange for scrap items. The original ‘Sandy Fussy’ probably predated this, although whether he was fictional is unclear.

Sandy Fussy’s Cairt (sawn-dee-fu-seek-kär’) n. name sometimes used for the local children’s rhyme, sung to the tune of ‘the Keel Row’ (and similar to ‘Charlie is my darling’), see O’ore aa gaun ti Denum.

Sandyhaugh (sawn-deehawch) n. former name for lands in Ashkirk Parish, owned by Scott of Woll in 1609, when it is ‘Sandiehauch’. It is ‘Sandy Hall’ on Ainslie’s 1773 map, marked to the east of New Woll, near where the Woll Burn meets the Ale Water. John Scott was recorded there in 1788 and Andrew Scott was farmer there in 1797. Andrew Cleghorn was farmer in the 1840s to 60s.

Sandypatch Sike (sawn-dee-pawch-sik) n. small stream in souther Liddesdale, joining Tinnis Burn to the south of the farm of Redmoss.

Sandystanes (sawn-deestänz) n. Sandystones, farm by the Ale Water, east of Belses. This may be the ‘Standestanerig’ (in West Lilliesleaf) which was sold by Adam, son of Adam of Durham to Melrose Abbey in the early 1200s. In 1502 it is recorded that 120 of George Rutherford’s sheep had been stolen from there by William Turnbull of Minto and reset by Adam Scott in Highchesters. Robert Taylor was also recorded there in 1502. It was owned by George Rutherford of Langnewton in 1506 when the Turnbuls of Minto attacked the farm, burning barley and oats there. It is mentioned in 1508, with lands of 120 or 140 acres here between the Sandstones and ‘Vuirancrum’ (or ‘Vuirancrum’), commonly called the Sandystanes, being attached to the Lordship of Liddesdale. John ‘Ritchisone’ was there in 1694, James Rutherford in 1797 and Thomas Rutherford in 1868 (the name derives from its situation between two fords, which are paved with stones; it is ‘sandy stanis’ and ‘sandestanis’ in 1502 and ‘Sandestanis’ in 1508).

sang (sawng, sang) n. a song – ‘...E’en crune your sang as lang’s ye dow’[JR], ‘...And never mair, at a Gloanyne Buchte, Walde singe another sange’[JTe], ‘...Wi’ prose an’ verse, ode, tale, an’ sang; Her hand’s been fu’, her head’s been thrang’[JoHa], ‘The Lord kens what! epis’les, sangs, an’ scraps ...’[JoHa], ‘The Sang o’ sangs, whilk is Solomon’s’[HSR], ‘O sing until the Lord ane new sang ...’[HSR], ‘But troth, by the way I sing this sang, You’ll hear wi’ my brogue there’s something wrang ...’[JEDM], ‘...And the auld soul-stirrin’ sangs’[WL], ‘I’ll sing a sang o’ Hawick my hame: I’ll sing it a’ my days’[GD], ‘And the never restin’ waves Sing their never endin’ sang’[TK], ‘...But aye the sweetest sang they hear Is ‘Hawick ‘mong the Hills’[MrsW], ‘...and lang may they flourish Wi their ain tribal plays and ceremony and sang ...’[DH].

‘Sang Singin’. The first singer of Hogg’s ‘Teribus’ was James Scott in 1819, and he was followed by James Robson, Mark Nichol and Frank Scott (‘Uncle Braid’). Then there was John Scott (in 1875). Later came Charles Hessel, William Clark (1883–1907), James Yule?? (from 1907), Hamilton B. Little (after 1918), James Yule 1946, ?? Black, Harry Storie (c.1950–1972), Bert Armstrong (1973–84), Henry Douglas (1985–99) and Michael Aitken (2000–).

the Sang Singin (thu-sawn-sing-in) n. ceremony that takes place at the Mill Path on a specially constructed platform as part of the Common Riding. This is near to the site of ‘Tibbie the Fiddler’s Cottage’, on the thatched roof of which the ceremony took place until 1859, and at the old boundary of the Burgh with the lands of the Duke of Buccleuch. In 1860 the ceremony took place amid the ruins of the old cottage, and thereafter has been held near the site, except in 1919 when it was temporarily moved to the Horse monument.

Before the current permanent platform was built at the corner of the Mill Path and Allars Crescent, a temporary one used to be erected on the other side of the road. The ceremony is held on the Friday afternoon, immediately after the Principals have been to the Dipping of the Flag. It involves the singing of ‘Teribus’, following the official announcement that the marches have been duly ridden. The ceremony may be the earliest recorded in a photograph. Since 1905 the Drums and Fifes have played the party back to the Town Hall to return the Flag – ‘A must say, A enjoyed the Sang Singin, A suppose it was an honour ti be asked ti dae eet’ [HD].

Sangster (sawn-stur) n. Evelyn along with husband Gilbert, organiser of the Hawick Summer Festival for its first 20 years. Also organiser of the Christmas Parade and involved with the Reivers Festival for 18 years. The couple moved to Hawick from Montrose in 1974, after which they became involved in Stirches Youth Club and Hawick Community Council. Gilbert mainstay of the Hawick Summer Festival, along with wife Evelyn. They married in 1971 and he worked in the abattoir after moving to Hawick.

sanni (saw-nee) contr., poet. shall not – ‘Sic dowie stuff I downa bide to hear, I hope ye sanna die this mony a year’ [CPM] ‘Ye winna believe ’t, ye sanna believe ’t, I’ll ne’er be dishonest to thee’ [JoHa] (also written ‘sanna’; cf. salli).

Sanson (san-sin) n. James (d.1790s) assistant minister at Earlston, he was preacher at Teviot-head ‘chapel-of-ease’ from 1785 until about 1788. In that year he became minister at Leadhills. He also served as tutor to the family of Thomas Scott (uncle to the writer Sir Walter Scott), farmer at Wolfelee and elsewhere. He is described as ‘a tall, awkward, bashful gentleman’, and was nicknamed ‘Dominie Sanson’. He was keen on curling and had the habit of calling out ‘Prodeegious!’ when he threw a good stone. This story was picked up and related to Sir Walter Scott, who probably used it as inspiration for the character of ‘Dominie Sampson’ in ‘Guy Mannering’.

Santy (sawn-ee, sawn-tee) n. Santa Claus – ‘Ah thought ee got an electric razor frae Santy?’ [JCo].

The Sap (thu-sawp) n. local nickname, probably from the 19th century – ‘Wicked Tammy and Tidy Mars, The Sap, Paul Laidlaw and Tory Tam, Tip-ma-Daisy hame frae the wars, Johnny Macmannus and Neddy Lamb’ [HI].

sasine (sā-zeen, -zin) n., arch. Scottish legal term for the act of changing ownership of inherita-ble property, or the documents proving that act.
Centuries ago all sales of land involved a charter, followed by an ‘instrument of sasine’, usually witnessed on the land itself. There is a Hawick Register of Sasines for the period 1779–1840 in the National Archives – ‘. . . and sail deliver the chartar and seising to the said Walter . . . ’ [SB1527], ‘. . . ane instrument of sasining of Thomas Scot in salted, put into a bag or tripe, Loth., Teviotd.

Hence the Prov., ‘Ye are as stiff as a stappit saster’ and seising to the said Walter [SB1527] (see also sait).

Satchells (saw-chulz) n. former estate east of Synton, about 5 miles north of Hawick, in Lilliesleaf Parish. It was home of the Scotts of Satchells, since at least 1607, according to a charter to Robert Scott. Robert was said to be one of the 24 ‘pensioners’ of Buccleuch, holding the lands of ‘Southinrig’ (i.e. Southdeanrig) for his service. Robert’s son was Capt. Walter, who wrote ‘A True History’ of the Scott family in rhumy couples, published in 1688 (and reissued in Hawick in 1894) In 1615 Jean and William Scott of Satchells (possibly the widow and her son) helped Lady Scott of Howpasley organise a group in Hawick to slaughter 60 of Sir James Douglas’s sheep. Walter Scott (the same man as the poet Capt. Walter) was owner in 1663, when it was valued at £200 and in 1678, when it was valued at £256. John Scott was owner in 1778, when the value was £200. John Corse Scott of Synton owned it in 1811, when it was valued at £256. There is still a farm there. It is probably the ‘Schotteschales’ in Lilliesleaf Parish that was granted to Alexander of Huntingdon’ sometime in the period 1202–7 – ‘Tell Ashkirk, and Satchels, Burnfoot, and the Kirkhouse, Howpasley, and Roberton, with Harden bold and crouse’ [WSB] (the origin of the name is probably from Old and Middle English ‘scæt schele’, meaning ‘the huts in a corner’; it is ‘Setschellis’ in 1618, ‘Satscheillis’ in 1609, ‘Satchellis’, ‘Satscheillis’ and ‘Satschellis’ in 1616, ‘Satchellis’ in 1619 and ‘Satscheilles’ in 1633; it is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map and is

saut (saw', sawt) v., adj. to punish, overcharge – ‘A paid ma lawen (it was naething owre-the-maitter – A wasna saateet’) [ECS] (also written ‘saat’).

the Saut Box (thu-sawt’-boks) n. former name sometimes used for the jail in the old Town House – ‘If any obstreperous prisoners required watching at night in the ‘Saut box’ or ‘Rogue’s hole’ . . . ’ [V&M] (see Hawick Jail; the epithet may have been because of the shape, a ‘saut-box’ usually having a flat back and curved front, or just because of its small size).

Sauter’s Ford (saw’-urz-ford) n. formerly one of the main fords across the Tweed, situated near Melrose. Also the name of a for across the Ale Water, connecting Bewlie with Cavers Carre. The name is probably related to the days when the smuggling of salt was big business.

saut-fat *(saw’, salt-faw’) n., arch. a vessel for holding salt, salt-cellar – ‘...broad pleats, two chandelies, salt fat, ane pot and flaggon, ane pynt stoup, crook, girdle and pot coffer’ [DMW1681] (also saut-fit).

saut-fat *(saw’-fi) n., arch. a salt cellar (probably an error of ‘salt-foot’ for the word saut-fat).

Sauthaa see Saut Haa

Saut Haa (saw’-haw) n. Salt Hall, a house built probably in the late 17th century, which was an important centre for storing salt through the 18th century. It stood nearby the present house ‘Little Salt Hall’ above Langlands Road, on the right side of the later entrance to Rosaclea. It appears on Wood’s 1824 map, but unlabelled, and was already indicated on a sketch of Wilton drawn in 1810. It was a cottage with a door and 2 small windows, and a stair leading to 2 first floor attics. A lane ran behind it from what is now Rosalee Brae. It was inhabited until 1887, thereafter used as sheds for nurserymen and demolished in 1901. It was notorious for the suicide of ‘Jenny Saut Haa’ there in 1758 (or perhaps 68??). Another ‘Salt House’ is recorded near West Port in the late 1700s beside Bowie’s Well and also referred to as the ‘Salter’s House’ (also written ‘Sautha’’, etc.).

the Saut Hoose (thu-sawt’-hoos) n. the Salt House formerly at the West Port. It had behind it one of the wells coming from the ‘Sclidder Springs’.

savendle (sa-ven-dul) adj., arch. strong, firm – ‘... as, in giving orders about any work, it is commonly said, ‘Mak it very savendle’; Roxb.’ [JoJ], ‘Is the wa’ savendle?’ [GW] (also sevendle).

the Savins Bank (thu-sa-vinz-bawngk) n. the Hawick Bank for the Savings of Industry was founded in January 1815. It has been the oldest savings bank with a continuous existence in Britain. Begun to encourage thrift among the working classes, it had a slow start, but then had several moves to larger premises, including 14 High Street, and the current building at 11 High Street. This was designed by J.P. Alison and built 1914/5 as a classical ashlar-fronted building, with interior fittings by Scott Morton & Co. The bank merged with the Langholm Savings Bank in 1960, Jedburgh in 1970, and other Trustee Savings Banks in 1970 and 1975. TSB merged with Lloyds to form Lloyds TSB in 1999. The building is grade B listed.

the Saxhorn Band

— saxhorn (saks-hörn) n. a brass musical instrument invented by Adolphe Sax, resembling a bugle, but with valves instead of keys. There were many ‘Saxhorn Bands’ set up in the mid-1800s, but Hawick’s is the only remaining one in Scotland that uses the old word.

the Saxhorn Band (thn-saks-hörn-bawnd) n. Hawick’s brass band, which acts as a marching band, a concert band and a competitive band. Founded by Samuel Stainton in 1855, following a petition to the Magistrates to support the setting up of a brass band for the town. There have been many ups and downs since then, but it is still going strong after more than a century and a half. The Band briefly dissolved in 1878. In 1945 the Council decided to help financially with the Band, but this discontinued with the end of the District Council. There were originally 14 members, which has grown to around 25 at full strength. Stainton acted as leader for the first few months, with Stephen Teal then becoming the first appointed Bandmaster. Walter Atkinson was a prominent Bandmaster 40 years later, with James Amos leading in the successful post-WWII period. In 1961 they became Scottish Championship Band and later competed in the national finals, also playing in the televised evening concert in the Albert Hall. The band have practised in a huge number of locations over the years, in part of the former Dickson & Laings mill in the later years of the 20th century, before moving to O’Connell Street. They have been prominent at ceremonial parades in Hawick over the last 150 years, for example during the Wars, and in the unveiling of the Horse monument. At the Common Riding they have many specific duties, including meeting the Cornet after the Picking, meeting the cavalcade at the Volunteer after the Moss-paul Ride-out, playing the Cornet from the Town Hall to the Horse on Colour Bussing night, and leading the Provost’s procession from the Horse on the Friday morning. They also play ‘Invocation’ at the Handing-Back. They were heard on the 1937 BBC radio broadcast of the Common Riding, and are on the ‘Hawick Sings’ records. In addition they usually lead the children’s procession to the Vertish Hill Sports. They have also played a New Year’s concert at the Tower Knowe for a great many years. A history ‘Seven Score Years’ was written by Owen Connelly in 1995 and Gillian French wrote a Ph.D. thesis entitled ‘Follow the Band: Community Brass Bands in the Scottish Borders’ in 2014 – ‘...And then the Saxhorn Band, with fervid glee, Sends forth brave notes that please the listening ear’ [JCG], ‘The Saxhorn Band is hard tae bate Thenks tae Bob Hume and Gladys Tait’ [ILW].

Scarflet (skawr-li’) n. Andrew (15th/16th C.) witness to the 1511/2 sasine for the Barony of Hawick. His name is recorded as ‘Andrea Sarclette’. He was probably a prominent man in Hawick at the time, and likely to be a descendant of the earlier Robert. Robert (15th C.) recorded as ‘Roberto Skarlate’ when he was witness to the 1452 sasine for William Douglas of Drumlanrig being regranted the Barony of Hawick. This was signed in Hawick by a number of local men.

scarletina (skawr-li-‘nu) n. disease caused by a bacterial toxin, most commonly affecting toddlers, with symptoms being sore throat, fever, bright red tongue and a characteristic rash. It was formerly a great killer of children. The disease arrived in Hawick in 1831, Dr. John Douglas remarking that this was the first major disease to appear in the Town. It claimed the lives of many (probably tens of) children and a few adults that year. The disease was almost entirely wiped out by the use of antibiotics in the 20th century.

Scatterpenny (skawr-ur-pe-nee) n. cottage on the A7 past Branxholme. The bend in the road near here, sometimes called ‘Scatterpenny Corner’, has been a frequent site of accidents. A pool in the Teviot there was formerly a popular swimming haunt. The site of the present cottage was once the location for a small hamlet, where an inn was kept by Jean Scott, also known as ‘Jean the Ranter’, mother of ‘The Bonnie Lass o’ Branxholme’. The inn there was said to be very popular among drovers in the early 19th century (the origin of the name is uncertain, but there are places of the same name elsewhere, perhaps suggesting that the alehouse was where travellers would mis-spend their money).

scaud (skawd) v., arch. to scald, scorch, inflame the skin, burn with desire – ‘The heart scauds and sorrows that poortith maun dree Couldna daunston the bllthe heart o’ Eppy M’Gee’ [JT].

scaur (skawr) n. a bare place on a hillside, cliff, rocky bank, particularly one being undercut by a river or stream – ‘They thistly banks, and cavern’d scaur, And old time-mouldered towerers ...’ [JoHa], ‘Till it seems lyin’ nestled ‘mang nang hillocks an’ scaurs A whole fairy city, up-biggit wi’ stars’ [JJ], ‘Is it the roar of Teviot’s tide, That chafes against the scaur’s red side?’ [SW], ‘...he passed on his road thither a scaur, by the side of a rivulet ...’ [EM1820], ‘To wage in headlong heat a mimic war, And drive the fox o’er moss, and moor, and scaur’ [DA], ‘And here’s a wee rogue wi’ a scaur on his chin ...’ [TCh], ‘It may be found on all the scaurs along the Teviot and Slitrig, and is especially abundant above Crowbyres Bridge’ [JAHM], ‘The Teviot takes its quiet way Past level haugh and loamy scaur, Whiles coursing through a placid pool, Whiles rippling o’er some pebbly bar’ [JCG], ‘A wee bit scaur offends her e’e. She plants a braw Scots thristle ...’ [WP], ‘...For, swift as the deer on Ettrick Pen Sweep at the sound from scaur to glen’ [WHO] (this is the anglicised or literary version of cf. scer, with G. Watson writing that it occurs ‘only in literature or educated speech’).

Scaur (skawr) n. Scar, former farmstead in the Dod valley, corresponding roughly to the present position of Dodburn Filter Cottage, with the woods to the south of there still being known as Scar Plantation (marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

the Scaur see the Sceur the Scaurend (th-skawr-end) n. former name for part of Roberton village, at the western side, so named because of the ‘scaur’ by the bend in the river there. The house of the same name was once the manse for the Snoot Kirk.

Scaurnook (skawr-nook) n. former farmstead in Robertson Parish, probably near to Scaurend. William Murray was living there in at least 1786–94. Carrier John Elliot was there in 1841 and retired farmer Robert Elliot in 1851 (it is ‘Scare Nook’ in 1786 and 1788).

the Scaur Pool (thu-skawr-, -sker-, -pool) n. former name for a pool in the Teviot at Mansfield, near where the mill lade came out. This also formed the eastern end of the property once used as nurseries by Dickson’s. Also called the ‘Sker Pool’ – ‘The Doctor was one day taking his accustomed walk along the north bank of the Teviot and Mr. Williamson wading more than knee deep and fishing in the Scaur Pool’ [WNK], ‘As they came up by Weensland Cauld, And through by the Sker Pool. They were met by lots’o’ bairns, Sir, As they came frae the school’ [JCG].

the Scaur Pool (thu-skawr-pool) n. name used in the 19th century for the pool in the Teviot at the Pipewellheugh, i.e. near the Dunk.

Scaur Pool (skawr-pool) n. Scar Pool, name for a pool in the Liddel Water, located near the cliffs by the farm of Flatt (marked on the 1862 Ordnance Survey map).

Scaw’d Law (skawd-law) n. hill in Cavers Parish, just south of the Maidens, reaching a height of 503m. James Turnbull was recorded as resident there in 1770. There are the remains of a linear earthwork on the eastern side of the hill, perhaps connected with features noted near Leap Hill and near King’s Sike, and presumably once boundary markers (the origin is probably ‘hill with a shieling’, from Old Norse, or old Scots ‘scald’, i.e. a hill with bare patches; there are several other hills called ‘Scaw’d’ or ‘Scawd’ elsewhere in Scotland; it is ‘Scarnhill’ in 1770).

Scawmill (skaw-mil) n. cottage on the Cala (or Dean) Burn, reached from the Dean via the old track along the burnside, having a very picturesque setting among the woods. It may also once have been known as ‘Timberside Mill’, but it is unclear if they were the same place or neighbouring farmsteads (both names appear in contemporary 18th century baptismal records). There was presumably once a corn-mill there, perhaps even the same one later known as Dean Mill. James Scott was there in 1724, William Brown in 1733, John Scott in 1791 and William Scott in 1797. It was still active when Walter Smith was recorded as miller in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories – ‘Just leave the Dean by Scawmill farm, and o’er the well-worn stile, Up by the low and thick set hedge The very briars smile’ [WFC] (also ‘Scaw Mill’; it was ‘Scadmill’ in 1724, ‘Scalmiln’ in 1733 and ‘Skawmill’ in 1791).

Scaw Mill see Scawmill

Scenes of Infancy (seenz-ov-in-fin-see) n. longest poem written by John Leyden. It is mainly constructed in praise of the countryside of Teviotdale, where he spent his youth, weaving in a large number of local myths and legends, but also covering wider historical ideas, international issues of his day, and religious and social topics (including a denunciation of the slave trade). Although nominally looking back to his childhood, and lamenting the changes caused by the agricultural revolution during his lifetime, it at the same time looks forward towards his future in the wider world. It was published in 1803, shortly after he sailed for India (never to return). In fact it is a collection of pieces written over several years, with connecting sections added in the months before his departure – ‘Beside the Ettrick Minstrel stood a name, The Bard who sung the Scenes of Infancy! As also stood the darling Cunningham, Who sung old faery Chuden, Nith, and Dee’ [JTe].

scer (sker) n., arch. a mark left on improperly washed clothes, v., arch. to mark clothes through not washing properly (also spelled ‘sker’).

scer (sker) v., arch. to scare (also spelled ‘sker’).

scer (sker) n., arch. a ridge of rock, precipitous bare bank, cliff, especially one made of red rock – ‘Fornent iz, ... Mintih Craigs ... brent raise ther skerr[s]’ [ECS] (also spelled ‘sker’; cf. the more anglicised scaur; from Mediæval English and Old Norse).

the Scer (utthu-skær) n. Lynnwood Scar, i.e. the cliff behind Lynnwood – ‘...she sat on the Scer watchin Lynnwud Mills chimney bein demolish’d’ [IWL]. The same name was also formerly used for the slope along the Avenue of Wilton Lodge (also ‘the Scaur’).

the Scer Plantin (th-skær-plawn-in) n. plantation along the western side of the Dod Burn just south of the farm of Dod.

the Scaur Pool see the Saur Pool schammared (sha-nard) pp., adj., arch. ornamented – ‘Item, ane pair of black velvet breikis, with ane clok lyned with schag all schammarred our with black silk lace . . . ’ [SB1633].

Schanyie (shan-ye) n. Robert (16th/17th C.) wright from Branzholme who is described in a 1612 list as being convicted along with many other local men of charging too much interest on loans. His name is also written as ‘Schanie’ and he seems not to have appeared to answer the charge and hence was declared a rebel (it is unclear to which modern name this might correspond).

csheir see shear

cschent (shent) pp., poet. put to death, destroyed, damned, perished – ‘For the Lord kits the waye o’ the righteous: but the waye o’ the ungodlie shall be utterlie schent’ [HSR], ‘. . . thaye schent at the rebuik o’ thy countenence’ [HSR].

Scherwinlaw see Sherwinlaw

Schetky (shet-kee) n. John Christian (1778–1874) born in Edinburgh, from an old Transylvanian family, he settled in Oxford, and became professor of drawing at the naval college, Portsmouth, where he was well-known as a marine painter. He was commissioned by Sir Walter Scott to paint 12 views along Border rivers to illustrate ‘Lay of the Last Minstrel’ in 1810. The painting of Hawick, from 1808, is one of the first images of the town, the view being from roughly near Wilton Grove. There is also a view of Harden Glen from when he visited the area in September 1807, and a view of Goldielands showing its already ruined state around that time.

Scheves (sheevz) n. John (14th/15th C.) cleric of Glasgow Diocese. He had possession of the Archdeaconry of Teviotdale in 1418, but in the following year resigned in favour of William Croyser. Probably the same John ‘de Scheves’ was Clerk of the Rolls and Register of Brechin in 1426 and associated with St. Andrews Diocese in the 1430s.

Schiehallion (shee-haw-lee-in) n. local folk group, consisting of the Lammies from Hawick and another couple from St. Boswells, performing since about 1980 and having released about 4 tapes (note there are other groups from elsewhere with the same name).

schiul (skil) n. school – ‘what schuil did ee gaun ti?’ ‘The bairns new oot the schuil for leave . . . ’ [ECS], ‘He’s never out o’ some mischief, He’ll no’ gang to the schule, He tore his carrich leaf frae leaf To mak’ a dragon’s tail’ [JT], ‘. . . Wad tempt o’o for tae jouk the schule and seek the floo-ery braes’ [VW], ‘The gress grew lang and leish ahint the schule’ [DH], ‘There werea mony bairns about In oor wee village schule, But, ah, it was a bonnie spot, Doon by the shelt’ring hill’ [WFC], ‘And noo, in the schule o’ the world, A hantle o’ heidstrong loons . . . ’ [WL], ‘Nowadays schule lassies can dae better than that!’ [BW1974], v. to school – ‘. . . where he schuilied yin o’ his maist famous pupils, Christopher Murray Grieve’ [IHS], ‘She’d ne’er been schuled i’ the artfu’ wiles That jau’d betray wi’ their hauntin’ smiles’ [WL], ‘I cannna schule mysel’ to fit Wi toumsmen, drawn sae keen the bright Upon each other’s avarice’ [DH] (spelled ‘schule’ and other variants).

the Schuil Board (thu-skil-bord) n. the School Board, which was formed in Hawick in 1873, following the Education Scotland Act of 1872. It took over the responsibility of running the schools from the Parish heritors, and put the control in the hands of a locally elected Board. Minute books for 1873–1947 are in the Borders Archive.

schulhouse (skil-boos) n. schoolhouse, a building in which pupils are taught, sometimes also serving as the residence of the schoolmaster. The need for a separate school building (rather than using St. Mary’s Kirk) was agreed upon at least as early as 1683. Rent paid for the schoolhouse by the Kirk Session of Hawick is recorded in 1712, although this was some temporary accommodation. Some time after 1722 the first purpose-built Hawick Parish schoolhouse was erected (at Slitrig Bank), but it was carried away by the 1767 flood.

schulmaister (skil-mas-tur) n. a schoolmaster. In the Hawick area the words was used to refer to the main (or only) teacher of a parish school. William Hay is recorded as schoolmaster in Hawick in 2 deeds of 1606, although it is not certain this was at the Parish School. James Carmure is recorded as schoolmaster in Hawick in 2 deeds of 1631. John Liddersdale, who signed the Solemn League and Covenant in Hawick in 1638 is recorded as being a schoolmaster, presumably in Hawick, but this is uncertain. Hawick’s schoolmaster is first explicitly mentioned in 1657, when Walter Martin held the position. He was recorded again as schoolmaster in 1665, with a Mr. Chisholme being next, but his first name is not known. John Purdom took over in 1669 and is the first of whom we have any substantial information. During his time the Grammar School was established, taking away some of his teaching duties, as well as salary; in 1710 a bond was granted by the Council for payment to the new master of the Grammar School (usually called the Rector). Some of the payment for the Parish Schoolmaster came directly from the pupils, and the income was also supplemented with the master serving as Session Clerk, as well as Kirk Reader. Subjects taught by the single master included Grammar, Writing, Arithmetic, Mathematics, Latin and Singing. John Purdom retired in 1723 and died in about 1725. John Turnbull is recorded as schoolmaster in Hawick in 1726. Walter Turnbull, ‘the Little Maister’, was schoolmaster from the 1730s until the 1750s. James Inglis was Parish schoolmaster at the time of the flood of 1767, having started in 1756 and serving until his death in 1806. He was succeeded by Christopher Armstrong, until 1820. In the 1830s there were around 150 pupils. The schoolmaster’s house appears to have been inadequate for most of the history of the school. In the early 19th century the house at 20 Buccleuch Street was used. The first purpose-built house for the schoolmaster was constructed along with the new Buccleuch Street school 1860. The Grammar School was founded in 1710, with the first master being James Innes, who was called Rector to distinguish him from the Parish school master. There was a common master for the two schools for much of the 18th century, until the 1770s. The two schools merged in 1824, with James Murray as the common Master. Once the schools were big enough to require many teachers, rather than just a master and a few assistants, the term ‘heidmaister’ would be used. The word ‘Rector’ was initially used at the Grammar School and transposed to the High School when they merged (also hyphenated; see Rectors for a full list of High School Rectors; cf. heidmaister and the Pesh).

The Schuilmaister’s Field (thu-skil-mis-turz-feeld) n. local name for a field at Honeyburn just outside Denholm. It was presumably once connected with the local schoolmaster.

Schuils (skilz) n., pl. schools. Hawick currently has 6 primary schools (Burnfoot, Drumlanrig, St. Margaret’s, Stirches, Trinity and Wilton), several outlying primary schools (Denholm, Hobkirk, Newcastleton, Roberton, Teviothead) and one High School. St. Mary’s, St. Cuthbert’s and Wilton Dean schools also once existed in town, along with several small private schools. There used to be several other small schools in country areas around the Town, including at the Allan Water, Ashkirk, Bedrule, Burnmouth, Clarilaw, Cogsmill, Hermitage, Howpasedley, Kirkton, Minto, Newmull, Redfordgreen, Riccarton, Saughtree, Southdean, Stouslie and Wolfelee. During the 18th century there are records of people being paid by Hawick and Wilton Parishes to teach children (probably in their own houses) in the areas of Branhelmont, Borthwickhaugh, Northhouse, Raesknoew, Thornyhall (i.e. Teviot-head) and Whitlaw. The earliest school in Hawick started in the mid-17th century and was located in St. Mary’s Church, with the churchyard as a playground. The first purpose-built school was on Slitrig Bank, but was washed away in the 1767 flood. The Grammar School, which originally taught in Latin, was founded in 1710. It existed alongside the Parish School (also then referred to as ‘the English Schuil’) for more than a century. They came together in 1826 as ‘the United Schuils’ and later ‘Buccleuch Schuil’. However, even the combination of the 2 schools was still insufficient provision for education, leading to many small private schools cropping up from about the 1710s, although originally they were forbidden to teach ‘further than the Psalm Book’. More small private schools appeared through the 19th century, with one being set up in 1836 by several local individuals with a young teacher hired from Edinburgh (as described by Robert Wilson). The New Statistical Account (1840) states that Hawick had as many as 10 ‘adventure schools’ and that it was not ‘known that there are any of the native population above fifteen years of age who cannot read’. There were apparently as many as 19 separate institutions existing in Hawick and Wilton in 1865. Most of these private schools lasted only a short time, and they included: Brand’s Schuil (a.k.a. Teviot Grove Academy); the Chartist Schuil; Hawick Academy; Heronhill Schuil; the Subscription Schuil; Tibbie Thomline’s Schuil; and Wulton Lodge Academy. It is traditional that on the Thursday of the Common Riding the Principals visit the primary schools and the Cornet asks the Head if the pupils can have the rest of that day and the next day off to support him; the Cornet’s own school is visited first. A full list of Hawick and neighbouring schools is: Allan Water Schuil/Priesthaugh Schuil: Ashkirk Schuil; Bedrule Schuil; Beverley Schuil; Brand’s Schuil/Teviot Grove Academy; Burnfit Schuil; Burnmooth Schuil; the Chartist Schuil; Cogsmill Schuil; Clarilaw Schuil; Craigmount Schuil; Denholm Schuil/Cavers Schuil; Drumlanrig Schuil; the Industrial Schuil/the Raggit Schuil/Drumlanrig & St. Cuthbert’s Schuil; Hawick High Schuil/Hawick Grammar Schuil/the Latin Schuil/Dodd’s Schuil/Buccleuch Grammar Schuil/Buccleuch Higher Grade Schuil/Buccleuch Schuil/Hawick United Schuils; Hawick Parish Schuil/the English Schuil; Hermitage Schuil; Heronhill Schuil; Hobkirk Schuil; Howpasley Schuil; the Image Gairden; Kirkton Schuil; Minsi Schuil; Newcastleton Schuil; Newmill Schuil; Redfordgreen Schuil; Riccarton Schuil; Roberton Schuil; Saughtree Schuil; the Sclenty Schuil; Soothdean Schuil; St. Cuthbert’s Schuil/the Episcopal Schuil; Stiches Schuil; St. Margaret’s Schuil/the Catholic Schuil; St. Mary’s Schuil; Stouslie Schuil; the Subscription Academy/Hawick Academy; the Subscription Schuil/Hawick High Schuil; Teviottheid Schuil/Caerlenrig Schuil; Tibbie Thomline’s Schuil; Trinity Schuil; Wolfelee Schuil; and Wultan Dean Schuil; and Wultan Lodge Academy; and Wultan Schuil.

Sclater (sklæ-ur) n. Elizabeth (18th C.) born at Fodderlee Birks (according to George Tancred). In 1745 she was living with her family in one of the cottages at Weensmoor. Since her family had previously lived near Fodderlee it seems reasonable to suppose that they gave their name to the ‘Sclater Ford’ there; however, this would require that the same family had been there for more than 200 years. When they were at Weensmoor in 1745 it is said that the Highland host stopped at the farm on their march to England, but found only the children at home – ‘They did no harm and tried to pacify the bairns, who were afraid of them’. She was grandmother to Mr. Aitken, who was a plasterer in Jedburgh. It is possible she was the Elizabeth who married Robert Williamson and had children baptised at the Free Kirk in Jedburgh: Elizabeth (b.1778); John (b.1781); and Moses (b.1783). There were Sclaters recorded in St. Boswell’s, Bowden and Melrose at about this time (the name is probably a variant of the modern ‘Slater’).

Sclaterford (sklæ-ur-furd) n. site of a skirmish in the months following Flodden, as reported in a (one-sided) letter from Lord Dacre in November 1513: ‘so to the Sclater Ford on the water of Bowset; was pursued by the Scots, assisted by Dand Kerr of Fernhirst, the Laird of Bondgedworth, and the sheriff of Teviotdale; the Laird of Waighope and Mark Trumbill are hurt’. The site was a ford over the ‘water of Bowset’ which is probably associated with Bowshot Hill in Abbotsrule, and has been identified with the Fodderlee Burn. It is recorded that the Laird of Wauchope (or ‘Walghope’) was injured with an arrow and had his horse slain, while Mark Turnbull (‘Trumbill’) had a spear-head left in him, and many others were injured. It is said that there was a large cairn there until the early 1800s, which may have been connected with the skirmish. The ford was probably named after the family called Sclater who once lived near there (until about the early 1700s according to Tancred, which suggests the same family lived there for about 200 years). In 1903 a memorial plaque was erected by the Archaeological Society on the bridge over the Fodderlee Burn, which is believed to be at the site of the former ford. The plaque was replaced in 2007. The same area was also known as ‘Crawdenford’ – ‘When the beacons blaze for Redeswire On the Carter Bar, N’ ‘Out wi the sword’ ti Sclaterford Wi Scotts n’ ‘Kerr’s ana’’ [IHS] (often referred to as ‘the Sclaterford’).

Sclenty Haa (sklæn-ee-law) n. former cottage near Weens. George Scott was there in 1784. There were Redpaths and Sibbalds there in 1841, as well as teacher Helen Laidlaw (it is ‘Sclentiehall’ in 1784).

the Sclenty Schuil (thu-sklen-ee-skil) n. former school in Hobkirk Parish in the early-to-mid 19th century, intended for small children who were too young for the Parish school. It was established about 1831 by Mrs. Cleghorn of Weens, who supplied the money for the books and the teacher’s salary. The building was a thatched cottage with one room, divided by 2 box-beds. The schoolmistress was Nelly Laidlaw, referred to as ‘Mrs. Laidlaw’. On the 16th of October each year, George Tancred’s (nee Cleghorn) birthday, Mrs. Cleghorn would give out toys and books to the children. The building was later the residence of a shoemaker. The name survives in the ‘Upper Sclenty Plantation’, on the left-hand side of the road between Bonchester Bridge and Weens House. This is probably the same place meant by

(skl-dur) n., arch. a slide, sliding movement, slope covered with loose stones, v., arch. to slide, slip — ‘To sclidder, scither, to slide to the right or left, when one intends going straight forward; particularly applicable to walking on ice, Teviotd.’ [JoJ] (also written ‘sklidder’; the word was applied to springs around the top of the Loan; see also scither and slider).

the Sclidder Springs (th-skli-dur-springz) n. name sometimes given to the springs that feed the Smaile Burn. They formerly came out at the Nipknoves and were conducted by lead pipes to a reservoir at the top of the Loan and to 6 separate wells, forming Hawick’s main public water supply from 1797–1865 (the original cost being £600). These wells or ‘sprigget pants’ were at the West Port (‘Bowie’s Well’), bottom of the Mid Row, foot of the Howegate (the ‘Printer’s well’), at the Town House, and at 2 other locations (presumably along the High Street). The source was also called the ‘Town Moor’ or ‘Haggishaa’ supply (the derivation is probably from ‘scliddery’ meaning ‘slippery’; the name was already lost by the mid-19th century).

scliddery (skli-du-ree) adj., arch. slippery — ‘Let their waye be mirk an’iskydderie...’ [HRS] (also spelled ‘skliddery’ and variants; cf. slidder).

sclim (sklim) n., arch. a climb — ‘‘Teedisome brae’, quo A, eenow, bit for an A stecht keinda, it was rale niece, that sklimm’ [ECS] n., poet to climb — ‘So sklim’ high heaven, trimmil throw hell...’ [DH] (also written ‘skliddery’ and ‘sklim’).

scither (skli-thur) n., v., arch. slide, slip (also spelled ‘sklither’; variant of sclidder).

scodge (skoj) n., arch. slavery, a drudge, a servant for doing dirty work.

scodie (sko-jee) n., arch. an earwig (a form of scotchie, but perhaps related to its homonym).

scodie (sko-jee) adj., arch. slavish (of tasks), dirty, rough — ‘All, from the scodie lass to the chambermaid, were on terms of great cordiality with the members of the family than obtain now’ [V&M], n., arch. a drudge, hard-worked servant, a rough apron worn for dirty work (also spelled ‘scogie’).

scodie brat (sko-jee-braw’) n., arch. a harden sack apron formerly used for doing dirty housework, particularly scrubbing the doorstep.

scodie see scodie

scone (skon) n. one of a number of sorts of cake baked on a griddle, particularly a drop-scone, but sometimes one flavoured with treacle or occasionally a more substantial cake containing potato (note that the pronunciation has a long o sound, not the o of general Scots or the diphthong e-oo affected as an attempt to sound ‘posh’).

scone-fittit (skon-fi-it, -ee’) adj., arch. flat-footed (this term, platcher-fittit and platchie-fittit are all noted by E.C. Smith).

scoof (skoot) n., arch. a scoop, used by grocers etc (cf. scuif, this variant being particularly heard in Teviotdale).

scool (skool) n., arch. a scowl, v. to scowl — ‘There’s my opinion — then, dame, how d’ye like it? No’ vera weel — I ken sae by yer scoolin’’ [JoHa], ‘...Noughts seen by gairn’ gabs an’ scoolin’’ [JoHa] (also written ‘scouli’).

scoolie (skoo-lee) adj., arch. scowly, characterised by a scowl, shading the face with a brow turned down at the front — ‘The scowly hat, and beard so gray,—The bridegroom stood before her’ [JTe]. ‘A scoolie hat = a hat overshadowing the eyes’ [ECS] (also written ‘scooly’).

Scoon (skoon) n. Andrew (19th C.) joiner in Hawick. He married Margaret Thomson and they had children in the 1830s. An unnamed child died in 1837. His mother, who lived at Roadhead, died in 1824. David (18th C.) smith in Selkirk. He is recorded in 1672, along with Patrick. George (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Mary Hume and their children included: Robert (b.1764); William (b.1771); Janet (b.1771); Patrick (b.1773). The 1764 baptism was witnessed by dyer Thomas Turnbull and William (who was surely related). James (16th C.) recorded as witness to a transaction in Selkirk 1580. His son and heir apparent John was also a witness. He witnessed further transactions in 1581 and 1581/2 when he was described as a Burgess. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Janet Glendinning and their children included: Helen (b.1635); and Janet (b.1642). Witnesses to the baptisms included Patrick and Simon, who must have been closely related. The 1635 baptism is one of the earliest existing Hawick Parish records. James (1790–1827) probably son of Walter and Mary Elliot, residents of Todshawhill. He may have worked for a while as a farrier with his brother Walter in Langholm. He emigrated to South Africa in 1817, in a party of Scotsmen including his brother Robert (later a hunter and explorer). He settled in Cape Town as a blacksmith. In 1824 he married Francina, and they had 3 children, including Walter. However, he died in 1827, it is said at the age of 34. James (b.1812/3) from Canonbie, he was a labourer at Limiehedge Lime Works in 1851. His wife was Margaret and their children included Dinah and Isabella. James (1836–89) son of John and Agnes Robson. He was born in Langholm, and descended from the family of the Branxholme area. He became a tweed designer at Glebe Mills and then went into partnership with Walter Scott Barrie to form Scoon & Barrie in Weensland. Later J.L. Hood became a partner and when Barrie left the company became Scoon & Hood, with main premises at Teviotdale Mills. He spoke at the 1884 franchise rally held at Loch Park. He had a double cottage built for him at Loch Park in about 1879, with W.S. Barrie next door. He married Anne O’Hair in 1859. Their children were: Mary Ann (b.1861), who married John Milton Cass; Robert (b.1863), who married Isabella Lillico; Agnes (b.1869); James (b.1872); Margaret (b.1877); and Frank (b.1882). James (1872–1936) son of James, he was also a manufacturer. In 1900 he married Isabella, daughter of dyker Robert Scott. His wife was served heir to her father in 1917. They had a son, James (1901–70). John (16th C.) recorded at Aikwood Mill in 1579/80 when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk. His surname is recorded as ‘Skune’. Perhaps he was the same John also recorded in Philiphaugh in 1579/80 and who witnessed other transactions in Selkirk in 1580, 1581, 1581/2 and 1582. Probably the same John was recorded as son and heir apparent of James in 1580. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, one of the earliest known of this family. He married Christian Allan, and their children included: Christian (b.1634). John (d.bef. 1705) tenant at Branxholmtown. He is listed as tenant along with Patrick in 1677, and seems likely to have been Patrick’s brother. Probably the same John was tenant along with Patrick in at least the period 1690–8, when each of them were leasing one fifth of the farm. He was listed on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. In 1698 he and Patrick leased Branxholm Town with Walter Riddell as their cautioner. However, it is possible that some of these entries are for a different John (b.1670), who was son of Patrick. He married Margaret Riddell, from an unknown branch of that family, although Walter and William Riddell witnessed a baptism for them. Their children included: Robert (b.1684); and an unnamed son (b.1687). Walter, who later farmed at Branxholmtown, was probably also a son. Margaret Riddell was tenant at Branxholmtown from 1705, so he was presumably deceased by then. He may be the John who witnessed a baptism for Helen and her husband Francis Murray. John (17th C.) blacksmith at Copshaw Park according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He paid tax on his dwelling and also for ‘an smiddy’. John (b.1713) son of Robert and Agnes Elliot, he was baptised at Branxholmtown. He was tenant farmer for part of Todshawhill, starting in at least 1748. He was recorded there in 1753 when one of this children was baptised in Roberton Parish. In 1751 he was renting Todshawhill with Robert (probably his father). However, he is difficult to separate from the other local contemporaries of the same name. He is probably the John ‘in Branxhome’ whose daughter Mary was baptised in 1747, with witnesses Robert ‘Tenent’ (surely a close relative) and carrier John Wilson. His wife’s name is unknown. Their children included: Robert (1749–1832) who married Beatrice Turnbull; John (1750–1836), baptised in Roberton, who also farmed at Scoon on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John (1771–1861) farmer at Todshawhill. He was son of John and Rachel Riddell. In 1800 he emigrated to the New York, where he settled in Seneca and was one of the founders of the Associated Reformed Church there. He died in Seneca and was buried there along with his wife Margaret. John (b.c.1780) farm worker living at Branxholme Park in 1841. His house was probably at Cowladyhall. His wife was Betty, who was from Robertson. Their children included Jess, Agnes and Mina. His wife was a widow by 1851. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Mabonlaw. He married Jane Watson and their son Andrew was baptised in Robertson in 1804. He may be the same John who secondly married Margaret Scott, since John was at Mabonlaw in 1822 when their son John was born, and at Martinshouse in 1813 when their son William was born. John (18th/19th C.) married Jane Watson. His children, baptised in Robertson Parish, included Andrew (b.1804). John (1789–1835) farmer at Todshawhill. He was eldest son of Robert and Janet White. His heirs were recorded as tenants of Todshawhill in the period 1834–43. He married Margaret Scott, who died in 1829, aged 41. Their children included: Robert (1812–85) who married Mary Nichol and died at Sparland, Illinois; William (1813–77) who married Henrietta Pool Gass; Wilhelmina (1815–43) married Walter Turnbull and emigrated to Canada; James (1818–57) farmed at Newstead Mill; and Charles Riddell (1826–93) died at Seneca, New York. He died at Hawick. Mary ‘the Cannie Wumman’ nee Turnbull (d.1857) known as ‘Mrs. Scoon’, she was listed as innkeeper of the Plough Inn on the Sandbed in 1851. She was listed as a vintner at the Plough in Slater’s 1852 directory. She is also said to have been landlady of the Harrow Inn (but this may be confusion with the names). She married innkeeper William, and took over after his death. It is unclear what character trait gave her the nickname ‘Cannie’ (or ‘Canny’). Patrick (15th C.) resident of Belses Mill. In 1494/5 James Davidson in Raperlaw was charged with several crimes, including bringing in Englishmen to steal 18 oxen and cows from him, for burning his house and pillaging goods from him. Patrick (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jean Richardson, and their children included: Helen (b.1641). He is probably the Patrick recorded as a witness to baptisms in 1635 and 1639. Patrick (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Susanna Scott and their children included Anna (b.1650), with witnesses to the baptism Walter Scoon and George Scott. Patrick (17th C.) lived in Hawick Parish. He married Catherine Laidlaw, and their children included: James (b.1657). Patrick (17th C.) recorded in Selkirk in 1672, along with smith David. Patrick (d.c.1699) son of Robert. He was tenant farmer in Branxholmtown in at least the period 1671–96. In 1675 he was listed as son of Robert, who also leased part of Branxholmetown. In 1690–97 he and John (probably his son) were each leasing one fifth of the farm. He was listed there on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. In 1698 he and John leased part of Branxholme Town with Walter Riddell as their cautions. He married Helen Hope and had children: John (b.1670); an unnamed son (b.1672); another unnamed son (b.1674); William (b.1678) and Janet (b.1680). The witnesses in 1674 were Robert Dickson and James Burn. He secondly married Bessie Elliot and had children: Walter (b.1683); Helen (b.1685); and Patrick (b.1688), who married Agnes Elliot. Witnesses to the 1685 baptism were James Hume and Adam Ogilvie. He is probably the Patrick who witnessed (along with John Richardson) a baptism for James Martin in 1673. His will is recorded in 1699, although his surname is transcribed ‘Shoon’. Patrick (1685/6–1719) son of John. He was smith at Pathhead (presumably not the one in Wilton) and is buried at Castleton. Patrick (b.1688) son of Patrick and Bessie Elliot. He was farmer at Branxholmtown. In 1711 in Roberton he married Agnes Elliot. Patrick (18th C.) recorded being paid as Park Keeper at Hassendean for the Duke of Buccleuch in the period 1764–66. He had a voucher for salary in 1765 for weeding and keeping the hedges on Hassendean Common. It is unclear how he was related to the earlier Scoons. Robert (17th C.) resident in Hawick Parish. He married Janet Elliot, and their children included Walter (b.1641). He (or one of the other Roberts) witnessed a baptism for James Purdom in Hawick Parish in 1640. Robert (17th C.) resident in Hawick Parish. He married Janet Scott, and their children included: Margaret (b.1643); ‘Donnes’ (b.1644); Helen (b.1646); and Janet (b.1648). Robert (17th C.) resident in Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Scott, and their children included: Walter (b.1649); and Thomas (b.1650). Another Robert was witness to one of the baptisms. Robert (17th C.) farmer at Branxholmtown. In 1675 he and his son Patrick were tenants of part of the lands at Branxholmtown, and the pair were still leasing part of the farm in 1677. He is probably the same as one of the Roberts whose children were recorded in the 1640s or 1650s. Robert (1684–1762) tenant farmer at Branxholmtown and Todshawhill. He was son of John and Margaret Riddell. He witnessed a baptism for James Craw, tenant at Branxholmtown, in 1711. He is probably the son of ‘Mary’ Riddell who is recorded leasing part of Branxholme Town as early as 1711, and is explicitly listed from 1714. The pair were in arrears for the rental there in the period 1711–17. In 1719 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Little (in Branxholme Park) and Margaret Scoon (who was probably related to him). He was tenant of 1/5 along with Walter (as well as John Wilson) in 1725 and along with Walter in 1735. In 1742 he and Walter were ‘Tenants at Braxome Town’ when they witnessed a baptism for Walter Hume, carrier there. In 1747 he was ‘Tenant’ when he witnessed a baptism for John Scoon in Brnxholme. He was tenant of Todshawhill in the period 1749–56 along with John, probably his son, or cousin. He married Agnes Elliot (1688–1736). Their children were: John (b.1712); another John (b.1713); Walter (b.1715); Margaret (b.1717); Robert (b.1720) who married Helen Murray; William (b.1722); and James (b.1724). The witnesses in 1712 were Gideon Scott of Falnash and Robert Thomson in Newmill and in 1720 were James and Walter Crow, both in Branxholme Town. He died at Todshawhill farm. Robert (b.1720) son of Robert and Agnes Elliot. He married Helen Murray (from Hawick Parish) in 1766, and she died in 1808. He might be the Robert, son of Robert, who died in 1790. He may also be the Robert, ‘Branxholmtonn’, married to Janet Burton, whose son Walter was born in 1759. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1753 he married Janet Haliburton. Robert (1759–1828) farmer at Todshawhill. He was son of John and Beatrix Tait. He is recorded as farmer at Todshawhill in the estate records from 1792–1812, on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls and in baptismal records. He could also be the Robert who was listed as farmer at Broomiebraes in 1792 and 1812. In 1788 he married Janet White, who died in 1795, aged 33. In 1797 he secondly married Elizabeth (or Elspeth) Bunyan, who died in 1841, aged 73. His children included: John (b.1789) who farmed at Todshawhill; Janet (1791–1873) who married Thomas Hall and died in Hawick; Beatrix (b.1793); Jane (1795–1847), who married Thomas Hogg; James (b.1799), who died aged 22.

Margaret, who died aged 29; Isabella (1802/3–59) married Robert Brydon, steward at Highchesters; Elizabeth, died aged 26; Robert, died in infancy; and twins Robert and Elizabeth, who died in childhood. Margaret and Mary, ‘both interred in one grave, pox’ in 1830 were probably also his daughters. Robert (18th/19th C.) carrier in Hawick according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He is probably the Robert, carter in the Fore Row, who died in 1832, and whose wife Beatrix Murray, died in 1807. Robert (1789–1837) said to be from the Hawick area, he was a trader in southern Africa. Given the name and date, it is possible he was a son of Walter and Mary Elliot, who lived at Todshawhill; this Robert was baptised in Robertson Parish in 1788. He went to South Africa in 1819 as part of Benjamin Moodie’s Scottish settler party (his brother James also being in the party). In 1827 he and William McMackin travelled inland to the headwaters of the Marico River, the Ndebele territory of Mzilikazi. In 1829 he reached further into the interior, to the area of modern Pretoria, hunting and trading ivory, and establishing a relationship with Mzilikazi, which may have involved selling arms. The information he and fellow traders gained was passed on to Dr. Andrew Smith, who led a significant expedition into the central South Africa in 1834. He and fellow trader David Hume explored the valley of Olinfants River and the Southpansberg about this time. He is also mentioned as an ivory trader in 1836. In 1837 he was reported as being the only man who could recognise the gemsbok when a specimen was captured. He died of a heart attack while returning from a hunting trip. Parts of his journal may have survived. Robert (1812–83) farmer at Todshawhill, son of John and Margaret Scott. On the estate records he is tenant in 1836, as his father John’s heir. He emigrated to the U.S.A. about 1842, apparently still owing money on the lease. He was the last family member to farm at Todshawhill. In 1836 he married Mary Nichol. Their children were: Margaret; Jane; John, who married Ella Currie; Jessie; James; Charles, who married Mary Jennie; William; Minnie; Elizabeth; and Robert. Simon (17th C.) witness, along with Patrick, to a baptism for James and Janet Glendinning in 1635. This is one of the earliest Hawick Parish records. It is unclear how he might have been related to Patrick and James. Thomas (18th C.) recorded as a tenant in 1787. Walter (17th/18th C.) probably brother of Robert and son of John and Margaret Riddell. He took over the tenancy of Branxholmtown from Margaret Riddell in 1719 (hence it is unlikely that he was son of Patrick and Bessie Elliot). He farmed Branxholmtown along with Robert until at least 1735 (when the pair were recorded still leasing the farm). In 1742 he and Robert were ‘Tenants at Branxome Town’ when they witnessed a baptism for Walter Hume, carrier there. In 1717 he married Isobel Miller, who was servant to Thomas Shiel at Todshawhill. His children were: John (b.1718), who married Beatrix Tait and farmed at Todshawhill; Margaret (b.1720); Helen (b.1722); and twins Robert and Walter (b.1729). Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Scott, and their children included Walter (b.1714). Walter (17th/18th C.) farmer at Commonside. His parents names are not known, but he was surely related to the other local Scoons. In 1719 he married Agnes, daughter of Thomas Falsyde; they were described as both being servants to James Grieve in Commonside. Their children included: Walter (b.1714), who was illegitimate; James (b.1720); Thomas (b.1724), born at Newmill; Walter (b.1727); Mary (b.1729) in Hawick Parish; and Agnes (b.1736) in Wilton Parish. The 1720 baptism was witnessed by the preacher at Caerlenrig. The 1729 baptism was witnessed by the Laird of ‘Howlands’ and Robert Cook. Walter (b.1753) probably son of John. He married Mary (or Marion) Elliot in Robertson in 1779. He was also farmer at Toshawhill. He and his wife had a discharge with Thomas Elliot in Selkirk in 1790. His children (mostly baptised in Robertson) included: Margaret and John (b.1780); Robert (b.1782); Walter (b.1785), blacksmith in Langholm; Robert (again, b.1788), possibly the hunter in South Africa, said to have been born in 1789; James (b.1790), who may have gone to South Africa with his brother; and William (b.1794). Walter (d.1832) shoemaker at Kirkstofepool. In 1831 he was served heir to his father Robert, who was a farm servant in Hawick. Walter (1785–1840) son of Walter and Mary Elliot. He was born in Robertson Parish (at Toshawhill) and became a blacksmith at Langholm. He could be the Walter who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He married Elizabeth Young (1784–82) and secondly Janet Stothart (1799–1842). He had at least 13 children, but only a few survived into adulthood. Children with his first wife were: Walter (1811–59); John (b.1813), who died young; Euphemia (1815–97), who married and emigrated to the U.S.A.; Margaret (1818–1907): James (again, b.1821), also died young; and 3 unnamed. With his second wife there were: James (b.1823), who died young; Robert (1824–78): William (1826–46); Isabella (1828–87), who died in Wigan; Mary (1830–69); Elizabeth (1831–71), who died in Bury: Janet (b.1835); and James (b.1837). Most of the family are buried in Langholm. William (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 along with Robert Young. Lawrence Rutherford of Oakwood had remission for several crimes, including resetting the pair of them. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Sarah Winthrop in 1756 and their children included: Robert (b.1756); Andrew (b.1759); and Agnes (b.1761). He must have been a fairly prominent man in the town, since the witnesses to baptisms include ‘writer’ Thomas Winthrop (perhaps his father-in-law) and Bailie James Scott, mason Andrew Turnbull, senior, as well as George Scoon (presumably a relative). He may be the ‘Servant to Mr Somervel’ who witnessed baptisms for carriers John Tudhope and James Paterson, as well as for mason Andrew Wilson in 1744, and for Walter Turnbull, David Baldie, Alexander Bunyan and John Johnstone in 1745. William (18th C.) farmer at Todshawhill. He had children: Margaret (b.1780); Walter (b.1783); and Beatrix (b.1783). He was clearly related to the other Scoons of Todshawhill, but it is not clear how. He is probably the William who married Helen Elliot in 1779. William (b.1779/80) listed as ‘Formerly a Farmer’ in the 1801 census, when he was visiting the Young family on O’Connell Street. William (1817–c.50) innkeeper in Hawick. He was son of William and Elizabeth Amos. In 1841 he was innkeeper of the Tushielaw Inn and based on the birthplaces of his children was later at Crosslee Toll (near Stow) and then in Hawick. He married Mary Turnbull in 1836; she is recorded as innkeeper of the Plough Inn on the Sandbed in 1851, and she died in 1857. Their children included: Walter (1837–55); Helen (1839–1918); Mary (1842–89); William (1849–66); and Isabella, twin of William, who married John Kyle. William (19th C.) shepherd at East Bucleuch. In 1836 he was married to Mary Turnbull, by the dissenting minister in Hawick. Their children included: William (b.1837); and Helen (b.1839) (also formerly ‘Scoune’, ‘Scone’, ‘Scoone’, ‘Scoones’, ‘Scoons’ and ‘Skune’).

Scoon an Barrie’s (scoon-in-baw-reez) n. tweed manufacturing company based at Weensland Mills in the late 19th century. They also purchased Teviotdale Mills in 1888, and the partnership evolved into Scoon & Hood’s.

Scoon an Hood’s (scoon-in-hoodz) n. tweed manufacturing company, which grew out of Barrie & Scoon. Their main premises were at Teviotdale Mills at the corner of Commercial Road and Albert Road (48 Commercial Road). There was a serious fire in 1959, and later the mill became part of Innes & Henderson. In the latter part of the 20th century it was converted into a garage, Thornwood Motors.

scorn the kirk (sko-rn-thu-kirk) v., arch. to default on a marriage agreement, seen as an affront to the congregation – ‘The ‘resiling of parties after proclamation’ was commonly called ‘scorning the kirk’, and failure of marriage involved the forfeiture of the consignation mony for the good of the poor’ [JTV].

scory (sko-re) adj., poet. having the appearance of being scored, deeply incised – ‘The hurcheon raxed his scory chafts, And gepit wi’ giring joye’ [JTe].

Scot (sko’, skot) n. historically used to describe a people who came over from Ireland in the 5th and 6th centuries and had merged with the Pictish tribes by about the 9th century, but now used to mean any person from Scotland.

Scot (sko’) n. early spelling for Scott, still used for specific individuals, such as Michael Scot and Capt. Walter Scot of Satchells.

scot an lot (sko-in-lo’) n. a tax administered to a baurness when he takes his oath – ‘That the burgesses were entitled to elect bailies . . . without any other restriction than that these bear scot and lot, and reside within the burgh’ [BR1778].

scotch (skoch) adj. relating to or characteristic of Scotland, but uniformly loathed as a phrase throughout the nation, the terms ‘Scots’ or ‘Scottish’ being preferred, except in particular phrases such as ‘Scotch broth’. Also note that it is never used for ‘whisky’.

scotchbald (skoch-bawld) n., arch. an earwig (also written ‘scotchbolt’, a variant of ‘Coachbell’, ‘Touch-spale’ or the English ‘Twitchbell’; shortened to scotch; scodgie may also be related).

Scotch Dyke (skoch-dik) n. former station on the Wavelerley line, just before Longtown. Named after the ‘Scot’s Dyke’, an earthwork built to delineate part of the Border Line in the 16th century (also ‘Scots Dyke’).
was composed by Peter McLeod of Edinburgh, and the money raised from selling the sheet music was used to pay for iron railings around the Burns Monument at Calton Hill. The ‘honours three’ in the refrain refers to the crown, sceptre and sword of Scotland. The song was often sung at the Colour Bussing and similar events in the 19th century. The song was revived by Scocha on their 2004 album – ‘The song he wrote was one day sung Wherever Scotsmen met. Its patriotic strains can still be heard in Scotland yet’ [IWL].

Scots (skots) n. the language spoken in Scotland, derived from a Germanic dialect spoken by Anglo-Saxon settlers, being a distinct, if far from homogeneous, form of English, adj. pertaining to Scotland or the Scots, Scottish. It is fiercely debated whether Scots it is a separate language to Scotland or the Scots, Scottish. It is fiercely debated whether Scots is a separate language or merely a set of dialects. The speech of Hawick people has much in common with Scots in general, but also much that is peculiar to Teries.

Scots an English (skots-an-ing-gleesh) n., arch. game formerly played by boys, in which 2 teams defend their hats and coats from each other. It was said (in Chambers 1841 ‘Popular Rhymes of Scotland’) that the game particularly flourished in Hawick, where the boys would defiantly shout ‘King Covenanter, come out if ye daur venture! Set your feet on Scots grund, English, if ye daur!’!

Scots Dyke an Hare Moss Turnpike (skots-dik-an-här-mos-turn-pık) n. turnpike road legislated by the general Act of 1764, with this specific road act published in 1770 (with an additional act for repairing and widening the road in 1785, and the acts repealed in 1807). This led to a great improvement in the road, allowing it to be passable by wheeled traffic, thereby allowing Hawick to develop as a centre for the carrying trade. The cost of constructing the road was borne by subscribers, who recouped their money via tolls collected approximately every 6–8 miles along its length. The road ran from the English Border at Scots Dyke (in Dumfriesshire) to Hare Moss (in Roxburghshire) just outside Selkirk, following the route of the modern A7. It passed through Hawick via Martinshouse, Langb Luk and the Loan. The Haremoss and Scots Dyke (East District) Turnpike Trust was established by an Act of 1829. It covered the administration of more than 20 miles of road in Roxburghshire. The revenue for upkeep of the road and repayment to the creditors came from 5 tolls. George & James Oliver acted as Clerks to the Trust in the mid-19th century (also called ‘Scotch Dyke’).

Scots Greys (skots-græz) n. regiment that amalgamated to form the Royal Scots Dragoons Guards in 1971. William Robertson, quartermaster of the regiment, was made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick in 1776. At the election of 1835 a troop of these dragoons was sent to Hawick to try to keep the peace.

Scots Law (skots-law) n. legal system of Scotland, based on Roman legal ideas, where legality is decided by interpreting fundamental principles rather than appealing to precedent. There are also many differences with the English system in the naming of court officials etc.

Scots pound (skots-pownd) n., arch. a former unit of currency used in Scotland. It was fixed at 1/12th of a pound sterling at the Union of the Crowns in 1603, and ceased to be a legal unit following the Union of the Parliaments in 1707. However, it continued to be used in practice for some time after that, particularly in rural areas. Hawick Parish records made the switch to sterling only in 1753.

Scotstoun (skots-toon) n. farm in Peeblesshire, on the Tarth Water, just to the north-east of Kirkurd. This appears to have been an early property of the Scots, before they moved to Buccleuch and Branxholme.

Scott (sko’) n. Adam (13th C.) recorded around 1240 when Christian, daughter of Adam FitzGilbert, donated the lands of Inglistoun to the Chapel of St. Mary, with some rights reserved to the men of Blyth, as they had in the days of ‘Adam the Scot and William the Bald, of good memory’. Since these lands were adjacent to those of Kirkurd and Scotstoun (held from early times by the family that became the Scotts of Buccleuch), it is possible that he was an early ancestor. His name is given in Latin as ‘Ade Scoti’. Adam (d.c.1255) referred to as the deceased previous owner of lands in Gullane (East Lothian) which were granted to the church there sometime between 1213 and 1255. Adam (13th C.) listed on the assize roll of Northumberland in 1256. No other information is given about him, so it is not known if he is associated with later Scotts. Adam (13th C.) witness to a charter that the Comyns had for lands in Kirkintilloch (Dunbartonshire) in about 1277. Adam (13th C.) messenger who was paid, along with Henry Pykard ‘cokin’, for delivering letters from King Edward I to members of the Scottish court in 1296/7. His connection to other Scotts is unknown. He could be the same man as ‘Adam Skot’ recorded in the 1279 assize roll of Northumberland, perhaps at the time a prisoner in Newcastle Castle. He could also be the Adam recorded in ‘Hilderton’ church in 1279, admitting that he was a mercenary soldier and had renounced the King. Adam (13th/14th C.) holder of lands in the Parish of Linton in Peeblesshire, around 1300. Adam (15th C.) recorded as a member of the ‘retour of inquest’ in 1438 for Ker of Altonburn. Probably the same man was also witness to a sasine for the lands of Cessford in 1441. It is unclear how he might be connected to other contemporary Scotts, but Sir Walter was also on the 1438 panel, and William and his son John were witnesses to the 1441 sasine. Perhaps the same Adam was witness to the 1448 sasine for the lands of Birkwood and Burnflat, between Sir Walter of Buccleuch and Simon of Routled; the other names appearing beside his are Stephen of Castlelaw, Walter and Richard, who were probably near relations. Adam ‘Ade’ (15th C.) Ranger of Ettrick Ward according to the Exchequer Rolls in 1456, where his name is listed as ‘Atkino Scot’. He is recorded as Ranger several times from 1457 to 1467, with Sir Walter as Master Ranger; Sir Alexander (of Howpasley) took over by 1469, and David also served as a Ranger for Ettrick in the 1460s. It seems unlikely (because of the age) that he could be the later son of Sir Alexander, but he was surely a close relative, possibly an otherwise unrecorded brother of Sir Alexander and son of Sir Walter. Perhaps the same Adam witnessed a charter in 1441 for the lands of Cessford and was on the panel for ruling on the dispute over the lands of Kirkton Mains and the Flex in 1464/5. Adam (15th C.) Bailie of Rutherford, recorded in the Exchequer Rolls in 1477 and 1481. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. Adam of Anneshope (d.bef. 1502) younger son of Sir Alexander of Howpasley and Abington, and brother of Walter of Howpasley. He was recorded as ‘Ade Scot’, one of the heirs of Sir David Scott of Buccleuch in a charter for the Barony of Brancheholme in 1484. He is probably the ‘Ada Scot’ who witnessed a document in 1482 in which Thomas Armstrong resigned his lands of Mangerton to David Scott of Brancheholme; Robert was also a witness, probably his cousin of Whitchesters. Possibly the same Adam was on the panel for James Douglas of Drumlanrig inheriting the Barony of Hawick in 1484. And probably the same Adam was witness to the charter granting Robert of Allanhaugh the Lordship of Whitchesters in 1484/5 and his resignation of the lands almost immediately after. He may be the Adam who was witness to a sasine for the lands of Boonraw in 1487, along with James and several local landowners. He may be the ‘Ade Scot’ who was one of the bailies appointed by Sir Thomas Turnbull of Greenwood and Lyne for the document leasing his lands in 1488. He was Warden of Ettrick Ward in the period 1489–92, responsible for administering the Crown lands there, and so his name appears many times in the Exchequer Rolls for Scotland. He took over the office from Walter, who had taken over from William (surely all closely related). In 1488 he had the farm of Cacrabank for his fee and in 1490 and 1492 he leased ‘Garliscleuch’. He also let the farm of Gamescleuch in 1492. After 1492 he is recorded being in arrears as former Ranger for Ettrick. In 1494/5 he was ‘de auldinnis hop’ when standing as surety for Bernard Shortreed in Essenside, ‘in auldernischop’ when he was surety for John Burnet, resident of Tushielaw, and ‘in auldernischop’ when he was surety for Oliver Lauder with Thomas Turnbull and for William Peacock in Buccleuch. He was additionally surety, along with Robert of Allanhaugh, in 1494/5 for John in Erncleuch. He was also recorded in 1494/5 as ‘in Auldinnischop’ when he was allowed to pay a fine for stealing 2 horses from the servants of the Earl of Angus at Hermitage; Walter of Howpasley was caution for him. Later he was allowed to compound for the crimes of: stealing the 2 horses at Hermitage; resetting the ‘traitors of Leven’; resetting Edmond and Fergus Storie; resetting Robert Brydon, John Friessel and John Pattinson, particularly when they plundered Wolfhope; stealing 5 cows from ‘rafftrehop’; stealing 16 cows from Deuchar; and common theft before the date of his compounding. Walter of Howpasley was again his surety. John was allowed to ‘compone’ along with him in 1494/5 and was presumably a close relative. In the Treasurer’s accounts he is recorded in 1494/5 having obtained remission from the King. He was recorded as brother of Walter of Howpasley in 1499 when he was assigned Tushielaw for 3 years. He was also assigned Gamescleuch and Corsecleuch in 1499, and still had to pay arrears as the former Ranger of Ettrick Ward. He is probably the Adam, brother to Walter of Howpasley, who was recorded as tenant in Borthwickbrae in 1500. He was referred to as deceased in the 1502 Exchequer Rolls. He may be the Adam recorded as ‘Ade Scot’ along with his son Walter in the Exchequer Rolls of 1512 relating to earlier payments for Ettrick Forest. Adam (15th C.) recorded in the 1491/2 will of Sir David Scott of Branhxholme, where he was bequeathed 30 sheep. He was listed as ‘Ade Scote’ and may be the same as one of other contemporaneous Adams. Another man, listed as ‘Ade Scote, claudio’ (probably ‘lame’) was given 6 sheep. Adam ‘Crooked Adam’ (15th C.) son of Thomas of Bush. He was recorded in 1494/5 when he was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aiire held in Selkirk; his nickname was ‘c’vus’, which could be ‘corvus’ or perhaps ‘curvus’. Probably the same man was recorded at the 1494/5 Justice-aiire held in Jedburgh; he was surety for Thomas Clonmell in Minto and recorded being ‘in wolfhop’, which may well be the Wolfhope in Ewesdale (but it could be the one near Tushielaw or Wolfhopelee in Rulewater). At the Justice-aiire held in Selkirk in 1502 he was ‘in Wolfhop vocatis curvus adam’, i.e. called ‘Crooked Adam’ when he had remission for the rape of Christine, daughter of David Hope, as well as for the theft of a horse from Stobo. Adam in Annelshope also had remission for the rape of Christine Hope, and hence was presumably a different man. Adam (15th/16th C.) recorded at the Justice-aiire in Selkirk in 1502 as ‘Adam scot in aldinershope’ when he had remission for a series of crimes. He was probably associated with Annelshope (although it is also possible that Eldinhope is meant); this could be a transcription error for ‘aldinshope’. He may be the same man as Adam of Annelshope, although he died at about the same time of this court. His remission included the following: resetting, supplying and intercommuning with Archibald Armstrong and David Scott ‘de Francia’ as well as other ‘traitors of Leven’ and Liddesdale in their rieving; resetting John Kay ‘his brother’, particularly the plundering of 80 cattle and goods from Dryhope; for burning and pillaging places on the Borthwick and Ale Waters belonging to Walter Ker of Cessford; resetting Gilbert Scott, particularly in the theft of 2 horses; the ‘hamesukin’ of Walter Scott of Tushielaw; and the rape of Christine, daughter of David Hope. His surety was Walter Scott of Howpasley, who would be his brother if he was indeed Adam of Annelshope; Adam in Wolfhope also had remission for the rape of Christine Hope, and hence was presumably a different man. He was also ‘in aldinshoipe’ in 1502 when Walter of Howpasley was surety to present him at the next Justice-aiire in Selkirk. Perhaps the same ‘Ade’ was listed as a debtor in the Exchequer Rolls for Selkirkshire in 1501, along with David Scott ‘de Franscurni’ and James Laidlaw, with Walter of Tushielaw responsible for their pledges. Adam (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as being in ‘Hawchesteris’, probably Highchesters near Hawick. He had remission for resetting 120 sheep, which had been stolen by the Laird of Minto from George Rutherford at Longnewton and ‘Sandystanis’. His crimes also included associating with rebels Archibald and Ninian Armstrong and William Scott. At the Justice-aiire held in Jedburgh he produced a remission from the King for these crimes, with George of Whames as his surety. Adam (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 when it is said that he had a horse and 23 sheep stolen from him at Kershope. John Whitehaugh has remission for these crimes. Probably the same Adam ‘native of Kershoup’ (presumably in Ettrick) is recorded as deceased in 1533 when his son William assigned John Murray of Kershope to seek restitution for the goods ‘violently stolen’ by Robert Scott of Howpasley and Philip Scott in Dryhope. Adam of Hermiston (15th/16th C.) member of the panel for the inheritance of Synton in 1494, where he was ‘Adam Scot de Hirdmasstoun’. In 1500 he was one of the witnesses to an instrument of resignation by Robert Scott of Allanhaugh to Walter Scott of Branhxholme. He was also on the panel for deciding on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers by James Douglas in 1509: he is recorded as ‘Adam Scot of Hirdmenstone’. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. Adam of Roberton (15th/16th C.) recorded at the Justice-aiire in Selkirk in about 1502. The entry is crossed out in the transcribed record, but it is unclear why. He presented William (with no distinguishing location given) to the court as suitor for his lands (presumably of Roberton) before witnesses including William Todd, John Cant and William Muir. Essentially the same entry occurs later in 1503. It is unclear how he might fit with the other Scotts of Roberton. Adam (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1522 when he had a dispensation from Thomas Ker, Archdeacon of Teviotdale, to marry Elizabeth Scott. This was necessary because they were within the 4th grade of consanguinity. Adam of Clarilaw (15th/16th C.) probably a younger son of James of Kirkurd and Hassendean. He is mentioned in a charter of 1521 as being cousin of Sir Walter of Buccleuch. The later David in Clarilaw may have been his son or other close relative. In 1526 he was tenant in Clarilaw when he was listed on the 1526 pardon given to a large number of Borderers for their attack on the Earl of Arran; ‘William Scot, and George Gledstaniis, his brother' are listed right after him (they may have been step-brothers or brothers-in-law), as well as (separately) William in Hassendean. His eldest son was Robert of Clarilaw. He may be the same as the Adam of 'Nethirmanis of Hassinden' whose son Robert had a 'precept of clare constat' (meaning he was probably deceased) in 1550/1 for the lands of Little Drinkstone. Adam (15th/16th C.) tenant of Harwoodhill in 1502 when his son Patrick had remission for being involved in several thefts of sheep. Adam (d.1530) of Tushielaw, probably son of David of Tushielaw and grandson of Alexander of Howpasley (although some accounts place him as son on Alexander). Called ‘King of the Thieves’ or ‘King of the Border’, he was a powerful chief in the early 16th century. He may be the Adam ‘in Turschelaw’ recorded paying a fine in the Exchequer Rolls of 1499. In 1502 he is recorded at the Justice-aire in Selkirk with remission for resetting several men (namely John Young, ‘Park’, John Carrick called ‘Ginkin’, Lawrence Porteous, ‘Valance’) who had stolen many sheep from Manor and Hundleshope. In a second record of the signature of remission he is ‘in aldinnishope’ for the same resetting of John Young, Lawrence Porteous, ‘Ginkin’, ‘Park’ and ‘Valance’. In a separate case at the same Justice-aire he was ‘in tuschelaw’ when he had remission for a list of crimes; this was at the same court sitting as for Adam ‘in aldinershope’, so they must have been different men. The crimes he was forgiven for were: stealing 10 horses from Peebles, in company with the Laird of Minto; stealing a cow and money from Selkirk; resetting Lawrence Porteous, especially in the theft of 4 cows; resetting William Smith and Hugh Armstrong, especially the theft of 50 sheep from Single; plundering of ‘aldinshope’ with the Littles of Eskdale; resetting Lawrence Porteous, especially in the theft of 100 sheep from Tweedsmuir and 100 sheep and 4 horses from Stobo; resetting John Young, especially the theft of 40 sheep from Manor; and resetting John Carrock, ‘Jinkin’, especially in the theft of 140 sheep from Manorhope. His surety was Walter Scott of Howpasley, who was also ‘of Tushielaw’ and perhaps his uncle. He is recorded (as ‘Ade’) in the Register of the Privy Seal in 1503 receiving remission for his riving crimes, and in 1505 he received remission for breaking out of prison in Edinburgh Castle. He received a charter for the lands of Tushielaw in 1507. In 1512 he is recorded as one of those involved in the feud between supporters of Lord Maxwell and Lord Crichton of Sanqhar. The lands of Gilmanscleuch, ‘Cowinlaw’ and Gamescleuch were feued to him in 1510. The ‘fermes’ of Cosecleuch, Cacrabank, Tushielaw and ‘Cowinlaw’ were remitted to him in 1513. He is one of the men who pledged to help the new Warden (the Earl of Angus) keep the peace on the Border in 1524/5. In 1525 he and the Laird of Henderland were warned to find pledges. In 1526 he was among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Branxholme) pardoned for an attack on the Earl of Arran. In 1528 he was witness to an agreement between James Murray of Falahill and Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. He is also recorded in late 1528 as witness to the document recording the decision over the disputed succession to the lands of Borthaugh. The Sir Walter ‘of Tushielaw’, who was nearly contemporary with him was probably his uncle Sir Walter of Howpasley. He was arrested along with William Cockburn of Henderland, as an example to other thieves of the time. He was suposedly hanged by James V’s men on an old ash tree in front of his stronghold, although he was probably actually executed in Edinburgh. The charges against him included taking ‘blackmail’ from ‘John Broune in Hoprow’, ‘Andrew Thorbrand and William his brother’, ‘the poor Tenants of Hopcaizow’ (possibly Howpasley) and ‘the Tenants of Eskescheill’. He was beheaded and his head placed on top of the Tolbooth in Edinburgh. Among his descendants were probably the Scotts of Horsleyhill, who were important in Hawick in the 17th century. His sons Robert, John and William are also listed in the 1526 remission. He was succeeded by William, presumably his son; this could be the William who was tenant in Cacrabank in 1541, along with ‘his moder’, who would therefore be his widow. Adam (16th C.) listed in the 1526 pardon to a large number of Borderers for taking in part in an attack on the Earl of Arran. He is recorded as being ‘in Falside’ (probably the lands in the Ettrick valley), and so could have been related to the Scotts of Kirkurd and Hassendean, who held those lands. His brothers Alexander and William are also listed. In 1531 he witnessed a precept of sasine between Mark Ker in Selkirk and Patrick Murray of Falahill. He was ‘in Fawsyd’ in 1531/2 when he was part of an inquest to rule on a land arrangement in Selkirk. In 1532 he witnessed a document for Andrew Brydon, probably relating to lands owned by Sir Walter of Branxholme. Probably the same Adam witnessed a sasine in Selkirk in 1532/3, a court case in 1534 and a pledge in 1534/5. He is probably the Adam ‘of Fausid’ who was deceased in 1539 when his son Thomas was warned to remove himself and his tenants (along with those of Robert of Howpasley) from the lands of Falside, belonging to Sir Walter of Branxholme and his son Walter. He may be related to the Adam who was recorded claiming the tenancy of Falside in Ettrick in 1541. Adam (16th C.) witness in 1526/7 to a document relating to the tenancy of the lands of Harden. He was brother of Simon of Fenwick. He was probably the same as one of the other contemporary Scotts, with one possibility being Adam of Tushielaw. Adam of Burnfoot (16th C.) probably son of either William or Robert of Hassendean. He was Laird of Burnfoot (and probably also Burnhead) in Teviotdale (as opposed to Ale). He may be the Adam of Newhall who witnessed a charter relating to Harden in 1526/7. He is recorded in 1539 when involved with a bond among Scotts, relating to the illegitimacy of Thomas, son to Adam Scott; the others who agreed to the bond were David, son of Walter of Buccleuch and Robert of Allanhaugh. In 1548/9 he was sent (along with William of Harden and Clement Crozier) by the Laird of Buccleuch to visit Alexander MacDougall, probably to extract a horse from him. In 1550 he was among 10 Scotts and an Elliot who signed a bond with the Queen to keep order and hand over criminals. In 1551 he signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’. In 1553/4 he was listed among Scotts and their supporters who a group of Kers promised not to harm. He was listed among the Scotts who were involved in breaking down the doors of the Kirk of the Lowes in 1557 looking for Sir Peter Cranston. They were all later bound over not to harm Cranston. His son William is also listed, and appears to have died before him. In 1561 he was among a list of men charged to appear before Queen Mary regarding the state of the Borders. In 1562 he was listed among the men who appeared before the Privy Council in a promise to end the feud between the Kers and the Scotts. Adam (16th C.) recorded in 1531 as brother-in-law of Walter in Synton. This presumably means he married a daughter of Robert of Synton and Stirches. In 1531 he, his brother-in-law and Walter Veitch had a dispute over the succession to Synton with John and William Veitch. Also in 1531, John, sergeant in Selkirk, read a royal proclamation that while he was declared a fugitive at the insistence of William Veitch in Yair for ‘not delivering to him as tutor to Walter Vaych his bruder sone’, since he had now delivered to William Veitch the house of North Synton, he was no longer ‘at the horn’. Adam ‘Ade’ (16th C.) listed among the bailies of the Sheriff of Roxburgh on the Precept of Chancery (probably in 1532) for William Scott of Hassendean retaining his properties. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Adams. Adam (16th C.) recorded in 1539 ‘in Quhithoup’ as witness to a transaction between Scott of Buccleuch and Douglas of Cavers. He was also recorded in 1549 as being ‘in Quhithoip’ when he was one of the first in a list of tenants and servants of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme complaining that their lands had been raided by the Kers in the previous year. In 1550 he was a witness to a lease granted by the curators of James Crichton of Cranston Riddell (step son of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme) to his mother, signed at Branxholme; he was there ‘Adame Scott in Quhihoup’. He could be the same as one of the other contemporary Adams. His lands were probably Whitehope Adam (16th C.) younger son of Michael of Aikwood. In 1552, along with his son Adam, he sought suspension of an act of ecclesiastical cursing by the Vicar of the Forest. Adam of Allanhaugh (16th C.) listed in 1534 as a witness at Hassendean Kirk for the sealing of a letter of reversion when Gavin Elliot sold the lands of Nether Galalaw to William Scott. He was also ‘Adam Scot of Alanehauche’ in about 1557, when he paid rental to Melrose Abbey for ‘Ringwodhat’. Although it is unclear, he does not appear to have been the Laird of Allanhaugh at that time, and so was possibly brother of the Laird (perhaps William), or perhaps from an earlier branch of Scotts of Allanhaugh. In 1561 he was among a list of men charged to appear before Queen Mary regarding the state of the Borders. He is also recorded in 1562 as one of the relatives of the minor Sir Walter of Branxholme to whom letters were sent to arrange the selection of guardians. In 1564 he was listed (first) among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts of Allanhaugh. He could be the Adam (with brother William) listed right after Robert of Allanhaugh in the 1526 pardon for a large number of Borders assisting the Homes in attacking the Earl of Arran; in this case it may even be that he and William were both brothers of Robert of Allanhaugh. He is probably the Adam who was deceased in 1582 when his sons William and David acknowledged the return of 'sevin peces of evidentis all writtin in parochment', which were delivered by David to Walter of Goldielands 'in keping of before' in the presence of William of Tushielaw; presumably these were documents relating to the Scotts of Allanhaugh, which unfortunately do not survive. In 1585 there was a bond signed (in Selkirk and Hawick) between Sir Walter of Branx-holme and Robert of Allanhaugh, to settle a feud that existed between them, arising from the death of David (son of the deceased Adam of Allanhaugh) and Hob Dalgleish (Sir Walter's servant at Braidhaugh); the bond mentions other sons of his, making it clear that he was not closely related with Robert of Allanhaugh, who was Laird at that time. Adam of Bonnington (d.bef. 1607) son of Robert, together with whom he first acquired the lands of Bonnington near Peebles in 1552, from the Wylie heiresses. His older brother had acquired Rysholm (through their mother), but died in 1549. He gained Wamphray from his mother, but (along with his father) sold it in 1549. It was said that in 1547 he acted as a guide for English raiders to burn Lochwood Tower, which belonged to the Johnstones. He was mentioned along with his father in a charter involving lands in Peebleshire in 1557/8. In 1561/2 he resigned to his superior his lands in the Barony of Drumlanrig; he signed 'wt my hand at the pen led by me'. He is probably the Adam 'of Vamfra' who in 1562 witnessed transactions in Selkirk for Robert of Howpasley and for William in Hartwoodmyres. In 1564 he was listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. Also in 1564 he was on an assize that convicted several Scots and others of sheep stealing. He had a 'letter of reversion' for the lands in 1572. In 1579/80 he witnessed an instrument in Selkirk and another relating to lands in Ashkirk (along with his son Walter). He had a court case with Robert of Haining in 1580 relating to the lands of 'Elestoun' that had formerly been in his possession. George of Synton also had a case in 1580 against his claims on 'flostoun' (near Melrose), with him being unable to show any titles to these lands, and also said to have been put to the horn. However, he witnessed other transactions in Selkirk in 1580. In 1580/1 he complained that the Bailies of Selkirk had wrongly apprehended a man called Taylor. He was listed among many Scots and their allies in a 1581 summons to appear before the Privy Council regarding the feud with the Elliots and Armstrongs. Also in 1581 he was in dispute with Robert of Haining over 6 chalders of grain, where he was supported by Scots from from Hartwoodmyres, Gamescle-uch, Gilmanscleuch, Chamberlain Newton, Edinburgh, North Bowhill, Dryhope, Catslack and Howpasley, with his 'byndaris' being William of Tushielaw and Robert of Aikwood. In 1581/2 he received sasine for 'Maldisheucht miln', with his natural son Robert as one of the witnesses and acknowledged receipt of the redemption money from Patrick Murray of Fulahill, with his sons Robert and James among the witnesses. He was listed on the 'Roll of the Clans' in 1590 (although perhaps drawn up earlier). From a document in 1564/5 it appears that his wife's name was Helen Tweedie; the marriage was in 1551 and she was daughter of James Tweedie of Drumelzier. There is mention in 1565 of the deceased Katherine Scott, Lady Bonnington, suggesting that he married a 2nd wife. His children included: Simon, who succeeded to 'Bonnytoun' in 1607, but was already called 'of Bonnington' in 1602; John, who helped rescue Kinmont Willie in 1596 and was on a raid in 1602; Thomas , who assisted his brother Simon in a raid on 'Caidmure' in 1610; and Adam, recorded in 1616. His sons Simon, John and Adam were all pursued by the Scotts of Harden for the murder of Walter Scott in Es-senside. Adam of Deephope (16th C.) recorded in 1573 when he was to enter several men into ward in Edinburgh. This was along with Sir Walter of Branxholme and Sir Walter of Birksenside. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts of Deephope. Adam (16th C.) recorded in 1581 as 'Adame Scot of Lochahaucht' when he witessed the 'letter of slains' in Hawick in which Robert and James Scott forgave the Scotts of Allanhaugh and Over Southfield for the murder of their brother George. All the other witnesses were quite local, but it is unclear where 'Lochahaucht' might have been. Adam of Gledstains (16th C.) listed in 1581 among 10 men accused of the murder of Walter, son of Wat Turnbull of Bewlie. The others were mainly Turn bulls of Rulewater, suggesting that his lands were possibly 'Little Gled-stains' there. Adam (16th C.) recorded in 1585 among a long list of men whose superior was Lord Maxwell (perhaps related to the raid on Stirling). He was tenant at Mosspeeble, and his son John is also listed. He is probably related to Nichol who was in Mosspeeble in 1590. Adam (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 in 'the Wraa' among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to ap-ppear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. He may have been from Wrae and was probably related to Gavin who was from the same place. Adam of Todshawhaugh (16th C.) probably the son of Walter of Todshawhaugh who witnessed a marriage agreement in Lilliesleaf in 1563. In 1580/1 he witnessed an agreement to settle a dispute between George of Synton and Walter of Stirches regarding the lands of Synton Mill. He is listed among many Scotts and their allies in a 1581 summons to appear before the Privy Council regarding the feud with the Elliot's and Armstrongs. Aslo in 1581 he witnessed a dispute between Thomas, son of Robert of Howford and John, parson in Hundoshope. He also signed the Scott clan bond in 1589. He is recorded in 1594 when his son Walter was on a long list of those implicated in the slaughter of Lord Maxwell and his men at Dryfe Sands. William of Todshawhaugh, listed by Scott of Satchells as one of the ‘pensioners’ of Buccleuch, was surely closely related to him. Adam (16th C.) recorded as being ‘in Ormestoun’ when he witnessed an instrument of sasine for Martin Douglas of Crook. William Scott and Robert Scott, both ‘in Hawick’ were also involved. He was surely related to John in Ormiston, who is recorded in 1589. Adam ‘Adie the Peck’ (d.1601) recorded in 1598/9 among ‘brothers, tenants and servants’ of William Elliot of Falnash when there were complaints against them by Margaret, widow of James Douglas of Knightsridge, for stealing cattle from her lands of ‘Corsetburne’ (in Lothian). His name appears as ‘Adie Scott, called the Pek’ and his son (with no forename given) is also listed. There were further complaints from Sir James Sandillands, that he was among a group of Armstrongs, Elliot's and Scotts who stole from his lands and ‘slew and dismembered divers good subjects who rais to the fray’. In a court case in 1600, Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch’s agent denied responsibility for him and his crimes. He was hanged in Edinburgh in 1601 for a list of crimes. This included cattle and sheep stealing from several farms around the Lothians, as well as Nether Whitlaw (owned by Thomas Ker of Cavers Carre), the murder of at least a couple of men and taking the Minister of Lyne prisoner. He was hanged alongside Thomas Armstrong (son of ‘Sandy’s Ninian’), these being 2 of the last ‘rievers’. He is also recorded (presumably in error) as ‘Adam Stell, alias callit the Peckit . . . one of the maist notabil thieve that evir raid’. He may be the Adam ‘little Peck’ listed among men complained about by the English Warden for a raid into England in 1587; John ‘the Tinkler’ and Andrew ‘the Breadie’ were also listed. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts; however, in 1598 Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch denied that he was responsible for him, meaning he was not among the Scotts for whom Buccleuch was considered chief (and hence he may have been from Ewesdale, for example). Adam of Alton (d.1604) son of Robert of Alton. In 1580 he gave his consent for his father to give up the annual rent of lands in Hassendeanburn for a loan from Margaret Douglas, Countess of Bothwell. He is recorded as ‘Adame Scott sone to Robert Scott of Auldtoun’ in a long list of those given ‘respite’ by the King for the 1593 murder of Lord Maxwell, Warden of the Marches at Dryfe Sands. He succeeded his father Robert in 1594. Scott of Satchells says he was in the party that rescued Kimmont Willie in 1596. In 1603 he was also ‘of Alton’ on the list of ‘pretended tenants’ ordered to remove themselves from lands in the Barony of Hassendean by the then Baron, James Cunningham. He died shortly afterwards and had 2 sons: Walter, who succeeded; and Robert, ‘ vocat de Aultoun’. In 1606 his son Walter was served as his heir to the lands of ‘Littill Dombstoun’ (probably meant for ‘Drinkstone’) in Chamberlain Newton, as well as heir to his grandfather Robert in the lands of East Hassendean (thus establishing the conenction between these 3 generations of Scotts of Alton). He must have been related to the ex-Bailie of the same name recorded in 1612. Adam (16th/17th C.) brother of Philip of Dryhope, and probably son of John of Dryhope. In 1699 William Sinclair of Roslin was surety for him, that he would ‘keep the King’s peace’. Adam (16th/17th C.) brother of Simon of Bonnington and son of Adam. He was accused in 1616–17 of accompanying his brothers Simon and John, together with ‘Will’s Sym’ of Thirlestane when Walter ‘in Essenside’ (son of ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden) was murdered while fishing on the Ettrick. Adam (16th/17th C.) probably eldest son of Robert, he was brother of William in Burnhead. He married Bessie, daughter of John Langlands, minister of Wilton. However, he appears to have died without issue and was succeeded by his other brother, Robert. It is possible he was the ‘Adame Scot, called of Burnheade’ recorded in 1618 among men of the Selkirk area accused of illegally carrying guns. Bailie Adam (16th/17th C.) ex-Magistrate of Hawick, who was involved in the incident of 1612 in which the town challenged the authority of the Baron regarding the town’s ability to impose taxes. He was also mentioned as Bailie in a murder case in the same year. His son James may have become an apprentice skinner in Edinburgh in 1615. Rev. Adam (d.bef. 1625) minister of Hawick Parish from 1612 until at least the end of 1623. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1607 and became minister at Minto in 1608. He may well have been related to a local branch of the Scotts; his father was probably Walter, a merchant of Edinburgh. He was translated from Minto and presented to Hawick Parish by Walter Scott of Buccleuch in August 1612. He was recorded as schoolmaster in Hawick in 1622 (it may be that at this time the minister was also schoolmaster, or it may be that he was serving temporarily in this role). The circumstances of his death are not recorded, but he must have been relatively young. After his decease he was succeeded as minister by Robert Cunningham. Adam (16th/17th C.) brother of Walter ‘in Slak’ recorded in 1620 along with William ‘of Slak’ and Andrew, surgeon and Burgess of Edinburgh. They may have been associated with Catslack. Probably the same Adam, brother of Walter in Catslack was recorded in 1599 among a list of Scotts who Sir Walter of Branxholme declared were ‘his men’ and therefore accepted responsibility for making them answer to justice. Adam of Burnfoot (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1628 along with other Scotts when they were charged by the Privy Council to keep the peace with the Turnbulls of Know. The other Scotts were from Midshiels and Hawick, and he paid the 1000 merks caution to ensure that Adam, son of Walter of Midshiels did not molest Thomas Turnbull of Knowe or others there. He is recorded as being ‘of Burnfitt’ in 1643, when his lands in Hassendean Parish (presumably Burnfoot) were valued at £312. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts of Burnfoot, but he may have been a tenant of Burnfoot, rather than Laird. Adam of Shaws (16th/17th C.) younger son of Robert of Gilmancescleuch. He is probably the son of Robert of Gilmancescleuch who was served heir to his brother William in 1647. He had at least 4 sons: James, who succeeded; Adam in Deloraine, who purchased North Bowhill; Scott of Grassyard; and Francis, a shepherd mentioned by Scott of Satchells. His lands were presumably Shaws, between the Ale and Ettrick valleys. He was described as ‘in Schawis’ in 1670 when his eldest son James married Marion Scott of Shielswood. Adam ‘Wester Adam’ (17th C.) smith of Hawick who was ordered to pay a fine of 100 merks for failing to appear at the Circuit Court in Jedburgh in 1623. He was probably the Adam, smith in Hawick who was accused by the Earl of Buccleuch in 1628 of cutting down trees on his lands at Branxholme or Trinitylands. Probably the same Adam, smith, was mentioned in the Burgh Records of 1640, when there was a dispute between him and Thomas Deans; Thomas claimed that he had been promised payment of various sorts from him (presumably for being a servant), including money, a pair of shoes, oats, barley and clothing. Adam ‘in Yairlside’ (17th C.) recorded as an appraiser for a horse in the Town Book in 1641. His location was a variant of Earlside, and he may have been the same as one of the other contemporary Adams. Adam (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Scott and their children included Francis (b.1635), Jean (b.1642), Janet (b.1649), George (b.1652) and Walter (b.1654). The witnesses in 1652 were Robert Gledstains and George (perhaps a relative). Adam (17th C.) married Margaret Douglas and had a son Robert baptised in Hawick in 1646. Perhaps the Isobel (b.1644), baptised to Adam and Isobel Claperton was also his child. Adam (17th C.) married Bessie Anderson and had a son Adam baptised in Hawick in 1645. Adam (17th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Janet Claperton and their children included Margaret (b.1652) and William (b.1654). Adam (17th C.) tenant in Wauchope. He was witness to a discharge of 1657 for vicarage teinds in Hobkirk Parish. His ‘servitor’ Walter Scott was also a witness, while this same or a different Walter was his son, who witnessed a sasine in 1659. Adam (17th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Bessie Harkness and their children included Margaret (b.1650). Perhaps the Jane (b.1671), baptised to Adam and Janet Harkness was also his child. Adam (17th C.) tenant in Todshawhill, along with William (presumably a relative) in the period 1632–72. He could be a descendant of Andrew, tenant of Todshawhill, listed as a ‘pensioner’ of Buccleuch. Adam (17th C.) recorded as being ‘in Dunlie in the parish of Cassiltoun’ (probably Dinlees on Hermitage Water) when he witnessed a document relating to the lands of Appotside in Rulewater in 1656. Adam of Ashtrees (17th C.) recorded in 1678 when his lands in Southdean Parish were valued at £33. He may be the same as one of the other Adams. Adam of Galalaw (17th/18th C.) recorded on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1698. He must have been related to the later Adam of Galalaw. He was probably the Laird of Galalaw who witnessed a baptism for John Chisholme of Stirches in 1708. In 1709 his servant Robert Elliot had a child baptised. Also in 1709 his son Alexander witnessed ('younger of Galalaw') a baptism for Robert Scott of Coldhouse. He was a resident of Roberton Parish, when it contained Hassendean. He married Esther, daughter of Rev. John Langlands and their children, baptised in Roberton, included: Alexander; John (b.1683); William (b.1685), probably of Brieryhill; and Margaret (b.1687). The witnesses in 1687 were 'Mr Geo: Langlands' (his brother-in-law) and Robert (perhaps his own father or brother). He may be the Adam who witnessed baptisms for other Scotts in Roberton Parish in 1686 and 1688 and a baptism along with Francis (perhaps the minister) in 1688. Adam (d.c.1695) described as ‘portioner in Hassendean’ in a list of landowners and tenants of Hassendean Parish in 1666. He may be the same as 'Adam Scott of Hassindene' who is mentioned in 1637 as ‘younger’ of Hassendean and who in 1669 was served as heir to his father, Robert of Hassendean. He was probably the Adam ‘in Over Hassendean’ recorded in a deed of 1663. He was in turn succeeded by his son Robert in 1695. In 1692 he had a renewed lease with the Duchess of Buccleuch for the lands of Over Hassendean, ‘east and west syde thereof with the milne and maynes of the same’. Adam (d.c.1693) listed as ‘in Wood, in Abotroule parish’ when his will was recorded in 1693. It is unclear where this farm might have been. Adam (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Rutherford and their children included: Walter (b.1678); and Christian (b.1680). The witnesses in 1680 were Robert and William, who were probably related to him. Adam of Burnfoot (17th C.) son of Walter, as recorded in a deed of 1673. He sold Burnhead to William Scott, tenant in Burnhead. He was one of the heritors accused of instigating the riot at the removal of the roof of Hassendean Kirk in 1690. It seems likely he was the Adam who (along with Robert) witnessed a baptism for William (later referred to as ‘of Burnhead’) in 1686 and another for Robert in Burnhead in 1687. He was probably one of the men arrested following the riots of 1690; there is a warrant for the arrest of Adam and Robert Scott of Hassendean and Thomas Turnbull of Knowe in 1690, which may relate to him. He was probably the Laird of Burnfoot who paid tax for 4 hearths in his house in 1694. In 1695 he was involved with the Scotts of Davington (probably a hangover from earlier wadsets between the 2 families). In 1697 he witnessed a baptism for Robert Thomson in Burnfoot. His eldest son was probably also called Adam. He is probably the Adam in Burnhead who married Grizel, sister of Thomas Turnbull of Knowe in 1678; her will is recorded in 1687, when he was listed being ‘in Burnhead’. He is also recorded ‘in burnhead’ in 1682 when one of his children was baptised in 1682. His children with Grizel Turnbull included: John (b.1682); Robert (b.1684); and possibly James (b.1686). The witnesses in 1682 were John and William Scott (who were probably related to him). In 1686 he ‘had a bastard child baptised’ called James, with witnesses Walter Paisley and John Muir. His wife could be the ‘Lady Burnfoot’ whose servant Janet Liddell got married in Hawick in 1719. Adam of Bowhill (17th C.) purchased the lands of Langhope from John in 1691. Probably the same Adam ‘of Bouhill’ had a bond recorded with the Depute Sheriff Clerk of Selkirkshire in 1701. It is unclear how he was related to the others Scotts of Bowhill. Adam (17th C.) resident of Minto Parish who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Adam (17th C.) cottar at Hartshaugh in Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Adam (17th C.) tenant in Girnwood according to the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He was surely related to other Scotts of Girnwood. Adam (17th C.) rented half the farm of Overhall in 1690 and 1692, with James renting the other half. The pair were also listed as residents at Overhall on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. They were surely related. In 1694–98 he was renting half of Overhall, with the other half rented by Walter Scott, ‘Chief’, who was surely also related. He and Walter also served as cautioners for Margaret Scott, widow of James Scott, who was renting part of Borthaugh in 1696; this suggests that they were closely related. In 1697 he witnessed a baptism for Francis in Timbersidemill. He paid to rent the Wilton mortcloth in 1704, but it is unclear who had died. Adam (17th C.) listed as shepherd at Wiltonburn among the ‘deficient’ on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. He may be the Adam who (along with Robert) witnessed a baptism for James in Wiltonburn in 1705. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Agnes Riddell and their children, baptised in Ashkirk Parish, included: Margaret (b.1700); and John (b.1702). Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Bessie Robson and their children, baptised in Ashkirk Parish, included: Thomas (b.1693); Bessie (b.1699); Bessie (again, b.1700); Helen (b.1702); Agnes (b.1704); and an unnamed child (b.1708). Adam (17th/18th C.) son of Walter, tenant in Wauchope and brother of William, who was Chamberlain to Buccleuch. His mother was Janet, sister of James Scott, writer in Jedburgh. He witnessed documents for the Elliots of Harwood in 1688, 1692 and 1700. He was a tenant at Wauchope in 1718 when he purchased the farms of Stonedge and Howa from Gilbert Elliott of Stonedge; these were jointly valued at £856 12s. In 1724 he transferred these lands to his brother William, who was Chamberlain to the Duchess of Buccleuch. He was subject of a ‘decret arbitral’ in 1756. He was probably unrelated to the later Scotts of Wauchope. Adam (17th/18th C.) married Helen Lauder in Hawick in 1706. They were both from Hawick Parish. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish, where he married Isobel Scott in 1708. Their daughter Isobel was baptised in Hawick in 1709, with witnesses William Henderson in Flex and Dany Gray in Whitlaw. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was recorded as tenant in Woll in 1710 when his daughter Isobel was baptised. He may be the Adam who married Janet Gordon in Roberton in 1703. Other children, baptised in Robertson, who could be his, include: Margaret (b.1707); Agnes (b.1713); Adam (b.1714). Adam (17th/18th C.) probably son of Adam of Burnfoot. In 1698 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire as ‘younger of Burnfoot upon Teviot’. He is probably the ‘Archibald’ (assuming this is an error) of Burnfoot listed among the Roxburghshire heritors who petitioned Parliament in 1700. He may also be the Scott of Burnfoot listed among heritors of the Regality of Melrose in 1700. He is probably the Adam who (along with Gavin Plummer) sold the lands of Burnfoot to the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1712. Adam (17th/18th C.) recorded as ‘in Cavers par.’ in 1701 when his daughter Janet was baptised in Hawick Parish. This suggests he was a farmer in a part of Cavers bordering on Hawick Parish. His wife was Janet Paterson, probably daughter or sister of miller James Paterson. Their children included: Janet (b.1701); and Barbara (b.1715). Adam (17th/18th C.) tenant of Woll, recorded in baptismal records in 1717 and 1719. He was also tenant of Woll in 1718 when reported for disparaging remarks against the elders of Ashkirk Parish, calling them ‘skybalds’, and complaining that one of the elders had called him a ‘ragabast’ and Jacobite villain. In 1721 he was tenant in Woll in a protest at Selkirk Sheriff Court and also recorded in a tack for 1721 (recorded in 1723). He married Margaret Brown in 1716 and their children included: Walter (b.1717); John (b.1719); and Thomas (b.1722). Adam (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He witnessed a baptism for weaver John Bridges in 1705 and another for merchant William Black in 1721. He married Helen Lauder in 1706 and their children included: Francis (b.1710); Adam (b.1713); James (b.1718); Helen (b.1722); and John (b.1724). The witnesses in 1713 were William Gardner and mason John Napier (who also witnessed baptisms for weaver Andrew Jardine on the same day). He is probably also the weaver whose daughter Isobel was baptised in Hawick in 1721, with the witnesses being merchant James Aitken and cooper John Aitken. Adam (17th/18th C.) tenant in Redfordgreen and Drycleuchshiel. He was recorded there in 1716 when he had an ‘instrument of irritation’ at Selkirk Sheriff Court. Adam (17th/18th C.) tenant in Fauldshope, recorded in a protest at Selkirk Sheriff Court in 1722. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Is-abel Laidlaw and their children included Walter (b.1729) and Adam (b.1731). The witnesses in 1731 were Walter Purdom and Walter Scott. Adam (18th C.) recorded as tenant in Kershope in Ettrick in 1721 when he sued Alexander Laidlaw, herd in Eldinhopeknow, for a debt. Adam (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Lees in 1721 and 1735. He is probably the Adam who witnessed a baptism for David Renwick at Lees in 1725. He married Mary Scott in Wilton in 1720. Their children included: William (b.1721); Isobel (b.1723); Robert (b.1726); Agnes (b.1728); Adam (b.1731); Mary (b.1733); and John (b.1735). The witnesses in 1721 were William and Adam Scott and in 1735 were John Scott and James Dryden. Adam (18th C.) married Margaret Scott in Wilton in 1723. Adam (18th C.) married Margaret Gedstains Scott in Wilton in 1727. Their children included: Helen (b.1730); and Francie (b.1733). Adam (18th C.) married Isobel Leyden in Cavers in 1728. Adam (18th C.) carrier in Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their children included Marion (b.1724), James (b.1726) and John (b.1733). The witnesses in 1726 were James Gedstains and Robert Ker. Adam (18th C.) tenant in Gilmanscleuch in 1737 when he was recorded in a legal case in Selkirk. Adam (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Agnes Cavers and their children included: Isabel (b.1739); James (b.1744); and Adam (b.1748). Probably the same Adam, married to Agnes Cavers, also had a son Walter baptised in Ashkirk Parish in 1736.

Adam (d.bef. 1772) of ‘Tanlawers’ in Wilton Parish (Tandlaw probably). He is mentioned in an Edinburgh marriage record of 1772, when his daughter Barbara married John Greig. He is probably related to the earlier Scott of Tand-law. Adam (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He was recorded as ‘younger’ in 1743 when he wittnessed a baptism for carrier Walter Wilson. He was probably related to (perhaps the son of) the earlier weaver of the same name. Probably the same weaver married Euphan Telfer and had a daughter Rebecca (b.1761), with the whole congregation as witnesses. If his wife’s name is also given as ‘Elizabeth’ and ‘Elspeth’, then other children are Jean (b.1757), John (b.1763), Francis (b.1764); Helen (b.1765); James (b.1767); Walter (b.1770); and William (b.1772). The wittesses in 1765 were ‘Mr John Laurie, student’ and John Kedie, in 1767 were barber Francis (proba-D. 18th C.) miller in Hawick. On the subscription list for Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784) he is listed as ‘Mr Adam Scott, miller, Hawick Mills’; ‘John Scott, miller, there’ (possibly the miller at Hummelknoves at that time) is listed after him, and so may have been related. ‘John and Adam Scott in Hawick’, who paid the cart tax in 1791, may be these same 2 men. He married Esther Scott in 1754 and their children included: Ann (b.1757); Robert (b.1759); Margaret (b.1761); and Francis (b.1762). The witnesses in 1757 were Bailie Robert and merchant George (who may have been related), in 1759 were the whole congregation and in 1762 were Bailie Robert (again) and miller James (who may also have been related). Perhaps the same miller Adam also married Agnes Scott and had children: James (b.1768); William (b.1770); Esther (b.1773); Adam (b.1775); Janet (b.1778); Jane (b.1779); and Betty (b.1783, probably). The witnesses in 1773 and 1783 were the Associate Congregation. He is probably the miller whose son James died in Hawick in 1781. Adam (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1787 he married Isabel Turnbull, who was also from Hawick. Their children included Thomas (b.1788) and Margaret (b.1790). Adam (18th C.) recorded at Scabcleuch in 1791 in a letter to a Selkirk lawyer. Adam (18th/19th C.) from Ettrick Parish, in 1795 he married Elizabeth (‘Betty’) Nichol, who was from Hawick. His wife may be the Elizabeth, daughter to John, baptised in Hawick in 1764. The couple’s children, baptised in Ettrick, included: Elizabeth (b.1797); Thomas (b.1798); Margaret (b.1800); John (b.1803); Janet (1805–65), married Adam Pringle in Roberton; Adam (b.1808); and Gideon (b.1812). Adam (18th/19th C.) farmer at Whithope (in Roberton Parish), recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 3 horses. He married Alison Brown and their children included: George (b.1783); and Thomas (b.1786). These baptisms were not entered into the Roberton Parish records until 1808. It is possible that his marriage was in 1777 in Melrose. Adam (b.c.1770) blacksmith at ‘Spinneysbank-End’ in Castleton Parish. In 1841 he was living with his wife Margaret and his son Robert, who was also a blacksmith. He could be the Adam from Langhaugh who married Margaret, daughter of Gilbert, tenant in Blackburnfoot. Adam (1782–1857) born in Hobkirk Parish, son of John and Isabella Blaikie. Like his father, he was a shepherd in the Hawick area. He was at Houdshall in 1818 and Priesthaughshiel in 1820 and 1823. He was recorded as a labourer at Houdshall in Cavers Parish in 1841, while in 1851 he is listed as a ‘Travelling Grocer’ at Raesknowe, and on his death certificate was a carrier. He married Janet (or ‘Jenny’) Leithead, who was born in Kirkton and died at Sunnybank in 1865, aged 78; she was daughter of Gledstone Leithead and Helen Hall. Their children probably included: John (1811/2–35); Gladstone (1813/4–90); Helen (1815/6–30); Thomas (b.1818), who married Janet Davison; William (1820–29), who died at Priesthaughshiel; Jenny (b.c.1821), who lived at Middlebie in Dumfriesshire; Charles (b.1823), who was a shepherd at Braidliehope in Castleton Parish; Walter (b.c.1827); William (again, b.c.1829), probably the gamekeeper living at Sunnybank in 1861; James (b.c.1832); and David (1834–35). Adam (b.c.1825), who moved to northern Scotland, then the Falklands and finally New Zealand was probably also his son. He died at Raesknowe and is buried in Old Wilton Cemetery, along with his wife and 4 of their children who died young. Adam (18th/19th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1799 he was selected by ballot to serve on the Roxburghshire Militia, after several others had been declared unfit or deserted. He may be the weaver of Hawick who was already deceased in 1810 when his wife Betty Cairns died. It is possible he is the ‘Kill Dryds Adam’ whose death is recorded in 1805; if so, then he was surely related to weaver Robert, who had essentially the same nickname. He probably married Elizabeth Cairns and their children included: John (b.1773); Janet (b.1776); Adam (b.1777); Robert (b.1780); George (b.1782); Francis (b.1785); Isabel (b.1787); and Francis (again, b.1794). The witnesses in 1776 were the whole congregation. Adam (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Isobel Gray and their children included John (b.1809). Adam (18th/19th C.) clogger on the Howegate, recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Adam of Ashtrees (18th/19th C.) son of John of Ashtrees and brother of Thomas of Peel. He had a sasine as heir to his father in 1780. He held Ashtrees according to the county valuation of 1788. He was succeeded by his son John, whose trustees sold the lands in 1855 to John of Riccalton (a cousin). Adam of Tullich, Loch Carron (1790–1865) son of John of Ashtrees and Isabel Rae. His father’s executors sold Ashtrees and it passed to a cousin. He farmed a large farm in West Rossshire. He married Janet, daughter of James Hall of Sciberscross, Sutherlandshire. Their children were: John of Drynoch, Skye; James, who went to Australia; Sir Henry Hall; Thomas; Margaret; Anne; Jessie; Esther; and several other daughters. Adam (1796–1838) son of James, who was herd in Wauchope, Hobkirk Parish. He sailed to America in 1812, along with a sister and Thomas Lockhart. He may have stayed with relatives in Bovina, New York state before settling in Ontario, on the Otanabee River. There he built a saw and grist mill in 1818, the area becoming known as Scott’s Plains. It was remaned Peterborough in 1825. He was described as being a huge man, 6 feet 4 inches tall and weighing 260 pounds. He married Patricia Ann Mann and their children were Margaret, Adam, Jeanette, James, Walter and Elizabeth. A plaque on the grounds of the Adam Scott College and Vocational Institute records how he was the first settler in Peterborough. Adam (b.1798/9) cattle dealer who was living at Wester Parkhill in Roberton Parish in 1841. In 1851 he was still at Wester Parkhill and described as an agricultural labourer. His wife was Catherine (or Christina) and their children included Walter, James, Adam, William, Robert, John and Christopher. He could be a descendant of Robert, who was at Wester Parkhill in the latter part of the 18th century. Adam (b.1816/7) born at Legerwood, Berwick, he was a grocer and spirit dealer at 7 Sandbed. He was recorded as a grocer at Tievot Square in Slater’s 1852 directory, and was also listed as an insurance agent for Northern. He married Agnes Laing, and their children included: George Laing (b.1842); Elizabeth (b.1844); David Laing (b.1846); Jane Margaret Mary (b.1848); and Agnes Helen (b.1850). Adam (b.1816/7) born in Melrose, he was a policeman in Hobkirk Parish. In 1861 he was living at Forkins Police Station and listed as ‘1st Class Police Constable’. His wife was Agnes (from Eckford) and their children included Samuel, Janet, Adam, Isabella C., Andrew and William. Adam (19th C.) son of John and Margaret Turnbull. In 1851 he was living with his sister Elizabeth and her husband Alexander Burnet at Penchrise. He was shepherd at Shankendshielis, being recorded there in 1861. In 1859 he married Jane, daughter of John Dalgleish and Jane Smith. He may be the agricultural labourer living at Mervinslaw in 1841. Adam (c.1825–87) born at Priesthaughshiel, he was son of Adam and Jessie Nicholson (according to his death certificate). It seems possible that he was instead son of shepherd Adam and Janet Leithead. He worked as a shepherd and for some reason moved to northern Scotland, where in 1850 he married Mary Gillanders. He was listed at that time being from Kilmallie Parish in Argyllshire, and then he settled in Contin Parish, Ross & Cromarty, where several children were baptised. Their children included: Adam (1850–1915), who died in Kincardine; John (1853–76), died in the Falklands; Annie Gillanders (1854–1944); Alexander Gillanders (1855–1931); William (1857–1927); James Gillanders (1859–1943); Kenneth Gillanders (1862–1949); Thomas (1864–1917); Charles Gillanders (1866–1923); Jessie Isabella (1868–76), also died in the Falklands; and Walter (1871–1914). In 1861 and 1871 he was a shepherd, coming from Hawick, working as a shepherd near Inverness. In 1873 he was employed by the Falkland Island Company and sailed south with his wife and 7 children. By the late 1870s the family had moved to New Zealand. He worked as a shepherd around Canterbury and died following a fall from his horse. Adam (1826–81) joiner in Hawick, son of heddle-maker Charles and cousin of Sir James A.H. Murray. He is probably the apprentice joiner listed at the East End along with Adam Small in the 1841 census. He was listed as a joiner along with his brother Charles in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1861 he was a master joiner, employing 4 people. His premises were on Bourtree Place, specifically on Munro’s Close. He was the first person in Hawick to ride a ‘velocipede’. In 1861 he presented to the Archeological Society a silver coin of Edward II that he had found at Bourtree Place. He married Agnes Fleming (from Ancrum) and they had a son, Charles William. Adam (b.1828) son of Robert and Agnes, he was born in Wilton Parish, his father being farmer at East Boonraw. He himself was farmer at Burnfoot on Ale. In 1861 he was farming 800 acres there, and employing 6 people. He married Elizabeth Anderson (from the Burnfoot on Ale family) in 1852 and their children included: Thomas Anderson (b.1853), who emigrated, but returned; Robert (b.1855); Agnes (b.1857); Alexander Miller (b.1858); Adam (b.1860); David F. (b.1863), settled in Colorado; Sybella Fotheringham (b.1865), also in Kansas; William (b.1867); Ebenezer Anderson (1869–93); Elizabeth (b.1871); Charles Anderson (b.1875); and John Marcus (b.1877). Most of the family emigrated to America, settling in Pottawatomie County, Kansas, where the last 3 children were born. Adam (19th/20th C.) Hawick builder responsible for most of the stone-work at Stiches House, completed in 1902. There is a photograph of his work force outside the house. He may have been the same A. Scott who was Burgh Assessor around 1890. He may also be the Adam whose daughter Agnes was Cornet’s Lass in 1899. Adam (1874–1954) son of builder John and Margaret Inglis. He was a mason in Newcastleton, living at 1 Union Street. He married Agnes Dixon, who died in 1952, aged 80. Their children included: John Dixon (1908/9–19); and Margaret Inglis (‘Peggy’, 1911–19). They are buried in Ettilton Cemetery. Agnes ‘Muckle Mou’d Meg’ nee Murray (b.1590s) daughter of Sir Gideon Murray of Elibank. She married William, younger of Harden in 1611. The romanticised version of the story involves the young Scott being captured in a skirmish, and choosing to marry the ugliest of Murray’s daughters in order to escape the gallows.
In fact the true story is preserved in 2 detailed wedding contracts, making it clear that the marriage was a well-planned arrangement. She was still a minor at the time, and the contract involves many details about lands for female heirs, etc. The dowry had the value of £7,000. Her name is signed ‘Agnes Morraye’. Her eldest son, also Sir William, succeeded to Harden, while her 2nd son became Sir Gideon of Highcheser. She is celebrated in a sculpture unveiled at Elilbank in 1999. Presumably there was some basis for the characterisation of her physiognomy. Agnes (17th C.) servant to Walter Earl of Buccleuch. She was listed in the deceased Earl’s inventory in 1633, when she was owed for her annual fee. It is unclear if she was a servant at Branxholme or in Edinburgh or elsewhere. Agnes (17th C.) one of the daughters of Robert of Alton. In 1653 she and her sisters Margaret and Bessie were served heirs to their ‘foir grandsher’ (probably great-grandfather) Robert in half of the East Mains of Hassendean. Agnes (17th C.) recorded as resident at Stonedge on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Agnes (17th C.) convicted in Hawick in 1695 of bleeding Robert Scott ‘by thrusting her hand in his mouth, and ryveing out of his cheiks’. Agnes ‘Nans’, nee Noble (18th/19th C.) mother of James, schoolmaster at Yarrow and later occupant of Sillerbuthall. She was described (by Rev. James Russell) as ‘quite a character; kind, active, economical’. Her husband’s name is unknown. She lived with her son at Yarrow (presumably meaning she was widowed), and had a very high opinion of him. She was in charge of the boarders, of whom there were as many as 30 in the small house. Agnes (18th/19th C.) recorded in 1811 when she witnessed a baptism in Hawick for a child of James Sanderson and Isabel Scott (who may have been a relative, such as her sister). It was unusual for a woman to act as a baptismal witness. Perhaps the same Agnes witnessed baptisms for weaver Charles Scott in 1826 and 1828. Agnes nee Cook (b.1805/6) from Roberton, she was an innkeeper and grocer, listed at about 17 High Street on the 1851 census. She was also listed as a High Street grocer in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 she was a widow, with children Janet and Margaret, born in Midlothian, and also living with her mother, Janet Cook, from Cavers, and sister Mary Cook. It is unclear who her husband might have been. Ailmer of Molle (12th/13th C.) recorded in about 1220 when along with his wife Christian he gave an oxgate of land in Molle (or Mow) to Kelso Abbey. His wife was a daughter of Isolda, who was daughter and co-heiress of Anselm of Molle. Several families seemed to have concurrently held lands of Molle (around the modern Morebattle), making it hard to establish clear familial relationships. Nevertheless it seems very likely that he was closely related to Richard Scott ‘de Molle’ (and ancestor of the Scotts of Buccleuch), who married Alice, daughter of Anselm de Molle. Alan (13th/14th C.) recorded as ‘Alan Skot’ when he was on an inquest at Peebles in 1303/4. He could have been related to the William, who held lands in Peebleshire in 1296. Alan (14th C.) Burgess of Aberdeen, recorded in the Exchequer Rolls for 1362. Alan (14th/15th C.) Canon of Cambuskenneth who acted as a witness to charters during the regency of the Duke of Albany. Alan (1943/4– ) Hawick-based butcher. He was trained as a runner by Jimmy Bell of Ashkirk, and went on to win sprints in race meetings in the Borders and further afield. He had even greater success as a coach in the 1970s and 1980s. Albert (13th C.) merchant of Placentia (i.e. Piacenza in Italy), who is recorded in 1279. Edward I gave a letter of protection to ‘Albert Scot, and his partners of the Scotti’ for 3 years. In 1293/4 he is Albert ‘le Escot’, who along with John (presumably his brother or son) was given further protection ‘to trade in the realm during the King’s pleasure’. Alexander (13th C.) recorded as ‘Alexander Scot’ in the 1256 assize roll of Northumberland. He was involved in a fight with Walter, son of Thomas, in the house of ‘Roberti de Prudewyk’. Alexander (13th C.) listed as ‘Alsaunder Scot of Perthayk’ in Lanarkshire when he paid home to Edward I in 1296. He could have been related to Sir Richard of Murdieston. Alexander (13th/14th C.) ropemaker at Newcastell. Along with ‘Matildis Scot’ and 3 other men, he is recorded in 1304 when payment was made for their wages in going to make ropes for Edward I’s castle at Stirling. Alexander (15th C.) witness recorded in 1456 in a notorial instrument for the Scotts of Buccleuch relating to the lands of Whitchesters. This probably refers to the retour for John of St. Michael a few years earlier. It is possible he is the same man as Sir Alexander. Alexander (15th C.) recorded as customs office in Perth in the Exchequer Rolls in the 1460s. He also rendered the accounts of the Baillies of Perth. He may have been related to the Scotts of Balwearie. Alexander (15th C.) recorded as tenant of several Crown lands in Kirkcudbrightshire and Wigtounshire in 1481. Probably a different Alexander leased part of ‘Ricardystoun’ in Bothwell in 1480. Sir Alexander of Howpasley and Abington (d.1488) 2nd (or perhaps 3rd) son of the first Walter of Buccleuch and brother of Sir David. He is sometimes said to be the same as Alexander, Rector of Wigton and Director of the Chancery, but this is a different man (although probably related). His father had gained the lands of Abington (in South Lanarkshire) in 1458/8, after being forfeited by the Douglases. He witnessed a charter in Edinburgh for Robert Scott of Haining in 1463. In 1467/8 he was granted Howpasley by James III, the lands having previously been in the possession of the Stewarts of Dalswinton and Garlies. In 1469 he and David together leased the farm of Mount Common. In 1470 he paid the redemption money for Midshields and Appletreehall to their superior William Livingstone of Drumry; the appended shield shows the ‘bend charged with two crescents and a mullet’ of the Scotts of Buccleuch, with another mullet on shield probably indicating cadet status. In 1470/1 he was one of the witnesses to the decision to acquit Andrew Ker of Cessford of the charges of assisting the King’s enemies. He was recorded as Master Ranger of the Ward of Ettrick in the period 1469–5, taking over from Sir Walter of Buccleuch and having the lease of ‘Aldanishop’ (probably Eldinhope) for his fee; he was also stated in 1475 to be ‘de Kirkurde’. In 1471 he had a debt along with his mother and John Colquhoun, relating to Crown lands. In 1483 he was witness to a charter from Henry Wardlaw, giving the half barony of Wilton to John Scott of Thirlestane (who was probably a relative). He is recorded as Rector of Wigton and Clerk of the Rolls and Register for Archibald, 5th Earl of Angus. In 1483 he was Canon of Aberdeen and Clerk Register when he witnessed a charter to the Earl of Errol. And in 1483/4 he witnessed a charter for Alexander Home of that Ilk. In May 1488 he was Rector of Wigton and Clerk of the Rolls and Register for the charter regranting the Barony of Cavers to William Douglas. And in the same month he had the same titles when he witnessed the charter for the resignation (and regranting) of the Barony of Branzholme. In 1491 he was witness to a ‘procuratory of resignation’ involving Ruecastle. He also witnessed a large number of charters not relating to the Borders for James III in the period to 1483–8 and for James IV in 1488–9. He was still recorded as Rector of Wigton in 1496. His signature is recorded (and reproduced in the 1877 study of the accounts of the lord high treasurer of Scotland). Alexander (15th C.) given 20 sheep in the 1491/2 will of Sir David of Branzholme. He may be the same as one of the other Alexanders. Alexander (15th C.) tenant in Broadlee, probably the farm in Ashkirk Parish. He was mentioned in 1493 and 1494/5 when his son John was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh. John ‘in braidlee’ was also mentioned, and was surely related (if not the same man as his son). Alexander (15th C.) brother of Robert of Whames. In the Justice- aire held in Jedburgh in 1493 he was allowed to ‘compone’ for several crimes, specifically stealing cattle from the tenants of Robert Ramsay in ‘dene hous’ and stealing sheep from William Murray in Sundhope; his surety was Robert of Whitchester. Alexander (15th/16th C.) tenant in ‘hoptoun’ recorded in 1498 at the Justice-aire held in Peebles. He was allowed to ‘compone’ for riding Andrew Taylor’s mare to death, killing Thomas Elphinstone’s cow and hurting him, and striking a child of the Laird of Adamland. William Bell in Peebles was his surety. His home was probably associated with Hopeton Tower near Eddleston in Peeblesshire. Additionally in 1498 he had remission for the murder of Tom Robson, for wounding Walter Notman, for the premeditated wounding of Andrew Taylor and of William Allan in ‘mannislant’ a dun for ‘common oppression’ of the King’s subjects, with William Bell in Peebles again being his surety. 1502 he At the Justice-aire in Peebles in 1502 he had remission for the murder of Thomas Robson, with surety Robert of Allanhaugh. It is possible that he was the same man as Alexander, son of Robert of Allanhaugh, who was appointed Vice-Registrar of Scotland in 1534 and was progenitor of the Scots of Scotstarvit. Alexander (15th/16th C.) listed in the Exchequer Rolls in 1501 among mostly local men who had been fined. He is recorded being ‘in Moulelaw’, which seems likely to be Mouslaw. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts, but he could be the same as one of the contemporary Alexanders. Alexander (15th/16th C.) son of Sir Alexander of Howpeslay and brother of Sir Walter of Howpeslay and/or Stichers. In 1502 Patrick Scott, son of Adam ‘in Hardwodhill‘ had a remission for dealing with the sheep stolen by him and Richard Armstrong (called ‘Skaw’) from David Hoppringle at ‘Fechnay‘; Walter Scott of Howpeslay and Robert Scott of Stichers served as sureties. He was also recorded in 1502 receiving remission for several crimes: resetting Edmond Taylor; stealing a horse from Oakwood; stealing a horse from John in ‘Valis’; stealing 240 sheep, 10 cows, 3 horses and goods from David Pringle out of ‘Fechnay’; and stealing 200 sheep, 20 cows and goods from David Pringle’s tenants. His brother Walter of Howpeslay served as his surety. Alexander (15th/16th C.) Burgess of Edinburgh who witnessed the letter of acquittal in 1510 between George Scott of Whames and Robert Muir of Rowallan. He is probably also the Edinburgh man who witnessed a document relating to lands in Leith held by Melrose Abbey in 1511. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Alexanders. Alexander of Howford (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1508 when he was on an assize that convicted Cuthbert Lauder of Todrig. He was granted the feu of the middle stealing of Langhope (also known as Howford) in 1510. He was recorded in the Exchequer Rolls of 1512 as holder of the lands of Howford. It is possible he was the Alexander who in 1514 witnessed a dispensation to marry granted by the Archdeacon of Teviotdale for Ingram Elliot and Elizabeth Scott (with the other witness being Thomas). It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. Sir Alexander (d.1513) of Hassendean, said by Scott of Satchells to have been killed at Flodden, and to have been the ancestor of the Scotts of Haining, Scotstarvit, etc. He is also listed by Abercromby in his list of those slain at Flodden. It is unclear how he might have been related to the main Scott branches, although he could have been son of David of Hassendean (if he existed at all). Alexander (15th/16th C.) listed among a large number of Borders men who had respite in 1526 for their earlier attack on the Earl of Arran. After him are listed Adam, Steven and William ‘brether to the said Alexander Scot’, with ‘brether’ being plural, suggesting all 3 men were his brothers. It is unclear to which branch of the Scotts they belonged. Alexander (15th/16th C.) Burgess of Selkirk who was in Newark. In 1526 there was a sasine for his wife, Janet Ker, for lands within Selkirk. The witnesses included Michael and David, who may have been related. Probably the same Alexander witnessed a document in Selkirk in 1528 and purchased a tenement in 1529. In 1530/1 he is recorded holding lands in Selkirk formerly belonging to Patrick Murray and in 1532 (along with Walter, tutor of Haining) sold a piece of land to Thomas Currer. In 1532 he confirmed the sale of his tenement and rigs to Thomas Currer. In 1534/5 he resigned a tenement in favour of his son and heir Thomas, who immediately sold it to James ‘Bradfutt’. He may be the Alexander who occupied a husbandland belonging to Patrick Murray, which was sold to Mark Ker in 1536. Perhaps the same Alexander sold a tenement to William Fletcher in 1541/2. It is possible he was the same man as Alexander of Palace. Sir Alexander (d.c.1542) Provost of the Collegiate Church of Corstorphine. It is unclear how he was related to the other Scotts, since the name was quite common at the time. He may be the same Alexander who was presented to the vicarage of Glenholm in Peeblesshire in 1505. He was keeper of the Rolls. of Exchequer for many years. He was paid by the Crown for copying rentals etc. in 1509. In 1528 he raised an action relating to crops at Ratho, and in 1529/30 he gave evidence concerning the Lordship of Dirleton, which he had possessed for 12 or 13 years. He was one of the Auditors of the Treasurer’s Accounts from at least 1526–42. In 1540 he founded a chaplainry in the church of Irvine. About the same time he had a letter of commendation from James V for his faithful service ‘in all sessionis, chekkeris, and register’. His name occurs frequently in the Exchequer Rolls in at least the period 1537–1540, including as witness to the accounts, for making payments in the name of the convent of St. Andrews and payment to the Dictator of the Rolls. James, who succeeded him as Provost of Corstorphine (and Auditor) was 3rd son of Robert of Allanhaugh and Whitchesters. Sir Alexander (d.bef. 1540) possibly 2nd son of Robert of Allanhaugh, and grandson of David of Bucileuch. He was appointed by James V as Vice-Registrar of Scotland in 1534. His son Robert succeeded at an early age, and later acquired Knightspottie and other lands. Robert’s grandson John became the first Laird of Scotstarvit. It is possible he is the same man as Alexander in Hopeton, recorded in 1498 and 1502. Alexander of Palace (d.bef. 1545) son and heir of David, Vicar of Ashkirk. In 1532 he received sasine for his father’s lands in Selkirk; he was there referred to as being ‘of Paliss’. In 1532/3 he was ‘of Paliss’ he resigned the annual rents of a tenement in Selkirk to John ‘Mithag’. In 1535 he was ‘then called of Paliss near Ashkirk’ when an action was brought against him in Selkirk by Robert Paterson, Bartholomew Anderson and Archibald Brown. In 1535 he resigned 3 rigs of land to William ‘Boirne’, but still held a tenement in Selkirk in that year. In 1540 and 1541 he was a Burgess of Selkirk when recorded in a dispute over money with William Fletcher. In 1541/2 he declared that he would never lease his rigs to William Burn. In 1545 his son John succeeded to the annual rent of a tenement of his in Selkirk; Andrew, Vicar of Cavers and William were among the witnesses. Alexander (16th C.) recorded being ‘in Kyrkhope’ (i.e. Kirkhope) in 1536. He witnessed the proclamations of a royal letter in Selkirk. Alexander (16th C.) recorded ‘in Hairheid’ in 1539 when he was on the inquest panel for Alexander Lauder succeeding to Todrig. He was also in Harehead in 1540 when he witnessed an agreement for John Scott being responsible for the death of Walter Down in 1540/1. Alexander (16th C.) son and heir of Steven. He is recorded selling a tenement of land in Hawick in 1558, this being one of the earliest known Hawick sasines. The land lay in the West-end, being bounded by James Brown’s land on the north, ‘the hill path on the south’, ‘Doniere Portussis’ on the east and the ‘Common Vennel’ on the west. This may have been similar to the land known as ‘Wylie’s Dub’ and ‘Bridgehaugh’ a century later. Alexander (16th C.) recorded in 1573 as ‘callit Huttitill’ among the tenants of ‘Andishop’ who were to be entered into ward in Edinburgh by Sir Walter of Branxholme, Sir Walter of Birkenside and Adam of Deephope. David, also ‘callit Huttitill’ was also listed (and surely his brother or similar), as well as ‘Blak Sande in Deiphop’. ‘Andishop’ may have been Annelshope or Eldinshope. He was surely related to ‘Rowie of Huttkill’, who was recorded in 1616. Alexander ‘Black Sandy’ (16th C.) tenant in Deephope. He was recorded in 1573 when he and others from ‘Andishop’ and elsewhere, were to be entered before the court in Edinburgh by Sir Walter of Branxholme, Sir Walter of Birkenside and Adam of Deephope. Alexander (16th C.) Burgess of Edinburgh. In 1581 he was a cautioner (along with Mungo) for George of Synton being entered into ward in Edinburgh Castle. There was a further caution by him and Mungo in 1581 for George of Synton and Robert of Haining ‘now in ward in Edinburgh Castle, in £1000 each’, and the caution for Robert of Haining was confirmed later in 1581. This was concerned with the dispute between the Scotts and Ellumists, specifically the complaint that Dand Elliot had been attacked near Headshaw by a group of Scotts. He was probably directly related to Mungo, as well as being a relative of the Scotts of Goldielands (and hence Bucileuch). Alexander (16th C.) brother of Matthew of Belstanerig. He was recorded in 1586/7 among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. Alexander of Clerklands (16th C.) recorded in 1593/4 when he and Walter of Ashkirk were cautioners for John Veitch, heir apparent of Dawyk, not to harm the Tweedies. He may be related to the later John of Clerklands. Alexander ‘Lang Sandy’ (d.bef. 1635). In 1605 he had a ‘discharge’ (i.e. cancellation of an obligation) from William of Howpasley for rental of his lands of Wark (it is unclear to which area this refers, but presumably fairly local). In 1635 his grandson John in Howpasley was served as his heir; he was at that time described as being ‘commonly called ‘Land Sandie’ in Hawick. Alexander (16th/17th C.) brother of Thomas ‘called of Ormestoun’. He was part of a group of Scotts charging Langlands and other Scotts to find caution in 1610, with the other side petitioning for the penalties to be reduced. Additionally, the Scotts of Harden, Whit-sdale and Satchells were also bound not to harm him and his associates. There was a similar bond in 1610 for Andrew Riddell of that Ilk and his son not to harm them. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Alexanders. Alexander (16th/17th C.) described in 1617 along with James Douglas as ‘commoun and notorious thevis and lymmairis’ when apprehended by the Commissioners of the Middle Shires and delivered to the Bailies of Selkirk. However, the pair escaped. It is possible that the same Alexander was a servant to the Laird of Blackbarony, who was in 1619 in Peebles Tolbooth for theft. Alexander of Tushielaw (17th C.) eldest son of William and Grizel Scott. He obtained a charter for Tushielaw in 1663. He is recorded as ‘Andrew (Alexander) of Tushilagoe’ when his son Patrick was buried in Greyfriars Cemetery, Edinburgh, in 1664. He may have been the Scott of Tushielaw who entered into a teind agreement with the curators of the Duke of Buccleuch in the late 1600s. He may have been Laird in 1671 when the land tax was paid in Dumfriesshire for ‘lands pertaining to Tussilaw’. His son William succeeded when he was still a minor (and was soon after succeeded by Walter, the last Laird, who may have been his brother rather than his son). Another son, Andrew, is recorded in 1699. He may have married Margaret Elliot (said to be the mother of Walter, the last Laird). Alexander (17th C.) ‘cottar’ at Tofts according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Alexander of Galalaw (17th C.) once owner of the lands called ‘Roberton Cleughfoot’. If this was really in the 1600s, then he may have been father of Adam of Galalaw who was recorded around 1700. Alexander (17th/18th C.) son of George, who was probably 2nd son of Thomas of Bonchester. He was miller in Rulewater and then tenant at Roughheugh Mill in Hawick. He had 2 sons: George, farmer in Falla; and Robert, who was also tenant at Roughheugh Mill. It may be that John in Hummelknowes was a 3rd son. Alexander (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Laing and their children included Janet (b.1699) and Bessie (b.1703). Alexander (17th/18th C.) son of William ‘the Bellman’, who had been Burgh Officer for most of his life. He was himself Burgh Officer from 1696, replacing John Stewart. He may thus have overlapped with Alexander Young. He was stated to be a Burgess of Hawick at the time of his appointment, and eldest son and heir of the deceased William. This may have been a reappointment, since in 1693/4 he was listed as ‘town-officer’ among those contributing to funds for the new Kirk bell. He is probably the ‘officer’ listed as a witness (along with flesher Robert) for wright Andrew in 1700 (suggesting they were all related perhaps). He married Anna Amos (or perhaps ‘Aire’) and their children included: Alexander (b.1702); and Anna (b.1705). The witnesses in 1705 were Alexander Young and John ‘Atkin’. He was listed as ‘officer’ in 1705 when his daughter Anna was baptised, and also when he witnessed a couple of baptisms himself. Perhaps the same Alexander was recorded being paid for ale given to the ‘cassars’ (i.e. road-layers) in 1721. Dr. Alexander (1691–1743) eldest surviving son of William of Thirlestane and Christian Don. He had his fathers goods deponed to him in 1727 and is also recorded in 1737 in records relating to the Scotts of Buccleuch. These lands of ‘Thirlestain’ are probably those near Yetholm, and not the lands in the Ettrick, then belonging to Francis, 6th Lord Napier. In 1729 he married Barbara, daughter of Henry Kerr of Frogden and granddaughter of John Kerr of Frogden; his wife died in 1781. They had 11 children: Barbara (1730–76); William (b.1731) Edinburgh merchant; Christian (b.1732), who married Leith of Freefield; John (b.1733); Anne; James (b.1735); Rebecca; Agnes; Madeline or Magdalene (b.1739), who resided at George Square and lived to an old age; Charles (b.1740); and Walter (b.1742). His son and heir William inherited Chatto and Sunlaws and took the surname Scott-Kerr. Alexander of Synton (1690–1764) son of John, he succeeded when still a minor. His ‘curators’ (presumably during his minority) were John Erskine of Shielfield, Walter Scott of Woll, William Elliot of Borthwickbrae, Walter Scott of Todrig and William Ogilvie of Hartwoodmyres. There appears to have been a dispute over the boundary between his lands of Synton and Ashkirk with Groundstone owned by Scott of Buccleuch. He matriculated arms in 1711, a star between 2 crescents and a red rose, with motto ‘Crescendo prosim’. In 1743 he witnessed a baptism for Hawick druggist Gideon and Susanna Scott. In 1747 he witnessed a baptism for William Scott of Synton. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761.
(along with his grandson), and also for Selkirkshire. In 1711 in Edinburgh he married Magdalene, daughter of Sir William Elliott of Stobs. Their children included: Margaret (b.1713), baptised at Synton, probably the same daughter Margaret who married John Chisholme of Stirches in 1736; John (b.1713), who died before his father, but whose son Alexander succeeded to Synton; Elizabeth (b.1715), baptised at Synton; an unnamed child (b.1716); Gilbert (b.1717), baptised at Synton, recorded becoming an apothecary's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1733; and Alexander (b.1719), baptised at Synton. The witnesses in 1715 were Elliot of Borthwickbrae (probably William, who married his sister) and John Riddell of Muselee, in 1716 were Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs (his wife's brother) and Elliot of Borthwickbrae (again), and in 1717 were William Murray of Hadden and William Scott (his servant).

Alexander of Thirlestane (b.1691) oldest surviving son of William of Thirlestane. He became the 3rd Laird of Thirlestane near Yetholm and was a physician. He married Barbara, daughter of Henry Kerr of Frogden and they had 11 children, including William Scott-Kerr (1731–82), who sold Thirlestane. Alexander of Galalaw (18th C.) son of Adam of Galalaw. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Selkirkshire in 1761. He may be the Alexander, 'younger of Galalaw' recorded as a baptismal witness (for Robert of Coldhouse) in 1709; he was thus son of Adam of Galalaw. He was 'of Galala' in 1718 when he presented for baptism in Hawick a child of his deceased brother William of Brieryhill. He was 'of Galalaw' in 1724 when he witnessed another baptism for Robert of Coldhouse. Although still being designated 'of Galalaw', it seems that he was no longer directly connected with those lands. The baptisms he witnessed suggest that he might have been related to Robert of Coldhouse. Alexander (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was recorded at Highchesters in 1756. He may be the Alexander who married Bessy Pott (who was from Cavers) in Roberton in 1749 and had children William (b.1750), Isobel (b.1752), Betty (b.1756) and Janet (b.1759). Alexander (18th C.) cooper in Hawick. He witnessed a baptism for Robert Easton in 1763. Alexander of Synton (d.1782) son of John, he succeeded his grandfather Alexander in a sasine of 1765. He was recorded being 'of Sinton junior' in the 1761 list of Commissioners for Roxburghshire. He is marked as proprietor of Synton on Ainslie's 1773 map. He had the house rebuilt around 1776. He paid tax for having 3 male servants in 1778 and 2 in 1779. In 1773 he married Eleanor (‘Nelly’ or ‘Helen’), daughter of Walter Grieve in Brauxholme Park. Their children were: John, the only son, who succeeded; Catherine, who later inherited the estates; Mary; and Helen. Alexander (1729–1804) 7th son of Gideon, farmer in Ladhope. His grandfather was John of Woll. He succeeded to his father's tenancy of Ladhope in Yarrow. He paid the Horse Tax there in the period 1785–97 and the Dog Tax in 1797. In 1782 he married Christian, daughter of Mr. Scott, farmer in Eldin hope (perhaps Francis, who lived to be 94). Their children were: Gideon (1783–1844), who died without issue; Walter (1787–1863), who also died childless; William, who succeeded to the Ladhope tenancy; John (b.1795), who became a baker in Edinburgh, married a Miss Buchan of Peebles, and died without issue; Margaret; Jane; and Christian, who married John Scott of Over Deloraine. Alexander (c.1760–1835) younger son of George of Falla and grandson of Alexander, tenant of Roughheugh Mill in Hawick. He was probably descended from the Scotts of Bonchester. He was a draper in Jedburgh and a Bailie there, as well as being factor to the Earl of Hopetown. He is also said to have spent a considerable amount of money on new kinds of explosives. He is probably the Jedburgh merchant of that name who subscribed to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' in 1784. He married Isabella Rutherfurd, thereby obtaining possession of the farm of Falla. His children were: George, who worked for the Admiralty Office; William; John, whose son inherited Falla; Thomas; Adam; Isabella; Elizabeth; Alice; and Ann. His daughters became joint proprietors of Falla. Alexander (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Helen Grieve, and whose children, baptised in Ashkirk Parish, included Katharine (b.1774) and Mary (b.1775). He may also be father of an unnamed child (b.1780) also baptised in Ashkirk. Alexander (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their children included: Charles (b.1771); James (b.1773); Thomas (b.1774); Charlotte (b.1776); and George (b.1787). Alexander (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish, recorded as ‘Hind’ in 1789 when his daughter Betty was baptised. John (b.1786) and John (again, b.1787), were probably also his children. Alexander (18th/19th C.) farmer recorded at Ashkirk on the 1787–97 Horse Tax Rolls. He owned 7 farm horses and 1 saddle horse at that time. He is probably the Alexander who was married to either Helen Grieve or Margaret Scott. Alexander (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Barbara Scott and their daughter Jane was baptised in 1803, with witnesses ‘Rev Mr Hardy’ (probably of Ashkirk) and Walter Turnbull. Alexander (18th/19th C.) grocer and meal dealer in Newcastleton, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Alexander of Kinninghall (b.1778) elder son of Robert, tenant at Roughheugh Mill. He was born in Wilton Parish. In 1851 he was farmer of 400 acres, employing 13 people. He married Margaret, daughter of William Bell and Markie Minto, and she died in 1829, aged 43. Their children were: Marky (b.1815), who married William Hobkirk; Robert of Kinninghall (1817–98); Ann (b.1819); William (b.1821); and Mary (b.1821), who married John Scott, farmer in Barnhills. He is buried at Bedrule. Alexander John (18th/19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish, where his first 2 children were baptised. Other children were baptised in Hoddom Parish. He married Helen Curle and their children included: Margaret Curle (b.1813); and Alexander (b.1815); Isabella Susan (b.1817); and Gideon Andrew (b.1821). Alexander Pringle (1799–1853) twin of Francis Napier, he was son of George and born at Yair House, where his mother had worked. He was named after Alexander Pringle of Whytbank, who owned Yair. He worked for Pringles as a woollen frame-work knitter in Hawick. In 1844 he married Elizabeth (1810–93), daughter of George Rule and Elizabeth Nichol; the marriage was recorded in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. They had children: Alexander (b.1852/3), who was manager at R. Pringle & Sons; and Bella, who lived at 8 Carnarvon Street. In 1851 he was living at Backdamgate and in 1861 his widow was living at 2 Allars Crescent with her mother (Elizabeth Rule) and siblings. A memorial in old Wilton Cemetery for him and his twin brother Alexander was erected by their sons. Alexander (1830–1917) 2nd son of John Sibbald, tenant in Over Deloraine. He was tenant farmer at Ramseycleuch (in Ettrick). He emigrated to Iowa, U.S.A. in 1881 and helped found the Presbyterian Church at Paullina. He married Helen Scott, from Howford. Their children were: John Sibbald (b.1862), who lived at Deloraine farm in Iowa; William F. (b.1864), who married Janet, daughter of Walter Cowan; Harry Alexander (b.1876), who married Mary, daughter of John Cowan; Isabella Michil (d.1907); Jean Elliot, who married John Cowan; Wilhelmina Young, who married her cousin John Sibbald Scott; Christina A., who married Thomas H. Aitken; and Nelly Janet who married Fred L. Huston. Alexander (b.1830/1) son of Francis Napier and Janet Oliver, he was born in Wilton Parish. He trained as an engineer and moved to Galashiels, where he worked as manager of the gasworks. In 1854 he married Mary (1830/1–88), daughter of Andrew Ekron. Their children included Francis, Andrew, Elizabeth and Janet Agnes Oliver. Alexander (1840–1920) son of William and Mary Scott, he was born in Ashkirk Parish. In 1870 he married Janet, daughter of Robert Grieve and Janet Shackleton of Lilliesleaf. In 1880 they emigrated to the Canadian prairies, and he became the first postmaster in Minto, Manitoba. They had 8 children, the first 5 being born in Ashkirk, and the others in Manitoba. This included Dr. Alexander Gladstone (1882–1970), known as ‘Canada’s first flying doctor’, who founded the hospital in Bossano, Alberta. Alexander (1851–1933) son of Robert and Mary Purdom. He farmed at Falnash, then Kinninghall and later at Venchen, Yetholm. He married Agnes, daughter of Robert Hobkirk (builder in Hawick), and later married her sister Georgina Isabella Grierson Hobkirk. He died in Yetholm. Alison (17th C.) resident of Headshaw in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor’. Andrew (14th C.) clerk of the Diocese of St. Andrews. In 1393 he was notary for the instrument confirming Sir John Swinton in his lands. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts. Andrew (15th/16th C.) recorded along with Robert and Philip in 1494/5. The three were among men who were already fugitives when John of Deloraine was accused of ‘resetting, supplying and intercommuning’ with them. It seems reasonable to assume that they were closely related, perhaps brothers, but from which branch of the Scotts is unknown. Andrew (15th C.) joint tenant of an acre near Linlithgow in 1484 and again in 1495. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. Andrew (15th C.) recorded in ‘north schelis’ (probably North Shielis) in the 1498 Justice-aire held in Peebles. He was fined for the non-appearance of his brother Thomas. Later Thomas was allowed to ‘compone’ for the crime of mutilating James Davidson in ‘brachio’ (probably somewhere in Peeblesshire). It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts. Andrew (15th C.) Bailie of Inverkeithing, recorded in 1541. He was probably related to earlier Scotts in Inverkeithing. Andrew (16th C.) recorded as Vicar of Cavers in 1545 when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk relating to the Scotts of Palace. Perhaps the same ‘sir Andrew’ is recorded in 1544 when his son John witnessed a transaction for the Scots of Blindhaugh. Andrew ‘Dand’ (16th C.) recorded as indweller in Selkirk in 1579. In 1580 he was ‘alias Dande’ in Selkirk when warned to appear in Melrose Kirk and also in a case involving William in Whitehaugh. Additionally in 1580 he received redemption money in Selkirk from Robert Gottle, was ‘Dandie’ when he was a witness, was ‘Dandre’ when he received redemption money and was ‘Dandrie’ when he received an annual rent of lands in Lessuden. He witnessed further transactions in Selkirk in 1580/1. In 1581 he received money owed him by the heir of John Brydon of Well in Selkirk. In 1581/2 he witnessed a transaction for Robert of Aikwood and received redemption money for lands that once pertained to John Scott. Andrew of North Bowhill (16th C.) witnessed a marriage contract in Selkirk in 1580, between James in Whitslade and Elizabeth, sister of Robert in Aikwood. He also acted as a judge to decide about a dispute in Selkirk in 1580. In 1581, along with several other Scotts (from Hartwoodmynres, Gamescleuch, Gilmanscleuch, Chamberlain Newton, Edinburgh, Dryhope, Catslack and Howpasley), he supported William of Tushielaw and Robert of Aikwood in representing Adam in Bonnington in a dispute with Robert of Haining; he was surely related to some of these other Scotts. In 1581 he and his tenants were represented by Robert of Aikwood in an agreement to pay the minister of Selkirk. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts of Bowhill. Andrew (16th C.) brother of Philip of Dryhope and perhaps son of John. In 1592 he was a signatory to a caution by John Hay of Smithfield for the good behaviour and loyalty to the King of his brother Philip of Dryhope. He may be the same as one of the other Andrews. Andrew (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘chirurgeon, burgess of Hawick’ in 1598 when he witnessed a contract between Sir Walter Scott of Branzholme and Sir George Home of Wedderburn. He may be the earliest known doctor in Hawick. Probably the same surgeon Andrew was listed in the inventory of the deceased Walter Earl of Buccleuch in 1633, when he was owned for his ‘pensioni the said year, foure bolles heipit oatt meill, at elleveine punds the boll, inde fourtie foure punds’ [SB1633]. Andrew (16th/17th C.) surgeon and Burgess of Edinburgh, he was brother of Walter in Catslack. In 1620 he complained about Walter Stewart of Kirkland, who remained at large despite not paying him and another Edinburgh Burgess. Also in 1620 he represented William ‘of Slak’ (i.e. Catslack) in complaints to the Privy Council, both by him and against him. In another of the cases in 1620 he was referred to as brother of Walter in Catslacknow. His daughters Janet and Bessie were served as his heirs in 1643. Andrew of Todshawhill (16th/17th C.) listed by Scott of Satchells as being ‘of Totchahill’. He was said to be among the 24 ‘Pensioners’ of Buccleuch and descended from the Scotts of Robertson (although from which one is unknown). Andrew of Salenside (16th/17th C.) said to have been one of the Scotts of Ale Water who was part of the 1596 raid to rescue Kinmont Willie. He may have been a younger brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade (as suggested by Scott of Rodono) or a brother of Walter ‘the Hawk’ of Whitslade and uncle to Sir Walter (as suggested by Keith Scott). He may be the Laird of Salenside who was recorded as present at the Parliament of 1592. He had a confirming charter for the lands of Salenside in 1609. He is recorded in 1613 when his son Walter became a brewer’s apprentice in Edinburgh. He must have been related to Robert of Salenside, who was summoned before the Presbytery for murder in 1614. Thomas, who inherited Whitehaughbrae in 1621, was probably his son. He was recorded as father-in-law to William of Catslack in 1621 when the pair complained about Alexander Stewart of Phaup resuming attacks on William after being released from imprisonment and then injuring him (Andrew) in the head. Andrew (16th/17th C.) tenant in Scabcleuch. In 1604 he was witness to an instrument of sasine for a charter of Simon Scott of Bonnington for lands in the upper Ettrick. He may have been related to the Scotts of Tushielaw. Midgehope, etc. Andrew ‘Braid’s Andrew’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1586/7 being ‘callit Braidis Andro’, among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. His brother Willie is also on the same list. He was ‘called the Braid’s Andro’ in 1590 in a case where Lord Maxwell and Alexander, Lord Home were ordered to enter certain men of Ewesdale to answer some English complaints. In 1590/1 he was ‘called the Braid’s Andro’ listed among men of Ewesdale who both Lord Maxwell and Lord Home were to enter before the Privy Council; he was specifically called out with a few others ‘to answer for all their other steel-fellows [fellow thieves]’. He is also recorded in 1606 among men declared as fugitives by the Borders Commission. He is there recorded as ‘Andro Scot in Raburn, called the Braid’s Andro.’ In 1615 his son ‘Wattie’ (also referred to confusingly as ‘Braidis Wattie’) was involved in the slaughter of the Laird of Drumlanrig’s sheep at Howpasley and executed for sheep stealing at Eilrig in 1616. It is unclear whether ‘Braid’ refers to a name or a location (possibly ‘Broadlee’ or ‘Braidhaugh’). He was probably also the Andrew ‘the Breadie’, son of John ‘the Tinckler’ (who was tenant at Harwood) among men complained about by the English Warden for a raid into England in 1587. Andrew of Aikwood (16th/17th C.) son of Robert of Aikwood, who he succeeded in 1616. He was also served as heir to his father’s lands of Belses, the south side of Bowhill and half the lands of Kershope Forest. In 1618 he was recorded as son and heir of Robert of Aikwood, when along with his curators there was a complaint against George Turnbull in Belses and Andrew Turnbull that they had still not paid the profits of ‘Hathornerig’ in Belses for 1616 and 1617. These curators were Sir John Murray of Philiphaugh, Sir Robert of Shillinglaw, Andrew (surgeon and Burgess of Edinburgh), Philip of Dryhope and Robert of ‘Drywodmynes’; it seems likely that most of them were closely related to him. He is mentioned in 1627 in an action that was brought against him and Robert of Hartwoodmyres. In 1634 he was ‘olim [formerly] de Aikwode’ when he deponed Kershope to Sir William Scott of Harden. In 1619 he married Margaret, eldest daughter of James Kerr of Chatto. He was succeeded by Philip, last of Aikwood, who was probably his brother. R.C. Reid suggests that he died in 1680 and was succeeded by his brother James. Andrew (16th/17th C.) son of William ‘callit of Bowhill’. In about 1618 the pair were listed among men who had illegally used hagbuts and pistols in Ettrick Forest. Andrew (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘chirurgeon, burgess of Edinburgh’ in 1624 when he had a charter of the lands of Bonnington from James VI. He must have been a close relative of John and John’s brother Simon, who had previously held the lands. It is also possible that he was the same man (or closely related to) the Andrew who was a surgeon in Hawick at about the same time. He is probably the Andrew who was an apprentice to Henry Lumsden in 1592/3 in Edinburgh and Guild-brother in 1608. Andrew (16th/17th C.) tenant in Hep, recorded in 1628 when he was on a list of men accused by the Earl of Buccleuch of chopping down his trees at Todshawhaugh or Trinitylands. James ‘in Holcaldrumhill’ is listed after him, and may have been related. Andrew of Foulshiel (d.bef. 1647) son of James. He is recorded as owner of the lands of ‘Fadinside’ in Lindean Parish in 1643. In 1643 he married Janet, who was an illegitimate daughter of Walter, 1st Earl of Buccleuch. He was succeeded by his brother Walter. Andrew (17th C.) tenant in Hermiston. He is ‘Andro Scott, portioner of Hermiston’ when he signed the 1638 ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick. He was recorded as a portioner in the 1643 county valuation, with lands in Hermiston valued at £130. Probably the same ‘Andrew Scott of Hermiston’ was listed among landowners of Liltlesleaf in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. It is unclear if he is the same as one of the other contemporary Andrews. Andrew of Broadmeadows (17th C.) son of William of Tushielaw with his first wife. In 1624 he was son of William in ‘Faldishop’ (probably Fauldshope near Aikwood) when he had a sasine for Broadmeadows from the Murrays of Philiphaugh and in 1627 he was son of William in ‘Falishope’ when he made a complaint to the Privy Council that James Inglis of Huntly and others cut down trees on his land. He held Broadmeadows in 1628 according to a roll of properties and had a further instrument of resignation for Broadmeadows from the Murrays in 1633. In 1634 he was in the funerary procession for Walter, Earl of Buccleuch at Hawick; he carried the Earl’s sword. He was on the Committee of War for Selkirkshire in 1644. In 1648 he wadset Broadmeadows to his father William of Tushielaw and his half-brother William, reserving the liferent for himself. He probably succeeded to Tushielaw on the death of his father in about 1665. In 1667 he sold Broadmeadows to his half-brother William. In 1651 his eldest son William is listed as ‘our servitor’ in the will of Francis Earl of Buccleuch. Another son, Andrew, is recorded in 1699. Andrew of Weens (17th C.) recorded as ‘of Wayns’ when he was witness to a marriage contract of Robert Elliott and Margaret Riddell in 1652, signed at Appotside. His son Walter was also a witness. He witnessed further sasines in Rulewater in 1653 and 1654. He was recorded in about 1663 on the Land Tax Rolls when he paid tax on £200 for Weens. John of Weens, who paid the land tax in 1678, was probably his descendant. Andrew of Bowhill (d.c.1668) eldest son of Robert. He appears as witness to several documents in the 1660s and was appointed as a Justice of the Peace for Selkirkshire in 1663. Also in 1663 he is recorded in several deeds. His younger brother James eventually succeeded to Bowhill, and may in fact have bought the estate during his and his father’s lifetime. Andrew (17th C.) resident at Broadlee in Ashkirk Parish, recorded on the Hearth Tax roll in 1694. He was probably related to John, who is also listed. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Headshaw in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll there. John and James were also listed at the same place, and so probably related. He may be the Adam who married Bessie Robson and whose son Adam was baptised in Ashkirk Parish in 1690, with witnesses John Scott and Henry Mitchellhill. He may be the Andrew who witnessed a baptism for James Scott in Ashkirk in 1691. Andrew (17th/18th C.) recorded as son of deceased Andrew ‘in Tushillaw’ when he witnessed a disposition for the Elliots of Harwood in 1699. Andrew (17th/18th C.) wright in Hawick listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was recorded at the ‘milneport of Hawick’ in 1708. He was an elder in Hawick Session in 1718. His children included: William (b.1700); Robert (b.1704); and Andrew (b.1708). The witnesses in 1700 were Alexander, ‘officer’ and Robert, flesher (who may have been related), in 1704 were Alexander Young ‘officer’ and John Tudhope ‘flesher’ and in 1708 were ‘undermillers’ James Paterson and Walter Riddell. Andrew (17th/18th C.) recorded as ‘customer’ in 1700 when he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for wright Robert Scott. He was also ‘customer’ in 1714 when (along with ‘officer’ Alexander Young) he witnessed a baptism for John Rae. It is unclear if this meant he was a customs official or an itinerant worker perhaps. It is possible he is the same man as the wright. Andrew (17th/18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. In 1717 he married Janet, daughter of Andrew Turnbull. Their children included: Janet (b.1718); Christian (b.1721); Marion (b.1724); Andrew (b.1726); and Margaret (b.1728). The 1721 baptism was witnessed by mason John Turnbull and also Andrew Turnbull; the same men witnessed the 1726 baptism and may have been from his wife’s family. Andrew (18th C.) son of Walter. In 1722 he married Marion Maben, the wedding being recorded in Hawick and Ashkirk Parishes. They had a daughter Jean baptised in Hawick in 1722. Andrew ‘Black Andrew’ (d.1778) Cornet in 1724. He had a son, ‘D. Scott of Ettrickbank’. He also had a daughter who married William ‘Phillips’ (probaby Mary who married William Philip). His death in Hawick is recorded in 1778. Andrew (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He married Helen Hardie and their children included: Isabel (b.1737); and James (b.1738). Shoemaker John was one of the witnesses to the baptism of Isabel, and so was probably related. Additionally, the witnesses in 1738 were ‘John Scotts Elder and Younger Shoemakers’. It is unclear how he might have been related to the earlier shoemaker of the same name. Andrew (18th C.) merchant in Hawick Parish. He may be the merchant Andrew who witnessed baptisms in Hawick in 1741. He married Agnes Hardie and their children included: Agnes (b.1739); Janet (b.1743); and Helen (b.1744). The witnesses in 1743 were shoemaker William Scott and merchant John Cavers. He seems to be distinct from the shoemaker of the same name who married Helen Hardie (unless that was an earlier marriage of the same man). Andrew (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1761 he married Agnes Noble, who was from Wilton. Their children included John (b.1763). Andrew (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He married Margaret Allan in 1756. They had a son William baptised in 1764. Andrew (18th C.) described as ‘Pigman’ in Hawick Parish. His wife was Ann ‘Doeg’ and their children included Frederick (b.1758). The witnesses were wright Francis Paisley and barber Francis Miles. Bailie Andrew (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He was a Bailie in the 1770s. He is probably the Andrew who was a merchant at 7 High Street (although it is possible there were 2 merchants of the same name around the same time). He may be the merchant Andrew from whom ribbon was purchased for the Burgh Officers in 1756. He was probably the merchant Andrew who witnessed baptisms in 1757, 1759 and 1765 for merchant William Veitch and his wife Christian Scott (who may have been his sister or other relative). He is probably the merchant of Hawick who is recorded in discharges with the Burgh of Selkirk in 1760 and 1765 (and perhaps others in 1768). In 1763 he was likely the Andrew, merchant, who was one of the men appointed to collect money to pay for the new bell for St. Mary’s. He was probably the Andrew who witnessed a baptism for Thomas Turnbull junior in 1764 (along with Thomas Turnbull Senior), the merchant Andrew who witnessed baptisms for merchant Walter (probably his son or brother) in 1766, 1768 and 1771, and the merchant Andrew who witnessed baptisms for William Philip and Mary Scott (perhaps a relative) in 1772 and 1777. He may be the Andrew who in 1771 and 1772 witnessed baptisms for merchant Walter Henderson and Agnes Scott (perhaps a relative). He was ‘present Baillie’ in 1775 when he witnessed a baptism for stocking-weaver James Haldane. He was probably the ‘Bailie A.’ who was on the list of subscribers for the Slitrig Brig in 1777. In 1778 he received interest on the bond for £250 he had with the magistrates and council of Selkirk. He may be the Bailie of this name who witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Tom Weens in 1793 and baptisms for merchant John Renwick in 1797 and 1799. However, he could be the Andrew who ‘died in the Kirk’ in 1798. He married Alice (or Alison) Wilson; she died in Hawick in 1815 (with her forename written ‘Ails’). Their children included: John (b.1756); Andrew (b.1758); Christian (b.1759); Andrew (again, b.1762); and Archibald (b.1767). Walter (b.1744) may also have been his son. The witnesses in 1758 and 1762 were merchant William Veitch and shoemaker John Oliver. It may have been a descendant of his who was the ‘A. Scott’ at about 7 High Street on Wood’s 1824 map. Bailie Andrew (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He could be the Andrew (b.1726), son of shoemaker Andrew; but is it unclear how he might have been related to the shoemaker of the same name recorded in the 1730s. He is probably the shoemaker Andrew who witnessed baptisms for merchant Walter (along with Bailie Robert) in 1761, for shoemaker Thomas Weens (along with fellow shoemaker William) in 1765, and for tailor William Lamb in 1766. He was recorded as ‘present Bailie’ in 1772 and ‘late Bailie’ in 1778. He may be the ex-Bailie Andrew who (along with shoemaker Henry) witnessed baptisms in 1776, 1778 and 1791 for merchant William and for the same William (along with shoemaker Robert) in 1786. He married Beatrix Turnbull and their children included: Robert (b.1762); Ann (b.1765); Thomas (b.1767); Ann (again, b.1770); Esther (b.1772); Martha (b.1775); and Sarah (b.1778). The witnesses in 1765 were ‘Bailie Turnbull Senr’ and Bailie Robert Scott (who may have been related), in 1772 were Bailie William Elliot and Bailie Turnbull of Fenwick and in 1778 were writer James Winthrope and Robert Telfer. His daughters Esther and Sarah were independently wealthy sisters living at about 7 High Street in 1841 and 1851; this suggests he was related to the earlier merchant Andrew who lived at that address. Andrew (d.bef. 1816) weaver in Hawick. In 1787 he married Eliza (or Elizabeth or ‘Lizzy’) Irvine, also from Hawick; she died in Hawick in 1816. Their children included: Elizabeth (b.1787); and Andrew (b.1789). The witnesses were ‘The Associate Congregation’. Andrew (18th C.) married Christian Scott in Roberton in 1786. Andrew (18th C.) married Nelly Scott in Robertson in 1787. Andrew (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. In 1794 he and Robert (also a shoemaker) witnessed the indenture of apprenticeship of John Pringle to William Beck as a stockingmaker. It is possible he is the same man as the merchant Bailie Andrew and may have been related to the earlier shoemaker Andrew. Andrew (18th C.) schoolmaster at Kirkton in the late 1700s. He took over from Walter Scott, and may have taught a young John Leyden in the late 1780s. He is recorded as Schoolmaster at Cavers in 1799 when one of his children was baptised. Children, baptised in Cavers Parish, who were probably his include: James (b.1799); Charles (b.1801); Andrew (b.1803); and John (b.1805). Andrew (1757–1839) poet from Bowden, son of John and Rachel Briggs. He was largely uneducated, working as a cowherd and in other farming jobs. He then enlisted in the 80th Regiment and was sent to serve in the American War of Independence. After Cornwallis surrendered at Yorktown, he became a prisoner of war on Long Island. Apparently the book of verse he wrote while there was lost. After the peace treaty was signed he was released and returned to Britain in 1784, settling back in Bowden. He focussed on supporting his wife and children, but eventually published his first slim volume of verse in 1805, expanded in 1808. His ‘Poems Chiefly in the Scottish Dialect’ (1811) and other publications were very influential in their day; many local people subscribed to his 1811 book. His popular poems included ‘Swingling o’ the Lint’, ‘Rural Content, or the Muirland Farmer’ and ‘Symon and Janet’ (about the False Alarm). George Watson of Edinburgh painted his portrait. Said to be a man of simple tastes and habits, he died in Bowden and is buried there. Andrew (18th/19th C.) assessor and tax-gatherer who lived in Denholm. He possessed the sword that had been used by Sir Gilbert Elliot to kill Col. Stewart in 1726, getting it from a relative of Sir Gilbert’s servant. He passed it on to his friend George Forrest, gunmaker in Jedburgh. Andrew (18th/19th C.) hosier manufacturer of Denholm. He was an apprentice with Thomas Colledge, who was probably the first manufacturer in the village. He supplied the Glasgow market, and is said to have done well. It is claimed that the demand was so high that his customers would meet him 20 miles from Glasgow to bid against each other. Andrew (18th/19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1796 he married Isobel Turnbull, who was from Roberton Parish. Andrew (18th/19th C.) farmer at Sandyhaugh in Ashkirk Parish, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Perhaps the same Andrew married Isabel Laidlaw and had children (baptised in Ashkirk Parish): William (b.1761); Alexander John (b.1765); and Charles (b.1767). Andrew (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Mary Shiel and their children included James (b.1814) and Agnes (b.1816). It is possible he is the same man as the schoolmaster. Andrew (1786/7–1868) boot and shoemaker in Newcastle, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories, and Slater’s 1852 directory. He was at about 45 South Hermitage Street in 1851 and 1861. He could be the Andrew from Castleton who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He married Helen Mitchell, who died in 1852, aged 69. Their children included: Charles, who was also a shoemaker; Matthew (1810/1–42); and 2 who died in infancy. Andrew (1789–1846) spinner of Hawick, who was precentor in the Relief Kirk. He is probably the Andrew recorded at about 30 Loan in 1841, living with wife Isabel and children Isabel, Andrew, Helen, Archibald, Jane, Agnes and John. Andrew ‘the King’ (1791–1873) son of William, landlord of the King’s Head (hence the nickname). He was trained as a weaver, but known as a harmless simple-minded fellow, who was out of work for most of his life. He lived with his sister ‘Nelly the King’, and a drawing of him is in the Museum. Andrew (18th/19th C.) married Mary Shiel in Cavers Parish in 1813. Andrew (18th/19th C.) son of D. of Ettrickbank and grandson of ‘Black Andrew’. His property around where Lothian Street and Garfield Street were built is marked on Wood’s 1824 map. It is said that he had no offspring. He may be the Andrew of Ettrickbank who married Jane Jarvis MacLaine (1829–82). He served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. Andrew (b.1801/2) road labourer who lived at Berryfell Plain. His wife was Elizabeth, and their children included: Agnes; Andrew; Thomas; Adam; Robert C.; and Walter, who may have hung himself in a stable at Dryhope in 1859. He was still at Berryfell Plain in 1868. Andrew (1800–70) 3rd son of William, schoolmaster at Burrnemouth in Castleton, he was born there in upper Liddesdale. His mother was Isabella Veitch, from Bedrule, who was a cousin of William Veitch, author of ‘Greek Verbs’. He was a great runner, swimmer and wrestler in his youth. He was educated at Newcastle School, then in Edinburgh, also working as an assistant teacher. About the age of 19 he taught at a school in Castleton; one story is told of how he paid the blacksmith a penny to allow him to try to break off the tip of his anvil with a hammer, which he succeeded on doing at the third attempt. He graduated M.A. from Edinburgh in 1829. He became a teacher at Tain, then a tutor in Lanarkshire, and then was an instructor on ships around the Mediterranean. He was classics master at Dollar from about 1835. In 1841 he moved to Brockville, near Montreal in Canada, but returned to Scotland in 1844, becoming master at Pultneytown, Wick. He was appointed Professor of Hebrew at King’s College, Aberdeen in 1846, becoming Professor of Oriental Languages at the (united) University of Aberdeen from 1860. He died unmarried. He is said to have fallen in love with a pupil at Dollar, Miss Todd, and was engaged to be married to her, but she died before the wedding could take place. He was said to be a proud and independent Borderer, with conservative views, and quick to argue, although with a strong sense of honour. He travelled widely, and was also a great collector and reader of books (many of which were bought by Cambridge University Library). He wrote a Latin inscription for the memorial stone of his friend and colleague Prof. William Tennant. Andrew (b.1803/4) from Cavers Parish, he was a farm labourer who lived at Hawick Shiel. He was recorded there 1841–61. His wife was Margaret (from Kirkton) and their children included Mary, Sarah and David. In 1857 he gave to the Museum a ‘flint spearhead, one of several found some years ago near the Giant’s Grave, Hawick Moor’. Andrew (b.1807/8) shepherd at Wolfcleuchhead. He was living at Wolfcleuchhead in 1841 and 1851. By 1861 he was an agricultural labourer at branxholme Town. He married Elizabeth (‘Betty’) Ballantyne (from Ashkirk) and their children included: Andrew (b.1831); George (b.1832); William (b.1836/7); Elizabeth (b.1838/9); Isobel (b.1841); Robert (b.1843/4);

and James (b.1844/5). The first 2 children were baptised in Ashkirk Parish. Andrew (b.1810/1) born in Minto Parish, he was a gardener at Teviot Lodge. He is recorded there in 1851, with his wife Margaret and son William. Andrew (b.c.1810) son of Gideon the millwright. In 1841 he was living on the Cross Wynd with his mother and siblings May, James and Gilbert. When Gideon Scott & Sons was wound up in 1842 he was one of the partners. Andrew (b.1814/5) from England, he was a road surveyor in Hawick. In 1851 he was living at Mill Bank, and described as a ‘Civil Engineer; Road & Land Surveyor’. His wife was Marianne, and their children included Elizabeth M., Andrew W., Georgina, Caroline L. and Arthur. Dr. Andrew James (1817–84) eldest son by the 2nd marriage of William of Teviot Bank. In 1854 he married Emma, daughter of Gen. Frederick Blundell. His eldest son was Col. William Augustus. Andrew (b.1821) born in Robertson Parish, son of Walter and Mary Young. He was a joiner at Stobs Woodfoot. In 1851 he was living at ‘Birkwoodfoot’ and at Stobs Woodfoot in 1861. He married Isabella Grieve and their children included: Walter (b.1844); John (b.1846); Elizabeth (b.1848); Andrew (b.1851); Robert (b.1853); and Thomas (b.1857/8). John and Thomas, who were joiners at Stobs Woodfoot in about 1900, were probably his sons. Andrew (1825/6–99) son of Charles and nephew of Adam. He was a tailor who lived at Blacklee in Hobkirk Parish and was an elder of the Kirk there. He was listed at Forkins in the 1861 census, living with his mother Jane. Andrew (b.1825/6) son of Walter, who was a labourer living at Ormiston. He was farm steward at Barnes in 1861. He married Jane Paterson and their children included Isabella, Christina and Walter. Andrew (b.1830/1) son of Walter, who was shepherd at Singdean, and married Elspeth Telfer. From his father he learned the secret of a herbal plaster, which was supposed to cure cancer. He became shepherd at Twislehope near Newcastleton. In 1867 his plasters are said to have removed a huge tumour on the wife of a Galashiels tradesman. His children included: Elspeth, who married William Mather and was post-mistress at Langhaughwalls in Rulewater; Adam, who was a shepherd at Toftholm in Liddesdale and succeeded to the secret prescription; and Walter, who was shepherd at Swinelaws in Oxnam. Andrew (b.1839/40) son of grocer Walter. He was an actuary with Hawick Savings Bank and later acted as Burgh Assessor. In 1875, when accountant and actuary for the National Savings Bank, he was charged with breach of trust, embezzlement, theft and forgery. Anna (17th C.) daughter of George, who was brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade. In 1670, she and her sister Bessie were served heirs portioner to their father in the Barony of Maxton and associated lands. This included Borthwick Mains, Abbotrule, Bowsetside, Grange, Fodderlee, Over and Nether Bouchester, Mackside, Gatehousecote, Hartshaugh, Langraw, Raperlaw, Firth, Westbarns, Belses, Winnington, Winningtonhall, Parkhead, Horselee, Turn, Acrenkow, Swinstead, Dodburn, Kirkwood and Langnewton. Presumably they sold the superiority of these lands shortly afterwards. Anna Helena (d.c.1696) daughter of Walter and granddaughter of Walter of Whitselaw. Her grandfather was also known as Walter ‘of Harlaw’ She married Sir William Adair of Kinhilt (who died 1661) and then Archibald Edmonstone of Redhall, cousin of her 1st husband. In 1694 she was served heir to her grandfather’s lands of Hartwoodburn. She was mother of Archibald Edmonstone of Duntreath, as well as Sir Walter Adair, who was served as her heir in 1696. Anna (1651–1731) also known as ‘Anna’, youngest daughter of Francis the 2nd Earl of Buccleuch. She was born at Dundee, where her mother sought refuge after the departure of Cromwell from Scotland. Her ‘tutors’ were the same as those of her sister Mary, with the 3 Border tutors (Sir Gideon of Highchester, Sir William of Harden and Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs) continuing their disputes with the 5 Lothian tutors. Like her sister, there were struggles over her control, and in particular over who she should marry (e.g. attempts to arrange her marriage to the son of the Earl of Tweeddale). Eventually wardenship and marriage were assigned to her uncle, the Earl of Rothes. She became Countess on the death of her sister Mary in 1661, formally being served heir to her father. She became Duchess on marrying James Crofts, Duke of Monmouth, in 1663 at the extremely young age of 12; her husband was an illegitimate son of Charles II, who changed his name to Scott. This was arranged with the encouragement of her mother Lady Wemyss and her tutor Sir Gideon of Highchester. The lengthy marriage contract of 1663 describes in great detail the possessions of the family at that time. In 1663 her possessions in Hawick Parish were valued at over £5800 and those in Hassendean at £1561. She was referred to as ‘Annam Buckcleuchiae Comissam’ in the patent where her husband was created Duke. In 1666 the couple resigned their honours and estates and obtained a new grant of the titles for the Duke, together with the titles of Duchess of Buccleuch, Countess of Dalkeith and Countess of Buccleuch for her; this gave her the rights and titles independent of her husband. However, there were still disputes over the legality of her marriage contract and whether it conflicted with her father’s entail. She resided for several years at the court in London, where she was described as ‘one of the wisest and craftiest of her sex, and has much wit’. She was mentioned there in the diary of Samuel Pepys and was said to have become lame through a dancing accident in 1668. She was also said to have been plain of features, although with a charming manner. She spent some time in France. In 1675 she and her husband were given a charter for the lands and Barony of Hawick. She appears to have remained uninvolved in her husband’s schemings to capture the Crown; her actions around this time are portrayed through the character of Marmoutiére in the play the ‘Duke of Guise’. It is said that she helped save her husband after being implicated in the Rye House Plot of 1683. He then went to Holland, returning in an ill-fated expedition following the death of Charles II. After the execution of her husband in 1685, she obtained a new grant of her Buccleuch titles in 1687 (although the English titles were forfeited), in order to ensure that they passed to her children. And in 1693 an Act of Parliament ratified that the estates would pass to her eldest son James, Earl of Dalkeith. The lands and Barony of Hawick had fallen to the Crown after the death of Monmouth, but in 1686 a new charter erected Hawick into a free barony and regality, given to her (and with Walter Scott of Alton as the Bailie of Regality). She signed her letters ‘A.B.C.’ (for ‘Anna of Buccleuch, Countess’). In about 1698 it was suggested that she might resign her lands and titles in favour of her eldest son (as the Duchess of Hamilton had done), but she decided ‘to keep all the rights I enjoy from God and my forefathers. I was my sisters aire, and I bliss God I have children which I trust in his mercy will be mine when I am dead. The Duchess of Hamilton is but a woman, and wee are not such wis creatures as men, so I will follow no exampull of that sort till I see all the nobill men in Scotland resign to their sons; then I will consider of this business’. She returned to Scotland in 1701, residing at Dalkeith House. She visited Hawick (perhaps for the first time) in April of 1702, when she signed the Sederunt Book for her local lands. She extended and improved the family’s Scottish lands, including major renovations to Drumlanrig Tower. She is also recorded as paying for ‘causay layers’ to pave the Hawick streets. She also held the patronage of St. Mary’s kirk. In a land valuation of 1710 she was by far the largest landowner in Hawick Parish, her lands being valued at more than £7000. She can be considered the last of the true Scots of Buccleuch rather than of Great Britain. She acted throughout her life as a widow of a royal prince, and was said to be the last person in Scotland to keep young pages as attendants. Her last will of 1722/3 names her grandson Francis as her successor. In 1688 she remarried, to Charles, 3rd Baron Cornwallis of Eye (as his 2nd wife), and he died in 1698. She was predeceased by all of her children. Those with her first husband were: Charles (1672–74), Earl of Doncaster, who died young; Sir James (1674–1705), Earl of Dalkeith, whose son Francis succeeded; Lady Anne (1675–85), who died in the Tower of London; Henry, Earl of Doroaine (1676–1730); Lord Francis (1678–79), who also died young; and Lady Charlotte (b.1683), who died in infancy. They were buried in Monmouth’s vault in Westminster Abbey. By her 2nd husband she additionally had (also with the surname Scott): Anne (b.1690), who died in infancy; George (b.1692), also died in infancy; and Isobella (1694–1748), died unmarried. She was eventually succeeded by her grandson Francis, son of James, Earl of Dalkeith – ‘In England now the Dutches dwells, Which to her friends is a cursed fate, For if they famish, starve, or die, They cannot have a groat from that estate’[CWS], ‘For she had known adversity, Though born in such a high degree; In pride of power, in beauty’s bloom, Had wept o’er Monmouth’s bloody tomb’[SW], Anne (19th C.) listed as a midwife in 1838 when the death of a child of hers is recorded in Hawick. She was spouse of the deceased James Scott (but there is no other identification). Anse of the Bush (16th C.) recorded as ‘Anse of the Busse’ under the heading ‘Scotts of Ewesdale’ in Monipennie’s c.1594 compilation of Border chiefs. The other listed is ‘Thome of the Flower’. His name may be ‘Ante’ rather than ‘Anse’ (and it is also possible this was just a transcription error for ‘Arche’). ‘Watt of the Bus’, recorded in mid-16th C., was recorded as paying for ‘causay layers’ to pave the Hawick streets. She also held the patronage of St. Mary’s kirk.
the witnesses for a document relating to Whitchesters in 1484/5. He may be the Archibald, son of Sir David of Branxholme, who leased the lands of Eldinhope in 1485, with the consent of his father. Archibald (15th/16th C.) recorded among the many Borders men who had remission in 1526 for their earlier attack on the Earl of Arran. His son William is also listed. Archibald (16th C.) holder of 2 particates of land on the north side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. Archibald ‘Airchie’ (16th C.) recorded in 1569 as ‘Arche Scott of the Buss’. He was listed along with John ‘the Braid’ and Tom of Blackhall, as those men for whom Tom ‘callit the Stowir’ was held as pledge in Ravensheugh Castle. He was thus one of the Scotts of Ewesdale at that time. Archibald ‘Airchie’, ‘Creelman’ (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. His name appears as ‘Archie Scott, callit Crellmanis’, which seems likely to be ‘Creelman’ (like George Turnbull about the same time). Archibald of Deephope (16th/17th C.) recorded as witness in 1581 to a sasine for the lands of Thirlestane and Hopehouse, involving the Cranstones of that Ilk. He may be the man transcribed being ‘of Dryhoip’ in 1599 when charged to find caution to ‘observe the King’s peace’. In 1603 he was among Scotts and others, subordinates of Sir Walter of Buccleuch, who ‘had been put to the horn’ for not paying feu mails for their lands to the Queen’s Chamberlain, with Robert of Haining not entering them in court. He is recorded being ‘of Deiphop’ in 1608 when Sir Robert of Thirlestane was caution for 2 of his sons and Walter of Whiteslade not to harm him or his family. His sons Walter, Adam, Thomas, James, John, William and Archibald are all mentioned. Also in the same year other kin and associates of Scott of Thirlestane were bound over not to harm him. Archibald ‘Airchie’ (16th/17th C.) recorded being ‘in Glenrachane’ (i.e. Glenrauchan) in 1606, among men declared as fugitives. He was surely related to Hob there, who was also listed as a fugitive in 1605. Archibald (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘in Northous’ (i.e. Northhouse) in a summons against him in 1619. This was included in a letter from Gilbert Watt to the Earl of Buccleuch. He was probably related to the ‘Will’ of Northhouse recorded in 1608. Archibald (17th C.) recorded as being ‘of fflanesh’ in 1638 when he signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick. It is unclear who he was or how he was related to other Scotts of Falnash. It is possible that this is an error for Archibald Elliot. Archibald (17th C.) described as ‘vestiarius’ (tailor or cloth merchant) in Hawick in 1648. He was served as tutor to his grandson John Scott, as the closest relative of John’s deceased father Robert, who was a clothier in Edinburgh. He was presumably quite old in 1648, but could possibly be the Archibald, married to Janet Paisley, whose son Robert was baptised in Hawick in 1652 (or married to Margaret Thin, with son John baptised in 1652, or married to Helen Falside, with son Archibald baptised in 1654). Archibald of Synton (17th C.) recorded as ‘rootmaster’ for Selkirkshire in 1649. He is probably the same as Capt. Archibald of the Roxburgh and Selkirk Fencibles; he was not in fact Laird of Synton, but was son of Walter (15th Laird) and younger brother of George (last of Synton). He died unmarried. Archibald (17th C.) recorded as liferenter in Stouslie in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls, when he paid tax on £91. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts, but it is possible he was connected with the Scotts of Boonraw, Stirches and Synton. Archibald (d.1720) 2nd Laird of Boonraw, son of George and grandson of George of Synton. He is said to have been 14th in descent from Buccleuch. He may have been Laird in 1694 when tax was paid for 3 hearths at Boonraw. In 1700 he renounced his right to the arms of the Scotts of Boonraw, in favour of Sir William Scott of Harden. In 1701 he is recorded being rebuked at Robertson Kirk for a ‘mock’ marriage with Esther Turnbull on the Sabbath, held at Todshawlaugh. It was suggested in 1714 that he was ready to sell his lands, which would make an ideal way of investing the ‘Orrock Bequest’, which had been left to Hawick Parish; however, the appeal to the Duchess of Buccleuch was unsuccessful and the estate, instead of becoming owned by Hawick, eventually became part of Buccleuch’s properties. He witnessed baptisms in Hawick for glover John (who may have been related) in 1718 and for weaver Thomas Tinlin and for James (perhaps also related) in Hawick in 1720. He is said to have died at an advanced age, unmarried (putting aside the mock marriage in 1701), and it is also said that this ended the direct line of Scotts of Synton and Boonraw. However, there is also a suggestion that he had a brother, Richard, who was ancestor of Charlie of the Crescent. Archibald (17th/18th C.) tailor in Hawick. In 1712, along with fellow tailor George, he witnessed a baptism for Robert ‘Wyndhead’. He married Margaret McVittie and their children included John (b.1714). The witnesses in 1714 were fellow tailors George Scott (who was probably a relative) and James Turnbull. Archibald (17th/18th C.) tenant in Hislop, as recorded in 1709, 1711 and 1719. In 1711 he witnessed a baptism for a child of John Scott, deceased tenant in Fahinh. In 1719 he witnessed a baptism for Archibald Murray in Hislop. He married Margaret Borthwick and their children included Margaret (b.1709). The witnesses in 1709 were John in Fahinh and William Aitchison and in 1711 were William Aitchison, his servant and John Ballantyne, tenant in Rashiegrain. Archibald (17th/18th C.) listed as ‘Wyndhead’ when his son John was born in 1714. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts of the Wyndhead. He is probably the same Archibald whose other children baptised in Hawick were Margaret (b.1709) and Bessie (b.1711). Archibald (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, recorded at Burnhead in 1726, 1729 and 1736. He married Jean Scott in 1719 and their children (baptised in Wilton Parish) included: Isabel (b.1720); Walter (b.1723); Archibald (b.1729); William (b.1733); and Agnes (b.1736). The witnesses in 1726 were Thomas Dodds and John Miller, in 1729 were John and James ...(perhaps Dryden) and in 1736 were Thomas Dodds and Adam Armstrong. Archibald (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. In 1718 he was living at Howpasley. His children included: Helen (b.1715); and Marion (b.1718). He may be the Archibald who married Esther Turnbull in Robertson in 1701. Archibald (18th C.) gardener in Hawick Parish. He witnessed baptisms for gardener James Aitkin in 1757 and 1762. Archibald (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was living at Woodburn in 1761. He married Isobel Thomson in 1750. His children included Jean (b.1751), Mary (b.1754) and Walter (b.1756) and John (b.1761). He could be the deceased Archibald whose daughter Mary died in Hawick in 1815. Archibald (18th C.) recorded at Skelfhill in 1780 when his son James was baptised in Cavers Parish. Janet (b.1778), baptised in Cavers Parish, was probably also his child. He was probably related to the other Scotts who lived at Skelfhill. Archibald (b.c.1770) farmer at Easter Langbaulk. He is listed there in 1841 and 1851, and was unmarried. He may have been brother of John, who also farmed there. Archibald (b.1772/3–1858) joiner in Newcastleton, probably son of George. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He is listed as a wright in Newcastleton in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories and Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1841 and 1851 he was at about 31 North Hermitage Street. He married Jane Turnbull, who died in 1894, aged 78. They are buried in Ettleton Cemetery. Archibald (18th/19th C.) recorded as Session Clerk in Castleton in 1832. He could be the same as the joiner in Newcastleton. Archibald ‘Auld Comemside’ of Howcleuch (1779–1874) 2nd son of Charles of Wauchope and Howcleuch. He succeeded to Howcleuch (his elder brother Walter succeeding to Wauchope), but lived and farmed at Comemside. His father also conveyed to him the superiority of the lands of Wigg and part of Wauchope-head. He was related to the nursery Dicksons, his mother being Elizabeth, daughter of Archibald Dickson of Hassendeanburn. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He was listed as a trustee of Andrew Dickson of Alton (who died in 1837). He was listed as ‘Archibald Scott, Esq. of Howcleuch’ among the landowners in Robertson Parish in 1841. He presented some items from Antigua to the Museum in 1863. In 1804 he married Charlotte, daughter of John Sibbald of Pinnacle and sister of Col. Sibbald of Pinnacle; they had no children and Howcleuch was inherited by his nephew Charles. In 1841 and 1861 he was living at Comemside, along with 5 servants. He was listed as owner of the Mains of Borthwicksheil in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874. He lived to within about 4 years of a century, hence the nickname ‘Auld’ applied to him. He died in Hawick at the age of 96 and was buried in Robertson Cemetery. Archibald (b.1791/2) from Canonbie, he was a meal dealer in Newcastleton. In 1841 he was at about 31 North Hermitage Street and in 1851 at about 2 Whitchester Street. His wife was Helen and they had sons Archibald (a carrier) and Abel. Archibald ‘Airchie’ (1822/3–1903) second son of farmer John and nephew of Mr. Murray whom he assisted with the farm at Cleuchhead. After marrying he farmed at Townhead, Lustruther, Wauchope Common, Templehall and Hawthornside. He married Isobell, daughter of Robert Armstrong, from Meikledale, and she died at Heathfield in 1897, aged 77. They had 3 daughters (Catherine, Margaret and Ellen) and a son (John), who probably did not survive infancy. After retiring he lived at Drythropple and Orchard Cottage. He and his wife are buried in Ettleton Cemetery. Archibald (1804/5–74) born in Castleton Parish, he was toll-keeper at the Note o’ the Gate. He is recorded there as toll-keeper and labourer in 1851. He was an agricultural labourer back in Newcastle in 1861. He married Jane (or Jean) Nixon, who died in 1874, aged 66. Archibald (19th C.) listed as a shop-keeper on the High Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Archibalds. Archibald (b.1823/4) son of John and Margaret Murray. He was shepherd at WolfeHopelee. He was one of the original members of the congregation of Wolfelee Free Kirk in 1849, along with his wife Isabella Armstrong. In 1851 he was recorded at ‘Mackside (Townhead)’, which was probably Wolfelee Townhead. He married Isabella Armstrong in Hobkirk Parish in 1847. Their children included: Catherine (b.1847); Margaret (b.1850); Ellen (b.1853); and John (b.1860). Archibald (b.1826/7) son of meal-dealer Archibald. He was a carrier in Newcastleton. In 1852 he is listed leaving the Coach and Horses in Hawick bound for Newcastleton every Wednesday. He may be the Archibald who was working as a railway labourer at Whithknowe in 1861; his wife was Isabella and they had children Mary Ann, Archibald, Elizabeth, John and Fenwick. Archibald (b.1826/7) joiner in Newcastleton, son of Thomas and grandson of Archibald. In 1851 he was at about 30 South Hermitage Street, living with his mother Janet and siblings Thomas, Henry, John and Helen. He was still there in 1861. His wife was Margaret, who died in 1915, aged 64. Their children included: Margaret (1880/1–1939), who married Alexander Stormont; and Archibald (1882/3–1948). They are buried at Ettleton. Archibald (19th C.) carrier who lived in Chesters and operated between Hawick and Rulewater. Arthur of Gamescleuch and Newburgh (d.c.1610) probably son of Simon of Winterburgh. He is probably the ‘Mr. Arthur Scott of Wynterburgh’ who is listed on the ‘Roll of the Clans’ in 1590. In 1591/2 he acted as surety for Simon Armstrong of Mangerton. In 1593 he was ‘of Gamescleuch’ when in dispute with William Cranston (fiar of that Ilk) over possession of ‘Fawodscheil’; James of Gilmanscleuch and James’ son Robert were also involved and declared as rebels. In 1594 Robert Ker of Kippielaw was surety for him in a complaint made William Cranston, younger of that Ilk. He was said by Scott of Satchells to have been at the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. In 1597/8 Mark Kerr, Commodator of Newbattle complained that his servant Ralph Ker had been attacked and captured by him, along with William in Glack and William’s brother James. In 1602 he was part of a group of Scotts who attacked Adam Veitch ‘in Fechane’, burning his timber, etc. and were declared rebels for not appearing. Also in 1602 he was denounced again for not paying £70 for his part of the taxes of Ettrick Forest. He is referred to as ‘of Newburcht and Gemilscleuch’ (i.e. Newburgh and Gamescleuch) in 1603 when he acted as surety for John and Christie Armstrong, sons of John Armstrong of Langholm. In 1603 he was one of the men who selected Sir Walter of Braxholme to arbitrate the dispute over the lands of Gamescleuch. Also in 1603 he was among Scotts and others, subordinates of Scott of Buccleuch, who ‘had been put to the horn’ for not paying feu mails for their lands to the Queen’s Chamberlain, with Robert of Haining not entering them in court. He gave the lands of Gamescleuch to his cousin Walter (ancestor of Lord Napier) when he succeeded his father to Newburgh. His illegitimate son Robert is among the relatives and tenants of Sir Robert of Thirlestane bound over in 1608 not to harm Archibald ‘of Dephoip’. His sons John and Arthur are also mentioned among supporters of Scott of Thirlestane. He is described as brother of the Laird of Newburgh in 1610 when he was bonded (along with his brother John of Newburgh and John of Hundleshope) for not harming Walter of Tushielaw and his sons. His sons included: Sir John of Newburgh, who succeeded; Arthur; and Robert, who was illegitimate. He was described as a learned man and the fact that he is often referred to as ‘Mr’ suggests that he may have been trained as a minister. His son John was served as his heir in 1610. John, son of Andrew (surgeon in Edinburgh), who inherited Winterburgh in 1636 was surely related. Arthur (16th/17th C.) son of Arthur and younger brother of John of Newburgh. He is described as brother of the Laird of Newburgh in 1610 when he was bonded (along with his brother John of Newburgh and John of Hundleshope) for not harming Walter of Tushielaw and his sons. Additionally in 1617 James Mitchellhill, Burgess of Selkirk, complained that he had attacked him near Hanging-shaw, wounding him and giving ‘him a grite stryk upoun the head, hes dung ane ee out of his head’; he was ordered to be imprisoned in Edinburgh Tolbooth. Baldred (13th/14th C.) recorded as ‘Master Baldred le Scot’ in 1306 when Edward I granted him safe conduct in ‘coming from beyond seas to Stirling castle’. His connection with other Scotts is unknown. Benedict (12th/13th
Scotland

C.) recorded as ‘Benedict Scot’ in 1229, when the Bailiffs of Yarmouth were commanded by an English court to deliver his ship and let him return to Scotland. Bernard (13th C.) recorded as ‘le Scot’ in an English document of 1270. Along with others, merchants of Placentini, he was given safe conduct to trade in England for 3 years. Campbell (1747–66) younger son of Francis and brother of Henry, 3rd Duke of Buccleuch. In 1764 he toured Europe along with his brother, accompanied by Adam Smith. In 1764 he was granted ‘different’ of the lands of Over and Nether Harwood and others. But he did not live long enough to enjoy these gifts. He died in Paris, and his brother the Duke then returned to Britain. Catherine (b.1774) daughter of Alexander of Synton and sister of John and Helen. After her brother John’s death she had the right of inheritance granted to her in favour of distant male relatives (namely John, only son of Hugh Scott of Gala, and Hugh Scott of Harden). In 1800 she married John Corse of Bughtrig and they changed their surname to Corse Scott. Her son John succeeded to the Synton estate. Charles (16th/17th C.) possibly an illegitimate son of Sir Walter of Buccleuch (who was killed by the Kers in 1552), making him half-brother to Walter of Goldielands; alternatively he could have been a son of Sir Walter of Goldielands, which would make more chronological sense (and in which case he could be the Charles of Goldielands who died in ‘98 and whose grave tablet was found in St. Mary’s in 1863). His son Walter inherited Goldielands from his cousin, also Walter, and afterwards started the Scotts of Crumhaugh. The dates of his birth and death are uncertain. His son may have been the last Walter of Goldielands who died in October 2298 and of age 34’; this implies that he died before his father (although these generations are still confused, and it is possible this was a different man, in 1598, rather than 1698). Charles (17th/18th C.) 2nd son of Sir John of Langshaw and Ancrum. He was sometimes referred to as ‘of Palace Hill’. He was said to be a loyal supporter of the Stuart cause in 1715. He married Margaret, daughter of Robert, 4th Lord Rutherford. Their children included: John of Belford, who married Marion Baillie from Aishestiel, had an only child, Agnes, and Agnes Scott (who could be related). Charles of Langhope (d.bef. 1693) probably the successor of John, he was already deceased in 1693 when his son Robert became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh. It is unclear how he was related to the John, who sold Langhope in 1691. Charles of Crumhaugh (1663/4–98) probably eldest son of Walter of Crumhaugh and Goldielands. He may have been named after Charles II. He is probably the ‘Charles Scott of Goudilands’ who paid tax for 3 hearths on the west-side of Hawick on the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He may have been the ‘Goldilands, younger’ on the list of subscribers for the Hawick Kirk bell in in 1693/4 (with the ‘Goldilands, elder’ being his father Walter). He is probably also the ‘younger Goldiland’ who was cautious for James Scott when he rented 1/4 of Borthaugh in at least 1691–94 (with his name given clearly as Charles in 1691). He had a Crown charter for the estates of the Scotts of Goldielands and Crumhaugh in 1696, this included ‘Howpalsley and Crumhaugh, Trinity lands, Corseback and others’. He was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1698. He married Rachel, daughter of Langlands of that Ilk (who may have re-married Francis Elliot of Fenwick). Their children included: Janet (b.1688), baptised in Hawick; Walter (b.1689), also baptised in Hawick, who succeeded; Margaret (d.1746), who married Rev. Hugh Kennedy, minister of Cavers; and Rachel, who married her cousin, Walter in Comnonside, 1st Laird of Wauchope. The witnesses in 1688 were Walter of Alton Croft and James Gledstains of Cocklaw. In 1717 he was succeeded in the lands of Crumhaugh, Howpalsley and others by his son Walter, this being in 1717 after 181/2 years of ‘non-entry’, suggesting the time of his death. It was probably his tombstone that was uncovered during renovations in St. Mary’s in 1863, and reads ‘Here liyis Charles Scott of Goidilans who died in October 2298 and of age 34’; this implies that he died before his father (although these generations are still confused, and it is possible this was a different man, in 1598, rather than 1698). Charles (17th/18th C.) 2nd son of Sir John of Langshaw and Ancrum. He was sometimes referred to as ‘of Palace Hill’. He was said to be a loyal supporter of the Stuart cause in 1715. He married Margaret, daughter of Robert, 4th Lord Rutherford. Their children included: John of Belford, who married Marion Baillie from Aishestiel, had an only child, Agnes, supported the Jacobites in 1745 and lost his estate; Patrick, who died at sea; Margaret, married Capt. Ronalds; Cecilia married Mr. Sinclair, W.S.; and Elizabeth, who married Rev. James Rose of Udny and was grandmother of Mary Yule, who married Thomas Cleghorn of Weens. He died in the Tower of London. Charles (17th/18th C.) owner of a garden to the west of where the Grammar School was built at the Sandbed in the 1720s. He was referred to as ‘of Goldielands’, although that designation was no longer formally recognised by the Scotts of Buccleuch. He must have been related to the Lairds of Crumhaugh, but precisely who he was is unclear; it is possible that the reference was to the already deceased Charles of Crumhaugh. Charles (17th/18th C.) married Agnes Laidlaw in Wilton Parish in 1724. Charles (17th/18th C.) Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch for Liddesdale and Canonbie in the period 1726–29. He took over from Thomas Scott and William Scott of Stonedge before him, so he may also have been a son of William. He may be the same as the Charles ‘in Roan’ who was former Chamberlain to Anna, Duchess of Buccleuch in an assignation of 1730 for rental arrears. Charles of Crumhaugh (17th/18th C.) recorded in 1733 being ‘of Crummuch’ when he was Chamberlain to Anna, Duchess of Buccleuch for ‘Teviotdalehead’, meaning the Parishes of Cavers, Hawick, Wilton and Robertson, in at least the period 1742–8 and possibly until 1757. His accounts for 1744 include repairs to Hassendean Mill, Hawick Kirk, Hawick Mill, Slitrig Bridge, Hawick Tower and the barns and stables of Branholme. He is probably the ‘Cromhaugh’ recorded in the Hawick Town Treasurer’s book in 1746. He paid the window tax in Hawick (for ‘Branksholm house’) in 1748. It was probably his servant William Scott who is recorded getting married in Edinburgh in 1750. He may have been the Laird mentioned in 1757 in a state of the affair twixt the Laird of Cromoch and Mistris Glenhouse anent a parcel wooll sold to the deceast Thomas Glenhouse’ (in the National Archives). He married Christian Anderson; his wife is recorded in a case of 1758, along with his trustees, recovering a debt from Elliot of Fenwick, and in another case of 1762 against George Pott of Todrig. His children included: Walter (b.1742); Michael (b.1744); Robert (b.1745); and Charles (b.1747). Witnesses to the baptisms in 1745 were Patrick Christie ‘maltster’, and in 1747 were Walter at Commonside (probably a relative of some sort) and Robert Elliot of Fenwick. His eldest son Capt. Walter was the last of the Scotts of Cromhaugh. Another son was probably Gideon, tenant in Priesthaugh, while his daughter Henrietta (1740–1818) married Rev. James Erskine of Shielfield in 1768. ‘Miss B. Scott, daughter of the deceasest Charles Scott of Cromhaugh, Esq.’, who died at ‘Goldlands’ in 1809 was probably also his daughter. He may also have sometimes been referred to as ‘of Goldielands’. The Cromhaugh estates were sold to Henry, Duke of Buccleuch, after his death. Charles (1723/4–76) weaver in Hawick, son of Richard, said to have been a younger son of George of Boonraw. He gave evidence in 1767, regarding the former uses of the Common; he was described at that time as married and a Burgess. He had been among the party of Hawick inhabitants who went out to Blackgrain Moss to break up the ‘bakes’ made illegally on the Common by residents of Hawick Shiel and other farms. He married Janet Porteous (daughter of Robert Porteous, shoemaker) in 1756 and had several children baptised in Hawick Parish, including: Richard (1757–58), presumably named after his father; Charles (b.1759), probably ‘Charlie o the Crescent’; Agnes (b.1761), who may have married George Blaikie; Mary (b.1762); James (b.1763); Robert (b.1764), perhaps the hosier recorded in 1786; and Elizabeth (b.1766). The whole congregation witnessed the 1757 and 1759 baptisms and Robert Collier the 1766 baptism. He may be the Charles who hired the Hawick Parish mortcloth in 1758. Charles of Woll (b.1744) eldest surviving son of William of Woll, along with whom he is recorded as a witness in Roberton parish in 1766. He was ‘younger of Wool’ in 1780 when added to the voters’ roll of Roxburghshire, based on his superiority of ‘the five pound land of Bewlie’ in the Barony of Lilliesleaf, as well as Mabonlaw and ‘Whinny park’ in the Barony of Harden. He is probably the Charles recorded in a discharge with William Waugh of Shaw and Barbara Plummer; Gilbert (b.1790); and Janet (b.1794), who married James Grieve. He may also have been father of Catherine, who married Robert Dickson of Hase-sendeanburn in 1792. Charles of Wauchope and Howecluch (1728–1808) 2nd son of Walter, 1st Laird of Wauchope and Rachel Elliot. He farmed at his father’s lands of Howecluch, and was given these lands at least as early as 1784, when his father retired. He also succeeded to Wauchope after the death of his brother Walter in 1796. His lands of ‘Mains of Borthwickshiels, formerly in Wilton’ were valued at £146 4s 9d in the valuation of Roberton Parish. He is probably the Charles Scott at Commonside who (along with Thomas Grieve) witnessed a baptism for Archibald Elliot. He is probably the Charles at Commonside who paid the Horse Tax in 1785–94. He had 5 horses working on his farm at Wauchope according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls and was probably the Charles who was farmer at ‘Commonside etc.’ with 10 horses; he additionally paid tax for 2 carriage or saddle horses at Wauchope. He may be the Scott who paid tax on 3 non-working dogs at Commonside in 1797 and 2 at Wauchope. Additionally he was joint tenant in Mervinslaw with William Turnbull in 1797. Also in 1797 he paid tax for having a house servant. He is probably the Mr. Scott at Commonside who subscribed to John Learmont’s book of poetry in 1791. He paid the land tax on Howecluch in 1802. He gave a large contribution to support the local volunteers in 1803. He was listed along with his son Walter among the Commissioners for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1805. He conveyed parts of the superiority of Wauchope to each of his sons Walter and Archibald, another part to Charles Douglas, and retained a last part for himself. He was still listed as owner of the Mains of Borthwickshiels in 1811. His will was proved at the Prerogatory Court of Canterbury in 1812. It is said that he was of a much less ‘morose temper’ than his brother. In 1776 he married Elizabeth (‘Betty’), daughter of Archibald Dickson of Has-sendeanburn and Huntlaw; he was described as being from Hawick Parish and his wife from Minto Parish. Their children were: Christian (b.1777), who married Archibald Dickson, her cousin; Walter (b.1778), who succeeded to Wauchope; Archibald (b.1779), who succeeded to Howecluch; Charles (1782–1856), who died unmarried; Rachel (b.1782), who married Hugh Mitchell from Dum-fries; Robert, (1786–1833), who also died unmarried; James (b.1789), who was with the East India Company; William (b.1792), who was a Capt-ain in India; Agnes, who died young; and Jessie, who married John Cockburn. The ‘Miss Scott of Wauchope’ who died in 1816, aged 24, was probably one of his daughters. The ‘Miss Scott of Wauchope’ who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825 was probably also a daughter. He died at Wauchope and was buried in the family aisle at St. Mary’s. Charles (18th C.) tenant in Synton Mains in 1786. It was recorded in Selkirk that he accused 2 servants of other farmers with destroying a crop of turnips. He could be the same as one of the other Charleses. Charles ‘Chairlie o the Crescent’ (1759–1840) son of Charles and Janet Porteous. He was a Hawick linen manufacturer, who was descended from the Boonraw Scotts. He was based on the Cross Wynd and then moved to the Crescent, the location later being the showroom of John Laing’s; he gained this property from his wife, whose father James Ekron (d.1787), merchant in Hawick, had formerly owned it. He is probably the weaver Charles who (along with hosier Robert) witnessed a baptism in 1786 for George Blaikie and Agnes (perhaps his sister). His house is marked on Wood’s 1824 map, opposite the end of the Kirk Wynd. He is probably the Charles recorded in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls as owner of part of the ‘particate lands’ of Hawick at Allars; this land was feued by later in the 19th century. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He witnessed a baptism for his son Charles in 1828. It was said (by his grandson, James Murray) that he employed 6–8 weavers, mostly working from home, producing ‘custom work, in which department he produced the finest diapers and napery, being the only weaver of these sorts in the district’. He also sold linen goods at St. Boswells Fair, ‘Boswell’s Fair sarkin being a well-known material at that time’, for which purpose ‘he employed several old women constantly spinning, – some in the country, others in the town’. It is said that when he was trying to seek a position in the excise for his son John he went to Scott of Harden for support, claiming to be a relation through the Scotts of Synton. In 1791 he married Betty (b.1771), daughter of John Oliver and Agnes Ekron; she was said to be known to her family (for unknown reasons) as Mary or Margaret, although she was born Elizabeth and recorded as ‘Betty Oliver’ in the 1791 marriage record. Their children included: Agnes (1792–1839); Charles (b.1794) of Bourtree Place; Janet (1796–98); Janet (again, 1798–1845), the 3rd child, who married James Henderson, carrier and Hilliesland ‘Laird’; Isabel (1799–1831), who married Thomas Anderson; Mary (1803–88), the 6th child, who married Thomas Murray and was mother of Sir James A.H. Murray; John (b.1806), who worked for the excise and married Catherine Watson; and Elizabeth, who died young. His tombstone was close to the south wall of St. Mary’s Kirk, but when it became illegible his son Charles was going to have it re-carved, but instead used the stone to record his own family. Charles (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Betty Stewart and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1799. The witnesses were the Associate Congregation. Charles (18th/19th C.) glover of Hawick who was one of the first members of the Curling Club. He is so recorded in the club minutes of 1812. Charles (b.c.1765) carpenter in Lilliesleaf. He was living on the south side of Main Street in 1841. Charles (18th/19th C.) farmer at Bewlie Mains. According to ‘Freelance’ he once said ‘A’ folk should read the Bible and the newspapers, the Bible to see how folk should leeve, and the newspapers to see how they do leeve’. Charles (1782–1856) born in Hawick Parish, he was 3rd son of Charles of Wauchope and Howcleuch. He was farmer at Bush in Ewesdale, being recorded there in 1841 and 1851. He was listed as a trustee of Andrew Dickson of Alton (who died in 1837), with Archibald of Howcleuch also listed (his brother). He remained unmarried. He may be the Charles baptised in Hawick in 1783, with no parents names listed. Charles Balfour, W.S. (1782–1838) 3rd son of Charles of Woll and Elizabeth Waugh. He trained as a lawyer, was apprenticed to Archibald Gibson and became Writer to the Signet in 1806. He became an Honorary Burgess of Peebles in 1823. Pigot’s 1825/6 directory lists him as proprietor of Yair. He is probably the Charles, W.S., recorded in letters relating to the division of Ettrick Kirk in 1726 and 1827, preserved in the Walter Macon Collection. In 1818 he married Elizabeth (or ‘Eliza’), youngest daughter of Alexander Ker, minister of Stobo (and she died in 1870). Their son Charles inherited Sunderland Hall in Selkirkshire and changed his name to Scott-Plummer. They also had 4 daughters: Catherine; Elizabeth, who married Capt. Alexander Monro; Isabella; and Barbara. He inherited Woll from his nephew Charles Andrew, but held the estate for only a brief period before his death. Woll passed to his brother Col. John. Charles (1783–1845) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish, where his children were baptised. He married Margaret Douglas (1791–1879) in Wilton Parish in 1813; she was daughter of Archibald from Kirkton Parish. Their children included: Dr. John (b.1814); Jessy (b.1815); Isobel (b.1816); Archibald (b.1818); George (b.1819), who started a cabinet factory; Charles (b.1821); Andrew (b.1823); and Jessy (again, b.1824). In 1834 he emigrated with his family to Canada, settling at the farm of Blenheimhill in Dumfries Township, Waterloo County. His family arrived in the Galt area about 10 days before a cholera outbreak, in which he and his son John helped. His cousin William Knox lived on a neighbouring farm called Langside. He is buried in Chesterfield United Cemetery, Oxford County, Ontario.

Charles of Knowesouth (1784–1854) son of Thomas and Jean Rutherford, and grandson of Robert of Sandyknowe. He was born in Craill Parish. He was a cousin of Sir Walter Scott, and had the first Canto of ‘The Lady of the Lake’ read to him at Ashiestiel in 1809. He inherited the estate of Knowesouth from his mother, but later sold it to William Oliver of Dinlabyre. He also resided at Nisbet Mill for a while. In 1831 he obtained a lease for the farm at Milsington. He was at Milsington in 1841, with his 3 younger children, as well as Mary and James (who were probably his siblings) and 2 female servants. In 1851 there were 5 farm and house servants living with his family at Milsington. In 1814 he married Esther, daughter of Kelso architect William Elliot. Their children were: Thomas (b.1815), who succeeded as tenant at Milsington; William (b.1816), doctor in Edinburgh, who died unmarried; John (b.1818), who moved to Australia; Charles (b.1819), who died abroad; Robert (b.1821), who moved to the U.S.A.; Walter (b.1822), who died young; Walter (b.1824), also died abroad; Jane, who married Hawick lawyer James Carmichael; and Mary. Charles (b.1785) agricultural labourer in Southdean Parish. He was at the Burns in 1841. Charles (b.1790) tailor at the Forkins in Hobkirk Parish. His wife was Jane and they had a son, Andrew, who was also a tailor. Charles (1794–1861) eldest son of Charlie of the Crescent and uncle of Sir James A.H. Murray. He was a weaver and heddle maker at 5 Bourtree Place. In 1841 he was at Bourtree Place, listed as a handloom weaver, but by 1851 was a heddle maker there. He may be the handloom weaver of that name who in about 1829 he helped rebuild the steam-powered looms that had been brought from Manchester for use in Wilton Mills. He married Margaret, daughter of Yeddie Smail (or ‘Smeal’, d.1882). Their children included: Eliza (1821–42); Margaret (1822–1902), who married baker Robert Oliver from Morpeth; Charles (1824–96), who married Annie Knox and emigrated to Winnipeg; Adam (1826–81), joiner; Alison Munro (1828–97), married John Douglas, farmer at Essenside; Agnes (1830–99), married hosier manufacturer William Lyle; Jessie (b.1833), who married Andrew Scott, accountant in Glasgow; John (b.1836), who died young; Mary (b.c.1839); John (b.1841–47); and William Munro (b.1844). The witnesses in 1826 were roper William Munro and Agnes Scott (perhaps his aunt) and in 1828 were weaver Charles (presumably his father) and Agnes again. Charles (b.1798/9) farm worker in Roberton Parish. In 1841 he was living at Whitecleuchside. He married Anne Waldie in 1822 and their children included: Janet (or ‘Jessie’, b.1823); Peter Brown (b.1824); Charles (b.1827); Margaret (b.1832); Mary (b.1839); and Charlotte (b.1849). Charles (1805–69) son of Walter, he was a boot and shoemaker of Teviot Square, i.e. the Sandbed, where he was listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. He was also a grocer and spirit merchant, being based at 6 Sandbed. His address is given as Slitrig Bridge in 1841, Teviot Square in 1851 and 6 Sandbed in 1861. In 1841 in Hawick Parish he married Jessie (1817–88), daughter of William Laidlaw from Hobkirk. Their children were: Walter (b.1842), who died unmarried; Helen Douglas (1843–1928), unmarried, who had a family tree for the Laidlaws; William Laidlaw (‘Wowie’, 1847–1922), who was also a shoemaker; Isabella Mary (1852–1928); and Charles Douglas (1854–76), who died unmarried. He is buried in the Wellogate. He is probably the Charles whose wife’s heirs are recorded in about 1874 as owners of part of the former lands of Patrick Cunningham in Hawick. Charles Andrew of Woll (1817–1838) elder son of William of Woll. His father died in 1820, while he was still a child. He died unmarried, and was succeeded in the Woll estate by his uncle Charles Balfour Scott. Charles of Howcleuch (1819–95) 2nd surviving son of Walter Scott of Wauchope. He studied sheep management with the factor of Lord Breadalbane. He farmed at Tythecouse in Hobkirk Parish and Dykeraw in Southdean. But he was more interested in hunting than farming, being a member of the Buccleuch Hunt. He was a keen riding partner of Robert Kerr Elliot of Harwood and the Hendersons of Abbotrule. Afterward he lived at Lintalee, where his mother joined him later in her life. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1847, and when he retired he was the oldest member. He became attached to his sister-in-law’s sister, Margaret Amelia, daughter of Capt. Browne Roberts (of Ravensbourne Park, Kent), but was financially unable to marry her; she married Capt. Robert Main, had 2 sons, but became a widow, after which he was able to marry her, although she had to give up the inheritance she had from her deceased first husband’s family. They married in 1862 and were said to have been happy together till the end of their days. That same year he came into inheritance from the death of his brother Archibald. And in 1874 he succeeded to Howcleuch from his uncle Archibald. Thereafter he purchased Langlee and had the house largely rebuilt. He is probably the ‘Trustee of Mr. Scott of Wauchope’ recorded as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in about 1860. He was recorded at Langlee and Lintalee in a directory of 1868. He is buried in Hobkirk Kirkyard along with his wife. He was succeeded by his nephew Arthur Franchles, who was recorded as farm steward in 1861, living with his family in 1863. He was born in Teviothead Parish, son of David, who farmed at Priesthaugh. He was a wool merchant at 18 Oliver Crescent. He married Isabella Melrose. Their children included Mary E., Charlotte H., Agnes H., James M. (who died at Loos in 1915), Isabella and Margaret. Charles (1834–1912) 3rd son of John, tenant in West Deloraine. He farmed at Over Whitlaw and emigrated to Iowa in 1901, like his brother Alexander. In 1865 he married Wilhelmina, daughter of Walter Elliot, farmer at Over Kirkhope. Their children were: John Sibbald, who married his cousin Wilhelmina Young Scott and secondly Gertrude Duckett; Walter (1869–1911); Henry (b.1871), a doctor in Chicago; Gideon (b.1873), who married Effie Smith from Selkirk and lived at Keith, Banff; Charles Alexander (b.1883), a chemist at Sheldon, Iowa; Margaret, who lived at Sheldon; Christina Agnes, who married Elmer S. Gardner; Wilhelmina Elliot, who married Dr. George Skene; Mary Arbuthnott, who married Dr. B.C. Stewart; and Grace Elliot, a nurse in Sheldon, Iowa. Charles (b.1853) 2nd son of John, estate carpenter under 4 Lairds of Edgerston. He was a forester and carpenter and also worked at Edgerston, but moved to Weens in about 1900. He married Mary Story in 1879 and had a son. Charles (1857–1940) eldest son of Thomas, tenant at Milsington. He took over the lease from his father and was able to purchase the farm from the Duke of Buccleuch after WWI. He was thus the first Scott who was Laird of Milsington. He was known as an expert judge of Cheviot sheep. He was President of the Teviotdale Farmers’ Club. He married Mary, daughter of John Tullie, farmer at Bowanhill. Their children included: Thomas (b.1899); and John Charles (b.1903). Charles (19th/20th C.) Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire, who lived at Tandlaw. Charles William (b.1866) son of joiner Adam. He was a general dealer in Trinidad. He married Margaret, daughter of George Blaikie of Bridge House. They had 2 daughters, Sybil and Margaret. Charlotte (b.1766) christened in Ashkirk, she was ‘begotten in fornication with Captain Scott of Gaudilands’, her mother being Isobel Scott in Longtown. Her father was probably Capt. Walter of Crumhaugh (since that family often also had the appellation ‘of Goldielands’). Christian (17th/18th C.) Hawick brewer mentioned in 1703. This could be the same Christian listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694 and the Christian on the subscribers list for the new Kirk bell in 1793/4. Christian ‘Christy’ nee Anderson (18th C.) wife of Charles of Crumhaugh. She received a widow’s pension from the Duke of Buccleuch, her husband having been factor to the Duke, as well as a distant cousin. She is recorded along with her husband’s trustees in 1758, recovering a debt from Elliot of Fenwick, and in another case of 1762 against George Pott of Todrig. Her son Capt. Walter was the last of the Scotts of Crumhaugh. Christian (b.c.1788) gate-keeper at the Wilton Lodge lodge-house. She is recorded there in 1841, along with Margaret and William, who were presumably her children, and Christian Davidson, who may have been a younger child or a grandchild. Christian (b.c.1790) milliner at 41 High Street. She was already a widow in 1841. Her children included William, Ann, and Jean (or Jane). Christian (b.1804) daughter of Robert, who was farmer at Todshawhaugh. Her mother was Janet Jardine from Thorlieshope. She was a boarder at the school at Linhope in Yarrow Water, as described by Rev. James Russell. In 1827 she married James Dickson of Housebyres. Christopher (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Betty Laidlaw and they had a daughter Christian (b.1798).

Christopher Bartle Hugh (1924–97) of Gala, son of Philip Beaumont Frere and Jean Winifred Cochrane (b.1817/8) from Neilston in Renfrewshire, he was a nailer in Hawick. He lived on Punch Bowl Close in 1841, with his wife Betsy Renfrew and son Robert. By 1851 the family had moved to Coldstream. Constance Emily Monteath (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Betty Laidlaw and they had a daughter Christian (b.1798).

David (13th C.) tailor recorded in 1298 when protection was asked for him to accompany Ralph ‘de Monthermer’, Earl of Gloucester and Hertford in the service of Edward I in Scotland. David (15th C.) recorded in the Exchequer Rolls in 1453. He was granted the lease of ‘Drumcors’ (in Linlithgowshire) by the King. It is possible that he is the same as David of Buccleuch or the later David of Inverkeithing. Sir David of Buccleuch (c.1430–1491/2) 7th Laird of Buccleuch, and also of Branhomel and Hassendean. He was eldest son of Sir Walter of Buccleuch, and brother of Sir Alexander of Howpasley and Abington. During his father’s life he was sometimes designated ‘of Eckford’. He witnessed a lease, along with his father and others, for lands in Borthwickshiel in 1445. In 1451/2 he had a sasine for lands in Linlithgow and is described there as heir of Sir Walter. In 1453 he was granted the Barony of Eckford, and thereafter was referred to as being ‘of Eckford’. In 1454 he had a charter for the lands of Irelands-lands in the Barony of Wilton and in 1455 he had a charter of the lands of Whitchesters, forfeited by John St. Michael. Also in 1455 he is recorded being obliged to pay William Douglas of Drumlanrig 200 merks at St. Mary’s. He accompanied his father in the force that met the Douglasses at Arkinholm in 1455; it was probably for these deeds that he gained the forfeited lands of Whitchesters. He was ‘of Eikfurd’ in 1456/7 when he was witness to the sasine for Ewesdale passing from Robert Graham to George Douglas, 4th Earl of Angus. In 1457, along with his father, he witnessed the appointment of Andrew Ker of Cessford as Bailie of the Lordship of Jedforest. In 1459 he was let the farms of Mount Common and Redford for ‘half ferm’s’. In 1461, when described as heir apparent to his father, he was witness to a sasine of lands near Branxholme. He is recorded as his father’s heir in the 1463 resignation of the family estates, with Branxholme being then erected into a Barony. Immediately afterwards he he a precept and then sasine infesting him in the Barony of Branxholme. He was heir apparent of Sir Walter in 1464 when he witnessed a transumpt for an inquest concerning the lands of Cranshaws for Swinton of that Ilk. He is probably the David who was on the panel for the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffship of Roxburgh in 1464/5, and he was appointed as a special sheriff for the associated precept of sasine. Also in 1464/5 he was ‘of Whitchester’ when he witnessed the sasine granting the lands of Kirkton Mains and the Flex to William Douglas of Drumlanrig. In 1465 he had a marriage contract for his eldest son Walter and Katherine, sister of John Lindsay of Covington, involving the lands of Kirkurd. If Walter died, then one of his other sons was to marry another Lindsay. He succeeded on the death of his father in about 1469. In 1469/70 he and his son Walter were made Keepers of Hermitage Castle for 19 years by Archibald Douglas, ‘Bell the Cat’ (5th Earl of Angus), who was also Lord of Liddesdale (and whose sister married his son David). After Walter died, a new arrangement was made in 1471/2, keeping him as Bailie of Liddesdale, Scott and East Teviot; he had previously been Bailie of lands, Ettrick, Rodono, Eskdale, Ringwoodfield and East Teviot; he had previously been Bailie of lands belonging to Melrose Abbey, especially Melrose-lands, Ettrick, Rodono, Eskdale, Ringwoodfield and East Teviot; he had previously been Bailie of lands belonging to Melrose Abbey, specifically Melrose-lands, Ettrick, Rodono, Eskdale, Ringwoodfield and East Teviot; he had previously been Bailie for some of the same lands. Also in 1484 he was on the panel for James Douglas of Drumlanrig inheriting the Barony of Hawick and witnessed the associated sasine. In 1487 he appointed his son Robert as procurator for resigning into the King’s hands his lands and baronies. In 1488 he resigned his lands of Branxholme, Eckford, Lanton, Buccleuch and Kirkurd to the King, in order for them to be regranted into the barony of Branxholme. This was because of service he and his son Robert gave to the King at the Battle of Blackness; this charter lists his heirs at that time. Also in 1488 he witnessed the grant of Auld Roxburgh to Walter Ker of Cessford and he was pledge for leases granted to Walter Scott in Tushielaw and Robert Scott in Winterburgh. In 1491 his leases of Deloraine, Warleshope and Eldinhope were all vacant because of his death. In 1492 there is a record in the King’s Treasurer’s accounts of money for his ‘ward and marriage’. He is said to have married a daughter of Thomas, Lord Somerville (she was left 240 sheep, 11 cows and 11 oxen in his will, but was not named). His children included: Walter, who married Katherine, daughter of John Lindsay of Covington, but died before him and without an heir; David, who married Jane, daughter of George Douglas, 4th Earl of Angus, and whose son Walter succeeded; Robert of Allanhaugh, to whom in 1484/5 he granted the lands and Lordship of Whitchester; William (possibly of Foulshiels), mentioned in 1471/2 as the 3rd son; Janet, who married Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig; Margaret, who married James Haig of Bemersyde; an unnamed daughter, who married John, eldest son of John Lindsay of Covington; and Isabella, who married Sir Simon Carrathers of Mouswald and secondly John Murray of Falahill. He also appears to have had a son John, who is mentioned in his will as ‘his son’, and also Archibald, mentioned as his son when he took over the lease of Eldinhope in 1487. His will and testament lists his goods, a large number of people with whom he had financial obligations, and others who were bequeathed money or items; his goods were valued at £740, he was owed £380 and he gave money, livestock or grain to more than 40 people (most of them probably local). He is buried in the Church of the Holy Cross, Peebles, and bequeathed 40 shillings to the Church of Hawick, as well as Peebles and Rankleburn. David (15th C.) recorded as customs officer of Inverkeithing in the period 1486–88. He was also Bailie of Inverkeithing in 1487. He was probably related to John, who held a similar office in Inverkeithing.
Eeither he or a later David was Bailie of Inverkeithing in 1512. David (c.1450–bef. 1484) second son of Sir David of Branxholme. By 1471 he was heir apparent, since his older brother Walter had died before him. In 1476 he witnessed a charter of Robert Scott of Haining to his cousin, Thomas Middlemas, for lands in Peeblesshire. A ‘tack’ of 1478 by Archibald, Earl of Angus confirms to him lands, farms, rents, mill, capons, etc. within the Lordship of Selkirk. In 1479 Alexander Murray, Parson of Hawick, brought an action against him for wrongfully collecting £44 of tax, which he said belonged to the church; it is unclear how this was resolved. He married Jane, daughter of George Douglas, 4th Earl of Angus, this being arranged in 1471/2 by his father (who was Keeper of Hermitage) and Archibald Douglas (who was Lord of Liddesdale, later 5th Earl of Angus and known as ‘Bell-the-Cat’), her brother; the couple were jointly given Dryfesdale. In 1471/2, along with his father, he became Keeper of Hermitage and Bailie of the Lordships of Liddesdale, Ewesdale and Eskdale, the appointments being made by the Earl of Angus. He pre-deceased his father and the titles were inherited by his (probably only) son, who became Sir Walter of Branxholme and Buccleuch. David (15th C.) son of Walter of Headshaw. In 1486 he leased the lands of ‘Midsteid de Gildhouse’ in Ettrick Ward, with Sir David of Buccleuch as his pledge. David of Whitehaugh (15th C.) gained the lands of Whitehaugh in 1479 for yearly payment of a penny. The estate would remain in his family for about 400 years (although in fact it may have passed between different branches of the Scotts). He must have been related to Walter of Whitehaugh recorded in 1488. His son may have been Philip of Heap. He may also have been related to the Robert of Whitehaugh recorded in 1499. David (15th C.) bequeathed 20 sheep in the 1491/2 will of Sir David of Branxholme. He is listed as ‘Daid Scote’ and was probably local. David of Hassendean and Galalaw (d.bef. 1515) eldest son of James of Kirkurd, Over and Nether Newhall and Hassendean. He was granted the lands of Galalaw and the Nether Mains of Newhall by his father James of Kirkurd in 1494. At the Justice-aire held in Selkirk in 1494/5 he obtained remission for the following crimes: stealing 16 oxen from the Earl of Bothwell, in the company of Ninian Armstrong; stealing 19 cows and 3 horses from the Earl of Bothwell at Castelaw; stealing 12 oxen from the Earl of Bothwell at ‘Laudonia’; and stealing 3 horses from Blackbarony. His surety was Walter of Howpsley. He is listed being ‘in Gallolau’ in the Exchequer Rolls of 1501 among mostly local men who had their fines compounded. He is recorded in 1510/1 in a charter giving him the lands of Over and Nether Newhall (probably later Burnhead and Burnfoot) and lands in Easter Hassendean called ‘Dedrig’. Also in 1510/1 he gave his ‘brother german’ Robert the 2 ‘merklonds’ of ‘Dowiswod’ in the Barony of Hassendean. He is probably the David of Galalaw who in 1502 was surety for John, son of James of Broadmeadows. In 1512 he was witness to the sasine where Walter of Synton transferred Harden to his brother William. In 1515 wardship of his lands were given to Walter of Buccleuch and to the King’s tutor, John Stewart, Duke of Albany. Sir Alexander may have been his son, and they may both have perished at Flodden (if he existed). He appears to have been succeeded (in Hassendean) by his brothers John and then William. It seems very likely that he is the same man as David of Galalaw. David ‘Lady’ or ‘the Lady’ (15th/16th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1502 when he was ‘prope stirkschawis’ (i.e. near to Stirches). He had remission for stealing 60 sheep from Patrick Paterson at Colmslie, with his surety being William Turnbull in Minto. He is also described as ‘in Stikschawis’ (i.e. Stirches) in another case in 1502 when he was pardoned for several crimes: stealing a horse, 40 sheep and other items from Blackhaugh; bringing in the Robsons, Dodds and Charles’ from England to burn Hermiston, belonging to Adam Rutherford; stealing 5 horses from Hermiston, and burning houses and grain there; bringing in Archibald Armstrong, Ninina Armstrong, David Turnbull of Bonchester and other ‘traitors of Leven and Liddesdale’ to burn 6 houses and 7 horses at Minto Craigend; bringing in the same men to steal cows and horses from the tenants of Minto; and common theft. His surety was William Turnbull of Minto. He also had remission for bringing the ‘Armstrangis’ (presumably a generic term for Liddesdale thieves) and ‘Traitors of Leven’ (i.e. thieves from across the Border) to steal 180 oxen and cows, 20 horses and goods from the tenants of Synton; since the Scotts of Stirches were closely related to the Scotts of Synton, there may have been a family dispute involved in this raid. He was also implicated in the murder of George Newton and George Cavers in the same raid. Adam Turnbull of Hornshole was indicted for involvement in this or a similar incident. Also in 1502 he had a remission for stealing a horse, sheep and household goods from 'John Spedane and Andrew Michelsone furth of Blackhalche' (whether the one in Rulewater or Ewesdale is unclear), as well as for bringing the Robsonis, Doddis, and Charlis, Englishmen, to the Burning of Hirdmanstoun, belonging to Adam Ruthirfurde (probably ‘Hermiston’ in Lilliesleaf Parish), including stealing 5 horses and burning corn and buildings there. In addition he led Archibald Armstrong, Ninian Armstrong, David Turnbull of Bonchester and ‘other Traitors of Levin and Liddalisdaile’ on a raid to Minto Craigend, where they burned the farms and seven horses, and stole cows, horses and goods. On top of that he stole 60 sheep from Ralph Ker at Breadmeadows (this incident possibly also involving Walter, son of Walter of Headshaw, and Adam Turnbull in Hornshole), as well as 6 cows and other goods from William and John Aitken at the Haining. William Turnbull of Minto was surety for him for answering to these offences. Note that Robert of Stiches was the Laird at this time, and it is unclear how (or if) they were related: it is possible he was the David, son of Robert of Stiches and Synton, who was recorded in 1526. He may also be the David, brother to William in Harden, who was listed among those Borders men pardoned in 1526 for their role in attacking the Earl of Arran; if so then this would support the idea that he was a younger son of Robert of Stiches and Synton. He may also have been related to the slightly earlier David of Whitehaugh. David (15th/16th C.) recorded as being ‘de Francurni’ on the Exchequer Rolls for Selkirkshire in 1501. He was listed as a debtor along with ‘Ade Scot’ and James Laidlaw, with Walter of Tushielaw responsible for their pledges. It is unclear where his lands might have been. Presumably the same David ‘de franca’ is recorded at the Justice-aire held in Selkirk in 1502, when Adam ‘in aldinershope’ (possible Adam of Annelshope) had remission for resetting and intercommuning with him, as well as with Archibald Armstrong and ‘traitors of Leven’ and Liddlesdale. Additionally in 1502 Walter of Midgehope had remission for resetting him, particularly in the theft of 6 oxen and cows from Glensax. David of Tushielaw (15th/16th C.) probably a younger son of Sir Alexander of Howpasley. He is recorded in 1502 as ‘of Tuschelew’ when Patrick Turnbull in Wauchope had remission for associating with his son William Scott, as well as the Armstrongs. He is probably the ‘Davie wi the Tod’s Tail’ of Howpasley, referred to by Satchells, who married a daughter of Robert Elliot (12th) of Redheugh. His brother Walter was also sometimes known as ‘of Tushielaw’. His children were: Adam, who succeeded; (probably) John of Thirlestane; William; and Robert of Bowhill. David of Galalaw (15th/16th C.) listed being ‘in Galloloon’ in the Exchequer Rolls of 1501 among mostly local men who had their fines compounded. He was a witness in 1507/8 to the document relating to the tower ‘between the bridges’ in Hawick for Scott of Whitchesters. He is recorded in a remission of 1510 as ‘of Gallolaw’ for assisting rebels; he is named along with John and Walter Scott and John Lindsay. He is also recorded in 1511 as being ‘of Gallolaw’ when he claimed the lands of ‘Lang Hassindene’ of which he had been tenant, and that had been owned previously by Elizabeth Cunningham. However, 3 years later she was confirmed in these lands by the superior, Cuthbert Cunningham, Earl of Glencairn. It seems likely he is the same man as David of Hassendean. David (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘in Quhihauche’ in 1510 when he was one of the sureties for Thomas, brother of Philip of Headshaw, who was implicated in the murder of John Murray of Falahill. Other sureties were William in Hawick, George in Goldielands, William in Fenwick and John of Haining, suggesting he was related to some (or all) of these branches. He may also have been related to Robert of Whitehaugh, who is mentioned in 1499. David (d.bef. 1532) recorded as Vicar of Ashkirk in 1516 when he witnessed a document in Glasgow, which is preserved in the Selkirk Protocol Books. In 1526/7 he witnessed another document in which Archibald, Earl of Angus and others were directed not to molest Walter Scott of Branxholme, John Cranston of that Ilk and Walter Scott of Synton. In 1527 he purchased a tenement with house in Selkirk and witnessed a document relating to Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. He witnessed another document in Selkirk in 1528. In 1532 he was deceased when his son and heir Alexander received sasine for his lands in Selkirk. David (15th/16th C.) chaplain to Sir Walter of Branxholme. He was recorded in 1527 when ‘in the name of his master Walter Scot knight’ he requested details about a royal breve from James Bessat, Sheriff in Selkirk. He is distinct from David, Vicar of Ashkirk, who witnessed this same document; however, it is possible he is the same as the later Vicar of Cavers. Probably the same chaplain witnessed a transaction in 1532/3 involving East Haining for Margaret, wife of Selkirk Burgess John. David of Howpasley, see David of Tushielaw. David (d.c.1544) first son of Sir Walter (‘Wicked Wat’) of Buccleuch. He was given the baronies of Branhsholme, Eckford and Kirkurd and the Lordships of Buccleuch, Rankilburn and Lempitlaw by his father in 1528 (with liferent to himself), but predeceased him. He is recorded as son and heir of Walter in 1539 when involved with a bond among Scotts, relating to the illegitimacy of Thomas, son to Adam Scott. He may also have had a son Walter, who was heir to Sir Walter (mentioned in 1551), but must also have died, since Sir Walter, son of Sir William of Kirkurd (his brother) succeeded. In 1574 Dame Margaret Douglas, widow of Sir Walter of Branhsholme, was granted the ward and non-entries of certain fees previously gifted to him; he is there described as ‘David Scott, sone and apperand air for the tyme to vnaquhile Schir Walter Scott of B[r]anxshelme, knycht, qhilk vnaquhile David wes gudschir brothir to Walter Scott, now apperand of Branhshelme’. Also in 1574 his grand-nephew, Walter, was served heir to his baronies of Branhsholme and Eckford, as well as other lands; this was presumably a legal formality, since he (David) had never in fact succeeded to these baronies.

David (16th C.) Vicar of Cavers, recorded as witness to documents in Selkirk in 1535, 1539, 1541 and 1544. He may also be the ‘sir David’ recorded in some other transactions in Selkirk (with Cavers not mentioned). In 1539 and 1544 he was ‘vicar pensionary in Cavers’. He witnessed an agreement for John Scott being responsible for the death of Walter Down in 1540/1. He may be the ‘sir David’ who purchased a piece of land near Selkirk in 1541. In 1543 he ‘constituted commissary by apostolic authority’, but the rest of the transaction is blank or illegible. Perhaps the same David was recorded as Vicar of Cavers in 1561 when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk. Note that he was distinct from David, Vicar of Ashkirk, who was dead by 1532. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. David (16th C.) described as ‘in Clarelaw’ (i.e. Clarelaw) in when he gave back the Mains of ‘Capitrig’ (near Hassendean) to William of Hassendean in a ‘letter of reversion’ (i.e. following a loan). He was also witness to a confirming charter of the lands of Harden to William Scott in 1535. In 1541/2 he was one of the nobles serving as caution for John Johnstone of that Ilk. He may have been son or other relative of Adam of Clarelaw. David (16th C.) recorded as a witness to a charter for Aberbrothock Monastery in 1546. He was probably a cleric of some sort there, and may have been related to Thomas, who was also listed. David (16th C.) recorded in 1573 as ‘callit Huttitill’ among the tenants of ‘Andishop’ who were to be entered into ward in Edinburgh by Sir Walter of Branhsholme, Sir Walter of Birken-side and Adam of Deephope. Alexander, also ‘callit Huttitill’ was also listed, as well as ‘Blak Sande in Deiphop’. ‘Andishop’ seems likely to have been Amnelshope in Ettrick or Eldinhope in Yarrow. He was surely related to ‘Rowie of Hut-tikill’, who was recorded in 1616. It is unclear where ‘Huttitill’ was located. David (16th C.) recorded in Dingleton in a transaction in Selkirk in 1581. David (16th C.) of Stobicote, brother of Walter of Goldielands and a younger son of ‘Wicked Wat’, the 9th Laird of Buccleuch. He is one of the ‘Pensioners’ of the house of Buccleuch listed by Scott of Satchells (and there stated to be brother of Sir Walter of Goldielands). He may have been the first Scott of Stobicote. He could be the ‘yonger sone of the Lorde of Bucklowghes’ (name not given) listed in 1541 along with several Kers, accused of leading a raid on Mindrum and Hethpool. David of Raesknowe (16th/17th C.) listed by Scott of Satchells as one of ‘Pensioners of Buccleuch’. He was said to be a descendant of the Scotts of Allanhaugh, but the precise relationship with them is unknown. He was probably related to Robert of Raesnowe, who was possibly a little earlier. David of Hassendean (d.c.1564) eldest son of William of Hassendean. He was witness in 1551 to a confirmation of the Barony of Hassendean to Alexander Cunningham. He was killed by a band of Elliots and others, his murder case being tried in 1564, with William Elliot of Horsleyhill and others found guilty. It may be that those conspiring in this murder included his nephew James (son of his brother Walter), who was also executed. This event played a role in the deadly feud between the Elliots and the Scotts, which lasted for the next several years. He may have been succeeded by his grandson Robert. David (16th C.) servant to Walter Turnbull of Hobbsburn. He is listed in 1567, along with his employer, among men were ordered to appear before the Privy Council to answer accusations of raiding into England. David (d.bef. 1585) son of Adam of Allanhaugh. In 1582 he and his brother William acknowledged that Walter of Goldielands had returned some documents that he had been given to keep for them; the delivery was witnessed by William of Tushielaw and the acknowledgement by the Scotts of Bowden and Northhouse. He was said to have ‘fallin in my hand accidentlie’ by Sir Walter of Branhsholme, while he was a minor, his death being related to the slaying of Sir Walter’s servant at Braithaugh, Hob Dalgleish. The resulting feud was settled through a bond of 1585, between Sir Walter of Branxholme and Robert of Allanhaugh; however, it is unclear whether his own close family (brothers are mentioned) were simply being forced to capitulate through this bond, since they appear not to have been directly related to the Laird of Allanhaugh at that time. David (16th C.) brother of Walter of Chamberlain Newton and Burgess of Hawick. In 1579 he purchased a tenement in Hawick for £60 from Robert Johnstone in Kirkholm. This piece of land was on the north side of the High Street, between the tenements of Simon Sanderson and George Halliday. However, Bailie John refused to give sasine, since ‘twar or thre inhabitantis of the burcht of Hawik’ alleged that they had rights to the same tenement. He and his brother John were witnesses in 1588 to an instrument of sasine for Walter Scott of Howpasley as heir to his father Sir Walter of Birkenside in the lands of Appletreehall and Midshiels. David (16th C.) son of Walter of Goldielands. In 1591 2 Burgesses of Edinburgh (saddler John ‘Hairlaw’ and tailor Donald ‘Mckdull’) were cautioners for him that he would not harm the vassals or servants of William, Earl of Angus; the nature of the dispute is unclear. In 1591/2 he is listed along with his brothers Walter and William among 200 Scotts and others who were accused of stealing livestock from the farms of Drumelzier and Dreva. In 1594 he was denounced for not ‘finding lawburrows’ for James Tweedie of Drumelzier; he was described as ‘son natural of Walter Scott of Gouldielands’. He may be the same as one of the other Davids. David (16th C.) Hawick Bailie in 1592. It is unclear what branch of the Scotts he may have been from. David of Stobo Mill (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1602 when he signed a bond of peace among Border lairds. David (16th/17th C.) brother of the deceased Laird of Synton (either George or possible Walter) who was in a gang of Scotts and their followers who forcibly released 2 of their kin from the custody of the Bailies of Selkirk in 1608. Walter Scott, called ‘Old Walter’ in Synton was also involved, so possibly his brother or other near relative. David (16th/17th C.) son of the late John ‘called of the Tour in Hawick’. In 1609 he had an action against Hector Turnbull of Barnhills and his son and heir John for not paying what they had borrowed from him. It is unclear how he might have been related to other local Scotts. He also had a brother John, who inherited his father’s lands in 1609. David (17th C.) recorded being ‘in Newlands’ in 1643, when listed as owner of lands in Belses in Auncr Parish in 1643, valued at £156. David of Canobie (1627-48) son of Walter, 1st Earl of Buccleuch and younger brother of Francis, 2nd Earl. He was born at Newark Castle. He was listed among those on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire in 1648, but is said to have died in that year, apparently in battle (and unmarried). However, his testament and inventory is confirmed in 1666 (by Jean, his only surviving sibling), making it unclear when he died; it could be that Jean, Countess of Tweeddale, was making clear that she was still owed part of his share of the amount given in their father’s will, after the death of all other legitimate siblings. David (d.c.1683) Commissary Depute of Peebles, Collector of the Forest and Commissioner of Excise and the Militia for Selkirkshire in the 1680s. He is probably the ‘Collector of Excise and Supply for Selkirkshire’ recorded in 1683, 1684 and 1685. He was probably brother of the Laird of Tushielaw, although it is unclear which one. David (17th C.) son of John of Gorrenberrie. In 1663/4 he served as Chamberlain to the Scotts of Buccleuch for Liddesdale and Canobie. David (d.c.1683) tenant in Blackhope (although it is unclear which one). His will was recorded in 1683. David (17th/18th C.) shepherd in Castleside in Ashkirk Parish. He married ‘Lizie Loran’, i.e. Elizabeth Lorraine, in 1699 (she was surely related to other Lorraine in Ashkirk at about the same time). Their children included Janet (b.1695). It is possible that the same David married Elizabeth Lorraine in Ashkirk in 1699 and had children: Robert (b.1701); Janet (b.1703); and Margaret (b.1706). David of Merrylaw (17th/18th C.) said to be descended from Sir Robert of Thirlestane. He is recorded being ‘in Merriela in Cavers parish’ when his son was baptised in Hawick in 1708. He married Margaret, a younger daughter of Walter Scott of Todrig. They had a son, also David, who was a Captain in the Royal Regiment of Artillery and served in the American Wars in the 1770s. He may also have had a sister, Janet, who married William Borthwick, farmer at Glendinning. His children included James (b.1708), baptised in Hawick Parish, with witnesses James Chisholme and Thomas Wright. He could be the David, resident at Merrylaw, whose son William was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1724. He could also be the David who was at Giddenscleuch in 1727 when his daughter Janet was baptised in Cavers Parish. David (18th C.) resident of Roberton.

Scott

Parish. In 1737 he was at Outersideshiel when his son James was baptised. Other children, baptised in Roberton, who could be his, include Isabel (b.1746) and Margaret (b.1753). David (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at ‘Heap Inn’ in 1747. He married Mary Cowan in 1744, the marriage being recorded in Wilton and Ashkirk Parishes. Their daughter Isabel was baptised in Wilton in 1747, with witnesses Walter Scott and James Dryden. David (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Borthwickshiels in 1763 and 1764 and Roberton Burnfoot in 1767 and 1774. He married Margaret Learmonth in Roberton in 1759. His children included Robert (b.1763), Thomas (b.1764), Janet (b.1767), Jean (b.1769) and David (b.1774). David (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Castlewearry in 1777 when his son Robert was baptised. Christopher (b.1774) may also have been his child. David (d.c.1792) son of David of Merrylaw and Margaret Scott, from the Todrig branch. He served with the Royal Artillery in America. He was at St. Augustine in 1773, acted as Commissary of Horse in 1780 and received an address from the inhabitants of Kings and Queens Counties on Long Island in 1782. In the following year he was promoted to Major. His name disappears in 1793, but he may be the Maj. David who died in camp at Serigapatam, India. Rev. David (1765/6–1822) licensed by Langholm presbytery in 1797, he was presented to Castleton Parish by Henry, Duke of Buccleuch and ordained there in 1801. He remained minister of Castleton until his death. He is described as ‘devout and liberal in his sentiments, he was faithful and zealous in the discharge of duty, particularly in promoting the religious education of youth, while he was a friend to the poor’. In 1807 he married Elizabeth Scott, who died in 1848, aged 73. They had daughters: Margaret (1809–23), and Mary (1813–41), who married Robert Stavert, merchant in Manchester. He is buried in Castleton kirkyard. David (18th/19th C.) recorded at Blackhall on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1787 when he had a saddle horse. ‘Heirs of D Scott’ was the record on the 1790 Horse Tax Rolls. He owned 2 farm horses at Blackhall in 1797 and also paid the dog and clock taxes there in 1797. David (18th/19th C.) recorded at Eweslees on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1787–1797, appearing along with Hugo from 1788. It seems likely he is different from (but surely related to) the David who was at Blackhall at about the same time. In 1791 he subscribed to John Learmont’s book of poetry. David (18th/19th C.) wright at the Sandbed. He is recorded as owner of a horse in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick. His daughter Ann died in 1798. He could be the David who married Marion Thomline in Wilton in 1758 and had children Jean (b.1760), James (b.1762), Ann (b.1765), Andrew (b.1768), John (b.1772) and Margaret (b.1776). David (18th/19th C.) farmer at Dewyhaugh (in Teviothead Parish), when he paid the cart tax in 1791. He was also listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. David (1777/8–1851) born in Yarrow, he was shepherd at Flatt in Liddesdale and later at Hoscoesheiel, as well as being tenant in Redfordgreen. He married Jean, daughter of William Scott, ‘the Pether’, and she died at Bellendean in 1866, aged 86. Their children were: William (b.1804), farmer at Garwald Shiel and later Sailfoot, Moffat Water; Thomas (b.1806), who emigrated to America; Isabel (1808–35), who died at Redfordgreen; Helen (1811–87), who married Eskdalemuir shepherd Walter Beattie; George (b.1813), shepherd at Hardlee and Hynodie; Elizabeth (b.1818/9), who married blacksmith William Pow; Jean; Christina (b.1823/4), who married gamekeeper Thomas Rutherford; and another daughter, who married a farmer in Ettrick. He is buried at Borthwick Waas. David (18th/19th C.) member of East Bank Kirk. He married Jean Scott and their children included: Thomas (b.1806); Jean (b.1808); Betty (b.1818); and Mary (b.1820). David (18th/19th C.) member of East Bank Kirk. He married Jeany Weir and their children included: Jean (b.1806); Andrew (b.1808); Janet (b.1811); Janet (again, b.1813); Thomas (b.1815); and Charlotte (b.1818). David (b.1791/2) born in Langholm, he was farmer at Priesthaugh. He held a Scottish long-jump record. He was in the Chair for the Wisp Club dinner of 1844. He was also a subscriber to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He was probably related to Walter, who is recorded at Priesthaugh near the end of the 18th century or Robert who was recorded there in 1821. In 1851 he was listed as farmer of 45 arable acres and 2505 hill acres, employing 5 labourers. He was still there in the 1861 census, farming 3300 acres and employing 5 men. He married Christian Aitchison and their children included: Margaret (b.1824); Walter H. (b.1823/4); Charles William Douglas (b.1827); and David C. (b.1830/1). He could be the David, son of Hugh and Margaret Amos, born in Langholm in 1791. David Dun-das (b.1800/1) of Briery Yards, from Midlothian. He was a historian and friend of David Laing. He translated theological works, including Ranke’s ‘History of the Popes of Rome’. There was a publication of 1856 describing a local disagreement ‘Clerical Despotism and Synod of Justice, or True State of the Case between the Rev. J.A. Wallace, Free Church, Hawick, and David D. Scott, Esq., Briery-yards, &c.’ He chaired the centenary Burns night at the Commerical Inn in 1859. In 1861 he was living at Briery Yards, along with the official owner, Thomas Turnbull, for whom he was the main trustee. He was still recorded there in 1868. His wife was Mary C., and their children included Katherine J. and Elizabeth. David (19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Linton and their son Gideon was baptised in 1830. David (b.c.1810) stocking-maker in Wilton and Hawick. He was probably the David listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish, but living in Hawick in 1835 and 1840. He was David ‘Snr.’ at Dovemount on the 1841 census, living with David ‘Jnr.’ who was apparently just 5 years younger; he could be the warehouseman recorded at Dovemount in 1835 and in Hawick in 1840. He is probably the stockings maker David whose son Thomas died in Hawick in 1840. David (1834–1902) son of Thomas and Janet Notman, and grandson of wright James Scott. He was apprenticed to blacksmith John Manuel in Lilliesleat. He was living near Liverpool when he got married in 1859 and later lived at Ladylaw Place, then at Pathfoot and Damside. In 1861 he was recorded as a blacksmith living at Whitrope Tunnel along with other labourers; his wife and first child were in Ladylaw Place with his in-laws, wool-spinner Walter and Mary Riddell. In 1859 he married Janet, daughter of Walter Riddell. Their children were: Mary (1859–87), who married her cousin John Robson; Thomas (b.1864); and Janet (again, b.1866); and Jean (b.1869); Walter (b.1871), who also died young; Elizabeth (b.1876); and Ann Robson (1879–1947). The first 6 children were born in Hawick. In 1874 he emigrated to Ottawa, Canada with his family. He became head blacksmith at Gibson Quarry, Beamsville, Ontario. David (19th C.) mason at Bonchester Bridge. He was Parish Registrar in Hobkirk. He married Helen, daughter of Peter Bruce, who was born at Swinnie. David (19th C.) mason in Hawick. He was Cornet in 1865. In September of that year he had the added distinction of leading the procession up to the Town’s new water supply on the Allan. David (1942/3– ) born and raised in Hawick, he worked for the Hawick News and then the Cumberland Evening News, before starting at the Scotsman in 1968. He eventually became the Scottish Government editor for the newspaper, and in 1999 was awarded an O.B.E. for contributions to Scottish journalism. He was Common Riding Chief Guest in 1999. David ‘Davy’ (1958/9– ) attended Trinity and the High School, he became a housing director for Barratt’s. Regarded as one of the greatest Burns authorities in the Borders, he has been a highly sought-after speaker at dinners. He is an honorary member of Hawick Burns Club and the 1514 Club. He was Common Riding Chief Guest in 2016. Dickson (b.1804/5) from Melrose, he was a tailor in Newmill, recorded there in 1841, 1851 and 1861. His wife was Margaret, daughter of Thomas Borthwick, farmer at Newmill. Their children included Thomas (who worked as a miller), Alexander (a shepherd) and Jane (who may have married Mr. Bell, farmer at Wattaman, Dumfriesshire). Douglas Gordon (1896–1717) son of Thomas B., he was born in Hawick. He was educated at George Watson’s School and served as a 2nd Lieut. with the Royal Flying Corps. He died in a flying accident while training in Shropshire, misjudging the distance in a lopp-the-loop. He is commemorated on a memorial at the Riverdale Collegiate Institute in Toronto (where his parents lived) and also on the gravestone of his grandfather Walter Scott in Wilton Cemetery. Duncan (13th C.) son and heir of Michael of Balwearie, who may have been the ‘wizard’. He consented to his father’s gift to Dunfermline monastery, also confirmed by Alexander II in 1231. He also granted and consented to a further gift of lands in Fife and Perthshire, sometime before 1250 He had 2 sons: Sir Michael, 1st Laird of Balwearie; and Gilbert, who witnessed a charter in 1236. Duncan (13th/14th C.) son of Michael of Balwearie. He paid homage to Edward I in 1296, when he is recorded as ‘Duncanus Scotus”. Also in 1296 his wife Mary petitioned King Edward I for support after he was captured at Dunbar; he is there ‘Duncan le Escot’. In 1297/8 there is a record of expenses for his imprisonment in England. In 1310 he was part of an agreement for lands in Perthshire. Duthac (d.c.1491) recorded paying rent in ‘Uvir Argati’ in Doune in the period 1480–90, along with his wife Janet. His widow was still paying rent in 1492 and 1495. He was presumably named after the Scottish saint. It is unclear how he was connected with other Scotts. Ebenezer (b.c.1775) tenant at Burnflat in Hawick. He was selected for service in the Militia in 1799, but failed to appear and was later declared unfit for service. In 1841 he was listed as a woollen hand-loom weaver at Burnflat. His wife was Janet and their children included Robert, Gilbert and Agnes. Edmund (17th C.) recorded as servant and ‘officier’ to Walter Earl of Buccleuch. He was listed in the deceased Earl’s inventory in 1633, when he was owed for his fees. Probably the same Edmund is listed separately as ‘officier in Tiviotdail’. Edward (16th C.) recorded in a document in the Glasgow Cathedral chartulary in 1525. He appears to have been a Burgess of Glasgow. Elizabeth (15th C.) received 6 sheep in the will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme in 1491/2. She is listed among servants of the Laird. of Sir William. Elizabeth (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1527/8 as heir of the deceased Robert, who held lands in Selkirk. Elizabeth nee Ker (15th/16th C.) daughter of Walter Ker of Cessford. She firstly married Philip Rutherford, younger of that Ilk and secondly married Sir Walter of Branxholme. She long outlived her husband, who died in 1504. In 1510 she received the liferent of Deloraine and Warleshope. In 1539 she and her son Sir Walter sought to remove the tenants from their lands of Annelshope in Ettrick (which she held in liferent) and then she moved her own livestock there. She was described at that time as the ‘old lady of Buccleuch’. She was burnt to death within Catslack tower by Lord Grey and an English raiding party (supported by the Kers) in 1547. Elizabeth (16th C.) daughter of William and grand-daughter of the Sir Walter who was murdered in 1552. After her father’s death, her mother remarried to Sir Andrew Murray of Blackharony, and so she is sometimes referred to as Elizabeth Murray. According to a 1568/9 contract between Scotts and Kerrs (atoning for the murder) she had to marry the grandson of Sir Andrew of Hirsel, when he became 14 years of age. He was John, 2nd son of Sir Walter Kerr of Cessford. In fact she married John Carmichael of Meadowflat. Elizabeth nee Hay (16th/17th C.) wife of Walter, tenant in Essenside, son of ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden, who was killed on the Ettrick Water in about 1616. She was daughter of John Hay of Haystoun (or Smithfield) and was also known as Elspeth. She was involved in several years of legal battles to take action against the Scotts of Bonnington and Newhouse for her husband’s death. In 1619 she was among the people ordered to attend the court personally in the case regarding the murder of her husband. She secondly married William Scott of Salenside. In 1632 she renounced her claim to Alemoor, and in 1647 assigned some lands to her son James. Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (17th C.) daughter of George of Castleton. In 1632, along with her sisters Janet and Margaret, she was served ‘heir portioner’ to her father. Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (17th C.) one of the daughters of Robert of Alton. In 1653 she and her sisters Margaret and Agnes were served heirs to their ‘foir grandsher’ (probably great-grandfather) Robert in half of the East Mains of Hassendean. Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (17th C.) daughter of George, who was brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade. In 1660 she married Charles Lauder from Wind. In 1670, she and her sister Anna were served heirs portioner to their father in the Barony of Maxton and associated lands. This included Borthwick Mains, Abbotrule, Bowsetside, Grange, Fodderlee, Over and Nether Bonchester, Macksdie, Gatehousecote, Hartshaug, Langraw, Raperlaw, Firith, Westbarns, Belses, Winnington, Winningtonhall, Parkhead, Horselee, Turn, Acreknowe, Swinestead, Dodburn, Kirkwood and Langnewton. Presumably they sold the superiority of these lands shortly afterwards. Elizabeth (17th C.) resident of Midlem. In about 1684 she was on a list of Covenantant fugitives. Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (17th C.) resident of Headshaw in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor’. Elizabeth (17th C.) listed among the poor people living at Dryden in Ashkirk Parish, who were unassessed for the hearth tax in 1694. She is distinct from Bessie, who lived at Headshaw. Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (17th C.) recorded as ‘cottage’ at Town o’ Rule on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (17th C.) resident at Mabonlaw, recorded among the poor of Wilton Parish in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (17th C.) married James Riddell, who farmed at Wiltonburn. Her husband was renting 1/4 of Wiltonburn from the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1690, but she was listed as his widow renting 1/3 in 1694. She may have been closely related to Robert Scott and John Scott, who were also farmers at Wiltonburn in 1694. Elizabeth of Mangerston (17th/18th C.) sister of Francis of Mangerton and hence probably daughter of Sir Francis. Her brother was Chamberlain to the Duchess of Buccleuch for Eskdale. She prepared the accounts for her brother in the year 1696–97, by which time he was presumably deceased (or too ill). She was served heir to her brother in 1700, inheriting the lands of Belford in Morebattle Parish, as... well as Thickside, Hartrigge and others in Jedburgh Parish. However, nothing else is known about her. Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (18th C.) tenant in Crawhill in Wilton Parish when she paid the window tax in 1748. She is recorded as ‘Mrs. Betty Scott’. It is unclear who her husband was or even whether her maiden or married name was Scott. However, she is surely related to John Scott, who was living at Crawhill in 1751. Elizabeth (18th C.) recorded as witness to a baptism in Hawick Parish in 1761. The couple were Walter Cavers and Margaret Scott (who was probably related to her). It was very rare for a woman to act as a witness, so there is probably a story here. Elizabeth ‘Betty’ nee Rutherford (1729–89) daughter of David Rutherford of Capelhope and Margaret, daughter of Robert Rutherford of Fairnilee. She was a niece of Alison Cockburn, who wrote a version of ‘Flowers of the Forest’. When younger she was attached to a man who drowned on a passage to Ireland, so she remained single for much of her life. However, in 1768 she married Walter of Wauchope. She was noted as an artist and poet, her collected poems ‘Alonza and Cora’ being published posthumously in 1801. In 1787 Burns visited the house on his Border Tour. She had sent him a verse epistle offering him a ‘marled plaid’ in appreciation of his work, and he replied by composing the ‘Epistle To Mrs. Scott, Gudewife of Wauchope-House’. His notebook describes how ‘she possessed all the sense, taste, intrepidity of face, and bold critical decision which usually distinguish female authors’. She was apparently a friend of Dr. Blacklock, Allan Ramsay and Allan Cunningham. She died a couple of years after Burns visit, it being said that ‘the activity of her mind has destroyed a strong constitution’. Elizabeth ‘Betty’ nee Dickson (1757–1838) daughter of Archibald of Hassendeanburn and Huntlaw. She was born in Minto Parish. She married Charles, 3rd Laird of Wauchope and had 6 boys plus 3 girls. She is probably the Mrs. Scott of Wauchope recorded living on Buccleuch Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. Her portrait was painted by Sir John Watson Gordon when he was young. Elmer see Ailmer. Esther (17th C.) daughter of ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden, she married Elliot of Falnash and then George Langlands of that Ilk. Esther (1772/3–1855) listed as ‘independent’ and ‘annuitant’ in the 1841 and 1851 censuses, at about 5 High Street. She lived along with her younger sister Sarah, who also died unmarried in 1855. It seems likely they were daughters of Andrew and Beatrix Turnbull, with siblings Robert (b.1762), Ann (b.1765), Thomas (b.1767), Ann (b.1770) and Martha (b.1775). Their father is probably Bailie Andrew, merchant of Hawick, and the property is probably the ‘A. Scott’ on Wood’s 1824 map. Ewen (15th C.) son of John, he acted as a Ranger for James II, like his father. However, it is unclear to which branch of the family they belonged. From 1440 his name is recorded as ‘Eugenio Scot’ and associated with lands in Arran and Bute. His name last occurs in 1451. Francis (16th/17th C.) described as ‘natural son’ of John Scott, ‘called of Tuschelaw’ (i.e. Tushielaw) in a charter of 1618. His father was son of Sir Walter of Tushielaw, infamous for killing Walter of Gamescleuch in 1609. Francis of Woll (d.bef. 1643) eldest son of Robert of Woll. He was recorded as Laird in 1627. However, he was succeeded by his brother James by 1643, and so presumably died without heirs of his own. Francis (17th C.) shepherd who was son of Adam in ‘Schaws’ (or Shawes) and grandson of Robert of Gilmancleuch. He is mentioned by Scott of Satchells in his postral. Francis of Synton (d.c.1646) 4th son of Walter ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden. He was brother of Sir William of Harden, Hugh (who started the Scotts of Gala), Walter (in Essenside), Margaret (who married Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs), Esther (who married Elliot of Falnash and secondly George Langlands of that Ilk), Janet (who married Thomas Scott, later Laird of Whitslade) and Margaret (who married David Pringle of Gala); so he was locally very well connected. He is described as ‘in Howfuird’ and later as ‘of Sinton’. In 1610 he was named along with his father and brothers when Gilbert Elliott of Horsleyhill (later of Stobs) was cautioner for them not to harm Walter Scott in Hawick, called Todshawhill, and his associates. He assisted in managing the Buccleuch estates. In 1617 he was recorded among supporters of the Scotts of Harden who Lady Bonnington complained had attacked her family (as part of a feud between the Harden and Bonnington Scotts); his brothers William and Hugh were also listed. In about 1618 he was listed among men who had illegally used hagbuts and pistols in Ettrick Forest. In 1619 he was among the people ordered to attend the court personally in the case regarding the murder of his brother Walter. In 1624 he married Isobel, sister of Sir Walter Scott of Whitslade. In 1627 he purchased the Synton estate from his distant cousin George (their great-grandfathers had been brothers), thus starting a new line of the Scotts of Synton, which would become the Corse Scotts. In 1633 he was appointed one of the ‘Tutors Testamentary’ to oversee the Earl of Buccleuch’s will. He signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. In 1641 he purchased most of the lands of North Synton from the Veitch family, thus enlarging the estate. In 1643 he was on the Commission of Supply for Selkirkshire and in 1643, 1644 and 1646 he was on the Committee of War for Selkirkshire. He was recorded in 1643 as owner of the lands of Easter Essenside (valued at £200), the west side of North Synton (£208), the east side of North Synton (£338) and Birkwood (£200). His children were: William, who succeeded; Margaret, who married William Scott of Tushielaw; Francis (b.1633); Walter; Elspeth; Isobel (or Isabel); Agnes; Helen; Christian; and Grizel. Note that these generations are somewhat uncertain, although it seems he was succeeded by his son William, and then his grandson John. Some of his daughters were named in 1665 when their mother made a disposition for the monies owed to her through her marriage contract. In 1662 his son Francis was appointed as guardian for John (later of Synton), son of his son William of Synton. Francis of Castleside (d. bef. 1669) probably grandson of George ‘of Castlesyde’ (and hence great-grandson of ‘Auld Wat o Harden’). Castleside was inherited by the 3 daughters of George of Castleside, namely Janet, Margaret and Bessie in 1632, and he must have inherited it (or bought it from) them sometime before 1636. He bore the Earl of Buccleuch’s gauntlets at his funeral procession at Hawick in 1634. In 1638 he was ‘in Casthillsyde’ when he signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick. In 1639 he complained to Ashkirk Session that his mother-in-law Margaret Scott of Castleside had called him a ‘thief and traitour’, and that he ‘maliciously and unreverently ractt and ruggit her from her said seat’ in the church; presumably an argument over the family seat in the kirk, and a son who did not get along with his mother-in-law! It is possible she was the daughter of George of Castleside from whom he inherited the lands. In 1641 he had a ‘letter or inhibition’ against Gavin Cessford of Westhouses for fraud against him, the case heard in Melrose. He is also mentioned in another Melrose case of 1642. He could be the Francis who witnessed a baptism in Ashkirk in 1652. He may be the man recorded as ‘Castleside for Newtoune’ (presumably Newton farm) who paid the land tax in Hassendean Parish for £156 in 1663; he also paid tax on £160 in Ashkirk Parish for Castleside. He was recorded as granter in a deed of 1663. He is on a list of landowners in Hassendean Parish in 1666. His widow Isobel (presumably Scott) was ‘liferentrix’ of Westhouses and Gattonside in a document of 1669. Francis (1626–51) 2nd Earl of Buccleuch, son of Walter, the 1st Earl. He succeeded when still a minor and so had some of his male relatives as ‘tutors’. Specifically, in 1634 he was served heir to his father in the lands and Baronies of Branxholme, Buccleuch, Eckford, Lanton, Whitchester, Lemptitlaw, Rankible, Eilrig and Kirkurd (united into the Barony of Branxholme), the Barony of Hailis (which included Alemoor), as well as lands in Ettrick and Yarrow, Greenwood and the Lyne, Teindside, Harwood, Slaidhills, Carlinpool, Porterslands in Grahamslaw, the Monk’s Tour in Hassendean, the lands of the Lordship of Melrose, the Baronies of Wilton, Chamberlain Newton and Town Yetholm, the Lordship of Liddesdale, including the Castle of Hermitage, the advowson of the Kirk of Hawick and other lands in Haddington, Edinburgh, Berwick, Selkirk, Dumfries and Lanark, combined into the Barony of Hailes. In 1636 he was a student at St. Andrews, then at St. Leonard’s College until 1642. His wardship and marriage rights were granted to the Earl of Stirling, although his widow gave these up in 1642 for a large payment. He was present at the Parliament of 1641 when only 14 years old. He purchased the Lordship of Dalkeith from the Earl of Morton in 1642. Also in 1642 he was named to a commission that was charged to apprehend and try a large number of Borders men accused of being ‘notorious criminals, thieves and ressetters of thift’. In 1643 he loaned 9000 merks to the Collector General of Scotland. In a county valuation of 1643 he was the landowner with the highest yearly value in Hawick Parish (about ¼ of the total, amounting to £6311 3s 4d) and also almost half the total in Wilton Parish, as well as more than half of Castleton Parish, a third of Cavers Parish and about a quarter of Hassendean Parish. He was one of the men appointed as Colonels of Foot for Roxburgh and Selkirk in 1643 (when only 17) and was also on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire in 1644. New colours were made for his regiment in 1644, and this could be the ‘Bellenden Banner’. In 1644 he complained about the number of men he was being asked to supply to the army. As part of the Covenanter army his regiment took part in the storming of Newcastle in 1644 and he was also at Marston Moor. In 1645 he was appointed Judge over a large fraction of Roxburghshire, including the Lordships of Liddesdale, the Debateable Land etc., Ewesdale, Ashkirk, Hassendean, Cavers and Hawick, with the power to appoint courts. He received a charter of the Lordship of Liddesdale in 1647. In 1646, 1648 and 1649 he was on the Committee of War for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire. He was a heritor of Wilton Church as well as presumably of Hawick. In 1647 he was made Sheriff Principal of Selkirkshire. In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, Dumfries and Annandale. He was also at the 1649 Parliament that repealed the acts of the ‘Engagement’. In 1560 he resigned his baronies of Brancholme, Hassendean and others in favour of himself and his heirs, including provision for inheritance through any female heir, whose husband would have to take the surname Scott. Also in 1560 he was one of the commissioners appointed to welcome Charles II to Scotland, although his castles at Newark and Dalkeith were possessed by Cromwell. He went further north for safety, but died at Dalkeith ‘after a short illness’ (which is not specified), before reaching his 25th birthday. He was one of the last Scottish noblemen to adhere to the Royalist cause, even when it was clearly hopeless. He was buried in Dalkeith Church (and not in Hawick, like his forebears). He married Lady Margaret Leslie, 2nd daughter of the 6th Earl of Rothes, who was widow of Alexander, Lord Balgonie. She was nominated as one of the ‘tutors’ for his children, should he die before her, and she later married the Earl of Wemyss (becoming the Countess of Wemyss). Scott of Satchells is not very complimentary when he writes ‘These infants sweet were left to their guardians to keep, Their tutors oft suffered controul, Their mother was so impudent That she must always have her intent’ [CWS]. His children included: Mary (b.1647), who succeeded him; Walter (b.1648), who died in infancy; Margaret (b.1650), who also died young; and Anna (b.1651), who succeeded after her sister’s death. For years after his death there were efforts by his tutors to reduce the huge fine imposed on the family for his support of Charles, claiming that he had served in a Parliamentary Regiment in 1643 and acted against the ‘Engagement’ in 1648 – ‘And he began to talk anon, Of good Earl Francis, dead and gone … ’ [SWS]. ‘Earl Francis his father Earl Walter did succeed, Into his earldom but not his head; Yet he wanted neither hand, head, nor heart, But could not act like to his father’s part’ [CWS], ‘He had no Heirs-male, but Daughters left behind, For to enjoy his great Earldom and Land’ [CWS]. Francis (17th C.) schoolmaster of Hassendean, probably father of the last minister of the Parish, Rev. Francis. Nothing else appears to be known about him. Francis of Mangerton (d.c.1640) illegitimate son of Walter, 1st Earl of Buccleuch, with an unknown mother. In 1635 he had a charter of the lands of Mangerton from his nephew Francis, Earl of Buccleuch. His daughter Elizabeth married Sir John Scott, 1st Baronet of Ancrum, and he had another daughter, Marie. He was succeeded by his brother William. He died, was buried in Holland, and in 1648 there was still a dispute over the funeral costs between the Earl of Buccleuch and William of Mangerton (his brother). Francis of Newton (17th C.) listed as being ‘of Newingetoune’ when he signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. He was probably son or brother of John and Walter of Chamberlain Newton, who are recorded shortly before, and may have been father of Walter of Newton, who is recorded a little later (and perhaps grandfather of the later Francis of Chamberlain Newton). Francis of Carterton (17th C.) recorded on the Committee of War for Dumfriesshire in 1644 and 1649. He is also recorded in 2 deeds in 1663. He was probably father of Robert of Carterton. Francis of Shielwood (b.1638) eldest son of Walter of Shielwood. He is recorded in an inventory of writs of 1648 and in a discharge with Sir William Scott of Harden in 1663. He is said to have died not long after obtaining possession of his estates. He was succeeded by his younger brother, Robert. Francis (17th C.) younger son of Hugh of Gala. He is referred to as ‘brother-german’ of James of Gala in 1664 and 1665. He was given 300 merks Scots annually according to the will of Francis, Earl of Buccleuch in 1650, where he is described as ‘our servand’. Francis of Arkleton (17th C.) eldest son of Walter of Arkleton. He was brother of Robert of Harwood. In 1661 he was recorded still responsible for money that his father (as Chamberlain for Eskdale, Ewesdale, Wauchopedale and Eskdalemuir) owed to the Duchess of Buccleuch. He granted a bond to Isobel Ker, wife of George Douglas of Bonjedward in 1663 and was also recorded in 2 deeds that year. He sold Arkleton to Walter Elliot in 1669, with the consent of his mother Anna. In 1664 he married Isobel, daughter of William Elliott of Stobs. Francis of Phaupa (17th C.) described as ‘of Phaopae’ in 1657 in a factor’s extract to Sir William Scott of Harden and another to his brother Capt. John Scott in 1671. He was a Colonel serving in Brussels in 1666. He was probably brother to Adam, who became a gunsmith’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1671, and in which case his father was Robert. He paid tax on land valued at £526 13s 4d in Selkirkshire in 1678. James of Phaup, recorded in 1682, may be his son. Sir Francis of Mangerton (d.1672) eldest son of William. He inherited the lands of Mangerton and others from his father in 1648. This probably included Hartragge in Jedburgh Parish. He may have been a minor when he succeeded; there is a record of discharge to his curators in 1667. However, he appears to have already been acting as Chamberlain to the Scotts of Buccleuch for Eskdale in at least the period 1661–72. In 1663 he was appointed as a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He was succeeded by his son Francis, who was served as his heir in 1675. The name of his wife is unknown; it was probably his mother (not his wife) who was the Lady Mangerton listed on the Land Tax Rolls of 1663 (but possibly from earlier). Francis (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Bridges and their children included: Janet (b.1673); Archibald (b.1676); Bessie (b.1678); Thomas (b.1680); Adam (b.1681); Isobel (b.1684); and Andrew (b.1687). The witnesses in 1678 and 1680 were William Bridges and William Swan. Francis of Grassyards (17th C.) recorded in 2 discharges to the Burgh of Selkirk in 1678 and another in 1681. An undated account in Selkirk discusses ‘the mony was borrowed from Grassyeards’. Also in 1688 there was an assignation of debt owed to him by the Burgh of Selkirk. In 1691 he was assignee to Sir Patrick Murray of Deuchar in another discharge in Selkirk. He may be the brother of James Scott of Shielswood referred to by Walter Scott of Satchells in the lines ‘Honest James Scot of Shiels-wood, Whose like there is not many, . . . Of his Genealogie I will speak no more. Because his Brother Grass-yards is set down before’. Francis of Gilmancleuch (17th C.) son of John. He is recorded in deeds of 1663, 1673 and 1682. He was served heir to his father in 1686. He became Commissioner of Supply (for Selkirkshire) in 1685 and was succeeded by John, probably his son. Also in 1685 he had a marriage contract with Margaret Bertram, widow of Alexander Russell. The Ettrick Shepherd wrote that he was often in his (Hogg’s) grandfather’s house. Francis (d.c.1688) tenant in ‘Vaills’ when his will was recorded in one of the counties of Peebles, Roxburgh or Selkirk. It is unclear where this was (perhaps Valesburn or Wells, or possibly Walls in Dumfriesshire). Francis of Langshaw (d.c.1690) younger son of Patrick of Kirkstyle and Langshaw, and younger brother of Sir John of Ancrum. He witnessed a document for Anna Duchess of Buccleuch in 1662. He is recorded in a deed of 1673. In 1669 and 1673 he is listed as son of Patrick of Langshaw when he witnessed 3 charters for the commissioners of the Duke and Duchess of Buccleuch. Documents relating to the ‘mulltures’ of Langshaw mention from around 1670 to 1675. He purchased the lands of Broadwoodshiel in 1672. He obtained crown charters of Langshaw (in Melrose Parish) in 1674 and 1690. He paid land tax on Langshaw in 1678. He is listed among the heritors of the Regality of Melrose in 1682, and is recorded in cases held in Melrose in 1684. He was succeeded by his son, Walter, who was served by another son, Thomas. In 1690 Walter was served heir to his lands of Falnash, Tanlaw Naze, Calfshaw and Langhaugh in the Parish of Hawick. Thomas was served as his heir to Langshaw and other lands in 1695. Francis (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish, when it contained Hassendean. He married ‘Giles’ Murray in 1683 and their children included Francis (b.1687), with witnesses Richard Thomson and Andrew Deans. He is probably the same as one of the other Francises, e.g. the one later recorded at Wester Groundstone. Francis of Mangerton (d.c.1696) son of Sir Francis. There is a marriage contract of 1672 between him and Christian Kerr, involving the annual rent of Nether Mangerton. He was recorded in a deed of 1673. He was served heir to his father in 1675. In 1678 he paid the land tax for Calroust in Morebattle Parish and ‘eastrige thicksyde and his lands in ulstoun’ in Jedburgh Parish. He was also the ‘Laird of Mangerstain’ who paid the land tax on £1280 in Castleton Parish in 1678. In 1684 there is a document relating to a bond with Sir Patrick Scott of Ancrum, nephew of his sister. His wife, ‘Lady Mangerton’ was among the heritors fined in 1684 for refusing to accept Episcopalianism. In 1682 he was listed among the heritors of the Regality of Melrose (where he is ‘Sir Francis Scott of Mangerstane’). He was probably the Laird of Mangerstane who paid the land tax on £1280 in 1695. He served as Chamberlain to Scott of Buccleuch for Eskdale from 1692–95. In 1692 and 1694 he served as a Commissioner for assessing the rentals for the Duchess of Buccleuch. His sister Elizabeth prepared the accounts for 1696–97, by which time he was deceased. She was served as his heir in 1700, inheriting the lands of Belford in Morebattle Parish, as well as Thickside, Hartrigge and others in Jedburgh Parish. Capt. Francis (17th C.) younger son of Sir Gideon of Highcheister, and brother of Walter, Earl of Tarras. In 1690 he was involved in a bizarre court case in which Jean Weymss accused him of injuring her finger so that it had to be amputated. He could be the brother of the Earl of Tarras who is recorded serving in Buchanan’s regiment in Holland in 1688. He was ‘brother to the deceas’d earl of Tarras’ in 1695 when he contributed £100 to the Darien Scheme. In 1697 he leased the farm of Todshawhill from the Scotts of Buccleuch. Francis (17th C.) rented the farm of Whithope from the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1690, 1692 and 1694. Gideon of Falnash served as his cautioner in 1692 and 1694, suggesting a family connection; it is possible he was even Gideon’s brother, Francis of Greenhill. Francis (17th C.) listed as tenant at Dean Mill on the Langlands estate in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He may have been related to William, who was a cottar there. Perhaps the same Francis was recorded at Timespherdemill in 1697 when his daughter Helen was baptised; his wife was also a Scott. The witnesses in 1697 were Adam in Overhall and John in Wiltburn. Francis (17th C.) listed ‘eist the water’ in Hawick in the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He is listed separately from the minister of the same name. Francis (17th C.) resident of the west-side of Hawick on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He seems likely to be the weaver listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. Francis (17th C.) resident of Wester Groundstone according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He is probably the same Francis recorded at Groundstone in 1696; his wife was also a Scott and their daughter Margaret was baptised in that year. The witnesses were James Scott and Robert Scott in Drinkstone. He may be the Francis who married Isobel Scott in Ashkirk in 1689. Helen (b.1697), baptised in Wilton, was probably also his daughter. It is unclear how he may have been related to other Scotts associated with Groundstone, e.g. George in Easter Groundstone. Rev. Francis (d.bef. 1716) probably son of schoolmaster Francis. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1659, was presented by John Turnbull, Laird of Minto to Minto Parish in 1664 and was minister there until 1678. He was then translated to Hassendean, where he was the last incumbent. He was a member of the Presbytery of Jedburgh in at least 1666. He may be the Francis who (along with Adam) witnessed a baptism for Robert Wait in Roberton Parish in 1688. He was deprived in 1689 for refusing to read the ‘Proclamation of the Estates’, i.e. refusing to give up Episcopacy, and continuing to pray for James VII after his abdication. An ‘instrument’ was brought against him by Robert Scott, younger of Hassendean and John Turnbull of Knowe, following his removal by the Privy Council. After being deprived he moved to Hawick, where he continued to preach to Episcopalians, along with Thomas Somerville, ousted minister of Cavers. This was probably on a secretive and informal basis until 1712, when the Act of Toleration was passed, and an Episcopal meeting house was opened at the Playlaw (or Kirkwynd). He may also have assisted Rev. John Langlands and Rev. John Somerville of Hawick. He may be the ‘Mr Francis’ who witnessed a baptism for Robert Scott of Horsleyhill in 1689. It is probably the ‘Mr Francis Scott’ listed ‘eist the water’ in Hawick on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He married Elspeth Buckham (or Buckholm) and their children were mostly baptised in Roberton Parish: Margaret (b.1680); James (b.1682); Francis (b.1684), who became a merchant in Hawick; and Isobel (b.1688). The witnesses in both 1684 and 1688 were James Scott and Thomas Gray. He died in Hawick and in 1716 his widow finally returned the church paraphernalia to Roberton, including bible, pulpit cloth, pewter vessels and session books. It is recorded that part of his tombstone still existed in 1879. Francis (17th C.) recorded in Borthwickbrae in 1687 when his son Robert was baptised in Roberton Parish. The witnesses were George ... (probably Scott) and Walter Scott. Given the dates, he is probably different from the Francis who married Giles Murray and also seems unlikely to be the minister of the same name. Francis (17th C.) recorded in 1685 as uncle to the Laird of Tushielaw (probably Walter, and hence brother of William). He was cautioner, along with his wife, Margaret Elliot, the Laird of Tushielaw’s mother, for the amounts collected by David Scott, the Laird’s brother. He may be the same Francis, who along with David, were referred to as brother’s of the deceased Laird of Tushielaw in 1676, when they were in a court case in Melrose. Francis (b.1633) younger son of Francis of Synton and brother of William of Synton. In 1662 he was appointed as guardian for his nephew John (later of Synton), son of his brother William. Francis of Gorrenberry (d.1689) son of John of Gorrenberry and grandson of Walter, 1st Earl of Buccleuch. He was Chamberlain to Scott of Buccleuch for Morton and Canonbie in 1660–61.
and for Liddesdale and Canonbie in 1665–70. He was recorded as Chamberlain to the Countess of Buccleuch in a deed of 1663. Also in 1663 he was appointed a Justice of the Peace and in 1685 was a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. In 1670 he was served heir to his father in the lands of Adderstone and Adderstoneshie. In 1678 he paid the land tax on £1600 in Castleton Parish (presumably for Gorrenberry) and £900 in Kirkton Parish (this was probably for Adderstoneshie and Adderstonelee). He was mentioned when his son Andrew became a surgeon’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1692. The ‘Lady Garinberry’ fined in 1684 for refusing to yield to Episcopalianism was probably his wife. In 1668 he married Anna (or Penelope), youngest daughter of Sir John Wauchope of Niddrie; the dowry was 10,000 merks. His daughter Anna married Archibald Douglas of Cavers, while his son Charles witnessed the wedding of the Earl of Tarra. He was succeeded by his eldest son John. He may be the Scott of Gorrenberry whose daughter Marion married Sir James Don, 2nd Baronet. Francis of Chamberlain Newton (17th C.) probably son or grandson of the earlier Francis of Newton. In 1690 he was one of the main instigators in the crowd trying to prevent the removal of Hassendean Kirk’s roof. He is probably the Laird whose estate is described as ‘Neutons Lands’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls for Hassendean Parish; he paid tax on 7 hearths for ‘His hous at Meitchels’ (presumably Midshiels). He is probably the Francis ‘of Newtoun’ who was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1696 and 1704. He was recorded as ‘Laird of Newton’ in baptismal records of 1705, 1707 and 1709. His children included: Mary (b.1705); Robert (b.1707); and Gideon (b.1709). when his daughter Mary was baptised, The witnesses in 1705 were Robert of Hassendean and Francis of Alton, in 1707 they appear to have been 2 other Francis Scotts and in 1709 were Robert of Hassendean and William Ogilvie of Hartwoodmyres. Other children of his (also baptised in Wilton) may have been Isobel (b.1703) and Janet (b.1707). Probably the same Francis of ‘Chamberland Neutoun’ married Alison Langlands (perhaps daughter of Rev. John) in 1713; she was from Jedburgh Parish. Francis (17th C.) listed among the ‘Cottars’ living at Hassendean on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Sir Francis (1645–1712) 1st Baronet of Thirlestane, son of Patrick of Tarnlawhill. He was created a Baronet of Nova Scotia in 1666 and was served heir to his father in 1667, including lands in Rutherford, Nether Crailling, Smailholm, Bowerhope, Gamescleuch, Kirkhope and the town of Selkirk. He was further served heir to his father in 1676, in the lands of Fingland, ‘Tamuthar’, Dumfelding, Davington and Nether Cassock. He was also served heir to his brother Walter in 1667. He was surely the Francis, son of Patrick of Thirlestane, who was Chamberlain to Scott of Buccleuch for Ettrick Forest 1660–62 (although he would have been very young, or his year of birth is incorrect). It is said that he came to the assistance of his distant cousin Francis of Davington, to protect him from his tutor’s son, John of Rennaldburn (who was trying to encroach upon him during his minority). It is also said that he narrowly escaped being implicated in the Rye House Plot. He paid £1000 for tax on his lands in Dumfriesshire in 1671. He paid tax on lands (although it is unclear which ones, this surely included Langhaugh) in Hawick Parish valued at £850 in 1678, as well as paying for Rutherford in Maxton Parish. He is probably the Scott of Thirlestane fined £2776 in 1680 for being a supporter of the Covenanters. In 1682 he was listed among the heritors of the Regality of Melrose. In 1678 he was he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire, in 1685 and 1690 for Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire and in 1704 for Selkirkshire. He was Selkirkshire Commissioner to Parliament (i.e. M.P.) 1669–74, 1685–6 and 1693–1702. In 1684 he was one of the men appointed as a commissioner in Selkirkshire for prosecuting Covenanters. In 1689 he was appointed Captain of the western regiment of Miltia. He contributed £1000 to the Darien Company in 1695. Also in 1695 he was served heir to his brother Walter’s lands in Upper Teviotdale, explicitly Rasehigein, Howpasley, Easter and Wester Hislop, Langhaugh, Commonbrae and Ramsaycleuch. He is listed on a tax document for the Lordship of Melrose in 1700. In 1704 he was appointed Master of Works. In 1673 he married Henrietta, 6th daughter of William Kerr, 3rd Earl of Lothian; she died in 1741, aged 90. They had 5 sons and 4 daughters, but only 2 survived childhood: Sir William, who succeeded; and Henrietta, who was 4th wife of William, 12th Lord Ross. An unnamed child of his was buried in Greyfriars in Edinburgh in 1686. Another son may have been John, listed as ‘son to Thirlestane’ when he contributed £100 to the Darien Scheme in 1695. Francis of Colmslie (17th C.) recorded in 1679 in an Edinburgh court case. He was among a party of Melrose men who were returning from Bothwell Bridge when they set upon John Drurie of Grange. He is also mentioned in Regality of Melrose records in 1670 and 1682. He was cautioned for Patrick Scott, writer in Edinburgh (and probably the same as Patrick of Langshaw), for a bond in 1678, suggesting that they were closely related. He is listed separately from Francis of Langshaw on a list of Regality of Melrose heritors in 1682 (showing they are not the same man). Francis of Greenhill (17th C.) younger son of Robert of Harwood. His brothers included Walter of Harwood, Gideon of Fahnash and William, apothecary in Hawick. He paid the land tax in Hownam Parish in 1678 (for land valued at over £400, but which lands are not listed). He was fined £800 Scots in 1680, essentially for being a Covenanter supporter. Francis of Davington (d.1706) only son of Sir John of Thirlestane (who had not succeeded to the Thirlestane estates). He was still a minor when his father died in 1666, his ‘tutor and curator’ being John of Newburgh. It is said that his tutor’s son John of Renaldburn tried to exert undue influence on his affairs, and so his distant cousin Francis of Thirlestane came to his rescue. His other curators were Sir William of Harden, Sir Gideon of Highchester, Patrick of Thirlestane, Walter of Goldielands, Thomas of Whitlsade and Sir James Johnstone of Wester Raw. It was said that he was ‘a man of weak understanding’. He spent some time in Dalkeith tolbooth in 1695 for failing to provide for his step-mother, Margaret Scott and Walter of Burnfoot. In 1679 he married Margaret, daughter of Robert Douglas of Auchintully. Their children were: John of Davington, who succeeded, but died without children; Robert of Davington, who succeeded his brother; William, who had a farm from the Scotts of Buccleuch and whose son William lived at Moffat; Francis, who also had a farm from Scott of Buccleuch; James, whose son was Robert at Binks, who provided a family genealogy in 1792: David; Anne; and Mary, who married Rev. John Liston, minister of Aberdour. Francis (b.1684) son of Francis, last minister of Hassendean and Elspeth Buchan. He was a merchant in Hawick. He could be the merchant who (along with Robert, another merchant) witnessed a baptism for carter Walter Bryson in Hawick in 1721. Francis (17th/18th C.) brother of William of Horsleyhill. He is recorded becoming a surgeon’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1696. He is probably the same as the ‘Dr. Scott’, brother of Scott of Horsleyhill, who was one of the guests cited for being at the ‘supernumerary marriage’ of John Hardie and Isobel Aitkin in Hawick in 1706. He may have succeeded his brother and could be the Francis of Horsleyhill who had a charter in 1712 for ‘the lands of Belfoord commonly called Mowtown’ and ‘the four merkland of Weymsland’ (probably Weensland). In a 1710 land valuation of Hawick Parish his lands of Weensland were valued at £264. He was father of Capt. Robert of Horsleyhill. He is probably the Francis of Horsleyhill who was involved with transfer of lands of Belford (formerly called Mowtown) with his father Robert. Francis (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elizabeth Ainslie (from the Ainslies of Blackhill) and their children included Robert (b.1712). Francis (17th/18th C.) resident of Harwood in Hawick Parish. His daughter May was baptised in 1720, with witnesses John Chisholme, preacher and Caerlenrig and Gideon of Harwood (who may have been related to him). He may be the Francis who married Jean Elliot in Hawick in 1711. Other children, baptised in Hawick, who may be his are Francis (b.1711) and William (b.1714), Francis (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1704 he was at Mervinslaw, when his name is recorded as ‘Francie’. His children included Gideon (b.1704); Robert (b.1707) and Janet (b.1709). He could be one of the Francis who witnessed a baptism for Francis of Newton in 1707. Francis (17th/18th C.) miller at West Burnfoot, probably in Wilton Parish. A baptism of his servant William Goodfellow is recorded in 1711. Francis (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1717 he married Isobel Paterson and their children included: William (b.1718); George (b.1720); James (b.1722); Francis (b.1724); George (b.1726); and Isobel (b.1729). Francis (17th/18th C.) recorded as late Dean of Guild in Selkirk in 1723. Perhaps the same Francis was recorded as Treasurer in Selkirk in 1717–18. Francis (1687–1769) 4th son of Francis of Davington. He led the legal battle against the Napier of Thirlestane to recover his family estates, eventually taking the case to the House of Lords, but without success. It was said that he had a farm on good terms from the Scotts of Buccleuch. He had one known child, Agnes (1723–90), who was unmarried. He died at Holm, practically bankrupt by the legal battle he had championed. Francis (17th/18th C.) wigmaker in Selkirk, recorded in 1723. He may have been related to the later wigmaker of Hawick of the same name. Francis (d.bef. 1737) messenger in Selkirk. He married Marion Darling and their children included Bessie (b.1706) and Francis (b.1716). In 1719 his wife brought a case against him in Selkirk for assault and abuse. In 1737 his widow and daughter Agnes were involved in a debt case in Selkirk. Francis (1695–1751) 2nd Duke of Buccleuch, son of James, Earl of Dalkeith and grandson of the 1st Duke and Anne Scott, whom he succeeded. He was only the second in his family in 260 years to be of full age at succession. Before succeeding he was known as Lord Scott of Whitchester and then Earl of Dalkeith after the death of his father. In about 1720 he became engaged to Lady Jane Douglas (only sister of Archibald, Duke of Douglas), but the match was broken off, and it is said he fought a duel with her father as a result. In 1725 he was made a Knight of the Thistle. He was confirmed in the Baronies of Hassendean, Sheriffdom of Selkirk, etc. in 1731. In 1738 he purchased Over Hassendean from Archibald Douglas of Cavers.

The titles of Baron Tindale and Earl of Doncaster (which had belonged to his grandfather) were restored by Pariliament in 1743. He was a Scottish Representative Peer in Parliament 1733–41, Grand Master of the Freemasons in 1723/4 and made a Fellow of the Royal Society. In 1745 he called out his tenantry to support the citizens of Edinburgh against Charles Edward Stuart. When hereditary jurisdictions were abolished in 1747, he was compensated for losing the Regality of Hawick. He paid tax on 42 windows in Hawick Parish in 1748, perhaps for Drumlanrig’s Tower. Although his intended marriage with Lady Jane Douglas (only sister of Archibald, Duke of Douglas) did not take place, in 1720 he married another Lady Jane Douglas, eldest daughter of James, Duke of Queensberry; this is where the Queensberry title and lands came to the Scotts of Buccleuch. Their children were: Francis, Earl of Dalkeith (1721–50), who predeceased his father; Jane (1723–79), who died aged 56; Anne (1724–37), who died aged 12 and who has a monument to her memory at Hillingden, Middlesex; Mary (1725–43), who died aged 17; and Charles of Bowhill (1727–47), who died aged 20; He was succeeded by his grandson Henry. His 1st wife died of smallpox in 1729. In 1744 he secondly married Alice (who had been his mistress), daughter of Joseph Powell, but they had no children; she died in 1765, aged 63. However, he also had 6 children by Mrs. Sarah Atkinson, who he allowed for in his will, and possibly 4 children with Elizabeth Jenkins. Another son was Maj. Walter of Datchet, Buckinghamshire. Lady Louisa Stuart called him ‘a man of mean understanding and meaner habits’. He was buried in Eton Chapel next to his brother Henry. Francis (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Deans and their children included James (b.1724), Isobel (b.1727), Margaret (b.1728) and Isobel (b.1730). Perhaps the same Francis was tenant in New Woll in 1731 when he had a libel case for debt against James Scott, ex-Deacon of the Fleshers in Selkirk. Francis (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jean Miller in 1715 and their children included Margaret (b.1718) and Helen (b.1723). Francis (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish, recorded as tenant in Woll in 1724. He married Margaret Kedie and their children included Jean (b.1723), William (b.1724), Mary (b.1726), John (b.1728), John (again, b.1730), Anna (b.1732) and James (b.1733). Francis (1705–73) see Francis Napier. Francis (18th C.) recorded in Howdenhaugh near Selkirk in 1782. Capt. Francis James of Horsleyhill and Belford (18th C.) son of Col. Robert and Agnes Douglas. He was incorrectly named ‘John’ in Keith Scott’s genealogy. He was great-grandson of Robert of Horsleyhill who gained Weensland, Shaw and Burnflat in 1653. He was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1780 as ‘late of Horsleyhill, now of Belford’. He was still on the roll in 1788 and described as ‘An intimate of the Duke of Buccleuch’. Also in 1788 he was recorded as owner of the Belford in Morebattle Parish, valued at £1290 6s 8d (and the teinds of £233 6s 8d). He had a daughter who married Thomas Davidson, surgeon in Kelso. He was succeeded by his son Henry. He may be the Lt.-Col. Francis James who was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. Francis of Gorrenberry (18th C.) son of John. His sister Anne married Walter Scott of Harden. In 1729 he gave a bond for his sister to John, 2nd son of Walter of Harden. In 1750 he sold Adderstonelee and Adderstoneshiel to Capt. John Douglas, brother of Archibald, Laird of Cavers (who may have been a cousin of some sort); his factor for the transaction was George Grant. He appears to have been living at Nether Tofts when his children Charles (b.1716) and Archibald (b.1719) were baptised in Kirkton Parish. Little else is known about him, and he appears to have been the last Scott of Gorrenberry. He may be the Laird of Gorrenberry who was said to have been with the Jacobite army in 1745, meeting the Hobkirk Schoolmaster Sam Oliver (who had acted as guide) and leading him safely through the camp and past the Prince. Francis (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Briggs and their children included Walter (b.1735) and Henry (b.1737). Francis (1710–39) 2nd Earl of Deloraine, eldest son of Maj.-Gen. Henry, 1st Earl and Ann Duncombe. He was thus grandson of the 1st Duke of Buccleuch. When he was born he took the title Viscount Hermitage, which had been created for his father. On the death of his father in 1730 he became 2nd Earl of Deloraine, as well as 2nd Lord Goldielands. He held the rank of Cornet of Horse. He married Mary, daughter of Matthew Lister and secondly married Mary, daughter of Gervase Scrope. He died without issue at Bath and his titles passed to his younger brother Henry. Francis (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Henderson in Cavers Parish in 1733 and their children included Jean (b.1734). It is possible he is the same man as the Francis who earlier married Margaret Kedie. Francis (1721–50) Earl of Dalkeith, eldest son of Francis, 2nd Duke of Buccleuch. He also had the title of Lord Scott of Whitchester. He was great-grandson of Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch, and in 1731 he infefted him in several lands, including Nether Newhall (i.e. Burnfoot), Easter and Wester Hassendean, Gilmanscleugh, etc., as well as the lordship of Musselburgh. He was a lawyer, educated at Oxford University, and became M.P. for Boroughbridge, Yorkshire. He was made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick in 1748. In 1742 he married Caroline Campbell (1718–94), eldest daughter and co-heiress of John, Duke of Argyll and Greenwich. His wife was god-daughter of Queen Caroline, wife of George II. She survived him and remarried to Charles Townshend, Chancellor of the Exchequer, later becoming Baroness Greenwich. Through this marriage the Scotts of Buccleuch inherited the lands of Granton. His eldest son John, Lord of Whitchester (1745–49) died of smallpox, aged 4. His 2nd son Henry (1746–1812) became the 3rd Duke. His only surviving daughter, Lady Frances (1750–1817), married Archibald Douglas, 1st Lord of Douglas in 1783. Other children were: Campbell (1747–66), who died unmarried, aged 19; James (1748–58), died aged 9; and Caroline (1743–53), who died aged 10. He himself died of smallpox aged 29, predeceasing his father by about a year, and was buried at Dalkeith. Francis (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Elizabeth Lockie and their children included Janet (b.1742), Helen (b.1745), Elizabeth (b.1748), Mary (b.1751) and John (b.1753). Francis (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His children included: Christian (b.1739); Jean (b.1741); Francis (b.1749); Janet (b.1753); Thomas (b.1757); and Christian Smeal (b.1759). Francis of Alton (18th C.) recorded at Alton in 1722 when one of his children was baptised in Wilton Parish. He may be the Francis ‘of Alton’ who witnessed a baptism for Francis of Newton in 1705. He is probably also the Francis who is ‘younger of Altoun’ in a memorandum of 1708 (among the papers of the Douglases of Cavers). He was also ‘of Aldtown’ in a ‘search of incumbrances’ undertaken by John Hodge in 1742. It appears that he sold the lands of Alton (just north of Hawick) to John Horsburgh of that Ilk about 1742, with the agreement of his eldest lawful son Patrick. He was thus the last of the Scotts of Alton. It is unclear how he was related to the earlier Scotts of Alton. He married Anna Scott and their children included John (b.1722), with witnesses Thomas Kedie and George Scott (probably the George also recorded in Alton that year). He could be the Francis who (along with Patrick) witnessed a baptism in 1735 for James Beattie, resident of Borthaugh. Francis (18th C.) resident at Howclee in 1743 and 1757. The following children, baptised in in Roberton Parish, were probably his: James (b.1743); Margaret (b.1745); Walter (b.1748); Christian (b.1749); Margaret (b.1752); and Francis (b.1757). Francis (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Young in 1754 and their children included Jane (b.1760). Francis (18th C.) wigmaker and barber of 9 High Street. There is an existing sasine of 1764 in which he borrowed money from John and William Thomline, with his property as collateral. He later sold 9 High Street to Walter Wilson. His son Walter was made an Honorary Burgess. He could be the ‘Mr Francis Scott, Hawick’ on the subscription list for Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). In 1766 he (along with Robert of the Cross Keys) witnessed a baptism for James Rae and Agnes Scott (who was probably related to him). In 1767 he witnessed a baptism for merchant Adam (who may have been related). Francis (18th C.) resident of Hawick. In 1756 he married Janet Thomson and their son Francis was born in 1760. He may be the tobacconist Francis who witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Robert Oliver in 1757. Francis of Beechwood (1732–1803) 2nd surviving son of Walter of Harden, brother to the next Laird, who was also Walter. He was recorded in 1735 when his father had to define his heirs. He lived for a while in Bombay, where he was a merchant. For a few years, perhaps 1770–80, he held the superiority of the lands of Borthwickshields.
It is recorded in 1780 that he was struck off the voter’s roll in Roxburghshire, since he had lost his lands in the county. He was listed among the voters of Selkirkshire in 1788, but it was written that it was ‘believed will not take the oath’. In 1776 he married Mary (or perhaps Elizabeth), daughter of Sir Alexander Don of Newton. Their children were: Walter; Alexander, a minister, who succeeded; Francis, who died young; Charles, who died in Jamaica in 1805; Hugh, a Major in the East India Company; John, Lient. in the East India Company; William, in the Royal Navy; and Mary, who married Rear Admiral Thomas Foliott Baugh. Francis (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Grieve in 1763. Francis (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Betty Blair in 1771. Francis (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Mary Miller in 1784. Francis (18th C.) resident of Liliesleaf Parish. He could be the son of Francis baptised there in 1749. He was recorded as ‘Seceder’ in 1789 when his son George was baptised in Liliesleaf. Francis (18th/19th C.) tobacconist in Hawick. In 1811 he witnessed a baptism for tobacconist James (who may have been related). He may be the Francis, son of William who was baptised in Hawick in 1769 (and hence brother of James). Francis (b.c.1775) resident of Deanburnhaugh. In 1841 he was recorded as an agricultural labourer and parish pauper. He was living with Mary (probably his wife) and Francis (probably a grandson). Maj. Francis (1773–1813) 2nd son of John of Whitehaugh. He served with the 59th Regiment of Foot at the capture of the Cape of Good Hope and also in India. He also served in Spain and received a gold medal after the Battle of Vittoria in 1813, commanding the regiment there. He was killed leading the volunteers at San Sebastien. Francis (18th/19th C.) farmer at Eldinhope in the Yarrow valley. He lived to the age of 94. It is said that he still used a pony to ride the 10 miles to church when he was aged 90, the combined total of the ages of horse and rider being 120. He paid the horse tax (along with Walter) at Eldinhope in 1786 and the dog tax in 1797. It may have been his daughter Christian who married Alexander Scott, farmer in Ludhope. He was probably cousin of Charles and Walter Scott, farmers at Catslackburn, who also lived into their 90s. He is buried in the churchyard at St. Mary’s Loch. Francis Napier (1799–1884) twin brother of Alexander Pringle, he was born at Yair, and was the first of the twins born. His father was contractor George and his mother was Eleanor Inglis, who worked as a lady’s maid at Yair House; she attended Lady Napier ‘during confinement’ (perhaps also at Yair) and then was asked to stay on for her own childbirth. He was named after Lord Napier, who owned Wilton Lodge at the time of his birth, and hence must have had a connection with the family (perhaps as former employer of his mother). He was a framework knitter in Hawick, living at Wilton Kirkstyle and then on Wilton Place and Havelock Street. He was listed as head of household at Wilton Kirkstyle in 1840 and 1841 and is probably the warehouseman recorded at Gisbnose in 1835. In 1824 he married Janet (1802–52), daughter of John Oliver and Anne Neil; she was born in Ashkirk Parish and was sister of Isabella Oliver, wife of John White, who lived at Midshielis. Their children were: George (b.1826) and John (b.1827), who both died in infancy; John (again, b.1829), painter in Selkirk, who married Mary Wilson; Alexander (b.1830), who married Mary Ekron, and was a gasworks manager in Galashiels; Anne (1833–44); Lilias (1835–79), who married Adam Murray and went to Canada; George (again, b.1837), who married Elizabeth Miller Pringle; Isabella (1839–42); Francis (1841–1933), who married Hannah Bodimeade and Esther Hunter; Jessie (b.1844), who married joiner William Aimers; and Margaret (b.1846), who married grocer Andrew Blance. The last 2 children were baptised in Hawick Free Kirk. He died at 5 Slitrig Bank. A memorial in old Wilton Cemetery for him and his twin brother Alexander was erected by their sons. Francis (b.1803/4) originally from Canonbie, he was a clog and last-maker in Hawick. He was recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory on the High Street, on the Howegate in the 1837 directory, and on Allars Crescent in Slater’s 1852 directory. On the 1841 census he was listed on Silver Street and in 1851 and 1861 on Allars Crescent. He married Margaret Rutherford in Hawick in 1835. Their children were Alison, Thomas, Agnes, Francis, Margaret, Helen, William and Walter. Francis, M.P., see Francis Hepburne-Scott. Francis ‘Frank’ (1811–1873) known as ‘Uncle Braid’, he was fourth singer of ‘Teribus’ at the Common Riding. He was known as a fisherman and also wrote a small amount of verse. Francis Napier (1841–1933) born in Wilton Parish, son of Francis and Janet Oliver. He was a painter-decorator in Hawick, with his business premises and house at 26 High Street. In 1888 he discovered a sundial (a square block with 2 faces, dated 1683) built into one of the grates of 26 High Street. In Selkirk in 1867 he married Hannah Matilda (1844–68), born in Hendon, daughter of William Bodimeade, a blacksmith in Harrow in England and Hannah Odell; she was a teacher, and it is unclear how the couple met. They had a son, Francis William (b.1868), who was a Bailie; the mother died within a few months of this birth. In 1873 in Wilton he secondly married Esther, daughter of cabinetmaker John Hunter. Their children were: John (b.1874), who died young; Lilias, who also died young; Ella; Janet Oliver (b.1881); Jessie; Mary, who married Arthur Dunn, a civil servant in Edinburgh; and John Hunter, a dentist in Edinburgh. Bailie Francis William ‘Frank’ (1868–1947) painter-decorator at 26 High Street and Hawick Magistrate. He was son of Francis Napier, who was also a painter and decorator, and Hannah Bodimeade. He was one of the early members of the Callants’ Club, acting as President during the War years 1915–19. In 1906 he was the first to suggest that Hawick should have its own art gallery, so it was called the ‘Scott Gallery’ when finally built in 1975. He also instigated the erection of the Caa Knowe cairn, which was unveiled in 1911. In 1916 he proposed that the Callants’ Club lay a wreath at the Horse on 12th July to commemorate the fallen in Gallipoli. He was an active member of the Hawick Free Kirk (St. George’s) serving as Session Clerk 1899–1915. He travelled to the U.S.A. and is said to have brought back what was Hawick’s first record player. He married Isabella (1874–1915), daughter of Richard Edmondson. Their children were: Francis Napier (‘Napier’, b.1900); Elizabeth Kennedy (‘Lizzie’, b.1903); and Richard Edmondson (‘Dick’, b.1910). After his first wife died, he secondly married Mary Ann Rowe. He is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. Francis George ‘F.G.’ (1880–1958) 2nd son of George, a mill parts supplier in Bourtree Place and Janet, daughter of manufacturer Robert Greenwood. He was born in Hawick at 6 Oliver Crescent, and shared a birthday with Burns. It is said that his father insisted on a traditional religious upbringing, but his mother introduced him to Border ballads. He was educated at the High School and Teviot Grove Academy. He had piano lessons until he was 15, when his father thought it would interfere with his schoolwork. He was Dux Medalist in 1897, apparently arguing that a mistake had been made when he came second in the final exams. He went to Edinburgh University in 1897 to study English and train as a teacher, but abandoned his degree in the second year. He did teaching practice at Trinity in Hawick and taught briefly at Drumlanrig and then in Falkirk, before moving to Langholm (1903–12, where one of his pupils was Hugh MacDiarmid). He later taught at schools in Dunoon and Glasgow. He also studied for a music degree from Durham University. He studied composition under Jean Roger-Ducasse at the Paris Conservatoire. In 1925 he became lecturer in music at Jordanhill, and remained there until he retired in 1946. He also published some poetry (e.g. ‘On Border Hills’ in 1904). He became a close friend of the poet Hugh MacDiarmid and the painter William Johnstone (his cousin), with whom he tried to initiate a ‘Scottish Renaissance’; he set many of MacDiarmid’s poems to music, while Johnstone painted several portraits of him. He was musically influenced by Schönberg and Bartok, but tried to develop a Scottish style. He wrote more than 300 songs, many published in his 6 volume ‘Scottish Lyrics Set to Music’. He most often used traditional Scots words, with the musical style being contemporary folk art-music (about which opinions differ). He also wrote ‘Renaissance’ (a concert overture), ‘The Seven Deadly Sins’ (for full orchestra), ‘Cumha nan Laoch’ (‘Lament for Heroes’ for string orchestra) and ‘The Ballad of Kynd Kittock’ (for baritone and orchestra). His main local contribution is ‘Oor Bonnie Border Toon’, which he wrote while still in his teens. As a teacher he is said to have had a formidable presence, with a booming voice and piercing blue eyes. He is also said to have had a mischievous sense of humour. Although he was friendly with several other poets and artists, he seldom mixed with other musicians. He was awarded a doctorate by Glasgow University in 1957. He married Burgess Gray (a trained mezzo-soprano) of Fraserburgh and had 4 children: Francine; Lilias; George; and Malcolm. He died at his home in Glasgow and is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery (with the inscription being a quote from Walter Savage Landor, ‘Nature I loved, and, next to Nature, Art’). In 1980 a centenary plaque was unveiled at his birthplace, 6 Oliver Crescent, by the Saltire Society and the Archaeological Society, and replaced in 2018. A biography ‘Francis George Scott and the Scottish Renaissance’ was written by Maurice Lindsay in 1980. A collection of performances of his works, ‘Moonstruck’ was released in 2006. Francis Townsend ‘Frank’ (1940–2001) son of Dick and grandson of Bailie Francis. He was elected a Town Councillor at age 26, was later a Regional Councillor, and became Hawick’s first Honorary Provost 1977–82. He was appointed a Bailie and served as Justice of the Peace for 26 years, being Chairman of the Justices Committee. Mainstay of the Common Riding Committee for more than 30 years, he served as Secretary 1988–2001. He was also President of the Vertish Hill Sports Committee for 19 years and on the Committee for 40 years. In addition he was President of the Callants’ Club and of the Archaeological Society, as well as Transactions editor for many years. He updated the ‘Companion to Hawick’ (1998) and wrote a history of the Conservative Club. In his work as architectural technician he had a hand in several Hawick renovation projects. He is buried in the Wellogate and Frank Scott Court is named after him. A memorial seat on the Miller’s Knowes has an entrance pillar from East Bank Church as its base. Francis William (1962– ) son of Frank T. and Janet Hunter. A keen football player for Hawick United, Hawick Legion and Hawick Royal Albert, he scored over 100 goals for both the Legion and the Albert. He was Common Riding Secretary 2008–16, and has also served as President of the 1514 Club and the Mosstroopers’ Club. Gamel (13th C.) recorded in 1229, in an assize held at Newcastle. He was ‘Gamel Scot’ in relation to a tenement in ‘Chipches’ (presumably Chipchase). Gavin (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 in ‘the Wraa’ among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. He may have been from Wrae and was probably related to Adam who was from the same place. Geoffrey (13th C.) recorded as ‘Galfridium Scot’ when he was involved in a court case listed in the 1269 assize roll of Northumberland. He may be the same man separately listed as ‘Galfridium de Scotia’ in a case at Newcastle. ‘Galfrido et Willelmo’ mercenaries of Scotland were also listed in 1279. George of Synton (14th/15th C.) eldest son of Walter, 1st Laird of Synton (although some sources suggest he was 4th son of the first Walter of Buccleuch). He was either the 1st or 2nd of the Scotts of Synton (accounts differ here), and probably married a daughter of Sir John Turnbull of Falshope (probably Phaup near the head of the Ettrick in Selkirkshire). He had a son Walter, as well as possibly William. This branch eventually produced the lines of Harden, etc. (but again accounts are contradictory). He may also sometimes be confused with his grandson (or great-grandson) George, one of the last of the first set of Scotts of Synton. George (15th/16th C.) owner of the lands of Lairs (adjacent to Lairhope, near the head of the Teviot). In 1501 there was an agreement between him and William, son of James Douglas of Drumlanrig, where he would be allowed to continue to hold these lands in ‘alba firma’ if he could produce proof that he had this arrangement with James Douglas. It is unclear whether he is the same as one of the other contemporary Georges (perhaps George of Borthaugh). He was probably related to Robert, who was listed as tenant in Lairs in 1501. George of Borthaugh and Whames (d.bef. 1528) son of Robert. In 1502 he served as surety for Adam in Highchesters (when he was ‘de quhomys’). In 1505/6 he had a notorial instrument involving his claim on his father Robert’s lands of Muirhouse in the Barony of Crichton (somewhere near the modern Pathhead); this document mentions that his grandfather was Stephen of Muirhouse. In 1508/9 he was ‘of the Quhomys’ when he was given ‘warrandice’ of his grandfather Stephen’s lands of Dryden, Commonside and Over Harwood. In 1510/1 he wrote (with his own hand) a letter of acquittance, stating that John Muir of Rowallan had paid him the £40 and 14 merks owed on the warrandice for Commonside, Harwood and Dryden. In 1517 he was on the panel for Sir Walter Scott inheriting the barony of Branxholme from his father. He married his cousin, whose name is not recorded. With her he had his eldest son, John, and then remarried and had another son, Walter. He declared on his deathbed (in the presence of the Laird of Bucleuch, 2 notaries and other witnesses) that he never had dispensation to marry his cousin and so his 2nd son should succeed to his lands, which included Borthaugh, Commonside, Dryden and ‘the Wallis in Drynsidaile’ (probably Dryfesdale). He may be the George who was on the 1509 panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting the lands of Alemoor. In 1528 a set of arbitrators (all Scotts) met to decide on inheritance and found in favour of his elder son. In 1526 the list of Border men given remission for their earlier attack on the Earl of Arran included John in Borthaugh, with the brothers Walter, Philip and George listed afterwards, so perhaps all sons of his. George of Synton (15th/16th C.) son of Walter and a Johnstone, he was probably 6th Laird of Synton. He married a daughter of Scott of Roberton, said to have been Thomas (although it is unclear there was such a man, so perhaps another Scott of Roberton is meant). This was meant to be around the 1460s. He was succeeded by his son Walter, and was said to have had another son, who was William of Harden (but this seems to be confusion over generations with similar names). Note that the connections between Synton and Harden genealogy around this time are quite uncertain. George (15th/16th C.) described as ‘in Goldielands’ in 1510 when he was surety (along with William in Hawick and David in Whitehaugh, with William in Fenwick and John of Haining also mentioned) for Thomas Scott, brother of Philip of ‘Aidschaw’ (i.e. Headshaw). It is unclear to which branch of the family he belonged, since the first Laird of Goldielands whose genealogy we know was Scott of Buccleuch’s son Walter, who was given that title about 30 years later; however, he seems likely to have been closely related to the Scotts of Headshaw, Whitehaugh, Fenwick and Haining. George (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1522 when he had a dispensation from Thomas Ker, Archdeacon of Teviotdale, to marry Margaret Turnbull. This was necessary because they were within the 4th grade of consanguinity. The witnesses were William Pringle and William Tait. George (d.bef. 1527) owner of a piece of half a husbandland within ‘the town and bounds of Lellescleiff’. In 1527 his widow, Janet Smail, renounced agreements made with her brother William Smail over these lands in Lilliesleaf; the document was recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books. George of Blindhaugh was one of the witnesses and may have been related. George (15th/16th C.) recorded as being ‘in Fawlishope’ (probably ‘Phaup’ in the Ettrick valley) in 1526 on a list of many Borders men who had remission for helping the Homes attack the Earl of Arran. William was also listed as being in the same place, and so probably related. George ‘of the Bog’ (d.1530) said to have been a resident of Liddesdale, he gains a reputation as a reiver. He was said to be particularly cruel, burning the houses of those he raided, sometimes with their wives and children inside. He was captured by Johnstone of that Ilk and presented for trial, along with Hector and their accomplices, by Robert, Lord Maxwell. It was decided to give him the same punishment he had inflicted on his victims, and so he was burned at the stake ‘quhilk deid was neuer sense in this realme of befoir, nor will be heirefter’. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. George (d.bef. 1534) Burgess of Selkirk. His daughter Janet was served as heir to his heritable goods in 1534. Burgess William was one of the witnesses and perhaps related. George (16th C.) described as ‘in Sanct Mynnynnis Well’ (and separately as ‘Mynnis’) when part of an inquest held in Jedburgh in 1533. This is probably St. Mungo’s Well in Peebles, although all the other men on the panel appear to be local (e.g. Scotts of Ashkirk and Headshaw), and so either another location is suggested or he was a relative of local Scotts. In 1539 he was ‘in Saint Myningis Voll’ when he was on the inquest panel for Alexander Lauder succeeding to Todrig. George (16th C.) suggested by Capt. Scott of Satchells to have been a grandson of the Walter who was immediate ancestor of the Scotts of Harden. He was called ‘How-coat’, suggesting he owned or farmed Hoscote. He was then said to have succeeded his father as Laird of Synton, to have married a daughter of John Edmonston (or ‘Adimston’) of Ednam and to have been succeeded by his son Walter. Part of his life corresponds to that of the later George of Synton, however, these generations seem to be hopelessly confused. George (16th C.) son of John of Roberton and Walls. In 1526 he is listed (along with Stephen) as son of John in the 1526 pardon given to a large number of Borderers for their earlier attack on the Earl of Arran. He is also recorded in the Register of the Privy Seal for 1527 receiving remission for his crimes. He may be the George ‘of Well’ who was part of an inquest to rule on a land arrangement in Selkirk in 1531/2, along with several other Scotts. He could be the George ‘of Vailis’ who in 1539 witnessed a document at Kirkhope for Elizabeth Ker, mother of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. George (16th C.) abbreviator of the King’s household expenses. He attested to payments in the Exchequer Rolls for at least the years 1537–1542. His name is given as ‘domino [Sir] Georgeo Scott’, and he may have been a cleric rather than a knight. It is unclear which branch of the Scotts he came from. George (16th C.) listed as ‘Sir George’ in 1538 when the benefice of Hascendeane Kirk was given to him, after John Duncan was ‘escheated for bæatraty’. In 1545 John Anderson asked for 18 months prorogation in order to oust him. George (16th C.) resident of Wiltonburn recorded in 1549, among a list of the tenants and servants of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme who complained about the Kers ravaging their farms. He may have been related to Philip, who was the tenant at Wiltonburn. George of Blindhaugh (16th C.) recorded in 1527 when he witnessed a document in Selkirk for the widow of another George. He was ‘in Blyndhauch’ (in Ashkirk Parish) when he witnessed a document for the Scotts of Headshaw in 1531 and another involving Scotts and Veitches of Synton. In 1532 he and Robert, tutor of Howpasley were executors for Janet of Howpasley, and agreed to pay Andrew Ker of Primside a fee for her marriage to Thomas McDougall of Makerstoun. In 1538 he witnessed a document for Ralph Davidson involving Gramahlaw and ‘Chames’. In 1539 he was recorded as ‘gudschir’ to Walter, son of Robert in Howford in a marriage contract with Elizabeth, daughter of Marion Dalgleish. It seems likely that he was a brother of Robert in Howford (rather than his father). In 1540 he witnessed a sasine for William Turnbull in Selkirk. In 1543/4 his wife Margaret Turnbull purchased a tenement in Selkirk from John Fairley on behalf of their second son, Walter, reserving the Little for herself. In 1544 his wife and 2nd son Walter were given his seedings of Blindhaugh, Broadlee and Castleside, with the 3rd son William given the lands of Langhope and ‘the leip hill’ and the youngest son John given Castleside. Probably the same George of Blindhaugh is listed in 1550 among 10 Scotts and the chief of the Ellois, who signed a bond with the Queen, to keep order and hand over criminals. He was surely related to Robert, who was recorded in Blindhaugh in the 1530s and he may be related to later Scotts of Blindhaugh. George (16th C.) witness to a sasine of 1558 (one of Hawick’s earliest surviving) relating to land in the West-end sold by Adam Cessford to James Scott, alias ‘Bailzie’. He could be the George ‘in Hawik’ who in 1545 bought a tenement in Selkirk from Patrick Kelso; Patrick’s wife was Christian Scott, and possibly related. He may be the same as one of the other Georges. George (16th C.) son of William. He married Janet Veitch. In 1561 he was son and heir of the deceased William when he paid ‘entry’ to Patrick Murray for his lands, with the assistance of his friend Walter. In 1562 he paid further ‘entries’ for land in Selkirk to Walter and his son Walter. George (d.1578) brother of Robert (who was a Burgess of Hawick) and James (a cordiner). He was killed by a group of Scotts, the circumstances being unknown, but the full group including Robert of Allanhaugh, William in Allanhaugh (‘now in Hawik’), Simon in Over Southfield, Wat there, ‘Syme’ there and ‘Watt’s Jock’. In 1581 his brothers (on behalf of their mother and all their kin) wrote a ‘letter of slains’ in Hawick, describing how they had received satisfaction for the crime and forgave the assailants. Without the preservation of the record in the Bucceuch archives we would know nothing about this family; as it is, it is difficult to connect them with any other Scotts. George (d bef. 1582) tenant in Northhouse. In 1582 his son William (and probable son Simon) witnessed a transaction at Branxholme involving the Scott of Allanhaugh. George of Synton (16th C.) probably second son of John, grandson of Walter (10th Laird) of Synton and brother of Walter (11th); Scott of Satchells suggests he was son of Walter, but that seems less likely, given the timing. His name was inscribed on 2 panels on the former house at Synton, which together read ‘GEORGE SCOT IN SYNOTVN AND MARG/RET EDMESTOVN HIS SP(OVS IN THE) / ZER OF GOD 1570 THE HEAR T(O WALTER SCOT)...’ It therefore seems that he was tenant in Synton in 1570, but recognised as the heir to Walter (perhaps the omission of the word ‘son’ is significant); this may be the year of his marriage. He was listed in 1579 among people who owed money to Isabel Donald, widow of Robert of Palace. In 1579/80 he was a witness in Kirkhouses for a case between Dalgleishes and Scotts. In 1580 he was ‘in Synton’ when he and his brother William in Huntly gave their consent for Robert, son of their deceased brother James in Whitslade, to marry Elizabeth, daughter of Robert in Aikwood (this confirms that these 3 men were brothers, and hence all sons of John, younger of Synton). In 1580 he had a court case where he claimed that he had title to the lands of ‘Ilistoun’ instead of Adam of Bonnington, apparently gaining these lands from Robert of Haining. In 1580/1 he had a dispute with Walter of Stirches over the lands of Synton Mill; the agreement to appoint arbitrators was made at Groundiston, with his chosen judges being Walter of Headshaw and Robert of Haining. In 1581 he witnessed an agreement in Selkirk where James Langlands of that Ilk resigned his lands to his son Robert Langlands and another agreement between Margaret, widow of William of Burnfoot and her son William. He also witnessed in 1581 a marriage contract between this same William in Burnfoot and Janet (his niece), daughter of William in Huntly. He was mentioned in 1581 as one of the Scotts called before the Privy Council in Edinburgh to try to stop the feud with the Eliots. He was also ordered to confer with the council in 1583/4 regarding the quieting of the Borders. He was in ward in Edinburgh Castle in 1581, along with Robert of Haining, when his cautioners were Mungo and Alexander, Burgess of Edinburgh; this caution was renewed later in 1581, with John Edmondson of Ryeslaw as surety. His servant John Scott of the Palace was charged with resetting stolen horses, and as a result of not appearing to answer for his servant, he was denounced rebel. In 1585 he witnessed a bond (signed at Selkirk and Hawick) settling a feud between the Scotts of Branxholme and the Scotts of Allanhaugh. In 1586 he is recorded as a ‘curator’ of the young Walter of Buccleuch. In 1586/7 he was declared a rebel for failing to appear in court to answer the charges against his servant, John of the Palace. He signed the clan bond in 1589, when he was ‘George of Sinton’. He must also have been Laird on the ‘Roll of the Clans’ in about 1590. In 1590 he may have been the Scott of Sinton for whom William Dalmahoy was surety that he would not harm the vassals of the Earl of Angus and David Edmondson of Wowmet was also separately surety for him that he would help the Warden. Also in 1590 he was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. He married Margaret, daughter of John Edmonston of Ednam. Their children included: Walter, who succeeded; David; John of Yorkston, who purchased Headshaw and Langhope; George, who became a saddler’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1610; James of Kirkhouses, who helped rescue Kinmont Willie; and Agnes. George of Todrig (d.bef. 1580) probably the 3rd and youngest son of William of Harden, who was also Laird of Todrig (consistent with the description of Scott of Satchells). He succeeded to Harden in 1561 on the death of his father (probably at Todrig). He thus became the first Scott who was just ‘of Todrick’. He was succeeded by Walter, probably his son. Walter’s brothers Robert and William are recorded in 1620, and so were presumably also his sons. Note that Scott of Rodono regards him as a fiction of Scott of Satchells, and suggests instead that Walter of Todrig was descended from William ‘in the Mott’. Assuming he existed, he may have married Elizabeth Ker, who in 1581/2 was recorded as mother of Walter of Todrig. He may be the Scott of Todrig whose daughter Elizabeth married Thomas Pringle of Trinlyknowe. George (16th C.) recorded in Clarelaw in 1580 when he witnessed a transaction involving lands in Midlem. This is probably the Clarilaw in Bowden Parish. George (16th C.) recorded as ‘sister’ when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk in 1581. He was probably related to John, who had the same nickname. George (16th C.) recorded as ‘alias Goldielandis in Carterhaucht’ when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk in 1581. He was probably descended from the Scotts of Goldielands. George (16th/17th C.) listed as being ‘in Woll’ in 1608 when he was part of a large group of men accused of attacking Selkirk Mill. It is unclear how he might have been related to the Scotts of Woll. George of Synton (16th/17th C.) son of Walter, who died in 1608, and Isobel Douglas. It appears that he was Laird of Synton while his father was still alive. He was the 14th and last of the family to be designated ‘of Synton’. In 1610 he was served heir to the lands of Boonraw, these passing to his descendants for the next 110 years. He was also served heir to his father’s lands of Outersiderig. He married Mary Gladstains of Dod and Whitlaw (possibly daughter of George of Dod) and their children were: Walter, who died unmarried; George of Boonraw; and Richard, minister of Kirkbean and Ashkirk. Note that generations seem confused in some accounts. In 1627 he sold the Synton estate to Francis, son of Walter Scott of Harden (a distant cousin, their great-grandfathers having been brothers). This was probably forced on him to clear debts. His widow was probably the ‘Mar. Gladstains’ who was liferenter of an unnamed farm (most likely Boonraw) and Stouslie in Hassendean Parish in 1643 and also the ‘Liferenter of Boonraw’ recorded on the Land Tax Rolls of 1663. George of Drinkstone (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1616 as ‘callit of Deringstoun’. This was in the trial of Jock Scott, ‘the Suckler’, who, having gotten off the charge of slaughtering Douglas of Drumlanrig’s sheep at Howpasley, but was charged with stealing sheep from his lands of ‘Castell-hill’ in 1613 (among other thefts). It is unclear whether this is the place of that name near Ashkirk or the one near Branxholme (probably the latter). He was surely related to the half century earlier John ‘in Drinkstone’ and the slightly earlier John ‘of Drinkstone’. It is possible he was ‘Geordie in Castel-hill’ (no surname given) who was listed among fugitives in 1618. George ‘the Souter’ and ‘Marion’s Geordie’ (d.1616) cordiner in Hawick. He assisted in the 1615 plan of Lady Howpasley and Jean Scott of Satchells to slaughter the sheep of Sir James Douglas, newly possessed of Howpasley. In the trial he was painted as the main instigator and was accused of threatening Jock ‘the Suckler’ at sword-point to carry through with the crime. He said he would accept his guilt if Jock repeated the accusations to his face, which Jock duly did. He then referred to his dog ‘Hyde-the-bastard’, saying ‘Sa lang as I and my Bastard brother levis (meaning be his dog), Howpaslet sall nocht plenische’ (i.e. be stocked). He had also been questioned by Douglas in Hawick about his whereabouts that night, and pointed a cocked pistol at Douglas, which was taken from him before he could shoot. Additionally he had failed to show up at the previous Justice Court at Jedburgh. He was later hung for these crimes (though the records suggest that several of the Jury were favourable to Douglas of Drumlanrig). His mother was presumably Marion and it is possible he was brother of ‘Marion’s Hob’. George (16th/17th C.) son of Walter of Todshawhaugh. He was part of a group of Scots charging Langlands and other Scots to find caution in 1610, with the other side petitioning for the penalties to be reduced. He is also mentioned in the same year when the Scots of Harden, Whitslade and Satchells were also bound not to harm his father, him and their associates. There was a similar bond in 1610 for Andrew Riddell of that Ilk and his son. George of Castleside (d.c.1630) probably a younger son of ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden. He is recorded in 1607 when he complained that James Turnbull of Hassendeanbank and Thomas Ker of Cavers have not paid what they owe him; he is there ‘in Castlesyd’. In 1618 he served as a cautioner for Walter, son of John in Newark. He is mentioned several other times in the period 1592–1629. In 1632 his daughters Janet, Margaret and Bessie were served as his heirs portioners. However, Francis was shortly afterwards Laird of Castleside, and so may also have been related. George (16th/17th C.) son of Walter of Woll and Catherine Ormiston, his 2nd wife. In 1617 his elder half-brother Robert of Woll was appointed as tutor for him and his sister Katherine (making it clear he was still a minor at that point). In 1636 he was served heir to his mother, Catherine Ormiston. He is recorded in 1643 when he was made Burgess of Selkirk. He is then referred to as ‘callit of the Woll’, suggesting he was the representative of the family that had formerly lived there. George (d.bef. 1660) brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade. He is recorded in 1622–25 in a court action against Robert Scott, younger of Satchells, over the lands of Doddbank in Ettrick. He is also mentioned in 1660 as George ‘callit of Whitslaid’ when his daughter Anna married Charles, eldest son of William Lauder of Windpark. He somehow inherited the Barony of Maxton (perhaps through marriage), which had previously been held by the Kers. In 1670 his daughters Bessie and Anna were served heirs portioners to this Barony and all the associated lands, which included a large part of Abbotrule; it has also been claimed that they succeeded to his lands in Linton, rather than Maxton. George (17th C.) possessor of the lands of Dinlees on Hermitage Water in 1632. George (17th C.) tenant in Bowknoke. He was mentioned in a session record in Ashkirk in 1635. George (17th C.) recorded in the Council Records of 1651 when he was fined £10 for keeping false weights, specifically ‘Flemes wecht for French wecht’. George (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Waugh and their children included: John (b.1634); Marion (b.1640); Thomas (b.1643); Robert (b.1648); and George (b.1651). The witnesses in 1651 were Andrew Liddersdale and John Scott. George (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Jean Elliot and their children included Robert (b.1650), Thomas (b.1652) and Elizabeth (b.1660). The witnesses were William … and Thomas Scott. He may be the George who in 1661 in Ashkirk witnessed a baptism for Archibald Elliot (possibly related to his wife). George (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Grisel ‘Moore’ and their children included Jean (b.1650) and Agnes (b.1652). The 2 witnesses in 1652 were both Robert Scott. George (17th C.) tenant in Netherraw in Liddesdale. He was recorded in a deed in 1663. George (d.c.1690) of Boonraw. Son of George of Synton and Boonraw. He was probably the ‘G. Scott of boneraw’ who signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. He was Bailie-depute of Hawick (i.e. appointed by the Baron) and resided in the Tower, as recorded in 1668. In that year it is written that, at the request of the Bailies of Hawick, he set free 3 people called ‘Bridgs’ who had been imprisoned within the Tower. He is also listed as ‘of Bondra’ in a list of landowners of Hassendean Parish in 1666. He was recorded in 2 bonds in 1673. In 1678 he was one of the Commissioners for Roxburghshire for raising money to support the King. He paid the land tax for Boonraw and Stouslie in Hassendean Parish in 1678, valued at £291; he was probably also the man recorded as ‘Boonraw for Overtoune’, paying the land tax in Oxnam Parish in 1678. In 1680 he witnessed (along with Robert of Horsleyhill) a baptism in Hawick for Robert Langlands and Isobel Scott. In 1692 the lands of Stouslie ‘being formerly possesst by the deceased George Scott of Boonraw be ane 19 yeares tack’ were possessed by his heirs and representatives. He married a daughter of Douglas of Gervald (who was hence grand-daughter of Sir William Douglas of Cavers). How many children he had is unclear, with Haining citing local tradition that he had 3 sons, George, Archibald and Richard, while Keith Scott records just 1 son, Archibald, and a daughter, Ann. His children may therefore have included: George (said to have been born in 1672, but that seems rather late), who probably died young; Archibald (d.1720, supposedly at an advanced age), who succeeded, but died unmarried, thus ending this branch of the Scotts; Ann, who is also stated to have died unmarried; and Richard, said to have married a daughter of Charles Ogilvie and claimed to be the ancestor of Charlie of the Crescent, who was grandfather of Sir James A.H. Murray. With the murky end of this family, the line of the original Scotts of Synton was also lost. His will is recorded in 1690 (or perhaps 1698). George (17th C.) 3rd son of Robert of Woll. He was a surgeon in Edinburgh. He was served heir to his father in 1670, although his elder brother James had already sold the lands of Woll. He may have been the Edinburgh surgeon of that name recorded in a bond of appearance in 1673. George (17th C.) resident of Hawick and Roberton Parishes. He married Margaret Fairgrieve. His wife’s surname was recorded as ‘Furgrie’ in 1671 and ‘ffeirgrive’ in 1681. Their children included: Margaret (b.1671), baptised in Hawick; Robert (b.1681), baptised in Roberton; and Walter (b.1684), baptised in Roberton. The witnesses to the 1671 baptism were Francis Simpson and John Scott. The 1681 witnesses were George Brown and Francis Scott (who was probably related). George (17th C.) probably 2nd son of Thomas of Bonchester. There was a bond from his father to him for 550 merks Scots. He had a son, Alexander, who was tenant at Roughheugh Mill, and was progenitor of the Scotts of Falla. He is probably the George, son of Thomas in Bonchester, who was on a list of those found guilty of ‘nonconformity’ in 1684. George (d.c.1686) probably tenant in Borthaugh. He is recorded being ‘in Bortoch’ when his will was listed in the Commissariot of Peebles in 1686. He was probably related to Walter ‘in Burtoch’, whose will is recorded in 1692, as well as to other Scotts associated with Borthaugh around that time, e.g. James. George (17th C.) described as ‘in Dockcleuch’ (i.e. Doecleuch), he was a local landowner of the mid-to-late 1600s according to James Wilson. He paid £140 for the land tax in Cavers Parish in 1643; the same lands were owned by the Duke of Buccleuch by 1678. George (17th C.) blacksmith in Hawick Parish, probably somewhere to the south of the Town. He is recorded in 1687 when he was fined, along with a group of other men, for clandestinely removing their sheep from the Town’s flock, without paying the Town Herd. He married Janet Black, and their children baptised in Hawick included James (b.1701) and William (b.1704), as well as probably Bessie (b.1702), Isobel (b.1707) and Janet (b.1709). The witnesses in 1701 were smith James Scott (surely related) and Francis Elliot, in 1702 were William Henderson in the Flex and James Davidson in Newbigging, in 1704 were William and Francis Henderson (both smiths at the Flex) and in 1707 were Bailie George Martin and Andrew Riddell in Goldielands. George (17th C.) Hawick resident who was fined £20 Scots in 1688 ‘for deserting the town when the Militia was listing’. George (17th C.) resident of North Synton in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll there. George (17th C.) listed as a resident of Whitriggs on the 1694 Hearth Tax roll. George (17th C.) tenant at Fodderlee according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. George (17th C.) resident at Harden in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. George (17th C.) listed as wright among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was also a wright on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. George (17th C.) merchant listed as ‘called greina’ among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was also listed with the word ‘Grimma’ after his name on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. It is unclear if ‘Grimma’ is meant to indicate a place or a nickname, however, John is also listed in 1694 with the same name. George (17th C.) resident of Easter Groundistone. He was there according to baptismal records of 1682 and 1688 and also according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He is probably the George who witnessed the baptism for Adam Glendinning in Groundistone in 1698. It is unclear how he may have been related to other Scotts associated with Groundistone, e.g. Francis in Wester Groundistone. In 1709 George Lorraine was recorded as his servant. He married Agnes Scott in Robertson Parish (actually the old Hassendean) in 1681 and their children included: Robert (b.1682); George (b.1685); and William (b.1688). The witnesses in 1682 were James C... and Robert Scott and in 1688 were William Scott (who may have been related to him or his wife) and William Palmer. George (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish, or more likely Hassendean. He married Margaret Renwick and their children included: Margaret (b.1684); and

Agnes (b.1687). The witnesses in 1684 were William Telfer and Andrew ‘heughane’ (perhaps Huggan) and in 1687 were James Halliwell and Andrew ‘heughane’. George (17th C.) described as ‘pedder’ in 1694 when his wife Marion ‘Robison’ was fined for making ‘bakes’ on the Common. George (17th C.) resident at Hassendean Mains according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. George (17th C.) resident at Swinnie according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. George (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1702 he was recorded as a servant at North Synton. He married Janet Cowan in Ashkirk in 1701 and their children included: John (b.1702); Isobel (b.1705); Margaret (b.1707); and George (b.1717). He may be the George who witnessed baptisms in Ashkirk in 1690 for William Easton (along with James Veitch) and for James Veitch (along with William Easton); all 3 men probably lived at North Synton. George (17th/18th C.) litster’ (i.e. dyer) in Hawick. In 1704 he witnessed the baptism of a son of ‘Walter Scott herd’, who may be the same man as ‘Crooked Wat’. George (17th/18th C.) removed as a Hawick councillor in 1706 for several charges, including calling the Town Clerk ‘ane knave, cheat, and rascal’. It is unclear if this is related to the disputes over the Common Riding that year, or a separate matter. He is probably the same as one of the other Georges. George (17th/18th C.) shepherd at Burnhead. His son George was baptised in Wilton Parish in 1709. George (17th/18th C.) recorded as an elder of Wilton Parish in 1711. George ‘Wyndheid’ (17th/18th C.) tailor in Hawick. He may be the George who, along with merchant Michael, witnessed a baptism for smith James in 1708. He witnessed another baptism in 1711 for John Scott ‘Wyndhead’ (servant to Robert Robson). In 1712, along with fellow tailor Archibald, he witnessed a baptism for Robert ‘Wyndhead’. He was listed as a tailor in 1714 when he witnessed a further baptism for tailor Archibald (who was probably related). In 1712 he married Elspeth Scott, who was widow of William Scott. To distinguish him from other men of the same name, he is recorded as ‘called George Wyndhead’. He is probably related to other Scotts with that designation. George (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Jean Redford in 1714 and their children included James (b.1729) and Walter (b.1733). George (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Alton in 1722 and Wester Burnfoot in 1729. He is probably the George who witnessed a baptism for Francis of Alton in 1722 (suggesting that they were related). He married Helen, daughter of Walter Hume in Hawick in 1716. Their children (baptised in Wilton) included: Marion (b.1717); Isobel (b.1722); Walter (b.1725); and Bessie (b.1729). The witnesses in 1722 were John and James Scott (who were probably related to him) and in 1729 were John Scott and Richard Turnbull. George (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Groundistone in 1724 and Silverbuthall in 1728. He may be the George who witnessed a baptism in 1725 for Robert Scott, resident of Groundistone. He may be the George who got married in Wilton in 1713, with no wife’s name recorded. He married Margaret Martin and their children included: George (b.1719); Margaret (b.1722); Bessie (b.1724); Helen (b.1728); and Ann (b.1732). The witnesses in 1724 were Richard and another George Scott (perhaps the one from Boonraw) and in 1728 were Robert Scott and James Dickson. George (d.bef. 1742) merchant in Selkirk. An account of his with Francis, ‘messenger’ is recorded in 1723. An inventory of his goods is recorded in 1733 and a receipt between the Burgh and his daughter Isobel is recorded in 1742. Perhaps the same merchant Burgess of Selkirk was recorded in 1707. George, younger merchant in Selkirk, was recorded in 1752. George (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was living at Borthwick Mains in 1735. In 1725 he married Mary Swan. Their children (baptised in Selkirk and Ettrick Parishes) included David (b.1731), George (b.1735), Samuel and James (b.1742). George (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. His daughter Janet was baptised in Roberton Parish in 1732. It is unclear if he is the same as one of the other Georges. George (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Ormiston in 1733 when his son Robert was baptised. George (18th C.) merchant who was appointed as one of the Commissioners for building the Teviot Bridge at Hawick in 1738. He was also one of the men (all Councillors presumably) appointed to oversee the building of a new Parish School in 1739. He witnessed baptisms in 1743 for weaver Robert Dou- glas and his wife Nicholas Scott (who may have been related to him), and in 1745 and 1747 for merchant Robert, who may have been related. He may be the George who is recorded in 1752 giving in money ‘for stones of Millport’, perhaps connected with repairs to Teviot Brig. Probably the same merchant George witnessed a baptism in 1757 for miller Adam (who may have been related). George (18th C.) wright in Selkirk.
He was recorded working on the mill there in 1743. George (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Appletreehall in 1747. He married Helen Fletcher in 1735 and their children included: George (b.1736); Robert (b.1738); Margaret (b.1742); Janet (b.1747); and John (b.1749). The witnesses in 1747 were James Dryden and George Hart. George (18th C.) joiner at Deansburnhaugh, grandfather of the George who wrote about Deansburnhaugh, as well as Adam who was joiner in Hawick. He married a daughter of William Scott ‘the Pether’. George (1724–1815) born in Bedrule Parish, son of Alexander, miller in Rulewater and then at Roughheugh Mill. He was tenant farmer at Falla. He married Elizabeth Borthwick and their children were: Alexander (b.1756), who died young; John, who married his cousin; Euphemia; Thomas (1761–1849); Alexander (b.1759) of Falla; and Elizabeth. George (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1762 he married Agnes Robieson, who was also from Ashkirk. Their children included: John and Walter (b.1764); Mary (b.1770); and William (b.1777). George (1734/5–1818) wright in Newcastle. He was recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He married Margaret Armstrong, who died in 1806, aged 67. Their children included: Jean (1777/8–83), who died at Burnmouth; and 2 who died in infancy. Other children probably included: Archibald (1771/2–1858), also a joiner in Newcastle, and marked on the same gravestone; and Thomas (1774/5–1846) buried in the adjacent plot. They are buried in Ettrleton Cemetery. George (18th/19th C.) recorded at Whitchesters on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he was taxed for 4 farm horses. George (1773–1861) born in Wilton Parish, son of William and Isabel Kedzie. He was a joiner at Deansburnhaugh and also described as a merchant there in 1808 (when his children’s previous baptisms were recorded). In 1800, in Roberton Parish, he married Mary Davidson, who died in 1836, aged 64. Their children included: Mary (b.1801); William (b.1803); Isobel (b.1805); and Robert (b.1808). He was living alone on the 1841 and 1851 censuses and in 1861 was a retired joiner, living with the family of his son William. He may have been related to the earlier joiner of the same name. He and his wife are buried at Borthwick Waas. George (1779–1805) from Singlie in the Ettrick valley, son of William, who was tenant farmer there, and brother of Robert, who was at Todshawhaugh. He was a school-mate of Mungo Park. He trained as a draughtsman and became a friend of Sir Walter Scott. He was artist on the expedition of Mungo Park back to Africa in 1805. George (18th/19th C.) married a daughter of George Turnbull, from whom he acquired the farm of Calaburn. He had a son Thomas when he was living at Hawick Shiel. He later lived at Kirkton. He had another son, Robert (b.1800), who was a vet at Kirkton and then Cauldmill. George (d.1826) contractor in Wilton. He married ‘Lillias’ Inglis in Robertson Parish in 1789, probably when they were both quite young. Their son Robert was baptised in Wilton Parish in 1790 (his wife’s name being recorded there as ‘Lillie’), probably named after his father. Their daughter Sophie was baptised in Wilton in 1793 (his wife then being ‘Lillies Englis’), perhaps named after a daughter of Lord Napier (for whose wife his wife was probably lady’s maid) born in 1791. He may be the George who witnessed a baptism in 1791 for William Dalgleish, resident of Roadhead in Wilton. In 1799 his wife (recorded on the Selkirk Parish baptismal record as ‘Elanor’) had twins at Yair House, where she was working as a lady’s maid. The twins were named Francis Napier (after Lord Napier, who at the time owned Wilton Lodge, and for whom his wife had previously worked) and Alexander Pringle (after the owner of Yair); the baptism was attended by Alexander Pringle of Whytbank and Rev. William Shaw of Selkirk. The family were buried in the old Wilton Cemetery and he was listed as ‘Contractor Wilton’ on the headstone (although precisely what kind of contractor is unclear). It seems likely that he was the George, son of Robert in ‘Broadlieburnfoot’, baptised in Robertson in 1771. George (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. In the subscription list for Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784) he is listed as ‘George Scott, Scoetiehall’. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. George (d.1834) master of Minto School. He was master at Yarrow school for 2 years, in the early 1780s, taking over from Alexander Wilson, but then moving to Minto. He was certainly master at Minto by 1788 and remained until the 1820s. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He married Jane Dalgleish (b.1761) in Minto in 1786. Their children included: James (b.1788), clerk of works for architect William Burns in Edinburgh; Jean (1789–1859), who married and moved to Edinburgh; Simon (1792–1871), a clerk; George (1794–1857); Margaret (1797–1867), died unmarried; Walter Dalgleish (1800–1852), advertising agent; and Betty (b.1807). He wrote a will in 1826. George (d.bef. 1816) wright and cabinet-maker in Hawick. He married Janet Dryden, who died in 1816. Their children included: Walter (b.1774); John (b.1776); Walter (again, b.1777); Helen (b.1784); and Jane (b.1787). The witnesses in 1776 were John Dryden (presumably related to his wife) and Thomas Huntly. His daughter Mary died in 1781. George (1777–1853) Border minor poet, who wrote ‘Heath Flowers’. He was born at Dingleton, and educated at Melrose and Galashiels, then Edinburgh University. At age 22 he became parish schoolmaster at Livingstone and 6 years later became schoolmaster at Lilliesleaf, starting in 1805. He is recorded as master of Lilliesleaf School on Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories and Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1841 he was living in Lilliesleaf with his wife Isabella and children Thomas (mason) and Isabella. He retired from teaching in 1850 and in 1851 is recorded as retired schoolmaster living at the schoolhouse in Lilliesleaf. It is said that many of his former pupils rose to great heights in their respective fields. He was patronised by Sir John Riddell of Riddell and was also a correspondent with Sir Walter Scott. He published a small volume of his poetry, ‘Heath Flowers; or, Mountain Melodies’ in 1820. He also wrote a statistical account of Roxburghshire, which was never published. George (18th/19th C.) tenant farmer at Hawthornside. He was recorded there on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 7 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. In 1803 he contributed to the subscription for the defence of the country (against the French). George (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Isobel Porteous and their children included Janet (b.1805) and James (b.1807). George (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Mary Davidson and their children included Isabel (b.1805) and Robert (b.1808). George (18th/19th C.) weaver in Hawick. His wife Margaret Turnbull died in 1808 and his daughter Isabel and son George died in the same year (although it is possible more than one weaver called George are compounded here). George (18th/19th C.) resident of Young’s Street in Edinburgh when he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. It seems likely that he had a direct connection with Hawick. George (d.bef. 1808) tenant at Whithope Mill. He was recorded there in 1786. His son George died in 1808 and his wife Margaret in 1809. He is surely related to Adam and John, who were tenants in the early years of the 19th century. He may be the George who married Margaret Scott in Hawick Parish in 1774. His children included George (b.1786). George (b.c.1780) weaver in Hawick, he was grandfather of manufacturer Peter. He may have been son of Thomas and Janet (possibly the George born in Wilton Parish in 1779, son of Thomas and Nelly Irwin) or perhaps was a younger brother of Thomas. He married Margaret Affleck and she died in 1867. Their children included: Christina Affleck (1815–75), who married William Laidlaw; George (b.1820/1), who was a grocer; Jane (1824–60); and probably James. He may be the handloom weaver who was living on Melgund Place in 1841, along with his children Jane and James (but with no sign of his wife). George (b.1780) gunmaker on the Sandbed. He was a Hawick gunsmith in 1825 when he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’. He is recorded at about No. 11 Sandbed on the 1841 census, along with a younger George, probably his son. In 1846 his shop was flooded and a gun in its case was later found at Burnfoot Mill. George (1794–1857) son of George, schoolmaster at Minto. He was educated at Minto and in Edinburgh. He was Parochial Schoolmaster of Cavers from 1814. He was teacher in Denholm in 1825 when he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’. In the 1830s he is listed as master of Cavers School and land surveyor in Denholm at the same time. He is responsible for a plan of Denholm village in 1835. He also served as Session Clerk. He is listed in Slater’s 1852 directory as Parochial Schoolmaster in Denholm. He probably lived at the old schoolhouse, which was on Denholm Green. He was the earliest teacher of James ‘Dictionary’ Murray. He married Helen, daughter of John Beattie and Cicily Hall. Their children were: Cecil (b.1822), who died in infancy; Cecil (1823–49); George (b.1825), who worked as an advertising and newspaper agent in Edinburgh; Jeannie (b.1828), who died in infancy; Jeannie (1830–46); Helen (b.1834); and Margaret (b.1836), who died in infancy. By 1861 his wife was recorded as ‘Fundholder’ and living on Kirkside. He may be related to the earlier master of Minto School. George (1792–1850s) son of John and Helen Scott, from Selkirk Parish. He was born at Newark, where his father worked on the farm, tenanted by Robert Scott (probably not directly related). He was at Synton Parkhead and then at Synton Mill. His wife was Jean, from Yarrow. Their son John (b.1832) was born in Ashkirk and worked as a ploughman, then on the railway. They also had a daughter, Margaret.
George (18th/19th C.) farm steward to Henry Elliot at Gatehousecote. His son James became steward to Hallrule. He died at Spittal-on-Rule. George (b.1804/5) gunmaker and ironmonger on the Sandbed, probably son of gunmaker George. The shop was at No. 11. His wife was Eliza and they had sons Frank C. and James L. George (19th C.) from Hawick, he was runner-up in the 624 yards race in the 1830 St. Ronan’s Games, and winner in 1831. It is said that in 1831 ‘Scott for ever!’ was the general cry. He also won the long race in 1833 and 1834. George (b.1808) from Roberton Parish, son of William and Isobel Glendinning. He was listed as a flesher in Hawick, among the heads of households of Wilton Kirk in 1840 and 1841; William was listed alongside him and so may have been related. He was a flesher living at about 4 Silver Street in 1841 and 1851 and 9 Kirkwynd in 1861. His wife was Jessie and their children included Janet, William, Isabel, James, George, Andrew, Janet (again) and Mary. George (b.1809/10) born in Belses, he was farmer in Lilliesleaf. He is recorded in 1851 as farmer of 12 acres, living on Main Street. His wife was Agnes from Paislay. Their children included Margaret, George, Isabella, Adamina G., Mary and John. George (19th C.) son of shepherd David Scott. He was a shepherd at Hardlee and Hyndlee. He married Isabella Hall (‘Tibbie o Wigg’, d.1904). They had 9 children, including James (farmer at Overhall), Nellie, Euphemia, Isabella, Margaret and Jane. He is buried at Borthwick Waas. George (b.1829/30) agricultural labourer from Ettrick. He married Barbara Halliday in Hawick in 1851. His wife was probably sister of the poet John Halliday. Their children included: Robert (b.1852) and James (b.1854), baptised in Hobkirk; Agnes (b.1855), baptised in Lilliesleaf; and George (b.1857) and Helen (b.1859), baptised in Bowden. In 1861 the family were living at Stichelhill in Castleton Parish. Based on the names, it is possible he was the George, son of Robert and Agnes Mitchell, baptised in Yarrow in 1820. George (19th C.) tenant at Bedrule Mill in 1857. George (19th C.) shepherd at Wigg in Hobkirk Parish. He was one of the original members of the congregation of Wolfelee Free Kirk. George (b.1817/8) born in Yarrow, he was shepherd at Linhope Braehead in 1851. His wife was Helen and their children included Walter (born in Peeblesshire) and William (born in Cavers Parish). George (1820/1–92) from Yarrow, he was shepherd at Lurgiescleuch in 1851. His wife was Janet and they had a daughter, Robina. George (1820/1–92) grocer on the Howgateg, son of George and Margaret Affleck. He was father of Peter, who founded Pesco’s. In 1841 he was a clerk, living with Thomas and Janet (possibly his grandparents) on Walter’s Wynd. In 1851 he was a frame-worker on the Loan. In 1861 he was recorded as ‘Post Messenger’ at 19 Howgateg. He married Marion Elizabeth (1829–88), daughter of Peter Adamson. Their children included: George (b.1850), a baker; Peter (1852–1925), manufacturer; Marion (b.1855); Margaret (b.1858); Robert (b.1860), who signed his death certificate; Thomas (b.1862), who was Cornet in 1887; Elizabeth (b.1864); Catherine (b.1867); Susan (b.1869); and Jemima (b.1872). He died at Drumlanrig Square. George (1836–1904) son of William and Mary Scott, who lived at Synton. He was born at Synton Lodge. In 1851 he was still living with his mother and brothers at Dimpleknowe. In 1861 he was a thatcher living in Denholm. He married Margaret Riddell and had children: William (b.1860); Mary (b.1862); Robert Riddell (b.1865); Helen (or ‘Nellie’, b.1872); Jessie (b.1875); and George (b.1881). All children were baptised in Cavers Parish, except the last, which was in Lilliesleaf. The family emigrated to Canada and he died at Minto, Manitoba. George (1837–1907) son of Francis and Janet Oliver. He was a mill finisher in Hawick. He latterly lived at 16 Bourtree Place. In 1860 he firstly married Elizabeth Miller Pringle, daughter of James Pringle, cousin of the founder of Robert Pringle & Sons, hosiery manufacturers. Their children were: James Pringle (b.1862), also a mill furnisher; Beatrice (b.1866); and Janet Oliver (b.1868). In 1871 he secondly married Janet (d.1897), daughter of manufacturer Robert Greenwood. Their children were: Mary Greenwood (b.1873); Robert; Francis George (b.1880), composer; and Margaret Lilias, who married Robert Furness. George (1850–1926) born in Teviothead. He was agent for the Prudential Insurance Company in Hawick. In 1879 he married Isabella Grieve Laidlaw (1838–1927), youngest daughter of James Laidlaw, farmer at Hallrule Mill and Hartshaugh Mill. Their children were: George Henry (b.1880), a baker in Carlisle; Isabella Helen (b.1881); Elizabeth (‘Bessie’, b.1883); and Jemima Margaret (b.1885). George (19th C.) builder who lived at Slitrig Bank. George (1850–1940) eldest son of George and Marion Adamson. He was brother of Peter, who established ‘Pesco’s’. He was a baker in Hawick. Apparently he and his brother were note draughts players. In 1872 he married Susan Wright Thorburn. Their children were: Margaret Rae (b.1875); Marion A. (b.1877); Agnes Thorburn (b.1878); John T. (b.1880); Georgina (b.1882); Christina (‘Kate’, b.1884); Peter (b.1886); Isabella Henderson (b.1889); and Elizabeth (b.1891). George (1879–1950) eldest son of Peter, founder of Pesco’s. He was Cornet in 1925 and Acted out. He was Cornet in 1904. He joined the family firm in 1892 and became a Managing Director in about 1903. He was usually referred to as ‘Mr. George’. He gifted communion cups to St. George’s Kirk in 1921 and lived at Langlee. He married Janet Riddle. George Alexander (1888–1963) born in Hawick, he became a biologist and schoolmaster. He was educated at Hawick High School and Edinburgh University. He was Biology Master in Newton Stewart and later at George Heriot’s, where he became Head of Biology. He was a Fellow of the Educational Institute of Scotland and a member of the Science Masters Association, Scottish Secondary Teachers Association and Scottish Educational Film Association. He was also a Fellow of the Royal Society of Edinburgh. George Douglas (19th/20th C.) served in the K.O.S.B. during WWI, where he was wounded and invalided out. He was Cornet in 1925 and Acting Father in 1958. J.E.D. Murray was his Acting Father (for the 4th time). Gerard (13th C.) recorded in a document in Norwich in 1242, relating to some captured sacks of Scottish wool. Lucas ‘Scot’, mayor of Dunwich, appended his seals instead, and so is probably a relative. He is recorded as ‘le Escot’ in 1263 when he (unsuccessfully) appealed the death of his son Robert at the hands of Nicholas Percival of ‘Dunwych’ in Suffolk. Richard, his nephew, accused someone else (also unsuccessfully) of the same murder in 1272. Probably the same Gerald ‘le Scot’ is recorded in relation to a write of trespass in Northumberland in 1264. Gideon (16th/17th C.) son of Robert of Gilmsleck. In 1621, along with his brother William and mother Bessie Naysmith, they complained about the murderers of his father (2 Elphinstones) still being at large. His name is given as ‘Gedane Scottis’ and he may be one of the first of the family with this forename. Sir Gideon of Highchester (d.1673) 2nd son of Sir William Scott of Harden. His forename came from his maternal grandfather, Sir Gideon Murray. He is usually described as being ‘of Highchester’, even although the farm is more often called ‘Highchesters’. In 1643 he was given the lands of Mabonlaw, Highchesters, Todshaw and Borthwickshielis, as well as others; this was part of his marriage contract with Margaret Hamilton. He was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire in 1643, 1644, 1646 (as ‘Jedeon’), 1648 and probably 1649. He is recorded in 1648 when commissioners had to be appointed for valuation of teinds at Harden, Highchesters, Mabonlaw and Todshaw, following a dispute between him and Francis, Earl of Buccleuch. Also in 1648 he was one of the local men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves on the Border. In 1650 he represented Roxburghshire in Parliament. He is listed (along with his wife and 19 other people, presumably servants and farm workers) on the Harden estate in a list of communicants of the Borthwick valley in 1650. He is probably the Gideon who witnessed the baptism of Gideon (later of Falmash), son of Robert of Harwood in Hawick in 1651 and another child of Robert in Hawick in 1652. He was the main proponent for having Hassendean Church removed to Roberton in the 1660s (fighting against the supporters of Scott of Buccleuch). He was knighted in 1650. He was appointed Sheriff Principal of Roxburghshire by Charles I, and continued through the 1650s. He served as one of the ‘tutors testamentars’ for the will of Francis, Earl of Buccleuch. He was also one of the ‘tutors’ of the young Mary Scott of Buccleuch in the 1650s and was the executor for her will. In 1654 he acted along with John Hay, Earl of Tweeddale on behalf of the Countess Mary, to attempt to reduce the huge fine imposed by Cromwell; however, he was deeply distrustful of the Earl of Tweeddale, and it appears that both were attempting to exert influence on the other tutors for their own ends, in particular to arrange the marriage of the Countess. In fact his son Walter married Mary in secret (when they were both very young), and there was a continuing power struggle with her mother, the Countess of Wemyss, as well as with the ‘Lothian tutors’. In 1660 he borrowed £2400 pounds from the Duchess of Buccleuch. He was knighted in 1660, when he accompanied the young Countess of Buccleuch to London, and his son Walter was made Earl of Tarras at the same time. He also served as tutor for Anne of Buccleuch, and continued to have disputes with the 5 Lothian tutors after the death of Mary. In 1662, following the Restoration, he was fined £4800, presumably for backing the wrong side. He had a licence from the Privy Council, allowing him to eat meat during Lent in the 1660s. He is probably the Gideon who is recorded paying the 1663 land tax for £814 in Wilton and £600 in Hassendean. About 1666 he was appointed one of the ‘curators’ of Francis of Daventry. Like his younger brother Walter of Raeburn, he sympathised with the religious views of the Society of Friends (i.e. Quakers), and entered into a dispute with Rev. James Kirkton in 1671. In 1673 he matriculate his arms. He was also recorded as gratee in a deed of 1673. He acquired the lands of Harden from his brother Sir William, who nevertheless continued to be ‘of Harden’, while he was still designated ‘of Highchester’. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir Thomas Hamilton of Preston, and his son Walter (later Earl of Tarras) succeeded to Harden. His other children were: William, who married Jean, daughter of James Kirkaldy of Grange; Agnes, who married Sir John Riddell (younger) of that Ilk; Margaret, who married James Corbet of Tollcross, but appears to have later lived in Hawick; another Agnes, who married Sir James Grant of Dalvey and later William Rutherford of Barnhills; Thomas, who became a merchant’s apprentice in Rouen in 1671; Gideon; Francis, who became a Captain; and Mary. Gideon is recorded becoming an apothecary’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1676, by which time Sir Gideon was dead. A year later Thomas became a Burgess of Edinburgh (as a merchant) in right of his father. William, Thomas and Gideon all died without heirs before 1710. Gideon (17th/18th C.) brother of Walter of Woll and 5th son of John of Woll and Agnes Scott. He was ‘son to John Scott of Wool’ in 1695 when he contributed £100 to the Darien Scheme (along with his brother Walter). He may have been known as ‘of Newhouse’ (although it is unclear where this was). In 1704 he married Jean (b.1688), daughter of William Elliot of Bewlief and Borthwickbrae and Isobel Scott of Sifton; she was sister of William, who was 2nd (but sometimes stated to be 1st) Elliot Laird of Borthwickbrae. It is said that they eloped together, and found themselves unsupported by their families. The Duke of Buccleuch took pity on them and settled them on the farm of Ladhope in Yarrow. Their children were: John (b.1706), who died on the coast of Guinea; William (b.1709), tenant in Kirkhope; Walter (b.1712), who died young; Walter (b.1722), who married 3 times, to a Mowbray, a Napier and a Williamson; Gideon (b.1724); Thomas (1727–96), who settled in Morpeth and married Ann Douglas, who died at the age of 106; Alexander (b.1729), who succeeded to the tenancy of Ladhope; Isobel, who married James Curle of Moodlaw; Agnes; Betsy; Mary, who married John Mair; Anne Jean, who married James Pott of Dod, farmer at Penchrise; and Christian. One of his descendants (from the Morpeth line) was Keith Stanley Malcolm Scott, who wrote the Scott family history in 1923. Gideon of Outerside (17th/18th C.) see Gideon of Falnash. Gideon of Highchester (1678–1707) eldest son of Walter of Highchester and Harden, Earl of Tarras. He had a charter of Harden in 1694 and also succeeded to the lands of Minto, Roberton, Howcleuch, Borthwickshiel Mains, Alemoor, etc. In 1695/6 he gave the income from Highchesters and other farms to his mother Helen, Countess of Tarras, for supporting his brothers and sisters Helen, Walter, Elizabeth, Agnes, Thomas, Anne and Margaret. In 1695 he had a charter for the Barony of Minto, including the lands of Craigend and Deanfoot, as well as Minto, which was erected into a Barony. However, he sold the lands and Barony of Minto to Sir Gilbert Elliot in 1703. In 1704 he was listed among the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire and for Selkirkshire. In 1705 it is recorded that he owed money to the Duchess of Buccleuch for the rent of Todshawhaugh and Whames. In 1697 he married Anne, daughter of Sir Francis Kinloch of Gilmerton and secondly married Mary Drummond, daughter of John, Earl of Melfort in 1700 (and after his death she re-married Sir James Sharp of Scotsraig). With his second wife he had 2 sons, Walter and John, who both succeeded to Harden, but had no male heirs. They also had a daughter, Mary. A horn powder flask belonging to him still exists at Mer- toum House. Gideon of Falnash (1651–c.1727) 5th son of Robert of Harwood and brother of Wal- ter of Harwood. Note that one of the witnesses at his baptism was Gideon, presumably of Highches- ter, indicating that this is where his forename came from. He farmed at Fenwick, Goldielands and Alton Croft and lived at Broadhaugh (and although he was ‘of Falnash’, he appears not to have lived there). He was probably the ‘Falnash’ who was Bailie-Depute of the Regality of Hawick in 1677 when he ‘confessed the striking of Wal- ter Hardie, and came in the bailies’ will’. He was Chamberlain to the Duchess of Buccleuch in the period 1678–1727, and in later years was referred to as ‘Auld Falnash’. In the period 1678–94 he was Chamberlain for Hawick, Wilton, Cavers and Hassendean parishes, later referred to as Teviota- lhead. He was still ‘of Outerside’ in 1692 when he served as a Commissioner for assessing the rentals for the Duchess of Buccleuch, but was ‘of Falnesh’ when he served the same role. in 1694 and 1698. He was Gideon of ‘Uttersyderig’ (i.e. Outterside) in a deed of 1682 when he witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1687. It is possible he was the Gideon who was imprisoned in 1683 along with other local lairds for being supporters of Covenanters. He was ‘of Uttersyde’ in 1688 when he witnessed a baptism for John Elliot in Harwood. He was the same Gideon ‘of Outtersyde’ who obtained the lands of Fenwick, Easter Highchesters half of ‘Ladyurd’ in Kirkurd and Nether Glack in Manor (both in Peeblesshire) from Robert Scott of Glack (who appeared to have no heir, and was probably his brother) in 1689. He was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1690. He is probably the Gideon who was listed at Broadhaugh in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. He was still referred to as ‘of Outtersyde’ in the early 1690s, but by at least 1694 was ‘of Falmash’. In 1694 he acted as cautioner for Francis, who rented the farm of Whithhope from the Duchess of Buccleuch; this suggests a family relationship perhaps. He contributed £200 to the Darien Scheme in 1695. He is probably the Gideon who was served heir to his brother, William, apothecary in Hawick in 1696. In 1699 he gave up the lands of Ladyurd to James Geddes of Kirkurd, although there is a related court case against him by James Geddes’ son James in 1707. In 1700 he was one of the Roxburghshire heritors who petitioned Parliament. He was also referred to as ‘Regal Bailie’ of Hawick, i.e. the Duchess’s representative in the affairs of the town. In 1700 £100 was given by him (in name of the Duchess) for the poor of Hawick Parish. Also in 1700 he witnessed the baptism for Gideon, son of Hawick merchant Walter Elliot (suggesting that the child was named after him). He gave a bond of 5,000 merks to Alexander Orrock in 1703 (presumably on behalf of the Duchess of Buccleuch), which formed the majority of the Orrock Bequest for the Grammar School. In 1704 he was again on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire. Also in 1704, the Council resolve to talk with him regarding help with fixing the ‘dam brigs’, the port at Horsleyhill’s Wynd, thatching the Tolbooth, oil for the clock, rope for the bell and shoes for the piper. He had another child named after him in 1704, this time when he witnessed a baptism for his gardener at Fenwick, Walter Paterson. In 1705 he witnessed baptisms for Bailie Robert Ruecastle and for Southfield shoemaker John Elliot, in 1706 others for workman John Shiel and for apothecary Walter (who named his son Gideon, probably after him), in 1707 for Adam Elliot of Arkleton, again for gardener Walter Paterson and for wright John Pringle, in 1708 for Bailie George Martin and for glover John Scott, in 1709 for John Scott ‘Whitegate’ and for James Grieve, tenant in Teindside, in 1711 for Walter Stoddart (herd in Harwood) and in 1712 for Robert Scoon in Branxholme Town. In a Hawick Parish valuation of 1710, he was the second largest landowner, behind the Duchess of Buccleuch. His daughter (and so presumably he) was in Broadhaugh in 1716 when she married Walter of Crumhaugh. He witnessed further baptisms in Hawick in 1719 for Walter Scott of Crumhaugh, in 1720 in Hawick for Francis Scott from Harwood (who may have been related to him), and in 1721 in Wilton for Robert of Burnhead and Agnes Scott (his daughter). It was described in 1767 (in depositions given regarding the former use of the Common) that he had warned the tenants of the Duchess of Buccleuch from encroaching on Hawick’s Common. He appears to have first married Jeanette, eldest daughter of Walter Elliot of Arkleton, with the marriage contract being in 1677 (when she was probably quite young); at that time he was recorded as brother-german to Walter of Harwood. He secondly married Mary (b.1660), daughter of James Scott of Thirlestane; she probably died in 1729, since payment was received for ringing the funeral bells ‘to the Lede Fenish’s’. His children included: Robert, who succeeded to Falmash; Agnes, who married Robert Scott of Burnhead; Beatrice (or Beatrrix, probably the ‘Beatricks’ baptised in Cavers Parish in 1696), who married Walter Scott of Crumhaugh; James (b.1698), baptised in Hawick; Christian, who married a Mr. Johnstone (but this could be confusion with Mary); Gideon, who became an apothecary’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1720; and Mary, the youngest child, who married James Johnson of Park Tower in Canombie Parish in 1727. Isabella Scott (who married William Elliot in Braidlie and Whithaugh in about 1700), said to be a daughter of Scott of Falmash, may have also been his daughter (although perhaps she was too old for this generation). He may also have been son of ‘John Scott younger of Falmash’, whose widow Janet Aitchison remarried in 1711. The witnesses to the 1698 baptism were Adam Elliot of Arkleton and ‘Mr’ Archibald Gledstains in Northhouse. A ‘Graham’ of Falmash was recorded as Bailie of the Regality of Hawick in 1721, although this may have been an error. His son Robert is mentioned in connection with the Hawick Parish Session from 1722:
so he either started performing the duties of his elderly father before his death, or his death was earlier than 1727. He was already deceased at the end of 1727 when his daughter Mary’s marriage was proclaimed in Hawick. He may be the ‘Bailie Gideon Scott’ who bequeathed £20 to the poor of Hawick Parish when he died. He is buried in Ewes Kirkyard along with his first wife Jeanette Elliot. Gideon of Falnash (d.1759) eldest son of Robert of Falnash, who he succeeded in 1734. He also served as Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch for local estates, referred to as ‘Teviotdalehead’ in the period 1747–57, being replaced by Robert of Orchard. He leased the farm of Wester Groundstone from the Buccleuch Estates in 1744. Dying without issue, he was succeeded by his brother Thomas, who sold off the Falnash estate. The 1761 list of Commissioners for Roxburghshire contains a blank for the fore-name of Scott of Falnash (presumably because it was unclear who his successor was at that time).

Gideon (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Christian Scott in 1719, the marriage being at Wilton (but also proclaimed in Roberton). He was at Alemoor in 1721, 1726, 1728 and 1736, Wester Alemoor in 1729 and Borthwickbrae in 1733 and 1736. His children, baptised in Roberton Parish, included: Helen (b.1721); Margaret (b.1726); Mungo (b.1728); Gideon (b.1729), perhaps father of Gideon the millwright; Ann (b.1729); Alexander (b.1733); twins Jean and Ann (again, b.1733); and Gilbert (b.1736). In the 1733 Roberton baptism he was recorded being in Cavers Parish, suggesting that Christine (b.1735) and Alison (b.1737), baptised in Cavers, were also his children; in 1735 he is recorded being ‘in Cavers’ itself and in 1737 at Whitriggs.

Gideon (18th C.) workman in the Hawick area. He is recorded as a thatcher in Hawick in 1740. He married Margaret (or Marion) Hislop, their marriage being recorded in Ashkirk and Cavers Parishes in 1727 (he was from Ashkirk Parish and his wife from Cavers). He was recorded at Shielswoodhaugh in 1727 when his first child was baptised in Ashkirk Parish. Their children (mostly baptised in Hawick) included: William (b.1727); Gideon (b.1740); Marion (b.1742); and Thomas (b.1745). The witnesses in 1740 were ex-Bailie Walter Graham and merchant John Cavers. In 1742 the witnesses were the same as those for shoemaker William’s child baptised the same day, namely baker Robert (who may have been related to one of them) and mason Andrew Turnbull, elder. Gideon (d.bef. 1763) druggist in Hawick, perhaps the son of Walter, apothecary in Hawick, born in 1706. He was recorded as ‘Druggist’ in 1742 when he witnessed a baptism for merchant James Douglas. He was recorded as a merchant in Hawick in 1746 in a baptism for one of his children and also when he witnessed baptisms for merchant Francis Gledstains in 1746 and 1747. He married Susanna Scott and their children, baptised in Hawick, included: Gilbert (b.1741); Catherine (b.1743); and Elizabeth (b.1746). The baptismal witnesses in 1741 were merchants Francis Gledstains and Charles Tudhope, in 1743 were Alexander of Synton and ex-Bailie William Tudhope and in 1746 were John at Winnington Rig and ex-Bailie Robert Howison. He is also mentioned as a Hawick druggist in a marriage record of 1763, when his daughter Elizabeth married Robert Burnet in Edinburgh. It was probably also his daughter Margaret who married Andrew Porteous there in 1768. He is probably the Gideon who was a Hawick Bailie in the 1740s and 50s. Gideon (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded living at Midshiel in 1747. He married Rachel Scott and their children included Jean (b.1747). The witnesses in 1747 were Charles of Crumhaugh and Robert of Fenwick; given these witnesses it seems likely that he is the same man as Gideon in Priesthaugh, brother of Charles of Crumhaugh, with his first wife Rachel Scott perhaps being daughter of Robert of Fenwick. Gideon (d.1806) tenant farmer at Priesthaugh, probably son of Walter of Crumhaugh and Howpasley and brother of Charles of Crumhaugh. Some accounts say he was ‘in Priesthope’, but that is probably a transcription error. He was at Priesthaugh in 1753, and his wife were ‘Mr. Gideon Scot and Mrs. Elliot’ in 1755 and he was ‘Mr.’ again at Priesthaugh in 1757. He is recorded in Priesthaugh several times in the Peebles Commissary Court documents in the period 1758–60. In 1783 he took out a bond for £700 with Sir Alexander Don of Newton, John Ker of Cavers and William Riddell of Camieston, which they owed after his death. He is probably the Gideon recorded at Penchrise on the 1785 Horse Tax Rolls. His daughter Beatrice was the second wife of Walter Scott, 2nd Laird of Wauchope, marrying him in 1789. His descendants were the Scotts in Priesthaugh, which eventually failed in the male line. Walter, farmer at Priesthaugh in 1797 was probably his son. He married Rachel Elliot, and their children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included Walter (b.1753), Robert (b.1755) and Charles (b.1757). His testament after he died lists his living children and executors as Charles and Jean in Priesthaugh and Margaret, widow of Charles Aitchison at Unthank. Gideon (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, possibly at Stobicote. It is possible that he is the Gideon, son of Gideon, baptised in Robertson in 1729. In 1762 he married Mary Scott, from Canonbie Parish, and she died in 1776. Their children included: Gideon (b.1765), who was probably the Hawick millwright; and Elizabeth, who married millwright James. The witnesses in 1765 were wright Gideon Easton and tailor James Dickson. It seems likely that he is the same Gideon who was resident at Borthwickbrae Parkhead when his children William (b.1772) and James (b.1774) were baptised in Robertson Parish. He may be the Gideon whose unnamed child died in Hawick in 1787. Gideon (18th C.) carrier in Hawick. In 1777 he married Agnes Tudhope; she was also from Hawick Parish and died in 1781. Their son James was baptised in 1779, perhaps the Hawick man of that name who worked on the Liverpool-Manchester railway. The witnesses in 1779 were workman James Hogg and Church Officer Walter Scott. It is possible he is the same man as the Gideon who married Mary Scott, if this was his second wife. Gideon (1762–1841) son of William, who was descended from the Scotts of Woll, his mother being Margaret, daughter of Robert Scott of Singlie. He was farmer at Kirkhope and later Laird of Overwells. He was farmer at Kirkhope (in Yarrow Parish) according to the 1785 Horse Tax Rolls. He had a daughter Christian, who died young. Gideon (18th/19th C.) resident of Teindside. In 1799 he was selected by ballot to serve on the local Militia to replace John Pringle, who was declared unfit. However, he failed to appear and was declared a deserter. Probably the same Gideon was recorded at Southdeanrig when his son William was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1785. It is possible he is the same man who married Agnes Tudhope (and perhaps earlier married Mary Scott). Gideon (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick and Wilton Parishes. He married Mary Stewart in Cavers in 1788 and their children included: Margaret (b.1789); Helen (b.1791); Jane (b.1792); and John (b.1794). His wife is recorded as ‘Isabel Stuart’ in 1791. The witnesses in 1792 were the ‘whole Congregation’. Gideon (1765–1833) born at Stobicote, possibly son of Gideon and Mary Scott. His family were supposed to be descended from the Scotts of Davington. He received only 4 months of schooling and became a herdsman as a boy, later serving as an apprentice in Hawick with Walter Turnbull, carpenter, wheelwright and agricultural implement maker. Thereafter he started his own business as a millwright, this later becoming Gideon Scott & Sons, based on the Cross Wynd. As well as building machinery, he was hired as a surveyor and was well known locally as an inventor and amateur astronomer. He suggested the suitability of the Teviot by the Little Haugh for water power, and subsequently William Laidlaw built Teviot Crescent Mills there. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He was listed as a millwright on the Cross Wynd in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He helped convert many of the Hawick mills to water power, for example his firm supplying the new water wheel for Wilton Mills in 1829. He also fitted out mills in Wigan and at Chillingham. He erected windmills at Adderstoneshiel and Penielheugh. In about 1802 he invented an early reaping machine, which was unpopular among the local workers, since it reduced manual labour so much; so after testing it successfully in the dead of night he smashed it up himself. He was also known for launching balloons at local celebratory events, e.g. to mark the end of the Friday Sports of 1826. Entirely self-taught, he was regarded as a prodigy by the townfolk, and was a great believer in and advocate for education, starting the Trades’ Library in a room of his own house. He was also a leader in the running of the Hawick School of Arts, and gave a lecture there himself, being the first ‘layman’ to do so (in an age when public lectures were formal and intense affairs), illustrating an astronomy talk with an orrery of his own design. He was also an early influence on the career of John Pringle Nichol (later Professor of Astronomy at Glasgow University), who came to Hawick as a school teacher. The pair would walk up to Hilliesland to watch the heavens, or spend the night talking in his astronomical study. For the solar eclipse of 1820 he blocked off a window in his observing room, and set up a screen, so that the many people he invited there could watch without staring directly at the Sun. He also described the aurora borealis seen over Hawick in 1826. Nichol returned to Hawick to watch the 1832 transit of Mercury with him, from a garden in Allars Bank (part of his property there being sold as the site for Allars Kirk in 1811). He was also a close friend of James Veitch of Inchbonny, a fellow self-taught inventor and scientist. He promoted the idea of connecting Hawick to the south... by railroad (although his idea involved a route up the Allan Water). He is probably the Gideon who in 1795, 1797, 1798 and 1801 witnessed baptisms for millwright James and Elizabeth Scott (who was probably his sister). A few years before his death there was a great reunion of the families of his 7 sons and 2 daughters, all of them attending the Common Riding festivities that year. There is no known portrait of him, although there are images of his sons Gideon and James (his 5th son), who were also millwrights. Another of his children was Susan, who married James Cranston (and whose daughter Mary married William, son of blacksmith Gavin Pow). His wife may have been Margaret Leithead (b.1772), daughter of Walter and Marjory Thomson, with the marriage taking place in Hawick in 1790. They had children baptised in Hawick, including: Gideon (b.1792); Walter (b.1794); and Marjory (b.1796). Other children were: James (b.c.1805); Andrew (b.c.1810); Gilbert (b.c.1815); Mary (b.c.1815); and Isabella (b.c.1818). The witnesses in 1792 were the Burgher Congregation and in 1794 and 1796 were the ‘Associate Congregation’; the family were thus presumably members of the East Bank Kirk. There must have been 2 additional sons born around 1800. He died at his house on the Cross Wynd. ‘Gideon Scott & Sons’, machine-makers, engineers and mill-wrights, is listed on Back Damgate in Pigot’s 1837 directory (even although this was after his death); the company wrapped up in 1841. In 1841 Margaret was living on the Cross Wynd with sons James, Gilbert and Andrew, and daughter May (probably the same as Marjory). Gideon (18th/19th C.) from Cavers Parish. He married Mary Bell and their daughter Elizabeth was baptised in 1834 – at present in Whithope’. The same couple were the Burgher Congregation and in 1794 and 1796 were the ‘Associate Congregation’; the family were thus presumably members of the East Bank Kirk. There must have been 2 additional sons born around 1800. He died at his house on the Cross Wynd. ‘Gideon Scott & Sons’, machine-makers, engineers and mill-wrights, is listed on Back Damgate in Pigot’s 1837 directory (even although this was after his death); the company wrapped up in 1841. In 1841 Margaret was living on the Cross Wynd with sons James, Gilbert and Andrew, and daughter May (probably the same as Marjory). Gideon (18th/19th C.) from Cavers Parish. He married Mary Bell and their daughter Elizabeth was baptised in Robertson Parish in 1794. In the baptismal record he was ‘at Northhouse in the Parish of Cavers (18th/19th C.) worked as a blacksmith. He married Margaret and Isabella (b.c.1778) grocer and spirit dealer in Newcastle-on-Tyne, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 he was at about 28 Langholm Street and living with Agnes, probably his wife. Gideon (1785/6–1839) 6th son of William, tenant farmer at Singl. He took over the lease from his father. He married Elizabeth Ballantyne, and she died in 1878, aged 70. Their children included: Gideon, who farmed Singl and Hyndhope; and Katherine, who married Alexander Gibson. Gideon (18th/19th C.) resident of Liverpool in 1825 when he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’. He probably had a direct connection to Hawick and was distinct from the Gideon living in London who also subscribed. Gideon (19th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He married Barbara Armstrong in 1828. Gideon (19th C.), C.E., recorded donating several items to the Museum in 1863. Since he was an engineer and living in London, he may well be the son of millwright Gideon born in 1792. He could be the ‘Gideon Scott, London’ who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. Gideon (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Eliza Smith and their children included Walter (b.1860). Gideon (19th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He married Ellen Burnet in 1861. Gideon (b.1839) probably the only son of Gideon, farmer at Singl (who seems to have died the year he was born). He gave up Singl and farmed instead at Hyndhope. In about 1879 he emigrated to New Zealand. He had 4 sons (including James and William) and 2 daughters. Gideon (b.1829/30) son of James. He was a frame-worker living at 6 Round Close in 1861. His wife was Jane and their children included Margaret and Isabella. Gideon (19th C.) worked as a blacksmith. He married Margaret, daughter of Tom Rutherford, blacksmith at Bunchester. They had 1 son and 4 daughters, including Agnes (b.1881), who was born in Melrose Parish. His wife later lived in Hawick. Gilbert (12th C.) recorded as ‘Gilbertus Scotth’ between about 1165 and 1177, when he was asked to perambulate the lands for a charter between Eschina de Molle (wife of Walter, the Steward) and the monks of Paisley Abbey. It is unclear if he was related to other Scotts. Gilbert (13th C.) listed as ‘le Escot’ when he was on an assize for the Lovels in Sussex in 1264. Gilbert (13th C.) recorded in the 1279 assize roll of Northumberland. He was involved in a fight with Richard ‘de Suarland’, and was described as at that time servant in ‘Swarland’. Gilbert (15th C.) Burgess of Edinburgh recorded in a charter of 1498/9. Gilbert (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 when Adam ‘in aldinershope’ had remission for several crimes at the Justice-aire in Selkirk, including resetting him. His crimes including stealing a horse from James Turnbull and another horse from David Dalgleish. It is not clear what branch of the Scotts he may have come from. Gilbert (16th C.) recorded as ‘baile in that part’ in Galashiels in 1535 when the lands there were given to Henry, Lord Methven. Gilbert (16th C.) recorded in 1545 as ‘indweller of Deip…’ when he and his associates were said to have taken a French ship. Gilbert of Bonnington (d.1675) probably the eldest son of James of Bonnington and his 2nd wife Margaret, daughter of William Elliott of Stobs. He died shortly after succeeding his brother Robert. He is buried at Greyfriars in Edinburgh. He was succeeded his younger brother Charles. Note, this is Bonnington in Lothian (distinct from the earlier Scotts of Bonnington family). He is buried in Greyfriars in Edinburgh. Gilbert (b.1814/5) born in Hawick Parish, he was a joiner at Bonchester Cottages. In 1841 he was living at ‘Pirnie-hall’ in Hobkirk and in 1851 at Gatehousecote Cottages. He married Helen Aitchison in Maxton Parish in 1838. Their children included: David (b.1838); Andrew (b.1840); Margaret (b.1843); Christian (b.1845); Janet B. (or Jessie, b.1847); Helen (b.1851); Gilbert (b.1854); and John (b.1856/7). Some of his earlier children were baptised in Ancrum, Maxton and Roxburgh Parishes. Gilbert (b.c.1815) son of Gideon the millwright. In 1841 he was living on the Cross Wynd with his mother and siblings May, Andrew and James. When Gideon Scott & Sons was wound up in 1842 he was living on the Cross Wynd with his siblings Helen, Andrew and Adam, and nephew Walter. Gladstanes (b.1813/4) born in Teviothead Parish, he was a labourer living at Unthank Cottage in Ewesdale in 1841. In 1851 he was a shepherd at Sykefoot in Eves. It is unclear where his first name came from. He married Isabell Wilson from Langholm and their children included Adam (b.1836), Janet (b.1838), Helen (b.1841), Ann (b.1843), John (b.1845), William (b.1847), Margaret (b.1849), Wilhelmina (or ‘Mina’, b.1850) and James (b.1854). He may have been a son of shepherd (and later travelling grocer) Adam and Janet Leithead. Graham of Falnash (17th/18th C.) recorded in 1721 as Bailie of the Regality of Hawick. This seems likely to be a transcription error for Gideon of Falnash. The record of 1721 concerns the trial of Walter Dean for stealing a grey mare from John Currie from Northumberland. Grizel see Grizel. Borthwick Grizel (16th C.) recorded in 1580/1 as widow of John Marshal in Daynzeltoun (i.e. Dingleton) near Melrose. She married a second time to Thomas ‘Freir’, and had relatives Adam Marshal in Dingleton and his son James Marshal, to whom she sold her lands. She may be related to other branches of the Scotts where the same forename occurs. Harry (20th C.) proprietor of a grocer’s shop at the corner of Myreslawgreen and Morrison Place in the mid-1900s. Helen (16th C.) listed among people who were owed money by William Scott, younger of Brancholme, when he died in 1552. She is listed between 2 unnamed ‘nutrici’ (nurses), suggesting this was also her occupation. It is possible she was the same Helen listed among the tenants of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch when he complained against the actions of Walter Ker of Cessford and others in 1549. Helen ‘Nelly’ (18th C.) resident of Hawick. She was on the subscription list for Caw’s ‘Poetical Musum’ in 1784 (one of only 9 women listed). Helen ‘Nelly’ (1789/90–1861) daughter of carrier William and Margaret Gray. She also had a brother William. She was a shopkeeper at Stobs Woodfoot. She died unmarried. Henry (12th/13th C.) witness to 2 grants to Lindores Abbey by Earl David, brother of the Scottish King, in the late 1190s. He also witnessed a ‘quitclaim’ in the Lidores Chartulary in about 1210. Henry (13th C.) recorded on the 1256 assize rolls for Northumberland. He was ‘Henricus Scot’ from ‘Edelingham’. ‘Henricus Scoticus’ is listed in a separate case, and probably a different man. Henry (13th C.) listed on the 1279 assize rolls for Northumberland. He was a Burgess of Newcastle on Tyne at that time. His name is written ‘le Scot’ and ‘le Schot’. There are also pledge made by ‘Henrici Scot’ and ‘Henrico le Scot’ in the same year. He could be the ‘Henry le Escot’ who was a pledge for Nicholas in Newcastle in 1266, and the Henry’le Escot’ who was among men sued by the Prior of Tynemouth in 1269 (with John and Nicholas also listed). Henry (13th C.) recorded in a document from King Edward I to the Sheriff of Cumberland in 1280. He bought a mare at...
Carlisle Fair, and stated that ‘John de Wyncheles’ claimed it was his and furtively stole it from him. This case appears to have been used as a precedent to clarify the March laws to deal with such cross-Border incidents. It seems clear that he was from the Scottish side, although how he was related to other Scotts is unknown. Henry (13th C.) man from Edinburgh who paid homage to Edward I in 1296, where he is recorded as ‘Henry le Scot’. He may also be the ‘Henricus Scotus’ who is listed in 1296 among Scotsmen renouncing their treaty with France, in order to reconcile with England. His lands in Edinburgh were also restored to him in that year. He may be the same Henry who swore fealty to Edward I in 1304. Henry (13th/14th C.) among the men on the inquest at Roxburgh for the inheritance of William de Charteris for the half barony of Wilton in 1303/4. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts, but he is the first known Henry with a local connection. However, it is possible that he is the Burgess of Edinburgh of that name who swore fealty to Edward I in 1296 and had his lands restored. Henry (14th C.) recorded in 1364 in an indenture by Henry Strother, Sheriff of Northumberland, where he is charged to pay money to vintners in Newcastle. It is unclear if he was related to the local Scotts. Henry (15th C.) mentioned in the Exchequer Rolls in 1457 in relation to a loan in Flanders. Henry (15th C.) recorded in 1456/7 as witness to the sasine for Ewesdale passing from Robert of Ewesdale to George Douglas, 4th Earl of Angus. He may have been from Ewesdale, along with Wat, Sim, John and Nichol, who are also listed. Henry (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 when he was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aiire held in Selkirk. His son John was separately fined for not appearing. He was listed as ‘in conwale riggis’, but it is unclear where this was. Henry (15th C.) recorded in Haddington in 1495 when the customs from his sheep skins. It is unclear to which branch of the Scotts he belonged. Perhaps the same Henry, owner of a ship, was recorded in Ross in 1509 and 1513. Henry (16th C.) witness in 1549 to a charter in which Robert Scott of Howspasley granted Appletreehall to Hector, brother of David Turnbull of Wauchope. It is unclear how he might have been related to other local Scotts. Perhaps the same Henry is recorded in the Exchequer Rolls in 1538. Henry (16th C.) recorded as Reader of Hawick Parish in 1574/5, while William Auchmowtie was Minister for Hawick and several neighbouring parishes (i.e. he was the actual minister, obtaining most of the stipend). John Sandilands was Parson about the same time. He was also recorded as Reader in Hawick in 1576, 1578 and 1579, with the position being vacant in 1580. His stipend was £10 8s. 10d. There is no evidence regarding which branch of the family he came from. Henry (17th C.) witness, along with Robert, to the baptism of a son of Thomas Scott in Hawick in 1687. These other Scotts may have been closely related to him. Note that the forename ‘Henry’ was not common among Scotts of the time. Henry (1676–1730) 2nd surviving son of Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch. He was made Earl of Deloraine, Viscount Hermitage and Baron Scott of Goldielands in 1706, just in time to vote for the Treaty of Union. He was chosen as one of the Scottish representative peers in Parliament 1713–30, and also served in the army. His mother complained about how much money she had lavished on him and stated in one letter of 1719/20 that ‘he is now acting the old Scots proverb – ‘ens wod an’ ey the war’ [i.e. ‘daft once, daft always’]. He married Anne, daughter of William Duncombe of Battlesden, and she died in 1720. Their children were: Francis, 2nd Earl of Deloraine, who married Mary Lister and Mary Scrope; Henry, 3rd Earl of Deloraine, who married Elizabeth Fenwick; and Anne, who died in infancy. He secondly married Mary, daughter of Charles Howard and their children were: Georgina Caroline (1727–1809), who married James Peachey; and Henrietta (b.1728), who married Nicholas Boyce. He himself died before his mother. Henry (1712–39/40) 3rd Earl of Deloraine, 2nd son of Henry, 1st Earl. He held the rank of Captain in the Royal Navy. He married Elizabeth, daughter of John Fenwick. Their children were: Henry (1737–1807), 4th Earl; and John (1738–88). After the death of his brother Francis in 1739 he gained the Earldom of Deloraine, as well as the titles of Viscount Hermitage and Lord Goldielands. However, he lived for only another half year, dying of consumption. Henry ‘the Hero o Quebec’ (c.1730–c.60) from the old Hawick family called the ‘Milnport Scotts’, he was son of George, a merchant. He became a Burgess in 1752 and married Jean Sanderson, who by all accounts drove him into the army. The local tradition of his story is as follows (related in the 1863 Transactions by William Norman Kennedy, and mentioned briefly by James Wilson in 1850 and again in 1858). He distinguished himself in military service in Canada, being promoted through the ranks and achieving a commission without purchase as a Major. He led a decisive attack on an island rock at Cape Breton in 1758, permitting Louisburg to be taken. His main moment of fame came in 1759 on the Heights of Abram near Quebec City, where he was reportedly first to enter the gate of the city. There he planted the Union Jack on the walls, apparently uncontrollably exclaiming ‘Hawick for ever’. In this seminal moment in Canadian history Gen. Wolfe’s forces were victorious over the French, although both leaders were slain. Wolfe was nicknamed ‘the Hero of Quebec’ throughout Britain, but in Hawick that epithet was reserved for Henry Scott. Afterwards he was once more promoted, but apparently died aboard ship on the way home before he received the promotion, with relatives and townspeople suspecting he was murdered by jealous fellow officers. This Hawick version bears some similarity to the documented life of a Maj. George Scott, although with several important differences, hence it is difficult to separate fact from fancy here (perhaps the Hawick man was at Quebec, but the connection with Louisburg may have come from the story of ‘Major’ Scott in Percy’s ‘Anecdotes of Enterprise’, popular in the early 19th century; Maj. George Scott was already in the army in 1750 and eventually became Lieutenant-Governor of Dominica, dying in a duel in 1767, his will mentioning his wife Abigail and 3 brothers, at least one of whom was in Halifax, and hence he seems unlikely to be the Hawick man). Nevertheless, it is undoubtedly the case that a man from the Mill Port Scotts played some part in the events in Quebec, even if they were not quite as dramatic as recalled later (presumably Wilson and Kennedy obtained their information from people who were only about a generation removed from the historical events). A verse of James Hogg’s ‘Teribus’ commemorated Scott in the early 19th century – ‘Long this boast on truth’s been founded On Quebec’s high rampart sounded – Hawick for ever, and independent!’ [JH]. His wife survived him by about 50 years and lived for a while at the cottage called ‘the Saaverin’ near Stobs, living on a government pension. It is said that he had no children. Henry (1737–1807) 4th Earl of Deloraine, elder son of Henry, 3rd Earl. On the death of his father, when he was only 2 years old, he succeeded to the Earldom of Deloraine, as well as the titles of Viscount Hermitage and Lord Goldielands. In 1763 he married Frances, daughter of Thomas Heath, but they separated before 1780. He died in London without issue and his titles became extinct. Henry (1741–1817) 2nd son of Robert, farmer at Singlie, and grandson of William in Milsington. He farmed at Over Deloraine in the Ettrick valley from 1770. He paid the horse taxes there in the period 1785–97 and the dog taxes in 1797. He married a daughter of Anderson of Rashiegrain, with whom he had a daughter Alison. He secondly married Agnes, daughter of John Sibbald. Their children were: John, also tenant at Over Deloraine; Henry, farmer at Over Kirkhope; James (1792–1864); William, who became a doctor with the East India Company; Margaret, who married Dr. Thomas Anderson of Selkirk in 1808; and Eliza, who married Rev. W.B. Shaw, minister of Roberton and later Ewes. Eliza and Margaret were said to have been the prototypes for the characters of ‘Minna’ and ‘Brenda’ in Sir Walter Scott’s ‘The Pirate’, and Eliza was also celebrated as ‘The Bonnie Lass o’ Deloraine’ in the Ettrick Shepherd’s poem (note that Keith Scott mixes the 2 daughter’s husbands). Henry (1746–1812) 3rd Duke of Buccleuch, son of Francis Scott, Earl of Dalkeith, and grandson of the 2nd Duke. He succeeded as a child, was educated at Eton, and when young spent nearly 3 years travelling in Europe with Dr. Adam Smith. His ‘curator’ during his minority was Charles Townshend, his step-father. He gained the Crumhaugh estates in about 1760, as well as many other local lands (including Hardwood and Teindside) about the same time. He settled in Dalkeith, and spent much of his time in Scotland. It is said that he would sometimes visit his tenants in disguise. He made his first visit to Hawick in 1764, when he was welcomed by the Bailies. In 1767 (while he was still a minor) his agents started proceedings against the Town of Hawick, claiming rights of pasturage on the Common; when the final decision was made in 1777 he gained 330 Scots acres of what had been Hawick Common. Additionally in about 1769 he (or his Commissioners) brought a case against some inhabitants of Hawick for not paying multures on ‘his Grace’s mill of Hawick’. In Selkirk in 1778 a bill is recorded ‘for drink to the men who carried the colours before his Grace the Duke of Buccleuch’. He was taxed for having a either 1 or 2 gamekeepers at Bowhill in the period 1778–90 and was taxed for having 4 dogs at Bowhill and 15 in Langholm in 1797. He was responsible for making Sir Walter Scott Sheriff in Selkirkshire and was the first President of the Royal Society of Edinburgh in 1783. He published a paper called ‘Abstract of a Register of the Weather kept at Brauxholme, for ten years, ending December 31, 1783’.
On the outbreak of war with France in 1778 he raised a regiment of fencibles, mainly from his own estates. In 1785 he paid for half the costs to have the main streets of Hawick properly paved and gave £100 for the new Town Hall in 1786. He is also credited with support for the Scots Dyke to Haremoss Turnpike. In 1785 he paid the land tax for lands in Selkirk Parish. In 1788 his lands in Roxburghshire included large parts of Castleton, Cavers, Hawick, Melrose, Roberton and Wilton Parishes, as well as Hassendean, the Barony of Eckford and Lempitlaw, the teinds of Maxton, the customs of St. Boswell’s Fair and part of Lanton. In 1794 he succeeded to Caroline Park and other estates that were held by his mother. In 1798 he became Colonel of the militia in Edinburgh, assuming control again in 1803 after the truce broke down. He gained the Queensberry and other titles of the Douglases of Drumlanrig in 1810. He was also Lord Lieutenant of Roxburghshire 1804–12. He became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1810. Known as ‘Duke Henry’ or ‘the Good Duke’, he had a reputation for being generous and was said to be highly popular among the locals. However, in 1767 he (or presumably his advisors) raised an action in the Court of Session against Hawick, concerning ownership of the Common, which ultimately led to the Division of 1777. ‘Midlothian Fencibles’. He also established Newcastle in 1793 and was known as an agricultural improver. In 1767 he married Lady Elizabeth Montagu, only surviving daughter of George, Duke of Montagu; she became a patron of many charities in Edinburgh and died in 1827, aged 84. The Buccleuch family gained vast estates in England through this marriage. He was succeeded by his son Charles William Henry (1772–1819), who adopted the surname Montagu-Scott. His other children were: George (b.1768), Earl of Dalkeith, who died in infancy; Mary (1769–1823), who married James George, Viscount Stopford and later Earl of Courtown; Elizabeth (1770–1837), who married Alexander, 10th Lord Home; Caroline (1774–1854), who married Sir Charles Douglas of Kelhead, who was later 6th Marquess of Queensberry; Henry James (1776–1845), Baron Montagu of Broughton; and Harriet (1780–1833), who married William, Earl of Ancram, who was later 6th Marquess of Lothian. He died at Dalkeith and is buried there – ‘Contented, therefore, we maun be, E’en wi’ the hut we sit in – They say o’ landlords east and west, Oor ain Duk Henry is the best O’ a’ the Lairds o’ Britain’ [HSR]. Henry (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret (or ‘Peggy’) Grieve and their children included Walter (b.1772) and Michael (b.1774). The witnesses in 1772 were Walter and John Grieve who were surely related to his wife. He may be the shoemaker Henry who (along with ex-Bailie Andrew) witnessed baptisms in 1776, 1778 and 1791 for meralent William. Henry (18th/19th C.) of Horsleyhill and Belford (18th/19th C.) son of Francis James, he was the last Laird of Horsleyhill. In 1811 he was recorded as owner of the lands of Belford in Morebattle Parish. In 1792 he married Catherine, daughter of John Hay of Newhall. His only child was Hannah Charlotte, who married Sir John James Douglas (whose son became Sir George Henry Scott-Douglas on inheriting the lands) and secondly married William Scott-Kerr of Chatto and Sunlaws. The ‘Mrs. Scott of Horsleyhill’ who died in Edinburgh in 1806 may have been his wife. Henry James Montagu (1776–1845) Baron Montagu of Boughton, younger brother of the 4th Duke of Buccleuch. He acted as guardian to his nephew Walter, the 5th Duke, during his minority. The pair were made Honorary Burgess when they passed through Hawick in 1821. He succeeded to the Montagu Baronetcy on the death of his grandfather, George Duke of Montagu, and adopted Montagu as his surname. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. In 1804 he married his cousin Jane Margaret Douglas (d.1859), who was eldest daughter of Archibald, Lord Douglas of Douglas and his aunt Frances. They had 4 daughters: Lucy Elizabeth (d.1877), who married Cospatrick Alexander, Earl of Home; Mary Margaret, who married Lieut.-Col. Frederick Clinton; Jane Caroline (d.1846), who died unmarried; and Caroline Georgina, who married George William Hope of Luffness. He was born and died in London. Henry ‘Harry’ (18th/19th C.) resident of the Millport in Hawick. The death of his wife Jane is recorded in 1824. It is possible he was one of the Millport Scotts, and hence related to Henry, the ‘Hero of Quebec’. Henry (1790–1873) 2nd son of Henry, tenant at Over Deloraine and Agnes Sibbald. He became Laird of Over Kirkhope and tenant in Crosslie, as well as being a hatter in Edinburgh. He was also in partnership with his cousin, Henry Scott, 5th son of William, tenant in Singile. His company ‘Messrs. H. Scott & Co. hat manufacturers Edinburgh’ subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. In 1820 he married Isabella Martin. Their children were: Henry (b.1830), probably died young; John, tenant in Crosslie; William Henry (b.1836), who emigrated to Canada; Elizabet, who married James Alexander; Agnes, who married Matthew Whit- ing; Isabella, who married Mr. Mein, dentist in Edinburgh; Janet; and Margaret, Henry Erskine (d.1847) son of William and decendent of the Scotts of Clarilaw, he was born at Brighton. He succeeded to the lands of Ashieburn when his father died in 1807, but he sold them before his own death. Henry (1796/7-1866) farmer of 1100 acres, employing 4 peo- tants and lodgers in 1841 and 1851. By 1861 he was farmer of 1100 acres, employing 4 peo- tants and lodgers in 1841 and 1851. By 1861 he was farmer of 1100 acres, employing 4 peo- tants and lodgers in 1841 and 1851. By 1861 he was farmer of 1100 acres, employing 4 peo-Walter Scott of Harden' in 1644 in a registration of rental for Regality of Melrose lands, and further mentioned in bonds in Melrose in the 1640s, when he was Bailie of the Regality. In 1621 he married Jean Hoppringle of Galashiels, daughter and heiress of Sir James Pringle of Galashiels and Smalholm. Their children were: Anne; James, who succeeded and married Janet, daughter of Sir James Murray of Philiphaugh; Walter, a Major in the Army; George, progenitor of the Scotts of Auchty-Donald in Aberdeenshire; John, who settled in Italy; David, who became a surgeon in Edinburgh; Francis, who was referred to as 'brother-german' of James in 1664 and 1665; and William, still alive in 1652, and was probably the Capt. William 'brother to Galloscheills' in 1658. Hugh of Gala (d.c.1697) son of James. He was recorded as 'fiar' in 1673, in a deed along with his father. He was probably the Laird of Gala whose lands in Selkirkshire were valued at about £3600 in 1678. He was M.P. for Selkirkshire 1681–82 and on the Commission of Supply for Selkirkshire in 1685. However, he was apprehended in 1684 (along with Walter, Earl of Tarras and other Border Lairds) for refusing to support Episcopalianism. He married Isabella, daughter of Sir Thomas Ker of Cavers. His children included: Sir James; who succeeded; Thomas; who married Elizabeth Borthwick; Hugh; Patrick, who died young; John, who became a Colonel in the Guards; Grizel, who married John Pringle of Torsonce; Margaret, who died young; and Anna, who married Walter of Raeburn, then Henry McDougall of Makerstoun and finally a Home of Eccles. His son James was served as his heir in 1697 and his will was recorded in 1698. Rev. Hugh (1630/1–91) recorded as 'Hew', he graduated from Edinburgh University in 1649. He was called to Bedrule in late 1657 and ordained there in 1658. However, he was deprived in 1662 for being a Covenant and forced to leave the Presbytery, being later replaced by James Adamson. He was 'indulged' (i.e. allowed to resume his duties again) in 1672 and became minister at Oxnam, moving to Galashiels later the same year. He continued there until 1678 and by 1688 (the dates may be confused here) was minister at Stow. He was a member of the Assembly of 1690. He was described as 'faithfull and painfull in his calling' and 'singularly pious'. In 1659 he married Jean, only daughter of Lancelot Pringle of Leys and she died in 1709. Their children were David, Helen (who married Thomas Walde in Edinburgh, and was allowed a guinea by the Presbytery in 1725) and David (again, or another error). Hugh of Gala (d.1771) 5th Laird of Gala, son of Sir James. He was recorded as a Commissioner for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1761. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Col. John Stewart of Stewartfield. Their children were: James (b.1730); who died young; John (b.1732); who succeeded; Elizabeth, who married Archibald Douglas of Cavers; Euphemia, who died young; Magdalene, who also died young; Anne; Catherine, who married Capt. John Douglas of Ederton, a brother of the Laird of Cavers, who later became Laird himself; Christian (b.1737); Isobel, who died young; and Stewart (b.1741). Hugh of Harden (1758–1841) son of Walter and Diana Home Campbell (daughter of the last Earl of Marchmont). There are documents of 1767, 1774 and 1779 confirming him as the heir to Harden. He was 'younger of Harden' when admitted to the Roxburghshire voters' roll in 1780. He became 11th (or 12th) Baron of Harden in 1795 and then 4th (later corrected to 6th) Lord Polwarth in 1835, the title being claimed through his mother. He also inherited Mabonlaw and Highchesters in 1796. He was listed among the voters in Selkirkshire in 1788. He was M.P. for Berwickshire 1780–84 and in 1812 was appointed Deputy-Lieutenant of Roxburghshire. He was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1788 and listed as a Commissioner for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1805 and 1819. In the Land Tax Rolls of 1802 he is recorded paying tax for 'The two Oakwoods & Mill', as well as 'Whithillbrae, Hitlarburn' and Inner Huntly in Yarrow Parish. In 1808 he was on the subscription list for Jamieson's Scots dictionary. He is probably the Scott of Harden who amazed the residents of the Yarrow valley by driving his carriage and 2 ponies round the narrow road that skirted St. Mary's Loch. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. In 1820 he assumed the additional surname of Hepburne, the estates of the Hepburnes of Humbie descending to him through his great-great-grandmother, Helen Hepburne, Countess of Tarras. He subscribed to Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. In 1795 he married Harriet Bruhl, daughter of Hans Maurice, Count de Bruhl of Martinskirk, Saxon Ambassador at the Court of St. James's. This Lady Polwarth was a patron of Sir Walter Scott (and also something of an artist, with sketches of her young sons Henry Francis and Francis surviving); she died in 1853. His children were: Charles Walter (b.1796), who died young; Henry Francis, who succeeded; Rev. William Hugh (1801–68), Rector of Maiden Newton, Dorset; Rev. George William (1804–30), Rector of Kentisbeare, Devon, who was given the lands of Bewlie in 1825, and died without issue; Francis (1806–84), who gained the lands of Bewlie in 1831; Harriet Diana; Maria Amabel, who married Maj.-Gen. George C.D. Lewis; Elizabeth Anne, who married Col. Charles Wyndham of Rogate, Sussex, M.P.; and Anne, who married Charles Baillie, Lord Jerviswood. He had his portrait painted in 1787. Hugh (d.1818) recorded at Eweslees on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1788–97. He had 2 farm horses, as well as a saddle horse, along with David, who was presumably his brother or son. He also paid the dog and clock taxes in 1797. Col. Hugh of Gala (1764–95) son of John, he was 7th Laird. He became Colonel in the 26th (Cameronian) Regiment and died during an insurrection in Grenada. He paid the land tax for Galashiels and Blindlee in 1785. In 1788 he was listed among the voters of Selkirkshire, but said to be ‘an officer in the Army, now in Canada’ who would vote with the interests of the Duke of Buccleuch. In 1787 he married Isabella, daughter of Prof. Alexander Monro of Craiglockhart and Auchenbowie. They had an only child, John, who succeeded. Maj. Hugh of Gala (1822–77) son of John, he was 9th Laird. He held the rank of Major in the Dumfries, Roxburgh and Selkirk Militia. He was also Deputy Lieutenant of Selkirkshire and a Justice of the Peace in that county. In 1857 he married Elizabeth Isabella, daughter and heiress of Capt. Charles Kinnaird Johnstone-Gordon. Their children were: John Henry Francis Kinnaird, who succeeded; Hugh James Elibank (b.1861), who adopted the surname Scott-Makdougall when he succeeded to Makerstoun from his first cousin twice-removed, and his son Henry John became 11th Laird of Gala; Magdalen Augusta Lavinia, who married Lieut.-Gen. Sir Francis John Davies, Commander-in-Chief Scottish Command; and Maj. Charles Archibald Ramsay (1863–1920) of the South Wales Borderers. He died in France. Hugh (18th/19th C.) gardener at Wells. His wife Agnes Veitch died in 1821, aged 45, and is buried in Bedrule kirkyard, along with a daughter, Agnes. Humphrey (15th/16th C.) recorded at the Justice- aire in Lauder in 1493 as ‘umfridus scot’. Thomas Brown was fined for not presenting him to answer for the death of John Atkinson. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts. Iain Hunter (1906–) son of Frank T. and Janet Hunter. He worked for joinery firm Brydon’s and attended Borders College, eventually joining the technical staff and later the teaching staff. He was a founder member of the band Scocha with David Chapman. Even although he spent most of his working life in Gala, he has been heavily involved in promoting Hawick’s culture and history. He sings ‘The Bonnie Banner Blue’ on the 2006 CD ‘Hawick and Teviotdale in Song and Poetry’ for which he produced all the recordings. He has been involved in many local projects, including being the driving force behind the James Thomson memorial statue and the Archæological Society Transactions archive. Ingram (d.1616) one of the men who, in 1615, slew the sheep belonging to Sir James Douglas at Howpasley, at the instigation of Lady Scott, widow of Howpasley. He fled to the ‘Northe’, where he was later apprehended along with ‘Wattie’ Scott (possibly a near relative) and was hanged in Edinburgh. He may have been related to some of the others, who were Jock ‘the Suckler’, ‘Marion’s Geordie’ and William ‘in Satchells’. He met them at Birny Cleuch, between Eilrig and Howpasley before they ‘ran throw the haill flock of sheiw, slew, lamet, and menzet to the number of threscoir’. Isaac (12th/13th C.) probably from Brechin, he was a Clerk of St. Andrews Diocese. His surname was sometimes ‘Forteviot’, referring to a benefice he held in Perthshire. This suggests he was not related to other Scotts. He witnessed several charters in the 1190s. He witnessed a notification by the Bishop of St. Andrews in 1204, and is not recorded after 1213. He had a son, Nazar. Isobel (15th/16th C.) daughter of Robert of Aikwood and sister of Michael. She married James Murray, who owned the lands of Bowhill. In 1529 she was already a widow when her daughter Isabella Murray resigned the southern half of Bowhill to Michael and Michael’s son William (her nephew). She is recorded in 1533 as wife of Alexander ‘Elwand’ whom she assigned her lands in Kershop (in Ettrick Forest) to her ‘brother german’ Michael. In 1539 she was ‘Esebell Scott’ when she discharged a loan from Michael. Isobel (17th C.) recorded in 1658 when Margaret Oliver was fined by the Magistrates for calling her ‘witchesgait, and saying that she devoored her awine child’. Isobel (18th/19th C.) recorded as a witness in 1802 and 1804 to baptisms in Hawick. The other witness was Mrs. Arkle, probably mother of the Hawick minister. The next baptisms recorded were for George Nicholson and Isabel Scott in 1804 and for James Sanderson and Isabel Scott in 1811, both of which could also be her. One of the witnesses in 1811 was Agnes, who may have been related to her. Isabella (1694–1748) daughter of Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch, with her 2nd husband, Charles Cornwallis. She was known as Lady Isabella Scott and was the only one of the Duchess’ children to outlive her. In 1731 she was infested by her mother in the lordship of Melrose. She was named the Duchesses ‘sole executrix in England’ in her will of 1722/3. According to her mother’s last will, she was also given the personal estate of the Duchess in England in 1732. She died unmarried and Melrose was inherited by Francis, Duke of Buccleuch.

Isabella nee Hogg (b.1793/4) married Walter Scott, grocer and spirit dealer. She was listed as a grocer on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory and on Buccleuch Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 she was a widow at about 8 Buccleuch Street, living with her children Agnes, Walter, Robert, Mary Ann and Andrew. Isobel (13th C.) recorded in 1296 when she paid homage to Edward I. She was from Fife and was one of only a small number of women on the list. Her name is recorded as ‘Isabele Scot’. She was presumably a widow or hearse. Isobel ‘Lady Synton’ nee Douglas (16th/17th C.) wife of the last Walter of Synton, who died in 1608. She was daughter of William Douglas of Whittinghame and probably the aunt of Ann Douglas, who married Sir William Douglas of Cavers. She appears to have thereafter lived at South Synton. In 1615 she is described as ‘the guidwyffe of South Sinton’ when she was summoned to the Presbytery for publicly abusing the minister of Ashkirk, Alexander Hogg, between the Sunday sermons. In the next year she was charged with not attending her own church, saying ‘She wald not repare to her kirk all the dayes of her lyf, nouther wald she gif ane reason therefor’. This presumably stemmed from a disagreement with the minister’s new ways. It is stated that she preferred to take communion at Lilliesleaf and Hassendean, and was rebuked by the ministers there for doing so. She apparently eventually reconciled with the minister and was readmitted to the Ashkirk communion. Her children were George of Synton (who sold the estate), Anne, Archibald, Elspeth and Christian. Isobel (17th C.) recorded in the Ashkirk Session records of 1635 as ‘Isabel Scott in Synton Mill’. She complained that Margaret Tullie had called her a witch and a thief. Tullie denied calling her a witch, but claimed she could prove that she was a thief, and called several witnesses to support the claim that she had robbed the purse of Andrew Nichol in Synton Mill. However, the outcome was ‘that they ken her to be ane honest woman, and free of any thyft so far as they ken or know’. Her accuser was made to sit at ‘ye place of repentence’. Isobel (17th C.) resident of Raperlaw. In about 1684 she was on a list of Covenanters fugitives. Isobel (17th/18th C.) recorded receiving money from Ashkirk Parish in 1727. Isobel of Whitehaugh (d.1759) probably daughter of Walter and sister of Rev. Robert of Roberton. She succeeded to the Whitehaugh estates on the death of her brother William in 1751. In 1753 she married Rev. William Somerville, minister of Hawick (and was said to be about 80 at that point). She died without any children and her second cousin John succeeded her to Whitehaugh. J. of Grahamswood (17th C.) signatory of the Covenant in Hawick in 1638. His name is given as ‘J. Scott of Grahamswood’, but it is unclear where this might have been. James (13th C.) recorded as James ‘le Scot’ in 1256 when he was arrested in the town of ‘Roubiry’ (probably Rothbury) along with Robert of Craling, on suspicion of larceny. James (15th C.) servant of the King recorded in 1454 when he received his fee. It is unclear to which branch of the family he belonged. James (15th C.) recorded as witness to the 1464/5 sasine granting the Barony of Cavers and Sherifdom of Roxburghshire to Archibald Douglas. He appears as ‘Jacobo Scot’. He may be the same as James of Kirkurd. James (15th C.) witness to a sasine for the lands of Boonraw in 1487. Other witnesses included Adam Scott and local landowners. It is unclear to which branch of the Scotts he belonged, but it is possible he was the same as James of Kirkurd and Hassendean. James of Kirkurd (d.c.1501) later referred to as to ‘of Over and Nether Newhall and Hassendean’. He was the 3rd (or perhaps 2nd) son of the 1st Sir Walter of Branxholme and Buccleuch, his mother being Margaret Cockburn of Hender-land; hence he was brother of David of Branxholme and Buccleuch and Alexander of Abington and Howpasley. However, the fact that his name does not appear in an entail of Branxholme made by David in 1488 (while those of Alexander and other more distant Scotts appear) suggests that he may not have been a full brother of David. He was witness to a ‘letter of revision’ in 1482 between Robert Scott of Haining and David Scott of Branxholme. In 1484 he was granted Over and Nether Newhall (later called Burnhead and Burnfoot) from their superior, David Lindsay of the Byres. He appears to have resigned Kirkkurd at the same time. He also acquired the lands of Hassendean from the Cunninghams of Glencairn. He was probably the ‘Jacobi Scot’ who leased the lands of Falside in Ettrick Forest from 1473 and in 1490 granted the lands of Middlestead of Falside by James II for helping to expel rebels. Also in 1477 his fine for retaining a cottage in Falside was remitted. He was on the panel for Walter Scott inheriting the Branxholme and Buccleuch titles and lands in 1492; he is there ‘Jacobum Scot de Hasinden’. He may have been the ‘James Scot of Kirkvoed’ transcribed as witness to a document in 1494 relating to lands in Hassendean, and he was ‘of Hassendean’ when he was on the panel for the inheritance of Synton by Alexander Erskine. Also in 1494 he gave a charter of the lands of Galalaw and the Nether Mains of Newhall to his son David, reserving the hereditary to himself. Among the witnesses were his son John, as well as Robert of ‘Achinstancelieich’, and 3 other Scotts, William, Walter and Robert, who may have been related. His wife Margaret was also mentioned in this charter, but her surname is not recorded. He is probably the James who had 16 sheep stolen from him at ‘fawysd’ according to a case brought against John in Tushielaw in 1494/5. Also in 1494/5 he was ‘in hassinden’ when his son David had remission for stealing livestock from farms of the Earl of Bothwell. He is probably the ‘Jacobo Scot’ who was granted income from the land of Falside in 1499; in 1501 the rental was assigned to his wife Margaret and son John. Also in 1501 he was recorded in the Exchequer Rolls as ‘Jacobi Scot in Hassindane’ in relation to remittance of a fine on John Hay of Yester. In 1503 he is still recorded having the lease of Falside (although he may have been deceased by this time). His sons were: John Scott of Over Newhall (later Burnhead) and of Hassendean, his heir; David of Hassendean; William of Hassendean; Robert of Nether Newhall (later Burnfoot); and Adam of Clarilaw. One of his daughters may have married George Gledstains (who is listed as ‘brother’ of Adam in Clarilaw and William in 1526). He was probably also the James whose wife Margaret received the lands of Falside (in Ettrick) ‘in heritent’ in 1510, with the heirs of the deceased John (possibly his son) being granted heredity of Falside (which was later in the hands of the Scotts of Hassendean). He is probably also the James of Hassendean whose son Walter was witness to a document for the Scotts of Branxholme in 1500. James (15th/16th C.) recorded in the Exchequer Rolls several times in the period 1494–1513. He was somehow associated with the King’s stable. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. Perhaps the same James ‘once in the King’s avery’ (i.e. where oats and other food for horses was kept) was given a payment in 1538. James (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as ‘in Askirk’ (i.e. Ashikirk) when he served as surety for Walter, son of Walter of Headshaw, who had stolen sheep from several farms. Robert of Stirches was also surety. This suggests that he was related to the Scotts of Headshaw and of Stirches. Also in 1502 he had remission for stealing cattle from the farm of Cauldshiel (along with Edmond Taylor), belonging to Ralph Ker, with his surety being John in Hassendean. Additionally in 1502 he was surety for Hector Lauder in Clerklands, for stealing horses from Lauder. In 1526 he was listed as being ‘of Askirk’ among the many Borderers who were pardoned for supporting the Homes against the Earl of Arran (perhaps a couple of years earlier); his son Walter was also listed. John of Ashikirk, killed in 1526 and Walter in Ashkirk, recorded in 1533, were possibly descendants. James of Broadmeadows (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 being ‘de braidmados’ when his son William had remission for stealing cattle from John Romanno of that Ilk. The surety was John Scott in Hassendean, who may have been related. He was also ‘de braidmados’ in 1502 when his son John had remission for stealing 2 horses from Yair, with David of Galalaw as surety. This suggests that there were Scotts who owned land at Broadmeadows much earlier than the branch that would be there in the 17th century. It is unclear how he might have been connected to other branches of the Scotts, but he may have been related to the Scotts of Hassendean or Galalaw. Walter in Broadmeadows, brother of John in Hassendean, was also recorded at the same Justice- aire in 1502 and may have been related. Given the similarity of names, it is possible he is the same man as James of Kirkkurd. James (d.1563) 3rd son of Robert of Allanhaugh and Whitchester. He was educated for the church. During the reign of James V he was Clerk to the Treasury, and was recorded being paid as such in 1533. He is probably the James, writer in the Exchequer, who is recorded in 1538 and 1540. In 1543 he succeeded Alexander Scott (of unknown connection) as Provost of the Collegiate Church of Corstorphine. Like his predecessor he was also one of the Auditors of the Treasurer’s Accounts (1544–62) and is recorded several times in this period as Provost of Corstorphine. In 1554 he was appointed as an Ordinary Lord of Session. He had a manse built at Corstorphine, which contained his coat of arms. In 1560 he was granted the parsonage of Kirkurd (in Peeblesshire) by Trinity College. He along with William, Burgess of Edinburgh (and presumably a near relative). The man of the same name who was ‘servitor to the Treasurer’ in 1597/8 may have been related. James (15th/16th C.) recorded as being ‘in Holfurd’ (probably Howford) on the 1526 list of Borders men pardoned for their support of the Homes in attacking the Earl of Arran. James ‘Beld Jamie’ (15th/16th C.) recorded among the many Borders men who had remission in 1526 for their earlier attack on the Earl of Arran. He is listed as being ‘callit Beld Jame’, with James ‘in Holfurd’ and James ‘of Ingland’ listed right before and after him, respectively. He was presumably bald. James (15th/16th C.) listed among the Borderers given remission in 1526 for their earlier attack on the Earl of Arran. He is recorded as being ‘of Ingland’, but it is unclear what this means. James (16th C.) recorded as Bailie of Selkirk in 1528, 1530, 1531, 1534 and 1541. In 1534 he was procurator for his cousin Peter Porteous. In 1541 one of the witnesses was John, who may have been related. Probably the same James was Bailie there according to the Exchequer Rolls for 1541. James of Flex (16th C.) witness to a 1556 document relating to the transfer of Nether Harden between Simon Scott of Fenwick and William Scott of Harden. James (16th C.) resident of ‘Quhithoip’ who was listed in 1549 among those whose lands had been attacked by Walter Ker of Cessford and others, in a complaint by Sir Walter of Buccleuch. His lands were probably Whithope in Yarrow (rather than Whithope in the Borthwick valley). Adam in Whithope was also listed and Helen was listed right after him and so was probably a relative. He is probably related to the James, recorded in Whitehope around 1580. James (16th C.) listed among people who were owed money by William Scott, younger of Branholme, when he died in 1552. He is listed as ‘Jacob Scott eius seruo’, presumably meaning he was a servant of William. James ‘Bailzie’ (16th C.) mentioned in Hawick’s first existing sasine (of any detail), dating from 1558, when he was sold a piece of land (perhaps corresponding to what was later called ‘Wylie’s Dub’) by Alexander Scott. He is referred to as ‘alias Bailzie’, suggesting that this was a nickname, and that he was not in fact a Bailie of the Town (or had previously been a Bailie). James (d.c.1564) son of Walter ‘in Hasindene’. He was listed among the men tried in 1564 for the murder of David of Hassendean (who may have been a relative of some sort). Other men involved included Elliots of Horsleyhill. It appears that he was one of the men who were executed for the crime. His relationship to the other Scotts is unclear, however, it may be that he was a nephew of the David who was murdered. These events may have been the catalyst for the deadly feud between the Scotts and the Elliots that lasted for several years. James (16th C.) illegitimate son of John Scott, who was Vicar of Hawick in the 1530s. He appears to have been legitimised in 1538, the document given by John of Burnhead. In 1556 he had a precept of sasine, also from John of Burnhead. This was probably for the lands his father had held at Wester and Easter Muremaw (later called ‘Lees’). James of Alton Croft (16th C.) listed by Scott of Satchells as ‘of Alton-Crofts’ among the 24 ‘Pensioners’ of the house of Buccleuch. He was said to have been descended from the Scotts of Allanhaugh. He must have been related to the later Walter of Alton Croft. James (16th C.) listed in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch as the man who collected the teinds for Hassendean and Cavers. He was presumably an agent of some sort for the Scotts of Buccleuch. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Jameses. James of Roberton (16th C.) recorded as witness to a sasine of 1559 involving Harden and as witness in 1579 to the payment of Ker of Cessford’s fine for the failure of young Ker of Faldonside to marry Janet, sister of Buccleuch. In 1590 he was listed on the roll of ‘Landit Men’ of Scotland. He may be the James ‘of Roberton’ who was listed among Scotts and others charged to find sureties for ‘observing the King’s peace’ in 1599. It is unclear how he was related to the Johns of Roberton recorded earlier and later. It is possible he was a brother of the former John (and hence younger son of Stephen) and uncle of the John who was supposedly present at the rescue of Kinmont Willie. James (d.bef. 1580) probably son of John, who was younger of Syston. He was described as ‘in Quhitslaid’ (i.e. Whitslade) in 1574 when he and William Scott ‘in Harden’ paid back Sir Walter Scott of Birkenside (later Howpasley) for a loan on the mill of Easter Burnfoot. They also had a ‘letter of reversion’ for a loan on the lands of ‘Auldtrouss’ in Ettrick Forest as well as Easter Craik in the same year. In 1580 he was the deceased James ‘in Quhittisland’ when there was a marriage contract between his son Robert and Elizabeth, sister of Robert of Aikwood; his brothers George in Synton and William in Huntly are also mentioned. His son Robert witnessed a transaction in 1580 for Robert of Aikwood. James (16th C.) recorded as ‘elder’ in Selkirk in 1579. This was in regard to lands pertaining to John Keane (son of William Keane) and Janet Scott, with James younger also mentioned. He also witnessed another transaction in the same year and may be the Burgess of Selkirk who represented the Laird of Buccleuch’s tenants in Huntly in another case in Selkirk in 1579. Additionally he sold lands in Selkirk to John Govenlock. In 1579/80 he was ‘elder burgess in Sel’k when his son Robert witnessed a transaction. He is probably the James recorded as a deceased Burgess of Selkirk in 1580 in instruments relating to his son and heir Robert. In 1581 he was recorded as occupier of lands in Selkirk that had previously belonged to the Earl of Angus; James, younger was also mentioned. James (16th C.) Reader of Ashkirk Parish in 1575 (not to be confused with John, who was minister here at the same time). In 1579 he was listed as ‘reder’ among people who owed money to Isabel Donald, widow of Robert of Palace. A record in the Selkirk Protocol Books for 1579/80 states that he was to take Thomas Cranston to ‘the parish kirk of Ashkirk’ and ‘thair to place him in the pulpat and deliver the buk of god in his hands’, giving Cranston possession of the parsonage and vicarage, as well as the ‘mauss gleib and kirkland’. He was also described as Vicar in 1586. However, in 1582 he was one of 6 preachers (including readers from Hassendean, Lilliesleaf and Southead) who were deprived for ‘abusing the sacraments’, and then excommunicated in 1588 for continuing in the offence. In 1590 he was ‘in Syntounmylne’ on a long list of offenders who ordered to appear to answer for their religious offences. In 1590 he was one of 3 men (the others being Thomas Ker, vicar of Old Roxburgh and Thomas Newbie, vicar at Hassendean) who agreed never to abuse the sacraments nor function in the kirk after being threatened with death, and it was decided that ‘they sould be tane to the mercat-croce of Edinburghe, and stand twa houris, with paiparis on thair heidis, contening the cyme’. It may be that he had been a Catholic priest before the Reformation, and had not abandoned his ways. He was also described as ‘at South Synton Mill’ and ‘in Sintonmill’ and was a close associate of Thomas Ker, vicar of Old Roxburgh. James (16th C.) cordiner in Hawick recorded in 1581, brother of George and Robert (who was a Burgess). In 1581 he and his brother Robert wrote a ‘letter of slains’ in Hawick, forgiving the murderers of his brother, who were the Scotts from Allanhaugh. Over Southfield and others. He signed the document ‘witht my hand twicheand the pen led by the notar vunderwritin’ (suggesting that, unlike his brother Robert, he was not able to write). It is unclear how this family might be related to other Scotts. James (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1581 as ‘younger’ in Selkirk, along with John ‘elder’. Also in 1581 he refused to purchase 2 horses from Borthwickbrae as part of an assessment of taxes there and was selected as an arbitrator in another case. He could be the James who represented Selkirk in a dispute with John Murray of Philipaugh in about 1606. It is possible he is the ‘James Scott, called Litle James’ who was a Burgess in Selkirk in 1590 when there was a band for not harming Patrick Murray of Falahill; ‘Litle William’ is also listed and so may have been a relative. James (16th C.) resident of ‘Quhithoip’, which was probably Whitehope in Yarrow. He was surely related to (or perhaps the same man) as the James in the same place in 1549. In 1580 Alexander Gledstains, Burgess of Selkirk, transferred an annual rent for a tenement in Selkirk to him. In 1581 he was recorded in ‘Quhithop’ and ‘collector of the maills of Ettrick Forest’ when Patrick Murray of Falahill offered to pay him for taxes due on Lewnshope, Hangingshaw and Harehead and Adam Hislop in Tinnis claimed he had already paid him for the same lands. Perhaps the same James ‘in Quhithoip’ was recorded in 1592 when Thomas Ker of Cavers gave caution for him. It is possible he is the same James ‘in Quhithoip clerk in this detail’ who acted as clerk for an indenture between the March Wardens in 1594/5. He may also be the James ‘in Quhithoip’, Chamberlain-Deput of Ettrick Forest, recorded in 1603 when he requested money from Stewart of Traquair. He was deceased in 1629 when recorded being ‘in Quelthope’ (i.e. Whitehope in Yarrow) when his former lands in Selkirk are mentioned. James of Whithope (16th C.) perhaps related to earlier Scotts of Whithope. He was ‘in Quhithoip’ in 1580 when he received 200 merks from Robert Scott of Haining for the lands of ‘Maining Mot’. He could be the same man as James in Whitehope in Yarrow; despite William, son of John in Whames, being one of the witnesses, it is still likely that his lands were those in Yarrow rather than the Borthwick. In 1592 his cautioner was Thomer Ker.
of Cavers Carre, for his good behaviour and loyalty to the King. In 1602 he was ‘of Quithoip’ and described as a ‘man’ of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, when Sir William Stewart of Traquair complained that he had stolen from his farms and then obtained a suspension of the letters against him, later stealing 50 sheep from his tenants at Blackhouse; not appearing he was denounced as a rebel. Also in 1602 he was denounced again for not paying £424 for his part of the taxes of Ettrick Forest. Robert of Haining was his surety in 1602 that he would pay what he owed. In 1603 he was referred to as ‘chamberlain depute of Ettrick Forrest’ in a dispute with Sie William Stewart of Traquair over taxation. James of Gilminscluuch (16th C.) eldest son of John of Thirlestane with his 2nd wife Marian Douglas (this was the claim of Scott of Satchells, refuted by John Scott of Rodono, but confirmed by Keith Scott). In 1580 he witnessed a marriage contract in Selkirk between James in Whitslade and Elizabeth, sister of Robert in Aikwood. In 1581, along with several other Scotts (from Hartwoodnayres, Gamescleuch, Chamberlain Newton, Edinburgh, North Bowhill, Dryhope, Catslack and Howpasley), he supported William of Tushielaw and Robert of Aikwood in representing Adam in Bonnington in a dispute with Robert of Haining. In 1585 he witnessed a bond (signed at Selkirk and Hawick) settling a feud between the Scotts of Branxholme and the Scotts of Allanhaugh. He signed a bond along with other Scotts (from Hartwoodnayres, Gamescleuch, Chamberlain Newton, Edinburgh, North Bowhill, Dryhope, Catslack and Howpasley), he supported William of Tushielaw and Robert of Aikwood in representing Adam in Bonnington in a dispute with Robert of Haining. In 1585 he witnessed a bond (signed at Selkirk and Hawick) settling a feud between the Scotts of Branxholme and the Scotts of Allanhaugh. He signed a bond along with other Scotts in 1589. In 1593 he was ‘of Gilminiscleuch’ in dispute with William Cranston (fiar of that Ilk) over possession of ‘Fawodscheil’; his son Robert, as well as Arthur of Gamescleuch were also involved and all 3 were declared as rebels. He is listed among those implicated in the slaughter of the Warden, Lord Maxwell, and his men in 1593 at Dryfe Sands; his brother Robert was also listed. He is probably the man transcribed being ‘of Gennyclusch’ (although that seems like Gamescleuch) in 1599 when charged to find caution to ‘observe the King’s peace’. In 1602 he signed a bond among Border Lairds for keeping the peace. His ‘oy’ (i.e. grandson) ‘Alie Batie’ is mentioned in a bond of 1609, involving Scotts of Thirlestane, Headshaw and Tushielaw. He is ‘James of Gilmerscleugh’ when he witnessed the 1612 bond for keeping peace on the Border. He could have been one of the Scotts of Gilmanscleuch who was said to be responsible for the death of a son of Walter Scott of Harden. He was succeeded by his son Robert. He also had 3 other sons: William; Andrew; and Adam. William and Adam, brothers of Robert of Gilmanscleuch, were recorded in 1631. James (16th C.) tenant in Crailing of Katherine Ker, Lady Ferniehirst. In 1586 he complained to the Privy Council that he had been attacked by Mungo Kirkton of Faimington and his brothers John, George and William, as well as John Kirkton in Deneside. James (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 as ‘Jame Scott in Beschawhill’, among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. It is unclear where he lived. James (16th C.) 4th son of John, younger of Synton. He had a ‘tack’ of the lands of Dodbank. He was probably the great-grandfather of Captain Walter of Satchells. His eldest son was Robert, who had several charters connected with Dodbank and Satchells in 1607–09. James of Kirkhouses (16th C.) possibly 4th son of George of Synton. Capt. Scott of Satchells says that he went on the mission to rescue Kinmont Willie in place of Scott of Synton in 1596. He was father of John of Kirkhouses, who inherited in 1609. However, it seems likely there were multiple generations confused here. James, son of John of Kirkhouses was recorded, along with his father, as witness to the making of the inventory of Isabel Donald, widow of Robert of Palace, in 1579. In 1581/2 he was recorded as first-born son to John in Kirkhouses when he took out a tack on lands in Ashkirk from Walter in Ashkirk. James (16th C.) recorded in 1579 among men who witnessed a transaction involving Walter of Goldielands and Robert of Haining, with the Walters of Stiches, Harden and Headshaw also acting as witnesses. He is listed being one of South Bowhill. In 1580 he owned money to John Dawson in Selkirk and in 1580/1 he witnessed a couple of transactions in Selkirk. His lands in Selkirk were mentioned in 1582 and he was also then warned to appear in Selkirk to accept redemption money. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts of Bowhill. James (16th C.) tenant in Borthaugh in 1579 when it is recorded that James Burne, indweller in Selkirk, owed him £3 10s. He may have been related to the earlier Scotts in Borthaugh. James (16th C.) son of John of Drinkstone. In 1581 he and his father witnessed an arrangement where Katherine Scott, widow of Robert of Colifort, resigned her lands of Hundlehope to her son Thomas; Scotts of Raeknowe and Allanhaugh were also witnesses. James of Hundlehope (16th/17th C.) son of William of Tushielaw and brother of Sir Walter of Tushielaw. He held the lands of ‘Hundilshope’ in Peeblesshire. In 1578/9 he was one of the men accused of accompanying his brother Walter to attack the farm of Gattonside, and denounced as a rebel for failing to appear to answer the charge. In 1583/4 he was involved in a caution for James Gledstains of Cocklaw and his tenants to be harmless in ‘his three husband lands lying in Hundishoip’. He is probably the James, brother of Sir Walter of Tushielaw who signed the Scott clan bond in 1589. In 1594/5 William Cranston, younger of that Ilk was surety for him. He is recorded in a charter of 1596 and was cautioner in a bond involving Peebles in 1599. In 1602 he and others were removed from the lands of Sir William Stewart of Traquair by Gideon Murray of Elibank. His sons were probably: John; James; Robert in Holly Arch; and Thomas in Hundleshope. James (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘Mekle Jame Eister’ in 1590, along with Robert Scott of Haining, when a group of Murrays were put under caution not to harm them. In turn, James Donaldson of Broadmeadows was caution for him not harming Patrick Murray of Falahill. It is unclear how he might have been connected with other Scotts. James of Bowhill (16th/17th C.) son of Robert of Aikwood and brother of Robert, William and Walter. He was recorded in 1599 when he was cautioner for William in Glack, that he would not harm the community of Peebles. He is recorded in 1601 when he and his brothers Robert, William and Walter, together with John ‘in Qholplaw’ were tried for the murder of Archibald Napier of ‘Wowmet’ (Woolmot, near Edinburgh). In 1608 he was part of the gang of Scotts who forcibly freed 2 of their kin from the Bailies of Selkirk; his brother William was also there. He could be the James in Bowhill recorded as witness to a document in Selkirk in 1610. Sir James of Balwarie (d.1606) son of Sir William of Balwarie in Fife and distant descendent of the Scotts of Branhomle. He was knighted in 1590, at the coronation of Queen Anne of Denmark. His younger brother Robert was a servant of the rebel Earl of Bothwell. He took part in the Falkland Raid in 1592 and was involved with Catholic-leaning leaders of Scotland to depose James VI. After being imprisoned, Sir Walter ‘the Bold’ of Buccleuch pleaded with Queen Anne to spare his life. He was fined and eventually released. Afterwards he served as cautioner for Sir Walter of Buccleuch several times. In particular, in 1596 he was cautioner for £10,000 that those for whom Sir Walter were responsible would obey the law. In 1599 he was absolved from liability for Walter (‘Auld Wat’) of Harden. In 1600 his procurator in court was Robert of Haining, and they denied that several Armstongs, Elliots and Scotts were Sir Walter’s ‘men’. He was succeeded by his son William, but little remained of the estates by then. James of Foulshiels (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1600 and in 1617 was among the supporters of the Scotts of Harden mentioned in a complaint against them heard at the Privy Council. He succeeded John, who must have been either his father or brother. He was succeeded by his sons Andrew and then Walter. James of Newark (16th/17th C.) from an unknown branch of the Scotts. However, later cautioners for the family were Scotts of Castleside and Hartwood-myres, suggesting they were closely related. He is probably the James, listed as tenant in Newark in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1574. He was in Newerkmyn in 1581 when he resigned his tenement in Selkirk in livery to his wife Marion Stoddart. Also in 1581 he and his wife owed money to Thomas Cruickshank. In 1582 his first-born son John resigned to him his lands in Selkirk. In 1585 he was in Newerkmyn when he witnessed a bond (signed at Selkirk and Hawick) settling a feud between the Scotts of Branhomle and the Scotts of Allanhaugh. In 1590 Gideon Murray of Elibank was surety for him ‘that the vassals, tenants and servants of William, Earl of Angus shall be harmless’ of him. In 1592 he was recorded as Chamberlain for Margaret Douglas, wife of the Earl of Bothwell, for the lands in Ettrick Forest that she was given in livery by her first husband, Sir Walter Scott of Branhomle. Sometime around 1603–7 he left Newark to his son John, and became a Magistrate in Selkirk. James (16th/17th C.) perhaps tenant at Nether Bonchester. Walter Deans (writing in 1887) claims his name is recorded on a deed of 1600, and that he was succeeded by Thomas (although Thomas actually succeeded Walter). James ‘Aff-haund’ (16th/17th C.) among the group of Scotts who attacked Adam Veitch’s lands in ‘Fechane’ in 1602. His nickname was transcribed as ‘Afhund’ and ‘Of Hand’. Others were Scotts of Hundleshope, Thirlestane, Gamescleuch, Bonnington and Bowhill. James of Glenrath (d.1619) 2nd son of Sir Walter of Tushielaw. He was also referred to as ‘of Boyken’ (in Westerkirk). The lands of Glenrath are probably those south of Peebles. Scott of Satchells lists him among the clansmen who were at the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. In 1599 his father Walter was surety for himself, as well as him and his brothers Robert and, to ‘observe the King’s peace’. His children were all minors when he died: Walter, who succeeded to Glenrath in 1628; William in Linton, whose son John succeeded his uncle; James; Marion; Elizabeth; and Margaret. His brother John of Mackersway was served as tutor to his children William, Marion, James, Elizabeth and Margaret in 1620. James (16th/17th C.) recorded being ‘of the mylne’ in 1605. He was among the inhabitants of Selkirk who had a dispute with Sir James Murray of Falahill. James (16th/17th C.) listed as ‘of Newholme’ in 1611 when he was part of the assize at the Justice Court on Jedburgh. He was brother of William of Montbenger and had a son John, who was a surgeon in Edinburgh. In 1645, his nephew Robert, son of William of Montbenger, was served as tutor to John’s sons (and therefore his grandsons) James and John. James (16th/17th C.) brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade, so probably son of the previous Sir Walter. In 1620 he had a marriage contract with Agnes Scott, widow of Rev. Alexander Hogg, involving lands at Eildon. In 1631 these lands were granted to Walter Chisholme in Darnick, and it was restated that he was brother of the deceased Sir Walter of Whitslade. He could be the James of Whitslade who in 1663 was jointly responsible (along with widow Margaret Turnbull) for land taxes in Hassendean Parish. James of Huntly (16th/17th C.) probably younger brother of Walter and son of Robert, who was on the raid to rescue Kinmont Willie in 1596. He was on an inquest in 1616, and probably had recently succeeded his brother (since Walter was recorded as Laird in 1612). In 1619 he complained to the Privy Council that his mother-in-law, Helen Grahamlaw, Lady Newton, had failed to pay him ‘a certane sowme of money for his tochergood’, but instead assigned to him a contact she had with Walter Turnbull of Rawflat; however, she apparently visited his house and stole the relevant paperwork and when he caught up with her at the Laird of Synton’s house she tore it up and threw it at him. His mother-in-law was daughter of the last Grahamslaw of Newton, who married Robert Ker, hence his wife was a Ker. He is probably the James ‘called of Huntlie’ whose son John was served heir to his lands of Langhope in Ettrick Forest in 1639. James (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1617 as brother of Philip of Dryhope. He was listed (along with Philip’s son William and Walter, son of Robert, heir apparent of Tushielaw) among men who had freed Patrick Porteous of Hawkshaw and attacked his captors. James of Newark (16th/17th C.) eldest son of John of Newark, who he succeeded in 1626. In 1618 Walter Scott of Buccleuch was instructed to apprehend him and his brother William for the murder of Adam Dalglish in Deuchar. In about 1618 he was listed among men who had illegally used hagbuts and pistols in Ettrick Forest. He apparently sold Newark to the Scotts of Buccleuch and subsequently became a merchant and burgess in Selkirk. He is recorded recorded being ‘in Neworkenylne’ (i.e. Newark Mill) in 1629 when his former lands in Selkirk are mentioned in a land transaction; he may have been deceeded by then. He was listed in the last testament of Walter Earl of Buccleuch in 1633, when he owed more than £14,000. In 1605 he married Grisel, daughter of James Murray of Philiphaugh. James (16th/17th C.) recorded being in ‘Aitschaw’ (possibly Headshaw) in 1619 when he was among a group of more than 100 men under John Ker of Langnewton who Sir Andrew Ker of Oxnam complained had broken up and stolen turfs cut for his use on Oxnam Moor. Probably the same James was a servant of Ker of Langnewton in 1621 when he was accused of being among the associates of Ker of Langnewton who attacked John Haliburton of Muirhouselaw, along with his son and the miller of Belses Mill. Along with some of his associates he was declared a rebel in 1621. James (16th/17th C.) listed as tenant in Newbigging in 1627 when he was one of 9 men responsible for making a valuation of the lands of Hawick Parish. He could be the James in Newbigging whose son witnessed a letter of inhibition in Selkirk in 1628. Rev. James (1578/9–1634) appointed to the vicarage of St. Mary of the Lowes by Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1608. It seems likely that he was some kind of relative. In the same year he was accused by the Presbytery ‘of being our guid companion in drinking and beiring company both in Edinburgh and at home’. He was also accused of being a card-player and being negligent in his duties. By 1618 he was non-resident and urged to find a house nearer to his congregation. However, he appears to have remained as the minister until his death. In about 1618 he was listed among men who might act as witnesses to the illegal use of hagbuts and pistols. In 1628 he was ‘minister at Sant Marrie Kirk’ when his son William witnessed a letter of inhibition in Selkirk. He was listed in 1633 as ‘minister at Yaro kirk’ when he was owed his annual stipend from the deceased Walter, Earl of Buccleuch. James (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1628 as tenant in ‘Holcaldrumhill’, among a list of men accused by the Earl of Buccleuch of cutting down trees on his lands near Hawick. He is listed along with Andrew in the Heap, who may therefore have been a relative. It is unclear where his farm might have been. James (17th C.) son of George, resident of Leith, who was already deceased when he purchased Hassendean from William Cunningham in 1622. He was at that time a resident of Bruntsland. James of Robertson (16th/17th C.) son of William of Robertson. He was the last of the Lairds of Robertson. In 1627 he was served heir to his father’s lands of Robertson and Howcleuch, with the mill, valued at £6 13s 4d. However, later in 1627 he sold the lands to Sir William Scott of Harden. It is not known what happened to him after that. James (17th C.) listed in the inventory of the deceased Earl of Buccleuch in 1633 as a ‘servant’. He was owed money for keeping the ‘teynd yaird’ in Hawick, as well as for building the walls and ‘heiding the stakes’ (i.e. putting heads on the stakes). It is unclear where this yard was located. James (17th C.) described as ‘portnr. of burn ffit’ when he signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. It is unclear which Burnfoot he occupied (but probably not the one on Ale, since Walter there signed separately), and how he was related to other Scotts. James (17th C.) possibly minister or assistant at Abbotrule about 1638. In that year he signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick, his name recorded as ‘Mr. James Scott, Abbatroull’. The minister at that time was James Ker, so it is possible this is a transcription error. James of Woll (d.bef. 1670) 2nd son of Robert. He succeeded his brother Francis by 1643. He is presumably the same James, son of Robert ‘of Well’ who became a saddler’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1641. In 1643 he was recorded as ‘lawful son to Robert Scott of Wall’ (and separately as ‘Well’ when he complained about being imprisoned in Edinburgh Tolbooth at the insistence of saddler David Brown; he complained that Brown ‘causelessly conceived a deadly hatred against him . . . while . . . alone and engaged upon his lawful business, caused apprehend him and warded him in the tolbooth, and that without any conviction or lawful warrant’, after which he was also warded by William Duff, servitor to Lord Saltoun, who claimed he was a debtor. He complained to the Privy Council after 20 days in prison, and was freed. He had 3 daughters in the period 1642–45, but had no male heirs. He sold the lands of Woll to Sir William Scott of Harden in about 1660. His brother George was returned heir to their father in 1670. James (17th C.) eldest son of William of Salenside, and brother of Thomas. In the period 1633–53 he pursued an action against his step-sisters Jean and Margaret, presumably over the lands of Essenside, which had belonged to their father, Walter of Essenside. James (17th C.) described as possessor of ‘Parke callit Copshaholme’ in 1632. James of Crookston (17th C.) younger son of Sir Robert of Thirlestane and Katherine Jardine. He is recorded in a letter of inhibition in 1630. In 1641 he is referred to as ‘of Cruixtoun’ when he witnessed (in Hawick) a document for his brother Sir John of Thirlestane, dealing with succession to the Thirlestane estate. James (17th C.) married Janet Duncan and had a daughter Janet baptised in Hawick in 1635. Rev. James (d.1679) son of Walter ‘in Catslak’. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1615, was presented to Kirkton at the end of that year, and became minister there, probably sometime in 1616. He was translated to Tongland in 1619. He was a member of the Commission for the Maintenance of Church Discipline in 1634 and contributed to the building of Glasgow University in 1636. However, he refused to subscribe to the Covenant and was deposed in 1639 for ‘absence from his flocke eight Sabbaths together, sacrilege, intromitting with penalties and contributions, disobedience to the Presbytery, tabling (playing at draughts), conversing with excommunicated Papists, and declining the General Assembly’. He was attached to the Rectory of Ford in Northumberland in 1660 and had a stipend allowed by Parliament in 1661, which was increased in 1663 ‘because he hath been an extraordinary sufferer these twenty-four years bygane’, and his disposition annulled in 1664. He returned to Tongland in 1663. However, in 1665 he was translated to Ancrum, as replacement to the formerly popular John Livingstone, who was exiled as a Covenanter. His appointment came amid huge disturbance, when a woman grabbed his cloak and he used his staff on her, with her brothers jumping into the fray and some boys throwing stones at him (although they missed). In the ensuing trial the 2 brothers (Turnbulls from Ashieburn) were transported to Virginia, their sister being whipped through Jedburgh (although rather leniently, according to the feelings of the populace) and 4 boys were ‘whipped through Edinburgh, branded in the face, and sold as slaves to Barbados’. He remained at Ancrum until his death about 14 years later. He married Margaret, daughter of Gavin Maxwell (minister of Borgue) and has a son James. Bailie James (17th C.) Hawick Magistrate in the 1640s at the time of the Covenanters. He was Bailie in early 1641. In 1643 he was ‘late bailie’ when he ‘made count and reckoning of his intromissions with the contributions that were gathered for the soldiers at Newcastle in 1641’. He may have been the James ‘callit of Newton’ who was on the ‘leet’ for the Bailies in 1638 and the James who signed the 1640 ‘Act of Bailies and Council’. James of Hundlehope (17th C.) perhaps son of John of Hundlehope. He was recorded as laird in 1648 and also in a deed in 1673. His children included: John, who died without heirs; and David, who succeeded. James (17th C.) married Agnes Stevenson and had a son John baptised in Hawick in 1644. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Miller and their children included Janet (b.1646), George (b.1647), and Walter (b.1648). James (17th C.) described as a ‘lorimer’ (i.e. saddler) in a Hawick Magistrates case of 1642, when Thomas Oliver was ordered to pay him for the oats his livestock had eaten. In 1645 the Town Clerk Gilbert Watt complained that he had called him several names, against the town’s laws. The same ‘lorimer’ was elected to the Council in 1648. James (17th C.) described as a ‘cadger’ (i.e. carrier) when he acted as appraiser in a Hawick Magistrates Court case of 1642 involving another James, ‘lorimer’. James of Park, in Wilton (17th C.) recorded as a landowner in a valuation of Wilton Parish of 1643. This describes ‘Scott of Park’s Lands, being Easter Whitehaugh, or Wester Heap’, and valued at £200. He may also be the James whose lands in Hawick were valued at £10. He also signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. He is probably the James ‘of Heap’ described as a local landowner of the mid-to-late 1600s, by James Wilson. He is probably also the James of Whitehaugh recorded in 1648 when he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire. Probably the same James of Whitehaugh paid the land tax on £200 for Whitehaugh in 1663 and was recorded in a deed in 1663. It is unclear how he was related to the other Scotts of Whitehaugh or elsewhere. One possibility is that ‘Park’ is a transcription error for ‘Clack’ or ‘Clack’. James (17th C.) proprietor of Wiltonburn in a record of 1650 relating to the Borthwick valley. His wife may have been Margaret Scott and their children John, Robert and Margaret. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Isobel Ruecastle. Their children included: Robert (b.1638); Adam (b.1640); Bessie (b.1641); Walter (b.1642); Malie (b.1644); and Adam (again, b.1646). James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Agnes Davidson. Their children included: William (b.1639); John (b.1641); Walter (b.1643); Francis (b.1645); and Robert (b.1648). James (17th C.) married Margaret Stewart and had a daughter Bessie baptised in Hawick in 1650. James (17th C.) married Janet ‘Inglish’ and had a daughter Isobel baptised in Hawick in 1650. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Mary Davidson. His daughter Helen was baptised in 1651, with witnesses in 1651 were Robert Scott and Adam Govenlock. James (17th C.) married Margaret Nichol and had a son John baptised in Hawick in 1652. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Agnes Scott. Their children included William (b.1648) and Bessie (b.1652). The witnesses in 1652 were William and John. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Douglas and their children included: George (b.1647); Jean (b.1650); John (b.1653); and William (b.1655). James (17th C.) herd at Branxholme recorded in 1655 and 1656. It is possible he is the James ‘elder’ who rented part of Branxholme Mains and Branxholme Park, along with another James (perhaps his son) in 1671. He could be the tenant of the west end of Branxholme Muir recorded in 1677; he may have been a servant of the Scotts of Buccleuch (but the document is hard to read). James (17th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Margaret Rodger and their children included Marion (b.1672), Margaret (b.1684) and John (b.1686). James (17th C.) Hawick merchant. In 1684 his son John was witness to the financial document for erecting the ‘Steeple Loft’ in St. Mary’s. He may one of the 2 Jameses who were on the Council in 1668. James of Bonnington (d.bef. 1668) one of the ordinary Clerks of Session. This is Bonnington in West Lothian, unrelated to the place of the same name near Peebles that was a Lairdship of a separate branch of the Scotts. He was 2nd son of Lawrence of Harperrig, and was the ‘Maistir James Scott’ who had a charter of the lands of ‘Boningtoune’ in 1629, with ratification in 1641. He first married Violet, daughter of Robert Pringle, W.S. He secondly married Margaret, eldest daughter of William Elliott of Stobs, and widow of William Bennet, minister of Ancreum (and she may have been the sister of his son William’s wife). He was appointed Clerk of Session in 1649 when his elder brother Sir William of Clerkington was appointed Lord of Session. In 1662 he is listed among those excluded from the King’s pardon until they paid a fine. He was recorded in a deed in 1663. His children were: William, who married Elizabeth Elliott and died without a male heir; Robert, who succeeded, but only had a daughter; and William (b.1661). The witnesses in 1661 were John, who married Rev. John Lumsden; Marion, who was married to James Park, writer, who was entered as a Burgess and Guild brother of Edinburgh in his right in 1678; Gilbert, eldest son by his 2nd wife, who succeeded his half-brother Robert; Charles, who later succeeded; James, last male of this family, who became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1672; and Barbara, who was buried in Greyfriars in Edinburgh in 1668.

In 1680 his son Charles of Bonnington and other children James and Catherine, were served as his heirs. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Agnes Stewart and their children included Mungo (b.1658) and William (b.1661). The witnesses in 1661 were John and William Stewart, who were surely related to his wife. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret ‘Chisim’ (i.e. Chisholme) and their son Walter was baptised in 1660, with witnesses John of Langhope and Thomas Nichol. Bailie James of Ormiston (b.c.1640) Magistrate of Hawick in the 1670s and 1680s, distinct from the ‘litster’ who was a contemporary Bailie. He was ‘called Ormeston’ in 1673 when he was named in the trial following the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. He witnessed a baptism for Thomas Nichol in 1680 and another for James Chisholme in 1688. In 1682 he was ‘called Ormiston, Bailie of Hawick, aged forty years, married’ when he gave evidence at the trial of Alexander Home for leading the Covenanters who attacked Drumlanrig’s Tower. He is probably the Bailie Scott of Ormiston whose servant Elspeth Scott was struck by stones in 1683 when watching linens that were being bleached by the side of Teviot. He may be descended from the Ormiston Scotts recorded in 1589 and 1592. He was ‘late bayleya’ on the list of subscribers for the Kirk bell drawn up in 1693/4. He is probably the ‘Bailyea Scott ormston’, who paid tax on 2 hearths on the east side of Hawick in 1694. He may be the James recorded in 1697 when, along with 3 others, he was forbidden from holding public office in Hawick on account of being ‘abettors and hounders out of the last illegal election in October 23 last’. He witnessed a baptism (for Robert Scott, ‘wyndhead’) in 1701 and another in 1702 for Gideon Gardner (when he was ‘called ormston’). He may be the James who was deceased in 1708 when his son Robert caused a commotion in St. Mary’s by trying to take his former seat in the ‘Steeple Loft’ after the Council had passed a statute stating that these seats were reserved for the present Bailies. He was therefore surely the same as the James who was Bailie in 1685 when the finances for the new balcony were being sorted out, and may have been related to the Bailie Walter who had helped finance the balcony in 1684 and subsequently died. He may be the Bailie James who was insulted by Adam Young in 1685, along with his son John; the claim was that they had reset peas taken by some of the Royalist men. James (d.bef. 1689) recorded in Aikwood in 1671, 1674, 1676, 1679, 1680, 1681, 1683 and 1684 when he had discharges with the treasurer of Selkirk for annual rent. In 1689 William McGie, ‘chirurgeon barber in Glasgow’ was the assignee for the annual rent of him and his wife Janet Craig. He was probably son of Robert of Aikwood and succeeded his brother Andrew. He was surely connected with Philip, who was in Aikwood in the early 18th century. He could be the grieve in Aikwood, recorded in a discharge in Selkirk. James (17th C.) recorded as ‘called Tushlaw’ in 1677 when he was one of the witnesses to the ‘bond of provision’ by Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. He must have been a younger son of one of the Tushlaw Lairds of the late 1600s.

James of Bonnington (d.bef. 1675) succeeded to the lands from Robert, who was either his father or brother. He may have married Margaret Pringle. He was succeeded by his son Gilbert, who died shortly afterwards, and then succeeded by his 2nd son Charles. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Helen Scott. Their children included Janet (b.1655) and Jane (b.1669). James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Margaret Brown. Their children included Robert (b.1671), James (b.1673), George (b.1675) and Agnes (b.1678). James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Isobel Brown. Their children included Adam (b.1672), Agnes (b.1676), Margaret (b.1678), Helen (b.1680) and John (b.1686). James (17th C.) married Janet Elliot in 1686. They were both from Robertson Parish, but probably the part that had been Hassendean. Their daughter Bessie was born in 1687, with witnesses William Todshaw and Walter Clerk. James (17th C.) resident of.
Roberton Parish (actually the part corresponding with Hassendean). He married Isobel Rodger and their children included: Janet (b.1680); Isobel (b.1683); William (b.1685); and Magdalen and Martha (b.1689). The witnesses in 1680 were Walter Gledstains and Adam Sanderson and in 1683 were William and Robert Rodger (who were surely related to his wife). Bailie James (17th C.) dyer (or ‘litster’) in Hawick, who lived at ‘Casaend’. He was recorded as a ‘litster’ in 1665 when he gave evidence that Bessie Douglas had indeed insulted the Bailie. His is probably one of the 2 Jameses who was on the Council in 1668. He was a Bailie during the 1670s. He was recorded as a ‘litster’ on the list of Hawick men named in the 1673 trial following the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. He is recorded in 1686 as ‘Jas. Scott, littster, lat bayleyea in Hawick’, and is distinct from the James of Ormiston who was a contemporary Bailie. He was also recorded as a lister in Hawick in a bond of 1682. He may be the James who was Bailie in late 1685 (but only if the Bailieship changed between November and March). He may also be the former Bailie recorded in a sasine of 1687 as having a garden in the West End, south of the King’s Highway. He may be the Bailie John who (along with James) witnessed a baptism in 1689 for miller James Paterson. He was ‘litster, late bayleyea’ on the list of subscribers for the Kirk bell in in 1693/4. He is probably the James ‘laite Bailyea’ who was listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He was recorded as a ‘litster’ in 1702 when he witnessed a baptism for Bailie Robert Wright. He is probably the James who declared in 1703 that on the last night of the previous year there were only 2 people to be found drinking after the ringing of the 10 o’clock bell. He may be the Bailie James who witnessed a baptism for Patrick Angus in 1704. James (17th C.) described as servitor to Robert of Horsleyhill when he witnessed a Hawick sasine of 1688. James (d.c.1688) servitor to Sir William Elliott of Stobs. His will was recorded in 1688. He may be the same as one of the other Jameses. James of Shaws and Shielswood (17th C.) eldest son of Adam of Shaws. He paid the land tax in 1678. In 1692 he paid the teind duty to the Commissioners of the Duchess of Buccleuch for the lands of Outerside. He was ‘of Shielwood’ in 1695 when he contributed £200 to the Darien Scheme. In 1670 he married Marian Scott, heiress of Shielwood (probably daughter of Walter). He was one of the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1690. His eldest son was Walter. James of Brieryyards (17th C.) eldest son and successor of John of Brieryyards. He is mentioned as a landowner in a record of 1666 relating to Hassendean parish, and hence probably succeeded before that. He may be the person who paid the land tax on Brieryyards and Hornshole in 1678 (with no name recorded). He had a sasine of Brieryyards in 1682, and was listed that year among the heritors of the Regality of Melrose. He also had a confirming charter of the lands of Hornshole in 1683, these having been passed to him by his brother John in 1667 (as part of a ‘wadset’ with the Turnbulls) and gained from the Turnbulls in 1671. Probably the same James ‘of Brieyairdis’ was one of the heritors accused of inciting the riot at the de-roofing of Hassendean Kirk in 1690. It is stated there that his eldest son was John and that John of Cockerheugh was his brother. He married Margaret Hay and their children (baptised in Roberton Parish) included: david (b.1680); Francis (b.1681); Elspeth (b.1683); Helen (b.1687); and Marie (b.1689). He is clearly ‘of Brieryeads’ in 1681 when the witnesses were Walter and John Scott (presumably relatives, perhaps his brothers). The witnesses in 1687 were again Walter and John Scott. James of Gala (d.bef. 1672) son of Hugh, 1st Laird of Gala. He was recorded in a deed of 1663. He married Janet, daughter of Sir James Murray of Philiphua. Their children were probably: Walter; George; Donald; John; David; Francis; William; and Hugh, who succeeded. He was recorded in a deed of 1673, along with his son Hugh. James (17th C.) schoolmaster in Selkirk, recorded in 1659 and 1673. He is probably also the ‘Doctor’ of that name recorded in discharges in Selkirk in 1657–65. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts. James nee Crofts (1649–85) illegitimate son of Charles II and Lucy Walters (who was also known as ‘Mrs. Barlow’). He was created Baron Scott of Tindale (in Northumberland), Earl of Doncaster (in Yorkshire) and Duke of Monmouth (in Wales) by the King, shortly before his marriage to the young Anne, Countess of Buccleuch in 1663. He assumed the title of first Duke of Buccleuch when he married the Countess of Buccleuch in 1663. However, the marriage was arranged when they were very young (he was 14), and it is said that his real partner was Lady Henrietta Wentworth. In 1666 he and his wife resigned their titles to the crown to be regranted with separate honours. In 1669 he was appointed Colonel of a Regiment of Foot Militia in Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire by Charles II. He was confirmed as Lord Dalkeith in 1672.
He was appointed High Chamberlain of Scotland in 1673. He received the Barony of Hawick (including the patronage of St. Mary’s Kirk) from the Crown in 1675. He was listed in the 1678 Land Tax Rolls, holding land valued at about £9000 in Castleton Parish, £6000 in Cavers Parish, £2000 in Hassendean Parish, £9000 in Hawick Parish and £2500 in Wilton Parish (among others). Additionally his lands in Selkirkshire were valued at almost £20,000. In Hawick Parish his possessions included Alton Croft and Alton Town, Whames, Wester Weens and ‘Husband-lands in Hawick, with mill and customs’. He became Captain-general of the Forces and was sent to quell the insurrection in Scotland in 1679, being commander at Bothwell Brig. He then engaged in intrigues against his uncle the Duke of York and moved to Holland in 1684. Belief (probably unfounded) that his father married his mother in Rotterdam before his birth helped encourage him to seek the Crown. In 1685, following the death of Charles II, he landed at Lyme Regis, claiming to be the protector of the Protestant faith and proclaiming himself King. He marched to Taunton with about 6,000 followers, but was defeated by King James’ army at Sedgemoor and fled.
Disguised in shepherd’s clothing, he hid out for 2 days, but was taken prisoner. He was executed at Tower Hill in London, having the same morning said his final goodbye to his wife and children; it was described how the executioner took 5 strokes in attempted to sever the head from the body, to the great displeasure of the crowd. He forfeited all his titles, but his wife Anna would remain as Duchess of Buccleuch. His children with her were: Charles, Earl of Doncaster, who died in infancy; James, Earl of Dalkeith, whose son Francis succeeded to the Buccleuch titles; Henry, Earl of De-loraine; Francis, who died in infancy; Charlotte, also died young; and Anne, who died in the Tower of London in 1685. He also had illegitimate children with Elinor, daughter of Sir Robert Needham of Lambeth: Maj.-Gen. James Crofts; Henry Crofts, Commander of H.M.S. Gosport; Isabella Crofts, who died young; and Henrietta Crofts, who married Charles Poulett, 2nd Duke of Bolton – ‘A Rebel he was in his time, And did the Nation much perplex; At his Invasion he was tane, And his Head cut off with an ax’ [CWS]. James of Thirlestane (17th C.) 4th son of Sir William of Harden, his brothers were Sir William of Harden, Sir Gideon of Highchester, Walter of Raeburn and John of Woll. In 1661 he purchased Thirlestane (near Yetholm, not the one in the Ettrick valley), as well as Heiton Mains and Mill from Sir Andrew Ker of Greenhead. He was Chamberlain to the Buccleuch estates for Liddesdale in 1659–60. In 1661 he was listed as owing about £2500 to the Duchess of Buccleuch for rentals in Liddle-dale and the Debatable Lands. He was recorded in a deed of 1663. In 1668 he exchanged some lands with his nephew Sir Andrew Ker of Greenhead. He may be the James of Thirlestane who was fined in 1680 for being a Covenanter. He is probably the James ‘of thirlestoun’ who paid the land tax in Roxburgh and Yetholm Parishes in 1678. He is probably the ‘James Scott off Thirsltoune’ listed among the heritors of the Regality of Melrose in 1682 (with Sir Francis of Thirlestane also listed). He married Agnes, daughter of Sir Walter Riddell of that Ilk in 1659. His children included: Mary (b.1660), who married Gideon Scott of Falnash; William, who succeeded; Walter; John; Gideon (b.1671); and 2 sisters. The witnesses in 1671 were Robert Pringle of Clifton, James Don and James Robertson. James (17th C.) wright in Hawick. His wife was Janet Scott and their son Andrew was baptised in 1678, with witnesses William Douglas and Simon Aitchison. Perhaps the same James and his wife Janet Scott had a daughter Janet baptised in 1671, with widow's George and Robert, who were presumably related to either him or his wife. James ‘Cookie’ (17th C.) married to Bessie Douglas, and father to William. He is recorded in a case in 1674 when his wife was found guilty of striking and biting her son. His children with Bessie, included: George (b.1647); Jean (b.1650); John (b.1653); and William (b.1655). James (17th C.) recorded as a Bailie in 1673 and 1682. He is possibly the same as ‘Cookie’ and it is unclear if he was the same as James the Bailie who was a ‘listser’ at about the same time. James ‘Laird’ (17th C.) recorded in 1676 among a number of local people fined for using weights that were lighter than the standards. Specifically his ‘quarter of ane pound wanted ane drop, his twa unce wanted half a drop and more’. It seems likely that he was related to the later James, ‘Laird’, the first recorded Cornet, perhaps his grandfather. James of Bowhill (17th C.) younger son of Robert, he succeeded his brother Andrew in 1668. However, it is possible that he purchased Bowhill during the lifetime of his father and brother. He held lands at Merton from 1657. Probably the same James, son of Robert of Bowhill was listed in 1648 as a merchant in Edinburgh when he acted as ‘baillie in that part’ for a sasine for Broadmeadows being transferred from Andrew of Broadmeadows to William of Tushielaw. He served as some kind of agent for the Scotts of Buccleuch according to a 1660 document. In 1661 he was listed as son of Robert of Bowhill when he owed rent for the Barony of ‘Thickfoord’ to the Duchess of Buccleuch. He was Chamberlain to the Scotts of Buccleuch for the Parishes of Castleton and Canonbie in at least the years 1671–89. He was recorded in a deed of 1682. He was a Commissioner of Supply for Selkirkshire in 1685. He could be the Chamberlain of Scott of Buccleuch who was based in Edinburgh in the 1670s, with several letters to him (from George Scott of Pitlochie) surviving. He may have been ‘grieve’ to Sir William Scott of Harden, who had discharges with the Burgh of Selkirk for annual rents in 1665 and 1667. The same James may have been Chamberlain to Sir William Scott of Harden in 1668 when he leased Sandieknowes from Lady Smailholm. He was recorded as tenant in Roan (in Castleton Parish) in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, when he paid tax for 3 hearths. He had a court case against Andrew Ker of Littlelead in 1694 and 1695, regarding rents; he was said to then be residing in Kelso with his family. He probably married Elizabeth, daughter and heiress of Walter Scott of Foulishiel. However, he may be the James ‘of bowgill’ who married Elizabeth Ker (perhaps daughter of Ker of Linton) in Pencaitland Parish in 1672. He appears to have been deceased by 1714. This branch of the family held lands at Bowhill from at least the mid-16th century, and these would eventually pass to the Scotts of Buccleuch. He was succeeded by John, probably his son, who would be the last male of this family line. James of Phaup (17th C.) recorded in 1682 on a list of the heritors of the Regality of Melrose. He may have been son of Francis. James (17th C.) tenant in Hummelknowe Mill in 1684 when he was part of a long list of men declared as fugitives for refusing to take ‘the test’. James (17th C.) recorded as being ‘in Laics’ among Roxburghshire men declared fugitives for religious non-conformity in 1684. This could be a transcription error for ‘Lairs’ perhaps. James (17th C.) carrier in Hawick. He married Marion Young and their son William was baptised in 1688. The witnesses were James Gledstains and Robert Langlands. James (17th C.) listed as being ‘of Bristo’ in 1691 and 1697 when he leased the west end of Branxholme Muir from the Scotts of Buccleuch. It is unclear who he was. James (17th C.) resident in Ashkirk listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. James (17th C.) resident at Easter Essenside on the Hearth Tax roll in 1694. He was separate from James in Ashkirk. James (17th C.) resident of Headshaw in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll there. Andrew and John were also listed at the same place, and so probably related. James (17th C.) miller at Spittal-on-Rule listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. James (17th C.) resident at Winningtonrig in Cavers Parish in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to the John and Thomas who are also listed there. James (17th C.) recorded on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls as shepherd at Borthaugh. He could be the James who rented quarter of the farm of Borthaugh from the Duchess of Buccleuch in at least the period 1690–94; his cautioner in 1692 and 1694 was ‘young goldiland’ (probably Charles), suggesting he was related to the Scotts of Goldielands and Crumhaugh. In 1696 and 1698 his widow Margaret was renting 1/4 of Borthaugh, with Adam and Walter (farmers at Overhall) as her cautioners. It is possible he was the James, married to Margaret Scott, whose children, baptised in Wilton Parish, included James (b.1694) and Bessie (b.1695). James (17th C.) listed in 1690 as ‘Ja Scott Scrivener’ (the last word is hard to make out) when he rented 1/4 of the farm of Borthaugh. He is listed separately from another James Scott, who rented 1/4. He is surely related to ‘Robert Scot Scrivener’, who was renting Borthaugh in 1694. It is possible he is the James ‘in Borturk’ in 1684 when his wife Bessie Scott’s will is recorded; he was probably related to George ‘in Bortoch’, whose will is recorded in 1686, as well as Walter ‘in Burtoch’. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His wife was a Johnstone and their son James was baptised in 1691. The witnesses were James Pringle and Andrew Scott. James (17th C.) resident of Yarrow Parish. He married Bessie Murray and their son Robert was baptised in Ashkirk in 1691, with witnesses John Gray and John Helm. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret ‘Curray’ (presumably Currie) and their children included Margaret (b.1687) and Janet (b.1694). The witnesses in 1694 were James and Andrew Scott, who were probably relatives of some sort. James (17th C.) listed as resident at Overhall on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Adam, who was listed there, was surely related. The pair were each renting half of Overhall from the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1690 and 1692. James (17th C.) tenant in Gillfoot in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. James (17th/18th C.) blacksmith in Hawick. He was listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was on the east-side of Hawick according to the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694 when he paid tax on 2 hearths. In 1700 and 1704 he was ‘smith in Hawick’ when his children were baptised. Probably the same smith James witnessed a baptism for smith George in Hawick in 1710. He is probably distinct from the smith at Branxholme at the same time. His children included: James (b.1700) and Walter (b.1704). The witnesses in 1700 were merchant Robert Robson and Henry Orrock and in 1704 were merchant Robert Robson and glover John Scott. He may be the smith James who witnessed a baptism in 1723 for Walter ‘Wyndhead’ and Anne Scott. James (17th C.) shepherd at Falnash. In 1716 his daughter Blench married John Nichol, who lived at Eilrig. James ‘Scottie’ (17th C.) blacksmith in Hawick. In 1708 he is described as ‘smith distinctionis causa called Scottie’ He married Agnes Purdom in 1707 and their children included Robert (b.1708). The witnesses in 1708 were merchant Michael and tailor George (who could have been related). He could be the same man as the slightly earlier blacksmith of the same name if he married for a second time. James ‘Pedee’ (17th C.) recorded in 1679 when he was fined for refusing to let the Bailies enter his house, and he also chained Bailie Gledstains’ barn. He tried to escape and had to forcibly taken to the Tolbooth. He was explicitly referred to as being ‘called Pedee’ (i.e. footman), but it is unclear what this nickname meant exactly. He was also listed as ‘pedee’ in Hawick, among the subscribers for the new Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was resident of the Hawick ‘eist the water’ according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, with ‘Pedee’ recorded after his name. This presumably distinguished him from the blacksmith and others of the same name. James (17th C.) carter in Hawick listed as ‘Colifert’ among those contributing to funds for the new Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was also recorded as ‘James Scott colifert’ among residents of the east-side of Hawick on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was presumably owner or otherwise associated with Colifort. He was again ‘Colifert’ when his daughter Margaret married William Scott (from Cavers Parish) in 1703, when his son James was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1704, when he witnessed a baptism for gardener Thomas Boyd in 1705 and when his daughter Helen married Andrew Waugh in 1713. It seems that he married Marion Young and their children included: William (b.1688); and James (b.1704). James (17th C.) resident at Todshawhill according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th C.) resident at Hawick Shiel in 1694, according to the Hearth Tax rolls. He is probably related to Walter and another James, who were later tenants at Hawick Shiel. James (17th C.) recorded at Raperlaw in Lilliesleaf Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Scott and their children included Helen (b.1694), James (b.1696) and John (b.1696). The witnesses in 1694 were John Scott (perhaps a relative) and John Minto (who lived at Easter Essenside). It is possible he is the James recorded at Easter Essenside in the Hearth Tax Rolls of 1694. James (1674–1705) Earl of Dalkeith, eldest surviving son of Anna, Duchess of Buccleuch and James, Duke of Monmouth and Buccleuch. He was titled Earl of Doncaster until the death of his father. In 1692 he was proclaimed King by a group of ‘thirty or forty wyld people’ at Sanquhar Cross, but nothing came of it. He received the lands of Chisholme and Woodburn from the estate of his deceased father in 1696. He served with the army in Flanders, returning to Britain in 1702. In 1694 he married Henrietta, daughter of Lawrence Hyde, Earl of Rochester and she died in 1730. Predeceasing his mother, the Dukedom was inherited by his eldest son Francis (1695–1751). His other children were: Charles (b.1700), who died young; James (1702–19), who died aged 17; Henry (b.1704), who also died young; Anne (1696–1714), who died aged 18; and Charlotte (1697–1747), who died unmarried at the age of 50, the only other to survive her grandmother, Anne. He himself died in London and was buried in Westminster Abbey. James ‘Drover’ (17th/18th C.) tenant in Stobscote. Either he or James from an earlier generation is recorded there in 1700 when he was fined ‘for fore-stalling of the public market’ by buying a lamb from a servant of James Ogilvie in Branxholme and then selling it to a Jedburgh butcher for a higher price. Probably the same James is listed at Stobscote on the 1694 Hearth Tax records; he appears right after John, to whom he was likely related (perhaps John was his father). He was ‘tenant in Stobbitcoat’ in 1712 when he married Anne Scott (daughter of William Scott and Margaret Falsyde), step-daughter of Robert Thomson in Newmill, the marriage taking place at Newmill.
He was recorded as ‘Drover’ in 1712 when his son William was baptised in Hawick Parish and was also ‘drover’ in 1713 when he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for a weaver called Douglas. He was ‘distinctionis causa called Drover tenant in Stobitcoat’ in 1718 when his son John was baptised; this makes it clear that ‘Drover’ was a nickname, that he was distinct from the other contemporary Jameses with different nicknames, and that the tenant in Stobicote was the same man as ‘Drover’. In 1720 he was ‘in Stobbitcoat in Cavers parish’. Also in 1720 he witnessed (along with John Elliot in Stobicote) a baptism for William Telfer, servant in Stobicote. His children with Anne (or Anna) Scott, mostly baptised in Hawick, included: William (b.1712); Margaret (b.1714); Beatrice (b.1716); John (b.1718); James (b.1720); Ann (b.1724), baptised in Cavers; Walter (b.1727); and Janet (b.1729). The witnesses in 1712 were Robert Thomson in Newmill (his wife’s step-father) and Thomas Shiel in Todshawhill, in 1716 and 1718 were William Thomson, both older and younger in Newmill, and in 1720 were John Elliot in Stobicote and Robert Nixon. He was still at Stobicote in 1729. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Kirkton. In 1704 his son Robert was baptised in Cavers. There were several other children baptised around the same time who could also be his. James (17th/18th C.) glover in Hawick. In 1704 he witnessed a baptism for gardener James Falsyde. He married Beatrix Laing and their children included Joan (or perhaps ‘Jean’, b.1700); Marie (b.1702); James (b.1705); Margaret (b.1707); Anne (b.1709); William (b.1711); and Walter (b.1714). His wife may be the Beat- rix born to James Laing and Helen Elliot in Hawick in 1670. The witnesses in 1700 were William Laing and ‘Mr’ James Laing, in 1702 were glover James Burn and gardener James Falsyde, in 1705 were fellow glovers James Burn and William Brunthouse, in 1707 were glover James Burn and Walter Scott in Crumhaugh and in 1709 were Bailie James Burn and William Laing. James (17th/18th C.) recorded at Wiltonburn in 1705 when his son Robert was baptised. The witnesses were Adam and Robert Scott, who were probably related. He was probably related to other Scotts who lived at Wiltonburn. James (17th/18th C.) tailor in Hawick. In 1706 he was listed among the men who were fined for involvement in the disturbances at the Common Riding that year. He is listed separately from James ‘of Westport’, and was presumably also different from James ‘the Laird’, who was Cornet in 1703. He is probably the tailor who married Janet Falsyde and whose children included: Mary (b.1717); Helen (b.1719); James (b.1721); Thomas (b.1724) and James (again, b.1724). The witnesses in 1719 were James Craw and William Falside (who was surely related to his wife). James (17th/18th C.) 2nd son of Walter, 3rd Laird of Nether Boucher. He was a writer in Jedburgh and died unmarried. His sister Janet married Adam, tenant in Wauchope. James (17th/18th C.) joint tenant in Nether Southfield along with Walter in about 1710, as attested in evidence given regarding the state of Hawick’s Common in 1767. He was recorded at Nether Southfield in 1711 when he witnessed a baptism for Adam Laidlaw in Southfield and in 1713 and 1718 when his children were baptised. He is probably the James who (along with Walter) witnessed a baptism in 1726 for John Elliot, cooper in Nether Southfield. He married Margaret Young and their children included: William (b.1709); and James (again, b.1711); Robert (b.1713); and Bessie (b.1718). The witnesses in 1709 were Robert Thomson in Newmill and Andrew Riddell in Goldielands, in 1713 were Walter and (another) James Scott, both also in Nether Southfield, and in 1718 were tailor Gideon Chishlyne and Walter (also tenant in Nether Southfield). James (17th/18th C.) resident in Mains (presumably Borthwick Mains) when several of his children were baptised in Robertson Parish. This includes: twins George and John (b.1703); Margaret (b.1710); Agnes (b.1712); and Helen (b.1717). James (17th/18th C.) recroded at Harden Burn in 1710 when his daughter Janet was baptised in Robertson Parish. He is hard to separate from other local men of the same name. James (17th/18th C.) tenant in Hawick Shiel, as recorded in 1718. He was probably related to Walter, who was also tenant there. He married Jean Beattie and their children included: William (b.1704); Marion (b.1706); Margaret (b.1708); Adam (b.1711); John (b.1713); Robert (b.1716); Euphan (b.1718); Margaret (again, b.1721); Bessie (b.1724); and an unnamed child (b.1726). Perhaps the same James, tenant in Hawick Shiel, married Margaret Stevenson (also from Hawick Shiel) in 1709. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Whithope. He is recorded there in 1710, 1715, 1716 and 1726. His children include Margaret (b.1710), Adam (b.1715), Robert (again, b.1716) and Robert (b.1726). There are several other children of James Scotts in Robertson at a similar time who could be his. He may be related to the James recorded in Whithope. in 1742. James of Calfield (17th/18th C.) from a prominent Dumfriesshire farming family. He may have been descended from Francis Scott of Davington’s sister Katherine (although one genealogy has him as a son of Francis of Davington). He was later described as being ‘of Belltenmont’.

He was probably the James in Calfield who married Agnes Scott, sister to the Laird of Burnhead (William Scott) in Hawick in 1721. His children included: Katherine, who married William, 3rd son of Robert Scott of Davington; Isabel, who married John, brother of her brother-in-law William Scott; Margaret, who married Gilbert Elliot, descendant of the Lairds of Redheugh and Larriston; and William, who was a vintner in Dumfries. Jean may have been another daughter, who married David Muir, Provost of Annan. Sir James of Gala (d.aft. 1721) son of Hugh and Isobel Ker, he was the 4th Scott of Gala. He was a Commissioner of Supply for Selkirkshire in 1695 and for Roxburghshire in 1696. He contributed £600 to the Darien Company in 1695. He was served heir to his father Hugh in 1697. He was appointed as Parliamentary Commissioner (i.e. M.P.) for Roxburghshire in 1698, serving as his father-in-law had done; he remained in this position until 1702. He married Euphemia, daughter of Sir William Douglas of Cavers and their children were: Hugh, who succeeded; William, who died young; John (d.c.1754) who was States Doctor in Batavia, and died childless after returning to Scotland; Archibald, a Major in the Dutch East India Company; Catherine (or Katherine), who married Rev. Henry Davidson, minister at Gala; and Elizabeth. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Milsingtonshiel in 1721 and 1723. His children included Margaret (b.1721) and Janet (b.1723). It is possible this is the James who married Margaret Rae in 1717. He could be the James at Outerside in 1720 when his son Thomas was baptised. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Highchesters in 1721 when his daughter Janet was baptised and in 1727 when his daughter Jean was baptised. He may be the same as one of the other Jameses. James (17th/18th C.) son of John and grandson of John of Rennaldburn and Newburgh. In 1721 he married Philadelphia, daughter of William Ballentine of Crooksye, Cumberland. Bailie James (17th/18th C.) Hawick Bailie, recorded in 1710, 1713 and 1720, probably distinct from the earlier and later Bailies of the same name. He was one of the Bailies when the bond was granted by the Council (dated 1710, but recorded in the Town Book in 1711) to provide money for the Master of the new Grammar School. He was recorded as Bailie when he witnessed baptisms in 1712 for William Miller, in 1714 for workman William Gledstains and in 1715 again for William Miller. He is probably the ‘late Bailie’ of that name who, in 1715, was given one of the keys to the Charter Chest. He may also be the ‘Bailie Scott’ referred to in 1718 in connection with resolving the dispute between Bailies Ruecastle and Graham, and hence was an elder of Hawick Kirk. In 1721 he (along with Bailie Walter Purdom) witnessed a baptism for Andrew Gray, tenant in Weensland. He is probably also the Bailie Scott appointed to collect monies at the east end of the Town in 1722 and also part of the Commission for appointing the new minister that year. It seems likely he is also the Bailie of the same name in 1727 (and referred to as John Scott, Senior). James (17th/18th C.) blacksmith at Braxholme Town. In 1708 he witnessed a baptism for Thomas Turnbull, herdsman in Nether Southfield. In 1714 he (and carrier Robert Scott, possibly a relative) witnessed a birth for Walter Scoon in Commonsie. It seems likely he was related to the other Scots who were joint tenants in Braxholme Town in the early 18th century, namely John, Robert and William. He is probably distinct (but related to) the James, tenant in Braxholme Town who married Helen Wilson in 1724. James’ Laird’ (17th/18th C.) first recorded name of a Cornet, in 1703. He was a weaver (as recorded in a baptismal record of 1712) and probably from the west side of the Slitrig, since the Cornet 2 years later was also from that side. He witnessed baptisms in 1700 for weaver ‘Black’ John Swan (along with weaver John Lunn), in 1701 for weaver John Lunn (along with weaver Mungo Swan) and in 1708 for weaver Mungo Swan (along with Michael Briggs) and for weaver Thomas Turnbull (also with Michael Briggs). He is probably the same ‘James the Laird’ who is one of the members of Hawick Kirk who objected in 1711 to the appointment of Robert Cunningham as the new minister, on the grounds that he could not be heard in the west end of the Kirk. In the 1713 baptismal record he is ‘distinctionis causa called James the Laird on the west side of Hawick’ and in 1714 he is ‘distinctionis causa called John the Laird son, weaver in Hawick’. He married Helen Lunn in June 1703; this would have been immediately after his Common Riding was over, suggesting that he did not serve as Right- and Left-Hand Man (or, if they...

had such supporting roles in those days, he did not have to remain unmarried). Their children included: Thomas (b.1704); John (b.1706); James (b.1708); Walter (b.1710); Malie (b.1712); Andrew (b.1713); and John (again, b.1714). His wife’s name is given clearly in most of the baptismal records; she is likely to be related (perhaps sister) to weaver John Lunn for whom he served as baptismal witness. In 1704 the witnesses were James Scott, ‘westport’ (presumably the Cornet of 1705) and John Clerk ‘at ye westport’ (who could possibly be the name of an unknown early Cornet and perhaps related to to Janet Clerk, wife of Thomas ‘Laird’). The witnesses in 1706 were the same John Clerk at Westport and James ‘Doctor’, in 1708 were Francis Scott in Hawick and Andrew Ogilvie of Newlands, in 1710 were Bailies William Laing and Walter Elliot, in 1712 were weaver Thomas Briggs and James Scott ‘called Laird ther’ (which is presumably an error, perhaps for John), in 1713 were Bailie William Laing and John Laing (William’s son) and in 1714 were shoemaker John Scott and weaver John Stevenson. Based on the children’s names, one might guess that he was son of Thomas, who was recorded with the nickname ‘Laird’ in 1693; however, if the 1714 baptismal record can be trusted then his father was John, and hence Thomas may have been his uncle. His father may have been the ‘John Scott called Laird’ who witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1704. He was probably also related to Robert, a shoemaker with the nickname ‘Laird’ in the 1670s to 1690s (possibly another uncle), as well as James ‘Laird’ recorded in 1676 (perhaps his grandfather). James (17th/18th C.) of Westport, merchant, son of Walter (possibly the same ‘Westport’ recorded in a ‘letter of horning’ in 1676). He was Cornet in 1705, and one of the main leaders of the rebel group in 1706, being fined and briefly imprisoned for his actions against the Bailies. It is probably only a coincidence that the first two known Cornets have the same name! However, he served as a witness for the first child of James ‘Laird’, in 1704. The mention of his name in the Town Book of 1705 contains the first recorded use of the word ‘Cornet’. He was surely related to other Westport Scotts. His father Walter was already deceased in 1706. In 1705 he witnessed (along with John Swan) a baptism for weaver John Lunn. He is probably the James, son to the deceased Walter ‘Westport’ who in 1719 married Sarah, daughter of tailor William Gledstains. Their children included: William (b.1720); Jean (b.1721); Walter (b.1723); John (b.1724); Robert (b.1726); Sarah (b.1727); and William (b.1730). The witnesses in 1720 were Archibald of Boonraw and John ‘Whitegates’ and in 1723 and 1726 were Robert and William Elliot. In the 1726 baptismal record he was ‘Billia James Scott’, and in 1730 ‘Bailie’, suggesting that he may be the same man as one of the Bailies of that time. The witnesses in 1730 were William Gledstains (probably his father-in-law) and wright Walter Scott (who may have been related to him). James (17th/18th C.) married Bessie Leyden in Cavers Parish in 1708. James (17th/18th C.) 4th son of William, who settled at Milsington. In 1717 he married Margaret Rea (probably daughter of Thomas) in Hawick, and they had a daughter Isobel; this could be the Isobel baptised inRoberton in 1733, daughter of James ‘son of Wm in milsinton’ (but hard to read). In 1726 he was recorded as a notary in Hawick. James ‘Doctor’ (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick. He is recorded with his nickname when he witnessed baptisms in 1704 for Black John Swan, in 1705 for weaver John Lunn, in 1706 for James ‘Laird’, in 1709 for weaver Archibald Douglas, in 1711 for wright John Pringle, in 1712 for weaver George Wight, in 1713 for John ‘Whitegates’ and in 1715 for weaver Jasper Richardson. He was ‘called doctor’, so that this was clearly meant as a nickname, and he is not the same man as the slightly later surgeon of the same name. He is recorded as ‘distinctionæ causa called Doctor’ when rebuked in 1716 for being at the drunken brawl at Thomas Huggan’s house; he was stepson to Francis Elliot ‘in Hawick’. He may be the weaver who witnessed a baptism in 1720 for weaver John Stevenson. It is possible he is the weaver James who married Janet Bryson and had children Malie (b.1712), John (b.1714), William (b.1717), Janet (b.1720), James (b.1722) and Walter (b.1724). The witnesses in 1720 were weaver Thomas Greenshields and merchant Walter Bryson (who was surely related to his wife). James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1715 he was at Ormiston when his son Thomas was baptised. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1715 he was living in Cavers itself when he married Margaret Dryden. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1717 he was living in Denholm when he married Margaret Plendergast. He was also living in Denholm when his children George (b.1720), James (b.1722), Isabel (b.1725), Helen (b.1726), Robert (b.1727), Elspeth (b.1729) and Robert (b.1730) were baptised. He may be the James in ‘Denholm eastend’ when his daughter Janet (b.1732) was baptised. James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living in in Denholm when his sons John (b.1737) and William (b.1742) were baptised. He was ‘Tenant in Denholm’ in 1745 when his daughter Jane was baptised. He may be the same man as the earlier resident of Denholm, or else related to him. James (17th/18th C.) ‘chirurgeon in this toun’ (i.e. surgeon in Hawick) who married Margaret Scott in 1724 at Cornhill in Northumberland. Margaret had previously been married to Patrick Scott (also in an irregular marriage), and was sister of the Laird of Burnhead. The minister was Rev. Thomas Blair, former episcopal incumbent of Lennel (Coldstream) who had been ejected in 1689 (suggesting that at least one of the families were adherents of Episcopalianism). The couple were rebuked by the Hawick Session in 1724 for ‘the trespass of their irregular marriage’. It seems likely he was not the same man as the ‘Doctor’ James, recorded earlier; however, it is less clear if he is the ‘James Scott, called Westport, Doctor’, who was a Bailie in the 1720s. He was ‘Chirurgeon’ in 1723 when he witnessed a baptism for merchant William Tudhope. In 1725 he was ‘sururgen Apoticiary’ in Hawick when he witnessed a baptism for Robert Scott of Burnhead (his brother-in-law). In 1737 he witnessed the baptisms of a child of Walter Tinlin (actually ‘Rob the Naig’) and a child of William Oliver (possibly ‘Auld Cash’). On his death his wife gave £25 4s to the Town for the use of the poor. It is not known how he might have been related to other local Scotts (e.g. Walter, who was a surgeon in Hawick at the same time). James (18th C.) younger of ‘Whitefield’, recorded in 1735 (according to James Wilson). He could have been a son of Walter of Whitfield and Harden. He may also be the James of Whitfield who witnessed a baptism in 1733 for Robert of Falnash. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Wiltonburn in 1724. He married Margaret Thomson and their children included: Bessie (b.1718); Janet (b.1720); Bessie (again, b.1722); an unnamed child (b.1724); and Charles (b.1727). James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Whitehaugh in 1721 and 1724 and Borthaugh in 1727. He married Janet Scott in 1720 and their children included: Anna (b.1721); William (b.1722); Robert (b.1724); Janet (b.1727). The witnesses in 1721 and 1721 were the same, namely William of Whitehaugh and Rev. Robert (brother to William of Whitehaugh); this suggests that either he or his wife came from the Whitehaugh branch. The 1724 baptism in Wilton was performed by Rev. Robert, with witnesses William of Whitehaugh, along with James (‘grandfather to ye child’), Walter of Cokerheugh and John (‘uncle to the sd Child’). It is hence possible he was brother of William of Whitehaugh (and perhaps also John), with the 1724 witness James being his wife’s father. He could be the James who (along with Walter) witnessed a baptism for John Kersel at Borthaugh in 1727 and may be the James who witnessed another for Robert of Burnhead in the same year. William (b.1740) and Robert (b.1740), baptised in Hawick born to parents of the same name may also be in this family. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at Borthaugh in 1724, 1727, 1729 and 1735. He is easy to confuse with the other James who was also at Borthaugh at the same time. He married Janet Wright in 1723 and their children included: Janet (b.1724); Robert (b.1727); Mary (b.1729); Margaret (b.1732); and James (b.1735). The witnesses in 1724 were William Turnbull and Robert Cowan, in 1727 were John (perhaps a relative) and John Dryden, in 1729 were Thomas Wilson and George Bell and in 1735 were John Scott and James Dryden. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at Timbersidemill in 1721 and 1727 and Scawmill (probably the same place) in 1724. He married Mary Scott and their children included: Janet (b.1724); Robert (b.1727); Mary (b.1729); Margaret (b.1732); and James (b.1735). The witnesses in 1721 were Robert Scott and Robert Storie and in 1724 and 1727 were Robert and William Scott (who were probably related to him or his wife). James (18th C.) tenant in Branxholme Town. He is probably related to the other Scotts who were tenants there, and the slightly earlier smith of the same name. He is recorded as tenant in Over Southfield in 1725. He is ‘tenant in Branxholmtoun’ when he married Helen Wilson (from the same place) in 1724. Their children included: Anne (b.1725); Walter (b.1727); David (b.1729); Margaret (b.1732); John (b.1739); and Betty (b.1741). The witnesses in 1725 were cottar William Hobkirk and John Wilson, tenant in Branxholme Town (who was probably his father-in-law or brother-in-law). James (18th C.) miller at Burnfoot Mill and Crawhill Mill in Wilton Parish from the 1720s until about 1750, being tenant for the Duke of Buccleuch. In 1722 he is recorded being at ‘w: burnfott miln’ (i.e. West Burnfoot Mill), in 1724 at ‘Wester burnfoot mihn’, in 1727 and 1729 at ‘W. Mihn’ (i.e. Wester Mill), at ‘E: Burnfoot’ in 1733 and at Crawhill in 1738. He may be the James who witnessed a baptism for Walter Lorraine at Stiches in 1727. After being at Burnfoot Mill he moved to Hawick Mill, where he was miller in the 1750s. He married his first wife, Margaret Huntly, in 1719 in Wilton and they had at least 9 children, all baptised in Wilton: Jean (b.1721); Margaret (b.1722); Francis (b.1724); James (b.1727); Adam (b.1729); Helen (b.1731); Susanna (b.1733); Robina (b.1735), who may have married Walter Purdom; and Thomas (b.1738). He later had 2 children by his second wife, Margaret Ligerwood (also written ‘Lizzarhide’), including Isobel (b.1745). The witnesses in 1722 were William and John Scott, in 1724 were John Scott and John Huntlie, in 1727 were ‘James W. Jo. & Fran. Scotts’ (perhaps several relatives), in 1729 and 1733 were John Scott and John Dryden, in 1735 were James and John Dryden, in 1738 were James Simpson (the new minister of Wilton) and Walter of Cockshead, and in 1745 were shoemaker John Brown and merchant Robert Scott. His sons and sons-in-law held several other local mills. He is probably the miller recorded in 1759 and 1760 as witness to baptisms for Walter Purdom and Robina Scott (perhaps his daughter), and also for miller Adam (perhaps a relative) in 1762. He is probably the miller whose son Joseph, a wright, had his house at the bottom of the Mill Port carried away in the 1767 flood. It is likely that the 1762 record ‘New Mort. James Scott Crawhill’ was for his funeral. James (18th C.) son of John. In 1726 in Minto Parish he married Jean, daughter of Robert Kersel. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Applestreehall in 1729. In 1728 he married Jean Scott and their children included Rachel (b.1729), with witnesses Adam and William (who were probably related to him or his wife). Note than another James married another Jean Scott in Wilton in 1731. Other children of these 2 couples include: Agnes (b.1731); Agnes (b.1732); Margaret (b.1734); Helen (b.1736); Isobel (b.1737); Jean (b.1739); Ann (b.1739); and Gavin (b.1741). James (18th C.) smith in Hawick Parish. He married Mary Smail and their children included Mary (b.1730). The witnesses were Rev. Crawford (of Wilton) and another James. James (18th C.) resident of Parkhead or Parkhill (this is hard to read) in 1732 when his son William was baptised in Roberton in 1732. He may be the James who was in Wester Parkhill in 1733 when his son William was baptised in Roberton. Perhaps the same James was recorded as ‘Servt. to Borthwickbrea at . . .’ in 1743 when his daughter Janet was baptised in Roberton. James (18th C.) recorded at Weensland Mill in 1729 when he married Margaret Cavers in Cavers Parish. James (18th C.) recorded at Trowmill in 1724, 1729 and 1737. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included: John (b.1724); Elizabeth (b.1729); and Thomas (b.1737). There are several other children baptised in Cavers around the same time who could be his. James (1701–2–43) tenant in Dovershaugh Mill (in Bedrule Parish), i.e. presumably the miller. He may therefore have been an ancestor of the family that supplied many millers around Hawick. He married Margaret Borthwick (who died in 1734, aged 28). Their son William died an infant. They are buried in Bedrule churchyard. Based on neighbouring gravestones, his father may have been John (who died in 1705), and his son John (who died in the Grange in 1794). Thomas in Bedrule Mill (who also died in the 18th century) may have also been related. James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Teinds in 1731 when his daughter Isobel was baptised. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1742 he married Margaret Legrew (who may have previously been married to Thomas Elliot). This was probably his second marriage. Their children included: Elizabeth (b.1743), baptised in Wilton; Isobel (b.1745), baptised in Hawick; and John (b.c.1749), tacksman at Roughheugh. James (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included: an unnamed son (b.1739); Margaret (b.1746); John (b.1746); Gilbert (b.1747); and Marion (b.1753). Bailie James (18th C.) Magistrate in Hawick in 1739 and 1740. In 1739 he was one of those appointed to oversee construction of a new Parish School. He may be the Bailie recorded in 1732 when masons were paid in his place (presumably an inn) after putting up the dial of the Kirk clock. He may be the ‘late Bailie’ who witnessed baptisms in 1741 for weaver James White, and in 1742 for gardener Robert Ker. He was Bailie along with John Scott in about 1743 when they gave orders to the Burgh Officers to find the animals of the neighbouring tenants pasturing on the common and drive them into the Town. He paid tax on 12 windows in Hawick in 1748. He may be the ‘Bailie James’ (no surname given) recorded in 1752 paying in money for ‘stones of the well’, perhaps related to fixing the Teviot Brig. He may be the Bailie of that name who witnessed baptisms for writer Thomas Winthrope in 1757 and for shoemaker John Oliver in 1761. He is probably one of the skinners James, John and Walter Scott, recorded as Bailies in the 1740s. He was probably also the James who was a Bailie in the 1750s and 1760s. He is probably the ‘Cuddyfit’ who lived at the bottom of the Howegate and was elected Bailie many times, lastly in 1765. Rev. James (1717–1773) son of William of Africa and Ashieburn and grandson of Walter of Clarilaw. He succeeded to his father’s estate in 1733. He was licensed as a preacher in 1740 and became minister of the Associate Presbytery Church at Gateshaw (near Morebattle) in 1742. He preached in the open air for 7 years, until a church was built on the Kale. In 1758 and 1759 he paid the window tax in Morebattle Parish. In 1745 he married Alice (‘Allie’), youngest daughter of Ebenezer Erskine, and she died in 1814, at the age of 94; a sketch of her exists. In 1747 he sided with the Anti-Burghers, while his wife’s family sided with the Burghers, and she would thereafter attend the Burgher Kirk in Jedburgh. He was said to be infailingly regular in his habits, so that people set their watches by him. He had 3 sons: Ebenezer (d.1756), who died young; William (d.1807), who succeeded to Ashieburn; and Ebenezer (again, d.1828), a doctor in Dalkeith. Manuscript sermons of his survive, some published in a volume in 1774. James (18th C.) resident of Whithope in 1742 when his son Walter was baptised in Roberton Parish. He may have been related to the earlier James in Whithope. James (18th C.) resident of Craikhope in 1742 when his son Robert was baptised in Roberton Parish. James (18th C.) resident of Borthwick Mains in 1752 when his daughter Helen was baptised in Roberton Parish. James (18th C.) cooper recorded at Meadshaw in 1753 when his son John was baptised in Roberton Parish. Perhaps the same cooper James was recorded witnessing a baptism in 1743 in Hawick for workman Thomas Oliver. He may be related to the cooper James who was recorded at Broadlee Burnfoot in a baptismal record of 1781. James (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Howcleuch in 1756 when his son Francis was baptised. James (18th C.) thatcher in Hawick, mentioned in an Edinburgh marriage record of 1766, when his daughter Helen married John Allan. James (18th C.) resident of Appletreehall in Wilton Parish. He married Helen Scott in 1756 and their children included: James (b.1758); Adam (b.1760); Andrew (b.1764); Francis (b.1767); and Margaret (b.1770). The witnesses in 1770 were Thomas Reid and Thomas Scott. James (18th C.) from Wilton Parish, in 1763 he married Helen (or ‘Nelly’) Elliot, who was from Hawick Parish. Their children included: Robert (b.1765), baptised in Hawick; and John (b.1775) and William (b.1778), baptised in Wilton. James (18th C.) weaver who lived on Damside. He married Agnes Allan in Wilton Parish in 1761 and their children included: Robert (b.1764) and William (b.1765), baptised in Hawick; and Helen (b.1767), James (b.1770), Jean (b.1772), Robert (again, b.1774) and Ketty (b.1778), baptised in Wilton. The witnesses in 1765 were the whole congregation and in 1770 were Andrew Turner and Thomas Reid. James (18th C.) carrier in Hawick. In 1759 he and blacksmith Robert Young witnessed a baptism for carrier William Richardson and in 1760 he witnessed a baptism for blacksmith Robert Young (suggesting some family connection). He could also be the James who witnessed a baptism for carrier John Richardson in 1764. James (18th C.) resident at Whithope in 1763 and 1766 when children of his were baptised in Roberton Parish. His children included: Walter (b.1763); and Helen (b.1766). He may be related to the earlier Scotts who lived at Whithope. James (18th C.) wright in Hawick who was witness to a sasine in 1764. Probably the same wright witnessed a baptism for Walter Purdom in 1765; it is possible he was the same man as the miller James who witnessed earlier baptisms for Walter Purdom. He also witnessed a baptism for Walter (probably a relative) in 1767. James (18th C.) from Yarrow Parish, in 1762 he married Jane Dunlop in Ashkirk. Their son James was baptised in Yarrow in 1766. James (18th C.) gardener in Hawick. He married Margaret Cockburn in 1762, the marriage being recorded in Hawick and Ashkirk Parishes. Their children included: Agnes (b.1765); and Janet (b.1768). The 1768 baptism was witnessed by William Scott and William Bower. In 1764 he witnessed a baptism for George Gray and Helen Scott (perhaps his sister), with Walter Scott as the other witness. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jane Scott and their children included: Betty and Margaret (b.1767); Betty (again, b.1768); James (b.1770); and Jane (b.1773). James (18th C.) tenant in Todshawhill. His daughter Isobel was born in 1765 and his daughter Christian in 1771. He may be the same as one of the other Jameses. James (d.1770) eldest son of Robert of Davington, and direct descendant of the Scotts of Thirlestane. He was a surgeon in Carlisle and then Langholm. He married Mary Rae in 1728. He had a son James, who died without issue. He also had daughters Elizabeth, Mary, Susanna, Charlotte, Anna and Margaret. His brother John did have children, but this branch also failed in the male line (although there is some dispute over details of these generations). James (1738–1807) tenant farmer of Skelfhill, son of Robert who had farmed there before him. He previously farmed at Gorrenberry, where most of his children were born. He is recorded at Skelfhill on the 1785–97 Horse Tax Rolls. He was additionally taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. He married Jean Pott (or Potts), their children baptised in Castleton Parish including Jean (b.1766), Jenny (b.1772), Margaret (b.1773), James (b.1775), William (b.1776) and Gideon (b.1778). One of his children was Betty, born in 1769, who married Adam Turnbull. His son Robert later farmed at Skelfhill. He may be the same James whose son James became a baker’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1770. His son William, of Huddersfield, is recorded dying at Falnash in 1800. He himself died at Skelfhill. James (d.c.1772) only son of James of Davington and descendant of the Scotts of Thirlestane. He farmed at Holm, near Eskdalemuir. He married Christina Stewart. Their only son was Robert, who farmed at Holm and then at Binks. After his death there was extensive litigation over the succession to the estate and it was eventually sold. James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded in Dykes in 1770 when his son Thomas was baptised. James (18th C.) of Boonraw and Sillerbuthall. He farmed at Boonraw and was also Laird of Silverbuthall. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. He was an elder of Wilton Kirk. His wife began attending the Anti-Burgher church in Midlem, and it is said that they went to different churches each Sunday, with no disagreements in the family; but when their child was baptised in Wilton, and the minister (Rev. Simpson) used the opportunity to rebuke dissenters, he resolved to leave the established church. A meeting followed with other, like-minded people in 1763, which led to the establishment of the Green Kirk in Hawick in 1766. He was probably the James who witnessed a baptism for fellow Anti-Burgher Robert Smith in 1770 and another for William Cook in 1772 (as well as several other baptisms). As owner of Silverbuthall he got part of the former Wilton Common when it was divided, and this land was later sold to William Oliver by Thomas Scott (who must have been his heir). He was probably also the James, tenant of Wollrig, who sold part of Silverbuthall to William Robertson (of the carpet factory) and James and Walter Knox (in Damside). In 1788 he is recorded as owner of ‘Easterheap or Silverbuthall’, valued at £80. He was probably unrelated to the later James of Silverbuthall. James (18th C.) tobacconist of Hawick. In 1762 he (along with shoemaker John) witnessed a baptism for weaver Robert Stevenson. In 1758 he married Margaret, daughter of John Pringle. Their children included: Thomas (b.1759), John (b.1760), Mary (b.1762) and Agnes (b.1765). He may have been related to the later tobacconist. James (18th C.) tenant in Denholm in 1776. His wife was Elizabeth Scott and their children included George (b.1776). Capt. James of Forge, J.P. (d.1799) only son of William of Melkledale. He was a direct descendant of the Scotts of Thirlestane and known as the ‘Laird of Canonbie’. He spent 16 years in the East India Company, where he was in the Bombay Marines. He was J.P. and Deputy-Lieutenant for Dumfriesshire. He married Mrs. Mary Coode in 1764, and she died childless. He secondly married Phoebe, who was daughter and co-heir of James Dixon of Bath and sister-in-law of George Harris, Lord of Sringapatam and Mysore. Their children were: William (b.1774), who died at Burtpore; Charles (1776–1822), Aide-de-camp to Lord Harris; Catherine Elizabeth (1777–1823), who married her cousin Capt. Gilbert Richardson and was a poet and novelist; Phoebe Christian (1779–1804) died while visiting her uncle in Madras; Jemima (b.1781), who married Maj.-Gen. Robert Bell; Sybella Frances (d.1820), who married Adm. Charles James Johnston; and George Fraser (1784–1848), who succeeded to Larriston and took the additional surname Elliot. Rev. James (1733–1818) 3rd surviving, and probably youngest son of Robert of Falnash. He was born at Crawhill in Wilton Parish and was educated in Edinburgh. He was probably brother of Rev. Thomas of Auchtermuchty, although in some accounts he seems to have been confounded with the contemporary Rev. James, minister of the Relief Kirk in Jedburgh. He was educated in Edinburgh, licensed by Jedburgh Presbytery in 1758, ordained at Kinfauns in 1759 and translated to Perth, Second Charge, in 1762, becoming the main minister there in 1771. He gave up because of age and infirmity in 1807. He had a great love of literature and the fine arts and was well known in James (18th C.) said to have been born in Wilton Parish, he was a member of the Established Church, and was ordained as minister of the Presbyterian congregation in Branton, Northumberland in 1774. He was inducted as 4th minister of the Relief Kirk in Jedburgh in 1783. He served as Moderator of the Relief Synod. He was described as ‘a tall, rather primitive-looking old gentleman’, with a black suit that he used for 40 years. His will mentions his ‘only son Revd James Scott’, minister at Dalkeith and then Cowgate in Edinburgh (and said to be the prototype for ‘Mr. Wiggie’ in Dr. Moir’s ‘The Life of Mansie Waugh’), and daughters Agnes (married to a Laidlaw) and Christian (the youngest). He is said to have been a younger brother of Rev. Thomas of Auchtermuchty, who appears to have been a son of Robert of Falnash; however, there is clearly some confusion with the contemporary Rev. James, minister at Perth and it is unclear which of the 2 men was brother of Rev. Thomas. He paid tax for having a female servant in the 1780s. In 1815 he was becoming old enough that he was supplied with an assistant, who was the next minister, James Porteous. James (1743/4–89) buried in Bedrule kirkyard, adjacent to the Scotts from Lantonhill. He died at Howden in Ancrum Parish. He married Janet Bell, who died at Ruecastle in 1809, aged 67. He secondly married Alison Rae, who died at Marefield in 1823, aged 48. He had a son, Franncis, who died in Edinburgh in 1806, aged 35. James (b.c.1745) from Hawick, emigrated to America in 1775 and lived in Pennsylvania. He married his second wife Margaret Tully in Hawick in 1770. His children were: John; James; Robert; Joseph; Margaret; Isabella, who married William Davis; William; Agnes; Maria; and Thomas. His will and some personal letters survive. James (18th C.) recorded at Woodburn in 1773 when his daughter Janet was baptised in Robertson Parish. He may have been related to Archibald who was at Woodburn slightly earlier. James (18th C.) recorded as possessor of a ‘House and yard’ in Minto Parish in 1780. The rental value was 10s. James (b.c.1750) herd in Wauchope. He may have been related to former tenants of Wauchope. He is probably the shepherd at Wauchope recorded on the 1797 Dog Tax Rolls. He may have married Nelly Irvine in Robertson Parish in 1780. He had at least one son, Adam (b.1796), who emigrated to the U.S.A. and settled in Ontario. Other children, baptised in Hobkirk Parish, who may have been his include John (b.1781), Walter (b.1784), Nelly (b.1786, to James in Hillshaugh), Isabel (b.1788), Beatrice (b.1790), James (b.1792) and Robert (b.1800). James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded in Bowanhill in 1792 when his sons William and John were baptised. He may be the same as one of the other Jameses. James (18th C.) resident of Bowklowe, recorded in a letter to a Selkirk lawyer in 1792. James (18th C.) skinner in Hawick. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He may be related to other Scotts who were skinners. James (18th C.) cooper in Robertson Parish. He was at Broadlee Burfoot in 1781 when his daughter Margaret was baptised. He is surely related to John, who was also recorded at Broadlee Burfoot in 1781, and probably Robert, who was there slightly earlier. It is also possible he was related to the cooper of the same name who was at Meadshaw in 1753. James (18th C.) listed as coachman at Stobs in 1785, when he was working for Sir Francis Eliott. In 1786 he was a ‘House Servt.’ and was coachman in 1788 and 1791. James (18th C.) coachman at Cavers in 1785, when he was working for Capt. John Douglas. Perhaps he could be the James whose son Robert was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1785. He could also be the labourer in Orchard in 1789 when his son James was baptised in Cavers. James (d.1795) from Kirkton, his death is recorded in Hawick. James (18th/19th C.) married Janet Scoon in Hawick in 1791. He was living at Greenbank in 1798 when his son James was baptised in Robertson Parish, with his wife acting as sponsor (suggesting that she attend the church there, but he did not). James (d.bef. 1806) tailor in Hawick. The death of his wife Janet Nichol is recorded in 1806. He was probably related to other tailors called Scott. James (18th C.) recorded at ‘Newmills’ in 1791, when he paid the cart tax in Hawick Parish. He was probably based at Newmill on Teviot. James (18th/19th C.) millwright in Hawick. He was probably son of Thomas and Christian Weir. A family tradition says they were descended from Auld Wat of Harden. In 1792 he married Elizabeth (‘Betty’) Scott, who was from Ashkirk. Their children were: Thomas (b.1795), who married Janet Notman; Mary (b.1796); Gideon (b.1798); and David (1801–73), who married Janet Wilson. The 1795 baptism was recorded in 1812, by solemn declaration to Bailie Wilson of the father and ‘nurse Agnes …’ [perhaps ‘hume’], with the 1797, 1798 and 1801 baptisms also recorded then. The witnesses were Gideon (probably his wife’s brother) and Robert Weir (perhaps his uncle). James (18th/19th C.) workman in Hawick Parish. He married Mary Turnbull in 1781 and their children included: Thomas (1783); Jane (b.1786); Robert (b.1789); and Robert (again, b.1793). The witnesses in 1789 were the whole congregation and in 1793 were Robert Renwick and Walter of Whitehaugh (who may have been a relative). James (18th/19th C.) farmer at Brigyshaw in Ewesdale in the period 1787–1797 according to the Horse Tax Rolls. He also paid the dog and clock taxes in 1797. He married Jean Ogilvie and their children included: Janet (b.1777); Jean (b.1779); Mary (b.1785); Thomas (b.1787); Robert (b.1789); unnamed female (b.1791); and James (b.1793). James (18th C.) married Nelly Hobkirk in Wilton Parish in 1786. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Isabel Hogg. Their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1794, with witnesses Andrew Scott and George Ogilvie. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at New Appletreehall, according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 2 work horses. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Jameses. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living in Denholm in 1795 when his son Anthony was baptised. Perhaps the same James was in Denholm when his daughter Euphan (b.1789) was baptised in Cavers Parish. He could be the same as one of the other Jameses. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at Denholmhill, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 4 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He was probably father of John, who was also tenant at Denholmhill. James (1746/7–1817) tenant at Upper Raw in Castleton Parish. He is recorded there on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls along with William; they owned 3 horses. His wife was Margaret Graham, who died in 1831, aged 68. Their children included Margaret (1783/4–1803), Janet (1791/2–1804), Elizabeth (1798–1804), Robert (d.1804) and Janet (d.1808). James of Silverbuthall (c.1765–c.1841) teacher at the school in Yarrow, his mother was Agnes (‘Nans’) Noble. He was appointed in 1784, taking over from Alexander Wilson (with George Scott being there briefly). He dramatically increased the reputation of the school, so that it attracted boarders from as far away as Hawick. He focussed particularly on handwriting, English grammar and geography. He is recorded in a letter of 1813 preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. In about 1816 a cousin of his came to help teach languages and he retired as schoolmaster in 1818. He was said to be of slight physique, even although his mother claimed he was as ‘buirdly’ as the minister; he wore a small yellow wig, as was the custom of the time. He kept bees and also gathered meteorological data, his records of 1837 being used by the minister in the New Statistical Account to describe Hawick’s weather. He was engaged to be married to Miss Anderson from Netherbarns (who had been born in the West Indies), but she was one of 4 young ladies who drowned in the Ettrick in 1800. He came to live at Silverbuthall in about 1822, having bought it after ‘Auld Cash’ died. He was probably unrelated to the James who had lived at Silverbuthall a few decades earlier. He was listed as ‘James, Esq. Silverbuthall’ when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821 and was there in 1825 when he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’. He was also examiner at Wilton School. Former pupils from Yarrow were regular guests of his. He was listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835. He is probably the James at Silverbuthall. described as ‘Ind.’ on the 1841 census. He died at Silverbuthall and his fortune was split among distant relatives. James (18th/19th C.) merchant in Hawick. In 1790 he married Isabel Robson. Their children included: Margaret (b.1795); Helen (b.1796); John (b.1797); Betty (b.1800); William (b.1801); and James (b.1806). The witnesses in 1796 were Bailie Irvine and Andrew (who was probably related) and in 1797 were Bailie Irvine and James Richardson. Probably the same merchant James paid the dog tax in Hawick in 1797. James (18th/19th C.) recorded as coachman at Branxholme in 1797, when he was working for Adam Ogilvie. James (18th/19th C.) apprentice under the care of James Hogg. He sang Hogg’s ‘Address to the Inhabitants of Hawick’ at the ‘rebel’ Common Riding of 1809. He was also the first official singer of ‘Teribus’ in 1819, i.e. the first Common Riding ‘Sang Singer’. He may be the same James who was imprisoned along with James Hogg in 1817 for illegally organising against the stocking-maker employers. He was still alive in 1863 when his recollections provided information for Robert Murray’s article on Hogg. He could be the James (b.c.1794) from Cavers Parish, living on the Loan in 1841, in Orrock Place in 1851 and at 9 Howegate in 1861, whose wife was Isabella and children included Walter (or Peter), Thomas, Benjamin, Gideon, Catherine and Helen. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1797 he married Agnes Renwick, who was also from Hawick. Their children included: Elizabeth (b.1798); Francis (b.1808); and Margaret (b.1811). James (b.1775/6) High Street tobacconist. He served as Town Treasurer, and also helped compile a ‘New Valuation of Houses and Gardens in the Town of Hawick’ in 1814. He was one of the founders members of Hawick Curling Club. He was listed as a tobacconist in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories; he may also be the same as the general shopkeeper listed in 1837. His shop was at No. 40 High Street and is marked on Wood’s 1824 map; he may also have been part owner of the business on the Sandbed marked ‘Tudhope & Scott’. According to the 1841 census his wife was Margaret, and so he presumably re-married (or this was his sister or other relative). His children included: William (1809–77), Cornet, who helped with the business, and was later a farmer at Burnhead; George (b.1811); Elizabeth (b.1812); and Margaret (b.1815). The witnesses in 1811 were tobacconist Francis (probably a relative, perhaps his brother) and merchant Thomas Turnbull (his wife’s brother) and in 1812 were hosier William Beck and wright Walter Wilson. A portrait of him exists. Based on family names, he may be the James, son of William and Margaret Scott, born in Hawick in 1773. James of Whitehaugh (1775–1852) 3rd son of John. He succeeded to the Lairdship on the death of his brother Walter in 1841. He was the last of the Scott Lairds. He was a member of the Jedforest Club. His residence for many years was at Whitslade. In 1841 he is recorded at Whitehaugh with his elder brother Walter and in 1851 he is at ‘Whitehaugh-place’ with his sister Agnes Stavert, niece Margaret Stavert and 4 servants. He died unmarried. His nephew Capt. John Chisholme inherited the estates (after adding ‘Scott’ to his name). He is buried in Whitehaugh Aisle, along with his brother Walter. James (18th/19th C.) probably son of Gideon and Agnes Tudhope baptised in Hawick Parish in 1779. He may have been half-brother of millwright Gideon. He worked on the Liverpool-Manchester railway in the 1820s, along with his brother William. James (b.c.1775) member of the East Bank Kirk, he was a carter in Hawick. It could be his property marked ‘Jas. Scott’ near the top of the Howegate on Wood’s 1824 map. In 1841 he was living on the Back Row with his children James, Ninian and Christian. He married Janet Scott and their children included Thomas (b.1805), James (b.1807), Robert (b.1810), Ninian (b.1815) and Christian (b.1818). James (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Margaret Riddell and their children included Margaret (b.1805), James (b.1807) and Margaret (b.1809). James (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Frances Graham and their children included Ann (b.1819), William (b.1821) and John (b.1723). James (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Jean Anderson and their children included Isobel (b.1814) and Thomas (b.1818). James (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Nelly Oliver and their children included Isabel (b.1807)

James (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Betty Hogg and their children included Beatrix (b.1820). James (19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Helen Johnston and their son John was born in 1831 (and baptised the following year). James of Ellem (d.bef. 1854) 2nd son of John of Midghope, who was a younger son of William of Woll. His wife was Agnes, and in 1854, when she was his widow, she purchased Teviot Bank from his nephew John Scott, W.S. They had a son, William John, who married Terese N. Harris. James (c.1780–1820) eldest son of Robert. He farmed at Skelfhill like his father before him. He passed on the lease to William Turnbull of Hassendenbank. James (b.c.1785) farmer in Hawick, who may have been the older brother of ‘Robbie the Cow’. He could be the ‘Jas. Scott’ shown at 43 High Street on Wood’s 1824 map. In 1841 he appears to be living with Robert, who was an accountant. James (b.1787/8) farm worker who lived at Wiltounburn Cottages. He was listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1840 and 1841, when he was hind at Wiltounburn. In 1851 he was a ‘hind or ploughman’ at Wiltounburn. His wife was Margaret (from Kirkton) and they had a daughter Christian. James (1788–1855) son of William and Janet Jack. He was a ploughman, working nearly all his life in Hobkirk Parish. In 1851 he was listed in Crailing. He firstly married Ann Dryden and had children: Rachel (b.1819/20); William (b.1820/1); and George (b.1822/3). He secondly married Margaret Byers (from Kirkton Parish), who died in 1880, aged 85, and their children were: Janet (b.1826/7); Walter (b.1828/9); Robert (b.1830/1); Jane (b.1832/3); Andrew (b.1835/6); and Richard (b.1839/40). He died at Ulston and was buried in Hobkirk Cemetery. James (1789–1810) 5th son of Charles, 3rd Laird of Wauchope and Howcleuch. He was born in Hawick Parish. He worked with the East India Company, travelling to India in 1806 and serving in a Madras native infantry regiment. He died unmarried. James ‘Blind Jamie’ (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick in the early 1800s. In 1822 the deaths are recorded of 2 of his infant sons. He may have run a boarding house or inn of some kind, since in 1822 it is recorded that ‘A Poor Woman’s Daughter Died at Blind Jamies’. James (b.1790/1) from Ancrum, he was a joiner on Bourtree Place in the 1841 and 1851 censuses. In 1851 he was living in ‘Mr McKie’s house oppos. Bourtree place’. He was listed as ‘James & Son, East end’, joiners and a wheelwrights in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Cecily and they had a son John. James (b.1790/1) from Hawick, he was a gardener in Newcastleton, living on Douglas Square. In 1851 he was at about 4 Whitchester Lane. His wife was Mary and they had a daughter Elizabeth. James (1791/2–1857) mason in Newcastleton. In 1841 he was on South Hermitage Street and in 1851 he was at about 1 Walter Street. He married Margaret Scott, from Canonbie, who died in 1859, aged 63. Their children included: Andrew (1815/6–58), who died on the passage from India; William (1821/2–55), who died in Hamilton, Ontario; Mary Ann (b.1830); Jane (b.1833); James (b.1835); John (b.1837); and Robert (d.1841), who died in infancy. He is buried at Ettilton. James of Boghall (d.bef. 1811). His daughters Isobel, Janet, Margaret and Jane exchanged parts of Boghall with the lands of Boonraw, with Henry Duke of Buccleuch in the period 1811–18. He may have been son of Walter of Boghall, who is recorded in 1757. Rev. James (1799–1864) born in Cavers, son of schoolmaster Andrew and Margaret Telfer. He studied at Edinburgh University and became a minister at Torphichen in 1827, moving to Dalmeny in 1829 and Dirleton in 1843. He married a daughter of Walter Baird and they had a large family. Some of his sermons were published in 1865. James (19th C.) son of shepherd George and Isabella Hall (‘Tibbie o Wigg’). He was a farmer at Overhall and well known as a sheep dog trainer. James of Allanshaws (1795–bef. 1863) 2nd son of Walter, tenant in Girnwood, and brother of William in Girnwood. He was a cattle dealer and also farmed at Elrig and Allanshaws. He succeeded his uncle William to the lease on the farm of Milston, but lost it in 1831. He was also based for a while at the Crescent, where he is recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory and in the 1841 and 1851 censuses. He could be the James Scott whose property is marked at about No. 12 Slitrig Crescent on Wood’s 1824 map. In 1845 he discharged a bond of his uncle’s to Elliot of Harwood. His wife was Mary. Their daughter Mary Anne married Rev. John Thomson of St. John’s Church. James (b.1800/1) skinner at Crowbyres in 1841. By 1851 he was listed as a cattle-driver living on the High Street. He could be partner in either ‘Michael & Scott, Punch Bowl close’ or ‘Scott &

Michie, 'Teviot square', both of which are skinners listed in Slater's 1852 directory. His wife was Barbara and their children included Janet, Margaret, John, Walter, Elizabeth and George. In 1861 he was a skinner at 20 High Street. James (b.1800/1) wright in Lilliesleaf, listed in Slater's 1852 directory. In 1851 he is listed on the north side of Main Street. His name is usually written ‘J. Brand’. He moved to Craig, then Arran in 1925 and Corsock in 1926. James (19th/20th C.) Governor of Hawick Poorhouse in the late 1800s, the precise dates being unclear. James (19th/20th C.) resident of Smithfieldhaugh. In 1906 he contributed to the fund for the renovation of Kirkton Kirk. James (d.1936) tenant in Redheugh, along with his brother Thomas. In 1918 he and his brother purchased the farm from Anna Mary Elliot. He was killed by a bull in 1936. James Brydon (1894–1958) younger son of Peter and brother of George. He served in WWI. Like his elder brother he was a Director at Pesco’s, taking on this role in 1925 and being the driving force behind the company until his death. In 1918 he married Violet Irene, daughter of John Noble Pillans. Their children were: Peter Brydon (1920–43), who lived in Teddington and died in Burma; and Christine Mary (1925–2004), who lived in Denholm, married Donald Robert McCormick and died in Red Deer. He decided not to live on Sunnyhill along with other family members, but instead moved to Denholm Lodge. He donated a baptismal font to Denholm Kirk in memory of his son Peter. He died in Milan, Italy. Maj. James Kenny Courtney of Burnhead (b.1928) succeeded from his uncle, Lt.-Col. William Scott-Watson. Educated at Marlborough and Sandhurst, he served in the Hussars and was Assistant Division Commander in Western Australia, Tasmania and Hong Kong. He matriculated arms in 1977 and has no direct ties to the Hawick area. Jane (18th C.) daughter of Margaret Dodds from Denholm. In 1795 she had ‘hatural child born and bap taxed’ called Alexander. Jane ‘Janie’ (1788/9–1837) wife of Adam Turnbull, bookseller of Jedburgh. She is one of the few people recorded on a tombstone in Abbotrule Kirkyard. She must have had a connection with the Rulewater area. Jane née Veitch (b.1800/1) from Langholm, she is recorded as an ironmonger in Slater’s 1852 directory. Her husband was gun-maker and ironmonger Joseph. In the 1851 census she is a widow living at about 21 High Street, employing 4 men in the ironmonger’s and tinsmith’s business. She is also listed as a tin-plate worker on the High Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. Jane (b.1783/4) resident of Brieryshaw in Ewesdale in 1841. She is listed as ‘Ind.’, suggesting that she was a widow with some means. Presumably the same woman is recorded as ‘Jessie’ at Brieryshaw Cottage in Ewesdale on the 1851 census; she is described as an unmarried ‘Annuitant’. In 1861 she was ‘Fund Holder’ living alone at Brierlyshaw Cottage. Janet (b.c.1805) recorded as ‘Dealer in Bread &c.’ on Wilton Damside on the 1841 census. She was living with Agnes, possibly a sister, and children William Whitson and James Hardie. Janet (b.1833/4) grocer in Newcastleton. She was on Douglas Square in 1861, living with her brother James (a mason), sister Mary Ann Scott and niece Margaret. Janet (15th C.) recorded as ‘Jonete Scot’ in 1487 in a charter for lands in Glasgow. Probably the same ‘Jonete’ is also listed in another charter in 1497, along with Alexander. It is possible that the same Janet leased the lands of ‘Newtoun of Reras’in Largs in 1481. It is unclear how she might be related to other Scotts. Janet (16th C.) daughter and heir of Walter of Howpasley, who died at Flodden. She must have been quite young when she died, since she did not succeed to his lands until 1530, before which she was under the guardianship of her uncle Robert. Her brother Robert succeeded to the main lands of Howpasley, while she inherited Appletreehall and Midshiel. A marriage contract of 1526 (in the Selkirk Protocol Books) clearly records her as daughter of the deceased Walter, ‘lord of Howpaslot’; this was for marriage with John Baird, Lord of Posso, and contained the names of priests ‘to act jointly on their behalf and to receive the said dispensation on their behalf to prove the legitimacy of their descendants’. This suggests that the couple may already have had children, including Sir Gilbert Baird, Elizabeth Baird (who married Sir Michael Naysmith) and Janet (who married William Geddes). who died in 1527. She married (or secondly married) Thomas MacDowell (or McDougall) of Makerston. With his consent in 1532/3 she transferred the lands of Appletreehall and Midshiel to her uncle Robert Scott, this being confirmed by King James V in 1536. Also in 1532 (with another Walter serving as her Bailie), she sold her lands of Birkenside in Berwickshire to Robert Scott; she and her husband both signed ‘with my hand at the pen’. She was still alive in 1540, when Sir Walter of Branxholme (then in ward) was given permission to pursue legal proceedings against her. Her seal of 1532 shows a ‘bend sinister’ (i.e. the wrong way, probably in error) bearing 3 stars, with a bird and a crescent on the shield. Janet (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1535 as widow of Walter. She had sasine for her husband’s 3 husbandlands in Denholm, inhabited by William Davidson, Archibald Turnbull and James Hobkirk. Janet (16th C.) listed in 1539/40 as widow of Robert ‘Elwand of [Toungtis?]’ when she purchased the lands of ‘le cot rig’ in the Mains of Appletreehall from Robert of Howpasley. She paid 120 pounds Scots for the farm and Robert promised to guarantee her and her heirs peaceful possession of the lands until he paid them the same. It is unclear if it is just a coincidence that the former heiress of the lands of Appletreehall was also called Janet Scott (or if perhaps there is confusion over the two nearly contemporary Roberts of Howpasley). Janet (16th C.) heir of John, recorded in 1543 when her lands in East Haining were mentioned in a Selkirk document. The lands of Walter were adjacent, and hence he may also have been a relative. Janet nee Beaton (1519–1569) daughter of Sir John Beaton of Creich and Janet Hay. She was the third wife of Sir Walter of Buccleuch and survived her husband by 16 years. She is supposed to have ridden in full armour at the head of 200 Scots in order to seize the Laird of Cranstoun at the Kirk of St. Mary of the Lowes in 1559; it may be that he was suspected of being involved in the murder of her husband in 1552. She was also implicated in intrigues involving Bothwell and Queen Mary, and was popularly believed to employ witchcraft. She had married Sir James Crichton of Cranston Riddell, then Simon Preston of Craigmillar and thirdly Sir Walter. She apparently divorced her 2nd husband (the Provost of Edinburgh) and Walter divorced his 2nd wife, so that the two could marry. The inter-relationships of their children are extremely convoluted. For example, her sister Grizel married Sir William Scott of Kirkurd, her step-son! She may also have been the mother of Walter of Goldielands, as well as David of Stobicote. In 1542 there was a discharge for her rights to the land of Cranston Riddell and Muirhouse in Edinburgh, and Blackgrain, Catslack and Montbenger in Selkirkshire. In 1550 her son James Crichton leased to her for 19 years the lands of Cranston Riddell, together with Catslack, Montbenger and Blackgrain. In 1552/3 she and her daughters, Grizel, Dorothy, Janet and Margaret were granted the teinds of Lessuden for 19 years. She held the superiority of the lands of Wilton Green, Wiltonburn and Overhall until her death. In 1564 she had an order from Mary, Queen of Scots, recalling the bond made in 1552 between the Scotts and the Kers, which was broken by the Kers murdering her husband, and instructing her to pursue justice for the breaking of the bond (and not formally for the murder!). In 1567 she was instructed to present her ‘householdman and servant’, Dand Ker ‘in Scheilstokbrajis’, who was among men accused of raiding into England. She is fictionally represented by ‘the Lady’ in Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Lay of the Last Minstrel’ – ‘Of noble race the Ladye came, Her father was a clerk of fame, Of Bethune’s line of Picardie: He learn’d the art that none may name ... ’[SWS]. Janet ‘Jean’ (16th C.) daughter of Sir Walter of Buccleuch and his 3rd wife Janet Beaton; she may have been born before they were married. She herself married John Cranston of that Ilk (who held lands in and around Denholm, and died in 1552); she bore his successor Sir William Cranston. In 1564/5 she was contracted to marry George Ker, younger of Faldonside, as part of the arrangements to settle the feud between the 2 families; however, this never happened, since Sir Walter Ker of Cessford was fined 1000 merks in 1577/8 (confirmed in 1579) for the marriage not taking place. In 1580 she is recorded as wife of Robert of Haining. Janet (17th C.) daughter of George of Castleton. In 1632, along with her sisters Bessie and Margaret, she was served ‘heir portioner’ to her father. Janet (d.c.1661) daughter of Sir William of Harden and grand-daughter of ‘Auld Wat’.

In 1639 she may have married John, son of Sir John Murray of Philliphaugh (although some histories say he married Janet, daughter of Sir William Scott of Ardross). In 1661 her brother Walter of Raeburn was served as her heir. Janet (17th C.) recorded on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls at Borthaugh. Janet ‘Jean’ (1750–1824) eldest surviving daughter of William Scott of Woll and Jean Balfour. She is said to have been one of 5 (or perhaps 6) daughters who were over 6 feet tall. In 1771 she married James Grieve, younger brother of the tenant of Branhxholme Park, but he died 2 years later. In 1792 she secondly married Rev. Benjamin Dickison, minister of Kirkton and later Hobkirk. She is buried in Hobkirk kirkyard. Janet ‘Cauld Pottage’ (18th/19th C.) Hawick resident, recorded in 1808 when her unnamed child died. Janet (b.c.1785) grocer at Whiteknowe in Castleton Parish. She is recorded there in 1841, as a widow, with her son James and also Jane Webb. She married James Kitchen (also written ‘Ketchin’ and variants), who lived at Roughley. Jasper (17th C.) listed on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls somewhere near Mangerton in Castleton Parish. His forename is not common in the family. Jean (16th C.) sister of Scott of Buccleuch (although it is not clear which one). She married Gavin Elliott of Stobs, who was a descendant of the Elliots of Redheugh; it has been suggested that her marriage was an attempt to end the feud between the 2 families in the 1560s. The couple owned the ‘sex merkland of Chalmerlane Newtoun’ in 1573, when they complained that Walter and John Scott, possessors of the other half of Chamberlain Newton, attacked her and her husband’s servant James Storie. Jean (16th C.) daughter of Sir William Scott of Kirkurd, and sister of Sir Walter Scott of Branhxholme and Buccleuch. In 1569 she married Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst and Oxnam, this being part of a bond between the Scotts and the Kers. In 1573/4 she was granted lands in Oxnam and Ashiestiel (while her husband was in exile), but there were complaints that Dame Catherine Ker, Lady Ferniehirst (her mother-in-law) and Andrew Kerr (her brother-in-law) were harassing her farms. Her children included: Sir James Kerr of Crailing; Thomas Kerr of Oxnam; Ann Kerr, who married John Elphinstone, 2nd Lord Balmerinoch; and Robert Kerr, 1st (and last) Earl of Somerset, who took the surname ‘Carr’. In 1590 she and her son were charged with not repaying a debt that he had incurred while in England. In 1592/3 she was ‘Lady Pharnyhirst’ when she was in dispute with Sir Robert Ker of Cessford over crops from Redden. Jean of Satchells (16th/17th C.). She helped Lady Scott of Howpalsley organise a band of fellow Scotts to slaughter 60 sheep of Sir James Douglas in 1615. Most of the perpetrators were brought to court by Sir William Douglas, and eventually hanged, although the two ladies were spared, along with William Scott ‘callet of Satchellis’ who was presumably her son. She may have been the widow of Robert of Satchells and mother of Captain Walter, in which case she was daughter of Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane. Jean ‘Holland’s Jean’ (16th/17th C.) natural daughter of Walter, 1st Earl of Buccleuch, her mother probably being Delia, daughter of Captain Thomas Butler in Holland. Her name suggests that she was born when the Earl was fighting in the Dutch Wars, 1604–9. She married Robert Scott of Whitslade, but they appear to have had no surviving male heirs. Jean (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. She was probably a shopkeeper or lodging house keeper. Jean (17th C.) recorded as a householder at Branxholme on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. She was taxed for 2 hearths, suggesting that she had a larger house or perhaps an inn. It is possible she was the same woman known as ‘Jean the Ranter’ in the poem ‘The Bonnie Lass o Branxholme’. John (d.1203) referred to by English historians around 1200 as Joannes Scotus’. He may have been from Cheshire, but of Scottish parentage, with his mother being sister of Matthew Kynynmount, Bishop of Aberdeen. He was appointed Bishop of St. Andrews in 1178, but this was against the wishes of King William, who wanted the position for his chaplain, Hugh. He appealed to the Pope, and was successful, but William nevertheless banished him from the kingdom. This led to Hugh being excommunicated, followed by the King himself, with the whole of Scotland placed under interdict. After the Pope died, and a new one was installed, an agreement was reached in which Hugh became Bishop of St. Andrews and he became Bishop of Dunkeld in 1182/3. It seems unlikely he was related to anyone else of the surname Scott. John (12th/13th C.) clerk, recorded as ‘Master John ‘le Scot’ in Reading in 1226/7. Alicia of Oxford appealed that he should be tried before the Bishop of Lincoln, for an unspecified crime. John (13th C.) recorded as ‘Scotus’ in 1228 when an assize was appointed by the Sheriff of York, for men whom he accused of larceny and felony. He was stated to be in the King’s prison at Appleby. John (13th C.) listed as ‘John the Scot’ in 1231 in London, when he was found guilty of masquerading as a clergyman and stealing money from merchants. Presumably a different ‘John the Scot’ was recorded in 1225/6 in relation to a boat from Scotland that had been arrested at Lynn. Sir John (d.1249) son of David, Earl of Huntingdon, who was brother of King William the Lion. He as known as ‘John Scot’, but it is unclear if he was related to anyone else with this appellation. He was knighted at Roxburgh Castle in 1223. He also became Earl of Huntingdon and of Chester. He is probably the ‘John le Scot’ recorded in 1227, when the Sheriff of Huntingdon made a demand on the men in his bailliary. He married a daughter of Llewellyn, King of Wales. John (13th C.) recorded in 1256 as being ‘of Schele’ in a set of pleas at Newcastle. He was exonerated from murdering Jordan of Clydesdale, but fined for being present. John (13th C.) son of William ‘le Scot’, he was recorded in 1206 in a court case in York. ‘Alesia de Lacy’ was his heir and had a case against Peter, sacrist of the chapel of York. John of Reston (13th C.) son of Patrick. He held the lands of Great Reston, which had previously belonged to his father. The land appears to have been gifted to Coldingham Priory and then purchased by him. He is also recorded in another document of Coldingham in 1261/2. He was succeeded by his brother Patrick, some time in the 1270s. John (13th C.) mentioned in 1261 as son and heir of William ‘le Escot’ in a document relating to Trent in Northumberland. John (13th C.) listed as ‘Johannes Scot’ in the 1256 assize roll of Northumberland. He could be the same man as ‘Johannes Scot de Schele’, who is recorded in a separate case. He could also be the John ‘le Escot’ who was among men sued by the Prior of Tynemouth in 1269 (along with Nicholas and Henry). ‘Johannem Scot’ is listed in 1279 in a case related to lands in Westmorland. John (13th C.) listed as ‘Johannem Scot’, foreseter of ‘Beleassis’ in the 1279 assize roll of Northumberland. Possibly the same John listed in a separate case in Coquetdale. Probably a different man of the same name was accused of many robberies, fined and declared a fugitive. John (13th C.) resident of Glasgow. In 1283 he was ‘Johanne Scot’ when he witnessed the sale of a plot of land in Rottenrow. John (13th C.) recorded in 1285 as ‘Master Johannis Scoti de Monedy’, rector of schools of St. Andrews. He was tenant of the lands of Monethy (in Fife) in 1293 and 1294, and probably belonged to the Balwearie branch. He may be the Master John who received the benefice of Brechin in 1274, also holding the church of Cortachy (in Angus). John (13th C.) recorded as ‘Johanni le Scot, majori Novi Castri super Tynam’ in 1290 in a list of provisions made at Berwick for the English King. He was thus presumably a resident of the Newcastle area. He could be the same ‘Johannes Scot, ballivus’ in Tynedale who was listed in another document for Edward in 1292. John (13th/14th C.) resident of Linlithgow who was involved in a case of trespass in 1299. He was also in another such case in 1302, and was also accused of stealing someone else’s cattle in the same year. His name is given as ‘Johanne Scotte’. John (13th/14th C.) listed among the men of Edinburgh as ‘John le Scot’ when they paid homage to Edward I in 1296. In 1296 he is listed among Edinburgh men in the roll of Scotsmen who renounced their treaty with France in order to reconcile with King Edward. He is probably the same man as the burgess of Haddington who was on an inquest in 1296 and was on a jury in 1312. It is possible he was the same John who was on an inquest in 1296 regarding the lands of Ballencrieuff in East Lothian. John ‘the Lameter’ (14th C.) second son of Sir Michael of Rankilburn (or possibly of Sir Richard). However, information about these generations is quite uncertain. He was said in some early family histories to be the ancestor of the Scotts of Synton and Harden, among other branches. Walter, 1st Laird of Synton was his son. It is said that he attended school at St. Mingo’s in Glasgow and married in a way that may have been disagreeable to his father. His grandson is supposed to have been Walter ‘the Ratton’, who was 1st Laird of Synton. However, most of the claimed details of his life have no documentary support. John (14th C.) recorded resigning the lands of ‘Gillastoun’ in Fife sometime during the reign of David II. He appears to have lost the lands through forfeiture. It is unclear how he was related to other Fifeshire Scotts. John (14th C.) resident of Haddington recorded in the Exchequer Rolls in the 1360s. He received an annuity from the mills of Haddington in the period 1361–1373. In 1375 the annuity was paid to his heirs and he was presumably deceased by then. It seems likely he was a descendant of the earlier Bailie of Haddington of the same name and probably father of the Bailie John recorded in the following decades. John (14th C.) Bailie of Linlithgow mentioned in the Exchequer Rolls of 1364. He was probably related to other early Scotts with a Linlithgow connection. John (14th C.) Bailie of Haddington recorded in the Exchequer Rolls in the period 1379–99. He rendered the accounts of North in 1389–92. He was surely a descendant of the John from a few decades earlier. John (14th C.) custom’s officer in Inverness in the period 1365–69 according to the Exchequer Rolls. His ship was hired for building operations at St. Monands in 1366 and 1369. He was further recorded as a Burgess of Inverness during the reign of David II, giving a donation to the Lady Chapel. He was Bailie of Inverness according to the Exchequer Rolls of 1389. John of Headshaw (14th/15th C.) probably son of Walter of Synton (although there generations are very uncertain). He may have been father of Walter of Headshaw. It is possible he was brother of Robert of Stirches, as well as possibly James in Ashkirk. John (15th C.) witnessed the charter passing the Barony of Havick to William Douglas, 2nd of Drumlanrig in 1428/9. His designation is not given, so it is unclear how he was related to the other Scotts. John (15th C.) recorded in 1456/7 as witness to the sasine for Ewesdale passing from Robert of Ewesdale to George Douglas, 4th Earl of Angus. He may have been from Ewesdale, along with Wat, Sim, John and Nichol, who are also listed. John (15th C.) served as the King’s Ranger in the 1440s and 50s, when his name occurs many times in the Exchequer Rolls. In 1440 he was given his fee for the previous 2 years, for the audit associated with Crown lands in Arran and Bute. He was granted the lease of the lands of ‘Barrone’ (probably on Bute) for his fee throughout the 1440s and his name occurs associated with audits in Glasgow in 1453 and 1454. He was recorded as a courier in the Exchequer Rolls through the 1450s and 60s (although he is listed as ‘quondam’ in 1455, suggesting he may have died and that there are thus 2 generations of John here). He was paid his fee relating to Bute and Arran in 1455 and 1462 and in 1468 relating to Ayr. Perhaps the same John is recorded as a servant of the Queen in 1458. His son Ewen also acted as Ranger until the early 1450s, but then his name disappears. He may be the same as one of the other Johns. John of Burnhead (15th C.) probably 2nd son of James of Kirkurd, who was a younger son of Sir Walter of Kirkurd and Bucleuch. He received a charter for the lands of Over Newhall from his father in 1492 (it has also been suggested that he could have been a younger son of Sir Walter, but that seems unlikely). ‘Over Newhall’ was later known as Burnhead; he was thus the 2nd Laird of Burnhead. He witnessed the charter in 1494 in which his father granted Galalaw and the Nether Mains of Newhall to his brother David; there he is stated to be his father James’ heir apparent. He is probably the John, son of James of falside (as well as Kirkurd and Hassendean), who in 1501 had a lease of Falside along with his mother Margaret, on the renunciation of the lands by his father. Also in 1501 he acted as pledge for Robert of Stirshaws. He was additionally designated ‘of Crowhill’ and may have had a son William, although these generations seem confused. John of Burnhead may have been his successor, although other accounts suggest he died without a male heir. John 4th Laird of Synton (15th C.) probably son of Walter, his mother being a Scott of Hassendean. He married a daughter of Quentin Riddell of that Ilk, but died without issue and was succeeded by his brother Walter. John (15th C.) arrested in 1452 as a rebel, with John Tweeddale being paid a fee for his capture. This is listed under business at Linlithgow in the Exchequer Rolls, but it is unclear to which branch of the Scotts he belonged. John (15th C.) owner of a ‘tenement’ on the south side of Hawick, described in Hawick’s earliest known sasine of 1453. His piece of land was to the west of the property passing from John Turnbull to Robert White. John (15th C.) Bailie of Montrose. He was recorded several times in the Exchequer Rolls of 1450s and 60s as customs officer in Montrose. Probably the same John was also recorded in association with the customs in Arbroath in 1445. John (15th C.) named first on the 1463/4 list of local men rewarded by the King for the capture of John Douglas of Balveny. He was surely related to some of the other Scotts listed, e.g. Robert of Todshaw, who came after him. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John (15th C.) held a sasine for the lands of ‘Symenton and Wester Lynfferis’ in Lanarkshire in 1466. He may have been the same as one of the other Johns. John (15th C.) rendered the accounts for Sir David, as Ranger of Ettrick Ward in 1473. He may have been a relative of Sir David. John (15th C.) witness in 1475/6 to a document relating to Kirkurd and David Scott of Buccleuch. He is listed as ‘Johanne Scot’ along with William; they may both have been closely related to the Scotts of Buccleuch. John (15th C.) recorder in 1476 making a supplication to the Pope to give him the benefices of Bothwell and Hawick that James Lindsay was proposing to resign. It seems that this did not come to pass. He is probably from a local branch of the Scotts. John (15th C.) held a sasine for Fingask and part of ‘Rate’ in Perthshire in 1476. It is unclear how he was related to other Johns. John (15th C.) customs officer in Inverkeithing in at least the period 1475–85. He also served as Bailie of Inverkeithing in 1482. He was surely related to David (perhaps his father), who served in the same role in Inverkeithing at about the same time. Either he or a later John was Bailie of Inverkeithing in 1511. Perhaps the same John was customs officer at Montrose in 1471. John (15th C.) recorded as tenant in ‘Ogingstoun’ in Bothwell in 1480. His name was listed first, with other Scotts there being William, junior, Katherine and Robert. They were sutebly all related. John (15th C.) appointed one of the procurators for Thomas Armstrong of Mangerton in 1482 when he resigned Mangerton to his superior in order for the lands to pass to David Scott of Branxholme. His name is recorded as ‘Johannem Scot’. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John (15th C.) recorded as witness to a sasine of 1483 given by William Douglas, Laird of Cavers, relating to lands in Hassendean. probably the same John is recorded in a ‘letter of reversion’ for the lands of Clarilaw in the Barony of Hassendean, which passed from the old Baron to the new Baron in 1493/4. It is possible he is the same as John of Burnhead or John of Thirlestane. John of Thirlestane (15th C.) recorded in a charter of 1483, when he gained the (western) half barony of Wilton from Henry Wardlaw. He may thus be the first Scott to hold the half barony, although it is unclear exactly who he was. He is also referred to as ‘of Huntlee, in the forest of Ettrick’. He may have been connected with the Howpasley and Thirlestane branch, since Alexander Scott (Clerk of the Rolls for Scotland) was one of the witnesses of the 1483 confirmation (however, it seems too early for him to be the John of Thirlestane, who was probably the grandson of Alexander of Howpasley). It also seems likely he was related to Robert of Muirhouse and Whames, who received the lands of Underchesters from Henry Wardlaw a year earlier. One possibility is that he was another son of the first Walter of Buccleuch, hence brother of David of Buccleuch, Alexander of Howpasley and James of Kirkerd and Hassendean. He was still Baron of Wilton in 1491, when he was asked by the King to receive Alexander, Lord Home as tenant in his lands of Harden. He had a confirming charter for the barony in 1494/5, and was there referred to as ‘Johannis Scot de Weltoun’ in Roxburghshire. He was probably not closely related to Stephen ‘of Weltoun’ (which were other lands, near the modern Cumbernauld) or Stephen’s son John ‘of Weltoun’. It is possible he is the same man as John of Deloraine, who is recorded holding lands in Wilton in 1493. By 1506 the half Barony of Wilton was held by the Earl of Bothwell, and so he must have lost the lands by then (or died) He may be the John who acted as Deputy Warden for Ettrick (for Walter Scott) in 1494/5. It is not known if he had any children and it is unclear who succeeded him as Laird of Thirlestane, but there was a William of Thirlestane mentioned in 1502, probably son of David of Tushielaw. John (15th C.) notary in 1484/5 for the charter in which Sir David of Branxholme gave Whitchesters to his son Robert (of Allanhaugh). Since all the signatories are relatively local he was probably a local cleric. However, this is likely to have been too early for him to be the notary John who is recorded in the period 1527 to 1540. Probably the same ‘Magistro Johanne Scote’ was Rector of Rankleburn in 1491/2 when he witnessed the last will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme (and was bequeathed 40 shillings). He was probably related to Sir David, as well as to the primary witness, William, Rector of Southdean. John (15th C.) recorded among debtors in the last will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme. He owed 15 nobles and is listed as ‘Johannes scote eius filius’, suggesting that he was a son of Sir David. He is probably the same as one of the other contemporary Johns, e.g. John of Thirlestane and Wilton. John (15th C.) listed as ‘Johanni scote, pincerne’ (i.e. cup-bearer or butler) in 1491/2 when he was bequeathed 10 sheep in the will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme. John of Todshawhaugh (15th C.) leased the east steading of Langhope in the period 1486–1492. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. John (15th C.) recorded in 1493 as surety for John of Whithaugh, who was fined for his non-appearance. He was ‘in braidee’, which may have been Broadlee in Ashkirk Parish. He was fined again in 1494/5, along with John, son of Alexander in Broadlee. John (15th C.) brother of William ‘Gyde’. He is recorded in 1493 at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh when Walter of Howpasley was allowed to compound for bringing in him and his brother, as well as other ‘traitors of Levin’, to raid the farm of Harehead. John (15th C.) recorded in the Justice-aire of 1493 as son of Alexander in Broadlee. He was recorded right after John in Broadlee, and hence may have been a different man. He was surety for himself and fined for non-appearance. He was fined for a second time in 1494/5. John of Deloraine (15th C.) recorded in 1493 when he was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh, being called because of his lands in ‘wiltoun’. It is unclear what lands in Wilton these were (but it is not impossible that he held the half Barony and was hence the same man as John of Thirlestane). He could be the John who obtained remission along with William Inglis at the Justice-aire in Selkirk in 1494/5, recorded in the King’s Treasurer’s accounts. He was also recorded in 1494/5 when he had remission for several crimes, this included resetting ‘John Rede and John Scot-Stow in Tuschelaw’, resetting Hector Armstrong, stealing horses and goods, abetting the English, communing with Robert, Philip and Andrew Scott when they were at the horn, helping John son of Andrew Turnbull of Dryden to steal sheep from the Murrays in Sundhope, killing a man called ‘Colthride’ and resetting thieves of Liddesdale, Eskdale and Ewesdale. Robert of Whitchesters was surety for him. Also in 1494/5 his eldest son Robert was surety for John Reid in Singlie; perhaps the same Robert of Deloraine was allowed to ‘compone’ for crimes in 1494/5. His son Robert, called ‘Bellit Robin’ was recorded in 1502. He was probably also related to the Scotts of Buccleuch, but the connections of this branch of the family are unknown. John (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 as ‘John Scot-Stow in Tuschelaw’, meant, or how he might have been related to other Scotts of Tushielaw. Along with ‘John Rede’, John of Deloraine had remission for resetting him; his crimes included stealing sheep from ‘Thomas Johnstone, furth of Quiithop’. He was also listed as ‘Johannes scot-stow in tuschelaw’ when he was allowed to ‘compone’ for the crimes of: stealing 26 sheep and a horse from William Wood in Williamshope; stealing 16 sheep from James Scott in Falside; stealing a horse from Broadmeadows; stealing 3 oxen and 60 sheep from William Ker in Yair; for common theft and delivery of stolen goods before his previous compounding; and for stealing 4 head of cattle and 20 sheep from the tenants of Yair. His surety was John Murray of Hangingshaw. He was presumably tenant in Tushielaw, but it is unclear what the ‘stow’ John (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 as ‘gener’ (i.e. son-in-law) to William Little in Thornycleuch. He was found to be infirm at the Justice-aire held in Selkirk, but fined £10. John (15th C.) son of Henry in ‘conwale riggis’. He was recorded in 1494/5 when he was surety for himself and was fined for non-appearance in Selkirk. John (15th C.) tenant in ‘ernheuch’ (i.e. Erncleuch) in 1494/5. He was allowed to ‘compone’ at the Justice-aire held in Selkirk, his crimes including: stealing 2 cows from Harthern; bringing in thieves ‘de levyn’ to raid Thomas Middlemas in Ploro; the slaughter of Middlemas’ wife and 2 sons; stealing a black horse from Jedburgh; stealing 16 sheep; stealing 5 head of cattle at different times from Harthern, as well as goods; and for common theft before the date of his previous compounding. His sureties were Robert of Allanhaugh and Adam in Annelshope. He may also be the John who was allowed to ‘compone’ along with Adam in Annelshope in 1494/5, for a set of riving crimes. He is recorded in 1494/5 having received remission from the King. John ‘Little’ (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 as ‘parvo Johanne scot’. He had sheep stolen from him at Howford by David Lauder and others, for which Lauder was allowed to ‘compone’. It is unclear if he was related to later Scotts of Howford. John (15th/16th C.) husband of Margaret and father of Alexander. He was already deceased in 1499 when his widow and son were granted the East stead of Langhope and in 1501 when they were granted the Middle stead. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘in Northhous’ in the Register of the Privy Seal of 1498 when he and John Turnbull (from Dryden) received a pardon for their crimes of assisting the English ‘of Levin’ (presumably relating to a particular raid). He is ‘Johanne Scot de Northhous’ in 1500 when he witnessed a sasine for Scott of Branxholme. In 1501 he was pledge for David Elphinstone when he was assigned the farm of Glensax in Ettrick (he may thus be the John who had 7 stirks stolen from Glensax by Sir Thomas Turnbull in Phaup according to the Justice-aire of 1499/5). In 1502 he was surety for Roland Renwick, who was accused of stealing sheep from Ettrickhouse. He may be the same John in ‘Northhous’ who had 20 oxen and cows stolen from him by John Dalgleish and others in about 1510, which, together with other crimes, led to Dalgleish’s execution. John (15th/16th C.) one of two men of the same name recorded in a document relating to Ud- dington, in the Glasgow charterary, listed as ‘Johannem Scot’. 2 Roberts are also listed, as well as the widow of another John. They were all residents of Uddington, and were presumably related. John (15th/16th C.) described in the Register of the Privy Seal of 1499/1500 as ‘in Wiltoun’ when he received remission for helping the rebels ‘of Levin’ in murder, pillage etc. John of Whitehaugh (15th/16th C.) recorded in the 1493 Justice-aire in Jedburgh when he was fined for the non-appearance of John in Broadlee. His name is recorded as ‘Johannis scot de quhithalch’. Perhaps the same man is listed in the Exchequer Rolls of 1501 among mostly local men who had been fined; he appears there as ‘Johannis Scot in Quhithalch’. In 1502 he was ‘in quhithalch’ when he had remission for stealing 23 sheep and a horse from Adam Scott out of Kershope, and separately for stealing cattle from John Romanno of Romanno, with Robert in Synton as his surety. He was probably related to the slightly earlier Walter of Whitehaugh, as well as later Scotts of Whitehaugh. John (15th/16th C.) resident of Hermiston recorded in 1502 at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. He had remission for stealing 40 sheep from Philphaugh, with his surety being Robert in Synton. John (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 when Hector Lauder in Clerklands had remission for stealing livestock and goods from him out of Whitslaid, in the company of a gang of Armstrongs. It is possible he is the same man who also tenanted Hoddom House at the same time (where the same people also raided). It is unclear how he might have been related to the Scotts of Whitslade. John (15th/16th C.) recorded in the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1502. Hector Lauder in Clerklands had remission for several crimes, including stealing 40 cows from him out of ‘hodum hous’ (possibly Hoddom House), in the company of the Armstrongs. John (15th/16th C.) resident of Spittal. In 1502, along with Thomas in Branxholme, he was convicted for the felony done to Thomas Story, when they came across him in Spittal. He was fined, while Thomas was allowed to compound. John (15th/16th C.) tenant in Hassendean, recorded at the Justice- aire in Selkirk in 1502. He had remission for the theft of 5 cows and an ox from James Ar- rous at Philphaugh, with Robert Scott of Stirches serving as his surety. He may thus have been connected with either the Scotts of Hassendean or Stirches. At the same court sitting in 1502 he acted as surety for William, son of James of Broadmeadows, as well as Walter in Broadmead- ows. John (15th/16th C.) recorded in the Exchequer Rolls as Bailie of Irvine and custom’s officer there in the period 1508–13. Perhaps the same John was Bailie of Irvine recorded in 1538 and 1546. He was probably related to Robert, who was also in Irvine around 1540. John of Haining (d.1513) son of Robert of Haining. He was recorded as son of Robert of Haining in 1482, with his son Robert mentioned in 1488. In 1494/5 he was recorded as son of Robert when he had some of his sheep stolen from Haining. In about 1499 he had the lease of the Crown lands of Haining (along with his son John) with the permission of John Murray of Falahill. In 1502 Walter, son of Walter of Headshaw had remission for stealing a heifer from him. In 1507 he had a charter for the lands of Haining. He was surety for Thomas, brother of Philip of Headshaw in 1510, when Thomas was convicted of being part of the killing of John Murray of Falahill. He was killed at Flodden and his son Robert was served heir in 1514. He had another son, Walter, who served as ‘tutor’ for his nephew Thomas during his minority. It seems that he also had another son, John, who leased Haining along with him in about 1499. John of Borthwick (15th/16th C.) possibly father of John ‘the faster’, as well as another son, who was father of Walter of Whitehaugh. He was surely related to the Scotts of Buccheuch, and may have been the same as one of the other contemporary Johns, e.g. John of Roberton. John (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘in Orchart’ (i.e. Orchard) when he witnessed a document for the Routledges of Crook in 1529/30. His son was also John. He was surely related to other contemporary Scotts, but the precise relationship is unknown. John of Borthaugh (15th/16th C.) eldest son of George of Borthaugh, by his first wife (who was his cousin). In 1526 he is recorded (as ‘of Burnthauch’) in a protest by Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig, who was superior over some of his lands. Also in 1526 he is probably the John ‘in Borthauch’ listed among the Borders men given remission for their earlier attack on the Earl of Arran; the brothers Walter, Philip and George are listed after him. In 1526/7 he had a charter ratified for the lands of Muirhouse in Edinburghshire. In 1527 he is among the local lairds, led by Walter of Branxholme, who had remission for their part in the Battle of Skirmish Field. He is recorded in the Register of the Privy Seal for 1527. There was dispute over succession to the lands of Borthaugh, Commonside and Dryden and ‘the Wallis in Drynisdail’ (probably Dryfesdale near Lockerbie), because his father had sworn on his deathbed that his 1st marriage had not been fully legal and hence inheritance should go to the eldest son of his 2nd marriage, Walter. A set of arbitrators (all Scotts) in 1528 found that he should inherit, since he had never been declared illegitimate, but that ‘Quhomnis’ and ‘Woltoun Greyne’ should go to his brother. He is recorded in a ‘discharge’ of 1528/9 relating to lands of several local Scotts, e.g. he is there recorded as holding ‘lands of Drivisdall and 40s. land in Woltoun’ (probably Dryfesdale near Lockerbie and some lands in Wilton); it is therefore possible that he is the same man as John in Walls. In 1530 he was listed among the Lairds who submitted themselves to the King’s will in order to better keep order on the Border. He sold the lands of Borthaugh to Roger Langlands of that Ilk sometime before 1531. This may have been to settle debts with Lawson of Highriggs in Edinburgh. John (15th/16th C.) recorded in ‘Myrris or Vest Manes’ in Lilliesleaf in 1528, as preserved in the ‘Selkirk Protocol Books’. He received payment from John in Bewlie for 3 pieces of land in the east half of the Mains of Lilliesleaf. In 1531 John ‘of Myrris’ assigned his lands of Myres in Lilliesleaf to his cousin Walter, tutor of Haining, which he rented from the Archbishop of Glasgow. This was further confirmed in 1531/2. John (15th/16th C.) recorded in Bewlie in 1528 when he paid John in the West Mains of Lilliesleaf for 3 pieces of land in the east half of the West Mains. John (d.bef. 1532) from the Selkirk area. In 1532/3 his widow Elizabeth Chapman abdicated herself from debts and other responsibilities connected with him. This was done in the house of John Chapman, who may have been related. John of Roberton and Walls (d.bef. 1533) probably son of Stephen of ‘Weltoun’, who was also of Muirhouse and of Castlelaw (or Castlecary). He was probably also closely related to John of Thirlestane who held the half-barony of Wilton from 1483 until at least 1491. He is recorded as ‘Johannes Scot in Wallis’ in the Exchequer Rolls of 1501; most of the other 15 men listed along with him were from the area immediately around Hawick. Around 1501 he had disposed of ‘Weltoun’ (probably the name of lands near Cumbernauld associated with Castlecary and not the western half-barony of Wilton), and was now ‘of Valis’ (probably ‘Walls’ or ‘St. Michael’s Walls’ in Dryfesdale, north of Lockerbie and not the more local ‘Woll’ or ‘Wells’; however, it is not impossible that the earlier designation gave its name to the lands of Woll later). In 1502 he is recorded as being of ‘Valis’ when he acted as surety for Walter Scott of Headshaw, ‘in Walis’ when he was surety for Hector Lauder in Clerklands and ‘de Walis’ when he was surety for Adam Turnbull in Galashieburn and for Walter, son of Walter of Headshaw. Also in 1502 he was ‘in le walis’ when he had remission for stealing a horse from Adam Murray at Muselee and 3 horses from Lord Cranston at Kirkhope; his sureties were Robert in Synton and Walter of Headshaw. Additionally in 1502 he served as surety for Hector Lauder in Clerklands and ‘de Walis’ when he was surety for Adam Turnbull in Galashieburn and for Walter, son of Walter of Headshaw. In 1502 he acquired the lands of Roberton (which had belonged to a branch of the Scotts more than a century earlier). He is probably the ‘Dominus de Robertoun’ recorded in the Justice-aire held in Selkirk 1502, when he was fined for failing to give suit for his lands of Roberton. He also held a sasine for the lands of Howeuleuch in 1520. In 1525 he was ‘in the Valys’ when listed on the remission given to a large number of Borders men for attacking the Earl of Arran; his sons Stephen and George are also listed. In 1527 he was among the local lairds given remission for mustering their supporters at Melrose (i.e. Skirmish Field) and Linlithgow; he is there ‘of the Valis’. He was one of the Scotts who was on the arbitration panel to decide on the disputed succession to the lands of Borthaugh in 1528. He is recorded as holder of ‘5 merklands in Dryvisdaill’ (Dryfesdale, near Lockerbie) in a discharge relating to ‘non-entry’ in 1528/9. He is also mentioned (along with several other Scotts) in the indenture of 1529 intended to reconcile the feuding Scotts and Kerrs. In 1530 he was listed among the Lairds who submitted themselves to James V to keep better order on the Border. His wife was Isobel Douglas and his son and heir was Walter (as described in documents relating to an inquest in Selkirk to establish Walter as his successor). His son George is recorded receiving a pardon in 1527 (probably after being outlawed for rieving). The celebrated faster, John of Borthwick, may have been a member of the same family. He was succeeded by Walter of Robertson (recorded as his son and heir in 1532/3) and then Stephen of Robertson (probably a younger son). It is possible he was the same man as John of Borthaugh. John of Ashkirk (d.1526) killed at the Battle of Skirmish Field, when the Scotts and their allies tried to wrest control of the young King James V from the Earl of Angus. In the indenture signed by Scotts and Kerrs 3 years later, one of the agreements is that Mark Ker of Dolphinston and Andrew Ker of Graden shall visit the 4 main pilgrimage sites of Scotland, saying a mass for his soul, and those of the other Scotts killed in the battle. He was probably related to the James recorded in Ashkirk in 1502 and Walter there in 1533. John of Hassendean (d.c.1530) brother of David of Hassendean, from whom he succeeded. He is recorded in 1528/9 for ‘non-entry’ of his lands at Galalaw. He married Agnes Scott and died without a son. His heir was his brother’s son (some accounts say his brother) William of Hassendean, who received the lands of Falside in Selkirkshire in 1539. It is possible he is the John in Hassendean who was surety in 1502 for James in Ashkirk. John (15th/16th C.) recorded being ‘in Aikwood’ in 1530. He who part of a list of men from the Selkirk area who acknowledged that they had taken prisoners, horses, meal and other goods from men they thought were traitors of Annandale, but understanding they were legitimate travellers from Moffat had returned everything; Thomas, ‘younger there’, is also mentioned. He may also be the John in ‘Aikvod called Dustyba’ listed along with William in Hartwoodburn and others in 1544 when John Dunlop accused them of stealing his butter. It is unclear how he might have been related to Michael of Aikwood. John (16th C.) local clergyman. It is possible there was more than one man of this name, but it seems reasonable to assume that the notary of the 1520s was the same as the Vicar of Hawick Kirk in the 1530s and 40s. He was notary in 1527 to the agreement ending the feud between Sir Walter Branxholme and James Murray of Falahill; he is recorded there as ‘Schir John Scot, notar public’. He was ‘Sir John’ when he served as notary for a document of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme (witnessed at Branxholme) relating to the Barony of Kirkurd in 1527. And he was notary for the document giving the decision on the disputed succession to Borthaugh in 1528. In 1528/9 he was ‘Sir John’ when acting as notary for the discharge by Patrick, Earl of Bothwell to Walter Scott of Branxholme. He is surely the ‘Schir John Scot, vicar of Hawik’ who witnessed an agreement between James Murray of Falahill and Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1528. In 1530 he was Vicar of Hawick when he was recorded as a procurator for several men in Selkirk for an action brought against Patrick Murray, Sheriff of Selkirk; he also brought an action in Selkirk ‘in name of his brothers and others’ against Alexander Tait ‘lord of Pirne’. In 1530/1 he was ‘vicar of Hawick’ when he witnessed the marriage contract between Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Janet Kerr. Perhaps the same ‘sir John’ was in 1530/1 witness to Sir Walter Scott of Braxholm being granted the hereditary office of Bailie of Melrose Abbey. He was ‘vicar of Hawik’ in 1534 when he was a witness at Hassendean Kirk for the sealing of a letter of reversion when Gavin Elliot sold the lands of Nether Galalaw to William Scott. Also recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books for 1534, he relieved Thomas Johnstone from all promises made to him. He was Rector of Hawick Parish from at least 1536; a record in the Register of the Privy Seal has him taking over the Rectory following the decease of Alexander Murray (although this was probably much earlier); he is recorded as ‘D. Johannis Scott’. He was Vicar of Hawick, recorded as a witness to the 1537 Charter of Douglas of Drumlanrig. In the Charter he is not mentioned explicitly as the chaplain (to whom 2 particates of land are assigned), although he himself is separately listed as having 4 particates, and other clergymen are also mentioned; it is therefore unclear what his position was at St. Mary’s, but probably he held the ‘living’, without being the preacher. In 1537 there was also a priest of Glasgow diocese of the same name who was notary for a sasine for the... lands of Meikledale. In 1539/40 he was ‘the venerable man John Scot vicar of Hawik’ in a record of a sale of land at Appletreenhall (by Robert Scott of Howpasley to Janet Scott, widow of Robert Elwand), contained in the Selkirk Protocol Books. Probably the same man was notary for a ‘letter of reversion’ of 1540 between Simon Scott of Fenwick and William Scott of Harden (since the witnesses are all local men, although there is some ambiguity, since ‘John of Wod’ was the last witness on the related bond). In 1544 he is also described as Vicar of Hawick when he resigned lands at ‘East Murmawe’ to John Scott of Burnhead; this suggests he may have been related to the Scotts of Burnhead. He may have still been Vicar in 1550. His brother’s great-grandson William in Catslack was served heir to his lands of East Moormaw (in the Barony of Chamberlain Newton) in 1606, thus establishing a connection between him and the Scotts of Catslack. Perhaps the same ‘Sir John Scot, notar publick’ drew up the bond of 1548 when the Elliots entered Robert Crozier as a prisoner with the Laird of Ferniehirst. In 1538 there is a ‘Preceptum Legitimationis’ for James, natural son of John Scott, Vicar of Hawick; thus he had at least one son. The fact that he witnessed or notarised several documents for the Scotts of Branxholme suggests that he may have been related to the Laird in some way. John (16th C.) recorded being ‘in Hawik’ in the Selkirk Protocol Books for 1534, when he relieved Thomas Johnstone from all promises made to him. The witnesses included another John (probably the Vicar), as well as Thomas (perhaps a relative), Vicar James Young, William Brydon, John Hall and Robert Chapman. Specifically, he agreed to pay a dowry to Thomas Johnstone in a marriage contract with his daughter Janet. It seems clear he was not the same man as the Vicar of Hawick of the same name, since the Vicar (along with Bailie Thomas) represented him in witnessing the contact in the chamber of William Brydon in Selkirk. He also agreed to vest the couple in his half of the quarter of East Haining, namely the 20 shillingland that he had in redemption from Robert Todrig, with Bailie James acting as the ‘bailie in that part’ (and possibly a relative). He was also recorded as a Burgess ‘in Peilgait’ in about 1534 when he had half a tement of ‘Le Est Hanying’ in heritable fee from John in Haining and gave sasine of it to his wife Margaret Scott (for her lifetime). Bailie James of Selkirk was a witness to the second transaction and possibly a relative. John of Borthwick (16th C.) celebrated faster, part of a local branch of the Scotts. He was possibly son of John of Borthwick and descended from the Scotts of Buccleuch. Scott of Satchells says he was ‘cousin-german’ to Walter of Whitehaugh. He came to notoriety about 1531 and was written about by Archbishop Spottiswoode. He is supposed to have been unable to pay the costs following a legal case and sought sanctuary near Holyrood, where he abstained from food and drink for 40 or 50 days. This drew the attention of the King, who shut him up in a room for some of this period (however, it may be that the period was more like 32 days). He claimed he received sustenance from the Virgin Mary and when done ‘came into thee street, half nakede, and made a speech to the people which did flock aboute him’. He then went to Rome with a certificate from the King, was examined there by the Pope, and given a priests habit and certificate that he had lived ‘sine cibo et potu per centum et sex dies’. After that he travelled to Jerusalem, apparently stocking up on palm leaves and stones from the pillar on which Christ was scourged before returning to England. There he cursed the behaviour of King Henry VIII, was arrested, and spent 50 days in prison, again apparently without food. He was sent packing to Scotland, and the last mention of him is in 1541 when 22 shillings were paid to ‘John Scott, callit the Sanct, at the King’s command’ – ‘To John of Borthwick, who fasted so long, Three sundry times he did perform’ [CWS], ‘Bare-bread and water the king allowed for his meat, But John Scott refused, and would not eat; When the forty days were come and gone, He was a great deal lustier than when he began’ [CWS]. John (16th C.) recorded in Todrig in 1533. Along with William in Todrig and others, he witnessed a document in Selkirk. John (16th C.) son of John. He and his father were described as being ‘elder and younger’ tenants of Orchard when they witnessed a 1529/30 instrument of resignation for the Routledges of the nearby lands of Crook. John (16th C.) owner of 2 particulates of land on the south side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. He could be the same as one of the other contemporary Johns (but not ‘Sir’ John the priest, who is listed separately). Another John was also listed as holding 2½ particulates on the same side of the street. A piece of land lying between one of these John’s lands and that of John Short to the west was reserved for Sir James Douglas according to the 1537 Charter. John (16th C.) recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books in 1540/1 when it was agreed by a list of men that he was responsible for the death of Walter Down. Attonement had 5 parts: come to the kirk without armour, presenting his sword to the family of Down and ask for forgiveness; go to the 4 main pilgrimage sites in Scotland; pay a priest to pray for the deceased for 4 quarter days; and bind himself to act faithfully in future towards Down’s family. It is unclear to which branch of the Scotts he belonged, but among his supporters were: his brother William; Michael Scott of Aikwood and his sons William, Robert and Walter; Gilbert; and Thomas. John (16th C.) youngest son of George of Blindhaugh and Margaret Turnbull. In 1544 his father assigned him the lands of Castleside. In 1544 his father assigned him the lands of Castleside. It is unclear if he was the same as another John, e.g. John of Blindhaugh who died in about 1580. John (d.bef. 1545) recorded in Selkirk in 1545 when his heir Thomas was in possession of his tenement. John (16th C.) resident of Whames, recorded in 1549 when tenants and servants of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme complained about their farms being burned by a group of Englishmen and Kers in the previous year. He may be related to William, who was tenant of Whames at that time. Probably the same John in ‘Quhomes’ is mentioned in 1580 when his son William witnessed a transaction in Selkirk between John Scott in Whithope and Robert Scott of Haining. John of Robertson (d.c.1566) probably son of Stephen ‘in Valis’, who purchased Robertson and Howcleuch from his brother Walter of Robertson in 1535. In the 1540s he acted as surety for James White, tenant of Borthwickshiels. He is recorded as deceased in 1566 when the rights to his son and heir John’s ward and marriage fees were given to Robert Scott. He was probably father of the later John of Robertson. John ‘the Clerk’ (d.1564) recorded in 1562 along with his brother Robert ‘of Collefurd’ and Hob ‘Wait Aboot Um’. The 3 men were excepted from the bond between the Scotts and the Kers, and were instead to be pursued for their crimes. He was convicted for sheep-stealing and related crimes and hanged, along with Hob ‘callit of Colyfurd’, Mark Elliot ‘callit of the Hill’ and John Henderson ‘the Falsar’. It is unclear where exactly he came from, but perhaps the Slitrig valley. John of Synton (d.bef. 1557) probably son of Walter 9th Laird of Synton (although these generations are very confused), whom he predeceased. His mother was probably Walter’s first wife, who was a daughter of Cockburn of Ormiston. In 1530/1 he was recorded as son and heir of Walter of Synton when he was entered in ward at Borthwick Castle, along with William, son of Robert in Allanhaugh. Sureties for them were Robert, Lord Maxwell and John Johnstone of that Ilk. His sons were probably: Walter of Synton, who succeeded his grandfather Walter; George of Synton, who succeeded his older brother; William, tenant in Langhope, ancestor of the Scotts of Huntly; James, tenant in Dodbank as well as in Whitslade, ancestor of the Scotts of Satchells; and Robert of Shielswood. 4 of them were mentioned as present in the attack by the Scotts on the church of St. Mary of the Lowes in 1557. John (16th C.) described as ‘in Dringstoun’ (i.e. Drinkstone) in 1535 when Robert in Howford asked him to vacate his dwelling house and lands. Robert claimed to hold Drinkstone heritably, while he counterclaimed that ‘he was within the terms pertaining to the fermes money and customary dues on the said place’. Presumably the issue was resolved and the same John was ‘in Dringstoun’ when witness to a 1556 charter dealing with the lands of Nether Harden. Also recorded as ‘in Dringston’ when witness to a sasine in 1559. In 1566 he is ‘Johne Scot of Dryngston’ when he had a letter of reversion for the lands of ‘Litill Dryngston’ in favour of Robert Scott in Hassendeanburn on payment of £70 Scots. He is probably the same ‘Johne of Dringestoun’ who is listed in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1574; he had sold a piece of land to Robert Scott of Over Hassendean, the money being held by Scott of Branxholme’s agent John Watson. Perhaps the same John of ‘Dringistoun’ was recorded in 1581 when he witnessed an arrangement where Katherine Scott, widow of Robert of Colifort, resigned her lands of Hundleshope to her son Thomas; her son James was also a witness. He may also be the John ‘in Drinkston’ who was listed by Scott of Satchells as being among the 24 ‘Pensioners’ of Buccleuch and descended from the Scotts of Robertson. And he is probably the John ‘in Dringstone’ who signed the Scott clan bond in 1589. Sir John of Thirlestane (d.1549) probably son of David of Tushielaw, grandson of Sir Alexander of Howpasley and brother of Adam of Tushielaw, ‘King of Thieves’. Along with Robert of Howpasley he entered a ‘bond of manrent’ with Malcolm, Lord Fleming (Chamberlain of Scotland) in 1535. He is probably the John ‘in Thirlstane’ who in 1535 was said to be involved with contracts for Melrose Abbey made with Mark Ker in Kippielaw. In 1539 he paid the ‘fermes’ to the King’s Chamberlain for a thir of Cacrabank in the name of his mother, who was a Gledstanes. In 1540 he paid Simon Glendinning of Megdale and Dalgleish as tenant of his lands of Dalgleish (then in the Barony of Synton through annexation). In 1541 he is recorded as tenant in Gilmanscleuch and is probably the John ‘in Thirlstane’ who occupied Altrieve and Crossecleuch. Also in 1541 he witnessed a document in Selkirk for Patrick Murray of Falahill. Additionally in 1541 he witnessed an infeftment of lands to William, son of Robert of Allanhaugh, as part of the marriage contract with his daughter Margaret. He was said to be the only Baron to declare his support for James V at Fala Moor in 1542, coming ‘into the King’s host at Soutray Edge with three score and ten lancers on horseback of his friends and followers’. As a result the family were given arms with the royal fleur-de-lis and motto ‘Ready, aye ready’ (however, the veracity of this story is challenged in some accounts, and the relevant warrant is considered by some to be a forgery). He is probably the John ‘in Thirlstane’ along with his son Robert witnessed a bond signed in Hawick in 1543, between Nichol Graham and Sir John Johnstone of that Ilk. In 1549 the Commendator of Melrose granted a discharge of all duties etc. on his lands of ‘thirlstane, ramseclewis, scadcleuch, craig and kirkhop’ now that he was deceased. Satchells (probably his great-grandson) says he married a daughter of Scott of Allanhaugh (possibly Robert, who owned land in Hawick and lived about the right time). His children included:

Robert, who succeeded; Philip of Kirkhope, who was 1st husband of the youngest daughter of Walter Scott of Synton and Whitslade; Andrew, who died without issue; Simon of Newburgh; William, who witnessed a contract for the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1567; and Margaret, who married William, son of Robert of Allanhaugh. He secondly married Marion Douglas and had another son, James of Gilmanscleuch. John (16th C.) son of Robert of Wamphray, Rysholm and Bonnington and younger brother of Adam of Bonnington. He was described being ‘of Waikfield’ Probable Wakefield in Peeblesshire). There appears to have been a separate John, who was a natural son of Robert, recorded in 1594. In 1563 he infested his brother Adam in the lands of Waikfield in return for the Kirkstead and Kirkland of St. Mary, Kirk of the Lowes. John (16th C.) recorded as ‘Bailzie’ as witness to a sasine of 1558. The purchaser of the land in the sasine was James Scott, alias ‘Bailzie’. Perhaps the same John was Bailie in 1579 when David, brother of Walter in Chamberlain Newton, purchased a tenement in Hawick. John (16th C.) recorded as ‘Johne’ along with Simon in about 1557. They were sons of the ‘guidman of Alanehauch’, who was probably either William or Robert (or possibly Adam), when they rented Stobicote from Melrose Abbey. John (16th C.) son and heir of William in Hartwoodmyres. In 1562 his father assigned to him his steadings in Ganescleuch ‘callit Eittriksyde’, with the condition that he follow the agreements already made with Simon in Thirlestane. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Johns.

John (16th C.) tenant in Catslack. In 1563 he was involved in a dispute over land with William Elliot, 5th Laird of Horsleyhill. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts associated with Catslack. John ‘Jock’ (16th C.) one of the tenants of Sir Walter Scott of Howpasley in the lands of Outersiderig in 1569. Sir Walter acted as cautioner for them in Hawick, that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. John ‘the Braid’ (16th C.) recorded in 1569 along with Airche of the Bush and Tom of Blackhall, as those men for whom Tom ‘callit the Stowir’ was held as pledge in Ravensheugh Castle. He was thus one of the Scotts of Ewesdale at that time. John (16th C.) recorded being ‘of Elestoun’ in a transaction in Selkirk in 1579. He gave his annual-rent of a boll of beir to pay off a debt. This place may be Ulston near Jedburgh. Later in 1579 Walter of Goldielands entered Robert of Haining into these same lands, with Scott of Haining promising these half lands of ‘Ilistoun’ to Janet, daughter of Sir Walter of Branxholme as part of a marriage contract; he is then described as ‘now in Darnik’. He is therefore presumably the same man as John, tenant in Darnick, who is recorded in a land transaction in Selkirk in 1579, witnessed other transactions in Selkirk around the same time and in 1580 was involved with several deals for lands in Darnick, some involving the superior of the lands, Andrew Ker of Faldonside. These lands included part of ‘ryndaill’ and Broadmeadows. He may be the ‘Master John’ in Darnick who witnessed a transaction for lands in Darnick in 1579/80 and another in 1580. It was further recorded in 1580 that he was owed money by a Burgess of Selkirk and was wadset a rig of land, and had further rigs of land resigned to him in 1580/1. In 1581 he was ‘Mr. John Scott in Darnick’ when, along with his wife Euphemia McDowell, gave sasine of lands in ‘ryndaill’, Broadmeadows and Darnick to William Young, who had loaned him money. Also in 1581 he sold some land lying in Philiphaugh, resigned 2 rigs in Selkirk, sold 2 acres in Darnick and paid the redemption money for an annual rent. John of Blindhaugh (d.bef. 1580) recorded being deceased in 1580 when his widow Isabella Turnbull leased her lands of ‘Wollhaucht’ to Walter, brother of George of Synton. Also in 1580 David Fairlie agreed to act as cautioner for William Scott in Huntly, who was to pay £9 3s 4d to each of his children, Margaret, Elizabeth, Isabel and John, as well as £38 13s 4d to his son Walter for his ‘heirship horse’ and ‘two heirship oxen’. In 1580/1 his widow Isabel Turnbull and William Allan assigned their lands in Blindhaugh to Thomas Shortreed in Whitehillbrae; his brother Walter was one of the witnesses. In 1581 his wife resigned her liferent of 2 husbandlands in Blindhaugh (occupied by Thomas Shortreed and James Vogan) to their son and heir Walter. She was instead granted the liferent of Castleside, while their daughter Marion (or Marie) would be taken into the household of William in Huntly (suggesting that he was related). This arrangement was made at Palace and witnessed by Walter of Stiches, Walter of Ashkirk, William in Burnfoot, John in Aikwood, William in Haining and William Middlemas in Lilliesleaf. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts of Blindhaugh. John of Dryhope (16th C.) 2nd Laird, succeeding Simon. He witnessed a transaction in Selkirk in 1579/80 and also served as an arbitrator on behalf of Thomas Dalgleish of Deuchar and Simon Scott of Gamescleuch in a case against Robert of Burnfoot and Robert of Burnhead. In 1580 he was one of 2 judges appointed to decide on George of Synton’s claim on lands in ‘Ilistoun’. He was listed among many Scotts and their allies in a 1581 summons to appear before the Privy Council regarding the feud with the Elliots and Armstrengs. He was among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. He was father of Mary ‘the Flower of Yarrow’. He signed the marriage contract for his daughter with Walter Scott of Harden in 1576/7 (despite the fact that Sir Walter Scott of Abbotsford said that her father was Philip, and many others followed this version of events). He may also have had a daughter Christian, who married James Tweedie of Fruid. The testament of his wife Margaret was written in 1581/2. He is listed in 1586 among leaders in upper Teviotdale in a document by King James VI instructing his Lieutenant on the Border. He signed the clan bond in 1589. It is unclear how he was related to the 1st Laird, Simon. He was probably father of the next Laird, Philip, as well as Philip’s brothers: Simon of Montbenger; Andrew; Adam; and Walter. John (16th C.) recorded in Aikwood in 1579/80 when he witnessed a transaction involving land in Lilliesleaf and another in Selkirk. In 1580 he witnessed a transaction for Robert of Haining and another involving a dispute over sheep at the Carterhaugh and another agreement involving the Scotts of Blindhaugh and Huntly. Also in 1580 he received £182 13s 4d Scots from Robert of Haining in redemption for the lands of Haining Rig and ‘Louchtknow’; John ‘Easter’ was one of the witnesses. In 1580/1 he paid Walter Scott of Ashkirk to have the ‘knaifschip and bannock’ of Ashkirk Mill for 5 years. This meant he had the right to appoint the millers there. The agreement also assigned to him the ‘teind sheaves’ from the lands he occupied called ‘baik thyne’. He may be the same as one of the other Scotts. In 1581 his wife was listed in Selkirk among people who owed money to Thomas Cruickshank. Also in 1581 he witnessed an agreement involving the liferent of Blindhaugh and Castleside with the Scotts in Blindhaugh. He witnessed a further transaction in Selkirk in 1581, involving the tenants of Robert of Aikwood and others. In 1581/2 he witnessed a marriage contract between George Brig in Langnewton and John Melrose. John of Burnhead (d.1582) probably son of John and great-grandson of Sir Walter of Kirkurd and Bucleuch. He granted a charter to John Scott, Vicar of Hawick, for Easter and Wester Moormaw (later called ‘Lees’, near Appletreehall) in 1535 and 1539. He also granted a precept of legitimation to John’s son James (suggesting they were related perhaps). John, the Vicar, resigned his lands of Easter Moormaw in 1544, and he further granted a precept of sasine to John’s son James in 1556. He is said to have lived to an advanced age. He was probably succeeded by his son Robert. John ‘Johnnie’, ‘Philip’s Jock’ (16th C.) resident of Hawick who was named in a court case at Leith in 1571, along with Allan Deans, George Maxwell and Robert Scott. This was in connection with the on-going efforts of the Warden and the people of Jedburgh to quell the activities of the Kerrs of Ferniehirst. His name is recorded there as ‘Philpis Jok’ and the cautioner was Sir William Ker of Caverton (the younger of Cessford). In 1572/3 the same men swore allegiance to the Crown and gave assurance that they would not help or reset Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst and others, with Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig as their cautioner. His son ‘Johnie’ was involved in another case in 1574, along with Allan Deans and John Cavers. His father was presumably Philip, but it is unclear if he is the same as one of the known men of that name; it is possible he was the Philip recorded in 1549 at Wiltonburn complaining about Walter Ker of Cessford. John (d.bef. 1582) tenant in Montbenger. In 1582 his widow, Margaret Lowes, complained that a gang of Armstrongs and others raided the farm of ‘Eister Montberngier’, stealing about 360 sheep and all the goods from there, and then attacking Deuchar. His sons William and Adam were also mentioned, with Adam being kidnapped by the rievers. John (16th/17th C.) brother of Walter of Chamberlain Newton and son of Margaret Turnbull. In 1573 he was declared a fugitive for non-appearance when he, his brother Walter and mother Margaret, were charged with attacking the half of the farm of Chamberlain Newton occupied by a servant of Gavin Elliott of Stobs. He and his brother David were witnesses in 1588 to an instrument of sasine for Walter Scott of Howpasley as heir to his father Sir Walter of Birkenside in the lands of Appletreehall and Midshiels. John (16th C.) recorded in Selkirk in 1580 when he owed money to John Dawson. John ‘younger’ (perhaps his son) was also mentioned as a debtor. John (16th C.) recorded in 1581 as ‘alias Johnie of Fif’ when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk. John (16th C.) recorded in 1581 being in Alton when he witnessed a dispute over the ‘maills’ of lands in Hundleshope between Thomas, son of Robert of Howford and John, parson in Hundleshope. He may be the same as one of the other Johns. John (16th C.) son of William in Broadlee. In 1581/2 he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk, relating to the lands of Sunderland. John (16th C.) recorded in 1582 as witness to a sasine in Hawick, involving James Jack. His nickname is given as ‘Jok Jo’. John (d.bef. 1594) illegitimate son of Robert of Wamphray, Rysholm and Bonnington and younger half-brother of Adam of Bonnington. He was probably distinct from John of Wakefield. His brother Adam wadset to him the lands of ‘Espehope’ in Selkirkshire. In 1594 he was deceased when his son John secured a feu from the Crown for the church lands of St. Mary, Kirk of the Lowes. John of Middlestead (16th/17th C.) listed by Scott of Satchells among the men who were on the raid to rescue Kinmont Willie in 1596. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. John of Roberton (d.1606) mentioned in 1566 as son and heir to John of Roberton, when his wardship was given to Robert Scott (it is unclear which Robert this was). Perhaps the same John signed the Scott bond of clanship in 1589. He must have been related in some way to James of Roberton, recorded in 1578. In 1581 he witnessed an agreement for a dispute between Adam of Bonnington and Robert of Haining, witnessed at Todrig Shank, along with Walter of Goldielands, William Chisholme of that Ilk and William Dalgleish in Crookston. Also in 1581 he probably (it is hard to read) witnessed a marriage contract between William in Burnfoot (on Ale) and Janet, daughter of William in Huntly. In 1587 he acted as surety for James White in Borthwickshiel. Scott of Satchells says that John Scott of Roberton was among the 33 chosen to accompany Buccleuch to rescue Kinmont Willie in 1596; this was probably him. He was succeeded by his son William of Roberton in 1610. John (16th C.) recorded being ‘in Fawdonside’ (i.e. Falkenstone) in 1581 when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk. He may be the same as one of the other Johns. John (16th/17th C.) listed as being ‘in Stowslie’ (i.e. Stouslie) by Scott of Satchells when he listed the 24 ‘Pensioners’ of Buccleuch, probably relevant to the period around 1600. It is unclear how he might have been related to other branches of the Scotts. John (16th C.) recorded as Reader of Hassendean in 1575. He may be the ‘Sir John’ who was in dispute over the Vicarage of Hassendean with Ninian Westmin in 1550. Presumably the same man was the Reader of Southdean 1579–82. It is not impossible that he is also... the same as the minister of Ashkirk etc. In 1582 he was one of 6 preachers (including readers from Hassendean, Lilliesleaf and Ashkirk) who were deprived for ‘abusing the sacraments’. They were excommunicated in 1588 for continuing in the offence, but yielded when threatened with death in 1590. The precise basis of the theological disagreement is unclear, but it may suggest that he had been a Catholic priest before the Reformation. John of Foulshiels (16th C.) probably either the son or grandson of William, the first Scott of Foulshiels. In 1592 Walter Scott was surety for him and also Walter Cairncross in Lugat that he would be loyal to the King (signed by Robert of Aikwood and Walter in Bowhill). He subscribed to a deed of loyalty in 1593 and in that same year Robert Porteous in Dalkeith was surety for him to answer the Privy Council for associating with Hercules Stewart and other traitors. He was probably succeeded by James. Rev. John (16th C.) became ‘exhorter’ at Selkirk and St. Mary’s of the Lowes in 1568. Probably the same John is recorded as schoolmaster in Selkirk in 1571. He is recorded as Minister of Ashkirk in late 1573. By 1575 he was Minister at Ashkirk, with Selkirk, Kirk of the Lowes, Ettrick and Rankilburn also in his charge. However, James (not John) Scott was also recorded as Reader in 1575, becoming Vicar in 1586. In 1576 he complained to the Privy Council that he had been dispossessed of the ‘half toun and landis of Elistoun’ in the Lordship of Melrose by Thomas and then Robert of Haining. He had titles showing that his predecessors had been in possession of these lands as kindly tenants. John (16th C.) tenant of Newark, as described in Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch’s last testament of 1574. He could be related to the later Chamberlain of the same name and location, who was son of James of Newark. Hence he could have been father of James of Newark, and presumably descended from one of the other family branches. John (16th C.) Burgess of Selkirk who was recorded as ‘eister’ when he witnessed a couple of transactions in Selkirk in 1580. One of these was between John in Aikwood and Robert of Haining. In 1580/1 he witnessed a marriage contract for Simon in Philiphaugh. In 1581 he witnessed an agreement in Selkirk where James Langlands of that Ilk resigned his lands to his son Robert Langlands. He witnessed further transactions in Selkirk in 1581. John ‘Jock’, ‘As-it-looks’ (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. He is listed as ‘Jok Scott, callit As it Luikis’.

John (16th C.) said to have been the 6th son of ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden. He was killed during a hunting trip by one of the Scotts of Gilman-scleuch, who then forfeited their lands to his father, who is supposed to have said that they were worth a dead son. There is a story about how his body lay uncorrupted for many years in the vault of Hassendean Kirk, as a result of being treacherously slain. His death may have been the inspiration for the ballad ‘The Dowie Dens of Yarrow’, but could also be confused with the murder of ‘Auld Wat’s’ other son, Walter in Essenside in about 1616 or Walter of Gamescleuch in a duel in 1609. John of the Palace (16th C.) son of Alexander, as recorded in 1545. In that year he succeeded to his father’s annual rent on a tenement in Selkirk. Andrew, Vicar of Cavers, was a witness, and hence possibly related. Probably the same John was recorded as a servant of Walter Scott of Synton, mentioned in the 1580s when charged with resetting 4 horses stolen from James Sinclair of Ewingston, one of which he kept for himself. He is recorded as ‘Johnne Scott of the Palice’, servant to George of Synton, and described as ‘sic ane dissolute and lawles persone as he will not compere . . . for na chargeis without his said master be charged to present him’. His master, George of Synton, was subsequently pronounced rebel for not appearing before the Privy Council. His place of abode was presumably the area later referred to as ‘Palace Waas’. He was probably related to Robert of Palace, who died in 1579. John ‘Jock’ (16th C.) recorded in 1585 among a long list of men under the superiority of Lord Maxwell, receiving remission for any past crimes (perhaps associated with the raid at Stirling). He is listed as a tenant farmer at Arklewood. John ‘the Tinkler’ (16th C.) tenant in Harwood. In 1585 he was one of the witnesses to the bond in which Sir Walter of Branxholme and Robert of Allanhaugh resolved a family feud. He is recorded as ‘Johne Scot, callit Tynclair, in Harret’, and he signed by ‘twychand the pen’ (meaning that he was unable to write). He was also ‘the Tinkler’ when among men complained about by the English Warden for a raid into England in 1587; his son Andrew ‘the Breadie’ was also listed, as well as Adam ‘little Peck’. His name occurred first on the list of Scotts, Laidlaws, Oliv-ers and others, and they were accused by Percival ‘Clennell’ of leading about 500 men on a day-long foray in which they took 80 cows, 7 horses, goods worth £20 and ransomed 8 prisoners. Additionally, in 1586/7 he is ‘callit the Tinklare, in Harwode’, among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties; his unnamed son is also listed (presumably Andrew). He could be the same as one of the contemporary Johns. John (16th C.) recorded as ‘Johme Scot in Tenisdside’ in the 1594 ‘respite’ by King James VI for the murder of Lord Maxwell and others at Dryfe Sands. His name occurs near several other local Scotts, but it is unclear where he was tenant. John (16th C.) recorded as ‘in Ormiston’ when he signed the Scott clan bond in 1589. It is unclear how he was related to other contemporary Scotts. However, Adam in Ormiston, recorded in 1592, seems likely to be related. John (16th C.) listed as ‘Johme Scot in Dellorien’ (i.e. Dellorain) among those implicated in the 1593 slaughter of Lord Maxwell and his men at Dryfe Sands. John (16th C.) recorded as ‘in Commonside’ when he signed the Scott clan bond in 1589. It is unclear how he may have been related to other Scotts. He may also be the Scott of Commonside said to have been involved in the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. John (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘servant to Sir Walter Scott of Brankxhame’ in 1597 when he and Simon Armstrong of Mangerston were delivered to Lord Serope to be prisoners within Carlisle. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John of Kirkstead (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1603 among subordinates of Sir Walter of Buccleuch who ‘had been put to the horn’ for not paying feu mails for their lands to the Queen’s Chamberlain, with Robert of Haining being denounced for not entering them in court. He could be the same as one of the other Johns. John of the Toor (d.bef. 1609) succeeded by his son John in his lands in Hawick. He is referred to as being ‘call’d of the Tour in Hawick’ later in 1609 when his son David brought an action against the Turnbuls of Barnhills. He may be related to the earlier Robert and later William, who are also ‘of the Tour’. It is possible he is the John ‘in Hawick’ whose son John in 1579/80 purchased rigs in Selkirk previously belonging to Nicholas Chapman. John (16th C.) tenant in Montbenger. He is recorded as signatory to a bond at Cadrono in 1595. He may be related to the earlier tenant of the same name. John ‘Jock’, ‘the Stour’ (16th/17th C.) mentioned in 1598 in complaints from Sir James Sandilands that he was among a group of Armstrongs, Elliots and Scotts who stole from his lands and ‘slew and dismembered divers good subjects who rais to the fray’. He is recorded being called ‘Stowre of Quinskcleuch’ (perhaps Whinney Cleuch) and he is listed after Adie ‘the Peck’ and hence perhaps related. He may be the ‘Johne Scott, callit the Stowr’ who had been warded with Henry Lord Sinclair, but released by 1573. Probably the same John was brother to Thomas ‘callit Thome of the Stoir’ in 1586/7 when listed among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. He could be the ‘Johne Scot of Deir of the Scoir’ recorded in 1600, when along with ‘Dandie’ Armstrong, called ‘Braid Sword’ and John Armstrong, called ‘Sandy’s Johnnie’, he was accused of stealing 3 horses and 3 webs of cloth from John Simpson in Gilmerton. Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch denied that he was responsible for him when the case came before the Privy Council. In another case in 1600 he was recorded as ‘Jok Scott, called the Stowre of Quynecleuch’, accused of raiding the farms of Sir James Sandilands; this makes it clear that he was from Whinney Cleuch. John (16th/17th C.) described as ‘of Monks-tower’ by Scott of Satchells, among the 24 ‘pensioners’ of Buccleuch. He was said to be ‘brother to old William Scott of Altoun’, but his connection to other Scotts is unclear. John the Clerk’ (16th/17th C.) resident of ‘Elrig’ recorded in 1612, which could be Elrig in the Borthwick valley. James Noble in East Burn of Stobo complained to the Privy Council that he had not found caution for killing his father. He could have been related to the earlier John called ‘the Clerk’. John (d.c.1619) probably the eldest son of James of Hundleshope. He may be the John ‘parson in Hundellishop’ who in 1581 had a dispute with Thomas, son of Robert of Howford regarding the ‘mails’ of lands in Hundleshope. He was possibly the ‘Johnne Scot in Hundemshop’ recorded in 1583/4 when there was caution made that James Gledstains of Cocklaw and his tenant Thomas Burnet and other tenants would not harm him; Robert of Thirlestane and Sim of Winterburgh received the cautioner. He is referred to in 1596/7 as ‘some time in Hundillishoip’, when he was part of a group of Scotts, under Robert of Thirlestane, who attacked lands owned by the citizens of Peebles. He is probably also the John, ‘in Jedwartfield’, brother of William in Glack, who in 1597/8 was accused (along with his brother William and Arthur in Gamescleuch) of attacking and capturing Ralph Ker, servant of Mark Kerr, Commendator of Newbattle. His brother Thomas was also in the armed group. He is also named as ‘portioner’ of Hundleshope in several documents in the period 1607–17, and is listed among supporters of Scott of Thirlestane in their feud with the Scotts of Tushielaw. In 1612 he was ‘of Hundleshope’ on the ‘retour’ panel for Tweedie of Drumelzier. Also in 1612 he was listed among Scotts and others accused of overcharging interest on loans. In 1618 he was ‘portioner of Hundleshope’ when he had a charter of the lands of Hundleshope and others within Peeblesshire that had previously belonged to the Gledstains of Cocklaw. Probably the same John ‘of Hundleshope’ was recorded in 1618 when his brother William of Glack served as his cautioner not to harm the Moffats of Granton (which may be a clue to connect this family with the Scotts of Glack); similarly there was a caution for the Moffats not to harm him. He was succeeded by his son John in 1619, with the rules over being a minor waived in 1621; his son also gained his lands of ‘Alcolmefield, Wodgrevington’ and pasturage of Cademuir in Peeblesshire in 1625 and was recorded as a creditor of Sir John of Newburgh in 1631. John of Bonnington (16th/17th C.) son of Adam and brother of Simon of Bonnington. He was probably present at the Carlisle raid in 1596 in which Kinmont Willie was freed. In 1599 Lord Salton was his surety that he would ‘keep the King’s peace’. He was tried in 1601 for the murder of Archibald Napier of ‘the Wowmet’ (Woolmot, near Edinburgh); along with 3 other Scotts, Walter, James and William ‘in Schostanes’ (all brothers of Robert of Bowhill and sons of Robert of Aikwood), he was convicted and ‘put to the horne’. He was referred to as being ‘in Quholplaw’ (probably Whelplaw in Lauderdale) and ‘alias callit Johnie of Bonytoune’. It is unclear why this group of Scotts attacked Napier. He was recorded as brother of Simon of Bonnington among a group of Scotts who attacked Adam Veitch’s lands at ‘Fechane’ in 1602; he was denounced as a rebel for not appearing. He may have been involved in the murder of Walter Scott in 1616. He appears to have succeeded his brother Simon to the lands of Bonnington in about 1622, but died a few years later. He succeeded his brother Simon and deceased nephew Robert to the lands of ‘Ermesheugh’ and Singlie in 1624. He is probably the same John who was accused of murdering Walter ‘in Essenside’, son of ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden in about 1616, abetted by his brothers Simon and Adam and ‘Will’s Sym’ of Thirlestane. Since the murderer was said to be a Scott of Newhouse, then perhaps they were related to the Bonnington Scotts. If this was the same man, then he must have been acquitted. He succeeded his brother Simon in the lands of Bonnington, but these went to Andrew (surgeon in Edinburgh) in 1624, and later to William Burnet, his grand-nephew. He was in succeeded in his other lands by his son Robert. John (16th/17th C.) brother of Walter of Woll. Scott of Satchells lists him among those involved in the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596, and refers to him as being ‘of Ashkirk’. He is recorded in 1608 among a party accused of attacking and maltreating some residents of Selkirk. His half-brother John Turnbull (apparent of Harden) was his accomplice, and they attacked the ‘knokkeiper’ John Jackson, apparently after they were ‘hounded out’ by Robert Scott of Haining. After the pair were apprehended by the Bailies of Selkirk a group of Scotts and their followers (from Thirlestane, Bowhill, Synton and elsewhere) freed them. Along with his half-brother John Turnbull he was ordered to be imprisoned in Edinburgh or declared rebels. He could be the John in Ashkirk recorded in Selkirk in 1580 in a transaction involving Helen Scott, widow of Mungo Donaldson. John (16th/17th C.) tenant in Ettrickhouse, recorded in 1609 among the supporters of Scott of Thirlestane in their feud with the Scotts of Tushielaw. He may be the ‘Jocky ill-to-haud’ who was a natural brother of Sir Robert of Thirlestane, mentioned by Scott of Satchells. Sir John of Newburgh (16th/17th C.) son of Arthur of Newburgh. Scott of Satchells describes him as ‘that Prince of Poets than whom Chaucer, Glovet, Sir Thomas More and Sir Philip Sydney never had a more Poetic Vein’. He was served heir to his father in 1610, in the lands of Winterburgh and ‘Fawodgrange alias Craighall’ in Ettrick Forest. He was bonded in 1610, along with his brother Arthur and John of Hundleshope, for not harming Walter of Tushielaw and his sons. In addition there was a complaint in 1617 against his brother Arthur by James Mitchellhill, burgess of Selkirk. In 1621 he was appointed to a commission to apprehend the men who killed Robert of Gilmancescleuch. Along with John of Gilmancescleuch and Sir Robert of Thirlestane he promised in 1621 not to molest the Elphinstones. In 1622 he was appointed as one of 10 men to assist Walter of Buccleuch in administering justice on the Border. In 1626 he is listed as owner of a ‘£4 land’ in the Barony of Belses, part of the temporal lands of Jedburgh Abbey. In 1631 he complained against Andrew Scott, surgeon in Edinburgh. He was listed on the last testament of Water, Earl of Buccleuch in 1633. He was probably succeeded by his son John. His natural son David is recorded in 1640 in a document relating to the Scotts of Thirlestane. He also had a daughter who married Sir Walter Scott of Whitslade. John, son of Andrew (surgeon in Edinburgh), who inherited Winterburgh in 1636, was surely related. John of Drinkstone (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1603 on a list of land-owners in Hassendean Parish whom the Baron, James Cunningham, tried to oust. He was presumably a direct descendant of the earlier John ‘in Drinkstone’ and related to the George ‘callit of Deringstoun’ recorded in 1616. John ‘Wat’s Jock’ (d.bef. 1610). In 1610 his son Bailie Robert and his wife Helen Turnbull had a sasine for a tenement off the Kirkwynd in Hawick. His father was presumably Walter. One of the witnesses was ‘Jock’s Wattie’, who could have been another son. He may be the same man as ‘Jok Scot, duellant in Hawik, callit Wattis Jok’ named in 1581, along with Scotts from Allanhaugh and Over Southfield, when they were forgiven for the murder of George Scott (resident of Hawick) 3 years earlier. And also the ‘Johne Scot, alias Wattis Jok, burges of Hawik’ who was one of the witnesses to the bond in which Sir Walter of Branxholme and Robert of Allanhaugh resolved a family feud; his brother Thomas (also a Burgess) was also a witness. John ‘Jean’s John’ (16th/17th C.) son of the deceased ‘Symme Scot in Southfield’, recorded in 1609 when he was among several men fined for harassing Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane. The other men included 2 sons of Kinnmont Willie, suggesting he was part of a gang of would-be rievers from Liddesdale. It is unclear if this Southfield is the one near Hawick. John (16th/17th C.) served heir in 1609 to his father John, who was ‘called o the Toor’ in Hawick. He also had a brother Dacid, who is also recorded in 1609. It seems likely this was a property-owning family of Scotts who lived at the Tower Knowe in the 16th and 17th centuries. Their relationship with other branches is unknown. It is possible he is the John son of John ‘in Hawik’ whose in 1579/80 purchased 3 rigs of land in Selkirk previously belonging to Nicholas Chapman. John (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘younger’ in Selkirk in 1580, along with ‘elder’ John, who was presumably his father. He is also recorded in Selkirk in 1581 when his cautioners were Gavin Murray and John Young. Additionally in 1581 he made an agreement with William Keen in Linstead. John (16th/17th C.) son of the Laird of Howpasley (probably William). In 1599 he was a tenant of his father, who was surety for him, as well as Walter of Ladhope (who may have been related). He may be the same as one of the other Johns. John ‘Jock’ (16th/17th C.) bellman of Hawick who is mentioned in a murder trial of 1612, the events taking place in 1610 (and described in Pitcairn’s ‘Criminal Trials’). He was presumably a Burgh Officer, one of the earliest on record. John ‘Bonnie Johnnie’ (16th/17th C.) nickname for a Hawick resident, recorded in a 1612 document along with a number of people accused of over-charging interest on loans. He is listed as ‘Bony Johnne Scot’ and he appeared in court to answer the charge. Presumably the same man is recorded as ‘Johnne Scott callit Bony Jony’ in the 1616 trial of the men accused of salghtering the Laird of Drumlanrig’s sheep at Howpasley. Along with James Wemys and James Lethen, he helped take the pistol from ‘Marion’s Geordie’ Scott before he could shoot James Douglas. It is unclear to which branch of the Scotts he belonged. John of Newark (d.1622) eldest son of James. His father left him Newark (although it is unclear whether this was ownership or tenancy) in the early years of the 17th century. He is probably the John recorded in 1581 being ‘in Newerkmylne’ when he gained crofts in Selkirk. Either he or another John is the ‘bretheris sone’ of James in Newark listed among people owing money to Thomas Cruickshank in 1581. In 1582 he resigned his lands in Selkirk to his father James in Newark Mill; Selkirk Bailie William was one of the witnesses and hence perhaps related. He is described as ‘in Newark‘ when he served as Chamberlain to the Scotts of Buccleuch for ‘the Forest’ in the period 1609–15. In 1608 his son James was among a group of Scotts and others who were accused of attacking Selkirk Mill. He may be the John ‘in Newark’ listed among local men accused of overcharging on interest by the Privy Council in 1612 (but omitted from the list of those found guilty). In 1618 his son Walter Scott was convicted of mutilating 3 fingers of Adam, son of John Dalgleish of Deuchar and in 1618 Walter Scott of Buccleuch was instructed to apprehend him, as well as his sons James and William and William in Fastheugh for the murder of Adam Dalgleish in Deuchar. Separately his son Walter was also to be tried in 1618 for the mutilation of Adam Dalgleish. Also in 1618 he complained about a group of Elliots attacking his tenants and servants at Foulshiels in Liddesdale. His house in Selkirk is mentioned in a document in 1619.
He married Agnes Simpson and their children included: James, who succeeded; Robert, Burgess of Selkirk; and Walter in Broadhaugh. His son Walter had cautioners George of Castleside and Robert of Hartwoodmys, suggesting they were close relatives. John (16th/17th C.) brother of Walter, Laird of Tushielaw, and younger son of William of Tushielaw. Along with his son William (a minor at the time) he was accused in 1607 of killing John, father of John Govane of Cardrona (a family that would later connect with the Scotts of Tushielaw through marriage). He was the uncle of the John Scott who killed Walter of Thirlestane in a duel. John of Kirkhouses (16th/17th C.) from a branch of the family near Ashkirk, he was son of James. His grandfather was George Scott of Synton. He inherited the lands from his father in 1609. He was probably the John ‘in Kirkhouss’ who witnessed to the making of the inventory of Isabel Donald, widow of Robert of Palace, in 1579 (with his son James also a witness). In 1579/80 he was a witness in Kirkhouses for a case between Dalgleishes and Scotts. In 1580 he received re-demption money from Walter of Ashkirk for the lands of ‘Ediehautch’, ‘Ediebray’, 2 husbandlands and a croft, plus the lands of Salenside. Also in 1580 he borrowed 2/21 Scots from John Mitchellhill, Burgess of Selkirk and was recorded in an arrangement involving bolls of bere with Elizabeth Elliot, widow of Robert Waugh in Ashkirk. His ‘onset and croft’ in Selkirk is mentioned in 1581. Additionally in 1581 he resigned his possessions in Ashkirk that had been wadset to him by Walter of Ashkirk and under the reversion Walter assigned to him part of Salenside Croft and ‘Shakriggis’. In 1581/2 he received money from the Mitchellhill family for lands within Selkirk. In 1581/2 his first-born son James took out a tack on lands in Ashkirk from Walter in Ashkirk. He was probably the John ‘in Kirkhouse’ who signed the Scott clan bond in 1589. In 1614 he was summoned (along with his kinsman Robert Scott of Salenside) to appear before the Presbytery to answer to charges of murder. He is probably the John of Kirkhouses who was part of band of Scotts that forcibly took the farm of Hartwoodburn from its tenant in 1627. John of Hundlehope (16th/17th C.) son of John. He was served heir to his father in 1619 and in 1621 the Privy Council ruled that he could become portioner of Hundlehope, even although still a minor. He succeeded to his father’s lands in Peebleshire in 1625. In 1629 he and his wife Helen Geddes had a charter for the lands of Hundlehope and others. He was recorded as a creditor of Sir John of Newburgh in 1631. John ‘Jock’ or ‘the Suckler’ (d.1616) son of Thomas of Nether Braidlie. He was one of the men involved in the slaughter of Sir James Douglas’ sheep at the instigation of Lady Scott of Howpasley in 1615, apparently in revenge for Douglas taking lands at Howpasley. He was the first to be sent for by Lady Howpasley, and at the Market Cross of Hawick he met with Jean Scott of Satchells and ‘Marion’s Geordie’. After the plan was hatched, he met some of the others at the foot of the Eilrig Burn in the Borthwick valley. The other men involved were George, Walter and Ingram Scott, and William Scott of Satchells, the first 3 all being caught and hung at Edinburgh Cross after Jock had turned informer. His disposition claimed that George had threatened him when he had second thoughts about going through with the crime; when faced with this George asked him to repeat the statements to his face, which he did. For thus turning informant he was declared to be of lesser guilt and left in prison after the 1616 trial. However, later that same year he himself (mis-transcribed as ‘Jok the Suttler’) was hanged at the same place for sheep stealing; the specific charge was for taking 4 sheep from ‘Adam Almouse’, tenant at Muselee, as well as ‘ane zow and ane hog, pertening to George Scott, callit of Deringstoun’ from his lands at Castlehill, ‘ane blak zow, pertening to Rowie Scott, called Rowie of Huttikill, furth of the Lyn besyde Eilrig’ and 7 ewes from James Rowie in Raeburn. These crimes took place 1612–14. Sir John of Scotstarvit (1585–1670) descended from Robert of Al lanhaugh, son of Sir David of Buccleuch. He succeeded his grandfather in 1592, at the age of 7. He had the tower of Scotstarvit rebuilt near Cupar in Fife, which still survives. He was a Judge, Directory of the Chancery, Lord of Session and Privy Councillor, but lost his positions when Cromwell occupied Scotland. He assisted Walter, 1st Earl of Buccleuch to run his estates while he was fighting in Holland, and carried the coronet at the Earl’s funeral. Along with Sir William of Harden he went to court to hear the King’s ruling on the land dispute between Francis Stewart and the Earl of Buccleuch in 1634. He was appointed as one of the ‘tutors’ for the children of the Earl of Buccleuch and served as one of the trustees for Mary, when she succeeded to the Buccleuch estates. He was the last of the original tutors named as ‘sine quibus non’ by Francis Earl of Buccleuch, but lost control to Gideon of Highchester and the Borders tutors. He was instrumental in having Pont's maps of Scotland published by Blaeu in 1654, and contributed to the accompanying text. He also wrote ‘The staggering state of the Scots statesmen’, containing satirical sketches of prominent Scotsmen of his age (and back to 1550), published eventually in 1754. He married Anna, daughter of Sir John Drummond of Hawthorn Dene. Their children were: Robert, who died young; Sir James, who succeeded; Sir John; William; Alexander; Robert; Ludovic; Margaret; Jean; Helen; Eupham; Anna; Eliza; Rebecca; Elizabeth; Margaret; and Janet. His second wife was Margaret Melville, with whom he had a son George, and hethirdly married Eupham Moneypenny and had sons Cecil and Walter. It seems that in 1651, when the Scotts of Buccleuch failed to have a male heir, he was the most senior representative with an unbroken male succession. His descendant, David, was an M.P. in the mid-18th century, but the branch failed in the male line in the early 1800s. John (16th/17th C.) ‘brother-german’ to Walter in Allamouth in 1606 when he purchased the lands of Hobsburn Weens from Thomas Turnbull. He was thus the first of the Scotts of Weens. In 1610 he is recorded as ‘of Weenis’ when he was part of an inquest. In 1612 he was ‘in Weneis’ when he was Bailie to Sir Andrew Ker of Oxnam for a sasine in Rulewater. He is referred to as ‘called of Allamouth, now in Weymes’ in a sasine of 1617 when he gained a bakehouse in Jedburgh from baker Henry Cunningham. He may have been a son of the William of Allamouth who is recorded in the late 16th century. He seems likely to have been father or grandfather of the later Andrew of Weens. John of Mackersway (16th/17th C.) younger son of Sir Walter of Tushielaw. Note that another John, accused in 1607 of killing the father of John Govane of Cardrona, was his uncle. According to Satchells it was one of the men who took part in the rescue of Kimmont Willie in 1596. In 1599 his father Walter was surety for himself, as well as him and his brothers Robert and James, to ‘observe the King’s peace’. He was listed as ‘Jhone Scot, his sone lawfull’ after Walter of Tushielaw, when they were witnesses to a report of the bailie court of the Regality of Melrose in 1607. He was described as ‘John Scott, called of Tushelaw’ in a charter of 1618. His natural son Francis was also witness to the charter, as were Robert, ‘f iar of Tushelaw’ (his older brother) and Sir Walter ‘of Tushelaw’ (his father). He was the John, who killed Walter of Gamescleuch (or Thirlestane), recorded in the Selkirk Presbytery records of 1609 and possibly the inspiration for ‘The Dowie Dens o’ Yarrow’. He was excommunicated after this, but his pardon by James VI for the slaughter of Walter Scott, brother of Sir Robert of Thirlestane, is recorded in 1614 and after due repentance his status with the church was reinstated in 1615. It is probably the John, brother of Robert of Tushielaw who witnessed a bond for Thomas Turnbull in Spittal-on-Rule in 1619 and who witnessed a bond in 1620 between Thomas Turnbull, tenant at Spittal-on-Rule and Robert Pringle, servitor to Sir Gideon Murray of Elibank. In 1620 he was served as tutor to William, Marion, James, Elizabeth and Margaret, children of his brother James of Glenrath. He married Jeanne, daughter of Patrick Murray of Fala hill. He had at least one legitimate son, Walter. John (16th/17th C.) son of Walter of Chamberlain Newton. He is probably the John of Chamberlain Newton recorded in 1612 when he and Michael Hunter of ‘Powmude’ complained to the Privy Council about several Stewarts. In 1619 he signed a bond in Hawick with Adam Turnbull of Abbotrule, which was registered in 1624. Witnesses included William, ‘f iar of Quhithauch’ and Walter ‘called of Altoun’. It is possible he is the John of Brieryards whose nephew William of Chamberlain Newton was served heir to his lands of Brieryyands and ‘Braidleyis’ in 1633 and 1637. John (16th/17th C.) tenant in Brieryyards. In 1611 he was fined for the non-appearance at court in Jedburgh of Robert in Hawick, ‘called Symmeis Hob’, and Walter ‘called Dandis Wattie’. It is unclear how he was related to other local Scotts. He could be the same man as the later John of Brieryyands, brother of William of Chamberlain Newton. John (16th/17th C.) tenant in Whithope. He was listed in 1627 as one of 9 men charged with performing a valuation of the lands in the Parish of Hawick. John (17th C.) recorded in 1632 as possessor of the Liddesdale farms of ‘Rouraltonholme’ (probably at Ralton) and Auldsheils. John (17th C.) recorded in 1632 as joint tenant, along with Gavin Elliot, of the lands of Over and Nether ‘Closse alias Welshaw’ in Liddesdale. John (17th C.) recorded in 1632 as ‘bailie in Liddisdaill’ in a document listing the possessors of the lands that made up the Lordship of Liddesdale. He possessed the lands of ‘Flocksteid alias Flaske’. He may have been bailie to the Lord of Liddesdale. John (d.bef. 1634) described as ‘burgess of Hawick’ in 1634 when his son William became a wright’s apprentice in Edinburgh. He may be the John who acted as witness for the Hawick Parish valuation in 1627. John (d.bef. 1629) recorded being ‘in Hawick’ in 1629 when his former lands in Selkirk are mentioned in a land transaction. John (17th C.) son of Andrew, who was a surgeon and Burgess of Edinburgh. In 1636 he was served heir to his father’s lands of Winterburgh with mill in Ettrick Forest, as well as ‘Fawoodgrasing alias Craighill’. It is unclear how he was related to earlier Scotts of Winterburgh. John (17th C.) tenant in Howpasy. In 1635 he was served heir to his grandfather Alexander, ‘commonly called ‘Land Sandie’ in Hawick. John of Huntly (17th C.) son of James ‘called of Huntly’. He was served heir to his father in 1639 in the lands of Langhope in Ettrick Forest, as well as ‘Fawoodgrasing alias Craighill’. He is one of the last recorded Lairds of Huntly. However, Walter of Huntly is recorded just a few years later, in 1644, so possibly his brother. John of Catslacknowe (17th C.) descended from the Scotts of Montbenger, and before that the Scotts of Dryhope. He may have been son of Walter of Montbenger and father of Rev. James of Kirkton and Ancrum. However, Rev. James’ father may instead have been Walter of Catslacknowe. It is unclear if he was related to the John in Catslack recorded in 1563. He may be the John ‘of Catslak’ whose daughter Helen had a sasine for lands in Deuchar in 1580, from Thomas Dalgleish in Deuchar; he was witness to the sasine. He is probably also the John ‘in Catslak’ in 1580 when he witnessed a sasine for the daughters of his sister and her husband John Turnbull of Philiphaugh. He is probably the John ‘in Catslak’ in 1581 when, along with several other Scotts (from Hartwoodmyres, Gilmanscleuch, Gilmanscleuch, Chamberlain Newton, Edinburgh, North Bowhill, Dryhope and Howpasy), he supported William of Tushielaw and Robert of Aikwood in representing Adam in Bonnington in a dispute with Robert of Haining. Additionally in 1581 he witnessed an agreement in Selkirk for Andrew ‘Dandie’ and witnessed James Ker in Yair receiving sasine for Catslack and Mountbenger. John (17th C.) recorded as being from Borthaugh in 1642 when he acted as an appraiser in a Magistrates Court case involving someone’s livestock eating someone else’s oats. He could be related to the John who previously owned Borthaugh. John (d.1646) possibly an illegitimate son of Sir Walter ‘the Bold Bucleuch’. He was Provost of Crichton. In 1632 he was recorded as ‘brother natural’ to Sir Gideon Murray of Elibank, who was given the rentals from Crichton; this suggests he was a son of Sir William of Kirkurd and Grizel Beaton (who secondly married Andrew Murray of Blackbarony), however, it seems more likely he was from the next generation. He bore the arms of Montgomerrie in the funeral procession of the Earl of Buccleuch in Hawick in 1634. In 1643 he received a gift of 400 merks from Francis Stewart, Earl of Bothwell ‘for advancing his fortoun’. John (17th C.) described being ‘callit of Borthwick’ in the 1643 valuation of Roxburghshire, when his lands in Hawick were valued at £10. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Johns. He may have been related to earlier Scotts of Borthwick. Mary Scott, listed right after him in 1643, had land in Hawick valued at £3. John of Gilmanscleuch (17th C.) probably eldest son of Robert. In 1621, along with Sir John of Newburgh and Sir Robert of Thirlestane, he promised in 1621 not to molest the Elphinstones (who were responsible for the death of his father). He is recorded owning the lands of Gilmanscleuch in 1628 and was made an Honorary Burgess of Selkirk in 1643. In 1643, 1644, 1648 and 1649 he was on the Committee of War for Selkirkshire. He is recorded writing to Sir William Scott of Harden in 1656, regarding the valuation of his lands. He was fined in 1662, after the Restoration, presumably for being a Covenanter supporter. He was probably the Scott of Gilmanscleuch who entered into a teind agreement with the curators of the Duke of Buccleuch in the late 1660s. He was probably father of Francis. His son may have been John of Remaldburn (although this may be confused). John of Remaldburn and Newburgh (d.c.1672) grandson of Arthur of Newburgh, and son of Sir John. He may also have been knighted himself. He held the lands of ‘Renalburn’ (or ‘Remaldburn’) near Eskdalemuir (the later farmhouse there said to have been the first house built by Thomas Telford when he was an apprentice). He inherited Newburgh in 1654, being served heir to his grandfather Arthur. In 1656 he witnessed a charter (for lands in Dalkeith) for the Duchess of Buccleuch. In 1661 he is described as ‘callit of Newbrugh, lait baiize of Esdaill’ when listed owing more than £2500 to the Duchess of Buccleuch. He was recorded in the Land Tax Rolls for Ancrum Parish in about 1663. He was Chamberlain and Bailie of Eskdale in a deed of 1663. From 1666 he was ‘tutor and curator’ for Francis of Davington (to whom he was distantly related), son of Sir John of Thirlestane. In 1670 he infested Sir James Johnstone of Westerhall in the Barony of Westerhall. He was Chamberlain for the Duke of Buccleuch for Eskdale Parishes from the mid-1650s until the early 1670s. About this time other people stood in for him, suggesting either he was dead or incapacitated. However, John of ‘Randalburne’ and ‘Remelburn’ is recorded in deeds of 1673 and 1682, and may have been his son. He married Margaret Canide. His 2nd daughter Janet married Adam Elliot of Meikledale. His son John was also Chamberlain for the Duke of Buccleuch. Other children were James (b.1623) and Marie. John of Gorrenberry (d.1668) natural son of Walter, the 1st Earl Buccleuch, by Annas (or Agnes) Drummond. In 1629 he was given the lands of Gorrenberry as well as others. He acted as Chamberlain to the Buccleuch estates for Eckford, Langholm, Lenpitiaw and Liddesdale from the 1640s to the late 1650s. He was also Chamberlain for Teviotdalehead in the 1680s. His lands in Castleton Parish were valued at £1600 in 1643. In 1643 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire and in 1643, 1644, 1648 and 1649 he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire. In 1648 there was a letter to him from Earl Francis, discussing the teinds of Eckford and the Mains. In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves on the Border. He is probably the ‘John Scott, bailiff and B. brother to the Lord of Buccleuch’ to whom a complaint was made in 1650 about some of Cromwell’s soldiers having their horses stolen in the Borders by tenants of the Earl of Buccleuch. He served as one of the ‘tutors testamentars’ for the will of Francis, Earl of Buccleuch and was probably also the John, youngest natural brother of Earl Francis, who was given a sum of £100 annually in his brother’s will. In 1654 he witnessed a contract of wadset for the Lorraines of Appotside (and may be the John who witnessed Lorraine baptisms in Hawick in 1655 and 1657). He was legitimated by Cromwell in 1656. In 1650 he was named as one of the ‘tutors’ for the children of Francis Earl of Buccleuch in his will and served as one of the tutors of Countess Mary during her minority, signing a letter protesting against her ‘pretendit’ marriage in about 1659. He also was involved in a law suit with some of her other guardians in 1659 over breaking the locks on her charter chests. In 1661 he was listed as still owing about £9000 to the Duchess of Buccleuch for rentals in Liddesdale, where he had been Chamberlain. He was recorded paying the land tax (of £1600) in 1663. He was recorded in a deed of 1663. Also in 1663 his wife Elizabeth Hamilton, Lady ‘Carberrie’, was recorded in a discharge. He was probably the first Scott of Gorrenberry, and may also have married a Riddell. His son and successor was Francis. He had other sons: David, who was living in 1670; John, who became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1663; and Robert, who was living in 1668. It is also possible that Walter of Alton was another son. His sons and grandsons and those of Walter of Alton Croft were mentioned in 1681 as among the potential heirs of Francis, Earl of Buccleuch. John (17th C.) recorded as Bailie of Hawick in 1648/9. He may have been the same John who was described as ‘maltman’ in the 1638 ‘leet’ for Bailies, and in the following year in reference to money gathered relating to soldiers in the Town. He was probably also one of the 2 councillors of the same name (one of whom is described as a merchant) who signed the 1640 Act of Bailies and Council. He is also recorded as appraiser (for eaten oats) in a Magistrate’s Court case in 1642. He served as Bailie in the 1650s and may be the John who was Procurator Fiscal of Hawick during some of the 1660s. John (17th C.) recorded as ‘John Scott Alton’ in 1644 when he was among Hawick men mentioned in relation to raising money and supplies for the Covenanting army. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts. Sir John (c.1615–66) 2nd son of Sir Robert of Thirlestane, with his 2nd wife Katherine Jardine. He was younger brother of Sir Robert, who died without children. He was served heir to his brother Sir Robert of Crookston in 1621. In 1632 he is described as son and heir of his father Sir Robert in a document relating to the lands of Altrieve and Corsecleuch in Selkirkshire; Robert, son of Walter Scott of Burnfoot is also mentioned, and so possibly a relative. He was involved in a court case in 1634 (referring to a contract of 1623) with Sir William Scott of Harden and Robert Scott of Headshaw, over the lands of Thirlestane. In 1637 he had a decree of adjudication relating to the lands of Bourhope brought by Robert Scott of Whitslade, and decrees of appraising over the same lands with Patrick of Tanlawhill (his cousin) in 1642 and Robert of Whitslade in 1643. In 1641 he signed a contract with his cousin Patrick relating to the Thirlestane estate, but the terms were not clearly specified, and also Sir William of Harden resigned the Thirlestane estates to him, the 2 documents being signed in Hawick. This was important for the subsequent dispute of succession between him and his cousin Patrick of Tanlawhill, fought (and lost) by his descendants in court in the period 1727–44. His cousin Patrick clearly manipulated the situation (even having him imprisoned in Selkirk and in Home Castle) and eventually claimed the Thirlestane estates outright, although he was still fighting for his family lands until his death. He was served heir to his father Sir Robert in 1642 (perhaps as part of the legal battle). In 1643 he was referred to as 'son and heir of the late Sir Robert' of Thirlestane when Patrick Scott had a charter of the lands of Crookston and others that he had owned. He was also involved in a dispute with the Scotts of Buccleuch over the lands of Fingland, Davington and others in Eskdale. He sided with Charles I in the Civil War, joining the Marquis of Montrose and is said to have been at the Battle of Kilsyth, being knighted about then. He was sequestrated by Parliament and fined by Cromwell, only being rehabilitated at the Restoration, but dying shortly afterwards, his loyalty to the crown contributing to him losing his claim to the Thirlestane estates. He continued to use the designation 'of Thirlestane' until his death, although he only managed to hold onto the farms of Davington and Cassock near Eskdalemuir. He still owed money to the deceased Earl of Buccleuch in 1660. He is probably the Sir John of Thirlestane recorded in a deed in 1663. In 1643 he married Euphame (or Euphemia) Young, widow of Sir David Ogilvie of Clova (his comrade in arms). Their children were: Francis of Davington; and Katharine, possibly an ancestor of James Scott of Calfiel. He secondly married Margaret, widow of Robert Scott of Hartwoodmyres. John of Allanhaugh (17th C.) probably son of William of Allanhaugh (or perhaps Walter of Allanmouh). He was listed in a county valuation of Hawick Parish in 1643, with his lands valued at £110. It is possible he is the same as John of Weens, recorded in the earlier 1600s. John of Todshawhills (d.c.1653) recorded in the 1643 county valuation of lands in Hawick Parish, with the value being £133 6s 8d. In 1631–37 he was a Chamberlain for the Scotts of Buccleuch for rents in part of Branxholme and Wilton. He may be descended from Andrew of Todshawhill, who was one of the 24 'pensioners' of Buccleuch. John of Yorkston and Headshaw (d.c.1646) 2nd son of George of Synt. His lands may have been near Temple in Midlothian (unless there is another place of the same name). He is probably the 'brother german' of Walter of Synt who in 1609 was involved in a sasine for the lands of Satchells. He is probably the John 'of Sintoun' who served as assignee to Gilbert Elliott of Stobs in a complaint against the Ainslies of Jedburgh in 1617. He is also recorded as John 'of Sintoun' in 1620 when a complaint was made that he and Walter, Earl of Buccleuch, still owed the Keeper of Edinburgh Tolbooth for lodging William of Howpasley there for several years. In 1629 he purchased Headshaw and Langhope from the old family of Scotts of Headshaw. He is recorded in the period 1631–42 as Chamberlain in Liddesdale to the Scotts of Buccleuch. In 1632 he had a feu-contract with Thomas, Lord Binning for lands in Belses. He is probably the 'John of Syntoun' who, along with Robert Pringle of Stichel, captured 'Geordy Armstrong of Dykraw'. In 1634 he was part of the Earl of Buccleuch's funeral procession in Hawick, where he carried the arms of Douglas of Angus. He appears to have repurchased Headshaw, Dryden and other lands in 1636. In 1637 he was 'Johnne Scot of Heidschaw, baillie of Lideisdale' when he witnessed a document for the sale of Harwood. In 1638 he signed the 'Confessions of Faith' in Hawick as 'Johnne Scott of Heidschaw'. In 1643 he was listed as owner of Dryden, valued at £290, as well as Headshaw, 'Crawknows, and Cleuches', valued at £760 10s. In 1643 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire. He was also on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire in 1644. His son William of Headshaw is also mentioned in Buccleuch accounts for 1646, was served as his heir in 1653 and had a sasine as his heir in 1655. He was also recorded in 1660 (after his decease) when the curators for Mary Scott of Buccleuch tried to recover a debt from his sons William and John, owed to her father. His children were: William, who succeeded; Walter of Dryden; John of Langhope; Mungo in Dryden; and Robert, also in Dryden. John (17th C.) recorded as being 'in Castlehill' in 1631–48 when he was Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch for Eskdalemuir and Westerkirk Parishes. In 1633 he was listed as a 'servant' of the deceased Earl of Buccleuch who was still owed his fee for the year. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John (17th C.) elected to the Hawick Council in 1648. His designation was given as 'Ormiston', suggesting that he lived there. He was probably related to James of Ormiston and the later John of Ormiston. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was married to Bessie Gledstains and their children included: Beatrix (b.1636); Anna (b.1639); and Walter (b.1648). John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. Children who were probably his included: Robert (b.1634); Robert (again, b.1637); Walter (b.1641); Janet (b.1642); and Margaret (b.1645). John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Agnes Scott in 1646. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Noble in 1634 and their son George was baptised in 1651. The witnesses included George (probably related). Other baptisms to a John Scott in Ashkirk may also be included. George was baptised in 1651. The witnesses in- dred Margaret, daughter of Robert Scott of Whitehouse. In 1638 he was appointed as tutor to Wal- son. He paid the land tax on £180 in Ashkirk Parish in 1663 and £182 in 1678. He may have been the same as one of the other local Johns. John (b.1620) son of John of Rennaldburn and Newburgh. He was probably the John of Rennaldburn who was served heir to his father John in 1673 and also in 1697. He was referred to as ‘Squire of Newburgh’ and ‘alias of Rennalburn’. His father was ‘tutor’ for the young Francis of Davington, whom it is said he ‘tried to encroach upon’... and would have deprived him of his remaining estate, but for the friendship of Sir Francis Scott of Thirlestane’. Like his father, he served the Scotts of Buccleuch. He was Chamberlain for Eskdalemuir, Ewesdale and Wauchopside from the 1670s through until 1692 and a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1685. He also had a court case against Francis Scott of Thirlestane around 1676. He was living at the time of publication of Scott of Satchells doggerel history (1688). He was named as an agent of the Duchess of Buccleuch on the rental rolls for Branxholme in 1690 and 1692. His son was James. He is probably the Laird of Rennaldburn whose sister was under 13 when charged in Jedburgh in 1684 with not attending her own church, but listening to Covenanting preachers; he was cautioned for her good behaviour in the future. John (17th C.) married Malie Scott in Ashkirk in 1652. John (17th C.) married Margaret Scott in Ashkirk in 1652. John (17th C.) married Masie Elliot in Ashkirk in 1653. John (17th C.) married Margaret Elliot in Ashkirk in 1654. John of Satchells (17th C.) recorded in a deed in 1655. He was probably a younger son of Robert, with his brothers being William and Capt. Walter. He may have succeeded his brother, but they both probably died without heirs, since Capt. Walter appears to have succeeded on returning from the wars. John of Brieryyards ‘of Briddieyards’ (d.bef. 1667) local landowner of the mid-1600s, brother of William of Chamberlain Newton and possibly son of Walter. In about 1621 he had a charter of the lands of ‘Calffald’ from the Commendator of Melrose. In 1638 he was appointed as tutor to Walter, son of William of Chamberlain Newton, his brother. In 1638 he signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick. He was recorded as owner of ‘Briddieyards’ in 1643. He was on the Committee of War in 1646 as ‘of Briedyairdis’, in 1648 as ‘of Breiriedyards’ and in 1649 as ‘of Breiriedyards’. He may have been the same man as John of Hornshole. In 1656 he and his sons (including Walter) purchased a ‘merk land of Hassendenbank’ from Thomas Turnbull; this was probably Cockermere. In 1657 he had a ‘wadset’ with John Turnbull of Minto in which he gave 2200 ‘merks’ for liferent of Hornshole, and also his 2nd son John to have the lands ‘in fee’; this was confirmed by an instrument of sasine in 1658. He is probably the ‘Breirie yards’ who paid the land tax on £260 in 1663. He was also recorded in 2 deeds of 1663, along with his son William. In a disposition of 1667 his eldest son John is ‘now of bririedyards’. John (17th C.) married Janet Scott in Ashkirk in 1660. John (17th C.) Bailie of Langholm. In 1661 he was listed as still owing about £12.00 to the Duchess of Buccleuch for rentals in Eskdale, where he had been acting as Chamberlain. John of Langhope (d.1666) 3rd son of John of York- ston and Headshaw, and grandson of George of Synton. He was a local landowner of the mid-1600s. He bought Langhope from his brother William. He is recorded in the period 1641–47 and 1649 as Chamberlain to the Scotts of Buccleuch in Liddesdale (or the Debateable Land) and Canonbie; at this point he was the 2nd surviving son of John of Headshaw. He is mentioned as a temporary Chamberlain in Buccleuch estate records for 1646, replacing the deceased John of Headshaw, along with William of Headshaw (his elder brother). In 1660 he witnessed a baptism for James Scott and Margaret Chisholme in Ashkirk Parish. In 1661 he was listed as still owing £2000 to the Duchess of Buccleuch for rentals in Liddesdale and the Debateable Lands for both him and his deceased father John of Headshaw. He was appointed as a Justice of the Peace for Selkirkshire in 1663. He was probably the Scott of Langhope who entered into a teind agreement with the curators of the Duke of Buccleuch in the late 1660s. In 1653 he married Margaret, daughter of Robert Scott of Whit- slade. His children included: William (b.1654), who succeeded, but sold Langhope; John, who be- came a surgeon’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1670; and Elizabeth (b.1656), baptised in Ashkirk. In 1656 he is recorded being ‘of Langhop in the parish of Krkop’ and the witnesses were William ‘of...’ (probably of Headshaw, his brother) and Robert (perhaps another brother). John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Christian Liddell and their children included Margaret (b.1635), James (b.1637), Isobel (b.1639), Walter (b.1642), Marion (b.1643), John (b.1645), Adam (b.1647), Marion (again, b.1649), William (b.1652) and Christian (b.1654). The witnesses in 1654 were Walter Purdom and Robert. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Helen Veitch (or ‘Heilling Veatche’ in 1647 and their children included: Margaret (b.1652); John (b.1655); and Helen (b.1657). Given his wife’s surname, it is possible that they were both connected with Synton. John (17th C.) merchant in Hawick. In 1652 the Council found that traveller Thomas Oliver was not liable to pay him for £6, 10s. worth of tobacco pipes, another £6, 10s. for ‘hott waters’, as well as 8 merks of powder and 8 merks of white sugar, all of which Oliver had been transporting from Edinburgh for him, but were ‘brak, drownet, and lostit by the way’.

John (17th C.) recorded in 1656 when he accused Walter ‘Westport’ of selling him 3 barrels of spirits that were supposed to be ‘24 stoupis’, but was short. Walter was acquitted by the Hawick Magistrates. John ‘Westport’ (17th C.) recorded in 1656 when his child William with Janet Rob-... of Headshaw' who was fined in 1662, after the Restoration (listed under Dumfriesshire). His father transferred the lands of Headshaw, Dryden, etc. to him in 1688. He married Jean Hackett (or Halket) in Edinburgh in 1682; she was only daughter of Col. R. Halket, and probably a cousin of some sort. When he died his sister Mary (who had married Patrick Porteous) became heir to Headshaw. John (17th C.) son of Thomas in Bonchester (probably the same as Thomas 'of' Nether Bonchester). He was declared a fugitive in 1684 for nonconformity. He is mentioned in 1690 as son of Thomas of Nether Bonchester when he had a bond and discharge in the Burgh of Selkirk for 500 merks Scots. Perhaps the same John (said by George Tancred to be a Writer to the Signet) died in 1705 and was buried at Greyfriars Kirk-yard in Edinburgh. John (17th/18th C.) married Margaret Scott in Ashkirk in 1693. John of Synton (d.bef. 1705) son of William. If he was the 3rd son, then his 2 older brothers must have died before him and with no heirs. In 1662 his uncle Francis was appointed as tutor during his minority. He is recorded in a sasine of 1670 and annexed the lands of North Synton in 1675 (although they were partly in the family since 1641). He was recorded in a deed of 1673. In 1675 he was served heir to his father William of Synton, in the lands of North Synton; his father had died earlier than this, suggesting that perhaps this is when he reached majority. He paid the land tax at Hermiston in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1678 (half of Easter Hermiston, valued at £130) and was also owner of the lands of Essenside (valued at £365), although at that time North Synton was in the hands of Rev. Robert Cunningham. He may also be the Laird of Synton whose lands in Selkirkshire were valued at £1600 in 1678. He is recorded as 'of Synetoune' in a bond of 1682. He later added Satchells to the estate and gained some land from Selkirk Common. He owned additional lands in Tweedsmuir Parish, according to a 'tack' of 1687 by Francis Scott, minister of Tweedsmuir (who may have been a relative). He was on the Commission of Supply for Selkirkshire in 1690. He was probably the Laird in 1694 when he paid tax for 35 hearths on his lands. In 1696 he and Sir Francis Scott of Thirlestane had a bond with James Melville of Halhill. He is also recorded in 1670 when his 'brother-germane' William became a surgeon's apprentice in Edinburgh. In 1703 he witnessed a baptism for George Douglas of Friarshaw and his sister Elizabeth. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir Alexander Murray of Blackbarony in 1686 (probably not the daughter of John Murray of Cringletie, as stated by Keith Scott). In 1702 he secondly married Anna, eldest daughter of Sir John Scott of Ancrum and widow of William Scott of Raeburn. His children were: William (b.1688), baptised in Ashkirk, who probably died young; Alexander (b.1690), baptised in Ashkirk, who is recorded in an assignation by his grandmother Lady Blackbarony in 1697, and succeeded; Jean (b.1694), also baptised in Ashkirk, who had a similar assignation in 1697, but appears to have died a year later; and Margaret, who received money from his mother-in-law's estate in 1699 and married William Elliot of Borthwicbrae in 1706, by which date he was deceased. The 1690 baptism was witnessed by John of Woll and William (probably of Headshaw) and the 1694 one by Alexander Murray (probably his father-in-law) and Walter of Todrig. He may have been the John, son of William, born in Ashkirk in 1646. He may have died in 1710 (as stated by Keith Scott). Rev. John (d.c.1690) minister of Hawick. He was tutor in the family of Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs, and may also have been related to that family. Based on his witnessing of documents of the Elliots of Harwood, he may have been a son of a sister of William Elliot of Harwood and Binks. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1650 and became Hawick minister in 1657. He may be the John of Hawick whose behaviour was complained about at the admission of Andrew Rutherford as minister of Eccles in 1655. He was deprived in 1662 for refusing to embrace Episcopacy, effectively being forced to leave the town; however, he is said to have preached regularly at conventicles, e.g. at Earlside. He apparently contemplated joining a Covenanter force in 1666, but refrained when he found out how disorganised they were. However, he was present at the Pentland rising in 1666. He fled to the north of England, preaching in Northumberland and Cumbria. In 1678 he chaired a meeting of outed ministers who opposed the more extreme views of Richard Cameron and others. He also helped Archibald, Earl of Argyll escape in 1681, giving him a Covenanter password, then arranging for him to stay with Pringle of Torwoodlee, and then go via Hawick to Northumberland and eventually to Holland (although Argyll was later captured and beheaded). He survived past the Revolution, but appears not to have resumed service as a minister. In 1658 he married Marion, daughter of John Livingsstone, the minister of Ancrum (and famous Covenanter); she died aged only 19 in 1661, and is buried at St. Mary’s. He later married Elizabeth Anderson, who died in 1698 and is buried in Greyfriars. It is possible he was the ‘Mr John Scott’ recorded as resident of Lilliesleaf in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. In 1698 James Livingstone, merchant in Edinburgh, was served heir to his wife Marion (probably her brother, although it is unclear why this was so long after her death). John of Ormiston (17th C.) merchant of Hawick in the 1600s. He was listed by James Wilson among the local landowners of the mid-to-late 17th century. He was probably related to (or confused with) James of Ormiston, and the earlier John. He was listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He witnessed a baptism (along with schoolmaster John Purdom) for mason David Rutherford in 1685. John of Cockerheugh (17th C.) probably 2nd son of John of Brieryyards and brother of James of Brieryyards. His father purchased a ‘merk land of Hassendeanbank’ (probably Cockerheugh) from Thomas Turnbull in 1656 and had a ‘wadset’ in his name in 1657 with the Turnbells, involving ‘the markland of horneshole with houses’. He transferred the wadset and lands to his brother James in 1667. He may be the John who (along with Walter, perhaps another brother) witnessed baptism for James of Brieryyards in Robertton Parish in 1681 and 1687. Also in 1681 there was a ‘disposition and assignation’ to him from Walter, probably also a brother (or other near relative). He was one of the heritors accused in 1690 of inciting the crowd that gathered to try to stop the roof being removed from Hassendean Kirk. Along with his nephew John (son of James ‘of Brieryairdis’) he was accused of striking Charles Lithgow in this incident. He is probably the John whose son Walter inherited Cockerheugh from him in 1721, and whose daughter Bessie married Walter (‘Uncle to Crumhaugh’), also in 1721. In 1705 he was ‘of Cockerheugh Now Tennant in Langlands’ when a woman appeared before the Session to confess to being pregnant by his son Walter. John (17th C.) recorded as tenant in Skelfhill in a deed of 1663. He may be the same as one of the other Johns. John of Lees (d.c.1685) recorded being ‘of Leis’ in 1685 when his will was registered. Probably the same John is recorded being of Leis in Hassendean Parish list of landowners and tenants of 1666. He was presumably related to other Scotts of Moorlaw and Lees. He may be the same man as John of Catslack who paid land tax in Hassendean Parish in 1678. In 1682 he was ‘of yses’ when (along with Adam) he witnessed a baptism for William of Clarilaw (who was probably related to him). John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Renwick in 1680. His designation appears to be ‘in Barnknow’ (presumably the farm of Barn Knowe). James Newbie and Andrew Angus were witnesses. Perhaps the same John, with his wife’s name as ‘Renwick’ had a son John baptised in 1696. He was surely related to Robert, who was also recorded in Barn Knowe in 1680. John ‘Whiteyetts’ or ‘Whitegates’, ‘Cloaks’ (17th/18th C.) merchant of Hawick. It is hard to separate the contemporary Johns, but it seems clear that the merchant and ‘Whiteyetts’ are the same man, although it is possible that the entry here describes 2 generations. In 1680 he witnessed a baptism (along with William Scott ‘Flex’) for Thomas Scott and in 1682 another for Baxter James Lands. He was recorded in 1683 when he was among a group of men fined for throwing stones across the Teviot at night, injuring a couple of women who were watching their linens, and damaging the clothes being bleached there by James Brydon; since he confessed and appeared before the Bailie, he was excused. He is recorded as merchant in several deeds of 1682. In 1689 he witnessed (along with weaver James Beattie) a baptism for Walter Anderson. He could be the ‘merchant Elder’ listed in 1694 among those on the west-side of Hawick who paid the Hearth Tax. He could also be the John who witnessed a baptism for Walter Wilson in Hawick in 1698. He is ‘Whitegates’ in 1700 and ‘Whitegates junior’ in 1705 when he witnessed baptisms in Hawick for merchant Michael. In 1706 he was ‘whitegates’ and witnessed a baptism (for workman William Riddel) along with John ‘younger Soger’. In 1716 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Scott and Elizabeth Wilson and in 1720 another for James Scott and Sarah Gedstains. He is recorded in 1701 in the Burgh Records and in 1718 in the Hawick Session Records, when he was rebuked for providing William Whaton with military-type coat and sword to ride through the town, as part of a wager. In 1725 he witnessed a baptism for wigmaker Robert Miles. He married Margaret Paterson (being recorded as both merchant and as ‘Whiteyetts’ or ‘whitegates’ in separate baptismal entries) and had children: Margaret (b.1685); William (b.1686), who died after getting Margaret Brydon pregnant; John (b.1688); and Gideon (b.1700). In the baptismal record of 1700 he is ‘whitegates younger’, suggesting his father was also John ‘Whiteyetts’, and making it clear that the ‘younger’ referred (at least some of the time) to him and not to his son John (b.1688). The witnesses in 1688 were Bailie William Laing and Adam Ruecastle and in 1700 were Michael Scott and William Laing. He could also be the John whose son John was baptised in 1699, with Walter Anderson and William Paterson as witnesses. Either he secondly married Agnes (or Ann) Scott, or this was his son, perhaps the man born in 1686; his name is given as ‘Cloaks and Whitegates’ in some of the records. Their children included: Gideon (b.1707); Walter (b.1709); Jean (b.1712); John (b.1713); Janet (b.1715); and Thomas (b.1718). The witnesses in 1707 were Robert Ruecastle and Walter Anderson, in 1708 were Gideon of Falnash and Bailie Walter Elliot, in 1712 were shoemaker Walter Scott and William ‘Whaton’, in 1713 were James Scott ‘Doctor’ and Walter Anderson, and in 1718 were Walter Henderson and David Miller. He witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1716 for an illegitimate child of Walter Scott, brother to the Laird of Whiteside. It is unclear if his nickname referred to a specific place, and if so, where this might have been. John (17th C.) son of Bailie Scott, although it is unclear which one. In 1685 Adam Young was fined for insulting him and his father, specifically ‘calumniating them and taking away yr. good name’ in claiming they had reset peas that had been taken by footboys of Lord Airlie’s troop (i.e. Royalists under James Ogilvy of Airlie). John of Whitehaugh (17th C.) recorded in Hawick in 1688. Along with William of Brieryyards he witnessed a baptism for James Stewart (from Clydesdale), who had twins in Hawick. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts of Whitehaugh (or if ‘John’ was perhaps an error). John (17th/18th C.) cordner (i.e. shoemaker) in Hawick. He witnessed a baptism for Thomas Briggs in 1680 and another for wright Robert Cowan in 1688. His son Walter was witness to a Hawick sasine of 1688, while another son William served as ‘procurator’ for Patrick Cunningham in the same sasine. He is and was listed as a shoemaker among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He is probably the cordner listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694, when he paid tax for 2 hearths. He may be the shoemaker John who witnessed baptisms for weaver ‘Black’ John Swan in 1707, for wright John Pringle in 1711, for Thomas Greenshiels and for James Scott ‘Laird’ in 1714, for weaver James Weens in 1720, for wright John Weens in 1723, and for gardener Walter in 1726. He may be the same shoemaker (although perhaps this is another generation) who married Janet Briggs and had a son Thomas baptised in 1708, with witnesses Bailies William Laing and Walter Elliot. He was probably the senior of ‘John Scotts Elder and Younger Shoemakers’ who witnessed the baptism in 1738 of a child of shoemaker Andrew. John (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He probably farmed near Newton. John (17th C.) resident at Broadlee in Ashkirk Parish, recorded on the Hearth Tax roll in 1694. He was probably related to Andrew, who is also listed. John (17th C.) resident of Headshaw in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll there. He was listed along with Andrew and James, each having a single hearth. Perhaps the same John was recorded in 1715 as cottar in Headshaw; he married Helen Wilson (perhaps in 1715, with no wife’s name recorded) and their children included William (b.1715), Andrew (b.1717) and John (b.1726). John (17th C.) resident of Denholm on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. John (17th C.) resident at Stobicote according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He is listed right before James, and so probably related, perhaps his father. He could be an ancestor of millwright Gideon. John (17th C.) shepherd at Stobicote according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He is listed separately from another John (not shepherd) there. John (17th C.) resident at Winningtonrig in Cavers Parish in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. James and Thomas, listed after him at the same place, were presumably related to him. It is possible he is the John, in Cavers Parish, who married Margaret Scott in Hawick in 1680. John (17th C.) resident of Hummelknowes on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He may be related to later Scotts of Hummelknowed Mill. John (17th C.) ploughman at Adderstoneshie listed among the ‘deficient’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th C.) tenant in Blackburn in Southdean Parish according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. John (17th C.) recorded as a tailor at Boroughtan on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Perhaps the same tailor John was in Mervinslaw in 1709. The witnesses were Andrew . . . , tenant in Mervinslaw, and John Rule, shepherd there. It is also possible he was the John in Borthaugh who received money from the Wilton poor box, including for the purchase of a coat in 1703. John (17th C.) rented quarter of the farm of Wiltonburn from the Duchess of Buccleuch in at least the period 1690–96 an a third in 1698. He is also listed as resident at Wiltonburn on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls; a separate John was also recorded as a minister in the same place. He witnessed a baptism for Francis in Timbersidemill in 1697. He may have been closely related to Robert or Bessie (widow of James Riddell), who were also renting part of Wiltonburn in 1694. John (17th C.) recorded as resident at Dykercaw in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th C.) listed with the word ‘Grinma’ after his name on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. It is unclear if ‘Grinma’ is meant to indicate a place or a nickname, however, George is also listed in 1694 with the same name. John (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He is listed separately from men of the same name who were tailor, cordiner, ‘yonger’ and ‘Grinma’. He could be the same man as the smith recorded in 1693/4. John ‘younger’ (17th C.) listed in 1694 among those paying the Hearth Tax in Hawick ‘eist the water’. His name is written ‘John Scott yonger’. He could be the same man as ‘Whiteyetts’ or ‘Sodger’. John (17th C.) carrier in Hawick who was listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was listed separately from the ‘Soldier’, who was a carrier at the same time. He could be the John, who along with Robert, appears to have been listed as a carrier when witnessing a baptism for Walter Henderson in Hawick in 1680. He is probably the carrier who was a witness in 1681 in the trial of Covenanters for attacking Drumlanrig’s Tower. He was listed as a carrier when he witnessed a baptism for tailor Walter Turnbull in 1685. John ‘Sodger’ (17th C.) carrier in Hawick. In 1692 he was recorded as ‘Sodger’ when leasing 34 acres of the Kirklands of Hawick from the Duchess of Buccleuch. He was recorded among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4, where his name was listed as ‘John Scott, carrier, called soldier’. He was listed as ‘Shouldier’ and resident of the west-side of Hawick on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. In 1706 he was recorded as ‘carrier in Teviotdale and indweller in Hawick commonly called Souldier John’ when he is recorded making a bond in Selkirk with Walter Mitchell, merchant in Glasgow. In 1707 he and his son, John younger, were fined by the Council for ‘violent putting, thrusting, and expelling, under cloud of night’ the horses of William Aitken, younger, from his barn; the Aitkens were also carriers in Hawick, but it is unclear what the dispute was between the families. In 1713 he (or possibly his son) was ‘distinctionis causa called John the Souldier’ when when witnessing a baptism for Walter Paterson of Burnflat and Margaret Scott (who may have been related to him). John ‘Goudilands’ (17th C.) resident of the west-side of Hawick according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694, when he paid for 2 hearths. He was associated with Goldielands in some way, although Charles of Goldielands was also listed on the tax rolls. In 1689 he was listed as ‘brother to Goldilands’. He married Catherine Scott and their son James was baptised in 1689, with witnesses dyer George Young and merchant James Simpson. James (b.1683) and Walter (b.1686), baptised to John and Catherine Burn in Hawick in 1683 could also be his children. It is possible that he could be the same man as ‘Uncle John’. John (17th C.) shepherd at Dryden Burnfoot according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to the John listed as shepherd at Dryden a few decades later. He is probably the John ‘in Dryden’ whose son John was baptised in Hawick in 1706, with witnesses Adam Elliot of Arkleton and James Grieve in Commonside. Perhaps the same John was recorded as herd at Drydenburn in 1713. He married Helen Hislop and their children included: Margaret (b.1702); Isobel (b.1703); Margaret (again, b.1707); Elizabeth (b.1710); and Bessie (b.1713). The witnesses in 1713 were ‘Mr’ Thomas Hume ‘proctor’ and tailor James Robson (from Robertson Parish). John (17th C.) resident at Whithope according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Possibly the same John in Whithope was recorded in a deed in 1663. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Johns. John (17th C.) resident at Whitchesters according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He may be related to Robert and Walter, who were also listed there. He could be the John who (along with Walter) was in Whitchesters in 1713 when he witnessed a baptism for herd William Cowan. John (17th C.) tenant in Burnfoot according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. This is listed under Hassendean Parish, but is clearly the farm in Wilton Parish. He may have been related to Adam of Burnfoot, who was probably Laird at that time. He may be the John who (along with William) witnessed a baptism in 1722 for James, tenant at West Burnfoot Mill and another in 1729 for George at West Burnfoot. John (17th C.) recorded among the poor of Hassendean Parish in 1694, when he was at Appletreehall. Probably the same John was listed in Appletreehall in a baptismal record of 1688. He married Jean...

Bell and their children included: Janet (b.1681), baptised in Hawick; an unnamed son (b.1685), baptised in Hawick; and David (b.1688), baptised in Roberton. The witnesses in 1685 were James and Stephen Greenshields (the latter being quartermaster of the weavers) and in 1688 were John Hope and George Scott. John 'Laird' (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was father of James 'Laird' (Hawick's first known Cornet), according to a baptismal record for one of James' children in 1714. He himself witnessed a baptism in 1704 (along with James 'Doctor') for weaver 'Black' John Swan. It seems likely that the was also a weaver. He was surely related to the roughly contemporary Robert and the earlier James, who were both also nicknamed 'Laird'.

John of Woll (d.c.1706) 5th son of Sir William of Harden. He purchased the lands of Woll in 1660. He was recorded in a deed of 1663. He paid tax on £533 6s 8d in Ashkirk Parish according to the 1663 Land Tax Rolls and £595 in 1678. He wrote to his brother Sir William in 1665 from Aikwood. He served as Chamberlain to the Scotts of Buccleuch for Ettrick, Selkirk and St. Mary’s in at least the periods 1657–63 and 1671–1703, when he also covered the Barony of Kirkurd. He was named as an agent of the Duchess of Buccleuch on the rental rolls for Branxholme in 1690, 1692, 1694 and 1698. He may have been the John who served as Chamberlain for the Countess of Wemyss' rents in Teviotdale in the period 1652–66 (although there were other contemporary men of the same name); and also responsible for the Countess' rentals in Eckford Parish. He was also factor to his brother Sir William of Harden in the period 1660–83. In 1661 he was listed as owing about £700 to the Duchess of Buccleuch for rentals in Ettrick Forest. He received the East Mains of Selkirk from Walter Scott of Harden and his wife Christian Ker in 1669 (although it is unclear who this Walter could be, given the dates). He was recorded in a bond of relief in 1673. In 1678 he acted as ‘amicable compositor’ between the parties involved when part of Selkirk Common was divided. He is recorded in deeds of 1682. Also in 1682 he was on the jury that found Alexander Home guilty of being at the head of the group of Covenanters who attacked Drumnallrig’s Tower; however, it may be that he was one of the jurors who voted to acquit. In 1683 and again in 1684 he was fined by Lord Meldrum because of his wife’s withdrawal from the parish kirk; in 1683 he was sent to the prison at Edinburgh Castle along with Gledstains from Hawick, Gledstains of Ormiston, Douglas of Bonjedward, William Ker and Gideon Scott. It was said that he paid 2600 merks to Meldrum ‘to save the Duchess of Buccleuch’s people in that shire from more particular sufferings’. He witnessed a baptism for John Scott of Synton in 1690. In 1692 he was one of the 2 Chamberlains of Buccleuch who gave their consent for Francis Gledstains wanted to enclose part of the Flex. In 1690 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire and also Berwickshire and in 1693 he was appointed as a Parliamentary Commissioner (i.e. M.P.) for Roxburghshire, serving until 1702. Also in 1693 there is an existing letter to his nephew Walter, Earl of Tarras. He witnessed a baptism in 1693, in Ashkirk Parish, for John, younger of Gilmanscleuch. He was probably the Laird of Woll who paid tax on 8 hearths at his house in 1694. When his eldest son married in 1694 he resigned the lands of Woll to him. He may be the John ‘of Well’ who was a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1704. He married Agnes, only daughter of Robert Scott of Harwood and started the Scotts of Woll (or restarted, since there was an earlier branch of the Scotts who were Lairds of Woll). His wife, Lady Scott of Woll, was a strong supporter of the Covenant, attending field meetings (perhaps on Lilliesleaf Moor) and in 1684 was fined £300 Scots for failing to attend services at Ashkirk Kirk. His children included: Walter, who succeeded; John, who married Margaret Scott; Gideon; 2 other sons, who died before 1710 without having sons; Agnes (b.c.1675), who married Alexander Veitch of Glen in 1698; and Margaret, who married John, younger of Gilmanscleuch in 1693. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton. He was recorded at Wiltonburn in 1696. He married a Renwick and their children included John (b.1696). The witnesses were John and Robert Scott. John (17th/18th C.) described as ‘in Hawick’ in 1698 when his son James was baptised in Hawick. This was the day before the baptism of a child of Gideon Scott of Falnash and with the same witnesses, Adam Elliot of Arkleton and ‘Mr’ Archibald Gledstains in Northhouse. John of Langhope (17th/18th C.) son of Walter of Langhope and St. Leonards. He appears to have purchased Langhope from his father in 1688, and was served heir to these lands of his father’s in 1691. However, later in 1691 he and his wife Janet sold the lands to Adam of Bowhill. Sir John of Ancrum (d.1712) son of Patrick and Elizabeth Sinamon, and descended from the Scots of Balwearie. He is sometimes called ‘of Kirkstyle’ (in Perthshire), although his father probably sold those lands. He is also sometimes called 'of Langshaw', like his father, although those lands would go to his younger brother Francis. In 1654 he bought the lands of Ormiston from William, Earl of Roxburghe and was the 'fiar of Langshaw' who was the son of Patrick of Langshaw. He was listed as 'fiar of Langshaw' in 1661 when he and his partners owed money to the Scotts of Buccleuch for duties on the coal-fields of Sheriffhall. He was recorded as 'of Langshaw' and Chamberlain to the Duchess of Buccleuch in 3 deeds of 1663. In 1663 he is recorded holding lands in Melrose Parish that had previously belonged to Lord Elibank. He is recorded in document in the Melrose Regality records, relating to the ‘multures’ of Langshaw and other matters in 1663–68. In 1668 he had a sasine of the lands of ‘Wouplaw’. He acquired Ancrum from Charles Kerr, 2nd Earl of Ancrum. He had a charter of the lands and barony of Ancrum in 1670 and in 1671 became the 1st Baronet of Ancrum (in the baronetcy of Nova Scotia). He was Chamberlain to the Scotts of Buccleuch for Teviotdalehead for the years 1660–62 (as Scott of Langshaw) and 1665–70 (as Scott of Ancrum). He was appointed Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire in 1663 and Deputy Sheriff of Roxburghshire in 1664. He represented Roxburghshire in Parliament in 1665. He was recorded in a deed of 1673. He paid the land tax on £2,400 in Ancrum Parish in 1678. He was a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1685. In 1694 he paid tax on 19 hearths for his estate at Ancrum. He was one of the Roxburghshire heritors who petitioned Parliament in 1700 and was on the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1704. In the early 1700s he was accused of embezzling money during the minority of Anna, Duchess of Buccleuch. In 1652 he married Elizabeth, eldest daughter of Francis (or perhaps William) Scott of Mangerton, and they had 5 sons and 5 daughters. He secondly married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir William Bennet of Grubet, and had 2 further daughters, from whom are descended Sir Hector Maclean Hay of Alderston and Sir William Henry Walsingham Calder. In 1708 he lastly married Barbara, daughter of Walter Ker of Littedlean; when the local minister refused to proclaim the banns 3 times in a single day, he took his intended bride to Cornhill where they were married. His children were: Sir Patrick, who succeeded; Charles of Palace Hill, who married Margaret, sister of John, 5th Lord Rutherford; John (b.1702), a merchant, who spent time in London and Jamaica, settled in New York and whose descendant, John Morin Scott, was Mayor of Philadelphia; Andrew, also a merchant, who participated in the disastrous Darien colony; William, an advocate, who was imprisoned for taking part in the uprising of 1715; Elizabeth, who married Sir William Elliott of Stobs; Anna (or Anne), who married William Scott of Raeburn and secondly John Scott of Synton; Cecilia (or Cicely), who married William Ainslie of Blackhill; Jean, who married John Murray of Bowhill; Elizabeth, who married John Erskine of Shiefiefield; Margaret, who married Thomas Scott of Whitslade, and later Sir David Murray of Stenhope; and Christian, who married Sir Thomas Calder of Muirtoone.

John ‘Wyndheid’ (d.c.1712) married to Bessie Paisley. His nickname may have come from living at the head of Walter’s Wynd, suggesting he was related to the later Walter (although it is possible that the Cross Wynd or Kirk Wynd are meant). In 1676 he was among a group of Hawick people found guilty of using faulty measures; along with Robert Taylor, he was specifically found to have a half-peck that was ‘ane half-fourpitt short’. There he was referred to as ‘Wyndheads’. With his wife Bessie Paisley his children included: John (b.1680); John (again, b.1685); William (b.1687); and Bessie (b.1690). The witnesses in 1685 were James Lands and William Douglas. Then probably the same John married Helen Stoddart in Hawick in 1709 and had a child Archibald (b.1711). He was John ‘called Wyndhead late servant to Robert Robson’ in 1711, with witnesses Dand Gray in Whitlaw and Andrew Riddell in Goldielands. In 1712 his widow was called before the Kirk Session and rebuked for harassing her neighbours. He may be related to Robert ‘Wyndhead’, recorded in 1701, George ‘Wyndhead’ also recorded about the same time and Walter and another John ‘Wyndhead’ recorded a little later. John (d.bef. 1715) tailor in Hawick, married to Isabel Harkness. In 1704 he was ‘taylor in Hawick near to ye Casyen’. He may be the John, ‘tayller’ who witnessed a Hawick sasine in 1688. He is probably the tailor John listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694 and the tailor listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. In 1707 he was ‘taylor, and townie tresawrer’ when the 2 Bailies were fined for their behaviour at the Common Riding. He was a member of the Council when it granted a bond (dated 1710, but recorded in the Town Book in 1711) to provide money for the Master of the new Grammar School. He married Isobel Harkness and their children included: Elizabeth (b.1700); John (b.1702); Robert (b.1704); George (b.1707); Isobel and Margaret (b.1709); and Francis (b.1711). The witnesses in 1700 were glover John and merchant William, in 1702 were Bailies Robert Hardie and George Martin, in 1704 were Bailies Robert Hardie and John Binnie and in 1709 were Bailies William Laing and Walter Elliot. In 1715 his widow was involved in a dispute with Robert Deans over who should sit in a particular pew in St. Mary’s. He may be the John described as ‘sometimes tailor in Hawick’ in 1720 when his daughter Elizabeth married Town Clerk Walter Gledstains; however, if he died before 1715 then this would have to have been a different tailor John. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Rashiegrain. He married Marion Scott (also from Hawick Parish) in 1702. John ‘Uncle John’ (17th/18th C.) resident of the Hawick area. His nickname was recorded in 1702 when he was a witness to a birth for Walter in Goldielands, with the other witness being Robert of Tandlaw; it seems likely he was related to the Goldielands and Tandlaw branches, but it is otherwise unclear who he was. Presumably his nickname distinguished him from other contemporary Johns, but its meaning is unclear. He married Jean Stuart (also from Hawick Parish) in 1702. John (b.1705); and Robert (b.1707). In the 1705 baptismal record he is stated to be in Blackcleuch and the witnesses were Robert in Blackcleuch (perhaps his father) and John in Falnash (perhaps another relative). His nickname is again given in the 1707 baptismal record. The nickname is recorded once more. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Riddell in 1696 and their children included Robert (b.1706), John (b.1708) and Agnes (b.1710). John (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Marion Bell and their children included Alison (b.1708), Andrew (b.1713) and William (b.1715). John (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish, recorded as a servant at Synton Mains in 1709. He married Helen Brown in 1706 and their children included: Janet (b.1707); Walter (b.1709); Magdalen (b.1714); and Helen (b.1716). John (17th/18th C.) glover in Hawick. He witnessed baptisms in 1700 for flesher Robert Renwick (along with merchant William) and for tailor John, in 1704 for Robert Scott, ‘Pope’ and for smith James Scott and in 1709 for weaver Patrick Forman. In 1707 he was ‘onlawed for deriding and mocking the bailie’. He witnessed baptisms in 1714 for shoemaker Robert Allan and in 1718 for shoemaker Walter Scott and for merchant William Dickson. He was appointed in 1718 to try to raise money for a new Kirk clock in Hawick. In 1720 (along with candlemaker John) he witnessed baptisms for merchant John Cavers and for merchant William Dickson. He may be the ‘John Scott Shoemaker’ who witnessed a baptism for weaver Andrew Jardine in 1721. In 1725 he witnessed a baptism for Andrew Turnbull and he witnessed others for gardener Walter in 1740 and for shoemaker George Gardner in 1744. He married Mary (also recorded as Marion and Martha) Rutherford and their children included: William (b.1701); William (again, b.1703); Robert (b.1705); Margaret (b.1708); John (b.1711); Rachel (b.1713); Thomas (b.1715); Jean (b.1718); and David (b.1721). William Scott, shoemaker, witnessed the 1705 baptism and so may have been his father or brother. The 1708 witnesses were Gideon Scott of Falnash and Bailie Walter Elliot and in 1718 were Alexander Scott of Boonraw and merchant John Robson. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Jean Murray in 1707 and their son Thomas was bapised in 1708. John (d.1710) tenant in Falnash. He was recorded in 1711 as ‘younger in Falnash’ when his widow Janet Aitchison married William Scott in Skelfhill. He may have been related to Gideon, ‘Auld Falnash’. He is probably the John in Falnash who witnessed baptisms in 1703 for James Stewart, smith in Falnash, in 1704 for William Anderson in Ramsaycleuchburn, in 1705 for John in Blackcleuch and in 1709 for Archibald in Hislop. He was ‘tenent in Falnash’ when he married Margaret Anderson in 1702; she was daughter of Edward Aitchison, tenant in Eweslees. They had children: Margaret (b.1703); Marion (b.1704); Helen (b.1706); and John (b.1711). The witnesses in 1706 were Robert Laidlaw and Andrew Morton. He was already deceased in early 1711 when his son John was baptised in Hawick, his father-in-law Edward Aitchison agreeing to arrange for the education of the child; the witnesses were Archibald, tenant in Hislop and John Armstrong. John (1659/20–1738) tenant in Denholm. He is buried in Cavers Old Cemetery, along with his son William (1703/4–49). He could be the resident of Cavers Parish who in 1702 was probably at Denholm when his son William was baptised. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1710 he was recorded as servant to Robert Robson.
He married Helen Stoddart and their children included: Archibald (b.1711); Janet (b.1715); Bessie (b.1717); and Helen (b.1720). The witnesses in 1710 were George Scott ‘Wynndhead’ and merchant Robert Robson. John (17th/18th C.) carrier in Hawick Parish. He was recorded being ‘called John Scott Acreknow’ (to distinguish him from other Johns) when his son William was baptised in Hawick in 1711. The witnesses were William Gledstains and Alexander Hislop, both tailors in Hawick. John (17th/18th C.) described as a skinner in Hawick when his son William became an apprentice tailor in Edinburgh in 1717. He may be related to the earlier John of Westport (given the name and trade coincidence). He may be the same John as the glover. John (17th/18th C.) recorded being ‘in falnesh’ (i.e. Falnash) in Cavers Parish in 1716 when his son Thomas was baptised in Roberton Parish. It is unclear how he was related to Scotts in Roberton or at Falnash (e.g. the earlier John in Falnash, who died in 1710). John of Davington (1680-c.1710) eldest son of Francis of Davington. Dying without children, he was succeeded by his brother Robert. John (17th/18th C.) younger son of Scott of Bonchester (probably Walter), he is possibly the same man as John of Ashtrees. He took part in the 1715 rebellion, along with William Kerr of Abbotrule. He was banished as a result of this. A story (recounted by Walter Deans in 1887) was told of his time in the colonies, labouring at a government building, when the Governor’s new wife recognised him, saying ‘That stane wad row easier doon Bunestir Hill, than up there’, whereon he recognised her as a local woman of lowly birth who had once been whipped through the streets of Hawick! Keeping quiet about this, his conditions were improved and he was later sent back on a ship to Britain, but lived and died on Jersey rather than in Rulewater. George Tancred states that in 1740 he was father of a girl aged 8 and a boy aged 5. He was probably nephew of George (son of Thomas in Bonchester), who was declared a fugitive in 1684 for nonconformity. John of Gilmanscleuch (17th/18th C.) son of Francis. He also appears to have served as a Chamberlain to the Scotts of Buccleuch. In 1678 he paid the land tax of more than £800 in Selkirkshire. In 1690 ‘John Scotts, elder and younger of Gillmenscleugh’ were on the Commission of Supply for Selkirkshire (i.e. his son John also served, although after this it is unclear whether he or his son are being described). It was his son John (and not him) who married Margaret, daughter of John of Woll. It is unclear who he married. Michael, son of John ‘of Gilminigiscleugh’, recorded in a deed in 1663 and Robert, son of John ‘of Gilmerscleuch’, recorded in a deed of 1673, were probably his sons. John (d.bef. 1710) 2nd son of John of Woll and grandson of Sir William of Harden. He married Margaret Scott and they had a daughter, Agnes (although this could be confusion with John of Gilmanscleuch). He died before having male heirs, however. John (17th C.) married Margaret Henderson in 1686. They were both from Roberton Parish. Their son William was baptised in Ashirk Parish in 1689, with witnesses Thomas Wallace and Thomas Scott (who may have been related). John of Gilmanscleuch (17th/18th C.) son of John, he was described as ‘younger of Gilmanscleuch’ in the period 1685–90 when they both served the county of Selkirkshire. In 1689 he was appointed as an officer in the local Militia. In 1690 ‘John Scotts, elder and younger of Gillmenscleugh’ were on the Commission of Supply for Selkirkshire. He was still ‘younger off Gillimenschulch’ in 1693 when a daughter of his was baptised. In 1704 he was a Commissioner of Supply for Selkirkshire. In 1707 he was involved in a bond with Francis Scott of Bailielee and Robert Scott ‘in Overdelorain’. Sometime before 1712 he lost his estates because of debts, including Gilmanscleuch, which went to Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch. About 1728 he was appointed Surveyor of Roads. He married Margaret Scott, daughter of John of Woll (perhaps in Ashkirk in 1722), and their daughter Agnes was baptised in Ashkirk Parish, with witnesses John of Woll and George Currer. His son was probably William, last to be called ‘of Gilmanscleuch’. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, recorded as tenant in Branxholme in 1702, 1703, 1709 and 1713. He witnessed baptisms for Thomas ‘hutson’ in 1702, for Walter Scott, herd in Branxholme Town in 1703, for Robert Tudhope (herd in Over Southfield) in 1709 and for carrier Robert in Branxholme Town (along with William in Branxholme Town) in 1712. He married Isobel Thomson in 1701 and their children included William (b.1702), with witnesses James Ogilvie and William Scott, both also in Branxholme. He may be the same John who was at Branxholme Mains in the 1690s. His son-in-law was William Scott, who had a son Robert baptised in 1709; presumably this means he had a daughter in about the 1680s. John of Gorrenberry (d.bef. 1729) son of Francis. In 1691 he was served heir to his father's lands of Adderstone and Adderstoneshiel. In 1692 and 1694 he served as a Commissioner for assessing the rentals for the Duchess of Buccleuch. He took the money from the Orrock Bequest and paid interest to the Hawick heritors in the early 18th century. He must be the owner of 'Goranberies Hous' in either Cavers or Kirkton Parish, which was taxed for having 8 hearths in 1694; it is not stated where his house was, but it seems likely to have been at Adderstone. He was 'of Gorrenberrie' in 1695 when he contributed £200 to the Darien Scheme. He appears to have held lands in Kirkton Parish, since his servant William Lorraine was resident in that parish when he is recorded marrying in 1707; but since William was married in Edinburgh it suggests he also had a house there. He is probably the Laird of Gorrenberry who was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1704. In 1722 there is record of a payment made to the Burgh for the use of the bell for a burial relating to him. In 1723 he was mentioned in the Hawick Session book for his interest (presumably meaning return on his money) in 'ye building of ye Schoolhouse for ye Grammar School'. In 1724 there was again deliberation about 'the affaire of the Money in Gorrenberry's hands for a Schol-house and Schoolmaster's house'. He married a daughter of Charles Kerr of Abbotrule, possibly Cecily. His children included: John (1698); Charles (b.1700), baptised in Hawick; Francis, who succeeded; James (b.1703), baptised; Ann, who was the 3rd wife of Walter Scott of Harden; another daughter who may have married Douglas of Cavers; and another daughter, probably Margaret, who married John Elliot of Whithaugh. The witnesses in 1703 were William Kerr of Abbotrule (his brother-in-law) and Francis Gledstains of Whitlaw. He may be the John of Gorrenberry who married Janet, daughter of Robert Elliot of Larriston in 1716 (as her second husband). The witnesses in 1698 were 'Mr Alexander Riddell and James Heatley and in 1700 were William Kerr of Abbotrule and James Gledstains of Cocklaw. John (17th/18th C.) resident in Adderstoneshiel. His son Walter was baptised in Kirkton Parish in 1709. James (b.1707) may also have been his son. He may be the 'servitor' to John Tait in Adderstoneshiel whose daughter Agnes was baptised in Kirkton Parish in 1720. John (17th/18th C.) recorded in the 1718 survey of the lands of the Duchess of Buccleuch as owner of a small piece of land within the East Mains of Hawick, extending to 7 acres, 3 roods and 27 perches. He is surely the same as one of the contemporary Johns, but it is not clear which one. John 'Young Sodger' (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, presumably son of 'Sodger'. In 1704 he was John 'younger Sodger' when he (along with John 'Whitegates') witnessed a baptism for workman William Riddell. In 1707 he is 'Souldier younger' when he and William Aitken, younger, witnessed a baptism for carrier Henry Paterson. He is also mentioned in the parish records of 1714 answering 'for his sin of adultery'; he is thus one of the earliest adulterers explicitly on record in Hawick Parish! He is described as 'sojer' and 'younger of the Wester Kirk Style'. He was ordered to appear in sackcloth on the next Sunday, but failed to do so, appearing some months later in front of the Presbytery, along with his co-sinner where they were rebuked and referred back to the Session (presumably to pay a fine). In 1716 he is 'Souldier' when his son John was baptised, the mother being Isobel 'Lithen' and the record labelled 'Adult:'. In 1724 he was described as 'distinctions causa, called the young Souldier' when rebuked along with Thomas Weddell for breaking the Sabbath. It seems likely that his name was to distinguish him from John Scott, 'Sodger', who may of course have been his father. Walter Scott 'Soldier', recorded in the 1740s, may have been his son. John 'Herd' (17th/18th C.) listed as being 'called herd' among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He is probably the 'John Scott herd' listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694. He married Margaret Purdom in Hawick in 1700, when he is recorded as 'John Scott called Herd'. He is further recorded with the same nickname in 1714 when he received money from Hawick Session to help buy a horse 'for carrying his motherless child in ye countrie in ye summer', the charity being repeated the following year for a similar purpose. He may have been Town Herd, or otherwise worked as a shepherd, or this could have been an unrelated nickname. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Agnes Scott. Their children included Thomas (b.1718). John (17th/18th C.) candlemaker, who was an Elder of Hawick Kirk. In 1717 he was directed to collect monies from 'Whitla, Whitlahaugh, Flexes and Burnflat', suggesting he may have lived in this area. In 1719 he witnessed a baptism for Robert Manuel in Hawick and in 1720 (along with glover John) others for merchant John Cavers and for merchant William Dickson. And in 1722 he was appointed to collect from 'ye Meekle bridge to
Wm. Dickson’s house’, although it is unclear to which bridge this referred. He witnessed further baptisms in 1725 for carrier Walter Bryson, 1726 for John Fairgrieve and for gardener Walter in 1726 and in 1727 for William Ekron. He may also be the John who witnessed several baptisms in 1728. He married Janet Renwick and their children included Christian (b.1709) and Elspeth (b.1709). The witnesses in 1709 were baker John willians and merchant William Dickson. Probably the same candlemaker secondly married Margaret Clerk and had children Margaret (b.1714), Jane (b.1717), James (b.1718), Helen (b.1720), Christian (again, b.1722), John (b.1725) and Helen (again, b.1727). The witnesses in 1714 were Bailie Walter Elliot and William Hodge and in 1720 were Walter Purdom and Francis Rucycastle.

John (17th/18th C.) elder of Hawick Kirk (distinct from the candlemaker). He lived at Branxholme, and may have been related to William, ‘elder in Branxholmontoun’; the 2 were charged with collecting monies from the Branxholme area in 1717. He may also be the ‘James’ (perhaps a transcription error) mentioned as being one of the aged elders in 1718. John (17th/18th C.) smith in Hawick who was admitted as a Burgess in 1692. He is also listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He witnessed baptisms for James Grieve (from Wilton) in 1711 (along with Francis Gledstains) for weaver Walter White in 1712 for William Sander in 1711 (along with Francis Gledstains) for carter William Rae, in 1712 for William Sanderson (tenant in Hawick), in 1718 for Robert Scott, ‘Wyndhead’, in 1723 (along with John Chisholme, ‘Laird’) for gardener John Tait and for waulker William Hood, and in 1725 for workman William Henderson. He is probably the John ‘smith in ye Wynd’ who witnessed a baptism (along with Francis Gledstains) for weaver Walter White in 1718, and the John who witnessed a baptism for the same man in 1731. In 1720 he witnessed a baptism for John Chisholme ‘Laird’. He could be the John who was a Bailie in the 1720s. He married Jean ‘Betie’ (i.e. Beattie) (from Westerkirk) in Hawick in 1703, with children including: William (b.1704); Margaret (b.1708); Robert (b.1716); and Jean (b.1718). The witnesses in 1704 were Walter Wilson and merchant Walter Oliver, in 1708 were merchant Walter Wilson, James Falsyde and John Shiel and in 1716 were wright Francis Gledstains and merchant James Simpson. In 1721 probably the same smith married Elspeth ‘Red’ (probably Reid), who was widow of George Hardie. In 1722 he is recorded being paid 12 shillings ‘for yell [ale] when the ded bell was mended’. In 1723, along with another smith, James Beattie, he was asked to explain himself to the Hawick Session about ‘enteraining all the night in his house Janet Andison’ who was involved in a ‘scandal’ in Ettrick Parish.

John (17th/18th C.) son of Robert in Skelfhill. In Hawick Parish in 1700 he married Margaret Armstrong. John (17th/18th C.) recorded as ‘John Scot at ye port’ in 1709 when his son Walter was baptised in Hawick. The witnesses were weavers John Swan and John Swan (suggesting that he was probably also a weaver and from the West-end). He was probably related to the West Port Scotts. John (17th/18th C.) wigmaker in Hawick. He married Margaret Ker. In 1709 his daughter Anna was baptised, with witnesses Bailies Robert Hardie and James Burn, as well as ‘bailiffs’ William Laing and Walter Elliot. There are several other children who could be his. John (c.1678–1754/5) shepherd at Lymiecleuch. He married Jean Goodfellow, probably daughter of Archibald from the Bewcastle area, whose brother William farmed nearby; she died in 1783, aged 93. He had sons Thomas (1713/4–42), Robert (shepherd at Merrylaw) and William (‘the Auld Mason’). John of Weens (d.1727) probably descended from Andrew of Weens. He was one of the last Scott owners of Weens estate. He paid the land tax in Hobkirk Parish in 1678, for ‘Weymes’, valued at £200. He was listed in 1680 among local men convicted for being Covenanters, the accusations including attacking ‘the Tower and Castle of Hawick’. He is also recorded in a bond of 1682. In the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls he was taxed for having 3 hearths at Weens. He is listed as John ‘of Weens’ when he was a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1695. He may have married a daughter of Rev. James Ainslie of Minto. His son was also called John. In 1722 he and his son made an arrangement with Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs, whereby they gave up their pasturage rights to Feu-Rule Common in exchange for 1/5th of the land of the Common (now Hallrule farm). He was probably the Laird of Weens for whose burial the funeral bells were rung in Hawick in 1727. In 1729 his daughter Betsy married Sam Oliver, schoolmaster at Hobkirk. John (17th/18th C.) tenant in Allanhaugh Mill. In 1715 he married Euphen, ... daughter of Robert Riddell. Their children included: Robert (b.1718); and John (b.1725). The 1725 baptism was witnessed by Walter Riddell and Walter Nixon. John (17th/18th C.) married Janet Bell in Ashkirk in 1723. Perhaps he is the same John who earlier married Marion Bell. John (17th/18th C.) millwright in Allanhaugh Mill. He appears to be distinct from the tenant there of the same name, but may have been related. He married Elizabeth (or ‘Bessie’) Blyth and their children included: Andrew (b.1725); Elspeth (b.1726); and Andrew (again, b.1730). The same couple appear to have had a daughter Helen baptised in Wilton in 1728. The witnesses in 1725 were 2 William Riddells in Allanhaugh. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. His son Thomas (b.1715) was baptised in Ashkirk in 1715. The mother was Helen Laidlaw (presumably from Ashkirk) and the couple were married earlier that same year, although the child was ‘begotten in fornicatione’. John (17th/18th C.) Beadle of Hawick Kirk in the early part of the 18th century. He was son of Walter, who died in 1717, and whom he replaced. In 1718 he was already ‘beddell’ when he witnessed baptisms for William Reid, tenant in Raesknoke, for William Elliot, tenant in Crumhaugh and for John Napier. In 1719 he witnessed a baptism for William Langlands. In 1720 he was witness to a baptism for a posthumously born child, another 2 for ‘Fornicators’. In 1720 he was rebuked for taking several days to return from Selkirk Fair, missing the Sabbath in Hawick. In 1723 he was witness for the baptisms of 2 illegitimate children and he witnessed other baptisms in 1724 and 1725. Also in 1724 he was severely rebuked for drunkenness, ‘(as he expressed it) he was mistaken with Drink’ and unable to bring another person before the Session for the same crime. After much debate he submitted to the censure of the Session, was rebuked before the congregation, and kept his job. John (17th/18th C.) tenant in Over Southfield. He was witness to a baptism for John Graham in Allanhaugh Mill in 1725. John ‘Wyndhead’ (17th/18th C.) recorded in 1723 when he witnessed a baptism for Walter Henderson in Hawick. He may be the same as one of the other Johns. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Henderson and their children included: Robert (b.1721); and Charles (b.1724). Sir John of Ancrum (d.1746) son of Sir Patrick, he was the 3rd Baronet. He was younger in 1727 when listed among the people owing money to the deceased William Nisbet of Dirleton (his father-in-law). He was listed on a memorial of 1738, claiming the right of the Lordship of Rutherford for John Scott of Belford. In 1714 he married Christian, daughter of William Nisbet of Dirleton and she died in 1738. His children included: Patrick (d.1742), who was an army officer and died before his father; Sir William, who succeeded; John of Craigtintinnie (b.1729), who also took the surname Nisbet, and whose son John became 5th Baronet of Ancrum; Patrick; Walter (b.1733); Margaret; and Christian (1730–88). John of Harden (d.1734) younger son of Gideon. He succeeded to Harden in 1720, after the death of his brother Walter, becoming 9th Laird. He was probably a minor when he inherited the lands, since they were run by curators until 1723. About 1724–26 there were legal proceedings over claims on part of the Harden estates by his former ‘tutors and curators’, Walter of Whitfield, William of Thirlestane and Walter of Woll. He married Jean Erskine, daughter of Alexander, 4th Earl of Kellie. They had daughters: Anne, who married Thomas Shairp of Houston; and Mary Lillias (said to be a great beauty). A document of 1726 dispones Harden House as jointly owned with his wife. Dying without male issue, the estate went to his uncle Walter (of Whitfield), second son of the Earl of Tarra. John of Whitslade (d.bef. 1727) 2nd son of Thomas, he succeeded to the family estates after the death of his brother Thomas. He thus became the 8th and last Laird. He sold off the Whitslade estate about 1722 (having had the lands ‘disjoined’ in 1714), it having been in the family for around 6 generations. At that point the estate included Castleside, the Redfordgreens, Ashkirk farm, Ashkirk Mill, Salenside and Broadlee. He leased the lands of Harden Mains for 2 years in 1723, leading to legal disputes involving his brother Walter with Walter of Whitfield after his death. He died unmarried, ending this branch of the family. He was said to have been 14th in descent from the Baron of Buccleuch. Thus the direct representation of the Synton branch passed to the Scots of Todrig. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at ‘Bridihall’ (i.e. Brieryhill) in 1724. He married Helen Scott and their children included Thomas (b.1717), Agnes (b.1719), Helen (b.1722), Helen (again, b.1724) and Robert (b.1726). The witnesses in 1724 were David Taylor and John Miller. He is probably the John who on the same day in 1724 (along with David Taylor) witnessed a baptism for John Miller. John (17th/18th C.) tenant in Hawick Shiel. In 1719 he married Agnes, daughter of Alexander Thomson (sometimes tenant in Whitchesters). Their children included: Margaret (b.1721); James (b.1724); and Agnes (b.1729). The witnesses in 1721 were Walter Nixon and James Scott. John (17th/18th C.) tenant at Broadlee in Ashkirk Parish. He married Elspeth Scott and their children included: William (b.1713); Janet (b.1724); and Mary (b.1726). John (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Euphan Scott (perhaps in 1718, with no wife’s name given in the record) and their children included: James (b.1719); Rachel (b.1723); William (b.1728); and Elizabeth (b.1731). Thomas (b.1733), baptised in Ashkirk, with no mother’s name given, may also be his child. It is possible he is the same man as the John whose wife was Elspeth Scott. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He is recorded in Hawick Shiel in 1721 and is ‘coater in Fennick’ in 1723. He married Janet Henry. They had a son William baptised in 1721, on the same day as a child of another John (with the same witnesses), who was recorded as tenant in Hawickshiel. They also had an unnamed son in 1723. John (17th/18th C.) merchant of Hawick. In 1724 he was rebuked for his ‘irregular marriage’ with Anna, daughter of William Laing and Jane Thorbrand, widow of John Watson (who had been Clerk to the Regality in Hawick). They were married in Hawick by John Middleton, with witnesses Andrew Turnbull (mason) and Walter Gledstains (lawyer); the inclusion of a Gledstains suggests they may have been adherents of the Episcopal church. They had a child John (b.1728). John (17th/18th C.) tenant in Kershope on Yarrow. In 1752 he was deceased when his only daughter Jean had a discharge with the Burgh of Selkirk. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, recorded at Priesthaugh in 1726 when his daughter Isabel was baptised. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, recorded at Doecluch in 1726 and 1729. His children included: Jane (b.1726); and John (b.1729). John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Blyth and their children included: Andrew (b.1725); Elspeth (b.1726); and Andrew (again, b.1730). The witnesses in 1726 were William and Robert Thomson. John (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Outerside in 1720 when his son John was baptised. Perhaps the same John was at Deanburnhaugh in 1722 when his daughter Margaret was baptised. There are several potential marriages and many children who could be his. John (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Mains in 1723 when his son William was baptised. Perhaps the same John was at Todshaw in 1725 when his son William was baptised. John (18th C.) resident of Kirkton. His snuff box is in the Museum, labelled ‘John Scott in Kirkton – his box 1735’. It is unclear who he was. John (18th C.) recorded at Branzholme in 1734 when his daughter Isabel was baptised in Robertson Parish. Presumably his family or his wife came from the Borthwick valley. He could be the same as one of the other Johns. John (18th C.) tenant in Hawick Shiel. He married Bessy Goodfellow. Their son John was baptised in 1738, with witnesses John Telfer, ‘Kirk Officer’ and William Oliver, tailor. He may be the same as the earlier tenant in Hawick Shiel of the same name (if he married twice). John (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Christian Crawford and their children included: Agnes (b.1731); Janet (b.1733); and George (b.1735). John (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Magdalene Bowie in 1739 and their son John was baptised in 1741. John (18th C.) weaver in Hawick Parish. He witnessed a couple of baptisms in 1738. Perhaps the same weaver witnessed baptisms in 1719 for William Reid, tenant in Raesknowe and for William Hislop, servant in Allanhaugh Mill, and in 1726 for weaver Walter. In 1719 he was separately recorded as weaver and as Beadle; if this was not an error, then he is the same John as the Beadle. He may be the weaver who witnessed a baptism for tailor Thomas Kay in 1739. John of Ashtrees (18th C.) probably descended from the Scotts of Bonchester. He was possibly 3rd son of Walter, 3rd Laird of Nether Bonchester and Jane Turnbull; however, it is also suggested that that John was sent to the plantations after the 1715 rebellion (and hence was a different man). He was factor to Capt. John Rutherford of Edgerston. He married Helen, daughter of Thomas Oliver of Ashtrees. On the death of his father-in-law in 1739 he inherited the lands of Ashtrees in Southdean Parish. These would later pass to his grand-nephew Dr. James Robson-Scott. His children included: Adam, who became Laird of Ashtrees; and Thomas, who became Laird of Peel and married Esther Turnbull. John of Lees (18th C.). A 1738 letter exists in the National Archive, sent from him in Midhurst, Sussex to Mrs. Margaret Scott of Horsleyhill, mentioning that he intends to deliver an Episcopal sermon at Hassendeane Kirk (long ruined by then) and mentions (possibly John (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Riddle and their children included John (b.1749). Other children baptised in Cavers Parish around the same time are probably his. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded at Giddenscleuch in 1749. He married Margaret Riddle and their children included John (b.1749). He may have been related to David, who was at Giddenscleuch a little earlier. John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at East Highchesters in 1742 when his daughter Christian was baptised. It is possible this is the same man as the tenant of Highchesters Mill, if he had an earlier marriage. He may be the same John who was at Whithope in 1735 when his son John was baptised. There were several other children baptised in Roberton who could also be his. John (18th C.) recorded being at Winnington Rig in 1746. He was a witness in Hawick for merchant Gideon and his wife Sussana Scott. He may have been related to one member of this couple. John (18th C.) carrier in Hawick. He witnessed a baptism in 1745 (along with another John, shoemaker) and another in 1746 for carrier James Oliver. John of Belford (18th C.) son of Charles and grandson of Sir John of Langshaw and Ancrum. His mother was Margaret, daughter of Robert, 4th Lord Rutherford. In 1738 he tried to claim the Lordship, after the death of his distant relative, Alexander, 6th Lord Rutherford. He supported the Jacobites in 1745, meeting Charles at Kelso. As a result of this support he later lost his estate, and was never able to claim the peerage. He paid the window tax for Belford (in Morebattle Parish) in the period 1748–59. However, it is possible he was the John ‘of Palacehill’ listed among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761. He married Marion, daughter of Alexander Baillie from Asliestiel. They had 5 daughters, the eldest being Agnes, who married Thomas Cockburn of Rowchester (in Berwickshire). John (18th C.) recorded as a ‘wool comber’ in 1730 when he was admitted as a Burgess of Hawick. In 1735 he was recorded receiving a Burgess ticket gratis. It is unclear why this happened, but perhaps he had been brought in from outside Hawick to stimulate the manufacturing of yarn. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Johns. John (d.bef. 1777) son of John of Weens. He is probably the 'younger of Weems in ye parish of Hopkirk’ recorded in 1712 when his daughter Janet ‘begoten in ye aforesaid parish in fornication’ was baptised in Hawick; the witnesses were Robert Hardie and John Craw (‘fowler’ in Branxholme Town). In 1731 he signed the marriage contract of William Elliot of Lodgegill and Jean Elliot of Harwood. In 1733 he married Marion (or ‘Mary’), 3rd daughter of William Elliot of Harwood. In 1744 he sold the lands of Weens to John Armstrong with the consent of his wife. Marion was a widow in 1777 when she had a discharge to her brother Henry. His son James was baptised in Hob Kirk Parish in 1738 (when he is recorded being ‘of Weens’). Other children baptised there who may have been his included Elizabeth (b.1734), Margaret (b.1736), Henry (b.1739), Christian (b.1741), an unnamed son (b.1741) and Janet (b.1743). John (18th C.) married Ann Thorbrand in Ashkirk in 1745. John (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Chisholme and their children included: Thomas (b.1748); Isabel (b.1749); John (b.1751); Janet (b.1754); Thomas (again, b.1757); and Sarah (b.1759). John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Craw hill in 1751, 1759 and 1764. He married Helen Scott in 1750 (with a marriage of a couple having the same names also recorded in 1744) and their children included: Elizabeth (b.1750); Susanna (b.1751); James (b.1753); Elizabeth (b.1755); John (b.1757); Gideon (b.1759); Margaret (b.1761); John (b.1762); Helen (b.1764); Agnes (b.1766); Margaret (b.1768); John (b.1771); and Christian (b.1773). The witnesses in 1751 were Robert and John Scott, in 1759 were Thomas and Robert Scott (who are likely to have been related to him and his wife) and in 1764 were John Scott and John Hart. John (18th C.) mason in Ashkirk. He married Helen Tait in 1761 and their children included: William (b.1762); Margaret (b.1765); Walter (b.1767); Alexander (b.1769); Elspeth (b.1772); John (b.1775); Alexander (again, b.1777); and Jean (b.1779). John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Lees in 1764. He married Jean Douglas and their children included: Mary (b.1760); Esther (b.1762); Marjory (b.1764); William (b.1767); Robert (b.1769); Agnes (b.1772); and Jean (b.1774). The witnesses in 1764 were Robert Easton and Thomas Reid. John (d.bef. 1781) resident of Hawick Parish. He was recorded as ‘Herd’ in 1767 (probably his occupation, but it might instead have been a nickname). He married Helen Henry in Ashkirk in 1757 and their children included Alexander (b.1767). The witnesses in 1767 were John Rieve and Thomas Laidlaw. He was already deceased in 1781 when the death of his wife was recorded in Hawick. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1766 he married Euphan Ruecastle. Their children included: John (b.1767); Walter (b.1768); John (again, b.1770); and Elizabeth (b.1771). John (18th C.) tenant in Highchesters Mill. He married Beatrix Thomson in 1756 and she died in 1797, aged 66. Their children included Archibald (b.1756), William (b.1762), Beatrix (b.1764), John (b.1777) and Mary (b.1772). Other children baptised in Roberton Parish that may have been his include Margaret (b.1760) and Nelly (b.1768). He died at the age of 50 (although not in 1748, as reported). The family are buried in Borthwick Waas. He may have been related to the Robert who was at Highchesters Mill in the 1740s. John (d.bef. 1763) younger son of Robert of Davington, brother of James and William. He was a direct descendant of the Scotts of Thirlestane, although his branch failed in the male line. He was an attorney in Can onbie. He married Isabel, daughter of James Scott of Calfield. Their children included: Robert, in the Seaforth Regiment in the American War, and also in India; James, moved to Can onbie; William, married Ann Little and killed in a quarry accident; John, also at Can onbie; probably Francis; Jane; and Margaret. John (18th C.) tenant in Allanhaugh Mill, probably the son of John, born in 1725. He married Mary Dodds in 1755 and they had an unnamed child in 1758. John of Gorrenberry (d.1785) son of Charles of Gorrenberry. He was a doctor in the London area. He was recorded as a doctor on the list of Commissioners of Roxburghshire in 1761. He married Jean Fox, who secondly married Charles Fox of Chacomb and died in 1820. Their children included: Francis (b.1768), who died in infancy; and Charles, M.D. (d.1794). The family are buried in Bromley, Kent. John (18th C.) descended from the Scotts of Synton, through millers at Boosmill on Ale Water, who also farmed at Dimpleknowe, and then moved to a mill on Rule Water. However, Keith Scott also suggests he was a son of Alexander, miller in Rulewater and at Roughqueugh. He himself became miller at Hummelknowes, and later married the widow Henderson, tenant of the mill. In 1755 he was recorded as miller at Hummelknowes, with wife Jane Scott. He was also recorded at Hum melknowes Mill in 1761. Children, baptised in Cavers, who were probably his include: Margaret (b.1751); George (b.1753); Walter (b.1755); and John (b.1761), who was also tenant in Hummel-knowes. It is unclear if the William of Hummelknowes who paid the window tax in 1748 is an error for his name or was perhaps a relative. John (18th C.) Town Treasurer listed in 1734. He may be the same as Bailie John or one of the other contemporary men with the same name. In 1734 there is a record in the Treasurer’s book that he paid his son for joinery work on the lofts of St. Mary’s Kirk. In 1737 the Treasurer’s book records money ‘paid to my wife when ye workmen went to see where ye brige should be’; this suggests he may have been involved with the building of Teviot Brig, and may be the same man as Bailie John. Bailie John (18th C.) recorded in 1730 when he witnessed a baptism for Walter Scott ‘jr. surgeon’. He could also be the John who witnessed the wedding in Edinburgh for the same Walter, and hence was probably related to him. Perhaps the same ‘late Bailie’ John witnessed a baptism for merchant Andrew Riddell in Hawick in 1738 (when another John appears to have been Bailie). He is probably the same as one of the other Johns. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Newton in 1733. He married Margaret Dryden in 1731 and their children included: Margaret (b.1733); and Jean (b.1738). The witnesses in 1733 were Robert and William (who were probably related to him).

John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded in Cavers itself when his son Hugh was baptised in 1737 and when his son Charles was baptised in 1742. He may be the weaver John who was in Cavers in 1744 when his son John was baptised. John (18th C.) shepherd at Dryden. He was probably related to the John, shepherd at Dryden Burnfoot, recorded in 1694. He married Margaret Riddell and their children included: John (b.1738); Robert (b.1739); and John (b.1749), born in Cavers Parish. The witnesses in 1739 were Robert Elliot of Rigg and Walter Scott at Commmisde. John (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Bessie Blyth and their daughter Isobel was baptised in 1736. Bailie John (18th C.) referred to as ‘younger’ when Bailie in the 1730s (suggesting that he may have been son of another John). He was Magistrate in 1738, when plans were laid for building Teviot Bridge. Also in 1738 he witnessed a baptism of James Weir (who was Town Clerk). Along with William Tudhope he arranged for the bond to pay for construction of the bridge. He was Bailie along with James Scott in about 1743 when they gave orders to the Burgh Officers to find the animals of the neighbouring tenants pasturing on the common and drive them into the Town. He may be the ex-Bailie John who, along with Thomas Turnbull and Rev. Partick Cunningham, sold East Mains (of Hawick) to the Duke of Buccleuch in the 1740s. He was listed as ‘late Bailie’ when he witnessed baptisms for Wright James Winthrope in 1740, Walter Scott of Newton and merchant Andrew Riddell in 1743, mason Andrew Wilson in 1744 and writer James Weir in 1745. He was recorded in 1747 when the tradesmen were paid in his place (presumably an inn) after taking down the kirk bell. He may be the Bailie John who witnessed a baptism in 1757 and another in 1759 for tailor James Gledstains. He is probably one of the skinners James, John and Walter Scott, recorded as Bailies in the 1740s. He may be the John who was still a Bailie in the 1760s. He could be the Bailie James who hired the Hawick mortcloth in 1761. He may be the John who witnessed baptisms for Richard Purdom and Jane Scott (perhaps his daughter) in 1762, 1764, 1766 an 1773; in 1762 the entry may say ‘skinner’ (but is hard to read). He may be the tailor who witnessed a baptism for William (perhaps a relative) in 1766 and who also hired the Hawick Parish mortcloth in 1759. He is probably the Bailie John who, along with Bailie Thomas Turnbull of Fenwick, witnessed a baptism for the younger Thomas Turnbull in 1763. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1746 he was living at Galalaw. His married Helen Easton in 1746. Their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1746, when the witnesses were John and Thomas Scott. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1747 he was living at Netherhall. He married Isobel Turnbull in 1733 and their children included: John (b.1739); Margaret (b.1744); Walter (b.1747); and Robert (b.1750). The witnesses in 1747 were Walter Scott and James Dryden. John (18th C.) recorded in Deanbrae in 1759 when he hired the Hawick Parish mortcloth. He may be the same as one of the other Johns. John younger of Synton (d.bef. 1765) eldest son of Alexander of Synton. In 1735 he married Mary, only daughter of William Oliver of Dinlabyre (and grand-daughter of William Chisholme of that Ilk). However, he died before his father, his only son Alexander succeeding to the Synton estates. He also had a daughter, Margaret, who married William Fairbairn, schoolmaster at Galashiels; she died in 1815. John (b.c.1749) son of James and Margaret Legerwood. He was a ‘tacksman’ at Roughheugh in Wilton Parish. John (1749–1824) miller in Hawick. In 1779 he witnessed a baptism for inn-keeper John Kennedy. He is probably the John, miller in Hawick, who subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ in 1784. He married Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’, 1758–c.92) Thomson in 1767, the marriage being recorded in both Hawick and St. Boswell’s parishes; however, another marriage of the same couple appears to be recorded in Hawick in 1770. Their children included: James (b.1771); Dr. William (1773–1884), surgeon who made his fortune in the West Indies; James (b.1776); Ann (1778–1852), who married miller John White; Margaret (b.1780); Mary (b.1782); Beatrix (b.1784); Elizabeth (1786–1853), who married Thomas Wemyss; Robert (b.1789); and Jane (b.1790). The witnesses in 1773 were James Tudhope and James Turnbull, in 1776 were Walter Purdom and Robert Thomson, in 1778 were William ‘Masen’ and Walter Purdom, in 1784 were stockingmaker William Thomson and Session Clerk James Inglis, and in 1789 were John Henderson and another John Scott. An unnamed child of his died on the last day of 1790 (at the same time as the child of under-miller Adam Jardine, suggesting there was perhaps some disease in the household). Probably the same John married Ann Boyle in 1795 (recorded in both Hawick and Kelso Parishes) and in 1796 made an application to the Barons at the Exchequer Chambers in Edinburgh in respect of the estate of his deceased wife. John (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Catherine Aitken and their daughter Agnes was baptised in 1748. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Agnes Turnbull in Wilton Parish in 1751. Their children (all baptised in Hawick Parish) were: William (b.1757); John (b.1758); Adam (b.1760); Isobel (b.1761); Beatrix (b.1763); Jane (b.1765). Witnesses to the 1760 baptism were Thomas Laidlaw and weaver Charles Miller, and in 1765 were Walter Burn and Archibald Henderson. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Boonraw in 1751 and 1758. He married Margaret Henderson in 1751 and their children included: John (b.1751); John (again, b.1752); James (b.1754); Helen (b.1756); Robert (b.1758); Agnes (b.1760); Thomas (b.1762); and James (b.1764). Scott and in 1758 were Robert Ormiston and George Scott. John (18th C.) married Martha Rae in Ashkirk in 1759. John of Gala (1732–85) son of Hugh, he was 6th Laird. He was recorded as a Commissioner for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1761 (when still ‘junior’). He was taxed for having 2 or 3 male servants in the period 1778–79. He was on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. He married Anne, only daughter of George McDougall of Makerstoun. Their children were: Elizabeth; Col. Hugh, who succeeded; Barbara (1764–1844); Adm. Sir George (1769–1841); and Col. John (1774–1832), whose eldest daughter Maria Sarah Makdougall inherited Makerstoun. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Whitfield in 1762 and Boonraw in 1764 and 1767. In 1760 he married Margaret Lorraine, who was from Yarrow. Their children included: Robert (b.1762); twins William and John (b.1764); Helen (b.1767); and Janet (b.1768). The witnesses in 1762 were Thomas Scott and Robert Scott and in 1764 were Robert and Walter Ormiston (probably both in Boonraw). John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Harkness and their children included Walter (b.1769), James (b.1771), Robert (b.1774), John (b.1783) and Rachel (b.1786). The witnesses in 1771 were Robert and James Harkness. The witnesses in 1783 and 1786 were the whole congregation. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Clarilaw in 1780. He married Betty Martin in 1779 and their children included: James (b.1780); John (b.1781); Robert (b.1784); Janet (b.1786); Margaret (b.1791); Andrew (b.1797); and Thomas (b.1798). The witnesses in 1780 were James Martin and James Scott (probably related to his wife and him). It is possible he was the weaver John whose child’s burial is recorded in 1799. John (18th C.) gardener at Knowe in Minto Parish in 1778 and 1779, when he was working for Thomas Turnbull. John (18th C.) listed as owner of a ‘House and Yard’ in Minto Parish in 1779, valued at £1 16s 7d. The same piece of land was owned by Lord Minto in 1811. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, recorded at Fenwick in 1786. He married Isobel Turnbull and their children included: Mary (b.1784); Janet (b.1786); and Elizabeth (b.1788). Given the forename coincidence he may also have been father of Charles (b.1783), who emigrated to Waterloo County, Ontario. John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Mabonlaw in 1780 and 1785 when his children Nelly and Ann were baptised. Probably the same John was at Harden in 1788 and 1789 when his sons Robert and John were baptised. There are several marriages in Roberton around this time that could be his. John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Broadlee Burnfoot in 1781 when his son James was baptised. He is surely related to the cooper James, who was also recorded at Broadlee Burnfoot in 1781, and probably Robert, who was there slightly earlier. Perhaps he is the same as the John who married Jane Irvine and was living at Muselee in 1792. John (18th C.) married Margaret Laidlaw in Wilton Parish in 1780. Their children included Isabel (b.1782). John (18th C.) shepherd in Hobkirk Parish. He married Isabel Blaikie and their son Adam (who was also a shepherd) was baptised in 1782. Several other children baptised in Hobkirk around this time may also have been his. John (18th C.) tenant farmer at Borthwickbrae according to the Horse Tax Rolls of 1790–91. He may be the same as one of the other Johns. John (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He married Jane Irvine in Robertson in 1781. Their children included Margaret (b.1792), baptised in Robertson; and Mary (b.1799), baptised in Ettrick Parish. John (18th C.) skinner in Hawick. His daughter Sarah died in 1798. John ‘Gover’ (d.bef. 1809) Hawick resident whose wife Betty Cunningham died in 1795. The death of his daughter Isabel is recorded in Hawick in 1809. He could be related to the later ‘Gover’. John (18th C.) resident of Weens in 1790 when his son Thomas was baptised in Hobkirk Parish. Sir John of Ancrum (1757–1812) son of John, who was 3rd son of Sir John, 3rd Baronet of Ancrum. He was born at Longnewton. His father succeeded to Craigentinnie in right of his mother, taking the additional surname of Nisbet. He became the 5th Baronet of Ancrum, succeeding his uncle Sir William. He was a Cornet with the Royal Regiment of Horse Guards, then with the Horse Grenadiers and 17th Foot. He was listed on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. He was recorded at Ancrum on the 1785–97 Horse Tax Rolls. He subscribed to 2 copies of Burns ‘Edinburgh Edition’ in 1787. He was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1788 (when described as ‘once Aide-de-camp to the late General Mackay, Commander-in-Chief, but now not employed. At present unfit for business’). In 1794 he was appointed Major-Commandant with the Roxburgh Cavalry, later being promoted to Colonel and travelling with them to Ireland. He (as well as his mother, Mrs. Scott Nisbet) paid tax for having both male and female servants in the period 1778–91, and just himself from 1792–97. He was recorded at Ancrum on the 1785–97 Horse Tax Rolls and in the period 1792–98 was taxed for owning a carriage. He was additionally taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. He was recorded as owner of an estate in Ancrum Parish valued at more than £2000 in 1788 and 1811. He was one of the founder members of the Jedforest Club in 1810, and presented them with a snuff mull, which was used at dinners long afterwards. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. In 1792 he married Harriet, daughter of William Graham of Gartmore. They had 2 sons and 4 daughters: Sir John, who succeeded; Sir William, who succeeded his brother; Harriet, who married George Oldmixon; Elizabeth, who married Col. de Feveras; Margaret; and Lucy. He was buried in Old Greyfriars in Edinburgh. John, W.S. of Midlo-hope (1757–1803) 3rd son of William of Woll and brother of Charles. He was apprentice to lawyer Cornelius Elliot. In 1780 he received the superiority of lands in Merton from Walter Scott of Harden, but renounced them again in 1791. He also acquired the estate of Glenormiston in Peeblesshire. He was apprenticed to Cornelius Elliot of Wolfelee and became Writer to the Signet in 1784. In 1782 he married Beatrice, daughter of Thomas Caverhill. His children were: William of Teviot Bank; and James of Eleem. He could be the Edinburgh lawyer who was made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick in 1778. In 1782 he was listed among the voters of Selkirkshire, and described as being a supporter of Scott of Buccleuch, but having his ‘real vote from his father’. Lieut. John of Synton (d.1796) only son of Alexander. He is probably the John of Synton who paid the land tax in 1785 for Synton and Synton Mill. In 1788 he was recorded as owner of Satchells (valued at £200). He was Lieutenant in the 57th Regiment and died in Grenada. He left no male heirs, but had 2 surviving sisters Catherine and Helen, the first of whom inherited the Synton estate. John of Horsleyhill, see Capt. Francis James of Horsleyhill. John (18th C.) recorded in Denholm in 1779 when his son William was baptised in Cavers Parish. Probably the same John was a labourer in Denholm when his son Thomas was baptised in 1781. John (18th C.) recorded in Mosspsaul in 1779 and 1782 and as innkeeper there in (probably) 1788. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included: William (b.1779); James (b.1782) and John (b.1788). John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, recorded at Binks in 1780 and 1782 when his children Christian and Isabel were baptised. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, recorded in Cavers itself in 1787 when his son Paul was baptised. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He is recorded as miller in Denholm in 1789 and 1795 when his sons, both called Robert, were baptised. He could be the same as one of the other Johns, and was probably related to other Scott millers. John (18th C.) listed in the 1785–91 cart tax records as ‘John Scott Post’ and ‘John Scott the Post’, suggesting that he was deliverer of mail at that time. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Helen Learmonth and their children included Benjamin (b.1769). John (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. He married Margaret Turabull in 1771. John (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He may have been related to the earlier shoemaker of the same name. He witnessed a baptism in 1775 for stocking-maker James Haldane. He is recorded as a shoemaker when his son Thomas died in 1787 and when his daughter Peggy died in 1794. He could be the John who married Elizabeth Aitkin, with children including Thomas (b.1782), Mary (b.1784), Margaret (b.1786) and Henrietta (b.1792). The witnesses in 1792 were Peter Young and Thomas Rae. John (18th C.) described as ‘analysts of Valuation Books’. He wrote an analysis of the land valuations of Selkirkshire for the Commissioners of Supply for that county in 1785 and another for Roxburghshire in 1788. These contain valuable details about how lands had changed hands between the 1643 and 1678 valuations, and then continuing through the 18th century. He may have worked in Edinburgh, but is seems fairly likely that he was associated with one of the local Scott families. He may be the same as one of the other Johns. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Bawhill, with horses in Hawick in 1797. He is recorded as farmer there in the 1787–97 Horse Tax Rolls. He also owned 4 farm horses there in 1797. Additionally he may be the John recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Lilliesleaf. In 1811 it is recorded that he had feued the part of Lilliesleaf Common known as Stotfield and Nolt-lair from William Riddell of Camieston. It is possible he is the same as John of Synton. John (d.bef. 1787) resident of Hawick Parish. He had already deceased when the death of his wife Betty Lunn is recorded. John (d.1809) tailor in Hawick. He was brother of Walter, wright, who was already deceased in 1809. He could be the tailor whose son John died in 1777. It is possible he was the ‘John Wyndhead’ whose son Walter the tailor died in 1810. John (1749/50–1828) Schoolmaster in Ancrum. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825, suggesting that he had a connection to Hawick. His son George was on the Militia list for Ancrum in about 1800. The schoolmaster at Ancrum from 1828 was also John, and hence perhaps his son. John (18th/19th C.) Schoolmaster at Lessuden. In 1792 he married Betty Oliver in Cavers Parish. It is possible he is the same man as the schoolmaster in Ancrum. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Scott and her name is given as Elspeth) are recorded at Bowanhill in 1797 when his daughter Rachel was baptised. John (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Hislop in Hawick Parish in 1797, according to the Horse Tax Rolls. John (18th/19th C.) tenant at Whithope Mill (on the Borthwick), recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses. He may have been related to Adam, who farmed Whithope at the same time and George, who was referred to in 1808 when his son George died. John (b.1760) son of George, tenant in Falla. His grandfather was tenant at Roughheugh Mill in Hawick. He married his cousin Euphemia, daughter of Robert Scott, also miller at Roughheugh Mill. Their children were: Robert; George; John; Ann, who married D. Clarke; and Betsy. They may all have died without issue. He may be the ‘John Scott Milns’ who is recorded as owner of 3 horses in Hawick on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He is probably also the John ‘in Hawick Mill’ recorded in the 1810 inventory after the death of ‘Auld Cash’. He is probably also the John of Hawick Mill whose wife’s death is recorded in Hawick in 1824. John (18th/19th C.) from Ettrick Parish, he married Agnes Beattie in Roberton Parish in 1789. Their children included: an unnamed son (b.1798), baptised in Ettrick; and Walter (b.1802), Isabel (b.1803) and Robert (b.1806), baptised in Yarrow. In 1841 his widow is recorded at Catslacknowe, with sons Archibald and Robert. John (1766–1850) son of Robert, who farmed at Whitchesters. He became tenant farmer at Boonraw. In 1796 he married Euphemia Elliot (also born in 1766), both being described as from Hawick Parish; both of them died in the cholera outbreak of 1850. Their children included: Robert, who also farmed at Boonraw; George, who married Mary Thompson and had 3 children, but died of smallpox while emigrating to America; William (b.1801), who became a doctor in Canada; and 3 children who died in 1809, Janet, Margaret and John. He and his wife (although her name is given as Elspeth) are recorded at East Boonraw in 1841. John (18th/19th C.) married Janet Mein in Hawick Parish in 1796. John (18th/19th C.) married Ann Oliver in 1798, both being from Hawick Parish. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. Their son James was baptised in 1800. John (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Margaret (or Peggy) Tait and their children included Agnes (b.1805), Margaret (b.1808), Isobel (b.1811), Mary (b.1814). John (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Agnes (or Nancy) Blyth and their children included James (b.1805), Thomas (b.1807), Thomas (again, b.1809), George (b.1811), John (b.1813), Agnes (b.1813). John (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Jean Hill and their children included George (b.1815), Agnes (b.1817), Janet (b.1818) and David (b.1821). John (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Ann Gledstains and their children included Ann (b.1816) and John (b.1818). John (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Nelly Hume and their children included Betty (b.1817). John (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Jean Park and their children included Agnes (b.1819), William (b.1822) and Jean (b.1829). John (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Joan Faulds and their children included Walter (b.1820). John (18th/19th C.) resident of Lethem in Southdean Parish. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isobel Bartle and their son Gideon was baptised in 1823. John (18th/19th C.) resident of London when he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He is listed along with James, also of London, and it seems likely that the pair had a direct connection with Hawick. John (b.1769) 2nd son of Rev. William of Southdean and brother of Adam Scott-Elliot of Arkleton. His children included: William; Rev. Charles; Adam; Margaret; Sybil; Ann; Elizabeth; and Mary. There were apparently no grandchildren John of Whitehaugh (d.1823) 2nd cousin of Isobel and William, who had previously held the lands of Whitehaugh (although it is unclear how precisely he was related or who his parents were). He succeeded in 1759 on the death of Isobel, but was still a minor at that time. In 1774 he witnessed a baptism for Bailie John Hardie. He is ‘John Scott, Esq: Whitehaugh’ on the subscription list for Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ in 1784. He was listed in 1788 (and still on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls) as owner of ‘Whitehaugh, otherways called Wester Whitehaugh; and Wester Heap, otherways called Easter Whitehaugh’, valued at £648 10s. He also sold the small piece of land called ‘Souter’s Acre’, which was later owned by Thomas Laidlaw of Silverobithall. He paid the Horse Tax at Whitehaugh from 1785–94. In 1797 he is recorded as owner of 2 horses in the Horse Tax Rolls for Wilton; he also paid the dog tax there in the same year. He helped fund the extension to the old Wilton Kirk in 1800. About the same time he contributed to the local subscription to support the war against France. He is recorded as a vassal of Buccleuch in correspondence of the mid-18th century in the Buccleuch archives. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and in 1819 along with his son Walter. As well as the lands of Whitehaugh, he also owned the farms of Greensidehall and Broomhall. In 1767 he married Margaret (perhaps also known as Elisabeth), daughter and co-heiress of Walter of Chamberlain Newton. They had 12 children, although only 3 sons and 3 daughters survived childhood. Their children included: John (b.1768); Walter (b.1769), who succeeded; William (b.1770); Agnes (b.1772), who married Adam Stavert of Hoscote; Francis (b.1773), Major in the army, killed in the Peninsular War; James (b.1775), who succeeded Walter as the last Laird; Elisabeth, ‘Betty’ (b.1776), who was the 2nd wife of Gilbert Chisholme of that Ilk; William (b.1782); and Margaret (b.1783). John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Scott and their children included Agnes (b.1776). John (18th C.) resident of Wilton. In 1787 he married Janet Scott, from Hawick Parish. John (18th C.) recorded at Sandyhaugh in 1788 when his son Thomas was baptised in Robertson Parish. John (18th C.) resident in Wilton Parish, living at Priestrig in 1790. He married Margaret Reid and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1790. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1794 he married Janet Turnbull, who was also from Hawick. Their children included: Margaret (b.1794); Margaret (again, b.1795); Christian (b.1798); and Robert (b.1799). John (b.c.1765) ploughman in Yarrow and Ashkirk Parishes. He married Helen (or ‘Nellie’) Scott and their children included: George (b.1792), who married Jean Stewart; John (b.1796), who married Christian Nichol; Margaret (b.1800), who married Robert Turnbull; Mary (b.1806), who married William Scott, thatcher and farm-worker at Sinton; Walter (b.1809); and William (b.1812), who married Jane Currie. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Mervinslaw in 1797, according to the Horse Tax Rolls. He owned 2 work horses. John (18th/19th C.) recorded at Timbersidemill on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, where he is listed owning 2 work horses. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Easter Essenside on the 1789-97 Horse Tax Rolls. In 1797 he owned 5 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He was additionally taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. John (18th/19th C.) recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as farmer at Ashkirk Mill. He is probably the ‘J. Scott’ whose letter from ‘Askirkmill’ in 1791 is preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. He may be the John, married to Anne Scott, whose children baptised in Ashkirk Parish included: Nelly (b.1792); Margaret (b.1794); Charlotte (b.1796); Alexander (b.1798); Thomas (b.1800); James (b.1802); John (b.1804); Beatrix (b.1805); and James (b.1807). John (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Susan Oliver and their children included Margaret Hume (b.1802). John (18th/19th C.) cooper and wheelwright in Lilliesleaf, as recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He is probably the wright in Lilliesleaf whose son William was baptised in 1789. Agnes (b.1791), John (b.1793), Helen (b.1795), Susan (b.1798) and James (b.1800) were probably also his children. John (b.1772) possibly son of James, who was tenant at Denholmhill, where he was later tenant himself. He married Agnes, daughter of Thomas Blyth and Isabel Reid, who was born at East Middle. Their children were: Isabella (b.1802); Elizabeth, ‘Betty’ (b.1803); James (b.1805), who died in Australia; Thomas (1809–67), who may have died at sea; George (1811–96), who died in Manitoba, Canada; Agnes (b.1813); and John (b.1813). They were baptised at the Burger Kirk in Hawick. He could be the John listed at Denholm Mill on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 4 horses. John (b.c.1770) farmer at Langbaulk. He is recorded there in 1841, along with John and Mary, probably his family. He was probably related to William, who was about the same age and also a farmer there. John (b.c.1775) local hosiery employer, known as ‘John the Turk’. The nickname may have already been in the family, but he was known for reducing wages, having labour organisers (including James Hogg) imprisoned, etc. There is a record of him receiving help from the Board of Trustees for Manufactures for purchasing a ribbed stocking frame in 1798. His attempt to reduce the price of men’s stockings by 6 pence per dozen, through wage reductions, led to the first known strike of hosiery workers in 1817. He is listed as a manufacturer on the High Street on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory, and seems to have been at ‘Turk’s Close’, around No. 60 on the 1841 census (along with his wife Ann). He is probably the Hawick spinner of that name who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. In 1826 he received further help from the Board of Trustees for carding and spinning machinery. His house stood on the site of the Bridge Hotel. He married Ann Gledstains, last of her family in Hawick. He had a son John who died in 1819. John (18th/19th C.) recorded at Martin’s House in 1797, along with William. They were surely related to the later farmer at Martin’s House, also called John. John (18th/19th C.) son of John. He took over from his father as tenant of Hummellknowes Mill. He is probably the John recorded as tenant there on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He married a miss Deans and his children included John (also miller at Hummellknowes) and Walter (farmer at Hummleknowes). He died at Hummleknowes Mill. John (18th/19th C.) recorded in the 1788 county valuation and in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls as owner of ‘Part of Mr. Patrick Cunningham’s Lands, now called Allers Garden, which belonged to George Kerr’. This separate piece of the former lands of Rev. Cunningham was valued at £10 19s; it seems likely to have been land near the modern Allars Crescent. He is probably the same as one of the other Johns, and perhaps related to Walter, who also held part of the former Patrick Cunningham’s lands. John of Ashtrees (b.1762/3) born in Oxnam Parish, he was son of Adam and grandson of John. He was descended from the Scotts of Bonchester. He was farmer at Woodhouse. In the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls he is recorded as tenant of ‘Woodhouse &c.’ when he owned 4 farm horses and 1 saddle horse; he also paid the dog tax at Woodhouse in 1797. He was listed as owner of Ashtrees on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. He is recorded as proprietor of ‘Ashtree, Woodhouse, Southdean’ on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory, and of ‘Ashtree, Woodehouse’ in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 he was ‘Landed prop.’ at Woodhouse, occupying 100 acres, with 550 acres of hill pasture and employing 7 people. In 1787 he married Isabel Rae and among their children was Adam of Tullich, Loch Carron. In 1855 his executors sold the farm of Ashtrees to his cousin, Thomas Scott of Riccalton. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at ‘Minto-hill-end’ when he subscribed to Andrew Scott’s book of poetry, published in Kelso in 1811. John (b.c.1780) cabinet-maker who lived on the Mid Raw in 1841. His wife was Jane and their children included George, David, Janet, John and Helen. His daughter Agnes married carrier James Hill (ancestor of the Hawick Ball family). John (b.c.1781/2) from Yarrow, he was an agricultural labourer in Lilliesleaf Parish. He was living at Riddell in 1841 and at Riddell West Lodge in 1851. His wife was Betty and their children included Walter, Agnes, Margaret and Ann. John (1784–1860) born at Griphown in Kirkton Parish, son of John and Helen Renwick. He was an agricultural labourer, moving to Melrose Parish. He lived at Shielshaugh Cottage and also Abbey Street, where he served as Abbey Keeper. In 1815 in Ancrum he married Beatrice (1792–1836), daughter of William Boa and Beatrix Scott. Their children were: Rev. John D. (1817–95), who died at Hamilton, Ontario, Canada; Catherine (1821–99), who also emigrated to Canada; William T. (1828–95), lived in Bruce County, Ontario; James (1828–97), who died in Manitoba; Rev. Peter (1830–1908), also in Ontario; Robert (1832–1900), also Ontario. He and his wife are buried at Borthwick Waas. John of Riccalton (1785–1858) younger son of Thomas of Peel. He was tenant farmer at Lethem, jointly with his brother Thomas. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. He was probably the John recorded at Letham among subscribers to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He was elected as an honorary member at the first meeting of the Jedforest Club, and arranged to have the club coats made out of Cheviot wool. In 1829 he bought Riccalton from the daughters of the Duke of Roxburgh, also purchasing the superiority. He then became an ordinary member of the Jedforest Club. In 1855 he bought Ashtrees from the trustees of John Scott, tenant of Woodhouses (and a distant relative). He died unmarried, leaving Ashtrees to his nephew, Dr. James Robson, and Riccalton to his nephew, John Elliot (2nd son of his sister Helen). He may be the Scott of Riccalton recorded as owner of Middles Knowes in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874. John (b.1787/8) born in Southdean Parish, he was an agricultural labourer at Hayknowe in 1841. In 1851 he was a retired shepherd at Elliotfield and in 1861 at Wauchope Burn, along with his wife Margaret from Jedburgh. He married Margaret Turnbull in 1818 and their children included: Elizabeth (b.1819/20), who married shepherd Alexander Burnet; Ann (b.c.1828); Adam (b.1829/30), shepherd at Shankendshiel; Agnes (b.c.1842); and Jessie (b.1836/7). John (b.1787/8) proprietor of Timpendean in the 19th century. He was listed there among the entry of the Jedburgh area in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 he was farming 700 acres and employed 18 labourers. It is said that he and his sons were instrumental in changing the way farming was done locally, turning hill farms into half-arable farms. His wife was Agnes and their children included William (who succeeded to Timpendean) and George. John (b.1788/9) farmer at Longrow in Castleton Parish. In 1851 he was farmer of 260 acres there. His wife was Jane and their children included Archibald, Mary, Thomas, Jane, Elizabeth, Ann, Helen and John. John (b.1788/9) from Canonbie, he was an innkeeper in Newcastle. In 1841 he was farmer at Langraw and in 1851 was farming 260 acres there (‘ worked by family’). He kept the Commercial Inn in the 1860s (the same as the Liddesdale Hotel on Douglas Square). His wife was Jane G. (from Bewscombe) and their children included: Archibald (b.c.1830); Hector (1831/2–1909); Mary (b.c.1833); Thomas (b.c.1834); Jane (1836/7–1908); Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’, b.c.1836); Ann (1839/40–88); Hannah (b.c.1838); Helen (1841/2–1919); and John (1842/3–1906). Some of the family are buried in Ettrick Cemetery. John Sibbald (1789–1864) eldest son of Henry, farmer at Deloraine and Agnes Sibbald. He was tenant at Over Deloraine. In 1822 he married Christian, daughter of Alexander Scott, tenant in Ladhope. Their children were: Henry Ale, tenant in Gilmanscleuch; Alexander, tenant in Ransaycleuch; Charles, tenant in Over Whitlaw; John, who succeeded his father in Deloraine; Arbuthnot; Agnes, who married James Gibson of Shaws; and Christian, who married T. Ballan-tyne of Whithope. Col. John of Woll (b.1790) youngest surviving son of Charles of Woll. He was ‘ of Ravenswood’ before the death of his brother Charles Balfour in 1838, and the relinquishing of Woll by his nephew Charles Scott-Plummer. He thus gained Woll in 1839, and sold the estate in 1863 to a Mr. Ainslie. He was recorded at Woll in 1841, along with his wife, 2 daughters, a governess and 3 other domestic servants; he was then ‘ late E. I. Compys. Service Pen’. He married Clementina Marianne, daughter of Edward Shaw. They had 2 daughters: Clementina (b.1829), who married John Henry Durbin; and Elizabeth (b.1831), who died in 1883. John of Gala (1790–1840) only son of Col. Hugh, he was 9th Laird. He became one of Sir Walter Scott’s closest friends. He was suspected of being involved in getting the Galashiels men to switch sides at the Carterhaugh Baa in 1815. He was a Commissioner of Selkirkshire in 1819. In 1820 he married Magdalen, daughter of Sir Archibald Hope of Craighall and Pinkie. Their children were: Maj. Hugh, who succeeded; Capt. Archibald (1827–70), who died without issue; Elizabeth; and Isabella. John (b.1791/2) son of John, with his mother being a Deans. He was miller at Hummelknowes Mill, like his father before him. He was recorded as miller at ‘Hubkknows’ in 1851, with his brother Walter as farmer. He was still listed as miller there in Slater’s 1852 directory. He was unmarried. Sir John of Ancrum (1798–1814) son of Sir John, he was 6th Baronet, but only briefly. He was born at Athlone, while his father was serving there with the Roxburgh Cavalry. He joined the Navy and died on board H.M.S. Rhine at age 16, having succeeded his father only 2 years earlier. However, he was still listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819. He was succeeded by his brother William. John (b.1795) youngest son of William, farmer at Single, and Margaret Pott. He became a physician in Edinburgh and is referred to in glowing terms in Riddell-Carr’s ‘Border Memories’. He had one son, William Henry, also a physician, who died aged 24. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Margaret Aitchison and their children included: Sarah (b.1819); John (b.1821); Walter (b.1823); and William (b.1825). John (b.1796/7) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1841 he was an agricultural labourer at Nook Haugh and in 1851 and 1861 was a road contractor at Whinfield. He married Catherine (or Christine or ‘Christy’, b.1794/5) Nichol and their children included: Janet (b.1821); and John (b.1825), perhaps the shepherd at Bowknoke who was later a grocer in Selkirk. John (b.c.1795) farmer at Martin’s House, where he is recorded in 1841. He is surely related to William and John, who were recorded as farmers there in 1797. He could be the John born to James in Cavers Parish in 1792. John (b.c.1795) joiner at Riddell. He was living at Riddell East Lodge in 1841 and 1851. His wife was Margaret (or Mary) and their children included Margaret, Francis, Andrew, John and George. John (b.1797/8) resident of Dearnburnhaugh. He was recorded as an agricultural labourer there in 1841 and 1851, and in 1861 was at Hoscote. He married Ann Henderson in 1830 and their children included Janet (b.1832), Mary (b.1834), Jane (b.1839), George (b.1842) and Francis (b.1844). John (b.1799/1800) from Lilliesleaf Parish. In 1851 he was a farm steward, living at West Nisbet farm in Craigh Parish. His wife was Ann and their children included Walter, Isobel and Robert. John (1799/1800–1872) son of a shepherd at Cauldsdie in Liddesdale, where he was born. He worked as a shepherd in Castleton Parish, living at Mereburnhead (near Canonbie), and later feuded land in Newcastleton. He was a keen Free Kirk supporter there. In 1861 he was at 35 South Hermitage Street. He married Margaret Murray, daughter of the tenant farmer at Whisgills (probably Thomas); she died in 1861, aged 61. They had 4 sons and 2 daughters, including: John (1819–32); Archie; Thomas; David (1828/9–1911); Janet (1830–32); and Janet (again, b.1834/5). His grandsons farmed at Wolfehopelee. John (b.c.1805) flesher on the High Street, recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 he was living at about 6 High Street, along with Charlotte, possibly his sister. John (b.1805/6) from Jedburgh, he was farmer at Harwood on Teviot. He was there in 1851, farming 750 acres. He was unmarried. John of Teviot Bank and Rodone (1809–67), W.S., son of William. His grandfather was John and his great-grandfather William of Woll. He trained as a lawyer, being apprenticed to Gilbert Laurie Finlay. He became Writer to the Signet in 1832. He became a Roxburghshire J.P. and was also a member of the Jedforest Club. He succeeded to Teviot Bank and sold it in 1854 to Agnes Scott, widow of his uncle James Scott of Ellem. He purchased the lands of Riskenhope from George Pott of Dod and Chapelpoke from John Gray Henderson of Abbotrule, these being on the banks of St. Mary’s. He renamed the land Rodono, after the ancient barony there, and built a mansion house, but died before it was completed. In 1863 he presented the household expense book of Mrs. Bennet of Chesters to the Museum, along. with manuscripts of Rev. Hardie of Ashkirk’s sermons, a letter from Rev. Thomas Boston and a stirrup-cup used by Turnbull of Knowe. In 1850 he married Anne, 2nd daughter of Henry Singleton of Belpatrick, County Louth. They had no family. He was compiling a history of the Scotts of Woll and others when he died, entitled ‘A Genealogical Memoir of the Scotts of Thirlestane with Genealogical Notes of other Families of the Name of Scott’; three typed copies of the extensive manuscript are lodged in libraries. They are valuable sources of information gathered together on branches of the Scott family through the 14th, 15th and 16th centuries. He died in Marienburg, Czech Republic, where his widow had a church erected in his memory in 1879. His wife died in 1891. There is a portrait of him by John Watson Gordon in the collection of the Society of Writers to Her Majesty’s Signet.

John Young (b.1806) youngest son of Charlie of the Crescent, he was uncle of Sir James A.H. Murray. His father sought a position for him with the excise, and got the support of Scott of Harden, claiming that they were distantly related. He claimed to be 2nd cousin of Lady Ogilvy, who was also called the Duchess of Airlie; this supports the family claim that his great-grandfather had married a daughter of Charles Ogilvy. He may have moved to Argyll for a while. He married Catherine Watson and their children were: Agnes, who married Richard Johnson, bank clerk in Liverpool; George, bank clerk in Edinburgh; and 3 other children who went to Australia. After his wife died he moved to Essendon, with his niece, Mrs. John Douglas, keeping house for him. John Young (1806/7–80) son of John and Janet Young. He was manager of the Hawick Gas Works at the Common Haugh from at least 1838 until 1851 and was then miller of Hawick Mill. He was still listed as manager of the gas works in Slater’s 1852 directory. He also farmed, and lived at Slitrig Crescent. He was noted for helping during the cholera outbreak of 1849. The Caledonian Mercury of 1838 reported that he ‘has now in his possession a stalk of oats fully seven feet long, bearing one hundred and ninety four ears or pickles’. He married Mina, daughter of another John Scott (b.1792) and Isabel Michie. Their children included Isabella, John Young, William, Jessie, Thomas, James, Helen and Agnes. He may also be the same ‘J.Y.’ who was on the Town Council and of whom a portrait exists. Lord John (1809–60) see John Douglas Montagu-Douglas-Scott.

John of Synton (19th C.) see John Corse Scott. John (b.c.1800) cooper in Lilliesleaf. He was living on Main Street in 1841. He married Agnes, daughter of weaver John Gillon, and their children included: Isabel (b.1831); Hannah (b.1833); Agnes (b.1835); and Elizabeth (b.1839). John (b.c.1800) hedger in Lilliesleaf Parish. He was unmarried and living at Linthill West Lodge in 1841, 1851 and 1861, with his sister Betty. John (19th C.) from Ashkirk Parish, he was an agricultural labourer in Lilliesleaf Parish. In 1851 he was living at Bevilchill Avenuefoot and in 1861 was a hedger at Netheraw Cottage. He married Helen Burton and their children included: James (b.1842); Elizabeth (b.1844); Walter (b.1845); Mary (b.1848); John (b.1850); Henry (b.1852); and Adam Gourlay (b.1853). John (1814–56) son of Charles and Margaret Douglas, he was born in Lilliesleaf. The family emigrated to Ontario when he was about 20 years old. He became a doctor and settled in the town of Berlin, Ontario. Some of his letters back to his family in Scotland are preserved in the Scottish Record Office. He died in Kitchener, Ontario. John (19th C.) Treasurer and Secretary of Liddesdale Curling Club in the 1860s. He is probably the same as one of the Johns who lived in Newcastleton at the time. John (b.1824/5) son of Walter, farmer at Stintieknowe. He was born at Stobs Woodfoot, where his grandfather was gamekeeper. He lived at Northhouse Haugh for 11 years, then worked as a roadman, living at Castleweary for 40 years. He was a friend of Henry Scott Riddell, who lived nearby. For a while he had charge of the coach horses when Castleweary was used for changing horses. In 1845 he married Ann (1827–1909), daughter of William Fulton, Governor of Hawick Prison. They had 7 children, including Margaret Cairns (b.1846), Walter (b.1848), Isabella (b.1851), Robina Young (b.1853), William (b.1860), Ann (b.1862) and John (b.1862). His son succeeded him as roadman in Teviothead. After retirement the couple moved to Hawick, where they lived at 5 Garfield Street. In 1895 they celebrated their golden wedding anniversary, receiving many gifts and in 1905 celebrated their diamond wedding anniversary. He was still tending to Dr. Hamilton’s sheep in the Wellogate in his 79th year. John (b.c.1825) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He was an agricultural labourer at Bowknoe in 1851 and was a grocer in Selkirk in 1861. He married Margaret Kennedy, who was from Wilton Parish. Their children included John (b.1849), Margaret (b.1851), Christina (b.1853), Christina Thomas K. (b.1856/7); and Mary (b.1859/60). John (b.1825/6) born in Ancrum Parish, he was a ploughman living at Greenhouse Cottage in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1861. He married Isabella Pringle and their children included Helen, Thomas P., Elizabeth and Margaret. John ‘Johnnie the Gover’ (1828–c.1889) tweed designer in Hawick who emigrated to America. He was Cornet in 1853 and returned to Hawick for the 1881 Common Riding. He could be ‘the Gover’ who was recorded winning foot races at the Common Riding of 1862, like he had done many times in the past. He was Chairman of the Race Committee and Steward at the Races (e.g. in 1873), as well as being a Town Councillor. In 1887 he wrote an account of his early memories of the Common Riding for the Hawick Express. His nickname reportedly came from his father’s penchant for using the word ‘gover’ (meaning a stupid or aimless person). In 1861 he was an unmarried ‘Tweed Foreman’ living at 5 Teviot Crescent with his aunt Margaret Scott as his housekeeper, and also his young cousin Charlotte. He was probably the John, son of James, born in Wilton Parish – ‘Kiny Sticke and Daavid Garland, London Laidlaw and Little Dan, Johnny the Gover (in a far land), And Wat the Drummer leads the van’ [HI]. John (1831–86) son of William and Mary Scott, who lived at Synton. He was born in Yarrow Parish. In 1851 he was a thatcher, son of widow Mary, living at Adderstone, Upper Village and the High Street. Their daughter was Georgina (b.c.1858). John’s children included: Adam (1874–1954), who was also a mason. John (b.1832/3) farmer at Harwood on Teviot, he was born in Oxnam Parish. He was described in 1861 as ‘Farmer’s Son Manager’ and widower. He may be related to the man of the same name who was farmer at Harwood in 1851. John (b.1835/6) born in Hawick, he was a skinner in Duns in 1861. In 1860 he married Charlotte (c.1835–1925), daughter of Hawick shoemaker Adam Kersel. Their children included James (b.c.1860). John (b.1837/8) draper in Newcastle. In 1861 he was based at about 3 Douglas Square and employing 5 men. He lived with his sister Elizabeth. John (19th C.) Song-Singer at the 1875 Common Riding, where it was said he had 20 years of experience. John Douglas see John Douglas Montagu-Douglas-Scott. John (1832/3–88) tweed finisher who lived at 18 Bourtree Place. His parents were farmer Thomas and Nancy Leithead. He married Margaret Murray, who died in 1889, aged 53. Their children included Thomas and Annie (who died at Balbriggan). John (19th C.) known as ‘Jock the Sweep’, Sheriff Officer in the 1840s. John (1836–80) well-known botanist and horticulturist, brought up in Denholm. Son of a farmer, he was orphaned at the age of 4 and brought up by an aunt. He attended Minto School under Mr. Hamilton. Encouraged by his cousin Rev. James Duncan, he won many prizes in local flower shows as a boy. He became a gardener at the Royal Botanical Gardeens in Edinburgh in 1859, where he experimented with hybridization and contributed to the transactions of the Botanical Society. He corresponded with Charles Darwin, as well as the great botanist Sir J.D. Hooker. He moved to Calcutta Botanic Garden in 1864. He caught an infection in Darjeeling, and returned to Edinburgh, dying in his sister’s house at Garvald. He was said to have been extremely modest and a remarkable self-taught man. John (b.c.1830) originally from Yarrow Parish, he lived in Ashkirk Parish. He was probably the thatcher, son of widow Mary, living at Dimpleknowe in 1851. He married Mary Scott in 1852 and their children, baptised in Ashkirk, were William (b.1852) and Jane (b.1854). Probably the same John was a Police Constable in Stow by 1861, with additional children Robert, John and Mary. John (b.1832) son of George and Jean, he was born in Ashkirk Parish. His father worked on farms at Synton. He was a ploughman and then worked as a railway porter and lampman. His wife was Margaret, and they lived at Burnfoot, then Adderstoneshieil, Upper Village and the High Street. Their daughter was Georgina (b.c.1858). John (1836–1900) 4th son of John, tenant in Over Deloraine and Christian Scott from Ladhope. He was descended from the Scotts of Singlie. He succeeded his father as tenant at Over Deloraine, later known as West Deloraine. He was recorded as farmer there in 1868. In 1871 he married Jane, daughter of John Thomson from Catslackburn. Their children included: John (1872–1923); James Thomson (b.1874), who lived at Dinnington, Yorkshire; William (b.1876) who married Alice Watson McCaig from Galashiels and settled in Penrith; and Andrew Thomson (b.1885), who emigrated to Manitoba, Canada, and married his cousin Jean Thomson. John Henry Francis Kinnaird of Gala (1859–1935) son of Hugh, he was the 10th Laird. He was educated at Radley College, Abingdon, Oxfordshire. He was Justice of the Peace for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire and was Deputy Lieutenant for Selkirkshire. He died unmarried and was succeeded by his nephew Henry John Alexander. John M. (19th C.) writer of some local poetry, e.g. ‘The Nicht Afore the Morn’ in 1893. Rev. John (19th/20th C.) minister at Dalkeith West, who moved to Saughtree Kirk in 1922. He stayed until 1925, when he was translated to Anwoth, Kirkcudbright. He demitted in 1931. John Rob-son (19th/20th C.) farmer at Newton (probably in Bedrule Parish). John (19th/20th C.) farmer at Kinninghall. His father and uncle were join-ers at Stobs Woodfoot. John Ross (1951– ) local man who was newspaper reporter and Hawick News editor in the 1990s. He was first on Jed-burgh Council, then a Hawick Councillor from 1985, as a Liberal, being Honorary Provost from 1999 until 2002, when he took over as Convenor of the Scottish Borders Council. However, he lost his seat to Mary Beck in 2003. Also a Justice of the Peace, he has had particular interest in transport matters. Joseph (18th C.) wright in Hawick. He was son of the tailor, probably James. He was said to be possessor of the ‘under-most house of the Miln Port’, which was carried away by the great flood of 1767. He is probably the Joseph who married Margaret Scott in 1775 (registered in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes) and whose children included: George (b.1776); Jane (b.1783); and Joseph (b.1785). Joseph (b.c.1790–bef. 1851) gun-maker and ironmonger at the Sandbed, listed on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He is also listed as a tinsmith there. In 1837 he was listed as a blacksmith and tin-plate worker on the High Street, with ‘Joseph Scott & Sons’ also being listed as ironmongers, gun-makers and tin-plate workers on the Sandbed. On the 1841 census he was at about 21 High Street and listed as a smith. His wife and daughter were still running the ironmonger’s business in 1851. However, confusingly Slater’s 1852 directory lists among the ironmongers ‘Joseph Scott & Sons’ on Teviot Square and Jane Scott on the High Street. He married Jane Veitch, apparently in Ed-inburgh in 1826. Their children included: Joseph (b.1828), who probably died young; and Eliza-beth (b.1830). He is probably the Joseph born to Joseph and Peggy in Wilton in 1785. Joseph (b.1799) born in Selkirk, son of James and Bar-bar Skirving. He was recorded in the 1851 cen-sus as a teacher of Latin, Greek and French on the Cross Wynd. In 1852 he was listed as a teacher in Punchbowl Close. Katherine of Colift (16th C.) recorded in 1540 being ‘of Colinfurd’. She acknowledged receipt of 100 merks Scots from John Cranston of that Ilk for redemption of 4 husband-lands in Denholm. It is unclear how she was re-lated to other Scotts. Janet (with no surname given) is also mentioned as the person renouncing the 4 husbandlands. Keith Stanley Malcolm, M.B.E. (b.1884) son of Joseph Rogerson and An-nie Latimer. He was from from a line of Scotts who settled in Morpeth, and were descended from Gideon, 5th son of John of Woll. He inherited Kenton Hall in Northumberland from his father, but sold it and purchased Greenwood, a small farm in Cumberland. In 1923 he published his compilation of Scott family history, called ‘Scott, 1118–1923’ (reprinted in 1969). When he was al-most done with his work he discovered the un-finished study by John of Rodono; he then in-corporated some of this information, and lodged 3 typed copies in library collections. In 1910 he married Rosina Marguerita, daughter of Cav-aler V.A. Montaldi of Forest Hall. Kenneth (1953/4– ) ‘Ken’ lawyer based in Denver, Col-orado, but frequent visitor to Hawick. He served for 12 years as an Assistant U.S. Attorney in the Department of Justice. He then spent 13 years in the Hague, where he worked as a senior prose-cutor in the International Criminal Tribunal. In 2017 he received the Mostar Peace Prize for his work investigating and litigating war crimes in the former Yugoslavia. He has also worked on cases in Somalia, the Lebanon and South Su-dan. He has been an adjunct professor at the U.S. Air Force Academy, the University of Colorado-Boulder and Regis University. He first came to Hawick in 1998 when touring to investigate his Scottish roots, staying for the Common Riding that year. Despite the fact that he never did find any direct historical link between his family and Hawick, he has returned regularly for the Com-mon Riding, as a rider and supporter. He was Callants’ Club Chief Guest in 2015. Kentigern (16th C.) recorded in 1582 as witness to a sas-sine in Hawick, involving James Jack. His fore-name is recorded as ‘Quintigern’. Lady widow of Howpasley (16th/17th C.), assisted by Jean Scott of Satchells, she presided over a Council of War at Hawick Cross in April 1615, complaining that Sir James Douglas had taken lands at Howpasley, and urging a band of supporters to kill all the sheep there. About 60 sheep were slaughtered, in an act of spectacular barbarism, described as ‘sic monstruous and unhard of crewaltie, as the lyk quhairof hes nicht bene hard amangist the wyld Irisch and savadge people’. Several of the perpetrators were subsequently hanged. She was presumably the widow of the former Laird of Howpasley, who was either Walter or his son William. Neither her first name nor her maiden name are recorded. Lawrence (13th C.) recorded as ‘Laurence Scot’ in 1272/3 when he had a letter granting safe conduct from King Edward I so he could visit ‘the threshold of St. Andrew the Apostle’. It is unclear how he might have been related to other family members. Lawrence (15th C.) recorded in 1495 as witness to a charter for Thomas Grundistone of Kingask, signed in Edinburgh. His name is recorded as ‘Laurentio Scot’. Lawrence of Harperrig and Clerkington (d.1637), J.P., son of Hew of Scotsloch. He was descended from a branch of the Scotts of Buccleuch who had moved to Ayrshire. Before 1592 he was apprenticed to Robert Scott of Knightspottie, Rector of Chancery, and became an advocate. He bought Harperrig in 1605. In 1609 he witnessed a charter for lands in Ashkirk Parish. In 1612 he was granted (the right of) the marriage of the young Walter Scott of Buccleuch. He later served the Earl on the commission to run his affairs while he was in Holland, his son William also being a commissioner. In 1618 he represented Walter of Buccleuch before the Privy Council when several men from upper Teviotdale were accused of cutting down timber at Gorrenberry. In 1620 he was witness to a charter for the Earl of Buccleuch for the lands of Goldielands. In 1634 he carried the coat of honour at the Earl’s funeral in Hawick, and his sons William and James also took part in the procession. He had a charter for Elliston in about 1622 and was granted the lands of Bavelaw in Edinburgh in 1628, Bonnington (in West Lothian) in 1629 and Clerkington in 1634. In 1633 he was appointed one of the ‘Tutors Testamentary’ to oversee the Earl of Buccleuch’s will. He may be the same advocate who was one of those representing a group of Scotts accused of slaughtering sheep at Howpasley in a trial of 1616. In 1617 he and his son-in-law James Scott were charged with assault. He represented the Earl of Buccleuch in 1628 when he accused a number of Hawick men of cutting down trees on his land. He married Elizabeth, daughter of William Pringle from Edinburgh. His children were: Sir William of Clerkington, who was one of the Lords of Session; James of Bonnington (in West Lothian); Lawrence of Bavelaw; Marion, who married James Scott of Vogrie, uncle to Sir John Scott of Scotstarvit; Margaret, who married William Wallace of Shewalton; Agnes, married Patrick Kinloch; Joanna, married James Clerk; and Alison, married Peter Houston. His widow Bessie was recorded in a deed of 1663. Lawrence of Bavelaw (d.c.1670) 3rd son of Lawrence of Harperrig. He seems to be sometimes referred to as ‘Lancelot’. In 1650 he was named as one of the ‘tutors’ for the children of Francis Earl of Buccleuch in his will and also served as one of the ‘tutors testamentars’ for the will of Francis. He was a Chamberlain to Scott of Buccleuch 1658–59 and listed in 1661 as still owing money for the rentals for these years. He witnessed the marriage contract of Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch in 1663. He married Katherine Binning (who is recorded as his widow in 1673). The couple were granted the Barony of Corstophine by Oliver Cromwell. His son Lawrence of Bavelaw was served as his heir in 1670. He also had a son, Charles, who was served heir to his brother William of Bavelaw in 1691. Lawrence (17th C.) witnessed a baptism in Ashkirk Parish in 1651 for Patrick Howburn. Leticia (13th C.) recorded as surname ‘Scot’ in 1272, when she gave half a mark to have a writ ‘ad terminum’ at Westminster. Lilias (17th C.) daughter of Jean, who was sister of the last Walter of Crumhaugh (although these generations are quite uncertain). She married William Knox, servant to George, Lord Ross. She inherited parts of the Goldielands and Crumhaugh estates from her uncle Walter (along with her cousin Robert Scott of Glack). But these passed to another relative, Walter of Crumhaugh, in the early 1670s. Lilias (b.1835) daughter of Francis Napier and Janet Oliver. She married spinner Adam Murray and they emigrated to Canada, living in Ontario. They had a daughter, Jessie Murray Scott (b.1857), perhaps before they were married. They had a daughter Annie who married William Roper (son of William Roper from Massachusetts and Ann, daughter of Robert Greenwood from Hawick); their daughter Annie Roper married her father’s cousin William Maxwell, a son of Grace Maxwell, who was half-sister of Ann Greenwood. They also had a son George Stevenson Murray. Lucas (d.bef. 1270) recorded in 1242 as ‘Lucas Scot mayor of Dunwich’ in pleas in the county of Norfolk, relating to sacks of Scottish wool. He was probably related to Gerald, who was also listed. He is recorded as ‘Luke the Scotsman’ in a document from the Sheriff of Norfolk and Suffolk in 1243. He is ‘Lucas le Scot’ of Dunwich in a court case in 1256 and another in 1258. He is further listed as ‘le Esco’ in a plea at Dunwich in 1258, and also as ‘les Esco’ of Dunwich in a document from Norfolk and Suffolk in 1262. His wife suffered some sort of infirmity, and there was a case against a surgeon called Reginald, whose goods they had kept when he tried to cure her; his son Richard is also mentioned. His son and heir Richard is recorded in another document in 1267/8. In 1260 he is ‘Luke the Scotsman of Dunwich’ in a case involving merchants from Hamburg. Malcolm (13th/14th C.) holder of lands in Glasgow, according to a document of about 1300. He is referred to as ‘Malcolm dicti Scotti’. Margaret (13th C.) recorded York in 1254, when she had a writ of trespass. Margaret (15th C.) tenant of half of ‘Nethir sannake’ in Galloway in 1481, when her right was assigned to John Kennedy. Margaret (15th/16th C.) wife of John and mother of Alexander. She was a widow in 1499 when the East steading of Langhope was assigned to her and her son Alexander. And in 1501 the Middle stead was assigned to the pair. Margaret (16th C.) recorded in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter of Branholme, she was possibly a Scott. The entry states that payment is due ‘to Thomas Hendrie in Selkirk, for claithe furthest to Margaret of the Wallis’. This may have either then been Woll in the Ale valley or Walls in Dryfesdale (where there were also Scotts). Margaret (d.1640) daughter of David Douglas, 7th Earl of Angus. She married Sir Walter in 1568 and had the work on Branholme Castle completed after her husband’s death in 1574; her name and initials are inscribed in the walls. In 1574 she was granted the ‘ward and non-entry’, as well as other fees due to her deceased husband, Sir Walter. She secondly married Francis Stuart, Earl of Bothwell (who was forced to flee the country and died abroad) before 1577; however, after their honeymoon the couple were not allowed to see each other because he was still very young. After this marriage she was often referred to as ‘Countess of Bothwell’. Her factor in the lands of Milstington about 1580 was James Grieve. In 1580 she complained to the Privy Council (along with James Gledstains of Cocklaw and Wat Scott of Harden) of thefts and outrages committed by the sons and nephews of Martin Elliot of Braudie and Lanie Armstrong of Whithaug; this involved her farms of Harwood, Slaidhills and Whitlaw. Additionally in 1580 her servant William ‘Dwngelsoun’ arranged for her to loan £60 Scots to Robert Scott of Alton, for the annual rent of his lands of the East Mains of Hassendeanburn. In 1581/2 she further complained against 15 thieves, who were declared rebels. She claimed ownership of estates of her husbands, including Bellendean, which had sheep stolen from them by a band of Ellots and Armstongs in 1582. When the Earl of Bothwell was accused of treason in 1592 she intercepted the King in Edinburgh, pleading for mercy for her and her husband. Also in 1592 there was a complaint by Thomas, brother of Andrew Kerr of Fernihirst, who had been granted the liferent of the lands she had been granted by her first husband and subsequently forfeited, had been denied the fees and duties by her chamberlains. She had a letter of protection from the King revoked in 1595 for misusing it, but had another given to her soon afterwards. In 1598 she is recorded in a contract with her son Sir Walter’s tenants in Kirkurd (Peeblesshire) receiving a ‘grassum’ of 33s 4d every 5 years during her lifetime. Her children included: Walter Scott of Bucchleuch; Margaret Scott, who was said to have married Robert Scott of Thirlestane (but this is probably confusion with an earlier Margaret); Mary Scott, who married William Elliot of Larriston; Francis Stewart (b.1584); John Stewart; Frederick Stewart; Henry Stewart; Elizabeth Stewart (b.1590), who married James, Master of Cranston and was mother of William Cranston, 3rd Lord Cranston; Helen Stewart, who married John Macfarlane of that Ilk; Jean Stewart, who married Robert Elliot of Redheugh; and Margaret Stewart, who married Alan, 5th Lord Cathcart. She lived to a great old age and is buried at Eckford. Margaret (16th/17th C.) wife of Walter of Burnfoot. She was tried at Edinburgh in 1620 for assaulting James ‘Lethame’ in 1616 in Hawick Parish Church. She is specifically said to have ‘in the verie tyme of divyne service’ struck him ‘with ane mekle gite kev of twa pund wecht in hir hand’, making his head bleed within the church. Later, she was accused of assaulting James on the High Street, along with 7 accomplices, armed ‘with lanceis, staufflis, swerdis, long kentis or grite treis’, again wounding him in the head and giving his wife ‘mony bauch and bla striakis’. Lastly she was accused of leading a group to James’ house to attack him and his wife. Not appearing before the Privy Council she was denounced as a rebel. She later complained about not being informed that she should appear and after finding caution was ordered to pay James Lethem a fine of 10 merks. The origin of this dispute is not described. Presumably her own surname was also Scott, but it is unclear from what branch of the family she came. Margaret ‘Maggy Fendy’ (16th/17th C.) daughter of Walter of Harden and Mary, ‘the Flower of Yarrow’. She married Gilbert Elliott of Stobs and Horsleyhill, ‘Gibbie o the Gowden Garters’ and their son William succeeded to Stobs. In 1643 she is recorded as mother of William when she was liferenter of lands in Kirkton Parish valued at £666 13s 4d. She may also have been the ‘Mar. Scott, gudewife of Horsliehill’ who owned £637, also in 1643. Margaret (b.c.1600) only daughter of ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden and his 2nd wife, Margaret, daughter of John Edgar of Wedderlie, widow of William Spottiswoode of that Ilk. She married David Pringle, heir apparent of Galashiels and in 1625 secondly married Sir William McDougall of Makerstoun. The marriage contract with her brother Sir William suggested that she was still a minor in 1623. She received ‘annualrent’ of Makerstoun as part of the contract in 1625 and in 1632 renounced her right to the demesne lands of Smallholm to Sir James Pringle of Galashiels. Margaret (16th/17th C.) mother-in-law of Francis of Castleside. Francis’ wife appears to have been Isobel, and so would have been her daughter. In 1639 there is a dispute in the Ashkirk Parish records between her and her son, apparently over access to the family seat in the Kirk. She claimed Francis had ‘maliciously and unrespectfully ractt and ruggit her from her said seat’, while he claimed she had called him ‘thief and traitour’. The precise nature of the dispute is not clear. However, she is referred to as ‘sometime in Castleside’. The resolution was that she ‘would hear no reason’ and so was charged to appear before the Selkirk Presbytery. The fact that she was referred to as ‘of Castleside’ herself suggests that she was Margaret, daughter of George of Castleside, who was served heir to her father, along with their 2 sisters Janet and Bessie, in 1632. Margaret (17th C.) owner of the lands of Broadlee in Ashkirk Parish in 1643. She is recorded as ‘Mar. Scott for Braidlies’, valued at £160. Probably the same ‘Goodwife of braidlie’ paid tax on £160 in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. She was presumably widow of the former Laird of Broadlee. It is also possible that she was the same Margaret as the mother-in-law of Francis of Castleside. Margaret (d.1672) daughter of William of Chamberlain Newton, and also related to the Scotts of Brieryard. She married Thomas Elliot in Borthwickshiel and had at least 5 children, including William Elliot, 1st Laird of Borthwickbrae. She may be the ‘Mariota’, daughter of William of Chamberlain Newton, who was served heir to her father’s brother Simon in 1643. Margaret (17th C.) daughter of Robert of Whitslade. In 1647 she was served heir to her father’s lands of Ettrickhouse, Bowerhope and Dalgleish, all of which were contained in the Barony of Synton by annexation. Margaret (17th C.) one of the daughters of Robert of Alton. In 1653 she and her sisters Bessie and Agnes were served heirs to their ‘foir grandshers’ (probably great-grandfather) Robert in half of the East Mains of Hassendean. Margaret (17th C.) recorded in 1676 as ‘goodwife of Coudhouse’, i.e. wife of Scott of Coldhouse (although her husband’s name is unrecorded). James Henderson was found guilty of giving her ‘a blow for against the heart’. It is possible she is the same woman as Marie of Coldhouse, recorded in 1663. Margaret (17th C.) resident of ‘Crawknow’ in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor’. Margaret (17th C.) resident at Doecleuch according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. She is recorded as ‘Margrat Scott in Brugh’, suggesting that she was perhaps widow of a Scott who had farmed at nearby Brugh. Margaret (17th/18th C.) wife of James, who farmed at Borthaugh in the early 1690s. In 1696 and 1698 she herself was renting 1/4 of Borthaugh and was then a widow. Her cautioners were Adam and Walter, farmers at Overhall, who were probably closely related. Margaret (17th/18th C.) recorded receiving money from Ashkirk Parish in 1727. Margaret (d.c.1782) widow who had her will proved at the Prerogative Court of Canterbury in 1783. Her surname is listed as ‘Scott alias Brown’ and she was from Hawick, Roxburghshire. It is unclear if Scott was her maiden or married name. Her daughter could be the Margaret baptised in 1781 when her daughter Margaret died in Hawick and was then a widow. Her nickname seems self-explanatory. It is unclear if Scott was her maiden or married name. Her daughter could be the Margaret baptised in Hawick in 1773, with no parents names given. Margaret (18th C.) housemaid at Braucholme in 1789 when she was working for Adam Ogilvie. Margaret (d.1815) daughter of Robert of Burnhead. In 1786 she married Rev. Samuel Charters of Wilton. She succeeded her brother to Burnhead following his death in 1795. She died without issue and was in turn succeeded by her cousin.
William Watson. Margaret ‘Peggy’ nee Anderson (b.c.1780) possibly the daughter of Michael Anderson born in Roberton Parish in 1770, she married Thomas Scott and lived at Deanburnhaugh. She lived to an old age and was said to have at least 300 descendants by the 1930s. She was described as being ‘everybody’s body. Whenever trouble or stress prevailed she was always ready to do and to dare for the sake of others’. She had at least 8 children in the period 1799–1819. In 1841 she was recorded living in Deanburnhaugh with her younger son Robert, together with James (probably her grandchild) and young teacher Thomas Amos. In 1851 she was living with her son Robert, daughter Isabella and grand-daughter Isabella Rutherford. In 1861 she was living with her son Robert, granddaughter Christian Rutherford and great-grand-daughter Isabella Miller. Margaret (1809–23) daughter of Rev. David of Castleton. She was listed among subscribers to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. Margaret Taylor (1848–1921) daughter of James, who was a carpenter from Roxburghshire, and perhaps from the area around Hawick. She grew up in Dundas, Ontario, attended the Toronto Normal School, and then taught at Pickering, Strathroy, Brantford and Ottawa. She was headmistress of the Toronto Model School and then the Toronto Presbyterian Ladies’ College. However, in 1903 she set up her own school in Toronto, which she called ‘Branksome Hall’, probably after the fictional castle of Sir Walter Scott’s ‘ Lay of the Last Minstrel’, rather than the real castle of Braxholm. The name was suggested by Alexander MacMillan. She moved to Vancouver because of ill health, and died there. She was survived by brothers James and William (superintendent of emigration in Ottawa), and sisters Mrs. Conklin, Elizabeth and Jean. Maria see Mary, Countess of Buccleuch. Marie (17th C.) liferenter of Coldhouse in the 1643 county valuation, when her lands were valued at £40. Probably the same Marie was recorded as owner of lands in Hawick valued at £3. She was probably widow of the former Laird of Coldhouse (perhaps Peter, recorded being ‘of Cowdhome’ in 1654). It is possible that she was the Marie (or Mary), sister of Robert Scott of Hartwoodmyres, who married Walter of Howford (who was connected to the Coldhouse family) in 1615. She may be the ‘goodwife of Couthouse’ recorded in 1676. William of Coldhouse held these same lands in 1678 and seems likely to have been her son. Marion (17th C.) daughter of William of Finlando. She married William Wilson ‘in Gulzeaneflat’. In 1662 she was served heir to her brother Walter of Howpasley. However, Howplasy passed shortly thereafter to Walter, son of her cousin Patrick of Tanlawhill. Marion Adamson (1886–1963) daughter of Peter, founder of Pesco’s. When her father died she took over the house Norwood. She never married. Mark (17th/18th C.) recorded as drummer in Selkirk in 1708. He was given a salary in that year, including 3 pairs of shoes. Martin (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘ Martinus Scot’ in the Exchequer Rolls of 1501. Along with ‘Willlemus Unys’ he had his fine in Roxburghshire compounded. It is unclear which branch of the Scotts he came from. Mary (16th C.) called ‘the Flower of Yarrow’, popularised in the ballad of the same name. She was said to be the daughter of Philip Scott of Dryhope Tower and renowned for her beauty; in fact she was probably sister of Philip, and 2nd daughter of John of Dryhope, but presumably tales of her beauty had real foundation. In 1576 she married Walter Scott of Harden (‘ Auld Wat’, the marriage contract still exists) and bore 4 sons and 6 daughters. She is there referred to as ‘ Marion’, and was to be infert in liferent in the lands of Mabonlaw as part of the contract, with Harden to pay to Dryhope 400 merks Scots. She is said to have served him his spurs when the larders were empty. Mary (16th/17th C.) wife of Simon of Bonnington. It is unclear if she was also a Scott. In 1617 she is ‘Marie Scott, Lady Bonynoun’ when she complained to the Privy Council about the actions of the Scotts of Harden and others. She stated that she had several children, with only a son surviving (presumably Robert) who died at the age of 19 following injuries sustained through an attack by William Riddell, miller in Todrig Mill, who was supported by Walter Scott of Harden. She further complained that she and her grandchildren were attacked at their house at Newhouse (probably the place near Ettrickbridge), with the walls being undermined and collapsing, with the occupants narrowly escaping, then her nurse being assaulted, some of the small children being trampled underfoot by the assailants and her only milk cow having its udder deliberately injured. Later a larger group of Scotts ‘ all bodin in feir of weir, with swerdis, gantillatis, plaitslevis, and utheris wappomis invasive’ demanded the keys to their tower of Newhouse and ousted them. without their belongings in the middle of winter. They also forbade any of the 16 mills in Ettrick Forest from grinding her corn, only to be saved by Sir Robert Scott of Traquair offering his mill. She further complained that she still held the lieren of her husband’s lands, and hence the Scotts of Harden should not be allowed to take her crops, with her having no means of livelihood or house for her grandchildren. She appeared personally before the Privy Council, but it was found that she had failed to prove the charges.

Mary (1647–1661) Countess of Buccleuch, she succeeded her father, Francis, the 2nd Earl, at age 4, being served heir to all the lands and titles of the Scotts of Buccleuch, including the half Barony of Wilton, the Barony of Chamberlain Newton, the Lordship of Liddesdale, etc. She was also referred to as ‘Maria’ or ‘Marie’. Her tutors and trustees were Sir John Scott of Scottstarvit, Sir William Scott of Clerkington, Sir William Scott of Harden, Sir William Scott younger of Harden, Sir Gilbert Elliot of Stobs, Gideon Scott of Highchester, John Scott of Gorrenberry, Patrick Scott of Thirlestane, Lawrence Scott of Bavelaw and Patrick Scott of Langshaw. There were disputes between the ‘Lothian tutors’ and the ‘South Country tutors’, as well as between Gideon Scott of Highchester and John Hay, Earl of Tweeddale (her uncle), who were trying to arrange for her marriage. There was also a great power struggle between her mother, Countess of Wemyss, and the appointed trustees for control of her and her sister Anne; Oliver Cromwell was enlisted in support, affirming that the daughters should be entrusted to their mother. During her minority Dalkeith house was occupied by Gen. Monck. She had a huge fine of £15,000 imposed by Cromwell for her father’s support of Charles II, with the tutors pleading for a reduction in the amount. There were schemes to marry her to the sons of many noblemen, probably including Sir Andrew Ker of Greenhead, Lord Robert Kerr, a son of the Earl of Tweeddale, the son of Scott of Scottshall in Kent and the son of John Scott of Gorrenberry. She was in fact married in secrecy to Walter, eldest son of Sir Gideon Scott of Highchesters, when she was 11 years of age (and he was 14), although there was an attempt to annul the marriage until she was at least 12! However, Cromwell died in this period, which complicated the legal challenges, although there continued to be machinations to control her future and that of her sister. She was never in good health, being regularly attended by doctors (who probably did more harm than good), with an arm infection that refused to heal. She went to London for the curing power of the King’s touch, but the journey probably made her condition worse and then she caught measles on her return to Scotland. She died at the age of 13. The power struggles continued, with the last revision to her will giving family control to the Earls of Rothes and Wemyss, freezing out Sir Gideon of Highchester and her husband Walter of Tarras. She was succeeded by her sister Anne (or Anna) and was buried at Dalkeith. She was recorded in several deeds in 1663, although already deceased by then. Mary (17th/18th C.) sister and heiress of John of Headshaw. In 1681 she married Patrick Porteous, Burgess of Peebles. She succeeded to the estate of Headshaw in 1691, there being no male heirs. This included Headshaw Mill and Dryden, as well as Crawknow and Clews. In 1696 she and her husband sold Headshaw to Sir Gilbert Elliot. She was involved in an ‘action of relief’ with Anna, Duchess of Buccleuch in 1713. Her daughter Henrietta married Michael Anderson of Tushielaw. She is also referred to as ‘Marie’. Mary Lillias (d.1790) eldest daughter of John of Harden. She was sometimes known as the ‘Flower of Yarrow’, like her ancestor namesake. There was a portrait of her by Allan Ramsay, which hung in Hamilton Palace (transferred to Mertoun House), painted it is said for the Duke of Hamilton who was infatuated with her, although she was attached to the 2nd son of Scott of Scotstavert (who died, and she never married). She is also said to have had the song ‘Tweedside’ written about her, particularly the lines ‘What beauties does Flora disclose! How sweet are her smiles upon Tweed! Yet Mary’s still sweeter than those; Both nature and fancy exceed’. Mary ‘Floor o Rankleburn’ (18th/19th C.) married Thomas Smith, farmer at Hartshaugh Mill. Her nickname came from her good looks, the story being that a gentleman visiting her father’s house asked for her name, and said that since there was a Mary Scott ‘Flower of Yarrow’, she should be the ‘Flower of Rankleburn’. Her daughter Mary married Robert Purdom. She also had several other children, including Peter, Patrick, Robert, Archibald, Thomas, Andrew, Margaret and Jane. Mary (18th C.) chambermaid at Langlands in 1786, when she was working for Gilbert Elliot. Mary (b.1808/9) from Selkirk, she was school mistress at Deanburnhaugh. She is recorded there on the 1851 census. Matthew (12th/13th C.) recorded as ‘Master Matthew de

Scotia’ in Paris in 1218. He was King’s Chancellor in 1228 when he was elected as Bishop of Aberdeen, although he resigned this in favour of Dunkeld. He may have died in 1230 before becoming Bishop. He may be the same Matthew as the Archdeacon of Cleveland. Matthew (13th C.) listed as ‘Matthæus le Scot’ along with Walter and Adam from Chillingham for robbing a house in the area of Hebburn and Linewmouth. Matthew of Belstanerig (16th C.) mentioned in 1586/7 when his brother Alexander was listed among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. Matthew (17th C.) recorded in 1579/80 as ‘Mathew if the bent in Tuchellaw’. He promised to pay John Brydon, bridlemaker in Selkirk for an unspecified reason. Matthew (16th/17th C.) listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605. He was recorded as ‘Mathou Scott, called Broid of Steill’, and was probably associated with the lands of the Steele. Michael (c.1175–c.1234) sometimes called ‘the Border Wizard’. Tradition-ally his birth and death have been placed in the Borders, although there is no evidence for this. He was possibly Michael, who was second son of Richard, and grandson of Uchtred. He held lands in Fife and flourished in the reign of William I, and his descendants are the Scotts of Balwea-rie, as well as the Scotts of Ancrum. He studied in Oxford and Durham, then travelled widely around Europe, serving as court astronomer and physician (or astrologer and alchemist) to Holy Roman Emperor Frederick II. He is recorded in Toldeo, Spain, in 1217 and was also in Italy. He had a licence for 2 cures in Scotland, as well as the Archbishopric of Cashel in Ireland, which he resigned by 1224. He had another licence to hold a cure in England and 2 in Scotland in 1225. He translated many important works from Arabic into Latin, thus reintroducing Aristotelian ideas to the western world. Legends of his supernatural powers abound (popularised in Dante, Boccaccio and Sir Walter Scott), and few hard facts are known about his life. He is supposed to have helped bring the infant Maid of Norway to claim the Scottish throne in 1290, when in his 70s, although this may have been a later Michael of Balwearie. He is also said to be buried in Melrose Abbey along with a ‘mighty book’ of necromancy, although others suggest he was buried at Home Coltrame in Cumberland. He is said to have caused the Eildons to be split into 3 and the local belief in his magical powers continued for centuries after his death. It may be that more than one man’s life is being compounded here. The Michael who held lands in Fife married Margaret, daughter of Duncan Syras of that ilk and was succeeded by his son Duncan – ‘The black spae-book from his breast he took, Impressed with many a warlock spell: And the book it was wrote by Michael Scott, Who held in awe the fiends of hell’ [JL]. In these far climes it was my lot To meet the wondrous Michael Scot’ [SW] ‘And here, though history tells it not, Has crossed the wizard, Michael Scott’ [WNK] (often written ‘Scot’). J. Wood Brown wrote ‘An enquiry into the life and legends of Michael Scot’ (1897), Lynn Thorndike wrote ‘Michael Scot’ (1965) and Tom Hubbard wrote ‘Michael Scot: myth and poly-math’ (2006). Michael (13th C.) along with his wife made a grant of Gask (in Fife) to Dunfermline Abbey sometime before 1231. He is referred to as Michael Scot ‘of the Kingdom of Scotland’ when he made a grant for income from lands in Fife. He was witnessed another couple of grants from Fife in about 1230 and 1231. He could be the Michael, son of Malothen, recorded in 1231. His wife was Margaret, daughter of Duncan of Ceres and his heir was Duncan. He had another son, John. His wife was a widow in the period 1238–50 when she confirmed the grant of Gask. He was surely associated with the Balwearie family, but the details are uncertain; in particular he appears to be contemporary with Michael ‘the wizard’ of Balwearie. Sir Michael of Balwearie (13th C.) son of Duncan and probably great-grandson of the first Richard. He was knighted by Alexander II. He married the daughter and heiress of Sir Richard Balwearie, and so came into possession of Balwearie in Fife, which the family held for another 13 generations, ending with Col. Walter of Balwearie, who died in Flanders in the reign of Charles II. He may be the Michael who paid homage to Edward I in 1291, and was succeeded by his son, also Sir Michael, who swore fealty to Edward I in 1295/6. His seal bore a chevron with 3 lion’s heads, with a crescent on each side of the shield, and the words ‘S’ MICHAELIS SCOTTI MILITIS’; this may be the earliest seal known for the Scott family. His wife Mary is recorded as wife of a prisoner held in England in 1296. Michael (13th C.) from Linlithgowshire, he paid homage to Edward I in 1296, and is presumably separate from Sir Michael of Balwearie. Sir Michael of Balwearie (13th/14th C.) son of Sir Michael. He is recorded at Kinghorn in 1291 and signed the Ragan Rolls of 1295/6, where he is ‘Sir Michael Scot of Fife'; his seal bore a chevron between 3 lion’s heads. He was recorded in 1294 among holders of the lands of the Earldom of Fife. He was taken prisoner at Dunbar and held at Wallingford Castle in England in 1296/7. He is listed in a ‘letters patent’ in 1297 promising to serve Edward I in France and elsewhere. His lands were restored by Edward I in 1297, along with those of ‘Duncan le Scot’, who was probably his son or grandson. He is listed on a roll of horses used by supporters of Edward I in 1298. He was on a jury in 1305 in Perthshire. He was succeeded by his son Sir Henry, while grandson Duncan was progenitor of the Scotts of northern Scotland and a later descendant was Andrew, progenitor of the Scotts of Ancrum. Sir Michael (bef. 1320–46) 2nd Laird of Rankilburn (Buccleuch), son of Sir Richard and an Inglis of Muthockstone (although these early generations are still a little uncertain). He may have been born at Rankleburn (the first of the Scotts of Buccleuch to be born locally). He was known as a gallant warrior, who distinguished himself at Halidon Hill in 1333, and was knighted some time previous to this. He fought in the division commanded by Archibald Douglas, Lord of Galloway, and was among the few noblemen who survived the battlefield. He also accompanied David II to the unfortunate Battle of Durham (or Neville’s Cross) where he was killed. He was succeeded by his son Robert, while his second son John is said to have been ancestor of the Scotts of Synton, Harden, Whitslade, Todrig, Raeburn, Woll, Thirlestane, etc. His daughter Jean may have married John Ainslie of Dolphinston. Nothing much else is known about him, including the name of his wife. His Christian name may have derived from the ancestor of the Scotts of Balwearie (perhaps his great-granduncle), but seems to not have been used afterwards. Michael of Aikwood (d.c.1544) son of Robert of Aikwood, who he succeeded in 1517. Robert of Bonnington was probably his brother. Their mother’s name is unknown, but his forename may have come from that side of the family. In the 1526 remission to a large number of Borderers for supporting the Homes in attacking the Earl of Arran, he is recorded as ‘Maister Mychaell Scot in Aikvood’ and ‘Thomas Scot, thare’ was also listed and perhaps his son; it seems that he was given the designation ‘maister’ because he trained for the priesthood (or possible the law), taking an M.A. He is probably the ‘Maister Mychaell Scot’ who was among the local men who had remission in 1527 for their part in the Battle of Skirmish Field. In 1528 he was ‘magistro Michaeli Scot de Aikwod’ when appointed as one of the Bailies for infesting David Scott in the lands of his father, Sir Walter of Branxholme. In about 1529 he and his son William were given half the lands of Bowhill in exchange for a sum to be used as the dowry for his niece Isabel Murray; Thomas in Aikwood was one of the witnesses. Also in 1529 he gained Isobel Murray’s lands of the west side of Kershope. He was probably one of the witnesses to the discharge from Patrick Earl of Bothwell to Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1528/9, where he is recorded as ‘Mr. Michell Scott’ just before ‘sir John Scot, notary’. In 1530 he witnessed a document for Robert Turnbull of Philiphaugh, in which Philip acted as an official. He is recorded in 1530 as ‘master’ when witness to a document in Selkirk and other documents in 1531 and 1531/2. In 1532/3 he was ‘master Michael Scott master of arts’ when involved with an inquest into the succession for the deceased John Scott of Roberton. In 1532/3 he was also witness to a request for an inquest into succession for the deceased John of Roberton. In 1533 he was ‘brother german’ to Isabel Murray (wife of Alexander Elliot) when she assigned to him her lands in Kershope; ‘instruments’ were sought at the manor of the said master Michael’. In 1533/4 he witnessed a bond between Patrick Murray of Fulahill and William Stewart of Traquair. He was ‘master Michaell Scot in Aikvd’ in 1536 when he witnessed the proclamation of a royal letter in Selkirk. Also in 1536 he purchased Hermiton ‘with the fortalice of stone and lime called the Peile in the barony of Lillesleff’ from Walter Scott of Robertson. In 1536/7 there was a complaint about him farming at Easter Bowhill. In 1538 he gave have of Hermiston to Thomas Scott in Todrig. In 1539 a loan from him to Isobel Scott (probably his sister in her second marriage, wife of Alexander Elliot) was discharged. Also in 1539 he witnessed a bond between Scotts regarding the illegitimacy of Thomas son of Adam. He was witness for an action involving Alan Mithag in 1539/40. He was one of the supporters of John Scott in 1540/1, when it was agreed that John should answer for the death of Walter Down; his sons William, Robert and Walter are also listed. According to the Exchequer Rolls he claimed the lands of Aikwood in 1541 and was also tenant in half of Bowhill, half of Huntly and the wester side of Kershope. In 1541 he bound himself to William in Bowhill (probably his son) and others, with William in Hartwoodburn as a witness.
He had a charter for the lands of ‘Aikwood’ in 1541, along with his wife Isobel Ker and son William. William was also granted Bowhill in the same document and witnesses included Thomas and Gilbert Scott, as well as Robert and William Scott. In 1541/2 he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk for Alexander and another in 1543/4 for George in Blindhaugh. He married Isabel Ker, from an unknown branch of the Kers. In 1541 he was said to have built ‘an honest mansion and tower’ at Aikwood when he obtained a new infeftment to himself and his wife, producing a charter from 1517 for Aikwood and Bowhill; his son and heir William is also mentioned. His children included: Walter who succeeded to Kershope; William, who succeeded to Bowhill; Robert, who succeeded his elder brothers; Adam, recorded in 1552; possibly Thomas, mentioned in the remission of 1526; and Elizabeth, stated to be sister of Robert in 1580, when she had a marriage contract with Robert, son of the deceased James in Whitslade. His widow secondly married Robert Scott of Wampbray. Michael of Vogrie (d.bef. 1581) recorded as already deceased in 1581 when his son Walter had a marriage contract with Marion, daughter of William Pringle in ‘Cartho’. Walter was to receive certain lands in Stow and John in Kirkhouses was a witness. Michael of Aikwood (16th C.) listed on the roll of ‘Landit Men’ in Roxburgh and Selkirk in about 1590. It is unclear who he was, since the Laird of Oakwood at that time was Robert; however, it is possible that the long deceased Michael was meant. Michael (16th/17th C.) brother of ‘Hob Scot in the Howfurd’. The pair were described as ‘suster sones’ to Walter Scott of Harden (‘Auld Wat’) in 1617 when Lady Bonnington complained that they and others came to Newhouse, where they undermined the walls, causing the house to fall, and the next night attacked a nurse of Lady Bonnington’s household. They were also said to have later ‘trampit and tred the young ones under thair feit’ and injured the udder of their only milk cow. It is unclear who his mother was, but presumably she was a sister of Auld Wat. Michael (17th C.) Chamberlain of the Earl of Buccleuch at the time of the Earl’s death in 1633. It is unclear what branch of the family he came from. Michael (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Christian Scott and their children included Margaret (b.1646) and Marion (b.1650). Michael (17th C.) son of John of Gilmanscleuch. He is recorded in a deed of 1663. Michael (17th/18th C.) Hawick merchant. He witnessed a baptism for John Scott ‘Whitheytts’ in 1700. In 1703 he was fined for drinking after the ringing of the 10 hour bell. He witnessed further baptisms in 1705 (along with Walter in Crumhaugh) for innkeeper William called ‘of Goldilands’ and in 1708 for smith James Scott (along with tailor George). In 1716 he was rebuked by the minister for ‘being extremely drunk laitlie in the street, and not capable to go to his dwelling house’: the minister told him he was a ‘most sad spectacle’, but not being previously guilty of drunkenness he was only admonished and told to mend his ways. He witnessed baptisms in 1720 for smith Thomas Huntly and for weaver Walter Douglas. He married Margaret Gledstains, and their children, baptised in Hawick Parish, included: John (b.1700); Walter (b.1702); Robert (b.1704); Margaret (b.1705); James (b.1709); and John (again, b.1712). The witnesses in 1700 were baker John Whillans and John Scott ‘Whitegates’, in 1702 were baker John Whillans and merchant Patrick Angus, in 1705 were John Scott of Whitegates ‘younger’ and merchant John Forman, in 1709 were tailor William Gledstains and baxter William Hodge and in 1712 were Bailie James Burn and shoemaker Robert Porteous. Mrs. (18th/19th C.) recorded at Stirches Mains on both the 1797 Horse Tax and Dog Tax Rolls. It is unclear who she may have been married to. Mrs. Robert (16th C.) wife of a Hawick man, mentioned in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. She is listed being owed money ‘for sum ordinar dwtie’, but what this duty might have been is unclear. Mungo (16th C.) Burgess in Edinburgh recorded in the period 1574–84. In 1574/5 he was surety for a case involving Jedburgh Abbey. He was also cautioner (along with Alexander, also a Burgess of Edinburgh) for George of Synton when he was warded in Edinburgh Castle in 1581, and also for Walter Scott of Goldielands (along with Robert, Burgess in Edinburgh and and James Gledstains of Cocklaw). There was a further caution by him and Alexander in 1581 for George of Synton and Robert of Haining ‘now in ward in Edinburgh Castle, in £1000 each’. It seems likely that he was closely related to Alexander and Robert, and probably also related to the Scotts of Goldielands and Buccleuch. In 1581/2 he acted as cautioner for Robert of Aikwood. In 1593 he was a Burgess of Edinburgh listed among the cautioners for the inhabitants of Kelso being loyal to the King. He was also involved in a bond not to harm and Edinburgh tailor in 1595. Mungo (16th/17th C.) described as ‘in Castellsyd’ (i.e. Castleside) in the records of the Circuit Court of 1623 when several local men twice gave their security for his appearance. They included Andrew Allan, John Gowanlock and James Col tart in Headshaw, John Turnbull and John Campbell in Newton and Gilbert Elliot of Brugh. It is unclear whether he was related to George and Francis of Castleside. He may be the Mungo whose children baptised in Ashkirk Parish included James (b.1631), Walter (b.1635) and John (b.1636). Perhaps the same ‘Mungna’ witnessed Ashkirk baptisms in 1651 for John White and in 1652 for James Easton and Janet Scott. Mungo (17th C.) listed as resident at Todshaw in Wilton Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Mungo (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1694 he witnessed a baptism for William Scott and Jean Scott. In 1698 he was recorded as servant of the Laird of Bewlie. He married Helen Rae and their children included William (b.1698), Thomas (b.1703) and Walter (b.1708). He may be the Mungo, born to James and Agnes Stewart in 1658. Mungo (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Mary Dryden and their children included Janet (b.1772) and Thomas (b.1774). The witnesses in 1772 were the whole congregation and in 1774 included Bailie Elliot. Nelly (b.1768) and Elizabeth (b.1769) were probably also his children. Mungo (b.c.1780) hand-loom weaver in Roberton Parish. In 1841 he is listed at ‘Make Shift’ somewhere near Broadlee or Milsington. He was from out of the county and living with Jane, probably his wife. He could be the Mungo who married Jean Scott in Wilton Parish in 1813. Mungo (18th/19th C.) blacksmith at the Sandbed, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. Nell ‘Nelly the King’ (19th C.) sister of ‘Andrew the King’, and also known as a simple-minded soul. Her first could be a short form of ‘Helen’. She may have been born in 1798. Nichol (15th C.) recorded in 1456/7 as witness to the sasine for Ewesdale passing from Robert of Ewesdale to George Douglas, 4th Earl of Angus. He may have been from Ewesdale, along with Wat, Sim, Henry and John, who are also listed. Nichol (16th C.) tenant in Mosspeeble. He is recorded in 1590 in a case where Lord Maxwell and Alexander, Lord Home were ordered to enter certain men of Ewesdale to answer some English complaints. In 1590/1 he was ‘in Mespe ble’ among men who Lord Maxwell and separately Lord Home were to enter before the Privy Council; he was specifically called out with a few others ‘to answer for all their other steel-fellows [fellow thieves]’. He was probably related to Adam, recorded in Mosspeeble in 1585. Nicholas (13th C.) resident of Northumberland. He is recorded in the 1279 assize roll there when his wife Agnes had rights to the young heir of ‘Walteri super Teysam’. He may already have been dead by this time. Another entry for the same year mentions ‘Nicholaus le Scot’. He could be the same as Nicholas ‘le Escot’ who was listed in an assize relating to lands in Newcastle in 1266; Henry ‘le Escot’ was also a pledge for him. He may be the Nicholas ‘le Escot’ who was among men sued by the Prior of Tynemouth in 1269 (with Henry and John also listed). It is unclear whether he or his wife were related to other Scots. Nicholas (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1618 being ‘in Quytsyde’, which could be Whiteside in the Jed valley. He complained that James Tweedie of Drevy and his son owed him money and should be apprehended. Ninian (15th/16th C.) listed among the many Borders men given remission in 1526 for their earlier support of the Homes in attacking the Earl of Arran. After his name appears ‘William brether’, presumably meaning his brother. It is unclear to which branch of the family he belonged, but the Christian name is not common among Scots. Ninian (d.bef. 1580) listed in 1580 in Selkirk, when his widow Marion was among those who Janet Gledstains owed money to. Ninian (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Agnes Reid and their children included William (b.1807). Osbert (13th C.) recorded as ‘Osberto scoto’ and ‘serviens’ of Walter Oliphant, Justiciar of Lothian, when he was witness to a statement about a dispute between Walter, Bishop of Glasgow, and Jordon of Corra. This was sometime in the period 1223–42. Patrick of Reston (13th C.) referred to in a charter of the 1270s involving Coldingham Priory and the lands of Great Reston. The same gift to Coldingham is described in a charter of Robert, son of Reginald of Reston, which is some time before 1233. His sons were John and Patrick. Patrick of Reston (13th C.) son of Patrick and brother of John. He witnessed several charters involving Coldingham Priory. In the 1170s he had a claim to the lands of Great Reston, which had previously been held by his father and brother. Patrick (13th C.) merchant of Berwick recorded as ‘Patrick le Escot’ in 1276, when there was a complaint of wool being stolen from their boat on the way to Dieppe. He is ‘Patrick Scot’ in 1296 when his former house in Berwick is mentioned in another case and he was ‘Patrick Lescot’ when he swore fealty to Edward I in that same year. His seal was oval with a classical head and cross and the name ‘S'PATRICII SCOT’. He may be the same as ‘Patrick Scot’ recorded in relation to Bamburgh in 1279. It is unclear if he was related to the local Scotts. Patrick (13th/14th C.) juror in 1310 for cases involving Lindores Abbey. Patrick (15th C.) servant of James II when he was Duke of Rothesay, recorded in 1438. Patrick (15th C.) recorded in the last will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme in 1491, where he owed one merk. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. Patrick (15th/16th C.) served as Chamberlain of Strathearn and Comptroller of receipts. He is recorded many times in the Exchequer Rolls around 1500–10. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. Patrick (15th/16th C.) son of Adam, tenant in Harwoodhill. In 1502 he had remission for resetting Richard Armstrong, called ‘Skaw’, who had stolen 200 sheep from David Hoppringle at ‘Fechane’, with the help of Alexander Scott. Walter of Howpasley and Robert of Stirches acted as sureties, suggesting one or both were related to him. Also in 1502 he had remission for stealing 60 sheep from ‘langcluch’ and 15 sheep from Alexander Turnbull in Dodrig; his surety then was Robert in Synton. Patrick (16th/17th C.) said to be a surgeon and Burgess in Hawick around 1600. His great-granddaughter Janet Scott was served heir to him in 1667; she married carrier Patrick Hardie. Patrick of Tanlawhill and Thirlestane (d.1666), son of Walter of Gamescleuch and Janet Porteous (probably being named after his maternal grandfather). His father was killed by John, son of Walter of Tushielaw, part of a feud between the Thirlestane and Tushielaw branches that lasted for many years. He was a nephew of Sir Robert of Thirlestane, and also held the lands of Howpasley from his cousin Robert Scott. He was placed in charge of bringing Walter, Earl of Buccleuch’s body from London to Leith in 1633, a journey that took 15 weeks, and included being shipwrecked on the Norwegian coast. About 1634 he redeemed some of the mortgages of his cousin Sir John of Thirlestane, and had most of the lands transferred into his name. He was Chamberlain to Francis, 2nd Earl of Buccleuch for Ettrick Forest in the 1640s, as well as Eckford, Lempitlaw and Langton into the 1650s. In 1641 William Wallace made the factor’s account in his place, since he was ill. In 1641 he signed a document in Hawick with his cousin Sir John, relating to the Thirlestane estates, but with the terms unspecified. He had his cousin imprisoned on 2 occasions. Eventually he would claim permanent ownership of the Thirlestane estates, in precedence to his cousin Sir John. This was at least partly because of different allegiances in the Civil War (Sir John’s descendants would fight the succession in court a century later). In 1642 he had a decree of appraising against Sir John, relating to the lands of Bourhope. In 1643 he had a charter of the lands of Crookston and others in Peeblesshire, which he gained from his cousin John, son of Sir Robert of Thirlestane. He was cautions for a William Scott in about 1646. He supported the Parliamentary side in the Civil War and was on the Committee of War for Selkirkshire in 1643, 1644, 1646, 1648 and 1649. He also represented Selkirkshire in Parliament in 1648–49. After being fined by both Cromwell and the Royalists for taking sides, he repurchased Thirlestane from Sir William of Harden and others. In 1644 he was witness to a contract for lands at Smallholm. In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, Dumfries and Annandale. He served as one of the ‘tutors testamentars’ for the will of Francis, Earl of Buccleuch. In 1650 he was also named as one of the ‘tutors’ for the children of Francis in his will and served in this capacity for the young Marie, Countess of Buccleuch, being involved in a law suit in 1659 with some of her other tutors over breaking locks to her charter chests. In 1653 he was involved in the construction of the bridge over the Yarrow at Deuchar, acting as Chamberlain to Scott of Buccleuch. In 1653 he had a charter of the lands of Rutherford. He was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, Dumfries and Annandale. He served as one of the ‘tutors testamentars’ for the will of Francis, Earl of Buccleuch. In 1650 he was also named as one of the ‘tutors’ for the children of Francis in his will and served in this capacity for the young Marie, Countess of Buccleuch, being involved in a law suit in 1659 with some of her other tutors over breaking locks to her charter chests. In 1653 he was involved in the construction of the bridge over the Yarrow at Deuchar, acting as Chamberlain to Scott of Buccleuch. In 1653 he had a charter of the lands of Rutherford. He was fined by Cromwell in 1654 and also fined in 1662 for complicity with Cromwell! In 1661 he was listed as still owing about £8000 to the Duchess of Buccleuch for rentals in Ettrick Forest, where he had been Chamberlain. In 1663 he was appointed as a justice of the peace for Selkirkshire. He was also recorded in a deed of 1663. He married Isabel, daughter of Sir John Murray of Blackbarony and was succeeded by his son Sir Francis. Other children were: David, who was buried at Greyfriars in Edinburgh in 1659; Walter, who held Howpasley briefly; Jean, who married Sir James Hay of Linplume; Margaret, who married Sir Alexander Bannerman of Elsick; and Mary, who married Sir William Primrose of Carrington. He may also be the Patrick whose wife Agnes had a testament in 1637, Patrick of Kirkstyle and Langshaw (17th C.) son of George of Kirkstyle and Catherine Montcrief. He was descended from the Scotts of Balwearie, through a son, Andrew of Glendoick and Kirkstyle in Perthshire; Col. Walter, last Scott of Balwearie, who died unmarried in Flanders in the reign of Charles II, sent him the seal of the Balwearie family; however, similarity of Christian names, and a statement of close kinship by Scott of Satchells suggests instead, or additionally, a relationship with the Scotts of Thirlestane. He was described as ‘writer of Edinburgh’ from about 1638 and through the 1640s, when he dealt with city business for the Scotts of Buccleuch, and by 1652 he was ‘now of Langshaw’. He sold Kirkstyle in Perthshire and purchased Langshaw (although it is unclear if these were the lands in South Lanarkshire, or the place north of Galashiels). He may also later have acquired the lands and barony of Ancrum (although perhaps the first connection may have been through his son Sir John). He was also previously ‘of Eddrington’, and had a crown charter of Langshaw in 1653. In 1650 he was named as one of the ‘tutors’ for the children of Francis Earl of Buccleuch in his will and also served as one of the ‘tutors testamentars’ for the will of Francis, as well as being described as ‘wryter in Edinburgh, our servitor’, when he witnessed the document. He was recorded in various documents in the Melrose Regality records in the period 1657–61. He served as ‘receiver general’ for the Buccleuch estates in at least the period 1650–72. He was recorded as ‘of Langshaw’ in a deed of 1663. He may be the Patrick, writer in Edinburgh, who had a discharge from the treasurer of Selkirk in 1664/5 for his pension. He may also be the Edinburgh writer recorded in deeds in 1663. He was Chamberlain for the Lordship of Dalkeith in at least the period 1669–74. There were legal proceedings against his son by the Duchess of Buccleuch 1673–1704 over an embezzlement he is alleged to have committed. He may be the same Patrick described as the Earl of Buccleuch’s attendant in 1636–38, and was factor in at least the period 1638–41 and 1650–56. He was recorded in deeds in 1673. In 1629 he married Elspeth (or Elizabeth) Simson, sister of David Simson of ‘Monturpie’ and they had 3 sons and 1 daughter. In 1647 he secondly married ‘Cicilie Drurie’ (or Cicely Drury), daughter of Sir Robert Drury of Rugham, and widow of George Douglas, Doctor of Divinity; with her he had 1 more daughter. His children were: Sir John, 1st Baronet of Ancrum, who married Elizabeth Scott of Mangerton; James, who died without issue; Francis of Langshaw; Agnes, who married William Douglas of Ardet (and may be the Agnes who later married John Wilkie, merchant in Edinburgh), and was mother of Sir Robert Douglas of Glenbervie; and Cicely, who married Charles Kerr of Abbotrule in 1666, and whose daughter married John Scott of Gorrnberry. Patrick, ‘lawful son of the said Patrick Scott of Langshaw’ is recorded as witness to a document for Mary, Countess of Buccleuch in 1658 and in deeds of 1663 and 1682, and so must have been another son. Francis of Colmslie was caution for a bond for the ‘deceased Patrick Scott, writer in Edinburgh’ according to a case heard in Melrose in 1683; this may well have been him. Sir Patrick of Longnewton and Ancrum (d.1734) son of Sir John (he is easy to confuse with his grandfather Patrick of Langshaw). He became an advocate in 1676 and was on the Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1678 and 1685. He was ‘feir’ of Ancrum in 1678 when he paid the land tax on the whole value of Longnewton Parish (valued at more than £2000). He served as Chamberlain to Scott of Buccleuch for Eckford in 1689–95. He was one of the 2 Parliamentary Commissioners (i.e. M.Ps.) for Roxburghshire in 1685–86 and was appointed again in 1689, but replaced in 1693 for absence; this is surely related to the politics of the day. In 1690 (before he succeeded to Ancrum) and in 1704 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire. In 1692 he held the ‘teinds’ of the Baronie of Eckford and the ‘tacks’ of the lands of Lemplitaw and ‘Langtome’ (probably Longnewton) owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch. In 1694 he paid tax on 10 hearths at his house in Langnewton. He contributed £1000 to the Darien Scheme in 1695. He was one of the Roxburghshire heritors who petitioned Parliament in 1700. In 1704 he witnessed a baptism for George Douglas of Friarshaw and his daughter Elizabeth. There are some existing letters between him and his brother William and son John from 1709. He married Anne, daughter of William Wallace of Helington. His wife was wealthy, but they had no issue. In 1680 he secondly married Margaret, daughter of William Scott of Harden. They had 2 sons and 4 daughters: Sir John, who succeeded; William, who became an advocate, marrying Anne, daughter of Capt. Benjamin Barton and secondly Elizabeth, daughter of William Ainslie of Blackhill; Christian, who married John Pringle of Whytbank; Elizabeth, who married George Douglas of Friarshaw; Anna; Jean, married David Muirhead of Linhouse and secondly James Gartshore; and Margaret, who died unmarried. Some correspondence exists in the National Archives between him and family members. Patrick, W.S. (d.1711) nephew of Hercules Scott, who was a merchant in Edinburgh. He was easy to confuse with Patrick of Langshaw and Patrick of Langnewton. He trained a lawyer, being apprenticed to Robert Innes and becoming Writer to the Signet in 1699. He married Elizabeth Marmichael. Patrick (17th C.) recorded in Ashkirk Parish in 1691 when his daughter Margaret was baptised. Although hard to read, his wife’s name is Janet... [possibly Paterson]. Patrick (18th C.) son of Walter, minister at Westruther. His brother Francis also served as minister at Westruther. He was mentioned in 1735 in the deposition where the widow of Robert Scott of Falnash sold her property on the Howe-gate to Patrick Hardie. It is unclear what his connection to the family was. Patrick (18th C.) eldest lawful son of Francis of Alton. He was ‘younger of Altoun’ in 1738 when he witnessed a baptism (along with Walter of Newton, who may well have been related), for Joseph Lothian and Janet Scott (who may also have been closely related). He was recorded in 1742 agreeing to his father’s sale of the lands of Alton to John Horsburgh of that Ilk. It is possible he was the Patrick who witnessed a baptism for William Lorraine in Wilton in 1733 and the Patrick who (along with Francis) witnessed a baptism in 1735 for James Beattie, resident of Borthaugh. He may be the Patrick who married Janet Gledstains in Wilton Parish in 1751. Patrick (d.bef. 1762) miller in Bedrul parish, recorded in 1762 when his daughter Janet married John Turnbull, wright, in Edin-burgh. Patrick (18th/19th C.) recorded at Whitlaw on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. His name is sometimes recorded as ‘Peter’. He is listed on the 1785–94 Horse Tax Rolls at Whitlaw. He was probably the ‘Patrick Scot in Borthaugh’ described as tenant farmer in Whitlaw in the 1750s when Robert Hobkirk was Town Herd; this suggests he was directly related to other Scotts associated with Borthaugh. He may have been the Patrick, son of Robert and Agnes Elliot, born in Hawick in 1728. He seems likely to have been the Patrick who married Janet Gledstains (perhaps from the Gledstains of Whithlaw family) in Wilton Parish in 1751. Peter (16th C.) recorded being ‘of Monze’ when he was Chamberlain for Strathearn, according to the Exchequer Rolls for 1536–42. Peter (16th/17th C.) ‘son natural’ of Sir Robert of Thirlestane. In 1608 his father was caution for him, his half-brother Robert and Walter of Whitslade that they not harm Archibald of ‘Deiphop’ and his sons. In 1609 he was among the men (under Walter of Headshaw) whom his father and brother Robert and their tenants were bound not to reset. Sir Robert and the oth-ers were then fined for resetting him and the other men. This was part of the feud between the Scotts of Thirlestane and Tushielaw. Peter (d.bef. 1654) referred to as being ‘of Cowdhome’ in an act of caution of 1654, preserved in the records of Jedburgh Sheriff Court. Capt. Walter Scott (the later poet) complained against his son Robert. It seems likely that this is ‘Cold-house’ in Wilton Parish. Peter (17th/18th C.) probably a Hawick Councillor. In 1701 he was one of those appointed to collect the ‘stent’ in the area ‘west the water’, suggesting he lived in the West-end. Peter in Whitlaw (see Patrick). Peter (18th/19th C.) recorded at Ancrum Mill in 1797, when he paid tax for having 2 non-working dogs. Peter (18th/19th C.) recorded at Clari-law in 1835, among heads of households in Wilton Parish. Peter (1852–1925) hosiery manufacturer, born in Hawick, with residence at Norwood. He was son of George, grocer at 19 Howegate, and his brother Tom was Cornet in 1887. He started work at age 13 for Peter Laidlaw at Wilton Grove, eventually taking over the small frame shop. He founded Peter Scott & Co. in 1878, with Mr. Adamson as his partner, although it was not until 1899 that he established the ‘Pesco’ brand of underwear. The expansion of the company after that was explosive. He was Chairman of the Scottish Hosiery Association, and served on several committees during WWI. He was also President of the Hawick Hosiery Manufacturers’ Association, and a Director of the South of Scotland Manufacturers’ Mutual Insurance Co. Ltd. He bought about 6 hectares of land on Sunnyhill, at the top of Roadhead and there had the villa Norwood built for him in 1904, designed by J.P. Alison; Norwood would be owned by the family until 1964. The gatehouse Norwood Lodge was built about the same time, with the adjacent Woodgate and Langlee built in about 1907. He was also a keen bowler, acting as President of the Buccleuch Bowling Club and took part in a bowling tour of Canada in 1910. He and his brother George were also noted draughts players. He gifted the ‘Beechwood’ and ‘Norwood’ trophies, which were competed for among the local clubs. He also gifted an organ to St. George’s Kirk in 1919 in mem-or-y of his daughter Bessie. In 1876 at Wilton Dean, he married Mary, daughter of James Brydon from Castleton. Their children were: George (1879–1940), who was a director in the family firm; Esther Laidlaw (b.1880), who died young; Marion Adamson (1886–1963), who never married; Jeanie (b.1887); Bessie (1890–1917); and James Brydon (1894–1958), also a company director at Pesco’s. It is said that he was well liked in the town and proud of his ‘gutterbluid’ heritage. He died suddenly while on holiday in the south of France, and his funeral procession was one of the biggest ever to be seen in Hawick. Peter Brydon (1920–43) son of James Brydon and grandson of Peter, founder of Pesco’s. He served with the Royal Scots Fusiliers, having the rank of Lieutenant. He died while in Burma and there is a baptismal font in his memory in Denholm Kirk. Philip (15th/16th C.) recorded along with Robert and Andrew in 1494/5. The three were among men who were already fugitives when John of Deloraine was accused of ‘resetting, supplying and intercommuning’ with them. It seems reasonable to assume that they were closely related, perhaps brothers, but from which branch of the Scotts is unknown. Philip of Heap (15th/16th C.) described as ‘Philip Scot of Hoip’ in 1508 when he witnessed a sasine of lands at Synton. He must have been closely related to David of Whitehaugh, recorded in 1479, and Walter of Whitehaugh, recorded in 1488. He was in turn succeeded by Walter, who gained the lands of Wester Heap in 1532. Philip (15th/16th C.) recorded as a sergeant at the Court in Jedburgh in 1502. Perhaps the same Philip was recorded in 1530 acting for Thomas Forest when he rented part of the lands of Philiphaugh from Robert Turnbull. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts. Philip of Headshaw (d.c.1531) son of Walter of Headshaw, who he succeeded. He is recorded as ‘of Aidschaw’ in 1510 when his brother Thomas was convicted of being part of the murder of John Murray of Falahill. Sureties were William in Hawick, George in Goldielands, David in Whitehaugh, William in Fenwick and John of Haining, suggesting that some of them were closely related. He was on the 1517 ‘re-tour’ for Sir Walter of Branxholme. In 1519/20 he was listed as someone who could give permission to change the details of a marriage contract between the Scotts of Buccleuch and a son of the Gledstains family; he is there ‘Philip Scot of Eadschaw’. He was listed on the 1526 remission for Borders men for supporting the Homes in an attack on the Earl of Arran (with his son Walter also listed). And in 1527 he was among the Lairds, led by Walter of Branxholme, who had remission for their part in the Battle of Skirmish Field. In 1529/30 he witnessed a pledge relating to crimes done against George of Linton by Robert Elliot ‘alias Flaskvold’. In 1530 he was one of the Border Lairds who submitted themselves to James V to keep better order. In a document of 1531 he assigned to his 2nd son Robert the lands of Hartwoodburn after his death, which he held in tack from Queen Margaret; his brother William of Ormiston ‘sought instruments’. Also in 1531 he witnessed an agreement between Scotts and Veitches regarding Synton. In 1532 his widow, Isabel Murray was involved in a dispute with his son and heir, Walter: James Pringle and Walter in Synton represented his wife, while Philip Riddell and William in Harden represented his son. In a further dispute in 1535, Isabel mother is described as the stepmother of Walter, and hence she must have been his second wife. He was succeeded by his son Walter of Headshaw and also had another son, Robert (who is recorded as brother of Walter in 1541/2). Philip (16th C.) tenant in Dryhope and ‘Farmynhop’ in 1541. Probably the same Philip in ‘Dryhoup’ was accused (along with Robert of Howplesley) by William in Kershope (in Ettrick) of stealing goods from there, and William sought restitution through the efforts of John Murray of Kershope. Perhaps the same Philip witnessed a transaction for John Scott of Thirlestane in 1539. He was ‘of Drihoup’ in 1562 when he witnessed a transaction where Robert of Howplesley leased his farm of Whitehope (in Yarrow) to John Dalgelish in Deuchar. Immediately afterwards Dalgelish leased half of Whithope to John, who appears to have been his son. In the In 1564 he was listed as ‘Philip Scot of Drihope’ among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. He may be related to the later Philip of Dryhope. Philip (16th C.) tenant of Todshawhill recorded in 1549 as the first of the tenants and servants of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme when they complained about their farms being raided and burned by the Kers. Either he or Philip in Wiltonburn could have been father of ‘Philip’s Jock’. Philip (16th C.) tenant in Wiltonburn in 1549 when he was among the tenants of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, who complained about the actions of Walter Ker of Cessford and others. It is possible that he was father of ‘Philip’s Jock’ recorded in the 1570s. Philip (16th C.) recorded in 1579/80 as son of the deceased Hector in Selkirk when he witnessed a promise by ‘Mathew of the bent in Tuchellaw’. Philip (16th C.) brother of Scott of Hassendean, as well as brother of William. In 1580 he was ‘bother german to Scot of Hassendane’ when he witnessed a declaration in Selkirk involving Walter of Stiches. In 1583/4 he was brother to ‘Scot of Hassiden among a number of men from the area who were denounced for failing to appear to give evidence in a case against the Turnbulls of Bedrule. It is unclear who was Laird of Hassendean at that time, since David was murdered in 1564 and is usually said to have been succeeded by his grandson Robert. Philip of Kirkhope (16th C.) son of John of Thirlestane, and younger brother of Robert, who succeeded. He was said by Scott of Satchells to have been the 1st husband of the youngest daughter of Walter Scott of Synton and Whitslade. Since she had 2 other husbands, this presumably means that he died relatively young, and is said to have had no children. Philip of Dryhope (d.bef. 1632) probably son or brother of John. He is sometimes stated as the father of Mary, ‘Flower of Yarrow’, but she was probably his sister. He is listed on the ‘Roll of the Clans’ in 1590. In 1591 he purchased half of Stanhope in Peeblesshire and sold it again in 1600. In 1591 Walter of Tushielaw served as surety for him. He purchased the lands of Glen-sax from Alexander Horsburgh in 1600. He was ‘of Dryhoip’ when denounced as a rebel in 1592 for his part in the Falkland Raid (and Dryhope was ordered to be demolished at about the same time); his brother Andrew was a signatory to the bond of caution for him by John Hay of Smithfield. In 1599 he witnessed the bonds (signed at Branxholme) between Sir Walter Scott of Bucleuch and the Armstrongs and Elliot of Liddesdale. In 1602 he signed a bond among Border Lairds for keeping the peace. Also in 1603 he was among Scotts and others, subordinates of Scott of Bucleuch, who ‘had been put to the horn’ for not paying feu mails for their lands to the Queen’s Chamberlain, with Robert of Haining not entering them in court. In 1610 there is a bond of caution for him and his sons Philip and William. In 1611 he gave back (presumably following repayment of a debt) the lands of Midshiels, Appletreehall, Coitlaw and Crawhill to Alexander Cranston of Mordiston. He was witness to the bond of 1612 for keeping peace on the Border and was also on the panel of ‘retour’ for Tweedie of Drumelzier. Additionally in 1612 he was listed among Scotts and others accused of overcharging interest on loans. His brother James (and son William) are recorded in 1617. In 1618 he was listed as one of the curators of the young Andrew Scott of Aikwood. He is ‘recorded as ‘elder of Dryhoip’ in charters of 1618 and 1621 and in 1621 when the Hays of Smithfield complained he had not settled a debt. He married Margaret, and his eldest son was Robert, although he was succeeded in the Lairdship of Dryhope by his son Philip. Another son William was complained about in 1612 and 1617 and witnessed a charter in 1618. In 1620 both Philip elder and Philip younger were vited by the tailors of Edin- burgh for not paying them. In 1628 he resigned his half of the lands of Glen-sax. Note that these generations are quite confused (Keith Scott suggests there were 2 generations of Philips of Dryhope, father and son, but it is unclear when the son succeeded). Philip of Aikwood (16th/17th C.) possibly the same man as Philip of Dryhope. He is recorded in 1627, but by 1630 the lands of Oakwood had passed to a Murray, possibly of the Elibank family. The lands of Oakwood later became part of the estates of the Scotts of Harden. Philip of Dryhope (17th C.) younger brother of Walter, the previous Laird (recorded in 1669). He may also have been brother of the Laird before, Robert, and hence a younger son of William. He was the last Scott Laird of Dryhope. It is possible he is the Burgess of that name recorded in Selkirk in 1665 and the witness recorded there in 1683. Philip (17th/18th C.) Chamberlain to Sir William of Harden. He is recorded in 1692–1716 as factor for the lands in Selkirkshire and in 1704 when his son Walter became an apothecary’s apprentice in Edinburgh. In the 1720 Hawick Parish records he is stated to have been lately Chamber- lain to Scott of Harden. In 1720 his eldest son Walter married Sara, daughter of Walter Scott, also an apothecary in Hawick. He may be the Philip ‘in Whitmurehall’ recorded in a bond with the Scotts of Harden in 1687 and a discharge with the Burgh of Selkirk in 1700. Perhaps he was the same as the Philip ‘in Oakwood’ who was one of the founding members of the ‘Honest Country Club’ in 1711. Philip (17th/18th C.) recorded being in Cogsmill in 1709 when he married Margaret Riddell in Kirkton Parish. His son John was baptised in 1710. Philip (17th/18th C.) recorded in Aikwood in 1709, in a discharge with the Burgh of Selkirk. He was still tenant there according to other discharges of 1719 and 1729, as well as a bond in 1725. He was one of the founding members of the ‘Honest Coun- try Club’ in 1711. Probably the same Philip was in Oakwood in 1732 when he borrowed money from the Selkirk Merchant Company; it was due for repayment in 1736, but he had still not paid it back by 1738. He was surely related to James, who was recorded in Aikwood at the end of the 17th century. Philip (18th C.) recorded as ‘in Todrigg’ in 1753 when he was paid by Scott of Buccleuch for acting as gamekeeper. It is unclear if he was related to the earlier Scotts of Todrig. Rachel nee Langlands (17th/18th C.) described as ‘of Wilton’, so she was probably daughter of one of the last Langlands Lairds. She married Charles Scott of Crumhaugh, probably in the mid-1680s. She had a ‘bond of provision’ from her husband in 1696. However, Charles died about a couple of years later. She is probably the same Rachel who secondly married Francis Elliot of Fenwick. Her children included Walter (who succeeded to Crumhaugh) and probably James, who was a surgeon in Hawick. Rebecca (18th C.) paid the window tax for Midshiels in 1748. She is ‘Rebeca Scott Medsheils’. It is unclear how she was related to other Scotts, but perhaps was connected to the Scotts of Crumhaugh, who sold Midshiels in about the mid-18th century. Reginald (13th C.) recorded as ‘Reginaldus le Scot’ in the 1279 assize roll of Northumberland. He was involved in a case in the town of ‘Lowick’. Richard (12th C.) probably the son of Uchtred Fitz-Scott. He witnessed a charter by the Bishop of St. Andrews to Holyrood Abbey in 1158 (although the charter is now lost, and so there is no proof that he was son of Uchtred). He was succeeded by his son Richard. Another son was probably Sir Michael, ancestor of the Scotts of Balwearie. Richard (12th/13th C.) son of Richard and probably grandson of Uchtred Fitz-Scott. He married Alicia, daughter of Henry and Eschina de Molla (or Molle). He and his wife received lands in Roxburgh in the reign of Alexander II. He may thus have been the first Scott to be associated with Roxburghshire, and was referred to as Richard ‘of Molle’. Sometime between 1185 and 1215 he granted lands in Mow to Kelso Abbey; he is referred to there as ‘son of Anselm of Mow’ (so perhaps there are 2 Richard Scotts confounded here, or ‘son’ meant ‘son-in-law’). He was also referred to in charters of c.1190 for lands adjacent to his in Mow. He was succeeded by his son William. It is also possible that Almer Scott of Mow, recorded about the same time, was also related to him. Richard (12th/13th C.) recorded in a court case in London in 1220. He was caught with the stolen seal of Walter de Morton, and was ordered to be hanged for the crime. Richard (13th C.) listed in 1236 along with Walter and Robert, his brother. They were accused of attacking Eustace (Bailif of the Abbot of ‘Burgo’), beating him, killing his horse, and imprisoning his servant. The Sheriff of Northampton was commanded to make them appear at Westminster. It is unclear how they were related to other Scotts. Richard (13th C.) listed in 1244 when the Sheriff of Huntingdon commanded him to give a knight’s fee to John Baloil. Richard (13th C.) recorded in Leicester in 1262 as ‘son of Robert Scot junior’ when he gave a mark for an assize. Richard (13th C.) recorded as ‘le Escot’ in a document relating to Northumberland in 1265. He could be the same as Richard ‘le Scot’ who was listed in 1255/6, along with his wife Margery, in a court case in Northumberland. He may also be the ‘Richard Scot, essoin’ of Roger Bertram listed in a plea in Northumberland in 1258/9. Richard (13th C.) son and heir of Lucas ‘le Escot’ of Dunwich, recorded in a document relating to Norfolk in 1267/8. In 1268/9 he was Richard ‘le Scot of Dunwich’ when he was recorded in relation to money due to the English King’s Exchequer from Dunwich in Suffolk. He was also recorded in 1271 in relation to a ship that he claimed had been owned by his father Lucas. In 1272 he accused someone at Stratford of the murder of his cousin Robert ‘le Escot’ (son of Gerald). Also in 1272 he was accused of stealing a cask of wine from someone in Dunwich and paid 20 shillings for a writ. Sir Richard (c.1265–1320) Laird of Rankilburn (synonymous with Buccleuch) and Murthockstone (or Murdostoun) in Lanarkshire. He was probably son of William, but these early generations are quite uncertain; however, from him onwards, the genealogy of the Scotts of Buccleuch is generally considered to be secure. Capt. Walter says that he originally resided at Scotstoun in Peeblesshire. He swore fealty to Edward I of England in 1296 (in the Ragman Rolls) under the name ‘Richard Le Scot de Murthoxtoun’, in the County of Lanark; 9 other people of the same surname are also recorded, with Alexander ‘de Pertheyk’ also being from Lanarkshire, and William (no designation given) being the only one from Roxburghshire. His seal bore a lion rampant ‘regardant’ and the name ‘SRICARDI SCOTT’. He may have been the first Scott to have local lands, at Rankilburn, sometime before 1296. These may be the lands in Selkirkshire that were restored to him (assuming it is the same Richard) in 1296. He may have held these lands as Ranger of the King’s Forest.
He may be the Richard who also swore fealty to King Edward in 1304. He acquired the Barony of Murdostoun (in Lanark) by marriage with the Ingils heiress. As a result the crescent and stars of the Scott arms were placed on the bend of Murdostoun thereafter. He was probably father of Sir Michael of Rankiburn and Murthockstone and possibly also of John (ancestor of the first Scotts of Synton, although this may have been his grandson). The Walter ‘le Scot’ who also swore fealty to Edward in 1296 may have been his brother (perhaps older brother), and held lands in Peebles. An English record of 1302 pardous Eustace de Fenham for the death of William, son of Richard Scott, on account of his service on the coast of Scotland; this may have been his son. For some reason his Christian name was not used afterwards by the Scotts of Buccleuch. Richard (d.bef. 1420) Bailie of Dundee recorded in the period 1386–1405 according to the Echequer Rolls. He was ‘Clerk of Cocket of Dundee’ in the Exchequer Rolls in the period 1397–20. He thus held the seal for issuing customs documents. He was responsible for rendering the accounts of the Bailies of Dundee, and was also paid for numbering animal skins there. He may have been related to the Scotts of Balwearie. Rev. Richard (1641–1722) 3rd son of George, the last of the old Scotts of Synton, with his mother being Mary Gradstains of Dod and Whitlaw. His brother was George of Boonraw. He was educated in Edinburgh, receiving his M.A. in 1658 and becoming minister at Kirkbean in Kirkcudbrightshire in 1675. He became minister in his home Parish of Ashkirk in 1685. However, he was deprived of his living in 1689 for refusing to read the Proclamation of the Estates and to pray for William and Mary, i.e. being an Episcopalian (or a Jacobite). He married Katherine Crichton and their children included Jean, who married Alexander Leslie, an Aberdeen advocate and secondly married Alexander Abercrombie of Fetterneir; she is mentioned in a disposition of 1724 as a widow of Abercrombie. He is recorded being resident in Lady Yester’s parish in Edinburgh along with his wife and daughter in 1694. He died in Edinburgh without male issue. It has been suggested that he may have helped Scott of Satchells with his ‘True History’. His year of death is sometimes incorrectly given as 1702.

Richard (17th/18th C.) said to be a younger son of George of Boonraw, and brother of Archibald, the last Laird of Boonraw. If he existed it would prove the claim that Charlie of the Crescent was descended from the Scotts of Boonraw. He was said (by James Haining) to have married a daughter of Charles ‘Ogilvy’ (although it is unclear who this might have been, perhaps a different Ogilvie). It is possible he was the Richard who (along with George) witnessed a baptism in 1721 for John Turnbull in Wester Groundistone and who (also with George) in 1724 witnessed a baptism for George in Groundistone and in 1729 (also along with George) witnessed another baptism for a different George in Groundistone. It is possible he was the Richard whose children (baptised in Wilton) included: Marion (b.1703), who may have married Alexander Purdom in Hawick in 1725; Bessy (b.1705); Janet (b.1707); and Agnes (b.1710). He may also be the Richard, married to Margaret Scott, whose children (baptised in Wilton) included: Richard (b.1717); and William (b.1720). Rev. Richard (1729–90) son of John, minister of Stenhouse. He was educated at the University of Glasgow, licensed by the Presbytery of Peebles in 1752 and ordained at Cranshaws in 1759. He was presented to Ewes Kirk by the Duke of Buccleuch in 1761 and remained there until he died. He was said to have been ‘mild and gentle in manner’, but ‘fervent in the divine service’. He was recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1785 and 1787. In 1761 he married Mary Turnbull, and she died in 1796. They had 5 sons and 3 daughters, including: Janet (b.1762), who married William Irvine; James (b.1764), a merchant in New York; Hector (b.1766); John (b.1768), who died young; Anne (b.1768), a twin to John; John (again, b.1771), merchant in London; Martha (b.1774); and George (b.1778), also merchant in London. He wrote ‘Letters on the Culture of Potatoes’. Richard (18th C.) recorded in 1757 when his daughter Agnes was baptised in Hawick Parish. The mother was Mary Rutherford and she died in 1796. They had 5 sons and 3 daughters, including: Janet (b.1762), who married William Irvine; James (b.1764), a merchant in New York; Hector (b.1766); John (b.1768), who died young; Anne (b.1768), a twin to John; John (again, b.1771), merchant in London; Martha (b.1774); and George (b.1778), also merchant in London. He wrote ‘Letters on the Culture of Potatoes’. Richard (18th C.) recorded in 1757 when his daughter Agnes was baptised in Hawick Parish. The mother was Mary Rutherford and ‘Forni’ was indicated beside the entry. The witnesses were Walter of Boghall (perhaps his father) and carrier Walter Purdom. Richard (b.1889) born in Kirkton Parish, he was a warehouse foreman in Hawick and later became a publican. In 1916 he married Elizabeth Anderson Ballantyne (1892–1977), whose father was a mill foreman, brother was killed at the Somme and paternal grandfather was Burgh Chamberlain in Galashiels (all called Andrew). His daughter Margaret Dobson (1920–2018) married Richard Street and was known for her efforts to protect Scottish heritage. Richard Edmondson ‘Dick’ (1910–1991) local artist, writer and historian. He was son of Bailie Francis, married Agnes Townsend and was father of Francis Townsend (Frank) and Elizabeth Anne.
Scott

(Anne). Born at 26 High Street, he left school at 14 to work for Watsons, then worked in the family painters and decorators from about 1935. During WWII he served in the Physical Training Corps, but did not enjoy his forced exile from Hawick. In the mid-1950s he became a reporter with the Hawick Express, eventually taking over as editor from John Hood. He was the anonymous writer of the ‘Betty Whutson’ column for the years 1961–83. As an artist he was responsible for hundreds of Hawick scenes, usually in watercolour, signing as ‘R.E. Scott’. He exhibited at Art Club shows regularly for decades, as well as having paintings exhibited at the Royal Scottish Academy in 1943 and 1944. And as a sign-writer his work was a familiar sight around Hawick for several decades. He was a successful sprinter with the Teviotdale Harriers in the 1930s, being club 100 yards champion in 1930, 1935, 1936 and 1937. He won the Common Riding sprint in 1930, the 120 yards handicap and 100 yard scratch race at the 1937 Lauder Common Riding on the same day, was Border 120 yards champion in 1936 and 1937 and 100 yards champion in 1937 and won a 100 yards handicap event at Clyde F.C. Sports in 1938. He was also a member of the Hawick Swimming Club, becoming Club President, Secretary and Captain. He had a 28 year connection with the Scouting movement, helping set up the first Cub troop in the late 1920s and becoming a local Cub Scout Commissioner. He was a member of the Vertish Hill Sports Committee for many years, and was also a member of the P.S.A. Choir and the Masons. He spent much of his ‘spare’ time trekking the local hills with his wife Agnes. He wrote ‘The Companion to Hawick’ (1970, revised 1981), ‘Hawick’s Honorary Burgesses Since 1346–c.89’ (13th C.) recorded as Robert le Scot’ of Hecham in a document of 1290 relating to the Priory of Lewes (presumably one in Sussex). His lands may have been at Hexham. He was married to ‘Cristiana Atelhallegate’. Their son John acknowledged in the document that he was ‘servus’ and ‘rusticus’ of the Prior. He could be the same as ‘Robertum Scot’ and ‘Robertus le Scot’ recorded in the 1279 assize roll of Northumberland. It is unknown if he was related to other Scotts. Robert (13th C.) recorded in 1296 in a case relating to Richard of Whiteacre. This was among cases at a court of the English army held at Roxburgh. Probably the same Robert (along with William) was paid in 1307/8 for acting as messenger from Cumnock, to Ayr and then to Lanark. Robert (c.13th C.) landholder in Dumfries mentioned in an undated document of Kelso Abbey. Robert (bef. 1346–c.89) 3rd Laird of Rankilburn (Buccleuch) and also of Kirkurd and Mudeston. He was probably son of Sir Michael (although these early generations are still murky). His brother John was probably the ancestor of the Scotts of Syn- ton, Harden and Raeburn. Little is known about him, probably because this was a relatively peaceful period in Scottish history! He lived for more than 40 years after succeeding his father. He held the lands in Selkirkshire, as well as those older lands in Peeblesshire and the lands in Lanarkshire that had been acquired through marriage. It is possible that he died at the Battle of Otterburn in 1388, although there are no records to support this. He was succeeded by his son Sir Walter, who had a charter for the superiority of Kirkurd in 1389. Robert (14th C.) mentioned in 1410 as a former owner of the lands of ‘Borthwic’ and ‘Thoftcotys’ in the Borthwick valley. Since the first record of the name ‘Robertson’ was only a few years earlier, it is possible that the area was named after his house there. It is stated that the lands were conferred on Sir William ‘of Borthwc’ on resignation by him. Hence it is possible there was a connection between the first of the Borthwick family and the Scots. He was surely related to the Scotts of Buccleuch and possibly related to the later Scotts of Robertson and Borthwick.

Robert (d.1426) 5th Laird of Rankilburn (Buccleuch), he succeeded his father, the first Sir Walter Scott, who died at Homildon Hill. He is named as the superior of the lands of Kirkurd in a charter for Ladyurd in 1406. In 1406/7 he confirmed a charter, as Lord of ‘Murchoustoun’ for lands in the Barony of Kirkurd. In 1410 he is probably the Robert who resigned his lands of Borthwick and ‘Thoft Cotys’ (possibly Hoscote) into the hands of Robert, Duke of Albany, so that they could be granted to Sir William of Borthwick; however, this may have been a regranting, and it is unclear how long he may have held these Borthwick lands. In 1415 he exchanged his lands of ‘wynzehope’ called Glenkerry (on the Tina Water) for lands at ‘Bellinden’ (i.e. Bellendean) with the monks of Melrose Abbey. This was with permission of his son Walter, and they kept fishing an hunting rights in their old lands. He also acquired half the lands of Branxholme from John Inglis in 1420, thereby becoming the first Scott of Branxholme. In 1426 he granted Lempitlaw to his son Walter, shortly before he died. He is also probably the Robert ‘of Murthar and Liston’ (probably a transcription error for ‘Muthokston’) who witnessed an undated charter whereby John Inglis of Manor and Branxholme granted ‘Kyrktoune and Toftis’ in the Barony of Hawick to his uncle Simon Inglis. He was succeeded by his son Sir Walter. Other sons were probably Stephen of Castlelaw and Burrellands and Robert of Haining. His 1415 seal bore a diagonal band with 2 crescents and a star and the words ‘SIG-ILLUM ROBERTI SCOTT’; this is the earliest known seal for the main branch of the family.

Robert (15th C.) listed as a Bailie of Hawick (along with Thomas Blair) among the witnesses to the sasine of 1452 regranting the Barony of Hawick to William Douglas of Drumlanrig. Presumably the same man is described as a Burgess (probably of Hawick) in 1454 when he was witness to a legal instrument relating to lands in Eckford, which was witnessed in a tenement of ‘John Walche, elder, in town of Hawic’. It is unclear how exactly he was related to the Scotts of Branxholme and Buccleuch, but this establishes that there were Scotts within the Burgh from its very earliest days. Robert of Todshaw (15th C.) name in an ‘instrument of obligation’ from King James III in 1463/4 for the sum of 1200 merks Scots. This was in payment equivalent to the 50 merks of money and 50 merks of land promised for the capture of John Douglas of Balveny, brother of the Earl of Douglas. He may be the Robert who in 1463 was on the panel of retour for Archibald Douglas, 5th Earl of Angus, as heir to his father. He is probably the same as Robert of ‘Toghaugh’ (i.e. Todshawhaugh) who witnessed a charter for the lands of Whitchester in 1484. It seems likely that his lands were at Todshawhaugh (rather than what was later called Todshaw). Perhaps the same ‘Robertus scot in todshawhalch’ was able to ‘compone’ in 1493, along with John Turnbull in Hawick for the crime of bringing in Englishmen; his surety was the Laird of Howpasley. Robert of Eilrig (15th C.) leased the lands of Craik from Alexander Cockburn of Ormiston in 1477 for 6 years. Cockburn also appointed him as ‘Bailie’ of those lands, with the power to hold courts etc. Robert (15th C.) recorded as customs officer in Arbroath in the period 1481–96. It is unclear how he was related to other Scots. Robert of Muirhouse and Whames (d.c.1505) son of Stephen. He had a sasine for the lands of ‘Murhaus’ (i.e. Murihouse near Edinburgh) in 1464. He is recorded in 1482 being sold the land of ‘Underchesters’ (probably adjacent to Highchesters) by Henry Wardlaw, at that time still Baron of Wilton. The ‘Murehouse’ was in the Barony of Crichton (now in Midlothian) and not the place near Dryfesdale in Dumfriesshire (where there was a connection in the next couple of generations), or the area near Lilliard’s Edge. He is probably the same Robert, son and heir of Stephen of Muirhouse, who witnessed a 1453 sasine at Milsington. This Stephen seems was also referred to as being of Castlelaw, who was a brother of Sir Walter of Buccleuch. He is probably the Robert ‘of Dorgeauch’ who repaid the loan on the lands of Dryden, Commonside and Over Harwood in 1477 (which had involved Stephen of Muirhouse 15 years earlier). It also seems likely he was related to the Howpasley and Thirlestane branches; John of Thirlestane received the half Barony of Wilton from Henry Wardlaw in 1483. He is ‘roberti de quhamys’ in 1493 when his brother Alexander was allowed to ‘compone’ for stealing livestock. He is probably the Robert ‘in Quhommis’ recorded in the Exchequer Rolls of 1501, along with ‘Thome Howate’ had their fines remitted. His son and heir George had an instrument in 1505/6 where he claimed his father’s lands of Muirhouse. Robert of Cockermouth (15th C.) recorded as ‘of Cochemauht’ when witness to a charter of 1484/5 when Sir David of Branxholme gave Whitchesters to his son Robert (of Allanhaugh). He was probably closely related to the Scotts of Hassendeane. Robert of Bowerhouse (15th C.) mentioned in the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1494/5 when David Waugh in Bedrule and Hawick had remission for stealing sheep from him. He is recorded being ‘de bourhous’, which is probably Bowerhouse, perhaps the one near Lauder. Robert of Allanhaugh and Whitchester (d.bef. 1506) 3rd son of Sir David, 7th Laird of Buccleuch. By 1471/2 he was the 2nd surviving son of Sir David (the oldest son Walter having died) when he was named in the marriage contract between his brother David and Jane Douglas; if David died, then he was to marry Jane, sister of Archibald, Earl of Angus. He may be the ‘Roberto Scot’ who witnessed the document passing Mangerton from the Armstrongs to David of Buccleuch in 1482. He received Whitchester from his father in 1483, with a charter of the lands and lordship following in 1484/5. He resigned them back to his father shortly afterwards, apparently so that Sir David could arrange the entail of his lands. Following the death of his brother David (whose son Walter would succeed to the Buccleuch titles) he became increasingly important in the running of his father’s affairs. In 1484 he was, with his father, granted the Bailiary of lands belonging to Melrose Abbey (meaning that they administered the lands financially and judicially). He is recorded as son of David of Buccleuch when he leased the Crown lands of Winterburgh in 1483. The lease continued in 1488, along with William Roger, with Sir David of Buccleuch as pledge, and continued further in 1490 and 1492. In 1487 he was procurator for his father when he resigned his lands into the hands of the King. In 1488 he and his father were thanked for their serive to the King at the Battle of Blackness, with the Barony of Branxholme being re-granted and him named as second in line, after his nephew Walter (who became Lord of Branxholme and Buccleuch). Also in 1488 he leased the lands of Greenwood (probably Girnwood) and the Lyne for 19 years from Sir Thomas Turnbull. He is probably the ‘Robert Scot of Branxholme’ who is recorded in a sasine of 1490 purchasing land in Hawick from Robert Cessford. He features prominently in the last will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme in 1491/2, being given £40 and appointed as ‘tutor’ for Sir David’s heir Walter (his nephew), as well as a ‘tutor’ for William Turnbull of Minto. In 1491/2 he was ‘of Quhitchester’ when he witnessed a sasine for William Douglas of Cavers. In 1492 his nephew Walter assigned to him all the moveable goods of his father Sir David, in order to pay off debts etc. In 1493 at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh, he served as surety for: Robert, son of Gilbert Elliot; Alexander, brother of Robert of Whames; Thomas Brown in Minto; Walter of Howplesley; William, son of William of Goldielands; John Melrose in Whithaugh; George Waugh in Hawick; John Davidson in Minto; and others. In 1494/5 he was Robert ‘of Quhitchester’ when he served was surety for Alexander, son of Andrew Turnbull of Dryden, John of Deloraine, David Waugh in Bedrule and Hawick, and George Fawlaw in Hawick. That same year he ‘was permitted to compound’ (i.e. pay a fine) for the slaughter of Adam Crawford and for associating with Alexander Jardine, who was a rebel; the Laird of Buccleuch was surety for him. He is recorded in the Treasurer’s accounts for 1494/5 having obtained remission from the King. He was also Robert ‘of Allanhaugh’ in 1494/5 when, along with Adam in Annelshope, he was surety for John in Ernucleuch. In 1498/9 he had remission from the King for comming with and assisting rebels and for other crimes. In 1499 he was ‘de Quhitchester’ when he witnessed the sasine for George, Master of Angus being infefted in the Lordships of Eskdale and Ewesdale. He was one of the men chosen to value the lands of Whithope in 1500. He is recorded in a bond of 1500, where Walter Scott of Branxholme (his nephew and superior) held his tenancy of the lands of Whitchesters until he repaid a debt to Alexander Cockburn of Ormiston Hall; however, it is possible that this was his son rather than him. He is probably the ‘Robertus scot de al- lanehalch’ who was surety in 1502 for Alexander Weens and was fined for the non-appearance of Weens at court in Jedburgh. Also in 1502, at the Justice-aire in Peebles, he was surety for Alexander in Hopeton, who may have been the same man as his son Alexander. Additionally, along with Patrick Dickson, he was joint surety in Edinburgh for entering George Dickson for the murder of Simon Dickson. He may have married Christian, sister of William Cockburn of Henderland, who was hanged as a reiver in 1530; however, this seems more likely to have been his son. His oldest son was also Robert, who held property in Hawick and farmed at Whitchesters. His grand-daughter married John Scott of Thirlestane. Other sons were Alexander, who may have been progenitor of the Scotts of Scotstarvit; and James (said to be the 3rd son), who was Provost of the Collegiate Church of Corstorphine. It is claimed that he died at an advanced age, but in that case he must have had his children late; this is because Scott of Rodono suggests he was dead by 1509, with his sons then being minors (younger than 25), so that Walter of Howpastley was then the closer adult male relative to the young Walter of Buccleuch. In 1506/7 he was already deceased when his son Robert was involved in redeeming a loan with John Murray of Falahill with a tower in Hawick as collateral; he may have had this tower ‘between the bridges’ built – it is possible that it was the predecessor of Drumlanrig’s Tower. Robert of Haining (15th C.) possibly 3rd son of Robert, 5th Laird of Buccleuch (however, he would appear to have lived about a generation later than this). In 1463 he had a charter for the lands of ‘Grevistoun et le Gillishauch’ in Peeblesshire from James Crichton of Cairrus, witnessed in Edinburgh by David and Alexander, son of Sir Walter of Kirkurd (6th Laird of Buccleuch, hence perhaps his nephews). In 1464/5 he was ‘Robin Scot of the Haynig’ when he was on the panel to rule on the dispute over the lands of Kirkton Mains and the Flex. In 1476 he granted a charter for lands in Peeblesshire to his cousin Thomas Middlema. In 1477 he sold the lands of Haining, witnesses again including David and Alexander, sons of Sir Walter of Buccleuch. The lands passed to Murray of Philiphaugh, but returned to his son John. He is recorded in a ‘letter of reversion’ with David Scott of Branxholme in 1482. This involved borrowing on lands in Selkirk, with security of the lands of ‘Uverhawikschelis’, ‘Netherhawikschelis’ and ‘Quhitrig’ in the Barony of Branxholme. He is probably the Robert who acted as one of the Earl of Angus’ Bailies for infefting David Scott of Branxholme in the lands of Mungerton in 1482. In 1484/5 he is described as ‘Bailie in that part’ in a sasine giving the lands of Mungerton to Walter Scott of Branxholme, and in the same year he is ‘in Hanyng’ when he witnessed the charter giving Whitchesters to Robert Scott of Allanhaugh (with Adam listed after him, so possibly a son). In 1486 it is stated in the Exchequer Rolls that he held the Haining for life. He was appointed as one of the bailies in 1488 for the leasing of Greenwood (i.e. Girnwood) and the Lyne by Robert Scott from Sir Thomas Turnbull; he was there referred to as ‘Roberto Scot de Hanyng’. His son Robert was witness to a related document in 1488 and was also ‘junior’ in 1492 when he and his mother Janet had a 3 year lease on the Haining. In 1489 he was on the retour panel for the Kers of St. Helen Shaw in Selkirk. Either he or his son was ‘Robertum Scot de Hanyn’ in 1494 on the panel for the inheritance of Synton. In 1494 he was recorded when he had some of his sheep stolen from Haining (with his son John also having sheep stolen). He is the ‘Robert Scot in Hanyng’ listed among the many men given remission in 1504 for any part in the slaughter of Thomas Rutherford in Jedburgh Abbey. Also in 1504 he witnessed a sasine for the lands of Maxton Craig. He was succeeded by John of Haining, who is recorded in 1510 and died at Flodden. His wife’s first name was Janet, but her surname is not recorded. Robert (15th C.) bequeathed 12 sheep in the last will of Sir David of Branc Holmes in 1491/2. He is separate from Robert of Allanhaugh, but it is unclear if he is the same as one of the other contemporary Roberts. Robert of Horsleyhill (15th C.). William Elliot of Larriston is said to have married his daughter and thereby inherited Horsleyhill. It is unclear how he may have been related to other local Scotts; the Scotts of Horsleyhill of the 17th and 18th centuries were descendants of the Scotts of Tushielaw, and so (presumably) not closely related. Robert (15th C.) first witness listed on the 1494 charter in which James of Kirkurd granted the lands of Galalaw to his son David. He is listed as being of ‘Achinstancliech’, but it is uncertain where these lands were. It seems likely he is the same as one of the other contemporary Roberts. Robert (15th C.) recorded at the Justice-aine held in Selkirk in 1494/5 along with Robert Edgar. The pair were already ‘at the horn’ when James Young in Eldinhope was convicted of resetting and communing with them. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (15th/16th C.) son of David, recorded at the Justice-aine held in Selkirk in 1494/5. He was surety for James Laidlaw in ‘Wynterburn’ (possibly Winterburn) who had remission for killing his cousin John Laidlaw from Wolfehope. It is possible he was Robert, son of the Laird of Buccleuch, but that Robert was recorded being of Whitchester when he served as surety in the same year; hence it seems more likely he was son of David, younger of Buccleuch, and hence brother of Sir Walter of Buccleuch. However, he could be son of some other David with a connection to Selkirkshire. Robert (15th/16th C.) recorded along with Philip and Andrew in 1494/5.
three were among men who were already fugitives when John of Deloraine was accused of ‘resetting, supplying and intercommuning’ with them. It seems reasonable to assume that they were closely related, perhaps brothers, but from which branch of the Scotts is unknown. Robert (15th/16th C.) one of two men of the same name recorded in a document relating to Uddingston, in the Glasgow chartulary, listed as ‘Robertum Scot’. 2 Johns are also listed, as well as the widow of another John. They were all residents of Uddingston, and were presumably related. Robert (15th/16th C.) tenant in Langhope. He is recorded in the Exchequer Rolls for 1499, coming after Adam in Tushielaw in the list of payments made in Ettrick. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert of Hartshaw (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1499 when his son Walter gave his consent for Middlestead of Langhope was assigned to Patrick Home. This was probably the Langhope in the Ale valley. However, it is unclear where ‘Hartschaw’ was. He may have been the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (15th/16th C.) occupier of the lands of Redford for 6 years prior to 1499, when they were let instead to the Comptroller, Patrick Home, and he had to pay the balance due. These were the 3 steadings of ‘Hindhop, Drycleuchschele, and Redefurd’ in Ettrick Forest, which may have been associated with what was later called Redfordgreen. He may be the Robert, who had payment for the ‘fermes’ of some Crown lands in Ettrick Forest in the period 1503–06. Robert (15th/16th C.) witness in 1500 to a document for Scott of Branxholme, relating to the lands of Whitchesters. He is recorded as being ‘de La Toure’, although it is unclear which tower. He may be related to Adam of Hermiston or Walter, son of James of Haussenhead, who are also listed. He may be the same man as one of the other contemporary Roberts. It is possible that he is son of Robert of Whitchesters and Allanhaugh, and resided as the tower ‘between the bridges’ in Hawick, which is mentioned in a document of 1507/8. He may be related to John ‘called of the Toor’, who is recorded in 1609. Robert (15th/16th C.) tenant in Lairs who is listed in the Exchequer Rolls in 1501 among mostly local men who had their fines compounded. He is recorded as ‘Robertus Scot in Laris’. It seems likely he was related to George, who owned Lairs at that time. Robert of Deloraine (15th/16th C.) son of John of Deloraine. In 1494/5 he was recorded as elder son (‘filius senior’) of John when he served as surety for John Reid at the Justice-airo in Selkirk. He may have been tenant of Deloraine, rather than owner. Probably the same Robert ‘of Delorainen’ was recorded in 1494/5 when he received ‘remission’ along with David Lauder for assisting the King’s rebels etc. Also in 1494/5 he was allowed to ‘compone’ for several rieving crimes (including stealing cows from Thomas Frissell, horses from Wolfhope and cows from Newark), with Walter of Howpasley as surety. He could also be the ‘Robertum Scot de Ettrik’ recorded in the Exchequer Rolls of 1501 in relation to payments made to him. He was recorded in 1502 as being called ‘Bel-lit Robin’ (probably meaning that he was bald) when William Douglas of Cavers was fined for his non-appearance at the Jedburgh court. In 1510 it must be the same man who is ‘Belde Robin Scot’ when the Lady of Buccleuch (Elizabeth Kerr, wife of Sir Walter, the 8th Laird) was surety for him, but fined for his non-appearance; he was denounced a rebel and his goods forfeited. His nickname suggests that he was bald-headed. Robert (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 when he was fined £40 for non-appearance at the Justice-airo in Jedburgh. Alexander ‘Wyndis’ of that Ilk was convicted at the same time for the crime done to Philip Fawlaw, who lived in Hawick. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert of Aikwood (d.bef. 1516) possibly a son of the first Robert of Haining, although this is far from certain. He might be the Robert, son of Robert of Haining, who is recorded in 1486, 1488 and 1492. He was the first Scott of Oakwood, and is recorded as such in 1503 when he was witness to a pledge made by William Cranston of that Ilk at the Justice-airo in Selkirk. His children included: Michael, who succeeded; and Robert, who may have been grandfather of Simon of Bonnington. He may also have had a daughter Isabel, who married James Murray of Bowhill (whose daughter later transferred her lands to her uncle, Michael of Aikwood). Robert (d.bef. 1532) son of Robert of the Haining. In 1486 he leased the lands of ‘Weststeide de Filchosyde’ in Ettrick Ward. He was witness to a document relating to the lease of the lands of Greenwood (i.e. Gilmung) and the Lyne in 1488. He is explicitly referred to as son of Robert of Haining (who was one of the bailies in that part for the precept associated with the same land transfer). In 1492 he is recorded as ‘Roberto Scot junior’ when he and his mother leased the lands of Haining. It seems that Haining was later inherited by his brother John. He may be the same man as Robert of Aikwood. Robert of Whitehaugh (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Robert Scot of Quhittheff’ when witness to a sasine in 1499 for George Douglas, Master of Angus. This is probably the Whitehaugh near Hawick, although this is not certain. He was probably related to David ‘in Quhitthauche’ who is recorded in 1510 and perhaps the David who first gained Whitehaugh in 1479. He may have been related to the Scotts of Hesp and Borthwick.

Robert of Burnfoot (15th/16th C.) probably 3rd (or 4th) son of James of Kirkurd, Over and Nether Newhall and Hassendean. He was referred to as ‘of Nether Newhall’ and later ‘of Burnfoot’, showing that these were once different names for the same estate. He is recorded in 1510/1 receiving the 2 ‘merklands’ of ‘Dowiswod’ in the Barony of Hassendean from his brother David of Hassendean. He may have been succeeded by Adam. Robert of ‘Stirkschaws’ and Synton (d.bef. 1509) probably 2nd son of Walter of Synton and Stirkshaws (Stirches), although there are varied interpretations in these generations. He must have had a tower at Stirches, and was certainly involved in the transfer of Harden land to William ‘Boltfoot’, who is the ancestor of the Scotts of Harden. He was later the 8th Laird of Synton, making it unclear whether he was the same man as Robert ‘in Synton’, or whether there were 2 contemporary Roberts, both associated with Synton. He is probably the Robert of Stirches to whom James Newton of Dalcove sold the lands of Boonraw for 300 merks in 1481; in the associated sasine of 1487 he was described as son of Walter of Headshaw (further complicating the genealogy). In 1499 he is described as ‘Roberti Scot in Langhop’ when his rental entry is recorded in the Exchequer Rolls. In 1500 he was one of the men appointed to value the lands of Whithope. In 1501 he was assigned the ‘Weststeid de Gildhous, alias Dodbank’; he was described there as ‘Robert Scot [mortuus] de Stirkshaw’ (i.e., already dead, suggesting perhaps that there are 2 distinct Roberts of Stirches in this period) and the pledge was given by John, son of James Scott (probably of Kirkurd and Hassendean). He also refused the rental of Redford in 1501. In 1501/2 there is a bond of reversion with Alexander, Lord Home, in which he agreed to resign the lands of Harden on payment of £100 Scots at the alter of Wilton Kirk (however, it is unclear whether this happened). In 1502 he was ‘de stirkschawis’ when he served as surety for John in Hassendean at the Justice-aire in Selkirk. In 1504/5 he bought the ‘6 merkland of Bondraw of old extent’ (i.e. Boonraw, perhaps repurchasing) from David Hoppringle, Walter Scott of Howpasley, George Hepburn and William Middlemas; these lands had formerly belonged to James Newton of Dalcove, and he had a charter for the lands in 1505. In 1531 he was ‘Vat Scot doughters sone and ayr to umquhill George Vaych of Norcht Synton’, suggesting that he married a daughter of George Veitch, and thereby inherited part of Synton. His sons were Walter of Synton, William of Harden and David. He was killed by Andrew Crossar (i.e. Crozier), for which Crossar was drawn and hanged in 1509. He was probably dead by 1507/8 when Walter of Stirches (presumably his son) is recorded, and in 1510, when Walter, son of the deceased Robert, is mentioned holding lands in Synton, in an indenture between the Erskines and Kerrs. He was certainly deceased in 1512 when his son Walter transferred Harden to his other son William. David ‘Lady’ was recorded as tenant in Stirches in the early years of the 16th century, suggesting he may have been a close relative, possibly his son. In 1526 the long list of Borders men who had remission for their attack on the Earl of Arran contains ‘Walter Scot of Syntoun, William Scot in Hardane, Dauid Scot his brother’, all of whom were probably his sons. Adam Scott is recorded as brother-in-law of Walter in Synton, and hence was probably married to one of his daughters. Robert (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1509 as ‘Robertum Scott de Turri prope Selkirk’ on the panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting his father’s lands of Alemoor. His lands were clearly near Selkirk, but it is unclear whether they were a tower, or somewhere with a similar name. It is possible he was the same Robert mentioned being ‘de La Toure’ in a 1500 document. Robert (15th/16th C.) son of Walter of Headshaw, brother of Philip, David, Simon, Walter and Thomas. He was tenant in Synton and is easily confused with Robert of Stirches, who was also sometimes ‘of Synton’. In 1493 and in 1494/5 he was surety for Hector Lauder, Laird of Todrig, who had been involved with a raid on Minto and other crimes. In 1502 he is Robert ‘in syntoun’ who, along with William in Fenwick, was fined by the Court of the Judiciary for failing to enter William Middlemas. Also in 1502 he was surety for John in Whitehaugh, for John in Hermiston, for John in Walls (along with Walter of Headshaw), for William in Fenwick (when he was described as son of Walter of Headshaw) and for Patrick in Harwoodhill (when he was ‘in syntoun’). Additionally in 1502 he was ‘de stirkschawis’ when he served as surety for Hector Lauder in Clerklands, who had stolen livestock. from Harthern and wounded a man in Selkirk, and also (along with Walter of Howpasley) served as surety for Patrick, son of Adam ‘in Hardwodhill’, for Walter, son of Walter of Headshaw, and (with George Turnbull of Hallrule) for Walter Turnbull in Branxholme. Robert of Haining (d.bef. 1532) son of John of Haining, who died at Flodden. He was served heir in 1514. He was succeeded by his son Thomas, who was still a minor when he died. In 1617 he was one of several supporters of the Scotts of Harden who Lady Bonnington complained had attacked her family As part of a feud between the Harden and Bonnington Scotts). He is probably the Robert whose heirs are mentioned in 1527 when James ‘Mouss’, Burgess of Selkirk, resigned the fourth part of his lands of East Haining, which he held in bond from them. His son Thomas succeeded to Haining in 1538. Robert (16th C.) son of Adam of Tushielaw. He is mentioned in 1526, when Thomas McClellan of Bomby complained that his mother-in-law was removed by her son James Gordon of Lochinvar and delivered to him. Also in 1526 he was among Borderers listed having remission for the attack on the Earl of Arran; his father and brothers John and William were also listed. Robert (16th C.) recorded in Blindhaugh in 1535 when he witnessed a document at Drinkstone. This involved Robert in Howford requesting John in Drinkstone to vacate Drinkstone. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert of Howford (16th C.) recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books in 1535. He was then ‘in Howford and warned John in Dringston’ to vacate Drinkstone, which belonged heritably to him. John protested that he had valid possession consistent with the dues agreed to be paid to him. It is unclear how this dispute was resolved. Robert in Blindhaugh was one of the witnesses. The connections here may give a clue to the origins of the Scotts of Howford. In 1538 he witnessed (along with George in Blindhaugh) a document for Ralph Davidson involving Grahaslaw and ‘Chames’. In 1539 there is a marriage contract between his son Walter and Elizabeth, daughter of Marion Dalgleish (who appears to have been a sister of Adam Dalgleish of Deuchar). George in Blindhaugh was described as ‘gudschir’ (i.e. grandfather or other senior male relative) of his son Walter; it seems likely that George in Blindhaugh was his brother. An entry (in the Selkirk Protocol Books) in 1540 makes it clear that Marion Dalgleish was his wife, and hence the marriage contract was between step-brother and stepsister. He is probably the Robert ‘in Howford’ recorded in 1544 when John, heir of the deceased James Gledstanes of Cocklaw complained that he and his tutor William Scott (perhaps an uncle) had made an arrangement for 6½ husbandlands in Cocklaw and owed Gledstains 200 merks redemption money. Robert ‘Tutor of Howpasley’ (15th/16th C.) probably the 2nd or 3rd son of Alexander of Howpasley. He may be the Robert of Howpasley who in 1493 served as surety for Adam and Walter Turnbull in Hornshole and may also be the Laird of Howpasley who was surety for Robert in Todshawhaugh and John Turnbull in Hawick. However, Walter of Howpasley (presumably his brother) is also recorded as surety for several people in 1493 and 1494/5, and it appears that both men were designated as Laird of these lands at the same time. He is probably the ‘Robertum Scot de Holpaslot’ who was on the 1517 panel for Sir Walter Scott inheriting the lands of Branxholme. In 1524/5 he was ‘Tutor of Howpaslot’ when he was one of the men who pledged to help the new Warden (the Earl of Angus) keep the peace. He was listed as ‘tutour to Howpaslot’ in the large number of Borderers pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran (with his brother Simon also listed). In 1526 he was one of the men recorded in a protest by the superior of his lands, Douglas of Drumlanrig. He may also have been tutor to the Scotts of Buccleuch, like his brother Walter. In 1527 he was witness to the agreement ending the feud between Sir Walter of Branxholme and James Murray of Falahill. In 1527 he was among the local lairds, led by Sir Walter of Branxholme, given remission for mustering their supporters at Melrose (i.e. Skirmish Field) and Linlithgow. In 1528 he (along with other supporters of Buccleuch) was pardoned for crimes of treason and had his lands restored; this was at the instigation of Buccleuch, and the crimes referred to presumably included trying to capture the young King at Skirmish Field. He is ‘tutor of Howpaslot’ in 1528, when one of the arbitrators asked to decide on the succession to the lands of Borthaugh. He also witnessed an agreement between Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and James Murray of Falahill in 1528. He is further recorded as witness to a discharge relating to Scott lands in 1528/9, where he is described as ‘Robert Scot, tutor of Howpaslet’ and holder of the lands of Craik. He is mentioned in the indenture of 1529 to reconcile the feuding Scotts and Kerrs. In 1530 he was the first of the Lairds of Roxburghshire listed as submitting themselves to the King’s will to keep peace on the Border. In 1532 he was still ‘tutor of Houpaslot’ when he was executor (along with George of Blindhaugh) for Janet of Howapasley, and agreed to pay Andrew Ker of Primside a fee for the marriage of Janet to Thomas McDougall of Makerstoun; he also promised to bind himself to ‘his beloved friend’ George of Blindhaugh, against payment for this dowry. A charter of 1532/3 transfers Midshiels and Appletreehall from Janet Scott (daughter of his brother Walter) to him. This is confirmed in a royal grant of 1536, Appletreehall and Midshiels formerly being held by his father (presumably Alexander of Howapasley). Robert (d.bef. 1539) Burgess of Edinburgh. In 1539 his widow Elizabeth Forsyth gave her tenement and rigs in Selkirk to their daughter Elizabeth. James (who was probably a relative) pointed out that he already had liferent of the tenement. Robert (16th C.) recorded in 1539 as a subtenant of Margaret Falside and Walter Scott in their lands in either Ashkirk or Falside. Robert ‘Auld Hob o Riskenhope’ (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1557 when he paid rental on Shorthope in the Ettrick valley to the monks of Melrose. He was probably related to the Scotts of Tushielaw, Thirlestane etc. Robert of Howapasley (d.bef. 1567) son of Sir Walter of Howapasley. His uncle Robert was his ‘tutor’ for many years; he was a minor until at least 1530. He is probably the Robert to whom in 1532 Janet (his mother) sold her 10 merklands of Birkenside in Berwickshire, and which he then sold to Andrew Ker of Primside. In 1533 he (and presumably not his uncle), along with John of Thirlestane, entered a ‘bond of manrent’ with Malcolm, Lord Flemming (Chamberlain of Scotland). Also in 1533 he and Philip in Dryhope were accused by William in Kershope (in Ettrick) of stealing goods from there. In 1539 he and Ninian Anderson received 289 sheep on behalf of Thomas Marjoribanks, which Patrick Murray of Falahill, ‘Sanders’ Murray and James Grieve owed to the King’s grace. He is probably the Robert of Howpasley who had 6 particates of land within Hawick according to the 1537 Charter. He had the lands of Howpasley confirmed to him and his wife Isobel Murray in 1536, and later received the ‘non-entry’ duties of the lands for the years since the death of his father Walter. He is the Laird of ‘Howpaslot’ who was on an assize in Edinburgh in 1534. In 1535 he had a black horse stolen from his lands of ‘Wolcleuche’ by Simon Armstrong and others and his farm at Howpasley was burned by a group of Armstrons, with 60 cattle being taken. In 1539 he and Thomas (son of Adam) were warned to remove their tenants from the lands of Falside, owned by Sir Walter of Branxholme and his son Walter. In 1539/40 he sold the farm of ‘le cot rig’ in the Mains of Appletreehall to Janet Scott, widow of Robert ‘Elwand’; it is written that he ‘binds himself faithfully after coming to his house from Edinburgh’ to guarantee peaceful possession of the farm by Janet until he paid her the same amount back. In 1539 he was on the ‘retour’ panel for James Crichton of Cranston Riddell. In 1541 he occupied the lands of Whitehope (in Yarrow), Ladhope (in Ettrick) and ‘Aldishope’ (in Ettrick), as well as claiming the lands of Howford. In 1541 he was one of the cautioners (for the huge sum of £10,000) for John Johnstone of that Ilk. Also in 1541 he was one of the sureties for Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and witnessed an infeftment of lands to William, son of Robert of Allanhaugh. An English document of 1543 describes how his farms at ‘Appiltre and Chauerbenton’ (presumably Appletreehall and Chamberlain Newton) were attacked by men from Tynedale, who took 70 head of cattle, 170 sheep, 28 horses and goods from the houses, as well as 12 prisoners. He is listed among the supporters of Sir Walter in 1547/8 when they complained about the Kerrs joining the English at Pinkie, and burning their lands. In 1549 he granted his 2 husband lands of Appletreehall to Hector, brother of David Turnbull of Wauchope; his heir Walter, and other son Robert, were among the witnesses. In 1550 he gave a further charter to Hector Turnbull for the lands of Pinnacle and Broomlands. Also in 1550, he entered into a bond with Sir Walter of Branxholme and 9 other Scotts (and Elliot of Redheugh) in which they promised the Queen and Lord Governor to assist in bringing in criminals. He is recorded in 1553, along with his son Walter, when their lands of Birkenside in Berwickshire were ‘apprised’, i.e. sold to pay debts. In 1553/4 he was listed among Scotts and their supporters who a group of Kerrs promised not to harm. In 1557 he was fined for not appearing among other Scotts to answer for the attempted murder of Sir Peter Cranston at the Kirk of the Lowes. In 1561 he was among Border Lairds who appeared before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft. In 1562 he leased his farm of Whitehope (in Yarrow) to John Daigleish in Deuchar; the witnesses included William in Hartwoodmyres, William’s son Thomas, Adam of ‘Vamfra’, Philip of Dryhope and William in Tushielaw. Also in 1562 he witnessed a transaction for William in Hartwoodmyres. In 1562/3 he was elder of Howpasley when, along with his son Sir Walter, the superior of the lands tried unsuccessfully to have him removed. He is probably the ‘Lard of Howpaslocht’ listed in 1564 among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. He is probably the Laird of Howpasley listed on Monipennie’s c.1594 compilation of Border lairds (even although he was long deceased by then). His wife is recorded in this charter as Isobel Murray, who was 2nd daughter of John ‘the Outlaw Murray’ of Falahill. He was succeeded by his son Sir Walter of Birkenside and Howpasley in 1578/9. His children may also have included John son Sir Walter of Birkenside and Howpasley in Murray’ of Falahill. He was succeeded by his ray, who was 2nd daughter of John ‘the Outlaw His wife is recorded in this charter as Isobel Mur-

His wife is recorded in this charter as Isobel Murray, who was 2nd daughter of John ‘the Outlaw Murray’ of Falahill. He was succeeded by his son Sir Walter of Birkenside and Howpasley in 1578/9. His children may also have included John of Thirlestane. Robert of Allanhaugh (d.c.1557) son of Robert of Allanhaugh and Whitchesters, he held 3 ‘particates’ of land in Hawick according to the 1537 Charter. He may be the same man as Robert ‘de La Toure’ who witnessed a charter relating to the lands of Whitchesters in 1500 (although it is possible there was another generation of Roberts). In 1507/8 he was probably the Robert, son and heir of Robert of Whitchesters who had a loan with John Murray of Falahill involving the ‘turrim edificatam burgo de Hawic inter pontes’ (i.e. the tower built in Hawick between the bridges). If this is true, it suggests that the predecessor of Drumlanrig’s Tower was built by the Scotts of Whitchesters and Allanhaugh. In 1517 he was on the panel of ‘retour’ for Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch inheriting his father’s barony of Branxholme. He was probably the Robert of ‘Allanhaucht’ who, with several others, swore to help the Earl of Angus (the new Warden) keep the peace in 1524/5. He is probably also the Scott of ‘Allanhauch’ who is recorded in a protest by Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1526. In 1527 he was among the local lairds given remission for mustering their supporters at Melrose (i.e. Skirmish Field) and Linlithgow. He is mentioned as being pardoned about 1528, along with Robert of Howpasley and William of Hassendeuan, and also mentioned in the indenture of 1529 attempting to reconcile the Scotts and Kerrs. In 1530 he was listed among the 21 Roxburghshire Lairds who submitted themselves to James V to keep better order. In 1530/1 his son and heir apparent William was entered into ward in Borthwick Castle along with John, son of Walter of Synton, with sureties being Robert, Lord Maxwell and John Johnstone of that Ilk. In 1535 he was indicted for not paying to George, Lord Home 9 years of rent for the lands of Greenwood and Lyne; his brother Adam acted as surety. Also in 1535 he was tried in Jedburgh of a set of rieving crimes, specifically bringing men from Liddesdale to burn Midlem and steal from several farms near there, as well as at Croslie, Fastheugh, Yair, Town-of-

Rule, Sunderlandhall, Clarilaw and elsewhere; he was found innocent of the charges. He is recorded as ‘of Alanhaucht’ in 1539 when involved with a bond among Scotts, relating to the illegitimacy of Thomas, son to Adam Scott. He was a witness to the 1540 resignation of the lands of Nether Harden from Simon Scott of Fenwick to William Scott of Harden. In 1541 he was accused by Sir Walter of Buccleuch of attacking his wife with a Jedburgh staff, and ‘had she not been ready, the butt end had slain her’; later that year, on Boxing Day, he drove away the cattle from Branxholme, and clearly there was a feud of some sort between the two Scotts. He may be the ‘Rob Scott of Halowathie in Tevedall’ who was recorded in an English letter as having his houses burned by men of Newcastie in 1542, and 16 of his cows taken. In 1553/4 he was listed among Scotts and their supporters who a group of Kerrs promised not to harm. In 1554/5 he is recorded in a sasine as the tutor of the young Walter Scott of Branxholme. He was one of the group of 200 Scotts and others who rode to the Kirk of the Lowes to try to kill Sir Peter Cranston in 1557, being later bound over not to harm Cranston afterwards. He may be the Robert ‘of Allanmouth’ listed as being ‘in a former age’ a ‘Pensioner’ of the house of Buccleuch by Scott of Satchells. He served as a ‘tutor’ for Walter Scott of Buccleuch during his minority. He may be the Robert of Whitchesters who was said to have married Christian, daughter of William Cockburn of Henlander. He was succeeded by his son William, and may also have had a daughter who married John Scott of Thirlestane. In 1541 he inflicted his son William (an William’s wife, Margaret, daughter of John of Thirlestane) in his 6 merkland of ‘Quhyisester treis’ in the Barony of Whitchesters. In 1569 his grandson and heir was stated to be another Robert of Allanhaugh (whose son William is recorded in 1581): it therefore seems likely that the succession was this Robert, William, Robert and William again, all before 1600. Robert of Alton and Clarilaw (16th C.) eldest son of Adam of Clarilaw. He is recorded as ‘in Clarelaw’ in 1528/9 in a ‘discharge’ of fees by Patrick, Earl of Bothwell, relating to lands of several Scotts. He probably also related to the David ‘in Clarelaw’ recorded in the 1530s and 1540s. He is said to have lived to an advanced age and was succeeded in the lands of Alton by his son Adam. He is probably the Robert ‘in Clarilaw descended from the antient house of Hassenden’ who was listed by Satchells as being among the 24 ‘Pensioners’ of Buccleuch. Probably the same man was recorded as son and heir of Adam of ‘Nethirmannis of Hassinden’ in 1550/1 when he was infested in the lands of Little Drinkstone. In 1566 presumably the same Robert is ‘in Hassendenburn’ when he had a letter of reversion in his favour from John Scott of Drinkstone for the lands of Little Drinkstone. He is recorded as Robert of Over Hassendean when he was witness to a confirming charter for the Turnbull of Hassendean-bank in 1571. He is similarly recorded in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branzholme; he had purchased some land from John Scott of Drinkstone, the money being held by Scott of Branzholme’s agent, John Watson. In 1580 he gave annual rent of his lands of the Over Mains of Hassendeanburn to the servant of Margaret Douglas, Countess of Bothwell (widow of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch) for the loan of £60 Scots; this was with the consent of his eldest son Adam. He ‘touched the pen’ to subscribe (meaning that he could not write himself). He was probably the Robert of Alton listed among many Scotts and their allies in a 1581 summons to appear before the Privy Council regarding the feud with the Elliots and Armstrongs. He was also a witness in 1581 to a ‘letter of slains’ in Hawick whereby Robert and James Scott forgave the Scotts of Allanhaugh and Over Southfield for the murder of their brother George. He was ‘of Altoun’ when he signed the Scott clan bond in 1589. He may be the Robert of Hassendean who was involved in a dispute with Robert Elliot of Horsleyhill in 1592 over a 2 merk land in Dowswood. Keith Scott suggests he lived to an advanced age and died about 1594, but this seems too late, so there may be 2 generations here. His son was Adam of Alton and his grandson was Robert of Alton; in 1606 Robert was served as heir to his father Adam in lands in Chamberlain Newton and to his grandfather Robert in lands in Hassendean, thus establishing the link between the 3 generations. In 1653 Robert of Alton’s daughters Margaret, Bessie and Agnes were served ‘heirs portioners’ of Robert ‘of Easter Maines of Hasindaine’, their ‘foir grandsher’, who was probably him; hence he was great-grandfather of these 3 women. It is unclear how he was related to earlier and contemporary Scotts of Hassendean, however, it is possible he was closely connected with David (who was killed about 1564). Robert (16th C.) 2nd son of Philip of Headshaw. In 1531 he was served to him the lands of Hartwoodburn after his death, his uncle William of Ormiston acting as official for the legal transaction. It is unclear whether this happened, since his brother Walter was occupying Hartwoodburn in 1541. However, also in 1541 Walter assigned to him one quarter of Hartwoodburn, ‘lying in yndail by open fields’ for 5 years. He is recorded again as brother of Walter in a Selkirk document of 1541/2. In 1542 he is probably the Robert who let half of Hartwoodburn to John Angus, with the advise of Walter in Headshaw (probably his brother) and Walter of Haining. He could be the Robert in Hartwoodburn who witnessed a sasine in Selkirk in 1544, involving Thomas. In 1579 he was recorded as brother german of Walter of Headshaw when he was witness to the making of the inventory of Isabel Donald, widow of Robert of Palace. Robert (16th C.) Customar of Irvine according to the Exchequer Rolls for at least the years 1537–42. He gave in his reports with William, junior, who was surely related. He was probably also related to John, who was an official in Irvine at about the same time. Robert (16th C.) tenant in Borthaugh who was recorded in 1549 when tenants and servants of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme complained about their farms being burned by a group of Englishmen and Kers in the previous year. Robert (16th C.) possibly a son of David of Tushielaw and younger brother of Adam of Tushielaw and John of Thirlestane (although this is uncertain). He was Parish Clerk of St. Mary of the Lowes. He was described as ‘in Bowhill’ in 1557 when he was repledged for his part in the armed mob which came to the Church at St. Mary’s seeking to kill Sir Peter Cranston. His sureties were Sir John Scott, Commissary of the Archbishop of Glasgow and Robert Scott of Bonnington. Other men named include Scotts of Allanhaugh, Burnfoot, Haining, Harden, Howpasley, Synton and Thirlestane. He is probably the Robert ‘of Bowhill’ who paid rental for lands in Rodono to Melrose Abbey in 1557. He is easy to confuse with Robert of Aikwood and Bowhill. Robert of Horsleyhill (16th C.) charged by the Queen’s Advocate in 1563 with ‘Resetting of Inglismenne, and Tíftuus Steling of certane Oxin’. William of Tushielaw was fined for not producing the relevant documents. Since it appears that Horsleyhill was owned by the Elliots about this time it is unclear how he could have been Laird (perhaps this was an error of Pitcairn in ‘Scott’ for ‘Elliott’?; however, descendants of the Scotts of Tushielaw would later own Horsleyhill). Robert ‘Wait About Um’ (16th C.) recorded in 1562 along with Robert ‘of Collefurd’ and John ‘callit the Clerk’. The 3 were excepted from the bond between the Scotts and the Kers, but instead we to be pursued for their crimes. His name is explicitly recorded as ‘Wait About Him’, but it is unclear what this meant. Robert ‘Hob’ (d.1564) recorded in 1562 along with John ‘callit the Clerk’ his brother and Hob ‘Wait About Him’. He is listed as Robert ‘of Collefurd’. The 3 were excepted from the assurance given by the Scotts that they would end their feud with the Kers, but instead these men were to be pursued (and hence presumably already found guilty of crimes). They were convicted of sheep-stealing and reset and hanged, along Mark Elliot called ‘of the Hill’ and John Henderson ‘the Falser’; he is recorded as ‘callit of Colyfurde’. He was surely ‘of the Hill’ and John Henderson ‘the Falser’. He and his son Adam sold Wamphray to James Johnstone of Pocornwell in 1548/9 and they also disposed of Rysholm in about 1550. They then moved to Selkirkshire, where he was ‘in Haikwood’ (i.e. Oakwood) in 1550. In about 1550 he purchased ‘Haitpule and Little Ernstoun’ from Lord Brthwick; he had previously been tenant in Haitpule. At about the same time he bought ‘Halmedow and Horsward’ from John Touris of Manor. In 1552 he was described as ‘in Aikwode’ when he and his son and heir Adam purchased both halves of the lands of Bonnington from the daughters and heirs of Martin Wylie. He was ‘formerly of Wamfra’ in 1552 when he and Robert of Thirlestane paid fines for people at the Justice- aire in Selkirk. In 1553/4 he was listed as ‘of Wanfra’ among Scotts and their supporters who a group of Kers promised not to harm. In 1557/8 he was ‘sometime of Wamfray’ when along with his son Adam they were bound by a charter to sell ‘Ryisholme’ in Ayrshire to John Hamilton of ‘Beynstoun’; however, they were unable to do so, having been evicted and hence had to give rentals of Bonnington and other lands in Peeblesshire to Hamilton. He is probably the same as the Robert ‘of Bonynoune’ who was surety for some of the Scotts charged in 1557 with trying to kill Sir Pe ter Cranston at the Kirk of the Lowes, and who was on the panel for charging John Gledstains of Cocklaw with murder in 1561. In 1557 he was ‘of Bonynoune’ when he paid rental to Melrose Abbey for ‘Esyphuop’ and ‘Stobeclouch’. In 1558 he was ‘of Wamfra’ when he received ‘cloiss writtingis’ from the Queen. He was listed among the men who appeared before the Privy Council in a promise to end the feud between the Kers and the Scotts in 1562. He secondly married Isobel Ker, who was widow of Michael of Aikwood. He was succeeded in the lands of Bonnington by his son Adam, and he was grandfather of Simon of Bonnington (who was served heir to his grandmother, Katherine Boyle, in 1611); he may be the Adam ‘of Vanftra’ recorded in 1562. His other sons were: Robert, who predeceased him; John of Wakefield; John (again), an illegitimate son; Robert, another illegitimate son, who was legitimatised in 1576 (and may be the Robert of Waumphray mentioned in 1597/8). He is probably the Robert recorded in a service of heirs in 1625; William Burnet succeeded to the brother of his great-grandfather on his mother’s side, as heir to John of ‘Walkmanfield’ (in Peeblesshire), son of Robert of Bonnington, brother of Adam. S. Robert of Thirlestane (d.c.1576) son of John, the first recorded Laird of Thirlestane, in Ettrick valley. In 1550 he was among local lairds (including Walter of Buccleuch and Robert of Howpasley) who swore to the Queen and Lord Governor that they would help bring in criminals. In 1553 there is an assurance by Walter Kerr of Cessford not to hurt him or his family and friends (this following the murder of Sir Walter of Buccleuch in Edinburgh). In 1557 he was listed as being ‘of Schastaine’ (perhaps a transcription error) when he paid rental for ‘Craigie’, ‘Ramseclouch’ and ‘Thrilistane’ to the monks of Melrose. He was also involved in 1557 with the band of about 200 Scotts and their supporters who sought out Sir Patrick Cranston at the Kirk of the Lowes as part of a feud. He was appointed one of the curators of Sir Walter of Branxholme in 1562, when he was in his minority. In 1564 he was listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. He was probably the ‘Gudman of Thirlestane’ on an assize of 1564 involving the murder of David of Hassendean. And in 1564/5 he was also listed as one of the 4 curators of Sir Walter of Branxholme in the bond signed with the Kerrs; he signed ‘with my hand at the pen’, indicating that he could not write). He was probably Warden-Depute of the West Borders, although no dates are known. In 1567 he was one of the cautioners for the marriage contract between Elizabeth, sister of Walter of Branxholme and Thomas, son of Walter Ker of Cessford. Also in 1567 he and Master Thomas Weston relieved Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme as surety for Archie’s Will in Gorenberry and Sim Elliot in Dodburn. In 1568 he had a charter of feu-right for Thirlestane, Ramsaycleuch, Scabcleuch and Craighill from the Commendator of Melrose Abbey. In 1568/9 his support was mentioned as a curator of Sir Walter of Buccleuch on a further bond between the Scotts and Kers. In 1569 he was on the panel of inquest for Grizel Borthwick inheriting superiority of her father’s lands in Wilton. In 1569 he (along with Sir Walter of Branxholme, Landlands of that Ilk and William, Lord Borthwick) was surety for several Elliots. He was also cautioner for Walter of Headshaw in 1569 and for other Borderers in 1573. In late 1573 he was charged to enter Ade Dodds and George Laidlaw, tenants in Ramsaycleuch. He was curator of Walter Scott of Buccleuch, recorded in 1575, but is deceased by 1577. He is probably the Laird listed in Monipennie’s c.1594 (but put together much earlier) compilation of Border chiefs. He married Margaret Scott, who may have been daughter of ‘Wicked Wat’ (not a daughter of the 1st Lord of Buccleuch, as stated by Satchells); she was among the curators of her son Robert, complaining about the treatment he had at the hands of Simon Scott of Winterburgh, and was still living at Thirlestane in 1609. He was succeeded by his eldest son Sir Robert. Other sons were Walter of Gamescleuch and William of Fingland (who may also have had the lands of Merrylaw); both these sons are listed among those involved with the 1593 slaughter of Lord Maxwell and his men at Dryfe Sands, and both were probably at the rescue of Kinmont Willie. Robert of Allanhaugh (16th C.) recorded as ‘Young Robert Scot of Alanehauch’ in 1557 when he rented the Brugh from Melrose Abbey. Probably the same Robert is described as heir to his deceased grandfather in 1569, when there was a discharge from his cousin, Sir Walter of Branxholme, for whom his grandfather acted as tutor during Sir Walter’s minority; he was also granted the non-entry of the rents and other fees associated with Whitchester, from the time of the death of the former Robert of Allanhaugh (around 1557) until he became of age. He is probably the Robert of Allanhaugh who in 1579 sold (or borrowed money on) the annual rent of ‘Reahousknow’ for £100 Scots to Walter of Todrig; the transaction was witnessed at Riddell. Probably the same Robert of Allanhaugh is listed in 1581 among Scotts and their allies who were summoned to appear before the Privy Council; his son William is also listed. He was most likely the Robert of Allanhaugh (along with William ‘in Alanehaucht, now in Hawik’, presumably his son, and Scotts associated with Over Southfield) who were involved in the murder of Hawick resident George Scott in 1578; George’s brothers Robert and James wrote a ‘letter of slains’ in Hawick in which they forgave the assailants. In 1585 he had a bond with Sir Walter of Buccleuch, settling an old feud over the death of David, son of Adam of Allanhaugh, and Hob Dalgleish, servant of Sir Walter’s in Braidhaugh; his ‘brother germane’ Robert of Drumlanrig as cautioner. Ferniehirst and others, with Sir James Douglas they would not help or reset Sir Thomas Kerr of allegiance to the Crown and gave assurance that possibly related. In 1572/3 the same men swore al-

Jock’ was one of the other men and hence pos-

as one of 4 inhabitants of Hawick who entered Flescheour’, who was accused of theft in Berwick.

In the same year he was listed as son to Walter of Synton among Border Lairds who appeared before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft. He may be the Robert, brother to Walter of Stirches who witnessed the installation of the new Parson and Vicar of Ashkirk in 1579/80. He married a daughter (possibly Helen) of Rutherford of Hunthill and was succeeded by his son Walter ‘the Hawk’ (who was probably the first to be designated ‘of Whitslade’, and was served heir to his grandfather Walter in the lands of Whitslade in 1605). Scott of Satchells also says he had a son Thomas, who was 1st of Todrig, but this appears to be off by a generation. It is said that another son, also Robert, accompanied Scott of Buccleuch on the raid to rescue Kinmont Willie from Carlisle Castle in 1596. He may have been responsible for the building (or rebuilding) of the tower at Stirches. Robert (d.1583) natural son of Robert of Wamphray, Rysholm and Bonnington. He was legitimised in 1576. He is probably the Robert of Wamphray who received a promise of money for merchandise in Edinburgh in 1577. In 1581 was a merchant burgess of Edinburgh, ‘of the house of Wamfray’, when along with several other Scotts (from Hartwoodmyres, Gamescleuch, Gilmanscleuch, Chamberlain Newton, North Bowhill, Dryhope, Catslack and Howпасley), he supported William of Tushielaw and Robert of Aikwood in representing Adam in Bonnington (his half-brother) in a dispute with Robert of Haining. Robert ‘of Wamphra’, who was subject to a complaint involving a Burgess of Edinburgh in 1597/8 was probably his son. His testament was not confirmed until 1601, when his grandson (also Robert, burgess of Edinburgh) as his main executor; he is there described being of Bonnington. Robert of Burnfoot (16th C.) probably 2nd son of William of Harden, as stated by Scott of Satchells. He was eldest son of William with his 2nd wife, who was a Ker of Fairmile and widow of Riddell of that Ilk. His brother was George of Todrig and his lands were Burnfoot in the Ale valley (as opposed to Burnfoot-on-Teviot). He may be the Robert of Burnfoot who, along with Robert of Burhead, was in 1579/80 involved in a case against Thomas Dalgleish and Simon of Gamescleuch over the murder of David Dalgleish in Harehead; restitution was being sought from the pair, with their arbitrators being William of Huntly and Robert, Burgess of Hawick. He may have been father of William of Burnfoot in Ale and hence Robert and Walter, brothers of William. These 3 brothers were mentioned in 1612 when the sons of the Earl of Bothwell were involved in an ongoing dispute with them over land and tithes. Robert (16th C.) described as son of deceased Robert of Raeknowe in an undated marriage contract with Agnes, daughter of Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule. Sir Thomas lived until 1572, and hence it must have been before this date. He was probably related to David of Raeknowe who was one of the 24 ‘pensioners’ of Buccleuch. Probably the same Robert ‘of Realhouskno wife was recorded in 1581 when he witnessed an arrangement where Katherine Scott, widow of Robert of Colifort, resigned her lands of Hundlestrow to her son Thomas; his brother William was also a witness, as well as William of Allanhaugh. In 1582 he witnessed an agreement in Hawick between Alan Deans and Alexander Weens. Robert of Over Hassendean (16th C.) see Robert of Alton and Clarilaw. Robert (16th C.) mentioned in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. It is stated that ‘Robert Scottiss wyf in Hawik’ was owed ‘for sum ordinar dwtie, sex pundis’, suggesting that she had provided some kind of service to the Laird (perhaps catering). Robert of Palace (d.bef. 1579) recorded in 1579 when the inventory of his widow Isabel Donald was listed in Selkirk. The witnesses were Robert (brother of Walter of Headshaw), John in Kirkhouses (and his son James), George Waugh in Kirkhouses and John Beattie in Burnfoot. His wife had previously been married to Andrew Shortreed. The executors for his children were Walter of Headshaw and George Shortreed of Essenside. His daughter with her, Marion ‘alias Mane’ was left with George of Synton. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th C.) recorded in 1581 as ‘callit of Glenrathane’ when, along with his brother George and Hob ‘callit Huitill’ they were accused of attacking Martin Elliot of Braidlie’s farm at Northcroft. Their chief was Walter of Goldielands, and so they must have been relatively local. ‘Glenrathane’ is probably Glenrachan in Ewesdale, rather than Glenrath south of Peebles. He is probably the ‘Hob Scott in Glenrachane’ listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605. He was surely related to Archibald there, who was declared a fugitive in 1606. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th C.) referred to as ‘callit Huitill’ in 1581 when there was a complaint against him and 2 other Scots (Hob of ‘Glenrathane’ and his brother George) attacking Martin Elliot’s farm of Northcroft. It is unclear where ‘Huitill’ might have been. Robert of Aikwood (d.bef. 1581) son of Michael of Aikwood. He was younger brother of Walter and William, who both appear to have died without heirs. In 1553 he received a precept from the Archbishop of Glasgow as heir to his father’s lands of Hermiston. In 1554 he succeeded his brother William to his half of Bowhill. He was ‘of Bowhill’ when served heir to his brother Walter in the half steadings of Kershope (called ‘Westsyd de Kershop’ inEttrick) in 1555. Scott of Satchells describes him as the progenitor of the Scotts of Bowhill. In 1564/5 he married Marion, daughter of Sir William Cranston of that Ilk. In 1580 there was a marriage contract between his sister Elizabeth and Robert, son of the deceased James in Whitslade. Also in 1580 he sold some woods near Selkirk to a group of men. In 1581 he and William of Tushielaw were the ‘byndaris’ in an action of Adam in Bonmington against Robert of Haining, regarding ownership of 6 chalders of grain. He is probably the ‘Robert of . . . wod’ listed among many Scots and their allies in a 1581 summons to appear before the Privy Council regarding the feuds with the Elliots and Armstrongs. In 1581 he represented his tenants in an agreement to pay the minister of Selkirk. Also in 1581 there was an agreement between his son and heir Robert and his widow Marion over liferents, which were in 1581/2 assigned to Isobel, daughter of John Home of Crumstane, his widow’s 2nd husband. He was succeeded by his son Robert, and it is unclear which of the Selkirk records of about 1580 relate to him and which to his son. His children include: Robert, who succeeded to Bowhill; William (in Scotstaines) who was probably at the rescue of Kimmont Willie in 1596; James, recorded in 1599; and Walter (alive in 1592). Rev. Robert (16th C.) son of Walter of ‘Hindscha’ (i.e. Headshaw) he became minister of Ashkirk in 1585/6, on the death of Daniel Chalmers. However, nothing else is recorded about him. It is possible he is actually the same man as Robert of Headshaw, unless there are 2 generations of Walter of Headshaw and he is son of the 1st (or Walter of Headshaw had 2 sons called Robert). Robert (16th C.) Burgess of Hawick recorded in 1579/80 when he served as an arbitrator on behalf of Robert of Burnfoot and Robert of Burnhead in a case against Thomas Dalgleish of Deuchar and Simon of Gamescleuch. He was also listed as Burgess of Hawick in 1581, when he was recorded as brother of George and James (who was a cordiner). In 1581 he and his brother James wrote a ‘letter of slains’ in Hawick, forgiving the murderers of his brother, who were the Scotts from Allanhaugh, Over Southfield and others. He signed the document ‘wytht my hand’ (although his brother James did not). He may well be the same as one of the other contemporary Roberts. Robert ‘Hob o the Knowe’ (16th C.) recorded in Selkirk in 1580 when he resigned a tenement there in livery to his wife, Alison Lyle. Robert (16th C.) servitor to Adam Hislop in Catslack. In 1581 in Selkirk he is listed among people owed money to Thomas Cruickshank. Robert of Howford (16th/17th C.) listed by Scott of Satchells as one of the 24 ‘Pensioners’ of Buccleuch. He was also said to have been on the raid to rescue Kinmont Willie in 1596 and to have received the lands of ‘Cowd-house’ (presumably Coldhouse) for his service. He must have been related to the later Scotts of Coldhouse. He was probably son of Robert of Howford and was succeeded by William, probably his son. He may be the Robert of ‘Cowfur’ recorded in 1581 when his son and heir Thomas was involved in a dispute over the ‘maills’ of lands in Hundleshope with John, parson in Hundleshope. Robert of Langhope and Huntly (16th/17th C.) listed as one of the 24 ‘Pensioners’ of Buccleuch in Scott of Satchells doggerel verse. He is there recorded as ‘of Langup’ and having the lands of ‘Outterhunly for his service for several ages’. He was said to have been in the group that rescued Kinmont Willie in 1596. He was probably son of William ‘in Huntly’, who was 3rd son of John, younger of Synton. His brothers Walter and William were listed among supporters of Scott of Thirlestane about 1610. He was probably succeeded by his son Walter, who appears to have been succeeded by another James, who was probably a younger son. William, recorded in 1608 as brother of Walter, was probably yet another son. Robert of Shielwood (16th/17th C.) 5th son of John, younger of Synton. His sons probably included: Robert of Shielwood; and Walter of Girnwood. Robert of Haining (d.bef. 1611) son of Thomas. He is recorded in a bond of 1576/7, not to remove ‘kindly’ tenants and in the following year lost a dispute with John, minister of Selkirk, over the possession of ‘the half toun and landis of Elistoun’. Also in 1576/7 he was a witness to the payment of a fine by Sir Walter Ker of Cessford because of George Ker not marrying Sir Walter of Branxholme’s sister Janet. In 1579 Walter of Goldielands, acting as Bailie Depute of the Regality of Melrose, entered him into the lands of ‘Elistoun’ or ‘Ilistoun’ (which had been possessed by Adam of Bonnington). He witnessed another transaction in Selkirk in 1579. In 1579/80 he appears to be recorded as Provost of Selkirk and complained that Walter of Goldielands had backtracked on his promise to appoint him as Provost Depute; Scott of Goldielands claimed he was not appointed as Depute, but elected into that role. In 1580 he had a court case against Adam of Bonnington and his wife ‘Dame Janet Scot’ was mentioned in a sasine fo ‘Ilistoun’. Additionally in 1580 he received 200 merks from James in Whithope in redemption for the lands of ‘Hanyng Mot’ and was recorded in a transaction involving lands in ‘Ilistoun’, with his brothers William and Walter acting as witnesses. Also in 1580 he paid redemption money to John in Aikwood for the lands of Haining Rig and ‘Louchtknow’. In 1580/1 he was a judge appointed on behalf of George of Synton in a dispute over ownership of Synton Mill with Walter of Stiches. He was listed among many Scotts and their allies in a 1581 summonses to appear before the Privy Council regarding the feud with the Ellotts and Armstrongs (he may have been involved with Scott of Headshaw in the attack on the Ellotts of Braidlie). He was in ward in Edinburgh Castle in 1581, along with George of Synton, when his cautioners were Mungo and Alexander, Burgesses of Edinburgh; Alexander was cautioner for him when the surety was renewed. Also in 1581 he leased the half land of Haining Rig to Gilbert Govenlock; William in Haining was a witness. Additionally in 1581 he had an agreement with Patrick Murray of Falahill over the ‘feu maill’ of the lands of Haining and witnessed an agreement between Margaret, widow of William of Burnfoot and her son William. Further in 1581 he admitted Adam Broadfoot to a piece of land in East Haining, with his brother William acting as a witness, and he represented his tenants in an agreement to pay the minister of Selkirk. He also in 1581 took a loan from John Geddes in Branxholme for annual rent of lands in Haining, witnessed by 2 of his servants. In 1585 he witnessed a bond (signed at Selkirk and Hawick) settling a feud between the Scotts of Branxholme and the Scotts of Allanhaugh. In 1587 he acted as cautioner for Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule, for Walter of Branxholme and for Walter Chisholme of that Ilk. He signed a bond with other Scotts in 1589 and was listed on the ‘Roll of the Clans’ of 1590. In 1590 he was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. Also in 1590 a number of Murrays were put under caution not to harm him and James Scott ‘callit Mekle Jame Eister’. Additionally in the same year James Pringle of Torsance and William Borthwick of Crookston were his cautioners for him not to harm Patrick Murray of Falahill or his dependants. In 1590/1 he was a cautioner for Walter Chisholme of that Ilk in a case brought against the Scottish Wardens and leaders on the Border, for failing to produce certain fugitives. He was in dispute over the minister of Selkirk, according to documents of 1594, 1595 and 1607. He represented Buccleuch at a meeting of Wardens representatives at Dayholme on the Kershope Burn in 1596. Afterwards Lord Scrope’s agent, Salkeld, captured Kimmont Willie, leading later to his daring rescue from Carlisle Castle. In 1597/8 he was still Provost Depute of Selkirk. In 1599 he witnessed the bonds (signed at Branxholme) between Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch and the Armstrongs and Elliots of Liddesdale. Also in 1599 he was among a list of Scots and others charged to find caution to ‘observe the King’s peace’. He is probably the Scott of Haining listed among leaders ordered in 1600 to appear before the Privy Council to give advice about peace on the Border. Also in 1600 he was procurator for James of Balwearie, who was cautiously for Scott of Buccleuch, in a case before the Privy Council. In the early years of the century he (along with Sir Robert of Thirlestane) acted for the interests of Sir Walter of Buccleuch while he was abroad. In 1601 he was mentioned in an English letter listing Armstrong who were outlaws under the Laird of Buccleuch, when he appears to have been acting as a Deputy Warden. In 1602 he signed the ‘General Band’ among Border Lairds. In 1602 (while Walter of Buccleuch was abroad) he was charged with entering a group of Scotts of Houndshope, Thirlestane, Gamescleuch, Bonnington and Bowhill, who were accused of raiding the lands of Adam Veitch. He was also meant to present James of Whithope in 1602, but failing to do so, was denounced as a rebel. Also in 1602 he was denounced again for not producing the Scotts of Whithope, Gamescleuch, Thirlestane and Hartwoodmyres for not paying their portion of the taxes of Ettrick Forest. In 1603 he was still standing in for Walter of Buccleuch when he failed to appear to enter the Scott Lairds of Bonnington, Newburgh, Kirkstead, Dryhope, Thirlestane and Deephope and he was also ‘keeper depute of Liddisdaill’ when there was a complaint that he had not entered Armstrongs and others for a raid on ‘Sewingdene’, delaying making restitution to the complainers, and again being denounced. In 1606 he was surety for Ninian Armstrong and Andrew Henderson in a murder trial. In 1607 he was involved in a dispute with the minister of Selkirk. In 1608 it is said that he ‘hounded out’ John, brother of Walter of Woll and his half-brother John Turnbull, leading to them attacking some citizens in Selkirk, and then being rescued from the Bailies by a gang of Scotts including his brother William; his servitors Walter and John Gledstains were also involved. Also in 1608 a letter under the seal of James VI demands that he remove himself from Yair Corn Mill. His son Robert and several of his servants were alleged to have attacked Sir Andrew Ker’s lands at Selkirk Mill in 1608; his servants included Thomas Young, Francis Scott, William Elliot, Patrick Brown and William Thomson. H was summoned to appear in Edinburgh in 1608. He is probably the Robert who was named as a Commissioner for keeping peace in Selkirkshire in 1610. Along with his wife Janet Scott and his son Robert (along with his wife Elizabeth Murray) had a charter for Haining Mill recorded as 1629 (but this may be an error). Some time before 1580 he married Janet, daughter of Sir Walter (9th of Buccleuch); she had previously been married to John Cranston of that Ilk, and contracted to marry George Ker, younger of Falcondale. In the marriage contract in 1579, he promised to give her his half of the lands of ‘Ilistoun’, as well as his tenement in Selkirk. In 1580 he resigned to her his lands ‘lie burnemynle’ plus the loch called ‘Hanyng Louchet’ with mill-race, and the crofts called ‘lie mylnecroft’, ‘lie harisbutts, Hoppringillis acre, Craufurdis acre, chekynis acre, mylyn croft’; his wife was referred to as ‘Dame Scott of Hanyng’ and the agreement was witnessed by his brother William. At the same time he granted his wife an annual rent of some lands. He was succeeded by his son Robert. He also had a younger son, William, who was one of the rescuers of Kimmont Willie. Robert (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1602 being ‘in Stirkfield’ when he signed a bond of peace among Border lairds. This was ‘at the pen led by William Wylie, clerk, writer of the band’. His lands were pribably Stirkfield between Peebles and Biggar. Robert of Bowhill (16th/17th C.) eldest son of Robert of Aikwood. He held the lands of the southside of Bowhill. He is probably the Robert ‘of Rowhill’ [sic] who was denounced in 1597, along with Andrew Ker of Primsideloch and Walter of Todrig, for not restoring teind sheaves to Mr. James Durham. He is recorded in 1601 when his brothers Walter, James and William ‘in Robertnessed a sasine for his father (recorded in the son of Adam of Bonnington. In 1581/2 he withdrew ‘Loucht’. Robert Gilbert Ker of Primside Loch that he set to Andrew ‘Louct’. Robert of Bowhill in 1560/1 when he had sasines for ‘Hob’ of Waumnpray (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1579 as Burgess of Edinburgh when he was one of the witnesses to a transaction made in Selkirk. This involved John Chisholme in Eldinhopeknow and the widow of John Chisholme in Mountbenger. His name is recorded as ‘Robert Scot alias Hob of Waumnfery’. He was ‘of Waumnfray burgess of Edinburgh’ in 1580/1 when he had sasines for the annual rent of lands in Newstead and Eildon. Probably the same Burgess of Edinburgh who in 1581 was a cautioner (with Mungo, Burgesses of Edinburgh, as well as James Gledstains of Cocklaw) for Walter Scott of Goldielands being entered into ward in Edinburgh Castle. He was probably directly related to Mungo, as well as being a relative of the Scotts of Goldielands (and hence Buccleuch). Probably the same Robert, Burgess of Edinburgh, was in 1580 one of 2 judges appointed (by Sir Walter of Birkenside and William of Tushielaw) to decide on George of Synton’s claim on lands in ‘Ilistoun’. He may be the illegitimate son of Robert of Waumnfray, whose birth was legitimatised in 1547. Robert (16th/17th C.) son and heir of the deceased James, Burgess in Selkirk, recorded in 1580. David Fairlie appears to have been acting as his tutor for 5 years, in relation to his half of the mill of ‘Hadderlie’ and his future marriage. He held lands from Gilbert Ker of Primside Loch that he set to Andrew ‘Louct’. Robert (16th/17th C.) natural son of Adam of Bonnington. In 1581/2 he witnessed a sasine for his father (recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books). Robert of Burnfoot (d.1612) son of William. His lands were Burnfoot on Teviot, and he should not be confused with Robert of Burnfoot on Ale. In 1585 he succeeded his grandfather Adam in the lands of Over and Nether Newhall. He may be the Robert of Burnfoot for whom Walter of Goldielands and James Gledstains of Cocklaw acted as cautioners in 1590. He may be the ‘Robert alias Rob Scott of Burnefute’ listed (along with William of Burnfoot) among 200 Scots and associates who stole livestock from Drumelzier and Drea in 1591/2; his unnamed brothers are also mentioned. He is said to have been at the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. He was probably the Robert of Burnfoot who in 1599 was listed among Scots and others who were charged to find sureties for ‘observing the King’s peace’; Robert ‘tutor of Burnefute’ was also listed (and may have been associated to Burnfoot on Ale). He is listed among a large number of Scots and others among ‘pretended tenants’ whom the Baron of Hassendean, James Cunningham, was trying to eject from their lands in 1603. He had at least 3 sons: Adam, who succeeded; Robert, who succeeded his elder brother; and William, tenant in Burnhead. He is probably the ‘Guidman of Burnefute’ listed on the ‘Roll of the Clans’ in about 1590. Robert (16th C.) recorded as ‘Robert Scot in Hawik’ when he was witness to an instrument of sasine for Crook in 1592. William in Hawick and Adam in Ormieson are also mentioned. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Roberts. Robert (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1597 among defendants in cases brought by the English Wardens involving raids by men of Liddesdale. His name is given as ‘Hobb (Robert) Scott called ‘bradowe’’. It is unclear whether his to-name was a nickname or location. Robert (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1599 as ‘tutor of Burnefute’. He was listed among Scots and others who were charged to find sureties for ‘observing the King’s peace’; Robert of Burnfoot (probably on Teviot) was also listed, suggesting he may have been associated with Burnfoot on Ale. Robert ‘Hobbie’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1599 as ‘Hobbie of Candie’. He was listed among other Scots who Sir Walter of Bruxholme declared were ‘his men’ and therefore accepted responsibility for making them answer to justice. It is unclear where ‘Candie’ was (perhaps a transcription error) or if he was the same as another Robert. Robert of Easter Groundisstone (16th/17th C.) nephew to Robert of Headshaw according to Capt. Scott of Satchells when he listed him as one of the 24 ‘Pensioners’ of Buccleuch. His grandfather was Walter of Headshaw, but it is unclear what his father’s name was.
Scott of these properties of Melrose Abbey. In 1596 he eldest son and heir, Robert was also given liferent Ettrick and the teinds of Ettrick Kirk in 1594; his Gamescleuch. He gained the lands of Kirkhope in dispute between Cranston and Arthur Scott of Crookston in Peeblesshire. on account of a mes-senger taking refuge there, this being part of a Crookston (Selkirkshire) from Alexander Lord 1590 records that he purchased the lands of Home, his family having been 'kindly tenants' Corsecleuch (Selkirkshire) from Alexander Lord 1590 he was purchased the lands of Altrieve and the Scotts of Allanhaugh. In 1598 he was purchased the lands of Altrieve and Branxholme and the Scotts of Allanhaugh. In 1598 he was purchased the lands of Altrieve and Branxholme and the Armstrongs and Elliots of Liddesdale. Additionally in 1599 he was among a list of Scots who Sir Walter of Branxholme declared were 'his men' and therefore accepted responsibility for making them answer to justice; his brother Walter was also listed. In the same year he served as caution-er for Simon of Bonnington and Sir Walter of Branxholme declared that he 'holds his lands of him' and was therefore obliged to answer for him. In the early years of the 1600s he and Robert of Haining acted for Sir Walter of Branxholme while he was abroad. In 1602 Gideon Murray of Elibank was surety for him in regard to charges against him by the warden of the middle marches 'at the instance of the laird of Neutoun, Englishman'; he later refused to enter himself into court or to pay the amount and hence was to be declared as a rebel. Also in 1602 he signed a bond among Bor-der Lairds for keeping the peace. Additionally in 1602 he was denounced for not paying £51 13s 4d for his part of the taxes of Ettrick Forest. His brother Wat was accused of being on a raid in 1602. In 1603 he was among Scots and others, subordinates of Sir Walter of Buccleuch, who 'had been put to the horn' for not paying feu mails for their lands to the Queen's Chamberlain, with Robert of Haining not entering them in court. In 1604 he sold the lands of Cruxton to William Elliot, Burgess of Peebles. In 1605 he had a bond to enter his tenants (Scotts of Hundleshope and others) for not appearing to answer charges of attacking the lands at 'Fechane'. He was proba-bly knighted in 1606 and in 1607 was Member of the Scottish Parliament for Selkirkshire, the first elected representative. He was involved in every local quarrel of his day, including helping organ-ise the rescue of Kimmont Willie. He was cau-tion for several relatives and tenants in 1608 not to harm Archibald 'of Deiphoip', and also caution for Sir John Murray of Philiphaugh. There was a feud with the Scotts of Tushielaw, culmi-nating in the death of his brother Walter at the hands of John, son of Walter Scott of Tushielaw (possibly Walter). Robert 'Hob' (16th/17th C.) listed among men of Eskdale, Ewesdale, etc., de-clared fugitive at a court in Peebles in 1605. He is recorded as 'Hob Scott of the Laik', but it is unclear where this might have been. Sir Robert of Thirlestane (c.1558–1627) son of Robert, with his mother being Margaret Scott (either daughter of 'Wicked Wat' of Buccleuch or Wat of Harden). He is first recorded in 1568, and Satchells claims he was born in 1566 (although he appears to have reached majority by 1581). During his minority his ‘tutor’ was his uncle Simon of Gamescleuch, while his curators were Sir John Johnstone of that Ilk, Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule and James Gled-stains of Cocklaw. In 1578 he and his curators complained that his tutor ‘Sym Scot of Wintir-burch’ had taken 2 horses from Thirlestane, har-rassed his tenants and then forcibly taken pos-session of the house at Thirlestane; Simon was ordered to restore Thirlestane to him. He is said to have attended the University of St. Andrews along with the young Walter of Buccleuch (and at the same time as the young James VI), and about 1585 accompanied Walter to the site of the old Rankleburn Kirk, where they found some buried tombstones bearing the arms of Buccleuch. He was listed among many Scotts and their allies in a 1581 summons to appear before the Privy Council regarding the feud with the Elliots and Armstrongs. His brother Walter was recorded as witness to a transaction in Selkirk involving Thirlestane in 1581. In 1583/4 he is among the Border Lairds summoned by the Privy Council for advice on preserving peace in Teviotdale and Liddesdale. In 1583/4 he and Sim of Winter-burgh were cautioners for John in Hundleshope. He could be the Robert ‘in Cringillis’ who wit-nessed a bond in 1585 (signed at Selkirk and Havick) settling a feud between the Scotts of Branxholme and the Scotts of Allanhaugh. In 1590 he was purchased the lands of Altrieve and Corsecleuch (Selkirkshire) from Alexander Lord Home, his family having been ‘kindly tenants' there for generations. He was also listed on the 1590 ‘Roll of the Clans’. A confirming charter of 1590 records that he purchased the lands of Crookston in Peebleshire, on account of a mes-senger taking refuge there, this being part of a dispute between Cranston and Arthur Scott of Gamescleuch. He gained the lands of Kirkhope in Ettrick and the teinds of Ettrick Kirk in 1594; his eldest son and heir, Robert was also given liferent of these properties of Melrose Abbey. In 1596 he was one of the men consulted by Walter of Buccleuch in organising the rescue of Kimmont Willie, and he accompanied Walter to London to see Eliz-abeth I in 1597. In 1596/7 the citizens of Peebles complained that he had led a group of Scotts to attack their lands of ‘Kaidmure’; they were all denounced as rebels for failure to appear. Along with his brother Walter he is included in a list of supporters of Scott of Buccleuch in 1599. Also in 1599 he witnessed the bonds (signed at Branx-holme) between Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch and the Armstrongs and Elliots of Liddesdale. Addi-tionally in 1599 he was among a list of Scots who Sir Walter of Branxholme declared were ‘his men' and therefore accepted responsibility for making them answer to justice; his brother Walter was also listed. In the same year he served as caution-er for Simon of Bonnington and Sir Walter of Branxholme declared that he ‘holds his lands of him’ and was therefore obliged to answer for him. In the early years of the 1600s he and Robert of Haining acted for Sir Walter of Branxholme while he was abroad. In 1602 Gideon Murray of Elibank was surety for him in regard to charges against him by the warden of the middle marches ‘at the instance of the laird of Neutoun, Englishman'; he later refused to enter himself into court or to pay the amount and hence was to be declared as a rebel. Also in 1602 he signed a bond among Bor-der Lairds for keeping the peace. Additionally in 1602 he was denounced for not paying £51 13s 4d for his part of the taxes of Ettrick Forest. His brother Wat was accused of being on a raid in 1602. In 1603 he was among Scots and others, subordinates of Sir Walter of Buccleuch, who ‘had been put to the horn’ for not paying feu mails for their lands to the Queen’s Chamberlain, with Robert of Haining not entering them in court. In 1604 he sold the lands of Cruxton to William Elliot, Burgess of Peebles. In 1605 he had a bond to enter his tenants (Scotts of Hundleshope and others) for not appearing to answer charges of attacking the lands at 'Fechane'. He was proba-bly knighted in 1606 and in 1607 was Member of the Scottish Parliament for Selkirkshire, the first elected representative. He was involved in every local quarrel of his day, including helping organ-ise the rescue of Kimmont Willie. He was cau-tion for several relatives and tenants in 1608 not to harm Archibald 'of Deiphoip', and also caution for Sir John Murray of Philiphaugh. There was a feud with the Scotts of Tushielaw, culmi-nating in the death of his brother Walter at the hands of John, son of Walter Scott of Tushielaw 2838 in 1609. In 1609 he and his son Robert (and several others) were bonded not to reset Walter of Headshaw and a group of other men, and were later fined for resetting the same men (including his natural son Peter and brother William). In 1609 he also complained against Armstrongs and other men who were troubling him in his lands and vowing to take his life. He witnessed a charter for Scott of Woll in 1609. In 1610 there was a bond of assurance with the Scotts of Tushielaw in order to resolve the feud. That same year he was ordered apprehended since he still had a ‘horning’ for the attack on Peebles in 1596/7. Also in 1610 he and his son had a ‘wadset’ with Robert of Whitslade and another with Robert of Burnfoot and he was cautioner for the Scotts of Whitslade and Satchells that they would not harm Walter in Hawick, called Todshawhill and his associates. In 1612 there was a complaint to the Privy Council that he and his son Sir Robert had not paid former fines and should be apprehended, the Council also asked him and Walter of Tushielaw to appear to resolve the contradictory claims of each family. William Scott, younger of Harden had him and others removed from the lands of Deephope in 1615/16. In about 1620 he had a charter for Thirlestane, Ettrickhouse, Ramseycleuch and Scabcleuch from the Commendator of Melrose, as well as another charter for half of the lands of ‘Cringillis’. He and his son Robert were also granted the teinds of the new Kirk of Ettrick.

In 1621 he had 15 sheep stolen from his lands of Eskdalemuir and along with John of Gilmansecleuch and Sir John of Newburgh he promised not to molest the Elphinstones. Also in 1621 he was appointed as Sheriff of Selkirkshire. In the years 1621–3 he was involved with financial bonds with Sir William of Harden, as well as Sir Walter of Whitslade and Walter, Earl of Buccleuch (essentially borrowing money using his lands as collateral). In 1622 he was fined for not being on the jury for the case involving Turnbolls of Belses etc. He was recorded in a disposition of 1623 to his chief the Earl of Buccleuch. Also in 1623 he was one of the representatives of Tweeddale and Selkirk on the Parliamentary Commission to discuss the export of Scottish wool. In 1624 he rented Gamescleuch from Sir William Scott of Harden. Also in 1624 his lands of Crookston were ‘apprised for debt’, and he also sold an ‘annualrent’ there. In 1625 he was one of the men who broke out of the jail in Selkirk (the others being Gavin Elliot of Brugh, George Davidson of Kames, Thomas Little of Meikledale and his servant John ‘Skaillis’), breaking the walls on 2 sides, his prison bed being found to have 2 plow blades and ‘tw a greit craiw-irnes’: he must have been in his 60s by then! It appears that his estates were resigned to Sir William of Harden, and later inherited by his nephew Patrick of Tanlawhill, although there was dispute for the next century with the descendants of his son (with his 2nd wife) Sir John. In about 1626 he appears to have lost the lands of Thirlestane, Ramseycleuch and Scabcleuch (at least temporarily) to John Fisher, perhaps because of non-payment of loans to Scott of Harden. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir John Cranston of that Ilk sometime before 1594. In 1602 he secondly married Katherine, daughter of Sir Alexander Jardine of Applegirth. His sons were Sir Robert, Sir John and James. John was listed in the last testament of the Earl of Buccleuch in 1633 owing rental money to Mary Lyon (wife of Sir Robert of Crookston, i.e. his sister-in-law). In 1616 his daughter Grizel married Walter of Tushielaw without his permission. Other daughters were probably Jean, who married Robert of Satchells, and Susannah, who married Sir Walter of Whitslade. He may also have been the Robert who inspired the story told of a 2nd wife of Thirlestane being involved in the jealous murder of her stepson (this would be Katherine or Catherine Jardine and her stepson, Sir Robert). He is easily confused with his son, also Sir Robert (often called ‘of Crookston’), who appears to have pre-deceased him in 1619. In 1621 he was served heir to his son Robert’s lands of Gamescleuch, Ettrickside, Bowerhope and the lands of the Kirk o the Lowes. In 1621 he was served heir to his son’s lands of Gamescleuch, Ettrickside and the lands of the Kirk o the Lowes. Also in 1621 he was appointed to a commission to apprehend the men who killed Robert of Gilmansecleuch. His wife Catherine Jardine held lands of Davington and others ‘in liferent’ after his death, recorded in 1627 in a document with Walter, Earl of Buccleuch. His son John was served as his heir in 1642. Robert ‘Sim’s Hob’ (16th/17th C.) referred to as ‘in Hawick’ when he was witness to a discharge of 1605 between ‘Lang Sandie’ Scott and William Scott of Howpasley. His father was presumably Simon. Probably the same ‘Robert Scot in Hawik, callit Symmies Habie’ was recorded in 1611 when he failed to appear in court at Jedburgh; John in Brieryyards was fined for his non-appearance. Robert (16th/17th C.) brother of William of Burnfoot. George Langlands of that Ilk was cautioner for him in 1610, that he not harm William in Hawick (called of Todshawhill) and his associates. His brother and several other Scotts were also involved in this dispute. He was also mentioned in 1612 as brother of William of Burnfoot on Ale (along with Walter, another brother) in the ongoing dispute with the sons of Francis, Earl of Bothwell. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Roberts. Robert in Northhouse (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1607 when Hector Turnbull of Stonedge had a complaint against him before the Privy Council. He may be the ‘Hob Scot’, brother to Will ‘called of Northhouse’, named along with his brother, when Gilbert Elliott of Horsleyhill (and later of Stobs) complained to the Privy Council that they attacked him in Hawick, ‘with drawn swords’. Gilbert later complained that they had not responded and requested that they should be apprehended, although it is unclear what happened next. He was ‘of Northhouse’ in 1611 when he was part of the assize at the Justice Court in Jedburgh. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1617 as ‘Hob Scot in the Howfurd’ and brother of Michael, both being ‘suster sones’ to Walter Scott of Harden (‘Auld Wat’). Lady Bonnington complained that they and others came to Newhouse, where they undermined the walls, causing the house to fall, and the next night attacked a nurse of Lady Bonnington’s household. They were also said to have later ‘trampit and tred the young ones under thair feit’ and injured the udder of their only milk cow. It is unclear if he was directly related to the Scotts ‘of’ Howford, or who his mother was, but presumably she was a sister of Auld Wat. Robert (16th/17th C.) tenant in Nether Southfield in 1628 when he was on a list of men accused by the Earl of Buccleuch of chopping down his trees at Todshawhaugh or Trinitylands. He may have been related to later Scotts of the Southfield area. Robert of Howshaw (16th/17th C.) said to have headed the funerary procession for Walter, Earl of Buccleuch in 1634. He rode fully armed, carrying a small banner of the Earl’s colours on the point of his lance. The account comes from Chamber’s Domestic Annals of Scotland. However, it seems likely that ‘Howshaw’ is an error for some different place, since this Robert is otherwise unknown. Robert of Satchells (16th/17th C.) probably son of James, who was 4th son of John, younger of Synton. He is said to have been involved in the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. In 1602 he signed a bond among Border Lairds for keeping the peace (transcribed in one version being ‘of Stitschellis’). He had a charter from John, Archbishop of Glasgow for the lands of Satchells in the Barony of Lilliesleaf in 1607, and a confirming charter from the King in 1609. In 1609 he also had a charter for Dodbank in Selkirkshire, which his father James, and others before him had occupied. In 1610 Sir Robert of Thirlestane acted as caution for him, that he not harm Walter Scott in Hawick (called of Todshawhill) and his associates; he was named along with Walter of Whitslade and his son Thomas, suggesting a close link between these families at that time. He is one of the signatories of the 1612 bond to keep peace on the Border. It appears that he lost the Satchells estate, probably through a loan, and moved to a small farm in Eskdalemuir. He may have died soon afterwards, since Jean (presumably his widow) was involved with the sheep-slaughter incident of 1616 along with Lady Scott of Howpsasley. In 1617 he was among the supporters of the Scotts of Harden mentioned in a complaint against them heard at the Privy Council; however, it is unclear if he was already deceased at this time. He is probably also the Robert who complained at the Privy Council in 1619 about men from Hindhope cutting down trees on his land at Dodhead. His wife was probably Jean, daughter of Sir Robert of Thirlestane. He was probably the father of Capt. Walter the poet and family historian, and also William. Additional children may have included Robert, referred to as younger of Satchells in the 1620s and John, mentioned in a deed of 1655. He may be the ‘Robert Scot of Satchels’ who was among the 24 ‘pensioners’ of Buccleuch, having ‘Southinrig for his Service’, according to Capt. Walter’s postscript. Keith Scott suggests he died about 1629 (but then Lady Satchells would not have been a widow in 1616); he also suggests there are 2 generations called Robert, so the situation is quite unclear. Robert of Aikwood (d.1615) son of Robert of Aikwood and Marion Cranston. Keith Scott suggests he was son of William, but that conflicts with R.C. Reid’s 1950s genealogy, which is supported by transactions made in Selkirk about 1580, which probably involved his father Robert. He may be the same man as Robert of Bowhill, eldest son of Robert of Aikwood. In 1581/2 he was son of the deceased Robert of Aikwood when his mother Marion Cranston made her step-daughter Isabel Home ‘cessioner’ to recover the 700 merks that he owed his mother. He also witnessed a sasine for Adam of Bonnington in 1581/2. He signed the bond with the other Scotts in 1589. In 1590 Patrick Murray of Falahill was his cautioner.
that he would not harm William Douglas, Earl of Angus or his dependants. He witnessed a deed in 1592. Also in 1592 he signed a caution for the good behaviour of John in Foulshields. He had the present tower at Oakwood built in 1602. In 1602 he signed a bond among Border Lairds for keeping the peace. In 1607 he was summoned before the Selkirk Presbytery, accused of perjury against the minister of Selkirk and in 1614 was cited by the minister for ‘drinking during the time of sermon’. In 1611 he was caution for Philip of Dryhope. He was witness to the bond for keeping peace on the Border in 1612. He was succeeded by his son Andrew in 1615, in the southside of Bowhill, half of Kershope and the ‘Peile-Quarter’ in Belses. Philip of Aikwood (who succeeded Andrew) may have been another son. He may also have been the ‘goodman of Aikwood’ whose sons James and William are listed in 1618 among men of the Selkirk area accused of illegally carrying guns. Robert ‘Hob the Lonkie’ (16th/17th C.) Hawick resident mentioned in a murder trial of 1612, after a man apparently hung himself in the Kirk steeple in 1610. His nickname may be a transcription error for ‘Loukie’, meaning lucky or fortunate. Bailie Robert ‘Hob’ of Alton (16th/17th C.) Magistrate in Hawick. It is unclear how he was related to the other Scotts of Alton. The Robert ‘of Auldton’ whose son Adam is listed among those implicated in the slaughter of Lord Maxwell and his men at Dryfe Sands in 1593 may have been his direct ancestor; it is possible he was son of Adam referred to as ‘vocat de Altoun’, who was younger brother of Walter of Alton. He was Bailie in 1603, 1612 (at the same time as ‘Marion’s Hob’) and 1619, and possibly other years, since it is hard to distinguish the various Roberts. He may be the ‘Hob Scot, bailie of Hawik’, who was cautioned for Jamie Chisholme at court in Jedburgh in 1611. He was involved with the incident in 1612 in which the Bailies imposed a stent and market tax without seeking the permission of the Baron, thereby testing the legal authority of Douglas of Drumlanrig within Hawick. An extract of his sasine of 1615 is in the National Archives, this having been copied from the Protocol Book of Gilbert Watt (Hawick’s later Town Clerk). In 1620 he is recorded paying back a loan made to Thomas Rutherford, brother of John of Hunthill. He was also a ‘personne of assyse’ in the Commissioners’ Court of 1622 and 1623. He is recorded in 1627–29 claiming a debt against the Earl of Buccleuch, where he is described as ‘some-time bailie in Hawick’. ‘Robert, bailie in Hawick, called of Auldtown’ is also mentioned in a dispute with William Douglas of Drumlanrig relating to a bond of 1601. The later Robert of Alton (who died around 1650) was probably his brother Walter’s son. Bailie Robert (16th/17th C.) brother of William called ‘of the Know’, with George and David also being brothers. In 1608 they were bound over not to harm Thomas Abernethy, minister of Hawick (the nature of the dispute being unclear), and he was similarly bound. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Bailies of the same name. They may also have been related to John Scott, Bailie of Selkirk, who acted as surety for them. Bailie Robert (16th/17th C.) Magistrate in 1610, along with Adam Scott, when Jock Elliot died while imprisoned in the Kirk steeple. Elliot’s wife took the Bailies and others to court for his death, but the decision was that it was a suicide. He was one of the men called to give evidence at the trial. He is probably the same as one of the other contemporary Bailie Roberts, but it is unclear which one. Sir Robert of Haining (16th/17th C.) son of Robert. In 1608 he is ‘younger of Haining’ when he was part of a group of men complained about by Sir Andrew Ker of Heiton, saying that they came to his lands of Selkirk Mill and ‘violentlie caist out the dam-heid furth thairof’. They returned with a group of Scotts, Murrays, Elliots, Gledstains, etc., threatened the millers and smashed equipment. He and James ‘Corsane’ were imprisoned, with 2 others being asked to appear later. In 1610 he was ‘younger of Hanying’ when along with his wife ‘Elspeth’ Murray he was involved in a dispute with the Lord of Buccleuch over ownership of Haining mill. He succeeded his father in 1611. In 1612 he was one of the witnesses called by the Privy Council in an attempt to resolve the feud between the Scotts of Tushielaw and Thirlestane. In 1614 he gave sasine of some lands in Selkirk to James Cowan. In 1617 he was among a list of Border Lairds denounced as rebels for not appearing before the Privy Council. In 1621 he was appointed to a commission to apprehend the men who killed Robert of Gilmanscleuch. He was removed from the Earl of Home’s lands at Hartwoodburn in 1622. About 1625 he sold Haining, but was still known as ‘of Haining’ afterwards. Along with his wife Elizabeth Murray and his father Robert (and mother Janet Scott), he had a charter for Haining Mill recorded as 1629 (but this may be an error). He is probably the same Sir Robert of Haining who carried the arms of Scott of Buccleuch in the Earl’s funeral procession in Hawick in 1634. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Patrick Murray of Falahill and had at least 2 sons: Robert, who succeeded; and Walter, portioner of Guilan. Bailie Robert ‘Marion’s Hob’ or ‘Marion’s Rab’ (16th/17th C.) Magistrate in late 1612, along with ‘Hob of Alton’, when the authority of the Baron was challenged. He was also Bailie in 1622, 1623 and 1626. He served as a jurat at the Commissioners’ Court of 1622 and 1623 when he was ‘laitt bailye of Hawik’. His servitor, William Johnstone, is recorded in the trial for the claimed murder of John Elliot in Hawick in 1610. He was probably one of the 2 Bailie Roberts listed among the 9 men charged with performing a valuation of the lands in the Parish of Hawick. He could be the Bailie Robert who acted as cautioner for James Henderson in ‘Catheuch’ in 1611. His mother was presumably Marion. It is possible his brother was the contemporary ‘Marion’s Geordie’. Bailie Robert (16th/17th C.) Magistrate in Hawick in 1614. He is presumably different from ‘Hob of Alton’ and ‘Marion’s Hob’, but could be the Robert ‘of Westport’ recorded in documents at the same time; the proliferation of men of the same name makes this confusing. There was also a Robert (with no nickname) who was Bailie in 1627, and a ‘laitt bailie of Hawick’ when he was a ‘personne of assyze’ acting in Dumfries Circuit Court in 1622. Robert of Salenside (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1614, along with his kinsman John Scott of Kirkhouses, when he was summoned before the Presbytery to answer for charges of murder. He must have been related to Andrew of Salenside, who is recorded in 1613 (possibly his brother or elder son, but if so he was probably dead by 1621 when Thomas of Salenside is recorded). Robert (16th/17th C.) son of James in Whitslade and grandson of John, younger of Synton. In 1580 he had a marriage contract with Elizabeth, sister of Robert in Aikwood, with the consent of his deceased father’s brothers George in Synton and William in Huntly. He agreed to give his future wife liferent of Dodhead if he should die before her and also agreed to ratify the contract when he reached the age of 21. Also in 1580 he was recorded as son of the deceased James of Whit-slade when he witnessed a transaction for Robert of Aikwood. Scott of Satchells lists him among the men who were involved in the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. It is suggested that he is son of Robert of Whitslade and brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade; however, this appears to be muddled. Bailie Robert (16th/17th C.) Magistrate from Hawick. In 1627 he and James Gledstains were Bailies when there was a series of records with the Privy Council involving men from Hawick who had been selected to be sent to the wars in Germany; he was fined 300 merks and had to find caution for a further £1000 in order to make him produce the named men. He is surely one of the two Bailie Roberts listed in 1627 among 9 men charged with performing a valuation of the lands in the Parish of Hawick; he was one of the men who refused to accept some of the items in the valuation, presumably because of a dispute over either the Kirland, Ladyland or Trinitylands. He was probably the same as one of the other contemporary Roberts. Robert of Bowhill (16th/17th C.) son of Robert, who he succeeded in 1625. However, there appears to be confusion among Roberts of Aikwood and Bowhill. He carried the arms of Douglas of Drumlanrig in the funeral procession of the Earl of Bucleuch in Hawick in 1634. He had 2 sons, Andrew and James, both of whom succeeded to Bowhill. In 1648 his son James, a merchant in Edinburgh, was ‘bailie in that part’ who granted sasine of Broadmeadows from Andrew of Broadmeadows to William of Tushielaw; the Scotts of Bowhill were distantly related to the Scotts of Tushielaw. Robert of Tushielaw (d.1632) eldest son of Sir Walter of Tushielaw, brother of James and John, who were both at the rescue of Kinmont Willie. In 1599 his father Walter was surety for himself, as well as him and his brothers James and John, to ‘observe the King’s peace’. He signed a bond among Border Lairds, along with his father in 1602. He was ‘apparent of Tuischelaw’ in 1604 when he acted as bailie for a sasine of the Regality of Melrose for lands in Ettrick. In 1612 he signed the bond for keeping peace on the Border. In 1617 he was ‘apparent of Tuschelaw’ when his son Walter was listed among Scotts and others who freed Patrick Porteous of Hawkshaw and attacked his captors. He was described as ‘fiar of Tuschelaw’ and lawful son of Sir Walter of Tushielaw in a charter of 1618 in which he received lands at ‘Wairdlawrig’ in Selkirkshire from John, Lord Hay of Yester. In 1619 he was ‘of Tuscholaw’ when his brother John witnessed a bond for Thomas Turnbull in Spittal-on-Rule. In about 1620 he had a charter from the Commendator of Melrose for Glenkerry, Midghope and Phaup. However, these must have been effectively mortgaged that time, since also in 1620 the lands of ‘Glencarie’ and Midghope, held in ‘wadset’ from him, were given by Gilbert Elliott of Stobs to his youngest son James. He was ‘of Tuscholaw’ in 1620 when his brother John wit-nessed a bond between Thomas Turnbull, tenant of Spittal-on-Rule and Robert Pringle. He was succeeded by his son Walter in 1633, and he in turn was succeeded by the younger son, William of Fawdshope. Robert of Shielswood (16th/17th C.) son of Robert and brother of Walter of Girm-wood. He had a charter for Shielswood in the Parish of Ashkirk in 1609. He is mentioned in various documents in the period 1606–26. He was Robert ‘in Schelliswoid’ on the 1616 jury that convicted Jock Scott ‘the Suckler’ of sheep stealing. In 1617 he was one of several supporters of the Scotts of Harden who Lady Bonnington com-plained had attacked her family (as part of a feud between the Harden and Bonnington Scotts); his brother Walter was also listed. In 1629 he was appointed as tutor to Robert and Walter, sons of his deceased brother, Walter of Girmwood. He is recorded in 1632 when his eldest son Walter leased part of the lands of Belces. He married Margaret, who re-married Robert Scott of Hartwoodmyres after his death. He was succeeded by Walter and had another son, Robert. He may have had a daughter Isobel who married Walter Scott of Burnfoot’s brother Francis. Robert (16th/17th C.) brother of Walter of Whithaugh. In 1610 he was part of a petition, along with several local Langlands and Scotts (including his brother Walter), to have hornings lifted and penalties re-duced. His cautioner was George Langlands of that Ilk, and one record seems to state that he was uncle of George (although this may be a transcrip-tion confusion). He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Roberts. Robert of Dryhope (d.bef. 1633) probably son of William. He is recorded in 1632 in an assignation for a bond, and in 1633 for non-payment. He appears to be already deceased in 1633 when he is men-tioned in a contract over the lands of ‘Evillane’, with the consent of James Scott of Hagbrae (pre-sumably a near relative). However, he could be the Robert ‘of Drayvpe’ who carried the arms of Hamilton of Clydesdale in the funeral procession for the Earl of Buccleuch in 1634. He was prob-ably succeeded by his brother Walter. Robert (17th C.) had a charter for the lands of Briery-yards and Broadlee in 1637, with a confirmation in the name of Charles I. It is unclear to which branch of the family he belonged, and how he was related to the later John of Brieryyards. Sir Robert of Haining (17th C.) son of Sir Robert. Although his father had sold off the Haining es-tate, he still had the designation. He served with the 2nd Earl of Buccleuch in 1643. Also in 1643 he was witness for a charter granted by the Earl of Buccleuch to the Calderwoods in Edinburgh; he is there ‘Sir Robert Scott of Hayneing’. In 1650 he was one of the witnesses for the will of Francis Earl of Buccleuch. His nephew Lieut.- Col. Robert appears to be the last of the Scots of Haining. He may have died in about 1650, since in the additions to the will of Francis in 1651 200 merks yearly are allocated to his widow, Grizel Ker. Robert of Burnfoot (d.bef. 1667) 2nd son of Robert. He succeeded his elder brother Adam. He is recorded along with other tenants of Over and Nether Newhalls in a precept of warning is-sued by Walter, Lord Scott of Buccleuch in 1625. He is also recorded in 1638 and 1639 when he re-ceived the lands of Rottenrow in Dundalee from John Rutherford prior to marrying Anne Ruther-ford, daughter of John and Isobel Bennet (this was explicitly ‘Burnfutt near Tiviot’, rather than the one in Ale Water, which is easy to confuse in this period). He was succeeded by his son Walter. Robert of Whitslade (d.1644) eldest son of Sir Walter, from whom he succeeded in 1628. He was served heir to his father in 1633 and his grandfa-ther Walter in 1635. In 1637 he had a decree of adjudication against John, son of Sir Robert of Thirlestane over the lands of Bourhope, fol-lowed by a decree of appraising in 1643. He signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. He represented Selkirk in Parliament in 1639–41 and was also made Parliamentary Convenor for the Selkirkshire War Committee in 1643. In 1641 he was one of the Roxburghshire heritors who signed a letter to the Privy Council relating to the rais-ing of levies for sending troops to Ireland. He was served heir to his father Walter’s lands of ‘Schorthope’ and Ettrickhouse in 1643. In 1643 he was recorded as owner of lands in Ashkirk (val-ued at £243 10s), as well as Salenside (£116), Kirkhouse (£143) and Ashkirk Mill (£84). He was also listed in 1643 as owner of lands in Has-sedean Parish, valued at £214 10s (which were owned by William Chisholme of Stiches by 1678) and Hermiston in Lilliesleaf Parish, valued at £130 (which were owned by William Johnstone by 1663). He married ‘Holland’s Jean’, natural daughter of Walter Scott, 1st Earl of Buccleuch. His children included: Walter, baptised in 1636; Francis, baptised in 1643; Mary; and Margaret, who in 1647 was served heir to his lands at Et-trickhouse (although these later went to her uncle Thomas), and married John Scott of Langhope. His 2 sons must have died in infancy. He died at the Battle of Marston Moor, probably fighting on the same side as Cromwell. He was succeeded by his brother Sir Walter (who died fighting against Cromwell) in 1645 and then his brother Thomas. His death is the subject of the verse in Caw’s Poetical Museum (1784), probably written by Capt. Scott of Satchells, entitled ‘Lines on the Death of Robert Scott, Esq., of Whitslade’, although in fact the contents focus more on the later death of his brother Thomas. Robert of Hassendean (d.bef. 1669) recorded in a ‘letter of apprising’ (i.e. transferring heritable lands to clear debts) of 1604, with ‘Dedrig, Easter and Wester Cappitrig’, passing to Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch. He was probably a son or grandson of David of Hassendean, who was killed around 1564. He was succeeded by his son Adam in 1669, but may have died earlier. He may be the same man as Robert of Over Hassendean. He may have been the Laird listed on the ‘Roll of the Clans’ in about 1590. And he may be the Robert of Hassendean who was said to have been in the party which rescued Kinmont Willie in 1596. He may be the Laird of Hassendean who in 1699 was listed among Scotts and others who were charged to find sureties for ‘observing the King’s peace’. He may be the Scott Hassendean (no forename given) who in 1617 was among Border Lairds who renewed their bond for keeping the peace. Sir Robert of Crookston (d.1619) eldest son of Sir Robert of Thirlestane and his 1st wife, who was Margaret, daughter of Sir John Cranston of that Ilk (however, it is hard to separate father and son, and some accounts confound them in a single generation). He appears to have been born before 1594, when his name first appears. In that year he was eldest son and heir of Robert of Thirlestane, when they were both granted the teinds and vicarage of Ettrick Kirk for their lifetimes. Before he succeeded his father he was known as ‘of Cruxton’ or ‘Cruikstane’. He acquired Gamescleuch in 1605 and in 1607 (when he was ‘younger’ of Thirlestane) he had a charter for the lands of Bourhope (or ‘Bowerhope’) adjacent to St. Mary’s Loch. He is probably the younger Laird of Thirlestane (first name not given) who was on a list of Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1708. He was involved in the bond of 1609 (along with his father and several others) not to reset Walter of Headshaw and other men, and the action by Walter of Tushielaw to fine them for resetting the same men. He was knighted about 1612. His memorial stone inscribed ‘S / R S MEMENTO MORE 1619’ is in Ettrick Kirk (although it is possible this was his father’s, and the next 8 years refer to incidents in his life). His life may be the basis of the story told (first by the Ettrick Shepherd and later by Sir Bernard Burke) of a 2nd wife at Thirlestane (presumably Katherine Jardine) having her step-son murdered so that her own son could inherit the estates, but when found out her husband had her locked up for a year while his eldest son lay in state and he spent the family fortunes in lavish feasting. It is unclear what truth there is in the story, but in 1617 he married Mary Lyon, daughter of the Earl of Stratmore, and died without issue; Mary Lyon remarried to Robert Semple of Beltrees, and in 1633 was named in the will of the Earl of Buccleuch being owed money through John, ‘son and air to the said vmquhile Sir Robert of Thirlestane’ (presumably her brother-in-law). His younger brother Sir John (son of Katherine Jardine of Applegirth) did not succeed either, the titles going to their cousin Patrick of Taulawhill who effectively purchased the Thirlestane estate. In 1621 his father, Sir Robert of Thirlestane was served heir to his lands of Gamescleuch, Ettrickside, Bourhope and the lands of the Kirk o the Lowes; this strongly suggests that he was deceased by 1621. He is the ‘Sir Robert of Cruikstane’ who is recorded as deceased in the period 1649–77 when his brother and heir John was involved in a dispute with the Scotts of Buccleuch over lands in Eskdale. John is described as the son and heir of Sir Robert of Thirlestane in a 1632 document involving the lands of Altrieve and Corsecleuch (so he was certainly already deceased by then). He is said to have left an illegitimate son, Peter, who was living in 1609. Robert ‘Geordie’s Hokie’ (16th/17th C.) one of 3 Hawick men acquitted in 1621 of carrying hagbuts and pistols in public. They specifically were accused of having ‘schoit and slayne thairwith greit numberis of thair nighbouris properr dowis and wyldfoull of all kyndis, and useis the same for thair particular revenge upoun all sic personis aganis whome they beare querrell’. The other 2 were Allan Deans and Robert Armstrong. His father was presumably George. Robert (16th/17th C.) illegitimate son of Arthur of Newburgh. He was listed in 1608 among relatives and tenants of Sir Robert of Thirlestane who were bound over not to harm Archibald ‘of Dehoip’ or his sons. Robert of Gilmanscleuch (d.bef. 1621) son of James. He was called ‘Truth’ and was said to be one of the men who helped rescue Kinmont Willie in 1596. He married Bessie Naysmith and his sons were: John, who succeeded; William; Gideon; and Adam, tenant at Shaws who was father of Francis. He was killed by John Elphinstone in Henderson and his brother David, who were declared rebels in 1620. In the following year a commission of Scotts was formed to apprehend the 2 men, the case being brought by his widow and sons William and Gideon. He is probably the Robert of Gilman-scleuch whose son Adam was served heir to his other son William in 1647. Robert of Westport (16th/17th C.) one of the ‘personnes of assyze’ representing Hawick at the Justice Court of 1622 in Dumfries as well as in Jedburgh (along with another Robert), and in 1623 (along with Robert of Alton and ‘Marion’s Hob’). It is unclear whether this is one of the other men of the same name, but he was clearly distinct from Robert of Alton and Bailie Robert, since all 3 sat on the assize at the Justice Court in Jedburgh in 1622. He may be related to later Westport Scotts, e.g. father of the Walter recorded in the 1650s and 1670s. Robert of Burnhead (d.1609) probably eldest son of John of Burnhead. He is probably the Robert of Burnhead who, along with Robert of Burhfoot (probably on Ale), was in 1579/80 involved in a case against Thomas Dalgleish and Simon of Gamescleuch over the murder of David Dalgleish in Harehead; restitution was being sought from the pair, with their arbitrators being William of Huntly and Robert, Burgess of Hawick. He signed the Scott clan bond in 1589. He was among those listed in 1603 as men that the Baron, James Cunningham, was trying to eject from their lands. He was succeeded by his son William and had 2 other sons, one of them probably Adam (who married Bessie Langlands) and the 3rd son probably the Robert who is said to have settled in Holland and died in 1609 (unless this is confusion with his own death). Robert of Headshaw (16th/17th C.) eldest son of Walter of Headshaw, whom he succeeded before 1593. He may have been the Laird of ‘Eidschaw’ listed on the ‘Roll of the Clans’ in about 1590. He may be the Robert of Headshaw (unless this is an error for Walter) who is recorded being held in ward in Edinburgh Castle in 1581, with Paul Doig acting as caution for the pledge of Walter Scott of Goldielands, that he would answer for the hurting of Martin Elliot of Braidlie. He is probably the Robert ‘in Headshaw’ who had a charter of Headshaw and Easter Essenside in 1593 (incorrectly transcribed as 1553) from Ludovic, Duke of Lennox. Scott of Satchells lists him among the men on the Carlisle raid to rescue Kinmont Willie in 1596. He is recorded in a series of writs of the lands of Headshaw ‘disponed’ to Andrew Hay in the period 1593–1624; his wife was Elizabeth and his son Robert. In 1609 he was caution for Sir Robert of Thirlstane in a bond for not resetting Walter of Headshaw (surely a relative, possibly his brother) and others. In 1610 he had a bond (along with Walter, fiar of Whitslade for Sir Robert of Thirlstane) not to harm Walter of Tushielaw and his sons. And in another 1610 bond he was surety for Robert ‘of Well’ for the same thing. In 1617 he was among Border Lairds who renewed their bond for keeping the peace. He was also cautioner, along with Sir Walter Scott of Whitslade, for a bond involving the Hays of Smithfield in 1619. In 1620 he was Robert ‘elder, called of Heidshaw’ when he witnessed a charter of Goldielands for Walter, Earl of Buccleuch. In 1622 he had an agreement with the Countess of Home for leasing Hartwoodburn for a year, possibly longer. He is probably the Robert who purchased the estate of Whitehaugh from his sister Janet’s son Walter. He is also probably the Robert of Headshaw whose ‘brother-son’ (i.e. nephew) was Robert of Easter Groundistone, listed by Scott of Satchells as one of the ‘Pensioners’ of the house of Buccleuch. He had sons: Robert, who appears not to have succeeded, since the estate was sold first; and Francis. Walter and James, two brothers of the younger Robert of Headshaw are recorded in 1627, and so were presumably his sons also. Robert of Bonnington (d.be. 1624) eldest son and heir of Simon. Together with his father he had ‘liferent’ of the lands of ‘Ernescleugh’ and Singlie in 1593, confirmed in 1607. He was succeeded by his uncle John. Robert (16th/17th C.) progenitor of the Scotts of Horsleyhill, whose genealogy is given by Scott of Satchells, and called there ‘Portioner and Bailie of Hawick’. His father was William, said to be second son to Walter, Laird of ‘Midgap’, who was grandson of Adam of Tushielaw. It seems more likely that he was son of William of Midgehope, who was grandson of William of Tushielaw and great-grandson of Adam of Tushielaw. He may be the same man as one of the Bailie Roberts recorded in Hawick in the early 1600s. His son William may have been the first to be called Laird of Horsleyhill. Note there appears to be a much earlier Scott of Horsleyhill family, who are presumably not directly related. Bailie Robert (16th/17th C.) son of ‘Watis Jok’, so presumably his father was John and his grandfather Walter.
He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Bailies. He is recorded in a sasine of 1610, along with his wife Helen Turnbull, for a ‘tenement’ in the south side of the Kirkcudbright, which had been resigned by George Turnbull, tenant in Howay, brother of Hector Turnbull of Barnhill. The land was specifically described as being between Nichol’s Croft (roughly the Village), a garden of Robert Dickson, a tenement belonging to the Hendersons and the Kirkcudbright itself.

Robert (16th/17th C.) Burgess and notary in Selkirk, recorded as writer of documents in the period 1602–30 relating to Andrew Riddell of that Ilk and Andrew Scott of Wemyss. In about 1618 he was listed among men who might act as witnesses to the illegal use of hagbuts and pistols.

Robert (17th C.) tenant at Harwood in the Rule valley. He was witness to a sasine of 1631 for the lands of Harwood and Hawthornside. Robert of Burnfoot in Ale (d.bef. 1669) son of Walter Scott of Burnfoot. He is recorded in a document of 1632 along with John, son of Sir Robert of Thirlstane, relating to the lands of Altrieve and Corsecleuch in Selkirkshire. Note that this is Burnfoot in the Ale valley (although it is easy to confuse him with the nearly contemporary Robert of Burnfoot on Teviot). He was served heir to his father in 1641. He is recorded paying £400 in Ashkirk Parish according to the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. He had at least 2 sons: Walter, who succeeded; and Francis, who married Isobel Scott, and to whom Scott of Satchells addressed one of his dedications. He is probably the Robert of Burnfoot recorded in 1666 in a list of landowners in Hassendean Parish, in the same year when his son William became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh and in 1668 when his son George became a surgeon’s apprentice there. He may be the Robert of Burnfoot recorded paying the land tax in Ashkirk Parish in 1678 (even although perhaps he was deceased by then). Robert (17th C.) described as the heir apparent of Satchells in 1622–25 when he was involved in a court action with George Scott (brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade) over the lands of Dodbank in Ettrick. He was probably a son of Robert and father of Capt. Walter (of family history fame), although this is not certain. Presumably the same Robert was also the ‘zunger of Satchellis’ who signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. He may be the Scott of Satchells (first name not given) listed in the inventory of the deceased Walter Earl of Buccleuch in 1633, when he was owed for rental of the lands of ‘Dodheid’. He may be the Robert of Satchells recorded in 1643 when his lands of Satchells (in Lilliesleaf Parish) were valued at £200, and also his lands of ‘Cringills’ at £156. He is probably the Robert ‘of Satscheill’ who is recorded in 1653 when his son and heir apparent Walter had a bond not to harm the Bailies of Selkirk. Robert of Alton (d.bef. 1653) eldest son of Walter of Alton. He was probably nephew of the ‘Hob of Alton’ who was Bailie in Hawick. He succeeded his father in about 1638, the year that he signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick. In 1643 he is recorded as owner of lands in Hassendean Parish, valued at £474; based on who owned these later, they were Alton, Knowetownhead and Tandlaw. His son William ‘younger of Altoun’ died before him. He was already deceased in 1653 when his daughters Margaret, Bessie and Agnes were served ‘heirs portioners’ to Robert of the East Mains of Hassendean, their ‘fuir grandsher’ (either great-grandfather or great-great-grandfather). Presumably the lands of Alton passed to one of them, who married another Scott, since Scotts (perhaps from the Gorrenberry branch) held the lands until about 1742. It is possible he was the ‘vmquhill Robert Scott of Auldtoun Crofts’ (if Alton and Alton Croft were sometimes confused) mentioned in the 1651 will of Francis, Earl of Buccleuch when his eldest son (name unfortunately left blank) was granted 200 merks yearly. His wife may have been Margaret Turnbull, who was recorded as ‘relict of Alton’ in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls, when she jointly with James Scott of Whitslade paid tax on £414 for lands in Hassendean Parish. Robert of Goldielands (17th C.) Bailie of Hawick (along with William Scott) at the time of the signing of the 1638 Covenant. His name appears as ‘R. Scott’, alongside Walter of Goldielands, suggesting that he might have been a brother or son of Walter (although there may be confusion of 2 R. Scotts here); this Walter was meant to have been the last of the distinct Lairds of Goldielands. Also in 1638 (in the first main entry in the Town Book) he was recorded as being ‘callit of Goldielands’ when listed as one of the Bailies at the meeting for choosing the new Bailies and Officers; he was again chosen as a Bailie for the year 1638/9. He is probably the Robert who signed the Act of Bailies and Council of 1640 (his name appearing just after the 2 Bailies). He was elected to the Council in late 1648 and was also a Bailie in the 1640s. He may be the same as the Robert who was ‘brother natural of the said Sir Walter Scott’ in the charter of Goldielands in 1620. Another possibility is that he is the same as Robert of Glack, who inherited part of the Goldielands estate through marriage. Robert of Woll (d.1630s) eldest son of Walter of Woll. In 1617 he was appointed guardian to his half-brother and sister, George and Katherine. Probably the same Robert ‘of Well’ had a bond in 1610 (with Robert of Headshaw as surety) not to harm Walter of Tushielaw and his sons. He is probably the Scott ‘of the Well’ who in 1617 was among Border Lairds who renewed their bond for keeping the peace. His wife Rachel complained about his behaviour to the Privy Council several times in 1631 and 1632, where he was described as ‘some time of the Well’. He was ordered to hand over all his assets to his wife and to allow her to cohabit with him, but instead went off to England with Jean, daughter of the deceased Andrew Ker of Gradan, and remained with her ‘in the filthy cryme of adulterie all the last harvest’. His wife apparently stated she would forgive him if he would return to her and their eight children, ‘quhairof foure are so young and weake that they cannot put on their cloathes’. Meanwhile he kept Jean Ker ‘in ane oasterlhou’ until she had his child, and sold his house (probably not Woll) and belongings, making his wife and children ‘brought to beggary’. In 1641, after his death, he is recorded when his son James became a saddler’s apprentice in Edinburgh, as well as possibly his son Robert, who became an apothecary’s apprentice the same year. In 1643 he is ‘Robert Scot of Well’ when his son James was incarcerated in Edinburgh Tolbooth at the insistence of saddler David Brown. His wife Rachel was buried in Greyfriars, Edinburgh, in 1661. He had 4 sons: Francis, who succeeded; James, who succeeded his brother, but sold Woll; George, who was also served heir to his father; and John. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was married Isobel Tudhope and their children included Agnes (b.1635) and Isobel (b.1640). Witnesses in 1640 were William Tudhope (surely a relative of his wife) and Andrew Leyden. Robert (17th C.) recorded as ‘in Grundiston’ in 1640, when Robert Deans was fined ‘for bluiding of the said Robert Scott upon the cheek and hand’. It is unclear how he was related to other local Scotts, but he could perhaps be a descendant of Robert of Easter Groundstone, who is recorded by Scott of Satchells. Robert of Braidhaugh (17th C.) see Robert of Harwood. Robert of Howpasley (d.1658) probably eldest son of William of Fingland, brother of Walter, half-brother of Simon and cousin of Patrick of Tanlawhill. It is unclear exactly how he acquired Howpasley. On his death the lands passed to his brother Walter. He is buried in Greyfriars Cemetery. Robert of Carterton (17th C.) recorded in 1667 when he granted a bond (for £332 Scots) to Walter Lorraine, tenant in Greens, who was described as his ‘good brother’ (i.e. brother-in-law). His farm was in northern Dumfriesshire, but it seems likely he was related to more local Scotts, perhaps a branch with a connection to the Loraines of Harwood. It is possible he was the Robert, married to Alison Lorraine (perhaps daughter of Edward Lorraine and Maisie Elliot), whose daughter Elspeth was baptised in Kelso in 1635. He was surely related to Francis of Carterton (perhaps his son), who is recorded on the Committee of War for Dumfriesshire in 1644 and 1649. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Gillespie and their children included Robert (b.1644), Andrew (b.1645), Thomas (b.1648), Isobel (b.1649) and Margaret (b.1653). The witnesses in 1648 were Robert Gillespie and George Ruecastle. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Turnbull and their children included: Bessie and Marion (b.1647); Isobel (b.1650); William (b.1651); Janet (b.1653); Walter (b.1655); and Janet (again, b.1656). The witnesses in 1656 were David Beattie and James Newbie. Robert of Shielwood (b.1640) 2nd son of Walter. He succeeded his brother Francis. He paid tax on £260 in Ashkirk Parish according to the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. He is recorded on an inquest in 1669. He died without any children and was succeeded by his sister Marian. She married Adam Scott of Shaws. Robert of Horsleyhill (17th C.) son of William, he was descended from the Scotts of Tushielaw. He was Laird at the time Capt. Scott of Satchells wrote his Postral (and a family genealogy is given there). In 1673 he was charged by the Hawick Bailies of having ‘masterfully spuilied out of James Liddell’s house five firelocks with ane pair of bandeliers belonging to the town’; the reason for this apparent theft is not known, but Liddell was Hawick’s Procurator-fiscal, and this was a time when there were serious disputes with the Baron Bailie. Probably the same Robert of Horsleyhill gave evidence at the trial of Andrew Rutherford for the murder of James Douglas of Cavers in 1674. He was admitted as a Burgess of Hawick in 1675. In 1676 he was probably already acting as Bailie of Regality when there was a case in which the weavers complaining that 2 of their members had appealed to him, rather than obey the Bailies of Hawick. In 1678 he paid land tax on £264 for Weensland in Hawick Parish and £637 (for Horsleyhill) in Haseendale Parish. Also in 1678 he witnessed (along with Walter of Goldielands) a baptism for Walter of Harwood. He is probably the Robert in ‘Horbie Hill’ who in 1680 was called as a witness in the trial of local Covenanters, but did not appear. In 1680 he witnessed (along with George of Boonraw) a baptism in Hawick for Robert Langlands and Isobel Scott. In a 1688 sasine he is described as ‘bailie in that part for James Duke of Buccleuch and Monmouth’. He married Isobella Scott, probably in Ashkirk Parish in 1663 (suggesting she was from one of the branches of the Scotts in that area). His children included: William, the eldest son; John (b.1670), who became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1687; Francis (b.1677), who became a surgeon-apothecary’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1696; and Marion (b.1680). Elizabeth (b.1669), Charles (b.1672), Janet (b.1681) and Patrick (b.1682), all baptised in Hawick, were probably also his children. The witnesses in 1680 were Mr. Francis (probably the minister of Haseendale) and Walter of Goldielands. He is probably the Scott of Horsleyhill whose daughter Eliza married Walter of Woll in 1694. In 1678, 1685 and 1690 he was one of the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire. He leased the Trinitylands from the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1692. In 1692 he signed the agreement between Francis Gledgewart, widow of Robert Scott of Shielswood (and Beaton of Creighe). He signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. In 1643 he witnessed a ‘supplication’ to the Privy Council. He is listed as one of the landowners in a 1643 valuation of the lands in Wilton Parish, the value being £26 13s 4d (it is unclear where these lands were, but by 1788 were owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch). He is probably the Robert of ‘Hartwoodmill’ recorded as landowner (jointly with Sir Robert Dalyell) in a 1643 valuation of Hawick Parish; the lands were valued at £533 6s 8d. In 1643 he was on the Commission of Supply for Selkirkshire (so he was M.P. for 1643–45) and in 1646, 1648 and 1649 he was on the Committee of War for Selkirkshire. In 1648 he re-married Margaret, widow of Robert Scott of Shielwood (and she would later marry Sir John of Thirlestane). His oldest son was William, who was the last of Hartwoodmyres. Robert of Headshaw (17th C.) listed as one of the major landowners in a valuation of Wilton Parish in 1643, his lands being valued at £448 10s. He was probably the ‘younger of Headshaw’ who leased part of the lands of Belses in 1632. He was probably also the son of Robert of Headshaw who sold the estate of Whitehaugh to Andrew Hay in 1623. In 1627 he was ‘of Eidsshaw, younger’ when accused of being among a band of Scots who harassed the tenant of Hartwoodburn. In 1629 he sold the family estates of Headshaw and Langhope to John of Yorkston, 2nd son of George of Synton. He was involved in a court case in 1634 with Sir William Scott of Harden and John, son of Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane, over the lands of Thirlestane. In 1638 he is ‘sumtyme of Heidschaw’ when he signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick. He is surely the Scott of Head-shaw whose ‘Lands, being Wester Whitehaugh’ are recorded in 1643. He is probably the Robert of Headshaw whose daughter Jean married William Scott of Synton in 1647. Robert of Heap (17th C.) recorded as owner of teinds in Ashkirk Parish in the 1643 Roxburghshire county valuation. These consisted of the teinds of Leaphill, Woll, Castleside and Broadlee (valued at £208), Whitslade (£80) and Essenside (£60), as well as tack-duty (valued at £3 6s 8d). He is recorded as one of the heritors of Wilton Parish in 1649. Probably the same Robert was ‘of Wester Heap’ on the 1663 Land Tax Rolls for Wilton and also ‘of Heap’ when he paid tax in Ashkirk Parish. He was probably related to James of Heap, who is also recorded in the 17th century. It is possible he is the Robert, married to Margaret Scott, whose daughter Grisel was baptised in Ashkirk in 1652. Robert of Burnhead (d.1677) local landowner in the mid-to-late 1600s (it is unclear whether he was Laird or tenant at Burnhead). In 1643 he was recorded as owner of land valued at £156 in Hassendean Parish. He was also recorded in the Land Tax Rolls for Hassendean Parish in 1663, when he paid tax on £156 (presumably for Burnhead itself). He was only son of William of Burnhead and Margaret Cairncross. In 1636 he married Marian, daughter of Ragwell Bennet of Chesters, and they had 2 daughters. In 1643 he secondly married Elizabeth, daughter of Hector Turnbull of Clarilaw (through this marriage probably acquiring the lands of Clarilaw). He was succeeded by William of Burnhead, and also had at least 3 other sons: Robert of Lees; Adam; and Alexander. Robert of Phaup (d.bef. 1671) father of Adam, who became a gunsmith’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1671. Other sons were probably Col. Francis and Capt. John, who were recorded in factor’s records for Sir William Scott of Harden in 1657 and 1671, respectively. Robert of Girnwood (b.c.1615) eldest son of Walter of Girnwood. He was still a minor when his father died, with his uncle Robert of Shielswood acting as tutor to him and his brother, Walter from 1629. He was served heir to his father in 1636, presumably when he reached majority. In 1640 he married Bessie, daughter of Sir Walter of Whitslade. Robert of Borthwickbrae (17th C.) recorded in a list of ‘communicants’ of the Borthwick valley in 1650. It appears that his wife was Margaret Scott and their sons William and Walter. In 1643 and 1644 he was appointed by Parliament to the Committee of War for Selkirkshire. He was probably the last Scott of Borthwickbrae. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Pat-erson and their children included Bessie (b.1652) and Margaret (b.1654). The witnesses in 1652 were Robert Deans and William Ruecastle and in 1654 were John Scott and Walter Chisholme. Robert (d.bef. 1678) son of Thomas of Todrig and younger brother of the next Thomas of Todrig. He is mentioned in 1637 as son of Thomas when he became a merchant’s apprentice in Ed-inburgh. He is recorded in 1678 and 1680 when his widow Isobel Scott had discharges for annual rent in Selkirk. In 1679, 1681, 1683 and 1684 his widow was ‘tutorix’ to their daughters Isobel and Janet. Her signature is recorded in 1684. Robert (d.bef. 1681) recorded being ‘in Hassendean’ in 1681 when his widow Helen Caldwell’s daughter Agnes was baptised in Roberton. The witnesses were John Noble and Thomas Scott. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts. Robert of Lees (17th C.) 2nd son of Robert, tenant in Burnhead and Elizabeth Turnbull. He appears to have been Laird of the lands that were later referred to as ‘West Lees’, near Appletree-hall. He probably also held the lands of Clarilaw and was succeeded by Walter of Clarilaw, who was likely to be either his son or nephew. He was among the heritors accused of inciting the 1690 riot when the roof of Hassendean Kirk was re-moved to Roberton. He could be the same as the Robert living at Burnhead on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He may be the Robert in Lees whose son John was baptised in Wilton in 1705. Robert of Glack (17th C.) possibly son of the youngest sister of the last Walter Scott of Goldielands (al-though Keith Scott suggests he was married to a daughter of the first Sir Walter of Goldielands, but this seems at least a generation too early). He is recorded in a Hassendean Parish record of 1666, where he was one of those supporting sup-pression of the Parish. Probably the same indi-vidual is recorded as a heritor of Hawick Parish in 1643 (where he is described as ‘of Cloak’, with land valued at £100, which was almost certainly Fenwick) and of Wilton Parish in both 1643 (de-scribed as ‘of Lack’, with land valued at £130) and 1649 (described as ‘of Clak’); this suggests the possibility that he may be related to James ‘of Park’ (with a transcription error), recorded around the same time. Glack was an estate in Peeblesshire, although he also owned the lands of Fenwick and Highchesters, and may have lived locally. Scott of Satchells lists him as one of the ‘Pensioners to the House of Buckcleugh’ and says he was given the lands of Fenwick for his service. In 1654 he transferred the lands of Fenwick, Highchesters and half of Ladyurd to Robert Scott of Harwood, but had them back 2 years later, as confirmed by the Duke and Duchess of Buccleuch in a charter of 1668. He also paid £100 in land tax in Hawick Parish in 1663, and also in 1678 (perhaps for Fenwick), plus the land tax on lands valued at £130 in Wilton Parish (where he is recorded being ‘of Clack’, the lands probably being East Highchesters). He is easy to confuse with Robert, son of Robert of Harwood, who acquired Falnash and other lands. He also appears to have inherited part of the Goldielands estates and passed them to Walter Scott of Crumhaugh in 1674. He may be the Robert ‘in Glack’ whose widow Jean Brown married Malcolm Inglis of Manorhead in 1666. He is probably the Robert ‘Glack’ who witnessed a baptism for tailor John Wilson in 1678 and another for William of Harwood in 1680. He is probably also the Robert of Glack whose son James with Bessie Henderson (labelled ‘forn’ for fornication) was baptised in Hawick in 1680. Lieut.-Col. Robert (17th C.) son of Walter, portioner of Guilan, and grandson of Sir Robert of Haining. He was the last member of the Scotts of Haining of whom there is any record. Robert of Harwood (d. bef. 1667) son of Walter ‘in Braidhaugh’, (i.e. Broadhaugh) who was Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch for upper Teviotdale and the Langholm area. The precise kinship with the Scotts of Buccleuch is uncertain. He is ‘in Braidehaw’ in 1638 when he signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick. He may be the Chamberlain to the Scotts of Buccleuch who was at Raesknoewe in 1640–44. He may be the Robert of Falnash listed as the 3rd largest landowner in the 1643 valuation of Hawick Parish (with lands valued at £1400). He is described as ‘in Braidehauche’ in 1644–50 when he acted as Chamberlain to Scott of Buccleuch for the upper Teviot valley, like his father before him. He was also ‘in Braid Hauche’ in 1646, 1648 and 1649 when he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire. In 1651 he is ‘callit of Braidhauch’ and described as eldest lawful son of Walter of Arkleton in the will of Francis, Earl of Buccleuch, when he was granted 800 merks yearly for his lifetime. By 1652 he was referred to as ‘in Braidehauche, now of Harwode’, and he was still Chamberlain in 1660. He is the Robert ‘of Harwood’ who acted as Chamberlain to Scott of Buccleuch for Ettrick, St. Mary’s and Selkirk in 1657–60. A bond at the end of 1653 transfers the lands of Fenwick, Highchesters and half of Ladyurd (in Peeblesshire) to him from Robert Scott of Glack (who may have been a relative). But the lands were returned in 1656, as confirmed by the Duke and Duchess of Buccleuch in a charter of 1668. He witnessed charters for lands in Dalkeith for the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1656 and 1658. In 1661 he was listed as still owing £4600 to the Duchess of Buccleuch for rentals in Teviotdale. In 1662, after the Restoration, he was fined £300. In 1663 he is recorded as ‘liferenter of the lands of Dalcove’ when he renounced the burial place in the choir of the old kirk of Mertoun to Sir William Scott of Harden. And in 1663 he was involved in a libel action with Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. Also in 1663 he witnessed the marriage contract of Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch, and was listed there as one of her curators. Furthermore, he is probably the ‘Braidhaugh for Harrot’ who is recorded on the Land Tax Rolls in 1663, paying £866 13s 4d. He was also recorded in 2 discharges of 1663. He married Beatrice (or Beatrix) Gledstains, from the family of Gledstains of that Ilk. Their children included: Walter (b.1640), who succeeded by 1672; Robert, who became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1662; Francis (b.1642) of Greenhill; John (b.1644), who probably died young; David (b.1646); William (b.1649), who became an apothecary’s apprentice in 1667, and was probably the same as the surgeon in Hawick in the late 17th century; Gideon of Falnash (b.1651), ‘Auld Falnash’, Chamberlain to the Duchess of Buccleuch; John (again, b.1652); and Agnes, who married John Scott of Woll. It is possible that Andrew (b.1656), whose mother’s name is given as ‘Bessie’ Gledstains, was also his son. The witnesses in 1651 were Patrick Hamilton and Gideon (surely a relative and perhaps Sir Gideon of Highchester) and in 1652 were Gideon (again) and John Gledstains. Robert (17th C.) tenant in Drinkstone. He is probably the Robert ‘of ... stoun’ recorded in 1643 as owner of lands in Hassendean Parish valued at £66 13s 4d. He is Robert ‘of Drinkstoun’ in the Land Tax Rolls for 1663 when paid tax on £66 13s 4d. He is probably the Robert in Drinkstone whose wife Bessie’s will is recorded in 1682; they may have married in Ashkirk Parish in 1640, with children including William (b.1649), James (b.1651), Francis (b.1653) and Margaret (b.1660). The witnesses in 1651 were Robert and George (who were probably related to him or his wife). He could be the Robert of Drinkstone whose son Robert married Bessie, daughter of William of Galalaw, according to a marriage contract of 1663. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Miller and their children included: James (b.1671); Marion (b.1673); John (b.1676); William (b.1679); an unnamed son (b.1682); James (again, b.1684); and another unnamed son (b.1687). The witnesses in 1671 were James and Walter (who were probably relatives) and in 1673 were Walter of Goldielands and Robert of Tandlaw. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1680 he was ‘in Barnknow’ (presumably the farm of Barn Knowe) when he witnessed a baptism for tailor John Wilson; a witness for Wilson 2 years earlier was Robert ‘in Barnknow’, making it possible that this was the same man. He was surely related to John, who was also recorded in Barn Knowe in 1680. Robert of Whitslade (17th C.) local landowner of the mid-to-late 1600s. He married Jean Hay in Edinburgh in 1681. He may have been the oldest son of Thomas, or his younger brother. Robert (17th C.) resident of Burnhead according to a baptismal record of 1682. He is probably related to Adam who was also in Burnhead at that time. It seems likely they are the Adam and Robert who witnessed baptisms for William (later referred to as ‘of Burnhead’) in 1686 and 1688. He married Margaret Scott and their children (baptised in Roberton Parish) included: John (b.1680); Robert (b.1682); Bessie (b.1687); and Margaret (b.1689). The witnesses in 1680 were John Scott and William Scott (who were presumably related to either him or his wife), in 1682 were William and John Scott (perhaps the same 2 men) and in 1687 were William and Adam Scott. He is probably the Robert who was resident at Burnhead on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls; he was probably related to the William who was also listed as a householder there and given the coincidence of the names, they may have both been related to the contemporary and previous Lairds of Burnhead. It is possible he is the same man as Robert of Lees. Robert (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Jean Murray and their son Robert was baptised in 1681. The witnesses were Thomas Gray and Robert Graham. Robert (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, when it contained Hassendean. He married Helen Dryden and their children included: Adam (b.1679); Janet (b.1681); and Christian (b.1687). The witnesses in 1681 were Robert Turnbull and James Law and in 1687 were John and Robert Noble. Robert (17th C.) fined £100 Scots in 1688 for leaving the town when the militia was in Hawick charging young men ‘for throwing of dyce and drawing of balotes’. He clearly did not want to serve! He may be the same as one of the contemporary Roberts. Robert of Bonnington (17th C.) son of John of Bonnington. He was in possession of the lands in 1670. He had a son John. He was succeeded by James, who was either his brother or son. Robert (17th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. His brother Walter was a merchant, who in 1673 was accused of striking him, apparently the result of a misunderstanding involving Thomas Brown and Robert Dickson. He is probably ‘Robert Scott, laird, shoemaker’ listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4; the ‘laird’ suggests he might have been related to Thomas and James, who had the same nickname. He is probably the cordiner of the same name listed ‘uest the water’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert (17th C.) son of John of Gilmancleuch. He was recorded in a deed of renunciation and discharge in 1673. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1679 George Hall was fined for ‘ane blood’ on his, and ordered to pay him 5 shillings Scots per day, since ‘his arms was swollen by the blood’ on his, and ordered to pay him 5 shillings Scots per day. He was recorded at Tandlaw in a baptismal record of 1666 in a list of landowners in Hassendean Parish. In 1673 he (along with Walter of Goldielands) witnessed a baptism for Robert (presumably a relative) and Bessie Miller in Hawick Parish. In 1678 he paid the land tax in Hassendean Parish. He was listed in 1682 among the heritors of the Regality of Melrose. Probably the same Robert was on the list of Hassendean heritors accused of inciting the riot of 1690. There was a warrant for his arrest along with Adam (probably a relative) and Thomas Turnbull of Knowe. He was listed on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls (for Hassendean Parish). Along with Robert in Drinkstone, he witnessed a baptism in 1698 for John Easton in Drinkstone. He was witness to the birth of a child of William in Goldielands in 1702, suggesting that they were closely related. He is probably the Robert of Tandlaw who (along with Robert in Drinkstone) witnessed a baptism for Robert of Coldhouse in 1711. He married Barbara Scott and had children baptised in Roberton Parish (actually the area of the former Hassendean Parish). He was recorded at Tandlaw in a baptismal record of 1682. He is difficult to separate from Robert in Galalaw, whose wife had the same name! His children included: Helen (b.1682); and probably Barbara (b.1685), who seems likely to be the Barbara from Tandlaw who married JamesOrmiston in Boonraw in 1713. Some of Adam (b.1685), Bessie (b.1685) and Charles (b.1688) may also be his children. The witnesses in 1682 were William and George Scott, who were probably related to him and his wife. The witnesses in 1687 were Robert Scott and Andrew Chisholme (perhaps the man associated with Coldhouse). Robert (17th C.) recorded in 1681 being at Galalaw. He married Barbara Scott in Roberton Parish in 1680 and their children (baptised in Roberton) included William (b.1681) and probably Margaret (b.1683), as well as some of Adam (b.1685), Bessie (b.1685) and Charles (b.1688). The witnesses in 1681 were William (perhaps his father) and George (perhaps related to his wife). Robert (17th C.) recorded in Hassendean in the 1680s, when it was part of Robertton Parish. He married Isobel Turnbull in 1682 and their children included: Bessie (b.1683); Margaret (b.1685); and George (b.1688). The witnesses in 1683 were Andrew Leyden and Walter Fowler. He could be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (d.c.1685) tenant in ‘Newtoune’ in 1685 when his will was recorded. He was probably one of the Scotts of Newton near Hawick. He could be the Robert who witnessed a baptism for William, resident at Newton in 1725. Robert (17th C.) son of John in Weens. In 1684 he was among the men declared fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. It is unclear what happened to him. Robert of Greenhill (17th C.) recorded in 1684 when he and Walter of Whitehaugh were witnesses for a baptism in Hawick for carrier John Aitchison. It seems likely he was related to Walter of Whitehaugh. However, it is unclear how he might have been related to the contemporary Francis of Greenhill. Perhaps the same man was Robert ‘of Whitlaugh’ in 1689 when (along with John) he witnessed the baptism of an illegitimate child for David Wilson in Hawick. Robert of Falnash (17th C.) younger son of Robert of Harwood and Beatrice Gledstains. He acquired the lands of Falnash and others from Robert of Glack (with whom he is therefore easily confused). In 1689 (confirmed in 1694) he is recorded transferring his lands of Fenwick, Easter Highchesters, half of ‘Ladyurd’ in Kirkurd and Nether Glack in Manor (the latter 2 in Peebleshire) to Gideon Scott of Outerside (later ‘Auld Falnash’), who was his brother. This appears to have been because he had no heirs, and was with the agreement of his wife Mary Elliot. He may be the Robert, married to Mary Elliot, whose children baptised in Hawick Parish included Adam (b.1646), Margaret (b.1647), Walter (b.1650) and Isobel (b.1653), although these births seem too early. Robert (17th C.) recorded in Roberton Parish in the 1680s, when Hassendean was part of it. He married Marion Scott and their children included: Walter (b.1683); and John (b.1686). The witnesses in 1683 were William (probably a relative) and Walter Gledstains. In 1686 the witnesses were Adam and Robert Scott, who may have been related to him and his wife. He may be the same as one of the Roberts recorded in Hassendean in the tax records of the 1690s. Robert (17th C.) shoemaker on the east side of Hawick. He is a ‘cordiner’ listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694 (in distinction to the one from the west). Probably the same ‘cordiner’ is listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. Robert (17th C.) wright in Hawick listed among those contributing to funds for the new Kirk bell in 1693/4. He may be the wright who witnessed a baptism for Walter Henderson in 1723. He married Isobel Stoddart and their son Robert was baptised in 1700. The witnesses in 1700 were Andrew Scott ‘customer’ and Bailie James Deans (and also listed as John Elliot and Gilbert Elliot in Nether Southfield, but that was for Robert in Newbigging). It is unclear if he was the same as one of the contemporary Roberts. Robert (17th C.) thatcher in Hawick, on the 1693/4 subscribers’ list for the new Kirk bell. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Perhaps he was the thatcher Robert whose grandchild died in 1794. Robert (17th C.) described as ‘sometime saddler in Fanesh’ (i.e. Falnash) in 1684 when he was on the long list of men declared as fugitives for refusing to yield to Episcopalianism. Robert (17th C.) recorded as ‘flesher’ in 1693 when he gave evidence to the Magistrates in a case of disorder within the Kirk. He was listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was listed as flesher in 1694 among those on the west-side of Hawick who paid the Hearth Tax. In 1700 he witnessed (along with ‘officer’ Alexander) a baptism for wright Andrew, suggesting that they might all be closely related. He also witnessed a baptism in 1700 for Walter Purdom. Robert of Broadmeadows (d.1694) son of William, and grandson. of William of Tushielaw. In an instrument of sasine of 1692 (preserved in the Walter Mason Collection) he was given the lands of Broadmeadow by his father (recorded as ‘Robert’, perhaps in error), following his marriage to Agnes Kebo. His ‘brother german’ Thomas and servant John Ker, were among the witnesses. He died without issue and in 1694 his sisters Isabella (who married John Balfour of Kailzie) and Jean (who married advocate John Murray) inherited his lands. Through Isabella’s son, Charles Balfour, the lands passed to a granddaughter, Jean Balfour, who married William Scott of Woll. His testament is recorded in 1694. Robert (17th C.) Chamberlain to the Laird of Highchester, recorded in 1694 in a sasine for lands in Minto. In 1697 he is recorded as ‘late chamberlain to Heychesters’. He was probably the same as one of the contemporary Roberts. Robert (17th C.) resident in Ashkirk Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. Robert (17th C.) resident of Castleside in Ashkirk Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He was distinct from Robert in Ashkirk. Robert (17th C.) resident of Borthaugh on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He could be the same as one of the contemporary Roberts. Robert (17th C.) renter of a quarter of the lands of Borthaugh in 1691 and 1692 and was ‘Scrivener’ in 1694 when he continued to rent Borthaugh. He continued to rent ¼ of Borthaugh in 1696 and 1698, and was still described as ‘Scrivener’. He was also recorded as a ‘Scriver’ at Borthaugh on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls for Wilton Parish. He was presumably a lawyer, and may have been son of the James, who previously rented part of Borthaugh and was also designated ‘Scrivener’. Robert (17th C.) tenant at Potterlampert according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert ‘Pope’ (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick listed among those contributing to funds for the new Kirk bell in 1693/4. It is unclear what his nickname might mean. He is probably the merchant on the east-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. In the 1704 baptismal record he is ‘distinctionis causa called Pope’. Perhaps the same Robert was merchant who witnessed a baptism for James Dickson (tenant in Hawick) in 1714 and was the merchant who (along with Francis, another merchant) witnessed a baptism for carter Walter Bryson in Hawick in 1721. His children included Helen (b.1704), with witnesses Bailie James Deans and glover James Scott. Robert (17th C.) candlemaker listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He is listed separately from the merchant called ‘Pope’, but may be the same as one of the other contemporary Roberts. Robert (17th C.) resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He was called ‘Ormiston’, to distinguish him from other Roberts; however, it is unclear if he was related to James of Ormiston. Robert (17th C.) resident at Whitchesters according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He may be related to John and Walter, who were also listed there. He was recorded as a tenant in Whitchesters in 1706 when he (along with Alexander Thomson) witnessed a baptism for William Scott, who was also tenant there. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at ‘Mayns’ in 1696 when his daughter Isabella was baptised (with no mother’s name listed). The witnesses were Adam Scott and William Riddell. Robert (17th/18th C.) leased half the farm of Newbigging from the Duchess of Buccleuch in at least the period 1690–98. He was also resident at Newbigging in Hawick Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was presumably separate from the 2 Robert Scotts (father and son) who leased Over Southfield at the same time. He was recorded at Newbigging in 1700. In 1706 he witnessed a baptism for William Cowan, herd in Southfield and in 1708 further baptisms for Thomas Turnbull, herd in Nether Southfield and for William Hood, weaver in Nether Southfield. He was still tenant of Newbigging in about 1710, as attested in evidence given regarding the state of Hawick’s Common in 1767. He married Janet Elliot and their children included: Gavin (b.1698); and Archibald (b.1700). Witnesses in 1698 were John Elliot and John Goodfellow and in 1700 were John and Gilbert Elliot, both in Southfield (who could have been related to his wife). Robert (17th C.) resident at Over Southfield in 1694, according to the Hearth Tax rolls. In the period 1690–98 half of the farm of Over Southfield was rented jointly to ‘Rot. Scott father and sone’; so there were 2 generations called Robert at that time. In 1694 there was a connection made between the rental of Over Southfield and Allanhaugh Mill. Robert (17th C.) listed at Toshawhill among ‘The poor in Hauick Parioch’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert (d.bef. 1716) resident of Wilton, recorded at Drinkstone on the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He may be the same as the earlier Robert in Drinkstone (but this seems more likely to be the next generation). It is possible he was the Robert, son of Robert of Drinkstone, who in 1663 married Bessie, daughter of William in Galalaw. He was recorded in Drinkstone in 1696 when he witnessed a baptism (along with James) for Francis in Groundistone and in 1698 when he witnessed another for John Easton in Drinkstone. In 1700 he witnessed a baptism in Hawick Parish for James Grieve in Teindside. He is probably the Robert in Drinkstone who witnessed a baptism for Robert of Coldhouse in 1709; along with Robert of Tandlaw he witnessed a baptism for Robert of Coldhouse in 1711 and also in 1711, along with Robert of Coldhouse, he witnessed a baptism at Drinkstone. He was already deceased in 1716 when his daughter Elspeth married merchant William Tudhope in Hawick. Robert (17th C.) carrier in Hawick Parish. He married Janet Boyd and their children included: Margaret (b.1686); and Robert (b.1687), who may be the carrier in Branxholme Town about 20 years later. Robert’s baptism was witnessed by John, who may have been a relative. He could be the Robert, who along with John, appears to have been listed as a carrier when witnessing a baptism for Walter Henderson in Hawick in 1680. 2 separate carriers of the same name are listed ‘eist the water’ on Hearth Tax Rolls for Hawick in 1694. One of them is listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. Robert (17th C.) resident at Alton on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls for Hassendean Parish. It is unclear whether he was related to the Scots of Alton. Robert (17th C.) recorded among the poor of Hassendean Parish in 1694, when he was at Horsleyhill. Robert (17th C.) rented 1/3 of the farm of Wiltonburn from the Duchess of Buccleuch in at least the period 1694–98. He may have been closely related to John or Bessie (widow of James Riddell), who were also renting part of Wiltonburn in 1694, and to another Riddell, widow of Thomas Mitchelson, who was renting part of the farm in 1696. His cautioner in 1698 was Robert Miller. He may be the Robert who (along with Adam) witnessed a baptism for James in Wiltonburn in 1705. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Roberts. Robert of Hassendean (17th/18th C.) son of Adam. He may be the Robert of Hassendean, described as aged 40 and married, who gave evidence in the 1682 trial of Alexander Home for being a Covenant. He is recorded in 1690 as one of the heritors accused of inciting the riot at the de-roofing of Hassendean Kirk and being arrested (along with Adam Scott and Thomas Turnbull of Knowe). He was served heir to his father Adam in 1695. In 1696 and 1704 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire. He is probably the Robert ‘of Hessindane’ who witnessed a baptism for Francis of Newton in 1705. He sold the lands of Hassendean to Anne Duchess of Buccleuch in the period 1679–1710. Robert ‘younger of Hassendean’ brought an action against Rev. Francis Scott, following his removal by the Privy Council, and this was probably his son. However, this next Robert does not appear to have succeeded, and so he himself was the last Scott of Hassendean. Nevertheless, he is probably the Robert of Hassendean who witnessed a baptism for Francis of Newton in 1709. He may be the Robert ‘elder of Hassendean’ whose son Robert is recorded in a deed of 1682. The pair may be the ‘Hassanden Elder’ and ‘Hassanden younger’ recorded each paying for 2 hearths in ‘in the netherend’ of Hassendean Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert (17th C.) was recorder as ‘younger of Hassendean’ when he was indicted in 1680 for being a Covenant. The accusations against him including attacking ‘the Tower and Castle of Hawick’. He was probably son of Robert of Hassendean. Perhaps the same Robert ‘younger of Hassendean’ brought an action against Rev. Francis Scott, following his removal by the Privy Council in 1689. Robert (d.c.1725) carrier in Branxholme Town. Note that there was an earlier carrier of the same name, who may have been his father. The baptism of his son William, along with Margaret Turnbull (labelled ‘fornicators’) is recorded in 1705, with witnesses Robert Cook in Branxholme and Henry Orrock; he was recording being ‘commonly called ye Duchess of Buccughs carrier in Branxholtoun’. He was recorded being in arrears for rent on part of Branxholme Town in 1711–20 (and may be related to the William, who was also on the same farm at that time). He was recorded in 1714 as a carrier at Branxholme Town, when there was a promise that he pay some of what he owed for the lease, when his son Francis was baptised in Roberton Parish, and also when he and James (smith in the same place) witnessed a baptism for the Scoons at Commonsid. He was still mentioned in the rental records for Branxholme Town in 1725, but deceased in 1726, when James Sanderson took over his part of the farm. He married Agnes Armstrong (also from Hawick Parish) in 1706 and their children included: John (b.1707); Isobel (b.1708); Robert (b.1710); Janet (b.1712); Francis (b.1717), baptised in Roberton. but also recorded in Hawick; and Adam (b.1718). The witnesses in 1710 were James Craw and William Scott in Branxholme Town and in 1712 were John in Branxholme and William in Branxholme Town. He is probably the Robert in Branxholme Town whose son Francis was baptised in Robertson in 1717 (along with 3 others from the same place on that day). He may be the Robert, tenant in Branxholme Town whose son Walter was baptised in Hawick in 1720, with witnesses William Thomson in Newmill and smith James Dryden. If so, he is also the Robert in Branxholme Town who witnessed baptisms in 1720 for William Mitchellhill in Branxholme Town and James Dryden in Newmill. He could be the Robert recorded as a householder at Branxholme Park on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert of Falnash (d.1734) eldest son of Gideon (‘Auld Falnash’) and Mary Scott of Thistle tan. He is presumably the ‘Robert Scott, merchant, called of Falnash’, who was unanimously elected to be Cornet in 1722 (this presumably being shortly before he was married). He was Chamberlain to the Duchess of Buccleuch for Teviotdalehead 1721–27. He was mentioned as the Baron’s representative on Hawick Parish Session from 1722, and in 1723 ceased to be an Elder of Cavers to become a member of Hawick Parish Session ‘in consideration of having his chief interest and business in this parish’. He witnessed baptisms in Wilton in 1722 and 1724 for his sister Beatrix and Walter of Crumhaugh. He witnessed a baptism for John Ekron in Hawick in 1725. He also witnessed baptisms in Hawick for Gideon Elliot of Harwood in 1726 and 1728. He was in charge of transferring the tenancy of Whitchesters to Ian Thomson in Newmill. He could be the Robert, ‘brother to Todrige’, whose heirs are listed among the heritors of the Regality of Melrose in 1682. In 1696 he leased Borthwickshiel and Robertson from Gideon Scott of Highchester. He was a witness in 1700 to the marriage contract of his niece Jean Scott (with William Elliot of Harwood); she was daughter of his brother, Walter of Todrige. He died at the garrison in Edinburgh Castle at the age of about 92. Robert (17th/18th C.) married Margaret Graham in Wilton in 1703. Robert (17th/18th C.) recorded at Hawickshiels in 1704. He married Margaret Anderson and their son James was baptised in 1704, with witnesses Simon Miller and Walter Scott, both also from Hawickshiels. Robert (17th/18th C.) married Margaret Scott in 1705. Robert ‘Wyndhead’ (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick. He presumably lived at the head of the Wynd, which was probably what became Walter’s Wynd. It is therefore possible that he was connected with the Scotts of Horsleyhill. He is recorded as ‘wyndhead’ when his children were baptised in 1701, 1712, 1715 and 1718. In 1708 he gave evidence before the Hawick Kirk Session to say that William Scott (son of John ‘Cloaks’) spent time with Margaret Brydon on Common Riding night the year before, leading to an illegitimate child. In 1723 he witnessed a baptism for tailor Walter, who was also called ‘Wyndhead’. He married Margaret Crozier. Their other children included: Robert (b.1701); Robert (again, b.1710); Archibald (b.1712); Walter (b.1715); and Marjorie (b.1718). The witnesses in 1712 were tailors Archibald and George Scott (who may have been related to him) and in 1718 were shoemaker James Chisholme and smith John Scott. He was probably related to John ‘Wyndhead’, who died before 1712. Robert (17th/18th C.) son of Walter, he was tenant in Goldielands. He was thus recorded in 1702, when his son Robert was born; this was probably the same as the Robert recorded at Goldielands a few decades later. He married Mary Scott in 1701, with his father given there as Walter; from the similarity of names, it seems likely he is descended from the Scotts of Goldielands and Crumhaugh. Robert of Harden (d.1710) son of William, succeeding from his brother Sir William in 1707. He was previously ‘of Iliston’ (or ‘Elistoun’, near Melrose), which he had inherited in 1686. He lived in Edinburgh before gaining the Harden titles. In 1708 he was listed as a Commissioner of Supply for Berwickshire. In 1709 he sold half of Kershope to William Kerr of Chatto. He married Jean, daughter of Sir Thomas Ker of Fernilee. However, he (like his brother) died without issue and was succeeded by his cousin Walter (actually first cousin, twice removed), son of Sir Gideon of Highcheston. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He is recorded at ‘Mitcha’ (probably Meadshaw) in 1702 when his son Gideon was baptised. Robert (17th/18th C.) tenant in Blackcleuch near Teviothead. He was recorded in Blackcleuch in 1704, 1708, 1716 and 1724. In 1705 he witnessed a baptism for John in Blackcleuch (also called ‘Uncle John’), who may have been a relative; the other witness was John in Fahnash. In 1716 he was recorded as tenant in Blackcleuch when he witnessed a baptism for William Anderson, shepherd in Blackcleuch. He could be the tenant in Fahnash who witnessed baptisms in 1719 for Archibald Murray, herd in Hislop and in 1720 for John Nichol from Commonbrae. He married Mary (or ‘Marie’) Scott in 1701 and their children included: Janet (b.1704); and Walter (b.1708). His son John was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1724 (with no mother’s name given). The witnesses in 1704 were Walter Elliot in Commonbrae and John Beattie ‘servant’ and in 1708 were Walter in Crumhaugh (probably owner of the lands of Blackcleuch) and Walter in Lymiecleuch. Rev. Robert (1673/4–1727) brother of William, Laird of Whitehaugh, and hence son of Walter of Whitehaugh and Headshaw. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1693 and was licensed to preach by Selkirk Presbytery in 1698. He was called to Roberton Parish in late 1699 and became minister there in 1700, remaining until his death. Because of the ruinous state of the Manse he and his family stayed in Hawick for most of that time; a record of 1715 refers to him and his family being forced to return to Hawick. The oldest existing Roberton communion token dates from 1705, during his incumbency. It is said that in 1703 he was one of the local ministers who walked out of the Synod meeting at Duns, in sympathy with the objections of Hawick’s minister Alexander Orrock. He is probably the ‘mr Rott scott’ who (along with William of Whitehaugh) witnessed a baptism for James in Whitehaugh in 1721. He was minister of the Gospell att Robertoun’ in 1727 (when (along with his brother William) he witnessed a baptism for James Scott and Janet Scott in Borthaugh. He married Janet Scott in Hawick, and their children (baptised in Roberton) were: Elizabeth (or Bessie, b.1710); Walter (b.1716); and Marion. He published ‘Twelve Sermons preached before and alter the celebration of the Lord’s Supper’ (1729). He is buried at Roberton and a memorial tablet was built into the churchyard wall, erected by his brother William. Robert (17th/18th C.) son of Bailie James. In 1708 he caused a disturbance in St. Mary’s by trying to take seat in the ‘Steeple Loft’ which had been his deceased father’s, although the Council had just decreed that these front seats were reserved for the present Bailies. Along with Walter Purdon (son of another deceased Bailie) he spent 24 hours in jail. It is unclear whether he is the same as one of the other contemporary men named Robert. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He is recorded at Outerside in 1711 when his daughter Janet was baptised. There are many possibilities for children born in Roberton at about the same time who could be his. Robert (17th/18th C.) married Isabell Hobkirk in Hawick in 1710. Perhaps the same Isabell Hobkirk married Robert Gledstains in Hawick in 1714. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident in Mossbrae in 1717 when his son Andrew was baptised in Roberton Parish. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident at Nether Tofts. In 1718 his son Simon was baptised in Kirkton Parish. Probably the same Robert was in Effledge in 1720 when his son John was baptised. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1719 he was recorded as ‘Crawship’ when he witnessed a baptism Hawick weaver Robert Riddell. His designation might signify a connection with the lands of Crawshope in upper Teviothead. Robert of Scotsbank (d.bef. 1713) owner of the lands of ‘Scott’s Bank’, part of the farm of Hyndhope on the Ettrick. He was recorded in a discharge with the Burgh of Selkirk in 1707. In 1708 he is recorded as owner of land in Selkirk, adjacent to the main ‘causey’, which was laid by Hawick man Archibald Paterson. Also in 1708 he attended the 'convention of Burrows' in Selkirk and was listed as a Commissioner of Supply for Selkirkshire. There was a further discharge in 1709, which referred to a loan of 2000 merks he made to the Burgh of Selkirk in 1696 (perhaps related to the Darien Company). His widow Janet Halliday is recorded in a 'lybell' in Selkirk in 1713. He is also recorded in 1719 when his widow, Janet Halliday, complained about Thomas Hunter, maltman and Burgess of Selkirk and was also in dispute over a butcher’s bill and in another case in 1720. His widow also had discharges with the Burgh of Selkirk in 1727, 1730, 1732 and 1734, and she complained about march stones with the ‘burleymen’ of Selkirk in 1731. In 1708 his second daughter (and co-heir) Mary married Thomas of Todrig. He may be the Robert who married Janet Halliday in Gladsmuir Parish in 1703 (in which case she must have been his second wife); their children included Alexander (b.1710) and William (b.1712). Robert (17th/18th C.) described as a tenant in Hawick. He married Janet Greenshiels and their children included: James (b.1721); Mary (b.1723); and William (b.1725). The witnesses in 1725 were mason John Turnbull and Dand Gray in Weensland. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Groundistone in 1725 (at the same time as another Robert) and Wester Groundistone in 1729. He married Isobel Hall (or perhaps Hill) in Wilton in 1719. Their children included: Margaret (b.1722); John (b.1725); Isobel (b.1727); Andrew (b.1729); William (b.1731); and Robert (b.1734); and Walter (b.1739). The witnesses in 1725 were George Scott and Walter Riddell and in 1729 were William Turnbull and Robert Scott. Robert (17th/18th C.) from Robertson Parish. He was living at Girnwood in 1718 and 1722 when his daughters Janet and Helen were baptised. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (17th/18th C.) from Robertson Parish, he married Jean Taylor in Ashkirk in 1719. Robert (17th/18th C.) cottar in North Synton. He married Euphan Dunlop and their children included: William (b.1719); John (b.1731); and Bettie (b.1732). Robert (17th/18th C.) from Robertson Parish, he married Dorothy McVitie in Hawick in 1721. Her name is written ‘Doarthie Magvitie’. Robert (17th/18th C.) from Robertson Parish, he was at Parkhill in 1723 when his son Robert was baptised. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Borthwickbrae in 1722 when his son William was baptised. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (17th/18th C.) farmer at Skelfhill. He is listed as tenant there on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He may be the Robert recorded in Skelfhill in 1712 when he witnessed a baptism for William Scott, tenant in Falknash (who was formerly at Skelfhill, and was probably related). In 1722 he, along with Robert Elliot of Caerlenrig and James Grieve of Commonside petitioned the Presbytery for a preacher and meeting house in their district. In 1723 he is recorded in the Hawick Session records giving in ‘400 merks of ye poors money’. It is possible he is the ‘Old Hobby in Skelfhill’ who wrote a version of ‘The Braes of Brauxholme’ and of who several other stories are told by William Scott, teacher in Burnmouth (see Auld Hobbie o Skelfhill). He is probably the Robert in Skelfhill whose son John was married in Hawick in 1700. He may be the ‘Auld Hobbie Scott in Skelfhill’ who was grandfather of Robert Scott in Skelfhill who described him in 1809; he was said to have married a daughter of John Elliot, farmer in Southfield. Robert (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick Shiel. He married Margaret Martin in 1722. Their children included: Margaret (b.1723); and Helen (b.1725). The 1723 baptism was witnessed by Walter Nixon in Hawick Shiel and John Glendinning in Whitchesters and the 1725 baptism by Walter Nixon and John Scott ‘in Hawick’. Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, residing at Tandlaw in 1729. He married Janet Gledstains in 1727 and their children included: Margaret (b.1729); Bessie (b.1730); and Robert (b.1734). The witnesses in 1729 were Walter Scott and William Stewart. Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Groundistone in 1729 (at the same time as another Robert); he is probably the Robert who witnessed a baptism for the other Robert in 1729. He married Bessie Harkness and their children included: William (b.1718); Walter (b.1720); James (b.1729); and Mary (b.1734). The witnesses in 1729 were George and Richard (who were probably related to him). Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Boonraw in 1729. He married Margaret Easton in 1728 and their children included: Isobel (b.1729); and Janet (b.1731). The witnesses in 1729 were James and Robert Ormiston. Dr. Robert (d.c.1757) surgeon in Hawick, possibly the last of the Scotts of Whitslade. Dr. Thomas Somerville’s ‘My Own Life and Times’ describes him as ‘the only surviving representative of the ancient family of Whitslade. He appears to have been brother of Walter, and also of John, who sold Whitlade. He was probably the 4th son of Thomas (d.c.1698), and was said to have greatly outlived his 6 brothers. It was also said that he was 14th in descent from the Lord of Buccleuch. In his old age he became quite poor, being described as ‘a gentlemanlike person in ruin, tall, meagre – the countenance of hunger and despondency’, and is said to have survived through occasional donations of distant relatives. He was also helped by Hawick’s minister Rev. William Somerville, perhaps inspired by the assistance the Scotts of Whitlade had given to Somerville’s father, Rev. Thomas S. Somerville, when he was ousted as minister of Cavers during the Revolution and settled in Hawick. He witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1745, for skinner John Currier. Perhaps a different Dr. Robert (or the same, but with confused details) is described as being the 4th son of William of Raeburn, and 14th in descent from Buccleuch; this Robert married Mary Flemming and their son Robert may have been a surgeon in Musselburgh, who married Elizabeth Chalmers, and whose daughter Helen apparently helped Sir Walter with the plot of Ivanhoe. He is recorded as ‘Mr. Robert Scott Whitlade Surgeon in Hawick’ when he witnessed a baptism in 1753 for a daughter of John Gledstains of Whitlaw. This suggests that he continued to be an Episcopalian throughout his life.

Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Branxholme. He married Agnes Elliot and their son Patrick was baptised in 1728. The witnesses were Walter in ‘New...’ and John in ‘Ever...’. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1720 he was at Highchesters when his daughter Helen was baptised. Robert (18th C.) resident of Whitfield. His son Walter was baptised in Roberton Parish in 1732 (apparently twice in successive weeks!). There are several other children baptised in Roberton at about the same time who could be his. Robert (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Borthwickshiel in 1732 and 1736. His children included: Janet (b.1732); and Margaret (b.1736). Robert (18th C.) servant to Rev. William Somerville in Hawick. He witnessed a baptism for shepherd Andrew Brown in 1740. Robert (d.1750) resident of Stouslie whose funeral is recorded in Wilton Parish. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert of Coldhouse (d.1772) father of Robert, minister of Innerleithen and grandfather of Alexander, friend of Lord Byron. He is probably a descendant of the earlier Robert of Howford and Coldhouse, but the identity of his father is not clear. He is recorded being ‘of Coldhouse’ in Wilton baptisms in at least 1709, 1711 and 1724. In 1708 in Wilton Parish, he married Jean, daughter of James Cunningham. His children included: James (b.1709); Margaret (b.1711); Rev. Robert (b.1714); an unnamed son (b.1717); Walter (b.1724); and Jean (b.1726). Helen (b.1726), baptised in Hawick to a couple with the same names, could also be his child. The witnesses in 1709 were William Chisholme of Parkhill, Alexander Scott, younger of Galalaw, and Robert Scott in Drinkstone. The witnesses in 1711 were Robert of Tandlaw and Robert in Drinkstone; also in 1711, along with Robert in Drinkstone, he witnessed a baptism at Drinkstone. The witnesses in 1724 were Alexander of Galalaw and Walter Cunningham (who was surely related to his wife, and may have given his name to the child). He is probably the Laird recorded in Hawick in 1739 when the bells were rung for ‘Coldehouses wife’s burroll’. He is probably also the ‘Lard of Coldhouse’ who hired the Hawick Parish mortcloth in 1758. His death at Tandlaw is recorded in the Scots Magazine, and he was said to be ‘aged 90 and upwards’. Robert (1688–1768) 3rd son of William in Milisington. He became tenant at Singlie before 1712. He is probably the tenant in Singlie who was involved in a case with Alexander, fleshers in Selkirk in 1762. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Henry Elliot of Lodgegill. Their children included: William, who succeeded as tenant at Singlie; Henry, who farmed at Over Deloraine; Margaret, who married William Scott, farmer at Kirkhope; and Elizabeth. Robert (17th/18th C.) recorded in 1699 in Selkirk as late Dean of Guild. Robert (17th/18th C.) tenant in Lingle, near Selkirk, as recorded in 1708 for a receipt for a transaction involving Philiphaugh Mill. It is unclear how he is related to other Scotts, but it is possible he is the same man as the Dean of guild in 1715 (since the Burgh of Selkirk owned the farm of Lingle). Note the potential confusion with ‘Singlie’. Robert (17th/18th C.) recorded as Burgh Officer in Selkirk in 1716. Robert of Gorrenberry (17th/18th C.) recorded in 1724 when his daughter Margaret married John Elliot of Whitehaugh. He must have been related to the earlier John of Gorrenberry, or perhaps to the Alton branch. However, it is possible that ‘Robert’ is an error for another Scott of Gorrenberry. Robert of Harwood (d.bef. 1744) son of Walter of Harwood and Christian Ker. He may have been the ‘Harwood’ recorded in 1721 paying money to the town for ringing the bells at the burial of his child. It is said that the family fortunes were lost through the extravagance of his mother. He sold Harwood to Henry, Duke of Buccleuch (or perhaps confirmed the earlier sale of his father) in about 1738. His widow Elizabeth Mason is recorded leasing the farms of Skelfhill and Fairymside from the Buccleuch Estates in 1744. This is confirmed to her eldest son Robert, said to be under age in 1744; that document also states that the Duke’s tenants shall keep the privilege of casting peats. It is possible that Robert, recorded later as tenant in Skelfhill was this same son. His 5th son James eventually became farmer at Skelfhill. It is unclear whether the ‘Robert Scott of Harrot’ recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761 was his son (or an error).

Robert ‘Rob’ (17th/18th C.) recorded in the Parish Records of the early 1700s setting up seats and making a ‘footgang’ at Hawick Kirk. He was thus presumably a joiner. Robert of Davington (c.1682–1764) 2nd son of Francis of Davington, and descendant of the Scotts of Thirlestane. He succeeded after the death of his father in 1706 and his older brother John about 1710. Sir Francis of Thirlestane had him and his widowed mother thrown off their farm at Cassock. About 1727 he (and his brothers Francis and William) started a legal battle to recover the estates lost by his great-grandfather during the Civil War (based on a document made out by his grandfather Sir John of Thirlestane in Hawick in 1641). This ended in 1744 and he renounced all rights to the lands to his brother Francis in 1747. He was known as ‘Robert the Laird’. He married Mary McAlpine. Their children included: James, who succeeded, and had an only son James, who died without issue; John, attorney in Canonbie, who had several children, but also failed in the male line; and William of Meikledale. Robert (1691/2–1763) agricultural labourer in southern Liddesdale and northern England. He married Christian Turnbull, who died in 1750, aged 55. Their children included: Margaret (d.1771), who died at Longcleuchside; and James (1726/7–1801), who died at Pyke. He died at Blacklin and they are buried at Ettleton. Robert (1698–1771) son of Walter of Woll and Eliza, daughter of Robert Scott of Horsleyhill. He moved to Tamnynmore in County Londonderry and was progenitor of a line of Scotts in Ulster, including proprietors of W. & C. Scott, millmen in Omagh. The family history is described in ‘The Stones that Ground the Corn, The Story of an Irish County Grain Mill, 1850–2000’, by Tony Deeson et al. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Mary ‘Mcgahon’ and their children included Mary (b.1762) and Ann (b.1765). Robert (1699–1775) son of Walter ‘Beardie’ and grandfather of Sir Walter of Abbotsford. He received a lease of Sandyknowe from Scott of Harden. He paid the window tax there in the 1750s. He married Barbara Haliburton in 1728 and their children were: Walter (b.1729) W.S., father of the author; Thomas (b.1731), who married Anne Scott of Raeburn and secondly Jean Rutherford of Knowesouth; Janet (1733–1805), who lived in Kelso and died unmarried; Mary (b.1735), also died unmarried; Jean (b.1737) married her relative Robert Scott of Raeburn; Robert (b.1739), who lived at Rosebank, Kelso; Barbara (b.1742), who married Mr. Currie; and John (b.1749), who died young on H.M.S. Southampton. Robert (18th C.) recorded in Whitriggs in 1725 when his son Francis was baptised. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert of Fenwick (18th C.), called ‘Clack’ Son of Francis of Fenwick, he married Jean Scott and later Katherine Elliot of Arkelton. He may be the Robert of Clack who was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1690 (although this could have been the earlier Robert of ‘Glack’, who also owned Fenwick). In about 1710 he and several tenants neighbouring Hawick Common formed themselves into a club and ‘drunk the Magistrates of Hawick, and got liberty from the Magistrates to rest their becats on the Common from nine in the morning to twelve mid-day’ (according to evidence given on the state of the Common in 1767). He is probably the ‘Laird of Fenick’ who paid Hawick £9 for a year’s rent of the weigh-house in 1729 (suggesting he was the Baron’s Bailie for the Town). He is probably the Robert of Fenwick who (along with Charles of Crumhaugh) in 1747 witnessed a baptism for Gideon and Rachel Scott (perhaps his daughter). He had a son, Gavin, but it is unclear who his wife might have been and if they had other children. The bells of St. Mary’s were rung in 1732 for ‘Lady Glask’s burial’, which was probably his wife. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1726 he married Helen Dickson from Roberton Parish, the marriage taking place at Commonside. It is possible he was the tenant in Thornyhaugh who witnessed a baptism in 1738; the other witness was Walter at Commonside, raising the possibility that there was a relationship between them. It is possible he was the son of Walter in Crumhaugh and Christian Bennet, born in 1704, who is said to have been a tenant in Crumhaugh who died without issue. Robert (18th C.) tenant farmer at Whitchesters, son of David. He married Elizabeth Douglas. Their son John was tenant at Boonraw. Walter (b.1732) and James (b.1734), born in Wilton, were probably also their children. Col. Robert of Horsleyhill (b.1704) son of Francis, descendant of the Scotts of Midgehope and Tushielaw. He was also referred to as ‘Captain’. His family had extensive lands in Weensland and a town-house at the top of Walter’s Wynd. In 1734 he was made an Honorary Burgess, the first one on record. In 1742 he registered arms at the Lyon Office. He also owned lands elsewhere, and was a heritor of Morebattle Parish. In 1744 he was involved in a dispute with Andrew Chatto, minister of Morebattle and Mow over teinds. He was Hawick Bailie for 4 years until about 1758 (and easy to confuse with the merchant of the same name who was a Bailie at a similar time). He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He was one of the defenders in the action of 1767 brought by the Duke of Buccleuch against the Bailies of Hawick and the neighbouring landowners regarding the division of the Common. He was also one of the witnesses in the Division of the Common proceedings. He is probably the ‘Captain Scott of Weensland’ described in 1777, among those who gained part of the Common (his allocation being included as part of that of Thomas Turnbull of Fenwick). He may be the Robert Scott whose former lands in Weensland are recorded in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls as belonging to James Dickson and passing to auctioneer James Olver by the mid-19th century. In 1746 in Edinburgh he married Agnes Douglas of Springbank (b.1720), daughter of George Douglas of Friarshaw. They had 2 sons and 2 daughters, with their son John succeeding. Robert (b.1704) youngest son of Walter and Christian Bennet. His father was uncle to Walter Scott of Crumhaugh, and had been described as sometimes tenant of Crumhaugh. In 1742 he witnessed (along with John Elliot at Goldielands) a baptism for workman Robert Lawson. In 1743 he received sasine of the lands of ‘Croftangry’ in Hawick, as heir to his half-brother Walter. He was also described as tenant in Crumhaugh himself. Also in 1743 he gained ‘a tenement of land and onestead of houses in Hawick’ which had been ‘deponed’ by his brother Walter in 1730; this may have been the same or different lands. He was then described as ‘multurer’. He probably died without children. Robert (18th C.) baker in Hawick. He was recorded as a ‘baxter’ in 1742 when he witnessed baptisms for shoemaker William (who may have been related) and for wright Henry Haliburton, and in 1743 when he witnessed a baptism for workman Robert Corzier. He may have been father of the later Robert Scott who was also a baker. Robert (18th C.) resident at Roberton Parish. He was at Craik in 1742 when his son James was baptised. Robert (18th C.) resident at Highchesters in 1743 when his son daughter Mary was baptised in Robertson Parish in 1743. Probably the same Robert was recorded in ‘Easter Haychester’ in 1763 in a court case in Selkirk for non-payment of a bill. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (18th C.) recorded in 1742 and 1745 being ‘at Goldielands’ when his children were baptised in Hawick. He married Agnes Rutherfurd and their children included: Marjorie (b.1733), baptised in Oxnam Parish; and Walter (b.1735), John (b.1737), Anne (b.1739), Charles (b.1742) and Beatrix (b.1745), baptised in Hawick Parish. The witnesses in 1742 were workman Walter Scott and Kirk Officer John Telfer and in 1745 included his servant Walter Scott. It is unclear whether he was directly connected to the former Scotts of Goldielands, but may have been son of the earlier Robert in Goldielands, born in 1702. Robert (18th C.) resident of Robertson itself in 1743 when his daughter Christian was baptised in that parish. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert of Burnhead (d.1755) eldest son of William, who he probably succeeded around 1720. He is probably the Robert ‘of Burnhead’ who in 1718 witnessed a baptism for a child of the deceased William of Brieryhill. In 1720 he witnessed baptisms in Hawick for Walter of Crumhaugh and Beatrice Scott and for weaver Thomas Tinlin. His sister Eupham married Thomas Watson, who was Clerk to the Regality of Hawick, and Margaret (probably another sister), married Patrick Scott and secondly James Scott, surgeon in Hawick. He was recorded living at Clarilaw in 1721, 1725 and 1727. In 1722 and 1724 he witnessed baptisms in Wilton for Walter of Crumhaugh. He served as a Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch for Eskdale in the period 1728–43. He was mentioned in 1735 in the deposition where the widow of Robert Scott of Falnash sold her property on the Howegate to Patrick Hardie. In 1719 in Wilton he married Agnes, 2nd daughter of Gideon Scott of Falnash and Mary Scott of Thirlestane. Their children were: Mary (b.1721); William (b.1723), who succeeded; Agnes (b.1725); Gideon (b.1727); Margaret, who married Rev. Samuel Charters of Wilton in 1786, and succeeded her brother; and Walter. The witnesses in 1721 were Gideon of Falnash and Walter of Crumhaugh. The witnesses in 1725 were Thomas Watson, writer in Hawick and James Scott, surgeon in Hawick (who married his sister Margaret). The 1727 baptism is recorded being ‘to Robert Scott of Burnhead and his Lady Agnes Scott’; the witnesses were James (perhaps the surgeon) and writer Thomas Watson. It seems like he must be the ‘Robert Scott, Laird of Burnfoot or Burnhead’ who in 1722 married Ann Stoddart in Ashkirk Parish; however, this conflicts with him marrying Agnes Scott. Robert of Hummelknowes (18th C.) recorded in 1753 when he paid the window tax in Cavers Parish. This was for 14 windows, as William (perhaps his father) had paid in 1748. His name is written ‘Robert Scott Esqr. Humbleknows’, the ‘Esqr.’ suggesting he was a man of some status. It is possible there is a connection with the Scotts ‘Esqr.’ recording being ‘to Robert Scott of Burnhead and his Lady Agnes Scott’; the witnesses were James (perhaps the surgeon) and writer Thomas Watson. It is possible that the Robert married to Elspeth (or perhaps Agnes) Chisholme (whose wife had a connection to Skelfhill). However, it is possible he was son of Robert of Harwood (whose wife had a connection to Skelfhill). He is probably the Robert recorded at Skelfhill in in 1727, 1729, 1731 and 1738 when his children Robert, George, Janet and James were baptised in Cavers Parish. He may also be the ‘Mr. Scott in Scalfhill’ whose son John was baptised in 1741. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts associated with Skelfhill. He is probably the Robert who was in Skelfhill in 1772. Robert (18th C.) recorded in Mountbenger Burn in 1761 and 1765, when he had discharges with the Burgh of Selkirk. Robert (18th C.) recorded as resident of Whitchesters in 1766. He was probably related to the earlier Robert, farmer in Whitchesters. He married Margaret Turner in 1759 and their children included: Robert (b.1760); Walter (b.1762); and John (b.1766). Witnesses in 1766 were John Hobkirk and Robert Liddell. He may be the Robert recorded in 1771 when he paid the Hawick Council for 3000 divots (presumably from Hawick Common). Rev. Robert (1714–96) born at Coldhouse (in Wilton), son of Robert. He was licensed as a minister by the Presbytery of Selkirk in 1774 and became minister at Innerleithen in 1777. There is a receipt from him in 1782 preserved in Selkirk. In 1788 (and continued in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls) he was recorded as owner of Coldhouse and Tandlaw, with a value of £80 together. In 1781 he married Margaret (or perhaps Agnes) Chisholme (d.1817), daughter of Thomas, the Selkirk surgeon. They had 8 children: Agnes (1782–1802); Thomas Chisholme (d.1811), who died in Bengal; William Chisholme (b.1785) who probably later... owned Chisholme House; Charles James (1787–1807), who died at sea; Jean (b.1789); James Robert (b.1790); Robert (b.1791); and Alexander (b.1793), who was a friend of Lord Byron. It seems that Burns met him when he passed through Innerleithen on his Borders tour in 1787. Later in the 1800s his lands of Coldhouse and Tandlaw were owned by Mrs. Mary Ann Livingstone or Finlay, who was probably a descendant. Robert ‘Rob the Laird’ (18th C.) only son of James, who was a son of Francis of Davington, and direct descendant of the Scotts of Thirlestane. He farmed at Holm (near Eskdalemuir) and then at Binks. He took the daughters of James Scott of Davington (his cousin) to court in an attempt to gain the remaining family estates. In 1786 he was imprisoned in Dumfries Tolbooth for a month for illegally resuming possession of the farm of Davington. In 1792 he drafted a genealogy of his family. He had no known children. He is mentioned in notes to the Ettrick Shepherd’s poem ‘Thirlestane, a fragment’; it is stated that he was called ‘Rob the Laird’ because he would have been Laird, and also that he referred to the murderous Lady of Thirlestane as ‘the d-d b-h’. Robert (1721/2–1807) gardener at Wells. He was listed there in 1778 and 1779, when the estate was held by William Nassau Elliot. He was still there in 1785–88 when it was owned by Gilbert Elliott. By 1791 probably the same Robert was a gardener at Weens, working for William Oliver. In 1794 he was again recorded at Wells, working for Gilbert Elliott. He married Margaret Hope, and she died in 1786, aged 77. Their children included: Elizabeth (1748/9–1824), who married John Fiddes; and Margaret (1753/4–98). They are buried in Bedrule kirkyard. Robert (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living in Cavers itself in 1748 when his son James was baptised. He could be the Robert living in Denholm whose when his children John (b.1753), Janet (b.1757) and Margaret (b.1761) were baptised. Robert (18th C.) tenant in Denholm. He seems to be distinct from another Robert who was in Denholm at the same time, based on the fact that they both had children baptised in 1757 and in 1761 (only a couple of months apart each time). His children included James (b.1757) and Andrew (b.1761). Robert (18th C.) grandson of Archibald Goodfellow, his mother marrying a Scott, and his brother being William ‘the Auld Mason’. He was shepherd at Merrylaw. His parents were probably Jean Goodfellow and shepherd John. Robert (18th C.) innkeeper in Hawick recorded supplying the refreshments to a meeting relating to Wilton Kirk in 1764. He is probably the same Robert where it is said that the local Justices of the Peace would meet in the winter, when it was too cold in the Town House. Robert (1727/8–83) resident at Lanton. His son Thomas set up a memorial stone in Bedrule kirkyard to him and other members of the family. He married Jean, who died at Lantonhill in 1819, aged 86. He may be the ‘Capt. Scott’ whose lands in Lanton are recorded in the valuation rolls of the 18th century. Robert, who is recorded in 1788 as owner of the adjacent ‘part of James Henderson’s lands in Langtoun’ may have been his son. Robert (b.c.1730) younger son of Alexander, who was miller in Rulewater and later tenant at Roughheugh Mill. He took over from his father as tenant in Roughheugh Mill in Wilton. He was recorded there in a baptismal record of 1790 and on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He is recorded as owner of the ‘Cornmill of Roughheugh, acquired from Langlands’ according to the county valuation in 1788 and the Tax Rolls of 1811 (even although he may have been deceased by then). He appears to have married Ann Brown, and their children were: Alexander of Kinninghall (b.1778), who married Margaret Bell: Thomas of Little Cote, who married, but died without issue; Euphan (or Euphemia, b.1775), who married her cousin John, brother of Alexander of Falla; and Alice (or Alison, b.1782), who married Mr. Briggs of Middlesnows. He secondly married Janet Buckham and had children: Mary (b.1786); Helen (b.1788); Robert (b.1790); and William (b.1792). He may be the Robert who in 1770, along with Thomas, witnessed a baptism for clothier and dyer Thomas Turnbull, resident of Roughheugh. Robert of Orchard (1731–1813) younger son of Robert of Falnash. He was Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch in 1758–68 for ‘Teviotdalehead’, which included Hawick, Wilton, Cavers, Teviothead and Roberton. In 1765 he applied to the Town Council to be allowed to cut turf on Hawick Moor ‘for covering part of the office houses at Branksholm’, and was allowed to do so. However, in 1766 he is probably the Duke’s Chamberlain who led a group of his tenants and farm workers to try to put their sheep and cattle onto the small pieces of land that the Town had let on the Common (in a deliberate attempt to stop encroachment by neighbouring tenants); these confrontations came close to resulting in violence. In 1767 he represented the Duke of Buccleuch at the perambulation of Hawick Common made as part of the court case for its division. On the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls he is recorded as ‘Robert Scott Esqr.’ at Orchard Cottage, when he owned 3 farm horses as well as 1 saddle horse. Also in 1797 he was listed as being of ‘Cottage’, when he was taxed for male servants. He paid the land tax at Orchard in 1811. In Wilton in 1759 he married Elizabeth, daughter of Bailie Robert Howison of Orchard, and eventually became proprietor of Orchard himself (probably inheriting after the death of his nephew William Dickson in 1788). Their children were: Margaret (b.1761), who married Dr. Andrew Wilson from Kelso; Robert (b.1762), who probably died young; and Violet (b.1765), who married farmer William Bell, from whom was descended William Scott Bell of Woll. He died in Edinburgh, and is then described as ‘late of Orchard’. Robert (18th C.) carrier in Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Deans in 1752 and their children included: Isobel (b.1753); Jean (b.1756); John (b.1758); Walter (b.1760); and Agnes (b.1765). He may be the Hawick carrier listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Robert (18th C.) weaver in Hawick Parish. In 1761 he married Jane Little, who was from Wilton Parish. Their children included Jane (b.1762), John (b.1765) and Elizabeth (b.1767). The witnesses in 1765 were the whole congregation. Robert (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at ‘Brodleeshiel’ (i.e. Broadleeshiel) in 1762, 1763 and 1767 and ‘Broadlie burnfoot’ in 1771. Perhaps the same Robert was at Gair in 1769. His children probably included: George (b.1762); William (b.1763); Janet (b.1765); Charles (b.1767); James (b.1768); Agnes (b.1769); and George (again, b.1771), probably the Wilton contractor, who was father of twins in 1799. He could be the Robert who married Margaret Dickson in Roberton in 1761. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Scott and their children included: Isabel (b.1764); Janet (b.1771); and Helen (b.1773). The witnesses in 1764 were John (probably a relative) and Alexander Bunnun. Robert (b.1757), Walter (b.1759) and Margaret (b.1762), baptised in Wilton Parish, could also be his children. Robert (18th C.) resident at Whithope in 1757, 1764 and 1765 when children of his were baptised in Roberton Parish. His children included Janet (b.1757), William (b.1764) and Robert (b.1765). He could be the Robert who married Mary Scott in Roberton in 1756. Robert (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Philhopesheiel in 1765 when his daughter Jean was baptised. Robert (18th C.) baker in Hawick. He was listed as ‘Junr. Baker’ in 1762 when one of his children was baptised. He was described as ‘junior, baker’ in 1769 when he was appointed to the commission to discuss the Common with representatives of the Duke of Buccleuch. He was thus probably a member of the Council. It seems likely that his father was also Robert. Probably the same Robert was recorded in 1766, along with barber Francis (perhaps a relative), when he witnessed a baptism for James Rae and Agnes Scott (perhaps also related); his designation appears to be ‘Cross Keys’, suggesting he was proprietor of one of the inns of that name (perhaps the older one on the High Street). He married Mary McGaughan (or ‘Megahan’), whose death in 1776 is recorded as ‘Mrs. Scott Cross keys’. Their children included: Mary (b.1762) and Ann (b.1765). The witnesses in both 1762 and 1765 were writer John Gledstains and baker William Elliot. Robert (1735/6–1807) shepherd at Baldhill. His wife was Betty Park (d.1798) and their children included William and Betty. The family are buried at Teviothead. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1758 he married Christian Scott, this being recorded in Hawick and Hobkir Parkshires. Their children included: Jean (b.1758); Isabel (b.1761); William (b.1763); and Walter (b.1765).
William (who was probably related). He and Andrew (also a shoemaker) witnessed the indenture of apprenticeship of John Pringle to William Beck in 1794. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Roberts. Robert (1739–1804) 3rd son of Robert of Sandyknowe. He was uncle of Sir Walter the writer. He was Captain of vessel in the Merchant Navy and later purchased the small estate of Rosebank near Kelso. He is probably the bank agent at Kelso who was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1788, with his being ‘a liferent vote from Baron Rutherfurd’. He died unmarried and was buried at Kelso Abbey. He left his estate to his nephew, Sir Walter, whose literary career he had long encouraged. Robert (18th C.) lived at Arkleton in Ewesdale. He married Janet Turnbull and their children included: Esther (b.1778); James (b.1780); John (b.1782); unnamed (b.1783); and James (again, b.1784). Perhaps the same Robert and Janet Turnbull had children Helen (b.1786) and Esther (b.1789) baptised in Hawick. Robert (18th C.) gardener at Cavers in 1785, when he was working for Capt. John Douglas. It is possible he is the Robert in Dykes recorded in 1784 when his son Thomas was baptised in Cavers Parish. Robert (18th C.) gardener and driver at Knowe in Minto Parish in 1785, when he was working for Thomas Turnbull. In 1786 he was listed as a ‘Chaise driver’. Robert (1758–1815) eldest son of James. He farmed at Skelfhill, like his father. His son James in turn became farmer there. He is probably the Robert in Skelfhill who made statements about his family history in 1809, e.g. that ‘Old Hobbie Scott in Skelfhill’ was his grandfather. Robert (18th C.) workman in Hawick. He married Jane Scott and their children included Thomas (b.1785) and James (b.1789). Robert (d.bef. 1810) weaver in Hawick. His son Andrew died in 1810, when his cognomen appears to be given as ‘Killdrys’. He is surely related to Adam, who had essentially the same nickname. Robert (18th C.) hosier in Hawick. In 1786 he and weaver Charles (perhaps ‘Chairlie o the Crescent’) witnessed a baptism for George Blaikie and Agnes (who may have been sister of him and Charles). He could be the son of Charles and Janet Porteous baptised in Hawick in 1764. Robert (b.c.1760) agricultural labourer living at Dovemount in 1841. Margaret (b.c.1790) was also there, and probably his daughter. He may be the ‘R. Scott, Dovemount’ who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. Robert (18th/19th C.) from Galashiels, in 1794 he married Betty Renwick, who was from Hawick. Perhaps they are the couple of the same names who had children in Melrose in 1799 and 1800. farmer at Whitfield in 1797, according to the Horse Robert (18th/19th C.) farmer at Whitfield in 1797, according to the Horse Tax Rolls. He owned 3 horses at that time. Robert (18th/19th C.) farmer at ‘Kerritrig’ (i.e. Carewoodrig) in Ewesdale in 1792–97 according to the Horse Tax Rolls. He also paid the dog and clock taxes in 1797. Robert (18th/19th C.) recorded as ‘Bundle’ when his grandchild died in 1805. He is probably the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (b.1764/5) born in Wilton Parish, he lived at Dykeneuk. In 1841 he was an agricultural labourer living at Dykeneuk, along with Isabella (probably his sister) and William Ormiston. In 1851 he is listed as an unmarried retired farmer, living at Dykeneuk with a lodger, William Ormiston, and his niece Janet Ormiston. He may be the Robert listed at Drinkstone among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835. Robert (b.c.1765) mason who lived at Hummelknowhaugh, recorded on the 1841 census. He could be the Hawick mason who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. Robert (18th/19th C.) owner of parts of Weensland according to the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. He had purchased 2 parts from William Irvine and Adam Ormiston and (presumably the same Robert) had already sold part to Andrew Porteous. By about 1874 these parts were owned by manufacturer Walter Wilson and others. He is probably the same as one of the other contemporary Roberts. Robert (18th/19th C.) tenant at ‘Titus foord’, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. His farm was probably the same place also known as ‘Tythehousefield’. Robert (18th/19th C.) farmer at Midlem Mill on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Lilliesleaf Parish. Robert (1773–1844) eldest son of William, tenant of Singlie. He became tenant farmer at Todshawhaugh in 1800 (after the death of Walter Grieve of Branxholme Park). He was leasing ‘Helms’ (i.e. Whames) along with Todshawhaugh in 1802 and was listed being in arrears for Todshawhaugh in 1812. He was involved in a loan with the Jardines and Elliots of Harwood in 1823. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He married Janet Jardine of Thorlieshope. Their children included: Christian (b.1804) who married James Dickson of Chatto and Housebyres in 1827; William (b.1806), who died young; Gideon (d.c.1835), farmer at Mid- dlemoss, who married Barbara Armstrong; Marga- ret (b.1810); Janet (b.1813), who also died young; Janet (b.1814); and Agnes (b.1819). One of his daughters (possibly Jessie) married Will- iam Dove, who succeeded his father-in-law as tenant of Todshawhaugh. Robert (18th/19th C.) farmer at Denholm Farm, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 4 horses. Note that the place he farmed was distinct from Denholm Hill and Denholm Mill farms. Robert (18th/19th C.) wright at the Sandbed. The deaths of his daugh- ter Betty and son Walter are recorded in 1810, as well as the death of a son in 1824. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Priesthaugh. He sub- scribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He was probably related to Wal- ter, who farmed at Priesthaugh earlier and David who was there later. Robert (b.c.1783) agricultural labourer in Newcastleton, living at about 3 Langholm Street. His wife was probably Isabella, and children included Thomas, Robert, Elizabeth and Isabella. The family were working as carriers in 1851, when he was already deceased. How- ever, he was still listed in Slater’s 1852 directory as a carrier, leaving Hawick for Newcastleton on Thursdays. Robert (18th/19th C.) recorded as ‘Ro. Scott’ at about 5 High Street on Wood’s 1824 map. He could be the same as one of the other contemporary Roberts. Robert (18th/19th C.) writer (i.e. lawyer) of Hawick, recorded at least as early as 1814. He was listed on the High Street in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Probably the same Robert was listed as an accountant on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He could be the accountant listed in 1841, living on the High Street (probably No. 45) with farmer James, likely his brother; this Robert was 74 in 1861 and could be the son of William and Margaret Good- fellow born in Hawick in 1786. He is probably the Robert recorded in a letter regarding the estate of Thomas Telford, preserved in the Walter Mason collection. Robert (b.c.1780) mason in Hobkirk Parish. He was based at ‘Scaur Nook’ (near Lang- draw) in 1841. He is probably the mason of this name who was said to be one of the last resi- dents of the hamlet of Unthank in Hobkirk Parish. Robert (b.1783/4) born in Hawick Parish, he was farmer at Kaimend. He married Isabella Scott in Kirkton Parish in 1807. Their children included: Mary (b.1808); Thomas (b.1810); Janet (b.1812); Archibald (b.1815); and Robert (b.1819). He was there from at least 1841, and in 1861 was farming 160 acres and employing 3 labourers. Robert ‘Robbie the Cow’ (b.1786/7) owner of a tenement at 43 High Street, living on the ground floor in the mid-19th century. The nickname was probably because he kept cows in the back of his house. His housekeeper (Barbara Anderson) was known as ‘Babbie the Cow’. In 1841 he was recorded as an accountant and living with farmer James (probably his older brother) and 2 servants, including ‘Barbary’. By 1851 he was there with only ‘Babbie’, when listed as ‘Accountant and occupier of 26 Acres of land’. By around 1860 the house was occupied by George Brown, green-grocer and was later rebuilt by Wal- ter Paisley, ironmonger. He may be the Robert born in Hawick in 1786 to William and Marg-aret Goodfellow, with brothers George (b.1778), James (b.1782) and William (b.1791), as well as 2 earlier Roberts (who must have died young). He could be the grocer and meal dealer on the High Street recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 direc- tory. Robert ‘Rob’ (1788–1872) born at Harden House, son of John and Helen Elsington. He joined the local militia when very young and en- listed in the 85th Regiment of Foot in 1809. He served in the Peninsular War under Sir Arthur Wellesley (later Duke of Wellington), seeing lots of action, and was sent to America in 1814, where he was said to be close by Gen. Ross when he fell at Baltimore. He himself was wounded at New Orleans and he was discharged in 1816, re- tiring as a Colour-Sergeant with a pension. He settled back in Hawick where he was landlord of the Red Lion Inn at the Sandbed (as recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory). He also worked as a stockingmaker and was a noted supporter of the strikers during the ‘Lang Stand Oot’ of 1822. He could be the stocking-maker recorded in Wilton Parish at Pathhead in 1835 and Roadside in 1840 and 1841. In 1841 he and his family were liv- ing at No. 5 Wilton Bank. He married Helen Oliver from Jedburgh. Their children were: He- len, who became Mrs. Greig; George; an unnamed child; John; Elizabeth; Gilbert; Robert (b.1827); Andrew; Agnes; Janet, who became Mrs. Dob- son; Adam, who moved to Ballarat, Australia; and Mary. His son Adam erected a headstone in memory of him and his wife in Wilton Old Cemetery. Robert (b.1792/3) farmer at Castles- side in Ashkirk Parish, originally from Castleton Parish. He may have been son of George and Margaret Murray. His wife was Helen, and he secondly married Anne S. In 1841 he was liv- ing at Castleside with his wife and mother He- len. Robert (1794/5–1860) son of William, who was a gentleman’s servant, and Margaret Gray, he was a labourer who lived at Stobs Woodfoot. He was unmarried and lived with his brother William and sister Nell (i.e. Helen). He was buried in Wilton cemetery. Robert (1795/6–1855) shepherd at Lodgegill on the Tarras Water. He was listed there as an agricultural labourer in 1841. He married Margaret Scott, and she died in 1868. Their children included Margaret, Eliza, Jane, George and William. He died in Hawick. Robert (1796–1872) son of John and grandson of Robert. He was tenant farmer at East Boonraw; he was listed there on the 1841 census and still there in 1868. He married Agnes Margaret Scott, who died in 1831, following childbirth. Their children were: Janet or ‘Jeanette’ (b.1819), who married farmer Thomas Potts and lived near Hawick; Elizabeth (‘Betty’, b.1820), who married farmer Robert Miller; Margaret (1821–97), who married Gideon Harkness and emigrated to Owen Sound, Ontario; John (b.1823), who emigrated to America, but was murdered for his money by the couple he was lodging with in Wisconsin; Ellen (b.1825), who died unmarried after emigrating to stay with her brothers William and then Adam; Adam (b.1828), who married Elizabeth Anderson of the Burnfoot on Ale family and they emigrated to America, his son Thomas A. later returning to Hawick; and William (b.1830), who emigrated to settle at Pine Bluff, Wisconsin, where his brother John had been murdered, and he married Martha Rice. He later married Janet Douglas, who came from Jedburgh and died in 1888, aged 71. Their children were: Robert, who married Matha Craig and lived in Toronto; Douglas, who married Susan Ann Woodcraft from Buckinghamshire, emigrated to Canada in 1869 and worked as a contractor; Euphemia, who married farmer Walter Thompson; Agnes, who married Tom Graham from Edinburgh; Eliza, who married John Moffatt and emigrated to America; John, who married Margaret Richardson, who also emigrated to America; Walter, who lived in Manchester; George, who married Julia Frizzel and worked with his brother Douglas. Robert of Eweslees (b.1797/8) one of the founder members of the Wisp Club. He was born in Cavers Parish. He was farmer at Eweslees in 1841, in 1851 was employing 5 labourers there and by 1861 was farmer of 1700 acres, employing 2 shepherds. He was still there in 1868. His wife was Violet and their children included Barbara and Jane. Robert (b.1800/1) auctioneer and appraiser in Lilliesleaf, who also worked as a frameworker. He was on Back Road in the 1861 census. His wife was Elizabeth and their children included David, Wilhelmina K. and Elizabeth. Robert ‘Robbie’ (1800–1868) son of George of Calaburn. He was apprentice smith with Adam Legerwood at Forkins. He became a blacksmith, vet and farrier and also a local authority on cows and their diseases. He worked in Kirkton and then at Cauldmill after James Smith moved to Hawick). In 1820 he married Jessie (1799–1869), eldest daughter of Moses Renwick. In 1841 he was at Cauldmill with his wife and children Betty, Robert, Ann (or Mary Ann) and Jane. His children were: George (b.1820), Mary (b.1827), Jessy (b.1830); and Jane Grant (b.1840), who all died young; Violet (b.1822); Betty (b.1824), who became Mrs. Oliver and died in Canada; Robert ‘Young Robbie’ (b.1834), also a local vet; and Mary Ann (b.1837), who became Mrs. Fleming and died in Canada. He is buried in Cavers and Kirkton Parish Churchyard. Robert (b.1804/5) listed in 1861 as farmer of 10 acres, living at 1 Burnflat. His younger brother Gilbert (a woollen weaver) also lived there. Robert (b.c.1805) farmer at Todlaw, in Cavers Parish. He was from Jedburgh. In 1841 he was listed as a mason journeyman, but by 1851 was a farmer. He married Elizabeth Wilson. Their children included Margaret (1833–96, who married Denholm clothier Robert Turnbull), Jessie and Robert. He is probably the Robert, married to Elizabeth Wilson, whose son Thomas was baptised in East Bank Kirk in 1831. Robert (19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Isabel Welsh and their children included Robert (b.1827). Robert (19th C.) listed as a toy dealer on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. Robert (b.1813/4) cabinet-maker on Buccleuch Street. His wife was Margaret (from Selkirk) and children included Susan, Robert, William, Thomas, Walter, Jane and Helen. He was probably related to Thomas and Robert Scott, recorded as wheelwrights on Buccleuch Street on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. It seems likely he was son of Thomas, joiner at the Sandbed on the 1841 directory, and brother of Thomas and Walter, who were also trainee joiners there. He may be the ‘Robert, jun.’ listed as a joiner on Ladylaw Place in Slater’s 1852 directory. By 1861 he was living at 52 Loan. Robert of Kinninghall (1817–97) son of Alexander, who farmed at Kinninghall. He was grandson of the tenant of Roughheugh Mill. He farmed at Little Cote and Kinninghall in Cavers Parish. He was at Kinnighall in 1851, when he was farmer of...
200 acres, employing 7 men and in 1861 he was recorded employing 20 people there. In the 1860s he was farmer of Little Cote and also Kinninghall together. He may have later also farmed at Falnash. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1863. In 1845 in Hawick he married Mary Scott Purdom (b.c.1824), daughter of Robert Purdom, Hawick Cornet and Bailie; she was sister of Thomas Purdom, Town Clerk. Their children included: Mary (1845–99); Margaret Bell (1847–1902); Alexander (b.1849), who died young; Alexander (again, 1851–1933) of Kinninghall and later Venchen, Yetholm; Robert Purdom (1853–1929), who married Kate Worth; Agnes P. (b.1855), who married Alexander Nichol; William (b.1857); Walter Purdom (1859–1934), tenant in Falnash; Thomas John (b.1861), who married Ada M. Fox; and Ann Isabella (or ‘Annie’, 1864–1933). Robert (b.c.1820) grocer and spirit dealer at about 9 Howegate, recorded in 1841. Robert (1834–1908) son of William and Mary Scott, who lived at Synton. He was born at Langtonheight in Ashkirk Parish. In 1851 and 1861 he was a thatcher still living at Dimpleknowe with his mother and brothers. He was a shepherd at Synton Parkhead for the last 30 years of his life. He was an office-bearer in Ashkirk United Free Church and known for exhibiting in local horticultural shows. He married Jane Scott and their children were: William (b.1866), born in Roberton; John (b.1869), born in Lilliesleaf; Anne (b.1872), born in Lilliesleaf; and Mary (b.1875), born at Synton Moss End. He died at Synton Parkhead. Robert ‘Young Robbie’ (1834–1902) son of ‘Robbie’. He was a blacksmith and qualified veterinary surgeon, living at Cauldmill, with a practice in the Rule valley and around Hawick. He specialised in cows, like his father. He was remembered ‘as a man of few words, but of good judgement’. A story is told of how he was frustrated at a visiting couple, fawning over their newborn son, and when they said ‘What a fine heid of hair he hez’ replied ‘Hair, he’s nae mair hair than a haggis’. He married Catherine Anne Little, daughter of William, farmer at Birneyknowe and Salen-side. Their children were: Robert (b.1867), who also became a local vet; William Little (b.1868), farmer at Langrigg; Janet Thorburn (1870–1951); George (b.1871), who worked at Birmingham and Midland Pharmaceutical College; Andrew Little (1873–92); Catherine (or Kate, 1874/5–91); and James (1883/4–1938). Robert ‘Robbie Scare a Hair’ (b.c.1848) son of grocer Thomas (‘Sly Tam-mie’) he was an auctioneer in Hawick. He apparently used to attend social evenings in David Shiel’s public house on Baker Street, along with almost a dozen other Robert Scotts, all of whom had distinguishing nicknames! Robert ‘Rob o the Bent’ (19th C.) one of the men of the same name who regularly gathered in a Baker Street howf in the mid-19th century. Robert ‘Kettle Robbie’ (19th C.) another of the men of the same name who gathered in a Baker Street pub in the mid-1800s. Robert ‘Robbie Barrel’ (19th C.) another of the Robert Scotts who went to the same inn in the mid-1800s. He may be the Robert listed along with Thomas as wheelwrights on Buccleuch Street, according to Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Robert ‘Selkirk Rob’ (19th C.) one more of the men of the same name who frequented the same pub in the mid-1800s. Robert ‘Den-num Rob’ (19th C.) another of the Robert Scotts who went to the same Baker Street pub in the mid-19th century. It is possible he is the Robert recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as a ‘heckler’ in Denholm. This same heckler in Denholm was involved in a dispute in 1794 with James Young in Crawknowe. Robert ‘Hensmeat’ (19th C.) one more of the men of the same name who frequented David Shiel’s inn on Baker Street in the mid-1800s. He was brother of James, Governor of Hawick Poorhouse. On one occasion he is supposed to have been chairing the evening and said ‘Rob Scare a Hair will gie us a song’ when one of the other Robert Scotts appeared, to which the reply was ‘Aw’ve nae objection, but if ’ee wull ca’ me ‘Scare a Hair’ aw’ll ca’ you by your name ’Hensmeat’’ [JHH], from which we can assume the name was somewhat insulting. Robert (b.1827/8) carter in Newcastleton, son of Robert. In 1852 he is recorded running a cart to Carlisle once a week. In 1851 he was living with his mother Isabella and siblings Thomas, Elizabeth and Isabella at about 3 Langholm Street. His was described as a ‘Feuar’s Son’ there in 1861. Robert (1853–1929) son of Robert and Mary Purdom. He was educated in Hawick and at Edinburgh Academy and trained as a banker. He emigated to Australia in 1876, where he was a bank-manager. In about 1897 he purchased a parcel of land near Warraninni in Bridgetown, Western Australia, which he farmed with his sons; this was later split into ‘Dalmore’ and ‘Falnash’. He mar-rried Kate Worth and they had: 3 sons, Robert Wooley, Alexander ‘Alec’ Bell and William ‘Bill’ Purdom; and 4 daughters, Mary (who married F.R. Bradley), Annie Isabel (who married M.E.

Minchin), Kate Louise (who married B. Wardell-Johnson) and Ethel Margueritte. He died in Sandringham, Victoria. Robert (19th/20th C.) son of Robbie, he was a local vet, like his father and grandfather before him. He lived at Oliver Crescent. His children included: Robert, who was killed at Ypres on his 20th birthday; and Charles, the 4th generation vet. Robert V. (20th C.) Cornew in 1947. During WWII he saw service in France and was captured by the Japanese, spending several months working on the notorious ‘death railway’ in Siam. He was later on a transport ship that was sunk by U.S. bombers, and although he swam ashore, he was recaptured by the Japanese and witnessed the nuclear blast at Nagasaki. Robin (13th C.) listed as ‘Robinus Scot de Hedon’ on the 1269 assize roll of Northumberland. It is unclear where his lands may have been or whether he was related to the later Scottish Scotts. Roger (13th C.) recorded as ‘Rogerum Scot’ on the 1279 assize roll of Northumberland. His lands were mentioned in a case heard at Westmorland. Roger (16th/17th C.) described as ‘captitane of the Armetage’ in 1599 when he witnessed the bonds (signed at Branxholme) between Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch and the Armstrongs and Elliot of Liddesdale. In 1611 he was ‘captain of the Irnetage’ when he was cautionser for Will Foster in Langhaugh, as well as for John Armstrong ‘called Quhyteheid’. He was additionally fined for the non-appearance of Rowie Crozier in Harthsgarthburnside. He was also part of the assize at the Justice Court on Jedburgh in 1611. He was also ‘Capitane of the Airmetage’ when he was fined for not appearing at a trial in 1612 (relating to the apparent hanging death of John Elliot in St. Mary’s Steeple). He may have been the last such deputy keeper of Hermitage Castle. It is unclear how he was related to other contemporary Scotts. Roland ‘Rowie of Huttikill’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1616 when Jock Scott ‘the Suckler’ was hanged for stealing one his sheep (and other crimes). The sheep was taken ‘furth of the Lyn beside Ettrig’. He may be the same as Rowie ‘in Vttersyde’ (i.e. Outerside), one of the pursuers of the case. It is unclear where precisely this place was located, but he was surely related to David and Alexander ‘callit Huttitill’, who are recorded at ‘Andishop’ in 1573. Roland ‘Rovie’ (16th/17th C.) one of the ‘Persewaris’ of the 1616 case against Jock Scott ‘the Suckler’ for sheep stealing. He is recorded as being ‘in Vttersyde’ (i.e. Outerside) and his son Walter was also a pursuer. He may be the same as the man ‘callit Rowie of Huttikill’, who was one of the men whose sheep were stolen. Simon (13th C.) recorded as ‘Simonis le Scot’ in the 1279 assize roll of Northumberland. His case was heard in the town of Alnwick. He is separately recorded as ‘Simone de Scotia’. Perhaps the same man is recorded as Simonis Scot in Swynborne in a record of Edward I in 1293. It is unclear whether he was related to later Scotts. Simon ‘Sim’ (15th C.) recorded in 1456/7 as witness to the sasine for Ewesdale passing from Robert of Ewesdale to George Douglas, 4th Earl of Angus. His name is given as ‘Sym Scot’ and he may have been from Ewesdale, along with Wat, Henry, John and Nichol, who are also listed. Simon (15th C.) listed in 1463/4 among the local men who were rewarded by the King for assisting in the capture of John Douglas of Balveny. He is surely related to others who were named (John, Robert of Todshaw, etc.), but it is unclear how. Simon (15th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire held in Selkirk in 1494/5, as being ‘in mekilhop’ (i.e. Meiklehope, perhaps the same as Meikledalehope), now ‘in . . .’, with the location being blank. He was indicted, but did not appear, with his surety, Richard Davidson in Meiklehope, being fined (or perhaps he was surety for Davidson). Simon (15th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire held in Selkirk in 1494/5, when he was ‘in mychop’, i.e. Midgehope. He served as surety for himself and was fined for non-appearance. Simon (15th/16th C.) tenant in Eilrig listed in the Exchequer Rolls of 1501 among mostly local men who had been fined. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. Simon of Arkyn (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 when George Douglas, Master of Angus had to surrender the lands of Falside (in Jedforest) to Ralph Ker of Primside Loch for failing to present him at court. He had stolen 200 ‘angle-nobles’ from the English and is recorded as ‘Symmonus Scot de Arkyn’. It is unclear where ‘Arkyn’ was. Simon ‘Sym’ (15th/16th C.) recorded in the 1526 remission to a large number of Borderers for an attack on the Earl of Arran. He is listed as brother of Robert, tutor of Howpasley, making him son of Alexander of Howpasley and brother of Adam of Tushielaw (listed next in the same 1526 document). Simon of Fenwick was listed separately and so presumably not the same man. Probably the same Simon was the first witness listed for the instrument of sasine at ‘Fawsyde’ (probably in the Ettrick valley) for Janet Scott (widow of Robert ‘Elwand’) purchasing lands in Appletreehall from Robert of Howpasley; James, William in Hartwoodmyres and Roland are listed after him and some may have been closely related. Simon of Fenwick (16th C.) listed as ‘Symoun Scot of Fynnik’ in 1540 among a large number of men who had remission for attacking the Earl of Arran. He is also mentioned in 1526/7 when his brother Adam was a witness to a document relating to Harden. In 1527 he was among the local lairds given remission for mustering their supporters at Melrose (i.e. Skirmish Field) and Linlithgow. He was one of the arbitrators to decide on the succession to the lands of Borthaugh in 1528. In 1530 he is listed among the 21 Roxburghshire Lairds who submitted themselves to James V to keep better order. He is also recorded in a ‘letter of revision’ of 1540 in which he resigned lands of Nether Harden (described as in the Barony of Chamberlain Newton) to William Scott of Harden. A bond of the same year shows William of Harden giving him the lands of Nether Harden until George, Lord Home renews them. In 1561 probably the same ‘Sym Scot of Fynnik’ was among a list of men charged to appear before Queen Mary regarding the state of the Borders. He was listed as ‘Sym Scot of Fynn’ among the men who appeared before the Privy Council in a promise to end the feud between the Kers and the Scotts in 1562. He is probably related to William in Fenwick, who is recorded in 1510. In the 1526 remission there is a ‘Sym Scot’ listed as brother of Robert, tutor of Howpsley, suggesting that this was a different man (even although listed right beside Robert), unless there were multiple entries in the list. Simon (16th C.) chaplain of the diocese of Glasgow. In 1537 he was invested in the Rectorship of Rankleburn Kirk, and the benefices that came with it. The ceremony was carried out at the church itself by Simon Shortreed, Vicar of Ashkirk. Walter of Synton was one of the witnesses. He is probably the Simon who witnessed a transaction relating to Robert Scott of Howpasley and lands in Appletreehall in 1539/40. Simon (16th C.) recorded as ‘Sym’ along with John in about 1557. They were sons of the ‘gudman of Alanehauch’, who was probably either William or Robert, when they rented Stobicote from Melrose Abbey. He could be the ‘Sym Scot of Alanehauch’ listed in 1561 among Border Lairds who appeared before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft. He may well be ‘Syme Scot in Oversouthfield’ who was named along with Robert of Allanbaugh and others in 1581, when they were forgiven for the murder of George Scott 3 years earlier. ‘Watt Scot thair, Syme Scott thair, Jok Scot, duelland in Hawik, callit Wattis Jok’ are all listed, and seem likely to be related. He may also be the ‘umquhile Symme Scot in Southfield’ mentioned in 1609. Simon ‘Sym’ (16th C.) recorded as resident of Over Southfield in 1581, along with ‘Syme Scot in Oversouthfield’, ‘Watt Scot thair’ and ‘Jok Scot, duelland in Hawik, callit Wattis Jok’. He was presumably related to the other men listed (e.g. he could have been son of Simon, tenant in Over Southfield), all of whom were probably related to the Scotts of Allanbaugh, who were also named in the ‘letter of slains’ for the murder of George Scott in 1578. Simon (16th C.) listed as ‘Sym Scot of Fernili’ in about 1557, when, along with Archibald Elliot of Gorrenberry, he rented Bowanhill and ‘Grangia alias Stanyhetoun’ from Melrose Abbey. His lands may have been Fairmile or Fernielees, or somewhere else. Simon (16th C.) recorded in 1579 as a Burgess of Hawick. He was appointed as procurator for Robert Johnstone in Kirkholm (in Annandale) to deal with the sale of a tenement in Hawick to David, brother of Walter in Chamberlain Newton. Simon (16th C.) recorded in 1580/1 in Philiphaugh when he had a marriage contract with Janet, daughter of Edward Wilson who was either a weaver or a thatcher in Selkirk. If he died before any children were conceived then his goods were to be divided between his wife Janet and his sister’s son, William Dickson. John ‘Eister’, Burgess of Selkirk, was one of the witnesses. He was also in Philiphaugh in 1581 when he witnessed a transaction for George Turnbull in Philiphaugh. Simon ‘Sym wi the Spear’ of Gamescleuch and Winterburgh (d.ded. 1590) 2nd son of Sir John of Thirlestane (although some suggest he was the 4th son). He was the ‘tutor’ of his nephew Robert of Thirlestane and progenitor of the Scotts of Newburgh and Rentaldburn. He is recorded as ‘in Winterburgh’ in 1559 when he purchased the lands of Gamescleuch. He is ‘Symon Scot of Wynterburgh’ in 1561/2, when he witnessed a document for Adam, son of Robert of Bonnington. He is probably the ‘Sym Scot, brother to Robert Scot of Thirlestane’ recorded in 1562 when he promised to enter James ‘Mawar’ to the Warden, Ker of Cessford. Also in 1562 he was said to already have some arrangement with William in Hartwoodburn when William assigned his steading of Gamescleuch to his son; he was then ‘in Thirlstane’. In 1573 he was charged to enter some of his tenants in Ettrickside. In 1578 he was ‘of Wintirburch’ when Robert of Thirlestane (for whom he was ‘tutor’) complained that he had taken away 2 horses from Thirlestane, threatened the tenants, and later forcibly took possession of the house; clearly there were serious disputes between him and his charge. He was forced by the Privy Council to yield up Thirlestane house after a few months. In 1576 he was ‘Sym Scot, tutour of Thirlestane’ when listed among the cautioners for Sim Armstrong; he was cited for non-appearance as cautioner in 1578/9. In 1578 he signed the caution ‘with my hand at the len’ (meaning that he could not write). In 1579/80 he was involved in a case with Thomas Dalgleish over the murder of David Dalgleish in Harehead; they were seeking restitution from Robert Scott of Burnfoot and Robert Scott of Burnhead. In 1581 he was probably the Simon of ‘Gammescleucht’ who, along with several other Scotts (from Hartwoodmyres, Gilmanscleuch, Chamberlain Newton, Edinburgh, North Bowhill, Dryhope, Catslack and Howpasley), supported William of Tushielaw and Robert of Aikwood in representing Adam in Bonnington in a dispute with Robert of Haining. He was probably the William ‘of Gammyscleuch’ listed among many Scotts and their allies in a 1581 summons to appear before the Privy Council regarding the feud with the Elliots and Armstrongs. He may be the son of the Laird of Thirlestane who was murdered by his step-mother (although the names and suggested dates for this story are confused). He was one of the representatives of Teviotdale at the General Assembly of 1581. In 1583/4 he and Robert of Thirlestane were both among Border Lairds summoned for advice on how to keep peace in Teviotdale and Liddesdale; they were also caution for an agreement between John in Hundlehope and James Gledstains of Cocklaw. In 1585 he witnessed a bond (signed at Selkirk and Hawick) settling a feud between the Scotts of Braxholm and the Scotts of Allanhaugh. He was declared a rebel and in 1586 his property was escheat to Alexander Douglas, Captain of Tantallon; this was for not repossessing Archibald Douglas, 8th Earl of Angus in the lands of Catslack. He was probably succeeded by John (perhaps his elder son) and then his son Arthur. Simon (16th C.) son of Walter of Newton. He was presented to the vicarage of Hassendean in 1595 on the demission of Thomas Newbie. It is unclear whether this means he became the minister or just held part of the benefice of the Parish. His father may have been Walter of Chamberlain Newton. Simon of Dryhope (16th C.) 1st Laird. Scott of Satchells suggests he was brother of Adam of Tushielaw, while Keith Scott prefers to connect him as 3rd son of Walter of Headshaw. In 1581, along with several other Scotts (from Hartwoodmyres, Gilmanscleuch, Chamberlain Newton, Edinburgh, North Bowhill, Catslack and Howpasley), he supported William of Tushielaw and Robert of Aikwood in representing Adam in Bonnington in a dispute with Robert of Haining; he was surely related to some of these other Scotts. He was succeeded by John, father of the ‘Flower of Yarrow’, but the relationship is unclear (Keith Scott claims his sons were Philip, Simon, Andrew, Adam and Walter, but some of these may have been sons of John). Simon (16th/17th C.) probably son of George in Northhouse and brother of William. In 1582, along with William, he witnessed a transaction at Braxholm involving the Scott of Allanhaugh. He may be the same as one of the other Simons. Simon (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1597 as brother-in-law of William Cockburn, younger of Henderland. The pair were denounced for not finding ‘lawborrows’ for William Veitch of Kingside in Peeblesshire. Simon (d.beef. 1609) father of John Scott who was among several men fined in 1609 for harassing the lands of Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane. His son was ‘Jean’s John’, suggesting that his wife was Jean. He was referred to as ‘umquhile Symme Scot in Southfield’, although it is unclear if this is the Southfield near Hawick or another. Simon of Montbenger (16th/17th C.) descended from the Scotts of Dryhope. He was either son of Simon (1st Laird) or John (2nd Laird). Assuming he was son of John, he would also be brother of Philip of Dryhope; he was thus recorded in 1599 xmlns James Gledstains of Cocklaw was surety for him, that he would ‘observe the King’s peace’. He was succeeded by Robert, and later descendants were the Scotts of Catslackknowe. Simon (16th/17th C.) natural son of William of Fingland, who was brother of Sir Robert of Thirlestane. In 1608 he was among the relations and tenants of Sir Robert who were bonded not to harm Archibald ‘of De- phoip’. In 1609 he was among the men (including his father William, as well as Walter of Headshaw) who Sir Robert of Thirlestane and his tenants were bound not to reset. This was part of the feud with the Scotts of Tushielaw. In 1610 he was ordered to be apprehended for not signing the bond relating to the Scotts of Tushielaw. In 1616/7 he was probably the ‘Willis Symme of Thirlestane' who was accused of accompanying John Scott and his brothers Adam and Simon of Bonnington, when Walter Scott ‘in Essenside’ (son of ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden) was murdered. Simon ‘Sim’ of Bonnington (d.bef. 1617) son of Adam of Bonnington and brother of John, Thomas and Adam. He succeeded his father as Laird of Bonnington in 1607. The designation may originally have come from the lands elsewhere (e.g. near Kilmarnock), but it is clear that he possessed Bonnington in Peeblesshire (not to be confused with the another Bonnington in West Lothian, later held by other Scotts), with a charter of James V as heir to his father in 1607. He signed the Scott clan bond in 1589. He is recorded in documents relating to the lands of Bonnington in 1591–1607. In 1592 his cautioner was John Tennant of Cairns that he would not reset any of those who had supported the Earl of Bothwell. In 1593 he purchased ‘Ernisheuch’ and ‘Singlie’ in Ettrick Forest, confirmed in 1607; a condition was that he built a mansion-house there, which he did at Newhouse. He is recorded as a witness in Selkirk in 1594. In 1594/5 he is recorded as being son of Adam, when he owned ‘Halmelow and Horsewade’ in the Barony of Manor in Peeblesshire. In 1596/7, along with his brother John, plus Robert of Thirlestane and other Scotts, he was summoned by the Provost and Bailies of Peebles for an attack on the ploughmen at ‘Kaidnure’; there was a further dispute over the same lands in 1610, with Sir Robert of Thirlestane serving as his surety. In 1599 Robert of Thirlestane served as his surety that he would ‘keep good rule and redress parties skaithed’. In 1602 he signed a bond among Border Lairds for keeping the peace. Also in 1602 his brother John was part of a group of Scotts who attacked lands at ‘Fechane’ and he was ordered to present his brother in court. In 1603 he was among Scotts and others, subordinates of Sir Walter of Buccleuch, who ‘had been put to the horn’ for not paying feu mails for their lands to the Queen’s Chamberlain, with Robert of Haining not entering them in court. In 1604 he had a charter for the lands of ‘Espiehoip’ on Ettrick. Also in 1604 James Tweedie of Drumelzier was surety for him that he not harm Dame Jane Herries, Lady Skirling. In 1611 he is confirmed as grandson of Robert and Katherine Boyle, when he was served as heir to his grandmother. In 1611 he had a court case against Carruthers of Holmends and the Jardines of Applegarth. Also in 1611 he was served heir to his grandmother Katherine Boyle. He was also one of the signatories of the bond of 1612 to keep peace on the Border and also on a ‘retour’ panel for Tweedy of Drumelzier. In 1612 ‘Simeon Scott of Bonytoun’ was ordered to appear at Melrose to answer for the ‘horrible slaughter of Walter Scott’ of Tushielaw, which may be connected with the origin of the ballad ‘The Dowie Dens of Yarrow’. In 1616/17 he was one of the men said to have accompanied his brother John when Walter Scott ‘in Essenside’ was murdered while fishing on the Ettrick, according to criminal complaints made by Walter’s wife. Note that these 2 murders may be confused in the re-telling. It was said that the murder of Walter in Essenside was because of the death of his only surviving son at the hands of the miller of Todrig Mill (who was subordinate to the Scotts of Harden). He was declared a rebel after the murder and was either killed or went into exile. In 1617 and 1618 (and perhaps covering the period 1611–29) he was named in a court case with Sir William Scott of Harden over the value of the lands of Bonnington and others; the Scotts of Harden purchased the ‘eschete’ of his lands and in 1617 a charter of King James VI granted Bonnington to William, heir to Harden, with a value of his lands given as £4985 6s. 6d., redeemable within 7 years. His wife was Mary, who was recorded as ‘Marie Scott, Lady Bonytoun’ in 1617 when she complained about the Scotts of Harden and their supporters constantly harassing her family, to the extent that her only son (presumably Robert) was killed at the age of 19 and her grandchildren and servants were hounded out of their house and lands; this was presumably part of the ongoing feud between the families and despite her protestations to the Privy Council the accused were found not guilty. It was said that his house at Newhouse was destroyed, his old nurse assaulted and his wife and children turned out into the cold. Also in 1617 Elizabeth Hay, widow of Walter in Essenside complained that she remained at large, despite being put to the horn, along with his brothers John and Adam and Simon called ‘Willis Symme of Thirlestane’. A letter from the King in 1619 ordered the relevant parties to appear personally before the court. His son and heir Robert, appears to have predeceased him. He had at least one daughter, Margaret, who married William, son of John Burnet of Barns (near Peebles). He was succeeded in the lands of Bonnington by his brother John, and then by William Burnet of Barns, his grandson, who inherited the lands of Bonnington in 1627. Andrew, surgeon in Edinburgh also had a claim on Bonnington in 1624 and must have been a nephew or other close relative. His brother John was served heir to his land of ‘Ernisheuche’ and Singlie in 1624. Simon ‘Syne of Newtoune in Hawick’ (16th/17th C.) recorded as a juror for the Commissioners’ Court of 1622. He could be the same man as the son of Walter of NEWTON who held the benefice of Hassendean. Probably the same Simon in Newton was served heir to his brother Walter in the lands of Easter Craik in 1618, as well as Ladhope, ‘Alterhous’ and ‘Quhithope’ in Ettrick Forest. It is unclear whether his lands were Chamberlain Newton or a different Newton. Simon (d.bef. 1643) brother of William of Chamberlain Newton. He is recorded in 1643 when Mariota Scott, daughter of his brother William, was served as his heir. He may be the same as Simon ‘of Newtoune’. Simon (18th/19th C.) resident of 8 Abercromby Place in Edinburgh when he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. It seems likely that he had a direct connection with Hawick. Stephen (15th C.) recorded in the Exchequer Rolls in the 1440s and 50s. He was explicitly mentioned in 1440 in the Aberdeen area, in 1441 for work at Edinburgh Castle, for collecting the customs in Edinburgh in 1443, was paid his fee in 1444, 1445 and 1446 and received payment from Robert Moffat in Edinburgh in 1454. It is possible that he is the same as Stephen of Muirhouse and Castlelaw. Stephen of Muirhouse, Castlelaw and Burrellands (15th C.) younger son of Robert of Rankleburn and brother of Sir Walter of Buccleuch. He may be the Stephen who was witness in 1431 to the transfer of Heap from James Langlands of that Ilk to Walter Scott of Buccleuch (if so this was his brother); John Scott is also listed beside him and so possibly a close relative. He may be the Stephen appointed as a procurator by Ellen Rule of Primside in 1439 when she resigned her lands to their superior, Archibald, Earl of Douglas and probably the ‘Stephanus Scott’ who witnessed a charter for Thomas Wiley of Bonnington (in Peeblesshire) in 1442. He is probably the Stephen who witnessed a charter for the lands of Borthwickshiel in 1444 (with Sir Walter also a witness). In 1445 (probably, since the date of 1400 on the document is wrong) he requested an ‘instrument of transumpt’ relating to the lands of Grahamslaw in the Barony of Eckford; he was there described as brother and procurator of Sir Walter of Buccleuch and listed as ‘Stephanus Scott de Castellaw’ (there are several places of this name, so it is unclear which one this is). The Robert Scott who also signed this document may have been a close relative. In 1447 he was witness to a document relating to the ‘Cusingland’ involving Margaret Cousin, wife of Simon Routledge, and his brother Sir Walter. He obtained the Burrellands (in Eckford Parish) in 1448, after they were resigned by John Burrell; there he is transcribed ‘of le Castellaw’. In 1448 he witnessed the sasine for the lands of Birkwood and Burnflat for his brother, Sir Walter. He had a crown charter for the lands of ‘Murhous’ in 1450; these are lands in the Barony of Crichton (somewhere near Pathhead in Midlothian, and not one of the Muirhouses elsewhere). In 1450 he also had a charter for the lands of ‘Castelcary, et de Weltoune’ in Stirlingshire; this suggests that the ‘Weltoun’ associated with him may not have been Wilton at all, and that ‘Castelaw’ was actually ‘Castle Cary near Cumbernauld (adjacent to Walton farm). These lands had been forfeited by Robert Livingstone and were confirmed in 1450/1. He is probably the ‘Stephano Scot’ who witnessed the charter exchanging Milsington with Heap in 1451. In 1453 he was listed as ‘of the Mwrhouse’ when he renounced the lands of Castlecary and the Weltone to Henry, son of Robert Livingstone of Linlithgow; it seems likely that the ‘Castelaw’ sometimes connected with his name is ‘Castlecary’ in the former Sheriffdom of Stirling (and the Hawick connection with Castle Cary in Somerset is just a coincidence). An instrument of 1454 relating to these lands is one of the first documents known to have been signed in Hawick; he may be the same ‘Stephen Scott of Muirhouse’ mentioned there, who ‘asked instruments’. He is recorded as being ‘of Muirhouse’ when he witnessed a document of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1453 and also in a document of 1454 (one of the first documents known to have been signed in Hawick). He is probably the Stephen who witnessed a document for the Kers of Altonburn in 1454/5. He was one of Scott of Buccleuch’s Bailies in Eckford. He also had a charter of the lands of ‘Weltoun’, which were probably the lands of Walton adjacent to Castlecary near the modern Cumbernauld; however, the family also had a connection with Wilton Parish, which is confusing. The next recorded Laird of ‘Weltoun’ was John, who was probably his son or grandson. His son and heir Robert witnessed the sasine for the exchange of Milsington and Wester Heap in 1453; he is recorded as Robert of Muirhouse in 1482. He witnessed a document for Sir Walter of Buccleuch in 1456. In 1462 he had a loan of 100 merks from Robert Muir of Rowallan, with the lands of Dryden, Commonside and Upper Harwood given in security. This loan was discharged by Robert of ‘Dogehauch’ in 1477, probably his same son Robert. He had a sasine for the lands of Muirhouse in 1463. Stephen (15th/16th C.) one of the ‘bailies in that part’ appointed by Patrick, Earl of Bothwell in 1504 to inffeit Walter of Buccleuch in his father’s lands in Annandale. The others were Walter of Howpasley, together with William and William’s son Robert. Perhaps the same ‘Stevano Scot’ was assigned the farm of Mount Common and steading of Deephope in 1492 and 1499 (and if so, then he was possibly related to the William who previously leased that farm); he is still recorded holding the lease of Mountcommon in 1503 and had the lease renewed in 1510, along with Deephope. Probably the same Stephen served as surety at the Justice-aire in Selkirk in 1494/5. He is probably the Stephen in Deephope who in 1502 was surety for ‘Crooked Adam’ in Wolfhope. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Stephens. Stephen (16th C.) probably younger son of John of Roberton and Walls, and brother of Walter of Roberton. In 1526 he is listed along with George as a son of John ‘in the Valys’ on the list of Borders men pardoned for their earlier attack on the Earl of Arran. He is described as ‘in Valis’ (probably ‘Walls’ in Dryfesdale, north of Lockerbie) in 1528 when he witnessed the document giving the decision over the disputed succession of the lands of Borthaugh, and in 1535 when he purchased lands at Roberton and Howeceleuch from his ‘brother-german’ Walter Scott of Roberton. His son John was also named in the charter. The witnesses were Michael Scott of Aikwood, Sir William Gordoun (or Brydoun), Chaplain, William Scott of Faulshope, Gilbert Scott and Sir Ninian ‘Bridin’, Chaplain and Notary Public. He was probably the Stephen who acted as procurator for Isabel Douglas (likely his mother) in claiming her rights to lands within her lifetime, when Walter (likely his older brother) succeeded to the lands of John of Roberton. He was probably succeeded by his son John of Roberton. Stephen (16th C.) witness to a confirming charter to William Scott of the lands of Harden in 1535. He is described as ‘in Hoip’. He may also have been the Stephen who witnessed a sasine for the lands of Meikledale in 1537 (along with George Scott and several Armstrongs and Littles). He may have been related to the Scotts of Whitehaugh (and Heap) or else was the same as Stephen ‘in Valis’. Stephen (16th C.) joint owner of a particate of land (along with John Short and Janet Lidderdale) on the south side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. Perhaps the same Stephen was also listed as holder of half a particate on the north side. He may be the same as one of the other Stephens. Stephen (16th C.) recorded in the register of the Privy Council in 1574, when he was surety for someone. It is unclear who he was. Steven (16th C.) Hawick man recorded as ‘Stevin’ in a 1558 document where he is stated as being the father of Alexander who sold land in one of the earliest known sasines relating to Hawick. It is possible he was the same man recorded owning pieces of land in the 1537 Charter. Steven (16th/17th C.) recorded in Branhholmetown in 1611 when he was part of the assize at the Justice Court on Jedburgh. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. Stewart (??–??) writer of ‘East Bank Church, Hawick: Its origin and history, 1773–1923’ (1923). Susan (d.1806) daughter of the deceased ‘Docter Scott Newton’. Her death is recorded in Hawick. It is unclear who her father was and whether he was a doctor or the name was a nickname; however, she was probably part of the Scotts of Newton. Thomas (12th/13th C.) recorded as ‘Thomas de Colevilla cognomento Scot’ during the reign of King William the Lion. He was clearly of the surname ‘Coville’, but for some reason had also gained the appellation ‘Scot’. His name appears in many charters of around 1200, most undated, and his seal bears the inscription ‘SIGIII. THOME DE COLLEVILLA SCOTT’. In 1223 he was already deceased when the Abbey of Vaudey in lincolshire passed on his gift of lands in ayrshire to melrose Abbey. It seems unlikely that he was related to any Thomas (13th C.) listed in 1248/9 when he was the attorney of Devorguilla, wife of John Baliol. Thomas (13th C.) recorded in 1255/6 when he was imprisoned at Northampton for trespassing in King Henry’s vivarium. The Sheriff there was commanded to deliver him to 12 men in his bailliary until the King’s justices arrived. Thomas (13th C.) recorded in 1261 in London. He was pardoned at the insistence of Margaret Queen of Scotland, for the murder of ‘Thomas le lung’ in London. Thomas (13th C.) listed as ‘le Escot’ in 1272, when he gave half a mark for an assize in Suffolk. Thomas (13th C.) recorded in 1273 as ‘Thomas Scot, messenger’ when he was paid by the English court for expenses transmitting letters to the King and Queen of Scotland. He may be the same as ‘Thomas

Scotticus’ listed on a jury in Warkworth, Northumberland in 1269 or ‘Thomam le Scot’ (and variants) listed several times on the 1279 assize rolls of Northumberland, some entries related to Alnwick Abbey. Thomas (13th C.) merchant of Newcastle recorded in 1302 as ‘Thomas Scot’, when canvas was purchased from him as part of an order of goods for Edward I’s fortresses in Scotland. Thomas (14th/15th C.) Bailie of Haddington. He is recorded in the Exchequer Rolls several times in the period 1412–31. Thomas (15th C.) listed in 1463/4 among the local men who were rewarded by the King for assisting in the capture of John Douglas of Balveny. He is surely related to others who were named (John, Robert of Todshaw, Simon and ‘niger’ Walter), but it is unclear how. Thomas of Roberton (15th C.) said to have had a daughter who married George of Synton. However, there is no evidence that any such man actually existed (and hence presumably she was the daughter of a different Scott of Roberton). Thomas (15th C.) recorded having remission for the fine of a shiel in the Eaststead of Gildhouse in 1479. He may have been related to later Scotts who were associated with Gildhouse. Thomas of Bush (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 when he and his son Adam were separately fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire held in Selkirk. He is recorded being ‘de Bus’ and was probably an ancestor of later Scotts of Bush in Ewesdale. Thomas (15th/16th C.) brother of Andrew, the pair were tenants in ‘northischelis’ (probably North Shielis) in Peeblesshire. In 1498 Andrew was fined for his non-appearance, but later he was allowed to ‘compone’ for the crime of mutilating James Davidson in ‘brachio’ (i.e. the arm). Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as being already one of the King’s rebels, along with Gilbert Rutherford and Thomas Grahamslaw. Robert Rutherford had remission for associating with them in their involvement in the murder of Patrick Hepburn. Thomas (15th/16th C.) resident of Bransholme. In 1502, along with John in Spittal, he was convicted for the felony done to Thomas Story, when they came across him in Spittal. He was allowed to compound, while John was fined. Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502. He was presented by the Lord of Bucleuch at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh as his ‘suitor’ for the lands of Lanton. He may be the same as one of the other Thomases. Thomas (15th/16th C.) tenant in Priestdylkes near Lochmaben. In 1504 at the Justice-aire in Dumfries, he ‘came in the King’s will’ for ‘intercommuning with the Armstrangis, the King’s rebels’. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts. Thomas (15th/16th C.) son of Walter of Headshaw and brother of Philip of Headshaw. In 1510 he was charged with the murder of John Murray of Falahill, with Andrew Ker of Gateshaw implicated in the same crime. Failing to appear at the Jedburgh court he was denounced as a rebel. He was represented by William in Hawick, George in Goldielands and David in Whitehaugh, who were fined for his non-appearance. The goods of William Scott in Fenwick and John Scott in Haining were used as further insurance. This suggests that all of these men were fairly closely related. Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1514 as witness in Selkirk when George Ker, Canon of Glasgow appointed Thomas Ker as Archdeacon of Teviotdale. Perhaps the same Thomas witness a dispensation to marry in 1516, for Inram Elliot and Elizabeth Scott (with Alexander as another witness). Thomas ‘Tom’ (16th C.) listed as ‘Thome Scot’ among the bailies of the Sheriff of Roxburgh on the Precept of Chancery (probably in 1532) for William Scott of Hassendean retaining his properties. He may be the same as another contemporary Thomas. Bailie Thomas (16th C.) recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books in 1534 as Bailie in Hawick. He witnessed a renunciation by John in Hawick (who may have been a relative) and along with Vicar John bound themselves to the contract between John in Hawick and Thomas Johnstone. Probably the same Thomas was owner of 3 partes of land on the south side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. He may be the same man who was recorded as a Burgess of Hawick in the 1540s and 50s. Thomas of Pitgormo (1479–1539) 2nd son of William of Balwearie. He became a judge in 1532, in place of his father, and was made Justice Clerk in 1535, being a favourite of James V. He is recorded being of ‘Pettgormo’ in the Exchequer Rolls. He was auditor of the Exchequer in at least the years 1537 and 1538. He married Agnes Moncrieff and was succeeded by his son Thomas. Thomas (16th C.) recorded in 1533/4 being ‘in Aikwoode ester’. He and the other tenants in Aikwood delivered £10 Scots to the Queen’s Chamberlain for Ettrick Forest for occupying Hartwoodmyres. Probably the same Thomas was ‘in Vodburne’ in 1536 when he witnessed a transaction between Walter of Roberton and Michael of Aikwood. He may be the same as one of the other Thomases. Thomas (16th C.) recorded in Selkirk in 1536. Along with a Patterson, he complained that John Scott had slandered them by accusing them of stealing sheep. Thomas (16th C.) recorded in 1538 when he rented ‘ane quarter and half quarter of Todrik’ (i.e. Todrig) to Thomas Robson. Probably the same Thomas in 1538 ‘asked instruments’ that the tenants of ‘the town of Quhitslands’ (probably Whitslade) wanted to graze their cattle at Todrig as their predecessors had done. He was also there when Katherine Gray had the sheep of Thomas and George Lauder removed from Todrig. Also in 1538 he was ‘in Todrig’ when he produced a precept from Michael Scott in Aikwood for half the lands of Hermiston to fulfil a debt of service. In 1539 he was on the inquest panel for Alexander Lauder succeeding to Todrig. In 1540 he was among the tenants who were warned to remove themselves from Todrig when Alexander Lauder succeeded to the lands. He may be the same as one of the other Thomases. Thomas (16th C.) described as a Burgess of Hawick when he was a witness to the 1540 resignation of the lands of Nether Harden from Simon Scott of Fenwick to William Scott of Harden. He is also witness to a confirmation of this in 1556, where he is described as ‘in Hawick’. Probably the same Thomas ‘in Hawick’ was on the 1553/4 panel for the inheritance of Walter Scott of Branholme and Buccleuch as heir to his grandfather. It is possible he was related (perhaps grandfather) to Walter, ‘burges in Hawik, sonne to wmquell Thomas Scot in Hawik, zooner’, who witnessed a document in 1585. Thomas (16th C.) recorded in 1539 as son of the deceased Adam. Along with Robert of Howpasley, he was warned to remove his tenants from the lands of Falside, owned by Sir Walter of Branholme and his son Walter. Perhaps he is the same Thomas, son of Adam, who was subject to a bond in 1539; Walter of Buccleuch, his son and heir David and Robert of Allanhaugh had a bond with the Depute Sheriff of Selkirk that William would prove he was ‘a bastard according to the custom of the law used in such cases’. Also in 1539 he offered to the Queen’s Chamberlain the ‘ferme’ of Falside. He may be the same as one of the other Thomases. Thomas (16th C.) recorded as a servant of Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst in 1557. It was complained that he and another servant had been beaten at the Kirklands of Bedrule by a group of Turnbulls of Bedrule and others. Thomas of Haining (16th C.) son of Robert of Haining. He was a minor when he succeeded. In 1527 he is recorded as son and heir apparent of the deceased Robert in Haining. His uncle Walter was still acting as his tutor in 1532. In 1538 he succeeded to his father’s lands of ‘all the lands and the loch of Hanyng’. He is recorded being of Haining in 1538 when he held a sasine for the lands and in 1539 when he warned certain tenants to remove themselves from East Haining and West Haining. He is probably the feuair of Haining recorded in 1540 when he gave sasine for part of East Haining to Thomas Morlaw. In 1541 he was ‘chief lord of the lands of est Hanyng’. In 1543/4 he made a bond not to harm John Wilson. He is probably the Thomas who purchased a tenement in Selkirk from Thomas Johnstone in 1544; Walter and Robert of Hartwoodburn were witnesses. He is also listed in 1557 among the Scotts who descended on the Kirk of the Lowes to try to kill Sir Peter Cranston as part of some feud. He was probably related to some of the other Scotts who were in the band of about 200, from Allanhaugh, Burnfoot, Harden, Howpasley, Synton and Thirlestane. In 1561 he was (along with Walter of Synton and Nicholas Rutherford of Hundalee) cited by the Privy Council for non-appearance. Also in 1561 he was among Border Lairds who appeared before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft. Additionally in 1561 he witnessed a bond between Bruntons and Armstrongs in Selkirk, and was listed among men who swore they did not steal a horse in Selkirk in the previous year. He was listed among the men who appeared before the Privy Council in a promise to end the feud between the Kers and the Scotts in 1562. In 1564/5 he was listed as one of the 4 curators of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in the bond with the Kerrs, and was one of the signatories. He was on the assize of 1564 related to the murder of David Scott of Hasendean. He acted as a bailie for the Commendator of Melrose in a sasine of 1567. In 1567 he represented Sir Walter Scott of Branholme in a marriage contract for Sir Walter’s sister Elizabeth. In 1568 he was granted the lands of Elliston by the Commendator of Melrose and was mentioned in a sasine of Crook in the same year. He had a charter of ‘feuferme’ for lands in ‘Ilistoun’ (as stated in 1580), which later passed to his son Robert, who was involved in a dispute over these lands in 1576, with John, minister of Selkirk. His children probably included: Robert, who succeeded to Haining; William, recorded as brother of Robert in 1580 and 1581; and Walter, also mentioned in 1580. Elizabeth Turnbull’s will and inventory was recorded in 1580; she was living in Haining Castle and had Robert and his wife as executors, as well as young daughters, suggesting that she may have been his second wife and step-mother of Robert of Haining. Thomas (16th C.) recorded as a witness to a charter for Aberbrothock Monastery in 1546. He was probably a cleric of some sort there. Thomas ‘Tom of the Stour’ (16th C.) recorded as ‘Thome Scot callit the Stowir’ in 1569 when he entered a pledge for himself and all the Scotts of Ewesdale (excluding those already under the pledge of Andrew Armstrong of Gingills). Later in 1569 he was recorded being held in Ravensheugh Castle as pledge for ‘Johnne Scott callit the Braid; Archie Scott of the Buss; Thome Scott of Blakhall’. He was clearly a prominent Scott of Ewesdale at that time. He is ‘called the Stowr’ in the register of the Privy Council for 1573 when he was surety for someone. In 1586/7 he was ‘callit of the Stoir’ when his brother John was listed among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. He could be related to the Jock ‘Stowre of Qukinscleuch’ recorded in 1598. His nickname may have alluded to ‘stour’ as in a violent conflict, but appears more likely to refer to a place, perhaps in Ewesdale. Thomas (16th C.) tailor in Edinburgh. He was listed in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch being owed money for an account. He could be the Thomas, Burgess of Edinburgh, who ‘undertakes surety’ according to the register of the Privy Council in 1577. Thomas of Whitehaughbræ (16th C.) possibly son of Walter of Synton and Stirches and younger brother of John of Synton and Robert of Stirches. His mother was probably Margaret Riddell. He was ancestor of the Scotts of Whitehaughbræ, although it is unclear if he owned the lands himself. His son and heir was Walter of Whitehaughbræ. Thomas ‘Jock’s Tom’ (16th C.) mentioned in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1574. He is listed among those owed money as ‘Thome Scot callit Jok Thome’. There is a good chance he was from Hawick, based on the others he is listed alongside. He was presumably a tradesman or merchant of some sort. Thomas (16th C.) recorded as witness to a sasine in Hawick in 1579, when Robert Johnstone sold a tenement to David, brother of Walter in Chamberlain Newton. He is listed as ‘alias Thome of Haunden’, which may be Howden; however, it is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts. Thomas of Abbotshall (16th C.) son of Thomas and Agnes Moncrieff. His family lands were in Fife. In 1581 he was listed as ‘od and overman’ (i.e. the third arbitrator, to break any deadlock) in a dispute between Adam in Bonnington and Robert of Haining. He was probably selected as a fellow Scott (and probably lawyer) with no conflict of interest. His son William of Abbotshall is recorded in 1585, but appears not to have succeeded until 1606. He was probably the Laird of Abbotshall who, along with the Laird of Balwearie was pledge in 1588/9 for the Scotts of Ewesdale. His children included William of Abbotshall, Jean and Janet. Thomas (16th C.) brother of ‘Wat’s Jock’, he was a Burgess in Hawick. In 1585 he was one of the witnesses to the bond in which Sir Walter of Branxholme and Robert of Allanhaugh resolved a family feud. His father was presumably Walter. Thomas ‘Tom’ (16th C.) tenant at Blackhall in the Ewes valley. In 1569 he was listed as ‘Thome Scott of Blakhall’, along with John ‘the Braid’ and Airchie ‘of the Buss’, as those men for whom Tom ‘callit the Stowir’ was held as pledge in Ravensheugh Castle. He was recorded in the 1585 remission for last crimes of men whose superior was Lord Maxwell. His son John is also listed. Another son Tom was recorded in 1611. Thomas ‘Tom’ (16th C.) recorded as being ‘Thome of the Flower’, one of the Scott chiefs of Ewesdale on Monipennie’s c.1594 compilation. He is listed along with ‘Ante the Busse’. It is unclear where his lands were, but it is possible he is the same as Tom in Blackhall. Thomas (16th/17th C.) listed by Scott of Satchells as being ‘in Wester-groundston’ (i.e. Wester Groundstone) and among the 24 ‘Pensioners’ of the house of Buccleuch. He was said to have been the brother of William of Whitehaugh, son of Walter of Whitehaugh and descended from Scott of Buccleuch. Thomas (16th/17th C.) brother of William of Hundleshope, and tenant of Sir Robert of Thirlestane. According to Keith Scott, he was a younger son of James of Hundleshope. However, he could alternatively be the Thomas, son of Katherine Scott, widow of Robert of Colfort, whose mother resigned her lands of Hundleshope to him in 1581, with witnesses including Scotts of Raesknowe, Allanhaugh and Drinkstone; if this is the same Thomas then presumably his mother was from the Scotts of Hundleshope, not his father. He is probably the ‘Thomas Scot, callit Thome of Hundellishoip’ who witnessed the bond between Sir Walter of Buccleuch and Robert of Allanhaugh in Hawick and Selkirk in 1585. He was brother of Jojn ‘sometime in Hundillishoip' in 1596/7 when part of a group led by Robert Scott of Thirlestane who the citizens of Peebles complained had attacked their lands of ‘Kaidmure’. In 1602 he was among a group of Scots who attacked Adam Veitch’s lands at ‘Fechane’. Others listed were Scots of Thirlestane, Bonnington, Gamescleuch and Bowhill. He and his brother attacked the same place again in 1603. He is recorded having 6 men well horsed at the Wappinshaw of 1627 in Peeblesshire. Thomas (16th/17th C.) brother of William of Glack. In 1599 he was among a list of Scots who Sir Walter of Braxholme declared were ‘his men’ and therefore accepted responsibility for making them answer to justice. Thomas (16th/17th C.) son of Adam of Bonnington. In 1610 he assisted his brother Simon of Bonnington in a raid on the lands of ‘Caidmure’ belonging to the Burgh of Peebles. Thomas (16th/17th C.) servitor to ‘Lord Bugcleuch’ listed about 1610 among supporters of Scott of Thirlestane in their feud with the Scotts of Tushielaw. He could be the same as one of the contemporary Thomases. Thomas of Salenside (d.c.1636) possibly son of Andrew of Salenside, who was on the Carlisle Raid of 1596. In 1621 he inherited Whitehaughbrae from Walter of Whitehaughbrae, who was a near relative (son of his grandfather’s brother, hence first cousin, once removed). He had at least 2 sons: William, to whom he gave possession of Salenside during his lifetime; and Andrew, to whom he gave possession of Whitehaughbrae, also while he was still alive. He later sold both properties to Sir William Scott of Harden. Thomas (16th/17th C.) referred to being ‘called of Ormestoun’ in 1610 when he was part of a group of Scots charging Langlands and other Scots to find caution in 1610, with the other side petitioning for the penalties to be reduced. Additionally, the Scotts of Harden, Whitslade and Satchells were also bound not to harm him and his associates and there was a similar bond in 1610 for Andrew Riddell of that Ilk and his son not to harm them. His brother Alexander was also mentioned in 1610. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Thomases. Thomas ‘Tom’ (16th/17th C.) son of Thomas in Blackhall. In 1611 some men stood as caution for him at court in Dumfries. Thomas ‘Tom’ (16th/17th C.) tenant at Nether Brairdie, although whether this is Broadlee in the Borthwick (or in Ashkirk Parish) or Brairdie on Hermitage is unclear. His son was ‘Jock the Suckler’, who was involved in the 1615 slaughter of the Laird of Drumlanrig’s sheep at Howpasley. Thomas (16th/17th C.) recorded being ‘callit of West Tynneis’ in 1617. He was imprisoned in Edinburgh Tolbooth along with Alexander Stewart of Phaup. Presumably he was associated with Tinnis in the Yarrow valley. Thomas (16th/17th C.) recorded as witness to transactions in Selkirk in 1629 and 1630. He was ‘called easter’. Thomas of Todrig (d.c.1653) younger son of Walter ‘the Hawke’ of Whitslade and brother of Sir Walter, 2nd Laird of Whitslade. Note, however, that some histories give conflicting accounts of the connection between the Scotts of Whitslade and Todrig. He probably purchased the estate of Todrig from the older branch of Scotts of Todrig, perhaps around 1630. He and his wife had a charter from John Hay, Lord Yester for Todrig in 1635. He is mentioned in 1637 when his son Robert became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh. He signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. He was on the Committee of War for Selkirkshire in 1643, 1644, 1646, 1648 and 1649. In the early 1650s he and his son Thomas are described as Thomas Scott elder and younger of Todrick’. He is said to have married Jean Pringle, with their dowry recorded in 1643; however, this seems more likely to have been his son Thomas, with whom he is sometimes confounded. His son Thomas was served as his heir in 1653. Thomas’ brother Robert (hence another son) was recorded as deceased in 1678. Additionally he had a son called Walter. He may also have had a daughter Janet, who may be the Janet, 2nd daughter of Scott of Todrig, who married Robert Elliot of Larriston. Thomas of Nether Bonchester (d.1680) brother of Walter, ‘Wat o the Dykes’. He was given Nether Bonchester by his nephew William of Galalaw, after the death of his brother Walter (1st Laird), following some previous family agreement. He was involved in transactions with John Kerr of Grange in the 1630s relating to feu duties. He is recorded in a document of wadset for the lands of Appotside in 1654, when he was described as ‘bailie in that part’. In the 1663 Land Tax Rolls he paid tax on £180 for lands in Abbotrule. He was recorded in a hereditary bond in 1673. He is mentioned in 1690 when his son John had a bond and discharge in the Burgh of Selkirk for 500 merks Scots. He had 3 sons: Walter of Nether Bonchester; George, progenitor of the Scotts of Falla, who was listed among Covenantant fugitives in 1684; and John, who was also in 1684 among those declared as fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. He also had 2 daughters: Christian; and Scott of Gilbert Eliott of Stobs. Thomas in a deed of 1663, along with Thomas, servitor brother of Walter of Hyndhope. He is recorded directly related to John Scott, who came from the Rulewater millers and married the widow Henderson, who was tenant at Hummelknowes Mill. It is possible that he died in confinement because of his Covenanter principles. Thomas (17th C.) recorded as servitor to Gilbert Eliott of Stobs in a deed in 1663. He may be the same as one of the other Thomases. Thomas (17th C.) brother of Walter of Hyndhope. He is recorded in a deed of 1663, along with Thomas, servitor of Gilbert Eliott of Stobs. Thomas of Todrig (d.c.1691) eldest son of Thomas. He was served heir to his father in 1653 and is recorded as Laird by 1656. He was fined in 1662, after the Restoration, for being a Covenanter supporter. He was appointed a Justice of the Peace for Selkirkshire in 1663. He was recorded in a bond of 1663 and 2 in 1673. He paid the land tax in Ashkirk Parish in 1678, his estate being valued at £552. His brother Robert is mentioned in a discharge in Selkirk in 1678. In 1682 he is listed in the testament of Robert Pringle of Clifton, possibly his brother-in-law. His sons Walter and William are also mentioned. He was on the Commission of Supply for Selkirkshire in 1678 and 1685 (as ‘younger’, which may indicate this was his son), and in 1690 along with Walter (presumably his son). He was probably the Laird of Todrig listed among heritors of the Regality of Melrose in 1682, along with his brother Robert. He probably married twice, having at least 3 children with his first wife, and his 2nd wife being Janet, daughter of Mark Pringle of Clifton. She is probably the ‘Jean’ Pringle, with whom his ‘tocher’ to the Parson of Anrum (Mark Pringle’s father-in-law) is recorded in 1643. His children included: Walter, who succeeded; Thomas (b.1639); William of Milsington (b.1645), first of that branch; Robert (b.c.1660), who leased Borthwickshiel and Roberton from Gideon Scott of Highchester in 1696, and witnessed the 1700 marriage contract between William Elliot of Harwood and his niece Jean Scott; Marion or Mary (b.1656), baptised in Ashkirk, who married Dr. Rutherford of Jedburgh; Anna (b.1659), baptised in Ashkirk, who died unmarried; Robert (b.1660), also baptised in Ashkirk; and Jane, who may have married a Scott of Bailielee. The witness to the 1656 baptism was Sir Robert Pringle (probably of Clifton, brother of his wife). Thomas (17th C.) tenant of Hummelknowes Mill, which would have Scotts for perhaps the next 200 years. He is mentioned as one of a large number of people accused of stealing a wallet in Hawick in 1642. It is unclear if he was directly related to John Scott, who came from the Rulewater millers and married the widow Henderson, who was tenant at Hummelknowes Mill. Thomas of Whitehaugh (17th C.) appears to be the proprietor of the estate in a list of communicants of the area in 1650. John, William and James (listed under him) may have been his adult sons or brothers. It is unclear how he may have related to the other Scotts of Whitehaugh. ‘Leddie whithaugh’, who was taxed for 2 hearths on the west-side of Hawick in 1694, could possibly be his widow. Thomas of Whitehaugh (d.1671) 3rd son of Sir Walter, he succeeded in 1651, his elder brothers Robert and Sir Walter having no male heirs. In 1647 he was served heir to the lands of Whitslade, Redfordgreen, Drycleuchshiel and Ettrickhouse, previously belonging to his brothers. There was a further service of heirs for him in 1655, for the lands of Whitslade, as well as Drycleuchshiel, Redfordgreen, Ettrickhouse and Dalgleish, mentioned ‘feu duty and augmentation’. However, he sold the Stirches estate to Walter Chisholme about 1660, ending two centuries of ownership by the Scotts of Whitslade. He was recorded in the Land Tax Rolls of 1663 (presumably referring to an earlier period) paying £214 for Stirches and £156 for lands in Lilliesleaf Parish. He fought alongside his brother Sir Walter at Inverkeithing in 1651 and was wounded there. Like his uncles Sir Walter and Robert before him, he was Member of Parliament for Selkirk, serving 1661–63. In 1661 he is recorded as Laird when he witnessed a baptism in Ashkirk for William of Synton. In 1663 he was appointed as a Justice of the Peace for Selkirkshire. Also in 1663 he witnessed the marriage contract of Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch, and was listed there as one of her curators. He was probably the Scott of Whitslade who entered into a teind agreement with the curators of the Duke of Buccleuch in the late 1660s. In 1666 he was one of the ‘curators’ of Francis of Davington. In 1613 he married Janet, daughter of Walter Scott (‘Auld Wat’) of Harden (and if this date was correct, he must have been quite young). In 1655 he secondly married Janet Mitchell, who was probably a widow. He is probably also the Thomas Scott of Whitslade who married ‘Ladie Ednum’ in the Canongate Kirk in 1662. His children included: George, presumably with his first wife, who became a surgeon’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1663 (but must have died before him); Marie (b.1656), baptised in Ashkirk; Walter (b.1657), who also died before him; and Thomas, who succeeded. The witnesses in 1656 were Sir Archibald Douglas (probably of Cavers) and John Murray (probably of Philiphaugh), the Sheriffs of Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire. It is said that his death was greatly lamented and inspired the verses that appeared in Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ in 1784, probably written by Capt. Walter Scott of Satchells (even although the title would make the poem seem to be about the earlier death of his brother Robert). Thomas of Wester Essenside (17th C.) recorded as owner of Wester Essenside in 1643, valued at £400, as well as Leap Hill, valued at £140. He also paid tax on £540 in Ashkirk Parish according to the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts, and he may be the same as one of the other Thomases (e.g. the younger Thomas of Todrig).

Thomas (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Cessford and their children included Nellie (b.1644), William (b.1647), William (again, b.1649) and William (again, b.1654). His wife’s name is recorded as ‘Bessie’ in 1644. The witnesses in 1654 were John (perhaps a relative) and James Liddell. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel ‘Coutert’ or ‘Coutert’ (probably Coltart) and their children included: John (b.1676); Andrew (b.1678); William (b.1680); and Bessie (b.1683). The baptism witnesses in 1678 were James Deans and William Scott and in 1680 were William Scott, ‘Flex’ and John Scott in Whiteyetts. Thomas (17th C.) tailor in Hawick. In 1684 his brother Walter was among those declared fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. Thomas (17th C.) servant at Hilliesland (presumably for the Gledstains family). In 1684 he was on a list of men declared as fugitives for frequenting conventicles. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was ‘Jenet Lytle’. Their son John was born in 1687, with witnesses Henry Scott and Robert Scott (so possibly relatives). Thomas (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish who married Jean Hislop. Their children included: Thomas (b.1687); and Marion (b.1690). The witnesses in 1690 were Thomas Wallace and Adam Hislop (who was probably related to his wife). Thomas of Synton (17th C.) recorded in 1690. However, he was not the Laird at that time, so he was either tenant there or was Laird of neighbouring lands. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Bedrune Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He farmed on one of the farms of the Knowesouth estate. Thomas (17th C.) resident at Winningtounrig in Cavers Parish in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to the James and John who are also listed there. Thomas (17th C.) tenant in Ruletownfoot, listed along with Thomas Turnbull on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the Thomas ‘in Roull’ whose wife’s will, Janet Porteous, was recorded in 1685. Thomas (17th C.) recorded on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls at Borthaugh. Thomas (17th C.) listed as tenant at ‘Bridiholl’ (probably Brieryhill) in Wilton Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. In 1700 he was ‘in Brierihole’ when he (along with smith Robert Miller) witnessed a baptism for William Riddell of Wilton Parish. Perhaps the same Thomas was one of the elders mentioned enacting business for Wilton Session in 1706. Thomas (17th C.) tenant in Bygate in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Thomas (17th C.) resident of the east-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. Probably the same Thomas was listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. Thomas ‘Laird’ (17th C.) recorded in 1687 when he was fined, along with a group of other men, for clandestinely removing their sheep from the Town’s flock, without paying the Town Herd. He leased part of the Kirklands of Hawick from the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1692. He was a resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He was also listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He may have been father to James ‘Laird’, whose first-born child was Thomas; however, one record suggests that James’ father was John (also called ‘Laird’), who may hence have been his brother. He may have been the Thomas who married Janet Clerk and had children: James (b.1674); John (b.1676); Walter and William (b.1678); Andrew (b.1680); Jane (or ‘Jean’, b.1684), who married weaver John Stevenson in 1716; and Robert (b.1686). Thomas (17th C.) resident of ‘the netherend’ of Hassendean Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Probably the same Thomas was ‘in hastenden’ in baptismal records of 1683 and 1688. He married Isobel Waugh and their children (baptised in Roberton Parish, when it contained Hassendean) included: Robert (b.1683); and Bessie (b.1688). The witnesses in 1683 were John Noble and Patrick Dodds and in 1688 were William Waugh (who is surely related to his wife) and William Young. He is probably the Thomas who (along with John Dodds) witnessed a Roberton baptism in 1687 for Walter Turnbull. Thomas of Whitslade (d.c.1695) son of Thomas. He was probably a minor when he succeeded (as 6th Laird) in 1671, since there is a record of discharge to Sir William of Harden and his other curators in 1672. He is recorded writing to his cousin Sir Gideon Scott in 1674 about permission to cut peats. He witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1676 for William Laing. In 1677 he was served heir to his father’s lands in Innerleithen. In 1678 he paid the land tax for the Whitslade estate (valued at £1048 10s), as well as paying for the lands of Hermiston (£156) in Lilliesleaf Parish. He is probably also the Laird of Whitslade whose lands in Selkirkshire were valued at £2168 in that year. He was a Commissioner in Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire for raising money for the King in 1678 and was on the Commission of Supply for both counties in 1685 and 1690. In 1684 he was one of the men appointed as a commissioner in Selkirkshire for prosecuting Covenanters. He is also recorded in bonds of 1682 and on a list of heritors of the Regality of Melrose for that year, as well as in a horning against all Melrose heritors in 1690. He was living at Whitslade in 1688 when he is mentioned in Capt. Walter Scott’s metrical family history. Before 1688 he married Jane, daughter of Sir John Hay of Park. They had 7 sons: Thomas, who succeeded in 1695; John, who later sold Whitslade; Walter, recorded in the 1720s in a dispute with Walter of Harden, and in 1734 when he was excommunicated; Robert (d.c.1757), a surgeon in Hawick; William, a physician in Worcester; Francis, 6th son, who became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1708; and James, who became a goldsmith’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1709. It is said that only the eldest son had any surviving children. His widow may be the ‘Lady Whitslade’ recorded in 1707 as litterer of part of the Roxburghshire lands formerly held by the Laird of Whitslade. He is described briefly in the lines on the death of his father and uncles that appeared in Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784) – ‘Of beauty grave, and courage brave; Although his years be young, There’s none on earth can parallel Old Whitslade – but his son’ [CWS].

Thomas of Chapel (17th/18th C.) paid tax on 7 hearths for himself and his tenants in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1694. He was on the Committee of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1698. He was also one of the Roxburghshire heritors who petitioned Parliament in 1700. In 1699 he exchanged lands with John Nisbet, spouse of Agnes Riddell, portioner of Bewlie. He may be the Laird of Chapel whose name appears on a list of Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1708. He must have been related to the earlier Walter of Chapel. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Jean Burn and their children included Thomas (b.1695) and John (b.1698). Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Bessie Learmonth and their children included Janet (b.1697), Robert (b.1699), Isobel (b.1700) and Bessie (b.1703). Thomas of Whitslade (d.bef. 1714) son of Thomas, he was 7th Laird. In 1695 he was served heir to his father as well as to his grandfather Thomas in the lands of ‘Phanops’ (possibly Phaup in Ettrick) in the Regality of Melrose and in 1696 was served heir to lands in Innerleithen. He was witness to the marriage contract between William Elliot of Harwood and Jean Scott of Todrig in 1700. In 1704 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir John Scott of Ancurm. They had 2 daughters: Elizabeth, who married William McDougall, brother of the Laird of Makerston; and Janet, who died unmarried. Having no male issue, he was succeeded by his younger brother John (who sold Whitslade). His widow remarried to Sir David Murray of Stenhope in 1714. Thomas of Langshaw (17th/18th C.) younger son of Francis of Langshaw. He succeeded his brother Walter, being served heir to their father’s lands and Barony of Langshaw (in Melrose Parish) in 1695. This included ‘Readhead alias Whytebank’, Colmslie and Mosshouses. He appears to have been the last Scott of Langshaw. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Marion Scott and their children included James (b.1701) and Walter (b.1704). Perhaps the same Thomas was married to ‘Mary’ Scott and had further children including Janet (b.1710), Walter (b.1712), Robert (b.1714), Elizabeth (b.1715), Thomas (b.1717), John (b.1718) and William (b.1719). Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Northhouse in 1702 when he married Helen Allan. There are lots of children baptised in Cavers who could be theirs. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He was at Borthwickshiels in 1710 when his daughter Janet was baptised. He may be the Thomas who married Bessie Richardson in Roberton in 1702 or the Thomas who married Isabel Scott in Roberton in 1705. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at West Middle in 1716 when he married Janet Scott. He was also at West Middle in 1726 when his daughter Ann was baptised. Perhaps the same couple were at Brierywards in Wilton Parish in 1724 when their daughter Helen was baptised; the witnesses were John Scott and William Easton.
Scott

Hassendean in 1731. He complained about non-payment by William Tunno in Selkirk. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Synton Mill recorded in 1719. He married Agnes Taylor and their children included: George (b.1714); Magdalen (b.1719); Robert (b.1721); and Margaret (b.1723). Frances (b.1726), with mother ‘Bessie’ Taylor, was probably also his child. Thomas (17th/18th C.) cottar in ‘Langton’ (i.e. Langtounside) in Ashkirk Parish. His daughter Margaret was baptised in 1716. His wife’s name is not recorded, but he may be the same as one of the other Thomases. Thomas (17th/18th C.) recorded in Ormiston in 1718 when his son David was baptised in Cavers Parish. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident ‘in Kirkhouses’ in Ashkirk Parish. In 1724 the Parish gave him 14s. He was probably a pauper at that time and was probably related to earlier Scotts of Kirkhouses. Thomas of Todrig (d.1753) only son of Walter of Todrig. He was the 6th and last Laird of Todrig (although he is also sometimes confounded with his son Thomas). He was educated at Glasgow University. He was ‘younger’ of Todrig in 1708 when he had a marriage contract with Mary, 2nd daughter of Robert Scott of Scotsbank. In 1713 he brought a case against several other Scotts relating to a 1669 bond of ‘Auchter Auter Struther’. He was one of the petitioners in support of the lairdship. He sold Falnash, along with ‘Merrynees’ (i.e. Merry Naze) and other lands to the Duke of Buccleuch in about 1760. He may be the ‘Dr. Thomas Scott of Fanash’ who kept a lark and a song thrush in cages in his parlour (according to a letter by A.C. Hall in 1831). It is also possible that he was the same man as Rev. Thomas, minister of the Relief Kirk in Auchtermuchty. Thomas of Stonedge (d.1786) probably son of William of Stonedge. He appears to have served as Chamberlain for the Duke of Buccleuch for the Liddesdale lands in 1725 (although he must have been quite young at the time). He was already referred to as ‘of Stonedge’ in 1731, when he signed the marriage contract of William Elliot of Lodgell and Jean Elliot of Harwood, although he may not yet have succeeded to his father. He was a great improver of his lands, having dykes built and plantations laid out. He was a heritor of Hobkirk Parish, and described as ‘late of Hobsburn’ when he lived at Grange in Edinburgh. He may also earlier have been described as ‘in Wauchope’. In 1741 he had an elaborately carved through-stone erected in Hobkirk kirkyard; this was in commemoration of Scott of Wauchope (probably his grandfather, Walter). He appears to have sold Forkins to William Elliot of Wolfelee in 1757. He was recorded as a Commissioner for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1761. In 1767 he was recorded as tenant of Wauchope, like earlier members of his family. He was one of the Commissioners appointed in the court case regarding the division of Hawick Common in 1767. He was a lawyer who gave evidence at the trial regarding the Division of the Common and then was appointed by Lord Advocate Montgomery to make the actual Division itself. He suffered an unpleasant experience at the hands of some Hawick residents as a consequence, describing that ‘the mob were very riotous, pelted the chaise I was in with the surveyors’. However, he was also made an Honorary Burgess. He was listed as a voter in Roxburghshire in 1780. He sold Stonedge to Robert Lisle of Acton, although the sale was never completed. In 1732 he married Margaret, daughter of William Elliot, 2nd Laird of Borthwickbrae, and in 1758 purchased part of Borthwickbrae for himself. In the 1783 Land Tax Rolls it is recorded that he was life-renting about half of Borthwickbrae and the west part of Howcleuch from John Elliot of Borthwickbrae. His children included: William (b.1737). Other children baptised in Hobkirk Parish who may have been his were Margaret (b.1733), Susan (b.1734), Janet (b.1736) and Thomas (b.1736). His last will and testament is dated 1778 and he died at Grange, (b.1736) and Thomas (b.1736). His last will and testament is dated 1778 and he died at Grange, described as ‘late of Stonedge’. Thomas (b.1717) younger son of Thomas, last Laird of Todrig. He went to sea in 1740, received several wounds and lost an eye. Around 1750 he entered into service with the East India Company, remaining 13 or 14 years. He later lived in retirement, still being alive in 1783, but without issue. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at Galalaw in 1751. He married Isobel Blyth in Wilton Parish in 1741. Their children included John (b.1742), William (b.1744), John (again, b.1746), Isabel (b.1748) and Elizabeth (b.1751). In 1751 the witnesses were James Dryden and Walter Scott. Thomas (18th C.) married Betty Leyden in Cavers Parish in 1744. Thomas (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He witnessed baptisms in 1742 for workman William Nichol, in 1745 for weaver James Roger and for carrier John Pott (along with shoemaker John, with his name given after John’s, and hence he was probably son or younger brother of John), and in 1747 for wright Robert Pringle. In 1744 he and John together witnessed a baptism for Robert Riddell ‘at Park’. He married Margaret Deans and their children included: Margaret (b.1737); Janet (b.1740); John (b.1742); and Henrietta (b.1744). The witnesses in 1742 were junior mason Andrew Turnbull and shoemaker John (who was probably related) and in 1744 were merchant John Ruecastle and shoemaker John (again). Rev. Thomas (1722–90) son of Walter, a merchant in Leith, who was descended from the Scotts of Harden, his mother being Martha Cunningham. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1742. He was presented as minister of Cavers by William Douglas of Cavers in 1746 and ordained there in 1747. He was ‘Mr. Thos. Scott the mance’ when he paid the window tax in Cavers Parish in 1748; he paid again in 1753. He was translated to ‘Second Charge’ of South Leith in 1762 and moved to the ‘First Charge’ in 1765. In 1750 he married Helen Balfour from Pilrig, and she died in 1806. Their children were; Walter (b.1752); Martha; Janet; John, surgeon with the 10th Light Dragoons; and Thomas, minister of Newton, near Edinburgh, who married Elizabeth, daughter of Gilbert Kerr of Gateshaw. Thomas of Urlings, County Tipperary (18th C.) progenitor of the Earls of Clonmell. He is probably descended from one of the Border Scott branches. He married Rachel, daughter of Mark Prim of Johnswell. Their son John (b.1739) was Solicitor-General and Attorney-General and was created Earl of Clonmell. Rev. Thomas (1722/3–92) said to have been born in Wilton Parish, and brother of Rev. James of Jedburgh (however, this may be confusion). He was ordained as minister of the Presbyterian Church in Hexham in 1756. He turned down Colinsburgh in 1761, since he thought that the size of the congregation and travel involved would be too much. In 1763 he became 1st minister of the Relief Kirk at Auchtornuchy (the 5th such congregation). He appears to have ended as minister in 1786. He was married in 1770, although his wife’s name is unknown; she was previously married to Rev. John Warden and she died in Edinburgh in 1810. He is buried in Canongate Churchyard. He could be the son of William and Christian Hoy, born in Wilton in 1723. It is unclear if he was brother of Rev. James of Jedburgh Relief Kirk or Rev. James (licensed by Jedburgh Presbytery), minister at Perth; he may thus have been an elder son of Robert of Falnash, perhaps born at Crowhill (like James), and may be the same Thomas who sold Falnash to the Duke of Buccleugh. Thomas (18th C.) married Mary Turnbull in Wilton Parish in 1751. Their children, included: Walter (b.1752) and William (b.1754), baptised in Wilton; and Helen (b.1761), Thomas (b.1766), Mary (b.1768), baptised in Hawick. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Heap in 1751. He married Margaret Bell in Wilton Parish in 1751. Their children included Thomas (b.1751), John (b.1753), Robert (b.1755), Isabel (b.1757), Adam (b.1760) James (b.1761), William (b.1763), George (b.1765), Elizabeth (b.1768) and Margaret (b.1771). The witnesses in 1751 were Robert and Walter Scott. Thomas (18th C.) married to Helen Renwick, their son William was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1757. In the entry he is marked ‘Buccleugh’, but it is unclear if that refers to the farm or something else. Probably the same Thomas and Helen Renwick were married in Roberton Parish in 1745. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Ewes Parish. He married Jean Veitch and their children included: Thomas (b.1743); Isobel (b.1753); Jean (b.1755); and Archibald (b.1759). The witnesses in 1759 were William Maxwell and Charles Scott (who was probably related). Thomas (18th C.) schoolmaster in Ashkirk in the 1760s and 1770s. He married Marion Elliot in 1765. Thomas of Nether Bonchester (1729–1807) eldest surviving son of Walter and brother of Rev. William of Abbotrule and Southdean. He succeeded to Nether Bonchester in 1750, as grandson of Walter. He was said to have greatly improved the Bonchester estate, making a nursery for young trees and enclosing land. The couple of acres of best land that he set aside for growing and selling young trees was called the Nursery and the cottage there was called the Nursery House. The planting of trees also became popular with his neighbours, leading to the valley of the Rule becoming well wooded. He also farmed Mackside for a while and was factor for Robert Lisle of Stonedge. However, he later struggled financially and had to place his affairs in the hands of trustees, who were William Turnbull of Langraw, Thomas Scott in Lethem and Peter Brown in Minto. This led to the sale of the Bonchester estate in 1779, the purchaser being William Oliver of Dinlabyre. The Duke of Buccleuch is said to have sympathised with his kinsman and allowed him to live at a farm on the Bowhill estate for a nominal rent. He may be the Scott of Nether Bonchester (forename not given) listed among the Commissioners for Roxburgh-shire in 1761. He married Hannah Burnett. His only surviving child was Dorothea (‘Dora’, b.1778), who married Dr. William Lorraine from Glasgow (although born near Canonbie, and grandson of William Lorraine from Kirkton). He also had a daughter, Nelly, who died young. He died at Bowhill at the age of 78 and is buried at Hobkirk. Thomas (1732–1823) 2nd son of Robert Scott (‘in Sandyknowe’) and Barbara Haliburton. He was thus uncle of Sir Walter of Abbotsford. He gained ‘liferent’ of lands that were part of Oakwood in 1759. He also held lands at Bewlie, which he resigned to Walter Scott of Harden in 1766. He was recorded as Thomas ‘Son to Robert Scott of Sandicknow’ [sic] among the Commissioners for Selkirkshire in 1761. In 1788 he was listed among the voters in Selkirkshire. He farmed at Wolfelee, holding the tenancy until 1810, then later at Monkland, near Jedburgh. During that time he was a heritor of Hobkirk Parish. For a while the tutor to his family was James Sanson, supposed to be the inspiration for Sir Walter Scott’s character ‘Dominie Sampson’. He was a skilled performer on the Border bagpipes, and in about 1816 wrote a list of the best Border bagpipers of earlier times. He married Anne, daughter of William Scott, 4th Laird of Raeburn (or perhaps Barbara, daughter of Walter Scott of Raeburn). In 1780 he secondly married Jean, sister of Thomas Rutherford of Knowesouth. His children included: James, who died unmarried in Edinburgh; Charles, who inherited Knowesouth, and farmed at Milsington; Mary; Anne; and Jean, who married Andrew Oliver of Langraw. He died at Monklaw, near Jedburgh. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hawickshiels. He married Mary Turnbull in 1751 and their children included: Walter (b.1752); William (b.1754); Helen (b.1761); Thomas (b.1766); and Mary (b.1768). The witnesses in 1766 were Walter Laidlaw and John Ker (blacksmith in Hawickshiels). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Whithope in 1767 when his daughter Mary was baptised. He may be one of the Thomases who married Margaret Turnbull in 1754, Isobel Anderson in 1758 or Nelly Laidlaw in 1766. Isobel (b.1758), baptised in Roberton, may also be his child. Thomas (1735/6–1800) 4th son of Walter, tenant farmer at Girnwood. Along with his brother Walter he took over from his father as co-tenant of Girnwood. Both brothers being unmarried, the tenancy passed to their relative Walter, 2nd son of the 3rd William in Milsington. Thomas of Peel (1737–1813) 2nd son of John of Ashtrees and Helen Oliver. He was tenant farmer in Lethem, Southdean Parish, and is recorded there as farmer in 1792 when he had a bond with the Elliots of Harwood. He was ‘in Letham’ when recorded as a trustee for Thomas of Nether Bonchester (who had to sell his lands) in about 1779. He was recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls from 1785, owning 11 horses there in 1797. He also paid the dog tax at Lethem in 1797. He was appointed as one of the trustees for Thomas Scott of Nether Bonchester when he got into financial difficulties; the trustees sold off that farm in 1779. In 1807 he bought Peel (then called Baxtonlees) from Lord Douglas. He married Esther, daughter of Thomas Turnbull (of the Hawick carpet factory), this probably being in Wilton Parish in 1777; his wife died at Lethem in 1787, aged 37. Their children included: Thomas, who inherited Peel; John of Riccalton, who later re-purchased the family lands of Ashtrees; Helen, who married Thomas Elliot, son of Elliot of Hardwood; and Esther, who married John, 2nd son of James Robson of Samieston. John Robson-Scott of Newton was his direct descendant, as well as the Boog-Scotts of Peel. Thomas (18th C.) blacksmith at Unthank in Hobkirk Parish in the last quarter of the 1700s. Thomas (18th C.) described as ‘sometime of Silverboothall’, he was probably son of James, farmer at Boonraw and Laird of Silverbuthall. In the late 1700s he sold a small piece of the former Wilton Common to William Oliver ‘Auld cash’. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Thomases. Thomas (18th C.) gardener listed at Burnhead in 1791, when he was working for William Scott. Thomas (d.bef. 1805) weaver in Hawick. He married Christian Weir in 1771. Their children included James (b.1772), probably the millwright; and Thomas (b.1775), probably the weaver. He was a member of the Associate Congregation, which witnessed the baptisms. His wife’s death is recorded in 1805, by which time he was already deceased. Thomas (18th C.) recorded being let the farm of Pilmuir Rig for the first time in 1778, after the Division of the Common. He may be the same as one of the other Thomases. Thomas (18th C.) farmer at Hawthornside in Hobkirk Parish according to the Horse Tax Rolls of 1788–91. He was probably related to George, who farmed there soon afterwards. Thomas (18th C.) recorded at!! Whitchesters in 1791 in a letter to a Selkirk lawyer. Thomas (18th/19th C.) from Hawick Parish, in 1792 he married Janet Riddell in Cavers. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at Northhouse, recorded on the 1792–97 Horse Tax Rolls. He was owner of 8 horses in 1797. He was additionally taxed for having 3 non-working dogs in 1797. Thomas (18th/19th C.) recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as farmer at ‘Woollie’ (i.e. Wolfelee), when he owned 6 horses. It is unclear if he is the same as one of the contemporary Thomases (but certainly Thomas at Lethem is recorded separately). Thomas (d.1808) son of Walter from Wiltonburn. He is described as a ‘hosier’ when he died in Hawick. He may be the same as one of the other Thomases. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1788 he married Helen Pott, who was from Castleton. Their children (baptised in Castleton) included: Helen (b.1789); Robert (b.1791); Helen (b.1797); James (b.1799); and Thomas (b.1801). Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident at Longnewton according to the 1790–97 Horse Tax Rolls. William was also there in 1797 and so presumably a close relative. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1783 he married Janet Elliot, who was from Hobkirk. He may be the Thomas whose son John was baptised in Cavers in 1786. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Earlside in 1784 when his son Robert was baptised. Perhaps the same Thomas was recorded as a labourer at Earlside in 1800 when his daughter Barara was baptised. Thomas (b.c.1765) joiner of the Sandbed, possibly son of Walter, who established a joiner’s firm there in 1750. He is presumably the Thomas listed as a joiner on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He married Christian (or Chistina) Downie, and their children included Walter (who carried on the business) and Jane. A younger joiner Thomas, also listed at the Sandbed on the 1841 census, may have been his son, as well as Robert at an adjacent address. He is listed as wright on the Sandbed in 1808 when an unnamed child died and in 1811 when his daughter Nelly died. Thomas (d.bef. 1822) possibly miller at Hawick Mill. The death of his wife Agnes Reid is recorded in 1822, when he was already deceased, with his designation given as ‘H. Mill’. Thomas (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Nelly Kerr and their children included Archibald (b.1811), Margaret (b.1813), James (b.1815) and Mary (b.1820). Thomas (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Agnes Leithead and their children included Janet (b.1813), Charles (b.1815), Robert (b.1818), Walter (b.1820), Thomas (b.1822), William Hay (b.1824), James (b.1827) and Alexander (b.1829). Thomas (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Rachel Gregor and their children included Margaret (b.1824). Thomas (18th/19th C.) mason at Deaburnhaugh. He is probably the Thomas, son of Walter, who was born in Roberton Parish in 1769. He was recorded as a mason living at Borthwick Mains in 1799. In 1798 he married Margaret (or ‘Peggy’) Anderson, who lived to an old age and was said to have at least 300 descendants by the 1930s; she was probably the daughter of Michael Anderson born in Roberton Parish in 1770. She was described as being ‘everybody’s body. Whenever trouble or stress prevailed she was always ready to do and to dare for the sake of others’. Their children included: Walter (b.1799); Isabel (b.1801), who was living with her mother in 1851; William (b.1804); Beatrix (b.1806), who married James Pringle, hosier worker in Hawick; Thomas (b.1810), probably the mason in Deanburnhaugh; Margaret (b.1812); George (b.1816); and Robert (b.1819), a labourer in Deanburnhaugh. His widow and son Robert were recorded in Deanburnhaugh on the 1841, 1851 and 1861 censuses. Thomas (b.c.1775) weaver in Hawick, probably son of weaver Thomas. He was grandfather of grocer George and great-grandfather of Peter, who founded Pesco's. In 1841 he was living at about 6 Walter's Wynd. His wife was Janet, and their children included George (b.c.1820) and James (b.c.1830). Thomas (1774/5–1846) resident at Lanton, son of Rev. Robert of Coldhouse and Margaret Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. In 1833 he bought Newton (on Teviot) from William Ogilvie of Chesters. In 1841 he is listed as 'Landowner' at Letham. He left Peel to his nephew William Elliot (son of his elder sister Helen) and Newton to his nephew Thomas Robson (son of his younger sister Esther). He died (unmarried) in Edinburgh. His portrait was painted by Mr. Frain of Kelso, and depicted him in the uniform coat of the Jedforest Club. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Minto. He subscribed to Andrew Scott's book of poetry, published in Kelso in 1811. Thomas (1782/3–1851) born in Yarrow Parish, he was shepherd at Nether Dele raine. In 1808 he was shepherd at Borthwickbrae Parkhead. In 1808 he married Rachel Griewe, who was born in Langholm; she died in 1853, aged 71. Their children (baptised in Roberton) included: William (b.1808); Helen (b.1812); Christian (b.1814); Rachel (b.1816); Joan (b.1817); Jane Atchison (b.1819); John (b.1827/8), also a shepherd. He and his wife are buried in Borthwick Waas. Thomas Chisholme (1784–1811) son of Rev. Robert of Coldhouse and Margaret Chisholme from Selkirk. He was baptised in Peebles in 1785. His brothers included William Chisholme, who probably owned Chisholme House and Alexander, who was a friend of Lord Byron. In 1802 he inherited a share in some plantations in Jamaica from his uncle, William Chisholme. In 1805 he graduated from the College of Fort William, an oriental studies academy in Calcutta, with his name at the head of those conferred with a Degree of Honour. He became Registrar of Purneah in Bengal, and died there. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. In 1812 he married Mary, daughter of Adam Hobkirk. Their children were: Adam (b.1812); Thomas (b.1814); Jane (b.1816); and John (b.1823). Thomas (18th/19th C.) wheelwright on Buccleuch Street, recorded along with Robert on Pigot's 1825/6 directory. They were probably brothers or father and son. He may be the Thomas recorded as a wheelwright on Buccleuch Street in Pigot's 1837 directory, or part of the Thomas and Robert recorded on the High Street. He may also be the Thomas listed as a carrier's agent on Buccleuch Street in 1837. Thomas (18th/19th C.) carter who lived at Whitlette Toll. He was listed among heads of households in 1835. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident at Lanton, son of Robert. He erected a headstone to his relations who are buried in Bedrule kirkyard. This included: his wife Mary, who died at Lantonhill in 1820, aged 40; son Robert, who died in Jedburgh in 1839, aged 29; and his father, mother and ‘brethren’. Capt. Thomas (1788–1858) born in Kirkton Parish, he was son of William, who farmed at Single, with his mother being Margaret Pott. He was farmer at Shielwood and Captain in the 94th Regiment of Foot. In the 1841 and 1851 censuses he is listed as a farmer and a lieutenant on half-pay. His children (with his first wife) included a son Henry and a daughter Agnes. In 1856 he married Mary Ballantyne, daughter of John and Mary Miller; she was already a widow, her first husband being John Little, and she may also have thirdly married an Elliot. Their children were Gideon and Margaret (who married Gideon Thomas Scott, Selkirk wine merchant). An obituary was written for the Hawick Advertiser by Dr. John Douglas. Thomas (1788–1848) son of Archibald and Jeany, he was born in Falstone, Northumberland. He was proprietor of the Crown Inn in Newcastleton (possibly at 8 Douglas Square), according to Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He married Isabella, daughter of John Kyle; she died in 1869, aged 74. Their children included: John (b.1817), who died in Antigua; Agnes (b.1821); Thomas (b.1820/1–1902), carter; William (b.1824/4–41), also died in Antigua; Robert Elliot (1827–89); Janet (b.1830); Elizabeth (b.c.1833); Archibald (1834/5–66), died on the passage back from the West Indies; and Isabel (b.c.1836). The family are buried in Ettleton Cemetery. Thomas (18th/19th C.) tenant in Selkirk Mill in 1825. In about 1828 he took the lease for another year. Thomas (18th/19th C.) mason in Wilton Dean. He is listed among heads of households there in 1835. Thomas (b.1794/5) farmer at Priestrig. He farmed 16 acres and employed 1 labourer. In 1841, 1851 and 1861 he was living there with his wife Christian and family. Their children included Adam, Margaret and Christian. Thomas (b.1794/5) born in Hawick Parish, he was a carrier in Lilliesleaf in 1851. He was probably on the south side of Main Street. In 1852 he is listed as a grocer in Lilliesleaf. His wife was Janet. Thomas (b.c.1800) carrier at Alton in Wilton Parish. He married Isabella Hogg, and their children included: Isabella (b.1832); Helen (b.1835); Emma (b.1837); Mary (b.1841); Margaret (b.c.1845); and Gideon (b.c.1850). Most of their children were born in Ashkirk Parish. In 1841 Isabella Lillico was living with his family, and hence may have been his mother-in-law. In 1861 he was a widower living at Highchesters Mill Cottage in Roberton Parish. Thomas (b.c.1805) born in Glasgow, he was a teacher in Hawick. He ran a school in Buccleuch Street from about 1826, later moving to Tannage Close. He had begun by teaching at Old Northhouse, which was then a thriving village. He is recorded as a teacher at Buccleuch Street in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory and on Walter’s Wynd in the 1837 directory. It is said that he taught for a while in the Fleece Inn Ballroom. In the 1841 census he is living in the Cross Wynd, married to Isabel and with children Isabel, John and Jessie. In 1851 he was schoolmaster in Lanton. Thomas Macmillan see Macmillan-Scott. Thomas (1805/6–74) born in Canonbie, he was farmer at Demainholm in Castleton Parish. In 1851 he was farmer of 50 arable acres and 250 acres of moorland, employing 4 labourers. He married Elizabeth Graham, who died in 1851, aged 33. His children included: Mary (1843/4–90); Jane (1845/6–1901), who married John Hollliday; Elizabeth; and Ann. Thomas ‘Sly Tammie’ (b.1810) son of grocer Walter and Isabella Anderson (possibly 1st wife of Walter). He trained as a shoemaker, but was later a greengrocer at 13 Howegate and used to keep a garden where the Old Parish Halls were later built. He married Mary Hilm in 1836 and their children were: Walter, who co-founded Lyle & Scott’s; Margaret H.; William H., warehouse-man in his brother’s firm; Charles S., wool merchant; Isabella (‘Bella’); Robert, auctioneer; John T.M., grocer and fishing tackle maker; and James. In the 1841 census he at the Sandbed, in 1851 on Buccleuch Street as a shoemaker, and by 1861 was at 1 Slitrig Bank. Thomas ‘Tammy Rusk’ (19th C.) baker at 55 High Street. His daughter Evelyn married Vernon E. Angwin. His brother was John (who married Jane Little). Thomas (b.1804/5) born in Wilton Parish, he was a farmer at Mervinslaw. He is recorded there on the 1841 and 1851 censuses, and in 1861 was farming 1200 acres there, and employing 11 people. He was still recorded at Mervinslaw in a directory of 1868. His wife was Margaret, and their children included Walter, George, Elizabeth and Agnes. He could be related to John, who was farmer at Mervinslaw in 1797. Thomas (b.1807/8) clerk in a woollen factory according to the 1851 census. He was living at about 16 Buccleuch Street. In Slater’s 1852 directory he is listed as ‘cashier, Buccleuch Street’. In 1861 he was listed as manager of Wilton Mills, and was living in the Manager’s House there. He married Mary Oliver in 1840. Their children included: James; Elizabeth (‘Betsy’, b.1842); Thomas (b.1844); Janet (b.1846); Agnes (b.1848); and Andrew (b.1850). He may be the Thomas, son of James and Isobel Robson born in Hawick in 1806. Thomas (b.c.1805) resident of Deanburnhaugh. In 1841 he is recorded as an agricultural labourer, and is easy to confuse with the mason of the same name, who also lived at Deanburnhaugh. He married Mina Inglis in Robertson Parish in 1830 and their children included: John (b.1831); William (b.1833); Helen (b.1834); Thomas (b.1837), ploughman in Lilliesleaf. Thomas (b.1809/10) mason in Deanburnhaugh, born in Robertson Parish, probably son of Thomas. He was living in Deanburnhaugh in 1841 and 1851, but by 1861 was at Myreslawgreen. In 1829 he married Jemima King (from Canonbie) in Robertson Parish in 1829, and their children included: Thomas (b.1830); James (b.1831); Margaret (b.1833); William (b.1835); Walter (b.1837); Barbara (b.1840); Isabella (b.1842); Mary (b.1844); Beatrice (b.c.1846); Wilhelmina (or Mina, b.1848); and Robert (b.1852). Thomas (b.c.1810) joiner in Hawick, probably son of Thomas. In 1841 he was living at the Sandbed. He may be the joiner from Hawick who was in the asylum in Dumfries in 1851. Thomas (b.c.1810) handloom weaver in Hawick. He was living at 53 Loan in 1851 and 1861. In 1835 he married Jane ‘Hallowell’ or Holywell. Their children included: George (b.1837); Elizabeth (or ‘Betsy’, b.1840); Margaret (b.c.1843); Robert (b.c.1845); Helen (or ‘Nellie’) (c.1847–1907); James (b.1848–52); Adam (1850/1–54); Isabella (b.c.1857); and Jemima (b.c.1859). The family are buried in St. Mary’s Kirk. Thomas (1815–1879) eldest son of Charles, farmer at Milshington, who was a cousin of Sir Walter Scott. His mother was Esther Elliot. He took over the tenancy from his father and farmed at Milshington from 1854 until his death. In 1861 he was recorded as farmer of 1000 acres there. In 1856 he married Marion (or Mary), daughter of Henry Scott, farmer at Stelshaw. Their children included: Charles (b.1857/8), who purchased the farm of Milshington; James (b.1841), who moved to Canada; Henry, moved to the U.S.A.; Thomas of Croftheads (b.1867), who married Elizabeth Minto; William; and Mary, who married John Tullie, Highchesters. Thomas (1820/1–1902) carter in Newcastleton. He is listed on the 1851 and 1861 censuses on Langholm Street. He married Jane Mitchellhill, who died in 1911, aged 88. Their children included: Robert (b.c.1848); Margaret (b.c.1854); Mary (1854/5–7); Thomas (b.c.1857); Mary (1858/9–63); and William (1861–9). He was probably son of Newcastleton innkeeper Thomas, who is buried in an adjacent plot in Ettleton Cemetery. Thomas (1824/5–89) 3rd son of Lidwesdale farmer John. He was a shepherd, starting out at Hartsgarth with his uncle Mr. Murray, then moving to Westshiel. After marrying he lived at the Pietsnest (on Hyndlee) and then Westshiel again, where he died. He married Christian, younger daughter of Robert Armstrong (and sister of his brother’s wife); she died at Wolfehopelee in 1909, aged 78. His children John, Robert and Mary became tenants of Wolfehopelee. His children included: Thomas (d.1876); Mary Anderson (1863/4–1933), who died in Hawick; and John (1859/60–1936), who died at Priesthaugh; Robert (1866/7–1953), who died at Flint Cottage, Denholm. Thomas B. (1849–1924) son of Walter and Mary Beattie, he was born in Wilton. He was a tweed manufacturer and died in Toronto, Canada. He married Winifred Brammah. Their son Douglas G., served with the R.A.F. and was killed in 1917 at the age of 21. Thomas (19th C.) farmer recorded at Langhope in Ashkirk Parish in 1868. Thomas ‘Scotia’ (1862–1906) son of George, grocer on the Howegate. His grandfather and great-grandfather before him had been Westenders. He was a traveller with his brother’s farm Pesco’s. He spent some time in Ontario, Canada, where in 1883 he helped establish an annual Common Riding celebration in the Galt/Guelph area, being the first secretary of the organising committee. He was Cornet in 1887, the year that the Ceremonial Committee was appointed. He married Margaret Elliot (1870–1914), daughter of John Robert Brough. Their children were: George Douglas (1899–1984), who married Ella Christie in 1933; Elliot B. (b.1901), who died young; Laura Isabel (1902–96), who married George M. Clunie; Thomas (1904–93); and Peter Adamson (1905–85). He suffered from tuberculosis and took his family to South Africa for his health; however, he died there. Thomas A. (1853–1926) son of Adam and grandson of Robert, farmer at Boonraw. He was born at Burnfoot on the Ale Water. He studied medicine at the University of Iowa and Rush Medical Center. He worked in Illinois and Oregon and then as a surgeon on boats. that travelled in many parts of the world. He retired in 1921 and moved back to his homeland, where he married Margaret, daughter of oil extractor Archibald Johnstone Donaldson in 1922, this being his 4th marriage. He died in Hawick. Thomas ‘Tom’ (1854–1927) watercolour painter, born in Selkirk. He studied at the Royal Institution and Royal Scottish Academy in Edinburgh and had many commissions from wealthy Border tweed manufacturers. He lived at Earlston and Bowden and settled at Leslie Cottage in Philiphaugh. Known for his powerful landscapes, he also illustrated many Border books, including Craig and Laing’s ‘The Hawick Tradition of 1514’ (1898) and ‘Branxholme Castle and the Land of the Scotts’ (1901), and was commissioned to paint ‘Return to Hawick from Hornshole, 1514’. He was a guest at the 1890 Common Riding and was the first guest at the Callants’ Club annual dinner in 1906. He read a paper on stone implements to the Archaeological Society in 1906 and donated a collection of his archaeological finds to the Museum, which now has more than a dozen of his paintings, including ‘Hawick Motte 1898’. In all, he exhibited 167 paintings at the Royal Scottish Academy. There is a bronze bust of him, by Thomas Clapperton, in Selkirk. A book ‘Lest we Forget’, about his Hawick connections, was written by M.H. Coltman in 1991. The museum in Drumlanrig’s Tower has a Tom Scott room, containing several of his paintings. Thomas John (b.1861) son of Robert and Mary Purdom. He was born in Cavers Parish. In 1882 he emigrated to Australia where he married Ada M. Fox in Melbourne, Victoria. Thomas (1862/3–1918) builder in Newcastleton. He married Marion Elliot, who died in 1949, aged 78. Their children included: John (1894/5–1916), who died in the First World War, and Murthockstone (who also swore fealty to Edward I). There is some suggestion that he was the elder brother, although the chiefdom of the family passed through Richard, so perhaps he had no heirs. The lands they held may have included Kirkurd, which were certainly later owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch. He may have been the first of his family to have the name ‘Walter’. He may be the same ‘Walterus Scot’ who witnessed a charter relating to Soutra Hospital in about 1280. It is also possible he was descended from Adam, whose name was associated with lands in Peeblesshire in the early 1200s. Walter (12th/13th C.) signatory of the Ragman Rolls in 1296, who came from Edinburgh (although it is unclear if he is distinct from the man from Peeblesshire, or whether this is a duplicate entry). He was recorded as ‘Wautier Scott tenant le Euesqe de Seint Andreu, del counte de Edeneburgh’ (i.e. the Bishop of St. Andrews’ tenant in Edinburgh). His seal bore a hawk on a wrist, together with a crescent and star in fields and the name ‘SWALTERI SCOTTI’. The crescent and star indicate a close relationship with the Scott chiefs. Walter ‘the Ratton’ (d.c.1400) said to have been grandson of John ‘the Lame-ter’, and son of a Chamberlain to the Archbishop of Glasgow (although there is some confusion between father and son). Alternatively he was a younger son of Sir Michael of Rankilburn. He was probably the 1st Laird of Synton, although accounts differ, and information about these generations is very uncertain. His nickname came from his temper and small size. In about 1389 he settled at Burnfoot in the Ale valley and became the first (new) Laird of Synton. He married a Shortreed of Headshaw. His children probably included: George, who succeeded to Synton; John of Headshaw; Walter of Ashkirk; and William of Glack. He died during the reign of Robert III. Sir Walter (d.1402) 4th Laird of Rankilburn (Buccleuch), Murthockstone and Kirkurd, son of Robert. He was the first of a huge number of Sir Walters who would come later. He was said to be a brave man who performed many actions in service of the Crown. He had a charter of 1389 for superiority of the lands of Kirkurd. He may be the Walter who had an indenture in 1391 with Hugh Fotheringham for the lands of Caverton, made at Borthwick. In 1398 he was among the barons who were bound to keep peace on the Border and he was appointed as ‘borowis for the Erlis boundis of Douglas of the mycil marche’ (thus the first of his family associated with the Wardenship of the Marches). His wife’s name is not known, and his only known child is Robert, who succeeded him. He was killed at the Battle of Homildon Hill, serving in the army of Archibald, Earl of Douglas. Walter of Ashkirk (14th/15th C.) younger son of Walter, 1st Laird of Synton. However, these generations are very uncertain, and nothing else is known about him. He was probably ancestor of the James recorded in Ashkirk in 1502 and 1526. Walter ‘Wat’ (15th C.) recorded in 1456/7 as witness to the sasine for Ewesdale passing from Robert of Ewesdale to George Douglas, 4th Earl of Angus. He may have been from Ewesdale, along with Sim, Henry, John and Nichol, who are also listed. Sir Walter of Buccleuch (d.c.1468) eldest son of Robert, he was 6th (and last) Laird of Murthockstone (or Murdostoun) and the first to be described as ‘of Buccleuch’. He was also sometimes still described as ‘of Kirkurd’. He was mentioned as son and heir of Robert in 1415, when his father swapped lands of Glenkerry for Beltendean with Melrose Abbey. In 1426 he is described as son and heir of Robert of ‘Murthous-tun’ when he was granted the lands of Lempitlaw in the regality of Sprouston. He was probably the Walter on the ‘retour’ for the lands of Caverton in 1429/30. In 1431 he had a ‘transumpt’ made of the charter of 1420 in which his father was granted half the lands of Bransholme. He obtained lands of Heap in Wilton from James Langlands in 1431, a public instrument to that effect being signed at St. Mary’s Kirk; he swapped these lands for Mils-ington in 1451 at Wilton Kirk (with a confirming deed in 1453). He witnessed a confirming charter for lands in Primside in 1432 and another for Nether Crailling in 1434, both granted by Archi-bald, Earl of Douglas. In 1434 he was ‘lord of Morthonystoun’ in a document relating to Ladyurd.i He was knighted by James II in 1437, and also granted a charter for lands in Eckford in 1439 (confirmed in 1450), apparently for capturing Gilbert of Rutherford. He is recorded in a document as Lord of ‘Morthonystoun’ in 1434, and was still presiding over the Baron Court of Kirkurd in 1455. He witnessed several charters granted by James II in the 1430s to 1450s. In the 1430s he gained lands at Grainslaw from William Crichton of that Ilk (who is described as his relative, and was clearly a close political ally). In 1438 he was on the ‘retour of inquest’ for Ker of Altonburn. In 1443 he witnessed a charter for William Cranston of Crailling. He witnessed a charter for Borthwickshiels in 1444 and a lease for related lands in 1445. In 1446 he exchanged the family’s Lanarkshire property (Murtlockston) for the rest of Bransholme, with Thomas Inglis; in response to Inglis’ complaint about English in-cursions on Bransholme, he supposedly remarked that ‘the Cumberland cattle were as good as those of Teviotdale’. He thereby acquired Todshawhill, Todshawhaugh, Goldielands, Whitlaw, Whitrig and part of Over Harwood. In 1446 he was witness to a charter for Ker of Altonburn and in 1446/7 was on a ‘retour’ panel for Ker of Alton-burn. In 1447 he bought the ‘Cousinlands’ (to the north of Bransholme) from Margaret Cousin, wife of Simon Routledge and mother of Robert Scott (hence probably a relative). He witnessed a charter for Stephen of Castlelaw (his brother) in 1448. In 1449/50, with the consent of his eldest son David, he renounced his superiority over the lands of Lochurd and Kirkurd to the chaplains of the prebend of Kirkurd (then part of the Collegiate Church of Dalkeith). In 1450 he was on the panel for the ‘retour’ of William Douglas for the Barony of Hawick. During the reign of James II he was one of the conservators of truces with England. He was a conservator of truces with England in 1449, 1451, 1453, 1457 and 1459, and he was one of the signatories of the Border laws document drawn up in 1449. In 1451 he exchanged the lands of Heap for those of Milsington with John of Langlands. He was on an assize for the Douglases in Dumfries in 1451/2. In 1452 he witnessed the document creating the Barony of Kilmours for Alexander Cunningham; this was done while part of the expedition into England, led by James II. In 1453 he was granted the fees of the men of Teviotdale according to the Exchequer Rolls. In 1454/5 he witnessed a document for the Kers of Altonburn. In 1455 he led a group of Borderers against the remnants of the army raised to revenge the murder of William Douglas by the King, the battle taking place at Arkinholm. Thereby he was granted ‘Quhytehe stir’ (Whitchester) in the Barony of Hawick (forfeited by John St. Michael), as well as lands in Selkirkshire. In 1456 he was on the panel that acquitted Andrew Ker of Altonburn of helping the English burn lands around Jedburgh. In 1457 he witnessed the document appointing Andrew Ker of Cessford as Bailie of the Lordship of Jedforest. In 1458/9 he obtained lands at Abington, Phareholm and Glendonanrig, which had previously belonged to the Douglases. Along with his son Sir David he was also granted part of Langholm. In 1458 he had a charter for Glendowan and other lands in Lanarkshire (which may have been held by a cadet branch for another 3 centuries). He is recorded as Master Ranger of Ettrick ward from at least 1455 and was probably the ‘Sir Walter of Kirkurd’ listed as Master Ranger in 1467 when he had the farm of Eldinhope for his fee; he remained in this position until 1468. In 1461 (as superior of Branxholme) he transferred the lands of ‘Kirkton and Tofits’ to Katherine Inglis. His sons David and Alexander witnessed a charter in Edinburgh in 1463. Also in 1463 he resigned his lands to the King, so that they could be regranted; this included Branxholme, Lanton, Lemplitlaw, Eilrig, Rankleburn, Eckford, Kirkurd and Whitchesters. Branxholme was then erected into a Barony; this was for services rendered to King James III and his father James II, particularly against James of Douglas. In 1463/4 he was given a discharge for sureties that he was liable to pay to the King’s officers, on account of helping to expel James Douglas. And in 1463/4 he witnessed the document where the King rewarded a number of local men for the capture of John Douglas of Balveny. He was also present in Parliament in Edinburgh in 1464. In 1464/5 he was on the panel for the inheritance of the lands of Cavers and Sheriffship of Roxburgh. Also in 1464/5 he witnessed the document giving a reward to Robert Scott of Todshaw and other local men for the capture of John Douglas of Balveny. He was also on the panel that decided on the disputed lands of Kirkton Mains and Flex in 1464/5. He married Margaret, daughter of Peter Cockburn of Henderland, and appears to have had at least 3 sons (although things are still confused in these generations): David, who succeeded; James of Kirkurd and Hassendean, ancestor of the Scotts of Hassendean, Burnfoot and Burnhead (although there is some suggestion that he was not a full brother of David); and Sir Alexander of Abington and Howpasley, ancestor of the Scotts of Thirlestane, Howpasley, Horsleyhill, Gilmanscleuch, Newburgh and Tushielaw. It seems feasible that John of Thirlestane, who gained the half Barony of Wilton in 1483, was another son. His seal bore a diagonal band with 2 crescents and a star, and the words ‘S’ WALTERI SCOT DE BUKCLUCH’. Walter (d.1471) eldest son of Sir David of Branxholme and Buccleuch. In 1465 he was contracted to marry Katherine, daughter of John Lindsay of Covington, involving the lands of Kirkurd. However, it is unclear that the marriage ever happened. In 1469/70, along with his father, he was made Keeper of Hermitage Castle by Archibald Douglas ‘Bell the Cat’. However, he did not live much longer, predeceasing his father and dying without issue. He is mentioned in 1470 in a charter for lands in the Hermitage valley; he is there described as son and heir of David of Buccleuch. In June 1471 he was gifted the relief of the lands of West Lilliesleaf and Whitton. By the following year David (his brother) was the heir (although he may be the Walter who was witness, along with David of Buccleuch, to a saisine for the lands of Borthwickshields in May 1471). Walter of Fenwick (15th C.) witness to a notorial instrument relating to the lands of Whitchesters in 1456, possibly relating to a ‘retour’ witnessed a few years earlier. Probably the same Walter of Fenwick is recorded as witness in 1484/5 to a charter where Sir David of Branxholme gave Whitchesters to his son Robert (of Allanhaugh). In 1488 he was one of the bailies appointed for the precept in 1488 in which Sir Thomas Turnbull leased Greenwood and Lyne to Robert Scott, and also witnessed the same document. He may have been ancestor of later Scotts of Fenwick. Walter 3rd Laird of Synton (15th C.) probably son of George. He is said to have married a daughter of Scott of Hassendean during the reign of James II; however, it is unclear which Scott of Hassendean is intended. His children were John and Walter, both of whom succeeded. Walter 5th Laird of Synton (d.c.1463), younger son of Walter and brother of John the 4th Laird. He married a daughter of Sir John Johnstone of that Ilk and his sons included George, who succeeded. He is said to have died near the beginning of the reign of James III, but James IV is more likely. Walter (15th C.) listed among the local men who were rewarded by the King in 1463/4 for helping to capture John Douglas of Balveny. He is recorded as ‘niger Walterus Scot’, presumably a reference to a swarthy complexion. He is surely related to some of the other Scotts mentioned (John, Robert of Todshaw, Simon and Thomas), but it is unclear how. He could be the same as one of the other contemporaries Walters. Walter (15th C.) held a sasine for the lands of ‘Wester Lymifieris’ in Lanarkshire in 1478. It is unclear if he was the same as one of the others Walters. Walter of Whitehaugh (15th C.) recorded in the 1488 Charter for the Barony of Branxholme. He was listed among the heirs of Sir David of Buccleuch, the last to be explicitly related, suggesting he may have been a nephew of Sir David perhaps. He must have been related to David of Whitehaugh who is recorded in 1479, John in Whitehaugh, listed in 1501, and Philip of Heap, mentioned in 1508. Walter of Heap (15th C.) member of the panel or the inheritance of Branxholme and Buccleuch by Walter, grandson of Sir David in 1492. He was also ‘Walterum Scot de Hep’ in 1494 on the panel for the inheritance of Synton. He may be the same as Walter of Whitehaugh. Walter of Tushielaw (15th/16th C.) see Sir Walter of Howpasley. Sir Walter of Howpasley (d.1513) eldest son of Sir Alexander of Howpasley and Abington. His brothers were Robert (who probably started the Scotts of Thirlestane); William, Abbot of Melrose; Adam; Alexander; and probably David of Tushielaw. In 1478 (possibly an error) he was ordered to pay William Inglis for the lands of Meiklehope in an arrangement involving his deceased father Alexander. He was witness to a transfer of land between Robert Scott of Haining and David Scott of Branxholme in 1482. He may be the Walter who acted as one of the Earl of Angus’ Bailies for infesting David Scott of Branxholme in the lands of Mangerton in 1482. In 1484 there was a claim by Jane Douglas (widow of David Scott, younger of Buccleuch) for 8 years’ rent of lands detained by him. He was mentioned in a charter of the Barony of Branxholme in 1488, clearly stated there to be son of the deceased Alexander. In 1491/2 he was one of the executors of the will of David of Buccleuch. He was appointed as tutor to young Walter (‘Wicked Wat’) of Buccleuch by Walter the 8th Laird and handled his affairs during his minority. In 1487–90 he was Master Ranger of Ettrick (and stated to be son of Alexander), when assigned the lands of Auldhope. In 1488 (probably just after the death of his father) and in the period 1484–90 these lands were said to be in the hands of him and his mother, Lady Joan Douglas; the lease was extended until 1496. In 1488 he was also leased the lands of Tushielaw, with David of Buccleuch as pledge. In 1493 he was surety for William Grahamslaw at Hassendean Kirk (however, Robert of Howpasley also served as surety in 1493, and was probably his brother). He was also allowed to pay a fine for his crimes of bringing William Scott, called ‘Gyde’, William’s brother John (it is unclear whether they were related to him) and other ‘Traitors of Leyyn’ to raid the lands of Harehead, as well as resetting Henry Scott and others. In 1494/5 he was surety for Adam ‘in Auldninnishop’ (probably his brother), Robert of Deloraine, David son of James in Hassendean, Adam Turnbull in Hornshole, William Dickson in Ladhope, Thomas Lauder of Todrig and Andrew Dickson in Buccleuch. Also in 1494/5 he is probably the Walter recorded being ‘of Tushielaw’ (since these lands were also held by his family) when he was surety for David Turnbull, son of the Laird of Whithope. He was additionally listed in 1494/5 as owner (along with Walter Turnbull of Howpasley) of sheep that were stolen from Stouslie by the Grahamslaws of Newton. It is unclear if he or Walter of Buccleuch was the Walter listed as Ranger for Ettrick in 1494–6 (with John as Deputy Ranger). It is unclear when he ended his position as Custodian for the Ward of Ettrick, since it is difficult to separate him from Walter of Buccleuch (his cousin’s son), who held a similar role around 1500. In 1499 he was assigned the lands of ‘Laudehop’ (presumably Ladhope on the Yarrow), with the pledge being the Laird of Buccleuch; he also acted as pledge for Walter of Buccleuch in some other lands. He may also be the Walter of Tushielaw who was ‘coronator principalis de Ettrik’ according to the Exchequer Rolls of 1501, when he was liable for the fines of David Scott, Adam Scott and James Laidlaw; it was stated that since he had no means within the Sheriffdom of Selkirk, the charge was to be transmitted to the Sheriff of Peebles. He was also listed as ‘Walterus Scot de Howpaset’ in the Exchequer Rolls of 1501, among mostly local men whose fines were compounded. He had a ‘letter of reversion’ for the lands of Appletreehall with Alexander Lord Home in 1502. Also in 1502 he served as surety (along with Robert of Stirches) for Patrick, son of Adam ‘in Hardwodhill’; also mentioned is Alexander Scott, probably his brother. In that same year he served as surety for his brother Alexander, who had remission for several thefts (from John in ‘Valis’ and from David Pringle out of ‘Fechane’) and for Adam Turnbull in Hornshole. Additionally in 1502 William in Broadmeadows had remission for several crimes, including injuring him at Tushielaw (when he was described being ‘de tuschelaw’) and he was surety for Adam ‘in aldinershope’ (probably Annelsfor) and Adam in Tushielaw (who may have been related to him). In 1504 he was one of the ‘Bailies in that part’ appointed by Patrick, Earl of Bothwell to infeft Walter of Buccleuch in lands in Annadale. Also in 1504 he was fined at the Justice-aire in Dumfries for failing to give suit for his lands of ‘Rig’ (i.e. Caerlenrig). In 1504/5, along with David Hoppringle, George Hepburn and William Middlemas, he held lands at Boonraw, which were sold to Robert Scott of Stirches. In 1506/7 he was ‘tutoure to the Larde of Bukcleuch’ (the young Walter, who had just succeeded) when he gave in his tutory accounts. In 1507 he had a charter for the lands of Ladhope in Etrtrick Forest. He was still ‘tutor’ in 1509, when he was said to be the closest male relative. In 1509 he was on the panel for ruling on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers by James Douglas. In 1510 he was fined along with 35 others of ‘destroying the Woods of Etrtrick-Forest’. Also in 1510 he was recorded in a pledge by Margaret, wife of James Scott in Falside. He was recorded as part of an assize in Edinburgh in early 1513. He married a daughter of Elliot of Larriston (perhaps Elizabeth, based on the names of his daughter Janet’s children). The gift of wardship of his lands and marriage (meaning the financial gains from the contract etc.) of his daughter went to James Lundie in 1517. His daughter and heiress (at least for some lands) was Janet, who appears to have firstly married John Baird, Lord Posso (who died in 1527) and secondly married Thomas MacDowell; she transferred Midshields and Apple-treehall to her uncle Robert in 1532/3. He was succeeded by his son Robert. He is one of the most prominent local Lairds who died at Flodden. Walter (15th C.) name of 2 men recorded in the last will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme in 1491/2, in addition to Walter of Howpasley. ‘Walter Scole’ was left 3 sheep and ‘magno Waltero Sco’ was left 20 shillings. Walter of Whitchester (15th C.) recorded in the 1493 Justice-aire held in Jedburgh when he was surety for Thomas Brown in Minto. It may be that this is an error for Robert of Whitchester. Sir Walter (1470s–1504) 8th Laird of Buccleuch, grandson of Sir David, who he succeeded in 1492, his father David having died first. He was the only child of David and Jane Douglas, daughter of the Earl of Angus. He must have been the Walter of Branxholme receiving the lands of Mangerton in a sasine of 1484/5 (with George Fairneylaw as notary). In his grandfather’s last testament he was granted £40 and 11 oxen and made a ‘tutor’ of William Turnbull of Minto. In 1492 he succeeded to the lands of Branxholme, Whitchesters, Lempitlaw, Eilrig, Rankleburn, Miltsington and Kirkurd. However, he received sasine of half of Branxholme, together with Eckford and Langton only in 1500, the lands having been held in ward by the Crown for 7 years; this suggests he only reached majority in this year. He was still superior of the Barony of Kirkurd (Peeblesshire) recorded in sasines of 1493 and 1495. In 1494 he was on the panel for Alexander Erskine inheriting Synton and the office of Sheriff of Selkirk. In 1494/5 he acted as surety at Jedburgh Justice-aire for George Young, who had been captured at Minto. In 1494 he obtained a decree from the Lords of Council regarding the earlier plunder of his grandfather’s lands and house at Buccleuch. He may be the Walter who leased the lands of Whitshields (near Langholm) in 1494. He is probably the ‘Walteri Sco’ who was made custodian of the Ward of Etrtrick in at least the period 1496–98 (although there may be confusion with Walter of Howpasley); in 1496 he was liable for the fines of Adam Scott and others and he was given the rental of ‘Aldanehop’ for his fee as Ranger of Etrtrick Ward. In 1499 he was tenant of Deloraine and ‘Warldishe’. In 1500 he was infefted in the lands of Grahamlaw by the Earl of Bothwell, and also his uncle Robert of Allanhaugh resigned Whitchesters into his hands as security for a loan. He was granted the lands of Whithope (in the Barony of Hawick) in a charter of 1502. Also in 1502 he was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh, failing to ‘give suit’ for his lands of Branxholme, Lanton and Eckford (as well as his lands of Buccleuch in Selkirkshire). Additionally he was surety for William Dalgleish in Braidhaugh and for John Cockburn in Milsington. His name was mentioned in connection with negotiations for the marriage of King James IV with Margaret, daughter of Henry VII of England in 1502/3, and he witnessed the infeftment of Queen Margaret in the lands of the Forest at Galashiels in 1503. Also in 1503 he witnessed a financial agreement in Jedburgh between George Douglas, Master of Angus and Ralph Ker of Primsideloch. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Walter Ker of Cessford, who was widow of Philip Rutherford, younger of that Ilk. She long outlived him, being burnt within Catslack tower by Lord Grey and an English raiding party (supported by the Kers) in 1547. He was succeeded by his son Sir Walter (‘Wicked Wat’). A 2nd son was William of Whithope. He was said to have been one of the few nobles to escape from Flodden, but this seems more likely to have been his son, Sir Walter. His widow and son are recorded as being assigned the lease of Deloraine and Warleighope in 1504; she had liferent of these farms in 1510. Walter of Synton (d.c.1500) probably son of George, he is usually referred to as being the 7th of Synton. However, there is sometimes confusion with his grandson, Walter. He is mentioned in family writs in 1487 and flourished during the reign of James IV. Some early family histories say he married a daughter of Cockburn of Hernderland and secondly a daughter of James Riddell of that Ilk, but this seems to be incorrect. His son was Robert of Stirches and later of Synton (however, the relationship between the Scotts of Synton, Stirches and Headshaw are confused in these generations). Walter (15th/16th C.) son of James of Hassendean (probably the same as James of Kirkurd) who witnessed a document for the Scotts of Branxholme in 1500. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Walters. Walter (15th/16th C.) son of Robert of Hartshaw. In 1499 he gave his consent for Middledstead of Langhope to be assigned to Patrick Home. This was probably the Langhope in the Ale valley. However, it is unclear where ‘Hartschaw’ was (perhaps an error for Headshaw). Probably the same Walter was feued the east steading of Langhope in 1510, and was the son and heir of Robert who feued the west steading of Gildhouse (also called Dodbank) in the same year. Walter of Headshaw (d.beft. 1510) probably descendant (perhaps son) of John of Headshaw, son of Walter of Synton. He is recorded as ‘of Eidschaw’ when witness to a sasine of 1484/5 for lands of Mangerton going to the Scotts of Branxholme. In 1484 he was ‘Walter Scot de Eidschaw’ when he was one of the men directed by the Earl of Angus to infeft Robert Elliot of Redheugh in some lands. In 1484/5 he also witnessed a document relating to Whitchesters. His son David leased lands in the Ettrick valley in 1486. In 1487 his son Robert bought the lands of Boonraw from James Newton of Dalcove, and he was one of the witnesses to the sasine (this Robert appears to be the same as Robert of Stirches). In 1493 he was ‘of Eidschaw’ when he was allowed to ‘compone; for being associated with ‘the thieves and traitors of Leven’. In 1493 and 1494/5 his son Robert was surety for Hector Lauder, brother of the Laird of Todrig. He is listed in the Exchequer Rolls in 1501 among mostly local men whose fines were compounded. He may be the same Walter of Headshaw recorded in 1502 when he had a remission for stealing 8 oxen and 4 horses from Robert Lauder. John Scott of ‘Valis’ acted as surety (and hence may have been a close relative). Also in 1502 his son Walter had remission for stealing sheep from farms at Yair, Selkirk, Caidsheils and Broadmeadows, with James in Ashkirk and Robert of Stirches acting as sureties. In 1502 he and Walter in Synton (his son) were sureties for John in Walls and also in 1502 he was surety for William in Fenwick. Thomas, brother of Philip of Headshaw is recorded in 1510, so surely his descendants. His sons may have been: Philip, his heir; David; Simon of Dryhope; Robert; Walter; and Thomas. Walter (15th/16th C.) described as son of Walter ‘of Eidschaw’ (i.e. Headshaw) in 1502. He had remission for several thefts, specifically stealing 80 sheep from William Ker at Yair, 60 sheep from Robert Brown and John Turnbull at Selkirk, 60 sheep from the Abbot of Kelso and Ralph Ker at Caidsheils (this incident perhaps also involving Adam Turnbull in Hornshole and Chamberlain Newton), 80 sheep from Ralph Ker at Broadmeadows (this probably also involving Adam Turnbull, as well as David ‘the Lady’ in Stirches), 60 cattle from Ralph Ker at Whitlawhouse, a horse and goods from Alexander Pringle, 2 horses from a house in Selkirk, another horse from Selkirk Castle, a grey horse from William Ker in Whitemuir, a heifer from John Scott of Haining, 6 oxen from Haining, and a horse and 4 oxen from the Hospital of St. Andrew in Peebles; also for resetting David Turnbull, John Somerville, Christopher Taylor, Edmund Taylor and the ‘traitors of Leven’. James Scott in Ashkirk and Robert Scott in Stitches acted as sureties, the remission being described at the Justice-aire held in Selkirk. His daughter may have been the Janet who married Walter of Whitehaugh. The Walter in Headshaw who was recorded in 1532 and 1533 is probably his nephew. Walter (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 being ‘in le newhalburned’. Along with Thomas Brown in Cavers he was surety for George Turnbull in Weens (who was one of the men charged with the murder of Robert Oliver at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh). He was presumably tenant at Burnhead, but it is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts of Burnhead or Over Newhall. Walter (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 when John Elliot in Foulshiels was convicted of stealing 100 sheep from his farm at Hartwoodburn. He is probably the same as one of the other Walters. Walter (15th/16th C.) tenant in Broadmeadows, brother of John in Hassendean. At the Justice-aire in Selkirk in 1502 he had remission for stealing 7 cows from William Wood in Williamhope, 2 horses from William Wood in Broadmeadows 14 cows, 4 horses and various goods from Thomas Denholm in Blackgrain, 24 sheep from George Bonniton in Whitlaw House and Greenhead, and 28 sheep belonging to the Abbot of Kelso and William Lowry in Cauldshiellhouse. His surety was John in Hassendean, his brother. He may have been related to William and John, sons of James of Broadmeadows, who were recorded at the same Justice-aire. Walter of Midgehope (15th/16th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire in Selkirk in 1502. He had remission for resetting David ‘de francia’, especially in the theft of cows from Glensax. Walter Scott of Howpasley (who also held Tushielaw) was his surety and hence perhaps related. However, it is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts. Walter (15th/16th C.) son of Adam. Along with his father he is recorded in the Exchequer Rolls of 1512 relating to earlier payments for ‘fermes’ of their steadings in Ettrick Forest. He may have been son of Adam who was son of Sir Alexander of Abington and Howpasley. Walter (15th/16th C.) had the ‘fermes’ of Shaws and Berrybush remitted to him in 1513. He may be the same as one of the other Walters. Walter (15th/16th C.) listed on the 1526 remission for Borderers involved in attacking the Earl of Arran. He is recorded as being ‘in the Haucheld’, which may be Haughhead near where the Boonraw Burn joins the Teviot or the Haughhead in Eckford Parish. His sons William and Adam are also listed. Walter (15th/16th C.) probably the son of James of Ashkirk, who was listed in the remission given in 1526 to a large number of Borderers for attacking the Earl of Arran. He was probably also related to the John of Ashkirk who was killed in 1526. He was recorded being ‘in Ashkirk’ in about 1530 when he assigned half of Lilliesleaf Mill to his brother William and his wife Beatrix. He may be the Walter ‘in Askyrk’ who witnessed documents for the Scotts of Headshaw and for the Scotts and Veitches of Synton in 1531. He was listed in 1532 among the witnesses to a public declaration made in Selkirk by William Scott in Headshaw. He was described as ‘in Askirk’ when part of an inquest at Jedburgh in 1533 regarding lands at Longnewton. In 1535 he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk for John Veitch of North Synton and another for Walter of Headshaw. He is probably the deceased Walter in Ashkirk whose widow Margaret Falside and son and heir Walter are recorded in Selkirk in 1539 acknowledging receipt of interest from the subtenants in Ashkirk and Falside. Sir Walter ‘Wicked Wat’ (1499/1500–1552) 9th Laird of Buccleuch and Brannholm, son of Sir Walter, whom he succeeded in 1504, with a reinfetment of his lands in 1516 and a ‘retour’ in 1517. In 1508 he had a charter of Branhholme and Kirkurd. His ‘tutor’ when he was a minor was Walter of Howpasley. In 1512 he was feued the lands of Delowraine, Warleshope and Eldinhope, along with his mother Elizabeth Ker. He was probably made a knight on the eve of Flodden and is said to have been one of the few Scots noblemen to have escaped the battle. Throughout most of his life there was conflict with the Douglasses and the Kers of Cessford, as well as many Border raids. In 1515/6 he and his mother Elizabeth had a ‘notorial transumpt of papal indulgences’ seeking a condessor to absolve them from all crimes and sins. In 1519 and again in 1524 (confirmed in 1525) he was appointed Bailie of lands belonging to Melrose Abbey, including Ringwoodfield, but also ‘Melroseland’, Ettrick, Rodono, Eskdalemuir and East Teviotdale; this was said to be for the ‘divers diligent labours and travails’ that he and his family and friends had done towards the Abbey, and the appointment was hereditary afterwards. In the 1524 charter he was assigned the farms of Northhouse and Thistlestone for his fee. In 1523 he and his wife Elizabeth Carmichael had a regrant of the family charter of the Barony of Eckford. In 1524 he was imprisoned in Edinburgh over a dispute with the Queen-Dowager over lands in Ettrick Forest, but he managed to escape. Later in 1524 he was part of an unsuccessful coup in Edinburgh, along with the Earls of Angus and Lennox and others. In July 1525 there was also remission to a group containing him (and William, Master of Glencairn) for a breach of peace and crime committed in Edinburgh, upon condition that they submit to punishment by the King, and that they help in ‘repressing of murmurs among the people and among strangers’; on the back of this document is an obligation to them for ‘the slauchtir of Duchemen, etc.’ In 1525 he was part of a bond among Border Barons to assist the Earl of Angus in keeping the peace. In 1526 he was pardoned (as leader of a large number of Borderers) for his role in gathering ‘in feir of weir’ in Edinburgh and then attempting to capture the Earl of Arran at Stirling (the events probably taking place a couple of years earlier). Also in 1526 he led a group of Scotts, Elliots and their followers to try to capture the young James V from the control of the Earl of Angus at Skirmish Field, near Melrose. This battle against Angus and his local supporters (the Kers and Homes) led to the loss of many men, and also the death of Ker of Cessford, which fuelled the later feud with the Kerrs. He was exiled for this act, but had remission along with several other Scotts and Turnbuls in 1527. There was a document of 1526/7 directing Archibald, Earl of Angus and others not to harm him, as well as Walter Scott of Synton, John Cranston of that Ilk and their followers. He was summoned to appear in Selkirk in 1527, according to a royal breve. He was fully pardoned in 1527/8 (probably because the young King had encouraged him in the attack at Skirmish Field) and was made Principal Cupbearer to the King, as well as Warden of the western part of the Middle March. In 1528 he was charged, by the King and his Lords who were at Jedburgh and Melrose, to show his support to the King; he came ‘in ane lederin cote and ane blak bonet on his heid’ ready to obey the King’s commands. And in 1529 there was also royal ratification of an Act of Parliament stating that he had come to Melrose specifically at the request of the King and so was innocent of treason. In 1527 he had an agreement with James Murray of Falahill to end the feud between the Scots and Murrays. In 1528 he was ‘oversman’ to the arbitrators chosen to decide on the succession to the lands of Borthaugh. Also in 1528 he had a discharge from the King for paying the non-entry fees for the Lordship of Bedrule; he also had the right to arrange the marriage of the heir of Bedrule. He infefted his son and heir David in all of his lands in 1528. In 1528/9 he had a ‘discharge’ from Patrick, Earl of Bothwell, for his wardship and related fees and ‘non-entry’ fees associated with several local Scotts. In 1529 he also received Angus’s former Lordship of Jedforest. About the same time he also had remission for ‘breaking ward’ from Blackness Castle. In 1530 he came ‘in the King’s will’ for the murder of John, Lord Flemming, and was fined for not entering 6 men for the same crime. Shortly after the raid on Border thieves, which James V arranged in 1530, he slew the ‘verrie crewwal Thief’ Robert Johnstone ‘to gratiffie the King’, but this led to a feud with the Johnstones. In 1530/1 he received the hereditary office of baille of the monastery of Melrose. In 1531 he was entered in ward in Borthwick Castle (for unspecified crimes), his surety being Sir James Hamilton. In 1532 there was remission for Simon Armstrong and Clement Crozier for the ‘tresonabil taking of Walter Scot of Branhelm, knycht, in cumpany with Inglismen, and trosinabl inbringing of thaim within the realme’. In 1532 he was one of the local men appointed by the King to a commission to capture some Croziers, Elliots and Foresters for raiding Teviotdale. Also in 1532 he is probably the Sir Walter who, along with Robert, made a public complaint in Selkirk about John Hepburn ‘pretended rector of Hawyk’ who had claimed teinds from them and then acted to have them excommunicated. In 1532 the Earl of Northumberland burned Branhelm Tower and he made a retaliatory raid into England, laying waste Northumberland as far as the River Beamish, with a force of 3,000 men. In 1533 he complained in Selkirk that a precept from Alexander ‘Carmag’, to remove him from certain lands ‘had na officiar nemmit … was of na strencht norcht valour’. In 1534 the King discharged him of the bond he had made for the good behaviour of Adam and Gavin Turnbull. His charter for the lands of Westhouses and Easter Mains of Hassendean was revoked by the King in 1535, as well as his charter of the superiority of the lands of Harden. This was for supposedly helping Lord Dacre burn Denholm and Cavers in 1535, for which he was briefly imprisoned; his estates were only restored in 1542/3 (as ratified by Queen Mary in 1545). In 1538 he was accused of ‘intromitting’ over lands in Jedforest that had previously belonged to Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus. In 1539 he issued an instruction that Douglas of Cavers should not deal with certain (unspecified) lands. Also in 1539 he had a bond (along with his son David and Robert of Allanhaugh) with the Depute Sheriff of Selkirk regarding the illegitimacy of Thomas, son of Adam. In the Exchequer Rolls of 1540 there are records of payments made to the ‘King’s shepherds’ in his lands of parts of Ringwoodfield, Broadlee, Philhope, Bellendean, Buccleuch and Eskdalemoor; this was presumably since he had temporarily forfeited these lands to the Crown. In 1540 the was in ward when the King gave him permission to pursue legal actions, particularly against Janet, daughter of Walter of Howpsley. Around 1540 he (along with Robert of Wamphray) was released on condition that he help keep peace on the Border, with 2 of their friends to remain in ward as pledges; he also agreed to take on the rule of Eskdale, Ewesdale and Wauchopedale if Lord Maxwell did not take it, and also to assist Lord Bothwell at Hermitage. In 1540/1 several other noblemen served as caution for him when he was prisoner in Edinburgh Castle. Then in 1541 he appeared in Elgin as instructed by the King and was ordered to stay north of the Spey and later to remain within Dumbarton. Also in that year he raised an action against Scott of Allanhaugh (who must have been a close relative) for attacking his wife with a Jedburgh staff. Furthermore he was accused of being responsible for the death of Englishman Jenkin Pott, along with Dand Ker. He could be the Walter who was ‘provost for the time’ in 1541/2 in Selkirk. In 1542 he was also accused of stealing the King’s own sheep from the lands of Melrose Abbey; presumably such activity led to his later nickname ‘Wicked Wat’. Also in 1542 there was a letter summoning him to appear before the King. Another letter of 1542/3 certifies that his livestock and goods, which had been held by the Captain of Crawford are to be returned to him. Also in 1542/3 a letter from Mary, Queen of Scots, entitles him to speak and deal with Englishmen; this is confirmed in 1547, with permission for him to ‘intercommune with the Protector, army, and council of England’. In 1543 he was made hereditary Keeper of Newark Castle (through the patronage of Cardinal Beaton, who was related to his 3rd wife). In 1543 he signed the ‘Secret Bond’ with Cardinal Beaton, resisting English plans for the infant Queen Mary (to marry Prince Edward of England). Also in 1543 he was chosen as Provost of Selkirk. He led large Scots contingents at Ancrum Moor in 1544 and Pinkie in 1547. It is said that it was his suggestion that the Scots fight on foot at Ancrum Moor, this leading the English to imagine they were abandoning the battle and thus to mount a disastrous attack. However, he was also imprisoned twice in Edinburgh for opposing Margaret. In 1544 the Abbot of Newbattle gave 100 merks for 19 years to him and his son William for the ‘grete plesouris and steid done and to be done’ for defending the abbey’s lands and steadings from ‘thieves and broken men’. Also in 1544 he made an arrangement with Marion Pringle, widow of Andrew Ker of Primside over rentals on her lands of Broadmeadows. In 1544 he was granted lands in Ettrick Forest (including ‘Gawlayschellis’, and in 1546/7 was granted the tower at Hassendean (and other lands) by Melrose Abbey. In 1545 a Parliamentary decree put him at the head of 125 of the 500 horsemen who were mustered in Teviotdale. Also in 1545 he was among lairds in Teviotdale who signed a bond to settle feuds. In 1547 he aroused the enmity of the Kers of Cessford, who instigated Lord Grey to lead a raiding party, which burned and pillaged Hawick, Selkirk and his lands in the valleys of the Ale, Yarrow, Ettrick, Teviot, Slitrig and Borthwick, as well as killing his mother in Catslack Tower. In 1547/8 he was involved in a bond of loyalty to the Crown along with the Kers. In 1548/9 he was granted the lands of Easter Craik, which had been forfeited by John Cockburn of Ormiston; this was for service defending the kingdom against the English and ‘for the great losses and burning of his lands’. In 1548 he had a letter from Mary of Guise (the Queen Dowager) supporting him in all endeavours, in return for his ‘band of manrent’. Also in 1548 he received ward of the lands belonging to Turnbull of Minto, until the heir was of lawful age. In 1549 he was (re)appointed Provost of Selkirk. In 1549 he petitioned the Lords of Council for the right to post summonses at the market crosses of Jedburgh, Selkirk, Peebles, Haddington, Hawick and Melrose for Walter Ker of Cessford, John Kerr of Ferniehirst and others who had helped the English in the spoliation of the Borders, and also of attacking his lands at Newark, within Ettrick Forest and in the Borthwick valley. He was made Warden of (half of) the Middle Marches in 1550 (between Minto Craig and Craik

Cross) and also Warden and Justiciar of Liddesdale in 1550/1, with permission to hold courts and in pursuing fugitives ‘burn their dwellings, and put their families to fire and sword’. In 1550 John, Archbishop of St. Andrews had a bond of maintenance with him, in response to his bond of manrent. In 1551 there were letters from the Queen, to be proclaimed at market crosses, in support of his work as Warden, and an Act of the Privy Council brought by him for the same purpose, laying down rules that were expected also to be imposed by the English Wardens. Also in 1551 he signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’, his name appearing first. In 1551/2 there is a ‘letter of inhibition’ by him against Walter Ker of Cessford and others to prevent them disposing of property to avoid paying his claimed damages. In the middle of 1552 he had a letter excusing him of attendance at inquests etc., on account of his duties as Warden and since he was ‘now past the dait of lx zeris’. He was slain on Edinburgh High Street by Ker supporters and is buried at St. Mary’s in Hawick. The gravestone of his natural son, Sir Walter of Goldielands, eulogises thus: ‘the valiant Laird of Bvcklevch yat vas slane crevelie be ye Kerris in Edinburgh vithin ye nicht being vnaccvmpaneit vith his friendis or servandis onlie except tva of his dependeris attending on him not respecting nor svspecting thair intentivne: This happinit in September the 53 zeir of his age ye zeir of God 155(2)’. He married 3 times and had several children, including: Sir David, who died unmarried; Sir William of Kirkurd, who died just a few months before him, but whose son Walter succeeded; Walter; David of Stobicote; John; Grizel, who married William, 7th Lord Borthwick, and later John Cairncross of Colmslie; Dorothy; Janet, who married John Cranston of Cranston, and later Robert Scott of Haining; Margaret, who probably married Robert Scott of Thirlestane; and Christian. One of his illegitimate sons was Sir Walter of Goldielands. Another daughter may have been Jean, who married Robert Elliot of Redheugh and later Gavin Elliott of Stobs. In 1519/20 he entered into a marriage contract to marry his daughter Janet, (or failing her, another daughter, Christian, or any other woman he named!) to John, son of James Gledstains of Cocklaw; however, it is unclear who married Gledstains in the end. The contract also stated that if Cocklaw was inherited in the female line, then the heir should marry his son John. In 1551 he was appointed ‘tutor-dative’ to his nephew and heir Walter, son of David. But he was succeeded by his grandson, Sir Walter (so there is some confusion here). His first wife was Elizabeth, daughter of Bartholomew Carmichael of that Ilk; she died before 1530, after giving him his eldest 2 sons. In 1530/1 he secondly married Janet, daughter of Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst, sister of one of his bitter enemies, and widow of George Turnbull of Bedrule. This marriage ended soon after in divorce, with no children. In 1546, as part of the marriage contract she was required to come to Lilliesleaf Kirk to received a sum of money. His third wife was Janet, daughter of John Betoun (or Beaton) of Creich; she was the model for the ‘Ladye’ of the ‘Lay of the Last Minstrel’ and survived her husband by 16 years. Her sister also married Sir Walter’s son Sir William (‘Whitecloak’) – ‘Bards long shall tell How Lord Walter fell! When startled burghers fled, afar, The furies of the Border war, When the streets of high Dunedin Saw lances gleam, and falchions reddan And heard the slogan’s deadly yell – Then the chief of Branksome fell’ [SWS]. Walter (16th C.) recorded in a transaction in Selkirk in 1541/2 as the ‘well known man Walter Scot provost of Selkirk’. He is probably the same as one of the other local Walters. Walter (16th C.) listed as being ‘in the Hanyn’ in the 1526 pardon that a large number of Borderers had for attacking the Earl of Arran. He is there listed between William and George, tenants of Phaup, who may have been related. He was ‘in Haining’ when he witnessed documents in Selkirk in 1528 and 1529/30. He is also listed as ‘in Haining’ when part of an inquest in Jedburgh in 1533. He was probably the younger son of John of Haining, who died at Flodden, and who acted as ‘tutor’ to his nephew Thomas in the 1530s. In 1531 he was ‘tutor of Haining’ when his cousin John of Myres gave him his lands in Lilliesleaf. This was further confirmed in 1531/2, with Robert Turnbull (also tutor of Howden) as one of the witnesses. In 1531/2 he was part of an inquest to rule on a land arrangement in Selkirk. In 1532 he witnessed a document for Andrew Brydon, probably relating to lands owned by Sir Walter of Brauxholme. He was ‘tutor of Haynyng’ in 1534 when his lands were described as lying to the east of Howden. Also in 1534 he promised to bind himself to Thomas Graham and John Brown. In 1535 he witnessed a couple of documents in Selkirk. When Thomas succeeded to the Haining in 1538, he requested payment of a fee as tutor. He witnessed a document in Selkirk in 1539 and was also on the inquest panel for Alexander Lauder. succeeding to Todrig. Perhaps the same Walter in Haining occupied the Crown lands of Haining and Hyndloipe in 1541. In 1542 he (along with Walter in Headshaw) is mentioned giving advice to Robert regarding leasing part of Hartwoodburn. Walter of Robertson (16th C.) son of John of Robertson, who was mentioned several times in the 1520s. He is recorded in 1535 in a charter executed at Selkirk in which he sold Robertson and Howcleuch to his ‘brother-german’ Stephen ‘in Vallis’ (probably ‘Walls’ in Dryfesdale, north of Lockerbie) and Stephen’s son John. Also in 1535 in Selkirk he asked for clemency from Robert Hunter for his part in the killing of his brother John Hunter; the circumstances of this killing are not given. In 1536 he was ‘son and heir of the deceased John Scot of Robertoure’ when he received money from Michael Scott of Aikwood for the lands of ‘Hirdmenstoun’ (presumably Hermiston in Lilliesleaf Parish). He was not able to write and so signed ‘with my own hand at the pen’. He probably had no children of his own. Walter (16th C.) 2nd son of George of Borthaugh, by his 2nd wife, and younger brother of John (who had a different mother). There was a dispute in 1528 over the succession to the estates of Borthaugh, Commonside, Dryden and ‘the Wallis in Drynisdale’ (probably the place now called ‘St. Michael’s Walls’, in Dryfesdale near Lockerbie), because his father swore on his deathbed that he never had dispensation to marry his 1st wife, who was his cousin. The panel ruled in favour of his brother John, but gave him the ‘40s land of the Quhomnis, and 40s land of Woltoun Greyne’, along with a 10-shilling land in ‘sum uthir peciable and proffatable place’. These were probably ‘Whames’ and somewhere around ‘Wiltonburn’ perhaps. Walter (16th C.) son of John, Burgess of Selirk. In 1532/3 he was given sasine of half of his father’s land, which was one quarter of East Haining, with his mother Margaret Scott to be reserved a redemption. He may be the same Walter who held lands in East Haining in 1543. Walter (16th C.) baker in Edinburgh. In 1541 he was tenant in ‘Kirksteid of Farmynhope’ in the Yarrow valley. This was adjacent to Dryhope. He was probably related to other local Scotts. Walter ‘Wat’ of Synton and Stiches (d.c.1561) eldest son of Robert of Stiches and Synton. His brothers were William and probably David. He was known as ‘Watty Fire-the-Braes’. He is referred to as the 9th Laird of Synton, but there appears to be much confusion with his grandfather, Walter. There is also confusion over precisely who was the first Scott of Harden, but it may have been this Walter (or his father Robert, or brother William). He is probably the ‘Walter Scott de Streyschaw’ whose brother William was a witness to the 1507/8 document relating to the tower in Hawick ‘between the bridges’ for the Scotts of Whitchesters. He may be the Walter of Synton who was on the panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting the lands of Alemoor in 1509. He is probably the Walter, son of the deceased Robert, who is recorded owning a 5 merk land in Synton in 1510 (in an indenture for neighbouring lands between the Erskines and Kerrs). He transferred the lands of Harden to his brother William, according to a sasine of 1512, as confirmed in a charter of 1535 (except apparently for one acre of land at the eastern side). In 1517 he was on the panel of ‘return’ for Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. In 1519/20 he was listed as someone who could give permission to change the details of a marriage contract between the Scotts of Buccleuch and the Gledstains. He was probably the Walter of Synton who appeared before the Lords at Edinburgh in 1524/5 to swear an oath to keep the peace in support of the Earl of Angus, who was Warden, and the Walter ‘of Syntoun’ who was listed on the pardon of 1526 for a large number of Borderers who had attacked the Earl of Arran. Additionally he was named in the letter of treason, nominally written by King James V, for his role in the Skirmish at Melrose, led by Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. However, in 1526/7 he was among the local lairds given remission for mustering their supporters at Melrose (i.e. Skirmish Field) and Linlithgow. And there was a document of 1526/7 directing Archibald, Earl of Angus and others not to harm him, as well as Walter Scott of Branxholme, John Cranston of that Ilk and their followers. Also in 1527 he witnessed the agreement ending the feud between Sir Walter of Branxholme and James Murray of Falahill. He was part of the arbitration panel to decide on the dispute succession of the lands of Borthaugh in 1528. He was also probably the ‘Walter Scot in Syntone’ recorded in a discharge of ‘non-entry’ in 1528/9 between the Earl of Bothwell and several local Scotts; there he was holder of the lands of Boonraw and Outersiderig, as well as Alemoor. He was mentioned in the indenture of 1529 to attempt to end the feud between the Scotts and the Kerrs, and also mentioned in 1535 in the valuation for lands of the Archbishop of St. Andrews. In 1529/30 he witnessed a pledge relating to crimes done against George of Linton by Robert Elliot ‘alias Flaskvod’ and in 1530 witnessed a document for Robert Turnbull of Philiphaugh, in which Philip acted as an official. In 1531 he, along with his brother-in-law Adam and Walter Veitch were involved in a dispute over the succession to Synton with John and William Veitch. In 1531/2 he was part of an inquest to rule on a land arrangement in Selkirk. In 1532 he acted as an arbitrator for Isabel Murray in a dispute with her son Walter in Headshaw. In 1532/3 he was witness to a request for an inquest into succession for the deceased John of Roberton. In 1534 he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk for John Waugh of Hep. He may be the Walter ‘in Sintoun’ who in 1537 was warned to remove himself and his servants from some lands belonging to Andrew Ker of Greenhead; his procurator was Thomas and another Walter was among the witnesses. He also witnessed the installation of Simon Scott as Rector of Rankilburn. He was witness to a charter of 1540 in which Simon Scott of Fenwick resigned lands of Nether Harden to William Scott of Harden. He may be the Walter ‘in Sintoun’ recorded in 1541 as tenant of half of the lands of Huntlee, as well as Whitehaugh Brae, Langhope and Dodbank (in Ettrick). In 1544 he witnessed a transaction for Sir Walter of Branzholme and Marion Pringle. In 1547/8 he was one of the supporters of Sir Walter of Branzholme when they had a bond, along with the Kerrs, who had sided with the English at Pinkie and burned Hawick, etc. In 1550 he was one of 10 Scotts who signed a bond with the Queen, to keep good order and deliver up criminals. Also in 1550 he was one of the 2 curators for James Crichton of Cranston Riddell (step-son of Sir Walter of Branzholme). In 1551 he was surety for Robert Ormiston of New Hall (later of Old Melrose) and Robert’s nephew James Ormiston of that Ilk. In 1553/4 he was listed (transcribed ‘of Lyntoun’) among Scotts and their supporters who a group of Kers promised not to harm. In 1561 he was (along with Thomas of Haining and Nicholas Rutherford of Hundalee) cited by the Privy Council for non-appearance; his son Robert appeared in his place and promised to produce ‘Hob Flescheour’, who was accused of theft in Berwick. He married Marjorie, daughter of William Cockburn of Henderland, and secondly married a Riddell (perhaps Margaret, daughter of James of that Ilk). In some early histories it is claimed that he (or his son perhaps) married a Riddell who was his father’s second wife’s younger sister, It was probably his son John who was entered in ward in Borthwick Castle in 1530/1, along with William, son of Robert in Allanhaugh. His eldest son John (by his first marriage) probably predeceased him. Robert, a son to his 2nd wife, was probably the progenitor of the Scotts of Whitslade and Sturches, while a 3rd son, Thomas, was probably ancestor of the Whitehaughbrae branch. His son Walter (although this could be an error for his grandson) is recorded in 1561 when he entered Sandy Fletcher for crimes against an Englishman. Scott of Satchells also suggests other sons (William of Huntly and James of Satchells), but these seem unclear. His 8 daughters were said by Scott of Satchells to have married (in order): the Laird of Black Ormiston; Langlands of that Ilk (possibly James if this was the mid-1500s); the Laird of ‘Toftturnbull’ (although it is unclear where this is, perhaps a Turnbull of Tofts); the Laird of ‘Ailmour’ (presumably Almoor, although it is unclear who this could be); the Laird of Falmash’ (presumably an Elliot); the Laird of ‘Chapel-Middlemiss’ (possibly William Middlemas of Chapel in Lilliesleaf Parish); a daughter who is missed out; and the youngest who firstly married Philip Scott of Kirkhope (brother of Robert of Thirlestane), secondly Walter Scott of Woll (and not William, as stated in one source, although it is still unclear who this was) and thirdly Alexander Chisholme of Parkhill (who did in fact exist in the late 16th century). He may have been referred to as ‘Auld Synton’, and is supposed to have died at the age of 90. It is suggested that he gave up the lands of Synton (although not the designation) to his eldest son John, and then lived himself at Whit slade, which he inherited through his first wife. His 2nd wife died at Whitslade in 1585. Walter (16th C.) recorded being ‘in Assindane’ (i.e. Hassendean) in 1537. This was in a (poorly preserved) document in the Selkirk Protocol Books in which he was a witness for a transaction involving Katherine Scott and her sister Janet. Adam was another witness and may have been related. Perhaps the same Walter was recorded as ‘in Hassindene’ in 1564 when his son James was one of the men tried (along with Elliots of Horsleyhill and others) for the murder of David of Hassendean. Walter (16th C.) recorded being ‘in Fausyd’ (i.e. Falside) in 1537, in a document also mentioning Alan Pringle, Margaret Pringle and messenger John Cob. Walter of Sturches (16th C.) recorded as ‘Walter Scot of Styrrschaw’ in 1528/9 when he was a witness to a discharge of Patrick, Earl of Bothwell, related to several local Scotts. Walter of Synton is mentioned there, showing that they were not the same man (which is confusing). Walter (15th/16th C.) successor to Philip of Whitehaugh (and Heap). He succeeded to Wester Heap in 1532. He married Janet, daughter of Walter Scott of Headshaw. His sons were: William, who died unmarried; and Walter, who sold the estate to his uncle Robert of Headshaw. Walter (d.bef. 1535) owner of 3 husbandlands in Denholm. His widow Janet Scott had sasine of these lands in 1535, at that time occupied by William Davidson, Archibald Turnbull and James Hobkirk. The ‘bailies in that part’ were William Cranston and James ‘Spuin’. Walter ‘Wat’ (d.bef. 1550) recorded as being called ‘of tevidiaile’ in 1550 when his son took sasine for the lands of Colifort in the Slitrig valley. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts. Walter (16th C.) tenant of Todshawhaugh, recorded in 1549 when tenants and servants of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme complained about their farms being burned by a group of Englishmen and Kers in the previous year. He was probably related to William ‘callit Wille of Todschawauch’ who was a resident of Whames at the same time. He was ‘in Todschawahaucht’ when his son Adam witnessed a marriage agreement in Lilliesleaf in 1563. Walter (16th C.) listed among people who were owed money by William Scott, younger of Branxholme, when he died in 1552. He is listed as ‘Waltero Scot in Hawick’. He may be related to some of the near contemporary men who were ‘in Hawick’. Walter of Dryhope (16th C.) recorded in 1573 when, along with Sir Walter of Birkenside (and Howpsaely), they were to enter into ward in Edinburgh a man from Laidhope. Perhaps the same Walter of Dryhope was in 1599 list among other Scotts who Sir Walter of Branxholme declared were ‘his men’ and therefore accepted responsibility for making them answer to justice. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts, but may be the same as a contemporary Walter. Sir Walter ‘Wat’ of Goldielands (1531/2–1596) natural son of ‘Wicked Wat’, to an unknown mother. It is said that his father built the tower at Goldielands for him, but if so this must have been shortly before his murder in 1552. He led the Scotts during the minority of the heir to Buccleuch (possibly for an extended period, since there was no heir of age for more than 30 of the subsequent years). He must thus have been powerful and important locally, so it is odd that so little is known about him. He is probably the ‘Walter Scot some naturale of umquhile Walter Scot of Broxholme Knycht’ who is listed among Scotts who appeared before the Privy Council in 1562 to promise to end their feud with the Kers. He appeared personally as leader of the Scotts when they made a bond to keep the peace with the Kers of Cessford and others in 1564. He and James Gledstains of Cocklaw presented a number of Hawick residents at a court case in 1574, possibly related to a raid. Also in that year he was one of the witnesses to the last testament of Sir Walter of Branzholme (being transcribed as ‘of Gorlandis’ and ‘Gordelandis’). Additionally in 1574 he was one of the noblemen appointed to resolve the dispute between the Johnstones and Maxwells. He was probably the ‘Laird’s Wat’, who was present at the Raid of the Redeswire in 1575. Also in 1575 he had an assurance with Lord Borthwick. In 1577 he was referred to as the effective leader of the Scotts in a letter from Walter Ker of Cessford to the Regent Morton. In 1576 he was cautioner for several Borderers accused of rieving and in 1578/9 he was among 22 Border Lairds who did not appear before the Privy Council when summoned (he was surety for several men). He was then found liable for the fines, which, if he failed to pay, would be taken from his goods or lands. In 1579 he was Bailie Depute of the Regality of Melrose Having been appointed by James Douglas, Earl of Morton, who was tutor to the young Sir Walter of Branxholme and Buccleuch) when he gave possession of the lands of ‘Elestoun’ (or ‘Illistoun’) to Robert of Haining; in 1580 he was in dispute with this same Robert, who claimed that, as Provost of Selkirk, he had appointed Robert as Depute Provost. In 1579/80 he was a witness in Kirkhouses for a case between Dalgleishes and Scotts. In 1580, the Earl of Morton (Walter of Branxholme’s legal guardian) made a promise on his behalf for the behaviour of ‘Branxholme’s men dwelling in Teviotdaill’. In 1580 he was the Bailie of Buccleuch who raised a party to follow those who had raided the Gladstains’ farm at Meikle Whitlaw; he was wounded and captured along with about 40 others, when they were set upon by a large group of Armstrongs and Elliots on their return through Liddesdale. He had to arrange to pay Lancie Armstrong, Laird of Whitaugh, for their release. But he, James Gledstains of Cocklaw and Robert Elliot of Redheugh complained to the Privy Council, and the attackers were all denounced as rebels. Also in 1580 he is recorded serving as Provost of Selkirk (presumably in place of the young Sir Walter of Buccleuch) when Robert of Haining complained that he had reneged on appointing him as Depute Provost; in 1581 he was recorded as Provost when a man was imprisoned in Selkirk Tolbooth. In 1580/1 he was referred to as ‘baillie, and appointit to answer for the landis and tennentis of the Lard of Buccleuch’. In 1580/1 he witnessed an agreement to settle a dispute between George of Synton and Walter of Stirches regarding the lands of Synton Mill. In 1581 he witnessed an agreement for a dispute between Adam of Bonnington and Robert of Haining and another agreement between Margaret, widow of William of Burnfoot and her son William. Also in 1581 he was among a list of Border Lairds who denounced their bonds with Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus. In 1581 he promised to the King to answer for the behaviour of the men dwelling on Walter Scott of Buccleuch’s lands and in particular was also directed in 1581 to find caution for Walter of Headshaw and associates, who had failed to appear. However, that same year he was among a large group denounced as rebels for failing to present men to answer their rieving crimes. He was entered into ward in Edinburgh Castle in 1581, with his cautioners being Robert and Mungo, Burgesses of Edinburgh, along with James Gledstains of Cocklaw, the amount being £2000. Later Paul Doig of Coldoch was his cautioner in case he should ‘brek the assurance’ for crimes committed by the Scotts on Dand Elliot of Braidlie by Robert of Headshaw and others. Additionally in 1581 he was allied with James Gledstains of Cocklaw and Robert Elliot of Redheugh when they had a set of complaints made against them to the Privy Council by Martin of Braidlie, Simon Armstrong of Mangerton and Lance Armstrong of Whithaugh; he was clearly acting as chief of the Scotts at that time. He was denounced as a rebel in 1583 for non-appearance, when he was recorded as ‘chamberlain of Atrik Forrest’. He was ‘Wat Scot of Goldelandis’ among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. About the same time he led the signatories on a bond of support for the Warden of the Middle Marches, Sir Thomas Ferniehirst. He witnessed the 1586 marriage contract between Margaret Ker and Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. Also in 1586 he was listed among leaders in upper Teviotdale. He was appointed as a Parliamentary Commissioner for Roxburghshire in about 1588. He had a ‘Band of Association’ in 1589 with about 50 men of his clan; this proscribed any Scotts from taking land from each other, transgressions going before a panel of 5 of their number, a similar rule even applying of he himself encroached upon any of his kinsmen’s possessions. In 1589 he was on a list of Border Lairds who failed to appear before the Privy Council to give ‘thair gude advise anent the gude reule and quietnes of the Bordouris’ and were denounced as rebels. In about 1590 he was listed among a large number of landed men in the Borders and in 1590 he was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. In 1590 his cautioner was Sir John Edmonson of that Ilk and he himself acted as cautioner for Robert of Burnfoot, Walter of Howpasley and James Gledstains of that Ilk. In 1591/2 his sons Walter, David and William were listed among 200 Scotts and others accused of stealing 4000 Scotts and others accused of stealing 4000 sheep, 200 cows and 40 horses from the Tweedy’s lands of Drumelzier and Dreva; it was later declared that the men were not tenants of Walter of Buccleuch, but chiefly dependent on him, in the absence of the Laird of Buccleuch, and since he had already appeared before the Privy Council, the men were ordered to pay the Tweedy’s for what had been taken. Also in 1591/2 he acted as surety for William Elliot of Hartgarth. In 1592 he was instructed (along with Gideon Murray) to demolish Harden and Dryhope, because of Walter of Harden’s involvement in the Falkland Raid. In 1594 he is described as ‘cosin and deputie’ to Sir Walter of Branxholme in an indenture that he had with his English counterpart, servant of Lord Scrope. His son was also Walter and was probably present at the rescue of Kinmont Willie; however, some have suggested that this was him, but being about the age of 64 at the time it seems improbable. He died later in the same year that the rescue of Kinmont Willie took place. He was buried in the vaults at St. Mary’s, and his tombstone was removed in 1863 for preservation in the Museum; his tombstone is headed ‘Valter Scot his Genealogie’ and he is recorded as ‘Valter Scot of Govdilandis’, son of ‘Sir Valter Scot the valiant Laird of Bvcklevch yat vas slane crevelie be ye Kerris in Edinburgh’. A second stone, cut in high relief records ‘HIS QVALITIES’, namely ‘Heir lyis bvreit visdome & virthines Heir lyis bvreit trevth & honestie Heir lyis bvreit fridome & gentres Heir lyis bvreit manheid & cheritie Heir lyis bvreit lairgenes & lavtie Heir lyis bvreit hap & experience Heir lyis bvreit pietie & diligence Glorie be to God for althingis’. Both stones were stencilled after discovery by Sir James Murray. Another stone bears his arms, with the Buccleuch arms crossed. by the bar of illegitimacy. The name of his wife is not known. He was succeeded by his son Walter and had other sons including David and William. He may also have had an illegitimate son, Charles of Crumhaugh, as well as a daughter who married Robert of Glack (but this may have been a later generation). A record of 1620 mentions Robert, ‘brother natural’ to Sir Walter of Goldielands (his son), showing that he had another son, Robert – ‘The laird Watt did weil indeed, His friends stude stoutly by himself...’ [CPM]. Walter (d.c.1553) son of David and nephew of Sir Walter of Buccleuch, to whom he was heir (although this seems confusing). His uncle was appointed as his tutor in 1551, but died the following year. Assuming there isn’t simply an error, he must have died about the same time, since his cousin, also Walter, son of Sir William of Kirkurd, succeeded to the Buccleuch titles. Walter (d.bef.1555) son of Michael of Aikwood. It is claimed in one genealogy that he was the eldest son, but his brother William was recorded as their father’s heir in 1541. In 1543 he was infested by his father in his half of Kershope (on Ettrick). He was recorded in 1555 when his brother Robert of Bowhill was served heir to his half steering called ‘Westsyd de Kershop’ in Ettrick. Walter (16th C.) son and heir of Robert in Howford. In 1539 there is a marriage contract between him and Elizabeth, daughter of Marion Dalgleish (who was niece of Adam Dalgleish of Deuchar). His own ‘gudschir’ (either grandfather or perhaps uncle) was recorded being George in Blindhaugh. It appears that Marion Dalgleish was his step-mother and hence the marriage contract was with his step-sister. In 1539 he was still not old enough to marry, and it is unclear if the marriage took place. Walter of Harden (d.c.1563) possibly son of William ‘Boltfoot’, 1st Laird of Harden. However, it is unclear if there really is an extra Walter between ‘Boltfoot’ and ‘Auld Wat o Harden’. If he existed, he only lived for a couple of years beyond his father. Satchells suggests that he married a Riddell, daughter of his step-mother. His sons were Walter, ‘Auld Wat o Harden’ and William ‘in the Mott’. Sir Walter (1548/9–74) 10th Laird of Buccleuch, succeeded his grandfather in 1553/4, his father Sir William of Kirkurd (‘Whitecloak’) having died first. His ‘retour’ of 1553/4 as heir to his deceased grandfather Sir Walter, mentions an impediment to his inheritance on account of the enmity of the Sheriffs of Roxburghshire and Peebleshire towards his kinsmen and friends. In 1554/5 it is recorded in a sasine that his tutor was Robert Scott of Allanhaugh. He is stated in one charter as achieving his majority in 1561. He signed a bond with the Kers in 1564/5, attempting to end the family feud (it contains the names of many of his supporters and retainers of the time, including Sir Walter of Goldielands, who appeared personally); it is promised the Scotts and Kers will ‘leif in perfit amité, lufe, and Cristiane nychtburheid’, and marriages are arranged between his sister Janet and Thomas, son of Sir Walter Ker of Cessford, as well as his father’s sister Janet with George, son of Andrew Kerr of Faldonside. However, another feud erupted with the Elliots in 1564, perhaps sparked by the murder of David of Hassindean. This led to raids into Elliot lands in Liddesdale and counter-raids on his lands in Teviotdale, including the burning of Hawick in 1565. In one such raid he and his men slew 7 Elliots and Croziers, while some of those from Liddesdale raided the Hawick area, killing one man and stealing cattle. In 1565/6 he was made Captain of Newark Castle. He was a devoted supporter of Mary Queen of Scots, raiding England with Kerr of Ferniehirst, expecting the Regent Moray to have been assassinated. In retaliation the Earl of Sussex and Lord Scrope blew up Branhholme and laid waste the lands around Hawick. In 1568/9 he signed another contract with the Kers relating to the murder of his grandfather; this time Sir Andrew Ker of Hirsel, James Kerr of Corbet, Walter Hogg and their kin agreed to come to the church of Melrose to apologise, and the grandson of Sir Andrew was to marry Elizabeth Murray, his sister. His armorial seal of 1568 is the first to show supporters, in this case 2 bucks. In 1569 he signed the bond for suppressing thieves on the Border and in that same year was served heir to his uncle David in Roxburghshire Sheriff Court. In early 1569 he apparently (according at a case before the Lords of Council 4 years later) despoiled some of what was left of Melrose Abbey, carrying away a great deal of the ‘stanis tymmer leid irne and glas of the said kirk’; he sold it to some burgesses of Selkirk, Dame Isobel Ker of Cessford and others, but claimed he was preserving the Abbey from the English army and promised to spend the same money to repair it. Also in 1569 he was obliged to enter someone in court in Dumfries. Additionally in 1569 he was found liable for the sureties for the Elliots of Falnash, Gorrenberry and Dodburn, who had not appeared, with his lands and goods to be held if he did not pay. He brought a ‘letter of inhibition’ against the teinds of the Kirks of Cavers.
and Hassendean in 1570, suggesting some local dispute. Also in 1570 he signed a bond on behalf of his kin, friends, etc., for keeping the peace on the Border. He had Braxholme Castle rebuilt in 1571. He was a principal leader in the 1571 raid on Stirling to seize the Regent Lennox, where he was captured and was for a while imprisoned in Castle Doune. In 1573 he was re-appointed as Captain, Constable and Keeper of Newark Castle and as Bailie and Chamberlain of the Lordship of Ettrick Forest. Also in 1573 he served as surety for some Borderers and signed the ‘Band of Roxburgh’. He was responsible for paying an English ‘bill’ of £3600 Scots after Ralph Ker broke ward in England. In 1574 he was witness to a discharge between Cranston of that Ilk and Douglas of Cavers relating to the lands of Denholm. At a very young age (in 1567/8) he was contracted to marry Margaret, daughter of David Douglas, 7th Earl of Angus. She continued the rebuilding of Braxholme after his death, later married Francis Stewart, Earl of Bothwell and died in 1640. His children included: Sir Walter, who became 1st Lord of Buccleuch; Margaret, who was executor of his will (and was said to have married Robert Scott of Thirlestane, but this would appear to be confusion with her great aunt); and Mary, who married William Elliot of Larriston. He was only 25 years old when he died. His ‘testament’ describes the numbers of sheep and cattle he owned on his various farms, as well as mentioning several Hawick residents, and is an invaluable record of details of local farming and business life 4½ centuries ago. Walter (16th C.) recorded as witness to an instrument of sasine in 1569 for the lands of Crook; he is ‘Walter Scot there’, meaning he resided near Crook. It is possible he is connected with the nearby contemporary Scotts in Orchard. Walter of Headshaw (d.bef. 1593) son of Philip. He is probably the Walter, son of Philip of Headshaw who is listed on the 1526 remission for Borders men for supporting the Homes in an attack on the Earl of Arran; he must have been quite young at the time. He is listed as being ‘in Edschaw’ in the Selkirk Protocol Books in 1532 when he declared that John Riddell of that Ilk and William Scott of Harden were his arbiters in his dispute with Elizabeth (probably an error for Isabel) Murray. He is also described as ‘in Eteschaw’ in 1533 when he was part of a panel at a Jedburgh inquest for a dispute over the lands of Longnewton. In 1535 he complained that his dispute with his stepmother Isabel Murray had not been resolved 3 years earlier; this makes it clear that he was son of Philip of Headshaw (and Philip’s first wife). In 1539 he was on the inquest panel for Alexander Lauder succeeding to Todrig. He is listed among the friends who would vouch for Alan Mithag in 1539/40. In 1541 he is recorded being ‘in Edschaw’ and occupying the lands of Hartwoodburn. He also in 1541 assigned his brother Robert one quarter of Hartwoodburn. His ‘brother german’ Robert is recorded in a Selkirk document in 1542. In 1542 he is mentioned giving advice to Robert (probably his brother) regarding leasing part of Hartwoodburn. In 1542/3 his ‘sergeant’ William Donaldson had 2 of his horses appraised in Selkirk. He witnessed a transactions for Thomas in Haining in 1543/4. He is ‘of Edschaw’ among a group of Scotts who signed a bond with the Queen in 1550 to keep order and hand over criminals. In 1553/4 he was listed among Scotts and their supporters who a group of Kers promised not to harm. He witnessed a transaction in Selkirk in 1561. He was listed among the men who appeared before the Privy Council in a promise to end the feud between the Kers and the Scotts in 1562. He is recorded as ‘of Edschaw’ in a panel of 1564 to hear the case involving Scotts and Elliotis accused of killing David Scott of Hassendean. Also in 1564 he is probably the ‘Guidman of Edschaw’ who was listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. In 1569 Robert of Thirlestane was caution for him. Also in 1569 he was on the panel of inquest for Grizel Borthwick inheriting the superiority of her father’s lands in Wilton. His son William was warded in 1571 and was also recorded swearing allegiance to the Crown and Regent in 1572/3, with James Langlands of that Ilk as surety. In 1573 he served as surety for several Borderers. In 1579 he witnessed a transaction involving Walter of Goldielands and Robert of Haining. Also in 1579 he was named as an executor for the children of the deceased Robert of Palace. In 1580 he signed a bond with William of Whitehaugh, assigning to him the east half of the lands of Whitehaugh, called ‘the Pleucht Tyth’, along with the lands of Deanheads, in the Barony of Wilton. Also in 1580 he witnessed an arrangement for certain payments to be made to the children of the deceased John of Blindhaugh. Additionally in 1580 his cautioners John Thomson and Richard Brown (both in Headshaw) made payment for him of £30 to Thomas Ker of Kippielaw for 10 bolls of oats. In 1580/1 he was a judge appointed on behalf of George of Synton in a dispute over ownership of Synton Mill with Walter of Stirches. Also in 1580/1 he sold a horse to Walter in Ashkirk, but the other Walter was unable to pay and so offered to enter him into a husbandland in Ashkirk. In 1581 he was accused of leading a group who attacked 2 sons of Martin Elliot of Braeidie as they rode past Headshaw, cutting off the hand of one, and seriously injuring the other. He was among a long list of Scotts summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1581, but failed to do so the first time, with Walter of Goldielands then ordered to find caution for him. Also in 1581 he and Dickson of Ormiston acted as cautioners for the Irving of Bonshaw (and could not write his name on the document); this was discharged in 1582. In 1583/4 he and his brother William were among some Borderers denounced for failing to appear before the Privy Council. His servants John Johnston and John Thomson are also listed in a citation in 1583/4. Also in 1583/4 he was on a list of Borderers ordered by the Privy Council to render their houses for the King’s use. In 1585 he witnessed a bond (signed at Selkirk and Hawick) settling a feud between the Scotts of Branxholme and the Scotts of Allanhaugh. In 1590 he was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. He could be the Walter ‘of Ordschaw’ who was denounced in 1598, along with John Turnbull in Minto, James Turnbull in Hassendean and James Langlands for not paying Selkirkshire taxes to the Lord of Newbattle. He is probably the Walter who married a daughter of Sir William ‘Whitecloak’ of Kirkurd. He had 2 sons: Robert, his heir; and another, possibly Walter, who was father of Robert of East Groundstone. Walter (16th C.) recorded as ‘in Bellhauch’ when he was one of 32 men to sign the 1569 bond for suppression of Border thieves. His name occurs between Gledstains of Cocklaw and Scott of Tushielaw, so he was probably local. Walter (16th C.) Hawick resident described as ‘gled Watti Scot’ in the will of Sir Walter of Bucchleuch in 1574. He was owed £18 by Sir Walter’s estate and listed along with many merchants and others. Walter of Hassendean (16th C.) listed in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. He probably served as factor or similar, along with several other men whose fees were exactly the same. He may be the same as the tenant in Hassendean recorded in 1564. He is listed as ‘alias Watti of Hassindane’ in 1580 when he witnessed an agreement involving George, son to Walter Chisholme of that Ilk. Walter of Synton (d.bef. 1589) son of John, he succeeded his grandfather Walter as Laird of Synton. He was recorded (along with his brothers Robert, William and James) as the ‘young Laird of Syntoune’ in 1557 when he was involved in an attack by the Scotts on the church of St. Mary of the Lowes. He could be the Walter, recorded as ‘sone to Wat Scot of Syntoun’ (even although he was grandson) in 1561. Either he or his grandfather was the Walter listed among the men who appeared before the Privy Council in a promise to end the feud between the Kers and the Scotts in 1562. In 1564 he was listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. There is some uncertainty in these generations. He married Christian Riddell of that Ilk, and died without an heir. However, it appears he was succeeded by his brother George (although Scott of Satchells suggests that George was his son, which seems unlikely). His heir George is recorded as ‘in Syntou’ in 1570. Walter, son of Walter of ‘Suyntoun’ was witness to a sasine in Melrose in 1574. He may be the Walter, brother of George of Syntoun who in 1580 had a lease of the lands of Wollhaugh from Isabella Turnbull widow of John of Blindhaugh. His grandson Walter was served heir to his lands of Whitslade in 1605. Sir Walter of Birkenside and Howpasley (d.c.1580) eldest son of Robert of Howpasley. He witnessed a charter in 1549 in which his father granted his lands of Appletreehall to the Turnbulls, also witnessed by his brother Robert. He is recorded as younger of Howpasley in 1562/3. In 1569 he was on the panel of inquest for Grizel Borthwick inheriting superiority of her father’s lands in Wilton. Also in 1569 he appeared in Hawick before the Warden and Sir Walter of Branxholme, serving as surety for 23 tenants in Outersiderig, that they would answer to the laws of the Lord Regent. In 1571/2 he signed the bond to act against Borders thieves. According to the register of the Privy Council he served as surety in 1571, 1573 and 1576 and was warded in 1571. In 1574 he was on the returns for Walter Scott of Branxholme as heir to his great-uncle David Scott and his great-grandfather Sir Walter Scott. Also in 1574 there was a ‘reversion’ with him for the mill of Easter Burnfoot, with William of Harden and James of Whitslade. His father appears to have died before 1567, but he did not succeeded to Howpasley until 1578/9 and also held the lands of Birkenside in Berwickshire. In 1580 he and William of Tushielaw appointed 2 other Scotts to decide on George of Synton’s claim on lands in ‘Ilistoun’. He was in turn succeeded by his son Walter in 1580, although Walter did not become infeft until 1588. Another son may have been on the raid to rescue Kimont Willie in 1596. Sir Walter ‘Watt’ of Tushielaw (d.c.1618) eldest son of William of Tushielaw. In 1563/4 he and his father were ordered to replace the sheep they had stolen from the lands of Bailielee, belonging to Dand Elliot. He signed the bond for suppressing the Border thieves in 1569 and was witness to the last testament of Sir Walter of Branxholme in 1574. In 1573 he is referred to as being ‘in Hartwoodmyris’ (and son of William of Tushielaw) when he was to present William Porteous ‘in Borthuikbra’ for trial in Edinburgh, as well as Littles from Midgehope; it is unclear if he was related to the later Scotts of Hartwoodmyres. In 1574 he was one of the noblemen appointed to resolve the dispute between the Johnstones and Maxwells. In 1578 he was ‘younger of Tushielaw’ when was pledge for ‘Archie Kene’ Elliot. In 1578/9 he was among 22 Border Lairds who did not appear before the Privy Council when summoned. However, he later swore to the Council that he had entered into ward ‘Archie Kene’ Elliot. Also in 1578/9 there was a complaint by Patrick Murray of Falahill, that he and his accomplices had illegally taken over the lands of ‘Skaddoneis’ (perhaps ‘Scaddow Rig’). Additionally, tenants in Gattonside complained that he and his supporters (including his brother James and his son Walter, as well as James, William and Dand in Selkirk) attacked the farm at Gattonside, breaking barns and stealing corn; failing to appear before the Privy Council, he was denounced as a rebel. He was still recorded as being ‘in Hartwoodmyres’ at that time. In 1579/80 he was accused of being involved in an ‘intrigue’ with Grizel Scott, wife of William, Lord Borthwick (and daughter of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme); this was also claimed to be ‘incest’, suggesting that he had married another daughter of Sir Walter. In 1581 he was still younger, ‘of Tushelaw’ among a large group denounced as rebels for failing to present men to answer their rieving crimes. Also in 1581 he witnessed a ‘letter of slains’ in Hawick whereby Robert and James Scott forgave the Scotts of Allanhaugh and Over Southfield for the murder of their brother George. Additionally in 1581 he was ‘in Hartwoodmyris’ when along with several other Scotts (from Gamescleuch, Gilmanscleuch, Chamberlain Newton, Edinburgh, North Bowhill, Dryhope, Catslack and Howpasley) he supported William of Tushielaw (his father) and Robert of Aikwood in representing Adam in Bonnington in a dispute with Robert of Haining; William in Hartwoodmyres is also listed. He was among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. In 1584 he was a cautioner for a number of men (from around Heriot). He is listed in 1586 among leaders in upper Teviotdale in a document by King James VI instructing his Lieutenant on the Border. He resigned his lands to Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1588 (presumably to grant a new charter). He is mentioned in 1589 when his servant Robert Elliot ‘in Borthuikbra’ refused to restore 2 mares and a horse that had been stolen. Also in 1589 he and his brother James signed a bond with other Scotts to settle differences amongst themselves. He is listed on the ‘Roll of the Clans’ in about 1590 and also in 1590 he was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. In 1591 William Stewart of Traquair acted as surety for him and he himself was surety for Philip of Dryhope. He gained Gamescleuch in 1591. In 1592 he had a charter, ratified by Parliament, for the lands of Tushielaw, including Coom Law and Gamilsheugh, making it clear that other claims on the lands were to be disallowed. He is listed in 1594 among those implicated in the slaughter of Lord Maxwell and his men at Dryfe Sands; his sons Robert, James and John are also listed. In 1599 he was surety for himself and his sons Robert, James and John to ‘observe the King’s peace’. He is probably the Scott of Tushielaw listed among leaders ordered in 1600 to appear before the Privy Council to give advice about peace on the Border. In 1601 he is ‘the Goodman of Tushellaw’ listed among men of an assize to decide cases brought by the March Wardens. He and his son Robert signed a bond among Border Lairds in 1602. In 1603 he witnessed a ‘bond of manrent’ between Francis Armstrong of Kimmont and Sir James Johnstone of that Ilk. In 1603 he complained about a gang of Armstrongs raided his farms of ‘Dudhop’, ‘Medop’ (probably Midgehope), ‘Woulschop’, Tushielaw and Kirkbank on several occasions in 1586, stealing cattle, sheep, horses and goods. In 1607 he was ‘gudman of Tushelaw’ when he was witness for a report of the bailie court of the Regality of Melrose; his son John was also witness. In 1607 he was also paid bolls of malt by the tenants of Lessuden. Additionally in 1607 he was the first named in a long list of men charged with trying to stop James Maxwell and Robert Douglas taking possession of the Debatable Lands. In 1609 there is a court case involving him and his eldest son Robert with Alexander, Earl of Home over an agreement involving the lands of Cacrabank in 1597; there it is clearly stated that his wife was Elizabeth Gledstains and also that neither father nor son could write. Also in 1609 he brought an action against Sir Robert of Thirlestane and his tenants for resetting Walter of Headshaw and others; this was related to the feud with the Scotts of Thirlestane, which had resulted in the death of Walter of Gamescleuch (brother of Sir Robert of Thirlestane) at the sword of his son John. In 1610 Robert of Headshaw, and Walter, fiar of Whitslade (for Sir Robert of Thirlestane) had a bond for not harming him or his sons Robert and James. Additionally Andrew Riddell of that Ilk and his son John had a similar bond. Also in 1610 there was a complaint against his servant Martin Johnstone, claiming that he and another man raided the farm of Nether ‘Liverhay’. In 1611 he complained that Francis Armstrong of Kinmont was occupying his lands of Mumbiehirst. In 1612 the Privy Council also asked him and Sir Robert of Thirlestane appear to resolve the contradictory claims of each family. He was one of the signers of the bond of 1612 to keep peace in the Borders, which his son Robert also signed. In 1614 his son John had remission from the King for the death of Walter of Gamescleuch, and had his ex-communication lifted in 1615. However, in 1616 he ran off with Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane’s daughter, Grizel, marrying her at Bellingham. The Presbytery records show that the couple were to appear to confess their sin, with the Laird of Thirlestane to be absent that day. It has been suggested that he was killed a few months later by a group of Scotts (including Simon of Bonnington), but this appears to be confusion with the murder of Walter, tenant in Essenside (a younger son of ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden). He is recorded as still alive in 1617 and is also mentioned in a charter of 1618 when his lawful son Robert received lands at ‘Wairdlawrig’ in Selkirkshire from John Lord Hay of Yester. He married Elizabeth, daughter of a Gledstains of Cocklaw. His son Robert was ‘of Tuscolaw’ in 1619, suggesting he was deceased by then. His son and heir William is recorded in a ‘letter of inhibition’ with Walter, Earl of Buccleuch in 1619 (but this may be an error). He is probably the Walter of Tushielaw to whom the reversion of half of Glenkerry and Midgehope were resigned by Gilbert Elliott of Stobs in 1620 (although he may have been deceased by then). It is suggested in some accounts that he was succeeded by another Walter, however he was most likely succeeded by his eldest son Robert (unless 2 generations of Walters are compounded). His other sons were: James of Boyken and Glenrathe; and John of Mackersway, who killed Walter of Gamescleuch. Both James and John took part in the rescue of Kimmont Willie. Walter (16th C.) recorded as ‘in Todrig’ when he witnessed a charter for lands in Rulewater in 1568. It is unclear how he might have been related to other local Scotts, unless he was Walter, son and heir of the Laird at that time, George of Todrig. Walter ‘Wat’ of Eldinghope (16th C.) recorded in the register of the Privy Council in 1576 when he relieved a surety. He appears as ‘Watt Scott of Eldinghope’. It seems likely that he is the same as one of the other contemporary Walters, probably related to the Scotts of Buccleuch (who held these lands). Walter of Ashkirk (16th C.) listed in 1579 among people who owed money to Isabel Donald, widow of Robert of Palace. He may be the son of Walter in Ashkirk and Margaret Falside recorded in 1539 when he and his mother are recorded acknowledging receipt of interest on his deceased father’s lands in Ashkirk and Falside from their subtenants. In 1580 he paid John in Kirkhouses redemption money for the lands of ‘Ediehauch’, ‘Ediebray’, 2 husbandlands and a croft, plus the lands of Salenside. He is probably the Walter in Ashkirk who in 1580/1 declared that he was unable to pay the £20 Scots for a horse from Walter of Headshaw and is he could not pay him soon, would enter him in a husbandland in Ashkirk, at that time occupied by Richard Brown. In 1580/1 he set to John in Aikwood the ‘knaifschip and bannock’ of Ashkirk Mill for 5 years; one of the witnesses was Walter Shortreed, recorded as his brother (perhaps his brother-in-law). In 1581 the husbandland he had wadset to John in Kirkhouses was resigned, and he instead assigned to John 2 pieces of land called Salenside Croft and ‘Skakriggis’. Also in 1581 he witnessed an agreement involving the lifierent of Blindhaugh and Castleside with the Scotts in Blindhaugh. In 1581/2 he acknowledged that he had received payment from James, son of John in Kirkhouses, giving him tack of half a husbandland (previously occupied by Adam Hislop) in Ashkirk. In 1593/4 he and Alexander of Clerkland were cautioners for John Veitch, heir apparent of Dawyck, not to harm the Tweedies. It is unclear how he is related to other Scotts of Ashkirk. Walter (16th C.) recorded in Palace in 1580 when he witnessed an agreement regarding payments to the children of John of Blindhaugh. In 1581 his wife Margaret Scott, widow of William of Burnfoot, resigned her livery of Shielswood and half of Burnfoot Mill to her son William. It is unclear whether he was related to the earlier Scotts of Palace. Walter ‘Wat’ (16th C.) recorded as resident of Over Southfield in 1581, along with ‘Syme Scot in Oversouthfield’, ‘Syme Scot thair’ and ‘Jok Scot, duelland in Hawik, callit Wattis Jok’. He was presumably related to the other men listed, all of whom were probably related to the Scotts of Allanhaugh, who were also named in the ‘letter of slains’ for the murder of George Scott in 1578. Walter (16th C.) Burgess of Hawick, recorded as ‘sonne to wbquhell Thomas Scot in Hawick, younger’ in 1585 when he was one of the witnesses to the bond in which Sir Walter of Branxholme and Robert of Allanhaugh resolved a family feud. It seems that his father was Thomas, and probably also his grandfather. Walter (16th C.) son of Adam of Bonnington. In 1580 he witnessed a transaction between Walter of Ashkirk and John in Kirkhouses. Walter of Howpasley (16th C.) probably son of Sir Walter of Birkenside and grandson of Robert of Howpasley. He succeeded his father in 1580, but was probably then a minor, since he did not become ‘infeft’ until 1588, when he also succeeded to the lands of Midshiels and Appletreehall (which had been ‘in the King’s hands’ for more than 7 years). He was probably the Laird of ‘Howpaslot’ listed among the Borderers summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. In instructions from the King to Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus (Lieutenant on the Border) in 1586, he is probably the Laird listed along with the Lairds of Buccleuch, Gledstains, Redheugh, Braidlie, Whithaugh and others as chiefs in upper Teviotdale; however, he may have still been a minor at that time. In 1590 his cautioner was Walter of Goldielands. He was probably Laird of ‘Howpasilott’ when the ‘Roll of the Clans’ was drawn up around 1590 and the ‘Goodman of Howpasilott’ listed among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. He may have had a brother who was at the raid to rescue Kimmont Willie in 1596. He may have been father of William and/or the husband of ‘Lady Howpasley’ who was involved in the slaughter of sheep in 1616. He is recorded in 1591 as the possessor of the lands of ‘Gallowlaw’ in the Barony of Hassendean, charged by the Baron, James Cunningham, to produce charters for these lands. He was probably succeeded by William, who may have been the last of the direct line of Scotts of Howpasley. Walter (16th C.) son of Michael of Vogrie. In 1581 he had a marriage contract with Marion, daughter of William Pringle in ‘Cartho’. He was to receive certain lands in Stow from Thomas Pringle in Stow (grandfather of his wife-to-be). John in Kirkhouses was a witness, and possibly related. Walter of Stirches (16th C.) listed among landed men of the Borders in about 1590. Walter of Chamberlain Newton, Walter of Harden and the Laird of Synton are all listed separately, showing that he was distinct from all of them; however, it is unclear what his relationship was with other nearly contemporary Lairds. He is probably also the Walter of Styrkshawis who along with William of Hartwoodmyres was under caution in 1592, with Gideon Murray as surety. It is possible he was Walter, younger of Synton (son of George). He may also be the Walter ‘of Styrkschawis’ who witnessed a transaction involving Walter of Goldielands and Robert of Haining in 1579 (also witnessed by Walter of Harden and Walter of Headshaw). He may also be the Walter of ‘Styrk Schawis’ whose brother Robert witnessed the installation of the new Parson and Vicar of Ashkirk in 1579/80. In 1580 he witnessed an agreement between William Scott of Whitehaugh and Walter Scott of Headshaw. He may be the Walter ‘in Styrkschawis’ who in 1580 received redemption money from his ‘gude brother’ David Fairlie for a tenement in Selkirk. In 1580/1 he had a dispute with George of Synton over the lands of Synton Mill; the agreement to appoint arbitrators was made at Groundstone, with his chosen judges being William of Whitehaugh and Walter of Todrig. In 1581 he witnessed a marriage contract between William in Burnfoot and Janet, daughter of William in Huntly, and also a separate arrangement between the pair. Also in 1581 he witnessed an agreement involving the livery of Blindhaugh and Castleside with the Scotts in Blindhaugh. In 1599 he was among a list of Scotts and others charged to find caution to ‘observe the King’s peace’. He is probably the Walter of ‘Stirkschawes’ (transcribed in one version as ‘Sterchehewis’) who signed the ‘General Band’ among Border Lairds in 1602. Walter of Catslack (16th C.) signatory of the Scott clan bond in 1589. It is unclear how he may have been related to the later Scotts of Catslack, but perhaps he was father of William. In 1592 his cautioner was Archibald Douglas of ‘Stannypeth’ that he would not reset any of those who had supported the Earl of Bothwell. In 1599 he was among a list of Scotts who Sir Walter of Branxholme declared were ‘his men’ and therefore accepted responsibility for making them answer to justice; his brother Adam was also listed. It is possible he is the same man as the later Walter of Catslack. Walter of Synton (d.1608) eldest son of George of Synton. He is probably the Laird of Synton who in 1599 was among a list of Scotts and others charged to find caution to ‘observe the King’s peace’. His brother George became a saddler’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1610. His brother John was involved in a saisine with Robert of Satchells in 1609. In 1603 he was on the list of ‘pretended tenants’ ordered to leave their lands by James Cunningham, then Baron of Hassendean. In 1605 he redeemed 500 merks on these lands of Outersiderig with William Elliot of Falmash. He is ‘Waltir Scot called ‘Old Walter’ in Synetone’ in 1608 when he was listed as part of a group of Scotts and their followers who rescued 2 of their kin from imprisonment by the Bailies of Selkirk. In 1610 (apparently after his death) he was part of a petition, along with several local Langlands and Scotts, to have h mound lifted and penalties reduced; he is there referred to as ‘Old Wattie’. George Langlands of that Ilk acted as cautioner for him and several other Scotts in this dispute against the Scotts of Todshawhaugh and Ormiston. His son George was served heir to his lands of Outersiderig and Boonraw in 1610. He married Isobel, daughter of Douglas of Whittinghe (probably William, 3rd of Whittinghame, or perhaps Sir Archibald his son). Their children were: George, who succeeded; Anne, said to have married Capt. Gledstains of Whitlaw (possibly John); Capt. Archibald, who probably died unmarried; Elspeth; and Christian. His daughters are mentioned in his last testament. It may have been his widow who was summoned by the Presbytery in 1615 ‘for abusing the minister, Mr. Alex. Hog, publicly, by words and countenance, on Sabbath, betwixt the sermons, in the audience of the congregation’. She was probably also the ‘gudewife of Sintoun’ who received communion at both Hassendean and Lilliesleaf Kirks in 1615, rather than her own church at Ashkirk, resulting in rebuke for both ministers. It is unclear what the nature of this dispute was, but presumably a doctrinal difference with her minister (Alexander Hogg). Walter (16th/17th C.) son of William of Bowden, who rented Northhouse. He is recorded in 1582 as witness to a transaction involving the Scotts of Allanhaugh, taking place at Branxholme; other witnesses include William, son of George in Northhouse and John Gledstains of Winningtonhall. He may be the same as one of the other Walters. Walter of Deephope (16th/17th C.). Said to have been on the raid to rescue Kinmont Willie in 1596. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. Walter of Blindhaugh (16th C.) signatory of the Scott clan bond of 1589. He was probably related to the neighbouring Scotts, e.g. the Woll branch, who owned the lands of Blindhaugh later. He is probably the 2nd son of George of Blindhaugh and Margaret Turnbull who in 1544 was designated as the successor to his father’s lands of Broadlee, a part of Blindhaugh. Walter (d.bef. 1612) tenant in Stonedge. In 1612 his nephew William complained to the Privy Council about Andrew Newton in Jedburgh not paying him. Walter ‘Watt’ of Gamescleuch (d.1609) 2nd son of Sir Robert of Thirlestane. He may have been the brother of Robert of Thirlestane recorded in 1581 when he was witness to a saisine for the lands of Thirlestane and Hopehouse, involving the Cranstons of that Ilk. He was probably also the brother of Robert of Thirlestane included in a list of those involved in the 1593 slaughter of Lord Maxwell and his men at Dryfe Sands. He was probably present at the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. In 1599 he was probably the Walter, brother of Robert of Thirlestane listed among Scotts who Sir Walter of Branxholme declared were ‘his men’ and therefore accepted responsibility for making them answer to justice. In 1602 he was among the group of Scotts who attacked Adam Veitch’s lands at ‘Fechane’. He is probably the Walter of Thirlestane who in 1603 was among Scotts and others, subordinates of Sir Walter of Buccleuch, who ‘had been put to the horn’ for not paying feu mails for their lands to the Queen’s Chamberlain, with Robert of Haining not entering them in court. He may be the Walter ‘of Thirlestane’ who was in the gang of Scotts that forcibly released 2 of their kin from imprisonment by the Bailies of Selkirk in 1608. Also in 1608 he was among the relatives and friends of Sir Robert of Thirlestane who were bound not to harm Archibald ‘of Dephoip’. He was slain by John, son of Walter Scott of Tushielaw, an incident that may have been the inspiration for the ‘Dowie Dens of Yarrow’. They had a duel on a field to the west of Yarrow Kirk, known as ‘Deuchar-swyre’. It is said that he went there as a mediator in the arranged combat between his nephew Robert, and John, son of Walter of Tushielaw. There followed much legal process before the local Presbytery and the Privy Council. John Scott’s pardon by James VI is recorded in 1614. He married Marion (or Janet), daughter of Sir Patrick Porteous of Hawkshaw and had an only surviving son, Patrick of Tanlawhill and Thirlestane. Simon may have been another son and his daughters were: Marion, who married Rev. Robert Martin in 1617; and Margaret. Walter of Woll (d.c.1617) first noted in 1606, he is suggested (by Keith Scott) to have been descended from the Scotts of Haining. His brother John of Ashkirk was said to have been among those involved in the rescue of Kinmont Willie. He is recorded in 1608 when his brother John, and several others, attacked and maltreated some residents of Selkirk. He is there recorded as ‘Waltir Scot of Well’ and his half-brother John Turnbull (apparent of Harden) is also mentioned. In 1609 he was ‘in Woll’ when he had a charter for the lands of ‘Blindhauch , . . .’, Braidley, Castelsyde, Leiphill, Rynnes, Rycroft, Roundhauch, Sandiehauch and Langupmedow’ in the Barony of Ashkirk. He married twice. By his first wife he had: Robert, who succeeded; and Francis. He secondly married Catherine Ormiston, and their children were: George; and Katherine. In 1617 his eldest son Robert was appointed as tutor to his younger children George and Katherine (half-siblings of Robert), by which time he was deceased. Walter of Bowhill (16th/17th C.) son of Robert, he was recorded in 1592 and was also known as being ‘of North Bowhill’. Also in 1592 he was ‘Wattie Scott in Bolhill’ when he was signatory for a caution for the good behaviour of John in Foulshiels. He had brothers Robert (of the Southside of) Bowhill, William (who was at the rescue of Kinmont Willie) and James. In 1599 he was among a list of Scots who Sir Walter of Branxholme declared were ‘his men’ and therefore accepted responsibility for making them answer to justice; his brother William was also listed. He was succeeded by his eldest son Robert in 1609. Walter of Huntly (16th/17th C.) possibly son of Robert of Huntly, who was said to have been in the raid that rescued Kinmont Willie. He was part of a gang of Scots (from Bowhill, Thirlestane, Synton, etc.) who forcibly freed 2 of their kin from imprisonment in Selkirk in 1608. His brother William is also mentioned. He was also upon an inquest in 1612. However, in 1616 James of Huntly is recorded (perhaps his brother), suggesting he was deceased by then. He could be the Walter ‘elder of Huntlie’ listed in a court case before the Privy Council in 1627, when a band of Scotts were accused of harassing the tenant of Hartwoodburn. Walter of Headshaw (16th/17th C.) listed in 1599 among Scotts and others charged to find caution to ‘observe the King’s peace’. He was then ‘of Eldshaw’. He is transcribed being ‘of Edieslaw’ in a 1603 document when a large number of Scotts and some Turnbulls and Elliots were given a summons to remove themselves from land that was claimed by James Cunningham, Earl of Glencairn to be wrongfully possessed. He may have been the 2nd son of Walter of Headshaw and brother of Robert of Headshaw (if so he could have been father of Robert of Easter Groundishone). In 1609 Robert of Headshaw and a number of other men were bonded not to reset him and several others while they were ‘at the horn’ for not signing an assurance not to harm Walter of Tushielaw. And later the same men were fined for resetting him and the others. This was part of the feud between the Scotts of Thirlestane and Tushielaw. Walter of Whitehaugh (16th/17th C.) one of the ‘pretended tenants’ who James Cunningham, Earl of Glencarn (and Baron of Hassendean) tried to evict in 1603. He could be the ‘Wat Scot of Whithauch’ who signed the ‘General Band’ among Border Lairds in 1602. He is probably the younger son of Walter of Whitehaugh, who succeeded to the estate on the death of his unmarried older brother, William. In 1610 he was part of a petition, along with several local Langlands and Scotts, to have hornings lifted and penalties reduced; George Langlands of that Ilk had acted as cautioner for him and several other Scotts in this dispute against the Scotts of Todshawhaugh and Ormiston. He sold the estate to his maternal uncle Robert of Headshaw. However, he was probably still called ‘Walter Scott of Quhytehauch’ in 1627 when there was a complaint against him to the Privy Council, that he and a band of other Scotts (from Headshaw, Kirkhouses and Huntly) had forcibly removed the tenant from Hartwoodburn. He apparently claimed a right to these lands, and felt compelled to take matters into his own hands, taking the farmhouse ‘all in armes, with hagbuittis and pistollettis’, and threatening to debar anyone who tried to come there; it is unclear what happened as a result of the summons against him and his compatriots. Also in 1627 he gave caution to the Privy Council for John Geddes, Burgess of Dumfries.

It is also hard to understand how he might fit in with the genealogy given by Scott of Satchells. Walter 'Wat' (16th C.) recorded as tenant in Borthaugh in 1569. He signed the bond to keep the peace on the Border. Walter the Hawk of Whitslade (d.c.1610) son of Robert. He lived in the earlier part of his life at Stirches, like his father. He was probably the first to style himself 'of Whitslade'. His nickname was said to be 'on account of his sharpness and activity'. He had a charter in 1575, in which he was described as son and heir of Robert, who was 2nd son of Walter of Synton. He was listed among many Scotts and their allies in a 1581 summons to appear before the Privy Council regarding the feud with the Elliots and Armstrongs. In 1581 he was listed among the supporters of the Earl of Crawford who attacked Ruthven Castle; he was also listed in a complaint made by Margaret Erskine, Lady Ruthven against Crawford and his followers in 1583. He may have been the Walter of 'Whitslaid' who signed the Buccleuch Band in 1589. In 1590 he was 'of Quhistslaid or Stirkschawis' when listed among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. In 1591, along with Sir Walter of Buccleuch and Walter of Harden, he had a letter of pardon from the King for 'intercommuning with Francis' Earl of Bothwell. He was listed among 200 Scotts and associates who were accused of stealing livestock from Drumelzier and Dreva in 1591/2. It is said that his brother Robert went on the raid to rescue Kinmont Willie in 1596. In 1603 he (probably incorrectly transcribed as 'William') was one of the large list of men given a 'summons of removal' from their lands in Hasseundean by the Baron at that time, James Cunningham. He is recorded in a 'retour' of 1605, as heir to his grandfather Walter of Synton, in the lands of Whitslade. In 1608 Sir Robert of Thirlestane was caution for him and 2 of his sons, that they not harm Archibald of 'Deiphoip'. He married a daughter of Douglas of Cavers. His sons included: Sir Walter, who succeeded; Thomas of Todrig, who married Janet, daughter of Walter Scott of Harden, with pre-uptial contract in late 1613 (by which time he was deceased); probably Robert, who was on the Carlisle raid in 1596; probably George, recorded as brother of Walter in the 1620s when there were court proceedings with Robert, younger of Satchells; and James, who in 1620 married Agnes Scott, widow of Rev. Alexander Hogg and held lands at Eildon - 'Whitslade the Hawk, and Headshaw came And warriors more than I may name; From Yarrowcleugh to Hindhaugh-sweir, From Woodhouselie to Chesterglen, Troop’d man and horse, and bow and spear; Their gathering word was Bellenden [SWS]. Walter of Northhouse (16th/17th C.). Scott of Satchells gives him first on the list of 'Pensioners' of the house of Buccleuch. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Walters. He could be the Walter, brother of 'Will' of Northhouse who was involved in a raid on Stobs in 1608. Satchells says he was 'the first gentleman descended from the family', presumably meaning he was the first Scott of Northhouse. He could be the Walter ‘callit Nothis’ appointed in 1622 to assist Walter Scott of Buccleuch in administering justice in the Middle Shires. Walter of Chapelhill (16th/17th C.) listed by Scott of Satchells among the 24 ‘Pensioners’ of Buccleuch. He was said to be half-brother to the Laird of Chisholme; it is unclear who the Laird was at that time, but Walter Chisholme married Ann, daughter of William of Chapelhill in the latter part of the 16th century, so perhaps ‘half-brother’ means brother-in-law. He may be related to James in Chapelhill, who was listed among fugitives in 1618. Sir Walter of Goldielands (d.aft. 1627) son of the ‘Laird’s Wat’, he was probably the Walter of Goldielands who took part in the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596 (although some have suggested this was his elderly father). He was listed in 1591/2 as a son of Walter of Goldielands who was part of a group of 200 Scotts and others who stole 4000 sheep, 200 cows and 40 horses from the Tweedy’s lands of Drumelzier and Dreva. He is ‘younger of Goldielandis’ in 1593 when he witnessed a marriage contract between Gledstains of Cocklaw and Turbull of Wauchope. He is recorded as ‘Walter Scot sone to Wat of Gaudylandis’ in a 1594 list of those implicated in the slaughter of Lord Maxwell and his men at Dryfe Sands. In 1599 he may be the Laird of Goldielands listed among Scotts and others charged to find caution to ‘observe the King’s peace’. In 1600 2 lawyers complained that he had not paid the ‘feu maills’ on the lands of ‘Stow in Wedel’ (i.e. Stow of Wedale, the old name for Stow) that he occupied; in the following year they complained that Robert Turbull, Sheriff Clerk of Roxburghshire, hd not registered their complaint. He signed a bond among Border Lairds in 1602 for keeping the peace. He is probably the Walter of Goldielands who was among the 15 Border lairds who were removed from their homes in 1608 for being ‘ringleaders suspected wither of their bygone conversation or for their present disordered courses’; he and Robert Elliot of Redheugh were sent to Cupar in Fife. In 1610 he was listed among the supporters of the Scotts of Thirlestane in their feud with the Scotts of Tushielaw. In 1612 he signed a bond at Jedburgh for keeping peace on the Border, along with several other local men. Also in 1612 he was on the panel of ‘retour’ for Tweedie of Drumelzier. He is recorded as the ‘Guidman of Goudelands’ who was complained about to the Privy Council in 1617 by 2 Englishmen, who had apparently been imprisoned for 18 weeks without trial; later the Keeper of Edinburgh Tolbooth complained that he had failed to pay to keep the men in prison. Additionally in 1618 William Oliver ‘in Lanyburne’ (possibly Langburnshiel) complained that he had directed some men to unlawfully apprehend him; the Privy Council said that he and his accomplices should be denounced as rebels. These generations are quite uncertain (Keith Scott disagreeing with Tancred, for example), with some details confused, e.g. he did not marry Jean Riddell, since that marriage was with his son, who was also Walter. It has also been suggested that he died without issue and was succeeded by his cousin Walter, son of his uncle Charles; however, this seems like it refers to a later generation. He must be the Sir Walter of Goldielands referred to in a 1670 court case in which his son Walter demanded copies of earlier instruments of sasine relating to Goldielands (which existed in the former Hawick Town Clerk’s ‘protocol book’); in 1620 he was infefted by Walter, Earl of Buccleuch, in the lands of Goldielands and Westcoterig, and the same day granted Goldielands to his son Walter, retaining the ‘liferent’ for himself. His ‘brother natural’ Robert is also mentioned in 1620. He is probably the Sir Walter of Goldielands recorded in 1627 as owner of ‘the Ladyland’ near Hawick (since his son Walter was not referred to as ‘Sir’). His wife’s name is unknown, and there are also no records of other children. However, it is possible that his wife was the ‘Lady Gaudielands, Edgerstons Aunt’ who was recorded on a document of 1666 describing the division of the burial space in the choir of Jedburgh Abbey among various Rutherfords. Sir Walter ‘the Bold Buccleuch’ (1565/6–1611) 11th Laird and later 1st Lord of Buccleuch, only son of Sir Walter of Branxholme and Buccleuch. He succeeded his father in 1574, and although he was a minor, he had special dispensation from the Regent. There was a precept of sasine for him inheriting his father’s lands that were held by Melrose Abbey, including the Monk’s Tower in Hassendean, Ringwoodfield, Ettrick, Rodono, Eskdalemuir, Northhouse and Thirlestane, as well as the office of Bailie of Melrose. In 1574 he also was formally served as heir to the lands of his great-uncle David and his great-grandfather Sir Walter (these being legally necessary because of inheritance during the minority of previous generations). This included the Baronies of Branxholme, Eckford and Kirkurd, as well as Lanton, Whitchesters, Rankleburn, Lempitlaw, Elirig, Whithope, Dryden, Commonside, Girnwood, Borthaugh, Grahamslaw and lands within the Regality of Melrose. His ‘tutor’ was his great-uncle, James Douglas, Earl of Morton (who was asked to make Walter of Goldielands responsible for the behaviour of ‘Branxhelme’s men dwelling in Teviotdaill’ in 1581). He became one of the most powerful barons of his time, was noted for his bravery, and is often regarded as the last of the Border rievers. He was constantly involved in attempts by the crown to keep peace on the Border, and went in and out of favour, including brief exile in France. He is recorded (presumably his agents) bringing a ‘letter of inhibition’ against Cavers Kirk for non-payment of teinds in 1577 and in 1588 he was confirmed in the ‘tack’ of the teinds of Hassendean and Cavers Parishes. In 1582 he and his accomplices were accused by the men of Newcastleton of stealing 200 cows and 300 goats and sheep. In 1582/3 he received remission from King James VI for crimes for which he had been imprisoned in Blackness (but escaped). In 1585 he had a bond with Robert of Allanhaugh, resolving a feud, partly the result of him being involved (during his minority) in the death of David, son of Adam of Allanhaugh. Also in 1585 he raised a force of Scotts to join the Earls of Angus, Mar and Bothwell (his step-father) against the Earl of Arran and James VI at Stirling Castle. In 1586 he was involved in raids into England, along with Bothwell and Maxwell. Also in 1586 he is recorded as ‘baillie principall’ of the Regality of Melrose. Additionally there was an order from the Privy Council for him and William, Lord Hay of Yester to resolve their feud and stop invading each other’s lands. In 1587 the English Warden wrote that he led a band into Redesdale with 200 men (in daylight, with his pennant and a trumpet belonging to the Earl of Bothwell), burning the woods and killing a man. In the same year he was briefly imprisoned in Edinburgh Castle for a raid against the English (perhaps the counter-attack following Sir Cuthbert Collingwood’s raid into Teviotdale); John Murray of Blackbarony.
and John Carnichael of that Ilk were his sureties once he was released. Additionally in 1587 Robert of Haining acted as his cautioner, that he would appear before the Privy Council ‘and underly sic ordour as salbe imputt for the weill and quietnes of the Bordouris’ and he and his supporters (except for the Scotts of Ewesdale) submitted to arbitration to settle differences with James Tweedy of Drumelzier and his followers. In 1588 he had a commission to protect Selkirkshire and was on a list of Borders ‘masters and landlords’ ordered to appear before the Privy Council. Also in 1588 the English Warden complained that he and the Lairds of Chisholme and Whithaugh led about 100 Scotsmen on a raid into England, killing 4 men. A letter of 1589 from the King commended him for his loyalty and invited him and his followers to Edinburgh. However, in 1590/1 the English Wardens were complaining about raids that he had led into England. In 1589/90 he was listed as one of the leaders in Roxburghshire charged with seeing that people subscribed to the Confessions of Faith. He was knighted in 1590 and in that year had an order to relieve the King of certain ‘bills’ of English complainants: it was stated that he was formerly ‘Walter Scott of Branxholme’, but was ‘Sir Walter, now of Bukcleugh’, suggesting that the ‘Buccleuch’ designation formally accompanied his knighthood. John Murray of Blackbarony served as his cautioner in 1590. He received permission to travel to France to alleviate his gout in 1590, and had a letter from James VI in 1591 allowing him to stay in Edinburgh and Leith until the weather improved to allow him to sail. He would have been the Laird of Bucleuch when listed on the ‘Roll of the Clans’ in about 1590. He was appointed Keeper of Liddesdale in 1591 (and reappointed in 1594), obtained a Lordship of Crichton and Liddesdale in 1595, and was Warden of the West Marches. In 1591 he signed a bond to support the King against Francis Stewart, 5th Earl of Bothwell (his stepfather), and also in that year received a pardon for ‘intercommuning’ with the Earl of Bothwell. He had a letter of protection from the King in 1591 allowing him to stay in Edinburgh and France. However, it also appears that he had fallen out of favour again, being stripped of his new responsibilities and effectively exiled overseas for 3 years, his cautioners for £10,000 being Sir James of Balwearie and William of Abbotshall; however, he returned after 15 months, with a letter allowing his return written by the King in late 1592. In 1591/2 his cautioner was Sir John Edmonston of that Ilk when there was a complaint that he had led 200 Scots and others to steal 4000 sheep, 200 cows and 40 horses from the Tweedy’s lands of Drumelzier and Drea. In 1593 he sided with the Laird of Johnstone against the Laird of Maxwell at Dryesdale Sands (and later sided with Maxwell against Johnstone). Also in 1593 he was accused of being involved in the death of Charltons in England. In 1594 he had a commission (along with Alexander Lord Home and Sir Robert Ker of Cessford) to raise men to fight against the Earl of Bothwell and his followers. Later that year he gained many of the titles and estates forfeited by the Earl of Bothwell and was reappointed Keeper of Liddesdale; he wrote a letter confirming his position to the English Warden Scrope in 1594, which is signed at Hawick. He is recorded in a confirming charter of 1595 as still being superior of the lands of Kirkurd in Peeblesshire. Also in 1595 he had a ‘bond of manrent’ with the Beatties and another with John Veitch of Dawyck, both signed in Hawick. In 1595/6 an English letter describes how he strengthened Hermitage Castle and ‘has drawn most of the Ellots to his house at Hawick, and keeps an extra-ordinarie number in house’. In 1596 Sir James of Balwearie was surety that those for whom he was responsible would ‘observe the King’s peace and redress all skaiths committed’. He acquired his nickname particularly after the rescue of ‘Kinmont Willie’ from Carlisle Castle in 1596, when he led 80 horsemen on a daring raid into England to free a reiver who had been treacherously captured. There followed much arguing, including letters between the two monarchs, with the English wanting him delivered up, and meanwhile an English force razing Liddesdale, then his force raiding into Tynedale (where 36 men were captured and hanged). After further complaints by Queen Elizabeth he surrendered at Berwick and was again briefly exiled, although he was received by Elizabeth and is said to have impressed her, she stating ‘With ten thousand such men, our brother in Scotland might shake the firmest throne of Europe’. Although considered a hero locally, Lord Scrope described him as ‘ever the chief enemy (and still is) to the quiet of the border’. In 1596 there was a complaint that ‘with his trumpeter and 500 men’ he attacked the house of Bankhead on Esk, taking prisoners as well as goods. In 1597 he served on Parliament as a minor baron. There is an indenture, signed by him at Copshawholm in 1597, to deliver 5 Scotsmen... to the English Deputy Wardem. In 1597 he is also supposed to have personally led a party that rode into Tynedale on the Sabbath, burning 20 houses and killing 14 men who had taken home booty from Scotland. He signed in 1599 an agreement with the Elliots of Redheugh and Braiddie to bury their differences. Also in 1599 he was regranted his local lands, with Branxholme being erected into a Barony. As Warden, he had bonds with both the Armstrongs and the Elliots to be answerable for any complaints from England about the inhabitants of Liddesdale. In 1599 the Earl of Angus (William Douglas) wrote that he refused to enter his pledges for keeping the peace until the other Border lairds had done so. He spent several months in Paris, again for his health, with a letter of safe conduct being issued by Queen Elizabeth in 1599. Around 1600 he challenged Robert Ker of Cessford to combat; it is unclear whether either party was injured, but it could not have been serious. He was out of the country in 1602 when Robert of Haining acted as his procurator. In 1603 he was one of a large number of men issued with a ‘summons of removing’ by the Earl of Glencairn, then Baron of Hassendean. In 1604 he is recorded gaining lands in Hassendean from Robert Scott of Hassendean. On the accession of James VI to England he raised a regiment that fought under Maurice, Prince of Orange in Holland; this was probably filled with men who would formerly have been rievers in the Border country. He remained in Holland until the truce of 1609. He was elevated to a peerage in 1608 (after a Commission was struck by the King in 1606). In 1608 he had a letter of release and remission from the Privy Council for his efforts maintaining peace on the Border. About 1610 he was involved in a dispute with Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig over the lands of Whithope. Also in 1610 he was involved in a dispute over ownership of Haining mill with Robert, younger of Haining. Additionally, in 1610 he was named as a Commissioner for keeping peace within Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire. In 1611 he was appointed a member of the Privy Council, but died that same year. He married Mary (or Margaret), daughter of Sir William Ker of Cessford, according to a contract of 1586. Their children included: Walter, the 1st Earl; Margaret, who married James, 6th Lord Ross and secondly Alexander, 6th Earl of Eglinton; Elizabeth, who married John, 2nd Lord Cranstoun; Jean (whose pension is mentioned in her brother’s testament); and possibly Mary, who married William Elliot of Larriston (but she was perhaps his sister). By Delia, daughter of Captain Thomas Butler in Holland, he had an illegitimate daughter, Jean, called ‘Holland’s Jean’. He also had an illegitimate son, John, probably the Provost of Crichton. He was the first Scott of Buccleuch whose arms carried the star above the 2 crescents. He most likely died at Branxholme and was buried at St. Mary’s. His testament and inventory of possessions still exist – ‘Lord of Buckcleugh into the Scots Border, Was high Lord Warden, to keep them in good order’ [CWS]. Walter (d.bef. 1620) described as ‘in Allan Mouth’ when his son Walter became a brewer’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1620. He may have been succeeded by John. He is probably the same Walter ‘in Ellenmouth’ included in a list of about 180 men given a ‘respite’ in 1594 for the slaughter of Lord Maxwell and his men at Dryfe Sands. In 1606 his ‘brother-german’ John purchased the lands of Hobsburn and Weens from Thomas Turnbull; in this document he is referred to as being ‘of Allanmouth’. It is likely he was son of William of Allanhaugh, or otherwise related to the Allanhaugh Scotts. He could be the Walter, ‘brother germane’ to Robert of Allanhaugh, who witnessed the bond of 1585 in which Sir Walter of Branxholme and Robert of Allanhaugh resolved a family feud. Walter ‘Dand’s Wattie’ (16th/17th C.) failed to appear at court in Jedburgh in 1611. John in Brieryyards was fined for his non-appearance, as well as that of ‘Simmy’s Hob’ in Hawick, suggesting that he was a local man. His father was presumably Andrew. Sir Walter of Whitslade (d.1628) son of Walter. He appears to have been a military man, and probably served in Holland. The circumstances for which he was knighted are unknown. In 1608 he was ‘younger of Quhistslaid’ when he witnessed a bond for Sir Robert of Thirlestane and was ‘fiar of Quhistslaid’ when he acted for Sir Robert in 1610 (along with Robert of Headshaw) in 2 bonds not to harm Walter of Tushielaw and his sons. He probably succeeded his father in about 1610 (and is easy to confuse with his father). In late 1610 he and his son Thomas (unless this was his father and brother) were bound not to harm Walter Scott in Hawick, called Todshawhill, and his associates; Sir Robert of Thirlestane acted as cautions. In 1613 he was in trouble with the Presbytery for non-attendance, he ‘allegit that he haunted some kirks now and then; but that he could not come to his own kirk because his seat quilk he wont, and his fellous, to sit in was taken from him by the guidwife of Synton’; this Scott could either have been Isobel, widow of Walter of Synton, or possibly his daughter Isabel, wife of Francis of (the new Harden branch of) Synton. In 1617 he was among Border Lairds who renewed their bond for keeping the peace. Along with Robert of Headshaw he was a cautioner for a bond of 1619 involving the Hays of Smithfield. In 1620 he had a bond with Thomas, son of Robert Turnbull, called ‘of Bedroull’. In 1621 he was appointed to a commission to apprehend the men who killed Robert of Gilmanscleuch. In about 1622 he had a charter from Sir Robert of Thirlestane for the lands of Ettrickhouse (essentially holding the lands in collateral for a loan). He is recorded in the period 1622–25 when his brother George was involved in a court action against Robert Scott, younger of Satchells. He married Susanna, daughter of Sir Robert Scott of Newburgh (and sister of the next Sir John of Newburgh). His children included: Robert, who acquired Whitehaughbrae from Thomas of Todrig. He is said to have died at an advanced age. Walter of Whitehaughbrae (d.1621) son of Thomas and possibly grandson of Walter of Synton. He may have acquired Whitehaughbrae from Thomas of Todrig. He was a signatory of the Scott clan bond in 1589. He died without an heir and the lands passed to Thomas of Salenside (probably his cousin’s son). His genealogy is treated extensively by John Scott of Rodono (although there may be some confusion over multiple men of the same name owning the lands). Walter ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden (1540s–c.1629), usually referred to as ‘Auld Wat o Harden’, since he reputedly lived to be 80. He was son and heir of William of Harden (or perhaps grandson of William if there was another Walter in between). He took part in the group of about 200 Scotts and their followers who broke into the Kirk of the Lowes in 1557 looking to kill Sir Peter Cranston. He is mentioned in a 1559 charter of the lands of Harden between Alexander, Lord Hume and his father. He was also Laird of Todshaw, Mabonslaw, Highchesters, Todrig, Wester Essenside, Burnfoot and Shielswood. He accompanied Buccleuch in the rescue of Kinmont Willie, and was renowned as a riever. He was descended from the Scotts of Synton and succeeded his father in 1563. In 1579 he witnessed a transaction involving Walter of Goldielands and Robert of Haining. He apparently received the lands of Gilmanscleuch after his youngest son was slain by the Scotts of Gilmanscleuch in a hunting match (although this story seems confounded with that of his son Walter in Essenside). However, in 1579/80 he was accused along with Elliot of Redheugh and Elliot of Hoscote of committing a raid on Coquet Water. The Elliots (then allied with the English) raided his property at Hoscote in 1580. Also in 1580 he complained to the Privy Council (along with the Countess of Bothwell and James Gledstains of Cocklaw) of thefts and outrages committed by the Elliots on their farms. In 1581 he witnessed a marriage contract between William in Burnfoot (on Ale) and Janet, daughter of William in Huntly. There is a contract between him and James and John Langlands in 1588 over teinds from Harden and Todshaw. In 1590 he is listed on the ‘Roll of the Clans’. In 1591, along with Sir Walter of Buccleuch and Walter of Whitslade, he had a letter of pardon from the King for ‘intercommuning with Francis’ Earl of Bothwell. He took part with Bothwell at the ‘Falkland Raid’ in 1592, when they tried to capture the King. Because of his role in this he was denounced as a rebel and his houses at Harden and Dryhope were ordered to be destroyed. In 1592 or 1593 he helped Bothwell to plunder lands in Tweedsdie, reportedly carrying off 4,000 sheep, 200 cattle, 40 horses and £2,000 in goods. In 1591/2 he was listed among a large number of Scotts who were accused of stealing livestock from Drumelzier and Dreva. He was listed along with his brother William among those implicated in the 1593 slaughters of Lord Maxwell and his men at Drye Sands. In 1595 he witnessed a bond of ‘manrent’ in Hawick, between the Beatties and Sir Walter of Bransholme. Also in 1595 he was among Elliots, Nixons and others complained about by the Lord of Gilsland regarding raids into England. He is also said to have been on the raid to rescue Kinmont Willie in 1596. Also in 1596 he was accused of leading a raid along with Willie Elliot of Larriston and the young Laird of Whitaugh and 60 men, who took 300 head of cattle, 20 horses and goods from ‘the Leabecke at Wilkinskarre’; in another complaint the same year it is said that he headed a group of 400 men in a raid on Gilsland. In 1598 he was ‘put to the horn’ at the instigation of Sir John Ker of the Hirsel for non-payment of profits.
arising from Borthwickshiels, and remained officially a rebel for about a year 'in proud contempt of his Hienes, and in manifest defraud of the said complainer'. In 1599 he was among a list of Scotts and others charged to find caution to 'observe the King's peace'. In 1599 he was responsible (along with Gideon Murray of Elibank and Gilbert Elliott of Horsleyhill) for burning West Burnflat (in Liddesdale), for which they received remission in 1604. In 1602 he signed the new 'General Band' among Border Lairds. Also in 1602 he and Gavin Elliott of Horsleyhill were causers for Kinmont Willie Armstrong. In 1603 he was among a list of 'pretended tenants' served with a summons to remove themselves from lands in the Barony of Hasseanby James Cunningham. Also in 1603 he had a charter for the land of Pirnaton, near Stow. He was regularly bound over in large sums to keep the peace, threatened with outlawry, etc. Later in life he helped keep the peace, e.g. taking part in an important meeting of Lairds in Jedburgh in 1612, and signing the bond to keep the peace. In 1610 Gilbert Elliott of Horsleyhill (later of Stobs) stood as causer for him and his sons Walter, Francis and Hugh, that they would not harm Walter Scott in Hawick, called of Todshawhill, and his associates; the nature of this dispute with his neighbours is not clear. There was also a feud with the Scotts of Bonnington, who held lands on the Ettrick Water; while fishing there his son Walter was killed, leading to him gaining the lands of Singlie, Ern Cleuch, Newhouse, etc., and then Lady Bonnington complaining about being harassed by him and his supporters in 1617. He and his son William were described in 1617 as 'chamerlanis and baillis to Wair, Lord Scot of Bugcleuche, haveing the chiefe commandiement within the haill boundis of the countrey of the Forest'. A stone bearing his initials and those of his wife (and the date 1628) used to be on the bridge at Ettrickbridge, which he had built there. His wife is supposed to have served him his spurs when the meat supply was dwindling. In 1576/7 he married Mary (or Marion) Scott, daughter of John (not Philip as often stated) of Dryhope; she was also called the 'Flower of Yarrow'. It is said that he agreed to provide 'horse meat and man's meat' for a year and a day, as well as the plunder from the next Michaelmas moon; there is unfortunately no evidence to support this story. In 1598 he secondly married Margaret, daughter of John Edgar of Wedderlie, widow of William Spotiswode of that Ilk (and she died about 1629). His sons were: Sir William, who succeeded; Walter in Essenside, who was killed by one of the Scotts of Newhouse; Hugh in Greenhead, also called 'of Deuchar', who started the Scotts of Gala and married Jean, daughter of Sir James Pringle of Gala; Francis 'in Howfuird', who was ancestor of the Corse Scotts of Synton and married Isobel, sister of Sir Walter Scott of Whitslade; and possibly George of Castlesyde. He also had many daughters: Margaret ('Maggie Fendy'), who married Gilbert Elliott of Stobs ('Gibbie wi the Gowden Gartins'); Esther, who married Elliot of Falnash (perhaps Archibald) and later George Langlands of that Ilk (although it is unclear if this matches up with what is known about the Langlands family); Janet who married Thomas Scott of Whitslade; Isobel, who married James Johnstone of Westerhall; another daughter possibly marrying Scott of Tushielaw; another daughter marrying Geddes of Kirkurd; another daughter marrying Porteous of Hawkshaw; another Margaret (only child with his 2nd wife), who married David Pringle of Galashiels and later Sir William McDougall of Makerston; and probably an illegitimate daughter who married Robert, son of Robert Elliot of Horsleyhill, and progenitor of the Elliots of Borthwickbrae and Oakwood Mill. The Museum has a porridge pot said to have belonged to him, as well as a lock and key from Old Harden House — 'Not even the Flower of Yarrow's charms. In youth, might tame his rage for arms. And still, in age, he spurn'd at rest, And still his brows the helmet press'd' [SWS]. Walter (16th/17th C.) son of Adam of Todshawhaugh. He is listed among the supporters of Sir James Johnstone who had a respite in 1594 for killing Lord Maxwell and others at Dryfe Sands. He could be the Walter of Todshawhaugh listed in 1628 among men accused by the Earl of Buccleuch of cutting down trees on his land. He was accused along with John Currie (also from Todshawhaugh) and James Donaldson in Cavers. He could be the Walter 'in Hawik, called of Todshawhauch' who led a group of Scotts charging Langlands and other Scotts to find caution in 1610, with the other side petitioning for the penalties to be reduced; his son George is also listed there. He was also recorded as 'in Hawik, called of Todchawhill' in the same year when the Scotts of Harden, Whitslade and Satchells were also bound not to harm him and his associates; the nature of this dispute among local landowners is not clear. Walter (16th/17th C.) tenant in Catslack. He was father of James (d.1679), who was Minister at Kirkton 1615–19. He may also have been father of William in Catslack, who was served heir to the lands of Easter Moormaw in 1607 (previously belonging to the brother of his great-grandfather, John, Vicar of Hawick). In 1620 he complained about Alexander Stewart assaulting him at the house of Walter in Catslack, striking him 'upon the face and luggis with a grite rod and with a drawn whinner gaif him ane deep and deidlie straik and wound in the breist', then threatened to shoot him. Additionally they claimed that Alexander, along with John (son of David Stewart in Glen) regularly harassed him with 'hagbutis and pistoiletis'; the Privy Council declared the Stewart men to be rebels. Also in 1620 he was recorded as Walter 'in Slak' in a complaint, along with his brother Adam and William 'of Slak'; this was Alexander Stewart in Phaup complaining about being unfairly imprisoned. Separately, he and William complained about the Stewarts and vice versa, with him being represented by his brother Andrew, surgeon in Edinburgh. Walter of Todrig (16th/17th C.) probably son of George of Todrig and grandson of the first Laird of Harden, William. He may have been the Walter 'in Todrig' who witnessed a charter for lands in Rulewater in 1568 (when his father would still have been Laird). In 1579 he is recording paying Robert of Allenhaugh £100 Scots for the annual rent of the lands of Raesknoive; additionally he received payment of £50 Scots from Andrew Riddell (brother of Walter of Riddell) for the annual rent of his lands of Todrig, this was with the consent of his wife Margaret Ker and her mother Elizabeth Ker ('conjunct feuars of his lands of Todrik'). In 1580/1 he was a judge appointed on behalf of Walter of Stirches in a dispute with George of Synton over ownership of Synton Mill. In 1581 he leased the lands and steading of Shielswood from William Scott in Burnfoot. Also in 1581 he witnessed a marriage contract between William in Burnfoot (on Ale) and Janet, daughter of William in Huntly. Additionally in 1581 he is recorded in a dispute over the sale of a horse of his in Selkirk. He was listed among many Scotts and their allies in a 1581 summons to appear before the Privy Council regarding the feud with the Elliots and Armstrongs. In 1581/2 he gave a sasine for half the land of Todrig 'with tower, fortalice, houses, biggings and yards' to Joanna, daughter of 'Dand' Rutherford of Grange 'in full settlement of her terce, conjunct fee or liferent'. This suggests perhaps that he or his son married this Helen Rutherford. The sasine was given with the consent of his mother, Elizabeth Ker (and hence it is unclear if she was his mother or mother-in-law). He was a signatory of the clan bond in 1589. He is recorded in a charter of 1594 renting Ferniehirst Mill and its lands from Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst. He is also said to have been in the raiding party which rescued Kinmont Willie in 1596. He was denounced in 1597, along with Andrew Ker of Primsideloche and Robert Scott of Bowhill, for not restoring teind sheaves to Mr. James Durham. In 1606 he held the lands of 'Hardenhead' from Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst through a 'wadset', and in 1610 was referred to in revocation of a contract by Sir Andrew Kerr of Oxnam. In 1607 he had a charter (probably a confirmation for the lands of Todrig) from James, Lord Hay of Yester and another in 1619. In 1610 he was part of a petition, along with several local Langlands and Scotts, to have hornings lifted and penalties reduced. He was claimed to have been wounded in about 1616 when the Scotts of Bonnington killed Walter in Essenside. In 1617 his 2nd son Walter was a 'near kinsman' of the deceased Walter in Essenside whose widow complained to the Privy Council about the Scotts of Bonnington still being at large. In 1617 he was one of several supporters of the Scotts of Harden who Lady Bonnington complained had attacked her family (as part of a feud between the Harden and Bonnington Scotts); his son Walter was also mentioned. In 1617 he was among Border Lairds who renewed their bond for keeping the peace. In 1619/20 he and his son William had a warrant for the arrest of Robert Ormiston of Old Melrose (perhaps for encroaching upon their lands). In 1620 there was a further charter for holdings in the Todrig estate, which mentions his brothers Robert and William. He is also mentioned in the Commissioners’ Court for 1623 when Thomas Hood (from Ancrum) was accused of stealing cattle belonging to him from ‘Plassadge’ in England (Plaskettis perhaps?), and also Michael Birny (in Fairnilee) found guilty of stealing 30 sheep belonging to him and his associates; his son Walter is also mentioned in 1623. It is possible that some of these events relate to ‘Auld Wat’ (of Harden, Todrig, etc.). His children included: William, who was his heir and married Isabella Livingston; and Walter, who was involved with the feud between the Scotts of Harden and the Scotts of Bonnington. In about 1630 he probably sold Todrig to Thomas, brother of Sir Walter Scott of Whitslade. Walter (16th/17th C.) tenant in Ladhope. He was recorded in 1599, when the Laird of Howpasley (probably William) who was surety for him, as well as the Laird’s son.
Scott

John (who may have been related). He is listed being ‘of Landhoip’ and may be the same as one of the other Walters. Walter (c.1587–1633) 2nd Lord and 1st Earl of Buccleuch, son of Sir Walter ‘the Bold’. In 1590 he was described as ‘Walter Scot, younger’ when he rented the West Mains of Hawick from Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig. In 1606 he was the ‘master of Buccleuch’ who had a feu charter of the Kirklands of Hawick (except for the Manse and Glebe) from William Fowler (Parson of Hawick), with the consent of his father, Walter, Lord of Buccleuch. In 1611 he had a letter from the Privy Council forbidding the holding of a horse race between him and the brother of Sir Robert Gordon of Lochinvar. The inventory of the estates when he succeeded in 1612 still exists. He was the first in his family for 140 years to succeed to the titles when of full age. He served extensively in Holland, but also lived for periods at Branxholme. In 1618 he was appointed by the King as a commissioner to keep law and order in Liddesdale and Eskdale. In 1619 he was created Baron Scott of Whitchester and Eskdall and Earl of Buccleuch. Also in 1619 he was appointed as a Commissioner for Liddesdale and the Debatable Land, as well as Eskdale (along with Robert, Lord Maxwell) for dealing with idle and incorrigible persons. He purchased Synton from John Erskine, Earl of Mar in 1619. In 1621 he resigned the lands of Ringwoodfield (in upper Teviotdale) to Thomas Hamilton, Earl of Melrose (but the Scotts of Buccleuch held them again not much later). In 1621 he was at the meeting of the Scottish Parliament held in Edinburgh. In 1622 he was part of the local Commissioners’ Court appointed to help keep the peace on the Border. Also in 1622 he was in dispute with the Marquis of Hamilton over lands formerly held by Francis Stewart, Earl of Bothwell. Through the 1620s he continued as one of the joint English-Scottish Commissioners of the Middle Shires and was also member of the Privy Council. He had a narrow escape in his family’s feud with the Elliots in 1624. He complained about the Elliots of Redheugh oppressed his tenants (on their former lands in Liddesdale), leading him to eject them, but after the Elliots regained lands through the courts they continued to plot against him. It is said that he overstretched his estate and so entered the service of the States-General of Holland in 1627. By 1629 he was given a commission as Colonel of a company in the Netherlands and was present at the sieges of Bergen-op-Zoom and Maastricht. He was called home by a letter of King Charles I in 1631, but went back to Maastricht in 1633, after making a will in Scotland. He was still recorded as superior of the lands of Kirkurd in 1632. He married in 1616 Lady Mary Hay of Erroll, daughter of Francis, Earl of Erroll. His legitimate children were: Elizabeth (b.1621), who married John, Lord Erskine and Earl of Mar; Walter (b.1625), the eldest, who died aged 4; Francis (b.1626), Lord Scott, who succeeded; David (b.1627) of Canonbie; Jane (or Jean, b.1629), who married John, Master of Yester, who became the Marquess of Tweedale; and Mary (b.1631), who died unmarried. He also had at least 11 illegitimate children, including: Francis of Mangerton; William, also of Mangerton; John of Gorrenberry; Margaret, who married John, son of Robert Pringle of Stichill; and Janet, who married Andrew Scott of Foulshiels. He died in London, on his way home again from Holland. He was the last of the Scotts of Buccleuch to be buried in the family vault at St. Mary’s Church (7 months later). His body was brought by ship from London, but driven to Norway in a storm, arriving at Leith 15 weeks later. There was a huge mediæval-style funeral procession from Branxholme to St. Mary’s in June 1634 when ‘he was caried be his honorable freinds and the maist pairt of the whole nobilitie from the said place [Branxholme] to his kirk of Hawick all on fut under a fair velvet pale and the ceremoni with the armes wes set doun by some of his freinds thaineselfis with advyse of ane painter’. His armorial bearings were the first to have the supporters as ‘two ladies richly attired’. His will and inventory still exist – ‘...And of Earl Walter, rest him, God! A braver ne’er to battle rode; And how full many a tale he knew, Of the old warriors of Buccleuch’ [SWS]. ‘Earl Walter was Lord Walter’s son, A Mars for Valour, Wisdom, and Renown, His courage durst a Lyon fear, His Frowns would terrifi’d a Boar’ [CWS]. Walter (16th/17th C.) described as ‘the Earl’s servitor’ in 1620 when he was one of the witnesses for Walter, Earl of Buccleuch granting Goldielands to Sir Walter of Goldielands. Walter (16th/17th C.) tenant in ‘Mylneholme’ in 1622 when a little was accused of stealing his sheep. This was probably the Millholm in Liddesdale, and he may have been an ancestor of the later Walter there. Walter of Howford (16th/17th C.) son of William. In 1615 he married Marie (or Mary), sister of Robert Scott of Hartwoodnyres. He witnessed several documents in 1621. He sold Howford to Sir William Scott of Harden. In 1686 it was stated Scott that the representative of Scott of Howford was
tion). It is possible that his widow was the ‘Marie Scott lyfrenter of Cowdhouse’ recorded on the Land Tax Rolls in 1663. Walter of Midshiels (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1628 when he was the first named in a list of Scotts charged by the Privy Council to keep the peace with the Turnbulls of Know. His son Adam was also listed, along with Adam of Burnfoot, William, smith in Hawick, and William’s brother Adam; he may well have been related to some of these men. Adam of Burnfoot paid caution of 100 merks. It is unclear how he was connected to other Scotts of Midshiels or of Howpasley. Walter of Tushielaw (d.bef. 1643) son of Robert, from whom he sucdceeded in 1633. He was specifically served heir to the lands of Tushielaw, with mill, and the lands of ‘Conninglaw’ and Cacrabank. He may previously have been called ‘of Fawdshope’. In 1617 he was recorded as son of Robert (then still heir apparent to Tushielaw) when listed among Scotts and others who had freed Patrick Porteous of Hawkshaw and attacked his captors.
He was succeeded by his brother William in 1643, after (probably) having conveyed the estates to him in 1636. His children included: James, who was Brigadier in the Life Guards; and Robert.
He appears to have granted his son Robert ‘in Fauldishoip’ his lands in 1636 (although this could be confusion with his brother William). Walter of Chamberlain Newton (d.bef. 1643) recorded in the register of the Privy Council in 1573, when there was surety for him. He is listed there being ‘in Chalerlane Newton’, along with his brother John. They were both sons of Margaret Turbull, who was widow of David Elliot, who possessed half of the farm of Chamberlain Newton.
Gavin Elliott of Bailielee (and later of Stobs) complained that they had attacked his servant on the other half of the farm. Following his non-appearance, his brother John was declared a fugitive in 1573; he and his mother were decared fugitives later in 1573, but then bound to Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and John Tweedey, tutor of Drumelzier, not to molest Gavin Elliott, his wife Jean Scott, their children or servants.
In 1576 surety was found for him ‘not to molest’ Gavin Elliott. In 1579 his brother David purchastenement in Hawick from Robert Johnstone from Annandale. In 1581, along with several other Scotts (from Hartwoodmyres, Gamescle-uch, Gilmanscleuch, Edinburgh, North Bowhill, Dryhope, Catslack and Howpasley), supported William of Tushielaw and Robert of Aikwood in representing Adam in Bonnington in a dispute with Robert of Haining. He is also recorded in 1588 when his brothers John and David were wittesses to a sasine for the Scotts of Howpasley for Midshiels and Appletreehall. He is listed among landed men of the Borders in about 1590. In 1592 his cautioner was John Hay of Smithfield that he would not reset any of those who had supported the Earl of Bothwell. He is included on a list of several Scotts and others whom the Baron of Hassendean (James Cunningham) was trying to remove from their lands in 1603. His son John had a bond with Adam Turnbull of Abbotrule in 1619 (registered in 1624) by which time he was deceased. William ‘of Newton’ is probably his direct descendant (perhaps his son), and possiably also ‘Syme of Newtoun in Hawick’. He may have been father of both William of Chamberlain Newton and John of Brierryards (recorded as brothers in the 1630s). Walter (16th/17th C.) tenant farmer in ‘Crayk’, i.e. Craik in about 1610, when he was listed among supporters of the Scotts of Thirlestane in their feud with the Scotts of Tushielaw. Probably the same Walter is recorded in 1618 when his brother Simon in Newton was served heir to him in the lands of Easter Craik.
Walter (16th/17th C.) described as being ‘in Hawick’ in 1610 when Sir Robert of Thirlestane served as caution for Robert of Satchells, who was bound not to harm him. Walter of Burnfoot (d.1640s) in Ale Water, probably son of William, or perhaps his brother. He was recorded in the Circuit Court records of 1623 when 2 men were found guilty of stealing a horse from him; there his lands are referred to as ‘Burnfute upon ye Water of Aill’. Margaret, wife of probably the same Walter was tried at Edinburgh in 1620 for assaulting James ‘Lethame’ in Hawick Parish Church, in 1616 and later on the High Street. It seems unlikely that he was the Walter of Burnfoot on Ale who was given a bond by Francis Stewart (son of the Earl of Bothwell) in 1604, since that would have been too early (and perhaps that ‘Walter’ is an error for ‘William’). However, he may have been involved in the ongoing dispute with the sons of the Earl of Bothwell, which lasted until the 1620s. He signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. His son Robert was served heir to him in 1641. It is unclear when he died. His name still appears in the county valuation of 1643, with the lands being valued at £400. However, he appears to have been deceased in 1632 when his son Robert was summoned (along with John, son of Sir Robert of Thirlestane) to receive payment for the lands of Altrieve and Corsecleuch. Walter (d.c.1616) 2nd son of Walter ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden, described as ‘in Essenside’. In 1610 he was named along with his father and brothers when Gilbert Elliott of Horsleyhill (later of Stobs) was cautioner for them not to harm Walter Scott in Hawick, called Todshawhill, and his associates. In 1614 there is a bond with his father Walter and brother William, relating to his future wife and the lands of Borthwickshielis, Alemoor and others. He married Elspeth (or Elizabeth), daughter of John Hay of Haystoun (or Smithfield); in 1632 Elizabeth (by then remarried) renounced her claim to Alemoor, and in 1647 assigned lands to her son James. He was killed (according to complaints raised by his wife in 1616–17) by John Scott, brother of Simon of Bonnington, along with Simon, another brother Adam and ‘Will’s Sym’ of Thirlestane who came ‘bodin in feir of weir with lances, suords, secretis, plateslevis, quhingeris and utheris wappones invasive’, attacked him while he was fishing on the Ettrick, and he died 48 hours later; it is also said he was killed by one of the Scotts of Newhouse, suggesting that John, brother of Simon of Bonnington, was of Newhouse. In 1617 Mary Scott, Lady Bonnington, complained about her family being continually harassed by the Scotts of Harden, this presumably being a continuation of the feud between these families; her complaint includes a description of the events that led to his death, stating that the Scotts of Harden were being deliberately provocative by fishing in the waters belonging to the Scotts of Bonnington. He is probably the Walter ‘of Ashinsyde’ (i.e. Essenside) recorded in 1617 when William Scott appeared at the Privy Council in his name (even although he was deceased), as well as those of several other supporters of the Scotts of Harden. Also in 1617 his widow, Elspeth Hay, complained on behalf of the Scotts of Harden that Simon Scott of Bonnington and his supporters remained ‘unrelaxed from a horning’. His widow, brothers Hugh and Francis and others involved were ordered to appear personally before the court in 1619. His widow later married William Scott of Salenside. In the period 1633–53 his daughters and heirs Jean and Margaret had an action raised against them by James, son of William of Salenside (and hence their step-brother, presumably over the inheritance of Essenside), with Sir William of Harden as their curator. These 2 daughters were served as his heirs in 1641, with him being described as the 2nd lawful son of Walter ‘senioris de Harden’. Note that Keith Scott (and others) confuses details of his death (saying he was killed by Simon of Bonnington in 1620). Walter ‘Wat-tie’ (d.1616) son of ‘Braidis Andro’. He was one of the 5 men involved with slaughtering Sir James Douglas’ sheep at Howpasley in 1615, at the instigation of Lady Scott of Howpasley and Jean Scott of Satchells. He and Ingram Scott met the others at Birny Cleuch, between Elrig and Howpasley. They killed about 40 sheep, with about 20 more lying wounded, it is said that the sheep were slain ‘be streiking of thair heidies, and cutting thame in tua throw thair bakis’. He escaped to the North with Ingram Scott, but the pair were captured and brought to Edinburgh Tolbooth. Although they denied knowing ‘Jock the Suckler’, when they saw him they apparently said ‘Quhat now, Jok! How come thow heir – and quhair-foir ar thow wairdit in this hous?’. Their lawyer tried to argue that the relevant law only applied to horses and cattle, but the judge would have none of it. Along with Ingram and Geordie Scott he was hung in Edinburgh for the crime, with Jock essentially turning informant, but being executed later for other crimes. It appears that the trial may have been heavily stacked against them (with several of Drumlanrig’s supporters on the jury, no evidence to place them at the scene except for the informer, and a law that did not technically apply to sheep in any case). Walter (16th/17th C.) Hawick man, described as ‘at the Eist Port’, who was one of the locals accused in 1612 by the Lord Advocate of charging too much interest on loans. He was described as ‘of Eistport in Hawick’ when he was recorded as a juror in the 1622 Commissioners’ Court. Probably the same Walter ‘at the Eist-port’ was also on the ‘leet’ for the election of the Bailies in 1638. Presumably he lived near the East Port and his designation distinguished him from other contemporary Walters. Walter ‘Jock’s Wattie’ (16th/17th C.) witness to a sasine for a tenement in Hawick in 1610. The land was going to Bailie Robert, son of ‘Wat’s Jock’, who could therefore have been his brother. It is unclear which branch of the Scotts this was. Walter of Alton (d.1638) eldest son of Adam and grandson of Robert of Alton and Clarilaw. He was served heir to his father and grandfather in 1606. The ‘Hob of Alton’ who was Bailie in Hawick was probably his brother. In 1619 he witnessed a bond signed in Hawick between John, son of Walter of Chamberlain Newton and Adam Turnbull of Abbotrule. He is recorded as being ‘called of Altoun’. His sons were probably Robert (‘junior of Altoun’, who succeeded and signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Haick in 1638) and William (‘vocat de Altoun in Hassendene’).

Walter (16th/17th C.) tenant at Templehall and Brewlands in Rulewater, along with Patrick Turnbull, recorded in a contract of ‘wadset’ in 1612. Along with Patrick Turnbull he is also listed in 1627 as the sometimes occupant of Templehall and Brewlands. Walter of Girnwood (d.c.1629) younger son of Robert, Laird of Shielwood, and brother of Robert. In 1617 he was recorded as Robert of Shielwood’s brother among supporters of the Scotts of Harden who Lady Bonnington complained had attacked her family (as part of a feud between the Harden and Bonnington Scotts).

He is recorded in 1622 in an action with the Scotts of Buccleuch, regarding his removal from ‘Toun-grig’ and other lands in Liddesdale. He was still alive in 1628 (and recorded being of ‘Girnewood’), but died soon afterwards. His sons Robert and Walter were both minors when he died, with his brother Robert of Shielwood being appointed as their ‘tutor’ in 1629. His son Robert was served as his heir in 1636. Walter of Wauchope (16th/17th C.) said to have carried the Earl of Buccleuch’s spurs in the funeral procession at Hawick in 1634. He was probably related to the later Walter in Wauchope. Walter (16th/17th C.) son of Walter of Todrig. He is mentioned in the court case between the Scotts of Harden who Lady Bonnington complained had attacked her family (as part of a feud between the Harden and Bonnington Scotts).

He represented Selkirk in Parliament in 1645–46, 1650 and 1651. In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, Dumfries and Annandale. He is mentioned in 1658 in a case in the Regality of Melrose, in a lawsuit over money due for ‘three trowps horse of Captan Walter Scott’ to him, also involving Robert Ker of Faldronside, relating to 1650. He held lands at Dryfeleuchshiel and Redfordgreen, as well as Whitslade. He married a daughter of Sir Robert Stewart of Ormiston, brother of the Earl of Traquair. His children included: Robert, baptised in 1649 and also died in infancy; Jean. He died at Inverkeithing, fighting against Cromwell (while his brother Robert had probably died fighting on Cromwell’s side 8 years earlier). Walter (17th C.) maltman of Hawick, who was on a list of 16 ‘idle and masterless men’ suggested by the Hawick Bailie as suitable for sending to the wars in Germany in 1627. While in Edinburgh Tolbooth he was among 7 of them who complained that they were not in fact the sorts of men who should be pressed into military service, but nevertheless were transported to the wars in Germany. He could have been related to Bailie John, who was also a maltman in the next few decades. Walter of Braidhaugh and Arkleton (d.bef. 1661) 3rd son of John of Newark. He was also sometimes referred to as Walter of Harwood. It seems likely that he was a distant relative of the Scotts of Buccleuch, although the detailed descent of his family is unknown. He was tenant (and probably not owner) of Broadhaugh in the upper Teviot valley. He served as local Chamberlain to Scott of Buccleuch in the period 1630-34 and probably through at least the late 1630s, with responsibility for ‘Teviotdale-head’ and Ewesdale. He was also Chamberlain for Eskdale, Ewesdale, Wauchopedale and Eskdalemuir. He is also recorded in 1632 in a note from Walter, Earl of Buccleuch about fixing the roof at Branxholme, where he is described as ‘in Braidhauche’. He was ‘of Breidhauche’ in 1638 when he signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick. In 1644 he was bailie to the Earl of Buccleuch for the 4 kirks of Eskdale, Ewesdale and the Debatable Land, and was given orders by the Committee of War for Roxburghshire to convey soldiers from these parishes to the Master of Cranstoun. He purchased Meikledale and Meikledale-hope from Adam Cunningham in 1643 (when he was referred to as being of Harwood) and shortly afterwards acquired Arkleton from the same man. He was ‘of Arkleton’ in 1649 when he wrote a report on the southern counties of Scotland along with William Elliott of Stobs, and in the same year when he was listed on the Committee of War for Dumfriesshire and Annandale. In 1651 he is referred to as ‘of Arkiltoun’ when his son Robert ‘callit of Braidhauch’ was granted 800 merks yearly in the will of Francis, Earl of Buccleuch. In 1653 he had a contract with Adam Cunningham and the Earl of Nithsdale (as superior) relating to Meikledale, which was part of a legal case over ownership of those lands in the early 18th century. He married Agnes (or perhaps Anna), daughter of Turnbull of Minto. His son Francis succeeded to Arkleton and was also Chamberlain for the Langholm area. Another son, Robert, became Robert of Harwood. It is said he had several daughters, including one who married Maxwell of Broomholm (possibly Jean, wife of John Maxwell). Walter (17th C.) younger son of Sir Robert of Haining and brother of Robert. He was described as being portioner of Guilan. Where these lands were is unclear. His son Lieut.-Col. Robert was the last of the members of this branch of the family recorded. Walter ‘Gray’ (17th C.) recorded in a Hawick Magistrates Court case of 1642 involving skinner Andrew Deans and merchant Walter Robson. Walter ‘Wat o the Buss’ (17th C.) listed in 1642 among a large number of Borderers declared as fugitives. He was probably connected to Bush in Ewesdale and related to earlier Scotts from there. Walter of Huntly (17th C.) recorded in a case that came before Parliament in 1644. Katherine Kendell, widow of John Young, asked for him to be ejected from the lands of Hyndhope and provide her with the duties from these lands. He seems like to have been son (or perhaps younger brother) of John of Huntly, who was recorded in 1638. In an Ashkirk baptismal record of 1656 he is ‘called of huntlie’, which suggests that he no longer held the lands of Huntly; it appears right after a baptism for John of Langhope, who was from a related branch of the Scotts. He married Jean Scott and their children probably included: Andrew (b.1653); Janet (b.1656); John (b.1661); and Elizabeth (b.1663). In 1661 he is ‘Mr’ (although Huntly is not mentioned explicitly) and the baptismal witnesses were William of Synton and William of Headshaw. He is the last Scott of Huntly on record. Walter of Chapel (17th C.) recorded in the 1643 county valuation, with lands valued at £668 in 1643. These lands consisted of Chapel itself valued at £390, as well as £200 of ‘acres in Lilliesleaf’ and ‘Portions-croft’ valued at £78. Note the potential confusion with Scotts connected with Chapelhill near Branxholme. He was listed on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire in 1648. Walter Scott of ‘Burnside’ was involved in 1640 with Sir Walter Riddell over the lands of Chapel, so this may have been him. He was probably the Laird of Chapel who was fined in 1662, after the Restoration. He was recorded in the 1663 and 1678 Land Tax Rolls in Lilliesleaf Parish, still paying tax on £668. Walter of Foulishiel (17th C.) son of James, and brother of Andrew. In 1647 he was served heir to his brother in the lands of ‘Fadounsyd’ and ‘Nether Whilawhous’. In 1652 his estate was inherited by his 2 daughters, Elizabeth and Jane, one of whom, Elizabeth, married James Scott of Bowhill. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Malie, and their daughter Janet was born in 1648. Walter of Bonchester, ‘Wat o the Dykes’ (d.1653). It is unclear from which branch of the Scotts he came, although there is a tradition that the Scotts of Bonchester were related to the Scotts of Harden. It is also unclear what the ‘Dykes’ in his nickname referred to, but ‘the Dykes’ near Bedrule seems likely. He is probably the Walter described as ‘of Dykis’ in 1605 when Robert of Thirlestane was caution for him not to harm Patrick Storie in Spittal-on-Rule. In 1612 he is ‘in Dykis’ in a document listing local people convicted of charging more than 12 percent interest on loans; he was among those men who appeared to answer the charges. Probably the same Walter ‘called of Dykis’ was ‘bailie in that part’ to Andrew Ker, Lord Jedburgh, for a sasine relating to Harwood in 1631. He purchased Nether Bonchester in 1632 from Alexander Kirkton (Provost of Jedburgh) and John Moscrop, younger (Burgess of Jedburgh); these joint owners had previously had a wadset on the property that was not redeemed.
He was recorded as owner of Nether Bonchester in 1643, when it was valued at £164.3. He was recorded in the Land Tax Rolls in 1663 when he paid tax on £260, and his lands in Belses were also valued at £130. He is recorded in 1656 when he brought a ‘letter of horning’ against William Elliot of Philhope, with Henry Elliot of Harwood as cautioner (although part of the document is missing). He was probably Bailie in 1678 when Walter Hardie was fined for saying the ‘Westport would be hanged’. In 1679 a woman was cited for accusing his servant John Moore of theft. He was probably related to the other West Port Scotts, and may have been father of the later Walter of Westport, and possibly grandfather of Hawick’s second known Cornet, James ‘called of Westport’; James’ father Walter was already deceased in 1705. He is probably the deceased Walter ‘Westport’ (unless there are 2 generations of Walters) whose son James mar-rried Sara Gledstains in 1719. Walter of Tinnis
(17th C.) Chamberlain to the Scotts of Buccleuch for Ettrick Forest in the period 1631–41. In 1642 he was named by the Privy Council to a commission to try a large number of Borderers who had been declared fugitives; he was recorded there as ‘William Scot of Tinneis, curator to the Erle of Buccleuch’. He may be the same as one of the other West Port Scotts, and possibly father of the wright William who lived at Kirknowe Howpasley. After he died without issue, his sister Marion (wife of William Wilson in ‘Gulzeanflat’) was brother of Robert and half-brother of Simon.
Walter (17th
C.) resident of the Hawick, near the West Port.
He was elected to the Council in 1648. He is also recorded in 1656 when he was cleared of the claim that John Scott made against him regarding a deal over 3 barrels of drink; he sold the barrels and was therefore presumably a merchant. He is recorded being ‘at the west port’ in 1663, when he was one of the owners of West Mains. Also in 1663 he was ‘merchant, Hawick, indweller at the West Port, thereof’ in a deed. He was listed among the Councillors in 1668. Presumably the same Walter is recorded in 1676 when he brought a ‘letter of horning’ against William Elliot of Philhope, with Henry Elliot of Harwood as cautioner (although part of the document is missing). He was probably Bailie in 1678 when Walter Hardie was fined
for saying the ‘Westport would be hanged’. In 1679 a woman was cited for accusing his servant
John Moore of theft. He was probably related to the other West Port Scotts, and may have been father of the later Walter of Westport, and possibly grandfather of Hawick’s second known Cornet, James ‘called of Westport’; James’ father Walter was already deceased in 1705. He is probably the deceased Walter ‘Westport’ (unless there are 2 generations of Walters) whose son James mar-rried Sara Gledstains in 1719. Walter of Tinnis
(17th C.) Chamberlain to the Scotts of Buccleuch for Ettrick Forest in the period 1631–41. In 1642
he was named by the Privy Council to a commission to try a large number of Borderers who had been declared fugitives; he was recorded there as ‘William Scot of Tinneis, curator to the Erle of Buccleuch’. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Williams. Walter of Howpasley (d.c.1660) son of William of Fingland. He was brother of Robert and half-brother of Simon.
When his brother died, he acquired the lands of Howpasley. After he died without issue, his sister Marion (wife of William Wilson in ‘Gulzeanflat’) was served as his heir and then Howpasley passed to Walter, son of his cousin Patrick of Tanlawhill.
Walter
d bef. 1667 youngest son of Patrick of Tanlawhill and Thirlestane. He inherited the lands of Howpasley, but died without issue and they went to his brother Sir Francis. His brother was served as his heir in 1667 (as confirmed in 1695), consistent with the claim that he died in about 1663, before his father. The lands he held included Rashiegrain, Easter and Wester Hislop, Langhaugh, Commonbrae and Ramsaycleuch, as well as Howpasley. He is probably the same man as Walter of Ramsaycleuchburn. Col. Walter of Hartwoodburne (d.c.1650) probably related to the Scotts of Whitehaugh, he was also referred to as being ‘of Harlawood’, and hence is easily confused with the nearly contemporary Walter of Harwood on Teviot. He served in Parliament for Selkirkshire 1646–47 and 1648–49. In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, Dumfries and Annandale. He was appointed as one of the ‘tutors’ for the children of Francis Earl of Buccleuch. In the correction to the will of Earl Francis in 1651, he is described as deceased when 200 merks yearly is allocated to his widow, Elizabeth Napier, and their second son, Walter. His widow Elizabeth Napier remarried to Sir Bryce Cochrane and was recorded in a deed in 1673. He was a Royalist supporter who was killed at the Battle of Dunbar. It is unclear if he was related to the slightly later William of Hartwoodmyres. In 1694 Anna Helena was served heir to her father Walter, who was son of Walter of Whitehaugh; this was presumably him, with Anna Helena being his grand-daughter. Walter of Goldielands (d.bef. 1672) son of Walter (and not, as some genealogies state, son of Charles, half-brother of the first Walter of Goldielands). He was the last of the name to be acknowledged as ‘of Goldielands’ by the Scotts of Buccleuch (although there is also a record of Robert of Goldielands in 1638, and others given that designation, at least informally, later). He is hard to separate from his father, who was certainly alive in 1620, but was designated ‘Sir Walter’. In 1620 his father had a charter from Walter, Earl of Buccleuch, for the lands of Goldielands and Westcotterig, and the same day granted Goldielands to him (retaining the liferent). Also mentioned is Jean Riddell (probably daughter of Andrew Riddell of that Ilk), to whom he was promised in a contract of marriage, the contract involving the lands of ‘Pirntatome’ or ‘Pirntaiton’ (presumably Pintaton on Gala Water). He is probably the Walter of Goldielands who bore the ‘pincell of black taffita’ on a lance point in the funeral procession of the Earl of Buccleuch in Hawick in 1634. He signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638; the name ‘R. Scott’ beside his could indicate this was his brother, son or perhaps uncle. In 1641 he witnessed a document in Hawick for the Scotts of Thirlestane. In 1643 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire and in 1643, 1646, 1648 and 1649 he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire; in 1649 he is ‘of Gawdilands and Stanesh’, suggesting a connection with Stanedge (although the Scotts appear not to have owned it for at least another half century). In 1643 his lands in Hawick Parish were valued at £566 13s 4d. He is probably also the ‘W. Scott of Gowdilands’ recorded as owner of lands in Cavers Parish valued at £400 in 1643; these lands were owned by the Duke of Buccleuch by 1678. In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, Dumfries and Annandale. He is recorded in a county valuation of landowners in Hawick Parish in 1645 (as the 4th largest landowner) and on a list of landowners and tenants of Hassendean Parish in 1666. In 1649 he and Patrick Scott (writer in Edinburgh) were involved in a loan with James Crichton, pronounced to Sir Patrick Hamilton in 1652. In 1662, after the Restoration, he was fined £600. In 1655 he is recorded owing about £6800 to the deceased Francis, Earl of Buccleuch; this was for rental of the farms of Riccartonfoot, Prickinghaugh and Lawshill in the period 1634–47. He paid the land tax on property in Cavers Parish in 1663 and also paid more tax for lands recently acquired in Hawick Parish (from Cavers Kirk), as well as more than £500 for Goldielands itself. He was probably one of the ‘curators’ of Francis Scott of Davington, appointed in 1666. His descendants took the designation ‘of Crumhaugh’. His lands appear to have passed to Robert Scott of Clack, son of his youngest sister (or perhaps aunt), as well as Lilias, daughter of his sister Jean. However, he was succeeded by Walter of Crumhaugh, probably his cousin. He may be the Walter of Goldielands recorded in a deed of renunciation and discharge with Walter ‘in’ Goldielands in 1673. Walter (d.bef. 1671) tenant in Lawshill. In 1671, 1674, 1676, 1679 and 1680 his widow had discharges with the treasurer of Selkirk for annual rent. He is probably the ‘William’ whose widow Bessie Scott was deceased in 1683 when her son-in-law Andrew Angus (Bailie of Selkirk) was her executor. Walter (17th C.) recorded as proprietor of Al- lanhaugh in a transcription of the 1678 valuation rolls. However, it may be that this is confusion with ‘Altoncrofts and Alintoun’. If he was a Scott of Allanhaugh, it is unclear how he might have been related to previous Scotts of Allanhaugh. Walter of Crumhaugh and Goldielands (1631/2–1700) probably a son of Charles of Crumhaugh, who was son of the first Sir Walter of Goldielands. He succeeded his cousin Walter in 1675, inheriting several lands, although those attached directly to Goldielands passed to the Scotts of Buccleuch. He succeeded to Robert Scott of Glack and Lilias Scott (wife of William Knox), who were nephew and niece of Walter of Goldielands. These lands included half of Ramsaycleuch, Commonside, Rashiegrain, Howpasley, Easter and Wester Hislop and Langhaugh, as well as Crumhaugh. It is possible he was the Walter of Glack recorded in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls paying £130 for lands in Wilton Parish. He is probably the Walter of Goldielands recorded in 1675 when he requested permission from the Hawick Bailies and Council to build a fence on top of the dyke separating his lands from those of the Common. He is Walter of Crumhaugh in 1678 when he paid land tax on £1116 13s 4d in Hawick Parish. He is probably the Scott ‘off Gowddielands’ listed among the heritors of the Regality of Melrose in 1682. He was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1690. He may have been the ‘Goldielands, elder’ on the list of subscribers for the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4 (with the ‘Goldielands, younger’ being his son Charles). In 1696 he resigned these lands, as well as Trinity Lands, ‘Corsback’ and others, to Charles of Crumhaugh, his elder son. He married Janet (or Jean) Glendinning and her will is recorded in 1682. His children included: Charles, who succeeded, but appears to have died before him; Walter, whose descendants later became the representatives of this branch of the family; and William, who married Isobel Gledstains in 1702. John, recorded as ‘brother of Goldielands’ in 1689 may also have been his son. Note, however, that these generations are quite murky. His memorial stone was uncovered during renovations in St. Mary’s Kirk around 1863 and reads: ‘Here lyes Walter Scot of Crumhaugh Who deceased 20 day of December 1700 and of age 68’. Jean, who married Walter of West Port in 1700/1, was probably his daughter. In 1687 he witnessed a baptism for Elspeth (married to James ‘Bleak’), who may have been a sister, with the other witness being William, doctor in Hawick, who may have been a brother or other close relative. He is probably the Walter of Goldielands, who (along with Robert of Tandlaw, who was thus probably closely related) witnessed a baptism in 1673 for Robert (perhaps his son or brother) and Bessie Miller. He also witnessed a baptism in 1678 for Walter of Harwood and 2 more in 1680 for William of Harwood and for Robert of Horsleyhill. He is Walter ‘of Crumhaugh’ in 1700 when, along with his son William, he witnessed a baptism for Walter in Goldielands (his son); this was just a few months before he died. Walter of Minto (17th C.) another name for Walter of Harwood. Capt. Walter of Satchells (c.1613-c.1694) writer of ‘A True History of the Right Honourable name of Scot’, a family history in doggerel verse, which was published in 1688, reprinted in 1786 and again in 1894. The words were said to have been dictated to school boys from Hawick. He was probably son of Jean Scott of Thirlestane and Robert Scott of Satchells, and may have been born on a farm in Eskdalemuir. He spent his youth herding cattle, then joined the Duke of Buccleuch’s regiment at age 16 (probably in 1629) and supposedly served for 57 years. He was in the army of the Swedish King from about 1631 until long after the peace of Munster in 1648. However, it appears that he was not permanently overseas and spent some time in Scotland. He is probably the Walter, heir apparent of Robert of Satchells recorded in 1653 when he had a bond to desist from harming the Bailies of Selkirk. In 1654 he had an act of caution against Robert, son of Peter Scott of ‘Cowdhome’; his signature is recorded in this document. He is probably the Walter ‘of Satsheilles’ (although it looks like ‘falsheilles’) who paid tax on £200 in Lilliesleaf Parish in the Land Tax Rolls of 1663. He was also owner there in the 1678 county valuation, the lands being valued at £256. He is said to have begun his metrical family history at about the age of 73 (or as sometimes claimed, 88). It was first published in Edinburgh in 1688, with a second edition in 1776, a third published in Hawick in 1786 and a reprinted edition in 1894, with extensive notes by John G. Winning. The family lost the lands of Satchells earlier in the 17th century, and so it is unclear exactly where he lived when he retired (but the impression is that it was near to the old lands). There is little documentary evidence about whether he had a family, although Dr. William Scott of Stokoe says that after returning to Scotland he married a young woman with whom he had a daughter called Gustava (after King Gustavus of Sweden, in whose army he had served). He is probably the Walter of Satchells whose wife Jean Pringle, widow of William of Glenrath, is recorded in a deed connected with a factory in 1663. The only other known work attributed to him is a ballad about the Scotts of Whitslade printed in Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ — ‘Captain Walter Scot, An old Souldier and no Scholler, And one that can write name But just the Letters of his Name’ [CWS] (often written ‘Scot’). Walter of Tushielaw (17th C.) son of William, whom he succeeded as last Scott Laird of Tushielaw (but must have been still quite young at this time). He was served heir to the lands of Tushielaw, including ‘Counislaw’ in 1670. He acted as cautioner for the Commissioners of Excise in Selkirkshire in 1682. He is recorded in 1681 when his son Francis became a surgeon’s apprentice in Edinburgh and in 1686 when his daughter Jean was buried in Greyfriars, Edinburgh. He is recorded in bonds of 1682. He may be the same ‘Laird of Tishilow’ recorded in 1700 when his brother John was entered as a Burgess of Edinburgh. He may also be the Walter ‘uncle to Tushilew’ who signed the marriage contract in 1678 between Elliot of Midlem Mill and Elliot of Harwood. His mother may have been Margaret Elliot and his uncle Francis Scott, who served as his cautioner in 1686. In 1688 he sold the family estate to Michael Anderson, who had married his sister. In 1689 he appeared before Parliament to give assurance that he would leave the country or live peaceably etc.; this suggests he was a supporter of the Jacobite cause, unlike his father. He may be the Scott of Tushielaw who in 1692 witnessed a sasine for Robert of Broadmeadows. Walter (17th C.) described as ‘in Boghall’ in a list of landowners and tenants of Hassendean Parish in 1666. He may have been ancestor of the later Walter of Boghall. Walter of Newton (17th C.) probably son of William, for whom John of Brieryards was appointed tutor in 1638. He is probably the same Walter ‘of Chamberlayne Newton’ recorded in a 1643 valuation of lands in Hawick Parish, his lands valued at £266 13s 4d; his lands in Hassendean Parish were also valued at £1378 4s 4d in 1663. He is probably also the Walter of ‘Chamberlane Newtoun’ recorded in 2 bonds in 1663 and the Walter ‘of Newtoune’ in 2 other deeds in 1663. He is also recorded in a record relating to Hassendean Parish in 1666. He may be the Walter of Newton recorded paying the land tax on Lairhope, valued at £266 13s 4d in 1678 and paying tax on £1182 (presumably for Newton and neighbouring lands) in Hassendean Parish. He may have been succeeded by another Francis. Walter (17th C.) had a charter of the half merk land of ‘Mounkland’ in Clarilaw, from the Commendator of Melrose in about 1620. He is described as ‘in Monkland’ in a record of major residents of Hassendean Parish in the mid-1600s. He could be a descendant of John ‘of Monks-tower’ listed by Scott of Satchells. However, it is unclear how he might have been related to other local Scotts. Walter of Woll (17th C.) recorded in the 1643 county valuation as owner of ‘Wall’ in Ashkirk Parish. The lands were valued at £533. According to Keith Scott’s genealogy brothers Francis of Woll and James of Woll were owners at that time. It is therefore unclear how he fits into the family tree; perhaps he is another brother, who succeed between Francis and James, or else the name is an error. Walter ‘in Stobitcote’ (17th C.) local landowner of the mid-to-late 1600s, according to James Wilson. He was recorded in 1643 as owner of lands valued at £260 in Cavers Parish; these same lands were owned by the Duke of Buccleuch by 1678. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. Walter of St. Leonards and Whitehaugh (d.1685) local landowner of the mid-to-late 1600s. He purchased the lands of Whitehaugh from Andrew Hay in 1656. In 1671 he sold the estate to his nephew Walter of Headshaw (although it is unclear who this was). In 1669 he had a ‘wadset’ with William of Langhope (and his curator). He had a charter of Langhope in 1678 when he was referred to as ‘now of Langhope’. He may be the Walter of Langhope who paid the land tax in Selkirkshire in 1678. However, these lands were sold to John Scott (possibly his son) in 1688. In 1670 he was Bailie to George, Lord Ross of Halkhead and Melville for a sasine in Linlithgow and another sasine to William Scott in Manuel. He was recorded in a deed of 1673 being ‘of Saint Leonards’. He acted as Chamberlain (along with William Scott, Bailie of Dalkeith) for the Buccleuch estates in Dalkeith in 1673, and on his own for the years 1674-88. In 1675 he was cautioner for a bond by Sir John Nicholson to Walter, brother of Sir Lawrence Scott of Eyemouth. It is unclear exactly who he was or where the ‘St. Leonards’ refers to (possibilities are the lands in Ednam, Edinburgh, Lauder or Peebles). His mother appears to have been Elizabeth Napier, widow of Walter of ‘Harlawood’, who had remarried to Sir Bryce Cochrane; he thus may have been the same as Walter, son of Walter of Hartwoodburn. However, it is also possible he was closely related to the Scotts of Langhope. His wife was Janet Scott (and again it is unclear to which branch she belonged, with Langhope a possibility). His children included John, who sold the estate of Langhope to Adam Scott of Bowhill in about 1692. He may also have been father of Anna Helena, who inherited her grandfather Walter’s lands of Hartwoodburn in 1694. Walter (17th C.) son of Walter of Whitehaugh. In 1694 his daughter Anna Helena (widow of Archibald Edmonstone of Redhall) was served heir to his father’s lands of Hartwoodburn. Hence it seems like his father was Laird of Hartwoodburn and Whitehaugh. He may be the son of Col. Walter of Hartwoodburn recorded in a deed in 1673. He was probably deceased by 1694. He may be the same as Walter of St. Leonard’s and Whitehaugh. Walter of Burnfoot on Teviot (17th C.) probably eldest son of Robert. He succeeded his grandfather Robert in 1667, becoming Laird of Burnfoot and Burnhead, which were still referred to in the service of heirs as Nether and Over Newhall. He is probably the Walter of Burnfoot recorded in the Land Tax Rolls of 1663, listed along with owners of lands in Hassendean parish (presumably for Burnfoot). He is recorded in a deed of 1673 being ‘of Burnefit in Tiviot’. It is hard to separate him from his near contemporary, Walter of Burnfoot on Ale. He was succeeded by his son Adam, who sold Burnhead to William Scott in Burnhead. Walter (d.c.1681) recorded as ‘merchant in Burnfoot, in Lidsdail’ when his will was listed in 1681. The location of Burnfoot in Liddesdale is ambiguous and it is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts. Walter of Burnfoot on Ale (17th C.) probably eldest son of Robert. He is hard to separate from his near contemporary, Walter of Burnfoot on Teviot. He succeeded sometime before 1669. He was mentioned as a landowner in a record relating to Hassendean parish in 1666. He could be the Walter of Burnfoot recorded in the Land Tax Rolls of 1663, listed along with owners of lands in Wilton Parish, when he paid tax on £312. He was recorded in a deed in 1673 (separate from another for Walter of Burnfoot on Teviot), along with his son William. He (or the other Walter) was recorded in 1677 when his son Walter became a skinner’s apprentice in Edinburgh. He was still Laird in 1686, when he was one of those to whom Scott of Satchells dedicated an address. He gained Hartwoodmyres from Sir William Scott of Harden about 1690. He was probably the Laird of Burnfoot in Ashkirk Parish who paid tax on 3 hearths in 1694. He was involved in financial dealings with the Scotts of Thirlestane and was involved in legal action to recover money in the 1690s. His brother Francis married Isobel Scott. He may be the Walter of Burnfoot, son and heir of Robert, who inherited Burnfoot on Ale in 1692; however, it is possible there is another generation of Walters and Roberts represented here. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Turnbull and their son John was baptised in 1677. Walter (d.c.1695) servitor to Sir William Elliot, he was ‘of Penchrist’ in 1695 when his will was recorded. Walter (17th C.) tenant in Whitehillbae in Cavers Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Walter (17th C.) tenant in ‘Weimes’ (presumably Weens) in 1687 when the will of his wife Bessie Scott is recorded. He is also recorded being ‘of Weins’ in 1688. He was probably related to John, who was at Weens in 1694. Walter (17th C.) recorded on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls at Borthaugh. Another Walter was listed as a ‘cottar’ there at the same time. He could be the Walter ‘in Burtoch’ whose will was recorded in 1692, and probably related to George ‘in Bortoch’, whose will is recorded in 1692, as well as to other Scotts associated with Borthaugh around that time, e.g. James. Walter of Headshaw and Whitehaugh (d.c.1691) purchased the lands of Whitehaugh from his uncle Walter of St. Leonards (possibly the same as Walter of Hartwood or Hartwoodburn). He was the representative of the Scotts of Headshaw in 1671. It is possible he was the Walter ‘of Westerheape’ recorded in a tack in 1673. He was succeeded by his son William of Whitehaugh in 1692. Other children were Robert (minister in Roberton) and Isobel (who succeeded her brother). He could be the Walter of Whitehaugh recorded in 1684 when he and Robert of Greenhill were witnesses for a baptism in Hawick for carrier John Aitchison. Walter of Raeburn, ‘Wat Wudspurs’ (d.bef. 1688). He was 3rd son of Sir William of Harden and Agnes Murray (‘Muckle Mou’d Meg’) and first of the Scotts of Raeburn. In 1661 he was served heir to his sister Janet. He was recorded in a deed in 1663. He is mentioned in a list of landowners of Hassendean Parish in 1666, and was a supporter of the suppression of the Parish. He acted as Chamberlain for the Scotts of Buccleuch in Dalkeith and Lugton. He is mentioned in documents of the Regality of Melrose in 1670–74. In the 1678 Land Tax Rolls he is recording paying tax for ‘Ilerig’ or ‘Flerig’ (presumably Ilrig) in Hawick Parish, as well as for Raeburn in St. Boswells (or Lessuden) Parish. He married Anne Isobel, daughter of William McDougall of Makerstoun (who may have been his cousin). He and his wife became Quakers (perhaps during the 1657 visit of George Fox to southern Scotland).
as a result he was imprisoned in Edinburgh Tolbooth and had his children removed from him by Sir William (his brother). He was moved to Jedburgh Jail, where he remained for more than 4 years. His children were: William, who succeeded to the Raeburn estates; Walter, ‘Beardie’, who was the great-grandfather of Sir Walter Scott the writer; Isabel; and Christian. Walter (17th C.) merchant of Hawick, recorded marrying Marion Armstrong in Edinburgh in 1652. It is not known how he was related to any of the other contemporary Scotts. He may be the Walter, merchant in Hawick, whose will is recorded in 1687. Walter (17th C.) described as ‘our master stabler’ in the 1651 will of Francis, Earl of Buccleuch, when he was granted 200 merks yearly. He probably worked at Newark and Dalkeith, where the Earl mostly lived, but it is unclear where he came from. He could be the Walter who was owed money for a year’s fee from the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1661. Walter (17th C.) probably a son of John of Brieryyards. He had a sasine in 1656 for a ‘merk land in Hassendeanbank’, which was probably Cockerheugh, which his father purchased from Thomas Turnbull in 1656. He is probably the Walter of Cockerheugh who paid the land tax in Hassendean Parish in 1678. He may be the Walter who (along with John, probably his brother) witnessed baptism for James of Brieryyards in Roberton Parish in 1681 and 1687, and perhaps another for James Martin in Appletreehall in 1682. Also in 1681 he gave a disposition to John in 1681, probably assigning Cockerheugh to his brother. He is probably the ‘Walter Scott Breariyards’ listed on the east-side of Hawick on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. Walter (17th C.) said to have been eldest son of Walter, and last of the Scotts of Synton, who died unmarried. Instead he was probably eldest son of George, the last of the original Synton Lairds, with his brother being George of Boonraw. Walter ‘Polesman’ (17th C.) Burgess of Hawick who is recorded in 1660 transferring land containing houses and yards to Robert Scott, son of the late James Scott, also Burgess of Hawick. His byname is written ‘Poalsman’, and the meaning is uncertain (although a connection with the coble ferry is not impossible). Walter (1644–93) of Highchester and of Harden, eldest son of Sir Gideon of Highchester. He was baptised by John Langands of Wilton. He was married to Mary Scott, Countess of Buccleuch, when he was just less than 14 and she was 11, apparently after he was kidnapped on his way to school. The marriage took place in secrecy at the Chapel of Wemyss, and without proclamation, which caused much debate at the time. It was dissolved by the Commissary in 1659, but ratified again when she reached the age of 12. He and his wife the Countess of Buccleuch were recorded in a tack of 1663 (although he was deceased before then). He was occasionally referred to as Earl of Buccleuch, but this title was not generally accepted. Instead, in 1660, he was created Earl of Tarras, Lord Alemoor and Campcastell, for his lifetime only (this followed a custom of granting such an honour to any commoner who married a Countess; the names of the titles came from lands held by his family). However, his young bride died after only about 2 years, leading to years of dispute over his entitlements to life-rents etc.; he finally renounced his claims to Buccleuch lands only in 1678. In about 1667 he went abroad, travelling in France, Italy and the Netherlands, and keeping a diary of his voyage, which survives. On returning to Britain in 1670, he visited the court, attempting to recover some of the £4000 annuity due from his marriage contract, but to no avail (and it is said that his descendants in the schoolroom at Mertoun used to be asked to work out the compound interest on 2 centuries of arrears!). He succeeded to Harden in 1672 (although there is some confusion here), with a charter in 1677 and confirming charter in 1683. He paid the land tax on land valued at £1074 in Wilton Parish in 1678 (formerly belonging to Scott of Harden and Eliott of Stobs), as well as £600 for Borthwickshields. His lands in Selkirkshire were valued at about £850 at that time. In 1678 he was one of the Commissioners for Roxburghshire, charged with raising money for the King. He substantially renovated Harden House around 1691. The initials ‘W.E.T.’ carved on a fireplace at Harden probably refer to him (‘Earl of Tarras’). He was tried for his part in the ‘Ryehouse Plot’ of 1683 (when several Scottish noblemen plotted to exclude the Duke of York from succeeding to Charles II) and support for the Duke of Monmouth (husband of Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch), gave his confession and threw himself on the mercy of the King; he thereby implicated Robert Baillie of Jerviswood (who was hanged), as well as the Lairds of Philiphaugh and Polwarth. He was imprisoned for treason and had his estates confiscated. However, because of the ‘great benefit that did arise by his full and sincere confession’ he was rehabilitated, receiving a pardon in 1685, having his personal estate restored in 1686 and all his honours and lands restored in 1687 (including Robertson and Howcleuch Mill). He became one of the first to engage in the Revolution of 1688. He was also one of the main instigators of the petition that was successful in having Robertson Parish created in 1690, with the consequence that Hassendean Parish was suppressed. In 1690 he was one of the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire and for Selkirkshire. He gained part (perhaps half) of the lands of Minto in 1691 from Rachel Inglis, widow of John Turnbull. In 1692 he served as a Commissioner for assessing the rentals for the Duchess of Buccleuch. There is a letter from his sister Margaret in Hawick in 1693. He also survived a claim on the estates of Harden from his uncle Walter of Raeburn. He is recorded in 1694 having paid tax on 17 hearths at Harden House; he also held the estate of Borthwickshiel and his lands in (the former) Hassendean Parish at that time included Hassendean Mains. In 1677 he married his second wife, Helen, daughter of Thomas Hepburne of Humbie; she became Countess of Tarras and appears to have remarried to Sir William Lockhart of Carstairs. They had sons: Gideon of Highcheste, who succeeded; William (b.1682), who died before 1710; Walter of Whitfield, who later succeeded to Harden on the death of his nephews Walter and John; Thomas (b.1681), who died unmarried; and Francis (b.1691), who died young. Their daughters were: Helen; Elizabeth; Mary, who married a Drummond; Agnes; Ann; and Margaret, who married Thomas Gordon. The succession of Harden after his death is complicated, but it eventually went to his second son Walter. His son Thomas is recorded becoming a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1702. His testament is recorded in 1693. Walter of Harwood, on Teviot (17th C.) eldest son of Robert and Beatrice Gledstains (and probably not closely related to the nearly contemporary Col. Walter of ‘Harwood’). He was also later known as Walter of Minto. Along with his father he is recorded in 1663 renouncing the burial place in the choir of the old kirk of Mertoun to Sir William Scott of Harden. In 1669 he was served heir to his father in Glendinning and other lands in Westerkirk Parish. He was recorded in 1669 as Bailie of the Regality of Hawick, appointed by William, Lord Drumlanrig; there was a dispute between him and the Bailies of Hawick over whether he had the right to hold his courts in the Tolbooth. In 1671 he gave his consent for a disposition involving the lands of Hornshole between the Turnbuls of Minto and the Scotts of Brieryards. He registered arms in 1672. In 1672 he was Sheriff-Depute when giving sasine to Sir Alexander Don of Newton for Altonburn and other lands. In 1672 he leased Braxholme Mains, Braxholme Park and the ‘Steill and Henhaugh’ from the Scotts of Buccleuch. He was recorded in several deeds in 1673. In 1673 he and his eldest son Robert purchased a large part of the Barony of Minto from John Turnbull of Minto. However, they appear to have resigned these lands, which were then sold to Walter Riddell (as confirmed in 1681). He served as Chamberlain to Scott of Buccleuch for ‘Teviotdalehead’ (i.e. Cavers, Hassendean, Hawick and Wilton Parishes) in at least the period 1671–77. In 1676 he served as caution for the Duke of Duchess of Buccleuch (and Monmouth) obtaining a licence to bring in 4800 cattle and 200 horses from Ireland to restock their farms in southern Scotland after the ‘Thirteen Drifty Days’; he was fined when it was found that some were more than a year old, such imports from Ireland being prohibited at that time. In 1677 he was recorded leasing the farm of Todshawhill, as well as Braxholme Mains and Park. In the 1678 Land Tax Rolls he is ‘of Harwood and fallnesh’ when he paid tax on £1550 13s 4d in Hawick Parish; these were probably the lands of Falnash and Harwood. In 1678 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire. He also served as Sheriff-Depute of Roxburghshire in the 1670s. He is probably the Walter of ‘Hairwood’ recorded in several bonds of 1682 and was served heir to his father Robert of Harwood in that year. William, his ‘brother-german’, became an apothecary’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1667. Another ‘brother-german’ may have been Gideon, who married Jeanette Elliott of Arkleton in 1677 (and was later ‘of Falnash’). He married Christian, daughter of Sir Andrew Ker. Their children included: Robert, the eldest son; Elizabeth, who married Gilbert Elliott of Stonedge in 1693; Walter (b.1673), baptised in Hawick; Andrew (b.1678), also baptised in Hawick; George (b.1681), also baptised in Hawick, who became a barber’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1698. The witnesses in 1678 were Walter of Goldielands and Robert of Horsleyhill. It is said that the family was ruined by his wife’s extravagance and that Harwood was sold off. He is probably the Walter ‘in Harwood’ whose ‘natural Daughter’ married weaver John Jolly in Hawick in 1721. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Cook and their children included: John (b.1669); William (b.1675)

James (b.1684); and Janet (b.1687). The witnesses in 1684 were Andrew Cook (probably related to his wife) and John Scott (perhaps related to him). Walter (17th C.) recorded as a glover on the list of Hawick men named in the 1673 trial following the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Walters. Walter and William are recorded separately as glovers on the same list. Walter ‘Reid Wat’ (17th C.) leased the farm of Chapelhill in at least the period 1671–77. He also leased part of Todshawhaugh in 1675. It is unclear whether his nickname referred to his haircolour or something else. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Walters, and could be descended from the earlier Walter of Chapelhill. Walter of Alton (17th C.) probably was the Walter whose initials are recorded on the lintel of ‘Auld Alton’ house, along with those of ‘A.M.’ and the date 1675. He was married to Anna (or Emma), daughter of James Middlemas portioner of Raperlaw, as recorded when the pair were issued a ‘letter of horning’ in 1671. According to the marriage contract of 1669 he was brother of Francis of Gorrenberry; hence he may not have been directly related to the earlier Scotts of Alton. His children, baptised in Robertson Parish (when it still contained Hassendean) included: Margaret (b.1683); and Thomas (b.1684). The witnesses in 1683 were Adam and William Scott (who may have been relatives), and in 1684 were James Byers and Robert Davidson. He is probably the Walter of Alton who witnessed a baptism in 1687 for Robert Cook and Isobel Scott (to whom he may have been related). In 1678 he paid the land tax in Hassendean Parish (presumably for Alton), as well as for Raperlaw in Lilliesleaf Parish. He is probably the same as the Walter of Alton recorded later in the 17th century, although it is possible there were 2 separate men here. He was probably the Walter ‘of Altone’ who in 1686 was granted by James VII a commission of the office of the Bailie of Regality of Hawick (this on account of Anna, Duchess of Buccleuch, the heritable Bailie, losing her right because of not taking ‘the test’). He was one of the heritors accused in 1690 of inciting the disturbance at the removal of the roof of Hassendean Kirk. He may be the same as ‘Walter Scott of Alton in Raperlaw’. In 1690 in Edinburgh he married Helen Fisher; this was either his second marriage or there were 2 different Walters. He was probably the Laird of Alton in 1694 when ‘Altone his hous’ was listed on the Hearth Tax rolls, with tax paid on 6 hearths. In 1698 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire. Walter (17th C.) recorded in a tack of 1673 being ‘of Westerheave’. This is presumably Wester Heap and hence he may be the same as Walter of Whitehaugh. Walter of Todrig (1630s–1722) eldest son of Thomas, whom he succeeded by 1691. He was recorded as son of Thomas in a deed in 1673. He acted as one of the ‘curators’ for Alexander Scott of Synton and was also tutor for Mark Pringle of Clifton (his cousin). He was probably the Walter ‘fear of Todrig’ who was recorded in 1682 as the nephew of Robert Pringle of Clifton’s testament. In 1690 he was a Commissioner of Supply for Selkirkshire along with Thomas (probably his father) and in 1704 he was again a Commissioner for Selkirkshire. He was still recorded in the discharge of a loan, along with William Elliot of Harwood in 1707. It seems likely he was the ‘Laird of Todrick younger’ who was recorded paying tax for 5 hearths at Essenside in 1694. Also in 1694 he witnessed a baptism for John of Synton. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir Thomas Ker of Fairnilee in 1682. He had one son and 7 daughters: Thomas, who succeeded; Jane (or ‘Jean’), who married William Elliot, 3rd Laird of Harwood by post-nuptial contract in 1700 (she is described as ‘Mrs. Scott’ and so this may have been her second marriage); Elizabeth, who married Henry Elliot of Peel, brother of William Elliot of Harwood; Nelly, who married John Elliot, another brother of William Elliot of Harwood, and secondly married Rev. William Home; Janet, who married Mr. Purdom from Hawick; Christian, who married Edinburgh solicitor George Denniston; Margaret, who married David Scott of Merrylaw; and Violet (b.1691), baptised in Ashkirk, who married in Lothian. In the 1691 baptismal record he is already ‘of Todrige’ and his wife is ‘his lady’, with witnesses Robert Scott ... (perhaps his brother) and Patrick Ker of Fairnilee (his brother-in-law). Walter ‘of Altencrofts’ (17th C.) local landowner of the mid-to-late 1600s, presumably connected with Alton Croft south of Hawick. He was probably different from ‘Walter of Alton’, although there may be confusion between the 2 farms. In 1678 he was ‘of Alton crofts & wyntoun’ (or ‘Altencrofts and Alintoun’) when his lands in Hawick Parish were valued at £110. In 1681 it was stated that ‘the sons and grandson of the deceased John Scott of Gorrenberrie, and Walter Scott of Altencrofts’ were among the potential heirs of Francis, Earl of Buccleuch. He seems to have witnessed a baptism in Hawick Parish (for John Wilson) in 1682. In 1688 he was baptismal witness for Charles Scott of Crumhaugh. In 1689 he had a daughter Janet (with Jean Dalglish) baptised, the record labelled ‘fornicators’; the witnesses were James Graham in Altoncroft and Robert Cook. He may be the Walter of Alton Croft whose will was recorded in 1696; he was son of Robert and had a sister Marion, whose son William Wright inherited Alton Croft. Walter (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish when it included Hassendean. He married Janet Grieve and their son William was baptised in 1687. The witnesses were Robert and William, who were probably either relatives or prominent Scotts in the area. Walter (17th C.) said by Capt. Scott of Satchells to be a ‘shepherd swain’, living in 1688 when his book was published. His pedigree is given by Satchells: son of Adam, who was son of William, who was brother of Thomas in Wester Groundstone and son of Walter, who was son of Robert, who was son of Walter, the first Laird of Whitehaugh; however, there is no support for this, and it does not connect with other early recorded Lairds of Whitehaugh. Walter of Eilrig (17th C.) local landowner of the mid-to-late 1600s, according to James Wilson. He was presumably a descendant of Robert. Bailie Walter (d.bef. 1685) Hawick man, probably a merchant of some kind. Along with Walter Laing, he was a Town Councillor when the ‘Steeple Loft’ was built in St. Mary’s. In 1685 (by which time he was deceased) the pair had an agreement from the Town Council to be reimbursed for the costs of building this balcony. Bailie James (and his son Bailie Robert) may have been related to him. It is possible that he is the same as one of the other contemporary Walters. Walter of Chamberlain Newton (17th C.) recorded in 1693, along with his son, also Walter. In the service of heirs for John Ker of Cavers Carre, inheriting his uncle’s Lordship of Jeburgh, is contained a reference to annual rentals of 300 merks, corresponding to 5000 merklands of Appletreehall, pertaining to the Walter Scotts, senior and junior ‘de Chamberland-Newtoun’. He may be the same as the Walter of Newton recorded in the 1660s, and his son could be the Walter of Newton recorded in the 1730s. Walter ‘the Butterman’ (17th C.) said to be ‘of the sort of Scotts of Robertowne’, he is recorded in the Town Book in 1694, saying he and his wife would leave the Town in connection to any theft ‘if bu the worth and value of ane horn spoon, be laid to our charge and proven. It is unclear if he dealt in butter, or if his nickname referred to something else. Perhaps the same Walter is recorded in 1693 when his wife was found guilty of stealing ‘and little new pan’; as well as being fined, she was ordered to remain in the stocks until market day and then to sit at the Cross with the pan about her neck. Walter (17th C.) resident of Doorpool in Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Walter (17th C.) listed as resident at Outerside on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Walter (17th C.) tenant in Copshaw Park according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He is recorded in 1693 when his wife was found guilty of stealing ‘and little new pan’. As well as being fined, she was ordered to remain in the stocks until market day and then to sit at the Cross with the pan about her neck. Walter (17th C.) listed on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls as resident of the lands of Castleton. He paid tax on 2 hearths. Walter (17th C.) resident at Branxholme Town according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Probably the same Walter was recorded as herd in Branxholme Town in 1703 when his son John was baptised in Hawick. The witnesses were James Ogilvie and John, both tenants in Branxholme. Walter (17th C.) listed at Branxholme among ‘The poor in Hauick Parich’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He is listed separately from the Walter in Branxholme Town. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident at Whitchesters according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He may be related to Robert and John, who were also listed there. He is probably the tenant in Whitchesters recorded in the baptismal records for 1706. He is probably the Walter who (along with John) was in Whitchesters in 1713 when he witnessed a baptism for herd William Cowan. He married Janet Scott and their children included Margaret (b.1706), with witnesses being Alexander Thomson and Robert Scott, who were also tenants in Whitchester. Other children to couples of the same name include Margaret (b.1715), Agnes (b.1718) and John (b.1724). Walter (17th C.) smith who was listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. Walter (17th C.) listed among the ‘Deficients in Hauick Parich’ in 1694. He appears to be at ‘The Tour of Hauick’ and is ‘called Poor’ (which appears to be a nickname). He may be related to John ‘called o the Toor’ in Hawick in 1609. Walter (17th C.) shepherd at Drinkstone according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Perhaps the same Walter at Drinkstone witnessed a baptism (for Archibald Riddell in Borthaugh) in 1704. He may be the Walter, servant to William, tenant in Drinkstone, whose daughter Bessie was baptised in Wilton Parish in 1709, and who lived at Leaheads. Walter (17th C.) resident at Clarilaw on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Walter ‘Chief’ (17th/18th C.) listed as renter of half the farm of Overhall in 1694, with Adam leasing the other half. The pair continued to rent half of the farm in 1696 and 1698. He must have been related to this Adam, as well as to the James, who was leasing half of Overhall in 1690 and 1692 (for whose widow, Margaret, he served as cautioner). His nickname may have given rise to the name for the ‘Chief’s Pool’ in the Teviot near there; we can only speculate about whether it might have been his favourite swimming hole or fishing spot. James ‘the Chief’, who died in 1778, may have been a descendant. Walter of Langshaw (d.c.1695) son of Francis and grandson of Patrick of Kirkstyle. Sir John of Ancrum was his uncle. In 1690 he was served heir to his father’s lands of Falnash, Tanlaw Naze, ‘Calfshaw’ and ‘Langshaugh water’ in the Parish of Hawick. In 1695 his brother Thomas was served heir to their father’s lands of Langshaw, suggesting that he may have been deceased by then. Walter (17th/18th C.) tenant in Wauchope. He is described as ‘in Wauchope’ in 1665 when he witnessed a document relating to Harwood lands and in 1677 when he witnessed the ‘bond of provision’ for Sir Gilbert Elliot of Stobs. He was a cautioner for Gilbert Elliot of Stonedge in 1688 and 1693 and witness to a bond by Dame Magdalene Nicholson (widow of Stobs) in 1690. He was recorded being ‘in Wauchope’ in a bond of 1682. There was a ‘letter of homing’ for him and Henry Elliot of Harwood by Archibald Douglas of ‘Garvat’ (Gervald perhaps) in 1695. In 1700 probably the same Walter was also witness to the marriage contract between William Elliot of Harwood and Jean Scott of Todrig. He married Janet, daughter of Walter, 3rd Laird of Nether Bonchester, who was sister of James, writer in Jedburgh. Their sons were: Adam, tenant in Wauchope and purchaser of Stanedge; and William, later of Stanedge, who was Chamberlain to Scott of Buccleuch. There is no reason to believe he was directly connected with the later Scotts of Wauchope. He is probably the Scott of Wauchope commemorated on an elaborately carved through-stone once visible in Hobkirk kirkyard, erected by Thomas of Stonedge in 1741; the inscription apparently indicated that he was a relative of Scott of Buccleuch. Walter ‘Auld Wat’ (17th/18th C.) recorded in 1705 when he witnessed a baptism in Hawick Parish for William Douglas of Bonjedward. The entry appears to say ‘called old Watt’. He may have been related to Douglas’ wife Beatrix Scott. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded in Appletreehall in 1705 and as tenant there in 1711. His children included Walter (b.1705) and William (b.1711). He was probably related to William, who was also tenant in Appletreehall in 1711. Walter (d.1717) Beadle of Hawick Kirk. In 1708 he was the ‘Bellar’ who presented the illegitimate child of Margaret Brydon and William Scott to be baptised. He is recorded receiving his salary in the first year of the oldest existing Session financial records in 1711, but it is unknown how much earlier he had served. He was ‘Bedell of ye parish’ in 1715 when he witnessed a posthumous baptism for a child of merchant Thomas ‘Huison’. In 1716 he was recorded as ‘beddell in Hawick’ when he witnessed the baptism of Robert ‘Old Mortality’, son of Walter Paterson of Burnflat; it seems that he might have been related to Walter Paterson’s wife Margaret Scott. He also witnessed another couple of baptisms in 1716. His son John succeeded him as Beadle at the end of 1717. He was listed as deceased and ‘sometimes Beddell’ in 1719 when his daughter Agnes married gardener Andrew ‘Colwort’ (or Collier). Walter of Nether Bonchester (1650–1733) eldest son of Thomas of Nether Bonchester. He succeeded his father as 3rd Laird in 1680, with the charter and sasine for Nether Bonchester being issued by the superior William Kerr of Abbotrule in 1681. He was witness to a sasine of 1693 for Gilbert Elliot of Stonedge. He also witnessed a sasine for Hobbsburn in 1693. He was listed on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. In 1699 he was entered as a Burgess of Hawick, with the payment being in the form of one of his best ash trees for the Town to use to rebuild the bell-house of the steeple of St. Mary’s. He married Jane Turnbull and their children included: Walter, who succeeded; James, who was a writer in Jedburgh; John, who was transported to America (and may sometimes be confused with John of Ashtrees); and Janet, who married Walter Scott, farmer in Wauchope. The Hobkirk Parish ‘mort-cloth’ is recorded being used for his burial. Walter (17th C.) recorded as tenant in Wauchope in 1681, when he had a bond with Walter Lorraine in Harden, loaning him £3, signed at Hartshaughmill. He is probably the same as one of the contemporary Walters. Walter ‘Beardie’ or ‘Bearded Wat’ (c.1653–1729) 2nd son of Walter, 1st Laird of Raeburn. Having Jacobite sympathies, it is said that his nickname came from a vow not to shave until the Stuarts were restored. It is said that he was a good classical scholar. He was listed as ‘brother to Raeburn’ in 1695 when he contributed £200 to the Darien Scheme. He was a guardian to his nephew Walter, 3rd Laird of Raeburn. He is probably the Walter, brother of the deceased William of Raeburn who in 1727 was listed among the people owing money to the deceased William Nisbet of Dirleton. He married Margaret, daughter of Campbell of Silvercaigs. Their children were: Walter, farmer at Baillieknowe; Robert of Sandyknowe, who was grandfather of Sir Walter of Abbotsford; William, farmer at Easter Muirden, near Kelso; Mary; Christian; and Margaret. Walter of West Port (b.c.1670) possibly 2nd son of Walter of Goldielands. He is probably the Walter ‘westport’ recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. It is possible he was the ‘Walter Scott Sone to Goldielands’ who rented the farm of Castlehill from the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1696. He married Jean, daughter of Walter Scott of Crumhaugh in 1701 (possibly a cousin, or otherwise this may be the only connection with the Crumhaugh and Goldielands Scotts). At the end of that year their son Walter was born, and he was to become the first Scott of Wauchope. It seems reasonable to assume that he was related to the other West Port Scotts, including Hawick’s second known Cornet, but the precise relationship is unclear. He is probably the Walter, son and heir of the deceased Walter of West Port, merchant in Hawick, who is recorded in 1716, with a bond he had in 1709 with Walter Scott (uncle of Walter of Crumhaugh) for the lands of Curriescleugh in Cavers Parish. These generations are quite uncertain; he may be the same as Walter ‘in Crumhaugh and Goldielands’, or perhaps distinct, but partly confounded with him in some accounts. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick. His son Robert was baptised in 1699, with witnesses Walter Scott and Thomas Beattie. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Howpasley. His son James was baptised in Roberton Parish in 1703. He may be the same as one of the other Walters. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living in Cavers itself in 1702 when his son James was baptised. Perhaps the same Walter in Cavers had a daughter Isabel baptised in 1709. Walter (17th/18th C.) tenant in Nether Southfield. In 1708 he witnessed a baptism for William Hood, weaver in Nether Southfield and another for John Dryden, smith at Newmill. He was also tenant there (along with James) in about 1710, as attested in evidence given regarding the state of Hawick’s Common in 1767. In 1713 he and James, both in Nether Southfield, witnessed a baptism for another James Scott in the same place. In 1718 he witnessed a baptism for James, who was also tenant in Nether Southfield. He may be the Walter who in 1720 witnessed a baptism for William Martin in Over Southfield. He is probably the Walter who (along with James) witnessed a baptism in 1726 for John Elliot, cooper in Nether Southfield. His daughter Margaret was baptised in 1709, with witnesses Dand and James Gray from Whitlaw. Walter (17th/18th C.) recorded in Binks in Cavers Parish in 1709 when he married Isobel Beattie. His wife was from Hawick Parish and was ‘servitrix’ to Bailie Graham. Walter (17th/18th C.) recorded as tenant in Alton Croft in about 1710 according to evidence given in 1767 about the pasturing of livestock on Hawick Common. Walter of Merrylaw (17th/18th C.) recorded as ‘Walter Scott of Mirrielaw’ when he rented part of Whithope in 1698. He was surely related to the slightly earlier William and the later Walter. He could be the Walter who was at Whithope in 1703 when his daughter Janet was baptised in Roberton Parish. He was an elder of Roberton Kirk according to parish records from 1707. In 1713 he was ‘of merrila in the parish of Robertoun’ when one of his children was baptised in Hawick (suggesting that he was indeed farming at Whithope). In 1709 he witnessed a baptism for Robert Laidlaw in Haregrain. Probably the same Walter ‘of merriela’ married Margaret Grieve and had a son Walter, who was baptised in 1713. The witnesses in 1713 were Water Grieve in Branxholme Park (perhaps related to his wife) and William Ogilvie in Craik. Walter (1670–bef. 1741) described as ‘in Crumhaugh’, and ‘in Goldielands’, he was 2nd son of Walter and Janet Glendinning. He was thus brother to Charles and uncle to Walter of Crumhaugh and Howpasley (with whom he is easily confused). In 1700 he was ‘in Goldielands’ when he witnessed a baptism for Walter Martin in Alton Croft. He is probably the Walter ‘in Crumhaugh’ who (along with Michael) witnessed a baptism in 1705 for innkeeper William called ‘of Goldielands’ (who was probably related to him). He also witnessed baptisms in 1707 for William Henderson, younger in Flex and Glover James Scott, and in 1708 for Robert, tenant in Blackcleuch (which his family probably owned at that time) and for Walter Grieve, tenant in Coiterscleuch. In 1709 his servant James Hogg got married.
He may be the Walter ‘of Crumheugh’ recorded in a 1710 land valuation of Hawick Parish, when his lands were valued at 400 merks. In 1716 he was described as ‘now in Hawick’ when he had a sasine for Curriescleugh in Cavers Parish, which he had been promised by Walter Scott of West Port (who was surely a relative, but demonstrating that they were not the same man). He was probably the Walter ‘of Crumhaugh’ who in 1716 witnessed a baptism for William Elliot, tenant in Crumhaugh. In 1720 he was ‘uncle to Wm Scott of Crumhauch’ when he witnessed a baptism for another Walter, tenant in Newbigging. In 1721 he was ‘uncle to Crumhauch’ when he witnessed a baptism for weaver William Crozier (with his nephew Walter ‘of Crumhaugh’ also being a witness in the same year). In 1728 he was granted a disposition by James Burn for the lands in Hawick called ‘Croftangry’. He is probably the Walter of Crumhaugh who in 1734 was one of those appointed by the Hawick Council to sort out the rebuilding of the Bailies’ seat in St. Mary’s. He is probably the Walter who in 1731 witnessed a baptism for Walter Scott, tenant in Newbigging and Anna Scott (his daughter). He may be the ‘Walter Scott, Crumhaugh, a Counselour’ who was mentioned in 1735 as one of the keepers of the keys to the Charter Chest. He firstly married Christian, daughter of Robert Bennet of Chesters, and she died in 1706, aged 34; her memorial stone was examined by her great-grandson Walter Scott of Wauchope in 1851, and uncovered during renovations to St. Mary’s Kirk about 1863. Their children included: Anna, the eldest daughter, who married Walter Scott, tenant in Newbigging; Charles (b.1696), who died young; Walter (b.1700), baptised in Hawick, who succeeded and became the 1st Laird of Wauchope (although he appears sometimes to be confused with Walter, son of Walter of West Port); Joan (or Jean, b.1702); Robert (b.1704), baptised in Hawick, who became tenant in Crumhaugh and died without issue; Margaret (b.1706); and Charles (b.1708), who also died without children. The witnesses in 1700 were Walter of Crumhaugh (his father) and Walter’s son William (i.e. his brother), in 1702 were Robert of Tandlaw and John ‘called Uncle John’, who were presumably relatives, and in 1704 were Walter and James Glendinning. The baptism in 1706 was in Ancrum Parish, where he is described as son-in-law to the Laird of Chesters. The 1708 baptism in Hawick was witnessed by carrier David Minto and Andrew Riddell in Goldielands. His second wife was Elizabeth (or Bessie) Scott, the marriage being recorded in Hawick Parish in 1709; she was sister to Walter Scott of Cockerheugh, and he was described as ‘Uncle to Crumhaugh’. Their children included Walter (b.1712), a wright, who was deceased by 1743. The witnesses in 1712 were Andrew Riddell (tenant in Goldielands) and Walter Glendinning. His wife Elizabeth occupied the mill at Croft Angry as ‘liferentix’, and her step-son Robert eventually inherited it; she could be the ‘Ladye Croumach’ recorded in 1737 when the Town Council paid for sending ‘a sodger and passenger and letter’ to her. Walter of Clari-law (17th/18th C.) probably son or nephew of Robert of Lies. Some time before 1700 he purchased Ashieburn, which became the seat of this branch of the family. He was succeeded by his son William, Walter of Shielwood (17th/18th C.) eldest lawful son of James of Shaws and Marion Scott of Shielwood. He is recorded in 1705. Walter ‘Black Walter’ (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. His nickname is recorded in several baptisms. He married Christian Simpson and their children included: Margaret (b.1701); Isobel (b.1703); Christian (b.1707), a daughter; Margaret (b.1710); and Isobel (again, b.1711). The witnesses in 1707 were Bailie George Martin and baker William Hodge. Some other children baptised around the same time may also be his. Walter (17th/18th C.) recorded in Lymiecleuch in 1708 when he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Robert, tenant in Blackcleuch. Walter (1682–1766) 2nd son of William, who settled at Milngavie. He moved to Girnwood in 1712. He released the lands of Girnwood from the Buccleuch Estates in 1744. In 1723 he married Jane, daughter of Philip Scott of Oakwood, and she died in 1776, aged 74. Their children (mostly baptised in Robertson) included: William (b.1724), who married his cousin Elizabeth; Philip (b.1727); perhaps another son, whose name is not known; Jean (b.1732); Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’, b.1734), who married her cousin William; Walter (b.1736), who succeeded as tenant with his brother Thomas; and Thomas (b.1742), co-tenant of Girnwood with his brother. Janet of ‘Greenwood’, who married Robert Elliot, tenant in Hermitage, may have been another daughter. Grisell (b.1726), daughter to Walter in Girnwood, was probably also his daughter. Walter of Woll (d.1744) eldest son of John of Woll and Agnes Scott of Harwood. His brother was Gideon, tenant in Ladhope. He was ‘younger, of Wool’ in 1695 when he contributed £100 to the Darien Scheme (along with his brother Gideon). He was ‘young’er of Woall’ in 1696 when he rented the farm of Whithope in the Borthwick valley from the Duchess of Buccleuch. He was ‘young’er of Wooll’ when on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1698 and in 1701 was ‘young’er of Woll’ when he had a bond with Sir William Scott of Harden. In fact his father resided the lands of Woll to him when he married in 1694. He served as Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch for the lands of Ettrick Forest for at least the years 1702–14, taking over from John of Woll (presumably his father). He was ‘young’er of Woall, baillie to the duchess of Buccleugh’ in 1704 when he was on the Commission of Supply for Selkirkshire and was also probably the ‘young’er of Well’ on the Commission for Roxburghshire in the same year along with his father John. And along with Walter Scott of Harden he gave 1,000 merks to Alexander Orrock in 1705, this forming part of the Orrock Bequest for Hawick Grammar School. He was presumably a heritor of Hawick Parish. He was also a ‘curator’ for Alexander Scott of Synton. He received Borthwickshields and Roberton through a ‘wadset’ with Gideon Scott of Highchester in 1705 and he was proprietor of these lands in 1720, when it is recorded that he arranged for an exchange of grazing rights for the convenience of the minister of Roberton. He was still ‘young’er of Woll’ when he had a court case with Gideon of Highchester over ownership of lands, with the adjudication in 1707 ruling that Harden, Todshaw, Borthwick Mains, Roberton, Howcleuch, Aleemoor belonged to him (as well as lands elsewhere). In 1711 he was one of the original members of the short-lived ‘Honest Country Club’. He was probably the Walter ‘of Waals’ who had a bond with Walter of Whitfield and William of Thirlestane in 1715, and ‘of Wooll’ in 1724–26 when the 3 were tutors of John Scott of Harden and made claims on the Harden estate. In 1727 he was listed among the people owing money to the deceased William Nisbet of Dirleton. He may have been the Walter ‘of Waall’ recorded in 1737 in a document relating to sums owed by the late Duchess of Buccleuch. In 1694 he married Elizabeth (or ‘Eliza’), daughter of Robert Scott of Horsleyhill. He had 4 sons and 2 daughters: William, who succeeded and was Sheriff of Selkirkshire; Robert, baptised in 1696 (not 1676, as stated in some genealogies) and settled in Tommeymore (or Tamnymore), Londonderry; John (b.1702), baptised in Ashkirk; Walter (b.1711), baptised in Selkirk; Isobel; and Jean. In 1711 he was living ‘at present’ in Selkirk, where his son was baptised by the Rev. Lithgow of Ashkirk; the witnesses included Andrew Pringle, brother to the Laird of Clifton and Haining and several town officials of Selkirk. Walter (17th/18th C.) cooper in Hawick. In 1711 he witnessed a baptism for carrier Henry Paterson. He may be the same as one of the other Walters. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident at Aleemoor. He was recorded there in 1711 and 1713, was at Easter Aleemoor in 1716 and at Alemoor again in 1720. He was ‘young’er in Almure’ in 1713, suggesting that his father was also Walter. His children, baptised in Robertson Parish, included: Walter (b.1711); Janet (b.1713); Margaret (b.1714); Christian (b.1716); twins Thomas and Bessie (b.1717); and Robert (b.1720). Walter (17th/18th C.) recorded in 1720 as ‘servitor to Mr Rot Cunningham’, the Minister of Hawick. This was when he witnessed 2 baptisms (along with John Scott, the Beadle) for ‘Fornicators’ and another (along with surgeon William Cunningham) for weaver John Anderson. Probably the same servant Walter (along with William, son to Rev. Cunningham) witnessed another baptism in 1720 for Walter Henderson. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. In 1721 he married Agnes Gledstains in Wilton Parish. He could be the Walter in Milington in 1722 when his son Archibald was baptised in Robertson. Walter (18th C.) resident of Newmill. He married Helen Rae and their daughter Helen was baptised in Hawick in 1726. The witnesses were Robert and William Thomson. He is probably the Walter who (along with Robert Thomson) witnessed a baptism for William Thomson in 1731. Walter (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was recorded at Wester Aleemoor in 1734. His children included Helen (b.1733) and Mungo (b.1734). He could be the same as the earlier Walter at Aleemoor, if this was a second marriage; otherwise he was that Walter’s son or other close relative. Walter (b.1696) eldest son of Walter ‘Beardie’, and grandson of the 1st Laird of Raeburn. He became tenant farmer at Baillieknowe. He married Janet, daughter of surgeon Thomas Inglis. Their children were: Robert (b.c.1731); William (b.c.1732); Mary; and Janet. It is said that this branch of the family emigrated to America. Walter (17th/18th C.) miller in Selkirk. In 1727 he was ‘late tacksman of the mills of Selkirk’ when he had a receipt for money he gave to repair the mills of the Burgh of Selkirk. Walter (18th C.) tenant in Eldinhope in 1737 when he was recorded in a legal case in Selkirk. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Janet Dickson in 1736, the marriage being proclaimed in both Wilton and Minto. Their children included: Richard (b.1739); Robert (b.1742); Richard (again, b.1745); James (b.1748); and Margaret (b.1751). Walter (17th/18th C.) tenant in Newbigging. He is probably the Walter in Newbigging who witnessed baptisms in 1708 for John Wilson in Newbigging, in 1711 for Adam Laidlaw in Southfield, in 1713 for James Sanderson in Newbigging, in 1718 for John Nichol (who lived at Allanhaugh Mill), and in 1719 for weaver John Stevenson. He is recorded ‘in Newbigging’ in 1723 when he became an elder of Hawick Kirk. He was tenant in 1726–32 when James Robson was shepherd at Newbigging. He was also a Burgess of Hawick. He could be related to James, who was tenant at Newbigging a century earlier and Walter, who was there about a generation later. In 1716 he married Anne (or Anna), eldest daughter of Walter Scott, uncle to the Laird of Crumhaugh. Their children included: Walter (b.1720); John (b.1724); Janet (b.1725); Bessie (b.1726); and Robert (b.1731). Other children probably born to the same parents were Robert (b.1717), Christian (b.1722) and Helen (b.1723). The 1720 baptism was witnessed by Walter, uncle to Walter of Crumhaugh (his father-in-law) and James Davidson in Newbigging, the 1725 baptism by ‘Mr. Venice preacher’ and Gilbert Elliot in Winningtonrig, and the 1731 baptism by another Walter Scott and John Glendinning. He may be the Walter in ‘New...’ who witnessed a baptism for Robert in Branxholme in 1728. Walter (17th/18th C.) recorded being paid in 1725 ‘for making the lifting brod’ (i.e. collection plate) in the Bailies’ Loft of St. Mary’s. And in 1734 he put up the ‘brest in the bilife’s loft’. He was either a joiner, or possibly this was the contemporary Beadle of the same name. Walter (17th/18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He was a member of the Council when it granted a bond (dated 1710, but recorded in the Town Book in 1711) to provide money for the Master of the new Grammar School. He witnessed a baptism for John Scott ‘Whitegates’ in 1712 and for candlemaker George Turnbull in 1713. He was a Councillor in 1727 when he was ordered to refrain from using the ‘counsellors’ seat in the bailies’ loft, in respect of his twice breaking prison’ after being convicted ‘of a riot, and arrested’; he may also have been removed as a Councillor. It is possible that the same shoemaker Walter witnessed a baptism for merchant Robert (along with merchant George) in 1747. Probably the same shoemaker married Margaret Scott (also from Hawick Parish) in Hawick in 1704 and their children include John (b.1705). He also witnessed a baptism for carrier James Boyd in 1705. It seems likely that the same shoemaker married Margaret Davidson (from Wilton Parish) in Hawick in 1706, with children James (b.1707), Robert (b.1714), William (b.1718), Elizabeth (b.1720), John (b.1721) and Mary (b.1725). The witness in 1714 was Henry Orrock. The witnesses in 1718 were glover John Scott and shoemaker Robert Oliver and in 1725 were glover John (again) and wigmaker Robert Miles. Walter of Bonchester (d.1743) son of Walter of Nether Bonchester. He farmed along with his father until 1724, when they ended their partnership. He then farmed at Wauchope along with his brother-in-law Walter Scott, tenant in Wauchope. He succeeded his father as 4th Laird in 1733. In 1726 at Doorpool he married Helen, only daughter of Adam Turnbull, tenant at Doorpool; she was sister of Rev. William Turnbull, minister of Abbotrule. Their children included: Walter (b.1727), who died young of smallpox; Thomas of Bonchester (b.1729), who succeeded and sold the Bonchester estate; Adam (b.1731), who went to the West Indies and married Mrs. Thorpe; Margaret (1733–38); Rev. William (b.1735), minister at Abbotrule and Southdean; Agnes (b.1735), twin of William, who remained unmarried and lived at Gallahill, near Jedburgh; Janet (b.1737), who married John Rutherford, saddler in Jedburgh; Helen (b.1740), who died young; and Walter (b.1741). He was recorded in a document of 1756 (by which time he was surely deceased), between his 2nd (surviving) son Adam and Rev. William Turnbull of Abbotrule (his brother-in-law). His farm diary from the period 1730–43 is in the National Library of Scotland. Walter of Harden (d.1719) elder son of Gideon of Highchester and Harden. He inherited the Harden and Highchesters estates following the death of his father in 1707 (although some accounts claim he inherited the estates from his cousins). He must have been a minor when he succeeded, since the estates were run by his ‘tutors’ in the period 1710–19, their ‘sederunt books’ being in the National Archives. He continued to be referred to as ‘of Highchester’ until the death of his cousin Robert in 1710, when he succeeded to Mertoun and the rest of the family estates (becoming the 8th of Harden). He appears to have become bankrupt, resulting in the sale in early 1719 of his lands of Harden, Mabonlaw, Highchesters, Todshaw, Borthwickshiels, Robertson, Howcleuch, Easter and Wester Alemoor and others. On his death Harden passed to his brother John. Walter (17th/18th C.) tenant in Hawick Shiel. He is recorded in 1704 when he witnessed a baptism for Robert (perhaps a relative), who also lived there. He was also at Hawick Shiel in 1705 and in 1706 when he witnessed a baptism for John Irvine in Hawick Shiel. He and Simon Miller were described as tenants in Hawick Shiel in 1706 when they witnessed a baptism for James Davidson, also tenant in Hawick Shiel. He was in Hawick Shiel in 1709 when his won child was baptised. He was joint tenant of Hawick Shiel around 1710, along with Simon Miller; this was attested in evidence given regarding the state of Hawick’s Common in 1767. He and Walter Nixon were tenants there in 1712 when they witnessed a baptism for William Hislop. He is probably the tenant called Scott mentioned in 1717 when he had ‘ploghd. up an march corner hott standing upon the nortt side of said Common, opposite to the towm of Nethr Southfield’. In 1718 he and Walter Nixon (both recorded as tenants in Hawick Shiel) witnessed a baptism for Matthew Charlton. He married Agnes Nichol and their children included: Elizabeth (b.1705); and Walter (b.1709). The witnesses in 1705 were Gilbert Elliot in Nether Southfield and glover John Hart and in 1709 were Walter Nixon in Hawick Shiel and Dand Gray in Whitlaw. Walter (d.bef. 1738) doctor in Hawick. He is described as an ‘apothecarie in Hawick’ and ‘chirurgeon’ in some baptismal records. For example, in 1707 he witnessed a baptism for John Turnbull, ‘oye’ to Rev. James Kerr of Abbot rule. He married Sara Middleton and their children included: Hugh (b.1703); Gideon (b.1706), perhaps the druggist in Hawick; Mary (b.1710); James (b.1719); and Elizabeth (b.1723). The witnesses in 1703 were Francis Gledstains of Whitlaw and William Shiel in Stobicote, in 1706 were Gideon of Falnash (who may therefore have had the child named in his honour) and Adam Elliot of Arkleton, in 1719 were John Watson (Clerk to the Regality) and Thomas Shiel (‘apprentis to ye sd Walter’) and in 1723 were ‘Mr’ Charles Telfer and ‘Mr’ John Purdom. He is described as ‘surgeon in Haick’ in 1738, when his son William became a tailor’s apprentice in Edinburgh. He may be the same Walter (with no occupation given) who was still alive in 1731 when his son Walter became a wright’s apprentice in Edinburgh. He was probably the surgeon in Hawick whose daughter Sara married another Walter (eldest son of Philip, Chamberlain to Scott of Harden) in an ‘irregular marriage’ in 1720. It is unclear how he might have been related to other local Scotts, e.g. James, who was also a surgeon in Hawick at the same time. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Todshaw in 1710 when his daughter Janet was baptised and in 1715 when his son John was baptised. There are lots of other children baptised in Roberton Parish around the same time who could be his. Walter (17th/18th C.) married Jean Lillico in Hawick in 1712. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was recorded at Woodburn in 1716 and 1720. His children included John (b.1716) and Walter (b.1720). Walter of Crumhaugh and Howpasley (1689–bef. 1743) son of Charles and Rachel Langlands. He is easy to confuse with his uncle Walter, whose name was also associated with Crumhaugh. In 1717 he inherited the lands of Crumhaugh, Howpasley and others, which had been in ‘non-entry’ for 18½/2 years; this suggests he was a minor when he succeeded his grandfather. He may be the Walter of Crumhaugh (unless that was his uncle) who witnessed a baptism for miller Robert Elliot in 1718. He was recorded as a Hawick Parish heritor in 1718. He is probably the Walter ‘of Crumhauch’ who (along with Bailie George Martin) witnessed a baptism for workman William Inglis in 1721; in the same year the other Walter ‘uncle to Crumhaugh’ also acted as witness to a baptism. He also witnessed a baptism in Wilton in 1721 (along with Gideon of Falnash) for Robert of Burnhead and his wife Agnes Scott. He was living at Midshiels in 1722 when one of his children was baptised. A rent book exists for the period 1717–45, with him as landlord to John Moffat of Garwald, so he must also have owned property elsewhere (unless this was a different Crumhaugh). He is probably the Laird of Crumhaugh who lived at Fenwick in the earlier part of the 18th century (according to information given in 1767). In 1716 in Cavers Parish, he married Beatrix (or Beatrice), eldest daughter of Gideon Scott of Falnash (who was Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch for decades); she was described as ‘in Broadhaugh’ at that time. Their children included: an unnamed child (b.1718); Charles (b.1719), who succeeded; Gideon (b.1720) in Priesthaugh (sometimes written as ‘Priesthope’), whose daughter Beatrice married Walter Scott of Wauchope; Mary (b.1721); Rachel (b.1722); and Archibald (b.1724). The witnesses in 1719 were Gideon of Falnash and Rev. John Douglas of Kirkton, in 1720 were Robert of Burnhead and Robert Cleghorn, merchant at Dalkeith, and in both 1722 and 1724 were Robert of Burnhead and Robert of Falnash (his brother-in-law). His wife Beatrix had ‘life’s rent’ of the lands of Crumhaugh, as well as Harwoodhill and other lands. He is probably the Walter whose second sister Margaret married Rev. Hugh Kennedy of Cavers (and later Rotterdam). Walter ‘Crooked Wat’ (17th/18th C.) Hawick Town Herd in the years around 1710. He was known as an honest and diligent shepherd, and was called ‘Crooked’ because of his crook, not that he was dishonest. He could be the ‘Walter Scott herd’, married to Bessie Turnbull, whose son John was baptised in Hawick in 1704, with witnesses George Scott ‘litster’ and Bailie Patrick Richardson. Walter (17th/18th C.) recorded in Horselee in 1720 when his daughter Betty was baptised in Kirkton Parish. Janet (b.1723), William (b.1730), and Janet (again, b.1732), also baptised in Kirkton Parish, may also be his children. Walter (17th/18th C.) eldest son of Philip, who was Chamberlain to Scott of Harden. In 1720 he was called before Hawick Session for his ‘irregular marriage’ with Sara, daughter of Hawick surgeon Walter Scott. He and his wife became apothecaries (or ‘chirurgeons’) like his father-in-law. Their wedding took place in Edinburgh, and may have been performed by an ex-Episcopalian clergyman, rather than being an elopement; the wedding was witnessed by John Scott of Hawick, who may have been a relative. He was ‘Junior Chyrurg:’ in the baptismal record of 1730. His children with Sara Scott included: Philip (b.1723); William (b.1724); Walter (b.1730); and John (b.1731). The witnesses in 1730 were Bailie John Scott (probably related) and Francis Rucastle and in 1731 were John Scott and John Montgomery. Walter (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He married Christian Simpson and their children included: Margaret (b.1710); and Isobel (b.1711). The witnesses in 1711 were carrier James Simpson (who may have been related to his wife) and flesher Thomas Waugh. He could be the same as one of the other Walters. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1715 in Ashkirk he married Elizabeth, daughter of Robert Wilson. Their daughter Helen was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1716. The witnesses were John Scott ‘Whitegates’ and weaver Robert Turnbull. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was living at Easter Parkhill in 1718 when his son William was baptised. Walter of Bewlie (17th/18th C.) several letters from his sister Helen survive in the period 1725–28.

Walter of Whitfield and Harden (1682–1746) third son (and second surviving son) of Walter of Highchester and of Harden, Earl of Tarras. He served as factor for the family estates on the death of his brother Gideon in 1707. In 1713 he received a five-pound land of Bewlie as part of his marriage contract with the daughter of John Nisbet of Nisbetfield. He was involved with Walter of Woll and William of Thirlestane (his future father-in-law) in a bond of 1715. He was Laird of Whitfield when he purchased the lands of Harden, Highchesters and Mabonlaw from other family members in 1720 (although he did not inherit the titles until later). There are dispositions to him in 1720/1 from Lady Mary Sharp, Lady Agnes Scott, Margaret Scott and Lady Mary Drummond, the female representatives of close branches of the family, relating to debts on Todshaw and Roberton. He was ‘of Whitfield being at present at Harden’ in 1721. He sold Whitfield and Mervinslaw to Walter Scott, brother of William of Thirlestane in 1723. In 1727 he was listed among the people owing money to the deceased William Nisbet of Dirleton. He is referred to as ‘of Whitfield’ throughout the 1720s, but also lived at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot. However, he was ‘of Heychesters’ in 1732 and 1733 when he had children baptised in Robertson Parish. He was one of the ‘tutors’ for his nephew John of Harden, and was involved in a legal battle over consequent claims on part of the Harden estate about 1724-26. The Harden titles eventually fell to him on the death of John in 1734, and he became the 10th Laird (sometimes referred to as 9th). He was listed on a memorial of 1738, claiming the right of the Lordship of Rutherford to John Scott of Belford. He was the Laird at the time of the 1745 Jacobite rebellion, and was apparently a supporter who was at the Battle of Prestonpans. A story is told (recounted by John Anderson, blacksmith at Ettrickbridge) about his narrow escape from the dragoons, who tried to capture him when he returned in disguise to Oakwood, and were also in wait for him at Woll and Harden; although the story seems too detailed to be an invention, it is still hard to believe this of a man in his 60s. He supposedly was caught trying to board a ship in Newcastle, when a simple-minded tenant of his recognised him, but he ended up with only a heavy fine, resulting in the loss of Howford, Helmburn, Bailieleee and other lands. He married 4 times: firstly to Agnes, daughter of John Nisbet of Nisbetfield in 1709; secondly Agnes, daughter of William Scott of Thirlestane (with whom he had a daughter, Christian, b.1721, baptised in Robertson Parish in 1719; thirdly Anne, daughter of John Scott of Gorrenberry (to whom he had his heir, Walter) in 1724; and lastly Christian, daughter of Henry Kerr of Frogden in 1736. He paid for the bell of St. Mary’s to ring in 1723, presumably for his wife Agnes or a child, and paid for renting the Town ‘litter’ for his wife’s funeral in 1730 (presumably Anne). His younger children (with his 3rd wife) included: John (b.1729), who died young; William (b.1730), also died young; Francis of Beechwood (b.1732), baptised in Robertson; Jean; Helen, who married George Brown of Elliston in Edinburgh in 1756; and Ann (b.1733, or ‘Annie’), recorded in a land sale of 1790. He also provided for the daughters of his predecessor John of Harden in 1731. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1720 he was living at Orchard when he married Elspeth Laidlaw. Probably the same Walter was herd at Orchard in 1728 when his daughter Elizabeth was baptised in Cavers. It is possible that the same Walter was still at Orchard in 1737 when his son Robert was baptised. Walter (1692–1765) second son of William of Thirlestane and great-grandson of ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden. He became a wine merchant in Leith. His attorney was Robert Shortreed of Essenside when he had a sasine for Wauchope from the superiors James, Lord Cranston in 1750; this was a ‘heritable bond’, although it is unclear who else was involved or if he was related to any of the other Scotts associated with Wauchope. He married Martha, daughter of Cunningham of Balboggie and also married a second time. His children included: Thomas, minister of Cavers; Walter (d.1765), a surgeon in the 10th Hussars; and Euphemia. Walter (18th C.) servant to John Elliot in Goldielands. He may be the ‘servant’ who witnessed baptisms in 1719 for William Mitchellhill (workman in Branxholme Town) and for Walter Inglis (servant in Crumhaugh). In 1725 he was living at Borthaugh. He may be the Walter who in 1738 witnessed a baptism for William Telfer, who lived at Borthaugh. He could also be the workman who in 1742 witnessed a baptism for Robert at Goldielands (who may have been related). In 1721 in Hawick he married Helen Turnbull, who was also a servant to John Elliot. Their children, included: Helen (b.1722), baptised in Wauchope; Janet (b.1725), baptised in Wauchope; and Margaret (b.1727), baptised in Hawick. The witnesses in 1725 were John and Walter Scott. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes ‘Huisson’ (or Howison). Their children included Walter (b.1725) and Bessie (b.1727). He could also be the Walter, married to Agnes ‘Whitson’ whose child John was baptised in Wilton in 1717. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at Wauchope in 1713, 1724 and 1727. In 1727 he is probably the Walter who witnessed a baptism for William at Wauchope. In 1713 he married Mary Cockburn, who was from Alton, the proclamations being recorded in Wauchope Parish. James (b.1722); Mary (b.1724); Helen (b.1726); George (b.1726); William (b.1728) and Bessie (b.1730). The witnesses in 1724 were Walter Scott and James Irvine and in 1727 were William Scott and Andrew Irvine. It is possible he was the Walter who was recorded witnessing several baptisms in the 1720s and 1730s, suggesting he was an elder of Wilton Kirk. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at Wauchope in 1721 and 1724. He is probably the Walter who witnessed a baptism in 1724 for the other Walter at Wauchope. He married Helen Scott and their children included: Helen (b.1716); Bessie (b.1718); Helen (again, b.1719); William (b.1721); Thomas (b.1724); Helen (again, b.1727); William (again, b.1730); and Walter (b.1732). The witnesses in 1721 were William Scott and James Grieve and in 1724 were John and Walter Scott. Note that there appear to have been 2 contemporary men of the same name living at Wauchope. Walter of Howcleuch and Wauchope (1701–86) son of Walter and Christian Bennet of Chester. Some accounts have him as son of Walter of West Port and Jean, who was daughter of Walter Scott of Crumhaugh; it may be that there are two men compounded here. It seems that in 1725 he married his cousin Rachel, youngest sister of the then Laird of Crumhaugh, Walter Scott (however, there could be confusion here). He leased Commonside shortly before his marriage, and lived for most of his lived at Commonside House. He certainly married Rachel, daughter of Francis Elliot of Fenwick, and (as stated on the family gravestone at St. Mary’s) had 2 sons with her: Walter (b.c.1728) of Wauchope; and Charles (b.1728) of Howcleuch. Walter was baptised in Hawick in 1728, with his mother’s name listed as Rachel Scott (and the witnesses being ‘Mr. Millar’ and John Scott), making the identity of the mother confusing. He is probably the Walter ‘at Commonside’ who witnessed several baptisms in Hawick Parish in 1738, 1739, 1740, 1741 and 1744(suggesting he was Kirk Elder, responsible for the Teviothead area). In 1739 and 1744 he witnessed baptisms for fiddler Robert

Whutson, whose wife was a Scott. In 1747 he was also ‘at Commonside’ when he witnessed a baptism for Charles of Crumhaugh (who was surely a relative of some sort). He became a prominent man in the district, whose advice was often sought out. Like other men in a similar position, he also acted as a money lender. In 1755 he bought Howcleuch and Borthwick Mains from Rev. Simon Halliburton. He was probably the Walter of Commonside recorded as a Commissioner for Selkirkshire in 1761. He is probably the Walter at Commonside who witnessed a baptism for Adam Hutton in 1762. He was ‘Senior’ of Commonside in 1766 when he witnessed a baptism for Robert Laidlaw of Falnash. He was one of the Commissioners appointed in the court case regarding the division of Hawick Common in 1767. He bought Wauchope in 1767 at public auction (from James Cranston, 6th Lord Cranstoun), thus becoming the 1st Scott Laird of Wauchope. However, he did not live at these estates he had acquired, but gave them to his 2 sons, Walter and Charles. Walter inherited Wauchope, while Howcleuch went to Charles. In 1784 he retired from farming and gave over his property to his 2 sons, presumably dying not many years later. In 1785 he still paid the land tax on Howcleuch. The family are buried in an aisle at St. Mary’s. Walter of Raeburn (d.1707) eldest son of William of Raeburn. In 1703 he married Anne, 3rd daughter of Hugh Scott of Gala. Their children were: William, who succeeded; Isobel; and Anne. In October 1707 he attended a dinner in Selkirk with other local landowners and got into a dispute (perhaps over the Union) with Mark, youngest son of Andrew Pringle of Crichton. They fought a duel with swords and he was killed, the location being afterwards known as Raeburn’s Meadow. His killer fled abroad, becoming a merchant in Spain and later British Consul there.

Walter (18th C.) resident in Hawick Shiel. His wife was ‘Maray Gladstons’ and their son Robert was baptised in 1726, with witnesses James Grieve and John Scott. Perhaps the same resident in Hawick Shiel in 1728 married Margaret, daughter of ‘Dand’ Gray, tenant in Weensland; their daughter Margaret was born in 1741. Probably the same Walter in Hawick Shiel had a daughter Janet baptised in Cavers in 1732. Walter (18th C.) 3rd son of Thomas of Whiteslade and brother of John. He is probably the ‘brother German to the Laird of Whiteslade’ whose child Helen ‘begotten in fornication Within ye paroch of Askirk’ was baptised in Hawick in 1716. The mother of the child was Elizabeth, daughter to carrier Robert Wilson, it was presented for baptism by tailor Walter Kay and the witnesses were John Scott ‘Whitengates’ and weaver Robert Turnbull. In 1727–29 he was involved in legal proceedings with Walter Scott of Whitfield (later of Harden), probably over debts incurred by his brother John. In 1734 he was described as ‘late of Whitslade’ when he was accused for the 5th time of refusing to undergo penance and was excommunicated by the Synod. He must also have been related to the Dr. Robert, who lived in Hawick, possibly his brother. Walter (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He is recorded at ‘Wester P...’ (probably Parkhill) in 1733 when his daughter May was baptised. He is probably related to other Scotts who were at Parkhill. He could be the Walter who was at Milsingtonshiel in 1741 when his son Henry was baptised (and was therefore perhaps related to the earlier James at Milsingtonshiel). Walter (18th C.) wright in Hawick, youngest son of Walter, who was brother of Charles of Crumhaugh near the end of the 17th century. His mother would have been Elizabeth Scott. He is probably the wright who witnessed a baptism for Bailie James in 1730. He may be the Walter, wright in Hawick, who witnessed the notorial instrument of 1734 in which the Town complained about encroachment on the Common by tenants of Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. In 1743 he was described as a wright when he registered a sasine for a tenement of land ‘and onstead of houses in Hawick’ to his brother Robert, these lands having been ‘disponed’ in 1730. He is perhaps the wright called Walter who witnessed a baptism (for Robert Oliver, shoemaker) in 1738, others for mason Andrew Wilson, Bailie Gideon Ruecastle, ‘messenger’ William Wilson, tailor John Turnbull and weaver Andrew Simpson in 1743. He may have been deceased in 1743 when his brother Robert gained the lands of ‘Croftangry’ from him; whether this is the same as the ‘tenement’ mentioned above is unclear. He could be the wright called Walter recorded in the list for paying tax on 18 windows in Hawick in 1748. Walter (18th C.) brother of William of Thirlestane. In 1723 he is described as ‘in Sourhope’ when he purchased Whitfield and Mervinslaw from Walter Scott of Whitfield. Walter (b.1700) farmer at Commonside. He leased Unthank and Fiddleton from the Buccleuch Estates, along with Robert Elliot of Fenwick, in 1733 (taking over from the Murray family). His father had married Christine Bennet of Chesters, and he was uncle of Sir Walter Scott the writer.
Since there was another Walter who farmed Commonside at about the same time, some of this information may be confused. He also appears to have been confounded (e.g. by Tancred) with Walter, 1st Laird of Wauchope. He could be the Walter in Commonsidze, married to Helen Hogg, whose daughter Rachel was baptised in Hawick in 1726; the witnesses were William Harkness and William Scott. Walter (18th C.) tailor in Hawick. He married Elizabeth (‘Betrie’ or ‘Bessie’) Scott in 1721.
Their children included: Anne (b.1728); and Elspeth (b.1730). The witnesses to the 1728 baptism were Bailie Walter Purdon and Bailie Scott ‘Senior’ (who may have been related). Walter of Cockerheugh (d.bef. 1743) son of John, he was a descendant of the Scotts of Brieryrds. In 1705 Isobel Waugh appeared before the Wilton Kirk Session to confess to being pregnant with his child; she sat in the place of repentance and paid a small fine, with him paying £4 Scots as a penalty. He inherited Cockerheugh (part of Hassendeanbank) from his John in 1721. The 1720 records for Wilton Parish state that 12 shillings was collected for ‘Walter Scott of cockerheugh for his proclamation’, presumably meaning his marriage. His sister married Walter Scott (‘Uncle to Crumhaugh’) in 1721 (this probably being the next entry in the Wilton register, for ‘Walter Scott in Havick’). In 1724 he witnessed a baptism in Wilton for James in Whitehaugh and Janet Scott (and hence may have been retated to one of them). He sold Cockerheugh to the Duke of Roxburghe in 1734. However he is still ‘of Cockerheugh’ in 1738 when he witnessed a baptism for James, miller at Crawhill. He is described as ‘late of Cockerheugh’ in a record of 1743, involving Adam Scott and Anthony Turnbull of Knowe. Walter ‘Wyndheid’ (18th C.) tailor in Hawick. He was listed as ‘taylor in Hawick’ in the 1723 baptismal record and ‘Walter Scott Wyndhead’ in 1725. In 1723 he married Anne, daughter of James Scott. Their children included: Helen (b.1723); John (b.1724); Janet (b.1725); and Bessie (b.1726). The witnesses in 1723 were Robert Scott ‘Wyndhead’ and smith James Scott (who were perhaps related to him and his wife). He was probably also related to the later ‘Wattie o the Wyndheid’. He is easy to confuse with another tailor called Walter, who married Bessie Scott. Walter of Merrylaw (18th C.) perhaps son of the William who was tenant in Merrylaw in 1694 or Walter of Merrylaw who is recorded around 1700. He leased Eilrig from Walter Scott of Raeburn in 1730 and leased the lands of Craik and Whinneycleuch from the Buccleuch Estates in 1744. Rev. William was probably his son. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. Walter (b.c.1700) ploughman in Hawick Parish. He worked at Goldielands from 1715, serving several tenants (except for 5 years) through until 1767 when he moved to Lan-glands. He gave evidence in 1767 regarding the former use of Hawick Common; he was said to be in his 60s and married at that time. Walter (b.c.1710) eldest son of Thomas, last Laird of Todrig. He served in the Horse Guards. In 1732 he married Jane, only daughter and heiress of William Robson of High Stokoe, Northumberland. They had about a dozen children, those surviving being: Dr. William (b.1733) of Stokoe, who compiled a family tree of that branch, including information on the Scotts of Synton, Whit-sdale and Todrig; Patrick, a doctor who settled on the Isle of Man; Mary, who married John Best; and Jane, who married Paul Blakey. Walter (18th C.) married Margaret Lillico in Minto in 1743. Walter (18th C.) described in 1743 as ‘late Baillie Depute’. He was probably the Baron’s officer within Hawick. His wife was Agnes Paisley (or ‘Paslaw’) and their children included:
Jean (b.1727); Agnes (b.1729); Thomas (b.1731); Walter (b.1733); Agnes (again, b.1738); Agnes (again, b.1739); Elizabeth (b.1742); Jean (again, b.1743); and James (b.1746). The witnesses in 1743 were writer James Weir and mason Andrew Turnbull, senior. Walter (18th C.) gardener in Hawick. In 1722 he married Agnes, daughter of Robert Gardner. Their children included: Helen (b.1723); Thomas (b.1726); Janet (b.1732); Agnes (b.1737); and John (b.1740). The witnesses in 1726 were shoemaker John Scott and candlemaker John Scott and in 1740 were glover John Scott and merchant James Sanderson. Walter (18th C.) son of Walter in Synton Mill. He is recorded in a legal disposition of 1759. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Whitehaugh in 1729 and at just ‘Wilton’ in 1737.
He married Margaret Scott and their children included: William (b.1728); Bessie (b.1729); Adam (b.1732); Anne (b.1734); Isobel (b.1737); Elspeth
(b.1740); and James (b.1743). The witnesses in 1729 were William and Robert Scott (who were probably related to him or his wife, perhaps the Laird of Whitehaugh and his brother the minister) and in 1737 were James Simpson (soon to be minister of Wilton) and Thomas ‘Cayle’. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, recorded at Burnfoot in 1735. He married Bessie Leyden in 1734 and their children included: Helen (b.1735); an unnamed child (b.1737); Margaret (b.1740); and Jean (b.1743). The witnesses in 1735 were William and Walter Scott (who may have been related to him). Walter (18th C.) recorded at Crook in 1745 when his son James was baptised in Cavers Parish. Walter (18th C.) carrier in Hawick. His wife’s surname was ‘Leaden’ (presumably Leyden). His children included: Adam (b.1745); and William (b.1747). The witnesses in 1745 were wright Robert Pringle and Kirk Officer John Telfer; Pringle had a child baptised on the same day, and he reciprocated as witness. The witnesses in 1747 were weavers William Roger and William Turnbull. Walter (18th C.) listed ‘in Finesh’ (i.e. Falnash) when he paid the window tax (11 windows) in Hawick Parish in 1748. He may be the same as one of the other Walters (e.g. Walter of Wauchope and Howcleuch, who farmed at Commonside and married a Scott of Falnash). In 1743 he was ‘in Falnash’ when he witnessed 2 baptisms in Hawick Parish (for workmen John Rieve and John Armstrong, who may have had a connection to the Teviothead area). In 1744 he witnessed a baptism (along with Walter at Commonside) for fiddler Robert Whutson, whose wife was a Scott. Walter (18th C.) recorded in 1743 as ‘Soldier’. If this is a nickname, then he may be a descendant of the earlier John ‘Young Sodger’; however, it could be his occupation. He married Elizabeth Scott and their son Walter was baptised in 1743, with witnesses Kirk Officer John Telfer and shoemaker William Scott. The same couple may also have been parents of Charles (b.1741), with witnesses workman John Gledstains and Kirk Officer John Telfer; he was recorded in 1741 as tenant at Crumhaugh (and so may be related to earlier Scotts of Crumhaugh). It is possible (although unlikely that he is the same man as the tenant in Newbigging, whose wife was also Elizabeth Scott. Walter (18th C.) resident of Newbigging in Hawick Parish. He may have been related to the Walter who was at Newbigging a generation earlier. He could be the Walter, tenant in Newbigging, who was admitted as a heritable Burgess of Hawick in 1756. His wife was Elizabeth (or Betty) Scott and their children included: William (b.1756); Archibald (b.1758); Ann (b.1760); and Robert (b.1762). The witnesses in 1758 were William Rae and William Mair and in 1762 were ‘student’ John Laurie and Walter Cavers. He is probably the Walter from Newbigging who witnessed baptisms for another Walter (perhaps a relative, married to Agnes Laidlaw) in 1760 and 1761. He is probably the deceased Walter ‘late in Newbigging’ whose son James died in Hawick in 1798. Walter (18th C.) farmer at Millholm in Castleton Parish. When there was a large gathering of seceders at Snaberlee in the early 1750s, he tried to claim the collection for the poor of the Parish, but the case was thrown out by Sir Gilbert Elliott in Hawick. Walter (18th C.) merchant of Hawick. He is listed among the subscribers to the reprinted Buchanan’s ‘History of Scotland’ (1752). He may be the same as one of the contemporary Walters. Walter of Boghall (18th C.) recorded in 1757 when he witnessed a baptism for Richard (perhaps his son) and Mary Rutherford. He may be the Walter, married to Beatrix, whose children baptised in Wilton Parish included Rachel (b.1722) and Archibald (b.1724). Walter (18th C.) skinner in Hawick. He is one of the skinners James, John and Walter Scott (probably related), recorded as Bailies in the 1740s. He paid tax on 20 windows in Hawick in 1748. He may be the Bailie Walter recorded in 1755 when the costs of a meeting in his place ‘when getting the new stocks’ were 6 pence. ‘Bailie John’ was also there and possibly this was also a Scott and perhaps related. He may also have been the Bailie Walter paid for work on the ‘book-board in the tolbooth’ in 1755 and given part payment for building the Herd’s House (suggesting that this Walter may have been a builder of some sort). He married Christian Deans and their children included: James (b.1735); William (b.1738); Jean (b.1741); Jean (again, b.1744); Beatrix (b.1746); and Walter (b.1747). The witnesses in 1746 were merchant William Oliver and ex-Bailie Thomas Turnbull. He is probably the deceased Bailie and skinner recorded in 1811 when his son William died. Walter (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He married Jane (or Jean) Scott and their children included: Henry (b.1757); Walter (b.1759); and Andrew, William and Mary (b.1761), baptised on the same day. The witnesses in 1761 were Bailie Robert (merchant) and Andrew (shoemaker), who were probably related to him. Walter (d.1810) tailor, nicknamed ‘Wattie o the Wyndheid’. He must have been related to the Walter ‘Wyndhead’ recorded earlier in the 18th century. He was probably the tailor of that name who was recorded as son of the deceased John ‘Wyndhead’ on the 1810 death register. His shop was located near the top of what became known as Walter’s Wynd (after him). The death of his daughter Margaret is recorded in the Parish register for 1805. Walter (18th C.) only son of Francis, wig-maker of Hawick. He was made an Honorary Burgess in 1760. Walter ‘Black Wat’ (18th C.) Cornet in 1765. It is possible he was related to the earlier ‘Black Walter’. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1767 he married Margaret Robertson, who was from Wilton Parish. Their children included: Walter (b.1767); Archibald (b.1770); John (b.1772); and Thomas (b.1784). The witnesses in 1767 were wright James (probably a relative) and shoemaker John Oliver and in 1772 were another Walter and James. He could be the same as one of the other Walters. Walter (18th C.) founder of a joiner’s firm on Buccleuch Street, Walter Scott & Son, established in 1750. The firm moved into the former Grammar School building around 1886. It is possible that he could be the Walter son of Hawick surgeon Walter who became a wright’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1732. He is probably the wright who witnessed a baptism for merchant Walter in 1766. It seems likely that he was the same wright Walter who married Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’) Laidlaw in 1760 and had children: Walter (b.1761); Margaret (b.1762); William (b.1765); Thomas (b.1766); Mary (b.1768); Jane (b.1770); and Robert (b.1776). The witnesses in both 1762 and 1766 were baker John Osburn and weaver George Paterson. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Laidlaw and their children included William (b.1760) and William (again, b.1761). The witnesses in 1760 were another Walter from Newbigging and cooper Robert Paterson and in 1761 were Walter from Newbigging (again) and William Scott. It is possible that his wife was the ‘Agness Scott spouse to Walter Do. Newbigging’ whose death is recorded in Hawick in 1824. Walter of Raeburn (18th C.) son of William, he was the 5th Laird. In 1788 he was listed under ‘Votes of Rutherford of Edinburgh’ among the voters of Roxburghshire and was also a voter in Selkirkshire. He paid the Horse Tax at Raeburn in the 1780s. In 1788 he was recorded as owner of lands in Lessuden Parish. He was still listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819 (along with his son William, junior of Raeburn). In 1772 he married Jean, 3rd daughter of Robert Scott of Sandyknowe. She was the sister of his sister’s husband. Their children were: William (1773–1855), who succeeded; Robert (1774–1837); Hugh of Draycott, Derby (1777–1852); Walter (d.1802); John (d.1832); and Barbara. Walter (18th C.) resident of Whitfield. In 1761 he married Catherine Turnbull (from Hawick), the marriage being recorded in both Wilton and Hawick Parishes. Their children (baptised in Wilton Parish, with the last one in Hawick), included: Charles (b.1762); Euphan (b.1764); Robert (b.1765); John (b.1770); Helen (b.1772); Walter (b.1775); and John (b.1776). The witnesses in 1772 were John Lillico and Walter Rae and in 1773 was also witness for Walter Rae (at Whitfield). Walter (18th C.) schoolmaster at Kirkton in the late 1780s, where he took over from Thomas Wilson. There he taught a young John Leyden. However, after only a year or two he moved, apparently for a better position elsewhere and was succeeded by Andrew Scott. He was schoolmaster in 1787 when his daughter Peggy was baptised in Kirkton Parish. Walter of Harden (1724–1793) son of Walter, from whom he succeeded in 1746. He is the 11th Laird (sometimes called the 10th) of Harden. He sold part of the Harden estates in 1751 to pay his father’s debts. In 1754 he had a charter to the lands of Bevlie in Lilliesleaf. He was M.P. for Roxburghshire 1747–65, then serving as cashier of Excise in Scotland until his death (this excluding him from having a vote in the elections). There are documents of 1756 and 1760 in which he was promoting the idea of a twice weekly mail service between Edinburgh and Border towns. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761 (and is probably the ‘John’ of Harden in the Selkirkshire list). He was on the role of electors in Roxburghshire. In 1779 he sold the liferent of his property in Belses, as well as Mabonlaw and ‘Whinny park’ to Charles, younger of Woll (although with feu-right to John Pringle of Clifton). In 1785 he paid the land tax on lands in Yarrow Parish, as well as Oakwood in Selkirk Parish. In about 1788 he was owner of the lands of Harden in Wilton Parish, as well as part of Bevlie in Lilliesleaf Parish. In 1788 he is listed as one of the voters in Roxburghshire, being described privately as being a supporter of the interests of the Duke of Buccleuch in the election and having married a sister of the Earl of Marchmont, ‘but has been struck out of the Earl’s settlements on account of a political dispute with him’. He is listed in the 1788 county valuation (and in the Land Tax Rolls of 1811, although deceased by then) as owner of Harden, West Highchesters, ‘Dunsbush’, Mabonlaw and ‘Highchesters Whinny-park’ (valued at £814), as well as part of Bevlie (valued at £465 5s) and lands in Maxton (valued at £163 10s) and Smallholm Parishes (valued at £1808 10s). His 1754 marriage to Lady Diana Home Campbell (daughter of Hugh, 3rd Earl of Marchmont and Baron Polwarth) gave the Polwarth title to the Scotts of Harden. Their children were: Walter, who died young; Hugh, who succeeded; Anne (d.1819), who is recorded passing land to her mother and brother in 1797; and Diana. His widow, Lady Diana, lived at Woodside near Kelso. Portraits of him and his wife were painted in 1756. His will was proved at the Prerogative Court of Canterbury in 1797. Walter of Wauchope (1728–96) son of Walter in Commonside. The identity of his mother is unclear, since his baptism states that she was Rachel Scott (who is suggested to have been from the Crumhaugh Scotts), but the by the inscription in St. Mary’s Kirkyard states she was Rachel Elliot of Fenwick. He was baptised in Hawick in early 1728, although some accounts say he was born in 1726. In 1767 he purchased Wauchope and Longhaugh, the money being supplied by his father (and the arrangement being that he had to yield the properties to his father if he wanted). On the death of his father he became the 2nd Scott Laird of Wauchope. He was a trustee for the creditors of Robert Shortreed of Easter Essenside in 1778. In 1768 he married Elizabeth (‘Betty’), daughter of David Rutherford of Capehope. His wife was known for her artistic and poetic abilities, and was the subject of a verse-epistle from Burns. It was said that he did not share many of his wife’s interests, and had ‘rather a morose temper’. She died in 1789 and he secondly married Beatrix, daughter of Gideon Scott of Priesthaugh, who died in 1807 at Priesthaugh. He farmed at Wauchope from shortly after his father purchased the estate in 1767, and took over ownership more formerly when Walter senior retired in 1784. He was recorded as owner of Wauchope in 1788, the estate being valued at £1433 6s 8d. He was taxed for owning a carriage in the period 1786–89, for having horses in the period 1786–94, for having a male servant (a footman) in 1786 and in 1792–94, and for having a female servant in 1787 and 1788. He was Laird of Wauchope when Burns visited in 1787. Having no children of his own, he was succeeded by his brother Charles. The family are buried in an aisle at St. Mary’s. Walter, W.S. (1729–99) eldest son of Robert of Sandyknowe, and descended from the Scotts of Raeburn. He became Writer to the Signet in 1755. He was listed among the voters of Selkirkshire in 1788. In 1758 he married Anne, daughter of Dr. John Rutherford. Their children were: Robert, John, Robert and Walter, who all died young; Robert (b.1767), a Naval Captain, who died unmarried; John (1768–1816); Sir Walter of Abbotsford; Thomas (1774–1823), who died in Canada, and whose son Walter was the only nephew of Sir Walter; Daniel (1775–1806); Anne and Jean, who died in infancy; and Anne. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at Tandlaw in 1758. He married Janet Grieve in 1755 and their children included: Robert (b.1758); Jean (b.1759); Helen (b.1762); Walter (b.1764); Robert (again, b.1766); William (b.1769); James (b.1771); and George (b.1773). The witnesses in 1758 were Sir Gilbert Elliott and George ‘Mercel’. Walter (18th C.) resident at Borthwickshiel when his son David was baptised in Roberton Parish in 1762. Walter (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Roberton Burnfoot in 1763 when his son Walter was baptised and in 1765 when his daughter Beatrix was baptised. Perhaps the same Walter was at Parkhead in 1767 when his daughter Kathrine was baptised. There are many other children born in Roberton at about the same time who could be his. Walter (1736–1818) 3rd son of Walter, tenant farmer at Girnwood. Along with his brother Thomas he took over from his father as co-tenant of Girnwood. Both brothers being unmarried, the tenancy later passed to their relative Walter, 2nd son of the 3rd William in Millsington. He was recorded as farmer at Girnwood on the Horse Tax Rolls in the period 1785–97. He also paid tax on 2 non-working dogs at Girnwood in 1797. Walter of Newton (18th/19th C.) probably Laird of Chamberlain Newton. In 1738 he witnessed a baptism, along with Patrick, younger of Alton; this was for Joseph Lothian and Janet Scott, suggesting that Janet may have been related to him. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He married Agnes Watson and their children (baptised in Hawick) included: Anne (b.1737); Francis (b.1739); John (b.1741); Margaret (b.1743); and Susanna (b.1746). The witnesses in 1743 were ex-Bailie John and writer James Weir. In 1767 his daughter Margaret (or perhaps Elizabeth) married John Scott of Whitehaugh; she was his eldest daughter and co-heir. Perhaps he was son of the earlier Walter of Newton. George ‘brother to the laird of Newton’, who signed the 1731 marriage contract of William Elliot of Lodgegill and Jean Elliot of Hardwood, may have been his brother. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1762 in Roberton Parish he married Margaret Nichol. He may be the same as one of the other Walters. Walter Scott (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He married Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’) Ekron in 1765. Their children included: Isabel (b.1766); Andrew (b.1768); Alice (b.1769); and James (b.1771). The witnesses in 1766, 1768 and 1771 were merchants Andrew Scott and James Ekron, who were probably his father (or brother) and father-in-law. Based on the naming convention his parents were probably Andrew and Alice. He could be the merchant Walter who (along with merchant Andrew) witnessed a baptism for William Philip and Mary Scott in 1772. Walter (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He married Margaret Dryden in 1763. Their children included: James (b.1765); William (b.1766); and Margaret (b.1767). The witnesses in 1766 were wright Walter and baker William Elliot. Walter (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Woodburn in 1769 when his son Thomas was baptised. Walter (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. The death of his unnamed child is recorded in 1791. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1777 he married Agnes Scott, who was also from Hawick Parish. Their children included: Walter (b.1778); Walter (again, b.1786); and Janet (b.1788). Walter (18th C.) schoolmaster at Abbotrule. His daughter Jeanie was baptised in Southdean Parish in 1776. He may also be the Walter whose other children baptised in Southdean were Peggy (b.1773) and James (1774). He could be the same as one of the other contemporary local teachers. Capt. Walter ‘Wattie’ (1741–1809) eldest son of Charles of Crumhaugh and Howpasley and Christian Anderson. He was the last of the Scotts of Crumhaugh. He was born at Midshiels and died without issue. He may be the Capt. Scott of ‘Gaudi-nesses in 1786 when his daughter Nelly was baptised. William (b.1792) and John (b.1796), also baptised in Kirkton Parish, were probably also his sons. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident at Woodfoot in Kirkton Parish in 1790 when his son Walter was baptised. William born in Southdean in 1767. It is unclear how he acquired Merrylaw, or whether he had a direct connection to the earlier Scotts of Merrylaw. Walter (18th/19th C.) married Isabel (or ‘Tibbie’) Ainslie in 1795. She died in Hawick in 1840, when he was recorded at ‘Kirkton Coat’. Walter (18th/19th C.) weaver in Hawick. His daughter Betty died in 1808. Walter (18th C.) from Eves, he served as schoolmaster in Ashkirk in the period 1795–99. Walter of Merrylaw (18th/19th C.) listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. He is probably the son of Rev. William born in Southdean in 1767. He is recorded as ‘Red Watt’ in 1781 when his daughter Ann died in Hawick. He could be related to the earlier man with the same nickname, who was tenant in Chapelhill. Perhaps the same Walter married Margaret ‘Robison’ and had children Adam (b.1776) and Ann (b.1779) baptised in Hawick. Walter (18th C.) resident of Comnonside. He married Sarah Paterson and their son James was baptised in 1782, with the Associate Congregation as witnesses. He could be the same as one of the other Walters associated with Comnonside. Walter (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Dykes in 1786 when his son John was baptised. Walter (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Highc-esters in 1786 when his daughter Nelly was baptised. Walter (18th C.) resident of Woodfoot in Kirkton Parish in 1790 when his son Walter was baptised. William (b.1792) and John (b.1796), also baptised in Kirkton Parish, were probably also his sons. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident at Hawick Shiel in 1797 when he was taxed for hav-2 non-working dogs and 3 farm horses. Walter (18th/19th C.) farmer at Wiltonburn. His son Thomas was described as a ‘hosier’ when he died in Hawick in 1808. Walter (18th C.) listed as footman at Waughope in 1792, when he was working for Walter Scott. Walter (18th C.) from Eves, he served as schoolmaster in Ashkirk in the period 1795–99. Walter of Merrylaw (18th/19th C.) listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. He is probably the son of Rev. William born in Southdean in 1767. He is recorded as owner of part of Roughheugh (val-ued at £10 18s 6d) in 1788 and according to the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. Walter (18th/19th
In 1841 he was living at Greenbank Haugh in (b.1817, Hawick); and John (b.1822, Cavers). Mungo (b.1815), baptised in Hawick Parish; Mary married Ann Purdom and their children included: Walter (b.c.1780) local farm worker. He married Mary, daughter of Thomas Elliot and Magdalene Thomson. They emigrated to America in 1823. Walter (18th/19th C.) owner of 2 horses at Newbigging in 1797, according to the Horse Tax Rolls. He may have been a descendant of the Walter who was at Newbigging earlier in the 18th century. The elderly Catherine (nee Hume) at Newbigging in 1841 may have been his wife, with William and the younger Catherine his children. Walter (18th/19th C.) farmer at Priesthaugh. He subscribed to John Learmont’s book of poetry in 1791. He paid the Horse Tax at Priesthaugh in 1785–94. He is also recorded as owner of 2 horses on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was additionally taxed for having 5 non-working dogs in 1797. He may have been son of Gilbert, tenant of Priesthaugh earlier in the 18th century. His will is recorded in Peebles Commissary Court in 1809. Walter (d.bef. 1809) wright in the Hawick area. The death of his brother, tailor John, is recorded in Hawick in 1809. He could be the same man as the founder of the firm of Walter Scott & Son. Walter ‘Cannie Wattie’, ‘Wat the Sauter’ or ‘Napier’s Wat’ (1753–1849). A tenant of the Duke of Buccleuch, he lived in the Salt House at the West Port. He was also for a time the servant of Lord Napier at Wilton Lodge. He was a carrier of salt etc., with his yard at the entrance to the Workhouse, later becoming a farmer near Orchard. He lived to the age of 96. His name appears to sometimes be given in error as ‘Robert’. Walter (18th/19th C.) recorded in the 1788 county valuation and in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls as owner of ‘Part of Patrick Cunningham’s Lands’, valued at £28 1s. He is probably the same as one of the other Walters, and perhaps related to John, who also held part of the former Patrick Cunningham’s lands. By about 1874 his lands had been divided among Alexander Laing, Alexander Michie, James Mudie, the heirs of John Hargreaves, the Roman Catholic Church, James Kyle, the heirs of William Scott, John Fiddes Wilson, Mrs. Agnes Oliver, Walter Grieve, the heirs of Mrs. Charles Scott, John Wilson, the heirs of William Wood, Janet Brown, Mrs. Rodgie and James Oliver; this gives an indication of the extent of the lands. Walter (b.c.1780) local farm worker. He married Ann Purdom and their children included: Mungo (b.1815), baptised in Hawick Parish; Mary (b.1817, Hawick); and John (b.1822, Cavers). In 1841 he was living at Greenbank Haugh in Roberton Parish with his children John and Mary, along with the older Isobel Purdom (probably his mother-in-law) and young Thomas Hogg. Next door was pauper Isobel (perhaps his sister) and his son Mungo. Walter (18th/19th C.) recorded being ‘of Haggishaugh’ in about 1874 when he was owner of part of Burnflat. He is probably the same as one of the other Walters. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at ‘Roadside’ in 1791. He married Betty Douglas, and their son Robert was baptised in 1791, with witnesses Hector and Peter Blaikie. Walter (1761–1843) born at Parkhill in Roberton Parish, he was son of William and Margaret Hobkirk. A family legend states that they are related to ‘Old Mortality’ (Robert Paiterson) through Margaret Scott at Burnflat (and this could have been Paiterson’s mother). He could be the ‘Walter Scott, Parkhill’, who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He moved into Hawick and worked as a handloom weaver, living in Wilton. In 1797 he is recorded living at Lokieshedge, when one of his children was baptised ‘before the Antiburgh Congregation’. In 1785 he married Elizabeth (1762–1844), daughter of John Biggar from Wilton. He was living at Dovemount (about 34 Princes Street) along with his wife and probably 2 grandchildren in 1841. Their children were: Margaret (b.1785); William (b.1788), who became a businessman in New York; Catherine (b.1789); John (b.1791); Robert (b.1793), who moved to Ohio; Margaret, ‘Peggy’ (1794–1867), who also moved to Ohio; Charles (b.1797); Walter (b.1799), who married Elizabeth Renwick and lived in Hawick; Sarah (b.1805); and Sarah (1807–88), who married Richard Purdie in Hawick. He died at Dovemount. Walter (1764–1837) 2nd son of William in Milsington. In 1793 and 1795 he was recorded at Mil- singtonhaugh and at Borthwickbrae Parkhead in 1798 and 1800. He was later tenant of Girnwood. In 1792 he married Mary Wilson. Their children (baptised in Robertson) included: William (b.1793), also tenant in Girnwood, who married Ann Laidlaw; James of Allanshaws (b.1795), who succeeded his uncle William as tenant at Milsington, and was also a cattle-dealer on the Crescent: Walter of Newton (b.1798), who married an Elliot of Harwood; Annie (b.1800); Thomas (b.1802), who went to America; and Henry, who farmed at Eilrig and died in Hawick. Walter of Whitehaugh (1769–1841) eldest surviving son of John of Whitehaugh. He trained as a surgeon and practised for many years. He could be the ‘Mr Walter Scott whitehaugh’ who witnessed a baptism for James Scott (perhaps a relative) and Mary Turnbull in 1793. He was listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819, when still ‘junior of Whitehaugh’. He was probably the Walter of Whitehaugh who subscribed to Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He was listed in 1835–41 among heads of households in Wilton Parish. He was also listed among the local gentry on Pigot’s 1837 directory. In the 1841 census he is recorded at Whitehaugh with his younger brother James, together with Christian Chisholme and 2 female servants. He died unmarried and was succeeded by his brother James. He is buried at Whitehaugh Aisle ‘in this spot selected by himself’. Walter (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Isobel Redford and their children included David (b.1809) and Francis (b.1811). Walter (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Isobel Hogg and their children included George (b.1818), Isobel (b.1823), James (b.1825) and Agnes (b.1827). Walter (c.1780–bef. 1851) grocer and spirit merchant of 6 Sandbed. He is probably the Walter listed as a grocer at Buccleuch Street on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory and a ‘victual dealer’ in 1837. He was still on Buccleuch Street in the 1841 census. He married Isabella Anderson and their children were said to include: Margaret (b.1803), who married grocer John Hume; Charles (b.1805); greengrocer Thomas ‘Sly Tammie’ (b.1810); Charles (b.1814), probably died young; Isabella (b.1816); and Christian (b.1818). However, they are surely the couple of the same names whose children, baptised in East Bank Kirk, included: James (b.1805), Robert (b.1808), Thomas (b.1810), Janet (b.1812), Janet (again, b.1814), Isabel (b.1816), Christian (b.1818) and Walter (b.1821). He is secondly said to have married another Isabella (Hogg), and their children were: Charles, also a spirit merchant; Jessie (b.1825); Agnes (b.1827); Helen (b.1829), probably died young; Walter (b.1831), chemist in Durham; Robert (b.1833); Mary Ann (b.1835); and Andrew (b.1839), Burgh Assessor. The recorded children of this couple, baptised in East Bank Kirk, included: George (b.1818), Isobel (b.1823), James (b.1825) and Agnes (b.1827). His widow Isabella was living at 8 Buccleuch Street in 1851 and 1861, and continued the grocer’s shop. He is probably the Walter Scott, ‘Newroad’ whose son died in 1829. He may be the ‘servant’ of William Oliver (‘Auld Cash’) who witnessed his will in 1808. Sir Walter of Abbostford (1771–1832) world famous writer. He was born in Edinburgh, son of Walter and Anne Rutherford, but on account of ill-health, spent much of his childhood at his grandfather’s house at Sandyknowe in the Borders, where he recuperated from polio. He was descended from ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden, and learned much about Borders history and lore in his youth. He wrote a great deal of poetry and effectively established the form of the historical novel. ‘The Lay of the Last Minstrel’ is set at Branxholme, and many other books have a local flavour, if romanticised somewhat. His ‘Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border’ (1802, with subsequent volumes and enlarged editions, first published in Kelso) was instrumental in preserving many Border ballads and establishing them as international literature (although again he is criticised for rewriting some of them himself). He helped popularise the ‘shepherd’s-check’ trousers, which assisted the development of the Borders knitwear industry. He made 7 annual trips into Liddesdale in the 1790s. He was appointed as Principal Clerk of Session in 1806, and was created a Baronet in 1820. In 1808 he was on the subscription list for the first real Scots dictionary, compiled by his friend John Jamieson. Several legal letters to him are preserved in the Walter Ma- son Collection. His authorship of the ‘Waverley’ novels remained a secret for 22 years, being revealed in 1827. Although by all accounts amiable to all classes, he was not locally popular among the ordinary Borderers, partly because he was a Sheriff and also an anti-Chartist. Around Hawick and Selkirk he was also rumoured to have helped intice the Gala men to switch sides at the ‘Carter- haugh Baa’. His carriage was reputedly stoned during the 1831 election in Jedburgh, apparently by a group of about 1,000 Hawick weavers (although some reports dispute this). With financial support from the Duke of Buccleuch, he led efforts to preserve Melrose Abbey. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. He wrote the lines ‘Sweet Teviot! on thy silver tide The glaring bale-fires blaze no more; No longer steel-clad warriors ride Along the wild and wil- low’d shore’, and Hawick is further mentioned in the ‘Lay …’ in the lines ‘Dimly he view’d the Moat-hill’s mound, Where Druid shades still flitted round; In Hawick twinkled many a light, Behind him soon they set in night’. In 1797 he married Margaret Charlotte (who he met by chance at Gilsland, and married 4 months later), daughter of Jean Charpentier of Lyons. Their children were: Walter, 2nd Baronet (1801–47), who died without issue; Charles (1805–41), died in Tehran; Charlotte Sophia, who married John Gibson Lockhart; and Anne (d.1833). He was buried at Dryburgh Abbey and his house at Abbotsford became a museum. His court-room on Selkirk square is also a museum. The Gothic-style Scott Monument on Princes Street in Edinburgh was built 1840–44, is 200 feet 6 inches high and contains a marble statue of the writer at the base. There is also a Doric column topped by a statue in Glasgow, as well as the life size statue in Selkirk square. A celebration for his centenary birthday was held at Bruanholme, with a procession, speeches, toasts and songs. He was apparently editing the memoirs of Rev. Dr. John Young of Hawick when he was suffered some sort of stroke in 1830, and the work never appeared. He went to the Mediterranean to recuperate, but returned to die at Abbotsford. Scott Crescent in Burnfoot was named after him in 1952 – ‘O Scott! with whom, in youth’s serenest prime, I wove with careless hand the fairy rhyme’ [JL], ‘Praise to the bard, immortal Scott, Who sleeps in ‘Dryburgh Bowers’, Whose genius hallowed every spot In this dear land of ours’ [JT], ‘Like a loved ghost thy fa-scotlands and Crumhaugh in St. Mary’s Kirk, including that of Chris-there. In 1841 he was living at about 41 North Hermitage Street. Walter (18th/19th C.) carrier in Hawick. His father-in-law Robert Anderson died in 1819. He may be the Walter who married Isabella Anderson and whose children include Margaret (b.1803), Charles (b.1805), Thomas (b.1810), Isabella (b.1816) and Christian (b.1818). Walter (1778–1857) 4th Laird of Wauchope, son of Charles, he was descended from the Scotts of Crumhaugh and Goldielands. He succceeded his father in 1808 and farmed at Wau-chope. He was a representative on the council of Heritors in Hobkirk Parish even before he succeded. He raised nearly 100 men during the French invasion scare of 1803, which became the Light Company of the Roxburgh Volunteers. He was captain of this unit during the False Alarm of 1804, and rode to collect men from Liddesdale, arriving at their head in Hawick before daybreak. When the unit disbanded in 1809 he became first

Captain of the (1st Regiment) Roxburgh Local Militia. He and his father were listed among the Commissioners for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1805 and 1819. He was one of the original members of the Jedforest Club in 1810. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. In the Land Tax Rolls in 1811 he is recorded as owner of parts of Wauchope, called Common, Hawklawtongues (or Wauchope-head), Wauchope-rig and Wigg. There is a story told (in Lang’s ‘Stories of the Border Marches’) of how, on the road to Hawick in 1813, he came upon an old man who had been recently attacked, and with the help of a local ploughman (William Little) tracked down the robber, who was later hung for his crime; the report in the Scots Magazine for 1813 states that the man attacked was 101 years old, and that the attacker was sentenced to transportation for robbery. It is said that he was generally slow to make up his mind, but known for his common sense and an authority on parish business. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He was made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick in 1828. He was nephew of Walter Dickson, merchant of Edinburgh, and so was related to the Hassendean and Hawick Dicksons. He was listed among the local gentry in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In the 1841 census he is listed as ‘Independent’, and the house had 3 servants and in 1851 was listed as ‘J.P. Landed Prop.’, employing 2 labourers. Also in 1851 he examined the memorial stones of the Scotts of Goldielands and Crumhaugh in St. Mary’s Kirk, including that of Chris-ian Bennet, who was his great-grandmother. He was said to be a keen supporter of the Hobkirk Baa, riding on his grey horse to encourage the ‘uppies’ side. In 1812 he married Marion, daughter of Thomas Macmillan of Shorthope in Selkirk-shire. Their children were: a daughter (b.1813), who probably died in infancy; Charles (1814–17); Thomas (1816–62), who succeeded and changed his surname to Macmillan-Scott; Walter (1817–44), who worked for the East India Company; Charles (1819–95), who farmed at Lintalee, and succeeded his uncle Archibald to Howcleuch; Archchibald (1822–62), who died in Malta; and Anne, who also died in infancy. He died at Wauchope and is buried in Hobkirk kirkyard. A portrait of his wife Marion was painted by Sir John Watson Gordon. Walter ‘Wat o the Knowe’ (b.1786/7) claimed to be a descendant of Walter Scott of Goldielands, he farmed at ‘the Knowe’ (now Bowanhill) near Teviothead. His family had previously been farmers at Newbigging on the edge of Hawick Common. His sister Agnes married mason John Armstrong from Wilton Dean and he had another sister who was grandmother of William Murray, gardener at Borthwickshields. He was recorded at ‘Hendersons Knowe’ in 1841. In 1851 he was a farmer of 630 acres at Bowanhill, employing 3 labourers, and in 1861 it was 650 acres, employing 2 labourers. He was still there in 1868. His toddy ladle is in the Museum, and he is buried in the aisle of St. Mary’s (with special permission of the Duke of Buccleuch). His housekeeper’s headstone at Teviothead is curtly inscribed ‘Tibbie Bell, Wat’s housekeeper, died 16th December 1863, aged 69’. He died unmarried. Walter (b.c.1790) farmer at Henderson’s Knowe on the 1841 census. Walter (b.1790/1) farmer at Wiltonburn. He is probably son of the earlier Walter from Wiltonburn. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He was listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835–41. It in 1851 he is listed as a farmer of 450 acres. His wife was Elizabeth and children included Margaret R., Walter, Elizabeth, Douglas, Walter D., Williamina J.N. and Ann T. Walter (b.c.1790) farm steward at Todshawhaugh according to the 1841 census. Walter (1790/1–aft. 1851) born in Cavers Parish, he became a shepherd at Singdean. He had been shepherd at Hyndlee to James Davidson, also called ‘Dandie Dinmont’, and was a keen fox hunter. He married Elspeth ‘Eppy’ Telfer and they had 5 boys and 5 girls, including James, Jean, Andrew, John, Anne Elliot, Christian and Eppy. 2 of his sons were shepherds and another was a gamekeeper. He is probably the Walter at Singdean appointed as a Parish elder in 1832 and listed as male head of family there 1835–41. It is said that he came across a French doctor who had settled in Scotland after the Peninsular War, and from him learned the secret of a herbal plaster that could cure cancer. This cure became quite famous at the time, and people would come from all around to try the cure. One particular story concerns the apparently successful treatment of a huge tumour on the wife of a tradesman from Galashiels. His son Andrew was shepherd at Twislehope, and carried on the secret. Walter (b.1792/3) farmer at Netherraw in Castleton Parish. In 1861 he was farmer of 15 acres there. His son was a teacher at Hermitage and he also had a daughter Esther. He was appointed an elder of Castleton Kirk in 1832. He is listed as male head of family at Netherraw in 1835–41. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1822 he married Janet Roxburgh in Hawick. Walter of Newton (b.1798/9) 3rd son of Walter, tenant in Girnwood. He is said to have married an Elliot of the Harwood branch, possibly Helen in Hawick in 1838; this seems likely to have been Helen (b.c.1794), daughter of Walter in Hermitage. His daughter Margaret Ann married Andrew Scott, who was afterwards of Newton. He is probably the cattle-dealer of that name recorded on the Crescent along with James (who would have been his brother) in 1841. In 1851 he was farmer of 1000 acres at Satchells. In 1861 he was farming 385 acres at Newton and employing 10 people there; his wife was Helen (b.c.1797), from Newcastleton, and his nephew George Ballantyne was farm overseer. He was still recorded at Newton in an 1868 directory. His wife Helen ‘Elliot or Scott’ was recorded as owner of Newton in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874. Walter ‘Watty’, ‘Wattie Scott the Cairrier’ (d.1857) owner of a carriers business in Hawick. His stabling and yard were at the west side of where the Liberal Club was built, 78 High Street; this was referred to as ‘Wood Yard’ in the 1841 census, and he shared the premises with another carrier, James Best. His firm carried general goods to Berwick and elsewhere. He may be the Walter listed in 1837, leaving from the Grapes for Glasgow every other Tuesday, and for Langholm every other Thursday, as well as going to Selkirk every other Tuesday and Thursday. He may be the Walter listed in 1852 as carrier between Denholm, Hawick and Jedburgh once a week. He was also listed in 1852 going to Carlisle, Langholm and Longtown every Monday and Wednesday, Jedburgh and Kelso on Mondays and Fridays, and Selkirk, Melrose and Galashiels on Tuesdays and Fridays. His son, also Walter, was Cornet in 1859. Walter ‘Wat the Sweep’ (1799–1869) well known character in 19th century Hawick, with sooty black clothes and a huge bushy beard. He liked to recount astonishing tales of his own strength at harvesting and in the wars. He died in Hawick Poorhouse. Walter (1801–47) son of Sir Walter, he was 2nd Baronet of Abbotsford. In 1815 he played a ceremonial role in the ‘Carterhaugh Baa’, riding out with the Buccleuch banner to signal the start of the match. He died without issue. Walter (b.1812/3–92) son of Thomas and Christian. He was a joiner on Buccleuch Street (No. 4), like his father before him. He was listed as a joiner on Buccleuch Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 he was living with his sister Jean.

He later married Christian (or Christina) Lillico in 1853 and their children included Thomas and William. He died at 4 Buccleuch Street. Walter (b.1814/5) coachman at Whitehaugh Cottage in 1841 and 1851. His wife was Isabella and they had a son, also Walter. Walter (1817–44) 2nd son of Walter of Wauchope and Marion Macmillan. He was a doctor with the East India Company. He died at Allahabad, Bengal. Walter (1820–84) born in Roberton Parish, son of Thomas and Agnes Leithead. He worked as a fuller in Wilton. His sister Janet married James Black. In 1851 he was living at Wilton Place and in 1861 at Upper Hope Park. He married Mary Beattie (from Selkirk), who died in 1891, aged 65. Their children included: Thomas (1849–1924), tweed manufacturer, who died in Toronto; John Beattie (b.1852); and Robert (or 'Bob', b.1864). In the 1880s his son Thomas was living at Ellabank with his widow Mary. He was said to be 61 when he died (probably in error) and was buried in Wilton Cemetery. Walter (19th C.) son of John, his mother being a Deans. He was last of more than a century of tenants of the same family at Hummelknowes Mill. He was recorded there in 1851, as farmer of 26 acres, living with his brother John, who was miller at Hummelknowes. He left the farm in 1855, moving to Ormiston. He was farmer at Ormiston Parkhead in 1861. He married Margaret Nichol and their children included: John (b.1846); William, J.P. (b.1848); Janet (b.1850); and Walter (b.1852). Walter (1822–1892) son of William, tenant farmer at Girnwood. He took over from his father as farmer at Girnwood. He died unmarried and was succeeded in the tenancy by his niece Hannah Davies, who purchased the property. In 1861 he was listed as farmer of 600 acres at Girnwood and he was still there in 1868. Walter (b.1831) son of grocer and spirit merchant Walter, with his mother being Isabella Hogg. He was a chemist and druggist, being in Galashiels in 1859 and was at Ladhope in 1861, with his brother-in-law David Scott Park visiting. He later worked in Durham. In 1859 at Hawick Free Kirk, he married Ellen Cabourn Park, daughter of David Scott Park. Walter (1835/6–1892) son of grocer Thomas and Mary Helm. In 1874 or 1875 he was co-founder of Lyle & Scott’s, along with William Lyle. He was described as ‘a gentleman of long practical experience in the trade, having held important positions with eminent manufacturers here for years’. They built the firm up from modest beginnings into a huge concern, largely through his efforts. He married Margaret Law (who died aged 24), with whom his children were: Walter, died young; Thomas, died aged 23; and Margaret, who married John Elliot of Selkirk. He secondly married Helen Porteous, with additional children: William P., Cornet in 1893; Robert P., killed in France in 1917; James; Isa Watson, who died young; and John P. He is recorded attending the 1891 Common Riding in a carriage along with several of Hawick’s most respected elderly gentlemen. He died at Craigview, Denholm. Walter ‘Hawick Wattie’ (1844/5–1904) born in Hawick, said to be from a good family, he was a stockingmaker by trade. He was employed in Elliot’s shop for many years, but became a homeless wanderer. He roamed around the local countryside for many years. He was said to be ‘a good-natured, humorous man, with a fund of song and anecdote’. Always seen at Border fairs, he was often the worse for drink, and well known to local Magistrates. William Peffers immortalised him in a poem – ‘Now Wat-tie neither begs nor buys, Nor steals, nor sells, nor does he trock. For daily bread he jist relies On kindliness o’ country folk’ [WP], ‘...They’re Jamie Cant and Pally Wattie, Come, let us run them in’ [WE], Walter (1845–1919) born at Synt-ion, son of William and Mary Scott. In 1861 he was a joiner’s apprentice with Thomas Waldie in Ashkirk. He emigrated to Canada, along with his brothers George and Alexander. He married twice and had 7 children. He died in York, Ontario. Walter E. (19th/20th C.) farmer at Pilnuiir, who was Cornet in 1903 and one of the founder members of the Callants’ Club. Walter Purdom (1859–1934) son of Robert and Mary Purdom. He was farmer at Falnash and was a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. Walter Ross ‘Wat-tie’ (1926–2006) son of Andrew and Bunty, who had moved to Canada, he was born in Winnipeg, but soon returned to ‘the Nitton’. He was widely stated to be the best Hawick R.F.C. player who was never capped for Scotland. He was Greens captain 1948/9 and 1952/3, won 30 sevens medals and regularly played for the South of Scotland, being renowned for his strong hand-off. He spent his life in farming and was also a keen curler. An enthusiastic Common Riding supporter, he first followed during the War years, was Acting Father in 1970 and served as President of the Mosstroopers and Callants’ Clubs. He married Joey (who was a teacher at Wilton School) and had children John Ross (Honorary Provost), Terry (also Acting Father) and Jill. Warin (13th C.) listed on a panel in Kent when the goods at Chileham, belonging to the late wife of Alexander Baliol were valued. His name occurs as ‘Warin Scot’, but it is unclear if he could be related to local Scots. William (12th/13th C.) probably son of Richard and great-grandson of Uchtreid Fitz-Scott. He attended the court of Alexander II, and is recorded as witness to a charter of Walter (grandson of Walter, Steward of Scotland) between 1207 and 1214. He may be the same William who witnessed charters by Walter the Steward to Paisley Abbey, a payment of rent for Paisley mill, a gift of a church in Ayrshire, a gift of lands in Perth and another related to Coldingham Priory, all perhaps in the 1220s; he is there recorded as ‘Willelmo Scoti’. He may also be the William who witnessed a grant of lands in Strathblane around the 1240s. He was succeeded by Sir Richard, generally considered to be his son, who was probably the first Scott to own lands anywhere near to Hawick. It is possible that another son was Walter, who held lands in Peebles and signed the Ragman Rolls along with Richard in 1296. William (13th C.) recorded as William ‘le Scot’ in 1233 in Stradfa (perhaps Stratford). He was tailor of Richard, Earl of Cornwall, and was commanded to be given the house in Bordeaux that had been taken from him by the Seneschal of Gascony. William (d.c.1243) recorded as ‘William Scot’ and William ‘of Stitchill’. He was recorded as Archdeacon of Worcestershire in 1218. In 1226 he was presented as Bishop of Durham, but this was objected to by King Henry III, and the election was quashed by the Pope in 1227. He may have been father of Robert Stichill, who was later Bishop of Durham. It is unclear if he was related to any other Scots. William (13th C.) listed in Lincoln in 1252. Along with his wife ‘Hawisea’, he had a writ ‘ad terminum’. William (13th C.) recorded as ‘le Escot’ in Cumberland in 1254. William (13th C.) recorded in Essex in 1259, when his daughter Matilda gave money for an assize. He was ‘Walter le Scot of Mapilder-stede’. William (13th C.) mentioned in 1261, when his son and heir John ‘le Escot’ was listed in a document relating to Trent in Northumberland. William (13th C.) recorded as being of ‘Parva Jernemue’ (i.e. Little Yarmouth) in 1262. This was in a set of pleas from several counties, given at Canterbury, involving John Baliol in Suffolk, in which he and others were fined. William (13th C.) recorded as ‘Willelmus Scot de Inethal’ and ‘Willelmo Scot in Ethal’ in the 1279 assize roll of Northumberland. His lands were probably in the area near Stanford, where the court was held. William (13th/14th C.) signatory of the Ragman Rolls in 1296. He thus swore fealty to Edward I, along with 9 other people of the same name, although he was the only one from Roxburghshire. It is unclear how he might have been related to the main line of the Scotts of Buccleuch. One possibility is that he was a son of Sir Richard of Murthockstone (whose father was also William) who also signed the Ragman Rolls. William (13th/14th C.) recorded as ‘William [Les] cot’ when he was on a jury in Lanark in 1302/3. He is presumably different from other Williams. William of Dundonald (d.1305) taken prisoner at the siege of Stirling in 1304. He was beheaded the following year. He may have been from the county of Cunningham. William (13th/14th C.) mentioned along with Robert in 1307/8 when they were paid for being messengers of the English army. They delivered something between Cumnock, Ayr and Lanark. It is possible he was the same as one of the other contemporary Williams. William (14th C.) recorded in the Exchequer Rolls in the period 1379–84, when an annuity was paid to his heirs from the East Mill of Haddington. He may have been related to the nearly contemporary John, who was also associated with Haddington. William (14th/15th C.) recorded in 1404 when he gained the lands of ‘Nemphlar’ in Lanarkshire, which were resigned by his mother Janet Lockhart. William (14th/15th C.) brother of the Laird of Balwearie. In a charter of the Duke of Albany (probably about 1410), he was granted lands in Fife by his brother. William of Glack (14th/15th C.) younger son of Walter, 1st Laird of Synton. However, information about these generations is very uncertain. William (15th C.) recorded in 1430 when he witnessed a charter for lands in Lanarkshire for Melrose Abbey. He was a Chaplain, probably with the Abbey. Perhaps the same ‘magistri Willelmi Scott’ was Master of the Hospital of St. Leonard’s near Lanark in the period 1428–31 according to the Exchequer Rolls. William (15th C.) witness to a sasine for the lands of Cessford in 1441. His son John was also listed, as well as Adam. It is unclear how they were related to other contemporary Scotts. William (15th C.) witness to the 1447 sasine for the sale of the Cousinlands to Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. He is described as a presbyter and perpetual vicar of Westerkirk. The other Scots who witnessed the document were all close relatives of Scott of Buccleuch. William (15th C.) customs officer in Arbroath in 1447 and 1450, according to the Exchequer Rolls. In 1454 he had a sasine for the lands of ‘Manuell Macnab’ near Strathearn. Probably the same William gave the payment in 1435 for the communities of Montrose and Arbroath. He may have been ancestor of the Bailie of Montrose of the same name recorded in 1507. William (15th C.) Burgess of Edinburgh recorded in the Exchequer Rolls of 1456 when he was repaid for an advance to John Dalrymple in Bruges. William ‘Will’ (15th C.) recorded in 1474/5 when he compounded with the King for a remission for the slaughter of ‘Johnme Crossate’. He was said to have a ‘letter of slains’ with the injured party. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Williams. William of Foulshiels (15th C.) probably 3rd surviving son of Sir David, mentioned in the 1471/2 marriage contract with the sister of Archibald, Earl of Angus. Alternatively he could be the 4th son of Sir Walter of Buccleuch (or the 2 men could be compounded). He was witness to a charter by Robert of Haining in 1476, and may be the William who (along with John) witnessed a document for David of Buccleuch relating to Kirkurd in 1475/6. He was probably deceased by 1488, since he is not mentioned in the list of heirs in the Crown charter for the Barony of Branxholme in that year. He may have married in 1472 and have died without issue. It is unclear whether he was actually ‘of Foulshiels’, or if this was confusion with the later William of Foulshiels. It is also possible that he was the same as the Rector of Southdean or the same as the uncle (who was declared a rebel) of the later Robert of Allanhaugh. He was stated to be the son of David in 1478, when he took over from his father as Ranger of Ettrick Ward. According to the Exchequer Rolls he served as Ranger until at least 1484. He held a ‘stead’ at Cacrabank for his fee; at the same time John Murray represented Yarrow ward and James Pringle the ward of Tweed. He also leased Tushielaw in 1484 and is probably the William who had the lease of Deephope in 1486. He was recorded as deceased and former Ranger in 1490, with his arrears mentioned. It is possible he is the William of Tushielaw from which Robert Elliot had remission in 1493 for stealing a horse. William (15th C.) recorded as ‘rectore de Sowdone’ (i.e. Southdean) when he witnessed the resignation of the lands of Mangerton at Branxholme in 1482. He is ‘domino Willelmo Scot rectore de Sowdone’ (not as recorded in one place ‘Foudoun’) when he was witness to a charter of 1484/5 for the lands of Whitchesters being given by Sir David of Branxholme to his son Robert (of Allanhaugh). He also witnessed a resignation of the same lands shortly afterwards. In 1488/9 he witnessed an agreement between the Vicar of Hassendean and the Abbot of Melrose. In 1491/2 he was the priest who witnessed the last will of Sir David Scott, and who was to choose the priest who would say mass when he died. It is possible he was the same man as William, described as ‘decanis tevidalie’ named among other priests at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493. He seems likely to have been closely related to the Scotts of Branxholme, perhaps even a brother or cousin of Sir David. William of Goldielands (15th C.) mentioned in 1493 when his son William was allowed to ‘compone’ for rieving crimes. It seems likely that he was related to the Scotts of Buccleuch, but the connection is not known. He is the first known Scott of Goldielands, but whether he was closely related to the later ones is not known. William (15th C.) son of William of Goldielands. At the 1493 Justice-aire held in Jedburgh, he was allowed to compone for stealing 12 goats from Fastheugh and for associating with English thieves. His surety was Robert of Whitchester. William ‘Gyde’ (15th C.) recorded in 1493 at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. Walter of Howpasley was allowed to compound for bringing in him and his brother John, as well as other ‘traitors of Levin’, to raid the farm of Harethead. He may have been related to other Scotts with the same nickname. William (15th C.) recorded in the 1494/5 Justice-aire in Selkirk, along with ‘Wantoun’ Walter Dalgleish. William Dickson in Ladhope was convicted for resetting the pair, with his surety being Walter Scott of Howpasley. He may be the same as one of the other Williams. William (15th C.) recorded in the 1494/5 Justice-aire in Selkirk, when he was fined for non-appearance. He was listed being ‘de rone’, but it is unclear where this was. William (15th C.) recorded in 1497 when he had remission, along with ‘Johnme Scot and Johnme Scott’ for the slaughter of ‘Johme Fischare’, fleeing to England, and other crimes. It is unknown to which branch of the Scotts he belonged. William ‘Will’ (15th/16th C.) one of the 4 men selected by the Sheriff of Roxburghshire to appraise the goods of Philip Turnbull of Whithope in 1500. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Williams. It is possible he was the same William listed among the bailies of the Sheriff of Roxburgh on the Precept of Chancery (probably in 1532) for William Scott of Hassendean retaining his properties. William (15th/16th C.) son of David of Tushielaw, brother of Adam ‘King of Thieves’. He is recorded in 1502 when Patrick Turnbull in Wanchope had remission for associating with him and 2 Armstrongs (Archibald and Ninian) for their ‘Stouthreifs, Slaughters, Burnings, and other crimes’. He is probably also the William ‘in Thirlestane’ in 1502 who ‘came in the King’s Will’ for violently occupying the lands of Thirlestane, without having a lease from Patrick Crichton of Cranston-Riddell; Walter of Buccleuch served as surety. This case suggests some ongoing dispute over the lands of Thirlestane (foreshadowing what would come later). His brother John would later become Laird of Thirlestane. He may also have been related to John of Thirlestane, who is recorded earlier. William (15th/16th C.) son of James of Broadmeadows. He is recorded at the Justice-aire in Selkirk in 1502 receiving remission for stealing cattle from John Romanno of that Ilk. His surety was John Scott in Hassendean, who may have been related. In a second case he had remission for injuring Walter Scott of Tushielaw and for stealing a horse from James Arres, 44 sheep from John Laudor in Philiphaugh and 7 cows from the younger Laird of Ormiston; the surety was again John in Hassendean. In a third case he was ‘in braid medois’ when he had remission for stealing 26 cows from William Murray in Wester Hailes, with Alexander, Lord Home as his surety. John, also listed as son of James of Broadmeadows, also had remission at the same Justice-aire, and was therefore his brother. William (15th/16th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire in Selkirk in 1503 in about 1502. The entry is crossed out in the transcribed record, but it is unclear why. Adam of Robertson presented him as a suitor for his lands (presumably of Robertson) before witnesses including William Todd, John Cant and William Muir. Essentially the same entry occurred earlier but was scored out. He is perhaps related to the Scotts of Robertson, and could be the same as one of the other Williams. William (15th/16th C.) younger son of Sir Alexander of Howpasley. He is said to have been Abbot of Melrose 1504–06, according to Scott of Rodono (although his name does not appear on lists of the Abbots, so this is unclear). William (15th/16th C.) one of the ‘bailies in that part’ appointed by Patrick, Earl of Bothwell in 1504 to infeft Walter of Buccleuch in his father’s lands in Annandale. The others were his son Robert, along with Walter of Howpasley and Stephen. It is unclear who he was and whether he was closely related to the other appointed bailies. William of Fenwick (15th/16th C.) member of the panel for deciding on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers by James Douglas in 1509. In 1502 he is probably the William ‘in Fenwick’ who, along with Robert in Synton, was fined by the Court of the Judiciary for failing to enter William Middlemas. He was also ‘in fenwik’ when he had remission for stealing sheep and cattle from Bowden, with his surety being Robert in Synton and for stealing sheep belonging to the Kers from the farm of Cauldshiel, with his surety being Walter Scott of Headshaw. Probably the same William was tenant at Fenwick in 1510, when he was one of the sureties for Thomas, brother of Philip of Headshaw, who was implicated in the murder of John Murray of Falahill. Other sureties were William in Hawick, George in Goldielands, David in Whitehaugh and John of Haining, suggesting he was probably closely related to some of those branches. He was also recorded as ‘de Fenwick’ in 1510 when he was a pledge for Stephen, who leased Deephope and Mount Common. He could be son of Walter of Fenwick, recorded in 1484/5, and probably related to Simon in Fenwick, who is mentioned in 1528 and 1540. William (15th/16th C.) described as ‘in Hawic’ in 1510 when (along with George in Goldielands and David in Whitehaugh) he was surety for Thomas Scott, brother of Philip of Headshaw, who had been involved in the murder of John Murray of Falahill. This may be the same William ‘in Hawic’ who is recorded in the Register of the Privy Seal of 1502 receiving remission for the slaying of Simon Chapman; the same William is recorded in the records of the Justice-aire in Jedburgh being declared a fugitive for this same crime. He is likely to have been related to the Scott branches in Headshaw, Goldielands, Whitehaugh, Fenwick and Haining (since they are all mentioned in the same case). Probably the same William ‘in Hawik’ is among the men listed in the remission of 1526 for the attack on the Earl of Arran led by the Homes; after him are listed John, Thomas, John, Thomas, Philip and Steven, ‘brether to the said Johnne’, some of whom may be close relatives. Bailie William (15th/16th C.) witness to the sasine for the Barony of Hawick being given to James Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1514. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Williams. William of Whithope (d.1523) younger son of Sir Walter, 8th Laird of Bransholme and Buccleuch. In 1515 he had a charter of Whithope from James Douglas of Drumlanrig. He died without male issue and his brother Walter was his heir. William (15th/16th C.) recorded as being ‘in Fawlishope’ (probably ‘Fhau’ in the Ettrick valley) in 1526 on a list of many Borders men who had remission for helping the Homes attack the Earl of Arran. George was also listed as being in the same place, and so probably related. William of Ormiston (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1531 as the person who ‘sought instruments’ in a transaction where Philip of Headshaw assigned his lands of Hartwoodburn to his 2nd son Robert on his death. He was uncle to Robert and hence presumably brother to Philip of Headshaw. He could be the deceased ‘Wlc of O…’ recorded in 1537 in relation to the lands of Todrig. He may be the same as William ‘in Hartwood’ who in 1536/7 accused someone of selling stolen skins. He may be the William in Hartwoodburn who witnessed a bond in 1541, involving William in Bowhill and ‘master’ Michael. He may also be the William in ‘Hartvoodburn’ listed along with John in Aikwood (‘Dustyba’) and others in 1544 when John Dunlop accused them of stealing his butter. William (16th C.) described as ‘in Hillhous’ in 1528 when he was one of the arbitrators (along with Robert of Howplesley, William of Harden, Walter of Synton, John of Robertson and Simon of Fenchurch) to decide on the succession of Borthaugh lands. William of Foulishels (16th C.) son of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, probably ‘Wicked Wat’; he was probably an illegitimate son, since Sir Walter’s eldest surviving son was Sir William of Kirkurd (with the same name). In 1532 he had a charter for the lands of Foulishels (in Selkirkshire). The later John of Foulishels was probably his son or grandson. The earlier William, son of David of Buccleuch, may not be directly related (but this is uncertain). It is possible he was the same as Sir William of Kirkurd. William (15th/16th C.) recorded in Sundhope (in Yarrow) in 1533 when he witnessed a document about the murder of John Wilson, who probably also lived at Sundhope. William (15th/16th C.) uncle of William, who was son of Robert of Allanhauch. In 1535 the yonger William was given remission for associating with him, since he had been declared a rebel, as well as for wounding George, son of Thomas Turnbull; it is unclear how much earlier these crimes took place. He must have been brother of the earlier Robert of Allanhauch, and hence a son of Sir David of Branxholme. It is also possible that he was the same as William of Foulshiels, or some other contemporary William. William (16th C.) recorded being ‘in Faldishoip’ (i.e. Fauldishope) in 1534/5 when he witnessed a document in Selkirk. He was ‘in Faldishoup’ in 1535 when he witnessed another document in Selkirk. In 1536 he was ‘Voll Scot in Fauldishoup’ when he witnessed a transaction between Walter of Robertson and Michael of Aikwood. William of Hassendean (16th C.) probably a younger son of James of Kirkurd, or alternatively a grandson of James. He was heir to his brother (or uncle) John, succeeding in 1530. He is listed as being ‘in Halsyndene’ (i.e. Hassendean) in 1526 among the Borderers given remission for an earlier attack on the Earl of Arran (note that William, brother of Adam in Clarilaw, is listed separately, suggesting there were 2 closely related Williams at that time). In 1527 he is among the Lairds, under Walter of Branxholme, who had remission for their role in the Battle of Skirmish Field; he is there ‘of Hassindene’. He is recorded being pardoned in 1528, along with Robert of Allanhaugh, Robert of Howplesley and William Turnbull of Minto. He may be the William who was one of the Bailies appointed in 1528 to infet David, son of Sir Walter of Branxholme in his lands. In 1530 he was one of the Border Lairds who submitted themselves to James V to keep better order. He resigned the lands of Falside (in Yarrow) to William, son of Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1532, as ratified by Queen Margaret in 1539. Probably in 1532 (note that Fraser makes this the 19th year of the reign of James VI, which must be incorrect) he had a Precept of Chancery for keeping his lands, after having forfeited them for supporting Sir Walter at Melrose (presumably in 1526); these lands were Over and Nether Newhall in the Barony of Chamberlain Newton and Easter Hassendean and ‘Deidrig’ in the half Barony of Hassendean. He was part of an inquest panel held in Jedburgh in 1533. In 1534 he purchased the 40-shilling lands of Nether Galaw from Gavin Elliot, the letter of reversion being sealed at Hassendean Kirk. In 1536 he granted Thomas Turnbull ‘in the Tronyhill’ lands on the east part of Eastern Hassendean. He is recorded about 1537 in a ‘letter of reversion’ by David Scott in Clarilaw for the lands of the Mains of ‘Capitrig’ near Hassendean tower. In 1538 Thomas Turnbull of Rawflat had remission for stealing from him, specifically 2 letters of reversion for the lands of ‘Coppitrig’ which were kept in his box in the house of Nicholas Rutherford in Edinburgh. He was given the lands of Falside (again) in Selkirkshire in 1539. And it is probably the same William ‘in Hassendean’ who had a court dispute in 1540 with Thomas Turnbull, tenant of Rawflat, over ‘wadsets’. They were also in dispute over a 1536 marriage contract between his eldest daughter and heir and heir (although it is unclear how this could have been, since he appears to have had sons) Elizabeth and George, heir to the same Thomas Turnbull. Probably the same William was witness to a sasine in 1551 confirming the Barony of Hassendean to Alexander Cunningham; his son David is also mentioned. David probably succeeded him, while Adam of Burnfoot and Walter may have been other sons. He probably married Elizabeth, the elder daughter of George Chisholme of that Ilk. William of Alton (16th C.) recorded in Scott of Satchells’ doggerel family history. It is stated that ‘John Scot of the Monks-tower’ was ‘brother to old William Scot of Alton’. It is unclear how he was related to the other Scotts of Alton. William (16th C.) described as ‘in Layk’ in 1535 when he was charged with stealing cattle from Arthur Douglas and Thomas Fresall ‘in Efflesche’ (probably Effledge) and also Marion Davidson in the same place. It is unclear where ‘Layk’ might be. William (16th C.) recorded in Elindhope in 1539 when he complained in Selkirk that James Stoddart had taken violent possession of his lands of ‘est Eldinhoup’. However, Stoddart counter-claimed that he had ‘wrongfully manured and sowed my lands’. Sir William of Kirkurd, ‘Whitecloak’ (d.1552), 2nd son and eldest surviving son of ‘Wicked Wat’. He became heir after the death of his brother David, but predeceased his father. In 1532 he was granted the lands of Falside in Selkirkshire, resigned by William Scott of Hassendean; this was ratified by Margaret, Queen of Scots in 1539. In 1539 he is ‘feuar of Fausyd’ when he and his father Sir Walter had their official give notice of removal to Thomas (son of Adam) and Robert of Howpasley. In 1541 he is recorded as ‘secund sone to the lard of Bukcleuch’ when he claimed tenancy of the Crown lands of ‘Hawtherne’ in Yarrow. He took part in Border expeditions with his father and was present at Pinkie in 1547. In 1549 he entered into a bond of ‘man-rent’ with Mary of Lorraine, the Queen Regent, in which he was to receive the same fees and profits received by the deceased John Melvin of Raith. Later in 1549 she granted him a pension of £100 Scots as a result of the damages he sustained defending ‘contrair oure auld inimeis off Ingland’. In 1550 he was listed as one of the 2 curators of James Crichton of Cranston Riddell, his step-brother (i.e. son of his mother by her first husband). He married Grizel Betoun, sister to his step-mother (they were both daughters of John Betoun of Creich with different mothers); after his death she remarried Sir Andrew Murray of Blackbarony. His children included: Sir Walter, the 10th Laird; Janet, who married Sir Thomas Kerr of Oxnam and Ferniehirst; Margaret, who married Sir John Johnstone of that Ilk and secondly Sir Alexander Jardine of Applegirth and was buried in 1618; Elizabeth, who married John Carmichael of Meadowflat, having previously had marriage contracts with Thomas, 2nd son of Sir Walter Ker of Cessford, as well as with John, grandson of Sir Andrew Ker of the Hirsel; and another daughter who married Walter Scott of Headshaw. John, recorded in 1632 as ‘brother naturall’ to Sir William Murray of Elibank was probably another son. There is an existing inventory of his estate when he died, which was only a few months before his father was murdered on Edinburgh High Street. William (16th C.) Cus tomar of Irvine according to the Exchequer Rolls for at least the years 1537–42. He is recorded as ‘junior’ (suggesting there was a senior William in Irvine) and gave in his reports with Robert, who was surely related. William ‘the Boltfoot’ of Todrig and Harden (d.c.1561) 2nd son of Robert of Stiches. He was renowned as a fearless horseman and for several daring deeds. His nickname derived from a lameness caused by a wound received in battle. He is probably the ‘Willelmto Scott, fratre germano Walteri Scot de Styrkschaw’ who witnessed a document in 1507/8 relating to the tower in Hawick ‘between the bridges’ for Scott of Whitchesters. Originally of Todrig, near Synton, he acquired Harden in 1512, from his brother Walter of Synton and Stirkshaws, as confirmed in a 1535 charter from the Lord of Home. As well as Harden the lands included Highchesters, Todrig, Wester Essendye, Burnfoot and Shielswood; 1 acre at the east end still belonged to Walter, but that was also transferred according to another confirming charter of 1559 (although it is possibly 1550), in which his son Walter is named. He also had the lands of Hoscote confirmed in 1525; these were subject of a letter of ‘warrantice’ with George, Lord Home in 1535. In 1530 he swore before the widow of Stephen Lauder (who had also held lands at Todrig) that he owed Lauder no more than a merk. In 1533 he was ‘in Toddyryk’ when (along with John there) he witnessed a document relating to a murder at Sundhope. He is probably the William ‘in Hardene’ who in 1532 acted as an arbitrator for Walter in Headshaw in a dispute with his mother Isabel Murray. In 1535 he was tenant in Todrig when William Lauder (then Laird of Todrig) acted to have him removed. He received the lands of Nether Harden from Simon Scott of Fenwick in 1540 (finally consigned in 1556). He was listed on the 1526 remission for Borders men for supporting the Homes in an attack on the Earl of Arran; he is listed right after Walter of Sinton, and his brother David (possibly ‘Lady’, tenant in Stiches) is right afterwards.

1528 he was one of the Scotts who acted as arbitrators to decide on the succession to the lands of Borthaugh. He was listed in the Selkirk Protocols Books in 1532 as one of 2 arbiters for Walter Scott in Headshaw’s dispute with Elizabeth Murray. In 1548/9 he was sent (along with Adam of Burnfoot and Clement Crozier) by the Laird of Buccleuch to visit Alexander MacDougall, probably to extract a horse from him. In 1550 he was one of 10 Scots who signed a bond with the Queen to keep order and hand over criminals. In 1550 he (and his wife Elizabeth Ker) had a sasine for estates at Todrig. Also in 1550 he is ‘in Todrig’ when, along with his son and heir Walter, he had a letter of reversion for the lands of Harden with Alexander, Lord Home. He is probably the William ‘in Harden’ who witnessed a Riddell document of 1551. Also in 1551 he signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’. In 1553 he and his wife were also mentioned in 2 documents of John, 4th Lord Hay of Yester. In 1553/4 he was listed among Scotts and their supporters who a group of Kers promised not to harm. And in 1555/6 he is probably the William in Harden who was summoned by Alexander Lord Home to appear at Melrose Abbey to receive redemption money for Hoscote.

He married Mary, daughter of Chisholme of that Ilk (possibly Robert); she was mother of his successor, Walter, who may have been ‘Auld Wat o Harden’. However, there is dispute over these generations, some accounts placing an extra Walter (d.c.1563) between him and ‘Auld Wat’. He secondly married Elizabeth Ker of Fairnilee (possibly a widow of Riddell of that Ilk), with whom he had at least 2 sons: Robert of Burnfoot (in Ale Water); and George of Todrig. He probably died at Todrig – ‘The Laird and Lady of Harden Betwixt them procreat was a son Called William Boltfoot of Harden – He did survive to be a man’ [CWS], ‘To tak’ the foord he aye was first, Unless the English loons were near; Plunge vassal then, plunge horse and man, Auld Boltfoot rides into the rear’ [SWS]. William (16th C.) son of Adam, who lived at Kershope on the Ettrick. In 1533 he complained that Robert of Howpalsye and Philip in Dryhope had ‘violently stolen’ goods from Kershope and he charged John Murray of Kershope with seeking restitution. He is probably the William ‘of Kershop’ who witnessed a document in Selkirk in 1536, relating to the lands of Friarshaw. William (16th C.) recorded being ‘in Haining’ when he witnessed a document in Selkirk in 1535. He may be related to John, who was in Haining in about 1534. William (16th C.) priest mentioned in the 1537 Charter of Douglas of Drumlanrig, along with several other clergymen. Since he is designated ‘Mr.’, he presumably already had his Masters degree and was a fully qualified priest. But his precise status in Hawick, relative to the other clergymen mentioned in the Charter, is unknown. William (16th C.) owner of half a particate of land on the south side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. William, son of William Scott is also listed as having 11 particates (and could be his son). One of these men is the ‘said William’ who also held 3 participates of land on the north side of Hawick. William (16th C.) recorded being ‘in Hartwoodmyres’ among the witness listed in 1539/40 for the instrument of sasine at ‘Fawsyde’ (probably in the Ettrick valley) for Janet Scott (widow of Robert ‘Elwand’) purchasing lands in Appletreehall from Robert of Howпасley; Simon, James and Roland are also listed and some may have been closely related. He is probably the Scott in Hartwoodmyres who was listed among the friends who would vouch for Alan Mithag in 1539/40. In 1541 he witnessed a document in Selkirk for Patrick Murray of Falahill. Also in 1541 he was ‘of Hartvod myris’ when he witnessed part of a marriage contract between a son of Robert of Allanhaugh and a daughter of John of Thirlestane. He could be the William recorded in 1542 when he asked Simon Shortreed (Vicar of Ashkirk) to produce ‘the evidents of his father’ and give sasine of a tenement to him. It seems he is distinct from the contemporary William in Hartwoodburn. In 1562 both he and William in Tushielaw witnessed a transaction for Robert of Howpasley (making it clear that they are different men). However, it is still possible he was the same as one of the other contemporary Williams. His son Thomas was also a witness in 1562. Also in 1562 he assigned to his son and heir John his steadings of Gamescleuch ‘callit Eittriksyde’, including a condition to follow the arrangements. already made with Simon in Thirlestane; the witnesses included Robert of Howpaseley, Adam of Wamphray, William in Tushielaw and William’s son Walter. William (16th C.) recorded in 1530 as part of an action against Patrick Murray of Falahill and Alexander Tait of Pirn. John Scott, Vicar of Hawick, stated that he (William) ‘inhabited and manured . . . le forest steid called Craggischank and received the benefits of the same . . . throughout a period of 12 weeks’. He is probably the same as one of the other Williams. William of Allanhaugh (16th C.) son of Robert. He was recorded as heir apparent of Robert in Allanhaugh and was entered into ward in Borthwick Castle in 1530/1 along with John, son of Walter of Synton; sureties were Robert, Lord Maxwell and John Johnstone of that Ilk. In 1535 he had remission for associating with his uncle William (then a rebel) and for wounding George, son of Thomas Turnbull. In 1541 his father infested him in his 6 merklands of ‘Quhyisester treis’ in the Barony of Whitchesters, as part of his marriage contract with Margaret, daughter of John of Thirlestane. He appears to have succeeded his father in about 1557. In 1557 there are several renters (from Melrose Abbey) of lands in Ringwoodfield who may have been his sons, assuming he was ‘the guidman of Alanehauch’ at that time. They are: ‘Young Robert’, who rented Brugh; Simon and John, who rented Stobicote; and Adam ‘of Alane-hauche’, who rented ‘Rigwodhat’, and was presumably either a son or brother. He was probably succeeded by his son William (or there may have been an additional Robert between). William of Aikwood (16th C.) son of Michael of Aikwood. In about 1529 he and his father gained half the lands of Bowhill from his cousin Isabel Murray. He was younger in Aikwood in 1530 on a list of men from the Selkirk area who acknowledged that they had taken prisoners, horses, meal and other goods from men they thought were traitors of Annandale, but understanding they were legitimate travellers from Moffat had returned all the goods; John in Aikwood was also listed. In 1540/1 he witnessed an agreement for John Scott being responsible for the death of Walter Down, with his father Michael and brothers Robert and Walter as other witnesses. He had a confirming charter for the lands of Aikwood in 1541. He may also be the William in Bowhill who in 1541 bound himself with others, including ‘master’ Michael (probably his father) and notary Ninian Brydon; William in Hartwoodburn was a witness. He was succeeded by his brother Robert. Robert’s sister Elizabeth (who would then also be his sister) had a marriage contract in 1580. William (16th C.) recorded in Catslack in 1531/2 when he was part of an inquest to rule on a land arrangement in Selkirk, along with several other Scotts. He was surely related to other Scotts associated with Catslack. William (16th C.) 3rd son of George of Blindhaugh and Margaret Turnbull. In 1544 he was designated as the successor to his father’s lands of Leap Hill and Langhope. Perhaps the same William was recorded as a ‘young man’ and in ‘Blyndhaucht’ in 1561 when he purchased a house and yard in Selkirk. He also witnessed a bond between Bruntous and Armstrongs in Selkirk in 1561. Bailie William (16th C.) witness to a bond of 1546 for Elliot of Redheugh and others entering several Elliots (of Thorlischeo etc.) as prisoners with Kerr of Ferniehirst. He was described as ‘balye of Hawik’ and may have been the same as one of the contemporary Williams. William (16th C.) recorded as ‘Wylhm Skott’ in 1548/9, when he was taken prisoner by the English when they burned the Laird of Buccleuch’s tower in Hawick. He thus may have been a servant of Scott of Buccleuch. William (16th C.) tenant of Whames, listed in 1549 among the men who complained that their farms had been raided and burned by a group of English and Kers. He is probably related to John, who was also in Whames at that time, and another William who was there in 1580. William ‘Willie’ (16th C.) younger of Branxholme, he supposedly led the raid to avenge ‘Jamie Telfer of the fair Dodhead’ and was killed in the process. Unfortunately, it seems likely that he never existed. William (16th C.) took sasine for the lands of Colifort in 1550. He was described as being son of Wat ‘of Teviotdale’. He was probably related to Hob, who was convicted of rieving crimes in 1564. He is probably the ‘Wyll of Collefurde’, whose son ‘Reid Wyllie’ witnessed a document for Scott of Branxholme in 1585. William (16th C.) described as being ‘in Hawick’ in 1557. He occupied ‘Soltracroft’, as well as ‘Blakatis ayker’, for which he owed rent to Trinity Collegiate Church in Edinburgh. His son and heir apparent Robert is also mentioned. In 1565/6 he had another lease of lands from Trinity Collegiate Church, specifically for ‘Soltra-croft’, ‘Blacatis-aker’ and ‘Campiouscroft’. It is unclear how he was related to other contemporary Scotts. He may be the ‘Wilelmm Scot in Hawik’ who was on the ‘retour’ panel for Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1553/4. He may be the Walter ‘in Hawik’ who witnessed a transaction in Selkirk in 1545, involving Patrick Kelso and his wife Christian Scott; he is probably related to the George in Hawick who bought a tenement in Selkirk from the same Patrick Kelso and Christian Scott. He may have been related to the earlier and later Williams who are also ‘in Hawick’. William of Bowden (d.bef. 1582) recorded in about 1557 when he rented Northhouse from Melrose Abbey. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. Probably the same William ‘of Bolden’ was listed in 1553/4 among Scotts and their supporters who a group of Kers promised not to harm. He was deceased in 1582 when his son Walter witnessed a transaction involving the Scotts of Allanhaugh, taking place at Branxholme. William (d.bef. 1561) Burgess of Selkirk. In 1561 his son and heir George paid entry to Patrick Murray for his lands. This was with the assistance of his friend Walter. In 1562 his son George (and George’s wife Janet Veitch) paid additional entry money to Walter and Walter’s son Walter. William of Chapelhill (16th C.). His daughter Ann married Walter Chisholme of that Ilk. He was surely related (perhaps father) to Walter of Chapelhill, who was listed by Scott of Satchells as one of the 24 ‘pensioners’ of Buccleuch. William ‘of Ghk’ (16th C.) probably ‘of Glack’, he was witness to a 1556 document relating to Nether Harden. His brother John was also a witness. He was surely closely related to the later William of Glack, or perhaps even the same man. William ‘Will’ (16th C.) recorded in ‘Montbernger’ in 1578/9 among 22 Border Lairds who did not appear before the Privy Council when summoned. He acted as surety for 2 Elliots who had previously been entered before the Council. He was also listed in 1581, among a large group of Border Lairds denounced as rebels for failing to present men to answer their rieving crimes. In 1581 he witnessed James Ker in Yair receiving sasine for Catslack and Mounthenger. He is surely related among ‘Landit Men’ of Scotland in about 1590. In 1590/1 he was William ‘in Montgener Wester’ when John Hay of Smithfield acted as his surety. He was in ‘Wester Montbergener’ in 1592 when James Lawson of ‘Carnmure’ was his surety for not resetting those who had helped the Earl of Bothwell. In 1599 he was among a list of Scotts who Sir Walter of Branxholme declared were ‘his men’ and therefore accepted responsibility for making them answer to justice. It is likely he was the same as another contemporary William. He could be the same as William of Montbenger, whose son Robert was appointed as tutor to his brother James of Newholme’s grandchildren. William ‘in Hawick’ (16th C.) referred to by Scott of Satchells as ‘William in the Mott’ when listed among the ‘pensioners’ of Buccleuch. He was apparently a brother of a Walter Scott of Harden (probably ‘Auld Wat o Harden’) and was son of either Walter of Harden (who died c.1563) or of William, 1st Laird of Harden. He held lands beyond the West Port in Hawick (presumably named for proximity to the Mote), these being given to him for his service to Buccleuch (according to Satchells). He was living in 1591. He was probably the brother of Walter of Harden listed (along with his brother) among 200 Scotts and associates who stole livestock from Drumezier and Derva in 1591/2. He may be the brother of Walter of Harden listed among 200 Scotts and associates who stole livestock from Drumezier and Derva in 1591/2. Scott of Rodono suggests that the earlier Scotts of Todrig were descended from him. It is possible that the same William ‘in Hawik’ was involved in a precept of ‘clare constat’ and gave the associated instrument of sasine for Martin Douglas inheriting the lands of Crook from his father William in 1592; he was thus either a lawyer or Bailie. He should not be confused with William Graham. ‘William of the Mote’, a prominent Englishman of the same time, who lived at Liddel Mote. William (d.1579) probably a resident of Edinburgh. Along with a man called Turnbull, a schoolmaster in Edinburgh, he was executed for composing ‘rhyming libels’ about the death of John Stewart, 4th Earl of Atholl. These supported the rumours that Atholl had been poisoned at Stirling by the Earl of Morton (James Douglas). They were executed at Stirling. William (16th C.) brother of Robert of Raesknowe. In 1581 he witnessed an arrangement where Katherrine Scott, widow of Robert of Colifort, resigned her lands of Hundleshope to her son Thomas; his brother Robert was also a witness, as well as William of Allanhaugh. He may be the same as one of the other Williams, William (d.bef. 1582) tenant in ‘Braidle’ (probably Broadlee in Ashkirk Parish) recorder in 1581/2 when his son John witnessed a transaction in Selkirk. William of Deloraine ‘Cut at the Black’ (16th C.) listed as one of the 24 ‘Pensioners’ of Buccleuch by Scott of Satchells. He had the lands of Nether Deloraine for his service. He was said to be a brother of Scott of Haining, a branch that was descended from Hassendean, and he himself was the progenitor of the Scotts of ‘Scotstarbet and Elie, now called Ardross’. William of Tushielaw (16th C.) probably son of Adam ‘King of Thieves’ (although Satchells suggests there is a Robert in an intervening generation). He could be the William listed as a son of Adam of Tushielaw in the 1526 remission for a large number of Borderers who had attacked the Earl of Arran; the sons listed are Robert, John and William (in that order), and so it is also possible that Robert was the eldest son of Adam and that he (William) succeeded his older brother, or could alternatively have been Robert’s son (consistent with Satchells’ version). He could be the William ‘in Tussilaw’ who witnessed a transaction for Elizabeth Gledstains in Selkirk in 1533. It seems likely he is the tenant in Tushielaw and Cowanlaw recorded in 1541, who may also have occupied Mount Common (‘alias Deiphope’), as well as Cacrabank (along with his mother, who may therefore have been the widow of Adam). In 1553/4 he was listed among Scotts and their supporters who a group of Kers promised not to harm. He was ‘in Tuschelaw’ in 1562 when he witnessed a transaction for Robert of Howpasley. Also in 1562 he and his son Walter witnessed a transaction for William in Hartwoodmyres. He acted as surety for William Cranston of that Ilk in 1563, along with his son and heir apparent, Walter. Also in that year he was accused by the Queen’s Advocate of theft and reset from Robert Elliot of ‘Bellelie’. He was also fined for the non-compliance of Robert Scott of Horsleyhill for similar crimes. He and his son Walter took sheep from the lands of Bailiedee, belonging to Dand Elliot; in 1563/4 they were ordered by the Privy Council to replace the stolen sheep. In 1564 he was on an assize that convicted several men (including Scotts) of sheep-stealing and another that dealt with the murder of David of Hassendean. Also in 1564 he was listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. He may have married Grizel, daughter of Robert of Thirlestane (although that could be Walter, his grandson, unless there were 2 similar marriages). In 1573 his son ‘Wat in Hartwoodmyris’ was to present William Porteous ‘in Borthuikbra’ for trial in Edinburgh and he himself entered the Littles of Tushielaw Mill and others. In 1574 he witnessed a discharge between the Douglases of Cavers and the Cranstons of that Ilk. In 1580 he and Sir Walter of Birkenside appointed 2 other Scotts to decide on George of Synton’s claim on lands in ‘Ilistoun’. In 1581 he and Robert of Aikwood were the ‘byndaris’ in an action of Adam in Bonnington against Robert of Haining, regarding ownership of 6 chalders of grain; his son Walter in Hartwoodmyres was also mentioned. He is probably the William listed among many Scotts and their allies in a 1581 summons to appear before the Privy Council regarding the feud with the Elliots and Armstrongs. In 1582 he is recorded as having witnessed the delivery of some documents by William and David (sons of Adam of Allanhaugh) to Walter of Goldielands. He is probably the ‘Scot of Tuschelaw’ listed in Monipennie’s c.1594 (but put together much earlier) compilation of Border lairds. His children included: Walter, who succeeded; William of Midgehope (ancestor of the Scotts of Horsleyhill); James of Hundleshope; and John, who killed the father of John Govane of Cardrono. William (16th C.) younger son of Sir John of Thirlestane. He was recorded as brother-german of Robert of Thirlestane in 1567 when he witnessed the marriage contract between Elizabeth, sister of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch and Thomas, son of Sir Walter Ker of Cessford. He could be the ‘Wylle of Thirlstane’ who in 1581/2 witnessed a transaction for Robert of Aikwood. William (16th C.) son of Walter of Headshaw. He is recorded as William, son of Walter of ‘Eidshaw’ when warded in 1571. In 1572/3 he swore allegiance to the Crown and Regent, suggesting that he had been suspected of being a supporter of the fugitive Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst. He is probably the ‘William Scott of Eidschaw’ recorded in 1571/2 when he signed the bond to act against Borders thieves. Sir William of Balwearie (16th/17th C.) son of Sir William and Helen Lauder. He served as surety for the Elliots in the register of the Privy Council on two occasions in 1573. He claimed in 1573 that he had not received John Elliot of the Park, and had a bond with Sir Walter Ker of Cessford, Andrew Ker of Faldonside and Walter Riddell of that Ilk. He married Janet Lindsay and was succeeded by his son Sir James. William (16th C.) described as ‘in Harden’ in 1574 when, along with James in Quhitslaid’, he paid back a loan on the mill of Easter Burnfoot to Sir Walter Scott of Birkenside. The same year they also paid back a loan to Sir Walter of Branxholme for lands at Easter Craik and also in Ettrick. He was presumably tenant farmer of lands at Harden, perhaps related to the Scotts of Harden themselves. William (d.bef. 1580) Burgess in Selkirk. In 1580 his widow Marion Gledstains was recorded as ‘conjunct feuair’ of half a croft of land in Selkirk. Alexander Gledstains, elder, was one of the witnesses. Also in 1580 his widow Marion Gledstains was listed among those who owed money to Janet Gledstains. William of Burnfoot (d.bef. 1581) recorded as deceased in 1581 when his widow Margaret Scott resigned some liferents to their son William. His lands were probably Burnfoot on Ale, but is unclear how he was related to other Scotts of Burnfoot. His wife resigned her rights of lifrent in ‘Scheiliswood with half the mill called Burnefuytmilne with pertinents’ in Ashkirk, which seems to confirm that this is Burnfoot on Ale. His wife had by then remarried, to Walter in Palace. A number of cautioners were appointed, who lived at Eddenside, Burnfoot and nearby places. William of Flex (16th C.) recorded in 1579 when he witnessed the transfer of Rough-hope and Philhope from John Turnbull to Martin Elliot. William (16th C.) Bailie in Selkirk. In 1581/2 there was a dispute with another Bailie over whether a man had been apprehended and put in the tolbooth. William ‘Will’ (16th C.) 3rd son of John, younger of Synton. In 1550 he had a ‘tack’ for the lands of Langhope. He was described as William in Huntly when listed in 1579 among people who owed money to Isabel Donald, widow of Robert of Palace. In 1579/80 he served as an arbitrator on behalf of Robert of Burnfoot and Robert of Burnhead in a case against Thomas Dalgleish of Deuchar and Simon of Gamescleuch. In 1579/80 he served as an arbitrator on behalf of Robert of Burnfoot and Robert of Burnhead in a case against Thomas Dalgleish of Deuchar and Simon of Gamescleuch. In 1580 he was assigned ‘the Kirkland, his own room’. He may be the ‘William Scott of Huntlie’ who signed the Scott clan bond in 1589 (and was also mentioned ‘in Huntlie’ in a case involving theft of a horse by neighbours in Hutlerburn). He was listed as ‘Will Scott of Huntlie’ on the roll of landed men of Scotland in about 1590 and was on an inquest in 1592. He was probably ancestor of the Scotts of Huntly, being succeeded by Robert of Huntly, who was at the Carlisle raid in 1596. William (16th C.) recorded in 1579/80 as ‘alias William with the teyth’, presumably referring either to his teeth or to a tythe. John Sinton stated that he had stolen 5 sheep from near Simon Glendinning’s house that belonged to ‘[blank] Coltarte’. The instrument was witnessed at the house of William, younger Burgess of Selkirk. William (16th C.) recorded as son of John ‘late in Quhomes’ (i.e. Whames) 1580 when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk between John Scott in Whithope and Robert Scott of Haining. He was probably related to (or perhaps even the same as) the William recorded as tenant in Whames in 1549. William ‘Will’ of Allanhaugh (16th C.) probably the son of Robert of Allanhaugh recorded in the Register of the Privy Council for 1581. He was recorded as ‘Willie of Allanhauch’ in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Bruxholme, where he is assigned ‘the Kirkland, his own room’. He may be the ‘William Scott in Allanhaucht, now duelland in Hawik’ who was mentioned in 1581 (along with Robert of Allanhaugh) as one of the men forgiven for the murder of Hawick resident George Scott 3 years earlier. Also in 1581 he was ‘Will of Allanhaucht burgess of Hawik’ when he witnessed an arrangement where Katherine Scott, widow of Robert of Colifort, resigned her lands of Hundleshope to her son Thomas; Robert of Raesknowe and Robert’s brother William were also witnesses. He was a signatory of the Scott clan bond in 1589. He was on an Inquest of Service in 1592. He was signatory (along with Roger Langlands of that Ilk and Allan Deans in Hawick) of a bond of 1594/5 drawn up by James Gledstains of Cocklaw and involving local Turnbulls and Elliots; he is there referred to as ‘callit of Allanhauch’, suggesting that he no longer held the lands there. He may have been father of Walter ‘in Allanmounth’ and his brother John, who are recorded in the early 1600s. Either he or a brother of his was probably on the raid to rescue Kinmont Willie in 1596. William of Burnfoot (d. bef. 1585) son of Adam. He probably died before his father and was succeeded by his son Robert. Note that this is Burnfoot on Teviot. William of Chamberlain Newton (16th C.) listed among many Scots and their allies in a 1581 summons to appear before the Privy Council regarding the feud with the Elliots and Armstrongs. It is unclear how he was related to other Scots of Chamberlain Newton. William (16th C.) brother to ‘Scot of Hassenden’, as well as brother of Philip. In 1583/4 he was among a number of men from the area who were denounced for failing to appear to give evidence in a case against the Turnbulls of Bedrule. It is unclear who was Laird of Hassendale at that time. William ‘Reid Wullie’ (16th C.) son of Will of Colliford. He is recorded in 1585 when he was one of the witnesses to the bond in which Sir Walter of Branxholme and Robert of Allanhaugh resolved a family feud. He is listed as ‘William Scot, sone to Wyll of Collefurde, callit Reid Wyllie’; it is a little unclear whether the nickname referred to him or his father (who is recorded in 1550). William ‘Stand-in-the-rain’ (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 being ‘callit Stand in the Rayne’, among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. One can imagine how he got his nickname. William ‘Will’, ‘Minedirt’ (16th C.) recorded on a list of Borderers accused of crimes in 1586/7. His name appears as ‘Will Scott, callit Mynedirt’, with the meaning of his nickname being unclear. William (16th C.) brother of ‘Braid’s Andrew’. The pair were included in a long list of men from the Borderers who had absented themselves from court, but were given one last opportunity in 1586/7 to find sureties. Probably the same man was ‘Willie Scott, called the Braid’s Will’ recorded in 1587/8 among Elliots and Armstrongs (probably from Ewesdale) who William Maxwell, Lord Herries, was ordered to present to the Privy Council. William ‘Little William’ (16th/17th C.) resident of Selkirk recorded in 1590. He was ‘called Little William’ on a list of men promising not to harm Patrick Murray of Falahill or his dependants. ‘Little James’, Burgess in Selkirk, was also listed and perhaps related. William of Todshawaugh (16th/17th C.) listed by Scott of Satchells as being ‘of Totchahaugh’ and among the 24 ‘Pensioners’ of Buccleuch. He was said to be descended from Scott of Borthaugh. He was surely related to Adam of Todshawhaugh and his son Walter, recorded in 1594. He may be the William ‘alias callit Wille of Todshawhauch’ who was recorded as a resident of Whames in 1549; at that time Walter was tenant of Todshawhaugh, and so probably related. William of Glack (16th/17th C.) probably related to the earlier William of Glack. He was listed among many Scots and their allies in a 1581 summons to appear before the Privy Council regarding the feud with the Elliots and Armstrongs. In 1585 he was ‘of Glak’ when he witnessed a bond (signed at Selkirk and Hawick) settling a feud between the Scots of Branxholme and the Scotts of Allanhaugh. He may be the Laird of ‘Glak’ who was in 1589 on a list of Border Lairds who failed to appear before the Privy Council and who was listed among several Border Scots in the ‘Roll of the Clans’ of 1590. He was probably the William ‘in Glak’ stated by Scott of Satchells to have assisted in the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. In 1596/7 he was ‘in Glak’ when part of the group of Scots (under Robert of Thirlestane) who attacked ploughmen from Peebles; they were denounced as rebels for not appearing. In 1597/8 Mark Kerr, Commendator of Newbattle complained that his servant Ralph Ker had been attacked and captured by him, along with his brother James ‘in Jedwartfield’ and Arthur of Gamescleuch. In 1599 he was ‘in Glak’ when James of Bowhill was cautioner for him not to harm the provost, bailies, council and community of Peebles. Also in 1599 his brother Thomas was recorded among a list of Scots who Sir Walter of Branxholme declared were ‘his men’ and therefore accepted responsibility for making them answer to justice. He was ‘in Glak’ when among the men listed (along with Walter of Headshaw) whom Sir Robert of Thirlestane was bound not to reset in 1609. This was part of the dispute between the Scotts of Thirlestane and Tushielaw. Probably the same William ‘of Glak’ was cautioner for his brother John of Hundleshope in 1618, promising that John would not molest the Moffats of Granton. William (16th/17th C.) son of Adam of Allanhaugh. In 1582 he and his brother David acknowledged that Walter of Goldielands had returned some documents that he had been given to keep for them. William (16th C.) son of Walter of Goldielands. In 1591/2 he is listed along with his brothers Walter and David among 200 Scots and others who were accused of stealing livestock from the farms of Drumelzier and Dreva. He may be the same as one of the other Davids. William (16th/17th C.) servitor of the Laird of Buccleuch. He is listed among the 180 supporters of Sir James Johnstone who had a respite in 1594 for killing Lord Maxwell and others at Dryfe Sands. It is unclear if he is the same as one of the other contemporary Williams. William of Midgehope (16th/17th C.) 2nd son of William of Tushielaw and brother of Sir Walter of Tushielaw. In 1557 he was ‘Vil Scot of Migerhoop’ when he paid rental for Fawhope to the monks of Melrose. However, there is some confusion, since he was presumably the William ‘in Megehop, son of the deceased Wat Scott’ who occupied lands in Ettrick and Rodono in 1556. He may also have been called ‘Will’ of Hartwoodmyres (although there is possible confusion with his son here). He was succeeded by his son William, who was at the rescue of ‘Kinmont Willie’. William ‘Will’ of Hartwoodmyres (16th/17th C.) listed on the ‘Roll of the Clans’ of about 1590. He is probably the William ‘in Hartwoodmyris’ who in 1581, along with several other Scotts (from Gamescleuch, Gilmanstech, Chamberlain Newton, Edinburgh, North Bowhill, Dryhope, Catslack and Howpasley), supported William of Tushielaw and Robert of Aikwood in representing Adam in Bonnington in a dispute with Robert of Haining; he was surely related to some of these other Scotts, perhaps including Walter in Hartwoodmyres (son of William of Tushielaw), who was also listed. In 1592 Gideon Murray of Glenpyet was surety for him ‘to answer for all attemptatts committed or to be committed by himself and those for whom he is liable’. In about 1593 he and Walter of Stirkshaws were under caution, with Gideon Murray as surety. He was also said to have assisted in the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. He was in 1599 listed among Scotts and others who were charged to find sureties for ‘observing the King’s peace’. In 1602 he signed a bond among Border Lairds for keeping the peace. Also in 1602 he was denounced as a rebel for not paying £14 for his part of the taxes of Ettrick Forest. He was witness to the bond of 1612 for keeping peace on the Border. He may have been son of William of Tushielaw, and therefore the same as William of Midgehope (this is unclear, although a close connection with the Scotts of Tushielaw seems clear). He was probably succeeded by Robert. William of Midgehope (16th/17th C.) son of William of Midgehope and grandson of William of Tushielaw. He was said to have been at the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. He was succeeded by his son Robert, Bailie of Hawick. William of Hundleshope (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1592 when his cautioner was James Stewart of Tinnis. This was among a long list of conditions imposed by the King following the Falkland Raid. He was among a group of Scotts who attacked Adam Veitch’s lands at ‘Fechane’ in 1602; his brother Thomas was also mentioned, as were Scotts of Thirlestane, Gamescleuch, Bonnington and Bowhill. Also in 1602 Sir John Murray of Ettleston and Gideon Murray of Elibank were ordered to remove him from the lands of ‘Feithane. In 1603 he and his brother attacked the same lands again, having been declared rebels. William of Howpasley (16th/17th C.) succeeded Walter, who was probably his father. In 1595 he, along with John Rutherford of Hunthill and Hector Turnbull of Wauchope were ‘put to the horn’ for failing to pay to the Sheriff their ‘blench ferms and castle-wards’; in 1599 there was a complaint about the Sheriff (James Douglas of Cavers) for not prosecuting the men. In 1599 he is probably the Scott of Howpasley who was surety for himself, his son John and Walter of Ladhope. In 1602 he signed a bond among Border Lairds for keeping the peace. He is on a list of several Scotts and others who the Baron of Hassendean (James Cunningham, Earl of Glencain) tried to oust from their lands in 1603. In 1605 Alexander Scott (‘Lang Sandy’) discharged him from his obligation in the annual rent of the lands of Wark. There was a ‘horning’ of 1607 requiring him to remove from ‘Longhauch, Ramseclewis, Diksone’s Reid, Howpaisley and Schawis’ by the superior of the lands, James Douglas of Drumlanrig. This was followed by an action in 1610 against him and James Gledstains for not paying taxes on some of the same lands. He may have been the husband of Lady Howpasley who instigated the slaughter of sheep there in 1615 (in which case he was already deceased). In 1620 the Keeper of Edinburgh Tolbooth complained to the Privy Council that money was still owed for furnishing him (the deceased William) with food and drink during his several years in prison; Walter, Earl of Buccleuch and John of Synton had at that point still not paid the minimum 900 merks promised (out of an estimated total bill of 2600 merks). Howpasley is said to have passed to Robert and Walter (cousins of Patrick of Tanlawhill) and then to the Scotts of Thirlestane and later the Scotts of Crumhaugh. William (16th/17th C.) referred to as ‘called of the Know’ in 1608. Along with his brother Robert, Bailie of Hawick, and their surety James
